Clinton challenges critics

President: GOP doesn't offer tax-plan alternative

■ White House seeks to regain offensive in budget fight.

Associated Press

PORTLAND, Maine — President Clinton bluntly challenged Republican critics of his $500 billion deficit-reduction package on Saturday to produce a detailed plan of their own — "not rhetoric, not chants that sound good."

Bracing for this week's Senate floor debate, Clinton accused his detractors of "screaming slogans like 'tax and spend' " while refusing to offer a detailed alternative or take responsibility for running up the $4 trillion federal debt.

In his weekly radio address, a Boston commencement speech and a Maine rally, Clinton sounded the same refrain: arguing that his plan makes tough choices and that his critics offer only hollow slogans and no comprehensive alternatives.

"They say more cuts, less taxes, but no details," Clinton told Northeastern University graduates. "Then when you look at the details, you find that the details hurt the middle class, the working poor, the vulnerable elderly, do less to create jobs and ensure our world economic leadership."

So far, Republicans have been unanimous in opposing the Clinton plan, first as it passed the House and again as a revised version cleared the Senate Finance Committee last week on an 11-9, party-line vote.

"The Democrats have taken the lead in cutting spending," Clinton said in Portland, saying Republicans

SUNDAY NEWS WATCH

Street closings

Ohio Street, from Garfield east to the emergency room entrance of Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, will be closed beginning at 6 a.m. Tuesday-Thursday due to construction. Also, portions of Andrews Highway, from Wall Street to Loop 250, will be closed at various times between 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. so officials can install reflector buttons on the street.

Eye damage

MADRID, Spain — More than 30 people suffered eye injuries when they stared at the sun awaiting an appearance of the Virgin Mary predicted by an 18-year-old religious seer, a newspaper said Saturday. Some 1,000 people went to Baza, 50 miles northeast of Granada, on June 11 after Esteban Sanchez Casas announced that the Virgin would appear miraculously if followers looked directly at the sun, the daily El Pais reported. Instead, more than 30 people required hospital treatment for eye injuries and at least eight of them suffered irreversible damage, El Pais said, citing hospital officials.

Bound to graduate

TILTON, N.H. — Tobias Wolfe wasn't about to let a broken back and 60 brand-new stitches in one arm stop him from receiving his high school diploma. The 18-year-old from Sanbornton was taken by ambulance from Franklin Regional Hospital to Friday's commencement at Winnisquam Regional High School in Tilton. The day before, Wolfe crashed a motorcycle into the back of a truck. His arm was slashed because he used it to shield himself. He also suffered two broken vertebrae. After the ceremony he was taken back to the hospital.

Crime rate of juveniles trips alarm

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a three-part series on the rise in juvenile crime. Names of juveniles have been changed.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

A 38-year-old convenience store clerk narrowly escaped death in April after being hit in the head with a baseball bat. A 16-year-old man reportedly bragged about the unprovoked attack and said he hoped the woman died.

Another 16-year-old — apparently obsessed with a fellow student's girlfriend — sought a hit man last November to kill the other boy. Police foiled the murder plan.

During this school year, nine guns were confiscated on Midland campuses — including a .25-caliber pistol from a 9-year-old boy.

Three teen-age boys — 14, 16 and 17 — broke into a house in December, taking money, guns and other items, and vandalizing the home before setting a fire to cover their tracks.

Last year, police, school and sheriff officers apprehended about 1,400 juveniles for wrongdoings. In Texas, people 10 and older but shy of 17 are considered juveniles and treated under a different set of laws.

Increase of guns at school triggers concern

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

On some days, Jesus, 16, carried a Ruger .357-caliber handgun tucked in his pants and covered by a baggy shirt.

"It was just as a self-defense," he said.

During the school day, the gun with one live round was kept in his tote pack. A teacher, looking for a book in a storage shelf at the end of March, moved the pack and unexpectedly discovered the firearm.

Jesus said he packed the gun after being stabbed three times in the stomach during a fight with an 18-year-old man at a party a few months earlier.

"It was a hand-down from a friend of mine. He gave it to me because of what happened," Jesus said. His friend was also 16 and the gun was stolen.

Jesus said he wasn't looking for trouble but was concerned about running into his adversary in the neighborhood near the school.

"What was I supposed to do if I saw him face-to-face?" said Jesus, still recovering from the stab wounds.

"My thinking back then was, I was angry and nothing was happening to this guy," Jesus said. His assailant was arrested several months after the stabbing and released on bond a few days afterwards.

"I wasn't really thinking about the consequences and stuff like that. I was just p . . . . off," Jesus said.

But Jesus admitted he was more fearful of getting caught with the gun than being confronted by the other man.

For getting caught, Jesus was sentenced to one month probation on June 10.

Jesus apparently looks back on the incident in a different light.

But asked if he would have any advice to another teen in a similar situation, Jesus replied: "I wouldn't know what to tell him."

Jesus isn't the only youngster that has thought a gun was the solution.

This last school year, nine guns were found on public school campuses in Midland. And four guns were confiscated at Odessa schools, including a .22-caliber pistol brought by a second-grader.

"Virtually all of these guns (at Midland schools) have come from home," said Midland schools superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr.

Exemptions lead to death of energy bill

By James R. Owen
Reporter-Telegram Washington bureau

■ Analysis

WASHINGTON — In the brief stormy life of President Clinton's proposed energy tax, April 1 will go down as the day when the president's ambitious plan began to crumble when it crunched against the kind of power politics that tax bills ignite in the capital.

On that Thursday, the White House began handing out exemptions to its proposed energy tax, which was to be based on heat content as measured by British thermal units (Btus).

The goal was to shore up sagging political support for the president's plan to attack the budget deficit by raising $72 billion over five years through the tax on Btus. The beneficiaries: U.S. airlines operating on foreign routes, U.S. barge operators in foreign waters, and heavy oil producers using natural gas to steam hard-to-reach crude from the ground.

They were the first of many exceptions to the proposed tax.

"That began the process of unraveling the whole thing," says David Wyss, an economist with DRI McGraw-Hill in Lexington, Mass. "That started the clamor for tax breaks that eventually helped do it in."

Eventually, Clinton's tax, which would have been based on the heat content of fuels measured in British thermal units, was done in — partly because it became riddled with loopholes and partly because some key Senate Democrats never liked it to begin with.

Richards OKs stiffer penalties for hate crimes

AUSTIN (AP) — The widow of a black man killed by members of a white supremacist group saw her husband's death make a difference Saturday as Gov. Ann Richards signed a new law strengthening penalties for hate crimes.

The measure bans probation for anyone convicted of a murder that was motivated by prejudice or bias and increases the punishment for other hate-motivated crimes.

Carolyn Thomas helped spur passage of the measure with eloquent testimony about her husband's murder, Richards said, "forcing members of the Legislature to face what was taking place in our beloved state of Texas."

Ms. Thomas' husband, Donald, was killed by a shotgun blast fired from a moving car in June 1991 as he sat outside drinking beer with friends in Arlington.

Three teen-age members of the Confederate Hammer Skins were convicted in the murder. The case got national attention when one of them got probation for his part in the crime.

Ms. Thomas, 29, told about 150 people who crowded into the Governor's Mansion for an emotional bill-signing cere-

South Africa's president begins campaign for black support

PIETERSBURG, South Africa (NYT) — With an African pageant of ostrich-plumed dancers and thundering tribal drums, President F.W. de Klerk on Saturday began his improbable campaign for the votes of South African blacks.

De Klerk, who was introduced as a "strong chief" and the man "who liberated South Africa," told the overwhelmingly black crowd at a livestock show ground in the northern farm town of Pietersburg that the event symbolized his party's rebirth from the white oligarchy that invented apartheid to a rainbow coalition of peace-loving, prosperity-seeking moderates.

It was debatable whether the crowd of 5,000, brought in by bus with promises of a free supper, would translate into substantial black support for de Klerk in the country's first universal elections next April.

But for the National Party, which came to power in 1948 with an almost religious commitment to separation of the races, the rally was a watershed that would have dumbfounded de Klerk's predecessors. And that left some of the white party loyalists today shaking their heads in disbelief.

Although the party officially opened its membership to non-whites in 1990 and has made big inroads among the more conservative mixed-race and Indian voters, it has never before put on a campaign event for blacks.

But de Klerk is desperate for black support to offset defections by frightened whites and to provide his party at least enough influence in the next government to offset the power of the expected winner.

Police seek killer who targets gays

LONDON (AP) — Police handed out 10,000 leaflets at a gay march Saturday seeking help in their hunt for a serial killer who has targeted homosexuals.

The leaflets bear photographs of five men strangled or suffocated in their London homes since March 8, and urge men to be careful when picking up partners.

"Always tell a friend who you are leaving with and where you are going," the leaflets say.

Some 50,000 gay men and lesbians joined the march in London marking the 21st annual Lesbian and Gay Pride Day. They gathered later for a concert in a south London park.

"We are not going to let the serial killer spoil the fun," said gay activist Peter Tatchell.

The victims, aged 33 to 45, are believed to have met their killer in a pub or club. Police said at least four were homosexuals and three carried the AIDS virus. One was an American.

In each case, a man claiming to be the killer has provided precise details of the slaying in anonymous phone calls, either to a suicide hotline, a national newspaper or police.

Some news reports say the caller has threatened to keep killing a victim a week. Police found the fifth victim, from Malta, dead at his London home on Tuesday.

Police have said the man may have the AIDS virus himself and be taking revenge on homosexuals. His victims all were killed in "intimate circumstances," said the Gay London Policing Group, a gay men's organization.

Police have no evidence that the third victim, American businessman Perry Bradley III, 35, of Sulphur Springs, Texas, was a homosexual. He was found naked and strangled June 4.

Bomb-shattered museum readies for reopening

FLORENCE, Italy (AP) — Dust covers hung from masterpieces and workmen's tools littered the corridors of the bomb-shattered Uffizi Gallery Saturday as one of the world's great art museums prepared to partially reopen.

A bomb, hidden in a stolen minivan on the street below, killed five people and devastated the museum's west wing when it exploded three weeks ago.

Since then, workers have made remarkable progress.

About 60 percent of the museum will reopen Sunday, said museum director Anna Maria Petrioli Tofani. It's not clear when the rest of the museum will reopen — restoration work is too complex to make an estimate.

In addition to the art works, Ms. Tofani noted that walls, floors, security systems, lighting and environmental controls must be repaired.

"With the force of the blast, some of the paintings . . . vibrated so violently that the color fell off," Ms. Tofani said.

Art restorers painstakingly retrieved paint from the floor beneath art works in hopes of repairing them.

Other paintings were shaken to pieces inside their frames. Shards of blown-out window glass pierced and slashed some masterpieces. A hallway door was flung off its hinges with such velocity that it lopped off the head of "The Discus Thrower of Mirone," a marble copy of a Roman-era statue.

Near the stairwell to the west wing, or Third Corridor, stand what remains of a painting by Bartolomeo Bimbi. The 17th century painting of flowers, a slain rabbit and a rifle was slashed and shaken to pieces.

Bulletproof glass, installed to protect works from vandals and the deteriorating effects of ultraviolet light, saved many major works in the west wing.

Michelangelo's "Doni Tondo," the only completed oil by the Renaissance master, was one. The round portrait of the Holy Family, still protected by bulletproof glass, is the new focal point of the visitors entrance.

It is flanked on the viewer's left by Titian's "Flora" and on the right by Caravaggio's "Bacchus."

There have been no arrests in the bombing that the government, with only circumstantial evidence, hints might have been carried out by the Mafia. The blast came two weeks after a car bombing in Rome injured 23 people.

By the museum's latest count, the bomb destroyed seven paintings, damaged 34 and damaged three sculptures.

Israel assesses radiation levels

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel has begun checking levels of nuclear radiation in its waters during visits by ships of the U.S. Navy's 6th Fleet, the Environment Ministry said Saturday.

Ministry spokeswoman Sari Zimmerman said the first inspection took place last month, but the results were still being checked. Ships of the 6th Fleet regularly dock at the Israeli ports of Haifa and Ashdod for breaks.

The checks are part of an expanded government program to assess fallout from suspected sources of nuclear power, Zimmerman said. She declined to say whether the checks were for radiation from nuclear reactors or weapons.

Despite handover, U.N. continues to rely on Americans

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Stung by criticism of its reliance on U.S. military might, the U.N. made sure its big assault against warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid had a multinational flavor.

The vast majority of the 1,395 ground troops used Thursday came from Italy, Pakistan, Morocco and France, with contributions from Egypt, Kuwait, India, Australia, Tunisia and Sweden.

But much of the strategy was planned by Americans, based on intelligence gathered by Americans and directed by an American command structure.

Virtually all the air support came from the United States, from the AC-130 aircraft that conducted precision shelling to the Scout, Cobra and Blackhawk helicopters that were called on to take out the worst sniper nests.

Even though the United States handed over control of the military relief operation in Somalia to the United Nations in May, the U.N. remains dependent on the Americans.

That situation is unlikely to change much, even though the U.N. is trying hard to be a melting pot by leaning heavily on African and Muslim nations for the 18,000 troops already here.

But that's 10,000 short of the authorized strength. Countries which pledged months ago to send forces have been slow in following through. Some, like Germany, encountered controversy and political opposition about getting involved in the U.N.'s role as a peacemaker.

Some 4,000 Indian troops are on the way, reporters are assured. So are the 1,500 Germans who are supposed to join the 150-man advance team already in Belet Huen. So are the Malaysians, South Koreans and Romanians.

But many of the 4,000 troops the United States is contributing are in key logistical and command positions. The Quick Reaction Force that deals with crises is comprised of 1,100 U.S. Army soldiers from Fort Drum, N.Y.

The dependence will be even heavier until more troops arrive.

When reinforcements were considered prudent after the June 5 clash with Somali gunmen in which 24 Pakistani soldiers were killed and 58 wounded, the call went to the four-ship U.S. Marine amphibious task force that operates in this part of the world.

The 2,200 Marines cut short their exercise in Kuwait and steamed to Somalia. The scream of low-flying Harrier jets Saturday morning announced their arrival.

The U.N. command structure, both on the political and military sides, has a very heavy Yank flavor. Many are on loan from the Pentagon, the State Department and other U.S. government agencies.

The list includes Jonathan Howe, a retired admiral who serves as the special envoy of U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali and is responsible for most of the big decisions.

The military commander, Lt. Gen. Cevik Bir, is from Turkey, but much of his top staff is American, including second-in-command Gen. Thomas Montgomery.

Much of the intelligence staff who sort through the misinformation and disinformation from the outside are U.S. military officers.

U.S. Army Special Forces carry out intelligence-gathering and long-range reconnaissance, making excursions into the parts of Somalia the U.N. has yet to control but remain under its mandate to rebuild the country.

The U.N. has become increasingly sensitive about its dependence on American forces.

After Thursday's air and ground assault that crippled Aidid's military stronghold and command center, officials downplayed the role of the U.S. forces on the ground.

They said there were only a "handful" of Army Special Forces soldiers acting as liaisons with the air support, and bristled when told that photographers witnessed U.S. and Pakistani troops leading the seizure and search of Aidid's compound.

Nail bomb kills seven in Cairo

By Chris Hedges
N.Y. Times writer

CAIRO, Egypt — A nail-packed bomb exploded late Friday in a crowded Cairo street, killing 7 people and wounding 15, in the latest incident in what appears to be a new and deadlier round of urban warfare in Egypt's capital.

The explosion killed and wounded vendors and men sipping tea in a small cafe. It was the fifth bombing in a public place in the last four months.

Officials have blamed the bombings on Muslim militants. But they are a radical departure from the tactics employed by an underground militant organization, the Islamic Group, that is fighting to create an Islamic state.

The Islamic Group denied carrying out the first of the five blasts and has repeatedly said it does not try to harm ordinary Egyptians.

The Islamic Group has widespread sympathy, if not outright support, among much of the nation's poor. Its targets over the last year have been police, government officials, Coptic Christians and tourists. It avoided attacks that killed ordinary, and especially lower-class, Egyptians.

But the nail-bomb explosions in public places has now left 17 people dead and another 69 wounded, many of them from the city's slums, since February.

More than 135 people have died in political violence in the last 14 months. In an effort to crack down on the attacks, military courts have condemned 21 Islamic militants to death in the last six months.

One was executed last Sunday, the first execution for a politically motivated crime to take place in Egypt since five assassins of President Anwar Sadat were put to death in 1982.

Militant leaders have vowed revenge for any executions.

Despite the heightened tensions, many diplomats said they remained unsure who was behind the bombings.

Attacks and bombings by the Islamic Group are usually accompanied by communiques to international news agencies claiming responsibility and calling on the police to stop torture and release detainees. But no group has taken responsibility for the nail-bomb explosions.

There are splinter groups outside the control of the Islamic Group, which Western diplomats said could be behind the newest attacks. And some have speculated that those employed by a state hostile to Egypt, like Iraq, Iran or the Sudan, could have an interest in fomenting unrest.

The bombings, other diplomats suggest, could also be the work of people trying to blunt the popular support that Muslim militants have in poorer neighborhoods.

The blasts have already altered the public mood in Egypt. After the explosion Friday, in the north Cairo slum of Shubra, many people took to the streets in outrage.

Groups of angry residents surrounded police officers investigating the scene. Many screamed, "No to terrorism!"

Interior Minister Hassan Alfi, shaken by the carnage, was subjected to a torrent of demands for an end to the violence. "When is the Government going to finish these criminals?" someone yelled.

Police officials said the bomb, like the four other devices that have exploded, had been packed with nails and triggered by a timer.

The first nail bomb ripped through a packed coffee house on the city's biggest square, frequented by Egyptians as well as tourists, on Feb 26. The second went off under a parked car, the third at a police checkpoint and the fourth in an underpass on the main road to the Pyramids.

WEATHER WATCH

Today's high should hit 90

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high near 90 and east winds at 10 to 15 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low in the mid-60s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Monday should be fair with a high in the lower 90s.

After an overnight low of 68, Saturday's high reached 86 compared with the record high for that date of 107 set in 1951. The record low for that date is 52 set in 1973.

STATE

A large part of the Texas coast was under a tropical storm warning and a flood watch Saturday evening as Arlene lurked at the edge of the western Gulf of Mexico.

The National Weather Service said Arlene's center was east of Brownsville. It brought showers and thunderstorms to the entire coast, with winds gusting up to 30 miles per hour.

Temperatures were in the 70s and 80s.

South Texas should be mostly cloudy with showers and thunderstorms through today, with heavy rains possible. Highs today should be in the 80s.

In West Texas, moist tropical air blew in from the gulf Saturday afternoon, causing cloudy skies east of the mountains.

The southwest mountains and far west had sunny skies.

A few isolated thunderstorms developed over the southern Permian Basin, with temperatures from 68 to 100 degrees. Winds were mostly east to southeast at 10 to 20 mph.

West Texas should have cloudy skies tonight with the possibility of thunderstorms over all but the panhandles and south plains through the period, with lows in the 60s and highs in the 80s and 90s.

Rain continued over the parts of North Texas Saturday afternoon, as tropical moisture continued to flow into the area.

There were mid-afternoon breaks in the cloud cover as temperatures rose as high as 88 degrees.

Rain and thunderstorms with lows in the 70s were expected today. Highs were expected from 85 to 91.

NATION

Tropical Storm Arlene spread heavy rain into southern Texas on Saturday, and thunderstorms extended up the Mississippi and Ohio valleys to the Great Lakes and the Northeast.

Arlene was expected to make landfall on the Texas coast, between Brownsville and Corpus Christi, late Saturday or early Sunday.

Rain spread inland during the day but in the afternoon the storm's maximum sustained wind speed was only 40 mph, barely enough to qualify it as a tropical storm.

Coastal flood watches were posted eastward along the coast into parts of Louisiana and Mississippi, the National Weather Service said.

At midafternoon, numerous showers and thunderstorms extended from the Texas and Louisiana Gulf coasts through the southern Plains into the middle and upper Mississippi Valley.

A thunderstorm in south-central Iowa dropped 2 to 3 inches of rain in less than one hour at Pleasantville, the weather service said. More than 3 inches of rain fell in 45 minutes at Belle Plain, Iowa, the weather service said.

The weather was very warm and humid with temperatures well into the 80s and 90s from the lower Mississippi Valley through the Ohio Valley and along much of the Atlantic and eastern Gulf coasts.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Family finds meat is human flesh

MOSCOW (AP) — A family preparing a holiday dinner became worried when they found a bullet in what they thought was beef, a newspaper said Saturday. They were sickened at the news from the police: They had been preparing human flesh.

Moskovskii Komsomolets reported that the Moscow family, whom it did not identify, bought the slab of meat at a state store in southwest Moscow and put it in the freezer.

They pulled it out on June 12, Russian Independence Day, and began cutting, the newspaper said. When the family dog was offered a piece of the strangely colored meat, "The dog sniffed it, whimpered pitifully and left," the account said.

Then the family found the bullet and called the police.

The newspaper did not name any investigating officers or the store that sold the meat.

Police officer Nikolai Yakovlev told The Associated Press on Saturday that he had not heard of the case. Nobody at the newspaper answered the telephone Saturday evening.

There are frequent reports, often unsubstantiated, of tainted food in Moscow. Last month a newspaper reported that a woman preparing meat gave a piece to her cat, which promptly died from poisoning.

Smallpox vials prompt debate

■ Scientists are divided over whether to destroy the disease's virus.

By Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press writer

ATLANTA — They look harmless enough — hundreds of little test tubes sitting in a freezer. But the freezer is padlocked, the laboratory guarded. The workers inside wear protective suits.

These vials hold all that remains of smallpox. A turn of a switch would kill the virus, ensuring the world would never again be ravaged by history's deadliest disease.

The smallpox vials have prompted a fierce moral debate: Should scientists deliberately destroy an entire species, one that possibly could teach them how to fight other diseases?

"Some people forgot just how terrible this disease was," said Dr. Brian Mahy of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. "If we had a similar control of all the HIV in the world, I don't think there would be any question about destroying it."

Smallpox killed millions of people over thousands of years, from ancient Egypt to 20th century America. Some doctors said it was more deadly than all other infectious diseases combined.

The disease caused convulsions, internal bleeding and painful lesions filled with pus. One in four victims died. Survivors were deeply scarred and sometimes left blind.

A vaccine was discovered in the 1790s. Almost 200 years of immunizations later, smallpox in 1977 became the only disease ever eradicated.

Meanwhile, the virus that causes smallpox was kept for study in two places: the CDC in Atlanta and Russia's Institute for Viral Preparations in Moscow.

Russian scientists were supposed to map smallpox genetically — to see how it works and what diseases it's related to — and then destroy it. They have mapped two strains, and the CDC is working on a third.

But those maps haven't revealed all doctors need to know, so the CDC is reconsidering killing the virus. It will consult the world's top virologists at a meeting in Scotland in August and may decide by the end of the year.

"Destroying all these vials now will compromise any possibilities of finding out more information," said Dr. Bernard Moss, chief of virology at the National Institutes of Health, who wants the virus preserved.

What if smallpox holds clues about other diseases? What if it's similar to a new disease waiting to emerge?

"There's a lot we would like to know," agreed Mahy, the CDC's top virologist. "We don't know how it kills people."

The World Health Organization wants smallpox destroyed to ensure it won't ever threaten a now-defenseless world.

Vaccination has ceased except in the Russian, Canadian, Israeli and U.S. armies, which fear biological warfare. The last smallpox death was from a lab accident in 1978 in England, before the CDC and Russia appropriated the world's remaining virus.

At the CDC, 400 tiny vials of separate smallpox strains are frozen in liquid nitrogen and guarded in a laboratory the Defense Department helped design. Workers must be vaccinated and don full-body pressurized "space suits" to enter, and have a chemical shower to leave.

In Moscow, not far from the Kremlin, 200 smallpox vials are kept in a special freezer, guarded by a regiment of ex-army officers. Despite the political instability "it's quite safe," said Dr. Vladimir Loparev, a Russian scientist visiting the CDC.

A flip of a switch would warm the nitrogen and kill the smallpox.

Scientists could still study it even if they killed it, said Dr. Kenneth Berns of the American Society of Microbiology. The CDC grew smallpox, separated its genes, rendered them impotent and cloned them.

And if it ever somehow re-emerged naturally, the vaccine is made from a very common virus, Berns said.

But the clones may not act the same as live smallpox, Mahy said.

BTU: New bill to include gasoline tax increase

(From 1A)

The result: When the Senate this week takes up its version of Clinton's economic program, the Btu tax proposal won't figure in the debate. Instead, the senators will consider — and probably approve — a tax increase of 4.3 cents-a-gallon on gasoline and other transportation fuels.

The Senate's fuel tax would generate $24 billion over five years — one-third the amount that Clinton's original Btu tax would have generated over five years.

From the day Clinton unveiled his economic program on Feb. 17, the energy tax was a juicy target for sectors of the U.S. economy that would have felt the tax particularly hard. The proposed Btu tax would have increased the cost of nearly every fuel, including gasoline, natural gas and electricity — its foes were many.

Led by the oil, agriculture and manufacturing industries, each target of the tax lobbied in its own behalf. And they lobbied together, forming a coalition that included the National Association of Manufacturers, the American Petroleum Institute and farming organizations. The coalition mounted a $2 million media blitz to attack the tax and urge voters to pressure nervous members of Congress to defy the president.

The White House continued to find itself flexible on the issue.

To gain support in the House Ways and Means Committee in May, Clinton agreed to a partial exemption from the tax for makers of aluminum and other energy-intensive products, and for diesel and gasoline used in agriculture.

And to help eke out its 219-213 victory just before Memorial Day in the full House, which passed most of Clinton's plan intact, the administration had to make still more concessions, this time promising Texas lawmakers that it would rebate the energy tax for exported chemical products, among others.

By the time the energy tax reached the Senate, it had become badly bruised and deeply unloved. In the Senate, it faced steeper challenges from lawmakers who wanted even broader exemptions from the levy, and from others, such as Oklahoma Democrat David Boren, who wanted it killed outright.

When the issue came to the Senate Finance Committee, party discipline was crucial. The Democrats have a bare 11-9 majority on the panel and every Republican on the committee was expected to vote against any new taxes. A defection of just a single Democrat would have blunted chances for any deficit-reduction package.

"Every single Democratic senator had veto power over the energy tax, and most of them used it in one way or another," said Larry Sabato, a political scientist at the University of Virginia.

And use it they did.

Boren, a conservative Democrat, threatened the energy tax from the outset, saying he couldn't support "any version of it," while Kent Conrad, a North Dakota Democrat on the committee, said it would unfairly punish farmers in his state.

After meeting privately for several days, committee Democrats junked the Btu tax and decided for the increase in the gasoline tax instead.

Edwin Rothschild, energy director for Washington-based Citizen Action, a consumer lobby, blamed the White House's efforts to appease its opponents for the demise of the Btu tax.

"They emboldened every Tom, Dick and Harry special interest to say, 'Hey, what about mine?'" Rothschild said. "Instead of arguing for a clean, simple tax with no exemptions, they let it slip away and then threw a bloody carcass to the sharks in the Senate — and they continued to feed."

Eugene Steuerle, an economist with the Urban Institute here, put it this way: "Finding the right mix on an energy tax is like trying to plug the proverbial dike. Once you fill one hole, the water begins to flow through another."

Predictably, the Senate deal still left some unhappy lobby groups.

"The transportation sector should not be called on to pay for everybody's deficit," grumbled Thomas Donahue, president of the American Trucking Associations. "We want to do our share of reducing the deficit, but we don't want to do everybody's share."

Environmentalists, who had been among the few champions of Clinton's original proposal, said abandoning the Btu levy amounted to a victory for big business and the oil industry.

"We're real disappointed, and think that the special interests in Congress and in industry really had the administration's ear," said Melanie Markley, a lobbyist for the Sierra Club. Praising the energy-conservation goals of Clinton's original plan, she said it's unlikely that a higher gasoline tax will reduce U.S. motorists' use of fuel.

Of course, Clinton's original Btu tax hasn't been formally buried. It was passed in the House version, and it will be up to a conference of lawmakers from both chambers to craft a compromise next month. The likely outcome will be a higher gasoline tax similar to the Senate's bill, plus more sales taxes on other forms of energy.

But no one expects Clinton's Btu tax to be left standing when it's over.

The fate of the Btu tax has left some analysts shaking their heads, wondering if Congress can achieve meaningful deficit-reduction at all.

"This isn't Republican-Democratic gridlock, it's becoming a special-interest veto," Wyss said. "Everybody says they want to balance the budget, but no one seems willing to have their taxes raised or spending cut. It's kind of depressing."

TAX: Clinton challanges GOP to offer alternatives offered "zero" amendments to cut spending during the Finance Committee hearings.

Clinton's challenge, delivered in his weekly radio address and later in Boston and Maine, was part of a White House effort to regain the offensive in the budget fight in advance of the Senate debate.

"We really let the definition of our plan get away from us," Clinton economic adviser Robert Rubin told Democratic governors meeting in Vermont. "But I think the president is reclaiming it now."

Evidence of that effort was Clinton's repeated references to his program as a "growth plan" the label he prefers to the GOP's "tax plan" moniker.

"If senators are going to oppose my growth plan, they ought to answer these questions: What programs would you cut more deeply?" Clinton said in the radio address. "Where are your tough choices? Will you ask the wealthy to pay their fair share or will you put a higher burden on the middle class? Do you have a real comprehensive plan to reduce the deficit by $500 billion?"

He took the same tack in his commencement speech, delivered to 2,195 Northeastern graduates at a steamy Boston Garden.

To Senate Republicans attacking his program, he demanded: "What is your real alternative? Not rhetoric, not chants that sound good."

The White House believes Clinton's challenge will strip credibility from his GOP opponents, who are reluctant to propose deep spending cuts that could prove unpopular. Republicans made such proposals in 1985, and they became a successful weapon when Democrats retook control of the Senate in 1986.

"They hit us over the head in the next campaign," GOP Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon recalled Friday. "We're not going to do that alone."

To that argument, Clinton had this brusque rebuttal: "Maybe our opponents should listen to Ted Turner's advice: Lead, follow, or get out of the way."

The Senate version of the Clinton plan contains $249 billion in new taxes on the rich, businesses, motorists and better-off Social Security recipients. It also cuts more than $80 billion from Medicare and other benefit programs. It promises $160 billion in additional savings to be achieved in future separate legislation and through lower interest payments on federal debt.

Clinton visited New England for the commencement speech and a later Maine rally to close a week that brought cheer to a White House that has been beset for weeks.

In addition to the budget plan's progress, a major campaign finance plan cleared the Senate, and two congressional committees endorsed Clinton's national service-college aid plan. Also, the president's Russian aid package, controversial because of domestic spending restraints, survived a key House vote.

The president himself was clearly in good spirits, shaking hands with dozens of students as he worked his way through the Garden, and working the crowd again after the outdoor rally in Maine.

'It helps my state of mind to get out of Washington," Clinton said when asked about his travel. "I need to come out here and see the people." Clinton acknowledged a rocky start, but said he believed things were beginning to go his way.

"We're getting a lot done and we're getting results and in the end I think that's what we will be judged by," Clinton told reporters in Portland.

CRIMES: Bill-signing helps mark Juneteenth

mony that when the sentence came down in March 1993, "I cried and I got upset."

But then she said she decided, "I'm going to talk about this, because I'm not going to let it sit."

"I hate the fact that the three white boys killed my husband, but . . . not all white people are bad. So nobody can ever tell me that," she said.

Ms. Thomas said she still thinks of her husband every day.

"Sure, they took him away from me, but . . . he's going to always be in my heart and they're never going to be able to take that away from me," she said.

Richards spoke of the long battle for civil rights in signing the hate crimes bill, and in putting her name to another measure against employment discrimination.

That bill incorporates into state law provisions of the 1991 Federal Civil Rights Act and Americans with Disabilities Act. Richards said Texas is the first state to put those federal provisions into its law.

The bill-signing ceremony was a fitting way to mark Juneteenth, when Texans celebrate learning of the Emancipation Proclamation, Richards said.

Her voice breaking and tears in her eyes, she said, "I hope . . . we will rededicate ourselves to emancipating every heart from the darkness of bigotry and intolerance.

"I hope that with the signing of these bills that will bear my name and do my name great honor, that the people of Texas will know in the future that on this day and in this (legislative) session, we stood up for the rights of all," Richards said.

The employment discrimination bill was sponsored by Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos and Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, both Austin Democrats. The hate crimes bill was by Sen. Rodney Ellis and Rep. Scott Hochberg, both Houston Democrats.

The hate crimes measure applies to criminal offenses motivated by a victim's race, religion, ethnicity, sexual orientation or national origin.

It increases the punishment for all crimes motivated by bias or prejudice to the next highest category of offense, except in the case of a first-degree felony, which is not enhanced but is made ineligible for probation.

Fighting continues near Gorazde; Croatian Serbs vote on unity plan

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnian Serbs and Muslims battled Saturday near the eastern Muslim enclave of Gorazde, despite a nationwide ceasefire and the presence of U.N. monitors, two of whom were wounded.

Smaller-scale clashes between Croats and Muslims also were reported in central and southern Bosnia a day after the scheduled start of a truce signed by the military commanders of all three ethnic factions.

It is the fourth attempt at a truce covering all of Bosnia. All previous local and nationwide ceasefire agreements have collapsed quickly.

A U.N. monitor from Norway was wounded in the chest by gunfire at a village outside Gorazde at midday, said Maj. Jose Gallegos, a U.N. spokesman in Sarajevo. A U.N. helicopter flew the wounded man to Visoko, 20 miles northwest of Sarajevo, for surgery. A Finnish monitor and a Bosnian translator suffered minor wounds, Bosnian radio said.

In another incident, Spain's defense ministry said four Spanish peacekeepers were missing and feared drowned Saturday after their vehicle plunged off a bridge into the Neretva River north of Mostar in central Bosnia. A fifth swam to safety.

Elsewhere on Saturday:

— Ethnic Serbs in neighboring Croatia voted on uniting the third of that republic's territory they control with the 70 percent of Bosnia held by Bosnian Serbs. A yes vote, as expected, could heighten tensions in Croatia and lead Croatia's leaders to rethink support for carving up Bosnia along ethnic lines. Bosnian Serbs overwhelmingly voted for a unification plan last month.

— In Belgrade, capital of Serb-dominated Yugoslavia, about 10,000 opposition protesters clashed with police while demanding the release of their jailed leader, Vuk Draskovic, and the resignation of Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic. Draskovic and his wife, Danica, also a party activist, were arrested June 1 after a violent anti-government demonstration. Witnesses reported they were severely beaten, and Draskovic's supporters said he was moved Friday to a military hospital.

Sarajevo radio said eight soldiers loyal to Bosnia's Muslim-led government died and 24 were wounded in Serb attacks on Gorazde. The radio said there also were many civilian casualties during fighting it blamed on Serbs.

Bosnian Serbs have attacked the enclave for nearly a month, but Bosnian Serb military officials accused Muslim-led government troops of provoking the latest clashes. The Yugoslav news agency Tanjug, quoting unidentified Serb military sources, said Muslim soldiers have tried in vain to break through the Serb encirclement of Gorazde since the truce took effect.

Gorazde is the last eastern enclave still held by Muslim forces and is one of six areas designated by the U.N. Security Council as a "safe zone" for Muslims. Bosnian Deputy Prime Minister Hadzo Efendic appealed again Saturday for foreign military intervention to halt the Gorazde fighting.

A team of only eight U.N. ceasefire monitors was in Gorazde to watch developments in the enclave, which is crowded with about 60,000 residents and refugees.

The people in Gorazde depend on U.N. convoys for food and other supplies, but Serbs have frustrated attempts to resupply them since the last convoy arrived May 25.

The cease-fire promised non-interference with aid deliveries, but Serbs had told U.N. officials to take a road deemed unsafe into Gorazde. On Saturday, the Serbs finally agreed to let a new convoy take the usual route from Yugoslavia and the trucks were scheduled to reach Gorazde on Monday.

Tension remained high in central and southern Bosnia, sites of weeks of bitter fighting between Muslims and Croats, one-time allies against the Serbs in the 15-month war that has left 134,000 people dead or missing.

Small arms fire and explosions were heard in Mostar, the southern city where the two sides have battled daily. Croatian radio said the two factions also were fighting near the central towns of Kiseljak and Novi Travnik, with 13 people dead and 30 wounded.

It said ham radio operators in Vares, 20 miles north of Sarajevo, reported that thousands of Bosnian Croats expelled last week from the Kakanj region were heading west through Serb-held territory toward Croatia.

The referendum in Serb-controlled parts of Croatia could inflame already tense relations between Croatian Serbs and Croatia's government, which has vowed to reassert control over areas held by Serbs since fighting in 1991 that killed up to 10,000 people. Sporadic clashes have continued despite a U.N.-mediated truce.

Crisis embarrasses Japan prior to summit

TOKYO (AP) — A political crisis just weeks before it welcomes a meeting of the richest industrialized nations has deeply embarrassed a nation still searching for a leadership role in the world.

For trading partners trying to get Japan to open its markets and stimulate its sluggish economy, Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa's defeat on a no-confidence motion Friday is especially bad news.

From Japan's point of view, the timing could not be worse. The governing Liberal Democrats, torn by internal rebellion and discredited by corruption scandals, face their strongest challenge in almost four decades of power.

In this culture, being a host is a heavy responsibility. The spectacle of a political brawl just before the guests arrive is enough to cause paroxysms of shame.

"Japan must not let its obligations slip as host nation," said Yohei Kono, the chief Cabinet secretary.

For months, Japan has been laying groundwork for the July 7-9 summit, the first Group of Seven meeting in Tokyo since 1986.

To make sure it goes smoothly, the government is preparing a huge security operation and working hard to stake out its positions in such a way as to avoid bruising confrontations.

Mamoru Ozaki, the vice finance minister, predicted the summit would proceed "without a hitch." However, Foreign Minister Kabun Muto said: "It's only natural that it would be better that the summit be held under normal circumstances."

Japan can find some consolation in the fact that other G-7 countries have had rough sailing of their own lately.

In the United States, the Clinton administration is trying to get back on track after stumbles over everything from high-priced haircuts on Air Force One to uncertainty about high-level appointments.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl's German government has been criticized for its handling of right-wing violence.

Italy has suffered corruption scandals that dwarf even Japan's in scope, and shaken by terror bombings in Rome and Florence.

YOUNG & VIOLENT

ALARM: Arrest figures understate problem

(From 1A)

Crime reports reflect an unprecedented wave of juvenile crime — referred to as juvenile delinquency — in number and severity, locally and nationwide.

"Ten years ago, it was shoplifting or not going to school. Now it's armed robbery, rape, murder, attempted murder, drug sales. . . . ," County Attorney Mark Dettman said.

The upward swing in juvenile crime and violence began in the 1980s and has mirrored a trend among adult crime, according to the U.S. Department of Justice.

Available statistics are based on arrests. Assessing actual delinquency is hindered by undetected crimes, incidents where no arrests have been made, the possibility of more crimes being reported by the public, varying definitions by states on what constitutes a juvenile or delinquency, and the discretion of police officers whether to take a youth into custody.

"But, overall, we feel there's an increase in delinquency," said Pete Lopez, chairman of criminology and sociology at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Based on experience, with statistics and media emphasis aside, local justice and law-enforcement officials expressed similar sentiments.

Although the legal system refers to juvenile crime as delinquency, and law-enforcement officers commonly call the offenders "kids," many of the crimes are not child's play.

"The difference between delinquency and (criminal acts by) adults is really age," Lopez said.

But the juvenile justice system works under a different set of rules — essentially on the premise that youngsters differ mentally from adults and can be rehabilitated.

Nevertheless, delinquency generally is defined as behavior that, if committed by an adult, would be a criminal offense.

Like adults, juveniles are not exempt from illegal conduct. And prevailing opinions hold that a significant number of youngsters who commit serious crimes will continue such anti-social behavior as they age.

About 10 percent of today's youth break the law, and about one-third to one-half become repeat offenders, estimated officers with the juvenile divisions of local law-enforcement agencies.

"I can see an increase of more than 10 percent if something isn't done with this juvenile justice system," said Midland County Sheriff's Sgt. Joe Matlock, a critic of the family code, which distinguishes delinquency from adult crime.

Opinions vary on whether such a change is needed or if the solution to delinquency lies elsewhere.

Twelve months probation for burglary of a habitation was "more than fair," said James, 17, who admitted to the crime when he was 16 years old. "I think it was suitable for me."

Judge Al Walvoord, the primary juvenile judge for Midland County, said punishment is the major difference between adults and juveniles caught for breaking the law.

And many law-enforcement officials and citizens assimilate a Shakespearean truth: A crime remains a crime.

Examples are plentiful.

Police apprehended a girl seen leaving a vacant apartment in northwest Midland in February. Twelve years old, she was reportedly involved in about five burglaries.

An argument over who was going to do laundry led to a stabbing in February. A 12-year-old reportedly stabbed his 13-year-old brother with a knife.

Last October, Southwest Airlines received a call that three individuals with weapons and possibly a bomb intended to take over a scheduled flight. Two Odessa girls, 15 and 16, were taken into custody for making the threat.

Police were tipped off about someone carrying drugs in the parking lot of a local club in March. A 16-year-old was found in possession of five rocks of crack cocaine.

Two men and a boy were arrested for rape in April. Later, charges were dropped and a 13-year-old girl was accused of making a false report.

Eight inmates caused a riot and escaped from a local detention center in May. All were juveniles being held at Culver Youth Home.

Three assailants wearing ski masks — two armed with baseball bats — entered a Big Spring convenience store in late April. The woman clerk was struck several times, and several bottles of wine and packs of cigarettes were taken. The robbers were 14, 15 and 16 years old, all boys.

A few hours later, the same 14-year-old teamed up with two 16-year-olds and a 15-year-old, broke into an elderly man's home, beat him and stole $140.

"In a lot of cases, (the public) should be more worried (about younger criminals) because of their immaturity. They don't worry about the consequences, they just do it," Dettman said.

Others who work in law enforcement and the justice system understand that precaution.

"What really concerns me is, Clay Sellars and 'the bat boy,' these kids have no (delinquent) history," said Adolfo Salcido, chief juvenile probation officer for Midland County.

Sellars was convicted in February of attempted murder for seeking a hit man to kill another 16-year-old. Sellars has been described as a quiet boy.

The "bat boy" refers to Mark Mitchell Jr., who was certified as an adult in May for the attempted murder of a convenience store clerk. The clerk, Kay Balog, was struck in the head with a baseball bat and a 12-pack of Dr Pepper taken from the store.

Police Sgt. E.M. Nicks also expressed shock about some of the recent incidents involving youngsters.

"One of the drastic changes I've seen . . . that scares me: We had a 9-year-old in school with a handgun," Nicks said.

Texas law does not provide for action against the boy because he is under 10.

Juveniles enjoy more protection by law

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

"You have the right to . . ."

In addition to the legal rights afforded juveniles, other protections go beyond those of adults.

For starters, the names of youngsters arrested remain secret. By law, the names of suspected adult offenders are open to the public. Suspected delinquents are excluded.

Even the system of law that deals with juveniles doesn't consider them criminals. Juvenile delinquency falls under the civil laws of the family code, not under the criminal code of adults.

If one juvenile stabs another, the victim's name is public, but not the assailant's.

When and if a youngster goes to juvenile court, the hearings usually are closed to the public. The presiding judge may open the courtroom to the public.

In Midland, County Court at Law Judge Al Walvoord is an exception and usually allows open court.

After a juvenile is adjudicated, his or her record remains sealed with the County Clerk's Office.

As a protective measure, youngsters' identities remain confidential after being found guilty of any crime and committed to an institution.

For example, the West Texas State School near Pyote won't allow media interviews with a child unless a written request naming a specific youth is approved by the administration, the child and his parents.

That security is further upheld through laws that prohibit disclosure of children held at Texas Youth Commission facilities, and area authorities usually are not advised of what TYC institution a delinquent is sent.

Similar protection is afforded at Culver Youth Home.

Officials there prohibit public release of names, or photographs that don't name the child or the offense. Officials said the precautions are due to the possibility of liability rulings against Midland County.

Even when a youth volunteers his name with his parents' consent, making public the name can be the basis of a lawsuit. After turning 18, a former delinquent may sue, contending he was not an adult, and therefore wasn't capable of the consensual act.

GUNS: Students report more violations

(From 1A)

All but one of the gun carriers were students, who were expelled for the remainder of the school semester or year.

The standard punishment by the juvenile justice system has been 12 months probation. All but two of the students were juveniles. A 9-year-old who took a .22-caliber gun to the playground after school was by law exempt from prosecution.

"I find that distressing. You get a bigger fine if you get caught speeding . . . than if you bring a gun to school," Baressi said.

Five of the guns reportedly were brought to school for protection, youngsters have told officials.

"Most of these kids are trying to impress their friends. . . . The perceived threats are after school, mostly in their neighborhoods," Baressi said.

John Miller, police chief for the school district, agreed and said students arm themselves not with the intention of killing but because of a perceived threat or "to be the big boy on campus."

Whatever the reason, the increase of guns on campus has raised the concern of administrators, teachers, parents and students.

"Even one gun in the school is reason to worry . . . especially in the hands of juveniles who don't have the reasoning process that adults have and the safety" concerns, Miller said.

Such concerns have led to the guns being discovered, he said.

"We've had more incidents this year but not because it's going up — it's because more kids are telling us, their parents or the staff," Miller said. "Now kids are telling about knives, about guns, about drugs. . . . They're tired of these weapons on campus."

For example, a Lee Freshman High School student packing a .380-caliber automatic was discovered after a girl, a fellow school-bus rider, told her mother. The girl and two others later expressed concern about the possibility of the gun accidentally being fired on the bus.

Most students carrying weapons are usually caught because they like to brag and show off, Miller said.

At school, 31 teens were caught with weapons last year by the Midland Independent School District Police Department. Thirteen of those youngsters were either 13 or 14 years old.

Miller said there are "lots of knives," and clubs at school. Pellet guns and starter pistols also present a problem.

Carrying a knife usually nets probation and 10 days suspension, he said.

"The only injuries we've had in the five years I've been here have been from knives, not guns," he said. "They all have access to knives."

The danger of knives was exemplified in late May when a 14-year-old boy in Odessa was stabbed twice in the chest and cut on the neck after an argument with another 14-year-old at school. Police classified the attack as an attempted murder.

Television shows and movies, "from Ninja Turtles to Rambo," teach youngsters to protect themselves with violence, Miller said.

"You can't do it with a fist fight, you have to devastate him," he said.

"The biggest problem — or the root problem — is kids that don't know how to deal with conflict resolution," Miller said. "These kids feel they need to protect themselves and bring these knives and guns."

Sgt. E.M. Nicks of the Midland Police Department expressed a similar view. In the past, fighting among youngsters was generally confined to fists, he said.

"Now, you're going to fight someone with a knife or gun," Nicks said.

"And that's the beginning of how gangs start. They start grouping for protection," said Det. Dan Walkenshaw, juvenile officer and school liaison for the Midland police.

Nicks also holds the view that society instills such solutions.

"I just think it comes from watching TV. . . . Kids shooting kids, it's an acceptable practice," Nicks said.

A teen who was put on probation for unlawfully carrying a weapon — a 3-foot wood stick to use in a fight — disagreed.

Youngsters would "rather just beat up each other than shoot or kill somebody," he said.

And youths are not into violence, he added. "Teen-agers are more into sex, drugs and booze."

Crime reports appear to indicate otherwise.

Earlier this year, two 17-year-old high schoolers stole 19 guns from a local gun shop, police reported. And although the culprits were considered adults by law, many of the firearms fell into the hands of juveniles.

"Within 48 hours, they sold 17 of them, and half of the 17 I'd say were sold twice," Nicks said. "At least a dozen of them went to people 17 and under."

Nationwide in 1990 — surpassing previous records — there were 151 arrests per 100,000 juveniles for weapons-law violations, according to the U.S. Department of Justice.

In Texas last year, 3,544 youngsters were arrested for carrying or possessing weapons, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Locally, police arrested 42 youths in 1992 for weapons violations. That compares to seven arrests in 1982. No juveniles were arrested for weapons by the Sheriff's Office last year.

Burglary, thefts still youths' crimes of choice

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

Despite an increase in violent crimes by juveniles, property crimes — burglary and thefts — remain the crux of delinquent acts.

"Burglary, vandalism, theft. We see the same as we did years ago, but more of it," police Sgt. E.M. Nicks said.

Historically, stealing has been the leader in juvenile crimes, various reports indicate.

And about 80 percent of juvenile burglars — plus or minus 10 percent — will continue such behavior as adults, according to James Olson, professor of psychology at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Nearly one-third of all burglary and theft arrests in 1991 in the United States were by people under 18 years of age, according to the U.S. Department of Justice. About 14 percent of the total arrests were juveniles under 15.

Property crimes also generally have the lowest clearance rates — about 20 percent, national statistics indicate.

Juveniles usually steal for fun money or for items they can't buy or afford, observers generally concur.

In burglaries, juveniles tend to want money to party with while adults generally seek money for drugs, said Olson, who co-authored "Breaking and Entering," a 1991 book that tracked 30 professional residential burglars in Midland.

Party money for youths can be for hanging out with friends, alcoholic beverages and the more mundane, such as the video arcade.

When youngsters burglarize, they tend to hit homes in their neighborhoods, trash homes more than adult burglars, have a tougher time selling the stolen goods, and are aware of conviction difficulties and lenient sentences, Olson said.

Juvenile burglars also show more risk-taking behavior and may seek some status among peers, Olson said. The adult counterpart perceives the burglary more as a job, he said.

Motivation and opportunity play heavily into why a youngster steals, Olson said.

Last year, three teen-age boys, short on money and hungry for fun, thought they had an easy solution.

"We just had this brilliant idea," Jason said.

Jason, then 16, and the two others, 16 and 17, all came from single-parent families. They all lived with their mothers.

Jason's 16-year-old friend, Doug, had mentioned a safe his father had. The three boys considered the man a "weasel," who worked and collected unemployment at the same time, Jason said.

"It wasn't a spur of the moment deal. (Doug) told us and we'd been thinking about it," Jason said.

After breaking into the man's home and safe, the boys went away with a coin collection, baseball cards and silver certificates. They had expected cash.

The next day they drove to Dallas and pawned the $6,000 worth of goods for about $1,250.

The three stayed in seedy motels, went shopping for tapes and clothes, and attended an Iron Maiden concert.

'It may sound crazy to you, but I did it to see if I could get away with it. I didn't think about stealing the car and the consequences.'

— Lindsey, a 16-year-old car thief

"I had a good time," Jason said.

Sherry the shoplifter wasn't out to have a good time. She just needed something.

"It just seemed so easy at the time," remarked the young woman caught shoplifting makeup at a discount store earlier this year.

"I didn't have any money and I needed some mascara," she said.

Many youngsters, like Sherry, apparently view shoplifting lightly.

It's not like she stole from someone she knew, Sherry said.

"I don't know how you can compare stealing from a store and stealing from a friend," said Sherry, a member of the National Honor Society and 16 years old at the time of the crime.

Sherry said she knows "a lot" of teens who have shoplifted.

Lindsey, 16, knew someone who knew how to steal a car. He taught her.

"It may sound crazy to you, but I did it to see if I could get away with it," Lindsey said. "I didn't think about stealing the car and the consequences."

In all, Lindsey has stolen five cars, she said.

Last year, local authorities arrested 66 youngsters under 17 years old for burglary, 195 for theft and 26 for motor-vehicle theft.

Because of low clearance rates, those numbers may not accurately reflect the number of juveniles involved in such property crimes.

For example, the Midland Independent School District 1992 crime report lists 38 burglaries with six cleared, and 56 thefts with 22 cleared.

Police received 1,741 burglary reports last year. Of those, 489 were cleared, 276 by arrest and the remainder because of lack of prosecution or other reasons. That leaves 1,252 unsolved burglaries — which may or may not have involved juveniles.

Police also had 3,531 complaints of theft in 1992, with 736 cleared, leaving almost 80 percent unsolved.

Across Texas in 1992, 9,565 juveniles were arrested for burglary, 28,055 for theft and 5,862 for motor vehicle theft, according to the Department of Public Safety. Those property crimes make up 31 percent of the 138,620 juvenile arrests in the state last year.

In the United States last year, there were about 550,000 people under 18 years old arrested for either burglary, theft or motor-vehicle theft. About 42 percent of those arrests were of youngsters between 10 and 15 years of age.

Youth crime grows on many fronts

Gangs, vandalism, drugs and drinking all raise community concerns

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

There appears to exist a conflict of views in the community: While many think juvenile delinquency requires stricter action, others believe that youngsters, in general, are being attacked too harshly.

Most youngsters, the latter group maintains, stay out of trouble. And, of those who do not, many of their offenses are minor.

Although violent crimes by juveniles are increasing everywhere, and Midland has had some eye-openers, Midland, Odessa and surrounding cities don't compare to metropolitan inner cities.

But the Permian Basin does have its share of young law-breakers, whether it involves underage drinking or worse.

Youngsters under 18 accounted for about 23 percent of arrests in Midland last year. About 17 percent of all arrests were of youngsters 16 years old or under.

Violent crimes

In 1990, the juvenile arrest rate for violent crimes in the United States was 430 per 100,000 individuals 17 and under.

Midland falls substantially below the national average, with only a handful of youngsters arrested each year.

Nonetheless, the crimes generate concern because the level of violence is not expected from youngsters.

"We are seeing less reluctance to do a more serious act," Judge Al Walvoord said.

For example, a 15-year-old girl was raped twice, attacked unsuccessfully a third time, and brutally beaten behind an northwest Midland apartment complex last year. Arrested for the crime was Seward "Seaweed" Swann, then 16, who in April was certified as an adult and awaits trial.

Swann, after he turned 17, was charged with possession of cocaine. He remains jailed in lieu of a $5,000 bond for the violent crimes, and $3,500 for the drug charge.

Then there was 38-year-old Kay Woody Balog, who suffered a near-fatal blow to the head with a baseball bat while she worked at the Town and Country Food Store, 7100 W. Highway 80, in April.

"She stated, 'I did not think he would hit me but he did.' That's all she could recall," testified a sheriff's deputy at a hearing of the suspect.

Mark W. Mitchell Jr., 16, certified as an adult in May, is expected to stand trial for the attack. He was arrested after he reportedly told friends he was responsible for the crime.

Authorities have said the motive may have been for kicks, or on a dare, or for a 12-pack of Dr Pepper believed to have been taken from the store.

Another example occurred last year, when two men in their early 20s were beaten by a "pack" of juveniles in the 1300 block of South Marshall Street. The attack reportedly stemmed from a beer party that got out of hand. One of the men was beaten unconscious; both required medical treatment.

Another offense, a couple of months ago, involved an 11-year-old who was attacked outside a convenience store by two boys, 14 and 16 years old, for an $18 Dallas Cowboys cap.

Walkenshaw

"They wanted it, so they beat and throttled him to the ground so they could take it," police Det. Dan Walkenshaw said. The two assailants were later arrested.

Gangs

Midland may be home to about 10 gangs at any time, with different groups sprouting and dissipating, law-enforcement officials said. Many groups come and go, usually because of a lack of leadership.

And that lack of leadership has led law-enforcement officials to believe that most local gangs consist of "wannabes."

Nevertheless, police acknowledge a need to monitor suspected gang activity. And a report released in February following a nine-month investigation by a special grand jury revealed grave concern for area gangs.

"... There is a growing gang problem in Midland. So much so that this special grand jury feels that the community is sitting on a powder keg," the report stated.

Furthermore, gang detectives from major Texas cities have visited Midland, examined graffiti and other signs, and concluded either the existence of gangs or the beginnings of a presence.

Other evidence of gangs — drive-by shootings — have occurred in recent years.

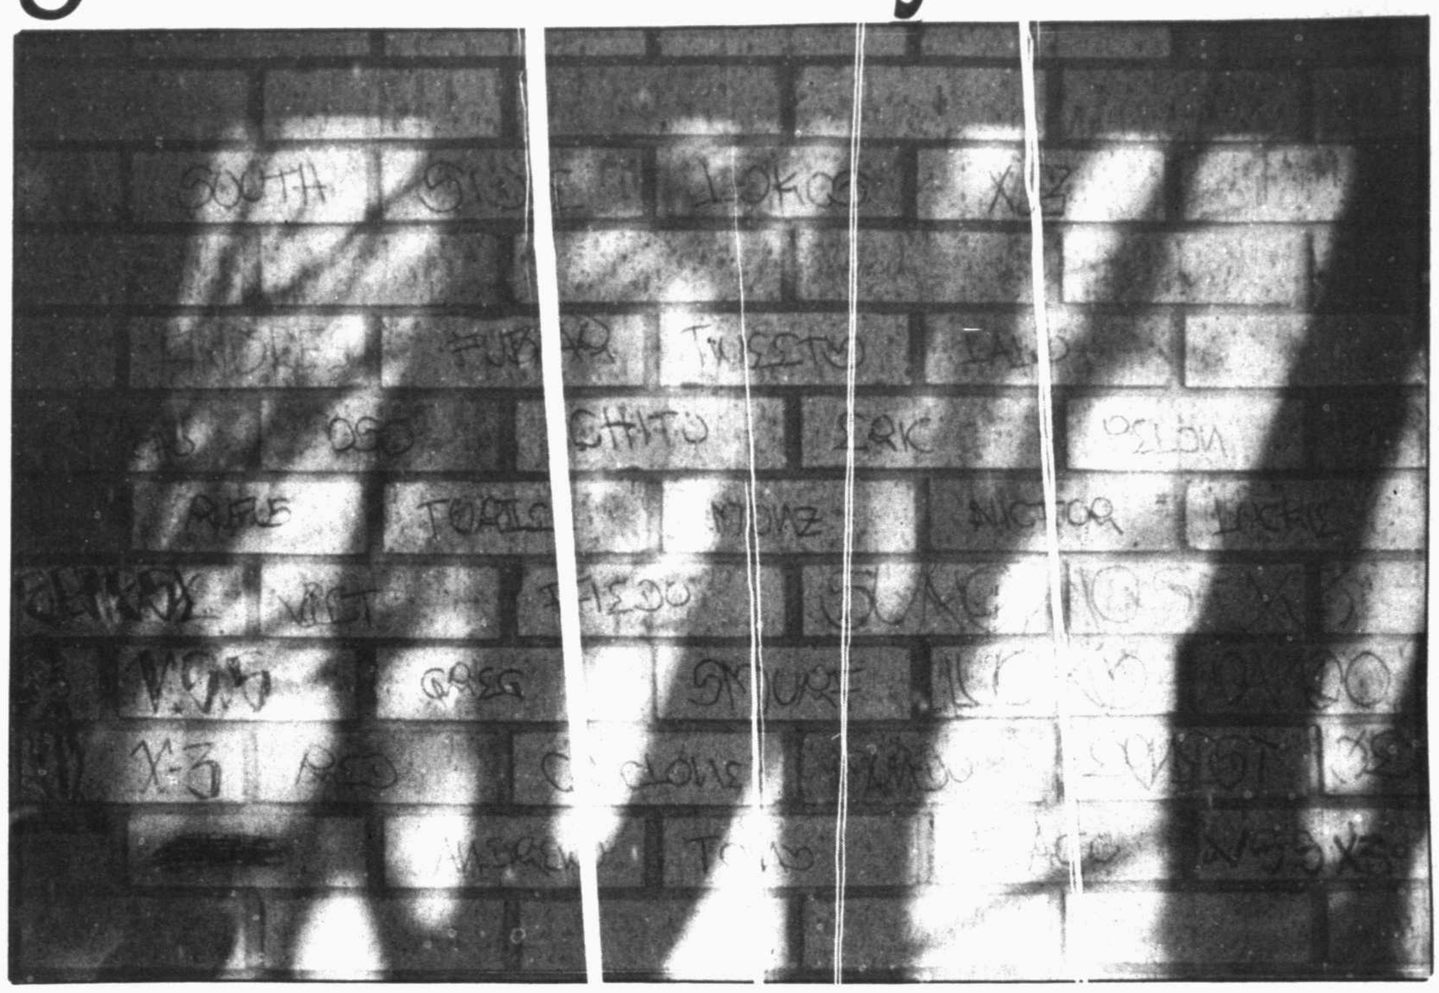
But, officials said, such activity may or may not be gang related, and it is sometimes difficult to differentiate associates and wanna-bes with hard-core members.

Alcohol and drugs

Recently, when a car full of teens on the "strip" — Midkiff Road south of Andrews Highway — were asked about drinking, several of the youngsters held up open cans of beer.

Many Midland youngsters freely acknowledge the ease of obtaining alcoholic beverages, as well as drugs.

"That's pretty much common school knowledge," said a national honor student who knows "a lot" of youngsters who drink and use and sell drugs.



Evidence of graffiti exists on buildings near Midland High.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

A 1992 student questionnaire revealed that 67 percent of Midland eighth-graders have used alcohol, and nearly 80 percent of 10th-graders and 86 percent of 12th-graders. Those figures are 5 percent to 10 percent below the 1990 state average, according to the latest available statistics from the Texas Commission on Alcohol and Drug Abuse.

Two school counselors estimated that about 60 percent of area high school students use alcohol on a regular basis, defined as at least two to three drinks, two or three time a month. And an estimated 20 percent drink every weekend to get drunk, they added.

In light of a recent uproar in the community about teen drinking, numerous students, parents and various officials have made similar, many times higher, estimates.

Last year, Midland police made 269 arrests on "minor in possession" charges, which includes anyone under the drinking age of 21. That does not reflect instances where citations were issued and no arrests made.

Although only a handful of youngsters were arrested for drugs last year, that number falls substantially short of actual usage, officials readily acknowledged.

Several juveniles have been arrested in southeast Midland selling drugs for older dealers, police reported.

Nevertheless, drug use by juveniles pales in comparison to drinking.

The questionnaire showed that among area high school students, about 37 percent had used marijuana, about 20 percent inhalants, less than 10 percent cocaine, about 14 percent stimulants, and less than 10 percent hallucinogens.

Vandalism

During the last weekend in May, about 30 cars — including a marked law-enforcement vehicle parked in a driveway in the Lee High School vicinity — were damaged with white spray paint. Juveniles are the suspected culprits.

This last school year, a group of youngsters smashed curb-mounted mailboxes with baseball bats.

"It was a game, how many they could knock off with a ball bat," Walkenshaw said.

On one evening about 30 boxes were destroyed.

A couple of years ago, youngsters in a pickup drove around town turning over Volkswagens — more than 10 before they were stopped.

In 1992, there were 1,958 cases of vandalism reported to the police.

"I believe that you could say without being farfetched that half those involved youths, aimlessly out with nothing to do," Walkenshaw said.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Vandalism perpetrated by juveniles usually involves a series of acts, for no apparent reason except the fun of destruction. The incidents generally occur late at night, waking victims but with the vandals usually getting away.

Adult vandalism more often involves solitary acts, perhaps for revenge.

When school-age vandals are caught, their stated motives usually are consistent.

"They claim to have nothing to do, they're bored. ... I don't know if I buy that, but that's the excuse we usually get," Walkenshaw said.

Last year, city police arrested 54 youngsters under 17 for vandalism and school-district security arrested 11 others.

Status offenses

Status offenses consist of delinquent behavior — such as running away from home and truancy — that are unique to being a juvenile and are not part of the adult justice system.

"There's a lot more truancy and runaways at a younger age," Walkenshaw said. Today that includes 10- and 11-year-olds, he said.

Lindsey, 16, has run away from home about 10 times since turning 15 years of age.

"I had family problems. We didn't get along. We still don't," said Lindsey, who now lives with her grandmother.

"They pressured me for everything. They nagged me, they nagged me," she said.

Problems with her parents escalated when they strongly disapproved of a boyfriend. Lindsey countered by leaving home.

Running away from home usually indicative of personal problems that are conducive to committing delinquent acts, various authorities said.

In 1992, Midland police received 625 reports of runaways.

That same year, police picked up 189 runaways — 85 boys and 104 girls. Nearly half were either 13 or 14 years old.

Across the country last year, law-enforcement agencies took into custody 135,471 runaways.

Some youngsters don't just leave home, they leave school.

Kay Milan, Midland Independent School District, said there are "a lot" of youngsters who are not attending school. He did not venture to give an estimate.

"There should be enough where there should be concern from the community," he said.

Truancy most times results from other problems, not vice versa, Milan added.

Texas law requires youngsters under 16 to attend at least 80 days per semester. An average semester lasts 90 days.

At Midland public schools last semester, 140, or 8 percent, of seventh-graders had 10 or more unexcused absences; 168, or 11 percent, of eighth-graders; 161, or 11 percent, of ninth-graders; 195, or 13 percent, of 10th-graders; 94, or 8 percent, of 11th-graders; and 55, or 6 percent, of 12th-graders.

Today 20	In a new age of youngsters and violence, both local and national statistics point toward increases in most types of crimes being committed by teens. Weapons at school, burglary and theft, violent offenses and other crimes have raised many concerns.
Monday 21	Crime by juveniles does not exist in a vacuum. The social costs include the emotional burdens inflicted on victims as well as the frequent incidence of abuse and dysfunction that many offenders have experienced earlier in childhood.
Tuesday 22	Is the juvenile justice system keeping up with the changing times? Its provisions differ greatly from adult criminal justice, but is it having the desired effect of rehabilitating youngsters and derailing them from a potential lifelong pattern of crime?

Russia acknowledges U.S. captured nuclear weapons

By William J. Broad
N.Y. Times writer

After years of silence, Russia has acknowledged that one of the boldest American spy missions of the cold war succeeded in recovering two nuclear warheads from a Soviet submarine that had exploded and sunk in Pacific waters more than three miles deep.

It is the first time Russia has said that the West captured any of its nuclear arms.

The warheads were recovered in 1974 by an American vessel, the Glomar Explorer, a panel of Russian scientists said in a report to President Boris N. Yeltsin.

The basis for the statement was not given by the report's authors, who simply say it is of Russian origin. Some Western experts suggested that the Russians might have based the statement on Western news reports. But a former top intelligence official who has spoken to the Russians about the submarine recovery said he believed the new data were Russian.

The Glomar Explorer's attempt to recover the Soviet submarine with a giant robotic claw was widely publicized in 1975 and 1976 after the American vessel, which had been built by the CIA, lost its cover as a mining ship.

But what the half-billion-dollar venture accomplished was murky. Some accounts said the whole diesel-powered submarine had been recovered from the sea floor 750 miles northwest of Hawaii, where it sank in 1968, including nuclear warheads and code books. Others said the Glomar Explorer's huge claw had broken and dropped most of the sub and its military secrets. In an article on Dec. 9, 1976, The New York Times quoted two men who had worked on the mission as saying that two nuclear torpedoes had been recovered from the sub.

Last year the CIA disclosed that it had recovered and subsequently buried at sea 6 of 86 crewmen said to have been aboard the sub, bolstering the impression that only part of the vessel had been recovered.

Now, a team of Russian scientists working for Yeltsin has addressed the spy mission as part of an inventory of Russian nuclear materials lost or dumped at sea. The report says the Soviet submarine, a Golf-2 class vessel, went down with 1,000 curies of radiation in the form of nuclear warheads, and that 400 curies of that were later removed.

"Bow section with NWHs," the report says, referring to nuclear warheads, "raised in August 1974 by Glomar Explorer."

The bow section of the submarine would have carried torpedoes with nuclear warheads. The rest of the Soviet vessel, which apparently slipped away when the recovery claw failed, is said to have held the sub's code room and three long-range missiles tipped with nuclear warheads.

A CIA spokesman said the agency would have no comment on the Russian report, which appears to be the first in which Moscow has addressed the outcome of the top-secret endeavor.

American experts said the recovery was an intelligence coup that undoubtedly helped America better understand its foe's arsenal. "It would have been very interesting to get their warheads," said Dr. Theodore B. Taylor, a former nuclear arms designer at the Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico. "Bombs can be very different from one another. There's a good chance Soviet weaponry held big surprises for us."

William E. Colby, a former director of central intelligence who oversaw the Glomar Explorer's mission, praised the recovery effort in an interview and said "there's no question" that raising the Soviet submarine was a worthwhile objective. But he declined to say whether any nuclear warheads had been recovered.

'Lord of the Flies' author Golding dies at 81

LONDON (AP) — Nobel Prize-winning author Sir William Golding, whose classic novel "Lord of the Flies" won acclaim for its chilling story of the descent of marooned schoolboys into barbarism, died Saturday. He was 81.

Matthew Evans, chairman of Golding's publisher, Faber and Faber, said the likely cause of death was a heart attack.

"It happened very suddenly," said Golding's son-in-law, Terrell Carver.

The writer died at his home in Perranarworthal, near Falmouth in southern England.

Golding won the Nobel Prize in literature in 1983 and was knighted five years ago.

The award was tainted by controversy, when a member of the academy, Swedish writer Artur Lundkvist, publicly declared that Golding was of "no importance whatsoever" internationally.

Golding was forgiving: "He was probably irritated into it by having journalists down his neck," he told The Associated Press at the time.

For a man who once said his biggest affliction was "the inability to write poetry," Golding made a major contribution to English literature. His novels have been reprinted many times and are required reading at many colleges and schools.

Golding suffered a string of rejections before "Lord of the Flies," his first work, was published in 1954. The tale is about a group of boys who survive the crash-landing of an airplane and try to survive on an uninhabited island, where they split into different tribes and begin fighting one another. The book was made into at least two movies.

"Lord of the Flies" was followed by 11 other novels, including "The Inheritors," (1955) and "Free Fall" (1959). "Rights of Passage," published in 1980, won the Booker Prize, one of Britain's most prestigious literary prizes.

Born in Cornwall, southern England, on Sept. 19, 1911, Golding studied science and then English at Oxford University.

After graduation, he joined the Royal Navy, serving on cruisers and destroyers and developing an enduring love of the sea.

In a rare interview, Golding once talked about death: "I'd rather there wasn't an afterlife, really. I'd much rather not be me for thousands of years. Me? Hah!"

Golding is survived by his wife, Ann, a son and a daughter.

Rebel soldiers threaten capital

BAKU, Azerbaijan (AP) — Rebel soldiers moved unopposed toward the capital on Saturday and threatened to seize it unless elected President Abulfaz Elcibey officially resigns.

Former Communist Party boss Geidar Aliev, who stepped in as acting president on Friday, was negotiating by telephone with both Elcibey and rebel leader Surat Huseynov to try to resolve the crisis, news agencies reported.

Elcibey fled the capital on Friday, citing fears for his safety.

He was pressured by Huseynov, a former army commander demoted by Elcibey in a dispute over the handling of Azerbaijan's 5-year-old war with Armenia over the territory of Nagorno-Karabakh.

The streets in Baku were noticeably calmer on Saturday, two weeks after the crisis began, although Western oil companies reportedly were pulling most of their workers out of the city, fearing civil war.

Ten-year-old boy dies from alligator attack

HOBE SOUND, Fla. (AP) — A 10-year-old boy on a river outing with his family was mauled to death by an alligator Saturday after the youngster got out of a canoe to go wading.

The alligator pulled Bradley Weidenhamer of Lantana under water as he waded in a shallow section of the Loxahatchee River, authorities said. The attack occurred in J.D. Dickinson State Park, about 20 miles north of Palm Beach.

Bradley was freed by his father and others who attacked the alligator with paddles, said Lt. Jim Huffstodt of the state Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission. But the youngster suffered serious puncture wounds to his head and died, Huffstodt said.

Authorities said the incident was the first fatal alligator attack on a person in Florida since a 4-year-old girl was killed five years ago. Six people have been killed by alligators in Florida since the early 1970s, Huffstodt said.

A professional alligator trapper was called to the park, which was closed until the animal could be captured. The gator will be killed and a necropsy, or animal autopsy, will be performed, Huffstodt said.

"We do it in every case and we try to determine the age and the health of the animal and look for any clues that might tell us why an attack might have happened, because attacks are extremely rare," he said.

Huffstodt said he expected calls from a concerned public.

"We're going to have a wave of calls from people who are reacting very emotionally to the situation and asking us to kill every alligator in the state," he said.

"We probably have more than a million alligators in Florida and we get about a dozen attacks in Florida a year. Your chances of drowning on a river are much higher than of being attacked by an alligator."

Huffstodt said there was no indication that the boy or anyone in his group did anything to provoke the alligator.

Trial to begin for 3 police officers in beating death

DETROIT (NYT) — A jury that took two painstaking weeks to assemble will have to decide whether the fatal beating of a black motorist was a wild exercise of raw power by the police or the action of committed officers confronted by a struggling man in a high-crime area.

As opening arguments began on Friday in the trial of three former white officers that is expected to last six to eight weeks, many people here wonder whether what happens inside the courtroom will ignite an explosion of rage and flames in the streets.

Live gavel-to-gavel television coverage is planned and extra security has been added. The first witnesses are expected to testify Monday.

Two of the former officers are accused of second-degree murder in the beating death of the motorist. A third is charged with assault in the deadly beating of Malice Green, 35, an unemployed steelworker, in a curb-side confrontation with police on a clear November night last year.

The incident has haunted Detroit for seven months and led to the country's third racially charged trial this year involving police officers accused of abusing a black motorist, after those in Los Angeles and Orlando, Fla.

Like those trials, the Detroit case, known in local newspaper headlines as the Deadly Encounter or the Fatal Force Case, grows out of the often tense relationship between law enforcement officials and many black and other minority residents in America's inner cities.

Two juries, one for Officer Walter Budzyn and one for Officer Larry Nevers, will hear testimony at the same time, seated a few feet apart in Courtroom 402. Originally, the men were to be tried by one jury but Budzyn's lawyer, Michael Batchelor, asked for a separate trial, asserting that the defense of the two former partners could be antagonistic, as each defendant tried to blame the other.

To save time and money, the judge in the case, George Crockett III, decided to try the men together with with a double jury, a fairly common practice in Michigan. The panels will hear prosecution witnesses together, but jurors will be taken out of the courtroom during proceedings that do not involve the defendant whose fate they will decide.

Of the 32 jurors and alternates, 26 are black, as are about 70 percent of the people in Detroit.

Seven months ago as word of the fatal beating spread, Detroit officials moved quickly to calm the tension. The mayor, Coleman Young, said he was shocked and sickened by what he called a murder by police.

Teen survives two days in car after accident

EL CAJON, Calif. (AP) — An injured teen-ager survived two days in the dense underbrush of a remote canyon after a car she was driving crashed, killing her two passengers, officials said.

The car went into the canyon about 20 miles northeast of San Diego on Wednesday afternoon, California Highway Patrol dispatcher Helena Caravajel said. The accident wasn't noticed until Friday afternoon, when two telephone linemen heard 16-year-old Dawnya Skoglund calling for help.

"We heard some moaning. Someone cried for help in the canyon, and it was pretty faint at first. I thought it was an animal," said lineman Art Lowery.

Lowery said the high school student told him that she crawled on her stomach to a creek bed at the bottom of the canyon for water, but didn't have the strength to climb out of the canyon.

Caravajal said Skoglund told investigators that she became distracted when one of her passengers bumped the gearshift while adjusting the radio. The car went off the road, flying about 200 feet in the air before landing in the ravine.

Skoglund was in stable condition at Sharp Memorial Hospital with back injuries, hospital spokesman Todd Hoff said Saturday.

Killed were Willyn Maye Stewart, 17, who was pinned inside the car, and Timothy Doyle, 16, who was thrown from it.

Officials to propose higher grazing fees

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interior Department plans to propose higher fees for grazing on federal lands by the end of next month, Secretary Bruce Babbitt said Saturday.

Environmentalists criticized President Clinton for backing away from his plan to include higher grazing fees in the federal budget that Congress will adopt this year. But the president remains committed to raising the fees in 1993, Babbitt said on CNN's "Newsmaker Saturday."

Regulators can raise the fees without consulting Congress, he said.

"I expect that we will have grazing reform out on the street by the end of July," Babbitt said. The proposal would then go through a public comment period. Babbitt did not say how much the proposed fee hike would be.

Ranchers now graze their cattle and sheep on public land for far less than it costs to graze on private range land, Babbitt said.

KKK: 'Invisible Empire' group changes name

ATLANTA (AP) — Leaders of one of the nation's largest Ku Klux Klan factions changed the group's name Saturday and said they also want to change its image.

But a critic said the act was just a ploy to duck a legal agreement.

Leaders of the Invisible Empire, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, met Saturday in Atlanta and voted unanimously to change the group's name to The Unified Ku Klux Klan.

James W. Farrands of Gulf, N.C., who headed the old klan group, was unanimously elected to lead the new organization as imperial wizard.

Morris Dees, whose Southern Poverty Law Center in Montgomery, Ala., reached a settlement with the group last month to end a federal lawsuit, said Farrands is trying to avoid complying with the settlement.

The lawsuit was filed after civil rights marchers were pelted with rocks and bottles in mostly white Forsyth County, Ga., north of Atlanta, in 1987.

The agreement required Farrands to give up his Klan leadership and the group to stop using its name. The group also must to stop operating Empire Publishing, which produced a newsletter called The Klansman.

"He can't just change the name of the group and keep running it," Dees said.

Farrands, dressed in white hood and gown, said at a news conference that the actions taken Saturday by himself and 17 other Klan leaders from around the nation had nothing to do with the lawsuit.

He also said the group, which broke away from the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan in 1975, will exclude skinheads and neo-Nazis.

"The Unified KKK is not a white supremacist organization, we're an organization of white men and women who just want to protect white rights," he said. "We're not a hate organization."

Young girl speaks to DWI offenders about losing father, sister in crash

By Carol Bidwell
N.Y. Times News Service

VENTURA, Calif. — Standing confidently in her pink-and-white dress before a group of convicted drunk drivers, 8-year-old Sarah Mestayer Campbell read letters she has written to the father and sister who were killed by a drunk driver.

"If you were here, you would see the plays that I'm in," Sarah said as she read the letter to her father to a largely male group of nearly 100. "You would read my report cards. You would kiss me good night.

"Even though I don't remember you, I'll bet you're the nicest dad ever. I love you. I miss you a lot."

To her sister, she wrote: "We would have played house and dolls. You would play school with me and teach me the things I don't know. I love you. I miss you. I know I will see you again in heaven."

Several men covered their faces with their hands as the youngest member of Ventura County's victim impact panel read, and others wiped away tears with the backs of their hands.

"Even though I am only 8 years old, I know I will never drink and drive," Sarah told her audience during last week's session in Ventura.

In Ventura County, northwest of Los Angeles, repeat drunk-driving offenders are required to attend at least one victim impact panel during their probationary period, said Probation Officer Ralph Brand.

Sarah is one of a half-dozen panelists who work with the Ventura County Probation Department through Mothers Against Drunk Driving to tell firsthand the devastating impact of drinking and driving.

Sarah said it initially was difficult for her to talk to convicted drunk drivers about the Aug. 26, 1986, crash that killed her father and sister.

"I kinda felt scared about looking at all those people out there," she said in an interview. "And I kinda felt sad. But I feel like it makes a big difference, and now I have to do it."

> 'But I feel like it makes a big difference, and now I have to do it.'
> — Sarah M. Campbell

In the past year, about 7,000 people in Ventura County were convicted of drunk driving, and most of the repeat offenders have attended the panel discussions, Brand said.

Officials from Ventura and Los Angeles counties say they believe Sarah might be the only child in the United States who routinely tells her story to convicted drunk drivers through the panel meetings.

"Anytime Sarah talks, it brings home to them that this could happen to their family," Brand said. "She has a very powerful effect. Just the sincerity of her — that little, childlike voice — has probably more effect than anything else we can do to keep people from reoffending.

"And after she finishes talking, people don't want to leave. They want to talk to her, to say they're sorry," he said.

Linda Finerty, executive director of the Ventura County chapter of MADD, agreed that Sarah's youth heightens the impact of her message.

"When she talks, you can just see people fight back the tears. Coming from a child's point of view, it really wakes people up. I think it's got to affect the hardest person sitting out there."

Sarah was only a year old when her father, Patrick Mestayer, and 5-year-old sister, Kristin, were killed as the family drove to a birthday party on Santa Rosa Road between the cities of Camarillo and Thousand Oaks.

Sammy H. Menchaca, then 27, crossed over the center line and plowed head-on into the Mestayer auto, killing Sarah's father instantly. Kristin died two hours later in an ambulance en route to a hospital for brain surgery.

The crash injured Sarah's mother, Sally Campbell, and left Sarah with permanent foot problems as well as facial scars that she conceals with her bangs.

Menchaca was paroled Jan. 7 after serving roughly half of a 10½ year prison sentence at the California Men's Colony in San Luis Obispo, officials said.

Campbell of Ventura said she initially was worried that talking publicly about her loss would cause further pain for her daughter. Campbell said she became a member of the victim impact panel about five years ago, and until about a year ago Sarah would cry and ask her not to go.

"All of a sudden, she said, 'I want to talk, too,' " Campbell said. "This is something she wanted to do. I was concerned it might traumatize her. But it hasn't. She cried after she talked the first time — we both cried — and we talked about it and now she wants to do it all the time."

Tina Pasco, coordinator of victims for the Los Angeles County chapter of MADD, said it's difficult to find victims of drunk drivers who can effectively tell their stories yet not be shattered by the experience.

Former clerks portray Ginsburg as methodical, warm, direct

By Laurie Asseo
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ruth Bader Ginsburg's approach to judging led her to arrive at work one day with a paper bag, an attache case, a shopping bag and a leather pouch.

Government lawyers had argued in a drug case that police didn't need a warrant to search a paper bag found in a suspect's car trunk even though a warrant was needed to search the nearby leather pouch.

Ginsburg and her law clerks compared the bags and cases before she decided the distinction wasn't valid.

The Constitution's protection against unreasonable searches applies to everyone, "not just those with the resources or fastidiousness" to keep their possessions in better-quality containers, Ginsburg, a federal appeals judge, wrote for the court.

The incident illustrates what many former law clerks described as the thorough approach taken by President Clinton's first pick for the Supreme Court.

"I am not aware of any judge who puts more effort into each case and puts more into writing the opinions," said Michael Vatis, a Washington lawyer who clerked for Ginsburg in 1988-89.

Ginsburg has been a judge on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia since 1980.

"She reads all of the papers in all of the cases," added Edith Lampson Roberts, a Washington lawyer and Ginsburg law clerk in 1989-90. "She has incredible powers of concentration."

A night owl, Ginsburg often arrives at court just in time for 9:30 a.m. arguments, but later on days she is not hearing arguments. She usually stays until everyone else has left, and then works at home well after midnight.

And although her clerks often write the first draft of an opinion, Ginsburg heavily reworks them until they are "just right," one of her favorite phrases.

Her former employees portray Ginsburg as a warm, if not gregarious, person — with them and her fellow judges.

She performed the wedding ceremony when Edith and Matthew Roberts, also a 1989-90 law clerk, got married.

She enjoys celebrating her law clerks' birthdays — often with a cake baked by her husband, Martin, a gourmet cook — and frequently serves as a mentor and career adviser after their clerkships are over.

Although Ginsburg was once general counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union women's rights project, she is close to two conservative colleagues — Justice Antonin Scalia and Judge Laurence Silberman, who were guests of honor at a clerks' reunion celebrating her 10th anniversary as a judge.

The soft-spoken Ginsburg is not a back-slapper, but she has the tenacity to be the kind of consensus-builder Clinton is seeking for the high court, said 1980-81 law clerk Steve Ross.

"I think she's going to come up with arguments and take careful, thoughtful positions that will be attractive" to moderate Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, David H. Souter and Anthony M. Kennedy, said Ross.

That approach to the law may be why Ginsburg is often called a moderate judge despite her more liberal career as a lawyer, Ross added.

Former clerks describe Ginsburg's writing style as "direct and to the point," occasionally using distinctive phrases, called "Ginsburgisms" by some. She likes hyphenated phrases — her comment last week that women are no longer "one-at-a-time performers" in important jobs was a Ginsburgism.

AIDS patients attend seminar by author of suicide manual

SAN FRANCISCO (NYT) — Scores of gay men gathered last week in a church meeting room here, at the epicenter of the AIDS epidemic, to learn which drugs to use for suicide, how to avoid a botched attempt and whether to involve their loved ones and doctors.

The unusual how-to seminar was led by Derek Humphry, the founder of the Hemlock Society and the author of a best-selling suicide manual, who said that teaching people to kill themselves was a "sad commentary on our society," but a logical development in a country that largely outlaws doctor-assisted suicide.

"If people are revolted by what I'm saying and doing, then we must change the law," said Humphry, whose presentation included a demonstration of how to use a plastic bag and a rubber band for self-asphyxiation. "I'd be only too willing to stop."

The seminar broke no laws, many legal scholars and medical ethicists said, despite statutes in California and 28 other states that say aiding, advising or encouraging another to commit suicide is a felony.

Those laws are intended to prohibit one-on-one, hands-on intervention, these experts explained. Seminars and books on the subject are widely assumed to be protected by the Constitution's free-speech guarantees.

But the San Francisco seminar adds a dimension to the nation's legal and moral struggle over assisted suicide.

Initiatives to legalize doctor-assisted suicide are are expected to come again before the voters in several Western states next year and in 1996. And it remains a subject of impassioned debate elsewhere, largely because of the defiant activities of Dr. Jack Kevorkian, the retired pathologist who has helped 15 people die in Michigan with a homemade suicide machine.

The seminar was advertised in Bay Area gay newspapers and attended by more than 150 people, who were asked for a $10 donation. A few had cancer, or were friends or relatives of someone who did. But most were gay men with AIDS.

Few of them were interested in the commercial aspects of the event, like the "Do Not Resuscitate" T-shirts and the discounted Hemlock Society memberships. Fewer still cared for the New Age trappings, like the warbling soprano who opened the program with a song about letting go of the past.

They were there for information about how to organize a swift, sure death for themselves, if they chose to. And Humphry and other panelists answered a barrage of questions, outlining what works and what doesn't in a matter-of-fact way.

Cyanide can cause a violent death, Humphry warned. Kitchen chemicals may land the would-be suicide in the hospital on a stomach pump. Automobile exhaust is slow — especially in California, where cars have strict pollution controls. And hanging is cruel for the people left behind.

The most reliable method, short of a lethal injection administered by a doctor, Humphry said, is barbiturates, which require a prescription. Wash them down with alcohol after a light snack, he advised. And ingest them quickly to prevent falling asleep before the full dose is administered. Using a plastic bag, as well, to cut off oxygen will insure death, he said.

Larry J., a 37-year-old schoolteacher with AIDS, took copious notes. "I want to explore all the options and know how not to make mistakes," he said.

Like most of the young men in the audience, Larry J., who spoke on condition that he not be fully identified, was not yet at the wasting, terminal stage of the disease. Trying to "get information and add it to the stockpile" while his health is fairly good made sense, he said, even though he had no firm plans for suicide.

The public seminar was a first for the Hemlock Society, which usually disseminates such do-it-yourself information at small, members-only workshops. But a plea from some homosexuals here, where suicide with the help of friends is said to be a common event, persuaded Hemlock officials that a wider circle needed instruction.

"This is a daily phenomenon in San Francisco and people need to do their homework," said Steve Jamison, regional director of the Hemlock Society, , who estimated that one of the six AIDS deaths in San Francisco each day is a suicide, although not necessarily classified as such by the coroner.

Jamison told the audience of two such suicides that he had attended. In both cases, he said, supposedly lethal doses of morphine worked more slowly than expected and frightened friends or relatives decided, reluctantly, to hasten death with a plastic bag.

"You can't put this in the laps of your loved ones unless you work out all the possible errors," Jamison warned.

Annenberg to grant $365 million for education

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Publishing magnate Walter Annenberg is giving a total of $365 million to three universities and a prep academy — a donation experts say is the largest cash gift ever to American schools.

The University of Pennsylvania and the University of Southern California will each receive $120 million from the Annenberg Foundation.

The Peddie School, a college-preparatory school in Hightstown, N.J., will receive $100 million. Harvard University will get $25 million.

Annenberg has personal or family ties to all four schools. The pledges are to be fully paid in cash by the end of the year.

"The quality of education will determine the quality of our country in the years ahead," Annenberg, who was U.S. ambassador to Britain during the Nixon administration, said Saturday.

"What I'm doing may inspire other people to do things for the betterment of others. That's what citizenship is all about," Annenberg, 85, told The Associated Press in a telephone interview from his suburban Philadelphia home.

The research director for the New York-based Council for Aid to Education, David Morgan, called Annenberg's $365 million donation "probably the largest transfer of individual wealth to the education sector" in one action.

The single largest pledge to American higher education since 1967 was $125 million to Louisiana State University from oil billionaire Claude Pennington in 1981. But that was partly in stocks and royalties and is still being paid out, according to the Chronicle of Higher Education.

Annenberg's previous support of learning includes a 1990 pledge of $50 million to the United Negro College Fund and past donations to the communications schools at USC and Penn.

"I've been favorably blessed economically. Therefore I have a very important responsibility to do things on behalf of other people. That's the bottom line," he said.

Annenberg, a 1931 graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, founded Penn's Annenberg School of Communications in 1958. The university's $120 million gift will help establish a Public Policy Institute at the school.

The University of Southern California's $120 million grant will pay for a new Annenberg Center for Communications, which will fund programs, faculty hirings, scholarships and equipment for the existing USC schools in cinema-television, journalism, engineering and communications.

Annenberg's daughter, Wallis Annenberg, has been a USC campus trustee since 1971.

Peddie School officials were euphoric over the $100 million gift from Annenberg, a 1927 Peddie graduate, said Brian Davidson, director of annual giving.

The gift caps off more than six decades of donations from Annenberg totaling more than $40 million. The coeducational school has about 500 students.

Annenberg's fortune comes from publishing and communications. He founded Seventeen magazine in 1944 and built an empire from the family holding company, Triangle Publications. Annenberg sold Triangle Publications to Rupert Murdoch in 1988 for $3 billion.

Smith holds town hall meeting

■ Congressman's constituents lob insults at Clinton despite Smith's plea to leave partisan politics at home.

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

Despite congressman Lamar Smith's plea to leave partisan politics at home, several of his constituents preferred to lob insults at President Clinton at a Saturday afternoon town hall meetin :.

Smith, meanwhile, said Clinton's spiraling popularity in the polls could quickly rebound if the president would return to his campaign promises.

"I wish him well and I hope he succeeds as our president," he said. "However, he won't do so if he keeps breaking his promises. My job is to remind him of those promises."

Smith said the typical American will have to pay an additional $450 a year in taxes, or the equivalent of "two presidential haircuts", under Clinton's proposal to reduce the deficit.

"Last fall, before he was elected, he came to Texas and said he didn't want to put an energy tax on the middle-class. He went to Florida and said he didn't want to tamper with Social Security," Smith said. "Now he has reneged on those pledges and his gas tax plan will be a triple hit on Texans because we drive farther."

He said Clinton's tax plan is counterproductive because it will only cut the federal deficit by $40 billion, despite raising about $250 billion in new taxes.

He said the Republican members of Congress have devised an alternative.

"Three words . . . no new taxes," Smith said, echoing President Bush's infamous pledge from the 1988 presidential campaign. "We could cut the deficit in half by having no new spending and cutting government overhead spending, such as travel expenses and printing costs."

The tone of the meeting changed drastically after Smith decided to take questions from the 50-member crowd.

"You talk about his (Clinton's) broken promises but I'm more concerned about the promises he is keeping," one man said. "All this talk about homosexuals in the military, pro-choice nonsense. I'm tired of it. Seventy-five million Christians need to stand up and be counted. We want representation."

After the applause from the crowd subsided, Smith said he also felt strongly about the decline of values.

A woman then criticized Smith for not holding a pray-

Rodeo gives cowboys time to remember their heritage

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

Cowhands like nothing better, it seems, than working cattle horseback, eating chuckwagon vittles about any time, and settling down to black coffee and cowboy poetry that deals with such things as trail drives, camp cooking, old cowpokes, boots and hats.

And those things dear to ranchers and their hands came together on Saturday at the sixth annual Midland Ranch Rodeo in and about the Midland County Arena.

"It's just all right," cowboy Bobby Matthews said of the Ranch Rodeo events. "Everybody gets together to have a good time. Ain't no pros here. Just working hands."

Matthews, who is foreman of the Lazy Z Ranch north of Midland, was among more than 50 cowboys and cowgirls from 11 West Texas ranches who participated in five Ranch Rodeo events: wild-cow milking, team roping, team sorting, calf branding and double mugging.

The Midland Ranch Rodeo was established by Midland-area ranchers and their friends in 1988 to help preserve the West Texas ranching heritage and to depict the neighborliness of ranchers and their hands.

The rodeo, too, is designed to give people the opportunity to see examples of routine ranch work aside from fence mending, windmill and barn fixing, calf birthing, and cattle-sheep-goat doctoring.

Many gather to party, reflect on Juneteenth

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

A festive atmosphere dominated Juneteenth celebrations Saturday at Washington Park, where dozens of people gathered to eat, drink, be merry and remember their ancestors.

Juneteenth — the commemoration of the emancipation of black slaves in Texas on June 19, 1865 — was also a time of quiet reflection for some people at the park.

"We've shed our chains, long ago. But sometimes it's like we still have the rust from the chains on us," said Johnny Baker, while sitting alone on a picnic bench under a large tree. "We need to keep washing that rust away. Then maybe some day, everyone will call us equal."

Others preferred a louder celebration. Crowds of teen-agers gathered several times at the west end of the park to dance, shout and listen to music.

"I'm here to party but we know why we're here. We're free and their ain't nothing anyone can do about it now. We're free," J.L. Roberts, 20, said.

Cookie Packer, 80, roamed around the park throughout the day and sat down with groups of young people.

"I want to make sure they know what this thing is all about. I tell them the stories my grandpa used to tell me. They have to learn our history from their parents; it should be told through the ages, because they aren't teaching it in the schools," he said.

Juneteenth dates back to 1865 following the Civil War. U.S. Army Gen. Gordon Granger landed in Galveston to take command on June 19, 1865, ending slavery in the state 30 months after the Emancipation Proclamation was signed by President Abraham Lincoln.

Men operate under misguided assumptions

Ott

No one seems to know for sure when the art of "flirting" first made its presence felt in modern-day society, but chances are it involved a rather large man who, while attempting to impress his female companion, boasted of his past accomplishments in an irritating loud voice.

When you stop and think about it, the game is really very silly . . . and for two basic reasons.

Reason No. 1. Men tend to exaggerate their past heroics.

Reason No. 2. Women — who are not stupid — realize that men are exaggerating their past heroics.

Still, it continues. Men tell great big whoppers about how terrific they were in high school and women, who on the inside are giggling uncontrollably at the asinine remarks, pretend to be terribly impressed.

The sad part to all of this, of course, is that men don't realize they are being laughed at by their female partners. Instead, they operate under the incredibly misguided assumption that they are coming across as being — and this is one of man's favorite words — COOL.

So the lies continue. And continue. And continue.

Fortunately, there are a handful of us more liberated males who have outgrown such childish behavior. We have looked at ourselves in the mirror and said, "You are just fine the way you are. It is not necessary to toot your own horn any longer."

Maturity is a wonderful thing.

In addition to making us better than everyone else, it also allows us the opportunity to sit back and laugh at others . . . especially those men who are working overtime in their never-ending battle to impress women.

For the next few minutes let's take a closer look at some of those lies (and what they really mean).

Here are three of the more popular ones:

Lie No. 1: "It was late in the fourth quarter and my high school team was down by 4 points. It was a crucial game because the winner would advance to the state quarterfinals. The crowd was roaring. Out of the corner of my eye I could see my girlfriend — she was the head cheerleader — saying a little prayer. I knew right then and there that I had to do something heroic. The quarterback handed off to me and I dashed around left end, bouncing off one tackler and then another. I almost went to the ground three or four times, but, somehow, I kept my balance and

RANCH: Rodeo celebrates cowboy heritage

(From 1B)

George Glass said. "Everybody gets together to say 'hello' to each other and have a lot of fun."

Outside the arena, camp cooks were winding down in the shade of their chuck wagons. Folk on horseback and in the grandstands and under the big tent were visiting. Cowboy poets were expressing their sentiments about the rustic life on the range. And, generally, folk from the country and city were acting quite neighborly.

"It's time for everybody to get together and enjoy (life)," said Kay Bird, wife of Midland rancher Charlie Bird. People who live and work out on the ranch "are honest and straightforward."

Sherrill Welch, an IBM Corp. engineer who is drawn to things country and Western, said the Ranch Rodeo environment "is great."

"It's a wholesome thing to do," Judy Jackson, Ranch Rodeo board member, said of the weekend rodeo.

While the cowhands were ranch rodeoing and kicking up dust under the azure sky, cowboy poets were romancing with words in meter and rhyme.

"I've been writing poems for 30 years," said Lubbock cowboy poet Perry L. Williams, who never took a formal course in poetry writing. "It's a natural gift. I think the Good Lord puts different gifts on people . . . and the natural gift of meter and rhyme.

"They've either got it, or they ain't got it," he said of the talent. "And going to school doesn't help much," although getting schooled in the art and technique of writing poetry or music may put "a little bit of polish" on the works, he said.

Williams, who is in his 50s, grew up in West Texas and rode bulls and bare-back horses in professional rodeos and was a rodeo clown and vocational-agricultural teacher.

All the while, he penned poetry.

"Through poetry, you can touch people's emotions and bring out tears and laughter in tough old cowboys," Williams said.

Of inspiration in writing poetry, Williams said "You never know where it comes from."

Williams recited his poem, "Grandpa's Hat." The grandfather always wore his old cowboy hat with pride everywhere he went.

. . . You know I can't go anywhere
'Less I've got on my old hat.

And Grandpa refused to trade in his old, weathered hat on a new one because . . .

"The one I got ain't broke in yet."

After his death, the old man was laid to rest in his coffin, but his hat had been discarded. Williams found the hat before the coffin was closed, so he took it to Grandpa just before he was buried.

Now, I may be mistaken,
But I thought I saw a grin
At the corners of my Grandpa's mouth
When I slipped that old hat in
As if to say 'I thank you, son,
For a parting thought like that.'

Midland cowboy poet Wayne Cornett said that he is enamored by "the history of the settlement of the West and our cowboy heritage, especially the era of the big cattle ranches," such as the XIT and the 6666. His grandfather, when he was a young cowboy, once rode on a trail drive with Charles Goodnight, the legendary old-time Panhandle cattleman.

Cornett said he was fascinated by old cowboy sayings, such as "He'll do to ride with," which means that his riding partner is "dependable."

"If he tells you something, he'll do it," Cornett said. "He's honest."

Concluding Ranch Rodeo events today include the 8:30 a.m. chuckwagon breakfast near the Midland County Arena and Exhibit Building east of town, the 10 a.m. cowboy church service led by cowboy-preacher Leonard Cotten and Gary and Judy Jones, and the noon Playday.

The 1993 Ranch Rodeo was dedicated to Leonard C. Proctor, 100-year-old retired Midland rancher who grew up roping calves and riding bucking horses. During his ranching career, he raised Hereford and Black Angus cattle and sheep, and, along with his late brother, Foy Proctor, helped sponsor the World Championship Midland Rodeo earlier in the century.

The Ranch Rodeo is "an excellent opportunity" for city people to observe "the cowboy way of life," said Earnest Kiker, rodeo booster and Midland County agricultural agent. The rodeo, Kiker said, offers wholesome family activities and fellowship.

OTT: Men are in unending battle to impress women

scrambled for the end zone. I scored just as the final buzzer went off. My teammates went nuts, lifting me on their shoulders and carrying me off the field. It was the greatest day of my life."

Truth No. 1: "I got cut from the football team as a junior, but managed to remain on the traveling squad by becoming the waterboy. The closest I ever came to being the center of attention is when I slipped and fell while carrying the water bucket onto the field. The crowd gave me a standing ovation."

Lie No. 2: "I was one of those lucky guys who was always popular in high school. I had plenty of girlfriends and traveled with the 'in' crowd. I was voted 'Best All Around' my senior year and was class president. Of course, I didn't get to spend as much time in student government as I would have liked because I was so involved in sports, seeing as how I was captain of the football team and All-District in basketball."

Truth No. 2: "My high school experience was the most dreadful time of my life. I had no friends and staged a four-year battle with terminal acne. It won, as you can probably tell from the scars on my face. Every night I would go to bed and cry. I hated everything about my life. The only award I ever won was, 'Most Likely to be Forgotten.'"

Lie No. 3: "I made my first million about eight years ago. Of course, it was about that time that the bottom fell out of the market. So I lost it all. I blame it on Congress, but that's beside the point. I knew I had to do something to get back on my feet. I don't believe in welfare so I started from scratch. I built me a new business and today I'm worth $3.2 million. And, I did it on my own."

Truth No. 3: "It is true that I once had $1 million, but that was because my daddy was rich. I inherited it. But through some shrewd business dealings on my part I managed to squander the full amount in a matter of months. Today, I have $14.75 in my back pocket. That's my total worth."

Sheriff breaks old-fashioned Texas mold

By Brian Pearson
Associated Press Writer

ROCKPORT — Conventional wisdom holds that South Texas sheriffs wear worn cowboy boots and Stetsons and hanker for a twangy country-western tune.

So, call David Petrusaitis unconventional. Petrusaitis would rather slip into a suit and tie and tune his office radio to a rock 'n' roll station. Top that with the fact that he hails from Chicago, and Petrusaitis would seem cut out to be a big-city businessman rather than a rural lawman.

So, how did this sharply dressed Midwesterner become the first Republican sheriff elected in heavily Democratic Aransas County? Even Petrusaitis is at a loss for answers.

"I really didn't expect to win this election," Petrusaitis said. "A lot of people in this town took a chance on me. There was a move to keep me from getting this job, simply because I'm not a hometown boy."

Louise Wilken, Aransas County Democratic Party chairwoman, said Petrusaitis not only bucked the Democratic dynasty in the November election but also beat a candidate backed by popular outgoing Sheriff Bob Hewes.

"The young man who won is OK as far as I'm concerned," Wilken said. "But there was some politics (in this election). There were some untruths circulating around that hurt our candidate.

"I think, too, that it was kind of a time for change."

Hewes, whom Aransas County Judge Agnes Harden called the most popular elected official in county history, decided to retire from law enforcement after serving 24 years as sheriff. Harden said the outcome of the sheriff's race had more to do with the candidates than political parties.

"This county, (in elections) on a local level, votes for people and not parties," she said.

During the campaign, Petrusaitis criticized the sheriff's department and Hewes, saying deputies did not have enough freedom to do their jobs and were lax in traffic enforcement. "These guys were not allowed to make their own decisions," Petrusaitis said.

After defeating two Republican opponents in the primary, Petrusaitis in November faced Rick McLester, who had served under Hewes for more than 16 years, seven of those as chief deputy. Petrusaitis won handily with 55 percent of the vote, or 3,704 of the 6,690 ballots cast.

Petrusaitis said he took his share of political lumps along the way. According to one rumor during the campaign, he came to Rockport after being fired from the Corpus Christi Police Department, for which he had never worked, he said.

Another false rumor that spread through town on New Year's Day held that he was driving drunk the night before and wrecked his car, he said. "I fought a tremendous battle to get this job," he said. "I took a lot of heat."

McLester, who now performs environmental work for the county, would not comment on the election. Hewes, 64, said he has no ill feelings over Petrusaitis' attacks on his record. "I don't agree with a lot of (Petrusaitis') statements, but he's got a right to make them," Hewes said. "It got him elected, and he's got a lot of good ideas and a lot of new ideas."

The former sheriff now spends six hours a week at Rockport's H.E.B. grocery store, where he works as a greeter and hands out product advertisements. Although Petrusaitis is the county's first Republican sheriff, he is far from being the first person from that party to be elected to countywide office.

Petrusaitis is a U.S. Navy veteran who grew up in Chicago, working as a mechanic before getting into police work. He worked full time as a dispatcher for the police department in Reed, Wis., before moving to the Coastal Bend in 1981 to be with his parents, who had moved to Rockport a year earlier.

er before the meeting.

"We need to set an example for our children," she said.

Smith insisted he recites Bible verses with his children before sending them to school.

Another woman pressed Smith about his stance on abortion.

"I favor parental consent, and at the minimum parental advice," he said. "In some instances I feel a woman should have a right to choose."

"What instances?" interrupted the woman. But Smith would only say he favored a minimum 24-hour waiting period.

Klan rally turns violent following Juneteenth parade

CORSICANA (AP) — Black Panthers fought today with white residents and several people were arrested as a Ku Klux Klan rally turned violent after a Juneteenth parade in this East Texas city.

Shouting between the Panthers from the Dallas area and Corsicana residents, listening to a speech by KKK leader Michael Lowe, turned into pushing and shoving, then fistfights.

Police helicopters hovered over the Navarro County Courthouse as sheriff's deputies and Texas Department of Public Safety officers in riot gear attempted to break up the fights.

But no one appeared to be seriously injured in the melee. No details were immediately available on the arrests.

The sheriff's department brought in 10 mounted officers to help restore order.

As an estimated 1,000 people gathered near the courthouse steps where Lowe was speaking, pushing and shoving began.

Black Panthers roamed around the perimeter of the courthouse, chanting and attempting to drown out Lowe and other Klan speakers.

Klan members, who had brought loudspeakers, played "Dixie" and "Amazing Grace" in return.

"Why is it when white people stand up . . . we're labeled as racists?" said James Stroud, the KKK's exalted grand cyclops from Spring, Texas. "All we are asking is that good white Christians stick together" to pass on white traits.

He said blacks "should get down on their knees and thank the good Lord for this white Christian charity."

Earlier in the day, about 150 black residents joined for a Juneteenth parade and other festivities being held to commemorate the emancipation of blacks in Texas.

A sign in front of the Cotton Patch Cafe read, "Pray for peace in our community."

The spotlight has been on this city of 23,000 since Craig Thomas died two weeks ago in police custody.

Those who gathered Saturday emphasized that the day's events were not designed to protest Thomas' death or the KKK rally.

"It's a symbol of togetherness ... this is day they declared black people free from slavery," said Varriel Cooksey, a resident who said he participates in Juneteenth festivities every year. "This parade doesn't have anything to do with Craig Thomas' death. What he was doing and what this parade is about are two different things."

Thomas, from Wortham, died June 5 after a car in which he was riding was stopped by Corsicana police for expired registration. Police said he ran from the car, fell in a ditch and struggled with officers when he was caught.

An autopsy showed that Thomas died from a combination of drugs, alcohol and injuries suffered during his arrest. The death was ruled accidental.

Reports released Monday by Justice of the Peace Connie Mayfield and Dallas County Medical Examiner Charles Odom said the method police used to restrain Thomas contributed to his death. But the two said none of the factors alone would likely have caused death.

Many blacks in this town 50 miles southeast of Dallas said they believe Thomas, 29, died from a severe beating by police. The death prompted marches and scattered violence.

Thomas was black. The four officers who arrested him are white. The officers have been placed on administrative leave pending results of an internal investigation.

More than 50 cars decorated with signs and streamers, led by Miss Juneteenth 1993, rolled through downtown Saturday morning as dozens of black and white citizens waved from the sidewalks.

Southern Baptists preach return to missionary work

HOUSTON (AP) — The Southern Baptist Convention often has been the site of fierce power battles between conservatives and moderates, but delegates to this year's gathering focused much of their wrath on the outside world.

More than 17,000 delegates attended the conservative-led convention this week in Houston. They overwhelmingly passed resolutions against abortion and homosexuality, particularly gays in the military.

They also singled out a fellow Southern Baptist, President Clinton, for condemnation because he has supported both abortion and gay rights.

Both issues have been discussed — and denounced — at past conventions.

"It was somewhat ridiculous, spending so much time on that," said Milton Cunningham, director of denomination ministries at Waco's Baylor University, a traditionally Southern Baptist school.

Such resolutions, he said, "have no way in the world of being measured or monitored."

The delegates, or messengers, also formally denounced Clinton for stands he has taken on abortion and gay rights. But some attending the event didn't see much point in publicly criticizing him.

"I doubt Mr. Clinton is going to lose any sleep over our resolution," said Grayson Glass, director of missions for the Southern Baptist Association for Galveston County.

Clinton and Vice President Al Gore are members of the Southern Baptists' moderate wing. Neither was invited to speak at the three-day convention that ended Thursday.

"I think a lot of people had the misconception that we could discipline certain individuals, including Mr. Clinton. The convention can't do that; that's left at the church level," Glass said.

One pastor tried to have the messengers of Clinton's church, Immanuel Baptist Church in Little Rock, Ark., unseated from the convention, but a committee overwhelmingly rejected the motion.

But there many other quarrels at the convention. The president's election has been the source of power battles at past conventions, but the outcome was a foregone conclusion this time.

The Rev. Ed Young of Houston was re-elected president of the Southern Baptist Convention.

During the convention, Young often preached a return to the church's roots of evangelism and missions to strengthen the church.

Glass said the convention hasn't really been able to focus on missions as much in recent years "because we've been too divided on other issues."

"Our attention and energies have been spent on trying to see who gets elected president and that sort of stuff rather than the focal theme of trying to reach around the world and spread the gospel of Christ," Glass said.

"I think we are coming to a place where we are re-emphasizing it (missions)," he said.

But Cunningham said he didn't think the convention stressed missions and evangelism enough.

"I felt this year they (messengers) left without a goal, without a sense of purpose, and with a reduced concern about missions," he said.

"I felt the convention really lacked. I think the words were there, but they weren't enough to motivate people."

Williams, who is in his 50s, grew up in West Texas and rode bulls and bare-back horses in professional rodeos and was a rodeo clown and vocational-agricultural teacher.

All the while, he penned poetry.

"Through poetry, you can touch people's emotions and bring out tears and laughter in tough old cowboys," Williams said.

Of inspiration in writing poetry, Williams said "You never know where it comes from."

Williams recited his poem, "Grandpa's Hat." The grandfather always wore his old cowboy hat with pride everywhere he went.

. . . You know I can't go anywhere
'Less I've got on my old hat.

And Grandpa refused to trade in his old, weathered hat on a new one because . . .

"The one I got ain't broke in yet."

After his death, the old man was laid to rest in his coffin, but his hat had been discarded. Williams found the hat before the coffin was closed, so he took it to Grandpa just before he was buried.

Now, I may be mistaken,
But I thought I saw a grin
At the corners of my Grandpa's mouth
When I slipped that old hat in
As if to say 'I thank you, son,
For a parting thought like that.'

Midland cowboy poet Wayne Cornett said that he is enamored by "the history of the settlement of the West and our cowboy heritage, especially the era of the big cattle ranches," such as the XIT and the 6666. His grandfather, when he was a young cowboy, once rode on a trail drive with Charles Goodnight, the legendary old-time Panhandle cattleman.

Cornett said he was fascinated by old cowboy sayings, such as "He'll do to ride with," which means that his riding partner is "dependable."

"If he tells you something, he'll do it," Cornett said. "He's honest."

Concluding Ranch Rodeo events today include the 8:30 a.m. chuckwagon breakfast near the Midland County Arena and Exhibit Building east of town, the 10 a.m. cowboy church service led by cowboy-preacher Leonard Cotten and Gary and Judy Jones, and the noon Playday.

The 1993 Ranch Rodeo was dedicated to Leonard C. Proctor, 100-year-old retired Midland rancher who grew up roping calves and riding bucking horses. During his ranching career, he raised Hereford and Black Angus cattle and sheep, and, along with his late brother, Foy Proctor, helped sponsor the World Championship Midland Rodeo earlier in the century.

The Ranch Rodeo is "an excellent opportunity" for city people to observe "the cowboy way of life," said Earnest Kiker, rodeo booster and Midland County agricultural agent. The rodeo, Kiker said, offers wholesome family activities and fellowship.

scrambled for the end zone. I scored just as the final buzzer went off. My teammates went nuts, lifting me on their shoulders and carrying me off the field. It was the greatest day of my life."

Truth No. 1: "I got cut from the football team as a junior, but managed to remain on the traveling squad by becoming the waterboy. The closest I ever came to being the center of attention is when I slipped and fell while carrying the water bucket onto the field. The crowd gave me a standing ovation."

Lie No. 2: "I was one of those lucky guys who was always popular in high school. I had plenty of girlfriends and traveled with the 'in' crowd. I was voted 'Best All Around' my senior year and was class president. Of course, I didn't get to spend as much time in student government as I would have liked because I was so involved in sports, seeing as how I was captain of the football team and All-District in basketball."

Truth No. 2: "My high school experience was the most dreadful time of my life. I had no friends and staged a four-year battle with terminal acne. It won, as you can probably tell from the scars on my face. Every night I would go to bed and cry. I hated everything about my life. The only award I ever won was, 'Most Likely to be Forgotten.'"

Lie No. 3: "I made my first million about eight years ago. Of course, it was about that time that the bottom fell out of the market. So I lost it all. I blame it on Congress, but that's beside the point. I knew I had to do something to get back on my feet. I don't believe in welfare so I started from scratch. I built me a new business and today I'm worth $3.2 million. And, I did it on my own."

Truth No. 3: "It is true that I once had $1 million, but that was because my daddy was rich. I inherited it. But through some shrewd business dealings on my part I managed to squander the full amount in a matter of months. Today, I have $14.75 in my back pocket. That's my total worth."

Sheriff breaks old-fashioned Texas mold

By Brian Pearson
Associated Press Writer

ROCKPORT — Conventional wisdom holds that South Texas sheriffs wear worn cowboy boots and Stetsons and hanker for a twangy country-western tune.

So, call David Petrusaitis unconventional. Petrusaitis would rather slip into a suit and tie and tune his office radio to a rock 'n' roll station. Top that with the fact that he hails from Chicago, and Petrusaitis would seem cut out to be a big-city businessman rather than a rural lawman.

So, how did this sharply dressed Midwesterner become the first Republican sheriff elected in heavily Democratic Aransas County? Even Petrusaitis is at a loss for answers.

"I really didn't expect to win this election," Petrusaitis said. "A lot of people in this town took a chance on me. There was a move to keep me from getting this job, simply because I'm not a hometown boy."

Louise Wilken, Aransas County Democratic Party chairwoman, said Petrusaitis not only bucked the Democratic dynasty in the November election but also beat a candidate backed by popular outgoing Sheriff Bob Hewes.

"The young man who won is OK as far as I'm concerned," Wilken said. "But there was some politics (in this election). There were some untruths circulating around that hurt our candidate.

"I think, too, that it was kind of a time for change."

Hewes, whom Aransas County Judge Agnes Harden called the most popular elected official in county history, decided to retire from law enforcement after serving 24 years as sheriff. Harden said the outcome of the sheriff's race had more to do with the candidates than political parties.

"This county, (in elections) on a local level, votes for people and not parties," she said.

During the campaign, Petrusaitis criticized the sheriff's department and Hewes, saying deputies did not have enough freedom to do their jobs and were lax in traffic enforcement. "These guys were not allowed to make their own decisions," Petrusaitis said.

After defeating two Republican opponents in the primary, Petrusaitis in November faced Rick McLester, who had served under Hewes for more than 16 years, seven of those as chief deputy. Petrusaitis won handily with 55 percent of the vote, or 3,704 of the 6,690 ballots cast.

Petrusaitis said he took his share of political lumps along the way. According to one rumor during the campaign, he came to Rockport after being fired from the Corpus Christi Police Department, for which he had never worked, he said.

Another false rumor that spread through town on New Year's Day held that he was driving drunk the night before and wrecked his car, he said. "I fought a tremendous battle to get this job," he said. "I took a lot of heat."

McLester, who now performs environmental work for the county, would not comment on the election. Hewes, 64, said he has no ill feelings over Petrusaitis' attacks on his record. "I don't agree with a lot of (Petrusaitis') statements, but he's got a right to make them," Hewes said. "It got him elected, and he's got a lot of good ideas and a lot of new ideas."

The former sheriff now spends six hours a week at Rockport's H.E.B. grocery store, where he works as a greeter and hands out product advertisements. Although Petrusaitis is the county's first Republican sheriff, he is far from being the first person from that party to be elected to countywide office.

Petrusaitis is a U.S. Navy veteran who grew up in Chicago, working as a mechanic before getting into police work. He worked full time as a dispatcher for the police department in Reed, Wis., before moving to the Coastal Bend in 1981 to be with his parents, who had moved to Rockport a year earlier.

er before the meeting.

"We need to set an example for our children," she said.

Smith insisted he recites Bible verses with his children before sending them to school.

Another woman pressed Smith about his stance on abortion.

"I favor parental consent, and at the minimum parental advice," he said. "In some instances I feel a woman should have a right to choose."

"What instances?" interrupted the woman. But Smith would only say he favored a minimum 24-hour waiting period.

Klan rally turns violent following Juneteenth parade

CORSICANA (AP) — Black Panthers fought today with white residents and several people were arrested as a Ku Klux Klan rally turned violent after a Juneteenth parade in this East Texas city.

Shouting between the Panthers from the Dallas area and Corsicana residents, listening to a speech by KKK leader Michael Lowe, turned into pushing and shoving, then fistfights.

Police helicopters hovered over the Navarro County Courthouse as sheriff's deputies and Texas Department of Public Safety officers in riot gear attempted to break up the fights.

But no one appeared to be seriously injured in the melee. No details were immediately available on the arrests.

The sheriff's department brought in 10 mounted officers to help restore order.

As an estimated 1,000 people gathered near the courthouse steps where Lowe was speaking, pushing and shoving began.

Black Panthers roamed around the perimeter of the courthouse, chanting and attempting to drown out Lowe and other Klan speakers.

Klan members, who had brought loudspeakers, played "Dixie" and "Amazing Grace" in return.

"Why is it when white people stand up . . . we're labeled as racists?" said James Stroud, the KKK's exalted grand cyclops from Spring, Texas. "All we are asking is that good white Christians stick together" to pass on white traits.

He said blacks "should get down on their knees and thank the good Lord for this white Christian charity."

Earlier in the day, about 150 black residents joined for a Juneteenth parade and other festivities being held to commemorate the emancipation of blacks in Texas.

A sign in front of the Cotton Patch Cafe read, "Pray for peace in our community."

The spotlight has been on this city of 23,000 since Craig Thomas died two weeks ago in police custody.

Those who gathered Saturday emphasized that the day's events were not designed to protest Thomas' death or the KKK rally.

"It's a symbol of togetherness ... this is day they declared black people free from slavery," said Varriel Cooksey, a resident who said he participates in Juneteenth festivities every year. "This parade doesn't have anything to do with Craig Thomas' death. What he was doing and what this parade is about are two different things."

Thomas, from Wortham, died June 5 after a car in which he was riding was stopped by Corsicana police for expired registration. Police said he ran from the car, fell in a ditch and struggled with officers when he was caught.

An autopsy showed that Thomas died from a combination of drugs, alcohol and injuries suffered during his arrest. The death was ruled accidental.

Reports released Monday by Justice of the Peace Connie Mayfield and Dallas County Medical Examiner Charles Odom said the method police used to restrain Thomas contributed to his death. But the two said none of the factors alone would likely have caused death.

Many blacks in this town 50 miles southeast of Dallas said they believe Thomas, 29, died from a severe beating by police. The death prompted marches and scattered violence.

Thomas was black. The four officers who arrested him are white. The officers have been placed on administrative leave pending results of an internal investigation.

More than 50 cars decorated with signs and streamers, led by Miss Juneteenth 1993, rolled through downtown Saturday morning as dozens of black and white citizens waved from the sidewalks.

Southern Baptists preach return to missionary work

HOUSTON (AP) — The Southern Baptist Convention often has been the site of fierce power battles between conservatives and moderates, but delegates to this year's gathering focused much of their wrath on the outside world.

More than 17,000 delegates attended the conservative-led convention this week in Houston. They overwhelmingly passed resolutions against abortion and homosexuality, particularly gays in the military.

They also singled out a fellow Southern Baptist, President Clinton, for condemnation because he has supported both abortion and gay rights.

Both issues have been discussed — and denounced — at past conventions.

"It was somewhat ridiculous, spending so much time on that," said Milton Cunningham, director of denomination ministries at Waco's Baylor University, a traditionally Southern Baptist school.

Such resolutions, he said, "have no way in the world of being measured or monitored."

The delegates, or messengers, also formally denounced Clinton for stands he has taken on abortion and gay rights. But some attending the event didn't see much point in publicly criticizing him.

"I doubt Mr. Clinton is going to lose any sleep over our resolution," said Grayson Glass, director of missions for the Southern Baptist Association for Galveston County.

Clinton and Vice President Al Gore are members of the Southern Baptists' moderate wing. Neither was invited to speak at the three-day convention that ended Thursday.

"I think a lot of people had the misconception that we could discipline certain individuals, including Mr. Clinton. The convention can't do that; that's left at the church level," Glass said.

One pastor tried to have the messengers of Clinton's church, Immanuel Baptist Church in Little Rock, Ark., unseated from the convention, but a committee overwhelmingly rejected the motion.

But there many other quarrels at the convention. The president's election has been the source of power battles at past conventions, but the outcome was a foregone conclusion this time.

The Rev. Ed Young of Houston was re-elected president of the Southern Baptist Convention.

During the convention, Young often preached a return to the church's roots of evangelism and missions to strengthen the church.

Glass said the convention hasn't really been able to focus on missions as much in recent years "because we've been too divided on other issues."

"Our attention and energies have been spent on trying to see who gets elected president and that sort of stuff rather than the focal theme of trying to reach around the world and spread the gospel of Christ," Glass said.

"I think we are coming to a place where we are re-emphasizing it (missions)," he said.

But Cunningham said he didn't think the convention stressed missions and evangelism enough.

"I felt this year they (messengers) left without a goal, without a sense of purpose, and with a reduced concern about missions," he said.

"I felt the convention really lacked. I think the words were there, but they weren't enough to motivate people."

It wasn't a championship, but it was another Top Three finish for the Midland College Chaparrals in the annual Division I men's golf tournament. The Chaps came up just a bit short in their bid to repeat as National Junior College Athletic Association champions at the tournament held June 8-11 in Scottsdale, Ariz. Host Scottsdale won the title with Wallace State of Hanceville, Ala., the runner-up.

MC won the tournament in 1992, finished second in 1991 and third in 1990 ... not a bad four-year record!

Congratulations go to MC coach-athletic director Delnor Poss, sophomores Stephen Dundas and Guy Redford, freshmen Chad Campbell, Shawn Savage and Darren Summers. Freshman Luke Mongrain was the alternate at the tournament.

It was a banner year as the Chaps won 14 tournaments, the conference title and the Region V crown.

Dundas will participate in the 1993 British Open later this summer. Dundas won the 1992 British Amateur last summer, which gained him automatic berths in the Masters and the British Amateur.

As part of the college's preparation for its 25th anniversary celebration, a number of audio and video interviews have been done. Of special interest are video interviews of MC's founding president Al G. Langford, and the college's second president, Jess H. Parrish. Both interviews were conducted by current president David E. Daniel.

Copies of those interviews now are available for viewing in the Learning Resource Center during regular LRC hours. Copies may not be removed, but duplicate copies can be made on request for a reasonable fee. The videos may be viewed at the LRC, but plan on spending some time. The Langford tape is about 90 minutes and the Parrish tape is about 60 minutes.

Retired history instructor Jack Scannell has been doing audio interviews with a number of persons who had something to do with the early years of MC. Scannell is charged with writing the history of the college's first 25 years.

The college's new sand-pit volleyball court is getting lots of use. We've seen quite a few players utilizing the facility almost every afternoon. Architecture instructor John Edgar and intramural director Tommy Ramos organized leagues which are playing on Tuesday and Wednesday nights. But the facility is open for public use at almost all other times.

It's located just east of the Physical Education building. The rules are simple: college use and league play come first, no parking except on the parking lots, no glass containers, no pets, clean-up after you finish.

If you want a model on operating efficiency, you should see the planning which goes on to make Kids' College function properly. Take some 800-plus kids from first through sixth grades, help them find classrooms, move them from one place to another, keep them fed and watered, and then make sure they get picked up by 800 vehicles ... all of which want to be first.

Coordinator Donna Hewett, the Continuing Education staff, and all the staff of instructors do an outstanding job to make the event function well. Then they turn around and do it all again in July for the second session.

In fact, Kids' College is so well known that one youngster came all the way from Florida to take two classes in Session I. Lauren Walker, six-year-old daughter of George and Gloria Walker of Avon Park, Florida, is taking two classes. In case you haven't recognized the names, George is a former assistant basketball coach at MC while Gloria was the director of accounting for MC. They came last week especially so Lauren could attend Kids' College and visit with friends. George now is head basketball coach at South Florida Community College.

Midland College's basketball camp for both boys and girls is slated for two separate weeks. One camp is scheduled June 28-July 2 and another July 26-30. Both sessions are being held at Chaparral Center. Cost is $125, with $25 being due at least one week before the camp begins. Sessions will be held from 9 a.m.-4 p.m. except for the last day, which will be 9 a.m.-noon. A medical examination is required of all campers.

For more information, call MC head basketball coach Steve Green at 685-4581 or drop by the P.E. Building for a registration form.

Summer Session II doesn't begin until registration July 14. Time permits for that registration are being issued starting on Wednesday, July 1. Classes start July 15 and end Aug. 19.

However, you can pick up a bulletin which lists classes, entrance requirements, fees, etc., at the Student Services Office in the Student Center. Getting the bulletin now allows you to plan what to take, as well as answering lots of questions. The Student Services Office is open from 7 a.m.-7:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

Fall course bulletins were scheduled to be delivered from the printer last week, so you can start planning next fall's courses and schedules early. The bulletins are available from the Student Services Office. They also are placed in racks at the local YMCA offices.

Cheerleader sponsor-coach Tommy Ramos still is searching for male athletes to try-out for the 1993-94 cheerleader squad. In addition to the fun, the cheerleaders receive scholarship grants for their efforts. If you are interested, call 685-4701. And the annual MC Cheerleader Camp is July 26-29 for youngsters up through grade 12. Cost is $40 if the enrollment is by July 15, $50 after that date. Contact Ramos at the number above for more information.

There's only one course beginning this week through the Continuing Education Department and it's certainly not for everyone. In fact, it's a very specialized course in "Hazardous Waste Operations," which is meeting Monday through Friday from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. The course fee is $550, which should serve to eliminate all but the very serious students.

Oh yes, you can take a Defensive Driving Course every week at MC, either for two evenings or all day Saturday. Fee for that class is just $20, although there's a $2 discount coupon in the summer bulletin. Besides, a DDC certificate could get a ticket dropped or your vehicle insurance rates dropped.

Register at the Continuing Education Office, Administration Building, or call 685-4518 for more information or to register through use of your Visa, MasterCard or Discover card.

These days, there are many domestic fathers

By Douglas Martin
N.Y. Times News Service

Today, for Father's Day, Johari Abdul-Malik Seale plans to pick up bagels for his wife, Mary, and their two children on his way home to Northwest Washington from his all-night job at Washington Hospital Center.

As he does every morning, he will do a load of laundry. He and his wife will go running, taking turns pushing one child in their single jogging stroller and carrying the other in a backpack. Later, they'll have cake and ice cream. Then he'll end the day reading to his son and rocking his daughter in a cradle.

Seale, a Howard University geneticist, prides himself on his involvement at home. He even leads a fathers' discussion group at a community center every two weeks. But trying to become an equal partner with his wife, sharing not just chores but decision-making, has not always been easy.

"Basically, anything I ask him to do, he's willing to do it," said Mrs. Seale, who works out of the home as a breast feeding counselor, travel agent and saleswoman. But she added, "A lot of times the onus is on the mother to articulate it."

Seale has learned at least one thing about language.

"Don't use the word baby-sitting for your own kids," he warned. "You use that word, you get in trouble."

That men are more involved at home is evident in a national study being prepared by the Families and Work Institute, a non-profit policy research center.

But Ellen Galinsky, co-president of the institute, said many men are doing so with aggravation, and women aren't always delighted with the results of their efforts.

A telling indication of the strains of the new roles was a report that some men had told friends at work they were going to a bar when in fact they were going home to take care of their children.

The institute's study has found that in households where only the husband works, the wife does 94 percent of the cooking and 93 percent of the child care. Where both work, her share dips to 80 percent of the cooking and 70 percent of the child care.

And mothers are in the labor force in record proportion; in 1991, 58 percent of mothers with children under age 6 worked outside the home.

Interviews last week with three dozen parents and experts in family and child development show an array of conflicting emotions as some fathers begin to assume roles as partners, rather than helpers, in the home.

Some men raised in families where the father was the sole breadwinner and the mother took care of the house and children feel uncomfortable with new domestic duties and resentful that the results aren't always appreciated.

Some women feel reluctant to yield their traditional domain and bite their tongues when a father's idea of child care involves popcorn, soda and a Bugs Bunny videotape.

James Levine, director of the Fatherhood Project, a separate part of the institute, calls the changing nature of parental decision-making "the family issue of the '90s."

"Men are caught between the role of provider and nurturer and sometimes feel they can't do anything right," he said. "And a lot feel it would be wimpish to talk about it."

To be sure, concerns about issues like fathers who abandon their families or are never present at all are more pressing.

Divorced fathers who remain involved with their children are sometimes more practiced at decision-making and solo child care than are fathers in two-parent households. Even those without custody often care for children by themselves during visitation. But for all fathers, the changing demands and expectations can be bewildering.

An outpouring of new books and studies is evidence of a search to define the father's role: from Harvard University Press, "How Fathers Care for the Next Generation" by John Snarey, a study of four decades in the lives of hundreds of fathers and sons; from Basic Books, "Fatherhood in America," a historical study by Robert L. Griswold, and "No Man's Land: Men's Changing Commitments to Family and Work" by Kathleen Gerson; and from Delacorte Press, "The Measure of a Man: Becoming the Father You Wish Your Father Had Been" by Jerrold Lee Shapiro.

Dr. Peter Steinglass, executive director of the Ackerman Institute for Family Therapy in Manhattan, said an inability to share decision-making is evident when men will gladly leave work early to pick up a child if asked, for example, but will rarely initiate discussions with their wives at breakfast about the day's child-care needs.

"Women find men are interested in helping, but they still seem to sort of wait for instructions," he said.

Partnership itself is a delicate alliance, difficult to maintain even in enterprises demanding much less subtlety, insight and perseverance than raising a child.

Yoel Sberlo of San Francisco says he and his wife, Dee Dee, have learned to share decision-making on matters involving the plumbing business they own and operate as well as on matters regarding their home and their four children. "The difference is not physical work," he said. "The difference is thinking ahead. It took me years to get that."

Richard Louv, a syndicated columnist and author of "Father Love" and "Childhood's Future," urges parents to discuss roles before having children and to keep talking about shifting needs and responsibilities.

"It has to get beyond keeping score," he said.

(Two points for wiping off the high chair, five for changing a messy diaper. Five points for baking cupcakes for the class picnic; 10 for going to the picnic.)

Norman Chung, a computer systems designer in Manhattan, compensates for the late hours of his wife, Lisa Yee, in the city's law department. He picks up their daughter, Beryl, from kindergarten, reads with her, cooks dinner and, by the time Ms. Yee gets home around 8, has Beryl bathed and ready for bed.

Still, in some ways, the greater responsibility remains hers.

"My standards of cleanliness are not like her antiseptic standards," Chung said ruefully.

In suburban Maryland, Donna Wilson, general counsel for D.C. General Hospital, remembers clashes over whether she or her husband, Alan Rafael Wilson, who owns a computer consulting company, should pick up their son, Joey.

In Berkeley, Calif., partly because his wife must commute 30 miles each way to her job, David Walton, a computer consultant who can often work at home, transports their daughter, Alice, 5, to and from day-care and does the cooking, shopping and bill-paying. His wife, Tish Brewster, does the laundry.

Though sometimes they switch, Walton said he still did not trust himself to buy clothes for Alice or decide what to pack for family vacations.

"I buy her the occasional frilly dress," he said, "but I'm not the one who makes sure she has the right clothes at the right time."

Ms. Brewster, who gave birth to their second child, Peter, this month, said the key to their partnership was being able to relinquish control. "I realized that if David was going to make the lunches, I couldn't tell him what to put in them," she said. "He eventually figured it out. Alice isn't going to grow up nutritionally scarred because of it."

Carol Cronin, who consults and writes about health care in Annapolis, Md., said she was glad that her husband, David, an energy auditor for the Maryland state government, shares responsibility conscientiously.

In the first three years of their son Alec's life, when they each worked a four-day week, they had weekends together and each was home alone with the baby one weekday.

Lately, with their jobs more demanding, they are working full time, and their Saturdays are almost indescribably chaotic. But each week, they sit down with pencil and paper to cover all bases and try to balance inescapable tasks with always shifting schedules.

"What's missing is time alone together," Ms. Cronin said. "That's one casualty of all this sharing."

Snarey, the author of the study of four generations of men, said he found that fathers who supported their children athletically, emotionally and academically helped them succeed in schools and careers and were themselves more apt to have career success and happy marriages.

Dad has dozen ties, but does he have Bugs Bunny?

AUSTIN (AP) — The typical, traditional, sometimes tacky gift was selling fast before Father's Day.

Dad already may have a dozen or more, but does he own a Mickey Mouse, Three Stooges or Bugs Bunny (this year's best sellers) tie?

You might see men wearing Lone Ranger and "Where's Waldo?" ties on the days after Father's Day.

"They're fun with denim shirts and stuff. They look real cute," said Rachel Cromey, manager of The Tie Shop.

"Tons of people are buying ties. It's second only to Christmas," Cromey said. On Saturday, she said, her store probably would sell $7,000 worth of ties which range in price from $22 to $95.

Other big sellers are James Dean and "I Love Lucy."

"It's like Christmas; it's so good," said Melinda Pharr.

Pharr said her store hosts an ugly tie contest in honor of Father's Day. Winners get gift certificates.

"One guy brought in one his mother made him in the '60s," Pharr said. "It's like a patchwork Day-Glo tie."

Survey: Most fathers know baby by touch

By Malcolm Ritter
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Here's surprising news for Father's Day: A new study finds that most fathers can recognize their newborn babies just by stroking the backs of the infants' hands.

About 61 percent of blindfolded dads chose correctly from a group of three babies, much better than the 33 percent one would expect from pure guessing.

Similar results for mothers were reported last year. But the mothers were also shown to recognize their infants by stroking the cheek, whereas fathers in the new study could not, researchers said.

The difference may arise because fathers tend to touch their infants' faces far less than mothers do but frequently touch hands during play, said psychologist Marsha Kaitz.

Kaitz, of Hebrew University in Jerusalem, did the work with colleagues there and at the Shaare Zedek Medical Center in Jerusalem. The study has been accepted for publication in the international journal Infant Behavior and Development, she said in a telephone interview.

Tiffany Field, director of the Touch Research Institute at the University of Miami, said it made sense that fathers shared recognition ability with mothers. But the fact that they showed it with an average of only 6.8 hours of prior direct exposure to the child is "pretty amazing," she said.

The study included 23 middle-class Israeli fathers. The recognition ability appeared in men from a variety of ethnic backgrounds, and Kaitz said she believed the same results would occur with fathers from the United States.

The average age of participants was 30, and half were first-time dads. The babies were, on average, 69 hours old at the time of the test.

Participants were drawn from fathers visiting in a maternity ward. Those who agreed to take part were not allowed to see their infants again until after the test, which was generally performed within 24 minutes.

One by one, they were blindfolded with their noses covered. They were led to each of three bassinets, which held sleeping infants lying face down with a hand flat on the mattress. Two decoy babies had been matched to each father's own infant in age, sex and approximate size.

Each father's index finger was placed on the back of the hand, which he was allowed to stroke. He was not allowed to feel the outline of the hand or the fingers.

The fathers generally said they relied on texture or gut feeling to identify their infants.

Tropical storm drenches Gulf Coast

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND (AP) — Arlene, the Atlantic hurricane season's first tropical storm, soaked the Texas Gulf Coast with rain Saturday but barely mustered enough winds to justify its name.

Forecasters warned of a chance for flooding as Arlene resumed a 3 mph to 5 mph forward speed toward the South Texas shore.

Radar and satellite images at 4 p.m. (CDT) showed the storm center at 26.1 north latitude and 96.4 west longitude, or about 65 miles east of Brownsville.

"It doesn't look real potent, really," said Richard Hagan, meteorologist in charge of the National Weather Service's Brownsville office.

A tropical storm warning was posted for the Texas Coast from Brownsville northeastward to Matagorda, along with a coastal flood watch from Matagorda to Port Arthur at the Louisiana border.

Arlene sent bands of showers and thunderstorms onshore along the South Texas Coast and inland along the Coastal Plain.

The disturbance had been a tropical depression that soaked Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula with heavy rain for two days. But the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla., said early Saturday that a new center had formed in the depression's northern section.

The new center barely achieved sustained winds of 40 mph — the threshold for giving it the title of tropical storm.

Forecasters predicted that Arlene would land around midnight Saturday near Port Mansfield, between Brownsville and Baffin Bay, which is about 25 miles south of Corpus Christi.

Tropical storm force winds extended up to 140 miles north and east and 55 miles west of the center, but forecasters didn't expect winds to strengthen before hitting the coast.

Authorities said the biggest worry was flooding, partly because the low-lying Rio Grande Valley and the Coastal Bend of Corpus Christi have been rain-soaked for the past few weeks.

"There's hardly a spot that doesn't have standing water on it in the Valley, or at least the ground is saturated," Hagan said. "It wouldn't take a whole lot of rain to begin to cause some flooding problems."

Some areas could receive between 5 to 10 inches of rain associated with the tropical storm, forecasters said. As of Saturday afternoon, Brownsville had already received 2 inches in 24 hours.

South Texas grain and cotton farmers, only a few weeks away from commercial harvesting, worried that standing water would hurt their best potential crops in years.

The storm pushed high tides Saturday morning up to the sea wall on sections of South Padre Island. Water splashed up to the road north on the island in sections where earlier storms have created natural washouts.

Island authorities said no evacuation was necessary because the storm showed little chance of deepening much so close to shore.

"I don't think it's going to create any problems. Just rain, rain, rain, rain, rain ...," said Jim Shelton, owner of the T-Shirt Warehouse on the tourist-oriented island.

But while Shelton conducted business as usual, hotels were pulling beach chairs and other loose items inside.

Visitors in campers had to decide whether to ride out the storm or head inland.

"If there's any kind of danger out here, we've got kids. There's no sense putting them at risk," said Arthur Breaux as he prepared his trailer for the trip back to McAllen, spoiling a fishing trip on his 37th birthday.

The six-month Atlantic hurricane season began June 1. Arlene is the second tropical weather system of the season.

Tropical storms are redesignated as hurricanes when sustained wind speed reaches 74 mph.

Richards vetoes $17.3 million 2-year budget

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards announced $17.3 million worth of line-item vetoes from the state's two-year, $70.1 billion budget Saturday. But she emphasized that her cuts aren't a criticism of the Legislature.

"Crafting a budget for an enterprise as large and as complex as the state of Texas is a daunting task; mistakes and disagreements are inevitable," Richards said in a proclamation announcing her budget vetoes.

Many of the reductions adjust for legislation that was funded but didn't pass, she said.

"Other items reflect a careful reappraisal — allowing us to fine-tune the priorities of state government in the New Texas," she said.

Among budget provisions struck by Richards was one that would have allowed the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission to keep up to $25,000 a year in assets s zed in drug raids for law enf cement purposes.

Richards said the funds would more appropriately be directed to the Texas Department of Public Safety and other law enforcement agencies.

She struck another $245,695 a year from the commission because its tax-collecting duties are being transferred to the state comptroller.

More than $100,000 a year was deleted from the State Board of Dental Examiners because lawmakers failed to approve a bill continuing the agency. But Richards spokesman Bill Cryer said the agency had to retain some funding because "they still need one year to go out of business."

'Crafting a budget for an enterprise as large and as complex as the state of Texas is a daunting task; mistakes and disagreements are inevitable.'

—Gov. Ann Richards

Among other vetoes:

— A provision allowing additional funds for the State Board of Medical Examiners, on top of its line-item amounts. Richards said the agency could get additional funds if needed through the governor's grant authority.

— Appropriations to the Racing Commission to regulate new racetracks as they open. Richards said full-year funding was provided regardless of when the tracks open. Instead, she said, additional funds may be provided as needed through her grant authority.

— A provision that would have generally required higher education salary increases to be based on merit. Richards said higher education institutions should have the flexibility to provide either merit raises or across-the-board increases.

State judge postpones her decision for deregulation

AUSTIN (AP) — A state judge has set aside her decision to deregulate a number of business services provided by Southwestern Bell and Texas' other local exchange telephone companies.

District Judge Jeanne Meurer said she would rehear the case beginning July 30.

Friday's move came after representatives of the state attorney general's office, the Public Utility Commission and numerous telecommunications companies opposed Southwestern Bell's proposal for a final judgment.

They said Southwestern Bell's plan would have freed local exchange telephone companies from regulation in areas including directory assistance, information services and long-distance calling within small geographical areas.

It also would have applied to a far broader range of services than did Ms. Meurer's May 25 preliminary judgment, they said.

"Southwestern Bell gave (Ms. Meurer) five pieces of a 2,000-piece jigsaw puzzle," said Steve Bickerstaff, an attorney for several telecommunications companies. "They gave her a distorted view of telecommunications regulation in the state."

Two long-distance telephone companies — MCI and AT&T — had filed requests for Meurer to reconsider her decision.

Digital Direct of Dallas Inc. and Texaltel, the Texas Association of Long Distance Companies, also opposed Southwestern Bell's proposed judgment and sought to intervene in the case.

Southwestern Bell's lawyers argued that their proposal wasn't meant to make major changes in utility regulation. They also contended it was too late for any parties to intervene because the judge already had issued her decision.

But opponents disagreed.

"We are pleased that the judge appreciates the complexity of the issues she is being asked to decide," said PUC Chairman Robert Gee. "The PUC looks forward to briefing her on this important matter."

The case began in December, when Southwestern Bell petitioned the court for relief from a PUC order designed to encourage new telecommunications companies to compete with the company in delivering data and other information services to businesses.

The PUC had ruled that companies that are not local exchange telephone companies — such as Teleport Communications Group and Metropolitan Fiber Systems Communications — would not be subject to regulation on certain services. But the PUC decided to continue regulation of all services provided by Southwestern Bell because of the company's dominance.

Southwestern Bell officials contended the new PUC rules were discriminatory.

Ms. Meurer's May ruling would have deregulated for the first time some business services provided by the state's local exchange telephone companies. They included business lines; data transmission services such as fax machines and billing and collection services.

But attorney Martha Smiley, who with Bickerstaff represents Digital Direct and Texaltel, said Southwestern Bell's proposed final judgment was much broader.

She said it would have freed the telephone companies from regulation on more services, among them long-distance calling within small geographical areas; directory assistance; 800 service; information services; mobile telephone services; and selective call-screening

Caveat emptor offers best course

What looked like a major case of product tampering turned into one of simple lying, police officials said, after individuals who had reported finding hypodermic needes and other foreign objects inside aluminum drink cans last week began recanting their stories.

Charges of making a false report were filed against several individuals in different states late last week, causing a number of others who had reported finding foreign objects in Diet Pepsi cans to recant.

Craig Weatherup, North American division president and chief executive of Pepsi-Cola Co., had contended that it was a physical impossibility for the objects to be getting into the cans inside the cola facilities. The company also established a toll-free hotline for customers with questions about the needle reports.

Concern over product tampering is still high in the wake of the Tylenol poisonings in the 1980's and other scattered incidences of tampering, but most of the concerns have been addressed by the major packaging redesign many products underwent follow.ng the early Tylenol incidents. While the Food and Drug Administration still contends there is no such thing as a tamper-proof package and that consumers should always closely inspect shrink wrapping, freshness seals and other closures, most wrapped products are safe.

There will always be demented individuals in an open society who prey on others as well as "copycats" who follow the actions of those who honestly threaten the safety of consumers. For those kinds of individuals, the threat of legal punishment does not serve as an effective deterrent.

The most effective way to combat product tampering is to once again educate consumers that the Latin phrase "caveat emptor" holds the key to safety. Of course, "caveat emptor" translates to "let the buyer beware." It's obvious that is the best course for consumers: Exerting a healthy caution in regard to the products they purchase. In most instances, product wrappings and closures make food and medicine inside safe for consumption. In the few instances when tampering occurs, the alert and cautious consumer is the only one who can prevent disaster from occurring.

Change is sorely needed to save asylum tradition

Barely a week passes without another boatload of illegal Chinese immigrants spilling onto America's shores, from California to New York City. But unlike their undocumented counterparts from Mexico, most Chinese refugees attempt to stay here by exploiting loopholes in the generous U.S. system of political asylum.

The American practice of providing a haven for legitimate victims of political persecution must be preserved. That noble tradition is being subverted, however, by fraudulent asylum claims made each year by tens of thousands of illegal immigrants who are economic, not political, refugees. . . .

After a ship carrying nearly 200 illegal Chinese immigrants was seized off the California coast recently, the Clinton administration enacted a new policy of detaining Chinese refugees until their claims are reviewed by immigration judges. . . .

More fundamental reforms are contained in three bills in Congress.

The most important would allow the Immigration and Naturalization Service to intercept immigrants who file clearly fraudulent asylum claims. . . . Aliens who present forged documents also could be deported promptly.

These measures would help eliminate abuses in the asylum system, which are undermining the established immigration procedures followed by legitimate economic and political refugees.

'Jurassic Park' has underlying message about government

Those concerned about the future of freedom in this country and around the world might have reason to be grateful to Steven Spielberg and author Michael Crichton for the new dinosaur flick, "Jurassic Park." Viewed from a slight angle, the movie contains political lessons, though not necessarily the ones intended by the creators . . .

Don't mess with nature for profit? That's the surface message. Lut at another level, another message might be discerned . . .

Many commentators have referred to the modern political state — huge, brainless behemoth that it is — as something of a dinosaur. But there's a temptation to view it as essentially benign, or harmless, if expensive and a nuisance.

"Jurassic Park" should remind us that some branches of the state, like some breeds of dinosaur, can be terrifying and dangerous. Think of the IRS, the ATF, or an innocent person put through the meat-grinder in the court system.

GEORGE WILL

Laconic fools minimize the 'roaring 50s'

WASHINGTON — Narcissism being natural, we who are in our fifties and were formed by the Fifties naturally consider that decade fascinating and resent the cliches of contempt with which it is routinely denigrated. It was, we are told, mere chrome and conformity, featuring a "silent generation" for which Ike was "the bland leading the bland." Such inanities often issue from people who, being products or admirers of the Sixties, can't think clearly about anything.

Will

It is high time to honor the astonishing fecundity of the Fifties, and to acknowledge the decade's single flaw, the fact that it was pregnant with the Sixties. Now from David Halberstam comes "The Fifties," a 1958 Buick Roadmaster of a book, large (733 pages) and comfortable for a long trip. It is chock full of fodder for Fifties chauvinists. And it should be required reading in myopic Washington, which believes that politicians make the world hum.

Halberstam gives politicians their due, and more, but the book gets into high gear with his deft sketches of captains of commerce such as Harley Earl, Detroit's "Cellini of chrome" who loved jets and sharks and gave cars tailfins just as Ike was giving the Interstate Highway System to Americans who suddenly were never far from Ray Kroc's multiplications of the McDonald brothers' San Bernadino hamburger stand. When Americans drove away from the homes they bought for $7,990 from William Levitt — he was finishing 36 a day on Long Island — they could stay at the Holiday Inns that Kemmons Wilson was building, a new room every 15 minutes. A "quiet" decade? More like a roaring one.

The decade's most important sound emanated from Memphis where on July 5, 1954 — 49 days after the Supreme Court's school desegregation ruling — a Tupelo, Mississippi, truck driver partial to black slacks and pink shirts recorded "I'm All Right Mamma." The night a local disc jockey played the Mississippian's record, the station's switchboard lit up. (Disc jockeys were cultural arbiters for young people who were defining their generation with music heard on cheap transistor radios that circumvented parental control.)

The most important question the disc jockey asked him was what high school he had attended. The answer told listeners what his music didn't: Elvis was white. The crossover of whites and blacks in pop music — Bill Haley, Fats Domino, Little Richard, Chuck Berry —made the radio dial America's most integrated institution.

Shrewd Jackie Gleason understood something else about Elvis of the curled lip and sullen look: "He's a guitar-playing Marlon Brando." Elvis worshiped James Dean, who worshiped Brando. When Elvis met the director of Dean's movie "Rebel Without a Cause," he fell to his knees and recited Dean's lines. He knew them all.

Dean's "Rebel Without A Cause" (like Romeo and Juliet presented as a West Side Story) was made because "juvenile delinquency" — how quaint the phrase seems in today's era of crack-dealing, Uzi-toting youth gangs — was romanticized and sentimentalized as "protest." It was protest not against material privation or tyranny but against the supposed "sterility" of American society.

Clinton does quick march to win military

WASHINGTON — As the Air Force investigates a two-star general for making disparaging remarks about Bill Clinton, the president is winning over American veterans by ladling out more largesse and lip-service than any recent predecessor.

Anderson

Clinton's fractured relations with the active-duty military found a spokesman when Maj. Gen. Harold N. Campbell told a banquet audience that the commander in chief was "draft-dodging," "gay-loving," "pot-smoking" and "womanizing."

As bad as relations are with the active duty, Clinton is rapidly making friends with American veterans — not the least of whom is a 48-year-old former Marine who was disabled in Vietnam when a bullet shattered his right arm. His name is Jesse Brown and he is Clinton's Secretary of Veterans Affairs. The evolving relationship between these two men may serve as a metaphor for mending Vietnam-era wounds.

Sources describe Clinton's relationship with Brown, the former head of the Disabled American Veterans, as cool but correct. For two men who barely knew each other on Election Day, they forged a common respect by Memorial Day.

That's when Clinton braved jeers of "coward" to deliver one of the most poetic speeches of his presidency on a visit to the Vietnam Veterans Memorial to honor the 58,000 Americans who died fighting a war he opposed. Many previous sins got washed away at the black granite Wall when Clinton didn't flinch in the face of repeated provocations.

"To all of you who are shouting, I have heard you," Clinton said over the din. "I ask you now to hear me. I have heard you and I ask you at this monument, can any American be out of place? And can any commander in chief be in any other place but here on this day?"

Brown intimates say he was genuinely and unexpectedly moved. "I know Jesse walked away from there with a lot of respect for him," said one administration friend of Brown's. "Jesse was truly impressed with Clinton's willingness to stand up at the wall and do what he did . . . to stand up and stick to his principles and deal with it under tough circumstances really hit home with Jesse."

Submitting himself to pillory is only part of the penance the president seems to be paying for his past. According to administration officials, the penance also showed up in the VA budget, which increased more than 5 percent while most other agencies were trimmed.

A new era of activism was ushered in in which long-ignored problems ranging from veteran homelessness to substance abuse were finally tackled. And the VA, whose views often were discarded by previous administrations, was elated when 33 of its own were invited to join Hillary Rodham Clinton's task force on health-care reform.

In a presidency marked by its misadventures, Clinton's management of the VA is an intriguing contrast. Officials cite one incident in which Brown and VA Deputy Secretary Hershel W. Gober, a close Clinton friend, teamed up to defuse a potential time-bomb. The administration was putting the finishing touches on its national service program when officials realized that it would pay students a higher stipend during college than veterans received under the GI Bill. They changed that.

One White House official insists there's been no "conversion" since Clinton won the White House. Last August, Clinton delivered a speech to the American Legion that had the ring of "atonement." He described his "special sense of gratitude" because of "the freedom you won for all Americans on the field of battle, you also gave me the opportunity to serve, myself, in the arena of public service."

Don't let yourself ge t 'Borked' in public

A Dictionary of Washington Eponymical Etymology:

TO BORK, verb. The act of scrutinizing to death a nominee for high public office. The word derives from Robert Bork, a Supreme Court nominee whose record was examined so minutely by the Senate Judiciary Committee that the rest of the Senate, assuming there must be something wrong with anyone who needed that much scrutiny, refused to confirm him. Usage examples: "Unless Clinton nominates people acceptable to Republicans, we will Bork them in the streets, we will Bork them in the hills, and we will Bork them on C-Span." (Winston Churchill, when asked what he would say if he were to return as Sen. Bob Dole.) Slang: "Stick a fork in him, he's Borked."

Baker

A ZOE BAIRD PROBLEM, noun phrase. Discovery of past failure by a nominee for high office to make Social Security payments, withhold taxes and maintain federally required employment records for poorly paid domestic help, especially, though not necessarily, illegal aliens. Almost always fatal to the nominee's chance of federal employment, due to the Senate's Draconian insistence on the highest ethical, moral and legal standards, no matter how petty or commonplace the violation. Usage example: "When the president asked me to parachute into the Balkans and restore peace to the entire region I said I'd very much like to, but couldn't, as I have a Zoe Baird problem." (James Bond, AKA 007, upon being asked why he had dropped out of sight since the end of the Cold War.)

To NUNN, verb. To permit the president to retain such presidential duties as other senators find agreeable, in return for giving control of the military to the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee. The word derives from Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia, who in 1993, after taking over the Pentagon, permitted the president to continue as commander in chief of the Commerce, Interior and Labor Departments, among others. Usage example: "I fired General MacArthur because the Constitution made me, not MacArthur, the commander in chief. You couldn't Nunn a president in those days because Senator Nunn hadn't been invented yet." (The late Harry Truman in an interview subsequently suppressed by David McCullough out of fear that the grocery tabloids would hound him so mercilessly to contact Elvis Presley and President Kennedy that his literary work would be seriously compromised.)

TO BOREN, verb. To permit the president to retain such presidential duties as other senators find agreeable, in return for giving each of the Senate's 100 members a veto over any tax proposal disliked by each senator's constituents, especially including his biggest campaign contributors. The word derives from Sen. David Boren of Oklahoma, who single-votedly killed President Clinton's tax program in the Finance Committee, thus compelling the president to place tax policy at the disposal of the nation's most skilled lobbyists. Usage example: "Were we Borened? Yes, we were Borened. But we still have a lot to be thankful for. General Grant let us keep our horses for the spring planting." (What Robert E. Lee would have told Oprah Winfrey had he not been notoriously close-mouthed, famously reluctant to make a spectacle of himself in public and pathetically credulous when told that television had been invented 100 years ahead of time.)

GERGENIZED, adjective. (Pronounced with both "g's" hard, as in "gurgle.") Describing a president whose alarm about the possibility of the Senate's also taking control of the Commerce, Interior and Labor Departments has tempted him to wear a used image prosthesis originally built for the opposition party. The word derives from David Gergen, journalist and so-called "spin doctor" to various Republican presidents, who was hired by the Democratic White House in 1993 to aid the recovery of recently Nunned President Clin ton.

City officials ignore taxpayers' wishes

A rumor has surfaced (and I certainly hope it is only "smoke") that the Midland city administration is once again considering the acquisition of Atrium Center for new offices for our city officials. Taxpayers fought this battle just a few short months ago and thought that it was no longer an issue. However, it now seems possible that regardless of the wishes of the taxpaying citizens our city officials are determined to prevail.

It is a real travesty when the city says there isn't enough money to pave streets and supply utilities and services to annexed areas, but can always seem to find the money for things that City Hall wants. And they seem to expect the taxpaying citizens to just roll over and accept it.

The recent election of Kay Bailey Hutchison was noted nationally as evidence that the people are fed up with the tax-and-spend philosophy of our national government. Our city fathers need to realize that we feel the same way about local government. We expect them to do their job better and cheaper — a task which is not impossible. Today, every business (outside of government) has to do that in order to survive.

Retiring educator expresses gratitude

To the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees, the administration, supervisors, coordinators, principals, colleagues, parents, students and former students, it is with humility and gratitude that this letter is being written to all of you. Since this is my year of retirement after having taught for 35 years, 30 of which have been in Midland, I can think of no better way to communicate my thoughts and feelings to you than by way of our local newspaper.

Mixed emotions have played a major part in my decision to retire. As I reflect on past years and the individuals with whom I have had the pleasure of working, I am nostalgic. I feel, however, that the time has come for me to terminate my formal teaching career and devote my time to my husband and to our grandchildren who have made their home with us since our son's death three years ago.

The years that I have been associated with all of you have been the most rewarding ones of my life. It is to you that I say "Thank You!"

Thank you for a wonderful association, thank you for your love and encouragement and thank you for all the memories which will remain with me forever!

Christians showed love for Jesus locally

On the front page of the Sunday, June 13, Midland Reporter-Telegram I read about shelling in Mogadishu, a Texan facing possible execution in Bangladesh, the expense of paving a Midland street and a paper chain uniting Midland-Odessa's Center for Families and Children. In the left-hand margin I saw a tiny article and photo about a March For Jesus in San Antonio. It showed a related article on page 12A which turned out to be a little story about a March For Jesus in Austin.

Oh, shucks! You've been scooped again! You're getting stories off the wire service instead of right under your nose.

After kindly correcting a job of under-reporting last fall at a large, peaceful pro-life demonstration, surely this snub was unintentional.

If anyone had looked out on Illinois Street right in front of the Midland Reporter-Telegram building between 10:30 a.m. and noon on Saturday, June 12, he would have seen about a thousand (a conservative estimate) of the happiest folks ever to parade the streets of Midland.

This jubilant gaggle of Christians then gathered on the courthouse lawn to pray for one another, for you, for the nation, for our leaders and for Midland. I was there in the middle of it all and I'll never forget the joy we all felt.

I'll grant you that the headline "Midlanders Love Jesus" may not sell as many papers as "U.N. Renews Shelling," but if you don't want to join us, give us a little coverage, please.

Resident nominates city in honor of Jesus

My daddy often said, "What goes around comes around." The Community Spirit Award has been revived and I've thought and thought "who should receive such a reward?" It would be hard for me to chose for I am a bit prejudice, (in the second sense), and I would want to keep it in my own community.

It was the spring of 1986 that I got my first taste of death. I saw the Bright Lights of the Great City. It was 1988 that I had to be taken away to be restored. When I came back my eyes were opened to see many other people approaching death's door. I began to call upon people of our community to sound the alarm. The Midland Reporter-Telegram was the first to be on the scene. Then came the Health Department, the schools, the churches, the fire department and many other services that we are so blessed to be supported by. So, why don't we just turn up the lights of the city a bit brighter and be an example to our whole nation of what truly helping one another is all about.

Let's give all the honor and glory to our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ who set the example for us by not only dying to self but being kind and true to all, "for these are the people who will possess the nations and people the desolate cities," Isaiah 54: 2-3.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702.

Council member breaks promise

'If we don't have the money we don't spend it' was Pat Schneider's campaign pledge which she broke at her very first council meeting with the YES vote to authorize tax-payer dollars to be used in paving a section of Woodcrest Drive.

This clearly indicates a lack of understanding of the problem and the consequence of her actions. Put a stop to blatant cronyism. Get involved: Call or write your City Council members and express your concern.

James Devenport

Council's reason for paving is unfounded

I would like to make three points regarding an article in the Reporter-Telegram Sunday, June 13.

First, in the article on "Council's decision to pave Woodcrest is expensive precedent, Faircloth says" Mayor J.D. Faircloth explains how a vote by the City Council to pave a street in northwest Midland could cost the taxpayers as much as $7.5 million if the remaining unpaved streets are paved also.

I was interested in this problem so I drove down the street in question and I would like to report that the map in the newspaper is inaccurate. The map indicates that the street Woodcrest is unpaved from Andrews to Cuthbert. That is false. The street Woodcrest is PAVED from Andrews to Princeton, so the argument that the street has to be paved because it is dangerous is not a fair argument. The street IS PAVED for .25-mile after you turn off Andrews Highway.

Two, the article is unclear as to who is paying for the paving. The city says the county is paying for the paving and the county says they are NOT paying for it. Who is right? And if the county does not pay for it, who does? The taxpayer? Does that mean me?

Three, those who benefit the most are the owners of the property along the unpaved part of Woodcrest. I looked them up at the County Appraisal Office and found that many of the owners are not even residents of Midland. The owners are living in New Mexico, California and even our neighbor to the west, Odessa. Why are Midland taxes paying to increase the value of non-Midland residents' holdings?

I'd like our mayor and City Council members to comment on this, please. I also invite all interested taxpayers to drive down Woodcrest and see the vast amount of undeveloped acreage that borders Woodcrest to the east between Princeton and Cuthbert. Ask yourselves if you are willing to enhance the value of this land for the sake of the out-of-town owners.

SPEAKING OUT

Teen Task Force awakens Midland

By Claudia Egan

Claudia Egan is a member of the Midland City Council and chairs Project Awaken, a community task force on crime, alcohol and drug abuse created early this year to implement recommendations of a special grand jury.

A community task force on crime, alcohol and drug abuse was created because of the results of a special grand jury impaneled by the honorable Judge John Hyde of the 238th District Court of Midland County, Texas. The report was released in January 1993. I was appointed chairperson of the task force. Since that time, this city has been ignited with and challenged with the opportunity to stand up, be counted, make changes, demand accountability from all government entities as well as citizens in general and especially from parents. The next scheduled meeting will be June 28 at 7 p.m. in the police department on the third floor, south side classroom. After this meeting, all future meetings are scheduled for the third Monday of every month, same time, same place.

It is indeed my pleasure to bring you up to date with the "Wake Up Teen Task Force" which was organized in March. As director of this teen task force, I can assure all of you that the amount of energy, dedication and the wholehearted desire to make a difference in this community has been and continues to be mind boggling!

We don't meet once a month, we meet every Tuesday at 6:30 p.m. at the police department. These meetings began during the first part of March and have continued. Not one meeting of these young teens has been canceled. Let me share some of the progress this group has made since their inception:

1. On April 3rd and 4th, the "Wake Up" group joined forces with the Midland Arts Assembly, under the name of City Art, and participated for both days in painting a beautiful mural over the graffitied walls of the Mr. M Food Store, located on the corner of Big Spring and Cuthbert. The mural was designed, free of charge, by an extraordinary artist, Jo Dufo.

2. On May 8th, the "Wake Up" group independently painted a beautiful mural on the Hidalgo Park bathroom facility. The building had graffiti including marijuana leaves and several gang markings.

While we were painting, about 40 youths came to the park to play ball and have a cookout. It was really quite an experience. Hidalgo Park is located at 1401 Orchard. Please take the family and go see how bright and beautiful it is. By the way, "Despierta" in Spanish means "wake up!"

3. On May 2nd, the teen task force was invited to speak to a baseball fan crowd regarding drug and alcohol abuse among the youth of our community. Jessica Boucher', Lee Freshman, James Faircloth, LHS, and Martin Lattebeaudiere, LHS, gave individual presentations which were powerfully honest and to the point. They had the distinct honor to speak before the keynote speaker, Dr. Lonise Bias (mother of the late Len Bias). Dr. Bias was magnificent in delivering her message to the crowd about drug and alcohol abuse, violence and the prejudice of our nation.

4. On June 13th, the teen task force sponsored a "bring your own food" picnic at Hogan Park from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. Five new teens arrived to join in the fun. A press conference was held on Thursday, June 10, to announce the event. All three television stations and several radio stations gave great coverage. We hope that next time we schedule a picnic there will be hundreds to join in the fun. We had really nice TV coverage of the picnic. Kent Oil supplied the soft drinks and ice. The teen task force says a huge thanks to Kent Oil (Kenny Dresel) and the media for their unconditional support. They asked me to also thank Joan and Jerry Johnson, Sherry Tomlinson, Police Chief Richard Czech, Officers Jeff Hail and Dale Seago, Jo Dufo, George Logan and Chuck Swallow with community services for the City of Midland, the city council and especially the Reporter-Telegram for allowing me to write this column. They believe they have good news to report and are thankful for the opportunity.

5. On Friday, June 25th, at 9 a.m. the Teen Task Force will be putting up a windscreen at Ulmer Park. The city council voted to fund the building of a sand volleyball complex at Ulmer Park. Sand volleyball is one of the most popular and fastest growing sports among the youth of our city.

6. On June 26th, the Teen Task Force will meet at the police department at 11 a.m. to take off on their first fundraiser. They will be taking donation canisters to as many businesses as possible and ask that the merchants display the containers where everyone who wishes can donate to the "Wake Up" Teen Task Force. Please support these teens. They have been working really hard to make a difference, but they need your help.

7. On July 10th and 11th, they will be painting a mural on the walls of the building at Elkin Park, located at South D and Washington directly off Front Street. This will be a fun event and they would like to invite everyone to attend. They will begin painting at 8 a.m. on July 10th (Saturday).

I am not playing favorites when I tell you how wonderful these teens are and what a breath of fresh air they are for me. This city has an abundance of good, strong, upstanding kids who aren't afraid to work for this community. They are inviting teens to become a part of this fun and progressive "Wake Up" Teen Task Force. For more information call beeper number 561-0711.

Have a great day!

Police stifle emotions of graduating seniors

I recently attended commencement exercises for Robert E. Lee High School. I traveled 1,500 miles to see my niece graduate, only to be disappointed.

In 1990, I made the same journey to see my oldest niece graduate and I thought that is was the nicest graduation. The students, as well as the guests in attendance, were very enthusiastic. My children attend a high school with a graduating class of 26 and total school attendance of 156, but to come here and see the difference in size and the excitement of the students that filled the Chaparral Center was beyond anything that I could ever imagine.

I was excited to come and experience the same thing, only that did not happen. I felt that during this recent graduation the students, as well as the crowd, were missing the excitement that was present three years ago.

My disappointment came with the presence of the Midland Police Department. Don't you think that was a little much? With all the teachers present, are they not capable of handling a problem should one arise?

Then three black students were escorted from their commencement exercise for showing signs of excitement. Being escorted out of the center was more of a disruption than the signs of excitement. I am still trying to figure out why a young white man could show signs of excitement by kicking his legs in the air and he was not escorted out, and why a young lady could raise her hands in excitement and was not escorted out, and finally a young white man falls flat on his face while walking across the stage, and this was very intentional, and not a thing was done to him. Why the favoritism? Oh, by the way, I am white.

I think it's sad that a group of adults had to dictate how students had to act. Maybe the adults who thought up the rules need to loosen up and learn how to live a happy life.

In closing, I just want to say that our graduating class held their commencement exercise in a church, and our students showed their happiness of graduating. They were allowed to rejoice in church and didn't have to worry about being escorted out by the police.

School board actions cannot be condoned

Having witnessed the Lee High School graduation, I was embarassed for the students, the parents, and the citizens of Midland at the graduation ceremony. The school administration and the school board should be ashamed of their action and conduct concerning the ceremony. In their speeches, the school administrators used terms such as "The school is an extension of the home; we are here to honor and celebrate; and commencement marks the beginning of your adult life."

From all appearances, the school administration was not practicing what it preaches! Having the police stand at attention at the back of the auditorium was truly asinine. This is not a police state and our kids should not be subjected to such treatment. Having fun should be a part of the event. A pompous few are dictating what the ceremony will be.

Who is the ceremony for and who is it supposed to benefit? The school administration needs to remember they are SERVANTS of the citizens of Midland and should abide by the wishes of the majority. Why does this have to be a solemn night? The ceremony can still be dignified with some enjoyment for the students.

I suggest that the school administration and school board find out what the citizens think of the graduation ceremony policies. The members of the school board obviously should be reminded they are elected officials and some of us will not have short memories when they are seeking re-election.

Graduation should belong to students

I was recently very upset at how Midland Independent School District (MISD) took over the Class of '93 graduation. I always thought that when one attended their own graduation, it was their day. It was not the teachers', principals', or the school board's day. It was the seniors' day which will be their last time together before they go in different directions.

If they wanted to have a little fun like throwing beach balls or screaming, they should be able to. For heaven sakes! They have survived 12 years of education under teachers' supervision. I think the seniors can make wise decisions on what kind of fun they should do.

I can understand that MISD does not want their seniors to come drunk or bring alcohol but balls or other items will not harm anything. When you see someone dance or show some form of excitement after they receive their diploma, I don't think they should be punished by taking them away like the police did with some of the Lee seniors. Again we saw the prejudice or the preference of whom was to be escorted out by the style of their dance or be given a slap in the hand or ignoring the fact that the fall may have been an accident or intentional.

I just hope that the school board listens to the Class of '94 and works with us to make our graduation a memorable one!

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, June 20, the 171st day of 1993. There are 194 days left in the year. This is Father's Day.

Today's highlight in history:

Rear Adm. Alan B. Shepard Jr., far right not under umbrella, enters a memorial service for former astronaut Donald K. Slayton at NASA in Houston, Saturday.

Astronauts pay tribute to pioneer

By Mike Drago
Associated Press Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston — All five surviving Mercury Seven astronauts and a cosmonaut who met Donald K. "Deke" Slayton in space gathered Saturday for a jovial tribute to the persistent pioneer who waited 16 years to fly.

"We come here today to celebrate a life and what a life it was," said NASA Administrator Daniel S. Goldin, speaking to hundreds of people jammed into an auditorium at Johnson Space Center.

"Ultimately the lesson we can draw from Deke Slayton's example is simply this: Never give up. Never, never, never give up. Never give up."

Slayton, a 69-year-old Sparta, Wis., native, died in his sleep last Sunday at his Texas home. He was diagnosed as having a brain tumor last year. Medical treatment forced the cancer into remission, but the disease recently reappeared.

A World War II combat pilot, Slayton was selected by NASA in 1959 as one of America's seven original astronauts, who years later became the subjects of Tom Wolfe's book "The Right Stuff."

Slayton was assigned to the second Project Mercury orbital mission in 1962 — the first went to John Glenn — but was grounded by an irregular heartbeat. Scott Carpenter flew instead.

He overcame his heart problem and regained his flight status in 1972, and, at 51, finally made it into space in 1975 during the Apollo-Soyuz mission.

The five surviving Mercury Seven astronauts — Carpenter, Glenn, Gordon Cooper, Walter Schirra and Alan Shepard — agreed Saturday that the wait was tough on Slayton.

"Deke had a secret. He learned that the true measure of a man's worth is the ability to turn adversity into advantage. He did that," Carpenter said.

Slayton supervised NASA's astronaut corps, first as chief astronaut and then as director of flight crew operations during the Apollo moon missions. He was in charge of choosing the Apollo crews: who was flying with whom, and in what order.

Shepard, who moderated the 75-minute proceedings, said one of Slayton's last requests was that such a memorial service not be a dirge.

"And he said, and I quote, 'And I don't want any SOB talking longer than two minutes,'" Shepard said.

In accordance with those wishes, the service was upbeat, with colleagues and friends sharing funny anecdotes and a Houston Dixieland band whipping through some of Slayton's favorite tunes.

Shepard even played the straight man in a vaudeville-style standup routine with Bill Dana, a friend of Slayton's.

Alexi Leonov, one of three Soviet cosmonauts on the Apollo-Soyuz orbital rendezvous between U.S. and Soviet spacecraft, brought condolences from his country's space program, saying Slayton is widely recognized there.

"We will never forget the contributions of Deke Slayton," Leonov said.

Sen. Glenn joked that, after 16 years of waiting, the Apollo-Soyuz mission training was the easiest part of space flight for Slayton.

"Deke said the mission was a piece of cake," Glenn said. "It was learning to speak Russian that was the hard part."

Slayton relished his nine days in space. He served as Apollo docking module pilot.

"It's worth waiting 16 years for," he said.

Slayton lived in League City, Texas, near the Space Center. Survivors include his wife, Bobbie; sons, Kent, 36, and Jim, all of Houston; and a daughter, Stacey, of Houston.

FBI director vows to fight for job

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — It would take a personal request from the president for FBI Director William Sessions to step down, Sessions said in a rare newspaper interview.

Sessions ended a five-month silence by talking Friday with editors of the San Antonio Express-News about ethical allegations and speculation he could be forced from the 10-year term to which he was appointed in 1987 by President Reagan.

The embattled FBI director said he hasn't requested a private meeting with President Clinton to present his own defense, but he did say he was ready to meet with Clinton at any time the president wants.

"That is in the hands of the president," Sessions said. "I haven't talked to him."

Sessions, a former chief federal judge in San Antonio, returned for the wedding of his son, Mark.

Sessions told the Express-News that he was willing to fight for the job, although the allegations had taken a "personal toll" on him.

"I think it did come out of my hide because I did have to deal with both of them," he said, referring to his duties as director and the fight to answer allegations.

FBI Director Sessions

Sessions told the Express-News that he was willing to fight for the job, although the allegations had taken a 'personal toll' on him

Former Attorney General William Barr, appointed by President Bush, charged that Sessions had "taken advantage of the government" in a pattern of ethical abuses that included using FBI airplanes to make personal trips.

The director's lawyers called Barr's report "inaccurate, incomplete and biased in a way that mischaracterizes the conduct of the director and seriously misleads the public."

Both the original charges leveled Jan. 15 and the director's written response are now in the hands of Attorney General Janet Reno.

She must recommend to Clinton whether he should retain or fire Sessions.

Recent reports have indicated that Sessions' attorneys have been meeting with Justice Department officials to negotiate the terms of his resignation.

Sessions confirmed his lawyers had been meeting with officials in Reno's office, but added, "Beyond that I cannot say."

Consultant: Thornburgh decision is overdue

AUSTIN (AP) — A federal court decision ordering former U.S. Attorney General Richard Thornburgh to pay nearly $300,000 in back campaign debts is long overdue, says a former Thornburgh political consultant.

Texas political consultant Karl Rove had sued the former attorney general, his campaign committee and campaign treasurer Raymond Dimuzio for debts from Thornburgh's failed 1991 U.S. Senate race in Pennsylvania.

U.S. District Judge Sam Sparks ruled Friday that Thornburgh and his campaign committee are responsible for the debt. The judge excused Dimuzio from the judgment.

"Thornburgh's argument was essentially that running a campaign was like betting on the stock market — if the candidate loses, you lose your investment in the campaign," said Rove. "That's not the way it goes. The candidate has to make every effort to pay off his debts."

Thornburgh could not be reached for comment Friday by The Associated Press. His Washington, D.C., residence has an unpublished phone number.

However, the former attorney general had said in court his campaign committee — not himself — was liable for debt.

Rove sued for $175,000 in direct mailing services he provided in the Senate race.

Friday's judgment by Sparks includes more than $50,000 in interest on the principal of the debt and $75,000 for Rove's attorney's fees.

"The court finds from a preponderance of the evidence Richard Thornburgh did assent to the Sept. 18, 1991, contract between Rove and the committee ... and is personally liable for the debt owed by the committee to Rove," Sparks said in his opinion.

Thornburgh was defeated in the Senate race by Democrat Harris Wofford. Federal Election Commission reports showed Thornburgh at the time of the April court case had $32,000 in the bank and $377,000 in debts.

"I made no commitment to anyone, ever, to expose myself to the liability of the conduct of my election committee in the 1991 U.S. Senate race," he testified in April.

Thornburgh had said he was still trying to raise money to help cover his debts.

Aikman recovering

IRVING (AP) — Dallas Cowboys quarterback Troy Aikman will be out 6-12 weeks following back surgery Saturday for a herniated disc, his neurosurgeon said.

Aikman

Dr. Robert Watkins, who performed the surgery in Los Angeles, said it would be safest for Aikman, the most valuable player in the Super Bowl, to stay out at least 12 weeks.

"Six weeks would be absolutely the soonest he could return to a physical football situation," Watkins said.

Watkins said he removed a disc fragment, measuring about 1 inch wide and 1½ inches long.

"This surgery is not a very traumatic surgery overall," he said, adding that Aikman was recovering well.

Asked if Aikman would be ready for opening day on Sept. 6, Watkins said, "I think there is a chance."

A few hours after the surgery, Aikman said he felt fine.

"It's a relief to have the surgery completed and to know that I'm not going to have any more problems with my back," he added.

Aikman injured his back lifting weights in May and muscle spasms forced him to miss the final two workouts of the club's quarterback school early this month.

Tech's Jones reflects

By Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

LUBBOCK — Eight is enough.

For James Carroll Jones, eight years as the head of Texas Tech's athletic fortunes was enough for one lifetime. The wear of the job creased his face as he told a crowded room June 8 that he was stepping down from the Red Raider program effective August 31.

For Jones, the ride has been as bumpy as one taken by the masked rider, turning at the North end of Jones Stadium in a dead sprint. Nevertheless, the trip was worth it, according to Jones.

"I'm just going to do nothing for awhile," said Jones. "Phyllis will probably kick me out of the house after three days at home. Seriously, we'll just see what happens. If something comes along that I feel that my expertise would enhance, then I possibly would consider it.

"We want to stay in Lubbock. We're crazy about Lubbock. We like our home, I love the weather and we'll be rooting the Red Raiders on in a different way."

For Jones, the rooting began in 1985 after moving to Tech from the University of Texas where he had served as the assistant and associate athletic director. Jones had built strong Texas ties while working at Texas after attending the school where he earned All-Southwest Conference honors at quarterback for the 1952 league championship team. That year he passed for 1,018 yards, only the third quarterback in UT history to cross the 1,000 yard mark in a single season in the run-oriented offense of Texas.

Jones was also named the SWC's Most Valuable Player by the Houston Post, as the Longhorns defeated Tennessee 16-0 in the Cotton Bowl. He was named to the school's Hall of Honor in 1978.

'I'm just going to do nothing for awhile. If something comes along ... then I possibly would consider it.

— Texas Tech's T. Jones

Later Jones coached at Texas for eight years under Ed Price and Darrell Royal.

But for Jones, one of his more memorable moments at Tech was in 1986, when the Billy Joe Toliver-led Raiders earned their first bowl berth in nine years, thanks in large part to wins over 8th-ranked Arkansas in Fayetteville and a 33-21 win over Texas in Lubbock.

"It (Arkansas) was a real important win for us at the time," said Jones. "Our program received a huge lift with those two wins and they meant a lot to me and the things we were trying to accomplish."

The program had received much criticism because of the hiring of Texas assistant coach David McWilliams. Jones

Up front are the defending champs, Andre Agassi with a bum wrist and sore elbow, and Steffi Graf with a swollen foot.

Forget about Agassi repeating. He's 20-1 at London's legal bookmakers, and those odds seem generous as he returns rusty after a long layoff.

"My heart tells me to go and play Wimbledon," Agassi said after losing his only tuneup match on grass last week, "even though my head and body tell me it might not be a good risk to play one tournament if it prevents me from being able to appear in several others."

Graf is the women's odds-on favorite at 4-7, which shows that a lot of people figure she can probably win on only one good foot as she did at the French Open. With Monica Seles out from the stab wound in her back, Graf probably can.

Right behind them in sick bay are two former winners, three-time champion Boris Becker and nine-time champion Martina Navratilova. He's just gotten over some mysterious virus but his game's

Each has the opportunity to correct those deficiencies Sunday in the final round of the 93rd U.S. Open.

But Janzen, by virtue of a gritty 69 in Saturday's third round, has a one-shot lead and growing confidence.

However, it took another record-matching performance — in threatening, record-breaking weather — for the 28-year-old Janzen to withstand the steady pressure applied by Stewart.

Barkley, Jordan both believe their teams are destined to win NBA title

By Bill Barnard
AP Basketball Writer

■ NBA Finals, Game 6, Chicago Bulls at Phoenix Suns, 6 p.m., NBC (KTPX-Ch. 9).

PHOENIX — Michael Jordan and Charles Barkley are doing the NBA Finals version of the old "my father is stronger than your father" routine.

Jordan says the Chicago Bulls' destiny to win their third straight championship is stronger than the destiny of Barkley's Phoenix Suns to come back from a 3-1 deficit in the NBA Finals.

"We're destined to win as much as he's destined to win, and right now we're a game up," Jordan said. "I understand he's very confident and that he has positive thinking, but we say his destiny is to have a long summer thinking about what he should have or could have done."

The Suns, after losing the first two games of the finals at home, had to win two of three games at Chicago to get the series back to Phoenix for today's sixth game.

That's exactly what happened as Phoenix won Game 5 108-98 Friday night, and despite the Suns' failure at home so far in the series, Barkley sees the return to Arizona as destiny's agenda.

"It could get hot in the valley, real hot," Barkley said, referring not only to the 100-degree weather in Phoenix but also to the series itself. "I believe in my heart that it is our destiny to win the championship."

Barkley scored 18 of his 24 points in the first half as the Suns opened a 54-49 lead, then was double-teamed in the last two periods. But rookie Richard Dumas scored 11 of his 25 points in the third quarter and Kevin Johnson added 11 more in the fourth period and also finished with 25 as Phoenix stayed ahead throughout the second half.

"If they try to guard me with one man, I'll score 20 points in any half," Barkley said. "No one player can guard me. When they put the double-team on me in the second half, that freed up

Suns blow Windy City's confidence

By Cliff Edwards
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO — All week long, it was not a question of "Can they?" but "When would they?"

Not anymore.

What once seemed like a sure thing to fans and merchants alike in the Windy City now is in doubt as the Chicago Bulls headed Saturday to Phoenix, where they must win one against the resurgent Suns to take their third straight NBA championship. The Bulls lead the series 3-2.

"We were convinced they were going to win," said Cathy Chapulis, manager of Chicago Sports and Novelty Shop, which already had cleared space for Bulls championship T-shirts. "I still think they're going to win — maybe."

The Bulls' 108-98 loss Friday to the Phoenix Suns stunned many in Chicago.

"I don't think they're going to pull it off, not the way Phoenix is playing right now," said Everardo Reyes, who had been rooting for the Bulls. "It looks very bleak."

City officials spent an estimated $1 million on riot prevention, including extra police patrols and videos urging calm. The Chicago Police Department kept about 5,000 officers on patrol Friday, three times the usual number.

A pensive Michael Jordan tries to figure Friday's loss.

Days off were canceled, the National Guard was put on alert and police rode four to a squad car in some neighborhoods.

Even merchants presumed a Bulls win Friday was a fait accompli — a fact Charles Barkley crowed about after his team won.

"You can take that plywood off the windows now," Barkley said. "All the talk I heard made me feel like I was back in the neighborhood."

Workers at several stores along Michigan Avenue, a trendy shopping area, spent the early morning clearing the barriers and replacing window displays that had been removed in anticipation of a win.

"We're disappointed for a lot of reasons," said Bruce Hochberg, operations manager of Nike Town store. "One, the Bulls lost; and two, we're going to have to put the plywood up all over again."

Rioting last year caused almost $10 million in damage as 340 businesses were looted and 107 police officers were injured. More than 1,000 people were arrested.

In 1991, there were more than 100 arrests and dozens of stores were looted.

Many merchants and bar owners said the loss might be a boon for them because fans will have more time to shop for their favorite novelty items and to drink during more games.

Merchants also were relieved there was no repeat of previous violence. They added that if the Bulls were to win in Phoenix, there likely would be fewer disturbances here.

"We decided to bite the bullet and deal with it" by not taking down displays or boarding up windows, said manager Kurt Deneen of The Gap on Michigan Avenue, which was looted last year.

"We gambled and we won," he said. "Now it looks like we're going to keep on winning, even if they lose."

NBA: Jordan stopped

(From 1C)

K.J."

Jordan scored 41 points, dropping his average for the series slightly to 42.6. And while Scottie Pippen had 22, no other Chicago starter scored in double figures. Horace Grant, the Bulls' third-leading scorer, finished with one point.

"Sometimes the desire, the heart and the energy to achieve is there, but the body and mind don't always act as one," Jordan said. "We were a step slow, our reaction was slow, and it showed."

Jordan said Grant "is probably is feeling the worst of all of us, but he shouldn't hang his lead low. He should shake it off and come back strong in the next game."

Grant, who had 17 points and 16 rebounds in Chicago's victory in Game 4, missed all four of his shots and grabbed only seven rebounds Friday night.

"I wasn't doing anything and I wanted to give the team something," Grant said. "After doing some soul-searching, this was one of the worst games of my life."

Dumas, who rarely plays as Suns coach Paul Westphal prefers to go with more experienced players, scored his 25 points in just 30 minutes. He made 12 of 14 shots.

"We have to get a handle on Dumas," Bulls coach Phil Jackson said. "We can't allow a guy playing 30 minutes to score 25 points."

Now that they've forced at least a sixth game, the Suns must address the problem of playing at home against Chicago, which has won all three games it's played at America West Arena this season. The Bulls were the first team in NBA Finals history to win the first two games on the road.

"They haven't beaten us on their court yet," Pippen said. "We just have to go there full of confidence. We just have to regroup and play hard. We did not want to go back to Phoenix, but they proved us wrong."

Jordan, who scored 55 points in the previous game, said the Suns did a good job stopping him from getting inside Friday night.

"We felt they would try to shut down the middle and shut down my penetration because it really hurt them last game," Jordan said.

JONES: A.D., president at odds had coached McWilliams at Texas and had put on a national search only to return to the Lone Star State to find the man to replace Jerry Moore as head football coach.

Against Arkansas, sophomores Wayne Walker and Midlander Tyrone Thurman set up the Raiders' two touchdowns as Tech won its first game ever against a nationally ranked team on the road.

Against Texas, Tech scored on a 96-yard punt return by Thurman with just over three minutes gone in the contest and never trailed.

"When coach (Spike) Dykes took over (in 1987), the wins over Texas A&M here and the Texas win on the road were also real big.

"Since then, I feel we have rounded the corner. We're doing better in our sports. We've played a tremendous schedule and will continue to do so into the year 2000. It's a bit unfair to the coaches but I think the athletes enjoy it."

"Our facilities were not adequate when I arrived here," he said. "We did not give the perception of being successful. Now I think our fans can be proud of their school."

His departure comes amidst a shroud of questions as to his sudden departure.

Rumors involving Jones' health arose two days after he announced his resignation. Additionally, allegations were brought forth concerning discrimination against women in the university's hiring and recruiting practices.

The U.S. Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights stated that the allegations involved violations of the tenets of Title IX of the 1972 Education Amendments, which mandate that equal opportunities for men and women are provided for those schools which receive federal funds.

"That's something that you face with being in athletics," said Jones. "I don't know how many men and women athletes we have, and I don't want to have to start counting.

"I've always felt that the best person qualified for the job should be the one who is hired — male or female.

"At some time they (federal officials) will come to the campus and we welcome them," said Jones.

"I don't think (discrimination) is a factor for us," said Tech head volleyball coach Mike Jones. "I've hired three restricted-earnings coaches in the past and they have all been women. As far as me being a male coaching a women's team, it hasn't been a problem because of the success that we've had."

"To me, he (T. Jones) has been real easy to talk to," said Mike Jones. "You may not always get what you want, but that's with anyone. He's always listened to what you have to say, though."

In 1985 Jones oversaw the merging of the men's and women's departments and, with that, the discontinuation of the swimming and diving programs.

"That was probably my most difficult decision," said Jones. "I didn't like that at all. It was strictly a budgetary decision. That's one of the unpleasant things you don't like to do."

Those hard decisions have led to tension between Jones and the administration periodically.

"I think we've had our moments of disagreement," said Jones.

Those close to the program contend that the root of the problem with Jones and current university president Dr. Robert Lawless came following the 1990 football season when Jones extended Dykes' contract through the year 2000. Reportedly, Lawless learned of the deal the day in the newspaper the following day.

In addition, Jones reportedly fell in ill-favor with Lawless when he gave a contract extension to basketball coach Gerald Meyers during the 1990 season. Lawless allegedly ordered Jones to fire Meyers at the end of the season, and Meyers was replaced by current coach James Dickey.

"I think knowing that you are going to be totally responsible for the program that you do what you think is best for Tech athletics," said Jones. "We have been able to hire some quality coaches. We don't have near the staff that most have or near the budget that most have, but everyone understands this."

Hard decisions over the course of eight years made his last decision an easy one.

TENNIS: Connors, McEnroe absent

still a mess. She's coming back from an ankle injury and isn't close to championship form.

If Graf and Navratilova succumb to injury, the women's draw will be almost as much of a free-for-all as the men's. It's a shame Iva Majoli, the 15-year-old "new Seles" from Croatia, pulled out with a stomach ailment.

The men's No. 1 seed, Pete Sampras, has a self-diagnosed case of homesickness, an affliction that translates to indifference on the court. It hit him at the French Open and lingers in London, which makes him a shaky 9-2 second choice in the betting parlors.

Sampras said Friday a shoulder injury makes him questionable for Wimbledon. He was awaiting results of tests to determine how to treat the injury and he requested a Tuesday first-round match to give him an extra day to recover.

Stefan Edberg, seeded No. 2, is the men's favorite at 3-1, but he looked less than sterling in losing midway through a tuneup tournament on grass last week and he's been uneven all year.

All those problems may produce the weakest and dullest men's field since the boycotted 1973 edition won by Jan Kodes. The most recent Grand Slam winner, Sergi Bruguera, isn't even bothering to show after capturing the French on clay against Jim Courier.

Courier, the No. 3 seed, will be here but he's yet to prove himself on grass, reaching the quarters only once, in 1991, in four appearances.

Just when Wimbledon really needs three-time champion John McEnroe to liven things up on court, as he did last year in reaching the semifinals and winning the doubles title with Stich, he's in a broadcast booth.

Gone, too, is two-time champion Jimmy Connors, a seniors circuit man now after missing only one Wimbledon since 1972.

Olerud extends hitting streak; Jays beat Sox

Associated Press

TORONTO — John Olerud extended his hitting streak to 24 games and Toronto hit three home runs, leading Dave Stewart and the Blue Jays past the Boston Red Sox 9-4 Saturday for their fifth straight victory.

Paul Molitor homered, doubled and drove in four runs. Devon White homered leading off the Blue Jays first inning and Pat Borders hit a two-run homer.

Olerud went 1-for-3 and continued the longest hitting streak in team history. Olerud, batting .402, also received his club-record 17th intentional walk of the year.

Stewart (3-2), trying to pitch Toronto's third shutout in four games, took a three-hitter and a 9-0 lead into the ninth inning. But Ernest Riles led off with a double and, with one out, Mike Greenwell and Carlos Quintana hit consecutive home runs.

Stewart gave up a double by Scott Cooper and an RBI single by pinch hitter Billy Hatcher, and was relieved one out short of his first complete game of the season. He struck out nine and walked two.

■ AL Roundup

White put Toronto ahead by hitting his eighth home run on the fourth pitch of the game by Danny Darwin (5-7). It was the 19th time in his career that he has homered leading off a game, and the 15th time since coming to the Blue Jays in 1991.

Yankees 8, Twins 4

NEW YORK — Matt Nokes hit two home runs and Scott Kamieniecki pitched a seven-hitter as the New York Yankees beat Minnesota for their third straight win against the slumping Twins.

The victory pushed the Yankees to 11 games above .500 at 40-29. The Twins, meanwhile, have lost five games in a row.

Spike Owen, who drove in three runs, singled in a run in the second, drew a bases-loaded walk in the third and hit his second homer of the season in the sixth as the Yankees erased a 3-0 deficit to win for the sixth time in their last seven games.

Nokes hit the first of his homers in the fifth and his eigth of the season leading off the eighth.

Kamieniecki (2-1), starting in place of Jim Abbott who is on the disabled list, walked one and struck out four and pitched his first complete game in his fourth start of the season. He pitched eight shutout innings in his last start against Boston on Monday.

Kamieniecki gave up Chip Hale's first major-league homer, a two-run shot in the first inning, and an RBI triple to Pat Meares in the second.

New York tied the score with three runs in the second off starter Willie Banks (5-3) on RBI singles by Dion James, Owen and Pat Kelly.

Indians 3, Orioles 0

CLEVELAND — Hot-hitting Carlos Baerga had three hits, including a two-run single, and Mark Clark, just recalled from the minors, pitched six scoreless innings as the Cleveland Indians beat the Baltimore Orioles.

The loss was only Baltimore's fourth in the last 18 games.

Baerga has hit safely in 20 of his last 22 games, raising his average to .308. He has driven in 26 runs over that span and now leads the Indians with 57 RBIs.

Clark (2-2) allowed seven hits, walked none and struck out four after being called up from Triple-A Charlotte late Friday night. The 25-year-old right-hander had been demoted June 1 with a 1-2 record and 6.42 ERA.

Jeremy Hernandez followed with two scoreless innings, and Eric Plunk pitched the ninth for his fifth save. The Indians' defense helped out by turning three double plays.

Fernando Valenzuela (2-7) lost for the fourth time in his last five decisions despite pitching well, yielding three runs and six hits in seven-plus innings. Valenzuela was making his second appearance ever at Cleveland Stadium, where he started and pitched one scoreless inning for the National League in the 1981 All-Star Game.

Tigers 10, Brewers 7

DETROIT — Cecil Fielder hit his sixth home run of the week and David Wells won for the ninth time in 10 decisions as the Detroit Tigers beat the Milwaukee Brewers.

Fielder now has nine homers in June, his biggest month since July 1991 when he hit 11 on his way to a 44-homer season.

Alan Trammell and Mickey Tettleton also hit home runs for Detroit. Tom Brunansky, Robin Yount, Kevin Reimer and Juan Bell each hit home runs for Milwaukee.

Royals 3, Athletics 0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Felix Jose had his second straight four-hit game and Kevin Appier shut down Oakland on four hits for 8 1-3 innings, giving the Kansas City Royals a victory over the Athletics.

The Royals had been the only team in the American League without a shutout this season. Oakland was shut out for the third time in five games.

Mariners 6, Rangers 5

SEATTLE — Randy Johnson, baseball's strikeout leader, struck out 10 in 6 1-3 innings and survived a seventh-inning rally as the Seattle Mariners beat the Texas Rangers for their sixth victory in seven games.

Johnson (9-3) walked only two and helped hand Texas its eighth defeat in 11 games. The Rangers have dropped 11 of 15 on the road.

Johnson took a one-hitter into the seventh, but the Rangers knocked him out by sending 10 hitters to the plate and scoring five runs. Johnson gave up four hits and walked one in the inning.

Juan Gonzalez ruined Johnson's bid for his third shutout when he hit a two-run homer, his American League-leading 19th. Doug Strange drove Johnson from the game with an RBI single.

Dennis Powell gave up an RBI single to Bill Ripken and Jeff Nelson surrendered a sacrifice fly to Julio Franco for the final Texas run.

Angels 5, White Sox 4

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Mark Langston pitched six-hit ball over eight innings, setting a record for the best start ever by a California pitcher as the Angels downed the Chicago White Sox.

Langston held the White Sox hitless until a two-out single in the fifth by Carlton Fisk. He wound up with three walks and six strikeouts as he ran his record to 9-1, the best after 10 decisions in Angels history.

Williams' six RBI lead Giants, 10-3

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Matt Williams homered and drove in six runs and John Burkett became the National League's first 10-game winner as the San Francisco Giants beat the Houston Astros, 10-3.

Burkett (10-2) scattered seven hits, struck out two and didn't walk a batter in seven innings to win his sixth consecutive decision.

Williams hit a three-run homer, his 21st of the season, off Greg Swindell (5-7) in the first after Mike Benjamin reached on a fielder's choice and Will Clark singled. He hit a two-run, bases-loaded double in the Giants' six-run ninth, giving him 63 RBIs for the year — tops in the NL.

Cardinals 6, Cubs 4

CHICAGO — Geronimo Pena hit a home run and two doubles, sending the St. Louis Cardinals past the Chicago Cubs 6-4.

Gregg Jefferies had four hits and scored twice for St. Louis and Mark Whiten homered.

Pena, batting only .141 against right-handed pitchers, started the fourth inning with a home run off Jose Guzman (6-6) that put St. Louis ahead 4-3. It was his second homer of the season and first since April 6.

■ NL Roundup

Reds 8, Dodgers 4

CINCINNATI — Pitcher Tom Browning and Chris Sabo homered as the Cincinnati Reds piled up a dozen hits off Orel Hershiser in just 4 1-3 innings and beat the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The Reds had 19 hits overall, their best total since July 27, 1991, while sending the Dodgers to their third straight loss. Bobby Kelly, Hal Morris and Barry Larkin each had three hits.

Rockies 17, Padres 3

DENVER — Alex Cole and pitcher Willie Blair each drove in a career-high four runs, and the Colorado Rockies established a team record for runs in a game as they routed the San Diego Padres.

The Rockies scored eight times in the third inning, capped by Charlie Hayes' three-run homer.

Pirates 8, Mets 3

PITTSBURGH — Jay Bell's bases-loaded triple completed a five-run Pittsburgh fourth inning in which just two balls left the infield, helping the Pirates run the New York Mets' losing streak to five games with.

Blas Minor pitched five scoreless relief innings as the Pirates won their third in a row in the four-game series after losing 10 of their previous 12. The Mets have lost 14 of 16 and are 7-21 under new manager Dallas Green after going 13-25 under predecessor Jeff Torborg.

Pittsburgh has scored more than four runs in all three games after going 13 straight without scoring more than four.

Braves 4, Expos 3

MONTREAL — Ron Gant led off the eighth inning with his 16th home run, lifting the Atlanta Braves over the Montreal Expos.

Gant connected against Mel Rojas (2-6) for his second homer in two days. The Braves won for the sixth time in eight games.

Mark Wohlers (1-0) got the last out in the seventh inning, and was the winner. He relieved Steve Avery, who had won his seven previous starts. Avery allowed three runs on eight hits.

Mik Stanton worked the ninth for his 20th save in 22 chances.

Phillies 5, Marlins 2

PHILADELPHIA — Lenny Dykstra had three hits, including a home run, as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Florida Marlins.

Florida has lost five of its last six games.

Dykstra is 48-for-141 (.340) in his last 35 games, and has raised his average from .227 to .286. He also scored twice and leads the NL with 61 runs.

Terry Mulholland (9-5) allowed two runs and eight hits in five innings for the victory. Jose Deleon, Larry Andersen and Mitch Williams finished, with Williams gaining his 20th save.

Temple's Woodson leads Texas stars

■ Oil Bowl

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — Temple's Adrian Woodson threw for a touchdown and racked up 161 yards of offense as Texas outlasted Oklahoma 23-14 in Saturday night's 56th Oil Bowl All-Star Game.

Woodson, who led the Wildcats to the Class 5A Division II state title, passed for 113 yards and rushed for 48 more to earn the offensive Most Valuable Player award.

Barron Tanner of Athens, who will attend the University of Oklahoma, was the defensive MVP. He led Texas with seven tackles, two sacks and a fumble recovery.

Texas jumped out to a 14-0 lead when Tremain Mack scored on a four-yard run and Woodson hit Darin Etter with a 25-yard pass.

Defenses dominated despite the 37 total points scored, as Texas fumbled three times and Oklahoma threw five interceptions.

Texas now leads the series 34-12-1.

M-Angels lead West after win

Staff report

EL PASO — What a difference a day makes for the Midland Angels.

The Angels defeated the El Paso Diablos 3-2 here Saturday night to open the second half of the Texas League, giving them a first place tie with San Antonio (a 3-1 winner over Wichita) as the teams start all over.

OPEN: Weather threatens golfers but never materializes exhibition of what it takes to win the toughest of all golf's championships.

He made pars, 16 of them, threw in a couple of birdies and avoided both mistakes and bogeys in a 2-under-par 68 that gave him a 204 total.

"I'm proud of the way I played," Stewart, who has done everything but win this season, said. "I didn't make some of the mistakes I've made in other U.S. Opens.

"I kept my patience and hung in there."

John Adams, a 1973 graduate of Midland Lee, stands in strong contention of his first-ever victory at a major. Following Sunday; s round, Adams was one of six golfers just six strokes behind Janzen. Adams has shot a steady 70-70-69 for a three-round, 209 total.

Janzen, winner of two titles in a four-season PGA Tour career, did even better.

He is the only man in the field to break par 70 for three consecutive days and, for the second day in a row, tied an Open scoring record.

This one came on a 7-under-par 203 total for 54 holes. And, if he is to win, he very well may be forced to match or break Jack Nicklaus' 72-hole mark of 272, set 13 years ago on the same Baltusrol course.

That, of course, will not be easy, even though Baltusrol continues to yield exceptionally low scores, including a field average of 71.785 in the third round.

Over the final 18 holes, an intangible called pressure comes into play. Stewart has experienced it before, but it is new to Janzen.

"Pressure is self-induced," Stewart said. "What Lee puts on himself, I won't know about and what I put on myself, he won't know about.

"I've been in this position before and I'll just try to draw on it."

Janzen must take a different view.

"I'll just try to do what I did today; keep my emotions under control and go out and play 18 holes with the best of my ability and the best of my concentration."

Essentially, it will be a two-man race. PGA champion Nick Price is third alone at 207, four shots off the lead, after matching par 70 in the 102 degree temperatures that broke the record for this date by 7 degrees.

Paul Azinger and David Edwards were next at 208. Azinger had a 69 and Edwards, playing about two hours ahead of the other contenders, moved up with a 66, the best round of the day.

Tom Watson, lines of strain clearly visible on his face, pulled his tee shot into a stream on the final hole, setting up the bogey that finished off a 73 that dropped him back to 209 and virtually out of the race.

Watson was only two off the pace going into the third round but once again encountered the problem with short putts that has kept him away from victory for seven seasons. He twice missed par-saving putts of three feet, and failed on a 4-footer for birdie.

"I just haven't had much success on the greens this year," he said. "I've got to see if I can find the secret."

And he acknowledged that he and the others at 209 — Fred Funk, John Adams, Australian Craig Parry, Wayne Levi and Mike Standly — are all but out of it.

"It will take a 65 or 66 tomorrow to put some scare in these people," he said.

There was no scare in Janzen, either from his more experienced veteran challengers or from the gray, threatening skies that accompanied a severe thunderstorm watch.

The thunderstorms did not materialize and neither did a concerted challenge from anyone with a realistic chance of overtaking the 28-year-old leader.

Janzen, armed with a two-stroke lead at the start of the day, birdied the first two holes and never looked back.

He was never headed and essentially only Stewart could keep him in sight.

Stewart made two birdies, a two-putt on the final hole and another on the 13th, this from some 30 inches, and only three times did he have to one-putt for par in a steady, grind-it-out effort resembling the work of Nick Faldo at his best.

"I didn't take advantage of all my opportunities," said Stewart, who missed three times on the back on birdie efforts ranging from 10 to 15 feet, "but I kept my patience and I hung in there."

So did Janzen.

After his opening birdies, on iron shots that nestled within six feet of the flags, Janzen hit a little rough spot, making bogey off a poor drive on the third and three-putting the fifth.

But Janzen, showing no trace of emotion, rolled in a 20-footer on the eighth hole and four times made putts of 3 to 6 feet to save par before he missed the green and bogeyed the 15th.

He reached the par-5 final hole with a long iron on his second shot, ensuring the two-putt birdie that kept him in front.

Nicklaus can no longer hope for 3rd Baltusrol title

By Tom Canavan
AP Sports Writer

SPRINGFIELD, N.J. — The gallery following Jack Nicklaus during the third round of the U.S. Open got just what it wanted — a 3-under-par 67.

Only one problem. It came from the other guy in the pairing: Fred Funk.

Nicklaus shot a 6-over-76 and was at 8-over par, out of contention in his bid to win his third straight Open at the Baltusrol Golf Club, where he won in 1967 and '80.

"I didn't play well," said Nicklaus, whose scores have climbed progressively after the 53-year-old gave his faithful hope for yet another major title with an opening round par-70. "I drove the ball like I have been driving. I drove the ball wonderfully yesterday and terribly today."

Funk, a golf coach at Maryland for eight years before joining the PGA Tour, gave the crowd something to cheer about. Starting at 2-over, he birdied the fourth from 20 feet and later birdied 11, 12 and 13 with putts of 15, 12 and 12 feet.

"The crowd was behind him," Funk said. "He deserved it. But then they got behind me when I made the birdies. It turned around. They were for him, but they were for me, too. In the beginning it was all Jack. Then I got on the board and everybody rooted for him and me."

Funk said it was an experience playing with Nicklaus, especially playing in front of such a huge gallery.

They were loud. They were vocal and there were more than a few times the "Jack" and "Let's go, Jack" calls sounded across the fairways of a course that is known in some circles as "Jack's Place."

"He's the best that has ever played the game," said Funk, whose one career win is 74 fewer than Jack's total on the PGA and the PGA Senior tours. "No one has the records he does."

In a way, Funk said he was a little uncertain what to do playing with Nicklaus.

Do you talk to him? Do you not?

"It was very easy to get along with him," Funk said. "He talks to you if you want and he doesn't if you don't."

They ended up chatting, although both were a little disappointed finishing the round.

Nicklaus' big problems came at the 13th and 14th holes, where poor drives led to a bogey and double bogey.

A bad drive on the par-4 15th cost Funk a stroke, and his failure to knock in birdie putts of 10 feet or less on the 14th, 17th and 18th hurt him, too.

"He played very well," Nicklaus said. "I was pulling for him to make the last two birdies that would have put him right in the middle of having a chance to win. He still has a chance to win."

Funk, who celebrated his 37th birthday a couple of days ago, had no intention of putting any pressure on himself.

"I'd like to finish in the top 16 and get back to Augusta (for the Masters)," Funk said. "I still need some money to get in the PGA."

For Nicklaus, Sunday will likely be his final round at Baltusrol. He is not expecting a dramatic improvement.

"My timing is non-existent in my swing," Nicklaus said. "I never felt the clubhead to the ball. Yesterday it felt so good."

Without a swing, Nicklaus can expect more holes like the 14th and 15th.

"Without those two holes, I'm shooting 73, which isn't terrible," Nicklaus said. "That didn't get me back into the tournament. I needed to shoot 67."

Which is just what Fred Funk did.

63 catapults Green to top

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — Tammie Green thought she was due for some improvement in the third round of the Rochester International. She wasn't expecting a career-best 9-under-par 63.

Green's flawless round of nine birdies Saturday vaulted her past 24 other players to the top of the leaderboard. Her three-round total is 10-under-par at 206.

"I felt like if I had two good days I could move up — but I didn't figure on being right in the thick of things," Green said.

Kelly Robbins is a shot back. Nancy Lopez, who led the first two rounds of the 72-hole tournament, is tied with Jenny Lidback at 8-under.

Green started the day eight shots off the lead, after shooting 74 and 69 in her first two rounds. But she said she has been playing well lately — finishing in the top 10 at her past three LPGA tournaments.

"I've been feeling a low round coming for a long time," she said. On Saturday, "everything kind of came together."

Green won the Healthsouth Palm Beach Classic in February in a playoff against JoAnne Carner. The only other victory of Green's seven-year career came in the 1989 du Maurier Classic.

Robbins, in her second year on the tour, had seven birdies and one bogey in a round of 66.

"I think I finally learned what side of the cup to be on," she said.

Green's round tied the tournament record set last year by defending champion Patty Sheehan.

Sheehan shot a 68 Saturday to move to 7-under, tied with Beth Daniel, Dottie Mochrie, Alice Ritzman, Nancy Scranton and Barb Bunkowsky.

Lynn Connelly, one stroke off the lead at the start of the round, was at 10-under after nine holes but had four bogeys on the back to finish 2-over. She is tied with five other players at 210.

COON RAPIDS, Minn. — Simon Hobday sloshed and slashed through the rain and caught first-round leader Jack Kiefer on Saturday, promising a scramble Sunday for the $157,500 winner's share in the inaugural Burnet Senior Classic.

Seven golfers are within two strokes of the lead in the $1.05 million tournament at the 6,894-yard Bunker Hills Golf Course.

Hobday, who trailed by two strokes after the first round, shot a 4-under-par 68 for a two-day total of 134. Kiefer followed Friday's course-record 64 with a 70.

Jim Dent, who matched Chi Chi Rodriguez for the day's best round with a 67, is tied with Jim Ferree a stroke off the lead.

Rodriguez, No. 2 on the Senior PGA career money list but the winner of only one event in the last two years, shot 32 on the back nine and moved within two shots of the lead. Also at 136 were Rocky Thompson and Bob Murphy.

Dick Hendrickson, who led most of the first round before finishing the day just one stroke behind Kiefer, double-bogeyed, shot 39 on the front nine, finished with a 74 and fell five strokes back.

After a downpour forced a two-hour delay in the morning, the round was played in a light but steady rain.

Tempers flare after Saturday practice

Associated Press

■ Miller 400

BROOKLYN, Mich. — If practice is any indication, Sunday's Miller Genuine Draft 400 could be quite a race.

NASCAR Winston Cup point leader Dale Earnhardt and Mark Martin collided Saturday during a practice session on the 2-mile, high-banked Michigan International Speedway oval, badly damaging Martin's Ford Thunderbird.

"If anybody has questions, they need to be asking the man in black," Martin said angrily as his crew worked feverishly under a hot sun banging out the crumpled right side of his car.

"I'm not mad right now," added Martin, whose facial expression and tone of voice belied his words. "I've been madder. My guys are mad at me for wrecking this race car.

"But I'm not going to stop racing (Earnhardt) — not in practice, not anytime. If it means we have to fix a lot more cars, I'm not going to stop racing him."

Earnhardt, who leads defending Miller 400 winner Davey Allison by 225 points in the Winston Cup standings, came away from the incident with only minor damage to his Chevrolet Lumina.

"The 83 (Lake Speed) came out of the pits and up on the back straightaway," Earnhardt explained. "I was behind him and Mark was on the outside of me. We went into the corner and my car got loose. I got up into Mark and then got it off of Mark.

"If I kept going like I was going, me and Mark both would have gone into the wall. I cut it as hard as I could and stood in the gas and spun it down. If I hadn't done that, it would have wiped both of us out. ... Everybody makes mistakes. It wasn't intentional."

Martin's version of the incident was somewhat different.

"The 83 car, coming up the backstretch, not completely up to speed. pulled out," said Martin, who is 12th in the standings, trailing Earnhardt by 473 points. "I was next to Dale and Dale was going to have to back off. And he didn't and ran into the side of me.

"He hasn't seen the last of me, I'm going to tell you that. He's racing for the championship. I'm not. I haven't got a chance at the championship, and I can tear up as many cars as I need to."

Brett Bodine will start from the pole, with Ricky Rudd alongside and Allison and Ken Schrader in the second row of the 41-car field.

Earnhardt starts on the outside of the third row, with Martin close behind on the inside of the fourth row.

The final 21 positions were filled Saturday, with Jimmy Spencer leading second-day qualifiers with a fast lap of 173.440 mph. That would have been good for 14th on Friday, but Spencer will start 21st, alongside rookie P.J. Jones.

Jones, who is a star in IMSA sports car racing, dominating the GTP series along with Toyota teammate Juan Fangio II, will be making only his third Winston Cup start after finishing 25th on the road course at Sonoma and crashing and finishing 34th at Dover.

310 General Help Wanted

Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?
YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:
★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?
Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?
Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?
An initial $100 deposit is required.

WHY KENT OIL COMPANY?

Kent Oil (operating Kent Kwik convenience stores) is a West Texas-based company, thirty six years old and still growing. We offer many benefits to our employees. These benefits include:

- Company-assisted medical, dental and life insurance
- Paid vacations
- Sick pay program
- Tuition reimbursement program

- Profit-sharing and retirement plan
- Intensive new hire training
- Structured continual management training

If you are considering a career in the retail industry, give Kent Oil your consideration. Please apply at the Kent Oil Office, Monday-Friday, 8 am to 5 pm, 3314 N. Loop 250 in Midland. Pre-employment drug test required.

PRIME LIVING

Text by Kes Gilhome

With its tree lined boulevards and green belt parkways, Grassland Estates are set to be one of the most elegant and pleasant areas in which to live in Midland.

Conveniently located around Scharbauer Elementary School and a five acre Neighborhood park and featuring an array of beautiful executive homes it affords residents a peaceful gentle lifestyle within easy travelling distance of the city center.

The house is a prime example of gracious living in this area. Built by Mark Payne, a respected local builder, and professionally decorated in classical wood and designer fabrics with an emphasis on luxury and ease of living, this home is perfect for those who really appreciate the finer things in life.

This four bedroom, three bathroom house has many unique and original features. The heart of the house is open plan and contains the formal living and dining rooms and the informal areas of kitchen, breakfast area and family room.

Clever use of differing ceiling heights, classical columns and a see-through fireplace separate the two areas, and help provide a sense of movement throughout the house.

The large, beautifully equipped kitchen has masses of storage space and it is part of the open plan family area. It has a variety of unusual and labor saving features such as a two tiered ceiling, a triple sink/disposal unit and 'lazy susans' in the corner cabinets; making it perfect for quick suppers or more formal entertaining.

Due to it's elegant bay window, the breakfast area is very light and airy and has a great view over the landscaped grounds with its fine flower beds and unique burms.

Leading off from the kitchen and breakfast nook is the functional, tiled utility room which has enough space for all the utilities that a large family could ever need.

The master bedroom suite occupies a large portion of the East Wing and overlooks the patio and garden, providing a perfect retreat form the stresses and strains of modern day life.

With custom window coverings and a padded wall in the master bedroom by Ralph Lauren and a magnificently appointed bathroom featuring a huge whirlpool tub, cathedral ceiling and double vanity to mention but a few of the aspects, this section of the house is definitely for those who appreciate their luxury and comfort.

The other three bedrooms are all very large and feature enormous windows, high ceilings, walk-in closets and are designed very much for easy living.

The three car garage is perfect for a busy family and in keeping with the rest of the house, it contains a tremendous amount of storage space.

Overall, this is a wonderful home which has had masses of attention lavished on it. Details such as double glazing, security systems and extra insulation not only make the house economical to maintain, but also safe to live in. Both major considerations in the 1990's.

For more information about this marvelous home, call Ruth Young of The Prudential Realtors at 682-7884.

Buying your first home, or tenth, know who represents you

Kay Sutton

Whether you're buying your first home, or your tenth, today's consumers have the option to choose the type of representation they want when enlisting the expertise and knowledge of a real estate professional.

"Traditionally, most agents represented the seller," says Kay Sutton, president of the Midland Association of Realtors.

"Today, however, home buying consumers have the option to seek assistance with their search for the perfect home from a buyer's broker - a real estate professional who will agree to represent their sole interest," Sutton explains.

Buyer's brokerage involves an agent representing the buyer in a real estate transaction for a fee paid by, or on behalf of, the buyer. A buyer's broker is employed by a purchaser to get the best possible price and terms for a buyer. For example, a buyer's broker might negotiate for a smaller deposit, for all closing costs to be paid by the seller, or for other contract terms most favorable to the purchaser. Assistance from a buyer's broker may also include helping the buyer obtain legal assistance to review proposed contract or structural inspectors to examine the property. In a buyer's broker situation, it is up[to the agent and the buyer to negotiate the fee for the service.

"A buyer's broker represents the buyer just as a seller is represented by a seller's agent," says Sutton.

Other types of relations that can exist include the following:

- Seller's Agent - the agent represents the seller in a transaction and works with the buyer as a customer.

- Dual Agency - the agent represents both the buyer and seller in the same transaction. This may only be done with the informed consent of both the buyer and seller.

- Facilitator - the agent represents neither the buyer nor the seller. He will act as a communicator and negotiator with the purpose of making the transaction happen. The facilitator concept is relatively new to real estate and is not as common as the other types listed above.

Before deciding on what type of representation is best for you, the Midland Association of realtors recommends that, in addition to the various forms of representation, you understand that the term "agency" refers to the fiduciary relationship that exists between a buyer or seller and the real estate agent who represents them.

Currently, Texas and 42 other states and the District of Columbia have mandated agency disclosure, either through legislation or regulation. This requires a real estate agent to inform the parties to a transaction whom they represent.

"The changes in the way real estate professionals are representing consumers can be attributed to a better-educated public looking for more flexibility and options in the buying process," explains Sutton.

"The National Association of Realtors and our Midland Association of realtors endorse freedom of choice and informed consent for consumers of real estate services when creating agency relationships with real estate professionals," she adds.

"We recognize that our industry is changing and we are committed to respond to these changes," Sutton says.

"Our policies emphasize the importance of education and training on the topic of agency, and we applaud our state legislative bodies for implementing requirements for pre-licensing courses and continuing education programs to address the topic of agency," she adds.

The Midland Association of realtors is one of more than 1,800 local boards, and associations of Realtors nationwide that comprise the National Association of Realtors. As the nation's largest trade association, NAR is "The Voice for Real Estate," representing nearly 750,000 members involved in all aspects of the real estate industry.

Summertime Safety Tips

Jan Melton
Owner/Broker
Re/Max of Midland

It's summertime! Time to swim, bar-b-que, and enjoy the outdoors. Here are a few safety tips to help you have a fun and safe summer.

Tips for Children's Safety:

Children are just as susceptible to heat as adults; monitor their time outdoors, make sure they drink plenty of water.

Start the car and cool off the interior before children get in the car, especially if you are using a vinyl infant car sear or one with exposed metal belt buckles.

Always apply sun protection and mosquito repellent when children are outdoors, and reapply as needed.

Never allow a child to bike ride or play in the neighborhood alone, use the buddy system. Young children should always have adult supervision when playing outdoors.

Pick up sticks, rocks, etc. in the yard to avoid any injuries while playing, or if using a slip and slide water toy.

Teach your child bicycle safety, instruct your child to be aware of cars backing out of driveways.

Swingsets should be secured into the ground and maintained properly.

All sliding glass doors should have a sticker or sun catcher so the children are aware when the door is closed.

Children should be aware of safety rules inside the house, no running, telephone safety, etc.

The front door and back door should have secure locks at the top so a young child can not open the door, and all children should be aware of the rules of opening the door for a stranger.

Tips for Outdoor Safety:

Treat all ant beds, keep sidewalks swept, etc.

Before mowing pick up all rocks, sticks, etc.

Always wear gloves when weeding, and never reach behind bushes or areas you can not see, you might even want to take a stick and poke around first, because of snakes. Snakes also like to lay by the air conditioning unit outside because of the moisture.

When you bar-b-que, keep all charcoal starter out of the reach of children. Explain to small children the grill is hot. Never walk in the house for a minute, leaving a child outside when the grill is lit.

Select a good place to grill, consider the direction of the wind, closeness to the house, etc. Never start a fire with gasoline, or any other flammable liquid.

Other Safety Tips

Animals should be given plenty of water and have a place available in the shade where they can lay down.

If you need to keep an extra key available, don't hide it outside, in the mailbox, etc. Give it to a neighbor that you can trust.

If you go on vacation, have a neighbor keep an eye on the house, put mail and newspapers on hold and set timers on your lights.

If the family goes on an outing check the area and it's surroundings where the children will be. Watch for ants, snakes, broken glass, grass stickers, and closest lake or pond, etc.

Be sure to ice down food with mayonnaise and any meats when packing for a picnic.

Hope this helps your family have a safe and fun summer!

Langston Realtors Talk About . . .

Buying and selling property in England

Joanne Langston

As frequent visitors to England, my husband and I greatly appreciate and easily adapt to the small differences between our two countries. Four weeks of living in a flat next to Hyde Park becomes as "normal" and comfortable to us as living in our own townhome here in Midland.

However, I doubt I will ever comprehend or understand one thing about England: the way our business - real estate brokerage - is practiced in the mother country!!

The Estate Agency profession in England is 400 to 500 years old (or older). Practices have changed little over this period of time, making purchasing, selling or brokering real estate vastly different than in our own country. And, in my own opinion, making it a great deal more difficult and confusing for all parties! I love England, but I am glad that I am a Realtor in the U.S. where our profession is constantly adapting to better, more cooperative and more client oriented ways of doing business.

I was first exposed to these differences between real estate brokerage in the U.S. and estate agency in the U.K. in 1984 when, as president of a national relocation/referral network, I was invited to address a meeting of a similar organization in London. As I arose to speak to estate agents from England, Ireland and Scotland, I realized that I was looking at an audience of 400 MEN! Major difference #1: estate agency is almost exclusively a male dominated profession in the U.K.

As the week progressed, I soon became aware of Major difference #2: there was (and is) no Multiple Listing Service or similar association in England. A customer seeking a home is provided information on and sees only the properties listed by each individual company. The customer is virtually put in the position of contacting as many as 10 offices to see 10 properties because no system exists for cooperation in sales or exchange of information between firms.

However, 10 offices may offer to show that customer the same property because all 10 may have it listed! Exclusive right to sell listings are the exception rather than the rule - Major difference #3. Three signs may appear on one home (agencies are currently trying to limit this to only one); five listing agents may have flyers of the property displayed in the windows of five different companies; and two other agents may be sending out mailings on the house. No one really knows what is going on with the sale of that property - even, I suspect, the owner!

Major difference #4: because of nominal compensation to an agency for effecting a sale, most owners are expected to assume all the costs of marketing the property, that is the costs of advertising, flyers, pictures, brochures, etc. even when incurred by several companies! And, as often as not, when a prospect expresses an interest in seeing a property, the agent simply calls the owner up to inform him that he is "sending the prospect around." I once asked an agent about follow up with customers after they've gone on their own to see a property and was told "Oh, they'll call back if they're interested."

Major difference #5, probably also necessitated by the small compensations for selling, is that most estate agencies expand to cover multiple facets of real estate sales. Firms will encompass not only negotiators (who seldom negotiate but usually only show properties then bring the customer back to the owner or manager of an office for discussions on offers), but also auctioneers, (a very normal and prevalent way of selling real estate in England), valuers (I believe this is appraisers), surveyors (not so much the same as surveyors as we know them in the U.S. but more like our property condition inspectors), and building societies (mortgage companies).

The process from contract to closing of the sale of a property is even more varied than our way of doing business. But, let me tell you about that next week! Hope you've found this interesting and will be with me next Sunday.

A GOOD PRODUCER HAS ONLY TWO VALID REASONS WHY HE OR SHE IS NOT WITH RE/MAX:
1. There is no RE/MAX office in the area and/or 2. The existing office is all filled up

What other excuse could there be when benefits and features are so overwhelmingly in the agent's favor?

The question is not should you change....BUT CAN YOU AFFORD NOT TO!

AT RE/MAX YOU ARE THE COMPANY

OIL REPORT

Midland Reporter-Telegram

Activity Indicators/4E
Oil & Gas Activity/5-7E

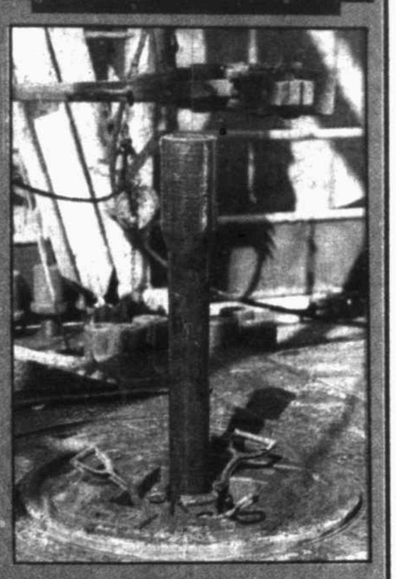
Serving 54 counties in West Texas and New Mexico

BRIEFING

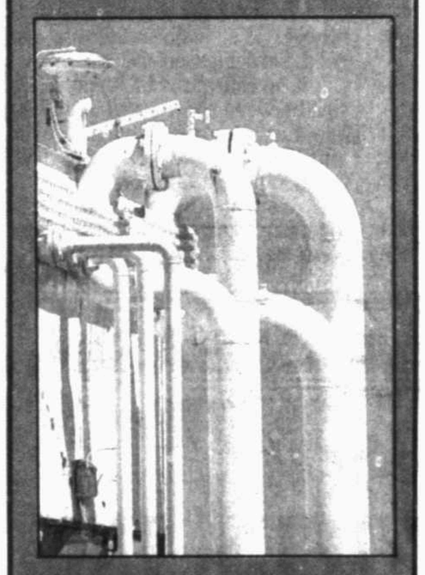


Rig count rises

More rigs went to work during the week ended June 11, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

The company reported that the Permian Basion rig count climbed seven to 113 during the week. The count remains above the year-ago level of 90 rigs.

Nationwide, the rig count surged 25 to 711, well above the year-ago count of 596, which had set a record low. The gap between oil and gas rigs narrowed, with 365 rigs drilling for oil and 327 drilling for gas.



Unsteady prices

Oil prices continued to sink early in the week, following Kuwait's refusal to accept a smaller quota increase than it wanted.

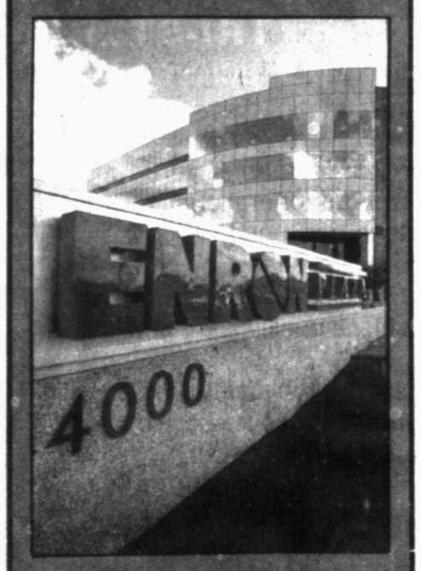
However, prices began to rebound mid-week when the American Petroleum Institute reported a greater than expected decline in U.S. oil stocks. By late in the week, prices had rebounded to near $19, at $18.84 per barrel. The posted price stood at $17.25 per barrel.

Natural gas prices also were stronger, rising to $2.19 per thousand cubic feet late in the week.

More job cuts

Halliburton said this week that it will cut several hundred jobs as part of a sweeping reorganization of the the oilfield service group, which employs 26,000.

Most of the jobs will be management positions from 10 business units operated by Halliburton.



Enron home

Enron Oil & Gas Co., Enron Gas Processing Co., Transwestern Pipeline Co. officially dedicated their new home this week with an open house at the new Enron Building at 4000 N. Big Spring in Midland. The building was formerly occupied by Union Texas Oil Co.

Oilpatch artist, Eddy Walker cuts a western scene on an old skillet.

Welder has passion for oilpatch art

ALLISON, Texas (AP) — Eddy Walker, a longtime welder of oil field and farm equipment, finds himself meddling — and metaling — in the art world these days.

Walker, whose Creative Metal Arts is now about four years old, said his artwork sprang from his welding work.

For years, the Allison native said he noticed that the heat from his welding tools brought out different colors in the metal he worked.

And that gave him an idea.

"I just kept seeing all the colors in the metal, so I would start making pictures out of the colors," he said.

Working in his welding shop behind his Allison home, Walker said he began sketching drawings on old skillets, plow disks or round saw blades. Then using his welding tools he would cut away the metal "where the picture ain't" and then use the heat from a torch to "paint" his metal picture different colors.

Rig count making a comeback

■ Number of working rigs surge, creating shortage fears

By Mella McEwen
Staff writer

After hitting lows not seen since Baker Hughes began tracking drilling activity in the 1940s, the national rig count is making a comeback.

Since mid-April, the national tally has gained 108 rigs, climbing to over 700 this past week. The rig count which started the year at 900, as rigs continued tight sands drilling, but dropped to 603 in mid-April as this work came to an end. Since then, however, the rig count has made a comeback, gaining 108 rigs since April.

Experts credit the rising fortunes of natural gas for the increase. Gas prices are sharply higher than year-ago levels and have prompted a surge in natural gas drilling. Plus, advances in oil-finding technology and, until recently, stable oil prices have also boosted drilling activity.

While there is joy in the industry over the rising rig count, there is also concern that the industry, decimated by a decade of oil industry economic depression, may

Drilling costs going up with the count

By Mella McEwen
Staff writer

As the rig count goes up, so are drilling costs. The 1992 drilling cost index fell over 4 percent from 1991, according to the Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA), but now drilling costs are on there way back up, say contractors.

Local contractors attribute the decline in large part to a severe drop in drilling activity that saw the Baker Hughes rig count fall to a record low of 596 and too many rigs chasing too few jobs. But, this year, with the rig count posting a gain of 108 rigs in just eight weeks, costs are rising, and Permian Basin drilling contractors say they are trying to carefully pass those costs along to their customers.

"What we have seen is that the people that work for us, our vendors and suppliers, are doing their best to keep costs down because they know the rig count has been very low and they're doing their hardest to keep their costs down to us because it's difficult in this low

CNG Services merges with Denver company

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

When Jim Woodcock first seized a vision for the future of compressed natural gas (CNG) in 1988 and decided it would be an emerging market he could profit from, there wasn't a hundred people in Texas who knew what CNG was all about. Even the chairmen and presidents of major oil companies often confessed they did not know what CNG was.

When Woodcock founded CNG Services Inc. the next year, to package compressor systems for natural gas fuel stations, it was one of the first such firms in the nation to gear up in that direction. Five years later, CNG and natural gas vehicles (NGVs) have become a household word and a cornerstone of the National Energy Strategy. And, CNG Services Inc. went on to become one of the most successful designers and builders of CNG fueling systems in the country.

The company built facilities for some of the larger metropolitan areas, including: Amarillo, Austin, Lubbock, Odessa, Midland and Garland, as well as Lafayette, La., and Covington Tenn., and was the first company to build a network of CNG fuel facilities for Atmos Energy Inc.

It was also the first to build a combi-

U.S. looks to methane-electric economy

Pitts

What does America's energy future hold? What will be the role of the oil and gas industry two or three decades down the road?

A Houston-based, natural gas consulting firm, has projected current energy scenarios several decades down the road and made some daring predictions. Not surprisingly, they see a long methane-electric bridge leading to an all-electric future in which oil and gas intensity will be significantly reduced.

A report released by Dar & Co., which consults for oil and gas firms on energy matters, notes that the world has gone from an agarian society invented by the ancient Chinese, to an industrial society invented by Victorian British and is now moving into a cerebral rconomy invented by the United States.

In the cerebral economy the chief commodity will be knowledge and manipulating symbols, rather than materials, will be the chief activity. The prime energy for this economy, says the report will be methane-electric — at least for the the next two or three decades.

Because the U.S. will use less energy as it moves out of the industrial economy and because it will use energy more efficiently, Dar & Co. notes that the U.S. will become less and less reliant upon oil-based fuels, which it says peaked in intensity 16 years ago because of efficiency.

The report points out that America has become increasingly energy efficient over the past 60 years and will continue to do so. The nation now uses 40 percent less energy per dollar of GNP than in 1933, and less oil per dollar of GNP than 1929, well before the age of airplanes and automobiles.

While methane (natural gas) will be equally harnessed with electricity for 20-30 years, the report notes that the stationary end-use fuel of the cerebral economy will increasingly be electricity: "because it is convenient, invisible to users, ubiquitous and it is currently the only carrier in voice, data, image and text: the four building blocks of the information age. In the future, photons and even organic cells may become such carriers but even so, the devices housing them will be powered by electricity. Eventually, even surface transportation will also be dominated by electricity."

The study says natural gas vehicles will play a larger and larger role over the next few decades, but will be eventually displaced, perhaps 25 years from now, by electric vehicles which will replace the internal combustion engine. In the meantime, methane (primarily as natural gas) will begin to back gasoline and diesel fuels out of the market.

In the all electric economy the report says numerous forms of energy — oil, natural gas, clean coal, alcohol, hydroelectric and even active solar will be used to produce electricity.

The methane-electric economy will offer many challenges and opportunities for producers of natural gas.

COSTS: Drilling cost up

activity to try to pass on costs increases to the operators," said Tommy Knowles, president of FWA Drilling.

"In spite of that," he continued, "we have seen some increases in some of our costs, especially in the area of used equipment and things we try to buy at auctions. The availability of that equipment has been reduced significantly and the price of what equipment is available has gone up.

"We've seen our costs to get a well drilled go up significantly in the past six to 12 months. Ultimately, that increase in cost has to be paid for by the operators."

He said the operators he works with have been understanding about the cost increases, realizing that the company is working to keep increases down.

"The operators don't like it, but they know drilling contractors have been operating on a shoestring for a long time and fully understand that costs have to go up eventually to replace equipment. Essentially there is no new equipment being built and we've been buying and using used equipment and will continue to do so as long as it's available, but ultimately the operator knows costs have to go up."

Leroy Peterson, vice president of Peterson Drilling, and president of the Permian Basin Chapter fo the International Association of Drilling Contractors, also observed that the used equipment market seems to be diminishing, "as far as major rig components, at least. And when you buy new equipment, you're paying a higher price. This in turn adds to the cost of drilling a well."

He said that "I'd like to think we're getting more money than we were a year ago. Obviously, we're paying more costs for equipment than we were a year ago. But profitability is still very low for the drilling business, and I think that's pretty widespread."

The IPAA, in releasing its drilling cost index, noted that heavy discounting played a major factor in the price of individual items. The purchased items category, which includes includes such items as road and site preparation, transportation, wireline data services, casing hardware, drill bits and reamers and supervision and overhead, makes up 69 percent of the cost of drilling and equipping a well, the IPAA said, adding that this group stayed relatively flat for the first time in five years.

The remaining 31 percent of the index is payments to drilling contractors. The IPAA noted that this component showed an increase in 1990 and declines in 1991 and 1992, in conjunction with the rotary rig count. The IPAA said that, after the rig count reached its record low, drillers were able to put rigs back to work through the fall as natural gas prices rose and Section 29 tax credit drilling increased. But, the IPAA said, as an annual number, the weak spring of 1992 had a bigger impact on payments to contractors.

Peterson pointed out that the drilling industry is still very competitive, though supply and demand are in better balance.

"There are still more drilling rigs available than there are wells to be drilled," he observed. "As long as that scenario stays, prices won't really increase."

And, he said, to illustrate how borderline the industry is, he said that if a contractor is anxious to put a couple of rigs back to work and begins cutting costs, it could bring an onslaught of competitiveness and bring prices back down.

He would like to see an increase in labor costs, meaning he could pay his hands more. "Rig hands are basically getting the same money they were 10 years ago," he said. "We're having to compete for labor against grocery store-type jobs, the types of jobs we didn't have to compete against before. That's one thing I wish the supply and demand factor would include, an increase in paying labor costs. In other jobs, workers put in 40 hours a week and know they'll have a job next week. We haven't had that kind of stability. The best thing we could see in the next few months is some sort of stability as far as working days for a rig, having a job to go to when the current one is finished, something to hang your hat on."

Peterson, whose company works primarily on southeastern New Mexico, said that he is encouraged by the trend he is seeing of operators spending their drilling budgets in a regular pattern instead of waiting on the fourth quarter.

Hopefully, he said, this will let drillers know what to expect for the next several months and give the industry some badly needed stability.

"As long as we can maintain stability, I don't think anyone would see a great increase in drilling rates; we won't have that surge where there'll be equipment shortages and things like that. If suppliers know they can expect to sell so much equipment between now and December, they'll manufacture that amount and costs will stay steady and there won't be that surge late in the year or great decline the following spring. That's what we've been asking for for quite some time, something we can plan on that will be there for the next few months at least, so we know what we need to spend and plan for what's coming up."

CNG: Firm moves on

nation CNG-LNG (liquified natural gas) fuel facility for Austin Metro, and in the latest venture has signed a multi-million dollar contract to build eight fueling stations in New Mexico for the Gas Co. of New Mexico.

Now, the Midland firm has become a principal in what is probably the first merger of consequence in the fast-growing NGV industry. The merger which was announced at the recent Texas Alternate Fuels Fair in Austin, promises to make the combined company one of the major players in the CNG/LNG market.

Involved in the stock-for-stock merger are Marcum Natural Gas Services Inc. of Denver and CNG Services Inc. of Midland, both of whom are pioneers and innovators in providing equipment and services for the construction of compressed natural gas fueling facilities.

The two companies will be merged into Marcum CNG Systems Inc., with facilities in Midland and Denver, and will provide research, design and engineering for CNG fuel facilities to both public and private entities.

Officials of the new firm say the merger, which involves a stock swap, was achieved to build a bigger and stronger company better positioned to meet the rapid growth of the natural gas vehicle industry.

"The natural gas vehicle industry is expected to grow by leaps and bounds over the next next two decades with 12 million natural gas vehicles predicted for the year 2010, and companies must begin to get positioned now with resources, personnel and technology to meet that growth," said Phil Marcum, president of Marcum Natural Gas Services, and former president of MGF Oil Co. in Midland.

"The merger brings together the strengths of the two companies," said Woodcock, "the capital and marketing strength of Marcum and the engineering and expertise of CNG Services Inc."

CNG Services was a unit of Hy-Bon Engineering Inc. also of Midland, which has been a leading provider of compression packages for oilfield, natural gas, and industrial applications, since 1958.

Marcum Natural Gas Service (traded over the counter) is a diversified public company engaged in natural gas transmissions, natural gas measurment, and the manufacture of CNG fuel dispensers. Its wholly owned subsidary DVCO Fuel Systems Inc. is the leading provider of fuel dispensers which have been installed at CNG fuel facilities in 17 states and two foreign countries.

Said Woodcock: "With Marcum Natural Gas Services' three subsidaries and international connections, the company offers a marketing dimension we needed for more rapid growth of the company. We saw the direction Marcum was taking his company and decided we wanted to join."

While Woodcock has merged CNG Service Inc., he still plans to pursue other CNG and LNG ventures. He is currently working on a design for a home compressor that will sell for under $1,500 and allow families to fuel CNG vehicles overnight in their garage, and has also has plans to build a compressor package to produce methane from metropolitan landfills.

PITTS: New energy age

Coal-bed and tight-sand methane are predicted to significantly increase their share of the market in the lower-48 states over the next 20 years, because of a low finding cost, which gives both resources the characteristics of a manufacturing process.

Sophisticated E&P technology in seismic and drilling will provide steady incremental increases in natural gas reserves and insure that natural gas finds increasing use as a bridge fuel even while losing market share in most end uses, except as CNG and LNG as transportation fuel.

It is predicted "consumption and conversion technology and competitive electricity will gradually push natural gas out of many end uses, even as gas begins to slowly push heating oil out of end use markets."

It is in transportation, as a competitor to oil, and in new electricity generation via independent power projects and on site self generation, that gas will see its consumption increase — but to no great degree before the year 2003 when the use of methane is expected to take off.

States the report: "The energy industry may will be on the verge of one of those historical cusps where change is first felt gradually and then suddenly."

In other findings the report predicts that:

■ Natural gas rate based monopolies such as electric and gas utilities will be increasingly supplanted by unregulated, independent natural gas and electric companies.

■ Both rate based monopolies and Government will become increasingly irrevalant to national prosperity and business success in the Methane-Electric economy.

■ The methane-electric economy will result in lower energy costs that will be a boon for energy consumers and will help American business become more productive and competitive.

■ Spikes and crashes will occur in energy prices, but over the broad sweep of decades, the real price of energy in the U.S. has nowhere to go but down.

■ At the same time, the real cost of finding, producing, transporting and consuming energy will decline, perhaps more rapidly than prices and margins for producers could expand.

■ To many in the energy enterprise, especially the oil and gas business, the competitive consequences of technological change and the strategic implications of the cerebral economy seem both remote and academic.

■ Underestimating the power of the free market and the impact of change will be vital to survival for the rest of the century. Failure to do so could cause many dominant firms to end up as footnotes to business history.

While the Dar report is pure conjecture, subject to many factors, including the lack of vision on the part of business, and government's usual penchant for thwarting, it is nontheless very plausible. Take the events and trends of the last ten years and multiply it by three and you get something pretty close to the scenario Dar has predicted for the next three decades.

ART: Welder paints with torch

(From 1E)

Walker said he can cut out of metal "about any picture you've seen." But much of his work has a western theme.

At first, Walker said his artistic inclinations were just a sidelight.

"Before I went to (art) shows, I made them and gave them away as Christmas presents and gifts," he said. "Everyone said, 'You've got to show these somewhere.'"

Even with the encouragement of friends and family, Walker said he began going to art shows almost out of necessity.

When his welding business began to fall off after the oil bust, Walker said he began looking for a way to stay in Allison and make use of the welding tools he had invested in.

For now, Walker said, he has not completely abandoned welding. But eventually he wants to devote his attention full-time to Creative Metal Arts.

"Someday, I hope this is all I do," he said of his artwork. "I enjoy this. It's a lot of fun. And it beats that welding."

Walker has never had any formal art training, he said.

"I never even had any art in school. It's just something the good Lord blessed me with."

But he estimates he has already sold between 200 to 300 of his works and has received inquiries from places as far away as Hollywood, Calif., and Buffalo, N.Y.

Walker said Creative Metal Arts is "doing real good," but it didn't come easy.

COUNT: Rig count up

not be able to accommodate a sharp increase in demand.

Charles Hinton Jr., chairman of the International Association of Drilling Contractors and president of W.B. Hinton Drilling Co. Inc., told members of the Petroleum Cost and Finance Committee of the Independent Petroleum Association of America that the U.S. would require some 2,000 drilling rigs to meet the country's natural gas storage and consumption needs.

But, he told members, that level of activity is impossible to achieve without significant capital investment and personnel training.

"The decade of neglect endured by the drilling industry has shriveled the U.S. drilling fleet to a level where it would be extremely difficult to place even 1,200 rigs in service," he told the committee.

Local drillers Tommy Knowles, president of FWA Drilling, and Leroy Peterson, vice president of Peterson Drilling, both agree that the demand for drilling rigs and experienced personnel are quickly catching up with demand.

Peterson said one customer told him that he didn't think the Permian Basin could put 10 additional rigs put to work because of labor constraints.

Still, Peterson said, "Our company has six rigs, so we feel comfortable with our labor situation right now. But we have all our rigs running; some of our larger competitors, I think, have had some problems."

Knowles predicted that supplies of cheaper rig parts will tighten as the rig count rebounds.

Right now, he said, rig availability is very good. "We have rigs and most of our competitors have rigs ready to work."

But, he said, "the supply of experienced people is very limited."

He noted that some of the people who worked for FWA in the fourth quarter when all the company's rigs were running have moved on to other work. The limiting factor on rig activity, he concluded, is the number of experienced people he can hire as he gets ready to put rigs back to work.

Peterson blames a lack of pay raises due to drillers' tight or nonexistent profit margins over the past 10 years. He said drillers right now are competing with other businesses such as grocery stores for workers because the wages are comparable. And, he admitted, the steady work promised by other businesses is also drawing away potential rig hands.

With the early gain in the rig count — as opposed to the traditional fourth quarter surge, Peterson said that "I hope what we're seeing is the majors and larger independents coming back to do business in the U.S. With the BTU tax being eliminated, hopefully a tax increase won't be so severe on the industry and it will encourage companies to come back to the U.S. We can still develop our own fields, whether they're oil or gas fields, and maintain some sort of industry here."

SPE to examine gas technology, business integration

RICHARDSON — The SPE Gas Technology Symposium will examine the integration of technology with business June 28-30 at the Westin Hotel in Calgary, Canada.

The 61-paper technical program revolves around the meeting theme "Natural Gas: Realizing the Potential."

The biennial symposium gathers industry professionals to explore the potential business applications of gas technology and ways future operations can be profitable.

"Addressing business concerns and examining practical uses of advanced technology is imperative for continued growth of the natural gas industry in North America," said meeting chairman Walt DeBoni. "The industry is moving beyond the exploration phase for gas and focusing on the multifaceted approach necessary to meet the technical and business challenges of the future."

With the Society of Petroleum Engineers (SPE), the American Gas Association; Energy, Mines and Resources Canada; Gas Processors Association; Gas Research Institute; and the Petroleum Society of CIM are endorsing the conference. "This symposium provides an excellent opportunity for the exchange of ideas and information for management, researchers, and technicians," DeBoni said.

A Monday afternoon (June 28) Plenary Session highlights the 12-session program. Panelists include The Honorable Bill McKnight, Canada's Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources; James K. Gray, president and CEO of Canadian Hunter Exploration Ltd.; G.J. Maier, chairman, president and CEO of TransCanada PipeLines; John Milantoni, president of Equitable Gas Co.; and Arlon Tussing, president of Arlon R. Tussing and Assoc. Inc. The session begins at 2:00 p.m.

The technical program will cover interdisciplinary cooperation, fluid flow, hydraulic fracturing, acidizing and stimulation, measurement and processing, and horizontal well technology, gas storage, reservoir engineering and management, and coalbed methane.

The Keynote Luncheon (Monday, 12:00 noon-1:30 p.m., Westin Hotel) features Mac Van Wielingen, president and managing director of PowerWest Financial Ltd. in Montreal. One of the most active financial active financial advisors on corporate oil and gas transactions in Canada. Van Wielingen will assess the financial health of the gas industry in North America.

SPE President Jacques Bosio of Elf Aquitaine will be the featured speaker at a special Monday evening dinner sponsored by the 2,000-member Canadian Section of SPE. Bosio will address "Global Markets and Future Supplies of Gas - A European Perspective."

With more than 53,000 members, SPE is the largest international technical and professional association for engineers, scientists and managers involved in oil and gas drilling, exploration and production. The SPE global network - with members residing in more than 100 countries - collects, records and disseminates exploration and production technology.

New Acid System Can Handle In Excess of 20,000 mg/L of Ferric Iron

NOWFERR ACID

(patent pending)

International Nowsco's Exclusive Cost Effective New Formula Solves Common Acidizing Problems

International Nowsco has undertaken major studies into the mechanism of how iron causes sludging problems to provide a cost effective answer addressing all aspects of the problem including corrosion and dispersibility.

The result of this research is the NOWFERR Acid System. The system is capable of handling in excess of 20,000 mg/L of ferric iron while maintaining cost levels proportionate to the concentration of iron tolerable. A 5,000 mg/L iron tolerance is recommended if a tubing wash is possible and 20,000 mg/L if it is not.

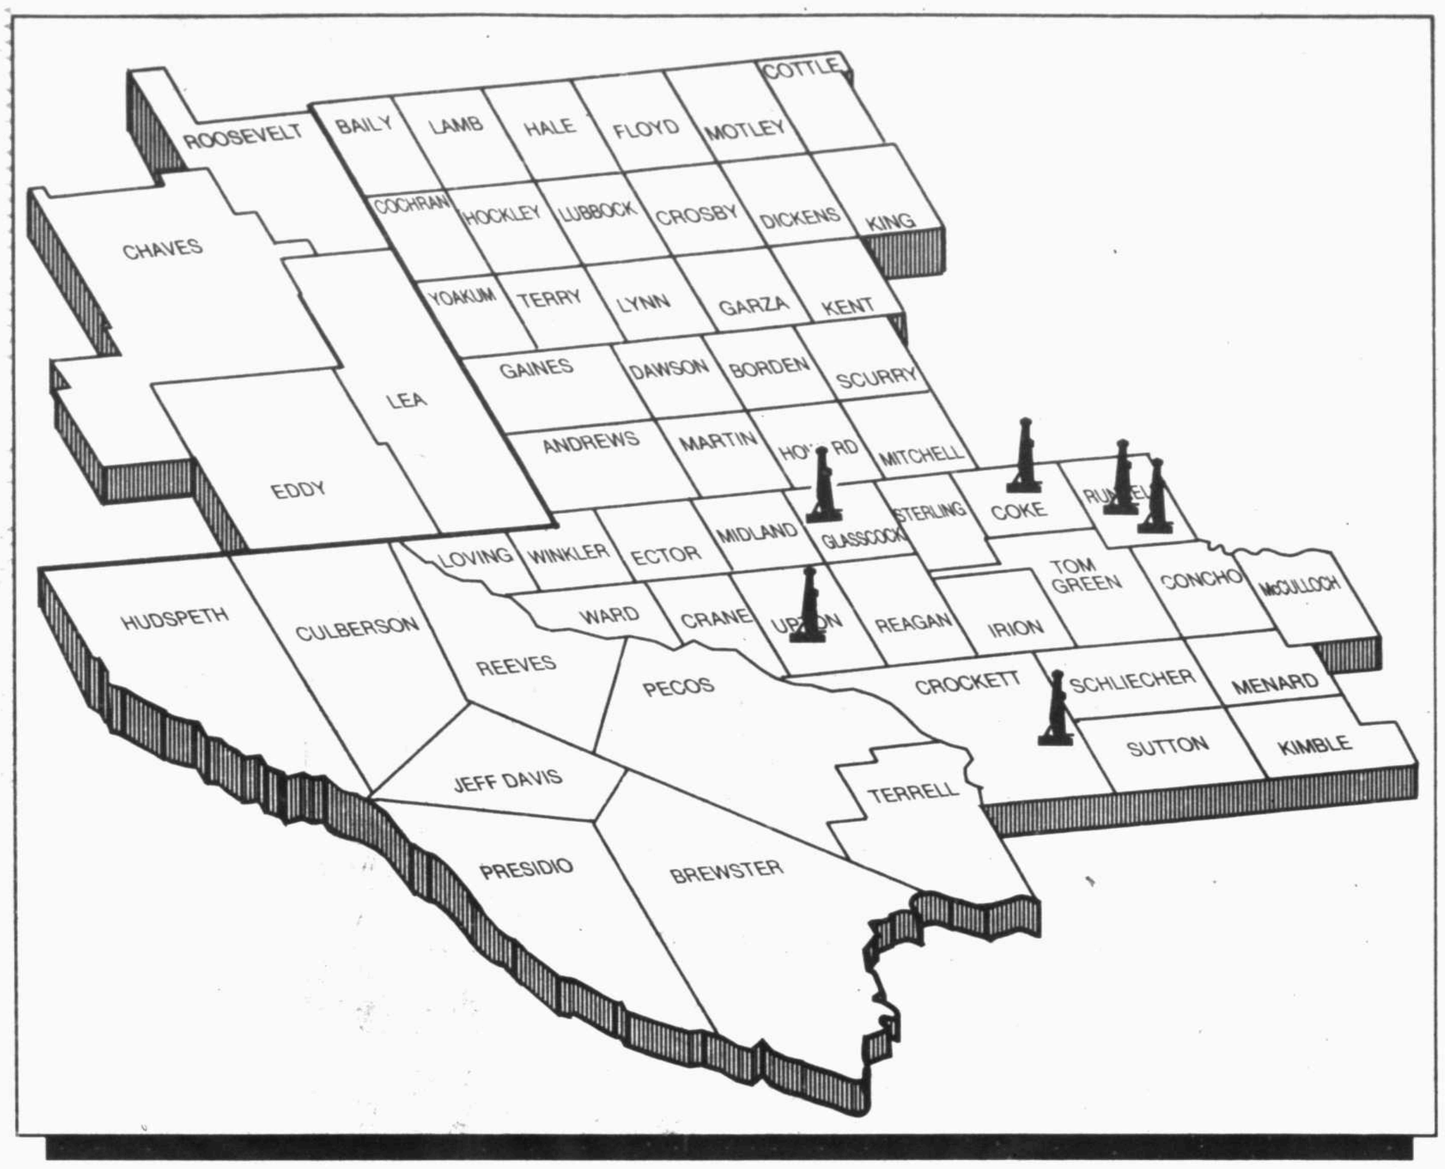
ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS



Trend reports 1,124 barrel producer

Staff report

TREND EXPLORATION has completed a prolific Wolfcamp Limestone producer in the Blalock Lake South field of Glasscock County, 13 miles northwest of Garden City.

Trend potentialed the No. 23D Powell "9-A" to flow 1,124.3 barrels of 42.7 gravity crude and 1.143 Mmcf on a 20/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 1,025 psi. The well flowed from perforations 8,121 to 8,275 ft.

Total depth was 8,372 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set.

Officials said the well — a prospect based on 3-D seismic — is producing from a 250-ft. thick section of limestone. In addition, officials said, the well is offset by a dry hole 450 ft. away that had a 50 ft. section of limestone. Without the 3-D seismic data, they said, the well would not have been drilled.

Trend has a drilling program in the area that calls for the drilling of seven to 10 wells by the end of the year. The company has drilled or participated in 18 wells in the area and of those 18, 14 have been successful producers.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,528 ft., include the San Andres at 3,205 ft., Spraberry at 4,455, Lower Clearfork at 6,135, Dean at 7,725, Wolfcamp at 8,075 and Wolfcamp Shale at 8,320 ft. Pay was topped at 8,075 ft.

Location is 538 ft. from south and 451 ft. from west lines of Section 9, Block 35, T-3-S, T&P survey.

Horizontal well yields Cisco strike

A horizontal completion in Upton County has yielded a Cisco discovery, 9.6 miles southeast of Crane.

ORYX ENERGY CO. tested the No. 2 Jacobs Livestock "D" to flow 342 barrels of 43.4 gravity crude and 422 Mcfd on a 31/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 140 psi. The well flowed from perforations 8,192 to 8,202 ft., which had been acidized with 300 gallons of 15 percent NeFeHCL acid.

Permitted as a 9,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 8,792 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set.

The well topped the Base Permian at 8,029 ft., Cisco at 8,172 and Strawn at 8,409 ft. on ground elevation of 3,120 ft.

Surface location is 1,147 ft. from south and 1,987 ft. from west lines of Section 98, William Patterson survey, Abst. 1270. Bottom hole location is 853 ft. from south and 600 ft. from west lines of the section.

The operator has requested a field designation of Heluma (Cisco) for the discovery.

Canyon discovery flows 65 barrels

Coke County has yielded a Canyon Sand discovery, 2.5 miles southeast of the IAB Northeast (Pennsylvanian 5150) field, 4.5 miles north of Robert Lee.

MARSHALL & WINSTON INC. completed the No. 1 Pentecost to flow 65 barrels of 46 gravity crude and 52 Mcfd on a 20/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 125 psi. The well flowed from perforations 5,182 to 5,194 ft., which had been acidized with 1,200 gallons of 7.5 percent NeFe acid.

Permitted as a 6,200 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 5,450 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 5,370 ft.

The well topped the Base Coleman Junction at 2,330 ft., Canyon Sandstone at 5,166 and Canyon Limestone at 5,450 ft. on ground elevation of 1,967 ft.

Location is 1,475 ft. from south and 225 ft. from west lines of Section 376, Block A, H&TC survey, Abst. 1485.

Runnels plugback reopens Byers field

A Runnels County recompletion has reopened the Byers (Dog Bend) field, 4.5 miles northeast of Ballinger.

WALSH RESOURCES INC. plugged back the No. 2 Rodney Flanagan, a former Lower Fry producer in the QV field, completing it to pump two barrels of 42 gravity crude, 10 Mcfd and three barrels of water from perforations 3,465 to 3,470 ft. The interval was acidized with 500 gallons of 15 percent Ne acid.

Originally drilled to 3,848 ft., the well was plugged back to 3,616 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 3,748 ft.

The well topped the King Sandstone at 2,178 ft., Palo Pinto at 3,224 and Gardner Limestone at 3,837 ft. on kelly bushing elevation of 1,740 ft.

Location is 1,965 ft. from north and 1,784 ft. from west lines of ETRR survey 155.

Fourth producer added to field

J H OIL INC. has added a fourth producer to the Busher (Morris) field of Runnels County, extending the field northeast, seven miles west of Ballinger.

On potential test, the No. 8 Roy Schaefer pumped 16 barrels of 36.6 gravity crude, 5 Mcfd and five barrels of water from perforations 3,862 to 3,870 ft. The interval was acidized with 500 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid and fractured with 50 sacks of sand.

Permitted as a 4,400 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 3,971 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set.

The well topped the Palo Pinto at 3,660 ft. and Morris at 3,862 ft. on ground elevation of 1,748 ft.

Location is 470 ft. from north and 1,047 ft. from east lines of Sumner Bacon survey 435, Abst. 18.

Dual gas producer tested in Crockett

ENRON OIL & GAS CO. has completed a dual gas producer in the Ozona field of Crockett County.

In the Clearfork, the No. 9 V.I. Pierce "A" was tested for a calculated absolute open flow of 120 Mcfd from perforations 2,215 to 2,555 ft. The interval was acidized with 500 gallons and fractured with 50,000 gallons of gel and 103,000 lbs. sand.

From Canyon Sandstone perforations 6,022 to 6,440 ft., the well was tested for a a calculated absolute open flow of 650 Mcfd. The interval was acidized with 750 gallons of gel and fractured with 75,000 gallons of gel and 206,000 lbs. 20/40 sand.

Total depth was 6,625 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 6,548 ft.

Enron unit names new president

HOUSTON (AP) — Northern Natural Gas Co., a subsidiary of Houston-based Enron Corp., announced that William R. Cordes had been promoted from vice president to president.

Cordes succeeds Stanley C. Horton, who as president of Enron Operations Company is responsible for Enron's interstate gas pipelines.

Cordes began working for Omaha, Neb.-based Northern as a general accountant in 1970. He was promoted through several Enron subsidiaries until being named Northern's vice president of regulatory affairs in 1990.

He held the post until his latest promotion.

Also, Northern named Mary Kay Miller as vice president of rates and certificates and Tod A. Lindholm as vice president of financial planning and analysis.

Northern supplies and transports wholesale natural gas to 73 utilities serving about 2 million customers in 10 states. The subsidiary's pipeline system represents 23,500 of Enron's 40,500 miles.

Rushing tankage to Big Lake Oil Company Well No. 18, April 14, 1925, Reagan County Oilfield. No. 18 was completed in April, 1925 flowing 1500 bbls a day; but the bit was sent four feet deeper in the formation and released an avalanche of 98i - a giant producer of 4,500 bbls a day -- an impresive performance for the Permian Basin of the 1920's.

Walter Matthau kicks double pneumonia, gambling habit

By Bob Thomas
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — Walter Matthau has beaten the odds again, surviving double pneumonia that might have meant curtains for a less stubborn 72-year-old.

That makes it a clean record for the actor, who came through bombardments in World War II and a heart attack in 1954, not to mention the slings and arrows of outraged critics.

He only wishes he had the same kind of luck with his other career, as a world-class gambler. He claims to have kicked the habit after this year's Super Bowl. He calculates his lifetime losses at $5 million.

Matthau appeared in good health as he underwent interviews for "Dennis the Menace," John Hughes' feature version of the vintage TV series and Hank Ketcham's comic strip. The actor is typecast as the irascible Mr. Wilson to 7-year-old Mason Gamble's Dennis.

The Academy Award-winning actor discussed his recent brush with the fates four months ago during an interview.

"I couldn't make the last day of shooting (on 'Grumpy Old Men' in Minnesota with Jack Lemmon). I was up all night coughing, and nothing was coming up. I went to the hospital in the morning and had some X-rays. They said, 'Boy, I don't know how you're alive. You've got bilateral infiltrate pneumonia, and your lungs are all full.'

"I got scared and they gave me a sedative, and I lay in the hospital for seven days. I haven't the slightest idea how I got pneumonia. Can you get it from cold weather? It was 22 below zero on Lake Rebecca. The story was about two old guys fishing on a frozen lake north of Minneapolis. Great place, by the way, Minnesota."

What was he thinking during those seven days?

"How nice the nurses were," said Matthau. "And the doctors. They were always in there. I guess I started telling jokes the third day. I always had a big audience. They don't have many movie stars up there."

So as not to alert the media, Matthau registered at the Fairview Southdale hospital in Edina, Minn., as Max Goldman, his name in the movie ("the nurses would come in and say, 'Good morning, Max.'"). He admits that thoughts of mortality crossed his mind, but then, his record has been pretty good.

'I had Buffalo (vs. the victorious Dallas Cowboys), and I just quit. Cold turkey.'

Walter Matthau

During World War II, Matthau crossed the English channel in a small craft through waters mined by the Germans; he also underwent bombardments in the front lines as a radio operator-cryptographer.

"We went up north to Holland and got into a terrific bombing raid," he recalled. "I was under a truck playing high-stakes pinochle. I never thought about being hit or saying, 'Is this it?' There was too much money involved; there was a hand that could have cost $3,400."

He admitted that his heart attack and bypass surgery 28 years ago changed his lifestyle: "I gave up smoking. I was more careful with the food. More exercise, walking. I'm now back up to three miles."

He's still recovering from the pneumonia. "You've got to watch that you don't wheeze at night," he said. "There's a lot of wheezing — sounds like mice running up and down your nasal cavities. Whishhht! You wake up at night and wonder, 'Where the hell are these bleeping mice?'"

The most surprising development in Matthau's life concerns his wagering.

"Gave it up after the Super Bowl," he announced. "I had Buffalo (vs. the victorious Dallas Cowboys), and I just quit. Cold turkey.

"If I had continued, I probably would have done very well. On the first day of the NBA finals I wanted to call the bookie. I wanted to make a large bet on the Chicago Bulls. Then I stopped and said, 'You're gonna win this bet. It's gonna be so easy to take that large wad of dough and put it in your pocket; you didn't even work for it. You're gonna make another bet the next day, until you're totally wiped out.' So I didn't bet.

"I still owe the books a goodly sum for the Super Bowl bet, which I told them would be payable June 15."

It may come as a surprise to Matthau watchers that he actually enjoyed working with the new Dennis the Menace, Mason Gamble.

"I don't believe that junk about not working with kids or animals; I think W.C. Fields probably said it as a joke," he declared. "Kids are fascinating to work with. You have to wait a little longer, because they aren't going to jump in and give you the lines on cue. Especially when they get tired or bored. They're going to be looking for a basketball or some kind of a game.

"I got a book full of children's jokes. I'd tell Mason a lot of jokes." Matthau claimed he always has enjoyed working with kids, even on "Bad New Bears."

"Except when the kids started fighting among themselves," he recalled. "Tatum O'Neal (then 9) had a fight with another kid, and she said, 'Cut it out, you . . . .' I said, 'All right, boys and girls, I'm going to my trailer. When you're through with the obscenities and the bickering, let me know and I'll be ready to work.' They came around five minutes later."

Matthau is a native New Yorker who studied journalism at Columbia University before acting in summer stock. He landed his first Broadway role in 1948 in "Anne of a Thousand Days," and went on to a part in "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?" But his best-known stage portrayal was in "The Odd Couple."

Besides "The Fortune Cookie," for which he won the supporting actor Oscar in 1966, Matthau's extensive movie career has included "A Face in the Crowd," "The Kentuckian," "Voice in the Mirror," "Charade," "Goodbye Charlie," "The Odd Couple," "Cactus Flower," "Charlie Varick," "The Sunshine Boys," "California Sui-Flower," "Charlie Varick," "The Sunshine Boys," "California Suite," "Hopscotch" and "Pirates."

Software company plans Clinton game

PALO ALTO, Calif. (NYT) — A tiny company is developing an interactive software game about the Clinton administration, and hopes to get key Democrats to help refine the product.

3D Games says the program for 3DO Co.'s new game-playing machine will include video clips from the 1992 presidential campaign and interviews with officials and reporters. In addition, users will be able to control a computerized version of Bill Clinton through scenes in his personal and political life.

"We can make Bill laugh, we can make Bill cry," said Seaver Lasson, 3D Games president, in an interview. "We are developing an interesting script."

Seaver, and 3DO executives, plan to meet in Washington on June 25 with unspecified members of the Democratic National Committee and the White House office of science and technology.

Feminist adult movies focus on relationships

By Michelle Locke
Associated Press Writer

SAUSALITO, Calif. — Deborah Shames remembers renting dirty movies, then giggling helplessly as she fast-forwarded through the clumsy collage of hard bodies and easy virtue.

"We were hysterical," she recalled, with a chuckle.

The problem is that the movies weren't providing "what turns women on, which is really the relationship," said her friend, psychologist Lonnie Barbach. "Men don't care, they can sit there and they can look at genitals and it's great."

Shames decided she could do better. So she wrote a script and got together $125,000. The result is "Cabin Fever," a steamy but sensitive saga that has been doing a booming business at about 50 San Francisco Bay area video stores.

"It is a phenomenon," says Rick Zea, who sold 500 copies in 10 weeks at his Santa Clara store, Borderline Entertainment. That compares to usual sales of five to 10 copies per title, he said.

Overall, 4,000 copies of the $29.95 video have been sold in two months, and a licensing deal has been signed with Playboy to air the video on its cable channel. Deals have also been signed to sell the tapes in the Sharper Image and Tower Records stores.

Shames, who hopes "Cabin Fever" is the first in an "Erotic Escapades" series, believes the video unlocked a hitherto ignored market of people who want erotic films but shy away from the unflinching exhibitionism of typical hard-core fare.

"There are so many romantic possibilities," she said. "We really call it a virgin field of female erotica."

It's a new field for Shames, too, whose previous directorial credits are straightforward health and educational videos, efforts that won her plaques from such button-down organizations as the American Medical Association.

For "Cabin Fever," Shames based her script on "Berlioz and the Ghetto Blaster," a short story by Valerie Kelly from "Erotic Interludes," an anthology edited by Barbach.

The stars are Belinda Farrell, a vibrant 47-year-old who had appeared in a slew of industrial films but had never so much as kissed on screen before, and Judd Dunning, a studly 25-year-old actor.

The 45-minute movie is replete with candlelight, flowers, a storm and limbs basking in the amber glow of a cozy fire in a cottage.

It revolves around the woman, a painter named Lenore, and her efforts to resist the charms of Jack, a handsome handyman. Their courtship is played out to the strains of classical music pouring out of Jack's portable stereo.

Lenore catches a cold, Jack offers to cook her some soup; she pops into a bubble-lined tub, and nature takes its course. Inspired, Lenore paints up a storm, Jack returns and has the last line — and a high-toned one it is — "I didn't play you any Mahler."

"What I like is there's a buildup," Shames said. "It isn't like within two minutes in pornography — they're coupling. They're having sex. Here they keep trying to have sex."

Said Barbach: "The whole question, which is very erotic, is, Will they or won't they?"

Shames and Barbach said what sets the video apart is that it's what they call a "hard R" rating, meaning sexy but no genitalia, and is about "a woman who feels good about her sexuality. She's driving the video."

Some might quarrel with the idea of a feminist adult movie, arguing that all such movies are exploitative. But Barbach says: "That is anti-feminist because it doesn't allow women to be sexual."

At first, Borderline wasn't quite sure where to put "Cabin Fever." It hardly fit with such offerings as "Young Buns," and "On Golden Blonde." But an ad saying, "We have 'Cabin Fever'" brought in customers, the first a woman in her 60s.

Zea calls the movie "a training film for X-rated movies," and Shames said she has no designs on the hard-core market.

"What we will always do that you never see in pornography is highlight the sensual passionate relationship first and foremost," Barbach said.

Shames said some "Cabin Fever" fans are men who have been looking for something a little more subtle.

Pat Benatar rocks into middle age with new blues album

By Kira L. Billik
Associated Press writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Pat Benatar has hit middle age, and likes the way it feels. She's been happily married to her guitarist, Neil Giraldo, for 12 years and has an 8-year-old daughter, Haley.

Even her image has changed — she's grown her once short, punkish hair to sleek, shoulder length. She's eschewed her Spandex togs for softly tailored menswear looks.

After putting out a blues record, "True Love," in 1991, her nose-thumbing to all who told her not to do it, the 40-year-old Benatar is back on the rock scene with her latest effort, "Gravity's Rainbow."

She feels good — and mature.

"I am damn mature," the dark-haired, petite singer affirmed with her hearty laugh in a telephone interview. "I still feel like a total juvenile delinquent ... but to me, it's perspective. I don't look at things the same way I did."

Benatar credits much of her self-assuredness to doing the blues album and the freedom that experience gave her.

"You had an idea of what it was to be a rock 'n' roll band and you kind of boxed yourself in and people on the outside were boxing you in," she said. "The thing about the blues record was that once that happened, I knew there were no more boxes. I knew that that's what rock 'n' roll was really about.

"I had billions of people telling me you can't, you shouldn't, you mustn't, and I said, it's this or I quit. I try to remember now what that felt like, the power, to know you can do that and still live.

"So when I went in there to do this record, I just went in with the same head that I went in to do the blues record — no preconceptions, just go in there like it was the first time you ever made one," she said.

Benatar has done plenty of writing on "Gravity's Rainbow," and she's proud of that contribution.

"In the beginning, I really never thought of myself as a songwriter ... even though I've always written songs on the records," she said. "For me, this record, the best thing about it is that I think I finally satisfied myself that I am (a songwriter)."

This record could bring her back to the status she held in the early and mid-'80s as one of the premiere women in rock, when she had a series of platinum albums that included "In the Heat of the Night," "Crimes of Passion" and "Get Nervous."

It's full of crunchy rock songs like "Everybody Lay Down" and "Ties That Bind"; poignant, wistful ones like "Somebody's Baby" and "Kingdom Key," and a ballad about self-reliance called "Every Time I Fall Back" that has hit single written all over it.

"I think I wrote (that) in the parking lot of a lumberyard, because it was so boring," she laughs. "Neil and I had spoken about a title for a song called 'Every Time I Fall Back,' and in that 10 minutes, I had a chorus."

Benatar's toned down her strident, classically trained vocals on the new album. She can still leap octaves like a deer ("Crazy" is a good example), but her powerhouse voice has mellowed and tempered with age. She fully exploits her rich middle and lower range, giving the entire album an insinuating feel.

"I used to (think) everything had to be with a big stick," she said. "I keep the stick, it's back here, but I don't need to take it out so much anymore. But if I need it, (if) anybody gets too wise, it's right where I can reach it."

She says her relationship with Giraldo has "evolved into something I couldn't have even hoped for" over the years.

"We're not only living our musical experience together, but we live our live experience together, so it doesn't get much tighter than that," she said. "My family life — I'm going to knock on wood right now — is so worked out now."

"You had an idea of what it was to be a rock 'n' roll band and you kind of boxed yourself in and people on the outside were boxing you in. The thing about the blues record was that once that happened, I knew there were no more boxes. I knew that that's what rock 'n' roll was really about.

—Pat Benatar

She fondly recalled her first meeting with him, which occurred in 1979 when she was looking for a guitar player. It was love at first sight for her, even though she was married to someone else.

"I wanted to have a handsome guitar player," she said with a giggle. "They had touted him really big, because he came from Rick Derringer's band, and they said, this is the guy you want, he writes ... and I'm thinking, 'Oh, yeah, right, well, let's see.'

"I saw him and I said to myself, I don't care if he can play a note — he is in the band! It just worked out that he could."

She teases that even though Giraldo says he had a similar reaction to her, "He lies — I know he didn't. It took him a while to learn to love me," she said with a big laugh.

Benatar is going out on the road to support "Gravity's Rainbow" — it'll be her first rock tour since 1988.

"It's full circle for me," she said, "and at the same time, it's starting over."

Expect her to trot out the old hits, albeit reworked a bit, like "Hit Me With Your Best Shot" and "Heartbreaker." There are certain oldies she's left behind, however, calling them "way too dated." She's got her dignity, after all.

You won't hear "Fire and Ice" or "Treat Me Right," she says.

"I'm sorry, I am not singing, 'Oo, you're giving me the fever tonight' (the opening line of "Fire and Ice") — I don't care how much money they pay me — I am not singing that," she says, letting out another big laugh.

Texan finds niche in films

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A Texas native says he has gotten a lot of good breaks since pursuing movies full-time, the latest being his role as a treasury agent-turned-bad in the Sylvester Stallone thriller "Cliffhanger."

The good breaks required a hard break — pulling away from a banking career in Oklahoma City, where former banker Rex Linn had a nice house and a bright future in business.

"It's easy to say follow your dream," Linn said recently from Oklahoma City, where he was visiting his family. He grew up in Spearman, 90 miles northeast of Amarillo in the Texas Panhandle.

"But doing it can be a very scary thing. Fortunately, my family was very supportive and encouraging."

And Hollywood welcomed him. Since leaving the banking and oil business in 1987, Linn has appeared in 30 films, television movies and series, such as "Northern Exposure," "Night Game" and "My Heroes Have Always Been Cowboys."

"Oh, I have had a few stretches where I've worked construction jobs to make ends meet," Linn said. "But I've been luckier than most aspiring actors. I've been getting roles."

He recalls the casting director called him to read for Stallone. A screen test came next, followed by a call welcoming him aboard "Cliffhanger." He had two days to pack, close his house and leave for Italy, where the movie was filmed.

"I was just lucky I had a passport," he said. "I packed everything in my house clothing-wise and found a house sitter and then I was on Alitalia. I hadn't worked in quite a while. Funds were a bit tight. 'Cliffhanger' came right in time."

Timing hasn't always been everything for Linn, who moved to Oklahoma City in 1969 and later earned a banking degree from Oklahoma State University.

He worked in the oil and gas division at Penn Square Bank when it collapsed in 1982. And despite what he calls a "roller coaster banking career," he had a good job and a comfortable life.

He also had a nagging desire to act, having studied business and drama at Oklahoma State. As his 30th birthday neared, Linn jumped at a chance to channel his business skills into a show business enterprise. He was associate producer and made his first appearance in "Shadows on the Wall," a murder mystery made in Texas for HBO.

A steady stream of small roles followed, and Linn said he got his first big break as a serial killer in "Night Game," starring Roy Scheider. After that, Linn decided to move to Los Angeles.

Being the bad guy in "Cliffhanger," and also in "Night Game" and "FBI: The Untold Story," Linn admits he could be typecast as a villain, but he's not complaining.

"I just keep going to classes and studying and keep auditioning for parts," he said. "I'm very self-critical of my acting, but if I keep forging ahead, I know I'll get better and better roles."

Country music star, Reba McEntire, takes 'hiatus' with movies

By Dan Sewell
Associated Press writer

JUPITER FARMS, Fla. — What Reba McEntire describes as being "on hiatus" doesn't sound like much of a break.

Shooting finished last month for her role in a Burt Reynolds TV movie, "The Man From Left Field," and after some concert dates in Nashville, Texas and Michigan, she's off to California for filming this July of Rob Reiner's movie, "North."

"You do so many concert dates in a row, and then when you come to do this, it's more like a vacation than working," she said between scenes at Reynolds' production studios in rural Palm Beach County.

McEntire, who played a single mother "who talks like I talk" and didn't have a heavy load of lines to memorize, savored "the great location" and "laid-back" atmosphere during filming of the CBS movie Reynolds directed while playing the title role.

Doing the TV movie was very different from a concert tour, in which everything is timed to the minute, she said. Instead, her main challenge is to "chill out" and stay ready to be called for her scenes.

The country-music powerhouse, who's been dabbling in movies and television for several years, sees her acting career as a sidelight that brings her to the attention of even more people.

"What we've been doing is trying to make the right contacts to do the movies that are appealing to me in the sense of family entertainment. That's the Reba side of it. And on the professional side of it, it's the opportunity to be able to broaden the image of Reba McEntire," she said.

'And on the professional side of it, it's the opportunity to be able to broaden the image of Reba McEntire.'

As the Oklahoma native, who grew up on her father's rodeo circuit, has moved beyond the singing cowgirl who first made the country charts in 1976, she's helped take country music along with her.

Country music is the nation's fastest-growing form, and McEntire's knack for turning topics such as wife abuse, teen suicide, elderly neglect and, frequently, women breaking free of stereotypical roles, into hit songs has helped lure new listeners.

"Oh, it's just getting bigger all the time," she said. "I'd say 50 percent of my audiences today didn't listen to country music two years ago; or if they did, they didn't listen much."

Sophisticated stage shows and music that tells current stories have helped give country music "a hipness, and relatability."

"I really like to sing songs that women can relate to, but I've found that men can relate to them, too. ... Basically, it's songs about everyday people's everyday problems," she said.

McEntire, whose latest album, "It's Your Call," quickly made not just country charts but overall music charts, noted that country, rock and other pop artists now compete for much of the same audience.

"I think what has really gotten the people in my age group, who listened to the music that I listened to in the '70s — Eagles, Three Dog Night, Chicago — that's pretty much what a lot of country music is today. It's the easy-listening rock music. So the fans of that era have come over to the country music side."

With their widening audience and the increased variety of music, McEntire and the large new wave of female country stars, and male stars such as Garth Brooks, Billy Ray Cyrus and Vince Gill (with whom McEntire duets on the hit "The Heart Won't Lie") sometimes hear that they've forgotten their country roots. And they sometimes respond that they're growing along with country music.

"A lot of people have said that I've gone rock 'n' roll, I've gone contemporary, I've gotten away from my traditional roots," reflected McEntire, whose recordings have roamed to Motown's "Respect" and the torch song "Sunday Kind of Love.

"And maybe they're right. I don't know. I don't gauge music by categorizing it. I like good music. I want to sing the best songs I can find."

Meanwhile, she plans to keep to her prolific recording schedule — "It's Your Call," which follows her third-straight platinum-plus album, is her 20th album — and her schedule of 125 concerts a year while trying to do "two or three films" a year.

McEntire, who plays varied acting roles in her music videos, wants to make a TV movie that expands upon the story of the wife and mother in her song and video, "Is There Life Out There?" The script wasn't ready this year during her normal May-June "hiatus," so she was delighted when she got the call from Reynolds, with whom she worked in an episode of the television series "Evening Shade."

She hopes to work with different directors and actors to learn more in each role, but McEntire, who with her husband-manager Narvel Blackstock has a 3-year-old son Shelby, doesn't expect acting to ever overshadow her music career.

"I'm not a full-fledged actress. Burt tells me I'm not bad at it, and I'm thrilled with that," she said, laughing. "I don't have any plans to leave my music."

Good Versus Evil

Mummers kick off 45th season

The good guys and the bad guys fight it out again this summer when Midland Community Theatre's 45th annual Summer Mummers opens Friday at the historic Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave.

"As always, it will be a really fun evening of entertainment," said Denise Boehm-Walters, who plays Nell Ann Void, the madam.

"Roguery on the River" or "The Great Goober Grab" takes place immediately following the Civil War.

"Our hero is valiantly trying to save his family plantation from the evil clutches of carpetbaggers," said Ms. Boehm-Walters, who is volunteer coordinator for MCT. "The villain is trying to take the plantation away under the guise of being a good guy, but, of course, the audience can tell from the outset that he is evil."

Those on stage do not have as clear a picture of the villainous U. Horache Ashe. In fact, the madam finds him quite attractive. At first.

"I'm the consort of the villain. In the beginning, I really try to help him accomplish his evil plans to take over the plantation, but then even my character finally sees that he truly is evil. She doesn't want to be involved with him any more."

Ms. Boehm-Walters was pleased to be cast in the role of Nell Ann Void because "the madam is a lot of fun.

"She gets to vamp, but in the end she really is good-hearted so there is something decent about her character."

That's not the only reason the role appealed to Ms. Boehm-Walters.

"The madam gets to wear the pretty dress," she said. She laughed.

Others in the production, which has all roles double cast, include Tim Rosborough and Shane Manley as the hero, Dash Limbeau; Connie Barnes and Allison Garvin as the heroine, Pricilla Pointer; Doug Pike and Mike Harrell as the villain; Glenn Womack and Mark Lancaster as Pricilla Pointer's father, Sheriff U. Fanger Pointer; Ronnio Williams and Gary Hall as the hero's sidekick, G. Willie Ker; Suzanne Voltz and Nancy Hayes-Kinney as the heroine's companion, Patty Kay Ker; and Laura Keller as Nell Ann Void.

Also in the cast are Leann Brown and Stacy Langford as Sweet Patootie; Amy Rymer and Shelley Jones as Sauer Braten; Margeaux Harbison and Annie Patrick as Tipper Airey; Mark Wornell and Joe Jensen as Captain Crunch; Todd Mathis and Cleve Colling;s as Bill Budweiser and Ross Peroque; Rober Barnes and David Whitaker as Jim Maggots; and Blake Spraggins and J.D. Webster as the Great Sylvester.

"It is a very funny show," said Ms. Boehm-Walters. "John Myer is directing, and he is an old time Summer Mummers — he used to play the villain — so he really brings a lot of the tradition of Summer Mummers to life on stage. The way he directs and stages the characters really brings back that melodrama-vaudeville type feeling to the show."

In addition to the melodrama, which includes Movieola portions, Mummers also features an olio. This olio, which is a series of short sketches, includes such dance numbers as "Swine Lake," the Blues Brothers performing "Soul Man," stripping Elvis' and "Mule Train."

"They are doing a lot of new things in the olio this year. Some really cute ideas I don't want to divulge in writing so when people come to see them, their jokes won't be ruined."

Summer Mummers, which is a major fund raiser for MCT, would not be possible without the volunteers.

"The volunteer hours that go into it are amazing, absolutely incredible," said Ms. Boehm-Walters, who added that MCT's volunteer files at Theatre Midland include 1,000 names. And, Summer Mummers has its own list of volunteers on which to depend.

"From the Movieola to the melodrama to the olio, all are volunteers. Everybody that works down at Mummers — popcorn poppers and ticket sellers and backstage workers — are volunteers. And these people do it because they love Summer Mummers. They are quite an organization.

"Anybody who is interested in volunteering can contact me and I can put them in touch with the appropriate people," Ms. Boehm-Walters said.

Mummers also utilizes MCT's artistic staff.

"We are all the same family," Ms. Boehm-Walters said.

As a part of the MCT family, Ms. Boehm-Walters found herself last year wanting to become involved in theater. She had never been on stage before, yet she found herself at the Mummmers auditions.

"Summer Mummers always looked like so much fun. And I went and auditioned and didn't really know anybody and got cast and had a great summer. It's a group of great people.

"In the course of the summer while you perform, a lot of your friends come to the show and a lot of the people you work with come to the show. It's just a lot of fun with the audience participation that you get at Summer Mummers."

For the uninitiated, Mummers can be quite a shock.

"Mummers is a real different experience because people are there with little lighted antenna on their heads and yelling at you and throwing popcorn at you and being pretty aggressive about having a good time. That's kind of surprising the first time you walk out on stage. You really have to time yourself relative to what the audience is giving you. And you really don't learn that in rehearsal. You have to learn that once you get on stage.

"We have to project really loudly. We do wear body mikes, but the most important thing is for all the actors to really project to the back of the house."

This summer Ms. Boehm-Walters didn't hesitate to audition for Mummers.

"I came back because I enjoyed it so much. I knew what I was getting into this year, and I did it anyway."

Brooks readies the Metroplex for concert

By Shirley Jinkins
New York Times writer

Fort Worth Star-Telegram

FORT WORTH, Texas — Garth's done it again and, characteristically, it's only bigger this time.

He's led us all on a merry chase for tickets, and even just information about tickets, for the most gosh-darn concert that has ever been held in Texas Stadium in Irving.

By now, everyone knows it'll be Sept. 24, with a second date Sept. 25. Tickets for that one go on sale this weekend.

It took two different news conferences to explain it all: the first one at Texas Stadium almost two weeks ago announcing the thing, then one in Nashville during Fan Fair late last week, announcing it to the rest of the watching, waiting world "for everyone who obviously couldn't come to Texas," his brother-tour manager, Kelly Brooks, said.

Tickets are ridiculously cheap, compared with the $40 range some rock acts would charge for such an undertaking.

"I still sell 'em for $17. If I thought that it was worth $18, I'd charge $18," Garth said simply. (Of course, the actual out-of-pocket price can climb to $22.50 with service fees and handling charges of ticket agencies added.)

"The word we'll have to use here is just huge," he said. "Key words are 'Standing Outside the Fire,' off the new album (which will be released that night), and 'The Thunder Rolls.'

"There'll be a storm cloud; it will actually rain in (Texas Stadium). There will be a cannon somewhere."

There usually are storm clouds and cannons around Garth, figuratively at least. There was the "Thunder Rolls" controversy, back when that video was banned by some outlets for its depiction of domestic violence, and the more recent discussion surrounding "We Shall Be Free" and its do-your-own-thing message.

"Music is a sword," he said. "You hold it high and you can strike a lot of people with it."

After a much-publicized break from the road in late '92 and early '93, suddenly the Yukon, Okla., phenomenon is back in the spotlight, and, if anything, he appears stronger for it. Can a 65,000-ticket sellout in 92 minutes, which occurred last week, indicate otherwise?

'I still sell 'em for $17. If I thought that it was worth $18, I'd charge $18.'

— Garth Brooks

"I felt it was very necessary" to come to Texas first to announce the big event, he said, and to announce it again in Nashville. "I had a down year. I was constantly depressed. I wanted to come back and let you guys know I'm ready for this."

"This" is not only the mega-concert at Texas Stadium, but a nationwide tour this year, and a world tour beginning in April.

Another positive thing about Garth: There's less of him to love this year. He's lost 47 pounds, simply by careful eating and activity.

"I feel so much better," Garth said. "Just the time off, with the little girl and all. I feel like it's 1989 again."

He's only 31, but said: "I didn't feel it; now I feel it again. I kept getting bigger and bigger and more depressed. And I felt like I was slighting people by not giving them the best me I can. I've got a long way to go."

He said his new studio album would be the "most upbeat album I've done. We've always been known as a ballad singer."

But this one will be preceded by a jumpy single called "Ain't Going Down Till the Sun Comes Up," and the whole project will reflect his true dance-hall musical roots.

Sometimes the sheer numbers surrounding Garth are a little astounding, if not downright intimidating. Take record sales, and his own assessment of his '92 studio album, "The Chase."

"It sold 6 million units," he said. "With 'Ropin' and 'Fences' at 10 (million), then I have to be disappointed."

That disappointment, though, doesn't apply to awards, Garth assured. He'd sat out the TNN Music City News Fan Awards earlier in Fan Fair week, and wouldn't have had anything to take home anyhow. Vince Gill and especially Alan Jackson were the beneficiaries of that evening's booty.

"I've always compared them (awards) to Christmas trees at Christmas," he said. "They're pretty, but that's not what the holiday's all about."

More important, he added, are questions, like "Are there people in the seats and are your albums selling?"

He says he picked Texas Stadium because of all the stadiums around the country, this one was both big enough for the majesty of this show, and yet the most intimate.

"I hope they see the original G.B., the fruit loop that might do anything," Garth said of Ground Zero night. "I don't think people come to hear you. Our whole thing is vision. The benchmark for me is the visionary bands I grew up with."

The production will take enormous preparation, and Garth said the stadium's been promised to them for a three-week setup, even though he'd only asked for one week. There've been reports of everything from four big cranes requiring holes to be drilled in the Texas Stadium roof, to attachments to those steel beams that arch over the hole in the top.

Garth said he's personally been to the site to check out early plans "at least half a dozen times" already.

"We've walked every catwalk, done every camera angle. I will be testing them (special effects) out myself," he said.

It's impossible not to get wrapped up in the technological possibilities with Garth telling it. He's the wide-eyed kid in the candy store with a fistful of birthday money, and he's going to spend it all on Sweet Tarts and Atomic Fire Balls, and share 'em with everyone on the block.

"People will leave and say, 'Gosh, I can't believe it rained and there was all this fire around, and it wasn't that scary,'" he said.

"The gag that I'm very most excited about," he said, is a helicopter cam that'll zap Garth across the arena, p.d. fast, into the nosebleed sections. "What that means," he grinned, hardly keeping still just talking about it, "is that me and the guy in the farthest seat will be face to face at some point in time."

Television plans do not include pay-per-view, Garth said. He wants to keep it free on TV, just like his first special that aired in early '92 on network television. This one will be taped in 35-millimeter, then shown around the country and around the world in April, with a later videocassette offering.

It's all part of this crazy idea that Garth seems to have, which is that absolutely anybody who ever cares to see Garth perform can do it, regardless of circumstances. He has made accessibility an art form, and made less-available people seem petty by comparison.

He was the most visible person around Fan Fair this year, signing autographs in his booth most every day, all day. At 7:30 one evening, he took his leave. He still looked fresh as fans lined his way on either side of a roped-off corridor and sang "Friends in Low Places" to herald his arrival. There was no pushing or shoving. He unhurriedly shook every single hand as he moved through, stopped to chat and have his picture taken.

Incidentally, Garth said he usually keeps gifts from fans "for sentimental purposes," particularly things for daughter Taylor.

Above all, the mega-star tries to give the ticket- and record-buyers a good deal. Garth has adopted a plan from the rock group U2 for denying scalpers those first few coveted rows: Don't sell 'em. Instead, Garthpeople go into the farther sections and give away the first two rows. It's a great treat for the ticket-buying faithful, and also quite a jump-start for the cast on stage to come out to an electrified fan foreground.

Garth's touring year actually starts July 30 in Cheyenne, Wyo., with a full schedule of concerts before the Texas Stadium megalopolis in September.

Opening lead: Queen of ♡ Even something as simple as a finesse is approached by the expert and the average player from diametrically opposite points of view. Most players consider the gain if the finesse wins. The chosen few think about the cost if the finesse loses!

North's jump raise to three spades was a limit bid showing 10-12 points. South had no aspirations beyond game, but even that seemingly easy contract was in jeopardy without careful play.

West led the queen of hearts and it is obvious the spade game is safe if the diamond finesse were to win—declarer can lose at most one trick in each side suit. However, the pessimist realizes that, were the finesse to lose, the contract would inevitably be defeated. It's time to look for an alternative line to land the contract.

That hinges on keeping East off lead, so the first move is to duck the heart lead in dummy. East cannot rise with the king without setting up a finesse position in hearts which is sure to succeed, so that defender also must play low. West can do no better at trick two than continue with the nine of hearts, taken by the ace.

The next step is to eliminate clubs as an exit suit for the defense, in the process keeping East off lead, so declarer leads a club from dummy and when East follows low inserts the jack. Best defense is for West to win and return a club.

After taking the ace of clubs, declarer crosses to dummy with a trump and ruffs a heart, fetching the king. Another trump to the table draws the last fang. Now declarer leads the ten of hearts and, when East does not follow, discards a diamond from hand, trapping West in an endplay. West must either lead a diamond into declarer's major tenace or a club, yielding a ruff-sluff. Either way the swap of a second heart loser for none in diamonds delivers the contract.

Twelve-year-old actor plays Huck Finn at his actual age

By Bob Thomas
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES — Huckleberry Finn, that master of deception, has returned to the screen in a new version of the Mark Twain classic, and at last he plays his real age.

Mickey Rooney was 19 when he connived his way down the Mississippi River in 1939. Most of the other movie Hucks have been over age: Lewis Sargent (1919), Junior Durkin (1931), Eddie Hodges (1960) and Jeff East (1974).

Elijah Wood stars in "The Adventures of Huck Finn" at age 12.

After a day of the publicity grind before the film's opening, his entourage was exhausted. Elijah was bright-eyed and ready for more.

"I have the most energy," he said. "Even when I'm tired, I always have that energy. I don't know what it is. I'm always happy, excited, and I always have fun. I guess I keep my energy up by just being me."

Even at his age, Elijah has run up a string of credits: Paula Abdul's video, "Forever Your Girl"; the movie "Internal Affairs" with Richard Gere; "Back to the Future II" with Michael J. Fox; as the young Barry Levinson in the director's autobiographical film, "Avalon"; the lead in "Radio Flyer"; "Paradise" with Melanie Griffith and Don Johnson; and "Forever Young" with Mel Gibson and Jamie Lee Curtis.

Elijah recently finished "The Good Son" with another talented youngster, Macauley Culkin.

"He's cool," Elijah said. "He got to work with a kid, and he likes all the kind of stuff that I like. So he was easy to get along with.

"He's very professional, because he's been in the business longer than I have. I don't really want to become as well-known as Mac. He's so well-known that people come up to him all the time. It's kind of an uncomfortable position.

"I just want to have fun, basically. I'm in the business to have fun and do movies and stuff like that. Not to be famous or be a star. That's not what the business is about, not for me it isn't."

Next, the youngster takes on another large role in "North," directed by Rob Reiner ("A Few Good Men"). He'll play "the perfect child" who searches for other parents because he thinks his own are ignoring him.

Elijah has accomplished all this since his family moved here from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in late 1989. They had attended a modeling and talent convention in Los Angeles, where an agent had convinced the Wood parents that Elijah could find work.

He explained: "My brother Zack wanted to be an actor, and my mom knew I'd have a lot of fun acting. But she also thought that I would be doing commercials. She didn't know that I would be doing movies."

Because of his steady work, Elijah takes his schooling on movie sets and reports that he's a straight-A student.

Does he feel any loss of a normal school experience?

"Sometimes," he replied. "But I have so much fun doing movies. I relax on the set during breaks, and I get to play with the other kids. I have a great time."

Elijah doesn't remember having a great ambition as an actor: "I was in the position where someone asked me if I wanted to act. I just said, 'Ok. I'll take a crack at it.'

"I didn't really know what I was doing. I'm so glad I said OK. Because acting is my life now. I love it so much, meeting all the wonderful people, going on locations, playing different roles and stuff. It's really exciting."

Rabbit memorabilia brings big bucks

LONDON (AP) — "I am cutting out calico patterns of Peter, I have not got it right yet, but the expression is going to be lovely; especially the whiskers," Beatrix Potter wrote in 1903 as she worked on a Peter Rabbit doll. The whiskers were made from the bristles of a brush.

Ninety years later, Peter Rabbit is on everything from hand-painted eggs to chopsticks and hood ornaments on cars.

Potter early realized the commercial value of her characters, and stuffed dolls, board games and ceramic figures were available in her lifetime.

Today, sales of Beatrix Potter memorabilia are "well in excess of 100 million pounds ($150 million) a year," according to Nicholas Durbridge, managing director of licensing agents Copyrights.

Frederick Warne & Co. was bought by Penguin Books in 1983, but the English editions of Beatrix Potter's books still bear the company's imprint. The company holds all Potter's copyrights and controls licensing, through Copyrights.

"We are very choosy about what we license," said Durbridge. "It's part of our national heritage and plenty of people would criticize us roundly if we did it wrong."

Frederick Warne and Copyrights review every item, upwards of 2,000 a year. Earnings from royalties are a closely guarded secret.

Frederick Warne plows its profits back into the business, into ventures such as the recent $9 million production of six animated Potter tales for television, said publisher Sally Floyer.

'Big Daddy' Burl Ives continues to belt out ballads at 84

By Mary Campbell
Associate Press writer

NEW YORK — Back in his hometown of Hunt, Ill., when he was 4, Burl Ives was invited to sing at an Old Soldiers Reunion picnic. The year was 1913. He got paid $1.

"Ever since, I been singin' and I been chargin'," the gravelly voiced folk singer and Oscar-winning actor said a few years ago.

That's now 80 years of singing, more than 100 albums and countless concerts, 32 movies, radio shows and other performances.

In New York recently to take part in "Folksongs U.S.A.," a benefit concert for the YMHA, Ives had a reunion with fellow folk singer Pete Seeger, who's a decade younger. Performing together for the first time in 40 years, they sang "Blue Tail Fly," Ives' best-known ditty.

Ives, who turned 84 on June 14, lives in a house in Anacortes, Wash., with a view of Mount Baker. He sings mostly benefit concerts these days, but he also has out a new, two-cassette album of 25 songs, "The Magic Balladeer," which is being marketed on TV.

In the years before he retired from touring in 1991, Ives often would go to Nashville and, with some of the musicians he'd worked with through the years, record two or three songs.

Of all his albums, he prefers those cut in Nashville.

"Ballads are rural. It fits," he says. "You see, Nashville commercial songs are offshoots from authentic balladry."

When he was 21, in 1930, Ives left Eastern Illinois State Teachers College and started traveling around North America as a troubadour, riding the rails and hitchhiking, singing, playing banjo, teaching himself guitar, doing odd jobs.

Along the way he collected songs, songs learned from lumberjacks, cowboys, steelworkers, fishermen and folks living in small towns.

"I was not consciously a collector of songs, never consciously, never academic," says Ives, who wears a bandana around his head in the style of Willie Nel Those songs were added to his repertoire of some 100 songs of Scottish, Irish and English origin he'd learned from his pipe-smoking, tobacco-chewing grandmother, Katie White.

"At one time I had 500 songs under my belt," he says. "But not now. I know them but I don't know that I know them." Tapping his forehead, "They're in there. I never got tired of any of them."

After he moved to New York in 1937, he says, "I was privy to the library in Columbia University. I spent a lot of time there reading balladry. There's a tremendous literature, especially early Scottish history in verse. Sir Walter Scott wrote in verse.

"If I'd run across a good one, I'd bend it to my use."

'If you sit and start singing ballads, somebody else sings one. It becomes a happening.'

— Burl Ives

He thinks he was drawn to ballads "probably because I played the guitar. It was sort of a natural progression. I didn't write a lot of songs. I edited a lot of them, made them singable, in some cases made them moral.

"I got 'Foggy, Foggy Dew' from Carl Sandburg. He sang me the whole song, the sort of risque version."

Ives had a daily, 15-minute radio show, "The Wayfarin' Stranger," from 1940 to '42.

He always intended to act as well as sing, he says. He came to New York, "because if you're going to do acting as a profession, you go to New York. That's where it is."

In 1938 on Broadway, Ives was in "I Married an Angel" and "The Boys from Syracuse" and in 1942, "This Is the Army."

He won the Donaldson Award for best supporting actor of the 1944-45 Broadway season for "Sing Out, Sweet Land."

"At the same time," he says, "I went into supperclubs. I played Cafe Society Downtown and Uptown and rooms in Chicago. It was from that I really think that I got to the movies. They bought me as a singer.

"The first movie I was in, 'Smoky,' (1945) with Fred MacMurray and Anne Baxter, I sang 'Foggy, Foggy Dew' and 'Blue Tail Fly.'"

City audiences as well as rural liked Ives' folk ballads. "They're simple and honest," he says. "And anything that has a repetitive ring to it is always popular."

Folk audiences were well-behaved, too. Ives recalls a time he was appearing outdoors for a Bureau of Land Management's clean-up campaign. "I was going to do a little wingding in Bend, Ore. It came on the radio that I was going to perform. All the tourists turned their cars right around for Bend. We thought we'd have hundreds of people. We had 54,000, four policemen and no trouble. Even the traffic was no trouble."

His wife, Dorothy, then an interior designer, met her husband of 23 years when a friend recommended her to decorate his Hollywood apartment. He'd moved there in 1969 for TV's "The Bold Ones."

"I knew him as an actor," she says. "Then I heard him sing 'The Times They Are A-Changing' and I thought, 'Why is he wasting his time hanging around here?'"

So, Ives went back on the concert trail — for nearly 20 years. As well as the folk songs, people remembered his hymns and children's songs, "Big Rock Candy Mountain" and "Holly Jolly Christmas" as well as his 1960s pop hits, "A Little Bitty Tear," "Call Me Mr. In-Between" and "It's Just My Funny Way of Lauighin'."

As for the rolled pink bandana around his forehead, matching his pink cardigan, Ives says, "I wore it before Willie Nelson did, and he says so, too."

He wears thin white gloves because, he says, "My hands are a little chilly."

One of Ives' best known acting roles was as Big Daddy in "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" on Broadway in 1955, then in the movie with Elizabeth Taylor and Paul Newman in 1958.

He won an Oscar as best supporting actor for his part in "The Big Country," also in 1958. "I was the father of Chuck Connors and a couple of other boys. We were at odds with another rancher, Charlie Bickford. It was sort of a feud thing."

Others of his 32 movies are "Green Grass of Wyoming," "So Dear to My Heart," "Station West," "Sierra," "East of Eden," "The Power and the Prize" "Desire Under the Elms," "Our Man in Havana," "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" and "Two Moon Junction," his last one, in 1988.

'Once Upon a Forest' challenges Disney monopoly

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If anyone can break Disney's near monopoly on animated features, it could be David Kirschner. He did it with "An American Tail." Now he's trying again with "Once Upon a Forest."

"Disney is the Monet of animation; no one does the fables and the classics better than Disney does," the film producer said.

"Those films were the inspiration of my childhood and my adult life as well. But that doesn't mean that there isn't room for other artists in the salon, for young Cezannes of Pissarros to paint a different canvas."

In 1986, Kirschner created "An American Tail," which amassed the largest first-run gross for an animated feature up to that time. ("Aladdin" and "Beauty and the Beast" have since surpassed it at the box office.)

It was the story of a family of mice who emigrated from Europe to America, based on Kirschner's own grandmother's tales of her experiences as an immigrant.

He ran the project by Disney. But "they didn't seem interested in a Jewish immigrant mouse; they already had a mouse," he said, of course referring to Mickey.

Steven Spielberg, also from an immigrant family, eventually shared the post of executive producer with Kirschner.

"Once Upon a Forest" originated with stories written by Rae Lambert.

"I was moved to tears when I read them," recalled the 38-year-old Kirschner, who joined Hollywood-based Hanna-Barbera Productions Inc. in 1989 as president and chief executive officer, later becoming chairman.

He said they were great bedtime reading for his two daughters and he figured the tales "had the kind of emotions that I had known with the classic Disney films."

It took 20th Century Fox one day to say yes to the project. The budget was $13 million, one-third or one-half the cost of a Disney animated film.

How could first-rate animation be produced at that cost?

"We used animators from all over the world — the finest from Sweden, Spain, Argentina, Republic of China, America," said Kirschner. "We tend to think that all the best artists are here. There is a brilliant pool of talent here, but it's also a very limited pool.

"We brought the animators here to work with us, then they went back to their countries, and we went back and forth. It was an exhausting way to do it. But it also helped with our budget constraints."

For "Once Upon a Forest," the budget is $35 million.

The movie centers on three woodland creatures and their badger guru, voiced by Michael Crawford ("Phantom of the Opera"). They flee together after their homeland is devastated by a toxic spill, and they encounter a number of adventures.

Kirschner grew up in suburban Van Nuys "probably a strange little kid because I wasn't great at sports; I was more interested in the illustrations of N.C. Wyeth and Maxfield Parish and books by Robert Louis Stevenson and Victor Hugo."

"I started as an illustrator with Jim Henson, illustrating books for 'Sesame Street' and Muppets," he said. "I don't have the talent of an animator; my work is illustrating.

"I created 'Rose Petal World,' which became 14 children's books and some television specials. Then I created 'An American Tail.'"

Kirschner dealt with a toy of a menacing sort in three "Child's Play" horror movies. His other projects include "Hocus Pocus," a Halloween fantasy with Bette Midler; a live-action "The Flintstones" with John Goodman; and "The Pagemaster," an animated feature with voices by Macaulay Culkin, Whoopi Goldberg and Christopher Lloyd.

Kirschner said that making films is the only thing he ever wanted to do.

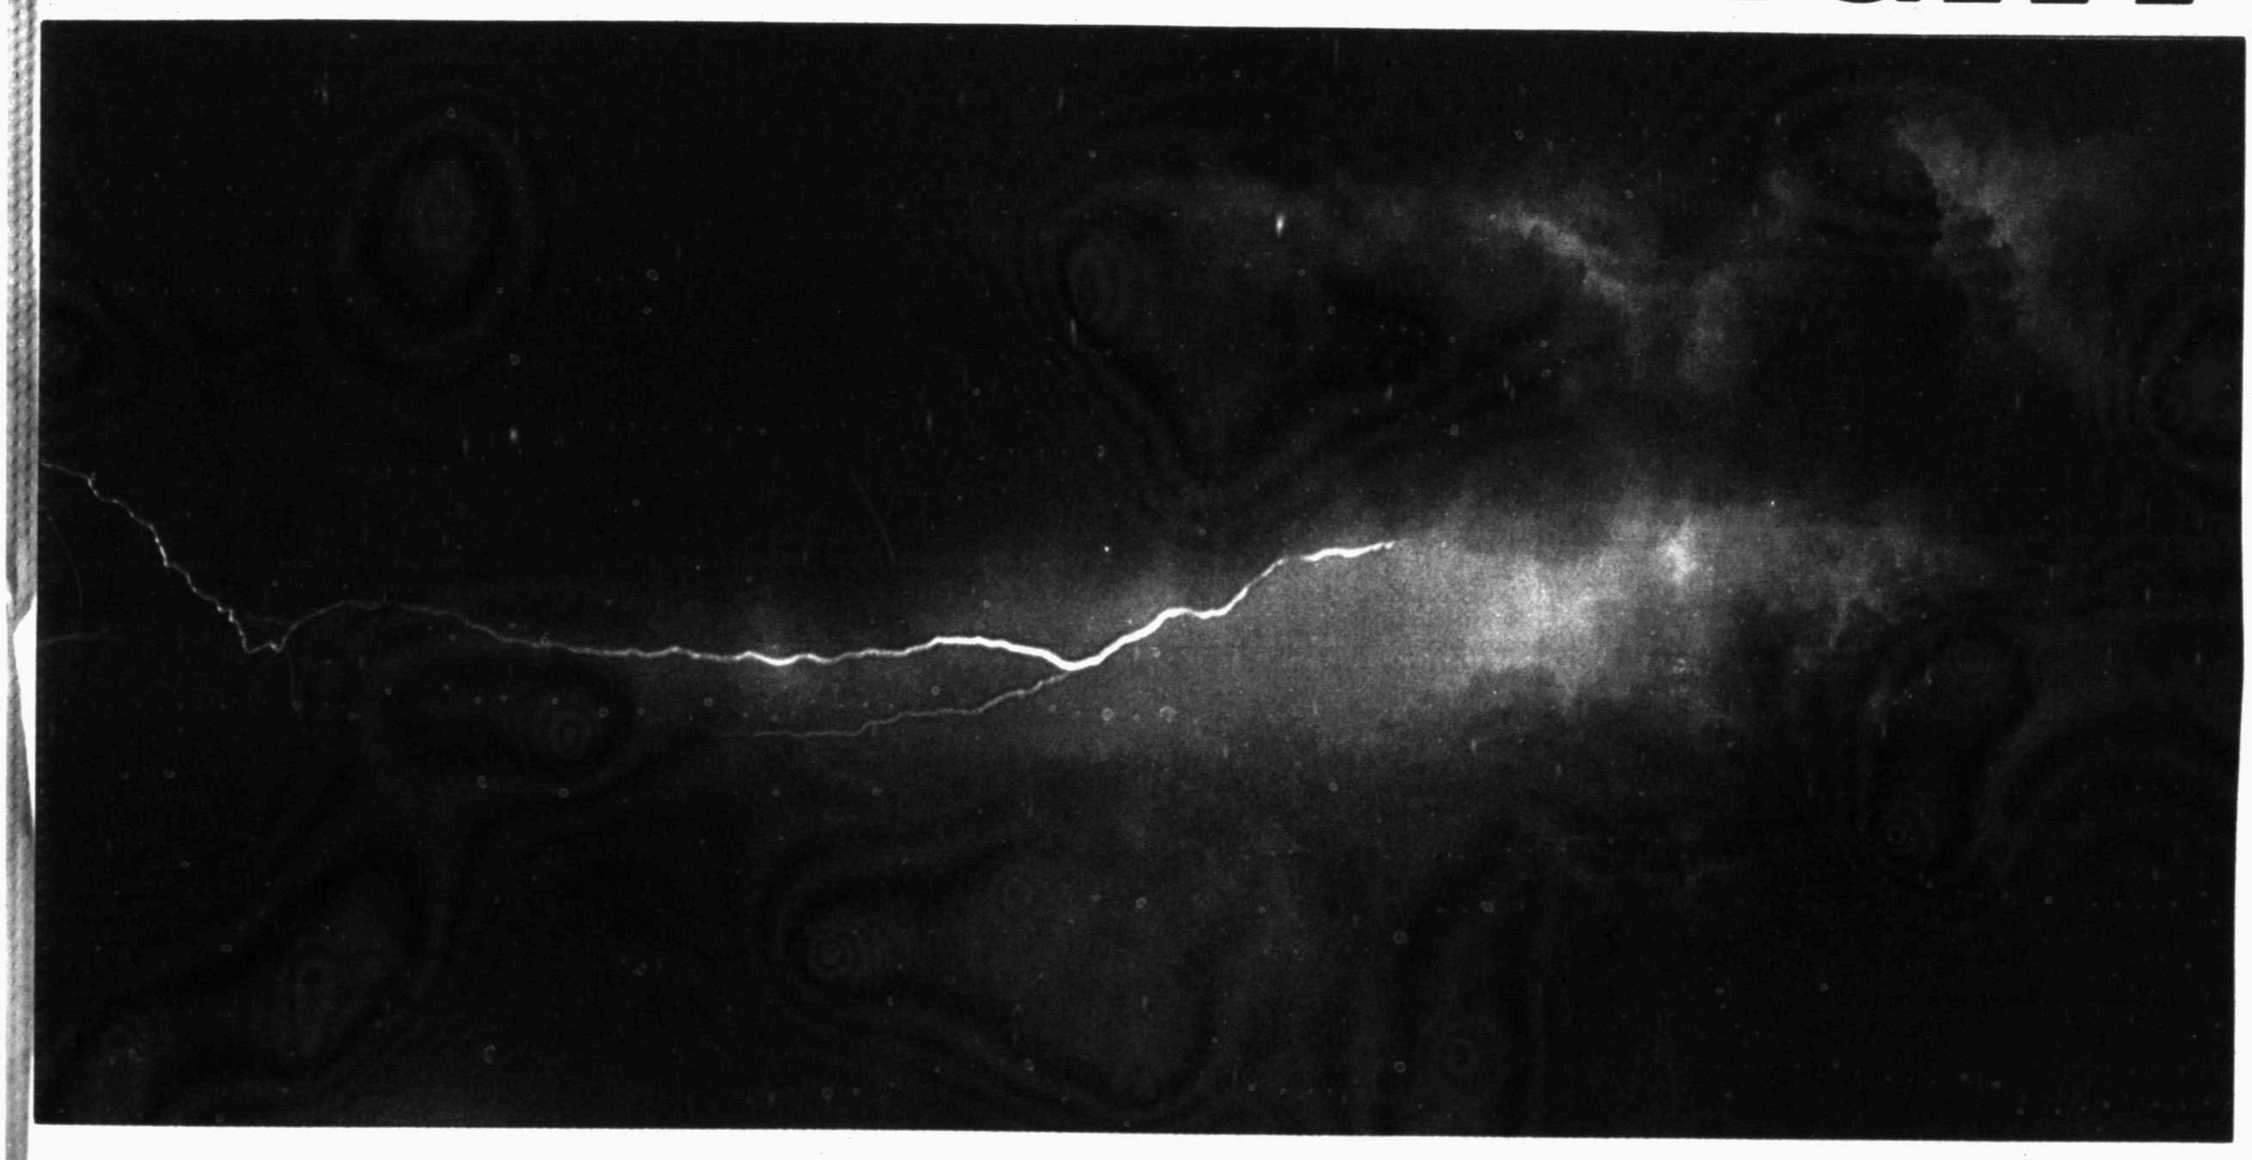
LIGHTNING

IN A FLASH OF LIGHT



When one thinks of summer time, baseball, swimming, sunshine and suntans all come to mind. However, summertime also brings thunderstorms and lightning.

While the sun is shining, it may be difficult to make yourself think about the precautions you should take during a thunderstorm. But when that rumble begins to roar and flashes of light start flying from the sky, you'll wish you had. Knowing what to do and what not to do during a thunderstorm could be the difference between safety and disaster.

Although West Texas is not known for its frequent showers, this time of year, there are occasional storms that are accompanied by thunder and lightning.

A fiery bolt of lightning can carry as much as 100 million bolts of electricity, ripping through roofs, exploding walls of brick and concrete and igniting fires. Because of the low rainfall, West Texas is particularly in danger of lightning starting fires. In fact, the state of Texas ranks third in the nation in the number of deaths and injuries by lightning. Every year in Texas, the number of homes struck by lightning continues to grow, according to the Lightning Protection Institute. Therefore, it is important to be more aware of the need to protect yourself and your property from lightning.

Thunderstorms result from the powerful clash between cool and warm weather air masses. As varying charges of positive and negative energy build up before and during a storm, the result is a discharge of negative Please see FLASH/2H

Couples honored at nuptial affairs

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

Friday, the 13th (of November) proved to be a lucky day for Amy Furgeson, as that was the day she and Bobby Muzyka became betrothed. Their engagement culminated in marriage Saturday evening at First United Methodist Church.

McKnight-Harrison

The pre-nuptial festivities began later in November with an engagement announcement dinner party in La Bodega Restaurant's Garden Room hosted by Mrs. Danie Lebow, longtime friend and neighbor of the bride's family, and her son, Brian Lebow of Dallas.

In December, a Christmas ornament shower was hosted by Mary (Mrs. James) Wood in her home. Guests included colleagues of the bride's mother at Carver Cultural Center, as well as former staff members.

A family shower for the bride and groom was hosted in April by Amy's godparents, Zelta and Dr. Wallace Hess, in Lubbock. Former Midlanders, Dr. Charles Lutrick of Lubbock, who officiated at the wedding, and his wife, Ruth, were special guests.

May events included a display shower in the home of Sharon (Mrs. Wilson) Heidelberg and a bridal shower hosted by Amy's fellow second grader teachers at Emerson Elementary School in the home of Patsy (Mrs. Lee) Culver.

Co-hostesses for the display shower were Marilyn (Mrs. Oland) Butler, Mary Margaret (Mrs. Fred) Byrom, Nell (Mrs. Bobby) Ellis, Annaion (Mrs. Bill) Gilbreath, Lois (Mrs. Bernie) Hagins, Paula (Mrs. James) Henry, Judy (Mrs. Larry) Lusby, Patricia (Mrs. William) Maurer, and Mary (Mrs. Ron McFadden.

Co hostesses for the latter event were Janet (Mrs. Vincel) Carlisle, Peggy (Mrs. Larry) Hailes and Merle (Mrs. Les) White.

Early in June friends gathered at the home of Betty and Bill Sumner for a "honey do...and supper, too!" party. The other host couples were Joyce and Joe Baressi, Susie and Gary Burnett, Donna and Ted Fergeson, Pat and Joe Henderson, Judy and Bill Jackson, Martha and Dan Kallus, Sallie and Don Kidwell, Ann and Bobby Page and Louan and Glenn Rogers.

Special guests were Bobby's parents, Mrs. Anne Crook Muzyka of Arlington and his father, Robert Muzyka of Irving.

A rehearsal dinner was held Friday evening in La Bodega's Garden Room.

The wedding day began with a lingerie party in the home of Kelly (Mrs. Todd) Hullender. Attending were high school and college friends of the bride.

A bridesmaids luncheon honoring the ladies in Amy's life followed in Midland Country Club's Garden Room. The hostesses were Gayle (Mrs. Doc) Dodson, Jamie Dodson, Kelly Hullender, Pat Henderson, Sonya Henderson, Chris (Mrs. Charles) Thomas and Shannon Thomas.

A manicure party was hosted for the wedding party at Backstage by Frances (Mrs. Don) Carlton, RoeBerta (Mrs. R.H.) Davis, Janice (Mrs. Robert) Henry and Nickie (Mrs. Les) Oppermann.

A reception in The Junior League of Midland's Mabee Hall was hosted by the bride's parents, Nell and Don Furgeson, following the wedding. Entertainment was provided by The Dow Jones Average.

Today, the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Jo Kirksey, and her sister, Catherine Furgeson, are cohosting a backyard brunch for out-of-town guests at Mrs. Kirksey's home.

After a cruise to the Bahamas, the couple will make their home in Lubbock.

CONGRATULATIONS are in order to Verla Spaw and Tom Carpenter, who exchanged wedding vows on June 12 in the First United Methodist Church, with the Rev. Dr. Russell Parchman and retired Methodist minister, the Rev. Gail Williams of the Woodlands, officiating.

Attendants were Nell and Rick Palmer. The bride's sister and brother-in-law, Earlene and Denver Hugg, of Grants Pass, Ore., sang two poignant selections, "Only God Could Love You More," and "A Miracle Is Happening Today."

A reception followed at the Eagles Lodge in Odessa. Among the guests were the couple's many friends from the West Texas Singles, the group where they originally met, and Avon friends of the bride.

The wedding also proved to be the occasion for a family reunion, as all five of Verla's children and their families gathered from across the country.

They are Robert and Marina Spaw of Houston, Mardie and Major Mitch Namendorf of Caribou, Maine; Steven Spaw and his fiancee, Jackie Webb of Houston; Kathy and Capt. John Trankovich of Fort Rucker, Ala., and Cindy and Micky Colomb of Enid, Okla. Also attending were Verla's 12 grandchildren and Tom's cousins, Don and Wanda Davis, Donnie and Marsha Davis and David and Pamela Davis, all of Odessa.

AFTER A TRIP to Florida and the Bahamas, Jay Pitzer and his bride, the former Karen Eberly, are at home in Forth Worth. They were married May 29 at Midland Lutheran Church.

Parents of the bride are Helen and Lyle Eberly. The groom's parents are Phyliss and Dr. Walter Pitzer of Lawrence, Kan.

A party at the Eberly home in Green Tree Estates during the Christmas holidays introduced Jay to relatives and friends of the family.

A "Honey-Do" couples' shower was held in Fort Worth in April and hosted by Michelle Michaud (Mrs. Brett) Johnston of Marietta, Ga.

Back in Midland, a display shower was held in early May in the home of Hermine (Mrs. Eugene) Erwin, when Karen was in town to have her bridal portrait taken in her mother's 1962 wedding gown. Other hostesses were Nelda (Mrs. Tom) Tergeson, Jody (Mrs. Robert) Slaydon, Rosenell (Mrs. Martin) Meissner, Mary Ann (Mrs. Dale) Stice and Barbara (Mrs. Herman) Prosch.

Wedding week festivities began with a Mexican dinner party for the bride's maternal relatives from Boise, Idaho, and Portland, Ore. The next evening the bride's parents, hosted an Italian dinner party at their home for the bridal couple, wedding attendant and out-of-town family and guests.

A bridesmaids' luncheon at Venezia Restaurant was hosted by former Midlanders Billie (Mrs. Bill) Housman of Mishawaka, Ind., and Hazel Pride of Bakerfield, Calif.

The rehearsal dinner was held at the Plaza Club. Guests introduced themselves and explained their relationship to the couple. A review of humorous highlights of the bride's life was presented by the bride's family for the groom's benefit.

"The father of the bride" hosted a "Last Single Fling" gold game on the wedding day at Green Tree Country Club for the groom, his attendants, and uncles and cousins of the couple.

The wedding was followed by a reception and dance at Green Tree Country Club. A display of birth announcements and childhood pictures greeted the guests. (Interestingly enough, the 6 foot 5 inch groom was two inches shorter at birth than the 5 foot 3 inch bride.) Wedding pictures of the couple's parents, along with the newlyweds' engagement picture, decorated the guest registry table.

The bride's parents hosted a Sunday afternoon brunch at Green Tree Country Club the day following the wedding for the bride's paternal relatives and out-of-town guests.

Special guests were Karen's godparents and uncle and aunt, Frank and Shirley Krone of Boise, Idaho, and Jay's aunt, Irene Walker of Topeka, Kan., and uncle Dr. Don Holsinger of Pittsburg, Kan., representing his parents who were unable to attend due to the recent illness of Dr. Pitzer.

Former Midlanders in attendance were Mary Jo and Roy Keep of Diamond Head, Miss.; Betty and Bill Murrah of Ardmore, Okla.; Ramona and Don Huxman of Houston; Marion and Ken Nordeman and son, Chris, of Dallas; Betsy (Halvosen) and John Colborn of Fort Worth, and Shelly Porsch Mook of Denver, Colo.

FLASH: Follow safety precautions

energy that is sent rushing toward the earth. Downward forces of strokes rush toward the earth, as positive strokes from edges of buildings, chimneys, trees, etc. reach up to meet them. When the two forces meet, they connect and an electrical circuit is created. A flash of lightning occurs as the closed circuit is formed from earth to sky.

The bright light that we see in a flash of lightning is called a return stroke, which travels at about the speed of light and heats the air in its path to over 60,000 degrees. Air heated by return strokes expands quickly, producing a wave of pressure that creates the rumbling sound we call thunder.

Lightning flashes can vary in length. A flash from a cloud to the ground may be as long as 9 miles, while a flash that travels through clouds side by side may be over 90 miles long.

While scientist and meteorologists have learned a lot about the weather, lightning is still one of nature's greatest mysteries.

There are various forms of lightning:

- Forked lightning — a flash in which multiple branches of a stroke are visible.
- Streak lightning — a flash that seems to illuminate a single jagged line.
- Ribbon lightning — appears as parallel streaks of light, formed when wind separates the strokes of a flash.
- Bead or chain lightning — is a flash that breaks up into a dotted line as it fades.

SOME PEOPLE MAY have heard of heat lightning — lightning that occurs without thunder — which is usually seen in the summer. Actually, the observer is just too far away from the storm to hear the thunder, even though they can see the lightning. People closer to the source are experiencing a normal storm.

Sheet lightning also is a common term for lightning that appears to illuminate a portion of the sky. This is actually lightning in which the distinct flashes either are too far away to be seen or are hidden from view by the clouds.

A form of lightning that differs greatly from ordinary lightning is ball lightning, which appears as a glowing, fiery ball that floats for several seconds before disappearing. It is not known how or why ball lightning occurs or what it consists of.

Benjamin Franklin is usually credited with the first serious study of lightning in 1752 when he flew a kite with a metal key attached to it during a thunderstorm and discovered that lightning is electricity. And while Franklin survived his kite-flying ordeal, we now know that flying kites, as well as many other activities are not safe during a storm.

During a thunderstorm, it is important to take precautions from the possible danger. Considering that lightning strikes the earth about 100 times each second, it is surprising that more people are not killed and more property damage done due to lightning each year.

ALTHOUGH CLICHES SAY that lightning never strikes twice and your chances of being struck by lightning are remote, simply by following certain safety measures, you can even further reduce the risk of being struck. The following precautions are listed in the World Book Encyclopedia.

- Take shelter in a house or large building. If driving, it is safe to be in a car or truck, but not a convertible. However, do not touch any metal inside the vehicle.
- Use the telephone only in emergencies.
- If you are caught in a thunderstorm out in an open area, sit or crouch down. Do not lay down on the ground. Try to make yourself as small an object as possible.
- Do not stand under or near an individual tall tree or any similarly isolated object in an open area.
- Do not rise above the landscape by standing on a hill, a bench or in an open field.
- Stay out of and away from any body of water.
- Get away from open metal vehicles, such as motorcycles, bicycles, golf carts, farm equipment, etc.
- If you are in a forest, take cover beneath low shrubs or a group of trees of similar height.

Some homes and building have protection from lightning from a lightning rod, a metal pole attached to the building that is well grounded and designed to attract the lightning and direct its electricity through a wire or cable safely to the ground.

The Lightning Protection Institute, a national, not-for-profit organization promoting lightning safety, offers a free booklet on lightning safety tips and lightning protection systems, or a list of LPI certified professionals. Just send a self-addressed, stamped #10 (business size) envelope to The Lightning Protection Institute, 3365 N. Arlington Hts. Rd., Suite #J, Arlington Hts., Ill. 60004.

Safety tips for average home offered

Beware of many danger spots in order to prevent accidents, fires in homes

Associated Press

Most accidents and fires that occur in the home are preventable. Here are many of the danger spots in the average American home. Note that safety tips in one room may apply in other rooms as well.

BATHROOM

- If you must have a lock on the bathroom door, install a privacy lock with a hole in the outside knob that lets you insert a wire or nail to release the lock. This will prevent children from getting locked inside accidentally.
- To prevent falls, lay scatter rugs with nonskid backings and provide tubs and showers with suction-backed rubber mats or adhesive decals.
- Grab bars in the bathtub or shower and next to the toilet are a help for all and a must for the elderly. Fasten the bars securely to wall studs or to the side of the tub.
- Shower doors should be safety glass or heavy-duty plastic.
- Keep electrical appliances — hair dryers, shavers, radios, phone, space heaters — away from tub or sink. All outlets should be equipped with ground fault interrupters (GFIs) to prevent fatal shock.
- Lock up all medicines.

KITCHEN

- Have a multipurpose (rated ABC) fire extinguisher handy for minor fires. Also keep baking soda and a large lid next to the stove to put out grease fires. Don't panic if a fat fire starts in your frying pan. Just turn off the heat, stand back and toss generous handfuls of dry baking soda at the base of the flames.
- Caution: Don't try this with deep fat as it could spatter the grease and spread the fire. Instead, cover the pan with a large metal lid.
- Lock household cleaners, matches, lighters, sharp utensils, electrical appliances and cords out of children's reach.
- Don't store anything attractive to children above or near the stove.
- Turn pot handles inward. Cover frying pans with frying screens or lids.
- Always read labels. Never mix bleach with ammonia, lye or oven cleaner.
- Keep paper items, curtains, dish towels, pot holders, plastic utensils, electrical cords and appliances away from the stove. If there is even a slight shock from an electrical item, throw it away or have it repaired.
- If you smell gas, you and your family should leave the house mmediately. Don't use the phone, flashlight or candles. Call the fire department from a neighbor's home.
- Keep fire, police and poison control numbers near the phone. Program the numbers into an auto-dialing phone.

CHILD'S ROOM

- Make sure all paint is lead-free.
- Never put a space heater in a child's room.
- Place a "Child Alert" decal on the window to alert the fire department.
- Keep windows and screens locked or install window guards if you have young children.

BEDROOM

- Keep electric blankets smooth; don't tuck them under the mattress. Don't put an electric blanket on anyone who can't tell you when the blanket is too hot.
- Keep space heaters away from flammable objects, children and pets.
- Have a lamp and phone accessible from the bed.

LIVING ROOM

- Overloaded extension cords or outlets cause fire. Compare wattage on cords to that of appliances and lamps. Always use cords that provide a higher rating than an appliance needs.
- Don't run electrical cords under rugs or furniture or in traffic areas. Replace frayed, cracked or pinched cords.
- Call an electrician if any outlet or switch plate is warm to the touch.
- Leave space around the TV and stereo to prevent overheating.
- Shield the fireplace with heat-tempered glass doors. Keep the hearth area clear of newspapers. Have the chimney cleaned regularly.
- Tack down carpeting; back rugs with slip-resistant coating or pads. Use nonskid polish on waxed floors.
- Make sure stair railings are sturdy.

GARAGE OR BASEMENT

- Throw away paint- or oil-stained rags, or store them in metal containers with tight-fitting lids.
- Keep flammable and volatile liquids in tightly capped safety cans, far away from any heat source. Gas fumes travel. Never store gasoline in your home.
- Power tools should have double insulation or grounded plugs.
- Make sure that ladders are sturdy and have non-slip treads on the rungs.
- Check that each fuse is the proper size.

Upper respiratory allergies afflict 40 million Americans

DEL RIO (AP) — Upper respiratory allergies afflict some 40 million Americans each year, causing an estimated loss of 3.5 million workdays.

Allergy symptoms, including sneezing, runny nose and itchy, watery eyes, affect men and women indiscriminately, according to medical researchers. But in a recent survey by Sandez Pharmaceuticals Corp., male and female reactions to allergies differed widely. Some findings:

- Allergies would cause 42 percent of the men and 34 percent of the women surveyed to miss work.
- Women (71 percent) felt allergies changed their appearance, as against 58 percent for men. Their quality of life also suffered, said 45 percent of women, compared to 33 percent of the men.
- Women (45 percent) said they would cancel a social activity because of allergies, vs. 25 percent of men. Also, 14 percent of women and 21 percent of men reported being embarrassed by their allergies.

Fun is key at first playroom for AIDS victims

By Beth Duff-Brown

NEW YORK (AP) — Joey's mother watches him blow out the seven candles on his birthday cake with mingled feelings of pleasure and apprehension: Could this birthday be his last?

"It's heaven-sent to me because you never know what to expect," she says. "Every birthday is a celebration to us."

Joey has AIDS. His mother already has watched one child die of the disease that she and her husband passed on to their children.

Joey celebrated his birthday in the company of other children with AIDS in a special place dedicated to a doctor's idea that play can prolong the lives of his young patients.

It's called The Magic Playroom, the first of its kind in the city and believed to be unique in the nation — a treatment center where the only prescription is fun.

In New York City, AIDS has become the No. 1 killer of Hispanic children and the second-leading cause of death among African-American children, according to Dr. Arye Rubinstein, director of the Center for AIDS Research at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine and one of the world's leading experts on pediatric AIDS.

For years, Rubinstein tried to get the playroom off the ground. Then a large corporation came along with a $100,000 donation.

THE PLAYROOM finally opened in December at Bronx Municipal Hospital, in a tough, poor New York City borough where pediatric AIDS runs higher than anywhere else in the country.

Health officials estimate one of every 30 women of childbearing age in the South Bronx is HIV-positive.

Rubinstein has seen children overcome depression and fear while a play therapist works with them, encouraging them to climb and to slide and to chatter about the parents they might have lost and the sickness they might feel.

"It's a secure environment — it's like a dream come true for them," he said.

The Israeli-born immunologist is credited with having diagnosed the first case of pediatric AIDS in 1981 and is developing a vaccine aimed at blocking the transmission of HIV from mother to fetus. He blames the high rate of AIDS among children in the Bronx on drug abuse, poor education and promiscuity.

About 30 impoverished AIDS-infected children attend the free day-care center at the Pediatric AIDS Center of Bronx Municipal. Their fear of treatment at the AIDS center now is eased at the playroom, where good cheer prevails.

Joey dabs a finger in one of the sugar roses on his chocolate cake and offers pieces to other little AIDS patients wearing pointed Bugs Bunny party hats. He declines to take a piece himself.

"I'm not like all of you," says Joey, who has been in and out of the hospital with pneumonia and infections. "I'm not a sweet eater."

But Joey — whose real name is not being used to protect his identity — is like all other children in that he loves to play.

THE CHILDREN scramble around the large playroom, filled with bright colors and soft, safe toys, in a coveted corner of the hospital filled with sunshine. They climb the padded jungle gym and fight over toys, giggling and gossiping about their doctors and teachers.

The only reminders of their affliction: A few sniffle and cough, and one boy has a tube running from his nose to a little backpack that carries his medication.

One mother calls it a place where the kids can forget those scary words that, in a better world, they wouldn't yet know: HIV-positive. Acquired immune deficiency syndrome. Needles, AZT. Death.

The playroom was designed around symbols of life, with trees bearing leaves that change with the seasons and with a playhouse everyone gets to decorate, said Carolyn Fox Lelyveld, the director of the day-care center.

"We decided we needed things that weren't just for one or two days," she said. "We needed things that were living, that would grow."

"There is no play, there are no toys in these children's lives. They live in extreme poverty — and they live hidden lives," said Becky Madeira, a spokeswoman for Pepsi-Cola Co. who persuaded her corporation to go beyond the Christmas toy donations and build something lasting.

So Pepsi donated more than $100,000 to construct the playroom and is working with medical centers in Los Angeles and San Francisco to build others.

RUBINSTEIN SAID medical officials report 6,000 cases of HIV-positive children in the United States, yet he believes the true figure could run as high as 20,000.

By the turn of the century, he said, more than 10 million children will be HIV-positive worldwide.

And how many of his young patients are likely to die? It's a question he won't answer.

"What," he asks, "if there is a cure for AIDS tomorrow?"

DEAR ABBY

Memory of deceased father inspires thoughts of love

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: Today is Father's Day, and although one's father may be deceased — as mine is — he lives on in the heart. My favorite column for this special day, a prayer in memory of a father (from the Hebrew Union Prayer Book), follows:

Van Buren

Thy memory, my dear father, fills my soul at this solemn hour. It revives in me thoughts of the love and friendliness which thou didst bestow upon me. The thought of thee inspires me to a life of virtue; and when my pilgrimage on earth is ended and I shall arrive at the throne of mercy, may I be worthy of thee in the sight of God and man. May our merciful Father reward thee for the faithfulness and kindness thou has ever shown me; may He grant thee eternal peace. Amen.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I were traveling through a tourist-trap town in Washington state when we wandered into this small novelty shop, cluttered with cheap-looking crockery and souvenirs.

An elderly gentleman, obviously another tourist, brushed by a counter and accidentally knocked a small plate off a wooden rack. It fell to the floor and broke into several pieces. There was no sign that said, "You break it and it's yours." A young woman rushed over and said, "You owe me $40 for that piece!"

The gentleman looked shocked, but got out his wallet and started to count the few bills he had, when the woman with him said to "Ms. Manager," "You must be insured for this: The gentleman is living on his Social Security. Also, $40 is outrageous for that plate; it wasn't even marked!"

Well, Ms. Manager ran to the telephone, saying, "I'm calling the police!" The woman with the elderly gentleman led him from the store, and they were soon out of sight.

My husband and I stayed for half an hour, and no police came. Abby, how would you have handled this? — CURIOUS TRAVELER

DEAR CURIOUS: Such shops expect a certain amount of breakage, and pieces of value are seldom accessible for public handling, so the shop's loss was minor. Since no police arrived, Ms. Manager probably only pretended to call them, hoping to frighten the elderly man into paying the $40 she claimed was owed her.

I don't blame the gentleman's companion for refusing to pay. I would have given Ms. Manager a generous $5 bill and departed.

DEAR ABBY: What should I do with a husband who insists on keeping condoms? We do not use condoms, so I feel he has no need to keep them.

When I first discovered that he was keeping them in his drawer under his underwear, I confronted him and told him there was really no reason for him to keep them. He led me to believe that he would get rid of them, but I found that he only MOVED them.

Abby, I am not stupid. I figured out that the only reason a married man keeps condoms after his wife has had a hysterectomy is because he must be planning to use them with someone other than his wife. Am I wrong? And what do you think I should do about it? — UNTRUSTING WIFE

DEAR UNTRUSTING WIFE: You are not wrong. Your husband is obviously fooling around, in which case you should both be tested for sexually transmitted diseases. In addition, if you continue to have sex with him now that you know he can't be trusted, always use a condom.

I strongly urge you to seek counseling. If your husband refuses, go without him.

Are you ready for change?

TILTON, N.H. (AP) — Parents planning to send their children to sleep-away camp this summer may be concerned about homesickness.

"Are You Ready for Change?" is a list of questions for children that can help determine if they're ready to be away from home for an extended period of time. It was prepared by the Tilton School, a New Hampshire boarding school, in conjunction with Education Information Systems.

The self-assessment evaluation is based on several considerations: a child's success away from home, ability to adjust to change, social and activity interests, learning style and level of independence.

Among the questions children answer:

— Do I feel comfortable in new places?

— Do I enjoy new adventures?

— Do I have an easy time getting along with strangers?

In determining whether a child will enjoy being away from home, the "homesickness index" takes into account factors such as a child's interest in travel and faraway places, meeting and getting along with new people, and feelings about adventures.

"There's no reason to have a miserable summer and send a child who isn't ready away from home," said Pat Spead, director of Tilton's admissions. "Conversely, there's nothing better for a child's growth and development than having a positive away-from-home experience."

"Are You Ready for Change?" is available by mail. Send a check or money order for $4, to cover postage and handling, to: "Are You Ready for Change," Tilton School, Box 415, Tilton, N.H. 03276.

AT WIT'S END

Presence beats presents for fathers

By Erma Bombeck

Father's Day was never a joyous occasion at my house. It marked a time of deep meditation, frenzied phone calls to my mother, and sheer desperation to come up with a gift for my father.

Bombeck

His closet and drawers were filled with Father's Day Past. The binoculars I bought him to watch birds were still in the box. The small camera had gone out of style without ever being used. The canvas sneakers were still in the tissue.

Books written by sportsmen lined the bookshelves — pristine and unread. T-shirts with funny sayings occupied an entire shelf of his closet. Tags dangled from a ski sweater, a reminder of the idiot he raised who would buy a sweater that weighed eight pounds for a man who never skied, had high blood pressure and lived in Arizona.

I felt bad about not knowing what to get him year after year. It was like admitting I didn't know him well enough to buy something that would make him happy. Throughout the year I'd be on "gift alert." Every time he said he liked something, I made a mental note.

One day he happened to mention, "My favorite candy is peanut brittle." For 10 years, I bought my dad enough peanut brittle to clot the arteries and pull out the dentures of five men. He had peanut brittle coming out of his pores.

The year he took up golf was a bonanza. I bought him covers for his golf clubs, tees by the pound, caps, shirts, gloves, memo pads shaped like golf balls, cocktail stirrers formed like golf clubs, theme key rings, stationery, paper weights and coffee mugs. Anything that had a golf ball on its found its way to my dad.

One year, I gave him and my mom tickets for a cruise. He cried and told me never to do that again.

Children want to do so much for their parents to let them know how much they're appreciated. In later years, I became pretty devious. My dad was sitting in front of his TV one day. He was quite ill. When men came in and unplugged his set, he didn't say anything; he just looked nervous. In its place they put in a large screen that covered the wall. Later, my dad told me, "I thought they were moving me out and no one told me."

He died three years ago. All his Father's Day memorabilia was sold at a garage sale. Why didn't I know that what was in the boxes each Father's Day was unimportant? I was there to give them. That's all he really wanted.

Erma Bombeck's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

Choosing eyeglasses is harrowing time

DALLAS (AP) — Choosing new eyeglasses can be a harrowing experience, and industry consultants advise selecting glasses that suit your face, coloring and personality.

Frame expert Del McNally, a vice president of Pearle Vision, suggests that for large faces, bigger frames work best, and smaller, lighter frames are most suitable for small faces.

Oval faces, the most common type, are regarded as "perfect" because virtually any frame style can be worn.

As a rule, says McNally, people with round faces shouldn't wear round lenses. Frames with sharp angles or dramatic shapes are preferable, he adds.

To make a square face appear longer, according to McNally, round or softly curved frames weighted at the top are best.

And to help "widen" a long or oblong face, the wearer should choose frames extending beyond the temples, he adds.

In footsteps of supermom is new, improved Dad

By Mitchell Landsberg

NEVADA CITY, Calif. (AP) — Six men sit cross-legged on a white carpeted floor. They are in the airy studio of a cedar house that hugs the flanks of the Sierra Nevada, and they are talking quietly and seriously about important things.

Big things. Things that could change the world.

Not once, in two hours, do they mention the war in Bosnia, President Clinton, the price of gold, "Jurassic Park," Charles Barkley, all-terrain vehicles or the San Francisco Giants.

No, for a full two hours and then some, they talk about fatherhood.

Actually, they talk about more than that. They talk about their children, their fathers, their wives and themselves. They talk about after-school soccer, about homework, about who cooks and who fixes the car. They talk about the struggle to balance work and family, about how much discipline is too much discipline. They wonder whether their children can be their pals.

They talk about things that men don't usually talk about.

Or do they?

John Daly pushes his daughter Lexi, 8, on a swing, as Ariella, 12, looks on and Ashleigh, 6, swings in the background outside their home in Nevada City, Calif., June 10. "There's a much participatory parenting going on that there was when I grew up," Daly, a 48-year-old real estate agent, said.

THERE'S A NEW man loping about the planet, or so it would appear from reading the literature. Psychologists talk about the "New Fatherhood," whose adherents universally ascribe to the following adage: When a man is dying, he never says, "I wish I'd spent more time at the office."

No, the new dad is the one you see with a toddler at the playground, or standing up at the PTA meeting, or rolling Junior through the aisles of the supermarket. He's the one who misses days at work because a child is home sick; who dashes out the office door at the digital crack of 5 to make it to the day care center on time.

"Something has changed," says Jerrold Shapiro, a psychologist in Los Altos who has written two books on fatherhood. "Whether men have been enticed or cajoled, the fact is that we're around our kids a lot more."

"And," he adds, "when you're around your kids, you get to like it."

The evidence is both anecdotal and scientific. For instance, Redbook magazine recently conducted a random, national telephone poll of 420 fathers, with a margin of error of plus or minus 4.8 percent:

- 96 percent said they changed their babies' diapers. Two thirds of them thought their own fathers had skipped diaper duty.
- 86 percent took their children to the doctor. Only half as many thought their fathers had done so.
- 75 percent had left work to take care of their kids. Fewer than one-quarter thought their dads had done that.

AND NEARLY SEVEN out of 10 of the modern dads said they'd like the opportunity to stay home and care for their children while their wives worked. The pollsters didn't bother to ask about the previous generation. The question simply wouldn't apply.

"In reality" said the pollster, Ethel Klein, "we haven't asked men these questions. Nobody ever thought about it."

Plenty of people are thinking about it now. Under the influence of the much-maligned men's movement, books about fatherhood have been hopping off the presses in the past few years. Besides Shapiro's books, the most recent of which is "The Measure of a Man: Becoming the Father You Wish Your Father Had Been," they include such titles as "Letters to My Son: Reflections on Becoming a Man," and "Man Enough: Fathers, Sons, and the Search for Masculinity."

Certainly, the men gathered at Troy Rampy's house, perched in the forested hills above Nevada City, have thought about it.

"There's a much more participatory parenting going on than there was when I grew up," says John Daly, a 48-year-old, tousle-haired real estate agent who speaks with the clarity and precision implied by his steel blue eyes.

"We fathers now are much more a part of the process than we were. Wives are working, fathers are working, and we have to share in the household duties. Probably most men and women will admit that women are still doing more of the household stuff, but I think the fathers are much more involved in the kids' lives. ... We're really taking on a lot more responsibility for the child-rearing."

IT'S TRUE, AS Daly says, that men haven't exactly shoved their wives out of the kitchen, laundry room or nursery.

"Our attitudes have changed," says Ron Levant, a psychologist in Brookline, Mass., who is co-chair of the Society for the Psychological Study of Men and Masculinity. "Our behavior has changed, but not that much."

In the 1960s, Levant says, men did virtually nothing in the way of household chores — about 1 hour a day, on average, compared to 8 hours a day for women.

"In the late '80s, the figures indicate that husbands put in about one-third of the total family work and wives put in about two-thirds. ... It's still far from 50-50."

Still, Levant says, the changes in attitude are important — and could be a sign of things to come.

"Significantly, men say their families are more significant than their work, and they derive more of a sense of well-being from their families than their work, which is a change."

And, he says, "Men are no longer saying that the main way to be a father is to be a good provider. They're saying that being with your kids is just as important as making a good income."

The guys at Troy Rampy's house couldn't agree more.

THIS GROUP OF acquaintences, living in a former mining town turned New Age haven, doesn't pretend to be representative of men at large. They are all white, they are all well-educated and they all tend to tilt toward the drum-beating fringe of men's consciousness.

Rich McCutchan is a family counselor who works part-time at home. He considers himself a househusband. Paul Jorgensen, a shop owner, spends as much time as he can playing with his 5-year-old son, Narayan, and believes he shares equally with his wife in household duties. Craig Rubens, a teacher who is in the midst of a divorce, says he takes care of his two small children at least two-thirds of the time.

Rampy, who runs a small business selling educational materials, comes closest to being a traditional dad, if your idea of traditional encompasses someone who conducts a "Shadow Workshop" in which men use masks and drums to help "come face-to-face with another part of yourself."

Rampy works out of his house and sees his two childen constantly, but his wife is their "primary care-giver"; i.e., a full-time mom.

Even so, he says, he and his wife, Maryann, have "totally divided" the housework. "Men can cook," he says. "Most of the best chefs are men. Men can do housework. Women can fix cars. Maryann is more mechanically inclined than I am, so something breaks and we say, 'Maryann! You get here!' I think all that is up for grabs. ... We're all making it up as we go."

FATHERHOOD, THE improvisational jam.

In a paper published in 1991, David Blankenhorn of the Institute for American Values compared the rules for fatherhood to a book or movie script:

"Three decades ago, the text was quite long, like a Victorian novel. ... As a script, its supreme virtue was in telling the actors exactly what to do and why. ...

"Today, we have a new book, a

Junior bakers can cook up special treat for Dad's Day

Associated Press

Junior bakers of all ages can get involved in making Dad a special treat for Father's Day. Cocoa Critter Cookies are made with cocoa, so there's no need to melt chocolate. Once the dough has been prepared and refrigerated for easier handling, even young children can create their favorite "critters."

COCOA CRITTER COOKIES

2 cups sugar
¾ cup vegetable oil
¾ cup cocoa
4 eggs
2 teaspoons vanilla extract
2⅓ cups all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
Additional sugar
Assorted decorating icing

In a large mixer bowl, stir together 2 cups sugar and oil; add cocoa, blending well. Beat in eggs and vanilla. Stir together flour, baking powder and salt; add to cocoa mixture, blending well. Cover; refrigerate until firm enough to handle, at least 6 hours.

Heat oven to 350 degrees. Lightly grease a cookie sheet. Working with a small portion of dough at a time (keep remaining dough in refrigerator until ready to use), shape dough into ½-inch balls. Roll in additional sugar.

To form caterpillars, place four or five balls about ¼ inch apart onto prepared cookie sheet. Bake in a 350-degree oven for 12 to 14 minutes or until almost no indentation remains when touched lightly. Cool slightly. Remove from cookie sheet to wire rack; cool completely. Pipe decorations with commercially-prepared icings. Makes about 2½ dozen cookies.

No more excuses for Dads

By Carol Deegan
Associated Press

Few of us like to rush into the kitchen after a hard day of work and start cooking dinner. But Dads who say they can't put a meal on the table have just run out of excuses.

New York City caterer Bob Sloan (who is also a husband and father) has written "Dad's Own Cookbook: Everything Your Mother Never Taught You" (Workman Publishing, $12.95), designed for the Dad who doesn't know a shredder from a vegetable steamer.

This colorful, handsomely-designed cookbook takes Dads through the basics, complete with charts, cooking tips and a glossary of basic cooking terms.

Sloan starts by comparing cooking to changing the spark plugs in a car. "At first it seems a job for the experts.

Then someone hands you the proper tools, points you in the right direction under the hood, and you soon realize it's easy to change your own plugs."

He then proceeds in careful, logical and manageable steps, from stocking the pantry to using a food processor and reading a recipe.

Sloan covers the basics: how to boil an egg, make a tunafish sandwich and bake a macaroni casserole. He then moves on to more exotic recipes, such as slow-scrambled eggs with smoked salmon, sour cream, and caviar; fillet of sole with saffron and tomato cream sauce; and dad's own apple pie.

Have to pack the kids' lunch? No problem. Sloan clues you in on what to pack ... And how to pack it.

There are also recipes for a cocktail party, grilling and dinner for twelve.

There's no nutritional information accompanying the cookbook's 150 recipes, but there are plenty of dishes that call for fresh fruits, vegetables, fish and other healthful foods.

What's for dinner?

Associated Press

What's for dinner, Dad? The next time you hear that question and haven't had a second to think about food, try one of the easiest meals ever: a baked potato. It takes only 10 minutes in the microwave oven. Split it open and let the kids heap on their favorite topping, such as grated cheese, baked beans, tuna, chopped onion, sweet corn, sour cream, chili or bacon bits.

Another easy variation on the same theme: stuffed potatoes with bacon and cheese. Serve with a bowl of soup or chili and "you'll knock the kids' socks off," promises Bob Sloan's "Dad's Own Cookbook: Everything Your Mother Never Taught You."

When shopping for potatoes, look for those with uniform hardness, no dark spots, cracks or sprouting eyes.

STUFFED POTATOES WITH BACON AND CHEESE

4 large russet or Idaho potatoes, baked
½ cup milk
2 eggs
1 cup grated Cheddar, Gruyere, or Swiss cheese (about 4 ounces)
½ teaspoon salt
Freshly ground black pepper
Pinch of nutmeg
2 links sweet Italian sausage, cooked, or 4 slices bacon, cooked
4 tablespoons Parmesan cheese, if desired

Scrub, then prick the potatoes with a skewer or fork in about 10 places. Arrange the potatoes at least 1 inch apart around the edge of a microwave turntable or on the bottom of the microwave oven. Bake on high (100 percent power) for 5½ to 7 minutes. Turn the potatoes over. Cook on high for another 5½ to 7 minutes. Remove the potatoes while they're still slightly firm. Wrap the potatoes individually in aluminum foil and let them rest for 5 minutes. (For microwave ovens with less than 650 watts of power, add 1 to 2 minutes to the cooking time.)

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Slice the baked potatoes in half lengthwise. Scoop out the centers, leaving ¼ inch of shell. Mash the pulp in a medium bowl; set aside.

Heat the milk in a small saucepan until it's just hot. Do not let it boil. Add the hot milk to the potato pulp; mix well with a potato masher until the potatoes are smooth. Beat in the eggs, one at a time, then stir in the grated cheese, salt, pepper and nutmeg.

Crumble the cooked sausage or bacon into small pieces; stir into the potato mixture. Spoon the mixture into the shells, heaping it in the center. Sprinkle with the Parmesan cheese, if using.

Arrange the filled shells on an 11x17-inch baking sheet. Bake on the center of a rack in the 350-degree oven until the filling puffs and bubbles, about 20 minutes. Serve immediately.

NOTE: Chopped ham, salami or prosciutto, or finely chopped scallions can be used if there's no leftover bacon or sausage, or if you don't feel like cooking any. Unbaked filled potatoes can be tightly wrapped in plastic wrap and stored overnight in the refrigerator. Add 8 minutes to the baking time if you're putting cold potatoes in the oven.

DADS: 'New Fatherhood' forges new frontier

(From 6H)

new script. Its defining style and characteristic is minimalism. ... The result is not surprising. Almost no one can follow this script. The actors simply do not know what to do. They are bewildered. They wander around. They are lost."

In general, these men in Nevada City don't seem lost. If anything, they seem a bit like pioneers who know where they're going but don't know what obstacles they'll encounter along the way. Nor do they always agree about how to surmount them.

Rampy wonders aloud: "How do you establish a sense of core and authority? How does a father do that ... without coming down on his kids? How do you do that?"

"Ultimately it's love, is it not?" responds Jorgensen. "I mean, it seems to me that what works the best with Narayan is that he respects me as long as he's my buddy. ... My experience is that when I am there for him, and I am playing with him and I am connected, he listens."

"OK," Rampy says, "I have a problem with the word 'buddy.' ... The thing is, I am not my children's buddy. I'm their father."

"You see, I think I'm both," Jorgensen says.

RAMPY IS HAVING none of it. "As soon as there are no boundaries," he says, "as soon as there are no limits, chaos ensues."

Jorgensen says he has boundaries. "Things are pretty well delineated."

And so it goes, out here on the frontier of New Fatherhood.

It's hard to pin down exactly where this New Fatherhood stuff comes from. These men attribute it mainly to the cultural revolution of the 1960s, which began with the premise that almost everything the previous generation did was wrong.

It goes beyond that, though. The women's movement obviously played a major role. For one thing, it forced men to become more involved in family life: Their wives didn't have time to do it alone. And the women's movement gave birth — quite by accident and with chagrin — to the men's movement, which has helped some men see beyond the narrow boundaries of traditional gender roles.

And finally, children have played a role — perhaps the biggest one. Thirty years ago, men weren't expected to play such an intimate role in their children's lives; until around 1970, for instance, it was almost unheard of for a man to be present at his child's birth. Now it is the norm.

"It's a long process," says Klein, who conducted the Redbook poll, "but as men become involved in the details of their kids' lives, they get hooked into their kids just the way mothers do. ... It's the way children seduce parents. They fall in love with you, and you fall in love with every little change, and that's happening to men more and more."

IT IS HAPPENING to these men in Nevada City. You can hear it in the way they speak about their children — "the best two boys in the world," Rich McCutchen says with bursting pride — and in the way they describe their enjoyment in the seemingly mundane tasks of childrearing.

"I'm really happy to be able to put that much time into my children," John Daly says, "to be with my children much more than my father was. It gives a whole new perspective to my life. Having three children and each one of them is very different ... you learn a lot.

"I feel really privileged that I am able to do this, because I know there are a lot of families — probably the majority of the families that are out there — that are still doing what my parents did 40 years ago. ... Hopefully what we're doing will grow. I think it will. ... And I think what we're teaching our children, they'll want to teach their children too."

Time to reflect on roles of Dads

By Carol Deegan
Associated Press

Father's Day is a time to reflect on the role Dads play in their children's lives — from rocking them to sleep at night to giving them their first driving lessons.

Lawrence Kutner, a faculty member in the Department of Psychiatry at Harvard Medical School, says being a parent is probably the most stressful job an adult can undertake — but it is also the most rewarding.

"Raising children is too serious a task to take seriously all the time," Kutner says. He is a husband, father and author of "Pregnancy and Your Baby's First Year" (William Morrow, $20). "We must have the ability to laugh both with our children and at ourselves."

You'll find plenty of laughs in Rick Epstein's "Rookie Dad: Meditations from the Backyard" (Hyperion, $9.95) and David Heller's new book, "Fathers Are Like Elephants Because They're the Biggest Ones Around (But They Still Are Pretty Gentle Underneath)" (Villard Books, $8).

Epstein humorously relates the joys — and challenges — of being a father — from observing the birth of his children to playing a game called Sick Ducks and coping with sibling rivalry.

"I can tell you something about guys," he writes in a confidental tone. "Most of us would like to reduce the whole weird, womanly business of childbirth to a simple mechanical procedure like changing a carburetor. This information is presented, not to excuse men for the way they think, but to let women know just what they may be up against."

Even if Dad isn't an "ideal father," he's right up there with the best of them, according to hundreds of kids, ages 4 to 10, interviewed for David Heller's new book on fatherhood. "A dad is a kid's best friend," says 10-year-old John.

That's not to say, however, that Dad is perfect.

When asked if fathers really know best, 8-year-old Rebecca replied: "Nah ... He always gets lost on the turnpike when he can't find the right exit."

So, what kind of man makes the best father? "The best kind is the father who will watch cartoons with you," says 6-year-old Joy, while 10-year-old Geoff observes: "Fatherhood isn't for weaklings, but it's not for macho nuts either."

Heller writes that just like mothers, fathers are dedicated to their children's well-being and happiness.

"Fathers influence our view of the world and typically instill in us a sense of integrity and self-esteem," he says. "Even though their challenges and sources of stress may differ, fathers are there for us, too."

Mysterious problem may be spidermites

By Deborah A. Benge

It's so frustrating when you've got a plant with problems, but you can't find the cause. You look for bugs, water stress, injuries and other problems and nothing adds up! Finally you give up, give in and let this mysterious problem take over.

Benge

It starts out as some lower leaves turn pale, gradually becoming crispy brown and then just dries up and blow away. Looking closely at these leaves you'll see that the color is stippled, little pinpoints of green color removed from the leaf. As the problem advances, the leaves appear to become dryer and dryer. Turning the leaf over you'll see tiny, just barely visible bits of dust and other unidentifiable stuff. To the touch, the leaves may leave a grittiness when you rub your fingertips together.

These symptoms suggest — not an insect, not a disease, but a spider — a spidermite. Spidermites are one of the smallest, most difficult garden pests to recognize. They are also one of the most destructive garden pests and one of the least discriminating. Spidermites will kill your plants while you are still trying to figure out what's wrong.

Spidermites have tiny mouthparts they insert in a plant cell and suck the contents out. While they are attacking your plant one cell at a time, they can have lots of company. The mite population can rapidly increase with the right conditions and wipe out plants quickly.

Spidermites will get on almost any plant. Mites will attack junipers, vegetables, houseplants, flowering annuals, perennials and ornamental plants of all kinds. In the garden, you may want to check your tomatoes, beans, corn and other vegetables for this minute mite. In the yard, junipers, willows, roses, marigolds, honeysuckle and columbine are prime targets. Houseplants are often infested, especially schefflera and Christmas cactus.

Spidermites love a hot, dry environment. If plants grow adjacent to a cinder block fence, surrounded in concrete, chances of spidermites taking up residence are very high. But you can have a problem without all of that reflected heat and low humidity, just look in the garden or the middle of your yard.

Another situation that can cause a spidermite population to explode is the indiscriminate spraying of broad spectrum insecticides. Carbaryl insecticide is commonly used in the garden and is a broad spectrum insecticide, meaning it kills the pests and the beneficial insects that help hold harmful insect populations in check. Once all the beneficial insects are gone, mite populations can multiply without any disruptions, causing lots of damage in a hurry.

So, avoid indiscriminate, frequent insecticidal sprays. Spot treat instead of spraying everything whether it needs it or not. Or, consider other methods of control; insecticidal sprays, handpicking, remove mites from plants with strong sprays of water, and other organic methods.

If you suspect mites on your plants, take a close look. Mites normally feed on the bottom side of the leaf and many times begin on lower leaves of the plant. Check by taking a white piece of paper and firmly tap a branch or leaf out over the paper. Dust, dirt and other debris will fall out on the paper. Wait several seconds for movement. If some of the grains of dirt begin to move, you've got mites.

Mites are pin point small, roundish, and may be red, brown, greenish, yellow or translucent color. They spin a minute web so infested plants will trap lots of dust, adding to the telltale signs of mites (gritty feeling to finger tips, dry dusty looking plants).

If you find you have mites, you can try several different things. Wash plants off on a regular basis with a strong spray of water, use insecticidal soaps, or use a recommended insecticide.

Some plants will tolerate the mite damage. Junipers and other narrow leaf evergreens will commonly have a small population of mites that don't do much damage, but a bigger population can do massive damage. The answer to any mite or insect problem is to monitor it. Keep an eye on it and take appropriate steps when needed.

The Texas Gold columbine is an example a plant that will get mites during the summer,but generally can tolerate them. The leaves of the Texas Gold columbine go dormant in late summer anyway, so it generally isn't a big problem. Texas Gold columbine begins to put on fresh new leaves in early winter so it is important that they not have a serious mite problem at that time. So, again monitor.

With any plant problem, you need to investigate it before you spray it. Find out the answers; then you'll be able to make the right decisions about treating the problem. Don't use insecticidal spray unless you truly have a problem.

Deborah Benge is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector counties.

Hispanic Business Owners Attend NAFTA Briefing at the White House

Washington, DC — Small and medium sized businesses will benefit from a free trade agreement between the United States, Mexico and Canada, because such an agreement would create jobs and increase commerce. That's what Jorge Verduzco, Executive Vice President of the International Bank of Commerce in Laredo, Texas said following the NAFTA briefing held May 28th at the White House.

The briefing was hosted by the U.S. Trade Representative, Mickey Kantor and Commerce Secretary Ron Brown. Invited to the meeting were over 100 owners of small and medium-sized companies. "The meeting was fantastic," remarked Mr. Verduzco, "because it showcased four small business owners whose businesses had been affected positively by trade with Mexico."

"All of the small and medium sized business owners who attended the briefing could relate to these four peoples successes and understand what NAFTA's effect would do for their own business. All of us who attended the

A Special Father's Day Salute to Single Fathers

By Amarante Cordova

If you stay up late and watch television, chances are you have seen some of those old television shows, mostly light-hearted comedies, about family life. They presented a very traditional view of the family. The members who formed that family, for example, and the roles that each of those family members assumed.

But what may have worked for 'The Donna Reed Show', or 'Leave It To Beaver', thirty years ago, may not work for all families today. Statistics tell us that single-parent families are far more common today. And households where both parents must leave the home, in order to go to work, and help make ends meet, have been common for many years, now.

The newer 'non-traditional' household still faces the same responsibilities as those faced by the traditional household. The childrearing, for example, and the housekeeping, though they may have less resources with which to work, to meet those responsibilities.

But as in all households, the love is there, and the commitment to doing the very best, especially for the children.

It is that love, and that commitment, which we honor on special days, like Father's Day, when we celebrate that special relationship that exists between father and child.

It's a special day for Fred Lopez, of Monahans. Lopez is the Meat Department Manager at Furr's Supermarket #993, in Monahans, and he has been a single father since 1986. He has two sons, Eduardo, who is 16, and Gerardo, who is 12.

Looking back over the past seven years, Lopez admits that there have been times when being the head of a single-parent household was difficult, requiring all his time, and all his energy. He found this was especially true in the early years, when the boys were still young, and required supervision.

He recalls, for example, the daily trips, first from his home, to the home of his babysitter, where he would drop off the boys. Then from the babysitter's home, to his job. And then back to the babysitter's, and then home, at the end of the day.

Then there were the chores. The cooking for example, the cleaning, the laundry, and home maintenance. Responsibilities that might have normally been shared by the two parents. But Lopez, as so many single parents have done, found a way to do it all, and at the same time, work a full-time job at Furr's.

Lopez is grateful for the help he has received over the years, especially from the family. In the early years, his sisters proved invaluable in helping care for the boys. But as time has gone by, and the boys have grown older, they have taken more responsibility for themselves. The older boy supervising his younger sibling, for example. Or both taking on more of the household chores, and helping wherever they can.

This does not mean that the parenting has come to an end! In a scene that most parents of teenagers would recognize, Eduardo, who is a junior at Monahans High School, will come home from an evening out with his friends, and find dad wide awake and waiting, making

Un Saludo Especial Este Día de los Padres para Padres Solteros

Por Amarante Cordova

Si usted se queda despierta hasta tarde y viendo televisión, es probable de que usted haya visto esas antiguas funciones de televisión, muchas comedias simpáticas y blancas, acerca de la vida familiar. Ellos presentan un modo muy tradicional de la familia. Los miembros que forman esa familia, por ejemplo y el papel que cada de esos miembros de la familia asumen.

Pero que a trabajado para "The Donna Reed Show", o "Leave It To Beaver", hace treinta años, y que no trabaja para las familia de hoy en día. Las estadísticas nos dice que las familias de padres solteros son definitivamente mas comunes hoy día. Y que la familia tiene que abandonar el hogar, para poder ir a trabajar y ayudar para el sustento, a sido muy común por varios años, hasta el presente.

Lo novedoso 'no-tradicional' la familia aun le da la cara a las mismas responsabilidades como esas que encaraban las familias si tradicionales. La niñera, por ejemplo, y el ama de llaves, sin embargo tienen menos recurso con los que trabajaban, para encontrarse esas responsabilidad.

Pero como en todos los hogares, el amor esta ahí, y el compromiso para hacer lo mejor que se pueda, especialmente por los hijos.

Es ese el amor y el compromiso, que nosotros honramos en días especiales, como el Día del Padre, cuando nosotros celebramos esa relación tan especial que existe entre padre e hijo.

Es un día especial para Fred Lopez, de Monahans. Lopez es el Manejador del Departamento de Carnes en el Supermercado Furr's #993. El tiene dos hijos, Eduardo, quien tiene 16, y Gerardo, que tiene 12.

Viendo atrás sobre los últimos siete años, Lopez admite que a habido tiempos que ser la cabeza principal de la casa como padre soltero es dificultoso, requiriendo todo su tiempo y toda su energía. El encontró que esto fue especialmente una verdad en los primeros años, cuando sus hijos estaban todavía pequeños, y requerían supervisión.

El recuerda, por ejemplo, los viajes diarios, primero de su casa, a la casa de la niñera, donde el dejaba a los niños. Luego de la casa de la niñera, a su trabajo. Y luego regresar a la casa de la niñera e ir a la casa, al final del día.

Luego ahí estaban los quehaceres. El cocinar por ejemplo, la limpieza, lavar la ropa y el mantenimiento de la casa. Responsabilidades pueden ser normalmente compartidas por dos, padre y madre. Pero Lopez, como muchos padres solteros lo han hecho, encuentran la manera para hacer todo, y al mismo tiempo, trabajar tiempo completo en el Furr's.

Lopez esta agradecido por la ayuda que a obtenido sobre los años, especialmente de la familia. En los años tempranos, su hermana le probo inestimable ayuda con el cuidado de los muchachos. Pero como el tiempo a pasado y los muchachos han crecido, ellos han tomado mas responsabilidad para ellos mismos. El muchacho mayor supervisando a su hermano menor, por ejemplo. O los dos estando al cuidado de los quehaceres del hogar, y ayudando en cualquier cosa que ellos puedan.

Esto no quiere decir que el ser padre a terminado! Una escena que muchos padres de jovenes reconocen, Eduardo, quien esta en el grado junior de la escuela secundaria de Monahans, regresa a casa de una velada con sus amigos y encuentra a su padre despierto y esperando, estando seguro de que todo esta bien y que su hijo llego a salvo a su casa.

Y como ve a sus hijos crecer y tomando en esas responsabilidades, Lopez siente el orgullo que todos los padres sienten. Si, el admite, a habido tiempos de mucho trabajo para criar a mi familia. Y tal vez a sido mas difícil siendo padre soltero, especialmente en los años tempranos.

Pero a sido trabajo que uno tiene que hacer y hacerlo tan bien como uno pueda. Y teniendo a sus hijos junto a uno, donde pueda uno compartir con ellos, y crecer con ellos cada y cada día, a sido una recompensa muy grande para uno.

Tal vez sea el amor y el orgullo que Sonora Louise Smart Dodd, Spokane, Washington, tiene en su mente cuando ella por primera vez organizo la celebración del Día del Padre en su comunidad, en 1910. Al ultimo, la idea se extendió hasta Canadá y Europa. Y, en 1972, el Presidente de los Estados Unidos Richard Nixon hizo oficial el Día de los Padres como día de fiesta nacional.

Es un día de fiesta que, de alguna manera u otra, se celebra en el hogar de Fred Lopez todos los días. Y que es algo que por eso el esta genuinamente agradecido.

Spanish and English as Border Partners

By R. Daniel Cavazos

Midwesterner E.G. Roberts, a winter Texan and a former educator, was a bit surprised recently when he walked into a Roma, Texas, high school classroom and asked students what the first question an employer might ask them.

"Are you bilingual?" was the quick answer of a young Latina.

Roberts was taken aback.

In a letter to The McAllen Monitor, Roberts wrote, "For an instant I was surprised because in Ohio (bilingualism) is inconsequential. However, the answer I was looking for was the ability to communicate, and she was 'on the money, for her residence."

The interchangeable use of Spanish and English in border regions is a fact of life, but the mixture of the two languages will always bother some who would prefer monolingual purity in this country.

Reality dictates a different course. As Roberts discovered in Roma, English and Spanish are the languages of business and education here. For many Mexican-Americans, Spanish has also long been one of the languages of family and culture, a badge of pride that defines a people.

Mexican-Americans of a generation or two ago often faced harsh social conditions and used Spanish as a personal shield of protection against "los otros," the gringos.

In his autobiographical book "Hunger of Memory," Richard Rodriguez wrote about growing up in California during the 1950s, recalled the comfort and warmth provided by his family's native language.

"Excited, we joined our voices in a celebration of sounds, often speaking the way we never speak out in public. We are alone — together, voices sounded, surrounded to tell me."

For Rodriguez, the use of English and Spanish marked a clear delineation. English was the language spoken in public. Spanish was the language of intimacy to be kept within the private quarters of a home. For the Spanish-speaking, it provided a reassuring glow of confidence and self-worth at home.

These very personal feelings that Rodriguez felt growing up were to form his opinions on issues such as bilingual education. Rodriguez is an articulate and staunch opponent of bilingual education, arguing, "It is not possible for a child — any child — ever to use his family's language in school. Not to understand this is to misunderstand the public uses of schooling and to trivialize the nature of intimate life — a family's language."

Español e Ingles como Asociados Fronterizos

Por R. Daniel Cavazos

E. G. Roberts, oriundo del medio-oeste, Tejano en invierno y anteriormente educador, se sintió algo sorprendido recientemente al entrar en un aula de escuela secundaria en Roma, Tejas, y preguntar a los estudiantes cuál sería la primera pregunta que les haría un empleador.

"¿Es usted bilingüe?" fue la respuesta rápida de una joven latina. Roberts quedó asombrado.

En una carta dirigida a The McAllen Monitor, Roberts escribió: "Por un instante me quedé sorprendido porque en Ohio (el bilingüismo) no tiene consecuencias. No obstante, la respuesta que yo estaba buscando era la capacidad de comunicarse y ella "dio en el clavó por su residencia."

El uso intercambiable del español y el inglés en las regiones fronterizas es un hecho de la vida, pero la mezcla de los dos idiomas siempre molestará a algunos que preferirían la pureza monolingüe en este país.

La realidad dicta un curso diferente. Como descubrió Roberts en Roma, el inglés y el español son los idiomas de los negocios y la enseñanza. Para muchos Mexicano-Americanos, el español ha sido durante mucho tiempo uno de los idiomas de la familia y la cultura, una placa de orgullo que define a un pueblo. Los Mexico-Americanos de hace una o dos generaciones se enfrentaban a menudo con las circunstancias sociales ásperas y usaban al español como un escudo personal de protección contra "los otros," los gringos.

"Emocionados, uníamos nuestras voces en una celebración de sonidos, hablando a menudo del modo que nunca hablábamos en público. Estamos solos — juntos, sonaban las voces, me rodeaban para decírmelo."

Para Rodríguez, el uso del inglés y el español señalaba una delineación clara. El inglés era el idioma que se hablaba en público. El español era el idioma de la intimidad, para mantenerlo en los rincones privados de un hogar. Para las personas de habla Hispana, el idioma nativo proporcionaba un brillo reconfortador de confianza y valor propio en su casa.

Estos mismos sentimientos personales que sintió Rodríguez al crecer habían de dar forma a sus opiniones sobre asuntos tales como la enseñanza bilingüe. Rodríguez es un opositor articulado y tenaz de la enseñanza bilingüe, argumentando: "No es posible para un niño —

Hispanic Business.... is Good Business

By Amarante Cordova

Traditionally, June is a favorite month of the year for weddings. And that means June is a very busy month for Oralia Urquidi. Twelve years in the business, as owner of The Princess Bridal Boutique, in Odessa, has allowed her to learn the traditions of the wedding ceremony, and to share that expertise with others.

April through October is a busy time for Urquidi, with June, as we said, being the busiest. January through March is the slow time. March is especially slow since weddings are rarely scheduled that might conflict with Lent, and the Holy Days of the Easter season.

From beginning to end, the wedding ceremony is filled with special activities and items that reflect, not only the traditions of Mexico, but traditions from many parts of the world. Of course, this can mean a tremendous expense, and that is why padrinos, or sponsors, are so important to the planning.

Although a majority of the padrinos may actually contribute to the dance that concludes a full day of wedding activities, they may also sponsor the wedding itself through the contribution of such items as the pillows that bear the rings, a photographic or video record of the festivities, or the bride's shoes.

The number of padrinos, of course, will vary from one wedding to the next. In one case, Urquidi was responsible for the attire for 62 padrinos!

At the heart of a church ceremony is the wedding mass. Again, traditions play an important part. The bride, for example, may make a presentation of roses to the Virgin Mary. In another tradition, the bride and groom are joined together by the lazo, a symbolic cord that is bound about them in a loop, representing their new relationship, bound to each other in marriage. The old phrase 'tying the knot', which means getting married, can be traced back to this tradition.

Many parts of the bride's attire represent old traditions of the marriage ceremony. The ramo, or bouquet, dates back to ancient days when the end of winter, and the beginning of spring, was greeted with weddings and bouquets of spring flowers.

There may actually be two bouquets in a ceremony. One is tossed by the bride to the female members of her wedding party, while the other, usually the more elaborate of the two, is kept by the bride. An award-winning bouquet by Urquidi, who attended class and received specialized training in floral arrangement, featured a collection of flowers, pearls, lace, and electric lights.

The wedding dance that brings a full day of activities to a close, is itself filled with traditions. The dance actually begins with a march. Accompanied by traditional music, the march is led by the couple that serves as march directors. They are followed by the bride and groom, then the bridesmaids and groomsmen, and then the padrinos. Following a pattern, the march comes to a close in an arrangement, perhaps in the shape of a heart, at the center of which we find the bride and the groom.

Bizcochos, or Mexican wedding cookies, are just one of the traditional treats that accompany a wedding celebration. There is also champagne and, of course, the wedding cake. In fact Urquidi offers a complete wedding service to her clients, including cakes decorated by her sister. Once again, the role of the padrinos can be seen as they sponsor such items as the champagne, or the glasses used by the bride and groom to drink it, the cake, or the knife used to cut it.

In the dollar dance, which is part of the evening's activities, guests dance with the bride and groom after depositing money in a traditional purse held by the bridesmaid. Over the years, Urquidi has seen many variations in this custom. Depositing the money in a shoe, for example, or pinning the money to the bride or the groom.

A marriage is a joyous occasion, but it can also be an intimidating occasion as a young couple and their families try to attend to the many details of the wedding and all of it's related activities. It's nice to know that Oralia Urquidi, and the staff of The Princess Bridal Boutique are there to help.

Negocio Hispano... es Buen Negocio

Por Amarante Cordova

Tradicionalmente, Junio es el mes favorito del año para bodas. Y eso quiere decir que Junio es un mes muy ocupado para Oralia Urquidi. Doce años en el negocio, como propietaria de The Princess Bridal Boutique en Odessa, le a permitido a ella aprender los tradiciones de una ceremonia nupcial y compartir esas experiencias con otros.

Desde Abril hasta Octubre es un tiempo bastante ocupado para Urquidi, con Junio, como dijimos, siendo el mas ocupado. De Enero a Marzo es el tiempo mas tranquilo. Marzo es especialmente el mas calmado desde que las bodas son raramente programadas porque pueden tener conflicto con la Cuaresma y los días Santos de la temporada de la Pascua Florida.

De principio a fin, la ceremonia nupcial esta llena de actividades especiales y artículos que reflejan, no solamente la tradición de México, pero tradiciones de todas partes del mundo. Claro que, esto puede significar un gasto tremendo y es el porque de los padrinos son bastante importantes para la planeacion.

Aunque la mayoría de los padrinos tal vez contribuyan actualmente al baile que concluye un día completo de actividades de la boda, ellos tal vez también patrocinen solamente la propia boda para la contribución de tales objetos como los almohadones que acojan los anillos, la fotografía o el video completo de las festividades, o los zapatos de la novia.

El numero de padrinos, claro que, varia de una boda a la otra. En un caso, Urquidi fue responsable por los trajes y vestidos de 62 padrinos!

En el corazón de la ceremonia en la iglesia es la misa. De nuevo, las tradiciones juegan una parte importante. La novia, por ejemplo, hace la presentación de rosas para la Virgen María. En otra tradición, la novia y el novio se unen juntos por el lazo, un cordón simbólico que los une, representando una nueva relación, unidos cada uno en matrimonio. La antigua frase 'Amarrando el nudo', que significa casarse, puede ser rastreada en el pasado esta tradición.

Muchas partes del vestuario de la novia representan las antiguas tradiciones de las ceremonias nupciales. El ramo, o el buque, cita los días de nuestros antepasados cuando el fin del invierno y el comienzo de la primavera, eran recibidas con bodas y flores de la primavera.

Actualmente, puede haber dos ramilletes florales en la ceremonia. Uno es aventado por la novia para las damas invitadas a la fiesta de bodas, cuando el otro, usualmente el de mas elaboración de los dos, es retenido por la novia. Un premio ganado por Urquidi, quien asistió a clases y recibió entrenamiento especializado en arreglos florales, facción en colección de flores, perlas, encajes, y luces eléctricas.

El baile de la boda que atrae un día completo actividades a un final es lleno con tradiciones. El baile actualmente comienza con una marcha. Acompañada con la música tradicional, la marcha es dirigida por la pareja que sirve como directores de marcha. Ellos son seguidos por la novia y el novio, luego la madrina de boda y el padrino de boda y luego los padrinos. Siguiendo un modelo, la marcha tiene un final en el arreglo musical, tal vez con la forma de un corazón, en el cual en el centro nosotros encontraremos a la novia y al novio.

Bizcochos, galletas Mexicanas para bodas, son solamente unas de los tratos tradicionales que acompañan a los banquetes de la celebración nupcial. También hay champaña y claro, el pastel de la boda. Ello es que Urquidi ofrece un servicio completo a sus clientes para sus bodas incluyendo el pastel decorado por su hermana. Una vez mas, el papel de los padrinos se puede ver como patrocinadores de las cosas como la champaña, o las copas usadas por la novia y el novio en el brindis, el pastel, o el cuchillo usado para partir el paste!

En el baile del dólar, que es parte de las actividades de en la tarde, los invitados bailan con la novia y el novio después de depositar dinero en una bolsa tradicional sujetada por la madrina de la novia. Por encima de los años. Urquidi a hecho muchas variaciones en esta costumbre. Depositando el dinero en el zapato, por ejemplo, o pinchando el dinero en la novia o en el novio.

El matrimonio es una ocasión de mucha alegría, pero también puede ser una ocasión de mucha intimidad como una pareja joven y sus familias tratan de atender muchos detalles de la boda y todas sus actividades que la relacionan. Es bueno saber que Oralia Urquidi y sus colaboradores de The Princess Bridal Boutique están ahí para ayudar.

sure that all is well and his son has come home safely.

And as he sees the boys grow, and take on those responsibilities, Lopez feels the pride that all parents feel. Yes, he admits, there are times when it has been hard work raising his family. And it was probably harder because it was a single-parent household, especially in the early years.

But it was work that you had to do, and do as well as you could. And having his sons with him, where he can share with them, and grow with them each and every day, has been a reward all in itself.

Perhaps this is the love, and the pride that Sonora Louise Smart Dodd, of Spokane, Washington, had in mind, when she first set out to organize a Father's Day celebration in her community, in 1910. Ultimately, the idea would spread to Canada, and Europe. And, in 1972, United States President Richard Nixon made Father's Day an official national holiday.

It's a holiday that, one way or another, is celebrated every day at the home of Fred Lopez. And that is something for which he is genuinely grateful.

Stanton's First Hispanic Family Practitioner

By Amarante Cordova

At a time when it seemed many medical professionals were pursuing highly-special careers, in America's largest cities, Dr. Pablo Tevini chose what some feared was becoming a lost art, the family practitioner in a small community.

The education and experience that brought Dr. Tevini to Stanton, began on the other side of the Lone Star State. "I was born in San Antonio, in 1959. I went to a small high school on the west side, the Holy Cross High School," recalled Tevini. "And I went on to a college in San Antonio, called Incarnate Word, an Irish-Catholic school in San Antonio."

"I graduated from college in 1980, then went on to medical school. I went to UT Health Science Center, in San Antonio, and I got my MD [Doctor of Medicine] degree in 1986."

It was at that time that Tevini's career brought him to west Texas.

"I came over to Odessa, and trained at the Texas Tech Family Practice Program. I got my Family Practice Specialty there, in 1989. I stayed with Texas Tech until 1992, at which point I left, and set up my practice in Stanton," said Tevini, who became the first Hispanic to establish a private medical practice in the community of Stanton, and one of the few in West Texas.

A family medical practice, in a community like Stanton, held a special attraction for Tevini, whose office is close to the Martin County Medical Center, where he is periodically on call.

"You're appreciated better in a smaller community. You get to know people quite well, and you can get a little more personal with people than you could in, say, San Antonio," he explained. "And Stanton is relatively close to Midland and Odessa, where, if I have a real bad emergency, where I need a specialist, I can find one."

"It's just a more peaceful practice than the hectic life in a big city." Tevini admits that a medical practice can involve long hours, including nights and weekends. This is due not only to the work itself, but the research that is necessary to keep abreast of the latest developments in the medical field.

"No, it doesn't stop, you have to get the journals, we have to stay up to date with the journals," said Tevini. "But you stay abreast of current treatment, and family practice, it's so difficult to stay abreast of current trends, because we have this whole gamut of information that we have to keep up with. Whereas, if I was a cardiologist, I would just have to keep up with the cardiovascular system."

"In family practice, you have to have a general idea of everything, and that's what makes it a little tougher for us. But, on the other hand, we have to realize when we've done everything we can for a patient, and it's time to refer them to a specialist."

El Primer Practicante Familiar Hispano de Stanton

Por Amarante Cordova

En un tiempo cuando parecía que muchos médicos profesionales perseguían carreras de altas especialidades en las grandes ciudades de América, el Doctor Pablo Tevini escogió los que unos temen ser una perdida del arte, practicante familiar en una comunidad pequeña.

La educación y experiencia que trajo el Dr. Tevini a Stanton, comenzó en el otro lado de la Estrella Solitaria del Estado.

"Yo nací en San Antonio, en 1959. Yo fui a una escuela secundaria pequeña en el lado Oeste, la escuela secundaria Holy Cross (Santa Cruz)," recuerda Tevini. "Y yo fui al colegio en San Antonio, llamada Incarnate Word, una escuela Católica — Irlandesa en San Antonio."

"Yo gradué de colegio en 1980, luego entre a escuela de medicina. Yo fui a UT Health Science Center, en San Antonio, y obtuve mi titulo MD (Doctorado en Medicina) en 1986."

Fue en ese tiempo que la carrera de Tevini lo trajo al Oeste de Tejas.

Yo llegue a Odessa y me capacite en el Programa de Practicas Familiares en el Texas Tech, en 1989. Yo me quede en el Texas Tech hasta 1992, a tal punto que partí e instale mi consultorio en Stanton," dice Tevini, que vino siendo el primer Hispano en establecer un consultorio médico privado en la comunidad de Stanton, y uno de los pocos en e! Oeste de Tejas.

Un practicante médico familiar, en una comunidad como Stanton, un atractivo especial para Tevini, el cual su consultorio esta cerca del Centro Médico del Condado Martin, en donde periódicamente le llaman.

"Usted es mejor apreciado en una comunidad pequeña. Usted puede conocer a la gente bastante bien y usted puede obtener un poco mas de la gente, que en un lugar como, digamos, como San Antonio," el explica. Stanton esta relativamente cerca de Midland y Odessa, donde, si yo tuviera realmente una emergencia, donde yo necesitara un especialista, yo pueda encontrar uno rápidamente. "

"Es solamente una practica mas tranquila que la vida turbulenta en las grandes ciudades "

Tevini admite que la practica médica puede envolver largas horas, incluyendo noches y fines de semana. Esto es debido no únicamente al solo trabajo, pero la investigación que es necesaria para mantener de frente los últimos adelantos en el campo de la medicina.

"No, nunca termina, usted tiene que obtener el diario, nosotros debemos estar al día con los diarios," dice Tevini. "Pero usted se mantiene de frente de los corrientes tratamientos y practicas familiares, así es que es difícil de permanecer de frente de corriente tendencia, porque nosotros tenemos esta gran gama de información que tenemos que conservar en alto. Mientras que, si yo fuese cardiólogo, yo nomas tuviera que conservar en alto con el sistema cardiovascular."

"En practica familiar, usted tiene que tener una idea general de todas las cosas y es por lo que se nos complica un poco mas a nosotros. Pero, por el contrario, nosotros tenemos que darnos cuenta cuando nosotros hacemos todo lo que pudimos por el paciente y es tiempo de referirlo a un especialista."

Pero con el trabajo, con las largas horas, y el estudio, también viene la recompensa.

"La recompensa que yo obtengo es cuando veo a gente en el camino, usted sabe, que uno a sabido tener cuidado de todo," explica Tevini. "No es tan lujoso como se acostumbraba ser, ser doctor, con todo ese dinero. Practica familiar, medicina general, pediatras no son las especialidades que te hacen ganar mucho dinero."

"Gente que quiere estudiar medicina para hacer mucho dinero? Es !a razón errónea. Si alguno esta interesado en ser médico porque le gusta estar al cuidado de los pacientes, estar desafiando a la enfermedad, curando gente, y ayudando a otra gente, esa clase de persona, entonces es un buen campo para entrar a ejercer!"

"World's First Rodeo"... The West of The Pecos Rodeo

By Jeffrey McDonald

The historical accounts tell us it all began on a Sunday afternoon, in 1883. It was an informal contest of skill between the cowboys of neighboring ranches.

110 years later, we know of it as the West Of The Pecos Rodeo, the "World's First Rodeo", and a source of civic pride and economic benefits for the city of Pecos, and Reeves County.

Just for the record, that very first rodeo took place on the Fourth of July, 1883, on the grounds south of the old courthouse. The contestants were cowboys from local cattle ranches, each claiming to have the fastest steer roper. The spectators were a variety of townfolk and early settlers, who had come to town for an Independence Day celebration.

Morg Livingston, of the NA Ranch won the contest.Trav Windham, of the Lazy Y Ranch, came in second. We're told the prizes were blue ribbons, cut from the dress of a young girl who was in the crowd.

After more than a century, the rodeo — which is now a 4-day event — has become the centerpiece of a week-long celebration, a time when it seems all the world comes to Pecos, Texas.

"Last year, there were some people at the rodeo from Japan, and from Germany," recalled Tom Rivera, Executive Director of the Pecos Chamber of Commerce. "We've had inquiries from France, everywhere, all over the United States, from all over."

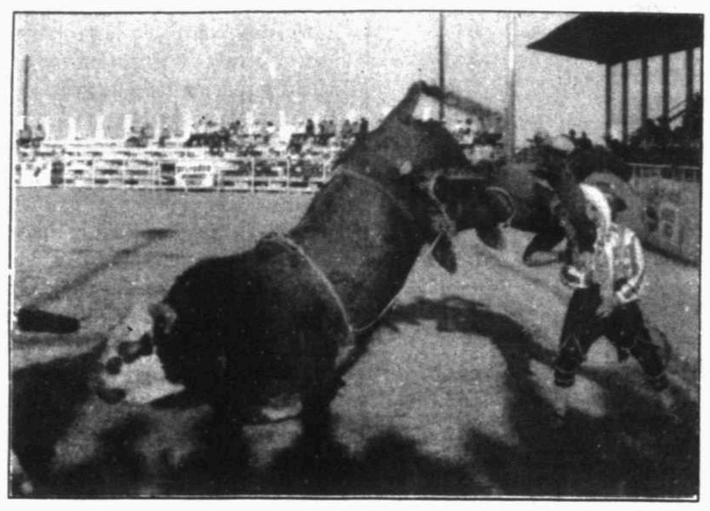
"I don't have the exact count. But the last night of the rodeo, last year, was sold out. I would estimate the attendance, minimum, was five-thousand. And that was just the last night of the rodeo, which is, of course, a four-night event."

Obviously, the arrival of so many rodeo competitors and fans from around the world, would have a dramatic effect upon the local economy of this West Texas community.

"Oh, it has a tremendous impact. By the time it's over, everybody in the community has benefitted, has had some type of benefit, based on the people that come in from out of town," said Rivera. "Motels, gas stations, the restaurants. It just trickles on down till, eventually, everybody has enjoyed some benefit based on the rodeo. But it has a definite impact."

Those who come to Pecos for the Rodeo are also invited to share in the many activities that take place in the days leading up to, and during the rodeo. Activities that showcase the community, it's people, and it's spirit.

"Well, we start off with a Chamber-sponsored, annual event. It's called Fiesta Night In Old Pecos. This year, it will take place the 26th of June, and that essentially leads up to the rodeo," said Rivera.



We declare a Western Week prior to Fiesta Night In Old Pecos, where anybody caught wearing less than two or three pieces of western clothing gets arrested, and fined!"

"So that initially starts off the activities leading up to the rodeo, Fiesta Night In Old Pecos. It's held downtown, in the streets. We block off the streets, and have live entertainment, vendors, and things of that nature."

Another highlight is the Rodeo Parade, which will take place Saturday morning, July 3rd, this year. In addition to the marching bands, and the dignitaries, and the entries in the 'Golden Girl' Pageant, the parade features delegations from ranches throughout West Texas. Most are on horseback, or drive horse-drawn wagons and carriages. And many arrived by caravan, travelling much the way those first rodeo participants travelled, 110 years ago.

It's all part of what makes The West Of The Pecos Rodeo a unique part of American history and culture, and a source of pride for this West Texas community.

"Well, you've hit it right on the nail, there, as far as the community part. I think the rodeo has a tremendous impact, as far as getting the community pride built up," agreed Rivera. "It's part of our culture, part of our heritage!"

"El Primer Rodeo del Mundo" El Rodeo del Oeste de Pecos

Por Jeffrey McDonald

La historia nos cuenta y nos dice que todo comienza en un Domingo por la tarde, en 1883. Fue una contienda informal de la habilidad entre los vecinos vaqueros de los ranchos.

110 años mas tarde, nosotros sabemos de esto como el Rodeo de Pecos del Oeste, el "Primer Rodeo del Mundo", y una fuente de orgullo cívico y beneficio económico para la ciudad de Pecos y el Condado de Reeves.

Nomas para la historia, que el primer rodeo tomo lugar el Cuatro de Julio de 1883, en los terrenos del sur de la antigua casa corte. Los contendientes fueron vaqueros de ranchos ganaderos locales, cada uno reclamando ser los mas rápidos en la conducción del lazo. Los espectadores eran una variedad de gente del pueblo y cercanos colonos, que llegaban al pueblo para celebrar el Día de la Independencia.

Morg Livingston, del Rancho NA gano la contienda. Trav Windham, del Rancho Lazy Y, llego en segundo. A nosotros nos dijeron que los premios fueron cintas azules, arrancadas de un vestido de una muchacha joven que estaba entre el publico.

Después de mas de un siglo, el rodeo — que ahora es un evento de cuatro días — se a convertido en el centro de atracción de la celebración de una semana completa, hay veces que se ve que todo el mundo asiste a Pecos, Tejas.

"El año pasado, había alguna gente en el Rodeo de Japón y de Alemania," recuerda Tom Rivera, Director Ejecutivo de la Cámara de Comercio de Pecos. "Nosotros hemos tenido preguntas por parte de Francia, de todas partes, de los Estados Unidos, de todos los lados."

"Yo no tengo las cuentas exactas. Pero la ultima noche del rodeo, del año pasado, tuvo lleno completo. Yo calcularía que la asistencia, mínima, fueron cinco mil. Y esa fue únicamente la ultima noche del rodeo, que es, desde luego, el cuarto evento nocturno."

Obviamente, el arribo al rodeo de muchos competidores y aficionados de todo el mundo, tendrá un dramático efecto en la economía local de esta comunidad del Oeste de Tejas.

"Oh, tiene un impacto tremendo. Para el momento que se termina, toda la gente de la comunidad se a beneficiado, a tenido algún tipo de beneficio, basado en la gente que vino de otros lugares," dice Rivera. "Moteles, estaciones de gasolina, los restaurantes. Solo escurre algo económicamente hablando, eventualmente, pero toda la gente a gozado de algún beneficio basado en el rodeo. Pero definitivamente tiene un impacto."

Aquellos que vienen a Pecos al Rodeo también son invitados a compartir en las muchas actividades que toman lugar en los días en que esta y durante el rodeo. Actividades que expone la comunidad, su propia gente, y su propio espíritu.

"Bueno, nosotros comenzamos libremente el evento anual, con el patrocinio de la Cámara. Se le nombra Fiesta Nocturna en el Pecos Antiguo. Este año, tomara lugar el 26 de Junio y esto esencialmente nos dirigirá al rodeo," dice Rivera.

Nosotros lo declaramos Western Week (Semana del Oeste) en lugar de Fiesta Nocturna en el Oeste Antiguo, donde a cualquiera que sea observado usando menos de dos o tres prendas de vestir vaqueras será arrestado y consignado!"

"Entonces esto inicialmente comenzara las actividades que nos llevara al rodeo, Fiesta Nocturna en el Antiguo Oeste. Es organizada en el Centro del pueblo, en las calles. Nosotros bloqueamos las calles y tenemos entretenimientos en vivo, vendedores, y cosas de esa naturaleza."

Otro principal atractivo es el Desfile del Rodeo, que tomara lugar el 3 de Julio, Sábado por la mañana, este año. En adición a la marcha de las bandas y los dignatarios y la entrada del espectáculo de la "Muchacha Dorada", el desfile mostrara delegaciones de ranchos de todo el Oeste de Tejas. Muchos de ellos montados a caballo, o conduciendo vagones y carretas jaladas por caballos. Y muchos se presentaran en caravanas, viajando mas del modo de aquellos que por primera vez participaron en el rodeo, hace 110 años pasados.

Todo es parte de lo que hace El Rodeo del Oeste de Pecos una parte única de la historia Americana y cultura y una fuente de orgullo para la comunidad del Oeste de Tejas.

"Bueno, usted le a pegado en el blanco, aquí mismo, tan lejos como la comunidad tome parte. Yo creo que el rodeo tiene un impacto tremendo, tan lejos como lo tome orgullosamente la comunidad y lo construya," esta de acuerdo Rivera. "Es parte de nuestra cultura, parte de nuestra herencia!"

Rodriguez would eventually discard the language of his home and adopt English wholeheartedly to form his public identity as a writer and a teacher. Mexican-Americans of past eras did wear the Spanish language as a protective coat against the harshness of racism. Spanish was the language scores of Mexican-Americans retreated to within the privacy of their homes.

It was a language to be kept out of the public light. How many Mexican-Americans can tell stories of being spanked at school for uttering Spanish sounds in classrooms and playgrounds?

But that was then and this is now. The use of Spanish has exploded in the marketplace. Spanish-language television networks are beamed to every corner of the United States. McDonald's sells Big Macs in Spanish.

Many firms in the Southwest search eagerly for job applicants who can talk the language of business in Mexico and other Latin American countries.

And then there is the music. Young Tejano music artists like Emilio Navaira and Selena Quintanilla are as popular with South Texas teen-agers as are Madonna and Michael Jackson. And when South Texas youngsters sing Navaira's and Quintanilla's songs, they do so in Spanish.

It's a long way from being spanked in school for speaking Spanish to a recent Valentine's dance at a Rio Grande Valley junior high where the musical selections were split evenly between U.S. pop music and Tejano music.

It's extremely doubtful a single youngster at that dance suffered an identity crisis because his or her home language was also heard at a public event.

Spanish is no longer a language to be tucked away and hidden from public view for fear of embarrassment and ridicule. For many Hispanics — young and old — to be bilingual has become a part of both their public and private identities.

All of this is not from ethnic pride. It is a practical view that examines just how far sections of the Southwest have come in accepting the two languages as partners that carry a society and culture through life.

Richard Rodriguez needed to learn English and shun Spanish to form the public identity that would make him successful in this country. Hispanics of this day and age, however, don't need to make that kind of choice. They can have it both ways.

Español e Ingles continua cualquier niño — usar alguna vez el idioma de su familia en la escuela. El no comprender esto equivale a entender erróneamente los usos públicos de la enseñanza y a restar importancia a la naturaleza de la vida íntima — el idioma de una familia."

Rodríguez descartaría con el tiempo el idioma de su hogar y adoptaría al inglés de todo corazón para formar su identidad pública como escritor y maestro.

Los puntos de vista de Rodríguez están terriblemente anticuados. Los Mexico-Americanos de épocas anteriores llevaban al español como una capa protectora contra la aspereza del racismo. El español era el idioma al que veintenas de Mexico-Americanos se retiraban dentro de la intimidad de sus hogares.

Pero era un idioma para mantener fuera de la luz pública. ¿Cuántos Mexico-Americanos pueden relatar historias de ser nalgueados en las escuelas por emitir sonidos en español en las aulas de clase y los campos de juego?

Pero eso era entonces y esto es ahora. El uso del español ha explotado en el mercado. Las redes de televisión en español están dirigidas a todos los rincones de los Estados Unidos. McDonald's vende "Big Macs" en español.

Muchas firmas del Suroeste buscan afanosamente solicitantes de empleo que puedan hablar el idioma de los negocios en México y otras naciones de la América Latina.

Y entonces viene la música. Los artistas Tejanos jóvenes de la música, tales como Emilio Navaira y Selena Quintanilla son tan populares entre los adolescentes de Tejas como lo son Madonna y Michael Jackson. Y cuando los jóvenes del sur de Tejas cantan las canciones de Navaira y Quintanilla, lo hacen en español.

Está a mucha distancia de ser nalgueados en las escuelas por hablar español, lo ocurrido en un baile reciente del Día de los Enamorados (o de San Valentin) en la Escuela Intermedia de Edinburg, donde las selecciones musicales se dividían parejamente entre la música popular estadounidense y la Tejana.

Resulta extremadamente difícil que un sólo joven de Edinburg en aquel baile haya sufrido una crisis de identidad debido a que su idioma hogareño se escuchara también en un acontecimiento público.

El español ya no es más un idioma para esconderlo y ocultarlo de la vista pública por temor al bochorno y al ridículo. Para muchos Hispanos — jóvenes y viejos — el ser bilingüe se ha convertido en parte de sus dos identidades, la pública y la privada.

Todo esto no se deriva del orgullo étnico. Es un punto de vista práctico que examina cuán lejos han llegado las secciones del Suroeste para aceptar a los dos idiomas como asociados que llevan a una sociedad y a una cultura a través de la vida.

Richard Rodríguez necesitó aprender inglés y dar de lado al español para formar la identidad pública que le haría tener éxito en este país. Los Hispanos de este día y esta época, no obstante, no necesitan hacer esa clase de selección. Ellos pueden tenerlo de ambos modos.

Aviso de Salud

La "piel de gallina" puede asociarse con el frió del invierno, pero también puede ser un indicador precoz de enfermedad del calor entre los atletas durante el verano.

"La piel de gallina es una señal temprana del abatimiento severo causado por el calor — un problema peligroso durante los meses calurosos cuando los atletas tal vez no tomen las precauciones necesarias," advierte el Dr. Albert C. Hergenroeder, jefe de medicina adolescente y deportiva en el Baylor College of Medicine en Houston.

Otras señales que se deben buscar al hacer ejercicio durante los meses de verano son dolores de cabeza, temblor o mareo, náusea, espasmos musculares, calambres o fatiga, y sudor excesivo.

"Si los atletas sienten alguno de estos síntomas, deben de parar, descansar, y tomar agua. Si están en una competencia, se debe notificar a un médico o un entrenador," dijo Hergenroeder.

Es esencial que se tomen estas acciones, puesto que los efectos de competir en condiciones calurosas son cumulativos, dijo Hergenroeder. Los atletas tienen más probabilidad de desarrollar enfermedad del calor en el segundo o tercer día de competencia o práctica, si no se toman las precauciones.

Si se deja sin atender, la enfermedad del calor puede resultar en piel seca, elevación de la temperatura del cuerpo, y pérdida del conocimiento.

"Estas son las señales avanzadas y en esta etapa el atleta se encuentra en sumo peligro," dijo Hergenroeder. "Se debe consultar con un doctor inmediatamente e tomar medidas de emergencia, porque la enfermedad del calor puede ser fatal si no se trata."

Hergenroeder aconseja medidas preventivas para las personas que practican actividad física de cualquier tipo afuera durante temporadas calurosas y/o húmedas.

* Quedarse en la sombra lo más posible. Al correr, escoger calles o caminos arbolados.

* Beber un mínimo de una taza y media de líquido cada media hora, aun si no siente sed. Se recomienda el agua. Evitar diuréticos y bebidas con cafeína, tales como las sodas y el café.

• Tomar un mínimo de una taza y media de agua de 20 a 30 minutos antes de la actividad física.

• Tomar agua fría, puesto que se absorbe más rápidamente.

• No tomar tabletas de sal. No son necesarias y pueden ser peligrosas.

• Las bebidas deportivas pueden contener en hasta un 5% de glucosa, que puede reducir su eficacia en reemplazar líquidos perdidos. Diluir estas bebidas a una parte de bebida por cada dos partes de agua.

• No hacer ejercicio o competir cuando hace calor si está enfermo, con fiebre, o si se siente muy cansado.

• Si es posible, hacer ejercicio en las mañanas o las noches cuando está más fresco.

"Ante todo, el ejercicio no se trata de tortura," dijo Hergenroeder. "Se permite omitir el ejercicio ocasionalmente si el tiempo es especialmente inaguantable."

Baylor College of Medicine, Houston, Texas.

HealthTips

"Goose pimples" may be associated with winter weather, but they can be an early indicator of heat illness among summer athletes.

"They are one of the early signs of severe heat exhaustion — a dangerous problem during the hot months when athletes may not take necessary precautions," warns Dr. Albert C. Hergenroeder, head of adolescent and sports medicine at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston.

Other signals to be aware of while exercising during the coming summer months are headaches, unsteadiness or dizziness, nausea, muscle spasms, cramps or fatigue, and excessive sweating.

"If athletes experience any of these, they should stop, rest and drink water. If in competition, a trainer or physician should be notified," said Hergenroeder.

Taking such actions are crucial since the effects of competing in hot weather are cumulative, says Hergenroeder. Athletes are more likely to develop heat illness on the second or third day of competition or practice, if precautions are not taken.

If left unchecked, heat illness can lead to dry skin, rising body temperature, physical exhaustion, and unconsciousness.

"These are the late signs and at this stage, the athlete is in extreme danger," said Hergenroeder. "A doctor should be consulted immediately and emergency measures begun since heat illness can be fatal if not treated."

Hergenroeder advises preventive measures for people who pursue outdoor physical activity of any kind during hot and/or humid weather:

* Stay in the shade as much as possible. If jogging, choose tree-covered trails or streets.

* Drink a minimum of one and a half cups of fluids every half hour, even if not thirsty. Water is recommended. Avoid diuretics and caffeine drinks like sodas and coffee.

* Drink a minimum of one and half cups of water about 20 to 30 minutes before physical activity.

* Cold water is best since it is absorbed faster.

* Do not take salt tablets. They are unnecessary and may be dangerous.

* Sports drinks may be nearly 5% glucose, which can reduce their effectiveness in replacing lost fluids. Dilute such drinks to one part per two parts water.

* Do not exercise or compete in hot weather if you are sick, running a temperature, or feeling overly tired.

* If possible, exercise in the mornings or evenings, when it is cooler.

"Above all, exercise should not be about torture," said Hergenroeder. "It's okay to occasionally forego exercise if the weather is particularly brutal."

Sinobronchial Syndrome

HOUSTON.-A simple surgical procedure may help people with asthma who suffer from recurring attacks known as "sinobronchial syndrome."

"Sinobronchial syndrome occurs when patients are treated for an asthma attack, but not the clogged sinuses that triggered the attack. This causes the asthma to return again and again," said Dr. Gene Alford, an assistant professor of otorhinolaryngology at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston.

Alford and his colleagues use endoscopic surgery to clear the sinus drainage canals. In the procedure, a tube with a tiny cutting device attached at the end is inserted through the nose.

Through a "telescope," the surgeon opens the bony channels of the sinus and removes excess mucosa, the moist tissue that lines the sinus cavity. In asthmatics or people with allergies, the tissue swells, causing the channels to close.

Endoscopic surgery is easier on the patients than is standard sinus surgery, says Alford.

"Sinus surgery used to leave large incisions above the mouth, bruising around the eyes and up to two weeks of swelling," he said. "With endoscopic surgery, there is usually no more than an overnight stay, no incisions and no bruises. Plus, it dramatically opens up the sinuses, reducing the likelihood for sinobronchial syndrome."

Alford says the surgery is also effective for people with allergies who have failed "standard medical treatment."

"Obviously, if an over.the-counter drug works, then endoscopic surgery is out of the question," he said. "But if the doctor has tried the normal treatments and drugs, and the allergies persist, then the surgery is usually recommended."

That's good news for the some 40 million Americans who suffer from allergies or sinusitis, says Alford.

"Endoscopy has really revolutionized sinus surgery," he said. "We're seeing some real good, long.term results. And it's not just for the most extreme cases."

Baylor College of Medicine, Houston, Texas.

Sindrome Sinobronquial

HOUSTON — Un procedimiento quirúgico sencillo posiblemente ayude a personas con asma quienes sufren de ataques repetidos conocidos como "síndrome sinobronquial."

"El síndrome sinobronquial ocurre cuando pacientes reciben tratamiento para un ataque de asma, pero no para los senos tapados que suscitaron el ataque. Esto causa que el asma regrese repetidamente," dijo el Dr. Gene Alford, profesor de otorrinolaringología del Baylor College of Medicine en Houston.

Alford y sus colegas usan cirugía endoscópica para abrir los canales de drenaje do los senos. En el procedimiento, se introduce por la nariz un tubo con un aparato para cortar muy pequeño en la punta.

A través de un "telescopio," el cirujano abre los canales óseos del sinus y quita la mucosa excesiva. La mucosa es el tejido húmedo que reviste la cavidad del seno. En los asmáticos o en personas con alergias, este tejido se hincha, causando que los canales se cierren.

La cirugía endoscópica es mejor tolerado por los pacientes que es la cirugía regular, dice Alford.

"La cirugía de los senos dejaba cortadas grandes alrededor de la boca, moretones alrededor de la ojos, e hinchazón que duraba hasta dos semanas," dijo Alford. "Con la cirugía endoscópica, usualmente no se tiene que pasar mas de una noche en el hospital, y no hay incisiones o moretones. Además, la cirugía abre los senos dramáticamente, reduciendo la probabilidad del síndrome sinobronquial."

Alford dice que la cirugía también es eficaz en personas con alergias que han fallado el "tratamiento médico regular."

"Obviamente, si un medicamento que se consigue sin receta médica proporciona alivio, la cirugía endoscópica es completamente innecesaria," dijo Alford. "Pero si el doctor ha intentado tratamientos normales y medicamentos, y la alergia persiste, entonces usualmente se recomienda cirugía."

Estas son buenas noticias para los mas de 40 millones de Americanos que sufren de alergias o sinusitis, dice Alford.

"La endoscopia realmente ha revolucionado la cirugía del seno," dijo Alford. "Estamos viendo unos resultados a largo plazo muy buenos. Y no es solamente para los casos mas extremos.

Una Escuela en Que Fracaso la Integración, Pero no los Alumnos

Por Joe Rodriguez

Todos los alumnos de la clase de Alberto Galindo son latinos y pobres. Decididamente, no es un aula integrada racialmente.

La Academia Burnett, cerca del Centro Cívico de San José, California, es una escuela-imán intermedia diseñada bajo una orden federal de desegregación para atraer a estudiantes blancos del extremo sur del Distrito Escolar Unificado de San José. Pero cuando no aparecieron suficientes de ellos para 1991, el distrito accedió a recibir a 250 chicos de la vecindad.

Se suponía que el influjo de éstos haría descender a los puntajes de los exámenes.

Pero, ¿adivinen qué pasó?

Los puntajes de matemáticas se mantuvieron subiendo. Los de escritura continúan subiendo todavía más. A medida que disminuye el porcentaje de alumnos blancos, los alumnos morenos continúan llegando y siguen teniendo éxito.

El mismo fenómeno ocurrió en la Escuela Secundaria de San José, otra escuela-imán abierta a los chicos latinos de la vecindad. Uno de los alumnos de Burnett es Alonzo Beltrán, de 14 años de edad, que el año pasado fue rescatado de un aula de "enseñanza especial." "Me pusieron a mí solo en un cuarto pequeño la mayor parte del tiempo, sin tener nada, ni siquiera libros," recuerda Alonzo. Hoy, a él le va bien en la clase bilingüe de álgebra de Galindo.

Los 35 compañeros de aula de Alonzo — "puros Mexicanos" en las palabras de Galindo — habrían sido puestos en una lista de espera hace dos años, aún cuando la Academia Burnett sea su escuela de la vecindad.

"Estos son chicos que recibían la peor enseñanza y que ahora están recibiendo la mejor," dice Galindo. "Estoy dispuesto a enfrentar a mis chicos contra cualquier aula de escuela secundaria de los Estados Unidos."

Cuando el director Mike ÓKane se hizo cargo de la escuela hace cuatro años, Burnett ofrecía un programa mínimo de imán, que beneficiaba primordialmente a los pocos alumnos blancos que eran llevados por autobús.

Con un ojo sobre la igualdad, en vez de las fórmulas raciales, ÓKane se jugó el todo por el todo. Descartó la economía doméstica y el taller de madera y los reemplazó por la ingeniería. Los estudiantes labran hélices y estudian la dinámica del movimiento en el túnel de aire de la escuela.

Todos los alumnos reciben las mismas clases. Para la fecha de la graduación, todos han aprendido álgebra. No hay clases de remedio. A los alumnos no se les separa por razón de capacidad. Las expectativas académicas son universalmente altas.

Las escuelas de imán tienen muchas cosas de las que carecen las escuelas normales. Tienen más computadores y artilugios de fantasía, pero principalmente reciben más dinero y libertad en una medida mayor. Burnett recibe $1,000 más por alumno que las demás escuelas intermedias del distrito escolar. También recibe ayuda del celebrado Proyecto Escolar Acelerado de la Universidad de Stanford.

El éxito de la clase de álgebra de Galindo con sólo alumnos Hispanos revela una verdad—que la desegregación no es la clave de la enseñanza igualitaria. Los planes para la desegregación fueron necesarios para eliminar a la discriminación auspiciada por el gobierno, pero el autobús mágico hacia las escuelas equilibradas racialmente era demasiado pequeño y dejaba atrás a muchos chicos de color, atorados en escuelas dotadas de fondos insuficientes y en aulas de remedio segregadas.

La mayor parte de los alumnos latinos de las escuelas intermedias no asisten a las escuelas de imán. Y los planes para la desegregación ni siquiera tocan a la mayor disparidad entre las escuelas urbanas pobres y sus contrapartidas suburbanas opulentas.

La integración tiene aún un lugar en la enseñanza como una fuerza que produzca alumnos bien redondeados y sin prejuicios, que integren después a las escuelas superiores y a la industria. Pero continúan existiendo desigualdades amplias, aún después de 30 años y van más allá del alcance de los autobuses de la integración.

Necesitamos volver a definir a la enseñanza igualitaria.

Aunque la mayoría de las escuelas de San José están desegregadas oficialmente, los alumnos latinos funcionan aún bien por debajo de los alumnos blancos y tienen mayores probabilidades de ser desechados en aulas segregadas de enseñanza de remedio. Sin embargo, la junta escolar quiere poner fin a siete años de supervisión federal, diciendo que la elevación de los logros académicos de los alumnos latinos no formaba parte del mandato del tribunal.

Tal parece que alguien va por el rumbo equivocado. Qué bueno que estos fideicomisarios no están conduciendo autobuses escolares.

Los chicos latinos de Burnett son la prueba de que, si se les dan los recursos adecuados, ellos pueden desenvolverse muy bien sin necesidad de fórmulas de equilibrio racial.

Maldíganme si quieren como chicano separatista, pero no oigo a nadie que objete en voz demasiado alta a las escuelas blancas opulentas aisladas racialmente.

El mandamiento judicial de San José caducará pronto, pero no porque los chicos latinos se hayan puesto al día académicamente. El caso quedará arreglado porque el distrito y los abogados de los demandantes latinos pueden ver que no hay suficientes chicos blancos que permanezcan y que todo el mundo está cansado del transporte en autobuses.

El autobús mágico de la enseñanza igualitaria llegará a una bifurcación del camino. Uno de los ramales llevará a las escuelas de imán compartidas por distritos escolares citadinos y suburbanos, y a los mismos fracasos.

El otro lleva menos tránsito. El letrero de la entrada pregunta: "¿Son las escuelas totalmente morenas o totalmente negras necesariamente una cosa mala?"

La respuesta es que no.

Pero hay una salvedad. Las escuelas de las vecindades tales como aquélla a la que sirve la Academia Burnett deberían recibir más dólares por alumno que las escuelas blancas suburbanas. Sus alumnos tienen muchos más problemas que superar.

Si se necesita que los gobiernos estatal y federal equiparen primero a los gastos de la enseñanza y después garanticen los gastos según la necesidad, que sea así. La enseñanza igualitaria no puede permitirse el lujo de otro viraje equivocado.

Distritos escolares: ricos contra pobres

A School Where Integration Failed, But Students Didn't

By Joe Rodriguez

All of the students in Alberto Galindo's class are Latino and poor. Definitely not a racially integrated classroom.

Burnett Academy in San Jose, Calif., is a magnet middle school designed under a federal desegregation order to lure white students from the south end of the San Jose Unified School District. But when not enough showed up by 1991, the district agreed to let in 250 neighborhood kids. The influx was supposed to sink test scores.

Guess what?

Math scores keep going up. Writing scores keep going up even higher. As the percentage of white students shrinks, the brown students keep coming and keep succeeding. The same phenomenon occurred at San Jose High, another magnet school opened up to Latino students from the neighborhood.

One at Burnett is Alonzo Beltrán, 14, who last year was rescued from a "special education" class. "They put me in a little room alone most of the time, with nothing, not even books," Alonzo recalls. Today he is doing well in Galindo's bilingual algebra class.

> Math scores keep going up. Writing scores keep going up even higher.

Alonzo's 35 algebra classmates — puros Mexicanos in the words of Galindo — would have been put on a waiting list two years ago, even though Burnett is their neighborhood school.

"These are kids who received the worst education and now they're receiving the best," says Galindo. "I'll match my kids against any high school class in America."

When Principal Mike O'Kane took over four years ago, Burnett offered a minimal magnet program benefitting mostly the few white students who were bused in. With an eye to equality, not racial formulas, O'Kane went for broke. He dumped homemaking and replaced wood shop with engineering. Students carve propellers and study motion dynamics in the school's wind tunnel.

Every student takes the same classes. Everyone takes algebra by graduation. There are no remedial classes. Students are not separated by ability. Academic expectations are universally high. Magnet schools have lots of things regular schools don't. They have more computers and fancy gizmos, but mostly they get lots more money and freedom. Burnett receives about $1,000 more per student than the district's other middle schools. It also gets help from Stanford University's vaunted Accelerated Schools Project.

> "They put me in a little room alone most of the time, with nothing, not even books," Alonzo recalls. Today he is doing well in Galindo's bilingual algebra class.

The success of Galindo's all-Latino algebra class speaks to one truth — desegregation is not the key to equal education. Desegregation schemes were necessary to break government-sponsored discrimination, but the magic bus to racially balanced schools was too small and too late and left too many kids of color behind, stuck in underfunded schools and segre-

Father and Son

By Fernando Chávez

Fathers are hard to talk to face-to-face. When you reach a certain age, the companionship ceases and the competition starts. The father-son chemistry changes. A wall goes up.

Then it becomes a question of how quickly and how well can you dismantle it.

Even as I was growing up, the competition for my father's attention was intense.

There was my mother, Helen, my brothers Paul and Anthony, and my sisters Sylvia, Linda, Eloise, Anna and Elizabeth. There was my father's commitment to his job, which extended from before sunup to well after sundown. And there was his notoriety — first local, then statewide, finally national — which attracted a continuous flow of labor organizers, politicians, reporters, opportunists, statesmen, people wanting help from him, and people wanting to give him help.

So many people wanted my father to be so many things.

All I wanted him to be was my father.

My first recollections are when he worked for the Community Service Organization (CSO), which at the time was the most active civil rights organization for Mexican-Americans in California. Before he became its director, he was a field organizer, which meant setting up chapters throughout the farm valleys of California.

Before I reached the eighth grade, we had lived in San Jose, Oakland, Madera, Hanford, Oildale, Oxnard, Los Angeles and Delano. At most of my new schools, I didn't even bother to make friends. I knew I wouldn't be around long enough to enjoy them.

In 1961, my father asked CSO to get involved in organizing the farm workers who were migrating around the state. He was turned down, so he quit. On his own, he started the National Farm Workers Association.

It had been tried before, by people with big bankrolls. They failed.

My father started with nothing. Of necessity, his family became the heart of his staff. We'd make posters and signs, lick stamps, address envelopes. He always had things for us to do on weekends and during the summer.

In pairs, my brothers and sisters and cousins and I would go leafletting, knocking on doors of farm workers and giving them announcements of meetings. My father would drive up and down the blocks to make sure we were OK.

Material things meant nothing to him. We always had something to eat. Sometimes we got it picking up potatoes in the fields after the crews had been through them.

"I want you to learn what farm labor is like," he'd say. But we'd have enough potatoes for weeks. A used couch or used TV was as good as a new one, he'd tell us.

When I was 10, he took me to help the John Kennedy-for-President campaign in Los Angeles. With some other kids, I spent the day handing out pamphlets. It poured rain, and I was soaked and miserable. Then we kids were introduced at the headquarters and applauded for our participation, and each of us was being handed a $5 bill for our work. I was going to buy a model airplane. But when my turn came, my father said, "Fernando wants to donate his $5 to the campaign." I went off in the corner and cried.

When I was 12, I started traveling with my father. There was a mattress in the back of our Mercury station wagon, and I would sleep while he drove for two or three hours. We'd leave well before dawn and get back after dark. After a few trips, he took me on the side roads and taught me to drive. We shared the responsibility. When he'd meet with groups of farm workers, he'd introduce me, "I'd like you to meet my chauffeur."

He would talk to us children about the problems the farm workers had. He made us understand why we had to share him with them. The rocks through our living room windows, our teachers, comments, in front of the class, that the Communists were behind the farm worker movement — they were just part of a routine we accepted.

My father was a very sensitive and affectionate man. When we were little, he'd lift us onto his knee and kiss us a lot. As we grew up, he'd constantly involve us in his life and the decisions he had to make.

When we were living in Delano, President Johnson offered to appoint him director of the Peace Corps for Latin America. My father called one of our regular family meetings. He explained what the job was. He said we'd probably move to Latin America, reside in a big house, have maids to help my mother, and generally live like kings. He added, "Of course, I'd have to leave the farm workers." He talked about them and their problems until there were tears in his eyes. Then he handed out slips of paper for us to vote by secret ballot. It was 8-1. We stayed.

Of all his children, I'm the only one who's not working with him today on a day-to-day basis with the United Farm Workers.

I barely made it through Delano High School. I worked on assembly lines in factories for a couple of years. That's when my father and I started to lose communication. He had always hammered away at us that we had the potential to be whatever we chose. He asked us, mostly by the example he set, to have a social conscience. One of his sons, he hoped, would be a priest or a lawyer.

The assembly line wasn't much fun. I went back to school. I earned a bachelor's degree at UCLA and, in 1977, a law degree from the University of Santa Clara.

I confide in my father regularly now. The other day, he called me up and asked for my advice on a matter of importance to him. Whether it was a set-up, like the pitch he gave us all on living in Latin America, I don't know. But he accepted my recommendation.

Now our days of competition are over. Once again, we're father and son.

Happy Father's Day, César Chávez.

Padre E Hijo

Por Fernando Chávez

Es difícil hablarle al padre cara a cara. Cuando se llega a cierta edad, la confraternidad cesa y la competencia empieza. La relación entre padre e hijo cambia. Se eleva una barrera.

Entonces hay que ver cómo y con qué rapidez se le puede conquistar. Aún cuando yo estaba creciendo, competía intensamente por la atención de mi padre. Estaba mi madre Helen, mis hermanos Paul y Anthony, y mis hermanas Sylvia, Linda, Eloise, Anna y Elizabeth. También estaba la dedicación de mi padre hacia su trabajo, la cual se extendía desde antes del amanecer hasta después del anochecer. Y también su fama — primero local, después a través del estado y finalmente nacional — que atraía a una corriente ininterrumpida de organizadores sindicales, políticos, reporteros, oportunistas, estadistas, personas que buscaban su ayuda y otras que deseaban brindársela.

Muchas personas querían que mi padre fuera muchas cosas.

Todo lo que yo quería era que fuera mi padre.

Mis primeros recuerdos son de cuando él trabajó para la Organización de Serviciós a la Comunidad (CSO en ingles), que en aquella época era la organización de los derechos civiles para México-Americanos más activa en California. Antes de convertirse en su director, él era un organizador lo que conllevaba formar capítulos a través de los valles agrícolas de California.

Antes de que yo llegara al octavo grado, habíamos vivido en San José, Oakland, Madera, Hanford, Oildale, Oxnard, Los Angeles y Delano. Ni me preocupé por hacer amigos en la mayoría de mis nuevas escuelas. Sabia que no me quedaría un tiempo suficiente para gozarlos.

En 1961, mi padre le pidió a la CSO que comenzara a organizar a los campesinos que emigraban por el estado. Lo rechazaron, así es que él renunció. De su iniciativa y por su cuenta, empezó la Asociación Nacional de Trabajadores Agrícolas.

Se había intentado antes por gentes con grandes cuentas bancárias. Fracasaron. Mi padre comenzó con nada. Por necesidad, su familia se volvió el corazón de su operación. Hacíamos carteles y rótulos, pegábamos sellos y poníamos las direcciones a los sobres. Siempre tenia algo que hacer para nosotros durante los fines de semanas y durante el verano.

En parejas, mis hermanos, hermanas, primos y yo nos íbamos a repartir panfletos, tocando de puerta en puerta en las casas de los trabajadores, y dándoles anuncios de las reuniones. Mi padre manejaba alrededor de la cuadra para asegurarse que estábamos bien. Las cosas materiales no significaban nada para él. Siempre teníamos algo que comer. Muchas veces lo conseguíamos recogiendo las papas de los campos después que los trabajadores habían terminado.

"Quiero que aprendan como es el trabajo en la finca," decía él. Pero teníamos papas para muchas semanas. Un sofá usado o un televisor viejo eran tan buenos como nuevos, nos decía él.

Cuando cumplí 10 años me llevó a ayudar en la campaña de "John Kennedy para Presidente." Me pasé el día dando panfletos con los otros niños. Llovió copiosamente y estaba empapado y me sentía miserablemente mal. Entonces nos llevaron a las oficinas centrales y nos aplaudieron por nuestra participación, y cada uno de nosotros recibió cinco dólares por nuestro trabajo. Iba a comprar un aeroplano modelo. Pero cuando llegó mi turno, mi padre dijo, "Fernando quiere donar sus cinco dólares a la campaña." Me fui a la esquina y llorar.

Cuando tenia 12 años comencé a viajar con mi padre. Había un catre en la parte de atrás de nuestra camioneta Mercury donde dormiría un ratito mientras él manejaba por dos o tres horas. Nos íbamos antes del amanecer y regresábamos después del anochecer. Después de varios viajes me llevaba a las carreteras marginales y me enseñó a manejar. Compartíamos la responsabilidad. Cuando se reunía con un grupo de trabajadores agrarios me presentaba: "Conozcan a mi chofer."

A los niños nos hablaba de los problemas que tenían los campesinos. Nos hizo comprender que teníamos que compartirlo a él con los campesinos. Las piedras que rompían las ventanas de nuestra sala, los comentarios de las maestras delante de la clase de que los Comunistas estaban detrás del movimiento de los trabajadores agrarios — todo era parte de una rutina que ya habíamos aceptado.

Mi padre era un hombre afectuoso y sensible. Cuando éramos niños, nos sentaba en sus rodillas y nos besaba mucho. Según crecíamos, nos envolvía más y más en su vida y en las decisiones que él tenia que hacer.

Cuando vivíamos en Delano, el Presidente Johnson ofreció nombrarlo director del Cuerpo de Paz para la América Latina. Mi padre convocó a una de las reuniones familiares regulares. Explicó en lo qué consistía el trabajo. Dijo que seguramente nos mudaríamos a la América Latina, viviríamos en una casa grande, tendríamos criadas para ayudar a mamá, en fin, viviríamos como reyes. "Por supuesto, tendría que dejar a los campesinos," añadió. Habló sobre ellos y de sus problemas hasta que se le llenaron los ojos de lágrimas. Entonces nos entregó papel y lápiz para que votáramos secretamente. El conteo fue 8-1. Nos quedamos.

De todos sus hijos, soy el único que no está trabajando con él y el Sindicato de Trabajadores Agrícolas Unidos diariamente.

Apenas logré terminar mis estudios en la escuela secudaria de Delano. Trabajé en fábricas por dos años. Ahí fue que mi padre y yo perdimos la comunicación. Siempre nos había dicho que teníamos el potencial de haçer lo que quisiéramos. Lo más que nos pidió, y nos dio ejemplo vivo con su comportamiento, fue que tuviéramos conciencia social. Esperaba que uno de sus hijos fuera sacerdote o abogado.

La fábrica no resultó ser muy divertida. Regresé a la escuela. Me gradué con un bachillerato de la Universidad de California en Los Angeles (UCLA) y en 1977 obtuve mi titulo de abogado de la Universidad de Santa Clara.

Ahora confió y platico con mi padre periódicamente. El otro día me llamó y me pidió que lo aconsejara en un asunto importante para él. Si era un truco, como la jugadita que nos hizo del viaje a Latino-América, no sé. Pero él aceptó mi recomendación. Ahora nuestros años de competir quedaron atrás. De nuevo somos padre e hijo.

Feliz Día de los Padres, César Chávez.

But with the work, with the long hours, and the study, also comes the reward.

"The reward I get is when you see people on the road, you know, that you've taken care of," explained Tevini. "It's not as luxurious as it used to be, to be a doctor, with all this money. Family practice, general medicine, pediatrics are not the specialties that make you a lot of money."

"People that want to go into medicine to make a lot of money? That's the wrong reason. If someone is interested in becoming a physician because they like to take care of patients, they're challenged by illness, by curing people, and to help other people, that kind of person, then it's a good field to get into!"

gated remedial classes.

Most Latino middle-school students don't attend magnet schools. And desegregation schemes don't even touch the larger disparity between poor urban schools and their affluent suburban counterparts.

Integration still has a place in education as a force for producing well.rounded and unprejudiced students who will then integrate colleges and industry. But vast inequalities remain after 30 years and they're beyond the range of integration buses. We need to redefine equal education

Although most San Jose schools are officially desegregated, Latino students still perform way below white students and are more likely to be dumped into segregated, remedial classes. Yet the school board wants to end seven years of federal supervision, saying that raising the academic achievement of Latino students wasn't part of the court order. Talk about the wrong destination. Be glad these trustees aren't driving school buses.

The Latino kids at Burnett are proof that, given the right resources, they can get along nicely witho ut racial.balance formulas. Damn me as a Chicano separatist, but I don't hear anyone objecting too loudly about racially isolated, affluent white schools.

The court order in San Jose will be gone soon, but not because Latino kids will have caught up academically. The case will be settled because the district and lawyers for the Latino plaintiffs can see there aren't enough white kids left to go around and that everybody is tired of busing.

The magic bus to equal education will come to a fork in the road. One road will lead to magnet schools shared by city and suburban school districts, and to the same failures.

The other is less traveled. The sign at the entrance asks, "Are all-brown or all-black schools necessarily a bad thing?"

The answer is no.

But there is a proviso. Schools in neighborhoods such as those Burnett Academy serves should receive more dollars per student than white, suburban schools. Their students have many more problems to overcome.

If it takes the state and federal government to first equalize education spending and then guarantee spending according to need, so be it. Equal education can't afford another wrong turn.

Grand Jury Report II: Solutions to the Problems

By Jeffrey McDonald

Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of articles dealing with the results of investigations into drug use in the schools, by special grand juries of Midland and Ector Counties. These articles will deal not only with the problems revealed by those investigations, but also with the solutions offered by schools, law enforcement agencies, and concerned citizens.

In January of 1990, a special grand jury was convened by Judge Tryon D. Lewis of the 161st State District Court, in Ector County. The results of the investigation by that grand jury, which described the unlawful use of alcohol and other drugs among school-aged youth as "epidemic", provided a wake-up call to all concerned citizens, a call that echoes to this day.

Adela Vasquez was a part of that investigation, and saw first-hand the extent of the problem. But she would also become an active part of the solution, as Supervisor of the Student Assistance Services Program of the Ector County School District.

"Basically, we provide counseling services to kids in the areas of prevention of drug use, the education of drug symptoms, the harmfulness of drugs," explained Vasquez. "And also intervention, with kids who are already experimenting with drugs, addicted to drugs. We can intervene in the process, and get them back on maintaining a healthy lifestyle."

The centerpiece of the SAS strategy is a cooperative effort by a coordinated team of professionals, who identify and address the problem of drug use on the school campus.

"Well, primarily, we have a concept that's called the Student Assistance Services Core Team concept. Basically, we formulate a group of staff members on each secondary campus, and on twelve elementary campuses," said Vasquez. "First of all, we identify students that need assistance, the high-risk students for potential drug use, or already experimenting. We identify them, screen them, in terms of who can best assist them."

"Basically, that concept is new because, in the past, one counselor has tried to be a cure-all for 500 to 1,000 kids on campus. It simply doesn't work! With the new Core Team concept, we've got a team of support people that are not only supporting the counselor as a facilitator, but certainly the students who need the services."

Among the signs that SAS personnel look for, to identify students in need of their services, is reduced attendance, or grades that are suddenly lower than normal for that student. Uncharacteristic misbehavior, or disruptiveness in the classroom, may also be a warning sign. Other, physical indicators include red eyes, grogginess, or lethargic behavior in class.

"I once heard that 95% of our kids are high-risk. When I first heard that, I didn't believe it," recalled Vasquez. "After supervising this program, I thoroughly believe it! I think 100% of our students are high-risk, if you can just qualify that statement by saying, 'at one time or another'."

"That's a true fact, because all of us experience a crisis in our lives, all of us experience turmoil. We need help during those crucial moments, no matter what our social-economic background is, or what race we are."

Or what age. One of the workshops offered by the Student Assistance Services Program is for parents. The 'Parent To Parent' program is designed to make parents active partners in the fight against drug abuse.

"It's a video-based program, and eight videos are shown. They're no longer than thirty minutes. They're powerful videos, they give a lot of information," explained Vasquez, the mother of two children who has herself taken the program. But the true power of the program comes when the debriefing takes place. After each video, there's a group discussion, where parents share existing problems, and they share their concerns."

"The main thing that this program focuses on, is that no one receives official training to become a parent. Few people have, you know, and we all need to help each other."

The Parent To Parent Program is available, free of charge, to all parents. Those interested in participating in the 8-hour workshop can contact the Principal's office at their local school, or they can call the Student Assistance Services office, at 368-2800. The workshop will be set up at dates and times convenient for the parents. There is also an optional workbook, that accompanies the program, that may be purchased for five dollars.

But eight hours of time, and five dollars, doesn't seem like very much at all, when you consider the difference you might make in the life of your child, and your community.

"We have the children on our campus for less than eight hours a day," said Vasquez. According to all the surveys that have been done - nationwide, statewide - drug use occurs on weekends, and in the evening. Drug use does occur in school. But when you look at the trends, a majority does occur on weekends and evenings."

"That's the time that's crucial. That's when they're under the supervision of the parent. So we're going to continue to see problems on our campuses, until we start looking at ourselves, at what is going on in our homes!"

El Reporte del Gran Jurado II: Soluciones para las Problemas

Por Jeffrey McDonald

Señala el Redactor: esta es la segunda vez en una serie de artículos relacionados con los resultados de la investigación del uso de drogas en las escuelas, por los grandes jurados especiales de los condados de Midland y Ector. Estos artículos no solamente están relacionados con los problemas revelados por esas investigaciones, pero también con las soluciones ofrecidas Por las escuelas, las agencias de la fuerza de la ley, y la concernencia ciudadana.

Brian Adamek/Midland Reporter-Telegram

"I once heard that 95% of our kids are high-risk. en I first heard that, I didn't believe it. After supervising this program, I thoroughly believe it: I think 100% of our students are high-risk. itf you can just quality that statement by saying, 'at one time or another.'" — Adela L. Vasquez, Supervosor for The Student Assistance Service, E.C.I.S.D.

En Enero de 1990, un gran jurado especial fue reunido por el Juez Tryon D. Lewis del 161 avo. de la Corte Distrital del Estado, en el condado de Ector. Los resultados de la investigación por el gran jurado, quien describe el abuso indescriminado de alcohol y drogas entre jovenes de edad escolar como una "EPIDEMIA", señalando con una llamada de atención a toda la ciudadanía que le concierne, una llamada que emita eco en estos días.

Adela Vasquez es parte de esta investigación, y vio en primer plano de lo extenso que es el problema. Pero ella también es una parte activa de la solución, como Supervisora del Programa de Servicios Asistenciales Estudiantil del Distrito Escolar del Condado Ector.

"Básicamente, nosotros proveemos servicio de aconsejaría a los muchachos de las áreas para la prevención del uso de las drogas, la educación de los síntomas de las drogas, el peligro de las drogas," explica Vasquez. Y también la intervención, con los muchachos que están experimentando en este momento con las drogas, adictos a las drogas. Nosotros podemos intervenir en el proceso Y regresarlos, manteniéndolos en un estilo de vida saludable."

La pieza central de la estrategia SAS es un esfuerzo de cooperación coordinado por un equipo de profesionales, quienes identifican y dan lugar al problema del uso de drogas en los campos escolares.

"Bueno, primeramente, nosotros tenemos un concepto que es llamado The Student Assistance Services Core Team Concept (El Concepto del Equipo de Servicios Asistenciales Estudiantiles Core). Básicamente, nosotros formulamos un grupo de miembros de la dirección en cada escuela secundaria y en doce campos de escuelas primarias," dice Vasquez. "Primero que nada, nosotros identificamos a los estudiantes que necesitan asistencia, los estudiantes de alto riesgo que tienen un potencial riesgo en el uso de las drogas, o los que en este momento están experimentando. Nosotros los identificamos a ellos, los protegemos, en términos de quien sea su mejor asistente para ellos."

"Básicamente el concepto es nuevo porque, en el pasado, un consejero trataba de ser el cura-todos en un campo en el que había de 500 a 1000 muchachos. Y simplemente no trabajaba de esa manera! Con el nuevo concepto de Equipo Core, nosotros tenemos un equipo de gente que apoya y no solamente apoyando al consejero como facilitador, pero ciertamente a los estudiantes que necesitan los servicios."

Entre las señales que el personal de SAS observa, para la identificación de los estudiantes que necesiten de sus servicios, son las faltas de asistencia a la escuela, o las calificaciones que poco a poco van bajando de lo normal de ese estudiante. Característica sin duda es la mala conducta, o disturbar a la hora de clase, tal vez sea un signo de advertencia. Otros, indicadores físicos incluyen los ojos rojos, mareados, o conducta letargosa en clase.

"Una vez yo oí que el 95% de nuestros muchachos son de alto riesgo. Y cuando la primera vez lo oí, yo no lo creí," recuerda Vasquez. "Después de supervisar este programa, yo lo creí por completo! Yo pienso que el 100% de nuestros estudiantes son de alto riesgo, 'si usted nomas puede calificar esta declaración diciendo, 'a un tiempo o al otro'."

"Esto es un factor verdadero, porque todos nosotros experimentamos una crisis en nuestras vidas, todos nosotros experimentamos una turbulencia. Y todos necesitamos ayuda durante esos momentos cruciales, no importando cual sea nuestra posición socio-economica, o de que raza seamos."

O que edad. Uno de los talleres de trabajo ofrecidos por el Programa de Servicios Asistenciales Estudiantil es para los padres de familia. El Programa 'Parent to Parent' ('Padre a Padre') esta diseñado para hacer a los padres de familia socios activos en la batalla contra el abuso de las drogas.

"Es un programa basado en videos, y ocho videos son mostrados. Estos no son mas que de 30 minutos cada uno. Son videos muy poderosos, dan mucha información," explica Vasquez, la madre de dos niños que ella sola a tomado el programa, pero la verdadera fuerza del programa viene cuando la discusión toma lugar. Después de cada video, hay una discusión de grupo, donde los padres de familia comparten los problemas que existen y comparten su inquietud."

"El principal objetivo que este programa enfoca, es que nadie recibe entrenamiento oficial para ser padre. Muy poca gente tiene, usted sabe, y todos nosotros necesitamos ayudarnos unos a los otros."

El Programa de Padre a Padre esta disponible, es gratuito, a todos los Padres de familia. A esos interesados a participar 8-horas en el taller puede contactarse con la oficina del Director de su escuela. O ellos pueden llamar a la oficina de Servicios de Asistencia Estudiantil, al 368-2800. Los talleres se pondrán en las fechas y horas apropiadas para los padres de familia. También hay un libro de trabajo facultativo, que acompaña al programa, que lo podría comprar por cinco dólares.

Pero ocho horas de su tiempo y cinco dólares, no se ve como mucho, cuando usted considere la diferencia que usted probablemente haga en la vida de su hijo y su comunidad.

"Nosotros tenemos a nuestros hijos en el campo de la escuela por menos de ocho horas al día," dice Vasquez. De acuerdo con todos los estudios que se han hecho — nacionalmente el uso de las drogas ocurren los fines de semana y en las tardes. El uso de las drogas ocurren en las escuelas. Pero cuando usted ve la tendencia, la mayoría ocurre en los fines de semana y al atardecer."

"Ese es el momento que es crucial. Es cuando ellos deben de estar bajo la supervisión de los padres de familia. Entonces nosotros vamos a continuar viendo el problema en nuestros campos de la escuela, hasta que nosotros mismos nos veamos, que es lo que pasa en nuestros propios hogares!"

La Asociación de Golf Chicana Ayuda a Nuestra Comunidad y se Divierten Mientras lo Hacen

Por Amarante Cordova

Si usted piensa servir a la comunidad requiere de muchas horas y trabajo duro, entonces usted no a conocido la Asociación de Golf Chicano. Seguramente, tal vez ellos potean durante muchas horas. Pero ellos tienen bastante diversión mientras sirven a la comunidad.

De acuerdo con Cecil Adams, Vice Presidente de la Asociación, el grupo fue formado en los principios de 1980. Los miembros fundadores incluyendo a Domingo Valencia y Nick Sanchez quien es actualmente Tesorero del grupo.

"La misión, en el comienzo, fue de atraer al Chicano dentro de un grupo para que jugara golf, en plan de camaderia y para servir a la comunidad," explica Adams, quien se unió a la Asociación en 1989.

Servicio a la comunidad se obtiene de los torneos de golf que se hacen. La Asociación patrocina ocho de estos torneos cada año. Dos de esos torneos benefician causas caritativas seleccionadas por aplicaciones recibidas por la Asociación. Una familia, por ejemplo, que sus recursos han sido afectados por alguna enfermedad seria.

Apoyo de la comunidad viene en forma de efectivo, todo como pago de registracion para el torneo y donaciones. Miembros de la Asociación también solicitan contribución para los premios de los participantes, por parte de las áreas de negocios.

Adicionalmente, la Asociación patrocina un torneo, en el cual recauda dinero el cual lo dona como beca escolar. La meta es recaudar para cuatro becas escolares, de $250.00 cada una, otorgadas cada año.

Además del compromiso para servir a la comunidad, miembros de la Asociación de Golf Chicano también comparten el amor al juego y las oportunidades proveen para la recreación y amistad.

En el caso de Adams, su amor al juego de golf fue aumentando de valor durante los veinte años al servicio de la flota Naval de los Estados Unidos. Durante ese periodo, el jugo en campos de golf por todo el mundo incluyendo Japón, Australia, Singapore, y Hong Kong. Y luego ahí estuvo los campos de los Emiratos Arabes Unidos, una nación en el Mediano Este, donde el arena substituye al zacate!

Es con amor que la Asociación le gustaría que otros compartieran. Actualmente, la Asociación tiene 100 miembros en Midland, Odessa, Stanton y Big Spring. En un tiempo, había cerca de 250 socios y Adams indico que la Asociación había puesto una meta de incrementar a sus socios a 300. Y las membresias no son estrictamente para Chicanos.

"Nosotros estamos buscando a cualquiera interesado en jugar golf, por el amor al juego y servir a la comunidad," dice Adams. Como el ve, el servicio a la comunidad es un asunto de devolver un favor que la comunidad le ofreció a el, hace muchos años.

"La comunidad me dio mucho cuando yo fui joven, como el programa de la Liga Pequeña de Beisbol," recuerda Adams, quien fue criado en Midland y graduado en la escuela Secundaria de Midland en 1964. "Ellos nos dieron mucho y ahora es tiempo para que nosotros regresemos un poco de lo que ellos nos ofrecieron!"

Y disfrutar de ellos mismos en el proceso. Después de todo, quien alguna vez dijo que servicio a la comunidad no puede ser diversión? Para mas información en la Asociación de Golf Chicano, usted puede llamar al Presidente de la Asociación Al Enriquez, al 684-8481, Vice Presidente Cecil Adams, al 683-4183, o al Tesorero Nick Sanchez, al 682-2283.

Chicano Golf Association helping our Communities and Having Fun Doing it!

By Amarante Cordova

If you thought service to the community required long hours of hard work, then you've never met the Chicano Golf Association. Sure, they may put in long hours. But they're having plenty of fun while serving the community.

According to Cecil Adams, Vice President of the Association, the group was formed early in the 1980's. Founding members included Domingo Valencia, and Nick Sanchez, who is currently Treasurer for the group.

"The mission, in the beginning, was to get the Chicanos into a group that would play golf, for camaraderie, and to serve the community," explained Adams, who joined the Association in 1989.

Service to the community comes through golf tournaments. The Association sponsors eight of these tournaments each year. Two of those tournaments will benefit charitable causes selected from applications received by the Association. A family, for example, whose resources have been drained by a serious illness.

Community support comes in the form of money, such as entry fees and donations. Members of the Association also solicit contributions of prizes for tournament participants, from area businesses.

In addition, the Association sponsors a scholarship tournament, which raises money for college scholarships. The goal is four scholarships, of $250.00 each, awarded each year.

Besides a commitment to serving the community, members of the Chicano Golf Association also share a love of the game, and the opportunities it provides for recreation and friendship.

In Adams' case, his love of golf was enhanced during the twenty years he served in the United States Navy. During that time, he played on golf courses around the world, including Japan, Australia, Singapore, and Hong Kong. And then there was the course in the United Arab Emirates, a nation in the Middle East, where painted sand substitutes for grass!

It is a love the Association would like others to share. Currently, the Association has 100 members in Midland, Odessa, Stanton, and Big Spring. At one time, there were nearly 250 members, and Adams indicated that the Association has set a goal of increasing it's membership to 300. And membership is not restricted to Chicanos.

"We're looking for anyone interested in playing golf, for the love of the game, and to serve the community," said Adams. As he sees it, service to the community is a matter of returning a favor the community did for him, many years ago.

"The community gave me a lot when I was young, like the Little League Baseball program," recalled Adams, who was raised in Midland, and graduated from Midland High School in 1964. "They gave us a lot. And now it's time for us to give a little back to them!"

And enjoy themselves in the process. After all, who ever said community service couldn't be fun? For more information on the Chicano Golf Association, you can call Association President Al Enriquez, at 684-8481, Vice President Cecil Adams, at 683-4183, or Treasurer Nick Sanchez, at 682-2283.
