Missouri case cited in new abortion fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is making a new attack on the Supreme Court's landmark Roe vs. Wade decision legalizing abortion, proposing that the justices use a Missouri case to reconsider the 15-year-old ruling.

The proposal came in form of a brief filed with the court Thursday by Solicitor General Charles Fried, who said the Missouri case represents "an appropriate opportunity" for the justices to review the 1973 decision.

Pro-abortion groups said the timing of the proposal, two days after the general election, was political.

"I guess they were afraid to do this before the election because they thought they might lose the votes of millions of women," said Eve Paul, Planned Parenthood's vice president for legal affairs.

But a Justice Department spokesman, Loye Miller, insisted that the timing was dictated by extended internal discussions at the Justice Department on the question and by extensive staff work that had to be completed.

Fried's brief said the Missouri case "is free of procedural defects and implicates a number of the legislative choices foreclosed by Roe v. Wade."

The solicitor general's brief noted that the Reagan administration's views on abortion were expressed in a case in June 1986, when the government urged that Roe vs. Wade be overturned.

The high court at that time voted 5-4 to reaffirm the earlier ruling, but since then another Reagan appointee has joined the court, Justice Anthony Kennedy. Anti-abortion groups hope that will tilt the court's balance and lead to scuttling of Roe vs. Wade, which held that a woman has a constitutional right to an abortion.

Missouri officials want the Supreme Court to reinstate a strict state anti-abortion law, struck down in July by a federal appeals court which said the statute was invalid under Roe vs. Wade.

Energy chief defends choice of Texas as SSC site

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's energy chief is fending off complaints that a decision to select Texas from among seven bidding states as the site for a $4.4 billion super collider atom smasher was guided more by politics than by science.

Politicians from some of the losing states — Illinois, Colorado, Michigan, Arizona, Tennessee and North Carolina — called for a bipartisan review of the selection process.

"The Texas decision has a strong smell of White House politics," said Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich.

Riegle and senators from Illinois, Colorado and Arizona sent a letter Thursday to President Reagan asking that he appoint a commission to review the site selection, which was done by a special task force of the Energy Department. The choice of Texas was announced Thursday by Energy Secretary John Herrington.

"If this project is to have the slightest chance of being funded it is imperative that you demonstrate" that the site selection was "based soley on scientific criteria," the senators' letter said.

■ Funding not yet assured; Leading physicist misses 'big day'; Related stories — 2D

Herrington insisted that the Texas site, south of Dallas, was clearly superior to the others.

"There was no politics in this," he told reporters.

The seven states had competed intensely for the right to host the super collider project because of the economic benefits and scientific prestige associated with it.

The collider is envisioned as a 53-mile underground ring that will use 10,000 magnets to whirl beams of protons into each other at energy levels 20 times what is possible in today's most powerful machines. What happens in those collisions is expected to enable scientists to test the latest theories on the origins of matter.

Congress has not yet agreed to build the atom smasher, although it did appropriate $100 million this year for engineering design and certain research and development items.

Herrington said the choice of Texas was based on site geology, regional resources and environmental criteria.

The 16,000-acre site some 25 miles south of Dallas was the only one given ratings of "outstanding" on the most important considerations by the 10-member site evaluation task force of senior civil servants, Herrington said.

Burglar's 'standoff' ends in good grade for SWAT

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

What began as a dark, chilly standoff between police and an armed burglar trapped in a house ended with relief — and a passing grade for an elite Midland police outfit.

Police surrounded the home at 1602 Hodges St. about 7 p.m. Thursday, minutes after 16-year-old Rick Lemon told officers he got an eye-opening welcome when he walked through his front door.

"I put the key in the lock and opened the door, and a guy came around the corner and told me he had a gun," Lemon said. "He told me to get out of the house or he would shoot me. He had a pillowcase in one hand, a gun in one hand, and another gun stuck in his pants."

Lemon said he recognized the gun pointed at him, a .38-caliber revolver, as his father's.

Lemon said he was too scared to say or do anything "but run to a neighbor's house and call police."

The youth apparently walked in on a burglary, police said.

When officers of the Special Weapons and Tactical Unit (SWAT) arrived at nearby San Jacinto Junior High School to assess the situation, the block was evacuated and traffic re-routed. Neighbors told police they had seen movement in the home.

Underwriting would assure UW of goal

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

If money to underwrite United Way of Midland's annual administrative costs is secured, officials say the 1988 campaign's $2.5 million goal will be met.

Chairman Max Holman said this morning he "feels sure" the estimated $250,000-$300,000 will be underwritten, though no donors have been announced.

Nonetheless, United Way volunteers raised a whopping $2,203,945 this season. In 1987, campaign workers raised $2.36 million, but that tally included the funding for administrative costs donated by Joe and Beverly Pevehouse.

"I think the campaign went great. We had outstanding volunteers," Holman said.

■ Please see related photo — 1B

The money raised this year "reemphasizes the great spirit of Midland when it comes to United Way," the chairman said.

Totals from each of the fundraising divisions were announced Thursday night at United Way's closing ceremonies at Green Tree Country Club attended by an estimated 400 people.

United Way President Margaret Purvis complimented Holman Thursday night for carrying "the torch with the enthusiasm and direction to where we are today."

Holman, alluding to the fact the campaign is over and the goal was not met, said Thursday night he pledged himself to "those 35,000 people" United Way of Midland helps yearly.

"I will personally work until we reach our goal of $2.5 million," Holman said.

United Way spokesman Cindy Ford said today the campaign officially is over, but that volunteers will still be completing calls and that additional donations are expected in the near future.

The final tallies announced at Green Tree Thursday night were:

- Special gifts — $702,410
- Independent oil — $63,900
- Residential — $22,383
- Retail — $49,480
- Real estate and finance — $119,894
- Business and entertainment — $86,966
- Utilities, transportation and communication — #131,968
- Major oil — $555,341
- Petroleum industry — $226,299
- Education — $83,245
- Government and services — $69,869

A Street extension may be closed

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

A deadend extension of A Street just north of Mockingbird Lane will be closed to all through traffic if Midland City Council has its way.

The one-mile tract has been the site of trash and teenage antics in recent months, prompting Councilman Gordon Marcum III to propose a temporary closure ordinance.

Marcum claims the area has become somewhat of a haven for late night parties and gun-toting teens, who in one particular incident frightened golfers on the 14th hole of nearby Midland Country Club.

According to a club official, one of its members was forced to fall to the ground after a round of gunfire passed over his head. "Our greens superintendent recommended we do something," said club manager Al Stepp.

Because of that incident and other complaints, Marcum is now interested in sealing off the area with a locked gate.

There are at least four property owners with land along the barren roadway, which runs north of the plush Saddle Club Estates.

Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas said the city inherited the thinly coated asphalt road from the county following annexation several years ago. "We have a number of problems there, but nothing major. It's a deadend street, there's no use for it."

'Last Man's Club' now lives up to its name

By RICH CARTIERE

SAN PABLO, Calif. (AP) — Fifty-six years later, Albert Furrer is finally the last man of The Last Man's Club.

The 96-year-old civic leader today will get that bottle of Mumm's champagne the club bought after the 32 World War I veterans reunited in 1932 and decided they would get together every Veterans Day.

"What else can I say but that I'm here until the end," Furrer said Thursday from his bed at Brookside Hospital, where he had a malignant growth removed this week.

"I came through floods, fires, wars ... my God, you come through it all, and I don't know if it's an honor or a sort of curse," added Furrer, who lives in a nearby nursing home.

"It's rough to see all your friends die off. Old people don't make many new friends."

The champagne bottle, encased in a decorative mahogany box, is in the hands of the family of the club's former secretary-treasurer, Victor Parachini, who died in February at age 89. For the past four years, he and Furrer had been the club's only surviving members. The bottle is signed by the club's original 32.

After all these years, the champagne is mostly a symbolic trophy, having gone sour.

'Find-A-Vet' helps reunite war buddies

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) — Leroy Bishop spent 20 years wondering what happened to his best buddy from 'Nam. At one point, Bishop heard John Farruggio had died.

His wondering ended this year when, using a new computer data base being compiled by the Veterans of the Vietnam War, Bishop learned his Army friend lived only six miles away in a Philadelphia suburb.

"We got a little bit heavier and a little bit grayer. He's still the same guy," said Bishop, a printer who lives in Levittown.

Find-A-Vet, as the program is called, allows veterans to look for those they knew in Vietnam, even if all they remember is a nickname or a military unit.

Michael Milne, executive director of the Veterans of the Vietnam War, said society's acceptance of Vietnam vets in the last few years has led to an increased number of veterans wanting to find lost acquaintances.

"It's a healing process," said Milne, who runs the national organization from his home just outside Wilkes-Barre in northeastern Pennsylvania.

Find-A-Vet has a computer data base with more than 3,000 names on it and can also search for names among the organization's 32,000 members, Milne said.

Veterans of the Vietnam War has tried to increase the size of the data base by putting fliers for the program in its newsletter and at Veterans Administration Hospitals.

Only Vietnam veterans are allowed to use Find-A-Vet, and to ask for a search, vets must enter their biographical information into the system. A $1 donation is requested for each search.

If several people fit the description, the Veterans of the Vietnam War sends a list of names and addresses. If no one meets the description, they hold the request for three months and try it again.

More than 400 requests have been made since the service started in January, Milne said.

John Sepcoski Jr., coordinator for Find-A-Vet, said he hopes the program eventually has 1 million names in the computer data base. A total of 2.6 million soldiers from all services were in Vietnam.

Bishop and Farruggio saw combat together in Vietnam's central highlands.

"We had so many good times and bad times," said Bishop, who tried over the years to find his friend but hadn't a clue as to his whereabouts until he asked for a search in the Find-A-Vet program. Last fall, he learned that Farruggio lived in nearby Newtown.

"I called him. I said, 'Do you know who this is? It's Bish.' He just couldn't believe it was me," Bishop recalled.

When they got together, they first swapped humorous anecdotes, such as the time when Farruggio's rucksack caught in a tree during a firefight and he couldn't jump for cover.

Then, Bishop said, they talked about things he hadn't even discussed with his wife.

"You can't really talk about it to anybody unless they've been there," Bishop said, adding that he and Farruggio now get together every week or so.

Ronald Green, who runs a Vietnam Veterans Outreach Center in Philadelphia, said a meeting between Vietnam buddies can help them psychologically.

"It can be positive, finally, discarding the old emotional baggage," said Green, an Army veteran who served in West Germany.

"After 15 or 20 years, they start thinking about people who were instrumental in their survival," Green added.

Director Milne, who served as an Army Ranger in the Mekong Delta from 1967-69, had the idea for the program and enlisted the help of Sepcoski, who was a student at nearby King's College at the time.

Unlike World War II, Milne said, most soldiers in Vietnam were sent over as individuals for one-year enlistments.

"One of the things everybody failed to do was swap names, addresses and phone numbers. When you rotated out, you just rotated out," Milne said.

Milne, too, has been trying to find a lost friend, his first sergeant from Vietnam.

"He was a hoot and holler. He was a confidant. He was a good friend," Milne said.

Study links Agent Orange with 'clear physical effect'

By PAUL RECER
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON — Vietnam veterans who were heavily exposed to the herbicide Agent Orange show "clear physical effects" with rashes, fatty tumors and changes in skin color, according to a study released today.

The study, sponsored by the American Legion, said that combat veterans were also more likely to still be suffering from physical and psychological problems related to their war experiences.

Based on interviews with 6,810 American Legion members from six states, the study found that many Vietnam veterans who took part in what was called "high combat" continue to suffer from post traumatic stress disorder.

"Left alone, PTSD does not abate," said American Legion National Commander H.F. Gierke in a news release. "There are thousands of Vietnam veterans who are living in America, but they are not living the American dream."

The findings are in a five-year study conducted by Steven D. Stellman of the New York City Department of Health, and Jeanne Mager Stellman of Columbia University and published today in the scientific journal Environmental Research.

Of the veterans interviewed for the study, 42 percent, or 2,858, served in Southeast Asia. About 20 percent of this number were classified in the study as "high combat," which means they were involved frequently in active combat where people were being killed and their lives were in danger.

The study also found a correlation between high rates of exposure to the herbicide Agent Orange and some physical problems. These findings contradict studies conducted by the military in which physical complaints by Vietnam veterans were followed up with physical examinations at Veterans Administration h ospitals. These federal studies found no correlation between Agent Orange exposure and ill health.

Overall, the American Legion study said, men who served in Southeast Asia had higher incidence of heart disease, benign fatty tumors, skin rash with blisters and an increased light senstivity in the eyes. Herbicide handlers, the study said, had a higher level of ulcers and high blood pressure, and there was a correlation between skin ailments and the levels of Agent Orange exposure.

Other findings reported in the study include:

- Veterans who experienced "high combat" were more apt to have high levels of depression, anxiety, and physical symptoms of depression than those who saw little combat or did not serve in Southeast Asia.
- High combat veterans were more likely to be heavy smokers and drinkers and have a more difficult time reducing consumption. High combat veterans were twice as likely to take tranquilizers or sleeping pills, but illicit drug use was found to be very low.
- The post traumatic stress disorder rate varied from 1.8 to 15 percent, depending on the level of combat, and the symptoms for some of those interviewed have persisted for as long as 20 years.

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — More than 250 companies have been started in this city since 1978, according to the Metropolitan Economic Development Council of Richmond.

The council also says more than 670 companies relocated in Richmond from other areas and the total new employment from new and relocated companies during the period was more than 18,000 persons.

LAST

A new bottle will accompany it so Furrer can hold the club's final celebration today, Veterans Day, which was called Armistice Day before 1954.

The Last Man's Club was modeled after similar efforts by Revolutionary War veterans to maintain camaraderie, said Furrer. Its members all came from Contra Costa County, across the Bay from San Francisco.

The club's name was derived from the members' intention to leave a sizable endowment to the last surviving member through annual dues. At one point, its coffers held $30,000.

But the money was spent on the Veterans Day parties and on helping members who had fallen on hard times, and the fund dried up about five years ago.

"They were all the kind of fellas you'd be proud to be associated with," Furrer recalled. "It was a great thing when we were all together. It was the kind of deal where we all helped each other."

Furrer, who ran a stationery store for most of his life and served on numerous community boards, remembers the annual club parties as classy evenings of entertainment and food.

Besides those affairs, members attended funerals of deceased members.

The one thing club members never did was talk about the war, said Furrer, explaining that the group didn't want to relive their wartime experiences despite their desire to stay in touch.

Betty Maffei of the Contra Costa County Historical Society will put the Mumm's on display in nearby Pleasant Hill after today's celebration and keep it for posterity.

"I don't think it's exactly an honor to be 'The Last Man,'" said Maffei. "It's something they all laughed about back then, but as the day got closer, I think the survivors stopped laughing as they realized they might be that guy."

SWAT

A sniper equipped with a night scope was dispatched to a house across the street, and "he reported seeing someone walking back and forth," Cpl. Jim White said at the scene.

After briefings, SWAT team members were deployed and K-9 officers were also called to the scene. Trained negotiators, Sgt. Larry Bledsoe and Sgt. David Garcia, were also called out.

Police decided to try and go through a back door, and at one point, the plan was to try to send one of the two German shepherds in first.

But that plan was scrapped, and police decided to try and convince the burglar to surrender.

After a series of warnings went apparently unanswered, officers decided they had waited long enough. They went in through the back door kicked in by the burglar, and found no one.

But the tension reached its high point when officers found a door suspiciously left open to the attic. Ten minutes later, the attic was searched and nothing was found.

The man who was inside the house apparently had fled just after he threatened the youth, and just before police sealed off the block, Morris said.

Immediately after the incident, Morris and other senior officers conducted a critique of the SWAT operation.

"It was good, they did excellent," Morris said of the group's performance. "They moved well, took care of all of the hazards they were faced with. Any scenario you create, they tend to know it is a drill, and they know they won't get hurt or killed.

"This time, they didn't know."

Lemon, a junior at Midland High School, said he will remember this day for a long time.

"It's been wild," he said. "I just had a knife pulled on me at school today. Some guy said I tried to run him off the road. He pulled a knife on me and threatened me."

Early today police were still looking for the suspect. He was described as black, about 5 feet 9 inches tall, short haired — and scared.

STREET

While no residents live in the immediate area, Marcum said the vacated street still concerns him, especially when firearms are being discharged. According to the councilman, the secluded location is popular with "high school kids," and others who commonly discard beer cans, bottles and other trash along the roadside.

"It's isolated ... that's why we plan to put a gate up and lock it. We've had the place patrolled, but we can't keep someone up there all the time," he said.

But City Manager Fred Poe sees the council's main objective on the temporary closure as a means to curb illegal dumping. He said the ordinance was purposely worded "temporary" because as a dedicated street, any permanant closure would require the city to give back its right-of-way to landowners.

Thomas agreed. "The real problem is the dumping. You find everything from pruned shubbery to old furniture."

So to quell club complaints, Poe said city engineers will construct a reflective barricade to keep vehicular traffic out until new home construction picks up.

Added Thomas: "It's a marginal road ... there's no public use for it. It's just been a nuisance that fulfills no public purpose."

ABORTION

The Missouri law declared that human life begins at the moment of conception and said no public funds, employees or facilities could be used to perform or assist in an abortion or to counsel a woman to have an abortion.

A key issue in the Missouri case is whether it is unconstitutional for a state to declare when human life begins. The Missouri law did that, and went on to declare that "unborn children have protectable interests in life, health and well-being."

The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in July struck down those declarations, saying that it is unconstitutional for a state to adopt one theory of when human life begins.

Douglas Johnson, legislative director for the National Right to Life Committee, said the Missouri case offers the high court a chance to address important issues, such as limits on abortions late in pregnancy, even if it decides not to use the case to overturn Roe vs. Wade.

"We're not predicting that the court would use this case as the occasion to overturn Roe vs. Wade," Johnson said. "That's a possibility. Of course, we would be delighted if they did."

Eleanor Smeal, president of the Fund for the Feminist Majority, called Fried's brief "a sneak attack on women's lives."

There was extensive discussion at the top levels of the Justice Department over whether it would be advisable for Fried to file a brief in the case at all or whether the solicitor general ought to file a full brief outlining arguments for overturning Roe vs. Wade, said a high department official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Instead, a middle course was favored in which the solicitor general would characterize the Missouri case as an appropriate vehicle for the justices to reconsider Roe vs. Wade, said the official.

Involuntary manslaughter charge allowed in court

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — In a stinging ruling, the state Supreme Court said parents have no right to "make martyrs of their children" by placing their physical health entirely in the hands of faith healers.

The court Thursday allowed the involuntary manslaughter prosecution of Laurie Walker of Sacramento, a Christian Scientist whose 4-year-old daughter died of meningitis in March 1984, 17 days after being taken to a faith healer.

The court rejected arguments that a parent cannot be prosecuted for choosing prayer rather than conventional medical treatment for a child when the choice is made in accordance with church beliefs.

Mrs. Walker's lawyer, Thomas Volk, said he would appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court if the state court refuses to reconsider its decisioly believing church member for resorting to spiritual healing "threatens the very heart of Christian Science," he said.

Volk had argued that parents would be protected from prosecution by state law and constitutional freedom of religion.

Deputy Attorney General Clifford Thompson declined to comment on the case.

The church, which claims at least 350,000 members worldwide, doesn't forbid its members to go to doctors but they are supposed to refrain from conventional medical treatment at the same time they are seeking spiritual healing, Volk said.

Thursday's decision affects pending prosecutions in Sonoma and Los Angeles counties against Christian Science parents whose children also died of meningitis while under spiritual care.

In each case, the charges were based on allegations that the failure to seek conventional treatment amounted to criminal negligence, causing the children's death.

Mrs. Walker called a Christian Science practitioner after her daughter, Shauntay, showed flu symptoms in February 1984. The practitioner and a Christian Science nurse attended and prayed for the girl, but she died 17 days later. She received no conventional medical treatment.

Church likely to hire co-pastor

DALLAS (AP) — The First Bapist Church of Dallas, the nation's largest Southern Baptist church, is likely to hire the pastor of a rapidly growing church in Georgia as co-pastor, according to a published report.

The co-pastor is also expected to succeed the Rev. W.A. Criswell, who has led the church for the past 44 years.

The Dallas Times Herald Thursday quoted sources as saying the 22-member committee searching for someone to share duties with Criswell is likely to choose the Rev. James Merritt, 32, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Snellville, Ga.

Merritt told his congregation Sunday he had been approached by the search committee. Merritt, responding to rumors circulating in his 3,000-plus member church, said he did not know if the position would be offered or if he would accept it.

Criswell asked church deacons in August to appoint a committee to find a man with whom he could share pastoral responsibilities.

The Dallas pastor and search committee chairman Dick Clements have declined comment on the search. Committee members, saying they are searching for "God's man," sent teams nationwide to listen to sermons of many of the 50 nominees they received. The committee met Wednesday.

Lewis Drummond, president of the Southeastern Baptist Seminary in Wake Forest, N.C., described Merritt, a fundamentalist, as "an organizer, an inspirer and he has that indescribable leadership ability that makes churches just explode around him."

Bakkers, aide to repay $7.7 million to PTL

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Citing the biblical wisdom that people reap what they sow, a judge ordered Jim and Tammy Bakker and a former top aide to repay $7.7 million to PTL for taking undeserved profits from the TV ministry.

U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Rufus Reynolds said he determined that the Bakkers and former PTL vice president David Taggart were overpaid during their last four years at the ministry.

"In conforming with the religious overture of this case, this court observes that James Bakker either overlooked or ignored parts of the Bible, including 1 Timothy 6:10...'For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith and pierced themselves through with many sorrows,'" Reynolds said in his order, filed Thursday.

Reynolds said Galatians 6:7 should also be applied to the PTL case: "'Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.'"

PTL, now under administration of the bankruptcy court, sued the Bakkers and Taggart on Feb. 1 for $52 million. The ministry alleged they grossly mismanaged the ministry by taking huge sums for personal use between 1984 and 1987 while PTL couldn't pay its bills.

During the trial, which ended Oct. 20, PTL dropped its claim to all but $7.7 million. Reynolds's judgment is the first time any court has ruled that Bakker or other PTL leaders used PTL donors' money improperly.

In the order, Reynolds said Jim Bakker, who founded PTL and left in March 1987 after admitting to a tryst with former church secretary Jessica Hahn, must pay PTL $4.9 million. Tammy Bakker, his wife and former co-host of the "PTL Club" television show, must repay $677,397, and Taggart must repay $1 million.

In addition, Reynolds ordered, Bakker and Taggart jointly must repay PTL another $1 million. Taggart was fired in April 1987 by Jerry Falwell, who took over PTL from Bakker.

PTL attorney R. Bradford Leggett of Winston-Salem, N.C., said, "I think the judge's opinion made a clear suggestion that when people contribute to support a ministry, there is a trust involved that must be dealt with in good faith."

Reynolds, in his 50-page order, said PTL's expenditures under Bakker were "unbelievable" and a "waste of PTL's money." He also accused the administrators of "gross mismanagement" and "total disregard for reality."

Reynolds said it appeared the PTL board of directors was never informed that the ministry and Christian theme park near Fort Mill was in "any kind of precarious financial position."

The judge rejected Bakker's attempts during the trial to justify the $6.6 million in salary and bonuses he and his wife collected between 1984 and 1987.

"We plan to appeal," said Ryan Hovis, the Bakkers' Rock Hill attorney. Hovis said Bakker could not repay the ministry because "he doesn't have anything."

A secretary at the Bakkers' new organization, Jim and Tammy Ministries in Pineville, N.C., said Bakker would not comment until he reads the order.

Taggart's attorney, Ben Cotten of Washington, D.C., did not return telephone calls seeking comment.

Bush faces higher budget deficit than previously estimated

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — President-elect George Bush has been given the glum news that the budget deficit in the next fiscal year will be $21 billion higher than the Reagan administration had previously estimated.

That information means that Bush will be facing an even bigger budget headache when he takes office on Jan. 20.

The new deficit estimate was presented to Bush and President Reagan during a Cabinet briefing Thursday on the administration's final budget submission to Congress.

Joseph Wright Jr., director of the Office of Management and Budget, said the OMB now estimates that the deficit for the 1990 fiscal year, which begins next Oct. 1, will be $132 billion, substantially higher than the $111 billion deficit estimate OMB made just three months ago.

Officials said the main factors boosting the deficit estimate were the drought, which slowed economic growth this year, and higher-than-expected interest rates, which raised the cost of financing the $2.6 trillion national debt.

The Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law's deficit target for 1990 is $100 billion, which means that $32 billion in budget cuts will be needed to close the gap between revenues and spending.

Achieving such sizable cuts in the face of congressional opposition to further reductions in domestic programs will present Bush with major political problems.

During the campaign, Bush sidestepped specifics on how he would deal with the budget deficit by touting a plan for a "flexible freeze." Bush said he would allow government spending to grow only enough to match inflation. Within the overall freeze, selected programs could grow while others would be cut.

However, Bush avoided providing details on what programs he would cut in order to free funds for increases that he promised to make in education, child care and health care for the poor.

The budget document Reagan sends to Congress on Jan. 9 will reflect his decisions, presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said.

However, officials said it was likely that Bush would rewrite at least part of the document once he takes office, just as Reagan did in 1981 when he submitted his own budget to Congress in place of the budget left behind by President Carter.

Officials refused to comment on reports that the final Reagan budget will call for substantial increases in defense spending and steep cuts in domestic programs as a way of providing Bush with the opportunity to present a "kinder, gentler" budget blueprint once he takes office.

OMB spokeswoman Barbara Clay said that Reagan's final budget would not include any tax increases, something the president has consistently opposed, or seek to trim Social Security benefits as a way of meeting the $100 billion Gramm-Rudman deficit target.

"We have some difficult choices ahead" on where to cut spending, she said.

With estimates on future deficits rising, many private economists are convinced that Bush will be forced to accept some type of tax increase despite his oft-repeated opposition to new taxes during the campaign.

As examples of pressure for increased spending, they point to public demands that the government do more in the fight against drugs, and to estimates topping $50 billion for the cost of bailing out hundreds of insolvent savings and loan institutions.

House Speaker Jim Wright on Thursday said that the first signal on whether Bush is serious about reducing the budget deficit is likely to come from his appointment of two members to the National Economic Commission, a bipartisan advisory group created to come up with a blueprint for eliminating the budget deficit.

Bush criticized the commission during the campaign as a device for raising taxes, but Wright said if Bush is serious about dealing with the deficit, he will weigh carefully his appointments, which are expected to be made soon.

"Will they be pragmatic people, will they be realistic people, will they be people dedicated to finding a true solution to this enormous budget crisis?" Wright, D-Texas, asked.

"I think that may be his first signal."

Also providing hope to some that a resolution can be reached in the seven-year budget deadlock is the widespread expectation that Bush will name Richard Darman as the new budget director.

Three killed in tunnel explosion

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Three workers killed in an explosion while checking gas levels in a sewer tunnel were acting as guinea pigs, says a safety advocate who calls the project's fatality rate the nation's worst per dollar spent.

"I'm absolutely convinced that this particular tragedy is inexcusable and absolutely avoidable," Joseph Kinney, executive director of the National Safe Workplace Institute in Chicago, said of Thursday's accident. "It did not need to happen."

A city official defended safety procedures, and said investigators did not know what triggered the blast.

In all, six workers have died since 1986 in the $2.1 billion deep-tunnel sewer project, the largest public works project in Wisconsin history. Last March, the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration cited the contractor for inadequate ventilation.

The explosion occurred around 9 a.m. after the three went into the tunnel to check a high level of methane, a gas formed by natural decomposition, officials said. The methane had caused workers to evacuate.

Rescue workers, who had to clear explosive fumes and remove twisted wreckage while contending with poor lighting and knee-deep mud, took eight hours to remove the bodies.

"It was a mess," said fire Capt. Bert Bemann.

The victims were identified as Ronald Kohne, 49, a tunnel superintendent from Big Sandy, Tenn.; Rick Sochacki, 34, a safety officer from South Holland, Ill.; and Tony Bell, 25, of Sturgeon Bay, a shift foreman.

Autopsies were scheduled for today to determine what killed the men. District Attorney E. Michael McCann began an investigation, saying the number of deaths on the project had concerned him earlier. OSHA also sent an investigator to the site.

"It seems to me that the three men were the modern-day equivalent to canaries in cages in the old coal mines," said Kinney, referring to the old practice of using canaries to check for lethal gas levels in coal mines. If a canary died, the miner knew to get out.

Kinney questioned why remote-controlled monitoring equipment could not have been used instead of sending the men back into the tunnel after a methane problem had already caused workers to evacuate it.

Kinney said the project has the worst death rate per dollar spent of any such waste water or heavy construction project in the nation. His non-profit institute, which is funded by foundation grants and contributions, compiles statistics on workplace safety.

But Shelia Payton, chairwoman of the Milwaukee Metropolitan Sewage District, defended the project's safety policies.

"These were inspectors. These were trained people," Payton said. "They went in there with the proper equipment to check the gas levels."

Nearly half of bombers back in service

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force has returned more than 40 percent of its B-1B bomber fleet to flight status after conducting successful safety inspections spurred by a crash earlier this week.

As of this morning, the Strategic Air Command had received reports from four Air Force bases saying 42 of the long-range bombers had passed inspection, said Capt. Julie Holland, a SAC spokeswoman.

She declined to predict when the one-time inspections would be completed for the remaining 56 planes, but said the check-ups were going smoothly.

All the bombers were grounded Wednesday, one day after a B-1B crashed and burned near Dyess Air Force Base, Texas, outside Abilene. The crew of four managed to eject from the plane and survived the accident.

The plane was the second B-1B to be lost in 14 months, leaving the Air Force with 98 of the sleek aircraft still in its inventory.

The Air Force has refused to speculate on the cause of Tuesday's accident, although a fire was observed around the plane's left two engines before the crash. SAC's grounding order specified a mandatory inspection of electric, fuel and hydraulic fluid lines.

None of the planes so far returned to service was found to have a problem.

SAC, which is responsible for land-based nuclear bomber and missile forces, has described the grounding and inspection order as a "normal precaution" in the wake of a major accident.

The bombers have been deployed at four bases: Dyess; Ellsworth AFB, S.D.; Grand Forks AFB, N.D., and McConnell AFB, Kan.

According to Holland, 16 B-1B's at Dyess have so far been inspected; 5 at Ellsworth; 13 at McConnell, and 8 at Grand Forks.

Despite this week's crash, Pentagon spokesman Dan Howard went out of his way on Thursday to defend the B-1B as having "the best flying safety record of any heavy bomber that we've fielded since the 1950's."

"In 1987, there was one crash which equated to a rate of about 8.2 (mishaps) per 100,000 flying hours," he said. "In 1988, with this crash, it's 5.3.

"This compares to rates of 26.9 and 10.2 for the B-52 at similar stages of its development; 22 and 24.9 for the B-58, and for the FB-111, the rate was 53.6 and 43.4 at similar stages."

The B-1B, built by Rockwell International Corp., has a maximum speed of about 1,000 mph and a range of more than 7,000 miles.

Other states may follow insurance revolt

Associated Press

A decade ago, California spurred a nationwide tax revolt with a ballot question that slashed rates. Now activists are proclaiming the birth of another West Coast-inspired citizens movement: the insurance revolt.

"The message from California voters is 'Enough is enough,'" said consumer activist Ralph Nader of Proposition 103, a ballot measure that cut insurance rates. "Now we're getting calls from other states and other groups interested in doing the same thing."

It is a prospect that insurance industry officials don't relish, especially since rebellious rumblings have already been felt in the New Jersey and Massachusetts legislatures.

"California is known in our business as a bellwether state," said Ron Howorth, a vice president with the National Association of Independent Insurers. "It has always had the position of a trendsetter and that concerns us."

Proposition 103, which was narrowly approved Tuesday, requires all insurance companies writing car, home and business policies in the state to roll back rates to 1987 levels and then cut premiums by 20 percent.

California's Proposition 13, approved by voters in 1978, cut local property taxes in half. The initiative set off a tax revolt that led to similar propositions in other states.

In approving Proposition 103, voters rejected other ballot initiatives offered by legislators, trial lawyers and the insurance industry, all of whom spent about $76 million to sell their plan as the solution to the state's skyrocketing car insurance rates.

Insurance industry officials say Proposition 103 offers no way for insurers to cut their costs and will force some companies out of business. Other insurers are contemplating limiting their business in California.

The state Supreme Court delayed the proposition's implementation Thursday at the request of insurance companies to give the court time to consider whether the measure is constitutional.

"I certainly hope for the benefit of other states that they don't follow California's lead," said George Tye, executive manager for the Association of California Insurance Companies. "It was a totally irresponsible and destructive initiative."

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon announced the existence of a super-secret fighter Thursday in order to help secure congressional funding for its far more costly and troubled Stealth bomber.

By revealing details of its 10-year-old, $4 billion program to buy 59 radar-evading Stealth fighters, the Defense Department sought to allay growing concern that excessive secrecy has driven up costs for classified programs and thwarted effective congressional oversight.

The Pentagon plans to open a second front in its public-relations offensive Nov. 22, when the Northrop Corp. and the Air Force will publicly display the first Stealth bomber at Northrop's Palmdale, Calif., plant.

Unofficial estimates for buying 132 of the wedge-shaped, deep-penetration nuclear bombers, officially known as the B-2, range as high as $80 billion — well over the original estimate of $36.6 billion.

Critics of the bomber have questioned whether the untested plane can achieve its goal of eluding radar and being able to penetrate deeply into the Soviet Union by the late 1990s.

Detailing the existence — and success — of the Stealth fighter program, said a senior staffer with the House Armed Services Committee, "shows that something has been operating effectively with this technology for several years. It will help gain public support for the B-2."

Members of Congress have long pressed the Pentagon to disclose general details about classified programs in order to garner support from the public and members of Congress who are not generally privy to details of such projects.

"Because these are such supersecret programs, we have had to pay through the nose," said a Senate Armed Services Committee staffer who spoke on condition of anonymity. "With the budget crunch that's here already, we have to find ways to save. There's a change in the wind in terms of what we're willing to pay for that sort of thing."

Congressional investigations into a number of highly classified programs, including the Advanced Cruise Missile, have found serious cost overruns. The top-secret, so-called "black programs" account for up to 20 percent of the Pentagon's annual $150 billion in purchases.

Pentagon officials insist the long-range B-2 bomber is crucial to preserving U.S. security now that the 1950s-era B-52s are being phased out and the 1970s-era B-1B bombers will be phased out in the late 1990s.

Manned bombers, coupled with submarine-launched nuclear missiles and land-based nuclear missiles, make up the three so-called "legs" of U.S. nuclear forces designed to deter a Soviet nuclear attack.

Pentagon spokesman Dan Howard said that by announcing details of the fighter program, officials could now move the aircraft around the country as part of military exercises.

Texas wins big one, but battle not over

Years of effort by a number of states to "win" the Superconducting Super Collider — a huge particle accelerator project — came to an end Thursday when Texas was named the recipient by the federal government. But like most things the federal government gets involved with, there's a catch.

Texas will get the super collider project if the government — the Congress — elects to give it the go-ahead. Congress already has appropriated $100 million in the current fiscal year for engineering design and research and development work, boosting the total money appropriated for the project to $250 million. But that's literally only a drop in a very large bucket toward the total estimated construction cost of $4.4 billion and the project could still be scrapped.

Hopefully that won't occur. For those who view the future Texas as a leader in technology and scientific research, the super collider announcement was another step along the road to fulfillment of a dream. If built, the super collider would allow researchers to explore the depths of particle physics which could lead to a better understanding of how the universe is put together and feasibly result in new or better products for everyday life.

The quest for the super collider involved numerous states and literally thousands of interested people. Millions of dollars and countless man-hours were devoted to drawing proposals for the Department of Energy, the entity governing the project. Texas was chosen because the Waxahachie site was "superior," federal officials indicated. But getting that message across to the government was no simple task.

U.S. Sens. Lloyd Bentsen and Phil Gramm were in the forefront of the Texas effort to be selected for the site, along with House Speaker Jim Wright and Texas Gov. Bill Clements. They deserve the thanks of all Texans.

The battle to get the super collider is far from over. Now the issue becomes one of convincing the federal government that the project truly is needed and that its benefits will be worth the huge cost.

That's a message that needs to be sent to Washington, D.C.

Study relocating tracks

Many Midlanders may not realize that the engineering staff of the City of Midland has performed a major service to our city and to many of its homeowners and business owners through the information which has been given the Federal Flood Insurance agency and the Army Corps of Engineers, which is causing the federal groups to revise the proposed flood plain map of Midland.

All of us know that because of our flat terrain and the fact that houses, buildings and streets have taken the place of prairie land that rainwater no longer can soak into Midland's sandy soil but instead must find someplace to go or to collect.

The proposed federal plan, which I am told was based on the black clay soils of Dallas-Fort Worth which have less absorption than we have in Midland's sandy land, would have caused hundreds of Midland homeowners to obtain flood insurance and would have prevented substantial development to the north and west of the city.

Admittedly, Midland growth has long been to the north and northwest, created in large part by the artificial barrier of the old Texas & Pacific, now Union Pacific, tracks. Some year not too long in the future, we should study the relocation of these tracks to a new loop around the southern extremity of the city. With no grade crossing, new industrial sites could be located along this high-speed rail route. At the same time, the present route should be converted into an attractive parkway and boulevard. The city could then grow in all directions and there would no longer be the stigma of "across the tracks." Our new "Pacific Avenue Boulevard" would be like Dallas's Pacific Avenue, the route of the old T&P across Dallas before the rail loop was built there, or like Central Expressway (but no so crowded) which took the route of the former slum-creating Southern Pacific rails across Dallas.

In the meantime, our city council should seriously consider employing an independent consulting drainage engineer to make a study of drainage in Midland and beyond — including areas where water comes into the city and those areas where it must drain away. It might be feasible to capture and store some of this excess floodwater, for irrigation both within and without the city.

Morality change needed

What has happened to the morals of yesterday? It seems like they have all faded away. People act like pregnancy is a disease. It doesn't just happen. It is as simple as this: If you don't have sex, you won't get pregnant.

To many people abortion is their medicine to get cured. Why do we look at life that way? What makes people think they have the right to choose who lives and who doesn't? God has a specific plan for everyone's life. And who is man to think he has a better plan than God?

If the morals of today and tomorrow's generations would change for the better, then maybe the problems with abortion would decrease.

Continence is key

Sorry, but both Abigail Van Buren and I have to take exception to your headline over "Dear Abby" in a recent edition. The headline writer said "Education best defense against sexual diseases." But Abby put it this way in her article: "The best preventative is abstaining from sex until one reaches the time in his or her life when there is one partner only."

I think that Abby would say that you can get all the education you want, but continence is the key behavior. She's right.

Book focuses on search for Nazi killers

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — A Ukranian policeman kept a poker face while firing a bullet into the head of a 4-year-old Jewish girl in 1943. His cold-blooded lack of emotion in front of witnesses on that autumn day in the Polish town of Lisets kept him out of prison.

More than 40 years later, West German authorities declined to prosecute the Ukrainian, Bohdan Koziy, because they could not prove he acted out of cruelty.

German judges have recently ruled that if Nazis didn't display laughter or some other outward show of enjoyment, they cannot be found guilty of murder for carrying out the gruesome task of genocide.

Simply firing slugs into the head of a child is not enough because Nazis like Koziy, who now lives comfortably in Costa Rica, may have been acting on orders from their superiors.

The details of the case against Koziy and the bizarre West German legal obstacle are vividly told in "The Nazi Hunters," (Pharos Books) a book by reporters Charles Ashman and Robert Wagman due to be released next week.

The Justice Department's team of Nazi-hunting lawyers from the Office of Special Investigation tracked Koziy down in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., where he had bought a motel and settled down after immigrating to the United States following the war. Koziy sold the motel and fled to Costa Rica after a federal judge, in 1981, stripped him of his citizenship because he had hidden his involvement with the Nazis. The judge also said he thought Koziy was a murderer.

"The Nazi Hunters" tells the story of America's ongoing search for some of this century's most vicious war criminals. The authors found seven cases of Nazi war criminals who were extradited from the United States or fled the country to avoid trial, only to go unprosecuted when they arrived in West Germany.

In their defense, West German officials point to the conviction on five murder counts of Gottfried Weis, a former SS guard at Auschwitz. But some German legal experts familiar with the trial say the 66-year-old Weis might have beaten the rap if he hadn't shown too much pleasure in the kill. He placed tin cans on the heads of an 8-year-old boy and a 17-year-old girl and killed both when he missed the cans.

In making their case that West Germany has been soft on the Nazis, the authors point out that three-fourths of the Nazis who went to trial in West Germany did so between 1945 and 1949 when the country was still under Allied occupation. Of the 6,482 convictions since the war, only 12 Nazis were sentenced to death, 160 to life in prison and the rest to terms averaging less than four years.

While West Germany seems reluctant to bring old Nazis to justice, a recent court decision in Massachusetts also may make prosecution more difficult in the United States. According to a treaty between the United States and the Soviet Union, the many witnesses to Nazi atrocities who now live in the East Bloc can only be interviewed by U.S. authorities with a Soviet official presiding. Lawyers for two accused Lithuanian SS members living in Massachusetts convinced a district court judge that statements given by witnesses while under the eye of a Soviet official may not be reliable. The lawyers argued that the statements should be given at an American embassy with an American presiding.

The Office of Special Investigation is appealing the decision, knowing full well that the Soviets would never agree to the interrogation of their citizens in a U.S. embassy. While the decision is under appeal, the potential for more Nazi deportations hangs in the balance.

The decision could not have come at a worse time. The Office of Special Investigation is reportedly poised to launch several new cases this winter.

HELPING THE CARTEL — The Central Intelligence Agency has confirmed that some of the chemicals used by Colombian drug dealers to produce cocaine are coming from U.S. chemical companies. The drug-running Medellin Cartel uses dummy Mexican companies to buy the necessary chemicals. Mexican purchases of chemicals needed for cocaine have tripled since 1983. Last year, 10,000 tons of ether was sold to buyers in the leading cocaine-producing nations of Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Bolivia. Half of it, according to CIA estimates, was diverted for cocaine processing. The Drug Enforcement Administration has traced some of the chemical shipments back to American companies.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The Soviets are way ahead of us in the space race, not because of any technological advantage, but because they have the good culinary sense to invite French astronauts along for the ride. Joint Franco-Soviet space missions always carry French cuisine and the next mission later this month will be no exception. French astronaut Jean-Loup Chretien is bringing along duck, ham pate and veal Marengo. It's a far cry from Tang.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Nov. 11, the 316th day of 1988. There are 50 days left in the year. This is Veterans Day.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Nov. 11, 1918, fighting in World War I came to an end with the signing of an armistice between the Allies and Germany inside a railroad car in the Forest of Compiegne in France.

On this date:

In 1620, 41 Pilgrims signed a compact aboard the Mayflower, which was anchored off the Massachusetts coast, calling for a "body politick" to enact "just and equal laws."

In 1778, Iroquois Indians in central New York state killed some 40 people in the Cherry Valley Massacre.

In 1831, former slave Nat Turner, who had led a violent insurrection, was executed in Jerusalem, Va.

In 1889, Washington became the 42nd state.

In 1921, President Warren G. Harding dedicated the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery. (The inscription on the tomb reads, "Here rests in honored glory an American Soldier known but to God.")

In 1939, Kate Smith first sang Irving Berlin's "God Bless America" on network radio.

In 1942, during World War II, the Germans completed their occupation of France.

In 1965, Rhodesia proclaimed its independence from Britain in a broadcast by Prime Minister Ian D. Smith.

Budget can still be cut, problems resolved

Charley Reese

Campaigns have just about become irrelevant to the problems most of us are concerned about. One of these problems is the federal deficit and it is simply not true that there is nothing left to cut in the federal budget. We should insist that all non-essential services and programs be eliminated.

We can, for example, eliminate the National Endowment for the Arts, the National Endowment for the Humanities, and the national endowments for anything else, as well as all federal grant programs except those necessary for pressing public health problems or national defense. A lot of silly, useless things are funded by the federal government.

Until the budget is in balance, Congress could pass an across-the-board 10 percent pay cut and an across the board 10 percent reduction in personnel, including the Congress and its staff in both actions. All non-essential travel could be eliminated. Foreign aid could be eliminated as well as the bureaucracy which dispenses it. Appropriations to international organizations could be zeroed or reduced by half.

Organizations such as Amtrak could be sold and the Legal Services Corporation, the Small Business Administration, the Overseas Private Investment Corporation and other similar organizations eliminated.

I don't think Congress can expect the American people to be concerned about the deficit until they themselves exhibit some genuine concern as opposed to making partisan political speeches about it.

In families and in private businesses, when there is a financial crunch, all non-essential expenditures are eliminated. We should insist that government do the same. There is no reason why government should insist that every single program and bureacracy is essential and requires an annual increase. If we allow this attitude to persist, then naturally we'll go busted.

One helpful approach would be to enforce a strict separation between government and the private sector. No one in the private sector should be allowed to profit from government services. For example, if we wish the government to lend money to students for their tuition, let the U.S. Treasury issue the checks and eliminate the commercial banks, who make a profit without taking any risks or doing much work.

If we wish to provide public housing, then the government should buy the land, build the housing, and run the projects, using only government employees in every phase. If we choose to provide medical care for the indigent, then let us build government hospitals and health clinics staffed by Public Health Service doctors and nurses.

Our present system — of subsidizing the private sector to provide public services — is the worst of both worlds. It has all the expense of socialism from the taxpayers' point of view and all the profiteering of capitalism which adds tremendously to the costs.

And it is this constituency of special interests in the private sector — individuals and organizations which profit from government services — that exerts the enormous pressure on the Congress to spend, spend, spend.

I am willing to be taxed to provide essential services to those who need them and who through no fault of their own cannot provide them. I do not like to be taxed, however, to enrich the already rich under the guise of helping the poor.

We could, for another example, offer a prize for the best design of a new weapon system. Pay a fair price for the design. Then manufacture it in government factories staffed with government employees.

No problem is insoluble, provided we learn once more to discuss public issues in a rational, non-partisan, non-propagandistic fashion.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Let teams go to Japan and the South's sunk!

Grizzard

I thought I'd heard everything:

— Hosea Williams dropping a suit against the Ku Klux Klan.

— Rock Hudson being gay.

— Michael Dukakis admitting he's a liberal.

— The Kremlin loosening up.

— A pitcher of orange juice costing me $37.50 from room service in a New York hotel.

— The Atlanta Falcons winning a game.

But that's nothing compared to the news Coca-Cola wants Georgia and Georgia Tech to go play each other in football in Tokyo.

It was in the papers. I read it with my own eyes. It's probably not going to happen because both schools say it's not feasible, but that the idea was even hatched is frightening.

What's going on here?

Oft I have warned about the Japanese influence on our country. The Japanese even tried to buy Atlanta's Hartsfield Airport, and Mayor Andy Young even listened to the offer.

The Japanese have bought every American golf course that isn't nailed down, several tall buildings, and they'll probably do a deal and wind up owning Oregon and Lake Erie before it's over.

Georgia and Georgia Tech in Tokyo, indeed.

You think we were surprised at Pearl Harbor?

Can you imagine the Japanese reaction to 10,000 or 20,000 bulldogs barking at one another in a hotel lobby in Tokyo?

"Tora! Tora! Tora!" is one thing, but "How 'bout them Dawgs" is quite another.

And what on earth would fans do about the traditional tailgating parties before the game?

Is fried chicken that easy to find in Tokyo? And if it's not, if we cooked our own and took it with us, would it spoil on the plane ride?

I talked to a few Georgia and Tech fans soon after the news of Coke's idea to switch the game. They were surprisingly warm to the idea.

Said Leroy Parsons, Georgia fan: "At least it would be a lot easier to get to Tokyo than it was to get to Starkville when we played Mississippi State."

Said Miles Purvis, Tech fan: "I'd rather go to Tokyo than back to Athens. Last time I was in Athens, a Georgia fan barked at me and bit my leg. It took me four hours to get home in all that traffic."

Offered Dorothy Sims, Georgia fan: "I'd rather go to Tokyo than back to Grant Field" (now Bobby Dodd Stadium).

"At least the rest rooms would probably be cleaner."

Countered Ruby Lesterfield, of a Tech persuasion: "I think it would be exciting. The only other time I've been overseas is when we took the kids to Canada."

Well, not me. We've tampered with enough traditions in this country as it is, and I'm damned proud of our two major state schools who would not budge and the Tech-Georgia game isn't going anywhere.

Move the game to Tokyo and the next thing you know, the Master's will move to Lisbon and Andy Young will uproot the dogwoods and replant them in Botswana.

College offers students chance to learn near their roots

By NICHOLAS K. GERANIOS

TOPPENISH, Wash. (AP) — Maria Shearer didn't graduate from high school with the rest of her class, but the 48-year-old housewife will soon graduate from college.

Antonio Santoy was about to be laid off at the Hanford nuclear reservation, but the former college dropout wasn't worried because he's heading to law school.

Both attribute their success to Heritage College, a tiny private school on the Yakima Indian Reservation that has quietly been educating a mixture of Hispanics, Indians and the poor since 1981.

Its success is measured not in high-powered professors, famous alumni or huge endowments, but in the 340 graduates who are teachers, computer programmers and business people in the Yakima Valley.

"We have teachers in about every school district around," said Sister Mary Rita Rohde, a Roman Catholic nun who is vice president for development at the independent, non-denominational college.

Heritage specializes in educating a multicultural, rural population that otherwise might have skipped college.

"Native Americans and Hispanics are close to their roots," said Sister Kathleen Ross, president and founder of the college. "It's difficult for them to leave their families and attend college."

Heritage College enrolls 339 at its main Toppenish campus and 36 students at an upper division branch in Omak. Of the Toppenish students, 25 percent are Indians, 20 percent are Hispanic, 7 percent are black or Asian, and 48 percent are white.

"We're pretty reflective of the folks here," Sister Rohde said.

The average student is more than 35 years old. More than half have incomes below the poverty level; most receive financial aid.

"Lots of colleges would consider this population a handicap," said Sister Ross, 47, who was persuaded to launch the college by local residents and the Yakima Indian Nation.

Many students need extra help, in everything from acquiring high school equivalency certificates to extensive tutoring.

"When I was young it was a privilege to go to college. Only people with money could go," said Mrs. Shearer, a Hispanic from Granger who is a senior in business.

"Now it's a right for everybody, young or old, to go to school with the federal money (student grants and loans) we have."

Santoy, 38, of Grandview, is a junior in computer science and plans to enroll in law school after graduation. He has worked for several years as an electrician at the now-closed N Reactor at the Hanford reservation.

The campus is surrounded by hop fields, apple trees and grape vines on the outskirts of Toppenish, a town of 6,500 about 20 miles south of Yakima.

The main building is a former grade school, and the 11½-acre site includes seven modular buildings, an old farmhouse that once held the first classrooms, and a few storage sheds.

There are 20 full-time faculty and staff, 12 full-time support workers, and 35 part-time teachers. The school has a budget of $2.2 million annually.

It regularly gets donations, including office equipment from an agricultural research station in Yakima and used library bookshelves from a Seattle law firm. The land was purchased for the school by the Lorene Petrie trust of Yakima.

Recently, the state Higher Education Coordinating Board gave a $49,860 grant to pay for Heritage students and staff to travel Washington, recruiting Hispanic and Indian students.

Sister Ross, a Seattle native who serves on national panels for education of rural minorities, earned a doctorate in education management and cross-cultural studies from Claremont College in California and served as academic vice president at Fort Wright College in Spokane.

That college, which closed in 1982, had opened a Toppenish branch at the request of the Yakima Indian Nation, and local people implored Sister Ross to keep its academic programs going.

She incorporated Heritage College, and classes began in late 1981 with eight staff members and 65 students.

With little competition, low overhead and rising enrollments, Heritage College is on solid footing, 60 percent of its income coming from tuition and 40 percent from gifts.

The cost for students, none of whom live on campus, is $127 per semester hour.

Craftsman molds reputation with redware pottery

LANCASTER, Pa. (AP) — Following the old German redware tradition, Ned Foltz has earned a national reputation for the pottery he makes at his Reinholds studio.

That he continues to work in the original handcrafted tradition while dealing with an ever-increasing demand for his pottery is evidence of his determination to revive and faithfully carry on the legacy of the old Pennsylvania German potters.

Foltz gets some help from a small staff, limited in number to maintain quality. But he does all the turning and decorating himself.

"There are no two designs exactly alike," Foltz says, working with slipware, a wet clay. "After 25 years of this, I have lots of designs in mind. There are many variations of the Pennsylvania Dutch designs: the tulips, flowers, birds."

Some of his designs are finished with the color green, which he makes from his own homemade recipe of copper carbonate, resulting in a non-toxic — as are all his pieces — copper dioxide.

Foltz, who was educated at the Philadelphia Museum of Fine Arts and then worked for 17 years as an art teacher, received no formal training in his craft.

"I never studied pottery," he says. "My education included graphics and painting, that sort of thing."

Foltz, whose grandmother gave him a piece of redware when he was a child, started making his own 26 years ago. Word of the fine quality of his work in this dying craft began to spread.

In 1976, Colonial Williamsburg asked him to do pottery for their buildings, he says.

"It was then that I decided to stop teaching," Foltz says.

Although he owns an electric kiln and has recently installed a gas kiln, his woodburning kiln and his studio, like the craft he practices, are a step back in time.

The kilns are outside, along with piles of freshly dug earth which will not be used until thoroughly tested in all the stages of making pottery.

"Not all the red clays are good," Foltz says. "Watch for areas that have lots of red stone buildings; there you'll find good clay."

In a building detached from Foltz's studio is one of Foltz's "challenges." There, a portion of the roof contains more than 2,000 unglazed clay tiles, each made with hooks on the back for easy replacement. Curved tiles, such as those seen on Mexican buildings, are placed along the peak of the roof.

"Those tiles were put on like barn roofs," Foltz says, "to let the air through."

His glazed tiles, 2 inches square and 4 inches square, each individually made, decorated, dated and signed with his trademark tulip, undergo a series of lengthy steps resulting in a price of about $3 to $4 each, depending upon the decoration.

"These glazed tiles can be put on any surface," he says, "but we don't recommend them for countertops." Most people use them for walls.

Others are sold with a hanger on the back for easy display.

In addition to crafts shows where he sells his wares, Foltz mounts several shows in his studio. His work also has been displayed in the Museum of American Folk Art in New York.

The response to his annual Christmas open house never fails to amaze him.

"People actually bring campers and wait all night for the studio to open," he says.

Sakharov receives human rights award

NEW YORK (AP) — Andrei D. Sakharov, the father of the Soviet dissident movement, finally received a 1973 human rights award Thursday night during his first trip to New York City.

Sakharov received the Human Rights Award from the International League for Human Rights at a reception at the home of Ronald Lauder, the former U.S. ambassador to Austria.

The 67-year-old Nobel Peace Prize winner is on his first trip to the West, less than two years after Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev freed him from internal exile in the city of Gorky. The human rights activist was banished in 1980 to the closed city for opposing the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan.

About 200 guests, including author Elie Wiesel, Brooklyn District Attorney Elizabeth Holtzman, designer Caroline Roehm and ABC television's Barbara Walters, attended the reception.

The ceremony was closed to the media. Sakharov, wearing a blue beret and plaid scarf, made no statement as he left the reception and entered a waiting limousine.

Rhino killed in accident

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A rare Indian rhinoceros apparently died of shock after getting its head stuck in an 18-inch opening in a zoo gate, officials said.

The 2½-ton animal, which had lived at the Los Angeles Zoo for 19 years, had reared up and put its head through the opening, locking its horn, said zoo director Warren Thomas.

"You're dealing with an animal with a relatively limited intelligence level, and she panicked. It never occurred to her to turn her head slightly sideways to slip her head out," Thomas said Thursday.

The animal, named Rhada, was found dead Thursday morning. It apparently became trapped overnight. The rhino's air passages remained open, indicating the animal died of shock and not suffocation, said Thomas.

The 21-year-old rhino, born in India, was one of 75 in zoos worldwide and one of few to breed successfully in captivity. About 2,000 of the endangered species live in the wild. Rhinos live to about 40, Thomas said.

Neil Bush to testify in suit

DENVER (AP) — Neil Bush, son of president-elect George Bush, has been called to testify about his role as an officer of an insolvent Colorado savings and loan in a suit filed by homeowners.

Bush wasn't named as a defendant in the lawsuit but he served as a director of Silverado Banking Savings and Loan, which made loans to The Township, a financially-troubled, 82-unit townhouse project in suburban Denver.

Four homeowners sued Silverado last year, alleging they should have been told when they bought their homes in 1985 that Silverado was preparing to foreclose on the developer, Meridian Land Corp.

The homeowners also allege that Silverado exercised substantial control over the project, which is only half finished, and that Township units suffer from a number of construction problems.

Bush was a director of Silverado for three years, but stepped down in August, citing a potential conflict of interest with his father's presidential campaign.

AIDS drops among military

ATLANTA (AP) — Fewer U.S. military recruits are infected with AIDS compared to three years ago, a decline federal health officials believe is due to men who fear they may be infected not signing up for duty.

During the first six months of the military's AIDS testing program, which was launched in October 1985, 15 out of every 10,000 recruits tested positive for exposure to the AIDS virus. But between October 1987 and March 1988, 12 in every 10,000 recruits were found to be infected, the national Centers for Disease Control reported Thursday.

"Our leading hypothesis is that it reflects self-deferral among high-risk applicants — people who know they have (AIDS virus) infections, or suspect they might be at increased risk, are not coming into the recruitment centers," said Dr. Marta Gwinn, an AIDS specialist with the Atlanta-based CDC.

That theory is based in part on the fact that while there has been a "statistically significant decrease" in AIDS infection among male recruits, infection rates among female recruits — who may be less likely to think they are infected — have stayed largely constant, the CDC said in its weekly report.

'Virus' probe to end soon

WASHINGTON (AP) — FBI Director William Sessions says the agency expects to finish within a few weeks the first phase of a criminal investigation of the computer "virus" that attacked and disabled computer networks nationwide last week.

Sessions said Thursay the bureau is examining a wide range of possible criminal violations.

A 23-year-old Cornell University graduate student has told friends he created the virus, a tiny program that spreads throughout computer networks and disrupts them.

Sessions, however, told reporters "there has to be a very careful and deliberate look at it before I would ever go out and suggest that a person had actually committed a crime."

Motions to dismiss case against North rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge says he rejected defense motions to dismiss the case against former presidential aide Oliver L. North because they reflected a cynical attempt by the Iran-Contra defendant to put himself above the law.

North

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell wrote that North's arguments for dismissing charges he lied to then-Attorney General Edwin Meese III and destroyed National Security Council documents "reveals a skewed attitude toward our form of constitutional government."

North is accused of obstructing a November 1986 presidential inquiry into the Iran-Contra affair by lying to Meese about diverting U.S.-Iran arms-sale profits to Nicaraguan rebels.

North contends he committed no crime because Meese lacked legal authority to question him.

"Ours is a country governed by the rule of law," Gesell said in his opinion released Thursday. "There is nothing in the Constitution, federal statutes or applicable decisions which warrants this cynical approach. To merely state it provides the response. This court must reject it totally."

In a separate development, the Justice Department touched off a confrontation with independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh by objecting to a brief he filed in North's case. It said the brief "mischaracterizes basic constitutional principles," but Walsh issued a statement rejecting the accusation.

Gesell said North, in seeking to have the case against him dismissed, was arguing that "he had the absolute right to lie, to obstruct such inquiries, and to remove or destroy official NSC records because he had not been warned that if he did so he might be indicted."

North "fails to appreciate the gravity of his alleged conduct," the judge said.

"North did in fact have fair warning that mendacity and obstruction, coupled with destruction of official documents, was illegal," the judge wrote.

Defense lawyers argued that North couldn't be prosecuted for giving false answers because he wasn't subpoenaed or placed under oath by Meese and that the attorney general's inquiry was not a "pending proceeding" before a government agency.

"If the allegations in the indictment are factually correct, North breached the high public duty with which he was entrusted" when questioned by Meese on Nov. 23, 1986, the judge said.

"The court will not give judicial approval to the suggestion that he was free in these circumstances to place his personal interests or objections to national policy ahead of the public trust he had accepted," Gesell wrote.

Walsh, the independent counsel, "will need only to prove at trial that the specific questions posed to North by the attorney general were precise and material to this legitimate presidential inquiry" and that North purposely lied, the judge said.

The retired Marine lieutenant colonel is charged with conspiring with former national security adviser John M. Poindexter and arms dealers Albert Hakim and retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord to illegally divert U.S.-Iran arms-sale profits to the Nicaraguan rebels.

Gesell also indicated he would deny similar motions to dismiss charges that North lied to Congress in 1985 and 1986 about his role in covert aid to the Contras.

No date has been set for North's trial, the first of four separate trials ordered by the judge.

Students at Midland High School apparently don't agree with the coin flip last week and painted the doors of their high school accordingly. Although the coin flip eliminated the Bulldogs from the high school football playoffs, the team still claimed a piece of the district championship with a 9-1 record. Midland Lee High School and Odessa Permian High School also share in the championship.

Rochester made money; Thrift lost it, testimony says

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Louis Rochester was a money-making investor who in joint-venture partnerships with the Odessa Savings Association made the thrift $9 million in real-estate developments over a 10-year period, according to testimony in the trial of Rochester, a 70-year-old Odessa millionaire real-estate developer and community leader.

Meanwhile, the OSA thrift lost money — $1.9 million — in its chartered role of taking in savings and making loans on home mortgages, testimony added.

"Mr. Rochester was the motivator. He was over (OSA) joint-venture partnerships," said Ernest Briles, former OSA bookkeeper who now works for Olney Savings & Loan Association, which in mid-October bought out the 40-year-old Odessa-based thrift.

Briles was one of 25 prosecution witnesses, including Federal Bureau of Investigation special agents, former OSA officers and customers, and bank and savings-and-loan regulators who testified in Rochester's bank-fraud trial.

Rochester is charged under a 25-count indictment which, if he is convicted of all charges, could gross a 140-year sentence and $3.548 million in fines.

The indictment alleges mail fraud, wire fraud, misapplication of bank funds, false entries, concealment of facts from the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, and racketeering.

Rochester, who is maintaining a relaxed and friendly composure during the first week of testimony, is to testify in his own defense next week under questioning by his Dallas-based lawyer, David Schick. Assistant United States Attorneys Jim Blankinship and Dan Mills, the federal prosecutors, will cross-examine Rochester.

In maintaining his innocence, Rochester said following the June 30 indictment that he had "not intentionally violated any law or engaged in any wrongful conduct," that he expected to be "exonerated," and that he had "been singled out for prosecution by the government."

Rochester is charged with violating banking regulations by using "insider" information, allegedly gleaned in his role as an OSA director and "advisory director," to make profits in joint ventures with OSA. Further, he is charged with concealing his shares in the thrift and its holding company, Mid-Central Financial Group.

Federal and state regulations prohibit an "affiliated person," such as an officer, director or shareholder, from participating in joint ventures with a savings-and-loan institution if that person owns more than 10 percent of shares in the thrift or more than 25 percent of shares in a holding company unless he gets approval from regulators.

Kimberly Stampey, first vice president for M Bank-Dallas, testified that Rochester's partnerships had borrowed $11 million from M Bank by the early 1980s. Ms. Stampey said that her dealings with Rochester were friendly and that he had provided her with his financial statements.

However, David Baum, who had succeeded A.R. "Happy" Dyer as OSA president in the mid-1970s, earlier testified Rochester did not provide him with similar statements despite his repeated requests.

Baum, 54, said that the OSA board of directors was "very harmonious. We took pride in that all of the decisions were unanimous," he said.

Baum, who lost his OSA job on Oct. 14 when Olney Savings & Loan Association took over the thrift, said that "friction" between him and Rochester developed in 1984 — two years after oil prices and land values began their decline, which adversely affected the thrift.

The "serious downturn" in the economy started in January 1982, he said.

"I believe it has changed for the worse," Baum said.

He noted that Rochester and his son, Paul Rochester, together owned 33 percent of the holding company's stock but that they were not "acting in concert."

In questioning Arthur Leiser, retired director of examination for the Austin-based Texas Savings and Loan Department, prosecutor Blankinship ask Leiser to evaluate practices of a thrift of $100 million in assets and which had "great confidence" in an "affiliated person," apparently such as Rochester, whose stock dramatically increased and who had borrowing "done through another."

"I would say there was an over extension of credit to one entity," Leiser said, and characterized the making of such loans as "unsafe and unsound."

Nevertheless, he said that "Odessa Savings was not considered a problem" thrift as late as two years ago.

Drug abuse panel prescribes remedies

Most recommendations would require legislation

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Granting legal immunity to teachers who report suspected drug and alcohol abuse by students is one of 24 proposals a governor's task force recommended Thursday.

The automatic suspension of drivers' licenses of minors convicted of drug and alcohol-related offenses is another of the recommendations in a 60-page report the task force gave Gov. Bill Clements.

Virtually all of the recommendations would require legislative action to implement.

"If there is an underlying theme or statement which might be found throughout this report, it is that solid programs of prevention provide the best hope to diminish the demand for drugs," the report said.

Appointed by Clements, the 20-member task force was formed in January 1987 to study the problems of drug abuse in the state.

The task force recommends that teachers be required to report suspected drug abuse, be allowed to remain anonymous and be protected from legal reprisals.

The report also proposes more stringent laws against drug offenders, including making it a felony offense to sell drugs near schools.

Another recommendation would require all state college undergraduates and medical students take courses dealing with drug abuse.

Clements said current programs need to be studied so resources can be redirected to pay for the proposals. He also said the state will end the fiscal year with a surplus budget, making available needed funds.

"We must establish drug education and prevention programs that can help reclaim our school grounds for our children and teach them about the dangers of drugs and drug abuse," he said.

One of the proposals would develop a comprehensive drug education plan, with standardized materials and teacher training, for all school districts in the state.

Another would require that school textbooks contain standard sections on drug and alcohol abuse.

The task force proposes that a drug and alcohol abuse policy, including "programs of screening, testing and assistance," be established for all state employees.

It also recommends the development of a standard procedure for all employers to use when testing employees for drug abuse.

Gonzalez to chair House finance panel

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio, looks like a shoo-in to be elected chairman of the House Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee when the Democrats reorganize the House in early January.

House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Fort Worth, and others in the Democratic leadership announced their support for Gonzalez Wednesday — the day after the current chairman, Fernand J. St Germain, was ousted by New Jersey voters — and key members of the banking panel backed Gonzalez Thursday.

The closing of the ranks behind Gonzalez, whose seniority puts him first in line for the post, appeared to end talk of bypassing the sometimes-prickly 72-year-old Texan, an avowed populist with a reputation for being fiercely honest and independent.

Rep. Mary Rose Oakar, D-Ohio, another member of the banking panel who reportedly wanted to promote someone else for the chairman's job, said Thursday: "Henry Gonzalez is my friend. I am supporting him and no one else."

Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., said that while he was "extremely interested" in becoming chairman, he will not oppose Gonzalez, a 27-year House veteran.

In a telephone interview from San Antonio, Gonzalez said he wants the committee chairmanship and sees "no challenge that cannot be overcome."

Only Rep. John LaFalce, D-N.Y., has hinted that he wants the post, saying that he was "looking at the situation." A spokesman for LaFalce said the chairmanship of the banking panel was "likely to be the most important in the 101st Congress."

Despite some suggestions that Gonzalez might not be qualified for the post and that he is erratic and high tempered, members of the panel generally made it clear that they are reluctant to disrupt the seniority system that governs the climb to the top of committees.

The banking panel will confront the growing savings and loan crisis when it returns to work in January.

Gonzalez said he favors asking the Treasury Department for $50 billion to act promptly on a bailout for the S&Ls, which one industry spokesman described as "good news."

Tens of billions of dollars will be needed to close or merge as many as a third of the nation's 3,000 S&Ls, according to government witnesses at recent hearings.

Gonzalez has said he would repay some of the bailout by selling repossessed properties of the bankrupt S&Ls and from insurance premiums paid by the industry.

Fred Webber, newly appointed president of the U.S. League of Savings Institutions, the largest S&L lobby group, has known Gonzalez for 15 years.

Of Gonzalez, Webber said: "He was a hard worker; he (has) paid attention to the business at hand."

One financial issue that dogged Congress in the last session — allowing banks to expand into the securities arena — also will be waiting for the committee early in the new session.

Gonzalez generally has favored caution in bank deregulation. But he also has said he is a realist who recognizes that Congress should approve the deregulation that already has taken place and that has helped to erase the line between banks, savings and loans, and securities firms.

Mary Liz Meany, spokeswoman for the American Bankers Association, said bankers had expected a significant change in Senate dealings with financial institutions because of the resignation of Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis.

Big Spring jury finds man guilty of murder

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — A 28-year-old man was found guilty early today of the brutal April 1987 murder of a Grand Prairie resident.

A six-man, six-woman jury returned the verdict about 12:10 a.m., and was scheduled to begin the punishment phase today in the trial of Frankie Hernandez, according to an employee at the Howard County District Clerk's office. Hernandez could face up to life in prison for the April 3, 1987, killing of 40-year-old Noe Perez.

Perez's burned and decapitated body was found by a hunter north of Stanton, according to Martin County Sheriff's reports.

Jeanne Hernandez Fonseca, who was indicted in the Perez case and testified Thursday, pleaded guilty in July to murdering two Mexican nationals in October 1987. She had been charged with capital murder, but agreed to plead guilty to the lesser charge in exchange for a life sentence.

Miguel Calixto and Narberto Gurrala Hernandez died Oct. 10, 1987, victims of a fire at a residence in Luther, 15 miles of Big Spring, Howard County authorities said.

After the guilty plea, the indictment against Fonseca in the Perez case was dismissed.

Hernandez was represented in the trial by court-appointed attorney Tom Morgan of Midland.

East Texan doesn't have to blow his own horn for repair business

MONTALBA, Texas (AP) — Give George Springer any band instrument and he can play it.

Better yet, he can take it apart, clean it, repair it, make parts and give you back a reconditioned instrument that looks and plays like new.

"I have to play them all," he said. "Otherwise I couldn't test them. In this business you have to be a machinist, metal finisher, lacquer sprayer and musician."

Springer has been in the business of repairing band instruments for 18 years in a workroom behind his home near Montalba. He and his wife, Ruth, had lived in Dallas for many years before being lured away by the panoramic view atop their 230-acre farm just north of Palestine. On clear days the stacks of the Big Brown power plant near Fairfield can be seen more than 30 miles away.

Springer repairs instruments for 33 school districts in East Texas as well as for band members at Stephen F. Austin State University. Every brass, woodwind and percussion instrument used in bands have passed through his workroom, but Springer draws the line by not repairing string and keyboard instruments.

The workroom is filled with large power and mechanical tools, an assortment of specialized hand tools, a bathtub, a blowtorch and screws and parts to fit any instrument. Chemical vats are located outside, and instrument cases fill the center of the room.

The condition of many instruments is amazing, he said, with everything imaginable inside. Students are careless at times with their instruments, providing Springer with many a conversation with disgruntled band directors.

"My wife is a vital part of the business," he said. "She goes through all the cases and gets all the lint, chewing gum, grass and change out of the instruments and cases and repairs the cases."

Humor also finds a way into the workroom in the form of notes from students and directors giving explanations for the condition of instruments.

"I get some real funny notes from some of these students and band directors," he said. A note on a crumpled saxophone read, "Has been dropped from the stands several times. Fix or bury, please."

Springer was a band director himself for 14 years, the last three at Palestine High School from 1968-1971. A heart attack in 1971 took him away from the high school but opened the way for his backyard business of instrument repair.

"The doctor told me not to go back to teaching because of the pressure," he said. "I know how to do this, and this is what the Lord planned for my life. I didn't want to take disability retirement at 47 and I wanted to stay at the farm, so I set up shop here."

Instrument repair was not unfamiliar territory for Springer at the time, for he had owned a repair shop in Dallas for four years before coming to Anderson County. He also received a music degree at Southern Methodist University and a master's degree in music from Emporia State University in Emporia, Kan.

His master's thesis, "Maintenance and Repair of Wind and Percussion Instruments," was published in several countries and used by band directors and professional instrumentalists worldwide.

Judge rules adoptive parents don't have rights to records

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge has ruled that adoptive parents have no constitutional right to view records detailing abuses suffered by their children before adoption.

U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders also ruled Thursday that the Texas Department of Human Services does not have to help pay for psychiatric care needed later by children who had been abused before being adopted.

The rulings were made in connection with a lawsuit filed last May by six sets of adoptive parents from the Dallas area. The suit charges that the state has failed to disclose their adoptive children's histories of abuse. One of the families involved in the suit learned of their 13-year-old adoptive son's previous sexual and physical abuse only after he threatened to kill family members.

Convenience-store owner hard on crime

By MARK ENGLAND

Convenience store owner Ed Traywick of Waco stands by his store and his policy about fighting back against crime. Traywicks' father was killed behind the counter during a late-night robbery. Despite the danger, Traywick says he will keep his store open.

WACO (AP) — Ed Traywick owns a convenience store. There's nothing easy about his job.

He works seven days a week, 12 hours a day — helped out by his wife, Marie, and two sons, Patrick and Michael — at Traywick's Qwik Trip, situated on a sliver of concrete in a north Waco neighborhood infested with crime.

"They talk about a police officer's job being stressful," he said. "At least they've got two days a week off. When you get a store like this, you have to marry it. You have to be with it all the time."

Traywick accepts his store for better or worse — but not people who steal from it.

He said he recently was visited by a 15-year-old boy who pumped $15 worth of gasoline into a car, then jumped in the back seat as the driver fled.

Later, the boy wanted to make restitution. There was just one catch. To get the money owed him, Traywick had to agree to drop criminal charges. Traywick refused.

The boy was charged with theft under $20. The city of Waco stands to gain $151 in fines. Traywick will get nothing. He can live with the arrangement.

"There's still a lot of people who believe stealing is wrong," he said. "I hope I'm not the only one."

Some might think Traywick is hardhearted. He doesn't. He'll agree his heart isn't what it used to be. To understand why he feels like he does about crime and why he works so hard, you have to go back to Sept. 1, 1980.

Even then, Traywick rarely took time off. His father, Edward Anderson Traywick, 65, a retired General Tire employee, relieved him on Friday and Saturday mornings.

The Labor Day weekend of 1980, the older Traywick couldn't work his regular shift. His Texas National Guard unit had a get-together in Dallas. When he returned Sept. 1, he called his son and offered to work the evening shift, joking that he needed the money.

Tired from working nonstop, a grateful younger Traywick accepted his father's offer.

At about 11 p.m., a man entered the store, pointed a gun at the older Traywick, rifled the cash drawer of $100, forced him to lie on the floor and shot him once in the chest. The robber then shot the older Traywick's wife, Lillian, in the right forearm and daughter, Evelyn, in the shoulder.

Traywick died in the store.

Thomas Graves, 19, was convicted of killing Traywick and two other people on the same night, and given three stacked life sentences.

"Since my dad was killed, I kinda feel I need to be here all the time," Traywick said. "If someone is hurt, I'd rather it be me than someone else in my family."

For a time after his father' s death, Traywick got out of the convenience store business. He didn't stay away long, though.

"It's the only thing I know," he said. "Plus my kids are getting ready for college. I wanted to give them that opportunity. I decided to go back into business again. I want to work five years and get out and start enjoying life. Right now, I'm just trying to make it."

From his seat behind the counter, Traywick can see 18th Street as it unfolds in the direction of McLennan Community College. He can tick off the crimes suffered by the stores in view. A shoe store lost $500 worth of shoes; a car care center had its state inspection stickers stolen; a bar has been broken into four times recently; a fire extinguisher company had the battery ripped out of its truck.

Waco police have at least 18 reports detailing thefts and other criminal activity committed at Traywick's store this year.

A sense of helplessness pervades the area, he said.

When thieves are caught, the law plays havoc with Traywick's sense of justice.

He related the story of a 12-year-old boy and his mother who came into the store. The woman asked to use the bathroom, which is in the storage area. A camera caught the boy grabbing a hot Coke. He handed it to his mother, who carried it into the bathroom with her. When Traywick stopped her at the front counter, the nearly empty Coke was in her purse.

Traywick called police. To his dismay, the woman wasn't charged. Her son got a ticket for shoplifting.

The teenager who belatedly tried to pay for gasoline was with three other boys when they drove away without paying. Customers of Traywick chased and caught the boys, who fled on foot after their car lost its drive shaft by scraping a dip at the store's entrance.

Traywick wanted all four boys charged. Only the driver and the boy who pumped the gasoline has been charged with theft under $20.

Officer Don Cannon, who handled the case, said police didn't have grounds to prosecute all four boys.

"It gets to the point where you hear so much and you see so much, you get outraged," Traywick said. "My dad died eight years ago. My mother suffers arthritis in her wounds, and my sister's still carrying a bullet. I just don't want to take it anymore."

"I can understand where he's coming form," Cannon said. "He's an independent owner. That was his money they drove off with. He got more pleasure out of me arresting the two boys than recovering his $15. He's just tired of the stealing. Frankly, I don't know how the ma and pa stores keep going."

STATE IN BRIEF

FmHA begins foreclosure actions on 6,500 farmers

AUSTIN (AP) — The federal government is preparing to initiate foreclosure proceedings against as many as 6,500 Texas farmers who are more than six months behind in their loans, Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower said.

Beginning Monday, the Farmers Home Administration will mail legal notices to more than 83,000 borrowers nationwide who are more than 180 days behind in their loans, Hightower said Thursday.

The notices state, "This is to inform you that you're seriously behind in your loan payments and to inform you of your options."

The Texas Department of Agriculture is notifying thousands of affected Texas farmers and ranchers, Hightower said, advising them to treat the notices with urgency and informing them of new loan options FmHA must provide to producers before foreclosure can proceed.

"To remain eligible for these new loan options, it will be necessary for each borrower to promptly meet deadlines imposed by FmHA," Hightower said, adding, "TDA is committed to helping these producers restructure their FmHA loans and remain on their property while we work to develop more sensible federal farm policies.

"If anyone hasn't figured out why people are so cynical about government, they need only look at how the U.S. Department of Agriculture treats American farmers," Hightower said. "Before the election, USDA makes drought assistance available; before Thanksgiving, USDA starts taking away their farms."

Racing tax revenue up

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Racing Commission chairman said pari-mutuel tax revenue to state and local governments from all forms of horse racing in the United States rose above $600 million in 1987.

That was after revenue fell below that figure in 1986 for the first time since 1974, according to a recent survey by the Association of Racing Commissioners International, said Chairman Hilary Doran Jr. in a Thursday statement.

Governments got $608.35 million from horse racing last year, an increase of 4 percent over the 1986 figure of $587.36 million. In addition, greyhound racing yielded $220.83 million to government.

"Of the nation's 20 largest cities, only Houston, Dallas, San Antonio and Atlanta do not have pari-mutuel racing. This situation will be remedied in Houston, Dallas and San Antonio now that pari-mutuel racing has been legalized in Texas," Doran said. "Great things are expected for Texas."

Job council restructured

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements announced Thursday a re-structuring of the State Job Training Coordinating Council to reflect recently adopted congressional changes in the federal Job Training Partnership Act.

The council plans, coordinates and monitors job training programs and services offered under the federal act. Members include representatives of state and local agencies, business and industry, organized labor and the general public.

Clements re-appointed Gordon Bonfield of Houston as chairman of the panel. Bonfield is senior vice president of Tenneco Inc.

Appointed to the council were Rice Tilly of Fort Worth, Bob Dyer of Longview, Eduardo Aguirre of Houston, Steve Hill of Dallas, Tito Torres of McAllen, Claire Johnson of Abilene, Jim Kaster of Austin, Rob Mosbacher of Houston, Cip Guerra of San Antonio and Glenn Parkey of Amarillo.

Also appointed were Ridge Case of Harlingen, Linda Strong of Corpus Christi, Bill Kirby of Austin, Charles Haddock of Dallas, Cruz Hernandez of Fort Worth, Charles Reynolds of Beeville, Judy Stubbs of Dallas, Pat Perry of El Paso, Fritz Landers of Mason City, Richard Hammond of Houston, Barbara Benavides of San Antonio and Margie Bingham of Houston.

Warning on solicitors issued

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox is warning Texans to beware and make inquiries about solicitors claiming to be taking donations for non-profit law enforcement organizations.

There currently are people in Austin soliciting money for a bogus law enforcement benefit fund, Mattox said in a Thursday statement. Tarrant County residents in another case gave a fictitious organization more than $30,000, he said.

"The only persons benefiting are the solicitors. The closer we get to the holiday season, the more generous we begin to feel, and the con artists sense that," he said.

Mattox suggested that people who are suspicious of a solicitation contact the Attorney General's Charitable Trust Division to find out if the solicitor has filed the proper documents.

"There are several legitimate and reputable law enforcement benefit funds that deserve citizens' contributions," Mattox said. "The legitimate police organizations are being hurt by the operators of bogus organizations."

Stormie Jones improves

PITTSBURGH (AP) — An 11-year-old girl who underwent the world's first heart-liver transplant in 1984 remained in fair condition early today at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh.

Stormie Jones of White Settlement, Texas, is recovering from surgery performed Tuesday to clear a blocked bile duct. Her condition was upgraded to fair Thursday.

Stormie was born with a disorder that causes blood cholesterol levels to soar past the danger point. Doctors near her home sent her to Pittsburgh Oct. 16 when she began showing signs of liver complications.

MHMR report filed in court

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas hospitals for the mentally ill are going forward with required changes, but problems still exist in some areas, according to a report filed Thursday in Dallas federal court.

"There are a number of steps that they have been dealing with and they are making some progress," said David Pharis, who is monitoring state compliance with the settlement of a lawsuit aimed at improving conditions in state mental hospitals.

"There are still problems in the area of hiring qualified psychiatrists and still difficulties providing individualized non-medical psychiatric treatment in the hospitals," Pharis said.

The report was the twelfth to U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders by the lawsuit review panel. The panel in September was replaced by the monitor's office.

"We think we're making a great deal of progress," said Kent Johnson, legal services director for the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

The department works to recruit psychiatrists within salaries and conditions available, Johnson said. He said the agency also is working with the monitor and experts to improve and expand "psychosocial services."

It could take at least another two years to accomplish several items in stipulated recommendations for compliance filed last year with the court, the report says.

Judge rules for gay group

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge awarded almost $250,000 in legal fees to a gay student organization engaged in a decade-long battle with officials of Texas A&M University.

U.S. District Judge Sim Lake released an order Thursday awarding the fees to four attorneys who represented Gay Student Services, which went to federal court to become recognized as a legitimate campus organization at the state university.

J. Patrick Wiseman of Austin was awarded $172,678; Austin attorney Larry Sauer received $64,678; Eric Nelson of Houston was awarded $7,948; and Bobby J. Nelson of Austin was awarded $3,795.

The legal battle began in 1977 after the then-newly formed group was refused permission to hold meetings or to advertise on campus grounds.

The U.S. Supreme Court in 1985 let stand a lower court ruling that Texas A&M violated the constitutional rights of group members when it banned the group from campus.

Some Houston schools still lack books for students

HOUSTON (AP) — A month after Houston school district officials hastily redistributed books to fill shortages, teachers are taking stopgap measures to conduct classes because some students still don't have texts.

Some teachers are photocopying pages from books and distributing them to students and others are using outdated books as replacements, the Houston Chronicle reported today.

"I don't know what the holdup is; we have called every day," said Jim Prewett, principal at Waltrip Middle School, where a class of 25 physical science students has gone without textbooks since school started Sept. 1.

In addition to Waltrip, principals at three HISD elementary schools Thursday reported continued textbook shortages, although officials at other schools contacted randomly said they had all the books they needed.

HISD spokeswoman Trudy Herolz said the textbook shortage has persisted because the district has not finished an internal audit to pinpoint which schools need which books. The audit is expected to be complete today, she said.

Ms. Raymond ordered principals to stay on their campuses the weekend of Oct. 15 until orders for missing books were completed or until work crews had picked up excess books.

About 200,000 books were picked up from schools with surpluses and taken to the central warehouse. By the middle of the next week, more than 20,000 had been sent to schools with shortages.

The district then ordered additional books.

"We expect that all students will have books soon, but we can't say when," Ms. Herolz said. "But a lot of that will depend on what the report says."

Leiser said a dramatic increase in stock ownership by one person would suggest that "that person could exercise influence upon the management and the board of the institution."

Leiser said that he would not have approved a joint venture between a thrift and a stockholder, such as Rochester, though the venture was legal and had been approved by Leiser's boss, the commissioner of the Texas Savings and Loan Department.

"I wouldn't approve of his doing that (joint venture) unless he resigned (his directorship) and sold his stock," Leiser said. "He (Rochester) has a conflict of interest."

FAMILY MATTERS

Adult children of alcoholics find help in support groups

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR FAMILY: I've learned a lot about my son-in-law from reading your columns on adult children of alcoholics. I've tried to be more sympathetic to his unfeeling ways. But it is very hard to watch him being so very strict on his sons. They are just little boys and he talks to them like they were adults. It just breaks my heart to see them cry when he gets on them. I want to do something to help them, but I don't dare interfere. He has made it very clear that they are his children.

My daughter and I have talked and talked about how to do something about (Man's name). We've just not been able to come up with anything short of just taking up for the boys the next time he starts in on them. We're both afraid to try this because he can become very angry.

I have made him sound awful, but he is a good man. He doesn't drink like his father, but he's still too hard on his sons. I think I know why he is the way he is, but that doesn't help right now. What can we do to protect the children and not make him mad? CONCERNED

DEAR CONCERNED: In this kind of situation, nothing happens quickly. I agree the children are in danger of not experiencing their father's love and care. But a person can't usually give what he hasn't experienced.

I encourage both you and your daughter to attend Adult Children of Alcoholics meetings. Understanding the disease of alcoholism and how it affects children in alcoholic homes is vital. Call 682-4721 to get the details of times and places of meetings. These meetings are anonymous and confidential.

Changing the way your son-in-law experiences parenthood is a slow, difficult process. He must overcome years and years of behaviors learned in a alcoholic home. Issues and situations that seem simple to others can seem critical or rejecting or shameful to an adult child.

After you start attending meetings, contact me again and I can suggest some reading materials. This important healing process will affect your family for generations. Some families have been suffering from the effects of alcoholism generations and don't even know it. God bless.

DEAR FAMILY: I know you wrote something about what to say to someone who has cancer. I cut it out and sent it to my sister and now a close friend here has just found out that she has breast cancer. Can you please repeat what you wrote? SPEECHLESS

DEAR SPEECHLESS: Each person who has to face cancer must deal with it in his or her own way. Some may wish to talk about it, others may not. As loving friends, we must ask "What are you feeling?" as well as "How are you feeling?"

Listen carefully to the responses — listen with your heart, not just your ears. Be nurturing in your responses and actions. Remember it's not usually very helpful to try to cheer someone up, especially by telling them to "count their blessings."

We all are dying, but cancer patients are more aware of that fact. They face a difficult physical and emotional battle. We need to support their efforts to learn how to live.

DEAR ABBY

Korean War vets to get memorial

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Today, on Nov. 11, America will honor her veterans. I would like to ask your readers to consider a special group of men and women who fought a war that has become "the forgotten war."

Thirty-eight years ago, on June 25, 1950, the North Koreans crossed the 38th parallel of Korea and invaded South Korea. It was called a "police action" and the United Nations responded by sending troops to Korea. Besides the South Koreans, the majority of fighting men were Americans.

When a truce was finally called that ended in a stalemate on July 27, 1953, 5.5 million men and women had fought directly or indirectly in this "conflict." Of these 5.5 million, 103,000 were wounded, 54,263 were killed and 8,177 were classified as missing in action or prisoners of war.

There has been much publicity about the Vietnam Memorial, but the military personnel who fought to secure the freedom of South Korea have only the TV series "MASH" to remind people that we were there.

I lost my beloved husband of eight months when he was shot down over North Korea on his first combat mission. His remains have never been returned to me. Who will remember those who gave their lives in the Korean War?

Who will remember:

1. That when they returned, there were no welcoming parades — only apathy?
2. That in 1953 they had to live with their own silent hell of wartime memories, as "post-traumatic stress disorder" was unknown then?

Children eat anything, if they can pick it up

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

For the last eight working days, my secretary has brought the same lunch, pasta salad. This is not one of those new trendy diets, nor is she crazy for pasta salad. She is a mother who is paying the price for daring to serve her family something "different." She either dumps the excess in herself or the disposer.

I don't want to be dramatic, but I was responsible for getting my children shots against diphtheria, polio, tetanus, whooping cough, measles and mumps. I made their fevers subside, cured their upset stomachs and rushed them to the hospital to mend broken bones. Yet, I put a casserole in front of them that they've never seen before and they turn on me like a stranger offering them a candy bar to get in the car.

"What is this stuff?"

"It's called 'Seafood Fiesta,'" I said, "and you'll love it."

"Are you sure?"

"Trust me."

Minutes later, their tongues will ease out of their mouths and touch the contents ever so slightly. Then they will spit, gag, grab their throats, drink an extra pitcher of water and stage the biggest dying scene since Ali MacGraw in "Love Story."

Every child is born wanting his own food taster. And parents comply. A baby who can't even focus will refuse to open his mouth until you are smiling reassuringly with strained lamb on your teeth. Even then, he might taste it and then blow it back in your face.

Generally, children do not like anything you have to eat with a fork or a spoon. If it doesn't squirt, spray or squish to the touch, stain the tablecloth or excite the dog when dropped on the floor, it is boring.

Children do not like white food. When it is served, they tend to make comments about it like, "This looks like the time Ronnie Stonslag had a cold." It is wise to stop them.

Children refuse to eat cereal that offers free African violets or pantyhose with each label. They're "into" plastic toys. They never eat anything cheap or in season. They may bring school lunches home where the seal has never been broken. In a restaurant, however, they can eat twice their body weight and still want dessert.

A mother will dish out more than a thousand meals a year. If it isn't hamburger, hot dogs or pizza, it will be eaten only if there is a threat that it will eat them first.

My kids never liked pasta salad either until they found you could dangle it from your nose — like french fries.

Former Cornell president vetoed football trip

Copley News Service

When football was in its infancy, a Cornell University president vetoed a proposed trip by his team to Michigan for a game, remarking, "I will not permit 30 men to travel 400 miles merely to agitate a bag of wind."

Experts: Alcoholics' children face life-long problems

Copley News Service

Children of alcoholic parents — even if they never take a drink — can suffer ravages of their parent's alcoholism that can last a lifetime, alcoholism experts say.

The children can suffer debilitating emotional trauma whose dimensions many drug-treatment professionals are only now coming to appreciate, two experts told an audience at the second National Conference on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism.

"Alcoholism creates danger in the very environment that is supposed to create safety, the home," said Cathleen Brooks, president of the National Association of Children of Alcoholics. "They are isolated and alone from the general understanding of what childhood is."

The results include a low sense of self-esteem, an inability to trust others and a confusion over values, said Dr. Timmen Cermak, a San Francisco psychiatrist and authority on children who live with alcoholic parents.

Drug- and alcohol-abuse counselors who treat addicts usually are not trained to understand and cope with emotional problems harbored by offspring of alcoholics, including feelings of anger and insecurity, Cermak said.

And too often, detoxification programs treat the effect of an adult's alcoholism on children as a side issue, rather than a major health problem to be addressed, Brooks said.

In fact, it is through a proliferation in the past several years of peer-group sessions established by children of alcoholics that many come to terms with the legacy of a parent's alcoholism, she said.

Such peer groups include Alanon, Alateen and Adult Children of Alcoholics.

In a child's formative years, he should be learning self-esteem, trust and a sense of stability, Cermak said. But in the alcoholic's home, in fact, he is left confused and self-doubting by abusive, contradictory actions of parents.

For example, a drunk parent might verbally abuse a child, then later feel no remorse because he does not remember the incident. Yet, sober he may express love for the child, Cermak said.

Children also tend to take responsibility and feel blame for the parent's action and try to please the parent to receive love, he said.

"The sacrifice of yourself to please other people is what you learn in an alcoholic home," Cermak said.

The child also has a low sense of self-esteem, in part because the alcoholism that he blames himself for continues.

"You think, 'If you're nice enough one day or pretty enough, they will give you what you need,' and the problem is it never happens," said Brooks, who describes herself as a sixth-generation child of an alcoholic.

Several years ago she founded a group called Next Step that endeavors to advise children of alcoholics about treatment alternatives.

Children with alcoholic parents statistically run about a five times greater chance than the rest of the population of becoming alcoholics.

College students' lives full of stress

Copley News Service

Life isn't one big bowl of cherries for college freshmen. In fact, the book "The College Student's Health Guide," says first-time college kids encounter many stresses that others never will experience.

One is the separation for the first time from home and family. Another may be having a serious conflict with a roommate, or not getting a good grade on an important examination, or living in a crowded dormitory.

That's why co-author Sandra Smith says it's important for college kids to stay away from junk foods, to get plenty of exercise, and to find someone they can confide in.

Will cargo plan open door to drug smugglers?

EL PASO (AP) — U.S. Customs officials believe they have a plan that will shorten the time it takes to truck Mexican cargo into the United States.

The head of the Customs inspectors' union thinks the plan is "an open invitation to smuggling."

Under a 90-day pilot program, security guards at Packard Electric Co. in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, will check the cargo of trucks headed for El Paso, certify the trailers drug-free and seal the trailers' locks with metal bands.

If the seals haven't been tampered with, the trucks will be waved through Customs without being inspected, though they are subject to spot checks, said Mike Mack, Customs district director.

The objective is to speed up the flow of trucks across the Rio Grande between Juarez and El Paso, the busiest port of entry along the U.S.-Mexican border, Mack said Thursday.

Mack and other U.S. and Mexican customs officials expressed confidence Thursday that drugs won't be "piggybacked" aboard the otherwise-legitimate shipments of automobile wire harnesses.

But Charles Giunta, head of the El Paso chapter of the National Treasury Employees Union, said the sealed trucks would be the obvious place to hide drugs.

"This is about the most ludicrous plan I've seen," Giunta said. "This is an open invitation to smuggling. We might as well say, 'Let's open the borders and let people police themselves and call us when they plan to smuggle something.' "

That might not be much of an exaggeration.

"If during the security screening process, if (Packard employees) should find drugs aboard the shipments, they will notify Mexican Aduana (Customs) and they have a number to call U.S. Customs," said William Nowak, U.S. Customs assistant director in charge of the inspection and control division.

Packard Electric spokesman Richard Hamilton said he does not know how much the company's security personnel are paid.

Textbooks under consideration by the State Board of Education line the wall during a meeting of the board in Austin Thursday. Educators are trying to select books for use in Texas' public schools.

Board to consider adoption of textbooks

AUSTIN (AP) — State Board of Education members will consider final adoption of $128 million in textbooks and an early retirement proposal for teachers before the board, itself, retires.

The 15-member board will meet for the last time Saturday in its present form.

The board, appointed four years ago to lead the state's public school system during landmark education reforms, will be succeeded by an elected board. Four of the 15 appointed members won election this week and will return to the new board in January.

As part of its final work, the current board Thursday tentatively adopted the school textbooks despite criticism that the books were "trash" and contained enough factual errors to fill a 50-foot-long list.

The board adopted the books during a workshop session after making minor changes and directing Texas Education Agency staff to make sure mistakes mentioned during a public hearing were corrected.

Also Thursday, the board recommended state lawmakers enact legislation to allow public school teachers and employees to retire earlier. Both actions will be considered for final approval when the board meets tomorrow.

Although several people criticized the books, Michael Hudson, Texas director of People for the American Way, praised the proposed texts in geography, literature, sociology, psychology and science.

"The trend is clear. These selections are objectionable because they are inconsistent with the critics' personal belief systems," Hudson said.

But others testified the books presented a dismal view of life and could hurt impressionable young people.

Eleanor Hutcheson, textbook chairwoman for the Daughters of the American Revolution, said the high school literature books were filled with "stories that give no hope." She said "nearly every form of trash" was being forced on the students.

In written testimony, opponents of the books criticized inclusion of works by Edgar Allan Poe, John Steinbeck and William Shakespeare.

Norma Gabler, a longtime crusader to change textbooks, referred to a 50-foot long computer printout that had been unrolled across the floor of the meeting room. She said the printout listed mistakes in the books. The board directed the staff to analyze whether corrections had been made.

Members of a textbook advisory committee, however, praised the books.

Committee member Katherine Lewis, a teacher, said the books offered different levels of literature. "For the first time in the last 10 years, I can go to a literature book and chose selections for my honor students."

In other action, the board agreed to a proposal that would lower from 95 to 85 the combination of age and years of service required to earn full retirement benefits.

In 1987, lawmakers approved a similar lowering of the retirement qualifications for other state employees.

If put into law, teachers and public school employees would have to pay about a fifth of 1 percent more in contributions to the Teacher Retirement System. The change would not cost the state any additional funds, according to Lynn Moak, deputy commissioner of the Education Agency.

Some board members questioned whether the lowered provision would prompt an increase in retirements. Education Commissioner William N. Kirby said he believed most teachers qualifying under the lower number would continue to teach to earn their full salary, rather than retire at a full pension of 60 percent of their salary.

Man who once faced death sentence may soon be free

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A defense lawyer says a man who once faced execution for murdering his ex-wife may soon be freed from prison if he is credited with the 11⅓ years he already served while his case, including a retrial, was in court.

James Buffington, 44, had been on Death Row following his conviction in 1979 on a charge accusing him of hiring two men to kill his ex-wife in 1976 so he could collect $388,000 in insurance benefits. The capital murder conviction was overturned because of a procedural error during his first trial.

A jury deliberated 12½ hours over two days before returning a guilty verdict Thursday on the lesser charge of murder.

Jurors will return to court Monday to hear testimony in the punishment phase of Buffington's trial.

Prosecutors Julian Lopez and Sam Ponder refused to comment on the conviction, but defense lawyers said they were disappointed that he was convicted of any charge.

"I'm disappointed," defense attorney John Hrncir said. "We're relieved about the capital aspect, but we really hoped for a not guilty."

Buffington's sons and daughters-in-law and several family friends attended the trial. The sons were 10, 11 and 13 at the time of the slaying of their mother, Chere, 29.

Buffington can be credited with 11⅓ years in prison, a prosecutor said. Depending on how much time the jury assesses and whether he is given credit for the years he already served, he could be sent to the Texas Department of Corrections and literally walk back out a free a man.

The decision to credit time served is up to the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles.

Public East Texas hunting grounds no longer happy

Associated Press

Shrinking public lands and a growing affinity for high-powered weapons have given some East Texas hunting grounds the image of battlegrounds where law enforcement officers are outmanned, outnumbered and outgunned, officials say.

"I wouldn't go out there myself nor take my family," said Carl Gidlund, a U.S. Forest Service public information officer. "It's turning into an arsenal out there."

The annual invasion of deer hunters began with the opening of the firearms season last weekend.

"It's scary as hell," Billy Ball, special agent for the U.S. Forest Service, said Thursday. "These guys are carrying cannons and we're regulated by policy with six-shooting pop pistols.

"You've got six shots. And some of them have got bandoleers," shoulder belts with ammunition pockets.

Officials say limited public hunting lands and rising prices for deer leases have increased pressure in the state's four national forests — Sabine, Davy Crockett, Angelina and Sam Houston — all in East Texas.

"This is only my second deer season but people who have been here longer say they've never seen it this bad," added Rich Glodowski, district law officer for the Sam Houston National Forest in New Waverly. "It's way off in left field. You wouldn't believe the people who come out here with families. I'm very concerned."

Last year, Texas for the first time moved past Pennsylvania to become the nation's leader in the number of hunting licenses issued. The firearms season continues through Jan. 2.

For Forest Service officials, the first weekend included death threats against officers, fights between hunters arguing over a deer, the wounding of a 14-year-boy by a hunter firing at a wounded deer, discovery of an unconscious hunter who fell 30 feet from an illegal deer blind, investigation of illegal blockades set up by some hunters to keep other hunters off public land, and alcohol and drug use.

"What's changed on the forest is that we're seeing a lot of military weapons," Ball said. "We seeing people moving away from the traditional weapons to a military look, dress, weapons. We call it 'the Rambo syndrome.' They get their faces painted up and they're wild looking."

Thursday, officials were investigating incidents of nails spread over some federal forest roads.

"We presume it's people trying to keep other people out of their 'exclusive' hunting areas," Gidlund said. "One witness said he picked up 20 pounds of nails."

Wednesday night, three hunters told authorities they were ordered — at gunpoint — from national forest land by other hunters.

"It's locals who say 'My daddy and my granddaddy hunted here and you city slickers aren't hunting here,' " according to Ball. "And we have to referee these things.

"I'm not classifying all hunters like this. But you got a crowd of people getting together with adrenalin pumping and some alcohol and drug use. And you're going to have trouble."

Officials say the Sam Houston National Forest, north of Houston, has the most hunting pressure, followed by the Davy Crockett.

Glodowski, who patrols the Sam Houston, says he wears body armor to protect himself.

"But with the firepower out there, there's no way it's going to stop it," he said. "I'm not sure what the answer is."

Although no one has statistics on the number of hunters in the forests, the Forest Service has set aside some camping areas for hunters only. All those areas are filled, Gidlund said.

Jerry McCrae, with the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department regional office in Rusk, said his area's main problem is illegal use of dogs to flush out deer.

"I do have some problems, but the magnitude of my problems is not like those in the national forests," he said.

McCrae said because private land owners won't tolerate "Rambo types," they wind up on public land.

Store plucks Chicago residents back in time

AP Laserphoto

Al Gordon gets a firm hold on a live rooster at his store, "John's Live Poultry and Egg Market" in Chicago. The store has been operating for 27 years and sells fresh poultry and eggs.

By WILLIAM C. HIDLAY

CHICAGO (AP) — The shop sounds like a barnyard. Roosters crow, chickens cluck and squawk, pigeons coo and rabbits thump and jostle in their cages.

Step inside, back to a time when there were no giant supermarket chains or frozen-food sections, and mom-and-pop grocery stores kept crates of live chickens out back.

At the small store, tucked away in a Polish and Italian neighborhood, customers who order a fryer, broiler or roaster take home chicken so fresh it was squawking 15 minutes earlier.

The butcher, who wields his knife with a surgeon's pride, also sells fresh rabbit, quail, pigeon, duck, geese and the bantam roosters favored in some Italian kitchens for stews and sauces.

"I've been here for 27 years and the store's been here since the Second World War," says the proprietor, Al Gordon, 51, although the sign out front reads, "John's Live Poultry and Egg Market."

"Everyone calls me John," Gordon says. "The store was originally John's and I left everything the way it was, and so I got a nickname along with it."

Once as common a sight in Chicago as elevated trains, live poultry shops are disappearing here and around the country.

"When this one opened, I'd say there were 14 or 15 other live-poultry stores like it within a five-mile radius," Gordon says.

"When I was a kid growing up there used to be one of these every mile. And all of the mom-and-pop grocery stores used to have crates of chickens in the back and butchered chickens to sell."

Nowadays, stores like John's are found mostly in the major cities, New York, Chicago or Los Angeles, says Bill Roenigk, an economist with the National Broiler Council, a Washington-based lobbying group for the poultry industry. "I would say they're hanging on in certain ethnic communities," he says.

Restrictive zoning and health codes — John's market is exempt from the strictest new rules under a grandfather clause — have made it too costly to open a live poultry store, Gordon says.

But he contends fresh poultry raised on natural grains tastes different, and much better, than commercially produced birds.

With Americans becoming more concerned about a healthy diet, U.S. poultry consumption has jumped from the 1970 average of 48 pounds per person to 87 pounds last year, Roenigk says.

"But while people want it fresh, they also want it convenient," he says. "Going and buying a live chicken is not convenient."

Once in the neighborhood, it isn't all that inconvenient to make a 15-minute stop at John's.

That's all it took when Hector and Juanita Rodriguez, Puerto Rico natives and Chicagoans for 35 years, stopped in recently for a fryer and a capon, a male chicken neutered to produce a fatter bird.

"Fresh poultry tastes better," says Mrs. Rodriguez, 62. "The Spanish-speaking people like to make rice chicken and prefer live chicken."

Dorothy "Bubbles" Luckezwski, who runs the counter and cash register, reached into a cage and grabbed a chicken by the wings, flopping the squawking bird atop a meat scale.

"That'll be $5.99," she says, taking the $1-a-pound fryer back to the butchering room.

The procedure is swift. The chicken is plucked by a machine and within 15 minutes the Rodriguez family is on its way home.

Customers browsing at John's find a wall of cages stacked three high and running the length of the shop.

Clucking white chickens fill the first few stacks. Then there's a cage holding a dozen tiny brown-and-white quail, scurrying beneath a carved wooden sign: "2 for $5."

Next come snowy pigeons and rabbits — black, white or rust-colored Flemish giants — and the raucous ranks of bantam roosters, a half-dozen clamoring black-and-gray birds who apparently always think it's sunup.

Gordon has run the store since 1961, when fate put him behind the counter on the city's Northwest Side, amid neighborhoods of Italians, Poles, Greeks and other ethnic groups.

His father, who had run a liquor store and a tavern, bought the butcher shop when the original John put it up for sale.

Gordon, then 25, was launching his career as a sales representative for the American Tobacco Co. But two months later, in November 1961, the elder Gordon died and his son inherited the store — and the nickname.

"In two months working parttime, I knew nothing about this business," Gordon recalls. "I was out front working the counter mostly. I'd only butchered a couple of chickens.

"Then here it was in November and Thanksgiving comes up. Everyone wanted live turkey and I didn't know the first thing about it. Plus the geese. Plus the ducks. Plus the chicken. It was a nightmare."

In the four days before Thanksgiving that first year, Gordon says he and three assistants worked 20 hours a day and butchered about 800 fresh turkeys.

Time has sharpened his skills, though he says he still works up to 50 hours a week and at least 15 hours a day around Thanksgiving and Christmas.

On average, Gordon sells 400 to 500 chickens, 40 to 50 rabbits and 15 to 20 ducks a week.

Ninety percent of the poultry is raised by Amish farmers in Indiana, Gordon says.

"They don't use any chemicals. There's no preservatives in them," he says. "All of your store-bought poultry are dipped in a preservative to give them a longer shelf-life."

Forecast for 1988 corn harvest revised upward, down from 1987

WASHINGTON (AP) — This year's drought-reduced corn harvest is expected to total 4.67 billion bushels, 3 percent above last month's forecast but down 34 percent from the actual 1987 harvest, according to the Agriculture Department.

It represented the smallest harvest since 1983, when similar searing heat and lack of rain shriveled output to 4.17 billion bushels. The record was 8.88 billion bushels in 1985.

The assessment Wednesday by USDA's Agricultural Statistics Board, based on Nov. 1 estimates, came as farmers were trying to get the last of this year's corn harvest out of the fields.

By the start of the month, farmers had harvested an estimated 83 percent of this fall's corn acreage, 7 percent behind last year but still 16 percent ahead of the 1983-87 average, the report said.

The report reflected the summer drought in forecasting an average corn yield per acre of 83.2 bushels, down 37.1 bushels from last year but 2.1 bushels above the level contained in last month's forecast.

Farmers cut back this year to a little over 56.7 million acres for corn from 59.1 million in 1987. One reason was government programs designed to take acreage out of production and thus prevent surpluses that drive down crop prices.

The Agriculture Department is forecasting an adequate supply of corn next year despite the drought, largely because of an abundant existing stockpile.

USDA economists say the drought is likely to add 1 percent to the consumer price index for food this year and 2 percent next year as the impact of the reduced crop is passed through to the market.

The report said the "all crops" index of production as of Nov. 1 averaged 87 percent of the base year of 1977, down dramatically from 108 percent at the same time last year and the lowest level in 10 years.

The record high for the index was 117 percent in 1981, 1982 and 1985. It dropped to 88 percent in 1983, when drought and government acreage cutbacks lowered production. It rose to 111 the following year.

The report forecast soybean production at 1.51 billion bushels, up 1 percent from last month's forecast but 21 percent below last year's harvest of 1.92 billion bushels. The record was 2.26 billion bushels in 1979.

The cotton harvest was estimated at 14.8 million bales, 1 percent above both the 1987 crop and the Oct. 1 forecast. The record was 18.95 million bales in 1937.

With the harvest of 1988 crops winding down, no new production figures were included for many earlier commodities, such as wheat, oats and barley.

Other crops in the November production report included:

— Sorghum, 546.3 million bushels and 60.6 bushels per acre compared to 740.8 million and 69.9 bushels per acre last year.

— Rice, 158.4 million hundredweight and 5,547 pounds per acre compared to 127.7 million and 5,482 pounds last year.

— Peanuts, 4.12 billion pounds and 2,507 pounds per acre compared to 3.62 billion pounds and 2,341 pounds per acre last year.

— Tobacco, 1.33 billion pounds and 2,114 pounds per acre compared to 1.19 billion pounds and 2,028 pounds per acre last year.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet corn imports are expected to increase by 3 million tons this year because of limited supplies of feed wheat on the world market and high barley prices, the Agriculture Department says.

The department said Wednesday the United States again is expected to be a major supplier followed by Argentina and China.

Overall, Soviet net grain imports should be up 2 million tons, the department said. That estimate reflected not only an increase in purchases of coarse grains but a drop in expected Soviet wheat imports.

A reduced coarse grain crop in 1988 and fairly attractive world prices have resulted in heavy Soviet corn purchases in the current marketing year.

The department said coarse grain purchases to date total around 8 million tons with the bulk of the sales calling for delivery before the end of December.

In part because the Soviets are pushing hard to increase livestock production, the department has increased its estimate of Soviet coarse grain imports in the marketing year that started in July to 17 million tons. The estimate for wheat imports was set at 13 million tons.

Agency: Program needs to be tightened

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Crop Insurance Corp. has made progress in safeguarding itself against a recurrence of huge overpayments but needs to make an even greater effort, according to a congressional watchdog agency.

The government-owned corporation must tighten its procedures considerably or risk further losses, according to a report from the General Accounting Office, an investigative arm of Congress.

The Federal Crop Insurance Corp. is owned by the Agriculture Department and supported by the taxpayers.

It acts as a partner with private companies in insuring farmers against crop losses from such natural disasters as drought, flood, hail and insects.

The program is designed to take the place of costly disaster aid legislation that often is hurried through in election years.

Last year, the General Accounting Office made a study of how crop losses were settled by adjustors from the private companies. The GAO concluded there was a problem.

It found that 95 percent of the 134 claims that it examined were adjusted incorrectly by adjustors for the private companies. It said these errors resulted in overpayments of nearly $3 million.

And the GAO's small sampling only scratched the surface.

Since 1980, the Federal Crop Insurance Corp. has paid losses of almost $2 billion on policies written and adjusted by these private companies, which are known in insurance industry terminology as "reinsured companies."

Last year, the GAO made a number of recommendations on how the Federal Crop Insurance Corp. could improve its performance.

The GAO's major recommendation last year was that the corporation increase its review and control over the loss adjustment activities of reinsured companies.

This year, the GAO went back to see how the corporation has done. The new report was prepared at the request of Reps. Ed Jones, D-Tenn., and Glenn English, D-Okla.

"Although FCIC has taken actions to improve the oversight of the loss adjustment activities of reinsured companies, more needs to be done," the report said.

It recalled that the corporation last year had "stated that it was well on its way to establishing such a program and that, since late 1986, it had been performing systematic reviews of reinsured companies operations.

The GAO said it examined the federal reviews of adjustments carried out by 27 private insurance companies for reported losses in crop year 1986. It was clear that there were problems, the report said.

The scope of the reviews was mainly very narrow. In one case, the report said, an insurance company was doing business in 1,487 counties around the country. But the corporation reviewed only its loss adjustment activities in three counties, the report said.

Soil moisture best insurance for plants

Kiker

Evergreen plants frequently suffer from lack of moisture during winter dry periods that occur in Texas. Also adequate soil moisture provides the best protection you can give your plants against winter cold injury.

Other November garden hints:

■ Don't get in a hurry to prune woody plants. Late December through February is usually the best time to prune them.

■ Reduce or stop completely the fertilization of indoor plants from late October to mid-March. An exception would be plants in a atrium or a well lighted window.

■ Drain powder sprayers to prevent freeze damage to pump and nozzle.

■ November through February is a good time to plant trees and shrubs.

■ Clean, repair and oil garden tools and equipment. A coat of linseed oil on wooden handles will help preserve the wood.

■ Drain the gasoline from power tools and run the engine until fuel in the carburetor is used.

■ Drain and store garden hoses and watering equipment in a readily accessible location. The lawn and plants may need watering during a prolonged dry spell.

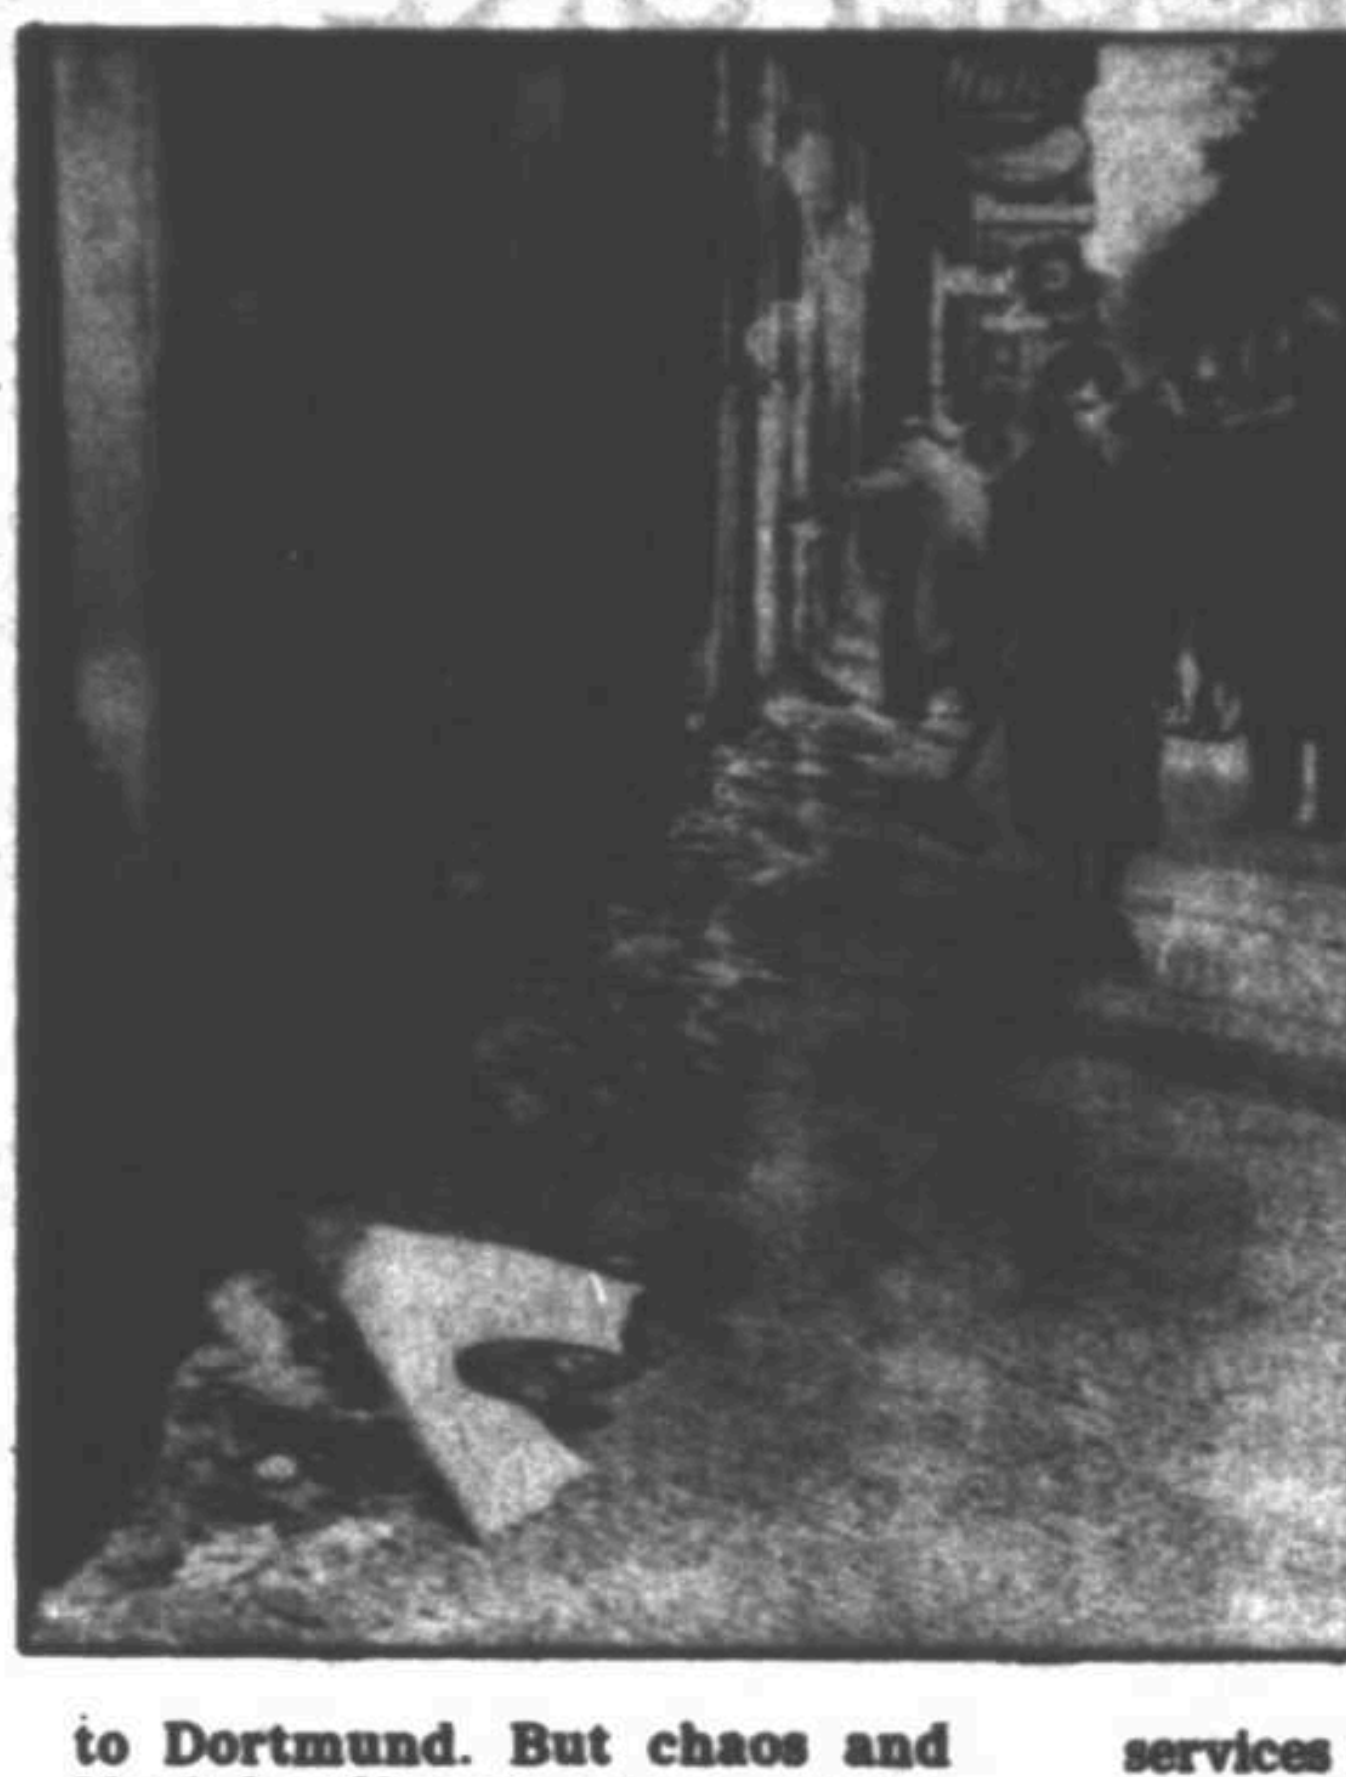
Kristallnacht's flames fire hearts of U.S. congregation

By JERRY SCHWARTZ



A Berlin shopkeeper surveys the damage done to his store after Nazi thugs went on a rampage against Jews on the night of Nov. 9, 1938. Boastfully dubbed "Crystal Night" by the Nazis because of the sparkling shards of glass from smashed windows, it was also the dawn of the Holocaust.

AP Laserphoto

NEW YORK (AP) — The flames that consumed synagogues across the Third Reich 50 years ago still burn within hearts at Congregation Habonim, where survivors of the Nazi assault on the Jews rebuilt their lives and their faith.

An altar is built of stones from synagogues demolished the night of Nov. 9-10, 1938 — Kristallnacht, or the Night of Broken Glass. A charred Torah scroll hangs on the wall, its Hebrew characters twisted as if in agony.

The congregation is a monument as well. Rabbi Bernhard N. Cohn, who escaped Germany as a teen-ager in 1937, estimates that more than 65 percent of the synagogue's members are survivors of the Nazi era.

The synagogue was founded on the Upper West Side of Manhattan on Nov. 9, 1939, precisely a year after Kristallnacht. Its name, Hebrew for "the builders," was a defiant answer to those who had destroyed the synagogues, the shops, the homes and the comfortable lives of German Jewry.

"Still, after 50 years, one cannot believe that any civilized nation could do what was done," Lotte Marshall, Habonim's executive director, said in an interview.

She remembers seeing the synagogue of Mannheim aflame. She recalls streets littered with glass, days spent hiding in her family's home, the subsequent arrest of her brother and his transport to the Dachau concentration camp.

Mrs. Marshall gained her brother's release with forged papers. She herself spent time in a concentration camp in France before fleeing to America.

Lotte Kahn, 76, also remembers.

She and her husband were awakened by a 2:30 a.m. call from her mother-in-law: "Get out of your apartment right away, the furniture is flying through the windows!"

Mrs. Kahn took shelter with her parents while her husband set out in search of a safer place, hoping the violence was isolated to Dortmund. But chaos and Nazi hooligans were everywhere. He holed up in a Protestant church and returned two days later.

All the Jewish men of Dortmund were arrested, including Mrs. Kahn's husband, father and uncle. Her menfolk were released in a fortnight: "If you ask me why they were let out...I cannot tell you to this day," she said.

Ludwig Boettigheimer remembers the melancholy among Jews in America.

"Too many of our people lost so much — their parents, relatives, friends were caught in Germany, and it became more and more obvious that there was no way to get them out," said Boettigheimer, 80, a Habonim founder who arrived in the United States in 1936. "But there was also a sense of hope. We were alive."

That hope was marshaled by Hugo Hahn, a charismatic rabbi who had watched as Nazi marauders wrecked his Essen synagogue. Hahn and his followers were determined that German Judaism would endure.

Habonim started with three dozen founding members and services at Manhattan's Central Synagogue. It drew some of Germany's leading intellectuals, people like Martin Buber and Leo Baeck, to lecture and teach. A prominent Bible expert from Frankfurt, Eduard Strauss, came to Habonim and resumed his lessons at the precise point where he had been interrupted by the Nazis.

"It grew by leaps and bounds, like wildfire," said Boettigheimer. "There was a need for prayer — there always is in time of trouble."

Membership swelled to 1,200. Separate services were conducted in Queens, and Town Hall was rented for the High Holy Days.

The German Jews began to assimilate. The amount of German spoken at services diminished until it was eliminated in the 1950s; board minutes were recorded in German for only a year or two. "We tried to hide our language," Boettigheimer explained.

The end of the war brought numbing news of what had happened to those left behind. Memorializing the dead became a major priority.

Israeli professor says Kristallnacht's destruction widespread in Reich

By KARIN LAUB

JERUSALEM (AP) — The scope of death and destruction in the Kristallnacht pogrom against the Jews of the Third Reich 50 years ago was much broader than widely believed, an Israeli researcher says.

Vandals torched synagogues and smashed Jewish property the night of Nov. 9-10, 1938. The next day, Nazi officials announced that 36 Jews had been killed and 195 synagogues destroyed. These figures are still widely used in history books.

But Jerusalem professor Meier Schwarz says he has uncovered evidence that about 1,000 Jews were killed or committed suicide, and that at least 1,118 synagogues were vandalized.

Kristallnacht is considered the start of the Holocaust, the systematic destruction of European Jewry by Nazi Germany. By the end of World War II, the Nazis had killed 6 million Jews.

"For German Jews, it was the final sign that they no longer had a place there," said the German-born Schwarz, the only member of his family to survive the Holocaust. "After the Kristallnacht, we all understood what it means to be a target."

Schwarz said he began his research four years ago after being angered by official indifference on a visit to his birthplace, the southern German city of Nuremberg, once a hotbed of Nazism.

"I was at city hall, and asked some official why there was no plaque to commemorate the Adas-Isroel synagogue where my family prayed," said Schwarz. "They told me it never existed."

Schwarz was 12 when he saw Adas-Isroel go up in flames on Kristallnacht. Later that night, five Brown Shirts trashed the Schwarz family apartment with axes and knives.

The newspaper "Nuernberger Zeitung" wrote about the destruction of Adas-Isroel, an ornate three-story building with tall arched windows: "A heap of broken benches and ritual equipment was set up in the middle of the building which was then set on fire. The entire building burned down."

Scenes like this were repeated throughout the Reich, mostly in Germany and Austria.

In Nuremberg, 15 stormtroopers broke into the apartment of Else Dormitzer and her husband, Sigmund, smashing furniture.

"Later, several bandits returned and beat us both. They broke my husband's nose with a steel rod," Mrs. Dormitzer wrote in an account kept at the Yad Vashem Holocaust Memorial in Jerusalem. "We were pushed out into the street, our bodies covered with blood."

Hertha Hurtig said she had just seen a Nelson Eddy-Jeanette MacDonald movie and was riding home on a streetcar in Breslau — today's Wroclaw in Poland — when she saw Brown Shirts smash display windows.

"They spared my husband for two days, but on the third day he did not return from work," Mrs. Hurtig, who now lives in Ramat Gan near Tel Aviv, said in a telephone interview.

Mrs. Hurtig's late husband was one of 30,000 Jews rounded up in the days after Kristallnacht and sent to concentration camps.

According to Schwarz, 500 Jews died on Kristallnacht, either killed or pushed into suicide, and 500 more perished in concentration camps in the following days.

In addition, at least 1,095 synagogues were torched or vandalized in Germany and 23 others in Austria, Schwarz said in an interview.

The figures are the result of painstaking research. Using a 1932 guide to Jewish communities in Germany, Schwarz and a few volunteers wrote letters to German municipal officials, asking for information about the local synagogue and an account of what happened in each town and village on Kristallnacht.

About 60 percent of the municipalities responded. Schwarz also received information from German-born Jews now living in other countries.

German youths confront past of 'Kristallnacht'

USINGEN, West Germany (AP) — As in hundreds of other towns across Nazi Germany, terror struck Jews in this picturesque village on the infamous "Kristallnacht." A half-century later, students there are still confronting the Nazi past.

Last month, the 23 students in Stephan Kolb's history class heard a former Jewish resident describe the tensions that led up to the brutality of Nov. 9-10, 1938.

Later, in a roundtable discussion with The Associated Press, students in this town of 11,400 people north of Frankfurt discussed the night when thugs ransacked the homes of the 10 to 15 Jews who lived in Usingen, then a rural village.

Martin Stenzel, 18, said Kristallnacht, named for the sparkling shards of broken glass that littered streets and sidewalks after the vandalism, was a "channeling of aggression" against the Jews.

Asked about constant reminders of Kristallnacht and other Nazi atrocities, he said: "There is the danger the Nazi era could be disposed of or settled in a way. But this history should always be alive."

Stenzel also sees sharp differences among generations in West Germany, which has paid more than 80 billion marks ($44 billion at 1988 values) to Nazi victims and their families.

"The older generation has kept the prejudiced view of Jews," he said, adding that this wasn't true with younger generations.

Sonja Moses, 20, said: "I can well imagine there were feelings of jealousy because the Jews were merchants and in general were better off financially. But I just don't think it could happen again. People are more broad-minded now. They wouldn't do it again."

None of the six students taking part in the Oct. 13 discussion at the Christian-Wirth School was Jewish. All are working toward the Abitur, the examination which grants a prestigious diploma roughly equivalent to a junior college degree in the United States.

Ms. Moses, like her classmates, also said the older generation views the Nazi era far differently from today's younger Germans.

"My grandmother tells me that Hitler brought order to the country," said Ms. Moses, adding that her grandmother dwells on the chaos that plagued the Weimar Republic after World War I. "She says after Hitler came to power, it wasn't that way anymore. You could walk down the street without being afraid."

Albrecht Pachl, 18, agreed the "biggest danger" was that the legacy of the Nazis could eventually be put aside.

"Many people feel under attack, including from people outside the country," Pachl said of Holocaust reminders.

He said he remembered watching television documentaries as a child.

"I had the feeling it was aimed at me as a German," Pachl said.

Kerstin Dumke, 18, said of Kristallnacht violence, "I can imagine that some people were swept up by what was happening, even if they didn't have any hatred for the Jews beforehand."

'Winds,' sequel took more time than WWII

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES — It's not over yet for producer-director Dan Curtis, and despite nine years spent on the ABC miniseries "The Winds of War" and its sequel, "War and Remembrance," he's not ready to give it up.

The first half of "War and Remembrance" begins Sunday. He hasn't even started editing the second half, which probably won't air until May. In all, the miniseries is expected to run 30 hours.

"I'm lucky this time," said Curtis. "With 'Winds of War' it went on the air, and then it became yesterday's news. If you miss it, that's it. It's not like a movie in a theater that keeps running. But this time the other part's still coming."

Curtis spent more time re-creating World War II in the two miniseries than the six years the real war lasted, 1939-45. "The Winds of War" ran in 1983 at 18 hours and cost $40 million. "War and Remembrance" cost $110 million, making it not only the longest but the most expensive film project ever.

The first 18 hours of "War and Remembrance" will be aired in seven parts over a span of 11 nights.

"I don't like skipping all those days, but there's nothing I can do about it," said Curtis. "I understand ABC's problem, but I still don't like it. I'd rather see it run every night. I've cut it after 18 hours at the only possible breaking point. Any other break would be a disaster.

"The long break between the first and second parts bothers me. ABC would like it earlier and I'd love to give it to them. But there's no way to get it ready before May."

A big "if" is the ratings. "The Winds of War" got a 38.6 rating and 53 share, making it the third highest-rated miniseries after "Roots" and "The Thorn Birds." Although the television audience has grown in the past five years, the networks' share of the audience has shrunk due to increased competition from cable, independent stations and videocassettes.

"I think people will stick with it," Curtis said. "Each show seems to get better than the one that precedes it. When I shoot, the look is almost more important than the dialogue, or equally important. You focus on the reaction of people to what's being said. Television gives it an intimacy.

"Most people don't know the difference between good shooting and bad shooting. In fact, most directors don't understand it either. But if you shoot it the right way and your camera angles are right, it will heighten it because you're telling the story visually. I think with 'War and Remembrance' people will actually feel they're inside the picture rather than just being an outside observer."

The two miniseries, adapted from Wouk's two novels, follow naval officer Pug Henry (Robert Mitchum) and show how the war affects him, his wife, daughter, two sons and other members of the family.

Pug participates in the Battle of Midway. His son Byron (Hart Bochner) is a submarine commander in the Pacific. Byron's Jewish wife, Natalie (Jane Seymour), is trapped in Europe with their child and her uncle, author Aaron Jastrow (Sir John Gielgud).

The sea battles look authentic. When Natalie and her uncle finally end up at Auschwitz, Curtis filmed at the former Nazi death camp and many of the extras were survivors of the Holocaust. In one scene, Reichsfuehrer-SS Heinrich Himmler visits Auschwitz to watch a demonstration of a new method to kill large numbers of Jews.

"I told the extras I didn't know how they would react," Curtis said. "'You probably don't expect to die, but you know subconsciously something is going to happen.' What a tough thing to put them through. The people began to cling to each other. I was destroyed by what I was watching. When they came running out with no clothes on it was so real.

"You can sense what it must have been like. If the audience can feel that then I will have accomplished what I set out to accomplish."

Don Ameche didn't need to go far to research his role as a poor Italian immigrant who becomes entangled with the Mafia in the Colombia Pictures film, "Things Change." Ameche's father was an Italian immigrant.

Don Ameche draws on background for film

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Don Ameche didn't need to go far to research his role as a poor Italian immigrant who becomes entangled with the Mafia in David Mamet's new film "Things Change."

"From the standpoint of knowing the character, I probably never played one that I knew any better," he said. "My father was born and raised in Italy, and he didn't come here until he was 25. The accent was totally his; he had it until the day he died.

"Pop was a man of integrity, within the confines of his own concept of what was right and wrong, the same as Gino in 'Things Change.' So things were easy, as far as knowing what to do with this character. The only difference is that Gino is Sicilian, and Pop was from the middle of Italy."

Ameche's performance as the ingenious cobbler who manages to beat the mobsters at their own game drew a best-actor award (shared with co-star Joe Mantegna) at the Venice Film Festival, and Columbia Pictures is planning an Oscar campaign for him. The actor has another major film coming this fall: "Cocoon: The Return," repeating the role that brought him the Academy Award as best supporting actor of 1985.

Not bad for an 80-year-old.

Ameche still looks in wonderment at the events of his so-called sunset years. He said the Oscar came as a complete surprise.

"I didn't believe I would win," he recalled. "Everybody was saying that Klaus Maria Brandauer would win. I didn't see 'Out of Africa,' but I understand that he was magnificent in the picture. I was sitting with my oldest son when they announced my name. All I could say was, 'Oh, my God!'

"It meant a lot, but nothing like it means today. When I look at the figure sitting on the living room table, it really means an awful lot."

Ameche could understand the underworld types of "Things Change." His boyhood was spent in Kenosha, Wis., where his father operated a saloon frequented by Sicilians.

"When I was 7 or 8 years old, I was sitting in an automobile outside Pop's saloon," he reminisced. "He threw two men out the front door and down the three stone steps. They wound up a few feet from me sitting in the car. Both were Sicilians, and the younger man was beating up the older man. Pretty soon the older man came up with a knife in his hand, with a blade about that long. He hit the other man three times in the front and four more times in the back as he went down.

"Once I poured water on an enormously powerful man that Pop had hit across the shoulders with a baseball bat. We thought he was dead. I poured gallons of water on him until he revived.

"Yes, I saw incredible things in that saloon. I saw it all."

After four years of drift in college, Ameche's mellifluous voice made him a popular actor in Chicago radio. By the mid-1930s, Hollywood was calling.

"I made one test for MGM in August of 1935 that they turned down," he said. "I saw it, and I hated it — but then I found out later that I hated everything I did.

"An agent, George Frank was his name, thought he saw something in my test. He showed it to Darryl Zanuck, who arranged for me to have a test in New York in December of 1935."

Girls see 1,500 TV acts linked to sex annually, study reveals

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — The average young teen-age American girl views 1,500 sexual acts or references to sexual acts on television annually, according to a study at Michigan State University.

The study was based on girls 14 to 15 years old who watch television four to five hours each school day. In addition, the study found, that same girl sees at least 25 R-rated movies in theaters each year.

In comparison, boys of that age view an average of nearly 1,300 sexual acts or references to sexual acts on television and attend 17 R-rated movies annually.

The data was compiled by Bradley S. Greenberg, head of MSU's telecommunication department, and Renato Linsangan, an MSU graduate student. The study was funded by the Office of Adolescent Pregnancy Programs of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

According to the teens studied, parents "never" or "not often" limit their television viewing.

"There's little indication that parents exercise any control, positive or negative, over TV viewing by teens," Greenberg says.

Research was based on interviews with 1,200 high school students, half of them black and half of them white, in urban public schools in the United States.

"The combination of sex on TV and in the movies provides a tantalizing aura of a sexually oriented society that's difficult for teen girls to resist or demean," Greenberg says. "At 14 or 15, they are a vulnerable group, particularly intrigued with what's ahead for their own sexual experiences."

Greenberg reported the findings at a meeting of the International Association of Mass Communication Research in Barcelona, Spain.

A visit with Steve Green, new Howard cage coach

Coming Saturday

5-5 Badgers test 9-0 Owls

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

It's either been all or nothing for the McCamey Badgers in Coach Danny Wilhelm's first season.

The District 5-2A runners-up are 5-5 going into Saturday's bi-district playoff with undefeated District 6-2A champion Reagan County, 9-0, at Crane. When the Badgers have won, they've won big.

When they've lost...it hasn't been by much. Include a 14-6 loss to Reagan County in the fourth week of the season in that category.

Wilhelm is confident the Badgers can shake their close game bugaboo, however.

"We might have found that ingredient to help us win the close games," Wilhelm said. While the coach didn't elaborate, tailback Jay Lashaway has undoubtedly been a boost in the last several games.

A back injury hampered Lashaway early this season, but the junior broke through with three touchdowns against Presidio two weeks ago, as well as headlining an improved defensive backfield.

Lashaway aide an offense backfield that includes quarterback David Anglin, sophomore tailback Stephen Terry, and undersized fullback Servando Venegas.

Venegas led the team with 890 yards rushing despite 150 pounds, while Terry gained 97 yards per game in district play to pick up the slack left by the academic ineligibility of senior Daniel Flores.

Despite increased offensive production in recent weeks, the Badgers' linchpin remains a potentially dominant defensive line that includes tackles Anatascio Dominguez (200 pounds) and Will Kennedy (225) sandwiching noseguard Ivan Barriga (290).

"I don't see any easy way to move it on their front people," Reagan County coach Ronnie Reeger said.

But as awesome as the front can be and as improved as the secondary is, Wilhelm worries about them being on the field too long Saturday.

Lee-Palo Duro...meeting of playoff veterans

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

AMARILLO — The 1 p.m. Class 5A bi-district matchup between Amarillo Palo Duro and Midland Lee here Saturday at Dick Bivins Stadium features two playoff hardened veterans, but Palo Duro coach Doug James would like to see his Dons get a little more hardened.

Lee is making its sixth consecutive playoff appearance while Palo Duro has been playoff bound five consecutive seasons. The only problem for James is the fact that his Dons haven't gotten past bi-district in any of the four previous trips while going against teams from District 4-5A.

"District 4-5A has been tough on us. There is no question about that," said James.

But he does see a silver lining in meeting 4-5A teams right off the bat.

"One thing about it, though, is if we ever do get over the hump, you've got one major playoff hurdle out of the way. Things have to be easier after that."

AND JAMES says that Lee's Rebels are another big thorn to pull out of the skin in 1988.

"We don't know that much about Lee, but if past seasons are any indication of what this team is like, then we know they are flat out awesome," said James. "Even their pre-game warmup worries me.

"We know they are much bigger than we are and that is a major concern. They are capable of moving the ball up and down the field on you and that defense looks plenty good to me. Turnovers have killed us this year and we've been inconsistent on offense. Lee has those huge running backs that punish you. We just have to be very sound on defense and keep them from making the big plays and not many people have been able to do that."

But it takes only a quick trip to the Lee Fieldhouse to put up the crying towel for the Dons. Lee coach Earl Miller isn't expecting an easy task against Palo Duro.

"They've got basically the same team back that Permian only beat 20-10 last year in bi-district," said Miller. "They have 11 kids back for their third letter and this is supposed to be their year like last year was supposed to be ours.

"THEY'VE got an awfully good football team right now. They destroyed Amarillo High 41-6 last week and that wasn't against a weak team. Amarillo High was in the playoff hunt. If Amarillo High had won that game, they would have been playing us Saturday."

It will be a game that features two wishbone attacks. But that is about as far as you can go with the comparison.

"Palo Duro's wishbone isn't a lot like ours," notes Miller. "They don't option the football much. They just come straight at you and they've got some good backs."

The game will feature two 1,000-yard rushers in Palo Duro's Mike "General" Westmoreland (1,128 yards) and Lee's Farris Strambler (1,186), but Palo Duro has an overall rushing edge against Lee. Neither team throws the ball much, but Lee would appear to have an edge here since Don junior quarterback Carleton Franklin has completed only 29 percent of his passes for two touchdowns. Lee junior quarterback Vince Henderson has completed 54 percent of his passes for four touchdowns in 52 fewer attempts.

Lee is scheduled to bus to Amarillo at 7 a.m. Saturday, which means the Rebels will nearly get off the bus and play. That's the way Miller wanted it.

"We do have to get the kids up early and drive four hours, but it beats spending the night in a motel," said Miller. "I think it's much better for the kids to sleep in their own beds and be around familiar surroundings than to get up there early and have all that dead time."

PERMIAN, who plays Amarillo Tascosa at 7:30 p.m. Saturday at the same stadium, is flying to Amarillo Saturday while Lee hits the road by bus.

The winner of Saturday's game will advance to the area round of the playoffs against the winner of tonight's bi-district contest between El Paso Eastwood and El Paso Irvin, which is set for the Sun Bowl at 7 p.m. (MST).

Eastwood is the favorite in that game. If Lee and Eastwood draw each other, that game will automatically be in El Paso under UIL rules since Eastwood played the area game in Midland last year.

The Permian-Tascosa winner will face El Paso Andress next week at a date and site to be determined. Andress was a winner over El Paso Hanks Thursday night.

Orel Hershiser
....no contest

No doubt, it's Orel

By MURRAY CHASS
N.Y. Times News Service

He finished the regular season with 59 successive scoreless innings, shut out the New York Mets in the seventh game of the playoffs, pitched a shutout and also won the final game against Oakland in the World Series.

And Thursday, Orel Hershiser became the unanimous winner of the National League Cy Young award.

Considering that he produced the most spectacular finish with which any pitcher ever concluded a year, the award was almost anti-climactic.

Nothing that Hershiser accomplished after Oct. 2 — the final day of the regular season — weighed in the Cy Young voting, but those accomplishments made him one of the few winners of the award who pitched as spectacularly after the season as during it.

Hershiser, who won 23 games and lost 8 for the Los Angeles Dodgers, was selected first on each of the 24 ballots cast by members of the Baseball Writers Association of America, two from each league city.

Danny Jackson of Cincinnati was second in the voting, gaining 54 points to Hershiser's 120. Jackson also compiled a 23-8 record after the Reds acquired him from Kansas City last winter. David Cone of the Mets was third with 42 points. He achieved a 20-3 record after an injury to Rick Aguilera put him into the Mets' starting rotation a month into the season.

Hershiser was the 12th unanimous winner, ninth in the National League, in the award's 33-year history. This was the first time that only three pitchers received all the votes since the 5-3-1 point system went into effect in 1970.

Hershiser's victory never was in doubt once he reeled off the longest scoreless inning streak ever amassed by a pitcher, eclipsing by one inning the record set by Don Drysdale, also a Dodgers' pitcher, in 1968.

Hershiser, a 30-year-old right-hander, did not let up in the post-season, which he finished with a 3-0 record, a 1.05 earned run average, a playoff record for innings pitched (24//Z) and two most valuable player awards.

NCAA may reopen Kansas cage scandal

By WILLIAM C. RHODEN
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — David Berst, assistant executive director of enforcement for the National Collegiate Athletic Association, said Thursday the NCAA might reopen its investigation into the Kansas basketball program.

Berst's comment came in response to an article in the Nov. 14 issue of Sports Illustrated containing allegations from a former Kansas player that he made loans to Danny Manning, the former Kansas all-American.

Mike Marshall, who played for Kansas during the 1983-84 season, said he had loaned Manning money on several occasions, including once for transportation to Marshall's basketball camp at McNeese State University in Lake Charles, La.

Marshall was dismissed from the team before the NCAA tournament in 1984.

Manning, through his agent, Ron Grinker, acknowledged receiving several small loans from Marshall.

"We're trying to contact the sources of information to the magazine and find out more detail about the loans," Berst said. "I'm not characterizing this as an investigation. I'm trying to accumulate more facts before we decide whether it's something we should investigate further. We want to find out when they occurred, how much the loans were for, who's involved, who knew about them — the kinds of questions to assess whether there is any NCAA rule violation."

6th ranked Dallas Carter bounced

By MARK GODICH

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Carter, ranked No. 6 in the latest Associated Press Class 5A polls, was disqualified from the state playoffs Thursday for using an ineligible player in the final three weeks of its regular season, district officials said.

The University Interscholastic League forced the District 11-5A school to forfeit its final three games and ruled it ineligible to play in Friday's bi-district playoff game against Plano East. Acting on a tip it got Wednesday afternoon, officials from UIL and the Texas Education Agency visited Carter Thursday to review a player's grades.

"THEY misfigured a grade. I don't think it's a case of grade tampering," said Buddy Berry, chairman of the District 11-5A Executive Committee and principal at Grand Prairie High School.

"We were so ready to play," said Carter Football Coach Freddie James. "Our boys were fired up and we had a good feeling about the ball game. We felt like we could have beaten Plano East. It's a tough way to go out."

James said he did not understand how the grade could have been miscalculated. He said after each grading period, the coaching staff spends two days reviewing all players' marks to ensure failing students do not play.

IN THIS case, James said a teacher turned in a grade for the student, but later reviewed the report. The teacher refigured the average and found the student was failing, James said.

"How can a teacher make a mistake like that? The report card said 72" percent, James said.

"I'm still in shock," said Plano East Coach Mike Bailey. "I don't know what to think. I hate to see something like that happen."

The executive committee ruled Thursday that South Grand Prairie will face District 12-5A champion Plano East in the first round of playoffs.

CARTER, 8-0-1, is tied behind Duncanville in District 11-5A play with a 4-0-1 record.

South Grand Prairie, Grand Prairie and DeSoto were tied for third in district play with records of 2-3-0.

Officials said South Grand Prairie was selected to join the playoffs after Carter was forced to forfeit its final three games. South Grand Prairie had lost to Carter in one of those games.

The forfeit improves South Grand Prairie's record to 3-2-0 to beat out Grand Prairie and DeSoto in the rankings.

Under the Texas Education Reform Act's no pass-no play rule, any student who fails even one class for a six-week grading period is ineligible for UIL play until the next grading period. If an ineligible player has performed during a game, the team must forfeit the game.

Dallas Independent School District and Carter High School officials would not comment on who the ineligible player is.

"I've been in this business 25 years and I've never seen anything like this," said Don Murphy, athletic director of the Grand Prairie Independent School District.

Murphy said he notified South Grand Prairie Coach Eddie Patton about 5 p.m. Thursday to try to gather his players for practice.

SOUTH GRAND Prairie's season had ended last weekend and the team had already packed up all its equipment for the season, Murphy said.

"It's going to be a real inconvenience to Plano East and South Grand Prairie," Murphy said, adding he was unsure if all the players will be available for the weekend game.

Committee members were discussing when the game will be played. Because of the playoff schedules, the game must be played by Saturday for the rounds to continue, officials said.

New owner muddies Seattle Seahawks' NFL outlook

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

Too bad about the Seattle Seahawks. You know, that team in the Pacific Northwest that sells out every week; has made the playoffs three of the past five years and is currently tied for first in the AFC West, albeit at a mediocre 5-5.

Too bad about the Seattle Seahawks because it looks like they're about to start on a downhill slide.

Why? Because they seemed to have weakened themselves recently at the most crucial position — owner.

The party of the first part is Kenneth Behring, a land developer from California who bought 75 percent of the team from the Nordstrom family earlier this fall. John Nordstrom, the former owner, was perfect — he paid attention to his department stores; hired Mike McCormack and Chuck Knox to handle the football team, and stayed out of the way.

Now comes Behring, who has publicly warned McCormack and Knox to win ... or else.

"They know they have pressure on them," Behring said this week.

"As an owner, I'm not going to accept anything but a winning team. I'll give them the talent. Then I expect them to give us a winning team. I can't stand to lose."

Where have we heard that tune before?

From George Steinbrenner, whose New York Yankees have won nothing since 1981?

From Alex Spanos, who bought a declining San Diego franchise that has declined even further and is now thinking about disposing of Coach Al Saunders, who is well-regarded within the league but probably has the game's worst talent.

From Robert Irsay, whose Colts began to improve only after he turned over most of the management to his son Jimmy, who turns out to be a reasonably knowledgeable football man.

In fact, Behring should learn from Jack Kent Cooke, who is nothing if not flamboyant. He also is wise enough to have hired Bobby Beathard to run the Redskins, let Beathard hire Joe Gibbs and sit back while his team has won two Super Bowls.

In this case, the only knock on Knox, who turned the Seahawks from an expansion team to a year-in, year-out contender, is that he has never been to the Super Bowl. In his autobiography, he wistfully recalls being at the Rose Bowl in 1987 when he watched the Giants win the Super Bowl from the Broncos, knowing that his team was the only one that had beaten both of them that season.

But in 15 years as a head coach with the Rams, Bills and Seahawks, Knox has made the playoffs 10 times and his career record is 144-87-1. He has been, however, loathe to put up with owners who annoy him — he left the Rams because Carroll Rosenbloom criticized his lack of pizzazz and he left the Bills because Ralph Wilson wasn't willing to sign players.

That bodes ill with an owner like Behring, who says of the Seahawks:

"I bought them for one reason. I want them to be the world's best. I want them to win the Super Bowl. That's my complete aim. I think I was aware when I made the purchase that we're not there. We've got some soft spots we've got to fill. But I've been lucky in my life. About every development I've been in we've made something very special."

Fine, but let McCormack fill the soft spots — he has filled others by dealing for Kelly Stouffer, the quarterback of the future, then managing to get the No. 1 picks he gave up in that deal for Fredd Young, who was more trouble than he was worth.

Knox is another story.

Word has it that he may head for Detroit, where he was once an assistant. The more Behring sounds off, the more likely that is to happen.

And if he goes, will McCormack be far behind?

TED BATTLES

A book is given away by its cover

Battles

You can tell a lot about people by the way they dress, perhaps their professions, but more likely where they come from.

It was apparent last year while covering the Giants-Cowboys game at Texas Stadium.

All of the sports writers from New York papers were easily identifiable by the fact that they were almost all formally attired in coats and ties with combed hair, in cases in which there was the wherewithal.

Texas writers were uniformly, or ununiformly, a sportshirted bunch with nary a jacket or buttoned neck in the bunch.

There were even a few Philadelphia writers covering the game and they were easy to spot, too. The Philly writers wore coats and ties, but since they were from "out west" in the eyes of New Yorkers, the string ties gave them away.

DURING THE exhibition season, it seemed Tom Landry might become a Texan again when he showed up on the sidelines in a shortsleeved shirt, open collar and panama chapeau.

But once the season began, Landry was back on the sidelines in his traditional attire of felt fedora, coat and tie...a holdover, I suppose, of his days in New York, where he played for the Giants and later coached.

IT WAS that way up at the AP Sports Editors convention last June.

The writer from the Banana republic, Costa Rica, or where ever, was a dead giveaway. He wore a white Panama with a dark band. The brim was pulled down front, back and sides. In dark trousers held up by wide suspenders and with a white shirt, he looked like something sent over from Central Casting.

To complete the picture, he had the kind of thick, bushy moustache that would have driven even Groucho up a wall with envy.

The presence of someone from a Central American country was a little surprising. After all, when you think of an APSE convention, the normal assumption is that it's a domestic affair, limited to the original 48 or expanded 50.

In an Olympic year, it seemed like a nice gesture.

It was little surprising that he never lacked for companionship. He was always talking someone's ear off. I just wondered if anybody understood what he was saying, but like good hosts, they didn't let on.

IT WAS during one of the coffee breaks between seminars that I got close enough to eyeball his name tag.

Even he jumped at the half amazed "Annapolis!"

It turned out my Central American was someone named Joe Gross, originally from Philadelphia who came to Annapolis for a brief stay and wound up staying 14 years and counting.

The conversation quickly drifted to Navy football, its state of desrepair and the future of David Robinson, the 7-1 Olympian basketballer who will eventually play for the San Antonio Spurs.

"They finally got some waivers so the Academy can accept some linemen," Joe assured, "So the football program should improve in a few years."

Apparently, the waivers didn't help the program this year. The Middies are still playing at an Ivy League level with a Notre Dame type schedule. At least, it is for their talent bin.

And Robinson, "Sure, he was an All-America at Navy, but he hadn't even begun to realize his potential. Robinson got such a late start, he was still learning the game at Navy.

"Most people don't realize it, but his training through high school was as a gymnast."

With that kind of background, Robinson may show the NBA some moves it never saw before.

As for Gross, he could have been a good yarn, if he had come from Costa Rica, like he was supposed to.

Akeem ignites Rockets' rally

HOUSTON (AP) — Once the game got to the fourth quarter, it was all Akeem Olajuwon. "He took over in the last quarter. He wasn't going to let them lose," Utah's Karl Malone said Thursday after the Houston Rockets beat the Jazz 106-99. "He just made up his mind and didn't let them lose."

Olajuwon scored 17 of his game-high 35 points in the fourth quarter and grabbed 19 rebounds. The seven-footer also took advantage of the absence of Jazz center Mark Eaton, who fouled out with 10:44 left.

"Any time Eaton is in the game there's not much you can do," Olajuwon said. "When he's out there's room to work."

Utah coach Frank Layden blamed fatigue on the Jazz's fourth-quarter collapse.

"They outscored us 31-18. We were flat-out tired," Layden said. "They really banged us around on the boards and were more aggressive in the second half than we were."

Houston coach Don Chaney said rookie Derrick Chievous helped spark the Rockets. Chievios, who did not start, scored 27 points.

"We need guys coming off the bench to ignite us," Chaney said. "I'm very proud of the way he played tonight."

Houston trailed 81-75 at the end of three quarters, but Olajuwon scored the Rockets' first seven straight points of the fourth quarter, pulling Houston to within 84-82.

Nuggets 135, Blazers 115

DENVER — Michael Adams scored 29 points to lead Denver and extend the Trail Blazers' winless streak in Denver to 12 games over five years. Adams made 10 of 20 shots and 5 of 5 free throws. He made four 3-pointers and has made at least one in an NBA-record 47 consecutive games.

Alex English scored 30 points for Denver, Denny Schayes had 23, Fat Lever 17 and Walter Davis 16. Clyde Drexler led Portland with 32 points.

Strange at his best

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — It was, said Curtis Strange, one of the best rounds of golf he had ever played.

It was even better, he said, than a 62 at the Old Course at St. Andrews, Scotland last year.

"The quality of the shots, where they went, the feeling of being in total control ... probably as good a round as I've ever played," Strange said after a spectacular 64 provided him with a three-shot lead Thursday in the first round of the season-ending $2-million Nabisco Championships of Golf.

He did not make a bogey. He did not have a "5" on his card. He holed out one approach for an eagle-2 and scored five birdies on putts of five feet or less. He also found the cup with a 131-yard, 8-iron shot for an eagle-2 on the 11th.

Strange's remarkable effort put him in command of the event that offers $3 million in prize money — $2 million in the tournament purse and $1 million in bonus money — and brings to a close all the major seasonal races.

Strange is involved in two of those, for the money-winning title and for the Player of the Year award. He needs to win this tournament to accomplish either.

Chap golfers take fourth

From Staff Reports

The wind got the best of the Midland College golfers and the Chaps dropped from second to fourth on the final day of the San Jacinto College Invitational, firing a 320—626 after an opening round 306.

It was an an usual demise for the Chaps, who come from West Texas, where winds are a way of life and it didn't sit too well with Coach Delnor Poss. "The team must acquire a mental toughness in order to become an exceptional team."

Shelby State, Tennessee, took first place with a consistent 310-618. Paris Junior College had a 620 and San Jacinto took third with a 622.

Andrew Coltart posted the low individual score for the Chaps with a 73-77—150.

Broeck's 65 leads Centel

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Lance Ten Broeck, chasing his first victory on the PGA Tour, shot an opening-round 65 Thursday to take a one-shot lead over Bernhard Langer and Beau Baugh in the $500,000 Centel Classic.

Ten Broeck, 139th on the tour money earnings list this season, birdied the 17th hole to pull ahead of the field of 137 golfers and finished with seven birdies and no bogeys on the par-72, 7,098-yard Killearn Country Club course.

West Germany's Langer, the 1985 Masters champion, and Baugh, playing his first tour event in four years, trailed the leader by one stroke after rounds of 66 that included seven birdies and one bogey.

Thirty-five other golfers also were within four shots of the lead, including Bill Glasson, who with $290,651 in earnings is the top money-winner entered in the 72-hole tournament that concludes the PGA season.

The tour's top 30 money winners are competing in the $3 million Nabisco Championships in Pebble Beach, Calif., leaving the Centel Classic to a field that elected to play in Tallahassee for various reasons in addition to the $90,000 first-place check.

MC Mustangs host playoff

From Staff Reports

Midland Christian, District 2 champions of the New-Texas Christian Football Conference, hosts a pair of six-man playoff games 3 p.m. Saturday.

As champ, MC will play District 1 runner-up, El Paso Northeast Christian Academy at 11 a.m.

, District 1 champion El Paso Jesus Chapel meets District 2 runner-up, Alamo Catholic of Amarillo.

BADGERS—

The coach said the Badgers need to improve on the six first downs and 89 total yards they managed against the Owls in September.

"We need to get some first downs to get in good field position and then get something big to happen," Wilhelm said.

But the Reagan County defense hasn't let much happen this season, allowing only 31 points this season and 19 in district play.

The Owls have their own dominating front that includes ends Luis Garcia and Jerry Tijerina, and tackles Robby Hooker and Rusty Adams. The quartet combined for 54 tackles for loss during the regular season.

And it hasn't been any easier for Owl opponents on the few occasions they get past that line. Middle linebacker Roland Saldibar and outside backers Junior Pena and Johnny Levario have combined for 221 tackles and seven interceptions.

When Reagan County has the ball, the Owls rely on a ball-control offense keyed by QB Rodolfo Guerrero, who has stood out in the absence of Texas Tech signee Scott Lipsey.

Guerrero can either throw (mostly to split receiver Alfonso Valadez) or hand off to an outstanding stable of backs that averaged 5.6 yards per carry during the regular slate.

Halfback Sergio Balderas took over for injured Leonard Castillo early on and went on to lead the team with 785 yards.

Other leaders include backup fullback Willie Black (667 yards), fullback Saldibar (480) and Castillo, who has played in spots since his return but has still gained 380 yards.

The McCamey-Reagan County winner will face the DeLeon-Stamford next week.

More than fond memories left behind

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Olympic athletes and officials and members of the media have long since scattered to all parts of the world, but they left behind more than fond memories.

More than 500 items were left in one hotel alone, including two personal computers, 32 pairs of shoes, a mini TV, a French athlete's Olympic uniform, 22 bottles of vitamins and medicine, seven cameras and a pair of crutches.

Bears-Redskins plot thickens

Pro Picks

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

How many plot lines do you want when Chicago visits Washington this weekend?

Will Mike Ditka come charging back early from his heart attack to save his job from Vince Tobin, if Tobin wins his second straight game?

Will Dexter Manley spit on a Polish-American tackle for the second straight week, with John Wojciechowski the successor to Jim Dombrowski?

Will the Bears be flat because Ditka's not on the sidelines to yell at them? "Maybe we can get some tapes and play them back for the effect," Tobin said.

The Bears are a surprising 3½-point underdog, perhaps because they've lost to Washington twice in a row at Soldier Field, both in playoff games. On the other hand, the Bears won the last time they were at RFK Stadium, in the 1984 playoffs — with Steve Fuller at quarterback.

This time the QB is Mike Tomczak. The other QB is Doug Williams. If Williams has time to thrown, the Redskins should win. If not ...

BEARS, 17-16.

Giants (plus 1) at Phoenix

New York is due to lose, having won four straight against teams with a combined record of 7-23 and played well for only 65 minutes, 13 seconds of the last 241:13 it has played. The question: Will the Cards' miracle comeback over the 49ers last week lift them another notch or lead to a letdown?

Law of averages says the Giants will win at home the next time, but this one is ...

CARDS, 24-20.

Cleveland (minus 2½) at Denver

The Browns would much rather have beaten the Broncos in the last two AFC title games. Earnest Byner doesn't have to worry this time — even if he fumbles at the Denver 3.

BROWNS, 27-13.

New Orleans (plus 3½) at Rams

The Rams won 12-10 two weeks ago at New Orleans. Somehow, home field doesn't mean much in the NFC West.

SAINTS, 12-10.

Buffalo (pick 'em) at Miami (Monday night)

The first time these teams played, the Bills won 9-6. The Bills will score more this time. The Dolphins may not ...

BILLS, 10-6.

Raiders (plus 6½) at San Francisco

Two thoughts.

Bill Walsh doesn't yell at his team very often.

The Raiders are 5-0 in the AFC West, 0-5 outside it.

49ERS, 20-17.

Houston (pick 'em) at Seattle

The Oilers are only 2-3 on the road, but two of their losses were with Cody Carlson at quarterback. They're also 6-0 indoors. A happy homecoming for Warren Moon.

OILERS, 17-13.

Minnesota (minus 3) at Dallas

The Vikings can stumble at the most inopportune moments and this could be one of them, particularly if Kevin Sweeney befuddles them. Still, when you're down, you're down.

VIKINGS, 24-16.

Cincinnati (minus 6½) at Kansas City

The Chiefs may score 11 points again this week.

The Bengals will score more.

BENGALS, 34-11.

Tampa Bay (plus 2½) at Detroit

You mean there are people who will pay real money to see this?

LIONS, 8-5.

Other games (Home Teams in CAPS)
PITTSBURGH (plus 2) 20, Philadelphia 19.
New England (plus 2), 21, NEW YORK JETS 16.

ATLANTA (minus 5½) 26, San Diego 7.

Pirates offer Sax 3-year pact

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pirates have offered free agent Steve Sax a three-year contract Thursday, and the player's agent said the proposal was "competitive."

Larry Doughty, the Pirates' general manager, said his offer was "great" and felt the chances of Sax signing with the Pirates were good.

Meanwhile, Doughty said he hadn't talked to the Chicago Cubs about a trade for shortstop Shawon Dunston since Monday. Even though there was "an open line" with the Cubs, he said, the trade might not happen until the winter meetings in three weeks.

Sax's agent, Jerry Kapstein said there was no timetable set for Sax signing, and he was "entertaining offers from a lot of teams."

Of previous Cy Young award winners who that same year pitched in both the league championship series and the World Series, only Steve Carlton of Philadelphia and Ron Guidry of the Yankees approached Hershiser's post-season achievements. Carlton had a 3-0 record and a 2.31 e.r.a. in 1980 and Guidry had a 2-0 record and a 1.06 e.r.a. in 1978.

Hershiser's regular-season performance made him first in the league in overall statistical ranking, shutouts (8) and innings pitched (267), tied for first with Jackson in victories (23) and complete games (15), and third in earned run average (2.26).

His combined regular and post-season performance put him in a position to seek a salary approaching $2 million for next season (he earned $1.1 million).

STAR CHARITY CASE

Olajuwon's scoring total could have been higher, but he continued to struggle from the free throw line, missing of 16 attempts. For the season, Olajuwon has made only 33 of 49 foul shots, a .673 percentage.

D-E-F-E-N-S-E!

The Detroit Pistons held their first four opponents — Chicago, Charlotte, Philadelphia and Atlanta — to a 40.7 shooting percentage and an average of 95.8 points. Only the 76ers, who are averaging nearly 118 points, managed to reach 100 points (109) against the Pistons.

GLIDING

Portland guard Clyde Drexler is off to a strong start with a 29.3-point scoring average, forged on 59 percent shooting from the field. Last season, Drexler finished sixth in the NBA with a 27-point average.

STREAKS

At 3-0, Cleveland is off to its best start since 1978-79, when the Cavaliers began 4-0. The Cavs' victory over the L.A. Clippers in their home-opener Wednesday night was their ninth straight at Richfield Coliseum dating back to last season. Cleveland has not lost a game of any kind this season, having won eight preseason road games and two games on the road to start the regular schedule.

WOUNDED BIRDS

— Boston superstar Larry Bird is suffering from a recurrence of tendinitis in his Achilles' tendons. Surgery is a possibility, but it's not likely.

"It's a matter of getting something done now or later," Bird said before playing 34 minutes and scoring 18 points against the Chicago Bulls on Wednesday. "Mentally, I know I can't handle sitting out 20-25 games. I can't sit around the house watching someone else do my job."

— Hawks center Moses Malone was expected to miss Friday night's game against Philadelphia with a bruised ligament in his right knee. The 6-foot-10, 255-pound center was examined Thursday and told to sit out one game.

PUMP UP THE VOLUME

The Nuggets, who led Portland 55-50 at halftime Thursday, outscored the Trail Blazers 80-65 in the final 24 minutes to win handily, 135-115.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will come to understand others as you never have before. Taking special courses will equip you better for both business and life. An extended trip or visit out of state may be good for your health and state of mind, but it could make a close relationship somewhat shaky. You gain new ground in the financial arena. Build a nest egg for retirement years. Youngsters, given more responsibility, will react in a positive way.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: catcher Jody Davis, Justice Harry Blackmun, gymnast Nadia Comaneci, Princess Grace of Monaco, singer Neil Young.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Business details may be hard to document. Postpone signing any papers until you are sure. You could be caught up in a romantic fantasy this evening. A close relationship turns a corner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You enjoy going it alone, but this is one day when you will gain more by joining a group. Travel holds certain difficulties. Hang in there! A partnership could reach an impasse.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Experience tells you what to do today. Progress depends on your ability to search out the facts. Probe beneath the surface. Stick to diet and exercise resolutions. Bind up relationship wounds.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You feel closer than ever to your loved ones. Talking to parents gives you new strength. Sharing your interest in the arts with someone special will heighten your own enjoyment. Be patient.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Partner may be in a contrary mood. Find things to do that will not conflict with what loved ones want to do. A last-minute lunch date could produce a financial bonanza.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A great day for bargains. Purchase larger items — refrigerators, furniture — only if you have the cash. Avoid overuse of credit cards. Travel opens the door to fun and romance. Be practical.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): College football could capture your attention. Sponsor a potluck supper. You find yourself in need of help. Family will be supportive. Share a secret with partner. Love thrives on trust.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your excitement grows as you make plans for the future. The financial picture brightens. Playing a game with children or a pet lifts your spirits. Help youngsters feel good about themselves.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your private life becomes more fulfilling. Satisfaction with a relationship does not mean that either of you can quit working at it. Short trips produce good results. Write faraway friends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Money is on the way from an unexpected source. Sharing makes you feel better about the recent past. Your confidence rubs off on someone close to you, making him more productive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You feel better about a family decision now. Do things for yourself this weekend. You deserve tender loving care. A child or pet adds to your happiness. Your goals come into clearer focus.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Wrap up current projects and plunge into a venture that will strengthen family ties. Good health is linked to good habits. Exercise self-discipline.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 NT	Pass
3 ◇	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♡

One of the first play techniques written up in the Official Encyclopedia of Bridge is "Avoidance." It is also one of the first techniques declarer should master.

North had a difficult rebid—he held a good hand with a relatively poor six-card minor suit. His jump rebid of his diamonds was an equitable compromise, and South's conversion to three no trump has the approval of this department.

West led his fourth-best heart, and we would hazard a guess that the contract would be defeated 90 percent of the time. Declarer would win and cash the king-ace of diamonds, and only when West showed out on the second round would declarer's plight dawn on him. He would have to surrender the lead to East to set up the long diamonds, and a heart return would then allow the defenders to collect five tricks.

The careful declarer should realize that he needs only five tricks from the diamond suit to secure his game. Also, he should know that he cannot afford to let the danger hand, East, gain the lead, because he cannot stand a lead through his heart tenace.

With these facts available, the winning line should become obvious. After winning the first trick with the ten of hearts, declarer must cross to dummy with a spade and lead a low diamond, and simply cover any card East produces. If it is an honor, declarer must win and cash his high cards, hoping that East did not start with four diamonds headed by the J-10. When East follows low, however, declarer inserts his nine. West is welcome to win an unexpected trick, but the contract would now be impregnable.

Cosby renews contract with NBC

Cosby

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bill Cosby, star of the highest-rated show in television history, will return to NBC for a sixth season of "The Cosby Show."

"I will work even harder to ensure that people get what I consider to be quality," Cosby said in a statement announcing the deal Thursday. "I love my job and take great pride in doing it."

Since its debut in 1984, "The Cosby Show" has been almost single-handedly responsible for NBC's dominance in the Nielsen ratings. The situation comedy chronicles the minor domestic dilemmas of the Huxtable family.

"'The Cosby Show' has been the symbol of success and quality at NBC for the past five years," said Brandon Tartikoff, president of NBC Entertainment. "Knowing that it will return for the 1989-90 season allows an entire company to sleep better at night."

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Debra Winger and Nick Nolte will star in a mystery movie written by playwright Arthur Miller, the movie's producers announced.

The film, "Everybody Wins," will be shot in eight weeks in and around Wilmington and at N.C. Film Studios, production manager Tim Bourne said Thursday. He described the story as "a murder mystery set in a small New England mill town."

Miller, author of "Death of a Salesman," wrote an original screenplay for the film, Bourne said.

The independent production will be by Jeremy Thomas, the British producer of "The Last Emperor," which won nine 1988 Academy Awards, including best picture, Bourne said.

It will be directed by Karel Reisz, a British director whose credits include "Sweet Dreams," "The French Lieutenant's Woman" and "Who'll Stop the Rain?"

Ms. Winger starred in "Betrayed" and "An Officer and a Gentleman." Nolte, whose credits include "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," filmed "Weeds" in Wilmington in 1986.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two days after TV talk-show host Phil Donahue took on women wrestlers, Geraldo Rivera isn't making any bones about having his nose broken in a brawl on today's edition of his syndicated show, "Geraldo."

In the show, taped in New York on Nov. 3, a fight broke out between black activists and representatives of a professed racist organization. Rivera was hit with a chair and his nose is broken when he tried to stop the free-for-all.

In what is being advertised as an "unprecedented" move, Rivera has taped a special introduction for today's "Geraldo" installment:

"As most of you already know, and as you can see by the way I look right now, today's program on 'Young Hatemongers' came to an unexpectedly violent conclusion," Rivera says. "Parents, be advised that the language and violence contained makes this show inappropriate for small children."

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — After three years in the making, a record album saluting American soldiers has been completed in time for Veterans Day thanks to help from some top musicians and singers, including Dolly Parton's sister Stella Parton and instrumentalists Mark O'Connor and Bela Fleck.

Singer Bobby Ross, a former member of the 101st Airborne Division at Fort Campbell, Ky., performs tunes like "Finally Welcomed Home," "Saigon State of Mind," "Too Close to the Line" and "No Home for the Brave (in the Land of the Free)."

Parton did background vocals for the LP, "Voice of America." O'Connor, a finalist this year for Country Music Association musician of the year, played fiddle and mandolin. Fleck, of the group New Grass Revival, played banjo.

"Mark O'Connor said he was doing this so there wouldn't be another Vietnam," said Don Hoffman, a Navy veteran who spearheaded the project.

Country stars George Strait, Ricky Skaggs, Rosanne Cash, Rodney Crowell and Sharon White are on the board of directors of a non-profit corporation administering a scholarship fund being created from the album's proceeds, Hoffman said. The scholarships will go to descendants of Americans killed in wars.

DANBURY, Conn. (AP) — Violinist Isaac Stern will be the honorary chairman of a committee to hand out awards named after opera great Marian Anderson and aimed at furthering the careers of young American singers.

The Marian Anderson Celebration Committee will seek to raise $500,000 for a permanent fund to finance the annual awards. Seed money of $25,000 has been provided by the Greater Danbury Arts Council, the Charles Ives Center for the Arts announced Thursday.

Other members of the committee include Harry Belafonte, Lloyd Richards, Kitty Carlisle Hart, and Vladmir and Wanda Toscanini Horowitz.

Anderson, who has lived in Danbury since she retired in 1945, was the first black opera star to perform at the Metropolitan Opera in New York and sang at the inaugurations of Franklin D. Roosevelt and John F. Kennedy.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — James A. McGowan, a paraplegic who gained national attention with his failed attempt to swim the English Channel in 1986, has been named executive director of a beleaguered charity that tries to fulfill the dreams of seriously ill children.

Until recently the assistant director of Temple University's Office of Disabled Student Services, McGowan, 56, accepted the job with the Philadelphia-based Sunshine Foundation last week.

The multimillion-dollar charity was founded by William Sample, a former Philadelphia police officer. A state investigation has criticized Sample's handling of $34,000 of the fund's money. The charity also faces a deficit estimated at $725,000.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The makers of "The Karate Kid Part III" are looking for a new challenger for star Ralph Macchio, but they say you've got to be young, tough and handsome.

More than 2,000 hopefuls are expected to try out in open auditions to be held Saturday in New York and Los Angeles.

The new male challenger must look no older than 18, be muscular and athletic, and have a knowledge of boxing, wrestling or karate, the producers said.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Maestro Lorin Maazel has filled the void created by the departure of Andre Previn from the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra four years ago.

Maazel made his debut Thursday night as music director of the 100-member orchestra, which he first joined in his teens as a full-time violinist and apprentice conductor.

"I enjoy being here. I am an American and I feel my place is in this country even though I've conducted so much abroad," said Maazel, 58.

Maazel's appearance Thursday night was his first public act as the symphony's music director.

Economist upbeat on Texas economy

Says Midland must capitalize on oil, labor pool

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

"I'm very optimistic about Texas. I think when we look at the state, we've got a lot going on," says Dr. Ray Perryman, an economist from Baylor University.

Speaking at a luncheon meeting of the Midland Committee Thursday, Perryman, 35, assured the gathering that the economies of Texas and the Permian Basin are undergoing a "real, live recovery."

Still, he cautioned, economic recovery and diversification take time, hard work and intelligence because competition is greater and more intense. "Economic development is intensely personal and local," he said. "You have to do it yourself."

He said Midland would have to capitalize on its best resources, which are oil and a sizable, young labor pool. "There's going to be a labor shortage in the next 15 years," he predicted. "Companies will have to come where the labor pool is, and West Texas has a young population. And your labor force growth will be higher at a time when labor needs are at a crucial stage."

He also suggested that West Texans look for ways to move up the value scale of the oil they produce and the cotton and cattle they grow, by finding ways to process those products. "For every dollar of the gross national product that comes from oil or cotton, we get 22 cents. Someone else is getting 78 cents. We need to find ways to bring more of that 78 cents back to Texas," he said.

He told the group that Texas has undergone some fundamental changes since 1973, when the Arab embargo changed Texas history forever. From 1978 to 1981, especially, when the U.S. economy was in a severe recession while Texas was experiencing real growth of 30 percent.

As the Texas economy recovers from the highs and lows of oil prices, Perryman told the gathering to quit looking back to the boom times of 1981. "Look at the number of people working this year as opposed to last year. It's higher. Look at the amount of income, amount of sales, amount of output compared to last year. It's higher," he said.

Texaco, Saudis final refining venture

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Texaco Inc. said Thursday it signed a definitive agreement with Saudi Arabian Oil Co. on their previously announced venture to jointly refine and market petroleum in the United States.

Texaco will receive $812 million for a 50 percent interest in its refining assets and marketing system in 23 East and Gulf Coast states. The oil company said it expects to enjoy an additional $1 billion in cash benefits and savings resulting from the joint venture.

The agreement, which was originally outlined in June, provides Saudi Arabia, the world's biggest oil exporter, with a secure outlet for its products while virtually guaranteeing Texaco a steady stream of crude at market prices.

The joint venture will be known as Star Enterprises and will be headquartered in Houston.

The company will operate three major Texaco refineries — in Delaware City, Del.; Convent, La.; and Port Arthur, Texas. It also will operate about 1,450 owned and leased service stations and distribute products to more than 10,000 stations. It will employ 5,000 people and is expected to be in operation by Dec. 31.

The Saudis will provide 75 percent of the Star Enterprises' initial oil inventory. The joint venture will retain the right to buy up to 600,000 barrels of crude from the Saudis each day at market prices.

At the signing of the agreement in London, Texaco President James Kinnear called the joint venture "one of several major steps we have taken to restructure Texaco and to enhance shareholder value."

Earlier this year Texaco emerged from protection from its creditors under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. It has been selling off $5 billion in assets to offest the disastrous effects of prolonged litigation with Pennzoil Co., which resulted in the bankruptcy court reorganization and a $3 billion payment to Pennzoil.

The oil giant also survived a bitter power struggle with its largest shareholder, financier Carl Icahn, who attempted to acquire the company for about $14 billion.

Observers have taken issue with the Saudi venture on the grounds that it raises questions about increased foreign leverage over the U.S. oil industry, which has become increasingly reliant on imports.

The venture is believed to be the biggest of its kind between a foreign supplier and a domestic oil company in the "downstream" end of the business — the process for changing crude into gasoline and other products.

The Saudi government has hinted that Saudi Arabia is interested in forming more marketing joint ventures. Oil industry sources said the kingdom was interested in linking up with European companies.

LABOR

New regs lift ban on home industries

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government is lifting bans on homework in the garment industry, fulfilling a promise made in 1980 by Ronald Reagan during his presidential campaign.

The bans were imposed 47 years ago to counter widespread exploitation of immigrant and child laborers.

New Labor Department regulations published Thursday and scheduled to take effect Jan. 9 would allow homework for the first time since the early 1940s in five garment industry trades: gloves and mittens, embroideries, buttons and buckles, handkerchiefs and some jewelry work.

Labor Secretary Ann Dore McLaughlin said lifting the prohibitions will provide both employers and employees with greater flexibility in dealing with work-family conflicts while at the same time improving U.S. competitiveness in world markets.

She said licensing of employers who hire home workers plus increased enforcement by her department will assure compliance with federal labor standards such as the minimum wage and prohibitions on child labor.

But unions vowed to challenge the regulations in court, saying they will lead to a repeat of the sweatshop conditions, illegally low pay and abuse of child labor that first prompted the home work prohibitions.

Industrial homework has been a major deregulation battleground between unions on one side and the administration and business groups on the other for the past eight years.

The AFL-CIO, afraid of losing members or being unable to organize workers if they are dispersed in their homes instead of in offices or factories, last year called for expanding the current prohibitions to include computer terminal work.

Non-OPEC producers gather

AUSTIN (AP) — Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance met Thursday with Oman's oil minister, as well as representatives of five states, in preparation for the Nov. 21 OPEC session in Vienna.

Hance said oil representatives from Louisiana, Oklahoma and Alaska would join him at the meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

"What we want to do is monitor OPEC, and advocate price stability," Hance said Thursday after his 4½-hour meeting with Oman oil minister Said al-Shanfari, whose country adjoins Saudi Arabia.

"The wild price swings are detrimental to the oil and gas industry. When the price is low and comes back (high), it hurts the consumer. Meanwhile, the low price has killed a lot of producers." Hance said.

Church's chicken war gets messier

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The battle over Church's Fried Chicken is getting messier with a shareholder filing a class-action lawsuit against the company's board of directors, claiming its actions to avert a hostile takeover jeopardized shareholders' equity interests.

San Antonio-based Church's recently recommended to shareholders to reject as inadequate a $290 million takeover offer by Popeyes Famous Fried Chicken and Biscuits, owned by A. Copeland Enterprises Inc. of New Orleans.

Robert J. Piro and the Three Bridges Investment Group filed the suit in state district court Tuesday, a day after the Church's board recommended refusal of the offer, which will expire on Nov. 22.

"Individual defendants have conspired in a manipulative scheme to freeze out attempts to acquire Church's without any valid, justifiable or compelling corporate purpose and to protect and preserve for certain of themselves significant benefits in which Church's shareholders do not share," the lawsuit states.

The suit, which claims that the directors breached their fiduciary duty to the 4,500 stockholders, also alleges that the defendants, including the company's cofounder and largest shareholder, David J. Bamberger, engaged in a "plan and scheme to deprive" the shareholders

Oil prices up in cautious trading

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices continue in a narrow range as traders await the outcome of upcoming OPEC meetings.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for December delivery of West Texas Intermediate opened at $14.09, a gain of 11 cents over Thursday's close. By mid-morning, however, prices had given some ground, standing at $14.06, up 8 cents.

Thursday, WTI contracts closed at $13.98, up 12 cents from Wednesday. On Wednesday, the contract had gained 6 cents.

Among refined petroleum products traded on the NYMEX, the December contract for wholesale unleaded gasoline settled up 0.14 cent to 47.40 cents a gallon. The contract rose 0.86 cent on Wednesday.

The December contract for wholesale home heating oil fell 0.64 cent to 43.88 cents a gallon, after rising 0.99 cent Wednesday.

Energy analysts said some prices were boosted by reports that Saudi Arabia denied extending discounts to its Japanese customers, but they said trading remained light and cautious in advance of key OPEC meetings.

"Overall, I think there's mixed sentiment on how to interpret what's going to take place at the meetings," said Bob Baker, an analyst with Prudential-Bache Securities Inc.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is scheduled to hold price and strategy committee meetings next week, while the full cartel plans to meet the following week. At issue is limiting production to help boost sagging worldwide oil prices.

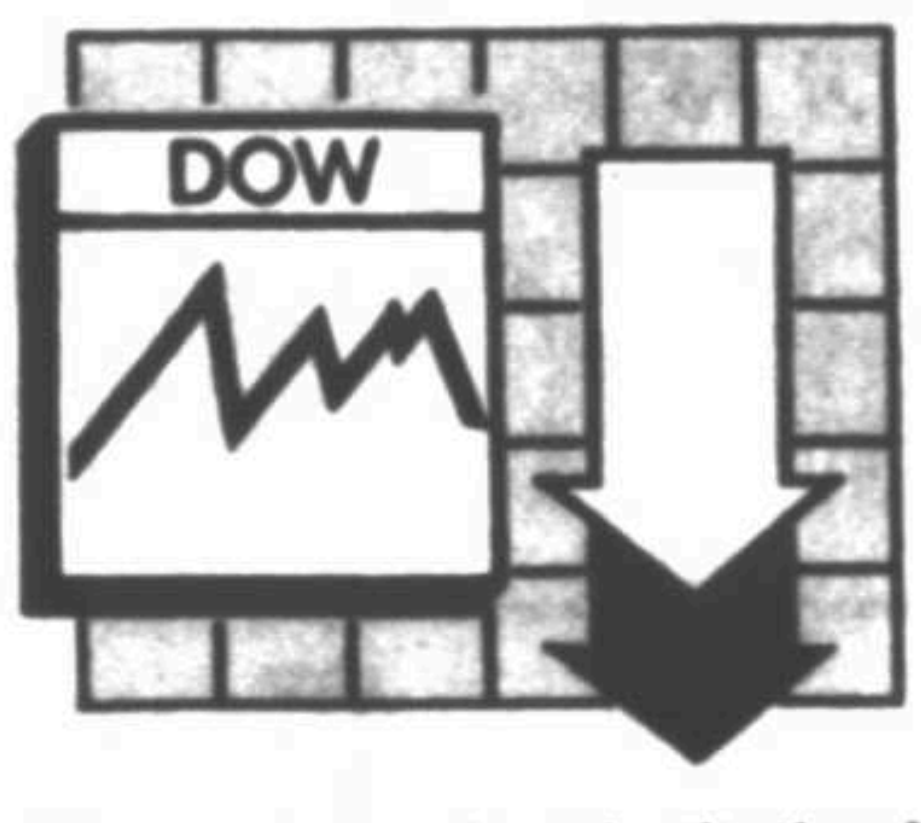
Stocks fall in uninteresting session



NEW YORK (AP) — The market turned in a mixed performance Thursday in what some analysts said was a dull, uninteresting day on Wall Street with little to stir investors.

"Nobody had any conviction to do anything, to be aggressive buyers," said Michael Metz, vice president for Oppenheimer & Co. "Short-term, the market is trying to find its footing."

Analysts said the problems that plagued the market before Tuesday's presidential election — the dollar, interest rates and the deficits — returned to prey on investor confidence. Those concerns kept institutional investors on the sidelines.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials declined 3.55 to close at 2,114.69 after drifting in a narrow range.

Volume on the floor of the NYSE came to 128.92 million shares, down sharply from 153.14 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trading at regional exchanges and on the over-the-counter market, totaled 156.162 million shares.

Advancing issues barely outnumbered decliners in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 715 issues up, 686 down and 582 unchanged.

ECONOMY

"Don't talk about 1981. That's gone. Even if oil were to go to $40 today, it would help, but it wouldn't do for us what 1981 did. We won't get the boom euphoria we had, but we can build a strong economy," he added.

Like Texans everywhere, Perryman celebrated the Department of Energy's awarding Texas the multi-billion dollar supercolliding super conductor Thursday.

However, he said, such a project by itself is not enough to rebuild the state's economy. "At its peak, the SSC will create 10,000 construction jobs. When it's up and running, it will generate 3,000 direct and about 3,000 indirect jobs," he pointed out. "There are over 600,000 Texans looking for work. For all its hype and publicity, Texas will not be saved by a supercolliding super conducting hole in the ground."

"The Texas economy won't be built 200 or 500 jobs at a time. It'll be built five jobs at a time."

He noted that Texas has gone through three economic eras: Cattle, cotton and oil. "West Texas was right in the middle of it. We're now facing a new, different and more challenging economic era. You're three for three so far, and I'm betting you'll be in the middle of this one too."

of the true value of their equity interests.

The plaintiffs said that the $8-per-share offer represented a premium over market price prior to the offer's announcement and exceeded the price at which Church's sold stock during most of the year.

The week before the offer was made, Church's stock was trading just below $7 per share.

The suit also claims that a recently adopted shareholder rights plan will "impede the free market trading and value of Church's shares and the ability of stockholders to sell shares to the highest bidder based upon the company's business operations and finances."

Church's president and chief executive officer Ernest Renaud could not be reached for comment Wednesday and did not return telephone calls to The Associated Press Thursday.

Nicholas Chimicles, representing Three Bridges Investment, said the immediate desire is for an injunction forcing the board to deal with Copeland's offer and to redeem the shareholders rights plan.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Figuring fund shares depends on amount redeemed

By BILL DOYLE

Q. It is necessary for me to redeem my mutual fund shares, since the fund is changing from load to no-load. The amount will be about $5,000, depending on the share value on the day I redeem.

How do I arrive at my average cost per share, in order to report my profit or loss on Schedule D of my Form 1040 federal income tax return?

Doyle

A. You don't need to know your average cost, if you are going to redeem all your shares. In that case, you simply add together all money you paid to purchase shares, plus all the dividends and capital gains distributions you reinvested to buy additional shares. That tells you your total "basis" — cost for tax purposes.

The difference between that basis and the amount your receive when you redeem is profit or loss, which you are required to report as a capital gain or capital loss on Schedule D.

If you redeem only some of your shares, divide your total basis by the number of shares you own to get your basis per share. Multiply that per share basis by the number redeemed and list that number as your basis. You'll have to do that calculation every time you make a redemption.

But you shouldn't redeem because the mutual fund is changing from load to no-load — unless the fund is going to lay on a 12b-1 plan, which will be a constant drain on share value and/or a rear-end load in the form of a redemption fee or contingent deferred sales charge, which will cost you money if you redeem at some future date.

If the fund is going to become true no-load — with no commission charge at the time of purchase, no 12b-1 plan and no rear-end load — you would be wise to stay with it.

Q. I recently redeemed shares of a mutual fund in which I invested over a period of years. How can I learn the cost basis of those shares? The shares were held by the fund's custodian bank.

A. You received a confirmation statement every time you purchased shares with your own money and every time you reinvested dividends and capital gains distributions. Those confirmation statements are a record of the prices you paid for the shares you bought.

You don't need all those statements but you do need the annual statements, summarizing each year's activity. All mutual funds send annual statements to shareholders. If you didn't keep the annual statements, contact the mutual fund and ask for copies.

Many funds provide records of shareholders' purchases, reinvestments and redemptions free. But some charge for that service — especially when records have to be dug out from many years ago, before computers made the job easy.

Q. I have a rear-end load mutual fund from which I recently made a withdrawal. The rear-end penalty — a contingent deferred sales charge — this year is 4 percent.

I asked for a net withdrawal of $9,300. The confirmation statement shows $9,672 worth of shares redeemed and a $386.88 redemption fee. As a result, I received a check for $9,285.12

Relatively simple arithmetic shows that $386.88 is 4.16 percent of $9,285.12 — not the 4 percent the fund's prospectus clearly states. How can they get away with this?

A. It's because that rear-end load is calculated as a percentage of the dollar value of the shares redeemed. And $386.88 is exactly 4 percent of $9,672.

Q. My mutual fund has a contingent deferred sales charge starting a 5 percent the first year and declining one percentage point a year until it disappears. I feel this is far superior to other mutual funds with front loads of 8.5 percent charged at the time shares are bought. Don't you agree?

A. Sure. It's better than front-load arrangements, but it's not as good as true no-load funds — on which there are no such charges.

Businesses, seeking to reduce labor costs, have been subcontracting jobs in increasing numbers to people working out of their homes. Link Resources, a private research firm, estimates more than 23 million people are now performing all or part of their jobs at home and says the rate is growing by 7.5 percent a year.

"The changing work force demographics demand that we provide employment opportunities that allow workers the freedom to choose flexible alternatives, including the ability to work in one's own home," Mrs. McLaughlin said Thursday. "Women, for example, have entered the work force by the millions."

Homework, she said, allows both employers and employees to address child and elderly care and parental leaves without added costs.

Jay Mazur, president of the 173,000-member International Ladies Garment Workers Union, called the new regulations a "callous and illegal betrayal of American workers" and said his union will file suit to prevent them from being implemented.

The garment workers and other unions have twice before repelled the administration's attempts to lift the prohibitions on homework. The administration won a limited victory in 1984, lifting the ban on knitted outerwear, but only after a three-year court fight.

Mazur said the administration "cynically waited for American working people to cast their ballots" before launching what he called its latest "sneak attack on workers' rights."

"With no public announcement, the lame duck White House has given the green light to ... condemn countless American workers to exploitation and sweatshop conditions," he said.

The current prohibitions were adopted between 1941 and 1943 under the Fair Labor Standards Act in response to reports of rampant exploitation of immigrant and child home workers paid on a piecework basis.

The General Accounting Office, a watchdog arm of Congress, said in a report three months ago that sweatshop conditions are still rampant in the clothing industry.

And it quoted many state and federal officials as saying the problem has gotten worse rather than better over the past decade, particularly among Haitian, Asian, Hispanic and Mexican immigrants.

The new regulations do not attempt to overturn state bans on garment industry homework in Hawaii, California, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Rhode Island and New Jersey.

About 75,000 people — none of them home workers — are now employed in the five industries in which a ban on homework is being eliminated, according to union officials.

Despite the current prohibitions, the Bureau of Labor Statistics estimates there already are about 122,000 garment home workers, most paid on a piecework basis.

Man recalls night as 'if it were yesterday'

Related stories, Page 6B

WORMS, West Germany (AP) — As a 10-year-old Jewish boy, Eric Mayer watched Nazi henchmen destroy his home and loot family treasures. The memory still haunts him a half-century later.

"I saw the synagogue burning. Our home was destroyed, and books and precious family heirlooms were thrown out the window, desecrated," Mayer said of the night of Nazi terror 50 years ago in his hometown Worms.

Sitting Thursday in the reconstructed synagogue, Mayer said, "I remember that night as if it were yesterday."

Mayer, of Wayne, N.J., was visiting his birthplace along with 40 other members of the New York-based International Memorial Committee for Jewish Victims of Nazism.

The occasion for the visit, which included several Worms-born Jews from America, was to mark the anniversary of the Kristallnacht pogrom of Nov. 9-10, 1938. Worms is 35 miles southwest of Frankfurt.

On that night, Nazi thugs destroyed hundreds of synagogues, thousands of Jewish homes and businesses, and sent 30,000 Jews to concentration camps. Ninety-one Jews were killed.

"The next morning, my mother, brother, sister, aunt, grandfather and I were sent to a jail with no facilities. About 70 people were crammed into a small room," Mayer told The Associated Press.

"It was called 'protective custody' to protect us from the German people, who were supposedly 'rightfully' angry at us," Mayer said in English.

His father was sent to Nazi concentration camp Buchenwald, and neither he nor Mayer's mother survived the Holocaust. Their names are now on a plaque in the synagogue, along with other Jews from Worms who were systematically murdered.

Mayer later fled to France and eventually the United States. He said he has since visited Worms and other West German cities many times, often because of his work as a business consultant.

Before the Holocaust, Worms had a rich Jewish tradition dating to the Middle Ages.

The 11th-century synagogue and adjoining mikvah, or ritual bath, draws tourists from across the country. A small Jewish museum has been built next to the synagogue and the complex is on a street of old houses preserved from the neighborhood's long era as a Jewish quarter.

But Worms' Jewish population was nearly wiped out during the Third Reich. City officials say only one or two Jews are living in Worms today, compared to a pre-Nazi Jewish population of about 1,100.

Committee president Gerhard Spies, 72, of Mamaroneck, N.Y., lost numerous relatives during the Nazi period. He said his father, a president of Worms' former Jewish Community, was "a broken man" after internment in Buchenwald.

One important goal of the committee's visits to Worms, Spies said, was to talk to West German youth.

"I have made peace with myself, and when I come here I visit schools and talk to young people. I tell them what a Jew is, what he thinks about different things, and exchange viewpoints," Spies said.

Spies said he has been disappointed by most young people's lack of knowledge about Jews.

"This may be changing now, but even two years ago I found a lack of understanding in many issues concerning Israel and Judaism. Even the teachers themselves were sometimes misinformed," Spies said.

Another committee member said the situation among youth is changing for the better.

The committee has participated with the city of Worms in several events marking Kristallnacht.

German president resigns after controversial speech

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The president of parliament resigned today under attack for saying — on the 50th anniversary of the Kristallnacht pogrom against the Jews — that many Germans initially found Hitler's rule "glorious."

Jenninger

Parliament President Philipp Jenninger's speech also called the early years of the Nazi's Third Reich a "triumphal procession."

In his resignation statement, Jenninger, who also condemned the Nazi pogram in his address Thursday, said he was misunderstood.

Nevertheless, his speech was criticized throughout the country and abroad.

"This event shows us how the darkest chapter of German history is still a present-day thing," Hans-Jochen Vogel, leader of the opposition Social Democratic Party, said after Jenninger's resignation.

"We must now work even harder with others to learn how to live and worthily deal with this challenge," Vogel told reporters.

The leftist Greens Party said in a statement: "The background of what happened is the inability of many Germans to stand up to their own past. We hope...a discussion about guilt and responsibility for this recent history will take place."

The furor overshadowed West Germany's carefully organized ceremonies marking Kristallnacht, the night of terror against the Jews that signaled the start of the Holocaust.

Communist East Germany's official news agency ADN called the Jenninger speech "a scandal." Israel's Foreign Ministry called the incident "unacceptable and unfortunate."

"It's a scandal, it's a shame," said Frankfurt Jewish community spokesman Michel Friedman, a member of Jenniger's party, the Christian Democrats.

Jenniger said he was misunderstood. "My speech was not understood by many listeners the way I had intended it to be," the 56-year-old politician said in a written statement announcing his resignation. "I am deeply sorry and I am very hurt, if I have offended the feelings of others."

His speech, at a special session of the Bundestag, or parliament, caused a walkout by about 50 lawmakers and calls for his resignation.

He added: "During my whole political career — most recently as president of the German Parliament — I have been active in working for reconciliation with the Jews and for the vital interests of the state of Israel."

Jenninger said he was stepping down as Bundestag president because he wanted to avoid damage to the office and because he believed he lost the trust of many colleagues.

Jenninger had been the No. 2 West German official after President Richard von Weizsaecker, under the nation's rules of diplomatic protocal.

A member of Chancellor Helmut Kohl's Christian Democrats, Jenninger has been a lawmaker since 1969 and was one of Kohl's closest aides before he was elected Bundestag president in November 1984.

In his speech Thursday, Jenninger talked at length about the positive feelings of many ordinary Germans early in the Hitler dictatorship.

"Didn't Hitler bring to reality what (Kaiser) Wilhelm II had only promised, that is, to lead the Germans to glorious times? Wasn't he chosen by Providence, a Fuehrer such as is given to a people only once in a thousand years?" Jenninger asked.

"For the fate of the Germans and European Jews, Hitler's successes were perhaps even more fateful than his crimes and misdeeds," Jenninger said.

"The years from 1933 to 1938, even from a distant retrospective and in the knowledge of what followed, still are a fascinating thing today, since throughout history there was hardly a parallel to Hitler's triumphant procession during the first years."

Some listeners sobbed when Jenninger read an eyewitness account of the murder of concentration camp victims in 1942.

"Blood was running over the shoulders of almost everyone," he read. "Some of those shot were still moving, some lifted their arms and turned their heads, to show they were still alive."

World Jewish Congress President Edgar M. Bronfman called Jenninger's remarks "reprehensible."

But a leader of West Germany's Jewish community defended Jenninger's speech, saying he could not understand calls for his resignation.

"I welcome that the parliament president described in full clarity what was happening in Germany between 1933 and 1938," said Michael Fuerst, a deputy chairman of the Central Council of Jews in West Germany.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Search for crew continues

LONDON (AP) — A Canadian plane and a Soviet ship searched today for 27 crewmen from a tanker that broke in two in the stormy north Atlantic, but authorities said there was little chance they would find survivors.

"It doesn't look like there's any possibility of finding anybody," said Capt. Mort MacDonnell of the Canadian Search and Rescue Coordination Center in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

"The indications are there was a bad fire on the vessel and the two empty lifeboats which were found were burned," he said in a telephone interview.

All 27 Greek and Honduran crew members were on the stern section of the 65,746-ton Odyssey when it broke in two Wednesday and burst into flames, British-based Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence Unit said.

The Canadians told British coast guard officials that the fire started in the stern section and then ignited the oil surrounding the vessel, spreading the fire onto the ocean surface, Lloyd's said. The fire burned for hours.

3 striking steelworkers die

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Thousands of strikers angered by shrinking paychecks stormed Brazil's biggest steel mill and hurled rocks and bombs at police and soldiers. Two workers were fatally shot and another was bludgeoned to death, officials said Thursday.

The confrontation Wednesday night at the National Steel Company in Volta Redonda, 80 miles northwest of Rio, was the worst outburst in a wave of labor unrest caused by a sputtering economy under President Jose Sarney.

According to the plant's press office, about 3,000 strikers armed with rocks, iron bars and firebombs gathered inside the plant and refused to leave.

About 800 soldiers and police tried to disperse the strikers and were pelted with stones and firebombs, the office said.

Plant officials first said five workers had been killed, but later amended the figure, saying a morgue official accidentally included two criminals among the dead.

71 hurt in new China quake

BEIJING (AP) — China said today that 71 people were injured in a strong earthquake that struck off its southeastern coast, and the number reported homeless from an earlier quake on the southern border doubled to 200,000.

It occurred four days after a quake near the Burmese border.

SSC supporters still face funding battle

By JENNIFER DIXON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Super collider supporters will have to do some heavy lifting next year to convince Congress to build the giant physics project, but Sen. Phil Gramm says it's more a question priority and less one of money.

Gramm believes money can be carved out of next year's budget to move the project beyond the research phase and toward actual construction on Ellis County farmland south of Dallas.

But questions about financing the project erupted just hours after Energy Secretary John S. Herrington announced his decision to build the high-energy physics project in Texas.

Senators from four of the six other states that had also sought the project warned that if the super collider is to have "the slightest chance of being funded," the president would have to prove the Texas choice was based soley on "scientific criteria utilizing a fair, open and competitive bidding process."

Rep. Tom DeLay, a Texas Republican and member of the House Appropriations Committee, says that after fences are mended, the monumental work of nailing down enough money for the project begins.

The Texas delegation, however, has the "wherewithal to get something for the super collider," DeLay said.

Speaker Jim Wright is from Fort Worth, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, is chairman of the influential Senate Finance Committee, and there are several other Texans on key committees.

The super collider will bring its host state thousands of jobs, international prestige in the scientific community, and spinoffs for transportation, medicine, communications and defense.

Yet Congress has been wary about funding the project, estimated by the Energy Department to cost, in 1988 dollars, $10.8 billion to build and operate over a 25-year period.

During the last session, President Reagan had proposed $360 million be spent on the collider, but backers say they were happy to finally get $100 million. The legislation, however, decreed that the money could not be used for construction.

DeLay said he believes the strongest opposition will come from supporters of social programs and the scientific community, with both fearing the money for the super collider will lessen their share of the federal dollar.

But Gramm and DeLay say new money can be found to finance the project.

"Because of rate of economic growth, revenue will rise about about $80 billion above this year's level," Gramm said. After half goes to reduce the deficit, Gramm said $40 billion would be available in new money.

Gramm advocates a small fraction of that, or $600 million, be set aside for the super collider. But he and DeLay agree convincing their colleagues may be no small feat.

"The debate you end up in is a debate about priorities," Gramm said. "There is a big tendency in Congress to spend on programs that yield benefits in the next election rather than the next generation."

"Obviously, there is a lot of heavy lifing to do in trying to ensure the American people and Congress support an investment in science and technology important to our competitiveness in the market and to our future growth and prosperity," Gramm said.

DeLay said it is realistic to hope for $300 million to $600 million next year, but he's taking it one year at a time.

"We want to get a shovel in the ground," DeLay said. "Once we break ground the project is committed. I'd rather work on breaking ground than years done the road. That was the big battle this year."

The six senators who questioned the Texas choice — Alan Dixon and Paul Simon of Illinois, Donald Reigle and Carl Levin of Michigan, Dennis DeConcini of Arizona, and Tim Wirth of Colorado — are asking President Reagan to establish a bipartisan commission of high-energy physicists that would review all seven of the finalist sites. Officials of the two other sites, North Carolina and Tennessee, did not join the appeal.

Will collider yield unified theory?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Physicists hope the superconducting super collider will help them explain the very origin of matter itself and perhaps lead them to their holy grail: a single theory that unites all the forces of nature, from gravity spanning galaxies to the mysterious bonds that hold the proton together.

The first task of the collider, if it is built, may be a search for the Higgs particle, named after Peter Higgs of the University of Edinburgh in Scotland, the scientist who first postulated its existence.

Scientists say this subnuclear particle should emerge from proton-proton collisions 20 times more powerful than anything possible today. Finding it would be a giant step forward in understanding nature.

The super collider, a 53-miles around machine, will be the first atom smasher able to concentrate in a small volume of space the energy density that must have existed in the theoretical "big bang" origin of the universe. The Energy Department on Thursday selected a site near Dallas for the giant machine, even though Congress has not yet decided it should be built.

The current picture of nature, called the "standard model," is tantalizingly incorrect — but nobody is sure just where it goes wrong. At very high energies, the theory predicts certain particle interactions will occur with greater than 100 percent probability — which is an impossibility.

Modifications to fix up the standard model almost always require extremely energetic collisions for their experimental tests.

A recent example of theory-testing on which the collider will build is the discovery of the so-called W and Z particles at the CERN particle accelerator in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1983, predicted by the "electroweak" theory. This shows the fundamental identity of the familiar forces of electricity and magnetism and the weak forces responsible for some forms of nuclear radioactivity, including the reactions respnsible for the sun's energy.

It is the W and Z particles that carry the unified "electroweak" force, just as it is the familiar photon or particle of light that carries the electromagnetic force.

Though the masses of the W and Z particles could be estimated in advance as roughly 90 times that of the proton, there is no way to calculate the mass of the Higgs particle. But scientists say there should be an upper limit of about 1,000 times the mass of the proton.

All mass is equivalent to energy, shown in the famous "E MC squared" relationship first developed by Albert Einsten. That is, the energy of any particle is equal to its mass times the speed of light squared.

It's convenient to speak of mass in terms of "electron volts," the energy acquired by an electron falling through a voltage. Electrons in the filament of a flashlight bulb are accelerated through 3 electron volts.

The mass of a proton at rest is a little less than a billion electron volts.

The total collision energy must be around 40 trillion electron volts to create a particle of 1 trillion electron volts. The world's most powerful accelerator, at Fermi Lab in Chicago, can produce 2 trillion electron volts, whereas the super collider is designed to generate 40 trillion electron volts.

"Our lack of understanding of the masses of the various particles is a very deep problem," the super collider Central Design Group wrote in its 1986 report.

The standard model says protons and neutrons are made of smaller particles called "quarks" held together by force-carrying particles called "gluons."

"There is no understanding why the quarks and (associated lighter particles) have the masses they do," the report said.

The quarks seem to come in three families or generations: one forms protons and neutrons and is associated with electrons; another family, not found in nature, seems to be associated with the muon particle; and a third associated with the tau particle.

"There is no understanding of why there are three generations; in fact, there may be more," the report said.

Other possible tasks for the super collider:

- Electrons, muons, taus and neutrinos all appear to be simple geometric points instead of collections of smaller particles. The super collider may be able to see if this is true.
- If there is a Higgs particle, is it made of smaller particles? Some theories give it structure and postulate the existence of forces inside it analagous to those inside the proton.
- Another theory called "supersymmetry" predicts several Higgs particles and accounts for all forces, including gravity, while giving a partner particle to every known particle. This theory says particles are made of "superstrings" of fantastically small dimensions instead of geometrical points.

SSC Facts and Figures

The selection of a Texas site to build the superconducting super collider effectively ends the race among 25 states to capture the economic benefits tied to construction of the massive project. Here is a summary of the economics of the super collider:

BUILDING COST: The Energy Department estimates the collider will cost $4.4 billion. The Congressional Budget Office said it could take $6.4 billion if costs follow the pattern for atom smashers already built. Their more conservative estimate of $5.1 billion still tops the Energy Department's.

OPERATING COST: Plans call for an annual budget of $270 million.

FUTURE COSTS: The department estimates the total cost for building and operating the collider for 25 years at $10.8 billion in 1988 dollars.

EMPLOYMENT: The project should generate 3,000 permanent jobs and an additional 4,000 for construction.

OTHER ECONOMIC IMPACT: Besides project jobs, local businesses should benefit from the scientific and other spinoffs of a new industry. Also, the influx of highly trained personnel working on the collider is expected to improve local socioeconomic and educational standards.

THE NEGATIVES: Opponents to the collider fear the project will siphon much-needed money away from other scientific research. Others fear detrimental effects on the environment. In addition, 500 residents of Ellis County, Texas, will lose all or some of their property to the project.

THE OBSTACLES: The Energy Department must prepare a full-fledged environmental statement before the selection can be finalized. Funds could be hard to come by. Congress has not yet appropriated money to build the collider, providing money only for engineering design and some research and development items. In all, Congress has appropriated $205 million for the project.

Waxahachie's 'good news' brings bad tidings to Maypearl family

By DAVE PEGO

MAYPEARL (AP) — When Olive May Wilburn, 81, learned that the superconducting super collider was coming, she wept for the home her family stands to lose, along with the land her late husband began farming in 1944.

The elderly woman shuffled outside with her walker and looked at a surrounding wheatfield, plowed only the day before. The land her husband had worked from 1944 until he died 10 years ago, the land where her 3-year-old great-granddaughter now plays, may soon be lost to progress.

The Wilburn homestead is mapped out to become the research campus of the $4.4 billion super collider, midway between Waxahachie and Maypearl.

The future is threatening to take away Olive May Wilburn's past, and she's not sure what to do about it.

"I just kept thinking that maybe it wouldn't come, maybe it wouldn't happen ... ," Mrs. Wilburn said.

But granddaughter Betty Hopgood delivered the news Thursday morning after hearing it on the radio: The super collider would be built in Texas.

The announcement had many in Ellis County jumping for joy, but it only made the Wilburns mad.

Mrs. Wilburn and her husband had worked for 20 years to pay off their 200 acres.

After Texas bid for the super collider, state and federal officials notified the Wilburns their acreage would be needed for the project if the state won it.

"I hate to see farmers who have worked all their lives for their land have everything taken away," Mrs. Hopgood said.

Grandson Dale Wilburn, a 38-year-old machinist who lives with Mrs. Wilburn, said he checked local land values and has found some selling for up to $6,000 an acre.

"I don't know if that would be enough to buy something comparable," Wilburn said. "We'll be out on the street and I don't know if that will be enough."

But Mrs. Hopgood, watching 3-year-old Pamela run across her great-grandmother's kitchen, doubted they will be able to buy enough adjacent land to keep the family together. As it stands now, Pamela can walk to visit Mrs. Wilburn or another 80-year-old great-grandmother, or several other relatives.

"We'll never be together again, pretty soon," Mrs. Hopgood said. "We'll be lucky to find land fairly close to each other."

A&M physicist at Fermi Lab on 'big day'

By ROY BRAGG
Hearst News Service

COLLEGE STATION — Call it coincidence. Call it fate.

On the day the superconducting super collider was awarded to Texas, Peter McIntyre — the Texas A&M physicist who sold the project to two governors, four major universities, state and federal bureaucrats, skeptical scientists and the voters of Texas — wasn't even around to savor the victory.

Even more bizarre is the fact that McIntyre — who spent five years gladhanding legislators, explaining particle physics to big city businessmen and eating pounds of chicken fried steak at an endless stream of civic and community banquets — spent Thursday afternoon at the Fermi National Science Lab in Batavia, Ill., the particle accelerator that had been Texas' chief rival for the $5 billion SSC project.

"Is that irony?" he asked wryly.

McIntyre, in fact, won't come home until Sunday, when he finishes his weeklong shift as part of a months-long, 12-university international project.

A lot of people contributed to the state's winning SSC bid, McIntyre said Thursday. But colleagues say the 40-year-old physicist deserves a lion's share of the credit for getting the ball rolling.

"Peter and others took the idea out there to the physics community and convinced them this was a high priority project," said John Fackler Jr., A&M dean of science. "He actually sold it to the physics community who then convinced the Department of Energy that our federal government should go about building such a huge machine."

"From the very beginning, we knew it was liking grasping a tiger by the tail," said former A&M physics department head Robert Tribble. "Peter McIntyre in particular has devoted himself to this project for the last seven or eight years."

The project got its beginning when Sheldon Glashow, noted Harvard physicist and Nobel Prize winner, mentioned it in a 1983 lecture here, Tribble said. Glashow, at the time a visiting professor at A&M, dubbed the project the "Texatron," a name that even now makes McIntyre cringe.

Throughout the early 1980s, McIntyre said he and other A&M scientists formulated several variations of the SSC idea. It started 100 miles in circumference but was soon refined to 50 miles.

In 1983, he went to the office of then-university president Frank Vandiver.

"I went into his office and told him about this accelerator we were going to build," McIntyre recalled.

A&M's high energy physics research was in its infancy at the time, McIntyre said, so the proposal was rather preposterous on its face.

"Dr. Vandiver and his administration had the remarkable foresight and remarkable openmindedness to hear out a lunatic high-energy physicist who came to his door with an idea for a project that would costs millions of dollars and take a decade to build," McIntyre said.

"Most university presidents would have kicked my butt out."

While he convinced Vandiver, few others listened.

"It was like preaching in the wilderness," McIntyre says.

McIntyre then went to officials at three other schools — the University of Houston, the University of Texas and Rice University — to convince them to join in.

"These universities weren't used to cooperating," he said. "They're used to competing."

Together the schools formed the Texas Accelerator Center in 1984 and Woodlands Developer George Mitchell housed the group in that Montgomery County development.

Lobbying efforts then began at the state level, said Albert Cotton, an A&M distinguished professor of chemistry. Cotton and others were appointed by then-Gov. Mark White to a "Committee on National Laboratories," the precursor of today's Texas National Research Laboratory Commission.

White supported the idea, and Gov. Bill Clements and others picked up that support after Clements took office.

At one commission meeting, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby asked committee members how much money would be needed. Their response: a billion dollars. Hobby didn't blink. A bill calling for a statewide bond election was written the next day.

Fackler said A&M hydrologists and engineers have helped with geological site studies and construction research in connection with the SSC. The state's official SSC request suggests 50 endowed professorships at universities in the state — 13 will be at A&M.

Exact involvement in development and operation of the SSC by A&M hasn't been determined, said William Mobley, university president.

But Tribble said it's hoped faculty members will be given dual appointments, meaning they'll work here and at the SSC labs. Fermi has similar working arrangements with many University of Chicago re searchers.

State officials spent Thursday pat ting themselves on the back and Texans — always a proud lot — smiled to themselves at gaining an other bragging right.

Folks in Tennessee and Illinois commiserated.

And McIntyre?

He spent Thursday night where he'll be tonight.

In a Fermi lab, watching gauges.
