Face-to-face talks

WASHINGTON — Israel and the Palestinians began face-to-face talks Monday after ending a monthlong procedural dispute. The talks, the first substantive negotiations ever between the two sides, are considered the first, still-tentative step toward devising a plan for Palestinian self-rule in the Israeli-occupied territories./5A

Task force 'break'

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — A task force got a significant break in its investigation of the serial killings of 19 women believed to be prostitutes or drug abusers, a detective said Monday. A television station reported that a man in custody has confessed to some of the slayings. A man arrested Friday in the Riverside area on an alleged parole violation and questioned in the killings gave investigators useful information, Riverside County sheriff's Detective Henry Sawicki said./7A

Super Bowl ads

NEW YORK — For many mega-marketers, the Super Bowl still provides a glitzy backdrop for extravagant advertisements and promotions. But others that once thought the game as super for them as for the football teams that play in it intend to sit out Super Sunday this year. The game's diminution has accelerated for three reasons: the relentless rise in the cost of a commercial; the sluggish economy; and a sense that Super Bowl hyperbole might be just another example of '80s excesses. For each 30-second spot during its telecast of Super Bowl XXVI on Jan. 26, CBS is asking a record $850,000. That figure is up by 6.25 percent from last year.

Sonny didn't vote

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Declaring that "it's no big deal," Republican U.S. Senate candidate Sonny Bono said that he did not register to vote until he ran successfully for mayor of Palm Springs in 1988. Asked at a press conference Monday about when he registered to vote, Bono, 57, said, "I'm not certain of that," and then added that it was likely he registered in 1987. Queried about whether he ever voted before that, Bono said no, but added, "Don't hold me to that, OK, because I might have." The Riverside County registrar of voters' office said Bono registered Dec. 9, 1986.

Dahmer pleads guilty but insane to killings

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Jeffrey L. Dahmer pleaded guilty but insane to 15 slayings Monday, six months after he admitted killing and dismembering 17 young males, having sex with corpses and saving one victim's heart to eat.

If found insane, Dahmer could be sentenced to a mental institution where, after a year of treatment, he could petition for release every six months. If judged sane, Dahmer would receive a mandatory life prison sentence.

"His plea is horrible," said Shirley Hughes, mother of victim Anthony Hughes. "It's driving me mad. He's not

Pacific 'El Nino' disrupts global weather patterns

WASHINGTON (AP) — A massive pool of warm ocean water is causing changes in the atmosphere that could produce unusual weather around the world in the next few months, the National Weather Service reported Monday.

As a result of this phenomenon, known as El Nino, more rainfall than normal is likely this winter in Texas and along the Gulf and Southeast coasts, said Ed O'Lenic of the federal Climate Analysis Center.

In addition, he said warmer than normal weather seems likely over the Midwest through March, while the Southeast probably will be colder than usual for the season.

The Northwest and Ohio Valley should be drier than normal, O'Lenic said.

The Northeast likely will have higher than normal tempera-

Judge jails area sheriff without bail

■ Suspended Presidio lawman awaits drug trial.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

PECOS — Richard Dee Thompson, the suspended Presidio County sheriff charged with conspiring with Glyn Robert Chambers to smuggle more than a ton of cocaine into the United States, will remain jailed pending his trial on Feb. 18.

U.S. Magistrate Walter Holcombe, following a 2½-hour detention hearing in federal court on Monday, remanded Thompson to jail and ordered that, for his own safety, Thompson be placed "separate and apart from all other prisoners."

"Right or wrong," Holcombe said, "I feel I must be consistent" and treat the veteran lawman like any other criminal defendant and not accord him any special favors simply because he was sheriff for more than 18 years.

"I've known the defendant personally for many years," said Holcombe, a Pecos lawyer and former county and district attorney. "I am well aware of the high regard he is held by peace officers."

Thompson is not "in the same category as Chambers," who for some time had been under federal investigation for dealing in illicit drugs and in firearms, Holcombe said.

In prior testimony, U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) agent Dale L. Stinson of Alpine testified that Thompson and Chambers had planned to take the cocaine stash, valued at $20 million wholesale, to Houston and split the $1 million fee for delivering the drug.

Once cut in strength four times and sold on the streets, the cocaine could bring up to $1 billion, Stinson said. It would sell for about $100 per gram, he said.

Health index: Social ills deepen

If you think more children than ever are being abused, if you think the rich are getting richer and the poor getting poorer, if you think health-care costs are more burdensome than ever — You're right.

Sociologist Marc Miringoff has tracked 17 social problems for the past 20 years with his Index of Social Health, and after a steady decline its latest reading has sunk to its lowest point. In fact, the index has dropped 51 percent since numbers were first compiled in 1970.

Five problems are at their worst level: child abuse, teen suicide, the chasm between the rich and poor, a greater percentage of people than ever has no health insurance and people over 65 are spending more of their own money than

American cowboy fades, but his myth grows stronger

By Dirk Johnson
N.Y. Times News Service

DENVER — Al Rose, a tall, craggy 66-year-old rancher, leaned an elbow against a fence post and watched a handsome Hereford strut past the reviewing stand at the National Western Stock Show.

"Used to be, almost everyone I knew was a rancher," he said, tipping back his Stetson. "But there just aren't many of us left out in the country anymore."

But even as so many cowboys fade from the range, this most powerful of American myths only grows stronger. To many urbanites who rope their paychecks from behind computer terminals and glass-covered desks, the ranch has become the nation's most exotic place.

This year, the 14-day Denver livestock and rodeo show, which has been called the "Super Bowl of Cattle Shows," aims to surpass last year's record attendance of more than 500,000.

And across the country, there is an extraordinary appetite for rural and western symbols.

Garth Brooks, the country singer, sold more albums last year than any other musician in any category.

The movie "City Slickers" and "Dances with Wolves" were wildly successful. Old West tourism has been shattering records. The recent spring fashion show in Europe was replete with "Cowgirl Chic."

"No question about it, the American cowboy is riding back at full bore," Said Jack Ravage, a professor at the University of Wyoming and expert on western pop culture.

"The sociologists would point to the breakup of the family and say we're looking for the mythic, nuclear family. And some people would just say we like antiques."

And antiques are just what ranchers fear they are becoming, or something.

For all the popularity of cowboys, ranchers say they are under siege. Price supports for farmers have been cut.

Environmentalists, who outnumber ranchers, are pressing for a reduction of grazing on public lands. Red meat and eggs have become illicit substances for many people.

The number of ranchers has dropped by nearly half since the 1960's. Meanwhile, the average age of a rancher has risen to 59, as fewer young people have been willing, or financially able, to bear the risks and hardships of working the

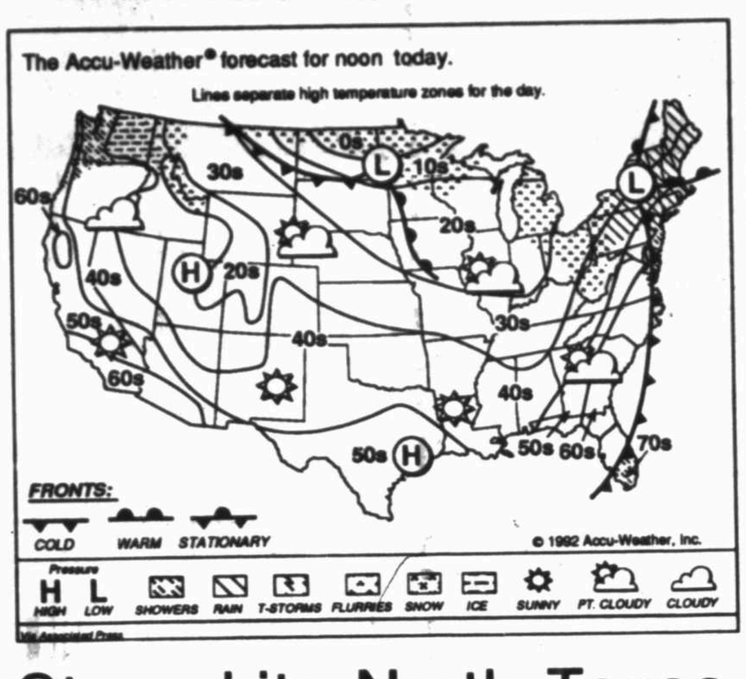
WEATHER SUMMARY



Storm hits North Texas

Associated Press

A powerful winter storm system swept across North Texas Monday, raking the area with rain, light snow and strong winds.

Accumulations of 1 to 2 inches of snow were reported in parts of North and north central Texas, the National Weather Service said.

■ Local weather/ 1B

But by mid-afternoon the rain and snow diminished. Only widely scattered patches of light rain and snow flurries lingered over the northcentral part of the region.

Winds were strong from the northwest across most of North Texas. Speeds ranged from 15 to 30 mph with gusts of more than 40 mph. A few reports of gusts of up to 50 mph were made between Dallas-Fort Worth and Austin, the weather service said.

Elsewhere, gusty winds blew across South Texas. The weather service said wind speeds reached about 50 mph and caused "spotty damage." A freeze warning was in effect for southcentral Texas Monday night with a hard freeze in the Texas Hill Country.

In West Texas, sunny skies were reported.

The forecast for North Texas called for clear to partly cloudy skies through Wednesday. Mostly clear skies were expected across West Texas through Wednesday. The South Texas forecast called for fair skies.

NATION

Rain fell Monday from the lower Mississippi Valley to the East Coast and the lower Great Lakes, and at least one tornado was reported. Snow fell from the southern Plains to the upper Great Lakes and across New England.

At midday, showers and thunderstorms reached from southeastern Louisiana across Alabama into northern Florida and southern Georgia.

A tornado slammed into a rural community south of Lucedale, Miss., damaging homes and collapsing a fire department's roof on top of equipment, authorities said.

Two people suffered minor injuries in one of two houses that were destroyed, said George Miller, George County's chief deputy sheriff.

SHERIFF: Judge remands veteran lawman to jail

by Thompson's attorney, Barry Crutchfield of Lovington, N.M., Stinson said the case was developed through an unidentified informant who was traveling with Chambers on Dec. 3 and 4.

Further testimony indicated that Chambers, once arrested, had linked Thompson to the load of cocaine.

Thompson had befriended Chambers in past years, testimony indicated, and once wrote a favorable letter to a federal judge, Harry Lee Hudspeth of El Paso, to help get Chambers probation on a gun-related conviction.

Federal and state narcotics agents, working on the informant's word, had staked the Marfa-Alpine-Fort Davis area on the night of Dec. 3 and 4 when the cocaine was uncovered by the agents.

Stinson said that Thompson was driving in the Marfa area in his green Chevrolet Suburban station wagon.

Stinson said that for almost a year, Chambers, who has been associated with Texas-Mexico border drug dealing, "had been trying to get up this deal . . . in concert with the sheriff."

Under questioning by Crutchfield, Stinson said that Chambers, an Alpine rancher, had been under investigation for drug-dealing and gun smuggling.

In questioning Stinson, Crutchfield asked if the relationship between the DEA and local lawmen were "less than happy."

"No, sir," replied Stinson, who has been assigned to the Alpine DEA office for 1½ years. "I think we have a pretty fair relationship."

In the federal courtroom packed with Thompson's family, friends and acquaintances, Holcombe said the hearing is "the hardest proceeding I have ever been called to preside over" in his more than two years on the bench.

Following his ruling, which Thompson's attorney plans to contest, Thompson's wife, Barbara Jean, and their children were in tears.

Mrs. Thompson was among six witnesses, who included Jeff Davis County Sheriff Harvey Adams of Fort Davis and retired Texas state Judge William Earney of Marfa. They testified to the ex-sheriff's good character and reputation and said if freed, Thompson voluntarily would show up for trial.

"I can't possibly conceive of him fleeing," Earney said. "I've never known him to be a danger to anybody."

The tall sheriff, who before the hearing hugged friends and occasionally smiled, was stoic but contained following Holcombe's ruling.

Meanwhile, Chambers remained jailed after U.S. Magistrate Katherine Baker denied him bail on Dec. 19.

Thompson and Chambers were indicted Jan. 9 by a federal grand jury in Pecos on four counts arising from the seizure of 2,421 pounds of 93 percent pure cocaine at the Presidio County Fairgrounds in Marfa.

DEA and state narcotics agents found 40 sacks of cocaine, covered by hay and empty feed sacks, in the horse trailer belonging to the Sheriff's Office.

In a December press conference after Thompson and Chambers had been linked to the cocaine, Thompson said that the cocaine had been seized by his office and that he was using the contraband in reserve-sting operations in order to arrest drug traffickers.

However, he apparently had not informed the DEA of the seized cocaine, which had not been given to him through the courts.

Thompson and Chambers' trial is to begin on Feb. 18 at a place to be determined by the case's presiding judge, U.S. District Court Judge Jerry Buchmeyer of Dallas.

U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius Bunton, who presides in Midland and Pecos, excused himself from the case because he had once represented Thompson in a sheriff's election dispute.

In arguing for Thompson's release, Crutchfield said that Thompson was "not an ordinary defendant," was not a flight risk, was not a danger to the community, and has been "responsible for putting many other people in jail."

"This is not someone who has had a history of smuggling cocaine," Crutchfield said. "This is an individual who has been charged. It's only a charge."

However, Beery said "this defendant should not be treated any differently than . . . Mr. Chambers."

Following the hearing, Beery said that Holcombe's decision was "a proper decision under all the circumstances." Holcombe made a "fair determination."

Crutchfield, who said he is hopeful for a "fair trial anywhere," noted that "the judge made his call" on keeping Thompson jailed. "We just disagree."

If convicted on any of the four counts, Thompson, who was appointed sheriff in 1973, could be sentenced from 10 years to life in prison and fined $4 million.

COWBOY: Ranches have become exotic places

(From 1A)

land.

"I'd like to ranch full time, like my dad did, but there's just no way," said Dan Webster, as he ran his hand across the back of Mocha, a South Devon breed heifer in competition at the show.

Webster, a 30-year-old graduate of the University of Wyoming, works as a computer operator in Gillette. In his spare time, he works as a ranch hand, his first love.

"When my dad was a young man in South Dakota, you could lease 300 acres for little or nothing, buy a few cows and you're in the cattle business," he said. "But now it's mostly big operations. And the guy whose got grazing rights on public land, his granddad had it. And he ain't giving it up."

The stock show, now in its 86th year — it was canceled only once, in 1915, after an outbreak of hoof-and-mouth disease — gives urban dwellers a rare chance to see and smell what real cowboy work is about.

More than 10,000 head of livestock are exhibited at the show, including cattle, hogs, sheep, goats, horses and llamas. Vendors in booths hawk everything from fudge to tractors to shots of whisky. And most city people who come to the show wear cowboy hats and boots.

Jim Carrier, a columnist for The Denver Post, recently described the stock show as a handshake between rural and urban. "Denver extends its soft city hand today to a bunch of callused palms from the country."

Noting the divisions, he added, "We're all westerners, but the gap between Denver and its neighbors has never been greater, resentment and suspicion never sharper."

The basic mission of today's cowboys remains largely the same: raising cattle. But the business of ranching has changed remarkably.

Today's rancher, said Chuck Lambert, an official with the Cattleman's Association, knows less about roping skills and more about embryo transfers and is more likely to ride the range by truck or motorbike than on a horse.

"There are ranches in some parts of the country where the rugged terrain means you've still got to have a horse," he said. "But a lot of ranches in other places haven't had a horse on the land for a generation."

The vast majority of ranchers today run fewer than 100 head of cattle, he said. But only 5 percent of ranches produce nearly 50 percent of all beef in the country. Texas, Nebraska and Kansas are the leading beef producers.

About 3 percent of ranchers run cattle on public lands, mostly on acreage administered by the Bureau of Land Management.

Rose, whose ranch is 7 miles from the nearest road, recalled the solitary old days. "At the end of hunting season, that was the last we'd see any people," he said.

"But that was before the four-wheelers, of course. Now they're everywhere. They're running over fences with their jeeps. They're knocking on the door in the middle of the night, wondering where the heck they're at. And at least once a month, someone comes and wants to buy your land."

BUSH: President hits domestic campaign trail

challengers who contend the nation has slipped badly in international esteem and economic power during his first term in office.

"Do not listen to those prophets of doom we hear every night, those frantic politicians who say we are a second-class power," Bush told the American Farm Bureau national convention. "We are the undisputed, respected leader of the world. We are the United States of America."

Bush returned to the issue as he closed his speech, inserting another blast into his prepared text.

"The American dream isn't an impossible dream," Bush said. "Don't listen to all those gloomsayers around this country saying that we are a nation in decline.

"We are, once again, the respected leader of the entire world. And working together we are going to make the life of every single American better."

Bush's political advisers are convinced that combating the "decline" theme will play a key role in the president's re-election campaign. The theme is at the heart of campaigns being waged not only by Bush's key Democratic challengers but also by Patrick Buchanan, the conservative columnist who is seeking to deny Bush the Republican nomination.

As Bush visited the heartland Monday, the Democratic National Committee unleashed a 35-page assessment of Bush's tenure designed to show "life under Bush" as a time of retrenchment.

"America has slipped backwards" Democratic National Chairman Ronald H. Brown said. "Life under Bush means less money in our pockets and a declining standard of living."

Bush's advisers believe, however, that more dangerous to Bush is the growing view that succeeding generations of Americans will not have as prosperous a life as their parents — a perception that has shown up in recent national surveys.

Bush hit the campaign trail as yet another national poll showed his popularity slipping. His approval rating, as measured by the latest USA Today-Cable News Network survey, dropped to 46 percent. When matched against a generic Democratic challenger, Bush led only 47 to 45 percent, within the 3 percentage point margin of error.

The Farm Bureau speech was a warm-up for Bush's trip Wednesday to New Hampshire.

INDEX: Latest reading sinks to its lowest level ever on doctor bills.

Overall, 12 of the 17 categories have worsened in the past 20 years.

"It's a warning sign. The fact that so many problems are worsening to so great an extent is a cause for concern. It says something about the soul of the nation," said Miringoff, director of the Fordham University Institute for Innovation in Social Policy at Tarrytown, N.Y.

"It's like the movie 'Jaws.' We can't keep denying there's a shark out there. There are people bloodied on the beach. We can't leave the beach open and let everybody swim. We better take action," Miringoff said.

The index covers the period from 1970 to 1989, the last year for which statistics are available. It is the only comprehensive barometer of its kind; the government keeps records in individual categories but does not compile an overview.

"It's fragmented all over the place. We have plenty of indicators to tell us when something is wrong with the economy. But we're the only industrial country in the world that doesn't have a national social report," Miringoff said. "No business could survive if it ran the way we run our social policy."

Leo Goldstone, director of World Statistics Ltd. and a former official with the United Nation, noted that the U.S. government keeps superb data on the economy but very little on social issues.

"That's a great pity. It's very hard to get a simple overview picture. It must be very difficult for the government to form social policy in a coherent way," Goldstone said.

The index offers a view of society as a whole and how it deals with its major social problems.

CARS: Commissioners delay action on sheriff's vehicles

(From 1A)

Commissioners decided that if the Sheriff's Office continued to use vehicles over the limit, funds to maintain and insure the cars would have to come from the sheriff's Drug Forfeiture Funds.

"The general fund continues to be billed for those vehicles," Commissioner Guy McCrary said on Monday. Fuel charges were based on information from County Auditor Floyd Jarnagin.

Painter responded that he intended to reimburse the general fund with money from the forfeiture fund. Painter, who has questioned the legality of the court's action, said that he would use "whatever legal fund can be derived to pay for it."

The commissioners also questioned whether the sheriff had sufficient money in the forfeiture fund to reimburse the general fund. A determination was not made.

The unauthorized vehicles were acquired by confiscation from drug dealers, purchased with seized drug money, or donated to the Sheriff's Office. The authorized vehicles were purchased with tax money from the General Fund.

Commissioners did not directly inquire whether the unauthorized vehicles were currently insured. Commissioner Louisa Valencia later said the vehicles were no longer insured by the county and Painter has not given any proof of alternative insurance.

County Attorney Mark Dettman said that it was his understanding that the vehicles were still insured by the county.

Commissioners will consider action on the issue at its next meeting on Jan. 27.

The order for Painter to park a portion of his fleet is just one step the commissioners have taken recently to restrict the operations of the sheriff and his office.

On Monday, commissioners also went into executive session with attorney Vann Culp to discuss the status of the lawsuit between Painter and the Commissioners Court.

That lawsuit concerns the legality of a Commissioners Court order restricting the out-of-county investigations by the Sheriff's Office. The commissioners contend Painter has overstepped his bounds, especially in the area of reverse drug sting operations outside Midland County.

insane."

However, defense attorney Gerald Boyle and District Attorney E. Michael McCann said chances are slim that Dahmer ever would be released, even if found insane at a trial scheduled for later this month.

"I don't think anybody needs to be alarmed by this," Boyle said. "Anyone who thinks that a person sentenced to a mental institution gets out in six months or a year or a year and a half should go about the business of doing some research," he said. "It is extremely difficult . . . to get out, especially when it was a violent crime that has taken place."

Dahmer, a 31-year-old former chocolate factory worker, pleaded guilty to two counts of first-degree murder and 13 counts of first-degree intentional homicide. The charges are different because the killings occurred while different laws were in effect.

Police and prosecutors said Dahmer admitted he drugged and strangled 17 young males, had sex with some of the corpses, dismembered them, took photographs of their bodies in various stages of mutilation.

A four-page criminal complaint based on statements from Dahmer said he admitted keeping one man's heart in a freezer "to eat later." Medical Examiner Jeffrey Jentzen said the remains were "not inconsistent with cannibalism."

tures except in Rhode Island, Connecticut, Cape Cod and a part of New York south of the middle Hudson River Valley where it is too close to call, forecasters said.

The forecasters also said New York state appears to have a slight chance of being drier than normal in the north and west but it is too close to predict precipitation changes in the rest of the region.

The outlook for California is in question. O'Lenic explained that sometimes an El Nino produces heavy rains in that state, sometimes it produces drought.

The extremely wet weather in Texas and California in recent weeks is typical of an El Nino. O'Lenic declined to blame specific storms on the El Nino, though he said it helps create the conditions that foster the storms.

Currently the phenomenon is marked by a warm pool of water along the equator extending from the international date line nearly to the coast of South America. That water is nearly 4 degrees Fahrenheit above normal, explained Vernon Kousky of the climate center.

This warm water "spreads almost a quarter of the way around the globe. So its massive and it has an impact on our weather. It has a global influence . . . because it disturbs the atmosphere," said Dave Rodenhuis, director of the climate center.

El Nino is "probably the most important climate event beyond the annual cycle of seasons," he said.

Because the changes tended to be first noticed around Christmastime, the phenomena was given the name El Nino, which is Spanish for child, a term often used to refer to the baby Jesus.

The phenomenon occurs every three to five years, sometimes in a mild form and sometimes strongly affecting weather patterns worldwide. Details of its causes are not fully understood.

But when it occurs, unusually warm air can be pumped into Canada, Alaska and the northern United States.

Muslims urge Algerians to defy government

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Muslim fundamentalists on Monday urged all Algerians — including soldiers — to defy the nation's new army-backed government, saying its cancellation of elections was "treason."

The Islamic Salvation Front's call for combat between the people "and the servants of colonialism" heightened fears of a clash between the Muslims and the government that took power over the weekend.

It came a day after the State Security Council canceled runoff elections Thursday that were expected to give the Salvation Front control of parliament.

Algiers, the capital, was calm Monday, although tanks were deployed at key buildings and intersections. Among residents there was little outward sign of the political upheaval.

Foreign reaction to the developments was tempered by mixed feelings toward the prospect of an Islamic government. France, the former colonial power, said it was "preoccupied" by the Algerian developments, and its governing Socialists said "the installation of a military regime . . . makes the situation explosive."

After a closed-door meeting, the Islamic Salvation Front's leaders issued a statement saying: "The clique in power has proved its treason. We call on the people to protect their choice and reject all maneuvers aimed at thwarting their will."

The front's communique, its first official reaction to the cancellation of elections, urged fundamentalists, intellectuals, soldiers and others to unite and "prepare for all eventualities to save the country."

It did not specify what tactics should be used to counter the council, which emerged as Algeria's chief authority after President Chadli Bendjedid resigned Saturday. It includes the defense minister, the military chief of staff and Prime Minister Sid Ahmed Ghozali.

Fundamentalist supporters said they were waiting for instructions on what to do if their movement was banned.

"The people don't understand yet. They have received a shock," said Mohammed Hariz, a Salvation Front official representing the capital's destitute Casbah neighborhood.

It is in such neighborhoods, among the young and unemployed, that the front's supporters are found.

In the first round of the country's first free national elections on Dec. 26, their votes gave the front 188 seats in the 430-seat assembly, just 28 short of a majority. Some 199 seats were to chosen Thursday.

Though its official policies remain vague, the Salvation Front's leaders have advocated strict adherence to Muslim tenets, which would ban alcohol, separate the sexes at school and curb the employment of women.

"The professionals of repression stole the victory just when confidence was returning to the people and they had the occasion to freely choose their leaders," the Salvation Front communique said.

Speaker of Russian Parliament calls for Yeltsin government to resign

MOSCOW (NYT) — With the harsh fact of price rises sinking in across the nation, the speaker of the Russian Parliament called Monday for the resignation of the government of President Boris N. Yeltsin for having enacted "uncontrolled, anarchic" economic reforms.

The call by the speaker, Ruslan Khasbulatov, was quickly rejected by a spokesman for the Russian government, which denied as well that Yeltsin might resign his second job as prime minister in reaction to the growing political protest over price rises. Khasbulatov is a popular politician who had made it clear lately that he was breaking away from his ties to Yeltsin.

The Interfax news agency had reported that Yeltsin was preparing to step back from the prime minister's role and offer it to various prominent Russian politicians to focus his own attentions on the republic's role in the shaky new Commonwealth of Independent States.

The report and the speaker's call for a new government reflected a growing sense of unease over the first steps of a free-market plan introduced Jan. 2 by the Yeltsin government.

The Russian deputy prime minister, Yegor Gaidar, the nation's economic chief, said the Yeltsin government, far from resigning, was proceeding with its plan and had expected "natural criticism by the legislature of the executive power forced to take unpopular measures in a very difficult situation."

Protest is slowly growing across Russia in the form of demonstrations and limited strike actions as the public faces prices that consumer statisticians predict will at least double in the first weeks of the plan.

In some local areas, such as Vladimir, officials facing consumer protests are raising government price subsidies, a socialist step that the reforms were intended to end.

In Ulyanovsk, fuel prices rose eightfold, sparking protests, according to the Tass press agency. In Kirov, as in other cities, local officials are hurriedly opening soup kitchens, the agency reported.

Food prices rose by 182 percent last month and are expected to double again this month, according to the St. Petersburg Center for Consumer Market Research.

J&S Commercial Electric looks back on a successful year

As 1991 began, when folks in the West Texas oilfield needed an electrician, the name that came to mind was J&S Oilfield Electric — the Oil Patch's electrician since 1975.

Home owners and business owners might have wished J&S had a commercial division, but it didn't. Until May 1991, that is.

That's when J&S Oilfield Electric spun off a new division — J&S Commercial Electric — and handed the reins to manager Terry Shipman. In less than a year, the new division has earned its spurs and its own reputation with the Oil Patch's home and business owners.

"We've had several customers call us back and tell us what a good job Terry has done," said a pleased Charles Cunningham, one of J&S's three senior partners.

The tie-in with the parent firm is what has made the commercial division so successful in its first 10 months, Cunningham said.

"A lot of other companies are just one- and two-man operations," he said. "Where we have the edge on them is that when we need to, we can call on our own equipment — whether it's a bucket or boom truck, a hole digger or ditcher — instead of having to add on the cost of renting a unit. And when Terry needs help, we can switch a crew over from the oilfield side of our operation."

Those resources mean a quicker job and savings to the customer, Cunningham said. He pointed out that the commercial division has access to a bigger buying base.

"Our prices are considerably cheaper than most others because we probably buy more than $40,000 worth of electrical materials every month," he said. "That gives us a volume discount and we can pass the savings along to the customer."

All work is fully insured — again, an advantage of J&S Commercial's ties with its parent firm, which has a $3 million liability coverage. Jobs that require bonds are a specialty.

Shipman, a licensed electrician, also performs residential electrical work. No job's too small — even a doorbell chime or a ceiling fan.

In 1991, J&S became your electrician too — with J&S Commercial Electric. Write down the number — 563-2209. When you need an electrician in '92, you'll know who to call.

The friendly crew at J&S Commercial Electric — Charles and Jeannie Cunningham, Jennifer Audas, Leslie Gann and Terry Shipman — wish you and your family a prosperous 1992.

Retirees turn to local broker for money management help

On New Year's day, when everyone else seemed to be taking a holiday, Van Pearcy was busy in his Midland office — setting up accounts for new clients. This veteran securities broker always goes the extra mile. That, combined with his conservative reputation, work ethic and the personalized service he offers clients makes him stand out in his field.

"My approach has always been conservative and I use plain old honesty with my clients," Pearcy said. "The people I help want their money handled in a very careful and caring way. And that's the way I try to do it."

Pearcy, a native West Texan with a master's degree from the University of Notre Dame, says many individuals try to manage their retirement money without professional help. Some of those do a fair job of it, while others are prone to make a number of common errors. Following are some of Pearcy's suggestions on avoiding simple investment mistakes.

■ Mistake number one is to hold only cash. Although cash or low-yielding, fixed-income investments might appear secure, they are actually losing value to inflation and to missed opportunities to make long-term investments. Although prudent investors always maintain a reasonable amount in cash or readily available market-money funds, the amount should depend on comfort levels and individual needs. The mistake is in not allowing money to work for you by holding too much in low-yield investments.

■ Mistake number two is blindly searching for the highest yields. Beware of current yields offered by securities similar in quality and maturity to those you want to buy but touting a much higher return.

Van Pearcy, local E.D. Jones & Co. investment broker, conducts a seminar for retirees on how they can best manage their money during retirement.

For example, if you want maximum safety for the next 10 years and AAA corporate bonds are offering about 8.2 percent, be suspicious of anything paying considerably more but promising equal security.

■ Mistake number three is buying investments you don't understand. Every investment is bought with the hope of future profit. The bigger the profit, however, the bigger the risk. Unfortunately, investments are sometimes sold by people who magnify the possible rewards and ignore imminent risks. It's your responsibility to find an investment counselor you trust. It's also your responsibility to understand enough about proposed investments to enable you to decide if it meets your needs and risk tolerances while offering a reasonable chance of achieving what it promises.

■ Mistake number four is buying and forgetting. Today's economy is in a constant state of change. A complete annual investment review, along with regular monitoring, is recommended.

■ Mistake number five is not admitting a mistake once you realize you have made it. Investment mistakes are inevitable. If your investment is not performing as you expect, limit your loss and get out. But don't stop investing.

The list goes on, but these five investing errors are the most common.

If you can find an investment professional that is trustworthy and straightforward, he or she can help take away the worry of making common mistakes and also assist you with a number of other financial decisions.

Those interested in visiting with a conservative investment professional who is sensitive to his clients' needs and well-being should call Van Pearcy at 683-1516. Or drop by his E.D. Jones & Co. office at 1509 West Wall (next door to Buddy's Flowers) in Midland.

Diet Center program helps improve health and self-esteem

Tina Blake and Kristi McClure (left to right) discuss the stabilization and maintenance phase of Diet Center's program.

"I feel so much better about myself, I can go out to parties and such without feeling embarrassed about wearing large-people clothes," Kristi McClure said. Since beginning the Diet Center's weight loss program (only 2½ months ago), McClure has lost 21½ pounds and 22½ overall inches.

"I also have a lot more energy," she said. "And best of all, this is the kind of program I feel I can stick with — I get to eat real food, even go out to restaurants. I'm never hungry." she said.

The fact is, excess weight and obesity have a negative effect on the quality of life of over 80 million American men, women, and children. That's why in 1970 Diet Center's Life Management Program was founded — they believe it to be the most comprehensive and effective weight control program in existence.

So far, Diet Centers across North America have helped more than 4,000,000 people lose weight. When female dieters take full advantage of the Diet Center program, they can lose an average of two to three pounds per week. Male dieters can lose an average of three to five pounds per week. Diet Center surveys show that dieters also experience an inch loss (overall body measurement) of one inch per pound lost.

"One of the reasons I came here to begin with is that I couldn't lose weight after I had my baby," McClure said. "All my friends were having kids and taking pounds off — I was just staying the same."

The Diet Center program teaches that sound nutrition, with an emphasis on real food, is more important than counting calories, that the focus should be on long-term weight maintenance, not just weight loss.

With this approach, the Diet Center program provides nutritionally balanced diet, individual motivation, physician involvement and direction in the necessary discipline for long-term weight control.

Clients are guided through four necessary stages of the weight reduction program: Conditioning, Reducing, Stabilization and Maintenance. Nutritional eating habits are established for lifelong weight maintenance.

And to make losing weight and inches even easier, Diet Center owner and counselor Tina Blake recently purchased an Electro Lipo Graph (ELG).

Scales can measure weight, but they can't tell if weight is the result of big bones, well-developed muscles, excess water retention or just too much fat. What really counts is not how much a person weighs, but how much of that weight is fat.

When body composition changes are noted ELG results allow diet counselors to make appropriate adjustments and recommendations to suit the specific client.

There are no contracts to sign or hidden costs at Diet Center. A one-time registration fee is $75. The weekly fee covers private daily counseling and weigh-in sessions as well as the daily supplement.

Call Tina Blake at 684-5081 to arrange for a free consultation. Or come by Diet Center at 2034 W. Cuthbert, across from Memorial Stadium. Hours are 7 a.m. to noon and 4:30 to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday. Visa and MasterCard are now accepted. Don't forget the Extra Card for additional savings.

And now is the time to call and take advantage of special pricing. Get five weeks for the price of four (available through Feb. 29).

Israelis, Palestinians begin face-to-face talks

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Israel and the Palestinians began face-to-face talks Monday after ending a monthlong procedural dispute.

The talks, the first substantive negotiations ever between the two sides, are considered the first, still-tentative step toward devising a plan for Palestinian self-rule in the Israeli-occupied territories.

After reaching agreement Monday morning on a negotiating formula that would accommodate both the Israeli demand that the Palestinians be considered part of a joint delegation with Jordan, and the Palestinian preference for a separate status and agenda, all three delegations met together Monday evening for about half an hour.

The Israelis then met separately with the Palestinians, with two Jordanians also present.

On Tuesday, the Israelis plan to meet with a Jordanian delegation, with two Palestinians present, to discuss a peace treaty, the head of the Israeli team, Elyakim Rubinstein, said Monday.

"We have finally left the corridor of the State Department and entered the corridor to peace," Zalman Shoval, Israel's ambassador to the United States, said Monday afternoon. In December, participants spent six days in a State Department hallway unable to agree whether the Jordanians and Palestinians were one delegation or two.

The breakthrough came in six hours of talks Monday morning, said negotiators, when the Israelis and Pelestinians agreed to convene the large brief meeting of Israelis, Palestinians and Jordanians and then move immediately to a "two-track formula" of separate Israeli-Palestinian and Israeli-Jordanian sessions.

Groundwork for the agreement was apparently laid over the weekend, as Israelis and Palestinians had "an exchange of proposals by fax," the Palestinian spokeswoman, Hanan Ashrawi, told reporters Monday.

The formula was not substantially different from plans discussed in December.

From the beginning, talks in Washington have been shadowed by events in Israel. During the December round, Israel imposed stringent curfews in several West Bank areas, and Jewish militants moved into the Silwan neighborhood of East Jerusalem and took possession of Arab properties, prompting angry denunciations from the Palestinians here.

The World

■ Israel, Shiites near prisoner exchange

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Efforts by the United Nations to arrange an exchange of prisoners between Israel and Shiite Muslim factions in Lebanon have made signficant headway and a trade could soon take place, Shiite informants and reports published here said.

Groups who say they are holding the remains of missing Israeli soldiers have said they are prepared to cooperate. And an Israeli spokesman reiterated Monday that his government was willing to free all the Lebanese prisoners it held in return for its own men or their remains.

Lebanon's leading daily newspaper, An Nahar, reported Monday from the Israeli buffer zone in southern Lebanon that there were high expectations for an all-embracing exchange of prisoners. It said a senior Shiite Muslim cleric, Sheik Abdel Karim Obeid, would be included in the deal.

■ Japan admits using Korean 'comfort girls'

TOKYO — Three days before Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa takes his first official trip to South Korea, the government admitted that the Japanese army forced tens of thousands of Korean women to serve as prostitutes during World War II, and hinted that survivors might be offered some kind of compensation.

Until Monday, Japan's official position has lonwn that the "comfort girls" forced to have sex with Japanese soldiers were recruited by private entrepreneurs, not the military.

But many historians have attacked that position as a convenient rewriting of history, and over the weekend Asahi Shimbun, one of Japan's largest newspapers, reported that army documents found in the library of Japan's Self-Defense Agency indicated that the military had played a large role in operating what were euphemistically called "comfort stations."

Miyazawa is widely expected to address the issue on his visit to Seoul and to offer a fairly specific apology.

■ Vatican recognizes Croatia, Slovenia

ROME — Reversing earlier indications that it would await diplomatic cover from European governments, the Vatican has formally recognized the independence of Croatia and Slovenia, underscoring Pope John Paul II's desire to show strong support for the predominantly Roman Catholic republics.

In recent days, Vatican officials said behind the scenes that the Catholic Church would delay its symbolically important recognition of the two separatist states until Jan. 15, the European Community deadline for replying to requests for recognition from the component parts of the crumbling Yugoslav federation.

But in a statement on Monday, the Vatican said it had sent diplomatic notes to the capitals of the two states "recognizing their sovereignty and independence."

Seeking a balanced posture, the statement also said the Vatican had sent a separate message to the federal authorities in Belgrade saying the recognition "does not have the character of a hostile act" toward Yugoslavia and promising that the Pope's representative in Belgrade would continue to be accredited to the federation.

Haitian chief cuts Aristide return plans

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Defying plans for a transitional government, Haiti's provisional leader told lawmakers Monday he will not step down until new elections are held to replace ousted President Jean-Bernard Aristide.

The declaration put pressure on legislators, who have the power to end Nerette's term but fear reprisals from his right-wing military supporters.

Under pressure from the army, parliament members selected Nerette a week after the Sept. 30 military coup against Aristide, the Caribbean nation's first freely elected president.

The Organization of American States, which imposed a trade embargo after the coup, has said it will only be lifted after a compromise prime minister is chosen to succeed Nerette and prepare for Aristide's return.

But Nerette, a 67-year-old supreme court judge, said his constitutional duties included "waiting for the election and the installation of a new president."

Outside, about 300 demonstrators chanted anti-Aristide slogans accompanied with music from a carnival band.

"We want elections!" shouted the protesters. One poster held up by demonstrators declared: "What departed in 1991 won't come back in 1992."

Aristide, a 38-year-old activist Roman Catholic priest, fled the nation after the coup. Hundreds of people died in the uprising. Aristide is still believed to enjoy the support of the large majority of Haitians.

Maxwells refuse questions about vanished money

LONDON (AP) — Kevin and Ian Maxwell on Monday appeared before a parliamentary committee but refused to answer questions about the disappearance of millions of dollars from Maxwell company pension funds.

Kevin Maxwell's lawyer, George Carman, said he believed criminal charges against his client were imminent, and lawyers for both men advised them not to answer questions for fear of self-incrimination.

Social Security Select Committee Chairman Frank Field asked Kevin and Ian Maxwell direct questions relating to the administration of the pension funds of former Maxwell companies.

The brothers referred all questions to their lawyers, who said there would be no answers.

"In my judgment (criminal proceedings) are likely and they are likely to be soon," Carman said.

The two sons of the late publisher Robert Maxwell, who were directors of their father's Mirror Group Newspapers PLC, already face civil lawsuits.

Signs of freedom needed in Georgia

Democracy has now suffered a double blow in the former Soviet republic of Georgia.

No sooner had Zviad Gamsakhurdia been elected president than he began acting like a dictator. Now he has been driven from his bunker by a bloody palace coup.

For democracy to recover, it's essential for Georgia's new leaders to hold genuinely free elections, and soon.

Then will come the harder steps: tolerating opponents, including supporters of Gamsakhurdia, fostering a free press, protecting the rights of non-Georgians, obeying the law and enforcing it fairly. Those are the trappings of a democratic society.

Gamsakhurdia did none of those things. He came to power 14 months ago as head of a nationalist coalition that routed the Communist Party in elections. But the one-time dissident soon mimicked his jailers. He treated opponents as traitors and locked them up, stifled speech and behaved as if he were above the law.

Yet his supporters — he has many to this day — saw him as a savior freeing Georgia from its Soviet shackles.

Then, after he won 86 percent of the presidential vote in a second election last May, he mistook his landslide as a mandate for misrule. His arbitrariness soon alienated even his closest associates. When he broke with his prime minister, his opponents took up arms and overthrew him, leaving scores dead in the streets of Tbilisi.

The other republics and the world kept their distance. The new leadership wants to end its outcast status. The way to do that is to get Georgia back on the road to democracy, which means getting its leaders to act like the freedom-loving people they claim to be.

Powers' article amuses local insurance agents

Our office got a big laugh out of the article by John Powers headlined "Insurance opens to competition" in a recent edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. We insurance agents and companies are in stiff competition, and always have been. The idea that this is something "new" is too funny for words!

Here are some of the ways we compete daily:

We constantly study to increase our technical skills, attend schools, and strive to attain industry designations. The broader our insurance knowledge, the better we can help you.

We study time and office management, and become computer proficient to give you more accurate answers and more rapid responses.

We monitor the rate variations of the companies we represent on a daily basis to find for you the best and fairest prices we can. And we represent the best insurance companies available to us.

We check your premium audits and your invoices. We correct company computer errors (or at least we try!) and check policy endorsements. We expedite claim handling, listen to your beefs and try to do something about them, and when we can't get everything done in regular working hours, we come down on the weekend, or just stay late!

We can't walk on water, and we seldom do miracles, but we always try to be trustworthy. We compete by striving to give the best possible protection for the best possible price. Isn't that the American way?

This letter reflects the sentiments of the 14 individuals at Mims & Stephens Insurance.

Outlawing guns for public won't stop increased crime

In the Jan. 2 edition of your newspaper you published an article announcing the fact that Washington, D.C. for the fourth year in a row had more murders per capita than any other city in the United States. One thing missing from this article was the fact that in Washington, D.C. the ownership of handguns by private citizens has been totally banned.

This seems to prove that even though you outlaw the ownership of guns by private citizens, the criminals keep their guns and murders continue to rise. The solution is to enforce existing laws, not to take handguns away from law-abiding citizens.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Jan. 14, the 14th day of 1992. There are 352 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

One hundred years ago, on Jan. 14, 1892, Hollywood producer Hal Roach — the creative force behind the "Our Gang" comedies and the teaming of Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy — was born in Elmira, N.Y.

On this date:

In 1639, the first constitution of Connecticut — known as the "Fundamental Orders" — was adopted at a meeting in Hartford.

In 1742, English astronomer Edmond Halley, who observed the comet that now bears his name, died at age 85.

In 1784, the United States ratified the peace treaty with England that ended the Revolutionary War.

In 1858, French Emperor Napoleon III escaped an attempt on his life by Felice Orsini, an Italian patriot who was later executed.

In 1914, Ford Motor Co. greatly improved its assembly line operation by employing an endless chain to pull each chassis along.

Diplomats weigh words carefully

WASHINGTON — At 11:30 a.m. on Friday, Jan. 3, in the State Department office of Assistant Secretary Edward Djerejian, at the instigation of Director of Policy Planning Dennis Ross and with the concurrence of Richard Haass, a national security aide, the decision was made to unload on Israel as never before.

Safire

PLO hit men had murdered four Israeli settlers in the past 10 weeks, provoking Israel to expel a dozen Palestinian inciters to violence — a measured and bloodless retaliation to deter further killing. Now Yasser Arafat was sending word that Arabs would boycott the peace talks unless the United States voted in the U.N. to "strongly deplore" the deportations.

The United States had in May 1991 voted to "deplore" (up from a previous "regret") such action by Israel, after deportations helped suppress an outbreak of knifings of Israeli civilians. Now the PLO wanted to offset the U.N.'s recent rescission of the "Zionism is racism" resolution by ratcheting up the disapproval one notch: to "strongly deplore."

Ross acquiesced in this blackmail and raised the ante: the United States would not only grant the PLO's wish to add adverbial strength to our disapproval, but the trio at State changed the wording to "strongly condemn" Israel.

Words have weight in diplomacy. When Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait, the U.N. resolved to "condemn" Iraq, its most severe denunciation. By proposing to strongly condemn Israel, the trio at State was even more severe.

The escalating anger of Secretary Baker's trio was based on a false reading of international law. The Geneva Convention of 1949 was directed against Nazi-style mass deportations of whole populations; it has been twisted by Arab dictators to cover the deportation of individual riot-inciters by Israel in territories whose sovereignty is in dispute.

When Saudi Arabia runs 600,000 longtime Yemeni residents out of the Kingdom, as it did last year, the U.N. and United States stand mute. When Kuwait ejects over 200,000 peaceful Palestinians, many lifelong residents, from the land we saved from Iraq — many of whom entered the West Bank — that's mass deportation of a population. The U.N. and United States look shyly away.

But when Israel arrests 12 known troublemakers and releases them at the border to discourage the murder of more Israelis, an outraged trio at State, with Bush-Baker approval, escalates the U.N.'s hypocritical "deplore" to "strongly condemn."

Moreover, we sign on to words in those one-sided resolutions that specifically undermine the Camp David accords, which carefully refrained from defining who owned what territory.

Twice in this week's appeasing condemnation we see the phrase "occupied Palestinian territories," once even adding "including Jerusalem." If that issue has already been decided by the U.N. — if the disputed lands are Palestinian by definition — then what's left to negotiate?

"This resolution gives aid and comfort to terrorists who want to derail the peace process," says Defense Minister Moshe Arens in Tel Aviv. "Expulsions are effective in stopping incitement to murder. You can't always use conventional judicial means, as the U.S. showed in Panama and Libya."

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Welfare dependency needs close scrutiny

Presidential candidates, save for the abrasive likes of Pat Buchanan and Tom Harkin, want to please everybody and his/her dog/cat (as I guess we should say in these politically correct times). Understandably, the campaign has produced little if any serious conversation about welfare dependency. Talk about a losing issue!

Murchison

And yet non-presidential candidates are starting to talk about it. House Minority Whip Newt Gingrich of Georgia promised a few days ago to lead Republican congressmen into battle against the welfare state. The welfare state's core values, Gingrich said, "have the effect of protecting the criminal at the expense of the innocent;" likewise of "encouraging 12-year-old girls to have children" and 15-year-old boys "to promiscuously impregnate girls."

Well, I mean, who's surprised? Conservatives are happy only when heiling Hitler or driving widows and orphans out into the snow. Haven't liberals said so often enough? But how account, in that event, for liberal Democratic Sen. Pat Moynihan's recently published intuition that dependency on welfare "'is becoming the defining issue of post-industrial society," and that we must somehow reverse the trend. (Just how he didn't say.)

Last year The Public Interest magazine, on whose publication committee Moynihan sits, tried to explain "Why the Poor Are Still With Us." One explanation: The trend toward paternalism, which encourages dependence and passivity, with the poor claiming "a right to support based on the injuries of the past, not on anything that they contribute now."

Welfare is an issue we should tackle forthrightly, fearlessly. This means the last people likely to tackle it are politicians, a breed more feckless than fearless. Gingrich and the more convoluted Moynihan are the exceptions, if happy ones. Instead of bashing them, we should turn up the volume. Liberal or conservative, we need to hear this. We need to hear about it because of suspicions that have been accumulating for a good quarter of a century.

The suspicion is that, just as it's possible to do too little for the poor, it is possible to do too much. We need to talk about what dependency does to the dependents, handouts to the handees. It keeps them alive? Well, sure. But is that all? A growing perception is that welfare — leave aside its burdensome effects on the public purse — entraps many (not all) of the poor; encourages them in squalid dependence; saps their moral spirit.

Their moral spirit? Do tell. When did we last hear about that? Isn't this the have-fun, live-it-up age? Morality — that's for bluenoses and Bible-wallopers. We don't care how people live and act. Do we?

You'd suppose not, given our studied inattention to the question of whether welfare strengthens or weakens the recipients' character and fitness for citizenship.

The same inattention, in truth, frustrates various attempts to talk about character in general. Shouldn't we worry about the kind of people we shape through our mores and institutions, whether they receive welfare or not?

Witness. The number of murders in 1960 was about the same as in 1925. Then, in less than three decades, that number nearly tripled. The tally of state and federal prisoners did triple, and then some.

Family stability headed the opposite direction. Whereas, in 1960, illegitimate babies accounted for 5 percent of all births, they are 25 percent today. There are in the '90s fully half as many divorces as marriages. If fathers and mothers and children won't help each other, or even live with each other, who is surprised at the clamorous calls for government, as family of last resort, to step in?

Welfare isn't this country's biggest problem. The problem that makes welfare so deeply troublesome — namely, the demoralization of the citizenry, the general flight from responsibility and personal obligation — is the thing we need most to combat.

William Murchison's column is distributed by Heritage Features Syndicate.

CHARLEY REESE

Holistic approach to problems makes sense

We might make more progress solving some of our problems if we would cease handling them in isolation. The problems are all interrelated anyway, so a holistic approach to government would be realistic.

Reese

We impose costs on our manufacturers, for example, to protect the environment, to create a safer workplace, and to create a social safety net. These are decisions we make as a society.

Where the process breaks down is that we have a tendency to say to ourselves, now that we've taken care of the environment, health, safety and welfare, let's go on and deal with trade today and the economy tomorrow.

In fact, however, in imposing the environmental and social costs on manufacturing, we have dealt with both trade and with the economy — in a negative way.

To put it in a nutshell, an American manufacturer who must add these social and environmental costs into the price of his product will be undersold by firms who manufacture in countries that do not impose these costs. It's inevitable and there's no escaping it. No amount of productivity or efficiency can overcome low labor costs.

What happens, however, is that when this fact is pointed out, the free trade ideologists take off and begin their polemical arguments about free trade versus protectionism as if nothing else in the world existed except that ideological dispute.

Hey, let's get real. If we choose to impose the costs of a cleaner environment, free trade unions, a safer workplace, and a social safety net on our manufacturers, then logically we must protect them from manufacturers operating in countries that don't impose those costs. The alternative is bankruptcy for the American firm or, as more often happens, moving the manufacturing jobs to the foreign country.

The answer is not one trade policy but different trade policies tailored to reality. We can have free trade with other industrialized countries that impose comparable costs on their manufacturers. There is no reason why an American firm shouldn't be able to compete with German or Japanese or Canadian firms, for example. Production costs are similar to ours. Social costs similar to ours are imposed on their manufacturers, too. Like countries can have like trade policies. Like and unlike countries cannot.

It is stupid to have liberal trade policies with places like Taiwan or Hong Kong or Mexico. These places do not impose social and environmental and safety costs on manufacturers. In fact, their chief natural resource is a surplus of labor. Therefore products made with their cheap labor should be barred from the U.S. market, or heavily taxed, unless it is some unique product not capable of being manufactured in the U.S. or in other industrialized countries. Fair competition with those countries is utterly impossible.

Oh, if we bar their exports, they'll retaliate and bar ours, the ideologues cry. Great. We don't export anything much to those countries except money and jobs. In other words, what is called trade is actually the transfer from corporate headquarters in the U.S. to the manufacturing facility overseas and then the return of the finished product.

That's the free trade that is killing off American jobs and lowering the American standard of living. American working people today are worse off than they were 20 years ago. If this stupid policy isn't reversed, our children will be far worse off in the future.

What makes a sensible trade policy difficult to achieve is that different factions are involved. People who export don't give a hoot about those who don't. If the big grain broker can sell grain to China, he doesn't care if the Chinese put American textile workers on the unemployment lists.

But if we want a clean environment, free trade unions, a safe workplace, and a social safety net, then we'd better adopt trade policies that will protect those things.

Dow Corning defends silicone breast implants, safety tests

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Officials of Dow Corning Corp., buffeted by criticism of its silicone breast implants, on Monday reasserted their belief that the devices were safe and defended the tests they say prove it.

"The cumulative body of credible scientific evidence shows that the implants are safe and effective," Robert T. Rylee, chief of Dow Corning's health care businesses, said at a news conference here.

Rylee said the debate over the devices had become "a travesty to millions of women who have had a compelling need for these implants."

Dr. David A. Kessler, the Food and Drug commissioner, effectively removed the devices from the market last week while awaiting an expert panel's review of newly available safety data.

Rylee said Monday that he had not seen this new data and called upon Kessler to produce them.

He said Dow Corning Corp., and its wholly owned subsidiary, Dow Corning Wright Co. of Tennessee, submitted hundreds of scientific studies of silicone gel and implants. He said those studies showed that the devices were safe and effective.

Dow Corning, a joint venture of Dow Chemical Co. and Corning Corp., is the nation's largest maker of silicone gel breast implants.

The data Rylee discussed were reviewed last year by the FDA and rejected as inadequate, although the agency allowed implants to remain on the market, citing a "public health need."

Some of the new information came from rheumatologists and related to the possibility that silicone in the body may cause severe inflammatory auto-immune disease over a period of years.

Also among the new information were many internal memos among company officials casting doubt on the credbility of the company's studies.

Some of the company's memos were made available to The New York Times, and those, along with the company's studies on the implants and numerous interviews, were reported Monday.

Rylee took sharp exception to the the New York Times report, which also quoted internal documents in which company researchers called for more tests. The documents show that safety studies considered critical by scientists for the company were put off for more than a decade, that the company had implants inserted in experiments on women before they had tested them in animals, and may have never tested its breast implants in animal breasts for safety, but instead used other sites in animals.

Rylee called the article "a total mischaracterization of the facts."

Rylee did not deny the authenticity of the documents. But he said, "internal memos are not science." He added: "They are a printed record of one side of a two-way conversation. The real question is, what does the science say?"

He said such articles distracted from the real issues, the safety of the implants, and the scientific evidence for or against them.

The Wall Street Journal also published an article on the matter.

Critics of implants say they can rupture or slowly leak their viscous silicone filling into the body.

The new data suggest a possible association between silicone, which can migrate from the breast to other areas, and auto-immune reactions that cause the body's defenses to attack the body's own tissues.

On Monday, Rylee said the company knew in 1975 that silicone bled from the implants into women's bodies and that silicone would migrate throughout the body.

Task force gets break in its probe of slayings

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — A task force got a significant break in its investigation of the serial killings of 19 women believed to be prostitutes or drug abusers, a detective said Monday. A television station reported that a man in custody has confessed to some of the slayings.

A man arrested Friday in the Riverside area on an alleged parole violation and questioned in the killings gave investigators useful information, Riverside County sheriff's Detective Henry Sawicki said.

But Sawicki wouldn't say if the arrest was linked to the break in the case, and he stressed that nobody had been charged in the killings.

"Things have developed," Sawicki said. "It's something of some significance."

Sawicki wouldn't give details until a news conference scheduled for this afternoon. Asked to describe the importance of the development, he said, "I'll put it to you this way, the task force has never had a press conference and you can draw your own conclusions."

Other authorities wouldn't comment.

KNBC-TV in Los Angeles, citing investigators close to the case whom it didn't identify, said the arrested parolee confessed to some of the killings. The station didn't say how many, but said investigators consider him the prime suspect in the case.

Since 1986, a killer or killers have preyed on 19 women with histories of prostitution and drug use, authorities say. The latest victim's body was found in an orange grove last month.

The bodies have been discarded on hillsides, in alleys and along freeways in Riverside County, a rapidly growing area east of Los Angeles County.

The 41-year-old Colton man arrested Friday and questioned in the case was jailed in Riverside on a Texas parole violation.

High court hears smoke warning case arguments

WASHINGTON (NYT) — A divided Supreme Court revisited a landmark case Monday on whether the tobacco industry can be sued by smokers who claim they were deceived about the dangers of cigarettes.

Justice Clarence Thomas, who apparently holds the key vote, sat silently as the court again heard arguments to determine if federally mandated warnings on cigarette packages shield tobacco companies from lawsuits by consumers who claim that smoking caused them to get cancer or other illnesses.

Eight justices, who heard the case in October before Thomas was confirmed, apparently split 4-4 and ordered the rehearing. A decision is expected by this summer.

Laurence Tribe, a Harvard law professor representing the family of a New Jersey woman who died of lung cancer, argued that the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act of 1965 does not give tobacco companies an outright immunity from lawsuits in state courts over false or misleading advertising.

The Surgeon General's warning on cigarette packages and advertising is not "a magical cure-all," said Tribe. He said Congress never intended to provide "an ironclad guarantee that, as far as the states are concerned, the (tobacco) companies can do no wrong."

But H. Bartow Farr III, representing the Liggett Group and Phillip Morris tobacco companies, said Congress required the specific warnings on cigarette packages to insure uniform regulation throughout the country.

Major labor unions avoid making endorsements in primaries

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The major labor unions, seeking to recapture some of the influence they lost in the presidential elections of the 1980s, are avoiding endorsements in the primaries and telling their state and local affiliates to pick their own candidates.

The unions, which have historically supported Democrats, are important not only because they influence members' votes, but also because they can deliver organizational help to their favored candidates: telephone banks, voter registration drives and campaign mailings.

In the past, major unions tended to make their choices early, but the strategy backfired in 1984, when they rallied behind former Vice President Walter F. Mondale long before the primaries, then watched helplessly as he was attacked as beholden to labor.

Explaining the decision to allow the union's locals to get behind candidates of their choice, Lane Kirkland, president of the AFL-CIO, said, "We cannot afford to sit on the sidelines while others choose the candidates and choose the issues."

Kirkland added that it would be a mistake for labor to make an endorsement on the national level without a consensus from the rank and file, saying, "Let's try unity for a change."

Keith Geiger, president of the National Education Association, said the organization has shifted its strategy from four years ago, when it endorsed Michael S. Dukakis early in the primary season. This time the union does not plan to endorse until the end of the primaries, allowing the locals to support their favored candidates.

"If the Democrats are going to have a chance," Geiger said, "a candidate has to show signs of starting fire before we get behind that candidate."

This year all the major Democratic candidates are considered pro-labor, said Geri D. Palast, political director for the Service Employees International Union, and unions are looking at who has the best prospects rather than who has done most for labor.

"People are being extraordinarily pragmatic," she said. "You have to make some judgments about what's going to sell, not only to your membership but to the country at large."

The strategy of encouraging locals and affiliates to go their own way could pay early dividends for Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas and complicate matters for Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa, the Democrat who is widely viewed as the closest ally of labor among the five major Democratic candidates.

Clinton, who had never identified himself closely with labor but is now courting major unions, gained some backing last week from two unions with large white-collar memberships: the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees and the American Federation of Teachers.

The signs of support for Clinton are notable because he is a former chairman of the Democratic Leadership Council, a group of moderate-to-conservative Democrats that has sought to steer the party away from close identification with unions.

Henry Nicholas, president of the Philadelphia local of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Workers, which is affiliated with AFSCME, said: "We believe that we need to be about winning in 1992, and our executive board has voted to support the candidacy of Bill Clinton. If we went for Harkin we probably could get 90 percent of our agenda. If we went for Clinton we probably could get 85 percent of our agenda. But it's Clinton who, in my opinion, can get us to the White House."

Rachelle Horowitz, political director of the teachers' federation, said, "As we go around the country in the early states, what I see is a plurality of those in our union who are filing as delegates to Bill Clinton, who has been very strong on education reform."

But Harkin's opponents are not discounting his labor support, particularly from blue-collar unions like the United Mine Workers of America. In its endorsement of Harkin last week another blue-collar union, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers local in New Hampshire, said: "Harkin takes the same tough, pro-working stands that the great Democratic presidents like Roosevelt, Truman and Kennedy did. And he's the only candidate who does."

In an interview, Harkin disputed the notion that Clinton was gaining momentum and emphasized that the big unions had not made endorsements on a national level. "I've never said that every union is going to support me," he said. But he also said he hoped the big unions would endorse him, and added, "I wish they'd hurry up."

Although the locals are operating independently, it is quite possible that the international unions will endorse a candidate if one emerges as a convincing front-runner after the early primaries. At its meeting in Florida next month the AFL-CIO may consider whether to back a candidate, but will do so only if two-thirds of its governing board reaches a consensus.

John Perkins, national director of the AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education, says the federation can play its most influential role if it gets behind one candidate in the primaries. "If the AFL-CIO endorsed you could well see a full-court press, with telephone banks and get-out-the-vote efforts," he said.

Judge OKs Legislature's remapping plans

■ Morales asks U.S. Supreme Court for emergency stay to block redistricting plan handed down by federal panel.

Associated Press

EDINBURG — A judge's decision Monday to approve redistricting maps drawn by the Legislature gives the state a unified plan to use in opposing voting boundaries imposed by a federal panel, minority rights attorneys say.

State District Judge Mario E. Ramirez ratified the House and Senate plans approved during last week's special session and also implemented a bill that allows them to go into effect immediately after they're pre-cleared by the U.S. Justice Department.

Meanwhile, the state filed an appeal of the federal court redistricting plan for the state Senate. Texas Attorney General Dan Morales also asked the U.S. Supreme Court for an emergency stay to block the redistricting plan handed down last week by the federal panel.

The stay was filed Sunday evening, said Gray McBride, Morales' press secretary.

Justice Antonin Scalia gave state Republicans until 1 p.m. CST today to respond to Morales' motion, according to McBride.

Minority rights attorneys said the ruling by Ramirez will help the state present a unified front when it goes before the U.S. Supreme Court.

"The plan that the (federal) court has ordered into effect is ... neither reflective of legislative intent nor is it a court-ordered plan for these minority areas" defined as lacking by the Justice Department, said MALDEF attorney Judith Sanders-Castro.

"Hopefully they will be able to convince the Supreme Court that they ought not to impose the federal plan," added Jim Harrington, an attorney with the Texas Civil Rights Project.

Attorneys for the state weren't quite so certain the ruling by Ramirez would have any bearing on the Supreme Court appeal.

"I don't think it'll make any difference," said Assistant Attorney General Javier Guajardo.

But it does give the state a plan that is valid under the Texas constitution, Guajardo said.

A three-judge federal panel Friday struck down the Legislature's latest Senate redistricting map, replacing it with one of its own.

The Legislature's plan was supported by most minority members and Hispanic groups that had successfully sued the state to increase minority representation. However, the federal panel said the plan weakened minority voting strength.

Democrats criticized the court plan, saying it was drawn to help Republicans.

Tip leads to drug arrest

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff Writer

A 56-year-old Lee High School janitor was arrested Monday night after narcotics officers found about $2,000 worth of cocaine in his residence at 1210 W. College Ave.

Rogelio G. "Roy" Rodriguez was charged with possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver after officers found most of the cocaine wrapped in 68 $20 packets, which is indicative that the drug was being sold, officers said. Fifteen other packets were also discovered in the apartment.

Officers received a tip from Crime Stoppers earlier in the day and subsequently obtained a search warrant, which they executed at 9:15 p.m., officers said.

Rodriguez watched officers search his two-room apartment for about 40 minutes before being transported to the Midland County Jail. He said he has lived in the apartment for nine months.

Bond information was not immediately available.

Council studies hospital site

■ City council is expected to approve plans for locating a rehabilitation hospital at the intersection of Loop 250 and State Highway 191.

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

The Rehabilitation Hospital of Midland/Odessa is expected to move one step closer to reality today after action by the Midland City Council.

A public hearing planned during the council's regular meeting, which begins at 10 a.m. today, will consider the site plan for the $13 million facility. The hospital is scheduled to be built on nine acres at the intersection of Loop 250 and State Highway 191.

Rehab Hospital Services Corp. of Washington, D.C., announced the project Nov. 6 and appointed a local administrator.

One of the requirements of the location's zoning — Planned District — was that the council approve a detailed site plan, according to Cameron Walker, assistant director of planning and development for the city.

The planning commission has approved the hospital's submission, and the council is expected to as well.

A zoning change is not required for the facility, which is to be built inside the boundary of Grassland Estates, a new development of homes averaging more than $150,000 in value.

"The site was originally expected to become a shopping center," Walker said. "It was reviewed, an ordinance was approved, but it never came to pass."

Brian Wells, administrator of the local facility, said pending approval of the site plan, construction is slated to begin early next month.

"We're going to use 80 to 90 percent local contractors," he said. "By the end of the year or January 1993, it should be complete."

Wells is already operating out of a temporary office in Midland.

While the original plan calls for 60 beds, city documents show the facility has the possibility of future expansion. Wells said there is no time line set for growth, but most of the company's other facilities — 51 nationwide — have 90 beds.

The hospitals offer rehabilitation services for injuries, conditions and strokes.

The local facility is expected to employ 150 people beginning this summer.

Doug Henson, of SBC Corp., the developer of Grassland, said the hospital will be a welcome addition.

"I think it will blend very well," he said. "It's actually better (than the planned shopping center) because it will have less traffic than retailing. ... I haven't heard any controversy from any residents."

Other council agenda items include an executive session on the search for a new city attorney, and expected approval of a settlement in the lawsuit brought about by former employee Orlando Temple.

Bank fraud trial for El Paso man gets underway

Associated Press

El Paso car magnate Maury Kemp wasn't conspiring to steal from two banks when he wrote millions of dollars in bad checks in 1990 and 1991, his attorney said Monday.

Instead, he was using the time it takes for checks to clear a bank, sometimes called the "float," to try to save three California car dealerships, attorney Bernard Panetta said at the start of Kemp's fraud trial.

"You will have to make a determination as to whether Mr. Kemp intended to defraud the banks and run with the money or if Mr. Kemp intended to sell his businesses and deposit the money in these banks," Panetta told jurors during his opening statement. "I think you will find my client not guilty."

Kemp and two associates are on trial in federal court accused of conspiring to defraud MBank-El Paso, now State National Bank, and First Interstate Bank of California of $1.6 million in a scheme that is sometimes called "check kiting."

The trial was moved to Midland on a change of venue sought by Panetta, who feared Kemp's prominence in El Paso would diminish chances of finding impartial jurors.

In Midland Monday morning, a jury was seated in just 90 minutes for the case before U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton.

Prosecutors said the defendants shuffled as much as $50 million between the California and Texas

Midland puts thoughts of snow on ice

Staff Report

The storm that was predicted to dump 1 to 3 inches of snow on Midland early Monday morning ventured farther north than expected and left the Tall City with only a trace.

According to the National Weather Service in Midland, areas near Lamesa and Seminole and extending to Amarillo received between 3 to 6 inches of snow.

Between 3:36 a.m. and 6:59 a.m. Monday, Midland received 0.1 of an inch of snow, but later in the day the only noticeable consequences of the storm were brisk winds and lower temperatures, the NWS spokesman said.

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high in the upper 40s and south to southwest winds at 5 to 15 mph. Tonight should be clear with a low in the mid-20s, according to the NWS spokesman.

Wednesday should be sunny with a high in the lower 50s.

After an overnight low of 32 degrees, Monday's high reached 45 degrees compared with the record high for that date of 80 degrees set in 1957. The record low for that date is 13 degrees set in 1982.

Black chamber plans Martin Luther King Jr. march

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff Writer

The fifth annual march to celebrate slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. is scheduled for 2 p.m. Sunday, said Robbyne (Hocker) Fuller, outgoing president of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs.

"This is a symbolic march to honor him and the entire community is invited to march with us," Fuller said at the chamber's Monday night meeting. "The emphasis is on the family."

Fuller urges organizations to bring banners and flags to the march that will begin at Martin Luther King Jr. Park and conclude at Mount Calvary Missionary Baptist Church.

"We expect the march to last about 20 minutes. Hopefully, people will join the march as we walk through their neighborhoods; they're certainly welcome to do so," Fuller said.

Last year, because of bad weather, the march attracted only 20 people. But in 1990, about 250 turned out to march.

"We're, of course, hoping it's a nice day because we want to draw that many people again this year," Fuller said.

A service at the church is scheduled to begin at 3 p.m. People interested in participating in the service are asked to attend a rehearsal at the church at 7 p.m. Friday.

Also at the meeting, two representatives from Junior Achievement of Midland Inc. touted the benefits offered through participating in their program.

Junior Achievement is designed to provide economic education to children in elementary school through high school. In Midland, the program begins at the sixth-grade level.

"It's designed to set a positive example for kids and to teach them the importance of their role in the economy," said Joyce C. Matejek, executive director of Junior Achievement of Midland.

Area businessmen are encouraged to volunteer 45 minutes for four separate days to teach students about their businesses.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

FBI arrests man formerly of Odessa

Staff Report

A former Odessa man was arrested by federal investigators Sunday in New York City. He was returning from Pakistan with his 8-year-old daughter whom he had allegedly kidnapped 32 months ago, federal officials said.

John Michael Campbell, 35, was charged in Midland on May 31, 1990, with unlawful flight to avoid prosecution for parental kidnapping. The federal warrant was based on an Ector County warrant which had charged Campbell with interference with child custody. The Ector County warrant was issued on April 23, 1990.

Campbell allegedly took his daughter from his ex-wife who had been granted custody of the child. He then took the child to Pakistan where he was subsequently located by the FBI.

Federal officials said that Campbell's daughter was returned to her mother on Sunday in New York and Campbell will face extradition to Texas to stand trial in Ector County.

Police seek culprits

Police are searching for two Hispanic males in connection with a robbery at the Kent Kwik convenience store at 2910 N. Big Spring St. Sunday night, according to police reports.

At 10:46 p.m. the store clerk was forced at knife point to open the cash register and lie down on the floor.

The men fled on foot with an unknown amount of money and several packs of cigarettes, according to reports.

The men are both described as 5 feet, 10 inches tall and weighing 170 pounds. Both of the men were also wearing blue jeans and plaid jackets, police said.

Lawsuit dismissed

A discrimination lawsuit filed in May 1991 against Fina Oil and Chemical Co. by a former geologist was dismissed by the U.S. District Court at the request of Raymond R. Wells, the ex-employee.

According to the settlement agreement, Wells and Fina agreed that each of Wells' claims was without merit. Wells had accused the company of discriminating against him on the basis of his religion.

Midland man stabbed

A Midland man is in stable condition at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center after being stabbed in the chest Sunday night by a woman riding in his car, police said.

Ronald McCoy, 33, and a 25-year-old woman were involved in a verbal altercation when the woman pulled a knife, police said.

McCoy was dropped off near his home and then transported to the hospital. The woman had not been charged as of Monday night, police said.

banks from April 24, 1990 to Jan. 4, 1991.

"Ninety-four percent were kited checks — in other words, money that wasn't there," prosecutor David Rosado said.

When testimony began late Monday, Tim Sharron, an officer with the former MBank-El Paso, said Kemp became a problem for the bank in 1990.

Asked by Rosado if a check kite scheme was designed to fool a bank's bookkeeping, Sharon replied, "Yes sir, our bank system was fooled and it cost us."

He said it was not typical for overdrafts to be used as a loan, which Rosado called the effect of Kemp's alleged scheme.

Also charged are Donna Frydenlund and Perry A. Pressley, who were associates in Kemp's financial empire. If convicted, each defendant faces up to 30 years in prison and up to $1 million in fines.

In a pretrial motion, defense attorneys asked that a statement Pressley made to investigators be disallowed as evidence. The statement implicated the defendants, the attorneys said.

Comptroller mails lottery applications

AUSTIN — Comptroller John Sharp said Monday the state can refuse to allow certain legally operating sexually oriented businesses from selling lottery tickets.

"We have a lot of flexibility to make rules," Sharp said as he announced the mailing of about 57,000 applications to retailers for temporary licenses to sell tickets in the Texas lottery.

Last week, a citizen advisory committee recommended that businesses offering services or devices intended to provide sexual gratification be prohibited from selling lottery tickets.

Sharp acknowledged that temporary licenses to sell the instant winner, scratch-off lottery games will be issued before criminal background checks are complete.

Gramm: Bush budget contains $2.25 billion for space center

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA is gearing up to defend the controversial $30 billion space station, which came close to being axed by Congress last year, a spokesman said Monday.

President Bush's proposed budget for fiscal 1993, due to be unveiled early next month, earmarks $2.25 billion for the space station, Sen. Phil Gramm said last week.

NASA and Johnson Space Center officials said they could not confirm the budget request for the fiscal year which begins Oct. 1.

The $2.25 billion — which would represent an 11.3 percent increase over last year's funding — is part of the $14.99 billion allocation Bush is seeking for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Gramm's office said.

A sizeable portion of the space station's planning and design has been taking place at the Johnson Space Center, accounting for about 6,000 Houston-area jobs.

NASA spokesman Mark Hess noted that Congress last year authorized $2.25 billion for the space center in FY '93. This year, Congress must appropriate the funding.

The space center came close to being scrapped last year, after a House appropriations subcommittee voted to kill the project. Only strong lobbying within Congress and by the administration saved it.

"We certainly are planning as if it's going to be every bit as difficult a year as last year was in terms of defending the program," Hess said Monday.

"We disagree completely with the people who say the country cannot afford it," he said. "It's less than one-tenth of one percent of the federal budget."

To date, NASA has spent $5.6 billion on the space station, said Kyle Herring, a Johnson Space Center spokesman.

One of the space station's biggest opponents last year, Michigan Democrat Bob Traxler, who chairs a House appropriations subcommittee, declined to predict whether the space station will face renewed opposition in the House.

"It's far too early and there are far too many unknowns and variables for anyone to make any assumptions as to what the final '93 congressional appropriations bills will look like," said Traxler, who voted last year to kill the project.

"My personal views are irrelevant. The whole issue is how much money is the subcommittee given to have to meet the pressing needs of the agencies within its jurisdictions," he said.

But Mike Andrews, the Houston Democrat whose district includes the Johnson Space Center, said he fully expects another funding fight.

"The battle last year was a big fight and it was a big defeat for the opponents of the space station," he said. "It may be a different kind of battle this year."

Instead of an outright attempt to kill the space station, opponents may instead seek to downsize its funding and spread construction costs over a longer period, Andrews said.

"I think it's always going to be a tough fight and the more the budget dilemma confronts us, the more difficult it is to find dollars for programs like space."

In addition to the space station, Gramm's office said Bush's proposed budget includes the following for Texas:

■ $80 million for Sematech, the Austin-based semiconductor research consortium. The consortium was funded with $500 million over five years by the Pentagon. Congress soon will begin debating the future of the organization, which includes 13 of the industry's biggest players.

■ $50 million for high-intensity drug trafficking areas nationwide, including Houston and the Southwest border. About one-fourth of the funding is expected to go to Texas, said Gramm's spokesman Larry Neal. The federal funding is funneled to the federal agencies fighting drug trafficking, as well as local drug task forces and local law enforcement agencies.

■ $17 million for the El Paso Intelligence Center, a joint operation of federal, state and local anti-drug agencies. The center, which includes the Drug Enforcement Administration, Customs Service and Border Patrol, serves as the headquarter for electronic monitoring of the Southwest border.

■ FEMA officials survey flood damage

HOUSTON — The director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency flew over flood-ravaged Southeast Texas Monday as officials began assessing the damage and residents continued cleaning up their mud-slickened homes.

"We are going to give the citizens of Texas all of the help the law allows to put their lives back together," Wallace Stickney said. "We know we can do that at a monetary level," but he said handling the emotional losses would be more difficult.

Through Sunday, FEMA had received 3,311 requests for assistance in the 28 counties declared federal disaster areas. Of those, 1,840 came through the Small Business Administration while 1,124 came for individual family temporary housing grants, said Brad Harris, regional FEMA director.

■ Robbers steal Democrats' filing fees

AUSTIN — Texas Democratic Party headquarters was burglarized and about $3,100 in candidate filing fees was stolen, officials said.

Ed Martin, executive director of the state Democratic Party, said the robbery probably occurred Sunday evening or early Monday.

"We checked our computers, equipment and nothing else was missing or tampered with," Martin said.

He said an office door was forced open and money taken from a desk drawer.

Friday was the deadline for candidates to pay their filing fees to get their name on the primary ballot, and some paid in cash, Martin said.

He said about $3,100 in the desk drawer was paid late Friday and was to have been deposited in the bank Monday.

■ Police charge man with kidnapping

FORT WORTH — The Tarrant County district attorney's office Monday charged a man who took three children from their Fort Worth home with three felony counts of kidnapping, officials said.

Sammy Ray Hernandez, 20, was charged with kidnapping Samuel Ramon, 7, his sister Valerie, 11, and brother Daniel Jr., 9. Hernandez is accused of taking the children Saturday, Jan. 4, and driving them to Las Vegas.

Las Vegas police officers found the children Friday, Jan. 10, asleep in a car with the suspect on the side of a highway. Hernandez, who was the children's Sunday school teacher, remains in custody in Las Vegas.

Fort Worth police filed the kidnapping charges about 4:30 p.m. Monday and the district attorney's office accepted the charges, said police spokesman Lt. Ralph Swearingin.

The FBI has deferred all charges to the Tarrant County district attorney's office, Swearingin said.

Hernandez's extradition from Las Vegas is being handled by the Tarrant County Sheriff's Department. He is scheduled for arraignment today, and bail will be set then, said Las Vegas police Lt. Gary Rainey.

Inquiry could include rehab hospitals, panel chairman says

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Physical rehabilitation centers may receive the same scrutiny the mental health industry has seen, says the chairman of a state Senate committee probing psychiatric abuses.

"Many of the same factors exist (in physical rehabilitation) that the committee found in mental health," said state Sen. Mike Moncrief, D-Fort Worth, chairman of the Senate Interim Committee on Health and Human Services.

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock appointed the three-member panel to investigate psychiatric abuses across Texas. It has held several public hearings and heard from dozens of witnesses.

The committee has documented that fierce competition in mental health care led to the holding of some psychiatric patients against their will and the development of treatment plans tailored to reap insurance benefits.

Having heard more than 60 hours of testimony, the committee has come to believe many of the same abuses also may exist in the competitive physical rehabilitation field, Moncrief said.

"I have to believe there is a tremendous competition for (rehabilitation) patients, too," he told the Express-News in Monday's editions. The newspaper began reporting on alleged psychiatric abuses last spring.

DEAR ABBY

Eating compulsion leads women to fear for life

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I don't know what to do anymore. My life has been at a standstill for over 20 years because of my weight. I am extremely overweight, and have been all my life. I am in my late 20s and am embarrassed to admit that I have no friends, no social life, and I've never had a date.

Van Buren

Yes, I know that there are women who are overweight living happy, normal lives, but I am not one of them. I am living the life of a hermit. I am embarrassed to be seen and stared at. I have seen a diet doctor and tried every diet imaginable. I've tried fads, gimmicks, starvation, pills — the works. I lose a couple of pounds, then get hungry for something good to eat, and stuff myself.

Money is tight or I would go to a fat farm. I get depressed and cry for hours and think horrible thoughts. I know that my problem is in my head. I'm a compulsive overeater and I need help, and I need it now. I can feel my heart pounding in my chest from walking up a flight of stairs. I'm scared. I really am. Please help me, Abby. Life is passing me by. I'm too young to die. — LONG ISLANDER

DEAR LONG ISLANDER: You are not alone; half the women in America are overweight — some are more overweight than others.

Have you tried Overeaters Anonymous? If you have, and dropped out, don't be embarrassed; give it another try — you won't be the first person who didn't make it on the first try. Look at yourself in the mirror and tell yourself you're worth saving. You are, but only you can save yourself — so get going, Long Islander. The longest trek in the world starts with one step. Good luck . . . you can make it if you try. Please write again. I care.

DEAR ABBY: As a physician, I have seen many women die of breast cancer. In 1960, this disease attacked one woman in every 20. It has risen steadily to the current toll of one in nine. Many women do not know that their risk of breast cancer is linked to foods.

Low-fat, high-fiber diets can reduce the risk of cancer dramatically. The National Cancer Institute has recommended such a diet for years. Unfortunately, only one woman in five is aware of the link, according to a recent Opinion Research Corp. poll.

Abby, will you please tell your readers that the Physicians Committee for Responsible Medicine has a toll-free telephone number that people can call to get information on breast cancer prevention: Dial 1-800-US-LIVES. The call and the information are free. By sending out this information, you will save more lives than any doctor could ever hope to. Many, many thanks. — NEAL D. BERNARD, M.D.; PRESIDENT, PHYSICIANS COMMITTEE FOR RESPONSIBLE MEDICINE, WASHINGTON, D.C.

Most teen-agers do not know the facts about drugs, AIDS, and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy. It's all in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. AT WIT'S END

Boomers should continue to let all of it hang out

By Erma Bombeck

In May 1970, a girdle factory shut down due to the lack of sales.

It was important enough for me to do a column on it. I'm not being dramatic when I liken it to the toppling of a Berlin Wall of stays, hooks and elastic. The barriers of torture were down. Women were free at last.

Bombeck

For the last 21 years, women have let it all hang out. What we didn't hang out, we stuffed under a trapeze dress, overblouse, shift, blouson, dropped waist, layers of clothes or bulky sweaters.

Well, throw away your water pills, gang, girdles are coming back. Pantyhose are controlling more than the "tummy"; the elastic is going right down to the thighs. Retail reports show there is a demand for push-up and underwire bras, and larger stores are featuring body-language shops with girdles and other forms of restraint.

The reason? Baby boomers are tired of going to the gym and have noticed that when they don't, everything falls.

I'm sorry, but I thought American women had a deal. Surely, the baby boomers studied science in high school. They know when an apple leaves the tree, it falls down and not up. Nothing has changed. Hey, in high school my body stood at attention like a Marine when the flag goes by, with no help from stays or wires. Today, that same body drags behind me like a parachute. You live with it.

Bringing back the girdle is not something you do without giving it a lot of thought. Talk to women who survived this era before you make a decision.

My last girdle was called the Constrictor 747. It was mechanically engineered to take inches off your waist and hips. When laced and properly hooked, it performed 18 hours without adjustment. There was a brochure that came with it. It said, "Please familiarize yourself with the two pressure exits located over each kidney. In the unlikely event oxygen is required, the stays will open and automatically eject an oxygen mask. Please extinguish all smoking material and place the mask over your face and mouth and breathe normally."

Today's baby boomers have to ask themselves if this is the kind of future they want — walking around so uplifted and trussed they need help ascending a curb. Think about it!

State sales tax marks 30th year

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas state sales tax, which marked its 30th anniversary in 1991, has brought in $73 billion to state government since its inception, the comptroller reports.

The Texas sales tax rate has increased during that time as well, the comptroller reported in its latest edition of the publication "Fiscal Notes."

Texas musician makes Grammy nominee list

By Paula Felps
Associated Press writer

DENTON — When the 34th annual Grammy Awards program airs on CBS Feb. 25, many Denton residents will watch it with a bit more interest than usual.

That's because this year's nomination list includes the name of Michael Bogle, 30, administrative assistant for the lab bands at the University of North Texas.

Bogle was nominated in in the category of Best Arrangement-Instrumental. The piece, "Got a Match?" appears on the album "Lab '89," recorded by the One O'Clock Lab Band at UNT. Bogle plays the trombone in the arrangement. Strangely enough, his instrument of choice is the piano, not the trombone.

"I really didn't think this would happen," Bogle said. "I actually submitted (the work) for nomination as part of my job, but I didn't expect it to come out like this. Of course, I'm really happy because that was my last year of playing with the lab band so it was the last chance I would have an opportunity like this."

The nominated piece is a song written by Chick Corea and arranged by Bogle.

"I'm really thankful to Chick Corea for providing such a wonderful theme for me to arrange," he said. "And I also owe a lot to Neil Slater, the director of the band. He gave a lot of inspiration and guidance on this project."

Before he began his stint at UNT, the Lewisville native attended the University of Miami for two years, where he worked with a variety of well-known artists, including Tom Jones and Burt Bacharach. He returned to Denton County in 1985 to continue his studies at UNT and went on to earn his masters degree in jazz. In addition to his work with the UNT lab bands, he also works with the lab bands at Brookhaven College and has his own jazz quartet which performs throughout the Metroplex.

"I thought the album had come out pretty well but I really never thought this would happen. Last year when we were working on this I jokingly asked Neil (Slater) if we could go to (the Grammy Awards ceremony) if we got nominated. It was just a big joke then," he said. The album was released in November 1990 and therefore qualified for the 1991 Grammys.

"They sent me a reservations card for the ceremony but I didn't think anything about it at the time. I guess I'd better take a look at it."

This is not UNT's first experience with the Grammy Awards. In 1975 and 1976, the One O'Clock Lab Band was nominated for Best Jazz Performance.

Houston may be 'egg roll capital,' official says

HOUSTON (AP) — The area's egg roll makers, riding a growth spurt in Oriental cuisine, are expected to produce an estimated 240 million egg rolls this year — almost one for every person in the United States.

The area is home to the nation's top egg roll producer — Minh Foods Co. of Pasadena — and the self proclaimed No. 2 maker — Chung's Gourmet Foods in Houston, food industry observers say. There also are several smaller makers.

"It might be the egg roll capital," Jean Lee, president of Los Angeles-based Little Chinese Food Processing Corp, told the Houston Chronicle.

The little-known local industry is highly competitive and combative. Players range from Schwan's Sales Enterprise — a Minnesota company that owns Minh (pronounced Ming) and has estimated annual sales of $1.6 billion — to family-run operations with a half-dozen employees. It also includes members of Houston's fast-growing Asian-American community.

"It's a growth area relative to other foods. I think people's palates are more sophisticated and they are looking for new things," said Charles Ritchie, executive vice president of Business Trend Analysts, a New York market research firm.

Roger Young has watched the Oriental foods business mushroom since he arrived in 1975 to open an office for New York-based Westlake Noodle Co. The city then had just 86 Chinese restaurants. Today the area has more than 650.

"Now, Houston is internationalized," said Young, whose company supplies products such as fortune cookies, chow mein noodles and egg roll wrappers throughout the South.

Egg roll makers sell their frozen and refrigerated products mostly to grocery stores and traditional food-service outlets, such as hotels, fast-food operations and schools.

Sysco Corp., the giant Houston food-service distributor, bought 12.5 million egg rolls from Minh Foods last year, said John Trimble, product manager of convenience foods for Sysco.

Beefed-up police patrol relaxes fears

By T.J. Milling
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Sandra Hunt rode her bicycle down lower Westheimer in Houston after dark Friday, unafraid, with her gold bracelet twinkling on her wrist.

At least 54 police units, half again more than usual, were patrolling the west side of the inner loop in Houston, including Hunt's neighborhood.

"I'm out riding with jewelry on — I wouldn't have done that a year ago," said Hunt, president of a substance abuse testing company.

Houston Police officer David Smith wouldn't have been on Westheimer a year ago either. The 12-year veteran has had a day desk job since 1987.

But as part of Mayor Bob Lanier's overtime plan to bolster police presence during high-crime periods, Smith was getting time-and-a-half to cruise the streets from 6 p.m. to 2 a.m.

Up to 200 officers were added to street duty last weekend to ease the fears of crime-weary Houstonians. The plan calls for 200 more during peak crime hours by February, and another 250 by March, police said.

Hundreds of blue-and-white squad cars poured onto the streets while the logistics of the new program were still being worked out, but Smith said police will soon smooth out the bumps.

The peak crime hours, 6 p.m. to 3 a.m. Friday and Saturday, are when the overtime patrols are the largest, officials said, but extra officers are scheduled during the week as well.

Last Friday night, the first night of the program, there were almost 50 percent more patrols assigned in the Central Division, which includes the neighborhood where Hunt was riding her bike.

Though pleased with the ubiquitous HPD squad cars, Sally Faust and Betsy Koener, two elderly women leaving a movie theater on West Gray, said they always take precautions. "But I am not going to be afraid to do things," Faust said.

Chaps grab first place

■ A strong second half by Midland College ices a come-from-behind victory against South Plains in a battle of unbeatens at Chaparral Center.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

After a three year hiatus, excitement finally returned to Chaparral Center Monday night.

Midland College erased an eight point halftime deficit and sunk 10-of-12 free throws in the final two minutes to defeat South Plains College, 72-67. The win gave the Chaparrals sole possession of first place in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference.

MC has won 14 of its 18 games this season, and is a perfect 4-0 in conference, the only blemish-free team remaining in the league.

"We fought back and got our heads into the game. There was a lot that happened in the locker room at halftime," MC's first year head coach Steve Green said of his team's attitudinal change between the first and second halves. "I told the guys it's our goal to win the conference championship this year."

The Chaps struggled through another messy first half. In addition to 12 turnovers and, at one point, 24 percent shooting, the Chaps found it difficult, if not impossible, to get second shots. SPC owned the boards on MC's end of the floor.

If there had ever existed any doubts about MC's competitiveness, though, the Chaps erased those completely with an almost flawless second half of play.

Down 35-27, MC traded buckets with the Texans, and then switched on the high energy. The Chaps scored 12 of the next 15 points and finally gained their first lead of the game, 41-40, at the 14:05 mark of the second half.

From that point, MC and SPC traded leads six times until MC freshman guard Terrance Rone stepped to the free throw line and nailed both FTs to give the Chaps a 59-58 lead at the 3:11. It would turn out to be a lead the Chaps would not relinquish.

Rone's free throws would not be the last time the 2,000 in attendance would hear from him.

With SPC playing a tediously slow halfcourt spread offense, Rone came from nowehere at the 2:04 mark and stole the ball from SPC's Nathan Nash at midcourt. Rone took the ball in untouched, scoring on what he called a not-so-easy layup to give the Chaps a 62-58 lead.

"I was scared at first because I'd blown a lot of layups this year," Rone said. "I thought about dunking it for a minute, but I would've told my team to hit the for-sure layup."

From that point, 14 of the remaining 19 points by both teams — including the last 10 by MC — would come from the free throw line.

"This was not an offensive game," Green said. "But I figured the game would be won on the offensive glass and at the free throw line."

SPC's Terry Alexander led all scorers with 25 points, while Ari Rodriques led Chap scorers with 21.

"They did an excellent job doing what they had to do," SPC head coach Ron Mayberry said. "They kept their poise and composure."

The two teams played a heated physical game, uncharacteristic despite the rivalry between the two. Two players, MC's Bruce Patterson and South Plains' Clarence Hightower, were ejected from the game for flagrant fouls with five seconds remaining in the game.

Mayberry said he felt the intensity displayed by both teams was not a result of either team desiring to remain undefeated in conference play.

"Nah," Mayberry said. "I don't think either one of us feels we're that good. We were just trying to win."

Mayberry's decision to run the half court delay the Texans used in the second half was a result of "trying to soften things up. We were getting

■ Midland teams can look up and down the District 4-5A basketball standings heading into meetings with Odessa squads tonight.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Midland is looking at the District 4-5A basketball race from both the top and the bottom going into today's 8 p.m. games with Odessa. It makes for an interesting night.

Midland Lee's Rebels, off to a giddy 2-0 loop start and owners of sole possession of first place, put that lofty standing on the line against 1-0 Odessa Permian, a team that can win at least a share of first place by beating the Rebels. That game is at the Permian Fieldhouse.

"I don't think too many people felt we would win our first two games — or either one of them — going into district play, but we kind of like where we are right now," says Lee coach Jon House. "It's be fun so far."

Permian comes into the game having won six in a row while Lee is on a three game winning streak.

"We know that Permian is a strong and physical team and they now have Tony Daniels in the lineup after Permian's state championship in football. I guess that football just didn't last long enough."

Meanwhile, Midland High hosts Odessa High at Chaparral Center and both teams are off to an 0-2 start, a standing that doesn't sit well with either team.

"We're both struggling right now and I know neither one of us want to be in last place," said MHS coach Jack Stephenson. "If Odessa puts it together, they can beat anyone in the league. We also feel that way about our team.

"I'll bet my house and my car that no one in this league goes unbeaten. This thing is far from over and we haven't given up on our hopes. We have played three good quarters in our two district games. Maybe we can put four quarters together against Odessa High.

"But this thing is too even this year. It's going to be an interesting year."

San Angelo, tied with Permian at 1-0, takes on 1-1 Abilene High in the other matchup tonight and the Bobcats are hoping

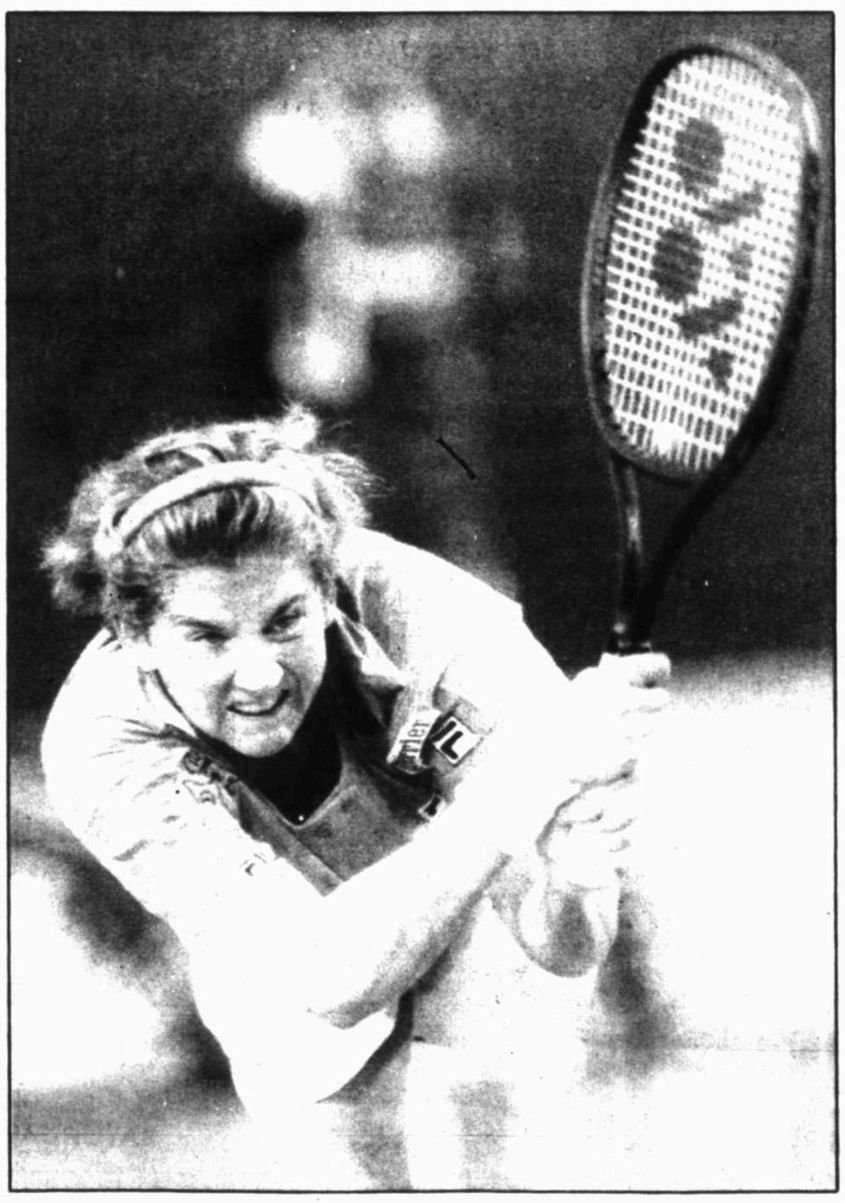
Seles wins, but can't shake Madonna



AP Laserphoto

Monica Seles is all business in the first round of the Australian Open with a 6-2, 6-0 victory Monday over Akiko Kijmuta.

■ Monica Seles is on top of her tennis game, but comparison to singer Madonna is wearing thin at the Australian Open.

By Steve Wilstein
AP Tennis Writer

MELBOURNE, Australia — Monica Seles laughed at the caricature — her savagely twisted face on Madonna's body, satin bustier and lace stockings.

In it, she carried a racket and a long whip.

"Oh, God!" she exclaimed, putting her hand to her lips in embarrassment over the tabloid sketch her cartoonist father surely did not draw.

"I would really like it if people could get away from the Madonna (comparison) because that's not me," Seles said. "My personality and everything is so different.

"I said I liked one of her songs, but that doesn't mean I want to be her. You know, I'm not going to behave like her and dress like her."

Seles, barely 18 and skinny and giggly as ever, looked relatively sedate in her orange and white tennis togs as she began defense of her Australian Open title with a perfunctory 6-2, 6-0 romp Monday over Akiko Kijimuta, a three-time loser in the first-round here.

Abandoning the scarf and brace she wore last week for a neck strain, Seles overcame some rustiness on her serves and relied on her deep, line-hugging groundstrokes to break all Kijimuta's services in a 48-minute breeze.

Seles, who had been learning a bit of serve-and-volley tennis before her injury, dropped her service in the first and seventh games of the first set as she occasionally experimented with forays toward the net.

"I'm not feeling too comfortable with the service because I didn't serve as many balls during the week," she said. "I kind of just wanted to get over the match. But in future matches, I'm definitely going to go more for the net. I'm feeling much more comfortable there."

Though she won $2.5 million last year while taking all three Grand Slam events she entered, Seles can't shake the images that have grown around her — the wannabe Madonna, the mystery girl, the calculating conniver.

"Seles has the smile of a child, the charm of a princess and the eye of an assassin," one Melbourne newspaper wrote, though in truth the only time Seles casts an evil look is when she's whacking a ball.

She thought about that description and laughed again, rolling her eyebrows as her blue-gray eyes sparkled.

Seles took a pummeling in the press at Wimbledon when she dropped out at the last moment without explanation. Stories in the tabloids suggested she might be pregnant; others said she was seeking more money at exhibitions. She later claimed she was suffering shin splints, but the damage to her reputation was done and preceded her here half a world away even though she returned as a popular defending champion.

"So many people just believed that junk, and even though I was playing great tennis it just hurt me knowing the kind of accusations people make up," she said. "Even now they're still going on about it."

She doesn't see herself as the Madonna of tennis, dressing outlandishly or projecting a rebellious, sexy image.

"I have totally different views to her on a lot of things," Seles said. "I like some of her songs, and I do listen to them, but I'm totally different."

Nor does she see herself as mysterious.

"The only mystery that people might think was because I pulled out of Wimbledon, and I didn't come forward with an explanation," Seles said. "But I think a person at age 17, where everything's happened so fast, and then not being able to play Wimbledon, shouldn't be judged mysterious just for that. It wasn't an easy decision or an easy time for me."

Three-pointer defeats Mavs

Associated Press

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Joe Dumars sank a 3-point shot from the top of the circle with 1.8 seconds left Monday night, giving the Detroit Pistons an 84-81 victory over the Dallas Mavericks, who lost their eighth consecutive game.

Dumars, who finished with 14 points but had not scored since the opening minutes of the second half, took a inbounds pass from halfcourt and dribbled four times before releasing his game-winning shot.

Orlando Woolridge led the Pistons with 15 points, while Dennis Rodman and Isiah Thomas joined Dumars with 14 points apiece. Rodman also grabbed 21 rebounds.

Terry Davis had 14 points and 21 rebounds for the Mavericks and Rolando Blackman scored 15 points.

After Dumars' basket, Bill Laimbeer intentionally fouled Dallas' Herb Williams before the Mavericks could shoot a 3-point attempt. Williams missed both free throws, the second intentionally, but Dallas did not get another shot.

The victory was the fourth straight for the Pistons and 11th in 13 games.

The Mavericks, whose losing skein is the longest active streak in the NBA, lost their previous seven games by an average of 20 points.

Detroit led 77-70 with five minutes left, but Blackman scored five points during a 9-0 Dallas streak that gave the Mavericks a two-point lead with 2:16 remainming.

Thomas tied the game with a foul-line jumper, then hit Laimbeer with a cross-court pass for a jumper that gave Detoit an 81-79 lead.

Derek Harper countered with an 18-footer that tied the score, setting up Dumars' game-winner.

Dallas trailed by as many as 10 points in the first half and by one at halftime. But Randy White had six points in the third period and James Donaldson scored the last four of the quarter to give the Mavericks a 63-61 advantage.

Detroit played without John Salley, who stayed home with the flu, and lost William Bedford early in the second quarter with a severe ankle sprain.

The Pistons scored the first six points of the game and trailed only once in the first half. Rodman's five points and eight rebounds helped Detroit take a 24-17 lead at the end of the first quarter.

Nuggets 111, Kings 109

DENVER — Reggie Williams' 3-pointer with 14 seconds left wiped out a two-point deficit, and Denver's front line supplied most of the firepower in a victory over Sacramento.

Williams scored 26 points and his teammate at forward, Greg Anderson, had 22 points and 16 rebounds, while center Dikembe Mutombo had 22 points and 11 rebounds for the Nuggets, who snapped a four-game losing streak.

Wayman Tisdale, who scored 29 points, put the Kings ahead 109-107 with an 18-footer with 27 seconds left, setting up Williams' go-ahead 3-pointer.

After a timeout, Sacramento set up for a final shot, but Tisdale's errant pass was intercepted by Anderson with 5.1 seconds left. Lionel Simmons, who scored 31 points, fouled Mutombo, who hit one of two free throws with 1.6 seconds left, completing the scoring.

Mitch Richmond missed a mid-court shot at the final buzzer.

Denver's largest lead of the game was 10 points on several occasions, the last time at 92-82 with 10:53 remaining. The Kings, whose largest lead was 15-10, rallied behind Randy Brown's six points in an 8-0 run that pulled Sacramento within two with 9:37 left.

The Nuggets rebuilt the lead to 99-94 with 6:34 left, but the Kings came back again, tying the score at 100-100 with 4:04 remaining. A 3-pointer by Richmond made it 107-107 with 1:54 to go.

Denver used a 12-3 spurt in the first period to lead 28-20, but the Kings closed to 30-27 by the end of the quarter. It was 57-54 at halftime.

Suns 131, Timberwolves 111

PHOENIX — Phoenix, with guards Jeff Hornacek and Kevin Johnson having their way in the first three quarters, stayed perfect against Minnesota.

It was Phoenix's 10th win over Minnesota, a third-year NBA franchise, in as many games. Phoenix won the first of the four meetings this year, 101-95, in Minneapolis.

Hornacek had 10 points in the third quarter, when the Suns outscored the Wolves 40-23 to take a 97-67 lead, and finished with 26. Johnson scored 19 and paced the fastbreak with 13 assists.

Dan Majerle added 20 points in 27 minutes for Phoenix, which won its fourth straight and 13th straight at home.

Pooh Richardson led Minnesota with 14 points.

Arnsparger charged up

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Bill Arnsparger resigned Monday as Florida's athletic director to become defensive coordinator of the San Diego Chargers, saying he had a "fire burning" to return to coaching.

"You always think about the things you enjoy doing," Arnsparger said. "I'm happy to have the opportunity to do what I like to do."

Arnsparger, 65, accepted the San Diego job after interviewing with Bobby Ross, who left Georgia Tech after this season to replace Dan Henning as coach of the Chargers.

"Bill is one of the finest defensive minds in all of football. He's an outstanding addition to what I feel already is a quality coaching staff," said Ross, who also announced the hiring of former Tampa Bay Buccaneers assistant Dale Lindsey as linebackers coach.

Arnsparger, who had been Florida's athletic director since 1987, will take 35 years of coaching experience to the Chargers.

"They are a young team with potential. I'm looking forward to being a part of it," he said.

Arnsparger began his NFL coaching career with the Baltimore Colts in 1964. He remained there until 1970 when he joined Don Shula's staff in Miami. He left the Dolphins in 1974 to become head coach of the New York Giants, a post he held until midway through the 1976 season when he returned to the Dolphins.

He was architect of the Dolphins' "No-Name Defense" in the early 1970s, and later developed the "Killer B's" defense in the early 1980s.

Jayhawks nail Missouri in OT

Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Rex Walters scored nine of his 21 points in overtime as No. 6 Kansas held off No. 13 Missouri 92-80 in a Big Eight Conference opener Monday night.

Steve Woodberry added 19 points for Kansas (12-1), which rebounded from a loss to Louisville on Saturday that ended its 24-game homecourt winning streak. Each had a 3-pointer in the extra period and Walters scored five straight points to put the Jayhawks ahead 85-78.

No. 14 North Carolina 96, Maryland 76

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Hubert Davis provided a first-half spark with 16 of his 26 points as No. 14 North Carolina shook off a slow start and defeated Maryland in an Atlantic Coast Conference game.

The Tar Heels (11-2, 2-1 ACC) were playing their third game in five days and it showed early. North Carolina turned the ball over four times in the first four minutes and appeared sluggish coming off Saturday's upset loss to Notre Dame in New York.

No. 19 Tulane 83, New Orleans 61

NEW ORLEANS — Pointer Williams, a reserve freshman point guard, scored 17 points and had six steals as 19th-ranked Tulane remained undefeated.

Four of Tulane's reserves, dubbed "The Posse" by coach Perry Clark, scored in double figures. None of the starters did — but the Green Wave still handed New Orleans its worst home loss in the nine years the Privateers have played in Lakefront Arena.

Villanova 73, No. 21 Seton Hall 68

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Lance Miller hit two free throws and a jumper early in overtime to give Villanova the lead for good and the Wildcats took advantage of No. 21 Seton Hall's woes from the free throw line to defeat the Pirates.

The victory was the fourth straight for suddenly revived Villanova (6-6 and 4-1 in the Big East Conference).

Upsets force cage poll shakeup

Associated Press

Sixteen ranked teams lost a total of 18 games last week and that translated into a major shakeup of the AP college basketball poll today with just five teams holding onto the same spot and three teams getting the boot.

Duke (10-0), one of four unbeaten Division I teams, held the No. 1 spot as it has every week this season, but the Blue Devils are no longer unanimous. They received 63 of 64 first-place votes and 1,599 points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters.

UCLA (10-0), which received the other first-place vote and 1,531 points after ending Arizona's 71-game home winning streak, and Oklahoma State (14-0) held second and third. The only other schools to remain where they were last week were No. 17 St. John's and No. 20 Syracuse.

Tulane (11-0), which jumped from 24th to 19th after cracking the rankings for the first time in 43 years, is the fourth undefeated team.

Georgetown and Louisville, teams which fell from the rankings last week, returned this week as Nos. 22 and 25, respectively, while Iowa State came in at No. 24. The Cyclones (12-2) were last ranked in 1987-88 when they were in the poll for eight weeks in the middle of the season, getting as high as 10th.

Massachusetts, which was ranked for the first time in school history last week, dropped from the poll, as did Wake Forest and Southern Cal, each with two losses last week.

Following Oklahoma State in the rankings were Ohio State and Indiana, two of the other six ranked teams not to lose last week. Kansas was sixth followed by Arizona, Connecticut, Alabama and Kentucky. The latter two also didn't lose last week, with Alabama making the week's biggest jump, from 16th.

Michigan State started the Second Ten and was followed by Arkansas, Missouri, North Carolina, Michigan, Georgia Tech, St. John's, North Carolina Charlotte, Tulane and Syracuse.

North Carolina Charlotte and Tulane were the other two ranked teams not to lose last week and jumped four and three spots, respectively.

The final five were Seton Hall, Georgetown, Oklahoma, Iowa State and Louisville.

Georgetown (9-2) was 16th in the preseason poll and stayed in the rankings until falling out following a loss at home to Villanova. The Hoyas bounced back with Big East wins last week over Providence and Seton Hall.

Iowa State, which has already matched last season's win total, has lost only to Texas Christian and Massachusetts. Iowa State beat Loyola, Ill. and Oklahoma last week.

Sophomore Chris McKinney, who converted 6-of-8 free throws, all in the second half, said he pressured himself into making them because of his play in the first half.

"I had to make up for some of the mistakes I had made in the first half," McKinney said. "I just wasn't hustling like I should've been."

McKinney, a transfer from Division I San Diego State, has been in big games before, and figures there'll be more to come like Monday night's.

Palimony trial set for April 6

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — An April 6 trial date has been set for the palimony lawsuit between Martina Navratilova and former companion Judy Nelson, the tennis star's publicist said Monday.

Nelson, 45, contends in the lawsuit that Navratilova, 34, broke a 1986 "non-marital cohabitation agreement" that said Nelson was to get half the estimated $5 million to $9 million earned during their relationship.

"The setting of a trial date at least means the end is in sight," Navratilova said Monday through publicist Linda Dozoretz. "If the system works the way I thought it would when I came to this country, then I should win."

In another development in the case, Dozoretz said Cleveland-based International Management Group, which represents Navratilova, has been added to the lawsuit.

An telephone operator at IMG said no one was available for comment Monday night. Nelson's attorney, Richard "Racehorse" Haynes of Houston, could not be reached.

In addition to Navratilova, IMG also has represented such athletes as Michael Jordan, Wayne Gretzky and Joe Montana.

Navratilova said bringing IMG into the lawsuit was "ridiculous and absurd."

"Judy Nelson is still saying she wants to settle this suit, but now she's just prolonging it by suing International Management Group," Navratilova said in the statement. "Now IMG will be led on the same legal merry-go-round that I have been on for the past eight months."

Nelson and Navratilova lived in Fort Worth from 1984 through 1989, and then moved to Aspen, Colo. The couple's relationship ended in April 1991.

Bobcat Morenz top grid recruit

By Kirk Bohls
Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN (AP) — When Dan Gandy became head coach at San Angelo Central, he quickly heard about the junior high quarterback who could throw the out route in his sleep.

Gandy had been around a few good quarterbacks in his time.

Among them were Tom Muecke, who played for him at Angleton before starring for Baylor and now Edmonton in the Canadian Football League. Then there was Kyle Gandy, his son and offensive coordinator, who had played quarterback for him and gone on to lead Louisiana Tech to the NCAA I-AA national finals in his senior season. In all, Dan Gandy has groomed nine quarterbacks for college ball.

But from the moment he laid eyes on a freshman quarterback named Shea Morenz in the spring of 1988, he knew there'd be a 10th. Gandy saw something special, and Morenz confirmed it the afternoon of the spring game.

"He was impressive even then," Kyle Gandy said. "He threw for 512 yards in the spring game as a freshman. That was a pretty good hint."

Four years later, Morenz has reached the top. The 6-foot-2-inch, 205-pound senior quarterback has been selected the player of the year on the Austin American-Statesman's annual Fabulous 55 list of top high school recruits in the state.

"Wherever he goes, he'll make an impact," Dan Gandy said. "As far as having potential, I really feel we'll see him on Sunday afternoons."

Morenz is one of a handful of outstanding quarterbacks, who along with a number of stellar defensive backs represent the positions with the most quality in 1992. Seven quarterbacks can be found among the top 55.

Longview free safety Bobby Taylor ranks second behind Morenz and is one of 10 defensive backs on the list, including three among the top 11.

But Morenz overshadows them all. A natural athlete, he is a good enough hitting outfielder that he also wants to play baseball in college. Kyle Gandy said Morenz is "probably a scratch golfer." He played basketball through his sophomore year. He enjoys tennis.

He even tried hockey. His father, Brian Morenz, is a former National Hockey League player and got his son to play until he moved. As Shea pointed out, "They don't have hockey in Texas."

Born in New Jersey, raised early in California and transplanted to Texas by his elementary years, Morenz will have his pick of those sections of the country by the time the Feb. 5 signing day arrives.

Unless other schools persuade him otherwise, the dropback passer with the great arm and pinpoint accuracy will decide from among Texas, Texas A&M, Miami, UCLA, Stanford and Duke. He has been to UCLA, has taken an unofficial trip to A&M and is touring Stanford this weekend.

He drops no hints about which college he will pick, but new Texas Coach John Mackovic will keep tabs on Morenz because Mackovic is the guest speaker at Central's football banquet Jan. 20. Morenz also has a stepsister who plays on the Texas golf team and a brother who is a Texas student.

Morenz completed 210 of 404 passes for 3,363 yards

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jea... Dixon

TUESDAY, JANUARY 14, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: The months just ahead will reveal a new dimension to a relationship that could bring you great happiness. The business outlook brightens when you adopt new technology in March. Tackle any personnel problems head-on. The answer to a domestic question becomes crystal clear next summer. Travel will bring in new business in September. Romantic fires you thought extinguished still burn brightly. Be careful not to reject the opportunity of a lifetime!

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Faye Dunaway, author Tom Tryon, "60 Minutes" regular Andy Rooney, actor Jason Bateman.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An unexpected change or cancellation of plans is annoying. A relative or in-law could be involved. Curb your irritation. Others urge you to be more active in a club.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are on the right track today when it comes to achieving your personal goals. Self-promotion is essential. Something that makes others angry might spur them to defend your interests.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Other people will defer to your wishes. If an important relationship has been on hold for several months, you had better make a decision. A permanent commitment holds new appeal.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Group activities hold special interest today. Enlarge your social circle. Creative projects could result in additional income. Keep a loved one's confidences.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be more tactful with an older person when discussing controversial subjects. Better still, refrain from talking about sensitive topics altogether. A close friend shares a secret.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Look forward to spending a carefree day with those who mean the most to you. Mate or partner is very supportive. Late afternoon is the best time to take care of personal matters.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The cycle of change, perhaps even drastic change, continues. You want to redecorate or remodel your home. Money comes and goes unpredictably. Try to communicate peacefully with your relatives.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Follow through on a hunch; your intuition is right on target. Collaborative efforts pay big dividends. Keep in touch with a former associate who has access to valuable information.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are walking on eggshells where an employment matter or business venture is concerned. Continue to tread lightly today. Evening hours favor romance. Be tender.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A day when everybody could be fretting and fussing. Spats are probable, progress stop-and-go. Seek solitude before you lose your temper. Go on a reading binge this evening.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A great day to cultivate new business and social contacts. Join groups and mingle. A wish comes true, thanks to teamwork. An evening devoted to work or physical fitness suits you fine.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Greater rapport with your colleagues is possible. All the right elements for accord are in place. The pot of gold makes a dramatic reappearance. Plan for the future. Invest extra funds wisely.

TODAY'S CHILDREN will do everything in their power to ensure that their playmates and friends have a good opinion of them. No one need worry about these youngsters carrying less than their share of the work load. They will volunteer to do the dishes at home and help their teachers at school. Although they enjoy a good argument, these children will rarely start a quarrel or fight.

Was Votmai Tinkinov, the Russian emigre, a caviar smuggler? Club members were given to speculation about where he acquired his wealth—he was supporting several players in the rubber-bridge game with his losses, despite being a good bidder and reasonably skilled player. Most of his defeats were caused by failure to take time to study the position before choosing a line of play.

This hand is typical of his affliction. North-South speedily reached their best contract of seven no trump. South's jump rebid showed 19-20 points, and North wasted no time in striving for the maximum—the combined assets included a high-card count of at least 38, and North held a five-card suit as a kicker.

One might think that the play in a grand slam merited some thought, but not for Votmai. There were 12 tricks in high cards, and the 13th could come from dropping either red-suit jack. So after winning the opening lead in hand, Votmai immediately started on diamonds. When West showed out on the second round, declarer switched to hearts. No luck there either. Down one.

A most unfortunate hand to be sure, but declarer made his own bad luck. The diamond suit should have been left to last, when declarer knew as much as possible about the distribution.

Declarer should first cash out the spade winners, noting that East discards on the third round. Next comes three rounds of hearts, followed by the ace and king of clubs. That establishes that West started with six spades, four hearts and at least two clubs, and, therefore, cannot have more than one diamond. A diamond to the king and a finesse of the nine of diamonds on the way back allows South to score four diamond tricks (the queen of clubs remains as an entry to dummy) and the grand slam is in the bank.

Recluse Woody Allen, little as life, turns out for chums

NEW YORK — Woody Allen may be a recluse, but he comes out for his chums. And there he was, little as life, hunched in a corner at the swell soiree given Friday night by Jaqui Safra, the international financier, after a private screening of "The Ox," a Swedish film produced by his longtime companion, Jean Doumanian. Ms. Doumanian is a former producer of "Saturday Night Live."

He was surrounded by a crush of folks from film and beyond, including Nan and Gay Talese, Dick Cavett, Byron Janis and Maria Cooper (daughter of Gary), Peter Maas, cinematographer Carlo di Palma, and Elaine Kaufman of Elaine's. The party was held in Safra's East Side "partyhouse," where he neither lives nor works.

Guests appreciatively sipped Pavillon Blanc du Chateau Margaux 1986 and Chateau Gruaud-Larose 1982.

"Great party, great party," Allen murmured to his friend Ms. Doumanian. His sister, Letty Aronson, said she has seen "The Ox" twice. It is directed by Sven Nykvist, best known as the cinematographer for Ingmar Bergman.

NEW YORK — It may be ancient history, but Shirley MacLaine said she was married to City Council President Andy Stein in a past life.

The other-worldly actress is backing Stein for mayor in 1993. She wouldn't say when the two exchanged vows.

MacLaine

Pressed for details by New York magazine after disclosing the connection at a recent Manhattan gathering, MacLaine couldn't resist a poke at the city's current mayor.

"I wasn't married to Andy. I was married to David Dinkins and died of boredom."

Last year, MacLaine said she converses with former Rep. Bella Abzug's dead husband, Martin.

GREENVILLE, S.C. — Listening to the same song more than a dozen times didn't faze 1,500 people who turned out to help country singer Aaron Tippin with a video.

After hours of hearing "There Ain't Nothing Wrong With the Radio," the audience at Palmetto International Exposition Center clapped and danced to the music Sunday.

"I'll probably never be an actor, so this is as close as I'll get to that sort of thing," said Tippin, whose "You've Got to Stand for Something," became a patriotic anthem during the Persian Gulf War.

The video is scheduled for release soon.

ALBION, Mich. — Journalism students were outnumbered by journalists when former hostage Alann Steen returned to the classroom Monday to teach.

The 32-year-old journalism teacher told 11 students in an advanced newswriting class at Albion College that the biggest problem captives in Lebanon faced was being cut off from the news.

"We did get little sentences (of news) here and there and it drove us crazy," he said. "They didn't give us bad leads. We were basically able to surmise what was going to happen. I think our biggest problem was not knowing what was going on in the real world."

This semester, Steen also will teach photojournalism and advanced expository writing at Albion, a small liberal arts school in south-central Michigan.

Reporters and television crews crammed Steen's class Monday.

Steen was kidnapped Jan. 24, 1987, and released Dec. 3. He went to Lebanon in 1983 to work on the copy desk at the Beirut Daily Star. He taught public relations at Beirut University College from 1984 until he was kidnapped.

Since his release, Steen has lived in nearby Clark Lake with his wife, Virginia, an art history teacher at Albion.

NEW YORK — In a sense, the fate of the planet is a continuing drama. What will happen to the ozone layer, to the rain forests, to air and water quality? Tune in during the next century for some clues. So it does not seem too incongruous that the folks who specialize in cliff-hangers of a different sort — soap operas — should have some interest in the environment.

On Jan. 19, 13 members of the cast of "One Life to Live" will enact little dramas about environmental problems and their solutions at a luncheon to benefit the Student Environmental Action Coalition, a 3-year-old organization of high school and college students.

In one skit, Robert S. Woods, who plays the romantic Bo Buchanan on the soap, and Grace Phillips, or Sarah Buchanan, who was presumed dead but surfaced recently as a released hostage, will go marketing. Sarah will shop in an environmentally sound way; Bo will not. After their foray, they will visit non-soap characters Archie and Edith Bunker to spread the word about "green" shopping.

The project was the idea of Jessica Tuck, who plays Megan Gordon-Harrison on the soap. Megan is battling lupus, and Ms. Tuck is about to leave the show.

Prices rally

NEW YORK — Oil prices rallied Monday as cold weather forecasts, Algerian political turmoil and speculation about OPEC production cuts sent traders on a buying spree.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in February settled at $18.79 per barrel, up 56 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Local crude purchasers such as Scurlock Permian Corp. and Texaco Trading and Transportation raised their posed price 50 cents to $17.50.

Futures prices came in higher Monday morning, in what traders said was a follow-through to buying that began Friday after Venezuela announced it was cutting production to strengthen prices.

The rally was further fueled by the political troubles in Algeria, a medium-sized OPEC producer that supplies parts of Europe with gasoil, which is similar to home heating oil used in the United States.

Although the Algerian oil industry, with a daily capacity of about 800,000 barrels of crude, has not suffered any immediate disruptions, the uncertain future of the North African nation helped to push prices higher.

Analysts said oil was given further strength by hints from the Middle East that Saudi Arabia might be willing to make some production cuts when the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries meets next month.

Dollar drops

NEW YORK — The dollar declined on world foreign exchange markets Monday against all leading currencies except the Japanese yen, which was buffeted by a scandal involving a government official.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.45 yen to a closing 126.30 yen.

In London, the British pound rose to $1.8030 from $1.7925 late Friday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Friday's rates included: 1.5765 German marks, down from 1.5850; 1.4040 Swiss francs, down from 1.4120; 5.3790 French francs, down from 5.4090; 1,190.25 Italian lire, down from 1,197.00, and 1.1493 Canadian dollars, down from 1.1548.

Rates mixed

WASHINGTON — Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities were mixed in Monday's auction.

The Treasury Department sold $10.2 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 3.83 percent, down from 3.85 percent last week. Another $10.3 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 3.87 percent, up from 3.86 percent last week.

Coalition lobbies for GM plant

■ Texas group urges GM to build natural gas vehicles at Arlington plant.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — A diverse coalition Monday called on General Motors to keep its Arlington auto plant open to build vehicles that will run on natural gas.

Land Commissioner Garry Mauro said Texas is at the forefront in forming a huge market for alternative fuel vehicles because of more stringent air pollution laws and the state's abundance of natural gas.

"We have an extraordinary opportunity to clean up the air we breathe and help the economy at the same time," Mauro said at a news conference with labor, business, environmental and health groups.

Under clean air legislation, at least 1 million vehicles in Texas will run on natural gas in the next 10 years, Mauro said. State agencies and school districts will lead the way because of laws requiring conversion of fleet vehicles to natural gas.

GM could corner this market because it has already started to make some natural gas-powered pickup trucks, Mauro said.

The broad-based coalition, called Clean Air Texas, urged GM to start production of alternative fuel vehicles at the Arlington plant.

Last month, GM officials said they would close either the Arlington plant or a similar one in Ypsilanti, Mich., as part of a restructuring that will also close 20 smaller plants and eliminate 74,000 jobs.

The Arlington and Willow Run plant in Ypsilanti assemble large, rear wheel-drive cars, like the Chevrolet Caprice, Buick Roadmaster and Cadillac Brougham. GM is expected to decide by April which plant to close.

The company has suffered staggering losses, about $15 million daily.

Since GM's announcement, state officials have been trying to lobby the automaker to keep Arlington open.

"This is a full statewide press to save this plant," said Cathy Bonner, executive director of the Texas Department of Commerce.

Environmentalists, auto dealer representatives, and industry officials said the move to natural gas makes economic sense and helps reduce air-pollution.

Natural gas costs less than gasoline or diesel and is cleaner burning.

GM has announced it would build some natural gas vehicles, but because of the limited production, the autos will cost about $3,500 more than standard vehicles, Mauro said.

But Mauro said that if the natural gas vehicles were mass produced, the difference in price could be reduced to under $1,000, and motorists would actually save money in fuel costs and maintenance over the life of the vehicle.

Bill Wolters, executive vice president of the Texas Automobile Dealers Association, said some American consumers have become more environmentally conscious and would opt to pay more up front for a cleaner-burning fuel car.

"The American consumer can change on a dime," he said.

'Car Talk' hosts see little future in selling Japan American cars

By Elinor Mills
Associated Press writer

BOSTON — Click and Clack, hosts of the national "Car Talk" radio show, believe Americans will be able to sell a lot of cars in Japan — when they come up with a way to put 10 pounds in a 5-pound bag.

"We have no business trying to sell them cars. They have no use for our cars because they don't even fit on their roads. They're too big," said Ray Magliozzi, who teams with fellow mechanic-philosopher-brother Tom on the popular National Public Radio show.

Ray, 42, runs the Good News Garage the two started in 1973. The brothers have been offering advice to troubled car owners for about 16 years. Their show has been on NPR since 1987 and they have a syndicated column in 125 newspapers.

During an interview Sunday, Ray said he can't understand why Americans would try to sell cars to Japan.

"We need to sell them things which they don't have. Real estate. California. I think we should try to sell them California. I mean it's going to fall into the damn ocean anyway. Let's sell it to them and they'll get stiffed," he said.

Tom concurred.

"You can fit a small thing in a big space, but you can't fit a big thing in a small space," he said.

The brothers said there have been improvements in American cars. They cited the Chevrolet Lumina and the Ford Club Wagon. But would any Japanese person buy one?

"Of course not! It's three times as big as his house. So how can he buy a Ford Club Wagon unless he wants to live in it. That's it! We're selling the wrong things. We ought to be selling houses," said Tom, 54.

"They would buy the Saturn. It's the right size. It's the right quality. It's the right kind of car. The steering wheel's on the wrong side, but other than that, maybe we could convince them to drive the other way," he said of the GM car.

President Bush completed a trade mission to Japan last week. Japanese negotiators set a target of selling 20,000 more U.S.-made cars in their country and of buying $19 billion a year in auto parts from U.S. manufacturers by 1994.

Late payment

Pedestrians walk outside New York's Macy's at 34th Street and Broadway Monday. Macy & Co. is telling its suppliers that it will be two weeks late paying them — another financial setback for the heavily indebted store. The 133-year-old retailer, which lost $155 million for the quarter that ended Nov. 2, owes more than $3.5 billion to a collection of bankers, trade creditors and other lenders.

Negotiators resume GATT trade talks

GENEVA (AP) — Leading economic powers on Monday expressed unhappiness with key parts of a proposed deal to liberalize world trade, casting doubt on whether the agreement will be ready by the April 17 target date.

Representatives of the United States, European Community and Japan stressed they did not want to undo a compromise package put forward by Arthur Dunkel, director-general of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

But a U.S. representative accused Brussels and Tokyo of seeking to reopen negotiations on agriculture, thus slowing the agreement.

In Kansas City, President Bush stressed the United States would reject any deal that did not lead to big cuts in farm subsidies. The Europeans, anxious to protect their small farmers, have resisted sweeping reductions.

At a meeting attended by the 108 nations taking part in the Uruguay Round of trade talks, Canada, South Korea, Scandinavian and many developing nations also expressed serious concern at the proposed GATT package.

Dunkel issued the 436-page document last month. It proposes cutting import barriers in historically protected areas like agriculture and textiles, and new rules to liberalize trade in commercial services and cut abuse of patents and copyright.

Dunkel told the meeting of GATT's top level Trade Negotiations Committee that compromise proposals in sensitive areas were based on "the most informed and conscientious evaluation of the level of consensus achievable."

"I have no new — or better — solutions to offer on my own," he said.

He urged countries to complete talks on the details of a target 30 percent tariff cut for goods and initial offers to improve market access for services like banking and insurance.

These were not covered in December's draft accord, and are critical to determining whether countries are prepared to accept the final Uruguay Round deal.

U.S. envoy Rufus Yerxa told the meeting that the draft accord contained "basic ingredients for finalizing" the talks. But he said it did not go far enough in reducing barriers or providing remedies against unfair trading practices.

Washington wanted bigger reductions in farm supports, particularly export subsidies. Dunkel proposed that budgetary spending on export subsidies should be cut by 36 percent and the actual tonnage of subsidized farm produce by 24 percent between 1993 and 1999.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Bank's procedure costs customer interest

By Bill Doyle

Q. Recently, when a $100,000 certificate of deposit I had was due to mature, I went to the bank early in the morning a day before the CD's maturity date — a Friday. I signed papers to have to the $100,000 placed in a money market deposit account on that Friday the CD matured.

Doyle

Upon receiving a statement on the new money market deposit account, I noticed the bank had dated this account the following Monday — three days later than the CD's maturity. As a result, I lost three days' interest.

When a bank officer was confronted with this proof of improper bookkeeping, he admitted this was the way his bank handles Friday deposits. In my opinion, the bank people took advantage of the weekend to steal a depositor's money.

How much leeway does a bank have in starting to pay interest on deposits?

A. Quite a bit, depending on the individual bank's policies. On deposits made late in the day, many banks credit the money and begin paying interest the following business day.

However, because you arranged to put the $100,000 in the money market deposit account well before noon, that bank really gave you a hosing by delaying the opening of your new account until the following Monday.

It's time for you to confront the bankers again and insist that the new account be counted as opened on that Friday — and interest be credited beginning that day. Because it's obvious you are a good customer and should be counted as a valued client the bank doesn't want to lose, a threat of taking your business elsewhere should get things squared away.

Banks have all kinds of gimmicks available for beating customers out of various amounts of cash.

Much of this should change as a result of legislation passed by Congress last November. A detailed provision in that banking bill, tabbed the "Truth-in-Savings Act," sets new ground rules for depository institutions.

Among other things, the complicated ways different banks credit and compound interest will be simplified. More important, bank advertising will be less misleading.

However, it will be a while before the new law takes effect. The rules have to be ironed out by the Federal Reserve Board and published. That could take months.

Q. When shopping for a high-rate CD, I ran into a bank quoting the highest interest. But, upon further review, I was told I must open and maintain a checking account, with an $800 minimum balance, buy the checks and pay a monthly service charge.

I would classify that as a tie-in sale and tie-in sales are illegal in the business in which I worked before retirement. Aren't banks required to adhere to the law nowadays?

A. Banks must adhere to many laws. Ask any banker about that and he or she will complain about being overregulated.

However, nothing prevents a bank from insisting you have another account in order to obtain a high-rate CD. It's unlikely the new Truth-in-Savings Act will prohibit that — as long as the details are fully revealed, up front.

One specific part of that legislation will prevent banks from advertising "free" checking if there are any charges, such as paying for checks and/or service charges.

Q. All three banks at which I shopped for high-rate CDs phoned other banks and asked what interest they were quoting. Isn't that restraint of trade?

A. That's the wrong description. You could call it collusion and be correct. But checking competitors' prices doesn't fracture any federal, state or local statutes. Count it as normal business practice. Assuming you obtained a CD with the highest interest rate offered by one of those three banks, be happy.

WHAT! NEWSPAPER ROUTES?

That's right...one of the best part-time income supplements around. Doesn't conflict with your 'day job.' Doesn't require day care. And it's dependable income.

Fact: 90% of our Distributors NOW are ADULTS supplementing their income with Route Distributorships!

Fact: Our Distributors make from $300-$800 monthly AFTER expenses, some even more!

The catch? You've gotta be able to handle early mornings and weekends! And when you take a few days off, you'll need to find a substitute for yourself.

So...are you serious about MOONLIGHTING, or what? If you are, and you have dependabletransportation and can put up a $100 deposit...

Call 688-2700 and start making that extra car payment today!
