N.Y. bombs kill at least 4

Police zero in on man with links to all victims

Associated Press

CHEEKTOWAGA, N.Y. — A series of bombs hidden in toolboxes exploded Tuesday in widely scattered parts of upstate New York, killing at least four people and wounding several others. Authorities were hunting for a man who they said had links to all the victims.

The toolboxes containing the bombs apparently came in cardboard boxes with the words "Liberty Iron Works" on them, a Buffalo police dispatcher said.

No one was immediately arrested, but police said they were looking for one person in particular.

"We are zeroing in on a person but I cannot divulge whom at this time," said Thomas Staebell, Erie County sheriff's chief of patrol. "All the folks injured and killed have some connection with the person we are looking at."

Authorities released a composite photograph of the man. He was a white male in his 40s, with glasses, a mustache and a weak eye or possibly a glass eye.

At least two people were killed at an armored car company building in Cheektowaga, seven miles east of Buffalo, and two more died at an apartment building in Rochester, 70 miles east of Buffalo, Staebell said.

Bombs also exploded in West Valley, 30 miles south of Buffalo. and Massena, hundreds of miles away in northeastern New York, authorities said. No deaths were reported in either town.

Bombs were defused in the towns of Eden, a Buffalo suburb, and Albion, midway between Buffalo and Rochester.

Several people were critically injured in the bombing at the Snug Harbor apartment building in Rochester, but authorities did not have any numbers or identities of the victims, said police Sgt. Cynthia Herriott.

The explosion in Cheektowaga occurred at the Armored Motor Services of America building, where armored cars are serviced. The building is near a bowling

O'Leary calls on U.S. to pay victims of '50s radiation tests

WASHINGTON (AP) — People who wrongfully were exposed to radiation through federally funded experiments more than 40 years ago deserve to be compensated, Energy Secretary Hazel R. O'Leary said Tuesday.

Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary says she supports federal compensation.

O'Leary promised to collect as many government documents as possible on such experiments and "let the Congress of the United States and the American public determine what would be appropriate compensation."

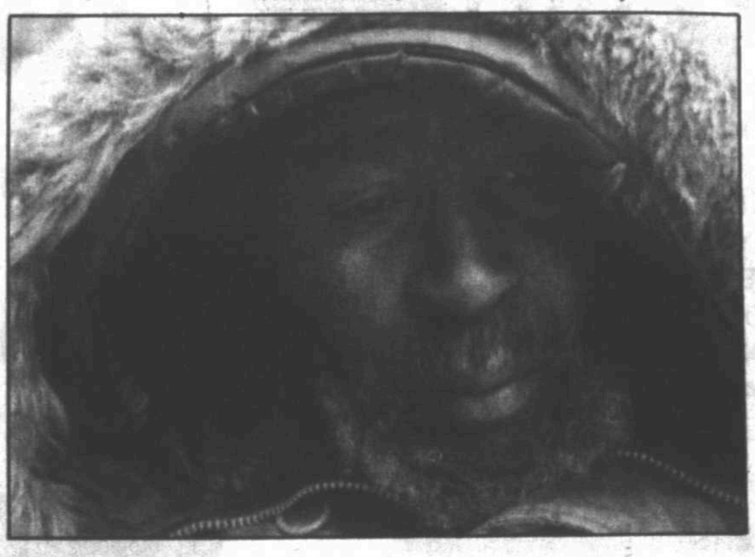

In an interview with CNN, she did not indicate how many people might be compensated or what that compensation might be.

MINNEAPOLIS — Homeless and without socks to help ward off the subzero cold, Dick Sandford made his way to a day shelter Tuesday seeking warmth.

Sandford found a friend, Mary Jo Copeland, who rubbed lotion into his cold toes and gave him a new pair of socks.

He was among thousands of people — many without socks and warm shoes — who flocked into shelters Tuesday in cities from the Midwest to New England seeking refuge from numbing cold.

Gun shy: Police departments fret over implementation of Brady bill

By Fred Bayles

Associated Press

Police chiefs and county sheriffs across the country are dreading the Feb. 28 implementation of the Brady bill, the new federal law mandating a five-day wait and background check on every person who wants to buy a handgun.

Smaller departments worry about cascading paperwork; others fear that gaps in computer networks may miss some felons or deny guns to legal purchasers.

Still others have questions: How do you check for mental problems when records are sealed? How do you determine habitual drug use?

"This could be a logistical nightmare," said Bobby Jones, police chief in Great Falls, Mont.

Oldest mother sparks debate on age limit for test-tube babies

By Edith M. Lederer

Associated Press

LONDON — The birth of twins on Christmas Day to a 59-year-old British woman — the oldest on record to have a child — has opened an emotional debate on whether women have the right to bear test-tube babies at any age.

Medical and public opinion is divided here, though mostly disapproving of the wealthy career woman, who recently married a 45-year-old economist.

Opponents argue that older women face greater risks during pregnancy and are unlikely to live long enough to rear their children to adulthood.

"Women do not have the right to have a child. The child has a right to a suitable home," said Health Secretary Virginia Bottomley. "There have to be proper safeguards before such treatment can be made available."

Bottomley said in an interview with the British Broadcast Corp. Monday that she would speak to other European health ministers with a view to establishing a uniform policy on which women should be allowed to receive fertility treatment.

Supporters of the woman contend society doesn't have the right to determine who should have babies.

"A man can have a child at that age and everyone says: 'Isn't he clever.' But those same people say that a woman of 55 is a dish rag. . . . It's a disgrace," said Dr. Severino Antinori, the Italian doctor who helped the woman get pregnant at his private clinic in Rome.

He has helped 35 other women aged 48 to 55 have babies.

"Of course, there are ethical issues to be discussed. And they should be discussed, freely and openly," Antinori was quoted as saying in an interview with the Independent on Sunday earlier this year.

"But who says it's not right for a

Hundreds of refugees leave Sarajevo after months of delay

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — After months of cruel waiting and painful leave-takings for naught, hundreds of people began a bus journey out of Sarajevo Tuesday.

Bureaucracy or fighting along the intended route had blocked several departures. The convoy was abruptly canceled a month ago when Bosnian Croats failed to provide promised buses.

Hundreds gathered Tuesday at Sarajevo's badly damaged railway station to see off relatives and friends, apprehensive that the bus convoy might not leave.

As lists of names were checked, people waited outside the station, exposed to sniper fire and with Serb artillery positions clearly visible. Most of the evacuees were Muslims, mainly women, children and elderly people.

"I don't care where I am going to as long as it is far away from this misery and madness," said Nazifa Husic, 50.

On Tuesday, 15 buses took the refugees in stages from the railway station to Serb-held Lukavica, a suburb south of the city, under U.N. escort. From there, two buses took about 100 Serbs to Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

The rest of the refugees, about 700 Muslims and Croats, were transferred to Croat buses and set off toward Split in Croatia, according to Serb military sources reached in Lukavica from Belgrade. Some were to go to third countries.

No one could be reached in Sarajevo to confirm that all those on the departure list had gone.

"I have been waiting for over a year," said Ivanka Boskovic, 38, an ethnic Croat who hopes to join her 14-year-old son and 10-year-old daughter in Croatia.

Boskovic, who was leaving her husband behind, has not seen her children since the war began in April 1992.

"This is a very difficult decision for me," Boskovic said. "On one hand my kids need me; but on the other, my husband and the rest of the family are here."

The evacuation of civilians from Sarajevo is a private effort planned nearly a year ago and assisted by the United Nations and the Red Cross.

The United Nations has criticized all sides — Serbs, Croats and the Muslim-led government — for blocking aid and evacuations for political gains.

About 500 Serbs left in a much-delayed convoy in early November.

Many leaving Tuesday had gathered a month ago, saying tearful goodbyes to relatives. But the buses failed to appear.

U.N. officials said the Bosnian Croats apparently tried to use the evacuation as leverage to free some of their military commanders held by the government.

In other developments, drunk Bosnian Serb fighters held 11 Canadian peacekeepers at gunpoint, beat them and fired shots at their feet on Dec. 22, U.N. and Canadian officials said in statements issued Tuesday.

U.N. military officials protested to the Serbs over the incident, in which the Canadians were released after about an hour.

Also Tuesday:

■ British U.N. peacekeepers were investigating Croat charges of a massacre and other atrocities by government forces in central Bosnia.

Croats accused government troops of hanging and crucifying civilians in Dubravica, where 53 people were reportedly missing. The area has been hotly contested for months by government and Croat forces.

A local government commander denied any massacre of Croat villagers, said Maj. Idesbald van Biesebroeck, a U.N. military spokesman.

South Korea: North Korea doesn't have nuclear bombs

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — North Korea is eager to develop nuclear weapons but does not appear to have one yet, South Korea's president said Tuesday.

The remarks by Kim Young-sam came in response to reports last week that a classified U.S. Central Intelligence Agency document concludes the Communist North is likely to have developed one or two atomic bombs.

"North Korea has a strong will to develop nuclear weapons but we can't say it has developed one," Kim told reporters.

Kim said his analysis is based on "precise" information. He declined to disclose details except to say that U.S. officials share his view.

North Korea claims that its nuclear program is only for peaceful energy development but has refused international nuclear inspections, raising suspicion that it is developing nuclear weapons.

In Tokyo, Foreign Minister Tsutomu Hata of Japan said his government was keeping a close eye on flows of money and possible shipments of sensitive technology from Japan to North Korea.

"I am determined to watch these reported outflows," Hata told reporters Tuesday. But he said Japan would not curb shipments to North Korea unless the U.N. Security Council adopts a resolution calling for sanctions.

The government estimates the annual outflow of money from Japan to North Korea at $1.8 billion, Hata said. Much of the money is transferred legally by the 200,000-member North Korean community in Japan in the form of donations or gifts to relatives.

Analysts say flows of that scale, amounting to about the size of the North Korean budget, could help support North Korea's nuclear program.

Hata said he was concerned by reports that a North Korean defector had said some of the North Koreans living in Japan were shipping high-tech products to Pyongyang. Such shipments would violate controls established by the Coordinating Committee for Multilateral Export Control, which bans supplying sensitive technology to a number of nations, including North Korea.

Bombs in Peru kill 1, wound 30, authorities say

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Leftist Shining Path guerrillas set off bombs near the heavily guarded national police agency and the air force's funeral home Tuesday, killing one and wounding at least 30.

The bombings were the boldest attacks in the capital by the rebel group since their leader, Abimael Guzman, was captured in September 1992. A terrorist expert said the attacks indicated the group had reorganized in Lima.

In the first attack, the rebels exploded two car bombs near national police headquarters downtown, shattering windows and blowing out a section of a brick wall around the police complex, police said.

At least 10 policemen and 10 passers-by were hospitalized with cuts from flying glass, police said.

The blast also cracked walls and roofs in mud-brick houses dating from the beginning of the century. Dazed and tearful residents swept out broken glass and rubble from their ruined homes.

The police headquarters is three blocks from the U.S. Embassy, which was bombed in July. One person was killed and two wounded in the embassy bombing.

At midday, 44 pounds of dynamite exploded outside a building housing the air force funeral home, killing one person and wounding at least 10. The bombing shattered windows and broke roof tiles.

Independents hold key to power in Russia's new parliament

By Larry Ryckman
Associated Press

MOSCOW — The new Russian parliament is likely to be a swirling mass of shifting alliances, with dozens of independent deputies holding the power to decide vote by vote who wins and loses.

Communists, extreme nationalists and other opponents of President Boris Yeltsin's reforms will hold the largest bloc of seats when the Duma convenes Jan. 11, according to final election figures released Tuesday. But they will need the unpredictable independents to muster a majority.

The old days of the party line died along with the Soviet Union, and the emergence of multiparty politics in Russia will produce confusion — as well as such novelties as pork barrel politics, horse-trading and single-issue alliances.

December's election dashed reformers' hopes that two years of deadlock with hard-liners had been swept away with the old parliament, which was dissolved by Yeltsin on Sept. 21 and evicted by tanks and troops two weeks later.

Instead, they are faced with Gridlock Part 2: Zhirinovsky's Revenge.

Vladimir Zhirinovsky, once written off as a political buffoon, stunned his opponents with the strong showing of his extreme nationalist Liberal Democratic Party. Capitalizing on voters' anger over rising crime, falling living standards and losing the Soviet empire, his party won 65 of the 450 seats in the powerful lower house of parliament, the Duma.

Russia's Choice, the main pro-Yeltsin party which had expected to control the parliament and push ahead with political and economic reforms, has been reduced to plotting strategy for blocking the extremists.

It even proposed an "anti-fascist" alliance with the Communists to stop Zhirinovsky — an offer flatly rejected Tuesday by Communist leaders, whose party won 50 seats.

Russia's Choice actually will be the strongest individual party in the Duma, with 94 seats, but it has few natural allies with which to form a coalition.

The Interfax news agency quoted one analyst Tuesday as saying Russia's Choice could perhaps put together 174 votes on some issues, substantially less than the 195 believed to be lined up in the Communist-Zhirinovsky camp.

But both the pro-reform and anti-reform factions appear to be short of the 226 seats needed for a majority, and need to look to the 75 independent deputies for support.

The independents will be in a position to demand favors and modifications, and their allegiance could depend on whether deputies are voting on privatization or foreign policy, economic reforms or military spending.

The reformers are now counting on Russia's new strong-presidency constitution, which Yeltsin calls a "bulwark of stability," to fend off their opponents.

Father says daughter can leave Cuba

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Fidel Castro's 16-year-old grandaughter is free to join her mother in the United States, the girl's father said Tuesday.

"I have no problem giving her permission to leave the country," said Fernando Salgado, who retired in September as first dancer in the Cuban National Ballet.

Castro told the Rev. Jesse Jackson, who has been visiting Cuba, that the girl could join her mother, Alina Fernandez Revuelta, if her father gave his approval. Ms. Fernandez fled Cuba last week and was granted asylum in the United States.

Cuban law requires that both parents approve the departure of a person under 20 years of age.

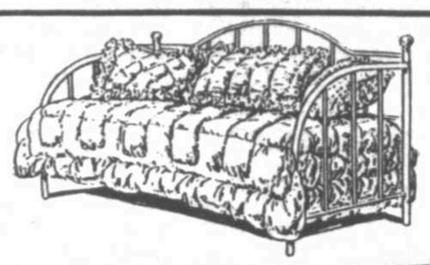

Salgado told reporters who visited him in Havana that Interior Ministry officials visited him on Sunday, the same day Jackson met Castro, to ask if the girl was free to join Ms. Fernandez.

He said the daughter, also named Alina, wanted to leave.

"Our love has been forged and separation cannot distance us," he said.

He said he decided to permit her departure because "I don't want history to repeat itself." The mother clashed repeatedly with authorities over their refusal to let her leave Cuba. She said she eventually made her way out in disguise under a false passport.

Chance of freezing rain to hit

Staff Report

With cooler conditions hitting the Permian Basin and a chance of precipitation, Midlanders may see some freezing rain after midnight.

Today's forecast is mostly cloudy with a high between 45 and 50, northeast winds 10-20 mph, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight is expected to be cloudy with a slight chance of light rain turning to freezing drizzle after midnight. Tonight's low should be near 30 with a 20 percent chance of precipitation during the evening.

Thursday's forecast is cloudy with a 20 percent chance of light rain or freezing drizzle and a high of 45-50, the NWS said.

Yesterday's high was 47, compared to the record high of 80, set in 1964. The record low for today's date is 9, set in 1983.

STATE

Temperatures dropped sharply as a cold front swept across Texas on Tuesday.

The front invaded the state from the north late Monday, and by Tuesday night it had reached the coast.

At 2 p.m., temperatures in the 70s were prevalent throughout South Texas, with a high of 80 at Alice, and light rain and drizzle were reported along the coast, but behind the front, the mercury plummeted.

Readings in North Texas were in the 30s and 40s, ranging from 31 at Wichita Falls to 49 at Lufkin. North Texas remained under a blanket of clouds, with winds generally at 10 to 20 mph from the northwest.

Temperatures were in the 30s and 40s in the Panhandle and South Plains also. Tuesday afternoon's highs ranged from 32 at Amarillo to 62 at El Paso, and the weather service said overnight lows could dip into the upper teens in the Panhandle and 20s in the South Plains.

The weather service said light rain is possible across West Texas tonight and Thursday, with light freezing rain possible in the San Angelo area and higher elevations of the mountains of far West Texas.

NATION

Cold weather continued over much of the Midwest and the East on Tuesday, and snow and rain extended from Texas to the East Coast, icing roads and interfering with airport traffic.

Morning lows were below zero across the northern Plains, the upper Mississippi Valley, Upper Michigan, northern New York state and northern New England.

Tuesday's low for the Lower 48 states was 38 below zero at Tower, Minn. By 2 p.m. CST, temperatures around the Lower 48 states ranged from 11 below zero at Limestone, Maine, to 80 at Alice, Texas.

At midday, freezing rain extended across northwestern Arkansas, southern Missouri, southern Kentucky and Virginia. Rain fell over the remainder of Arkansas and the Tennessee Valley.

Snow fell over much of the Ohio Valley, the lower Great Lakes, the central Appalachians, northern Virginia, Maryland and New Jersey.

Winter storm warnings were posted for parts of Kentucky, West Virginia, Tennessee, Maryland, Delaware and Virginia, the National Weather Service said.

Steady snowfall closed National Airport and federal government offices in the Washington area. Six inches of snow is possible in the city by this afternoon, with 8 inches forecast in Virginia's northern Shenandoah Valley.

The snowy weather also delayed airline traffic at Cincinnati. Many West Virginia state government workers were sent home early because of the snow. Kentucky highways were littered with wrecked and abandoned vehicles. Freezing rain coated southern Indiana highways with ice a half-inch thick.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

early proponent of the beautification project. The tree was planted about three years ago.

Several individuals, foundations and corporations joined forces to plant the trees as part of the beautification project, Vogler said.

A "governor's award" of $100,000 provided much of the funds needed for the beautification effort, he said. The funds were made available to the Keep Midland Beautiful organization.

Vogler and others are offering a $1,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the tree thief or thieves.

"We need to protect these trees because there are so few in West Texas," Vogler said. "Anyone who chops down a tree commits a dastardly, heinous crime," he said.

The smooth cut on the tree stump may indicate the use of a chain saw, he said.

The pine tree was cut down the evening of Dec. 23. "They took a big risk, because it's right there on the main boulevard," Vogler said.

"They picked out the best one on the entire airport," he said.

Airport Director Ken Day said he intends to prosecute anyone found damaging the trees.

This is the second criminal act to befall the trees since the project began three years ago, Vogler said. When they were first planted, an unknown person ran over the saplings with a pickup.

Because the ground was still soft and the trees had not yet taken root, most of them were able to be replanted, he said.

A new pine tree soon will be planted in place of the downed tree, Vogler said. About 18 new trees are scheduled to be planted soon as part of the ongoing beautification project.

Trees sometimes do not survive the adjustment process when replanted. "We have been very lucky with this project so far," Day said.

Several different kinds of trees have been planted on airport grounds, Day said. The Afghan pines are one of the few pines capable of thriving in the Permian Basin's alkaline soil, according to an area nurseryman. Other trees planted at the airport include live oaks, Chinese pistache, cedar elms and desert willows.

Vogler was instrumental in getting these funds allocated, Day said.

Once the trees are purchased and planted, airport personnel are responsible for watering and maintaining them, Day said.

"You can never plant too many trees," Day said.

Any one with information about the tree should contact Vogler at 684-5395.

REFUGE: Homeless move toward shelters resort to kneelers," said Copeland, director of Sharing & Caring Hands day shelter. She guessed she would have worked with 800 people by day's end — 200 to 300 more than on most winter days.

The temperature dropped to 15 below zero early Tuesday in Minneapolis. Temperatures elsewhere hit record lows, including minus 6 at Grand Rapids, Mich.; 21 below at Mason City, Iowa; and 19 below at Caribou, Maine. The nation's coldest spot outside Alaska was Tower, Minn., at 38 below, the National Weather Service said.

Elsewhere, snow spread across the Ohio Valley to the East Coast on Tuesday.

A weather emergency was declared in Washington, D.C., because of the steady snow, government offices closed early and National Airport was shut down for a short time.

New York City didn't have a bed to spare for homeless people trying to escape the cold. Every available shelter bed — 5,234 for single men and 1,014 for single women — was taken for Tuesday night, according to Mary Brosnahan, executive director of the Coalition for the Homeless.

Shelters also were crowded in New England. In Fall River, Mass., an emergency shelter was set up in the basement of a housing project, with a nurse and two emergency medical technicians on duty.

Philadelphia authorities removed some homeless people from the streets and took them to shelters because of the cold, but Tony Williams said he would continue panhandling instead to raise $7 so he could stay in a boarding house.

"I don't go to city-owned shelters," Williams said. "They treat you like animals. I am a human being."

At least five deaths had been blamed on the weather since this weekend. The dead included two people in Indiana, a 64-year-old homeless man found frozen in an alley in Toledo, Ohio, and one woman in Baltimore. In New York City, a man was found frozen on a bench. Two homeless men also died in New York but the cause of death hadn't been determined.

Sandford, who lives in the stairway of an apartment building, said he usually walks to the downtown Minneapolis shelter but took a bus Tuesday when the temperature hovered near zero.

He said he usually hangs out at a mall about three-quarters of a mile from the apartment building, but that has been a long way to walk during this cold wave.

"By the time I get down there, I'm frozen," Sandford said.

A few belongings and makeshift wind breaks were left behind under city bridges as many of Minneapolis' homeless spent Tuesday warming up at shelters, picking up hats and mittens and eating hot meals.

Hennepin County Medical Center, a downtown hospital, reported just one case of frostbite and another of hypothermia.

"I think I've been here too long, I've gotten immune to it," said Denise Thomas, who warmed up at Sharing & Caring Hands.

DEBATE: A mom at 59 stirs ethical storm

woman to have a child at 55?"

The woman, who obtained a High Court order preventing publication of her name, was artificially impregnated at Antinori's clinic after the ethics committee at the London Fertility Center refused to treat her.

She became pregnant at age 58 when eggs donated by an Italian woman in her 20s were fertilized by her husband's sperm and implanted in her.

Professor Ian Craft, director of the London Fertility Center, expressed sympathy with older women who wanted to have children.

"I think it would be a negative thing if, because of the clamor of the media and the knee-jerk reaction of the authorities, they fixed an upper age limit for women when there is no age limit for men," he said.

For Dr. John Marks, former chairman of the British Medical Association Council, the prospect of older mothers borders "on the Frankenstein syndrome." He believes scientific power is being used to create life in a manner not approved by society.

Professor Robert Winston, head of Britain's largest fertility unit, at London's Hammersmith Hospital, said "it is dangerous for a woman of her age to have a baby and not good for the welfare of the child."

The Times reported in a front-page story on Tuesday that the 59-year-old mother will soon lose her title as the world's oldest mom to another of Antinori's patients. Rosanna Della Corte, 62, an Italian farmer's wife who lost her only son in a motorcycle accident in 1990, is three months pregnant.

She was quoted as saying she and her husband, Mauro, 65, took into account the longevity of their parents and the large number of relatives who would look after their child if they die.

Dr. Sandy MacAra, chairman of the Council of the British Medical Association, pleaded for tolerance, saying responsibility, experience and love were more important than age when considering motherhood.

Even though older mothers have an increased risk of dying, he said, it may be better to have "a fit healthy 59-year-old than an unfit, unhealthy 19-year-old."

O'LEARY: U.S. 'should compensate victims'

(From 1A)

"We're still trying to take a look at the whole thing," said department spokesman Sam Grizzle.

O'Leary earlier this month said as many as 800 people might have been subjected to human experiments involving radiation, many of them in the 1940s and '50s. Some of the experiments were believed to be within medical guidelines and with consent, but others clearly were not, officials have said.

Attempts to reach Mrs. O'Leary, who was said to be in meetings Tuesday, were unsuccessful.

O'Leary told CNN that some of those affected by the radiation tests are suing the government, but others involved in earlier tests cannot sue because the statute of limitations has expired.

"My view is that we must proceed with disclosing these facts and information regardless of the fact of whether it opens the door for a lawsuit against the government," she said. "And many have suggested, and I tend to agree personally, that those people who were wronged need to be compensated."

The New York Times reported Tuesday that the U.S. government official who directed some of the early radiation tests was urged to use chimpanzees to avoid comparisons to Nazi experiments.

The warning was made in a 1950 memo to Dr. Shields Warren, a senior official of the Atomic Energy Commission, from Dr. Joseph G. Hamilton, a top commission biologist, the Times said. Parts of the memo were also quoted Tuesday in The Boston Globe.

Hamilton warned that exposing humans to radioactive material would bring considerable criticism because they would "have a little of the Buchenwald touch."

The Nazis did human experiments at the Buchenwald concentration camp near Weimar, including one that killed 600 people exposed to typhus bacteria.

"For both politic and scientific reasons," Hamilton wrote, "I think it would be advantageous to secure what data can be obtained by using large monkeys such as chimpanzees."

O'Leary has told her agency to find out how many human studies were done, find test subjects and their survivors and check the legality of the research. A hot line asking survivors to contact the Energy Department has been swamped with hundreds of calls.

One issue is whether the now-defunct commission's experiments violated the 1947 Nuremburg Code, which was established after the Nazi war crimes trials as the universal standard for human experiments.

The code requires full, informed and voluntary consent for all experiments on humans. Also, test subjects must be protected from "even remote possibilities of injury, disability or death."

The Hamilton memo suggests that researchers "knew clearly at the time that the studies were unethical," said Dr. David S. Egilman, a Rhode Island physician who has investigated the AEC's human experiments and gave the memo to the Times and the Globe.

Both Warren and Hamilton are now dead.

The Albuquerque Tribune reported Tuesday that Hamilton's files revealed that seven cancer patients and another with a blood disease were injected with strontium in the 1940s at the University of California Hospital in San Francisco.

All of the patients were undergoing X-ray therapy at the time of the injections. The doctor responsible for the injections is not listed in medical records, the newspaper said.

FRET: Lawmen dread bill's implementation

(From 1A)

police in Arkansas, where a computer system needed to check prospective gun buyers' backgrounds won't be ready when the Brady bill takes effect.

Until it is, officers will have to pore through mountains of individual files.

"It is going to be very difficult for us to meet the five-day waiting period. In fact, I don't see how we're going to do it," said Col. Tommy Goodwin, director of state police in Little Rock.

But federal officials say local departments need to take the long view. Yes, they agree, enforcement will vary among jurisdictions. Some people who should not buy guns will initially slip through the cracks. But down the road, the $200 million a year the bill provides to update state and national criminal databases will make for a better system.

"What will be considered a reasonable search will become much more complete in five years than it will on Feb. 28," said Jack Killorin, a spokesman with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. "Year by year, the quality and real time of the records will get better and better."

President Clinton signed the long-debated handgun control bill into law last month. It requires local police agencies to perform "reasonable" background checks of state, local and national records within five business days to determine if people seeking to buy handguns are eligible.

Those prohibited from buying handguns include convicted felons, fugitives, minors, drug and alcohol addicts, illegal aliens and those judged mentally incompetent.

The law will have little or no impact in 26 states and most of the nation's major cities, where state or local laws already mandate background checks and waiting periods.

But in the remaining jurisdictions, where the Brady bill means new, time-consuming routine, law officers are fretting over the attendant costs and confusion. Some are also complaining about how to comply with the law when much of the information is not yet readily available.

"You could spend five days just checking out one records check," said Tony Lombard of the Denver Police Department.

In several states, criminal records are not yet computerized. Ohio has only a third of its criminal histories in a statewide computer system. Officials say it will take three more years to increase that to 90 percent.

Nevada officials have a different concern: While their statewide system records all arrests, it does not always include final adjudication. As a result, someone accused of a crime but acquitted on all charges could be denied the legal right to buy a gun.

And even where new computers are on order or existing systems are being upgraded to fulfill Brady demands, officials know many information systems are incompatible, sometimes within the same state.

Tulsa County Sheriff Stanley Glanz says Oklahoma has two relatively new computer systems, but it will be "very difficult and very expensive" to link them.

"All these agencies have developed their own computer systems, and they don't have a common data dictionary," he said. "Someone may call a guy a 'white male' and I may call him a 'Caucasian male.'"

Even with all these worries, criminal records generally are available in one form or another. That is not the case with mental capacity, juvenile convictions, drug or alcohol use and immigration status. Such factors are close to impossible to come by.

Bob Matzke, police chief in Bismarck, N.D., expressed frustration over the Brady requirement to check a potential gun buyer's mental condition.

"That could be extremely difficult to get access to because of medical confidentiality rules," Matzke said.

alley and railroad tracks, police said.

"It's really an event I wouldn't envision happening in Cheektowaga," Town Supervisor Dennis Gabryszak said. "There were children playing hockey across the street."

The bombs arrived in tool boxes that had an apparatus screwed to the top with wires protruding, the Erie County sheriff's department said.

The bomb that exploded in West Valley went off at a home.

The Eden bomb was found in a pickup and defused.

Israelis, Palestinians report progress in peace talks

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Israeli and Palestinian negotiators met into the night Tuesday and reported progress in ironing out disputes that have delayed the start of Israel's withdrawal from the Gaza Strip and Jericho.

Asked how the negotiations were going, Mahmoud Abbas, head of the Palestinian delegation, said "excellent" as he left the talks.

But he said the delegates still had not reached agreement. Israeli Embassy spokesman Yaacov Setty said the negotiations, which lasted about 12 hours, would resume at midmorning.

Earlier, Egyptian sources said negotiators were near agreement on problems hindering the historic self-rule accord for the occupied lands.

The area that Israel will vacate around Jericho and who will control border crossings to Jordan and Egypt have been two key snags in implementing the first phase of the Israel-PLO agreement that was to take effect Dec. 13.

On Tuesday night, the negotiators were studying maps to determine the location of the border posts and the size of Jericho, said the Egyptian sources, who are close to the talks.

Palestinian sources in Jerusalem said the two sides had reached broad agreement on control of the border crossings, but still disagreed on details.

Israel has wanted control of the borders to remain in its hands because of security concerns, but the Palestinians insist guarding borders is part of the self-rule they were promised for Gaza, which borders Egypt, and Jericho, which is close to the Jordanian border.

Under the accord, Israel was to have begun withdrawing troops and turning over control of Gaza and Jericho by Dec. 13.

Earlier, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres of Israel said he held "unlimited" hopes an agreement could be reached in the latest talks, which follow negotiating sessions in Norway and France last week. But he added that Israel would not back down on its concerns over security.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Amr Moussa joined the talks at a Cairo hotel Tuesday evening. The Egyptian sources said both sides asked for mediation by Moussa, who has consulted with the parties throughout the talks.

Israeli negotiator Yossi Sarid, during a break from the talks, told reporters the two main negotiators on security, the PLO's Nabil Shaath and Israeli Maj. Gen. Amnon Shahak, were leading the discussions.

Peres and Abbas, the heads of the two delegations, are believed to want a quick agreement to halt spiraling violence in the occupied territories that stems from opposition to the peace accord from hard-liners on both sides.

Abbas, a top aide to PLO leader Yasser Arafat, and Peres helped orchestrate the secret talks earlier this year that led to the Israel-Palestine Liberation Organization accord signed Sept. 13 in Washington.

After meeting with President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt on Tuesday morning, Peres said that he believed both sides were serious about overcoming their disputes but that Israel would not compromise on security.

"Our main concern is and will remain ... the security of Israel, but otherwise we have full respect for the Palestinian side," he said.

Asked about the chances for success, Peres replied, "The hopes are unlimited, but time I cannot mention."

Philippine police say Texas man was kidnapped

DAVAO CITY, Philippines (AP) — An American was kidnapped and suspected Christian militants fired grenades at two mosques Tuesday as violence again shook the southeast city of Davao.

One senator warned of a possible reignition of the Muslim-Christian conflict of the 1970s in which more than 50,000 people were killed here.

Nelson Scott Monroe, 55, of Houston, Texas, was strolling along a Davao street with a Filipino woman Tuesday evening when a car pulled up beside them and forced the American inside, the Philippine National Police said today. The woman was allowed to go free, the statement said.

Julio Mandella, a clerk at the Men Seng Hotel in Davao, said by telephone that Monroe, who lives in Cebu, checked into the hotel with his companion a week ago.

It was not known if the kidnapping was related to the city's religious troubles.

Five people were injured in the attacks on the mosques Tuesday, which were apparently made in reprisal for a bombing that killed seven Sunday at the Roman Catholic San Pedro Cathedral.

The latest attacks occurred almost simultaneously at two mosques in this mixed Christian-Muslim city 600 miles southeast of Manila on Mindanao Island.

Five people were hurt when a grenade struck the roof of a mosque in the city's Bangkerohan district. There were no injuries in the other attack which took place a few miles away.

No arrests have been made in any of the attacks. Police said they were looking for two men and a woman in the cathedral incident that also injured 140 people.

Mayor Rodrigo Duterte blamed Muslim extremists for igniting the religious conflict and warned: "If they want violence, I will give them violence."

But Muslim and Christian leaders in this city of 850,000 appealed for restraint.

The religious violence comes as the government is negotiating with the Muslim Moro National Liberation Front to end a 20-year separatist rebellion to establish a Muslim state.

Last month, the Front began peace talks with the government and signed a cease-fire agreement. President Fidel Ramos has pledged to continue the peace talks, and Front officials have also condemned the bombings.

In Manila, Sen. Blas Ople, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, warned of a Christian backlash if the violence continues.

"The president should not underestimate the situation because a Christian backlash could turn Mindanao into a Lebanon," he told reporters. "All the necessary measures must be undertaken with urgency because once Christian groups arm themselves, it will be more difficult to restrain them."

About 85 percent of the 65 million Filipinos are Catholic. Muslims comprise about 10 percent.

Religious tension has been increasing in Mindanao since a wave of bombings and killings that police blame on a Muslim splinter group, Abu Sayyaf.

The Abu Sayyaf group, led by Libyan-trained teacher Abubakar Janjalani, is an offshoot of the Moro Front.

Bulgaria orders Zhirinovsky to leave country

SOFIA, Bulgaria (AP) — Bulgaria ordered Russian ultranationalist Vladimir Zhirinovsky to leave within 24 hours, saying Tuesday he had meddled in the country's affairs and insulted its president.

State TV quoted Zhirinovsky as saying he would "leave Bulgaria tomorrow (Wednesday), but will return to this country as a president" of Russia.

Bulgaria's action was in sharp contrast to Austria and Germany, Zhirinovsky's earlier stops, where some leftist politicians rapped the decision to let him visit and meet right-wingers, but government leaders were silent.

Zhirinovsky arrived in Bulgaria Saturday.

He said in interviews with Bulgarian news media that Bulgarian President Zhelyu Zhelev should be replaced and that it was time for new leadership in this country, which in Soviet times was Moscow's most loyal East European ally.

He also suggested that Bulgarian territory could include neighboring Macedonia, a sovereign state that had been part of pre-war Yugoslavia.

"In his statements before the press, Zhirinovsky has used insulting expressions and qualifications towards Bulgaria's head of state, and has expressed positions which are an impermissible interference in the internal affairs of a sovereign state," an Interior Ministry news release said.

"Mr. Zhirinovsky's statements create real circumstances for complicating Bulgaria's relations with neighboring countries," the statement said.

The Russian politician's extremist rhetoric and strong showing in Russia's recent parliamentary elections worry Moscow's European neighbors and the West.

Zhirinovsky denied at a news conference Tuesday — held before the expulsion order — that he requested Bulgaria's leadership be changed.

"All I said is that only the Bulgarian people have the right to choose their president," he said.

Hundreds of people crowded in downtown Sofia earlier Tuesday as Zhirinovsky laid flowers at the monument of Russian emperor Alexander II. During Alexander II's reign, Russia defeated the Ottoman empire in 1878 and ended 500-year Turkish domination in Bulgaria.

Some cheered Zhirinovsky. Others chanted "Out of here!."

Russian election sounded warning

A new study released by the prestigious Washington, D.C. think tank, The Heritage Foundation, discounts the threat posed by extremist Vladimir Zhirinovsky to the ongoing reform in Russia, but warns that "unless something dramatic is done to show that democracy and market reforms can produce a better life, Russia will once again become a threat to itself, its neighbors, and the world."

Russian President Boris Yeltsin "won" a thin endorsement in the Russian elections earlier this month, but concern was expressed in Washington and elsewhere about the dramatic success shown by Zhirinovsky, the Communists, and other extremists.

Although acknowledging that "there is cause for concern" in the election outcome, The Heritage Foundation study points out that the elections should not cause Americans to panic. "Boris Yeltsin is still fully in charge, and ironically, the presidential powers granted by the new constitution will not only prevent Vladimir Zhirinovsky and other extremists from controlling Russia any time soon, but make it more difficult for them to influence policy in the meantime. Moreover, despite the setback in the elections, nearly half of the Duma and most members of the parliament's other chamber, the Federation Council, are reformers and centrists who do not want a return to communism or the creation of a fascist state," notes the report.

That information should find ready agreement among most Americans. The last thing Americans would want is a resurgence of communism, the growth of fascism, or an end of the reform movement in Russia.

The study also contains recommendations about what the Clinton administration can do to minimize the chances for such a resurgence. The study notes, "While encouraging Russian reformers to stop their bickering and to form a united front against the real threats to democracy — the fascists and the communists — the Clinton administration must also prepare America's defenses in case Yeltsin and his reformers are ousted from office. To do this, Clinton must reverse the decline of America's defenses, guarantee the viability of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and plan to build missile defenses for the continental United States.

Additionally, the study advises Clinton to enter into a tough foreign aid compact with Yeltsin in exchange for a refashioned aid package that provides for funds for private credit and capital formation and unemployment insurance.

Yeltsin obviously could use his new constitutional powers to push through a rapid and sweeping reform of Russia's economy.

The recommendations appear to be on target. It's important for the United States to take such steps so that a dangerous, adversarial relationship is not allowed to evolve in Russia. The December election in Russia was a warning. Now the United States must act on that warning.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, Dec. 29, the 363rd day of 1993. There are two days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Dec. 29, 1890, the Wounded Knee massacre took place in South Dakota. Some 300 Sioux Indians were killed by U.S. troops sent to disarm them. About 30 of the soldiers were slain.

On this date:

In 1170, Archbishop Thomas Becket was murdered in Canterbury Cathedral in England.

In 1808, the 17th president of the United States, Andrew Johnson, was born in Raleigh, N.C.

In 1813, the British burned Buffalo, N.Y., during the War of 1812.

In 1837, Canadian militiamen destroyed the Caroline, a U.S. steamboat docked at Buffalo.

In 1845, Texas was admitted as the 28th state.

In 1851, the first American Young Men's Christian Association was organized, in Boston.

In 1913, the first movie serial, "The Adventures of Kathlyn," premiered in Chicago.

In 1934, Japan renounced the Washington Naval Treaty of 1922 and the London Naval Treaty of 1930.

In 1940, Germany began dropping incendiary bombs on London.

In 1957, singers Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme were married in Las Vegas, Nev.

In 1975, a bomb exploded in the main terminal of New York's LaGuardia Airport, killing 11 people.

Ten years ago: The Rev. Jesse Jackson left New York on his successful mission to Syria to secure the release of U.S. Navy pilot Robert O. Goodman Jr., who had been shot down during a raid against Syrian positions in Lebanon.

Five years ago: The Federal Aviation Administration, responding to the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103, announced tightened security measures for U.S. air carriers at 103 airports in the Middle East and Western Europe.

One year ago: The United States and Russia announced agreement on a nuclear arms reduction treaty. Brazilian President Fernando Collor de Mello resigned. New York Governor Mario Cuomo commuted the prison sentence of Jean Harris, the convicted killer of "Scarsdale Diet" author Herman Tarnower. David and Sharon Schoo of St. Charles, Illinois, were arrested at O'Hare International Airport as they returned from vacation for leaving their young daughters at home, alone.

Talks could give Iran nuclear arms

WASHINGTON — Something very strange is going on, behind closed doors, among the governments of Israel, Germany, the Czech Republic and Iran. Blinded again by the urge to recover hostages and the delusion of Iranian "moderates," Israel may unwittingly be providing the intelligence cover that could help Tehran acquire Western nuclear technology.

Safire

I have only fragments of the Skoda story, and may be putting them together mistakenly; but rather than exhort the Washington pursuers of Whitewatergate, let me lay out a few curious connections picked up last week in Central Europe.

Three months ago, the head of Iranian intelligence paid a visit to Germany at the invitation of Bernd Schmidbauer, Chancellor Kohl's intelligence chief. The meeting was arranged at the secret request of the Israeli government, which had its representatives in a room 50 feet down the hall from the Iranians and Germans.

The subject of the proximity talks was, presumably, Israelis held hostage by the Hezbollah in Lebanon, which operates under Syrian sufferance but under the primary control of Iran. The meeting in Bonn went badly, and the Iranians publicly made known their presence in the German capital.

This triggered a vigorous U.S. protest — why were the Germans secretly playing host to the Iranians? — and embarrassed Kohl, who has been tight as a tick with Bill Clinton. It forced the Israelis (whose presence down the hall may or may not have been known to the Iranians) to acknowledge that the meeting had been held at Prime Minister Rabin's request. Two weeks ago, Rabin met Kohl in Bonn.

So the Israelis will go to great lengths to get their people back, and the Germans comply — what's the big deal? It is that this back channel overlaps — and muddies up — other activity between the Germans and Iranians, with the Czechs as intermediaries, that could transform Iran into a nuclear terrorist power.

For years, Iran has been trying to get Germany's Siemens A.G., whose nuclear technology is far in advance of Russia's or China's, to build its nuclear facilities. Iran already has enough cheap oil to satisfy energy needs for generations; its only interest is in acquiring the ability to build nuclear bombs.

At the request of the United States, the Kohl government has restrained the Siemens chief executive, Dr. Heinrich von Pierer, from making a nuclear deal with Iran. But Siemens may have developed what spooks call a "cutout," or intermediary, through a joint venture with the Czech company Skoda Plzen.

As Stephen Engelberg of The New York Times reported Dec. 15, Israeli journalists discovered that Skoda's director, Lubomir Soudek, had been in Iran from Nov. 23 to Dec. 3 meeting with Riza Amoralahi, head of Iran's nuclear energy department. The company said it was about trolley cars and "energy cooperation." Sure.

When U.S. officials protested to Prague, the Czech government claimed that shipment of nuclear technology to Iran was "not decided." Intelligence sources tell me some Czechs are eager to sell Iran "Tamara" radar, sensitive enough to spot our Stealth bombers, as well as Semtex explosives, the preferred plastic of terrorists worldwide.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Big business often sells rope to hangmen

Since the mid-1980s, the Capital Research Center in Washington, D.C., has industriously sought answers to a grim question: Does big business have a death wish? It shouldn't surprise anyone if some day the learned researchers look up from their work and nod a lugubrious "yep."

Murchison

If big business is keen to stay in business, how do we explain its penchant for funding its antagonists? We don't. We note the penchant — or, rather, the research center does — and our eyes bug out in wonderment. Big business' philanthropic giving is heavily weighted toward organizations that favor the government policies that hurt big business. Masochism, you call it? Well, as one hears and sees all the time, it's a kinky age.

CRC's seventh edition of a ground-breaking study, "Patterns of Corporate Philanthropy," shows the situation getting worse, not better. More than three of every four dollars big business gave to non-profit groups in 1991 (the most recent year for which figures were available) went to left-leaning groups. In 1990, the ratio was just 2-to-1.

"The patterns of corporate philanthropy uncovered in our study," writes Dr. M. Bruce Johnson of the University of California-Santa Barbara, "suggest ... that the largest publicly held corporations adapt to and appease the latest fads in political and social change. Wet fingers held high in the air, they make 'safe' contributions to politically correct organizations that they think can help them avoid the opprobrium of adverse media situations."

"Corporate America," Johnson goes on, "tends to fund liberals who specialize in women's, family, minority, and environmental issues. ... (Y)ear after year, corporate dollars flow into organizations that promote greater government spending, more government programs and regulations, more restrictions on private contacts and private property and higher taxes." That's on top of the contributions that groups like these receive from unions and middle-class liberals.

Thus health-care companies, according to the CRC study, bankroll organizations that would enlarge the federal government's role in health care. Oil companies give to groups that agitate against oil drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. Time to buff up V.I. Lenin's chestnut about capitalists who sell rope to the hangman.

What a bunch of yo-yos, these philanthropic officers! Can't they tell an adversary when they see one? Or is their conception of adversaries very different from that of most people?

The latter explanation seems likelier. The "big" in "big business" explains much. Mere size is insulation; it shuts out the chill winds. The big tend not to notice what's going on with the little and middle-sized — customers, competitors, critics. The big seem to fancy they'll always be around. Money buys friends, doesn't it?

Not really, but this vital point — well demonstrated in human experience — is lost on corporate climbers who want to cut a certain figure in the world.

It isn't just philanthropic contributions. Big companies tend to back anti-competitive policies. The free marketplace, they understand, doesn't serve their needs, narrowly construed, as well as it serves the needs of upstart competitors. Government bureaucracy excites horror only insofar as it impinges on Company A's prerogatives. After all, government bureaucracy, corporate bureaucracy — what's the qualitative difference?

This is why the interests of big and small business so often diverge. Big business doesn't truly mind big government; small business regards government edicts as treacherous and destructive. Seeking relief from union-propitiating medical plans, big business looks kindly on Bill and Hillary Clinton's big-government approach to health care reform. Hoping to stay solvent, small business hopes — possibly naively — to beat back the regulators.

You can bet on one thing: Small business won't be subsidizing many liberal philanthropic organizations, with their love of meddling and busy-bodying. Small business loves its integrity, its independence — and about time somebody around here did.

CHARLEY REESE

We should make a resolution to give thanks

It wouldn't hurt if we Americans, as one New Year's resolution, borrowed an idea from the Japanese — specifically from Naikan thought.

Reese

No, I'm not talking about an automobile or method of management. Naikan thought refers to ideas developed by a Zen priest in Japan that have been incorporated into modern psychological therapy.

The essence of Naikan thought is facing the fact of how much gratitude we owe so many people. For religious people, it is obvious that we should be thankful to God, but for everyone, there are also many people to thank.

The self-made man or woman is myth. Our life is a gift from our parents and their parents and so on — back through a long chain of ancestors. The chair we sit in was provided by others — those who cut the tree, sawed the log, transported the wood, fashioned it into furniture and still others who set up businesses to facilitate all of this.

The food we eat was planted and harvested and prepared by others. The language we speak was invented and developed by others. The land we live in was explored and developed by others. The government we live under was formed and is operated by others. The clothes we wear were made by others from textiles made by others from raw materials gathered by others.

What we sometimes suppose are our thoughts are also gifts from others who taught us or wrote the books we read or created the music we hear.

As you can see, the list of others who contribute to our lives is virtually endless. But recognizing that we are not self-made and self-sufficient is only a step. Intellectualizing is a fairly useless exercise.

So, Naikan thought suggests that we think seriously about the significant people in our lives, what they have given us and contributed to us, what problems or pain we have caused them and, most important, in what specific ways we can repay them. Real gratitude is action.

The Naikan philosophy also suggests we extend our gratitude to inanimate objects. We should be grateful to the house that shelters us and express that gratitude by keeping it clean and well-maintained. We should be grateful to our clothes and to our tools and express that gratitude by keeping them in their proper places.

Neglect of things, as well as of people, can be a sign of selfishness, a sign that the illusion of ego has seized us and deluded us into the belief that we are free of our obligations. It can also be a sign that we have lost our awareness of the world around us and have, in effect, imprisoned ourselves in our own fantasies. I have never known a self-centered person who was happy — or able to contribute to the happiness of anyone around them.

The new year ought never be just an occasion to eat and to watch ballgames while shutting out the people around us. It should be a reminder to us that no matter who we are, we are but a small part of something greater than ourselves.

In my own backwoodsy way, I've always believed that if you are alive and not hurting too bad, you have reason enough to be immensely grateful.

What is important is to always remember that we are not what we think, but what we do — and that each new moment, by presenting us with an opportunity to act, presents us with an opportunity to change our lives for the better.

This is an important concept worth thinking about. It's very easy to believe that change is impossible. It's very easy to give up. But the future is not predetermined, nor are we devoid of free will.

Christopher names Clinton friend as deputy secretary of state

WASHINGTON (AP) — Strobe Talbott, a friend of President Clinton and architect of the administration's Russia policy, was named Tuesday to the No. 2 post at the State Department. "I relish the chance to broaden out a bit," he declared.

The selection was announced at a news conference in Los Angeles by Secretary of State Warren Christopher. "I will try to help you in any way that I can," Talbott promised. The appointment is subject to Senate confirmation.

At 47, and with only eight months of diplomatic experience, Talbott, a former Time magazine correspondent, vaulted past senior career diplomats to the powerful post of deputy secretary of state. But Christopher, a non-professional who held the job himself in the Carter administration, said Talbott was "the best person for the job."

"My choice was quite deliberate," Christopher said. "It seemed to me it is very desirable to have somebody of the president's generation." He called Talbott "an experienced, mature person" who will bring to the job "the vigor and drive and experience of youth."

Clinton, vacationing in Little Rock, Ark., said he was "delighted" at Christopher's selection of Talbott.

"I have known and respected Ambassador Talbott for over 25 years and have always found him to be a man of great ability, intellect and vision," the president said in a statement. "He has performed superbly in his current role as ambassador-at-large to the former Soviet republics and I have full confidence in his ability to perform equally well in his new capacity at the Department of State."

On another subject, Christopher said the pace of negotiations with North Korea to open its nuclear facilities to international inspection was quickening. He provided no details of the "highly sensitive discussions" but said the immediate focus was on the talks and not on other options.

Also, Christopher said he found "flickers of progress" in China's willingness to permit Red Cross inspectors to visit prisons and its consideration of exit visas for families of dissidents living abroad.

He praised the Clinton administration's foreign policy on several fronts, beginning with its support for Russian President Boris Yeltsin and his reform programs. "Taking it overall, we've done very well," Christopher said.

Talbott will continue to advise Clinton and Christopher on Russia and the other former Soviet republics. But he also will "branch out a bit," he said, "to be part of what I see as the great adventure of the United States trying to lead the rest of the world in building a true post-Cold War international security order."

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., chairman of the Senate Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations, predicted easy confirmation and praised Talbott as understanding "more than most people the enormous long-term stakes there are in the former Soviet Union."

Leahy said developing a long-range policy was crucial and that Talbott "can probably put together that long-range view better than most."

House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., said: "Strobe Talbott is superbly qualified to be deputy secretary of state. His broad and varied experience have given him a commanding understanding of foreign policy issues. He is an inspired choice and will make a great addition to the national security team of this administration."

Talbott brings to the usually gray, offstage post a flair for promoting U.S. foreign policy.

Postal Service to deliver new tax forms next week

By Robert Naylor Jr.
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Beginning next week, millions of Americans should receive an annual new year's greeting from the government: 1993 tax forms.

The Postal Service will begin delivering the 86 million forms next Monday, although some have slipped through and already found their way into mailboxes. An additional 22 million postcards were mailed earlier this month to farmers and other self-employed people who used professional tax preparers last year.

For years, the Internal Revenue Service had the forms delivered the day after Christmas, but two years ago began having them arrive after the new year because of complaints about the Scrooge-like timing.

The government spent $14.6 million printing the forms and $19.9 million to have the Postal Service deliver them, a total cost of about 32 cents each. The costs have risen about 2 cents per form over last year.

Tax law changes approved by Congress this year increase taxes on high-income people. A single person making $115,000 is now in a 36 percent tax bracket, while a 39.6 percent tax is imposed on single people making $250,000 or more.

The 36 percent bracket also includes heads of household making $127,500, married couples with incomes of $140,000 filing joint returns and married people filing separately making $70,000.

Also in the 39.6 percent bracket are heads of households and married couples earning $250,000 and married people filing separately with incomes of $125,000.

About 2 percent of taxpayers will be affected by the new rates, IRS officials said.

For those who do not itemize, the standard deduction has been raised to $3,700 for a single taxpayer, up from $3,600 last year. The deduction for heads of households is $5,450, up from $5,250.

The standard deduction for a married couple filing jointly has been raised to $6,200 from $6,000, while the deduction for a married couple filing separately now is $3,100, up from $3,000 last year.

The maximum earned income credit has increased to $2,364 from $2,211.

The IRS, trying to keep up with busy, computer-age consumers and changing population demographics, is coming up with simpler, faster ways to file.

New this year:

■ About 2.5 million childless married couples can now file the 1040EZ — the simplest tax form — if their joint income is less than $50,000.

Daughter: Slain mother forgiving of her husband

CHICAGO (AP) — Marsha Brewer-Stewart wasn't stupid, her daughter says — she just believed she could help her husband recover from alcohol and mental problems.

That's why she laid out $10,000 to bail him out of jail seven months ago, after he was accused of slashing her throat.

Authorities say it was a fatal mistake.

They charged Gregory Stewart, 38, with stabbing his wife to death Sunday at the couple's suburban Naperville townhouse.

"He was sick. He was an alcoholic, and he had some sort of mental problem," said Leigh Brewer, the victim's daughter by a previous marriage. "My mom wanted to stay with him and help him through it, and she believed that if she stayed with him, she could help him get better."

Stewart was a quiet, non-menacing husband with a string of suicide attempts and drinking problems that long preceded the couple's 1992 marriage, the daughter said Tuesday in a telephone interview from Naperville.

Stewart's attorney, Dan Lyons, declined to comment Tuesday.

The couple met about four years ago, and Stewart went to Alcoholics Anonymous and quit drinking for a while before he began backsliding, Brewer said.

"My mom loved her husband and she supported him and she believed in him," said Brewer, who lived with the couple during the summer after moving back to Illinois from out of state.

"I just want people to know that the only thing she did wrong is love and trust somebody who didn't deserve it."

Stewart, a troubleshooter for AT&T, recently received in-patient psychiatric treatment and was living at home until he could get into a halfway house, Brewer said.

His 44-year-old wife, a leasing agent for an apartment building, called police Sunday night, saying that she was being threatened with a knife, DuPage County State's Attorney James Ryan said. She quickly hung up, and when police called back, she said nothing was wrong, according to Ryan.

Police went anyway and found Brewer-Stewart's body on a bed with a knife in her chest, Ryan said.

"My mom was almost 6 feet tall," Brewer said. "She was a tough person, not the type of person who could be bullied physically ... but there's not much you can do when you're unarmed and the person you're up against is armed."

In May, Ryan's office charged Stewart with attempted murder after his wife's throat was slashed.

"The investigators talked to her, tried to convince her to get an order of protection and separate from him," but she refused,

Pilot program puts fear of IRS into hearts of delinquent parents

By Jennifer Dixon
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Internal Revenue Service is on the trail of a painting contractor who hasn't made a child support payment in five years and owes his ex-wife and two children more than $70,000.

And there are signs that the man, one of Virginia's most elusive and delinquent dads, may be getting nervous.

His ex-wife, who spoke on condition of anonymity, says the man called her mother after receiving a letter from the IRS recently and "cussed her out" before disappearing again. "Get that damn law off my back," her mother remembers him saying.

■ More national news/8B

The case of the painting contractor, who owes $16,000 in legal fees and $74,000 in child and spousal support, is one of 698 especially knotty child support cases that have been turned over to the IRS under a new pilot project.

The demonstration, which involves child support cases with an average debt of nearly $21,000, may also be a forerunner to sweeping changes in the child support enforcement system.

President Clinton has promised to improve child support collections as part of his overhaul of the nation's welfare system. His welfare reform task force estimates that while the potential for child support collections exceeds $47 billion, only $13 billion a year is actually being paid.

Part of the gap can be traced to cases in which a child support award was never established, due largely to the failure to establish paternity for children born out of wedlock, the task force said in a confidential draft.

But the gap in potential collections is also due to a failure to collect on child support awards in place, as well as a failure to update awards as the absent parent's income improves.

The administration, says a senior official, sees the IRS playing a bigger role in child support collections under welfare reform.

The task force also recommends that all child support awards be updated regularly through an administrative process, rather than going through the courts, to reflect any increases in the absent parent's income.

Its plan also calls for a federal child support enforcement clearinghouse that would contain the names of all absent parents and the amounts they owe.

The data would be matched frequently against information from the IRS, Social Security and unemployment insurance in an effort to locate the absent parent and determine earnings, the administration official said.

In addition, W-4 forms (the tax forms employees fill out when starting a new job) would be routinely forwarded to the clearinghouse. That would allow the government to track employees as they move from job to job, rather than once a year when their tax return is filed.

The IRS already has the power to dock the tax refunds of parents with delinquent child support payments, and has had the authority for years to investigate certain child support cases.

Kwanzaa event organizers ask white mother to leave

By Katharine Webster
Associated Press

BOSTON — Discrimination or cultural preservation? That was the question after the white mother of an interracial child was asked to leave a Kwanzaa celebration.

Arthur Hardy's mother, Marie Doubleday, left the celebration at the Roxbury Boys and Girls Club on Sunday night. Several white journalists also were asked to leave.

"The spirit of Kwanzaa was ruined that night, as far as I was concerned," Hardy, 13, said Tuesday. His black father died 10 years ago.

"The black community has always felt like our extended family," Doubleday said. "We've had problems with the white community, but this is the first real problem we've had with the black community."

Sadiki Kambon, chairman of the Community Kwanzaa Committee, said the committee has a longstanding policy of asking — not telling — whites to leave.

"We've had a tradition of it being an all-African event for people of color. We have never told any white person they could not attend," Kambon said. "We're asking you to respect our tradition."

Political scientist Maulana Ron Karenga invented Kwanzaa in 1966 hoping to unite the black community. It is now celebrated by about 18 million people worldwide.

The seven-day holiday is based on the agricultural cycle of Africa; Kwanzaa means "first fruits" in Swahili. It celebrates seven principles: unity, self-determination, collective work and responsibility, cooperative economics, purpose, creativity and faith.

When asked how he would feel if blacks were asked to leave a white event, Kambon said he would not attend a Hanukkah celebration out of respect for Jews: "It's a family thing for them to work on their issues."

Kambon said Kwanzaa is the one time of year for blacks to discuss their own issues. "We consider this to be a family meeting time," he said.

What about Hardy's family?

"He didn't even consider me and my mom a family," Hardy said.

Clinton finally gets to college basketball game

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — President Clinton dodged nasty weather Tuesday night while flying and motorcading through mountainous northwest Arkansas to attend a college basketball game that started without him.

With the airport at Fayetteville socked in by fog, Clinton's plane was diverted north to Rogers — for a 25-mile ride by car to the University of Arkansas campus, where the Razorbacks were playing Texas Southern. Clinton entered the basketball arena in Fayetteville nearly 45 minutes after the game began — and with his homestate team up by nearly 30 points.

The president sported a University of Arkansas basketall cap as he boarded the plane in Little Rock.

Also heading to the game with Clinton were wife, Hillary, daughter, Chelsea, White House adviser Bruce Lindsey and his wife, Beverly, Associate Attorney General Webb Hubbell and Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark.

Earlier in the day, Clinton visited family, friends and favorite haunts — even squeezing a trip to the family dentist into his post-Christmas vacation.

"Great checkup," he declared.

Don't tell the dentist, but Clinton's next stop after his checkup was a gift shop where he was given some gourmet fudge. From there, it was only a few blocks to a TCBY frozen yogurt shop.

Clinton carefully studied the menu before ordering. "Can I have vanilla and strawberry, and some strawberry topping?" he asked. "Got any bananas? Put that in there, too."

Why vanilla? "Because it's mostly fat free," he explained.

"I used to get one of these on Saturday morning when I would take Chelsea to ballet," the president reminesced.

Clearly reveling at having some free time in his old Little Rock stomping grounds, Clinton declared wistfully, "I wish I could stop at the mall and go shopping."

He skipped the mall, but did stop in at his presidential office in Little Rock before attending a reception with friends at the Old Statehouse, a museum where Clinton launched his presidential campaign.

Clinton apparently felt that he deserved a little treat after his stellar dental checkup.

"They said I was doing a beautiful job with my brushing and flossing," he said proudly.

At the Place to Remember gift shop, owner Sonja Sims said it was her decision to give the president some fudge. She also presented him with a brass clock for the White House, gourmet coffee, and a bracelet for daughter Chelsea.

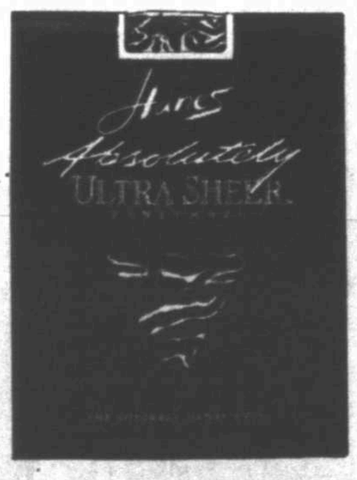

Clinton began the day at his mother's home in Hot Springs. On the way out of town, the president whipped his motorcade into a Shell service station for a prearranged rendezvous with Frank Stanley, 57, and his wife, Carolyn. They visited with Clinton briefly in the service station parking lot.

DAY WATCH

Shots near house

DALLAS — Gunshots were fired near the home of a city councilman who has been the target of threats since taking a more active role in trying to curtail gang activity, police say.

No one was injured when one bullet hit Domingo Garcia's home around 11 p.m. Monday, said police spokesman Sgt. Jim Chandler. The councilman was not home, but his wife was in the house, said Chandler.

A patrol car was parked in front of Garcia's house in the Oak Cliff neighborhood when the shots were fired Monday night.

"It was their opinion (police at the scene) that the shots actually were intended for the officer," said Chandler.

No arrests had been made as of Tuesday morning.

Hunting accident

LAS CRUCES, N.M. — An El Paso, Texas, boy has died from a wound he suffered when his rifle accidentally discharged while he was hunting rabbits, authorities said.

Benjamin Mata, 11, died Monday — his birthday, said Dona Ana County Sheriff Ray Stormant.

"It's just one of those tragic incidents that occur," Stormant said Tuesday. "It always brings up gun safety. . ."

Mata died from a .22-caliber bullet wound he suffered while walking up an arroyo bank about 22 miles west of Las Cruces and south of Interstate 10, Stormant said.

Investigators "concluded that he probably had the gun by the muzzle," Stormant said.

Mata was with a hunting party of eight or nine people, which had broken up into two or three hunting parties that had gone in different directions, Stormant said.

Mata was with four people including his mother's boyfriend, another adult and a little girl, Stormant said.

Trooper issues alert to motorists

■ DPS officers to be out in full force over weekend. They urge revelers to appoint designated drivers before parties begin to avoid accidents, DWIs.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

The time to choose the designated driver for the evening is before arriving at a New Year's celebration.

"We just can't stress that enough," said Sally Arredondo, spokeswoman and state trooper with the Texas Department of Public Safety in Midland.

"If an individual is going out during New Year's Eve, have a designated driver distinguished before getting to that party, celebration or gathering," the trooper said.

While it seems like a simple safety tip, Ms. Arredondo noted that ignoring such tips can cost lives.

She said the state law requiring use of safety belts was violated by more than 58 percent of the 3,057 people who were killed statewide in traffic accidents in 1992.

"That is a high percentage of people not wearing safety belts," she added.

This year, local DPS officers will be out in full force during a 54-hour period — beginning 6 p.m. Friday through midnight Sunday — as Midlanders ring in the new year.

"We will have every available trooper out during these hours," Ms. Arredondo said. "They will definitely be enforcing seat-belt and DWI (driving while intoxicated) violations."

She said past research indicates that the high-risk time to be on the road over the weekend is around 1 a.m. Saturday.

"We are predicting a high volume of traffic about that time, and we will be enforcing laws to prevent accidents, especially fatal accidents," the trooper said.

"Last year alone, over New Year's weekend, during 102 hours of 'Operation Holiday,' there were 40 accidents resulting in 55 fatalities statewide," Ms. Arredondo said.

In the Permian Basin over Christmas, four major accidents were reported, resulting in only one person being injured, she said.

"A Stanton victim sustained some injury, but overall, we were very pleased with the reduced accident rate," Ms. Arredondo said.

The Christmas holiday enforcement watch was conducted from 6 p.m. Dec. 24 through midnight of Dec. 26.

The state trooper noted that holiday-traffic watches have been reduced — from 102 hours of operation to 54 hours — during each holiday period this year.

Ms. Arredondo, who has been with DPS for five years and in the Midland office for one year, attributed reduced rates of accidents over the Christmas holidays to the high visibility of DPS troopers on the highways.

"The troopers are out there. People see that and it is a deterrent, causing people to slow down and wear safety belts," she said.

While it sounds simple, troopers advocate choosing a celebrant who won't drink to be the designated driver.

"And be a defensive driver, wear safety belts, slow down and watch for other drivers," Ms. Arredondo said.

Husband shoots spouse, himself at graphics office

LUBBOCK (AP) — A man shot and killed his estranged wife at her office Tuesday, then placed his rifle in his mouth and pulled the trigger, authorities said.

The man, identified as Eden Santos Ramos, 30, was listed in critical condition at University Medical Center on Tuesday afternoon with a gunshot wound to the head, said hospital spokeswoman Patti Douglass.

His wife, Ida Ortiz Ramos, 38, was pronounced dead at the scene. She had been shot twice in the face, said Justice of the Peace Tom Head.

Authorities said Eden Ramos walked into the graphics office where his wife worked at about 8:45 a.m. CST, brandished a .22-caliber rifle and ordered Mrs. Ramos' co-workers to leave. He said he was going to shoot his wife, said Lubbock police Sgt. Don Davidson.

Davidson said workers were calling police when five shots rang out from the rear of the office.

Mrs. Ramos was found lying in the middle of the office. Eden Ramos was lying near her. He had shot himself in the roof of the mouth, said Davidson. The other two shots have not been accounted for.

No one else was injured.

Authorities were still uncertain Tuesday afternoon as to what led to the shooting.

State appoints firms for highway feasibility study

The Texas Department of Transportation has chosen the firms that are to conduct a feasibility study for a proposed extension of IH-27 from Lubbock to IH-10.

The proposed extension is intended to promote economic development of rural West Texas.

Driver accused in officer's death faces charges

FORT WORTH (AP) — The allegedly drunken driver who hit a Fort Worth policeman was charged with involuntary manslaughter Tuesday, a day after officer Alan Chick died.

Eugene Standerford, 55, of Dallas, was arraigned Tuesday afternoon before State District Judge Sharen Wilson. Standerford was being held in the Tarrant County Jail on $105,000 bond.

Prosecutors said they also plan to charge Standerford with failure to stop and render aid.

Standerford was arrested and charged with suspicion of driving while intoxicated last Wednesday after his white Cadillac struck Chick, who was helping a motorist start a stalled pickup on Loop 820.

He posted $10,000 bail and was released from jail Thursday night.

Chick, an 11-year police veteran, died Monday afternoon at John Peter Smith Hospital after his life support was disconnected.

Nabers outlines car towing regulations

Staff Report

AUSTIN — Motorists may not know it, but they have rights when their cars have been towed, according to Texas Railroad Commissioner Mary Scott Nabers.

She said it's especially important during the holidays, when many people park wherever they find a space. "If you come out and your car is missing, you are in a serious bind," she said.

"This is when you need to know if your automobile was legally towed, what your rights are and what your liability is," Ms. Nabers said.

She said a car can be legally towed under the following circumstances:

Hearing impaired woman makes legal impact

By Lydia Lum
N.Y. Times News Service

As a deaf child growing up in New York and then Fort Worth, Alexis Ander Kashar knew firsthand of restaurants, shops and schools that sometimes excluded the hearing-impaired.

Now she's trying to solve such problems for others. As a Los Angeles attorney, Kashar has taken up the cause of a deaf actress who said she had problems with drive-through service at a Burger King restaurant in Los Angeles. Last week, the actress, who hired Kashar among her attorneys, sued Burger King, contending that the eatery has inadequate drive-through services for hearing-impaired customers.

And Kashar, one of only a few dozen deaf lawyers in the country, is considering several additional lawsuits against other businesses under the 1990 Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). None of those cases has been filed yet, she said.

At 27, Kashar is believed to be the first deaf graduate of the University of Texas School of Law, said law school Dean Mark Yudof.

"We traditionally think of lawyers as advocates through speech, but she showed us that she could succeed as well," said Susana Aleman, the law school's assistant dean for student affairs.

Kashar says her fledgling career — which so far has focused on fighting school districts on behalf of disabled students — satisfies a goal inspired by her own legal battles from Fort Worth classrooms in the early 1980s.

"I cannot imagine myself in any other profession," Kashar said during an interview via computer terminal from Los Angeles last week. "There's nothing like seeing children go through school like everyone else, instead of being treated differently."

A native of New York, Kashar moved with her family to Fort Worth in 1980. Her parents, Sidney and Barbara Ander, who also are deaf, own Compu-TTY, marketing telecommunications devices for the hearing-impaired. Her sister, Debbie Ander, is a Southern Methodist University student and is the only hearing member of the family.

After her freshman year at Arlington Heights High School, administrators told Kashar they would no longer provide an interpreter, as they had done that school year. To get interpreter services, she would have to transfer to Trimble Tech High School, where nearly all of the area's hearing-impaired students went, school officials told her.

She refused.

"I was doing well at Arlington Heights and had been elected to several positions at school," she recalled. "There was no reason to leave."

So her family hired an attorney who dealt with special-education issues. After more than six months of wrangling with school officials, Kashar won back the interpreter service at Arlington Heights.

"My whole world opened up with that interpreter," said Kashar, a dark-haired woman who was a high school cheerleader and was active in school government.

"Communication existed in a way I never knew existed," she said. "I could actually find why students were laughing, participating in debates, answering questions in class. It was unbelievable. When that ser-designated for certain purposes. For example, if a sign at a business states "Customer Parking Only," a car can be towed even if the business is closed.

■ If the property owner or operator has notified the vehicle's owner to move it or the vehicle will be towed.

■ If the vehicle blocks an entrance, exit, fire lane or aisle of a parking facility.

Ms. Nabers said motorists have protection and should be aware of their rights.

"The towing company or owner of the parking facility may be liable for any damages resulting from towing and storage of the vehicle," she said. " The law says an auto owner may sue for damages and attorney fees under certain circumstances for an illegal tow."

The railroad commission is the agency responsible for setting storage fees and can provide information about towing and storage-facility insurance coverage.

Fees for licensed storage facilities can range from $5 to $15 a day, she said.

The facility must send a certified letter within five days to notify the owner that the vehicle is being stored. A fee of up to $25 may be assessed for the notice, she said.

Also, storage facilities may charge a $10 fee to preserve or protect a vehicle from interior damage, she said.

If the motorist doesn't know where the vehicle has been towed, Ms. Nabers said he or she should call the police.

Ms. Nabers said towing companies and vehicle-storage facilities must be licensed by the railroad commission. In addition, towers must provide evidence of insurance, must meet standards for the care of stored vehicles and must prove that they charge the appropriate fees.

The railroad commission has a brochure explaining towing laws and consumer protection. To obtain a copy, call 512-463-7167.

vice was cut off during my sophomore year, it was really traumatic, and I decided that I was going to do everything I could to make sure no one else had to go through that."

She attended the University of Texas at Austin, earning a bachelor's degree in finance in 1989. She then entered law school, graduating a year ago. She married a lawyer she met while attending UT.

Since September, she has worked for a Los Angeles-area firm that focuses on special education and civil-rights issues.

She represents disabled students who seek — as she did in Fort Worth — services from school districts, such as interpreters for the deaf and orthopedic aids for paraplegics.

Kashar, usually the lone deaf student in class throughout her school years, recalled the difficulty she often had before having interpreters.

"When I was in New York schools, I used my lip-reading skills to pull me through," she said. "But many times the teacher would turn around or talk very fast. I relied on my textbooks to teach me everything. My family was not aware of the availability of interpreter services at the time.

"By the time I got to high school and we'd moved to Texas, I realized how much an interpreter makes a difference. Even a bad one," she said, with a lighthearted "ha-ha" on her relay response.

So far, all of her cases have been settled out of court in the students' favor, she added.

She said she hopes that the discrimination case against Burger King by the deaf actress, Terrylene Sacchetti, will bring more awareness of everyday problems that deaf people face. The lawsuit, filed Dec. 20 in a Los Angeles federal court, has drawn national attention.

Sacchetti contends in the suit that on April 13, her written order was refused at a drive-through window, forcing her to go inside for food. She had written down her food order at the window because a drive-through intercom wasn't equipped for hearing-impaired patrons, the suit stated.

Officials of the Miami-based Burger King declined comment on the lawsuit, which seeks drive-through modifications for hearing-impaired customers and an unspecified monetary award for Sacchetti.

Kashar compares Sacchetti's contentions to obstacles that her school-age clients often face.

"It's cheaper for schools to keep deaf students in self-contained classes and mainstream them only for a few classes," Kashar said. "That's a really bad education practice, because society cannot be self-contained. In the real world, there is no Burger King just for deaf people. We have always had to adapt to them. It's time they adapt to us."

Lubbock to IH-10 may ultimately become a portion of the National Highway System, the study will also address the long-term transportation needs of the region," Hagood said.

In addition, the study will "identify opportunities to maximize international trade afforded by the region's proximity to Mexico and the proposed North America Free Trade Agreement," he said.

In HDR's proposal to the transportation department, Hagood said his firm recognizes the importance of involvement of the communities that may be affected by the project. In that regard, he said a newsletter will be distributed to inform the public of the study's progress and of opportuntities for participation.

Baby's autopsy shows abandonment

DALLAS (AP) — A newborn baby whose body was found in far north Dallas was a white female with no evidence of internal or external trauma or of natural disease, an autopsy shows.

"In other words, she just wasn't wanted," Sgt. Jim Chandler, a spokesman for the Dallas police department, said Tuesday.

Two city of Dallas street department workers found the infant's body about 10:15 a.m. Monday. The infant, with umbilical cord still attached, was found wrapped in a blanket and lying in a cardboard box in a vacant lot, in the vicinity of some apartment complexes.

Although the baby was found in the Dallas city limits, the site is actually in Collin County near the North Dallas Tollway, about 2½ miles north of the Dallas County line.

The autopsy by the Collin County medical examiner's office indicated that the baby was a full-term birth.

"The autopsy indicated the approximate date of birth at from Christmas to Dec. 27, which means the child was up to two days old," Chandler said.

Funeral services were scheduled for 2 p.m. Thursday in Burleson. A burial will follow in Fort Worth.

Assistant District Attorney Richards Alpert said that if Standerford is again released from jail, he will have to wear an electronic monitoring device and will only be able to leave his home for specific reasons.

He also would be restricted from drinking alcohol and could not drive a car unless it's equipped with a device that checks blood alcohol levels before starting, Alpert said.

David Pace, hot sauce king, dies at 79

SAN ANTONIO — David E. Pace, who created the original Pace Picante Sauce in 1947 and helped set the stage for the phenomenal growth in the Mexican sauce market, died of heart failure Monday. He was 79.

Pace

His sauce received a gold medal in the Monde Selection in Brussels, Belgium, and his product was named best picante sauce in the world three times.

An entrepreneur, Pace also patented an executive chair in 1967, which could be opened flat so that a businessman could nap in his office. He was president of Pace Chair Co.

A native of Monroe, La., where he graduated from high school, he was the son of a manufacturer of maple syrup and jellies.

Pace earned a football scholarship to Tulane University. A tackle, he was named to the All-Southern football team and played in the first Sugar Bowl.

After graduation in 1937, he coached football for two years. He joined the Army Air Corps and completed pilot training at Kelly Field in 1940.

He and his first wife, Margaret Bosshardt, were married in San Antonio in 1942 and they had two children.

The Paces were divorced in 1976. Shortly afterward, Pace sold the company to his former wife. In 1989, Kit Goldsbury, the Paces' former son-in-law, became sole owner of Pace Foods. He had worked in the company since 1969.

In 1986 Pace and the former Jean Overland were married in San Antonio. She had four children from a previous marriage.

Pace was a test pilot in the Army and served in India. After his return to San Antonio, he entered the syrup business he learned as a boy. He rented the back of a liquor store, where he cooked and bottled jellies, jams and syrups every morning. He delivered the products from the back of his truck in the afternoon.

Pace later decided the real syrup of Texas was picante sauce. He and his wife formed Pace Foods with a family recipe of jalapenos, onions and garlic, which he altered by adding tomatoes.

"My father opened the picante sauce business and made it a success," said his daughter, Linda Pace Roberts of San Antonio. "Each night when he came home from work, he brought us several products to taste. Altogether, he made over 50 items, including syrup, jams, jellies, a chili mix and chile conqueso."

Pace was a member of St. Luke's Episcopal Church. He twice served on the vestry and taught Sunday school.

Survivors, in addition to his wife and daughter are a son, Dr. Paul Pace of San Antonio; a stepson, Arthur F. Schoenig III of Austin; three stepdaughters, Priscilla Oprandi of Coral Gables, Fla., Tammis Kennedy of Austin and Dodie Manning of San Antonio; a sister, Imo Jean Haggerty of Christiansburg, Va., and four grandchildren.

Services were scheduled for Wednesday at St. Luke's Episcopal Church.

Researchers prepare to dig around Alamo

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — When the New Year's revelry dies down, the fun begins for a group of archaeologists trying to unearth historic treasures from the Battle of the Alamo.

The National Underwater and Marine Agency, a non-profit group that searches for artifacts, is commencing its sixth annual exploration of the San Antonio River bottom Sunday when the downtown stream undergoes yearly maintenance draining.

"Of all the great cities in the world, only San Antonio has this opportunity of excavating a normally wet site," said NUMA President Wayne Gronquist of Austin.

New this year will be a dig at a well on a road in front of the Alamo. NUMA volunteers, working with the Center for Archaeological Research at the University of Texas at San Antonio, will start the well excavation Jan. 10, once the San Antonio River is again full of water.

In both digs, the non-profit archaeology group hopes to unearth cannons dating to the 1836 Alamo battle between Texas independence fighters and Santa Anna's Mexican Army.

But researchers said they are anxious to find any historically significant artifacts, some of which may be thousands of years old.

"We would love to be able to shed light on the Alamo cannon mystery," Gronquist said. "But I do not want anyone to think this is simply a cannon hunt."

NUMA researchers, led by chairman Clive Cussler, contend that Alamo cannons likely can be found in the river bed and in the Alamo well.

In the river bottom, the searchers have detected a "very hot target" through five magnetometer surveys revealing a metallic object.

Last year river diggers couldn't overcome a silt buildup to get to the target, but next week they plan to use technology known as induction dredging to alleviate the problem.

Researchers say the Alamo well and its contents can be dated to a several-month period surrounding the 1836 battle. That raises investigators' hopes about any artillery found there.

"It will be a very significant find because they most certainly will be from the Alamo battle," Gronquist said.

NUMA has entered into a agreement with the city of San Antonio and the Texas Antiquities Committee to embark on the well project.

The Alamo well dig could cost $75,000 to $100,000, with the city of San Antonio chipping in about $27,000.

The river dig is estimated to cost between $25,000 and $30,000, a price held down because downtown hotels and other businesses donate services, Gronquist said.

Gronquist noted the cost of either dig could go up significantly if a coveted cannon is found because of the cost involved in preserving such an artillery piece.

Federal complaint names former lieutenant governor

AUSTIN (AP) — Former Lt. Gov. Ben Barnes and Mark Connally, son of former Texas Gov. John Connally, were named Tuesday in a federal complaint connected with $2.5 million in fraudulent loans.

The civil penalty complaint, filed in U.S. District Judge Sam Sparks' court, cited Barnes and Mark Connally in connection with loans taken out in 1985 from Delta Savings Association. The bank failed in May 1988.

Michael Schwartz, an assistant U.S. attorney in Houston, said Connally simultaneously agreed to pay a $50,000 judgment to settle the case. Barnes, however, refused and the case against him will continue, Schwartz said.

"We haven't been able to reach any kind of agreement," he said.

A woman at Barnes' Austin office said he was out of town and unavailable for comment Tuesday.

The complaint alleges that Barnes and Mark Connally conspired with Delta Savings officers to conceal three loans to their real estate partnership totaling $2.5 million.

The loans, never repaid, were made in Mark Connally's name rather than in the name of the partnership, according to Schwartz.

Study: Some fatherless children may suffer

AUSTIN (AP) — Children from fatherless families are more likely to have emotional and behavioral problems than children raised in two-parent families, according to the findings of two University of Texas sociologists.

"Evidence clearly demonstrates that both single mothers and their children are at high risk of emotional and behavioral problems as a result of the conflict surrounding family disruption, unassisted parenthood, inadequate adult supervision and poverty," write Ronald and Jacqueline Angel.

The most seriously disadvantaged families are those headed by teen-age parents, the researchers told the Austin American-Statesman.

Because the mothers are struggling with the demands of single parenthood, their children frequently don't receive the emotional support they need, the Angels found.

The findings are contained in the Angels' book, "Painful Inheritance: Health and the New Generation of Fatherless Families," published last week by the University of Wisconsin Press.

Ronald Angel said the book is the culmination of about six years of research and writing.

"Being a single parent is not necessarily detrimental to anyone's health," he said. But single parenthood combined with low income, low education and few job opportunities "has dangerous health consequences," Angel said.

One frequent source of the children's emotional problems is divorce, he said.

Children raised by mothers who never marry appear to be as likely to have emotional and behavioral problems as those from divorced families, the Angels found. For these children and their mothers, "the sequencing of life is out of kilter" because the mothers missed the traditional steps of marrying and then having children, he said.

The 1990 U.S. Census found that 57.5 percent of black children live with only one parent, compared with 19.5 percent of white children and 29.8 percent of Hispanic children.

Some studies, Angel said, have projected that half of all children and 85 percent of black children will spend some portion of their childhood before the age of 16 in single-parent homes.

Parents Without Partners estimates there are 15 million single parents in the United States.

The Angels' research is consistent with the findings of a 1990 federally sponsored survey of 17,000 U.S. children.

That study found that one in five children younger than 18 has a learning, emotional, behavioral or developmental problem traced to the dissolution of the two-parent family.

Barbie Atteberry, legislative director for Parents Without Partners, said children from single-parent homes have more problems because there is still a stigma surrounding those who don't come from two-parent homes.

"They kind of have that thrown in their face. You don't have a dad or a mother," she said.

Her group, which has 400 members in Austin, works to provide children from one-parent homes with exposure to father figures and mother figures so that they will have well-rounded experiences.

Harlandale School District to celebrate 100th anniversary

By Keefe Borden
Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — David Morrill Poor wanted to make sure his children had an education, but he first had to build a school.

With wood from his barn, Poor and family members built a one-room schoolhouse in south Bexar County in 1894. Soon, others wanting a better life flocked to the school in what evolved into the Harlandale School District.

Harlandale will mark its 100th birthday next year with concerts, banquets and other events.

Aside from the Spanish missionaries, the first formal classes were held in 1888 in the granary at the San Jose Mission.

"It was a dark place that was not really suitable for teaching school," said Linda Holt, a former secretary and unofficial historian of the school district.

One year later, classes were moved to a house on the plaza of the mission.

The first paid teacher was Vicenta Rodriguez Edmunds, who earned $66.50 for the 1891 spring term, Holt said.

The district had books, a teacher and a handful of students, but no regular classroom. So, in 1894, Poor built the first schoolhouse at what is now the corner of Greenwood Street and East Sayers Avenue, across from where the present Morrill Elementary School stands.

Bexar County had only $78 to build a school, so the Poors, using materials from their barn, had a school raising.

"She would hold the boards while he drove the nails," Holt said.

The benches and desks also came from boards found in the Poor's barn. Makeshift blackboards were built by painting the walls of the school black and erasers were made from old pieces of carpet.

The teacher's chair, stove and table also came from the Poor's residence.

The one-room schoolhouse opened in 1894 to 11 students for a six-month term. It was called the Morrill Chapel School because it also was used for church services on Sunday afternoons.

"Miss Annie Work was the first teacher in the school," Holt said. Work earned $25 a month and taught classes for four years.

"The boys were responsible for all janitorial work and Mrs. Poor hauled a barrel of water each week from her (home) to the school in her carriage," Holt said.

In 1898, Ernestine Edmunds, 16-year-old daughter of Vicenta Edmunds, took over as teacher.

For 10 years the young teacher rode her horse, Gunpowder, to school each morning — reportedly never missing a day, Holt said.

In 1905, Harlandale residents petitioned Bexar County commissioners to pass the first property tax for local schools. The effort was successful, and Harlandale residents were assessed their first school tax: 10 cents per $100 valuation.

Eight years later, they passed their first bond issue — a $21,000 package to fund the construction of a 2½-story brick schoolhouse. Only one person voted against the bond issue, Holt said.

It was completed in 1914 and served as an elementary and high school until 1927.

The school taught 10 grades.

"Students who wanted to complete their 11th grade and get a high school diploma had to go to Brackenridge or the old main high school in San Antonio," Holt said.

In 1924, the district officially was named the Harlandale Independent School District.

By the time W. Dain Higdon graduated from Harlandale High School in 1933, the education system in some ways resembled what school children experience today, but there were limitations.

"Harlandale did not have a whole lot of surplus courses," he said. "They were very weak on science. There was no chemistry or physics and no biology taught, but you could get general science."

In addition to the basic academic courses, the school offered typing and wood shop.

Schools started first day after Labor Day and ended 175 days later. The school day consisted of six classes, he said.

Harlandale educators did not have to cope with some of the more complex social problems facing schools today, Holt said.

"Back then ... kiddos that didn't want to learn were not coerced into going to school. If you wanted to learn and you were willing to abide by the rules, you were allowed to attend," he said.

Higdon said he walked to San Jose Elementary School (now Carroll Bell Elementary School) in the 1920s, but he remembers other students who rode a buggy or horse to class.

"They would unhitch the (carriage) and tie the horse to a rail outside the school, and the horse would wait there until they were finished," he said.

Higdon said he was also responsible for sweeping the classes after school and for ensuring each classroom's stove was stocked with coal for the next dav.

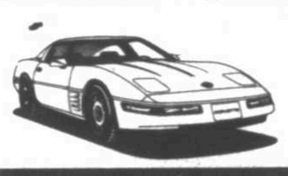

Other events marking the centennial celebration next year include historical dress-up days and history essay writings for students and a ceremony to pay tribute to past educators.

DEAR ABBY

Decades of marriage haven't cured man's cheatin' heart

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have been married for nearly 40 years. We are the same age, 68, and we have grandchildren who think "Popsie" hung the moon. He has been very good to me — except for the times he's been involved with other women.

Van Buren

Last year, I saw him kissing our next-door neighbor, who is a widow nearly our age. My husband told me he was just giving her a birthday kiss. (This was October and her birthday is in July.)

I suspected there was something between them when he went to her house to borrow something from her late husband's tool chest, and came out zipping up his pants. I had just gotten over forgiving him for getting involved with a 30-year-old woman he met in a shop at the mall when he was shopping for my Christmas gift.

Hell will freeze over before I leave him and everything I have helped him make.

I have never refused him, no matter how tired I am. If there was something I could put in his coffee to settle him down, I'd do it in a minute. He has lots of good qualities, but loyalty isn't one of them. I don't know whether I love him, or he is a 40-year habit. We were childhood sweethearts.

I don't expect you to answer this, but it's done me a lot of good getting all this off my chest. Sign me . . . OLD FAITHFUL

DEAR OLD FAITHFUL: Don't apologize; that's what I'm here for. As Hamlet said, sometimes 'tis better to bear those ills we have than to fly to others we know not of.

DEAR ABBY: I am 16 years old and four months pregnant. My boyfriend and I have gotten along fine until this past week.

I am totally against abortion and I don't think I could live with the thought that someone else was raising my child. My father and I don't talk anymore and he hates the idea that I am his daughter and pregnant.

I talk to a lot of people at school and my friends help a lot, too. I hate not having the support of my father. Is there any advice that you can give me? — DESPERATE AND SCARED IN HAMILTON, OHIO

DEAR DESPERATE AND SCARED: Your father is disappointed and probably angry that you and your boyfriend did not act more responsibly in preventing the pregnancy. And because many young women cut short their educations to raise these babies as single mothers, it is likely that he feels his dreams for your future have come to nothing. You do need to talk to your father and explain to him that his support is crucial during this difficult time.

Although you and your boyfriend are not getting along right now, he is required by law to contribute to the support of his child. If he has not already discussed this with you and your parents, you and your parents should consider discussing first with his parents — and later possibly with an attorney — how this must be arranged. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: Adding to your columns on people who don't return books, someone (Dorothy Parker?) wrote:

"They borrow books they will not buy,
"They have no ethics or religions,
"I wish some kind Burbankian guy
"Would cross my books with homing pigeons."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1993

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Tackle the most important tasks first, catching up on less-vital matters when you can. In that way, you will stay on top of the things that can make or break you financially. Although travel is favored in early 1994, mid-summer is the best time for affairs of the heart. Autumn of 1994 could find you caught up in the social whirl. Be careful not to neglect a much older or younger family member.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Marianne Faithfull, football player Mervyn Fernandez, actress Mary Tyler Moore, legendary Spanish cellist Pablo Casals.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your knack for buying and selling brings new gains today. A visitor is delighted by the red-carpet treatment. Paying a bill promptly takes a worry off your mind.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your candor and sincerity establish strong ties with a new associate. Love is in the air. A romantic message is likely to receive a warm response.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Watching for oversights today will save money and prevent embarrassment. Bypass a far-fetched offer. It is your high-performance work efforts that will produce the big payoff!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Cut risks and possible losses by getting expert financial advice. Your keen intuition, or a backup plan, rescues you at the last minute. Take your responsibilities seriously, but find time for creative play.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Scaling down your spending is smart fiscal policy. Your sunny disposition attracts love as well as friendship. Showcase your creative flair at work. Handle legal documents and office purchases like an expert.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Friends and co-workers like your line of conversation today. Seek their support in going after a key objective. Romance may be somewhat fragile. Domestic arrangements are best left undisturbed.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Follow through on a hunch concerning a business venture. A friend's observations could give you a new appreciation for your home life. Try to socialize with people who are cheerful and constructive.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Finish one project before beginning another. Working out a baby-sitting exchange with a neighbor lets you save money while gaining a few hours by yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Self-confidence is an irreplaceable asset. Hold your head high when meeting new people. Afternoon is the best time to make decisions regarding your finances and personal relationships.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An older person may be underestimating your abilities. Financial backing comes from an unexpected quarter. Something you hear today could arouse your interest in a member of the opposite sex. Play it cool.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be strong in your resolve to end a relationship that is going nowhere. Cutting household expenses helps you put money in the bank. A former romantic partner is wondering how you are doing.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Follow your gut feeling regarding a financial matter. Advice that worked for someone else may not be right for you. Extra work and responsibility are heaped on your shoulders. Ask for help!

Opening lead: King of ♠

Some hands seem so easy to play that they don't merit precautionary measures. However, one unlucky break can ruin even the soundest of contracts.

South did not make a jump rebid because the hand was a possible misfit. Once North showed heart support and a good hand, though, South checked on aces and kings and settled in a small slam when North did not hold a king to take care of the diamond loser.

After the lead of the king of spades declarer saw only a diamond loser so, without giving the play any thought, South won the ace and started on trumps. When East showed out on the second round, declarer was suddenly faced with a loser in each red suit. South tried to recover by crossing to the queen of clubs and ruffing a spade, but West ruffed the next club and exited with a trump and declarer was forced to concede a diamond trick.

Declarer found a cure for the hand, but too late. A simple precaution at trick two would have allowed declarer to take advantage of the distribution that existed.

After winning the opening lead, declarer should ruff a spade and then cash two rounds of trumps. When East shows out on the second round, declarer crosses to dummy with a club and ruffs another spade, then draws a third trump before starting to run clubs.

West can ruff at any time, but then would be forced to lead a diamond away from the king. That allows the table's queen to score the fulfilling trick.

Joan Rivers, daughter echo 1 thing: Never talk about sex life

NEW YORK — Joan and Melissa Rivers agree on one thing when it comes to fostering mother-daughter communications.

"Never tell her about your sex life — or lack of it. It's ugly to see pity in a daughter's eyes," Joan Rivers advised in the January issue of Self magazine, in which the 60-year-old talk show host offers tips on talking to daughters.

"It's ugly to see pity in a daughter's eyes," Rivers says.

Melissa, 24, advising on talking to mothers, agreed.

"Never talk about your sex life," she said. "And no matter how tempted you are, never talk about having a fight with your mate. Your mother will automatically hate that person forever."

Joan holds a grudge? Can we talk?

Both also endorse honesty and tact.

And, said Melissa Rivers: "If you're going to ask for a favor, do it only when she's in a good mood."

Joan Rivers has a syndicated talk show, "Can We Shop" Melissa Rivers is a feature reporter for MTV and "CBS This Morning."

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Here's a new twist for Dick Clark.

The 64-year-old former host of that rock 'n' roll institution, "American Bandstand," is looking for country dancers.

Dick Clark Productions has issued a call for people who dance country-style for "Hot Country Jam," to be taped next week at the Acuff Theater at Opryland USA.

The country music special is to air in February on NBC.

How good must a country dancer be?

"Not very," said production manager Patricia Branan. "It's just supposed to be fun."

Clark was host of "American Bandstand" from 1956 to 1989. It went off the air a few weeks after he did.

LOS ANGELES — Robert Goulet was looking forward to a more congenial spot than his sickbed as he prepared his return to the stage Tuesday in "Camelot" just three weeks after surgery for prostate cancer.

"It's time to get off my tush and do some work," the 60-year-old actor said on the eve of the show's opening at the Pantages Theatre.

Goulet, who created the role of Lancelot in the musical's original 1960 Broadway production, is playing King Arthur in the national tour. After surgery Dec. 7, he recuperated at his Las Vegas home.

The operation often causes urinary incontinence, Goulet said, but he doesn't expect problems.

"I will wear some Depends and make sure," he said of the disposable product for incontinence.

Goulet also applied the mythical Camelot's happy-ever-aftering philosophy to his cancerous gland.

"Either I take it out or I die," he said. "Of course, I'm going to die eventually, but (perhaps) with this I'll last another 30 years."

ATLANTA — Once every 31 days with Travis Tritt may be all many of the country-rock singer's fans need, or want.

The 29-year-old Georgia native had a New Year's Eve concert lined up in Atlanta when he got two gigs for the Super Bowl in the Georgia Dome.

Now his appearances at the Jan. 30 football game may be hurting ticket sales for the Dec. 31 show, which has yet to sell out.

Tritt, who was born in suburban Marietta and has a home nearby, said he doesn't care.

"Ever since I knew the Super Bowl was coming to Atlanta, I was excited about the possibility of being involved," he told The Atlanta Journal-Constitution in an interview published Tuesday. "Now that I am, it's just sensational."

Tritt is the headliner for the Super Bowl pregame tailgate party at the stadium and part of the halftime show with Wynonna Judd, Clint Black and Tanya Tucker.

His hit tunes include "I'm Gonna Be Somebody" and "Help Me Hold On."

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Reginald Denny was named best-mannered person of 1993 by the National League of Junior Cotillions for "his spirit of forgiveness in the face of adversity."

The Charlotte-based league, an etiquette and social training program for teen-agers, ranked former President Bush second for "honoring the office of the presidency with dignity."

"The annual selections are based on the manner in which an individual has demonstrated social graces," said Anne Colvin Winters, NLJC executive director. "Reginald Denny heads the list because of the unforgettable compassion he showed for his assailants."

Denny, who was dragged from his truck and bludgeoned during the 1992 Los Angeles riots, hugged the mothers of his accused attackers during their trial this year.

Fate of Morrison's manuscripts remains unknown, lawyer says

NEW YORK (AP) — Some of author Toni Morrison's valuable first editions and other portions of her personal library were likely destroyed in a fire, but the exact amount of damage remains unknown, her attorney said Tuesday.

Until the Nobel Prize-winning writer can actually examine the documents rescued from her weekend home near the Hudson River, no one will know the extent of the damage, Frederick Cammerzell said from his Princeton, N.J., office. Morrison hasn't decided when she'll do that, Cammerzell added.

"Until she goes through what was taken out, we won't know what the condition of anything is or what is there," Cammerzell said. "Her personal library, including first editions and things of that nature, was probably heavily damaged."

Morrison's Grand View retreat was gutted Saturday by a blaze that started after a fireplace ember ignited a sofa.

Cammerzell said some of Morrison's personal papers were in Princeton, but he couldn't say if that included any of the invaluable original manuscripts of books such as "Beloved," which won the 1988 Pulitzer Prize, or her most recent work, "Jazz."

Morrison intended to donate the documents to the Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture. She is chairwoman of the center's advisory board on preserving material.

"She's trying to get a handle on the loss of the house. It was a devastating blow to her," said Cammerzell, who spoke twice with Morrison on Tuesday. "Once she gets a handle on that, she'll get down to seeing what was retrieved."

Morrison did not return phone calls Tuesday for comment. A day earlier, she said that all the papers in the house had been destroyed.

Scientists: U.S. children need diarrhea treatment

By Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — U.S. companies are exporting millions of doses of a cheap, life-saving diarrhea treatment to children overseas — one scientists say would save hundreds of American children, too, if doctors would only use it.

Scientists are educating pediatricians about the oral rehydration therapy, and trying to persuade lawmakers that health care reform must make such over-the-counter treatments an affordable standard of medicine.

"This isn't a glamorous topic, but it's the sort of everyday need that would save children's lives and save millions of dollars," said Dr. Alan Meyers of Boston City Hospital. "We can't let this get overlooked."

Viruses, bacteria and parasites cause diarrhea in 16 million U.S. children under 5 every year, with most cases occurring in January. For the vast majority, it's a simple illness that quickly passes.

But it can cause dangerous dehydration in a matter of hours. Three million children worldwide die every year from dehydration. In the United States, it kills up to 600 children and hospitalizes another 360,000.

Feeding children a special mix of water, sugar and salt prevents diarrhea from causing dehydration. For years, the U.S. Agency for International Development has exported these solutions, called oral rehydration therapy or ORT, to developing countries. The United Nations credits them with saving 1 million lives a year.

Now, scientists and USAID are working to get the treatment to children in the United States too.

"It makes sense," said USAID's health director, Dr. Ann Van Dusen. "They work, for a lower cost."

In the United States, dehydrated children typically get fluids intravenously, in doctor's offices or hospital visits that cost $1 billion a year.

ORT solutions cost $4 to $6 for a one-liter bottle; treatment takes three or four bottles. They don't require a prescription and can prevent diarrhea so IV treatment isn't needed.

They could virtually wipe out deaths from diarrhea in this country, said Dr. Julius Goepp of Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Md.

Yet few pediatricians and parents know about ORT, said Goepp, who is part of the National ORT Project that is traveling the country to educate doctors. This spring, USAID workers will join the effort, holding seminars to explain how to use ORT solutions.

But to work, the government must pay for ORT for poor parents, said Meyers, who has pushed for insurance coverage since the death of a patient whose mother tried unsuccessfully to buy ORT with food stamps because she had no cash.

"In many cases, these over-the-counter products are more medically necessary than prescription drugs but Medicaid won't cover them," Meyers said. "Health care reform has got to include these practical kinds of things that keep people out of the hospital."

Medicaid in 24 states doesn't cover ORT at all, and in another 10 states will only pay for it under very restricted circumstances.

"Physicians are saying, 'I like ORT but I don't get reimbursed for giving it during a visit so I use IV treatment,'" Goepp said. "That's shooting ourselves in the foot."

ORT's special sugars allow the diarrhea-wracked intestine to absorb the solution's salt and potassium, which trap water.

Parents should keep ORT on hand so they can begin giving it as soon as diarrhea starts, Goepp advised. They should also phone the pediatrician to ensure there are no symptoms of a more serious illness, and avoid giving the child sugar-laden colas or gelatin that only worsen diarrhea, he said.

Environmentalists urge Congress to toughen Endangered Species Act

WASHINGTON (AP) — Environmentalists marked the 20th anniversary of the Endangered Species Act on Tuesday by calling on Congress to give the law more teeth to stem the looming extinction of 800 plants and animals.

The act has saved the bald eagle and dozens of other species on the brink of extinction, but it needs more funding and enforcement provisions, the environmentalists said.

"It has missed opportunities because of weaknesses," said Ed Clark of the Wildlife Center of Virginia, holding a bald eagle recovering from an injury after it came into contact with an electric power line.

The Endangered Species Act was enacted two decades ago to protect the nation's dwindling plant and animal species and preserve their habitat. The law expired last year, but Congress extended it until the House and Senate consider its reauthorization this spring.

It promises to be one of the Clinton administration's biggest fights.

The law is reviled by landowners who say it takes away their property rights and steals jobs, claims that made headlines recently as the government tried to stem logging in the Pacific Northwest habitat of the endangered spotted owl.

On the other side are environmentalists who say the law stops development in fewer than 1 percent of controversial cases because the government and developers typically find some compromise.

They say strengthening the act would protect entire habitats before the situation becomes an emergency where the government races to save just one species.

"The problems become so controversial when we try to repair tremendous screw-ups, and inevitably somebody has to pay the atonement," Clark said. "The ESA is our opportunity to prevent this management by catharsis."

Environmentalists back pending legislation by Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Mass., that would extend the act's protection to species that may become endangered and would give private landowners incentives to help preserve species. Studds has attracted 105 co-sponsors, and the bill's counterpart in the Senate has 21.

Rep. Billy Tauzin, D-La., is seeking to make it harder to list plants and animals as endangered species, to require the government to develop preservation plans with the least human impact and to compensate landowners when endangered species require protective action on private property. He has signed up 93 co-sponsors. Ten members sponsor a similar Senate bill.

"It will be very close," said Karyn Strickler of the Endangered Species Coalition, a lobbying arm for dozens of environmental groups.

Environmentalists say the Studds legislation is good but not enough.

They urged Congress to strengthen the law by:

■ Increasing funding. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service gets $300 million a year from excise taxes to support conservation of sport game and fish such as the white-tailed deer and trout. Yet the 800 listed endangered species get only $60 million a year, said Michael Bean of the Environmental Defense Fund.

■ Increasing penalties for violations. Now fines seldom exceed $500 and violations are deemed misdemeanors. "One might cause the extinction of a species literally, and only serve a year in jail," said John Fitzgerald of Defenders of Wildlife.

■ Ordering that recovery plans for species be drafted within 18 months of the identification of a problem.

■ Reversing a decision by the Reagan-Bush administrations that U.S. projects overseas that would impact endangered species abroad are not subject to the law.

Owners remove dog's plot in human cemetery

BELLEFONTAINE, Ohio (AP) — Chippy Sue's final resting place between her owner's cemetery plots turned out to be temporary. The dog was exhumed Tuesday on orders of a judge who said an animal may not be buried in a human cemetery.

Debbie Payne said she and her husband, Willis, checked when the dog died in February 1991 and found no state or local regulation to forbid the cockapoo's burial in Huntsville Cemetery.

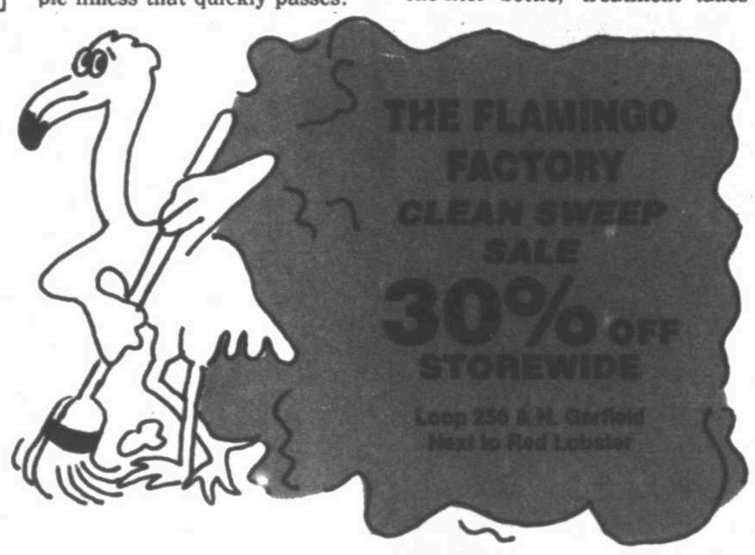

Two former McArthur Township trustees sued in September 1991 to have the dog exhumed. The lawsuit was supported by a 300-signature petition.

"I don't want a dog buried beside my wife," Morris Shields, a former trustee who challenged the dog's burial, said Tuesday.

In August 1992, a judge ruled that the Legislature had not intended to allow pets to be buried in a township cemetery. An appeals court upheld the ruling and the Ohio Supreme Court declined last month to review it.

The Paynes said they didn't know where they would rebury the dog they had for 15 years.

"This whole thing has just prolonged the grief," Mrs. Payne said. "We're both really upset about it."

Lee, MHS get clutch wins

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Staff Writer

Midland High and Midland Lee both turned in clutch, down-the-stretch performances and both teams won to advance to the second round of the first Holiday Classic boys basketball tournament Tuesday night at the Chaparral Center.

The Rebels improved to 10-7 on the yearwith a 53-51 win over Killeen Ellison — a close game which included six lead changes and five ties in the second half. The Bulldogs upped their record to 8-6 with a thrilling 73-69 win over El Paso Riverside, which at 10-3 came into the tournament with the best record of the eight teams.

Ellison, a state tournament qualifier last year, fell to 8-7 for the season while the Rangers dropped to 10-4.

Other games included Odessa Permian's come-from-behind win over Hilton Head, S.C., in the first tournament game. Permian's Tyrone Thomas hit 12-of-14 free throws in the second half as the Panthers outscored the Seahawks 32-26 in the second half for a 55-54 win. The Panthers improved to 6-9 and Hilton Head fell to 2-6.

Wichita Falls Rider turned on the heat in the second half against Amarillo High and the Raiders outscored the Sandies 51-37 in the second half to win going away 88-69 in the tournament's other game. The game was the only one of four which was decided by more than four points.

Rider improved to 8-6 overall while the Sandies fell to 8-7.

Midland High and Odessa Permian will give the fans a preview of District 4-5A action today with an 8 p.m. game, the winner qualifying for the championship game. The Rebels will try to tame Rider's Juan Kelly, who single-handedly led the Raider run in the second half with 17 of his 31 total points. Lee plays Rider at 6:30 p.m. in the other semifinal.

Amarillo and Ellison move to the consolation bracket and will start the action today at 3 p.m. while Hilton Head and Riverside will battle in the other consolation semifinal at 4:45 p.m.

With the Rebels trailing 50-48 with 26 seconds remaining, reserve guard Mike Rhoads drove in a scored a tough layup and was fouled. He made the foul shot to give the Rebels a 51-50 lead. Ellison's Maurice Williams hit the front end of two foul shots to tie the game at 51-51 with 10.65 seconds to play.

Then with less than a second to play, guard Michael Nunn grabbed a missed Rebel shot and attempted an awkward jump hook that bounced around the rim several times before falling and giving Lee a 53-51 lead. Nunn was fouled on the shot but missed the free throw. Ellison,

Slaughter mends

HOUSTON — Houston Oilers receiver Webster Slaughter underwent reconstructive surgery on his left knee Tuesday and is expected to make a full recovery.

Slaughter injured the knee in a Dec. 19 game against Pittsburgh. Team doctors had initially thought he would need only arthroscopic surgery, but found that he had suffered damage to the anterior cruciate ligament.

Williams signs

SAN FRANCISCO — Third baseman Matt Williams and the San Francisco Giants agreed today on a $30.75 million, five-year contract that makes him the eighth highest-paid baseball player.

Williams fought back from a subpar 1992 season to hit .294 in 1993, an increase of 67 points from the previous season and 53 points above his career average. He was a big part of the Giants' 103-win season as San Francisco finished one game behind the NL West champion Atlanta Braves.

"Matt Williams is a player who never gave up. Through hard work and discipline, Matt has earned the right to be paid as one of the premier players in baseball today," said Jeff Moorad, Williams' lawyer and agent.

Williams' $6.15 million annual average income is the second-higest on the Giants behind Barry Bonds ($7,291,667).

Williams finished third in the NL in homers (38), fifth in RBIs (110) and sixth in runs scored (105).

Aikman catches playoff fever

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — Troy Aikman likes the atmosphere of a playoff game.

"I've got that playoff feeling this week," Aikman said. "You couldn't have a regular season game with more at stake. We've been in big games in the past, and I think that will help us."

Aikman, the $50-million quarterback, leads the Dallas Cowboys into the Meadowlands on Sunday with the NFC East title and homefield advantage in the playoffs at stake in a matchup with the New York Giants. Both teams are 11-4.

The winner gets a bye and stays at home through the playoffs while the loser has to play a wildcard game next week.

"Let's face it, the winner of this game has a better chance of making it to the Super Bowl," Aikman said. "I think the homefield advantage is the most important thing in football. I think we'll be extremely motivated. I know I will be."

The Cowboys are on a four-game winning streak, and Aikman said he sees signs the team could be approaching the level it did last year on a January roll that took the Cowboys to the Super Bowl.

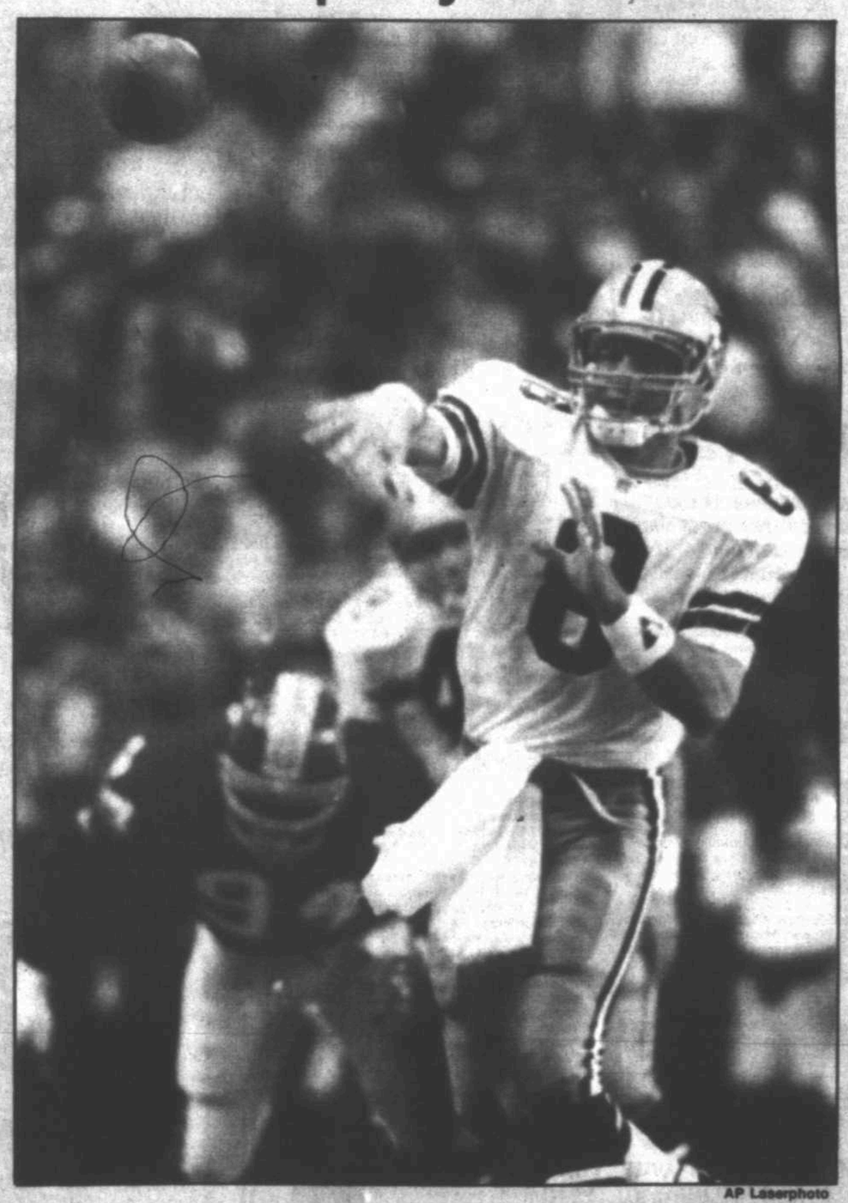

"I think we're starting to put it together again," Aikman said. "If there is one thing you want, it's going into the playoffs on a roll. I see this as a winner-take-all game. And that's the way it should be."

Aikman said he has nothing but respect for coach Dan Reeves and the Giants.

"You can tell the Giants are playing with a lot of confidence," he said. "They really play sound defense. They make you earn everything you get.

"I think it will be a low-scoring game, particularly if the weather is bad. I don't expect a high-scoring

Louisville rallies past Spartans

By Teresa M. Walker
AP Sports Writer

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Jeff Brohm hit Reggie Ferguson with a 25-yard touchdown pass with 12:05 left, helping lift No. 25 Louisville over Michigan State 18-7 Tuesday night in the Liberty Bowl.

The Cardinals added a safety and another TD in clinching their first victory over a Big Ten school. Louisville (9-3) entered the game with an 0-5-1 mark against Big Ten teams.

Michigan State (6-6) led 7-3 for three quarters until Brohm, playing despite a broken index finger on his right hand, rallied the Cardinals.

He directed a 14-play drive in the third quarter that failed when David Akers' 23-yard field goal attempt missed wide left. But Louisville's defense returned the ball to Brohm seven plays later, and the 6-foot-1 senior completed four of five passes, capping a 59-yard drive with the TD throw to Ferguson for a 10-7 lead.

Brohm finished 19-of-29 for 197 yards.

Joe Johnson, who had one sack, put the Cardinals up 12-7 when he tackled Craig Thomas in the end zone for a safety with 8:53 remaining. Ralph Dawkins, who rushed 14 times for 88 yards and caught eight passes for 68, capped the scoring with an 11-yard run with 4:57 remaining.

Any faint hopes the Spartans had ended when Louisville took over on downs at its 36 with 3:30 left.

The victory capped the Cardinals' rebound from 2-9 and 5-6 seasons after beating Alabama in the 1991 Fiesta Bowl. The bowl appearance was the first for Michigan State following consecutive losing seasons.

Cowboys, Oilers dominate Pro Bowl teams

■ Dallas sends 11 players to all-star game, Houston lands six on AFC squad.

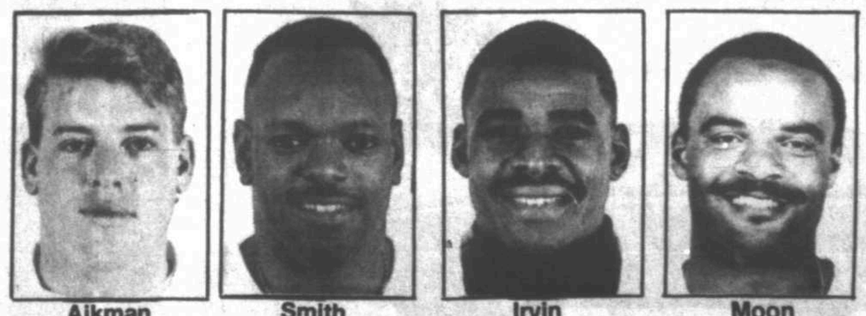

By Dave Goldberg
AP Football Writer

NEW YORK — The Dallas Cowboys truly are America's team — as the Pro Bowl, released on Tuesday, demonstrated.

Eleven members of the Super Bowl champions, an NFC record for one team, were voted to play in the NFL's Feb. 6 all-star game in Honolulu in the first Pro Bowl balloting in which fans participated.

That's the most for the NFC and one fewer than the record of 12 from the 1973 Miami Dolphins — the year after the Dolphins went 17-0, the only perfect record in NFL history. The 1973 team also was a Super Bowl winner.

"I think having 11 guys selected shows you the kind of respect we have around the league," said wide receiver Michael Irvin, one of the Cowboys selected as a starter.

Aikman | Smith | Irvin | Moon

The Buffalo Bills, with seven, had the most players named to the AFC team.

Seven San Francisco 49ers also were placed on the team, three in tie-breakers, which were decided by fan voting.

The Pro Bowl lineup included perhaps the oldest group of quarterbacks ever named — Joe Montana, 37, of Kansas City and Warren Moon, 38, of Houston were the AFC backups, and Phil Simms, 38, of the New York Giants was a backup for the NFC.

The starting quarterbacks were Troy Aikman of Dallas in the NFC and John Elway of Denver for the AFC. San Francisco's Steve Young joined Aikman and Simms as NFC quarterbacks.

In addition to having the fans join coaches and players in voting, there were several changes in the format for this year's team.

Defenses were switched from 3-4 to 4-3, meaning an extra defensive lineman was selected and one less inside linebacker.

A fullback also was selected to go with three running backs, adding the Cowboys' Daryl Johnston to teammate Emmitt Smith, Detroit's Barry Sanders and Los Angeles Rams rookie Jerome Bettis in the NFC. The AFC fullback was Keith Byars of Miami, joining Buffalo's Thurman Thomas, Kansas City's Marcus Allen, and Pittsburgh's Barry Foster.

Aikman was the top vote-getter among the fans, who made NFC players their top five choices. He got 216,782 votes to 205,106 for Young, 190,073 for Emmitt Smith, 184,104 for Rice and 174,254 for Barry Sanders.

Rice and Atlanta cornerback Deion Sanders, however, were the only unanimous choices among players, fans and coaches, although 20 players on each squad led the vote in all three categories.

Fan voting was used whenever there was a tie-breaker and six players made the teams that way — all high-profile players or players from high-profile teams.

They were tight ends Keith Jackson of Miami and Brent Jones of San Francisco; offensive linemen Jumbo Elliott

Top-ranked Hogs roll past Texas Southern

Associated Press

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — President Clinton missed a bunch of the good stuff.

■ Top 25 Roundup

By the time Clinton got to his seat Tuesday night, top-ranked Arkansas was 31 in front and on its way to a 129-63 victory over Texas Southern.

Al Dillard's eight straight points ended a 28-3 run and put the Razorbacks (8-0) on top 45-14 with 4:25 to play. Texas Southern (3-7) trailed 59-22 at the half. At that point, the Tigers had made 9-of-37 from the field and the Razorbacks had made 21-of-41, including 8-of-17 from 3-point range.

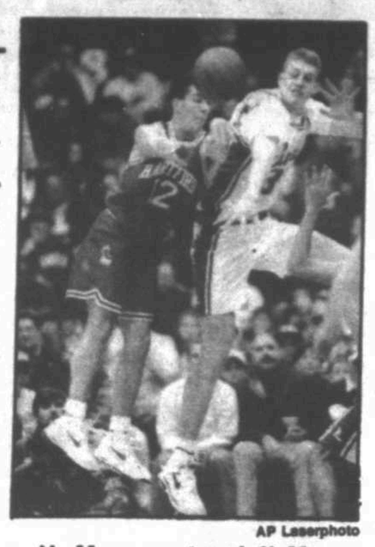

Arkansas' starters ran the lead to 74-24 in slightly more than two minutes.

HOLIDAY: Rebels, Bulldogs win

(From 1C)

however, had no time to get the ball down the court for a decent shot at the basket.

"I don't think we ever got in a rhythm," Lee coach Jon House said. "But we made our free throws when we had to. We played like Rebels — hard. We learned that if we play hard, good things happen."

House said Rhoads just was released by his physician to play after missing six weeks with a hip injury.

Midland High overcame a very physical Riverside team, which racked up 30 fouls during the course of the game, and made clutch free throws down the stretch for the win.

The Bulldogs trailed 53-51 going into the fourth after being outscored 31-16 in the third behind Orlando Olivas' 24 points, all of which came in the second half. Jason Kopp, Jumon Hailey and Donald Carter each hit 2-of-2 free throws in the final 2:18 for the Bulldog win.

Midland coach Jack Stephenson said he felt the first day of the tournament was a success.

"There were three great games today," Stephenson said. "If people don't come out to see this, they're really missing out."

of the Giants, Jesse Sapolu and Guy McIntyre of the 49ers; and linebacker Pat Swilling of Detroit.

In addition to Aikman, Emmitt Smith and Johnston, the 11 Cowboys included wide receiver Irvin, offensive tackle Erik Williams, guard Nate Newton, center Mark Stepnoski, tight end Jay Novacek, defensive tackle Russell Maryland, linebacker Ken Norton, and safety Thomas Everett.

Stepnoski is injured and won't play. He was replaced on the roster by the Giants' Bart Oates, who shares center on his own team with Brian Williams.

The seven Buffalo players were Thomas; wide receiver Andre Reed; offensive tackle Howard Ballard; defensive end Bruce Smith; linebacker Cornelius Bennett; cornerback Nate Odomes; and special teams player Steve Tasker.

Curiously missing was linebacker Darryl Talley, whom most of the Bills consider, along with Odomes, their top defensive player this year.

"I'm very surprised," said Reed, who ranks 13th among AFC receivers with 803 yards. His 48 catches equal his career low, set in his rookie season.

The NFC outside linebackers were notable because all three — Rickey Jackson and Renaldo Turnbull of New Orleans and Swilling — played for the Saints last year. Swilling was traded in the offseason to the Lions, opening the way for Turnbull to become a starter.

game. I think it will be one of those physical, defensive games," he said.

Aikman also praised counterpart Phil Simms. "He doesn't get the credit he deserves. He's a tremendous leader. I have a lot of respect for him."

The last time Aikman played against the Giants, he pulled a hamstring in a 31-9 victory.

"Hopefully, I won't have to do any running in this one," Aikman said. "It's going to be a tough game. It's very, very difficult to beat a team twice in a season."

Aikman said he was feeling a little pressure from all the hullabaloo over his contract, the highest-paying in NFL history.

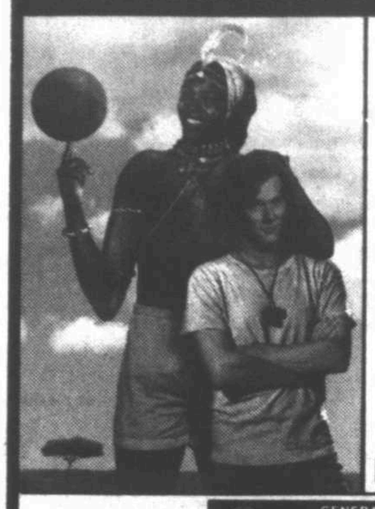

"I think I've put a little pressure on myself. I might have done that Sunday, but I don't feel like I have to do that anymore," Aikman said.

"Some people will think I should do more because of the contract, but they'll always be some like that."

Prices slip

NEW YORK — Oil prices finished slightly lower Tuesday and gasoline rebounded from the previous day's drop in a volatile session that had little news to give traders direction.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in February settled at $14.11 per barrel, down 2 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

What little news there was in the market on Tuesday was largely ignored. Norway said again that it would not reduce North Sea production to comply with Oman's efforts to shore up prices by cutting output among non-members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Norway's strong reiteration of its policy was not much of a surprise to the market.
heating oil-consuming region.

Natural gas prices were lower, with contracts for delivery in February settling at $2.075 per 1,000 cubic feet, down 1.3 cents.

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The currency markets shrugged off U.S. strong consumer confidence figures released Tuesday, and the dollar drifted lower against most major currencies in listless holiday-week trading. Gold prices were mixed.

On the New York Commodity Exchange, gold for current delivery closed at $387.40 a troy ounce, down 50 cents.

In New York, the dollar finished at 111.38 yen, down from 111.40 yen Monday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared to late Monday: 1.6990 German marks, down from 1.7010; 1.4385 Swiss francs, down from 1.4435; 5.7880 French francs, down from 5.7945; 1,678.00 Italian lire, up from 1,676.00; and 1.3308 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3274.

In New York, the British pound finished at $1.5080, more expensive than $1.5045.

Another record Dow

NEW YORK — The record breaking on Wall Street accelerated Tuesday with three major indexes hitting new highs and stocks gaining broadly.

However, analysts cautioned against attributing the gains to anything more than traditional year-end buying combined with continued optimism for a growing economy with low inflation.

The Dow Jones industrial average closed at its second record high in a row, up 0.84 point to 3,793.77.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by about 3 to 2 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 1,217 up, 825 down and 665 unchanged.

Big Board volume was 200.96 million shares. Although that's considered light, it was higher than Monday's 170.75 million, a record low for the year, not counting abbreviated trading days.

Consumer confidence rises sharply

■ Survey: Americans grow substantially more upbeat about economy's future.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Americans grew substantially more upbeat about the economy's future in December, according to a monthly survey of consumer sentiment.

The Conference Board, a business-supported research group, said Tuesday its consumer confidence index jumped 8.3 points, to 80.2. The index, which has a 1985 base of 100, has gained nearly 20 points since October, reflecting renewed optimism about the economy's direction.

The December results weren't too surprising, coming after news from big retailers that consumers, while very choosy about what they bought, generally were in a spending mood at Christmas. But some economists questioned the link between improved consumer confidence and an uptick in spending.

The survey, compiled from questionnaires sent to 5,000 households across the country, found consumers were more optimistic than in November about business conditions for the next six months. Twice as many consumers are positive about the immediate future as those who are negative, a turnaround from October, the Conference Board said.

The survey supports other evidence of rising economic activity. The Commerce Department said Tuesday that manufacturers and service industries should enjoy their fastest growth in six years during 1994.

Fabian Linden, executive director of the Conference Board's Consumer Research Center, said the index "is now at a level historically associated with a reasonably comfortable pace of economic growth."

"The level of consumer expectations, which historically has been an impressive indicator of things to come, has chalked up imposing gains in each of the past two months," he said. "While it may still be too early for the readings to be totally convincing, they are extremely encouraging."

The Conference Board said more survey respondents believed jobs are plentiful, but people with that sentiment remained a minority.

Gary Schlossberg, senior economist at San Wells Fargo & Co., said the consumer confidence report is "consistent in what we see in the other data and our forecasts. We seem to be on track for moderate growth."

Schlossberg and other economists find the Conference Board survey useful in surveying the economy, but they say it alone isn't enough to compel revisions in the 1994 forecasts.

Sharp: Texas to leave U.S. growth in dust

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Economic growth in Texas will outpace growth in the rest of the nation, according to the state comptroller's office.

"Texas' economic growth will remain ahead of the U.S. as new business is attracted by access to markets and the relatively low cost of doing business," State Comptroller John Sharp said Tuesday.

"The North American Free Trade Agreement could attract even more business," Sharp said.

The comptroller office's monthly publication "Fiscal Notes" says that the gross state product will increase at a rate of more than 3 percent through 1995 — slightly more than the 2.9 percent in 1996.

Employment should grow about 2 percent annually, while personal income should rise about 6.5 percent per year, the publication said.

From September 1992 to September 1993, Texas gained about 160,000 new jobs — more than any other state, Sharp said.

Texas has experienced big job gains in manufacturing and construction. But those gains have been partially offset by weakness in the energy industry, Sharp said.

Sharp said Austin and San Antonio have the strongest local economies with job growth of 3 percent per year.

Oshman's plans to close 33 of its smaller stores

HOUSTON (AP) — Oshman's plans to close 33 of its smaller stores in addition to seven closings previously announced as part of a shift toward larger outlet-type stores.

The Houston-based sporting goods chain has not identified which stores will be shut down, but company officials said the closings will occur over the next two years.

Management of the Oshman's store in Midland Park Mall said that the local store will not be on the list of stores to be closed.

The decision will cost Oshman's $15 million for restructuring to be assessed against fourth-quarter earnings. The company lost $4 million during the first half of 1993 and is likely to lose money for the fifth consecutive year.

Management of Oshman's store in Midland Park Mall says local store will not be on list of stores to be closed.

"We would have had an operating profit in the fourth quarter, but this will knock that out," Oshman's President Alvin Lubetkin said Monday.

Oshman's has 166 stores in 16 states, including eight SuperSports USA outlets. Fifty-three of the stores are in Texas.

Lubetkin has said the company must turn more to the superstore if it is to return to profitability. That transformation so far appears promising. SuperSports USA accounted for 19 percent of the company's total sales for the first nine months of 1993 and 26 percent of total sales for November.

The stores have large play areas where customers can try out sports equipment before they buy it. Six new Oshman's superstores are planned for 1994.

GE consortium now speaks, thinks Italian

Associated Press

A consortium led by General Electric Co. will acquire 69 percent of Nuovo Pignone, an Italian state-owned electrical equipment manufacturer, for about $420 million, GE announced Wednesday.

GE's partners in the deal, Dallas-based Dresser Industries Inc. and Ingersoll-Rand Co., which will each own 12 percent of Nuovo Pignone. Fairfield, Conn.-based GE will own 25 percent, and a group of Italian banks is expected to hold the other 20 percent.

The Italian government plans to sell 11 percent of Nuovo Pignone to the public and hold the remaining 20 percent.

The transaction is expected to close in the first half of 1994.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Gradual transference of house avoids gift tax

By Bill Doyle

Q: I wish to give my home to my daughter and her husband while I am still alive. The house is valued at $85,000. How can this be handled, so that they would have to pay little or no income tax on the gift?

Doyle

A: There is never — repeat, NEVER — any income tax on gifts. Gifts can be hit with gift tax, but that is a different levy. And, when such a tax is due, it is paid by the donor — not the recipient.

But cheer up. You can arrange to transfer the home's ownership to your daughter and son-in-law in a way that no gift tax is due.

The Internal Revenue Code allows you to make gifts of up to $10,000 annually to each of as many people as you please without filing a federal gift tax return.

So, by transferring $10,000 ownership in the house to your daughter and an equal amount to her husband for four years, and $2,500 to each of them the fifth year, you could give them the total house, free of all tax consequences.

Make sure you have the documents drawn up by an attorney who is experienced in real estate and tax matters — particularly gift taxes.

Q: In July 1946, my three brothers and I inherited from our parents a house, then estimated to be valued at $10,000. At the time, I bought from my brothers their shares of the property for $3,750.

I sold the house for $42,500 on May 28, 1993, after living in it since 1946. I am now 82 years old. Will I owe any income tax on the sale?

A: No. Because you are older than 54, you are entitled to the once-in-a-lifetime exclusion from tax on up to $125,000 profit on the sale of the principal residence in which you lived for at least three of the five years before the sale.

Were it not for that provision of the Internal Revenue Code, you would owe capital gains tax on your profit from the sale — the difference between your basis and the proceeds from the sale.

From your letter, your basis seems to have been at least $6,250. That's your 25 percent of the house's $10,000 value at the time of the inheritance plus the $3,750 you paid to buy your brothers' shares and the cost of all additions and improvements you made over the years.

Your sale proceeds came to $42,500 minus real estate agent commission and any other selling expenses.

Although you don't supply all the numbers to figure your accurate basis and sale proceeds, it's clear the one-time exclusion permits you to escape tax on as much as $36,250.

Q: My wife has taken early retirement from a major company, where she has more than $100,000 in a profit-sharing account. She is 59 1/2 years old. We want to pay off the $70,000 mortgage on our home.

How can we utilize her profit-sharing money, without incurring a tremendous income tax liability in retiring the mortgage?

A: There will be no tax "penalty" in withdrawing profit-sharing money to retire the mortgage or for any other purpose. But regular income tax will be due. Withdrawals from retirement accounts before age 59 1/2 are subject to a 10 percent penalty plus regular income tax.

A $70,000 withdrawal would put you in a higher federal income tax bracket — probably 28 percent or 31 percent, depending on total taxable income. There's no way you can legitimately duck that.

However, it is wise for most families to get out from under mortgage debt. That applies especially for folks in or approaching their senior years.

My advice is to pay off the mortgage and accept the one-time tax jolt.

American industry in 1994 looks for busiest time in six years

By Dave Skidmore
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — More than two years after the recession's end, the wheels of industry finally will start humming in the new year, the government predicted Tuesday.

The Commerce Department, in its 35th annual forecast of winners and losers in American industry, said prospects were bright for makers of automobiles, computers, factory machinery and home appliances.

Prospects were at least mildly positive for almost every industry except the defense sector. Of 136 manufacturing industries surveyed, 121 were expected to show increasing sales.

"We anticipate the fastest expansion in manufacturers' shipments since 1988," said Jeffrey E. Garten, undersecretary for international trade.

Overall, the department's U.S. Industrial Outlook projected an inflation-adjusted median growth rate in manufacturers' shipments of 2.8 percent, meaning half would see faster growth and half slower.

That compares with gains of 2 percent this year and 1.7 percent in 1992 and a decline of 3.7 percent in 1991, the year the recession ended. If realized, the predicted 1994 advance would be the third consecutive gain and the largest in six years.

Low interest rates are fueling demand by businesses for computers and machinery and by consumers for automobiles and homes. That, in turn, is stoking a revival across a wide spectrum of related industries.

Sales of cars and light trucks should total 14.8 million in 1994, up 6 percent from this year, and construction of new homes, 1.3 million, up 4 percent.

The projected advances in the two fastest-growing industries — metal-cutting machinery, 12.8 percent, and electronic components, 11.1 percent — are both benefiting from strong auto sales.

Furniture and appliance sales, both predicted to rise 4 percent, are linked to the strengthening housing market.

Other fast-growing industries are connected to computerization, health care and environmental improvements.

Despite the prospect for higher shipments, 60 of the 121 manufacturing industries projecting growth are expected to cut employment.

They are achieving higher output by modernizing and computerizing their production. Payrolls in the fast-growing electronic component manufacturing business, for instance, are expected to shrink 2 percent.

Meanwhile, seven of the 10 industries anticipated to be most sluggish are linked to defense. They include aircraft parts and engines, with a 24.3 percent drop predicted, and search and navigational equipment, and ship building.

Among services, the fastest-growing should be space commerce, which includes commercial space launches and satellite communications. The department predicted a 22.6 percent increase in revenues.

Other services with strong revenue gains expected are data processing, 15.5 percent; electronic information, 14.7 percent, and general merchandise retailers, 14.3 percent.

The health care industry, which could eventually be reined in by President Clinton's reform proposal, is expected to grow 12.5 percent to $1.06 trillion, topping $1 trillion for the first time.

The two slowest-growing services were financial. The department anticipated a 6.8 percent decline in activity at venture capital firms and a 5.1 percent drop in mortgage lending at savings institutions, with the slack being picked up by other lenders.

Among the other highlights of the 1994 forecast:

■ The 1990s will usher in a vast array of interactive information and entertainment services.

■ Cable television's revenue should increase 10 percent in its first full year of re-regulation. It is the fastest-growing advertising medium.

■ Newspaper receipts should show a slight inflation-adjusted pickup of less than 1 percent next year after declining for six years in a row.

■ Consumer enthusiasm for pickup trucks, vans and sport utility vehicles is siphoning sales from passenger cars.

■ U.S. production of crude oil should fall 3 percent.

■ Generic drug production is expected to soar with patents on one-third of the industry's best-selling brandname drugs expiring by the year 2000.

■ Banks should report profits for the third consecutive year.

■ More than 30 percent of high school graduates and 60 percent of college graduates use computers in their jobs. However, only 25 percent of high school teachers are computer literate.

■ Box office receipts at movie theaters are expected to hit a record $5.2 billion.

■ The number of lawyers has tripled to nearly 800,000 over the past 20 years.

Government takes close look at its chief inflation indicator

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government is taking a closer look at the way it tracks inflation after finding that the indicator may overstate annual price increases.

The Consumer Price Index may have overstated the nation's inflation rate by as much as 0.6 percent a year, according to researchers at the Bureau of Labor Statistics, a division of the Department of Labor.

Deborah Klein, a spokeswoman for BLS, said the research will not necessarily lead to changes in the way the CPI is calculated.

"There is no specific timetable to do anything," she said, adding that no changes would be made without notice.

The CPI is used to determine cost of living increases in Social Security Benefits and labor contracts in which pay increases are tied to the level of inflation. It also is a major influence on interest rates and is closely watched by the financial markets.

BLS researchers looked at alternative ways of calculating rises and declines in the costs for goods ranging from power tools and toys to cars, clothing and food.

Researchers studied the government's methods for determining whether the price of an item has increased because of a corresponding improvement in quality. They also looked at whether the "market basket," the expansive list of consumer goods on which prices are checked, should be updated for the first time in a decade.

The studies were designed to "insure that the Consumer Price Index is actually measuring what it should be measuring, said Klein.

The researchers found that CPI may overstate the nation's inflation rate by as much as 0.6 percent a year. Prices for the first 11 months of 1993 rose 2.8 percent.

She said whether in changes occur will depend on a number of factors, including the reaction from other nations that track inflation.

Five articles detailing the research will be published in the December issue of the bureau's "Monthly Labor Review," not expected back from the printer until next week.

Anti-diabetes herbs

A little dandelion tea or a pinch of sage or oregano may help keep diabetes in check. Such long-time popular herbal remedies for diabetes do have scientific validity, according to new research at the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The discovery is part of an ongoing search for foods that may help control diabetes in lieu of drugs, says USDA researcher Richard Anderson, Ph.D.

He recently tested 24 plant extracts reputed in folklore to have anti-diabetic properties. In test-tube experiments, fully nine of the plants did stimulate insulin activity. This could be important for those with Type II diabetes, also known as adult onset diabetes. Such herbs might make their bodies' insulin more potent, reducing the amount of insulin they need to process sugar, says Dr. Anderson.

Here are the edible plants that doubled insulin activity: oregano, sage, bay leaf, dandelion stems (also known as greens) and lavender and birch bark, both of which are sometimes made into tea, although neither is on the government's "safe" list. In previous tests, Dr. Anderson found that three spices — cinnamon, cloves and turmeric - tripled insulin activity.

Garlic remedy

If you need more help in getting your cholesterol down, think about adding garlic to your regimen. Proof is mounting that both fresh garlic and garlic supplements really do work — and are powerful in even small amounts, if your cholesterol is over 200.

The medicine in only one-half to one whole garlic clove a day (or equivalent in garlic supplements) lowers such high cholesterol by a "conservative" 9 percent, according to a review of clinical trials by physicians at New York Medical College in Valhalla, N.Y.. For some people, the reduction may be more like 12 percent or more, they noted.

In commercial garlic preparations, that means a daily dose of about 900 mg of Kwai tablets made in Germany or 1,000 mg of Kyolic water-soluble extract from Japan.

Garlic contains a mixture of multiple sulfur chemicals that appear to work by suppressing the liver's manufacture of cholesterol.

Least expensive is fresh garlic. And you need not eat it raw. Milder cooked garlic combats high cholesterol and heart disease, as well as or, some say, even better than the raw stuff.

Prevent polyps, cancer

What can you eat to prevent precancerous colon polyps? These are tiny growths that can enlarge into full-blown malignant tumors. If such polyps are prevented from occurring or growing, the theory goes, colon cancer does not materialize.

To ward off polyps, several new studies give thumbs up to high-fiber fruits, vegetables and cereals. On the other hand, alcohol gets a big thumbs down as a promoter of polyps leading to colorectal cancer.

For example, a new study at the University of North Carolina finds that men who drink the most alcohol are four times more apt to develop polyps than non-drinkers. And the biggest culprit? Beer, not wine or hard liquor. Men who drank the most beer were about six times more apt to develop precancerous polyps than non-drinkers. Other studies incriminate beer as a major contributor to rectal cancer.

Especially good anti-polyps fare: high-fiber wheat bran cereal and vegetables such as spinach, cabbage and broccoli.

Remains smoke-free

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — A nursing home whose no-smoking policy had been challenged by the state won a court case and will continue to ban smoking.

The state court ruling ended a case that began last January when the state Department of Health ordered the Maplewood Nursing Home to add a designated smoking area.

Although the department usually campaigns against smoking, in this case health officials said residents should be permitted to smoke because Maplewood was their own home. The department said it would not appeal.

The home's residents range in age from 67 to 102; one smokes occasionally. The nursing home has banned all smoking since it was founded in 1947. The home said all residents were informed of the no-smoking rule before they moved in.

In midlife, thin is in for men wanting longer life

By Jane E. Brody
N.Y. Times News Service

Thin is not just in. For middle-aged men, at least, it is also the route to a longer life, according to a 27-year study of more than 19,000 graduates of Harvard University.

The findings, published in the Dec. 15 issue of The Journal of the American Medical Association, strongly suggest that increases in so-called desirable weights for men, which have been made over the last three decades, are unjustified and are likely to result in higher death rates, especially from heart disease.

In contrast to previous large studies of the relationship between body weight and death rates, the new study showed no increased risk of death among the leanest men. Rather, these men had the lowest death rates, 40 percent lower than those of the heaviest men.

With respect to deaths from heart disease, the relationship to body weight was even stronger. The heaviest men, those 20 percent or more above the desirable weights published in 1983 by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., had death rates two and a half times as great as those for the leanest men.

The 1983 table listed "desirable" weights that were significantly higher than those in the 1959 Metropolitan Life table. In 1990, the U.S. Department of Agriculture published yet another table listing even higher weights as desirable.

For example, for a man 5 feet 10 inches tall, the 1959 table recommended an upper weight limit of 172 pounds; in 1983, this rose to 179, and in the 1990 table it became 188 pounds. Yet, the new study showed, the lowest death rates for a man of that height were associated with weights under 157 pounds.

According to Dr. I-Min Lee, epidemiologist at the Harvard School of Public Health and Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston, the previous studies, which formed the basis for the higher weights recommended in recent tables, failed to take into account the effects on life expectancy of cigarette smoking and the possibility that some of the leanest men were thin because they were sick and would soon die.

In the study of the Harvard men, Lee and her colleagues were able to analyze data separately for men who never smoked. Smokers as a group tend to be significantly thinner than nonsmokers and former smokers, but they are also more likely to die from many causes, including heart disease and cancer.

Furthermore, the researchers excluded the deaths that occurred during the first five years of follow-up to reduce a possible bias that some men were thin because they were dying. When both these potential biases were accounted for, Lee said in an interview Tuesday, the thinnest men had the lowest death rates.

"We found a direct relationship between weight and mortality, with the heavier men at all ages being more likely to die," she explained. "So I believe the upward trend in desirable weights is not justified."

Lee said further, "Men who are overweight and lose some weight will lower their risk somewhat, but to be at the lowest risk, they really have to be quite thin."

She added that she could not predict which was worse for mortality, staying overweight or repeatedly losing or gaining weight, since an earlier study she did showed that weight-cycling, or yo-yo dieting, was itself a hazard to health and life.

"The best thing is to lose the excess weight and keep it off, which is obviously easier said than done," she remarked.

But she cautioned smokers against using the excuse of a potential weight gain to justify continuing to smoke. She said: "Cigarette smoking is a much greater risk. Any weight you may gain with quitting doesn't put you at the same risk as if you continued smoking."

New surgery technique holds promise

By Malcolm Ritter

NEW YORK (AP) — A new surgical technique for fixing dangerous bulges in the abdomen's main artery may mean shorter, cheaper and less painful hospital stays for patients, surgeons say.

At least 40,000 Americans a year undergo surgery to fix the bulging weakened areas, called abdominal aortic aneurysms. If not repaired, aneurysms can rupture and cause a quick death.

With standard repair surgery, a patient requires general anesthesia, a long abdominal incision, intensive care for up to several days and maybe a week to 10 days in the hospital.

But the new technique holds out the promise of only local or regional anesthesia, a smaller incision in the groin that causes much less pain, no time in intensive care and only two days of hospitalization. It can also eliminate the need for blood transfusions and so the risk of transfusion-related disease, doctors say.

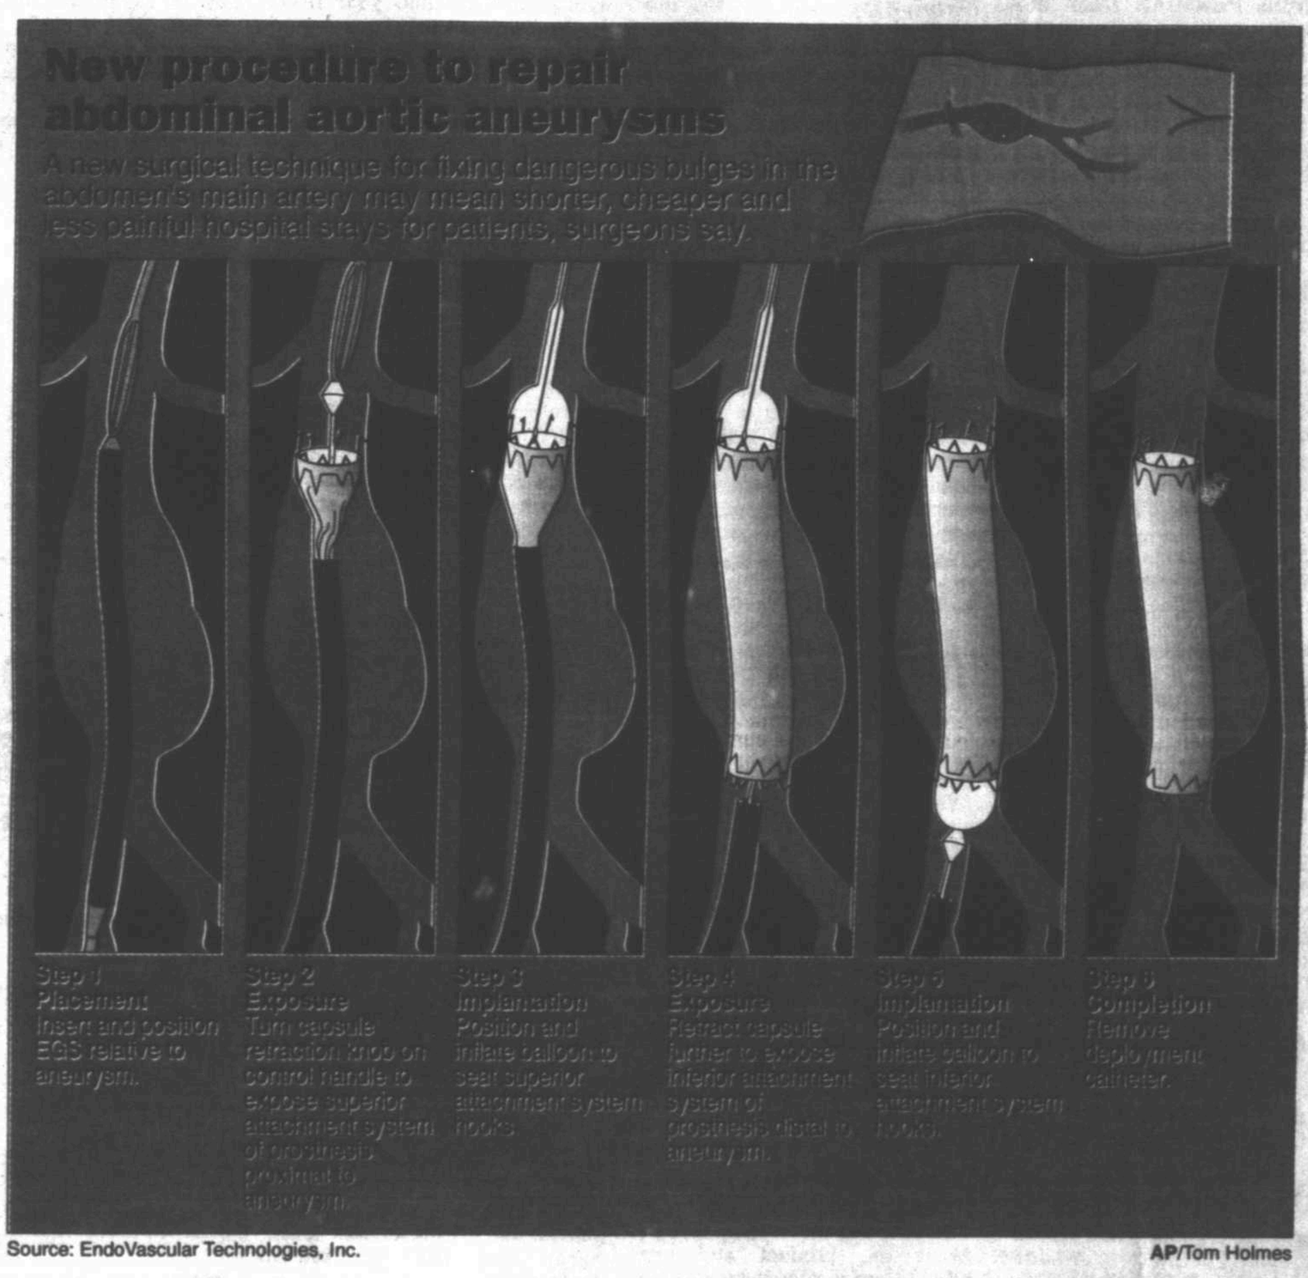

The shorter hospital stay and lack of intensive care should save on health care costs, they say. And because the surgery is less physically traumatic than the standard procedure, it may have lower risks of complications and death.

The technique follows a recent trend toward minimally invasive surgery, procedures that cause less physical trauma than standard surgery requires. For example, doctors can now remove a gallbladder or an appendix by inserting tubes through small punctures in the skin.

The new aneurysm procedure has been performed so far by only a handful of surgeons around the world, starting in 1990. Its availability is limited in the United States because it involves equipment not yet approved for routine use.

It is still not clear whether the sur-

Back pain most common cause of job absenteeism

Hearst News Service

Back problems are an annual $60 billion pain in the neck in the United States, where it is the most common cause of job absenteeism.

Back pain also is the most common cause of employee absenteeism in Canada, Sweden and Great Britain, Wyatt Townley wrote in an article in the current issue of Cosmopolitan, and it afflicts four out of five people at some point. Victims include Princess Di, John F. Kennedy and Elizabeth Taylor.

Some experts believe back problems occur because of lack of exercise.

"If you go out to the farms of Iowa, you don't find those farmers lying around, disabled by bad backs," said orthopedic surgeon Dr. Arthur White, medical director of the San Francisco Spine Institute.

Others attribute backaches to repressed negative emotions that create tension and restrict blood and oxygen flow to muscles.

Common back pain can be conquered. The spine is comprised of 33 interlocking bones called vertebrae. It has three natural curves — the cervical (neck), thoracic (upper back) and lumbar (lower back.) With so much weight on the lumbar curve, the lower back suffers most. Problems arise from misuse through bad posture, overuse and nonuse.

It has been estimated that 96 percent of people don't stand properly. Fixing the problem sounds simple — keep your

Vitamin E show a superior antioxidant

By Linda Leavell

DALLAS (AP) — Vitamin E proved more potent than either vitamin C or beta carotene at preventing a first step toward the formation of the artery-clogging plaque that causes heart disease, a new study concludes.

The research, published in the December issue of the American Heart Association's journal Circulation, was conducted by Drs. Ishwarlal Jialal and Scott Grundy at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas.

Jialal, the principal investigator, said Monday that 36 men were divided into three groups of 12 for his study. One group took vitamin E supplements alone; one took a "vitamin cocktail" of vitamins C, E and beta carotene; and the third received a placebo.

Vitamins C, E and beta carotene are called antioxidants because they prevent oxidation of molecules like LDL cholesterol. Once the LDL is oxi-

New pepper cream treatment may rub away arthritis pain

By Carolyn Poirot
N.Y. Times News Service

A hot new treatment for arthritis pain could benefit millions of people suffering from certain forms of arthritis, especially osteoarthritis and rheumatoid arthritis — but only if they rub it on, say product promoters.

They dissociate themselves from any of the pepper powders sold — mostly in health food stores — in capsules and swallowed whole.

If that worked, people in Thailand and Texas who eat all that extra-spicy hot food would never have any trouble with aching joints, a PR type from Chicago pointedly told me when I asked about swallowing the pepper capsules.

My brother used the same reasoning to allay my concern over the capsules causing ulcers.

"If peppers caused ulcers, you and all those people in Thailand would have ulcers instead of arthritis," he pointed out. I'm not entirely convinced.

Evidently, capsaicin, the chemical that makes chilies hot, works medicinally by disrupting the pain messages between your ache and your brain. That's why you have to rub it on the ache.

Formulated as the topical cream Zostrix, it was approved by the Food and Drug Administration in 1987 as a "counter-irritant" to treat the severe burning pain associated with shingles. (Manufacturers evidently thought then that capsaicin works by causing a mild irritation that confuses nerve cells, causing the brain to focus on the irritation, thus diverting attention from the deeper pain.)

Actually, no one is sure exactly how it works, but it now appears that capsaicin has the unique ability to attract and destroy the chemical — called Substance P — that transmits pain impulses through the nerves to tell the brain when something hurts.

After it is applied for a few days — in very small amounts three to five times a day — it numbs the area.

If you like jalapenos and hot sauce as much as I do, you may have noticed that after three or four they seem to get less hot. If you eat enough of the nerve-numbing peppers, your tongue becomes desensitized for at least a few hours. The same thing happens with joints.

Recent studies published in medical journals have shown that the product also can help relieve diabetic neuropathy and phantom pains associated with amputations and mastectomies as well as stop the severe itching experienced by patients receiving kidney dialysis.

And the Journal of the American Academy of Dermatology reported in September that this special cream may be used safely to counteract the itching, redness, scaling and thickened skin patches associated with psoriasis.

It is also being studied for the treatment of sinus conditions and cluster headaches.

Of course, journal reports ask patients to discuss the use of Zostrix with their physicians and warn them not to quit taking whatever may be relieving some of their symptoms now.

David Bailey, one of the pharmacists at my favorite Eckerd Drugs, said the

VITAMIN: Research promising

(From 1D)

dized, it is more easily absorbed in artery walls and built into foam cells — the first step in plaque formation.

As plaque forms, it narrows the arteries and affects blood flow, establishing conditions that can lead to a heart attack or stroke.

LDL oxidation was inhibited by 50 percent in both groups taking vitamins. But their results were so similar that Jialal labeled E "the superior antioxidant."

Jialal is an associate professor of pathology and internal medicine and a senior investigator in UT Southwestern's Center for Human Nutrition.

Sharon Landvik, manager of Vitamin E Research and Information Service in La Grange, Ill., said a number of researchers have been examining the vitamin's antioxidant effects. But some are hesitant to say that taking large supplements of vitamin E will reduce the risk of heart disease because they want more clinical data, she said.

Ms. Landvik's non-profit corporation is funded by a grant from the Henkel Corp., a bulk manufacturer of natural vitamin E. It provides current data about the vitamin to health professionals and researchers, among others.

"Most people feel that the information is really very promising," Ms. Landvik said.

Jialal said he is not ready to advocate the widespread use of vitamin E to the population at large "because the scientific base is not there" to support the theory that the supplements prevent heart disease.

Dr. Gary Weingarden, a Richardson cardiologist, said he strongly supports the use of antioxidants, even though some doctors say they need more evidence.

"I personally, with my patients, make that leap already," Weingarden said.

"The data is biochemically sound and I feel it's reasonably safe and rational to do that at the present time. We don't have full proof, but we have enough basic science behind us," he said.

Dr. Joseph Bellomo, a Dallas cardiologist, said he doesn't routinely recommend antioxidant therapy to his patients and doesn't believe that taking antioxidant supplements will provide much in the way of additional health benefits.

He said he is more concerned with eliminating smoking, high cholesterol, obesity and hypertension, but he knows "there is a lot of emotion about this kind of thing."

"Some people really swear by it," he said.

Both Ms. Landvik and Jialal stressed that the subjects in a number of studies of the vitamin's antioxidant effects were taking very high doses of supplements.

They said it would be hard to get much more than the recommended amount of vitamin E without using supplements because it is concentrated in high-calorie, fatty foods. The vitamin is found primarily in vegetable oils, nuts, sunflower seeds, whole grains and wheat germ as well as some leafy vegetables and sweet potatoes.

The recommended daily allowance for vitamin E is about 30 units to prevent deficiency syndromes. Subjects in Jialal's study were taking 800 units of a synthetic vitamin E supplement.

Said Weingarden: "We're talking about a new age of medicine. We're asking, 'What is the optimal dose to prevent human diseases?' That's a big change. The RDA doesn't answer that question."

BACK: Pain can be prevented

spine aligned. But most people don't know how. Tell them to stand straight and most will pull their shoulders back and stick their chest out.

"That's the worst thing to do," said Dr. Silvia Ferretti, dean of the Lake Erie College of Osteopathic Medicine. "This military alignment actually stresses the back."

The goal is to be vertical, to cross an imaginary line with all three centers of your body — head, heart and hips. Picture someone pulling on a wire attached to the middle of the crown of your head. The weight of your head stops exerting pressure on your body, your neck pulls up in line with your back, your pelvis swings forward and your lower back straightens out. Loosen your jaw so your teeth aren't touching, let your shoulders drop down but not forward, and breathe easily.

You can throw your back out by overusing it. To keep your spine healthy during unavoidable overuse, utilize your legs, not your back. When gardening, kneel and squat rather than stoop and hunch. If you're lifting something heavy, bend your legs and get under the load, hug it close to your body and push down with your feet to stand. When sweeping, raking or vacuuming, use short strokes, lunging forward with your legs instead of bending your spine.

Nonuse also can make you prone to back problems, but an exercise program that includes stretching and strengthening can help avoid this. So can proper sitting.

When using a chair, place both feet on the floor. Find your "sit bones" by sitting on your hands. These are two bones at the bottom of your pelvis, each about the size of a child's fist. Sit on top of, not behind, them.

It is a good idea to get up every half hour and walk around. To stand, use your legs, not your arms.

In bed, use either an orthopedic mattress with box spring or a dense foam mattress on a platform. Sometimes just slipping a board beneath the mattress provides needed firmness. For your head, a small support under the neck is best, one that roughly equals the width between one of your shoulders and the side of your head.

ARTERY: Procedure is still experimental gery's repairs will be durable, nor has there been a rigorous head-to-head comparison with standard surgery. That might happen soon.

In the meantime, surgeons say they are cautiously optimistic that the surgery will eventually prove useful for many if not the majority of patients whose aneurysms require surgery, including people whose poor health would make the standard procedure unacceptably risky. Most abdominal aneurysms occur in people older than 60.

The technique has also been used for fixing abdominal and leg arteries plugged by atherosclerosis and arteries damaged by gunshots and stabbings.

"This has enormous potential ... for radically changing the way we deal with many types of arterial disease," said Dr. Frank Veith, chief of vascular surgery at Montefiore Medical Center in New York, who has used the technique.

Veith said that to see a patient avoid a stay in intensive care and instead sit up in bed and ask for a meal two hours after surgery "is truly remarkable. ... That's happened many times."

With standard surgery, the surgeon enters the abdomen to remove the bulge and sew a man-made tube in its place. But with the new procedure, called stented graft repair, the artery is fixed from within.

The surgeon inserts a tiny package of equipment into the artery through the incision in the groin. Then he or she guides it up the artery to the bulge. By careful manipulation, the replacement tube is then anchored to healthy tissue on each side of the bulge. Now the blood flows through the tube and no longer presses on the weakened walls of the bulge.

"Our experience has been very pleasing," said Dr. Wesley Moore, chief of vascular surgery at the University of California, Los Angeles, Center for the Health Sciences, where 10 such operations have been done since February. Eight of those operations were successful, although in hindsight, the other two patients were not good candidates for the surgery, he said.

Dr. Juan Parodi of Salvador University in Buenos Aires, Argentina, who pioneered the operation and has used it on 39 abdominal aneurysms, said the new procedure "is going to change vascular surgery, no doubt about it."

Others stress caution. "The real unknown is what the long-term durability (of the repair) is going to be," Moore said. "Will it be as durable as the conventional operation?"

CREAM: Substance rubbed on

nonprescription cream has been such a slow mover the five or six years it has been available that most druggists keep only a couple of tubes behind the prescription counter so that it doesn't get old.

They can, however, usually get it by the next day — if there is a run on the stuff. Twenty grams of the regular .025 percent capsaicin Zostrix sells for $12 to $14. An ounce of the more potent .075 percent Axsain or Zostrix-HP solution goes for about $34.

Regardless of how it works, we can expect this age-old folk medicine to start turning up in some other new pain relief ointments, if studies continue to confirm its effectiveness.

'Movie' popcorn made at home

By Linda Anderson

Very few things taste better than popcorn bought, hot and fresh, at the movies. There's just something satisfying about plunging your hand into a bag of movie theater popcorn while the opening credits roll.

Anderson

Orville Redenbacher's Movie Theater Butter Gourmet Popping Corn is designed to bring that wonderful flavor sensation into the home. A friend of mine, who is a big movie fan, told me about the product and even brought me a microwaveable bag of it. We couldn't wait, so we tried it at the office.

Movie Theater Butter popcorn comes in 10.5-ounce boxes which each contain three 3.5-ounce bags of microwaveable popcorn. It's not the classic way to fix popcorn, but it sure is the quickest.

A box of Movie Theater Butter popcorn cost $2.29, which means each bag costs just over 75 cents, which is probably cheaper than real movie theater popcorn.

Label information is pretty limited. Advertising just says "New" and "Artificial Flavor." (However, you can win a trip to the 1995 Superbowl by entering this contest listed on the side of the box.)

Nutrition information claims that one bag has 3.5 servings, each containing 140 calories as packaged and 90 calories as consumed. I don't really understand it either, but that's what it says. Also, each serving is supposed to contain no cholesterol, 11 grams of fat as packaged and 7 grams as consumed, and 370 mg sodium (packaged) and 190 mg sodium (consumed).

Now that you are thoroughly confused, let me add that the company has enough class to include a toll-free number for customers to call with questions, comments or complaints: 1-800-457-6649 (between 10 a.m.-7 p.m. central time).

Did we love it? Do you have to ask? The popcorn really did taste like it had melted butter poured on it. I can't remember anyone who tasted it who didn't like it. It wasn't exactly what I expected, but it was good.

A little bit greasier than regular, though...

ROCK-A-BYE BABY

This rocking cradle was modified from a Colonial pattern discovered in Vermont. The "instant heirloom" is easily made by tracing the full-size pattern onto plywood, cutting it out and assembling. Our step-by-step instructions even include a traceable lamb to decorate the cradle sides. We made our cradle of birch plywood, but you can choose from a variety of darker-tone finishes.
