Deng speaks; Troops move near colleges

■ Tiananmen Square now occupied by troops; Related stories — 2D

BEIJING (AP) — China's senior leader Deng Xiaoping today appeared in public for the first time in more than three weeks and praised the military for crushing the student demonstrations for democracy.

The speech was televised nationally, as were scenes from demonstrations in several provincial cities, where there were reports that dissidents and supporters of the pro-democracy movement were being arrested.

In Beijing, hundreds of troops took up positions around college campuses, where the nation's pro-democracy protests began in mid-April. Many students have returned home or gone into hiding since the army declared martial law in the capital and violently ended the protests over the weekend.

In Washington, President Bush said Thursday the United States "can't have totally normal relations" with China until its government recognizes the rights of the students who led the demonstrations. But Bush, in a televised news conference, rejected suggestions he impose more sanctions on China.

In Bonn, West Germany, the Soviet Union's main spokesman said today that Soviet officials have been unable to reach Beijing. Asked if he was surprised by the brutality of the crackdown on the Chinese protests, Foreign Ministry Spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov said: "We hadn't expected this." He said Soviet authorities were "extremely dismayed" at Beijing's actions.

The comments are the first official Soviet response since the new Soviet Congress issued an extremely guarded statement Tuesday saying events in China were "an internal affair."

Deng praised the suppression of the pro-democracy movement in an address to officers of the People's Liberation Army. He thanked them for their actions, which resulted in the deaths of hundreds if not thousands of Beijing residents.

Deng said the people behind the democratic movement wanted to "overthrow communism and do away with the socialist system and the People's Republic of China and establish a capitalist republic."

He said, "Facing a life-threatening situation, our troops never forgot the people, never forgot the party, never forgot the country's interest."

Chinese Red Cross officials estimate 3,600 people were killed and 60,000 injured in the assault, according to a Chinese group in West Germany, the Union of Chinese Students in the Federal Republic. The government says 300 people, mostly soldiers, were killed; Chinese and diplomats say up to 3,000 died.

Deng had not been seen in public since he met Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev on May 16. There have been numerous rumors in recent weeks that Deng was dead or critically ill.

On his right was conservative Premier Li Peng, who declared martial law in Beijing on May 20. On Thursday, Li also praised the soldiers' action in a speech. It was the first appearance by a high government official in two weeks, indicating China's hard-line leaders were gaining control of the situation.

Kuwait makes conciliatory gesture

From wire reports

VIENNA — Kuwait, in a conciliatory gesture toward the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, said Thursday that it might curb its runaway oil production, but it still refused to accept its OPEC quota of 1.093 million barrels a day.

The Kuwaiti oil minister, Sheik Ali Khalifa al-Sabah, pledged at a press conference that Kuwait would produce oil "very, very responsibly," and might cut its output to 1.35 million barrels a day from its current level of almost 2 million barrels.

■ Effect on OPEC accord explored — 7C

As a result of Kuwait's pledge, oil prices rose on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Contracts for West Texas intermediate crude oil were 12 to 33 cents a barrel higher, with the July contract at $20 a barrel.

Nevertheless, Kuwait's refusal to accept its quota disturbed other OPEC members and exacerbated the organization's most daunting and recurring challenge: how to allocate production among the group's 13 oil producers. It also raised the specter of a production free-for-all that could cause prices to plunge.

Indeed, excess output by Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Ecuador and Gabon is bringing the group closer to all-out production like that of last autumn, when prices dropped to $10 a barrel.

Over the last six years OPEC has had intermittent periods of calm in an unending battle among members for an ever bigger piece of the group's pie. Wars, revolutions and regional coalitions may augment or diminish the political power of certain members or groups, but OPEC's continuing dilemma is how to satisfy its members' demands for higher quotas.

Bush says ties made 'difficult'

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON — President Bush refuses to fix blame for the massacre in Beijing but says it would be "extraordinarily difficult" to have ties with anyone responsible for the bloodshed.

Bush

Bush, in the first prime-time news conference of his presidency, said Thursday night that the United States won't have normal relations with China until the government there recognizes demands for democracy.

Despite a military crackdown that killed hundreds if not thousands of people in Beijing, Bush emphasized Thursday night that he wants to "preserve the relationship" with China.

But for that relationship to be normal, he said, "it will take a recognition of the rights of individuals and respect for the rights of those who disagree."

He said, "I don't want to pass judgment on individual leaders but I want to make very clear to those leaders and to the rest of the world that the United States denounces the kind of brutality that all of us have seen on our television."

Pressed on whether he could maintain relations with anyone who ordered the firing on unarmed students, Bush said, "It would make it extraordinarily difficult."

Bush letter one for the books

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

On Midland's library list of 57,204 card-holding patrons, some are more famous than others.

Barbara Bush.

George H.W. Bush.

But it wasn't always so.

Barbara Bush was the wife of a West Texas wildcatter in the early 1950s when she applied for and got a patron's library card when the Midland County Public Library was in the basement of the Midland County Courthouse.

The library, like the Bushes, has moved on to new territory.

The Bush family left Midland in the late 1950s. And Bush, successful in the petroleum business, pursued governmental careers here and abroad, became Vice President in 1981 and President of the United States in 1989.

And some years ago, Frances "Tommie" Tomlinson, when she was Midland County's circulation librarian, by chance happened to run across Mrs. Bush's old library index card filed in a box of other old cards stowed away in a closet.

"I don't know why it struck me as an oddity at the time," Mrs. Tomlinson recalled. "When I ran across it, I thought, 'Hey, how about that!' " Other than that, "I didn't think anything about it," she said.

The original library-card application in Mrs. Bush's handwriting has "long since been destroyed," Mrs. Tomlinson said.

She retired from full-time library work in 1986 and apparently forgot the fluke until Barbara Bush became first lady. And she casually suggested to Circulation Librarian Carol Clark that Mrs. Bush's old file card be put on display.

But it couldn't be found.

Mrs. Tomlinson, who hasn't seen the old card in years, supposed that it is hidden away in the closet.

"I bet you it's still there," she said.

HIV cases on rise in Permian Basin

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

■ Nation's AIDS cases underestimated? — 7A
■ Salk reports on experiments with vaccine — 1D

A growing number of Permian Basin people have tested positive for the AIDS virus in recent months, but the local death count from the disease has remained unchanged since February, Texas Department of Health figures show.

Since the department in 1981 began compiling statistics on acquired immune deficiency syndrome cases in the 17-county Permian Basin, 39 have contracted full-blown cases and 24 have died.

The number of deaths has remained the same since February, with two additional cases diagnosed during the period. Midland County has had 10 cases of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome with five deaths, while Ector County has seen nine deaths in 15 cases. Andrews, Martin, Howard, Winkler and Ward counties each have at least one case.

"We expect the number of cases to be on the rise because we have seen a rise in the number of those testing HIV positive," Sarana Savage, regional AIDS coordinator for the Texas Department of Health, said this morning. "I would say that in a couple more months we're going to have a few more cases in this area."

Ms. Savage said that because the department only began in May to compile data on exposure to the human immunodeficiency virus, the first stage in the possible development of AIDS, precise statistics are not yet available.

She estimated that as many as 400 in Midland and 600 in Ector County could be seropositive to HIV.

"I'm not going to say there's a flood," Ms. Savage said. "There is a problem, but I think doctors simply are reporting more."

The number, she said, could be even higher because some go to Dallas, Houston, San Francisco and other cities to be tested.

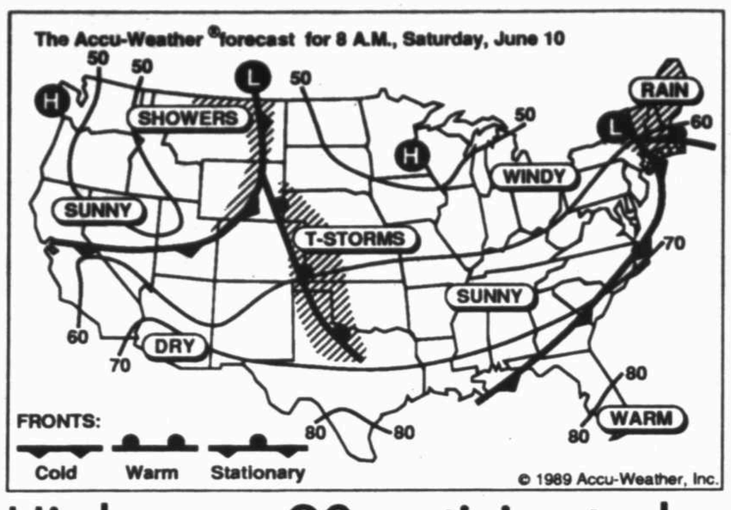
WEATHER SUMMARY



High near 90 anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy skies and a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms, a few possibly severe, are in the forecast for tonight according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the middle 60s and winds will be from the southeast at 10-15 mph.

Partly cloudy skies will continue through Saturday with the chance of rain dropping to 20 percent. The high will be near 90 and winds will be from the southeast at 10-20 mph.

Thursday's high of 92 was 12 degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 104 set for that date in 1964. The overnight low of 65 was 10 degrees warmer than the record low temperature set for this date in 1955.

STATE

Isolated thunderstorms will be roaming portions of North Texas, West Texas and and the Hill Country tonight.

Tonight's thunderstorm activity is expected on the heels of other thunderstorms that moved across the Rio Grande plains early today.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 60s and 70s with a few readings in South Texas expected to be in the lower 80s.

Highs Saturday will be mostly in the 80s and 90s, ranging from the upper 70s in the Panhandle to around the 100-degree mark in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas.

An upper level storm system over northeastern New Mexico triggered thunderstorms accompanied by heavy rainfall in the Panhandle and South Plains during the night and early today. The storms began to weaken during the pre-dawn hours, the National Weather Service reported.

Coastal storms, tornadoes kill five

Associated Press

Officials in Florida and Louisiana today mourned five people killed in storms but said they were lucky that powerful twisters blasting out of Gulf thunderstorms hadn't caused more fatalities.

One tornado Thursday night zapped the Florida Panhandle fishing village of Eastpoint, killing a grandmother, mother and son in their house. It destroyed 19 houses and narrowly missed a nursing home.

Cleanup efforts began today in south Louisiana where tornadoes hit seven parishes, killing two people in mobile homes in the town of Grosse Tete and damaging scores of homes there and 15 miles east in Baton Rouge.

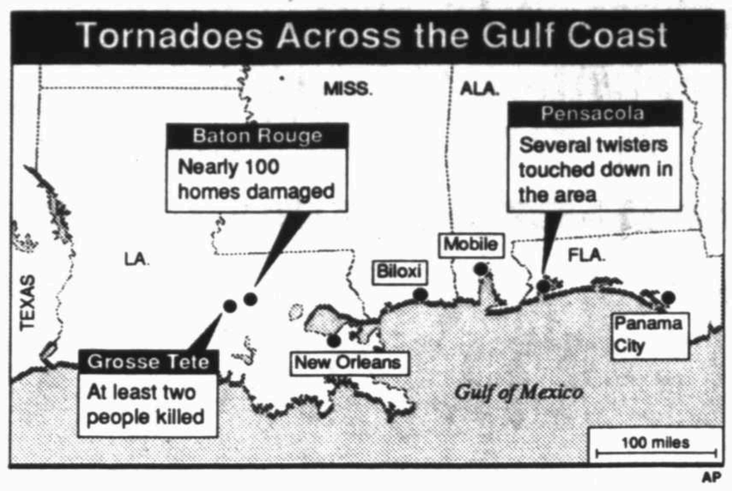
"We can't imagine how more aren't dead," said Willie Hurdle, an Iberville Parish official who surveyed the scene at Grosse Tete. "This is devastating. There's about 20 houses that aren't even here anymore."

About two dozen others were injured in the tornado.

Police sealed the town off to prevent looting and dogs searched the rubble for bodies or survivors.

Officials used a chain saw to free an elderly woman from the wreckage of her home.

Gov. Buddy Roemer toured the area by helicopter. He said two companies of Louisiana National Guard soldiers would be sent to help authorities enforce a night curfew to discourage looters.



Baton Rouge fire chief Ron Spillman said four tornadoes touched down 19 times in East Baton Rouge Parish, destroying or damaging almost 70 mobile homes and 25 to 30 houses.

From 400 to 600 people lived in the destroyed or damaged residences, Spillman estimated. A shelter was set up at a high school for those left homeless.

Kimberly Carver was asleep in her mobile home at the Pecue Lake Mobile Home Park when one of the twisters ripped through the neighborhood.

"Somehow, I just ended up between the mattress and box springs. Everything in my bedroom was flying. If I wasn't between the mattress and the box spring, I would have gotten hurt. It happened so fast," Carver said.

Authorities reported three injuries in Baton Rouge, none serious.

Gulf State Utilities crews worked into the morning to restore power to about 3,500 residents in the Baton Rouge area.

John Boss, a photographer for the State-Times in Baton Rouge, and Rita F. Gilmer were caught in the middle of the storm near a bridge over the Mississippi River.

"Two houses blew up right across the levee from where we were," he said. "Limbs were snapping off trees and flying all over us. We were afraid we were going to be hit by all the debris. I was scared to death. It was hell."

Most of the demolished houses in Eastpoint, 85 miles southeast of Tallahassee, were mobile homes, officials said. Eight cars and several utility sheds also were destroyed. A hardware store lost its roof, and a boat building business was demolished.

"It was monstrous — like the tornado in the 'Wizard of Oz,' " said Tracey Hardman after seeing the twister. "It was awesome."

Earlier Thursday, a U.S. park ranger was hurt when a tornado carried away the shelter at Gulf Islands National Seashore in which she had taken refuge.

Amanda Rhodes suffered a broken arm and cuts when she was blown 10 to 15 yards. The 20-by-30-foot wood-frame entrance station was demolished, officials said.

Cabinet minister killed in El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Unidentified gunmen killed a cabinet minister today as he was driving through the city, a hospital source said.

Jose Antonio Rodriguez, the minister of the presidency, died shortly after arriving at the Zaldivar Hospital, said a nurse who demanded anonymity.

Rodriguez, considered the chief of staff, was a member of the rightist Republican Nationalist Alliance of President Alfredo Cristiani, who took office June 1. Rodriguez was killed in western San Salvador, the nurse said.

Sources in the presidency and the party told The Associated Press they had heard reports of an assassination but could not confirm Rodriguez was killed.

No further details were immediately available.

Leftist guerrillas of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, who tried to disrupt the election that brought Cristiani to power, have vowed before his inauguration to make El Salvador "ungovernable."

On Saturday, the guerrillas spurned Cristiani's proposal for dialogue aimed at ending the nation's civil war. An estimated 70,000 people, most of them civilians, have been killed since the civil war began nine years ago.

On Wednesday, guerrillas attacked nine military posts and claimed to have killed or wounded six police in a raid on a coffee processing plant at San Miguel de Mercedes, 50 miles north of the capital in Chalatenango province.

CHINA

Conspicuously absent was Communist Party General Secretary Zhao Ziyang, who was reportedly stripped of power by Deng after opposing the military crackdown on the students, who were demanding democratic reforms, such as freedom of the press, and an end to official corruption.

Qiao Shi, a Politburo Standing Committee member and a top candidate to replace Zhao, was present, as was Vice Premier Yao Yilin, a conservative economist and Wan Li, current National People's Congress chief.

The television also showed Deng and the others shaking hands with troops inside the Great Hall of the People.

Deng's appearance with the other hardliners gave an impression of party unity as the military extended its control over the capital and police in other large cities began rounding up participants in large-scale disturbances that have occurred since the attack on Beijing on June 3 and 4.

Television showed what appeared to be burned out, smoldering blocks in Chengdu, the capital of Sichuan province. Violent demonstrations broke out in Chengdu following the weekend crackdown in Beijing. Scenes of protest were shown in several other cities including Shanghai, Changsha, Wuhan and Harbin.

The television showed dozens of people being arrested for alleged destructive acts during the protests.

In Shanghai today, 50,000 students and others gathered to mourn the deaths of six people who were killed earlier this week when a train crashed through a barricade set up on railway tracks.

A Chinese source said police had begun making arrests at night in at least one apartment complex. The government has reported only arrests of people allegedly caught trying to set fire to buses or engaged in other violence.

"We know they're picking people up all over the place," said one Western diplomat. "Don't let people tell you things are calming down. They're not."

In Beijing, gas stations opened and food was more plentiful in markets. City buses rolled past the tanks on Tiananmen Square for the first time since June 3. There were no reports of soldiers firing on crowds.

More than a dozen tanks and hundreds of armored personnel carriers could be seen on the square, which has been turned into a vast military encampment since the army ousted student protesters with gunfire.

Concern that factional fighting between rival military groups might turn Beijing into a killing field abated as troops from various armies took up stations inside the city without major conflicts.

Those fears prompted an exodus of foreigners from the capital, with most embassies ordering out all dependents and non-essential staff and many arranging special flights out.

The U.S. Embassy said registered Americans in China had dropped from 8,800 before the military crackdown to less than 5,000. Less than 400 Americans were in Beijing, down from 1,500.

BUSH

Bush answered questions at the televised news conference for 33 minutes. He appeared relaxed and confident, joking at times with his interrogators and expressing pleasure when a reporter wished his wife, Barbara, happy birthday on her 64th.

Bush took the opportunity to say the first lady was "doing just fine" after treatment for a thyroid problem.

On other matters, Bush:

—Said he opposed public disclosure of people who test positive for AIDS. "There is a certain right to privacy that we should respect," he said, adding, however, that people who test positive should inform their doctors and sexual partners.

—Said he will tell Polish leaders during a visit next month "we want to work with you" as long as economic and pro-democracy reforms continue. "When a country moves as Poland did, down democracy's path, the United States should respond as best it could," he said.

—Said he would not give up on his campaign to drive from power Panamanian ruler Manuel Antonio Noriega, who has been indicted in Miami on drug-smuggling charges.

Foreign policy issues dominated the questioning.

Bush said he was encouraged by Moscow's response to his proposal for cutbacks in Soviet and American combat troops in Europe to 275,000 each.

He said agreement on that plan could ease tensions in NATO about updating short-range nuclear missiles — a plan that West Germany opposes.

While saying he wants to see Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's economic reforms succeed, Bush said, "I am going to keep my eyes wide open."

He also urged Iran's new leaders to help free American hostages in Lebanon and to renounce terrorism if they want better relations with the United States.

On the political front in Washington, where congressional Republicans and Democrats are bitterly attacking each other over ethics issues, Bush said "this ugliness of this climate is bad and I don't like it and I'd like to think that I could help."

He said newly elected Democratic House Speaker Thomas Foley, tarred by a Republican Party circular comparing his record to that of a homosexual congressman, had been rendered "a terrible ill service."

Bush said GOP chairman Lee Atwater "looked me right in the eye and said he did not know about" the circular, whose purported author, Mark Goodin, resigned as a Republican press aide on Wednesday.

Discussing China, Bush repeatedly referred to his experience as U.S. envoy to Beijing in 1974-1975 but said U.S. understanding of developments in China was "very, very murky."

Bush said he felt a "sense of personal disappointment" in the government's turn toward violence.

Asked whether Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping was still in charge, Bush said, "I don't know." Pointing around the room of reporters, he said, "And you don't know. And he doesn't know. And she doesn't know and nobody knows — outside (of China). And that's the way the Chinese system works."

Given his personal ties with China, Bush was asked why he didn't pick up the telephone and call the country's leaders. "The line was busy. I couldn't get through," he said.

Defending his decision not to invoke more sanctions beyond his suspension of military sales to China, Bush said the United States is engaged in diplomatic efforts that he hopes will ease the situation.

Bush said, "We aren't going to remake the world but we should stand for something. And there's no question in the minds of these students (in China) that the United States is standing in their corners."

AIDS

Ms. Savage also said she expects to hear more reports with the recent opening of free AIDS testing by Planned Parenthood of West Texas. Midland and Ector County health department offices also provide free testing.

Jane Hellinghausen, Planned Parenthood director of education, said 62 people have taken advantage of the free testing at her office since it was first offered in April. None tested positive, Ms. Hellinghausen said.

"That's a lot of tests," she said. "We didn't think we would have as many as that."

She said of those tested, most were women and included everyone from teen-agers to a 77-year-old person.

Ms. Savage said that because more AIDS education is available, more Permian Basin residents have become knowledgeable about the disease.

"I think people are very open about listening to what has been said," she said. "They are willing to learn about it."

The education end of Ms. Savage's job includes working with local health departments, speaking and holding in-service seminars with area teachers.

She said that although the Texas Legislature approved a fraction of the funds the department had asked for to bolster AIDS education programs and other areas, the $18 million approved should be helpful. The department asked for $46 million to fund education, prevention, risk-reduction and services to AIDS patients.

Ms. Savage said she will travel to Austin in coming weeks to determine how much of the appropriation Permian Basin health officials will receive.

LETTER

Sandra Wagner, assistant county librarian, however, seemed sure that the box of 1950s index cards has been discarded in cleaning out the closet.

"There's a limit how long you hold onto things," said Mrs. Wagner. "We cleaned out the storeroom this year."

And Mrs. Clark said it was hardly worth ferreting out the old card even if "it's there somewhere," since it would be more expedient to reissue a library card to Mrs. Bush.

So, Claire Kahle, circulation clerk, took on the mission of issuing current library cards to the Bushes.

"I took the liberty of updating the card," Mrs. Kahle wrote to President and Mrs. Bush, "and also of issuing a card for President Bush."

"I didn't ask for references," Mrs. Kahle quipped.

To her delight and surprise, Mrs. Kahle received a personal letter, on White House stationery, from the first lady.

"Thank you for our new library cards!" wrote Mrs. Bush. "How very nice of you to renew mine and issue one for George. It was a kind and wonderful gesture and we appreciate it very much."

Mrs. Bush is chairperson of the national "Year of the Young Reader" movement to encourage reading.

"I was excited, definitely, because I didn't expect a personal reply," Mrs. Kahle said of the Barbara Bush letter. "I expected them to pitch my letter."

In a postscript to the typed letter, Mrs. Bush penned: "As you well know, libraries are very important in my life and America's!"

HANCE

Railroad Commission Chairman Kent Hance said Thursday that failure of Kuwait and other OPEC nations to abide by previous production quotas, along with the higher production ceiling agreed to this week, sets the stage for continued, increased excess production.

"The key will be the actions of the 13 member countries over the next three months," Hance said.

If production by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries stays above 20.5 million barrels a day, prices could dip to $16 a barrel, he said in a Thursday statement.

"Sudden dips in crude oil prices in the past have had a negative effect on the Texas economy," Hance noted.

If OPEC production is 20 million to 20.5 million barrels a day, the price of a barrel of oil should range between $17 and $21, he said.

"If several of the member countries begin to ignore the production limitations, it may cause the other OPEC members to do likewise, and we will see a further drop in prices," Hance said.

"This meeting proved that OPEC does not function effectively when things are going well," he said. "It is only when dropping prices put their backs against the wall that they operate accordingly."

The OPEC Monitoring Committee will meet in September to review the production levels, allowing some adjustment by cartel members in case of a price drop, Hance said.

Diver almost finds Davey Jones' locker in nuclear plant's intake pipe

New York Times News Service

FORT PIERCE, Fla. — What began as a search for "colorful little fish" turned into a watery nightmare for a diver who stopped to inspect what he thought was an artificial reef and was sucked into an intake pipe of the St. Lucie Nuclear Power Plant.

Bill Lamm, 45, who has been diving for five years, was pulled head-first Monday into the pipe — 16 feet in diameter — that feeds sea water to the Florida Power & Light Co. plant after he stepped off a 70-foot concrete slab and was whisked into the current.

The Vero Beach resident said he considered taking his own life before he got to the end of the 1,600-foot tunnel because he feared a blade or iron grate would be waiting to maul him at the other end.

It wasn't. And Lamm said he's "extremely thankful" he surfaced in a cooling canal just seconds before he expected to die in his underwater cage.

"I kept thinking about what was on the other end, and how I was going to die," said the owner of Sunshine Oxygen and Welding Supply of Fort Pierce.

"I knew I wasn't any Rambo — I wasn't strong enough to rip whatever it was apart," a still-shaken Lamm said Wednesday.

"I thought if I just took the regulator out of my mouth, I could die fast, and I wouldn't have to see it coming. About that time, I popped up in the canal, and I saw daylight."

Although FPL officials say the 70-by-70-foot platform is designed to keep divers and marine life from being sucked into the intake pipe, Lamm said there were no signs noting the current except for two "ordinary-looking" buoys that are common on Florida's coast.

FPL spokesman Gary Mehalik said the company is looking at the area to see if more signs are needed but said the buoys are numbered on navigational maps and listed as being above "intake valves."

Lamm doesn't know what's on the maps but said he was thankful to be alive after the roller-coaster ordeal that left him with numerous cuts and bruises and a dive suit he said resembles an outfit from a slasher movie.

Lamm, who was spearfishing with his brother-in-law, said he's even more thankful he didn't take his two teen-age sons snorkeling that day — a situation he's sure would have led to tragedy.

He has hired Vero Beach attorney Cal Brown to pursue possible legal action in the case.

"I only went down a few feet at the edge (of the slab) and as quick as you could blink an eye, I was in 15 feet of water," Lamm said, noting that he could stand on the platform and still see above the water. "If my sons had been with me and snorkeled down 10 feet, they would have never come home.

"If I didn't have air, I'd have been a goner, too."

Bush urges Soviets to accept troop offer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush wants Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev to show "his desire for change" by quickly accepting U.S. proposals to cut conventional forces in Europe.

Bush told a White House news conference Thursday night that Gorbachev "has already demonstrated his commitment to change and to reform...I want to see perestroika succeed...not fail."

"But there's ways now to solidify these changes," said the president, urging Gorbachev to accept the U.S. offer to cut its 305,000 troops in Central Europe to 275,000 if the Soviets cut their 600,000-man force to the lower U.S.level.

"What is wrong with being equal?" said Bush. "So here's a test now."

Secretary of State James A. Baker III said the administration wants Gorbachev to respond to the U.S. proposal when he visits West Germany next week.

Bush also extended a hand of friendship and congratulations to the people Poland who, in their first democratic elections since World War II, gave a resounding vote of no confidence in the Communist government.

The president said that when he travels to Poland next month, he will tell its leaders, "We want to work with you."

"The quest for democracy in Poland...if it goes forward, will mean a much better relationship for Poland" with the United States, he said.

The president acknowledged that some disagreements remained between the United States and West Germany over whether to modernize Lance short-range nuclear missiles, but he said a conventional force agreement could solve that problem.

"It is in our interests to quickly move forward, because if we can get implemented within our timeframe the agreement on conventional forces, that will take a tremendous amount of pressure off the Germans on short-range forces," Bush said.

Baker said that Soviet acceptance of the U.S. proposal to reduce NATO and Warsaw Pact forces to the same level "would substantially reduce the threat of surprise military attack and the danger of large-scale offensive operations against Western Europe."

"The time is ripe for Mr. Gorbachev to respond positively to the opportunities presented by NATO's initiatives," said Baker.

More research on alcohol, aging urged

ATLANTA (AP) — Small amounts of alcohol may help older people, but a government workshop says alcohol abuse can worsen diseases of the aging, particularly heart disease.

More research is needed into the relationship between alcohol and cardiovascular disease, especially as the population ages, the workshop said in a report. Heart disease is the most common killer of Americans 65 and older.

The recommendations from the Surgeon General's Workshop on Health Promotion and Aging were published Thursday by the federal Centers for Disease Control.

It noted that between 1950 and 1980 the number of Americans 65 and older increased from 12.5 million to 25.5 million, with the largest increase in the 85-and-older group. The percentage of Americans older than 65 is 12 percent now and will be 21.1 percent by the year 2030, the report said.

The effects of alcohol abuse on the elderly range from physical and mental impairment to a worsening of some chronic illnesses, the report said. These problems may be offset partly by benefits from limited alcohol use, it said.

Researchers at Stanford University reported in 1985 that people who drink in moderation may reduce risk of heart disease, possibly by increasing blood levels of certain proteins.

The report said the apparent conflicting effects of large and small doses of alcohol are most notable in cases of coronary artery disease, which affects about 3.6 million Americans older than 65.

Studies have confirmed that hypertension, a major contributor to cardiovascular disease and stroke, increases in the elderly as alcohol use increases. The report noted that hypertension is especially common among the elderly in minority groups.

Gregory Heath of the CDC's epidemiology section, who edited the report, said the potential for harm is well established among heavy drinkers. He said CDC studies define that as more than two drinks a day, but other studies go as high as five a day.

"Other studies have demonstrated a possible beneficial link between moderate levels of alcohol intake and (coronary artery disease), although this relationship is controversial," the report said.

The report said that although aging Americans report they drink less, their level of alcohol abuse appears to be about equal to the 8 percent found in the rest of the adult population.

Heath said that the elderly tend to underreport their drinking and that it is unclear whether the apparent decline in drinking as Americans grow older is because drinkers become non-drinkers or because the drinkers tend to die earlier.

"Researchers are on both sides of the fence on that one, and I don't feel it's fair to comment one way or the other," he said.

The elderly, he said, are more likely to be taking medication for chronic diseases and may not know how alcohol interacts with that medicine.

POW camp used to sharpen elderly's vision of the past

By SHEILA RULE
New York Times News Service

MALTON, England — Tom Freer listened to the declaration of war, the bombs exploding in a city under siege and the mellow, 1940s harmony in "On a Slow Boat to China."

Freer then began dusting off some memories.

"I used to help fetch prisoners from here in the morning and bring them back at night," said Freer, 83, seated in a wheelchair.

"I'd take them to our farm and they would do everything — plowing, drilling, hoeing. There were some very hard memories of those days but there were some good memories. I was married then. I had a little girl, two years old. It is very different now."

Along with other elderly patients from a nearby hospital, Freer had just completed a tour of Eden Camp, a former prisoner-of-war camp that has been converted into a sort of museum depicting the drama, sights and sounds of life on the home front in World War II.

For him and some others, the visit appeared to sharpen blurred memories of a time when life had a more confident air, a keener eye and a quicker step. It was the sort of reaction that Gordon Evans had hoped for.

Evans, a registered psychiatric nurse and teacher, uses the collection of 22 huts in this North Yorkshire town as a tool in teaching and conducting reminiscence or recall therapy.

The treatment is aimed at helping the aged to recall images, situations and pleasures that remind them of the sense of worth and purpose of their youth.

Such recollections are then used to help them relate more confidently to a fast-changing world, ease depression and improve levels of communication, concentration and critical thinking.

Health workers say the therapy also benefits nursing homes and hospitals that care for the elderly, of which little may be known beyond their medical histories and the names of next of kin. By reminiscing, they often paint vibrant portraits of themselves on what had been virtually blank canvases.

"I have patients who live in hospital wards or homes for the aged," said Evans, who teaches at York and Scarborough College of Midwifery and Nursing.

"They have left behind their homes and a lot of belongings that could bring back memories. This could be traumatic. They are lonely. The therapy can help them open up, feel more relaxed, wanted and confident by bringing back happy memories of what they did in the past."

In the therapy, Evans said, elderly people choose the themes on which they want to focus, such as music, old television programs or the war years.

Patients also keep diaries, make scrapbooks or draw pictures of situations or objects that bring back pleasant memories.

In initial sessions, therapists try to determine the themes or situations that could stir unhappy recollections and, therefore, should be avoided. For example, not all patients are taken to Eden Camp.

"One criticism is that the therapy can reinforce the world the elderly used to live in," Evans said.

"That's why we feel it is important to use their memories to get them to start thinking about what is happening around them today. If a woman with arthritis has hang-ups about going out in today's world but recalls the fun of going to dances in the war years, we might use the memories to focus discussions on day centers and social activities she could attend now.

"In the end, we're trying to improve their quality of life. The care of the elderly must be on the national agenda as more and more people grow old. Some statistics suggest that one in six of our population will be at retirement age by the year 2000, which means we have got to think more about what to do for the older people among us."

Evans pushed Mary Spanton, 86, in her wheelchair past various exhibits, all in huts that were built in 1942 to house Italian prisoners.

Mrs. Spanton studied one display that featured extracts of a speech by Hitler and others that portrayed the blitz, women working in a munitions factory and the blackout.

She saw beds once used by prisoners, a reconstruction of a bomber operations room and a partial reconstruction of a German submarine, complete with vivid sound effects of an enemy attack.

She paused at a display called "A Street at War," with walls of sandbags and taped windows intended to lessen the danger of shattered glass.

Mrs. Spanton recalled working in a country grocery store in World War II and how lucky she felt to be living outside urban England then.

Evans, kneeling beside her, brought up the subject of modern-day supermarkets and asked what she thought of using them.

She thought for a moment and then said that supermarkets had "spoiled it for all the small trades."

Mrs. Spanton then recalled experiences from World War I.

"When we were schoolgirls, we would sing to soldiers in blue uniforms who were recuperating from their wounds," she said softly.

"We were done up in little white aprons and would sing about being Red Cross nurses. We would sing: 'We tend them; we mend them; we cheer them with a smile.' Yes, I remember, that's what we would sing."

Age Concern, a network of 950 groups around the country that provide services to elderly people, says that the use of reminiscence therapy in Britain is less than a decade old but that it is gradually gaining acceptance, as those who use it report generally successful results.

"They're all chatting away about what they did in the war," said Jackie Clemit, a nurse who accompanied the elderly visitors and now sat with them as they shared their memories.

"When they're sitting around all day, they can become so stale. This really gives them life."

The X-15 rocket plane is rolled out for public display for the first time at the North American Aviation plant in California on Oct. 15, 1958. Veterans of the X-15 program gathered at Edwards Air Force Base this week to mark the plane's 30th anniversary.

Pilots recall flight of 'spaceplane'

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — Veterans of the pioneering X-15 program gathered to swap "Right Stuff" tales about edge-of-space flight before the breakthroughs of space shots and space shuttles.

Three decades ago the rocket-powered X-15 "spaceplane" first soared 67 miles over the desert and helped usher in a new era in aeronautics. Fifty miles above Earth was considered the edge of space, earning coveted astronaut wings for Air Force fliers in the X-15 program.

The three X-15 hypersonic research aircraft flew 199 flights in one of the most successful aeronautical programs ever conducted.

Neil Armstrong, the first man to set foot on the moon, was among the dozen or so military and civilian test pilots who flew the X-15 during the program operated jointly by the Air Force, Navy and National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The pilots recalled their adventures Thursday at a reunion honoring them.

"This is kind of our last hurrah," said Milt Thompson, 63, an X-15 veteran.

Others attending included Scott Crossfield, whose exploits were chronicled in Tom Wolfe's saga of the Space Age, "The Right Stuff," and retired Air Force Col. Pete Knight who went on to become mayor of the nearby desert community of Palmdale.

Another was Joe Engle, the only X-15 pilot to go on to command a space shuttle. He made 16 X-15 flights and two orbital missions in the shuttle.

"I like being around pilots," Engle said in a telephone interview on Thursday night.

"When I grow up, I'm going to be one," he quipped.

He said his experiences in the X-15 were among the most professionally rewarding of a high-flying career.

"Every time you flew the X-15, you knew you were logging data for designs (of aircraft and spacecraft) that hadn't even been thought of yet," he said.

The wicked-looking black needle-nosed rocket plane would arc across the sky so quickly that the pilot feared he was aiming straight for the Pacific Ocean, said Thompson, now chief engineer for NASA at the Ames-Dryden Research Facility.

"That was the geometry of it," he said. "It was just flying that fast."

Universities may be denying admission to Asian-Americans

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Some of the country's top colleges and universities may be illegally denying admission to Asian-Americans just as they did to Jewish students in the 1920s, lawmakers and civil rights activists charged Thursday.

The charges echoed previous accusations that Asian-American students for years have been turned down by schools in favor of less-qualified students from other ethnic backgrounds.

Admission quotas based on ethnic, racial, religious or gender group are forbidden by U.S. civil rights law.

"We hear with alarming frequency charges that colleges and universities across the country are using quota systems to limit the admission of Asian-Americans," said Rep. Dana Rohrabacher, R-Calif.

"The facts suggest we may be returning to a period in American history when ugly, yet similar, quotas were used to limit the number of Jewish students," Rohrabacher said.

In the mid-1920s, several American universities, including Harvard, set quotas to limit the number of Jewish students.

Leaders of the nation's 7 million Asian-Americans have cited allegations of discrimination against Asian-American students at several of the country's premier colleges and universities:

- At Harvard, the average Asian-American student's SAT score is 1467 while the average Caucasian score is 1355. "This would indicate that Asian-Americans must score over 100 points higher than others to be admitted," said Rep. Duncan Hunter, R-Calif.
- At Yale, the admissions rate for Asian-Americans over the last decade fell from 39 percent to 17 percent.
- At the University of California's Berkeley campus, Chancellor Ira Michael Heyman apologized two weeks ago for admissions policies that led to a decline in the enrollment of Asian-American undergraduates. "It is clear that decisions made in the admissions process indisputably had a disproportionate impact on Asians," Heyman said.

The Department of Education is reviewing enrollment figures to determine whether Harvard and the University of California at Los Angeles may have set illegal quotas on the number of Asian-Americans.

"We are doing the compliance reviews as quickly as we can," a department official said. "They do take time because there is a large number of applicants. Remember, these are very big institutions."

The department also is considering probes into alleged quotas at Berkeley and Brown University.

The department has looked into 23 individual complaints on 17 campuses, but found no violations. Several complaints were withdrawn or determined to be incomplete or inconclusive.

Study: AIDS cases underestimated

WASHINGTON (AP) — A system used by federal agencies significantly underestimates the number of Americans with AIDS and distorts the proportion of whites and minorities who have the disease, a University of Chicago study concludes.

In a study published today in the journal Science, a survey conducted by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago says estimates by the federal Centers for Disease Control do not accurately reflect racial distribution of AIDS, nor the true extent of the epidemic in the Midwest.

Edward O. Laumann of the University of Chicago said the distortion occurs because affluent whites can afford to be treated discreetly by physicians who do not officially report the disease. Also, he said, some data collection agencies are slow to compile reports and misfile others.

The CDC makes its estimate based on cases reported to official agencies. An undercount or a failure to report cases could seriously affect the CDC estimate, Laumann said in a telephone interview on Thursday.

"We are contending that there is an undercount, but we don't know the scale of it," said Laumann, who co-authored the report in Science. "We can estimate the demographic composition, but not the gross numbers themselves. The reason we're being cautious is that this is too small a sample."

To gather data for the study, Laumann and his associates conducted interviews with members of 1,481 households around the country. The households were selected to reflect a cross-section of the population.

Respondents were asked if they knew an acquaintance who had AIDS. To validate the accuracy of the answers, the respondents also were asked if they had an acquaintance who had been murdered.

Using earlier studies on the number of people likely to have known a murder victim, the researchers concluded that answers to the homicide question were statistically accurate. This suggested that answers to the AIDS question would be equally accurate.

The results of the AIDS question "suggest that the white proportion (of AIDS cases) is substantially higher than CDC reports and that a substantially greater share of the cases is in the Midwestern region."

According to CDC figures from March 7, whites account for about 60 percent of the nation's AIDS cases. The University of Chicago study put the number at 72 percent.

The CDC said 26 percent of all victims so far are black and 14 percent are Hispanic. The Chicago results put these totals at 18 percent for blacks and 6 percent for Hispanics.

Cases in the Midwest, according to the CDC, make up only 8 percent of the national total. The Chicago study said Midwest cases actually comprise 20 percent of the national total.

The comparative figures for other regions:

- East: CDC, 39 percent of the national total; Chicago, 19 percent.
- South: CDC, 26 percent; Chicago, 25 percent.
- West: CDC, 27 percent; Chicago, 36 percent.

Laumann said "logic alone" suggested something was wrong with the CDC figures for the Midwest. Chicago, he said, "has all of the AIDS risk factors," such as a population of injection drug users, and yet the city was said to have only 3.1 cases of AIDS per 10,000 residents, compared to a national total of 3.7 cases per 10,000.

Also, he said, according to the CDC figures, "Colorado at the time of the 1988 survey had an absolute number of AIDS cases that was equal to or even exceeded that of Michigan. And Colorado has 38 percent of the population of Michigan." Laumann said Michigan also has big cities where the AIDS risk factors are common.

"That just doesn't make sense," he said.

Laumann submitted the Chicago study to officials at the CDC for comment, and he said "these results don't surprise them."

"They know that sexually transmitted diseases are generally undercounted for the white population because people go to personal physicians and one of the things they are doing is buying some discretion about it," he said.

Bhutto calls on democracies to unite

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto of Pakistan said fledgling democracies like her own need support from countries with strong democratic foundations.

In a speech Thursday during 338th commencement exercises at her alma mater, Harvard University, she called for the formation of an Association of Democratic Nations.

"Democracy needs support and the best support for democracy comes from other democracies," the 35-year-old leader of 104 million people said. "Democratic nations should...come together in an association designed to help each other and promote what is a universal value — democracy."

Ms. Bhutto, the first woman in modern times to lead a Moslem country, is a 1973 graduate of Radcliffe.

She returned as one of 10 honorary degree recipients who included two Nobel laureates, two writers and a retired congressman.

In her speech before 25,000 people, Ms. Bhutto said the association she proposed could monitor elections with observers. "It is much harder to steal an election if the whole world is watching," Ms. Bhutto said.

An association of democracies could also mobilize world opinion against leaders of any coup and take such steps as economic sanctions while using foreign aid as a reward for democracy, she said.

"There is nothing wrong with rewarding an idea in which the donors believe. The prospects for democracy may depend upon it," she said.

Ms. Bhutto added a plea for understanding Moslem countries, saying many outsiders mistakenly believe democracy can't survive in a country like Pakistan.

"But I stand before you, a Moslem woman, the elected prime minister of one hundred million Moslems, a living refutation of such arguments," she said.

Asked at a brief news conference later to comment on recent events in China, Ms. Bhutto said: "We regret the loss of human lives and would like to see a return to the restraint that was initially taken. Many who have friendships with China have been very disturbed with what has been going on there."

Ms. Bhutto, who also holds a degree from Oxford University, picked up the populist political mantle of her father, deposed and executed Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto. He was overthrown in 1977.

Since her arrival Monday, Ms. Bhutto has met privately with President Bush and other government officials and addressed Congress. She was to visit the United Nations today before departing Saturday for Pakistan.

NATION IN BRIEF

White Sands to fire beam

WHITE SANDS MISSILE RANGE, N.M. (AP) — A rocket scheduled to be launched within the week will carry the first space test of a neutral particle beam — an invisible ray of atoms stripped of their electrical charge that could be a component of the "Star Wars" missile defense system.

The $60 million Beam Experiment Aboard a Rocket will be launched 87 miles above White Sands Missile Range, and the neutral particle ray will be beamed into space, said Air Force Maj. Alan Freitag, spokesman for the Strategic Defense Initiative in Washington, D.C.

The date of the experiment is a secret because some aspects of the experiment are classified, Freitag said.

The 40-foot Aries rocket carrying the experiment was poised for launch last week, but a pump used to cool the experiment failed and had to be repaired. The rocket and payload were reassembled Wednesday, and the rocket probably will blast off sometime next week, he said.

An ultraviolet camera in the payload will track and analyze the neutral particle beam, which is invisible to the naked eye. The camera needs almost total darkness to observe the test, meaning the experiment can be launched only on nights when the moon isn't shining brightly.

Screening catches weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Airport screening is catching a record 93 percent of mock weapons concealed by agents in tests of the system, according to federal authorities, but airlines still are being fined for letting some slip through.

The Federal Aviation Administration announced $1.25 million in fines Thursday against 28 U.S. airlines, bringing total fines for security lapses over the past year and a half to $5.2 million.

A single undetected weapon can cost an airline up to $10,000.

The most lapses in the latest round of fines were cited against United Airlines, which would have to pay $167,000 for 23 security falldowns, the FAA said.

Continental, Delta, Northwest and Trans World airlines would each have to pay in excess of $100,000 for 16 or more failures to detect mock weapons or explosives, the FAA said. Fines against others ranged down to $1,000 for single violations.

Justice demands papers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department says a Senate committee is demanding some 200,000 pages of documents on William Lucas, nominated to head the department's civil rights division.

"It seems to me it would take years for the Senate staff to review all this material," Justice Department spokesman David Runkel said Thursday, adding that the amount of paperwork requested was "unusual."

However, a source with the Senate Judiciary Committee denied that the staff is seeking that many documents.

Among the requested items are unpublished decisions in Michigan state courts, the source said, adding, "The only way to get them is to have him (Lucas) find them."

Council can take Midland into future

Those in attendance this week, when newly-elected members of Midland City Council were sworn into office at City Hall, were witnesses to the installation of individuals who could shape the future of the community. It's not a future void of challenges, but rather one offering tremendous opportunities.

Taking advantage of those opportunities will be the task that falls to the community leaders installed.

That fact was underscored by comments both from the new and former councilmen, and by the keynote speakers, Dr. Duane Leach, president of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, and Ernest Angelo, former mayor of Midland. All seemed to recognize that the challenges exist today, as they have in the past, but also that insightful leadership can turn those challenges to the community's benefit.

Angelo appropriately cited for those present some of the reasons Midland is an "extraordinary community" — it's the former home to President George Bush, home to former Kentucky Derby winners and Indianapolis 500 winners, home to Jessica McClure who after falling down an abandoned water well was rescued because of the spirit of cooperation that marks the community, a national center for the oil and gas industry and a city with far-reaching political clout.

Leach encouraged the council members to seek to clarify problems facing the city and to bring about changes, saying, "Future paths are not found, they're made. Become the shapers of what might be ... rather than the preservers of what is."

Those are inspiring words, and should help compel councilmen Jose Cuevas Jr., John Castro, J.D. Faircloth and Bill Williams to action in joining with Mayor Carroll Thomas and councilmen Robert Rendall and Bob Monaghan to shape Midland's destiny.

The Midland community has faced difficult challenges throughout its entire existence — the challenges of the weather, the land, and external forces such as crop and product pricing and, economic fluctuations. Yet the community has remained strong and become a leader in many areas, as noted by former Mayor Angelo.

Midland is a land of high skies and far vision. It falls to the individuals sworn into office this week, along with those already on the council, to see that the city's aspirations are realized.

Jibril denies role in Pam Am bombing

DAMASCUS, Syria — If a grand jury had the power to subpoena Palestinian terrorist Ahmed Jibril, he would vigorously deny that he blew up Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, Dec. 21, 1988. Then he would, with as much vigor, try to make a case that America deserved what it got.

Jack Anderson

The explosion killed 270 people, 189 of them Americans. U.S. intelligence sources believe, based on circumstantial evidence, that Jibril did it to please the Ayatollah Khomeini and to embarrass fellow Palestinian Yasir Arafat. Jibril has formed an alliance with Iran to advance the cause of Palestinians and has broken ranks with Arafat, whom he thinks has betrayed the cause.

We interviewed Jibril in Damascus at the headquarters of his group, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command. He professed his innocence in the Pan Am bombing and tried to shift the blame, saying there is no end to the people who despise the United States.

"There are a lot of people and factions who don't discriminate between the government and the American people, so you, the Americans, are facing hostility and enemies everywhere. In the Philippines, in Greece, in Italy, in the Middle East, in Latin America, you are pursued," Jibril said. "You are full up with enemies."

He fingered the Japanese Red Army terrorist group as a possible culprit, and even the Israeli secret service trying to thwart Arafat's peace initiatives.

He didn't implicate his new patron, Iran, but implicity acknowledged that Khomeini had the strongest motive — revenge for the downing of an Iranian airliner by the U.S.S. Vincennes, killing 290 Iranian civilians. "You shot down the plane and then said you were sorry," Jibril said, "although the aircraft was flying over the international corridor on the Persian Gulf. And even any stupid officer would recognize that it was a civilian aircraft and not a military one."

There was that little matter of a portable radio and plastic explosives wired to an altimeter device and found on some of Jibril's followers in West Germany last October, two months before the Pan Am bombing. Investigators have determined that Pan Am 103 was blown up with the same kind of explosives hidden in a portable radio and wired to an altimeter.

But Jibril has an explanation for that. The altimeter found on his people had other uses, such as mountain climbing, he told us. Sure, Jibril says, the explosives confiscated in the raid were his, but they weren't for use against Americans. His people were smuggling them into Palestine, presumably to use against Israelis. "It's our right to smuggle them from there to our fighters in Palestine," Jibril said.

What about that statement Jibril made in 1986 that no American or Israeli airliner would ever be safe from his terrorists? He told us he was angry at the time, and that he no longer meant it. Bombing airliners isn't his style anymore.

Besides, he said, it bothers him that "you Americans don't remember the things you have done, while you never forget things that do harm to you, or something we may have said."

The way Jibril sees it, pinning him with the bombing is a plot by America and Israel to discredit him as a player in Palestine. "The CIA knows very well that we are capable and strong enough to be an obstacle to any political solution that would be adopted by America, Israel and Arafat," he said. "The American administration would like to make it very easy for Arafat to make concessions and surrender."

IMMOVABLE OBJECT — George Bush had hoped to depose Panamanian dictator Manuel Noriega with a popular uprising. That didn't work, so now Bush is trying to generate a military coup by winning the support of Noriega's top military officers. But those officers are not only fiercely loyal to Noriega, they are also mired in corruption. U.S. officials are now spreading the word among the Panamanian military that Noriega is doomed and that those who stick with him will go down with him. Noriega is countering by cutting off almost all contact between American and Panamanian military officers. He is also tapping telephones, spying on subordinates and intimidating them with threats.

MINI-EDITORIAL — A tragic skiing accident in Colorado should be turned into a lesson about safety. A 31-year-old Texas man killed an 11-year-old Iowa girl when he skied out of control and hit her last February. He pleaded no contest recently to criminally negligent homicide and will pay restitution to the girl's family. No one wants a person to do prison time for an accident, but the case should serve as a warning to people who play too hard without regard for the consequences. It is a common failing of immature youngsters, but there are plenty of aging hot-doggers in every sport. They stand to hurt more than themselves.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, June 9, the 160th day of 1989. There are 205 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 9, 1954, in one of the most dramatic confrontations of the Senate-Army hearings, Army counsel Joseph N. Welch assailed Senator Joseph R. McCarthy for his attack on a member of Welch's law firm, Frederick G. Fisher. "Have you no sense of decency, sir? At long last, have you left no sense of decency?" Welch said.

On this date:

In A.D. 68, the Roman Emperor Nero committed suicide.

In 1973, Secretariat became horse racing's first Triple Crown winner in 25 years by winning the Belmont Stakes in New York.

Deng's humanity faded to brute force

PARIS — Deng Xiaoping, the 84-year-old Chinese leader who may be primarily responsible for the indiscriminate slaughter in Beijing, was the man who taught Mikhail Gorbachev how easily a shrewd communist ruler could win the hearts and minds of the West.

Deng

It was from Deng that Gorbachev, intent on building an entirely new image for a Soviet leader, largely took his cue when he came to power four years ago.

By then, Deng, already in charge of China for nearly a decade, was at the height of his popularity in the West as a new style Marxist leader — one with whom, as was later to be said of Gorbachev, the West could do business.

Like the Soviet leader today, Deng was seen by western admirers as a dynamic reformer, determined to free the Marxist system from the dead hand of bureaucracy and repression.

Long before Gorbachev followed suit, Deng proved a whiz at public relations, especially the kind that captivates foreign television viewers.

He was highly adept at playing up his image as a pixie-ish oldster, gleefully donning a 10-gallon hat at a Texas rodeo during his January 1979 visit to the United States or mugging for the cameras at a tea party given for him by Queen Elizabeth at Buckingham Palace.

In the West, he quickly emerged in the late 1970s as a "good guy," in sharp contrast to the despotic Mao Zedong, whose opponent and victim he had been.

Deng seemed, in short, to personify "communism with a human face."

Until the recent massacre in Tiananmen Square, Deng was widely thought to have presided over China's transformation much more smoothly than Gorbachev was able to do in the Soviet Union. For once, it seemed to be a case of the teacher still being able to show the pupil a thing or two.

But Deng's carefully constructed image never really squared with reality. According to Australian Professor Simon Leys, a sinologist on sabbatical leave here from his duties at the University of New South Wales, Deng was never the enlightened, open and modern-minded leader of western illusions.

"He was, and is, an implacable Leninist," says Leys. "As a product of the system who rose to the uppermost levels of bureaucratic power even under Mao, he could not be anything else."

The West's error was to assume Deng realized that his economic reforms were unsustainable without thoroughly changing the system.

Nothing, as the latest Chinese developments have shown, could have been further from his mind, says Leys.

Deng was simply brighter and relatively more farsighted than many of his remarkably obtuse contemporaries in the party hierarchy, according to Leys.

"He realized the Chinese economy had failed (and) there was no choice except to bring in reforms," Leys says. "It was a matter of life or death."

But putting more food in the shops, allowing the peasants to keep what they earned, and opening the door to foreign investors didn't make Deng a closet democrat.

Leys adds that it was naive of western observers to believe economic change was inevitably pushing Deng and the rest of the Chinese leadership in a more liberal direction.

How long, western analysts wonder, will the analogies between Deng and Gorbachev stick?

Important differences, beginning with a 25-year age spread, separate the two communist leaders.

Gorbachev is well-educated, clearly possessed of a sophisticated understanding of the world beyond the Soviet Union.

Deng is self-taught, one who rose through the ranks of the army and is said to have retained the gruff, limited outlook of a revolutionary soldier.

Possibly because of their different backgrounds, Gorbachev, in a shorter time, has gone much further than Deng ever contemplated toward creating a more liberal political framework. But the similarities between them may be even more significant than their differences.

Gorbachev, like Deng, is a pure product of the system. Many Soviet dissidents have warned his western admirers that they err in believing the Soviet president is anything but a dedicated Leninist for whom the Communist Party must remain the basic source of political authority.

Biologist Vladimir Bukovski, a well-known Soviet dissident who lives and teaches in Cambridge, England, is convinced that if Gorbachev's power is ever jeopardized to the same degree as Deng's, he'll react exactly the same way.

As Bukovski puts it, "Gorbachev, like Deng and every communist leader, believes political power ultimately derives from the barrel of a gun."

CHARLEY REESE

Tougher rules needed for those in Congress

The language of politicians reveals the shabbiness of their souls. When talk of House Speaker Jim Wright plea bargaining with the ethics committee first surfaced, I kept hearing politicians say they wanted to spare the House the agony of decision.

Charley Reese

Now I've seen people in agony — people who had lost a loved one, people suffering great pain from injury or disease. When is it agony for a politician to put himself on record, yes or no, as to whether a sanctimonious politician from Texas violated the rules of the House?

That anybody would think simply taking a stand on a matter of ethics is agonizing reveals what a worthless bunch they are. This is especially so of the Democrats since they are the ones who elected Wright to the speakership.

I've heard Democrats say that poor Wright was a victim of a political trial. What trial? The House itself passed its own rules. The Ethics Committee is simply trying to determine if Wright violated them or didn't violate them. All of a sudden the rules adopted by the House and the procedures adopted by the House are a political trial. Hog slop.

Democrats are naturally embarrassed that the man they elected speaker has been publicly found out. Read that sentence carefully. They are not embarrassed by what Wright did — but by what he did becoming public knowledge.

And Wright is bad. The House's standards are very low and he can't even meet them. You can see why the hypocrites in Congress who insist on special prosecutors to investigate the executive branch also insist that there shall be no special prosecutor to investigate them.

Even so, the FBI has done a fair job of nailing several members of our august Congress on felony charges.

Call me an optimist but I continue to believe that sooner or later the American people — ordinary folks who do the work and pay the taxes — will tire of their public officials selling out their interests and the interests of their country.

If a purchasing agent of a company called up his suppliers and said, "I'm giving a party and I expect you to provide $250 cash or an equivalent amount of liquor and food," no one would have any trouble recognizing that as unethical behavior sufficient to warrant dismissal.

Yet politicians put the arm on the lobbyists with a direct interest in legislation all the time in exactly that fashion and both the public and often the press simply accept it.

We shouldn't do it. Too many good people have died and suffered wounds and grief to preserve this country for us to tolerate sleezebags defiling it by using the public's offices to get rich.

You only get rich by making sales and so the public ought to ask just what it is legislators are selling. And then they ought to ask who gave them the right to sell it?

We should not be lulled into accepting the cosmetic reforms the politicians and special interests always come up with, but instead should insist on real reforms.

No public official should be allowed to accept any gratuity — period.

No public official should be allowed to earn any outside income — period.

No public official should be allowed to accept any campaign contribution from any individual or organization with a direct interest in legislation — period.

The matter is quite serious really. Either government belongs to people and serves the people or it belongs to those who can afford to buy its favors and privileges.

Right now it's the latter.

Every day we find young Americans willing to serve their country in the armed forces at a financial sacrifice, often with real hardships.

Do you seriously believe, as the politicians claim, you can't find honest people who would serve in Congress for just the salary?

LEWIS GRIZZARD

What about TV shows that don't make it?

The three major television networks have announced their new fall lineups, and what lineups they are.

There'll be some more juicy crime shows where your kids can learn how dope dealers operate, and, of course, there will be more sitcoms on the hilarity scale, I presume, of those we have known and loved in the past — like "Diff'rent Strokes" and "Eight Is Enough" (neither of which, in case you're wondering, dealt with sex), and the one with the funny puppet from outer space who looks like Howdy Doody on his way to the rehab center.

Lewis Grizzard

But what the networks never tell us are the ideas for the shows they turn down. Each network gets hundreds each year. I even wrote an idea for a television show myself. And it was turned down.

Actually, I stole the idea from my stepbrother, radio star and author Ludlow Porch, who envisioned a sitcom based around a funeral home where a lot of funny stuff would happen, like dead bodies getting lost, and slipping embalming fluid into the boss's coffee cup.

Ludlow called the show "Leave it to the Bereaver."

Said the guy at ABC in Hollywood, "This is the worst idea for a sitcom I've ever heard. Get out of my office."

Frankly, I thought the idea I stole from Ludlow was dynamite. Mr. Hollywood never let me get to the part where a guy shows up at the funeral home to review the remains of his recently departed mother-in-law.

He peers into the casket and suddenly begins to sob uncontrollably.

"You rotten louse," says his wife. "You never had one nice word to say about mother in the 30 years we've been married, so don't pretend you're grieving because she's dead."

"I'm not grieving because she's dead," her husband replies. "I just thought there for a second I saw her move."

Great stuff.

At any rate, because I have so many contacts at the networks, I was able to obtain a list of some of the program ideas that were turned down this year.

Imagine how bad something must be to be turned down by the networks, but these didn't make it:

"Thelma": An obvious ripoff of the hit show "Roseanne."

Only here, the people were even more ordinary than the people on "Roseanne," who were so ordinary you want to wring their ordinary necks.

Thelma was to be even fatter and slobbier than Roseanne, and her husband, Eugene, was to be so ordinary that in the first episode, he has a generic vasectomy.

"The Boxcar Willie Show": The idea was for Boxcar Willie to host a variety show featuring other mediocre musicians like the guy who tries to sell records of where he plays a pan flute on Ted Turner's cable station; an appearance of Dolly Parton's sister, Polly, who can sing a lick, but that's the only thing she has in common with her sister, and a man who can yodel through his ear.

"Eightysomething": Real-life dramas featuring residents of a nursing home in Sylacauga, Ala. Lots of prune jokes.

"Mr. Edwina": Same as before, but this time the horse is a transsexual.

"Slimestory": Nighttime version of daytime's "Geraldo" with a weekly lineup of topics dealing with sex, perversion, devil worship, animal husbandry and the real lowdown on John Tower.

To have been hosted by Rock Hudson's former lover.

"Sixty Seconds": Andy Rooney wanted his own show.

But wait until next year, all you who failed. The networks will be even more desperate by then.

Medellin can't escape reputation as cocaine-trafficking capital

By MARK A. UHLIG
New York Times News Service

MEDELLIN, Colombia — In a triumph of life-giving science, surgeons here recently announced they had completed their eighth successful transplant of a human heart.

The patient, a young man who received the heart of a woman, was reported in excellent condition at the Santa Maria clinic, in Medellin's gleaming, high-rise downtown.

But in a city that is better known as the violent capital of world cocaine trafficking, the achievement carried a paradoxical note.

The life it saved freed up only one locker in a city morgue crowded with victims of contract murders, turf wars and wholesale killing that the drug trade has fostered here for nearly a decade.

"The same culture that produces the country's best scientists and businessmen also produces its most vicious criminals," a foreign diplomat said. "Medellin is the best and the worst of Colombia."

For an outsider, the beauty and sophistication of Medellin make a lasting impression long before the danger begins to sink in.

Rising from the floor of a highland valley, it is surrounded by pine-covered Andean mountain peaks and fast-running brooks that betray no hint of the hidden cocaine laboratories that supply the city's chief export.

Clean streets and efficient service mock the poverty and disarray that prevail elsewhere in Latin America. The thick local yellow pages list seven full pages of computer dealers, and the graceful ribbon of a new elevated transit system now floats through the bustle of downtown.

BUT IN A city that was once best known for cultivating prize orchids, the new hybrid of drugs and violence now dominates local life.

According to official statistics, about 10 murders are recorded in Medellin each day, a per-capita murder rate that is nearly nine times that of New York City and the highest in the world for a city that is not at war.

The rate, which increased severalfold in the last five years, has been accelerated by underground "schools" that specialize in producing sicarios, teen-age assassins who rake their victims with machine-gun fire from a speeding motorcycle.

Many of the killings are ordered by leaders of the so-called Medellin cartel, street-thugs-turned-billionaires who take public pride in their powers of life and death.

"The other big traffickers kill quietly, when they feel they have to," said a Bogota-based diplomat. "In Medellin, they can't wait to say 'I did it.'"

With time and a growing arsenal of sophisticated weapons, murder and violence have also become all-purpose tools of civilian life.

After an evening out in glittering nightspots with names like Monserrat and Aquarius, a young man can honor a new companion with a midnight visit from mariachi bands who will serenade her from the street beneath her window for the equivalent of about $80.

Or if romantic intentions should fail, a jilted suitor can settle accounts with a rival by hiring a sicario for as little as $10.

Late at night at the city's principal emergency room, weary doctors try to cope with a seemingly endless flow of victims of violent crime, most of them shot or stabbed, nearly all of them young men.

The emergency room entrance, blocked by a barred steel gate that resembles a jail cell door, is manned by a shotgun-carrying volunteer whose job is to protect the patients once they arrive.

"WE ONLY GET the ones who survive the first round," said a doctor, who chatted with a reporter as he oversaw treatment of a screaming man who had been stabbed repeatedly in the back.

"So a lot of times people come here trying to finish off what they started."

In the last few years, the doctor said, he could remember at least 10 patients who had been killed on emergency room grounds by assailants seeking to complete a botched murder or silence a wounded witness.

Medellin natives invariably express resentment at what they call the "mala fama," or bad reputation, of their city, and many blame adverse news coverage for obscuring their accomplishments, like thriving textile, floriculture and transportation industries, low unemployment, and a glittering array of high-quality consumer goods.

But elsewhere in Colombia the city is known, only half-jokingly, as "Metra-lli'n," which translates roughly as "machine-gun city." And even the paisas, as Colombians from the Medellin region are known, have been forced to take account of their city's special knack for crime.

Medellin natives, for example, often warn visiting friends not to take the winding 45-minute drive from the airport to avoid highwaymen and kidnappers.

But the preferred alternative, a helicopter shuttle, is hardly a safe bet. In the last year it has been hijacked three times, most recently by a sophisticated team that abandoned the helicopter's passengers and crew and flew the craft away themselves.

On Medellin's broad avenues and malls, which serve 1.6 million Colombians, the lighter complexions of Americans, or any foreigners, are so scarce as to bring stares.

"PAISAS THINK that any gringo is an agent of the DEA," said a travel agent, referring to the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency. "It doesn't matter what you say you are, because DEA agents would lie anyway."

Since the worst of the drug violence began five years ago, Medellin has been essentially off-limits for American diplomatic personnel.

The small DEA office that was once maintained here was closed after it was judged impossible to protect. During the period of its operation, all of the office's informants were discovered and killed, and, according to a recent book by Guy Gugliotta and Jeff Leen, the last agent to leave found a human tongue left on his lawn as a warning.

So dangerous has Medellin become that, despite its size and economic importance, President Virgilio Barco Vargas has visited the city only once in the last two years, and then under heavy guard.

In such an atmosphere, it is perhaps fitting that the city's favorite Sunday entertainment does not seek to escape the reality of death, but to refine it into art.

On a recent weekend, crowds stood in line for hours at the central bullring to watch matadors blend the beauty and violence that have shaped their city's character.

Seated under a bold "Made in Medellin" billboard, local entrepreneurs and cocaine kings sang the Colombian anthem, then, more passionately, their city's own, as the pageant unfolded.

Whirling, taunting, turning his back on the charging bull, the matador delighted the crowd with his grace, until the bull's head drooped and the performer drew his killing sword.

Then, with the skill of a surgeon, the matador sent his first thrust straight to the bull's heart.

Turtles come home to roost on gulf beaches

RANCHO NUEVO, Mexico (AP) — Hundreds of endangered Kemp's ridley sea turtles have begun arriving at the only known nesting grounds for the reptiles: the beaches of Rancho Nuevo.

For years, American and Mexican marine biologists have worked to save the eggs laid on the beaches and begun a "head start" program in an attempt to get the turtles to nest in other areas along the Gulf of Mexico to escape poachers.

But even marine biologists and volunteers who spend days tagging the turtles and digging up eggs to a protective corral, the sight of the Ridleys coming ashore brought a certain excitement.

"The turtles are coming back," said Patrick Burchfield of Brownsville, coordinator of the U.S. assistance to the sanctuary at Rancho Nuevo.

Texas A&M University marine biology student Lawrence Collins recently joined the scientific team at the Mexican government's sanctuary to help identify the turtles who nest in the area from April into the summer.

"I had just finished with two, and then four more came ashore," Collins said, after a day of tagging the animals with tiny microchips during their 45-minute foray ashore to lay eggs.

Tiny hatchlings, emerging about 50 days after eggs are laid, are protected as they move into the water. Last year, about 76 percent of the inch-long babies entered the Gulf of Mexico. Once in the water, only 1 percent of the sea turtles will grow to adulthood, with shell lengths of 26 to 30 inches and weights of 80 to 100 pounds.

And, mysteriously, when the turtles reach sexual maturity some 15 years later, they return to Rancho Nuevo to begin the process again.

Clearview names interim administrator

From Staff Reports

Midland Memorial Hospital officials are unsure how long it will be before the top administrative position at Clearview Hospital is permanently filled, MMH spokesperson Laurie Johnson said Thursday.

Administrator Molly Howk resigned Wednesday, and MMH business office director Robert Rabidoux was named interim administrator, Ms. Johnson said.

"It was a voluntary resignation," Ms. Johnson said, adding that the move had nothing to do with hospital management.

She would not comment further on the resignation. "We really can't discuss anything related to personnel," said Ms. Johnson.

Ms. Howk, Clearview's administrator since November 1987, could not be reached for comment.

The hospital has not made immediate plans to name a permanent administrator of the alcohol and drug rehabilitation center, Ms. Johnson said.

On Dec. 30, 1988, MMH agreed to pay $5 million to buy Clearview from the Camelback-Samaritan Group of Phoenix, Ariz. Clearview at the time was suffering from a $3 million deficit.

From Jan. 1 to April 30, the hospital made a $645,735 profit in contributions over operating costs, Ms. Johnson said.

Man's severe beating leaves police puzzled

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Richard Stallings may be the only person — except his assailants — who knows why the back of his skull was bashed in early today and his face pummeled so severely he can barely speak, according to police.

Investigators are puzzled about the case, which began about 2:15 a.m. when police officers were summoned to the Midland Memorial Hospital emergency room, reports of the incident said. There, they found the 23-year-old Stallings undergoing treatment for a fractured skull, fractures of facial bones, and lacerations.

According to Dr. J.J. Waller, emergency room physician, the blow to the back of his head which fractured his skull was caused by a "blunt instrument."

"I am as in the dark as you are," said Cpl. Jim White, police spokesman. "That is why it is so important he recover enough so we can talk to him again."

Two witnesses, a man and a woman, were interviewed at the emergency room and told officers they were driving around "looking for something to do" when they found Stallings lying in the 2300 block of Maxwell Dr., between Garfield and Ward streets. He was found with his legs in the road and his torso across a sidewalk, according to the witnesses' statements.

They loaded Stallings in their car and took him to the hospital, according to the report.

But police are a bit unsure about the statements. Neither witness lived on Maxwell Dr., and "there were conflicting statements. I'll leave it at that," White said.

The victim's car was found parked in the 2400 block of Maxwell Drive. It had been moved from a private driveway by one of the witnesses, according to police. Police do not know why the car was moved.

Officers interviewed Stallings at the hospital, but because of his injuries were unable to get much information. The man was able to tell them that he had been at Club DV 8, 4519 N. Garfield St., and when he left the establishment he was followed by "six persons," and "stopped on Maxwell street," the report said.

Odessa's Dynagen plant not only one emitting harmful pollutants

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

A rubber plant identified Thursday as a carcinogen-emitter is not the only Odessa industry to have been cited by the Texas Air Control Board for releasing potentially harmful pollutants.

But Environmental Protection Agency data which say the use of the chemical butadiene by Odessa's Dynagen Inc. presents from one to 10 out of every 100 employees with a cancer risk is incorrect, an agency spokesman says.

Samples of the chemicals butadiene and styrene were collected at the Dynagen Inc. plant in September 1988, said Charley Sims, TACB regional director.

In addition, samples of the chemical benzene were found at the Rexene Corp.'s petrochemical plant in Odessa, Sims said.

All three chemicals are potentially hazardous substances, though the measurements were within threshold limits recommended by the American Conference of Governmental Industrial Hygenists, statistics show.

EPA spokesman Roger Meacham in Dallas questioned the use of the study findings, which identified more than 200 industrial plants in 37 states that supposedly release enough toxic chemicals to pose a severe cancer threat.

U.S. Rep. Henry Waxman, chairman of the House Energy and Commerce environment subcommittee, requested the study.

"The data released are at least five years old," said Meacham. "They were never intended to be accurate indicators of the risk of cancer. It does not mean there is an immediate threat to public health."

Clearly, Waxman's interpretation of the data was misconstrued, Meacham said, citing the explanation given the representative by EPA Administrator William K. Reilly.

The letter read: "But I must stress the preliminary nature of many of the cancer risk estimates in this internal working data base ... and the fact that these data are not relied on as credible estimates of risk for individual sources.

"The information is intended only for the relative comparison of and ranking of source categories and pollutants on a nationwide basis.

"The facilities' specific risk estimates are not accurate determinants of local public health hazards," Reilly wrote.

Red Cross says disaster aid available

From Staff Reports

Persons who had property damages as a result of storm systems which moved through Texas this week can apply for disaster aid, according to American Red Cross Coordinating Officer Bob Broussard.

The losses will be covered by the May 19 Presidential Disaster Declaration requested by Gov. Bill Clements following the storms which began May 4.

Broussard said storm victims anywhere in the state with uninsured or partially uninsured losses can apply by calling the Disaster Application Hotline at 800-621-8592.

Ed Laundy, state coordinating officer, said persons calling the hotline should be ready with their full name, address, phone number, Social Security number, insurance policy number, agent's name (if insured), storm damage description and directions to damaged property.

Groundbreaking ceremonies for first part of Lamesa Road project held

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

With the turn of a shovelful of dirt, the dreams of a group of eastside Midland residents started on the road to reality.

Groundbreaking ceremonies were held Thursday for the first phase of Lamesa Road Project, which will eventually realign Lamesa Road and extend it from Loop 250 to Interstate 20 and widen it to have five lanes of traffic.

The first phase, from IH-20 to De Zavala Elementary, is expected to take eight to 10 months at a cost $1.6 million, according to Marshall Hoffman, district engineer for the Texas Highway Department. The project includes curb and gutter, sidewalks and an on/off ramp at I-20.

In preparation for the reconstruction, local utilities and pipelines have lowered their lines along the route for the last several weeks.

Jones Brothers Dirt & Paving Contractors of Odessa has been contracted to perform the work, with engineering work done by the Highway Department. The contractor expects to start the project within the next 10 days.

Financing for the project came from a federal highway funding program that provides money for urban system projects. "This is the only money that we can spend off the highway system," Hoffman said.

The project, first proposed in the early 1970s, was taken up again nearly five years ago by the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, which was looking for ways to develop Midland's east side.

CAP crews resume search for local pilot

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Civil Air Patrol crews from across Texas planned to use weekend training exercises beginning tonight to resume the search for a 43-year-old Midland pilot whose single-engine craft disappeared in foggy weather April 17.

"We just don't like to have one like this go unresolved," Texas Wing Commander Tom Todd said this morning as he and other CAP pilots prepared to leave for Uvalde for the weekend practice session.

The mission will focus on the search for Gary Henley who took off at 8:10 a.m. April 17 from Midland Air Park in his blue and beige Bellanca Viking. Henley, an employee of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., was headed to Boerne Stage Airport on business.

Henley's last known contact was with an air traffic controller in San Angelo, when the pilot radioed to inquire about the weather. Thunderstorms were reported in the Hill Country during Henley's trip, for which he had no flight plan.

Todd said the search will resume tonight and continue through Saturday, with more than 25 pilots from across Texas participating.

Nearly 200 aircraft flew 1,026 hours in an exhaustive week-long search for Henley before the Civil Air Patrol suspended an exhaustive week-long search April 24.

At one point, Todd said as many as 900 pilots had joined the effort. He added that several other members of the volunteer contingent have put in another 35-40 hours of flying time on their own.

With the suspension of the search, responsibility for the mission was transferred to Waco from its original base in Kerrville. A sub-base had been located in San Angelo.

Todd deemed the unsuccessful search for Henley as "incredibly frustrating" for Civil Air Patrol pilots, but noted that the weekend training mission is breeding optimism once again.

"The mission was suspended, but it hasn't been closed. We won't give up as long as it remains unresolved," he said.

Library's the place for tall tales, fun reading, says local librarian

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Reading lends itself to storytelling.

Storytelling is enhanced by reading.

And the world needs more of both, according to one local children's librarian.

Children who become readers become learners and, perhaps, storytellers who do not clam up when it is time to talk and tell tales.

"We need to show them that reading is fun," said Connie Roe, children's librarian for the Midland County Public Library. "It's easy. It's not a task. We have been stressing (reading) skills and not reading for the fun of it."

Most children "haven't learned that reading is its own reward."

Mrs. Roe's role is just that — teaching reading's rewards by reading.

She and her cohorts encourage children to read books and to listen to storytellers and to book-readers.

"We (as a people) do not communicate with our children any more," she lamented. "We are just passing them by, as they go out the door."

With the multiplicity of television channels and computers, so many "children spend so much time watching TV now that they are not visualizing," Mrs. Roe said.

"With storytelling, you are passing down values because a lot of it has to do with family history and the way people look at things," Mrs. Roe said.

Reading, like storytelling, activates the imagination. "Golden age" radio, which often featured narratives, comedies, mysteries, and adventures, stimulated the imagination. But most of today's radio is just the hum of popular music that may soothe or excite but doesn't stimulate thought, Mrs. Roe suggested.

A "Year-of-the-Young-Reader" poster at the entrance to the Children's Library depicts a boy and a girl sitting on stacks of books while they are engrossed in reading. In the center background is a turned-off television set.

The scene pleases the librarian.

DEATHS

James C. Velvin Jr.

BANDERA — Funeral services for James C. Velvin Jr. of Bandera, formerly of Midland, were conducted Wednesday at the St. Christopher's Episcopal Church, with the Rev. A. Nelson Daunt officiating. Burial followed at Fort Sam Houston National Cemetery in San Antonio under direction of Grimes Funeral Chapel.

Velvin died Monday at his residence.

He was born July 30, 1926, in Texarkana and resided in Midland for several years, before moving to Bandera two years ago.

Velvin was a member of St. Christopher's Episcopal Church and was a lifetime member of the Optimist Club of Midland. He was an employee of U-Filler-Up Inc.

Survivors include his wife, Jeanne R. Velvin of Bandera; a son, James C. Velvin III of Greensboro, N.C.; two daughters, Minnette Velvin of Bandera and Jeanie Haley of Raleigh, N.C.; his mother, Ollie Velvin of Bandera; a brother, W.C. Velvin of Arizona; and seven children.

13-year-old petitions for 'Bloom County'

NORTHBORO, Mass. (AP) — An eighth-grader is petitioning Berke Breathed to keep drawing his "Bloom County" comic strip, but the cartoonist's editor says it's probably a lost cause.

Breathed plans to substitute a Sunday-only strip for the daily "Bloom County," which was introduced in December 1980 and in 1987 won a Pulitzer Prize.

Al Leeds, who edits the strip for the Washington Post Writer's Group, has already had a peek at the new cartoon, which he said is being kept under wraps for now.

But he revealed one secret: Opus isn't saying farewell after all.

"Opus the penguin will eventually appear in the new strip," Leeds promised. "But he will only be a supporting character and certainly not the protagonist."

Eric Gustafson, 13, has launched a grass-roots effort to convince Breathed to keep alive Opus, along with Steve Dallas, Milo Bloom and the rest of the strip's characters. And Gustafson isn't alone.

"The warmth of those characters was really something and it's been an exceptional show of regret that Berke's ending it," said Leeds, who signed Breathed to a contract in 1980 and watched the strip spread to about 800 daily and college newspapers nationwide.

Breathed's mail has more than doubled lately to as many as 250 letters a week, said Suzanne Whelton, an editorial assistant at the Washington Post Writer's Group.

Control the issue in workers' comp

AUSTIN (AP) — Lawmakers working to reform workers' compensation in Texas must decide who will control the system, said the chairman of the Industrial Accident Board.

"I think the gut issue of the workers' compensation debate is the issue of control — who controls what occurs in workers' compensation claims," Joseph Gagen, head of the agency that administers workers' compensation claims, told a Thursday health law conference.

"How the Legislature addresses this issue — or its ability to address this issue — will determine whether or not there is any legislation at all," he said.

Lawmakers in the regular session that ended May 29 were unable to agree on a plan to reform the method of compensating workers injured or killed on the job in Texas.

A special legislative session beginning June 20 has been called by Gov. Bill Clements for lawmakers to again try to reform the system, which has been criticized for combining high premiums paid by businesses with low benefits paid to workers.

Insurance companies and attorneys currently control the process, Gagen said.

"How much does it cost to work a claim through the system? Is it cheaper to settle without doing that? ... Can a worker survive the time it takes to get through the process?" are among the items considered, Gagen said.

The issue, Gagen said, is "How much control continues to reside with the parties, and how much control is given to the administrative process, the administrative agency."

As lawmakers study the system, Sen. Chet Brooks said one proposal being considered is whether a portion of punitive damages awarded to workers by juries should be given to the workers' compensation assigned risk pool.

The library's dedication to the young reader is further evidenced by the bringing in of Jay Stailey, a Galveston Island storyteller who spins yarns rooted in his family history, his readings, his observations and his imagination and creativity. Stailey's visits to Midland are hosted by the Friends of the Library.

The revival of storytelling is coming about through people's need "to share things they read and experience," Mrs. Roe said. "It's a way of passing on your roots — telling family stories around the supper table."

And telling stories based on individual life's experiences is what people "do best."

"I'm still practicing (storytelling) in my closet," said Mrs. Roe. "At this point, I still read books."

When children "get into" a story, they stay silent unless it is humor or laced with humor, and then they laugh.

Reading and storytelling programs at the library supplement school programs.

"It goes beyond that," said Mrs. Roe. "It's not social studies and science. Often, it's how-to (books), poetry, literature."

Even so, many schools are encouraging out-of-class reading through incentives, such as contests.

And there is a "great deal" of storytelling going on in the library for younger children whose current "reading ability is not up to their mental ability" simply because their vocabulary is in the early stages of development. And understanding the meaning of many words comes with maturity and experience.

"Their vocabulary is limited," Mrs. Roe said. "Reading is still a task and can be boring ... and not as exciting and stimulating as it can be" with a better-developed vocabulary.

Eric Bowman is an avid 10-year-old reader.

"I enjoy reading," Eric said. "I like to read adventure books — things about space."

His parents, Bruce and Leslie Bowman, encourage their children to read.

"He (Eric) watches quite a bit of TV, but he reads," said his mother. But Eric doesn't watch television "quite as much as most," she surmised. Mrs. Bowman brings her children to the library.

"So many parents are so busy working that they don't have time to bring them to the library," she said. "We are trying to survive without my working."

Mrs. Bowman said she wants her children to read. The Bowmans have four children: sons Eric, Stephen, 7, and Christopher, 9, and a daughter, Chesna, 2.

"They need to read, so they can do well in school. They really enjoy it," said Mrs. Bowman, whose mother, Agnes McAden, brought her to the library in her early childhood years.

"She (Chesna) is just 2, and she is taking a nap" at home, while Bowman was reading a Scouting magazine, the mother said. "She can read later."

Lou Ann Moore brought her 7-year-old son, John Robert Moore, and a playmate, 9-year-old Cory Roberts of Pecos, to the library.

"He enjoys reading," Mrs. Moore said of her son. "I am looking up Bible stories for him to read at night. Of course, he gets airplane books," since his father, Dwaine Moore, is an aircraft pilot.

And, as Librarian Connie Roe noted, reading can be work — hard or easy — and pleasurable. It is a learning process.

"It's a two-sided coin," she said. "It's work, but it's also fun."

After the chamber was formed, it established the Eastside Economic Development Task Force, which was charged with conducting a feasibility study to find ideas for development, according to task force chairman Roger Robles.

"The studies highlighted the fact that to develop the area, a thoroughfare was needed," he told the crowd.

"Lamesa Road was chosen as the most strategically located and best able to provide a strong traffic count that would help retailers in the area."

Ciro Sanchez, a member of the MHCC and one of the original task force members, along with Robles, Manuel Carrasco and attorney Richard Alvarado, recalled that "when we first met at Richard Alvarado's office, the future looked bleak and we know this project would be hard work, but we decided to go for it."

Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas praised the project as a community-wide undertaking.

"The main idea is to open up the southeast and allow those residents better access to the northwest at the same time."

Senator's son evades DWI penalties

EL PASO (AP) — The son of state Sen. Tati Santiesteban has been arrested on drunken driving charges five times in the past five years, but his driver's license has never been suspended, according to a published report.

Ricardo Santiesteban's court records show that one DWI charge was dismissed and another time prosecutors declined to press charges. A blood alcohol level of .20, double the state's legal limit, brought two years' probation, and an arrest in Arizona produced a fine. A hearing is pending on his latest arrest in El Paso.

Santiesteban, D-El Paso, told the El Paso Times that his 23-year-old son has not received lenient treatment because of the elder Santiesteban's political position.

"I love my son, he's the only son I have. I'm heartbroken, more heartbroken because of all the press he's had because he is my son. I think it's just not fair," Santiesteban said.

Gayle Garner, first assistant county attorney, said El Paso prosecutors are tough on repeat DWI offenders.

"On a third offense, we ask that probation be revoked and (the driver) goes to jail. We deal fairly severely with DWIs," Ms. Garner said.

All five DWI arrests, plus a sixth charge alleging possession of a small amount of marijuana, occurred after Ricardo Santiesteban was given five years' probation for selling a half-gram of cocaine to a narcotics officer Dec. 6, 1984.

One of the terms of the probation was that if he committed another offense his probation would be revoked, but that has not happened.

Judges who heard the cases either refused to talk to the newspaper or could not remember the circumstances of the hearings.

First-grader takes in species endangered by environment

By PAUL BAILEY

PARIS (AP) — Janae McKinney collects turtles, lots of turtles. She also collects bugs, tadpoles, frogs and other animals she feels may be endangered by their surroundings.

Miss McKinney is not an ecologist. She is simply concerned about animals that could fall prey to automobiles, polluted water and other ecological mishaps that occur in today's society.

The 7-year-old, a first-grader this past school year at Aikin Elementary School in Paris, seems wise for her years. She knows the meaning of ecology and understands the need to sometimes help defenseless animals survive in less-than-friendly surroundings.

"I didn't like the fact that these animals, especially turtles, were getting run over on the highway," she said. "So one day I asked mother if she would stop so I could pick up a turtle off the road. I guess that is when it all started."

Janae's mother, Jan Semple McKinney, couldn't turn down her daughter's request to save a turtle from being crushed on a busy road just outside Paris.

"I could tell she was very concerned, so I told her we would make it a project," Mrs. McKinney said. "I think she is being very responsible and has saved a lot of turtles from an early death on the highways."

Janae periodically patrols her neighborhood and a nearby creek for small creatures. If the creek is accidentally polluted, she collects the minnows and tadpoles from the water and takes them home to her portable fish tank.

She has encouraged her mother to take her riding on the roads just outside the city each morning before school to check for healthy, or injured, turtles on the highway. That duty requires a 6 a.m. wake-up call.

If one is spotted, they stop their car, pick it up and bring it home to add to an already large collection of terrapins, red-necked sliders and gopher turtles, just to name a few.

"These are native to the area," Janae said as she picked up a terrapin. "They are very sweet and make good pets."

Then she pointed to as red-necked slider, describing it as "mean." She said they will bite without much encouragement.

"I don't handle the red-necked slider and the big snapper turtles unless it is necessary," she said.

She keeps the terrapins and other dry land turtles in a cage. Other turtles that are accustomed to living in the water are kept in large containers of water.

Janae gets some help in her unusual hobby from sisters Jamie and Jill Beth. But her father, Mike McKinney, is not very enthusiastic about the project, according to Mrs. McKinney.

"Mike doesn't like to handle the animals, so we don't get a lot of help from him," she said. "But he is tolerant of it all and supportive of Janae's endeavor."

The budding ecologist is keeping a chart on the eating habits of the turtles and the other animals she collects. The turtles eat lettuce and other greens, tadpole eggs and some insects, she said.

Turning her animal rescue project into a classroom event was a challenge for Janae. Her teacher, Martha Upton, gave her the opportunity to explain the origin and habits of the turtles to her classmates.

BEATING

Maxwell Drive is five blocks south of the club.

White declined to speculate about the sequence of events.

"We have no evidence as to who did it or why," he said. "There could have been an altercation at the club. We don't know at this point. The whole thing right now is revolving around the statement of the victim."

Blood was found in several spots at the scene of the assault, according to officers. Stalling's clothes, which were held by police as evidence, included a blood-soaked shirt and bloody pants torn at one knee. No weapon was found at the scene.

White described the beating as "certainly severe."

By mid-morning, Stallings was listed in stable condition at MMH, spokeswoman Sue Ristom said. His injuries were described as "facial fractures." Ms. Ristom said she did not know if he also suffered a fractured skull.

PLANT

To properly assess cancer risk, a scientist must study a person's health habits and prior exposures to many other substances, the EPA spokesman explained.

With the data provided to Waxman, an employee would have to inhale the pollutants continuously for 70 years to get cancer, Meacham continued.

The spokesman added that on every page of the report handed to Waxman the stamp "This information was intended for only comparison and is not an accurate assessment of the risk of cancer."

Dynagen spokesman Edward Kailail of Akron, Ohio, could not be reached for comment this morning. In earlier reports, Kailail said, "Monitoring devices at the plant show that the emission of butadiene is far below the level of emissions considered at risk under the EPA."

TACB Director Sims said "some enforcement action is underway which hopefully will have some significant reduction" of butadiene releases at Dynagen Inc.

Past enforcement sanctions against both Rexene Corp. and Dynagen Inc. has been "successful," Sims continued. Both have been cooperative.

Men charged with murder surrender

From Staff Reports

Two Big Spring residents surrendered Thursday to Fort Stockton police in connection with the beating death of a resident there.

Juan Manuel Avila, 32, and his brother Joe Penales Avila, 28, appeared with their attorney Thursday at the Pecos County Sheriff's Department in Fort Stockton, police Sgt. Ken Maninger said. Both men had been charged with murder and arrest warrants had been issued at the time of the surrender, he said.

Bond for each was set at $50,000 by Pecos County Justice of the Peace Freddie Capers. They are being held at the Pecos County Jail.

The two were charged with the death of Juan Jose Sarabia, 37, 504 E. Ryan in Fort Stockton. Sarabia suffered wounds to his head and neck, and was found dead at his home at about 10 p.m. Wednesday, Maninger said.

An autopsy has been ordered, as police aren't sure what caused his injuries, the officer said.

Sarabia was involved in an argument with the Avilas which ended in the killing, Maninger said.

Utility employee electrocuted

From Staff Reports

A 56-year-old employee of Texas-New Mexico Power Co. was electrocuted Thursday while repairing a downed power line west of Fort Stockton, a spokesman for the Pecos County Sheriff's Department said.

Billy Ray Kelly, 56, of Pecos, was pronounced dead at the scene about 10:54 a.m. by Pecos County Justice of the Peace Fredie Capers, according to Chief Deputy Cliff Harris.

Harris said the accident occurred at Braden Farms, west of Fort Stockton off U.S. Interstate 10, where Texas-New Mexico Power Co. was repairing power lines brought down by Wednesday's thunderstorms.

Investigators believe Kelly stepped too close to the power line and when the electricity jumped, he fell on to the live wire.

No one else was injured in the accident, Harris said.

Brooke burn team leaves for U.S.S.R.

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A medical team from Brooke Army Medical Center will be dispatched to the Soviet Union today to help treat burn victims from last weekend's gas explosion and train disaster.

The 15-member team was requested by the Soviet Union Thursday night, said BAMC spokesman Bob Clarke.

"The Soviet government did not grant permission to send any Soviet citizens to the United States for treatment," he said.

Clarke said the burn team will travel from Kelly to Andrews Air Force Base in Washington, D.C., and Ramstein Air Force Base in West Germany on the way to Moscow.

"At a minimum, the team will include three surgeons, three registered nurses, six licensed practical nurses and three respiratory therapists," Clarke said. "With the team will also go a large volume of medical supplies and equipment."

An announcement also was expected in Washington.

Jury indicts ex-owner of Summit Savings

DALLAS (AP) — U.S. Attorney Marvin Collins said the alleged offenses by the former owner of the now-defunct Summit Savings Association are the type of insider abuses that a special bank fraud task force was created to ferret out and punish.

"This type of case is precisely the type we try to concentrate on in the task force," Collins said of the indictment Thursday of John H. Roberts Jr., 42, of Dallas.

A federal grand jury in Dallas returned a 38-count indictment against Roberts in connection with a $4.5 million loan that Summit made to an unidentified borrower.

The borrower was financially unable to repay the loan, which in fact was funneled to Roberts to finance his purchase of a Gulfstream II jet aircraft and to make his lease-purchase payments on still another aircraft, a Lear 35A jet, the grand jury alleged.

Many of the counts were in connection with a series of false entries Roberts allegedly caused to be made on Summit's books to conceal the fact that the borrower was only a "nominee" borrower, the grand jury said.

The bank force task force was created on Aug. 3, 1987, to investigate suspected fraud in the Texas banking and savings and loan industry. It began functioning as a unit in early 1988, working in space contiguous to the FBI in downtown Dallas.

The indictment of Roberts raises to 46 the number of prosecutions brought by the task force.

That does not include 100 convictions in the condominium scandal along Interstate 30 east of Dallas.

"The FBI estimates that nationwide, approximately 80 percent of all bank fraud cases involve some form of insider abuse," Collins said.

"There are certainly others — such as accountants, lawyers and various borrowers — involved in bank fraud, but insiders are the most significant because many of these cases could not occur without some sort of insider abuse."

Roberts is the former chairman of the board, president and owner of Summit Savings Association, which was declared insolvent last year and merged into Sunbelt Savings Association under the Southwest Plan.

The grand jury said Roberts was involved in a scheme that began on or about Nov. 4, 1984, and continued through at least February 1987.

The indictment also alleges that a total of $73,653.85 in Summit funds was paid to a purported employee of a Summit subsidiary over a 14-month period from October 1984 to November 1985 while the employee was actually tending to Roberts' personal interests.

Restraining order forces cancellation of credit seminar

New York Times News Service

WACO — A Galveston judge issued a temporary restraining order Tuesday that forced the cancellation of a credit repair seminar in Waco Wednesday that promised patrons relief from financial straits and a credit card with an $800 limit.

Assistant Attorney General Rich Tomlinson said he sought the order from 122nd State District Judge Henry G. Dalehite because California-based Lincoln-Shire Financial Services Inc. was operating in Texas without authorization.

Tomlinson said the company held seminars in Midland Monday and had two scheduled for Galveston Tuesday and Waco Wednesday when he learned that it was conducting business without registering with the secretary of state and was charging customers $95 before seminars began without posting a bond or $10,000 surety account as required by law.

Dalehite issued the order in time to stop the second seminar in Galveston Tuesday night, Tomlinson said. The judge has scheduled a Thursday hearing to consider whether a temporary injunction should be issued until a trial date is scheduled, Tomlinson said.

The principal officer of Lincoln-Shire Financial Services Inc. is Lloyd Mitchell Bloom, 30, of Sherman Oaks, Calif., Tomlinson said. Bloom, who attended the hearing in Galveston, had booked the Waco Sheraton for two seminars Wednesday, but returned to California after Dalehite blocked further Texas seminars.

A federal jury in Chicago convicted a 30-year-old California man named Lloyd Mitchell Bloom on April 13 of racketeering, conspiracy, racketeering conspiracy and mail fraud after a five-week trial.

The jury found Bloom, a sports agent, and co-defendant Norby Walters, 58, guilty of paying college athletes thousands of dollars to sign secret representation contracts with the agents before their college eligibility had expired, a violation of National Collegiate Athletic Association rules.

The jury also convicted Bloom and Walters of threatening athletes with financial or physical harm to prevent them from breaking the agreements and with cheating seven major universities out of scholarship money by violating NCAA rules and rendering the players ineligible.

Sentencing for Bloom and Walters, who face up to 55 years in prison and $1.5 million in fines, is scheduled June 19. The convictions are being appealed.

Attorney general's office records list Bloom's birthdate as May 7, 1959, and indicate he lives in Sherman Oaks, Calif. Federal court records in Illinois indicate the man who was convicted in Chicago in April — Lloyd Mitchell Bloom — was born April 7, 1959, and is from Sherman Oaks, Calif. Federal officials refused to divulge other information about Bloom over the telephone.

Bloom did not return phone calls to his Malibu, Calif., office Wednesday in an attempt to confirm if he is the sports agent convicted in April. A secretary at Lincoln-Shire Financial Services would not say if Bloom was convicted in Chicago.

Advertisements for Bloom's financial seminars which ran in Waco and Galveston newspapers last week promised that — by attending the three-hour programs — customers could "remove late payments, judgments, foreclosures, bankruptcies, repossessions and other obsolete, misleading, erroneous or outdated information from your credit report legally."

The ads say, "Learn how to run your own credit reports, establish/re-establish credit, get instant credit, qualify for loans, increase your credit limits, add or delete info from credit reports, open your own credit repair business and more."

The program also promises that everyone who attends the seminar will receive a "pre-approved Gold Card with an $800 credit limit regardless of past credit."

Rosemary Taylor, president of the Waco Better Business Bureau, said she wrote Bloom in California when she saw the ad last week in the Tribune-Herald because she thought "it had the capacity to mislead." She received no response, she said.

She learned by checking with the BBB in Colton, Calif., which investigated the company, that it agreed to pay a $10,000 fine in May to settle a lawsuit filed by the California attorney general's office, Taylor said.

"Without admitting wrongdoing and to settle the lawsuit, which alleged false advertising, the firm signed a consent agreement agreeing to, among other things, provide written contracts and give customers the right to cancel the contracts within five days, provide refunds to consumers who filed complaints with the attorney general's office and pay $10,000 in civil penalties," Taylor said. "According to Better Business Bureau file information, the firm has an unsatisfactory business performance record."

Taylor said she has received several phone inquiries about the seminars.

PUC likely violated law by passing over woman

AUSTIN (AP) — A member of the Texas Public Utility Commission says the commission violated federal laws barring employment discrimination when it refused to promote an attorney because she is pregnant.

Commissioner Jo Campbell made the assessment Thursday after the PUC refused to promote an attorney because she is pregnant.

A black state senator had made an impassioned plea during the recent legislative session for fair hiring practices at the regulatory commission.

"It's a violation of federal law," said Ms. Campbell, who dissented from the PUC decision.

The commission Thursday voted 2-1 to hire Austin attorney Robert Rima, a former lawyer with Southern Union Gas Co., for the position of general counsel.

The PUC passed over five lawyers on the PUC staff, including Sheila Bailey Knipe, a black attorney who is pregnant.

PUC Chairman Marta Greytok and Commissioner William Cassin said Thursday that Mrs. Knipe was not selected for the post because of her pregnancy.

"Sheila's problem is, she is going to have a baby very soon," Cassin said later. "She would be out (on maternity leave) at a very critical period."

"She was a very strong candidate and is a wonderful person. But we've been without a general counsel now for at least six months," Cassin added.

"We were looking for someone with a strong administrative background," Mrs. Greytok said. "I think the fact that Sheila needs time off is a factor. She is going to need probably a month or two off. That's a factor, and we've been without anybody. So that is a real critical factor."

Mrs. Knipe could not be reached for comment, The Dallas Morning News reported today.

Ms. Campbell said she did not raise the issue of discrimination during the PUC's meeting.

"I just let them violate the law. I didn't say anything during the meeting because I had already caused enough trouble. But federal law clearly states it," Ms. Campbell, an attorney, said.

William Hale, executive director of the Texas Human Rights Commission, also said the PUC may have violated the law, if Mrs. Knipe was not chosen because of her pregnancy.

"Where an employer specifically states that they are refusing to hire the female because of her pregnancy that may, underline may, present illegal employment discrimination, unless the position represents a direct threat to the female or her fetus, as determined by her physician," Hale said.

State Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, an attorney who made the plea for the PUC to improve its record in hiring minorities and women, said he was "shocked" and "baffled" by the decision.

"Whoa! Whoa! I mean, we've made some steps backwards and we're marking time, based on recent Supreme Court decisions, but we haven't gone that far backwards," Washington said. "I mean, that's blatant."

"I think that is discrimination per se," he said.

Washington, reached at Houston, indicated he plans to go to Austin to discuss the matter with PUC commissioners.

The post of general counsel of the PUC has been vacant since January, when former general counsel Lambeth Townsend resigned.

Body found at base identified as Texan

FORT RILEY, Kan. (AP) — The body found Tuesday in a van at Fort Riley was that of Sgt. 1st Class James D. Craig, 40, of Bryan, Texas, the Army said Thursday.

Maj. Lynn Pepperd said Craig apparently died of a gunshot wound to the head, but she said she had no information to release on the circumstances of the shooting. Military authorities were investigating.

A colleague found Craig in the van about 1 p.m. Tuesday, and he was pronounced dead at the scene.

Ms. Pepperd said Craig, a native of Pocatello, Idaho, had been a supply sergeant with the Army Reserve Officer Training Corps at Texas A&M University in College Station, Texas, since March 1986.

He arrived at Fort Riley just recently to work with students at the ROTC advanced camp this summer. Cadets arrived Monday for training that runs through July 29.

Craig is survived by his wife, Cindy, and three children.

FAMILY MATTERS

Children sometimes made 'scapegoat' for whole family

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR FAMILY: I have been reading your column with lots of interest. My 7-year-old grandson is always blamed for everything. My daugher has even told me that everything would be fine if (name) would just behave. I have heard her attack and belittle him when he does something wrong. It just breaks my heart to see her do that to him, but whenever I try to help him she gets really angry at me too. She tells me that I am interfering and that I never support her. I have stopped saying anything but its so hard to see her do that to him.

When he is with me, his behavior is fine, but he seems withdrawn and lonely. I feel like he has very low self-esteem. I try to cheer him up when he is with me and it seems to work for a while. Do you know of anything that I might try to do to help him that won't cause problems with my daughter? HEART BROKEN

DEAR HEART BROKEN: You and your grandson are in a difficult situation. Your daughter seems to be "scapegoating" him — making him the target for all her problems and frustrations. He may be redirecting your daughter's attention, and be acting out the family's pain.

Scapegoats are, by training, very difficult to deal with. These people can become physically abusive to others. They are social misfits. The process is self-perpetuating — they receive social disapproval because they behave in socially unacceptable ways, they behave that way because it is their role in the family, and so on. They can't help but have low self-esteem.

Acting out behavior is a cry for help. I encourage you to continue to support your grandson. He and his mother need professional help. If that is not an option at this time, help your grandson learn how to change his behavior.

Meet with your grandson and spell out the rules of behavior at your home. Do not have very many rules, but write them down (a contract). For example, 1. We do not yell at each other; 2. We put all the toys up before leaving; and 3. Do not have a tantrum when your mother comes to pick you up. Establish some simple, clear rewards for following the rules and simple consequences for not following the rules.

This process can help teach your grandson that he can talk out his feelings instead of acting them out, and that there are other ways to deal with problems. He needs to experience positive ways of respecting rules, boundaries and routines.

I encourage you to read a book on children of alcoholics as they typically describe the scapegoat role in detail. Please write again and let me know what is going on.

DEAR CONFIDENTIAL: It is very important that you and your husband learn to "speak with one voice," and become aware of when you are communicating conflicting messages to your child. We all know about fathers that are "too strict" and mothers are "too lenient," but parenting issues go well beyond this simple idea.

I encourage you and your husband to discuss your views of parenting your daughter. Ask yourselves serious questions about what each perceives the other is doing — Are you alternating between being too lax and too strict? Are your reactions to the same actions sometimes powerful and sometimes trivial? Are the boundaries (rules of the house) clearly stated and agreed upon? Do your parenting actions match the house rules? The list goes on, but you get the idea.

Children need freedom, but they also need clear and concise rules. They must know and experience the consequences of their actions. We want our children to grow into adults capable of making choices, so we must teach them (in a single voice) about the consequences of making choices.

Jim May is the director of the Family Wellness Center.

Questions for this column should be addressed to Family Matters, P.O. Box 10485, Midland, 79702.

Some parental duties easier than others

By AMANDA GRIFFIN
New York Times News Service

OPELOUSAS, La. — Much of parenting is made up of those things that fall under the heading of "parental duty."

Duties above and beyond feeding and clothing; responsibilities that something deep inside a parent says, "You're supposed to do these things."

Why else do we put a cool washcloth on a hot forehead or ice cubes in the too-hot cocoa?

I watched my husband tackle a parental duty last week. Two days before the deadline, he and our son were constructing a small racing car made from a block of pine for a Cub Scout derby.

"This is all you get?" my husband asked, shaking the kit into his lap. He held up a small block of pine that no more resembled a car than my kitchen sink does.

There were four wheels, a few nails and a sheet of instructions; nothing more.

"Look, do you see a car?" he asked our son, holding up the block of wood.

"Where?" he asked.

"Right here," my husband said, shaking the wood. "If you can't see a car in this, we'll never be able to make one."

A few minutes later they disappeared into the workshop. They emerged later with something that looked like a DeLorean that had been chopped in half, which our son decorated with markers and named "Desert Fox."

I missed the Desert Fox's performance.

The car-building pair came home from the derby and our son told me everybody he beat, and then those he didn't beat. My husband, with John Wayne nonchalance, said, "Yea, it really went fast."

It was obvious from the glow on their faces that something signficant had happened. The Desert Fox hadn't won, but it hadn't lost.

Our son had a blue ribbon to show for his effort and Dad had engineered a car that finished in the top third, as he figured it. It seems this was as much a competition for the dads as for the boys.

So, once again, the sacrifice of parental duty paid off. All it took was a $1.89 kit and a little sweat.

And the best part was, I didn't have to do a thing.

Teach children 'facts of death'

Associated Press

Teaching children about death is almost as difficult as discussing sex — and should be handled in a similar fashion.

Children encounter death when a pet, a grandparent or even a parent dies, according to a recent issue of Redbook, and they ask questions about their own mortality and those of the people they love.

"Teaching kids about death is very much like teaching them about sex," said Dr. Frances Millican, a supervising and training analyst with the Washington Psychoanalytic Institute in Washington. She said that means that as questions arise, they should be answered in a way that is keyed to their age and understanding.

There are "unhealthy explanations" parents should avoid, as Earl Grollman warned in his book, "Explaining Death to Children." They include:

- So-and-so has gone on a long journey for a long time. The child could feel hurt, angry and abandoned that someone he loved left without even saying goodbye.
- So-and-so has been taken away by God because he's so good. A child may fear the reward for goodness is death.
- So-and-so died because she was sick. A child may fear the normal illnesses he experiences could kill him.
- So-and-so is in eternal sleep. Equating sleep with death can cause bedtime problems.

Dr. Robert Gillman, a child psychoanalyst with the Baltimore-Washington Psychoanalytic Institute and president of the Association for Child Pyschoanalysis, warns about using religion to fudge the facts of death.

"Even if we tell our children Grandpa's soul is in heaven — if that's our belief — we first should make it very clear his body is in a coffin in the ground."

Erna Furman, a child psychoanalyst with the Cleveland Center for Research in Child Development and the Hanna Perkins Therapeutic School in Cleveland, warned that "avoidance of the realities does not protect children but may add to their fears."

She said if they are not given clear information, "they will make up their own answers, which are usually very mixed up and much more frightening."

Children as young as 2, she said, can grasp basic information, although they may have trouble accepting that death is irreversible.

Youngsters up to age 9 or so may not grasp that death is universal and they may ask if it could happen to them. Gillman counsels against lying, but you can say something like, "You are going to live for a very long time — until you're very old." If they then ask if they will die when they are old, the answer is, "Yes, all living things die."

When confronted with death, a child faces a host of emotions including anger, guilt, sorrow and sometimes a desperate denial.

It does not help to minimize a child's pain — "Hey, it isn't really so terrible." Instead it should be accepted, shared, empathized with. By crying with him, encouraging him to talk about his feelings or giving him a wordless hug, parents can let a grieving child know sadness is permissible and survivable.

Lyme disease: 'Great imposter' spreading

By PETER WEHRWEIN
Hearst News Service

ALBANY, N.Y. — In old medical textbooks, the venereal disease syphilis was nicknamed the "great impostor" because it had so many symptoms common to other diseases.

Now there is a new "great impostor" on the medical stage — Lyme disease.

A circular reddish rash surrounding the bite of the tiny deer tick responsible for spreading disease is supposed to be the tell-tale sign of Lyme disease. But some studies have shown that up to a quarter of those bitten don't get the rash.

The symptoms from which they do suffer — fever, malaise, and in the later stages, arthritis — can easily be mistaken for something else.

"The big problem is that people believe that if you don't have the rash, you don't have Lyme — and that is not true," said Dr. Jack Debbie, the public health veterinarian for the New York State Health Department.

Though generally not considered fatal, if it goes undetected and untreated — pencillin and other common antibiotics usually work — Lyme disease can have terrible consequences. The disease can act like multiple sclerosis and Alzheimer's disease, said Debbie, and "that is pretty serious."

Still, it is hard to imagine anyone who hasn't heard something about Lyme disease. If they gave out such awards, Lyme might be a front-runner for "disease of the year" honors. The "Ixodes dammini" tick that spreads the disease even made the cover of Newsweek.

There are other similarities between Lyme disease and syphilis besides ambiguous symptoms. Both are caused by spiral-shaped bacteria, or spirochetes. And the symptoms of each are caused not so much by the bacteria, but by the body's immunological response to it.

The disease was first identified in 1975 by Dr. Allen Steere, who traced the cause of an unusually high number of arthritis cases in Lyme, Ct., to the tick. Six years later, two state Health Department scientists, Jorge Benach and Edward Bosler, isolated the spirochete itself.

Nobody knows how long the disease might have circulated before Steere identified it. Some epidemiologists theorize that infected ticks were spread from Europe by birds. Debbie said he has heard theories that changes in pesticide use might have spurred the spread of the tick and the disease.

From 1980 through 1988, approximately 14,000 cases of Lyme disease were reported nationwide, according to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. The highest incidence was in the mid-Atlantic region and the Northeast: New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Minnesota accounted for 92 percent of all cases reported, said the CDC.

New York health officials say the only known route of transmission is the Ixodes dammini tick, which has a life span of two years. The spirochete lives in the "midgut" of the tick and "spills out" into human blood when the tick bites, said Sean Meldrum, the New York state public health representative tracking the disease.

Despite increasing numbers of cases, Meldrum said that Lyme disease is "not an easy disease to catch." Several things must happen: the tick must be infected, it has to feed for several hours, and the spirochetes have to get by the body's immune system.

"A lot more people get bit by the ticks than get the disease," he said.

Lyme disease might also pose a serious threat to the nation's livestock herds.

Scientists at Cornell University's School of Veterinary Medicine found cases of Lyme disease in several horses in the lower Hudson Valley last year, according to Donald Lein, a professor at the school. The horses responded to antibiotic treatment.

Scientists at the University of Wisconsin veterinary medicine school say they have found Lyme in dairy-herds and have warned farmers against drinking raw milk.

Health department describes disease

Hearst News Service

ALBANY, N.Y. — Following are questions commonly asked about Lyme disease, with answers provided by the New York State Health Department.

Q: What are symptoms of Lyme disease?

A: The illness usually occurs during the summer months and generally starts as a circular reddish rash around or near the tick bite. Multiple rashes may occur. During the rash stage, or sometimes prior to it, other symptoms that may occur include fever, headache, fatigue, a stiff neck and joint pain. These symptoms may last several weeks. If left untreated, within a few weeks or months after the rash onset, complications such as meningitis, facial palsy or heart abnormalities may occur. Swelling and pain in the large joints may recur over many years.

Q: How soon do symptoms occur?

A: Symptoms usually begin within a month of exposure.

Q: Does past infection with Lyme disease make a person immune?

A: From what scientists know, reinfection appears to be possible.

Q: What is the treatment for Lyme disease?

A: Current therapy includes the use of antibiotics, including tetracycline and penicillin.

Q: What can a person do to prevent getting Lyme disease?

A: When walking outside in a tick-infested area, wear light colored clothing and tuck pants into socks and shirt into pants. Repellents containing DEET may prevent tick attachment. Control of rodents around the home may be helpful. If a mouse is trapped, extreme care should be taken since ticks attached to the mouse may attach to a person.

Earlier childbirth encouraged

Associated Press

Experts today are encouraging women to have children as early as possible, depending on their circumstances.

"If a woman is 35 or 36, I tell her to get on with it," says Dr. Luella Klein, professor and chairman of the department of obstetrics and gynecology at Emory University in Atlanta.

In a recent report in Ladies' Home Journal, experts from the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists warned about risks affecting women who delay childbirth until their late 30s or beyond.

First, they have statistically higher chances than younger women of having a baby with Down's syndrome, a birth defect marked by mental retardation and physical defects. Second, they run a slightly higher risk of having a miscarriage.

After age 35, fertility declines for several reasons. Some women ovulate less frequently and there's a greater chance one has had or may develop endometriosis or infections that affect the fallopian tubes.

Thanks to modern prenatal tests, women who do get pregnant after 35 can find out whether their babies have serious birth defects fairly early in pregnancy. One common method is amniocentesis, a test of amniotic fluid to check for fetal abnormalities. After testing, women have the option of deciding whether to continue the pregnancy. Overall, however, a woman's chances of delivering a healthy baby after 35 are very good.

DEAR ABBY

Wife wandering in affair looks for direction

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a 31-year-old female, married nearly five years (no children), and have been having an affair for several months. Late last year I realized that I was not happy. My husband started a new consulting job at that time and worked every evening until 9 or 10 p.m. and all day Saturday. I saw less and less of him, and felt lonely and frustrated. We argued a lot and I kept telling him I was not happy. He told me if our marriage did not work out it would be because I wasn't understanding enough — that he was workng for our future.

Innocently enough, I asked one of my clients to a client appreciation luncheon. We had a wonderful time, and after I left him, I felt something deep within my heart for this man. I passed it off as "flirting" fun; then he called me a few days later and invited me to lunch. I felt like a schoolgirl again. To make a long story short, more lunches followed, and I knew he was special enough to risk my marriage for. That's how our affair began.

Now I know that I love this man and want to spend the rest of my life with him. The problem is that I really do love my husband and don't want to hurt him. How did this happen? How can I be in love with two men? Is my affair true love, or am I substituting the lack of love at home for an exciting affair with another man?

We both decided to end our affair on the last day of 1988. It didn't work. We saw each other again because we couldn't stay away from each other.

The guilt is killing me. Meanwhile my husband is working so hard he doesn't seem to notice. Please help me. — IN LOVE WITH TWO MEN IN TEXAS

DEAR IN LOVE: You need more help than I can give you in a letter. You (and your husband) need to find the time to discuss your marriage and evaluate it. Here we go again — I am recommending a family counselor.

You do not mention whether your new love is married or has children.

How your affair "happened" is no mystery. You were vulnerable in your bored and lonely state and were unconsciously looking for the attention and excitement you hungered for.

There are many unanswered questions here. If you left your husband for this new man, who would be hurt? The answers to your questions can be found through counseling. One thing is certain: There's no free lunch. You can't build happiness on the misery of others.

DEAR ABBY: Please tell "Mrs. G. in L.A." not to shoot herself — shoot her husband instead. (Only kidding.) She said her husband, age 72, was having a delayed mid-life crisis and is divorcing her. I know how she feels. My husband of 20 years walked out on me shortly after our daughter turned 16. He said he was going to "find himself." (He also took along his 30-year-old girlfriend and her teen-age son!)

I have (mentally) shot him, poisoned him and strangled him at least once a week since he took a hike. I realize I am only fantasizing, but it helps me cope with the anger, hostility and stress I feel.

Tell Mrs. G. to hang in there. Counseling helps — individually, in a group or both. Also, don't shut out friends who want to help but cannot find the words. Keep busy, volunteer, take classes at a local college or trade school. Most of all, remember, time heals — and the pain does diminish.

Thanks for giving me a chance to unload. — BEEN THERE IN WISCONSIN

Fogg unshrouds Beardsley drawings

By JOHN J. MULLINS

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The timing couldn't have been better: talent and technology coincided beautifully at the end of the 19th century for controversial artist Aubrey Beardsley.

Though little trained in art and just 25 when he died of tuberculosis in 1898, the drawings Beardsley made the last six years of his life are credited with influencing such giants of 20th-century art as Pablo Picasso, Paul Klee and Edvard Munch.

Beardsley's black and white drawings, usually for book or magazine illustrations, were printed — when not suppressed — through the then new photo-mechanical reproduction process, said Miriam Stewart, a curatorial associate at Harvard University's Fogg Art Museum.

The reproductions were faithful to the drawings and cost less than those carved into wood blocks by craftsmen rather than the artist.

The Fogg has more than 50 of the drawings, which were donated by two alumni. They constitute the most important collection of the artist's work outside Great Britain, said Fogg Curator of Drawings William Robinson.

For the first time in six years the drawings are on public display, and for the first time in more than a dozen years, they are together in one exhibit.

And since the drawings are on paper, making them delicate and sensitive to light, they can be exhibited only briefly, museum officials said.

They will be shown at Harvard's Sackler Museum through July 9 together with other material, including books illustrated by Beardsley, loaned by Harvard's Houghton Library, the Boston Public Library and Boston's Museum of Fine Arts.

Some of the drawings are overtly erotic; others have touches typical of his mischief.

He usually started his drawings with pencil and perfected them with ink, Stewart said. In some, he used graphite.

His acquaintances included the playwright Oscar Wilde, and Beardsley became a sensation with his illustrations for Wilde's play, "Salome," published in 1894. The illustrations were "described variously as having nothing to do with the play and everything to do with it," Stewart said.

Included in the Fogg exhibit are two drawings intended for the book but suppressed from publication.

The show also includes work done for a reprint of Malory's "Le Morte d'Arthur," Ben Johnson's "Volpone," Alexander Pope's "The Rape of the Lock," Aristophanes' "Lysistrata," and for the periodicals, The Yellow Book and The Savoy.

Drawings for "Bon-Mots," a collection of witticisms are "sort of elaborate doodles ... some quite grotesque," Stewart said.

A voracious reader, Beardsley sometimes exchanged drawings for books, and it was through this that his career was launched when he was chosen to illustrate "Le Morte d'Arthur." He was 20.

Some drawings resemble posters and advertisements. "He was of his time, and he was not trying to create a lyrical past," Stewart said.

Beardsley began writing an erotic novel, but never completed it. He became a Roman Catholic the year before he died, and on his death bed asked that some of his drawings be destroyed. The publisher who had them did not.

The Fogg's collection came from alumni who had different reasons for collecting Beardsley's work.

Grenville L. Winthrop, who was graduated in 1889 and who descended from the first governor of Massachusetts, bequeathed to Harvard 23 original Beardsley drawings among more than 3,700 art objects.

Scofield Thayer, class of 1913 and onetime editor and part-owner of the literary review The Dial, had more than 30 drawings that became the Fogg's when he died.

Winthrop liked the lines and design of Beardsley's work; Thayer liked the daring subject matter, Robinson said.

Producer finds recording 'Jerome Robbins Broadway' a challenge

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — On one side of the stage stand the Jets, on the other side the Sharks. The rival gangs from "West Side Story" huddle around microphones and watch conductor Paul Gemignani on a small podium in the middle of a vast wood-paneled room filled with musicians.

It's a Sunday morning and the cast and orchestra of "Jerome Robbins' Broadway" are in RCA Records' Studio A on West 44th Street.

The singers look at Gemignani. The conducter, wearing headphones, glances at a man standing over a control panel in a soundproof booth near the stage. Take after take is recorded until Jay David Saks is satisfied.

Saks, an RCA Records producer, is the man who must capture the sound of "Jerome Robbins' Broadway," a celebration of some of the biggest musical hits by the famous director and choreographer.

Besides a suite of dances from "West Side Story," the show includes numbers from "Fiddler on the Roof," "The King and I," "Gypsy," "Peter Pan" and others.

The final result, released in May on two records or two cassettes or two compact discs, is one of the most lavish original cast recordings ever made. It includes more than 120 minutes of music and a 62-page booklet with extensive notes on each of the musicals included in the show.

"Cast albums are very demanding," says Saks, who has been in the recording business since 1972 when he was hired by cast album guru Thomas Z. Shepard at Columbia Records.

"... in the case of a Broadway show, you have a theatrical work that's designed for the stage, and how does it translate to a record when you have nothing to go by except what you're hearing?"
— RCA Records producer Jay David Saks

"They require a great deal of advance preparation and a lot of study. If you're going to record the Beethoven 'Seventh Symphony,' you don't have to sit there in advance and decide whether you're going to take it up a key or whether you're going to leave out the third movement.

"But in the case of a Broadway show, you have a theatrical work that's designed for the stage," he says, "and how does it translate to a record when you have nothing to go by except what you're hearing?

"Frequently you have to change the reality of what is happening musically to re-create more accurately the memory in the listener."

Before the taping sessions, Saks wasn't sure how "Jerome Robbins' Broadway" would work on record. It presented special problems.

"Most of this music is familiar, and most of it has been recorded before," he recalls. "For example, you don't want to have just another recording of 'West Side Story.' Plus there's a lot of dance music and music with no vocals in the show. So what do you do with it?"

Federal judge attacks 'snakes' in legal grass

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The legal profession came in for strong criticism from a federal judge's remarks when he sentenced a man to prison for mail fraud after the defendant said he blindly followed legal advice.

U.S. District Judge Ed Prado made the remarks Thursday while sentencing James William Arthur, 51, of San Antonio, who was convicted on charges accusing him of failing to deliver free "specialty items" such as motor boats and hot tubs to merchants who purchased merchandise from his San Antonio telemarketing firm.

Arthur told Judge Prado that he followed the advice of co-defendants J. Mack Ausburn, a local lawyer, and Ron Bramble, a former college professor Arthur says holds a law degree.

"My mistake, your honor, and I freely admit it, was to seek the advice of snakes," Arthur said.

Ausburn and Bramble have pleaded guilty to 14 counts of mail fraud. They are scheduled to be sentenced June 27.

Arthur's remark prompted the judge to say he is "concerned about where the legal profession is heading."

"It's unfortunate that in the legal profession we have attorneys ... who do not help the reputation of the profession, who put their pocketbook in front of what's best for their client, what's best for society," Prado said.

Arthur was sentenced to four years and nine months in prison and Prado ordered that Arthur spend eight years in a form of probation after his release.

The judge also fined Arthur $5,000 and ordered restitution amounting to $2,886.54 and to pay $1,500 to a crime victims assessment fund. He also sentenced him to do 200 hours of community service during his probation.

The telemarketing firm promised customers items such as motor boats or hot tubs, if novelties, such as ball point pens or key rings, were purchased.

Some customers received no specialty items when they bought the novelties, federal officials said.

Insurance board vows to get tough on Medigap

AUSTIN (AP) — Consumer groups praised the State Board of Insurance after it announced a get-tough campaign against insurance agents and companies that sell misleading Medigap policies to the elderly.

"This is most exciting for consumers in Texas," John Hildreth, director of the southwest regional office of Consumers Union, said Thursday.

He described the action as "a refreshing signal that the State Board of Insurance is on its way to exercising new leadership on behalf of consumers."

The two recently appointed insurance board members also urged state lawmakers to beef up the regulatory agency's enforcement powers over Medigap insurance, which is designed to cover the cost of health care expenses not paid by federal Medicare.

Earlier, the insurance panel had been the target of criticism by lawmakers and consumer advocates, who said it failed to adequately regulate the insurance industry.

During a stormy regular legislative session, two members of the three-member Insurance Board resigned under fire, in addition to a number of high-level executives.

Gov. Bill Clements then appointed Paul Wrotenbery, of Austin, and Richard Reynolds, of Flower Mound, to the board. He has yet to name a third member to fill a term that has expired.

Wrotenbery and Reynolds said Thursday they were pushing "a new era of aggressive leadership.

They outlined several new board rules that they said will help address problems in the $300 million per year Medigap industry in Texas.

Insurance agency officials said of the 2,000 complaints they receive each month, about 500 are from disgruntled Medigap policyholders.

In addition, officials said the Dallas area has become the national center for mailings of so-called "lead generators," which are official-looking questionnaires sent to senior citizens that make no reference to insurance but are used by agents to solicit Medigap business.

"Let there be no doubt, the State Board intends to pursue lead card generators who mislead and deceive Texas seniors. We are going to do everything we can to shut them down," Wrotenbery said.

"We will publish a list of organizational names — many of them as phony as a $3 bill and twice as misleading — that our staff has identified as being used in lead solicitations," he said.

Wrotenbery said the board will distribute to the news media each month a list of disciplinary actions against companies and agents; and publish a shoppers guide comparing premiums and benefits of Medigap policies.

Pistol-packing judges gunning for opinion

HOUSTON (AP) — Some judges who are unhappy with an attorney general's opinion that Texas jurists cannot tote guns outside the courtroom say the right to bear arms was given to them nearly a century ago.

"That old case is still the law, no matter how old it is," Harris County Court-at-Law Judge Jimmie Duncan said of the court's ruling long ago.

"I think (Texas Attorney General Jim) Mattox is wrong. He's just a lawyer, and that's just a lawyer's opinion," Duncan said.

Texas judges and guns go way back to the days of Judge Roy Bean, a saloonkeeper and justice of the peace who was noted for holding court at one end of his bar and relying on his six-guns to keep order.

Bean gained notoriety for his colorful decisions and his boasts that he was the only "Law West of the Pecos."

When asked how long he had been carrying a gun, Duncan, who has been on the bench for 32 years, wouldn't own up to packing a personal firearm.

"But if I did, it would probably have been for 32 years," he said.

From a practical standpoint, judges have little to fear, Duncan said.

"Not many police officers are going to arrest a judge for carrying a gun," Duncan said. "And if they did, they would probably have a hell of a time getting a conviction."

Mattox recently released an official opinion saying that, contrary to widespread belief, judges in Texas are not peace officers and are not legally entitled to carry guns outside their courtrooms.

Civil county Court-at-Law Judge Charles Coussons freely admitted he has been carrying a gun since he took the bench in 1976. He said the reason is simple — for protection.

"Come by some day, and I'll show you all the crank letters I get," said Coussons, who said he believes judges will abide by any change in law regarding judges' use of firearms.

Assistant Attorney General Susan L. Garrison said the opinion is advisory in nature and covers only the possession of guns outside the courtroom. There is separate legislation that allows judges to carry guns inside their courtrooms, she said, regardless of whether they are considered peace officers.

Education board praises success of '89 session

AUSTIN (AP) — The 1989 regular legislative session was a triumph for the State Board of Education, which saw many of its concerns answered by state lawmakers, says Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby.

"I think you're going to be amazed at the number of your recommendations that were enacted into law," Kirby told board members.

"I would say that this is probably the most successful legislative session the agency and the board has had ... that I can remember," Kirby said.

The board Thursday applauded legislative action and praised Kirby's work in pushing legislative goals for public education.

"Nothing apparently fell through the cracks. It's remarkable," said board member Bob Aikin of Commerce after Deputy Education Commissioner Lynn Moak explained highlights of education legislation.

"I think that says a great deal about the maturing of this commissioner and his staff. Credit is due in the very highest degree to the commissioner," said Aikin, whose sentiments were echoed by other board members.

Lawmakers approved numerous education bills, including those on public school funding, raises for starting teacher and plans to decrease the number of dropouts.

Kirby said legislators had been particularly receptive to suggestions by the school board.

Among the most important legislation was a bill aimed at equalizing state aid between poor and wealthy school districts, for which the Legislature set aside $450 million over the next two years.

Kirby cautioned the board not to rush into writing rules to implement the new laws.

"If we can read the law and understand it, let's not write any regulations on it," Kirby said. He also suggested the board not write rules to "get around" legislation they don't like.

He urged board members to adopt preliminary rules as guidelines for school districts on programs mandated to begin Sept. 1. The board may need more time to fully implement the programs and may want to change regulations later, he said.

Among the board's recommendations set into law were the addition of social studies and science to a standardized test for students and the elimination of testing in the first grade, Kirby said.

Legislation Moak outlined for the board included pilot programs for early childhood education and for 3-year-olds; expanded dropout-prevention efforts; and changes in the textbook adoption process.

STATE in brief

Seagrass may be answer to ending beach erosion

ROCKPORT (AP) — Scientists are studying seagrass as a natural means of stopping coastal erosion.

The plant, smooth cordgrass, thrives in salt marshes and ponds along the Gulf Coast.

Rich Tillman, marine extension agent for Aransas and San Patricio counties, said the tall, slender seagrass is being used in an experiment against wind and waves at badly eroded sites on Copano and Aransas bays.

In the past, everything from massive, man-made bulkheads of steel and concrete to Christmas trees have been used to halt the whittling away of the shoreline.

Soil and Conservation Service officials borrowed the idea to plant cordgrass from Bob Nailon, a Texas A&M University Sea Grant marine agent. Nailon planted more than 3,000 feet of grass along the shores of Galveston Bay in 1986 in an anti-erosion effort.

Pollution closes part of bay

AUSTIN (AP) — The state health department has ordered the continued closure of a small portion of Lavaca Bay to the taking of finfish and crabs for human consumption.

The area, on the eastern side of Lavaca Bay, south of the Highway 35 causeway, was closed in April, 1988.

Texas Department of Health officials said Thursday that finfish and crabs from the closed area continue to be unfit for human consumption because of mercury contaminants.

The closure applies to commercial and recreational fishermen, the health department said.

Drug raid benefits school

SAN AUGUSTINE (AP) — Afraid that some spoils of the drug war may spoil, authorities plan to donate groceries seized during a drug raid to the Lufkin State School.

Authorities had seized Husband's Liquor Store and Husband's Package Store, along with the contents of the two San Augustine businesses, during a drug raid last Friday. Officials contend the two stores were used in a cocaine trafficking network.

Fresh eggs, canned groceries and cheese that were being sold at the liquor and package stores will be given to the Lufkin State School, a state-supported residential school for mentally retarded children and adults, according to the Beaumont Enterprise-Journal.

The owner of the two stores, Dave Husband, has been charged with drug trafficking and harboring and transporting illegal aliens.

Three-peat hopes dimming for LA

Detroit takes 2-0 lead

By CLIFTON BROWN
New York Times News Service

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Recovering from a 10-point deficit in the first quarter, the Detroit Pistons rallied to defeat the Los Angeles Lakers, 108-105, Thursday night at the Palace of Auburn Hills.

The victory gave the Pistons a 2-0 lead in the four-of-seven-game National Basketball Association championship series.

James Worthy missed an opportunity to tie the game when he made only one of two free throws with two seconds left. Isiah Thomas was then fouled and made two free throws for the final margin.

The series shifts to the Forum in Inglewood, Calif., for the third game, Sunday. Only two teams in league history have recovered from a 2-0 deficit to win the championship series, Boston in 1969 and Portland in 1977.

The Lakers suffered a severe blow midway through the third quarter when Magic Johnson injured his left hamstring. Johnson, grimacing, walked slowly to the Lakers' locker room, accompanied by the Lakers' team doctor. Johnson never returned and his status for the game Sunday has yet to be determined.

Johnson's absence meant the Lakers were without their normal starting backcourt of Johnson and Byron Scott, and Detroit capitalized.

Trailing by 6 points at halftime, Detroit whittled at the lead until John Salley tied the score, 79-79, with 2 minutes, 10 seconds remaining in the third quarter.

But the Lakers refused to crack. With a makeshift backcourt of Michael Cooper and Tony Campbell, Los Angeles closed the third quarter with a 15-5 surge, taking a 92-84 lead into the final period. Campbell hit two clutch jump shots, Cooper added another, and the Lakers' defense didn't allow Detroit easy baskets.

Worthy: It's not over

By HARRY ATKINS

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers, showing the pride that won them the last two NBA championships, are convinced they can still win No. 3.

But the Detroit Pistons, who felt they should have won the first championship in franchise history last year, proved Thursday night they might have the character to finish the job this time.

Joe Dumars scored 26 of his 33 points in the first half as the Pistons, who trailed by as many as 10 points, rallied for a 108-105 victory to take a 2-0 lead in the best-of-7 NBA Finals.

"It's not over, we've been behind before," said Lakers forward James Worthy, who scored 19 points. "We feel we can win, we can beat them.

"We had a nice lead, we gave up some second shots which hurt us. We're not giving up. Things didn't work out here in Detroit the way we would have liked them to."

The series now shifts to Inglewdood, Calif., for three straight games, unless the Pistons sweep, starting Sunday.

Only two teams have ever come back from a 2-0 deficit to win an NBA Finals; Boston in 1969 against the Lakers, and Portland in 1977 against Philadelphoa. This is the first time the Lakers have been down 2-0 since the 1983 Finals when they were swept by the Sixers.

"We've got three games at home," Lakers coach Pat Riley said. "And the most dangerous thing in the world is a wounded animal."

Riley still needs just one more victory to tie Red Auerbach as the all-time winningest coach in playoff history. The venerable Boston coach compiled a 99-69 mark, Riley is 98-40.

But the war of attrition is beginning to take its toll. Los Angeles played the first two games without guard Byron Scott and lost Magic Johnson with 4:39 remaining in the third quarter of Game 2 with a hamstring injury.

Texas shortstop Steve Bethea sweeps up after tagging LSU base runner Craig Cala (24) at second.

'Horns within earshot of another CWS title

By TOM VINT

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Opponents at the College World Series are learning you don't tell the Texas Longhorns there's no way they're going to beat you.

A Miami player was heard by the Longhorns to say there was no way Texas could beat the Hurricanes. Texas won 12-2 in the West Division winners' bracket final Monday night.

Louisiana State Coach Skip Bertman said after the Tigers eliminated Miami the following night that he believed his ace pitcher Ben McDonald was better than Texas and that LSU would force a second semifinal game today.

Texas collected 13 hits, scored 12 runs again and handed LSU a going-away ticket with a 12-7 whipping in a CWS semifinal Thursday night.

The victory sends second-seeded Texas to the championship game with a 54-17 record. Sixth-seeded LSU ends its season 55-17.

Texas goes to the championship game for the eighth time to face the winner of tonight's 7:10 p.m. CDT East Division semifinal between No. 1 seed Florida State, 54-17, and No. 4 seed Wichita State, 66-16.

"I think I said and some other people said that very often these highly pumped pitching duels just don't develop that way. This was just another case of it," Texas coach Cliff Gustafson said.

Scott Bryant and Arthur Butcher drove in three runs each for Texas as the Longhorns erupted for four runs in the first, two in the second, one in the third and four more in the fourth off McDonald, the No. 1 pick in the Major League draft last Monday.

Dream ends for Brenham, Peters

Associated Press

AUSTIN (AP) — Austin Anderson baseball coach Jimmy Tompkins lost to the Brenham Cubs in a tournament in March, but he predicted that his team could beat the three-time Class 4A champions if they ever met again.

Tompkins and his team made good on the prediction Thursday when the hometown Trojans stunned the Cubs, 6-4, in eight innings in front of a standing room only crowd of 5,123 at Disch-Falk Field.

The victory gave Anderson a spot against Paris in today's Class 4A final at the 41st University Interscholastic League baseball tournament.

"I always thought we could play with them," said Tompkins in his first year at Anderson. "We had our opportunities and we made the best of them."

"They are a great team," he added.

In their first meeting, the Trojans lost 4-0 to national record holder Jon Peters. On Thursday Peters watched from his position at third base and teammate James Nix lost for the first time in 15 games.

Peters contributed a single and an RBI and ends his career with a 54-1 record after winning 53 straight.

"This is not the worst thing that could happen," said Peters, who was 12-1 this year. "We all have bigger and better things to do in our lives."

"When we played them the first time, I think we were a little bit overwhelmed," Tompkins said. "They were getting a lot of publicity at the time. We learned a lot from that experience and I am sure that it helped us this time."

Anderson, 25-6, erupted for four runs in the top of the eighth to secure the win. Brenham ended their season with the bases loaded.

Sugar Land Dulles, a team that came back to win, and Corpus Christi Carroll, a team that almost fell to a comeback bid, will meet for the Class 5A crown.

Dulles fought back to conquer Fort Worth Southwest 8-5, while Corpus Christi Carroll staved off a late inning rally by Duncanville 5-4 to secure a spot in the finals in the other semifinal game.

Youth movement alive in Paris

By ANDREW WARSHAW

PARIS (AP) — Steffi Graf can remember when she was 15, up and coming, and scaring the life out of opponents.

She met her mirror image at the French Open on Thursday.

Monica Seles, at 15 the youngest player in the tournament and competing in her first Grand Slam event, pushed Graf to the limit in the semifinals of the clay-court event and gave notice she is ready to challenge the supremacy of the world's No. 1 player.

"At that age, you have nothing to lose," the 19-year-old Graf said after her 6-3, 3-6, 6-3 victory over the Florida-based Yugoslav. "You are not expected to win and the crowd is more behind you. It's easier to play that way."

With her bright aquamarine outfit, her hair tied with a white ribbon, and her squeals and grunts, Seles was the picture of youthful enthusiasm.

After dropping the opening set, she shook off her inhibitions and beat Graf at her own game, driving the ball to the lines and drawing uncharacteristic errors from the racket of the normally aggressive West German.

"In the first set, I was very scared," Seles said. "I still felt she wasn't beating me that easily. Afterward, I relaxed a little bit."

Only when she got to the eighth game of the final set did Seles' strength and spirit break as she tired on the energy-sapping red clay and lost the last three games.

"I was getting a little bit tired," Seles said. "We were 4-3, deuce, and I had the chance to win that game. But at that point I was totally exhausted."

Exhausted or not, Seles proved — if she ever needed to — that the new era in women's tennis, so often dubbed the "Steffi and Gabby Club" after Graf and Gabriela Sabatini, has a new, younger, and just as dangerous member.

The Yugoslav beat Chris Evert in the championship match of the Virginia Slims of Houston in April and was 8-0 for the season coming into the French Open where she eliminated No. 4 seed Zina Garrison and No. 6 Manuela Maleeva.

On Thursday, she became the first player in eight months to take a set against Graf in a Grand Slam event. A victory in this tournament would be Graf's record-matching sixth straight Grand Slam title.

Seles, who hits a double-fisted forehand as well as backhand, said power was at the root of the changing face of women's tennis.

Pirates' 10-run lead not enough

Associated Press

Who says it's rare to blow a 10-run lead? Four days after Boston did it against Toronto, Pittsburgh did it against Philadelphia.

"It was very painful," Pirates manager Jim Leyland said Thursday night after his team took a 10-0 first-inning lead against Philadelphia and lost 15-11. "It's simple to explain. Their bullpen came through. Ours didn't. Their offense kept the pressure on. Ours didn't."

Pittsburgh's 10-run first was its biggest inning since Sept. 7, 1942. Barry Bonds hit a three-run homer and Andy Van Slyke and Gary Redus had two hits each as the Pirates sent 16 batters to the plate.

Normally, that's about it.

"I heard my players say, let's get a couple at a time and we can come back," Phillies manager Nick Leyva said.

Sure enough, they did.

Von Haves hit two-run homers in both the first and second innings, giving him 12 this year. Steve Jeltz's two-run homer in the fourth chased Pirates starter Bob Walk.

Jeltz, who before May 21 hadn't homered in five years and 1,357 at-bats, hit a three-run homer off Bill Landrum in the sixth and Ricky Jordan's RBI single off Bob Kipper later in the inning pulled the Phillies within 11-10.

"We just wanted to pick away," Hayes said. "We knew we had eight innings to try and get back in it. We needed our pitchers to hold them and they did."

Philadelphia scored five runs in the eighth off Jeff Robinson, 2-6. John Kruk singled with one out for the first four-hit game of his career and Juan Samuel and Bob Dernier walked.

Robinson threw a wild pitch that tied the game and Dickie Thon was intentionally walked to reload the bases. Darren Daulton hit a two-run single off Roger Samuels for a 13-11 lead and Curt Ford hit a two-run triple.

"When you score 10 runs you should win," said Walk, bothered by a hamstring problem. "I thought I could get by but it didn't work out. I feel stupid. I guess I wasn't real honest with the skipper. I told him I thought I could pitch, and I couldn't."

Ryan wins despite allowing seven runs

The Associated Press

AL Roundup

Luckily for the Texas Rangers, Ruben Sierra was hitting home runs almost as fast as Nolan Ryan was giving them up.

Ryan allowed four homers in a game for the first time in his 22-year career. But Sierra had a pair among his four hits and knocked in five runs Thursday night as the Rangers beat the Chicago White Sox 11-7.

Sierra homered once from each side of the plate, but his second shot, with two men on base in the eighth, wasn't exactly what he planned.

"I'd never hit for the cycle before, so I was looking for a triple on my last at-bat," Sierra said. "I tried to hit it in the gap but I hit it too good. It went very far."

Ryan didn't mind. He allowed home runs to Ivan Calderon, Ron Kittle and two to Harold Baines. The seven runs were the most runs Ryan had yielded in a victory since he beat the Rangers 9-6 as a member of the California Angels on Aug. 4, 1976.

"It was one of those nights and it's a good thing that my club was scoring runs because I needed every run I could get," said Ryan, 7-3. "You hope on the nights you don't pitch well they get you some runs."

Ryan allowed six hits, struck out seven and walked one. He set a club record by retiring 26 consecutive batters over two games before Calderon homered in the second inning. Ryan retired the last 22 batters in his one-hitter against Seattle in his last start.

He wasn't nearly as effective this time.

"They are a free-swinging club and they came out swinging tonight," Ryan said. "I felt fine physically but I didn't have good velocity on my fastball. Three homers were on fastballs."

So were Sierra's.

"Sometimes it happens," he said of his hot night. "You don't think about it and you hit the ball hard. I was looking for fastballs and I got fastballs twice and I hit the ball good."

Yankees 8, Red Sox 7

Boston rallied to tie the game with three runs in the ninth, then flopped with the bases loaded in the 10th and none out.

Don Slaught singled with one out in the 11th off Bob Stanley, 2-2. He moved to second on an infield out and, after Deion Sanders was walked intentionally, Steve Sax grounded a single up the middle to win it.

"I didn't immediately give it much thought, but then it hit me," Sax said of the intentional walk to Sanders, batting .154. Sax was hitting .307 and went 3-for-6 Thursday night. "How could they walk a guy with so little experience to get to me. It kind of psyched me up."

Earlier, Jesse Barfield, Mike Pagliarulo and Mel Hall hit solo homers for New York. Dwight Evans and Wade Boggs homered for the Red Sox.

Shortstop Alvaro Espinoza's one-out fielding error led to Boston's three-run ninth. Kevin Romine singled home a run with his first hit of the season, and pinch hitter Randy Kutcher doubled in two more off Dave Righetti.

But the Red Sox, who left 17 runners on base, failed in the 10th after Ed Romero walked, Boggs doubled and Mike Greenwell was intentionally walked. Evans struck out, Ellis Burks grounded into a force at home and Romine struck out.

Brewers 6, Orioles 2

At Baltimore, the first-place Orioles lost their second straight after an eight-game winning streak.

Glenn Braggs had three hits and six Brewers drove in runs.

Trailing 2-1, the Brewers took the lead with runs in the fourth and sixth. Then Braggs drove home Jim Gantner with a single in the seventh and Rob Deer added a run-scoring single.

Mark Knudson, 2-1, picked up the victory with 4 1-3 innings of scoreless, two-hit relief.

A disgusted Nolan Ryan allowed four homers and seven runs, but still had enough to pick up his seventh win for Texas.

Lee boosters present athletic scholarships

From Staff Reports

The Midland Lee Booster Club has awarded $500 scholarships to eight Lee athletes as part of its yearly scholarship program.

Scholarships recipients are Erich Byerly, Torval Crisp, Chad Haney, Blaine McAnally, Todd Overend, Billy Parks, Michael Pearson and Leslie Swann.

Byerly, a two-year football letterman, won the Lena Douglas Award for scholarship, is a member of the National Honor Society and a honor graduate. He plans to attend West Texas State University.

Crisp, a two-year basketball letterman, was third overall in District 4-5A scoring this year with an 18.7 loop average. He will attend Jarvis Christian College.

Haney, a two-year football letterman, was honorable mention All-State and a member of the National Honor Society. He plans to attend Angelo State University.

McAnally lettered two years in both football and baseball. He will attend New Mexico Junior College.

Overend also lettered twice in baseball and once in football. He will attend Southwest Texas State University.

Parks, another two-year football letterman, is a member of the National Honor Society and an honor graduate at Lee. He will attend Midland College.

Pearson, who lettered two years in both football and baseball, was an honorable mention All-State choice in football and a two-time first team All-District selection. Pearson was also a second team All-District pick in baseball. He is Lee's most valuable male athlete for 1988-89. He will attend Trinity Valley Community College.

Swann, a two-year letter winner in both track and basketball, was an honorable mention All-District pick in basketball. She is a member of the National Honor Society and an honor graduate. She will attend Texas Christian University.

Glenn Davis' two-run homer in the 10th gave Houston its 13th victory in 14 games. Danny Darwin, 5-1, pitched the 10th for Houston.

Tony Gwynn's RBI single gave the Padres the lead in the top of the inning. It was his third hit and third run batted in of the game. He has six straight multihit games, going 21-for-38.

Mark Davis, 2-2, walked Gerald Young to open the bottom of the inning and, one out later, Glenn Davis hit his 14th homer of the season.

Cardinals 7, Expos 2

Pedro Guerrero drove in three runs, including a go-ahead single, and the St. Louis scored five runs on six hits in the ninth. His two-run triple in the first was the only hit allowed by Kevin Gross through the first eight innings.

With one out in the ninth, Milt Thompson, Ozzie Smith, Guerrero and Tom Brunansky got consecutive hits to chase Gross, 6-4.

Frank DiPino, 3-0, pitched 1 2-3 innings of one-hit relief.

Reds 3, Giants 2

Craig Lefferts' wild pitch with the bases loaded in the eighth let Barry Larkin score the winning run.

Lefferts relieved Mike LaCoss, 2-5, and finished walking pinch-hitter Dave Collins to load the bases with none out. One out later, Lefferts threw a pitch in the dirt past catcher Bo Diaz.

Rob Dibble, 5-2, pitched out of bases-loaded threats in the seventh and eighth. John Franco finished for his 17th save in 18 opportunities.

Angels lose 4-3 in ninth

Associated Press

Paul Faries singled home the winning run with the bases loaded in the bottom of the ninth inning to give the Wichita Wranglers a 4-3 Texas League baseball victory over the Midland Angels.

In other Texas League action, Arkansas swept a doubleheader from Tulsa, 9-1 and 8-2, Jackson and Shreveport split a doubleheader with Jackson winning the first game, 4-2 and Shreveport taking the nightcap, 5-2, and El Paso edged San Antonio, 3-2.

Dan Walters had three hits in four trips to the plate for Wichita and teammate Craig Cooper had two hits in three trips and scored two runs.

Gary Disarcina homered for Midland.

One-armed second baseman wows scout

By MIKE WAGNER
Alice Echo-News

BRENHAM, Texas (AP) — Jon Peters is by no means the only baseball player to have played in this baseball-crazy city, but so far he is the best known.

And while the only once-beaten, record-setting, senior pitcher and the Brenham Cubs were in Austin, only to lose their chance at an unprecedented fourth-straight state title, attention appeared to be shifting somewhat to a much younger player that only played briefly here.

Jerry Garcia, a 15-year-old sophomore-to-be from Rockdale put in a brief but show-stealing clinic on second base play and he did it with only his right hand. That is because he only has a right arm.

Flawlessly, and with the footwork to make a top professional soccer player green with envy, Garcia turned double plays and made crisp, accurate throws working the ball from his glove onto the ground and into his hand for the throw all in one sweeping motion during the Atlanta Braves-Blinn (Junior) College tryout camp.

While unable to sign a professional contract until after high school graduation, such youngsters his age can attend a camp to let themselves be known to scouts in the meantime. Stealing the show, however, when playing in a crowd of 240 high school varsity experienced and college players as well as at least one draft pick is a little much to expect of most any 15-year old that has only played as high was the junior varsity level.

"That put chills up and down my spine just to watch it. I almost want to cry he does it so well," said a beaming Camp Director John 'Red' Murff as Garcia dazzled the crowd of several hundred players, Braves scouts, college coaches and parents with his natural catlike catches and throws.

Murff, 68, includes such notables as Texas Rangers pitcher Nolan Ryan among his list of finds since first working as a scout nearly 30 years ago.

Scouts normally find a serious work ethic among many like Ryan who succeed, but Garcia evidently has not yet found the need for such mental intensities. He is, after all, still just a boy and has yet to play varsity baseball. He was a freshman on a Tiger junior varsity that "didn't do too good."

His one-motion fielding work looked like it had been practiced constantly in the back yard but that is not case at the Garcia home.

"Whenever," he said of practice time dedicated to his art. "Whenever I have games. I play Senior (Little) League.

"I lost the arm when I was four. My dad has been hitting balls to me and I've been playing since I was one.

"I have one older brother, Larry. He's 20. He tried out over here last year. He didn't make it for short stop."

Murff invited Garcia to attend the camp through his high school coach and was mentioned in pep talks to the older tryout camp players as was Splendora's female second baseman Shay Sloan and Texas School for the Deaf outfielder Jason Plummer who both also tried out with certain degrees of proficiency.

"I really thought he was something," said Bill Davis, a camp assistant whose son Ron pitched his college baseball at Blinn before embarking on a pro career that has now taken him to Japan after stops in New York, Chicago and San Francisco. "Any kid that can play that position with these fully-membered kids has got to have lots of guts.

"He wasn't no slouch on top of that, but at second base you've got to turn more double plays. This kid's got to go to second base and back to first most of the time. Second base is probably the hardest position in baseball to play.

"Somebody'll give him a scholarship to play college ball someday."

DUNCANVILLE

DeLeon paced Dulles at the plate with three hits. Shawn Mitchell also had three hits for Southwest.

Steve Rochard went the distance for Dulles and improves to 11-0 on the year, striking out 10 and allowing seven hits.

Carroll, now 29-4 on the year, built up a 5-0 lead through five innings on 11 hits against a Duncanville pitching staff that had not allowed a run in the past 22 innings.

Duncanville, 28-6 and a two-time champion in 1975-76, cut the lead to one with a four-run surge in the bottom of the seventh on the strength of five straight hits including back-to-back doubles.

Trey Walters' ground-rule double in the bottom of the eighth lifted Paris past Leander 5-4 in the other 4A semifinal, also played in eight innings

Sinton will have a chance to defend its Class 3A title when they meet San Augustine in the final.

Sinton, 24-5, trimmed Pleasant Grove 7-5, while San Augustine, 22-5, dumped Llano 9-6 in the semifinals.

The Pirates scored all seven of their runs in the fourth inning.

Jaime Sepeda, an all-tournament selection last year, struck out 12 batters in improving to 15-1 for the season.

Michael Canton fanned 10 in San Augustine's win.

Shelbyville, 27-1 and winners of 21 in a row, will also have a chance to repeat in Class 2A after defeating Hamilton 7-2.

The Dragons will take on China Spring, 21-4, which defeated Yorktown 5-4.

Joe Daw turned in the top individual performance of the day in Shelbyville's win.

Daw mowed down 17 Hamilton batters to establish a new Class 2A strikeout mark.

The previous record was held by current Texas pitcher Todd Hotz, who struck out 14 in two separate games for Riviera in 1986.

Daw also clubbed a solo homer.

In Class A, Maud will have a chance to avenge a loss in last year's finals when they face Pettus.

Maud, winner of 27 straight, ripped three-time state champion Colmesneil 10-3, while Pettus blanked Petrolia 7-0.

Gary Lee punched out two hits and three runs batted in to lead Maud, 29-1, as Joey Missildine went the distance for the win.

Swain Barker was 3-for-3 for Colmsneil, 19-5.

Pettus used eight Petrolia errors and managed only two hits in its win. James Graham went all the way for the win.

At one point in the season, the 10-8 Eagles were 1-7. Petrolia ends the year at 21-5.

CWS

Bryant admitted that reading in the newspaper about Bertman's prediction of a Tiger victory was a motivating factor.

"We tend to take those kind of things to heart what people say, like with Miami's (Alex) Fernandez talking. Then before this game we heard a lot about them being the best team on offense. But they still had to go out and play us so it can get you in trouble when you say things before a game."

"So zip your lips until noon Saturday," Gustafson said to his players with a chuckle.

"Yes, they were motivated," Bertman said of Texas. "They really didn't hit the ball hard in the first inning, but they did after that. Butcher did a real good job with the bat, hit some good pitches. Those things will happen in a college baseball game."

The matchup of McDonald, 14-4 with the loss, and Texas starter Kirk Dressendorfer, 18-2 with the win, drew a session record crowd of 16,072. The fans saw McDonald set a record not expected of the pitcher named College Player of the Year by Baseball America last week. The loss was McDonald's fourth career CWS loss. No other pitcher had lost more than three at the NCAA Division I championship.

SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Be happy with what you receive from an estate or foundation. Events that take place in the fall will lead you to find out who you really are and what you really want. Friends may use political affiliations to try and pressure you. Resist! You get good vibes from someone you are attracted to at work. Let this person make the first move.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: novelist Saul Bellow, superstar Judy Garland, actress Hattie McDaniel, Japanese acting star Sessue Hayakawa, Broadway musicman Frederick Loewe, the Duke of Edinburgh Prince Philip (Mountbatten), attorney F. Lee Bailey, former Virginia Senator Harry F. Byrd Sr., circus great Clyde Beatty, quarterback-turned-sportscaster Dan Fouts, playwright Terence Rattigan, author-illustrator Maurice Sendak.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Those who represent you now may not be able to deliver everything they promise. That long-sought pot of gold may be smaller than anticipated. Do your own negotiating.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Promote your innovative ideas to prevent them from perishing on the vine. Others may be busy with their own concerns. You may feel self-conscious about spending money this evening. Follow your instincts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Domestic matters move to the front burner today. You find it easier to reach a decision. Shortcuts will not work when it comes to solving a money dilemma. Some sacrifice is unavoidable.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A canceled trip could be on again. You will be able to visit someone you have wanted to see for a long time. Remain aloof in the face of jealousy. Avoid scenes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): What you learn today will guide you throughout your life. Happy moments with loved ones enhance your relationships. Your career is about to receive a welcome boost. Go over your wardrobe.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A lifelong friend may help you settle a matter that has divided the family. Use your newfound wealth or power to get what you really want. Make a dream come true.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may find yourself fantasizing when you should be paying attention to details. Put first things first! The travel bug bites you; take along mate or a good friend. Shared adventures create great memories.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Someone or something follows you everywhere today. A breakthrough is possible in your personal life. A desire for solitude may give way to a yen for togetherness. Be honest about your emotions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Financial success moves within reach. Better health can be yours if you stick to a diet and exercise regimen. Make that phone call you have been postponing. A reconciliation is possible.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): Your high principles and idealism are very attractive to a newcomer. An exciting invitation or job offer is featured. Financial worries diminish. You know who your true friends are. Repay favors.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Good luck will flow like the tides of the ocean. Your practical approach to love works in your favor. Travel will give you time to develop a new plan for your life.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your ambition helps take you over the top. Discuss the financial conditions that affect a close relationship. Self-confidence is very attractive to the right people. Believe in yourself. Invest in your future.

Opening lead: Ace of ♣

Some 30 years ago the noted British author, Terence Reese, wrote about a novel method of finding out about the lie of the cards. By locating a specific card in one hand, you can often place another key card. He named this phenomenon "discovery" plays. To show what we mean, consider this hand from a recent team match.

East-West were using weak two-bids. Thus, East's two-spade opening showed a hand worth less than an opening bid and containing a good six-card spade suit. The rest of the auction was natural, and South ended up declaring a fair club slam.

West was reasonably sure dummy was going to be short in hearts, so he led ace and another trump to cut down on the table's ruffing power. Since he could now ruff only two hearts and a 3-3 heart break was against the odds, declarer felt he needed a successful heart finesse if he was going to make his contract. To help him to decide whether to take a normal finesse against East or a ruffing finesse through West, declarer thought it would be good idea to locate the ace of diamonds. He won the second trump in dummy and led the king of diamonds. East covered with the ace, declarer ruffed and the hand was now an open book.

Since East probably held the queen and jack of spades and had now shown up with the ace of diamonds, he was unlikely to have the king of hearts as well. So declarer drew the last trump, cashed the ace of hearts and ran the queen of hearts through West. Whether or not West covered, the slam was home.

Fifth-graders guaranteed college education if they finish high school

ATLANTA (AP) — Fifty-seven inner-city children got a surprising elementary school graduation gift: a guarantee of college if they finish high school.

Atlanta businessman John H. McDonald made the pledge at the Minnie Howell Elementary School graduation Thursday night.

In addition to the money involved, the children will get guidance both in and out of the classroom, said Llewellyn Haden Jr., founder of the Atlanta chapter of the I Have A Dream program.

"We want them to have a shot at life like others who have been more fortunate," McDonald said.

He would not disclose how much money was involved in the program, but Haden said money is not the problem in sending the youngsters to college.

Thousands of dollars in national scholarships for inner-city, black youths go unused each year, Haden said, and some of that money can be used to supplement McDonald's sponsorship.

What really counts is opening the horizons for children whose surroundings of poverty and crime often discourage success, Haden said.

"We get them involved culturally and involve them with different people so they know what there is to dream about — because they can't dream about something if they don't know it exists," Haden said.

NOBLESVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Ryan White has a pretty good idea who anonymously gave him a shiny new red Mustang this week — pop star Michael Jackson.

White, a 17-year-old AIDS victim, picked up his new car on Wednesday and was told it was a gift from a mysterious benefactor. But the evidence points to Jackson.

"When you deal with Michael, there are four or five people you have to go through before you get to Michael," said White's mother, Jeanne. "It was hard not to know when they called and asked, 'Now what was the car that Ryan told Michael he liked?'"

Ryan White

White drew national attention several years ago when school officials tried to keep him out of junior high because he has AIDS, contracted from tainted blood he received in a treatment for hemophilia. The family later moved from Kokomo to Cicero, and he now is a junior in Hamilton Heights High School.

"Michael has called Ryan some 15 times since their friendship began, and they talk for about 45 minutes," Mrs. White said. "Most of the time they talk about cars, something Ryan is very interested in."

She said Ryan wants to take his car to an upcoming car show.

"He wants to customize it, which I think is a good idea; it will keep him busy," Mrs. White said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Steven Spielberg's production company has pledged a conditional $100,000 to help the financially ailing Los Angeles Theatre Center.

The grant from Spielberg's Amblin Entertainment Co. is unusual in that 95 percent of the theater's donations last year came from lawyers, doctors and accountants, according to screenwriter Frank Pierson, a member of the theater's board of directors.

Amblin Entertainment will donate the money if six other Hollywood companies match the offer, Pierson said. The grants will go into a new endowment fund.

Amblin's gift was initiated when Pierson chatted with Harrison Ford, star of Spielberg's "Indiana Jones" movies, at a recent dinner party.

"We were talking about the plight of non-profit theater across the country," said Pierson, who wrote the screenplay for Ford's next movie, "Presumed Innocent." Ford approached Spielberg and Amblin offered the $100,000.

The Los Angeles Theatre Center, opened in 1985, has a deficit of $1.04 million.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Conductor Riccardo Muti's baton will be waving over the Philadelphia Orchestra for some time — his contract as music director has been extended indefinitely.

Under the terms of the new agreement, which the Philadelphia Orchestra Association announced Tuesday, Muti's contract initially will be extended through the 1991-92 season. It will be renewed automatically each year by mutual agreement.

Muti will continue to conduct at least one third of the subscription concerts at the Academy of Music, special concerts in Philadelphia and New York and tours both in the United States and abroad.

Muti, a native of Naples, Italy, became music director in Philadelphia in 1980. He became music director of La Scala opera house in Milan, Italy, in 1986.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Screenwriter Tom Schulman, who wrote the script for the "Dead Poets Society" starring Robin Williams, says the motion picture is not drawn from his own experiences as a private school student.

Schulman attended Nashville's Montgomery Bell Academy and then Vanderbilt University here.

The movie, which opens today across the country, is about a fictitious boys' prep school in Vermont, called Welton Academy. The harmony of the strait-laced, conformist school is disturbed when Williams arrives to teach English.

"I have a very positive memory of my years at MBA," he added.

NORTH PLATTE, Neb. (AP) — Former Miss America Kaye Lani Rae Rafko, who spent most of a day hopping airplanes to get here, said a welcoming crowd of about 100 people was "quite a surprise for a has-been."

Ms. Rafko, who caught three planes to get to Lee Bird Field, was given flowers upon her arrival on Wednesday. She was in North Platte to attend the Miss Nebraska pageant.

"It takes a while to get here. You're kind of tucked away," Ms. Rafko told Mayor Jim Kirkman at the airport. She added, however, "a crowd like this is quite a surprise for a has-been. But, as the saying goes, once a Miss America, always a Miss America."

Rafko

Kirkman led a delegation of civic leaders who met the 1988 Miss America. Her trip began with a flight from Toledo, Ohio, near her hometown of Monroe, Mich. She had a layover in Chicago before flying to Denver, where she caught her flight to North Platte.

SAYREVILLE, N.J. (AP) — Rock star Jon Bon Jovi's parents have started a scholarship named after their son to help aspiring artists attending his old high school.

John and Carol Bongiovi said Thursday the "Jon Bon Jovi Dare To Dream Scholarship" will be awarded to artistic students at Sayreville War Memorial High School. They would not disclose how much money was involved in the scholarship.

Decision expected soon on cooking oil, butter sales to Soviets

AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON (AP) — A decision may be announced soon by the Agriculture Department on whether to sell the Soviet Union some vegetable oil and butter at cut-rate prices.

The Bush administration has been under pressure to add soybean oil to the list of commodities eligible for the Export Enhancement Program, or EEP, so that Moscow can buy the oil at subsidized prices.

Corn oil and butter are also being sought for the EEP arrangement with the Soviets. Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter has the proposal under advisement, although there has been some resistance to expand the subsidy program.

A consumer advocate, Rodney E. Leonard, executive director of the Community Nutrition Institute, told Yeutter in a May 26 letter the soybean industry's proposal for subsidizing oil exports would be "patently unfair" for several reasons.

Soybeans are in short supply in the United States and a bumper harvest this fall will not change the situation. Food price inflation will remain "a constant threat to American consumers until more normal food reserves are in place," he said.

The global supply of soybean oil also is reported to be tighter than normal, Leonard said.

"Soybean processors argue that domestic soybean oil supplies are slightly at a surplus, a condition they say could be eliminated by the Soviet sale," he said. "However, domestic market conditions appear to be tight enough so that the U.S. would likely need to import 60,000 to 70,000 metric tons of food oil for every 100,000 tons of soybean oil sold to the Soviet Union."

Leonard contended that export subsidy programs for farm products "are of doubtful value, even during periods when domestic supplies are large."

But Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, and others in Congress contend that soybean oil should be made available to the Soviet Union under EEP, a program set up in 1985 to counter foreign subsidies.

Harkin said last month that the Soviets want to buy 200,000 to 500,000 tons of U.S. soybean oil, and urged President Bush to approve the sale under the subsidy program. He also asked that corn oil be included.

Of immediate concern, Harkin said, are Argentina's tax laws that allow its processors to undercut U.S. soybean oil prices on the world market by more than $160 per ton.

"The Soviet Union is a potential market for the equivalent of 1 billion bushels of soybeans a year," Harkin said. "We need to move vigorously to develop that market and secure a fair share of it for our soybean industry."

Harkin noted that current U.S. inventories of soybean oil are at record level of 1.76 million tons and that stocks of corn oil and other vegetable oils also are large.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department says there are more jobs waiting for the Class of 1989 at major agricultural colleges than there are graduates to fill them.

J. Patrick Jordan, administrator of the department's Cooperative States Research Service, said Wednesday a recent informal survey showed another decrease in the number of agricultural graduates. At the same time, more companies are recruiting on campuses.

The telephone survey was done by Purdue University, West Lafayette, Ind. Although the number of graduates is down, the survey found an increase in the number of freshmen enrolled in agricultural courses.

Allan D. Goecker, assistant dean of agriculture at Purdue, said the job market has been more competitive and that both employers and students are making earlier commitments.

Half of the 1,721 undergraduates in Purdue's school of agriculture are enrolled in three departments — agricultural economics, horticulture, and forestry and natural resources. The school expects to graduate 365 seniors this year, up from 355 in 1988, Goecker said.

Starting salaries for Purdue graduates range from $18,000 to $30,000 a year, with the average just over $20,000, he said.

Goecker is a member of a USDA committee that has forecast an annual shortage of 4,000 food and agricultural science graduates in the 1990s.

Other schools surveyed included: Texas Tech, Colorado State University, Mississippi State University, University of Florida, California State University, and Cornell.

Moisture uneven, reports say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Drenching rains continued to stall field work in Texas and other parts of the nation while additional rain is needed in some other areas where subsoil moisture is still low, the Agriculture Department said Tuesday.

Strong thunderstorms over the weekend brought heavy rains and flooding to Oklahoma, Northeast Texas and northwest Louisiana, where three to five inches of rain were reported.

"Heavy rain also fell on the western Great Plains," the department's 1989 Drought Task Force said in its weekly review. "Scattered showers over the western Corn Belt brought rainfall of up to one inch in eastern Nebraska and eastern Kansas."

Persistent rain was reported in the eastern Corn Belt, with amounts of two to four inches in Indiana and Ohio.

Winter wheat, which suffered greatly from drought in many areas since it was planted last fall, was reported in "mostly fair to poor" condition. In Kansas, where the crop was hit hard by the dry weather, winter wheat was turning color and beginning to ripen.

In Texas, the harvest was 8 percent completed, about 15 percentage points behind normal for this time of the season.

"Rain slowed Oklahoma's (wheat) harvest and reduced the quality of the unharvested crop," the report said. "In Nebraska, Russian wheat aphids and wheat streak mosaic were continuing problems in the panhandle."

The National Weather Service's 30-day outlook for June calls for near-normal to above-normal rain throughout the nation except for below-normal amounts in southern California, the report said.

In another report, the government's Joint Agricultural Weather Facility operated by the Agriculture and Commerce departments said that corn planting nationally was about 93 percent completed by June 4, four percentage points behind normal for the date.

Planting continued to lag in Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania but was complete or nearly complete in the other major corn states.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oats and oat products can be sold to Canada without import licenses because the level of U.S. government subsidies for oats is less than Canada's, the two countries have announced.

The governments announced Monday that the U.S. support level for oats is 8.74 percent, while in Canada it is 11.09 percent.

Under the free trade agreement signed between the two countries last year, Canada agreed to remove import licensing requirements if U.S. support levels are equal to or less than those of Canada.

Supports are government subsidies that put a floor under prices. The U.S. mechanism for doing this is a price-support loan program under which farmers use crops as collateral and are free to forfeit and keep the money if that nets them a greater return than selling on the market.

Farm prices edging up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Overall prices on farm products edged upward last month, with record demand for broilers, potatoes and tomatoes, according to the Department of Agriculture.

Prices on raw products rose 2.7 percent from April to May and averaged 13 percent more than a year ago, the Agriculture Department said Wednesday.

Increases in the prices of hogs, oranges, potatoes, broilers and tomatoes were partially offset by lower prices for sweet corn, eggs, lettuce and soybeans, said the department's Agricultural Statistics Board in a preliminary report.

But broiler, potato and tomato prices were at record levels. Hogs also increased sharply from April.

Demand for oranges was so strong that the average price went higher than it has been since November 1987.

Cattle prices continued close to April levels. Wheat and corn prices were up slightly while soybeans were down from a month earlier.

Based on the preliminary figures, the price index for livestock and livestock products was up 2.6 percent from April to May, and 4.6 percent above a year ago at this time.

Compared with April, higher prices for hogs and broilers more than offset lower prices for eggs and milk.

Crop prices, overall, rose 3.6 percent from a month earlier and 24 percent above a year earlier.

The overall index of prices paid to farmers in May averaged 151 percent of a 1977 base used for comparison.

The report said:

- Cattle averaged $70.10 per 100 pounds of live weight nationally, steady with April. The average is for all types of cattle sold as beef.
- Hogs averaged $42.70 per 100 pounds, compared with $36.30 in April and $46.30 a year earlier.
- Corn, at $2.58 a bushel, up from $2.56 in April and $1.98 in May 1988.
- Wheat prices at the farm, according to preliminary figures, averaged $4.07 per bushel, compared with $4.03 in April and $2.97 a year earlier.
- Rice averaged $6.53 per 100 pounds, down from $6.66 in April and $7.97 a year earlier.
- Soybeans were $7.15 per bushel, compared with $7.29 in April and $6.98 a year earlier.
- Upland cotton was reported at 57.7 cents per pound, compared to 59 in April and 58.3 cents a pound in May 1988.
- Eggs were 54.3 cents per dozen, compared with 58.1 cents in April and 33 cents a year earlier.
- Milk was $12.20 per 100 pounds, compared with $12.30 in April and $11.40 a year earlier.
- Broilers were 45.2 cents per pound, live weight, compared with 39 cents in April and 33.7 cents a year ago.

Congress, White House plan to continue trade with China

WASHINGTON (AP) — Both Congress and the White House are expressing outrage at the violence in China, but U.S.-China farm trade appears to be continuing as usual.

"I don't believe in using food as a weapon," Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, said. "With all that the Chinese people are suffering, we should not deprive them of food as well.

"However, the Chinese government must not use our food as a weapon against its own people. I know the world community would object to any attempt of the Chinese government to restrict the flow of food to its people."

The Agriculture Department announced this week that China has bought another 1.8 metric tons of soft red winter wheat from U.S. farmers, according to exporters. That makes 2.65 million metric tons of the commodity bought for delivery in the marketing year that began June 1.

A metric ton is equal to about 2,205 pounds and 36.7 bushels of wheat or 39.4 bushels of corn.

Most of the Chinese purchases were in the last two weeks, according to the Agriculture Department.

During the marketing year that ended May 31, exporters sold 8.3 million metric tons of U.S. grain to China.

China also buys poultry to breed, livestock semen, hogs and seed to plant for animal feed, according to the Agriculture Department's foreign agricultural service.

By far, the largest commodity is grain, said a spokeswoman in the department. China gets other products from Canada, Australia, New Zealand and Europe, she said.

Since former President Carter's grain embargo against the Soviet Union for the December 1979 invasion of Afghanistan, the federal government has opposed using agricultural products as foreign policy weapons against countries.

But that doesn't mean it won't refuse to extend the Export Enhancement Program to China.

The first 300,000 metric tons of wheat purchased this year by China were under that discount program, but all the rest has been bought at market prices.

"We must be absolutely clear that China's brutality against its own people is unacceptable," said Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., ranking Republican on the agriculture committee.

"At the same time, it's important that U.S. actions be moderate and targeted against the government rather than the people of China."

President Bush said Monday that weapons sales would be suspended and "other aspects of bilateral relationship" would be reviewed.

"On the commercial side, I don't want to hurt the Chinese people," Bush said during a news conference. "I happen to believe that commercial contacts have led, in essence, to this quest for more freedom."

Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, said the United States should be committed never to use food embargoes as a weapon because they "are ineffective and hurt both sides."

"Food embargoes are never the answer, and particularly in this case it could worsen the pain and suffering of the Chinese people," he said.

Study says forests would help economy

AUSTIN (AP) — The economy and the environment could benefit if marginal East Texas farmland was used for growing trees, according to a study done for the Texas Department of Agriculture.

"We know, and the forest industry knows, and the farmers and ranchers in East Texas know, a lot of land in East Texas could be better used if it were planted in trees," said Gary Keith, acting director of the department's office of natural resources.

Converting farms to forests has several advantages, Keith said.

"One, it can be economical for the farmers to do. Two, the forestry industry in East Texas is very concerned about the future availability of timber. And three is the whole global warming issue that will look to tree-planting across the globe as one of the partial solutions," he said.

If processed in new manufacturing facilities, a 12 percent increase in Texas timber harvests could have a statewide economic impact of $187 million and create 1,300 new jobs, according to the report prepared by forester Bill Carroll and Keith.

There are nearly 1 million acres of marginal farmlands in Texas that could be more fully utilized if they were converted to productive timberland, says the report, citing the U.S. Forest Service.

Knowing depth of roots, texture of soil helps water trees effectively

To adequately water or fertilize your large shade trees, it is important to know the depth of the root system is and how deep and what texture the soil is in the root zone of the tree.

Kiker

There are three basic soil textures you need to be aware of: heavy, medium and light. Heavy soils are those that are classified as clay to clay foams. Medium soils are loamy clays, loams and sandy loams. Light soils are sandy to sandy loams. The medium texture is the best.

Soil depth can be classified as deep, moderately deep or shallow. The depth of the soil is determined as the part of the soil profile which is suitable for root development in the presence of oxygen and water. Soil depth is measured to the first barrier to root growth, such as rock, hard caliche, water tables or impervious clay layers.

Deep soils are those that are at least 7 feet deep. Moderately deep are those soils 3 to 5 feet deep and anything under 3 feet should be considered shallow for shade trees.

The soil acts as a reservoir for water and nutrients. Heavy soils hold the most and light soils hold the least. The deeper the soils the more water and nutrients it will store for the trees. There are exceptions such as the case of very deep, course sands which allow water and nutrients to leach very readily.

The tree roots are located in the upper 12 to 24 inches of the soil profile and in the outer ⅓ of the "drip line" and beyond. The "drip line" is the outer reaches of the side branches. Tap rooted trees go deeper, but the tap root does not absorb a large amount of water. The small fibrous roots pick up most of the water for the tree.

With this information in mind, you can use the following schedule to water your trees:

Start the season by wetting the soil in the outer ½ to ⅓ of the drip line to 5 feet or to the bottom of the top soil, whichever is shallower. This will have your reservoir filled to capacity.

Heavy soils are among those that are deeper than 3 feet and which need to be refilled about every three weeks. If they are shallower, refill closer to two weeks. Fertilize with ⅓ pound of nitrogen per inch of trunk diameter before the second irrigation.

Medium soils will run out of water in the upper 12 to 15 inches in two weeks and need to be refilled. If they are shallower than 3 feet, they need to be watered every 10 days. Fertilize same as the heavy soils.

Light soils will need to be watered every week. Fill the soil to 5 feet at every watering. Fertilize at least twice, once at second irrigation in April and once in June.

When using any pesticide, it is critical that you read the label and follow instructions.

What's behind OPEC quotas?

New York Times News Service

What considerations go into setting OPEC production quotas? Algeria's energy minister, Sadek Boussena said today the organization's experts use up to 23 parameters in setting a country's quota. Among them are the country's reserves, its ability to produce and export its oil, the size of its population and gross national product, its per capita income and its historic share of production.

"September will be a very tough meeting because the number of countries seeking a special increase in quotas, rather than a simple percentage distribution of any general increase, will be big," said Nordine Ait-Laoussine, an Algerian oil consultant and former OPEC official.

Sheikh Khalifa of Kuwait said, "It is physically impossible for us to produce less than 1.35 million barrels a day," because of Kuwait's international network of refining, production and customers, and the nation's huge unused capacity to produce oil.

Other OPEC members, particularly Iran and the Arab oil producers of the Persian Gulf, also have huge reserves and increasing capacities to pump the oil and are eager to widen their market share.

Last year, Saudi Arabia bought into Texaco's substantial network of refining and gasoline stations in the United States, creating for itself a foreign distribution network that needs some 600,000 barrels of crude oil a day.

Venezuela and Libya have also bought refineries abroad, and all OPEC countries have built refineries at home.

No owner wants these refineries to sit idle, and they require great amounts of oil to keep running.

In the face of this demand by members for greater output, OPEC has not been able to make its quotas stick. Those who overproduce and stand their ground tend to prevail.

Iraq did so for two years, pushing its output up to 3 million barrels a day.

OPEC relented last November and legitimized its cheating by equating its share with that of Iran, nearly doubling its quota, and revising others' percentages downward as a result.

Similarly, the United Arab Emirates has served notice that it will produce what it considers its legitimate share instead of the OPEC quota of 1.04 million barrels a day.

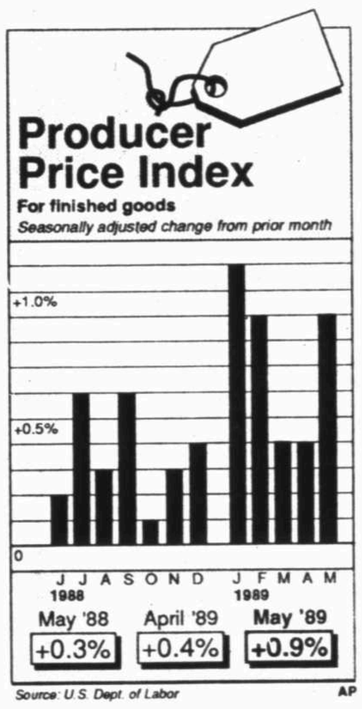
Wholesale prices up in May



WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale inflation came roaring back in May after a two-month lull, rising a steep 0.9 percent, the government said today.

The rise in the Labor Department's Producer Price Index primarily reflected higher prices for cars, fresh vegetables and gasoline.

For the first five months of the year, wholesale inflation for goods one stop short of the retail level was running at a 9.4 percent annual rate, more than double the 4 percent rise in 1988 and quadruple the 2.2 percent 1987 gain.

The index's performance troubled economists earlier this year, when it soared 1.1 percent in January and 0.9 percent in February. But moderate rises of 0.4 percent in both March and April were seen as a sign that inflation had retreated at least a bit.

In advance of today's report, many economists were predicting a moderate-to-brisk 0.5 percent gain. The sharply higher actual number could disturb financial markets, which have been rallying in recent weeks on evidence that the overheated economy is cooling enough to produce lesser price pressures.

Energy prices in May rose 3.3 percent, a steep increase but less than half April's 30-month record of 7.2 percent. For the past six months, energy prices have surged 43.3 percent.

In May, the increase was propelled by a 5.2 percent jump in gasoline prices, which followed a 13.4 percent jump in April. Natural gas prices rose 3.4 percent, while heating oil costs declined 7.7 percent.

Food prices, which had posted a rare 0.6 percent decline in April, rebounded 0.9 percent in May. The price of vegetables skyrocketed 26.4 percent as celery and tomato prices doubled and cabbage prices rose by one-third.

There were also significant increases for eggs, rice, pasta and chicken. Prices for beef, pork and fish declined.

For the past six months, food prices have risen at an annual rate of 7.3 percent. But analysts expect that trend to moderate, barring a repeat of last year's drought.

The price of goods excluding the volatile food and energy sectors, often taken by analysts as a truer reflection of underlying inflationary pressures, rose 0.5 percent last month following an unusual 0.1 percent decline in April.

The increase in May was largely driven by a 1.8 percent rebound in auto prices following a 2.8 percent decline a month earlier.

The April drop was produced by manufacturers' incentives to bolster sagging sales, while a Labor Department analyst said the rebound was driven by price increases for some models and for options.

The overall May increase left the Producer Price Index for finished goods at 114.2, meaning that a hypothetical selection of goods costing $100 in 1982 would have cost $114.20 last month, up from $113 in April.

Measures of inflation earlier in the production process were mixed, with the price of intermediate goods rising only 0.1 percent and the price of crude goods jumping 0.9 percent. An example of the three processing stages — finished, intermediate and crude — would be wholesale bread, flour and wheat.

Uninsured depositors lose in bank closings

Associated Press

Liberal lending practices and mismanagement are responsible for the closings of three more Texas banks, federal regulators say.

The three banks closed Thursday brings to 61 the number of failed institutions in Texas this year.

Insured deposits in two of the three banks shut down Thursday were transferred to new banks, but in one case — Fulshear State Bank — the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. paid out about $9.6 million to 1,355 insured depositors who must now find a new bank.

Fulshear was only the second Texas bank to be shut down this year without being immediately resold to a new institution, FDIC spokesman Alan Whitney said.

At Fulshear, the FDIC said about $149,000 was spread across 17 accounts which exceeded the $100,000 insurance limit. The FDIC said holders of those accounts, would join with non-depositor creditors and share proportionally with the FDIC in any proceeds realized from liquidation of the bank's assets.

In a departure from recent practice, only insured deposits were guaranteed at the three banks, leaving holders of about $218,000 to vie with the government and other creditors to recoup their losses from the liquidation of the banks.

In most previous cases, all deposits, even money above the $100,000 insurance limit, were transferred to acquiring banks.

The Fulshear bank had deposits of $9.8 million against assets of only $9.7 million.

9 MILLION SQUARE FEET

Megamall to be world's largest

New York Times News Service

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. — The world may not need another mall but it is getting one anyhow.

Not an ordinary shopping center, but one that will disputably be the biggest in the world — 10 times the size of the malls most people usually cart their shopping bags through.

Its official name will be the Mall of America, but it is already being called simply the Megamall.

It will rise on 78 acres in this quiet suburb of Minneapolis and, when completed in the late-1990's, is expected to offer shopping addicts 9.5 million square feet of Utopia.

That would be nearly twice the size of the world's current titleholder, the West Edmonton Mall in Alberta, Canada, and three times the size of the largest mall in the U.S., the Delamo Fashion Center in Torrance, Calif.

Construction will begin next week with fanfare befitting a megamall.

At the ground-breaking next Wednesday, a squadron of F-14 fighter planes will soar overhead and a band will play the "1812 Overture" as local and state dignitaries turn the first mound of dirt.

The first phase of the mall will emerge in 1992, big enough to hold 78 football fields, according to Melvin Simon & Associates, the leading developer of malls in the U.S. as well as a partner in the Bloomington project with the Triple Five Corp. of Edmonton, builders of the West Edmonton Mall.

Apple software in danger of pirates

New York Times News Service

A band of self-styled idealists is trying to give away Apple Computer Inc.'s crown jewels — secret software that could be used to copy the Macintosh computer.

The Cupertino, Calif.-based company said Thursday that a number of people have received floppy disks in the mail containing a portion of the software "source code" for the Macintosh, purportedly from a group calling itself "the nuPrometheus League (Software Artists for Information Dissemination)."

"Our objective at Apple is to distribute everything that prevents other manufacturers from creating legal copies of the Macintosh," a letter accompanying the disks states.

That wording, as well as the fact that source code is guarded very tightly, suggests that the software leak started with Apple employees.

The company, which learned of the letters Tuesday, did not rule that out.

"We are aggressively investigating," said Carlene LeVasseur, an Apple spokeswoman.

"This is stolen property, and once an individual or individuals responsible are found, they will be prosecuted."

The rebel group's name is derived from the Greek god who stole fire and gave it to the human race.

Source code is the original instructions for software, written in a programming language that humans can read that is later converted to a form a machine can understand.

Access to source code, which frequently includes comments or drawings that interpret key functions, could theoretically speed the process of making a Mac clone, industry participants said.

But any overt use of it would be a crime that is easily spotted, they said.

"I'm sure this is going to scare Apple," said Andy Hertsfeld, an independent programmer who helped develop the Macintosh software. "But it's just kind of a childish thing."

Apple has aggressively used lawsuits to protect the operating software that gives the Macintosh its exclusive ease-of-use.

That strategy has been controversial among many Macintosh devotees, some of whom believe that Apple's exclusive ownership allows it to charge outrageously high prices.

The nuPrometheus League also cites Apple management's litigiousness.

"As an organization, the nuPrometheus League has no ambition beyond seeing the genius of a few Apple employees benefit the entire world, not just dissipated by Apple Corporate through litigation and ill-will," the letter states.

Some observers said the incident could reflect internal dissension at a company once known for its counter-cultural ethos.

"I would treat this as another sign that the age of Camelot has ended at Apple," said Paul Saffo, an analyst at the Menlo Park-based Institute for the Future.

Oil prices continue upward

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices continue strengthening.

At midmorning on the New York Mercantile Exchange, July contracts for West Texas Intermediate gained 8 cents to stand at $20.08. The contract climbed 33 cents to close at $20 Thursday, recovering some of the 79 cent plunge it suffered Wednesday.

Home heating oil futures finished lower, depressed by sluggish demand typical for this time of year.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the contract for July delivery of unleaded gasoline rose 0.66 cent to 64 cents a gallon, after Wednesday's loss of 1.60 cents.

But the selling continued in the heating oil pits, although not as aggressively as on Wednesday. July-delivery No.2 heating oil fell by 0.05 cent to 48.66 a gallon, adding a minor amount to Wednesday's loss of 2.29 cents.

Jerry Samuels, an energy broker at Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc., attributed the buying of gasoline futures to renewed demand, particularly for New York harbor delivery gasoline, at the beginning of the peak summer driving season.

"As the value of gas moves up, so will crude," said Samuels. "Heating oil got left in the dust, which is understandable from a seasonal perspective."

Crude also got a boost from buying in reaction to the tumble prices took Wednesday when the outcome of the OPEC meeting disappointed the markets.

Nervous market boosts dollar

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar gained against European currencies today in a nervous market.

Gold was lower in cautious trading.

Traders in Milan, Italy, said the dollar was caught between contrary trends. Easing interest rates in the United States tended to depress the currency, but turmoil in China encouraged the traditional investor preference for the dollar as a safe haven.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.45 yen to a closing 143.50 yen, despite central bank intervention in support of the yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 144.63.

—1.9860 Deutsche marks, up from 1.9770
—1.7250 Swiss francs, up from 1.7100
—6.7380 French francs, up from 6.7040
—2.2270 Dutch guilders, up from 2.2220
—1,447.00 Italian lire, up from 1,439.50
—1.1950 Canadian dollars, down from 1.1967.

In London, the dollar gained against the pound. It cost $1.5634 to buy a pound this morning, compared with $1.5735 late Thursday.

Gold opened in London at $372.50 per ounce, down from $373.25 late Thursday. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $371.25.

Silver was quoted in London at $5.41 a troy ounce, from Thursday's $5.44 dollars.

Stock market rally continues

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market churned ahead Thursday, squeezing a little more mileage out of its recent rally fueled by takeover news and rumors and declining interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 4.59 to 2,516.91, bringing its gain over the past three sessions to 36.21 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 5 t 4 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 842 up, 652 down and 510 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 212.31 million shares, against 213.71 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 249.77 million shares.

The Dow finished the day just short of last Friday's post-crash high of 2,517.83 and still more than 200 points below its 1987 peak.

However, the index at the American Stock Exchange reached a record high, topping its best levels recorded in the summer of '87.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Business investment to see strong increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. businesses plan a strong 6.5 percent increase in plant and equipment spending this year, the government said, and economists said the investments would help economic expansion while tending to limit inflation.

Analysts said Thursday that much of the spending will involve equipment that would permit businesses to modernize their production capabilities, thereby reducing both costs and prices.

According to the Commerce Department survey, completed in May, business investment is now estimated at $451.43 billion for 1989, up from $423.69 billion in 1988.

Channel One prepares to go nationwide

NEW YORK (AP) — The advertiser-supported Channel One news service for teens will be offered to schools nationwide starting in March 1990 and will be packaged with two new educational networks, the architect of the service said.

Christopher Whittle, chairman of Whittle Communications, said Thursday his company expects to spend $200 million on startup costs involved in giving 8,000 or more schools the video equipment needed to receive the Channel One programming.

He intends to pay for it with $85 million to $100 million each year from advertisers who pay to pitch products on Channel One's daily news show.

Enthusiasm for Time stock fades

NEW YORK (AP) — Some of Wall Street's euphoria over Paramount Communications Inc.'s $10.7 billion bid for Time Inc. appeared to fade as a number of traders apparently had second thoughts about the offer or decided to cash in gains on Time stock.

Time's stock fell $2 a share to $168 Thursday in New York Stock Exchange composite trading, after soaring $44 on Wednesday following Paramount's $175-a-share buyout offer.

Meanwhile, Paramount stock surged $3.62½ to $58.37½, and stock in Warner Communications Inc. — whose planned merger with Time was thrown into question by the Paramount bid — rose $3 to $56.50.

Suitor says Prime Computer won't cooperate

BOSTON (AP) — A hostile suitor for Prime Computer Inc. said the computer maker showed no interest in a merger during a meeting, but Prime termed the charge "a gross misrepresentation."

Bennett S. LeBow, chairman of computer company MAI Basic Four Inc., Thursday accused Prime of refusing to provide confidential information it has given other prospective bidders during a meeting over their prolonged and contentious takeover battle.

Prime responded by saying it was "shocked at the gross misrepresentation" of the meeting by LeBow.

Eastern offers pilots new contract

MIAMI (AP) — Eastern Airlines presented a contract proposal to the striking pilots union that seeks temporary pay and vacation reductions similar to those implemented for non-union workers last week.

The proposal was made Thursday at the second official negotiating session since Eastern was hit by a massive strike March 4.

It includes a request that pilots take a 10 percent pay cut for six months and a 5 percent cut during the second six months. After a year, pay would be fully restored.

Enterra subsidiary finals DOTCO acquisition

HOUSTON (SWN) — Enterra Corp. has announced that its largest rental tool subsidiary, Oil Field Rental Service Co., has completed the acquisition of substantially all the fishing tool assets of Donham, Inc., better known in the industry as DOTCO, for approximately $9 million cash. After the acquisition Oil Field, headquartered in Houston, will operate from 35 field and sales locations in the United States and employ more than 400 persons.

Enterra is engaged primarily in the business of renting specialized equipment for drilling and servicing onshore and offshore oil and gas wells, both within the United States and in foreign countries, and the manufacture, sale and rental of specialized equipment used in the pipeline construction industry.

Pennzoil announces Indonesian discovery

HOUSTON (SWN) — Pennzoil Asiatic, Inc., a subsidiary of Pennzoil Exploration and Production Co., recently participated in an oil and gas discovery in Madura Strait, offshore Java, Indonesia.

Production tests of the Madura BD-2 well were conducted from 10,810 feet to 11,290 feet. Cumulative flows from three test intervals produced at rates of 11,493 barrels of oil and condensate per day and 65 million cubic feet of gas per day.

"Although test data is still being evaluated, the discovery offers significant potential for future drilling in this area and points to Pennzoil's expanding interest in Asia" said Jim Milliken, PEPCO's Vice President of Exploration and Manager of International Division.

Pennzoil Asiatic, Inc. initially entered into a Production Sharing Contract for exploration in the Madura Strait Block in 1982, and holds a 14.45 percent working interest in a Joint Venture of which Mobil Madura Strait Inc. has been project operator since 1987.

Enron to supply gas to city of Long Beach

HOUSTON (SWN) — Enron Gas Marketing, Inc., a subsidiary of Enron Corp., has contracted to supply the City of Long Beach, California, with 25 million cubic feet of natural gas per day for a term of one year. The contract represents 30 percent of the city's natural gas needs and is valued in excess of $23 million based on current prices and anticipated volumes.

The Long Beach Gas Department has designated the natural gas to be purchased under the agreement as long-term supply for its core customers. The Long Beach Gas Department serves more than 138,000 customers within the cities of Long Beach and Signal Hill.

OPEC

The Emirates' output has surged at times to 2 million barrels a day in the last year, and there were no suggestions Thursday that it would compromise, in contrast to Kuwait.

Indeed, the Emirates' oil minister, Sheik Mani Said al-Otaiba, mocked the OPEC accord he had signed by saying, "I'll sign anything."

But far more dangerous to the cartel is its linchpin, Saudi Arabia.

With reserves that are by far the world's largest — conservatively estimated at last count as 300 billion barrels — Saudi Arabia is becoming more assertive in its determination not to yield any of its right to 25 percent of OPEC's output.

It was Saudi Arabia's adamant refusal to grant any special increase to Kuwait — once its closest OPEC friend and ally — that nearly wrecked this meeting and forced Kuwait out of the OPEC accord.

Both Kuwait and Saudi Arabia have huge financial and oil reserves that would see them through a price war. The consequences could be more serious for other members.

Still, no one sees a quick settlement to OPEC's quota problems. As one minister put it: "In Paris we can stay for many days. It is a nice town."

BANK

The FDIC said it was forced to pay off depositors because no acceptable bid for the bank was received.

Texas Banking Commissioner Kenneth W. Littlefield said liberal and unsupervised lending practices were significant factors leading to the insolvency at Fulshear, located in Fort Bend County about 20 miles west of Houston.

These practices included poor loan documentation, insufficient loan-to-collateral-value relationships, out-of-territory lending and a general loan policy.

The bank had been under regulatory orders since 1986 and was placed under the direct supervision of the Banking Department last March, Littlefield said. Despite a change of management the bank was closed, he said.

The FDIC also said it received no acceptable bids for First American Bank in San Antonio or Lake Country National Bank in Burnet, although they received the insured deposits of closed banks.

First American had assets of $14 million and deposits of $13.9 million. The FDIC said $13.86 million in about 1,386 accounts was transferred to Jourdanton State Bank. Another $43,000 was deposited in 14 accounts above the $100,000 limit.

Jourdanton paid $1,000 to receive the insured deposits and will purchase assets of First American for $2.9 million.

As at Fulshear, First American was felled by loan-related losses attributed to liberal and hazardous lending practices, poor committee functions and inadequate supervision by the boards, Littlefield said.

Loans to former insiders were also found to be of poor quality, Littlefield said.

He said the bank, established in 1985, was identified as a problem institution at an earlier bank examination and had b

MALL

Bloomington officials are gleefully saying that there will be no way that shoppers can browse the rectangular mall in even 10 or 12 hours.

After all, shoppers will have to walk a quarter of a mile along one street to get from an anchor store in one corner of the complex to the next, passing nearly 800 specialty shops lining four indoor streets on three levels.

Bloomingdale's, Nordstrom's and Carson Pirie Scott, a Chicago-based department store, have signed on as three of the four anchors.

But stores are not the half of it. A roller coaster will roar through the middle of the mall and a creek will babble past flume rides and merry-go-rounds in the mall's own 300,000-square-foot, indoor amusement park.

And this, of course, does not include the 100 nightclubs and restaurants, the 18 theaters, the miniature golf course and the health club elsewhere in the mall.

"You won't go to this mall just to buy a shirt," said Rick Geshwiler, the Bloomington planning director of planning. "Coming here will be a two- or three-day event."

John E. Riordan, executive vice president of the International Council of Shopping Centers, a mall advocacy group, said: "I know of no other mall anywhere in the world that even comes close. This will be a colossus and an extraordinary event. A lot of people are saying, 'How can it be?'TH"

It can be because it has been a singular goal in Bloomington for years.

Bloomington used to be known as the place where the Minnesota Vikings and Twins played. But the teams left in the early 1980's when the Metrodome opened in Minneapolis a few miles to the north.

"From the day our stadium closed, we have tried to regain that national reputation," Geshwiler said.

The answer was something big, something flashy that would bring in people from all over the Middle West, maybe the whole country.

The city bought the stadium property, changed its zoning laws, scouted developers — all with visions of a bigger property tax base dancing in their heads.

The coming of the megamall follows three decades in which malls have transformed the way people shop and entertain themselves.

PRICES

Traders in financial markets were looking to today's report to provide an indication of how far and how fast the Federal Reserve Board will lower interest rates.

Earlier this week, the Fed nudged the key federal funds rate — the interest charged banks for overnight loans — down by one-quarter of a percentage point to near 8½ percent.

Stock and bond markets rallied in response, taking the change as evidence the central bank has decided to end its 15-month campaign of fighting inflation with higher interest rates.

"Clearly they (the Fed) didn't ease in order to tighten again. That's not what they want to do," economist Bruce Steinberg of Merrill Lynch said in advance of today's price report.

However, he added, "I think they're going to wait for more evidence. ... The economy is slowing and slowing rapidly, but it's not at all evident that inflation is slowing yet."

Still, analysts were optimistic that inflation reports would show improvement later this year. Economist Donald Ratajczak of Georgia State University said he believed gasoline prices have now more than reflected the the run-up in crude oil prices this spring.

"Gasoline now is priced in terms of $21 (a barrel) oil and oil prices are beginning to trade below those levels. ... Some moderation in the energy component is expected in the next few months," Ratajczak said in a recent newsletter.

His view is bolstered by the deal struck Wednesday by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, which set a higher target for crude oil production.

Other favorable developments include the strength of the dollar and U.S. business' bullish plans for modernizing and expanding.

The dollar is trading near 2½-year highs against the West German mark and 1½-year highs against the Japanese yen. That is bad news for the U.S. trade deficit but good news for inflation because a stronger dollar makes imports less expensive.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Selling mutual fund shares early can be costly

By BILL DOYLE

Q. In April 1977, when I began investing in a mutual fund holding municipal bonds, its price was $10.50 a share. That price held for about a year and then began declining but I kept putting money in monthly and reinvesting my dividends. By December 1981, the share price was $5.86. I then decided to follow the recommendations of some financial advisers and redeem my fund shares at a big loss.

Since then, the fund's share price has fluctuated and now is around $8.15. Now I wonder if I did the smart thing. The price of a utility stock in which I invest monthly followed an up and down path similar to the mutual fund. I am ahead with the utility stock and am happy with it.

Did I make a mistake by cashing in the mutual fund shares?

A. It's quite obvious that you did. When you were making monthly investments in that mutual fund you were using a method called dollar-cost-averaging. You bought fewer shares when the price was high and more shares when the price was low. With that method, you get a better than average price on your purchases.

Doyle

Unless the share price heads down and never comes back, you eventually come out a winner through dollar-cost-averaging. Perhaps more important, you don't get ulcers from trying to outguess the stock market.

Your experience with the utility stock demonstrates that dollar-cost-averaging works well. You would probably be ahead with the mutual fund, if you had continued to invest in it monthly. One thing is for sure. You wouldn't have suffered the big loss you experienced had you redeemed the fund's shares in 1981.

Q. I have a substantial investment in a mutual fund. How can I learn if this fund has a 12b-1 plan, with which you so obviously disagree?

A. By reading the fund's prospectus. Look under the heading "Total Fund Expenses." There, you will find "Distribution fees (12b-1)" and other operating expenses listed as a percentage of the fund's assets.

If the fund does not have a 12b-1 plan and, for your sake, let's hope that's the casethe word "None" should appear on the "Distribution fees (12b-1)" line.

Q. I can understand your preference for "no-load" mutual funds, on which there is no commission for purchasing shares, over "load" mutual funds, which take as much as 8.5 percent out of each investment.

But I am confused by your position on 12b-1 plans, which you seem to infer are bad. No mutual fund is completely free of all costs. Right?

A. Absolutely. Like all corporations, every mutual fund has operating expenses. Thanks to a somewhat belated Securities and Exchange Commission crackdown on disclosure effective a year ago, every fund must spell its expenses out in tabular form in its prospectus.

When a fund has a 12b-1 plan, the costs of that plan are in addition to other expenses. The annual operating expenses of a well-managed fund shouldn't exceed 1 percent of the fund's assets. At many funds, that "expense ratio" is well below 1 percent.

But expenses of a 12b-1 plan can be as high as 1.25 percent of fund assets. As a result, some funds with 12b-1 plans have total expenses ranging up to 2.25 percent of fund assets.

Keep in mind that fund assets belong to fund shareholders not to fund management. High expenses reduce the value of fund shares. 12b-1 charges do absolutely nothing to enhance share values.

The costs of a 12b-1 plan go for "distribution" such as payments (some people might call them "kickbacks") to brokerage firms, advertising and that nebulous term "public relations," which can cover a host of sins.

Dr. Jonas Salk, center, addresses the AIDS conference in Montreal Thursday. Salk, who developed the polio vaccine, reported that an experimental vaccine eraced AIDS infections in two chimpanzees.

Salk's AIDS-related research 'promising'

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Editor

MONTREAL — Dr. Jonas Salk's report that an experimental vaccine eliminated AIDS infection in two chimpanzees demonstrates treatment for the deadly disease is possible, but scientists say it is only one of several promising findings.

"These are the beginnings of progress we didn't have a year ago," said Dani Bolognesi of Duke University, a leading authority on AIDS vaccine research.

Speaking Thursday at the Fifth International Conference on AIDS, Bolognesi said researchers at the New England Primate Research Center had blocked an AIDS-like infection in monkeys.

And researchers at Repligen in Cambridge, Mass., working with Bolognesi and others, showed that antibodies to a tiny portion of the AIDS virus's outer surface could prevent infection in chimpanzees.

Much of the attention at the conference focused on Salk, developer of the first polio vaccine in the 1950's. Salk himself said, however, that his research did not constitute a breakthrough.

"We're on a path we think is worth pursuing," Salk said. "We haven't reached the end of it ... We're still in the exploratory phase."

Dr. Robert Gallo of the National Cancer Institute, one of the discoverers of the AIDS virus, said Salk's vaccine could probably never be given to people who had not already been infected by the AIDS virus.

The reason, he said, is that the vaccine is made of killed — but mostly intact — AIDS virus.

"Who would take it? Who's going to guarantee that every virus particle is dead?" Gallo said. He noted that the Salk polio vaccine, also made of killed virus, did in some cases give people polio when it was processed incorrectly.

He said it was unlikely the U.S. Food and Drug Administration would ever approve such a vaccine for use in uninfected people to prevent acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"There is no Salk AIDS vaccine here," Gallo said.

Bolognesi, who summed up vaccine research at the AIDS conference, did say, however, that Salk had made several intriguing and surprising findings.

In one study, Salk and Clarence Gibbs of the U.S. National Institutes of Health injected four chimpanzees with high doses of the AIDS virus, called the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV. Two had already been infected with AIDS and then vaccinated.

A third had been vaccinated but not previously infected with AIDS. A fourth was not vaccinated or infected.

The two that had been infected and vaccinated fought off the new infection. The vaccine worked.

"This in itself is a remarkable finding," Bolognesi said. Before that, the consensus had been "that once you are infected with HIV you are infected for life," he said.

"I'm encouraged by what appears to be a rather powerful effect on an existing infection."

The chimp that was vaccinated but not previously infected developed an infection when given a high dose of AIDS virus, but that infection is slowly subsiding, Salk said.

The fourth chimp, which was not vaccinated, developed an ongoing AIDS infection after being injected with HIV.

Salk also tested his vaccine on 19 patients with AIDS-related complex or ARC, a condition that often precedes AIDS. The results were less encouraging than those in the chimpanzees.

The 19 patients have remained stable for a year without taking AZT or other drugs, said one of Salk's collaborators, Dr. Alexandra Levine of the University of Southern California.

The studies showed the vaccine was not toxic and that it could boost the patients' immune reponse to the AIDS virus.

Injections of bits of the AIDS virus under the patients' skins showed that they had developed what's called "cellular immunity" to AIDS. That is, not only did they fight it with antibodies, they also fought it with certain white blood cells intended to defend against infections.

After the third boosters, more than half of the subjects demonstrated this cellular immunity, Levine said. But the vaccine did not eliminate infection in any of them, as it did in the chimpanzees.

Salk said he hoped the vaccine might protect against illness by limiting the infection, even if it doesn't prevent it.

Gallo said chimpanzees are naturally more resistant to the AIDS virus than are humans. Success with them therefore might not translate to humans.

Botha extends state of emergency into fourth year, citing opposition

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — President P.W. Botha today extended the national state of emergency for a fourth year in a bid to quell further black unrest and maintain a clampdown on opposition political groups.

Despite a sharp decline in political violence during the past year, Botha said black revolutionaries are still plotting to undermine his white-led government.

"By applying the emergency measures, the government succeeded in stopping the widespread violence by radicals," Botha said.

However, Botha said in his statement that revolutionaries are "continuing underground to mobilize and to exert their influence" and "unrest-related violence is still unacceptably high."

Anti-apartheid groups said Botha's decision would further polarize the deeply divided country.

"The apartheid policy is so acutely unacceptable to the majority of the people of South Africa that apartheid government can be maintained only by force," said Zach de Beer, the white leader of the anti-apartheid Democratic Party.

By law and custom, apartheid establishes a racially segregated society in which the 28 million blacks have no vote in national affairs. The 5 million whites control the economy and maintain separate districts, schools and health services.

There have been nearly 200 bombings, injuring 680 people and killing 35, during the state of emergency.

Uzbek mobs get more aggressive

MOSCOW (AP) — Mobs in Soviet Uzbekistan are growing bolder, escalating their attacks on police stations despite the presence of thousands of soldiers, Izvestia reported today.

The official government newspaper said the death toll from the last six days of ethnic violence in the Fergana region of the Central Asian republic was nearing 80, and more than 800 people have been hurt.

The region's party chief has called for "more decisive measures" to stem the wave of arson and murder, Izvestia said without identifying them.

"I think that, taking into account the serious nature of the situation, we don't have enough force yet for its stabilization," Shavkat Yuldashev told the newspaper. "Apparently, more decisive measures are needed."

Alexi Yastrebov, a deputy to the Soviet Congress of People's Deputies, said in an interview Thursday that the parliament was asked by Communist Party officials in a closed session to approve tougher action in Uzbekistan.

A group of deputies, including some from Uzbekistan, were scheduled to report on the latest developments to the Congress today before a decision was taken.

The government has brought in more than 9,000 Interior Ministry soldiers, and given them the authority to open fire to protect themselves, but held back on sending in regular army soldiers, official media say.

Reporting on recent attacks on police and the Interior Ministry building in the troubled region's city of Kokand 1,500 miles southeast of Moscow, the newspaper said a crowd of thousands managed to seize three pistols and force police to release 12 detainees from jail.

"The actions of the uncontrolled elements are becoming more aggressive," Izvestia said. "More and more often attacks are being made on buildings of the Interior Ministry and police. The goal is to sieze weapons. The population is extremely agitated."

Rioters have torched more than 550 houses and nearly 300 vehicles, and 300 people are now detained, it said.

The killing started June 3 in a rampage between ethnic Uzbeks and the Meskhi Turk minority, who were forcibly resettled in the Fergana Valley of Uzbekistan by Josef Stalin in 1944.

Yuldashev proposed "addressing the problem of returning them to their homeland" in southern Georgia "as quickly as possible."

More than 10,000 of the Meskhi Turks have been evacuated to the safety of army camps. After the recent attacks on the police station in Kokand, the mob invaded a Meskhi neighborhood and set more than 80 houses and six cars on fire, Izvestia reported.

An Uzbek deputy who spoke at parliament this morning did not comment directly on the violence, but he described harsh living conditions in the cotton-growing southern republic.

Adil Yakubov, head of the Uzbekistan Writers' Union, painted a grim picture of the men and women laboring in the cotton fields under hot sun and among poisonous chemicals.

He compared workers in Uzbekistan's cotton fields to slaves brought to America to work on plantations, but said the slaves were better fed and their descendants now make up "the best of American sports and arts."

Uzbek children, he said, are so underfed they are often not accepted into army combat units.

Yakubov echoed claims by Uzbek activists that cotton production imposed by Moscow has forced Uzbekistan to neglect feeding itself. If cotton is so important," Yakubov complained, "Why is our price for cotton the lowest in the world?"

AP

Meanwhile, he said, the campaign to boost cotton production has forced farms to poison the environment with chemical fertilizers and pesticides. "Our region is on the verge of ecological disaster," he said.

Korean police use tear gas to break up protest

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Police today fired volleys of tear gas to break up a protest by radical students demanding to go to communist North Korea, and troopers raided a college to search for pro-communist literature.

Authorities said about 300 students were arrested.

Police in armored vans fired tear gas when about 1,000 chanting students tried to force their way past lines of riot police blocking Yonsei University's main gate. Riot troopers kicked and punched protesters.

Students hurled rocks at the police, and there were reports of minor injuries on both sides.

The clash came after the government deployed about 20,000 riot police to block protests by radical students demanding to take part in the 13th World Youth Festival in the North Korean capital of Pyongyang.

About 300 riot police in combat fatigues raided Sogang University in western Seoul earlier today to confiscate posters and literature on the festival to be held July 1-8. Police said firebombs were also seized and two students arrested.

Thousands of riot police were deployed around other campuses where students held rallies to demand the right to take part in the festival.

Riot police stopped and searched many students outside campuses, checking bags for firebombs and anti-government literature. Police officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said about 300 students had been arrested in the spot checks.

The government has banned plans for thousands of students to assemble at Yonsei University during the weekend. The students have asked North Korean representatives to come to Yonsei on Saturday for talks, even though the Korean border is sealed.

The government has said students will not be allowed to go to North Korea to take part in the festival. The two Koreas are bitter rivals who have clashed frequently over the years.

North Korea has invited South Korean students to attend the youth festival, an athletic and cultural festival attended mainly by non-aligned and communist nations. South Korea has accused the north of attempting to incite domestic unrest to weaken the Seoul government.

South Korean radical students and dissidents have been calling for the fall of President Roh Tae-woo's government, but they lack support because of their extremist views. The radicals have curbed their normally violent protests since seven riot troopers were killed in a clash May 3. Most recent protests have been peaceful.

WORLD IN BRIEF

NATO allies agree to boosts in budgets

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The NATO allies agreed today to retain their goal of boosting annual defense budgets by 3 percent, even though they are pushing for deep military cuts at talks with the Soviet bloc.

In a statement at the end of a two-day strategy session, defense ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization acknowledged that many allies, including the United States, have failed to achieve the 3 percent growth rate in real terms because of economic pressures.

However, they said that target must remain in place to secure strong defenses as long as the East-West talks in Vienna on conventional force cuts in Europe have not yielded an accord.

"To sustain a credible deterrent, there remains, at least for the time being, a continuing need to increase (defense spending) to redress existing deficiencies in conventional defense," the statement said.

"There was broad agreement that sound defenses are constantly kept up to date," NATO Secretary General Manfred Woerner told reporters after the meeting, saying the Warsaw Pact retained a 2-to-1 superiority over NATO in conventional forces. "To reduce our defense efforts in such a situation would be unwise," he said.

The ministers also discussed President Bush's proposal to remove 30,000 U.S. troops and 325,000 Soviet soldiers from Europe and to reduce the number of NATO combat aircraft by 750 and Warsaw Pact planes by 3,000. Bush said such reductions would bring the two sides to equal strength in those areas.

Uno won't answer query

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Sousuke Uno today refused to respond as a questioner in Parliament broke precedent by asking him about a news report claiming he kept a highly paid geisha as his mistress.

Uno, who previously denied the report to journalists, said he would not comment on it in a public forum.

The report surfaced last weekend in the Sunday Mainichi magazine, which broke with Japanese journalism tradition by publishing or broadcasting reports on such liaisons by government officials.

The magazine's story was not picked up at first by major newspapers or national television. But the question on the issue in the upper house of the Diet, Japan's parliament, was reported by Kyodo News Service and on the evening television news by Japan Broadcasting Corp.

Pilot out of hospital

PARIS (AP) — Soviet pilot Anatoly Kvochur, injured when he ejected from his MiG-29 fighter jet just before it crashed at the Paris Air Show, was released today from a military hospital, the Soviet Embassy said.

Kvochur, 37, was conscious and talking when he was airlifted to Begin Military Hospital with stomach injuries minutes after his jet exploded Thursday in front of hundreds of reporters, exhibitors and visitors at the air show at Le Bourget airport.

An embassy official said Kvochur was well enough to leave the hospital, and might even visit the air show. He had no further information about the pilot's condition.

Kvochur, described by a Soviet official as one of their best pilots, was making a low-level pass in front of spectators when the afterburners on the single-seat fighter jet failed to ignite.

The plane stalled at about 1,000 feet and plunged to the ground just off the airfield's central runway, away from the spectators.

New elections slated

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A new round of elections will be held June 18 for 33 lower house seats left open after voters rejected the Communist leaders who were the sole candidates.

Holding the new elections could smooth over the delicate situation that resulted from the opposition Solidarity movement's victory in the voting on Sunday for the current lower house, the Sejm, and a new Senate.

Solidarity union leader Lech Walesa met with government officials to work out a solution, and the two sides agreed to hold the new elections to fill 33 of the 35 seats reserved for Communist Party-backed candidates. The Communists took a majority vote for only two of the seats.

Politburo member Janusz Reykowski said the elections would be held a week from Sunday. He made the announcement late Thursday, hours after official election returns showed the breadth of Solidarity's victory in Poland's most open balloting in 42 years.

In the voting for the new 100-seat Senate, Solidarity won 92 seats and the other eight were undecided. All seats in that chamber were openly contested by opposition and Communist-backed candidates.

Independent candidates were also allowed to run for 161 seats in the 460-seat Sejm and won 160 of them. One will be decided in a runoff.

Of the remaining 299 seats in the Sejm, 264 were contested among candidates from the Communist coalition. Because of the large number of candidates, only three seats were won outright and the other 261 will be filled in the runoffs, also June 18.

Bombings rock Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Two bombs exploded simultaneously today under coffee vans parked side by side on west Beirut's seaside boulevard near a Syrian checkpoint. Police said three people were killed and four wounded.

They said no casualties were reported among the Syrian soldiers manning the sandbagged checkpoint along the main boulevard in the Raouche district. There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

A police spokesman said the powerful blasts devastated the coffee vans, a Volkswagon and a Honda, and hurled the body of one of the vendors into the sea.

Tiananmen Square is now armed camp

BEIJING (AP) — Gone from Tiananmen Square are the pro-democracy banners and the tents of China's freedom movement, replaced by tanks, armed guards and the chants of drilling soldiers.

The army on Thursday allowed the people of Beijing their first glance of the 100-acre expanse since the military swept into the capital six days ago, leaving hundreds dead and crushing a movement for political change.

Troops moved back their barricades, making it possible for city residents to walk to the edge of the square, which for seven weeks stood at the heart of the movement. Buses and bicyclists today were allowed to pass by Changan Avenue, which borders the north edge of the square.

The spot once occupied by the Goddess of Democracy, a 33-foot-high replica of the Statue of Liberty, was taken by a tread-wheeled armored personnel carrier. When students built the statue last week, for a few days it became a symbol of the movement for democratic reforms and an end to official corruption. On Sunday morning, a tank crushed it.

In all, 80 tanks and 40 armored personnel carriers lined the northern part of the square.

The Monument to Revolutionary Martyrs, where the students took a final stand early Sunday, was swept clean. Poems and posters calling for a more open China have disappeared from its sides.

Chinese Red Cross officials estimate 3,600 people were killed and 60,000 injured over the weekend, citing a Chinese students' organization, the Union of Chinese Students in West Germany. The government says nearly 300 people, mostly soldiers, were killed; diplomats and Chinese say up to 3,000 died.

Soldiers drilled in Tiananmen's center, their cadenced shouting echoing around the vast expanse. A crowd of officials stood on the roof of the Great Hall of the People, overlooking the square. From this same roof five days earlier officials watched as a jubilant mass of demonstrators enveloped 5,000 troops and blocked their entry to the square.

Inside the square, soldiers could be seen shuffling about, their uniformed jackets stripped off, wash basins in hand. There was a relaxed air of the inside of an army barracks as unarmed troops carried food and walked slowly together, talking and laughing in groups.

The area once housing students' tents has become a holding area for a huge fleet of troop trucks.

On the southern perimeter, a single line of tanks and a cordon of soldiers blocked the square from the thousands of bicylists who pedaled slowly by, peering into Tiananmen.

Near the square, troops placed barbed wire in front of one street. Soldiers were billeted in a construction site, their laundered fatigues drying on the scaffolding. Next door, troops, their assault rifles slung nonchalantly over their shoulders, stood and chatted outside a discotheque.

"They look like they are settling in," said one local resident. "I hope they know that we still don't want them here."

Students stage peaceful rally; Arrests reported

BEIJING (AP) — About 50,000 students and supporters staged a peaceful demonstration in Shanghai today to mourn the deaths of six people killed in recent anti-government disturbances in the city.

Three provincial capitals also reported arrests today as cities across China were wracked by protests against the martial law crackdown in Beijing.

The Shanghai demonstrators gathered through the day in People's Square to conduct funeral rites for the six, who were killed Tuesday night when a train crashed through a barricade set up on tracks near Shanghai station.

Angry crowds then set fire to the train and fought with firefighters and police who came to put it out, injuring more than 20.

Crowds in China's largest city have set up barricades on train tracks and street corners to protest the military takeover of Beijing and stop troops from entering Shanghai. Most barricades were down by Friday.

The national television news also showed large areas of burned out buildings in the Sichuan capital of Chengdu that it said were attacked by mobs during street protests on Monday. It also broadcast scenes of protests in Shanghai, Changsha, Wuhan and Harbin and showed dozens of people being arrested for alleged destructive acts.

About 100 people were arrested after the rioting in Chengdu, and arrests also have been reported in Canton, Beijing and other cities.

Local radio in the southern city of Guiyang said 24 people were arrested after a fracas in which crowds threw stones and bottles at buses, commandeered them, destroyed a police motorcycle and smashed shop windows and counters.

It said the crowds damaged 11 cars and stole money and goods during the incident Wednesday night.

In the western city of Lanzhou, 19 people were detained Thursday after a group destroyed traffic installations, stopped vehicles and erected barricades, the provincial radio said. It said police confiscated daggers, steel pipes, iron chains and other weapons.

In Zhengzhou, central China, police arrested "thugs" who Thursday night damaged street installations and overturned a vehicle. Some protesters were detained, but the number was not known.

The radio reports, monitored by the British Broadcasting Co., all said no university students were arrested.

Unlike the generally peaceful demonstrations in many cities before the military crackdown in Beijing June 3 and 4, the protesters have been increasingly confrontational and violent.

China events 'personal disappointment' to Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, that old China hand, summed up a large part of his frustration over the chaos in China: "I feel a certain sense of personal disappointment."

Even his phone calls aren't getting through these days.

Bush, U.S. envoy to Beijing in the mid-1970s and proud of his knowledge of China, repeatedly voiced feelings of hopelessness — even despair — as he fielded questions Thursday night at his first prime-time news conference.

"In terms of trying to figure out their internal order, it is extraordinarily difficult," Bush conceded.

When Bush served in China for 16 months in the Ford administration, it was a lot easier to tell who was in and who was out of power.

"We'd send people out around town to count the red flag limousines, and then they'd say, oh, there's 30 of them gathered here. There must be an important meeting.

"And everybody would hover around trying to see who emerged or who stood next to somebody on a parade on Festival Day."

Things now are infinitely more complex, Bush conceded.

Asked to clarify a remark suggesting that senior Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping may not necessarily have been responsible for last weekend's bloody military crackdown, Bush showed a trace of exasperation:

"I was trying to say that I don't know. And I'm trying to say that you don't know."

Pointing around the East Room to different reporters at random, he added: "And he doesn't know, and she doesn't know and nobody knows — outside."

Still, Bush's remarks Thursday night showed he was staying the cautious course he outlined earlier, despite the continued repression in China and in the face of calls by some conservatives in Congress for sharper action.

Bush said he was sticking by his decision to suspend arms sales to China and not to escalate the U.S. response further by imposing trade or other economic sanctions.

"I am one who lived in China; I understand the importance of the relationship with the Chinese people and with the government. It is in the interest of the United States to have good relations," he said.

Bush, who visited China four months ago and met with the country's leaders in the first overseas trip of his presidency, was asked whether he felt personally let down by the brutal events of the past week.

"I feel a certain sense of personal disappointment," he said. He said the Chinese government had violated internationally accepted norms of behavior: "Armed people don't shoot down unarmed students."

He said the United States couldn't have "totally normal relations" again unless the government — whichever government is running things — recognizes "the validity of the students' aspirations."

And why, given his good past relations with Deng and other Chinese leaders, didn't he just pick up the phone and try to talk to them?

The answer was almost sheepish. "I tried today...The line was busy. I couldn't get through."

If Bush was voicing frustration in deciding how to deal with the political situation in China, he showed no such hesitation on the human rights issue.

After drawing criticism from some quarters when he failed to speak up for human rights during that February trip to China, Bush sounded a much stronger note on that score during Thursday's news conference.

"We have to speak out in favor of human rights. We aren't going to remake the world, but we should stand for something. And there's no question in the minds of these students that the United States is standing in their corners," he said.

Bush added that, "the United States must stand wherever, in whatever country, universally for human rights." He also mentioned South Africa, declaring: "Appalling apartheid must end."

The president also gave the human rights theme a personal dimension when he defended the U.S. decision to harbor Chinese dissident Fang Lizhi in the U.S. embassy in Beijing.

Fang, the outspoken astrophysicist who was barred by police from attending a barbecue thrown by Bush in Beijing in February, wound up as the embassy's uninvited — but welcome — house guest.

Soviet official says Kremlin 'dismayed' by crackdown

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The Soviet Union's main spokesman said today the Kremlin was surprised by China's crackdown on pro-democracy demonstrators and that Soviet officials have been unable to reach Beijing.

"We can't get through, either," Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov said in an interview.

He said Soviet officials were surprised at the means with which Chinese communist leaders suppressed student demonstrators who had been rallying peacefully for weeks in support of broader reforms.

Asked if he was surprised by the brutality of the crackdown on the Chinese protests, Gerasimov said: "We hadn't expected this." He said Soviet authorities were "extremely dismayed" at Beijing's actions.

The spokesman's comments are the first official Soviet response since the new Soviet Congress issued an extremely guarded statement Tuesday saying events in China were "an internal affair."

Gerasimov indicated that he and other Soviet officials who traveled to Beijing last month for the first Sino-Soviet summit in 30 years were aware of the massive student demonstrations, which occurred during the visit, but avoided focusing their talks on China's domestic unrest because of protocol.

Asked whether senior Kremlin officials have let Beijing leaders know of their concern over the military crackdown, Gerasimov said telephone contact with Beijing, the Chinese capital, had been impossible since Chinese troops cleared students from Tiananmen Square on June 3 and 4.

Chinese man says wife, baby taken into custody

CHICAGO (AP) — A Chinese doctoral student studying in the United States said his pregnant wife and their American-born baby were taken into custody at Beijing airport while trying to leave the country.

Sanyuan Li, 32, said Thursday that passengers who saw plainclothes officers take Yu Cheng and 1-year-old Payton Li notified the woman's relatives in Beijing after the arrest Monday.

"We don't know who is holding my wife and baby, so in this sense it is kidnapping rather than arrest or custody," said Li, who's studying political science at the University of Chicago. "No one has told us anything about her arrest."

The baby holds a U.S. passport, Li said.

In Washington, a State Department official said the special China task force has contacted the U.S. Embassy in Beijing about Mrs. Cheng and the child, but had no information from the embassy about the case late Thursday night.

"They are trying to find out what they can," said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity. "There are many such requests."

Mrs. Cheng, 30, a doctoral candidate in education at the University of Chicago, returned to China May 19 to join the student protests for democracy, Li said.

"She wanted to go back to show our solidarity with the students and our support to them in their cause for democracy," Li said.

"If we are all there, no one will tell the world what is happening to us and we might not be able to get out anymore," he said. "It seems to me that if I go back, I will be arrested."

Mrs. Cheng brought between $1,000 and $2,000 raised by Taiwanese-Americans to help the student protesters, but would not have had the money when she was arrested, Li said.

PUBLIC NOTICE

A "Retroactive Waiver of Time Limitations" has been authorized to assist individuals who became unemployed as a result of foreign trade competition between August 13, 1981 and April 7, 1986.

certain eligibility requirements must be met in order to qualify for this assistance, including enrollment in a Trade Act-approved training program and "continuous unemployment since the date of total separation, not taking into account seasonal employment, odd jobs, or part-time, temporary employment."

Each worker's separation will be considered on an individual basis, therefore, anyone who believes their unemployment during the period 8-13-81 through 4-7-86 was due to foreign trade competition should contact the Texas Employment Commission local office. Services available under Trade Adjustment Assistance include weekly trade readjustment allowance, job placement, employment counseling, vocational training and financial assistance for job search and job relocation.
