Midland's Enterprise Zone could get 'green light'

A green light may be flickering at the end of Midland's lingering financial abyss.

By August, sources believe, Midland's Enterprise Zone should have been given the go-ahead by the state Commerce Department.

"The main issue is that it will help us become more competitive in being able to recruit new industry," explained Jim Crider, former manager of economic development at the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

"It's also important to cultivate new business and help existing business grow."

Enterprise Zone Task Force Chairman Stan Garrison, a TU Electric Co. executive, and Crider traveled to Austin last week for a final check-in with the Texas Department of Commerce. Midland will submit its formal application later this month.

"The whole concept is to employ the unemployed ... to make jobs for people or make better jobs for people," Garrison said.

A public hearing June 23 at 2 p.m. in City Council Chambers at City Hall will give citizens an opportunity to discuss the plan that proponents say fosters economic growth.

An enterprise zone is an area in a city dedicated to the incubation of new business and industry. The Texas Department of Commerce must approve its creation.

The life of the dedicated zone is seven years and local and state tax incentives — commonly granted to entice new businesses and industries — may be offered a maximum of five years.

Pair fired on as 'Pioneers' visit Square

BEIJING (AP) — Eight people were sentenced to death Saturday for allegedly beating soldiers and burning vehicles when troops took over Tiananmen Square at the start of the crackdown on the pro-democracy movement.

The government also said two men were captured after they fired at soldiers guarding a bridge early Saturday. Four Western reporters left China after being expelled for violating martial law.

Authorities allowed civilians onto Tiananmen Square for the first time since soldiers backed by tanks entered the plaza the night of June 3-4 to drive out student protesters and crush their seven-week movement for a freer society.

About 10,000 children wearing red scarves of the Young Pioneers, a Communist youth group, lined up on the 100-acre square in central Beijing while group members placed a wreath of flowers at the Heroes' Monument.

The monument, where thousands of pro-democracy demonstrators gathered day and night for three weeks until the army moved in, was decorated with banners including one that read: "Love socialism and the mother country."

After the ceremony the children were trucked out of Tiananmen, which is still blocked off by armed soldiers. Pedestrians are not allowed inside.

China's evening TV news on Friday showed crews disinfecting the square, repairing the pavement and replanting bushes. The military took selected reporters on a tour of the square Friday.

The eight sentenced to die were the first to be condemned for trying to stop the People's Liberation Army from moving on the student protesters in Tiananmen, the symbolic center of China.

The seven men and one woman were identified in an official television report as workers, peasants and unemployed local residents, and were shown appearing before the Beijing People's Intermediate Court for sentencing.

Three men in Shanghai were sentenced to death Thursday after a court said they incited protests and set fire to a train in rioting following the crackdown in Beijing.

Midland's share grows with sales tax rebate

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Sales tax allocations increased by 14.2 percent across Texas during the first six months of 1989, with Midland's total share of the bankroll rising 3 percent despite a .32 percent decline for the month of June.

State Comptroller Bob Bullock believes that local sales tax allocations reflect continued growth in the Texas economy. "Even payments to economic areas that haven't fully recovered, such as Austin and San Antonio, are improving," he said.

Midland's sales tax allocation of $487,359 was off .32 percent in June, but the $4 million total for the first six months of the year remains ahead of the 1988 pace of $3.8 million.

In Odessa, totals for the year-to-date reflect less growth — .56 percent compared to the same period last year — despite the monthly increase of 3.4 percent, from $441,458 in June 1988 to $456,570 in June 1989.

June's checks represent taxes collected by monthly filers in April and reported to the comptroller's office by May 22.

Unusually large payments in June 1988 have created a false impression that sales tax revenues are declining in some Texas cities, said Bullock, who observed that the best indicator of sales tax rebate trends is the year-to-date totals.

"One payment won't give as accurate a comparison as six months," he said.

In the first six months of 1989, city allocations totaled $512.5 million statewide, while payments through June 1988 came in at $465.9 million.

This month, checks totaling $66.3 million were sent to 875 cities that collected sales taxes at either 1 or ½ percent.

Another $6.8 million was distributed among the 92 counties that have imposed an additional ½ percent tax on goods and services.

Midland County, which began taxing consumer purchases in January 1988, reaped $285,149 in sales tax allocations this month, compared to $279,208 the prior year.

That brings the county's total for the year-to-date to $2.12 million, an increase of 82.6 percent over last year's six-month total of $1.16 million.

Air show 'hotter' attraction

The aerobatic biplane shot straight up in the sky, hung briefly, flipped around and started to fly straight down before pulling out of its dive, ending the feat with a couple of barrel rolls.

Armed with a pair of high-powered binoculars, 10-year-old Andy Smith of Greenwood sat cross-legged Saturday on the hot pavement at Midland International Airport and followed the tiny stunt plane's every movement.

"I like seeing the stunts," said Andy, taking the binoculars off his eyes only long enough to wipe the sweat from his face. "I like to look at all the airplanes. It's just fun."

That just about said it all for the estimated crown 30,000 who braved sizzling temperatures to see the screaming jets and agile stunt planes of Air Show '89.

Williams comes under fire for contributions to Democrats

HOUSTON (AP) — Less than a week before he announces his candidacy for governor, Republican Clayton Williams has come under fire as fellow Republicans question his contributions to Democratic candidates.

The Midland oilman has contributed to Democratic gubernatorial hopefuls Ann Richards and Jim Mattox and U.S. Senate contender Hugh Parmer, who is challenging incumbent Republican Sen. Phil Gramm, The Houston Post reported Saturday.

He also has given to so-called "liberal enemies" of the GOP, like Rep. Ron Wilson and Rep. Debra Danburg, both Houston Democrats, the newspaper said.

"Our position is that Clayton made a mistake in giving the Democrats the money," said Frank Walter, a spokesman for Williams.

Walter said Williams has been a prolific campaign contributor for Republicans and Democrats alike for years, but that his allegiances lie strictly with the GOP.

"Clayton has been a Republican since 1950. His Republican credentials, I think, are unshakeable," he said.

Nancy Palm of Houston, a longtime GOP official, said it would have been one thing if Williams simply had made a few contributions to selected Democrats several years ago. But documents compiled by The Post show he continued giving cash to Democratic candidates through his "Claytie PAC" until late last year.

Ms. Palm said the relatively recent contributions trouble her because those funds are likely to be used in the 1990 election cycle by the Democrats to help defeat Republicans. She said it's especially astounding that Williams gave money to two of his potential Democratic foes in the governor's race.

"I wonder whether someone who gave money to such liberal people has much in common with Republican primary votes," she said.

George Strake, a former chairman of the state GOP, said he believes Williams' history of contributions, especially those made as recently as late last year, is a legitimate primary issue.

"Providing all this is correct, I think it's certainly something legitimate for voters to bring up and have him explain," Strake said. "That's the good thing about a primary — it lets you smoke things like this out."

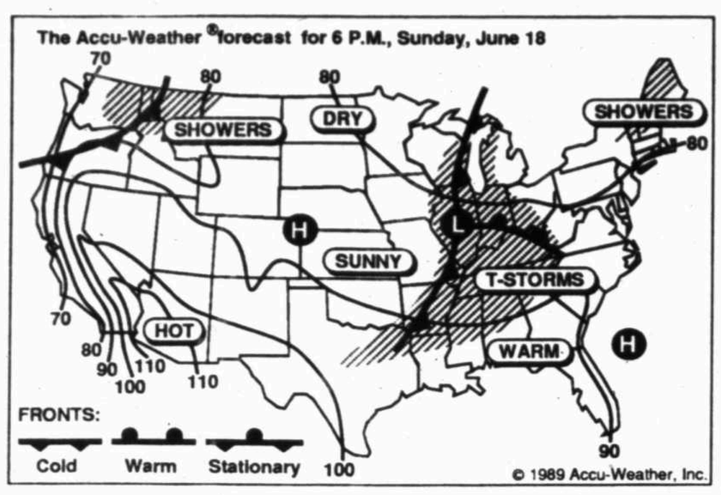

Williams is scheduled to be the first Republican to formally enter the governor's race with a four-city announcement tour on Wednesday. He is set to visit Austin, Houston, Dallas and Midland.

Other Republicans considering the race are Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance, outgoing Secretary of State Jack Rains, and Amarillo businessman T. Boone Pickens. George W. Bush, the president's son, also may enter the race.

Ms. Richards is the only Democrat who has formally announced. Mattox is expected to do so soon, and former Gov. Mark White also is considering joining the race.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Father's Day to be sunny

From Staff and Wire Reports

Sunny skies and hot temperatures are in store for Father's Day, with the heat expected to continue through Monday with no mention of rain, according to National Weather Service forecasters at Midland International Airport.

Sunday will be sunny and not as hot as Saturday's high of 105, with the high expected in the mid-90s. Winds will be from the east from 10 to 15 mph. Sunday night will be fair with a low in the upper 60s. Monday will be sunny with a high in the upper 90s.

Saturday's high of 105 was just two degrees short of the record of 107 set on June 17, 1951. The low of 71 was nearly 20 degrees warmer than the record low of 52 which was set in 1945.

STATE

Skies were mostly sunny across Texas Saturday, with temperatures reaching as high as 106 in West Texas.

Temperatures in mid-afternoon were generally in the 80s and 90s. The high of 106 was reported at Wink, and the lowest maximum of 83 was noted at Temple, Galveston and Grand Prairie.

A weak cold front extended from just north of Childress southwest to between Midland and Lubbock. Gusty southerly winds were common. North of the cold front, northerly winds prevailed. Wind speeds were mainly at 10 to 20 mph but gusting to 30 mph in many areas.

NATION

Thunderstorms and showers moved Saturday across the Southeast, and storms in the Midwest grew stronger as much of the nation weathered a wet weekend.

Eastern Virginia, the Carolinas, central and southern Georgia and the Florida panhandle got rain Saturday, the day after strong storms moved through much of the eastern part of the nation.

Intensifying thunderstorms in the Midwest brought showers from North Dakota and South Dakota into western Minnesota, Nebraska, eastern Kansas, western Missouri and north-central Oklahoma.

Thunderstorms also were scattered over Lower Michigan, northern Indiana, northern Ohio and western New York.

Rain extended along the northern Pacific coast.

Heavier rainfall during the 6 hours up to 2 p.m. EDT included 2 inches at Panama City, Fla., almost an inch at Myrtle Beach, S.C., three-quarters of an inch at Jacksonville, N.C., and two-thirds of an inch at Wilmington, N.C.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 54 degrees at Traverse City, Mich., to 107 degrees at Phoenix. The nation's low temperature Saturday morning was 31 degrees at Yellowstone, Wyo.

The national weather forecast for Sunday was for showers and thunderstorms from southern Wisconsin across Illinois, eastern Missouri, Kentucky, Indiana, southwest Lower Michigan, Ohio and West Virginia. Scattered showers were predicted for northern and central New England and northeastern New York state.

Extended forecasts

Tuesday through Thursday

West Texas: A very hot period with mostly sunny days and fair nights.

Panhandle lows in the upper 60s. Highs from 98 to 103. South Plains lows about 70 with highs from 100 to 106. Permian Basin lows around 70. Highs from 101 to 107. Concho Valley lows in the lower 70s. Highs from 100 to 105. Far West lows around 70. Highs from 104 to 107. Big Bend lows around 60 mountains to lower 70s river valleys. Highs mid- to upper 90s mountains and around 110 near the Rio Grande.

North Texas: West and central sections, partly cloudy and warm. Highs in the 90s. Lows in the upper 60s to mid-70s.

East should see a slight chance of mainly late afternoon and night thunderstorms. Highs in the upper 80s to lower 90s. Lows in the upper 60s to mid-70s.

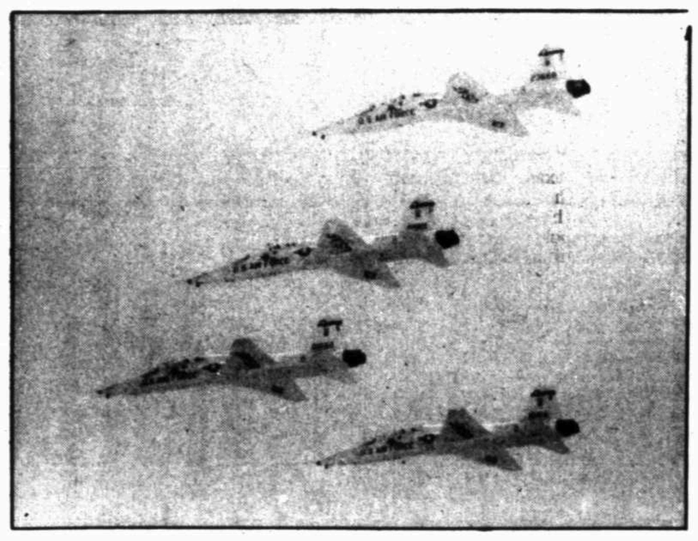

South Texas: Cloudy to partly cloudy late at night and during the mornings with mostly sunny warm to hot afternoons.

Matt Vann, a member of the U.S. Air Force Auxiliary who was working security at the show, stood on the other side of the safety line as hundreds of curious, sunglass-clad onlookers craned their necks as a World War II P-51 Mustang buzzed the runway.

"I think this is the biggest turnout we've had — hardware and people," Vann said. "People read about these types of aircraft, but they never have a chance to see one.

"I can't think of one person whose hair doesn't stand up when they see an A-10 (Fairchild Thunderbolt) pass by at 500 knots."

Meanwhile, mobs of people circled the B1-B supersonic jet, one of the more popular flying machines on display at the show.

The jet was encircled by a rope bearing signs warning the public to stay outside. And if the signs don't work, then there's Airman First Class Christopher Smith and his loaded M-16 rifle. Smith, according to the sign, has been "authorized to use deadly force."

"People have been real good about it," said Smith, who is based at Dyess Air Force Base in Abilene. "Everything has been going great."

Smith said he enjoys seeing the onlookers standing in awe over aircraft at the show.

"It gives the people a chance to see what the military is doing and what is being done with their tax dollars," he said of the event.

While some aircraft were popular for their looks, others, like the gigantic Lockheed C-5A Galaxy transport jet, were popular because of the giant patches of shade they created.

The temperature soared to as high as 103 at about mid-afternoon, according to the National Weather Service at the airport.

Leo Grace and his wife, Pauline, both 64, sat in the shade near the Galaxy's belly. Grace, of Midland, said they have been attending the shows off and on since 1956.

"Today I wanted to see these big airplanes more than anything," said Grace, a retired truck driver.

"And I like that," Mrs. Grace said, pointing up at a biplane as it did a barrel roll.

Marion Oliver, a city of Midland paramedic, said the day wasn't fun for all in attendance, as dozens were treated for heat exhaustion.

"They get hot, sweat more than they think they are and then they get sick," Oliver said, adding that no one was seriously injured.

Another paramedic complained that the show didn't have enough concession stands, resulting in people having to stand in long lines in the hot sun to wait for something to drink.

ZONE

The proposed enterprise zone extends from the intersection of Golf Course and Fairgrounds roads westward through downtown and south central Midland to the intersection of Interstate 20 and State Highway 1788.

"I really am excited about the way they've set up the zone where it can benefit our industrial areas and the eastside as well as the entire community," District 4 City Councilman Robert Rendall said.

The zone is administered by City Manager Fred Poe who will have the authority to delegate the title. The "technical liaison" will be the Midland Chamber of Commerce's manager of economic development.

To qualify as an enterprise zone an area's unemployment rate must be 1.5 times the state's most recent 12-month average.

At least 25 percent of the prospective business' employees must reside in the enterprise zone or be economically disadvantaged.

Each taxing entity is encouraged but not mandated to offer an abatement "package."

"Local entities can and will negotiate abatement packages. The more jobs created the better the package you can afford to let them have," Garrison explained.

The city of Midland, for instance, could offer a business a frozen tax rate or totally exempt it from the tax levy for a certain period of time.

The business also is eligible to receive "targeted job tax credits" from the state of up to $2,000 per each new job created. State rebates, however, can't exceed $1.25 million over the five-year period.

In return, proponents maintain, the unemployment rate declines, the tax base increases and more dollars circulate throughout the city.

"I feel very confident about the work that has gone into this. It is not something that has just happened. It has been a long and arduous process.

"This community owes a tremendous amount of gratitude to (Task Force Chairman) Stan Garrison," Crider commented.

The idea was born about a year ago when an exasperated Councilman Rendall went to the Chamber to discuss diversification alternatives Midland's sagging economy.

Midland often doesn't even make the "initial cut" when trying to attract new business because it offers no financial incentives, he said.

"I think it's just another building block for efforts to diversify our economy. It's an additional tool to work with," Rendall continued.

Just ask Plainview, a financially depressed agricultural town to the north.

The Wal-Mart Distribution Center in Plainview soon will have brought an estimated 1,000 new jobs to the small South Plains community.

Five years ago the center was nothing more than a triangular — and useless — piece of land in north Plainview that generated a measly $400 a year in taxes.

However, the 122-acre odd-shaped tract was bordered by U.S. Highway 87 and a railroad.

A Plainview economic development foundation bought the land and donated it to Wal-Mart to build its new 705,000 square foot distribution center there.

Wal-Mart continued to pay only the $400-a-year tax bill under the abatement package offered them. The move saved the discount store giant $2.4 million in local taxes over the abatement's life.

The $25 million distribution center — with an annual $10 million payroll — is expanding by 300,000 square feet and will add another 150 jobs to the 850 it now offers.

"But another benefit," Crider pointed out, "is that you have this employment generating salaries for other parts of the tax base. The trade-off between the abatement versus the positive impact on the city ended up to be a 75:1 return on Plainview's investment."

With results like that, there are few "cons" to the enterprise zone theory, authorities say.

However, Crider concedes the perception of tax abatement can anger some.

"If it's misunderstood ,people think all areas are automatically allowed massive tax abatement." Untrue, he said.

"There is a project-by-project application. They are expected to pay taxes until an abatement package is finalized," Crider maintained.

The theory holds that the existing area doesn't generate substantial tax revenue without the business anyway.

The maximum five-year tax abatements will differ from business to business and other entities already located within the zone may or may not be entitled to tax reductions.

As for potential growth, "We don't want industries that pollute," Crider maintained.

Industries which planners prefer include high technology and defense, metal fabrication, plastics, machine tooling, food processing and services such as telecommunications, insurance or credit card processing.

Of Midland's 7.6 million square feet of commercial real estate, 1.5 million square feet is vacant, Crider added.

The enterprise zone won't focus on breathing life into Midland's energy industry, Crider pointed out.

"I go out and recruit the manufacturing sector. State averages show that roughly 26 percent of an average 100,000-man work force is involved in manufacturing.

"Only about 5 percent is involved in manufacturing here because of our heavy dependence on oil and gas," Crider said.

Forging diversification and a recovery in the city's oil and gas industries will be left chiefly to researchers at the under-construction University of Texas of the Permian Basin's Center for Energy and Economic Diversification, Crider said.

"The oil and gas industry has been in the past and will continue to be in the future our economic mainstay, but we need something to fall back on when the fluctuations come in the future. And we know they will.

"It is so highly competitive for new industry that we have to have this. We simply cannot compete without it."

TAX

The state's six metropolitan transit authorities and one city transit department received $33.5 million, an increase of 13.9 percent. This month's rebate is the first to reflect new MTA tax rates in San Antonio and Austin, which went into effect April 1.

Other West Texas cities suffered losses in sales tax allocations for the month of June as well.

Andrews received a $39,312 check, a 10.9 percent drop from June 1988. June's check brings the city in at $303,114 for the year-to-date, a 5.5 percent increase over last year.

Lamesa's check of $27,885 reflected a 7.65 percent decline in sales tax revenues from June 1988 to June 1989. However, the city still remains 5.5 percent ahead of last year's pace of $253,398.

Big Spring suffered a 16.4 percent loss in sales tax allocations, from $93,643 in June 1988 to $78,253 in June 1989. That brings the city in at $697,469, a decrease of 2.77 percent for the current fiscal year.

Stanton received a $3,917 check, a 34.8 percent drop from June 1988. June's check brings the city in at $31,356 for the year-to-date, a .78 percent increase over last year's figure.

Rankin's check of $1,591 reflected a 10.4 percent decline in sales tax revenues from June 1988 to June 1989. The drop puts the city behind last year's pace, from $14,375 in 1988 to $14,257 for the first six months of 1989.

CHINA

Beijing radio said 109 people in the capital had turned themselves in since the government started rounding up leaders of the pro-democracy movement. It also said 16 people surrendered in Nanjing, one of the many Chinese cities where protests broke out after the military sweep in Beijing.

Authorities have arrested more than 1,200 people nationwide in the last two weeks, including four on a wanted list of 21 student leaders.

The official Xinhua News Agency said two "ruffians" shot at soldiers and injured one after troops fired warning shots and ordered the gunmen to stop.

The gunmen fled but were later captured and turned over to security forces, Xinhua said. The report did not say how they obtained the firearms.

John Pomfret of The Associated Press and Alan Pessin of the U.S. Government-run Voice of America, both resident correspondents in Beijing, arrived in Hong Kong after being told Wednesday to leave the country within 72 hours.

They were accused of violating martial law regulations prohibiting foreign reporters from covering the pro-democracy movement.

Vernon Mann and John Elphinstone, both of Britain's Independent Television News, also took a flight to Hong Kong on Saturday after being given 24 hours to leave China.

Officials in Chengdu, the capital of Sichuan province, accused them of violating martial law while filming unrest in the south-central city on Wednesday.

A week ago, Peter Newport, another ITN journalist, was ordered out of China from Shanghai, where he had scuffled with police while filming a small student rally.

The government issued another martial law order Saturday directing people to turn over to public security officials all guns or broadcasting or videotaping equipment.

It also kept up its attacks on the Voice of America, saying the shortwave radio network was "perpetrating a fraud."

VOA "kept spreading the rumor that the Liberation Army committed a 'blood bath' of Tiananmen Square so as to attack China," Xinhua said in a commentary.

The government says 200 to 300 people, mostly soldiers, were killed in the confrontation. Chinese witnesses and Western intelligence reports say troops fired on unarmed crowds and killed up to 3,000.

The government did not deny that people were killed "during the quelling of the counterrevolutionary rebellion," Xinhua said, but repeated earlier statements that no one was killed when troops marched into the square.

Anti-racism group leader urges focus on blacks today

STATE

■ Local celebration — 1B.

DALLAS (AP) — On a weekend when many blacks in Texas are celebrating Juneteenth and the end of slavery in this state, the head of a Dallas group fighting racism said reflection is due on how little progress has been made in granting blacks total freedom and equality.

"I don't advocate celebrating Juneteenth as much as I advocate a reflection of where we've come from and where we are," said the Rev. G. James Christopher, founder and co-chairman of the Citizens Against Racism in Dallas.

Juneteenth was being marked in many communities statewide with a number of special events, including parades, speeches and sporting events. The observance is in honor of June 19, 1865, when Union Gen. Gordon Granger arrived in Galveston and announced President Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation.

But Christopher said he and other black community leaders in Texas are still fighting to gain equal footing with those of other races.

"Dallas is far behind the rest of the country," said Christopher, who is pastor of the St. Mark's African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church. "The civil rights movement bypassed Dallas."

Christopher said many in Dallas, and other large Texas cities, are not aware of the high number of incidents of racism that still occur because victims choose to stay silent.

"The general public has no knowledge of the magnitude of this problem," he said.

Yet since his organization was founded about six weeks ago, it has begun investigating six major complaints concerning overt racism, including a highly publicized incident in which two Dallas police officers dressed as pizza deliverymen stormed an apartment to arrest three blacks for allegedly assaulting a delivery woman. The three were later released and Dallas Police Chief Mack Vines has asked the FBI to investigate possible civil rights violations by the two officers.

Christopher said there have been "literally dozens of other calls. We're getting calls all the time now. It's a bigger problem than we expected and we're the only organization in place here now to fight only racism."

The group has representatives from 26 community-based organizations, including several churches. It also has 100 members who are not affiliated with those organizations.

Christopher said he hopes that black families across the state will be "very cautious and keep the celebrations within a certain limit."

"What's most important is a radical reassessment of where we need to go," he said. "Clearly black people in this country are not better off than where we were in the 1950s."

Report: Loans tied to Crows delinquent

DALLAS (AP) — A published report says that when the Trammell Crow Co. acquired part of a savings and loan in a government-assisted transaction, two independent real estate partnerships that included Crow family members were delinquent on some loans.

Current and former Guaranty Federal Savings and Loan Association officers told The Dallas Morning News in today's editions the Crow-related loans remained in arrears for four months after the real estate firm led the takeover of Guaranty and two other thrifts.

Together, the thrifts now operate as Dallas-based Guaranty Federal Savings Bank, a $3.2 billion institution.

When the real estate development firm began bidding on Guaranty last summer, its officials were unaware of the borrowing relationship of Crow family members and company partners, said Thomas Teague, a Crow Co. partner.

He said the company also should not be held responsible for the personal investment activities of Crow partners and family members. Teague said at least one of the loans was not in default at the time federal regulators sold Guaranty.

"It certainly would have raised red flags if we had known about these loans," Roger Martin, who was a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board when it approved the Guaranty transaction, told the newspaper.

Officials said the delinquent loans would not necessarily have disqualified Crow or his company as a thrift buyer because of the real estate firm's complex corporate structure.

However, Martin said he wished the bank board had known of Crow-related debts at Guaranty.

"We were very sensitive about the any appearance of conflict in these deals," he said.

The FHLBB was unaware of those loans because regulators did not conduct any background check on Crow Co. after it applied to participate in the Guaranty bailout, said Martin.

Officials of Crow Co. said the loans were made to partnerships outside the company, whose principal Trammell Crow heads a giant real estate development organization.

The report said one delinquent loan was to Crow Land Co., a partnership that included Trammell Crow relatives. However, the investment fell outside the Crow Co. structure, said Teague.

A thrift consultant says troubled loans by Crow-related partnerships at Guaranty raise questions about federal regulators' ability to screen potential buyers for any appearance of impropriety.

DEA says 'crack' use moving into rural areas

WASHINGTON (AP) — "Crack" trafficking has spread into rural Texas, with dealers selling the drug "openly and brazenly" on the street or operating "galleries" where the cocaine-derivative is consumed, according to internal government memos released Saturday by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

Bentsen said there had been no overall strategy by the Drug Enforcement Administration to attempt to control crack in rural areas "because it's somewhat diffused and somewhat scattered."

"But you can see the intensity of it and it's increasing...we have to face up to this and have to take it head on, and I'm going to be doing that," said Bentsen, a Texas Democrat.

In a memo from the DEA's Houston division, which looked at the situation in three rural areas of Southeast Texas, local law enforcement departments report that "crack cocaine is being sold openly and brazenly in small quantities on the streets, in parks, and especially near the small college campuses."

A second DEA memo from the Dallas division said cocaine trafficking activity appears concentrated in the northeast corner of the state, primarily in Tyler and Gladewater, as well as in Lubbock and Amarillo.

Tyler "has numerous crack cocaine houses in continual operation and 'galleries' in which the substance is consumed," the memo said. "Many of the crack houses maintain and distribute ounce quantities of the drug."

Bentsen said the memos were obtained by Library of Congress researchers preparing a study on the addictiveness and availability of crack cocaine. The memos had been prepared for congressional committees.

The Dallas-division memo said four Jamaicans from Dallas arrived in Tyler four years ago to establish a crack-cocaine operation. Although the organization was disrupted three months later with the arrest of two of the Jamaicans and the fleeing of the others, "they left behind their expertise in converting cocaine to crack to 30 or 40 cocaine dealers..."

Suppliers of Tyler's crack houses in the past "had been alleged members of the Bloods and-or Crips gangs from California," the memo said.

Cuban dealers, however, are also moving into the area and are "beginning to offer higher quality cocaine at cheaper prices and could gain a substantial foothold as major suppliers," the memo said.

The memo said it is estimated some 87 percent of the crime in Tyler is crack related, and many users have a habit that costs $250 to $300 a day.

In neighboring Gregg County, crack cocaine cases increased 80 percent from 1987 to 1988, according to the sheriff's office, the memo said. There were 153 robberies in 1988, compared with 90 the year before.

In Texarkana, the memo said, 70 percent of all search warrants are crack related, and approximately 50 percent of all shooting incidents in the area are crack-related. Robberies have increased significantly, with as many as five a night.

In Lubbock, several crack houses are operating on a rotating basis, the memo said.

"These are typically motel rooms or empty houses run by American blacks who are supplied by Cuban wholesalers," the memo said. "Black juveniles are used as workers in crack house operations."

Amarillo "is similarly experiencing a crack cocaine problem," the memo said, pointing to the a recent seizure of half a kilogram of cocaine from Los Angeles before it was to be altered and sold as crack.

Hunts finding out how much they're worth

DALLAS (AP) — Nelson Bunker Hunt and William Herbert Hunt have their famous father's penchant for vagueness and nonchalance about their fortunes. As Bunker once said, "People who know how much they are worth generally aren't worth very much."

The brothers have been forced to find out how much they're worth. It's a lot less than it once was, but still amounts to hundreds of millions of dollars spread around the world, according to documents filed in U.S. Bankruptcy Court last week.

There's a $19 million coin collection, a 2 million-acre Australian ranch and a nine-acre plot in north Texas, a 2,700-year-old vase and a Dallas bowling alley.

The documents detail the riches still controlled by two of H.L. Hunt's eight children. The others are not party to these bankruptcy cases, the first involving the Hunts' personal — as opposed to corporate — finances after the decline in energy prices, Herbert's and Bunker's silver speculation in 1979 and 1980 and mammoth claims by the Internal Revenue Service.

There is little question the brothers were once billionaires. One 1980 estimate placed Bunker's worth at $2.34 billion and Herbert's at $1.52 billion. Now, Bunker's filing says his assets amount to $258.83 million, Herbert's $169.38 million.

Those figures are far short of the claims against the Hunts. The IRS alone wants $730.42 million from Bunker and $317.31 million from Herbert for back taxes and interest. In all, Bunker's debts top $1.5 billion and Herbert's are almost $1.2 billion.

Both brothers dispute they owe the money, but last September they and their wives filed for protection from creditors. The case is moving through U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Harold Abramson's court and likely will end with liquidation of much of their holdings.

The documents show a picture of second-generation wealth. Although still built on their father's oil and gas holdings, it has spread to cover the largest tract of land in northern Australia; thoroughbred race horses; large pieces of valuable land in California, Arizona and Alaska; and coins and other rare artifacts.

AP Laserphoto

Missing is any mention of pure silver, though government investigators claim the brothers came within weeks of cornering the world's silver market.

While the documents attempt to set out what the brothers own, they caution, "valuation of such complex and varied assets raises difficult issues upon which reasonable minds can differ."

Bunker, 63, always has been the bigger of the two brothers, both physically and monetarily.

His collection of more than 10,000 ancient Islamic, Roman and Greek coins is called "the largest and most valuable privately held collection of ancient coins in the world."

The collection, which sits in vaults at Sotheby's, is worth an estimated $19 million. Bunker also has a collection of 16 vases, from 2,700 to 2,500 years old, on exhibit at Fort Worth's Kimbell Art Museum.

The contribution of Herbert, 60, to that exhibit consists of 38 ancient bronze statues and artifacts, valued at about $3.5 million, dating from the Eighth Century to Third Century B.C.

One of Bunker's companies is Bluegrass Farm Sales Inc., which owns and leases 2 million acres of Australian farm and ranch land with an estimated value of $17.5 million.

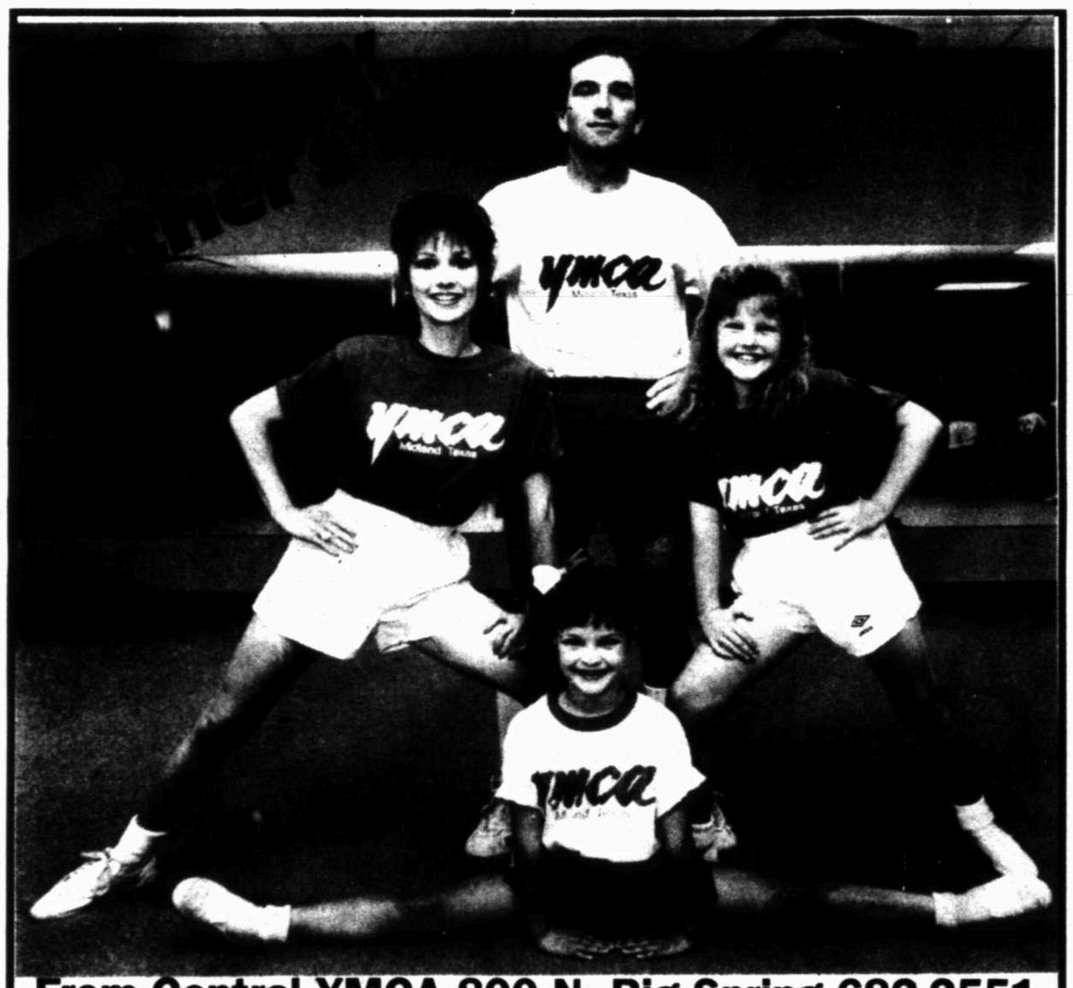

There's also a 81,290-acre ranch that sprawls across six counties in southeastern Oklahoma valued at $11.26 million, and a 9,012-acre ranch, worth about $18.05 million, that straddles the Tennessee-Mississippi state line.

Including his $1.8 million home in suburban Dallas, and $250,000 condominium in Hawaii, his real estate holdings come to $137.88 million and are located in seven states.

There's also $23.53 million in oil and gas properties, $11.29 million of livestock and thoroughbred race horses and $52.95 million of other investments, including a $1 million, one-third share of Bronco Bowl, a 72-lane Dallas bowling alley. Herbert and brother Lamar Hunt split the other two-thirds.

Herbert owns a Byzantine coin collection that he values at $2 million. But it might fetch only $1 million if liquidated because of the limited number of collectors of Byzantine coins, the document notes.

Most of Herbert's real estate holdings are contained in partnerships with family members and longtime business associate A. Paul Stephens. Herbert's various partnerships with Stephens are valued at $66.84 million, and mostly involve Paloma Corp. developments in the Phoenix area.

Legislature to try again to revamp workers' compensation bill

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — After three weeks at home, the Texas Legislature will regroup Tuesday for another attempt to reform the state's 75-year-old system for compensation of injured workers.

Responding to business complaints about soaring insurance rates, Gov. Bill Clements called the lawmakers back for a special session to hammer out an agreed bill that eluded negotiators during the 140-day regular session.

Unlike this spring, when the Legislature had more than 5,000 bills as distractions, Clements has made it clear he expects the lawmakers to give the workers' compensation reform their undivided attention in the special session before he considers opening the session to consideration of other issues.

If the House and Senate do not agree in the 30-day session, or if the governor is not satisfied with the bill, he has promised to call them back for as many sessions as it takes to produce a bill that provides rate relief for businesses and better benefits for workers.

In the regular session, the original bill by Rep. Richard Smith, R-Bryan, sailed through the House in March and got the enthusiastic backing of business groups, only to see the Senate rewrite it with provisions for job safety and the right to jury trials on compensation appeals to make the bill more palatable to organized labor and trial lawyers.

Efforts to reconcile the House and Senate versions broke down on the last day of the regular session amid charges over which side was responsible for the impasse.

In the House bill, compensation appeals would be heard by a district court judge, instead of allowing trial by jury. The Senate plan would have restricted appeals of agency decisions to district court, but it would keep jury trials in those appeals.

House negotiators argued that the threat of juries making larger awards in compensation appeals was one of the main reasons insurance rates were skyrocketing. Senate negotiators, including trial lawyers who make their living representing workers in lawsuits, called the House plan "trial by bureaucracy" and an unconstitutional attempt to reduce access of workers to the courts.

Smith said the revised House Bill 1 he filed Friday afternoon adopts the Senate bill's worker safety provisions and insurance discounts for employers with good safety records.

The House bill would still eliminate jury trials on appeals but it would add a mediation and arbitration alternative similar to one that organized labor proposed in the Senate during the regular session.

"We've adopted a number of provisions the Senate expressed interest in and we've adopted a number of provisions organized labor expressed interest in," Smith said. "It's an excellent starting point and a show of good faith on the part of the House."

But Smith said he did not know how the two bodies would reconcile their difference over jury trials or the method used to figure impairment. "There are some things that don't lend themselves to splitting the difference," he said. He hoped House concessions on issues such as safety enforcement might cause the Senate to move on the other issues.

"This is not the answer but it's an answer," said Smith, who added that he rewrote House Bill 1 during the interim without the input of lobbyists. "I think we start from a much better position in the special session than we did at the start of the regular session."

A group of senators, including Democrats Kent Caperton of Bryan, John Montford of Lubbock, Carl Parker of Port Arthur, Ted Lyon of Rockwall and Bob Glasgow of Stephenville and Republicans Cyndi Krier of San Antonio, Bob McFarland of Arlington and Ike Harris of Dallas, all lawyers, have been working to refine the last conference version into the new Senate workers' compensation bill.

Parker, a trial lawyer and a close ally of organized labor, said he believes the Senate has given in on two-thirds of the issues the House proposed, including limits on lawyer participation by beefing up the administrative and arbitration process and restricting lump sum settlements, but he said a solid majority in the Senate will hold the line on the critical issues, such as the right to jury trials.

Krier said the Senate group started where the conference committee left off on safety and risk management but picked up the Senate version on how to figure benefits. "Our staffs have been meeting every day and they have kept the fax machines burning," as different proposals are exchanged, she said.

After hearing from the lobbyists for five months, she said, the senators think it is time for them to finish the job. "We've all worked on this so long that there is a growing appreciation of where everybody's coming from," she said.

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, a businessman whose district includes Midland, said he hopes the Legislature can finish its task in a few weeks, but he would not rule out several sessions.

Dropout prevention bill signed

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas teen-agers must stay in school if they want to drive under dropout prevention legislation signed into law by Gov. Bill Clements.

Nearing the bottom of a 1,081-bill pile left for him when the 1989 Legislature adjourned on May 29, Clements on Friday also signed a measure to pump $450 million into a program for increasing state aid to poor school districts.

Clements will complete his bill signing task Sunday night.

The governor said the education bills were a highlight of the recently completed session.

"Enhancing our public schools is at the heart of the educational excellence program for Texas that I proposed in January and that the Legislature approved," Clements said.

"Educational excellence and economic excellence go hand in hand. Without a well-educated work force, Texas cannot make progress," he said.

The governor hailed the "no-class, no-car" bill as an innovative way to combat the soaring numbers of Texas students who quit school before receiving their high school diplomas.

The bill's supporters said teen-agers would be reluctant to quit school if they wouldn't be able to drive.

The new law will prohibit anyone under age 18 from receiving a driver's license or motorcycle operator's license without proof of high school graduation or current school enrollment.

A dropout could obtain a license, however, if he or she had been enrolled for at least 45 days in a program to pass a high school equivalency exam for a diploma.

A recent study by the Texas Education agency found that more than 87,000 students in grades seven through 12 left school last year.

The governor called the dropout rate "alarming" and said it was one of the toughest problems facing Texas officials.

"This simply is unacceptable," Clements said. "That's why I'm signing what I believe is one of the most novel approaches to attack this problem.

"The no-class, no-car law will send a clear signal to students thinking about leaving school: if you want a driver's license, you must go to class."

Clements cuts $11 million from budget

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements' vetoes from the state budget will make it more difficult to collect court-ordered child support payments and will hurt the Texas agriculture industry, officials said Saturday.

Late Friday, Clements signed into law the $47.4 billion budget for the two-year period beginning Sept. 1.

Using his line-item veto power, the governor cut $11 million from the spending plan.

Nearly $3 million of that amount was from the Texas Department of Agriculture. Clements, a Republican, and Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower, a Democrat, have frequently been at odds.

"The Texas Department of Agriculture was largely singled out by his (Clements') veto pen," said Andy Welch, a spokesman for Hightower.

During the legislative session, Clements and Hightower fought over the future of the Agriculture Department.

The chemical lobby and some farm groups were angered by Hightower's enforcement of pesticide regulations and his proposal to sell hormone-free beef to Europe. They pushed to make the agriculture commissioner's post an appointed, rather than elective, position.

State lawmakers passed, and the governor signed, a so-called compromise bill in which the agriculture commissioner's post would remain an elected position, but Hightower's authority over pesticide enforcement was diluted.

On Friday, Clements vetoed the Agriculture Department's data processing system as well as measures that would have tightened inspections of produce entering Texas, increased research on drought-resistant plants and promoted the state's fledgling fish farming industry, Welch said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Hospitals try to reverse trend

LEVELLAND (AP) — Rural hospitals are shutting down across the nation, and health experts on Saturday discussed ways to reverse the trend, particularly in Texas.

Eleven witnesses, several of whom are administrators of rural hospitals, testified at a meeting on the campus of South Plains College called by Rep. Larry Combest, R-Texas, of Lubbock.

Among panelists at a discussion session were representatives from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Texas Department of Health, Texas Medical Foundation, Texas Medical Association, Texas Hospital Association and Texas Health Care Association.

The panelists said rural hospitals have problems with inequitable Medicare reimbursements, declining occupancy rates, difficulty in recruitment and retention of medical personnel and rising liability costs, which have begun to force general and family practitioners from obstetrics.

E. Jay Wheeler of the Texas Tech University School of Medicine presented particular demographics of a 109-county area in West Texas — a higher poverty level; higher infant mortality rates; and fewer doctors, less than half of the national average.

Data presented during the conference showed the median occupancy rate of the 14 rural hospitals in the 19th district to be 19 percent; the median occupancy rate of the seven urban hospitals in the same area was 57.1 percent.

The data also indicated disparity in Medicare compensation between rural and urban facilities and a trend of patients choosing to go out of county for health care.

Judge approves bid for college

DALLAS (AP) — A bankruptcy judge has approved a mysterious Sri Lankan woman's bid to purchase Bishop College, contingent on her ability to meet a $10 million payment deadline.

U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Robert C. McGuire also approved Friday a second contract that would sell the property to Faith and Miracle Ministries of Fort Worth if Sri Lankan resident Sujatha Nadarajah cannot make arrangements to pay $10 million more by July 4.

Ms. Nadarajah has posted $75,000 in jewels as a deposit.

"The backup contract is for $12 million — all cash," said Raoul Smyth, an attorney for U.S. bankruptcy trustee Duke Salisbury who is overseeing the liquidation of Bishop College's assets.

"Both purchasers intend to make substantial repairs to the campus," Smyth said.

A prior bid had been submitted by Antioch Christian College of Studio, Calif., but was withdrawn from consideration, Smyth said.

Sales lag for Dallas toll card

DALLAS (AP) — Traffic is hardly backing up to purchase the Dallas North Tollway's electronic automatic toll payment card, but officials remain unfazed.

With the inauguration scheduled for 12:01 a.m. Monday, only 2,000 TollTags have been sold, far short of the 15,000 needed to cover the operating costs of the company paying for the program.

"People generally wait to buy almost anything until they can use it," said Jerry Shelton, assistant director of the Texas Turnpike Authority.

Amtech spent more than $5 million to install the computerized readers at every toll gate. The system will begin working Monday at the 28 toll plazas on the north and south ends of the tollway, with the readers expected to be operational at all toll booths by Aug. 1.

David Cook, chairman of the executive committee at Amtech, said interest is high, adding that many callers remain unclear about the concept.

For $2 a month, a driver is issued a credit card-sized tag that carries a programmed electronic chip. As the chip passes one of the electric readers at the toll booth, the driver's account is charged the amount of the toll — plus a nickel service charge.

University to buy asbestos license

AUSTIN (AP) — The University of Texas at Austin has agreed to pay $475 for a license that will allow the school to legally hire workmen to remove asbestos from its buildings.

The school has come under criticism since last fall because it had not obtained a license from the Texas Department of Health to remove the cancer-causing substance from buildings on its campus.

School officials said Friday a private company that removes asbestos has been contracted by the university's physical plant division.

The division is being investigated by the state health department following a complaint from a worker about safety procedures, school officials said.

State health officials declined to discuss the case with the Austin American-Statesman, the newspaper reported.

Howard Wilson, director of the physical plant division, said the decisions were made partially in response to several stories in The Daily Texan, the student newspaper, that questioned asbestos safety standards at the university.

Wilson and other UT officials denied published allegations by current and former workers that employees were ordered to remove asbestos without taking required precautions.

King Ranch moving headquarters

HOUSTON (AP) — King Ranch Inc., operator of the legendary King Ranch in South Texas, plans to move its corporate headquarters from Dallas to Houston.

"Houston is the place to be," said Catherine Cook, an aide to Roger L. Jarvis, who took over Friday as company president after the unexplained resignation of Darwin E. Smith. Jarvis previously directed the oil and gas operations of the ranch.

Smith's resignation was announced Thursday by King Ranch officials in Kingsville. He is the longtime chairman and chief executive officer of Kimberly-Clark, a paper and consumer products manufacturer in Dallas.

Genetic 'mapping' advances Down's syndrome research

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Down's syndrome has been linked to a defect on a tiny slice of one of the human chromosomes, an important step toward prevention and treatment of the disorder, researchers said Saturday.

In a separate report, researchers also reported progress in narrowing the search for the defect responsible for one, relatively uncommon form of Alzheimer's disease.

In a week of intensive meetings and reviews of scientific reports, about 700 researchers from around the world announced the genetic "mapping" of about 400 new genes, 53 of them linked to specific diseases.

The reports were presented at the Tenth International Workshop on Human Gene Mapping, held at Yale University.

NATION

The process of gene mapping, in which researchers determine where a particular gene lies on the 23 pairs of human chromosomes, is a necessary step toward isolating a gene and determining its role in human health.

"By mapping it, you can find it, isolate it, and develop new means of therapy," said Dr. Frank Ruddle of Yale University, one of the organizers of the conference.

Such mapping helps doctors understand human genes, in much the same way that road maps aid the understanding of places.

People unfamiliar with New York City, for example, may not have any idea what Forty-second Street is like until Times Square is "mapped" onto it. In the same way, researchers have mapped the Down's syndrome defect to a very narrow region on human chromosome 21.

At the Ninth International Gene Mapping Workshop two years ago in Paris, scientists had mapped about 1,000 human genes.

By last week, the total had climbed to about 1,550. The announcement of 400 new ones Saturday brings the total to nearly 2,000, an increase of more than one-fourth over what it was a week ago.

The number of mapped genes has doubled every two years since 1973, said Ruddle. If that rate of progress continues, the entire human complement of perhaps 50,000 to 100,000 genes should be mapped by the end of the century.

One example of what gene mapping can lead to is the spectacular recent progress in understanding the most common form of muscular dystrophy.

Until that was done, the cause of the disease was a mystery. Researchers mapped the gene, isolated it, and determined how it was put together.

That gave them a good idea of the kind of protein that might be related to it. They searched for the protein, found it, and determined that people with muscular dystrophy were missing a working version of it.

The mystery is solved, and new treatments are already being developed as a result, said Ruddle.

Down's syndrome, marked by low I.Q. and facial abnormalities, is one of the most common genetic ailments. It occurs in people who mistakenly have an extra copy of chromosome 21.

Researchers reported Saturday that the condition is related to a tiny portion of that chromosome that could contain no more than a few thousand genes, probably fewer.

They can now begin to search that region for the precise genes responsible for the condition.

The work that led to the mapping of Down's syndrome to that tiny region was done mostly by Dr. Pierre-Marie Sinet of the Necker Hospital for Sick Children in Paris and Dr. Julie Korenberg of the Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles.

Researchers have also determined that one uncommon form of Alzheimer's disease is related to a defect on chromosome 21. They reported at the workshop that they have narrowed the location to one of two small regions on the chromosome.

Gas supply expected to be tight

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gasoline supplies this summer are likely to be the tightest in years, but motorists won't be idling in long lines unless the distribution system is crimped by a refinery or pipeline accident, analysts say.

The supply squeeze may trigger more price increases as the summer driving season wears on. Yet interviews with government, industry and independent analysts indicate at least a modest possibility that prices could drop a few cents a gallon.

"We'll not see a gasoline shortage," barring a major supply accident, says John Lichtblau, executive director of the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation in New York.

He says refineries are running full blast to meet a growing demand for gasoline, so the supply system is more vulnerable than usual to accidental outages.

"If any refinery breaks down you could have some problems," Lichtblau says.

The national average gasoline price slipped about a penny a gallon between mid-May and early June, to $1.17, after a steep and steady rise earlier in the spring, according to the Lundberg Survey, a Los Angeles-based group that tracks gasoline prices through surveys of 12,000 service stations nationwide.

Overall, prices now are nearly 20 cents a gallon higher than at the start of the year.

The price outlook for summer is clouded by conflicting forces at work in the market.

More summertime driving would be expected to push up prices at the pump, yet wholesale prices paid by service station dealers have come down in recent weeks. It's not clear, however, that dealers will pass on their savings to consumers, since they took a beating in late March and April when wholesale prices skyrocketed in the aftermath of the Exxon oil tanker spill in Alaska on March 24.

"Retailers have not gained back all that they lost" in profit margins, says Trilby Lundberg, head of the gasoline survey. So they may not be ready to drop prices, she said.

The big price jump following the oil spill, which only briefly interrupted crude oil supplies to the West Coast, was one of the steepest on record. It sparked accusations on Capitol Hill of price gouging and possible collusion among the oil companies.

The companies say they have simply passed on the higher prices they are paying for crude oil. Lichtblau says crude accounts for about half the cost of making gasoline.

Edwin Rothschild, assistant director of the Citizen-Labor Energy Coalition, says gasoline prices were bound to rise this spring because of growing demand and a variety of factors that have constrained gasoline production. But he contends the oil companies used the Exxon spill as an excuse to push up prices to service station dealers much faster than was justified.

Rothschild says prices are likely to jump another nickel a gallon this summer, but he rejects a forecast by Buyers Up, a Washington-based consumer group, that motorists soon could find themselves in gas lines reminiscent of the 1970s.

"That's ludicrous," says Rothschild. He and other analysts say any further squeeze on supplies will push up prices, not force stations to close pumps.

Christopher Dyson, author of the Buyers Up report of June 13, says one of the key reasons for expecting gas lines is that existing stocks of gasoline — and the availability of foreign supplies — are not enough to meet growing demand.

"We could see spot shortages in the form of gas lines by the beginning of August," he says.

Peter Beutel, an analyst with the New York investment firm of Elders Futures, had predicted last April a 50 percent chance of gas lines this summer. But he now says the chances have dropped to about 20 percent because the higher prices have attracted new supplies.

Thomas Petrie, a partner in the Denver-based oil consulting firm Petrie Parkman, says he cannot rule out the possibility of brief shortages of gasoline this summer, even if there are no refinery accidents or other big problems. He says any shortages would be "very localized, not something that is national."

One of the main reasons for concern, in Petrie's view, is the effect new environmental regulations are having on refinery operations.

The Environmental Protection Agency in March imposed new rules to limit gasoline fumes during the summer months. The rules, called Reid Vapor Pressure standards, are intended to cut emissions of volatile hydrocarbons from gasoline.

GOP gives Atwater vote of confidence

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican National Chairman Lee Atwater has been handed a fresh vote of confidence from party leaders and a challenge from his Democratic counterpart "to move politics in this nation out of the gutter."

Atwater

Atwater, under fire from Democrats and critics within the GOP for his rough-and-tumble style of politics, was praised in a resolution Friday by the party's national committee.

The committee's resolution said Atwater's aggressive stance has "made him the target of unremitting attacks from Democrats and their surrogates" and he should keep it up.

The resolution neglected to mention the controversy surrounding a GOP memo about the new House Speaker Thomas S. Foley. The memo from Atwater's office compared the voting record of the new House speaker with that of Rep. Barney Frank, a liberal Massachusetts Democrat who has acknowledged being homosexual.

The memo bore the heading, "Tom Foley: Out of the Liberal Closet," a play on the expression for acknowledging one's homosexuality.

The memo led to the resignation last week of an Atwater aide, Mark Goodin, and caused an outcry from Democrats. Atwater said he did not know about the memo until after it was sent out. President Bush said at the time he believed Atwater and praised him for doing a "great job."

It remained to Senate Republican leader Bob Dole to bring Foley's name up from the platform for the first time in one of the closing speeches on Friday.

Dole reviewed the nomination battles in which Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork and Defense Secretary-designate John Tower were defeated, and said, "We don't need any more smears of character."

"That was the problem of Robert Bork, of John Tower and, yes, of Tom Foley," he said.

"I have had my differences with Lee Atwater," Dole told the Republican group, "but the president has spoken and Lee Atwater is staying and he should and he is doing a good job."

House Republican Whip Newt Gingrich of Georgia claimed in his speech that different standards are applied to liberals and conservatives in Washington and that "if you are a whistle blower in the conservative movement and the Republican Party, there are no holds barred in trying to destroy you."

It was Gingrich, not then GOP whip, who first called for the ethics investigation of former Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, which led to the elevation of Foley from majority leader.

In debate on the resolution, Jack London, the GOP national committeeman from Arizona, said the party chairman has "the courage to do what all of us need to do."

Civil rights events focusing on changed society

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — The slayings of three civil rights workers 25 years ago focused national attention on Mississippi's segregated society, and people here hope a special commemoration this week will highlight how it has changed.

"From the beginning there was a realization that the eyes of this nation and of the world literally were going to turn to Mississippi on June 21," said Secretary of State Dick Molpus, who has been active in planning the event.

"We may never have another opportunity to show what the real Mississippi is now," he said.

On Wednesday, citizens of Philadelphia, Miss., and Philadelphia, Pa., will join for a series of events marking the 1964 murders of Andrew Goodman, a 20-year-old white New York resident, James Chaney, a 21-year-old black Meridian resident, and Henry Schwerner, a 24-year-old white New Yorker.

The three had been conducting a black voter registration drive when they left the site of a burned black church in Neshoba County. They were arrested on a traffic violation and taken to jail in Philadelphia, but were released and disappeared on June 21, 1964. Their bodies were found 44 days later buried in an earthen dam.

Twenty-one whites were arrested in the shooting deaths. Murder charges were dropped in state court but seven men were later convicted for violating federal civil rights laws.

A fictionalized account of the murders and other events of the era were portrayed in the Academy Award-winning movie "Mississippi Burning." The movie's release late last year returned national attention to Philadelphia.

"Some of us here deeply feel that there should be a commemorative for those boys," said Fenton Deweese, a member of the steering committee for the "Philadelphia to Philadelphia" project.

"All they were trying to do was to get people to vote," said Deweese, who is white. "That's such an American thing to do and for them to be killed for it...you can see how ludicrous it was for people to be afraid.

"I think their murders were a catalyst to the whole civil rights movement. That's why it's important that this be commemorated," he said.

Among the day's scheduled events in Philadelphia, Miss., a town of about 6,500 people, are an ecumenical service at the Mount Zion United Methodist Church, the church where Goodman, Chaney and Schwerner had been the night they disappeared. A picnic and speeches also are planned.

Family members and two other groups are planning a memorial caravan from Philadelphia, to Washington and New York, ending with a special observance at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York. It will reverse the route of the three men to Philadelphia, about 60 miles northeast of Jackson.

"The people of Philadelphia wanted to do like an ostrich, just bury their heads in the sand and hope it would go away," said Ivory Lyles, who is black and chairman of the steering committee. "But (the murders were) a tremendous part of history, and until you acknowledge a part of history and put it in its proper perspective, you're going to be confronted with it."

Some Philadelphia residents were skeptical about the event at first, Lyles said, but now it has the backing of the vast majority.

"The real story in Philadelphia, Miss., is the number of local leaders that have moved behind this effort," Molpus said.

"I hope it will show how the community 25 years later has tried to do some positive and constructive things by honoring the memory of those three civil rights workers and the principles they stood for," said Stanley Dearman, editor of the Neshoba Democrat, a weekly newspaper and a steering committee member. "It shows what can be done and I hope it can spill over into other areas of community life."

But racism can still be found in the town, Deweese said.

"If you want to go down the street and find somebody who will say 'nigger,' you can still find them," he said. "You can find them in Meridian, you can find them in Philadelphia, Pa. They're easy to find in a small town and I could point them out to you.

"But you would be doing us a great disservice because they in no way represent the community."

Caped crusader movie stirs up hype, controversy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Batman" flies into 2,100 U.S. and Canadian theaters June 23 amid a cloud of super-hype and mini-controversy, and a storm of merchandise ranging from earrings to underwear.

The Warner Bros. version of the 50-year-old comic book has proved the most talked-about movie of the summer season, though not all of the talk has been good. The studio hopes that its publicity blast and the film itself will steamroller the negative stuff.

Controversy began with the casting of Michael Keaton as Bruce Wayne, a.k.a. Batman. Longtime Batfans were expecting more of a hunk to play their hero, not a slim comedy actor.

"I had heard something (about the protests) while I was making the picture in England, but it didn't seem like any big deal to me," says Keaton. "I am shocked-slash-fascinated. I'm telling you, man, these people must have the same lobbyists as the NRA (National Rifle Association). These guys have some clout; I can't believe it. I mean, how many are there?

"It's just funny to me. I never had time to get angry about it because we were working in England, and I missed a lot of it until I came back."

Director Tim Burton adds: "Comic book people are very specific; they have a very strong image in their minds. But it's a real source of argument because every comic book fan has a different opinion. When we went into ('Batman') we decided to try to be true to it, but to do our own thing also."

Though Keaton achieved stardom in such comedies as "Mr. Mom" and "Beetlejuice," he displays little of his antic humor as Bruce Wayne, and none as Batman.

"I always try to do what the role requires, and I try to do a different role every time," he said. "I discussed the role with Tim as well as Jack (Nicholson). The character was clearly more powerful if he was more internal. As Jack said to me in makeup one day, 'Just let the wardrobe act, kid.' There was great wisdom in that statement. The real power came from within.

"My natural tendency is to do more because you sometimes fear you're not doing enough. The longer I'm an actor, the more I discover that less is more."

Early reviews of "Batman" have not been the raves that Warner Bros. would dearly love. The Associated Press said it was "ultimately unsatisfying... he makers of the 1989 'Batman' can't seem to make up their minds. Tim Burton...seems overburdened with the logistics of an immensely costly production."

Rolling Stone called it a classic, but Time magazine found the style "daunting and lurching" and observed that the film "prowls — slowly, so slowly — in search of grandeur, but it often finds murk."

Daily Variety termed "Batman" uneven and commented that "Jack Nicholson's incandescent Joker overwhelms Michael Keaton's subdued title character."

Films such as "Rambo: First Blood Part II" and "Coming to America" overcame poor reviews to amass $100 million-plus grosses. If reviewers thumb down "Batman," can it prove equally critic-proof?

"I hope so," says director Burton. "You hope people will judge the movie and not the merchandising."

"I don't care what anybody says, the movie's good," declares Keaton. "It's an awful lot of fun. How's that — strong enough?"

"Batman" has been a 10-year crusade for producers Jon Peters and Peter Guber. Why so long?

"Because we were making 30 other pictures, everything from 'The Color Purple' to 'Flashdance' to 'Caddyshack' to 'The Witches of Eastwick,'" Peters said. "We paid Tom Mankiewicz $750,000 and went through five or six drafts and still came up with something that was too derivative, too much like 'Superman.'"

"Batman" began to take shape with the addition of writer Sam Hamm and Tim Burton, a graduate of Disney animation who had directed only two films, "Pee-wee's Big Adventure" and "Beetlejuice."

Peters recalled suggesting the role of the Joker to Nicholson while filming "The Witches of Eastwick" on location in New England.

"We were talking at 3 a.m. on the night before Jack had to do the church sequence in which he denounced women and threw up over everybody. I said he should play the Joker, and he said, 'Are you crazy? Here I am playing the devil and making every woman mad at me. You want to throw my career down the toilet?'"

After weeks of persuasion, Nicholson began to see possibilities in the role. Peters' first choice for Batman was Bill Murray. "I wanted an action picture that was funny."

Mercury astronauts plead to save planet

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Five of the original seven Mercury astronauts marked the 30th anniversary of the launching of the nation's manned space program with a plea to save Earth.

Scott Carpenter said on Friday that the Soviet Union has moved ahead of the United States in space exploration, but added: "Maybe that's OK."

He said the world is being united "by a common foe — the health of this planet. We no longer should think about spending money to go to Mars. We need to make this planet one that will flourish."

That, he said, "has more priority, in my view, than beating the Soviets to Mars."

Wally Schirra suggested that countries work together on a space station and satellites that could observe things such as weather patterns in a project he called "Mission to Planet Earth."

"We've definitely got to get concerned about spaceship Earth," he said. "It's where we live...We don't need to go to Mars just yet."

Carpenter and Schirra were joined by Alan Shepard, Gordon Cooper and Donald "Deke" Slayton at a news conference at the University of North Carolina's Morehead Planetarium to celebrate several anniversaries, including next month's 20th anniversary of the first moon landing.

This year also marks the 30th anniversary of their becoming the nation's first astronauts and the start of the U.S. manned space program.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, was unable to attend events Friday but was expected to join the group today. Virgil "Gus" Grissom, one of the original seven astronauts, was killed Jan. 27, 1967, in a fire aboard Apollo I.

The Mercury space program consisted of six flights from 1961 to 1963, including the first U.S. manned flight with Shepard in 1961 and the first U.S. manned orbital flight with Glenn in 1962.

The seven astronauts trained at the planetarium beginning in February 1960.

"Since I spent the least amount of time here, I was the fastest learner," Shepard said.

The astronauts also were having their annual reunion to raise money for the Mercury Seven Foundation, which they founded as a scholarship program for college students interested in careers in scientific or engineering fields.

Wyatt remembers 'Father Knows Best' in marathon

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jane Wyatt came away from taping an appearance for a special "Father Knows Best" marathon for Father's Day surprised at just how good the sitcom was almost 30 years ago.

"We stopped filming in 1960," said Wyatt. "It's hard to believe. We saw bits and pieces of shows when we taped the special. They were quite good. The show had substance. That's why it lasted so long. Our shows were written to be entertaining, but the writers had something to say."

Wyatt and the rest of the cast will appear during the seven-hour "Father Knows Best" marathon on the CBN Family Channel on Sunday, Father's Day.

In its last season of original episodes, 1959-60, "Father Knows Best" ranked sixth in the Nielsen ratings. It has run on all three networks. CBS first ran it in 1954, then NBC picked it up the second year, then it returned to CBS until 1961-62. ABC ran the series one last season.

Robert Young starred as Jim Anderson. Wyatt was Margaret. The children were Elinor Donahue as Betty, or "Princess," Billy Gray as James Jr., better known as "Bud," and Lauren Chapin as Kathy, "Kitten."

"Father Knows Best" was the quintessential wholesome family sitcom, along with "The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet" and "The Life of Riley."

The show had begun in 1949 as a radio show with Young in the lead role and June Whitley as Margaret.

U.S. to propose verifying elimination of nuclear weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials say they will ask the Soviets at talks that open Monday to agree to test plans for verifying elimination of some weapons as a means of speeding up the proposed Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty.

"The goal is not to delay, the goal is to accelerate," said a senior Pentagon official. He said unclear methods of verification had flawed some previous arms control pacts and delayed negotiation and eventual Senate ratification of others.

"Instead of treating verification as the caboose on the train, and treating it at the end or after the end, during ratification debates, I think that we will probably see an effort to bring that to a higher priority and get serious movement going on things that could substantially advance our ability to verify this agreement when it is done," said the official, speaking on condition that he not be further identified.

President Bush has decided to make no dramatic changes in the U.S. position in the START talks, which resume in Geneva on Monday after a recess that began last November, his spokesman said last week. The treaty would eliminate 30 percent to 50 percent of long-range superpower nuclear weapons.

Bush delayed reopening the talks pending completion of a "strategic review," a process that apparently yielded new ideas on verification.

"The previous administration left an excellent foundation on which to build," White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters Friday, saying there would be only "relatively minor changes" from the Reagan administration.

But Bush wants to take advantage of the new Soviet openness to test methods of verifying cuts in some of the long-range ballistic missiles already agreed upon under the draft treaty, said the Pentagon official.

The official declined to disclose the exact nature of the contemplated tests, but he said they would not include one proposed by Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev to verify the presence of nuclear-tipped cruise missiles aboard submarines.

The administration has endorsed objections by the U.S. Navy to Gorbachev's proposal to ban that category of missiles, an impasse that remains one of the major obstacles to completion of the treaty.

Also unresolved is a U.S. call for a ban on mobile missiles, a class of weapon the Soviets have deployed but the United States has not.

Verifying numbers of mobile missiles on either side may be an unsolvable problem despite the use of satellites and on-site inspection, said the Pentagon official, although he declined to specify whether the new U.S. ideas attempted to resolve that issue.

"The START process is basically a sound process. A lot has been accomplished in these negotiations with the Soviets. We don't want to throw that away," said the Pentagon official.

"Even on a number of elements where we have achieved a surprising degree of agreement with the Soviets, there are some very big verification problems that we can see already," said the official.

"Clearly, one of the areas that has been the subject of the greatest attention is the subject of mobile ICBMs (intercontinental ballistic missiles) and what their place would be under the START agreement," said the official.

The Soviet Union has deployed two mobile missile systems, designated by the Pentagon as the SS-24 and SS-25, whereas the United States has not developed one. The administration has asked Congress to approve the deployment of rail-based MX missiles, with 10 warheads apiece, and to fund development of the Midgetman, with one or two warheads apiece.

"The biggest problems about mobiles are for verification and for breakout. And until we see that solutions to those problems can be found, then there are very strong arguments in favor of continuing the ban" insisted on by President Reagan, the official said.

U.S. officials will propose "actually going out and doing some things that would give us the kind of knowledge on the basis of which we could say, 'Well, it turns out we can verify this thing with greater confidence than we thought, because there are certain things that we can observe that we didn't realize went along with that system," said the official.

"Or alternatively, we could say, 'Well it turns out that what we thought would be a sufficient level of inspection isn't good enough... "

Bush using veto power, gets tough

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — President Bush, who has emphasized compromise over confrontation in his dealings with Congress, is now getting tough, using his veto power and threatening it to get his way on Capitol Hill.

Bush vetoed his first bill this past week, sending back to Capitol Hill Democratic-supported legislation that would raise the minimum wage to $4.55 an hour. And the veto was upheld.

Then, to crack the whip over a renegade band of House Republicans, Bush threatened a veto of rescue legislation for the troubled savings and loan industry if amendments diluting his proposals are included.

The amendment the White House was finding most objectionable immediately was defeated by a wide margin.

"It's helpful to have President Bush step up to the plate and take a swing at the ball," said Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., the House minority whip.

Bush is expected later this month to veto legislation that would put restrictions on production of the FSX fighter plane that is being developed jointly by the United States and Japan.

According to Fred McClure, the president's top assistant for congressional relations, Bush's veto of the minimum wage measure "signaled that he will stick to his guns."

McClure said it would be "premature" to say Bush will be as veto-happy as Gerald Ford, who issued 66 vetoes in three years in office.

"The veto is one of the few tools a president has," McClure said, "But you exercise it wisely. I don't think the veto st· ains relations. It would be different i· we had one every day."

Thoma: Mann, director of governmental studies at the Brookings Institution, a research group here, said the veto was a well-handled show of strength by Bush after months of compromising on such issues as Central America and the environment.

"Given their (the White House's) general posture of compromising with Congress, to keep credible, you have to use the veto on occasion and threaten to use it on other occasions," he said.

Mann said that because there is no overwhelming sentiment in Congress to raise the minimum wage, Bush could veto the measure "without doing himself any harm."

By delivering a table-thumping warning to members of his own party on the savings and loan legislation, Mann said, "Bush entered the fray at the right time and comes out smelling like a rose."

Congressional Democrats, while attacking Bush for showing insensitivity to the poor, did not seem terribly upset over Bush's veto of the minimum wage bill.

"We expected it," said Rep. William Gray, D-Pa., the new House majority whip. "It hasn't strained relations."

But the dispatch with which Bush cast his first presidential veto caught many by surprise and caused some grousing in Capitol Hill cloakrooms.

Bush signed a 1,500-word veto message Tuesday while aboard in Air Force One somewhere over Wyoming, just 59 minutes after the House and Senate-passed bill was received at the White House. Chief-of-staff John Sununu joked that the measure would "bounce back like a rubber ball."

The timing was apparently intended to preempt a news conference scheduled by House Speaker Thomas Foley and Senate Majority leader George Mitchell to announce that the measure had been sent to the White House.

Bush had promised all along to veto the bill if it exceeded what he called his "first and final offer" of raising the hourly minimum wage to $4.25. An estimated 4-million workers are paid the federally mandated minimum wage, which is now $3.35. There is further dispute over a subminimum "training wage" for newly hired workers.

Rep. Pat Williams, D-Mont., a cosponsor of the wage bill that Bush vetoed, said: "I think George Bush decided some time ago he was going to use this issue to show he's in charge."

Williams and other Democrats hold out hope Bush will compromise now that he has won his first major confrontation with Congress. But McClure said Bush would hang tough.

An aide to Rep. Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., the main sponsor of the minimum wage bill, said there are no bitter feelings among lawmakers toward Bush over the veto. "That's politics," he said.

But he said that will change if Bush refuses to compromise on another bill.

Youngsters are too young to be affected by divorce – right? The yelling at each other, dad working longer hours, mom crying – a child doesn't understand. Children often see themselves as the center of the family's problem. They become Co-Dependent on one parent or another, and the tragedy is without understanding, it will likely affect the way they love their family when they grow up.

Co-Dependency is a lifestyle in which an individual's self-esteem and validity are determined by pleasing or living for others. With proper attention, such an individual can reaffirm his own identity and enjoy a fuller, more rewarding life...for themselves and their families.

Clearview, a fully accredited leader in chemical dependency and family treatment for over 3 years, has begun a program to help find the answers to Co-Dependency. At least six dead in chopper crash

YARMOUTH, Mass. (AP) — A National Guard helicopter flying in dense fog crashed in a residential area on Cape Cod early today, killing at least six people aboard the aircraft, authorities said.

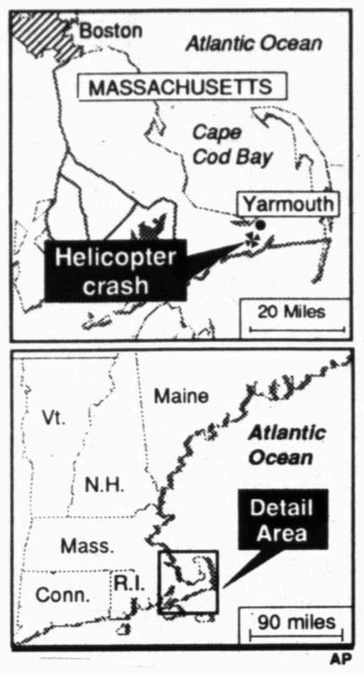

Because the wreckage was so severe, rescuers could not rule out the possibility that there were more fatalities, Yarmouth fire deputy William Greene said. Police said the UH-1H Bell chopper could carry up to 10 people.

The helicopter was from a Delaware Army National Guard unit based in New Castle, Del., guard spokeswoman Terry Blevins said from Delaware. She said the regiment is attending training camp at Camp Edwards, about 30 miles from the crash site.

Camp Edwards is part of the Otis Air Force Base complex. Calls to the base went unanswered.

The identities of the victims were not immediately released. Ms. Blevins said three of the victims were from Delaware.

The chopper crashed shortly after midnight in a residential neighborhood, missing one home by just 100 feet, Greene said. Wreckage was scattered in a 150-foot radius from the crash site.

Astronaut dies in crash

EARLE, Ark. (AP) — Astronaut S. David Griggs, who flew on the space shuttle in 1985 and was training to pilot a mission in November, died Saturday when the vintage plane he was flying slammed into a field, authorities said.

Lamar Coleman, a dispatcher for the Crittenden County Sheriff's Department, said the crash happened just after 9 a.m. south of Earle, which is about 20 miles west of Memphis, Tenn.

"There was just one killed. I understand he was doing some stunt-type flying," Coleman said.

An astronaut since August 1979, Griggs, 49, had been undergoing training as pilot for shuttle flight number 33, scheduled for November, NASA said.

"We can't say with any certainty at this point whether (the crash) will affect the mission," said NASA spokesman Jeff Carter in Houston.

A replacement for Griggs will be made from the pool of available astronauts, he said.

Officials urge caution

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The recent spate of thunderstorms that soaked Oklahoma with heavy rainfalls has created fast-flowing currents in lakes and other waters, and state health officials say extreme caution should be exercised.

"There is a tremendous undertow, especially in swollen rivers and creeks, that cannot be estimated," said Joan Leavitt, commissioner of the state Health Department. "The mud and debris combined with the undertow creates an extremely dangerous situation."

Ms. Leavitt said high water has been responsible for two drownings and one near-drowning during the past three weeks.

Officials say lakes, creeks, ponds and rivers may remain swollen through the weekend because of the recent rains.

The Oklahoma Lake Patrol is urging persons not to take boats in areas of swift or unpredictable water. Before going to a lake, individuals should contact the lake ranger or project manager to determine the condition of the lake and whether there is access to boating ramps.

Companies pull wine

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A second maker of inexpensive, high-alcohol wines is pulling the product from stores shelves in the city's seedy Tenderloin district, although some people doubt the move will curb alcoholism.

The manufacturer of Richard's Wild Irish Rose on Friday announced it was joining E.&J. Gallo in removing cheap wine from the neighborhood's stores. Gallo said Wednesday it would stop selling such brands as Thunderbird and Night Train Express to retailers in the Tenderloin — San Francisco's Skid Row — for six months.

Site of offshore drilling workshop changed

New York Times News Service

EUREKA, Calif. — Ejected from Eureka High School, President Bush's offshore drilling task force has found a haven for an upcoming public workshop on the campus of Humboldt State University.

Humboldt County officials were sent scrambling in search of an alternate meeting site earlier this week, after police and school district officials complained that anti-drilling demonstrations could disrupt summer classes and endanger public safety at the high school.

"The university has agreed to co-host the meeting with the county," said Wesley Chesbro, chairman of the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors. "It took some doing. They had read some of the things that the Police Department said. They had to be convinced that there was not going to be civil disobedience and riots."

Critics of the two-day workshop, which is set to take place June 28 and 29 on the Arcata campus, recalled the boisterous protests that occurred last year when more than 3,000 people attended an Interior Department hearing at Fort Bragg in Mendocino County.

Eureka police Capt. Bill Honsal said the high school auditorium, which seats just over 1,000 people, could be overwhelmed by a crowd of 2,000 or more.

Chesbro held that the concerns were unfounded. Although details remain to be worked out, the supervisor said he had received verbal assurance that the university would provide space for the workshop. The session is part of a series of public meetings the task force is holding in California and Florida.

"We won't miss our opportunity to get our message across," Chesbro said. "The people of Humboldt County do not want their shoreline spoiled with oil spills."

Critics hold that offshore oil drilling pollutes air and endangers the ocean environment. Appointed in March, the President's task force is conducting an environmental review of Lease Sale 95 off Southern California, Lease Sale 91 off Northern California, and Southwest Florida's Lease Sale 116. The group must complete its work by Jan. 1, 1990.

John Hennessy, an aide to the president of Humboldt State University, said officials will be prepared if a large crowd arrives for the two-day meeting.

"Obviously, we're aware there is a potential for a sizable crowd," he said. He added: "We are hopeful that the numbers that appear to participate will be orderly, but we will be taking what we perceive to be any necessary precautions."

The university's John Van Duzer Theater, a likely site for the workshop, actually is smaller than the high school auditorium. The facility will hold only about 750 people, Hennessy said.

Japan threatens to defy moratorium

New York Times News Service

SAN DIEGO — Japan suggested Saturday it may defy the worldwide moratorium on commercial whaling after its request for an emergency exemption to kill 320 whales was deferred until next year by the International Whaling Commission.

Kazuo Shima, Japan's chief delegate, told commissioners his country will "take appropriate measures" to ease economic, social, cultural and religious hardships created by the moratorium in four coastal whaling communities.

He did not specify those measures, but Alan Macnow, spokesman for the Japanese Whaling Association, said they "may" include killing the minke whales Japan wanted to kill under the exemption.

"But I don't think they'll do that," Macnow added. He said the measures may instead involve increased killing of smaller cetaceans not protected by the moratorium.

The commission, meeting in San Diego for its annual convention, passed the moratorium in 1982 over the objections of Japan and several other countries. The moratorium went into effect four years later.

Chinese students look toward home in fear

BOSTON (AP) — The unrest in Beijing has put the lives of tens of thousands of Chinese students and scholars in this country in limbo, and even the children of the elite fear they must turn away from their homeland.

"If China becomes a democratic country, I will go back," said Qian Songnian, a theoreticial physicist at Dartmouth College. "But in this situation, certainly not."

Chinese students began arriving in the United States in small numbers in the years after President Nixon's visit to China. The first large exchanges began in 1978, said Huang Zhengdong, a Yale University law student who heads a semi-official organization of Chinese students in the United States.

The figure of 40,000 Chinese students now in the United States is quoted by such groups as the Returned Student Association in Beijing. But the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service said a recent computer check found 73,000 Chinese with active student visas.

The Returned Student Association says there are an additional 40,000 Chinese students in countries other than the United States.

The majority here are graduate students in science, engineering and mathematics, mostly at major universities. And many are the sons and daugters of China leaders.

The number of student visas granted jumped from 17 in 1977 to 201 in 1978, and has soared to 18,000 new visas granted in fiscal 1988, said spokeswoman Frances Jones of the State Department, which does not keep cumulative figures.

Before 1980, "the political requirements were so tight," said Huang. "Their political backgrounds would be very clean. They came from families that were not class enemies," including families who fought for the communist revolution, workers, and peasants.

The political restrictions were eased after 1981, he said, though a 1987 rule said they had to show they "love the motherland and cherish socialism."

In practice, Huang said, "People who passed the academic examinations usually were allowed as long as their political qualifications were not that bad."

California universities are the top U.S. draw, with more than 10,000 Chinese students, followed by New York, Texas, Illinois and Massachusetts, according to the INS.

A total of 320,000 Chinese nationals are now in the United States, INS spokesman Greg Leo said. Following the crackdown, Attorney General Richard Thornburgh announced that all will be permitted to stay for at least one year.

Though the students here are among the best and the brightest of China, few are sponsored by their government.

By one estimate, only 2,000 to 3,000 students receive full government scholarships. Most graduate students are funded by their host universities. At Stanford University, for example, not one of the 150-odd Chinese students has a government subsidy, said Karlene Dickey, associate dean of graduate studies.

While official People's Republic of China media are condemning the outbreak of "Western bourgeois liberalism," it has been fashionable for China's elite to send its sons and daughters to study abroad where they are exposed to such ideas.

Students and academics here said most exchange students are the children of party members, professionals, intellectuals, teachers and technocrats. Children and grandchildren of Politburo members are believed to be among them.

"For those guys, the front door and the back door were all open," said Huang.

A University of Florida administrator added, "I don't ever recall coming across someone who said, 'My parents are farmers.'" Richard Downie, who has worked with Chinese students for nearly a decade at the university's Gainesville campus, recalls one early group who pooled their money and bought a Cadillac, which they drove to Canada during spring break.

Turmoil changes student

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Until the recent student upheavals in his country, Xiaobo Kan was a symbol of the new China, someone government officials might point to with pride. Born into the working class, he entered college at the age of 14, then came to the University of Houston to work on his doctorate in physics.

Now 24 and a leader of Chinese students in Houston, Kan appears to represent everything the Beijing government fears and detests.

The six-week period that culminated in the massacres of protesters at Tiananmen Square on June 3 may have changed his life forever.

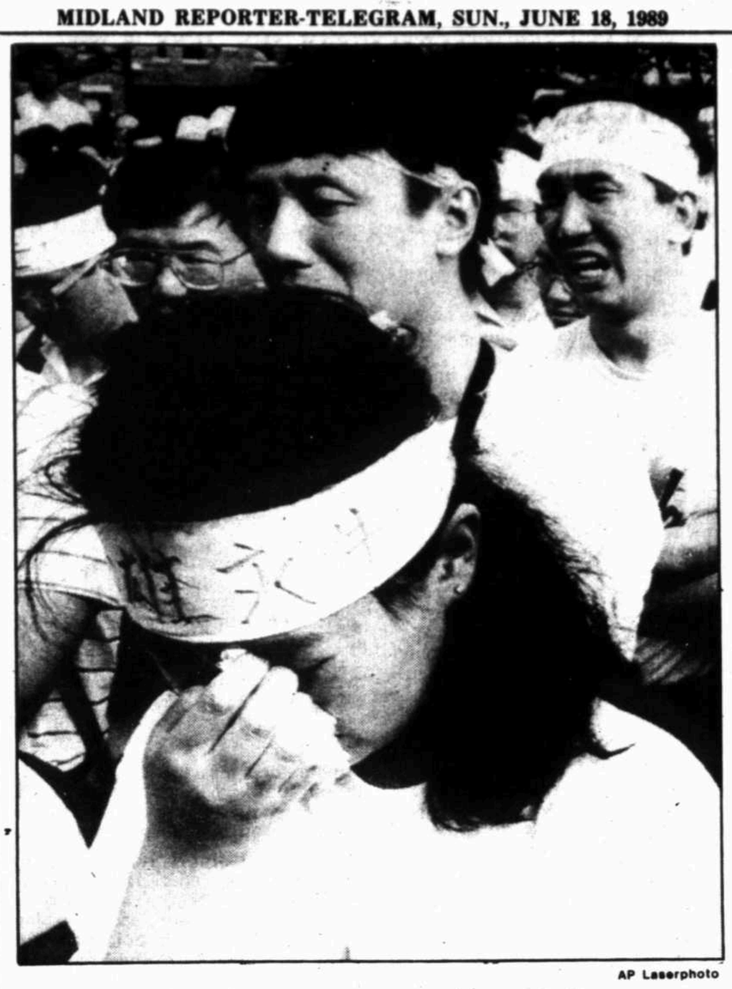

Before the recent tumult, Kan had intended to return home at the end of 1989 after finishing his degree. But because of his involvement in local student protests, he fears persecution if he returns to China soon.

"I still want to go back to China, but it may be better to wait a year or so," Kan said. "It's taking me longer than I expected to finish my thesis or do any experiments in the lab because I've been so involved with what's happening in China."

Kan said his life is typical of the estimated 70,000 Chinese students and scholars in the United States. Until recently, the group went almost unnoticed. Chinese student associations were typically non-political organizations that showed Chinese films, held parties and helped new students locate apartments.

Now the group's focus is totally political.

"At first I was a little afraid to get involved. But my thought is that the only way to stop the government oppression is to speak out," Kan said. "It is the only chance China has to get out of this dark period. It is horrifying, like a step backwards in time for us."

Officials: Investments in China can be diverted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thailand, the Philippines and Malaysia may benefit from the diversion of American and other foreign investment originally intended for the strife-torn Chinese mainland, prominent U.S. foreign traders say.

"Those who have large investments in China are going to try to continue, barring anything more cataclysmic, but it is clear and logical that others are going to be very hesitant to make commitments until they see if this is the beginning of the end," said Thomas J. White, chairman of the Asia-Pacific Council of American Chambers of Commerce.

Leaders of individual U.S. chambers from East Asia tended to agree. They met reporters Friday after the annual week of meetings in Washington between Asia-based American business executives and members of the U.S. government and Congress.

Thailand, the Philippines and Malaysia represent "the next best alternative" to China in terms of labor costs and business environment and because of their close association with potential investors, White said.

Offshore Taiwan is not an alternative for the low-cost labor ventures attracted to the mainland, said Taiwan-based Joseph Coffman, president of the American Chamber of Commerce in the Republic of China.

Even before trouble surfaced in China, many overseas Chinese entrepreneurs had switched to Thailand, Malaysia and the Philippines to take advantage of low labor costs, he said.

If mainland officials "ever get their act together, the market potential is mind-boggling — a market of 450 million young people under 21," Coffman said. With such a market at stake, "you can understand the anxiety businessmen now feel."

For those already invested in China, "it certainly behooves them to try to derive something out of that investment," he said, but others would be well advised to wait and see. Coffman also said tremendous competition for foreign exchange among the different mainland regions and cities might make it possible to make secure investments in Chinese locations distant from Beijing.

Bangkok-based Jerry L. Loupee, a vice chairman of the Asia-Pacific council, said the Bush administration did the right thing in stopping short of breaking relations with China to protest the violent crackdown on Beijing's pro-democracy movement.

He voiced hope that China "will get the message" represented by other Asian countries drawing away some of its investment, and create secure conditions for business to continue.

White, who is president of Phelps Dodge Thailand, a subsidiary of the U.S. firm, agreed. Urging that the United States coordinate Chinese economic policy with its allies, he said, "I hope we don't become the only nation blocking ourselves out of the market by taking sanctions and getting miles out in front of our competitors."

Weeks of Syrian shelling leave Christian enclave a ghost town

JOUNIEH, Lebanon (AP) — After 12 weeks of shelling by Syrian forces, this once-bustling Christian enclave north of Beirut has become a ghost town.

The daily artillery fire, which drove most of its 1 million residents into underground bunkers and shelters, has sapped the life from an area once called the Monte Carlo of the Middle East.

Although the intensity of shellfire has eased since the Arab League called for a cease-fire May 11, the Christians — outnumbered and outgunned by Syria and its allies — have been paralyzed by an acute gasoline shortage.

"If it's not shelling, it's gas and if it's not gas it's something else," said Samira Khater, a secretary.

There is hardly any traffic on the roads. Few people are able to drive to work.

Half the shops, hidden behind sandbags and earth-filled oildrums, are shuttered.

Factories that survived the ferocious shelling limp along with skeleton staffs and whatever fuel they can scrounge.

Restaurants are lucky if they get 10 customers a day.

And the night life that once throbbed in the clubs, bars and restaurants along the Mediterranean coastline is dead.

Closed is the famous Casino du Liban overlooking Jounieh Bay, 12 miles north of Beirut, where oil-rich sheiks from the Persian Gulf and high-rollers from around the world once gambled.

It was a regular target for the Syrian gunners who have battled the forces of Christian leader Gen. Michel Aoun since March 8 in some of the most savage artillery and rocket battles of Lebanon's 14-year civil war.

About 360 people have been killed and nearly 1,400 wounded, mostly civilians.

The Christians are tired and dispirited, struggling to cope with a grim fatalism.

The cease-fire, violated daily by the Syrians, had raised people's hopes they would be able to pick up the pieces of their shattered lives and find some semblance of normality.

Instead, there's a stillness punctuated only by the periodic crump of exploding shells.

The Syrians maintain their blockade of the Christian enclave, ringed on its landward sides by hostile Moslem forces.

Small cargo ships run the gauntlet of shellfire to bring in food and ammunition for the besieged Christians. Until a few days ago, the blockade runners didn't try bringing in gas.

"It only takes one hit to blow up a ship loaded with fuel," a police spokesman said. "So no one dares take the risk."

One small tanker, the 1,507-ton Chemicoral, made a run Thursday with 660,000 gallons of gasoline. But it was hit by Syrian shellfire and its cargo burned.

Others than gas, there are no real shortages, thanks to the blockade runners.

Supermarkets bulge with imported goods — pink chamapagne, passion fruit tea, whisky, cookies, chocolates, hams, cheeses.

Fruit and vegetables are in short supply, but available for a price. Before the fighting, most produce came from Syrian-controlled areas. Now they're smuggled in at night by muletrain from the north.

The enclave's fuel reserves went up in flames when a Syrian barrage blew up the seaside Dora depot in east Beirut two months ago.

The French, Lebanon's colonial rulers until 1943 and the Christians' traditional protector, shipped in 4,000 tons of fuel to reactivate shutdown power plants a few weeks ago.

There's so little gasoline around that only about one-fifth of the filling stations bother to open.

Police said two people have been killed and 10 wounded in gunfights over gas.

"People have to wait for days in front of the stations and all they get in the end is 10 liters (2.25 gallons)," one attendant said.

A half-tank at filling stations costs $50, a month's wages for many Lebanese.

One motorist noted: "Filling station owners pump out the gas from their tanks and sell it on the black market for 10 times the price."

Ancient Roman metropolis uncovered

BANIYAS, Israeli-annexed Golan Heights (AP) — U.S. and Israeli archaeologists have unearthed a Roman metropolis that in its heyday was the ancient world's equivalent of New York.

Founded in about A.D. 10 by Herod Philip, son of King Herod the Great, ancient Baniyas grew over the next several hundred years "into a huge city," archaeologist Vassilios Tzarferis of the Israel Antiquities Department recently said.

"We can estimate the population in Roman times of up to 15,000 people, which for those days means it was a New York," Tzarferis said.

Traces of ruined villas can be found a mile from the city center, he said.

Herod Philip chose the site near the source waters of the Jordan River and next to a cave where pagans worshiped Pan, the goat-like god of the shepherds. The cave is part of a national park that today is a favorite site for picnics.

He named his city in honor of Emperor Augustus Caesar, but it became known as Caesarea Philipi to distinguish it from the port of Caesarea constructed by his father on the Mediterranean Sea.

American teams working at the site this year have partially uncovered a dozen 30-foot-high arches that formed one side of what appears to be a long shopping mall, said John Wilson, an archaeology professor from Pepperdine College in Southern California.

The arches now are the bottom layer of a wedding cake of history. Wilson said Crusader conquerers 1,000 years later built a citadel on top. In the 13th or 14th century Mameluke raiders from Egypt added a palace.

"On top of it all was a Syrian village," Wilson said. Baniyas was part of Syria until the Golan Heights region was taken by Israel in the 1967 Middle East war and annexed in 1981.

Diggers have uncovered a public gate dating to the 1st century and a 2nd or 3rd century house with mosaic floors, one of which is largely intact.

Wilson said "we are encouraged there may be considerable sections of ancient Baniyas that are preserved." But he estimated it would take up to 10 years with as many as 100 people working each digging season to expose a substantial part of the city.

Historians and archeologists had many clues to the city's location, Wilson said.

"The Pan cave with niches and inscriptions appears exactly on coins of the 2nd and early 3rd century that say they are from Baniyas," Wilson said. "There are other coins with pictures of buildings, which we feel are as accurate, and that's what we're looking for."

The area is referred to as "Paneon" by the Jewish historian Josephus, who says Herod the Great built a white stone temple to Roman Emperor Augustus there.

For years, it was strategically important because it controlled the road from Damascus to the sea, Wilson said. It lost its importance after Ottoman Turks took control, he said.

In addition to Pepperdine, the other American colleges that sent students to work at Baniyas this year were Averett College of Danville, Va., and Hardin-Simmons University and Abilene Christian College, both of Abilene, Texas.

Strikers protesting policies

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — Construction workers have staged a hunger strike for more than a week at the city's Plaza Hidalgo to protest policies of the powerful Confederation of Mexican Workers and its control over organized labor.

Five members of the independent Construction Workers Union, whose Spanish acronym is SITRACE, started the hunger strike June 8 to focus public attention on their three-year battle with the Confederation of Mexican Workers, commonly known as CTM. The CTM, an umbrella organization for numerous Mexican labor unions, often controls which employees businesses may hire.

SITRACE director Juan de Dios Lopez Ibarra said the independent union is demanding the right to work, recognition as an independent union and the right to negotiate contracts without interference from the CTM unions.

The independent union alleges it has been harrassed and threatened by CTM members, but the CTM denies the allegations.

"We want out because of the corruption in the present unions, and for us to join would be like taking a step back," Juan de Dios Lopez Ibarra, general secretary for SITRACE, told The Brownsville Herald.

"All we are asking is for the right to work as an independent union," Lopez said. "We're not against the other laborers. We just want to work without being stopped."

Lopez said the CTM recently prevented SITRACE from performing a construction job the independent union had negotiated independently of CTM in this border city across the Rio Grande from Brownsville.

But CTM's general secretary for Matamoros, Leocadio Mendoza Reyes, said SITRACE's petition to operate as an independent union must be approved by CTM officials in Mexico City, not Matamoros.

"It is not up to us to recognize or deny them the opportunity," Mendoza said. "It took us many years to get the status we have today. They can't just ask for it (recognition) and be granted it."

Dr. Lucio Hernandez, a director with the local Mexican Red Cross, paid a goodwill visit Thursday to the five men who said they would remain at the plaza and refrain from eating until their union dispute was resolved.

"They are losing a lot of liquid and are dehydrated," Hernandez said.

East German rescue teams on location of plane crash of the East German Interflug airliner Iljuschin 62 near East Berlin's Schoenefeld airport Saturday.

Five dead, 39 injured in crash in East Berlin

BERLIN (AP) — An East German jetliner carrying 113 people veered into a field and caught fire today while trying to take off in East Berlin, killing at least five people and injuring 39, the East German state news agency said.

The death count was likely to climb as rescue workers searched for more bodies in the charred wreckage of the plane, the agency, ADN, said.

It said 13 of the injured were hurt seriously and that about 50 people escaped without injury. That would leave about 19 people missing. "It must be assumed there are more passengers in the rubble who have died," ADN said.

Passengers aboard the Moscow-bound Ilyushin-62 aircraft scrambled out of emergency exits to escape the burning plane, the news agency said.

According to ADN, the aircraft started its takeoff at 8:29 a.m., taxiing about 500 yards down the runway at Schoenefeld airfield. For some unknown reason, it then careened into a field and caught fire, ADN said.

It said the Soviet-built jetliner, carrying 103 passengers and 10 crew, was owned by Interflug, the state-owned East German airline.

The aircraft started its takeoff, taxied about 500 yards, then for some unknown reason, careened into a field and caught fire.

Diethart Guenther, a safety expert with Interflug, said the airplane was "torn apart and completely burned out" in the accident, ADN said.

It took firemen about an hour to douse the blaze, it said.

ADN said the passengers who escaped were lucky because one wing of the four-engine jet remained intact and did not burn.

The last serious aircraft accident at Schoenefeld airport occurred on Dec. 12, 1986, when an Aeroflot Tupolev 134 crashed into the woods as it was approaching for a landing, killing 80 people.

Investigators later said the cause of the accident was a misunderstanding between the pilot and airport control tower.

Golf balls, metal shell casings soar over Kabul course

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — A 21-gun salute is par for the course at the Kabul Golf and Country Club. Or, to be precise, a barrage from the rocket launcher fired by Afghan troops in the hills near the dusty, nine-hole course.

"It's great fun to play here," an Asian diplomat said. "Where else on earth do you play and pick up your own trophies?" he added, pointing to a pile of metal shell casings he had collected walking from one hole to the next.

President Najib's government, in an attempt to show that things are getting better in battle-scarred Afghanistan, has reopened the course and surrounding Kargha Lake area to civilians. Government soldiers guard the golfers, mostly Asian diplomats and Asians and Europeans working for U.N. agencies.

The U.S.-backed guerrillas, who have been fighting since 1978 to oust Kabul's Soviet-backed government, are only a few miles away in the Paghman Mountains on the other side of the lake.

Between greens, which are actually "browns" made of gravel, the golfers gauge the war as well as their backswings.

Just as they were ready to tee off Friday, their weekly day away from work, there was a barrage of rocket fire from the government outpost on a nearby hill.

"From the sound, it looks like they are using the BM-21s today," the Asian diplomat said. "Today there seems to be more than average activity from the government side."

As the six golfers reached the seventh hole, there were two loud sounds followed by billows of smoke and dust in the hills.

"Judging from this side's (the government's) action today, the other side is in real trouble," said an Asian health official working for the United Nations. Like the others, he asked to remain anonymous.

"The fact that we are able to play golf in Kabul proves that things are certainly getting better," the health official said. "Except for the noise the missiles and rockets creates, which does affect our game, we have no other problem."

But the young Afghan caddies whisper to visitors to be careful. Sometimes new sand traps appear from week to week: bunkers dug in the course by government soldiers.

The 30-year-old golf course 10 miles northwest of Kabul was set up to cater to the foreign community and once drew dozens of golfers, mostly U.S. and Western European diplomats and U.N. staffers. But the Americans and their allies closed their embassies last winter, citing fears of a blood bath when the Soviet army withdrew the last of its combat troops in February.

So far the guerrillas have not come over the mountains to fight a face-to-face war with the government troops, who are still supplied by the Soviet Union. But during the winter, they stepped up their activity around Kargha Lake, and the government declared the area off-limits to civilians.

"There was a time when we used to refuse membership, but now we want more people to join us," the Asian health official said.

A decade ago, before the Soviet army arrived to back the Afghan government in the civil war, the golf club had 45 members.

Now only four to six golfers make the rounds on Fridays, the weekly Islamic holy day, a non-working day for Afghans and foreigners alike in Kabul.

After the game, the golfers sit on the banks of a narrow stream running beside the course. Their clubhouse has been taken over by the Afghan army, but the golfers don't appear to mind.

"Here, try to put the ball in that hole," a West European official from the U.N. said, handing his club to a soldier.

The young soldier swung the club and the ball flew past the green. His comrades laughed.

Another stepped forward, took aim and swung. The ball came within inches of the hole.

"Many of them have been watching us for months, and I am sure some of them could be good golfers, if trained," the European said. "But they have a battle to fight. But maybe one day we can have a go with some of them.

"I mean in golf."

Government recovers more stolen artifacts

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government has recovered 19 stolen artifacts from the National Museum of Archeology in addition to 111 stolen items discovered last weekend, the attorney general announced Friday night.

Attorney General Enrique Alvarez del Castillo told reporters on Friday that one piece recovered Friday was among the most important of all the stolen items, which have been described as priceless.

The gold, jade and stone jewelry recovered Friday totaled 19 pieces in eight lots.

Last weekend the government located the 111 items stolen from the museum in a daring Christmas Day 1985 robbery. On Wednesday, President Carlos Salinas de Gortari presided over a ceremony returning those artifacts to the museum.

The loot, dating from 500 B.C. to 2500 B.C., included masks, jewelry and other artifacts from Mexico's ancient Aztec, Mixteca, Maya and Zapotec civilizations.

Federal agents in Mexico City followed one suspect, Carlos Perches Trevino, 24, for 45 days before his arrest last Friday, Alvarez said earlier this week.

Alvarez said officials are still seeking another suspect, identified as Ramon Sardina Garcia, who reportedly left a box of tools at a friend's house last month.

He said the friend, Maria Antonieta Ponce Mercado, became suspicious about the box after learning of the man's alleged involvement in the museum robbery and told her uncle. The uncle, Ramon Tovilla, contacted the attorney general's office Friday morning, Alvarez added.

The attorney general said federal agents and museum officials went to Ms. Ponce's house in a Mexico City suburb Friday, where they opened the box.

"Inside, we found 19 pieces and components of other lots already found, together totaling eight lots of the 13 lots that were still missing," Alvarez said.

"Among what we found was one of the five most important missing pieces, a figure of a Mayan governor," he said.

Officials have linked the suspects to cocaine dealers. Investigators got a lead in the case from a suspected drug traffickers arrested in April at Reynosa, across the border from McAllen, Texas, Alvarez said earlier this week.

Perches and Sardina had staked out the museum for six months, visiting it more than 50 times to determine which were the most valuable pieces, he said.

The pair then jumped the fence, crawled in through an air conditioning duct and looted seven display cases.

Alvarez said the two men kept the treasure in a closet in Perches' parents home more than a year, then took it to the Pacific resort city of Acapulco.

Thousands march for Puerto Rican independence

AP Laserphoto

Thousands of pro-independence demonstrators march in front of Puerto Rico's capitol in San Juan Saturday during U.S. congressional hearings on the island's status.

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Thousands of pro-independence demonstrators waving Puerto Rican flags and chanting "Yankee go home" marched Saturday during congressional hearings on the island's political relationship with the United States.

Protesters burned a U.S. flag and tore up another outside the government hall in Old San Juan, where the hearing was under way.

The demonstration generally was peaceful and there were no arrests.

Organizers said 80,000 people took part in the march and rally. Police gave no estimate of the crowd and San Juan's Channel 4 Television said at least 12,000 people were marching at the outset.

The march at one stage stretched 1.5 miles along Ponce de Leon Avenue to Old San Juan.

"This is an outcry of the people against colonialism in Puerto Rico," Independence Party leader Ruben Berrios told the crowd.

Berrios said Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D.-La., who was presiding over the three-day hearings, "is treating Puerto Rico as a colony."

Sens. Johnston, James McClure, R-Idaho, and Patrick Daniel Moynihan, D-N.Y., are listening to pro-independence, pro-statehood and pro-autonomy Commonwealth leaders testify on the three options, to be put before voters in a 1991 plebiscite.

Puerto Rico, a Caribbean island 1,000 miles south of Miami, has been a U.S. commonwealth since 1952. Most of its 3.2 million residents speak Spanish.

The march was one of the largest independence rallies in Puerto Rico since U.S. forces occupied the island in 1898 after the Spanish-American War.

As participants passed by a small U.S. Naval Reserve base on Ponce de Leon Avenue, soldiers lowered an American flag, apparently to avoid provoking the marchers.

Marchers carrying red, white and blue Puerto Rican flags, chanted "Yankee go home!", "Yes to the republic! No to the colony!" and "Freedom for Puerto Rican political prisoners!"

Marchers, all carrying red, white and blue Puerto Rican flags, chanted "Yankee go home!" and "Yes to the republic! No to the colony!"

Marchers also chanted "Freedom for Puerto Rican political prisoners!"

On Thursday, Puerto Rican nationalist Juan Segarra Palmer was sentenced to 65 years in prison and fined $500,000 by a federal court in Hartford, Conn., for his part in the $7 million robbery from a Wells Fargo depot there.

The march was supported by the Socialist Party, a small, Marxist party that supports independence.

That party's leader, Carlos Gallisa, told the congressional hearings Friday that if Puerto Rico becomes the 51st U.S. state, it will turn into "another Northern Ireland."

No damage reported in Tokyo earthquake

TOKYO (AP) — An earthquake measuring 6.8 on the Richter scale rocked the Tokyo area and southern Japan early Saturday but no damage or casualties were reported, the Central Meteorological Agency said.

The quake, centered 310 miles south of Tokyo in the Pacific Ocean, struck at 8:43 a.m. (7:43 p.m. EDT Friday).

"There are no reports of damage or casualties," a spokesman for the National Police Agency said Saturday morning.

The meteorological agency said there was no danger of tidal waves along eastern Japan's Pacific coast because the epicenter of the quake was too deep.

Agency officials said the quake's epicenter was about 230 miles under the Pacific.

The Richter scale is a gauge of the energy released by an earthquake, as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph. Every increase of one number means that the ground motion is 10 times greater.

A quake of magnitude 6 can cause severe damage in populated areas, while one measuring 7 is considered a major earthquake, capable of widespread heavy damage.

Bank robbers released

LONDON (AP) — A judge has freed an older couple who robbed a bank at gunpoint because they couldn't afford their mortgage payments.

Herbert Butler, 65, and his wife Eleni, 61, admitted holding up a London bank last New Year's Eve in an effort to meet mortgage payments of $2,140 a month. They receive a monthly pension of $41.

In Friday's decision, Judge Raymond Dean in Old Bailey Court gave the Butlers a two-year suspended sentence and let them go.

11-year-old pilot rests

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — An 11-year-old American hoping to become the youngest person to fly around the world arrived here Saturday and said he wanted to do some fishing before flying on to Norway.

Tony Aliengena and his family, from San Juan Capistrano in Southern California, also planned to take part in festivities celebrating the 45th anniversary of Iceland's independence from Denmark.

Tony is flying a single-engine Cessna 210 Centurion turboprop plane with his father, Gary Aliengena, at his side.

An escort plane is carrying his mother, Susan Aliengena, his 10-year-old sister Alaina; his Soviet pen pal, Roman Tcheremnykh; and Soviet and American journalists.

Security head indicted

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Jose Antonio Zorrilla, once head of Mexico's Federal Security Department, was indicted for murder Saturday in the slaying of an investigative journalist five years ago.

Prosecutor Rafael Avanti contends Zorrilla, 47, was the mastermind of the killing of newspaper columnist Manuel Buendia in May 30, 1984.

Avanti said that during the indictment proceedings in the 34th Penal Court Judge Roberto Hernandez Martinez ordered Zorrilla held for trial.

In presenting the case the prosecution said Buendia was slain because Zorrilla feared the journalist would expose links to some of Mexico's major drug traffickers.

At the time of the slaying Zorrilla was the chief of the Federal Security Department, the equivalent of the FBI in the United States. The department was dismantled in 1985 because of alleged corruption.

Zorrilla had been arraigned Friday and told reporters after the arraignment, "I did not kill my friend and there is no evidence that implicates me." He did not enter a plea at the indictment hearing, Avanti said.

Juneteenth 'biggest day' to many Midland blacks

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Juneteenth is not just a big day in the life of Bernice Ray, it is the biggest day of the year.

She knew Juneteenth long before she was aware of the Fourth of July — America's Independence Day.

Juneteenth — Freedom Day, when black Texans were freed from slavery at end of the Civil War on June 19, 1865 — celebrates the beginning of freedom from the shackles of the mind, body and spirit.

"My culture is the 19th of June," said Mrs. Ray. "I love it. It's the most enjoyable part of my life."

And to demonstrate that joy in her life, Mrs. Ray commemorates each Juneteenth with front- and backyard celebrations within earshot of Midland's Washington Park, where many Midlanders are gathering this weekend to recognize their black heritage and to celebrate their freedom.

Mrs. Ray does it with fun. Members of her Rainbow Social Club join in the preparations. Neighbors, friends and strangers imbued with the Juneteenth spirit are invited to partake of fellowship, food and drink. She is keen on barbecue — pit-barbecued beef brisket, pork ribs, sausage, and, occasionally, cabrito. But young goat meat is hard to come by. All of that comes with the trimmings, watermelon, and something to drink, such as beer and Big Red — a strawberry-flavored soft drink.

"Don't forget. You have to have Big Red on Juneteenth," said her friend, 28-year-old Tony "Tiny" Brazell, who at nearly 300 pounds, is anything but petite. "There would be no Juneteenth without Big Red. We've got watermelon for the kids."

For Juneteenth, Mrs. Ray's home place is decked out with colorful streamers "like they have at the used-car lots — different colors," she noted.

The celebration is a time to reflect on the past.

"My great-great-grandmother was a slave," and bore marks of whippings by a slave-master, Mrs. Ray said.

"She loved white folks," Mrs. Ray said. "That's all she talked about — white folks. I don't think I could love anybody that whipped me with a whip. But those old people just forgave and forgot."

At age 60, Mrs. Ray is a landlady and a Midland housekeeper and cook who was "raised up in white people's kitchens," where her mother worked as a cook.

"We stayed on the place — in the servant quarters. All the rich people would have servants — nice quarters, beautiful quarters."

In Waco in Central Texas where she spent her childhood years, there was much to-do about the Juneteenth holiday, Mrs. Ray said.

"The biggest (gathering) was at my grandfather's farm house," she said. There would be guitar playing and blues singing. "They would have dances. They didn't have no chairs. They just laid around on old quilts and under shade trees. Lawn furniture wasn't a big deal back then."

In addition to working his own farm, her grandfather, Isom "Popice" Brown, hired out to work farms for "some of the richest lawyers in Waco," she said.

Back then, neighborliness was all about.

"You would never kill a hog in the country without giving all the neighbors some," Mrs. Ray reflected. "Nowadays, they won't hardly share with you. You have to buy it."

"My culture is the 19th of June. I love it. It's the most enjoyable part of my life."
— Bernice Ray, celebration organizer

"Things have changed," she said. "Everybody is looking for the dollar."

In those early days in Waco, Mrs. Ray was "too young to work" on the celebration. "I usually stayed at the wagon and ate all of the dinner up," she laughed.

Food was food. The term "soul food" wasn't in vogue then. "It was half a cow, half a beef, whole pig and like that," she said. Chitterlings — chitlins — were savored not because they were cheap and plentiful but because they "tasted good." But today, she mostly stays away from chitterlings and other pork products "now that we have to watch the cholesterol" in diets.

When she moved to Midland in 1949, Juneteenth "wasn't such a big deal," she recalled. "But it was in Waco. My grandparents had all of those kinds of things in Waco. I was raised up where they had Juneteenth celebrations in the yard."

She and her husband, Henry Herbert "Herb" Ray, where just "youngsters" when they moved to Midland by way of San Angelo to live with relatives. — and his family.

Ray started out as a bellhop at the Crawford Hotel, where their relative Lawrence Clay, a retired entertainment promoter, also worked.
Ray worked for the Museum of the Southwest at the time of his death last year.

Mrs. Ray's wish was to bring a more Waco-style Juneteenth celebration to Midland.

So, in the early 1970s, she organized a Juneteenth party in her yard. She was too "busy having (seven) children" to do it sooner.

For Mrs. Ray, Juneteenth represents "freedom. It's my culture. It's a good time to gather with my friends and family" — sons, daughters, grandchildren, cousins, aunts, uncles, nieces and nephews. "The Ray family is just something special."

The Juneteenth celebration is "really growing" in Midland, and "everybody really appreciates it," she said.

Among her friends working on the Juneteenth yard celebration is 57-year-old Sergeant "Sarge" Lang, who said he is just "glad to be living and celebrating my days."

Another friend, Gerald "Tank" Conally, 28, said he looks "forward to getting together with all the people and having fun."

When Mrs. Ray first came to Midland, "we just kind of had old-fashioned picnics."

In Waco, "people would come from far and near in wagons. They would dig pits and put in mesquite and oak and barbecue their meat.

"All I knew was Juneteenth; the 'Fourth of July' was something new to me."

Field school offers taste of archeology

DEVILS RIVER STATE NATURAL AREA — Teddy Stickney peered intently at the faint red figures on the limestone wall of the rock shelter as she penciled their outlines on a large sheet of graph paper.

The longtime Midlander and president of the Texas Archeological Society was rock art crew chief during last week's annual TAS field school. Thursday, she and the 11-member crew were recording prehistoric art at several rock shelters in this rugged region, where brush-clad bluffs loom above dry, rocky arroyos.

Beginning June 10, about 300 field school personnel and students had converged on what used to be part of the Dolan Creek Ranch, in Val Verde County, 35 miles north of Del Rio, for a week of supervised archeological survey, excavation and recording of rock art.

Midlander Sally Gillespy was one of the eager students who drove about 250 miles to get there.

"I promised my kids I'd take photographs and write a journal," she said. "I'm ... just explaining what I've done every day, in as much as waking up and making my breakfast and going off to the crews and what I've seen."

She's helped excavate an upland midden — an area in which soil shows evidence of past human habitation — survey a mesa and look for rock shelters.

"It's been work, but it's been an incredible experience," said Ms. Gillespy, who has a degree in anthropology and works as a volunteer at the Museum of the Southwest. She came to the field school with another Midland resident, Dave Swenson.

"We've seen skunks and porcupines and lots of rattlers — enough to recognize that there's quite a few out here."

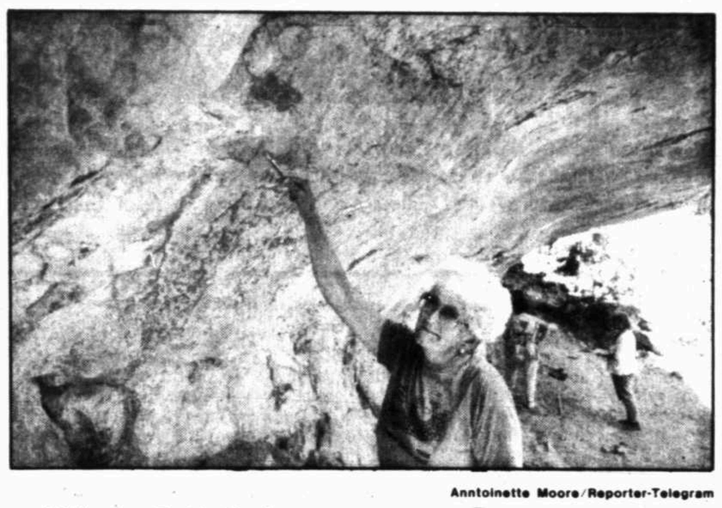

"My journal includes all those experiences, that I didn't get any sleep" because the noise of the wind kept her awake most nights.

Despite these hardships, Ms. Gillespy will be back for more.

"I will be here next year, with my eldest daughter," who then will be 9.

"This is where you learn on the spot," she rhapsodized. "I'm just an adventurer at heart. I love things that I've never done before. It's such a challenge."

Family preserves historic ranch by selling it to state

DOLAN CREEK RANCH — John K. Finegan is deeply rooted in this land of spectacular limestone bluffs nestled between the Devils River and the Dry Devils River.

"My grandfather, E.K. Fawcett, came here July 24, 1883," said the lifelong sheep and goat rancher.

So it was difficult when Finegan realized he could no longer make a living from his land.

"You could sell or let them take it away from you," he said. "We were forced to sell, you might say."

Hard times in the ranching industry combined with the banks' sudden credit-tightening were too much for Finegan to overcome.

"It changed overnight from 'how much money do you want' to 'you can't have any more money,'" he said.

But rather than sell it to someone who would divide up the thousands of acres into 5 or 10-acre "ranchettes," Finegan and his family sold it to the state in August.

"It's a very unique area," he continued, citing its frontage on the Devils River — "the last pure, clean river in Texas" — and Dolan Springs.

"We were looking for somebody to protect it," he continued. "The logical answer was the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department."

Now, 20,300 acres of his grandfather Fawcett's legacy make up Devils River State Natural Area, which is managed by the TPWD.

Finegan's son, Jim, now works for the park service and lives on part of the ranch that was sold to the state. His parents live near Del Rio.

"I grew up out here ... and like living in the country," he said. "This gives us an opportunity to be here all the time and kind of watch what's going on."

Fawcett first came to the area as a shepherd, said his grandson, John Finegan.

Deadline for MISD transfers approaching

From Staff Reports

About 300 mostly rural families whose children are affected by boundary changes for next school year have until Friday to apply for an in-district transfer to remain in their school.

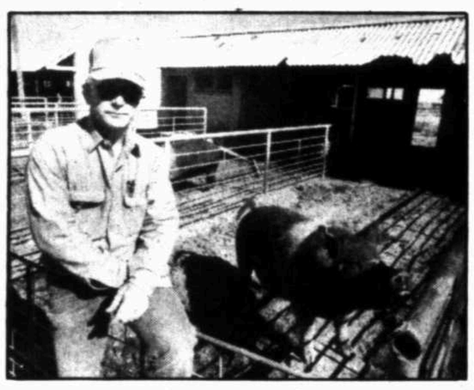

The Midland Independent School District plan changes some boundaries between Travis, Burnet, Bonham, Long and Houston elementary schools.

School officials have said the zone shifts are needed to relieve overcrowding at Houston and Travis, reduce the number of schools receiving rural pupils from south of Interstate 20 and create less fragmented boundaries in the rural areas.

Families who want their children to stay in their current school must apply by Friday. MISD officials sent letters to the affected families Wednesday, notifying them of the zone changes and the "grandfather clause" application.

For more information contact Jack Stone, MISD director of instruction, at 682-8611.

In a recent survey, 75 percent of respondents said they would opt for the grandfather clause. Of 300 surveys mailed out, MISD got back 60 responses.

FFA, agriculture course enrollment down at MISD

Three-foot-high, ungrazed grass and weeds grow in pens once packed with the meticulously raised steers, pigs and lambs destined for judging in the spotlights of county fairs and livestock shows.

Aside from livestock raised at home by students this summer, six lazy hogs wallowing in the hot, dry dirt of their sties at the Midland schools' agriculture farm represent all of what the Future Farmers of America program has fattening up for next year's competition.

Joe Henson, Midland Independent School District's only agriculture teacher and sponsor of the district's dwindling FFA chapters, remembers when moos, oinks and baas filled the air six years ago at the seven-acre farm off Fairgrounds Road.

"There's fewer kids involved now," Henson said last week as he was repairing a trailer at the farm. "We've lost it because of the times. People don't think about agriculture anymore. Farmers are going broke."

The 1982-83 school year saw 110 Midland High School and 117 Lee High School FFA students raising animals and learning about the ever-diversifying agriculture field.

Out-of-state license plate key to an interesting encounter

Ever since I was a child, back when the family would take an annual cross-country vacation in a non-air-conditioned Chevrolet, I have been fascinated by out-of-state license plates.

Ott

This peculiar obsession is probably because those trips would become so excruciatingly boring that we had no choice but to pass the time by counting license plates.

The person who saw the most out-of-state plates within a particular time frame would win. The prize might be something terribly valuable like getting to select which restaurant we would eat at that night.

No wonder family members don't take cross-country vacations together any longer. They can't stand the excitement.

Still, old habits die hard. Thus, when I see an out-of-state license plate my mind automatically begins to wonder. Who are these people and why are they in Texas? Vacationing? Handling business? Just passing through?

I need to know.

And if I get the chance, I ask. Which I did the other day.

It was at a self-service gas station on Andrews Highway. I was at Pump No. 4, as I recall. Unleaded. Parked in the other lane was a giant Winnebago with Missouri license plates. An older gentleman, probably in his late 60s, was refueling it. He was wearing a tan jumpsuit, blue tennis shoes and a fishing cap. Best I could tell, he seemed like a friendly enough sort of fellow, probably a doting grandfather.

Still, when I struck up the conversation I expected nothing more than a few bland words and a couple of grunts in return.

Instead I got a slice of America. It went like this:

The man's name was Lucas. That was his last name, I don't recall his first, but he and his wife, Maggie, both retired, were on a journey across America. And he enjoyed talking about it.

Given the opportunity, he gave me his best Charles Kuralt imitation. We went on the road with the Lucas clan.

"We left home (a St. Louis suburb) 10 days ago," he said. "We dropped down into Arkansas and Louisiana before heading west into Texas. From here it's on to New Mexico and Arizona. She (pointing to his wife who was still seated in the vehicle) is real excited about seeing the Grand Canyon. It'll be a first for both of us."

But, why, after all these years, are they "hitting the road" now?

Lucas had a quick response.

"We promised each other we'd stay active after we retired. I worked in the hardware business and my wife was a school teacher. We raised three children and now they're all grown and doing fine. The family's still close, but we just wanted to do something by ourselves. So I bought this big old thing and we hit the road."

Well, actually, there was some planning involved, he said with a laugh, "but not a whole lot." They spent a few hours studying a road map, is what they did. And this isn't their first trek across the country, either. It's their second.

"Last year we headed east, seeing more of the historical places," he said. "Boston, Virginia, Philadelphia, those kinds of deals. That was sorta my wife's trip. She loves history. This one out west is more for me."

By this time, his wife had become interested in our conversation. She zipped down her window and listened, occasionally tossing out her own thoughts.

"Personally, I love the little two-lane highways more than the big interstates," she said. "Some places are just breathtakingly beautiful. There was this little stretch of highway in Louisiana that was simply gorgeous. Wildflowers were everywhere. The sky was clear. The pine trees were swaying gently in the wind. It was like a picture in a book."

Maggie wasn't through. She also had a thing for little country towns, especially those in Virginia.

"Last year when we went back east, I just fell in love with rural America. The old white houses you see on the winding roads are so picturesque. You just can't imagine. And Vermont? Why, it's everything you've heard it is."

Maggie, I'm sure, would have continued her running commentary on America, but fortunately our tanks were full and it was time to leave.

I wished them well and they said if I was ever in St. Louis to look them up.

I said I sure would.

That's the great thing about America. You ask a stranger a question and he gives you a column in return.

"You feel like you've contributed. And you have, we all have, every person here.

"There is such a gamut of people here. From professionals to people who just like archeology as an avocation but take it seriously. You just feel like a team."

McCamey High School government and American history teacher Jim Collett also was pleased with his first field school.

"I've gotten exactly what I came down here to get, which was training in some specific methods," said the Iraan Archeological Society member. "I hope to take it back to the club and back to the classroom."

Jim O'Daniel, a Spanish and American History teacher at McCamey High who also belongs to the Iraan society, had similar feelings about his second field school experience.

"I learned how to dig last year and this year I learned how to walk!" he said, laughing.

"We have experienced everything a camper can experience. The weather has been varied to say the least!" O'Daniel said, citing the high winds and fierce rainstorm during the predawn hours Wednesday.

"It has been a hard week, but an enjoyable one. And it's also like a vacation; it's more than just school."

"Generally, this is a survey field school," Ms. Stickney said, unlike last year's, which excavated a site in the Panhandle, near Perryton.

"We knew it was going to be mostly surveying, because the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department (which manages the property, acquired in August) has 18,000 acres and needed to evaluate what the archeology was here."

Ms. Stickney estimated that 60 percent of the students were doing archeological survey, 30 percent were excavating three sites — two rock shelters and a midden near Dolan Springs — and the rest were on the rock art crew.

For a registration fee of $48 per adult or $24 per child, plus a daily cost of $8 per adult or $7 per child for breakfast and dinner, hardy participants could walk through rattlesnake-infested canyons looking for artifacts, scrape away at the dust of ages or scramble up steep, rocky slopes to hidden shelters covered with prehistoric art.

They also could hobnob with archeologists from around the state, including head field school archeologist, Dr. Solveig Turpin, of the Texas Archeological Research Laboratory, whose specialty is prehistoric rock art, Ms. Stickney said.

After a day in the field — usually beginning at 7 a.m. and ending around 2 p.m. — students could listen to programs on the wildlife of the area, or rock art or archeological photography.

By Thursday, the survey teams had found "some 90 new sites and 21 relocated old sites," according to Ms. Stickney.

"These were reported back in the '30s and '40s and they didn't have topography maps" on which to locate the sites.

The survey teams are "inventorying the material before they bring it in," she continued. "All they are bringing in are the whole dart points."

The age of the artifacts ranges from 6,000 years to just a couple of hundred years old, Ms. Stickney said.

"They are not really finding too many sites that have got lots of stuff on them. There are scattered sites down in the valley, close to the stream bed, and up on top, and then the rock shelters in between."

Ken Brown, a staff archeologist for the University of Texas at San Antonio, was directing a small excavation at one of the rock shelters.

"I'm personally interested in what the Indians were eating," he said, "as well as a number of other plant remains that are not food remains, but twigs and sticks and stuff like that.

"Some of those things are just there because they flew in or fell onto the ground, while the Indians were there or while they were gone. Others are things that they brought into the site or collected nearby and introduced to the site."

His field school crew had unearthed food items such as prickly pear seeds, sotol, lechuguilla, reverchon yucca, western walnut shells and mesquite seeds; non-food remains included mountain laurel pods and guajillo pods.

When Brown's workers removed several inches of dirt from a large piece of limestone that had split off the shelter's back wall, they found "a tiny little spot of paint on the top of it." In a direct line above the spot was a petroglyph, painted on the sloping roof.

"It looked like the artist may have dripped some paint while he was painting up there," Brown said, "which suggests he was painting before that dirt accumulated" on top of the roof spall. With information such as this, Brown speculated, it might be possible to date the art at the shelter.

As rock art crew chief, Ms. Stickney supervised the mapping of the art. Once it was located, the art was photographed in black and white and color. Finally, artists sketched the "priority items" to scale at each shelter.

Ms. Stickney stressed the importance of the annual school.

"The TAS field school is to help train people from all over the state in the ways of doing field archeology: surveying, excavation, recording and how to record their artifacts and sites with TARL."

People need to know "how to survey without collecting anything and still retain the information," she said.

"Field school is a way to teach members how to conserve archeology in their area, not to destroy it with digging or surveying that won't record all the information they need."

RANCH

"He was working for G.W. Ames, herding sheep for $15 a month."

After leaving Gonzales County in January 1883, Fawcett — who turned 18 during the trek — arrived in Del Rio in early June of that year, Finegan said. It took the men and the 2,500 to 3,000 sheep more than a month to get to Dolan Creek, in Val Verde County, 35 miles north of Del Rio.

"They were having to drive the sheep at night because it was so hot," added Finegan's wife, Betty. "And there was so much brush between here and Del Rio and it was so rough, no trails or roads or anything, that they would move the sheep very slowly."

At first, the men lived in a cave on Devils River. When winter came, they built a cabin — "a standard two-room, dog-run type log cabin," Finegan said.

The other men moved on, but Fawcett decided to stay.

"He homesteaded that first 160 acres right there on Devils River. The remnants of the rock fence that he built is still standing."

Later, he moved the ranch headquarters to the second tract of land which he'd bought.

The Finegans would like to sell the TPWD this land — about 400 acres — which they still own.

It includes a "little one-room house he built out here in approximately 1900 or 1901, just prior to marrying my grandmother, Frances E. Baker."

Fawcett added a kitchen — which also had a "feed room for the stock, a feed room for them and a buggy shed," Finegan said.

Next, Fawcett erected a comissary.

"The provisions were brought in here twice a year, by wagon train" from a store in Kerrville, almost 120 miles to the northeast.

The commissary supplied the five families besides the Fawcetts who lived and worked on the ranch.

"Those were the families that would come up to get their supplies from the commissary," Mrs. Finegan said, laughing. "They'd always come at supper time, wanting a cup of sugar or a pound of coffee or something. And he'd have to go out and get it for them."

Still later, Fawcett built a larger home, to accommodate his six children — four sons and two daughters.

"This was really just a little town in itself, right here, you know," Finegan said. "Grandfather was justice of the peace here at one time. I know of several Mexican couples that he married.

"Infant mortality being what it was in that day and time, there's a few of them buried out there" in a little cemetery.

E.K. Fawcett died in 1941, when he was in his late 70s; his wife, Frances, died in the late 1950s, when she was in her mid-70s.

Fawcett eventually owned 68,000 acres, according to Finegan.

Mrs. Finegan stressed the importance of the Fawcett ranch headquarters.

"There's so much here, still, that it wouldn't be that much trouble to restore it," she said, "but it is fast disintegrating."

Illinois makes offer to save 6,000 Sears jobs

CHICAGO (AP) — Illinois has offered $33 million to Sears, Roebuck and Co. to keep its retail headquarters in the state it has called home for more than 100 years.

Sears has said it will announce by the end of the month whether its 6,000-employee Merchandise Group will remain in Illinois or pull up stakes.

Speculation for a new site has focused on an area west of Chicago, Dallas, and two North Carolina cities — Raleigh and Charlotte.

FFA

During the past year only 32 at MHS and 24 at LHS took part in the program, despite an array of field-related courses introduced to the curriculum after 1984 state education reforms.

MISD in 1987-88 had four teachers whose responsibilities included instructing agriculture classes and supervising FFA students as well as teaching other classes. After three resigned during the year and took jobs elsewhere, Henson was left to take over the program full time.

Henson and vocational education coordinator Tex Paris have been pondering what happened to student interest in agriculture and how to rekindle an enthusiasm once shared by hundreds of young farmers.

"There is a statewide decline in student interest in agriculture," Paris said. "We've gone down everywhere because of the decline in student interest and the extra load on teachers. I don't know whether we offered too many choices or what."

But while local FFA membership has continued its downward slide, statewide involvement saw its first growth in a decade during 1988-89, going from 53,533 members last year to 54,958, Texas Education Agency figures show. Most of the growth was from the Houston area, where more students have become involved in horticulture, landscape design, forestry and agri-business courses.

"This is where they think the future of agriculture is going," Paris said.

Henson partially blamed the local decline in agricultural interests on student misconception of the courses and lack of knowledge of the agriculture business.

"I'll bet if you walk into an elementary school and ask where milk comes from, they'll say Safeway or Albertson's," Henson said. "And people say we teach just plows and cows, but we don't. We teach a little bit of everything."

The real program dampener, though, came in 1984, when the Texas Legislature passed House Bill 72, part of which diversified agriculture classes from eight to 32 subjects but created more incentive to enroll in honors curriculums.

"It's been an uphill battle since House Bill 72," Henson said. "It changed the whole nature of the curriculum."

Paris said high school counselors have been pushing students to enroll in advanced curriculums, which leave little room for electives. While the regular program allows 7½ electives, the advanced and advanced with honors curriculums have only 2½.

But Henson said students aren't chosing agriculture classes for their electives partly because school officials have shied from stimulating their interests.

"It's a lack of support from the administration," he said. "They're (students) told that if they're going to college that ag classes are not going to help them.

"It just seems like to me that if a kid asks a question about agriculture when they enroll, the counselors don't have the information to give them. Most of the people who are my bosses know little about our curriculum, and it's because they haven't asked."

Peggy Callicoatte, an MHS counselor, said she and other advisers do not discriminate against agriculture or any other areas.

"I like to think I tell them (students) the truth," Ms. Callicoatte said. "I tell them about the restrictions in all areas, not just agriculture. There are jobs there. They just have to want them badly enough."

She said that when counselors don't have the answers to students' questions about a career field, they simply encourage them to research it elsewhere or help dig up additional information.

"For anybody to say we don't push agriculture hard enough, I think they are wrong," Callicoatte said. "There is a lot to be offered in those areas.

"There isn't anybody who couldn't use a course in home maintenance or landscaping. They're almost survival courses."

Paris, however, pointed out that in the last quarter of 1988, only 357 of about 44,000 jobs in Midland were agriculture related, including nursery employees.

"Ag doesn't have the impact in Midland that it once had," Paris said. "If the jobs were out there in agriculture, we would be remiss in preparing kids for work that's not there."

Last fall, 26 at LHS and 32 at MHS were enrolled in an agriculture course. Paris said projections show that number dropping to 12 at LHS and 27 at MHS this fall semester.

Although not all students who take the courses are in FFA, FFA members fill almost all the classes, Paris said.

Which subjects the district will offer depends on demand. Of the 12 courses MISD offered last year — which included applied agriculture science, home maintenance and improvement, animal science, landscaping design and wildlife and recreation — students enrolled in five.

Paris said state law requires schools to offer a course if at least 10 students ask for it.

"If the numbers drop to the point where we cannot justify the number of students being served, the program would not be offered, just like any other elective," Paris said, adding that a recruiting push next fall should prevent that.

Henson agreed that the area's economic downturn doesn't make conditions ripe to enter agriculture, especially with recent technological improvements that eliminated some jobs.

Nevertheless, Paris said he plans to take steps next year to rebuild the program by arming vocational counselors at both high schools with more information about the agriculture field.

"One of their priorities will be to help build the ag programs," he said. "They will have a renewed interest to make sure that any student who is interested in an ag class will know about it.

"If we have additional student demand we will hire additional teachers immediately. I'm looking forward to the day we can, but with the way the trends have been going, I don't know when this will come about."

Henson suggested consolidating the two programs and rebuilding from there.

"It's hard to keep up," Henson said of juggling two programs. "For next year I'm just in the process of trying to find out what my teaching assignments are going to be."

LHS senior Jason Sever, 17, who has been in FFA for about a year, said involvement in a declining program has also been hard on the students.

"It kind of upsets me," said Jason, who plans to become a veterinarian. "It's all due to to a lack of knowledge. Students just think it's just cows, horses and pigs and stuff. If more people knew it wasn't, they might be interested."

Jason said fellow agriculture students as well as administrators would have to be tenacious recruiters to get the program prospering again.

"I think if we worked hard enough, we could make it better, but it would take a hard effort on our part," he said.

Ginger Stennett, 17, an MHS junior, said FFA has been instrumental in teaching her responsibility and self-improvement. Miss Stennett owns five of the six pigs (her brother owns the sixth) housed at the MISD agriculture farm.

She said she spends between one and four hours a day working with the pigs, two steers and a lamb she plans to show later this year.

"I like to be around animals," Miss Stennett said. "I'm hoping (being in FFA) will help me when I study to become a vet."

Henson said the FFA has had that effect on all its members, including some famous past ones.

"If they're involved with FFA, they're not going to be on the street smoking dope," he said. "We've had senators and presidents who have gone through the FFA program."

Chinese students seek asylum

HOUSTON (AP) — Three Chinese students are seeking asylum because they fear their government will prosecute them for backing the democratic rebellion their homeland.

Ronald Parra, district director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, described the cases for asylum as "strong" and "sensitive."

Parra said Friday that two Chinese graduate students and one undergraduate student applied for political asylum in late May. They applied before the Chinese government cracked down and troops killed hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of pro-democracy supporters in Beijing in early June.

INS officials interviewed the students in Houston last week, he said.

Parra, who is awaiting an advisory opinion on the cases from the federal Bureau of Human Rights Affairs, will decide whether asylum is granted.

INS spokeswoman Lisa Jacobs said the agency does not want to provide details of the students' cases in order to protect their families from possible retaliation.

Many other Chinese citizens living in the Houston area have called to inquire about procedures for seeking asylum, Ms. Jacobs said.

Bush said June 5 that the estimated 40,000 Chinese students studying in the United States could extend their visas for one year.

DEATHS

Jesse Carrasco Jr.

Jesse Carrasco Jr., 51, died Friday at a local hospital after a short illness.

Rosary will be recited at 7 p.m. Sunday at the Thomas Funeral Home chapel conducted by Jessie Guajardo, deacon at Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church.

Funeral mass will be at 10 a.m. Monday at Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church with the Rev. Michael Slattery officiating. Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery under the direction of the Thomas Funeral Home.

He was born April 5, 1938, in Presidio, and lived most of his life in Midland. He was a Catholic.

Survivors include five sons, Ricky Carrasco, Michael Carrasco and Jesse Carrasco III of Abilene, Jesse Garcia Carrasco of Midland and Steven Carrasco of Dallas; two daughters, Frances Carrasco and Rosemary Carrasco, both of Abilene; two brothers, Ruben Carrasco and Willie Carrasco, both of Midland; four sisters, Manuela Collazo of Odessa, Maria Rodriguez of Midland, Tara Hernandez of Stanton, and Rita Dutchover of Odessa; and nine grandchildren.

Petronilo Galindo

Petronilo Galindo, 70, died at his home Thursday after a lengthy illness.

Funeral services were Saturday at Our Lady of San Juan Catholic Church with the Rev. Alvin Wilde officiating. Burial was in Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Thomas Funeral Home.

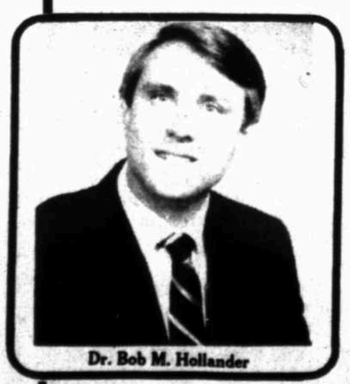

He was born May 31, 1919, in Lovington, N.M., and lived most of his life in Midland. He was a Catholic.

Survivors include his wife, Victoria; three daughters, Vicky Navarette of Midland, Martha Garcia of Irving and Rosa Carrasco of Midland; three sons, Efrain Galindo of Midland and Ruben Galindo and Armando Galindo, both of Irving; five brothers, Jose Galindo of Mexico, Juan Galindo of Nebraska and Pefanio Galindo, Faustino Galindo and Jesus Galindo of Midland; two sisters, Francisca Urias and Maria Villa of Midland; 22 grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Pallbearers were Ruben Galindo, Armando Galindo, Guadalupe Galindo, Manuel Galindo, Ramon Garcia, and Miguel Carrasco.

The U.S. Department of Energy
Invites Public Comment on the Supplement to the Environmental Impact Statement for the
WASTE ISOLATION PILOT PLANT

The U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) has completed construction of the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant (WIPP) -- a facility designed for the safe permanent disposal of defense-related transuranic radioactive wastes.

In 1980, DOE prepared an Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) to evaluate four alternatives to dispose of defense radioactive wastes. A decision was reached to proceed with construction of the WIPP facility where the wastes would be disposed 2,150 feet under the New Mexico desert near Carlsbad.

Now, with construction completed, DOE has prepared a draft Supplement to the EIS (SEIS) to examine changes and new information generated since 1980. DOE invites public comment on that SEIS.

The Public Hearing will begin at the following time and place:
June 26, 1989. Odessa Holiday Inn Centre, 6201 East Highway 80, Odessa.

DOE will make a short presentation about the SEIS at 9:00 a.m. and 7:00 p.m.

Suspect arrested in stabbing death of Lufkin secretary

LUFKIN (AP) — A Lufkin man was arrested Saturday, on his 23rd birthday and charged with capital murder in the death of a woman stabbed to death Wednesday at a Salvation Army community center.

Andree McGowen of Lufkin was arraigned Saturday before Justice of the Peace Hulen McClure. Bond was denied, and McGowen was taken to the Lufkin City Jail.

Mary Beth Stuckey, 46, was killed while she worked at the Salvation Army, where she had been a secretary for 16 years.

Authorities said someone went into the center while Ms. Stuckey was alone, hit her on the head with an iron skillet, then stabbed her 37 times in the throat and chest with a butcher knife as she tried to fight off the attack.

Another Salvation Army employee found her body in the kitchen of the center. Ms. Stuckey's jugular vein was cut, police said. The knife believed used in the attack was found in the kitchen.

Burglary was the apparent motive for the attack, authorities said.

McGowen was arrested about 3:40 p.m. Saturday in a Lufkin residence by patrolmen Phil Smith and Mark Taylor, who found him hithere, we were told he had just left. We searched the area and couldn't locate him, but then we got a tip he was at another house, changing clothes so we wouldn't know what he was wearing," Smith said.

Compromise vital on worker's comp

The jury is still out on the Texas Legislature's effort to reform workmen's compensation, but the "jury" reports back to Austin Tuesday to continue its deliberations.

This is no "small potatoes" feud. During the regular 140-day session that ended in May, the two competing groups — business interests on one hand against trial lawyers, doctors, insurance companies and labor on the other — could not settle a key point beyond which no meaningful reform is possible: Whether litigants will continue to have the right to appeal to an appropriate court for review points of procedure by which awards will be made.

Under the largely similar bills expected to be introduced in the special session, it's not likely that provisions will be added to permit dollar amounts to be appealed. That has been the bugaboo that fed the worker's comp crisis. Rather, dollar awards will be determined by an Industrial Accident Board-style panel.

Business has contended that eliminating jury trials as an option available to workers injured on the job is necessary to resolve the dispute. But the other side, largely trial lawyers and insurance companies, say no. That the trial system is a viable vehicle.

The business lobby raised a valid point in noting that it has been virtually at the mercy of litigants since trial lawyers have relied on the possibility of outrageous jury verdicts to prompt business to settle out-of-court.

And, of course, there are any number of frivolous claims that clog the judicial system and further compound the problem.

Back to business, the state suffers under the disastrous image of one with high insurance premiums and vicious jury awards.

To make a long story short, there has to be a better way of protecting workers' rights and settling their claims without bankrupting business, providing adequate insurance for worker's and keeping the courts relatively free of workers' compensation claims.

Although tossing out the claimants' right to a jury trial may appear to undermine a basic tenet of the American judicial system, workers' compensation actually is a "no-fault" system originally designed to prevent exactly what has been seen in the past couple of years in Texas courts — sky-high jury awards to injured workers and runaway claims against business. It must be brought down to a reasonable level to restore the state's good business climate.

There is a crying need for the legislature to do precisely what it was designed to do: Compromise for the sake of the entire population in the state. Don't give business all it wants, or the trial lawyers, doctors, insurers or even workers all they want. Rather give each of them what they need to continue to exist, perhaps even more harmoniously than before.

This time, one word should be on the mind of legislators in Austin: Compromise.

Another View:

Bush clears the air

For years, the fight against dirty air has missed a crucial element: a president who thinks the nation deserves clean air. George Bush's proposals to overhaul the antiquated Clean Air Act of 1970 aren't perfect. But they represent a major departure from years of official indifference. They will force industry to think creatively about new technologies. And they challenge Congress to end more than a decade of legislative paralysis.

Mr. Bush's plan would tackle three major kinds of air pollution:

Acid Rain. Acid rain is caused mainly by oxides of sulfur and nitrogen that change chemically as they move through the air and then fall to earth in rain, snow or fog — damaging lakes, streams and forests. For eight years the Reagan Administration engaged in endless studies and took no action. As environmentalists had hoped all along, the Bush plan would require that coal-burning power plants, most of which are concentrated in the Middle West, cut sulfur dioxide emissions in half by the end of the century. Companies would be free to decide how to meet that goal. They could invest in scrubbers to clean the emissions, switch to low-sulfur coal or use various market incentives.

Smog Standards. Eighty-one metropolitan areas exceed federal health standards for ozone, the main component of urban smog. The president's plan would require all but three to meet the standards by the year 2000. The exceptions — Los Angeles, New York and Houston — would be given until 2010, but would have to show annual progress.

The plan focuses heavily on motor vehicles, which are responsible for more than half of ozone's harmful ingredients. New and stricter tailpipe standards, for example, would require a 40 percent cutback in hydrocarbon emissions by 1993 and a 30 percent reduction in nitrogen dioxides. These targets fall well short of cutbacks proposed by aggressive environmentalists like Rep. Henry Waxman, a California Democrat. But even Mr. Waxman has said the Bush proposal is something to build on.

Mr. Bush's most dramatic idea would require the gradual phasing in of cars built to run on so-called "clean fuels" like methanol, natural gas or ethanol, which do not emit hydrocarbons. Detroit would be required to make 500,000 alternate-fuel cars by 1995, and one million a year by 1997.

The alternative fuels plan brought howls from the oil companies; even environmentalists warn that some "clean fuels" may pose new hazards. Methanol, for example, is rich in carbon dioxide, a major contributor to the feared greenhouse effect. Yet there can be little harm in forcing the automobile and oil industries to think seriously about new technologies. And the gains could be immense.

Industrial toxics. The Environmental Protection Agency estimates that each year industry emits 2.7 billion pounds of toxic chemicals into the air. Mr. Bush's plan would require polluters to install the best available technology and cut these emissions by 75 percent in 10 years.

These proposals are estimated to cost $14 billion to $18 billion a year. Industries, and inevitably consumers, will pay most of the cost. But poll after poll has shown that Americans are willing to pay for cleaner air. Mr. Bush is now asking for cleaner air. The question is whether Congress is prepared to legislate cleaner air.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, June 18, the 169th day of 1989. There are 196 days left in the year. This is Father's Day.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 18, 1983, astronaut Sally K. Ride became America's first woman in space as she and four colleagues blasted off aboard the space shuttle Challenger.

On this date:

In 1778, American forces entered Philadelphia as the British withdrew during the Revolutionary War.

In 1873, suffragist Susan B. Anthony was fined $100 for attempting to vote in the 1872 presidential election.

Intifada kids earn A's in rock-throwing

ISRAELI OCCUPIED WEST BANK — Nasser, a 14-year-old Palestinian boy, woke up one recent morning with the usual obsession on his mind. "All I could think of was throwing rocks at Jews."

Jack Anderson

In a small village near Jerusalem, rock throwing is the primary activity for Palestinian children. The Israelis have closed all the Arab schools.

So Nasser gathered a pile of rocks near a village road and waited. The first target to come along was an Israeli garbage truck. He lobbed a stone, and it shattered the windshield.

The driver jumped out with a gun and gave chase, firing wildly at Nasser. A bullet struck him in the head, and Nasser became one of at least 4,000 Palestinians wounded during the "intifada," the Arabic name for the uprising now in its 19th month.

Nasser was lucky. He survived the wound and today is the talk of the village — a miracle boy, an inspiration to the intifada. Four days after he was released from the hospital, he was out throwing rocks at Israelis again. We asked him why. "I want to get rid of them from our land," he said. His small chin was stuck out for emphasis.

The hatred of Arab children for Israel portends an indefinite intifada until the Palestinians have a state they can call their own. It may be adults who direct the intifada, but the kids are on the front lines. Israelis say that Palestinian men shove children and women to the front of demonstrations, but if Nasser and his crowd are any indication, no shoving is necessary. To them, it is a battle royale and they believe they are winning.

Nasser told us he belongs to a group of about 40 kids. They pile rocks in stashes around their village. Hidden in other places are their disguises. Nasser sent a young boy out to retrieve some of those disguises so we could see them. The boy brought back a scarf, or kaffiyeh, that Nasser wrapped around his head to cover all but his eyes. His buddy donned a black hood and held aloft an outlawed Palestinian flag — taking on a fearsome look for a teen-ager who had been laughing only moments before.

The black and white checkered kaffiyeh is the trademark of Yasir Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization. Nasser spoke reverently of Arafat. They wouldn't confirm it, but it is probable that Nasser and his friends are members of the Palestinian Cubs, a secret organization of youths linked to the PLO.

Nasser said his group breaks into teams when they see a target. His team has seven members. Five throw rocks and two are lookouts. Nasser proudly told us he is a "shooter," and a good one at that. Others boasted of his aim, like a Little League team would brag about its best pitcher.

Nasser has four favorite spots from which to lob his rocks. The younger groupies who admire the "shooters" keep those spots supplied with rocks.

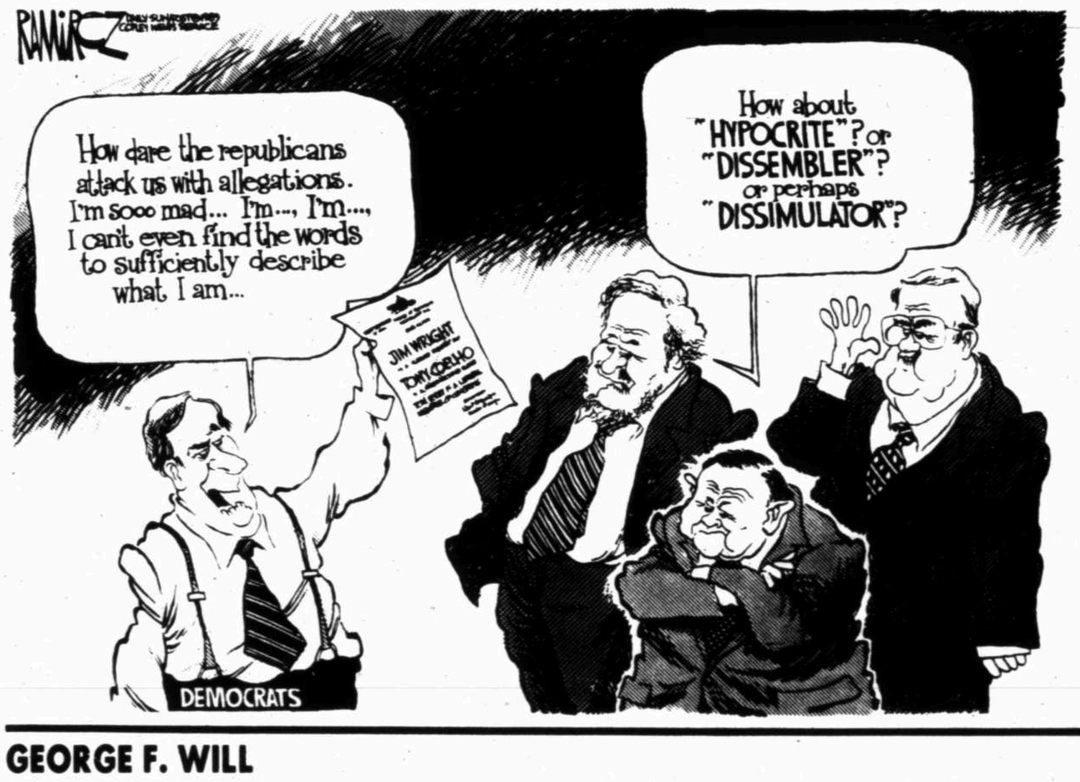

Palestinian children have plenty of time on their hands for military strategizing and sharing of war stories. It is time given to them courtesy of the Israelis, who closed the schools. Israel feared that the schools were training sites for the intifada.

Like the massive arrests and detentions, the school closings have been counterproductive to the extreme. The kids have become radicalized on the streets instead of in the classrooms. Now they have all day to carry out their plans.

Some 320,000 elementary and high school students have now lost almost two academic years. That includes the 36,000 kids who attended 90 schools run by the United Nations. All the universities in the occupied territories have been closed too, leaving 18,000 students without an avenue of higher education. The prognosis for the future isn't good. An intermediate school in the village of Kharabtha Bin Harith was recently converted to an army barracks.

One of Nasser's cousins confided that she sneaks off for three hours of classes each day at an underground school. The teacher and students are taking a serious chance. Whenever such basement schools are found by the Israelis, they are closed down, and sometimes arrests follow.

Legislators wait for court's abortion ruling

WASHINGTON — As time ticks toward the close of the Supreme Court's term, 7,461 politicians are on tenterhooks. They are America's state legislators.

George F. Will

Any day now, they may have handed to them something most of them dread: abortion as a legislative issue.

The ink probably is already drying on the justices' opinions about the Missouri law that has been the focus of contention. The case could, but probably will not, produce a substantial revision of the status of abortion as a fundamental privacy right. That was the result of a Court ruling 16 years ago. However, even a modest revision could make abortion open to increased regulation, and thus to political strife.

So in this short calm before what may be a prolonged storm, consider the history of America's abortion controversy. One survey of that history is in an amicus curiae brief filed by 281 historians opposed to revising the 1973 ruling. The brief is not scholarship; it is partisanship. Still, it does demonstrate the complicated pedigree and path of the abortion argument.

The historians argue that for much of American history, abortion was not illegal; that most 19th-century restrictions applied only after "quickening" (detectable fetal movement); that codified opposition to abortion evolved late and from ideological, cultural and professional interests; that concern for the moral value of the fetus was largely an afterthought invoked when other arguments against abortion became culturally anachronistic or constitutionally impermissible.

The historians overreach when they cite, as evidence that abortion was common in colonial times, the fact that abortion was "rarely the subject for moralizing." (There was also little colonial moralizing about cannibalism.) And the fact, if such it really is, that in the late 18th century one-third of all New England brides were pregnant at the time of marriage suggests that abortion was not common.

However, some studies suggest that in the mid-19th century, there was one abortion for every four live births. In 1871, in New York City, with a population of less than one million, there were 200 full-time abortionists, and some doctors performed abortions. In 1898, the Michigan Board of Health said one in three pregnancies in the state ended in abortion.

Between 1850 and 1880, the new American Medical Association became a strong force for severely limiting abortion, for medical and professional reasons. Abortion was more dangerous than childbirth. And medical practitioners, just becoming professionalized, wanted to bring childbirth into hospitals and establish professional supremacy over less professional practitioners, including herbalists, midwives and abortionists.

By the late 19th century, facets of urbanization, including poverty and crowding, were stimulating abortion. In an urban setting, men's work patterns deviated more from women's than they did on farms, and women were increasingly seen as wives and mothers in the service of the "cult of the home."

Also there was a nasty 19th-century worry about demographics. Nativist and especially anti-Catholic, feeling resulted in restrictions on abortion. The fear was that the reproduction rates of the socially ascendant Protestant stock would not match the rates of immigrants from Eastern and Southern Europe. The result would be "race suicide." When, in 1912, 173 Chicagoans were arrested for disseminating information about contraception and abortion, in violation of the Comstock Act, the Chicago Tribune headline was: "Take Chicagoans in Federal War on Race Suicide."

The historians' brief concludes with a whiff of paranoia, hinting darkly that "protection of unborn life has become a surrogate for other social objectives that are no longer tolerated." Racism, sexism, imperialism? More overreaching by the historians. It would be fairer to say that concern for the value of fetal life, like increased concern for the rights of minorities, represents admirable evolution of society's standards.

The brief does not, and no historical survey of attitudes and practices could, answer what is properly at issue in the Supreme Court: how abortion stands in relation to the logic of constitutional construction. However, the brief demonstrates, unwittingly, that the abortion controversy, at its molton core, does not primarily involve the Court's proper concern — constitutional law.

Abortion is, as the brief illustrates, a highly charged political issue touching large social topics, such as family, the relations of the sexes and correlative social values. Thus the brief makes a powerful case against itself, a case for returning to the status quo ante — ante 1973.

It makes the case for turning the issue back to the 7,461 legislators. They, not judges, should make law after robust political argument.

RUSSELL BAKER

There are easier ways to make a million!

James Watt, having quit as secretary of the interior under Ronald Reagan, made eight phone calls, spent 30 minutes talking to an old colleague and called it work. The pay for this toil was $300,000.

Russell Baker

The colleague was secretary of housing and urban development. The phone calls went to people in that department. The $300,000 came from the company that later got government money to build 300 housing units.

Since reading about Watt's big payday I have changed my mind about what I want to be when I grow up. Previously I wanted to grow up and be a mediocre second baseman.

My reasons weren't high-minded, but they weren't exactly ignoble either. Learning that the average — another word for mediocre — baseball player pulls down $560,000 per annum counted for a lot, to be sure.

So did the fact that the job offers terrific travel opportunities. Imagine seeing places like Cleveland, Detroit and Oakland!

The James Watt story made me realize I hadn't been dreaming big enough. Somewhere in the inspirational literature they throw at you when you're deciding what to be when you grow up I'd read that you've got to dream big dreams.

Reading about Watt's $300,000, the scales fell from my eyes, which was an ungrammatical thing for them to do, but excusable since I had been training them to behave ungrammaticaly so they would feel at home in baseball society.

Anyhow I said to my guidance counselor: "I have been dreaming too small. I am now dropping the baseball dream. What I'd really like to do is grow up and go into Watt work where you make a few phone calls, spend a half-hour with an old buddy, and collect $300,000."

I figured this way: In the three hours it takes to play one baseball game, you could easily make 24 phone calls, spend 30 minutes each with three old buddies, and rack up $900,000.

There are 162 games in a baseball season, and 162 times $900,000 is $145,800,000. It's not what I could make if I grew up to be an investment banker, but it beats the measly $560,000 I'd get for playing second base.

What's more, making phone calls and visiting old buddies is a lot more pleasant than having people in spiked shoes constantly crashing into you soles-up.

My guidance counselor said that making $900,000 between the first pitch and the final out wasn't as easy as it looked. Watt, he said, had had to struggle to get to the top.

First, Watt had to go all over the country denouncing government as an evil that kept decent people from getting ahead in the world. Only after the whole world knew how down on government Watt really was did he qualify for a cabinet job when President Reagan came to Washington to do away with government.

And, my counselor said, when Watt discovered that no matter how hard he and the president tried to get rid of the government, the Government just kept getting bigger and bigger — well, Watt had had the courage to do the hard thing and leave the government.

Why? Because by working from the outside, by helping private business siphon off vast sums of government money, Watt might just possibly end the evil of government by bleeding its coffers dry.

The more the guidance counselor talked about Watt, the more I wanted to be just like him. Watt was a man of principle. He had chosen a line of work that would help him achieve something he believed in: destruction of government.

That's what I wanted to be when I grew up: somebody who was in a business because he believed in it, not because of the money.

Of course, as Watt proved, there were careers where you could not only struggle for high principles, but could also take home good money without getting yourself spiked trying to execute the double play.

I'm as idealistic as the next guy, but you can't let ideals put you out of touch with reality. You're not going to grow up and have your condo, your BMW, your Rolex and your full wardrobe of top-of-the-line sneakers unless you labor at something so high-principled that it not only makes you proud to work for it, but also pays in the $300,000 range for three hours' work.

That's what really cooled my urge to grow up and be a mediocre second baseman: learning about the satisfaction Watt could get from doing work where he was advancing a cause he really believed in.

Thinking over my dream of a baseball career, I realized that I didn't really hold any high-principled views about second base. Watt showed the way: To make the really big bucks come easy, you gotta believe.

Reagan has good point when it comes to Soviets

Bill Modisett

Former President Ronald Reagan hasn't been in the limelight too much since President Bush took office. But the Gipper has kept his observations before the public through speaking engagements, and the like.

Reagan had his faults as president, but one of his greatest strengths was his ability to verbalize gut-level emotions and to evoke strong patriotism. It helped make him one of the most likeable presidents of all time, even though the Far Right edged away from his bandwagon when he stopped being a Communist-hater and became, instead, a leader who recognized that the Soviets could, in fact, change.

Now Reagan is saying that Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev is "the Soviets' best and probably only hope to turn things around" and encouraging Americans to take the risk that the Communists are serious about reducing arms.

Judging from his caution earlier in dealing with Communists, Reagan is making a good point. This old world as seen enough of war — cold and otherwise — and it would be tremendous if the United States and the Soviet Union reduce their historic animosity while actually joining forces to encourage moderation on the part of all the world's governments.

To put Reagan's call in perspective, one must remember that the Gipper is no one-worlder, and most probably is thinking that the Soviets most likely will knock off Gorbachev and return to "tank diplomacy," much in the mold of Red China.

Yet his reasoning is sound. Reagan says:

"It is true that the West could stand pat while this is happening. We are not the ones who must change. It is not our people who're isolated from the information that allows them to be creative and productive.

"But it is exactly when you are strong and comfortable that you should take risks."

Reagan also agrees with Bush's proposal to keep pressure on the Soviets to follow through on their calls to reduce arms.

There are risks in this world that can't be avoided. If you don't take risks, you don't win because those who don't play "the game" obviously aren't trying to accomplish anything.

Reagan's correct. Americans don't have to — and shouldn't — throw away their basic distrust of the Communists based on history. But we should be willing to take chances with our eyes wide open to potential dangers — and our hands on our rifles, just in case they're needed. But we must be willing to give a better relationship between the nations of the world a fair environment in which to develop.

If we avoid this opportunity, we may never have another to make the world a saner, safer place.

Bush's daughter cherishes time spent with father

By TRUDE B. FELDMAN

He (President Bush) takes "the time to listen, to discuss it and then give his advice. He is not the kind of guy to interfere, but when needed, he is there for me."

— Dorothy Bush LeBlond

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Today is George Bush's first Father's Day as president. But according to his 29-year-old daughter, Dorothy Bush LeBlond, he is not one to "make anything special" out of a day honoring him.

"Dad has always directed the focus of attention to others," she said. "But being a father is an important part of his life. He has always been there when we needed him — to love us, to encourage us, even to discipline us."

While the world is becoming better acquainted with the "First Father" in the White House, George Bush's youngest child and only daughter gives more intimate glimpses of the father behind the president.

In addition to her father having taught her to live by the Golden Rule and the Ten Commandments, she said she also learns by his example.

"Through example, Dad shows me that it is important how we treat others everyday — not what we do on special days like birthdays, or Mother's Day or Father's Day," she said. "And my dad's kindness extends beyond his family."

She cited one instance of sensitivity: "An elderly man volunteered much of his time to Dad's presidential campaign in Maine. I told Dad how hard he had worked, so Dad telephoned him with personal thanks.

"The man said he will never forget that call, that it made his life complete. Those kinds of touches are what make my Dad so special."

Has the presidency changed George Bush as a father?

"I don't think so," Dorothy says. "Dad still has his gentle, personal touch and continues to care about what's happening in my life. He still writes me notes, sometimes even from Air Force One."

Reminiscing about what she describes as "our special relationship," Dorothy recalled traveling from boarding school in Connecticut to meet her father in New York after he had delivered a speech. "I was only 16, and it was really exciting to stay at the Waldorf (Astoria) and go the '21' Club — just my Dad and me.

"I remember I was deep into my crepe suzettes when I could tell Dad was so very tired after a long evening. But he was patient and didn't spoil my fun.

"I'll never forget that time we had together. And there have been many other special times. I really cherish those memories more than any gift I could ever receive."

Despite the monumental pressures of the Oval Office, Dorothy's father is still able to make his daughter feel loved and a part of his life.

"If I need to talk to Dad, no matter how insignificant the reason, he calls me back the first opportunity he gets," she said. He takes "the time to listen, to discuss it and then give his advice. He is not the kind of guy to interfere, but when needed, he is there for me."

For the last three months, Dorothy has been employed as a meeting and conference coordinator by the State of Maine's Division of Tourism.

In line with her official duties, when her parents hosted French President Francois Mitterrand and his wife, Danielle, at their home in Kennebunkport, Dorothy helped arrange a luncheon for Mrs. Mitterand.

Subsequently, Dorothy tossed her father the idea of a possible invitation to Maine for Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and his wife Raisa.

"Dad assured me," Dorothy said, "that he would soon begin to work on a Gorbachev visit to Maine."

Dorothy considers herself "lucky" to have traveled with her father during the last week of last fall's campaign. It was then she was rewarded with one of the "highest compliments" she ever received.

She recalled a senior staffer commenting how relaxed the then-vice president was when his daughter is around. It "meant a lot to me because, in a funny way it showed me the love he has for me and the family — that in the heat of the most important days of his career, he was able to unwind and think about the importance of family ...and maybe laugh a little rather than constantly worry about every dreadful poll.

"And I think he has carried this balancing act with him into the White House."

What will Dorothy give her dad for Father's Day?

With a sheepish smile, she recalls a year when she was very young that she made sure her gift would be welcome. "I went into Dad's medicine cabinet, removed his after shave and dumped it out. Then I bought him a new bottle and gave it to him with an attached card: 'Happy Father's Day, Dad — This is just what you needed!' "

She still hasn't decided on this year's gift, but in essence, she has already given him an ideal Father's Day present — the satisfaction of knowing that he has her wholehearted affection, admiration and respect.

"By example," Dorothy concludes, "Dad taught me that the gift of love is precious.

"And if you give love, you are often blessed with love in return."

Nation's lawmakers deserve pay raises

Early this year the public got real upset about the 50 percent pay raise that our good representatives wanted to give themselves. The method that the politicians tried to use was sufficient to cause one to be against the pay raise.

However, I did not have a problem with the proposed pay raise because they do have large expenses, maintenance of two homes, travel and the entertainment required with the office. Many entertainers and corporate executives receive much more. But I do have a big problem with the total expense which is required to have our good senators and representatives in Washington. Considering their staff, office space, phones, postage, salary, medical, retirement, travel and etcetera, the cost for a representative is probably $650,000 to more than $750,000 per year and the cost for a senator is in the range of $1.3 million to above $1.5 million per year.

I would propose that a representative be given $300,000 per year and a senator $400,000 per year to represent our views in Washington. However, out of this amount they would have to pay their expenses, their postage, phone, the staff office rent, retirement, their staff salaries, travel and etcetera. If they wanted to operate with a minimum staff, hire their wife and kids, that would be fine and they could pocket whatever is left over, tax free. I would prefer that each representative and senator use his own best judgment when he votes, not the opinion of a staff anyway. By having our representatives pay their own office costs from a fixed amount, considerable savings could be made over the present costs. Any set amount, however, should be indexed for inflation in the future.

Another problem I have is how entrenched the incumbents have become. In our changing world, we need new ideas and change. Yes, this presents risk, but to not adapt is even more dangerous. We need to limit the term of office for our representatives to, say, four two-year term — eight years — and our senators to two terms — 12 years.

Midland, Odessa truce requires test

After again reading the Midland Reporter-Telegram article of June 11th on Judge Fisher's vision for a cooperative relationship between Midland and Odessa, it seems prudent for Midland to test what may have been a genuine call for a truce.

Perhaps Judge Fisher and the mayor of Odessa would join our counterparts in a joint inquiry into possible paths of reconciliation. If Odessa is serious, an in-kind response is in Midland's self-interest in order to reduce the costs of fragmentation that certainly detracted from our recent bid for the SSC site.

My reading is that Judge Fisher knows that it will take more than a media campaign and a glitzy apology to deal with the "date-rape" of Midland in connection with UTPB. The appropriate recompense depends in some measure on the underlying reasons for the original and continuing offenses. For example, it matters whether or not any Odessa officials pocketed a pile of money from the UTPB "land" deal; it matters as to why UTPB, et al, was less than helpful in the SSC endeavor; it matters....

The judge would surely be helpful in distinguishing between felony-class offenses such as the UTPB fiasco and petty problems such as unpaid SSC debts. Who knows, we might be surprised at Odessa's grievances toward Midland. In any event, the benefits of cooperation are too great to ignore any possibility of a legitimate peace treaty that could result in a measure of regional camaraderie.

Let's find an effective forum to get the real issues on a shared agenda.

Graduation antics don't negate pride

In response to a letter in the June 11th Reporter-Telegram, I wonder if Mr. Davis was ever young. I was and, yes, I have a high school education and, yes, my son, Charles, graduated with an average of 82 for the year.

"Proud" doesn't describe what I felt in my heart when he walked across the stage and received his diploma. Maybe the antics were a bit overdone; my son was hit on the head with the ball and, yes, he did bounce it back into the air.

When Davis's son graduates from high school, I'd bet $20 someone will pull a stunt. So, don't tell your son you were disgusted or embarrassed. Instead try to hide it and tell him you were at least proud he made it. The Davis letter really made me upset. I hope whoever he went to see graduate is at least proud to have graduated.

Well, I won't hide my head in total disgust or embarrassment. It was kids having a time to remember. I laughed through most of it and when my son met me and his mother outside he said, "Mom, Dad, this is for you (his diploma). Without your love and caring I couldn't have made it."

That, for Davis's information, is pride.

Reconstruction still hasn't ended in South

Charley Reese recently wrote that "the end of Reconstruction in the South and ... are examples of peaceful, political revolutions that Americans in the past have accomplished."

In the past? If the end of Reconstruction were a thing of the past, the Voting Rights Act would apply evenly to all 50 states, not just to 14 southern states. No, Reese is mistaken. Reconstruction continues!

Critics say assistance to Israel lopsided

The Western media takes astonishing interest in the minutest detail of the Arab-Israeli conflict, and for this reason I invite you to take a look at some surprising facts about U.S. support for Israel.

Eleven Arab nations participated in the 1973 Yom Kippur War against Israel, attacking on the holiest day of the year — the Day of Atonement. During the six years before this war, these Arab nations received $8.9 billion in assistance from the U.S. government and American oil companies. The Soviet Union gave more than $3.7 billion to the Arabs during these six years. On the other hand, over the same period, the U.S. gave Israel only $2 billion. Does this look at though U.S. support for Israel is lopsided? Many critics claim that it is.

Let's compare the Arab states with Israel: 20 nations to one; 130 million people to 3 million; infinitely greater financial resources from oil; at least a 4-to-1 advantage in all phases of military equipment and personnel. Here's my question: Who is in greater need of aid? And another: Who has always been our staunchest and most valuable ally in the Middle East? And who is the only democracy in the Middle East?

We don't condone every action of the Israeli government anymore than U.S. citizens condone every action of our government. But we do affirm Israel's right to exist and to survive, and we applaud our government's assistance. Besides, aid money to Israel is a real bargain on all counts: Much of it is returned to American industry for manufacture of goods needed in Israel. And what a super research and development laboratory Israel is for testing our defense weapons!

Israel isn't perfect, but Israel is a good friend!

Fresh gravel 'stupid' way to spend taxes

Ah, the sounds of summer! Kids splashing in the pool. Birds cheerfully singing. Fresh laid gravel ever so gently pinging against my new car, chipping away the paint scheme I so proudly selected.

And the sights of summer! Kids playing in the sunshine. Green grass. Looking out of my gravel chipped windshield.

And the feel of summer! Nice warm days and pleasant nights. The anticipation of vacation. The gentle caressing of fresh laid gravel as it taps against my hands as I ride my motorcycle. And the thrill of turning a corner on gravel not knowing whether or not my bike will slide through the freshly laid gravel, putting me on my back side with a four wheel demon baring down on me.

And who do I have to thank for all these wonderful things? I wish I knew. Whoever it is obviously doesn't own a new car or ride a motorcycle or live on a street that has been graveled. Who thinks up these stupid ways to spend tax dollars?

Mikhail Gorbachev still has upper hand

Did you think the John Birch Society had disappeared? To the contrary, it has existed for over 30 years and is still going strong. It has continued to be dedicated to the principles of the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution.

When the organization was investigated by the California State Senate Fact-Finding Committee in 1963, the 61-page report concluded: "Our investigations have disclosed no evidence of anti-Semitism...and much evidence to the effect that it opposes racism in all forms. We find the John Birch Society to be a right-wing, anti-Communist, fundamentalist organization."

From its inception, the John Birch Society has been dedicated to educating Americans on past and present history and truth has been its only weapon. In 1960, the late Robert Welch (founder of the Society) told Americans that there had been an important meeting of the communist nations in Warsaw. At the meeting, it had been decided that an attempt would be made in coming years to flood the U.S. with drugs in the hope that there would be one generation completely addicted to the use of drugs. One has only to look at the drug situation today to realize how far along that plan is. Because communist goals do not materialize within a few months, they are often completely ignored by the news media.

At present, official Washington and many other groups are lauding the policies of Gorbachev. He is the most charming of the Soviet leaders that we have known. He is also a leader who has been fed communism and its goals since his kindergarten days so he is well versed in the teachings of Lenin. Much has been made of his withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan. However, there have been few reporters who have pointed out that while the army withdrew, they also planted innumerable mines and previous to the withdrawal they had kidnapped 10,000 children and had sent them to Moscow to be trained in communism. Does this sound as if they have given up on Afghanistan?

When I hear that Gorbachev has opened the prisons and released all the Christians and Jews that have been enduring unspeakable torture; that the gulags have been emptied; that forced labor and slave camps have been discontinued, I may then give some credence to the sincerity of Gorbachev. For the present, I keep in mind that none of these things have happened and that Gorbachev holds the upper hand. Should he think he might lose, he can call in his tanks, planes, etc.

It is wise to remember that Stalin advised to the effect that it is not necessary that one's words and one's deeds have any relationship.

Impression of Bush's indecisiveness based on ignorance

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — Once again President Bush has confounded his critics.

Since he became our country's leader, the president has been subject to frequent criticism for his alleged indecision.

Even former President Reagan is alleged to share that view. Less than two weeks ago, an article in the Washington Post claimed Mr. Reagan was "becoming privately uneasy about the foreign policy indecisiveness of his successor, George Bush."

The article was written by Lou Cannon, the Washington Post's White House correspondent during the Reagan administration. He now covers in Los Angeles the ex-president's activities.

Mr. Cannon wrote that Reagan's friends were saying he is "increasingly concerned at what he considers an excessively cautious approach to nuclear arms reduction negotiations with the Soviets." The president has been accused of moving too slowly with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev on both conventional and nuclear arms reduction talks and of having "flunked" in Europe.

It is now apparent that this erroneous impression was based on ignorance of what the president was actually doing. All the while he was getting this unfair criticism, President Bush and his Secretary of State, James Baker, were quietly formulating the policy for dealing with the Soviet government on arms reduction and control. Several months ago, secret discussions followed by negotiations were conducted with our European allies and with Gorbachev and his foreign minister.

What were the results? First of all, President Bush solved the problem with West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl over short-range nuclear missiles. He unified NATO and returned home two weeks ago with a diplomatic triumph.

In dealing with Gorbachev, the president set conditions for further progress in nuclear and conventional arms forces, including the principle of parity between the NATO and Warsaw Pact forces. Gorbachev met the conditions.

During his visit to West Germany this past week, the Soviet leader warmly hailed the president for his recent initiative to withdraw 30,000 American troops from Europe providing a much greater number of Soviet troops were withdrawn from Eastern Europe.

Gorbachev said President Bush's position should make it possible to reach an East-West agreement on reducing conventional forces "much earlier than previously thought."

It will be interesting to see what credit the critics give the president for the remarkable foreign policy successes he has already achieved and which will probably lead to a summit meeting with Gorbachev later this year or in 1990.

This past week also marked the signing in Moscow by Adm. William J. Crowe Jr., chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Soviet armed forces chief Gen. Mikhail Moiseyev of an unprecedented agreement designed to prevent accidental armed conflicts between the two superpowers.

While the head of the U.S. negotiating team, Maj. Gen. George L. Butler, said the pact created "a new level of trust" between the two nations, Adm. Crowe issued what, in effect, was a word of caution about the almost hysterical euphoria that swept West Germany during Gorbachev's visit.

Adm. Crowe told Soviet officers that unilateral military cutbacks recently announced by the Soviet government had affected only the "margins" of Soviet military power. He added that the Soviets will still possess the world's largest military establishment as well as "a larger inventory of military hardware than all of NATO combined in many categories of equipment."

As I have said before in this column, we must continue to retain appropriate defensive strength as long as the Soviets maintain military superiority in nuclear or conventional forces.

Now a couple of observations about the terrible tragedy in China. There, the hard-line communist leaders, having massacred hundreds, perhaps thousands, of students and supporters of political reforms, are forcing the Chinese people to spy on one another and identify any students who participated in pro-democracy demonstrations. In one of the most outrageous big lies in communist history, the Beijing regime claims no students were killed in Tiananmen Square.

It is now apparent that Deng Xiaoping, the top leader, and his fellow hard-liners sacrificed the economic development of China to maintain a totalitarian dictatorship. It should really have come as no surprise because Deng and his gang did just about the same thing in Tibet not long ago that they did in Tiananmen Square. They massacred Tibetans in an attempt to destroy their nationhood, religion and culture.

Nevertheless, I feel strongly that the heroic revolt of the students against communist corruption and tyranny will one day lead to establishment of democracy in China.

Judge rules officials' tactics illegal

DALLAS (AP) — A judge has condemned the tactics of state and federal authorities as improper and, in part, illegal and ruled that some evidence against a Grapevine businessman accused in a peso-investment scheme cannot be presented at trial.

State District Judge Richard Mays issued the ruling Friday that addressed separate searches of William Wayne Gray's home and office.

Authorities failed to obtain the voluntary consent of Gray's wife to search his home and therefore cannot show a jury any documents, cash or promissory notes related to the investment scheme discovered in the February search, Mays ruled.

The judge found an earlier search of Gray's office "improper." But Mays said he would allow prosecutors to use evidence obtained then because federal courts have upheld their methods.

Assistant District Attorney Dale Barron said Mays' split decision does not jeopardize his ability to pursue charges against Gray, who faces 10 years in prison if convicted.

The case involves what federal authorities describe as an elaborate scheme to exchange Mexican pesos for U.S. currency provided by American investors. Gray and several others have been indicted on charges that they failed to register the exchange program with the Texas Securities Commission.

The federal and state investigation came to light earlier this year after authorities seized business records from Gray's Irving company, WWG Investments. Then, at his home, they found more than $820,000 in cash and financial records detailing Gray's involvement in the program.

Gray's attorneys presented evidence that police illegally entered the Grays' home the evening of Feb. 18, snooped through drawers, filing cabinets and closets, then waited outside for the Grays to return.

The National Aviation Hall of Fame board of Trustees recently selected the Confederate Air Force to receive the 1989 Milton Caniff Spirit of Flight Award.

In a letter from her office in Dayton, Ohio, National Aviation Hall of Fame president Zoe Dell Nutter informed CAF officials of the selection.

The Confederate Air Force, founded in 1957, and headquartered in the Lower Rio Grande Valley, is a nonprofit, educational flying museum. Its thousands of WWII military aviation artifacts include the world's largest collection of WWII military aircraft. This fleet of 137 planes includes 61 different types.

The formal award presentation to the CAF will take place July 22 as part of the Hall of Fame enshrinement ceremony in Dayton's Convention and Exhibition Center.

The CAF includes a squadron located in Midland-Odessa, called the Desert Squadron. Leader of this group, CAF Col. Max Reneau and all 53 members of this local Airpower Demonstration team, share in the honor of this National Aviation Award.

The time for Texas is now.

Here in Texas, what's good for business is good for us all.

Now that profits are rising, the whole economy is moving.

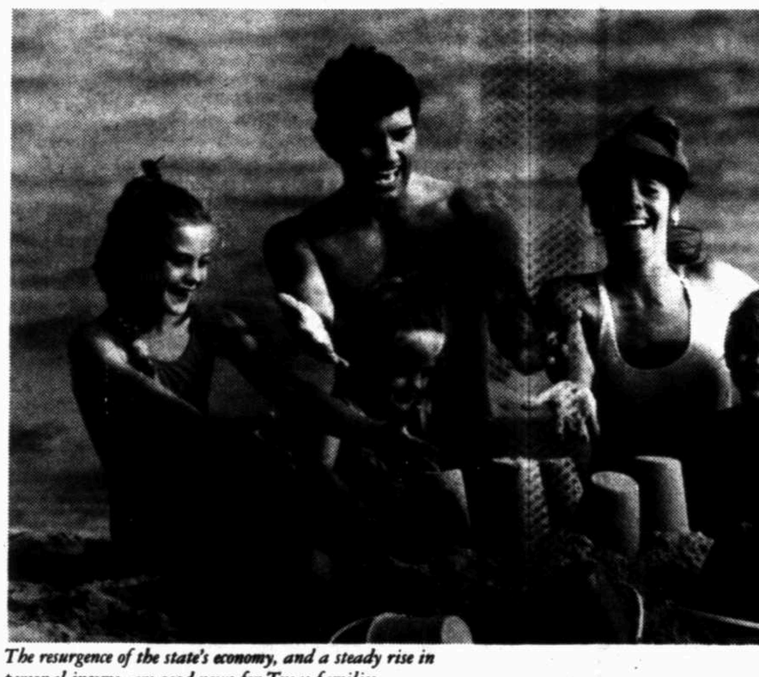

Jobs are up. And we're #2 in the country in new business startups.

Personal income is up. And projected to rise 7.2% each year for the next three years.

Population is up. By 1995, we should pass New York to become the second most populous state.

And unemployment is down. Recently hitting its lowest point in 4½ years.

Clearly, this is a time of great opportunity for those of us who live and work in Texas.

The resurgence of the state's economy, and a steady rise in personal income, are good news for Texas families.

Texas is now the #2 state in new business startups–yet another indication of a growing economy.

Jobs are up. Unemployment is down, and trending progressively lower.

First City has made it more convenient than ever for Texans to apply for a loan. Just call 1-800-432-LEND. You'll have your answer in 30 minutes.

This year, First City is investing in the future of Texas with over $30 million in new education loans.

Last year, First City said "Yes, we can" to over $750 million in personal and small business loans.

Performance results are drawn from
First City Bancorporation of Texas.

MC studies alcohol, drug abuse funds

EDUCATION

From Staff Reports

Midland College is coordinating proposals from local agencies and organizations for funding to combat alcohol and drug abuse.

"As an outgrowth of the meeting which was held at Midland College on May 3 with numerous organizations and news media, the college is serving as the central agency to help other groups seeking funds from The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation," said J. Kwame Bruce, director of the Midland College Alcohol and Drug Abuse Program.

Application forms and program requirements are available by contacting Kay Floyd, Health Sciences Division secretary, at 685-4600 or in person at the Health Sciences Building.

Interested agencies must have their program requests, or "wish lists", returned to the college by 5 p.m. Monday, July 17. Midland College then will consolidate all the grant requests and assure particiption agencies that their requests will be in the proper form and submitted to meet the Foundation's deadline.

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation funds and supports "Fighting Back", a national program with management and technical assistance through The Vanderbilt University Medical Center.

"An outgrowth of the community-wide meeting in May was the realization that many agencies are involved with various aspects of alcohol and drug abuse, but with little coordination or interchange of ideas and information," Bruce said. "Midland College is willing to take the initiative to assist these local agencies and organizations in as many ways as possible."

Bruce noted that the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation has made as much as $26.4 million in grants available to support intensive, community-wide initiatives to reduce the demand for illegal drugs and alcohol.

Foundation officials feel that "...by consolidating resources and creating a single community-wide system of prevention, early identification, treatment and after-care, communities can, over time, achieve substantial reductions in the demand for — and consequently the use of — illegal drugs and alcohol. The proposed demand reduction activities would complement and reinforce ongoing efforts to reduce the illegal drug supply and to regulate the use of alcohol."

Members of local agencies and organizations who wish additional information should contact Bruce at 685-4705.

Swing-Push dancing to be taught at MC

From Staff Reports

A new form of dancing has reached West Texas. Called Swing-Push, it combines some jitterbug, some rock-n-roll, and some country-western.

Classes in Swing-Push are being held at Midland College, starting Monday with a beginning course and followed next month with another beginning class. An intermediate class is scheduled this fall.

Barbara Elliott is teaching the courses. The first Beginning Swing-Push class will meet on Tuesday and Thursday from 7:30-9 p.m., beginning June 20 and ending July 11. The fee is $17. A second beginning class is slated Aug. 3-17.

In the beginning class, Ms. Elliott teaches the ten basic swing-push steps, including the throw-out, push-break, tuck, whip, and bump.

The class is limited to 20 students.

Persons interested may register in the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building. Hours are 7 a.m.-8 pm. Monday through Thursday. More information is available by calling 685-4518.

The bank for Texas is First City.

First City, Texas is one of the oldest major banks in the state. And we're still Texas-based and Texas-owned.

We understand what Texans want. And we have the financial strength to deliver it.

The proof is, over a million Texans do their personal banking with us every day. And more people choose to carry our credit cards than those of any other Texas bank.

In the past year, we've said yes to more than $750 million in personal and small business loans. And provided younger Texans with over $30 million more in education loans.

We've introduced the unique new loans-by-phone system that actually lets you make your loan application over the phone. And get your answer in 30 minutes or less. Just call 1-800-432-LEND.

We also help Texans save. Take our popular Performance Fund. It gives you a high rate of return, plus easy access to your money.

If you're looking for a strong, independent Texas bank, run by Texans and for Texans, the bank for you is First City. Because the bank for Texas is First City.

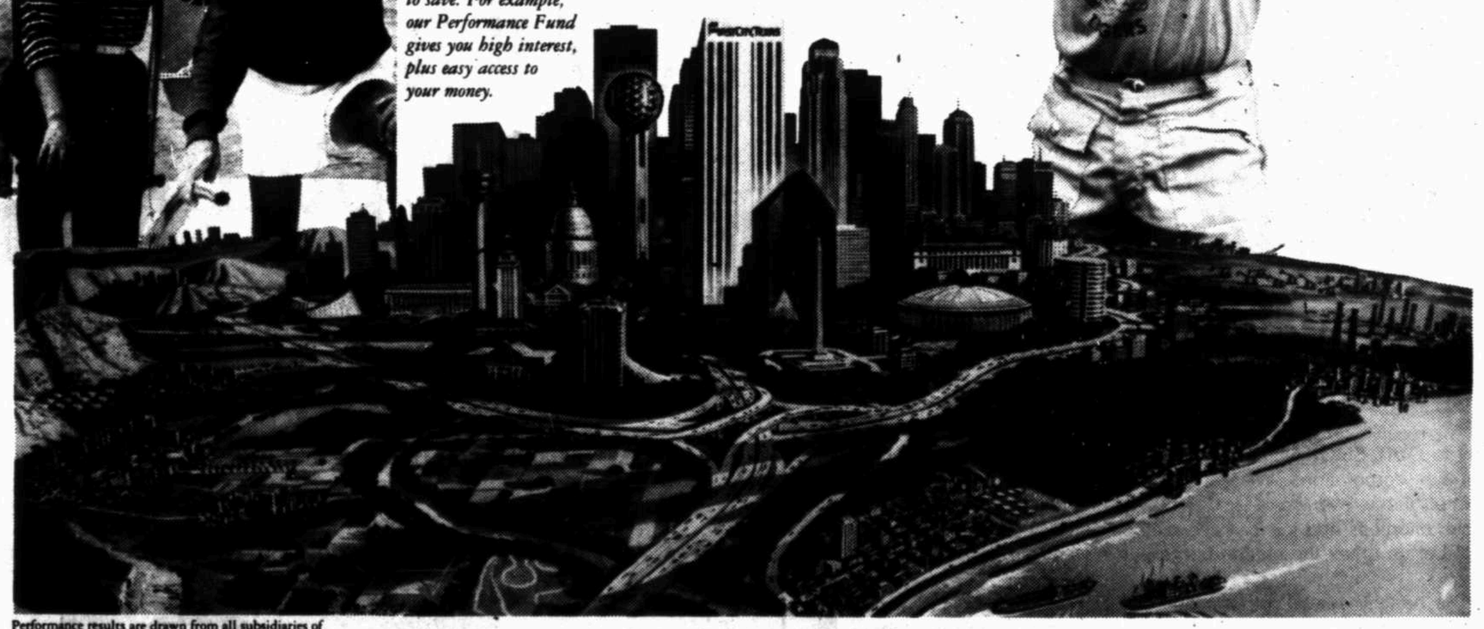

More people carry our credit cards than those of any other Texas bank.

Our population is rapidly rising. By 1995 we should pass New York to become the second most populous state.

At First City we offer a variety of ways to save. For example, our Performance Fund gives you high interest, plus easy access to your money.

Performance results are drawn from all subsidiaries of First City Bancorporation of Texas.

Things they never told you about a heat pump.

Fact #1

A heat pump unit costs more than an equivalent high-efficiency air conditioner. And it's more expensive and complicated to install.

Yet it won't cool your home as well, and it's more expensive to operate and maintain.

If you need a new air conditioner this summer, replace it with a modern high-efficiency air conditioner. Not a gadget.

Budget items top board's agenda

By H.A. TUCK

Budget considerations top the agenda for Tuesday's meeting of the Board of Trustees. The June meeting is the one where the proposed budget is presented to the board for the upcoming academic year. Adoption of the operating budget normally is done at the August meeting.

Meeting time is 4 p.m. in the Board Room, which is located in the Administration Building.

There's an ACT exam scheduled for Saturday, July 8, from 8 a.m. until noon at the college. Sheryl Holland, testing counselor, says this is a make-up exam for those who didn't take the ACT at the regular time. Persons who would like to take the ACT on July 8 should call Mrs. Holland at 685-4504 not later than June 29 to reserve a spot at the exam.

ACT is one of the two exams (SAT is the other) generally recognized by colleges and universities for consideration to admit students.

Midland College does not require either the SAT or ACT, since admission is predicated on high school graduation, GED certificate, or individual approval. However, students who plan to transfer to a university after completion of work at MC usually need either the ACT or SAT.

What an exciting time it was as the Chaparral golf team finished sixth in the NJCAA tournament at Norfolk, Nebraska! The Chaps got their first taste of the NJCAA tourney in 1988 at Scottsdale, Ariz. Without really knowing what was happening, they made the midway cut and finished 13th. This year, despite having the number one and number two players missing, the team made the cut, finished strong, and also finished ahead of conference rivals New Mexico Junior College and Odessa College. With an all-freshman team doing that well, coach Delnor Poss sees great possibilities ahead.

Chap Center director Mike Stevens went along as van driver, gofer, and assistant coach.

Special applause is due Mike Johnson and Mike Robertson, whose four-day scores earned them All-American honors, and to the other team members Brad Wells, Brian Wallace, and Mark Kochan.

Summer registrations usually are kinda ho-hum, with about the same numbers each year. But the 1989 first summer session at MC was different, as literally hundreds more came flocking to take classes. Exactly 302 more came this session, compared with the count for Summer I in 1988. That's a 23.8% increase, which is significant anytime. The increase can be largely attributed to first-time students trying to get in college and earn three hours before the TASP exam becomes mandatory.

Derise Baker and Suzanne Nikolsky were listed on the spring Dean's List, but actually are on the President's List for making perfect 4.0 grade point averages. Brenda Brent, Kathy Elder, and Rebecca Manning earned grades which made eligible for the Dean's List by making at least 3.5 GPAs.

Non-credit classes starting this week through the Continuing Education Office are three in number, with two involving dance activities. You can register for aerobic dance, which meets on Tuesday and Thursday from 7-8:30 p.m. for four weeks, or for beginning swing-push dance, a new class that is meeting on Tuesday and Thursday from 7:30-9 p.m. for four weeks. Either of these classes is $17. An intermediate swing-push dance class will start right after this one finishes.

Or if you wish less activity in class, but lots of exertion later, you might wish to enroll in a wallpaper installation workshop. The class meets on Tuesday and Thursday for one week at a cost of $7.

You may register for any of these in the Continuing Education Office, Administration Building, on Monday from 7 a.m.-8 p.m. More information is available by calling 685-4518.

HARMONY

A teenager's world can be filled with discord and the feeling that problems are larger than life. Most parents have trouble knowing what to do, and they share their child's sense of hopelessness.
If your teenager's life seems out of tune, and you see symptoms such as:
- A dramatic change in friends
- Slipping grades
- Diminished interest in family or school activities
- Low self-esteem
- Loss of appetite or sleep
- Listlessness and loss of energy

Ask for help.
A combination of yes answers may indicate depression and a sense that life cannot go on. Depression is treatable.
Start your family's life on a happier note.

Scholarship to honor early female CPA

From Staff Reports

A scholarship endowment has been established at Midland College in honor of the late Lillie Mae Stovall, the first woman in the Permian Basin to become a Certified Public Accountant.

"This scholarship will assist one sophomore student who has demonstrated ability in the accounting field and who has financial need that is not being met through other sources," said Bill Burns, director of financial aid.

A number of contributions already have been made to the scholarship, said Dr. Raymond Yell, vice president for instruction. "Mrs. Stovall was a regional pioneer in the accounting field among women. She served as a role model, particularly for women who were encouraged by her example," he said. "She worked in the field for several years, studying in her spare time, before attaining the CPA designation."

Mrs. Stovall, who died Jan. 20, graduated from San Angelo Lake View High School, and came to Midland in 1940. She worked as a secretary-bookkeeper for Richmond Drilling Co., then was a member of several Midland accounting firms prior to becoming a Certified Public Accountant in 1956. In the early 1960s she became a partner in the accounting firm of Conly, Peters & Smith. The firm merged with others and at the time of her retirement in 1978, it was known as Elmer Fox, Westheimer & Co.

She was the first woman member of the Permian Basin Chapter of the Texas Society of CPAs and later became the chapter's first female president.

Persons wishing to make a contribution to the scholarship endowment should make checks payable to: Midland College, Lillie Mae Stovall Scholarship Endowment, 3600 N. Garfield, Midland, TX 79705. Additional information is available from Bill Burns at 685-4507.

MC to open registration for second summer session

From Staff Reports

Persons planning on attending Midland College's second summer session may begin early counseling and obtain time permits on Monday.

Registration time permits will be issued through Monday, July 3.

Both new and current students may obtain time permits in the Student Services Office, Administration Building. Hours are 7 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

Official registration for the second summer session is set for Thursday, July 6, from 2-4 p.m. and 6-8 p.m. Summer II classes begin on Monday, July 10, and end on Aug. 16.

"Due to the requirements for TASP exams starting with the fall semester, a large number of students are attempting to complete three credit hours during the summer. The Summer II session is the last opportunity for students to bypass the TASP requirements," said Dr. Don Cates, associate dean of students and registrar.

TASP (Texas Academic Skills Program) is a state-mandated program which requires first-time college students to take and pass the TASP exam not later than the time a student completes 15 hours. The exam costs $24 and takes several hours to complete.

Courses offered during Summer II include Alcohol and Drug Abuse Counseling, Biological Science, Business Administration, Chemistry, Computer Information Systems, Economics, English, Government, History, Legal Assistance, Mathematics, Music, Office Education, Physical Education, Physics, Psychology, Real Estate, Spanish, and Speech Communication.

Information about specific courses or the TASP exam may be obtained at the Student Services Office or by calling 685-4501.

Pentagon probes contracts arranged by defense agency

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon is investigating several contracts negotiated by the Defense Test and Evaluation Support Agency, which has been criticized by a federal official.

The agency in Albuquerque, N.M., "has fallen significantly short of what we expected of them," said John E. Krings, outgoing director of the U.S. Defense Department's Office of Operational Test and Evaluation.

"It's grown a little too fast and is not as effective as we expected," he said Friday during a hearing of a Senate Governmental Affairs subcommittee.

Krings said he believed Kirtland Air Force Base, N.M., "can take over this work and I've asked them to do it because they have an organization to do it."

"I've told them if they can't, tell us how," he said. "I have confidence in the Air Force contracting office in Kirtland."

The Pentagon's inspector general is investigating a number of contracts the Albuquerque agency negotiated for Operational Test and Evaluation, including one for Korean War-vintage Soviet MiG airplanes.

The Pentagon's inspector general is investigating a number of contracts the Albuquerque agency negotiated for Operational Test and Evaluation, including one for Korean War-vintage Soviet MiG airplanes.

The Government Affairs Subcommittee on Federal Services, Post Office and Civil Service was told the inspector general was examining allegations that federal contractors were ordered from on high to give a Texas company a sole-source contract for the airplanes, which were destined for tests.

"We're looking at the award of the contract and the financing," said Derek J. Vander Schaaf, deputy inspector general of the Defense Department.

The contract was drawn up by the support agency, which was acting for the Office of Operational Test and Evaluation, which was set up to independently test new military equipment.

Vander Schaaf said his investigators were running into a lot of finger-pointing, which was making it difficult to trace the origins of the contract.

Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark., the subcommittee chairman, asked Krings to confirm suspicions that C3P (Combat Core Certification Professionals) of Austin, Texas, "was put together at the suggesting of the Pentagon and yourself" to find the equipment the Office of Operational Test and Evaluation wanted for tests.

"Absolutely not," Krings said.

C3P came forward on its own and turned out to be the only company in the country that had a Federal Aviation Administration license to fly and maintain MiGs, he said.

Krings said his office wanted some MiGs to shoot down.

"They're a real cheap and effective way of testing," he said.

Pryor said the C3P case is "one of those murky areas of contracting. It's one of those questionable areas, not only for the company but for how the contract was awarded."

Krings said the C3P contract stemmed from his office lacking enough targets for its testing, and the ones they had were not new enough.

At that point, Krings said they discovered that C3P had found some relatively cheap MiG-15s that could be used as targets.

"The only people we could find in the free world who had a license to fly them were C3P and then we found MiG-21s were available and we went after them," he said.

Other companies "could get a license, but why do that when we could get six or eight MiGs right away," Krings said.

Last September, MiGs were part of a publicized test of Soviet military equipment at Kirtland.

Pryor said C3P was an arms dealer for the test and evaluation agency and its contract was originally highly classified but was declassified at the time of an agency demonstration of foreign military hardware.

Caravan to honor murdered civil rights workers

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Twenty-five years ago Wednesday, just outside the rural Mississippi town of Philadelphia, three young civil rights workers disappeared after being stopped for speeding by local police.

The bodies of Mickey Schwerner, James Chaney, and Andrew Goodman were found three months later beneath an earthen dam on a farm near Philadelphia. Schwerner had been beaten, Chaney and Goodman were shot in the head.

It was a case of a worst fear coming true. About 1,000 young people had descended on the state — most of them white and from Northeast colleges — as part of a project to register disenfranchised black voters.

The volunteers were warned that they would encounter a hostile white population and could be subjected to beatings and unwarranted arrests by local police.

The three deaths, however, were a sobering lesson to the volunteers in what became known as the "Freedom Summer." They eventually formed the basis of the movie, "Mississipi Burning," which was released late last year.

But the killings didn't stop the project. That summer, 17,000 Mississippi blacks registered as voters, contributing, as sociologist Doug McAdam says, to the "democratization of voting in Mississippi and throughout the South."

That contribution, and the memory of those slain will be honored this week in a "reverse" Freedom Caravan traveling from Philadelphia to Washington, D.C. and New York City.

The caravan was organized by the Chaney Goodman Schwerner Memorial Coalition, an organization set up by the families of the victims, in collaboration with several other civil and voter rights organizations.

"There is a lot to be learned from what happened in Mississippi in 1964," said Barbara Horowitz, a consultant for the coalition. "Our hope is to get back on that track. People went to Mississippi and died trying to register people to vote."

The Freedom Caravan will also try to focus attention on pending Congressional legislation on voter registration reform.

That legislation seeks to establish same-day, on-site registration, mail-in or post card registration, automatic registration at government agencies that routinely serve the public, and a total ban on purging voters from the rolls for not voting.

"There has been a tremendous amount of change since the summer of 1964," said Ben Chaney, brother of James Chaney, who was black.

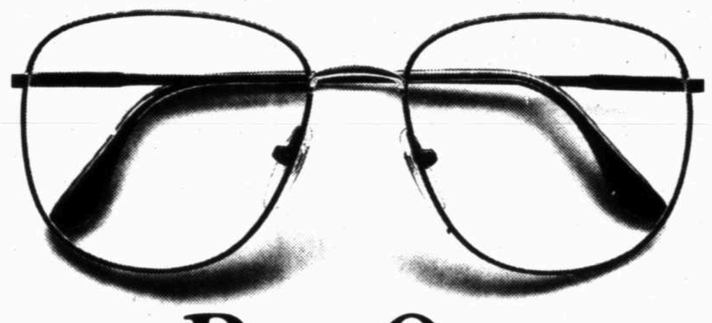

"There has been so much change that people have become complacent and are confusing change for progress. Racism still exists in this country. There are still people in this country that don't vote."

The Freedom Caravan leaves Philadelphia Thursday. Participants will meet with members of Congress in Washington Friday, and hold a voter registration reform rally on the steps of the Capitol.

Dad helps handicapped son get degree

By KAREN SCHWARTZ

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Joe Rossetti has huge hands, hands that have built houses, run a business, and for the past 13 years, taken notes for his handicapped son so that he might graduate from college.

Rossetti laughs when you mention his hands. In the month since his son's graduation from Providence College, the 62-year-old has been working on long-neglected projects around the house. "I've got a blister," he says with amazement. "I've never had such soft hands before."

Rossetti calls his son Carl his "right-hand man," but the truth is, that's what Carl could call his father.

Seventeen years ago, when Carl was 15, his neck was broken in a dirt bike accident.

After five months in a semi-coma, Carl regained consciousness and was allowed to return home. Intensive therapy helped him regain movement on his left side, and his father became his second hand.

"I've never seen such devotion in a mother and father in my life," said Shirley Kervick, a dance therapist who helped Carl regain his ability to walk.

Carl finished high school with the help of teachers and fellow students, then enrolled in Providence College's Continuing Education program.

Rossetti, whose 1951 Providence College class ring is worn smooth from years of hard work, went back to school with Carl in 1975.

"Carl wanted that degree, and I said, 'Well, let's go for it'," Rossetti said. "I did it like any parent would do it. Until you're a parent you don't realize what your parents did for you."

Rossetti makes it clear he wasn't the only one who has helped Carl.

"Behind the battles was my wife. Ann had to be very patient for the past 17 years," Rossetti said.

When Carl was injured, Rossetti gave up his construction business and went into real estate. "I just stopped right then and there," he said. "I had to let everything go."

"As a parent, you love your children, nothing is a sacrifice if you love them," he said.

Carl took only one course per semester, but Rossetti also spent two days a week with him at the offices of doctors and therapists. His next step in therapy involves improving his speech, which only those who know him well can understand.

"If you want to do it right, it's a full-time job," Rossetti said. "I was just fortunate I could work my schedule around Carl." That meant sometimes working into the early-morning hours to keep his family financially afloat.

"It's a good thing I'm a nocturnal person," Rossetti said. As for sleep, "if I get three or four hours, I'm great."

Carl's dedication to college was unfailing for 10 years, but "he expected to get everything back — when he didn't, he started to get frustrated," Rossetti said.

"This is what I had to avoid. I wanted to keep him busy," he said. The two have taken up sailing and have enrolled in a handicapped ski program. They've also "seen a lot of movies," Rossetti said.

Carl, who received his bachelor of arts degree last month, was the third Rossetti child to graduate from Providence College.

"I think this graduation of Carl Rossetti is a testimony to what the human spirit can overcome," said the dean of continuing education, Roger L. Pearson.

The college honored the elder Rossetti with a special acknowledgement during the awards banquet for the graduates.

Sally Ride accepts new teaching post

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Former astronaut Sally Ride is university hopping, leaving Stanford to become a professor of physics at the University of California at San Diego.

Ride

She also will become director of the California Space Institute at UC's Scripp's Institution of Oceanography, UC regents said Friday.

Rider, 38, has been at Stanford for two years, examining issues of space and nuclear weapons policy as a research fellow in the Center for International Security and Arms Control.

As director of the space institute, Ride will oversee research projects on eight of the university's campuses, the regents said.

Escalante

FLINT, Mich. (AP) — Jaime Escalante, the Los Angeles high schoolteacher who inspired the movie "Stand and Deliver," played hooky from school to accept an honorary degree.

Escalante came to Flint on Friday to accept the degree from the General Motors Institute, a college of engineering and business management run by the automaker.

"I hate to leave my room because my students are left with a substitute," Escalante said. "It's not the same with a substitute and it breaks the continuity of the learning process."

Escalante was persuaded to leave California by Fern Espino, GMI's dean of student development. Two of Escalante's former students, Jesus Acosta and Steve Robles, attend the institute.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Kathleen Brown, another member of the politically prominent California family, is taking a stab a statewide office.

Ms. Brown, whose father and brother were both governors, said Friday she will quit her post as a local public works commissioner next month to step up her campaign for state treasurer.

"One of the things that I think modern campaigns lack is the ability to touch people and to listen to people and to find out what it is that they see as the priorities in Sacramento," the 42-year-old Democrat said.

"It seems everywhere I go there are people there to tell me they were touched by some positive activity of my father's or my brother's administration," she said. Her father, Edmund G. "Pat" Brown Sr., was governor from 1959 to 1966, and her brother, Edmund G. Jr., known as Jerry, was governor from 1975 to 1983.

Ms. Brown, who has campaigned part-time during the past six months for the post held by Republican incumbent Thomas W. Hayes, is the only major Democratic candidate for the job to emerge so far.

She was appointed to her $65,333-per-year job on the Los Angeles Public Works Commission in October 1987 by Mayor Tom Bradley.

BOSTON (AP) — Columnist Art Buchwald, opera stars Robert Merrill and Roberta Peters, and pianist Victor Borge will be featured in the concert kicking off the 12-week season of the 104-year-old Boston Pops.

Celebrating its 20th anniversary on the Public Broadcast Service, "Evening at Pops" was taped at Boston Symphony Hall last week to be shown June 25 here and other times in other areas.

John Williams, who took over as Pops conductor in 1980 after the death of Arthur Fiedler, said recently that the popularity of the Pops seems as enduring as the orchestra itself.

"I don't think it's complacent to point out that the popularity of the Pops does not seem to have diminished at all," he said.

But he stressed that the orchestra must "keep up the search for a new repertoire, finding new things, discarding things that no longer work."

"The Pops is famous for delivering a certain glowing good feeling that it must produce each and every time out," Williams said. "The amazing thing is that it does."

NEW YORK (AP) — The divorce claim against actor William Hurt by his former lover goes to court Monday where she is asking for half of his earnings over the past 6½ years even though she admits they were never formally married.

Hurt, who married someone else in March, is estimated by the plantiff's lawyer to be worth about $10 million.

Sandra Jennings, 32, is basing her claim on four weeks that she lived with Hurt in Beaufort, S.C., while he was filming "The Big Chill." South Carolina recognizes common-law marriages, while New York, where they lived most of the time, does not.

"This is a divorce action," said Jennings' lawyer, A. Richard Golub. "I want to establish the marriage, and then I think she should get half of everything he earned from 1982" to when they are divorced.

Jennings, a former dancer at the New York City Ballet, said Hurt, 39, treated her — and introduced her to others — as his wife. But the judge who is hearing the case beginning Monday has already said that the burden of proving that there was a common-law marriage, based on South Carolina law, will be difficult.

Hurt's lawyer, Frances Jacobs, would not comment, referring questions to publicist Lois Smith, who denied a common-law marriage existed. Hurt "never claimed or pretended they were married," she said.

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — Millionaire businessman Holmes Tuttle, a staunch Republican and confidant of Presidents Reagan and Eisenhower, has died after a brief illness. He was 83.

Tuttle had been admitted to Cottage Hospital after suffering a stroke eight weeks earlier, said Joseph J. Keon, his son-in-law. He died Friday in the hospital, a nursing supervisor said.

He was born on an Oklahoma ranch, moved to California at age 17 and made his fortune in banking and car dealerships in California and Arizona.

Tuttle, a one-time golfing partner of former President Eisenhower, was a member of a group of wealthy industrialists and friends of Ronald Reagan who helped him win the governorship of California in 1966.

Tuttle was a major financial supporter of state GOP politicians, Keon said, and served with steel magnate Earle Jorgenson and corporate executive Justin Dart as Reagan's unofficial advisers.

He met Reagan in 1946 when he sold him a Ford coupe. At the time, Reagan was married to Jane Wyman, who knew some of Tuttle's friends.

Tuttle said he asked Reagan to enter the California gubernatorial race after Reagan made speeches on behalf of Barry Goldwater in the 1964 presidential campaign.

More recently, Tuttle and other friends of the former president purchased a $2.5 million home in Bel Air that the Reagans moved into after leaving the White House.

He is survived by his wife, Virginia; a son, Robert Tuttle; and a daughter, Sally Keon.

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — Edwin Buxbaum, an internationally known authority on National Geographic magazine, died Wednesday of a cerebral hemorrhage at age 86.

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — William C. Keady Sr., a U.S. district judge whose 1972 decision on prison conditions led to a complete overhaul of Mississippi's correctional system, died Friday of kidney and liver failure at age 76.

He ordered the state to improve deplorable conditions in the prison system. His rulings ended the use of trusties who performed guard duty and led to the elimination of the so-called prison camps.

Keady also ruled on cases involving the desegregation of Mississippi's public schools in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

Dallas superintendent seeks private-sector help for schools

By MELINDA DONNELLY

DALLAS (AP) — One year to the day after he arrived in Dallas, school district Supt. Marvin Edwards stood before a group of young, upwardly mobile business professionals to deliver a message he'd given hundreds of times before.

"We're going to work to do our part, but we want you to come along with us as a community, as a business partner," he told Dallas Business League members gathered earlier this month. "We're asking for your financial commitment, that you come to the school board and say 'What can we do?' "

The plea has been a benchmark of Edwards' first year as head of the 131,000-student Dallas Independent School District, where crime, student underachievement, a high dropout rate and other inner-city school problems have eroded public confidence and stolen the spotlight from positive programs.

Edwards has tried to counteract that image during the more than 400 public appearances since he arrived last June 1 from Topeka, Kan., where he headed that city's 15,000-student school system. His professional, businesslike style has won the 45-year-old superintendent points among colleagues and many community members who believe he has taken the DISD's reins with a vision that will work.

Many parents like his attentiveness to their concerns; students who have met him say the same.

Edwards' programs have been well-received for the most part, although none have been in place long enough to demonstrate conclusive results. They include a dropout-prevention network of special counseling centers and an employee assigned to each school who works full-time identifying and counseling students they believe are in danger of dropping out.

This fall, a teachers' academy will offer evening and weekend classes to teachers who want to hone their skills or learn new techniques to educate inner-city youths.

Test scores on the state-mandated basic skills test have risen districtwide, although some schools remain among the lowest-performing in Texas.

If there is any criticism, it is that Edwards has tried to become too many things to too many people, stretching himself thin with routine 80-hour work weeks and failing to aggressively manage a racially fractured school board that some believe meddles too much in school business.

"If I don't spend time in schools, I lose touch with what we're about," said Edwards, who began his career in 1967 as an industrial arts and math teacher in his native Illinois.

He prefers to stay out of the politics of the board — such as its recent fight over whether to end a desegregation lawsuit — but quietly intervenes when board members approach staff with personal agendas that conflict with the full board's policy decisions.

Marvin Edwards

"It would be extremely counterproductive if I were to find myself fighting school board members publicly rather than working with them to achieve positive results," Edwards said.

Edwards, who downplays his role as DISD's first black superintendent, so far has distanced himself from the district's volatile racial climate, satisfying most players with his willingness to listen and his ability to deftly resolve sensitive issues without angering either side.

His first challenge came a few months before he arrived in Dallas, when a local newspaper published comments he made that appeared to question the effectiveness of bilingual education.

As an angry Hispanic community demanded a response, civic leader Michael A. Gonzales received an early morning phone call from a DISD staffer wanting to put him in touch with Edwards. Minutes later, Gonzales was on the phone with Edwards in Topeka, who listened to the concerns and promised to meet with a group of Hispanic leaders in Dallas.

"It says a lot about his leadership ability when he comes in, makes an off-the-cuff remark and then is willing to reconsider," Gonzales said.

When members of Edwards' African-American Advisory Committee brought allegations to him earlier this year that there was a disproportionate number of black male students being disciplined at a middle school, Edwards immediately ordered a DISD official to investigate and curtailed disciplinary practices at the school until the issue was resolved. The district later determined the problem was not widespread, but in the meantime, Edwards defused what could have become an explosive issue.

"It's the first time that we're actually partners in this process and not just a line on some fancy stationery," said Vivian Johnson, chairwoman of the advisory committee that was created during the late 1970s.

Dallas teachers groups have found Edwards less cooperative on some issues but say his real test is yet to come.

Teachers are banking on Edwards to back their request for an 8 percent pay raise during budget negotiations this month, a proposal he supported in early rounds but depends on the school board for final approval.

They also are looking to Edwards to give teachers more power to develop and implement programs.

Teachers unions complain about what they call a longstanding "lockstep" philosophy in the DISD that forces teachers to follow administrative directives and diminishes their ability to affect change in the school system.

Union officials say that while Edwards has supported teachers' professional enrichment and training programs, they are unsure if he will help persuade the union-wary school board that increased teacher involvement is not the equivalent of giving the union more clout.

"I feel that (Edwards) is very concerned about anything looking like collective bargaining," said Maureen Peters, president of the Dallas Federation of Teachers. "It's my hope that we can find that path where we can work together and not be combative."

Edwards has tried to bridge the gap between teachers and the administration by meeting several times with teachers. He believes it has helped raise teacher morale.

"It's not realistic to think I'm reaching all employees," Edwards said. "What I'm doing is allowing any employee to reach out and touch the superintendent."

Edwards also has strengthened ties with members of civic, religious and community groups, who he firmly believes ultimately control whether schools improve.

Recently, Edwards began implementing his "Safe Schools" project, in which groups of teachers, students, community members and police are designing an anti-crime program for each school.

He's in the process of meeting privately with area businesses to arrive at the best ways for them to invest in the schools.

"I think that the concept of a strong educational system is definitely getting across to people," said Humphrey Bogart, president and chief executive officer of Dallas-based Fidelity Investments, which regularly sends employees to tutor students and teach computer skills at a DISD elementary school and is considering other commitments.

Kite avoids rainy day blues

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
New York Times News Service

U.S. Open

PITTSFORD, N.Y. — Tom Kite used his new cross-handed putting grip and some late scrambling saves after he ran four birdies in a six-hole stretch Saturday to pass Curtis Strange, the defending champion, and gain a one-shot lead going into Sunday's final round of the 89th U.S. Open championship.

The 39-year-old Texan they call Mr. Consistency has done about everything but win a major championship in his 18 years as a touring pro golfer. He has two victories this year and a dozen in his career without victory at the U.S. Open, the British Open, the Masters or the PGA Championship.

On a messy day when the past night's heavy rains forced a long delay in the start of the third round at Oak Hill Country Club's East Course, Kite rallied to get by Strange, the third-round leader, just after the turn.

Then Kite had to come out of the trees and bunkers to hold on to his narrow edge over Scott Simpson, who won the U.S. Open two years ago. Strange, who wants to become the first man to defend this title successfully in 38 years, slipped to three shots back of Kite and two behind Simpson.

Kite had a string of four consecutive 3's from No.9 through No. 12 to catch Strange, then the leader, and move to a two-stroke advantage.

Eventually Kite finished with one-under-par 69 and a 54-hole total of five-under 205. Simpson scored 69 Saturday also, and was at 206.

Strange had a 73, his highest Open score in his last 11 rounds of this championship going back to the second round of the 1986 Open, when he did not make the cut. The defending champion was at two-under 208.

Larry Nelson, the 1983 champion; Jay Don Blake, and Masashi (Jumbo) Ozaki were tied at 209.

Kite came out of a bunker to save par at No. 16. Then, after a drive way right into trees and deep rough at 17, he came out to the fairway on his second shot and pitched close enough to one-putt for another par 4 save.

Heavy rains Friday night flooded the course as Allen's Creek, which runs through Oak Hill, overflowed, leaving lakes of water on a number of fairways.

Fire departments near the club, which is just outside Rochester, were called upon to pump out the flooded fairways and bunkers.

Play did not begin until almost 1 p.m., and for the first time in U.S. Open history, players were sent off by "split tees."

Abbott beats boyhood heroes

By HARRY ATKINS

■ AL Roundup, Page 5C

DETROIT (AP) — Jim Abbott is finding it's easy to live a fairytale life when most of your dreams come true.

Saturday, the California rookie beat his boyhood heroes with home run help from Claudell Washington and Jack Howell as the Angels downed the Detroit Tigers 6-3.

"It was nice. This was a longtime thrill for me," Abbott said. "I grew up here. This is my idea of what baseball is all about."

Abbott, a former University of Michigan and Olympic star, pitched seven innings before a large group of family and friends who made the 70-mile trip from his hometown of Flint, Mich.

"It was special today because my friends were here and my family was here," Abbott said. "I've often thought of throwing here, but I always throught I'd be pitching for the Tigers.

Somebody asked Abbott if the "fairytale" aspects of his remarkable career were overplayed.

"To me, a little bit they are," Abbott said. "I kind of hope they'll become regular things. Maybe someday they'll become routine.

"But, right now, they're special while I do them and I realize why."

Abbott also noted, with a smile, that the 1989 Tiger lineup doesn't much resemble the one he worshiped in 1984.

"I don't want to build it up too much. It was something nice to do. Now, it's time to go on," he said.

Abbott, 6-4, allowed nine hits and three runs in his first start against the Tigers. Bob McClure pitched the final 1⅔ innings for his third save.

"I thought Abbott did a good job, especially pitching in his hometown for the first time," Detroit manager Sparky Anderson said. "There is an awful lot of pressure pitching in a situation like this and I thought he handled it well."

Keith Moreland, who had one of the hits off the rookie, said Abbott threw hard.

"He has good velocity and good movement on the ball," Moreland said. "I think he's going to be around for a while."

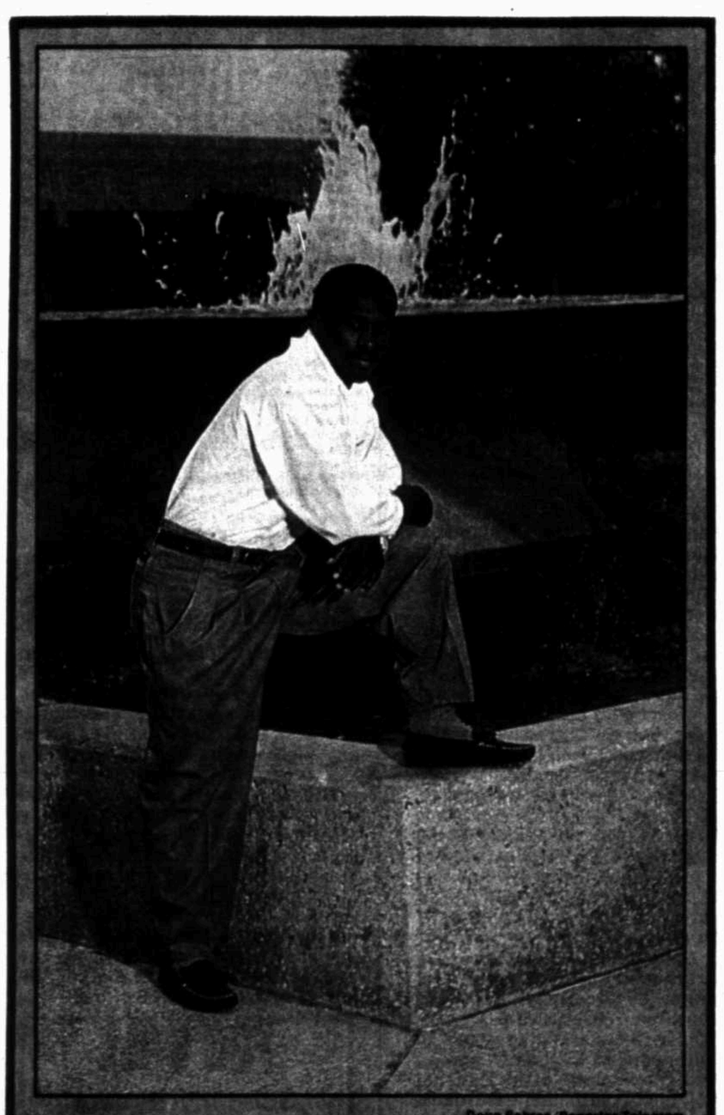

Detroit's Doyle Alexander, 4-7, gave up 12 hits and six runs in 7 2-3 innings. He has won just once in his last 11 outings.

It was the Tigers' 12th loss in 15 games. They dropped 15 games under .500 for the first time since Sept. 29, 1977.

The Tigers took a 2-0 lead on homers by Tracy Jones in the first and Gary Ward in the second. Jones had arrived in Detroit just hours earlier after being traded by San Francisco for Pat Sheridan.

"It was just a hanging curveball," Jones said. "The guy just made a mistake and I was fortunate. But, it's something I'll always remember — a home run in my first at-bat in the American League."

The Angels rallied to take the lead with three runs in the third.

Tyrone Thurman, at 5-foot-3¾ and 136 pounds, is making a bid to become the smallest player in the NFL by trying to land a berth with the Dallas Cowboys.

Tyrone Thurman: Little Big Man

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

If former Midland Lee and Texas Tech football standout Tyrone Thurman becomes the smallest man in the National Football League with the Dallas Cowboys, it will be because of two words — "You can't."

Those are the words "Smurf" Thurman has lived with all his life and it's no small wonder. Any coach taking a look at Thurman doesn't automatically say, "You belong in football."

In a sport dominated by the nation's hulks, "Mighty Mite" Thurman stands at 5-foot-3¾ and weighs a whopping 136 pounds.

"And I've grown since I left Lee for Tech," says Thurman. "I was 5-2 and 128 pounds when I was recruited."

And now Thurman is trying to land a position with the Dallas Cowboys as a free agent. He has already crossed a couple of hurdles in that goal.

"I've been told that I will get to go to training camp in Thousand Oaks on July 29," said Thurman, who has already survived some roster cuts by new Cowboy coach Jimmy Johnson. "On July 10, I'm to report for a quarterback, defensive back mini-camp, where we will do a lot of running. I was told to weigh 140 pounds by then."

Thurman has already come under attack by some NFL skeptics. Few think he is big enough to play in the rough and tumble world of professional football. But that is a story Thurman is all too familiar with. The "you can't" words he has heard before.

"The thing about my size doesn't bother me at all," says Thurman. "Ever since grade school, people have been telling me I couldn't play football. They told me I was too small for peanut football. I heard the same thing going into junior high and high school. And I sure heard it when I went into college.

"In fact, I've come to the point where I love hearing people tell me I can't do something. It just makes me do better. I want to show people that I can. When I speak to groups, I tell them how I got a scholarship to college, weighing 128 pounds. Size doesn't limit you at all. You can do anything you want if you want it bad enough."

And Tyrone Thurman has the numbers to back up his statement, proving that dynamite can come in a small package.

As a running back at Midland Lee, he helped lead the team to a state finals berth in 1983 and to a quarterfinal berth in 1984. He rushed for over 1,000 yards in his senior season and set a team record of 25 touchdowns.

At Texas Tech, Thurman became a first team All-America selection as a punt returner, but he was also a starting wide receiver. He re-wrote the Tech punt return record book and fell just over 200 yards short of setting the national punt return yardage mark.

But with his size, Thurman admits that he had to have some help along the way.

"I'll always be grateful to Spike Dykes," said Thurman. "He gave me a chance to play in high school and he told Jerry Moore, who was then coach at Tech, that I could play in college.

"Coach Moore gave me that chance and I wanted to prove to him that he didn't make a bad decision. After all, teams were not beating down my door to recruit me. Those people showed confidence in me and I'm grateful for that."

And now Thurman is again fighting against the odds. Naturally, the tiny Thurman was not drafted in the regular NFL draft, but the Cowboys had seen enough of him to offer a free agent contract.

Rose may confront accuser

By JOE KAY

CINCINNATI (AP) — Pete Rose may get the chance to confront one of his main accusers at his hearing next week before baseball Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti.

An attorney for Ronald Peters says John Dowd, the special investigator for major league baseball, told him he may ask Peters to attend Rose's hearing June 26 at Giamatti's office in New York.

Peters, described as the bookmaker for the Cincinnati Reds manager, was sentenced Friday to two years on drug and tax evasion charges.

Rich Levin, a spokesman for Giamatti, declined to discuss the possibility of Peters attending the hearing. He said, however, the commissioner's office wants to make sure Rose gets a fair hearing.

"We're doing everything we can to make sure this is fair, period," Levin said. "From the first day, that's been the theme."

Martina reaches grass finals

EDGBASTON, England (AP) — Martina Navratilova overpowered Elna Reinach Saturday to reach the final of a grass-court tennis tournament against fellow American Zina Garrison.

Garrison had to overcome an errant sprinkler and a long first set in her semifinal victory.

Navratilova, the top seed, used her serve-and-volley game to overwhelm baseliner Reinach 6-2, 6-2. Reinach, the 12th seed from South Africa, had particular trouble when Navratilova served to her backhand.

"At the moment I'm just pleased with my form and the way things have been working out," Navratilova said. "I couldn't ask for any more at this stage.

"I'll know what to expect against Zina in the final. She runs down every ball and I'll be ready for it to come back again."

Garrison, the No. 2 seed, struggled in the opening set against defending champion Claudia Kohde-Kilsch of West Germany before settling down for a 7-6 (7-3), 6-2 victory.

The start of the match was delayed for 30 minutes when the on-court sprinkler system accidentally was turned on and the court was soaked. The first set then took nearly an hour and featured repeated long rallies.

Garrison broke Kohde-Kilsch's serve in the opening game of the second set and again in the fifth game.

"I felt good and my serve was pretty much on," Garrison said. "I came up with some aces when I needed them.

"I passed pretty well, too, but she didn't serve as strongly as she usually does and I didn't return as well as I would like. That's the only thing I would like to improve."

Allisons haunted by accident

By MIKE OWEN

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — Father's Day 1988 is just a bad memory for Davey Allison. Bobby Allison, his father, has almost no memory of it at all.

A first-lap crash in the Miller 500 NASCAR stock-car race nearly killed Bobby. Davey had started ahead of him in the field, and a crew member warned him what he would find on his next trip around the track.

"I could see that he wasn't moving in the car. And that's a pretty frightening experience," Davey Allison said.

On Saturday, walking with a slight limp, Bobby Allison returned to Pocono International Raceway to talk about it himself. On Sunday, he will be grand marshal for this year's Miller 500.

"I'm happy to be back here even though it's in a different situation than I've ever been in," Allison said. "I just really look forward to the race itself."

But he can't remember the crash, when his Buick blew a tire, hit the wall and was struck in the driver's side by another car.

"I don't know if I want to remember the crash," said Allison, the third-winningest Winston Cup driver with 84 career victories.

A drive around the Pocono track in a pace car in October helped him remember one thing about the day: the driver's meeting.

With a spin-out involving Darrell Waltrip in a previous race on his mind, Allison had asked a NASCAR official at the meeting, "What do you suggest a guy do if some blankety-blank spins you out?"

"Michael Waltrip said, 'I'm not the blankety-blank. I'm just his brother,'" Allison said.

Allison, who hopes to drive again, said his memory "hasn't come on near like I hoped it would."

"There are little bits and pieces that come to me as we're going along," he said. "The ponds along the side of the road here — we fished there last year and I remembered that when I saw the ponds."

The crash left the elder Allison fighting for his life at an Allentown hospital. Davey went on to a fifth-place finish in the race, then headed for the hospital.

"Davey has to look after his responsibilities. He certainly isn't a doctor," his father said.

Last year, Davey recalled, he had been to church with his dad the morning of the race but didn't get much chance to talk with him. So, right after his dad was introduced to the Pocono crowd before the race, he told his own crew he would be right back. He ran to his father's No. 12 gold car.

"I took off and ran back and told him 'Happy Father's Day' and ran back and got in my car," he said.

Johnson's tears, admissions of guilt fail to convince skeptics

By LEE BYRD

TORONTO (AP) — A year ago, before she knew her son was stealing some of his lightning from a bottle, Gloria Johnson boasted that he had acquired the courage, as a mere boy, to face the truth at risk of swift punishment.

Young Benjamin Sinclair Johnson Jr., she said, took absolute joy in swimming in the ocean off his native Jamaica. He was forbidden from going out alone, but he did it anyway.

And each time, "he'd come in, get the belt and stand right up," Mrs. Johnson told her son's biographer, James Christie. "You could hit him and he wouldn't cry."

Ben Johnson, once and possibly still the world's fastest human, wasn't nearly so quick with his candor when it came to the country which adopted him as a national hero. For seven years, he cheated his competitors and dishonored his maple leaf uniform, in utter disregard for his own health, by drawing his edge from syringes and pills containing what he and his co-conspirators called "juice" or "stuff" or "roids" — short for anabolic steroids. He took at least six different varieties, often two kinds at a time.

And for nine long months after he finally got caught at the Summer Olympics in Seoul, where he blazed to the voided world record of 9.79 seconds in the 100-meter dash, Johnson compounded his athletic crimes by lying to Canada and the world. Never, he said, had he consciously even dipped a toe into the forbidden sea of drugs.

It was a lie he repeated, by his own account, even to his lawyer.

First came a sugarplum fantasy about someone spiking his pre-race drink, in actuality a diuretic mixture concocted by his team doctor in a smug bid to fool the boys at the lab. That one, when measured against the medical evidence, was ludicrous to begin with. The analysis proved steroids had been in his system for a much longer while.

Then, just days after he forfeited his gold medal and a license to print money — perhaps $10 million to $15 million of it from appearance and endorsement fees over five years — Johnson concocted a second line of defense — that of the unwitting innocent, possibly duped by trusted associates. He signed a statement to the Canadian people that he had "never, ever knowingly taken illegal drugs" and said he would welcome a national investigation into the issue.

He got it. And when he finally testified last week, Johnson, 27, had no place to run to but the truth. By that time, the federal inquiry had heard testimony about his drug use from his coach, Charlie Francis, his sports doctor, George M. "Jamie" Astaphan, and several of his teammates, some of whom helped him with his injections. It even had a tape, from Astaphan, of an incriminating telephone conversation between Johnson and the drug-dispensing physician.

"I lied," Johnson said in a confession during which, this time, his mother and a nationwide television audience would witness him cry. "I was ashamed in front of my family and friends and kids who looked up to me ... I was just a mess."

As Gloria Johnson wept herself, the Big Ben of Canada begged Justice Charles Dubin, head of the inquiry, for a second chance. There was this, in an exchange with government counsel Robert Armstrong:

Q: Are you now firmly opposed to the use of steroids or any banned substances?

A: Yes, sir.

Q: And I take from what you just said, you're prepared to tell the young people in this country, and indeed the world, they should not take banned substances?

A: Yes, sir.

Q: And do you wish to compete in the 1992 Olympics?

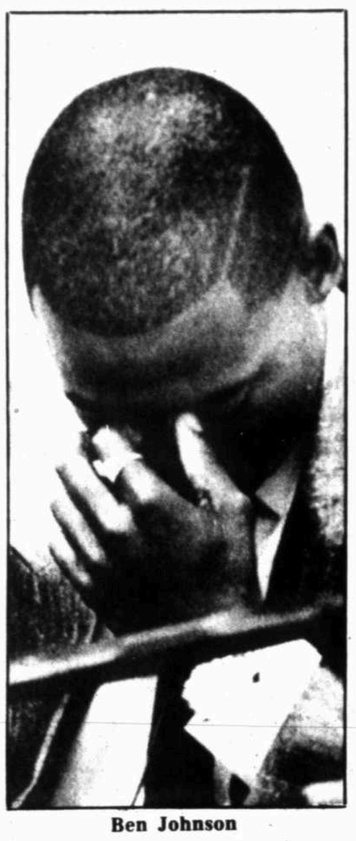

A: Yes, sir.

Q: And if you're given the chance to run again, what country do you wish to run for?

A: My own country. Canada.

Q: And do you believe you can be the fastest man in the world, without taking steroids?

A: I know I can be.

Ben Johnson

With that, millions of Canadians were willing to give him that chance. Spectators in the hearing room applauded him loudly; newspaper and television straw polls reflected a huge outpouring of sympathy for the man who, after all, had once been the standard-bearer of Canada's pride. No Canadian in history, politician, scientist, soldier, artist or athlete, had been so widely recognized in the world, not even a defector named Gretzky.

But others, Dubin included, expressed their doubts. With judicial grace, Dubin interrupted the love-in surrounding the final hours of Johnson's testimony with a cold reminder of the prices of deceit.

Johnson's attorney, Ed Futerman, had made a point of noting that the athlete had personally answered the letters of 1,500 young people who had written him since his expulsion from Seoul, some of whom even sent their own ribbons and medals to replace the one he had forfeited.

Dubin made it clear he wasn't that impressed by Johnson's gesture, since it served to perpetuate a notion held by youngsters "who all believed you were innocent, right?"

Johnson: "Yes."

And Dubin reminded Johnson repeatedly that he not only had lied to Canada, but remained silent for months as stories swept the country that he had been set up by an agent of American rival Carl Lewis. At one point last year, Johnson sought treatments, not involving drugs, for an injured leg from sports therapist Jack Scott, who also worked with Lewis. Theory had it that Scott or another Lewis ally somehow slipped steroids into Johnson's body.

Dubin: "You knew ... that stories had been spread about sabotage — even someone rubbing stanozolol (the steroid most often used by Johnson and discovered at Seoul) into your leg?"

Johnson: "Yes."

The story has generated considerable anti-American friction, and some Canadians still believed it even after Johnson's confession. "Carl Lewis is the guilty one," was a refrain frequently heard by U.S. reporters from Toronto residents, from cab drivers to millionaire businessmen.

As for Johnson's nine-month disclaimer that he had never knowingly taken drugs, Dubin said, "I think it's fair to say most Canadians wanted to believe that. ... Did you not realize how important it was? What a disservice it was to sign a statement like that ...?"

Johnson: "I did wrong."

Lewis, for his part, said in Houston he hopes Johnson gets his second chance. "I really admire the fact he finally came out and told the truth," said the man who was awarded the gold medal handed back by Johnson. He added that he hopes that after Johnson serves out his two-year suspension from the International Amateur Athletic Federation, they can run a series of match races leading to the Barcelona Olympics in 1992.

"It would be tremendous financially, but more so it would be great for the sport," Lewis said. "Now that we're on the same side of the fence, it would be a tremendous public forum to speak out on drugs."

Others weren't so impressed. Former Canadian teammate Angella Issajenko was particularly offended by Johnson's claim that he was never really apprised of the side-effect risks of steroids — liver and prostate cancer, high blood pressure, clogged arteries, uncontrolled aggressive behavior, sterility and acne.

"That's a cop-out," said Issajenko, who testified earlier that she had personally injected Johnson with steroids — as he acknowledged himself. "He's saying if he had known about the side effects, he never would have taken them. He knew what the side effects were. ... He knew what havoc it was causing to his libido. Side effects didn't matter when he was making $30,000 per race."

Eyebrows were raised, too, at other elements of Johnson's mea culpa. He said, for example, that he really didn't know for two years, from 1981-83, that the drugs his coach and doctor were giving him were steroids, though "it did cross my mind" that they were banned substances. He claimed he first found out the names and purposes of the drugs during the steroid scandal at the 1983 Pan Am Games. Francis said Johnson knew all along what he was taking.

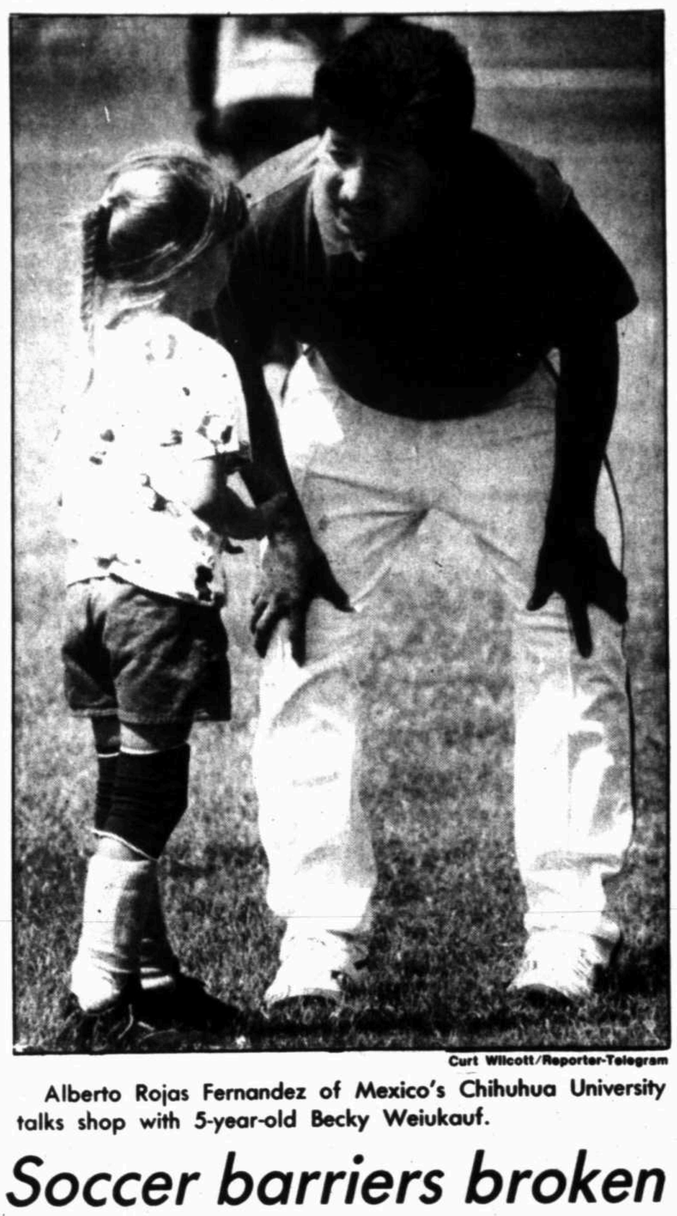

Sports Editor Wayne Parrish of the Toronto Sun wrote on Wednesday that "Having donned the hair-shirt of confessed cheater Monday, Ben Johnson tried the cloak of humble penitent on for size yesterday ... tossed the bright cape of anti-drug crusader over his shoulders, and wrapped himself in the flag."

But if there were any room to believe it could have been an act of courage, Parrish continued, it vanished with the fact that Johnson "told the truth ... but not the whole truth," and only because some confession was a matter "of the direst necessity" in the face of the evidence.

Christie, who, more than most, shared Johnson's embarrassment at Seoul because he had written a pre-Olympic biography which represented the runner as a staunch opponent of drugs, wrote in The Globe and Mail Wednesday that "It's a curious thing about Canadians. They can forgive seven years of deceit in less than 9.79 seconds."

After all, Christie noted, "A man who accepted taxpayers' money to represent us told us he had used banned drugs; he knew they were banned and understood the consequences if caught; he donned our maple leaf uniform and cheated to win; and then, when he came home, Ben Johnson lied about it." And yet Canadians listened to Johnson admit to all that "and the public applauds in the hearing room."

American runner Calvin Smith, who held the 100-meter world record at 9.93 seconds before Johnson smashed it with a 9.83 clocking in Rome in 1987, remains bitter that he was deprived of his crown by a drug-enhanced performance. Johnson admitted that he took several steroid shots just weeks before the Rome competition, where he tested clean after the race — meaning that record remains official. The IAAF says it is seeking an "urgent legal opinion" as to whether it can withdraw the records of confessed drug cheats.

Soccer barriers broken

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee's international coaching exchange made its full circle this week when Alberto Rojas Fernandez held a soccer clinic at the Lee field.

Fernandez is the head of the physical education department of Chihuahua University in Chihuahua, Mexico, and has previously won three national college soccer titles with his university teams.

Fernandez came to Midland as part of a coaching exchange. Last Feburary Lee football coaches Earl Miller and Van Tom Whatley gave a football clinic at Chihuahua University. Football is a young, but growing sport at Chihuahua University. Soccer is strong in Mexico and Lee is just beginning its soccer play on the UIL level.

Lee coach Eddie Bull said of the clinic, "It was a good fundamental camp for the kids in the 11 to 14 age group. We had about 40 kids take advantage of the opportunity.

"None of our guests spoke English, but all the kids told me they learned a lot about soccer. Soccer seems to have a language all its own."

Lee coach Jesse Benevidez handled some of the translation work, but Bull had a fundamental knowledge of spanish from high school and farm work as a youngster.

"They basically took the kids through some well planned drills and we didn't have to talk much," said Bull. "Coach Fernandez brough two of his assistant coaches and two players, who had played on Mexico's national team. I can tell you, they were something to watch."

Fernandez told Bull that the skill level of the youngsters here were on par with those in Mexico, but overall game was lacking.

"Fernandez said that our kids were not as aggressive as the ones he coaches in Mexico at the same age level," said Bull. "Kids in Mexico see soccer as a way out of poverty. Soccer in Mexico is basically the poor kids' game while soccer has been adopted in the U.S. on a higher income level. We haven't obtained as an agressive style as they play in Mexico."

Although this completes the first round of the exchange program, the two schools expect to contiune a relationship.

"I've been asked to come to Chihuahua in December and go with Fernandez to the national university tournament in Guadalajara," said Bull. "I also think some of the Lee football coaches will go back down there to give their football program another clinic in Feburary.

"Fernandez has agreed to come back here next year with another clinic and we expect to have an even bigger turnout for the second time around."

Angels turn angry guns on Diablos

From Staff Reports

EL PASO — There are two ways you can look at what happened here Saturday night in Midland's 22-4 victory over the El Paso Diablos. The Angels either got even or got mad.

El Paso defeated the Angels four times in six games in Midland last week to knock Midland out of the first half title. So, the Angels go out and explode against the Diablos to open the second half race in El Paso.

It may be one of the quirks of the weird Texas League schedule that has the Diablos paying heavy dues for what they did to Midland in Midland. The two teams are playing 12 straight games against each other, making one wonder what the TL schedule maker was drinking when this plan was drawn up.

Midland pounded out a season high 24 hits. Chris Cron hit his 10th homer of the year to tie him for the Texas League lead and he drove in six runs. John Orton hit two homers and also drove in six runs while newcomer Steve DeAngelis and Otto Gonzales were perfect at the plate with four hits each.

U.S. spikers down Soviets

DALLAS (AP) — Karch Kiraly and Steve Timmons led the U.S. men's volleyball team past the men's national team from the Soviet Union 15-7, 8-15, 12-15, 15-13 and 15-13 Saturday night in the first of a five-city U.S. tour.

The tour, known as the EDS Stars and Spikes Series, continues Monday at Auburn Hills, Mich. Other matches are scheduled for Philadelphia, Washington and Sacramento.

A chant, "USA, USA" rang out through the crowd of 12,732 at Reunion Arena during crucial points Saturday night, especially after the Americans began rallying after falling behind two games to one.

Mitchell bangs 24th homer as Giants down Reds, 8-1

AP Laserphoto

San Diego manager Jack McKeon is hopping mad as he effectively displays in an argument with umpires John McSherry (right) and Jerry Crawford during a game against Houston.

Associated Press

Kevin Mitchell broke a brief dry spell with his 24th homer and rookie Dennis Cook pitched a six-hitter as the San Francisco Giants beat the Cincinnati Reds, 8-1.

Mitchell, baseball's best power hitter this season, connected in the third inning off Danny Jackson, 5-9, for his first homer in seven games. The two-run shot gave the Giants a 5-1 lead and increased Mitchell's RBI total to 65, tops in the majors.

NL

Cook, 1-0, blanked the Reds on five hits after Paul O'Neill's leadoff homer in the second inning and got his first major-league hit in eight at-bats, an RBI triple in the eighth.

The left-hander walked three, two in the first inning, and struck out four for his second major-league complete game in six starts.

Cincinnati shortstop Barry Larkin, the National League's leading hitter at .361, sustained a hyperextended left knee in the second inning when Greg Litton slid hard into second on a force play. Larkin continued to play until the sixth.

The Giants took a 1-0 lead in the first inning on Robby Thompson's triple and Will Clark's sacrifice fly. O'Neill's 11th homer tied it, but the Giants went ahead for good with two runs in the bottom of the second.

Candy Maldonado led off with a double to right and scored on Litton's single. Brett Butler's two-out RBI single made it 3-1. Butler hit his second homer in the sixth and a balk by Tim Birtsas gave the Giants another run in the eighth.

Pirates 7, Cardinals 2

Jeff Robinson, making his first start in nearly three years, held St. Louis to one run in five innings as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the Cardinals.

Robinson, 3-6, allowed four hits, walked one and struck out four in his first start since Aug. 21, 1986. He had made 194 straight relief appearances since that start.

Bob Kipper held the Cardinals to one run over the last four innings to earn his second save. St. Louis starter Jose DeLeon, 8-5, took the loss. He gave up seven hits and six runs in 6 1-3 innings.

The Pirates took a 2-0 lead in the first inning. DeLeon walked leadoff batter Barry Bonds, Jose Lind followed with the first of his three singles and Bobby Bonilla blooped a run-scoring double to right. Lind then scored on R.J. Reynold's groundout.

St. Louis outfielder Vince Coleman and Cardinals manager Whitey Herzog were thrown out of the game in the first inning by home plate umpire Greg Bonin. Coleman was ejected for arguing a called third strike and Herzog was tossed after he joined the argument.

The Pirates made it 3-0 in the fifth inning when Rey Quinones led off with a single and scored on Bonds' two-out double.

The Cardinals scored in the bottom of the inning when Denny Walling doubled, went to third on a fly ball and scored on Tim Jones' groundout.

The Pirates broke the game open with a four-run seventh, getting RBIs from Lind, Andy Van Slyke, Reynolds and Benny Distefano.

St. Louis made it 7-2 in the eighth on Ozzie Smith's run-scoring triple.

Mets 1, Phillies 0

Bob Ojeda pitched a three-hitter and Kevin McReynolds doubled home the game's only run with two out in the first inning as the New York Mets beat the Philadelphia Phillies for their fourth straight victory.

Ojeda, 4-6, walked one and struck out six in pitching his second straight complete game and third of the season. He gave up a one-out double to Tommy Herr in the first inning and a leadoff single to John Kruk in the second.

After walking Juan Samuel with two out in the fourth, he retired 14 consecutive batters until Steve Jeltz singled with one out in the ninth.

With two out in the first, Howard Johnson singled off Larry McWilliams, 2-7, and scored when McReynolds doubled high off the wall in left-center. It was McReynolds' 10th RBI in the last 10 games. McWilliams finished with a seven-hitter.

Cubs 3, Expos 2

Rick Sutcliffe pitched Chicago back into first place in the National League East by scattering six hits over 7 1-3 innings and helped his own cause with a sacrifice bunt that set up the winning run as the Cubs beat the Montreal Expos.

With the score tied 2-2, Domingo Ramos opened the Chicago seventh with an infield hit off Pascual Perez and Sutcliffe sacrificed him to second. Ramos scored the winning run on a single by Jerome Walton.

The Cubs, who yielded first place to Montreal on Friday night when they dropped their third straight, are one-half game ahead of the Expos and one game in front of the New York Mets. The St. Louis Cardinals are two games out.

Braves 2, Dodgers 1

Dion James hit his first home run of the season off major-league ERA leader Mike Morgan and Pete Smith and two relievers combined on a seven-hitter.

Smith, 2-8, ended a personal three-game losing streak by holding the Dodgers to three singles in six innings with five strikeouts and one walk. The right-hander, who left the game after 81 pitches due to a twinge in his pitching elbow, was making his first appearance since suffering a sore shoulder in a 7-0 loss to the Dodgers in Atlanta on June 5.

Assenmacher gave up two hits in 1⅔ innings and Joe Boever got the final four outs for his 10th save although Willie Randolph greeted him with an RBI double. Randolph's hit scored Mariano Duncan, who had pinch-hit a double off Assenmacher.

Boever fanned Duncan with runners at first and second to end the game and preserve Smith's first victory since May 7. He had lost four straight decisions.

Padres 2, Astros 1

Jack Clark greeted Houston reliever Danny Darwin with a two-run homer in the eighth inning, lifting San Diego past Houston.

Houston starter Jim Deshaies entered the eighth with a five-hit shutout but allowed a leadoff single to Tony Gwynn, his fourth hit of the game after snapping a 1-for-16 slump. Darwin, 5-2, took over and Clark hit his eighth home run of the season.

The victory went to Greg Harris, 3-2, who pitched two scoreless innings in relief of Dennis Rasmussen.

Despite losing for only the fifth time in their last 22 games, the Astros dropped into second place in the National League West, one game behind San Francisco.

Billy Hatcher, who also doubled and singled, gave Houston a 1-0 lead in the fifth inning with his second home run of the season.

Deshaises survived bases-loaded jams twice in the first three innings. In the first, he intentionally walked Clark to load the bases with one out and got Carmelo Martinez to hit into a double play. The Padres loaded the bases with two out in the third, but Benito Santiago struck out to end the threat.

ROSE

Giamatti could suspend Rose for a year if there is evidence he bet on baseball games. Betting on Reds' games could bring a lifetime ban.

Peters said Friday that he would be agreeable to attending the hearing if the federal judge that sentenced him gives approval. U.S. District Judge S. Arthur Spiegel allowed Peters to remain free on $5,000 bond until July 17th, when he is to start serving his jail time.

Asked whether other witnesses might be called for the hearing, Levin said, "We're just not at liberty to discuss the procedure of the hearing."

The 30-day stay to Peters' sentence also gives Rose's lawyers the opportunity to arrange a private interview as they prepare for the hearing with Giamatti. Although Rose's lawyers declined to discuss the matter last week, they were trying to set up a time for an interview, according to James Ruppert, one of Peters' attorneys.

Asked whether there's been any movement toward agreement on an interview, Ruppert said, "We've talked." He said no time has been agreed upon.

He said Dowd raised the possibility of Peters being at the hearing.

"I've been advised they may request his presence," Ruppert said.

Peters was a key figure in Dowd's investigation. He was interviewed three times as part of the inquiry, which produced a 225-page report and seven volumes of evidence that have been sent to Giamatti and Rose.

Use the right appliance for the job.

Sometimes it gets hot enough to fry an egg on the sidewalk. But on an electric iron? There are better things to use.

And when you need to cool and heat your home, there are better things to use than a heat pump.

A heat pump can't cool your home in summer as well as a high-efficiency air conditioner. And it can't warm your home in winter as well as a natural gas furnace.

Think of winter this summer. For comfortable efficient heating in your home, the most effective appliance ever made is a natural gas furnace. Period.

Yankees, with rookie pitcher, take third straight from Texas

Associated Press

Dave Eiland, promoted to the major leagues earlier in the day, pitched seven effective innings and the New York Yankees beat the Texas Rangers.

Steve Sax got three hits, including a two-run single that broke a 3-all tie in the sixth inning. Steve Balboni added a two-run homer for the Yankees, who finished with 13 hits.

Eiland, recalled from Class AAA Columbus, won his first big-league appearance of the season. The 22-year-old rookie, who made three starts for the Yankees last season, gave up seven hits, walked four and struck out three.

Eiland left after a leadoff single in the eighth by Rafael Palmeiro. Lee Guetterman allowed a single by Ruben Sierra, but then struck out Julio Franco and got pinch-hitter Buddy Bell to ground into a double play. Dave Righetti worked the ninth for his 11th save.

Mike Jeffcoat, 2-1, gave up four runs on 10 hits in 5 1-3 innings. He was making his fourth start since being recalled from Class AAA Oklahoma City on May 31.

The Rangers scored in the second on a walk, a single by Geno Petralli and Rick Leach's RBI grounder. Texas made it 2-0 in the third on another walk and singles by Scott Fletcher and Sierra.

Roberto Kelly hit an RBI triple in the Yankees' fourth and Balboni's seventh home run of the season put New York ahead 3-2 in the fifth. Petralli singled home the tying run in the sixth and Texas then left the bases loaded when Eiland struck out Steve Buechele.

Alvaro Espinoza singled with one out in the Yankees' sixth and took third on a single by Rickey Henderson. After Henderson stole second, Sax hit an opposite-field single to right that scored both runners. Sax's hit came after he was ruled to have checked his swing on a 2-2 pitch, which drew a look of disbelief from Texas manager Bobby Valentine.

Yankees manager Dallas Green was ejected in the sixth, arguing that a drive Balboni hit into the left-field seats was fair. The ball was called foul by third-base umpire Dale Scott, although television replays appeared to indicate it was a three-run homer.

Blue Jays 3, Mariners 2

The Toronto Blue Jays rallied in the ninth inning against Seattle relief ace Mike Schooler for the second straight game, beating the Mariners on Kelly Gruber's RBI single.

AL Roundup

Schooler entered the series with 14 saves in 15 opportunities, but has failed twice to hold one-run leads.

Mike Jackson, 2-1, walked Manny Lee and Nelson Liriano with one out and the Mariners brought in Schooler, the fourth Seattle pitcher.

Schooler struck out Junior Felix, but Tony Fernandez singled to left to tie the game and Gruber followed with a shot to the alley in right center.

On Friday night, Schooler's wild pitch in the bottom of the ninth allowed the winning run to score.

Reliever Duane Ward, 4-7, got the win although his wild pitch on a third strike allowed Seattle to take a 2-1 lead in the top of the ninth.

With one out, Harold Reynolds went around on a 1-2 pitch from Ward. The ball ricocheted to the backstop off the shin guard of catcher Ernie Whitt and Reynolds was safe at first.

Orioles 4, Athletics 2

Phil Bradley drove in three runs with a pair of doubles as the Baltimore Orioles beat the Oakland Athletics in the first nationally televised game from Memorial Stadium in almost three years.

Jose Bautista, pitching his first game in four weeks after recovering from back problems, went six innings and got the win. Baustisa, 3-4, allowed five hits and two runs, struck out two and walked one. Gregg Olson pitched the final 1 2-3 innings for his eighth save.

Oakland starter Matt Young took the loss in his first major league appearance since Sept. 19, 1987. Young, who missed all of last season because of arm troubles, gave up three runs in 3 2-3 innings.

Bautista gave up a two-run homer to Mark McGwire in the first, but allowed only one hit after the second inning.

The Orioles scored in the third on an RBI double by Bradley and added three runs in the fourth off Young and reliever Jim Corsi.

It was the first nationally televised game from Memorial Stadium since August 23, 1986. However, NBC didn't show the entire game. Following a 38-minute rain delay in the bottom of the seventh, the network joined the Cincinnati-San Francisco game in progress and did not return to Baltimore.

Red Sox 6, White Sox 1

Dwight Evans' grand slam and a two-run homer by Nick Esasky powered Mike Smithson and the Boston Red Sox to a victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Evans' homer, his 10th, was the Red Sox' first in seven games. He connected in the third inning off Melido Perez, 3-9, after the Red Sox had loaded the bases on a walk, a hit batsman and an infield single by Mike Greenwell.

It was Evans' second bases-loaded homer of the season and fifth lifetime. He had a grand slam against Oakland on May 19.

In the fifth, Wade Boggs doubled and Esasky hit his 10th homer two outs later to chase Perez, whose ERA increased to 6.56.

Smithson, 3-4, picked up his first victory since May 25 when he blanked Seattle 10-0. Smithson gave up four hits, walked three and struck out three in the seven innings. Rob Murphy closed.

Chicago's only run came in the second on Greg Walker's second homer.

Indians 4, Royals 3

Joe Carter homered and singled to drive in a season-high four runs and Scott Bailes won in his first start of the season as the Cleveland Indians beat the Kansas City Royals.

The left-handed Bailes, 2-2, worked eight innings, allowing three runs on six hits in his first win as a starter since last August. Doug Jones pitched the ninth for his 15th save in 18 opportunities.

Bailes walked one, struck out two and did not allow a runner past first after the second inning. He had 16 relief appearances this year before bumping Rich Yett from the Indians' starting rotation. Yett's ERA has climbed to 5.19.

Bailes lost his last four decisions as a starter last year.

Mark Gubicza, 6-5, took the loss, his first since May 21 and the Royals' third in 10 games.

Twins 7, Brewers 3

Gary Gaetti had four RBIs and the Minnesota Twins broke a tie with four runs in the eighth inning to beat Milwaukee, their first win in seven games against the Brewers.

Pinch-hitter Jim Dwyer singled with one out in the eighth against reliever Mark Knudson, 2-2, took second on Al Newman's single and scored on a single by Dan Gladden to make it 4-3.

Gaetti followed with a sacrifice fly and Gene Larkin and Carmen Castillo capped the rally with RBI singles.

Toughest league? Still hard to say

By MURRAY CHASS
New York Times News Service

Whenever a player who has struggled in the National League goes to the American League and performs well, National League chauvinists, who have a superiority complex, immediately cite the experience as further evidence of their claim that their league is better.

They behave similarly when a good American League player switches leagues and plays poorly.

Their view would seem to fit in the case of Eddie Murray, wouldn't it? Murray, for years one of the most productive hitters in the American League, is a National League rookie and hittingly meekly.

But what about Murray's teammate, Mike Morgan? After failing with five American League teams, the right-handed pitcher has gone to work for the Los Angeles Dodgers and has the lowest earned run average among National League starting pitchers.

In reality, league chauvinism aside, the early results of the movement of players between leagues this year are inconclusive. Morgan's improvement has been one of the most interesting developments among players faring well, while the unproductive hitting of Murray and Jack Clark has been an unexpected development among players not performing so well.

The Dodgers' acquisition of Murray was viewed as a liberation for the slugging first baseman. Getting away from Baltimore and going home, it was believed, would resuscitate Murray's desire and lead to a prodigious year.

In his first 27 games, Murray fulfilled that expectation, hitting .307 with 4 home runs and 18 runs batted in. From May 3 through Friday night, however, Murray had batted only .168 with 2 home runs and 19 RBI in 38 games.

He took hitting stretches of 1 for 25 and 4 for 44 into the Dodgers' weekend series with Atlanta.

Playing in the National League has not been a new experience for Clark because he was away from the league only last season. His return has not been smooth.

The last time he was in the league, Clark had an outstanding season, batting .286, hitting 35 home runs and driving in 106 runs for the St. Louis Cardinals.

He struck out 139 times, or once every three times at bat, but he hit one home run for every four strikeouts and drove in a run for every 1.3 strikeouts.

With the San Diego Padres counting on him to produce a multitude of runs this season, Clark has struck out a multitude of times: 77 entering the weekend. His ratios were one strikeout for every 2.6 times at bat, 1 home run for every 11 strikeouts and 1 RBI for every 2.3 strikeouts, clearly not comparable to his 1987 figures. He had a .221 batting average, 7 home runs and 33 RBI.

Willie Randolph was Clark's teammate with the New York Yankees last year, and now he plays for a division rival, the Dodgers.

In the first four weeks, the Dodgers had to wonder if the Yankees knew something when they opted not to re-sign Randolph. Their new second baseman, in his first 25 games, was hitting .211 and, though healthy, resembling the injured Randolph who batted a career-low .230 last year.

But in his last 40 games before Saturday night, Randolph had hit .336, raising his average to .287. That seven-week surge has catapulted Randolph closer to the range in which Steve Sax has been hitting. Sax in effect swapped jobs with Randolph and has had no difficulty adjusting to American League pitchers.

Sax has been hitting consistently between .300 and .310, and was at .304. He had driven in 23 runs and scored 35 runs. Randolph had knocked in 17 and scored 32.

Rafael Palmeiro had the highest average among players who changed leagues. After hitting .307 for the Chicago Cubs last season, he was hitting .325 for the Texas Rangers.

Morgan, who followed Murray from Baltimore to Los Angeles in an ensuing trade, has only a 5-4 record, but he leads the National League with a 1.59 ERA.

He has never finished a major league season lower than 4.37 (with the Yankees in 1982), and his career ERA coming into this season was 4.89 with a 34-68 record.

Nolan Ryan, on the other hand, is doing in his return to the American League the things he has done in both leagues: pitching low-hit games and striking out batters at a league-leading pace.

He has an 8-3 record with Texas, has pitched two one-hitters (plus eight innings of a third) and leads the league in strikeouts with 107.

Another pitcher, John Dopson of Boston, has found life in the American League the reverse of his experience he had as a rookie in the National League last year.

With Montreal he had a poor record, 3-11, but a good ERA, 3.04. With Boston, he has a 6-4 record and a 3.97 ERA.

Bruce Hurst, moving from Boston to San Diego, has the same ERA, 3.66, but a 5-5 record compared with 18-6 last year. Walt Terrell, who joined Hurst in San Diego, is proceeding at about the same pace (4-8, 3.92) as he followed in Detroit (7-16, 3.97).

Andy Hawkins, who left San Diego for the Yankees, has not pitched as well. He has a 7-7 record and a 5.07 ERA. compared with his 1988 record of 14-11 and 3.35.

Florida man sues Mike Tyson

BINGHAMTON, N.Y. (AP) — Mike Tyson is being sued for $200,000 by a Florida man who claims he was struck and pushed by the heavyweight boxing champ outside an upstate New York bar last year.

John Copeland of Winter Haven, Fla., alleges in the lawsuit that he sustained "physical trauma to his arms and body, severe brusies to his back and emotional distress."

The son of the bar's owner told the Albany Times Union a different story in an account published Saturday.

"Mike kind of pushed the guy on the back," said Jacob Walthour Jr., whose father owns the Savoias bar in Hudson, where the incident allegedly occurred July 23, 1988. "It was a kind of push like you're saying, 'Hi, how you doing buddy.' He (Copeland) kept saying, 'I can take your best punch. I can take your best punch.'"

Copeland seeks compensatory damages in the lawsuit filed May 8 for negligence and punitive damages for assault and battery. Each of the actions is for $100,000 plus interest from the date of the incident.

Neither Tyson's lawyers nor Copeland's would comment, the newspaper reported.

KITE

That is, half the field started on the first hole and half on the 10th, and the players went off in threesomes instead of the traditional twosomes the U.S. Golf Association prefers for the third and fourth rounds of the Open.

Strange, who missed the Open and major tournament one-round record by a stroke Friday when he shot 64 to take the lead, was no longer the sole leader at the turn of the third round.

He and Kite, playing in the final threesome off the first tee, and Blake, playing just ahead of them, were deadlocked for the front spot at three under par for the 45 holes they had completed.

Strange was still the lead man after eight holes this afternoon, but he had one of his few poor drives on the ninth tee and went into the deep rough right of the fairway. From there he could only hit to a spot just short of the green. He chipped to 5 feet, but missed the par putt.

As Strange was getting his bogey 5, Kite reached the green in two, leaving him a very long birdie putt. The Texan sank that 40-footer to get even with Strange at the turn.

Blake, who started the day at three under, had a birdie at the par-3 sixth hole. This made up for one bogey on the front nine, at No. 5.

Blake nearly got a hole-in-one at the sixth, where four players — Doug Weaver, Mark Wiebe, Jerry Pate and Nick Price — had aces Friday. Blake's tee shot today sent his ball over the pin, and it spun back to about 6 inches of the cup for the easy birdie tap-in.

The 30-year-old Blake, who has not won in his three years on the professional tour, then rolled in a 30-foot birdie putt on the 10th hole to go to four under for the tournament.

Just then, another heavy rain shower started over the course, which could not tolerate much more water before becoming unplayable again.

Moments later, with the rain coming down hard, Kite rolled in a long birdie putt from the fringe of the 10th green and also went to four under. When Strange parred the hole, the defending champion was out of the lead for the first time since taking over the top spot early in the second round.

Kite and Blake were then the coleaders, with Strange a shot back and Scott Simpson, the third man in the final group, another stroke behind.

But up ahead, Nelson was making a move. He played the first 15 holes of the course in three under to get to two under par for the tournament. That was where Simpson was through the 10th hole.

Mark McCumber had been in contention for a while only to hit his second shot at No. 5 into water. He saved a bogey, but then slipped another shot with a bogey at the ninth. But he also birdied the 10th with a deadly approach shot and a short putt.

Well before the rain began, Seve Ballesteros finished his round at six-over 76 Saturday to be at 11-over 221. Out of the championship battle, the Spaniard will finish here Sunday and then turn his sights on next month's British Open at Royal Troon, where he will be the defending champion.

Rain wrecking Rochester links

By RANDOLPH PICHT

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — It was so wet at the U.S. Open Saturday that tournament officials had to call in the fire department for help.

A deluge late Friday night and early Saturday of about an inch and a half of rain left the Oak Hill Country Club East course looking like a swamp when golfers showed up for the third round.

"I've never seen a course as damaged as ... this one," said P.J. Boatwright, the United States Golf Association official in charge of determining whether the course could be played.

Fairways were filled with puddles, bunkers looked like mud holes and the squishy turf prompted the temporary renaming of the country club to "Soak Hill."

Ducks swam in casual water and the seventh and eighth fairways became a flood plain as Allen's Creek poured over its banks.

The overflowing creek, which winds throughout the course, created all of the problems, said course superintendent Joe Hahn. The water that usually runs off the course through drainage culverts had no where to go and began collecting all over the layout.

The fire fighters were called in and they pumped about 1,000 gallons of water a minute from the creek for about three hours and carried two large portable pumps to various fairways to clear water.

"We've brought the creek down about two feet I'd say," Brighton Fire Department Chief Jay Jeffries said. "We've here every day for emergencies and I guess this is one."

A crew of about 75 people working with pumps, squeegies, rakes and rubber rollers since 5 a.m. managed to remove a great deal of water and restore the course to a playable condition.

"We removed oodles and oodles of water. It's amazing the kind of the work the crews have done," said Hahn.

Workers have doing an amazing job all week since it rained for the past six days.

"The players will have a good quality surface to hit off. They might get their feet a little wet, and run into some casual water, but that's about it," he said.

Deluged New York stifles Mets, Yanks

By RONALD BLUM

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball in New York is all wet this year. And it's not just the mediocre records of the Mets and the Yankees.

On Thursday night, the Mets played until 1:24 in the morning. On Friday night, the Yankees played until 1:29 a.m. Saturday. The Mets, however, were not to be outdone. They went to Philadelphia and played until 1:58 a.m.

No, they weren't trying for extra-inning records. They were just trying to get games in between the rain. The Yankees swept Texas 8-3, 6-1 in a twi-night doubleheader that lasted 8 hours, 52 minutes with three rain delays.

The Mets, who took 5:14 to beat the Cubs 4-3 in 12 innings Thursday night with two delays, beat Philadelphia 15-11 in 6:23 Friday night, including three delays.

THE YANKEES have had six home rainouts and the Mets three. In New York, it rained 14 of the first 17 days of June. Since May 1, it's rained on 31 of 48 days.

"It effects everybody," Yankees Manager Dallas Green said. "Everybody comes to the ballpark looking blah and feeling blah."

Mets Manager Davey Johnson could hardly get the words out of his mouth after his second straight marathon.

"I feel brain dead," he said. "I woke up sick this morning."

He even missed the start of Friday's game.

"I was sleeping in my office," he said. "I didn't get home until after 3 a.m. Friday morning."

GENE KELLY — who not only sang but danced in the rain — would have been more at home in Yankee Stadium's center field than Roberto Kelly. The first game began at 4:37 and ended at 7:37. The second game, scheduled to start at 8:05, began at 8:38 because of a short shower. It stopped at 8:54, restarted at 9:37, restopped at 11:02 and restarted at 12:37.

The field at Yankee Stadium was no field of dreams.

"The conditions were terrible," said loser Kevin Brown, 5-4, who gave up nine hits and four runs in 5 2-3 innings of the second game. "I pitched the whole time with my shoes full of mud. But I wasn't the only one who had to pitch like that. Everybody had to pitch on the same mound and play on the same field."

JIMMY JONES, 2-1, allowed three hits over six innings and left after the second delay.

"I just came in here and tried to keep moving around," Jones said in the clubhouse, talking about the 43-minute delay in the first inning. "They said it would stop raining in an hour or so, so I knew I would probably be at it again."

The Yankees, who had 12 hits in the first game, also had 12 in the second. Jesse Barfield, who had three hits, hit a two-run single in the first and Brown threw a wild pitch with a runner on third in the second to make it 3-0. Kelly singled in a run in the sixth on the first pitch after the third delay, Don Mattingly hit his seventh home run off Drew Hall in the seventh and Steve Sax singled in a run in the eighth.

RAFAEL PALMEIRO homered in the fourth for Texas, his first in 37 games since May 4, also against New York.

"You struggle to get you're adrenaline and then all of a sudden you have to turn it off," Rangers pitching coach Tom House said. "And an hour later you have to turn it back on again with the thought in your mind that you might have to turn it off again."

For a change, an NBA season that didn't last long enough

By JOHN MAHER
Cox News Service

■ Kareem's Retirement, Page 7C

What irony. We've just seen an NBA season that was too short.

No league takes more knocks for the length of its season than the NBA, and most of the criticism is deserved. The NBA has become the league for all seasons. Play begins in fall and the playoffs can nudge into the first days of summer.

But now Kareem Abdul-Jabbar has played his last game and the fans in Detroit are waving brooms. And we still have one whole week of spring left, a week to ponder what the NBA finals could have been.

The Detroit Pistons' sweep of the Los Angeles Lakers has to be the most disappointing sporting event since Michael Spinks stuck his skinny neck into the ring against Mike Tyson.

THE SPINKS-TYSON fight lasted just about as long as this final, which was over almost before it began. When Byron Scott came down off balance in practice and clutched at his hamstring, the Lakers were on the ropes.

When Magic Johnson had the same bad feeling in his leg in the second game of the series, it was time to count the Lakers out.

Before the Lakers were hamstrung, the prediction here was that the Pistons would end up beating the defending champs in seven games and that the series would be so close it would come down to the contributions of the new players for each team, Mark Aguirre and Orlando Woolridge.

Aguirre, the former Dallas Maverick malcontent, was very visible in crunch time of the fourth and final game. The TV cameras found him on the bench right next to Fennis Dembo (remember him?) shouting, "Twenty-eight seconds!" as the clock ticked down.

The Pistons never were pushed hard enough to need Aguirre's post-up moves or his three-point shots. Guard Joe Dumars gave the Pistons all the points they needed and then some.

DUMARS AND his teammates don't deserve an asterisk by their title. The Pistons have been a championship-caliber team for three seasons now, and they know all too well how injuries, bad breaks and curious calls in Boston Garden can end a season.

As for the Lakers, they had to play like champions just to keep the games close. The loss of their scoring guard hurt them not so much because of who Scott is, but because of who he is not, which is former CBA'er Tony Campbell or Jeff Lamp.

The Lakers are that threadbare at guard because of the aging of Abdul-Jabbar and the tendency of power forward A.C. Green to get outmuscled in big games. That's why the Lakers had to stock their eight-man rotation with backup big men like Mychal Thompson and Woolridge.

With that roster, the three players the Lakers can't afford to lose are small forward James Worthy, Scott and Magic.

ABDUL-JABBAR said trying to replace Johnson was like letting a couple of bus drivers try to handle a race car. The Lakers without Magic are a lot like the Celtics without Larry Bird, pretty ordinary.

It's not surprising the games were also pretty mundane. Normally, getting to watch Magic in the playoffs makes the whole 82-game NBA schedule worthwhile. During the regular season he orchestrates the Lakers' Showtime. But when he's pushed in the playoffs is when a basketball fan gets to see something special.

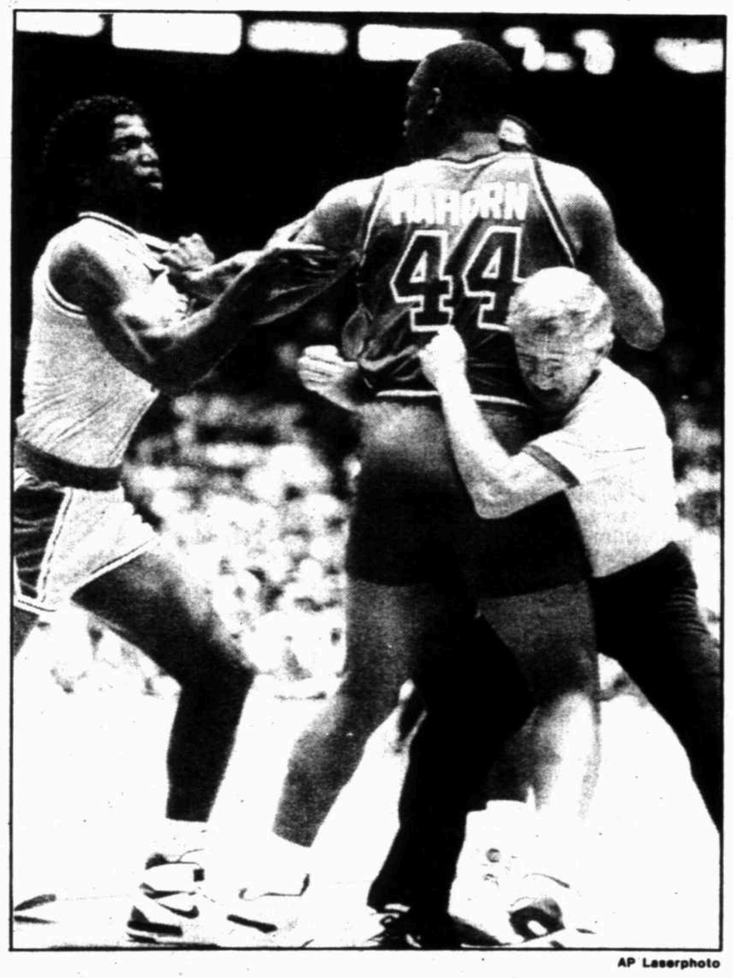

Lakers Coach Pat Riley has called Magic a coach on the floor, and that doesn't even do justice to how he can lift his game.

In Magic's rookie year Abdul-Jabbar couldn't play in the sixth game of finals against Philadelphia. That's when the Lakers point guard mentioned that he used to play some center in high school. He then went out and scored 42 points and grabbed 15 rebounds in a winning cause.

LAST YEAR, in the Western Conference finals, the Lakers couldn't keep the Dallas Mavericks' 7-foot power forward, Roy Tarpley, off the boards. So, in the crucial seventh game, Magic took on the chore of boxing out Tarpley.

This year we didn't get to see Magic adjust to the Pistons. And we never really got to see two of the NBA's best coaches, Riley and Chuck Daly, match wits and moves over a seven-game series.

It's wait until next year, I guess. At least in the NBA, next year is never more than a few months away.

AP Laserphoto

Realizing that the Lakers' season was about to end too soon, Los Angeles gurad A.C. Green had to be pulled away from Detroit's Rick Mahorn by referee Jess Kersey in the fourth game of the NBA Finals last Tuesday.

Charles takes one shot lead

Associated Press

JERICHO, N.Y. (AP) — Bob Charles, the leading money-winner on the PGA Senior Tour, sank a 27-foot putt on the final hole to take a one-shot lead after Saturday's second round of the flood-shortened Northville Long Island Classic.

For the second straight day, golfers played 16 holes instead of 18 because the ninth and 14th holes of the par-72, 6,595-yard Meadow Brook Club were flooded.

"We hope to go back to a full round Sunday," said Bryant Henning, tournament director of the PGA Senior Tour. "It all depends if the holes dry out and if the weatherman cooperates."

King's 69 good for LPGA lead

Associated Press

HERSHEY, Pa. (AP) — Betsy King shot her second straight 3-under-par 69 Saturday to tie Ok-Hee Ku for the second-round lead at the LPGA's Lady Keystone Open.

Ku shot a 70 and was even with King at 6-under-par 138. Liselotte Neumann was one shot back, while Pat Bradley and Laura Davies were next at 140.

Patty Sheehan, Marta Figueras-Dotti, Danielle Ammaccapane, Beth Daniel and Miki Cheng were all at 141. Missie Berteotti, who shot a 66 for the first round lead, had a 76 Saturday and fell back to even-par 142 heading into Sunday's final round.

King, the No. 2 money-winner on the LPGA Tour this year, had three birdies in her bogey-free round. If she wins the $45,000 first-place prize, she'll move past Nancy Lopez and the No. 1 spot on the LPGA money list. Lopez is taking the week off.

TYRONE— As applause fades, Kareem reflects

"I signed a (free agent) contract with the Cowboys the day after the draft," says Thurman. "Prior to the draft, Dave Shula, one of the Cowboys' new coaches, worked me out at Tech. I also had a workout with Coach Johnson and two other coaches."

And what does Thurman think of his chances of becoming a part of the NFL?

"I think I have a good chance," notes Thurman. "I don't know what is going through the mind of Coach Johnson, but he might be thinking of making K-Mart (Kelvin Martin) a receiver and that would open a spot for me as the return man. What is key for me, however, is to execute and work hard every day at the things I know I can do."

Thurman's options, however, are not closed if he doesn't make it with the Cowboys.

"If things don't work out with Dallas, I'll probably go to the Canadian Football League," he said. "The Ottawa Roughriders wanted me to sign even before the NFL draft, but the NFL has always been a dream of mine and I have to take this shot.

"Also, if the Cowboys release me, I'm free to tryout with any other NFL team. We'll just see what happens. But right now, I'm trying to make it with the Dallas Cowboys and that's where my energy is going."

Thurman will be given a special day by the Midland Jaycees on June 30 with a noon meal at the Midland Center. Tickets are $6 and proceeds will benefit the Midland Boys Club at the request of Thurman. He has spent a lot of time talking with Midland youth, most recently speaking at the "Step Up to Success" youth conference, sponsored by the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

It's been a whirlwind school year for Thurman at Tech, becoming an All-America choice in football and then playing basketball for the Red Raiders through the winter. Again, not many 5-3¾ kids are asked to play college basketball. In fact, word was out that Thurman was asked to play baskeball for promotional reasons only. Thurman says that isn't true.

"I played basketball in high school and started," said Thurman. "I always wanted to play basketball at Tech, but I was concentrating on football. But after my senior season in football, I had a chance to try basketball.

"I felt I could add some quickness to the team and I told Coach (Gerald) Myers that I was willing to play any role if he felt he could use me. I felt I helped the team out. It was an experience I wanted. It was a lot different than football, but I enjoyed it."

All of the activity has left Thurman a little short of graduating, needing a semester and a summer term to finish for a degree in advertising.

"It might take me a while, but I going to get that degree if it takes me 10 years," said Thurman. "I'm not that far away and I try to stress to the kids that an education is important."

Making the All-America team was special to Thurman.

"It was a big surprise for me," he said. "I felt I might have a shot if I set the national punt return record, but I fell short.

"But when I came back from a Tech basketball road trip, there was a message on my answering machine that Coach Dykes had something to tell me. He told me I was on the first team and they wanted me to appear on the Bob Hope TV special. The first thing I did was call my mother and she was estatic. You know how she is."

Of course, Vivian Thurman, Tyrone's mother, is one of the all time great Lee cheerleaders. She can stir a crowd almost as well as her son. And she did a good job of it with both Tyrone and younger son, Kirk, who both played for the Rebels.

Just mention Lee football to Thurman and his eyes still seem to sparkle.

"I will always remember playing football at Lee as the most exciting time ever for me. It was something great to be on the first teams that created the New Tradition. Those guys are still in the playoffs every year and we started that in 1983.

"It was a thrill in 1983 to be the first team to beat Odessa Permian twice in the same year and go on to the state finals. But I have to say that 1984 was more special to me as an individual.

"We didn't go as far in the playoffs, and we lost to Permian in the quarterfinals by one point (15-14), but that was the year that I gained 1,000 yards rushing and that was a goal of mine. I also set the Lee record of 25 touchdowns in a single season."

The narrow loss to Permian in the 1984 quarterfinals at Texas Tech's Jones Stadium before more than 30,000 fans is still a bittersweet memory for Thurman. In that game, Thurman returned a kickoff for a touchdown, only to have it called back by an official, who said Thurman stepped out of bounds.

"I never touched the line. It should have been a TD," Thurman claims to this day.

It seems that someone is always telling Thurman, "You can't!"

By SAM GOLDAPER
New York Times News Service

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — It was the first day of his retirement and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar was back in the Forum. Sitting amid the empty seats, his long legs stretched out into an aisle, he was serene in serene surroundings.

Some 15 hours earlier, it had been quite different as the arena was packed to its 17,505 capacity. Ordinary fans and movie and television stars alike had been there, hoping the Lakers might extend the National Basketball Association championship series against the Detroit Pistons to a fifth game.

When they saw it was not to be, they turned their attention to Abdul-Jabbar and sent the man into retirement with a long standing ovation.

In an interview that was occasionally interrupted by teammates coming to say their goodbyes, Abdul-Jabbar — Cap to his teammates — reflected on his past, present and future.

"I've had a wonderful career," he said of his 20 seasons in the NBA four longer than anyone else. "No regrets. It couldn't have been better.

"I can recall growing up in New York and hoping that some day I might be able to play one pro season with all those great players. I outlasted everyone.

"If I have any regrets at all, it's the disappointment that it was such a short series. I wish it could have gone longer, perhaps all seven games."

From the time Abdul-Jabbar, then known as Lew Alcindor, played his first NBA game in 1969 with the Milwaukee Bucks, through last Tuesday night, he appeared in 1,815 NBA games, counting regular season, playoff and All-Star Games, and scored 37,639 regular season points and 44,149 overall.

Abdul-Jabbar, 42, clearly recalled many of those games and points, but primarily those that came in his 18 season playoffs. When the interviewer was unable to remember Abdul-Jabbar's first game, he quickly answered, "Against the Detroit Pistons," and he smiled at the fact that his pro career began and ended against the same team.

That first game was on Oct. 18, 1969, in the Milwaukee Arena, and his much anticipated debut caused quite a stir. Normally, ABC, which had the contract to telecast NBA games, would not begin coverage until January.

But the arrival of Abdul-Jabbar, college player of the year for three successive seasons at UCLA, was reason enough to juggle its schedule and broadcast the game.

The 7-foot-2 Abdul-Jabbar won the opening tap against Walt Bellamy, and 18 seconds later, he scored his first field goal as a pro. Playing the entire 48 minutes, he had 29 points, 12 rebounds and 6 assists. Abdul-Jabbar did not recall details of that game, but he did remember "we won, and that is always the big thing."

Would he name some of his greatest basketball moments?

As he pondered, Orlando Woolridge, carrying his son, Zachary, stopped to say goodbye.

After some moments playing with the child, Abdul-Jabbar said: "Gee, there have been so many, but the 1985 championship series against the Boston Celtics has to top them all. We beat the Celtics easily.

"You always remember important things like that. The victory brought the entire city of Los Angeles together. Boston had never lost a game in the championship round before on their home court."

Abdul-Jabbar likened that victory to the Brooklyn Dodgers' 1955 World Series success over the Yankees, just as he had done on June 9, 1985, after the Lakers defeated the Celtics, 111-100, to clinch the series, 4 games to 2.

Abdul-Jabbar, who doesn't really like to talk about his individual feats, was asked about the night he broke Wilt Chamberlain's career scoring record of 31,419 points.

"It will be something that I will always cherish," he said; "but the only scoring record I'm really proud of is the one I hold for the most points in the playoffs. That's really the only time points matter because there is a championship at stake. I think that record will stand forever."

In the record 18 seasons that he appeared in the playoffs, Abdul-Jabbar scored 5,762 points, an average of 24.3 points a game.

But more than the records and the victories, Abdul-Jabbar savored the memory of what took place Tuesday behind the doors of the Laker dressing room.

No sooner had he removed his Laker uniform for the last time than his teammates claimed it. Coach Pat Riley took the jersey; Byron Scott, the 16-D basketball shoes; Magic Johnson, the warm-up jacket, and Josh Rosenfeld, the Lakers' publicity director, the pants.

"It was a warm feeling when your coach and teammates want pieces of your uniform to remember you by," Abdul-Jabbar said. "They won't forget me and I won't forget them. We'll stay in touch."

Although Abdul-Jabbar said he was not interested in coaching, he is not yet through with the game. On July 20, he will join a group of former NBA stars who will play games in Australia and Taiwan. His plans for the future include resuming his acting career.

As Abdul-Jabbar was leaving the Forum, Johnson, who had just embraced him with a goodbye, said: "That's not a good way for him to go out."

Mats Sundin, left, celebrates with Quebec head scout Pierre Gauthier, after becoming the NHL's No. 1 pick Saturday.

Swede chosen first in NHL draft

By MIKE NADEL

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Take all the great Swedes who have ever played in the NHL. Borje Salming. Mats Naslund. Hakan Loob. Pelle Lindbergh. Bengt Gustafsson. Tomas Sandstrom.

None ever accomplished what Mats Sundin did.

Sundin so impressed the Quebec Nordiques during his first year in Sweden's senior First Division that they made him the first European ever chosen No. 1 in the NHL draft on Saturday.

"We firmly believe he is the most talented and gifted athlete of the entire draft," Pierre Gauthier, Quebec's head scout said. "His personality and his character led us to invest in that player for the future of our organization. He will get our fans excited when he (joins) the NHL as a Nordique."

When? That is the question.

Sundin must serve a military commitment of up to 15 months and will probably spend he next two years playing for an Elite League team in Djurgardens.

"We just couldn't let the opportunity to pick such a good player pass by," Gauthier said.

Indians' Old-Timers down Equitable, 3-2

Associated Press

"Super Joe" Charboneau singled in John "Boog" Powell with the winning run with two outs in the bottom of the third inning to give the Indians Oldtimers a 3-2 victory over the Equitable All-Star Oldtimers Saturday. The three-inning game matched former Indians against other ex-major leaguers in an "All Nickname" contest before the game between the current Cleveland Indians and Kansas City Royals. Bill "Spaceman" Lee drove in both runs for the Equitable all-stars with a second inning triple.

Mavs raise ticket prices 17 percent

Associated Press

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Mavericks announced their top ticket will be increased to $34 next fall, a 17 percent hike from the $29.16 it cost this past season to the best seats in 17,007-seat Reunion Arena.

It's the second ticket hike in as many years. Two years ago the same seat in the lower deck along the baseline and sidelines was $25.74.

Ticket prices in eight of 10 other sections also were raised, including an increase of $5.50 to $26.50 for the second most expensive seats — center court seats above the railing. Those seats were raised last year by 62 cents to $21.

Seats in the corners and ends of the lower deck were raised by $3 to $20 and $17. Four other sections, all in the upper deck, were raised $2 apiece and now range from $9 to $16.

The only seats whose price will remain the same are the last 13 rows in the end zone of the upper deck. Those tickets will stay $5.

Last season, for the fourth straight year, the Mavericks averaged better than 99 percent capacity. Their average of 16,953 per game was eighth in overall attendance; the top seven teams all played in larger arenas.

Giants, Phils talk

Associated Press

The Phillies are talking to San Francisco about a deal that would involve reliever Steve Bedrosian.

"It's up to them," said Giants GM Al Rosen, confirming that he has had talks with the Phillies management for the right-handed Bedrosian, who has only nine save opportunities with last place Philadelphia. According to the proposed swap, the Phillies want three prospects in return and allegedly have a choice among four left-handed pitchers: Trevor Wilson, Mike Remlinger, Terry Mulholland and Dennis Cook.

FEMALE PERSONAL ADS
The following ads have been placed by females looking to meet males.

CAUCASIAN college student, 22, looking for a fun, new friend and possible relationship. I'm 5'2", have brown hair and eyes. I love music, from classical to rock, and especially jazz. I enjoy sports and physical activity. I'm a movie buff, and love both old and new movies. Would like to find male, 20-25, with similar interests and high moral standards. (MP-634)

I'M looking for Mr. Right. I'm Hispanic, nice looking and tall. I have brown eyes and long brown hair. I like dancing, movies, traveling, camping and quiet evenings at home. I have good morals, good manners, and easy going. Please reply with letter of interests and phone number. All replies will be answered. (MP-638)

ADVENTUROUS, well-educated, independent, outdoorsey, right brain, attractive blonde, 30+, interested and interesting, avid reader, loves rain, humor, and most things in moderation, prospecting for a brain oriented good man who simply wants to enjoy life and share a few dreams with no hassels. I'm tired of drunks, bore, religious nuts, slugs and couch potatoes. Whatever happened to romance? (MP-639)

BEAUTIFUL, 5'6", 120 lbs, 29 year old, divorced, mother of 2. Enjoy bowling, dining out, movies, etc., very flexible, nice person. Looking for friendship with nice young men between the ages of 29-35. All replies will answered. "Color blind" and race not important. Please respond with phone number. (MP-642)

I'M a 35 year old female looking for the rugged cowboy type over 6' tall and sturdy build. Must be honest and sincere and know how to treat a lady. (MP-640)

I'M a Caucasian female too shy to meet people face to face initially. I'm 42, 5'6", single and interested in meeting a Hispanic or Caucasian male 42-55 who prefers a low-paced life-style. Physical attributes are not as important to me as honesty, sincerity and compatibility. If these things are important to you also, I will be glad to answer all your queries. (MP-633)

ATTRACTIVE 35 single Caucasian female seeking romantic intelligent adventurous male companion. Age is no concern. Please include phone number and interests. Hobbies include cooking, sewing and traveling. I'm also a pet lover. (MP-647)

HI, I'm looking for that special man 45+ who loves to travel, watch football, dance, play card games, or go out to breakfast on Saturday morning. Please let me hear from you and let's have a cup of coffee. OK! (MP-650)

I'M 24 years old, fairly attractive, non-smoker, non-drug user, church-going young woman. I'm looking for someone to have a nice time with. I like to listen to music, movies, take quiet walks in the rain. I love being spoiled. If you love spoiling a lady, please reply. Men ages 24-34 need only to reply (MP-659)

DIVORCED Caucasian female, 34, 5'2", 189 (dieting), green eyes, attractive, buxom, sincere, honest, one child, varied interests, flexible, outgoing, is seeking an educated, mature gentleman, any age. Please have sense of humor, enjoy family activities and want a possible lasting relationship. Reply soon, I could be your prayer answered. (MP-660)

I'M a 22 year old Caucasian female with light brown hair, non-smoker and non-drug user. I enjoy an evening out on the town as well as quiet evenings at home together. I would like to meet someone with whom I could have fun with and maybe more. I will answer all letters. Please write. (MP-657)

HARDWORKING, attractive 45 year old, 5'9", single Caucasian female, non-smoker, seeking relationship with someone who is tired of games and the bars. I like to do almost anything two people care to do, have a good sense of humor, outgoing personality, love to travel or stay at home. Looking for someone 35-55 to relax with, talk to and have fun with. (MP-666)

I'M 22 years old attractive, female, 5'4", 110 lbs., with long black hair and brown eyes. Who enjoys rock music, outdoor sports, playing pool, an occasional happy hour and quiet home life. Would like to meet a sincere Caucasian man 25-32 years old. Fly-by-nights, please don't bother responding. (MP-645)

PROFESSIONAL Caucasian lady, early 50's, non-smoker, social drinker, non-drug user. I enjoy C/W dancing, snow skiing, water sports, walking, table games (cards, dominoes, etc.) and love to travel. I love candlelight dinners, fireplaces and affectionate people. Seeking a companion with common interests to share good times with. If we should be compatible, I will look forward to hearing from you. (MP-652)

SOMEWHERE out there must be a neat Caucasian male in his 50's, non-smoker, non-drinker, who would like the companionship of a 5'4" lady who hasn't been dating anyone, likes nice things, is neat, clean and loves the mountains. (MP-664)

24 YEAR old, 5'6", 135 lbs., brown hair & eyes, divorced mother with children - looking for college educated, professional, Caucasian male, 26-30, social drinker and smoker okay. No drug users please. Enjoy simple pleasures: movies, comedians, dancing, music, lightening, thunder & rain when you can get it - In-depth conversation & debatable issues for mind, and jogging. (MP-658)

The PRICE is RIGHT

A mirrored wall in the dining room reflects the elegant appointments in the formal dining room.

In many instances, the asking price of a house determines whether or not a prospective homeowner will even view a specific property. The floor plan, amenities and neighborhood are important considerations when purchasing a new home, but the affordability of a home is the determining factor.

Due to an adaptable floor plan and attractive decor, many homeowners would delight in owning this three-bedroom, contemporary style home. This week's featured home is located in the Saddle Club South subdivision and because of the price, $115,00, it is a perfect way to move up into this prestigious family orientated neighborhood.

A PRIVATE courtyard that is highlighted by beautifully maintained flower beds welcomes friends into this home. A Mexican tile foyer is decorated with pale peach walls and is brightened by two plantation shuttered windows and a skylight.

The foyer flows into the main living area. A fireplace is situated along one wall with inset bookcases on both sides. Two windows in this wall overlook the backyard. Even the most difficult variety of houseplants will thrive in an area by the window in the left end of this room. A skylight in the vaulted beamed ceiling provides additional sunlight. Two doors open to reveal a wet bar that is conveniently located in the right corner of the room. The bar has mirrored walls and glass shelves.

The formal dining room can be viewed from the foyer through a glass wall and is separated from the living area by a Mexican tile walkway. A mirrored wall reflects the elegant decor — plantation shutters windows that are draped with a floral fabric and a beautifully carved dining table. The windows provide guests a wonderful view of the intimate front courtyard.

Shades of blue in a petite print adorn the walls of the functional kitchen which is separated from the living area by a large breakfast bar. The over-sized bar is ideal for serving informal meals to family members and can easily accommodate five stools. The General Electric appliances include a microwave, self-cleaning oven and dishwasher. Other appliances include a Roper cooktop and a Compactall trash compactor.

The sequestered master bedroom is located next to the kitchen and dining room. Pale peach walls compliment the Southwestern fabric that is used throughout this room. A sliding glass door leads to a private patio where couples can enjoy a morning cup of coffee together. A window in this room also provides a view of the front courtyard.

Two separate marble vanity provide a unique design in the master bath. A window in the bath views the side courtyard. The bath also has a built-in shower and gold fixtures. The walk-in closet has built-in shelves and is large enough to accommodate the storage of a 10 speed bicycle.

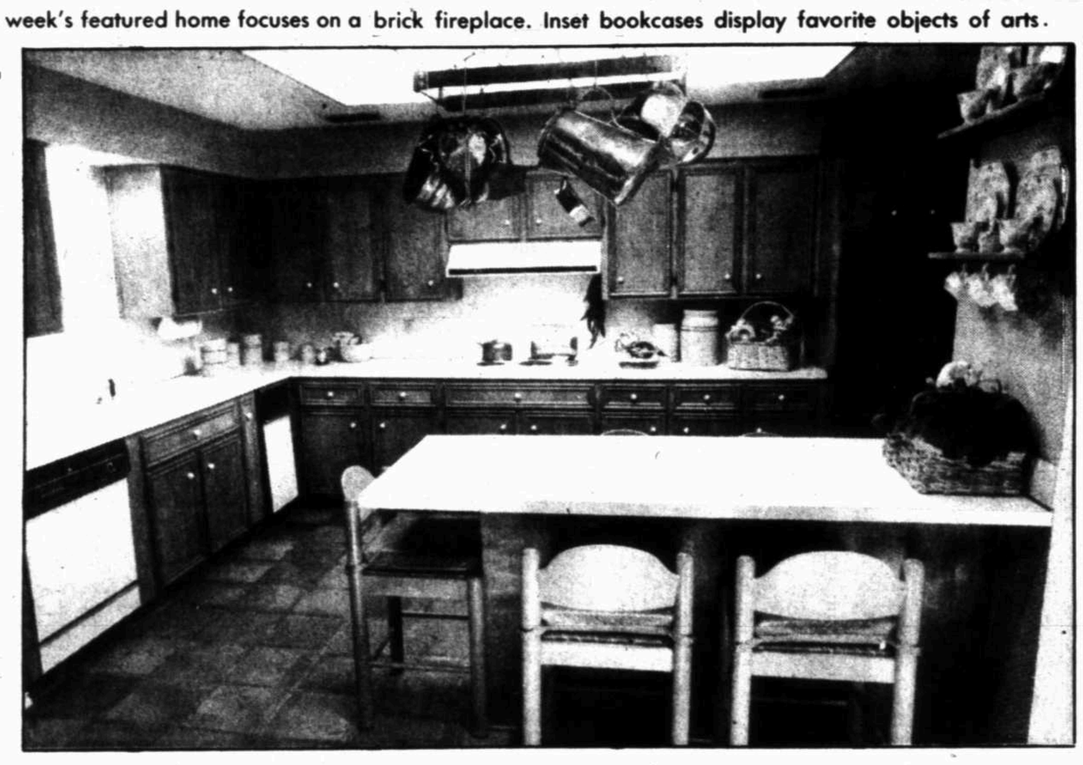

Also located at this end of the home is the utility room and garage. The utility room has a wall of built-in cabinets with a sink and a spacious area for hanging clothes. The rear entry, two-car garage has automatic door openers and a work shop area.

To the right of the foyer, a hall leads to the children's wing of the home. The first bedroom has two walk-in closets with a built-in bookcase in the middle. Two windows brighten this bedroom.

A wall of built-in cabinets, with many drawers and shelves, highlights the second bedroom. A large walk-in closets provides additional storage space and features built-in shelves.

The other amenities of this 10-year-old home are a low-maintenance yard with a sprinkler system, ceiling fans and skylights. Saddle Club South residents will also enjoy the clubhouse facilities, tennis court and swimming pool that is available to all families in this neighborhood.

Chaparral, Realtors is offering this home for $115,000.

A breakfast bar, above, separates the kitchen from the living area. The bar is ideal for serving quick meals to family members. This contemporary-style Saddle Club South home, below, has a beautifully landscaped yard that is easy to maintain.

FRC program at First Realty offers mortgage assistance

First Realty of Midland/Better Homes and Gardens has consistently developed programs to assist homebuyers and homesellers to make sound real estate decisions. Their newest service is the Family Relocation Center, staffed by a team of non-commissioned professionals who meet the needs of transferring employees. The FRC staff headed by Relocation Director, Somita Fekete, offers educational, financial, spouse-employment, interior decorating and mortgage counseling.

When asked what is the most important concern of homebuyers, Fekete says that it is their mortgage. "In the home finding process, viewing houses and making decisions about where to live is fun but in the end, financing must be arranged, and this is when the hard work really starts. There are many mortgage products available today and each product has enough flexibility to service a range of homebuyer needs," says Fekete.

FRC mortgage counselors, Julie Cessna, Julie Dietz, Carla McIntosh and Tena Waggonner address homebuyer concerns daily. A typical session begins with the counselor establishing the clients personal needs. Desired monthly mortgage, price range of home and anticipated length of stay in the home are just a few of the questions asked. From the responses, a clear profile of client needs emerges.

This profile allows the mortgage counselors to introduce buyers to mortgage plans that can be customized for their needs. Once the choice is made between the FHA, VA, conventional, adjustable rate or variable rate, a Good Faith Estimate is prepared. This estimate reflects the costs involved in purchasing the desired home.

Each session normally requires one hour, after which the loan process and documentation takes 30-45 days. During this time, mortgage counselors work behind the scenes preparing documents and keeping in constant contact with their clients.

Cessna

Mortgage counselor, Julie Cessna, says "one of the greatest apprehensions of all buyers is surprise costs at closing." By the time each client leaves her office, all possible costs are reviewed and detailed in a Good Faith Estimate.

A native Midlander, Cessna began her banking career in 1976 with First National Bank of Midland. In 1981, she accepted a position as a lender for Investors Mortgage Corporation. Currently, Cessna is a loan officer for ABC Mortgage Corporation. During her 13-year career, Cessna has become proficient in the mortgage industry, attended Midland College and raised two wonderful children. Cessna's dedication to family and career assures clients the expected service and empathy necessary to make sound mortgage decisions.

Dietz

Jule Dietz, co-owner of Americorp Mortgage Inc., attended Lubbock Christian College on a scholastic and athletic scholarship. She began her lending career in 1980 at First Interstate Bank. When Dietz moved to Hobbs, New Mexico, she gained experience with owner-financed notes with a local escrow company. In 1985, she became a loan officer at Sunbelt National Mortgage, experience which eventually lead to a management position at ABC Mortgage Corporation. Dietz's dynamic career growth has led her to become an independent mortgage broker and form her own company which allows her to serve clients on a one-to-one basis.

Of primary interest to transferees, Dietz directs attention to the importance of using mortgage interest differential plans offered by many companies. Offered as part of company relocation assistance, this plan allows the transferee to eliminate mortgage insurance on 90 percent loan-to-value ratio mortgages and take a mortgage at a higher rate than their last mortgage while their company pays the difference in interest rate.

McIntosh

In the last few months, Carla McIntosh has seen an increase of buyers using FHA financing. "When FHA increased their lending limit to $101,250, many conventional buyers were able to finance through FHA. The attraction of lower down payments and lower interest rates coupled with assumability has been a benefit to Midlanders."

McIntosh is a mortgage loan counselor and originator for Claydesta Mortgage Bankers. McIntosh has been in the mortgage lending business since 1976. Her first lending position was in Houston where she was the youngest loan officer and first woman branch manager for a major savings and loan institution. Before joining Claydesta, McIntosh was vice president at Banc Home Savings. Beside her time at Texas Tech University, she has had many classes through the Texas Savings and Loan League, American Banking Institute and currently holds a Texas real estate license.

Waggonner

Counselor Tena Waggonner finds that it is important to know how long a transferee anticipates living in Midland. "If the transferee will be moving in less than three years, adjustable rate mortgages can reduce monthly payments and require less initial cash investment than fixed rate mortgage. This plan is often used to minimized risk of loss at the time of home sale," explained Waggonner.

Waggonner is the branch manager of McAfee Mortgage and Investment Company. She is president of the Permian Basin Mortgage Lending Organization, is active in Women's Council of Realtors and is an affiliate member of the Midland Board of Realtors. Waggonner's nine years of experience in organizing mortgage loans gives her a comprehensive knowledge of the varied aspects of mortgage lending. Waggonner and her family have lived in the Permian Basin for seven years and she welcomes the opportunity to counsel individuals and families on their home financing needs.

The Better Homes and Gardens Family Relocation Service, headquartered in Des Moines, Iowa, is part of Meredith Corporation, a "Fortune 500" company involved in publishing, printing, broadcasting and real estate. The relocation company is an arm of Better Homes and Gardens Real Estate Service, which also comprises a national network of independent real estate companies with 1400 offices in all 50 states.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

More ideas for marketing home

Q. I really appreciated your suggestions in a recent column on getting my home ready to sell. I immediately put the litter box out, cleaned my closets and had the kitchen faucet replaced. What other suggestions do you have? D.D.

Langston

A. As previously discussed, fresh paint, clean carpets, "no-drip" plumbing and shining windows do wonders to enhance to salability of a house. Equally important is a well maintained yard with green grass, trimmed shrubs, cleaned flower beds and some bright blooms around the front door and patio.

These of course are the basics. However, the agents in our office have come up with some other "no or low cost" ideas that can do wonders to give a home a more inviting, spacious, fresher look. We always share these suggestions with our sellers, and feel it helps us both in marketing the home. Some of these ideas included:

1. Lighting - replace all burned out bulbs, keep drapes open and lights on (even in the daytime) for showing appointments. As a seller you may prefer a darker home; however this is usually uninviting and even depressing to potential buyers.

2. Counter tops in kitchen and baths - remove the clutter then Windex your counter tops and back splashes for a brighter shine. Stow hair dryers, shaving gear, toothpaste, curlers, etc. in bath cabinets. Remove everything you can from kitchen counter tops; show potential buyers that you really do have a lot of kitchen storage and cooking space, even if you really don't!

3. Shower doors - Midland's hard water is really tough on the tile and shower doors. Buy professional tile and glass cleaners, then don't spare the elbow grease.

4. Heating unit and hot water heater closets - this is an area usually overlooked by homeowners but never overlooked by homebuyers. Don't stop with just vacuuming out the closet - vacuum the heating unit, too, then wipe off with a warm sudsy cloth.

5. Air conditioning and heating vents - dust around your vents, especially in the ceiling, tells every homebuyer that you don't change your filters often enough. Change those filters while you are at it! Then they start looking for other areas of deferred maintenance.

6. Range tops, ovens, vent hoods - these should sparkle! Spend a few dollars to replace the drip pans on your range; be sure ovens and grills are clean and vent hood filters and surfaces grease free.

7. Closets - if they appear stuffed, potential buyers will think your home is limited in storage. Pack up, throw away, donate to the Next-to-New Shop or Salvation Army and do everything you can to unclutter your linen and clothes closets. I suggest to my sellers that a perfect storage spot is under the bed as no prospect looks under it and this is a big area to stow a lot of items that you just cannot bear to part with!

8. Garage - don't stop with just cleaning it! Spend the few dollars and hours necessary to put on a fresh coat of white paint.

9. Odors - non-smokers are put off by properties that smell like cigarette smoke and even prospects who own cats themselves are repelled by smelly litter boxes or dishes of leftover cat food. "Sniff out" every potential odor causing spot: compactors, diaper pails, wastebaskets, ashtrays, disposals, drip pans under refrigerator, etc. - then clean up, wash down, set out room deodorizers everywhere! Few things are as repelling as offensive odors - or as inviting as the smell of fresh roses and home baked cookies.

One last hint for all of you with cat litter boxes - run, don't walk to the pet store in the Village and buy some "Better Way" cat litter. This is one product I must recommend: it is totally new, different from any litter you've ever tried before and unbelievably odor free! Just follow the directions and I personally promise, you'll never have litter problems again!

A spacious family room is located next to the kitchen and breakfast room. A fireplace is the focal point of the room and two windows provide a view of the backyard.

Home is highlighted by sequestered room

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

Mature live oak and mulberry trees shade a four-bedroom home that is well-suited for a large family that needs a multi-purpose sequestered room for a live-in parent, an office for a home business or as a private area for guests.

RE/MAX of Midland is featuring a home in Wedgewood Park that has been updated recently with country print wallpapers and matching borders throughout. The design of the home is one of the reasons a visitor will find it so appealing. The front entrance hall has a mirrored wall and opens into a hall that leads past the family room, kitchen and bedrooms into the formal living and dining room.

The family room is situated to the left of the entrance and the paneling and fireplace are painted a lovely shade of ecru. Windows on both side of the fireplace brighten this spacious room.

From the family room, the hall leads to the kitchen. Access into the kitchen and breakfast room can also be made from the family room. The galley-style kitchen has white cabinets and counter tops. The appliances include a Whirlpool cooktop, a Westinghouse oven, and a Maytag dishwasher. The kitchen opens into the breakfast room and a window provides a view of the backyard.

Peach grass cloth walls in the hallway leads into the formal living and dining room. This rectangular-shaped room has shuttered windows and the dining room situated at one end. A border that accents the peach grass cloth encircles this entire room. A doorway leads from the dining room into the breakfast area.

Three of the home's bedroom are situated to the right of this main corridor. The children's bedrooms have spacious closets and large windows. A hall bath is conveniently located to both of these rooms. The bath has a separate bathing area and a wall of storage cabinets.

The master bedroom is situated at the left end of this second hallway. The country decor of this home is beautifully demonstrated throughout this room. An adjoining master bath has a spacious vanity and a built-in shower.

The fourth bedroom is located next to the family room. A small hallway, complete with a wall of bookshelves, leads into this sequestered area. The design of the bedroom and adjoining hobby room makes this area well-suited for many purposes. A wall of windows provides a view of the front yard. The bath is decorated with a wallpaper in many different shades of blue.

Beyond the bedroom, a door opens into another room that can be used as a small office or sitting area. A door from this room provides private access into the garage.

The utility room is also next to the family room. This room can easily accommodate a freezer and a door leads to the backyard and to the side-entry, two-car garage.

RE/MAX of Midland is offering this home for $99,900.

Realtor finds right home for couple

Jim and Frances Davis were pleased with the home that Polly DeVoss, right, of Don Harvey, Realtors found when they moved back to Midland earlier this year.

It took buying their second home here to really get it right, but Jim and Frances Davis think the home they recently purchased is a real winner.

Jim and Frances first moved to Midland in June of 1982 and bought a townhouse. This was during the "boom" when a person had too few homes to choose from to begin with, and besides, Jim thought it would be great to get away from yard work. However, it wasn't long before they both really missed having a regular yard.

Earlier this year after living in Granbury, Texas for two years, the Davises contacted Polly DeVoss, an associate with Don Harvey, Realtors and told her they wanted to preview homes that were on the market. Frances described exactly what they were looking for in a home and the location they desired. Polly said, "I know just the house for you."

Polly took them to the house that she felt was described and it was "love at first sight." The Davises were very leery about buying the first home they had seen. Polly showed them about 10 to 15 more homes but they kept returning to the first one until it was finally purchased.

Jim and Frances' journey together in life begin in neighboring Odessa. Although Jim was born in Sweetwater, he grew up in Odessa. Frances was born in Italy, Texas but her family moved to Artesia, New Mexico when she was eight-years-old. After completing school in Artesia, Frances moved to Odessa.

The Davises had many mutual friends in Odessa over a three or four year period but had never met. Some friends arranged to introduce Frances to a certain gentleman and that man turned out to be Jim's best friend. Frances also met Jimmy at the same time and six months later that they were married.

The first adventure in home ownership began with their wedding plans. They had contracted with a builder to build a home for them on the west side of Odessa. Just as the home was nearly completed, a tractor that was leveling off the backyard ran into the back of the house and destroyed the den wall. The wood fence Jim had ordered to enclose only half of the backyard ended up enclosing the whole backyard and one-half of the alley. Jim thinks they just had trouble understanding his oil field "step-off" measurements.

The problems were finally overcome, the home was finally finished and the wedding finally took place.

They lived in that house until 1973. In that time, they raised two sons, Larry Dale and Jimmy, Jr. Larry now lives in Carrollton where he is prospering in the cellular phone business and his wife, Angie, works for a law firm in Dallas. Jimmy lives here in Midland and works for Midland Memorial Hospital and his wife, Amanda, works for Olney Savings. Larry and Angie have three sons, Kyle, Cole and Larry Dale. Jimmy and Amanda have a two-year-old daughter, Katy. Frances parents reside in Big Spring and Jimmy's mother lives in Odessa. Both are centrally located for visits.

In 1973, the Davises moved to Andrews where they lived until they moved to Midland in 1982. Friends in Odessa, Ann and Milton Brunley, also moved to Andrews around this time and are currently, almost ironically, only five blocks apart again in Midland.

When Jim and Frances are not busily involved in remodeling and redecorating their new home, Frances is throughly involved in painting, writing and photography. Most of the paintings in their home are from her works and she has also sold some of her pieces commercially. Her photography includes extensive family portraits, including many she has restored from several generations past of hers and Jimmy's families. She plans to incorporate the photos in a family history which she is currently writing.

Jimmy has recently opened his own business, J.D.'s Roustabout Service and finds that business consumes most of his time. What free time he has is often spent on the golf course. Frances and he both learned to play golf when they lived in Andrews and have continued playing since that time.

Midland may not be in a "boom" right now but you would never know it from taking to Jimmy and Frances. According to them, things are really going pretty good.

Energy-efficient, four-bedroom home being shown today by Dene Kelly, Inc., Realtors

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

Dene Kelly, Inc., Realtors has a home that is located at 4815 Richmond in Polo Park is open today from 2 p.m. until 5 p.m.

Dene Kelly, Inc., Realtors has a new four-bedroom and three-bath home on the market that was recently completed by Gregg Noel Construction in Polo Park. The house, located at 4815 Richmond, has a gray brick exterior and the yard is beautifully landscaped with tress, shrubs and the lawn is plush enough that it has already been mowed.

Bottle glass windows frame the front door that leads into a spacious tile entry. The home is decorated in shades of gray and is complemented by soft hues of mauve, taupe and cream. The imported Italian tile entry leads past the dining room, to the left, and into the living room. The dining room has a window that overlooks the front yard and a brass chandelier ascends from the cathedral ceiling. Two inlaid white squares in the gray carpeting frame the dining room table.

A dual, gray brick fireplace with a marble hearth serves as the focal point in the living room. This room is enhanced by a border that matches the wallpaper in the entrance and is place just a few inches below the top of the 14 foot ceiling. Bookshelves are located along the right wall.

A doorway to the right of the fireplace opens into the family room. The fireplace is highlighted by an arched above the mantle. In one corner of the room, a walnut entertainment cabinet is built-in that features an area for a TV, VCR and stereo. An atrium door leads onto the covered patio and landscaped backyard.

Access into the kitchen and breakfast room can be made from the living and family room. Exquisitely carved walnut cabinets provide lots of storage space in the gourmet kitchen. The Kenmore appliances include a microwave, self-cleaning oven, dishwasher and a Classic grille with European burners. A garden window is place above the kitchen sink and views a side yard. The kitchen also has desk with built-in shelves and slots. Two door open into a specially designed pantry with many shelves for storage of food items.

The utility room is located next to the breakfast room and has many storage cabinets, a sink and skylight. A door leads into the two car garage with automatic door openers.

Three of the home's bedrooms are situated to the right of the living room. The design of this wing is ideal for children. The first two bedroom has large windows that view the front yard and walk-in closets. One of the bedroom also has built-in shelves. These bedrooms share a hall bath that has a separate bathing area.

The third bedroom has a private bath and walk-in closet. The bath is decorated in a rose colored wallpaper with a matching border.

The sequestered master bedroom is located to the right of the family room. This room has a tiered cathedral ceiling and a sitting area is perfect by two windows that overlook the backyard. A walk-in closet with built-in shelves is also located in the bedroom.

Any couple would adore the master bath that has a jacuzzi tub and an over-sized shower. A vanity with two sink lines along one wall and another walk-in closet with built-in is located at the far end of the bath.

This energy efficient home is total electric and is heated and cooled by a heat pump. The other amenities in this approximately 2,800 square foot home are a sprinkler system and a security system.

This home is being offered for $157,800 and is open today from 2 p.m. until 5 p.m.

ARE YOU AFRAID OF STORMS?
This large 3 bedroom, 2½ bath, all electric home on 1¼ acres at the corner of Kniffin and Marie in Skyview Addition just about has it all. It features a large deep underground area with a wood burning fireplace which stores heat in a stone filled chamber. This heated air or cool air can be circulated through your home, lowering your heating and cooling costs. This three plus year project alone cost more than our place will bring. There is also a block building in back which has upstairs storage and will accommodate a 40' foot RV. There is abundant water in this area and new homes are still being built. Get a good view of the Tall City. Being sold by owners for $165,000. or best offer.

WRITE IT AND REAP!

Writing a classified ad that gets results—whether it be for real estate, employment, the personals, transportation, or merchandise— is easy if you follow the guidelines below.

1. Give the reader specific information. Pretend you are someone reading the classifieds. What would you like to know about the item, service or job you are advertising? Be sure to add details such as color, size, condition, brand name, age, features and benefits. Be accurate! Don't embellish your ad with misleading information. Stick to the facts and reap the rewards!

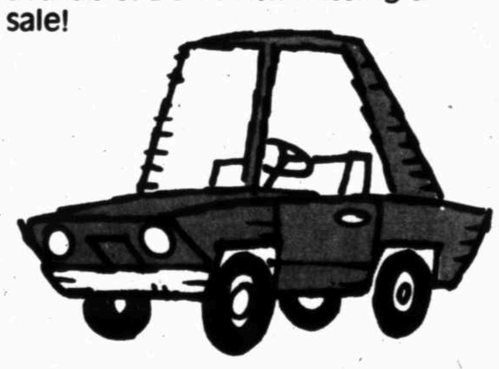

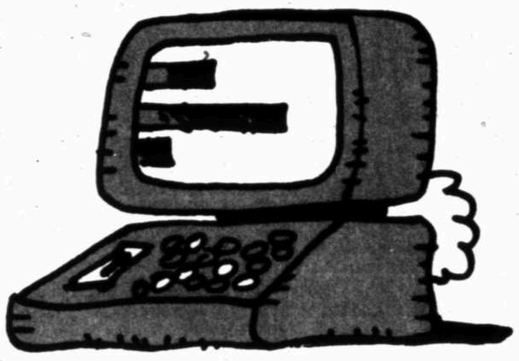

2. Include the price. Don't waste your time or a potential buyer's time. If you advertise the price of the item or service you offer, the people who respond to your ad will be those who are genuinely interested. Surveys show that readers are more interested in those items and services they know are within their price range.

3. Avoid abbreviations. Don't make a potential customer work too hard! Although you may be tempted to cut down on the cost of your ad by using abbreviations, surveys indicate that many people don't understand such abbreviations as EIK (eat-in kitchen) or WSW (white side wall) tires and won't take the time to figure them out. A confused reader is a disinterested reader. Get the most for your money and use complete words.

4. Include phone number and specify hours. Be sure to let potential customers know when and where to call. Surveys show that even if a person is very interested in your item or service, he or she will not call back after the first attempt. Stay near the phone during the hours you indicate you will be available. Don't risk missing a sale!

5. Run on consecutive days. Your ad will not get results if people don't see it! Therefore, it is important to set up a consistent and consecutive ad schedule with your telephone salesperson or outside sales representative. Run your ad for at least one week, or use our special rate.

Remember, you can cancel your ad as soon as you get the desired results!

Father to a family

For most men, fatherhood begins when their children are born. But some volunteer for the job.

Lonnie Baker has been a family teacher at High Sky Children's Ranch for "a year and three months," he said. High Sky is a home for children who, for various reasons, cannot live with their biological families. Baker and his wife, Alice and their three children share a house with eight other children.

Raising 11 children is not an easy task, but "we really feel like this is where God wants us to be," Baker said.

Baker, a former oil field worker, said he was led to High Sky. "I worked in the oil field in Hobbs (N.M.). I was just reading the Sunday paper one day ... reading the want ads, and I came across this ad" for couples to be resident family teachers at High Sky.

After discussing the possibility of filling the position, and "through prayer more than anything," the couple applied for the job and were accepted.

"I've seen people come and go" as family teachers, Baker said. "If God is not behind them they usually don't stay very long."

Baker and his wife became Certified Family Teachers March 21. The process "takes a year before you can even go up for it," he said. "People come in here and make sure you are teaching the kids what you are supposed to be teaching them." Candidates for certification are rated by the children, people at the schools, parents, people at the office and caseworkers on such qualities as cooperation and friendliness. Scoring is on a scale from seven to zero. To pass, Baker said, "You have to make six. ... If you lose out on just one of them, that's it."

Baker said that although his high school diploma, background and personal references helped him get the job, his real qualification for the position is his "love for kids. It's a real sad situation, once you get to know about the child abuse going on. I didn't know how bad it was until I came here."

Most of the children living at the ranch were the victims of abuse in their own homes — physical, sexual, emotional, mental, spiritual or a combination; neglect; or chemical dependency in the parents or the children themselves.

These children are placed in residence at High Sky for many reasons, including "running away, drugs, sexual abuse — that's probably one of the biggest problems," Baker said. "Physical abuse, parents who abandon them, juvenile probation ... the Department of Human Services is where we usually get the abuse cases. There are lots of private placement kids ... basically their parents just can't handle them."

The resident family teachers are responsible for parenting the children as well as teaching them new behavior skills, Baker said. "That's what we're here for, teaching them what they need to do to be able to go home."

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

The setting for the June 9 wedding of Jesse Bolner, daughter of Earlene and Victor Bolner of Del Rio, and rancher Patrick Schneider of Alpine and formerly of Midland, was Prude Ranch near Fort Davis.

The groom and his attendants didn't wear tuxes. Instead, they chose cowboy attire: white shirts, starched blue jeans and black boots.

The bride arrived with her father by antique car in a tea-length gown of white eyelet and carrying a cascade bouquet of white rosebuds with small bandana print bows. Her attendants were attired in blue denim dresses and red roper boots. Each carried a straw heart-shaped basket covered with red bandana print and accented with red rosebuds.

Music was provided on solo guitar by Craig Carter of Big Bend National Park.

Following the ceremony, a chuck wagon supper was served. It was prepared in typical cowboy cookout style by Sissy and Roddy Schoenfeldt, who are neighbors of Patrick and his twin brother, Thomas Schneider, all of whom ranch in the Hovey area near Alpine. Biscuits were cooked over mesquite coals in authentic cast iron Dutch ovens, and the meat had been cooking for over 18 hours.

Music for dancing was provided by Craig Carter and the Spur of the Moment Band.

The following morning the chuck wagon and box were again opened for a flapjack breakfast.

Tables were decorated with red and white gingham cloths, centered with red lanterns and bandana bows. Rice bags were wrapped in red bandana print.

The rehearsal dinner was hosted by the groom's parents, Pat and Tom Schneider, in the main dining area at Prude Ranch. It was followed by a bachelor party given for Patrick by his brother and best man, Thomas Schneider.

The couple were honored with pre-nuptial parties in Midland, Del Rio and Alpine. Midland festivities included a party given by Pat and Tom to introduce the engaged pair to their friends, a miscellaneous shower given at the home of Corinne (Mrs. Toby) Carleton and co-hosted by Mary (Mrs. King) Hughes, Carmen (Mrs. J. Stewart) Martin and Mary (Mrs. Tom) Mann, and a buffet dinner hosted by the groom's sister and brother-in-law, Molly and Reb Clark.

TO REFLECT THE groom's heritage, the rehearsal dinner given for T-na Dodson and Stan Hughes last weekend carried out an Italian theme. Given by Stan's parents, Flo Hughes, nee Scivally, and Ron and Brenda Hughes, the party was held poolside at Ron and Brenda's home.

Lasagna and all the trimmings were served. Completing the menu was cheesecake with strawberries.

Focal point of the decorations was a gondola filled with red and white geraniums floating in the pool. Baskets of grapes adorned the serving tables, and guests were seated at round tables, covered with cloths in either red, green or white to match the large Italian flag, which flew over the party area. The centerpieces were arrangements of red candles in hurricane globes, miniature flags and grapes, surrounded by ivy. Hundreds of red and white geraniums decorated the yard.

Among the 44 guests were the bride's parents, Charlsye and M.D. "Doc" Dodson; her grandmother, Fayrene Holt; Stan's grandmother, Clyde (Mrs. E.R.) Hughes of Oklahoma City, and Brenda's mother, Dorothy Nettles.

The couple were wed June 10 in Our Savior's Lutheran Church.

PRE-NUPTIAL PARTIES began in March for Ellen Leggott and Alan Orr and continued through their wedding day Saturday.

An accessory shower was held at the home of Patti (Mrs. David) DeFrance and co-hosted by her daughter, Michele, and Sarah (Mrs. Russell) Neisig and her daugher, Andrea. It was followed by a wine and cheese party held at the home of Caroline and John Holmes and co-hosted by Joyce and John Hammett and Vera and Richard Powers.

Additonal parties included a display shower and brunch held at the home of Carol (Mrs. Jim) Hartman, with Sally (Mrs. Martin) Mogfor', Mrs. Libby Evans and Mary (Ms. Craig) Tellinghuisen as co-hostesses, and a recipe shower at the home of Martha (Mrs. Joe) Hastings, with Zosia (Mrs. James) Schlueter as co-hostess.

Other parties were held in Austin, San Antonio and New Braunfels.

Wedding festivities began Thursday with a "Sip and See" party at the home of the bride's parents, Cathe and Bob Leggott, and hosted by Jo (Mrs. Frank) Weber and Eleanor (Mrs. Ken) Terrell.

A bridesmaids luncheon was given Friday at Venezia Restaurant by Mary (Mrs. Ken) Buckles and Sara Schulte, and the rehearsal dinner was hosted Friday evening at Karens restaurant by the groom's parents, Marsha and Robert Orr of New Braunfels. Betty (Mrs. Robert) King hosted a bridal manicure party Saturday at Backstage.

The wedding at St. Nicholas Episcopal Church was followed by a reception at the Plaza Club.

LEE HIGH SCHOOL graduate Jennifer Hodges was honored with a luncheon at the Plaza Club. Hostesses were Jan (Mrs. Denny) Beier, Shelley (Mrs. Rick) Hayley, Kathy (Mrs. Randy) Shannon, Gayla (Mrs. Walt) Taylor and Nancy (Mrs. Mark) Withrow.

Balloon bouquets centered the tables.

Guests included Sabra King, Catherine Rodriguez, Jamie Holubec, Shelly Stringer, Rhonda Hartzoge, Amy Avery, Kate Raney and D'Ann Nichols.

The daughter of Rachel and Ed Park, Jennifer plans to attend Texas Tech University this fall.

A "GRADUATION FIESTA" at Jorge's Mexican Cafe was held recently to honor Lee High graduate Stephany Banks. The hostesses were Nelda (Mrs. Royce) Lane and Judy (Mrs. Cliff) Rice.

A Mexican Mickey Mouse theme was used, with a giant Mickey Mouse pinata as the focal point. Sombreros with Rebel flags and multi-colored garlands decorated the tables. Brightly colored Mexican straw baskets with Mickey Mouse faces inscribed with the guests' names served as placecards.

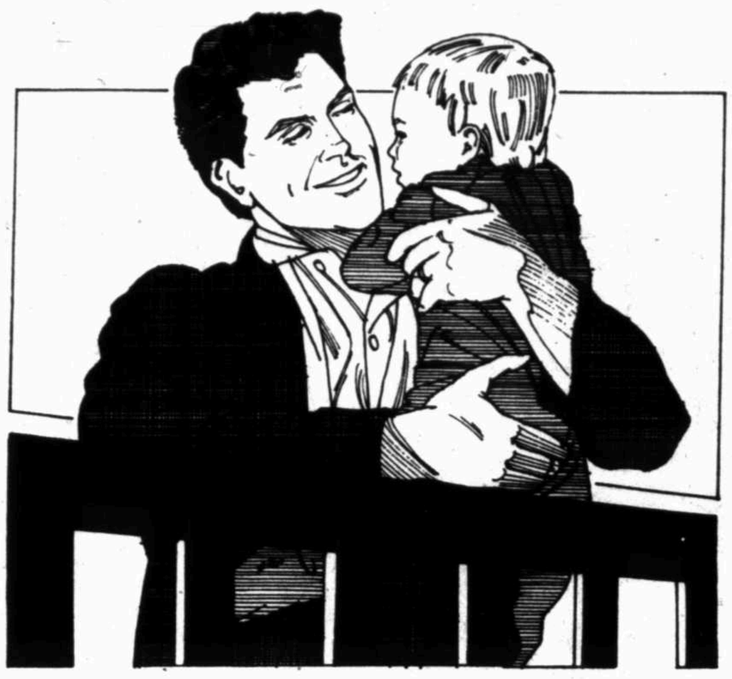

Since Stephany plans to adorn her dorm room at Wayland Baptist University in Plainview with the Mickey Mouse decor, she was presented a life-size, framed poster of the cartoon character, wearing a mortarboard and holding a Wayland pennant, with a picture of Lee High School in the background. The poster was drawn by Stephany's cousin, TyAnna Savell, a commercial artist from Odessa.

Twenty-three guests enjoyed the Mexican dinner. Special guests were Stephany's parents, Vickey and Manning Banks; her sister, Bethany Banks; her grandmother, Thelma (Mrs. Frank) Shepperd of Odessa, and Ms. Savell.

Thoughtfulness best gift on Father's Day

By EDA ANNE GALENO

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If you can't figure out what to buy Dad for Father's Day, or even what would make an interesting interlude on an otherwise routine Sunday, plan a good, old-fashioned celebration from the heart.

Start by pampering Dad with the Sunday paper and breakfast in bed. Then let the children draw him a warm bubble bath before the family gathers for fun, games and gifts that money can't buy.

Make your own Fathers' Day cards. Tell Dad why he's special. Why you love him. Then take turns reading the cards aloud.

If you don't have a video camera, rent one and film the family telling Dad why he's tops. Pop it in the VCR and show him how you feel about him with a personalized video card.

These cards will be something you can all enjoy for years to come.

What Dad wouldn't enjoy a book compiled by his family, chock full of promissory notes for foot massages, back rubs, a week of walking the dog, taking out the garbage, washing the car, mowing the lawn? Be creative in deciding what Dad would most appreciate and be realistic in what the kids can do.

For family game time, see how well you can imitate Dad. Can you capture his moods? The way he walks? How he scolds? How he sits while watching television? Who can best capture Dad snoring on the couch?

Send Dad on a treasure hunt. Hide some unusual photographs of you and the kids around the house and cheer Dad on as he searches for them. How about a photo of one of the kids dressed up like Dad, leaving for work with his briefcase and newspaper? Another child in Dad's pajamas, standing in front of the bathroom mirror, shaving cream on his face, razor in hand? Or maybe even one with the family dog in Dad's favorite T-shirt and baseball cap?

Lunch time. Get the family involved in making Dad's favorite meal. Of course there are no guarantees here, but think how much fun the family will have in the kitchen. Sorry, Dad is exempt from cleanup. And if all doesn't go well order in Dad's favorite pizza.

Pick Dad a bouquet, maybe of flowers from the garden or wildflowers from the roadside or woods. To each stem attach a special handwritten message remembering the special times he pitched in.

Remember when he coached the Little League team to first place? How about the time you weren't feeling well and he decided to make breakfast for the family? The pancakes were great, but the kitchen was a disaster.

Take a long walk in the park. Just the two of you. If necessary, hire a sitter for the kids.

Talk about some of the times you remember spending with him when the children were growing up. Their first steps, first day in school, first words. Getting through chickenpox, broken bones and other childhood calamities. When was the last time you took time to reminisce?

Father's Day wouldn't be complete without recognizing your dad, and his. If you're not within several miles for a visit, telephone. And don't forget to let the grandchildren talk, too.

Time for the kids to go to sleep. Remember that coupon book? Did they realize you slipped a coupon in there for them to go to bed early tonight?

Now, for a romantic dinner, just the two of you. His last gift is under his plate. A love letter from you. As he reads it by candlelight the expression on his face will tell you that this Father's Day was special, one he will always remember.

FATHER

Living with that many children can try even the calmest personality. "I have patience most of the time," Baker said, "but when you have eight kids plus three of your own — there are times I have lost it. But it's not beyond me to apologize."

> "I have patience most of the time, but when you have eight kids plus three of your own — there are times I have lost it. But it's not beyond me to apologize."
>
> Lonnie Baker
> Family teacher

The average length of time children live at High Sky is about a year, Baker said, but some situations never improve enough for the children to return to their families. Some remain on the ranch until they are old enough to support and care for themselves.

The residences on the ranch are run like other homes; each member of the family participates in the home's routine. Chores are rotated, Baker said, "We have a chore list."

The children go to Midland public schools, and must get up at 5 a.m. on school mornings. "Breakfast is at 6 a.m.," Baker said. "The first (school) bus is at 6:30 a.m."

After arriving home from school, the children study. Then, "they fix dinner, there's chores, then what free time is left they go out(side), watch TV, ... Bedtime is 9 p.m. school nights. By law we have to let them have eight hours sleep — that 9 p.m.-5 a.m."

Of course, when school is out for the summer, the children are more free to persue other activities. "We cook out a lot," Baker said. "The tennis court gets used quite a bit. The swimming pool, if it's open, there are kids there. The basketball court, kids use it all the time. We have a game room (recently) built through donations ... and a library the kids can use, but we have to go with them."

The young residents can earn privileges by performing tasks for points, Baker said. "To be able to earn privileges, they have to be able to earn points. It's a behavior modification system."

And, of course, the residents of High Sky celebrate holidays and birthdays the same way other families do, only probably more often. "We have birthday parties every time a birthday comes around," Baker said. "The parents give them a gift, we buy a gift from the house and usually the office gives them $5 or so. ... The people of Midland have been tremendous in their support of this place — between Thanksgiving and December, it gets busy around here, going to parties ... And they (the children) deserve everything they can get."

Raising children who have been abused isn't easy. "There are times I wonder what I'm doing here," Baker said. The stress is "not a physical burden, it's a mental one. These kids have problems — you don't know what's going to happen from one minute to the next."

The best way of dealing with the stress of the job, he said, is "just through prayer, that's really the main way."

But even with the stress, Baker said he plans to remain with High Sky. The rewards of the job far outweigh the drawbacks, he said.

"Watching these kids develop and change, watching them smile again — just seeing that" is worth the price, he said. "There's lots more positive — just seeing them happy, more than anything, knowing they're not going to be abused anymore."

Imaginative gift ideas make Dad's day healthier this year

By CARRIE WHITE
New York Times News Service

Why is it when holidays come around, we offer treats to loved ones that do nothing more than put on pounds and heighten cholesterol?

Father's Day gives you a chance to redeem yourself. Jayne Lapidus Newmark, spokeswoman for the American Dietetic Association, has some healthy gift ideas for Dad.

Instead of giving him chocolates, make some heart-healthy Oatmeal Raisin Cookies.

Here are some of Lapidus Newmark's ideas for a heart-healthy holiday:

■ Make Dad a heart-healthy brunch that includes a turkey sandwich (on a pita or a muffin), or a tomato or green pepper stuffed with tuna or chicken salad.

■ Make a lunch of turkey hot dogs, lean hamburgers or hamburgers made with a mixture of ground turkey and ground sirloin. Coleslaw makes a heart-healthy side dish.

■ Get Dad a membership to a health club or enroll him in a non-smoking class or stress management seminar.

Buy him:

■ An exercise bicycle.
■ Sneakers or hiking boots.
■ Tickets to a favorite sporting event.
■ Headphones for that Walkman.
■ Swim suit or a sun visor.

OATMEAL RAISIN COOKIES

1 cup diet margarine
1 cup brown sugar, packed
1 cup granulated sugar
1 egg plus 1 egg white
1 teaspoon vanilla
1½ cups flour
1 teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon cinnamon
3 cups oatmeal (uncooked)
1 cup raisins

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Beat together margarine and sugars until light and fluffy. Beat in egg and vanilla. Combine flour, baking soda and cinnamon; add to margarine mixture; mix well. Stir in oats and raisins. Drop by rounded teaspoonfuls onto ungreased cookie sheet. Bake 8 to 10 minutes. Cool 1 minute on cookie sheet; remove to wire cooling rack. Makes 5½ dozen cookies. 74 calories per cookie.

Researchers hunt for memories' source

By ANN GIBBONS
Copley News Service

A researcher working with rat tissue has found an important clue to the way memories are made, according to a report in the journal Nature.

"Timing is everything" in the way memories are entered into at least one part of the brain, said Terrence Sejnowski, a professor of biology and physics at the University of California, San Diego, and director of the Computational Neurobiology Laboratory at the Salk Institute.

Sejnowski published the findings with Patric Stanton of the departments of neuroscience and neurology at Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York City.

In his laboratory at Salk, Sejnowski and his colleagues struck wafers of rat-brain tissue with electric shocks. By studying the way those shocks trigger nerve cells to fire off signals to each other in the tissue, the scientists gained a new understanding of the workings of the hippocampus, a small region of the brain that is important in processing information and creating memories.

The researchers predicted those patterns of brain activity in 1977 by observing the way information is stored in neural networks, computer models that mimic the "wiring"-of the brain.

After working with computer models, Sejnowski and Stanton tested their ideas in the laboratory, studying the same types of connections in brain tissue.

THEIR FINDINGS are important in understanding how associative memories are made. They occur when one memory is linked with another, such as a song and a certain place, or an odor and a particular food.

Neuroscientists long have known that memories are encoded into the brain as nerve cells communicate with each other in a complicated chain of events.

When an impulse passes from the eyes, nose, muscles or other part of the body, it travels from one nerve cell to another along familiar pathways that make up the intricate wiring of the brain and nervous system. The junctions of nerve cells are known as synapses.

The nerves seem primed to communicate along certain well-worn paths instead of using less familiar routes. The process, first identified in 1973, is called long-term potentiation (LTP) and is a critical component of how information is stored in the memory. The fact that the signals remember which paths to take indicates that the nervous system has a memory.

Now, Sejnowski's team has found that the stronger those familiar pathways become in the hippocampus, the weaker that other, less-used routes between nerve cells become under a process called long-term depression (LTD).

In other words, "what goes up must come down," Richard Morris and David Willshaw, scientists at the University of Edinburgh in Scotland, wrote in Nature in a commentary on Sejnowski's work. The more the impulses favor one route between nerves, the less they use other routes.

Furthermore, the timing of the impulses determines whether the signal between nerves is strong or weak — and whether they will be linked in an associative memory, Sejnowski said.

THE RESEARCHERS found that communication between two nerve cells is stronger when two electric impulses traveling along different routes reach the first nerve cell at the same time — and that the connection is weaker when the impulses arrive at different times.

The way in which the nerve cells communicate is important because it has implications for the way humans associate one memory with another.

"What's important is that this mechanism is associative — the effect depends on what is happening at other synapses — and it lasts a long time," Sejnowski said. "Both of these are conditions you'd want in a memory storage process."

If both impulses arrive in phase — at about the same time — they are more likely to reinforce each other in a strong signal that is fired toward another nerve cell. Future signals also will prefer that route.

HOWEVER, IF THE two original signals arrive out of phase, they will be less efficient and the signal will be weaker. Future signals will be less likely to take that route.

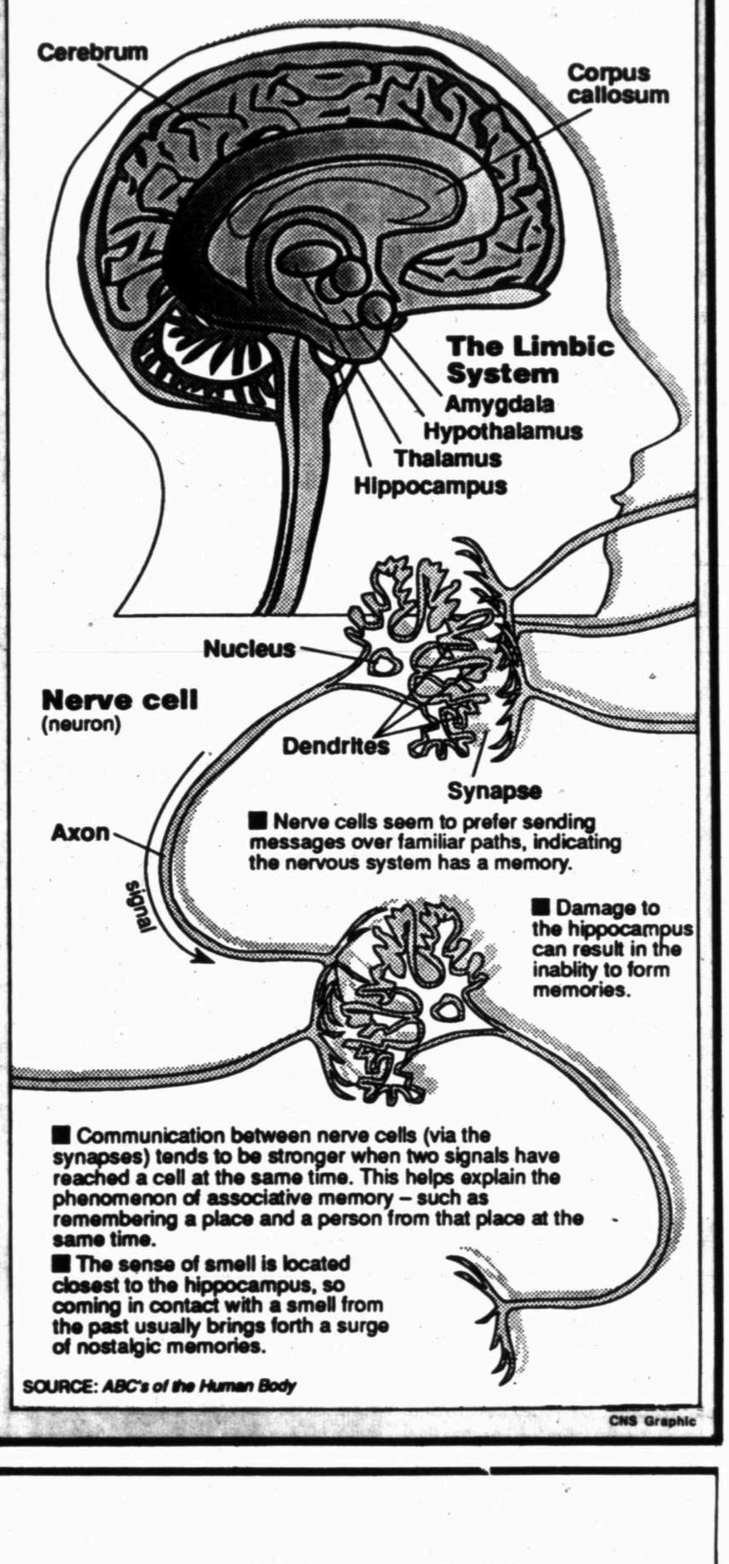

It is the scientists' theory that the thoughts that triggered those unsynchronized signals will be less likely to be associated with each other in the future.

Sejnowski said he is using the findings to improve his computer neural-network models. The ultimate goal is to create computers that can learn and can teach themselves, much as the human brain can.

The research was funded by the Naval Research Laboratory.

The Memory Machine

By studying electrical shocks given to rats' brains, scientists are discovering the workings of nerve cells and the importance of the hippocampus, an area of the brain critical to the memory process.

Long-term care insurance policies different

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Long-term care insurance is designed to pay for nursing home care and home health care; yet, if consumers do not screen policies properly, there may be areas which are not covered.

For instance, some policies require a three-days' stay in a hospital before the patient is admitted to a nursing home. Many policies differ on deductibles, type of nursing home care and the amount of coverage. Exclusions, waiting periods and other restrictions also are included most long-term insurance coverages.

Consumers should examine potential policies thoroughly. Are there specific exclusions? Usually, policies do not cover stays in facilities outside the United States, stays in government installations, injury from an act of war, suicide attempts or self-inflicted injuries, or mental illness without demonstrable organic disease.

Many current policies do not cover Alzheimer's disease. Some exclude it if symptoms appeared prior to the effective date of the policy. Others include Alzheimer's and similar forms of dementia even though illness without demonstrable organic disease is excluded.

Remember, however, that many policies either do not cover custodial care or require prior confinement in a skilled nursing facility or hospital before covering custodial care. Since most people who get Alzheimer's require only custodial care, long-term care policies may be of limited use in covering expenses related to this illness.

Most long-term care policies provide a specific amount of benefits for each day of care received. For example, a policy may pay only $50 per day without regard to actual expenses incurred. Benefits can be paid to the insured upon submission of claims, or can be paid directly to the nursing home or other care provider.

If a policy is guaranteed renewable, the only requirement for keeping the policy in force is paying the premium on time. The amount of the premium may be increased at any time. However, a company can raise premiums only for an entire class of policyholders, not for individuals.

If the policy is renewable at the option of the company, the company may or may not renew the policy. A policyholder is entitled to notice that the company does not intend to renew. Most insurers reserve the right to cancel group insurance at anytime for any reason.

When shopping for long-term care insurance, consider the following:

- Do not buy more policies than you need.
- Check for pre-existing condition exclusions and waiting periods.
- Be careful about replacing existing coverage.
- Check for listing of maximum benefits.
- Check your right to renew a policy.
- Beware of solicitation materials which create the false appearance that they are from a governmental source.
- Be aware of scare tactics.
- Do not withhold medical information on the policy's application.
- Get a written outline of coverage.
- Ask to see the agent's license.
- Take your time when considering and purchasing insurance.

Memories last

Copley News Service

New research suggests humans possess more than one memory system and that not all of the systems deteriorate with age.

Psychologist David Mitchell of Southern Methodist University reports only one of three memory systems gets worse with aging — one doesn't change and one gets better.

Only episodic memory deteriorates, he said. "As people grow older, they may have more difficulty remembering something that happened at a meeting yesterday or at a party last week."

Meanwhile, procedural memory, which involves motor skills, remains largely untouched by aging.

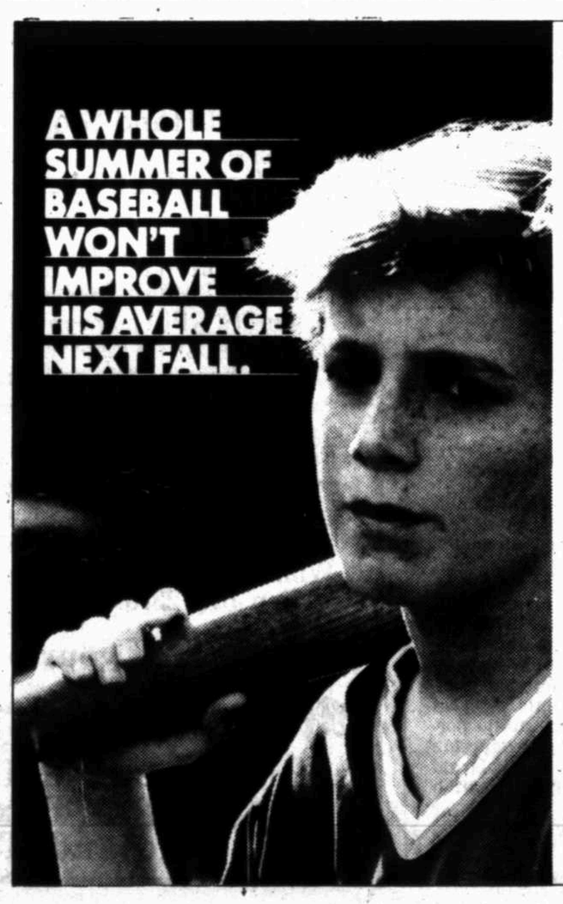

Semantic memory, which is based on accumulated knowledge, is the reason people tend to grow wiser as they grow older, Mitchell said.

"In making decisions and judgments, they draw upon the accumulated knowledge of their semantic memory."

Coolers are culprit

Copley News Service

Those who hope to delay a possible greenhouse effect in Earth's atmosphere should shut off their cars' air conditioning. Auto air conditioners are one of the worst culprits of worldwide pollution, because they emit a dangerous chlorofluorocarbon called "r-12."

Elderly may have special needs, housing requirements

Associated Press

Elderly persons, especially those using wheelchairs, often have special housing requirements.

In recent years, many architects have designed custom houses to meet the needs of those with age-related impairments. Remodelers, too, have been requested to make changes that will make life more comfortable for the disabled or those not actually disabled but elderly enough to exercise extra caution in their physical movements.

What must be taken into consideration is that a house is sometimes shared with members of the family who are neither elderly nor disabled nor in need of any special treatment. Such a house must meet the requirements of all its residents.

In that connection, architect Charles Koty of Searingtown, N.Y., has prepared a booklet that is included with the blueprints of any house designed by him specificallyfor a family where at least one member uses a wheelchair. It details all the adaptations recommended for such a person, yet cautions the owner that some of them can be ignored, some expanded and some modified. For instance, it may be decided that only certain bedroom doors must be widened or that only one bathroom requires adaptation to wheelchair use. The owner must always bear in mind the marketability of the house — that is, its potential for possible resale.

In a house he designed for wheelchair adaptation, Koty breaks down the plan into five categories — ramp and entranceway; doorways and hardware; kitchen cabinets and accessories; bathrooms and accessories, and miscellaneous items. These include such things as the elimination of door steps; the enlargement of the entry platform and having it flush with the floor finish; special saddles at the entrance door, and dozens of other moves designed to make it easier for the wheelchair user to move around.

One interesting item is the recommendation that doors to bathrooms should swing outwards toward the hallway or bedroom and be of a certain width. Koty suggests providing a pulley system or some other means to enable the person in the wheelchair to pull the door closed once inside.

In the kitchen, where counters should be about 29 inches high, full-height cabinets are convenient to a wheelchair user. The sink should have an open space beneath it for wheelchair accessibility. The underneath hot water pipe must be covered to prevent scalding. And the base cabinet should be deleted next to the range so the range can be easily used. The range reguires an opening of 30 inches. Where feasible, the windows over the sink should be about 6 inches longer than specified to adjust to a dropped counter top.

The bathroom sink requires an open space below for wheelchair accessiblity. You can install a standard toilet fixture, adding an adjustable seat insert to provide the extra height required. If the owner wishes, and in lieu of a bathtub, a shower stall can be provided to accommodate a roll-in shower chair, with no curb or ledge.

Clocks 'memorable' gifts for newlyweds

Associated Press

Clocks rank high as a contemporary gift for young marrieds, says Barbara Tober, editor of Bride's magazine.

"Clocks are great, memorable gifts which help newlyweds avoid friction during those sensitive first few years," she says. "They enable them to better synchronize the rhythm of their new life together."

Anniversaries

Couple's children sponsor 40th anniversary reception

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence J. Houston of Midland were honored with a 40th wedding anniversary reception Saturday at the Ramada Hotel. Hosts were the couple's children and their spouses, Joyce and Steve Peterson, Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Houston, Luetta and Neil Milbrandt and Jean and Randall Lovett.

The couple was married June 17, 1949 in Tulsa, Okla. They have four children — Joyce Peterson of Midland, Marvin Houston of Cashion, Okla., Luetta Milbrandt of Carrollton and Jean Lovett of Highland, Calif. — as well as 11 grandchildren.

The couple has lived in Arkansas City, Kan., Tulsa, Roswell, N.M., and since 1964 in Midland. Houston retired from Arco Oil and Gas in 1985, after 35 years. They are members of Free Methodist Church.

Richards honored at 55th anniversary celebration

Mr. and Mrs. Marion M. Richards of Midland were guests of honor at a 55th wedding anniversary celebration, hosted by June Judkins and Mr. and Mrs. Gene McCain.

Richards and the former Wilma Witham were married June 2, 1934, in Oklahoma City. They have two daughters, Ms. Judkins of Midland and Mrs. McCain of Crane, as well as three grandsons and one great-grandson.

The Richards moved to the Sprayberry area in 1952, and to Midland in 1962. Richards retired from Phillips Petroleum Company in 1974, after 40 years of service. The couple are members of St. Paul's United Methodist Church in Midland.

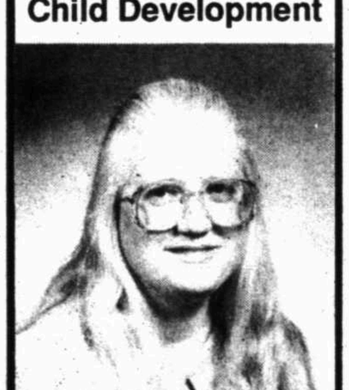

Custom outdated

Copley News Service

"The African custom of having grooms pay a 'bride's price' — called a lobola — to the bride's parents may have to be altered to encourage more men to marry and to reduce the number of children born out of wedlock," writes Gillian Mukula in The Times of Zambia.

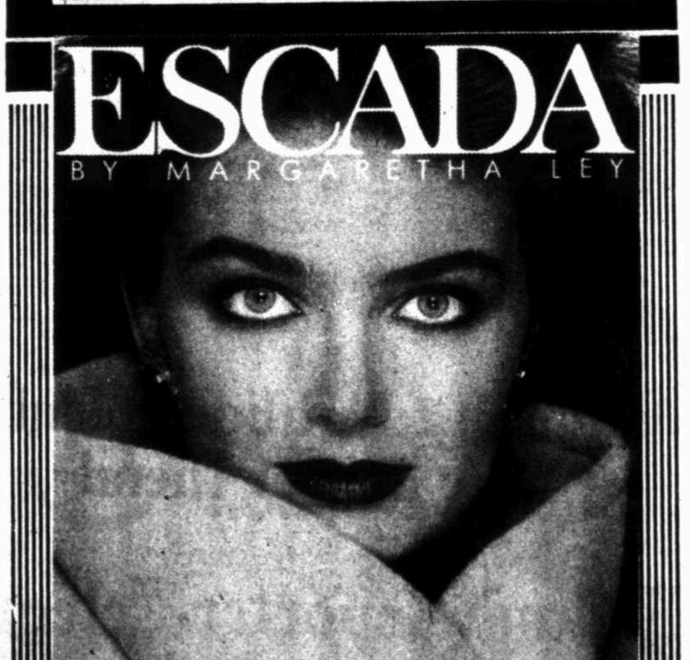

Exorbitant lobolas are also seen as "tantamount to selling off a daughter."

Heart Answers

Hyper-cholesterolemia

Hypercholesterolemia is a condition in which too much cholesterol, a fatty wax-like substance, is circulating in the blood. Cholesterol is manufactured by the body, and comes from animal substances, such as meat, egg yolks and whole milk dairy products. When the amount of cholesterol becomes excessive, it is deposited on or in the lining of the arteries with other fatty substances. Over a period of years, the lining of the arteries becomes thicker and harder, and the channel through which the blood flows is narrowed. When an artery which supplies the heart with oxygenated blood closes off, a heart attack results.

Caring for three babies at once keeps Dad 'on the go'

By ANA VECIANA-SUAREZ
New York Times News Service

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — He wears the burp rag over his left shoulder as naturally as most men wear ties. In the world of soggy diapers and 3 a.m. feedings, Mike Sadowski is the self-proclaimed chief burper. He is also top bottle washer and head cook.

Watch him in action.

He bounces. He jiggles. He jostles. He rocks, he paces, he sits. He strolls. He coos and cajoles. He changes diapers. He warms milk. He spoons cereal. He rings bells. He swings toys. He shakes rattles.

Is there anything he doesn't do?

This is the tale of three babies and a man, and what happens when Mom and Dad switch roles. This is the tale of Mike Sadowski, an aspiring physical therapist and outdoorsman extraordinaire who cares for his 4-month-old triplets at home.

"When you have three, people don't realize what it's like. They don't have any concept. They consume your entire day. You go from one to another trying to keep one quiet so the others don't wake up."

Nothing — not a younger brother, not two nephews — prepared Mike for what is likely the most important job of his life. "I had pets, but it's hardly the same," he said in his matter-of-fact way. "I had no experience with babies whatsoever. None."

Yet, while wife Francine, 27, goes off to teach learning disabled students at Indian Pine Elementary, Mike, 29, stays home with Aaron Benjamin, Ryan Michael and Alyssa Nicole. And they have a ball. Sometimes.

"PEOPLE WONDER if Mike can do it, and I say, 'Who knows if Fran can do it?' " Francine said. "What makes people think that the mother will be able to handle three babies at once and the father won't?"

Mike's natural aptitudes weren't always so domestic. He hunts. He fishes. He loves the outdoors. His dream is to move west, out to Montana where there are proud mountains and open spaces. In the living room, mule deer antlers are mounted over one of the babies' changing tables.

The Sadowskis hadn't expected three babies. They planned on one. They planned that after Mike's layoff as an electrician in a surface mine in North Dakota, he would return to school in Florida while Francine worked. But children have a way of messing up the best-laid plans.

Mike's schooling has been delayed by a year, but he returns to Palm Beach Community College this spring. He'll go to school at night and care for the children while his wife works.

"I haven't figured out when I'll study yet," he said.

He'll find a way. People have come to expect that of him.

"He's always taken an above average interest in the babies," said Dr. Alan B. Cohen of West Palm Beach, the triplets' pediatrician. "Sometimes you don't meet the father until you have known the mother several years, or you meet him once at the beginning and don't see him again."

Not Mike. Before the babies were born, he went to every office visit with his wife except one. "It's almost like he had the babies, too," Francine said.

His mother-in-law is one of his biggest fans.

"I think this is the most wonderful thing in the world," said proud grandma Dorothy Slonaker, who lives in Lake Worth. "Michael is the most patient person when it comes to his children. He normally has a temper you wouldn't believe, over political baloney mainly. But with his children and his wife, he's wonderful. I think he's a better mother than many mothers I know. My daughter is a very good mother, but he, as a father, is something else."

MIKE IS plain-spoken and good humored, the type of boy mothers want their daughters to marry. He speaks the language of acceptance.

On money: "Neither of us is extravagant in our tastes, but we've had to make some concessions. We're not destitute, but we don't have money to throw around. There are a lot of people worse off than we are."

On patience learned: "They can be a lot of fun. But there are times they push you to your wit's end."

On baby sitters: "I'm not concerned about the kids being all right. I'm more concerned about the people taking care of the kids being all right. If all three start in together, it can be real nerve-racking."

On dexterity: "You learn to use only one hand to do anything because you always have an arm taken up with a baby."

The Sadowskis found out Francine was pregnant with triplets in her 10th week, during an ultrasound. Neither side of the family had a history of multiple births, and Francine had never taken fertility pills.

The triplets were born Dec. 27 at Good Samaritan Hospital, a month early but not too soon for 5-foot Francine, who had gained 44 pounds and had been assigned to bed rest. At birth, Aaron weighed 4 pounds, 4 ounces; Ryan was 3 pounds, 14 ounces; Alyssa was 3 pounds, 13 ounces. (Now, Aaron is just more than 13 pounds, Ryan is a little more than 12 pounds, and Alyssa is more than 11 pounds.)

TODAY, THE Sadowskis' two-bedroom house in Lake Worth is overwhelmed with brightly colored gadgets — swings and play sets, rattles and pens and gyms and bells. Diapers — the babies use about 30 a day — are neatly stacked under the changing tables. In the kitchen, the countertops are filled with used and unused bottles. On a board nailed to the wall, Mike keeps track of the triplets' feeding schedule. Two firmly written admonitions tell the story: "Don't forget the vitamins! Mark down times!"

The children's bedroom is painted a cheery yellow and decorated with the traditional knickknacks of babyhood: Mickey and Minnie riding a rocking horse on the wall, a cross made of pastel blocks, plush animals on the white dresser, Disney-character sheets on the cribs. A childlike painting of the little red engine hangs from one wall, tooting a mantra that might be more appropriate for Dad: "I think I can ... I think I can."

Most days he can, and with admirable efficiency. Other days ...

"I get claustrophobic sometimes. It gets to a point that I want to go anywhere just to go out. If it gets really bad, there's always the cribs in the other room and closing the door."

There are no typical days. Some days the triplets are mellow. Some days they are devils. The babies don't usually wake up at the same time, but their feedings do overlap. When this happens, Mike performs a juggling act using feet, hands, chin and nose to keep everyone content.

Tender moments abound. In the early afternoon one Tuesday, Mike propped big-eyed Alyssa on a corner of the sofa with three pillows.

"You silly, silly little girl," he cooed. "Sillysillysilly."

She gurgled contently.

AND BUSY moments. Bathtime before bedtime is like a fire drill, Sadowski style. Non-stop work for two hours. Mike and Fran feed two triplets at the same time, while taking turns running bath water, preparing PJs and entertaining the third baby.

And there are moments of sheer exhaustion. "By the end of the day, I just want time to myself to relax. I usually get a beer, drink half of it and fall asleep."

Victories are small but easily savored. When at 11:45 a.m., after two hours of fussing, Aaron finally succumbs to sleep, a sudden and absolute quiet descends on the living room like the return of a second-grade teacher to her unsupervised classroom. Time for a brief moment of introspection.

"It is hard to believe you have triplets," he sighed. "I never knew anybyody who had triplets. I'll go out and think about it and not quite believe it."

Of course, there was a period of adjustment.

"When he first picked them up, it was like this," described Francine, making a face and holding her arms away from her body. "And when he burped them, it was like this."

She batted the air tenderly. Mike smiled sheepisly.

"He's come a long way," she added.

Visitors see the easy parts. They don't witness the sleepless nights, the terrifying colicky cries. They don't always realize that nothing is simple anymore. Loading the '86 Chevy Astro — the van bought just for the babies — takes time and engineering skills. In go three car seats, the triple stroller, a fattened diaper bag, assorted toys, the play pen, infant seats and whatever else the Sadowskis can fit in.

UNDERSTANDABLY, THERE haven't been too many excursions. The triplets visit the pediatrician on Saturdays and occasionally trek to their grandmother's and aunt's. If they get unbearable at bedtime, Mom and Dad load them up and ride them around, a favorite trick of all parents.

Twice they've gone to the mall, but they're accosted by wide-eyed fans who run from all directions, shrieking: "Look at that! Triplets!"

Francine has weathered serious second thoughts, too.

"Last night I was sitting here and I said, 'I don't want to work anymore.' But I know that's not possible. It's just that he'll see things first, and I'll see it second. I don't feel too guilty because it's another parent, but I do feel like maybe I'm getting cheated," she said.

Mike, however, has this all figured out. By the time he finishes his physical therapy studies, the children will be ready to attend nursery school. Francine and he can switch roles again.

He likes to ponder the future as he gives Aaron his bottle. Father and son sit silhouetted in the blond light of early morning, and the baby's loud, sucking noises could soften the hardest heart.

"I'm looking forward to them wrestling around, playing, doing kid things," Mike said. "They're going to go through a lot of milestones together — getting their driver licenses, the prom. That'll be fun."

He paused, imagining them beyond adolescent angst. And he realized with characteristic resignation: "I'm well aware of college costs, too. I just hope they do well enough in high school that they position themselves for scholarships.'

Salesman Confesses
Claims newspaper is best salesman
On Monday, Jules Wintner, owner of a local retail establishment, confessed his job as a salesman was obsolete due to the impact of newspaper advertising. Wintner, in an exclusive interview, said sales were made in the local paper instead of in the store.
"Sure, we get a chance for additional sales," Wintner commented, "but the newspaper has become our best salesman." Wintner reported that consumers name the local newspaper as their usual source of "Best Buy" information, 10 times more than radio or television. This conforms with a recent Consumer Data Service report that indicated 60% of the consumers seek "Best Buy" information from the newspaper versus only 6% for radio and 7% for television.
Wintner later remarked that because the newspaper is read by all Texans, regardless of income, his business was able to sell both upper end products as well as value priced items. "No matter what we're selling, we get good response in the newspaper," he said. "In fact, the more expensive the product, the better our response seems to be." This fact is substantiated in a survey by the Texas Newspaper Advertising Bureau that documented readership of the newspaper increases as income increases. In the survey, almost 75% of Texans with incomes exceeding $50,000 a year read the newspaper.
"My job has become redundant," Wintner admitted. "Used to be I had to really sell each customer, but now I'm just an order taker." Asked what he intended to do now that the newspaper was doing most of the selling, he replied, "Spend more in newspaper advertising than last year."

Salesman admits he "never had to sell anything" because of newspaper ads
"Our customers shop the newspaper. When they walk in the door, they already know what they want, they know the price and often have the ad with them."

DEAR ABBY

Fathers, sons: Sharing that counts

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR READERS: For Father's Day I offer the following series of letters from my column in 1975:

DEAR READERS: Some time ago, I published a letter signed "Not Guilty." It was written by a father who was driving home from a father-son fishing trip in a blinding rainstorm when the car skidded into a ditch. The boy was killed and the father walked away with only a small cut on his nose.

The father wrote: "I wasn't going fast, and I wasn't careless. It was just a freak accident. He was only 16 and our only child. My wife blames me for our son's death. We once had a good marriage, but now we are practically strangers. Can you help me?"

I urged the man to get his wife into therapy, and although I never heard from him again, his letter prompted this one from another father, which I think is appropriate for publication on Father's Day:

DEAR ABBY: I read that touching letter from a father, "Not Guilty," who had lost his only son in a car accident while the two of them were returning from a fishing trip. His wife made it clear that she blamed him for the boy's death. Consequently, each is bearing the loss alone.

Five years ago, our 23-year-old son, less than a year out of Harvard, came home to die of cancer. He lived exactly one month from the day he came home. During that last month of his life, I spent practically all my time with him. We parted confident of each other's love.

Abby, when he was growing up, I didn't spend much time with him. (I was too busy.) How I wish I had taken him on a fishing trip now and then, as this dad had done. It seems to me that this dad must have been a good father before the Almighty intervened for reasons of His own. There are worse ways for a father and son to part; in fact, it is difficult to think of a better way than in an atmosphere of love and sharing.

A generation or two ago, when child mortality was higher, married couples seemed much more aware of a fundamental fact: Although we love our children dearly, we lose some through death, some leave us, some displease us, and occasionally one will crown our old age.

But in the end, all parents have each other. Our children are just "loaners." We start out a couple, and we'll most likely end as a couple, finding comfort and fulfillment together in a union ordained by God.

My wife and I felt that ours was a good marriage, but the loss of our son drew us even closer together. I hope "Not Guilty's" wife will realize that the intimacy of shared tears can add a precious new dimension to their marriage. — OHIO DAD

DEAR ABBY: On Mother's Day you ran a beautiful prayer to be recited in memory of deceased mothers. If you have a prayer for deceased fathers, will you please print it on Father's Day? — A LOVING DAUGHTER

DEAR DAUGHTER: The following is the prayer from the Hebrew Union Prayer Book:

Thy memory, my dear father, fills my soul at this solemn hour. It revives in me thoughts of the love and friendliness which thou didst bestow upon me. The thought of these inspires me to a life of virtue; and when my pilgrimage on earth is ended and I shall arrive at the throne of mercy, may I be worthy of thee in the sight of God and man. May our merciful Father reward thee for the faithfulness and kindness thou has ever shown me; may he grant thee eternal peace. Amen.

AT WIT'S END

'Dear old dad' faces new challenges today

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

Few women will be surprised to learn that when they marry, they choose a man "just like dear old dad."

I loved my dad. I have a picture of both of us on a riverbank in Covington, Ohio. He is holding a 29½-pound carp. We look like we just won a lottery. A couple of hours after that picture was taken, my dad ordered me out of the boat with my mother and said if I so much as stepped foot in it again, it would be over his dead body. I made too much noise and scared the fish away. He ordered my mom to do something with me. He didn't care what!

He was always saying that. "Do something with her. Make her stop crying. Feed her. Take her to the bathroom. Clean her up. Better take her temperature. She's calling for you." (This in the middle of the night.)

I was his child, but I was Mom's job. They didn't have "bonding" in his day. When I was born, he was nowhere in sight. That was a woman's job, too, and he got "out of the way" and let her do it. It was the same thing with discipline. "Listen to your mother when she speaks. She has my permission to whip your backside, so don't think you can get away with something while I'm gone."

So what DID he do? To begin with, he was the head of our family. He spoke for us. He planned the vacations. He dictated when we ate and when we slept. Even when I was little, I had the sense that when he left the house in the morning with his lunch, whatever he did, he did it for us. He provided our lives with the basics and a few goodies. He was the tower of strength that we could lean on. Even when I was afraid to go into the basement, he never was. On rare occasions when he kissed me or cried, it made me feel wonderful that I could do that to him. There was never any question of being wanted and loved.

Frankly, I don't think my father would be judged a good one by today's standards. And maybe that's what we're doing to the fathers of the '80s — judging them by a father standard we no longer support.

Somewhere between my dad and today's fathers, the rules changed. New lines were drawn. Expectations were added. Their roles are fuzzy, to say the least. One moment they're supposed to "share the child," and the next they're being told, "I'll raise my son alone. Just make sure your support checks are on time." One minute their presence is vital, and the next, in a world according to Garp, a single mother wants a child but not a husband. If they're confused, maybe it's because many have emulated their fathers. That's where they learned about fathering.

The "father track" is still under major construction. There are breakdowns, detours, and sometimes nine miles of bad road on the march to where they're supposed to be.

Women may marry someone who is like "dear old dad," but if they're lucky, they'll get more than they bargained for.

Erma Bombeck is a columnist for Universal Press Syndicate.

Employee fraud costly

Experts on losses due to employee dishonesty claim that only 10 percent of business internal fraud is ever detected and that only one-tenth of that is ever reported.

Yet experts say that 20 percent of business failures are the result of internal fraud.

Overtraining hazardous to athletes' improvement

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's like you suddenly got old.

Granted, it's been a while since you've had big bursts of improvement. But now, even though you're working harder, you're getting worse.

It's called overtraining, and it's means you've literally had too much of a good thing.

The good thing is exercise, which makes you stronger by slightly damaging muscle fiber, triggering the body to make the muscle stronger as it heals.

Too much, however, deprives the muscle of time to heal, and may lead to overuse injuries as you batter a bone, ligament or muscle past the breaking point.

If you feel sluggish and weaker, and the feeling persists for several days, then you may be overtraining, says David Costill, director of the Human Performance Laboratory at Ball State University, Muncie, Ind.

Coaches, and researchers such as Costill, often can read the symptoms of overtraining in an athlete's numbers — for instance, distance or time. In runners, swimmers or weight trainers, it's easy to match current performance against previous achievements.

In team sports, where the numbers belong to the team and go on the scoreboard, overtraining may not be as noticeable, Costill says.

But you can spot it. In basketball, for instance, "the guy just goes cold and makes one out of 10 at the foul line," the researcher says.

The typical cure for overtraining is rest. Costill recommends a halt in training, or at minimum a reduction in activity, for at least three to seven days.

Trying to make an athlete do it can be harder — especially the elite ones, who worked their way to the top of the heap.

"They train like a maniac, and think that will make them better," says Costill.

Psychologists feel overtraining may be the curse of perfection — the unintended result of the competitive drive that pushes achievers toward success.

It develops from an addictive frame of mind in which training takes top precedence, says psychologist James M. Jones, executive director for public interest at the American Psychological Association.

"It's hard to imagine, but people do get obsessed, and feel missing training is one of the worst things you can do," he says.

Clinical psychologist Joseph Cassius of Memphis, Tenn., feels the drive develops from a "sense of inferiority."

"The person is telling himself, 'What I'm doing is not good enough,'" he says.

Dr. Brian B. Doyle, clinical professor of psychiatry at Georgetown Medical School, feels overtrainers are not searching for perfection as much as they are "running away from things in their life."

Cassius and Doyle feel that overtrainers can benefit, if not from therapy, then at least from having their problem pointed out to them.

But Dr. Jerry R. May, chairman of sports psychology for the U.S. Olympic Committee and psychologist for the U.S alpine ski team, says an athlete may be able to tell from his own mood if he is overtraining.

In addition, he says, overtraining can show up as irritability, anxiety, a sense of apprehension, outbursts of anger, even at folks the athlete feels close to.

Father's Day inspired by life of Civil War veteran

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — William Jackson Smart, a widowed Civil War veteran who for 21 years was both mother and father to his six children, was the inspiration for Father's Day.

In 1909, Smart's daughter, Mrs. Sonora L. Dodd of Spokane, Wash., began a long crusade for a national observance of Father's Day. She acquired influential supporters such as William Jennings Bryan.

But the many congressinal resolutions weren't successful until 1972, when President Richard M. Nixon signed an official resolution proclaiming Father's Day as a national holiday.

El Paso ... the International Experience

Hueco Tanks State Park is 860 acres of red boulders and rock formations displaying over 2,000 Indian pictographs dating back to prehistoric times.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second of a two-part series about the West Texas town of El Paso featuring attractions in areas surrounding the city.

By ELIZABETH EDWIN
Lifestyle Editor

A visit to El Paso is an international experience. Tucked in the western tip of Texas, the borders of New Mexico and old Mexico are just a stone's throw away making it easy to visit two states and a foreign country all while staying in one area. Many natural wonders and historical sites are found right in El Paso, but for those who have the time to venture to the surrounding areas, a great many surprises await.

All within a half-days drive visitors can discover the history of the Indians at the Tigua Indian Reservation, Hueco Tanks State Historical Park, and even Indian Cliffs Ranch — where a little cowboy fun is thrown in — the international flavor of Juarez in Mexico, the fun of horse racing at Sunland Park and Ruidoso Downs, the beauty and mystery of Cloudcroft and White Sands National Monument, a look into space in Alamogordo, N.M., and the list goes on and on.

One of the most historical sites in the area is the Tigua Indian Reservation, home of the oldest indentifiable Indian group in West Texas. Although the reservation is actually located within the city, it is a place unto itself.

It is adjacent to the Ysleta Mission with its headquarters at 119 South Old Pueblo Road. At the Tigua Indian Reservation and Cultural Center, the tribe's story is told from the time they settled in the area in 1680 during the great Pueblo Revolt to the present day.

Sunland Park Race Track is the home of the outstanding stakes races that attracts top thoroughbred and quarter horses from across the nation.

At the Tigua Indian Reservation bread is still baked in hornos (beehive-looking ovens).

The Tiguas were brought from Isleta, N.M., by the fleeing Spaniards during the revolt and they settled in the Ysleta area, where their descendants remain today.

Because of intermarriage with whites and Mexicans during the early 1900s, the Tiguas and their ancient cultures nearly became extinct. By the 1950s, there were less than 50 Tigua Indians still living around El Paso, according to former tribal leader Joe Sierra. Concern about the tribe's extinction escalated until, finally, in the 1960s, the Texas Indian Commission and concerned tribesmen like Sierra and El Paso attorney Tom Diamond urged the federal government to fund the Pueblo Arts and Crafts Center on the Tigua Reservation.

The tribe operates the pueblo, and in the Arts and Crafts Center, visitors can find artisans making pottery and jewelry, weaving rugs and baking bread in hornos (outdoor beehive-looking ovens). Many of these items are sold at the gift shop located on the grounds. At special times — usually on weekends during the summer — the Tiguas perform centuries-old tribal dances in the traditional ways of the Pueblo Indians and often coax visitors to join in the dance. Visitors are urged to tour the re-creations of adobe pueblos, each with a brief written history.

The center houses two restaurants, the Tigua Restaurant and the Wyngs-n-Spirits. Along with Indian specialties, the center's colorfully decorated restaurants serve some of the best, and spiciest, American Indian and Mexican dishes in the area. They are best known for their fajitas and a red chile stew. Another tasty item is the bread which is baked in hornos over mesquite logs.

The Alderete-Candelaria home, on the reservation site, houses the Tigua Indian Tribal Museum. This old adobe building, in Spanish colonial and Pueblo Indian styles, was built in 1876 by Benigno Alderete who was a Texas Ranger and served as a public officer for El Paso County and Ysleta. Before housing the museum, the old home served as a mill, a movie theater, a restaurant, an animal pound and temporary quarters for the El Paso County Courthouses.

In the 2000 block of Candelaria Street and the 100 block of Old Pueblo Road there are a number of former and current Tigua Indian houses. They are extremely old, all built of adobe brick covered with stucco or lime plaster. Some are designed in the classic Pueblo-style architecture. One of the dwellings was used as a ceremonial kiva until 1936.

The reservation serves as a living museum for the Tigua Indians and has enabled the tribe to preserve their handicrafts, homes and tribal dances, while providing an educational and entertaining experience for visitors.

If the wild west is more your style, and you like playing cowboys better than learning about Indians, take about a 30-minute drive east of El Paso on I-10 just north of Fabens.

EL PASO

There you will find Indian Cliffs Ranch, a 1,700-acre spread of deserts, mountains, sagebrush and tumbleweed that provides horseback-riding opportunities for the weekend cowboys.

One of the more popular ventures offered is an overnight trail ride that leads to Fort Misery, a re-creation of El Paso's 19th-century Fort Bliss. Overnight trips can be arranged for groups where the day's activities wind up with a steak dinner grilled over a campfire followed by singing and guitar playing under the starlight. When it's time for bed, campers pull down their bedrolls from covered wagons and settle in for an evening of sleeping under the stars and listening to the coyotes howl.

Guests rise the next morning for a pre-breakfast ride in the cliffs before chowing down on a good old ranch-style breakfast, complete with biscuits and gravy.

For those who prefer to eat their meals under a roof, at a proper table, Cattleman's Steakhouse at Indian Cliffs Ranch is one of West Texas' best known steakhouses. Meals are served home-style and include ranch-style beans, coleslaw with pineapple and fresh bread. For those who have a Texas-size appetite, Cattleman's Steakhouse's menu includes a two-pound steak among its tasty western dishes.

Other attractions at Indian Cliffs Ranch include hayrides (for groups), movie sets, a children's zoo, a snake pit, a wagon camp, "The Reservation" with the Indian Maze and the Fort Apache playground.

Another area with Indian roots is Hueco (pronounced waco) Tanks State Park, located at the extreme edge of El Paso County. It is less than an hour's drive to this 860-acre park of unusual and precarious-looking pile of red boulders that includes caves and rock formations displaying over 2,000 Indian pictographs dating back to prehistoric times.

It is believed to have been an Indian habitat that some anthropologists date back as far as 1200 B.C. The "tanks" are natural bowl-shaped cavities in the boulders. These cavities trap and hold rain water, and are believed to have been used by the Indians for their water supply.

One of the early emigrant routes across Texas went through Hueco Tanks and was used from 1858-1859 by the famous Butterfield Overland Mail which ran between Tipton, Mo., and San Francisco. The company built a stone and adobe station at Hueco Tanks — that can still be seen — where the Butterfield stagecoaches made regular stops for food, water and fresh mules.

Park facilities now include picnic sites, campsites, restrooms and a playground.

For more outdoor adventure, Guadalupe Mountains National Park — home of Guadalupe Peak, the highest point in Texas — is only 110 miles east of El Paso. It contains over 46,000 acres of undeveloped parkland for visitors to explore and enjoy. The park is open daily 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. June through August and 8 a.m. -4:30 p.m. September through May.

If you like a little more color and spice in your explorations, head south of the border to El Paso's sister city of Juarez. Whether for shopping, site-seeing or entertainment, a trip to Juarez offers an international flavor.

Passport and visas are not required for U.S. or Canadian citizens staying in Juarez 72 hours or less. The Cordova Bridge, off Interstate 10, offers free port of entry to Mexico. If you wish to travel farther into Mexico, visas may be obtained at the Cordova Bridge.

The Stanton Bridge is the downtown El Paso entrance to Juarez. This is a one way bridge, so visitors must return by the Santa Fe Bridge, a one way bridge exiting from Juarez to downtown El Paso. Visitors can drive across the bridges or choose to park their vehicles in El Paso and walk across the bridges or take a taxi.

Because driving in Juarez is often chaotic, many tourists opt to walk across the Stanton Bridge and hail a taxi to their destination once in Mexico.

Ciudad Juarez is the fourth largest metropolis of the Mexican republic and offers a variety of sites and activities.

One of the most popular tourist attractions is shopping. Because of the devaluation of the peso, bargains are easy to find and "American dollars" are readily accepted. However, tourists should be aware of the U.S. governments restrictions on retail merchandise, liquor, tobacco and plants brought into the U.S.

One of the most colorful places to shop is the Juarez City Market on Avenida de Septiembre, near downtown Juarez. Here, you will get a flavor of the past. In this large, two-story building there is a wide variety of merchandise, from silver and jewelry to vegetables and velvet paintings. It is open from sun-up to sundown, and many of the stores will bargain with customers (however, some stores do have set prices and will not bargain).

Entering Juarez via the Cordova Bridge will put you on Avenida Lincoln which passes directly in front of the ProNaf Shopping Center, a modern shopping area with a variety of shops offering arts and crafts from all over Mexico. You can park in the large lot and be close to several of the city's attractions, such as the Centro Artesanal's display of handmade dishes, jewelry, clothing and furniture. This is a government sponsored exhibit on permanent display. Also close by are excellent restaurants, resort hotels and a beautiful Convention Center.

In one corner of the ProNaf is the Juarez Museum of History and Art. Exhibits include ancient artifacts from Mexico's earliest inhabitants through modern artists.

Across the street from the ProNaf is Decor, a store featuring everything from clothing and jewelry to furniture and glassware. There is a restaurant on the top floor of Decor featuring a variety of Mexican food. Diners can sit on the glass-enclosed balcony and have a panoramic view of Juarez and El Paso.

If you're looking for a nice restaurant, Casa del Sol is located across the street from the ProNaf, too. No reservations are necessary, but weekend evenings are usually busy. Although casual attire is acceptable, this restaurant also caters to those who like to dress up a little, particularly in the evening hours. The menu features Mexican food, steaks, seafood and a variety of specialty dishes.

There also is an enclosed mall — Rio Grande Mall — that is similar to malls in the United States. Prices are a little higher on most items at the mall in comparison with other shops in Mexico, however, the quality often is better. Many items — such as cosmetics and designer clothes — are the same products that are sold in the U.S., but here they will be less expensive.

Nightlife in Juarez is exciting, ranging from late dinners to numerous dance places. For an evening out on the town, it is not uncommon for the Mexican people, particularly the women, to don flashy evening wear. Because reputations of discos and places to dance tend to shift with the crowds, it is best to ask where to go at the time of you visit.

If you are looking for something to do at night, but you were born with two left feet, try spending an evening at the Juarez Race Track. The greyhounds race year-round Wednesdays-Sundays. Horse racing can be enjoyed during the summer. Post time is 7:30 p.m.

Plaza Monumental in Juarez, Chihuahua, Mexico, is the 4th largest bullring in the world, seating 17,000.

Seating in the Jockey Club — an enclosed, climate-controlled area — is available for visitors. Complete wagering facilities accept both U.S. and Mexican currency. The Jockey Club also features food and beverages served at the table.

Just as wager-racing is illegal in Texas, so is another popular Juarez amusement; bull fighting. Plaza Monumental on the Pan American Hwy. is the 4th largest bullring in the world, seating 17,000. Easter is traditionally the first bull fight and the season continues through September.

Charreadas — or rodeos — are also popular in Juarez. Every Sunday afternoon, charros in gorgeous costumes perform daring feats on horseback.

If golf is your game, the Juarez Country Club Golf Course is considered one of the nicest courses in the area. Although is sounds private, the course is open to the public and caddies, who are rumored to know the course quite well, are available to help first timers or course regulars.

For history buffs, Juarez offers sites such as the only standing Lincoln Memorial Statue located outside the U.S. (located, where else, but on Avenida Lincoln).

The Guadalupe Mission — located in the Plaza next to the cathedral in downtown Juarez — was one of the first missions built in area. It was constructed of adobe between 1658 and 1668 by a Spanish missionary and the help of local Indians. According to legend, shadows from the mission point to the Lost Padre Mine in the Franklin Mountains where Spanish gold is said to be hidden.

A Juarez City Tour is available which covers the main points of Mexico's 4th largest city, such as the old and new residential area sections, the Juarez Race Track, the industrial area, the Plaza, an old mission, Plaza Monumental Bullring and the main shopping areas. The tour takes about 3½ hours with time allowed for shopping.

When returning to El Paso, U.S. citizens only need to voice a verbal declaration of citizenship and declare purchases to cross the border.

A word of warning: The Border Patrol takes their job very seriously, so this is no time for jokes.

Crossing the border, U.S. residents may bring back, duty free, once every 31 days, articles for personal or household use up to $400 retail value. Also every 31 days, visitors can bring back duty free up to one quart of liquor per person 21 years of age and older, and one carton of cigarettes or one hundred cigars (not Cuban).

There are also U.S. Department of Agriculture regulations on fruits, vegetables and plants, bulbs and seeds and cuttings. Check with the Plant Quarantine Division in El Paso — (915) 543-7693, Ext. 5268 — before buying these products.

If going to another country for the day is a little unsettling for you, you can still cross a border and stay in the U.S.

New Mexico is only a few miles away and its state slogan promises visitors they are entering the "Land of Enchantment."

Sunland Park Racetrack, just five miles from downtown El Paso yet in New Mexico, is the home of the outstanding stakes races that attract top thoroughbreds and quarter horses from across the nation. Dining and drinks are available. The horses run October through May. The track is located just south of I-10 West at the Sunland Park Exit, and can be seen from the Interstate.

If you continue heading northwest about 45 miles on I-10, you will find Old Mesilla, N.M., a quiet village of great charm and historic color. Thick-walled adobe buildings, which have survived decades, are clustered about the old church and Spanish Plaza as they were 100 years ago. Many fine shops and restaurants fill the area.

For Versatility Try Pearls

Whether you are attending a family picnic or spending an evening out on the town, pearls are a fashionable accessory to every wardrobe.

Pearls can be dressed up or down depending on your mood and the occasion. Pearl stud earrings compliment just about every outfit, while a three-strand pearl dog collar chocker is definitely a suitable choice for the most formal event.

The pearl itself is a very versatile gem. Pearls come in an assortment of shapes and colors. Natural pearls, those formed when an irritant becomes lodged in the mollusk and causes it to secrete a coating fluid, come in shades of white, cream, pink, silver, black and even gold. Freshwater pearls can be found in even more striking colors such as peaches, lavenders, pinks, blues and whites.

Cultured pearls are formed in the same manner as the natural pearl with the exception that the irritant is usually a piece of shell or a bead, surgically implanted.

Although pearls were once only available to the very wealthy, now this organic gem makes an exciting and affordable gift for everyone. Whether you choose pearl stud earrings, a strand of pearls or a pearl brooch, our selection of pearls will please you.

Old Mesilla's history dates back to 1598 and it is the resting place of Don Juan de Onate, Billy the Kid and Pat Garrett. Historic buildings in the plaza were standing when the Gadsden Purchase was signed in 1854. The stop for the Butterfield Stage Line of the Old West was built in the first years of this century. Today, that structure houses the La Posta restaurant; a great place for quaint atmosphere and good food.

Not far away is Las Cruces, N.M., the city of the crosses. It is located in the fertile Mesilla Valley wedged between the rugged Organ Mountains to the east and the Rio Grande to the west. This area is known for producing fine chilies, cotton, onions, grapes and pecans. It also is the home of New Mexico State University and the Pan American Center where numerous name entertainers frequently perform.

The university was established in 1888 and is the home of the Solar Energy Institute, Water Resources Institute of New Mexico, the State Department of Agriculture and the Clyde Tombaugh Observatory. Also on the campus is the Kent Hall Museum, filled with archaeological artifacts.

Between Las Cruces and Alamogordo, N.M., just a little over 80 miles northwest of El Paso, is a stretch of white sand with sloping dunes rippled by the wind. This area is known as White Sands National Monument, and is truly one of nature's wonders.

El Paso/Juarez
The International Experience

For many years, the wind has carried tiny particles of gypsum to this exact spot, forming rolling hills of white sand dunes that are perfect for surfing, getting buried in or just rolling down. Guided nature walks, picnic facilities and a museum are available.

Alamogordo is just a few minutes drive from White Sands, and for those interested in space travel and research, a stop in this city is a must. It is the home of the International Space Hall of Fame complex, often called the Space Center. The museum chronicles manned and unmanned space flight as researched and practiced by the United States and the Soviet Union. The Clyde W. Tombaugh Space Theater presents a variety of films in the 3-D Omnimax format, as well as the planetarium and laser light shows.

Nestled in the mountain pine forests of New Mexico (about 120 to 135 miles from El Paso) are two cities offering spectacular scenery and superb skiing in the winter.

Ruidoso, N.M., has a complete ski area for amateurs and professionals, as well as numerous places to rent equipment for skiing or snow mobiling. The ski season begins around Thanksgiving and lasts through April. The main ski areas are Ski Apache, formerly Sierra Blanca, and Eagle Creek.

Summer activities include horseback riding, golfing, tennis, viewing art exhibits, and horse racing at the famous Ruidoso Downs. Racing season is May through Labor Day. Shopping in Ruidoso is also an adventure, with many specialty boutiques offering unusual items.

Almost considered a part of Ruidoso is the Inn of the Mountain Gods hotel and resort, in the heart of the Mescalero Apache Indians' 460,000-acre reservation. It includes a 140-acre lake and an 18-hole, par 72 golf course designed by Ted Robinson. The restaurant at the Inn serves some of the best food in the area and also has a club that often features live entertainment for dancing.

Cloudcroft, N.M., is a quiet, clean community that calls itself the "Playland of the Four Seasons." Skiing, picnicking, hiking and camping in the Lincoln National Forest are just a few of the activities available, depending on the season.

A major attraction in Cloudcroft is The Lodge and its 18-hole golf course nestled among the pines at 9,200 feet. The hotel features elegant dining, comfortable rooms and lots of routes for walkers and bicyclists.

Rebecca's is The Lodge's restaurant, named after a friendly ghost that is said to roam the premises. The Lodge was originally built as a railroad stop in the late 1800s and the complete restoration has added a swimming pool, spa and sauna to its recreational facilities.

Other activities include Ski Cloudcroft and Silver Springs Recreational Campgrounds. Rainbow trout fishing is featured and no license is necessary. More than a dozen art galleries, studios and pottery shops offer distinctive handmade souvenirs.

If you would prefer to climb down into caves rather than up in the mountains, Carlsbad Caverns National Park may be the answer.

Only a short distance from El Paso (about 145 miles east) in White City, N.M., are the caves which many refer to as "The Eighth Wonder of the World." Carlsbad Caverns is the world's largest cave, with 20 miles of underground corridors and huge chambers. It takes about three hours to make the descent into Carlsbad Caverns, but there is an elevator to carry you back up. The caverns are filled with mysterious rock formations.

Thousands of bats leave the cave each summer night, which is a memorable sight. The National Park rangers present a program about the bat flights nightly just before sunset from May through September.

For more information about these or other sites in the El Paso area, contact the El Paso Convention and Visitors Bureau, 5 Civic Center Plaza, El Paso, Texas, 79901 or call (800) 592-6001 in Texas, or (800) 351-6024 outside of Texas.

AT YOUR LEISURE

By Sue Snelson

Midland has been all abuzz about the Ramses the Great exhibit in Dallas. We are now working on our fifth escorted tour, planned for the last week in July. The exhibit, if you haven't heard, is the single largest and most important collection of Egyptian artifacts to ever be viewed in the United States.

Ramses was first a famous warrior before he became king. He is known as the great builder of Egypt, having built at least one temple or monument in every city and town in Egypt.

Although unsubstantiated, there is some speculation that this is the Ramses that let Moses go.

The display will be in Dallas through August 27. We feel it's one of the best received Texas traveling shows we've been to.

We fly in on American Airlines' 6:40 a.m. flight, and after an action packed day we return that evening tired and happy.

We usually go straight from the airport to the exhibit. The group is assigned a time to enter; however, each person can travel through the exhibit at his or her own pace. Individual audiophones with cassettes open up the magic of the exhibit, which includes artifacts and different objects which reveal what life was like more than 3000 years ago.

Following the Ramses exhibit, our group moves on to the Dallas Museum of Arts. It is well known for the beautiful oil paintings and fine furniture of the coveted Reeves Collection. It is most unusual to have such a collection in a museum when the owner is living. The museum has gone to great lengths to duplicate the rooms of Mrs. Reeves' home.

The museum has a wonderful cafeteria, and we eat lunch there. The cafeteria even has its own cookbook for sale.

The remainder of the afternoon is open to whatever activities are going on at the time, such as shopping or sightseeing. Since we have out own chartered bus, we are free to drop people off for business appointments or shopping.

As the afternoon winds down, we choose a restaurant and relax over a nice dinner before returning to the airport.

This upcoming trip will be limited to 40 people and we encourage you to make your reservations early. In the past we have always had to turn people away.

The cost is $95, and includes air, the Ramses exhibit, the Museum of Arts and the bus. Meals are extra.

Leila Seal will handle the arrangements for this upcoming trip, so please call her soon to make your reservation. Midland Travel's phone numbers are 684-7428 and 1-800-356-9435, or you may stop by our office downtown at 319 N. Colorado.

Heat rises, prices fall in Arizona's resorts

Visitors enticed with 'Summer is No Sweat' campaign

By JANET WILSON
New York Times News Service

TEMPE, Ariz. — Now that temperatures are rising in the Valley of the Sun, hotel and resort rates are falling and tourist officials are hoping to entice visitors to the area with their "Summer Is No Sweat" campaign.

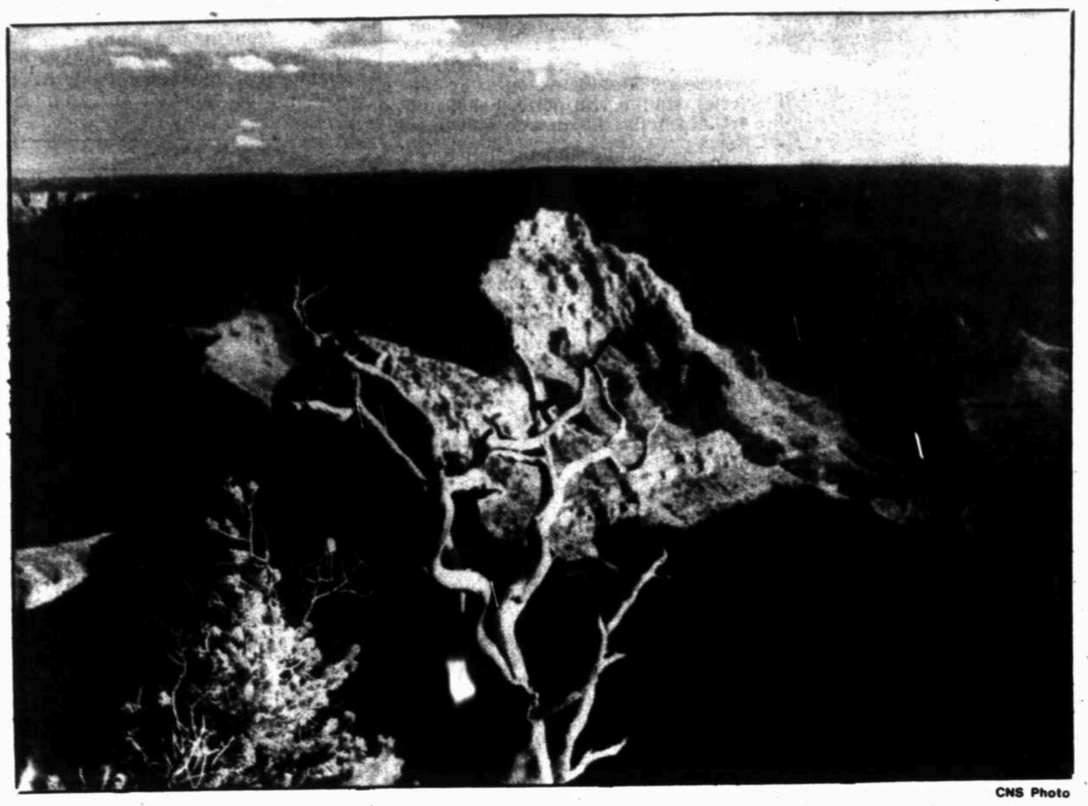

For people planning summer getaways, the next few months will provide the best opportunity to enjoy luxury accommodations at half-price rates while seeing some of the top tourist attractions Arizona has to offer.

Phoenix and its surrounding cities, with a 2-million-plus population, have been dubbed the Valley of the Sun because of the area's 306 days of sunshine each year, with average daily temperatures of 87.6 degrees. But temperatures often exceed 100 degrees during the summer, and tourist officials admit that has a tendency to scare some visitors off.

Through their "Summer Is No Sweat" campaign, tourist officials are encouraging visitors to take advantage of the summer, when the area is less crowded, saying that studies show the Arizona climate is more comfortable than many other popular tourist destinations across the country.

"We have a dry heat, so it is not nearly as uncomfortable as other areas of the country," said Jim Austin, public relations manager for the Phoenix & Valley of the Sun Convention & Visitors Bureau.

"Although it's hot in the valley, the heat stress index is higher in New Orleans, Dallas, Orlando and Miami," Austin said.

CNS Photo

The Grand Canyon is just one of the many beautiful tourist attractions Arizona has to offer, and during the state's "Summer Is No Sweat" campaign, visitors can see the sites in the Valley of the Sun at half the cost and possibly up grade their accomodations.

BARGAIN-BASEMENT deals are one of the ways luxury resorts like Westcourt in the Buttes, which caters primarily to conventions during the week, plan to fight the summer heat.

In order to lure more weekend travelers, Westcourt is offering half-price rates Friday and Saturday, a 5 p.m. checkout on Sunday and even lower room rates for guests who stay through Sunday.

The 25-acre resort, which was called "one of the most extraordinary hotels in the USA" by Travel and Leisure magazine, is nestled between twin buttes that were once important ceremonial, burial and landmark sites for Indians but now serve as the focal point of the resort.

On a mountaintop in the heart of Tempe, Westcourt in the Buttes is only minutes from the Phoenix airport. The 2-year-old resort has won architectural and environmental awards for its Southwestern design, which incorporates the desert setting into every aspect of the resort property. One b'tte has been used as a wall behind the lobby, creating an indoor atrium with natural vegetation and a cascading waterfall.

The resort has one of the largest free-form swimming pools in the Southwest, two restaurants, five lighted tennis courts, two mountainside spas, jogging and hiking trails and a health-fitness center.

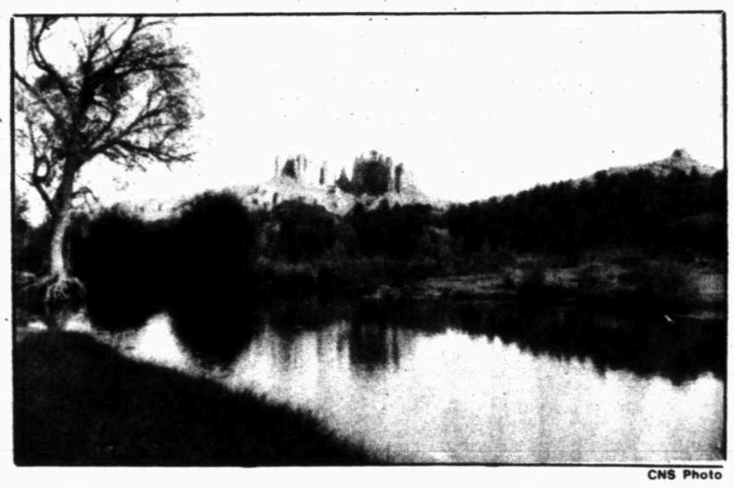

The Top of the Rock Restaurant, the resort's signature gourmet restaurant, is built on top of a promontory and features Southwestern cuisine while providing dramatic evening views of the Phoenix skyline and Sonora Desert landscape.

Sightseeing trips ranging from Indian-guided jeep tours of the Sonora Desert to hot-air ballooning can be arranged from the resort.

Last year, nearly 7 million people visited the Valley of the Sun, and with its 136 hotels and resorts and 100 golf courses, the area has been labeled the "resort capital of the world." Tourism ranks second only to manufacturing as the state's major industry, with $2.5 billion in tourist dollars generated last year in the Phoenix area.

IN ADDITION to horseback riding, shopping, gliding, greyhound racing, horse racing, numerous museums, art galleries and cultural events, the following side trips and activities are available:

- Jeep tours of the Sonora Desert, which is in Arizona and Mexico. Guides tell tall tales while driving the back roads of the West and teach visitors about the desert's fauna and flora. Steak cookouts and Indian dancing and singing can be arranged as part of the tour.
- Annual State Championship Logger/Sawdust Festival, in which men and women compete in events such as cross cutting, log rolling and greased-pole climbing in Payson, July 29-30. It is a two-hour drive.
- Sedona, a cultural community that has become a mecca for art lovers and collectors. Surrounded by the towering red sandstone cliffs of Oak Creek Canyon, the red-rock buttes provide a beautiful backdrop to boutiques and art galleries selling authentic Indian and Southwestern art and crafts. A two-hour drive from Phoenix.
- Apache Trail, a four-hour round-trip drive from Phoenix to the world-famous trail used by Apache Indians as a shortcut through the mountains to reach the early Salt River settlers. The trail twists through the Superstition Mountains and is largely unpaved, but most vehicles can be easily driven over it. It features volcanic debris, canyons, lakes and saguaro cacti that stand as sentinels guarding the area.
- Montezuma Castle and Well, an impressive ancient Indian cliff dwelling off Interstate 17 north of Phoenix, is nestled high above Beaver Creek and is more than 6 centuries old. The dwellings were built of limestone and adobe on steep cliffs to protect the Indians' property.
- Guided tours are provided at Phoenix's Desert Botanical Gardens, where more than 10,000 desert plants are displayed.

John Erickson, author of the 12-book Hank the Cowdog series, signs autographs in Lubbock recently. The series relates the adventures of Hank, head of ranch security at a spread in Ochiltree County.

It's a dog's life for writer of westerns

By WENDY E. LANE
Associated Press Writer

LUBBOCK, Texas — Just when you thought the old formula westerns pitting cowboy against Indian and outlaw against lawman were getting about as tired as a team of oxen crossing Death Valley, a new Western hero comes to the rescue.

Meet Hank the cowdog.

Hank, head of ranch security at a Texas Panhandle spread in Ochiltree County, earns his keep protecting the spread from such villainous creatures as dog-killing coyotes, egg-sucking foxes and a one-eyed killer stud horse.

In the 12 books chronicling his adventures, Hank the cowdog solves myriad ranch mysteries while engaging in such traditional canine pursuits as barking at the mailman, chasing a winsome collie named Beulah, lifting his leg on pickup tires and sleeping in his gunnysack bed.

The cowboy canine is the creation of author and ex-cowboy John R. Erickson, who has sold more than 200,000 Hank books since 1983. The latest, "Hank the Cowdog: The Fiddle-Playing Fox" was published in February by Texas Monthly Press.

The 13th volume in the series, "Hank the Cowdog: The Wounded Buzzard on Christmas Eve," is scheduled to be out this fall.

"I don't mind working for a dog," joked Erickson, 45, whose scholarly manner is a far cry from his protagonist's homespun character.

A FORMER HARVARD Divinity School student who quit his studies just three hours shy of a master's degree, Erickson spent 15 years having his historical novels rejected by New York publishers, then turned to writing for the San Angelo-based Livestock Weekly magazine.

"I ran out of ideas and I did a story about a dog which I thought would be fun," Erickson said. "I picked a dog named Hank who belonged to the neighbors and who I had known when I was ranching up in the Oklahoma Panhandle."

Erickson made the circuit of small-town church groups and civic clubs, reading his stories aloud.

"The one that people singled out as their favorite was this Hank story, so I decided I should give Hank a book all to himself," Erickson said. "I didn't know whether I could sustain the story for that length, but it worked."

He founded Maverick Books Inc. in his home town of Perryton, "which had never produced a writer, much less a publishing company," and got another Perryton resident, Gerald L. Holmes, to illustrate the book, which was published in 1983.

The book, in which Hank tires of ranch life and joins up with a band of outlaw coyotes, became such a success that Erickson created another Hank adventure.

FOR A LONG TIME, he said, he didn't think there was anything all that special about the flop-eared cowdog with the self-appointed role of ferreting out ranch mischief-makers.

"I certainly never anticipated the popularity of the Hank books," said Erickson, who has written more than 20 other books, mostly about Western life.

Hank's popularity has spawned audio tapes, a Hank fan club, T-shirts and posters. The first Hank book was made into a 30-minute cartoon on CBS television's "Storybreak" series.

Erickson even publishes a catalog of Hank spinoffs, including two volumes of "Hank the Cowdog's Greatest Hits."

The author has written more than 20 songs to accompany the taped stories, and performs all the character voices, ranging from Hank's brainless sidekick Drover to Sally Mae, the ranch matriarch who always suspects Hank as the perpetrator of any trouble on the spread.

Playing the banjo and accompanied by Perryton resident Trev Tevis on other instruments, Erickson has Hank singing everything from the raucous "Daddy Packed His Suitcase 'Cause Momma Was a Mean Old Bag" and "Every Dog Has His Day" to the tender love song, "My Heart Goes Wild for You" and "The Curse of the Incredible Priceless Corncob."

Supplementing the books with audio tapes appealed to Erickson because his writing style is heavily influenced by storytelling.

"One of the major tasks of a young writer is to find the voice he's most comfortable with that can express what he wants," he said. "I tried on a lot of voices before I began imitating the way the cowboys told stories. That's when my stories really began to click."

ERIKSON USES a folksy, conversational style in the tales, all told by Hank himself.

Some of the cowdog's zany adventures are inspired by the author's own cowdog, a blue heeler named Sophie, as well as the antics of his three children.

"A lot of those Hank episodes come from experiences that I've had or seen on ranches," he said. "Some of them come from my observations of dogs. I grew up with dogs and I used to sleep, eat and play, do everything with my dog."

Erickson's humorous depictions of ranch life were drawn from eight years spent working as a cowboy on ranches in Oklahoma and Texas.

After cowboying, Erickson's stint in the publishing business lasted through the production of 10 Hank books before Texas Monthly began publishing the books a year ago.

Changes made by the new publisher included printing books in larger print for children.

"The original Hank audience was all adults, but somewhere along the line that changed," he said. "We didn't do anything different."

With five Hank books yet to be published, Erickson said his time increasingly is spent giving presentations to schoolchildren to encourage reading. At the National Cowboy Symposium and Celebration this month at Texas Tech University, he was swarmed by young readers seeking his autograph.

Erickson said he no longer worries about running out of Hank plots.

"It's great fun writing the Hank stories," he said. "I'll go on writing them as long as I'm having fun. I don't ever want it to turn into a job, because I think the strain would show."

Tourist attractions repel Washington town residents

New York Times News Service

LA CONNER, Wash. — Before there were theme parks and multiplex theaters in America there were small towns like La Conner, living museums where life moved along like a river in midsummer, slow around the bend.

But now La Conner, like other small towns in charmed locations, has gone quaint in a big way.

As the town's most famous resident, author Tom Robbins says, "It's a gift-shop ghetto transversed by Cute Street, along which throngs of ice cream-licking gawkers pursue wooden tulips and plastic sea gulls."

Almost every day, the main drag of this former fishing village about 60 miles north of Seattle is congested with tourists looking for a piece of the very thing that many residents feel La Conner has lost.

In revolt, Robbins and 39 other local residents have countered with an organization called Lesser La Conner, whose members say they are fighting not just for weekend parking but for the very soul of a small town.

They have taken out advertisements in newspapers urging people not come to La Conner.

The word "Don't" was placed over a billboard erected outside town to urge travelers to stop and visit.

They say their goal is to create a "tourist-free" zone, where residents can find a safe harbor from the onslaught of credit-card-packing visitors.

"We look at our small-town life style as a diminishing natural resource," said Jane Stevens, a member of Lesser La Conner. "There isn't even a drug store or laundromat nearby."

La Conner may not have a drug store on its main street to serve the town's 650 residents, but it has at least two espresso shops and dozens of boutiques.

On weekends, more than 6,000 people come to La Conner, clogging the main road into town.

Robbins, author of "Another Roadside Attraction," says La Conner has become just that.

Gray Foster, a leader of Lesser La Conner, said no living thing in town is safe.

"Even the local dogs are under fire now," she said.

"The newcomers want all of them on leashes. Dogs always run free in La Conner. This used to be a town where you had two dogs sleeping in every tavern."

CLEAN AIR UPDATE

President Bush test drives an ethanol-powered vehicle in Omaha earlier this week. Ethanol is one of the fuels on the president's alternative fuel list.

Bush clean-air policy hits many industries

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

President Bush's sweeping proposals to cut acid rain and smog plaguing the nation is expected to be far-reaching, significantly impacting many industries.

Industries likely to be most heavily impacted are energy, automotive, utilities, transportation and health.

Toward a natural gas economy

Texas Railroad Commissioner John Sharp says the Bush energy-environmental proposals are "right on target" and will drive Texas away from an oil-based economy and toward a "natural gas economy."

John Sharp

Sharp says the conversion of vehicles to methanol (which is made from natural gas) and compressed natural gas (CNG) as clean-burning alternative fuels would be a big boon to the state of Texas, but the greatest economic impact would come with the conversion of electrical generation plants to natural gas. "Converting all the buses in Houston would not be equal to converting one power plant in California," said Sharp.

"I haven't seen any details on the bill, so I don't know exactly how much demand there will be for natural gas in electrical generation, but I would venture to guess that it could be many trillions of cubic feet," he said. Sharp added: "If the SMU study that shows 100,000 jobs created for every trillion cubic feet of new natural gas market is right, Texas could gain 300,000 to 500,000 new jobs.

"Natural gas is going to solve the acid rain problem," said Sharp. "There are just not that many options for cleaning up coal-burning plants. We may not get all of the market, but 80 percent doesn't sound bad." He predicts the price of natural gas will be $2.25 to $2.50 by the end of next year, and that that price will put rigs back to work.

He notes that the push to find natural gas has already begun because 50 percent of the rigs working today in Texas are looking for natural gas. "One reason there are fewer rigs working is that natural gas exploration generally requires the drilling of larger acreage tracts, thus requiring fewer rigs.

Sharp plans to lead a delegation of Texas gas producers to California in July to meet with natural gas users there in an effort to expand Texas natural gas markets.

"If there was ever a place in the nation that is the precursor of what President Bush was talking about, it is the California market. Right now the primary fuel in California power plants is fuel oil with natural gas being burned only when the ozone level hits a certain high. We want to convince Californians to use clean-burning natural gas all the time in all the generating plants," he said. California Speaker of the House Willie Brown is a co-sponsor of the two-day gas meeting between Californians and Texans.

Sharp noted that there would be more than enough pipeline capacity to supply the California market with Texas natural gas once several proposed pipeline projects are completed. He said bottlenecks in the natural gas transmission system to the Northeast were also being eliminated by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. He praised the efforts of Midlander Jerry Langdon in convincing other FERC commissioners that the federal agency should not try to regulate the economics of pipeline projects.

The Texas Railroad Commissioner noted that intense marketing efforts in the Northeast had pretty much convinced Canadian gas companies to back out of the New England market.

Methanol vs natural gas

While methanol is being touted strongly by the administration, natural gas experts such as Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro are convinced that when methanol and CNG begin to compete head to head, natural gas will come out as the fuel of choice.

One reason is the cost and inefficiency of blending gasoline and methanol. K.C. Bishop, policy coordinator for environment and health issues at Chevron U.S.A., in San Francisco, cautions that different, less-polluting blends are not used now because many car engines do not perform as well as with blends permitted under current EPA standards.

Garry Mauro

Then there is the cost of gearing up for methanol production. Engineering specialists say a new methanol plant with capacity to produce a billion gallons annually would cost $1 billion and take two years to build. The United States produces about 1.5 billion gallons of methanol annually and about 110 billion gallons of gasoline.

Also, natural gas is cheaper. The price of compressed natural gas is now about 60 cents a gallon, compared with about $1.10 for gasoline or diesel fuel, and engines powered by compressed natural gas require only slightly more fuel per mile.

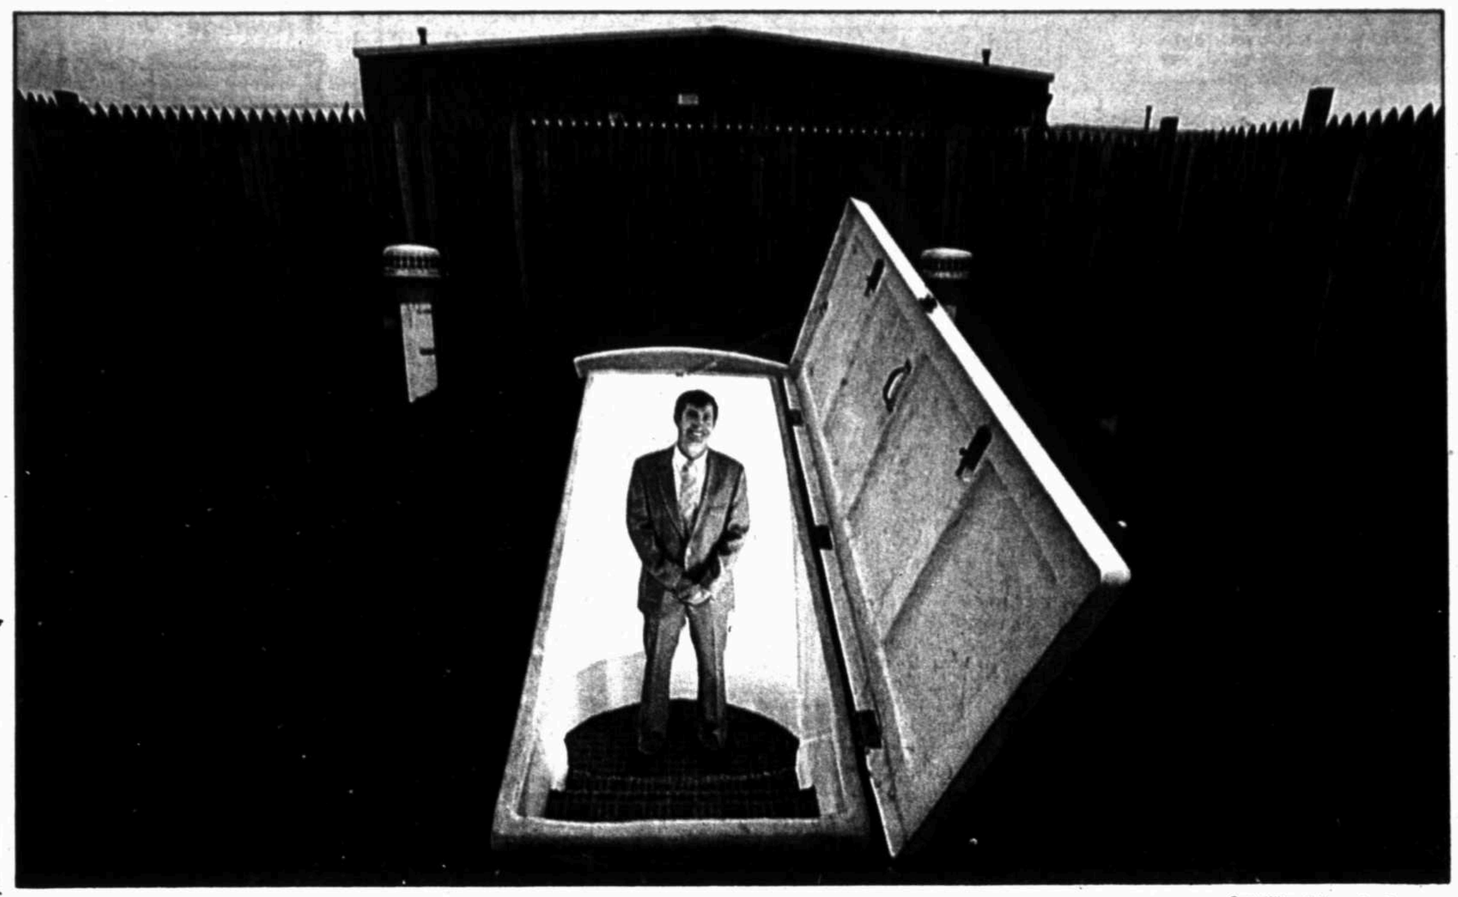

Natural gas compressors that drivers could install at home for refueling overnight cost between $3,000 and $7,000 and gasoline engines can be converted for about $1,200. But until compressed natural gas becomes widely available through service stations, drivers are expected to be restricted to daily commuting. However, one major oil company, Arco Oil & Gas, is already studying the feasibility of installing natural gas fueling stations throughout the Southwest. Sources say it is possible for Arco or another oil company to have a natural gas fueling network in place throughout the Southwest by 1993.

The cost of clean air

The legislative package, which may cost $18 billion and calls for a 10 million ton reduction in sulphur dioxide emissions and a phase-in of alternative fuels for automobiles, has drawn mixed reviews from industry leaders affected by the plan.

One economist, Nigel Gualt, with DRI-McGraw-Hill, feels that $18 billion on top of $33 billion the industry already spends for pollution reduction could have significant influence on industry costs, creating higher prices for residential and industrial consumers of electrical energy and higher prices for nearly all products. Gualt says this could diminish the ability of some companies to compete globally.

Manufacturer storms shelter business

Sells fiberglass shelters throughout tornado alley

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Steve Qualline doesn't have to look out his window to get a weather report.

He can tell when the National Weather Service has issued severe weather warnings because his phone begins ringing off the wall.

Qualline is the owner of Tornado Shelters of Odessa Inc., located on highway 80. "My wife will call and tell me they've put a warning symbol on TV, and as soon as we hang up, the phone starts ringing," he relates, adding that he has received as many as 60 calls a day the last couple of weeks, due to the severe weather the area has experienced.

The National Weather Service issues approximately 100 tornado warnings a year for the Permian Basin, which covers a 50,000 to 60,000 square mile area. Tornado season is usually from late March to mid-June, though tornadoes can strike any time conditions are right.

Tornado Shelters has been in business three years, since Qualline, 37, bought the company from an individual in Wichita Falls.

He discovered the shelter when he was moving his mother from Wichita Falls to Odessa, where he has lived for the past 14 years. "She wouldn't live anywhere without a basement, and since there are no basements in Odessa. We had to seek another solution," he relates. The solution was a storm shelter. Qualline was so impressed with the shelter he bought he ended up buying the company.

After making improvements on the original design and meeting a number of federal regulations, he received a patent. Originally the shelter was made in two parts and bolted together, and Qualline notes that they had leakage problems. They're still made in two pieces of fiberglass, but the seam where they're joined is also sealed with fiberglass after they're joined.

Since acquiring the company, he has sold over 600 shelters and says he will reach $1 million in sales this

Woman enjoys work in wireline industry

PORTLAND, Texas (AP) — There is one refrain Joyce McMillan has heard so often it's beginning to sound like a broken record.

"What's a woman doing here?"

Ironically, she's confronted with it in her job as an oilfield wireline service company worker today much more than when she worked as a cowhand among the tumbleweeds of her father's ranch more than three decades ago.

Say what you will about the accomplishments of the women's movement, a woman back then didn't need to be liberated unless it was from the shackles of backbreaking work, she said.

In those days — doing her homework in the flickering light of a kerosene lamp, hauling water from the cistern for a bath in a galvanized metal washtub, stirring the cracklings while her mother made lye soap in a blackened cauldron — she was naturally expected to pull her weight, just as a man was, she recalled.

Joyce McMillan could work the herd, ride the range, drive a mule team and shoot a rifle just like the rest of the hands on the 900-acre Downing Ranch, 40 miles north of Abilene.

In a pinch, the 5-foot-5, 120-pound redhead could even throw a rope around a calf.

Perhaps it's not surprising then that now she can don a hard hat, gloves, coveralls and steel-toed boots to operate or supervise numerous cased-hole and open-hole oilfield wireline logging operations.

She also knows production logging, pipe inspections and recovery operations, and even explosive perforation procedures.

The 52-year-old Portland grandmother has spent a lifetime doing work which — for most of the past century at least — has been thought to be the exclusive domain of the masculine gender.

Her employer, Penwood Wireline Inc., based in Houston with 2,500 employees, says she's the company's only woman employee performing wireline sales and service and wireline field supervision, and likely is among only a handful around the country doing that work.

"My dad and my mother were both extremely great people. They taught us early there are no free lunches. You work for what you get," she said.

"Dad was one of those who never wanted to hear you say, 'I can't,' unless he knew you tried. I guess that was it. I just tried and once I would, I would see I could do it."

Having successfully completed her orientation to ranch life, her first job off the ranch was running a feed lot on a neighboring farm.

Martin Davis jolts takeover world

Davis

NEW YORK (AP) — Paramount Communications Inc. boss Martin S. Davis showed with a dramatic offer for Time Inc. that the folks who gave us the "Indiana Jones" movies can jolt the takeover world with some hair-raising stunts.

Davis waited until there were 2½ weeks left before Time was to vanish into an embrace with Warner Communications Inc. before launching Paramount's unsolicited $10.7 billion tender offer for Time.

The bid enraged Time executives, sent Wall Streeters into a speculative buying frenzy and forced Time shareholders to weigh where their loyalties lay.

In a stinging letter, Time's chairman and chief executive, J. Richard Munro, said Davis' bid "smacks more of spite than strategy."

"You've changed the name of your corporation but not its character: it's still 'engulf and devour'," Munro wrote his counterpart at the company that until only recently had been called Gulf & Western Inc.

The move put the normally mediashy Davis in the middle of a battle for one of the most revered companies in the American media business. He declined to be interviewed for this story.

Unlike many entertainment executives, Davis shuns the celebrity spotlight. He likes riding horses, tinkering with classic cars and practicing photography, associates say, and lives quietly in Connecticut's affluent Fairfield County with his second wife, Luella.

But he can be tough in the boardroom. He was part of a group of outside directors at RJR Nabsico Inc. who resisted a $17 billion management-led buyout offer for the company and got shareholders $25 billion instead.

Davis was born Feb. 5, 1927 in the Bronx. He quit high school but eventually returned to get his diploma. He started in the entertainment business as a teen-age office boy for movie mogul Samuel Goldwyn.

Later he worked as a publicity agent for the Allied Artists studio, and joined Paramount Pictures in 1958 as a director of sales and marketing. He rose to be chief operating officer.

Gulf & Western acquired Paramount Pictures in 1966 and Davis moved to the parent company three years later. He was a top lieutenant to Chairman Charles Bluhdorn.

Those were the days when conglomerates were fashionable in corporate America, epitomized by the far-flung corpocracy Bluhdorn had assembled.

Gulf & Western owned companies that made cigars, clothes, bedding, auto parts, hydraulic presses and coin-operated videogames. It owned sugar-growing operations in the Dominican Republic, a pair of horse race tracks and a $900 million securities portfolio.

It also had operations in entertainment, finance and publishing, and these would form the core of the company after Bluhdorn died of a heart attack while returning from the Dominican Republic on Feb. 19, 1983.

Basin rig count drops six

From Staff Reports

The U.S. rig count continues to rise while the Permian Basin count headed lower.

According to Baker Hughes Inc., the U.S. rig count rose seven to 791, the third week it has posted an increase. Last week the tally surged 35 to 784.

After jumping 10 rigs the week before, the Permian Basin rig count dropped six to 92.

Lea County, N.M. continues to be the most active in the Basin with 23 rigs Eddy County, N.M. and Andrews County are second with eight rigs each.

Pecos, Lubbock, Scurry and Yoakum counties saw renewed activity while Crockett County was left with out activity, as was Howard County, which lost four rigs during the week.

Among major oil producing states, New Mexico saw the biggest gain with six additional rigs, followed by North Dakota, five; Colorado, two; and Louisiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania, one each.

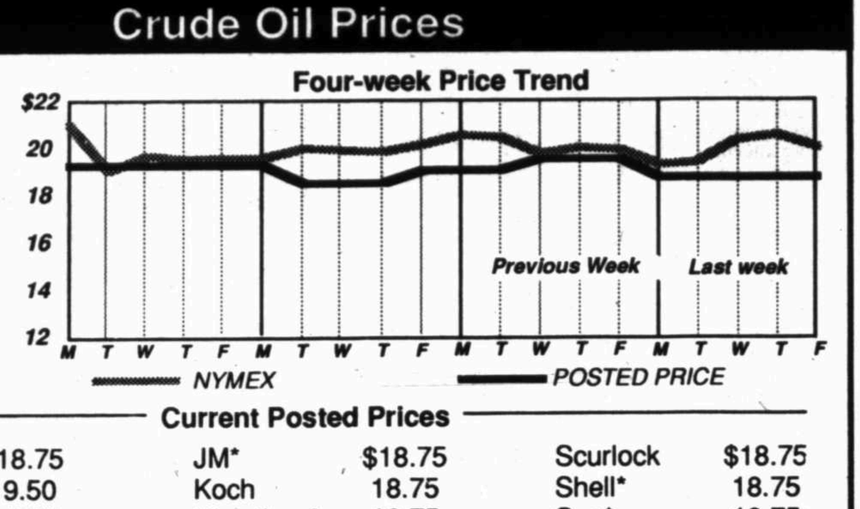

Oklahoma posted the biggest decline with five fewer rigs, followed by Kansas, two; and Texas, Wyoming and California, one each. Michigan's count was unchanged from the previous week.

Texas Permits to Drill
Monthly Totals, 1988-1989

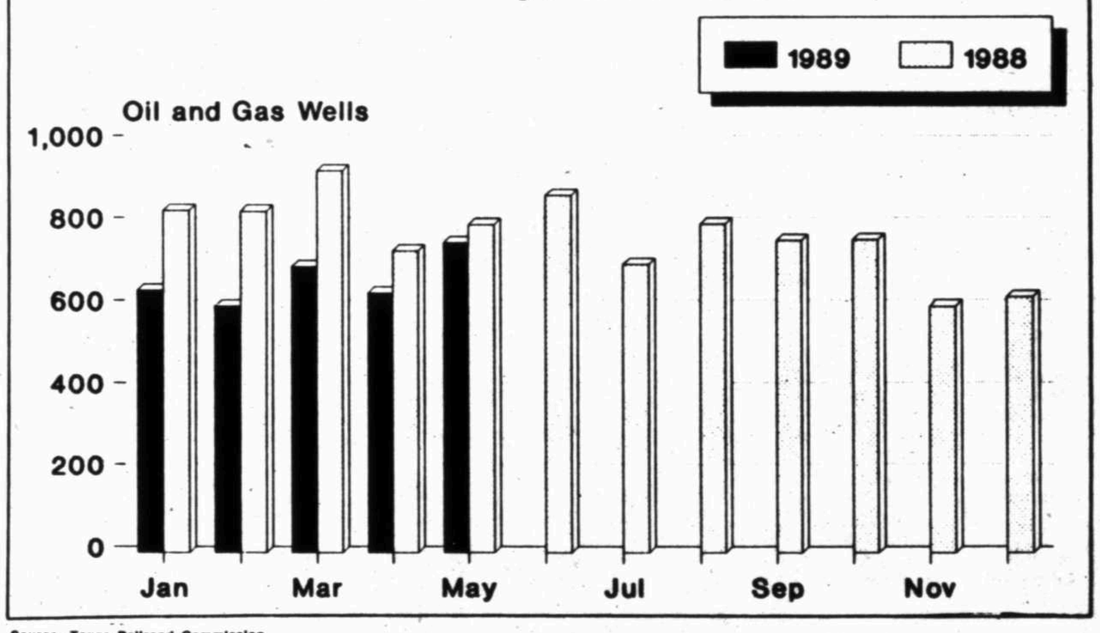

Source: Texas Railroad Commission

More permits issued

A total of 1,244 drilling permits were issued by the Texas Railroad Commission in May, up from 1,121 issued in April. The May total includes 815 permits to drill new oil and gas tests, 42 to re-enter existing wellbores, 45 permits to deepen existing holes, 106 to plugback existing holes, and six permits for other wells. There were 100 permits for new oil and gas holes issued in the Midland district, District 8. In the first five months of 1989, the commission has issued 5,418 drilling permits, down 19.5 percent from the 6,736 permits issued during the same period in 1988.

Texas Well Completions
Monthly, 1988-1989

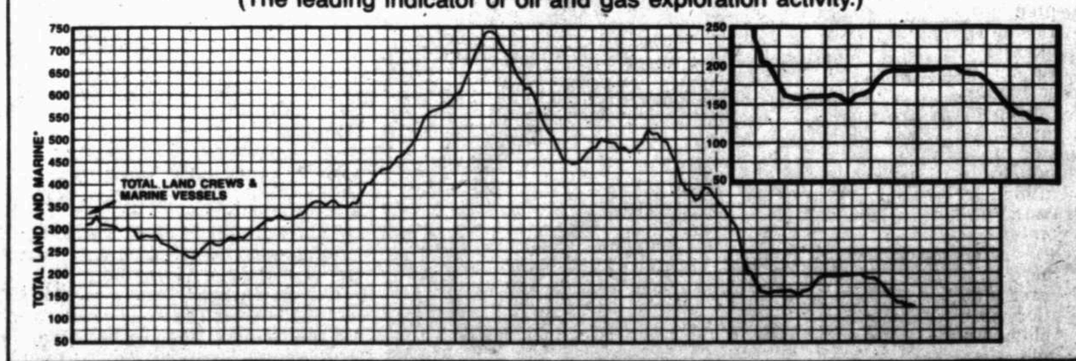

Source: Texas Railroad Commission

May completions rise

Texas oil and gas operators reported 254 gas and 450 oil completions in May, the Texas Railroad Commission reports. This is up from the April total of 207 gas and 364 oil completions. May 1988's total was 232 gas and 565 oil completions. There were 12 gas completions and 79 oil completions in the Midland area, District 8. There were 953 holes plugged last month. In the first five months of 1989, the commission has recorded a total of 3,523 well completions, a 21.5 percent decrease from the 4,489 completions recorded during the same period in 1988.

SEISMIC CREW COUNT
(The leading indicator of oil and gas exploration activity.)

Seismic count falls

The number of U.S. seismic land crews and marine vessels fell in May, the Society of Exploration Geophysicists reports. The number of land crews fell five to 104 while the marine vessel count remained the same, for a net decrease of five.

UPDATE

Generally oil companies should see the Bush plan as a tremendous opportunity that could develop into profitable new markets. But they are opportunities that will come with a price. Billions of dollars will need to be spent to add the pipelines, tanker trucks, storage tanks, service pumps and refineries to produce and deliver these cleaner-burning alternative fuels in large volumes.

Oil industry executives and consultants say consumers can be expected to pay for those new investments with higher pump prices. "If you want a cleaner environment, you are going to have to pay for it, whether you use alternative fuels or existing fuels," says Kevin J. Lindemer, an analyst at Cambridge Energy Research Associates.

On the positive side, the American Lung Association estimates that direct health costs to industry as a result of air pollution is $16 to $40 billion annually. Cleaner air would eliminate those costs. At the same time industry stands to gain by being compelled to invest in technology that makes it more efficient.

The plan would also bring direct benefits to companies that make pollution-reduction equipment. And it would of course provide the more intangible societal and environmental benefits that clean air brings.

A flexible, market plan

While Bush has laid down strict standards, he has left implementation a matter of flexibility and free market forces. For example the owners of 107 of the nation's most offensive utility plants would be required to bring their emission levels for sulfur dioxide down to 2.5 pounds per million BTU's of electricity generated, but the utilities, not the government, will decide how this should be done. The options include installing scrubbers on coal-fired units or switching fuels. Fuel switching could have tremendous benefit to natual gas producers, because natural gas can be burned in conjunction with coal to reduce emissions or burned by itself.

To reduce emissions, one plant may elect to burn natural gas only, another may elect to burn low sulfur coal and natural gas. One state may elect to push for conversion of vehicles to compressed natural gas; another may choose methanol as an alternate fuel choice.

Executives and economists generally are heartened that Bush has chosen to allow market forces to work as much as possible in the pollution-reduction effort, most noticeably by permitting companies to trade the right to pollute.

The Bush plan allows for industries to trade "pollution rights" which would be bought and sold like securities with brokers matching buyers and sellers. The public may even be allowed to participate in the trading of such rights, according to the Environmental Protection Agency.

The plan would work by allowing a company the right to keep a particular plant above the legal limit for emissions if it agreed to offset those emissions by a requisite reduction in emissions from a plant already meeting the standard.

Whether outsiders will be allowed to participate may be decided within the next few weeks. If permitted environmentalists could buy pollution credits for the purpose of retiring them, thus forcing down the legal pollution limits. In economic theory, the initial price of pollution rights would be the marginal cost of pollution-reduction, or somewhere between $1,000 and $2,000 a ton at current prices, officials estimate.

Transactions would probably be confined to those geographical area in the Eastern states where high sulfur coal is prevalent.

A coal miner's dilemma

Coal companies mining high-sulfur coal under the Bush plan have reason for concern. Industry leaders claim as many as 30,000 coal miners could be put out of work by the proposals and wildcat strikes have already taken place as a result. But producers of low-sulfur coal view the plan with cheer.

Low-sulfur coal, mined in the West and in West Virginia and Kentucky now accounts for only 30 percent of the market. That market share could go up under President Bush's proposals to diminish sulfur emissions. High-sulfur coal, which is considerably cheaper than low-sulfur coal, is mined in Eastern states such as Virginia and also Kentucky.

Utility companies now consume 85 percent of the coal produced in the U.S. and coal company officials say the impact of the proposed measures will depend largely on what course utility companies pursue. While low-sulfur coal may appear to have the edge in the president's proposal, two market forces are working against it. One, it composes only 35 percent of the nation's reserves. Two, it is considerably more expensive than high-sulfur coal.

If utilities find it cheaper to use scrubbers, the equipment on smokestacks that removes about 95 percent of the sulfur, the impact will be less severe on coal producers than if the utilities decide to buy more low-sulfur coal. As a result, analysts say, many coal companies will probably begin a drive to get utilities to install scrubbers, which can cost as much as $500 million per plant.

WOMAN

She entered the oil business for the first time in 1972, joining Go International, a division of Gearhart-Owen Industries, as a secretary and bookkeeper.

It was a chance to work indoors for the first time in her life. She remembers her first encounter with her male boss.

"I'd never been a secretary for anybody before and he said he'd never hired anyone out of a feed lot before," she said.

Though she was hired to do clerical work, she quickly became interested in other phases of the oil business and asked for permission to work wireline contracts in the field at night, once her office duties were completed.

At first her boss thought "once I got dirty, that would be it," she said.

But once he realized she was sincere, her boss began to take her seriously, she said.

Roughnecks, floor hands and other workers at the wellheads sometimes seemed to wonder how a woman — even a ranch-toughened one — would have the strength to do heavy work like lifting heavy "pigs" — the portable leadened casings that carry radioactive elements that wireline operators use to find pipeline breaks and retrieve other information from the hole.

But she said she always found ways to improvise, sometimes leaning planks against trucks to act as loading ramps so she could roll them out and likewise return them when she was finished.

"I'm not a woman's libber. I just think all people should do what they're good at, what interests them. It has nothing to do with what sex they are," she said.

When big city girls were going to high school proms and coming-out parties, Joyce McMillan was slaving over a cast iron stove or heating a flat iron to help with the pressing.

If that weren't enough, she augmented her father's ranch income by raising 150,000 turkeys and 50,000 chickens a year for a meat packer.

She still found time to help look after 100 head of cattle, more than 700 sheep and 17 horses and mules.

Though her father didn't have a tractor until she was in elementary school, by the time she graduated from high school she not only could drive the tractor, she could also run a combine, a bailer and a plow, she said.

There were no telephone lines in the area until 1960, but rural electrification brought modern power to the old homestead when she was still a child, she recalled.

She remembers the anticipation building as her family readied to do away with smoky kerosene lamps to have the house flooded with clean-burning, brilliant, white, bulb light for the first time.

"I was about in the fourth grade I guess, and we were excited, very excited," she said.

With Abilene more than 40 miles away, the nearest town was Winters, population 3,000, "counting all the cats and dogs," she recalled.

Growing up on the ranch, Mrs. McMillan and her friends had to invent their own entertainment, amusements and pastimes, said her girlhood best friend, Shirley Pierce.

Their idea of a good time wasn't a dance on Saturday night; it was to go hunting and fishing all day long, bringing home wild turkey, deer, rabbits and other game they dressed and put on the family dinner table, Mrs. Pierce said.

"We used to love to play hooky and go swimming in the lake," recalled the 53-year-old wife of the Bay City school superintendent.

"Both of us would sunburn something terrible, and then we'd have to go to school and try to convince people we hadn't been playing hooky," Mrs. Pierce said.

Also having ridden the fences and driven a mule team on her father's farm, she said such work was commonplace for country girls in those days, not exceptional.

"We worked the fields and milked the cows and helped with the chores," Mrs. Pierce said. "It was a family and you just did it. You did your share."

She recalls Mrs. McMillan as being an accomplished horsewoman with well developed ranch skills, but more than anything else being committed to getting married and raising a family.

Mrs. McMillan married at age 18 and went on to rear three children, all of whom are grown now.

She has four grandchildren. Her husband, John, is studying to be a nurse.

"I think she was very ambitious, willing to work and do any job that needed to be done. She was always friendly and smiling and just a super good type of person," Mrs. Pierce said.

Her boss, Charlie Russell, Penwood's district manager for the company's Alice and McAllen offices, said she has become valuable not only for knowing the business, but also the people who know the business.

"Joyce has been doing this for so darn long it seems like she knows just about everybody out there," Russell said. "She has good working knowledge of the business, what she does in the business, what goes on. She's just a well-rounded individual and we're all real proud of her."

Though she doesn't operate wireline trucks full time anymore, concentrating instead on supervision, customer relations, sales and other duties, she still visits wellheads almost daily.

year. He has sold shelters to people throughout Texas and in Oklahoma, Louisiana, and Tennessee. The City of Galveston purchased six to house their emergency personnel during hurricanes.

Oualline employs four to help him install the shelters. In addition, the company also has distibutors in Lubbock, Wichita Falls, Tyler, San Antonio and Clinton, Ark., which employ two to six each.

The shelters are made of fiberglass by a local manufacturer, seat 10 to 12 and are eight feet in diameter. "We've found that's the ideal size; if you go to 9 feet, it loses about half the strength," Oualline explains.

Models come in standard with battery-operated lights ($3950 installed); deluxe, with connections for telephone, television and electricity ($4550); standard patio, installed beneath foundation on new homes ($4650); and deluxe patio, with connections for TV, telephone and electricity ($4950).

The shelters, which weigh 1,000 lbs., are placed in a hole nine feet square and anchored with three anchors and steel cable. They can withstand 22,000 pounds per square inch.

Born and raised in Olney, near Wichita Falls, Oualline has been through five tornadoes, three of which he remembers. "Tornados are terribly destructive, and there's nothing you can do about them," he says.

He didn't start out to be an entrepreneur. He received a degree in engineering from Texas A&M University and worked for CRC Wireline. In addition to the tornado shelters, he owns Union Wireline.

One thing that surprised him about the tornado shelters was the innovative uses customers have found for them. He says he's sold a lot of them for playhouses, and cites one Midland lawyer who had two installed in his backyard for use storing his files.

Hasbro to acquire Coleco

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Troubled Coleco Industries has agreed to sell most of its assets to Hasbro for $85 million in cash, a deal analysts said would mean the end for the company that made the the Cabbage Patch doll a national sensation.

"Coleco always stood for innovation and the ability to take risks," said Paul Valentine, a toy analyst with New York-based Standard & Poor's Corp. "The industry is poorer because of their demise."

Under the agreement announced Thursday, Avon-based Coleco, now operating under Bankruptcy Court protection, will also receive an option to buy 1 million shares of Hasbro stock.

DAVIS

The board of directors selected Davis as chief executive over two other likely successors to Bluhdorn five days later.

Irwin Schloss, head of the securities firm Marcus Schloss & Co. Inc. and a Gulf & Western board member for 28 years, said Bluhdorn had recognized that "the Street did not appreciate what he had built and put together" and had begun the divestment process.

But Davis accelerated it, presiding over one of the most extensive corporate dissections ever.

He liquidated the stock portfolio from March 1983 through 1984.

In August 1983, the company began selling 50 businesses with about $1.3 billion in sales that failed to meet Davis' performance standards. The sales produced about $360 million by 1984.

Davis sold the sugar-growing business for $200 million in January 1985 and the consumer and electrical products group for about $1 billion that fall. He sold them because they were cyclical, required substantial capital, or faced intensifying foreign competition.

Even as the sales were proceeding, Davis began a stock repurchase program that retired nearly 46 million shares. He bought publishing companies like the college textbook publisher Prentice-Hall Inc., movie theaters. He got the company more heavily involved in cable and broadcast television.

The company's stock price is now trading near $60, vs. $9 the day before Bluhdorn died.

Its earnings have more than doubled to $384.7 million, or $3.21 a share, for 1988 compared with $168.6 million, or $1.09 a share, in 1982.

In April, Davis disclosed plans to sell Associates First Capital Corp., taking the company out of the financial services business to concentrate on publishing and entertainment. The sale is expected to generate $3 billion or more that may be used in the battle for Time.

Aides said Davis made the choice to stay with publishing and entertainment because of the long-lasting profit potential of books, TV and movies.

Davis points to Paramount's "Star Trek" program that enjoyed a short run on network TV in 1960s, but has spawned books, five movies, TV syndication revenue and a new syndicated series.

Securities analysts who follow Paramount had expected Davis to buy something big following disclosure of plans to sell The Associates, a step that he has called "the culmination of a six-year strategic transformation."

They got it with Paramount's $175-a-share bid for Time on June 7, only 16 days before Time and Warner shareholders were to vote on the proposed Time Warner merger.

If Davis succeeds, he'll have a $7.6 billion company bigger than foreign media giants such as Bertelsmann of Germany.

Firm finds future reclaiming maquiladoras' plastic waste

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Like a tobacco merchant testing the aroma of his wares, Gary Vaughn scoops up a handful of gray particles from a 4-foot-high box and brings it up to his nose.

"This is polyphenylene ether," Vaughn says, while the granulated plastic sifts through his fingers.

Moving to another box, he lifts the cover, sniffs a handful, says, "This is glass-filled ABS," another type of plastic; at another, "This one you should be able to smell. This is ABS without the glass."

As vice president of operations for International Reclamation Centers Inc., it is Vaughn's job to know the subtleties of different plastics, separating various kinds before they're ground up and sold.

The year-old company reclaims 15 different varieties of plastic from maquiladora manufacturing plants across the Rio Grande in Matamoros, Mexico, buying, sorting, grinding and selling tons of waste that firms otherwise would have to pay to have hauled away.

Vaughn estimates the 400,000 pounds of scrap plastic the company has bought in the past year would have cost businesses about $3,000 to throw away.

With the U.S.-Mexico border rapidly industrializing, he expects to have a steady supply of plastic.

Nearly 1,300 maquiladoras have sprung up on the Mexican border from Texas to California, since Mexico's Border Industrialization Program began in 1965. The plants feature primarily U.S. firms assembling products with inexpensive Mexican labor.

WHILE METALS and paper have been recycled for decades, industry has seen little value in used plastic until the past few years. However, rising raw material costs have helped create a market for recycled plastic at a time when solid-waste dumps are filling up.

At the maquiladoras, recycling of plastic waste is nearly non-existent and Vaughn says he knows of nobody reclaiming plastic from the border plants between Brownsville and El Paso, despite the preponderance of electronics and automotive-parts operations, both of which generate significant plastic waste.

Although some conservationists and labor unions have charged the maquiladoras are not paying enough attention to protecting the environment, Jim Ebersole, industrial development director for the Brownsville Economic Development Council, says the firms actually welcome ways to reduce pollution.

"I think there's a sincere desire to do it right and not foul things up," Ebersole said.

Their trash and toxic materials, however, are not always disposed of properly. In a 1987 incident, plastic waste from the maquiladoras dumped on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande spilled into the river and lined the banks south of Brownsville, fouling a wildlife sanctuary.

Of 79 maquiladoras in Matamoros, International Reclamation buys plastic from only two: a firm that makes automotive parts and one that produces containers and brushes for cosmetics.

"THERE ARE a lot of people who want to send us their scrap, but we're not prepared for it, because we're not big enough," said Vaughn's wife, Jeanette, secretary-treasurer for International Reclamation.

Steel bins of rejected steering-wheel parts, car radio face-plates, nail-polish brushes, lipstick cases and multicolored globs purged during the cleansing of injection-molding machines are stacked 20 feet high in the yard outside the warehouse on Brownsville's industrial East 14th Street.

A grinder and an inventory of various types of powdered plastic fill the 3,000-square-foot warehouse the company already has outgrown.

The firm is looking for a 10,000-20,000-square foot building, where it would add more grinders and employees, and have the capacity to take in plastic from additional plants, Vaughn said.

Five investors laid out an initial investment of $20,000 for the operation, Vaughn said. The company projects sales of $100,000 this year and $500,000 next year.

Later plans call for expanding up the border, possibly to Laredo and Del Rio.

In El Paso, a firm called JBM Industries also is about to begin reclaiming plastic from maquiladoras in Ciudad Juarez, said Ruby Mills, who operates the company with her husband.

"WHAT REALLY caught my husband's eye, I guess, is he was checking with manufacturers," she said. "Everybody has plastic trash and nobody knows what to do with it.

"These large companies are paying somebody to haul it off and it makes more sense to sell it."

Vaughn said 26 years in the plastic industry pay off during the crucial part of the reclamation business: identifying and separating different varieties of plastic.

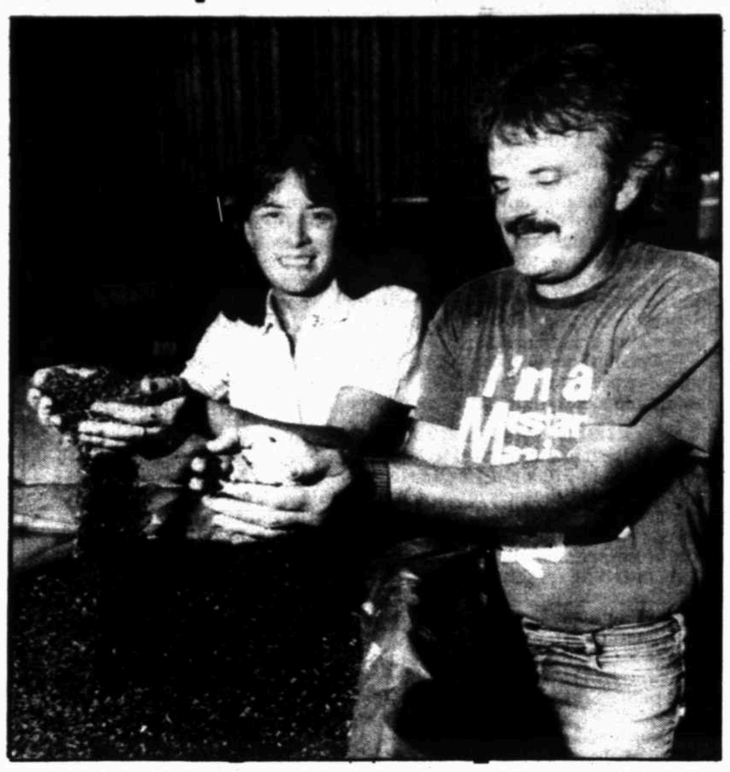

"The simplest test is to burn it, look at the flame, smell the material," Vaughn said. "Also, there are certain solvents that will attack some types of plastics and won't attack others. Most plastics have a distinct flame, smell and smoke."

Mixing different varieties of plastics in the grinder lowers their value and makes recycling the contaminated powder more expensive.

At a long table at the back of the warehouse, three women wearing gloves sort a pile of polycarbonate plastic molds for car-radio push buttons. It's tedious work, but essential to the process, Vaughn said.

Later, the sorted material is dumped in the grinder and converted into the powder that makes up the bulk of International Reclamation's inventory in huge boxes identifying the type of plastic.

The company normally has to wait until it accumulates 40,000 pounds of a single plastic before brokers will take a shipment, Jeanette Vaughn said.

Steve Jobs shows off robotic assembly line

New York Times News Service

FREMONT, Calif. — Computer maven Steve Jobs has allowed outsiders to view for the first time his Next Company's secret weapon: a 165-foot-long, 4-foot-wide assembly line.

Packed with robotic arms, lasers and computers that can see — but virtually bereft of humans — Next's factory may provide the company with a strong competitive edge in its battle to win the hearts, minds and pocketbooks of the world's computer-workstation buyers.

Next maintains that the new plant can produce higher-quality computers at lower cost than any factory in the world.

Jobs said the factory already has paid off because its unique features convinced Businessland and Canon to sign up as Next's key distributors.

"I've been to more than 400 factories and there is nothing like this, let me assure you," said Randy Hefner, Next vice president of manufacturing.

While that is difficult to verify — for competitive reasons, Hefner has never let another manufacturing expert view the plant — even skeptical journalists and financial analysts on Monday's tour seemed impressed.

For example, there is no warehouse. Components arrive just in time to be used, and finished goods leave shortly after assembly.

Quality is the foremost consideration during production. Any time the automated assembly line's computers detect two failures of the same type, the manufacturing line is shut down until a human operator corrects the problem.

Following the Japanese principle known as "Kanban," each machine performs its function only when the next machine is ready to accept another part. That way inventory does not build up and, in the unlikely event an error is made, there is never more than one defective component on the line.

The line that assembles the circuit boards — the guts of the Next computer — operates automatically. Monitored by only three people, it accepts empty circuit cards at one end and spits out completed boards at the other, untouched by human hands during the 20-minute procedure.

Two technicians at the end of the line test the completed boards. Three more humans assemble the boards and other components, such as disk drives, into finished products. Then batches of completed computers test themselves. In one test routine, the machines display the moons revolving around the planet Saturn.

Unlike most U.S. computer factories, which seem to rely mostly on low-paid women and minority workers, the Next plant appears to be staffed largely — perhaps entirely — by highly educated white males. About 70 percent of the factory workers and managers hold advanced degrees in engineering.

"Until recently, we had more Ph.D.s here than in the design center," Hefner said.

The results, so far at least, appear impressive. Consider the factory's defect rate for solder joints — where semiconductor components are attached to the main circuit board. Most companies are happy if they have no more than 1,000 defects per million joints. Next said its defect rate during the past four months is just 17 parts per million.

Hefner and Jobs were reluctant to provide other details, however. Questions about the cost of the factory, its capacity or employee salaries were deflected with the comment that such information is "company-confidential."

Norm O'Shea, the process-engineering manager, did say that virtually every process on the assembly line had been designed or modified by Next. That includes a laser-inspection system, managed by one of the computers that the line builds. (A similar routine is followed at Apple's highly automated Macintosh production plant nearby in Fremont.)

Hefner said the 40,000-square-foot factory is so efficient that it can, without modifications or additions to staff or equipment, produce enough computers to get Next to $1 billion in annual sales. He said it would take 10 times as much staff, production space and inventory for a competitor to produce $1 billion worth of computers.

Amish find work in outside world

SHIPSHEWANA, Ind. (AP) — The Amish have little use for the prefab homes, and the manufacturer loses money when its work force shuts down the plant for midweek weddings and religious holidays.

But the two in this northern Indiana community have formed a union beneficial to each.

The Amish provide about 60 percent of Holly Park Home's 260 workers, who build homes with utilities and conveniences the Amish would never have in their own. Holly Park, for its part, willingly shuts down or slows production to accommodate Amish community life.

"They're good, honest, hard-working people," said company president Dave O'Connor. "They show up every Monday morning without a hangover."

The Amish's religious convictions and culture lead them to live apart from a secular community that depends on electricity and power machinery.

But a downturn in the farming economy has led many Amish to take factory jobs that often require mixing with non-Amish and using power equipment.

The jobs provide the Amish with much-needed income, a sociologist said.

"The reality is, they have very little choice," said Goshen College sociologist Tom Meyers, who has studied northern Indiana's Amish community. "Farming is the ideal, but you do what you have to do in order to make a living."

Although the government doesn't keep statistics on Amish in the work force, Meyers said two-thirds of the area's 2,100 Amish households depend on non-farm income.

Amish weddings and funerals are traditionally held during the week, and the closely cooperative nature of the community means many workers will skip the day to attend.

"Our production line will suffer on those days," said Holly Park operations manager John Hagan. "We're willing to take that to maintain good working relations with our Amish people."

The company built a small horse barn beside the company parking lot for their Amish employees, who use horse-drawn carriages. The workers leave their carriages on a paved parking lot and put their horses in the barn.

Nationally, Amish number about 90,000 in 22 states, with the largest population in Ohio, which has about 31,000 Amish, followed by Pennsylvania's 27,000 and Indiana's 22,000.

The Amish, members of a strict Mennonite sect, have avoided most of the 20th century's technological advances including electricity and telephones.

For the Amish, the challenge comes from maintaining their valued sense of separateness, Meyers said. Many go to work with relatives or friends, and half speak Pennsylvania Dutch on the job.

"They re-create an Amish world in a non-Amish factory setting," Meyers said. "More importantly in their off-work hours, in their weekend hours, they return to the community. So their point of reference is still the Amish community."

But Meyers found some conflicts between Amish and non-Amish factory workers in their approach to work.

The Amish have no interest in unions, or in wielding political influence with management. "There's some tension around that," he said.

Willie Miller, a 58-year-old Amishman who farms 20 acres north of Shipshewana and works at Holly Park, diplomatically evades such questions of cultural conflict by reciting a truism: "If you want a friend, you've got to be a friend."

O'Connor said he sees no signs of problems.

"It's give and take between the Amish and the non-Amish," he said. "They're respected, and they're respectful of the other guy."

Business development on 'fast track'

IRVING, Texas (AP) — A high-tech business center that developers say has meticulously planned its growth is now on the fast track with the addition of a monorail "people mover".

In the elevated Las Colinas system, remote-controlled cars begin rolling Sunday, shuttling employees and visitors across most of the 1,000-acre heart of the development.

Monorail development, which began about 10 years ago, will open on schedule with no cost overruns, builders say.

"We've been told this is the only public transit system in the country in the last 20 years to build a system on time and on budget," David Brune, Las Colinas Corp. chief development officer, told the Dallas Times Herald.

A monorail route was mapped out in the early 1970s that would transport passengers around an area known as Las Colinas' urban center. Likewise, developers have carefully planned the location of every polished high-rise, condo, apartment, restaurant and store.

The rail system's designer said each of four cars can seat 16 passengers.

The cars can also accommodate up to 70 people "if you crammed in like at a phone booth," Jack Norton, site manager for designer AEG Westinghouse, said.

The rail cars travel on a 1.5-mile concrete guide way up to 30 feet above ground. The electrically powered cars, which travel up to 32 mph, automatically stop at four stations, spaced about three minutes apart, planners said.

Las Colinas officials said the monorail will benefit about 12,000 people who work in the urban center and almost 800 residents there.

"It is not designed to meet a demand. It's designed to create a demand," said Brune. "It is designed so the people will want to live and work in the Las Colinas urban center rather than the congested areas without planning."

Supermarket coupons headed for computerization

New program to track purchases, offer customers product rebates

New York Times News Service

As it apparently must for all things, computerization is coming to challenge the humble supermarket coupon.

This fall, several of the nation's largest supermarket chains, including Pathmark, Vons and Giant Food, will begin testing a program that will track purchases on computers and offer rebates to regular buyers of certain brand-name goods.

Shoppers who participate would agree to have their purchases monitored by computer. When they buy enough of a certain product, they will get a cash credit from their supermarket.

Someone who buys five pounds of a particular brand of flour over three months, for example, might receive a credit of $1.

The rebate is determined by the manufacturer.

"This is a modern, electronic, 21st-century way of handling rebates and discounts," said Dave Herriman, a vice president at Giant Food Inc., of Landover, Md.

Herriman, who calls it a "frequent shopper" program, said Giant will try the program in three stores in the Washington suburbs.

Frank Woodard, director of electronic marketing at the Vons Cos., a large supermarket chain based in Southern California, said Vons will participate in the program because "it speaks to convenience, value and saving time."

He added, "The currency of the 1990s is going to be time."

If the rebate program gains wide acceptance, analysts say, it could have a significant impact on the retail industry.

Retailers and manufacturers would be able to gather highly detailed information about the shopping habits of customers, adding to the vast store of computerized data about Americans and their credit and spending patterns.

That information could be used to refine advertising and marketing and could be sold to interested parties.

Shoppers might find the new system convenient, because they would get discounts without having to clip and collect coupons.

Marc Rotenberg, head of the Washington office of Computer Professionals for Social Responsibility, said: "I don't think privacy advocates are going to be up in arms over this program. But it does raise the question of to what extent this information becomes part of the growing pool of computer data about consumer preferences that enables companies to get well-defined profiles of every individual in the country."

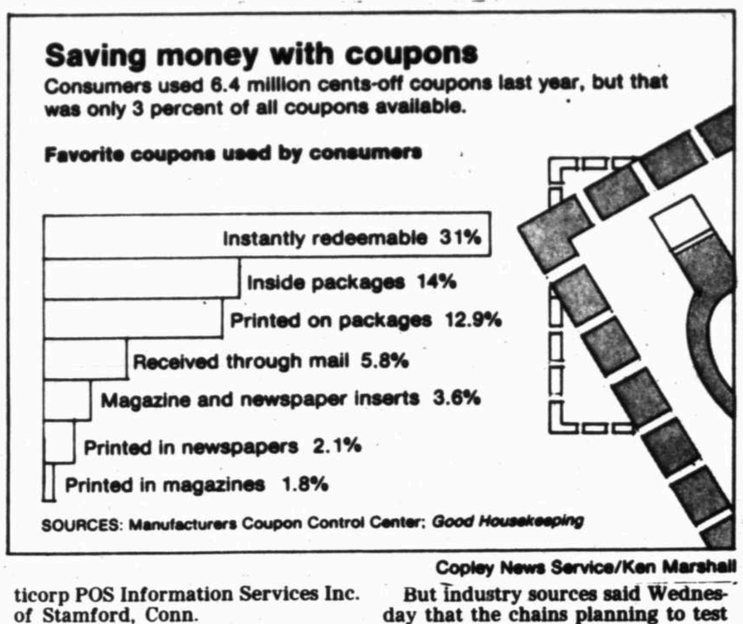

The program, called "Reward America," which will begin Oct. 1, is being created and coordinated by Citicorp POS Information Services Inc. of Stamford, Conn.

Some details about the program were published Wednesday in The Washington Post.

William J. Ahearn, a Citicorp spokesman, confirmed Wednesday that the company is planning an electronic rebate program that would involve "a handful of retailers across the country."

He said that since participation will be voluntary, privacy concerns are moot.

He declined to name the retailers and manufacturers involved in the pilot project.

Copley News Service/Ken Marshall

But industry sources said Wednesday that the chains planning to test the rebate program in some of their stores would probably include: Vons; Dominick's, of Chicago; Jewel Food, of Melrose Park, Ill.; Publix, of Lakeland, Fla.; Pathmark, a division of Supermarkets General, of Woodbridge, N.J., and Giant.

People involved in the project said most of the leading food companies were included.

The supermarkets will use the electronic scanning systems in use at checkout counters. But they will need to add personal computers to those systems to track purchases.

Shoppers at the supermarkets involved in the test will be invited to receive an identification card similar to a credit card, which will be scanned electronically at the checkout counter.

Their purchases will then be scanned as well, and that information will be stored in a data bank.

Every month, participants will get a list of about 100 name-brand products that qualify for rebates. They will also get a monthly statement tallying their purchases and telling them how much credit they have earned so far.

At the end of three months they will receive a voucher that can be redeemed at the store. It can be applied toward other purchases, but not redeemed for cash.

A shopper who buys the required amount of all the goods on the list might receive as much as $150 in credit every three months, Herriman said.

(EDS. STORY CAN END HERE; OPTIONAL ADD FOLLOWS.)

Although he thinks the program will be successful, Herriman said there were many questions still to be answered.

It is not clear, for example, if customers will be willing to wait three months before receiving a rebate.

Nor is it clear how strict the purchase requirements must be to avoid excessive rebates.

But one thing that is clear, Herriman said, is that most consumers would rather not have to clip coupons to receive discounts.

"Coupons have reached a saturation point," he said.

Manufacturers will be attracted to the rebate program, Herriman said, because "they get a bigger bang for their coupon."

Most coupons inserted into newspapers and magazines are not used, he said, so "all that printing goes to waste."

The reason his company is interested in testing the program, he said, is that it wants "to find out if the customer will find this to be a viable reason to return to our store."

If the program goes into full operation, Citicorp will offer it to any supermarket that wants it, including rivals in the same area.

Even so, the program would encourage customers to return to the same store, because only purchases at a particular chain would count toward the rebate.

Kimberly K. Walin, a senior retail analyst at Prudential-Bache, said the rebate program will probably appeal to supermarkets that have a strong presence in their market, because it is a way to maintain, or strengthen, their customer base, by encouraging customers to shop at their stores exclusively.

The rebate program has not been widely discussed in the industry so far, she added.

A spokesman for Safeway Stores, of Oakland, Calif., said Wednesday that it has had a rebate program based on overall spending for more than a year at several stores in the Denver area.

That program is also run by Citicorp.

MARKETING

Manufacturers shying away from 'junk' mail

New York Times News Service

After years of flirting with direct marketing, packaged-goods manufacturers are getting serious about corresponding with consumers.

This is no junk-mail fling. The companies call their new passion "relationship marketing."

Instead of sending coupons or free samples to thousands of randomly selected consumers, marketers are using database technology to target those most likely to buy their products.

Some examples of those cozying up to customers:

—Kimberly-Clark Corp. — The maker of Huggies disposable diapers reportedly spent $3.5 million to develop a database that includes 75 percent of the country's new mothers.

From shortly before the baby is born until the child reaches age 2, mothers receive a series of nine booklets that contain information about child-rearing — along with a plug for Huggies and a coupon for $1 off.

—General Foods Corp. — One of the most active direct-marketers, the company sent a "Wacky Warehouse Catalogue" to an estimated 4 million Kool-Aid customers.

Kids can send in Kool-Aid proof-of-purchase seals in exchange for a Kool-Aid skateboard, T-shirt, baseball cap or other items.

Some of the catalogs also include something for Mom: coupons for Jello, Cool Whip and other General Foods products.

—RJR Nabisco Inc. — Using its database of more than 20 million smokers, the tobacco company has been trying to persuade competitors' customers to switch brands by sending them a series of coupons for discounts on cartons of RJR-brand cigarets.

"Instead of it being a quick hit with a coupon to create a quick sale, we're really bonding with the customer," said George Wiedemann, president of Grey Direct in New York.

The hope is that regular communication will translate into regular purchases — and eventually brand loyalty.

"Once you get people buying that brand over a period of several weeks, it becomes their brand," said Garth Hallberg, a senior vice president at Ogilvy & Mather Direct in New York.

A few packaged-goods companies have long-standing direct-mail campaigns — General Mills has had a Betty Crocker catalog for 50 years — but most focus their advertising efforts on newspapers, television and other standard media.

By far the bulk of the $21 billion advertisers spent on direct mail last year came from traditional users — retailers and catalog companies.

But more companies such as Campbell Soup Co. — which publishes two newsletters, Franco-American KidWorks and SouperQuick Cooking — Clorox Co. and Del Monte USA are turning to direct marketing.

In part this is a result of fierce consumer-products competition that has squeezed profit margins and prompted companies to look for more effective ways to spend their marketing dollars.

In addition, changes in consumers' behavior — the increase in women working and a decline in network TV audiences, for instance — have forced marketers to look for new ways to reach targeted groups.

"There isn't a classic female sitting at home anymore, waiting to hear what she should run down to the supermarket to buy," said Barry Spelling, a vice president at Colgate-Palmolive Co., which has been building a database for the past three years.

A decline in brand loyalty, caused in part by rampant couponing, is a another force behind the new emphasis on direct marketing.

"Today there is no brand loyalty. Whoever sent out the biggest coupons last week, gets the purchase," observed Jack Baer, executive vice president at Muldoon Direct in New York.

"Companies are realizing that just leads to bigger and bigger discounts, and that affects the profit line."

Direct marketing is much more expensive (measured by the cost per thousand consumers reached) than traditional mass-media advertising — generally at least 10 to 20 times more.

But companies that use the technique assert it gives them a distinct edge over their competitors: the ability to communicate directly with individual customers.

"Having a relationship with a customer can ultimately increase your share of that person's consumption choices," said Richard Shaw, vice president for direct marketing at House of Seagram.

The distilled-spirits company is sending mailings to 500,000 scotch-drinkers this year, offering them a rebate on its premium Glenlivet single-malt scotch.

Not only can the technique build customer loyalty, said Shaw, but it will enable Seagram to cross-market — sell gin to scotch drinkers, for example.

In addition, the company knows it's reaching a receptive audience, not wasting money on those unlikely buy its products. The vast majority of coupons and other special offers sent by companies are never used.

Marketers get consumers' names from a variety of sources.

Often they start with lists bought from magazines or list-compiling companies.

Some companies save the names of those who respond to special offers for refunds, sweepstakes or gifts.

Consumers who fill out questionnaires about their favorite products will find themselves on a list. Even warranty cards returned to appliance manufacturers may be the source of a name.

East Texas plant slates reopening

SILSBEE, Texas (AP) - Louisiana-Pacific Corp. will reopen its Kirby Forest Industries plant and hire 160 people, a company official says.

Ronald Paul, southern division manager for the corporation, said Wednesday in a news release that a positive business climate provided by Hardin County leaders, along with a quality work force and Silsbee's location near forest land owned by the corporation played a major role in the decision.

Louisiana-Pacific closed the plant in January 1987 and laid off nearly 800 employees after purchasing the plant from the Santa Fe Southern Pacific in late 1986.

Card firms put words in everyone's mouth

NEW YORK (AP) — Father's Day card browsers faced a seemingly endless choice of saccharin-sweet love messages and bad-taste zingers this year, tailored to senders ranging from first-born children to adoptees.

The card glut reflects an effort by makers to capitalize on the time-strapped consumer's quest for convenience. They're turning out more types of cards and cramming them into store space approaching saturation.

If you looked past the Father's Day racks, the categories go far beyond run-of-the-mill anniversaries, birthdays, baptisms and bar mitvahs.

The holiday lineup has lengthened into a string spanning more days of the calendar. Christmas, Valentine's Day, Mother's Day, Easter, Father's Day, Halloween and Thanksgiving are the leaders. But Sweetest Day, Mothers-in-law Day and Boss's Day are getting space too.

No occasion is too obscure or private. Safe-sex friendship cards warn about the dangers of AIDS. Conventional get-well messages now include versions for the terminally ill.

One company recently unveiled a faxable greeting card, betting that use of facsimile machines will get trendier than it already is.

In their zeal to satisfy every taste and circumstance, card companies seem determined to make sure no one ever fumbles for words.

Card sending may be a widely held habit partly because many people simply don't know how to express their thoughts in writing, officials of the $3 billion-a-year card industry say.

Nonetheless, they're not taking any chances on missing a market of literate card senders. Many supply artwork-adorned versions with empty space for customers who have the time and inclination to write their own.

Most buyers probably jot down a thought or two anyway, supplementing the generic sentiments, but even so some may feel guilty as they span the racks for something to send.

Commentator Andy Rooney has put his feelings about greeting cards this way: "Why are we buying someone else's words to convey supposedly intimate sentiments? Doesn't anyone just sit down with a blank piece of paper anymore and write a simple note to someone on a special occasion?"

More often than not, the answer is no.

Industry analyst E. Gray Glass III of Prudential-Bache Securities Inc. says consumers seem to be clamoring for alternative cards that are becoming more plentiful.

These non-occasion cards, appropriate any day, are part of the industry push to develop new card-sending opportunities.

"That's going to have the effect of expanding the per capita sending of cards," says Glass. "Cards are also impulse purchases so the idea is that you should have as many types of cards available on the market as possible."

Marianne McDermott, executive vice president of the Greeting Card Association, says consumers have become more demanding in choosing cards and makers have reacted nimbly to social change, creating a card-choice explosion.

"People aren't happy to pick up just any card, it has to say just the right thing," McDermott says.

The challenge is that cards are proliferating but the growth in retail distributors has slowed to a crawl.

Space-wise, one of the few remaining card-selling opportunities is in mass merchandizing outlets and supermarkets.

"Food stores are the last to fill up," says McDermott. "There's still some room for expansion there."

American Greetings Corp., the Cleveland, Ohio-based company that ranks second to industry leader Hallmark Cards Inc., always has maintained a strong mass market presence. Its cards are carried in giant retailers such as Sears, Roebuck and Co., K mart Corp., big discounters and drug chains.

Spokesman John Hernandis says American Greetings is trying to enhance its good position within the mass volume retailing business. Responding to retailer needs, it's making shelf space more productive.

Redesigned cabinets increase density, accommodating more cards. High-visibility locator signs make it easier for shoppers to find what they want.

Helping shoppers locate desired cards has grown in importance partly because women, who buy about 90 percent of the 7 billion greetings cards sold annually in the United States, have less time to look. Many work full-time.

American Greetings also is emphasizing a concept called seasonal program marketing. They did it first this past Easter by grouping all Easter merchandise — cards, party items, giftwrapping and plush toys — around a central theme. Bloomer Bunny was the pitch rabbit for the stuff.

Hernandis says the company intends to use this approach every holiday. Placing related merchandise readily at hand makes people more apt to buy.

"You end up spending more, buying more than you would normally," says Hernandis. "You may have your paper cups and paper plates, but you may not be even thinking about streamers."

Gibson Greetings Inc., based in Cincinnati, Ohio, has found ways to increase card and related merchandise sales in supermarkets, which now account for about 15 percent of annual sales industrywide vs. about 7 percent in the early 1980s.

Greg Ionna, vice president of marketing, says Gibson has identified several natural tie-ins between foods and cards. Valentine's Day cards have been placed in candy aisles, puppy and kitten calendars have crept into pet food shelves and cards are appearing alongside flowers in grocery-store floral departments.

"There's lots of opportunities, we believe, to cross merchandise with other products," Ionna says.

Hallmark, of Kansas City, Mo., dominates what it calls the social expression business, with an estimated 42 percent of the market, followed by American Greetings with about 32 percent and third-ranked Gibson with about 10 percent. Possibly as many as 1,000 other companies share the rest.

The rankings are only analysts' best guesses because Hallmark is a private company and doesn't disclose many financial details.

Soviet airline begins U.S. marketing campaign

NEW YORK (AP) — Urging Americans to "come experience glasnost," the Soviet national airline Aeroflot is launching its first major marketing campaign in the United States.

Aeroflot, the world's largest airline, said it has increased its flights from New York and Washington to Moscow from five a week to eight as of June 5. The Soviets said they also plan to build about 25 new hotels in the next two years to handle an increase in foreign tourists.

To make the plan work, airline officials told a news conference Wednesday, Aeroflot also would have to work to improve its reputation for bad service and inefficiency.

"It was difficult or terrible before to reach Aeroflot (by phone)," said George Terentiev, commercial manager for Aeroflot in the United States.

"Aeroflot recognizes we have a way to go to earn your confidence. Unlike Trump, we know it's hard to build a great airline overnight," he said, referring to an ad campaign by New York developer Donald Trump for his new shuttle service in the Northeast.

Some 125,000 Americans visited the Soviet Union last year, up from 110,000 in 1987 and 25,000 in 1980, when relations between the two countries hit a low point, according to Anatoly Matytsin, U.S. general manager for Intourist, the Soviet tourism organization.

Aeroflot officials said they plan to start an advertising campaign in U.S. travel publications and national newspapers later this year. The airline also has set up a new U.S. reservation center and a toll-free telephone line for booking Aeroflot flights and rooms at the Ukraine Hotel in Moscow.

About a year ago, Aeroflot and Pan Am Corp. started jointly operating non-stop flights on Boeing 747s between New York and Moscow.

Four of the eight weekly flights now available to Moscow are operated by the joint venture. The other four, two from New York to Moscow and two from Washington to Moscow, are run by Aeroflot on Soviet-made Ilyushin-62 aircraft.

FAIRMONT PARK CENTER PROVIDES THE IDEAL RETAIL ENVIRONMENT FOR SUCCESS

Located in Midland's major northern growth corridor, Fairmont Park Center offers the retailer high visibility and easy access to the nation's highest effective buying income group.
Contiguous to Fairmont Park Center, Albertson's Retail Center provides one of the largest middle and upper-middle income group markets available. This influx of traffic is created 24 hours daily, satisfying the exposure element important to the success of any retailer. The 40,000 sq. ft. area insures the retailer will not get lost or hidden. No other retail development in this area combines these attributes as does Fairmont Park Center.

Enquirer cuts 47; Christmas tree display in danger

New York Times News Service

LANTANA, Fla. — The new owners of the National Enquirer and Weekly World News supermarket tabloids announced Wednesday that 47 employees will be laid off to cut costs.

Michael Boylan, president of Macfadden Holdings Inc., said 20 of the 270 employees at the Lantana headquarters were laid off immediately. The cuts affected the editorial, advertising and other departments, he said, calling the move an "economic consideration based on which positions we could eliminate."

Boylan also reiterated that the company's annual Christmas tree display will not go up without community financial support. The display reportedly costs as much as $1 million and was begun in 1971 by the tabloids' former owner, the late Generoso Pope Jr.

"There's no way in the world we can throw a million-dollar Christmas party on our own," Boylan said. "Mr. Pope was Santa Claus, and we just can't afford to be."

Macfadden Chairman Peter Callahan had said at the time of the tabloids' purchase in April that the Christmas tree's future depended on community assistance.

Boylan also said the company will lay off 27 employees with the July 19 closing of a Pompano Beach printing plant where the News is published. It will then be published at an Atlanta printer that is not affiliated with GP Group Inc., the tabloids' publisher.

Boylan and Callahan appear to be managing the papers with a sharper eye on the bottom line than Pope. They acquired the Enquirer, which sells 4.3 million copies weekly, and the News in April for $412.5 million. The company was put up for sale after Pope died of a heart attack in October.

The cost-cutting moves are not completely unexpected because of the high price Macfadden paid for the tabloids and "they have more people to answer to than Mr. Pope did," said Steven Cohn, editor of Media Industry Newsletter in New York. Macfadden, a 14-year-old magazine publishing company, bought the Enquirer and News with the financial backing of Boston Ventures, a New York venture capital company.

"They have to work to make the bottom line look good for their investors," Cohn said.

The Pompano Beach plant that is being closed has outdated letterpresses that do not have color-printing capability, Boylan said.

"It would have taken a huge amount of money to make it successful," Boylan said of the printing plant. Besides, he said, it is not economically feasible to publish a national newspaper, which sells about 1 million copies every week, in South Florida that must then be shipped nationwide and into Canada.

Big city inns offer visitor chance to get away from it all

Inns have comforts of home and charge less

By CHRIS BARNETT
Copley News Service

Ever try to sleep while 50 conventioneers are doing the bunny hop down the hallway outside your door at 2 a.m.?

That's always a risk when you stay in a big business hotel. Worse yet, you may be paying $150 or more for your room, and you can still get stuck on a floor filled with raucous hospitality suites.

Small wonder that business travelers who wants peace, charm and a reasonable rate are checking into inns like the Chelsea Inn in newly fashionable Lower Manhattan, where rooms start at an amazing $68 a night.

"We have all kinds of creative people — photographers, designers, advertising types plus businesspeople who are just totally alienated by impersonal convention hotels," says Mindy Goodfriend, co-owner of the 13-room Chelsea Inn.

A real estate developer as well, Goodfriend created the inn by rehabilitating two scruffy town houses and furnishing them with "charming, eclectic furnishings I bought at auction."

It has all the comforts of home — almost. Each room has a high ceiling, a kitchenette, a desk or writing table and free local telephone calls. Many of the rooms share a bath with a neighbor, hardly an inconvenience for the adventurous traveler.

"We have all kinds of creative people — photographers, designers, advertising types plus businesspeople who are just totally alienated by impersonal convention hotels."

Mindy Goodfriend, co-owner of the Chelsea Inn.

And for New York, the prices are right: $68 for a room that shares a bath; $95 per night for a studio and $125 a night for a one-bedroom suite. As Goodfriend points out, this is about half price compared to rates charged by most major Manhattan hotels.

STILL, THIS is no bed-and-breakfast. There are no fresh cooked apple and banana muffins and freshly squeezed orange juice. But there are, perhaps, 30 good restaurants and delis in the neighborhood that deliver, and the front desk clerk will place the order for you.

And within walking distance are services that will word-process a letter, photocopy a proposal, transcribe a tape.

Plus, the Chelsea Inn is near the Javits Center, Toy Mart and Home Furnishings Center.

As for personalized services, Goodfriend says "if requested," one Chelsea Inn desk clerk arranges blind dates between single guests.

In Boston, there are far more bed-and-breakfast homes than city inns, and they're popular with business travelers. Marilyn Aieta, reservationist for Bed and Breakfast Associates Bay Colony Limited, says she represents 75 B&Bs in downtown Boston, usually private homes that rent out a few rooms and feed their guests.

For instance, she says the owner of an 1860 brick town house has three guest rooms furnished with Oriental rugs, antique armoires, queen beds and private baths plus a full breakfast for $85 a night. The home is in Copley Square near Boston Common and within walking distance of the train station, subway and major restaurants and office buildings.

THESE B&BS do not have names but reservations can be booked by calling Aieta at (617) 449-5302.

Bed and Breakfast Associates also has a list of studio apartments for travelers who may stay a week at a time and want privacy and a "homey" feeling. Prices range between $50 and $125 a night depending on location and amenities.

Some hosts invite guests to join them for apres work cocktails, others pour sherry and don't mingle.

"We have guests from all the major Fortune 500 companies," says Aieta.

Chicago has an estimated 60 bed-and-breakfast facilities in the central business district but they rarely promote themselves. Most use a centralized reservation system operated by Mary Shaw, director of Bed & Breakfast Chicago Inc.

B&Bs in the Windy City differ from their counterparts on the West Coast or up in the New England countryside. They might be a single room in a private home or what is called a "coach house," similar to a fully furnished guest home behind a larger private home.

Here again, the rooms are bargain priced, starting at $65 a night and climbing to $150. For $200, the cost of a junior suite in any of the major Loop hotels, you can have the run of a three-bedroom, two-bath renovated Victorian home with a full parlor and fireplace.

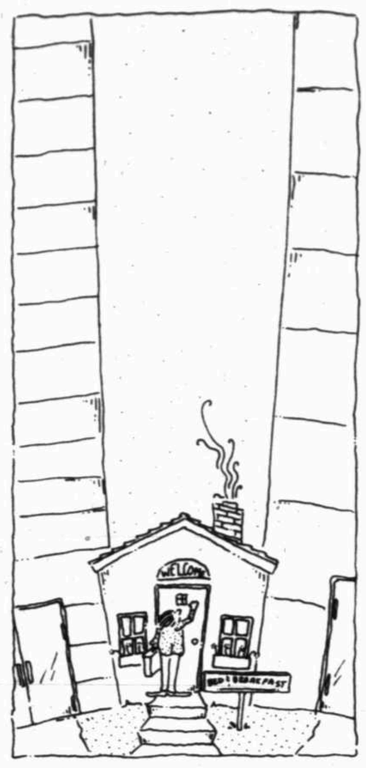

No, you cannot rent the home for a business meeting or a mini conference.

"THEY'RE STRICTLY for sleeping and eating," says Shaw's assistant, Lori Granoff.

Granoff says a full 40 percent to 50 percent of the people who check into B&Bs through her service are "businesspeople who aren't on major expense accounts. They're looking for an in-city location and want something economical, comfortable and pleasant."

A growing number are "single professional women who are tired of the hassles and impersonal treatment they often get at a big business hotel."

Still, B&Bs are not for every business traveler. Few if any have room service, wake-up calls, fitness centers, bellmen, and one-day valet service.

Troubled Texas company target of takeover

DALLAS (AP) — A Texas company that has been the focus of federal investigations into bid-rigging at the U.S. Postal Service is the target of a New York buyout firm that offered to pay up to $78.2 million for control.

The Prospect Group Inc.'s tender offer is the second time in six months the company has made an unsolicited bid for Recognition Equipment Inc. The previous bid of $12.75 per share was rejected by the company as "highly conditional."

The later offer by Prospect was currently set to expire at 11 p.m. CDT on July 12. It offered $11 per share for up to 7.11 million shares, or 81 percent of the outstanding stock. Prospect currently owns 1.43 million shares, or 14.1 percent, of REI's outstanding stock.

Officials conditioned the offer on Prospect being tendered enough shares to give it control of the company and revocation of the company's shareholders rights, either by the current board or legal action.

Other conditions are revocation of limitations placed on mergers by the company's bylaws and Prospect's obtaining of financing.

REI officials urged its stockholders to wait for company directors to review the offer before signing over their shares. A recommendation expected no later than June 27, the company said.

Prospect, in conjunction with its offer, said it had filed suit in Delaware, where REI is incorporated, challenging the shareholders' rights, which make a hostile takeover more costly.

Prosecutors said REI, former Chairman William G. Moore Jr. and former vice president Robert W. Reedy have been indicted on charges they conspired to rig a bid involving U.S. Postal Service procurement process to win about millions of dollars worth in contracts for automated mail-sorting equipment.

The indictment alleges the conspiracy involved a plot to replace Postmaster General Paul N. Carlin, who was viewed as hostile to REI. The conspiracy reportedly included Peter E. Voss, former vice chairman of the Postal Services' Board of Governors, who is now serving a four-year prison term for kickback and expense account fraud and is cooperating in the case.

Currently, the trial is set for September in Washington, D.C.

Indictment led to REI's suspension from bidding on contracts for the U.S. Army and Postal Service; the Army suspension has been lifted, but the Postal Service suspension was renewed last week for another 120-day period.

"We see great promise in the businesses of REI and are committed to their revitalization ... and to restore the company's status as a qualified government contractor," Prospect Chairman W. Wallace McDowell said in a letter to current REI Chairman Thomas L. Ringer.

Prospect will appoint two former Pitney-Bowes executives "as leaders of REI's management team," said McDowell.

He also wrote current Postmaster General Anthony Frank, as part of the bid, saying REI's suspension "is most unfortunate as it prohibits direct access to REI's development technology ... and precludes direct participation by REI in the critical postal automation efforts."

Prospect lost $4.32 million on $22.6 million in revenues in the first quarter. It recently bought Illinois Central Transportation Co., a major rail freight carrier. Other interests are in insurance, consumer and services industries.

Japanese savings rises to $5.04 trillion

TOKYO (AP) — Japanese personal savings rose to $5.04 trillion at the end of fiscal 1988, an average of $126,000 per household and up 11.4 percent over the previous year, the Bank of Japan said in a report this week.

It was the third consecutive year that personal savings, deposited at banks or postal offices and held in stocks, bonds and insurance, posted such a double-digit increase, said an official of the central bank.

"An increase in household incomes, thanks to the nation's booming economy, is contributing to a continued increase in savings," said the official, who spoke anonymously.

The official said an international comparison of savings was not available due to changes in exchange rates, but said Japan's total personal savings is the second largest in the world after the United States, which has twice as many people.

Other bank officials said they anticipated no change in the trend of Japanese putting away money for years to come.

Numerous surveys say the head's of Japan's 40 million households save to prepare for illness and disaster, or for retirement and education fees for children.

The landscape photographs of Thomas Waddell will be displayed at the Museum of the Southwest through Sunday. The museum, at 1705 W. Missouri Ave., is open Tuesday-Saturday from 10 a.m.-5 p.m. and Sunday from 2-5 p.m.

Waddell: 'Camera is my other eye'

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

"If you can't taste, don't cook. If you can't hear, don't try and write music. If you can't see, don't take pictures."
— Thomas Hughes Waddell

When it comes to his professions — architecture, design and photography — Waddell knows what he likes.

"I'm not interested in contrived architecture, and I'm not interested in contrived photography," Waddell says. The photographer was in town helping install a showing of 53 of his photographs at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

Architecture and photography require a different approach.

"Photography is sort of a burst. You see it; you do it; and it's there; and it's intuitive. Architecture takes too damn long to be intuitive."

A juxtaposition of color. A field of sticks. A green path with a gentle arch. All are capable of capturing Waddell's attention.

"You see that kind of thing, stop, jump out, balance, take picture, click. In architecture, you don't do that. You can't do that."

Waddell refers to the camera as "my other eye." The expression forms part of the title of the exhibition — "My Other Eye: 38 Years of Photographs by Theodore Hughes Waddell." The 53 photographs are mostly landscapes from locations ranging from Italy to New Mexico and Colorado dating from 1950 to 1988.

"The photographs are very painterly, which makes them interesting," says Ann Greer, educator at the Museum. "Because of his approach, they kind of cross over between photographs and paintings."

The exhibition will be shown through June 25. Most of the titles are descriptive of the content found within the picture.

"I think a picture can only have a certain number of ingredients, and a cooked recipe can only have a certain number of ingredients. When you put it all together, you can call that recipe something. When you get through with the picture, you call it something." He pauses and adds, "Sometimes it's a souffle; sometimes it's an omelet; and sometimes it's a scrambled egg. They're all OK."

Waddell's photographs have been shown in Florence and Milan, Italy, in Denver, Santa Fe and New York. This exhibition is scheduled for showing in the Oklahoma Museum of Art in Oklahoma City July 7 through Aug. 18 and in the Governor's Gallery in the State Capitol in Santa Fe in the fall.

Waddell describes himself as an "extremely visual person" and dates his love for photography, art and design back to his childhood.

"As a young child, I thought I was going to be an artist. I was constantly drawing."

Then, sometime around the age of 14, he acquired his older brother's camera. When he was 14, Waddell began taking pictures under the tutelage of Douglas Haskall of "Architectural Forum." He won awards for his photographs in high school and college. After college, he continued with his photography with encouragement by famed photographer Ansel Adams.

"I had two hobbies early on," Waddell recalls. "I loved to make furniture, and I loved to take pictures. One is three dimensional, and the other is two dimensional. I don't think any child who has a hobby spends any time thinking why. You just do it."

What Waddell did spend time questioning was the happiness of the commuters he saw going to and returning from work each day.

"I grew up in the suburbs in New York and most of the professional people I saw went off in the morning and came back tired. They looked like they were doing on an adult scale what I was doing in school, namely going off and coming back and not enjoying themselves.

"I always assumed that life's work was like going to school. You had to do it. I had these hobbies which I jealously protected as hobbies. I always thought if I went into the hobbies, I'd ruin them."

Thus, when he graduated from CornellUniversity with a bachelor of arts in chemistry and a master of business administration, he went into the family investment business on Wall Street.

"Business can be created, so I'm not snubbing my nose at business," Waddell says. "But, business is not three dimensional, and it certainly is not aesthetic."

He found himself living a life much like those of the adults he had watched as a youngster.

"So, at 33 years old, I announced that I was quitting and entering architecture school at the University of Pennsylvania."

He went on to earn a master of architecture from the University of Pennsylvania and a doctor of architecture from the University of Florence.

He taught and lectured at the university level in architecture and industrial design. In addition, his furniture designs have been exhibited at the Louvre in Paris, at the Museum of Modern Art in New York and in a one-man show at Denver Design Works.

And, in 1975, he took three DeBeers Consolidated Diamond awards for jewelry design in Italy.

After living in Italy for 15 years, Waddell, who shares his birthday date with his grandfather, former Supreme Court chief justice Charles Evans Hughes, now lives in Santa Fe.

Today, his interest lies in focusing most of his energy into photography. His love lies in finding the simple and the arresting.

"I think there's so much beauty in the world that my eye can find and there are so many juxtapositions which are simple and are not seen everyday, that there are photographs to be made without the necessity of taking pictures of neon lights in a wheat field. I'm not against it. It's just not what I feel."

He pauses reflectively, before adding, "The beauty of the world — I just love it."

Clark's exit from 'American Bandstand' end of era

By MICHAEL ECK
Hearst News Service

ALBANY, N.Y. — If you even turned on your radio or television set in the past 37 years; if you have been moved to tears, laughter or dance by a song; if you had your life touched in any way by rock 'n' roll, you have been affected by Dick Clark.

Few non-musicians in history have had such a profound effect on a music.

It's not even that Clark changed the music. It's that he played the music and, for 37 years as creator and host of "American Bandstand," he made America dance. The ever-youthful impressario stepped down from "Bandstand" in April, replacing himself with David Hirsch, and ending an era in television and music history.

"That was very difficult," Clark said. "It was something I'd thought about for two or three years, but it wasn't anything I looked forward to. I realized it had to be done eventually, and we were changing the means of distribution of the show, so it seemed like as good a time as any to make the change of riders on the pony.

"I just knew that I couldn't keep doing it. I'm a 59-year-old guy. I don't feel it has anything to do with chronological age. It just seemed that we're making a change to the USA (cable TV) network, let's change the host. We'll keep the elements the same, but at least it will have a new look to it."

Taking chances like that isn't a new game for Clark. His faith in his projects is overwhelming. He recalls with barely concealed pride the trepidation some doubters had in the early days.

"I can remember the day we went on the ABC network originally. That was very exciting because we'd had a five-year history of (local) success in Philadelphia before then. There were a lot of people who were very skeptical about whether we'd succeed or not on a national level. We had said, 'There is no doubt it will. It will, it will, it will.' And we realy believed it would. And it did."

All the groups on this national tour made their marks on "Bandstand," and produced a staggering aggregate of 53 songs in the Top 40, 32 of which earned them gold records, indicating at least one million single-copy sales each.

Clark noted the difference between the rock of yesterday and today and wondered if contemporary stuff will have the same staying power.

"The music and the presentation of it these days is a lot more sophisticated," he said. "Technically, we've made incredible strides, but the performers now give you a lot more of a show than performers did early-on because they were primarily recording people. Now they've realized, because of videos and in concert appearances, they've got to give the audience something to look at.

"That's called show biz. That's kind of good. This concert tour going out is very similar in a way to things we did during the '50s and '60s with the Caravan of Stars. But in those days we had no giant screen to project videos on, we had no line of dancers. We would have a dozen to 15 acts on the bill, all of whom sang only one or two songs. This is a conceptual presentation of music that's become part of people's lives for 30-some-odd years. "Only time will tell if today's music will have the same effect. The problem that any artist faces today, whether it's George Michael or Michael Jackson or Prince or Springsteen or anybody, is whether the music will be burned out too quickly.

"We hit the airwaves with it now, it peaks at six or seven weeks, then slides out and is gone. In the old days, when rock 'n' roll was in its infancy, the records got played longer, the public memory bank was instilled and ingrained with the music, and then, by dumb luck, the music held on. And it is still around in movies, commercials — every medium. It's become true classic music, and it's hard to tell whether the music of today can do that."

Clark has a theory of what might happen to today's music.

"I'm afraid it has nothing to do with the artistic quality of the material. It's the burnout factor," he said.

"We've gotten so computerized that what's played on the radio is determined by almost robots at this point. There's so many rules about the playlist and how long a song can be played and with what kind of frequency that it doesn't matter if your gut tells you it deserves a stay on the air longer or not. It's going to be zapped. It's a little bit like our world."

Clark describes himself as "just one of the storekeepers around, purveying the goods. I've often characterized my role as a presenter. I don't sing or dance or play an instrument, so I can't be a performer."

Despite that humble attitude, Clark is aware of his good fortunes and his importance.

"I'm the luckiest human that ever walked the face of the Earth," he said. "When the day comes for me to check out, or the Lord beckons me to go, they will say something about 'He played the music and the kids danced.'"

Ford's co-star sticks it to them in screen test

By LARRY RATLIFF
Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — Alison Doody, who once considered becoming a nun, got her big break in films by speaking not-so-softly and carrying a big stick.

She plays mysterious art historian Dr. Elsa Schneider in "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade." Doody's character has very close dealings with both Indiana Jones (Harrison Ford) and Indy's father (Sean Connery).

The manner in which the 24-year-old Dublin, Ireland, native landed her first starring role in director Steven Spielberg's action-adventure is an adventure in itself.

Doody literally came up with some dynamite schtick with a stick during her screen test in London.

"He (Steven Spielberg) asked me to improvise. I had to come into the room with this wooden pole under my arm and pretend it was a machine gun. I felt really sorry for the poor man I was playing opposite because I was practically beating him up in this room to try and play this tough woman.

"After the test, Steven said to me, 'Oh God, that's a great test. Do you usually do good tests?' I kept my wits about me, thank God."

Doody (who, by the way, is quite content with her name and says she'll never change it) had played minor roles in "A Prayer for the Dying" and "A View to a Kill." But she wasn't quite prepared for such a positive reaction from Spielberg, especially since she was the first actress tested for the role.

> "After the (screen) test, Steven (Spielberg) said to me, 'Oh God, that's a great test.' "
> — Alison Doody

The search for the perfect Dr. Schneider, which had pretty much spread around the world, finally came down to Doody and three other actresses. Four weeks before shooting was scheduled to begin, the part still had not been cast.

Ford's contract gives him a say in major casting. He says the dilemma didn't reach the desperation stage. But he admits, "We were due to make a choice."

That's where Doody and her stick came in.

"I saw what I wanted to see in the test," Ford says. "I saw courage, willingness to try things and conviction about what she was doing. They asked her in her test to pick up something — a stick — and pretend it was a machine gun. And she did it with real conviction. I said, 'OK, that's our girl. That's the one.' And she could act, besides," Ford says.

Ultimately she could do more than just act. She fit in, easily keeping up with the superstar Jonses even during a difficult scene involving rats.

The rodents provide the "yuck" factor in "Indy III." In "Raiders," it was snakes. "Temple of Doom" had its bugs. This time it was rats — 7,000 of them.

Prodigy doesn't like practicing

DENVER (AP) — If Diego Alonso is a young Mozart, his parents don't want to make too much of a fuss about it.

That's why they whisked the 5-year-old out of their native Spain, where the press hailed him as a genius and a virtuoso, and enrolled him in kindergarten at the Mackintosh Academy, a school for gifted children in Denver.

"We wanted him to get a well-rounded education, and be with children his own age who are more like him," said Rosa Alonso Plaza, 29, Diego's mother.

She and her husband, Manual, 49, are amateur musicians who set out to create a musical child. While pregnant they played scales to the fetus because, she said, "we love music, and we think music is very important for the development of the child's mind — the creative, abstract mind."

Diego began singing scales when he was 6 months old, his parents say, and at 2 began to read music.

At 3, he could play simple Bach pieces on the piano.

Alan Weber, a teacher at the National Conservatory of Music in Paris who tested Diego, said the 3-year-old showed exceptional gifts and could listen to music and then play it back by memory. Weber said Diego should not be schooled with children his own age.

In February 1988, when he was 4, Diego had an audience before Queen Sofia of Spain, but declined to play. Instead, he showed the queen a game he played in which he stands with his back to a piano and identifies any note that is struck.

All the attention, however, soon made Diego stop playing for several months. He was, after all, only 4, and according to his parents has a stubborn streak.

"It was too much pressure," his mother said.

So they brought him to the United States this fall and to the Mackintosh school. In Denver, he has had to learn English, and he takes piano lessons and dance classes after school. But he practices piano only about five minutes a day, and his parents say they don't want to force him to concentrate on his music any more than that yet.

"We think, little by little, he'll do it," Rosa Alonso Plaza said.

Carolyn Shaak, Diego's piano teacher in Denver, says he is exceptional for his age and has perfect pitch, but the child would love to do anything else but play the piano.

"He has put up certain barriers. He wouldn't want to be forced to sit there," she said. "The potential is there....It depends what he does with it. He certainly has the intelligence."

She said his coordination was about average for a 5-year-old.

Eve Mackintosh, the director of the school, calls the boy a genius who has caught on quickly in all subjects. She thinks his IQ is higher than the 139 at which he tested when he was 4.

Rosa Alonso, a former secretary and a violinist, played scales and repetitive melodies on the violin at least three times a day at regular intervals while she was pregnant — "at the same beat as the mother's heart."

Manual, who worked for the telephone company in Spain, plays the piano. He said Diego showed an early fascination with the instrument, peeking around his father's back to watch him play and crawling underneath the piano to watch the pedals move.

The couple filled their home with classical music during the pregnancy, and when Diego was born they would sing him to sleep with scales.

The Alonsos are unemployed in Denver, writing a book about child-rearing. Living on savings, they are not sure how long they will stay in Denver but would like Diego to finish eighth grade at Mackintosh before returning to Europe for high school.

Diego is on a partial scholarship at Mackintosh, and the Alonsos are hoping a foundation or university will step in and help support his education.

But they don't like the child to be bothered by the press, and asked that reporters and photographers not talk to Diego at school because that might draw attention to him.

In a recent music class at the academy, however, Diego drew attention all by himself. When music teacher David Glenn asked each child in the kindergarten class to name their favorite musicians, Diego pulled up two names many of the children could barely pronounce: Tchaikovsky and Rachmaninoff.

Speaker brings Charles Russell to life

"There he stood big as life, his blond hair hanging in his face, a Stetson hat on his head...tight pants....blue/grey eyes...long fingers...three or four rings on his fingers...Charlie just loved jewelry...broad shoulders...straight back...his muscles rippled underneath his shirt..."

Are these the comments of a smitten woman? The answer is obvious. The question is who.

Temple

This Thursday, Joan Stauffer gave an attentive audience at the Museum of the Southwest a behind-the-scenes look at the life of Charles M. Russell as seen through the eyes of his wife, Nancy. Dressed in a period costume, Ms. Stauffer opened her presentation by describing Nancy's first impression of her future husband. From the beginning, it's apparent the two were quite taken with one another.

Ms. Stauffer's presentation was lively, touching and informative. She brings to life these two colorful people and tells their story in a manner which evokes tears and laughter.

During her talk, it becomes clear that Nancy was the impetus behind the commercial success of this famous western artist. Before marriage to Nancy in 1896, Russell traded or sold drawings and paintings for drink, food and supplies. After Nancy, Russell's works were sold to collectors for sums sufficient to give the Russells income for a comfortable living.

Also being held at the Museum of the Southwest today is a special Father's Day performance presented by Jane Clancy Debenport.

Showtime is 7:45 p.m. Those attending the concert, which will be presented on the museum's lawn, are invited to bring a picnic and asked to provide their own seating.

Those looking for something to do this week may want to circle 7 p.m. Tuesday on their calendars. Ed Shaughnessy, drummer for the "Tonight Show," is playing a concert in the Devonian Room at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin. The West Texas Jazz Society is sponsoring his West Texas performance.

Now 56, Shaughnessy began playing the trap set when he was 14 and landed his first professional job when he was 18.

Then, on Wednesday, KNFM and Rogers Ford are sponsoring a free concert at Chaparral Center.

Performing will be Earl Thomas Conley and special guest West Wind, a local group.

Cost of admission is two cans of food. All those attending must have a free ticket. Those tickets may be picked up in Midland at Nutri System, Midland Muffler, Buddy's Flowers, Care Chiropractic, Chick-fil-A, The Hamburger Place, J.C. Penny's, Harold's Electronics, Justin Lighting, Cattlemen's Steak House and Luskey's. For more information call KNFM, 563-5636.

In closing, I'd like to recount a portion of what Ms. Stauffer said about Russell. He gave his parents some heartache because all he ever dreamed about was being a "cowboy and an artist."

From the time he was quite young, he had the overwhelming desire to see the West. His parents finally let him go, thinking that he would soon tire of the experience. They were wrong. He stayed.

Today, some parents would be grateful to have a West to send their teen-agers to and to have a teen-ager who knew how he/she was going to become self-supporting.

Then again, if there was such a place, many of today's teen-agers wouldn't be satisfied traveling by train, stagecoach and horse — the style in which Russell made the trip. They'd probably want wheels and their parents' credit cards.

Film planned about religion writer's trial

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — An Albuquerque film maker plans a movie about the story of a journalist put on trial last summer after two pregnant Salvadoran women were brought into the United States without legal papers.

Irene Oliver Lewis, owner of ALMA, a film and theater production company, said last week she hopes filming can begin by next spring on a fictionalized account of what happened to Demetria Martinez, religion writer for the Albuquerque Journal.

Martinez and an Albuquerque minister, the Rev. Glen Remer-Thamert, were indicted in December 1987, accused of smuggling the women into the country at El Paso, Texas. Martinez, who said she went along on the trip to El Paso for a story on the sanctuary movement, and the minister were found innocent on all charges.

'Star Trek' plot rather lame

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

In "Star Trek V: The Final Frontier" William Shatner (the eternal Captain Kirk) makes his motion picture directorial debut. In a press release Shatner announced that he set out to "amaze and amuse" the audience. One out of two isn't bad, since he does provide amusement. But I can't recall anything truly amazing about "Star Trek V."

Salcedo

The film opens in a dusty desert setting where the renegade Vulcan, Sybok (Laurence Luckinbill looking more like a renegade from "The Ten Commandments") encounters a futuristic skinhead type. Sybok insists that the skinhead "share" his pain with him and "gain strength in the sharing."

The odd, passionate Vulcan then masterminds a ruse to bring the U.S.S. Enterprise near. His intent is to usurp the starship for a dangerous quest. It soon becomes obvious that the Enterprise crew will have more trouble than Tribbles.

Although the "Star Trek" films aren't known for their intricate plots, this one seems rather lame, especially compared to the "save the whales" concept of "Star Trek IV." The beloved crew is back with their famous banter, but there aren't as many memorable funny moments as there was in "Star Trek IV."

Not being a Trekkie, I can't speak for authenticity, but a fellow journalist and "Star Trek" devotee, was offended by Mr. Spock's (Leonard Nimoy's) characterization, saying he comes across "like a cartoon character." It's true Mr. Spock — who granted, is supposed to be a cool cucumber — is rather wooden. He doesn't have any surprises, such as the unforgettable scene in "Star Trek IV" where he decides to sport a headband.

Despite the presence of Shanter's sidekicks, Doctor Leonard "Bones" McCoy (DeForest Kelley), "Scotty" (James Doohan), navigator Chekov (Walter Koenig), Uhura (Nichelle Nichols) and helmsman Sulu (George Takei), much of the film appears to be the Captain Kirk show.

The cinematography is spectacular, but the choice of scenery (outside of several scenes in Yosemite National Park) tends to look like the Nevada desert (desert scenes were actually shot in the nearby California Mojave Desert). No matter where the Enterprise Crew goes (Nimbus III, beyond the Center of the Galaxy, etc.), it always looks like Nevada, even Paradise City looks like Las Vegas.

Granted there are some fun "happy camper" scenes with Spock-McCoy-Kirk, but there aren't enough of these moments of humorous interaction.

The film does have a broad canvas of ideas which explore the spiritual, the humorous and the adventurous. It is top-notch entertainment and it does amuse. However, nothing is as "amazing" as the press release complete with Klingon/English Phrasebook. It contains such handy phrases as: "Where do you keep the chocolate?" nuqDaq yuch Dapol pronounced Nook-dak yooch da-Pol.

"Star Trek V" rates 3 rigs.

"Star Trek V," rated PG-13 for mild profanity and some violence, is playing at the UA Cine 4 on Cuthbert.

'K-9' has its moments, laughs inconsistent

Not since "Old Yeller"...Just kidding. Although "K-9," the film starring Jim Belushi as a San Diego narcotics officer and a German shepherd named Jerry Lee, makes references to the popular Disney doggie film, "K-9" is silly where "Old Yeller" is sentimental. It has been in the theater for weeks, and youth preteen to 15 have been urging me to go see it.

The likable film stars Belushi, who often plays second banana to the canny canine Jerry Lee. To his credit Belushi manages to talk to the dog in a way which makes the one-sided banter seem like actual conversation. Jerry Lee holds up his end of the dialogue with growls, barks and physical reactions.

There are plenty of silly moments, but "K-9" largely depends on bathroom humor, doggie deodorant, and crude sex jokes for laughs, a sort of "Porky's" meets "Rin Tin Tin." This baser humor really appeals to the under 15 age group (remember when?).

Much of the script (written by newcomers Steven Siegel and Scott Myers) depends on biting sarcasm, which Belushi executes with aplomb. Belushi alternately threatens and cajoles Jerry Lee into obeying orders. At one point Belushi mutters something about wishing his canine partner were Benji. When things get way out of hand he says, "Do you remember the movie 'Old Yeller?' Remember when they shot him in the end? I didn't cry."

One of the funniest moments deals with Belushi's first encounter with Jerry Lee, a trained police dog. When told to put on protective padding the naive Belushi says, "Let him sniff me a few times. I'll give him some yummies, and we're out of here."

MOVIE RIG COUNT

- DRY HOLE — a complete and total loss
- STRIPPER — barely worth the time
- PRODUCER — a good investment
- GUSHER — not to be missed

But most of the film consists of man and dog chasing bad guys. Belushi also has a love interest, the classy Mel "Thirtysomething" Harris. She manages to keep from being upstaged by Jerry Lee but her attraction to the bumbling Belushi is a mystery.

One scene where Belushi feigns insanity at a drug kingpin's dinner party really falls flat. The simpler scenes, such as one where Jerry Lee barks hysterically for a cream puff, work best. The biggest problem with the script is that scenes don't follow through, and you are left wondering what happens to characters who are already out of the picture.

"K-9" has it moments, but the laughs aren't consistent. Although it appeals to the younger set, for older viewers, to steal a phrase from State Treasurer Ann Richards, "This dog won't hunt."

"K-9" rates 2 rigs.

"K-9" rated PG-13 for bathroom humor, profanity and violence, is playing at North Park Cinemas.

Sculptures, watercolors on display

Gallery 1114 will open a showing of ceramic sculptures by Amy Brower and watercolors by Anneil Livingston with a 6 to 9 p.m. public reception Saturday.

Ms. Brower, who is from Dallas, makes colorful, non-objective ceramic wall pieces. She says her sculpture is a "sensuous response to form in nature.

"By repeating selected forms, I intend to determine peculiarities of similar objects. The variety of references is metaphorical, relating to things such as changes in friendships, or impressions left from growing up in Iowa."

Ms. Brower received her bachelor of fine arts in ceramics from Drake University and her master of arts in ceramics from the University of Dallas. Recent competitions include "Common Ground," an exhibition of the Dallas Women's Caucus for Art and the Wichita National 1988 in Wichita, Kan.

Ms. Livingston's watercolors depict natural objects and designs in varying degrees of abstraction.

This Houston artist speaks of "the beautiful quilts made by the women of my family in Texas, and my experiences as a child looking at my grandmother's kaleidoscope" as sources of her art.

"I want my work to confirm the human need to touch, to hold and to make in relationship to natural forces," she says.

Ms. Livingston has exhibited extensively around the country. Included among the 1988 shows her works were in were "Texas Women: A Juried Selection" at O' Kane Gallery in Houston and "Aqueous Open" at the Pittsburgh center for the Arts. She attended Louisiana Tech University and the Glassell School of Art in Houston.

Closing Thursday at Gallery 1114 is a showing of works by Gary Bain and Joyce Elizabeth Carr.

Midland artists win

SAN ANGELO — Midland artists won several prizes in the Realism Show on exhibition at the Kendall Art Gallery in San Angelo.

In watercolors, Mavis Murphy won first, Cynthia Wolfe, second; Mary Lou King, fourth; and Paul Wecker, honorable mention.

In oil paintings, Ramah Bosecker won Best of Show, first, and honorable mention.

Paul Milosevich, former professor of art at Texas Tech University, was the juror.

The exhibit will be on display through June 25 at 119 W. 1st St., San Angelo.

NBC continues its string of Nielsen wins

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC hung on to first place last week in the A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings for its 51st win in a row.

The network finished in first place for the week ending June 11 with a challenge from CBS on the strength of two NBA playoff games. NBC also was affected by President Bush's prime-time news conference, because it pre-empted part of the network's high-rated Thursday lineup.

NBC's average prime-time rating was 11.1; CBS had 10.8 and ABC 9.6. The last time NBC was out of first place was last June, when CBS had two games of the NBA playoffs, also between the Los Angeles Lakers and Detroit Pistons.

The series so far has rated slightly higher than last year's. Last Tuesday's game ranked 16th in the Nielsens. Thursday's was tied for ninth.

NBC won on the strength of its regular series, even though they were in repeats. But ABC's "Roseanne" continued to top the summer rankings. NBC's "The Cosby Show" dropped to 11th place, which NBC attributed to the schedule shift for Bush's news conference.

The rest of the top 10, all repeats except for the NBA game, were: "Cheers," NBC; "A Place to Call Home," CBS; "Empty Nest," NBC; "Golden Girls," NBC; "Dear John," NBC; "Wonder Years," ABC; "Murder, She Wrote," CBS, tied with the playoff game; and "Day by Day," NBC, in a special Thursday showing.

The three-network share was only 58, typical of last summer. But big interest in news events, particularly China, apparently contributed to a 14 percent rise in viewership for the networks' evening newscasts, compared to the previous week. The "CBS Evening News" had a 9.8 rating and 21 share, barely edging the 9.7 and 21 for "ABC World News Tonight." "NBC Nightly News" had a 9.0 and 18.

Each rating point equals 904,000 households with television. The share is a percentage of sets in use.

Fox got its highest share ever out of "America's Most Wanted" last week, an 18. It also made some inroads on Monday night with the second of its monthly theatrical movies. This one, "Big Trouble in Little China," got a 14 share.

Latest Fonda to be in acting stars in 'Scandal'

By DIVINA INFUSINO
Copley News Service

Her name, Bridget Fonda, alone could capture the public's attention. Yes, her father is Peter, her aunt is Jane and her grandfather was Henry.

But the 24-year-old Los Angeles-born actress is determined to stake her own claim to fame based on talent, not family ties.

She has a strong start in "Scandal," the film about the famous John Profumo sex-and-spy affair in England in the '60s. The episode disgraced Profumo, who was minister of war, discredited the Conservative Party and made Christine Keeler and Mandy Rice-Davies icons in Swinging London's pop mythology.

Fonda plays the attention-seeking Davies, who, like Keeler, was a small-town girl looking for adventure. "Mandy was a go-getter, bubbly and funny," Fonda said. "The film shows these women doing nothing much but sleeping with guys. But really, they were involved in a whole lifestyle of moving in powerful circles."

"Scandal" actress Joanne Whaley-Kilmer met Keeler, whom she portrayed, at the film's premiere, but Fonda never had any contact with Davies.

"She's now married to a friend of Denis Thatcher, husband of England's Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. And I don't think she wants to be known as someone who is encouraging the film."

A lot of people didn't want "Scandal" to be made, Fonda said. "A lot of British people, that is. One bishop in England tried a door-to-door campaign to stop the shooting. He said that John Profumo had suffered enough."

But "Scandal" did get made and was received with generally favorable reviews. With its nostalgia appeal and titillating setting of the sexually free '60s, it has generated an aura of excitement and glamour.

Fonda was uncomfortable about the nudity. At one point, she appears topless in a dance routine. "To me, that is something the character would do. Not something I would do. But a lot of people don't see it that way. And it was other people's reactions that bothered me. That means that I have to consider my modesty when I do a character, and if I can't forget it, it could interfere with the characterization."

Fonda, who lives in New York, attended New York University and took acting lessons at the Lee Strasberg Theatre Institute. She is still attending private classes. But she also learned quite a bit just observing the esteemed male star of "Scandal," John Hurt.

"I'd watch him carefully and just try to glean tips," she said. "One day, I just walked up to him and blurted out: 'You're so good. How can I get there?' I was hoping he'd give me the key to his acting skill, but instead he said things like 'It's all in you. It takes time...' "

So far, her parents haven't seen her in "Scandal, but her Aunt Jane did. "She liked it. She thought I was good in it, which I was happy about since I respect her opinion and her work. But she also said she was affected by the film. She thought it was sad, the whole concept of it," which is that "people in government still have the need to find a scapegoat for their scandals."

Flautist, organist plan recital at church

Flautist Marjory Jennings and organist M. Keith Ross will give a joint recital at First Presbyterian Church of Odessa, 1401 N. Sam Houston, today at 3 p.m.

A reception for the aritsts will follow the free recital.

The program will consist of works from the baroque, romantic and contemporary periods. Among the composers represented are Antonio Vivaldi, Jose Lidon, Henk Badings and Franz Schubert.

"The pieces to be performed range from very serious great classical selections to humorous musical selections," says a release from the church.

Ms. Jennings has her bachelor and master of music education degrees from North Texas State University. She is a member of the Midland-Odessa Symphony and recently retired as principal chair with the organization. She had held that position for 26 years.

She also teaches flute at Odessa College, is a member of the Circa Woodwind Quintet and plays piccolo in the Odessa Community Band. She has played as guest artist with the San Angelo Symphony, the Big Spring Symphony, the Wichita Falls Symphony and the Tulsa Philharmonic.

Ross is a graduate of the University of Houston and is on the faculty at Howard College, Big Spring., where he teaches organ and theory. He is also organist/choirmaster at the First Presbyterian Church of Big Spring.

He has been featured in recital frequently at First Presbyterian Church of Odessa and also has given recitals throughout Texas, Louisiana and North Carolina.

MCT's production of 'Orphans' will close

Midland Community Theatre's production of Lyle Kessler's "Orphans" closes Saturday in Theatre Midland's Mabee Theatre II.

From the asylum of their rundown house in north Philadelphia, the two boys, orphans in the world since their parents died, have learned to survive.

Treat supports both by muggings. Philip, who is the younger of the two, stays indoors. Treat won't let him outside because of possible danger.

Then, Treat, now in his early 20s, does the unexpected, and their lives are irrepressibly changed. He brings Harold, one of his victims, home with him.

First produced in Chicago and New York by the Steppenwolf Theatre Co., "Orphans" was made into a movie in 1987 starring Albert Finney, Matthew Modine and Kevin Anderson.

"The movie is very powerful, very moving," says Mike Kase, Midland Community Theatre's educational director and director for this production. "There are a lot of similarities to this work and the work of Sam Shepherd and possibly also the work of Harold Pinter."

Cast members include Scott Lunsford as Philip, Matt Taylor from Odessa as Treat and Bill Bundy as Harold.

The play contains violence and graphic language and is rated adult.

Reservations to the production may be made by calling Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111. All remaining performances, including today's, are at 8 p.m.

Due to the unique set, which places the audience into the action, seating is more limited than usual in Theatre II.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Jazz society to present 'Tonight Show' drummer

ODESSA — The West Texas Jazz Society presents The Tonight Show's Ed Shaughnessy in concert at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the Devonian Room at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Area musicians are invited to attend and participate in the jam session which follows the concert. Admission to the concert is free to members of the West Texas Jazz Society and $5 for non-members.

Shaughnessy, who is a native of Jersey City, N.J., has been with the Tonight Show since 1963. He has made a new big band recording with Erich Kunzel and the Cincinnati Pops on Telarc Digital label.

Called "one of the world's greatest drummers," Shaughnessy will conduct a drum clinic as part of UTPB's Summer Band and Orchestra Camp.

Shaughnessy's drum clinic will be from 9 a.m. to noon Monday and Tuesday at the Performing Arts Center. Cost for the drum set seminar will be $25 per student. In addition, Shaughnessy will work with the camp's Jazz Ensemble from 1 to 5 p.m. those days. For more information on the clinic call J.R. McIntyre, 1-367-3765.

The Tuesday performance also will feature the camp's jazz ensemble.

For more information on the concert call 1-337-5507 or 563-1701.

July 4th celebration set

LAMESA — Lamesa's annual fourth of July celebration will be held at North Park this fourth.

Food booths, games, entertainment and three on three half-court basketball tournament and volley ball tournaments as well as free swimming in the city pool from 3 to 6 p.m. will be part of the activities. The fireworks display will be at dark.

Those interested in securing a booth need to contact the chamber of commerce by Juny 30. Fee is $25.

Sign up cut off date for the basketball and volleyball is June 30. those interested in sighing up may do so at the chamber of commerce, 1-872-2181, or by calling Coach Wayne Roberts, 1-872-8684.

Fathers' Day concert set

Summer Sunday Lawn Concerts at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., continue at 7:45 p.m. today with "The Mad, Mad, Mad World of Music: A Father's Day Gala."

The performance will last an hour.

The programs are held on the front lawn of the museum and the audience is invited to bring lawn chairs or blankets for seating and if desired a picnic dinner.

Today's performance features Jane Clancy Debenport.

The concert for June 25 is "Jammin' " with The Dow Jones Average.

No concert will be held July 2.

'The Foreigner' extended

ODESSA — Due to popular demand, the Permian Playhouse is presenting a return of Larry Shue's "The Foreigner" Thursday through Saturday.

The performances are a special benefit for the Playhouse.

"The Foreigner" is the farcical comedy that follows the antics of Charley who battles the KKK to save an old country inn while supposedly learning how to speak English.

Tickets are $5. A special barbecue is planned for Thursday.

For more information, call the Playhouse, 362-2329.

Big Spring rodeo set

BIG SPRING — The Big Spring Cowboy Reunion and Rodeo is set for Wednesday through Saturday in the rodeo bowl next to the county farms barns.

The rodeo begins nightly at 8:30 p.m.

Advance box seats are for sale at $100, a substantial reduction from last year's price. This fee includes six tickets for each rodeo performance, folding chairs and an identifying sign for the box.

Box selections are on a first come, first serve basis. To reserve a box seat call Jimmy Taylor at First National Bank, 1-267-5513.

Pottery on display at bank

Local pottery artist Sharon Miller presently is exhibiting her work through June 30 at the First Bankers Trust and Savings Association, 500 W. Wall Ave.

Her work includes hand built free flowing forms and wheel thrown platters with Indian pictographs.

Ms. Miller has been working with clay for six years and is studying at Midland College.

Carole King honored

New York Times News Service

Singer-songwriter Carole King was given a spot last week on Hollywood's Rock Walk, the rock 'n' roll version of the Hollywood Walk of Fame.

Pressing her handprints in cement, King joined such inductees as heavy-metal guitarist Eddie Van Halen, rock pioneers Chuck Berry and Little Richard, blues legend Willie Dixon and others.

King, along with husband and cowriter Gerry Goffin, composed such rock classics as Little Eva's "The Loco-Motion" and the Shirelles' "Will You Love Me Tomorrow."

Comediennes unrecognized

New York Times News Service

Even with the success of Elayne Boosler, Roseanne Barr, Paula Poundstone (who won top comedy-club female stand-up at the American Comedy Awards this year) and others, women comedians are still struggling for recognition.

There were at least 14 female comedians registered for the American Comedy Convention in Las Vegas this week, but only two were chosen to perform in the stand-up showcases, prompting a few grumbles.

Composer dies in 1750

On July 28, 1750, Johann Sebastian Bach died in Leipzig.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, JUNE 19, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Avoid making claims that competitors can pounce on. Sticking to a healthy diet-exercise regimen will help you stay in top shape.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Kathleen Turner, legendary first baseman Lou Gehrig, actor Charles Coburn, Sen. Alan Cranston, actress Nancy Marchand, actor Malcolm McDowell, bandleader Guy Lombardo, actresses Mildred Natwick and Gena Rowlands, White Sox pitcher Jerry Reuss.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Use your imagination to improve both your career and family ties. Sidestep discussions that could cause tension. You need to be at your best at school or work. Replace bad habits with good ones.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A good period for making new contacts. Do your own public relations work. A family member does something that makes you swell with pride. Show your delight openly; brag a little.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Put all your energy into finding practical applications for your good ideas. Concentration is the key to success. Refuse to be distracted by those who prefer chatting to working.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You have much more fire and enthusiasm now. Your optimistic attitude makes an important difference in everything you do. Romance can be truly beautiful. Show more consideration for loved one's wishes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Put on a sunny smile and everything will look much brighter! Love has something special in store for you. You cannot afford to scatter your energies. Conclude current negotiations before opening new ones.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your chances for making new financial gains are excellent. You will be more productive at work if you spend some time at home relaxing. Make your living quarters as comfortable as possible.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Forget your notions of taking shortcuts on the road to affluence; they will only lead to a deadend. Make the first move toward resolving a domestic impasse. Suggest a compromise.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Nothing is more important than the security of your mate and children. Provide for their future. A co-worker can lessen your load. Exercise regularly for good health. Perseverance pays big dividends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You have a great deal going for you this week. Use your connections strategically to advance your career goals. Enjoy your good fortune without bragging about it. An associate could be jealous.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An unusual encounter gives you spiritual strength and may even inspire you to greatness. Gather the material fruits of your labors and consolidate recent gains. Invest your money wisely.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A phone call or confrontation gives you the incentive to complete a project. Retirees are asked to use their skills in a new way. Be open to suggestions from good friends.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Stop wasting energy on minor tasks and petty squabbles. Take a closer look at the job market before you make a final decision. Try a new restaurant this evening. Romance beckons.

WHO NEEDS ACES?

It is surprising how often you can make a slam off two cashing aces when each defender holds one of them. The reason is that neither defender imagines the declaring side is insane enough to get to slam missing two aces, so neither credits partner with an ace and defends accordingly. This hand is from the 1988 World Team Championship.

When North supported clubs after spades had been raised, South presumed his partner had made an advance cue-bid in spades rather than shown a second suit, so he did not imagine he was off two aces. The final contract could hardly be described as elegant.

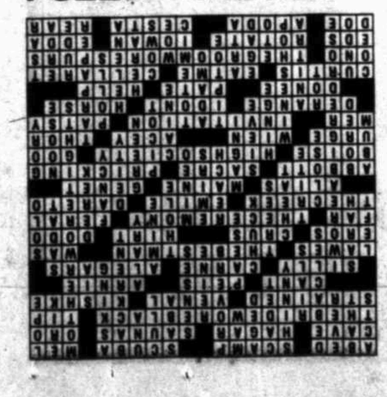

Declarer made a good shot when he won the trump opening lead in dummy and led a diamond toward his king. From East's point of view, rising with the ace could give declarer an extra trick in diamonds, so he followed low. When the king held, declarer was able to place West with the ace of spades, since East would surely not have ducked if he held both aces!

Declarer now led the jack of spades from hand. Not surprisingly, West thought declarer might be finessing, so he played low. Declarer flew up with the king, then discarded his three remaining spades on the table's top hearts. The rest was easy.

Declarer exited with the queen of diamonds. East took his ace and shifted to a trump, but it was too late. Declarer won, ruffed his remaining diamond on the board and claimed 12 tricks.

Ensemble auditions scheduled

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, Inc., will be holding auditions for its new performing ensemble, "The Symphony Pops Choir," at 9 a.m. Saturday.

This select ensemble will consist of 18 to 24 singers and will be conducted by Robert Hunt, the symphony's chorale director. Hunt has extensive experience as a pianist and conductor.

The Symphony Pops Choir is designed to perform at pops concerts along with the Symphony and Chorale. Performances will begin with the 1989-90 season and will supplement performances by the 100-member Symphony Chorale, which performs both pops and classical concerts.

This special pops choir will be featured at two pops concerts as well as making several other appearances.

For more information or to arrange an audition call the symphony office, 563-1921.

'Star Trek' books as popular as films

By JERRY BUCK

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Star Trek" fan J.M. Dillard was temporarily laid off as an English teacher at American University in Washington, when she decided to write a novel about the Starship Enterprise and its crew.

"I'd seen some of the other books, and I was a big reader of science fiction," she said, "and I thought, 'Well, why not?'...After I finished it I submitted it to the publisher and heard nothing for 13 months. I figured that was the end of it."

But, one day, Dillard got a telephone call from Pocket Books informing her that "Mindshadow" had been accepted.

Thus, Dillard became part of one of the most successful series in publishing history and another extension of the 1960s television series, which was reincarnated as "Star Trek: The Next Generation." It will soon begin its third year as the most popular dramatic series in syndication.

To date, Pocket Books has published more than 60 "Star Trek" novels, including four hardbacks, and sold an estimated 18 million books, according to "Star Trek" editor David Stern.

Every one of the novels published since May 1986 has been on the New York Times best seller list.

The books have become as successful as virtually everything else in the "Star Trek" venture. The fifth motion picture, "Star Trek: The Final Frontier," opened last weekend, with a box office gross of $17.4 million.

Paramount Pictures makes the Shatner

Nimoy

movies, Paramount Television makes "Star Trek: The Next Generation," and Pocket Books is owned by Paramount Communications Co.

"The current books began when 'Star Trek' creator Gene Roddenberry did the novelization for the first movie, 'Star Trek: The Motion Picture' in 1979," said Stern. "Prior to that, Bantam Books had published about a dozen 'Star Trek' novels."

The novelization of the latest movie has just reached the book stores. It's written by Dillard. She's also the author of the latest hard-cover novel, "The Lost Years," to be published in the fall.

"It's a historical piece," said Dillard in a telephone interview from her home in Florida. "It fills in the gap between the end of the Enterprise's first five-year mission, marked by the cancellation of the 1960s series, and the first movie.

"It talks about the Enterprise coming home, how Capt. Kirk lost command of the Enterprise when he was talked into becoming an admiral and explains why Spock returned to his home planet of Vulcan."

Dillard, who has now written five "Star Trek" books, said she has a free hand in creating the stories as long as they don't contradict the established history of the ship and crew.

Stern said the books are written by science-fiction writers, writers from other fields, and "Star Trek" fans.

D.C. Fontana, who wrote some of the most popular shows of the original series, wrote "Vulcan's Glory." The book, published in February, is still on the best-seller list at two major book store chains. It brought back Capt. Christopher Pike and "Number One," two characters from the original "Star Trek" pilot.

"I felt that went into an area no one had ever explored before," said Fontana. "I'd created Spock's parents in the original series and this book also took Spock back to Vulcan. 'Star Trek' fans want to know everything about every character.

"It's the only 'Star Trek' novel I've done so far, because I'm primarily a screenwriter. But I love the great freedom you have to tell a story. The characters are good, the relationships are good. I like doing thought-provoking stories with an action background."

Books about Spock are particularly popular and are occasionally suggested by editors Stern and Kevin Ryan. The first hardback, "Spock's World," written by Diane Duane, came about this way.

"We suggest certain stories that for budgetary and other reasons aren't done in the movie or television series," said Stern. '"Spock's World' was a centuries-spanning story of the Planet Vulcan and some history of Spock. We suggested doing the story that became 'The Lost Years.'"

"We suggest certain stories that for budgetary and other reasons aren't done in the movie or television series. '"Spock's World' was a centuries-spanning story of the Planet Vulcan and some history of Spock. We suggested doing the story that became 'The Lost Years.'"

— David Stern, 'Star Trek' editor

In addition to the novels, Pocket Books publishes a wide selection of non-fiction books about "Star Trek." A revised edition of "The Star Trek Compendium," by Allan Asherman, is being published in June.

Next month, they will publish "Captain's Log: William Shatner's Personal Account of the Making of 'Star Trek V: The Final Frontier,'" as told to his daughter, Lisabeth Shatner. Shatner, in addition to playing Capt. James Kirk, co-wrote the movie and was director.

Book source of money-making ideas for potential investors

"One up on Wall Street," by Peter Lynch, with John Rothchild. Simon & Schuster. 318 Pages. $19.95.

By DAVID SMYTH
Associated Press

A Review

Books on investing come out at the rate of about one a day, but few of their authors have the credentials of Peter Lynch, who runs the $9 billion Fidelity Magellan mutual fund. A $10,000 investment made when he took over the fund in 1977 would be worth about $190,000 12 years later.

In "One Up on Wall Street," Lynch expounds the investment philosophy that has produced these results. The book is not only a source of proven money-making ideas for the would-be investor, it is also well-written. This is perhaps due to John Rothchild, the author of "A Fool and His Money."

With his outstanding track record on Wall Street, Lynch can afford to relate in frank detail his own blunders and missed opportunities, while claiming you can still beat the market.

With hundreds of thousands of shareholders in his fund, Lynch can also afford to turn away potential investors. "Expecting a $9 billion fund to compete successfully against an $800 million fund is the same as expecting Larry Bird to star in basketball games with a five-pound weight strapped to his waist," says Lynch.

In fact, Lynch adds, it might pay you to stay away from mutual funds altogether. "If you're a surfer, a trucker, a high school dropout or an eccentric retiree, then you've got an edge already. That's where the 10-baggers come from, beyond the boundaries of accepted Wall Street cogitation." A 10-bagger is a stock that turns every $1 you put into it into $10.

The key to hitting the 10-, 20- and 50-baggers, according to Lynch, is to make use of your own specialized knowledge and direct observation. It was no secret to any teen-ager that McDonald's (a 10-bagger) was doing a land-office business across the country for years.

What usually happens, Lynch says, is that doctors invest in hot oil stocks and get clobbered, while petroleum engineers invest in hot drug stocks and also get clobbered.

If you heed this book's advice, you are likely to avoid such errors, but it is still going to take a lot of time and attention to select your winning stocks. "To be able to say that picking your own stocks is worth the effort, you ought to be getting a 12 (percent) to 15 percent return, compounded over time," says Lynch.

Good luck to you. Not many professionals on Wall Street do that well over the years.

'YOUNG READER' REVIEW

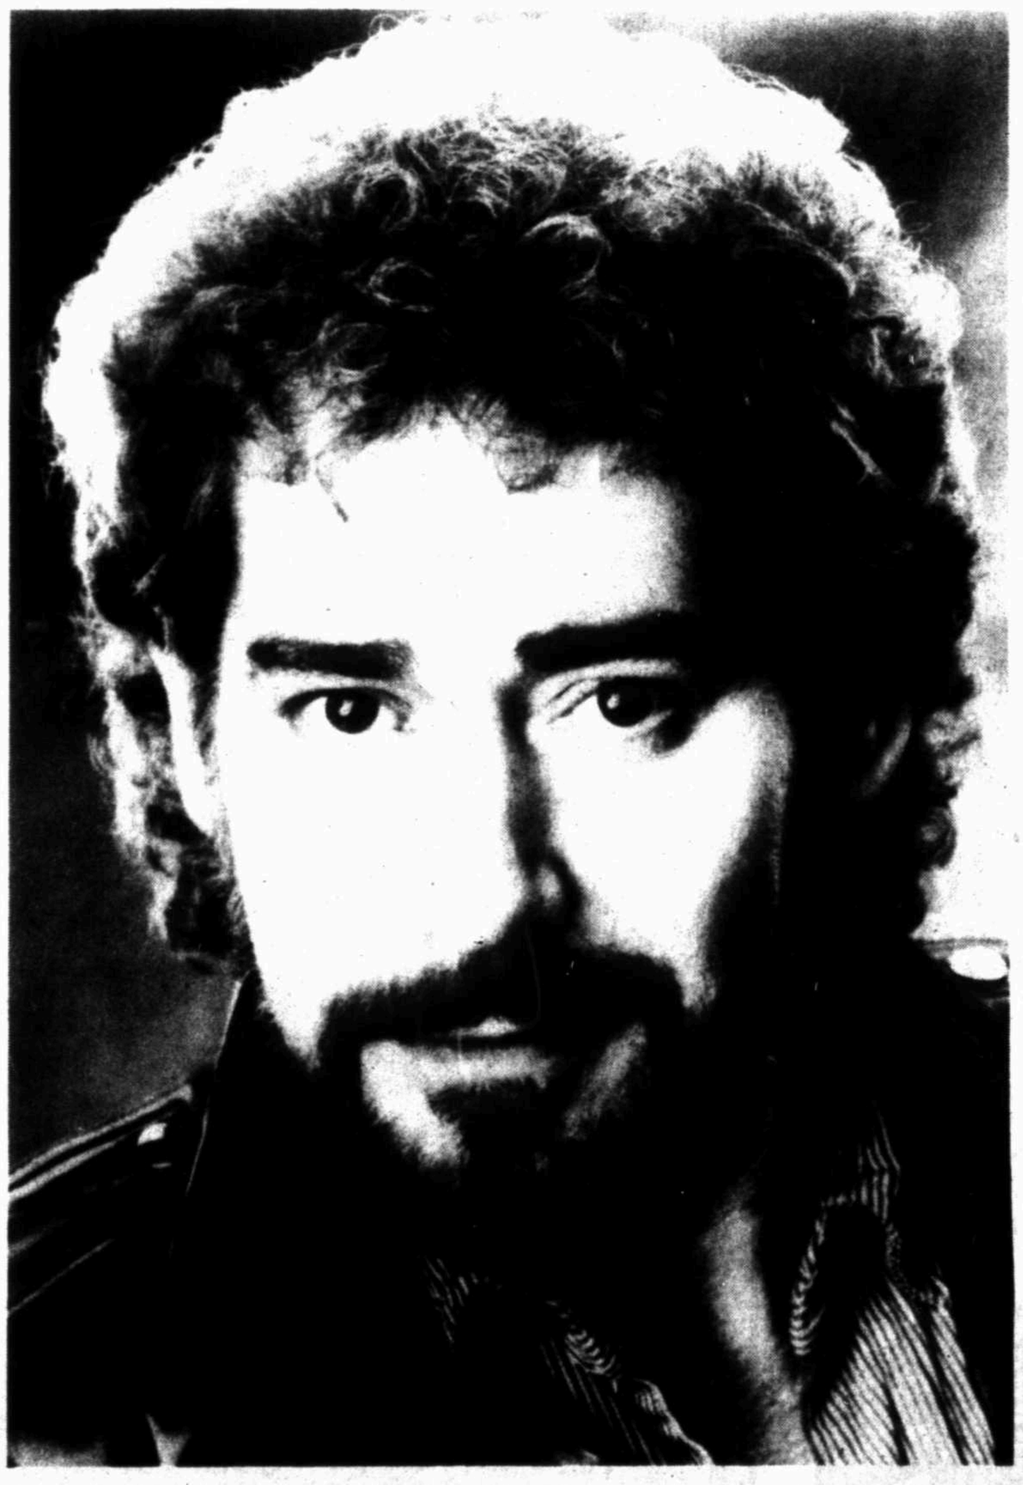

Author Anna Grossnickle Hines has created a delightful story about siblings that will be fun for the whole family to share. Little Joshua tells about being teased by his older sisters, but reassures himself that "They Really Like Me!"

When the girls are left in charge while mother goes to the store, things get a bit out of hand. Ultimately, of course, it is clear that the sisters do indeed like him. Joshua is just a typically mischievous little brother.

Hines creates her own illustrations in ink-outlined water colors that perfectly complement and expand the simple text, especially the wordless double-page spread that captures Joshua's delicious moment of revenge.

Not yet available in paperback, "They Really Like Me!" is a new release from Greenwillow Press.
