Panel told Basin needs UTPB access

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

AUSTIN — More than 100 Permian Basin residents, united in their support for the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, sent a message to a committee studying Texas' colleges and universities that access to higher education is crucial to the economic future of the region.

During a hearing this morning, at the University of Texas at Austin campus, Tom Wageman, president of RepublicBank First National Midland and a member of the UTPB Development Board, told the Select Committee on Higher Education that there is no question that UTPB is needed.

"As the petroleum industry suffers, the continued role of the university takes on paramount importance," he said. "The Permian Basin economy will bounce back but it will be transformed. The revitalization effort needs an institution of higher learning to focus the re-training of our work force and revival of technological advancement."

With rumors of closures and mergers flying, Midlanders and Odessans presented boxes of support materials to convince the 23-member group of legislators, educators and business people that the area's only upper level institution is crucial to the entire state. Among the documentation were petitions signed by almost 10,000 supporters, hundreds of personal letters, resolutions and letters of affirmation from city councils, chambers of commerce, civic and social organizations.

UTPB President Dr. Duane Leach discussed the specifics of the university and the new Center for Energy and Economic Diversification.

Midland County Attorney Mark H. Dettman today is staging a roundup of habitual hot-check writers.

Democrats say session possible if Clements will share 'plan'

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Trying to smoke out Republican gubernatorial candidate Bill Clements' secret budget-balancing plan, Democratic state Senate leaders say they'll support a special legislative session if Clements produces "a workable plan."

When Clements' refused the challenge Thursday, one of the leaders of the Senate offer said that proves the former governor has been "misrepresenting to the people that he has a plan."

Meanwhile, Comptroller Bob Bullock and Treasurer Ann Richards briefed Gov. Mark White and legislative leaders Thursday afternoon on the current state of the budget problems. One source close to the proceedings said the group discussed neither calling a special session nor any official worsening of the state's fiscal crunch.

County attorney 'checking his list'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Dettman's Roundup Gang went into action today, rounding up hot-check writers and putting them in jail.

"This time, we have given them advance warnings," said Midland County Attorney Mark H. Dettman, who a month ago publicly announced he would issue warrants for the arrest of those habitual hot-check writers whom he repeatedly has requested report to his office and make restitution.

Many took heed, reported to his office, paid off the "bad" checks or made arrangements for restitution. "Knowing that it (the roundup) is coming up has induced a lot of check writers to voluntarily make restitution," Dettman said. "Those who didn't are on the roundup list and warrants have been issued for their arrest."

Last year, Dettman staged a similar roundup, which he deemed successful. "And if last year is any indication, the threat of being arrested and placed in jail will induce a lot more individuals to pay off their checks." But those "habitual" hot-check writers who refuse to make restitution will be placed "where they belong — in jail."

"We're going to be looking for between 75 and 100 targeted defendants," Dettman said. "And we are working on another 100 and 150 additional people to be arrested. We are going to put them in jail and make them either plead guilty or go to trial."

If they plead "not guilty," they will be tried on misdemeanor theft charges in County Court or County Court-at-Law by Judges Bill Ahders, Willie DuBose or Jim Fitz-Gerald III. Punishment ranges from a six-month jail sentence and a $1,000 fine for theft between $20 and $199.99 to one-year jail time and a $2,000 fine for theft between $200 and $749.99. Theft of $750 or more is a felony offense, which is handled by District Attorney Al Schorre and could result in a penitentiary sentence for the offender.

However, if those "targeted defendants" voluntarily turn themselves in, Dettman said he would try to arrange their release under personal recognizance bonds but said "that's up to the judge."

Dettman's office has notified those "targeted" hot-check writers "numerous times," he said. And they either offered "no response" at all or gave "a lot of empty promises."

Dettman gave assurances that he would follow up on his promise, made a month ago, to arrest and jail those repeat offenders who ignored his warnings.

"We have (arrest) warrants," he said. "They have been given chance after chance after chance. And now it's time for business. We'll make believers out of them."

Botha, Tutu talk 'cordially' about emergency move

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — President P.W. Botha met today for the first time in six years with black Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu as more arrests and police searches were reported under the day-old nationwide state of emergency.

"He put his points and I put my points," said Tutu, winner of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize, as he emerged from Botha's official residence in Cape Town.

Tutu, one of Botha's staunchest critics, described the 90-minute meeting as cordial. Shortly after the state of emergency was announced Thursday, Tutu condemned it as "iron-fisted" and urged the international community to intervene.

There were no reports of large-scale rioting in reponse to the government actions. However, the Bureau of Information said 73 students were arrested in Soweto, the main black township outside Johannesburg, for violating a new ban on some gatherings at school grounds. The township was closed to non-residents.

About 300 students at Natal University Medical School in Durban demonstrated against the state of emergency declaration but were dispersed by police who fired warning shots and made some arrests, the South African Press Association reported Thursday.

At least 1,000 people were detained Thursday. A few more detentions were reported today, and police searched some anti-apartheid groups' offices.

Under the state of emergency, police may detain anyone without a warrant or trial and conduct searches without warrants. The state of emergency declaration also imposed unprecedented restrictions on the media, including a ban on publishing strike calls and other "subversive statements."

Unusually heavy deployments of security forces were reported today in several cities and townships. All cars entering Cape Town and Johannesburg airports were being searched.

3-week-old baby gets new heart

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Baby Calvin received a new heart today, just a day after his plight raised questions about the nationwide organ-donor network and just hours after his parents appealed to Congress to improve it.

"Baby Calvin is out of surgery," said Pam Greer, a spokeswoman for Kosair Children's Hospital said at 9 a.m.

She did not know when the transplant operation ended or the condition of the 3-week-old infant, who suffers from the same heart condition as Baby Jesse.

The surgery began at Kosair after the heart of a brain-dead infant arrived about 12:17 a.m., said hospital spokesman Bill Loader.

Dr. Constantine Mavroudis, the head of the heart transplant team at Kosair, performed the surgery, the first infant heart transplant at the Louisville hospital.

Loader said he did not know where the donor organ came from or how Baby Calvin came to receive it.

Both Calvin and Jesse were born with hypoplastic left heart syndrome, a congenital defect that does not allow the left side of the heart — the main pumping chamber — to develop properly.

Calvin, whom Mavroudis said "could die at any time" without a transplant, had been on the nationwide organ-donor network since May 30, before Baby Jesse's name was added.

Jesse received the transplanted heart of a brain-dead Michigan infant Tuesday night in Loma Linda, Calif. The heart was donated after the donor's parents heard TV news accounts of pleas by Jesse's parents for a heart.

Rival Moslem militias in Bekaa Valley fight hand-to-hand

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Rival Moslem militiamen fought savage hand-to-hand battles today in the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley, and the Palestinian refugee camps of west Beirut were engulfed in combat. Police reported dozens of casualties.

Moslem warlords, politicians and religious leaders, meanwhile, reportedly agreed at a Syrian-sponsored summit to form a 1,500-man special military force to end the chaos in west Beirut and disengage combatants fighting for control of the refugee camps.

Police said attacking militiamen of the Syrian Social Nationalist Party were trying to evict Shiite Moslem extremists of the pro-Iranian Hezbollah, or Party of God, from the western Bekaa Valley town of Mashgara, 25 miles southeast of Beirut.

The attack began Thursday and police said the pro-Syrian fighters fought from house to house to wrest control of the town's northern entrance at daybreak today.

"Our Mashgara station says there are dozens of casualties in the streets and at embattled houses that could not be counted or helped because of the fierceness of the fighting," said a spokesman for the police department in Beirut. He refused to be identified.

Earlier police reports put Thursday's casualty toll at nine killed, 10 wounded and 17 kidnapped.

In west Beirut, Shiite gunmen of Justice Minister Nabih Berri's mainstream Amal militia battled with Palestinian guerrillas into a 28th day at the refugee camps of Bourj el-Barajneh, Sabra and Chatilla.

Volunteer firefighter Dennis Stovall sprays down debris of a Cisco building destroyed in an arson-related fire.

Three arsons spark fear in Cisco

CISCO (AP) — Residents edgy after three arson-sparked blazes in as many nights slapped a curfew on this West Texas city and kept a lookout despite the arrests of three suspects.

The curfew and state of emergency were declared by the City Council after the three fires damaged several businesses. Police believe they were meant to divert attention from petty burglaries, including the theft of cigarettes and change from a cash register.

The council, meeting in emergency session Thursday afternoon, clamped a midnight-to-6 a.m. curfew through Saturday. The town of about 4,500 residents is some 40 miles east of Abilene.

Three suspects were in custody Thursday night.

But despite the arrests, Cisco officials were not assuming the fires would stop.

In addition to the curfew, members of the citizens watch group patrolled the streets Thursday night, and frustrated businessmen also assisted the seven-person police force in the watch, said city manager Michael Moore.

"We're a small West Texas city and we're awfully proud of our town. That's what makes senseless acts like this so frustrating," Moore said.

Jim Bob Cozart, 21, of Cisco, was charged with arson and was being held without bond at Eastland County Jail. The other two suspects, ages 20 and 22, are also of Cisco, said Cisco Police Officer Rick Kirkland.

Cozart was arrested about 3 a.m. Thursday a block and a half away from a fire at Webb's Inc. warehouse and Dixon Auto Store, Kirkland said. The other two suspects were arrested a short time later at the scene of the fire, he said.

Kirkland said investigators believe the fires were used to distract attention from burglaries at other businesses.

"We are investigating the possibility that the fires were set to deter us from burglaries that were being committed," he said.

While a Tuesday fire caused an estimated $150,000 to a warehouse at the Cisco Lumber Co. owned by Mayor Joe Wheatley, the Dean Pharmacy was burglarized of assorted drugs, Kirkland said.

A circular saw, cigarettes and change from a cash register were reported missing, Kirkland said.

Mexico defends itself against bad policies

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government, in desperate need of new loans for a stalling economy, is trying to defend itself against charges that government policies caused worried Mexicans to move billions of dollars out of the country.

Foreign bankers and government officials have expressed reservations about lending Mexico more when so much money leaves the country.

Analysts say capital flight occurs when investors and others lack confidence in the economy and the government. Since 1982, the government has been blamed for soaring inflation, uneven growth and a bloated federal budget.

In those conditions many Mexicans turn their peso currency into dollars, taking the money out of their own economy and most often into the United States.

Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York estimates that Mexico lost $53 billion in capital from 1976 through 1985, the worst outflow in Latin America. From 1983 through 1985, Mexico lost $17 billion, the bank said.

Without the decade-long loss, Mexico would have owed $12 billion in foreign debts at the end of last year, the bank said. Instead, its foreign debt stood at $97 billion, the second highest in the developing world after Brazil.

Mexico disputes Morgan Guaranty's figures, and officials complain they have gotten little help from the United States in trying to curb the flow.

The Bank of Mexico, the nation's central bank, estimates that $6.8 billion left in 1983-85.

Analysts also estimate that $1 billion returned to Mexico this year after the Bank of Mexico tightened credit controls and virtually cut off the flow of loans to the private sector. Businesses were forced to bring some of their money back to continue operations, analysts and government officials say.

Politics fires nuclear plant

MANILA, Philippines — The heaviest item in the Philippines' groaning foreign debt stands on the Bataan Peninsula, overlooking the South China Sea. It is a nuclear power plant, the country's first, which has already cost $2.1 billion but has never been fired up except by the heat of politics.

"The plant will never operate," Ernesto Maceda, the minister of natural resources, said recently. "It's a closed issue in the Cabinet. We're opposed 101 percent."

All that remains to be done, he said, "is getting off the hook in the financial situation."

But the effort by President Corazon Aquino's government to get off the hook promises to be even more controversial than earlier debates about the safety of the 620-megawatt plant and allegations that commissions paid by the builder, Westinghouse Electric Corp., ended up in the pocket of ousted President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

Several Cabinet ministers have suggested repudiating some of the Philippines' $16 billion foreign debt, including the loans that financed the plant, a radical move that could dry up foreign aid and investment for Mrs. Aquino's government as surely as political repression did under Marcos.

Even a more moderate course, which seems likely, may test foreign confidence in her government's economic policies.

Libya wants downfall of King Hussein

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Libya is calling on Jordanians to overthrow King Hussein and close the Amman airport to keep the "hireling of imperialism" from returning from his visit to the United States, the official JANA news agency said Thursday.

JANA released the texts of a series of messages addressed to Hussein, the Arab "masses," Arab ambassadors and Jordanian students, soldiers and assemblymen — all urging the ouster of the pro-Western king.

Hussein was in the United States to visit his daughters, and had met earlier this week with President Reagan in Washington.

A statement addressed to Jordanian officers and soldiers said Hussein was the first Arab leader to visit Washington since the April 15 U.S. bombing raids on Libya. Reagan ordered the raids in retaliation for Libya's alleged involvement in international terrorism.

"He (Hussein) is paying a visit to the rabid dog Reagan, the child killer, to kiss his hands which are stained with the blood of martyrs," said the message from the "People's Congress" in Tripoli.

Libya has some 2,000 local people's committees, which are the political arm of Col. Moammar Gadhafi's regime.

"Now the airport where this traitor is going to land should be closed on his return. ... Now streets should be blocked and all outlets shut. ..." said another message to Arab "masses."

A separate message to Jordanian students said, "The time is ripe more than before to step up the revolutionary work against the regime of Hussein so as to overthrow it. ..."

The statements said Hussein should meet the same fate as former Sudanese President Gaafar Nimeiri, who was toppled in a coup while returning from the United States in April 1985.

Gadhafi has long been at odds with Hussein, who has close ties to Washington and Britain. Libya has opposed his efforts to promote Middle East peace talks. And Libya supports Iran, while Jordan backs Iraq in the Persian Gulf war.

Americans, Thatcher tea to boost more tourism

LONDON (AP) — Thirty winners of free flights to London dropped by 10 Downing St. for tea and cakes with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in the latest publicity drive to lure American tourists back to Britain.

Mrs. Thatcher's guests Thursday were picked from among the 5,791 winners of a free flight to London offered in U.S. newspaper advertisements by state-owned British Airways.

The airline is fighting a slump in bookings caused by American fears of terror attacks.

"We hope a lot more of you will come over here," said Mrs. Thatcher on the steps of her official residence. "London is among the safest cities in the world, far safer than many places in the United States."

Catacomb given to Italy

VATICAN CITY (AP) — An ancient Jewish catacomb on the Appian Way has been turned over to Italy by the Vatican.

The Vatican said in an announcement Thursday that it was fulfilling the terms of the 1984 revision of the Holy See's 1929 concordat with Italy.

It said a second Jewish catacomb in Rome, in the Villa Torlonia, once the residence of of Fascist dictator Benito Mussolini and now a city park, also would be turned over to Italy.

Leaders of the Italian Jewish community said they hoped to work with authorities to open the catacombs to the public.

Plant explodes, burns

BARCELONETA, Puerto Rico (AP) — An explosion and fire killed three workers and injured four others Thursday in a pharmaceutical plant, police said.

The explosion and fire occurred at the Merck Sharp & Dohme Chemical Co., a manufacturer of veterinary medical supplies. The plant is near the coastal town of Barceloneta, about 40 miles west of San Juan.

Authorities said the explosion occurred about 6:10 a.m. The fire was brought under the control three hours later by firefighters from Barceloneta and two neighboring towns, Arecibo and Manati.

The cause of the explosion and fire was not immediately known.

Military, Korea agree

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — U.S. military has reached a labor agreement with its South Korean employees, ending a two-week dispute, an announcement from the military said today.

The statement said a memorandum signed Thursday by the two sides covered wages and benefits as well as non-wage.

Workers accepted the 6.9 percent raise offered by the military, and received other benefits in return, the announcement said.

About 20,000 Korean workers staged a one-day strike May 29, but a military spokesman said at that time that it had no effect on the combat readiness of the estimated 40,000 U.S. soldiers stationed in South Korea.

SALT showdown could come soon

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON — A showdown between President Reagan and congressional critics of his SALT II decision could come as early as July.

That's when the defense money bill is likely to come up for a vote, and supporters of the 1979 nuclear weapons limitation treaty are getting ready to apply some pressure.

They want to save the treaty, the last major U.S.-Soviet agreement to limit nuclear weapons, while Reagan wants an increase in Pentagon spending.

The strategy developed by a group of Democratic and Republican senators would prohibit spending money on any weapons that exceed the limits set by SALT II.

Although the treaty has never been ratified, it appears to have the support of a majority of the House and Senate. So the pressure tactic might work — or at least kick up a nasty fight between the White House and Congress.

The president's backers, meanwhile, are pondering some strategy of their own. Republican Sen. Richard Lugar, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and Dan Quayle, his Indiana stablemate, may counter by trying to force a vote on ratification of the treaty.

They are operating, of course, on the assumption that SALT II cannot command the two-thirds vote it would need. A vote against ratification would kill the treaty for sure, especially since Reagan says it only legitimizes the arms race.

Reagan's decision to disregard a major provision of the treaty does not come into play until November or December when the number of B-52 bombers carrying air-launched cruise missiles cracks the ceiling.

He reminded the Soviets at a news conference Wednesday night there was time to work out an accord that actually reduces weapons on both sides. "If nothing is done," he said, "then we'll make the decision with regard to that plane."

In the meantime, two Poseidon nuclear submarines will be torn apart this summer to keep the United States in line with the treaty temporarily, at least. Reagan will be keeping an eye on the Soviet nuclear force and how arms control negotiations in Geneva are proceeding.

So SALT II isn't dead yet. And Paul Nitze, a senior adviser on arms control, gave a panel of the House Armed Services Committee on Wednesday some indication that the treaty may be kept alive.

The technique would be indirect. Reagan would use the same economic argument he did in keeping the United States in compliance with the SALT II ceiling on multiple-warhead missiles.

The situation is developing this way: Two or three more Poseidon submarines are due later in the year to either have their reactors recharged or be taken out of the fleet as outmoded.

Nitze said he "would anticipate" destroying a submarine on economic grounds. That is, it would not make financial sense to refurbish the submarine while the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law was bearing down on the budget.

That's the explanation Reagan gave for ordering the destruction of the two Poseidons this summer. Nitze stressed the president had not made a decision to take that step again.

But if he did, SALT II would get another reprieve. And the atmosphere for a summit meeting with Mikhail Gorbachev, the Soviet leader, toward the end of year could be brighter — assuming the two sides can get together on a date and an agenda.

Reagan had some kind words for Gorbachev at his news conference. He said the Soviet leader was the first in memory to publicly express interest in reducing, or even eliminating, nuclear weapons.

Reagan would end compliance with treaty, seek 'better deal'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says it is time to end compliance with the unratified SALT II arms control treaty and "try to replace it with a better deal," but a House committee wants him to stay within the pact's nuclear weapons limits.

Reagan's statement, ending a day of confusion over the administration's position on the 1979 pact, came Thursday as the president sat around his Cabinet table with a group of high school students.

"We are proposing to reduce U.S. and Soviet nuclear arms to an equal and verifiable level, and it is in the interest of both the Soviet Union and the United States to do this," he said in an opening statement.

"If the Soviets will agree, we can get started on this right now," he told the youths, who will visit Western Europe and the Soviet Union as unofficial ambassadors this summer.

Reporters, admitted to the meeting for the opening statement, then asked the president about his comments and those of other administration officials on SALT II.

"The time has come to end a treaty that was never ratified — that has now gone beyond the time for which it was designed, which they (the Soviets) have never observed — have been violating since its inception — to replace that with a legitimate arms reduction treaty," Reagan said.

Asked whether this meant that the SALT II treaty was dead, Reagan said, "We're going to try to replace it with a better deal."

The Democratic-controlled House Foreign Affairs Committee, however, expressed just the opposite sentiment Thursday.

By a 29-11, mostly party line vote, the panel approved a non-binding resolution calling on the president to "continue to adhere to the numerical sublimits of the SALT agreements as long as the Soviet Union does likewise."

U.S. still resisting sanctions against South Africa

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, despite a new police crackdown in South Africa and continued congressional pressure, is still refusing to use what it calls the "blunt instrument" of economic sanctions on that troubled country.

"Such sanctions would hinder the process of bringing the parties together by fostering polarization and intransigence instead of moderation on the part of both the government and its opponents," State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb said Thursday.

"We still regard punitive economic sanctions as a blunt instrument that will not promote the U.S. goals in South Africa," he said.

Kalb and White House spokesman Larry Speakes repeated the administration's view that hurting South Africa's economy would add to the woes of its black population and disturb the financial well-being of neighboring countries as well.

The administration's stance on economic sanctions is at odds with what appears to be a growing sentiment on Capitol Hill for sterner measures aimed at forcing the Pretoria government to move away from apartheid.

"It's my sense that there aren't many arrows left in the administration's quiver if wants to bring about change in South Africa," said Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

His panel voted 26-14 on Tuesday to bar new private U.S. investment in South Africa. The bill would require the U.S. computer industry to pull out of South Africa in a year, unless anti-apartheid steps such as releasing political prisoners are taken.

"There are many valid arguments against economic sanctions but there isn't anything else left," Leach said.

The South African government, which lifted a partial state of emergency in March, re-imposed one throughout the whole country Thursday. Hundreds of anti-apartheid activists were detained and the police were given sweeping powers to quell dissent.

Kalb said the U.S. government was dismayed by the order and he used the word "revulsion" to describe the administration's view of South Africa's racial system. The only cure for that country's ills would be to accelerate moves to end apartheid, he said.

He also said further steps against South Africa were possible, but declined to say what they might be.

Under pressure from Congress last year, Reagan imposed some sanctions on South Africa, including a ban on importation of krugerrand gold coins and sale of U.S. computer equipment to agencies that enforce apartheid.

Speakes asserted there had been "some movement" by South Africa since then but did not cite specific examples.

In general, U.S. firms involved with South Africa "have done more than anyone else to raise the level of governmental participation, education, of economic benefit to blacks. ... And that's why our position on sanctions is as it is," Speakes said.

The United States appears to be pinning some of its hopes for a settlement on the Commonwealth group of nations, which has been offering suggested solutions not only for South Africa's internal problems but for its disputes with neighboring black states on the issue of support for anti-apartheid guerrillas.

A Commonwealth study commission, known as the Emininent Persons Group, has argued for economic sanctions and has proposed negotiations between the government and its opponents.

"We believe the EPG's basis for negotiations continues to make sense, and hope that it may yet prove relevant to a peaceful outcome of South Africa's political crisis," Kalb said.

"A negotiated arrangement for power sharing in South Africa remains essential if the country is not to suffer rising violence and a declining economy that will hurt and further polarize all South Africans," he said.

South Africa's ambassador to the United States, meanwhile, said the threat of international sanctions will not influence his government.

"What the government has said is that South Africa's internal situation — security — comes first, regardless of any international ramifications," said ambassador Herbert Beukes.

In another development, Kalb said there were "well documented reports of police complicity with the 'vigilantes,'" taking part in fierce fighting in the South African black township of Crossroads.

He said the United States had sent $35,000 to the Red Cross for relief operations in the township and that further aid was being considered.

CALVIN

Calvin's parents had elected to remain anonymous and work within the organ-donor network. The donation of the Michigan infant's heart directly to Jesse raised the question of how much influence publicity has over the nationwide system, designed to give all patients an equal shot at available organs and to ensure such organs go to the patients in the most dire need.

On Thursday, Baby Calvin's parents issued their first public statement through a hospital spokeswoman, asking Congress to revamp the system.

"We urge Congress, and anyone else who can help, to do everything possible to see that an improved system is set up to identify donors of organs," the statement said.

"It almost seems like publicity is the only method that's working at present. But if you get publicity, it disrupts a family's life. We need a system that wouldn't make it necessary to trust publicity as part of the system."

The Grand Rapids, Mich., doctor who arranged to donate the heart of Frank Clemenshaw IV to Jesse said Wednesday that Frank's parents specifically asked that it go to him. He said he did not know that Calvin had been on a nationwide transplant list first.

Mark Reiner, president of the North American Transplant Coordinators Organization, which operates the computer network, said it is rare that hospitals bypass their local procurement agencies, as the Michigan hospital did. But he expressed concern about the effect of publicity on the fairness of the organ transplant system.

"The media has played a role in highlighting Baby Jesse, and now probably...with all the media attention for Baby Calvin, he'll probably get a heart," Reiner said Thursday. "But what about all the other babies?"

Linda Sheaffer, acting director of the Federal Office of Organ Transplantation, said a report of the Task Force on Organ Procurement and Transplantation will be issued in two to three weeks. The task force, set up under a 1984 law, will recommend ways to ensure more equitable distribution of organs.

Storms spread damage around nation

Associated Press

Tornadoes damaged homes in Texas, Florida and Wyoming, tearing off roofs and blowing out windows, while storms in Maryland knocked out the radar at Baltimore-Washington International Airport.

A wide-ranging spate of bad weather Wednesday and Thursday also brought floods to Wyoming and much of the Midwest and Northeast, and wind damage in Utah.

A Wisconsin boy, 10-year-old Paul Davis, died Thursday at St. Agnes Hospital in Fond du Lac, hours after he was swept into a culvert after a storm brought 3 inches of rain to the area Wednesday. His mother, Marcia L. Davis, 30, who had tried to rescue him, remained in very critical condition early today, said Virginia Blattner, nursing supervisor at the hospital.

She said Mrs. Davis was in a coma and on life support equipment, as she has been since being brought to the hospital.

A twister near St. Petersburg, Fla., ripped off roof tiles, blew out windows and snatched up patio furniture Thursday, while a tornado in the southern Texas town of Skidmore damaged a house, a lumber yard and trees. Twisters also damaged a trailer near Casper, Wyo., and a home in Bar Nunn, Wyo., the National Weather Service said. No injuries were reported.

In Utah, winds of more than 50 mph Thursday night damaged roofs and blew down power lines in northern Davis County, the weather service said. No injuries were reported, but the highway patrol said the roof was torn off one house and the roofs of a dozen others were damaged.

Rescuers pull Marcia Davis, 30, and her son, Paul, 10, from a Fond du Lac, Wis., drainage channel. The woman had jumped in trying to save the boy, who later died.

In Medicine Bow, Wyo., authorities advised residents of an eight-block area Thursday to evacuate because of rising waters from the Medicine Bow River. The river, swollen from unusually high runoff and the collapse of a dam upstream, was several feet above flood stage.

In Ashtabula County in eastern Ohio, where Gov. Richard Celeste declared a state of emergency Wednesday night, residents began cleaning up after a tornado and about 6 inches of rain struck the region.

A flood warning was issued for Ohio's Mahoning River, which was expected to reach flood stage today at Youngstown.

Heart surgon says donor network operating poorly

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — The nation's organ-donor network is operating poorly despite a 2-year-old law requiring improvements in the system, says the surgeon who performed the heart transplant on Baby Jesse.

"I'd like to see the recommendations of Congress carried out," Dr. Leonard Bailey said during a Thursday press conference at Loma Linda University Medical Center, where little Jesse Dean Sepulveda was recovering from Tuesday surgery.

Bailey called on the Reagan administration to establish a computer network to match donors with people who need organ transplants.

"The present system is so poorly funded and so poorly controlled... that it can't necesarily ensure that the queue (of organ donors and recipents) is operating properly," Bailey said.

The surgeon said Baby Jesse has continued to improve since he received a healthy heart from a braindead Michigan infant.

Hospital officials reported late Thursday that doctors removed a chest drainage tube from the little boy, and said he "is making adequate progress. All of his systems are functioning normally."

Meanwhile, two infants who previously underwent heart transplant operations at Loma Linda, known only as Baby James and Baby Rachel, recently were readmitted to the hospital for what doctors referred to as rejection episodes, in which the body's immune system tries to attack the transplanted heart.

The two were responding to increased doses of immunosuppressive drugs, Loma Linda officials said.

"This is the natural course of any transplant patient," Bailey said, indicating that he expects all the children will have recurring rejection episodes throughout their lives.

Two other babies who received heart transplants at Loma Linda are healthy.

During the lengthy news conference, Bailey addressed a number of public controversies that have erupted recently, including the nation's donor procurement program and the initial rejection of Jesse as a transplant candidate.

CHECKS

Serving the warrants today were Dettman's two investigators, Jesse Priest and Bob Peetz, along with sheriff's and constable's deputies.

"He (Priest) use to be a Texas Ranger, so he'll know where to find them," Dettman said. "He's good.

He's stepping right in Charlie's shoes. Charlie knew were everyone was and so does Jesse." Charlie is Charlie Jones, Dettman's former chief investigator, who recently retired. Peetz, a former detective, is an instructor in criminal justice at Midland College.

Dettman said that the number of hot checks filtering into his Hot-Check Office is on the increase.

"I don't know if it's the economy or if more merchants are bringing more checks in." His office handles checks in amounts from $20 up to $749.99 and each week consistently processes between $10,000 and $15,000 in hot checks. Over a year's time, that amounts to between $500,000 and $750,000.

Processing those checks are legal secretaries Bobbi Carr and Felis Guerrero of the hot-check staff.

"They are working hard down there and are doing a good job," Dettman said. "Especially since we are on computers, we are becoming much more efficient."

Dettman said that the roundup would continue throughout the summer.

"I don't predict a letup," he said. "We'll find them (hot-check writers). We have a computer. And even if we don't have their addresses, they (eventually) will run a stop sign. The police always run a computer check, and if they get a 'hit,' then we'll have them arrested."

Man shoots three nieces, himself

NEW YORK (AP) — A 36-year-old man shot three of his nieces as they played, killing two of them, then committed suicide with a shotgun blast to his head, police say.

Police Capt. Michael Gardner said the uncle, Frank Edmonds, of Queens, had a history of psychiatric problems and a criminal record dating back to 1966 on various charges, including weapons possession.

Although the specific motive for the shootings was not known, Gardner said the family did not allow Edmonds to enter the house except when his father, Hilbert Edmonds Sr., the owner, was present.

"We can't find out if anybody let him in. We believe he just walked in through an unlocked rear door, but we can't verify it," said Gardner.

Assistant Police Chief Richard Dillon said Edmonds entered the house Thursday through the back door, pulled out a shotgun and went to the basement, where the children were playing in the family room.

There he fired twice, hitting sisters Maraina Edmonds, 3, and Mareeshah Edmonds, 8, and their cousin, Geralyn Edmonds, 8, police said.

Maraina and Geralyn both were shot in the face and died instantly, said Gardner. Mareeshah, who was shot in the shoulder and neck, was taken to Mary Immaculate Hospital, where she was listed in guarded but stable condition today.

Dr. Michael J. Peck said he believed Mareeshah would survive.

SESSION

In a June 10 letter to Clements, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, 13 Democratic senators and one Democratic Senate candidate told the former governor, in the words of one Senate staffer, to "put up or shut up." The senators asked Clements to produce a plan that would balance the budget without reductions in education, highways, law enforcement, prisons, mental health, child welfare, public health and programs for the elderly and disabled.

"The problem of providing necessary state services without added income is too important to be left unsolved longer than absolutely necessary," they wrote. "In the best interest of the State, you should share any such secret plan immediately."

Since February, Clements has said his Democratic opponent White should call a special session immediately to "scrub the budget" to make up a projected $1.3 billion to $2 billion revenue shortfall.

If White complies, Clements has vowed to make public his budget plan. Clements has said only that he would increase state spending for prisons and public safety without raising taxes, but he has refused to outline which services he would cut in return.

Clements campaign spokesman Reggie Bashur said Thursday that the GOP candidate has no line-item budget to share with the Senate and will release no further specifics.

"Bill Clements' plan is the same blueprint and the same series of procedures that he used in his first term," Bashur said of Clements' 1979-1983 stint in the Governor's Mansion. "Bill Clements' plan is on public record."

Hobby and several of the senators who signed the letter said that is not sufficient for them. A spokesman for White said the governor would have no comment.

"He (Clements) ought to quit representing to the people that he has a plan," said Port Arthur Sen. Carl Parker, one of the two senators who drafted the letter. Clements' opposition to any state tax increase coupled with declining state revenues, Parker said, means the former governor is "in fact advocating about a 20-percent increase in local property taxes" to pay for public education alone.

"It offends me that people think that the people of Texas are so dumb that they think they can have a Cadillac for free," Parker, chairman of the Senate Education Committee, said. "And I think the people of Texas want a Cadillac for public education."

Sen. Ray Farabee of Wichita Falls, the powerful chairman of the Senate State Affairs Committee, said the men were serious when they offered to support a call for a special session. "Once you've put it in writing, you've got to," he said.

Farabee said the senators wanted to turn the debate in the gubernatorial race away from personalities and toward "a broader discussion of the issues."

Parker and other senators agreed that the letter had the dual purpose of trying to find a plan to help the state balance the budget and trying to help White in has bitter re-match against Clements. "It's not just a political ploy in my view," said Pasadena Sen. Chet Brooks.

"We would ask the same thing of a Democratic candidate."

Mesquite Sen. Ted Lyon compared Clements secret plan to former President Richard Nixon's "peace is at hand" promise before the 1972 elections.

If Clements is using his first term as a blueprint, Farabee said, that means he knows how to bring the price of oil back to $30 per barrel. "If he could do that, he shouldn't stop at being governor Texas, he could be governor of the universe," Farabee said.

UTPB

The center, he said, will play a "pivotal role" in the strengthening and diversification of the region. "This is the most significant development in the Permian Basin since the establishment of the university, itself," he said.

The center will partner private industry's capital and entrepreneurial skills with the university's access to resources and knowledge of existing research throughout the country. It will focus new marketing and manufacturing opportunities on existing industry, plus act as a clearinghouse to attract other industry, he said.

Dr. Bob Riley, president of Howard County Community College in Big Spring, said "It is my pleasure to represent the community colleges in the Permian Basin and tell the Select Committee that there is a greater cooperation than ever before to provide academic instruction for the citizens of our area. Because UT-Permian Basin is available, it helped the community college enrollment. Students can stay at home and earn their degrees."

Other residents from the area represented were the UT-Permian Basin Boosters and Midland and Odessa task forces.

Shannon Ratliff, vice chairman of the UT Systems Board of Regents, State Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, and Dr. George Kozmentsky, special advisor to UT Systems Board of Regents, also spoke in support of the university.

The University's Development Board's meeting with the Select Committee was planned in January and confirmed in April. A sub-committee of the board comprised of 26 members prepared the agenda for the meeting and the presentation material.

Formal recommendations from the Select Committee regarding higher education in Texas is not expected until January, 1987.

TUTU

The Bureau of Information said today that seven blacks had been killed since the state of emergency was announced, one by security forces and six in black-on-black violence. No details were released.

Botha's office issued no comment on the president's meeting with Tutu, saying only that a meeting took place at Tutu's request.

Tutu told reporters he and Botha had found common ground in that both were South Africans and both opposed communism. "I shouldn't say any more than the fact that obviously one was talking about the situation," the bishop said.

South Africa's largest black newspaper, the Sowetan, said in an editorial that the emergency declaration created "a wave of anger and defiance never seen before."

The newspaper said whites and blacks must unite "in calling for the government to resign and let those who have the country's interests at heart take over. South Africa cannot afford more of this madness."

NATION in brief

Emergency spending bill may halt federal trials

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some federal trials will be halted beginning Monday because of a congressional dispute over an emergency spending bill, a measure that also contains funds for aid-thirsty farmers and homeowners awaiting government loans.

Those problems, and dozens more, depend for solutions on a multi-billion dollar supplemental spending bill designed to carry an array of federal programs through the Sept. 30 end of the fiscal year.

The House passed its $1.7 billion version of the bill more than a month ago. The Senate followed suit last week with a $3.9 billion spending bill that was sharply at odds with the House product, and the Reagan administration Thursday issued a 13-page list of its objections to both measures.

Some progress toward agreement was made during an initial round of closed-door negotiations between the two sides on Thursday, but several contentious issues remained. The conference recessed until Monday after a discussion of the need for quick action on the bill.

Sisters beat burglar

"I wasn't afraid of him. He didn't want to hurt us, he just wanted money, nothing else," Clara Prince, 73, said Thursday.

DeLand police believe a man broke into the bathroom window of the one-story home southwest of town while the sisters were on the other side of the house.

Ms. Prince said she was watching television in the living room when she heard a noise in the kitchen. She called to her sister and rushed to the room, where she surprised a man as he rummaged through a dresser.

She started swinging, she said. The man scrambled.

But at the front door, sister Almeta was waiting with the dishpan, which she liberally used, Clara Prince said of the Wednesday night incident.

The older sister said a small amount of cash was taken in a burglary last week and they were ready for any further invasions of their home.

No arrest was made and police say they have no suspects because the women were so excited about their exploit that they were unable to give a good description of the man.

SDI funding reduced

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's "Star Wars" budget request has been reduced by a Senate panel that normally is friendly to the controversial research program, congressional sources say.

In the first major defense budget vote of the year, the Senate Armed Services strategic and theater nuclear forces subcommittee voted 6-5 late Thursday to reduce Reagan's Star Wars budget request by more than 10 percent, said congressional sources speaking only on condition of anonymity.

For the fiscal year starting Oct. 1, Reagan had sought $4.8 billion in Pentagon spending and another $600 million in related Energy Department spending for the program formally known as the Strategic Defense Initiative.

The Republican-controlled subcommittee, meeting in closed session, reduced the SDI Pentagon budget to $4.2 billion and cut the Energy Department request to $400 million, the sources said. The current SDI budget is $2.7 billion.

The SDI budget faces more attempts to cut it when the Pentagon budget reaches the Senate floor later this summer.

Navajo move criticized

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Federally ordered resettlement of Navajo Indians is like "taking a farmer who's never left his lower 40 and throwing him into New York City," says a lawyer who has sued the government to stop the moves.

Some 10,000 Navajos already have been ordered off disputed land in northeastern Arizona under a 1974 federal law and most have moved to towns and cities, officials said. At least 250 families remain.

Attorney Peter Osetek filed suit against Interior Secretary Donald Hodel and other government officials Wednesday seeking to block further removals of Indians from the disputed 1.8 million acres.

'Summit City' excited

GLASSBORO, N.J. (AP) — Most of the high school seniors who will hear President Reagan's commencement address next week weren't born when President Lyndon Johnson and Soviet leader Alexei Kosygin met here 19 years ago.

When Reagan announced his plans for the visit on Thursday — "It will be my first high school graduation in quite some time," the 75-year-old president said — the community was already abuzz with rumors of a second visit from a chief executive.

Memories of the two-day summit of Johnson and Kosygin June 23-24, 1967, after the Arab-Israeli Six Day War are still strong. "Summit City" signs dot the town and an oil painting of the summit site hangs in town hall.

Glenn Eagro, president of Glassboro High School student government, said he grew up in a house full of pictures of the summit, where his father worked on the security detail.

Rival groups urge members to avoid confrontaion

By DAGMAR OBEREIGNER

DENVER (AP) — The National Organization for Women and the National Right To Life Committee were opening annual meetings here just a few blocks from each other and both groups urged members to avoid confrontations as police braced for possible clashes between rival supporters.

Reports said 75 to 80 extra officers were placed on duty downtown, where the anti-abortion group began its 14th annual meeting Thursday and NOW was to open its 20th anniversary convention today.

The pro-life meeting at the Denver Marriott and NOW's convention at the Radisson Hotel were scheduled here in a week that saw the Supreme Court affirm by a 5-4 vote a woman's right to an abortion.

In a videotaped message to the nearly 2,000 delegates attending the first day of the pro-life committee's three-day meeting Thursday, President Reagan promised to help halt abortion here and abroad.

"This is the ultimate human rights issue," he said.

Dr. Bill Baird, a supporter of legalized abortion, demonstrated briefly outside the building. He carried a cross with a sign saying, "Free Women From the Cross of Religious Oppression and Clinic Violence."

About 400 delegates attended a candlelight rally at the Colorado Capitol, then marched back to their hotel in singing "Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "God Bless America."

Also at the "March for Life" were 40 police officers, who were assigned to the event "just in case," said police Sgt. Brian Deasey.

Abortion clinics have been the targets of protests and violence, including bombings.

The Boulder Abortion Clinic about 30 miles northwest of here has hired armed guards for the weekend, said director Dr. Warren Hern, who was to speak at NOW's three-day convention, beginning today.

Anti-abortion leader Joseph Scheidler of Chicago, who has vowed to close the clinic, was arrested on a Florida warrant as he checked into his hotel here early Thursday. Scheidler, who was charged with conspiracy in a disturbance at a Pensacola, Fla., abortion clinic March 26, was released on a personal recognizance bond.

Scheduled speakers at the NOW meeting inluded President Eleanor Smeal, Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., Denver Mayor Frederico Pena, Colorado first lady Dottie Lamm and Margarita Papandreou, wife of Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou and president of that nation's women's union.

Reagan orders implementation of Challenger recommendations

By MICHAEL PUTZEL

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA is getting marching orders from the White House to implement the Rogers commission recommendations on the space shuttle Challenger — and to report back to President Reagan with a plan of attack.

Administration officials said Reagan would sign a letter directing the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to do what the commission said, despite some concern among experts that complying with all the presidential panel's recommendations could increase costs substantially and delay resumption of shuttle flights beyond the July 1987 target date.

One source said Reagan has confidence in his new NASA administrator, James C. Fletcher, but intends to keep some distance between the White House and the space agency, which the president's investigating commission harshly criticized for management and communications failures leading to the Jan. 28 shuttle disaster.

"They're going to have to work this out," said a White House official, speaking on condition he not be identified. "And we have to be in a position to see that they do."

Another official, also demanding anonymity, said Reagan would give the agency 30 days to report to him how it plans to carry out the panel recommendations. The commission, chaired by former Attorney General and Secretary of State William P. Rogers, on Monday called for the redesign and full-scale testing of a new booster rocket joint to replace the one it blamed for the explosion that destroyed Challenger and killed seven astronauts.

The panel said the new booster design should be tested vertically, rather than horizontally as it had in the past, regardless of a senior NASA engineer's estimate that building vertical test stands could take 15 months.

Off-duty policeman surrenders after chase

APPLE VALLEY, Minn. (AP) — An off-duty police officer holding a gun to his head and threatening suicide led authorities on a 14-mile, high-speed chase before surrendering after a three-hour standoff on an interstate highway.

Dennis R. Seiz sobbed as he threw his arms around Dakota County Capt. Gary McCloud, a friend and one of the negotiators involved in the Thursday standoff.

Earlier, officers from four departments chased Seiz's car at speeds up to 100 mph before he stopped along Interstate 35E.

Deputy St. Paul Police Chief John Nord said police knew that Seiz, an Eagan resident who works for the University of Minnesota police, was contemplating suicide.

Police had been told about his mental condition by concerned callers who said Seiz had threatened suicide to social service workers, Nord said.

Police approached the 6-foot, 3-inch Seiz, but he displayed a revolver and threatened to kill himself or someone else if anyone came closer to his car, Nord said. Seiz then drove away with officers in pursuit.

STATE

Bush tops list of luminaries flocking to GOP convention

DALLAS (AP) — Vice President George Bush heads the list of political luminaries who will gather with Texas Republicans at their state convention later this month.

As many as 8,000 Republicans are expected June 27-28 at the Dallas Convention Center, where Bush and President Reagan were renominated in 1984, Texas GOP Chairman George Strake said Thursday.

"We've had an incredible response from our national political leaders" to invitations to come to Texas, Strake said. "And the interest level is higher than it ever has been in our history."

Other speakers scheduled to address delegates as they chose party leaders and a platform include U.S. Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., Treasury Secretary Jim Baker, Secretary of the Interior Don Hodel and Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole.

"Texas is key to any candidate's operation," Strake said, conceding that "some of our speakers are looking at 1988."

But he said that state Republicans are "more concerned with retiring Gov. Mark White."

That task is all the more difficult since the number of large contributors to the Texas GOP has declined since 1984, Strake said. Two years ago, 338 people each gave more than $1,000, but that number dwindled to 190 last year.

Nevertheless, the number of contributors has swelled considerably, from 23,000 in 1983 to 90,000 this year, he said.

"We just have to run smarter campaigns," he said. "We need to tighten up."

As part of a fund-raising drive, the GOP has scheduled a VIP reception at Fair Park, to be followed by a performance from country singer Charley Pride. A prayer breakfast to be held the following morning is already sold out.

Former Gov. Bill Clements, who won his party's nomination in the May 3 primary, will be introduced at the June 27-28 convention by his unsuccessful opponents, Kent Hance and Tom Loeffler.

In addition, Strake is pitted against state GOP Chairwoman Diana Denman of San Antonio in his bid for re-election as state party chairman.

The GOP convention, formerly split into summer and autumn installments, has been consolidated into one affair. Strake and Dallas County Commissioner Jim Jackson, chairman of the convention's arrangements committee, said that move should not be counteracted with a regional primary.

Several states have already agreed to participate in a Southern Regional primary, and Texas is considering the move.

Firms near derailment forced to shut down

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The lengthy cleanup of a train derailment has cost businesses in the vicinity hundreds of thousands of dollars because they have been forced to shut down.

"Each day this goes on, it gets worse," said Tom Rice, general manager of Vaughan and Sons Lumber Co. But he added, "We want to be sure it is safe."

Rice's business, as well as others in the area, has been shut down since Sunday when 32 cars on a Union Pacific freight train derailed.

The derailment caused an explosion and the burning of several cars hauling butadiene, a gas used in the manufacture of rubber and plastics, and formaldehyde.

Officials, who decided to let the resulting fire burn itself out, ordered an evacuation of businesses and homes within a 2,500-foot radius.

Initially, 2,000 people were forced from their homes, but by Thursday, the number had been reduced to about 750.

Union Pacific officials said it probably would be sometime this weekend before everyone would be allowed to return to their homes.

Work crews Thursday were attempting to burn off the remaining chemicals inside the derailed cars. Officials said this step is the most dangerous.

"We could have a violent explosion," said Denny Day, general manager of Western Emergency Services, a consultant in the cleanup project.

"Our business has been a total loss because of this," said Larry Jones, general manager of Goldthwaite's of San Antonio, a supplier of golf course materials.

Jones said the derailment came at the busiest time of the year for his business.

"It's a big concern and a big worry for all of us," Jones said. "It's unfortunate that we can't do anything about this."

Jones said he has contacted claims adjusters with the railroad but he is not sure if he will be reimbursed for the estimated $37,000 he is losing daily in sales.

Jack Stiffler, sales manager of Kobel Enterprises, said the evacuation has cost his business hundreds of thousands of dollars.

In another development, San Antonio River Authority officials said the fish kill in the Salado Creek because of the derailment was extensive but not total.

Mike Gonzales, SARA environmental services chief, said the chemicals that spilled into the water absorb oxygen, killing the fish.

Most of the fish were killed near the derailment site, but other dead fish were seen downstream.

If there are no more chemicals dumped in the water, the kill should not spread much further, he said.

Meanwhile, officials said they probably will never be able to identify the bodies of the two men found in the derailed train.

"It's a long shot. I wouldn't be surprised if these two victims remain unidentified," said Frank Castillion, chief investigator with the Bexar County Medical Examiner's Office.

One of the men appears to have been in his late teens, while the other was 15 to 17 years old, he said. The victims are believed to be transients who were riding on the train when it derailed and exploded.

'Public servant' no longer honorable term

TEXARKANA (AP) — The term "public servant" used to be an honorable one, but many people today often consider public servants to be "crooks" or "bums," a broadcasting executive said.

William S. Banowsky, president of Gaylord Broadcasting in Dallas, spoke Thursday to about 150 elected officials attending the first full day of activities of the North and East Texas County Judges' and Commissioners' Association in Texarkana.

Public servants and school teachers are in the same position, Banowsky said, as the roles of both in society have been denigrated.

Banowsky, an active Republican, said one of the things he likes about Democratic Gov. Mark White is White's efforts to do something about education reform and help public teachers.

Public teachers teach because they care, Banowsky said, and public servants are in their positions for the same reason. He said he knows and appreciates the role of the public servant.

"Think of all the things you wire and put together and patch up," Banowsky said.

Public servants attend endless meetings and have to deal with all kinds of bureaucratic red tape, he said.

Banowsky said one of the problems he has with today's young people is their seemingly endless fascination with the pursuit of the "buck."

As a former president of Pepperdine University and the University of Oklahoma, Banowsky said he first became a college president in the late 1960s when students wore long hair and the U.S. flag on the seat of their pants.

They seethed with hatred and rebellion, he said, and majored in subjects like philosophy, psychology and sociology.

White welcomes Silver-Haired Legislature's members

AUSTIN (AP) — Newly elected members of the Silver-Haired Legislature have been welcomed to the lawmaking process by Gov. Mark White.

"Senior Texans now have a chance to gain understanding of the legislative process through direct involvement," White said Thursday in recognizing the 116 representatives of the elderly who will meet here Sept. 29.

"Senior Texans will now have the opportunity to establish legislative priorities for Texas lawmakers to consider in January," White told a news conference.

He received a list of the 116 members of the non-partisan organization of Texans 60 years of age and older from Harriet Griffin of Fort Worth, chairman of the steering committee.

The Silver-Haired Legislature was created by a resolution of the 1985 Legislature. On May 30, about 150,000 older Texans elected the 116 representatives from 28 districts over the state.

On Sept. 29, the mock Legislature will be convened in the Capitol by White for three days of committee hearings and debate before selecting the issues they think should have priority in 1987.

A training session for the 116 representatives will be held in July by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

"I am pleased Texas has joined the list of 22 other states in sponsoring such a program," White said Thursday.

"Some might ask why the Silver-Haired Legislature was created. For too many years, there was no forum for senior Texans to discuss issues that concern them and no avenue in which to present their concerns to the regular legislature.

"Senior Texans represent a vast, untapped reserve of knowledge and experience, and their numbers are growing," White said.

The governor said that in other states with a similar program, 70 percent of the ideas that came out of Silver-Haired Legislatures have become law. In Arkansas, 90 percent of the proposals later became law, he said.

"There is an impressive group coming to Austin," White said, giving as examples the election of a former state representative, two retired judges and three retired educators.

Although created by the 1985 Legislature, the Silver-Haired Legislature was provided no state money.

White not too proud to ask Mississippians for help

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White says he's not embarrassed at needing the Mississippi National Guard's help in airlifting the Goddess of Liberty to the Capitol dome.

The troops are every bit as welcome as the Mississippians who fought in the Texas Revolution 150 years ago, he said Thursday.

"William Barret Travis, he wasn't offended by having some Mississippians over there at the Alamo. And Sam Houston thought it was a good idea to have a few there at San Jacinto. I think it's nice they're coming over to help," White said.

The Texas National Guard failed in 25 tries May 31 and June 1 to place the 3,000-pound statue on the dome using a CH-47 Chinook helicopter. Texas officials then asked for Mississippi's help.

Guard officials said the Mississippi unit has a CH-54A "Skycrane" helicopter that is more suited to the delicate job of lowering the 16-foot statue onto its 300-foot perch.

The Mississippians will try to do it Saturday, weather permitting.

White said he's pleased Texas will have the assistance of Mississippi residents — again.

According to the Daughters of the Republic of Texas research library in San Antonio, four Mississippians were among the 188 defenders of the Alamo.

Other Mississippi residents fought alongside Texans at the Battle of San Jacinto, when Texans won their independence from Mexico in 1836.

Veteran relinquishes honor to restore peace of mind

SEASIDE, Calif. (AP) — A World War II veteran, protesting the decoration of soldiers who invaded Grenada and were wounded in the Berlin disco bombing, has shipped his Bronze Star and three Purple Hearts to President Reagan.

"These medals always made me feel proud," said retired Army Capt. Ralph Alcocer, who won his medals in combat in Europe. "But now they've been cheapened by the president giving the same kinds of medals to troops in terrorist bombings or a police action."

Alcocer, 69, said he was outraged when he read that the president awarded Purple Hearts to U.S. soldiers wounded in the April terrorist bombing of a West German disco that killed three people, including two U.S. servicemen.

"During the war we lived in worry and fear," said Alcocer, a first sergeant in a rifle company who received a battlefield commission while fighting his way across France, Belgium and Germany.

"It's unfair to equate our fighting an enemy and getting wounded with soldiers hurt in a German nightclub while they were partying," he said.

He said he returned his Bronze Star because he heard the "medal was given to GIs who didn't even get off the boat in the Grenada invasion."

Alcocer on Saturday said he shipped the medals several days ago.

Alcocer, who retired from the Army in 1964, said his wartime outfit, the 378th Regiment of the 95th Infantry Division, suffered 80 percent casualties.

Maj. Bruce Bell, an Army spokesman, said 37 Purple Hearts were awarded to U.S. soldiers injured in the Berlin bombing. The president signed an executive order in 1984 approving the issuance of medals to U.S. soldiers who are the victims of "state-sponsored terrorism," he said.

Snuff chemical poses 'major concern'

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A U.S. Tobacco Co. task force formed in response to increasing medical research linking snuff use to cancer, identified one of the chemicals in snuff as a "major health concern," according to a company document read in federal court.

Louis F. Bantle, U.S. Tobacco chairman, rebutted the statement in videotaped testimony Tuesday during the trial of a $147 million lawsuit against the company.

The lawsuit was filed by Betty Ann Marsee of Ada, Okla. Mrs. Marsee contends six years of snuff dipping by her son, Sean, led to his death at 19. The youth used snuff made by U.S. Tobacco.

During this week's testimony, Mrs. Marsee's attorney, George Braly, questioned Bantle on his company's stand against warning labels on snuff cans.

Bantle called the possibility that snuff cans would have to bear a U.S. surgeon general's warning the "downside" of growing publicity about snuff use and cancer, according to a 1983 letter from Bantle to a company executive that was read in court.

The letter mentioned lobbying Washington sources against a warning label requirement.

"If we don't get there first, the American Cancer Society will," Braly quoted Bantle's letter as saying.

The company task force on government regulation of smokeless tobacco was formed in 1983, according to testimony. Bantle said the task force statement that a chemical in snuff was a major health concern did not represent his position or that of U.S. Tobacco.

Bantle said he would not have fought warning labels if he had believed U.S. Tobacco products caused cancer.

Braly read statements by the U.S. surgeon general, the Swedish government and national and international cancer research agencies concerning snuff use. The findings, in varying degrees, tied snuff use to cancer in humans.

Bantle said he had not known of all of the research results cited by Braly.

Soviets' 'boss' brings band to U.S.

WASHINGTON — Stas Namin, who might best be described as the Soviets' Bruce Springsteen, will bring his popular rock band to Los Angeles and 10 other American cities for the first time this fall on a joint U.S.-Soviet musical production tour called "Peace Child," it was announced here this week.

Stas Namin has reportedly sold 25 million records in eastern bloc countries. The troupe will also include Namin's wife, Soviet folk singing star Ludmilla Sentchina, and 12 youths aged 12 to 20 from each country who will perform a play in which children persuade Soviet and American leaders to cooperate and ensure peace.

The play was performed by American and Soviet youths in Moscow last July. But the new trip, sponsored by the nonprofit Peace Child Foundation and Moscow's world trade center, marks the first time that Soviet and American children will tour both countries together.

Conservationists attack redfish plunder

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The U.S. Commerce Department will not halt the harvest of redfish in the Gulf of Mexico despite a request by a 30,000-member conservation group.

The Coastal Conservation Association, meeting in Houston, asked this week for an immediate moratorium on redfishing in federal waters. The association says boats using large purse seines are damaging redfish spawning stock.

Overharvesting could jeopardize the species' long-term viability and cause the entire fishery to collapse, the association says. But Thomas Dawley, National Marine Fisheries Service statistics supervisor for Louisiana, Alabama and Mississippi, said that there will be no moratorium. Instead, the service will establish a Gulfwide quota on catching redfish during the 90 days starting July 1, he said.

That probably will be extended another 90 days as the service studies the effect of heavy fishing on redfish and prepares a redfish management plan for the Gulf, he said.

The plan was announced last month, but the quota has not been determined.

Dawley said the service is considering 1 million pounds for each three-month period.

"The quota will be very tightly enforced," he said.

Mark Hilzim, executive director of the Gulf Coast Conservation Association of Louisiana, said a moratorium would be better. There is not enough scientific data to determine at what point the redfish stock would be damaged, he said.

A major national market for redfish developed a few years ago as Cajun cooking in general, and a dish called blackened redfish in particular became more popular.

Concern for the redfish population has grown with the dramatic annual increase in catches over five years.

The Coastal Conservation Association cited a new study showing the catch in the Gulf's federal waters rose from 54,000 pounds in 1980 to 5.4 million pounds in 1985. At the current rate, the small fleet of less than a dozen purse seine boats operating in the federal zones will take more than 10 million pounds of redfish this year, the group said.

He's ... affable!

Ronald Reagan is, so darn, well, uh ... affable!

Detractors of President Reagan are sometimes so hard put to find the right critical word that they call him "affable," doing their best to pronounce it in derogatory tones. In fact, one gets the impression from some of them that they do not like to admit that the nation's economy has been on the upswing for more than three and a half years under his administration, and that more than 70 percent of the American people approve of his leadership. That is an even higher rating than Americans gave to the popular President Eisenhower.

But there are those who apparently believe that easygoing likeability isn't a proper demeanor for the nation's top leader. That's curious. What is suitable demeanor?

The fact is our president is affable, which Webster defines as the state of being pleasant and at ease in talking with others, and after all these years of so being there is no sign that he is about to change. He was at his affable best in addressing the graduating class of the United States Marines at Parris Island the other day. He was the first chief executive to visit there since Franklin D. Roosevelt made the trip in 1943.

Reagan, always comfortable in his surroundings with whomever he is speaking and always ready and able to put others at ease, obviously enjoyed donning a Marine cap and saluting the graduates. But his affability did not overshadow some serious notes in his remarks, such as a reminder that the nation's security depends on an adequate defense budget. With typical candor he said to the recruits, "Pride is back. Patriotism is back. America's military is back and standing tall."

The economy is not the only reason for Ronald Reagan's high standing with the people. He is not ashamed to talk of pride and patriotism like a true believer. He is not encumbered with a lack of sensitivity for this nation's past or future. He is a proud American and he exudes pride in country for those he is around.

Ronald Reagan is in a word — affable!

The Marines heard some words they will not soon forget.

Another View:

Pressure on Mexico

Time is running out for debt-ridden Mexico, once again in financial crisis. Export revenues, cut one-third by the oil glut, fall well short of covering the country's minimum needs. Foreign exchange reserves are dwindling and panic has hit the peso. A short-term rescue package is being negotiated with the Reagan administration involving funds from several sources. Without it, the prospects are default or hyperinflation or political crisis or some combination of the three.

Left to its own resources, Mexico has only unpalatable choices. Default could mean a loss of further foreign credits. More austerity risks a political explosion in an already hard-pressed population. New import restrictions could anger trading partners and impede fresh growth, thus closing the only route to eventual debt repayment.

Since Mexico's problems also threaten other countries, notably the United States, some negotiated relief seems likely. Negotiations imply a deal: money for something. What should the Reagan administration be asking?

More belt-tightening seems inappropriate. Instead of further squeezing a dried-up economy, Washington should encourage the phasing out of old-fashioned statist policies that have squandered resources and inhibited Mexico's growth. This may be the moment to push Mexico toward an economy that can produce surpluses without artificially high oil prices and exploiting its poorest citizens' labor.

Mexico's Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, acquired power by revolution but clings to it by patronage and a heavy-handed domination of the economy. State companies that respond as much to political as economic imperatives control oil production and refining, dominate such key industries as steelmaking and strongly influence activity in many other sectors.

Political leaders promise new plants and public works in exchange for votes. Jobs are then assigned and wage rates set to pay off the PRI's political debts. The system impoverishes an already weak economy. While tariffs and regulations are deployed to protect some favored industrialists, other investors escape the rigged system by sending their money abroad. The capital thus lost may be as much as the entire foreign debt.

The PRI boasts that this system preserves political stability. But it has also meant six decades of one-party rule, with all the rot and immobility that implies. Mexico cannot afford its rigidities; they threaten both stability and development.

Now is the time to reduce both the state's role in the economy and the privileges of the PRI-favored few. Mexico's leaders may find it hard to ditch the main props of their power. But let them stare at the alternatives and feel some friendly pressure from next door.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

Twenty years ago, on June 13, 1966, the U.S. Supreme Court issued its landmark Miranda vs. Arizona decision. The court held that a criminal suspect cannot be interrogated by police until he is informed of his constitutional rights, including the right to remain silent and to seek legal counsel.

On this date:

In 1886, King Ludwig II of Bavaria drowned.

In 1927, a ticker-tape parade welcomed aviator Charles A. Lindbergh to New York.

Ten years ago: Investigative reporter Don Bolles of The Arizona Republic died, 11 days after a bomb exploded inside his car.

Five years ago: The U.N. Security Council debated Israel's attack on an Iraqi nuclear reactor; a British teenager fired six blanks at Queen Elizabeth during a ceremony in London; rescue workers in Frascati, Italy, gave up trying to save 6-year-old Alfredo Rampi, who'd been trapped in a deep well for more than 60 hours.

One year ago: Trans World Airlines appeared to have fought off a hostile takeover bid by financier Carl C. Icahn when it agreed to be taken over by Texas Air Corp. However, Icahn eventually won control of TWA.

Thought for today: "Peace without justice is tyranny." — William Allen White, American writer and newspaper editor (1868-1944).

$6 million and still no envoy's home

WASHINGTON — In Egypt, land of the pyramids, lavish construction projects are certainly nothing new. But the U.S. government's extravagant 20-year effort to provide a suitably posh residence for the American ambassador would make a pharaoh blush.

Jack Anderson

So far, the boondoggle has swallowed $6 million of taxpayers' money like so much dishwater poured onto the sands of the Sahara — and with about as much effect. There is still no residence.

Here's the story, as gleaned by our associate Lucette Lagnado from internal State Department documents, including an inspector general's report and a General Accounting Office study requested by Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas:

In 1966, State purchased an elegant villa in the ritzy Cairo suburb of Giza, near the Pyramids. The house dated back to the British colonial era and was magnificently situated on the banks of the Nile. All it seemed to need was some refurbishing to transform it into an impressive ambassadorial residence.

But this modest undertaking was stopped cold when Egypt broke off diplomatic relations after its disastrous defeat by Israel in the 1967 war. When relations were resumed in 1974, the State Department raised the residential ante with a two-pronged approach: Renovation of the Giza property would resume, while a second mansion was purchased to house the ambassador in the meantime.

The new property, purchased in 1975, was a mansion in the suburb of Maadi. It cost $1.8 million, and an additional $1 million was spent fixing it up. That was accomplished in only four years.

But when it was ready for occupancy, the ambassador, Hermann Eilts, refused to move in. He complained that it was too far from the embassy in downtown Cairo, and grumbled that no other ambassadors were living in the neighborhood. He also faulted the security arrangements.

So the ambassador pre-empted the home of the charge d'affaires, a relatively modest place in the Zamalek suburb. The fancy digs in Maadi were left unoccupied.

Meanwhile, then-President Anwar Sadat decided he wanted the Giza property — the first site, remember? — for his own use. So State turned it over to him, and demolition crews leveled the old colonial residence on the Nile.

Then Sadat changed his mind and returned the bulldozed site to the State Department, which hired a Washington architectural firm to design a new residence.

There were some problems — including a cost overrun of more than 100 percent of the original $180,000 contract — but eventually the design was accepted despite the misgivings, and an Egyptian construction company was contracted to build the house. "Apparently, no attempt was made to conduct a pre-award survey to determine if (the builder) was financially or technically qualified," the inspector general noted.

In fact, the contractor had previously done inferior work for the embassy, the inspector general noted.

The results were predictable. As the years — and the millions — rolled on, the project became a shambles. A former embassy official informed Washington by letter that it "is the most poorly constructed project I have ever seen," and said one observer "described it as looking like Swiss cheese."

A special investigating team from Washington reported that the building "can be made functional only at great effort and expense and can never be brought up to the level of quality originally intended."

The expensive wreck now at Giza sits vacant. "For Sale" signs are posted on it and the Maadi home. So far, there have been no takers.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: The Argentine armed forces may not have performed so brilliantly with their modern weapons of war, but they're experts in selling them, according to State Department sources. And politics doesn't play much of a role. For instance, Argentina and Israel have been involved in joint weapons development and production of jet trainers, tanks and other armored vehicles. But the Argentine government has also sold sophisticated weapons to Arab states, notably Iraq. And it exports arms and agricultural products to Persian Gulf countries, including Iran, as well as grain and technology to Algeria.

Pollard case causes 'unbridgeable split'

WASHINGTON — The disturbing factor in the Reagan administration's split over the Pollard spy case is that it cannot be bridged by smooth-sounding statements, a concern that almost produced a telephone appeal to FBI Director William Webster from State Department legal counsel Abraham Sofaer last week.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Sofaer was aghast at Webster's careful, on-the-record remark to The New York Times that Israel had been "selective" in its cooperation with U.S. efforts to get to the bottom of Israeli espionage. At the last moment, officials told us, Sofaer decided his phone call to Judge Webster might be misunderstood if it got out. On Monday, the smooth-sounding statement was put out by the State Department alleging administration harmony.

A call from shrewd ex-judge Sofaer would have changed nothing in the Justice Department or the FBI, illustrating the incurable split between diplomats and prosecutors even over questioning Israeli Gen. Aviem Sella. As of today, Secretary of State George Shultz holds high cards because the administration wants no damage done to the intimacy it has built in U.S.-Israeli relations. But Justice's success in extracting Jonathan Jay Pollard's confession has given prosecutors new muscle.

The question whether Air Force Gen. Sella, allegedly Pollard's first case officer here, should or should not be questioned on his own role in Pollard's espionage for Israel delineates the stark divergence in practice and psychology between State and Justice.

The State Department view is that Sella should be encouraged to answer questions but that Israel cannot be held accountable if he declines the honor or tells nothing. That is because the Israeli government's claim to have been ignorant of the espionage has not been officially disproved and the diplomats at State want very much to believe it.

The law-enforcement establishment, disagreeing, views questioning of Sella as dubious; he would probably add nothing to the extensive file of information obtained from Pollard's plea-bargaining. Theoretically, the recently-promoted Air Force general could be charged in the case, but extradition of Israeli citizens to the U.S. is in most cases impossible.

Justice Department officials have insisted ever since Pollard's June 4 guilty plea that Prime Minister Peres never has delivered on his pledge to investigate his own government's role in the case. If he had, Sella's alleged role as Pollard's first case officer would have been uncovered by Israel and not, as it was, by Justice Department investigators. With that backdrop, what these hard-headed investigators see in Israel is stonewalling.

The State Department claimed that Attorney General Edwin Meese personally collaborated on the department's statement last Monday, drafted with the help of White House aides, but Justice officials denied that. He did agree with its finding that "successful prosecution" of Pollard was made possible by Israel's cooperation. But he also has agreed privately that Judge Webster correctly defined Israel's cooperation as "selective."

The suspicion of Israel's overall conduct by counter-intelligence officials, as contrasted to the diplomats' desire not to find evidence of Israeli government complicity, was fed by one vagrant document. Found in the telltale suitcase that Pollard's wife was unable to get rid of, this document was described in the indictment as a letter to Pollard's alleged second handler, Yossi Yagur. It dealt with "missile systems designed or manufactured by various non-communist countries, which might be available for sale to Iran."

U.S. investigators recently uncovered an alleged multimillion-dollar "private" sale of U.S. arms to Iran and arrested as one of the dealers an Israeli identified by the U.S. Customs Service as a retired army general. The Israeli government, as it has done in the Pollard spy case, insisted it had no knowledge or connection with the sale.

The reason Pollard's letter particularly caught investigators' eye is the fact that the U.S. has obtained pledges from Israel not to sell arms to Iran. Despite this administration appeal to Israel over Iran, the state that humiliated the U.S. in the hostage crisis and that threatens American interests in the Persian Gulf, suspicions have lingered that Israel was indeed trafficking — or aware of trafficking — in arms to Tehran.

The Pollard letter to Yagur appeared to U.S. investigators as evidence backing these suspicions. Yet, diplomats at the State Department have publicly and repeatedly exonerated the Israeli government from all charges of conspiring to sell the Ayatollah Khomeini any arms.

Hence the unbridgeable split that cuts a political gash through the middle of the Reagan administration. Pollard himself will have a lot to say about narrowing — or widening — the split. It depends more on what he may still have to say than it does on competing Reagan administration officials.

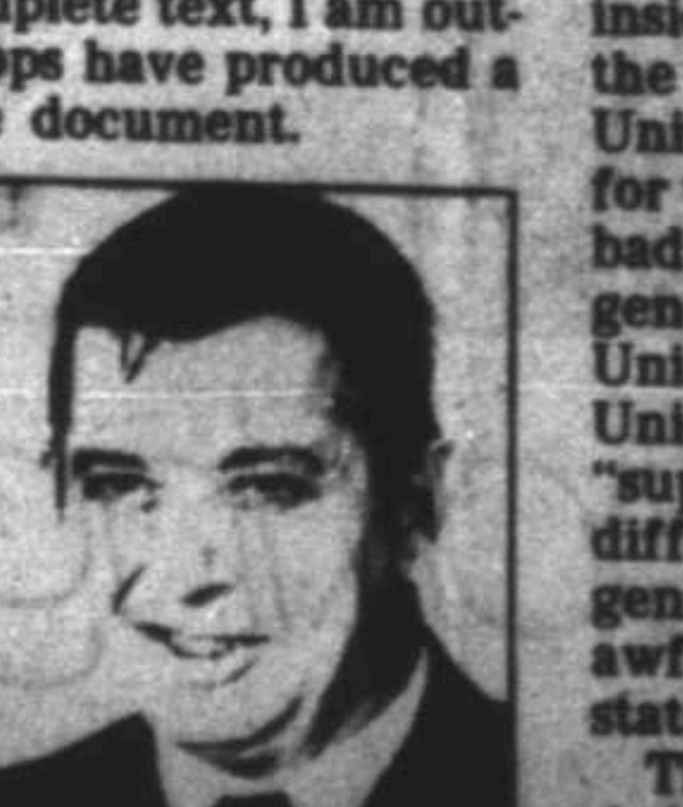
CHARLEY REESE

Bishops' statement infuriating document

A few weeks ago I took exception to the United Methodist Council of Bishops' statement on nuclear weapons, based on a summary of its findings. Now, having read the complete text, I am outraged. The bishops have produced a morally obscene document.



Charley Reese

Anybody who, as the bishops clearly do, asserts the moral equivalence of the United States and the Soviet Union is committing a morally obscene act. It is the same as saying that Jews and Nazis were participants in the Holocaust. It is the same as saying that the Germans and the Poles started World War II. It is the same as saying that a rape victim and the rapist committed rape.

How can anyone claim moral authority without making the distinction between the victim and the aggressor, between arms reluctantly taken up in defense and arms eagerly procured for aggression?

If you will read the full text of this insidious document, you will see that the bishops place equal blame on the United States and the Soviet Union for the arms race. As if that were not bad enough, they are much more generous in their criticism of the United States than of the Soviet Union. They constantly refer to the "superpowers," as if there were no difference between a free, peaceful, generous and open society and the awful tyranny of the totalitarian state.

They assert, for example, that U.S. defense is being purchased with food stamps, welfare checks, rent subsidies, Medicaid payments, school lunches, and nutrition supplements for poor mothers. This is a flat lie. Defense constitutes 30 percent of the federal budget. The bishops' claim that it constitutes more than half of all discretionary spending is a clever lawyer trick. The truth is that Congress has made most of the welfare spending non-discretionary. We are spending $18 billion on food programs. President Reagan requested $8.2 billion for development and manufacture of nuclear weapons, and he won't get that much.

The bishops even imply that there is a racist element of American defense. "Clearly, the demilitarization of America must be accompanied by a powerful new national commitment to equal opportunity for racially-disadvantaged people."

They then indulge in a little character assassination. Apparently those of us who wish to remain strong so we can remain free are bad apples. The bishops say, "The legitimate need for self-respect as a nation must be lifted above the relentless barrage of aggressive, competitive, and chauvinist sentiments which assault them not only in political rhetoric but also in commercial, recreational and even educational institutions." Watch out, Rambo.

Then they make the most amazing statement of all: "Each government has given the other abundant cause for grievance since 1917."

Each government? Maybe they refer to the Hoover group that saved millions from starvation after the Bolshevik Revolution. Maybe we provoked them by granting them diplomatic recognition even as they were committing genocide against the Ukrainian people? Perhaps we provoked them by providing U.S. investments and technology in the 1930s. Perhaps it was a grievance when we gave them $11 billion in military aid when their own Nazi ally turned on them? Perhaps we offended them by offering to turn over our nuclear facilities and technology to an international agency, an offer they rejected out of hand. Perhaps we offended them by not insisting they live up to their agreements. Perhaps we offended them by standing by as they crushed the liberty and lives of the East Germans, the Poles, the Hungarians and the Czechs. Maybe we provoked them by protesting the shooting down of a civilian airliner, the invasion of Afghanistan, the consistent support of terrorism and the murder of countless millions of people.

The Soviets will be pleased with the bishops' efforts.

Aviation buffs shed light on first aircraft

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. (AP) — History books credit Wilbur and Orville Wright with building the first manned, powered airplane, but local aviation enthusiasts are out to prove that an unsung inventor beat them into the air by two years.

Gustave Whitehead may have flown his 16-foot airplane over Connecticut on Aug. 14, 1901, two years before Orville Wright's first flight, says William O'Dwyer, a retired Air Force pilot and leader of the group.

O'Dwyer's backers have built a replica of Whithead's model No. 21, and a tethered gliding test is planned for Saturday in Stratford. In two early spring trials, the plane, tethered on a truck trailer going 25 mph, rose a few inches into the air and stayed up, keeping its wings trim.

If replicas of Whitehead's twin engines are successful, hang-glider pilot Andrew Kosch says he may try to fly the replica in a powered flight later this summer to show that the German immigrant, who died in 1927, could have flown before the Wrights.

"If our airplane flies, it will kind of shoot Orville (Wright) out of the traffic pattern," said O'Dwyer, 65, who has researched Whitehead for more than 22 years.

In finished form, No. 21 will have a bathtub-shaped canvas and spruce fuselage sitting on four wheels and retractable, moth-like wings of silk stretched over bamboo. Blueprints were drawn up from photos of the original No. 21 and known measurements.

"It looks just like a hang glider," said Kosch, the replica's chief builder and a high school biology teacher. "When I saw (the design for) the darn thing, I thought it would be an easy thing to build and fly."

According to some newspaper and other accounts that O'Dwyer has found, Whitehead took No. 21 up for a half-mile powered flight on Aug. 14, 1901.

The honor of first controlled, sustained and fully powered flight traditionally has been reserved for the Wright brothers' 120-foot, 12-second journey on Dec. 17, 1903, at Kitty Hawk, N.C.

The Wrights are supported by the Smithsonian Institution, which signed a 1948 agreement with the estate of Orville Wright that allowed the museum to display the rebuilt 1903 Wright aircraft. The agreement stipulated that the Wright heirs could reclaim the plane if the museum ever suggested that someone else flew first.

"The contract is deadly," O'Dwyer says of the agreement. "It forbids research of anyone who flew before the Wright brothers. They (the Smithsonian) made them gods. They weren't gods. They were pioneers."

Peter Jakab, curator of early aviation at the Smithsonian's National Air and Space Museum, vehemently contradicts O'Dwyer.

"If it came to light that Gustave Whitehead or anyone else was the first to fly, we would come out and say that. We wouldn't say anything to keep any artifact," he said in a recent telephone interview.

Evidence that O'Dwyer has published about Whitehead "doesn't seem to support that he made the kind of flights that constitute the invention of the airplane," Jakab said.

O'Dwyer's evidence includes three newspaper acounts of the 1901 flight. He also has found descriptions of the plane and a statement saying Whitehead flew in 1901 in old editions of Scientific American magazine. And he has a taped interview with a witness who said she saw Whitehead "go up and down."

Although Jakab had not heard about the witness interview, he said most of the evidence he has seen is "conflicting and confusing" and that there has been trouble verifying the newspaper articles.

Texas couple share life, land and language with purple martin flock

BELLS, Texas (AP) — It's a short drive east of Sherman on Highway 82 to Bells, where Bill Harrison and his wife, Sara, live. Just west of their house is a small field fenced with barbed wire. A dozen bird houses perch on 12-foot-high poles which stand in the field's half-mowed grass.

Long recovered from their two-month South American migration, the purple martins (they're actually steel blue or black) dart in and out of the homemade white houses with green trim. One or more birds may perch on a ledge, resting quietly in the afternoon breeze.

Without warning, a martin spreads its wings and takes to the air, cutting through the southerly wind. It searches for food, mainly insects and water, or for things only martins seek. The birds chatter back and forth, their calls occasionally drowned out by the sounds of trucks on the highway.

"They definitely have their own language," Harrison said, listening to their chirp — maybe a better word would be squawk. "I speculate on what they're saying, but you'll never know."

Harrison built the first of the 12 bird houses eight years ago.

"Once I got them started living in the houses," he said, "they've been back every year."

Although only seven of the 12 poles support multi-holed houses — several rotted last year and haven't been replaced — the number of visiting martins has remained constant.

"I would say, on average, 50 pair nest here a year," he said. "That's a good many."

A nature lover, the 65-year-old retired Air Force master sergeant gazes thoughtfully at the plywood structures that serve as the birds' homes.

"They're a remarkable bird," Harrison said. "I have a special feel for martins because they travel so far to come up here and nest."

Pointing to an egg shell on the ground, the Cherry Mound native drops bits of information gleaned from books and by observing the birds for years.

"Some of them already have young — that's why the shells are on the ground, where they've cleaned out their nests," he said. "It'll only be a few days 'til you see the little heads sticking out of the holes, looking for food.

"They (the older birds) eat whatever they catch on the wing," Harrison said as he watched a martin light on a house ledge. "That's the way they drink, too — they never light. They just dip their head and scoop water as they fly across."

"In the morning, when they're feeding, the whole sky will be full of them, and they'll swoop in and fold those wings up, and hit those holes like a bullet," he said.

"Some birders claim one martin will eat 2,000 to 3,000 mosquitoes a day. We never have any mosquitoes outside the house.

Program helps black students

EVANSTON, Ill. (AP) — An innovative program at Northwestern University has enabled 75 percent of black engineering students to graduate in four years, more than double the national average, says William T. Brazelton, director of the Minority Engineering Opportunity Program.

Less than 35 percent of minorities complete their degree program, according to the National Action Council for Minorities in Engineering.

Before the university began the program in 1978, 40 percent of its black engineers graduated in four years.The majority of those students not completing their engineering studies pursued a liberal arts program at Northwestern or another institution.

The university has also increased black engineering enrollment from 8.1 percent to 11.5 percent during the same period.

A pre-freshman summer program and the Northwestern Society of Black Engineers are two keys to the success of the MEOP program, says Brazelton, associate dean of the university's Technological Institute, its engineering school.

Northwestern offers a summer program of mathematics, chemistry, computer science, communication skills, study skills and career planning to help prepare minority freshmen for college-level engineering courses.

"Students participating in summer classes write more accurately, clearly and persuasively; their oral skills have improved; and their anxiety over essay tests has been reduced," said Brazelton, winner of the 1986 Vincent Bendix Minorities in Engineering Award, who has directed the development of MEOP since its inception.

"In addition, their grade point averages are substantially higher than those predicted by their high school class rank and Scholastic Aptitude Test scores," he said. "The summer program identifies students' weak areas and helps strengthen them so they will be on a competitive basis with other freshmen.

"And the session also develops self-confidence and peer support," he added. "The Northwestern Society of Black Engineers continues the strong peer support, promotes interaction with upperclassmen and helps optimize educational opportunities."

As part of the MEOP program, two Technolgical Institute upperclassmen, a young man and young woman who have previously participated in the summer program, live in the dormitory with the summer students each year. They help students adjust to dormitory and college life, as well as study routines, and also serve as role models.

Last year Teresa Duncan, the first black woman to obtain a degree in nuclear engineering at Northwestern, served as a MEOP counselor.

The university plans to expand its program by adding peer leadership participation and focused counseling to the existing MEOP program. The goal is to improve individual counseling, add stronger and more positive peer group influences, incorporate improved subject matter instruction and improve dormitory living conditions, Brazelton said.

"MEOP represents Northwestern's concerted effort to retain minorities in engineering," he said. "Yet, despite the fact that our minority engineering students have a better than two-thirds chance of graduating, we feel that losing 30 percent of our minority freshman engineers over four years is still not acceptable. We believe that we can narrow the gap in retention that now exists by including the new elements in the MEOP program."

High in 90s anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

A pleasant summer weekend is in store for Midland-Odessa residents. Sunny skies and a high in the middle 90s are being forecast for Saturday by the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The NWS is calling for fair skies tonight with a low in the middle 60s. Winds will be out of the south at five to 10 mph tonight, shifting to the southeast at 10-15 mph on Saturday.

Thursday's high was 14 degrees cooler than the record high set of 104 set for the date in 1947. This morning's 64-degree low was only seven degrees above the record low set for this date in 1979.

STATE

Skies were clear across most of Texas today, as a weak high pressure ridge prevailed.

However, showers and a few thunderstorms, some producing heavy rain, were being detected over extreme Southeast Texas. The precipitation extended offshore along the upper Gulf Coast.

Light rainshowers also dotted a small section of the coastal waters between Corpus Christi and Port Mansfield. Skies were partly cloudy to mostly cloudy along the entire Texas coast.

Light southerly winds were common across most of the state, except for light northerly winds over the Big Bend and along the middle Texas coast. Winds speeds were generally in the 5 to 10 mph range.

Temperatures were in the 50s over the mountainous southwest while readings in the 60s and 70s were common across the rest of the state.

NATION

Rain dampened broad sections of the East and West today while much of the nation's midsection was under fair skies.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered across New England and the mid-Atlantic Coast and along the central and eastern Gulf Coast. Showers and thunderstorms also were scattered across northern California and from the northern and central Rockies into the central High Plains.

Fair skies prevailed across the Mississippi Valley and the southern Plains, with early-morning temperatures in the 60s to 70s.

Temperatures were in the 40s to low 50s in New England early this morning because of clouds and rain while the desert Southwest had readings in the 80s to low 90s.

Dollar rebounds

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar rebounded today in Japan and Europe. Gold bullion prices were little changed.

The dollar had fallen in New York late Thursday following release of reports indicating sluggish U.S. economic growth.

But today the U.S. currency bounced back in Tokyo when the central Bank of Japan intervened in the open market in a continuing effort to halt the yen's sharp rise.

The scale of the intervention was not known, but one trader said it was characteristic of the bank's determination not to allow the dollar to slip below the 165-yen level.

At the close of Tokyo trading, the dollar was quoted at 165.85 yen, up from 165.75 yen. Later, in London, the dollar was pegged at 166.225 yen.

—2.2197 West German marks, up from 2.2073

—7.077 French francs, up from 7.035

—2.498 Dutch guilders, up from 2.486

Senate votes to save oil industry tax incentives

By Stephanie Slewka
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON – The Senate on Thursday night voted to keep tax breaks for the ailing oil and gas industry in the tax reform bill as a way to keep the bill intact and steaming along to a vote.

After an emotional debate on the highly divisive issue, the Senate rejected by 77-20 an amendment by Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., to block tax breaks for independent oil and gas drillers.

Weicker argued the $1.5 billion, five-year exception allowing explorers to write off their drilling costs, was unfair to other industries who are also in need of help, and would be denied tax shelters in the new legislation.

"The medicine of a free market is that market regulates the price," Weicker said.

Oil state senators rose to the defense of the industry, arguing that large international oil companies would not profit from the exception.

No one would be persuaded to invest in oil exploration with an independent if they were not able to write off "honest to goodness" losses if they struck no oil, argued Sen. David Boren, D-Okla.

"Does anyone really believe this is a free market system?" Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, asked heatedly.

"In 1981, we had 30 new exploratory wells per week finding new reserves, in 1985, there were 10 per week, this year we're down to 3 wells finding new reserves each week," he said.

"Having a stable oil industry is as important to national security (as having a stable steel industry)," he said, referring to Weicker's argument that if oil and gas received tax protection, industries such as steel should too.

On the same theme, Boren said: "Limited partnerships in oil and gas are treated exactly the same as if they were limited partnerships in anything else."

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, weighed in on Bentsen's side, saying the exemption was justified because "capital is at risk."

Weicker's amendment was defeated by a larger margin than could have been expected because senators wanted to ward off all major amendments to the tax overhaul bill.

Many senators from the Northeast and Northwest who normally would have voted to kill the tax break for oil and gas, supported the industry because they were part of a coalition trying to keep the tax bill from unraveling over contentious issues such as oil and gas or abortion.

"I do not think the exception (for oil and gas) is warranted." Sen. Robert Packwood, R-Ore., chairman of the Finance committee which laboriously crafted the unanimously-approved bill, said.

Packwood voted to keep the break on Thursday, although he had opposed the oil provision when it narrowly passed the Finance committee by a vote of 11-9 earlier this year.

"I think the industry can attract capital, but having come this far and being only a few days away from passing a bill . . . I'm going to stand with the committee," Packwood said.

Northeastern Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., also voted to keep the shelter for oil and gas although he was ideologically opposed to it.

"If we're going to pass this bill, we're going to need the leadership of Sen Russell Long, D-La., Sen. Bentsen, Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., Sen. David Boren D-Okla., and others," he said of those oil state senators.

But Bradley and others hope that a House-Senate conference on the tax reform bill will somehow tighten the oil and gas benefit.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., noted that stripper well production is the second largest industry in his state after agriculture. He said, "If this bill were completely neutral, a lot of things would have to be taken out."

Other amendments, including an effort to retain the sales-tax deduction, which the bill would eliminate, were defeated Thursday.

Sens. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., withdrew their amendment to remove the tax-exempt status of institutions performing or funding abortions after failing to persuade the president to support them.

Reagan told the senators that while he favored their proposal, he was committed to a clean tax bill, and would try to support their amendment under another bill later this year.

After vociferous complaints from their colleagues, Sens. Gramm, and Daniel Evans, R-Wash., withdrew an amendment that would have allowed taxpayers to choose between deducting their state and local sales tax, and their income-tax payments.

Chevron to reduce workforce

From staff and wire reports

The Chevron Corp., the nation's fourth-largest oil company, Thursday became the latest in the industry to announce a sharp paring of its staff because of depressed conditions.

It said it would reduce its workforce by about 12 percent this year throughthe voluntary and mandatory early retirement of 7,500 workers. The company said that includes 4,500 regularly salaried employees and 3,000 contract workers.

Company spokeswoman Nancy Carroll said that about 120 of the 1100 employees in the company's West Texas district would be effected by the reduction. "The 120 is a very flexible number, and the reductions will come from all of Chevron's operating groups in West Texas."

Chevron had said March 13 that the precipitous decline in crude oil prices would make such measures necessary. At that time Chevron cut its capital spending to $3.5 billion, from $5 billion.

Thursday, George Keller, chairman of the San Francisco-based company, said: "We've experienced the most traumatic economic changes in our industry in a generation. The steps we're announcing today simply must be made if we're to remain a viable enterprise both in today's market and over the long term."

Keller said he expected the large majority of reductions to be achieved through the voluntary program. Mandatory retirements will follow the completion of the voluntary reduction.

Houston bank is state's eighth failure

HOUSTON (AP) — The three-year-old Petrobank National Association, N.A. in Houston was declared insolvent, making it the eighth Texas bank and the 55th in the country to be shut down this year.

"The bank's failure was primarily the result of inadequate management by the board of directors and liberal lending practices," said Dean S. Marriott, senior deputy comptroller of currency.

Marriott declared the bank insolvent Thursday.

Since the bank failed to find any buyers, the board of directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. in Washington on Thursday also approved paying off the insured depositors at the bank, said spokesman Steve Katsanos.

"The board of directors determined that a payoff of insured depositors was required because no bids were received for the failed bank," Katsanos said.

The FDIC will insure up to $100,000, he said. About 102 accounts, however, are over that limit. Those deposits are expected to get 45 cents for each dollar when the FDIC recovers the assets, Katsanos said.

Petrobank had about $38.1 million in assets, deposits of $36.8 million in 2,000 accounts, and primary capital of $1.5 million, said Frank Vance, a spokesman in the comptroller' office.

"The bank never has been profitable because of high overhead expenses and large loan losses," Marriott said. Less than 5 percent of its loan portfolio, however, consisted of direct loans to the energy sector, he added.

Wholesale price index shoots up 0.6 percent in May

Rising gasoline prices reverse drop in consumer prices

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices, after tumbling for four months in a row, shot up 0.6 percent in May as gasoline prices stopped their steep nosedive and began to climb again, the government reported today.

Despite May's increase, the Labor Department said producer prices so far this year have declined at an annual rate of 7.6 percent, making this the lowest inflation year in decades.

The May increase all but wiped out a 0.6 percent decline in wholesale prices in April.

Analysts suggested that the anti-inflationary impact of this year's drop in oil prices may just about have run its course.

Gasoline prices were up 8.6 percent in May, after a 10.4 percent drop in April and a record 21.9 percent drop in March.

However, heating oil declined 6 percent in May after dropping 8.7 percent in April and 6 percent in March, partially offsetting the increases in other energy categories.

Natural gas prices rose 1.6 percent in May.

Food prices rose 1.1 percent in May, the third consecutive monthly increase. Beef was up 5.4 percent, fresh fruits 11.8 percent and eggs 12.6 percent. However, fish prices declined 4 percent.

The Labor Department said the Producer Price Index for May stood at 289.0, meaning that the same goods that cost $10 in 1967 cost $28.90 last month. That's down by 52 cents from May 1985, when the same goods cost $29.42.

The overall index, unlike other figures in the price report, is not adusted for seasonal variations.

The May increase, if continued for 12 consecutive months, would equal an annual price increase of 7.8 percent.

During the past year, food prices have increased 2 percent overall while energy prices plunged 28.6 percent. All other goods rose by 2.8 percent during the same 12-month period.

The Labor Department gave these other details on May price activity:

— New passenger cars rose 0.1 percent after a 1.6 percent increase in April. Light trucks declined 0.1 percent after a 1.8 percent rise the month before.

— Soft drinks and alcoholic beverages both went up 0.3 percent. And there was a 0.8 percent rise in the price of coffee.

— Capital equipment rose 0.1 percent after a 0.3 percent increase the month before.

— Women's clothing increased 0.8 percent, and children's clothing 0.2 percent, but there was no change in the price of men's apparel.

It was the first time the producer price index has increased this year. It dropped 0.6 percent in April, 1.1 percent in March, 1.6 percent in Feburary and 0.7 percent in January.

The recent declines in the value of the U.S. dollar against other major currencies "is keeping producer prices stronger, there's no question about it," said David Wyss, senior vice president for Data Resources Inc., a Lexington, Mass., economic consulting firm.

These price increases are beginning to offset any further drops in the price of energy products, Wyss said.

The big decline in oil prices, which produced record drops in the cost of gasoline and heating oil earlier this year, have just about ended, analysts agreed.

"Some of the disequilibrium that we saw has worked itself out," said Dorothy Otte, a George State University economist who specializes in price behavior.

Consumer prices also have been declining for the past few months, although not as sharply as wholesale prices.

The consumer price index — which measures a market basket of goods at the retail level — fell 0.3 percent in April, after back-to-back drops of 0.4 percent in February and March. The CPI for May is due out later this month.

In other economic reports, the Commerce Department reported on Thursday that retail sales edged down 0.1 percent in May for the third consecutive monthly decline.

Consumer spending, which accounts for two-thirds of total economic activity, has been in the doldrums much of the year. Sales dropped 0.1 percent in February and 0.4 percent in March before posting a 0.4 percent advance in April, the department said.

Unocal chairman accuses Saudis of practicing 'economic terrorism'

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Fred Hartley, chairman and chief executive officer of Unocal Corp., Tuesday accused the leaders of Saudi Arabia of waging a war of "economic terrorism" against the United States.

Hartley also continued his call for the Reagan Administration to impose an import fee on crude oil to combat Saudi price-cutting.

"The Saudi action is a clear case of dumping oil in order to squeeze out competition," Hartley said. "This is more than just a case of ruthless market manipulation — it's an act of economic terrorism."

Hartley told a gathering of business leaders that the import fee is necessary to restore current oil prices to last year's levels.

"Our nation needs the money and our industry needs the stability," he said.

He painted a grim scenario of "rampant terrorism and poiticial blackmail" if actions are not taken quickly to boost foreign oil prices.

"It would be a world where the 'oil weapon' is wielded with devastating effect by radical Moslem leaders," Hartley said.

The average world oil price has settled at $13 per barrel, down from $28 per barrel last December. Hartley said the domestic oil industry can "hold its own" if oil could sell for $25 a barrel.

Unocal, the fourth-largest publicly held company in California, posted income last year of $325 million, or $2.36 a share, compared to $700 million, or $4.03 a share, the year before.

This year, the oil giant has trimmed its exploration and production budget significantly to offset falling oil prices.

Hartley said the import fee would be structured to rise when oil prices drop and decrease when the price of oil increases.

"An import fee would help restrain demand and stimulate production and reserve replacement," he said. "It would also help avoid the danger of sharp swings in price and supply."

The fee, if instituted quickly, would have a minimal impact on consumers, but it would bring back higher gasoline prices, Hartley said.

Although significant decreases in crude oil prices has been felt at retail gasoline pumps throughout the United States, retail gasoline prices already have risen 7.1 cents since bottoming out in April, an oil industry analyst said.

So far, Hartley said, his suggestion of an import fee has met with a cool reaction from the Reagan Administration.

"Sometimes I think they are dead," he said when asked about the administration's response to his idea. "They just don't seem to seriously care. I can't explain why."

Record number of banks expected to fail

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. says a record number of banks will either fail or need government assistance by the end of the year.

William Seidman told the U.S. League of Savings Institutions on Thursday that between 140 and 160 banks will fall into the failed or help-required category in 1986, up from last year's record 120.

Mexican, U.S. officials discuss foreign debt

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexican and U.S. officials are holding high-level talks aimed at providing financial aid for Mexico and preventing the government from suspending payment on its nearly $100 billion foreign debt.

"Both sides are working very diligently to come up with a compromise solution within the next several weeks," said a source close to the negotiations who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Meanwhile, President Reagan said at a press conference Wednesday that a Mexican default was "a possibility," one that the United States wants to help the country avoid.

U.S. trade deficit edges down in first quarter

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. foreign trade deficit edged down slightly to $36.6 billion during the first three months of the year as a gigantic drop in petroleum imports offset price increases for other foregn goods, the government says.

The Commerce Department said Wednesday that the trade deficit from January through March declined by 2.1 percent from a record quarterly deficit of $37.4 billion set from October through December.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige cautioned against reading too much into the improvement, noting that the deficit still was running at an annual rate of $146.3 billion. The deficit for all of 1985 was a record $124.4 billion.

Advisory group says Texas nuke project 'safe'

BAY CITY (UPI) — With only a few reservations, a key nuclear advisory group says the South Texas Nuclear Project should be safe to operate at full power and not endanger public health and safety.

The Advisory Committee on Reactor Safety advised the Nuclear Regulatory Commission of its findings after a tour of the project and hearings at Bay City and in Washington D.C.

The committee's recommendation is essential to obtaining an operating license for the project.

"We are extremely pleased with the letter, in particular the conclusion that we have assembed a capable and experienced staff," said STNP spokesman Graham Painter.

Kuwaiti oil minister predicts price increase

KUWAIT (UPI) — Kuwaiti Oil Minister Sheikh Ali Khalifa al Sabah said in a recent interview that oil prices were likely to increase to between $17 and $19 a barrel by yearend despite the recent retreat on world markets.

"A price of $17 to $19 a barrel could be achieved by the end of this year," Ali Khalifa told the Kuwaiti newspaper Al Anba.

The influential OPEC minister apparently was referring to the peak winter season, when demand for oil in the Northern Hemisphere rises by about 2 million barrels barrels a day.

Prices in the spot market, where oil is sold to the highest bidder, briefly touched the $17 mark in mid-May before being driven down again by concern over the continuing global oil surplus. Supplies exceed demand by at least 2 million barrels a day.

Governors ask President for import tariff

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — Gov. Mark White joined the governors of seven other oil-producing states in again asking President Reagan to immediately levy a variable tariff on imported crude oil and refined products.

Since oil prices began plummeting earlier this year, White has repeatedly asked Reagan to impose an oil import fee to help prop up the sagging domestic oil and gas industry.

"Once again, we ask the president to take steps to save our vital oil and gas industry," he said. "Such a tariff will provide the stability that our nation so desperately needs.

"While the governors of oil-producing states are leading this fight, other non-producing states are realizing that the success of this battle may mean the difference between a strong, independent national defense and one that is reliant upon the whims of OPEC."

Phillips denies it destroyed documents

AMARILLO, Texas (UPI) — Phillips Petroleum Co. has denied charges it destroyed documents relevant to a lawsuit by homeowners of the company town of Phillips who are seeking to thwart the oil company's eviction orders.

Homeowners in Phillips filed a motion in their class action suit last week alleging the company violated a court order by allowing employees to burn documents vital to the lawsuit.

The answer, filed this week in federal court, also says that the homeowners cannot prove their claim because it depends on the testimony of an employee who has not yet been identified by the homeowners.

The homeowners' motion charges that employees working for a construction company under contract to Phillips removed large numbers of documents from the Phillips camp department and burned them on May 28 and 29.

Amoco will appeal Air Board recommendation

TEXAS CITY, Texas (UPI) — Amoco Oil Co. plans to appeal a recommendation that could result in as much as $90,000 in fines for exceeding state air pollution levels at its Texas City refinery.

Pollution monitors at the refinery registered excessive carbon monoxide emmissions from September 1985 through March of this year, said Texas Air Control Board spokesman Walter Bradley.

But Amoco spokesman Ray Thompson attributed the discrepancy in what the refinery emitted and what it was allowed to emit to an "unrealistic" permit level.

Texas pipeline fined for corroded sections

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — A Texas gas-pipeline company involved in three explosions in 10 months in Kentucky has paid a $100,000 fine and agreed to inspect and renovate its pipelines in the state, federal officials say.

The fine was officially levied against Texas Eastern Gas Pipeline Co. on Thursday for not repairing a corroded section of pipe that ruptured Feb. 21 in Garrard County, injuring six people.

It is the largest fine in the 16-year history of the U.S. Department of Transportation's Office of Pipeline Safety, a spokesman said.

The other two explosions involved parallel Texas Eastern pipelines that cross Kentucky on their way from the Gulf of Mexico to Northern states. Five people died after one exploded in Metcalfe County in April 1985. Three people were injured in a blast in Fleming County last October. The federal agency has not yet decided whether to take any action against the company for those accidents.

The Houston-based company has not admitted liability in the Garrard County csae, but it has formally agreed to ensure the safety of its lines and has already paid the fine, said a Transportation Department attorney.

Texas Eastern admitted that tests done months before the explosion showed a need for immediate attention. Repairs were not done because the inspection report was accidently not processed, the company said.

Despite the fine and two other citations for the Garrard County explosion, the Transportation Department does not believe the company acted deliberately or maliciously, said Jim Thomas, executive director of the Office of Pipeline Safety.

"Certainly it was inadvertent ... They have nothing to gain and everything to lose by having accidents," he said.

Transportation officials are still investating all three explosions, Thomas said, and a task force from his office is evaluating Texas Eastern's pipelines in other states.

A spokesman for Texas Eastern refused to comment Thursday on the consent order, which charges two violations of federal regulations.

"We have not received a final order and, until we do, we can't comment on any aspect of it," said Jim Young.

As part of the consent decree, Texas Eastern must inspect all its pipelines in Kentucky, renovate them and keep gas pressure at 900 pounds per square inch, Thomas said. The company reduced its pressure to that level from 1,000 pounds per square inch after the Garrard explosion on the recommendation from the Kentucky Public Service Commission.

The Office of Pipeline Safety's formal report cites the compny for not repairing a corroded pipe and not following the company's procedures for inspections, Thomas said.

Texas Eastern could have been fined $160,000 for the two violations cited in the order, but the pipeline office took into account the company's program to renovate the lines and reduce the pressure, Thomas said.

The company apparently knew of the corrosion, he said. "Something should have been done.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Investor should receive regular fund statements

By BILL DOYLE

Q. In August 1984, I was duped into putting $2,150 into what I was led to believe was a high-interest savings account. As it turned out, I had invested in shares of a "capital appreciation" mutual fund. I have received only one statement, dated Oct. 3, 1984.

I do not trust the stock market and am fearful for this investment. The money I put in was being saved for my son and I want to be sure it will be there when it is needed. Is this a good investment? If I choose to close the account, how do I go about doing it?

Doyle

A. The value of an investment in the mutual fund you named in your letter declined a bit during the latter part of 1984, rose 16.77 percent in 1985 and is up about 11 percent so far this year. It's investment performance has not been as good as most other mutual funds.

Also, there is a full "load" charged on the purchase of that mutual fund's shares. Because you paid an 8.5 percent commission, the value of your shares had to rise 9.3 percent for you to get even. Given the fund's lackluster performance, you probably reached the break even point in 1985.

Are you certain you have received only one statement? If so, there is something very wrong. You should have received a statement confirming your purchase. You should receive statements when that fund declares dividends and capital gains distributions, whether you take those payments by check or reinvest them to buy additional shares. Each January, you should get a Form 1099, listing dividends and capital gains distributions to report on your income tax return.

And you should be getting annual and quarterly shareholder reports. If you're reinvesting, you should get an updated prospectus once a year.

If, indeed, these things have never arrived, you should contact the brokerage firm or sales organization through which you made the purchase. And write or telephone the mutual fund to learn the current status of your investment. You'll find the address and phone numbers of mutual funds in manuals at big public libraries.

You can close your fund account by redeeming your shares — turning them back to the fund. Redemption procedures vary a bit from fund to fund and are spelled out in each fund's prospectus.

Q. In June 1985, I signed a "letter of intention" to purchase $50,000 worth of shares in a mutual fund. I made five $10,000 payments, the final one on Oct. 17. I was entitled to 4,075 shares, but I have received certificates for only 3,843 shares.

I have made many requests to my broker and he has made many phone calls to the mutual fund to obtain certificates for the 232 other shares. Do I have recourse to a higher authority?

A. You can contact the Office of Consumer Affairs, U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, 450 Fifth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20549. Since you want your certificates delivered, you should get them.

When you invest in a "load" mutual fund through a letter of intention, you agree to invest a large amount of money within a certain period of time, usually 13 months. Through that method, you pay a lower commission and, as a result, buy more shares.

The extra shares are held in escrow until you complete the agreed upon payments. It could be that there's been a foul-up in that fund's record keeping and your 232 extra shares have never been turned loose.

Q. Having purchased many individual stocks over the years, I always have them registered in my name and the certificates sent to me. Recently, I made my first investment in a mutual fund and was told it is unnecessary and unwise to receive certificates. Would that be safe?

A. Sure. The vast majority of mutual fund investors never take possession of certificates for their shares. The shares are held by each fund's custodian bank.

Also most investments in mutuals are in dollar amounts, which buy full and fractional shares to the third or fourth decimal place. Certificates aren't issued for fractions of shares.

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

© 1986, Los Angeles Times Syndicate

Saturday, June 14, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Show some pizzazz and success will come more easily. Higher-ups are eager to be dazzled. Originality is the key to landing the top job at place of employment. Avoid people who waste your time or dwell on the negative. You need to be where the action is. An important anniversary will be an especially exciting occasion this year. Share the limelight with those who love you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Lasting ties can be forged this weekend. You and a family member have a true meeting of the minds. Take care of chores before turning your attention to recreational pursuits. Cooperation abounds!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be a go-getter even on your day off. There is a lot to be done before you see a financial turnaround. Cultivating influential people will pay off handsomely. Attend more social events.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Obtain more information before plunging into a new family or investment program. It is time to make some far-reaching decisions about a child or aged parent. Consult experts but trust your instincts.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A spending spree could put you behind the eight ball financially. You do deserve more fun in your life but at a price you can afford. A cycling or hiking trip proves invigorating.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Any financial wheeling and dealing is best postponed until next week. Reserve today for fun and romance. An old flame could be rekindled. Go slow. Be sure of your feelings before saying anything.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A spontaneous get-together produces some happy surprises for you. A new romance is fast becoming an important relationship. Your intellectual interests are stimulated by the arrival of a friend.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Examine a relationship very carefully before making a final decision. Mutual respect is essential if an alliance is to last. Be ready to do whatever is necessary to help a loved one.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not discard an idea just because it will not work right now. Save it for another day. The winds of romance blow hot and cold, following the appearance of an old flame.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The future looks much brighter after you and your partner level with each other. Reveal your true feelings. A good weekend to spend in the country or by the sea.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Greater power will soon be yours. Secrecy preserves a friendship and protects someone special. New friends play a large role in the decisions you make. You find support in a most unlikely place.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You will need all your powers of persuasion to avert a family upheaval. An emotional problem must be dealt with promptly. Seek the assistance of a caring individual. Discuss things calmly.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You will feel much better if you open up and put all your cards on the table. A vacation trip has its ups and downs but proves deeply satisfying.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass

Opening lead: Ten of ♠

One reason for a holdup play is to try to shut out the opponents' suit. Another is to try to get a signal from partner on the key card. East was shooting for both these, but got burned in the attempt.

Faced with an unrevealing auction, West led the ten of spades, covered by the jack and queen and won with the ace. Declarer led a diamond to the jack and continued with another to the king as East, afraid that winning the diamond ace too early would give declarer nine tricks, held up for two rounds.

Now declarer switched his attention to clubs, leading the king from hand. Since he did not want to promote the queen of clubs to an entry, West was forced to hold up, and he did so again when declarer continued with a club to the queen. A successful heart finesse reduced the hand to this interesting position:

NORTH

The first six tricks were in the bank, and declarer found a pretty way to take three more. He exited with the jack of clubs to West's ace. The defender did the best he could by leading the nine of spades, but this time it was declarer's turn to hold up. On the nine of clubs East discarded a spade, but when West reverted to a spade East was forced to part with a heart. Declarer took his ace of spades and threw East in with the ace of diamonds to force a heart return. The marked finesse produced the ninth trick.

EL PASO (AP) — C.L. Perkins, regarded as one of the pioneers of the natural gas industry, died Wednesday. He was 78.

Perkins joined El Paso Natural Gas Co. as a foreman in Jal, N.M. He discovered in the late 1950s what was then the world's largest natural gas reservoir in Nigeria.

Perkins also perfected technology that allowed long-distance pipelining of gas, developed methods to prevent pipeline corrosion and improved dehydration techniques that made transmission of natural gas more efficient.

He worked for the El Paso Natural Gas Co. for 45 years and retired in 1974 as senior vice president.

Douglas

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Actor Kirk Douglas, presiding over the reopening of the public library branch destroyed four years ago by fire, declared his love for libraries "as the son of illiterate immigrants."

"Libraries are the temple, the synagogue, the church of our civilization and they should mean everything to us," Douglas said Thursday.

The two-story building has towering ceilings, big windows and an interior decorated with huge reproductions of posters from classic movies like "Citizen Kane."

O'Connor

NEW YORK (AP) — Cardinal John J. O'Connor has gone to Lebanon to review a charity group's work and to greet religious leaders in that war-torn nation.

O'Connor and Monsignor John G. Nolan, pastor of the diocese of Albany, are making the trip to review the Catholic Near East Welfare Association's activities, said Joe Zwilling, a spokesman for the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York.

The association runs hospitals, schools and other charitable associations in the Mideast.

O'Connor and Nolan, who left Thursday, plan to return home via Rome, the spokesman said.

Monsignor Peter Finn, archdiocese director of communications, said he could make no comment about whether the cardinal expected to do any negotiating on behalf of five kidnapped Americans in Lebanon.

"To comment would jeopardize the lives of the people involved," he said.

MANSFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Cellist Yo-Yo Ma and the Pittsburgh Symphony are taking a "Short Ride in a Fast Machine" tonight to hail the opening of the Great Woods entertainment complex.

The fanfare, led by symphony conductor Michael Tilson Thomas, was composed for the occasion by Samuel Adams. It will be the first music performed at the new $13 million, 15,000-seat entertainment complex 30 miles southwest of Boston.

Great Woods will be the symphony's home for the summer season.

OTTAWA (AP) — A bevy of Canadian celebrities, including hockey star Mario Tremblay of the Montreal Canadiens, have cut a bilingual record and a video urging fellow citizens to protect the environment.

The single "No More Wasting Away" includes singers Kim Mitchell, Carole Pope and Mark Holmes on the English side of the single. On the French side are Ginette Reno, Claude Dubois and Martine St-Claire.

Tremblay appears in the video with hockey player Rick Vaive of the Toronto Maple Leafs, baseball player Tim Raines of the Montreal Expos and two Olympic gold medalists, diver Sylvie Bernier and speedskater Gaetan Boucher.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Faith Stoneman's family sings on the Grand Ole Opry about pain, suffering and hard times, but their lyrics were just words to the 15-year-old girl until a car accident three weeks ago.

On June 6 on the Grand Ole Opry, entertainer Roy Acuff and announcer Grant Turner asked country music fans to keep Faith Stoneman in their prayers.

Her mother, who sings with The Stoneman Family, hopes to help pay for medical care with the proceeds from a new record to be released next week.

The title? "No Sad Songs Tonight."

MIAMI (AP) — Burglars using a white-hot cutting torch were unable to get inside a safe holding gold objects, and a solid-gold replica of the Statue of Liberty was unharmed, officials say.

The 25-inch, 70-pound replica was cast from an original mold left by Frederic Auguste Bartholdi, who designed the statue given to the United States by France.

Christian Nommay, a native of France who owns the replica, was relieved to find the statuette was unharmed.

"The Statue of Liberty has been a big symbol not only for Americans but for French people," he said Wednesday after a team of professional safecrackers watched by Metro-Dade police and private detectives spent 21 hours breaking into the vault in his office.

The Miami Safe Co. workers were hired by Nommay because of the damage left by the burglars last weekend. He was concerned about the statuette because burn marks were left on the outside of the 5,800-pound safe.

Authorities believe the break-in attempt may have been instigated by someone aware that the statuette had arrived. They believe the burglars gave up and fled when they realized how ingeniously the safe was designed.

The safe built by the British company Tann was fashioned of copper, aluminum, manganese, stainless steel and concrete, with the hardy mineral corundum impregnated into the materials, said Jack Bagwell, a co-owner of Miami Safe Co.

Hooked to a plate of glass in the door near the two main locks were steel wires running to seven auxiliary locks, which were triggered when the burglars broke the glass, Bagwell said.

Nammoy estimated the statuette's value at more than $1 million, but said it represented more than money to him because he wants to display it in conjunction with upcoming celebrations of the Statue of Liberty centennial.

He will sell the statuette to a collector or corporation after the Liberty centennial festivities, he said.

ANC launches assault

By JAMES F. SMITH

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Riding a crest of insurgent attacks and black uprisings, the African National Congress is staging its broadest assault ever against white rule in South Africa.

The government has responded with a campaign that portrays the ANC as a communist-backed terrorist group that kills civilians.

Despite guarded hints from both sides on possible negotiations, neither the military confrontation nor the war of words shows any sign of abating.

After nearly two years of unrest and increasing sabotage, ANC President Oliver Tambo reflects a new sense of ANC confidence, declaring that "the historic conditions necessary to ensure the collapse of the apartheid system have taken shape in greater measure than ever before."

IN A MAJOR radio address in mid-May from exile in Zambia, he said the ANC has now shifted its goal "from ungovernability to people's power" — underscoring the ANC's claim to broad popular support.

But South Africa's deputy minister of information, Louis Nel, cited instances that he contended show the terrorist nature of the ANC's campaign.

"When mine warfare and motorcar bombs are used, the victim cannot be chosen, and innocent civilians constitute the biggest percentage of the victims," he said.

In May, the South African military launched air and ground strikes against alleged ANC targets in three neighboring black countries, Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

Official figures show a sharp increase in ANC attacks, from 44 in 1984 to 136 last year. More than 80 ANC attacks so far in 1986 are well ahead of last year's pace.

THE ANC, founded in 1912 as a black rights movement, was outlawed in 1960 and took up arms a year later, saying it was left with no other avenue to end minority rule.

It fought an ineffectual sabotage war for years, and purposely seeking to avoid civilian casualties.

The nationwide anti-apartheid rioting that broke out in September 1984 changed the climate dramatically. The ANC seized on the unrest, urging blacks to make the country ungovernable and to destroy pro-government institutions such as township councils.

Some 800 black policemen's homes have been burned, and about two dozen black policemen have been slain. Hundreds of black councilors have resigned, and some councils have collapsed. Unrest has spread from the cities to rural tribal homelands, long thought to be docile labor reserves.

IT IS UNCLEAR whether the ANC is controlling the unrest, or merely capitalizing on spontaneous black anger that has led to the daily violence. But the ANC has clearly benefited from the turmoil, politically and militarily.

ANC flags fly at most funerals and drape the coffins of unrest victims — more than 1,600 in 20 months. Youths carry toy models of AK-47 assault rifles, symbol of the ANC's war.

Apartheid foes established the United Democratic Front coalition in 1983, which quickly became the largest political opposition movement. Branded by the government as an internal arm of the ANC, the front gave the anti-apartheid campaign a degree of organizational muscle missing since the ANC was banned.

Blacks have built up alternative civic associations in nearly every township, and organized street committees and defense committees. Even "people's courts" have begun to emerge, rivaling the official courts. Youths have ended school boycotts, and instead created people's curricula in the classroom.

Beyond civil disobedience, blacks are increasingly fighting back against riot police, with guns as well as rocks, and the ANC has called for the uprising to spread to white areas.

The ANC is known to have introduced two-week crash courses inside the country for part-time guerrillas on the use of grenades, a departure from past policy of using only fully trained insurgents. Grenade attacks have become a feature in the unrest. Weapons are smuggled in almost entirely from East bloc countries.

With South Africa's economy in tatters because of political worries, business has called for the unbanning of the ANC and the release of its jailed leaders, including Nelson Mandela. White liberals have traveled to Zambia to meet ANC officials, ignoring President P.W. Botha's charges that the visits bolster the enemy.

Nel, defending the military raids on the three countries, said indiscriminate ANC attacks had killed 43 blacks and 35 whites since 1976. He said the organization has no established infrastructure or bases within South Africa, and that security forces effectively counter ANC penetration.

RELIABLE FIGURES on ANC strength are difficult to obtain.

Professor Mike Hough, an analyst at the Institute for Strategic Studies at the University of Pretoria, gives a conservative estimate of 3,000 to 3,500 trained guerrillas, mostly in Angola and Tanzania.

Other estimates put the total ANC force at up to 10,000 trained guerrillas, including a few whites.

Tourist trade among South African casualties

By DAVID CRARY

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Political turmoil has battered South Africa's once-lucrative tourist trade. Industry officials are trying new tactics to lure Western visitors.

In essence, their new marketing strategy seeks to persuade outsiders that South Africa is safer than countries hit by international terrorism, is moving away from race discrimination and is a travel bargain.

More than 1 million video cassettes promoting this vision of South Africa are to be distributed abroad and to travelers leaving the country's international airports — part of a special $7.5 million marketing campaign by the South African Tourism Board in the United States and Western Europe. The money is in addition to the board's regular $18 million budget.

Group tours to South Africa are down by as much as 80 percent, and scores of hotels have closed since rioting and other disorders broke out in September 1984.

To counter the negative image, the Tourism Board brought about 240 foreign travel agents and travel writers to Cape Town in mid-May for a conference to emphasize that, away from the scattered black townships, South Africa is peaceful.

"They told us we do have a problem in terms of our perceived image, but that image overseas doesn't match up with the reality here," said Spencer Thomas, the board's executive director.

"When you watch a few overseas newsreels, you get the feeling the country is burning from end to end," he said in an interview. "But the situation is normal, and travelers can come here and enjoy an unbelievable level of pricing."

However, one travel consultant, Paul Browning, contends the tourism industry is foolish to portray as normal a strife-torn country where more than 1,600 people, virtually all of them blacks, have died in unrest since September 1984.

Instead, Browning told the Star newspaper of Johannesburg, South Africa should encourage visitors to come for a first-hand look at the social and political conflict.

"The message would be: Come see for yourself," he said. "This would replace hostility with curiosity. It would mean accepting visitors who had far from complimentary views about South Africa, but their presence would enable South Africans to begin the process of influencing their opinions."

Otto Stehlik, managing director for the nationwide Protea hotel chain, said the health of the tourist industry was inextricably linked to political events. He said 300 foreigners canceled bookings with Protea's 36 hotels in the two days following South Africa's military raids May 19 on alleged guerrilla targets in the nearby countries of Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

Overall tourist visits from overseas dropped by 11 percent in 1985 to 405,597, including 89,395 business trips, but the decline accelerated as the year progressed, according to the Tourism Board.

Thomas, the executive director, said business in some tourist areas was off by 40 percent by the end of 1985, and he concurred with estimates that group tours, a mainstay for hotels, have fallen by 80 percent.

The dropoff in visitors from the United States was 17 percent, the sharpest of any major country.

George Deukmejian recently signed legislation
ed by Ms. LaFollette and state Sen. Wadie Ded-
Bonita bringing California's law more in line
n the 1973 U.S. Supreme Court case Miller vs.
ia. Oddly, California had never adopted the y definition.

Under the new law, which goes into effect Jan. 1, obscene material is defined as that "which, taken as a whole, lacks significant artistic, political, educational or scientific value."

Docherty says the nine detectives assigned to pornography investigations are objective professionals, not zealots. The only films they pick for prosecution are so vile that they defy description in print, he says.

"Nobody who works for me is a prude. I wouldn't have your average angel working for me."

Under current standards, a classic sex film like "Deep Throat," with the variety of explicit sex acts depicted in it, would not rate attention for prosecution, Docherty said.

To be even considered for prosecution, films must depict acts such as bestiality or violent sadomasochism, he says, adding that most of the major sex film producers distribute that type of material along with the more conventional adult fare.

Many police officers, clergymen and lawmakers argue that pornography is a socially dangerous product distributed in a market controlled by organized crime.

Police also contend that the ugliest pornographic materials serve as a trigger for bizarre and violent crime.

Docherty cited the examples of Kenneth Bianchi and Angelo Buono, the men convicted in the Hillside Strangler serial killings of 10 women in Los Angeles. Both men were avid viewers of pornographic materials, Docherty says.

"With every mass murderer, there is an abundance of deviant material found in the home," Docherty says. "Invariably, sex slayers are very much into pornography as consumers."

Les Baker, the adult film industry spokesman, says he believes fewer violent sex films will be made in the future.

"Violence is not an intrinsic part of the mainstream adult cinema," he says. "It is part of the underground, which I am no more in favor of than L.A. vice is.

"I see law enforcement as taking care of the bizarre end of our spectrum and I see the tide turning back to mainstream adult films that are nonviolent and nonexploitive of children."

"The business of pornography is human frailty," Docherty says. "If you are turned on by sadomasochism, you can't beat your wife or a prostitute. You go out and find a victim. If kiddie porn turns you on, you go out and find a child."

Contrary to the conclusions of the Johnson commission in 1970, a Justice Department commission appointed by Attorney General Edwin Meese a year ago has concluded that most pornography is harmful and can lead to violence. In a 211-page introduction to its final report, to be made public in July, the commission urges action against the pornography industry, including more severe penalities for violation of obscenity laws.

The commission also found links between the pornography and organized crime.

"We are not reluctant to conclude that in many aspects of the pornography business, La Cosa Nostra is getting a piece of the action," the report said.

Gayle Binion, executive director of the Los Angeles chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, says that despite police protestations, no cause-and-effect link has been established between pornography and violence.

"If they say 40 people arrested for child molesting are found with pornography, it's a meaningless figure in terms of the total," she says. "Even if we found a statistical relationship, it's a long way between that and saying pornography causes child molesting."

Beverly Hills attorney Roger Jon Diamond, who defends clients with sex-oriented businesses, shares that view. People who claim pornography stimulates antisocial behavior would still be against it on moral grounds even if it caused no harm, he says.

"Miporn," the code name for an FBI investigation of the relationship between organized crime and the pornography industry, fell short of its mark in court when one of the agents involved in the investigation was fired by the bureau for shoplifting. "Miporn" is short for Miami pornography.

Actress now porn 'ambassador'

By DENNIS ANDERSON

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Kay Parker, a retired sex film actress, gained notoriety playing an incestuous mother in a movie titled "Taboo." After 40 such films, she considers herself as much an educator as an exhibitionist.

"There are a lot of people who can watch and learn from explicit sex films," she says, speaking in the lilting tones of her native England.

Ms. Parker found her way into the sex film business while she was attempting to find work as a more conventional actress doing workshop theater in San Francisco. She met an adult film actor who asked if she wanted to be in a movie.

"I was uptight about the adult film business," she says. "I judged before I knew anything about it and thought every film was sleazy and bad."

After performing in a small part in which no nudity was required, her curiosity increased.

"Within two weeks, I made my first sex film, 'Sex World.' I became entranced with the business of making movies."

She has appeared on talk shows and lectured at sexology institutes.

Referring to Dr. Ruth Westheimer, the motherly clinical sex expert who doles out advice for couples on the radio, Ms. Parker says, "I put myself in the ranks with Dr. Ruth...but I have this label of 'porn star,' or 'ex-porn star.' "

Ms. Parker is a public relations representative for Caballero Home Video, one of the biggest sex film production companies in the San Fernando Valley. A striking brunette in her 40s, she says she wants to be behind the cameras as an ambassador for the industry, rather than continue indefinitely working as a sexual performer.

Ms. Parker works in an impressive new office building near the Warner Center business park in the pleasant suburb of Woodland Hills. Her office is decorated in a blushing pink motif.

Ms. Parker is excited about new markets for sex-oriented films opened up by videocassette recorders.

The success of videocassettes changed the sex film business from a cottage industry into big business, she says. Producers and distributors who started small in the 1970s, she says, earned the fruits of success in the 1980s.

"The good news about video is that it has been brought into the home, to the people we always wanted to watch it," she says. "Producers are gearing up for the yuppie crowd."

Working in an industry that thrives on titillation, Ms. Parker calls herself the "Prude of Porn." That's because in most of her films she has refused to use sexual devices or to perform scenes involving bondage, pain or other forms of unconventional sex.

Lesbian scenes, however, are virtually mandatory in most sex films, but she hastened to add that her participation was no reflection of her personal sexual preferences.

"Am I a lesbian? Certainly not," she says. "But every woman experiences that fantasy."

Fantasy, she says, is what the public needs more of.

"Sex films help the people they watch become less inhibited about their own sex lives," she says.

"There is nothing like a good erotic film," she says. "There are so many people who are sexually suppressed because there is so much sexual suppression in this country. Sex is still a great mystery."

Ms. Parker says she abhors bizarre and violent sex films, but she added that they are a perhaps unavoidable part of the market.

"Each top company may have several titles that fall into that category," she says. "It's fine with me if those films are off the shelves, but it's sort of like telling Hollywood not to use guns."

Meet Our Carrier Of The Month For April

Bret Baze

Join us in congratulating BRET BAZE as the Midland Reporter-Telegram's April CARRIER-OF-THE-MONTH. Bret is a student at Lee Freshman School. Bret started routes C630 and C631 in February, 1984, and delivers 303 papers.

Bret enjoys repairing bicycles and building models. He's saving his newspaper profits to buy a car.

We congratulate Bret for his outstanding performance as an MRT newscarrier and as April's CARRIER-OF-THE-MONTH.

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

SOUTHAMPTON, N.Y. — A good old-fashioned nor'easter with winds gusting to more than 40 mph and occasional heavy rain socked in Shinnecock Hills Golf Club Thursday for the opening round of the 86th U.S. Open. The storm gave the mighty track such added strength that Tom Watson said the course went on the attack and the players on the defense.

"The course had claws today," said Watson, who was justifiably delighted with his round of two-over-par 72, two shots off the lead. "This course was not defenseless."

JUST WHEN the rain and wind became strongest in the early afternoon, Bob Tway walked off the 18th green with a par 70 in hand that was good enough for the lead in the opening round. Tway is the 27-year-old former Oklahoma State all-America golfer who won the Manufacturers Hanover Westchester Classic last Sunday for his second PGA Tour victory this year.

Not since 1974, when Gary Player had the low opening round of par 70 at Winged Foot, has there been a U.S. Open first round without at least one player under par.

Greg Norman, the Australian picked by many to win this Open, was in second place, shooting a 71 on the 6,912-yard, links-style course. The course was playing much longer.

"I hit it pretty solid," said Norman, one of the longest hitters in the game. "But it was hard trying to judge the targets in this wind. We have been practicing for three days in west and southwest winds and this was the first from this direction. It changed everything."

THE WEATHER was so severe Thursday that keeping the ball in play anywhere on the course, not just in the fairways, became a difficult task. Jack Nicklaus, for instance, was doing well at one over par at the turn before losing his drive way right at No.10, a hilly par-4 that played dead into the strong wind.

Nicklaus's ball was found after a search that he felt had exceeded the five-minute limit. So the 46-year-old winner of the recent Masters went back to the tee and drove again, taking a penalty stroke. He actually did well to get a double-bogey 6 on the hole. Golf rules allow five minutes to look for a ball.

Nicklaus finished with two more double bogies, including one on the 18th hole, for seven-over-par 77. This may have destroyed his chance to win a record fifth U.S. Open title.

Following his round, Nicklaus said that a U.S. Golf Association official had informed him that he actually had 30 seconds left to hunt for his ball and that the five-minute limit had not been exceeded. Nicklaus then expressed wonderment at why officials on the course did not so inform him at the time. But, he said, "I probably would have made a 6 anyway."

NORMAN, WHO constantly wiped his eyes and blew his nose during his cold morning round, said he is once again suffering from the bronchial problems that have plagued him off and on since early 1985.

"It hit me again Monday," he said.. "I called my doctor and he put me back on the antibiotics. And I get sick from the medication if I have an empty stomach."

Norman, who tied for second behind Nicklaus in the Masters, withdrew from the Houston Open last April with a high fever and was diagnosed as suffering from a lingering case of walking pneumonia. Yet he won the next week at the Las Vegas Invitational and then won the Kemper Open two weeks ago.

Despite his physical problems, Norman toured the Shinnecock course without benefit of a hat or the added protection of foul-weather gear.

TOM WATSON, winner of the 1982 U.S. Open and five British Opens, was tied at 72 with Kenny Knox, Rick Fehr, Tommy Nakajima of Japan and two South Africans, Denis Watson and David Frost. Denis Watson tied for second in the 1985 U.S. Open at Oakland Hills.

Knox, who had 10 putts on the front nine and hit only six greens in regulation all day, is the Floridian who gained his first pro victory by surviving the worst wind at a tournament in recent years on the PGA Tour when he won the Honda Classic in Florida on March 2.

Gary Koch, a five-time winner on the tour, and Jodie Mudd, who hasn't yet won as a pro, had 73 each while Bernhard Langer of West Germany and Craig Stadler were in a bunch at 74.

The horror stories out on this British-looking course were numerous, and par saves were more common than regulation pars. Tway had the most productive of these par saves when he missed each of his last three greens but managed to chip each time with his sand wedge to help himself save par.

THERE WAS the struggle of Ben Crenshaw at No.4 where the east wind caught his drive and blew it so far right he was in two-foot grass up against a birch tree.

With one of the finest trouble shots of the day, the little Texan hit an 8-iron from 140 yards to within 10 feet of the green.

"Good gracious," Crenshaw said. "Can you imagine that. I had to go over those two big trees, the corner of that barn there and the big pine tree."

Then he almost chipped the ball in but tapped in for his par 4. Crenshaw finished with what was a respectable score of 76.

Tom Watson had a spectacular birdie 2 at the shortest hole on the course when he blasted from a front bunker into the 11th hole 60 feet away. He could not even see the top of the flag when he made the shot from the deep bunker, 15 feet blow the surface of the green.

EP no place for Angels

From Staff Reports

The scoreboard at El Paso's Dudley Field may never cool down.

In a game that lasted 3 hours, 25 minutes, the El Paso Diablos clobbered the Midland Angels 31-5 Thursday night, raising El Paso's lead over Midland to 2½ games with five games left in the first half of the Texas League season.

The Diablos' 31 runs is the most for the franchise since a 35-21 win over Beaumont in 1983. It fell far from the league record of 51 runs by Corsicana in a 1902 game.

In other league games Thursday, Arkansas scored three times in the 13th inning to beat Jackson 6-3 and open a two-game lead over the Mets in the Eastern Division; Beaumont went the first six innings without a hit but scored twice on two hits in the seventh to beat San Antonio 2-1; and Shreveport shut out Tulsa 2-0.

El Paso's rout started early. The Diablos led 4-0 after the first inning, 9-0 after two, 18-0 after three, 25-0 after four and 29-0 after the fifth. For good measure, they added two runs in the eighth inning.

The Diablos, who had 26 hits, banged out five doubles, two triples and two home runs. Alan Cartwright had four hits and eight RBIs, Billy Bates added four hits and four RBIs, and Jesus Alfaro had three hits and four runs.

Midland Manager Joe Maddon used seven pitchers to try to stop the Diablos. The Angel hurlers threw an astounding 224 pitches. They walked 11 Diablos and hit three batters.

In Arkansas' game at Jackson, a defensive mix-up on Lance Johnson's 13th-inning grounder allowed Harry McCulla to score from the third and the Travelers eventually wound up with a three-run inning.

Johnson's ground ball came with two runners on base, and he collided with Mets first baseman Randy "Moose" Milligan, who had been watching McCulla at third. Milligan dropped the ball in the confusion. Tim Jones then followed with a two-run single.

The Mets trailed 3-0 in the eighth inning, when Jason Felice homered to tie the score at 3-3. The hit broke the Travelers' 26 innings of scoreless baseball. They blanked Shreveport in two games Wednesday.

Scott Verplank in Open debut.

Verplank struggles in debut

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

SOUTHAMPTON, N.Y. (AP) — Scott Verplank's professional debut in the 86th U.S. Open on Thursday, included a near hole-in-one and a struggling 5-over-par 75 over the wind-swept, rain-soaked dunes of Shinnecock Hills.

"It was a two-spike, two-sandwich day," said Verplank, the most heralded player to come out of amateur golf since Jack Nicklaus.

Verplank held up a wet golf shoe that had two spikes missing out of it.

A diabetic, he has to constantly munch on food to keep his blood sugar level constant.

"This was the toughest day I've ever played golf on," said Verplank, who recently won the NCAA title as a member of the Oklahoma State team. "I'm not happy with my round but I'm not upset either. I'd probably been satisfied if I hadn't bogeyed the last hole."

Verplank's near ace came on the 172-yard Par 3 No. 17. His 7-iron shot flew straight at the flag and the ball just missed bouncing in the hole. He then rolled in an 8-footer for his first birdie of the day.

"I really didn't think about being a pro out there until that hole," Verplank laughed. "Some guy yelled from the crowd 'that's your first bird as a pro.' I told him 'your right.'"

Verplank, the winner of the 1985 Western Open, decided in May to turn professional in this tournament. He has an exemption on the PGA Tour through 1987.

Asked how it felt to be a pro, Verplank, the 1984 U.S. Amateur champion, said, "It was just another round of golf in which I was trying to survive. I guess shooting 75 today was just about like shooting par."

Archer City walks off with victory

AUSTIN (AP) — Salado and Archer City met in a Class A semifinal game of the Texas high school baseball tournament, and the good news for Salado was that it jumped off to a 4-0 lead in the first inning and three of its pitchers combined to shut Archer City down on only one hit for the contest.

The bad news was that Salado's pitchers also issued 24 bases on balls, as Archer City "walked" to a 14-9 victory in the Thursday morning battle, winning the right to meet defending state champion Colmesneil in today's 9:30 a.m. title match.

Colmesneil ran its record to 27-0 by beating Gorman, 3-2, in its semifinal game.

In other semifinals matches in the University Interscholastic League competition:

— Houston Bellaire (28-4) and Round Rock Westwood (31-6) battled their way into today's 7:30 p.m. Class 5A finals. Bellaire held off a late challenge by defending state champ Victoria Stroman for a 6-5 victory, and Westwood eliminated Arlington, 2-0.

— Prairiland (29-1) and Brownfield (24-6) won berths in today's 3 p.m. Class 3A championship match. Prairiland's Scott Scudder, a first-round draft choice of the Cincinnati Reds this year, struck out 10 on the way to an 8-6 victory over Medina Valley, while Brownfield's Martin Fonseca scored on a passed ball with two out in the seventh inning to give the Cubs a 7-6 victory over Sealy.

— Riviera Kaufer (26-5) and Frankston (23-2) earned positions in today's 11:30 a.m. Class 2A title match. Kaufer, the defending state champion, blanked New Diana 3-0 Thursday and Frankston rallied from an early deficit to beat Coppell 6-5 in extra innings.

The Class 4A state tournament was on hold, pending disposition of a flurry of lawsuits. When the courts get through, either Austin Westlake or Waco Richfield will play Mercedes in one semifinal, and Snyder will play Brenham in the other.

Third baseman Shane Weaver had Archer City's only hit, a line drive single to left centerfield with the bases loaded and two out in the sixth inning. At that time, Archer City already led 10-8 on 21 Salado walks.

Weaver's single scored the fifth run of the sixth inning, turning an 8-6 deficit into an 11-8 lead. Three more runs in the seventh — on walks, of course — iced Archer City's victory.

Three Salado pitchers tried to find the strike zone. Chris Fulford — who left the mound in the second inning and returned in the fifth — walked 12, Chris Bush walked eight and Donnie Jackson walked four. Fulford, the starter, was the loser.

Salado got nine hits and opened the game with four runs in the first inning, but Archer City freshman Nicky McCorkle relieved Tony Pollack with two outs in the first and pitched 6 1-3 innings for the victory. McCorkle gave up six hits, walked one and struck out two.

Young Angels facing impossible odds

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

The young Angels are in El Paso to seek their fortune and from here the Texas League West Division race for the first half pennant looks like a diabolical plot.

Midland had won eight of its last 10 heading into the showdown series, but you still had to like El Paso's chances, painful as it might be to admit it.

The Diablos have everything going for them. If Texas League President Carl Sawatski had summoned El Paso GM Jim Paul to Little Rock last winter and asked his advice on the schedule, it couldn't have worked out any better for the Milwaukee Brewers' farm club.

Midland Manager Joe Maddon agreed on the eve of the El Paso trip, "Even if we win tonight (Midland's finale against San Antonio), and we absolutely must win, and they lose, we still face the prospect of having to win four games out there and, as you are well aware, we haven't played well in the last two years.

"I don't know why. It's a hitters' paradise and we certainly have the hitters, but something seems to happen to us when we get in that Dudley Dome."

Now it's four of five the Angels must win.

CONSIDER some of the odds Midland will be bucking in the final days of the first half.

Midland will have been on the road for 37 games before the first half is over and El Paso will have played only 31 away games. Considering what El Paso did in Midland, that has to be a key factor.

Midland will not have played as many games because of rainouts as the Diablos which means percentage will be the determining factor and not games behind. There are cases in which a team can be a half game ahead in the GB column, but trail in percentage.

Midland will play 11 games this half in the Dudley Dome, where they must win four of six. The Angels-Cubs probably haven't won four games in Dudley in the last two years. El Paso plays just five games this half in Angels Stadium and the Diablos are an ignoble 1-4 here. Midland, on the other hand, is 5-1 for the final six games here. That one loss came when the team was catching up on its rest with on-the-field catnaps after an all night bus trip from Beaumont.

THEN THERE were injuries. The Angels had to play 15 games without shortstop Jeff Schaefer and pitcher Doug Banning started the season like he was going for an unbeaten, unscored on season, but went down with shoulder miseries May 1 and didn't get back into the starting rotation until June 1.

As if playing in El Paso isn't mental hazard enough, a visitor must not only take on the Diablos on the field, but the fans in the stands. In the last trip west, shortstop Jeff Schaefer, after gamelong abuse, got into it with some fans who went beyond the vocal stage.

And then there is always the danger of a trip to Juarez and the possibility of suffering a case of Revenge.

Of course, the schedule will even out in the second half and Midland will have the advantage in home field games, both against the league and El Paso.

However, in view of all the obstacles, winning the first half would make victory all the sweeter.

And it would be poetic justice if Midland won it in El Paso.

Last year, the Diablos clinched the pennant in Midland and a sports writer made the mistake of recording the locker room celebration. When he got home, he had to explain why he smelled like someone who had fallen into a wine vat to a Mrs. who was extremely skeptical of the simple "I was covering a baseball game" explanation.

Hurricane is Duke on cycle

You get a pretty good fix on Hurricane Hall, the motorcycle race driver, when you know he has prints of every film John Wayne ever made, all 91 of them. He also has a standing offer of $10,000 or more to a charity of choice for the copper band the Duke wore on his left wrist over the years.

Hall is to dirt bike racing what Wayne was to the sound stage Indians, a scourge, a legend, an implacable foe. Rambo on wheels.

He carries a magazine interview of Wayne around with him to remind himself constantly of what his idol would do in a given situation.

You get a clue into what his sport is all about when you know that he is almost the grand old man of motocross. At age 29.

WHEN YOU ask him how he got his nickname, Hurricane, he can tell you right away: "Three broken wrists, six broken ribs, four broken ankles, one broken leg, one collarbone and one pelvis, twice. It was either that – or Crunch."

Fortunately, you can outgrow bravery. It's a young man's disease, like measles. It tends to diminish, like your hair or your hearing, as you get older. Hurricane figures he has it controlled to where he might merely be classified as a tropical disturbance on a race track today.

"When I was 19 years old, I'd never crashed a lot of times and my ankles, my wrists and my arms all felt brand new, right? Well, after you break 'em all about three times, you don't like to break 'em any more. Am I scared? Sure. Those big jumps, I respect now and I never did before. You go into a corner that's 20 feet wide with 40 bikes on it and I respect that a little bit too. And the more respect you get, the slower you go in.

"It gets old getting hurt, man. If you don't like sitting in a hospital, if you don't like being in a cast, if you don't like itching where you can't scratch, it gets old. I just like being in one piece. I like being able to walk on something besides two pieces of aluminum.

"My doctor drives a new Ferrari. But, I got even. I wore out two X-ray machines. I've had more pictures taken of my bones than my face."

HALL disputes the widely held notion that motocross racers have to be in the best shape of any athletes in all sport.

"All crap," he says in his best Green Beret tone of voice. "Prize fighters have to be in the best physical shape of any athletes. Marvin Hagler has to be in better shape than anybody who ever climbed on a motorcycle. Of course, the motorcycle doesn't try to thumb your eye out. At least not on purpose."

He pooh-poohs the notion that any other motor racing calls for the stamina bike racing does, however.

"Indy car racing? It's like sitting in a lawn chair," he says scornfully. "It takes the physical resources of a 95-year-old. You get more tired in six minutes on a motorcycle than you do in two hours in a car.

"You take a car driver out there, you take Rick Mears or A.J. Foyt, put 'em in a motocross, they won't go six minutes. You won't see any 54-year-old drivers in motocross. You won't see many 34-year-olds."

The outspoken Hurricane has been likened to golf's Arnold Palmer, the man who lifted his sport out of the weeds of tank towns and put it on the Saturday afternoon sports anthologies.

HE HAS won more Supercross races – stadium spectaculars built to duplicate the hazards of natural terrain – than any rider since Hitler's scouts reached the Channel. He has won the national title three times and has won 26 Supercross events, not to mention 35 other Motocross races.

He has been on a motorcycle since he learned to walk. His second pair of shoes had lead in the toe. He grew up in Lancaster, the high desert area of California, where his backyard was a perfect motocross course as far as the eye could see.

He has grown with the sport. "I signed with a manufacturer in 1976 for $1,000 a month and my total earnings that year were $51,000," he said. "I get more money than that now just to wear a brand name of boots for a year."

Now signed with Suzuki, for whom he will ride in the Coors Superbowl of Motocross Saturday night at the L.A. Coliseum, Hall has made more money on two wheels than a casino. He not only owns and flies his own plane but keeps a condo in Sun Valley, Ida. But when you ask him what his permanent address is, he answers, "Holiday Inn."

WHEN YOU ask him what the danger of Supercross racing is, he replies, "Landings. No one gets hurt in the air. If you land in a spot already occupied, or you land in a spot that shouldn't be occupied, there goes the old collarbone. Racing is easy. Landing is what makes you old. Pilot error."

On his chances in Saturday's Supercross, Hurricane scoffed. "Don't bet on me," he said.

Officer's Cup tournament at polo club

The Officer's Cup, a four-team tournament sanctioned by the U.S. Polo Association, will be held at the Midland Polo Club today and Sunday.

The four to eight goal event is the first in a series of tournament that will lead to the Governor's Cup tournament in the fall.

Cassidy's, Coors, BTA and IBEX will be composed primarily of Midland players. The four-to-eight goal label means that the team's player ratings can not add up to more than eight goals.

The games will be four chukkers in length. Regulation games are seven chukkers.

Friday's games are scheduled for 3 p.m. and 4 p.m. Sunday games are scheduled for 2 p.m. and the championship will be at 3:30 p.m.

Admission is $3 per person each day.

In today's first round games, IBEX meets Coors at 2 p.m. and BTA faces Cassidy's at 4 p.m.

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Former heavyweight champion Greg Page, battered and bloodied, took full blame for his latest demise in the boxing ring.

"It was all my fault. I was clowning around," said Page, who quit after nine rounds in a scheduled 10-round bout against Mark Wells of Van Nuys, Calif.

Referee Lou Filippo declared Wills the winner of the Stroh's tournament event by a knockout.

"In the ninth round, we were both very tired and I even thought about quitting," Wills said.

Brazil machine thrashes Irish

World Cup

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The vaunted Brazilian soccer machine finally got into gear at the World Cup Thursday with a 3-0 thrashing of Northern Ireland.

Although it had the only spotless record in the 24-team tournament (two wins, no goals allowed) heading into the game with the Irish, Brazil had drawn criticism from the media and even from within the team for its listless performances.

The Brazilians, who are seeking a record fourth World Cup, were anything but listless Thursday. Their passing was accurate, their speed and flair too much for the Irish to handle. Careca scored twice and Josimar got the other goal in eliminating the Irish, 0-2-1.

Brazil plays Poland Monday in Guadalajara in Round 2.

In Thursday's other game, Spain advanced by defeating Algeria 3-0 as Ramon Caldere scored twice and Eloy Olaya also connected in a rugged game. The Spanish placed second in Group D with four points and will oppose the winner of Group E next Wednesday in Queretaro. Denmark plays West Germany on Friday for the E title.

The Algerians, like Northern Ireland, were 0-2-1 in Group D.

Virtually all of the matches for the next round are set. Aside from Brazil and Spain's games, it will be Argentina, winner of Group A, vs. Uruguay or Scotland (those teams play Friday. If Uruguay wins or ties, it advances; Scotland must win.); Mexico (Group B winner) vs. Bulgaria; the Soviet Union (first in Group C) against Belgium; Morocco (atop Group F) vs. West Germany or Denmark (the Germans must beat the Danes Friday to finish first in E. Otherwise, West Germany plays Morocco.); England against Paraguay and Italy vs. France.

Computers don't have all the answers. Cost per thousand is not a magic talisman. You have to factor in some imponderables, because what do machines know about human emotions like trust and believability? Asked in which medium they found the advertising most believable, more consumers said "newspapers" than the other four major media combined.*

Believe in newspapers. They can work marketing magic.

Yanks hold off O's; Astros win

Associated Press

Don Mattingly hit a two-run homer in the first inning and lined an RBI double that broke a seventh-inning tie as the New York Yankees withstood three solo home runs by Baltimore's Juan Beniquez and beat the Orioles 7-5 Thursday night.

Beniquez, who entered the game with one home run this season, hit his third of the night in the sixth inning for a 5-5 tie.

But Rickey Henderson led off the Yankees' seventh with a double and Mattingly followed with another double off Tippy Martinez, 0-2.

"Everybody likes to hit with men on base ... sometimes it's hard to concentrate with nobody on," Mattingly said. "With Rickey out there, it always helps."

Beniquez connected for his first three-homer game in the major leagues. He had three previous two-homer games.

"I'm a line-drive hitter, a singles hitter," Beniquez said. "But tonight was one of those nights."

"I just hit the ball good and it went out of the ballpark. I was surprised. It's too bad we lost, but it was good night for me."

Beniquez homered in the second inning and again in the fourth off New York starter Alfonso Pulido, who was brought up from the minors earlier in the day.

Eddie Murray hit a two-run homer in the sixth that knocked out Pulido, and Beniquez greeted Brian Fisher, 2-2, with another home run.

Beniquez fouled out to first base in the seventh inning and grounded out in the ninth.

Mattingly hit a two-run homer, his 12th, in the first off Ken Dixon. Two outs later, Ken Griffey hit a solo homer for a 3-0 lead. Dixon, who did not finish the inning, has allowed 20 home runs this year, including 15 in his last 27 innings at Memorial Stadium.

AMERICAN LEAGUE
Blue Jays 9, Tigers 0

Kelly Gruber hit a three-run, inside-the-park homer that was lost in a dense fog and Cliff Johnson and Jesse Barfield also homered, powering Toronto past Detroit.

The Blue Jays had runners on second and third with two outs in the seventh when Gruber hit a routine fly ball to center field. But the ball disappeared into a thick fog and center fielder Pat Sheridan did not make a move until it landed behind him.

Right fielder Kirk Gibson retrieved the ball at the fence in right-center, but Gruber had already circled the bases for his third home run of the season. Gruber went 3-for-4 and broke an 0-for-26 slump.

Home plate umpire Dave Phillips waved the players of the field after Gruber's homer, and the game was called 35 minutes later because o rain and fog.

Toronto's Jimmy Key, 4-5, allowed six hits in sending Detroit to its 10th loss in the last 13 games.

Barfield hit a solo homer, his 16th, during a three-run second off Dave LaPoint, 2-5. Johnson hit a two-run homer in the fourth and added an RBI double in the seventh.

White Sox 8, Mariners 4

Carlton Fisk hit a two-run double that broke a ninth-inning tie and Harold Baines followed with a two-run homer as Chicago rallied for five runs to beat Seattle.

The White Sox trailed 4-0 after seven inning, but scored three times in the eighth, two on a double by Fisk.

John Cangelosi's two-out single drove in the tying run in the top of the ninth, setting up Fisk and Baines.

Angels 3, Royals 2

Mike Witt pitched a six-hitter and Brian Downing tripled home two runs in the third inning to lead California past Kansas City.

Witt, 7-4, held the Royals hitless until Willie Wilson singled to open the sixth inning. Wilson then scored on Lonnie Smith's double.

NATIONAL LEAGUE
Astros 4, Giants 1

Rookie Manny Hernandez won his first major-league game and Mark Bailey hit a two-run homer as Houston beat San Francisco.

Hernandez, 1-1, pitched 5 2-3 innings and gave up one run on seven hits. Aurelio Lopez worked the next 2 2-3 innings before Dave Smith got the final two outs for his NL-leading 16th save.

Bailey, who entered the game batting .184, hit his fourth home run of the season in the sixth inning, giving the Astros a 4-1 lead. Bailey connected after Denny Walling drew a walk from Mike Krukow, 8-4. Krukow had won his previous four decisions.

ABC's Howard faces impossible Open task

Associated Press

Chuck Howard, who is producing the U.S. Open golf championship coverage for ABC as well as ESPN this week, realizes he will be second-guessed about his efforts.

"There's no way you can please everbody," he said Thursday at Southampton, N.Y., as the tournament began. "Some people say we show too many putts and not enough drives, and vice versa."

Although CBS is generally conceded to have the best golf network coverage, Howard naturally maintains ABC is the best.

"Not only are we the only ones to cover all 18 holes," Howard said. "We have three basic announcers and they're the best — Jim McKay, Jack Whitaker and (Britain's) Pete Allis. Instead of bouncing all over the place to nine different announcers for quick spots, the three each have about 15 minutes apiece to develop a theme whether it's about the weather, the foreigners or whatever."

ABC's coverage will be Saturday and Sunday with 4½ hours each day, starting at 2 p.m. EDT. ESPN, which is partly owned by ABC, has four hours of live coverage Thursday and Friday.

Open TV

With Europeans generally favored to win the U.S. Open because of the Shinnecock Hills Golf Club course's similar setting and conditions — wind from the ocean — as many Britain courses, ABC is prepared with profile interviews of the top foreigners.

"We went to Germany to interview Bernhardt Langer, to Spain for Seve Ballesteros and Austria for Greg Norman," Howard said.

All told, ABC has 15 taped features on players and the Hamptons area which Howard plans to use at opportune times.

The U.S. Open costs more than $1 million to produce. Some 280 people are working for the network, including eight announcers, 25 production people and more than 100 technicians.

"Other networks show more shots, but we try to bring out the personalities and appeal to the non-hardcore viewer."

Cubs ax Frey, Zimmer

CHICAGO (AP) — Jim Frey, who two years ago guided Chicago to their first title since 1945, was dismissed Thursday as manager of the Cubs.

"I think he did everything in his power to help the players and the oganization get back on the winning track. Unfortunately, in my opinion whatever he was doing at the this stage of the game wasn't getting the job done," club President Dallas Green said at a Wrigley Field news conference.

"It's something I'm very disheartened by," Frey said. "I wanted to stay here a long time. I wanted to stay here and win."

THE DECISION to release Frey followed a disastrous road trip — seven losses in 10 games.

"For the good of the baseball team and for the good of the fans, we had to make a change," Green said.

"The baseball players know how I feel about this change — I'm not very happy about it. And I told them in no uncertain terms how I feel they contributed to it," Green said.

Green said he was looking for a permanent replacement and had several possibilities in mind, but declined to identify any of them.

He said first base coach John Vukovich will handle the managerial duties Friday, when the Cubs open a home stand against the St. Louis Cardinals, but would not say whether Vukovich would stay on the job beyond that.

"I don't like the word interim. I'd prefer to call him my manager. I told you he's managing tomorrow and that's good enough," Green said.

Green said he will never forget what Frey did for the Cubs in leading them to the National League East pennant in 1984 "and I don't think anybody in Chicago should forget it."

For his leadership, Frey was named 1984 Manager of the Year by The Associated Press.

FREY, 55, SAID he had no inkling he would be fired until he was called into Green's office Thursday.

Green "didn't really give any reason other than the performance of the team and I don't think you really need any reason other than that. ... our performance has been disappointing and he decided to let me go, in hopes they could improve the team," Frey told WBBM-AM radio.

The team was 23-33 this year, in fifth place, 16½ games behind the division-leading New York Mets.

Green hired Frey on Oct. 6, 1983, to replace interim Manager Charlie Fox.

In Frey's first season with the team, the Cubs won the NL East title with a 96-65 record but lost the pennant to the San Diego Padres in five games, after leading 2-0.

The club slumped to a 77-84 record last season after a devastating series of injuries that knocked all five starting pitchers out of the rotation.

Frey is tied with Stan Hack for 12th on the Cubs' all-time victory list with 196 wins.

BEFORE JOINING the Cubs, Frey managed the Kansas City Royals in 1980 and part of 1981. He directed the Royals to the 1980 American League pennant,

All finishers agreed that No.9, the 447-yard par-4 with the high plateau green and a fairway starting 220 yards from the tee, was playing as a par 5 into this nor'easter. Actually true par Thursday on Shinnecock might have been something like 73 or 74 since Nos.9, 18, 12 and 14 played more like par-5 holes into this wind than their listed par 4.

Shortly before 8 p.m., with a handful of golfers still on the course, play was suspended due to darkness.

The forecast for Friday indicated a chance of showers in the morning

Joe and Frank Hardy never wound up with knives to their backs while questioning customers in a gay bar.

Real-life Odessa sleuths say the job requires close brushes with such aspects of life's underside. More often, it involves the tedium of knocking on door after door while chasing down a lead.

"I get a call a week from some dork who wants to become a PI because he's heard it's glamorous," said 27-year-old Cathy Griffin, one of Odessa's seven or so private investigators.

"When you sit up all night in a car and freeze with your binoculars — that's not glamorous," she said. "The one high-speed chase I ever had, I got pulled over."

"A lot of it is just beating the pavement," said Ms. Griffin, who started her one-woman operation in 1983 after seven years as a TV news reporter.

She works chiefly through Odessa attorneys who want her to investigate unfaithful wives or husbands or unsavory mothers or fathers for evidence to be used in divorce proceedings or custody battles.

Other jobs call for probing murder cases, locating missing people and, sometimes, helping businesses collect overdue bills, she said.

Ms. Griffin recalled that her father warned about her line of work. "When you go around snooping in people's business, you're liable to get killed," he told her.

"There's always that fear of getting yanked out of your car at night," she admitted.

Ms. Griffin's one close call ended safely after she talked her way free from a woman with a gun who didn't like being tailed, she said.

"When you're dealing in people's private lives, it puts you in a position for anything," she said.

Mike Perkins, chief investigator for the Odessa firm of Harper Inc., agrees that risk sometimes is present on the job, but it's usually overblown by television, magazines and movies.

"What we do is not necessarily dangerous," said Perkins, 41, who started the agency in 1982. "I don't even own a handgun."

He admits to two close calls, one in a gay bar in Albuquerque, N.M., when a man put a knife to his back as Perkins questioned the man's lover.

Perkins' partner flashed a gun, and the two detectives fled the bar unharmed, he said.

"High-speed chases — we've gotten into a few of those," he said.

In one, "we had three Hell's Angels trap us north of town," he said.

But Perkins' Corvette proved faster than motorcycles that night, he said.

Such incidents are few and far between, the detective said, and for the most part, "I pride myself on being able to talk myself out of anything."

With 60 to 70 percent of the agency's work done on criminal cases, Perkins and his five detectives work arm-in-arm with defense attorneys in preparing cases for trial.

Such investigations can involve visiting the crime scene, tracking down witnesses, evaluating autopsies in murder cases and helping select jurors and taking notes on courtroom testimony, he said.

Each staffer has an investigative specialty to offer, he said. Perkins is a self-taught expert on selecting sympathetic jurors, while other investigators know how to deal with product liability, child custody or business cases, he said.

But the key to each detective's knowledge is in locating the right people and getting them to talk about a case, he said.

Other skills include following cars, which Perkins calls "the hardest thing in the world" to do.

Watching houses and taking photographs also are part of the tasks, said Perkins. He said he has found himself climbing telephone poles and Dumpsters to get the right shot through an open window.

"We don't take dirty pictures as a normal thing," he said. These days, Perkins said, "I turn down more of that stuff than I take."

Child custody case investigations are among the trickiest, Perkins said. It's often the private detective's job to find out if a mother or father is involved in something unsavory, like prostitution or drugs, he said.

"They don't want you investigating them."

"There are times that I have thought this a scummy business," said Ms. Griffin.

But for the most part, she said, "I'm paid to do a job. I'm not personally involved in the situation.

"There have been some cases that I'm glad to be a part of," Ms. Griffin said. A recent South Texas investigation by Ms. Griffin ended with a 2-year-old being removed from a family that had a three-generation history of child molestation, she said.

"My most rewarding cases are the ones that may pay the least, but where justice has been served," she said.

Private detectives are depicted in movies and on television as free-wheeling.

But real-life private investigators are bound by legal and ethical considerations, Ms. Griffin said.

Garden City man injured in mishap

From Staff Reports

A 74-year-old Garden City man was listed in serious condition early today at Midland Memorial Hospital following a one-car accident Thursday near the intersection of State Highways 1379 and 158, 16 miles southeast of Midland.

According to Department of Public Safety records, Bernard Dierschke was driving northbound on Highway 1379 at a "high rate of speed" at approximately 11 a.m. and ran a stop sign at the intersection with Highway 158. His 1978 Chevrolet 4-door sedan then lost control, rolled over and landed in a pasture, reports said. Dierschke was transported by ambulance to the hospital with multiple injuries.

Hospital spokeswoman Lisa Ball today said Dierschke remained today in intensive care after he underwent surgery Thursday for a lacerated liver and other internal injuries.

Pilot seriously injured in plane crash

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 40-year-old pilot was seriously injured and a passenger suffered a minor injury early today in the crash of a single-engine aircraft at the Ector County Airport.

According to Department of Public Safety Trooper Gilbert Flores, the 1974 Cessna Cardinal flown by Michael Alan Collins, 6007 Linwood, was about 400 yards from the end of the northeast end of Runway 20 on final approach when the aircraft nosed into the ground.

Flores' report indicated Collins was thrown through the windshield on impact. A passenger, Barbara Covey, 2710 N. Century, suffered a slight knee injury. She was treated at Medical Center Hospital and released. A MCH nursing supervising this morning said Collins was in serious condition in the intensive care unit. Flores said Collins suffered head injuries.

According to Odessa Police spokesman John McAhon, Ms. Covey walked from the crash to a nearby private residence and called police about 2:45 a.m. DPS was notified when Odessa police determined the crash had occurred outside the city limits.

The DPS report filed by Flores said Collins is the owner of the Baskin Robbins store on North Grandview and Ms. Covey is an employee. The crash occurred about 2:30 a.m., the report stated.

A DPS dispatcher said the Federal Aviation Administration had been notified and was expected to begin an investigation of the crash sometime this morning.

Official tries to save free food program

By GARY RASP
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Department of Human Services Commissioner Marlin Johnston Thursday said he might be able to salvage a free food surplus program that helps feed more than 1.5 million Texans.

The program, which provides cheese, butter, dry milk, flour, rice, cornmeal and honey to a half-million Texas households, was scheduled to shut down June 16 because of an end to federal funds.

Texas' share of the program is about $960,000 less than what the state will need to continue through Oct. 1, when the next federal fiscal year begins, Johnston said Thursday. He said DHS can come up with two-thirds of the money to keep the program running if local governments can raise the remaining $320,000.

"Costs are going up and participation has quadrupled since 1983," Johnston said, adding that 26 other states face the same problem.

The state agency operates the Temporary Emergency Food Assistance Program on a federal grant of $3.3 million and commodities from the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The cost of distributing the food, along with storing perishables such as cheese and butter, have used up Texas' federal allotment, Johnston said.

The DHS contracts with 86 non-profit organizations to distribute the food in 253 Texas counties. Distributors are reimbursed for actual costs up to 5 percent of the value of the donated foods.

Johnston said the contractors will be notified immediately of the availability of supplemental state funds and urged to seek matching funds from local sources to continue the program.

Gramm wants to keep sales tax deductions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texans would be able to keep deducting state sales taxes on their federal income tax returns under an amendment to the tax overhaul bill proposed by Sen. Phil Gramm.

As it now stands, the bill, which is undergoing lengthy debate on the Senate floor, would eliminate sales tax deductions but preserve state income tax deductibility.

"I believe very strongly from a fairness point of view that the federal government should not be picking and choosing among state and local revenue sources," Gramm, R-Texas, told a news conference Thursday. Texas has no state income tax.

Gramm said he plans to offer an amendment that would let itemizing taxpayers choose to deduct either state income taxes or sales taxes.

Gramm, sponsor of the Gramm-Rudman balanced-budget law, said he was looking for ways to pay for the deduction.

The most likely candidate, he said, would be a restriction on deductions for second-mortgage interest, closing what he called a "gaping loophole" in the bill that would let taxpayers take deductions for second mortgages when the money went for boats, cars, vacations, etc., circumventing the bill's intention to eliminate deduction of interest on credit cards and consumer loans.

Gramm said restoring the sales tax deduction across-the-board would cost $17 billion over five years, but the giving taxpayers the either-or option would cost a mere $3.3 billion.

Under the language he is considering, Gramm said, second-mortgage interest would be deductible only if the money were used for a home, home remodeling, a second home, medical expenses or tuition and books.

"You know, you can now go out and charge a fur coat on your American Express card, pay 18¼ percent interest and deduct it from your income tax," Gramm said. "After this tax reform, you won't be able to do it.

"But if you get a second mortgage to pay off American Express for buying a fur coat, you can deduct the interest and carrying charges on a fur coat by claiming it as a mortgage. That's not right."

Optional deduction of sales taxes would benefit states that have low or no state income taxes, Gramm said, including: Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, Connecticut, Florida, Indiana, Louisiana, Mississippi, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Washington and Wyoming.

The aim of the tax legislation is to simplify federal income tax rates, lower rates overall for most taxpayers, and eliminate many deductions. The property tax deduction would remain.

The tax bill's sponsor, Sen. Robert Packwood, R-Ore., has resisted major amendments to the bill.

Gramm said Packwood had made no decision on his amendment and in the meantime he would be talking to other senators, including his Texas colleague, Democrat Lloyd Bentsen.

"Senator Bentsen wants to keep deductibility of state sales taxes," said Bentsen's press secretary, Jack DeVore. "If there is any possible way to do it, he would be for it."

Ice Cream Crank Off scheduled for Sunday

From Staff Reports

The second annual Ice Cream Crank Off will be held from 5-8 p.m. Sunday on the lawn of the Brown-Dorsey Medallion Home, 213 N. Weatherford.

In Thursday's Reporter-Telegram it was incorrectly reported that the event would be held Saturday.

The event will feature "turn-of-the-century" homemade ice cream.

Members of the Midland County Historical Commission sponsor the event in observance of the first election held in Midland County on June 15, 1885. Final plans were made when the society and the commission held their regular meeting Saturday, according to Mrs. John McKinley, who heads both groups. Tickets will be available at the front gate or may be purchased in advance by calling 682-2931. Tickets are $1.

Murals on the fence at the home were done by a group of students headed by Shelly Browder and included Lance Overstreet, Dianna Eccleston, Charlie Boyd and Jonathan Card. Kathy Nichols, Julie Greaves, Tonya Hertel and Catrina Browder also assisted in the painting.

Local agency OKs budget for Langtry Village

From Staff Reports

A $709,280 proposed budget for Langtry Village apartments was approved by the Housing Authority of Midland this week.

The budget will be presented to Housing and Urban Development for approval. The 85-unit apartment building at 2200 North Pecos houses low income elderly. Sixteen apartments have been occupied since the first of June, said Fred Kester, secretary with the Housing Authority.

Anticipated revenues for the apartment complex are about $546,900, while routine expenses will be about $162,380, Kester said.

By KEN PELLIS

LUFKIN (AP) — Virginia Havard is a high school English teacher, not a publisher, but she knows writers like their names in print.

"The big problem with getting kids to write, and particularly to rewrite, is to get them motivated," said Mrs. Havard. "Kids won't do it well if they're not motivated to do it."

So what better way than to publish a book of student writings?

Her English IV students at Lufkin High School did just that with "By Word of Mouth," a history of the Great Depression as remembered by those who lived through the tumultuous 1930s.

Sixty-two of more than 100 writings were accepted for the 72-page oral history publication, complete with period photographs of many of those interviewed.

Mrs. Havard said the project — patterned after the "Foxfire" writings of Georgia students — accomplished its educational purpose, and she is pleased with its quality.

The book came out this spring after months of work. "If I'm going to compare it with other high school writing," she said, "I'm going to say that the kids could hold their own with high school seniors anywhere in public school education."

Mrs. Havard said one thing the project has done is "to record stories that nobody else would have recorded."

The volume tells the impact of the Depression on people at all levels of society — from the daughter of a wealthy clothing manufacturer to those who picked cotton. Common concerns such as food and money were much in people's memories, but there is also a wealth of richly personal recollections.

Hayne Nelms Stokes Jr., a Groveton teenager at the time, told interviewer Patti Clark he found girls different when he visited Lufkin, about 30 miles away.

"We saw some girls in Lufkin that were not sawmill girls, and we sure were surprised that they all smelled like talcum powder," he said. "Girls smelled kind of like resin over there at Groveton when you'd get close to them. But these girls in Lufkin were real pretty."

Paul Ryan, then working in New York's Macy's for $14 a week, remembered "a most unusual experience I had going to work one evening. I saw a young woman in a full-length sable coat walking by about 150 men who were lined up at Mrs. William Randolph's soup kitchen.

"This vivid contrast shocked me," he recounted to Jan Arender. "Even at the best of times, one did not flaunt sable coats."

Glades Squyres told interviewer Anne Squyres that she and her husband J.C. "were the only ones around who had a radio, and all the neighbors came at night to listen to it. Saturday was a big day, and we went to town and spent the money we made during the week. We also had dances at people's houses, but we had to quit because everybody started drinking and shooting firearms." J.C. had a job with the Works Progress Administration, and he and his wife picked cotton for extra money.

Rayburn Hayes told interviewer Greg Stephenson that he and his young friends drank RC Cola because the bottles were bigger than other cola bottles. Novella Byrd, wrote Julie Bozeman, recalled "hearing her parents and neighbors talking about how many wealthy people lost all they had in the stock market crash. Many of them could not face their families or friends, so they killed themselves by jumping from skycrapers."

Others described the Depression as a time when practical values were gained and families and neighbors were tight. "As a family, the Depression brought us closer together," Beatrice Anderson told Christy Carroll. "We were poor, but we were happy."

Eddie Gutierrez interviewed Max Wortham, who traveled with his father's circus while growing up. Gutierrez said Wortham's experience of the Depression differed from the norm: "He really didn't see the bad side of life. He saw the happy side of life."

Mrs. Havard came away with two general impressions from the writings: In a time when people made the most of materials and sometimes held three or four jobs, life wasn't simple; also, generally speaking, "blacks had it harder than whites, all the way through."

While some whites made do with hand-me-down clothes and one pair of shoes, she noted, some blacks were thankful they had enough to eat and no one in the family died. But she added, "Some of the blacks were very careful to point out that they raised their own food and didn't have it that hard."

Students had the choice of writing in expository or narrative form and using third or first person.

Stereo equipment reported stolen

From Staff Reports

The Midland County Sheriff's Department today reported the burglary of stereo equipment worth more than $650 from a residence. Pam Keene, #48 Sundial, told officers when she returned to her residence Thursday a back door was open and a window missing. She then found a Realistic VHS model 115 valued at $399 and a set of stereo speakers valued at $360 missing.

Also reported by the Sheriff's Office was a theft over $750 from Magic Living Home Sales, 9005 W. Hwy. 80.

Defendants say suit won't be tried

DALLAS (AP) — A lawsuit filed against former Gov. John B. Connally and former Lt. Gov. Ben Barnes won't be tried because the $10.9 million loan payment sought is owed by someone else and will be paid.

The suit, filed Wednesday by General Electric Credit Corp. with U.S. District Judge Robert W. Porter, said Connally and Barnes signed personal guarantees for a $10.9 million loan granted in 1984 to Fry Road Associates Ltd. of Austin, owner of a Houston shopping center.

Yearbook won't have account of shooting

HOUSTON (AP) — A shooting in a high school cafeteria will not be included in the school's yearbook despite pleas by staff members who say tragic events, as well as pleasant memories, should be documented.

"A yearbook is supposed to reflect what happened at our school, good or bad," said Langham Creek High School student editor Gayla Conners. "And (the shooting) was the most important thing that happened at our school. It's something that affected us all."

But Principal George Hopper told the yearbook staff he didn't want the book to include details of the Sept. 20, 1985, shooting that left assistant principal Marvin Webster paralyzed and injured another student.

"He said he felt that we should not have any statements at all about the shooting, except as a reference within other copy," said Kay Weiman, a journalism and English teacher at the school.

Ms. Weiman, who serves as the yearbook advisor, said she believes part of the reason for the principal's decision is that he makes an effort to stress the positive at Langham Creek and build students' self-confidence.

Hopper could not be reached for comment at his office Thursday and was not scheduled to return to work until next week.

At Hopper's suggestion, the staff dedicated the yearbook to Webster, and Miss Conners wrote a small tribute to him as an opening to the book.

The students had composed a two-page layout including photographs of crying students, eyewitness accounts of the shooting and a description of what happened.

The picture layout and the eyewitness accounts were censored, although the yearbook staff offered a compromise to leave out the photos of the shooting and keep discussions by students about how they felt after the shooting, Miss Connors said.

Hopper, however, refused to allow anything specifically about the shooting in the book.

Other schools in the district included stories about the shooting in their yearbooks without being censored, Ms. Weiman said.

"If anybody knows what happened, if anybody could report it accurately, it's us," Miss Conners said. "We were there. We should be able to put it into our own words and put it in our own thoughts about it for people to see."

Associate Principal Carolyn Spillane said Hopper believes it is important to keep an upbeat atmosphere at the school.

"When you have kids terrorized like that, you don't need to be reminding them of it for the rest of their lives," Ms. Spillane said. "To put it permanently in a yearbook is just something we wanted to avoid."

The shooting occurred when a student pulled a gun in the cafeteria during lunchtime and started shooting, wounding Webster and another student. Webster's spinal cord was severed, and the other student was hit in the leg.

Gerard Ingles, 17, was arrested and remains in the Harris County Jail awaiting trial on charges of aggravated assault.

Webster, 34, returned to school part-time in February and is still undergoing therapy for partial paralysis in both legs.

Witnesses gather for 'Divine Peace' convention

From Staff Reports

"What a shocking commentary it is on so-called civilization that the world is now spending on war equipment the colossal sum of 800 billion dollars each year, or one and a half million dollars each minute."

With those words, S.L. Briski of Lubbock opened the four-day "Divine Peace" District Convention of Jehovah's Witnesses at the Chaparral Center.

Some 3,464 delegates listened as Briski called the past two world wars evidence of man's capacity to destroy mankind in great volume.

Briski said World War I introduced machine guns, tanks, and airplanes for the first time.

"In less than 30 years World War II followed. It was four times as destructive of life and property as the First World War. It introduced even more murderous devices — flamethrowers, napalm bombs, and finally the atom bomb — forerunner of the demonic nuclear devices that now threaten the very survival of mankind here on earth," he said.

Commenting on the cost of military equipment, Briski said the funds required for such hardware were more than enough to feed, clothe, and shelter those of the human race who are living in poverty.

"On the other hand," he said, "the stockpile of nuclear weapons could destroy all of the human race — over five billion of us — 12 times over. Yet it is reported that half a million of the world's best brains are employed in developing even more devastating weapons of destruction," he said.

Briski said the "kingdom of God by Jesus Christ" was the only hope for the human family. He added that this government is the only one that can bring lasting and just peace.

"How happy we are," he said, "that he is proceeding to the accomplishment of his grand purposes toward this earth and mankind."

The Witnesses will take to the streets of Midland today to invite local residents to the convention.

The principal address of the assembly is scheduled Sunday at 2:10 p.m. when L.R. Schilling speaks on the subject, "Peace at Last — When God Speaks."

Sexual assault trial to continue next week

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Ector County District Attorney Eric Augesen has indicated the trial of a 34-year-old former Midland man on charges of kidnapping and aggravated sexual assault will probably continue into next week.

District Judge Joe Connally recessed the trial early last night after jurors watched a videotaped hypnotic session Ector County Sheriff's Capt. Larry Crawford conducted with the then-13-year-old victim to help her recall details of the incident that occurred June 13, 1985.

The prosecution is expected to call the young girl to the witness stand sometime today to face cross-examination by Dyer's attorney, Tom Hirsch.

Dyer is accused of abducting the girl from in front of Water Wonderland and repeatedly raping and sodomizing her as he traveled from Midland to Andrews County and back to Ector County.

Dyer was arrested July 24 after the girl saw him in a local television station promotional ad that was filmed at the place where he worked, an oil field service company located on U.S. Highway 80 a short distance from Water Wonderland. Dyer was living in a mobile home park also located on Highway 80 at the time of the alleged incident.

Dyer was indicted by an Ector County grand jury on four charges of aggravated sexual assault and one count of kidnapping. He also faces one charge of aggravated sexual assault in Andrews County.

Citizen's tip results in man's arrest

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 27-year-old man was to be arraigned in Municipal Court this morning on charges of possession of a controlled substance, escape and criminal trespass.

Police spokesman John McAhon said officers were flagged down by a citizen about 8:20 p.m. Thursday who said a fight was in progress in the 800-block of Prairie Avenue on the city's southside.

Officers found the 27-year-old man walking down the street sticking a hunting knife and sheath into the waistband of his pants. When the man saw officers, he ran into a residence at 805 Prairie Ave. and refused to come out.

The man was finally taken into custody after a K9 Unit dog was sent into the house. A search of the man revealed he was carrying five balloons of a substance believed to be heroin. He was arrested and jailed on charges of possession of a controlled substance, escape and criminal trespass.

Drilling rigs enlisted to fight MD

Cultural, chemical controls reduce home garden insects

Home gardeners are preparing for the 1986 garden season. Home gardens are always subject to the attack of different insect pests. The damage that insect pests cause to plants in the home garden may be reduced by cultural practices and/or chemical control. For best results, combine these two practices.

Damage caused by insect pests may be reduced by the following cultural practices:

— Grow healthy plants, which are often better able to survive and compensate for pest damage. This involves selecting a suitable location, good soil and keeping the plants well fed, watered and cultivated.

— Select vegetable varieties which are best able to survive the insect pests usually encountered in your locality. Past local experience is a helpful guide.

— Plant crops late enough in the spring to avoid slow growth periods which favor injury from soil and seedling insect pests.

— Grow or buy plants for transplanting into your garden to avoid seedling pest damage and shorten the period in which other pests may cause injury before harvest.

— Isolate tomato plants within screened enclosures to delay their exposure to leafhoppers carrying the virus of curly top disease.

— Harvest crops as early as possible to reduce the period of exposure to insect pests.

— Practice garden sanitation, including weed control and the elimination of debris which may shelter pests. Promptly dispose of infested crop remnants which may harbor pests.

The use of insecticides in the home garden should be considered when insect numbers and injury have become excessive and other methods of control are inadequate. Most vegetable insects, mites and other arthropods can be acceptably controlled in the home garden, when necessary, by one of the following legally registered pesticides.

When used as directed on the container label:

Carbaryl, sold under the proprietary name Sevin®, is an effective insecticide for use primarily against chewing insects such as caterpillars, worms and beetles. Formulated as a dust, a wettable powder or dilution with water, liquid solution or as a bait.

Diazinon®, commonly sold in a formulation called Spectracide®, is a good general-purpose home garden insecticide when used as directed. It is effective against insects with either sucking or chewing mouthparts and spider mites. It is usually available as an emulsifiable concentrate for dilution with water or as a dust or in granular formulations.

Malathion is a general purpose insecticide when used as directed. It is effective against insects with sucking and chewing mouthparts. It is usually purchased as a dust or an emulsifiable concentrate for dilution with water.

Kelthane is a good miticide for control of spider mites on home garden plants. It is usually purchased as an emulsifiable concentrate for dilution with water.

Bacillus thuringiensis, a biocide commonly sold under the proprietary names Dipel® and Thuricide HP®, is an effective material for control of worms feeding on plant foliage. It has no time limitations on date of application to harvest of vegetable crops. Formulated as a liquid solution.

When buying an insecticide, first read the label to make sure it lists the insect pest you want to control and that the formulation is suitable for home garden use.

Reagan pushes dairy hormones

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration favors the development of a genetically engineered growth hormone for dairy cows that offers higher milk output, despite the government's $1.8 billion effort to curb milk surpluses, administration officials told Congress.

"We would appear to have many inconsistencies in government policy," Ewen M. Wilson, deputy assistant agriculture secretary for economics, told the House Agriculture dairy subcommittee this week.

"But the government has a legitimate role" in promoting research on bovine growth hormone (BGH), a drug that promises to boost milk production by 10 to 25 percent in cows that receive it, Wilson said.

The government spent $1.5 million on BGH research last year and is spending a like amount this year, officials told the subcommittee. At the same time, the government is spending $1.8 billion to subsidize the slaughter of 1 million dairy cows because U.S. markets are flooded with milk.

"I'm not against progress," said Rep. Steve Gunderson, R-Wis., some of whose small dairy farmer constituents are worried they will be left behind by the new technology. "But the question of whether this is progress ... is certainly yet to be determined. The dairy industry needs more productivity about as much as a drunk driver needs another drink."

Industry and federal officials agreed at Wednesday's hearing that the new drug, now being developed by at least four companies, could lead to lower milk prices and probably will put some farmers out of business in the 1990s as fewer cows are needed to fill the nation's dairy needs. The hormone is expected to be available for commercial use as soon as 1988.

"It may be true that some dairy farmers will leave dairying if and when BGH comes on the market," just as some were forced out with the advent of automatic milking machines and other technical advances, Wilson said. "Dairy farmers will face this possibility as long as science continues to find ways to build a better mousetrap."

The substance is a synthetic version of a protein that occurs naturally in cows, made through new bioengineering techniques. It tells the cow's system to direct more nutrients toward milk production, and the cow eats more to compensate. Overall efficiency is increased, and milk output grows by more than enough to offset the increased cost of feed.

A small group of Wisconsin dairy farmers, together with an anti-genetic engineering group and the Humane Society, is fighting the new drug and has asked the Food and Drug Administration to conduct an environmental study of the drug's effects before deciding whether to allow it on the market.

Cotton Council fears competition for sales from foreign growers

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Increased foreign competition will force American cotton growers to find new markets to sell their product or reduce production, a National Cotton Council economist says.

Areas that need large amounts of water to grow cotton — particularly Arizona and California — will be particularly hard-pressed to reduce their costs, M. Dean Ethridge, chief economist for the Cotton Council, said this week during council meetings.

"If we don't improve our market base, then we will have to shrink our production base," Ethridge said.

The American cotton industry harvests about 10 million acres a year, and exports count for about 40 percent of the sales. About 90 percent of the 940,000 bales produced in Arizona in 1985 is expected to be exported.

Much of the export market has disappeared in the past two years as competing nations such as China, Pakistan and Australia have sharply increased production, Ethridge said.

The high U.S. government deficit has further harmed export-based industries, he said, because the high value of the dollar has made U.S. exports less competitive.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture expects American cotton exports from the 1985-86 crop to drop to 2 million bales, the lowest in 43 years. The previous year's export totaled 6.2 million bales.

Cotton growers are expected to receive at least half of this year's projected income of $3 billion to $3.5 billion in the form of government subsidies.

Tax reforms may benefit farmers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. David Durenberger says the tax overhaul bill the Senate is debating this week may offer the brightest hope for the long-term survival of rural local governments facing financial collapse in the current farm crisis.

Durenberger, R-Minn., is urging Congress to preserve the full deductibility of all state and local taxes and maintain an adequate level of tax-exempt government bonds.

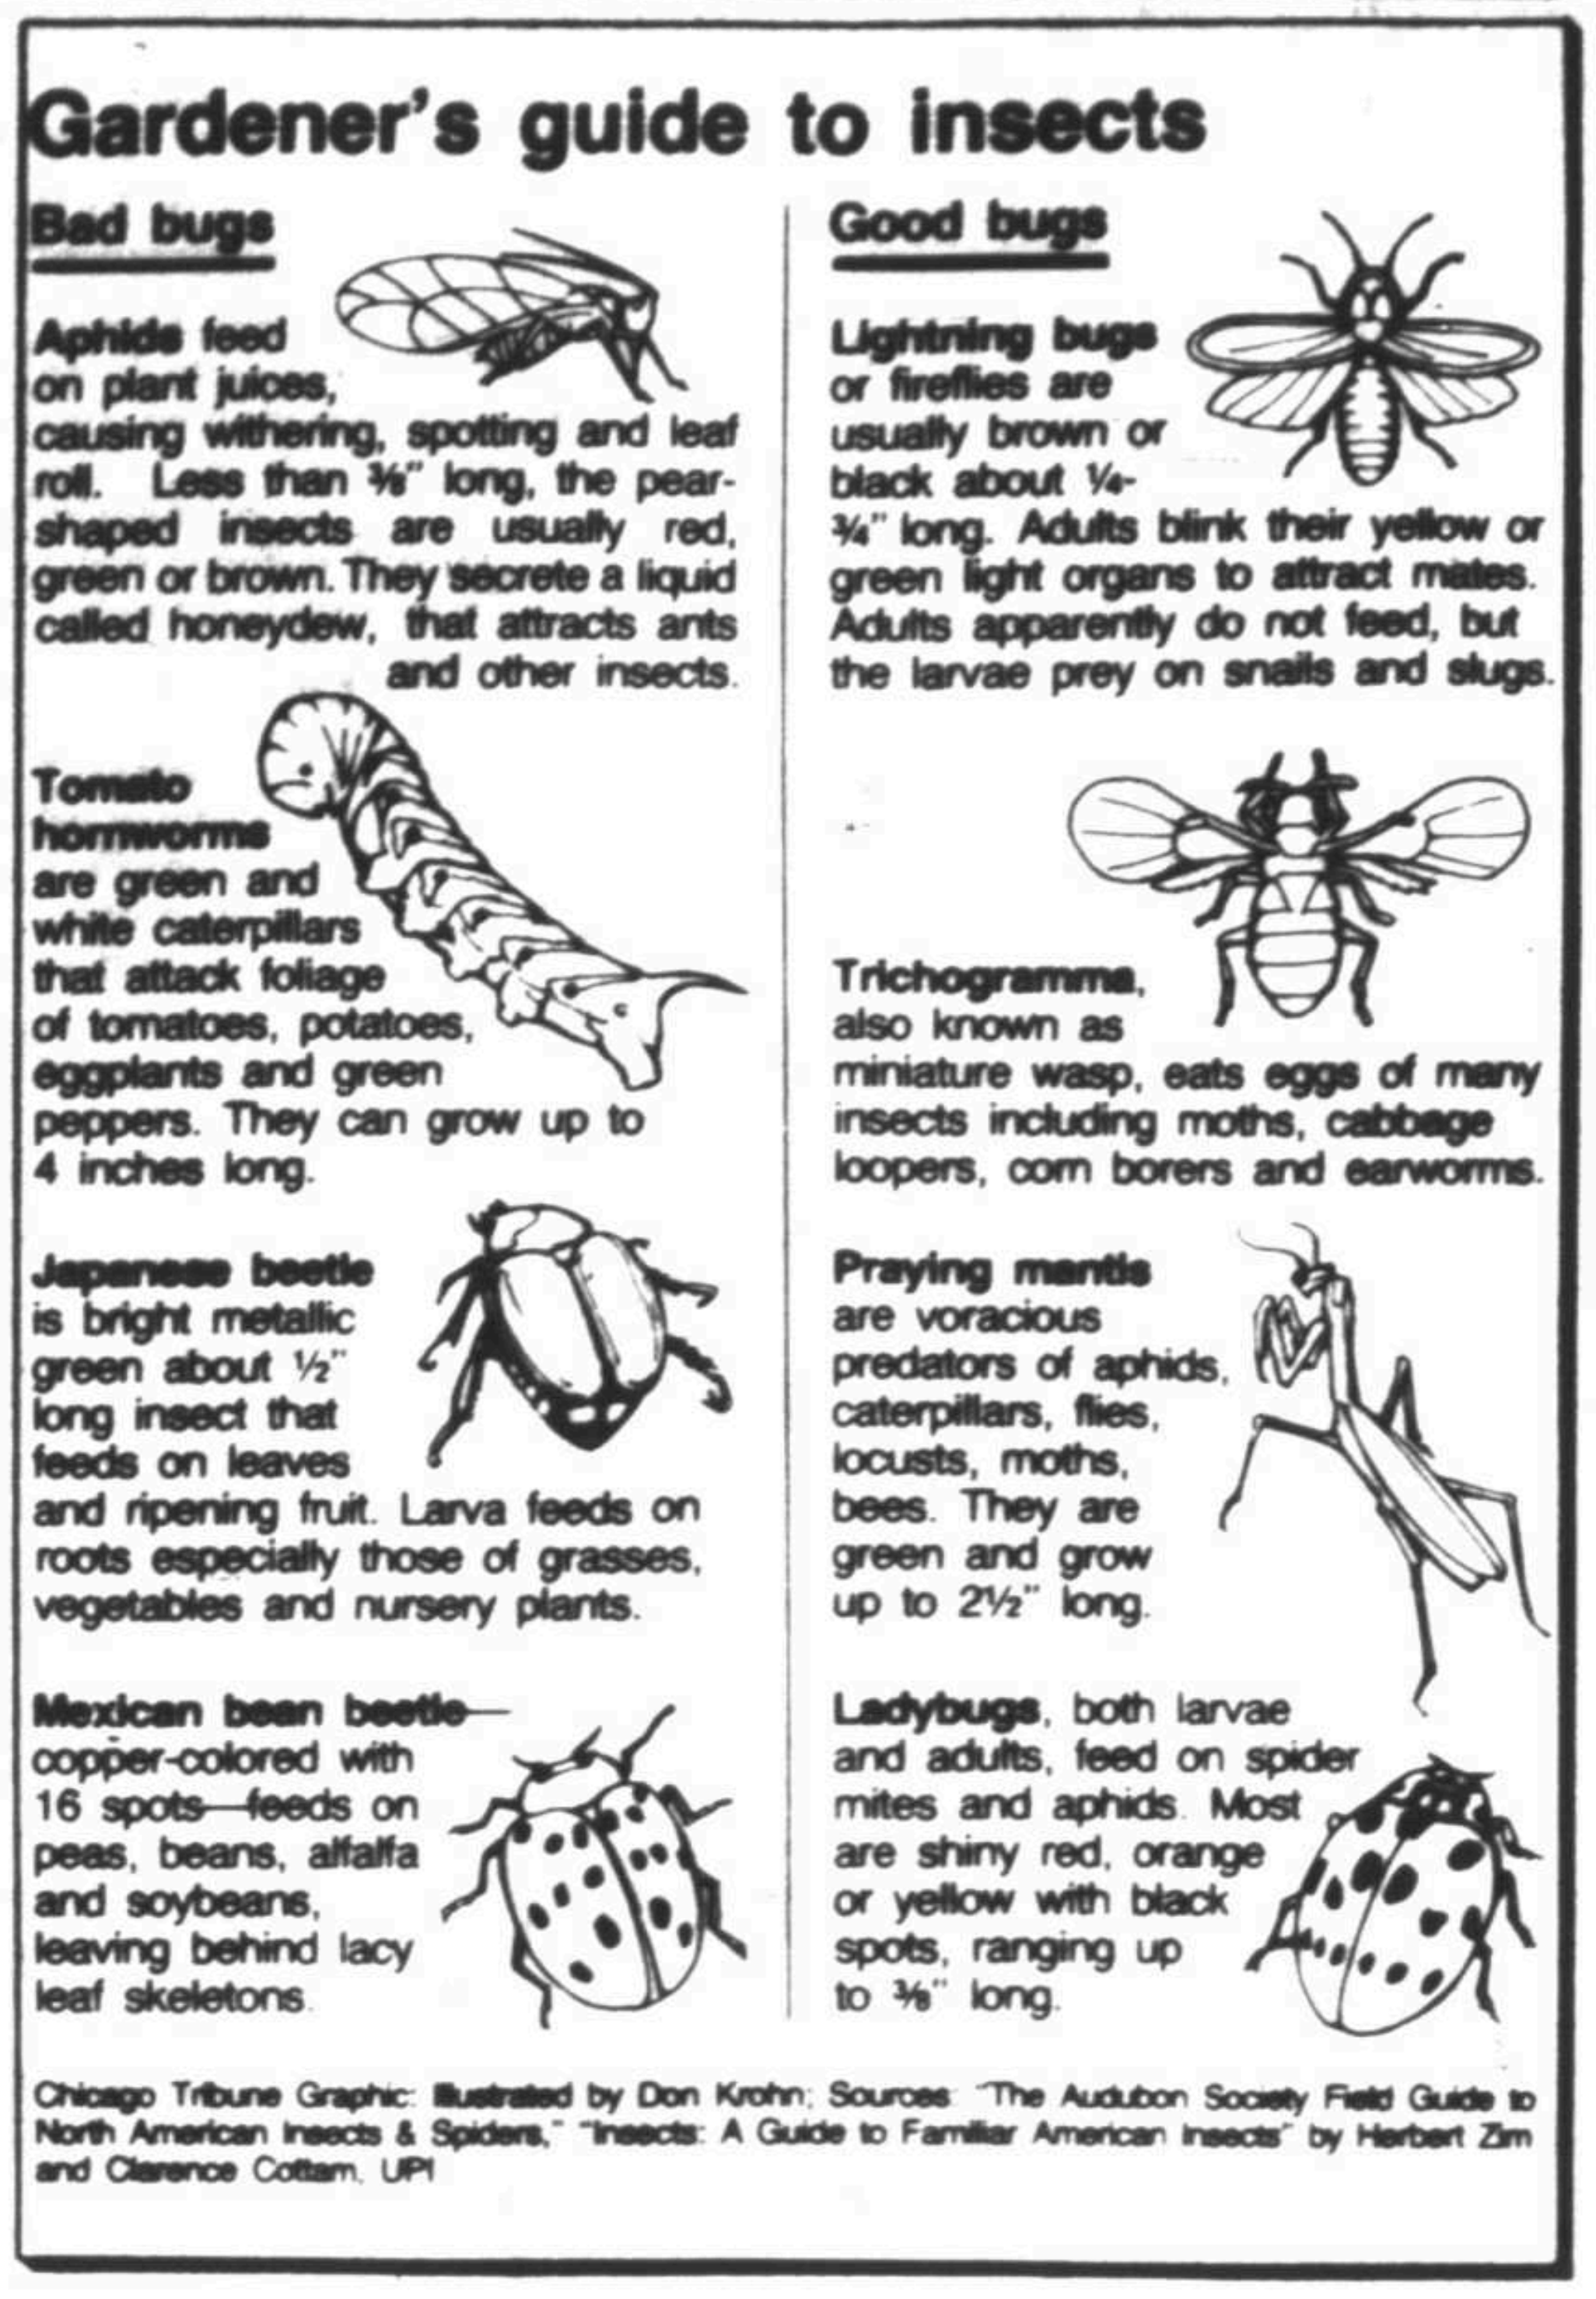
A recent report by Durenberger's Senate Governmental Affairs subcommittee on intergovernmental relations called the federal tax deduction for state and local taxes "the single most important national policy tool for enabling rural state and local governments to address their own public service and economic development needs."

The Senate version of the House-passed tax bill would liberalize the number of tax-exempt bonds that can be issued, and would retain all state and local tax deductions except for sales taxes.

In a floor speech Friday, Durenberger said the bottom line of his panel's report is bleak.

Largely overlooked in the farm crisis is its growing threat, coupled with simultaneous cuts in federal and state aid, to the "future financial viability of rural local governments," Durenberger said.

"If no response is made now, while there is still time, local governments in rural areas are in danger of losing one-fifth of their per capita revenues due to falling land values and cuts in state and federal aid. That amounts to $1,000 per family of four," the senator said.



Gardener's guide to insects

Bad bugs

Aphids feed on plant juices, causing withering, spotting and leaf roll. Less than ⅜" long, the pear-shaped insects are usually red, green or brown. They secrete a liquid called honeydew, that attracts ants and other insects.

Tomato hornworms are green and white caterpillars that attack foliage of tomatoes, potatoes, eggplants and green peppers. They can grow up to 4 inches long.

Japanese beetle is bright metallic green about ½" long insect that feeds on leaves and ripening fruit. Larva feeds on roots especially those of grasses, vegetables and nursery plants.

Mexican bean beetle—copper-colored with 16 spots—feeds on peas, beans, alfalfa and soybeans, leaving behind lacy leaf skeletons.

Good bugs

Lightning bugs or fireflies are usually brown or black about ¼-¾" long. Adults blink their yellow or green light organs to attract mates. Adults apparently do not feed, but the larvae prey on snails and slugs.

Trichogramma, also known as miniature wasp, eats eggs of many insects including moths, cabbage loopers, corn borers and earworms.

Praying mantis are voracious predators of aphids, caterpillars, flies, locusts, moths, bees. They are green and grow up to 2½" long.

Ladybugs, both larvae and adults, feed on spider mites and aphids. Most are shiny red, orange or yellow with black spots, ranging up to ⅜" long.

Mowing less, cutting tall reduce summer water bills

Proper lawn management can keep summer water bills from skyrocketing. Water bills can be reduced as much as 40 percent by watering, fertilizing and mowing lawns properly. Water only when grass starts to show signs of drought stress — discoloration, wilting and leaves rolling up in the late afternoon. Soak the soil to a depth of six to eight inches. Use less nitrogen fertilizer during the summer as this will only make the lawn grow faster and use more water. Finally, mow less often and cut grass at taller heights.

GARDEN CHECK LIST FOR JUNE:

— Take a critical look at your landscape while at the height of summer development. Make notes of how you think it can be better arranged, plants that need replacement, overgrown plants that need to be removed, and possible activity areas that can be enjoyed by family members. These are all good projects to take care of next winter.

— During the summer, water or soil moisture becomes extremely important and essential for good plant production. Because continual watering is oftentimes costly and time consuming, it pays to conserve the moisture around plants.

— The best way to conserve garden moisture is by mulching. A good mulch will not only retain valuable moisture needed for plant growth but will insure several other things as well to improve gardening success.

— Houseplants can be moved out of doors this month. Sink the pots in a cool, shaded garden bed to prevent them from drying out so quickly. Water pots, container plants, and hanging baskets often. Monthly feeding with a houseplant fertilizer will encourage continued growth.

— June is the time to select day lily varieties as they reach their peak of bloom.

— Continue to spray roses with a good black spot control such as Funginex, Benlate or Manzate.

— Fertilize rose beds every four to six weeks. Apply small amounts of high-nitrogen fertilizer immediately after a flush of bloom or every four to six weeks.

"Neza" residents play sandlot soccer outside the stadium used in the recent World Cup games.

Nezahualcoyotl, Mexico, fighting image as world's largest slum

By SALLY JACOBSEN

NEZAHUALCOYOTL, Mexico (AP) — This city of 3 million people, settled decades ago by poor squatters desperate for work, is trying to shed its image as one of the world's largest slums.

Just at the eastern edge of Mexico City, it is a sprawl of small houses, many without regular public services, built on dirt roads that stretch for miles.

But people with full-time jobs have begun buying land and building more substantial houses and, as one researcher said, these first signs of affluence have made Nezahualcoyotl almost stuffy.

Some of the early settlers squatted on the vast, empty acreage near Mexico City's international airport and propped up cardboard, bricks and sticks for shelter.

Many came from rural areas, mostly in the poor, southern part of the country. Others moved from the capital's crowded inner-city neighorhoods.

Neza, as people call it, was incorporated in April 1963 and grew rapidly to become one of Mexico's biggest cities. It is part of the Mexico City metropolitan area, the world's largest with about 18 million residents.

Today, some of Neza's residents are still squatters, living in tiny shacks near the railroad tracks, tapping public power poles for electricity and buying water from passing trucks.

But many more are better off, with full-time jobs in Mexico City as maids, auto repairmen, engineers and government bureaucrats. Some are sending their children to college.

"The place is absolutely respectable. It's almost stuffy. People are working hard to become lower middle class," said Henry Selby, an anthropology professor at the University of Texas in Austin who has been studying Neza for more than three years. He has lived for about nine months in the area, part of the time staying with a family of 12.

"I've been most overwhelmed by the contrast between the atmosphere and the reputation," he said in a recent telephone interview.

City spokesman Armando Ayala rejects the description of Neza as Mexico City's poor cousin.

"There are many cities in Mexico that are older than Neza but poorer than Neza," he said.

Alfredo del Mazo Gonzalez, governor of the state of Mexico in which Neza lies, said recently, "Nezahualcoyotl has stopped having a black reputation and now has a present that is firm, established, real and promising."

Neza was been chosen as one of the sites for the World Cup soccer tournament, the premier sports event in Europe and Latin America. The games drew thousands of fans, from Mexico and abroad, to Neza's 34,658-seat stadium.

With the World Cup, money poured into the city, and the area benefited from more jobs and better public services. Already, some say, dirt roads have been paved, sidewalks laid and garbage cleared away.

"Before," said resident Felipe Lopez, "we were 'los olvidados' (the forgotten ones)."

But Neza still has its rough edges.

Its residents, most of whom are believed to earn the minimum daily wage of about $3.30 or less, have suffered from Mexico's economic crisis.

Government figures show that 222,203 of the city's 341,851 houses are considered unacceptable, without full water, sewage or electrical services.

Only half the streets are paved.

A poll by the newspaper Excelsior indicated that Neza is perceived as the second most dangerous area of the capital. Of the 500 people interviewed in the poll, 31 percent said Neza was the worst. Forty-one percent picked Tepito, a central area known for the sale of illegal electronic and other goods.

Local newspapers recently published reports of a crime wave in Neza because lights were missing on public light poles.

The city's residents are overwhelmingly young. Forty-seven percent are under 15, and 17 percent are 15 to 25.

Pedro Sandoval has a two-room cinder-block house behind a peach wall near the soccer stadium where World Cup games will be played. He lives there with his wife and four of their eight children. Two other families live in similar houses on the same lot, sharing an outside toilet and wash area.

Sandoval, who works at a tire repair shop, said he pays 7,000 pesos (about $15) a month rent for the house.

The family moved here because it was cheap but would like to live elsewhere, he said.

Behind another wall farther from the stadium, David Rivera Medina cuts and finishes dishcloths in his home to sell. Some bear the likeness of the World Cup mascot Pique, a chili pepper with a big black moustache and wearing a red-and-white soccer uniform and a giant sombrero.

Rivera also breeds roosters for fighting, a popular sport in Neza that can bring money to the roosters' owners and lucky bettors. In his yard, Rivera has dozens of cages filled with roosters showing off their turquoise, yellow and tan feathers. Nearby is a "palenque," a dirt-floor fighting pit made of chicken wire and boards.

Farther still from the stadium lives Clara Calderon de Aldana, whose family with two others took over land near the railroad tracks to set up their one-room shacks.

Yucatan's fiber fortunes fall

New York Times News Service

MERIDA, Mexico — A century ago, when mechanization revolutionized American agriculture and binder twine was a highly sought commodity, the agave plant and the henequen fibers it produces were king in all the Yucatan Peninsula. The peninsula's major city, M'erida, was the richest in the country, and Mexico dominated the world henequen market.

The development of synthetic fibers have changed all that. As a result, Yucatan last year provided only 58 percent of the world's production, down from 74 percent in 1980.

After a century of dependence on a single agricultural commodity, Yucatan is now scrambling to rescue a vast segment of its population from economic lassitude by fostering new sources of income.

"We have no choice but to diversify, and we must do it quickly," Yucatan's governor, Victor Cervera Pacheco, said. "Henequen cannot support 60,000 families, and we cannot permit ourselves ever again to be so dependent on one thing."

In an ambitious economic development program, the number of acres planted in henequen is being curtailed and citrus groves, vegetable farms, cattle operations and horticulture are being fostered. In some cases the state government has entered into joint ventures, including one with with private Mexican investors for a resort hotel in Progreso; one with an Israeli company that remanufactures helicopter parts, and one with American and Mexican investors for a marine freight service between Progreso and New Orleans. In each case, the state government plans to sell its interests to its partners after two years.

In addition, state officials are trying to get major Florida orange juice producers, including Tropicana and American Agronomics, to buy Yucatan orange juice.

The state government is also aggressively wooing tourists, trying to capitalize on its spectacular ancient Mayan ruins. In one such effort, the government has begun building an artificial island and docking facilities in deep water three miles out into the Gulf of Mexico to accommodate ocean-going vessels that cannot dock in the shallow waters of Progreso, Yucatan's port city.

As a result of the effort, the state hopes to reduce the number of henequen farmers who live in poverty on government-supported collective farms, known here as ejidos, to under 20,000, from 45,000.

"I have to give Yucatan high marks for what they're trying to do," said an American diplomat in Mexico City familiar with the state's efforts.

Permanent exhibition now possible

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The return of the Rufino Tamayo Museum to government control clears the way for a permanent exhibition of works by Mexico's best known contemporary artist.

The modern art museum in Mexico City's Chapultepec Park has been run by the powerful Televisa private television network, leading to complaints by Tamayo that his donation to the nation of a major collection of 300 works by him and other major artists was being misused.

But the administration has featured only a handful of works from his collection and favored instead touring or special exhibitions that have drawn mixed critical reviews.

He remained apart from the other, since deceased, major figures of 20th century Mexican art like Diego Rivera and David Alfaro Siqueiros, who often tried to make militant political statements in their work.

A weekend announcement from Televisa defended its administration of the museum, noting that the recent exhibit on Mexican textiles presented there now will travel to Israel and Spain.

But it said that, "in agreement with President Miguel de la Madrid, the museum has been handed over to the Public Education Department so that the Rufino Tamayo Museum will become part of the national heritage."

The statement said the relationship between Televisa and the museum would conclude at the end of the current main exhibit, called "Italy Design" featuring Italian objects from the past 40 years.

The responsibility for maintenance and administration of the museum now will be the government's.

Census collection complete

From Staff Reports

When the United States began counting heads in 1790, it didn't have genealogical research in mind, but since then census data has become one of the most valuable public records for ancestor hunters.

The Midland County Public Library has recently completed its collection of the federal census records of Texas for 1850-1910.

The 1850 census was the first to list individual members of households and personal data from censuses taken after 1910 are not available for public viewing due to government privacy restrictions.

The library's collection now includes information on the Midland area when it was part of Tom Green County in 1880, as well as the 1900 and 1910 censuses taken after Midland County was created. The 1890 census for the entire nation was destroyed by fire.

The Theunis Dey Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution donated $1,500, as its Texas Sesquicentennial gift, to purchase the approximately 130 rolls of microfilm census records needed to complete the library's collection, according to Sandra Wegner, assistant county librarian.

Other major contributors who helped purchase the census record collection, totaling 265 rolls of microfilm, were Pat Fletcher, ARCO Oil and Gas Corporation, the Aaron Estes Chapter of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas and the Midland Genealogical Society.

Genealogical researchers working at the library will now be able to locate information on ancestors and other persons who lived in Texas over that period of 60 years, according to Ms. Wegner.

COPING WITH JOB LOSS

Man struggles with role reversal

By JIM MAY and
MARTI VERMILLION

May

Vermillion

DEAR COPING: I lost my job about five months ago and my wife went to work immediately. My two degrees don't do me much good as a professional baby sitter. I can deal with this situation logically as an educated man should, but I feel I'm losing confidence and I know I don't feel well. My wife the expert says I'm having anxiety attacks and suggests analysis. I can't afford analysis. I told her half-jokingly that all I really needed was a new dress. What should I do? — G.G.

DEAR G.G.: It is clear that you are trying real hard to deal with this situation and accept a forced role reversal logically. However, the deterioration in your physical and mental health that you describe suggests just how hard such a reversal really is to successfully carry out. Your wife's support is critical to you and the family now. This problem is one that an "educated man" can deal with by himself. Use the strength of your family to help. Share your concerns and frustrations with your wife. That may prove to be better than a new dress. If you continue to experience anxiety attacks, consider your wife's advice.

DEAR COPING: I recently lost my job and, as an engineer, am very concerned about professional obsolescence that might hurt my attempts to find work. Should I really be concerned about not being as up-to-date as I might should be? — M.P., Midland

DEAR M.P.: Would you believe that it depends? Research indicates a strong association between professional obsolescence and unemployment. It seems that the unemployed tend to rate themselves as significantly less up-to-date in their profession than those who are working continuously. This may be due in part to the fact that those out of work are not utilizing their professional knowledge and skills.

The real problem here is that it's very easy to fall into the trap of losing your competence as well as confidence in being able to carry out assignments in your field.

A recent survival seminar sponsored by the Permian Basin Graduate Center emphasized the importance of staying active in your professional organization, for example, the Society of Petroleum Engineers.

Enroll in short courses covering areas you are concerned about. The costs of most such courses are minimal when compared to the potential loss of confidence that can be brought about by perceived obsolescence.

DEAR COPING: One of my friends who had been an instructor at a local university recently joined me in the ranks of the unemployed. While both of us have technical degrees, he seems to be handling his being without a job much better than I am. Is there something wrong with me? — B.D.S., Midland

DEAR B.D.S.: Not necessarily. Research indicates that unemployed technical professionals experience higher stress levels than those who work in more people-related fields such as teaching. This might be because as a technical person you are more accustomed to dealing with "things" rather than people.

You probably don't have as much experience in dealing with emotional and human types of problems as your teacher friend. A group of psychotherapists identified the following personality pattern that made adjustment stress particularly difficult for technical professionals:

- Little sensitivity to other people.
- Difficulty listening to another person's emotional problems.
- Trouble talking about nontechnical issues or feelings.
- A tendency to be obsessed with technical work problems during working hours.
- A primary concern with the world of things, not people.
- Little interest in family members or their problems.
- An absorption in hobbies like stereo equipment, astronomy or any pursuit that is totally consuming and avoids people.
- A childlike tendency to demand that his own needs and creature comforts be met by people around him.
- Little interest in sex, preferring brief sexual encounters so he can sleep or watch television.
- A fearful approach to marital fights, running away from aggression or anger.
- An inability to express his anger, often classified as a passive-aggressive personality.

The above profile not withstanding, it may also be because a technical education is generally very demanding and the personal investment that you have in it is much greater than among those in nontechnical areas. It may also be that ego involvement and identification with your work may be greater than your friend's, and consequently job loss comes as a more severe blow to your self-image.

DEAR ABBY

Teen's turnaround may signal drug abuse

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: We have a beautiful 16½-year-old daughter who is driving her father and me toward a nervous breakdown. She has done a complete turnabout in regards to everything and everyone who has ever meant anything to her.

She finishes her 11th grade this month, then she wants to quit school, find a full-time job and get her own apartment! She has no training or job experience, but she's "sure" she can support herself. She has forsaken all her old friends, her ideals, even her religion. Discussing anything with her is like talking to the wall. She knows it all, and that's that!

Her new friends are in trouble at school, and I'm sure they smoke pot on weekends.

Just getting this off my chest helps. Thank you. — FLORIDA MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: Writing to me may help you, but it won't help your daughter. Consider this: The sudden "turnabout" in your daughter's behavior might be the result of drugs. The national hot line for drug abuse is: 1-800-COCAINE.

You need professional family counseling with or without your daughter. Find the Families Anonymous group in your area and meet with it. (The people there have been through this scene and can be enormously helpful.)

Let your daughter know that you love her, but you're not allowing her to quit school, get a job and move out as long as she's a minor.

DEAR ABBY: I am 12½ and want more than anything else in the world to become a nun. Some of my friends view it as a joke, and my mother doesn't like the idea because she wants me to go to college (which I don't want to do).

I haven't told anyone else about this, and I'm too embarrassed to discuss it with my priest. What should I do? — CONFLICTING THOUGHTS

DEAR CONFLICTING: Don't be embarrassed to talk to your priest. He is the ideal person to advise you in this matter. You are too young to make a decision that will hold you to a lifelong commitment, but you need this explained to you with all the wisdom and understanding of your spiritual leader.

DEAR ABBY: Our neighbor's young son is learning to play the trumpet. She sends him outside on the porch to practice.

Don't you think they should have a little more consideration for the neighbors? We can take only so much. My husband is fit to be tied.

The noise is so disturbing, the kid really ought to practice inside with all the windows closed.

We have always gotten along well with our neighbors, but this is getting us down. How should we handle this? — DISGUSTED IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR DISGUSTED: Pay them a call and let them know that their young music student is disturbing your peace. (It's not what you say, it's the way you say it.) And be grateful the kid isn't learning to play the drums. Or the horses.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to "Expectant Father" who was hurt by comments by friends about having "his own" baby soon after having adopted one. We have just adopted our second baby, and here are a few comments that I wish I hadn't heard:

"How much did you pay for him?" (Nothing. It is illegal to buy a child.)

"Is he an illegal black market baby?" (No. Private, non-agency adoption is legal in our state.)

"Is he white?" (No. He's green.)

"Doesn't the birth mother have six months to change her mind and take the baby back?" (Yes. And a pregnancy has nine months to change its mind and miscarry.)

"Don't you want to have your own children?" (We're tired of waiting, and besides, these ARE our own children.) — SUSAN, ADOPTIVE MOM OF TWO

CONFIDENTIAL TO YOU: Sunday is Father's Day. If you're a little short on cash, don't fret, because I have a gift suggestion that is sure to make a big hit with every man who has ever fathered a child. And it doesn't cost a dime.

Sit down and write your dad a letter. Tell him how much he has meant to you over the years. Don't be shy about telling him how much you love him, and why.

I promise you that it will mean more to him than any gift you could buy. Trust me.

(Problems? Write to Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. All correspondence is confidential.)

AT WIT'S END

Togetherness tricky

By ERMA BOMBECK

Getting a family to sit down and eat together has never been easy. When the children are small you have to pry them away from the TV set or pull them out of the bathroom.

When they get a little older, you have to plan your meals around football or band practice, library hours, dental appointments and scout meetings.

Later, it's their jobs and social life that interfere. Compared to getting kids together AFTER they leave home, it's a day at the beach.

I started a month ahead of time to get together seven members of our family for our son's birthday. Our daughter couldn't come on his birthday because she had an exam in a night class. The night before that my husband would be out of town, and my parents had another commitment.

Mother suggested a week before the event. I called our out-of-town son and asked his answering machine what he thought of the week before.

He called two days later and told my answering machine he had missed his deadline for special airline rates and couldn't afford the ticket without it. He suggested the weekend after his birthday.

I called everyone again, but our daughter had concert tickets that if she didn't get to use she would personally have antagonism for the entire family for the rest of her life.

My husband suggested a weekday night like Thursday when no one was busy. I checked my calendar to discover I was out of town and wouldn't be home in time to clean the toilets and you don't give a birthday party without clean toilets!

Someone suggested the beginning of the next month, but that was out of the question as the rugs were being cleaned and you can't have a festive atmosphere with bare floors.

The option came up of having it on the spur of the moment before anyone made plans, but that was scratched as no one had a present.

My mother said we should put the birthday off until summer as you can plan nice meals outside and it's a much nicer time of year. She and my dad were free except for doctors' appointments and they didn't like to make social engagements for dinner as the doctor often ran late and she didn't want to be "stressed out" at a party.

About 65 phone calls later, miracle of miracles, I finally got six people who were available on the same night. I called my son and said, "We are celebrating your birthday a week from Tuesday." He said, "You should have checked with me. I'm busy that night."

I told my mother, "No wonder Lincoln and Washington have birthdays on Mondays. It's the only day everyone could show up."

She said, "To be safe, maybe you could throw in a sale."

ASK DR. RUTH

Newlyweds' bliss doesn't have to fade

By DR. RUTH WESTHEIMER

Q. We've been married a year and we make love nightly — and sometimes daily. I'm not complaining, but I do wonder if this will continue. Won't we burn out, or won't one of us? When does the married boredom that we all hear about set in?

A. Neither of you will burn out. That is, frequency does no harm in itself. But if a night or a day comes when it all seems less thrilling than you like it, or if one of you feels that sex is a chore, or feels pressured to make love instead of avidly desiring it, don't panic. Life is not over. Something less than seven shows a week may, someday, be what you want. It doesn't mean that anybody is all washed up or no longer in love.

"Boredom" doesn't have to set in. Often people sense boredom because they have heard so much about it. Nowadays a bride is worrying about it as she makes up the wedding lists. People have been talked into many of life's problems. Not needing to have sex so often can mean satisfaction, contentment, wanting to have some quieter time together, knowing that the intense pleasure is there when you want it. And after the newlywed ardor has calmed a little, there are years for the richness of marital pleasure to grow and grow.

Q. My girlfriend had a scare and now no more sex. We've never even had intercourse, but we have fooled around and theoretically she could have been impregnated, and she was a few days late. She decided she was pregnant through a freak accident. I told her to go to a family planning clinic next time for tests, but she says there won't be a next time.

A. I don't know how old you two are. I hope it's old enough so that if she did get pregnant you could take the responsibility on yourself. If she says no more sex, at whatever age, that's her decision. If she has no intercourse with you, and avoids all sexual confusions with you, then the next time she is late she can relax and think, "Whatever this is, it isn't that."

But you are right — the minute a woman suspects that she is pregnant, she can go to a clinic for a test, even if she suspects for far-fetched reasons. In your girl's case, she could have avoided that terrifying wait, which seemed long to her no matter how short it was. Her fear of being pregnant, by the way, may have caused that lateness. That fear can do that to women, scaring them even more.

Q. When we're having intercourse, my girl just stops right in the middle. That's all, folks. It's not all over for me. Maybe it is for her; I can't tell. And she won't talk.

A. You must try to have a talk with her. Neither one of you can just dismiss the subject. Times not to bring it up: just before, during, after, while you are in the bedroom, when you are mad, when she is mad. Find a time when the mood is light and friendly and say, "If either one of us hates to make love, then we both have a problem. And we really do need to talk about it."

She may not be accepting her real fears or resentments herself, and therefore she can't put in words what is bothering her. Ask if she's afraid of pregnancy, if she really doesn't trust the contraception you are using, or if she fears having a climax, as many women do. They may fear losing control, or even losing consciousness.

You can tell her that women recover quickly from those few seconds of blissful abandonment, and that they are lovely, not something to fear. If she fears pregnancy, consider using additional forms of contraception; certain methods are often combined to lower chances of impregnation.

Flag Day in 'Year of the Flag'

United Press International

In recent years, Flag Day has gotten about as much national notice as Arbor Day. But this Saturday, the slightly tattered holiday is getting a boost from several directions.

The climate is right for a burst of flag-waving, with the 100th anniversary of the Statue of Liberty coming July 4th and a record surge of interest in things American.

By mandate of Congress and a Presidential Proclamation, 1986 is the "Year of the Flag," with the nation invited to perform a Flag Day ritual in unison: The National Pause for the Pledge.

At 6 p.m. Saturday, citizens are asked to stop what they're doing, face the Stars and Stripes, put right hand over heart and recite the Pledge of Allegiance.

The drive to make 1986 the Year of the Flag was fueled largely by one woman, Elinor T. Massoglia of Durham, N.C.

A professor of education at North Carolina Central University and mother of six grown children, Massoglia said she pestered U.S. Rep. William W. Cobey Jr. of Chapel Hill. He brought up the "year of the flag" in the House. Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina followed suit in the U.S. Senate.

The icing was Presidential Proclamation 54-75, signed May 12, 1986, according to Massoglia. In the proclamation, the President urged "all Americans to renew their appreciation of the flag and its relationships to our heritage, through appropriate celebrations."

Tournament totals tallied

From Staff Reports

Thirty-one cities and five states were represented by the 303 players competing in the recent Tall City Sectional Bridge Tournament.

Six cities were represented on just the two teams that tied for first place in the tournament's main event, the Swiss Team of Four.

A team made up of Mr. and Mrs. Steve Lawrence of El Paso and Charlie Brown and Genny Park of Lubbock tied with a team composed of Joe Vanham of Kerrville, George Finley of San Angelo, Jerry Mark of Abilene and Lester Dewey of Amarillo.

There was also a tie for third place. Jerry Crooker of Midland, Mr. and Mrs. Alan Copeland of Odessa and Hal Lyon of San Antonio tied with a team made up of Dorothy Allison, Mrs. L.T. Barber, J.B. Nabors and Mrs. B.D. Payne, all of San Angelo. These teams each won six of the eight rounds.

The consolation trophy in the Swiss Team competition went to four Odessa players, Aileen Storie, Mrs. F.D. Kasko, Evelyn Schul and Gwendolyn Stefvater.

There was a three-way tie for second place in this event. Sue Gilbreath, Kay Streetman, Mrs. J.J Chauncey, all of Lubbock, and Cathy Olson of Arlington, tied with a team composed of Ann Servatius, Laura Williams and Fay Carey, all of Midland, and Rebecca Kinsey of Odessa and a team made up of Ricki Perry, Tommie Strack, Agnes Anguish and Nancy Liberty, all of Midland.

The first event of the tournament, a special warmup game, was won by Steve Lawrence of El Paso and Pat Terk of Odessa.

James LaFountain of Waco teamed with Joe Salman of Midland to win the Unmixed Pairs event with a 220-point game, just ahead of the 217 chalked up by Mrs. Lloyd French and Mrs. William M. Kerr, both of Midland. Lawrence and Bill Carnes of El Paso won third place with 191.

In the Master Pairs competition, Copeland and Bill Dimler of Odessa won the championship trophy with a 202-point game. In second place were Terk and Jim Crownover of Odessa with 197. Salman and Al Buehler of Midland took third with 191.

The Open title went to Ms. Olson and Ms. Gilbreath. Their 315 points outdistanced Vanham and Mark who had 298. Crownover and Lena Nichols of Odessa chalked up 287 for third place.

The Open Pairs consolation trophy went to Ms. Liberty and Ms. Strack who scored 131. Second place went to Mrs. R.E. Myers and Buf Slay, both of Midland, with 129. Dewey and Finley took third with a 125.

The midnight Swiss team was won by Clif Miller of Shreveport, La., Bruce Shields of Fort Worth, Jo Carol White of Fort Worth and Gloria Crites of Midland. Second place went to Mr. and Mrs. Carnes and Mr. and Mrs. Copeland.

A game for novices was won by James Peters and Bill Kammerer, both of Midland. Second place went to Jim Bell and Maxine Casey, both of Midland, and third place went to Bobbie Wooten and Helen Bizzell, both of Big Spring.

DC's 'Man of Steel' gets figurative face lift at 80

ENTERTAINMENT

By MARCIA SMITH
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

With that blue-black forelock and bulging body stocking, the "Man of Steel" hardly looks his age — nearly 80. Yet, DC Comics is scrapping its senior superhero this summer to make way for the first new Superman since the perpetually 29-year-old Kryptonian made his comic-book debut in 1938.

DC has suspended publication this summer of the three comics in which Superman appears — Action Comics, Superman and DC Presents — to release a six-issue, biweekly series called The Man of Steel, available in stores this month.

In the series, Superman gets a new history, which will not affect the superhero's appearance nor the basic story — that a child sent from the doomed planet Krypton gains extraordinary powers on Earth.

In September, Action Comics and Superman will return; a new comic, The Adventures of Superman, will join them.

Too many characters. Too many parallel worlds. Too much power for Superman. Those are the reasons DC gives for a housecleaning that began January 1985 with the 12-issue "Crisis on Infinite Earth" series.

"We tried to have as coherent a universe as possible, but it wasn't working. It was too confusing," said DC editor Bob Greenberger in an interview about the changes at DC.

"(A cleanup) allows the writers more freedom — not to have to spend pages explaining how to get from one dimension to another — and who the characters are."

To pave the way for The Man of Steel series, DC killed off Supergirl and Krypto the dog, cleaned out the Phantom Zone (where Krypton harbors its criminals), blew up the Bizarro world (home of imperfect duplicates of Earthbound characters) and erased all but one planet — Earth (there were three).

John Byrne, an artist-writer formerly with Marvel Comics, then began modifying characters, motivations and mythology to create the new Superman story.

SOME OF THE changes, according to press reports, fan reports and DC itself:

— Superman won't have any powers when he arrives on Earth: They will develop slowly as he grows up. In his early teens, he will discover his invulnerability; by his late teens, he will find out that he can fly.

— Superman now will be the sole survivor of Krypton, which will be depicted as a cold, forbidding planet that creates no longings for home in the adult Superman.

— Ma and Pa Kent, Superman's adoptive earth parents, will not die while Clark is in high school, as they did in the old series.

— Clark Kent, who most recently worked as a TV anchorman, will return to print journalism as a feature reporter.

— As a high school student, Clark Kent will be more popular and involved in more activities — including athletics. The adult Clark won't be as wimpy as the old one.

— The romance between Lois Lane and Superman will be off. Byrne has said that "romance is impractical" with someone who can change the course of rivers and bend steel, but sparks may fly between Clark and Lois.

— The new Lois is based on the tough, but feminine Rosalind Russell character in the 1940 movie "His Girl Friday." In addition to her newspaper work, she will write mystery novels.

"What DC is trying to do," says comics expert Dr. Donald Palumbo, an administrator at Lorain County (Ohio) Community College, "is to inject greater realism into its characters, to place the comic in a more real world than it's been in."

Disguising something familiar (i.e., putting an unreal character like Superman in the real world and investing him with human frailties) is the key to the appeal of fantasy, Palumbo says.

"WE LIKE TO be reassured that the unknown is just a disguised variation of the familiar," he explains. "If you strip off the disguise, it's not unknown at all, and there's nothing to fear."

DC also is responding to the market, Palumbo says. In Superman's heyday, in the 1940s, DC sold millions of Superman comics every month. In the 1960s, Marvel Comics and its all-too-human superheroes overtook DC: Today, Marvel's X-Men is the country's best-selling comic book, says Lone Star Comics manager Will Frazier, with monthly sales of nearly 500,000. Superman sells fewer than 100,000 a month.

In recent years, innovations at DC have helped revitalize the company. The Teen Titans and a special Batman "Dark Knight" series are big sellers. And now, with the conclusion of the old Superman story and the inception of a new legend, Superman is enjoying a boost in sales.

Says Lone Star's Frazier: "We sold out of the historic last issue in four hours. We don't usually sell out of Superman, though we should. Superman should be the best-selling comic."

Frazier, 25, has read Superman comics since he learned to read.

Woman breaks barriers to host 'Dating Game'

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES — Elaine Joyce says she got interested in game shows when her acting career was adrift.

"It was after the birth of my first child and I wanted to stay in town," she said. "So around 1978 I started doing shows like 'The Match Game,' 'Hollywood Squares' and 'Password.' The game shows were all over the place. I got into it originally because of 'Pyramid' in New York. That was the first game show I did.

"I loved going on the game shows as a guest. You get a mental workout and it's fun. You can be yourself. People just kept calling me for them. At that time I was kind of directionless in my career. Whoever called I'd work for."

Miss Joyce is now moving up from guest to host of "The All New Dating Game." She starts taping June 25 for syndication on 130 stations in the fall.

She did a pilot for a talk show for Chuck Barris about a month ago, then Barris asked her if she would be host when he revived "The Dating Game."

"We did a run-through," she said. "I was very excited. This is going to be fun. It was like putting on a comfortable pair of shoes."

Traditionally, men have been game-show hosts. One exception was Betty White, who won an Emmy in 1983 as host of NBC's daytime show "Just Men!"

"This is rare. I think women have a lot to say, it's just that we need a vehicle," Miss Joyce said. "I remember being asked a few years ago to be co-host of a show. I said I'll be the host, but I'm not going to stand there like a model. They said, 'No, no, women don't want to see a woman as a host.'

"So much has changed in this country, but dating was one of the last things to change," she said. "A guy asks a girl out, then he takes her home. Now there's computer dating, you go Dutch. I thought I knew all about male-female relationships, but when I got out there and had to start dating again I didn't know what to say. It had changed. Men are scared. They don't know how to approach women any more because of all the stuff about women's liberation."

Miss Joyce's second child, Michael Francis Levoff, was born three months ago. Her first child, a daughter, Taylor Joyce Van, is now 9. She was married for 12 years to the late actor-singer Bobby Van. She now is married to John D. Levoff, a film executive.

Miss Joyce recently completed a role in the horror film "Trick or Treat," which was filmed at the Dino De Laurentiis studio near Wilmington, N.C.

"There were eight films going when I was there," she said. "When I arrived at the airport there was King Kong's arm, for the sequel. I saw the forklift used in the heart transplant. It was hysterical."

She described "Trick or Treat" as a funny rock 'n' roll horror film. It also stars rock stars Gene Simmons from Kiss and Ozzy Osbourne.

She will also be seen this summer in "Up Hill All the Way," a comedy starring Mel Tillis, Roy Clark, Burt Reynolds and Glen Campbell.

Most of her work has been on television, where she starred in "Mr. Merlin," "City of Angels," "The Carol Burnett Show," "The Don Knotts' Variety Show," and "Here Come the Brides."

"The first thing I ever did was 'Here Come the Brides.' I was one of the brides," she said. "It was set in Seattle and they took us out in the harbor on a tug, which started sinking. The boat was sinking and we were in these heavy dresses from the 1800s. They kept saying, 'One more shot.' We finally got off. That's when I learned that in this business you'd better look out for yourself."

McCord testified in 1973

James McCord, former security chief for President Richard Nixon, told a Senate investigating committee on March 24, 1973, that John Dean and Jeb Magruder knew in advance of the Watergate bugging.

London theater will go on without tourists

By MATT WOLF

LONDON (AP) — Faced with dwindling attendance by American tourists who are staying in the United States this season, London theater officials are determined that the show must go on.

"One cannot deny the impact, but it's not worth getting suicidal about," said Louis Benjamin, chief executive of Stoll Moss Theaters, which numbers 11 playhouses in the commercial West End, London's Broadway.

"I think we just have to grin and bear it," said Duncan Weldon, co-producer of "Across From the Garden of Allah," with Glenda Jackson, and "Antony and Cleopatra" and "The Taming of the Shrew," both with Vanessa Redgrave.

Last year saw a record attendance of 10.7 million and box office grosses of $154.5 million. Partly because of a falling pound and favorable exchange rates, foreigners flocked to London in 1985, filling 44 percent of the seats in the 49 West End theaters.

Americans comprised 15 percent of audiences on average, and as much as 50 percent for some shows during the peak summer months.

This year, a strengthened pound and fears of terrorism are keeping some Americans at home. The top-price seats commonly filled by Americans may now go empty, as Britons opt for the cheaper seats upstairs.

"I think the tourist fall-off has been completely overstated," said Penny Owens, a marketing officer for the Society of West End Theaters.

"Clearly, if any one sector appears under threat, then one must be concerned. But, quite frankly, given the market as a whole, there is no cause for alarm."

As of June 1, 42 West End theaters had shows. At 85.7 percent of the total, the figure is well above the 60 percent of theaters now filled on Broadway.

On May 28, Stoll Moss announced the takeover of the long-dormant Royalty Theater. Louis Benjamin said it was evidence of the company's "faith in the West End theater at a time when many prefer to moan."

Benjamin added that the July 23 wedding of Prince Andrew and Sarah Ferguson will recharge outside interest in Britain and British theater.

"If there are no incidents, things will return to all normality," he said. Benjamin's shows include the Tony award-winning musical, "La Cage aux folles," and a planned London opening in July of Herb Gardner's Tony-winning "I'm Not Rappaport," starring Paul Scofield and Howard Rollins.

Weldon, though, has delayed launching new projects until the fall, when, according to polls, Britons prefer going to the theater.

At London's government-subsidized theaters, the National Theater and the Royal Shakespeare Company, fewer tourists means less commercial revenue to offset uncertain levels of government money.

"Tourists are such an important part of our economy," said Mary Parsons, a publicist at the National. "The present situation is being taken quite seriously by everybody."

In May 1985, the National's three theaters played to 83 percent capacity. The figure for May this year is 74 percent.

Cancellations from American student groups, who are down by 50 percent from last year, are hurting business as well, and recent performances of Peter Shaffer's "Yonadab" and Neil Simon's "Brighton Beach Memoirs" have had plenty of empty seats.

Seeking shelter

Rock star Madonna, on New York's Staten Island recently for the filming of her forthcoming music video, seeks shelter from the hot sun under a big umbrella. The video is to be called "Papa Don't Preach," which is also the name of a cut from her soon-to-be-released album, "True Blue."

'Hotel' actress introduced to classic films at early age

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As a child, Heidi Bohay of ABC's "Hotel" got an early introduction to acting and movies from her mother.

Her mother was not an actress but an old movie buff, and she would watch the classic films for hours on television. Right beside her was Heidi, taking it all in.

"I used to dream about those movies, about Bette Davis and Lauren Bacall and Joan Crawford and the rest," she said. "I always wanted to be an actress. I was inspired by all those old movies, but I never did anything about it until I got out of high school. I did a few plays in high school and I took a night course introduction to acting."

But she was almost sidetracked on her way to becoming an actress. She thought about a career working with handicapped children and was accepted at Ryder College. But two weeks before the start of classes a show business agent she knew persuaded her to try acting.

Her parents were less than thrilled, but supported her with the understanding that if she didn't find work in a year she would return to school. Within two months she got a role in a toothpaste commercial. After that she commuted by bus to New York to study acting and look for jobs.

Miss Bohay grew up in a small town in New Jersey, where her parents owned an ice cream store. "I grew up working in the store, and when I go home my Dad still throws an apron at me," she said. "And, yes, I still love ice cream."

Theaters' lineup includes American imports

LONDON (AP) — The lineup for London's theatrical summer includes Broadway musical imports, rarely performed Russian classics and hard-hitting new British plays on social issues.

Attendance in some theaters may be down, but the economics of the London stage enables shows to play to smaller numbers than on Broadway.

Declining audiences are not a problem for London's thriving musical industry. Of the 49 theaters on London's West End, 15 have musicals. Another four or five shows are waiting in the wings for houses to become available.

"Les Miserables," directed by the "Nicholas Nickleby" team of Trevor Nunn and John Caird, remains the hottest ticket in town despite mixed reviews.

Those Americans who can't get into it here can see it at home later. "Les Miserables" opens in Washington in December and moves to Broadway next February.

Also coming to the United States are two other Trevor Nunn musicals: Andrew Lloyd Webber's "Starlight Express," still a sellout after two years; and Tim Rice's "Chess."

While these shows have met with critical indifference, the public has responded enthusiastically. Written by the former collaborators of "Evita" and "Jesus Christ Superstar," these musicals have found an audience attracted by the promise of spectacle and — in the case of "Chess" — a heavily pre-sold album.

Other musicals around town have a distinctly Broadway ring: "La Cage aux folles"; "42nd Street"; and revivals of "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers" and "Cabaret," which opens July 10.

"Are You Lonesome Tonight?," a show about Elvis Presley, and "Lennon," a play about the late Beatle John Lennon, have coined a new critics' term: the "necrophiliac musical."

Serious plays have just as hard a time on the West End as they do on Broadway. Anthony Minghella's "Made in Bangkok," a hard-hitting look at the sexual mores of a British tour group in Thailand, is surrounded by a multitude of star vehicles and farces.

Vanessa Redgrave and Timothy Dalton pair off in Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew" and "Antony and Cleopatra."

Adrian Hall shakes up theater in Dallas

By MICHELLE LOCKE

AP Laserphoto

DALLAS (AP) — The marriage of provocative director Adrian Hall and a somewhat staid theater-going public has prompted more than a few spats. The stormy union has produced noisy debates over Hall's stark, avant garde presentations of contemporary drama.

"The people who are most eager to talk are the people you make angry," Hall says. "Oh, they're very vocal. Since I've been here they've dragged me across the front page again and again."

A tall, spare man with lightly graying hair, Hall is known for his incisive ability to cut through conventionalities in directing. He admits he was puzzled when he first was offered the job of artistic director of the Dallas Theater Center three years ago.

"Why in the world did Dallas want somebody like me? My reputation is not one exactly of affirming conservative philosophy," he said. "I'm a terribly enthusiastic, optimistic person or I would never have done this."

He is not shy about stating his goals for the theater. "It seemed to me that it was the ideal place to create a great theater and it seemed to me that Dallas deserved and really needed to be part of the kind of movement that was occurring in the country," he said.

"It's just a strange enigma. Sometimes you think Dallas is so much more eager to proclaim how sophisticated and how wealthy it is than to simply participate," he said.

"It's a dangerous craft. (Bertolt) Brecht said, 'Art ain't nice.' Obviously the way it was practiced in Dallas, or what seemed to get to be the common thing, (was) that art should be nice."

Next season features several classics, as well as a special adaptation of Robert Penn Warren's "All The King's Men."

But the roster includes contemporary presentations in the same spirit as last season's "The Marriage of Bette and Boo," which shocked audiences with its farcical portrayal of a woman who made repeated attempts to have children despite several stillbirths.

"There were people who charged out because they felt this was making fun of the American family," Hall said.

Hall's commitment to repertory theater and his unconventional leadership have made him a respected figure within the profession. Outside those circles, he is less well-known.

He went to New York in 1955 after studying at East Texas State University, teaching high school in Galveston and going to the Pasadena Playhouse in California on the advice of Margo Jones, the Dallas-based progenitor of the repertory theater movement.

Despite the excitement of the off-Broadway movement, Hall said there was little place for serious directors at that time, so in 1964 he chose the relative obscurity of Trinity Repertory in Providence, R.I.

Although he has had opportunities for better-paying, higher-profile jobs, Hall has stayed with repertory theater because "it seemed to me that was my place. I chose to stay in a professional repertory situation versus, you know, trying to turn a fast buck in show biz."

In Providence, Hall's production of controversial works got him briefly fired during the 1970s, but the actors led a community protest in his support. The flap was resolved when Hall replaced the board with new, sympathetic, members.

Hall still runs the Providence company in addition to his Dallas post, splitting his time between New England and his home near downtown Dallas. Interspersed are frequent visits to the family farm eight miles outside of Van, a small town about 60 miles east of Dallas where he grew up.

The most startling difference between New England and Dallas audiences is their attitudes toward the value of a ticket, Hall said.

While letting a ticket go to waste is unheard of in Providence, Hall said he has heard subscribers in Dallas say, 'Well, we buy the tickets. We don't have to go to the shows.'

"I could sell insurance if that was all that mattered, if all I wanted to do was just sell the ticket," he said.

Despite Hall's somewhat chilly reception in Dallas, there are signs that he is finding a following. About 70 percent of last year's subscribers have registered for the 1986-87 season, the highest renewal rate in five years and 10 percent better than last year's figures, said Dallas Theater Center marketing director Adrian Stewart.

The subscription level was near 11,000 going into Hall's first season with DTC, and at one point dropped to 6,300, Stewart said. He said the resurgence in sales is due partly to Hall and partly to other changes in the theater's management.

Although Hall said plays should not be judged by their ability to draw audiences, he said the management is grappling with ways to reach the public, possibly through emphasizing single-ticket sales, which seem to be more popular in Dallas.

Regardless of the financial situation, Hall said he intends to keep shaking up audiences.

"I think that's necessary," he said. "It seemed to me there was a choice, and the choice had to do with just strangling on mediocrity and not making a ripple or try to do it as well as you can and as challenging as you can."

'Master magician' of Bauhaus rediscovered

BALTIMORE (AP) — America, meet Oskar Schlemmer. Painter. Sculptor. Choreographer. The master magician of the Bauhaus, as his colleagues called him, and perhaps the least known artist to emerge from the German hothouse of intellectual ferment between the wars.

After 40 years of relative obscurity, Schlemmer's work is making its debut in a cross-country United States tour, courtesy of the Baltimore Museum of Art and director Arnold Lehman.

"It is exceedingly rare that a museum has an opportunity to bring to the attention of an entire — especially American — audience the work of a major artist who was totally unknown," Lehman says with obvious delight.

Schlemmer died in 1943 at the age of 55.

"Schlemmer was the vibrant force, the magnet, the Allen Ginsburg," among those who made up the artist collective known as the Bauhaus, Lehman says.

But his art lapsed into obscurity because he stayed in Europe during World War II, and most of his work remains in Germany with his family or the Stuttgart Gallery.

Born in Stuttgart in 1888, Schlemmer joined the Weimar Bauhaus after World War I, where he created a stir with avant garde dance performances and parties with highbrow themes — happenings as we later came to know them in the 1960s, Lehman says.

Schlemmer was greatly respected by his otherwise competitive colleagues, heading at various times Bauhaus ateliers in painting, sculpture and theater.

With the advent of Nazism, Schlemmer's work — and that of other so-called degenerate artists — was banned. Walter Gropius, Wassily Kandinsky and other Bauhaus luminaries fled to America, where they received a hero's welcome and their fame flourished.

Schlemmer remained in Germany, although no one knows just why.

"He had a young family," Lehman speculates. "Subconsciously, he was very German...At first he was not targeted (by the Nazis). He wasn't Jewish. He wasn't a radical. He wasn't a Communist."

Toward the end of the war, ill and forced into menial labor to make ends meet, Schlemmer no longer created the large canvases in which faceless figures stand, walk, peer through geometric planes.

The artist who had painted "Bauhaus Stairway," included in this show and normally hanging in the New York City's Museum of Modern Art, had perceptibly changed.

Jazz guitarist, saxophonist travel beyond orthodoxy

By PETER S. HAWES

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Pat Metheny's admiration of Ornette Coleman has been no secret: His live performances have increasingly featured Coleman compositions and even his original tunes have taken on elements of the free-form "harmolodics" the saxophonist tried without success to popularize more than 25 years ago.

However, it was not idolatry that drew Metheny, 31, and Coleman, 56, together. Rather, it was their shared determination to push music beyond orthodoxy.

Despite their apparent kinship, though, the two musicians were never on the verge of a collaboration and even a humble Metheny — who considers Coleman among the greatest living artists — balked. To bring the two together took the persistent prodding of bassist Charlie Haden, who played with Coleman throughout the 1960s and '70s and who, for the past six years, has been a frequent member of Metheny's bands.

"Charlie kept saying, 'You should really play with Ornette Coleman,'" the guitarist said in an interview. "I kept saying, 'Yeah, but come on, man, I can't do that. It's Ornette.'"

Coleman, too, tells of how Haden was always telling him, "If I could just get you and Pat together, we'd really blast 'em."

In December 1985, after a trial live performance and three weeks of rehearsal, the duo finally recorded an album, "Song X." It was released April 14 and, besides Coleman and Metheny, it features bassist Haden and two drummers: seasoned jazzman Jack DeJohnette and Coleman's 30-year-old son, Denardo. The group went on a two-week, 14-city "Song X Tour" in which Metheny presented some of the most complex and brilliant music of his career.

The tour, which began in Providence, R.I., and terminated last month in East Lansing, Mich., also brought the visionary music of Coleman, who has labored through more than 70 recordings in virtual public anonymity, to a wide and accepting audience.

Even audiences accustomed to Metheny's more melodic work have welcomed the effort it takes to understand and appreciate the duo's burning, Coleman-influenced improvisation.

When Coleman first tried in 1959 to introduce his unusual sound to New York audiences, he was verbally and, sometimes, physically tormented. Almost three decades later, Coleman still has had virtually no commercial success, little critical acclaim but has won wide respect from musicians for his ideas.

"I'm like the guy in the wilderness telling people who don't know he's there what life's all about," he said in a recent interview.

Art Lange, the editor of the music magazine, "Downbeat," said, "It could be that it's taken 26 or 27 years for Coleman's music to catch on, which really wouldn't be surprising. But Metheny is now involved, and his performing with Ornette helps because his listeners are probably open-minded enough to feel that if Metheny's interested in it, it must be worth listening to."

In concert, the band blends Coleman's intricate rhythms with some of Metheny's more accessible melodies into a mix of sometimes frantic, sometimes soothing compositional improvisation. Coleman plays saxophone, trumpet and violin; Haden plays acoustic, stand-up bass; DeJohnette plays a conventional drum set, while Metheny and Denardo Coleman experiment with a wide array of electronics that cut what Metheny refers to as the "edge" of the music.

"We find where our reference points are and focus on those," Metheny said of the melding of the group's vastly different musical concepts and instrumental styles. He explains it in terms of conversation.

"The feeling of playing a ballad isn't any different from playing the faster things," he said. "Each person can talk about different subjects. You can talk about your brother or a cat that died when you were 2. It's not incompatible if you have the same band and everybody in the band has the same kind of commitment. You find yourself as a group telling a lot of different and more interesting stories."

said about 600 media represen- s will be permitted to attend pening ceremonies for the Stat- Liberty and about half that for ring-in ceremonies for new citi- on Ellis Island.

Levitt said crumbling buildings and construction work severely limit space on Ellis Island, the historic landing place for immigrants in New York Harbor.

"Space limitations, security or safety requirements will limit the number of media who can cover the events. Pool arrangements can help in those limited situations," Hodel said. "These events celebrate freedom for all Americans. I look to the media to provide this opportunity for celebrtation to those Americans unable to be physically at those locations."

More than 8,000 journalists and technicians sought credentials, Levitt said.

"I understand Liberty Weekend, the Statue of Liberty Foundation and the National Park Service are working together with media representatives to enable all Americans, through their coverage, to participate in this national celebration," Hodel said.

ABC spokesman Tom Goodman said ABC paid for exclusive rights to the entertainment portion of the celebration. The money is being used to defray some of the costs of the festivities, which are estimated at $32 million.

Goodman said coverage of the Statue of Liberty and the Tall Ships program will be open to all media representatives. Ten hours coverage including the opening ceremony on Governor's Island, two concerts, and the closing ceremonies in New Jersey is exclusive, he said.

News clips of President Reagan, Chief Justice Warren Burger, Hodel, Iacocca and others would be "made available to the other networks," he said, adding that ABC will decide in a few days whether the other networks will buy or be given video tape of newsworthy events occurring throughout the extravaganza.

Goodman said ABC, from the start, guaranteed other networks the use of news clips of President Reagan and Chief Justice Burger.

"The brouhaha was over Hodel, Iacocca and the Secretary of the Navy," he said.

ILADELPHIA (AP) — Robert uri, who tossed aside the simple of modern architecture to off buildings with colored patterns and occasional large rs, is using his love for richness signing the new extension to on's National Gallery.

also is an architecture that ac- odates a particular site. And, architecture that uses symbolism," said Venturi, who once proposed a 90-foot model of a red apple for Times Square in New York.

"I think we're now going back to an attitude where we want to rely on convention — a historical past — and evolve out of it."

The firm has designed college buildings, theaters, stores — including a discount store in green with big red and white flowers — homes and parks. They did Washington's Western Plaza, a marble and granite map of the capital city as foreseen by its founder, Pierre L'Enfant. The plaza anchors the White House end of Pennsylvania Avenue between the executive mansion and the Capitol.

For another project, the National Park Service wanted a monument to Benjamin Franklin on the site of the revolutionary statesman's Philadelphia home, which was torn down decades before for a street.

Without enough documentation to rebuild the home, Venturi said he and Scott Brown came up with the solution after considering the constraints: They proposed "ghost" structures — white metal beams in the outline of the house and Franklin's neighboring print shop, to give an idea of their size had they survived.

Windows into the brick floor of the park near Independence Hall provide a glimpse of the home's foundation beneath the ghost structures, which also shadow excerpts of letters from Franklin to his wife about the house.

Last year, the American Institute of Architects recognized the firm with the 1985 Architectural Firm Award, an honor given to companies that continuously produce "distinguished architecture" for at least 10 years.

"I always did want to be an architect," said Venturi, who graduated from Princeton University. He spent two years as a fellow at the American Academy in Rome after working for other architects, including Eero Saarinen. He then opened his own office in Philadelphia, at the same time teaching at the University of Pennsylvania.

Venturi wrote "Complexity and Contradiction in Architecture" in 1966, and "Learning From Las Vegas" in 1972, which detailed a study he and students from Yale University made of the signs along the Las Vegas strip.

"Naturally, we were punished by the architecture establishment for being so vulgar," Venturi said, smiling at the thought. "But we used it as a vehicle to learn about symbolism."

Elephant etiquette

AMBOSELI NATIONAL PARK, Kenya — African elephants have eyes like old amber — riveting, almost red — veiled behind thickly curied lashes. They do not see very well.

What their eyes deny them, however, their remarkable noses provide. Their sense of smell is keen enough to distinguish between individuals watching them from a car, and probably, to tell what each person had for breakfast that morning.

Their only natural enemy is man. Elephants will browse all day under the gaze of tourists, but they will depart immediately at the first whiff of a Masai tribesman.

They have toenails but no toes and feet so softly padded that they can move in virtual silence despite their bulk. They have no elephant graveyard — a myth — but seem humanly shocked at the spectacle of death.

They lie down to sleep, usually around midnight, and find three or four hours sufficient. They like a pile of grass for a pillow, although the slope of an anthill will do. They take care to curl their trunks, or keep the end propped on a tusk, to prevent ants from crawling in.

Elephants are the world's largest land mammals. Still, they are peaceable creatures and seldom fight, although a six-ton bull elephant, ears outspread, standing tusk-to-bumper with a one-ton jeep, is a sight guaranteed to call to mind the essential frailness of the human condition.

All but the very youngest elephants look wise. Perhaps they are. Their social organization is complex, and it is passed on, generation to generation, apparently by learned behavior rather than by instinct. Elephants live in a world of precisely defined hierarchies, social ceremony and maybe even diplomacy. All this is somehow learned or taught. The mystery is how.

HERE IN Amboseli, the impression came to scientist Cynthia Moss and Joyce Poole years ago that elephants might "talk" to each other, communicate in some way that humans could not detect, much less understand. It turns out that they were right.

The confirmation of their intuition came, not from the wild, but from a zoo in Portland, Ore. There, in the latest step toward unraveling a mystery, a Cornell University team headed by zoologist Katharine Payne has demonstrated that elephants do, in fact, communicate by infrasonic means, with sounds at frequencies too low to be detected by the human ear.

To Ms. Moss and Ms. Poole, the discovery holds great excitement, and at least some mild frustration, because between them these two American researchers have spent more than 25 years studying the behavior of African elephants in the wild.

Their experience puts them among the foremost elephant researchers. Ms. Moss, 45, is an associate of the African Wildlife Foundation and the author of a highly regarded book on East African wildlife, "Portraits in the Wild." She is completing a second work on her observations of elephants.

Ms. Poole, 29, a Cambridge University Ph.D. who has done extensive studies of male elephants, is doing post-doctoral reasearch at Princeton University, supported by grants from the Guggenheim Foundation and the National Institute of Menthal Health.

With the self-sufficiency of veterans and a formidable command of the Swahili language, they operate from a simple tented camp tucked amid towering thorn trees at the edge of a meadow in this national park. They have come to recognize on sight about 650 individual elephants.

But the breakthrough study on elephants' infrasonic noises came at Portland's Washington Park Zoo. Mrs. Payne, who, with her former husband, Roger, is known in zoological circles for her work on whale communication, used highly sensitive equipment to record otherwise undetectable sounds made by a small group of Asian elephants.

Mrs. Payne and her team spent a night in an enclosure with the elephants, and the sounds they recorded ranged between 14 and 24 hertz, which is beneath or just bordering the lower limits of human hearing (ranging approximately from 20 to 20,000 hertz).

COMPLETELY INAUDIBLE "conversations" between the elephants went on through much of the night. The team also discovered that the audible "rumbles" often made by elephants — noises once regarded as part of the elephant's digestive processes — were often the upper harmonics of sounds unheard by the human ear. Moreover, the intensity of the sounds recorded suggest that they could carry to elephants for long distances.

The theory, still unproved, that infrasonic elephant calls could carry as far as one or two miles makes sense, says Ms. Moss and Ms. Poole. To them, such a discovery would seem to fit into the intricate pattern of behavior and sociability that continues to make elephants among the world's most fascinating wild animals.

And although it was made in an American zoo, its significance is more likely to be unraveled in settings such as Amboseli, about 100 miles south of Nairobi, where these great beasts roam freely in their natural habitat.

"It's a very exciting development," Ms. Moss said recently. "Katy Payne discovered that these elephants were talking all night. When you speed the recordings up, it sounds like a conversation. It's almost spooky and a little bit frustrating. I've been watching elephants for 18 years, and they have been doing these things without my knowing it."

Since her discovery, Mrs. Payne has visited Amboseli twice to work with Ms. Poole and Ms. Moss to record elephant sounds in the wild. The recordings, difficult to make in an outdoor setting where even mild breezes disturb the sensitive equipment, indicate that extensive infrasonic "conversations" are going on between the elephants here, as well.

While Mrs. Payne plans to do further research among wild elephants at a game park in Namibia, Ms. Poole now has her own sound equipment and will follow up her observations in Amboseli. Her area of specialization is male elephants in "must," a condition of heightened sexual activity, and she has been collecting data on male "must rumbles," distinctive noise, partially audible to humans, made by male elephants during these periods of arousal.

"It seemed to make sense," Ms. Poole said, "That these sounds were being used in communication, sounds that would carry longer distances than humands could detect. Males were making these sounds when they were alone. But females, when they were present, would respond. So it made sense that the male elephants could be making the noises to find out where groups of females were located, or to find out where other must males were."

Ms. Moss came to Africa in 1968 and first worked with Iain Douglas-Hamilton, a Scottish zoologist, in a study of elephants in the Lake Manyara reserve in Tanzania. Douglas-Hamilton's research was the first long-term study of a single elephant population, and it pioneered techniques that Ms. Moss used when her Amboseli project began in 1972.

THE MOST important of these was the identification of individual elephants, because it was impossible to follow the interactions and relationships between individuals and groups unless each elephant could be recognized.

With practice, such identification is easier than it might seem, for no two elephants' faces are exactly alike, Ms. Moss and Ms. Poole say. The ears of most African elephants are tattered and veined in unique patterns. The wide variation in tusks also helps. Adult elephants normally have two tusks, but some have one and others none. Tusks are often broken in different ways. Some bow outward, some inward.

According to the two scientists, the basic elephant social structure is the female-dominated family group, consisting on the oldest female as leader and generally made up of her sisters and daughters and their offspring. Young male elephants usually leave or are expelled from the group shortly after puberty and then form loose associations with other male or female groups.

The matriarchal structure of the elephant family group, and the careful observance of rank based on age, is a striking constant factor. The female family groups rarely change, except for deaths and the addition of newborn calves. The oldest female in the group is invariably the leader, and her rank can be observed as others give way to her at a water hole or at a fallen tree limb where she wants to eat.

The rankings are clearly defined, so that every elephant in a group knows its place, with junior always giving way to senior.

The groups in Amboseli range from approximately 25 elephants, but the average is 10 to 12. There are invariably young calves with each group, with the youngest rarely more than a trunk's length from the mother. Calves commonly suckle until they are 3 or 4 years old, and will throw small, screaming tantrums if they are denied.

Old animals will go off by themselves to die, usually when weakened by the wearing down of their sixth and last set of molars, but there is no such thing as an elephant graveyard, a legend that probably stems from the occasional discovery of masses of bones left behind from some native slaughter, or perhaps a mass drowning.

Aquino tells politicians: 'no guns, no goons'

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino told local politicians today to play it clean once a date is set for new elections, and not to come running to her for guns, "goons" and money.

She said she realized money was "an important ingredient" in an election and that "nobody ever won just on saliva."

"But I think we should try to inspire not only ourselves but our people that it is time to bring about the changes that we have long been talking about," she told more than 150 governors and mayors whom she had appointed after firing local officials belonging to the former ruling party.

A presidential spokesman has said Mrs. Aquino plans to call provincial or legislative elections, or both, by March next year.

"Please don't come to me and tell me when election time comes around, 'You know Cory, we have no money, we have no guns, we have no goons,' " Mrs. Aquino said in her speech at a local hotel.

Philippine elections traditionally had been marked with violence, with many local politicians using private armies to terrorize opponents.

"Definitely I had no guns, I had no goons, but I think I had something more important than any of these things, and that was the faith and confidence of the Filipino people," Mrs. Aquino said, recalling her Feb. 7 election battle with former President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

"Because of this I am now your president," she said.

Marcos supporters were accused of terrorizing and buying voters in the February election. Charges of election fraud triggered a civilian-backed military revolt that ousted Marcos.

The Aquino government has been criticized for firing members of Marcos' New Society Movement in her effort to clean up the government. Some of those ordered replaced, have refused to vacate their post, causing local political tensions.

Eight West Germans blame U.S. for their abduction

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Eight West German volunteers who were abducted by rebels and held for 25 days said after their release that the Reagan administration was to blame for their kidnapping.

They said they were ashamed of West Germany's support for U.S. policy toward Nicaragua. West Germany cut off aid to Nicaragua in 1984 as a result of political differences with the Sandinista government.

The eight released captives, most of whom are in their 20's, distributed a statement and described their experience at a news conference in Managua this week. They said two members of the group were ill for much of the time they were held, and that they were never certain they would emerge from their ordeal alive.

A delegation of West Germans headed by a prominent Social Democratic member of Parliament, Hans-Jurgen Wischnewski, had conducted more than a week of negotiations aimed at freeing the captives. Rebels holding them did not seek ransom, Wischnewski told reporters, but they were hoping to win some concessions from the Sandinista government.

Wischnewski suggested that American pressure on rebel leaders played a role in the release of the eight.

"The West German government asked the United States government to make its influence felt," he said.

"The government of the United States finances this matter," he added, referring to the rebels, "and they have to have influence.'

According to participants in the talks, the rebels tried to use the captives to force the Sandinistas to recognize them as a legitimate military force rather than a band of foreign-directed mercenaries. Among the concessions they sought were Sandinista evacuation of a large area where the hostages were to be released and the participation of international relief agencies, such as the Red Cross.

Negotiators said the government rejected all such proposals. But as talks appeared bogged down, the prisoners were suddenly released, apparently as a result of growing foreign pressure on rebel leaders.

The eight were turned over to a group of peasants in Zelaya Province, who were told to accompany them to the nearest village.

"I think the rebel group just wanted to get rid of the prisoners," said a West German close to the talks.

Diplomats said that in recent days, the United States had actively pressed for release of the eight.

You are hereby notified of the opportunity for written public comment concerning the application for relocation of permit No. MCP-CO #4-130 by Odessa Ready Mix Concrete Company to locate a transient concrete batch plant in Midland County, Texas. The proposed location is .2 miles west of West Loop 250 on the South side of FM 191. The facility proposes to emit the following air contaminants: cement dust and other particulate matter. A copy of all materials submitted by the applicant is available for public inspection at the Texas Air Control Board Regional Office at 101 East 37th Street, Suite 101, Odessa, Texas 79762, telephone (915) 367-3871, and at the Texas Air Control Board, 6330 Highway 290 East, Austin, Texas, 78723. All interested and affected persons may inspect these materials and submit written comments to the Executive Director of the Texas Air Control Board.

Any person residing in a permanent residence within one-quarter (¼) mile of the proposed location of the plant may request a public hearing concerning the proposed construction of the plant. All comments received in writing by June 28, 1986 shall be considered by the Board in making its decision on the application. All comments will be made available for public inspection at the Texas Air Control Board Office.

LEGAL NOTICE FOR PUBLIC HEARING

In accordance with Provisions of SECTION 9 of the URBAN MASS TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1964, as amended, the PERMIAN BASIN REGIONAL PLANNING COMMISSION will conduct a Public Hearing for the purpose of discussing the Planning Commission's intention to request SECTION 9 UMTA Funds for Planning Purposes.
