Window-washer injured in fall from bank tower

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A Midland window-washer who plunged 15 stories about 1:45 p.m. Saturday after his nylon rope snapped on the northwest side of The First National Bank building in downtown Midland was in "very critical" condition late Saturday in Odessa's Medical Center Hospital.

The man, Douglas Keith "Doug" Edmunds, 42, of 900 Howard Drive, suffered severe head injuries, broken arms and back injuries. He was in the hospital's intensive care unit.

His fall, which came as a "blur" to witness Robert Strack, 22, was broken about five feet from the ground apparently by either a safety-belt line or by a tangling up of ropes, Strack speculated.

Another witness, taxi driver Sherrie Dorsey, 23, said she was stopped at a red light a Wall Avenue and Big Spring Street when she saw the fall. Initially, she said said thought it was unusual to see a man alone that high outside the bank tower.

"He was about at the 15th floor when I saw him," she said.

She and Strack rushed over to help Edmunds.

"I just knew he was dead," she said. "I just can't believe he's alive. If he lives, it's going to be a miracle....

"Nobody knows what happened up there," Miss Dorsey said, "nobody but him."

Strack said he first noticed Edmunds fall at about the fifth floor of the 24-story bank. "I didn't actually see the rope break."

Edmunds was falling face down, said Strack, who said he did not hear any screams.

"He looked like he was trying to break his fall," said Strack, who was driving westward on Wall Avenue with his girlfriend when he saw Edmunds fall. Strack immediately stopped his car and ran over to unhook the man from the rope.

"He was really falling fast," Strack said. "It happened so fast, it was kind of like a blur."

Strack and another passer-by lowered Edmunds to the ground. The taxi driver, Ms. Dorsey radioed her dispatcher, who in turn called for an ambulance.

"We lifted him up, unhooked his safety belt, and put a blanket on him," Strack said. "We thought he was dead at first."

Strack theorized that Edmunds' injuries would have been relatively minor had his head not struck the side of a thick concrete-and-pebble planter at the base of the elevator housing of the bank building.

"He was hooked up to a safety line," said Strack. "He wouldn't have hit anything if the concrete planter were not there."

Strack said the rope, which was attached to the top of the building, appeared to be "some old rope and just snapped."

"He's definitely lucky to be alive."

Israel, PLO begin new cease fire in Lebanon

By The Associated Press

Israel and the PLO ceased fire in Lebanon Saturday night after another round of fierce Israeli air, sea and land attacks left 200 reported dead in Beirut — and a little more than a day after a truce between Israeli and Syrian troops took effect.

Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization said in separate statements that their cease-fire would begin at 9 p.m. (3 p.m. EDT) after a week of savage fighting, but Israel warned that if the guerrillas continued their attacks "we will feel free to react with all our might."

More than a half-hour after the cease-fire was announced, the guns fell silent in the Lebanese capital. It was the first indication of peace between Israel and the guerrillas since June 4 when Israeli jets blasted PLO strongholds in Beirut after an assassination attempt on Israel's ambassador in London.

On June 6 Israeli ground forces invaded Lebanon and still hold about a quarter of it.

The PLO said it ceased fire in accordance with U.N. resolutions that also call for an Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon. Reliable Lebanese sources said the truce was worked out in intensive telephone contacts involving Saudi Crown Prince Fahd, President Reagan and PLO chief Yasser Arafat.

But Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir told Israel Television that Israel had "decided to make an experiment, not as a result of the intervention of outsiders. It was our initiative. We decided to make another attempt, and if the terrorists cease their fire, then firing will cease."

On the question of Israel's withdrawal from Lebanon, Shamir said, "I cannot imagine that there will be a withdrawal before we crystallize the principles of the settlement and we obtain the goals that we set ourselves at the start of the operation."

Israel's overall goal, he said, was to "arrive at a situation in which Lebanese territory will no longer serve as a base for terrorist action. How to arrive at that? That's to be negotiated."

The Israeli Foreign Ministry announcement of the new truce said:

"On June 11 the Israel Defense Forces were instructed to cease fire as of noon. In spite of the cease-fire on our part the terrorists continued to fire on our troops from that time to this very moment. Nevertheless, we have decided to make a new attempt at a cease-fire effective as of 9 o'clock tonight, and the Israel Defense Forces have been instructed accordingly.

"If the terrorists, in spite of this, continue their attacks, we will feel free to react with all our might."

Before the truce was scheduled to take effect, Israeli forces pounded Palestinian guerrillas entrenched around Beirut airport from land, sea and air, and there were reports of 200 Lebanese dead.

Two rockets also struck the official residence of Lebanese President Elias Sarkis in the Beirut suburb of Baabda, causing extensive damage, the Lebanese state radio reported.

The broadcast said Sarkis had conferred in the palace two hours earlier with U.S. Ambassador Robert Dillon, but both men had left the building when the rockets struck.

British troops launch surprise attack on Argentine positions

By The Associated Press

British commandos and infantrymen, covered by air and naval bombardment, overran Argentine positions 12 miles west of Stanley in a surprise attack before dawn Saturday and battled to within seven miles of the Falklands capital, British officials announced.

The Argentine Joint Chiefs of Staff reported "heavy fighting is in progress." It said Argentine warplanes attacked a British frigate that "was bombarding the civilian population" of Stanley and left the ship "out of action and abandoned by its crew." British officials said they had no knowledge of a frigate being hit.

It was the first claim of a hit on a British ship since Tuesday, when jets fighters struck a frigate and two landing ships in the bloodiest blow against Britain since the undeclared war began April 2 with the Argentine occupation of the islands. Senior British officials have said 60 soldiers and sailors were killed and 120 were wounded in that devastating raid at Port Fitzroy 15 miles southwest of Stanley.

Argentina's official Telam news agency said heavy casualties were anticipated on both sides in the battle for besieged Stanley, which also involves artillery, fighter-bombers and helicopter gunships. It said dug-in Argentine troopers were "trying to halt" the British assault that marked the beginning of their major offensive to retake the Falklands.

An earlier Argentine communique said that among the casualties of the British naval bombardment were six Falkland civilians — two women killed and two women and two men wounded.

British Defense Minister John Nott, who came to the Defense Ministry in London smiling broadly from the Royal Navy command headquarters at Northwood, north of London, said Britain's commander in chief, Adm. Sir John Fieldhouse, considered the operation a "brilliant surprise night attack."

Nott said most of the Argentine defenders were asleep and "first knew of the attack when our infantry appeared among them. Thereafter there was hard fighting before their positions were taken."

Incest: Like child abuse, it's a crime that knows no boundaries

By HALLYE JORDAN

Incest. It is a topic not often discussed in our society. A family's dark secret; the last taboo.

Reports of cases of incest are increasing across the country. Incestuous relationships have resulted in grief, guilt, depression and mental anxiety for members of families from all aspects of the American society.

"Like child abuse, incest knows no social, economic or cultural boundaries," Dr. David A. Koch, Midland clinical psychologist, said. "There is no way to pin down the income or the education (of families in which incest occurs). I've seen it in the most affluent and the most impoverished. It occurs in families where other criminal violations have taken place, and it occurs in families that are the pillars of the community."

IT OCCURS IN Midland County and it is increasing. According to Tom Ellison, case worker in the child welfare division of the Texas Department of Human Resources, a minimum of one case of incest is referred to him per month.

"But I've already had two this month," he added.

Ellison and Koch, who work together on a weekly basis, agreed that although many cases of incest go unreported, those referrals that do filter in are more and more frequent.

"I think we're getting more of an increase (in reports of incest) with the population," Ellison explained. "We're just getting more and more different people in the area."

Koch agreed, but added that an increase in public awareness of the crime also has contributed to an increase in the number of cases reported.

"I think that people are more aware of the problem and begin to refer it more," he said. "Or it could be due to a genuine increase in the severity of the problem." He added that reports and studies show that sex crimes in general are on the increase due to a large amount of available pornography.

WHILE THE MOST frequent types of incestuous activities are believed to be between siblings, studies indicate these types of relations are not reported because of the innocent

The real nuclear villain

NEW YORK — After an exhausting but exhilarating journey to Western Europe, President Reagan barely had time this weekend back at the White House to prepare an address to the U.N. Wednesday on disarmament and nuclear reduction. In Europe he proved that he was not a gunslinging cowboy. His crusade for peace defused criticism and was hailed by, among others, Pope John Paul II, Queen Elizabeth II of the United Kingdom, British Prime Minister Mrs. Margaret Thatcher, West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and all 16 state leaders who heard our president at the annual late spring meeting held in Bonn.

The biggest fly in the ointment has been the Soviet Union, which has rejected every single U.S. proposal for international control going back to 1946, when we had a total monopoly. Their collective "nyet" culminated most recently in a wishy-washy defen-

Labor Department closes file on carpenter's allegations

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

The U.S. Labor Department has closed its files on misuse of union money allegations lodged against Midland Carpenters Local 1428.

The complaints were made by Frank Holdampf, a journeyman carpenter from Garden City who was expelled from the union for not paying a $449 fine imposed on him for alleged strike-rule violations during a four-day walkout last summer.

In addition, the National Labor Relations Board has denied Holdampf's appeal of its earlier decision not to take action against the union for expelling him.

The NLRB's original decision and subsequent denial of his appeal were based on Holdampf's alleged failure to first appeal the fine through the Washington, D.C., office of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, as provided for in union by-laws.

On the question of financial impropriety, a Labor Department audit last month was limited to union fiduciary dealings during 1980 and disclosed three relatively minor deficiencies in the local's books, according to government findings received by Jim Purcell, business agent for the Midland local:

Pot flourishes among pines

By BILL MINTZ
Houston Chronicle

LIVINGSTON, Texas (AP) — The rich soil that made timber king in the East Texas piney woods is nurturing another lucrative cash crop — marijuana.

The weed springs up among pine saplings planted by paper companies. It snuggles next to watermelon and corn in local gardens. It flourishes in national forests and along river banks.

Law enforcement officials say that cultivation is too widespread and their manpower too thin to stop it.

"You could spend your whole life looking for it," says Sgt. Matt Wingo of the Brazoria County sheriff's department. "It would be a waste of the taxpayers' money. But I've done a fair amount of harvesting for people. I pull it up and leave a calling card."

The U.S. Forest Service reports that only $50,000 worth of marijuana was found in Texas national forests in 1981, but state law enforcement officials say that's only a fraction of what is there.

"We've got good, fertile soil, the climate is good and, face it, Texas is a big state," said Larry Todd, spokesman for the Department of Public Safety.

It is almost impossible to make a case against marijuana growers, officials say. Todd says he know of no convictions under the state's tough drug distribution laws aimed at people cultivating a commercial amount of marijuana.

"You have to catch them in there working with the plants," said Rick Voelker, a Polk County deputy. "You can't make a case if someone is just driving away from the field."

His boss, Sheriff Ted Everitt, says it's rare that he even tries for felony charges.

"Basically, we go in and pull it up," said Polk County Sheriff Ted L. Everitt, whose officers last year raided a field of plants that filled 18 dump trucks. "We don't have the manpower to sit out there and wait for somebody."

Three men have been charged in a November raid which gathered more than a ton of marijuana from a 48-acre farm in Bastrop County — the biggest case in which felony charges have been filed. District Attorney Neil Pfeiffer said no trial date has been set.

East Texas cultivators can get away with making few visits to their fields, planting their seeds in wind rows and letting the rains and sunshine do the rest.

"Sometimes, they will come out and top off the plants to get enough to tide themselves over until they harvest it," Polk County Deputy R.L. Edmonds said.

Houston's 'new' police chief still perceives 'distrust'

HOUSTON (AP) — Nearly two months after he left a high-profile job in Atlanta to become Houston's first black police chief, Lee Brown still finds himself regarded suspiciously as an outsider.

But Brown says he has met similar distrust elsewhere in his law enforcement career and predicts it will wear off as he gets down to the business of cleansing what many say is the sullied reputation of the Houston department.

Brown, who as public safety commissioner in Atlanta headed the investigation that solved a series of killings of young blacks, inherited a department in Houston accused of brutality and disrupted by morale problems. When he took over April 19, he was the third chief in four months.

The black criminologist, son of a migrant laborer, now leads a white-dominated department where previously no black had ever risen above the rank of sergeant.

A series of controversies have rocked the force in recent years, including allegations of civil rights violations against officers in two 1977 incidents. That May, Jose Campos Torres drowned while in police custody and a month later, Randall Wayne Webster was fatally shot after a police chase. The Webster case involved a gun which, it was learned later, came from the police property room.

Earlier this year, 13 officers were suspended for allegedly harassing residents in an apartment complex.

"Houston has the foundation to become a good police department, but that's not its image locally or nationally," Brown said. "The vast majority of publicity comes from isolated incidents.

"That is completely understandable. But it doesn't warrant characterizing an entire police department. Houston is not a case where you have a barrel of bad apples. The vast majority of officers do not condone some of the events which have occurred that have created the negative image of the department."

Why did he leave Atlanta? Brown acknowledges he has asked himself that same question.

"There was no reason to leave," Brown said. "It is a good city and we had successfully addressed many of the problems that confronted us when we first went there."

At first, Brown said, he resisted the overtures of the mayor's selection committee. "As I reflected on it, I made the decision to come because it did present a professional challenge."

Despite all the obstacles, there appears to be no doubt in the mind of this self-assured, 6-foot-2 former college football player that he will get the job done.

"I've had certain training and certain experiences that I suspect made me uniquely suited to come to Houston for the problems here," Brown said.

For one thing, he said, he is not offended by being called an outsider. Brown stepped into similar situations as the first black sheriff of Multnomah County, Ore., and again in Atlanta.

"Once the newness of it wears off I anticipate that the business of policing is what will prevail," Brown said.

Despite the problems here, Browns feels he may have already faced his biggest challenge by directing the investigation into the murders in Atlanta.

Morin wants to waive right to appeal death sentence

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A state district judge says he has no authority to rule on Stephen Peter Morin's request to waive an automatic appeal of his death sentence.

Judge David Berchelmann told the convicted capital murderer Friday he must take up the matter with the courts to which the sentence will be appealed.

Morin was sentenced to death by lethal injection for the fatal shooting of Carrie Marie Scott in a San Antonio restaurant parking lot. He also is accused of four other slayings in three states.

"I don't feel that it's right to be bounced around back and forth," Morin told Berchelmann. "I've been convicted and I've accepted the court's ruling and I'm willing to proceed."

When Morin's lawyer, Pete Torres, asked his client if he recognized the consequences of waiving his appeal, Morin replied, "I accepted those consequences when I pleaded guilty."

The exchange came during a hering in which Berchelmann denied a motion for a new trial for Morin, whose attorneys claimed the judge made 13 errors that denied their client a fair trial.

Unreported income a problem along Texas-Mexico border

By STEVE BREWER

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Across the country, government officials and economists are bemoaning the "underground economy" — dealings done strictly in cash without the complications of income tax or proper records.

Probably nowhere is the problem as serious as along the U.S.-Mexico border, haven for illegal aliens and smugglers of all kinds.

"I suspect that here in El Paso is probably one of the worst places in the country in terms of unreported cash transactions," said El Paso marketing analyst Tom Lee.

Such transactions nationwide recently have captured the imagination of lawmakers in Washington, who see stiffer enforcement as a way to alleviate the government's budget problems.

Internal Revenue Service Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. told the House Ways and Means Committee in May that the "gap" between the amount of taxes that should be collected and the amount that actually is collected has tripled in the past eight years and still is growing.

The gap is divided into two parts — the so-called legal and illegal sectors. Violations in the legal sector include people who don't report to the IRS all or part of their income from jobs, tips and moonlighting. It also includes small businessmen and professionals who skim cash off their earnings before reporting them to the IRS.

The illegal sector is money from criminal activities such as gambling, smuggling, drug trafficking and prostitution.

Egger told the committee that the estimated tax loss in the legal sector rose from $29 billion in 1973 to $87 billion in 1981. That number is expected to rise to nearly $120 billion by 1985, he said.

The loss in the illegal sector rose from $2.5 billion in 1973 to $8 billion in 1981 and is expected to reach $13 billion by 1985, he said.

Those numbers all are estimates because not even the IRS knows how much money changes hands unrecorded and unreported.

"When you are depending on voluntary compliance, you're going to have some cheating," said Bob Branson, public affairs officer in the IRS' Austin office. "It does exist and the numbers are big."

Although the IRS doesn't know how big, there are indications that the cash economy may be bigger in Texas and along the Mexican border.

Lee said he sees more and more evidence of Texans taking cash payments for their services "rather than let inflation push them into another tax bracket.

"This is almost a foolproof way of cheating," he said. "The typical guy who is skimming a couple thousand dollars a year isn't likely to get caught."

Clements gets triple endorsement

AUSTIN — Three former Texas governors — Allan Shivers, Preston Smith and John Connally — are endorsing Gov. Bill Clements' bid for re-election and will attend the Victory '82 dinner for the governor next week in Houston.

The former governors will join President Ronald Reagan and Vice President George Bush at the fundraising dinner Tuesday at the Albert Thomas Convention Center in Houston.

"Gov. Clements' hard work and the fact that his administration has been one of upmost integrity should alert all Texans that we need Bill Clements for another four years," Shivers said. "I expect Bill Clements will be recognized as one of the greatest leaders this state has ever had."

Connally said, "The vision shown by Bill Clements in his first term is essential for Texas. Because of our current growth patterns, long-range planning is absolutely imperative as we move toward the year 2000."

In his endorsement of Clements, Smith said, "He deserves another four years in office to continue the important programs which he has begun. It matters not whether people have traditionally voted Democratic. We need Clements. I am convinced his second term will show even more progress for our state."

Clements said, "I am honored to have the endorsements of Govs. Shivers, Smith and Connally. We share a bond in our belief in the Texas tradition of independent conservative government. I cannot remember in my lifetime when three former governors have banded together to enthusiastically support a gubernatorial candidate and I'm grateful to them."

The Tuesday night dinner is the primary fundraiser for Clements' campaign. It is being organized by Walter Mischer, Houston businessman and longtime leader in Texas political activities. Vice-chairman for the dinner is Robert H. Dedman of Dallas.

GOP theory expressed

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements told Republican county chairman Saturday it's OK for them to have "pet candidates" down the ballot — but they better remember that no other statewide GOP candidates can win in November if Clements is not re-elected.

"I've got to win big in order to help these other candidates in. That's a fact of life," Clements said.

Clements' theory drew agreement from Euless Sen. Bill Meier, the Republican candidate for attorney general. Serving as what Clements called his "amen corner," Meier rose and said, "Yes sir, governor" when Clements several times asked if he agreed.

The governor said the 1982 GOP ticket of statewide candidates is the party's strongest ever. However, he warned that a small margin of victory — such as the edge that gave him the 1978 win over Democrat John Hill — won't be enough to carry in Republican candidates for other, state jobs.

"As a sitting governor I have to win for our other candidates to have a reasonable chance and opportunity to also win. You agree with that, Bill?" He asked Meier.

"Yes sir, governor," replied Meier.

Incest reports becoming more frequent

nature in which they are usually associated. According to various reports, brother-sister contact, such as "playing doctor," is typically considered as a healthy and experimental type of sexual curiosity. Another reason brother-sister relationships usually are waved off as innocent is due to the similarities in age. However, in cases involving an older brother and a younger sister, the attitude changes.

"Exploitation is the key word," Koch said. "It makes the viewing of it different. Younger children can't really assert themselves or take care of themselves."

"When an older relative says to do something, you do it," Ellison agreed.

Incestuous relationships between mother and son, although believed to occur, are believed to be extremely rare. The largest number of cases of incest reported concern father-daughter relationships.

Studies show that most women who were sexually abused said they were first engaged in incestuous relationships with their fathers at a very early age, usually around 6, 7 or 8. Ellison said he has received reports on sexual abuse of children from the ages of 2 to 17.

INCEST IS viewed as multi-causal and caused by many determinants," Koch said. "Usually incest is a symptom of some other type of pathology within the family or the individual."

The major problem from which incest stems concerns the expression of the sexual drive, Koch said. The causes he said he has seen and read about usually include dissatisfaction with the marital arrangement, a lack of intimacy between spouses, a lack of sharing and a lack of trust.

"Another dynamic is that parents tend to be protective of their own rights over their child," Koch explained. "Their child is viewed as a possession."

Still another common factor of families with incestuous relationships is the need for a child to fulfill a specific role in a family that is being unfulfilled.

According to several magazine articles, many accounts of incest were reported in families where the mother was passive or frequently away from home. According to these articles, an older daughter often was forced to take over the traditional roles of her mother in such chores as cooking, cleaning and taking care of younger children. Koch explained that the father often looks at the daughter as another source of dependency, not only for those activities, but also as a sexual partner.

THE DAUGHTER WHO goes along with the relationship with her father often does so out of fear, guilt and embarrassment, Koch said. However, one of the most harmful aspects of the situation is when the victim, as she grows older, begins to "fight back in an unhealthy way.

"One of the patterns is the daughter emerges into adolescence and finds out she has gained a lot of control over her father. She often uses the relationship as a way to gain more freedom, material things or rights within the family. She can threaten him with 'If you don't give me this, I'll tell mother or I'll tell the police.' Sexual abuse of a child is a felony.

"'He who exploits is also exploitable,'" Koch quoted. "I've seen a 14-year-old girl put her father in and out of jail by telling on him. That's a fairly dramatic example but it does happen."

The results of such a counter-attack as that can be extremely destructive, he added. "It is an unhealthy indication to the daughter to live her life by the sexual manipulation of males."

While most women wish to end an incestuous relationship between their husband and their daughter, Ellison said that many do not know how to take the necessary steps, such as confronting the spouse, seeking family counseling or even notifying law enforcement officials.

"MOST OF THE cases that I've been out to involved spouses who denied it (an incestuous relationship) was happening in their families, but I know that at least 75 percent of them and other members of the family knew," Ellison said. "In some situations, the father is out of work and the mother supports the family. It could happen in the daytime while she is at work, and she could be completely unaware of it. But most of the time she knows."

Ellison said that embarrassment may prevent her from seeking help for her family or a fear of what her husband may do to her keeps her from confronting him about his relationship with their daughter. In many cases where the father is the breadwinner she may be afraid of leaving him because of her financial dependence, he added.

"Incest is such a taboo in our society that many times there is an unconscious support of an incestuous relationship," Koch agreed. "There is often a lot of repression, denial and internal struggles for the wife.

"Usually, the relationship goes on until something happens that will bring it into focus," he continued. "If the daughter makes a threat to leave home, starts failing in school, or something like that, that is usually symbolic that something is going on. There are any number of signals that may lead the mother into finding out."

Embarrassment is a major factor which usually prevents the mother from admitting to such a relationship in her family. "The fear of what an investigation can produce is part of the dynamics of keeping this a family secret," Koch said.

ACCORDING TO Kee MacFarlane, a social worker and analyst with the National Center on Child Abuse, in the February 1980 issue of Teen magazine, "Incest is a felony and is dealt with in the criminal courts. Juvenile court protections for the victims, such as keeping their names out of the newspapers, don't apply. If convicted, the aggressor can get up to 50 years in prison.

"The crucial issue," Ms. MacFarlane continued, "is that the process of trying the father and dragging the child through the court can be even more harmful than the incest itself."

A study done by Lorna and Philip Sarrel, co-directors of the Sex Counseling Program at Yale University, printed in the November 1980 issue of Redbook, stated: "Ironically, the trauma for the child will often be much greater when and if there is public disclosure and particularly if legal action is taken. The shame and the conflict of loyalties involved in public disclosure produces an intense emotional reaction. And the very remedies for incest — removal of the child from the home or imprisonment of the father — often add trauma to trauma."

Ellison agreed, "The act in itself isn't that bad but the emotional aspect is damaging."

ELLISON SAID that most of the reports from victims come when the child is at the junior high school age. "That's when kids start talking about sex and they find out that the 'games' they've been playing with Dad aren't normal," Ellison said. He added that many referrals come from friends of the victims in whom they have confided.

Upon receiving a report, Ellison said the Department of Human Resources goes out and investigates the case. If it is determined as a definite sexual abuse of a child, the case is turned over to the county sheriff's department.

"The only thing we can do is look out for the child. Sometimes we don't have to remove the children from the home. If it's not necessary, and the family is willing to work with us, then we don't remove them. Our primary responsibility is to work with that family. Only as a last result, do we terminate (their parental rights)."

Ellison said the Midland County Sheriff's Department is cooperative in dealing with incest cases. Koch agreed, adding, "By law we're obliged to report child abuse — everyone is. But when a family has voluntarily come in for therapy, there usually is no need to press criminal charges. The family's motivation is very strong; they are attempting to maintain their family and to improve their family life.

"For many victims of incest, the actual display of the problem won't begin until later. Then they may become overly promiscuous or extremely withdrawn," Koch continued. "The most omnious thing about it is the daughter is left with a generalization about men. If you can't trust your own father, who can you trust?

"Those victims that do resolve it and really understand the problem through therapy can enter into a healthy relationship with a spouse of their own."

Labor Department closes file on union allegations not included in the (local's 1980 financial) report. Specifically, transactions involving the Building Fund and the Death Benefit Fund were omitted.

"Certificates of Deposit were improperly reported as an Investment, rather than as Cash in Bank.

"The (financial report due the government annually) for calendar year 1981 has not been filed. The report is due in this office (Dallas) within 90 days of the end of the organization's fiscal year."

The required corrections have been made and the Labor Department will not pursue the matter any further. Purcell provided The Reporter-Telegram with a copy of the agency's findings.

Purcell also produced a copy of his notification that Holdampf's appeal had been denied on grounds that he failed to follow union procedures for appealing his expulsion internally before taking the matter to the NLRB.

Holdampf had 60 days to appeal the $449 fine and maintains he complied with procedure by requesting an appeal hearing in an Oct. 29 letter to union President William Konya in Washington. No record of such a request could be found, however, and Holdampf was ultimately expelled.

After Holdampf's allegations surfaced publically last month, Purcell asked the Washington office to recheck its records. In return correspondence dated May 14, Purcell was told by the union's General Counsel William A. McGowan:

"We have again checked our records and find that Mr. Holdampf never filed an appeal with this office under the Constitution and Laws of the United Brotherhood.

"You will note on the attached sheet that the NLRB specifically takes note of the fact that, after investigating the matter, his failure to file an appeal resulted in his expulsion from the union."

In a statement to The Reporter-Telegram, Purcell said:

"It is Holdampf's own inability to follow the proper procedures established by the International Union that has caused him these problems. Every organization, no matter how big or small, has its radicals and troublemakers. Holdampf has proved himself to be of this nature."

Although the investigations clear the union of wrongdoing, Holdampf contends the union and the government are in collusion.

He also insists his allegations of union corruption are true and says he's in the process of taking the only action left open to him: a labor racketeering suit to be brought shortly in federal court.

Only 20 percent chance of rain predicted

Once again, the weatherman is tossing out 5-to-1 odds against rainfall by forecasting only a 20 percent change of thunderstorms today, tonight and Monday.

Along with the probability of rain will be the accompanying partly cloudy skies and southeasterly winds clipping along at 10 to 20 mph, according to the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Today's high temperature is to be near 90. Tonight's low is to be in the mid-60s. Monday's high is to be near 90.

Saturday's high temperature reading was 83 degrees, which made a poor showing if it was going after the record high of 104 degrees for the date in 1947. The overnight low of 62 degrees made a better go at trying to break the record low of 57 degrees for the date in 1979.

Sunset today will be at 8:55 p.m. Sunrise Monday will be at 6:42 a.m.

Pope ends hurried visit to Argentina

By DENNIS REDMONT

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Saturday ended his hurried visit here by leading 2 million Argentines in a prayer for peace and urging Latin America's Roman Catholic leaders to speak out against "hatred and discord."

The pope celebrated his second open-air Mass of the whirlwind tour in front of a 60-foot cross in Buenos Aires' Palermo Park. Later in the day, he boarded an Argentine jetliner and flew to Rome, ending a visit the Vatican had said was an evangelical mission to "counter-balance" the pope's trip to Britain last month.

The visit here was marred by reports of renewed fighting on the Falkland Islands and by the death in a freak accident Friday of a woman, Maria Arias, who police said was run over by a locomotive that preceded the papal train as it returned from Lujan, site of Argentina's holiest shrine. Authorities had earlier said she threw herself in front of the train, but later retracted the statement.

Police estimated 2 million Argentines jammed the park in a posh district of the capital for the open-air Mass Saturday, waving banners in the blue-and-white national colors and gold-and-white papal flags.

The three members of Argentina's ruling military junta joined in shouting "Viva" to the pope that were followed by cries of "Viva la Patria," Spanish for "long live the fatherland."

"Do not allow hatred to rot your generous energies and the capacity for agreement which you all carry inside you," the pope told the crowd in a homily that he reportedly strengthened overnight to include the plea for peace. "Join hands in a chain of union stronger than the chains of war."

The Spanish word for "peace" was seen everywhere — on banners, posters and lapel pins.

"We've come to pray with the pope for a just and sovereign peace and for the fatherland," said veterinarian Horacio Mehura who brought his wife and children from the coastal city of Mar del Plata about 250 miles to the south.

But just as television cameras showed Argentine President Leopoldo Galtieri in his pew, nationwide broadcasts were interrupted.

A Joint Chiefs of Staff announcement followed, saying heavy fighting had broken out between British forces and Argentine defenders at Stanley, the Falklands capital that Argentina renamed Puerto Argentino. The islands are known here as the Malvinas.

Pope John Paul apparently was unaware of the combat reports as he went through a busy morning of ceremonies in the capital, smiling broadly and blessing cheering crowds in the mild sunshine.

In an address to over 120 Latin American Roman Catholic leaders who gathered in Buenos Aires, the pontiff urged the prelates to act as "heralds and ministers of reconciliation," but to avoid politics.

He told the assembled clergy to pray "for a peaceful and stable solution to the present conflict."

The pope said his visit to Argentina, where the Roman Catholic Church is state-supported, should not be interpreted "in political terms that would steer it away from its purely evangelical meaning."

Two die in mid-air collision

CORONA, Calif. (AP) — Two small planes apparently collided in flight near Corona Airport on Saturday, sending wreckage falling into an uninhabited field and killing two people on board, authorities said.

"It looks like a mid-air (collision) right now," police Sgt. David Sparkman said.

Jerry Marcum, duty officer at the Federal Aviation Administration's flight service station in Ontario, said police told him there were two fatalities.

The collision occurred shortly before 1 p.m. a few miles east of Corona airport, or about 50 miles east of Los Angeles, officials said.

Editor's Report

to agree that the U.S. and U.S.S.R. start negotiations in Geneva June 29. President Reagan's graceful speech to the British Parliament put the ball right in Russia's corner.

Despite the revised — indeed, recast — image of President Reagan from what many people abroad believed from propaganda and sneers about cowpoke actors ready to shoot, a series of protest-anti-nuclear demonstrations have been orchestrated in New York and around this country demanding that we and NOT the Russians freeze nuclear weaponry first. In that way, their reasoning runs, the Soviets will be compelled to reduce atomic arsenals. How naive and foolish, considering the Soviet record on doing things voluntarily.

While demonstrators are assigned their placards by peacenik-appointed organizations, let's, examine the Soviet record through these past 36 years as I have:

Start with the Baruch Plan, named for the late and eminent counsellor to American presidents, Bernard M Baruch. As I noted earlier, the U.S. was at the time the only nuclear power in the world. We proposed turning over all nuclear weapons to an international authority. It also would have placed the peaceful use of nuclear power under this global directorate. "Nyet", retorted the late tyrant Stalin whose scientific teams were being fed U.S.-British nuclear secrets to get the Russian atomic system built and thereby menace the world.

Nearly a decade later, during which time the Soviets developed vast nuclear weapon capacity, President Eisenhower offered his "open skies" blueprint, in 1955. It would have meant aerial inspection and verification by the U.S. and Soviets of each other's military sites. The late Nikita S. Khrushchev led the Kremlin in shouting that the suggestion was a No No – strictly an "American trick." Under President Kennedy, the Soviets in 1961 rejected on-site inspection and verification of nuclear installations to eliminate nuclear missile systems.

At long last, the world in general and the U.S. in particular obtained in 1963 a limited nuclear test ban. The Soviets agreed to an American proposal banning nuclear tests in the atmosphere, in space and under water. But hold on: The U.S.S.R. refused to ban underground tests with random on-site inspections.

The dreary negotiating process continued with other U.S. administrations and Brezhnev-led Kremlin leaders. In a spirit of hope former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance went to Moscow in 1977 on a strategic arms reduction mission. He proposed a one-third cut in nuclear missiles and bombers on each side as well as 2,000 assorted weapons. He specifically identified the threat of more than 300 heavy Russian missiles — then having only one warhead each and now 10 — but Brezhnev flatly answered, nyet. When Vance even suggested that the U.S. would cut back production of the Cruise missile, if the Soviets reduced Backfire bombers, Brezhnev rejected everything, including a few of his maybes.

So, we get to the 1979 Vienna summit when former President Jimmy Carter thought he sealed a SALT II deal and kissed Brezhnev for being so understanding. The U.S. Senate took a good look at the package and to this day refuses to approve the measure because it leaves us naked to Soviet ballistic missilery. Incidentally, the hydra-headed Soviet SS-20s, numbering 320 today and growing numerically each week, can reach every city in Western Europe presently.

The spontaneous enthusiasm with which President Reagan's appeal for disarmament and peace was received abroad apparently hasn't impressed many made-in-the-USA anti-nuclear demonstrators. Instead of encouraging their president to keep up the good work they "protest." As near as I can figure out the protesting is against the fact that the U.S. is not willing to disarm unilaterally.

The thought occurs to me that some of them should apply to their local Russian Consulate for visas and if a few 100 or 1,000 are accepted, which I very seriously doubt, I am sure the U.S. government would be glad to underwrite their round-trip tickets to protest a few days in Moscow. The weather is just getting nice there now and I am sure they'll get a hot reception from the Kremlin.

Shortly after President Reagan assumed office, he proposed a "zero option," meaning elimination of all intermediate nuclear missiles in Europe. The Russians play mum on that one. Our president, striving for meaningful peaceful accommodation, more recently offered what he called "START" (Strategic Arms Reduction Talks) — not limitation, mind you — and Brezhnev grudgingly replied, "da" to the June 29th date for negotiations to begin in Geneva. The Soviet leader added that talks could begin but that the U.S.S.R. doesn't accept any of President Reagan's ideas to reduce nuclear arms. How's that for openers?

President Reagan won't let up. He launched a crusade for peace in Europe and intends to keep at it on his home turf. His words to the British Parliament in London remain memorable:

"Let's leave Marxism," he declared, "on the ash heap of history."

You don't have to guess who the villain in the act will turn out to be.

Identification with Reagan policies can be liability

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some past converts to President Reagan's ecomomic program are putting distance between themselves and Reaganomics as this year's congressional campaigns heat up.

For many, last Tuesday's party primaries in 10 states signaled that close identification with the president's policies in this time of deep recession can be a liability, especially for Democrats.

Despite the 220-207 victory in the Democratic-controlled House last week of a Reagan-backed budget, Democrats are clearly emphasizing the economy — and what they see as Reagan's inability to turn it around — as their No. 1 campaign issue for the fall elections.

Staunch supporters of the Reagan program concede that the nation's short-term economic course will have a critical effect on the autumn elections.

A handful of conservative candidates of both parties who had identified with the president's economic programs were defeated Tuesday by more moderate opponents.

IN NEW JERSEY, Republican Rep. Millicent Fenwick, a moderate, defeated rival Jeffrey Bell, a conservative former Reagan campaign aide. In California, a number of moderate Republicans won over more conservative opponents. And in Ohio, Rep. Ronald M. Mottl, a Democratic supporter of the president, lost to rival Edward Feighan, who accused Mottl of party disloyalty.

If there was a message about Reaganomics in the primaries, it was not clear cut. Other factors, including redistricting and — especially in the New Jersey race — personalities, had an important bearing on the outcomes.

Still, many of those who actively supported Reagan's economic program in its earlier stages are now emphasizing their differences with the president.

Even the House budget vote amounted to less than the sweeping victories handed Reagan last year. The GOP spending plan finally adopted replaced Reagan's own budget, which found little support even among party loyalists.

"One thing we have to acknowledge is that we now have established a year of record and things haven't worked out as well as many of us had hoped," said Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas.

Stenholm, informal leader of the Boll Weevils, a group of conservative southern Democrats who often have sided with Reagan, said the course the economy takes in the coming months will have a crucial bearing on the fall elections for members who voted for Reagan's program.

"THOSE OF US who supported the president, we now have the responsibility to convince Americans that a fiscally more conservative government can govern," Stenholm said.

Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, said Boll Weevils probably need not be too nervous about identifying with Reagan and his policies.

"Those Democrats who come from conservative Democratic areas will still vote their conservative views and that will not change," he said. "But for people not from conservative areas, last Tuesday's elections hold a message.

"I think if you look at all the races across the country, moderate Republicans and Democrats won. I don't think it's a rejection of Reagan. What it is is that people are feeling that there's got to be a balance reached, a mid-course correction.

"The public feels a lot of programs advocated by the president are just not fair. And they react the way they always do: at the ballot box."

HE SAID he might have fared better if he had run as an independent instead of a Democrat. "But I decided against it. I have always run as a Democrat. Possibly, that was my undoing."

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said Mottl's defeat "showed that in a Democratic primary, one who supports Reagan economics cannot survive. I think it sends a message to other Democrats out there."

But O'Neill's Republican counterpart, Minority Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois, said he couldn't detect any clear message from Tuesday's elections.

"It's one thing to win a primary and another to win a general election. That's the name of the game," he said.

Commenting on the New Jersey race, Michel said that he did not view Mrs. Fenwick's defeat of her more conservative rival as a defeat for Reaganomics.

While "Millie's more liberal than me," she wasn't exactly a party deserter, he said, noting that she voted with other Republicans for Reagan programs "when I needed her."

IN MICHIGAN'S newly drawn 6th district, which includes the Detroit suburb of Pontiac with its automaking plants and high unemployment, a hot general election race is shaping up — one in which the president's programs have become a central issue.

Dunn sees it as something less than that. And although he has supported Reagan-endorsed budget plans, Dunn is seeking to emphasize his differences with the president.

"I think the word Reaganomics has a lot of different meanings," he said. "If it's for cutting taxes and government spending, then I'm for Reaganomics. If it's for cutting vital programs, then I'm not."

Noting that historically the party not in the White House has lost congressional seats in off-presidential years, Dunn said: "Traditionally the party in power will get blamed for what's going wrong.... Republicans are going to suffer this year."

AS TO WHETHER Tuesday's primaries bear a message for anyone on Reagan's economics, Dunn says he doubts it: "I think message is a greatly overused word. I don't see a message in this."

Murderer to be sentenced in 'bizarre' case

By ELISSA McCRARY

JEFFERSON, N.C. (AP) — Paul Wilson Bare, convicted of murder and kidnapping, will be sentenced this week in a bizzare case involving missing bodies, fancy cameras, a masked stuntman calling himself the "Nashville Flash" and a deep, frozen mine.

"It was kind of like something you read in a book," said Ashe County Sheriff Richard Waddell. "It was really a strange case."

On Thursday an Ashe County jury found Bare guilty of first-degree murder and kidnapping in the death of Lonnie Gamboa last Christmas Eve.

On Monday, a sentencing hearing begins, after which the jury will recommend whether Bare, 42, of Laurel Springs, should be executed or sentenced to life in prison.

Two other men face charges in the Ore Knob Mine case. Allen Ray Hattaway, who surrendered to FBI agents in Tennessee on Thursday, has been charged with murder, kidnapping and flight to avoid prosecution. Also on Thursday, Gary Hansford Miller surrendered near Lenoir, N.C. He also is charged with two killings.

THE CASE began last Dec. 23 when Gamboa, 29, was kidnapped from his Asheville home, according to police informant Joseph E. Vines.

Vines testified that Gamboa was a small-time drug dealer who apparently owed $120,000 to Bare, Miller and Hattaway.

Vines, a 6-foot-5, 285-pound man who had a shaved head and called himself "Kojak" and "Satan," said he became involved with Hattaway and Miller while investigating drug trafficking in the Asheville area.

Vines testified that Miller and Hattaway stuffed Gamboa into the trunk of a car and drove him to Bare's residence in Ashe County, where Bare handcuffed Gamboa to a tree. Early Christmas Eve, Bare led the men up to mine where he forced Vines at gunpoint to push Gamboa down the shaft.

Vines said as the men walked away from the mine, Bare said, "That makes 23 of 'em in there."

VINES TOLD authorities about the murder two weeks later.

The 220-foot-deep mine had been closed for 20 years, and its sides were weak. Federal mining officials said it was too dangerous to send a man into the mine. Instead, special cameras were lowered into the mine to search for bodies.

But after two days, officials gave up, saying further search was too dangerous.

Enter stuntman Johnny Sands, also known as the Nashville Flame. He volunteered to descend into the mine and bring up bodies, if there were any.

So, on Jan. 25, with snow blowing around the mine, Sands, wearing a ski mask to conceal his identity, buckled himself into a harness and was slowly lowered into the pit. After several descents, he called up to the surface: "I've got a body."

LATER THAT night, Sands and deputies brought up Gamboa's frozen, broken body along with that of another Asheville man, Thomas Forester. Forester had been kidnapped from an Asheville motel on Dec. 13.

Authorities said if other bodies were in the mine, they couldn't find them and ordered the pit filled in and permanently closed off.

"We wanted to be sure no one ever got thrown into that mine again," the sheriff said. "Two was too many. If there were others, we decided they would just have to rest in peace down there."

Hinckley in control during shooting, doctor says

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL

WASHINGTON (AP) — John W. Hinckley Jr. functioned too well to be mentally ill when he shot President Reagan and attempted the assassination "to prove to himself he could do something of this magnitude," a psychiatrist testified Saturday.

Dr. Sally Johnson said Hinckley was able to plan his act right up to the moment he pulled the trigger and thought to himself: "I'll never get a better opportunity."

The attempted assassination, she testified, was Hinckley's "way to get back at all those people he felt had let him down, including his family."

She disagreed flatly with the three defense psychiatrists and a psychologist who said Hinckley was insanely driven to the shooting by an irrational compulsion to establish a relationship with actress Jodie Foster.

"John never was so disturbed that he was unaware of what he was doing and why he was doing it," Mrs. Johnson testified at the only Saturday session of Hinckley's trial, ending its seventh week. "I felt he had a great deal of control."

HINCKLEY IS charged with attempting to assassinate the president and with trying to kill Reagan and the three other men he wounded on March 30, 1981, outside a Washington hotel.

Dr. Johnson, at 29 only two years older than Hinckley, is a staff psychiatrist at the federal corrections institution at Butner, N.C. She interviewed Hinckley 57 times during his 120-day stay at the prison, longer than any other psychiatrist.

In what amounted to a 3½-hour rapid monologue, Mrs. Johnson described Hinckley as suffering from personality disorders but said he was not schizophrenic — out of touch with reality — and never psychotic.

"John's overall functioning historically was not typical of someone suffering from schizophrenia," she said. "He functioned too well."

Where defense psychiatrists saw his obsession with teen-aged actress Jodie Foster as a delusion, Mrs. Johnson saw it as little more than adolescent admiration.

She said Hinckley wanted to impress Miss Foster, but he "also had a desire to make a mark on the world and was taking an unconventional crime route to do this.

"SUBCONSCIOUSLY, JOHN wanted to prove to himself he could do something of this magnitude as a way to get back at all those people he felt had let him down, including his family and Dr. Hopper," she said. John Hopper was Hinckley's psychiatrist in Evergreen, Colo.

In 1976, when Hinckley saw Miss Foster in the role of a 12-year-old prostitute in the movie "Taxi Driver," he identified with her "as someone who wasn't going anywhere and needed rescue," Mrs. Johnson said.

"I think he was ripe to idolize an actress or someone important like that in a kind of superfan fashion," she said. "He realized having some kind of intimate relationship with her was a very slim possibility."

The psychiatrist also made light of Hinckley's supposed identification with the part of Travis Bickle in Taxi Driver, saying, "I don't think John wanted to be seen as Travis Bickle. I think he wanted to have some attention or fame that was John Hinckley."

Hinckley's interest in Miss Foster had its ups and downs until the fall of 1980 when he read that she was attending Yale University, Mrs. Johnson said. Trying to make contact with her became "an exciting thing; it gave him something to do."

But when he traveled to New Haven in September that year, the actress ceased being his "dream girl" by rejecting him in a telephone conversation that "had a kind of adolescent flavor to it," Mrs. Johnson said. "Instead of really idolizing her, he got angry at her and put her on the bottom of his list."

HINCKLEY, WHOSE personality Mrs. Johnson described as including feelings of self importance, wanted "to show her (Miss Foster) he was important enough to be noticed but he never lost sight that she was a famous movie star."

The movie, Taxi Driver, the psychiatrist said, "gave John an idea of how, in some unconventional way, he could make his mark in life.

"He made a decision to become known in an unconventional way. He was familiar with the movie and other assassination attempts. He took some ideas out of the movie and modeled his behavior after them in the preparation stage."

Hinckley decided that "if he wanted to make a powerful statement, you make an attempt on a powerful figure," Mrs. Johnson testified.

He realized he was not a good shot, so he practiced. His stalking President Carter to at least two campaign appearances in 1980, and standing outside Blair House to get close to then President-elect Reagan in December that year, were rehearsals for the shooting, she said.

"His choice of targets had to do with how powerful was the person; his choice of writings showed a logical reasoning process," Mrs. Johnson said.

IF, ON THE day of the shooting, Hinckley had found the scene not right, "I do not think he would have done it," she added, pointing to that as a sign that he was able to make choices.

Hinckley blamed the shooting on a number of outside forces, she said. The Secret Service was not careful enough, he shouldn't have been able to get so close, he should not have been able to buy guns, gun control laws should be stronger, she said.

Hinckley "was clearly thinkng of making the attempt, but not sure he was going through with it," she said.

The letter he penned to Miss Foster showed "he understood he might lose his life, he might lose his freedom," and leaving it in his hotel room to be found "is something John found exciting," the psychiatrist said.

Reliving Watergate burglary decade later

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Henry Petersen was eating breakfast when he heard about it and he called Richard Kleindienst. Gordon Liddy searched out a secure White House phone to call Jeb Stuart Magruder in California. Magruder told Fred LaRue and LaRue told John Mitchell and Mitchell acted surprised and said, "That's incredible."

John Ehrlichman got a call at home from a Secret Service agent and he phoned Charles Colson, who was about to take a dip in his pool. Ehrlichman says he tried, unsuccessfully, to get hold of Bob Haldeman at Key Biscayne in Florida, so he told Ron Ziegler instead.

Memories play tricks. Haldeman says he was lying on the beach when Ziegler, in bathing trunks, showed him a news service story. He remembers the question and the answer. Ziegler:"Should I inform the president?" Haldeman: "Ehrlichman's in Washington and he hasn't contacted me. So I don't think there's anything to worry the president about."

So Richard Nixon didn't hear on that Saturday about the incident that would bring down his presidency. He was off in the isolation of Grand Cay, a small island in the Bahamas owned by his friend Bob Abplanalp.

John Dean, too, was unaware of it. He was en route home from the Philippines, and the indigestion he got that day was from stuffing his stomach with pigeon, octopus and turtle. When he was brought up to date, Dean recalls thinking, "all that crazy screwing around has finally caught up with us. No one can help now."

Nixon walked into his house in Key Biscayne the next morning and was lured by the aroma of brewing coffee into the kitchen. As he sipped, the president scanned the front page of the Sunday Miami Herald lying on a counter. The main story was about American troop withdrawals from Vietnam. Lower on the page, a three-column headline: "Miamians Held in DC Try to Bug Demo Headquarters."

Thus, a day later than most other principal actors in the drama, the president of the United States learned about Watergate. At 2 in the morning, five men — four wearing surgical gloves — had been caught in the Watergate Office Building in Washington trying to plant wiretaps in the office of the Democratic National Committee."It sounded preposterous, Cubans in surgical gloves bugging the DNC," Nixon recalls. "I dismissed it as some sort of prank."

THE ACTIONS of the president and the president's men in the week after the break-in sowed the seeds for the debacle to come. A dollop of candor, a small housecleaning, a single voice saying "whoa" might have turned an extraordinary burglary into a minor one. But nobody — not the president, not his senior advisers, not the bright and supposedly idealistic young men he brought in to help run the country — nobody thought to apply the brakes. Probably nobody ever decreed it, but the instinctive, unspoken reaction of everyone concerned was: Cover up. Don't let it harm the president.

On the day of the incident the main players were scattered. The next day was one of exchanging information. Day 3, June 19, was devoted to assessing the damage and John Dean was put in charge of the in-house investigation.

Day 4, Haldeman, Ehrlichman, Mitchell and Dean met and Haldeman filled in the president, but that crucial 18½ minutes was erased from the White House recording tapes. Re-election committee officials issued a statement denying any legal, moral or ethical accountability.

On day 6, the president told a press conference "this kind of activity ... has no place whatever in our electoral process ... the White House has had no involvement." On day 7, Nixon was told the FBI might be getting close to tracing the money found on the burglars to the re-election committee. He agreed the CIA should be used to stop the FBI's investigation, thus putting the presidential stamp on the cover-up that followed.

It has been 10 years since the Watergate break-in on June 17, 1972. Its effect was to heighten Americans' distrust of their leaders. That, perhaps, was the most lasting damage.

Twenty-five men went to prison for Watergate-related offenses. Election laws were changed to limit individual campaign contributions and tighten accountability. The book industry gave birth to novice authors — anyone who was knowledgeable about Watergate: trial judge, prosecutors, senators, journalists, defendants, even defendants' wives.

Careers were shattered, rebuilt. Charles Colson, once ruthless in the service of Richard Nixon, now serves God. G. Gordon Liddy, whose unremitting silence kept him in prison for years, willingly discusses Watergate for big bucks on the lecture circuit; John D. Ehrlichman, the jut-jawed defender of the Nixon White House at the Senate Watergate hearings, is now an established, bearded author living in New Mexico, a champion of the poor and downtrodden. Nixon, disgraced and robbed of stature, fights still to regain it.

THAT SATURDAY morning, 10 years ago, the three members of the Metropolitan Police "casual clothes" squad knew right away that they had surprised no ordinary burglars. Before them, blue-gloved hands raised, stood five middle-aged white males, dressed in suit and tie, and carrying in their wallets a total of $1,600, mostly in $100 bills. There was a brown leather overnight bag filled with camera equipment. And they had walkie-talkies.

Next door, in room 214 of the Watergate Hotel, team leader Liddy waited with his lieutenant, Howard Hunt. They heard only one transmission that night from those walkie talkies, a whispered "they got us."

They left in a hurry, passing police now gathering in force at the Watergate. Hunt went across the street to the Howard Johnson Motor Lodge, helped the team's lookout and wiretap monitor gather up equipment, then hurried to his safe in the White House, and placed in it a briefcase with some of the equipment. He took out $10,000 kept there for emergencies and used it, in the middle of the night, to hire a lawyer for the five men arrested.

Liddy, counsel for the finance arm of the Committee to Re-elect the President, drove home in his Jeep. His wife, Fran, awakened and asked if anything was wrong. "There was trouble," said Liddy. "Some people got caught. I'll probably be going to jail."

In a political year, in a political town, police activity at a political headquarters is a sure way to get high-level attention. By 8 a.m., U.S. Attorney Harold Titus was on the phone to Henry Petersen, the head of the Justice Department's criminal division. Petersen, under the impression the burglars had explosives, called the attorney general of the United States, Richard Kleindienst, because "I thought the same might be in the offing for Republican headquarters and I thought he ought to be forewarned."

By 8:30 a.m. Liddy was at CREEP, as the Committee to Re-elect the President was known, stuffing documents into a shredder. He explained to an uncomprehending fellow employee, "Our boys got caught last night. It was my mistake and I used someone from here, something I told them I'd never do." That someone was James McCord, retired from the CIA, employed by the re-election committee as security chief.

Jaworski feels satisfaction that he has done his duty

By SHARON HERBAUGH

HOUSTON (AP) — In one of his first cases, Leon Jaworski defended a black accused of murdering two whites. In his last case, he helped force the resignation of an American president.

Jaworski says he faced hatred in both cases, but adds that both created "inner satisfaction that you have done your duty."

As a young lawyer Jaworski was appointed by the court to defend a black sharecropper accused of murdering a white farmer and his wife.

Despite criticism from friends, crank phone calls and threatening anonymous letters, Jaworski recalls, he "put up quite a stubborn fight" for for the illiterate man who had scrawled his "X" on a confession.

But the lesson prepared the 23-year-old lawyer for a test nearly a half century later when Jaworski, the son of a preacher, would become the adversary of President Richard Nixon — a man he liked and a candidate he had voted for.

"That taught me to cross the barrier of doing things that were unpopular, to live with them and to realize that after the ordeal is over, you feel inner satisfaction that you have done your duty," he said.

Jaworski, 76, and the grandfather of four, hasn't returned to the courtroom since 1974, when he successfully secured the tape recordings linking Nixon to the Watergate scandal.

"You just don't argue another case after you've argued 'the United States versus Nixon' before the Supreme Court." he said.

Jaworski, known to his family and associates as "Colonel," keeps an office and acts as counsel to Fulbright & Jaworski, a firm he watched grow from 10 to 300 lawyers.

The tanned, silver-haired barrister, slimmer than he was during his days as Watergate special prosecutor, keeps a schedule that might tire much younger men and recently overcame a battle with cancer.

Doctors discovered during an operation in February that Jaworski had cancer of the pancreas. Surgeons feared it would be too dangerous to remove the cancer because it was near a blood vessel.

After completing a series of radiation treatments last month, Jaworski said, doctors "gave me a clean bill of health."

He accepts speaking engagements, is a member of the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, board chairman of the Texas Medical Center and a fundraiser for two Houston hospitals and his own nonprofit foundation. During the last presidential election he headed "Democrats for Reagan."

He also retreats to his 400-acre ranch in the Texas Hill Country, where he wrote his Watergate best-seller, "The Right and the Power;" his memoirs, "Confession and Avoidance;" and the autobiographical "Crossroads."

Jaworski began practicing law in his hometown of Waco with two friends, defending bootleggers during the Prohibition and the black sharecropper, Jordon Scott.

"I was held in such disfavor. In those days, a black murdering a white farmer and his wife was something that aroused the passion of the community. But I believe this man was entitled to the same standing in court as a rich white man," Jaworski said. "That's probably one of the reasons I came to Houston."

He went on to represent Lyndon B. Johnson in court battles against the Republicans, and to prosecute, among others: Nazi war criminals, a Mississippi governor who refused to admit a black student to a state university and Korean influence peddlers.

But Jaworski considers his successful battle for the Nixon tapes — "the smoking gun" — the apex of his legal career.

At times, Jaworski says, "I'd rather talk about anything but Watergate. But I'm constantly surprised how interest in the subject has continued at such a high level. I thought interest in Watergate would wind down within two years."

Jaworski, then president of the American Bar Association, said he closely followed the events of the June 17, 1972, burglary at the Democrats' Watergate headquarters in Washington, D.C.

When Archibald Cox was fired as special prosecutor in October of 1973, Gen. Alexander Haig asked Jaworski to take over the job. He accepted after receiving assurances he would have the independence he wanted.

But Jaworski's appointment was greeted by a flood of criticism.

"For the first couple of months, I didn't think I had a friend. The conservatives couldn't forget my past record and that I was Lyndon Johnson's lawyer, and the liberals considered me an 'establishment lawyer' handpicked by Nixon," he said.

At first, Jaworski said, he didn't believe Nixon was involved in the cover-up. That opinion changed after he heard the tape of Nixon and his chief of staff, H.R. Haldeman, discussing how to avoid telling the truth and still avoid a perjury charge.

"That's when I realized he was right in the middle," Jaworski said, his voice rising. "I knew just how traumatic that would be for the country and I shuddered. For a moment, I wished I'd never been asked to take the job."

Jaworski and his staff went to the U.S. Supreme Court and successfully won the release of the tapes, and Nixon resigned Aug. 9, 1974.

Jaworski said he believes Nixon would have been forgiven by the American public if he had only admitted his misdeeds. Instead, he said, Nixon will be piloried for abusing the presidency.

"If Richard Nixon had told the American people he had made mistakes and told them he was sorry for the wrongs he committed and wanted their forgiveness, I believe he would have stayed in office,"Jaworski said.

But if President Gerald Ford had not granted the pardon, Nixon would have been indicted, he said.

Although Jaworski said Nixon's acceptance of the pardon indicates his guilt — "an innocent person doesn't need that protection" — Jaworski said he doesn't believe the former president got off too easily.

"The man has suffered a lot. He retired in disgrace and history will always record that he was forced from office," he said. "But I don't share the view that he got off lightly because he didn't spend time in prison. I think he has carried a burden as great as if he had been incarcerated."

Gerrie Aizer-Keck, left, of Miami, and her 7-month-old son Ariel relax on the grass of Central Park's Great Lawn as workers erect the sound and light towers for Saturday's anti-nuclear concert. The rock concert was the culmination of a disarmament march and rally that attracted over half a million participants. The Aizer-Kecks are joined by Gregg Dunn, a friend from Baltimore.

By RICK HAMPSON

NEW YORK (AP) — An estimated 550,000 protesters from as far away as Hiroshima rallied in Central Park on Saturday to demand a nuclear weapons freeze in one of the biggest demonstrations in U.S. history.

"We have come here in numbers so large that the message must get through to the White House and Capitol Hill," Coretta Scott King, widow of the late civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr., told the crowd.

But Secretary of State Caspar Weinberger, in an interview taped Friday, indicated a large turnout was unlikely to have direct impact on administration policy.

"The fact that a very large number of people turn out for a particular event is certainly something that people notice," Weinberger said in the interview to be broadcast Saturday night on WNET-TV. "But I don't think that anybody rushes back and says, 'We have to change our policy,' or 'Mr. President, you should make a different speech,' or something because there's been a rally."

Many in the crowd that overflowed the park's 18-acre Great Lawn had marched three miles from the United Nations, where a special session on disarmament is under way.

To kick off the rally, organizers released 3,000 silver, helium-filled balloons into the sunny skies. Then a parade of speakers and musicians addressed the crowd from a giant stage flanked by huge columns of loudspeakers.

JACKSON BROWNE sang "For Everyman," and, with Gary "U.S." Bonds, "The Pretender." Browne was joined on stage by Bruce Springsteen for the latter's "The Promised Land," Joan Baez led the crowd through John Lennon's "Imagine," and Linda Ronstadt and James Taylor also performed.

Police and city officials said there had been no arrests and no violence. About 50 people were treated for cuts, bruises and fractures.

The estimate by police Sgt. Peter Sweeney of 550,000 made Saturday's gathering the largest political rally in New York's history and the largest disarmament rally ever in the nation. The figure also eclipsed totals for anti-war and civil rights demonstrations of the 1960s and 1970s, although estimates for those rallies varied widely between police and organizers.

Police said their crowd figure was based on estimates of how many people could squeeze into the 44 acres within earshot of the stage.

At least one rally organizer thought the police estimate too low. Donna Cooper, a coordinator of the June 12 Rally Committee, put the crowd at between 800,000 and 1,000,000.

Nina Streich, another rally official, said the huge turnout "far exceeded" her expectations and showed "there's a lot more interest in nuclear disarmament out there than we thought."

Smaller rallies calling for a nuclear freeze were also held Saturday in several other cities around the nation. Crowds of up to 500 people turned out in Lincoln, Neb.; Putney, Vt.; Mount Vernon, Ohio, and Augusta, Maine.

MORE THAN 160,000 people joined the march that preceded the rally — including contingents of children, senior citizens, lawyers, homosexuals, union members and computer technicians.

"It's important to witness for peace, not enough to just make statements," said Bishop Walter F. Sullivan of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Richmond, Va., who led a delegation of 400 in the march.

Many of the marchers chanted slogans such as "No More Bombs!" and "Peace Now, No More Wars!" Some walked on stilts, others carried balloons and pushed infants in strollers. Banners and signs bore inscriptions ranging from "Mushrooms are for Quiche, Not Clouds," to "Jobs, Education, Yes; Draft, Registration, No!"

Contingents were on hand from an estimated 500 U.S. cities. One group came from Hiroshima, Japan, where the atom bomb was first used in warfare, and delegations flew in from West Germany and other European nations.

Also taking part were about 400 Buddhist monks, heads shaved and wearing white and yellow robes. They had converged in New York after walking cross-country from "four corners" of the nation — Los Angeles, San Francisco, New Orleans and Maine.

Police Commissioner Robert McGuire had assigned 5,000 police officers — the largest force ever for a single event in the city — to the march and rally.

Marchers began pouring into Manhattan via subway, train, bus and car shortly after dawn. Organizers said some 2,000 buses arrived from cities all over the United States. Mass transit carried demonstrators to the march staging site across from the United Nations.

COMMUTER TRAINS were packed, but police said there were no reports of traffic tie-ups due to the demonstration. They had warned visitors to leave their cars at home.

Organizers had 200 lawyers scattered along the route from the United Nations to Central Park, along with 1,500 marshals known as "peace-keepers."

The demonstration was organized over the past year by a coalition of about 100 activist groups. They agreed on two goals: worldwide military disarmament, including a freeze on deployment and production of nuclear weapons, and reduction of military budgets in favor of spending on social needs.

Not attending the rally were 318 foreign pacifists — most of them Japanese — who were denied visas by the State Department under the McCarran-Walter Act, a 1952 law that bars Communists from entering the country. A federal judge upheld the government's action.

The biggest previous Central Park gathering was last fall, when 400,000 people on the Great Lawn heard Simon and Garfunkel. About the same number gathered near Woodstock, N.Y., in 1969 for a rock music festival.

Arms negotiator believes agreement achievable

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chief U.S. arms negotiator, Edward L. Rowny, says agreement on deep cuts in both American and Soviet nuclear weapons is "eminently achievable," if not guaranteed, by the end of President Reagan's first term.

Rowny, unfazed by Soviet complaints that Reagan's proposal for strategic arms reduction talks is unequal and unfair, said the United States "will not shrink," if necessary, from insisting that the Soviets agree to on-site inspection to verify compliance with an agreement.

"We're not calling for on-site inspection at the outset," Rowny said in an interview. "On the other hand, we don't rule it out if push comes to shove."

Rowny said the talks, which open June 29 in Geneva, could produce an agreement.

"This proposal, given continued good faith on the part of the Soviets and the desire to negotiate, is eminently achievable in this president's term," Rowny said in the interview Friday.

"But who knows what other events may come about?" he cautioned. "If world events are smooth, it helps our negotiating process. If world events are rocky, it may slow it down, or even postpone or scuttle" an agreement.

Linking Soviet actions in foreign affairs with arms control was "never entirely dead" and is a political fact of life, Rowny said. "It's just a question of whether you talk about it very much or get specific."

Rowny represented the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staffs at previous SALT talks, but resigned in 1979 to protest the final form of the SALT II treaty. He said it was "fatally flawed" by U.S. compromises. Rowny later joined Reagan's presidential campaign as a military adviser.

He helped put together the administration's proposal for deep cuts in nuclear weapons which Reagan announced last month in Eureka, Ill.

The Reagan proposal calls for cutting the number of warheads on both sides from about 7,500 to about 5,000 and then reducing both the power and destructive punch of the remaining weapons.

"We're seeking eqality, first in numbers, and then in the power of these weapons," Rowny said.

Rowny defended the proposal from attacks, both by the Soviets and by U.S. critics.

He called the Soviet reaction "milder" than most and said Soviet leaders are wrong in claiming the U.S. plan would leave them at a serious military disadvantage.

"Our proposal says we are approximately equal in the numbers of warheads now and we propose to reduce by about a third," he said. "We're not going to argue about what the number is right now. But the level to which we will agree will be an equal level of about 5,000."

"We don't need to be superior," Rowny said. "But we're not going to be inferior. We're going to be equal."

The Soviets have complained that the United States wants to delay discussion of weapons such as cruise missiles and the B-1 bomber, focusing first on land-based intercontinental ballistic missiles, which are the backbone of the Soviet force.

"Our emphasis is on stability," Rowny said. "And the destabilizing element is the fast-flying ballistic missiles. And therefore we want an agreement that moves first toward stability.

"Now we're also offering to talk about equal bomber limits fairly early on. But as far as bomber armaments and other slow-flying stuff, let's get the destabilizing things worked out first."

He emphasized the assurance that, "as President Reagan has said, no strategic systems are going to be left out. Everything's on the table."

Rowny was asked to respond to U.S. critics who say the Reagan proposal masks a "secret agenda" which gives arms control a low priority and puts primary emphasis on building U.S. military strength and countering Soviet power.

"I know from long talks and intimate contact with the president from the time that I joined the campaign, that arms control is very high on his priority list," Rowny said.

"If some people want to doubt the president, that's their privilege," he said.

Reagan, Gromyko to address U.N. special session

By O.C. DOELLING

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — President Reagan and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko are expected this week to preview publicly the conflicting positions the two nuclear powers will take to upcoming talks on strategic disarmament.

The president, fresh from a West European tour and NATO summit meeting, is to make his first-ever speech at the United Nations on Thursday. He addresses the General Assembly's special session on disarmament.

Reagan had hoped the United Nations would provide the setting for an ice-breaking meeting with Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev. But the ailing Kremlin leader decided against a trip to New York. Instead, Reagan reportedly is prepared to accept an informal Brezhnev invitation for a full-fledged summit meeting in a third country this fall.

Gromyko, speaking at the General Assembly on Monday after West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, is not expected to break new ground in his speech.

"If the Russians have any surprises, they would be expressed by Mr. Brezhnev and not at the level of Mr. Gromykyo," an American official remarked.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. will be in New York with the president and plans to meet with Gromyko to prepare the ground for the strategic arms reduction talks, which open in Geneva on June 29.

Other scheduled speakers during a summit-level, second week of the special session are the leaders of two countries engaged in fighting that have lent urgency to the General Assembly's deliberations on disarmament — Prime Ministers Margaret Thatcher of Britain and Menachem Begin of Israel. Mrs. Thatcher is to speak on Wednesday and Begin on Friday.

The special session, which began last Monday and runs until July 9, is to adopt a non-binding program for international disarmament.

Saturday, outside the United Nations, an estimated 160,000 people protesting the nuclear arms race marched en route to a rally in Central Park where police expected nearly a half million people to turn out.

On Monday, demonstrators plan sit-down "blockades" at the entrances to the U.N. missions of the five major nuclear powers — the United States, the Soviet Union, China, Britain and France.

The demonstrations have not gone unheeded by speakers. Agostino Cardinal Casaroli, delivering a message from Pope John Paul II, told the Assembly on Friday that the increasingly active peace movements manifested "a profound and sincere desire for peace," although the divergent groups "can often lend themselves to political exploitation."

French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson, talking to reporters here last week, said the pressure of responsible public opinion had a symbolic place at the disarmament negotiating table.

"But, as there can be progress toward limitation of armaments only if there is a relaxation of tensions, if there are negotiations, it means we should have the same pressure by public opinion on both sides. For the time being, I have never heard of any such demonstrations, marches or propaganda entered into on the other (Soviet) side."

To improve the atmosphere prior to the Geneva talks, Reagan has confirmed the United States will continue to abide by the constraints of the signed, but unratified 1979 SALT II treaty as long as the Soviets do the same.

Last month, Reagan proposed a one-third reduction of warheads on land and submarine-based missles to a ceiling of about 5,000 warheads for each side. According to U.S. sources, this would require the Soviet Union to dismantle 2,100 warheads while the United States scrapped 2,150.

But the Soviets, through the Communist Party newspaper Pravda, rejected the idea earlier this month, regarding it as an attempt to weaken them where they were strongest — in strategic, land-based missiles — while ignoring warheads carried by U.S. heavy bombers.

Brezhnev, in his initial reply to Reagan's May 9 proposals, had called for a nuclear freeze "as soon as the talks begin." This was rejected by the White House.

Weapons, programs to be affected by freeze

Here is a look at some of the weapons and programs that would be affected by an immediate freeze on development, construction and deployment of nuclear arms.

For the United States, a freeze would:

—Halt testing of weapons. In 1981, there were 17 tests at the Nevada Test Site.

—Halt NATO's planned deployment in Europe of 108 Pershing II and 464 Tomahawk cruise missiles, theater nuclear forces intended to counter Soviet weapons now in place and aimed at Europe.

—Halt development of more ICBMs in the United States and development of the MX, which is intended to replace the Minutemen and Titan II missiles.

—Interrupt the Trident nuclear submarine program. The first of the subs, which have a range of 4,000 miles, has recently been tested in sea trials.

Man picks up suspect who raped nieces

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A man whose teen-aged nieces were raped earlier this month spotted a suspect near the French Quarter, offered him a lift and drove him directly to jail, police say.

Joseph Henry Nelson, 37, was booked with two counts of aggravated rape and one count of aggravated burglary after the uncle took him to the central lockup, said police.

Police said the uncle's name was withheld because it would identify the girls, aged 15 and 17, who were raped at gunpoint in their home June 5.

The uncle knew Nelson was a suspect in the case and offered Nelson a ride home, police said. But he drove to the central lockup, where he pulled Nelson out of the car and told police the man was wanted, police said.

Marathon shareholders ask for fair price

FINDLAY, Ohio (AP) — A group of Marathon Oil Co. shareholders who believe they got a bad deal when the company merged with U.S. Steel Corp. are asking a judge to set a fair selling price for their stock.

The 440 shareholders, who own more than 110,000 shares, filed suit Friday against Marathon in Hancock County Common Pleas Court, and attorney Kenneth Weinberg said the action could involve 100 more plaintiffs by Monday.

In March, U.S. Steel completed a merger with Marathon that involved purchase of 51 percent of Marathon for $125 a share and an offer of securities worth about $100 each for additional shares of stock. About a dozen invididual suits already have been filed, seeking anywhere from $135 to $400 a share.

Seven hurt in grenade-launcher explosion

CAMP PENDLETON, Calif.(AP) — A round from a grenade-launcher picked up as a souvenir by two Marines on a hike exploded in a crowded barracks at Camp Pendleton, showering seven soldiers with shrapnel.

Two Marines were seriously injured in Friday's blast and five had lesser injuries, said Gunnery Sgt. Tom Adams, a camp spokesman.

The explosive went off when it slipped from the hand of a platoon sergeant who was inspecting it and hit the floor, said Col. Henry Stackpole, a base barracks commander.

Vacationing guard stops prison escapee

DAVENPORT, Iowa (AP) — A Nebraska prison escapee was arrested after he got on a bus that also was carrying a vacationing prison guard.

Kevin Hughes, 21, of Omaha, sentenced in 1980 to six years to 12 years for burglary, failed to return to the Lincoln Correctional Center on June 5 from a furlough, authorities say. Hughes made his way to Williamsburg, where he boarded a bus Thursday.

Court dismisses radiation-exposure case

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A federal appeals court has dismissed a suit filed by a group of disabled Navajo uranium miners and miners' widows who contend that radiation exposure at work caused lung cancer and other maladies.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals refused on Friday to reinstate the suit by 200 people against Kerr-McGee Corp. and several other mining concerns. The court said the group would have to pursue their claim through the Arizona workmen's compensation commission.

The suit had been dismissed by a lower court judge, but the plaintiffs appealed.

Best Products buys Modern Merchandising

MINNETONKA, Minn. (AP) — Best Products Co. has agreed to acquire Modern Merchandising Inc., which operates 72 catalog showrooms in 17 states, including the LaBelle's chain of stores, officials say.

Best Products, based in Richmond, Va., will acquire Modern Merchandising for more than $100 million in stock, Modern President James Ruben said Friday. Modern is based in Minnetonka.

Based on last year's results, the combination would result in a giant catalog company with sales of $1.5 billion and more than 170 stores nationwide.

Convicted murderer faces another trial

Pruett, 32, is being extradited from Colorado to Fort Smith where he is to face a capital murder charge for the Oct. 12 shooting death of Bobbie Jean Robertson, a 30-year-old Fort Smith convenience store clerk.

Prosecuting Attorney Ron Fields said Friday that Pruett would be arraigned at 1:30 p.m. Monday before Circuit Judge Robert Boyer.

Deputy Sheriff Wendell Carruth of Sebastian County said in a telephone interview Saturday that officers weren't preparing any tighter security for Pruett. "He's just another prisoner to us," Carruth said.

Sheriff Bill Cauthron of Fort Smith said by telephone that the sheriff's department had heard nothing Saturday from federal marshals who were supposed to bring Pruett to Arkansas in a chartered plane.

Cauthron said Pruett would have a cellmate.

Colorado authorities weren't commenting Saturday.

Pruett already has been sentenced to death in Mississippi for the murder of a Jackson savings and loan clerk. If convicted in Arkansas, he could face a death sentence.

Mrs. Robertson's body was found in a wooded area several hours after she disappeared. She had been shot three times, once in the head.

Pruett, who was arrested in Amarillo, Texas last year, has called himself a "mad dog" killer who killed to support a $4,000-a-week cocaine habit.

Wednesday, he pleaded guilty in Fort Collins, Colo., to the October slayings of two Colorado convenience store clerks. He was sentenced to two consecutive life sentences for first-degree murder and two consecutive 16-year terms for aggravated robbery.

Pruett also is charged in Sandoval County, N.M., with the March 2, 1981, slaying of his wife. Her burned body was found April 16, 1981, at Rio Rancho, N.M.

Man kills mother, brother, three other children

By JAMES FITZGERALD

NEW YORK (AP) — A "remorseful" 20-year-old man turned himself in Saturday and was charged with killing his mother, his baby brother and three other toddlers, police said. He allegedly went on a rampage after his mother told him to "straighten up his act."

Meanwhile, relatives gathered at the Bronx apartment where the killings took place, cleaning up bloodstains that had spattered on the floor around children's toys and a stack of fresh diapers.

Michael Harris, 20, surrendered to police of the 46th Precinct in the Bronx at about 4 a.m., accompanied by other members of his family, said Lt. John Rudden.

Harris "came in willingly," Rudden said, although police had learned of his whereabouts. Rudden described Harris as "remorseful and cooperative" and said he had confessed to the killings.

Harris was charged with five counts of murder. If convicted, he could be sentenced to life in prison.

RUDDEN SAID Harris and his mother, Dolores Harris, had "an argument that probably went back a little while."

"She wasn't happy with the people he was hanging out with and the things he was doing," Rudden said. "She was a very decent human being, a churchgoing woman, and she wanted him to straighten up his act." Rudden said he had no specifics on what displeased the mother.

The Rev. Sharon Williams of Union Baptist Church in Manhattan, who said some members of the Harris family went to her church, said, "When this kind of thing happens, people wonder why. They want one thing to point to.

"But it's because something has broken down and the churches or the communities have not provided the support services necessary. It's poverty, racism, unemployment, all the things people don't want to hear about anymore."

Rudden said Mrs. Harris had maintained a "poorly furnished but quite clean" apartment in a devastated, burned-out section of University Heights. She often baby-sat for neighbors, and childrens' toys, a television and a stack of clean diapers were on the floor, he said.

MRS. HARRIS WAS baby-sitting the four children when the killer came in, police said.

Neighbors in the building at 2001 University Ave. said they had heard Mrs. Harris arguing earlier in the day. "She was pretty mad," said Barbara Burns.

Police said the killer used a scissors and a 4-foot wooden rod, like the pole used to hang clothes on in a closet, on his victims.

The bloody scene was discovered by Michele Harris, 19, Mrs. Harris' daughter and the mother of one of the slain children. Returning home from Adams High School, Michelle Harris found her mother dead in a living-room chair and three of the dead children at her feet — her own daughter Marcella, 3; Frank Harris, the dead woman's son, 4; and Alfred Troutman, 4, a distant cousin.

"My mother is dead! My baby is dead," she cried, running from the apartment.

POLICE ACCOMPANIED her back to the scene and found the fourth child, Lamont Vega, 3, son of a neighbor, in a back bedroom near an open window. Police said he may have gotten there in a vain attempt to escape the killer.

The bodies had stabbing and bludgeoning wounds, Rudden said. They were taken to the medical examiner's office. A finding on the cause of death was expected today or Monday.

Reagan returns with allies' support

By JAMES GERSTENZANG

BONN, West Germany (AP) — From his arrival in Paris in a thunderstorm, to his departure from Bonn as the skies opened up, President Reagan had one overriding theme on his first presidential European tour: Finding support among the allies for his efforts to contain the Soviets, militarily and economically.

The president's aides say that as Reagan conferred with others on the world stage at the economic summit conference in Versailles, in Rome, in London and then in the West German capital at a rare summit of NATO leaders, he achieved most of the success he sought.

In the splendor of Versailles, he won endorsement of the tough economic stance he has taken toward the Soviets, despite European reluctance to risk reducing East-West trade during a period of economic difficulties.

An Analysis

But presidential counselor Edwin Meese III said here that "there are differences of opinion on the extent to which we should restrict East-West trade. Maybe some minds were changed both ways."

At the North Atlantic Treaty Organization meeting, the 16 participants came up with a statement on defense reaffirming the alliance's three-part strategy of medium-range nuclear weapons based in Europe, long-range nuclear missiles based in the United States, and conventional forces in Europe.

And the president told a throng of diplomats, members of Congress, and Republican supporters bused out to Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland to welcome him home Friday evening: "I can report that we accomplished what we set out to do on this trip. Our friendships are firm and America is once again respected by allies and potential adversaries alike."

Despite the Israeli advance into Lebanon, a topic of disscussion at every stop, aides say the president was able to focus on the broader topics on the pre-arranged agendas.

Officials had expressed concern before the trip that anti-Reagan demonstrators might disrupt it, or draw attention from it, but the only major protests occurred in Germany, and these were well out of sight of the president.

A presidential trip out of the country carries with it certain built-in benefits, as well as possible risks. Extensive news coverage in the United States is guaranteed. Several hundred reporters, photographers and broadcast technicians and producers shadowed the president on a chartered jumbo jet, magnifying every sentence spoken in public and every report of his private conversations.

The president's aides made it clear before he left that the trip offered a good opportunity to portray the president on a daily basis taking a leadership role in international diplomacy, at a time when there were signs that his political popularity is slipping.

The risks?

Southern Lebanon decimated

EDITOR'S NOTE: Syrian trucks and armored vehicles blasted into cinders by Israeli air strikes litter the Beirut-Damascus highway. Associated Press correspondent Nicolas B. Tatro drove the 56-mile stretch with other journalists Saturday and filed this report.

By NICOLAS B. TATRO

MASNAA, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian tanks and armored personnel carriers rumbled through this border post Saturday on their way home, passing the barely recognizable charred remains of Syrian army convoys destroyed by Israeli air strikes.

The immigration office issued no visas. The building had been shattered by an Israeli attack before a cease-fire halted the Syrian-Israeli fighting Friday. There were no sounds of battle along the 56-mile highway Saturday until the outskirts of Beirut, where Israeli forces pounded Palestinian positions.

The destruction begins just inside Lebanon's border with Syria, between the Syrian checkpoint at Jdeide and Masnaa on the Lebanese side. Bombs have destroyed several hundred yards of pavement and the blackened remains of Syrian tanks, trucks, armored personnel carriers and civilian automobiles lay in tangles of wreckage on the roadside.

Towns along the road were deserted except for some Syrian soldiers in battle dress strolling the streets or lying by the roadside in groups of two or three. Shops were shuttered and a gasoline shortage kept most taxis off the highway.

In the Armenian village of Anjaar, five miles west of this border town, schoolteacher John Kojain offered reporters a cup of thick Arabic coffee and said fierce air battles had continued over the vast farmlands of the Bekaa Valley right up until the cease-fire Friday.

"We have had no water since last Sunday and no electricity for two days," Kojain said. "There is no gasoline either so we can't go anywhere."

Kojain said he and his wife carried water from a spring at the edge of the village.

Anjaar is famous for its fresh water trout but the villagers said no fish were left. "The soldiers have taken them all," said one man, referring to the Syrian special forces soldiers who strolled the streets dressed in red-camouflaged fatigues with AK-47 rifles slung over their shoulders.

Shops in the village remained closed despite the fact that the thump of artillery and the aerial dogfights had stopped. Shopkeepers apparently feared the soldiers would take their goods without paying.

In the town of Chtaura, midway between the border and the Lebanese capital of Beirut, several shops on the eastern outskirts of the city were shattered by shells, the goods scattered in the street. Apartments on the second floor had been cracked open like egg shells. Smoke continued to pour from one burned-out store.

Syrian troops were still dug in around the town that had been their headquarters in the Bekaa Valley before Israel invaded. Most of the Syrian forces, however, appeared to have left since the cease-fire.

Iraq holding to cease-fire

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraq said Saturday it was maintaining its unilateral cease-fire with Iran despite daily artillery fire from Iranian forces.

A military communique said the Iranians shelled Iraqi military positions Saturday morning and directed artillery fire at vital installations in the Iraqi port city of Basra.

No casualty or damage figures were reported.

Iraqi military communiques over the past three days have said Iraqi troops were responding only when fired upon but that they are maintaining a complete standdown in military operations.

The Iraqis said 37 Iranian and seven Iraqi soldiers were killed Thursday and Friday in exchanges initiated by the Iranians.

An Iraqi military spokesman denied earlier in the day claims by Iran that Iraqi warplanes and artillery bombarded the Iranian city of Abadan on Friday.

Iraq announced the unilateral cease-fire early Thursday after a meeting by the ruling Baath party and army commanders, who resolved to offer Iran a peace package based on total Iraqi withdrawal from Iranian territory within two weeks and binding arbitration of disputed issues.

An official Iraqi spokesman has invited the Iranian government to "reply clearly and frankly" to the Iraqi proposals, which have been snubbed by Iranian political commentators demanding the ouster of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

The spokesman also said Iraq would allow Iranian forces to cross Iraqi territory "on their way to Syria and Lebanon" as soon as Iran agrees to a cease-fire.

There was no elaboration, but Turkey said Saturday it will allow Iranian planes to fly over it carrying food and medicine to Lebanon.

Meanwhile, Sudan on Saturday gave Iran's diplomats there four days to leave the country because of "the hostile activities of the mission against the Sudan and its people."

The official Sudan news agency said the Iranian charge d'affaires in Khartoum was summoned by the undersecretary of the foreign ministry, Hashim Osman, who told him that the decision was taken because the diplomats are acting in a way which "contradicts the role of the diplomatic missions."

Airliner crashes in Brazil

TABATINGA, Brazil (AP) — A domestic airliner missed its approach in a dense jungle fog and slammed into the airport control tower Saturday, killing all 44 people aboard, authorities reported.

The Irondelle SH-227 aircraft broke into several pieces on the ground and the 40 passengers and four crew members apparently died instantly, said Joaquim da Silva dos Santos, an airport employee in this Amazon community. He said the crash occurred about 6:30 a.m. and visibility was only about 100 yards.

The twin-engine turboprop Irondelle was new on the route, but Taba officials said the apparent cause of the accident was the poor visibility, which allowed an instruments-only approach.

A Taba spokesman in Manaus, Carlos Leal, said all the victims were Brazilians except the Portuguese pilot, Manuel Teixeira Estanqueiro. Leal said the airline was sending company officials to investigate the accident.

The Taba plane was on the second stop of a regional Amazon flight scheduled to fly the Ironete-Tabatinga-Tefe-Manaus-Belem route, according to Leal. Tabatinga is on the far western Amazon border of Brazil, at the junction of Peru and Colombia.

The accidnt is the third fatal crash in Brazil since May 24, when a VASP Boeing 727 split in two on landing in Brasilia, killing two men. On Tuesday another VASP plane, a Boeing 737, crashed on its approach to the Fortaleza airport in Brazil's northeast, killing 137 people.

Israeli town sceptical of 'Operation Peace'

By MORT ROSENBLUM

MAALOT, Israel (AP) — Israeli leaders have proclaimed "Operation Peace for Galilee" a success. But in Maalot, where a wound inflicted by Palestinian terrorists still festers after eight years, people are not convinced.

"Peace? Who thinks there is peace?" Mayor Salmon Bohbot said Saturday, the day after a cease-fire was called in a six-day Israeli military thrust into Lebanon.

"We know the Arabs too well," Bohbot said. "There won't be peace until the United States and Russia let us finish by ourselves what needs to be done — drive all the terrorists out of Lebanon."

Israel said its invasion was intended to drive Palestinians beyond artillery range of northern Israeli settlements in the Galilee. The government said the cease-fire applied to Syrian troops that resisted the invasion, and Israeli soldiers were reported still fighting Palestinians on Saturday.

This flower-fringed village of concrete housing blocks is populated mainly by immigrants from North Africa, who for years had felt bitter at being planted in the remote Galilee, where they felt they were forgotten.

On May 15, 1974, Maalot got its name on the world map through a violent act of cruelty. Palestinian terrorists swooped on the town from Lebanon, murdered a family of four and two other Arab women, and seized a school where they held 95 hostages, most of them children.

The terrorists demanded the release of imprisoned guerrilla comrades. The government ordered troops to storm the building. Twenty-two children were killed in the firefight, or by jumping from upper-story windows.

"So we know what terrorism is," said Bohbot, who was deputy mayor at the time. "Most of us come from North Africa and we know the Arabs. With Arabs, if you're not strong, you're nothing."

Maalot, six miles from the Lebanese border, was one of several Israeli towns hit by similar acts of terrorism in the mid-1970's that were burned into the national conscience and turned public opinion against any thought of compromise with the Palestinians.

Maalot has been relatively quiet since 1974 — relatively. Last weekend, for example, three 130mm shells landed in town, demolishing several cars.

"Outsiders criticize Israel for being harsh," Bohbot said. "They don't understand. How can we live life in shelters? Kids can't go to school, and we can't work. That's no life. Maybe if terrorists bombed New York or Washington, they would understand."

At the school, the name of each victim of the massacre is inscribed near a wall-sized print of a famous photograph showing a youngster carrying his wounded sister away from the bloodbath.

"It makes you cry every time you look at it," said one resident who, like most people in town, says the rattle of bullets and the screams of the children are still fresh in his mind.

A "garden of remembrance" was planted at the school; a concrete slab is monument to the victims.

Haim Aish-Shalom, 27, is proud that his name means "Man of Peace." He said: "Of course I want peace. We all do. We dream of it. Perhaps 'Operation Peace for Galilee' is it. Anyway, I hope."

The mayor's wife, Karen, said: "We should not let this chance go by. Who knows, maybe this will last."

But the general mood clearly is skeptical. At the Magen David Emergency Clinic, a young man who was called into the army for the Lebanon battle repeated a theme often heard here: "I don't believe there is a cease-fire. We must finish the problem."

A friend of his, a Jew in sidecurls and skullcap, closed a large leatherbound prayerbook which he was reading in honor of the Sabbath and said: "We all want peace but we don't have it yet."

Both agreed that people from Maalot represented a common view in Galilee, and interviews elsewhere bear this out. Here, the subject of children and terrorism comes up often.

"Did you see those pictures on television of 10-year-old and 12-year-old kids fighting for the terrorists?" asked Bohbot. "What a thing to do to children."

Bohbot described a scene he had watched on the TV news in which an Israeli soldier caught a 12-year-old Palestinian kid trying to kill him. The soldier took the child's gun, blindfolded him and gave him food.

"The soldier said: 'Look, this boy is my brother's age,'" Bohbot recalled. "How could the soldier kill him? And look at what the terrorists do to us."

Unidentified attackers sack Guatemalan village

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Unidentified attackers clad in olive-green uniforms massacred residents of a village in northwestern El Quiche province, survivors of the attack said Saturday. Sixteen people were reported killed in a separate village raid.

Two women, both badly cut by blows from the machete-wielding attackers, told reporters at a hospital in the provincial capital of Huehuetenango, 85 miles northwest of here, that an undetermined number of people were killed in the attack on their village early Friday.

U.S., Israel to devise plan to exile 'terror from Lebanon'

By LARRY THORSON

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The United States and Israel will try to work out a plan to eliminate "terror from Lebanon," Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir said Saturday.

He said U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib will confer with the Israeli government Sunday and that Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. might arrive "at some point."

"We will seek together with the United States a suitable arrangement that will put an end to terror from Lebanon," Shamir said in an Israel Radio interview.

Shamir said Israel had achieved its objective of denying southern Lebanon to the Palestine Liberation Organization and was continuing its assaults against PLO targets in the Beirut area after ceasing fire with the Syrians Friday.

"With Syria, yes, the fighting has ended since it is an established state and government, but not with the PLO," Shamir said.

Israel would be seeking, in the negotiations through Habib, "agreements that will defend Israeli interests...with negotiations that will begin in the next few days," Shamir said.

The foreign minister said Israel's goal in Lebanon was to "make peace with a government that is able to make peace with us." Shamir asserted that Israel wants Lebanon to be free and independent.

Syria has maintained an army in Lebanon since 1976, ostensibly to police the armistice that ended the Moslem-Christian civil war.

Habib was in Jerusalem and Damascus before the cease-fire was announced, but there was no indication that American intervention played a major role in working out the truce with the Syrians.

Haig said as much Friday, telling reporters while flying with President Reagan from Europe to Washington that the Israelis had realized their military objectives. "That's usually what brings nations to stop unless counterforce does," Haig said.

Israel's political objectives remained unclear and the subject of some debate within Israel, but in southern Lebanon Israeli military authorities took one concrete and symbolic step by handing control of two Moslem villages to Maj. Saad Haddad, the renegade Lebanese army officer who runs an Israeli-supported "Free Lebanon" in the border zone.

Associated Press correspondent Richard Pyle saw Haddad take over Doueir, four miles west of the captured Palestinian center of Nabatiyeh, and promise that the people would be well protected.

A Shiite Moslem leader in Doueir declared: "We love Haddad, we love the Israelis, it is good that they come to Lebanon to free us."

Though the undamaged town had not been used by the Palestinians, the Israeli decision to give Haddad control there appeared to be a thread in the anti-Palestinian net Israel is casting over southern Lebanon.

When Israel invaded last Sunday its stated goal was to drive the Palestinians 25 miles beyond artillery range of civilians in northern Israel. Now the Israelis are more than 50 miles beyond the border.

Eliahu Ben-Elissar, chairman of Parliament's Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee, said on Israel Radio that Israeli troops had driven beyond the 25-mile goal to "give the government options, cards" to use in the coming negotiations.

"The Lebanese themselves want to liberate themselves. We can help them by not leaving...unless all foreign elements leave," he said.

Getting Syria's 30,000 troops out of Lebanon could be one Israeli ambition in the negotiations, but some comment broadcast on Israel Radio indicated the opposition Labor Party was uneasy about setting too ambitious goals.

"War can prevent, it cannot create," former Foreign Minister Abba Eban said, quoting an ancient proverb.

Former Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said 7,000 to 10,000 Palestinian guerrillas remained in Beirut, and Syrians were there too, and they would remain "a factor in determining the future of Lebanon."

Rabin said he believed the United States and Western Europe might contribute troops to a multinational force to take over areas where Israel would withdraw.

Chaim Herzog, a former head of military intelligence and now a Labor member of Parliament, said he also believed an international force "with a very meaningful American presence" was needed, "because otherwise one cannot be sure it will be strong enough, firm enough and stay long enough..."

Population of Lebanon in 'unbearable' condition

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — More than 600,000 people have been driven from their homes as a result of Israel's invasion of Lebanon and shortages of food, water and medicine have reached crisis proportions, a Red Cross official said Saturday.

Francesco Noseda, head of the International Committee of the Red Cross in Lebanon, told a news conference "the conditions for civilians are unbearable."

"I fear the horrors the city of Beirut will face unless there is a solution" to the fighting," Noseda said shortly before a cease-fire silenced the guns in the capital Saturday night.

He said $19 million worth of emergency relief supplies were needed, and called on the international community for help.

But Noseda said that in the port city of Sidon, 25 miles south of Beirut, the Lebanese Red Cross had estimated 1,000 to 1,500 civilians were killed and 2,000 to 3,000 were wounded. "The figure may go higher," he added.

Farther south in the Israeli-held former Palestinian stronghold of Tyre, 12 miles north of the Israeli border, Red Cross officials counted 47 dead and 247 wounded in the old city alone, and Noseda said 50 percent of the houses there were damaged beyond repair.

He said three Palestinian camps surrounding the city were virtually deserted. Before the Israeli attacks, the camps of Rashidiyeh, Bourj el-Chemali and Al-Bass had 100,000 Palestinians living in them, but now there were fewer than 1300, he said, adding: "Ninety percent of the houses in the three camps have been smashed."

As a result of the fighting, Noseda estimated 200,000 refugees had camped near the central Lebanese mountain town of Jezzin; a former Syrian-controlled town where 50 percent of the houses were damaged by the fighting. He said about 200,000 had gathered in the southern Bekaa Valley city of Hasbaya and an equal number around Sidon.

The figures indicated the number of homeless was nearly three times as great as in March 1978 when Israeli forces invaded southern Lebanon up to the Litani River and held the ground for 19 days.

Thousands of refugees also have flocked to Beirut, where many forced their way into apartments and buildings under construction at gunpoint. Noseda said he could not estimate the casualties or the number of homeless in the capital city.

"If a battle for Beirut takes place, the problems for the civilian population will be multiplied by a figure I don't know. It will be unbearable, enormous," Noseda said.

The capital contains a third of the nation's total population of three million. Already, electricity is being rationed in mostly Moslem west Beirut, food is in short supply and water has been cut off to many buildings.

Noseda said the International Red Cross had planes loaded with relief supplies standing by to fly to Beirut "as soon as security conditions permit." He said the planes were in Larnaca, Cyprus, and Geneva, Switzerland.

He said the Red Cross intended to carry the supplies to southern Lebanon by road convoy from Beirut.

SMART

Back in '59 Xerox revolutionized American business with the copier. Clever. Then in '75 Savin revolutionized copying with the liquid toner transfer process. Smart.

Savin's liquid toner produces permanent dry copies with no pressure and little heat, making paper jams almost obsolete. Of course having a short 12 inch paper path helps too.

As you can see, it doesn't take a miracle to design a reliable plain paper copier. You just have to be smart.

Poland releases more internees

By THOMAS W. NETTER

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's martial law authorities released another 257 internees, lifted the overnight curfew in the Baltic port city of Szczecin and recommended further relaxation of martial law curbs Saturday.

The actions on the eve of the seven month-anniversary of the Dec. 13 military crackdown were attributed to "the progressing normalization of life" in Poland, state television reported.

The interior minister also ordered provincial governors to examine reinstating social, scientific and cultural organizations, suspended since last December and called for the lifting of the midnight to 5 a.m. curfew in the capital.

The release of another batch of interned leaders, activists and associates of the suspended trade union Solidarity leaves about 1,743 people still interned since last December.

At least 7,000 people have been interned by the authorities during martial law.

Saturday's announcement was the second major easing of martial law curbs since December after the release in April of 1,000 internees and the lifting of the curfew. The curfew was slapped down again during subsequent rioting in Szczecin, Warsaw and a dozen other cities May 3 and was timed to coincide with the 13th, a day when many Poles have symbolically marked another month of martial law through passive protest and token strikes.

This month the 13th falls on a Sunday, a day when few enterprises and factories are working. There have been no rumors or reports from the union's underground of planned protests. The Warsaw chapter of Solidarity has, in fact, told its members to abandon previous forms of protest for now.

Despite reports in the underground press of planning for a general strike there has been no definite announcement of a time or date as of yet.

The Communist Party daily Trybuna Ludu marked the end of the first six months with a somewhat optimistic editorial saying "martial law brought a sobering down of minds and calming down of the atmosphere.

"The majority of Poles accepted various restrictions with understanding, despite problems which they are causing," the paper said. "The improving mood of society and the growing efficiency of state mechanisms made it possible to life many restrictions fairly quickly."

Nevertheless, the paper said, some restrictions remain in effect and over a thousand unionists remain interned. It warned that attempts to "aggravate" the situation anew must not be repeated.

The Polish news agency PAP, meanwhile accused the International Labor Organization of being led by "capitalist employers and right-wing trade union leaders" in an apparent response to an ILO committee's condemnation of the crackdown on Solidarity.

The agency described the Geneva-based organization as one of the "most conservative and anti-socialist organizations" in the United Nations' system.

U.S.S.R. prepares for war, says Polish exile

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A former Polish ambassador says the Soviet Union is preparing for war against Western Europe as a prelude to a major world power struggle in which he believes his homeland will be pivotal.

Zdzislaw Rurarz, who defected to the United States from his post in Japan last December, said the Soviet-backed military crackdown in Poland and Polish reaction to it will help decide East-West relations.

"I am a bit pessimistic when it comes to the future — war or peace," Rurarz told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram in a copyright story published Saturday.

Rurarz, who was visiting with friends here, said he believes the Soviets would launch the war against Western Europe with a conventional blitzkrieg across northern East Germany into West Germany, possibly within the next two or three years.

To win such a war, the Russians would have to rely on Poland's army, the third largest in eastern Europe. Resistance from the Polish populace and from the ranks of the Polish army has dealt the Russians a major setback, Rurarz said.

"The Soviets definitely would not strike against Western Europe without the Polish army," he said. "They would be unable to win."

Pointing to examples of continuing resistance, he cited an almost daily occurence at the tomb of Polish folk hero Cardinal Stefan Wyszynski, where members of the army honor guard goose-step in salute as they pass an illegal memorial to miners who died during the early days of Poland's military rule.

"They are supposed not to do that," he said. "But they do."

The former ambassador predicted that many in the army and security police will balk at raising arms against their own people.

Soviets intimidate members of independent peace group

By STEVEN R. HURST

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet police cracked down on Moscow's only independent peace movement, and by Saturday night 10 of the group's 11 members had been taken to police stations and threatened.

The only one not taken into custody was Igor Sobkov, a psychiatrist who reportedly was in the countryside.

Sergei Rozenoer, a 29-year-old mathematician and a co-founder of the group, was under house arrest. He was taken to the district prosecutor's office Friday and told to stop the activities of the group, he said.

Two plainclothes policemen and a uniformed militia colonel visited Rozenoer's apartment late Saturday afternoon while he was talking with Western correspondents.

One of the plainclothes policemen, wearing brass-toed cowboy boots and a kelly green snap-brimmed hat, lectured the correspondents for about 15 minutes about the character of the 11 members of the organization, which calls itself "The Group For Establishing Trust Between The USSR And The USA."

"These people are not solid, serious people," the policeman said, adding that the reporters should be concerned with the reputations of their news organizations.

"They are disseminating distorted information," the policeman said gesturing to Rozenoer. "Half of the group wants to the leave the Soviet Union to go to Israel," he added.

The co-founder of the group, Sergei Batovrin, a 25-year-old unofficial artist, was taken into police custody for about five hours Saturday. He said, after he was released, that he too had been warned against continued activities associated with the peace movement. Its founding was announced at a news conference in Batovrin's apartment June 4.

He said the police told him he had broken a 1930's-era law about the organization of clubs.

Rozenoer said the prosecutor told him the group was a public nuisance and illegal and that he should consider his talk with the prosecutor as an official warning to cease working with the peace movement.

Eight other members of the group also were taken to prosecutors' offices or police stations Friday and Saturday and given similar warnings. All were released after several hours.

The crackdown on the organization, which has publicly called for the United States and the Soviet Union to halt all nuclear testing and for Moscow city authorities to make the capital a nuclear-free zone, appeared timed to prevent the group having contact with foreign peace organizations.

The Moscow movement had distributed three members' telephone numbers in the West earlier this week and was soliciting calls from peace activists abroad. It had said it would accept calls around the clock on Saturdays and Sundays beginning June 12.

Batovrin said he had just received a call Saturday morning from a Boston group that wanted to form the American counterpart of the Moscow organization when his phone went dead. A few moments later, he said, he was hustled off to a police station.

Batovrin and the other members of the group insist that they are not dissidents or anti-Soviet, but say the independent peace movement was necessary to provide an alternative voice to officially sanctioned peace groups. The largest such organization is the Soviet Peace Committee. It never varies from the official Kremlin position that the United States alone is to blame for the arms race.

Eight Common Market countries realign currencies to help Europe's economy

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Eight Common Market countries agreed to a major realignment of their currencies Saturday in an attempt to ease money market pressure and aid Europe's sputtering economy.

The French franc was devalued 5.75 percent and the Italian lira 2.75 percent within the European Monetary System. The value of the West German mark and Dutch guilder were increased by 4.25 percent.

It was the second devaluation of the franc and lira in eight months.

Finance ministers made the decision at an unannounced meeting, which was held over the weekend to prevent their deliberations from disturbing foreign exchange markets.

The realignment — the third in the EMS since October 1981 — was made necessary for the most part by internal economic problems in France's fledgling Socialist government.

Announcement of parallel measures in France, including an austerity drive with price and wage restraints, was expected after a Cabinet meeting Sunday.

The purpose of internal EMS devaluations is to create exchange rates based on current economic reality.

The currencies in the EMS exchange-rate system, commonly called the "snake," are the French, Belgian and Luxembourg francs, Danish krone, Irish pound, German mark, Italian lira and Dutch guilder.

Britain and Greece also are in the Common Market, but do not participate in the EMS.

Although the dollar is not part of the EMS, major devaluation of one currency within the system tends to weaken that currency against the dollar.

Even before currency markets closed on Friday, speculation of a realignment of currencies within the EMS sent the dollar soaring against the French franc.

The dollar was quoted at 6.3 francs in New York, compared to 6.2 on Thursday. The U.S. currency was quoted at 2.39 West German marks, down from 2.41; 2.64 Dutch guilders, down from 2.66, and 1,325 Italian lire, down from 1,334.

The chairman of Saturday's meeting, Belgian Finance Minister Willy de Clercq, said the French program "could encourage the cohesion of Europe. We are all sick, but the fever is not equally high."

The devaluation means French exports will now sell for less abroad, increasing sales of French goods in other countries. Americans in France will get more francs for their dollars and French consumers will have to pay more for imports.

The other changes were designed to bring the mark, lira and guilder into line with true exchange-market conditions.

As he entered the Common Market's Borschette Building, West German Finance Minister Manfred Lahnstein told reporters: "We're ready to make a step toward the French." French Finance Minister Jacques Delors declined comment.

The last EMS realignment was in February, when the Belgian and Luxembourg francs were devalued 8.5 percent. Last October, the franc and lira were devalued by 3 percent and the West German mark and Dutch guilder were increased in value by 5.5 percent.

Mozambique needs former soldiers to combat attacks by rebel forces

LISBON (AP) — Mozambican President Samora Machel asked nearly 1,000 former independence fighters Saturday "to take off your ties and go back into uniform" to combat increased attacks by rebel forces, according to reports reaching here.

A report from the Mozambican capital of Maputo carried by Portugal's national news agency, ANOP, said Machel received a positive response from Frelimo, the ruling Marxist party established from the guerrilla movement after Mozambique won independence from Portugal in 1975.

The rebel Mozambique National Resistance, which Frelimo charges is South African-supported, has stepped up attacks on key economic targets and communications links throughout central and northern Mozambique in recent weeks. The group claims to be fighting for a multi-party system.

Israeli ambassador defends invasion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israeli Ambassador Moshe Arens said Saturday Israeli troops "absolutely" will be withdrawn from Lebanon, but only after the government in Beirut is able to assert its control over territory that was dominated by the Palestine Liberation Organization.

"There is no reason why this should take more than a few months," Arens said on Cable News Network's "Newsmaker Saturday" program.

Arens, Israel's ambassador to the United States, defended his country's invasion of southern Lebanon and claimed it may have destroyed the PLO's military capability.

Arab governments, including Jordan and Saudi Arabia, are privately "breathing a sigh of relief" that Israel smashed PLO strongholds in Lebanon, Arens said.

"Even though they may not say so, and cannot afford to say so, I don't think they are particularly unhappyu to see the PLO military capability being significantly reduced," he said.

PLO operations stretched to the Red Brigades in Europe, to Central America, and menaced the authority of several Arab governments, the Israeli official said.

Poles fly to U.S. base, seek asylum

BERLIN (AP) — Three Poles stole a single-engine plane from an aviation club, pasted on Soviet markings, then flew it to a U.S. air base in West Berlin early Saturday and asked for political asylum.

A spokeswoman at Tempelhof airfield said the three gave this account:

They overpowered a night watchman at an aero-sports club in the southern Polish city of Wroclaw, decorated a 30-year-old Yak-12 airplane with Soviet labels and then took off for the West. They insisted the watchman was not injured.

When they landed at Tempelhof, they said they had fled their homeland because of the martial law imposed by Poland's communist regime Dec. 13 to crush the independent Solidarity trade union and political reforms.

Pollution won't cause fall of obelisk

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Rome fireman said Saturday that pollution from tour buses would not cause the ancient Egyptian obelisk in St. Peter's Square to collapse.

Fire Chief Elveno Pastorelli said there was some corrosion of the bronze base of the obelisk and the metal lines holding up the cross on the top, but there was no danger to passersby.

The obelisk, supported by four bronze horses, was brought to Rome from Egypt in 37 A.D. by the emperor Caligula. Pope Sixtus V put it in St. Peter's Square in 1586.

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The Philippines marked the 84th anniversary of its declaration of independence from Spain Saturday with a reaffirmation by President Ferdinand E. Marcos of his country's adherence to the principles of free enterprise and democracy.

Convicted banker disappears in Rome

ROME (AP) — Roberto Calvi, a banker convicted last year of illegal currency export and a former associate of jailed financier Michele Sindona, has disappeared, police reported Saturday.

Somalian officials arrested in latest government purge

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Somalia's military government announced its second purge in less than 14 months Saturday, saying a vice president and six other high-ranking officials face trial in an alleged subversion plot with an "enemy country."

Observers said the action appeared aimed at consolidating Western-leaning President Mohamed Siad Barre's hold on power in this impoverished east African nation of 4 million people.

The officials news agency SONNA said seven state and party officials, including Third Vice President Ismail Ali Aboukar, were arrested Wednesday in Mogadishu, the capital.

Details of the purported plot were not disclosed, nor was the name of the "enemy country" linked to the alleged conspiracy.

Diplomatic sources reached by telephone from Nairobi said there was no "unusual security" activity in Mogadishu to indicate there had been any coup attempt.

"The government is convinced that the arrested were working in collusion with an enemy country to undermine the very existence of the Somali nation," said the brief SONNA announcement telexed to The Associated Press bureau here.

Somalia previously has contended that Ethiopia, its neighbor on the Horn of Africa, remains hostile after defeating Somalia in a 1977-78 war over the Ethiopian province of Ogaden.

Somalia also says it is threatened by an alliance formed last August by Ethiopia, Libya and South Yemen — another Soviet client state located across the Gulf of Aden from Somalia's northern coast.

Siad Barre has lobbied without success for U.S. arms and political backing, pointing to Soviet-backed Ethiopia with a 250,000-man army buttressed by about 15,000 Cuban troops and 3,000 Soviet and East German advisers. Somalia's army has a strength of 60,000.

But observers in the region say the president faces a more immediate threat from within his army and ruling Somalia Revolutionary Socialist Party.

Israel used new weapons in Lebanon

By VICTOR L. SIMPSON

TEL AVIV (AP) — Israel's military, which prides itself as an unconventional fighting force, sprang an array of surprises in its thrust deep into Lebanon.

Among them were a new Israeli tank called the Chariot and secret electronic gear to neutralize Syria's batteries of Soviet-built surface-to-air missiles.

Here is a reconstruction of the military action in operation "Peace for Galilee," billed by Israel as a move to silence Palestinian guns pounding Israeli settlements just south of the Lebanese border:

Sunday, June 6:

Israeli forces staged a three-pronged attack on southern Lebanon. U.N. peacekeeping forces, stationed in southern Lebanon since Israel's last invasion in 1978, reported five columns of tanks bearing the Star of David were advancing on a wide front and that one column had reached the outskirts of the coastal town of Tyre, 12 miles north of the border.

Within the first hour, Israel suffered its only acknowledged loss of a warplane in the conflict, a Skyhawk jet shot down by Palestinian guns.

It was not until 11:30 p.m. that Israeli soldiers fighting their way through minefields and in hand-to-hand combat with the 30 to 50 well entrenched Palestinian defenders took Beaufort Castle, a 2,250-foot stronghold. The Israelis suffered 18 casualties.

Monday, June 7:

During the night, tanks and commandos poured off navy landing craft to lay siege to Sidon, the seat of the Palestine Liberation Organization's command of guerrilla forces in southern Lebanon.

The navy also shelled Tyre. Thousands of refugees, urged on by Israeli soldiers bellowing in Arabic over bullhorns, streamed to the beach to escape the relentless pounding of the city. The Israeli army moved in at 6 p.m. in the second major conquest of the now two-day-old war.

In the first two days of battle, 25 Israeli soldiers were killed, 7 were missing, and 96 wounded.

Tuesday, June 8:

Israeli forces were advancing in three directions: up the coast, through central Lebanon and north through the country's eastern flank where Syrian troops stationed as an Arab peacekeeping force after the Lebanese civil war of 1975 were dug in.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin appealed to Syria to stay out of the fighting. But Israel said it shot down six Syrian MiGs in a series of air clashes and reported ground battles between small units of tanks.

Defense Minister Ariel Sharon would later reveal that Israel sent its home-made Merkava (Chariot) tank into combat for the first time. He said the Merkava destroyed nine Syrian T-72s, which he described as the most modern and advanced Soviet tank. He did not say whether any Merkavas were hit.

Wednesday, June 9:

Syrian and Israeli warplanes engaged in their biggest aerial clash since the 1973 war. The military command said it knocked out Syria's missile umbrella in the Bekaa Valley of eastern Lebanon and downed 29 of its Soviet-made warplanes.

An Israeli pilot interviewed on Israeli television said every type of plane in the Israeli air force took part in the operation, and not one was lost. Israel has U.S.-Made F-15s, F-16s, and Skyhawks, and home-made Kfir fighter-bombers.

The pilot said the air force used devices that homed in on the missiles' plane-seeking radar. The Israelis had been working on plans for such an attack for more than a year, and by their account, it went off perfectly.

An Analysis

South African rule over Namibia may be ending after 16 years of war, nine years of negotiations

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A diplomatic effort to create an independent Namibia and end a 16-year guerrilla war in the last colony in Africa is gaining momentum.

Signals from the many sides in the conflict have raised hopes for elections in March, 1983, to draft a Namibian constitution. An agreement would end South African rule over the territory it calls South-West Africa.

Voices as disparate as guerrilla leader Sam Nujoma, Prime Minister P.W. Botha of South Africa and the U.S. assistant secretary of state for African affairs, Chester Crocker, have sounded optimistic about the latest push. Diplomats held a new round of talks in southern African capitals last week, including a stop at the guerrillas' headquarters in Angola.

Negotiations have been under way for nine years. They involve the United Nations, the black-ruled "Front-Line States" surrounding South Africa and five Western countries charged by the United Nations with forging a settlement in the territory, an arid landscape rich in uranium and other minerals.

"In view of recent statements by the South African government, the five believe a valuable, indeed unique, opportunity now exists" to begin implementation of a Namibian peace plan by the end of 1982," the diplomats said Saturday on arrival in Dar Es Salaam, Tanzania, from Angola.

Talks in Luanda between the "Western Five contact group" representatives, Njumoa's South-West Africa Peoples organization (SWAPO) and Angolan officials went "reasonably well," a Western diplomatic source said.

The envoys were to confer with Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere and Foreign Minister Salim A. Salim.

Negotiations bogged down in April when SWAPO rejected a voting proposal by the contact group.

The plan called for each vote to be counted twice — once for an individual candidate and once for a party. SWAPO leaders said the plan was too complex for the mostly rural Namibians and would favor the 70,000 whites over the the black population of nearly a million.

SWAPO then stepped up its hit-and-run guerrilla attacks in northern Namibia from bases across the border in Angola, killing several white farmers. South African troops tracked and killed dozens of guerrillas.

But on April 30, Botha met President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia, a leader of the Front-Line States, for talks focusing in part on Namibia.

The Western Five — the United States, Canada, France, Britain and West Germany — stepped up contacts in regional capitals.

The presence of 20,000 Cuban troops in Angola has been a major U.S. concern, but Angola says they are needed because of South Africa's presence in Namibia, including periodic cross-border raids against guerrilla bases.

Nujoma traveled to West Germany two weeks ago for talks with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. He said after the meeting: "There seems to be a definite degree of seriousness in the so-called Contact Group's approach to the negotiations."

A senior U.S. official in Washington said Thursday the talks are "reaching a critical phase." He said a plan to implement Namibian independence could be complete "as early as the next few months."

He said the election dispute would probably be sidestepped and efforts concentrated on thornier issues such as the role of an envisioned U.N. peacekeeping force during the transition period and guarantees of U.N. impartiality sought by South Africa.

Prime Minister Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe, the newest black-governed nation in Africa, also expressed optimism after a tour to seven European nations. He said South Africa finally appears willing to end its control of the territory, which was turned over to it by an old League of Nations mandate in 1920.

In Namibia itself, Chairman Dirk Mudge of the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance, the main political party, called for agreement on key disputes within 30 days to pave the way for elections by March.

Responding to the speech, Prime Minister Botha said, "South Africa will not stand in the way of South-West Africa's independence." He added that the delicate process by the Western Five "has apparently brought us nearer to an understanding than ever before."

The new U.S. Ambassador to South Africa, Herman Nickel, said the goal was for the independence process to begin by September. Under the U.N. resolution on Namibia, elections for a pre-independence Constitutional Assembly would be held seven months later.

Menagerie of memories

While plans are under way for a zoo to be built in Odessa, empty cages are all that remain of the ill-fated Midland zoo in Cole Park. The zoo was closed in 1977, but the city has been preserving the site for a possible animal exhibit in the future.

Will a new zoo at last evolve?

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The first zoo was the Ark, the first zookeeper, Noah. And now, eons later in a world being destroyed by man rather than by God, many species of wildlife will continue to exist only through creation of modern-day "Noah's Arks."

In Odessa, that is just what the Permian Basin Zoological Society intends to do, through the planned establishment of a regional zoo to help perpetuate the 200-300 species of animals in West Texas and enhance the education of the area's residents.

"We've got a site; we've got a design," said Permian Basin Zoological Society board member Bruce Gardner of Odessa. "Bessye Cowden Ward's family has decided to donate 70 acres at the intersection of Interstate 20 and U.S. 385. There's no title yet — the transfer of land is dependent on the Internal Revenue Service's decision on whether or not to make us tax-exempt. We hope to have that in the next two or three months."

Staff Artist: Jan Drake

If all goes as planned, children may be able to observe birds and other animals native to West Texas at a zoo planned for completion in 1987 by the Permian Basin Zoological Society.

If all goes as planned, the Zoological Society hopes to initiate the first of three phases developed by local architects within two years. Initially, the zoo will consist primarily of exhibits, while 1987 is targeted for completion of a full-fledged "regional" facility.

"IT'S NOT GOING to be a zoo as one might think, with lions and tigers," explained Gardner, a local veterinarian. "It will be a regional set-up, incorporating only that animal life and wildlife in a 250-mile radius of the Permian Basin. People are unaware of the variety of wildlife we have in this area. We've probably got 200 or 300 species of mammals and birds and reptiles."

A regional zoo, said Gardner, is much more feasible for West Texas than one which would contain exotic animals. "They will not have to be acclimated and the natural food supply will be readily available," he explained, adding that solicitation of exhibits will be more economical as well.

The Society hopes to avoid the bars-cage concept inherent in most zoos, intending instead to use moats and walls. Of equal importance, said Gardner, is the manner in which the zoo will be funded and maintained.

"It will be a Society-run zoo funded by memberships and donations — not a tax supported zoo," he noted. "We want to stay independent of local governments."

THE BACKBONE of the proposed zoo is the Zoological Society, which had its genesis last September and was granted incorporation in October. Offices are located in the 500 block of E. 8th Street, and board members meet the second Tuesday of each month with open attendance allowed.

Plans for the zoo are being spurred by Society president Jay Burns, who has worked for zoos in Columbus, Ohio, and Indianapolis, Ind., imported and exported wildlife, and even had a stint working with a circus. To him, wildlife preservation has become "an obsession."

While support for the zoo is growing in Odessa, Gardner noted that thus far few Midlanders have become involved. "We've been having trouble getting support from Midland, due to the failure of their zoo several years ago," he said.

Midland's zoo at Cole Park east of the city had an up-and-down history that carried it from a deer exhibit at its initiation in June 1956 to a near-shutdown in 1968 to an exotic species facility in 1969 and, after a massive defeat of a bond issue that would have resulted in relocation and expansion, its downfall in 1977.

Wayne Kohout, director of Midland City Parks and Recreation Department, noted that the exotic zoo failed to generate enough revenue to make it self-sufficient. "Realistically, it would be pretty tough to fund an exotic species exhibit — if not impossible — considering our population," he said.

THE BOND ISSUE, which was defeated by a margin which approximated 17-1, would have relocated the zoo in a natural playa lake area south of U.S. 80 between Midland and Odessa, where animals would have been contained by moats. The Midland Zoological Society had intended to get the City of Odessa to assist in funding the facility, but a $5 million bond issue on the zoo was forced by Midland City Council before any Odessa support could be drummed up.

But even now, hopes linger within Midland Parks and Recreation Department that a modest zoo or exhibit of farm animals someday will be established.

"Our hopes within the department are to bring some type of animal exhibit back to the people of Midland County either in the form of a seasonal farm animal petting display, or a year-around indigenous species exhibit," said Kohout. "There would be nothing exotic...though there could be carnivores, but only those indigenous to the region."

KOHOUT NOTED that the city has been preserving the site at Cole Park "rather than bulldozing it down" for just that possibility. A nearby landfill might prove prohibitive ecologically, however, and the outdoor environmental learning center at Hogan Park is being considered as an alternate site.

Bruce Gardner

Jay Burns

The petting zoo concept, said Kohout, would consist of 14 animal and bird species commonly found on farms and could be inexpensively maintained on as little as one-quarter of an acre. The more ambitious concept of a zoo with species indigenous to the Southwest, meanwhile, would require considerably more funding.

We're still looking at (a proposed zoo), but we're not pursuing it actively," he said.

Both the active plans for Odessa's zoo and the passive thoughts for Midland's exhibit will require time — but that doesn't negate the possibility that someday they may exist.

After all, Noah is said to have labored as long as a century before animals first trod the decks of gopherwood.

Proposed addition to hospital could increase health care costs

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Although Midland Memorial Hospital officials say that a proposed $15 million addition to be built in 1986 would not raise property owners taxes, residents should expect an increase in health care costs.

A $200 million per year increase in the hospital district tax base forecast by the Midland County Tax Appraisal District has MMH optimistic that enough revenue will be available to pay the principal and debt for the project, according to Dale Miller, MMH vice president of finance.

"That much cushion is available in case we are not able to live up to the source of funds policy," Miller said.

MMH's source of funds policy states the hospital has three sources — patient charges, taxes and contributions — from which to receive funds. With this policy it is the intent that patient charges will provide the funds for operations, maintenance, repair and replacement, new equipment, facility modification and improvements, major expansions and bad debts.

AD VALOREM taxes on the property owners of the hospital district would be used toward indigent care and portions of debt service on new bond issues during the early years of major expansions and emergencies. They also would go toward services that are needed, but not justified cost for the property owners of the community, such as an outpatient clinic for the indigent.

The policy was approved in January by the MMH governing boards and implementation is expected to be phased in over a period of time.

It used to be that hospital taxes went toward funding indigent care, the debt service and new equipment and facilities, but with this source of funds policy, the revenue from taxes is primarily for the indigent care and, if needed, for additional services.

"However, the forecast does not show the need for us to call upon the taxpayers for this (expansion)," Roy Campbell, MMH trustee chairman, said, referring to the Midland County Tax Appraisal District prediction.

The source of funds policy is expected to be operational by the time the expansion begins, Miller noted.

"We cannot implement this overnight. It's a step by step process," Miller said, adding that funds will be raised by room rate increases, new services and cost containment, such as salaries and supplies.

AS A RESULT, users of the hospital can expect a higher cost for their health care.

Campbell said MMH's present room rates, $130 per day for a private room and $114 per day for a semi-private room, are less than any other hospital of similar size in the West Texas area.

In 1986 when the project is expected to be completed, projected room rates should be $190 for a private room and $170 for a semi-private, according to the certificate of need application.

But, the taxpayer can expect his rate to be about the same.

Campbell said the owner of a home with an appraised evaluation of $100,000 "would only be paying $6 a month toward the hospital, as opposed to 10 times this amount to the school and six times as much to the city and twice as much to the college."

The proposed 77-bed addition along with the rearrangement and expansion of labor, delivery, nursery, radiology and surgery departments has been filed in a certificate of need application to the state health agency.

Many questions have been raised in the community. Some Midlanders are particularly curious how the addition will be staffed.

ACCORDING TO the certificate of need application, an additional 44.5 registered nurses, 28.5 licensed vocational nurses and 8.4 unit clerks will be needed to staff the expansion project.

Until recently, MMH has been overcrowded and understaffed. Beds were closed and people were on a waiting list to get into the hospital.

But with a wage compensation program and a new vice president of patient care, Campbell said the situation has improved.

The hospital has recruited 14 nurses and opened 10 beds, and Campbell said he is optomistic that the recruitment and retention will continue.

"After Christmas (1981) and early spring — the flu season — very few people were waiting to get into the hospital," Campbell said. "I think we're staffed...we're just about to the point of having a waiting list."

Another question that has been raised is why not let Midland's private-for-profit hospital build a hospital and have "healthy competition."

Parkview Hospital has a certificate of need application which will be reviewed with MMH's application.

PARKVIEW'S PROPOSED $17.5 million acute care facility would change the hospital's license from a 60-bed acute care facility to a 110-bed acute care facility, including obstetric and emergency room services. However, the project would mean a new facility and location.

One of the Texas Health Facilities Commission's duties is to avoid any duplication of services in a given area. In all probabilty only one facility will be granted the application to build, unless both hospitals could have bed-need experts testify that there is a need for an additional 127 beds.

If both facilities were allowed to build or add beds, MMH officials said it would be possible that patients and doctors may be attracted to a new facility such as Parkview, leaving indigent, bad debts and a majority of medicaid/medicare patients to MMH.

MMH's bad debt, or provision for uncollectible accounts for Oct. 1, 1986, is projected to be $2,230,000 or 5 percent.

In a recent MMH governing board meeting, George Veloz, trustee, asked "Isn't this a little optimistic with the growth in Midland? I'd feel more comfortable with listing 7 or 8 percent."

But, Ray Branson, MMH president, replied that the current 9 percent bad debt ratio is expected to drop to 5 percent in the next four fiscal years.

Campbell said the figure has been as high as 11 percent just a few months ago and its now down to 9.

MMH's indigent care costs are expected to be $1,338,000 in 1986, but Campbell said this is a fixed figure in health care whether or not MMH expands.

The public also has expressed a concern with the number of administrators at MMH.

Campbell said Kelm's position is not a new position, but it has not been filled for over a year.

This family has troubles. Carolyn Kirk suffers from a bile disorder and migraines, husband Pat Kirk is out of work, and son Ray has ulcers. The family also lost all its belongings in a trailer house fire in May. But the family has hope.

Odessa family living on hope

By ED TODD

ODESSA — What do you do when your plight seems almost hopeless, and you don't want to give up?

"I've learned not to put my faith in man," said Carolyn Kirk, whose woes go beyond not having a dream house, a new car or a string of pearls, "because man is going to mess you up. You've got to put your faith in God."

She has, but is wondering why she is beset with physical afflictions and financial woes.

"They keep telling me it's a test," lamented Mrs. Kirk, "and I think I'm failing it badly, but I won't compromise my beliefs. God is good.

"You know," she said, "you can kill the body but you can't kill the soul. There's got to be an end to it somewhere."

That is her prayer, at least.

MRS. KIRK, 35, is suffering from biliary fistula — bile leaks from her liver. It's a condition which afflicted Sir Anthony Eden, former prime minister of England, she said. But that high-ranking aspect of the medical condition is no more relief than if she were ailing from gout — the supposed affliction of royalty. "I hurt so horribly bad."

The condition apparently was set off following gall-bladder surgery late in 1981 in Midland. Later, when her bile again leaked into her abdominal cavity while she was at the Mayo Clinic, "I screamed, and I screamed, and I screamed all that night."

HER WOES seem to increase and do not appear to mitigate — not yet — by prayer.

She is disabled and can't get Social Security benefits.

Her husband, Pat, 38, is out of work as a "quality assurance" inspector after he was laid off due to an economic slump in a petroleum-related industry.

Mrs. Kirk suffers from migraines.

Their son, Ray, 16, is two years behind in school, has ulcers and suffered a broken arm.

Their Odessa mobile home, mementos and accumulations from 18 years of marriage, heirlooms and five poodles were destroyed in a fire May 15 when they were at a department store to buy a birthday present for their son. The hot water heater had broken through its rotten setting in the mobile home, and the fuel exploded.

THEY FEAR that their medical insurance coverage has expired since Kirk was laid off of work at Eckel Manufacturing Co., which makes tongs for oil-field use. Before that, he was an inspector for Drilco Industrial Division of Smith International in Midland and Houston.

Still, the Kirks reflect hope in people who financially may help them until Pat Kirk is back on another job. And she is counting on man, in the name of medical science, to rectify her physical woes. "I've horrible scarring, adhesions, down there, around, behind and just all over," Mrs. Kirk said in motioning to her midriff. She is a medical research subject at Texas Tech University.

She and her family are the subject of the Low-Riders' charity work. Nick Hernandez, 30-year-old president of the Taste of Latin Low Rider Club, fanciers of sleek, big and posh sedans which hydraulicly lift and drop; fellow low rider Ysmael "Junior" Velarde, 19; and Lydia Pena, 31, are organizing a Low Rider benefit show in Permian Mall this Saturday or the following Saturday and are seeking other clubs to join in the benefit show.

Earlier, Hernandez's Low Riders raised about $5,000 to benefit Lari Mendez, a child who suffers from a liver ailment.

Ms. Pena's interest in the Kirk family began after she recently talked to Mrs. Kirk about adopting a poodle; she had lost hers.

"I TOLD HER my sad, sad story," Mrs. Kirk recalled, "and she took me in."

Though she is putting her faith in man to help the family through an economic slump, Mrs. Kirk is banking on God's help; she has been praising His glory since childhood. She was raised in the Pentecostal Church; her parents, Steve and Estelle Stephens of Midland, were ordained Pentecostal ministers in the Abilene area.

"If you want to see somebody praise the Lord, you get with with the right (Penecostal) people," she said.

Today, she has fallen away from the Pentecostal Church. The family has not yet opted again to attend a fundamentalist church, though they were disappointed by some other church-goers' lack of interest in their welfare.

She and her husband, Pat, have demonstrated faith in and love for each other by honoring their 1964 marriage contract. They met while attending Midland High School.

Mrs. Kirk is holding onto her faith in God.

"I believe God has a purpose for all things. God has a purpose for this," she said of her and her family's plight. "I'm questioning it at this point. I'm trying to figure out why. He (God) is not going to put any more on you than you can take," she surmised, "and I've just about reached my limit."

Quarter horse yearlings to be sold

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. — One-hundred regal-bred quarter horse yearlings have been approved for the second annual Ruidoso Super Select Sale here at 7:15 p.m. Aug. 29 in the Ruidoso Downs Chaparral Convention Center here.

Sisters and brothers to six champions, including two-time world champion Dash For Cash, are among those catalogued for the sale. Also on the bid list are yearlings from $100,000 producing mares.

"Once again, we're going to offer the finest quarter horse yearlings available in one night of bidding," said Richard Thompson, president and general manager of the sale. "The response to this year's sale was tremendous, and it was extremely difficult to limit the field."

More than 300 applications were processed by the Super Select Sale earlier in the year. After a pedigree evaluation by a panel of experts, 135 yearlings were chosen for conformation inspection by horseman Jerry Wells. Using Wells' evaluations, the sale panel cut the list of yearlings to 100.

Decline in farmland value reported

WACO — The annual farmland value survey conducted by the U.S. Department of Agriculture last April 1 indicates a decline in the average value of farmland in 22 states and zero change in two others.

Texas showed a 17 percent increase in land value, while six other states recorded a land value increase of 5 percent or more. For the nation, the average agricultural land value declined 1 percent.

Swine evaluation clinic to be held

FREDERICKSBURG — Southwestern pork producers are invited to a Swine Evaluation Clinic July 19 and 20 on the Gillespie County Fairgrounds off Texas Highway 16 south of this central Texas town. The opening session begins at 9 a.m.

To be highlighted by visiting swine experts are discussions on market hog visual appraisal and carcass merits of various phenotype market hogs. Among the swine experts at the clinic are to be Dr. Lauran Christian of Iowa State University, Dan E. Hoge of Black Hawk College, Kewanee, Ill., and Jim Rucker of Lexington, Okla.

Clinic participants will be visually appraising live hogs and later will examine their carcasses for quality.

Texas farmers now harvesting, planting

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Open weather is allowing Texas farmers to move forward with various field operations, including harvesting of wheat, oats and hay and planting of grain sorghum, cotton, soybeans and peanuts.

Harvesting of wheat and oats is about complete over southern and south central areas, with yields below last year, said Dr. Daniel C. Pfannstiel, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University System. Wheat harvesting is increasing in the Rolling Plains and West Central Texas where early yields look good.

A lot of hay is being made over the state and the potential is good for additional cuttings due to recent rains. Alfalfa harvesting continues in western areas and in the plains, with good yields reported.

Grain sorghum planting is in full swing in the Panhandle but most other crops in that area as well as in the South Plains have been planted, said Pfannstiel. Some grain sorghum, soybeans and cotton are being replanted in Northeast Texas due to recent heavy rains.

Peanut planting is widespread over the state, with operations under way in West Central and Central Texas as well as in South Central Texas and coastal areas. Soybean planting is in full swing along the Upper Coast.

Harvesting of a fair to good early peach crop continues, noted Pfannstiel, and cantaloupes, onions, cucumbers and tomatoes continue to move to market in the Rio Grande Valley. The watermelon harvest is peaking in Southwest Texas, where cantaloupes and honeydew melons are about ripe.

Most pastures and ranges are flourishing due to good moisture conditions and livestock are in good shape, Pfannstiel said. The cattle picture across Texas has improved considerably due to a recent strengthening in market prices.

PANHANDLE: Wheat is maturing rapidly and is turning color. Corn, sugar beets and vegetables continue to look good. Cotton planting is virtually complete but grain sorghum planting remains in full swing. First cuttings of alfalfa are being baled. Ranges remain short in western counties due to dry conditions.

SOUTH PLAINS: Recent hot days have been hard on young cotton. Planting of cotton, grain sorghum and soybeans is virtually complete. Corn, sugar beets and vegetables continue to make good progress, with some hail damage. Range and livestock conditions are good. First cuttings of alfalfa are producing good yields.

ROLLING PLAINS: Cotton planting is in full swing after rain delays, and wheat harvesting is increasing. Test weights of early wheat are about average and yields are good to excellent. Yields are ranging 30 to 40 bushels per acre in Young County. Alfalfa harvesting continues in some areas. Ranges look good but grasshoppers are heavy in many counties.

NORTH CENTRAL: Harvesting of wheat and oats is under way where fields are dry enough. Yields will likely be down due to adverse weather. Peanuts will be planted as fields dry. Some growers are still spraying for pecan nut casebearers. Cattle remain in good condition, with plenty of grazing.

NORTHEAST: Wheat harvesting has started along with first cuttings of hay. Some cotton, grain sorghum and soybeans are being replanted due to recent heavy rains. Early peaches are being harvested. A light pecan crop is in the making. Open weather is needed for pastures as well as vegetable gardens and field crops.

FAR WEST: Some early cotton is in the four-leaf stage while other fields are being replanted. Alfalfa harvesting continues. Wheat is turning color. Onion harvesting is about to start in Reeves and Loving counties. The pecan set appears less than average, with spraying complete for casebearers. Ranges are improving but some ranchers are still feeding livestock due to overstocking.

WEST CENTRAL: Cotton and peanut planting is active, and harvesting of wheat, oats and hay is in full swing. Grain sorghum is making good growth, and pastures and ranges look good. Ranchers are marketing fat lambs. Peach harvesting continues in Gillespie County.

CENTRAL: Wet fields are still delaying peanut planting in some counties; about 10 to 15 percent of the crop has been planted. About 75 percent of the wheat has been harvested, with yields below last year. Much of the oat crop is being baled for hay. Grain sorghum is heading and looks good. Pastures and ranges are good to excellent.

EAST: Corn is tasseling and looks good. Homeowers are harvesting vegetables, and early peaches are in full production. Hay making is active with open weather; yields are good. Livestock are in good shape and have plenty of grazing.

UPPER COAST: Soybean planting is in full swing, and some peanut planting continues. Hay making is active, with good yields. The wheat harvest is about complete, with yields down from last year. Most grain sorghum is headed and looks good. Early peach harvesting continues. Cattle are in good shape but mosquitoes are heavy.

SOUTH CENTRAL: Harvesting of wheat and oats is 80 to 85 percent complete, with fair yields. Peach harvesting is in full swing and hay making is increasing. Sorghum is heading and looks fair while the corn crop appears good to excellent. Pasture and range conditions are good.

Livestock confab set

WASHINGTON (AP) — An international conference to promote the export of U.S. livestock by sea will be held later this month in Portland, Ore.

The conference, scheduled for June 23-24, is intended to encourage the sale of competitively-priced, quality livestock to overseas markets and to educate U.S. business people about advances in export opportunities.

With some help, vegetables can be grown in area

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Many West Texans try vegetable gardening each year, although the challenges are greater in successfully producing such crops in our harsh environment. However, with some knowledge of how to manage soil, water and plants to offset those conditions, many vegetables can be grown with a reasonable chance of success.

In this week's column, I am going to start a two-part series on the 10 most common questions pertaining to vegetable gardening.

1. What causes the bottom of my tomatoes to turn black? The exact cause of blossom end rot is not known, but it is related to soil moisture conditions. Excessive soil moisture or dryness combines with hot, dry air, causing stress within the plant. This kills young cells at the base of the developing tomato fruit. The dead tissue darkens to form a black spot. A good mulch, a well-drained soil and closer attention to irrigation during fruit formation should help prevent this problem.

2. Why do tomato blossoms fall off in hot weather? Tomato blossoms fall off in hot weather because of interference with the natural pollinating and fertilization mechanism of the plant. Tomato blossoms are self-pollinated and in hot temperatures the style of the flower will elongate, exposing itself to the drying action of the sun and wind. This can prevent pollen from reaching the stigmatic surface of the flower or prevent pollen germination after it has reached the stigmatic surface. When night temperatures get above 72 degrees and day temperatures above 93 degrees, tomato blossoms usually fail to fertilize and begin to fall.

3. My squash plants bloom and bloom but fail to set many fruit. What's wrong? Squash and most other vine crops produce male and female blooms on the same plant. Insects, mainly bees, are necessary for pollination to cause fruit set, and eventually, squash for the dinner table. Female blooms are those with the immature squash directly behind the petals. If poor pollination is a problem, you can do the honey bee's job by transferring the pollen from male to female blooms with a small brush, cotton swab or similar instrument.

4. Why do cucumbers taste bitter? This question does not have an adequate answer at this time. The bitter taste in cucumbers and other cucurbit crops often occurs under hot, dry conditions. Fruits exposed to hot, dry weather during the maturing phase often develop a bitter taste. To prevent this, provide proper growing conditions, maintain adequate soil moisture and mulch to prevent high soil temperatures.

5. How important is variety selection with regard to canning and freezing tomatoes, cucumbers, beans, etc.? If you intend to make pickles, grow pickles. If you intend to grow cucumbers for salads then grow slicing cucumbers. Tomatoes for canning are exactly the same as those for fresh consumption. Investigations by the USDA indicate that little difference exists in the acid level of tomato varieties. Variety selection for the home garden should be determined by yield ability, adaptation to your area and insect and disease resistance.

6. How about using gin trash as a mulch and organic matter additive in my home vegetable garden? This is a tough question to answer. First, check to see if cotton producers in your area use arsenicals to defoliate cotton. Adding these materials to your garden may result in poor growth of garden plants. Unfortunately, these arsenicals do not break down readily and remain toxic to some plants for years.

7. Should I practice planting by the moon? No scientific investigation indicates that planting by the moon actually assures success. Check with your local county Extension Agent for a planting guide that gives the proper time to plant both spring and fall gardens in most areas of Texas. This information is based on the average date of last killing frost in the spring and the average date of first killing frost in the fall.

Clarence Lee Batie takes an active part in Midland Association for Retarded Citizens and the work program offered by Permian Basin Mental Health-Mental Retardation. But he and his grandmother, Novella Rowe, also give back in the form of money raised each year when they walk and roll along in the 20-mile Hike-Bike Ride for MARC.

At MARC, they make a winning team

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

"If there was a Xerox machine that could do it, I would make copies of Novella Rowe."

— MARC representative

The two form an inseparable duo and for the past five years they've pulled in the most money in the Hike-Bike Ride sponsored by the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens.

It's a picture of old and young meshing their talents, time and desires into one ball of energy that knows no limits. Together, Novella Rowe and her grandson, Clarence Lee Batie, can do anything, including what used to be considered the impossible.

Batie was born 36 years ago in Midland. He had cerebral palsy, a vision problem and was slightly mentally retarded. "Because of his condition, I felt I could take care of him better," said Mrs. Rowe. "His whole family loves him."

She took him as an infant and cared for his every need until today the situation is one of "I need him as much as he needs me. He's a lot of help to me. He's good at doing things I can't do well, like he zips my dress for me."

A spritely woman, she never believed in the word "can't" while Batie was growing up. In those days, they didn't have the many programs for handicapped and mentally retarded children that are available in Midland today.

"When Clarence came along, they wouldn't let him go to school. He's mildly retarded because he didn't have a chance to learn," she said. "He went to kindergarten until he was too old. He finally told me, 'I'm not going back.' "

The doctor told Mrs. Rowe that Clarence should be able to sit in the classroom and listen. When he was in kindergarten, that was the way he learned. "He could read books by memory. But he had two strikes against him and they wouldn't let him go on. We tried.

"Now, they have to let them go to school," she said.

As the programs to assist people like Clarence have expanded in Midland, so have his abilities. "I can see what he has done and what he is doing and compared it to what he couldn't do," said Mrs. Rowe.

There's the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens and its Pop Bottle meetings and Self-Advocate program. And he works Monday through Friday at the Community Living Evaluation Workshop, known as CLEW, which is operated by the Permian Basin Mental Health-Mental Retardation agency.

At the Pop Bottle meetings, the mentally retarded young people gather to listen to the stereo, dance, work puzzles, watch TV and enjoy being with friends. "I like to watch TV and watch them shoot pool," said Clarence.

The Self-Advocate program is designed to teach adult mentally retarded how to take care of themselves, make their own decisions and what to do in case of an emergency. Clarence takes an active role in this group, and last spring he attended the state meeting in Austin.

Clarence has been working at CLEW seven years and is described by one of the assistants as "one of our top workers."

The workers, who are mentally retarded, are trained to do piece work and they are paid for each piece. Theory behind the workshop, explained Clifta Hickman at the Midland CLEW, "is to bring skills up so they are ready for competitive employment."

They learn to put together catering packages that include a napkin and plastic silverware, a bowling glove, electrical flex-tails and key chains, she explained.

"At first, he wouldn't do the key chains. But we told him to hang in there. If you don't try, you never know what you can do," Clarence's grandmother said.

"He's met a lot of people here and they all seem to like him. I live and breathe what he does over here. He tells me everything when we get home," she added.

That's not the only thing Clarence tells her. "I like to watch TV a lot and listen to the radio," said Clarence who listed his favorite programs and persons as "Good Times," "Solid Gold" and Tom Brokaw.

"He talked me into getting cable and Spotlight (a 24-hour movie channel)," Mrs. Rowe remarked. "He can tell you everything about all the programs and channels."

After watching Clarence's involvement with the MARC programs, Mrs. Rowe decided to get involved. "I saw how he was benefiting, and I wanted to do what I could to help."

On their first Hike-Bike Ride several years ago, she solicited donations only from the family. "We weren't raising much money at first. I said, 'I know we can do better than this.' "

With that "Never Say Can't" spirit of hers, Mrs. Rowe began calling on all the people she has known since moving here in 1936. She and Clarence now have established such a reputation that they have been pulling in the most money for the past five years and winning the top award. This year, they gathered $4,345. The closest contender fell far behind with $1,452.

"All I have to do now is call friends and ask if they want to give. You don't know how much you can do unless you open your mouth and ask," Mrs. Rowe said.

At 72, her energy is still indefatigable. "People tell me I shouldn't do it all. But I want to walk as long as I can."

It's a family affair with everyone helping to push Clarence in his wheelchair. "His mother helps push him uphill. This year was just a breeze; it was cloudy and cool. Clarence is one of the best things in the world about it.

"So many people come along and ask if we need anything. Some people in a truck stopped this year and gave us $2.63. I listed it on the sheet as " 'from the brothers to the brother.' That's the first time someone just stopped us while we were on the hike-bike ride," said Mrs. Rowe.

And Clarence looks forward to the event each year. "I feel good with it," he said.

Midland's Civil Air Patrol squadron participated in the Department of the Air Force's State and Regional Defense Airlift Exercise Saturday, an exercise based on a simulated nuclear attack and recovery period.

According to Lt. Robin Matthews, squadron commander of the Midland Composite Squadron of the CAP, people from Midland, Odessa, Lamesa, Lubbock, Big Spring and Amarillo flew 10 flights in 11 hours Saturday as part of a state and regional airlift plan based in Lamesa.

The "attack" featured bombs dropped on Austin, Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston, San Antonio, Wichita Falls and Lubbock. "The mission started Thursday when the bombs were dropped and we waited 48 hours for the fallout," Matthews said.

The CAP group used five aircraft to inspect area power lines, refineries, area airports, tank farms and railroad tracks, Matthews said.

The mission, according to Matthews, was a success.

Midlander depends on pump

Device delivers diabetic's daily insulin requirement

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Ron Applin has diabetes. So do approximately 10 million other people in the U.S.

It is not an uncommon condition.

A BREAKTHROUGH in treatment for the medical problem which is more than 2,000 years old did not appear until 1922 when two Canadians discovered insulin, revolutionizing the treatment of diabetes.

In 1950 blood sugar-lowering pills were introduced for those individuals whose diabetes could not be controlled exclusively by diet, or who may have not required insulin.

Insulin carries the glucose from the blood stream into the body cells which need sugar to funtion normally. In the diabetic the pancreas fails to produce enough insulin.

For eight of his 19 years, Applin has taken as many as five insulin shots a day to control his condition.

TODAY HE doesn't receive injections, but he still receives insulin.

Applin wears a relatively new device called an insulin delivery system pump which provides him with the insulin needed.

To understand the treatment, it is important to know what the disease is and how it works. Diabetes is an energy crisis in the body whereby the body does not use glucose properly to produce energy. Experts say one reason for the condition is the lack of or inadequate use of insulin by the body. Insulin is a hormone produced by the pancreas and it is necessary in order for the body to efficiently use sugar for energy.

Applin wears a transistor radio-like box with a digital display attached to his belt. The pump has been around since 1978, but it is new to this area.

INSULIN IS released by programming the computerized, small battery-powered pump which ranges in price from $800 to $2,000.

"I really enjoy the pump. To me it's a godsend," Applin said, adding that he is "hooked on" anything computerized.

Because these pumps are believed to be the door to the future for continuous insulin infusion to become acceptable and effective means of treatment, there has been a race by many companies to develop the smallest, most technically advanced system for the delivery of insulin.

Applin has the $2,000 model, and he is one of two patients in the Permian Basin area to have such a device.

The pump has a syringe inside which releases the insulin through a tubing that is attached to the body by a small needle, very much like an intravenous tubing except it is inserted in the fatty tissue on the legs or stomach rather than the vein.

Now, before each meal, Applin presses the buttons to release a little insulin into his body as normal pancreas would.

MIDLAND PHYSician Dr. G.M. Gollapudi, a gland specialist, treated Applin a couple of months ago for his diabetes which was severely out of control. Gollapudi introduced Applin to the insulin pump at this time.

"I feel better than I've felt in years," Applin said, adding that he has gained 31 pounds in the past two months.

But, Gollapudi said that the pump should not be used by all diabetics.

"It is good for those who have difficulty in controlling their diabetes with one injection, who have a good understanding of the pump and someone at home who can monitor the glucose level," he said.

Gollapudi said sometimes the pump can give a false sense of security because of its convenience.

"It is important for the diabetic to understand that proper hygiene, diet and exercies is essential to the treatment and control of the disease," he said.

Another advantage of the pump is that the diabetic has flexibility in his meal times, whereas in the past meals had to be eaten at the same time everyday for the proper amount of sugar level in the body.

Leaders in health care, housing for aged to meet

State leaders in the health care and elderly housing field will meet in Midland June 17-19 to present the latest approaches in working with health personnel in the area of housing and long term care for elderly Texans.

Bill Saxton, executive director of Trinity Towers and president of the Texas Association of Housing for the Aging, said that a major portion of the TAHA's work as a statewide organization is in the area of legislative action.

"We anticipate probably as much as five to ten major pieces of legislation on the general subject of aging will be introduced in the next session," he said.

Among the topics that may be discussed during the Midland meeting are long term care labor relations, economic implications for an aging population, the private sector's responsibility in financing long term care, health care employees of the 1980s and changing employee value systems to affect the work outlook for the health care institutions.

The TAHA was founded in 1959 and is the single statewide agency for all forms of non-profit homes for the elderly in Texas.

Writing her way of witnessing

An intense desire to share her faith, says Anne Murchison of Dallas, has compelled her to put on paper how Christ can transform a person's life. The author of two books was in Midland recently to give a personal testimony at Hanging Tree Gallery.

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

It is said the pen is mightier than the sword.

To Anne Murchison, it is that and more — she believes the very gates of hell may crumble before it, provided the guidance of the Holy Spirit is inherent in the words which flow forth.

Mrs. Murchison is a Christian author in a world increasingly subjected to un-Christian things — violence, animosity, hopelessness, a feeling of a lack of destiny. Yet she is convinced that mankind does have a destiny, one which will take those who so desire into ultimate communion with God. And she just wants to do her part.

"The power of the printed page is maybe — next to God — the most powerful thing in the world," the Dallasite said during a recent Midland visit.

The author of two Christian books, "Milk for Babes" (Word Books, Waco, 1979) and "Praise and Worship in Earth as It is in Heaven" (Word Books, 1981), Mrs. Murchison was spurred into writing by an intense "desire to communicate something that was very important to me and that had made a real difference — the life-changing power of Jesus Christ."

IT WAS AN inability to cope with life, she said, that brought her to the Lord Feb. 12, 1976. "Try living without the Lord every minute of the day and life will chew you up, spit you out," she said. "When you're 20 you think you have all the power in the world to make life what you want it to be; you have all these wonderful plans and you're full of ideals. But by the time you're 30 you begin to see that, hey, this isn't working out the way I'd hoped and my dreams aren't coming true.

"By the time you're 40, you see people beginning to break under the yoke of life. We see people have breakdowns, becoming alcoholics and getting divorces. Life begins to fall apart for people at about that age and that's what happened to me."

When she made a commitment to Christ, she said, her life began to be transformed. As she and her husband, Dallas Cowboys owner Clint Murchison Jr., traveled around the nation on business trips, she began to share her faith with others.

"My experience was that they had no Christian friends," she recalled. "I didn't know anyone in the cities who were Christians, and I didn't know a Bible-believing church to send them to. I know the importance of discipleship. You don't get off the ground without some help in the Word of God. So I began looking around for a book that would communicate the basic principles for a new Christian to live by."

SHE WAS disappointed at her failure to find such — and the idea of writing just that kind of book began to gestate in her mind.

"I wanted to add that personal loving dimension that I didn't find in any other book, the nurturing dimension," she said.

The result was "Milk for Babes," which was written only a couple of years after her conversion experience.

"The Lord allowed me to write 'Milk for Babes' when I was still a babe, so it was communicated with simplicity and from the heart," she recalled. "It (revealed) that first love and beating heart, but also (showed) where a non-believer is coming from in the complete bewilderment about the ways of God and the character of God...I wanted to communicate with people who are maybe scared. I remember being scared of what had happened to me as being a born-again Christian, wondering what people would think."

"Praise and Worship" came a year and a half later and was the chronicle of her discovery of why she was created.

"It was understanding that God didn't save me to go out to Africa, and didn't save me to go out and do anything," she said. "God saved me to love Him. He saved me because He IS love, and He wants to communicate His love and He wants that love responded to. That's why He touched me and that's why He wants to touch all of us.... The book is about entering into the love relationship, and that love relationship is a demonstrative one."

"When you're 20 you think you have all the power in the world to make life what you want it to be. But by the time you're 30 you begin to see that, hey, this isn't working out the way I'd hoped. By the time you're 40, you see people beginning to break under the yoke of life."

MRS. MURCHISON SAID she had no prior writing background and only a high school education before she launched forth into her Christian books, but noted that in a very real sense she believes the Holy Spirit has been her co-author.

"I definitely know that's true, because I've been told by a lot of people that a two-year-old Christian should not be able to write 'Milk for Babes'," she said. "It had more depth than I could have possibly put into it by myself."

The Dallas resident doesn't intend for her writing career to cease at this point — she already holds contracts for two more books and several more are "brewing" in her head. But the motivation for putting those words on paper, she says, varies with the traditional "grind-it-out-regardless" method employed by many authors.

"I have to wait on the Lord," she explained. "My books are not really reading material; they're teaching books and consequently I cannot teach the word of God without the annointing of God for that. What I have to do is be sensitive to the Holy Spirit."

The writing life is one that, perhaps, is the most demanding of all careers, in terms of sheer man-hours and intensity of work. And even to an author of Christian books, those pressures are immense.

"It's (difficult) to get it out of the head and onto the paper," she said. "It takes tremendous discipline to sit. It means closeting yourself up. It's a lonely life and it's very hard."

THOSE FAMILIAR with the Bible will note that the Christian life never was promised to be an easy one, but this attractive woman has dedicated herself to such and it has found expression in other forms as well. She travels extensively between writing projects, making 30-40 speaking engagements and teaching at three or four retreats a year.

"It's not for any purpose of myself — I don't need that kind of glory and I don't need money," she said, explaining that the royalties from her books are signed over to various organizations. "It's to extend to others the hand of God — and that's all. My motives are strictly to be a blessing to people, to be used by God to make people's lives better."

It seems appropriate that in her most recent book she quotes Proverbs 9:10: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: and the knowledge of the holy is understanding."

$6.7 million UTPB budget OKed

ODESSA — The University of Texas System Board of Regents has approved a $6.7 million budget for The University of Texas of the Permian Basin for fiscal year 1982-83.

UTPB President V.R. Cardozier said the new budget includes a legislatively mandated 8.7 percent increase for all UTPB staff and an average of 8.7 percent increase for faculty, based on merit. Cardozier noted the faculty increases actually range from 3 to 11 percent.

He noted that the operating of the university during the coming year will be an extremely tight situation because state formula funding for small institutions results in a severe handicap for those institutions and a disservice to its students.

"It costs the same to put an instructor in a class of twice that many students," he said. "A formula based on enrollment, while it appears to be equitable, is in fact, biased against small schools."

INCLUDED in the 1982-83 budget is $535,238 for general administration, compared to $518,458 for the previous year. General institutional expense is listed as $157,667, compared to last year's $147,000. Staff benefits for 1982-83 stand at $182,328, compared to $154,168 for 1981-82.

Funds for resident instruction total $2,417,856, compared to $2,311,002 for 1981-82. Included in resident instruction are $1,874,823 for faculty salaries, compared to last year's figure of $1,807,616. In departmental operating expense, the new figure is $410,496 compared to $372,169; and in instructional administration, the new budget calls for $132,537, compared to $131,217 the previous year.

The library receives $345,245, compared to $343,537 in 1981-82, and organized research remains virtually unchanged at $14,411. Extension and public service, a new item in last year's budget, was raised from $5,000 to $7,500 for 1982-83.

PHYSICAL PLANT operation is budgeted at $3,025,490 for the coming year, compared to last year's budget of $2,629,643. Included in physical plant operations are utilities, grounds maintenance, police department and general services.

Regents also approved appointments to UTPB's Development Board, College of Science and Engineering Adisory Council and College of Management Advisory Council.

Reappointed to the development board were Claude W. Brown of McCamey, chairman of the Security State Bank; Ignacio Cisneros of Odessa, president of Star Adair Insulation Company; Ray F. Herndon Jr. of Midland, vice president and general manager of Midessa Television Company; and Charles Perry of Odessa, president of Perry Gas Companies, Inc.

Ray P. Moudy of Midland, senior vice president of real estate for Magnatex, is a newly-appointed member of the Development Board.

Brent Blackmon of Odessa, vice president of Emco Machine Works, was reappointed for the UTPB College of Management Advisory Council. Reappointment to the College of Science and Engineering Advisory Council were Lyle E. Case of Midland, regional exploration manager of Texaco; Eugene E. Clark of Odessa, district production manager at Phillips Petroleum Company; M. Campbell Hawkins of Odessa, director of engineering and research, El Paso Products Corp.; Ronald D. Medley of Big Spring, vice president of Cosden Chemical Corporation; and Howard P. Renick of Midland, president of Indesco. Arlen J. Edgar of Midland, president of Arlen J. Edgar, is a new appointment to the council.

IN OTHER ACTION, regents approved a $25 "in absentia" registration fee for persons who have completed all graduation requirements and need to register in the university for the purpose of having a degree conferred, but not for courses. Previously, degree candidates were required to be enrolled for at least one credit hour in the semester in which graduation occurred.

In addition, the board accepted a gift of $15,000 from the Phillips Petroleum Foundation, Inc., to the UTPB Development Fund.

DALLAS (AP) — Rock musician David Crosby has refused to answer prosecutors' questions during a hearing on his request to suppress evidence seized during his arrest on felony narcotics and gun possession charges.

Crosby, 40, was arrested at a local nightclub April 13 on what police described as a routine liquor violation inspection.

An arresting officer testified Friday that he found Crosby free-basing cocaine in the dressing-room area of Cardi's nightclub.

Crosby — formerly of the rock groups the Byrds and Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young — took the stand to contend he gave police no legally justifiable reason to search him. But he pleaded the Fifth Amendment to prosecutors' questions.

Educator offered job

DALLAS (AP) — Dr. Calvin H. Smith of the University of Cincinnati has been offered the position of Bishop College president.

Smith, vice provost and education professor of the Ohio college, has not decided whether to accept the position, offered Friday by Bishop College trustees.

Smith, 43, told trustees he cannot accept the job until he receives a written contract offer and has had time to consider the proposal, said Manuel Scott, chairman of the college's presidential search committee.

Scott said Smith also has received a similar offer from Cheyney State College in Cheyney, Pa.

Former Bishop president Harry S. Wright announced his resignation last December to become pastor of the Cornerstone Baptist Church in Brooklyn, N.Y.

Dr. Vernon McDaniel, a former Bishop vice president, has served as acting president but said he has not applied for the president's job.

Bishop's financial problems almost closed the 100-year-old predominantly black college three years ago. Board chairman J.K. Haynes said Friday that finances have improved greatly for the college but that it still needs increased financial support.

Judge rules against police officers

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A group of Tarrant County sheriff's deputies failed to prove Sheriff Lon Evans discriminated against them for forming an organization similar to a union, a federal judge ruled.

The deputies had contended they were harassed and denied promotions because of their efforts to recruit members for the Tarrant County Deputy Sheriff's Association, formed in an attempt to improve working conditions.

But U.S. District Judge Eldon Mahon held Friday the deputies are not entitled to damages from the county government, Evans or retired Capt. Bill Daniels.

Motorcyle, three-wheel rodeo slated

LAMESA — A motorcycle and three-wheel rodeo will be held at 7 p.m. Saturday in the Lamesa Rodeo Arena, according Joe Ed Wise, Dawson County agent.

The rodeo will include keyhole, barrel racing, wheelie contest, obstacle jumping, pole bending and flat track.

"This is a countywide, fund-raising activity," said Wise. "Funds will be used to sponsor 4-H'ers to camps, adult leaders to leader forums, and annual awards banquet, national 4-H Congress and many other activities."

The rodeo is being sponsored by the Dawson County 4-H Club. Admission will be $2 for adults and $1 for children age 12 and younger.

Rodeo entry forms may be picked up in the Dawson County Agricultural Extension Service office in basement of the courthouse and may be mailed to Mrs. Duane Snell, Route A, Lamesa, Texas 79331. Rodeo participants, too, may register on the rodeo grounds at 5 p.m. on day of the event.

Entry fee is $3 per event.

Upton County Commissioners to meet

RANKIN — The Upton County Commissioners' Court will hold a public hearing at 10 a.m. Monday on proposed uses of $99,497 in federal revenue sharing funds for the Oct. 1 entitlement period.

Suggestion for uses of the funds may be presented to the court in writing or in person at the hearing in the Commissioners' Courtroom of Upton County Courthouse, according to County Judge Peggy Garner.

Andrews moves July Fourth festivities

ANDREWS — The annual July Fourth celebration here will be held in Pioneer Park rather than in the old standby setting of Lakeside Park.

College band to play Lamesa concert

LAMESA — The South Plains College band will play old-time and modern country music favorites at 8 p.m. June 29 on the Dawson County Fairgrounds.

The event is being sponsored by the Lamesa Area Chamber of Commerce's Women's Division.

Salvador rebels on offensive

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Fierce fighting was reported Saturday between leftist guerrillas and government troops on several fronts, with the leftists claiming they killed 76 soldiers and wounded more than 100 in Morazan Province.

The new battles, added to a string of ambushes and sabotage attacks Friday across the eastern two-thirds of the country, indicate a guerrilla offensive is beginning after 10 weeks of relative calm in this war-torn Central American country.

The guerrillas' clandestine Radio Venceremos said Saturday that the Morazan Province losses for the government included 31 soldiers taken prisoner.

Its casualty figures could not be confirmed independently. A military spokesman confirmed that "major military confrontations" occurred Thursday and Friday in Morazan, and that the army had suffered "some deaths." The officer, who asked not to be identified, said military reports reaching the provincial capital of San Francisco Gotera were confused.

If the casualty figures are accurate, they would constitute the worst blow to government forces since the devastating rebel attack on the Ilopango air base in January.

In Chalatenango Province, 70 miles northeast of the capital, 500 guerrillas briefly took over three small towns, military spokesman said Friday. The seizures of the hamlets, Los Planes, Teocinte and Plan Verde came just two days after the area was declared "clean of insurgents" following a major anti-guerrilla sweep.

El Salvador land reform continuing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The foreign minister of El Salvador said Saturday that land reform in his country is continuing and that he hopes Congress will not follow through on a threat to slash aid funds by $100 million.

Fidel Chavez Mena, commenting after a meeting with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., said El Salvador's new provisional president, Alvaro Magana, distributed 950 land titles to his country's landless poor as recently as Friday.

"I make an appeal to the members of the Senate and of the House and remind them military and economic assistance to my country is needed in order to strengthen democracy and achieve social peace and internal peace in my country," Chavez Mena said.

"The program is going forward as scheduled," the Salvadoran official said. "The land-reform movement in my country represents a commitment on the part of the political parties that make up the present government and a commitment on the part of the government itself to continue forward with this program in an adequate way and in accordance with circumstances."

Chavez Mena spoke through an interpreter and did not explain what he meant by "adequate" or "in accordance with circumstances."

He told reporters he and Haig agreed that El Salvador's programs of reforms will continue, and "that the process of democratization will continue forward (and) that we will (pursue) the objective of obtaining internal peace in our country."

The Salvadoran diplomat has been in Washington for a week trying to reverse the damage caused when El Salvador's constituent assembly voted to make changes in a key element of the land-reform law.

Miner becomes lord

LONDON (AP) — Joe Gormley, former union leader whose 1974 coal strike helped bring down the last Conservative government, Saturday became a lord, provoking left-wing derision and demands to scrap Britain's system of political patronage.

"How could any leader of the miners accept any honor from the Tory government? It really is time for the honors system to disappear," said Ken Gill, leader of the technicians' section of the 1.1-million-member Amalgamated Union of Engineering Workers.

The "honors system" he referred to are the annual bestowing of awards to people from all walks of life as part of Britain's official observance of Queen Elizabeth II's birthday. The queen's birthday was actually April 21 when she turned 56. The "Trooping of the Color" birthday ceremonies are the country's biggest annual pageant.

"He certainly earned it from those who are in a position to give it."

Gormley, a moderate in the context of labor unions, led a strike in the winter of 1973-74 which reduced Britain to a three-day work week because of power shortages and helped topple the government of Conservative Prime Minister Edward Heath.

But last January, Gormley enraged Scargill and other left-wing union leaders by successfully urging miners — to the relief of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher — to accept a 9.5 percent pay increase and reject a strike call by the left-dominated NUM executive.

Gormley, 64, one of only three new life peers announced Saturday in the Queen's birthday honors list of 622 people given titles and decorations, shrugged off the protests and declared he had taken the title to lobby for the coal industry from the lords.

"I don't think it should be a shock," said the new Lord Gormley, a blunt-spoken Lancashireman who left school at 14 to work in the coal pits.

U.S.S.R. blasts Reagan

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union charged Saturday that President Reagan was seeking military superiority "under the guise of a love of peace" and called his speeches before the British and West German parliaments "blasphemous."

The blast at Reagan, carried by the official news agency Tass, was delivered by top political commentator Yuri Kornilov. It was the latest in a series of Soviet media criticisms of Reagan that formed the most concerted and vitrolic attacks directed at him personally since he took office last year.

Kornilov termed Reagan's speech Wednesday in Bonn calling for massive reductions in the ground forces of NATO and the Warsaw Pact "attempts, under the guise of a love for peace, to secure military superiority for the United States and NATO so that on acquiring a sword, the longer and sharper the better, to dictate their will to sovereign countries and peoples."

Reagan asked for both alliances to reduce to 700,000 the number of soldiers in Europe. Such a reduction would remove 91,000 NATO forces and 262,000 Warsaw Pact troops, according to U.S. figures. The Soviets claim the American estimate of Warsaw Pact troops is exaggerated.

By ANDREW M. WILLIAMS

SEABROOK, Texas (AP) — About 120 people in Ku Klux Klan robes or T-shirts marched two miles as six men carried a coffin draped with a U.S. flag Saturday to protest the death of a fisherman shot in a feud with Vietnamese refugees.

"The (Vietnam) war has never ended. What we have done is transfer the war from one shore to another," said Texas Imperial Wizard James Stanfield of Seabrook.

Stanfield said the parade was in protest of the August 1979 shooting death of crab fisherman Billy Joe Aplin in Seadrift, which is about 100 miles down the coast from Seabrook.

Sau Van Nguyen, a 21-year-old Vietnamese who had been cut and beaten in a fight with Aplin, said he shot Aplin out of fear for his own life. He was tried and acquitted.

The shooting occurred during a feud between Vietnamese fisherman and U.S. fishermen over fishing practices. Four Vietnamese-owned boats and a house were firebombed after Aplin's death.

This spring the Klan has said it has organized its own boat patrol to make sure Vietnamese don't fish illegally at night.

B.T. Aplin, father of the slain fisherman, said he came to the demonstration "in remembrance of my son, to show my appreciation for what the Klan did." Aplin lives in Grand Chenier, La.

No violence was reported Saturday.

Lt. John Harris of the Seabrook Police Department said no guns were found in searches at the entrance to the rally. Stanfield had said Klansmen would have a "cache" of weapons for their protection near the parade scene.

About 60 officers from area law enforcement agencies milled through the crowd and lined the parade route.

People watching the parade had mixed reactions.

"Some of these people look like they've got sense — I wonder what they're doing out there," said Ed Fryday, who owns a dry cleaning and laundry business in Seabrook.

Fryday said he came to make sure no one damaged his establishment.

Robert W. Jackson, 61, stood at attention and saluted as the Klan passed.

"I was over in Vietnam and I didn't like the damned Vietnamese," he said. "I resent the Vietnamese being given special advantages and privileges."

A group of four teen-age boys sitting on a pickup in front of the First Baptist Church in Seabrook played Merle Haggard's song "Fighting Side of Me" on a stereo set up in the truck.

Last September, a federal judge permanently enjoined the Klan from demonstrating near the homes or boats of Vietnamese fishermen in the Seabrook area. The Vietnamese fishermen had complained that Klan members were harassing them.

Aplin was among the crabbers angry about the Vietnamese fishing customs.

When a Vietnamese fisherman set traps between Aplin's traps in July 1979, Aplin pulled them up and tossed them in another area of the bay. Aplin's wife, Judy, testified that later five Vietnamese surrounded Aplin's boat and shouted at them and had held knives with their teeth.

A Vietnamese crabber testified that Aplin tried to run over their boats and threatened "to cut everybody's throat."

Several weeks after the confrontation, Aplin was shot to death on a dock on San Antonio Bay.

Houston utility seeks pay, benefits refund

BAY CITY, Texas (AP) — Houston Lighting & Power Co. is asking a court to return part of the cash paid to fired engineer Brown & Root, Inc. for work on the South Texas Nuclear Project.

The company seeks an unspecified part of the $12 million contract along with about $6 million in employee pay and benefits paid by project owners but which HL&P claims never were distributed by Brown & Root.

The utility said it wants a refund scaled to the amount of work still undone at the plant.

Hypnotized girl provides leads in search of murder suspect

KERMIT, Texas (AP) — A 14-year-old girl who fled naked for five miles from her abductor was hypnotized Saturday and provided "many leads" in the search for the killer of her mother and sister, a deputy said.

"It was marvelous. It was very successful," Winkler County sheriff's deputy Kyle Hinkle said of the hypnosis, adding that investigators now have a suspect.

"We hope we know who did it," he said, adding that no arrest was being made because evidence was still being gathered and officials were "getting the case prepared to assure conviction."

After the teen-ager, Selena Kay Elms, reached help at an oil drilling site about 8 a.m. Friday, authorities found the bodies of her mother and sister in a 26-inch grave next to a cattle-watering tank 16 miles southeast of Kermit, Hinkle said.

According to autopsy results released Saturday, her mother, 31-year-old Brenda Kay Broadway, and her 8-year-old sister, Christi Mechelle Elms, died of stab wounds to the heart, Hinkle said. They had not been sexually assaulted, said Hinkle, who added the woman's body was nude when recovered.

The Kermit woman and her two daughters were abducted about 12:30 a.m. Friday at a Kermit car wash and taken to a cattle-watering tank, where the teen-ager escaped about 2:30 a.m., the deputy said. The mother and the 8-year-old were killed there and taken two miles away to another stock tank next to which he buried his victims, he said.

Sgt. Jerry Smith of the Odessa Police Department hypnotized the teen-age survivor Saturday afternoon, Hinkle said.

The hypnosis helped "in getting her to be able to slow down the action and get an idea of the pickup and of the man involved," Hinkle said.

Dr. Emerson (Greg Elsner) gives Ken Harrison (Mike Spicer) a shot of Valium after he has refused to take the prescription orally. Harrison also refuses the shot but gets it anyway in this scene from Midland Community Theatre's production of Brian Clark's "Whose Life Is It Anyway?" playing in Theatre I, 2000 W. Wadley Ave. Performances are 8:30 p.m. Friday, Saturday, June 25 and 26, as well as a 2:30 p.m. matinee June 20 and a 7:30 p.m. show June 24. Reservations may be made by calling 682-4111.

'Whose Life' thought-provoking production

A Review

What constitutes life?

Is there life in a body which has been saved and pieced back together by today's medical knowledge to exist only in a state of total dependancy? If the body is completely paralyzed but the mind is active and undamaged, the result is a living mind encassed in a dead body. Is this life or is this living death? Who makes the decision? Doctors? Judges? The patient? "Whose Life is it Anyway?"

It is these issues and questions that playwright Brian Clark presents in his play — "Whose Life Is It Anyway?" His approach is one of placing serious subject matter into a script packed with humor. The humor causes the audience to laugh in spite of itself.

The result is a thought-provoking presentation, one which inspires those who see it to look not only at the situation in which protagonist Ken Harrison finds himself, but also at their own mortality.

Currently playing in Theatre I at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., Midland Community Theatre's presentation of "Whose Life Is It Anyway?" is well worth the price of admission and two hours of time.

The subject matter is not handled in a depressing manner, but instead leaves the viewer with more to think about than he is aware of during the play's presentation.

The issues presented are multi-faceted, with the playwright zeroing in on the legal, professional and individual aspects in a thorough, concise and realistic manner. It does not deal with the religious aspect of the issue.

MCT's cast includes Mike Spicer as Harrison, Pat Voss as Sister Anderson, Robyn Rose as Nurse Sadler, Myke Mengert as the hospital orderly John, Barbara Bohanon as Dr. Scott, Greg Elsner as Dr. Emerson, Patricia McElwrath as Mrs. Boyle, Mike Wilson as Harrison's lawyer Philip Hill, Oza Whitten as Dr. Travers, Dee Rose as Judge Millhouse, Mark Phillips as the hospital's attorney Andrew Eden, Frances Heltsel as Dr. Barr and Penny Taulman as the night nurse. The production was directed and designed by Don Bachmann, MCT's executive director.

Most of the cast members forgot lines once or twice during their performance Thursday night. But that was to be expected. After all, it was dress rehearsal. The play opened Friday.

Thursday's production clearly demonstrated that each had spent time working on character development within their respective roles.

An area in which several cast members need additional work is that of not waiting for the other actor's cue. For example, when Elsner stopped Ms. Bohanon as she left his office after a difference of opinion, she had already slowed her pace and appeared hesitant. It is important on stage that the actors pretend to not be pretending.

There are usually those that shine, even before the play opens. This play is no exception. Although Spicer does an excellent job of portraying the totally paralyzed man who wants to be treated as a human being, Mengert, as the not-so-orderly orderly, steals the show.

In designing and directing the production, Bachmann used the four scripts which have been written for the play. The original was staged in London in the late '70s. The play was then rewritten for its New York release the following year. The next two rewrites occurred when it was further Americanized for an American actor and then, later, for an American actress.

MCT's production is broadly based. The setting is a private hospital; the time period indefinite. It is effectively staged, with the opening and closing scenes being the most impressive visually.

Wilder, Radner latest Hollywood couple

By FRED YAGER

NEW YORK (AP) — Gable and Lombard. Tracy and Hepburn. Wilder and Radner?

That's right. Gene Wilder and Gilda Radner are Hollywood's latest love couple, having parlayed an off-screen romance into a series of film deals that could keep them paired on movie marquees for many years to come.

Following positive reaction from sneak preview audiences of their film, "Hanky Panky," its producer, Marty Ransohoff, hired Wilder and Radner to do two more pictures, "Kissing" and "Double Whoopee," the latter with Richard Pryor. "Hanky Panky" has since received less-than-enthusiastic comments from critics.

Ransohoff said that it was "chemistry" that prompted him to unite the two actors. "We thought people would want to go see them together in a movie, and judging by the preview cards, we were right."

IT WAS during the shooting of "Hanky Panky" that the chemistry began to work its magic off screen as well. The well publicized Wilder-Radner romance was born. It was also during that time that Miss Radner separated from her husband, G.E. Smith, the lead guitarist for Hall and Oates.

The newly released "Hanky Panky" is a comedy-thriller that should have been titled "South by Southwest" because of its similarity to Alfred Hitchcock's "North by Northwest."

The film is a major breakthrough for Miss Radner, who built her reputation playing zany characters on television's "Saturday Night Live."

"This time I get to use my own hair," joked the 35-year-old actress-comedian.

"Five years on television will give you the chance to be in a movie," she said. "But it doesn't teach you how to be in a movie. So I learned as I went along."

Unable to hide behind a wig, funny glasses and frumpy clothes, Miss Radner said that playing a woman so close to herself actually made her feel naked.

"I was scared to death," she said, "but I wanted to do it. On the first day of shooting, I was like a kid ready for school. I knew every one of my lines by heart and had no idea what came in betweeen.

"THEN I SAW Gene (Wilder) for the first time and said 'a person's face can't be those colors,'" she said. "I thought they made that up. The blue eyes. The golden hair. The bigger than life technicolor face. I froze."

She said Wilder later told her that he was expecting "a loudmouth extemporaneous television comedian from Detroit, and what showed up was a shy nervous girl afraid to do anything out of the ordinary."

Miss Radner feels that she received the best training possible working in "Hanky Panky" because Wilder is both an actor and director, and the film's director was actor Sidney Poitier.

"It didn't take more than a couple of days to make me comfortable," she said. "I also learned that when I performed live, how I would feel about my performance was determined by my relationship with the audience.

"But in film, when I felt good about what I'd done it was because the audience went away and I was conscious of nothing except the situation I was in."

Miss Radner says she now compares her role in the film to dancing.

"THE BEST dancers kick a little higher everytime they perform, even though it hurts," she says. "They're always driving themselves to make their body go further than they think it really could. My role here is my way of stretching myself."

Roomful of Blues will perform today at Club Jamaica, Monday at The Cellar and Tuesday at Odessa's Country Carousel. This nine-piece rhythm and blues band, which usually performs between Boston and New York, is currently on a Texas tour. The group has received positive reviews in 1981-82 in, among others, The San Francisco Chronicle, The Houston Post and The Dallas Times Herald. Tickets may be purchased at the door.

Soviet media means of propagandizing masses

By BRYAN BRUMLEY

MOSCOW (AP) — Unadorned facts are not enough for Alexander Kaverznev, a political observer for Soviet television evening news. His job, as he puts it, is to paint a broad picture; linking a riot in one country to events around the world.

The central theme driven home nearly every night by Kaverznev and other Soviet journalists is "American imperialism," or "Washington's scheme for world domination."

"Generally, we cover the same events as the media of other nations, but with a different accent," says Kaverznev, one of 10 men who take turns broadcasting foreign news on the Soviet Union's twice-nightly program, "Sevodnya V Mire" ("Today in the World").

"A selection of news is not enough," Kaverznev says, explaining the criteria he uses in preparing a broadcast. "The viewer must be able to grasp the connection between events selected by the commentator. In 15 minutes, we must explain the world."

Kaverznev's show was born three years ago after the Soviet Communist party decided the nation was not getting the right kind of world news.

Some Western observers believe the program, which supplements a longer domestic and foreign news show called "Vremya" ("Time"), was created to counter the effects of foreign radio broadcasts to the Soviet Union. Although those broadcasts have been jammed electronically since the beginning of the upheaval in Poland two summers ago, they still can be heard at times and are very popular among Soviets.

PARTY OFFICIALS have explicitly defined the media as a means of propagandizing the masses, rather than providing a forum of information.

In theoretical articles on the press, they refer repeatedly to the words of Lenin, who said: "Through the press the party carries its word to the people, explains its policies, and mobilizes the workers to carry out decisions on practical tasks."

Television in the Soviet Union is modeled on this pattern. There are four channels, all controlled by the State Committee on Radio and Television, known by its acronym "Gostelradio."

Each of the 10 "Sevodnya V Mire" commentators broadcasts between three and five days a month, with the program split into two 15-minute segments, the first broadcast at 6:45 p.m., and the second at about 11 p.m. Officials say the show reaches 100-110 million viewers.

Kaverznev says that each of the commentators prepares and has final responsibility over his own script — an awesome job in a nation where deviation from official ideology can end a career.

"We are basically alone with the cameraman and an editor, who is really more of a helper than an editor," says Kaverznev.

"It's not at all like an American television show, where there are dozens of people, several cameras and teletypes clattering in the background. If I had to work like that, I would lose my mind," he says, gesturing around his wood-panelled office in Moscow's Ostankino television complex.

KAVERZNEV SAYS he culls his material largely from a special report prepared by the official Soviet news agency Tass, based on translations of newspaper and wire service dispatches from around the world.

The so-called "White Tass," which Kaverznev showed to a reporter, is not available to the Soviet public, which relies on commentators like him to screen and report the news.

Asked if he had ever committed any ideological blunders on the air, Kaverznev replies: "Knock on wood, I don't think so." He says, however, he had been criticized twice by Soviet officials.

"I was too harsh once on Bokassa," he recalls, referring to the self-styled emperor of the Central African Republic, deposed in 1979.

"The Soviet Foreign Ministry informed me later that Bokassa was head of state, no matter what, and that it is not the rule for our country to speak of the head of state in such a manner.

"I also called (British Prime Minister) Margaret Thatcher the "Iron Lady" right after she took office, following the example of the British press," Kaverznev says. "I received a reprimand from the Foreign Ministry for that, although the nickname is now common."

WHEN HE IS in doubt, Kaverznev says, he consults with the international information department of the policy-making central committee of the Communist party.

"I don't call to ask what to say. It is more of a consultation among colleagues," he says. "It is not like China, where they ask what they should say," he asserts.

In Steven Spielberg's "E.T., The Extra Terrestrial," Henry Thomas as Elliott stares in astonishment as the alien is abandoned on Earth.

'E.T.' compelling, touching story

A woman waiting to get popcorn turned to one of the four young boys she had brought to see this movie and said, "E.T. is a Steven Spielberg film." The youngster just nodded; he knew what that meant. Because for him, like many moviegoers, Steve Spielberg is to films what the Good Housekeeping seal of approval is to kitchen aids.

From "Jaws" to "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," "Raiders of the Lost Ark" and the recently-released "Poltergeist," Spielgberg continues to deliver in almost predictable fashion, some of the most absorbing, entertaining and inventive movies being made today. "E.T., The Extra-Terrestrial" is no exception.

Certain to be a summer sellout, "E.T." is about a creature from outer space who gets stranded on Earth and then wanders into Elliott Taylor's backyard somewhere in California. Elliott is 10 years old with a heart as big as the universe and he befriends E.T. But E.T. is not suited for prolonged exposure to our environment and must get back home or die. That, coupled with some scientific agents hot on the trail of the abandoned alien, relentlessly propels "E.T." from the opening scene to the end.

"E.T." is compelling and touching — a simple story, simply done — and San Antonio native Henry Thomas as Elliott is a treasure. There isn't a false note in anything he does. Thomas' co-star, E.T., is an ingenious creature by Carlo Rimbaldi that is sure to take you in with his life-like movements. In fact, when E.T. rolls his big blue eyes heavenward and points his knobby finger toward home, there are bound to be very few dry eyes. "E.T." is a tear-jerker of the first order as we see the world through the eyes of a child and an earthbound visitor from outer space.

Dee Wallace as Elliott's mother, Robert McNaughton as brother Michael and Drew Barrymore (who is the granddaughter of legendary actor John Barrymore Sr.) as little sister Gertie round out the Taylor family and provide an excellent supporting cast.

Since "E.T." is a movie about spacemen, there are some scenes involving the spaceship which call for special effects. This time Spielberg uses a craft that looks like an offspring of the mother ship in "Close Encounters." And he also throws in some levitation scenes that run the risk of turning "E.T." into a comic takeoff when E.T., Elliott and his friends on bicycles are silhouetted against the moon like the wicked witch in "Wizard of Oz," and not once, but twice.

That sort of Spielberg whimsy is what we've come to expect, but this time Spielberg has put most of his effort into the relationship between Elliott and E.T., allowing them to feel the same pain and anxiety through some kind of telepathy. The screenplay by Melissa Mathison is a gem of understanding, and she shows the same intuitive knowledge of children that came through in "The Black Stallion," a film she co-authored. But here too, the adults are portrayed as Peter Pan grownups — wistful and dissatisfied with adulthood.

A Review

With the exception of Elliott's mother, the adults are not even shown above the waist until near the end of the film. The camera cuts them off at eye level — Elliott's and E.T.'s that is, and thereby, Spielberg forces us to see things as a child would.

That device works well as we focus in on the children and alien discovering things about each other — like the first time E.T. and Elliott see each other. Elliott screams in terror and E.T. screams back in terror. We're not so beautiful a race after all, it seems. There is also a hilarious scene when E.T., a chronic eater, dives into the refrigerator and comes up with, among other things, a six-pack of beer. Several cans later, E.T. starts to feel the effects, but so does his telepathic partner Elliott, who is at school.

Rated PG, "E.T., The Extra Terrestrial" has the best first two minutes of any film this year, jumping in with both feet, and that rollercoaster ride of discovery is something the whole family can enjoy. Don't miss it, even though you are likely to feel Spielberg is being a bit too manipulative as the last tear drop falls.

Film focuses on one man's disintegration

By BILL HAGEN
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Among the surprises at the recent Academy Awards was the selection of "Mephisto" as best foreign language film of the year.

In retrospect, it could have been a surprise only to those who hadn't seen it. It is a brilliant movie, this import from Hungary, a classic tragedy of the corruption and fall of a man done in by ambition.

The tragedy lies in the fact that the character in question is hardly an evil man. In many respects he is an Everyman, and under different circumstances he well could have achieved his goals without selling his soul.

Unfortunately, the rise of his career parallels the rise of Nazi Germany, and he does, indeed, strike a bargain with the devil. His gradual disintegration is heart-rending to behold, the more so because it rings so true.

The central figure is an actor — a very talented and imaginative actor, but so far unrecognized — who is relegated to playing the provinces of Germany early in the 1930s, while other less-deserving performers are taking the bows.

In frustration, he helps organize a radical theater group, very Bolshevist, although he, himself, is not a communist. He is, in fact, practically apolitical, never committing himself to any ideology, merely using it instead. He uses people in the same way. His life is the theater, and everything else is secondary. And if he must crawl into bed with vermin — well, he can rationalize it in the name of art.

He becomes a favorite of a Nazi minister, who is greatly impressed with the actor's interpretation of Mephisto, his greatest role, and the minister quickly promotes him to director of the state theater. It's a dream fulfilled.

And if the actor has to play games with his conscience, it is, to him, an affordable price. If the repertoire of plays is restricted by government policy — well, there's always Mephisto to fall back on, and even an occasional Shakespearean drama.

Comedian Foxx files suit against National Enquirer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Redd Foxx has filed a $50 million libel and slander suit against the National Enquirer and a former secretary over an article alleging the comedian sexually harassed the employee.

The onetime "Sanford and Son" star said in his suit filed in Superior Court on Friday that he suffered emotional distress because of published statements attributed to his former secretary, Carol Whitsett, in a March 2 Enquirer article titled, "Secretary Sues Redd Foxx for $½ Million."

Ms. Whitesett, 22, has a suit pending against Foxx in which she says she was harassed while she worked for him from Jan. 23, 1981, to Aug. 20, 1981. Her suit alleges assault and battery and infliction of emotional distress.

Foxx's suit is "only concerned with the statements she made to the Enquirer," said Foxx's attorney, Gus T. Poole. He said Ms. Whitsett's published statements were not privileged even though some of the same assertions were contained in her Jan. 28, 1982, suit against Foxx.

Foxx's suit says her statements to the tabloid "were overdrawn, exaggerated and colored to the extent that actual maliee is established on the part of cross-defendant National Enquirer."

"She made many statements that are defamatory that are not in (her) complaint," Poole added, such as that she found the comedian in the nude and that Foxx repeatedly fondled her.

In the article Ms. Whitsett is quoted as saying that several times between July and Aug. 20, 1981, when she quit her job, the 59-year-old comedian "called her into his private office where she found him nude," the lawsuit says.

The Enquirer article also quotes Ms. Whitsett as saying, "Redd Foxx has ruined my life" and "Since working for him I've been an emotional wreck. I never gave him any encouragement but he forced his attentions on me," Foxx's suit says.

"I never asked for any of this. His conduct was malicious and done for the purpose of humiliating me. He told me he was going to keep doing it until he accomplished his goal of having sexual intercourse," the Enquirer article quotes her as saying.

Foxx's suit also charges that the Enquirer's reference to Foxx as a "funnyman" implies he was a "homosexual or some form of pervert."

Foxx's suit includes a letter from Washington, D.C., attorney Irving Younger saying the Enquirer had refused to retract the article. Younger's secretary, Ella Shaw, said Friday there would be no comment from the Enquirer on Foxx's suit.

Poole said Foxx would hve "no comment whatsoever."

Actress Carol Burnett won a $1.6 million libel suit against the tabloid last year, but an appeals court subsequently cut the award in half.

German school teaches how to foil industrial spies

By ALISON SMALE

BAD OLDESLOE, West Germany (AP) — In the seclusion of this cozy north German village, a dozen men are learning how to foil East Bloc industrial spies who can undermine Western security and cost West German industry millions of dollars each year in lost sales of advanced technology.

Far from the maddening crowd of American and European politicians arguing over trade with the Soviet bloc, the men sit in austere elegance in an 18th century manor house.

The ancient setting belies the modern craft taught here — processing and development of microphotography, interrogation techniques and all the other tricks of counterintelligence.

It is less glamorous than James Bond. But teachers and pupils at this exclusive private school, the only one of its kind in West Germany, guard secrets as jealously as Ian Fleming's fictional hero.

But instruction supervisor Heinz Leister, a retired lieutenant colonel, insists, "We are not a spy school."

IN AN INTERVIEW with The Associated Press, Leister and school manager Siegfried Neubert underlined their caution by checking both passport and press credentials before divulging the barest of details about their work.

The school runs four basic courses in all aspects of industrial security. Seventy-five percent of the 100 pupils accepted each year for the fulltime courses come from the West German army and the country's border police.

Their fees — about $3,500 a year — are paid by the state. Most others at the school come from large industrial concerns anxious about competitors or East Bloc spies stealing their secrets.

Security schools such as this one, run by the West German security firm DSW, exist elsewhere in the country. But this is the only school to choose a dozen men a year for instruction in the skills of counterespionage.

Neubert says demand for the training is high and that the school is already booked until the end of next year.

DSW, WHICH opened the school in 1978, is thinking of beginning courses in English and expanding the staff of more than 50.

The school's popularity is not surprising. West German officials claim East Bloc industrial espionage costs this country $130 million a year.

"West Germany is a lucrative area for spying, that's clear," Neubert says. "It has a central position and is economically strong. You can't avoid it (spying)."

Most Western countries have to contend with commercial espionage — the stealing of, say, fashion designs by rival firms. But West Germany, sharing an 875-mile border with Communist East Germany, has a special problem.

Spies trained by East Germany's State Security Ministry find it relatively easy to infiltrate West German firms and other walks of national life. The state police chief of Baden-Wuerttemberg, Alfred Stuemper, says at least 20 percent of the estimated 2,000 to 4,000 East Bloc spies in West Germany are after industrial secrets. Eighty percent of those come from East Germany, Stuemper says.

AS ANOTHER intelligence source who did not want to be identified put it, "East Germany is our best customer."

Werner Stiller, an East German intelligence officer who defected in 1979, reportedly told Western officials that by investing about $2 million in spy operations, East Germany can cull $130 million worth of technology it would otherwise have to buy.

Much of the take is passed along to the Soviet Union, authorities say.

One recent example of such espionage involved a married couple in Munich. Juergen Reichwald, now 39, was approached in 1973 by East German spy Rolf Hecht, who persuaded him to pass on the secrets of the engine for the Tornado combat aircraft being built by Britain, West Germany and Italy.

REICHWALD WORKED as an engineer for the Munich firm Maschinen-und Turbenunion. For six years, he and his wife, Marietta, passed secrets to Hecht in meetings in West Germany and abroad.

Neubert says such a case — endangering military secrets — would be more a matter for West Germany's military intelligence service than for his pupils. But he stresses the skills taught in Bad Oldesloe will help industrial counter-spies detect, for example, the disappearance of papers photocopied by informers like the Reichwalds.

The sharing of intelligence between industry and state services may also help firms detect when East Bloc spies infiltrate their operations.

"With the crazy amount of damage caused by industrial espionage, hitting at the most essential economic interests, you must do something preventive against it," says Reinhard Otters, manager of DSW's Duesseldorf office.

Neubert agrees. Big firms such as Volkswagen and the Bayer chemical concern have sent men on his courses.

Part of a crowd estimated to be more than 500,000 people clap their hands and wave an American flag Saturday afternoon in New York City's Central Park during a concert which culminated a day-long protest in support of a nuclear weapons freeze. The rally was the largest in U.S. history. See related stories Page 9A.

Umpires

If minor league player has it tough, lo' the poor umpire

BY TED BATTLES

Thanks, in part, to the umpire strike and subsequent settlement a few years back, Al Kaplon will be working his last game in the Texas League at Cubs Stadium tonight. Monday he reports to the Pacific Coast League.

One of the concessions that came out of the major league strike was a two-week vacation for major league umpires. "When those begin," says the 24-year-old Kaplon, "They bring umpires up from triple A to take their place and, consequently, elevate umpires from AA to take the place of the AAA umpires." The chain reaction, of course, reaches all the way down to rookie ball.

THE BEST thing about Kaplon's PCL invitation is that it will be permanent.

So Greg Bonin, his partner, will be breaking in someone new next week. "I have no idea who it will be," says the first year Texas League umpire from Broussard, La.

This is Kaplon's sixth year in the distinguished, but oft-maligned, suit of blue and he was in his second year in the Texas League this season.

"I broke in with the old Lone Star League in 1977. It was a member of the National Association, but was still regarded as an outlaw league," Kaplon explains.

FROM THERE he went to the Northwest League in 1978-79, the A California League in 1980 and last year came to the TL. "Last winter my option was picked up by the PCL and then it became a case of waiting my turn."

"Best thing about the move?" You'd think it would be the jump in pay from $1,300 a month in AA ball to the $1,750 at the higher level. But Al doesn't even hesitate in responding, "In AAA ball, the clubs pick up the tab for two of the three rooms. In AA ball, we have to make our own deals for rooms and have to look for the best package available, since it comes out of our budget."

The popular belief is that most umpires come from the ranks of frustrated ball players, but Al says, "I was a heavy kid. I never had any desire to play. I just didn't have any athletic ability."

"Bill Malone, who had retired from umpiring in 1972 and was in sporting goods supplies back home in Woodland Hills, Calif., (about 25 miles north of Los Angeles), was instrumental in my becoming an umpire. He taught me my basics and I've been umpiring since I was 15."

BONIN, ON the other hand, played high school ball, but became interested in umpiring while attending Southwest Louisiana University. This is his fourth year for the 27-year-old Pelican state native. His background includes stints in the Gulf Coast and Florida State leagues.

"A young neighbor back in Broussard was president of the local association. I got interested and in college I began umpiring."

Cubs ride wind to 16-4 triumph

Midland's Cubs road the wind to a 16-4 victory over the San Antonio Dodgers at Cubs Stadium Saturday night, poling four home runs in the lopsided win.

The Cubs can earn a 3-3 split in tonight's 6 p.m. finale of the Texas League series at Cubs Stadium as they wind up the homestand before heading for El Paso to close out the first half Texas League race.

The Cubs took full advantage of a steady gale blowing to left in notching their sixth win in 15 games against the Dodgers this year.

THE GAME'S first big blow was Dave Owen's three-run homer in the second to give Midland a 4-1 lead that was never threatened, especially after the four-run burst in the third.

Carmelo Martinez opened the frame with his 13th homer over the left field fence and with two out Javier Fierro soloed over the same barrier, his fourth of the season.

Before the inning ended, the Cubs struck for two more runs in shelling lefthander Tom Klawitter, 3-4, to cover. Both Don Hyman and Mike Kelley singled in runs.

After a six-run fifth, the final score became academic. Carlos Lezcano's seventh homer, a three-run blast, was the big run in this frame. Carlos wound up with five runs batted in for the night and Owen had four.

MIDLAND'S thundering 15-hit attack made Doug Welenc's pitching performance just that much more impressive. Doug, win or lose, has given the Cubs something they can hang their hat on all season and Saturday night was no exception.

He allowed nine hits in eight innings for his seventh win in 12 decisions this season. His only serious mistake gopher ball to Dan Bilardello in the seventh, but no one was on base. It was Bilardello's second homer of the series and sixth of the season.

BRUIN BREWIN'S—Fierro is back in his all-purpose roll while playing his way back into shape following a layoff since spring training when his leg was put in a thigh to ankle cast. Havvy also looks slimmer and trimmer than ever. "I weigh 183," he brags, "but I'd like to get down to 181." Just like a guy flaunting his diet success...Tonight's pitching matchup will be a repeat of the opener with Jon Perlman, 6-3, going against Chris Malden, 6-2.

Miami wins CWS title

Kapsrzak, Smith do it to Shockers again

By TOM VINT
Associated Press Writer

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — The game plan worked like a charm for the second time in a row for the Miami Hurricanes.

The Hurricanes stopped No.2-ranked Wichita State 9-3 to capture their first-ever NCAA Division I baseball championship in a fifth straight trip to the College World Series Saturday night.

It was the second time Miami pitchers Mike Kapsrzak and Dan Smith had combined to limit the high-scoring Shockers to three runs. The Hurricanes topped the Kansas club 4-3 in a Monday night winners' bracket contest.

"We wanted Mike to do what he did the last time...hold them to three runs and six hits or so," said Miami pitching coach Skip Bertman. "He went seven then (Monday) and he went seven tonight. Our plan was to bring Smith in for the last two, just like the last time."

Phil Lane blasted his third home of the series to power a six-run fifth inning that provided all the runs necessary for the national title.

Lane, who was born in nearby Council Bluffs, Iowa and raised in Omaha, drove his 25th homer of the season well over the 370-foot sign in left field with two runners on in the fifth inning.

The victory left the 54-18-1 Hurricanes unbeaten in the 36th annual tournament. Miami became only the ninth team to win a title without a loss.

Miami also became the first team other than Southern California to go unbeaten in the series since 1957. The Trojans finished unbeaten in 1961, 1968, 1973 and 1978.

The Shockers, 73-14, jumped on Miami starter Kasprzak for two runs in the bottom of the first inning as Phil Stephenson doubled home one run and designated hitter Russ Morman, the NCAA RBI record-setter with 130, singled home another.

Wichita State grabbed a three-run lead when Morman led off the third inning with his 24th homer of the season. The home run also was Morman's third of the tournament.

Miami jumped on Shocker pitcher Don Heinkel in the fifth inning when Javier Velazquez led off with a single and moved to third on a Mitch Seoane double.

Doug Shields singled home both runners one out later and advanced to third as Billy Wrona and Steve Lusby walked the bases loaded.

Floyd expands Memphis lead

By GEORGE STRODE
AP Sports Writer

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Ray Floyd, playing bogey free golf for the second straight day, shot a five-under-par 67 Saturday and expanded his lead to five strokes in the $400,000 Danny Thomas-Memphis Golf Classic.

The 39-year-old veteran of two decades on the PGA Tour, solved the Colonial Country Club course — at 7,249 yards the longest on the American pro circuit — for a 54-hole total of 202, 14 under par.

If Floyd can pick up the first prize of $72,000 Sunday, he would become the sport's sixth player to surpass $2 million in career earnings.

Another shot back, in a tie for third place with 208 totals, were Tom Purtzer and Mark McNulty. McNulty, a South African, earned his Tour card with a 17th-place finish at the Kemper Open last week. He fired a 67, while Purtzer had a 69.

Strange had a 67, Sutton a 70 and Lye a 71 in the third round, played in muggy, mostly cloudy conditions.

Floyd, on a patented hot streak, has assembled nine birdies in his last two rounds.

The last of his five birdies Saturday came despite an errant tee shot that landed in the trees at 16. He punched an iron shot to the fairway, then sank a 30-foot putt for a four on the 512-yard hole.

Floyd, winner of the Memorial Tournament two weeks ago, his 16th Tour triumph, avoided what could have been a disastrous start. He missed three of the first five greens, but salvaged pars with good chip shots.

He dropped an uphill 35-foot putt for a birdie on the third hole and added birdies at 8, 11, 15 and 16.

Holland, never higher than ninth in his two Tour seasons, all but conceded the first-place check to Floyd.

"I don't think Floyd is going to do any backing up," he said. "I'm not even thinking about trying to catch him. We're going to have a good time for second place tomorrow (Sunday)."

Ram Rock tests temper, golf and ball supply

BY TED BATTLES

(One of a Series)

The view from the dining room late in the afternoon reminds one of Tom's Lighthouse, on one of the man made islands in San Diego Bay where the view is so demanding it's difficult to keep your mind on food while watching an unending succession of large birds, with their blinking lights, riding the glide path over the city to a landing at Lindbergh. The sun can do fantastic things as it plays on the city's tall buildings just before it disappears.

From Horseshoe Bay's yacht club, the view isn't of a city, but a setting sun across the lake. It's equally spectacular.

BOB PUTT, honest, the pro at Horseshoe Bay's Ram Rock and Slick Rock courses at the resort on Lake LBJ, claims that 60 percent of his golf membership is from Midland.

And the area draws most of its vacation hideaway clients from Houston, Dallas and Midland.

Compared to Lakeway, Horseshoe Bay is a Johnny-Come-Lately, but it's fast acquiring a reputation. The resort opened about 10 years ago and is flourishing. The attractions are a couple of Robert Trent Jones golf courses, an 18-acre tennis complex, horseback riding, and water sports.

It was at Horseshoe Bay's more mature course, Slick Rock, that they revived the Texas Open in 1975. Now that the tournament is back on its feet, it will be circulated around the state, starting this year.

RAM ROCK has only been open a year or so and the course-side condominium development has yet to begin, but it's an ogre of a course. The record is held by Tom Kite, two bogeys, two birdies, for a par 71. They say the first two times Ben Crenshaw played the Ram, he shot in the mid 80s.

If you play it, bring plenty of balls. It has an insatiable appetite.

One writer on the Texas Tourist Development Tour conducted recently shot a 91 at Lakeway's Hills. At Ram Rock he was a fuming, fussing 64, for the front nine.

CFL's Hamilton beats Ottawa, 11-5

HAMILTON (AP) — Quarterback Tom Clements and wide receiver Keith Baker combined on a 64-yard scoring play late in the first quarter to spark the Hamilton Tiger-Cats to an 11-5 victory over the Ottawa Rough Riders in a Canadian Football League exhibition game Saturday night.

Bernie Ruoff, who converted the TD, hit on a 19-yard field goal and a 38-yard single for the other Tiger-Cat points as Head Coach Bud Riley got a look at four prospective quarterbacks who each got to play a quarter.

It was the preseason opener for both Eastern Division clubs whose last meeting also was at Ivor Wynne Stadium when the Rough Riders scored a major upset to advance to the Grey Cup game.

Ottawa kicker Gerry Organ accounted for all the Rpders points, a 31-yard field goal and two singles.

After an unimpressive opening five minutes for both teams, Hamilton defensive end Grover Covington set the stage for the opening field goal of the game by Ruoff when he recovered a Jordan Cast fumble at the Ottawa 28.

Clements got the Tiger-Cats to the Ottawa 12, but had to settle for a 19-yard field goal.

Ottawa got on the board on the ensuing series when a 40-yard field goal attempt by Organ drifted to the left of the uprights and went for a 48-yard single. Case completed passes of 14 yards to Bruce Walker, 18 to Kelvin Kirk and 13 to wide receiver Buddy White in the series.

Verplank holds on to Texas Amateur lead

LUFKIN, Texas (AP) — Scott Verplank of Dallas shot a one-over-par 73 Saturday in the third round of the Texas Men's Amateur Golf Championship to hold on to a two-stroke lead.

Defending champion Mark Brooks, a University of Texas golfer from Fort Worth, was among four golfers tied for third at 218. The others were Jacky Lee of Houston, Todd Mavis of Kingwood and Jim Phenicie of Houston.

Danny Briggs of Paris was alone in eighth place with a total of 219 going into Sunday's finals.

Briggs was followed by Randy Sonnier of Houston, Jeff Maggert of Conroe, Lloyd Hughes of Dallas and Greg Chapman of Nacogdoches, all at 221.

Each summer hundreds upon hundreds of Texans head south to the Texas Golf Coast looking for some meat to put on their tables from some of the finest saltwater fishing in the United States.

From about mid-May on, migrating deep sea fish inhabit the Texas Golf Coast from Galveston to the tip of Texas. By the thousands people will hit the beaches, jetties, piers, and boats to participate in one of Texas' most popular sports, deep sea fishing. Despite the inflation this summer looks to be no exception as it is likely to be one of the best on record.

Whether fish are caught in record numbers or not won't be known until the end of the summer but the early showing of saltwater anglers is already proving to be a participation record.

Most of the bay waters along the coast will provide the salty anglers with good action of speckled trout, redfish, flounder and a host of other gulf inhabitants. But the redfish and trout still remain the most popular in the warm waters south of Texas.

There are many fishermen would rather catch a two-pound flounder than a 20-pound redfish. The eating posibilities I'm sure you are well aware of.

. One of the best regions along the coast for small gamesters is the Baffin Bay area. This area has been one of the best producers of bayfish for many years and gkood spawns last spring should make Baffin Bay amoung the tops this season.

For the more hearty and those searching for larger fish, the private charter boat and party boat fishing along the coast wil again be bibbling. There are several prize fish in the gulf but the King Mackeral and Kingfish still top the list as the most prized targets of anglers.

Fishing from these boats allows one to fish the deep seas without having to by his or her own saltwater tackle, which can be considerably expensive. The boats when shared by a family of group are relatively inexpensive to lease.

Two of the best party boats on the coast are Scat and Wharf Cats based in Port Aransas. These two 65-foot sea going vessels provide ample fishing room, tackle and various fishing opportunities for anglers.

The Scat Cat normally goes out once a day in search of red Snapper and Amblerjack about 60 miles off shore. Tle trip normally cost about $48, including tackle. If you don't want sport, along boat ride and plenty of Red Snapper and Amberjack fare, then this trip isn't for you. This is a meat haul, you will always catch something.

For more sport and less time fishing the Wharf Cat might be your cup of tea. The boat normally stays within five to six miles of shore and comes back to dock loaded with Kingfish, Ling, Blacktip Sharks, Jackfish, Mackeral, Tarpon and a host of other ocean delights.

For the die-hard or dol salts, fishing for big Blue or Black Marlin, Dolphinfish and hugh Sharks, you must own your own rig or charter a privte boat for some long range fishing. But remember this, if you plan to fish these big gamsters prepare yourself for some overnight adventures on the water. You can expect to venture out at least 70 miles befor you are in prime big game waters.

Another point to be made is that you must have heavy duty deep sea tackle, and it is expensive. If you are inexperienced st this type of fishing it is best you charter a boat. Most of the captains along the coast are experienced boatsmen as wellas fisherman, and they provide the necessary rear.

If you land a 500-pound Blue Marlin, the trip is well worth it. If you don't then you will have experienced a long boat ride you won't soon forget.

It's worth a trip to the Texas Gulf Coast to do some fishing. Whether it be bay fishing, boat fishing or big game fishing it will be a trip to remember for a long time to come.

Spinks stops Celestine to retain light-heavy crown

By ROBERT WADE
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Undefeated Michael Spinks stopped challenger Jerry Celestine at 1:58 of the eighth round to retain his World Boxing Association light heavyweight title in a nationally televised bout Saturday.

Spinks, 25, of Philadelphia, beat the challenger by continually hitting Celestine's head with damaging left jabs and frequent right upper cuts and crosses.

Celestine, 26-7, was downed in the eighth by two left uppercuts and a right hook, knocking him onto the bottom rope just to the left of Spinks' corner.

The New Orleans challenger watched from the mat as referee Jimmy Rondeau began making the count. Celestine staggered to his feet and wobbled against the ropes before the 10-count, but Rondeau stopped the fight.

The next match for Spinks should be an undisputed title bout against World Boxing Council light heavyweight champion Dwight Braxton, who is scheduled to fight former champ Matthew Saad Muhammad next month. The date has not been scheduled.

Both fighters weighed in Saturday at 175.

Palmer leads Marlboro Classic

MARLBORO, Mass. (AP) — Arnold Palmer fired his third straight sub-par round Saturday to take a 3-stroke lead in the $150,000 Marlboro Classic senior golf tournament, while Bob Rosburg fashioned a course-record 65 to pull into a tie for second place.

Palmer added a 2-under 69 for his 207 total for 54 holes over the 6,174-yard Marlboro Country Club course.

"I just want to come out and try to shoot a round and keep my position," Palmer said of his lead down the stretch. "I missed some good putts today, and the best I made were for pars. But I missed nearly all of the birdie putts and I had some other bad shots."

Rosburg, 55, said he had felt ill and thought of leaving after the second round.

Billy Casper was in third place with 211, followed by Peter Thomson at 212 and Dan Sikes with 213.

The tournament recorded its second disqualification when Jack Fleck signed for a 79 on his score card that should have said 80. On Friday, Sam Snead also signed an incorrect card.

The tourney also had its first hole-in-one, although most of the announced gallery of 11,800 had left. Stan Leonard got his ace on the 156-yard 12th hole with a 6-iron.

Eddie Chiles...looks for GM.

Rangers' Chiles looks for answers

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

Since 1980 he has been trying to do the same thing with the Texas Rangers but the flamboyant Chiles is having some herd times with hard ball.

He axed Eddie Robinson Thursday (Chiles couldn't bring himself to call it a firing) and the 70-year-old Chiles finds himself without an executive vice president and general manager five days away from the interleague trading deadline.

The Rangers could use help. They own the second worst record in the major leagues. Now the front office is fragmented.

CHILES SAID he is running the show but doesn't want the job.

"I don't think I'm qualified," he candidly admits. "And I don't want to do it. But somebody's got to do it. We'll try to fill the vacuum until we find someone else."

Chiles said it might take six weeks or six months.

With the departure of Robinson, who was with the Rangers six years, the Brad Corbett era is over.

Corbett, who owns a Fort Worth plastic pipe firm, sold the Rangers when he plunged into financial difficulty. Unlike Chiles, who admits he hasn't the faintest idea how to run a ballclub, Corbett thought he knew baseball like plastic pipe.

CORBETT made a lot of wild trades over Robinson's objection. Chiles later kept Robinson, giving him a free hand to make any decision he believed was a sound one.

Such Robinson trades as lifetime .300 hitter Al Oliver to Montreal for Larry Parrish, who has floundered while Oliver flourished, put Robinson on the ropes. Giving away hot pitching prospects such as Walt Terrell and Ron Darling to the New York Mets for Lee Mazzilli, who was unimpressive before his injury, provided the knockout.

The Rangers were in fifth place in the American League West and 13 games out of the lead when the blade came. They are $100,000 behind last year's revenue.

"I'M NOT sure what I'm going to do," Chiles admitted, bewildered by the competiveness and complexity of running a big league franchise.

Recreations are lost art, well, almost

By MIKE LEIDEMANN

HONOLULU (AP) — It was the top of the 12th inning. The score was tied 4-4. There was nobody on base, none out, and Alan Wiggins, the leading hitter for the Hawaii Islanders, worked the count to 3-and-2.

Then, nothing. Les Keiter, the radio announcer for the Islanders, faced a dead phone line to the ballpark in Vancouver, British Columbia, an ocean away, and the task of keeping the action moving until communications were restored.

So Keiter, a sportscaster for 34 years, did the only thing he could. He stalled for time.

"I just had to pull out a few tricks," he recalled.

KEITER IS a baseball recreator, broadcasting all of the Islanders' road games without ever leaving the studio of KSSK near Waikiki.

He is perhaps the last practitioner of what once was a thriving radio art. His predecessors include virtually every sportscaster from the middle part of this century, including President Ronald Reagan, who was "Dutch" to the people in Iowa who listened to him recreate Chicago Cubs' games during the 1930s.

The earlier recreations were done with the help of a Western Union ticker, which tapped out the details in abbreviated form. For Keiter, the information comes via telephone from the distant stadium every few innings with the bare facts of the game.

Keiter takes the information and, with a heavy dose of imagination seasoned by years of seeing the real thing, presents the Pacific Coast League games to an eager Hawaii audience. There's usually about an hour between the time a pitch is thrown or a ball is hit until the moment it makes the airwaves.

WHEN THE PHONE line went out during last April's game in Vancouver, Keiter's mind was put to the test. In the recreation, Wiggins fouled off a few pitches. The umpire dusted off the plate. Wiggins fouled off a few more pitches, then got into an argument with the ump. He fouled off a few more pitches and put tar on his bat. He fouled off a few more pitches. The Vancouver manager went out to talk to his pitcher. Wiggins fouled off a few more pitches.

Finally, after 16 minutes, the line to the press box was restored. Wiggins singled, and Hawaii went on to win the game.

"Nobody really knew the difference," said Rick Schonely, Keiter's assistant who handles the long-distance phone duties.

"People know it's phony," added Keiter, "but they like it anyway."

Keiter said he can see each play in his head, and often will signal along with the umpire or reach for a foul ball as he makes up the details.

"I just imagine I'm watching the game," Keiter said.

He has hundreds of verbal tricks, all designed to make the listeners think they're hearing the real thing; lines like, "If you could just see this guy, you'd know why they call him Butch," or "Here's a foul ball back toward the press box. Almost had us a souvenir," or "It's a beautiful night in Albuquerque." Or the kicker — "Les Keiter, Civic Stadium, Portland."

HE ALSO COMES to the studio armed with a stack of statistics and newspaper clippings on the ballplayers he can't see.

In the background, studio engineer Mike Murry runs a tape of a baseball crowd, raising and lowering the noise to suit the action and tossing in an occasional touch of realism — jingling cowbells, organ music, rhythmic clapping, even the shouts of popcorn vendors.

Keiter, who spices his play-by-play with old baseball stories, provides one sound effect — the crack of a bat. It's really a drum stick beating against an old wooden microphone stand that has been partially hollowed and stuffed with newspaper.

"It's the closest thing to the sound of a bat I've ever found," Keiter said.

Even then, re-creations were on the way out. During the 1930s, when it was too expensive for announcers to travel with major league teams, re-creations flourished. In the 1940s, modern technology and lower travel costs saw more announcers traveling with major league teams. The re-creates were left to the minor leagues.

In 1949, Keiter took a sportscasting job in Hawaii and quickly worked his way up to the big leagues, broadcasting the likes of basketball's New York Knicks and Philadelphia 76ers, and heavyweight championship fights for more than 10 years.

IN 1968, Keiter did play-by-play on the Dream World Series, a computer re-creation involving the game's all-time greats. One of his crowning glories, he said, was when he got Ty Cobb and Leo Durocher into a fight and a listener called to ask: "Ty Cobb? Ain't he dead?"

Keiter returned to Hawaii in 1970, saying he was tired of the major league travel. The following year, he began going on road trips as the Islanders' announcer. But when air fares soared in 1979, it was back to the re-creates. Now, they are one of the top-rated radio shows in Hawaii.

KSSK makes a brief announcement before and after each show saying, "This is the Hawaii Islander recreate with Les Keiter." There's never any other mention that the broadcasts aren't entirely what they seem to be.

Ken Sims doesn't use illegal drugs

BOSTON (AP) — Professional football's top draft choice of the year, Ken Sims, says he does not use illegal drugs, and the New England Patriots, who obtained the big defensive lineman, say they believe him.

"We had him checked thoroughly by our own doctors and their conclusion is that he does not (have a drug problem)," Chuck Sullivan, the National Football League club's vice president, said Friday.

The Boston Globe reported Saturday that Sims, of the University of Texas, was one of nine draft choices out of 150 tested in Tampa, Fla., last January who had positive results for cocaine. The tests were conducted by the United Scouting Combine, which includes the Patriots.

"We got the report and we were concerned about it," Sullivan said. "We know that drugs can be a serious problem so we looked into it. Before the draft we brought Ken to Boston to have a complete examination with our medical staff. They found no traces of cocaine or any other drug in those tests."

In a telephone interview from his home in Austin, Texas, Sims told the Boston Herald American that the tests were "rather inaccurate."

"At the time of the testing, I was taking a series of different medications for my (broken) leg and for liver problems. That's what must have caused the test results to be positive because it certainly wasn't cocaine or any illegal drug. I'd be willing to take that test at anytime for anybody," he said.

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Craig Stadler has destroyed a popular myth in golf.

For several seasons now, television commentators and nationally circulated columnists repeated that pro golf is losing its appeal through the emergence of an unidentifiable and interchangeable band of look-alike young men, all tall, skinny and blond.

Then Stadler came along. He's not tall. He's not blond. And he's definitely — very definitely — not skinny.

He tends to be on the chunky side. He has powerful, sloping shoulders with the hint of a paunch struggling against his belt. His face is round and pink, and graced by a drooping mustache that helps provide him with his less-than-glorious nickname, "The Walrus."

And he's also — at least this season — the best player in the game, a fact that establishes him as a major factor in any consideration of the 82nd U.S. Open Golf Championship, beginning Thursday on perhaps the most spectacular course in the United States, the Pebble Beach Golf Links.

None of which seems to make a great impression on Stadler, even though he counts the Masters among his three victories this season and is the only man with a shot at the Grand Slam, the unaccomplished one-year sweep of the Masters, the U.S. and British Opens and the PGA.

"I'm not what you'd call a majors-oriented person," said Stadler, the season's only three-time winner with victory win in the Kemper Open. He also holds the money-winning lead with more than $312,000.

"Oh, you know some tournaments are more important than others, but, really, they're all pretty much the same to me."

That, of course, directly contradicts the importance placed on the event by Stadler's two main challengers in the 153-player field, Jack Nicklaus and Tom Watson.

"Winning the Open is my No.1 career goal," said Watson, whose four-year reign as golf's outstanding performer was interrupted last season.

"With one exception, Sam Snead, there's never been a truly great player who didn't win the Open," said Watson, who has collected three British Open crowns and a couple of Masters titles. "At the start of every season, winning the Open is my major goal. And it will continue to be my major goal until I do win it."

Watson, twice a winner this year, will be making the attempt this time on one of his favorite spots, the Pebble Beach Links that stretch 6,802 yards along the cliffs and crags above Carmel Bay.

"It's been one of my favorite courses ever since I used to sneak away from school (at Stanford) and come down here and play," said Watson, who had won two Bing Crosby titles on this course.

Nicklaus has won three Crosby titles here, picked up one of his two national amateur titles on these links and won the U.S. Open the last time it was played here, in 1972.

And Nicklaus, holder of a record 17 major professional titles (five Masters, four U.S. Opens, five PGA's, three British Opens) and generally regarded as the finest player the ancient game has produced, eagerly seeks to add to his unmatched accumulation of important championships.

"This is the American national championship," he said. "I'm an American. That makes this the most important title in the world to me," said Nicklaus, who shares the record for U.S. Open victories with Bobby Jones, Willie Anderson and Ben Hogan.

"Once you tie the record, obviously, the next step is to break it," he said.

Nicklaus has played extremely well this season. He broke a two-year victory drought in the Colonial, lost a playoff for another title and has been close numerous other times.

Candelaria says he wants to be traded from Pirates

"I don't care who prints it. I want out of Pittsburgh," he told the Pittsburgh Press Friday night after helping the Pirates to a 1-0 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

The deadline for National League trading without waivers is 9 p.m. Tuesday.

"They have three days," Candelaria said.

The 6-foot-7 Pirate lefthander, whose career was threatened last year by an arm problem, has a 2-3 record this season. He limited the Phillies to three hits in six innings Friday night.

Candelaria is upset because he and the Pirates haven't begun negotiations on a new contract. "They've got to know I'm healthy again," he said.

Without being specific, he suggested that he had been mislead by management. "I don't like being lied to," he said.

Pirate General Manager Pet Peterson said there had been a delay in talks with Candelaria and other Pirates because the club is still negotiating with the city of Pittsburgh over its stadium lease.

"We want to keep Candelaria in Pittsburgh and offer him a multi-year contract, but we're not in a position to sit down and talk seriously with him yet," he said.

Repeated low blows by Cooney leaves after-fight sour taste

By KEN DENLINGER
The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — The classiest move of the fight came from neither fighter, but from the trainer who assured this World Boxing Council title bout would end, the little man who barged into the ring Friday night in the final 10 seconds of the 13th round to keep Gerry Cooney from suffering any more.

"I would not let my fighter take a beating for all the millions in the world," Victor Valle said. "I love this boy too much. He tried. He showed you all."

As Cooney was being thrown all over the ropes, his face assuming an almost grotesque look, Valle could take no more. Through the ropes he burst, past the pushing of referee Mills Lane and to his man. They had kissed seconds before the fight; the small trainer half-carried his heavyweight fighter back to safety.

Holmes said as much:

"Gerry Cooney's best punch was a low blow."

That was near the end of his news conference. He had been gracious to Cooney earlier — and bitter for a moment at everyone, real and imagined, who had done him ill over the years.

Holmes has whipped everybody who wanted a piece of him these four-plus years as champion, and not been given what he considered his proper due from the proper sources. And when he had finally disposed of the vastly overrated Cooney, Holmes appeared to collapse in the ring.

From emotion?

From the enormous heat?

"FROM EVERYBODY climbing all over him in the ring," said trainer Eddie Futch. "The weight of so many was on him. So he sat down. Briefly."

As he left the ring, having punched out humiliation only he could comprehend, Holmes stopped just before the top step, paused and then thrust both hands high in the air. At last! he seemed to be gesturing. Here I am, the best you've got. Whattya think?

Perhaps half the crowd of 32,500 noticed him, and they offered respectful applause. Holmes, to paraphrase Rodney Dangerfield, still don't get the respect he covets, except from the man he respects most: himself.

His first public words were a defiant: "I still have it." And he held high the WBC title belt. Later, he added: "I cured all the critics; I feel good. My dreams always come true. I dreamed I would be heavyweight champion of the world; I am heavyweight champion of the world.

"I think all of us want a little recognition in life; I want to put a mark on life."

He put some ugly marks on Cooney as early as round six. Already, Cooney had delivered several low blows, throwing that awkward left as though he were seeing not Holmes but a dwarf.

Finally, referee Mills Lane got assertive, telling Cooney in the seventh he would warn him no more. By the ninth round, Lane could tolerate no more. After Cooney doubled the champ up with his best shot frighteningly low, Lane halted matters and told the officials to deduct a point.

AS HOLMES tried to recover, Lane changed his mind. He retraced his steps and demanded another point deducted. Then he said to Cooney: "One more time and I'll disqualify you."

There was another time, two rounds later, but only another one-point deduction.

A Holmes fan pleaded with the champ to retire as the only unbeaten black heavyweight champion. If not immediately, soon. Clearly, the champ was touched, but he laughed that off by saying lots of men would be scrambling for that vacant title.

"I don't now if I want that to take place right now," he said.

The challenger was especially late for his part of the news conference. In fact, his mother beat him there by 20 minutes.

"NEVER BEEN hurt real bad," she said. "I have no quarrel about his getting hurt tonight, because he did it his way. He covered himself with glory."

He could take most of what Holmes could muster.

"Only time he hurt me," Holmes said, "was with those low blows."

After the fight, the champ said his pre-fight anger had been with Cooney's mouthy managers (Dennis Rappaport and Mike Jones) more than with Cooney.

"I shook Gerry Cooney's hand before the fight," Holmes said, "and I shook Gerry Cooney's hand after the fight. Too bad people in his corner told him different things. I hope he knows I have no hard feelings. I wish him well."

There was more:

"Sorry I can't be what you expect," he said. "Sorry I can't be Muhammad Ali or Joe Louis or Leon Spinks. I wasn't born to be those people. I was born to be myself."

Umps lead lonely life in the Bushes

Contrary to what many nometown fans and most outraged managers suspect, umpires do not wander in off the streets to escape a lynching mob and find safety in the noble profession of arbitration. And it's not like Don Adams hints in his lecture to umpires. "This is a tough, gruelling business and this course will will separate the men from the boys. Some of you will go on to bigger and better things. Some of you will crack...You will become umpires."

IN REALITY, despite the drawbacks, it's very competitive profession. Bonin went to the Bill Klem school at St. Petersburg, Fla. There were 160 in his class. Just 11 got a call from professional baseball.

Each year some 300, from all the schools, try out and on a good year 24 or 25 will receive assignments. "Of that number," says Kaplon, "Maybe one will make it to the majors someday."

SURPRISINGLY, for Kaplon and Bonin, the confrontations with irate managers and players and the verbal darts and arrows from the stands are not the worst aspects of umpiring.

"Gripes and complaints are just part of the job," says Kaplon. As for losing your temper and retaliating when a manager, whose venom permeates the surrounding atmosphere with a fine spray of moisture, bellows in your face, "It's just part of the job. You can't take it personally and you've got to learn to cope."

DURING THE off season, Kaplon was umpire-in-chief in the Arizona Instructional League. Bonin worked for the phone company in Louisiana.

In spring training, both were assigned to the Seattle Mariners at Tempe and given $65 a week for incidentals for pay.

Money and travel are the worst parts. Kaplon recalls working an extra inning game in Jackson, Miss., on a Saturday night, leaving at 1 a.m. and traveling 543 miles to Tulsa to do an afternoon game Sunday.

"San Antonio has a bus with sleepers, bus drivers and TV," says Kaplon. "Umpires drive from city-to-city and have to switch off constantly to keep from falling asleep," Kaplon educates.

The long, idle days are another problem, one they share with on the road ball players, except that umpires are never home.

You can spend just so long out by the pool before sizzling, so the soaps, those saboteurs of the nation's morals, are a life-saver.

"Our favorite is All My Children." For the first time, Kaplon showed genuine anger. "Can you believe our motel in Amarillo wasn't on the cable and we missed a whole week. And we missed today's episode." So the writer filled them in on Palmer, Jessie, Opal and Langley.

FOR KAPLON, moving up from AA, and a two-man team where pickoffs and multi-play situations are toughest to call, to the three-man crew of AAA ball.

"The mechanics are completely different with a three-man crew," Kaplon said.

"Another thing," adds Bonin, "In AAA ball, you don't have to work behind the plate every other night or game. In one stretch I had 26 innings behind the plate in three days, and that's a mental strain."

Midland and San Antonio players probably are unaware of the special treatment they get from Kaplon and Bonin team. Somehow, they have come up with an unlimited supply of Delaware River mud, traditionally, until recent years, rubbed on baseballs before games at all levels. Bonin was rubbing the gloss from the night's supply and upon questioning nodded, "Yes, this is Delaware River mud. They don't use that much any more. Most of the Texas crews just use infield dirt. Of course, it doesn't make that much difference to the players. It's more of a convenience to us."

DESPITE the problems of umpiring in the bushes, or mesquite, in this case, neither has any regrets and although the number who make it to the majors is discouragingly limited, both have hopes that they may be lucky. Kaplon is in no hurry, he figures six years. "At 24, I'm really pretty young even to be in AA ball."

Bonin is so new to umpiring, that he really hasn't given any serious thought to a time limit. "I'll just keep going and hope that someday it happens."

Both enjoy what they are doing. According to Kaplon, the travel is one of the worst things about umpiring, "It's also one of the best things about it, too."

Johncock edges Mears for Mays pole

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Gordon Johncock, who narrowly defeated Rick Mears in last month's Indianapolis 500, edged him for the pole position by another slim margin Saturday during qualifying for Sunday's 150-mile Rex Mays Indy-car race.

Johncock circled the one-mile State Fair Park oval in 25.266 seconds with an average speed of 142.484 mph, beating Mears by .007 seconds and setting a track record.

"I didn't come close to getting in trouble," Johncock said. "I didn't come as close as I did in practice Thursday, when I got sideways.

"I drove in a little deep, and the car pushed out to the side a little, on the second lap. But it wasn't anything that bad," he said.

The Mays race, to be televised by ESPN, the sports cable network, is to start at 3 p.m. CDT after a 100-kilometer Super Vee preliminary race.

Until Saturday, Mears had dominated Indy-car qualifying this season, setting track records and winning the pole position for the first three races: the Phoenix 150, the Atlanta 125, and Indy 500.

Mears, of Bakersfield, Calif., won the first two races of the season.

"It was the quickest we ran all weekend, but it wasn't quick enough," Mears said after his run of 25.273 and 142.445 in his Penske-Cosworth.

Braves dump Giants, 10-5

By The Associated Press

Glenn Hubbard drove in four runs and Bob Horner belted five hits, powering the Atlanta Braves to a 10-5 victory over the San Francisco Giants Sunday.

The win was the fifth in a row for the Braves, who increased their mastery against the National League West to 17-3 overall and 13-0 on the road.

Dale Murphy's one-out single and Horner's double gave the Braves a 1-0 lead off loser Rich Gale, 2-5, in the fourth.

Winning pitcher Phil Niekro, 5-2, triggered the three-run fifth with a leadoff single. He was forced on Brett Butler's bunt, but Butler reached third on a steal and catcher Bob Brenly's throwing error. Hubbard followed with a run-scoring single. Chris Chambliss then tripled and scored on Gale's wild pitch for a 4-0 lead.

Rafael Ramirez's single, walks to pinch-batter Randy Johnson and Butler, and Hubbard's three-run double came in the sixth.

Niekro worked the first five innings, allowing three hits and striking out six before leaving the game with a hamstring pull. The Giants scored all five of their runs in the sixth off relievers Larry McWilliams and Steve Bedrosian. Al Hrabosky came on in the eighth to get his second save.

The big blows in the rally were run-scoring singles by Brenly and Tom O'Malley and a three-run pinch-homer by Champ Summers.

Expos 7, Cubs 5

Al Oliver's two-run double snapped a 4-4 tie and highlighted a two-out, three-run seventh-inning uprising that carried the Montreal Expos to$a 7-5 victory over Chicago Saturday night, extending the Cubs' losing streak to 12 games.

Terry Francona started the outburst with a two-out single off Willie Hernandez, 2-3, Chicago's third pitcher. Andre Dawson also singled and both runners scored on Oliver's double down the leftfield line. After Gary Carter was walked intentionally, Tim Wallach singled to drive in Oliver.

The Cubs had tied the score in the top of the seventh. Larry Bowa led off with a single and winning pitcher Ray Burris, 2-7, hit pinch hitter Dan Briggs with a pitch. Both runners advanced on Bump Wills' sacrifice and Bowa scored on Ryne Sandberg's sacrifice fly.

Chicago opened the scoring in the first inning when Wills led off with a double off Expos' starter David Palmer, advanced on a groundout and scored on sacrifice fly by Bill Buckner. The Cubs added two more in the fifth on a sacrifice fly by Wills and an RBI single by Buckner.

Montreal collected 14 hits, while the Cubs had just six.

Pirates 9, Phillies 2

Right-hander Manny Sarmiento, makinm only his second start since 1979, held Philadelphia to six hits and singled home two runs as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the Phillies 9-2 Saturday night.

Sarmiento, 2-0, singled in the first run of three unearned runs in the second inning off Phillies' starter Mike Krukow, 4-5.

The crucial play in the inning was an error by Philadelphia shortstop Ivan DeJesus on Lee Lacy's grounder after Tony Pena's leadoff single.. Dale$Berra then walked to load the bases, and Sarmiento followed with his run-scoring single.

The Phils closed the gap to 3-2 on Bo Diaz' 11th homer in the second and Garry Maddox' sacrifice fly in the fourth.

But the Pirates added two more in the fifth, knocking out Krukow. Madlock singled, Jason Thompson doubled him home and Pena singled him to third. Thompson then scored on a fielder's choice grounder by Lacy off reliever Porfi Altamirano.

Mets 6, Cardinals 2

Mike Jorgensen and Ron Hodges homered and Craig Swan posted his fifth victory of the season with his longest outing in nearly two years Saturday night as the New York Mets downed the St.Louis Cardinals 6-2.

Swan, 5-1, who has been hampered during the past two seasons with a rotator cuff injury, hurled seven innings for his longest stint since July 6, 1980. He allowed seven hits, while striking out three and walking two. Reliever Neil Allen came on to pitch the final two innings for New York.

Cardinal starter Steve Mura, 5-5, worked four innings and was shelled for six runs and seven hits.

The Mets took a 5-0 lead in the third inning. With one out, Swan and Mookie Wilson singled. After a groundout, George Foster and Dave Kingman followed with run-scoring singles. Jorgensen then hit a three-run homer into the Mets' bullpen in right field, his first homer of the season.

American League Roundup

Rangers edge Twins, 4-3

By The Associated Press

Designated hitter Lamar Johnson's two-out single in the eighth inning scored Doug Flynn and gave the Texas Rangers a 4-3 victory over the Minnesota Twins Saturday night in a battle of the American League's two losingest teams.

With relief help from Dave Schmidt, Rangers' starter Rick Honeycutt earned his first victory of the year after seven losses.

Honeycutt, who was touched for home runs by Tom Brunansky and Gary Gaetti, went eight innings and yielded eight hits before Schmidt came on to earn his first save of the year.

The Rangers broke a 3-3 tie in the eighth inning off Twins starter Bobby Castillo, 2-4. Flynn singled with one out and, after Pete Redfern relieved Castillo, Flynn moved to second on a groundout by Buddy Bell. Redfern then gave up Johnson's game-winning hit up the middle.

The Twins scored a run in the first inning on singles by Ron Washington and Brunansky, and an infield hit by Jesus Vega.

Brunansky homered in the third and Gaetti homered in the fourth inning to give Minnesota a 3-1 lead. But the Rangers tied it in the fourth inning when Dave Hostetler smashed a towering homer over the 380-foot sign in left field after Johnson had singled.

Tigers 7, Brewers 3

Tom Brookens slammed a two-run homer and Larry Herndon lined a solo shot to back the nine-hit pitching of Milt Wilcox as the Detroit Tigers posted a 7-3 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers Saturday night.

The Tigers, who backed Wilcox in the field with five doubleplays, took a 4-2 lead with four runs in the fifth off Milwaukee starter Mike Caldwell, 3-6.

After singles by Lance Parrish and Brookens, Mark DeJohn sacrificed and a run scored on an RBI grounder by Lou Whitaker. Chet Lemon walked and two more runs scored when Enos Cabell blooped a single to right. When Charlie Moore bobbled the ball for an error, Cabell took second and scored when first baseman Roy Howell misplayed Kirk Gibson's grounder.

The Brewers closed to within 4-3 with a run in their half of the fifth against Wilcox, 5-2, on walks to Jim Gantner and Robin Yount and Ben Oglivie's single.

But Herndon lned his 11th homer leading off the Tigers' sixth. Parrish then singled and Brookens followed with his fourth homer, chasing Caldwell.

Mariners 3, Royals 2

Rick Sweet knocked in the game-winning run with a sixth-inning sacrifice fly and Gene Nelson won his fourth game in his last five outings as the Seattle Mariners posted a 3-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals Saturday night.

Nelson, 5-7, gave up two runs on eight hits and was aided by three Mariners' double plays before leaving in the seventh. Reliever Bill Caudill pitched the final 2 2-3 innings and snuffed out three Kansas City threats to pick up his eighth save of the season.

Frank White drove in both Royals runs with a second inning sacrifice fly that put Kansas City ahead 1-0 and his second home run of the season, a bases-empty blast, that tied the game 2-2 in the fifth.

Seattle tied the game 1-1 in the third when Julio Cruz led off with an infield hit, moved to second on a fly ball and scored on Bruce Bochte's two-out single.

Orioles 5, Yankees 3

Cal Ripken Jr. smashed a two-run homer in the eighth inning, his second in two nights, to break a 3-3 tie and give the Baltimore Orioles a 5-3 victory over the faltering New York Yankees Saturday night.

The Orioles have won seven of their last eight games, while the Yankees have dropped seven of their last eight.

Ripken's sixth homer came off Shane Rawley, 4-3, after the third New York pitcher had walked Gary Roenicke to open the inning. It was Baltimore's 16th homer in its last eight games.

New York tied the score 3-3 with two runs in the seventh, chasing Orioles starter Jim Palmer, whose 27 lifetime victories against the Yankees is the most by an active pitcher.

Tippy Martinez, 2-4, picked up the victory, although Tim Stoddard relieved in the ninth inning and collected his fourth save of the year by striking out Butch Hobson with the bases loaded to end the game.

Butch Wynegar walked in the seventh and scored on Ken Griffey's two-out double. Lou Piniella, a fourth-inning substitute for Bobby Murcer, who injured a hamstring muscle, then singled home the tying run. Wynegar also scored New York's first run when he doubled in the third, advanced on a sacrifice by Dave Collins, and scored on Willie Randolph's infield out.

A's 8, Blue Jays 1

Rick Langford fired a four-hitter and received home run support from Rickey Henderson and Jeff Newman as the Oakland A's defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 8-1 Saturday afternoon.

The Oakland right-hander retired 14 consecutive

Angels 3, White Sox 0

Ken Forsch went to school Friday night and learned his lessons so well that he set the Chicago White Sox on their heels Saturday.

Working before 44,084 — Chicago's biggest baseball crowd of the season — and a national television audience, Forsch fired a snappy three-hitter in leading the California Angels to a 3-0 victory.

Forsch was concerned only in the eighth inning when, with two outs, Bill Almon singled and he walked Rudy Law on four straight pitches.

"I nearly hit Almon with a pitch and then lost the feel for the ball," said Forsch. "It was frustrating. So I backed off the mound, sucked it in, got mad at myself and got back into the groove."

All the help Forsch needed came in the fifth inning when the Angels broke a scoreless tie with an unearned run. But for good measure, Doug DeCinces delivered a two-run single in the sixth to wrap it up.

Forsch, 5-6, retired the first 11 men he faced before giving up a single to Steve Kemp with two outs in the fourth. He did not allow another baserunner until Jim Morrison beat out a bunt in the sixth.

Bill Almon got the third Chicago hit with a two-out single in the eighth.

Forsch walked two and struck out two in turning in his second shutout and seventh complete game of the season.

Steve Trout, 4-5, was the loser, starting his downfall in the fifth when the Angels scored an unearned run to break a scoreless tie.

With two out, Tim Foli singled. Trout threw wild on an attempted pickoff for an error, and after first baseman Tom Paciorek recovered the ball and threw it into the Chicago dugout for another error, Foli scored.

Brian Downing and Rod Carew, extending his hitting streak to 17 games, singled to start the sixth. Bobby Grich sacrificed and Don Baylor was intentionally walked before DeCinces singled to left for two runs.

Red Sox 6, Indians 4

Carl Yastrzemski's second run-scoring single snapped a 3-3 tie and ignited a three-run seventh inning that carried the streaking Boston Red Sox to a 6-4 victory over the Cleveland Indians Saturday.

Carney Lansford followed with a two-run double off John Denny, 3-7, to insure Boston's seventh win in its last eight games. Cleveland dropped its fifth in a row.

Dwight Evans and Jim Rice both singled to set the stage for the tie-breaking hit. Rice reached third on Yastrzemski's single but pulled his right hamstring and was replaced by Reid Nichols.

Cleveland tied the score in the fifth on Ron Hassey's two-run single that chased starter Mike Torrez and brought in winner Bob Stanley, 5-1. Hassey's hit followed a bunt single by Toby Harrah, a walk to Von Hayes and a wild pitch.

The Indians struck first on Harrah's 12th homer of the season, a solo shot in the opening inning. But the Red Sox tied the score in the bottom of the first when Jerry Remy singled, took second on a groundout, third on Denny's wild pitch and scored on Yastrzemski's single to right.

Dave Stapleton led off the Boston second with his sixth homer. The Red Sox went on top 3-1 in the fourth when Glenn Hoffman walked and later scored on Evans' single.

Cruz takes featherweight title from Palma

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Leo Cruz battered Sergio Palma and claimed the World Boxing Association junior featherweight title from the defending champion Saturday by scoring a unanimous decision in a 15-round bout.

By the ninth round, Palma's eye was a bloody mess, but the referee allowed the fight to continue.

The referee scored Cruz the winner by a 147-144 margin. The bout's two judges scored it 149-140 and 146-143 for the 121-pounder from Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic.

Palma was battered about by Cruz's left-right combinations, but neither fighter ever went down.

"(Palma) seemed to be fighting without the flame," said his manager, Juan Carlos "Tito" Lectore.

Palma, who had been WBA champion in the 122-pound division for 22 months, now is 48-4-4. He had won 13 straight bouts and six title defenses coming into the match, including a 15-round decision over Cruz in Buenos Aires 14 months ago. He won the crown in August 1980 when he floored Leo Randolph in Spokane, Wash.

Cruz, 45-5-1, who had vowed to "send (Palma) without a head to the Malvinas" — the Argentine name for the Falkland Islands — effectively repulsed Palma's charges throughout the first four rounds.

Simple truth, it's all anyone wants

The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

Recent news item: "Dodger slugger Steve Garvey tells an interviewer he is unhappy over Pollyanna stories written about him. 'People have been writing hearts-and-flowers things about me. Building sympathy. That's not what I want,' he tells press."

We take you now to a Major League clubhouse where a reporter is interviewing the All-Star cleanup hitter, "Eagle Scout" Arvey. Arvey is blowing smoke in the reporter's face and tacking up a pin-up from a porn movie as he talks.

EAGLE SCOUT: "Now, just remember, none of that heart-and-flowers crud. Just the simple truth, right?"

EAGLE SCOUT: "Well, there are those two broads in Philly and Atlanta. I mean, boy, lights dim when they come in a room. One's a go-go dancer in an after-hours joint in Jersey, and the other's married to a shipping tycoon who's gone a lot, if you know what I mean. There's also this gorgeous hunk who sits in the dugout boxes here. Some night, she's gonna come without her old man and 'whammo!' Four-for-four! I'd also like to punch the manager out before the season's over."

REPORTER: "What about the pennant? The World Series?"

EAGLE SCOUT: "There you go with that gushy stuff again! What about the pennant?! What am I, a machine? Did you come here for a story or an autograph? Wait a minute, I'll get you a bubble-gum card! What do I care about a pennant? If I can go three-for-four the team is on its own, dummy! Twenty-five guys on the club, and 20 of them making more money than I do. You think I'm gonna bust my chops to make them look good? What am I, the 'designated dummy?'"

EAGLE SCOUT: "Drink. Date. Eat. Sometimes I make obscene calls. To my ex-wife. I also write threatening letters. I drive the FBI wild."

REPORTER: "No, I mean recreation-wise. Hobbies. Don't you have any hobbies?"

EAGLE SCOUT: "I shoot bluebirds. I trap robins for my cat. In the winter, I go up and hit those baby seals over the head with a rifle butt. I broke the record up there last year, most-seals-killed, youngest-seal-killed. You name it. I did it. If things are dull, I phone up the airlines with bomb scares. I kick the dog and punch holes in lifeboats where they won't show up till too late. Am I going too fast for you? Get this down."

REPORTER: "Well, what about other recreation habits? Do you go to the movies?"

EAGLE SCOUT: "I watch World War II movies till the tide turns. Then, I walk out. As far as I'm concerned, the Germans are still in Paris. The only two people who were happy to see Paris fall were me and Hitler. I also like one-sided prize fights. I love it when they get their knees wobbly and their eyes bleed. But you should see it with someone you love. I also love car wrecks. My all-time favorite sports event was the 1973 Indianapolis 500. And I love bull fights. Particularly if they end in a draw. That's where the bull AND the matador both get towed out."

REPORTER: "Don't you have a favorite author?"

EAGLE SCOUT: "Oh, sure. The Marquis De Sade. I'm also into whips. I've got more chains in my cellar than Torquemada. I'm also a collector. I've got a first edition of 'Mein Kampf.'"

EAGLE SCOUT: "I want a nuclear reactor for my backyard. Or, at least, in Santa Monica."

REPORTER: "Do you espouse causes?"

REPORTER: "How about abortion?"

EAGLE SCOUT: "I'm for any kind of capital punishment. I'm on the zero-population committee. That's the committee to get the world's population to zero by the year 2000. We're gonna permit abortions right up to the age of 25. I mean, why limit it to the unborn? Do we want to cut population or don't we?"

REPORTER: "What about current events? Do you have an opinion on the Falkland Islands war?"

EAGLE SCOUT: "I don't care who wins so long as it takes a long time. I love pictures of ships on fire. I wish they'd use nukes, though. Either side. Or both sides."

REPORTER: "But aren't you on any charity drives?"

REPORTER: "But isn't that a waste of money? Haven't they had bubonic plague in check for centuries?"

EAGLE SCOUT: "In check?! Check it?! We want to spread it!"

REPORTER (closing his notebook and sighing): "Well, Eagle, just another day in the life of America's hero, our own Eagle Scout in home white."

EAGLE SCOUT: "About that nickname, buddy, I told you I'm sick of hearts-and-flowers. Can't we get something a little more catchy?"

REPORTER: "What would you suggest?"

EAGLE SCOUT: "How about 'Captain Rat'? Has a nice ring to it, don't you think?"

Cowley shipped to Braves AAA club

Cowley, who was 0-1 with a 4.34 ERA over 29 innings, had been on the disabled list since suffering a pulled right shoulder muscle in Chicago May 9.

The right-handed pitcher will report to the International League team immediately, and will "get in shape and probably be back soon," said Braves spokesman Wayne Minshew.

Horseshoe Bay's Ram Rock...a real challenge

It's so tough, another writer knocked two balls into different water hazards on one shot. As he lined up his chip to the ninth green from out of the rough, his practice swing hit the ball and it careened into a stream on the right. His chip hit neatly on the green and rolled off green into a bottomless hazard to the left. Sure, you have to count the practice shot as a stroke, but only if you aren't cheating. Ram Rock is the kind of course that can make even an honest man fib.

Jones calls Ram Rock the best course he ever designed. The No. 1 tee is 1,800 feet above sea level and the ninth is 900 feet. It's not all downhill. By the time you return to 18, your back at 1,800 feet. The greens are Penncross Bentgrass and the fairways are Tifway Bermuda. Teeing areas are carpeted with Tipsdwarf.

Although it is relatively young as resorts go, the reputation of the Norman Hurd creation has reached such diverse points as Wyoming, Chicago and Mexico for its clientele. In fact, a castle, the most unusual edifice adjacent to Ram Rock, close to the par 3 No. 4 island hole, belongs to a Mexican oil scion. He also has built a family condo along 18.

Golfers don't have to go into nearby Marble Falls if they need golf equipment. Putt was pro merchandiser of the year in 1980 and if he doesn't have it in stock in one of his shops, probably no one does.

President Norman C. Hurd had conventions in mind when he began development. The Hurd Center had convention and banquet facilities for 350. There is a 25-bedroom in for convenience and a 125 bedroom management company. But don't drag your feet. Convention bookings are confirmed two and three years in advance.

MASON, Ohio (AP) — Jan Stephenson continued her torrid play Saturday with three birdies on the first five holes to go nine under par in the third round of the $200,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association Championship.

Stephenson, who has held at least a share of the lead since the first round, was in the last threesome to begin play Saturday.

She was paired with Beth Daniel, who started the day at five under par, and Jeannette Kerr, who was among a group of four players at four under par.

Stephenson, who shot two consecutive 69's to lead Daniel by one shot at the halfway point, began play Saturday in a steady drizzle.

The course had been soggy during the first round because of heavy rain early in the week, and had only begun to dry out Friday before it was quickly saturated again.

Stephenson, a precise putter, and Daniel, one of the longest hitters on the women's tour, had not been bothered by the course conditions in the early rounds.

Breunig suddenly Cowboys' old man

AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE FREEMAN

Bob Breunig's autumns have been filled with football every since he can remember.

In grade school...in high school...in Arizona State.

Breunig played because he (A), loved the game. There was no (B).

When he joined the Dallas Cowboys in 1975, he found reason B — football was also an excellent living.

With the retirement of D.D. Lewis, Breunig at 29, is suddenly the old man of the Cowboys' linebacking corps with eight years experience in the middle of Coach Tom Landry's complicated flex defense.

Now, he is worried that he will miss a National Football League season in the prime of his career. He's not certain he could walk away from his team if the National Football League Player's Association calls a strike this summer.

"I'm not sure I could strike...I'd have to see what the issues have come down to," said Breunig. "Both sides have a lot of points — right and wrong. The players need to be protected and the owners have their system within the NFL industry."

Breunig, who works in the off-season for a group of real estate developers which includes Roger Staubach, said he feels there is the strong possibility of a strike.

"It wouldn't surprise me," he said. "It's too bad that somebody doesn't do an expose on the issues on both sides."

Breunig is already at odds with the NFLPA over what he calls its "name calling."

"I'm not in total agreement with the leadership and some of the tactics," he said.

Recently, Breunig's good friend, Staubach, said "the players don't seem to be solidly behind (NFLPA Executive Director) Ed Garvey 100 per cent and that makes it difficult for Garvey. I feel the NFLPA made a mistake in going after a percentage of the (NFL's) gross profits."

The NFLPA is asking 55 per cent of the gross profits.

Recently wide receiver Butch Johnson of the Cowboys said his teammates were too divided to strike.

At a team meeting some 35 per cent of the 23 players present voted to honor a strike.

Breunig is not saying he won't strike. What he is saying is that the cause must be just before he misses his first football season since he was a teenager.

U.N. ambassador no longer cushy job

By BARRY SCHWEID

WASHINGTON (AP) — Being the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations would seem a cushy, terrific job. You get a chauffeur, a suite at the Waldorf Towers, a squad of gofers and invitations to dozens of glittery parties a week.

Catching the after-Christmas sale at Saks Fifth Avenue is a lot easier when, as Jeane Kirkpatrick managed last December, bodyguards steer you through the crowds and your limousine is waiting at the front door.

But the bowing and scraping, the title and the perks don't make up for the headaches brought on by the frustrations of representing the United States in an increasingly diverse — and hostile — organization. In the case of Mrs. Kirkpatrick and two of her equally voluble and opinionated predecessors, Daniel Patrick Moynihan and Andrew Young, holding strong views and expressing them can add to the woes.

Outspokenness is rarely prized in the diplomatic world. It's not appreciated by the boss, the president of the United States, or by secretaries of state like Henry A. Kissinger and Alexander M. Haig Jr., who don't like being upstaged.

Excessive initiative can also get you into trouble. Young found that out when he violated U.S. policy by holding talks with a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization. Despite his long friendship with President Carter, he was forced to resign.

In the beginning, when the United States usually had its way at the United Nations, the ambassador's job was easier.

Then, as now, the Soviet Union was a potent adversary, and the United Nations sometimes split into blocs of East and West. But the smaller countries outside the Warsaw Pact tended to side with the United States. Neutralism, which sometimes takes on a pro-Soviet cast, was slow in asserting itself. The Arab bloc took a long time to coalesce.

In the United Nations' first decade, the American ambassadors to the United Nations were non-controversial men who followed instructions religiously. They also didn't have much influence in setting U.S. policy, even after Henry Cabot Lodge was given Cabinet rank by President Eisenhower.

Supporters of two-term presidential candidate Adlai E. Stevenson considered his appointment to the United Nations by President Kennedy a comedown. Stevenson performed with grace and eloquence, but his lack of status in the administration became clear when planners of the Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba in 1961 did not consult him.

Similarly, when Arthur J. Goldberg let President Johnson talk him out of a lifetime seat on the Supreme Court in 1963 for the U.N. job, he was considered a victim of political maneuvering. The opening on the bench went to Abe Fortas, a close friend of the president, while Goldberg's dovish views diminished his influence with Johnson and, consequently, his clout in New York.

"It was not a very diverse organization in the beginning," said Donald McHenry, who followed Young in the job in 1979. "Its original membership was basically European, even when they came from Latin America. The United States controlled the General Assembly, and now we don't."

But more than anything else, he said in an interview, "the great difficulty is that the perception of the U.N. by most of the public is outdated. We look at the organization in ideal terms. We fail to recognize that it is a political institution."

As a Cabinet member, the ambassador has high rank. In the case of Young, and now Mrs. Kirkpatrick, special ties to the president produce the stature and confidence to take strong stands.

Like all U.S. ambassadors, the U.N. representative gets instructions through the State Department. That, Moynihan said in an interview, "guarantees institutional troubles."

The department "basically only functions well in bilateral diplomacy," he said. "That's the way it's worked for centuries." But at the United Nations, diplomacy is conducted multilaterally — through groups of countries.

And sometimes the bureaucracy's wires get crossed.

Last Friday, Mrs. Kirkpatrick joined Britain in vetoing an Argentine-backed resolution calling for an immediate cease-fire in the Falkland Islands.

Her aides had held a telephone line open to the State Department, where there was an open line to Haig in Europe. And yet, Mrs. Kirkpatrick received instructions to abstain too late.

Moynihan, who was on leave from Harvard, lasted 6½ months. Actually, Moynihan said in an interview, "I went to the U.N. not to be controversial, but to put an end to controversy."

In his brief run, Moynihan sharply defended the United States — and its besieged friend, Israel. He called a U.N. committee report on the U.S. Virgin Islands "rubbish," condemned the General Assembly resolution equating Zionism with racism as an "abomination of anti-Semitism" and described the assembly as "the theater of the absurd."

Young, seeking to make amends with the Third World, was deep in controversy during his 2½ years. He accused four former presidents, the Soviet Union, Britain and Sweden of racism, said Cuban troops in Angola were a "stabilizing influence" and predicted Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini of Iran would be considered a saint some day.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick has followed Moynihan's pattern in "making a deliberate decision to answer attacks." And like Moynihan, she often springs to Israel's defense.

But Mrs. Kirkpatrick goes further. She has accused her government of impotence over many years at the United Nations and of stumbling "almost on a Mad Hatter basis."

Moynihan wound up in the Senate and Young is mayor of Atlanta. So far, Mrs. Kirkpatrick is holding down the fort in New York.

In the beginning, when the U.S. usually had its way at the United Nations, the ambassador's job was easier. Members of Congress write each other

"Dear colleague" letters have become a Capitol Hill institution. Members make use of the format both to solicit votes for their bills and to trumpet their positions to fellow lawmakers.

On almost every day of the week, dozens of such letters crisscross in congressional mail rooms.

Many members use them as press releases, sometimes giving them to reporters before distributing them to other members.

Rep. Patricia Shroeder, D-Colo., has refined the practice into a clipping service.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Parenteral nutrition prevents starvation

Dear Dr. Solomon: After a serious operation, an uncle of mine is going to be able to leave the hospital. But he'll have to feed himself through a tube that goes into a vein. Is this something new? I would appreciate anything you could tell me about it. — Doug, Great Neck, N.Y.

Solomon

Dear Doug: From your description, it would appear that your uncle is going to feed himself through a method known as total parenteral nutrition or intravenous feeding. The technique is relatively new, but there are about 500 patients throughout the country who now use the procedure. Twenty years ago, says Dr. William D. Heizer of the University of North Carolina, these patients would have died of starvation or dehydration.

Total parenteral nutrition is used by patients who have had a large part of their intestine removed and who otherwise would not be able to satisfy their nutritional requirements. They may have been operated on for cancer or possibly a hereditary or other kind of disorder.

The patient "consumes" a high-caloric fluid that is rich in vitamins and other nutrients through a tube in his chest that is inserted into a large vein. Of course, everything must be kept very sterile. Many patients for whom total parenteral nutrition is appropriate have been able to resume almost all of their normal activities.

Dear Dr. Solomon: It is obvious that no method of birth control, short of complete abstinence, can work all of the time. But I am considering getting an untrauterine device, and I'd like to know more about it. Is there any reason that it works for some women while others who use it still become pregnant? — Sara, Painesville, Ohio

Dear Sara: There are a number of variables that enter into the determination of who does and who does not become pregnant while using an intrauterine device (IUD). One of these variables seems to be heavy aspirin use. Dr. Jed P. Naisbett, who is with the University of Wisconsin Medical School in Madison, reported this finding after a study of more than 150 women.

He notes that women with IUD's who became pregnant had an average aspirin consumption of 13.5 grams per month, compared with an average of two grams per month for women who did not become pregnant. However, both groups showed a great deal of variability in their use of aspirin, making it difficult to arrive at any hard and fast conclusions.

For Mr. N.O. (Baltimore): The fact that you have changed your appearance over the past two years and especially that your hands seem a little larger would make me seriously question whether you are producing too much growth hormone. When adults overproduce growth hormone, they change in appearance instead of getting taller. Patients that have had this problem can be helped with appropriate diagnosis and treatment.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

CONSUMER TIPS

Deal with reputable store for used parts

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, Inc.

How often have you turned the ignition key to your car only to hear deafening silence. Most often in this case only the battery needs recharging or replacing, but occasionally the problem is more serious such as the starter needing to be replaced. The mechanic gives you an option — you can purchase either a new or recycled part. Which is better?

Recycled auto and truck parts don't necessarily mean "used-up" or "worn-out" parts. Many parts are dismantled from wrecked autos and recycled by professionals who clean, test and mark the parts for application and mileage. According to Marshall Box, owner of Box Auto Salvage, there is often a larger variety of used parts available and they are 30 to 50 percent cheaper than new parts. A 30 to 90 day warranty also usually accompanies the part.

If the part is not available usually the dealer will try to locate the part for you. Locating the part may take a few minutes to a full day. Computers are now being used to inventory thousands of parts, including those for cars 10 years or more, and, many dealers have access to this information by telephone. The part usually is in your hands in two to four days depending on how far it must be shipped.

When buying recycled auto or truck parts that a mechanic will install or that you will install yourself, it is important that you deal with a reputable salvage or wrecking yard, or parts store. You may want to ask about prices, store policies concerning returning parts, the warranty coverage and restocking charges before you do business with the company. The BBB also suggests that you:

1. Have an experienced mechanic diagnose the problem, if you don't know what it is. With this information you can buy the right part at the outset.

2. Have the following information available — the model and year of the car, size of the engine and whether the car has two or fourdoors. Also take the old part to the dealer if you can. You may be given credit on the part.

3. Ask questions about the part you are buying. It may be wiser to invest in a new part such as electrical parts or brakes. Rebuilt parts (parts completely disassembled, replacement of worn-out items and cleaned) may or may not be as good as a new part. According to Box some rebuilt engines are sold with defective parts, therefore, you should ask for a written statement of what parts have actually been replaced. Tommy Childers with Western Transmission, on the other hand, states rebuilt transmissions are just as good as new ones and cost one third the price.

4. Ask about the warranty coverage. A part that is priced very cheap may not have a warranty. Bill McDonald with Westex Auto Parts, Inc., recommends having the mileage of your car written on the service ticket since many warranties are for a specific number of days or an exact number of miles.

While recycled or rebuilt parts may not always be the answer, in many instances they can serve the purpose and save you money.

POSITIVE THINKING

Faith is world's most powerful force

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Have you ever tried faith in action? There is a passage in the Bible which can put victory instead of defeat into your life. It reads: "Through faith and patience, inherit the promises." Throughout the Bible, one constantly finds similar references to the power of faith. Without any question, faith is the most powerful force in the universe. Nothing can stand before it.

I have observed faith in action personally and have learned to believe in it. Many other people have told me of their own experiences with the power of faith and these have been impressive testimonies.

One friend, whose faith is great, told me that not long ago a boy he knew had been seriously ill. He went to the hospital to visit the boy and noticed a resigned look on every face in the patient's room. He asked the nurse to come outside for a moment and inquired about the progress the patient was making.

"I'm afraid," she told him, "that the boy isn't going to live. We've given him up. He can't last long. Even the doctor has given him up."

The mother came out just then and joined in the conversation. "I'm brokenhearted. They say there's nothing to be done. We've had to give up all hope."

"Who else has given him up?" my friend thought to himself and went to find the doctor. "Are you a doctor of medicine?" he demanded.

"Yes, I am," said the physician.

"What kind of a doctor are you," he asked, "to give up a patient who is still alive? You are the sworn enemy of death. You have no right to give this boy up so easily."

Then he went back to the mother and told her. "If you will give me the authority to do so, I will bring someone in here who won't give this boy up so easily."

They thought that he was crazy but, in desperation, were willing to try anything.

He told the mother to go home and do some praying and not to be so resigned. Then he sat down in that hospital room by the sick boy's side and talked to God.

"Lord," he said, "there is no sense in this boy's dying, none whatsoever. We want him to live. We are asking you to let him live. And we believe he is going to live. We believe that the healing grace of God is coming down on him right now."

I interruped my friend's story at this point. "Did he live?" I asked.

"Of course he lived!" replied by friend.

As you read this, you may be thinking to yourself, "I can tell you about lots of times when they died."

My answer is simply, "So can I."

But, nevertheless, I like the way my friend waded into that sick room and began throwing faith all around the place. One might say that he began to throw his faith around. And instead of sending out negative thoughts and defeatist attitudes, he began to surround the patient with life-giving rays of faith. As a result, the patient, given up for lost, recovered. It is difficult to argue with such an example of faith in action as this.

Whatever your own situation may be, it is never hopeless. Put your faith into action and see how you can make things come right again. The only thing you need to do is to have the humility, patience and faith to put that situation into God's hands and get his counsel, guidance, assurance and support.

Our 1982 Honda Accord Hatchback could be the new yardstick for commonsense luxury and engineering. Inside and out.

Complete with front-wheel drive, new ventilated front disc brakes, 4-wheel independent suspension and 5-speed transmission. Plus a stylish new interior and plenty of thoughtful finishing touches.

FINALLY, A PERFORMANCE CAR THAT'S COMPETITIVE WHERE IT REALLY COUNTS.

On the road, the Volvo Turbo turns in some remarkable performance figures. Like 0 to 55 in 9 seconds flat. On the left rear window, it turns in a figure that may impress you even more. The price.

Not that the Volvo Turbo is inexpensive. A car that offers Volvo standards of comfort and workmanship has to come in at a tidy sum. But when you compare its overall value—the built-in amenities, safety engineering and legendary longevity—it comes out as quite a bargain.

Of course, the Volvo Turbo offers something you can't put a price on. The supreme enjoyment you'll find in driving one. Which makes a test drive imperative. But even before you take it out on the road, find out what makes it great compared to other sports sedans. Go window shopping. VOLVO

THE TURBO By Volvo.

THE SIGN TO LOOK FOR BEFORE YOU SIGN.

Before you put your name on the most expensive document most people ever sign, you probably put a lot of thought into it.

It's easy to get boggled by floorplans and locations, lot sizes and mortgage terms and closing costs.

But it's easier to feel a lot better about the whole process if you just know how.

When you see the HOW symbol on a new home, you know you're getting a 10 year protection plan. Your home is protected against workmanship and material defects the first year. Defective wiring, ductwork and piping in the second. And your home is protected against major structural defects that vitally affect the use of your new home for 10 full years.* Your builder can give you all the details, including the reasonable exclusions.

When you add up all the things you're looking for in a new home, it's probably a list a yard long. Put the Home Owners Warranty program at the top of it.

Insist on it. It's the best way to protect against facing the wrong kind of signs in the future.

Dollar signs.

Home Owners Warranty Corporation

Warranty and insurance coverage applies only if the builder properly enrolls the home and is in good standing with HOW at the time of settlement.

More and more bicycles are being bought for and ridden by adults. Lee Hill enjoys this popular form of transportation.

Bicyclers and bicycling: Times have changed

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Ask any 10 middle-aged Americans to list some of their favorite childhood memories, and chances are at least nine of them will include "riding a bike" somewhere on their lists.

But while kids are still riding bikes, to a large extent bicycles and bicyclists have changed.

According to David Ham, manager of Peyton's Bikes in Midland, there is a large percentage of bicycles being sold to and ridden by adults.

"Christmas is still the kids' time of year, with about 70 percent of the bikes being bought for kids," he said. "Right now (summertime), 50 to 60 percent of the bikes sold are going to adults."

He said that bicycling has increased for adults and suggested several reasons for this.

"Part of the reason is physical fitness and time," he said. "People have more time to spend at leisure activities. All sports and activities are becoming more popular."

Energy conservation may also be a contributing factor, he admitted. "Two years ago when talk was of $2 per gallon gas and gas shortages, there was a boom in bike sales," Ham said.

Although adults of all ages and sizes are participating in the bicycling boom, Ham said that most of the adult riders "are young, in their 20s or 30s. They are usually professional people. The college crowd has been a pretty good market for bikes all the time."

BECKY DURHAM OF MIDLAND is a young adult who loves bicycles and bicycling. "I have been riding bicycles enthusiastically about 10 years. I got started when my husband worked in a ski and bicycle shop in El Paso. About two or three years ago I met some people who had done some racing and I was encouraged to try it. I did, and I LIKED it! I have become addicted to touring and racing," she said.

In 1981, Mrs. Durham entered the Texas District Championship Races, and won gold metals in the five events for women. In February of this year, she attended training camp at the United States Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo., and in May she traveled to California, where she rode at the San Diego Velodrome, which she described as "an oval track that's banked for track bike races. These are fixed-gear bikes, with no brakes, and you can't coast, you have to pedal."

Mrs. Durham said she rides approximately 15 hours a week. "I ride with a group of people in their early 20s to 60s, who ride regularly — say three to seven times a week," she said. "You have to really love bikes to ride in bad weather and out in the desert with nothing to see. Living here separates people who love to ride and those that do it for other reasons."

BICYCLES HAVE GONE THROUGH as many changes in recent years as bicycle riders have. The old fashioned coaster bikes that most Americans had as children have been replaced by bicycles with many gears and in many sizes and shapes.

In the early 1970s, 10-speed bicycles were introduced, and immediately became a popular style. "Ten-speeds started going in 1972," Ham said. Everybody had to have a 10-speed — it was the only thing sold from 1970 to 1974. Now it has leveled off. Kids are on kids' bikes, ladies are riding three-speeds or old fashioned coaster bikes."

"The new thing is balloon tires", he said. "They started in California, and can be ridden on sand. Groups of people ride bikes off the road."

"We're still selling more 10-speeds than anything else," he added. "They are the largest percent seller. In 1972, 90 percent of what sold was 10-speeds. In 1982 it's about 40 percent."

Ham explained the advantages of 10-speed bicycles: "When pedaling, everyone has a speed that is comfortable for them to pedal — called cadence. A 10-speed can be put in an easier gear to ride up hill or down, similar to what a car with an automatic transmission will do."

In addition to 10-speed bicycles, five-speed and three-speed bicycles are also available. " A five-speed is a little simpler to operate than a 10-speed, and a little less expensive," explained Ham. A three-speed requires less maintenance, less expense, but doesn't have as wide a selection of gears. Here (in Midland) it's flat, and you don't need as many gears." He added that coaster bikes are still being sold, and in many cases are being used for off-road vehicles.

BICYCLES ARE STILL being ridden by large numbers of children, and new trends in bicycling have also been established for them. Ham said one of the most popular innovations for children, especially boys about age 10, is motocross, which he described as "a bike rider event over a dirt track with obstacles, hair pin turns and hills to make it difficult. It's usually on a track about 1/10 of a mile in length." He added that motocross does a lot for bike safety, such as foam pads, racing regulations, and the wearing of helmuts."

"There is a sanctioned racing event — motocross — each week from March to September or October, sponsored by the American Bicycle Association," he said. "Participants range in age from four years to 16, boys and girls. It's not that dangerous if you have all the safety equipment. The kids don't do as much on the track as they do at home on the street when their parents aren't looking." He added that motocross is good for developing coordination and sportsmanship, and the parents of the participants are involved, which makes motocross a family affair.

Ham said that next to jogging, bicycling is the most popular form of sporting activity. "It's good for the cardiovascular system because it gets blood pumping into the legs." he said. "It exercises muscles, too, and is good for slimming. Biking is fairly easy on you — you can do it at your own pace, hard or at leisure."

AS IN ANY OTHER SPORT or physicial activity, bicycling has some safety rules. Ham suggested the following.:

1. Watch out for cars. A bicycle is very hard to see and drivers don't always see a bike rider.

2. Obey the same traffic laws as automobiles, such as riding on the right-hand side of the road, and observing traffic lights and stop signs. Riding against the flow of traffic is dangerous.

3. Wear light-colored clothing for greater visability.

4. Install reflectors if not already on the bicycle. They are regulation on all new bicycles.

5. If riding at night, install lights.

6. Helmets can be worn for greater safety. Ham pointed out that "a $40 helmet is cheaper than a $2000 hospital bill."

7. Don't carry passengers. A bicycle is hard to control if it is carrying more than one person.

BICYCLES REQUIRE a certain amount of maintenance if they are to be kept at peak operating condition. Ham suggested these maintenance steps:

1. Keep the bicycle clean. Sand is hard on a bike. Use a degreaser to cut old grease and wash off dirt.

2. Spray the bicycle with light oil, such as WD-40.

3. Inspect the tires for wear. Bicycle tire usually last from one to 1-1/2 years.

4. Keep the proper amount of air pressure in the tires. Use an air gauge to check the pressure. The correct pressure is usually printed on the side of the tire.

5. On a 10-speed bike, make sure the brake cables are in good shape or that the bike has good brakes.

6. Have the bicycle inspected by a professional at least once a year.

7. When something is loose, such as spokes or bearings in a wheel, get it fixed, beacuse it will affect the way a bike will ride.

HAM SAID THE MOST IMPORTANT rules are "use common sense and obey traffic laws."

"Bicycling is a family activity," Ham said. "It's a leisurely time to talk, to get exercise, to unwind. It's something little kids can do with their parents. Everybody can ride."

Bicycles in various wheel sizes and with various gears, designed for people of different heights and ages, can be found all across the country.

With adults becoming bicycle enthusiasts in increasng numbers, and bicycles as popular as ever with children, the demand for bikes and bike equipment, and the need for a wider selction of bike sizes and types are growing. Shown at left are some of the many styles of bicycles that are available to choose from today.

New surgery for removal of fat causes controversy among doctors

By LENNIE LA GUIRE
Hearst Feature Service

The lastest thing in getting rid of unwanted bulges smacks of a hungry Dracula who, instead of drinking your blood, sucks your fat away.

Regard the two versions of Raphael's "Three Graces" adorning the pink and blue brochures in Dr. Mel Bircoll's Beverly Hills waiting room.

In one, the women pose in all their plump Renaissance splendor. But in the other, the bumps and bulges dear to 16th-century Italian artists have disappeared, whited out to symbolize the effects of . . . fat-suction surgery.

PROPONENTS OF THE relatively new procedure — also known as "cellulipectomy" or "lipolysis" — say it can be the answer to a misshapen maiden's prayer.

The surgery, in which fat is sucked out of the body through a tube, targets fat that traditional methods of weight reduction can't seem to eliminate. Typical areas for the operation, which can cost from $2,500 to $3,250, are thighs, hips, buttocks and stomachs.

But those who perform it deny that fat-suction surgery presents more risks than any other elective surgery. They say it's actually less dangerous than the traditional surgical method of removing fat, which requires hospitalization and can leave scars of up to 15 inches, and add that the suction procedure leaves a tiny scar of usually one inch or less.

"It's a terrific operation," says Bircoll, chief of plastic surgery at the Beverly Hills Medical Center, who's been performing the operation for about a year. "I believe that in a while everybody who is board-certified will be doing it. It will become as standard as a face-lift or as a nose job."

But Dr. Malcolm Lesavoy, a full-time faculty member in the University of California at Los Angeles Medical School's division of plastic surgery and chief of plastic surgery at Harbor General Hospital, disagrees.

"It's total quackery and it's dangerous," Lesavoy says. "You just can't contour something by sucking something out," he says. "Nerves can be sucked out, chunks of muscle and skin can be sucked out. It's like putting a Roto-Rooter into the thigh."

THE ACTUAL PROCEDURE is fairly simple: a salt solution is injected into the area and a small (1/2- to one-inch) incision is made in an unobtrusive part of the fatty area. Then a small metal tube attached to a rubber hose is inserted into the opening. A suction machine draws out the fat, taking up to seven pounds of it at one time.

The patient — who is anesthetized for the procedure — usually can go home the same day. She — most patients are female — remains bandaged for about a week after the surgery, although she can resume most normal activities in three days.

EVEN THOSE WHO BELIEVE the operation presents no serious health risks emphasize that it is not a cure-all for obesity — although a lot of potential patients apparently wish it were.

"The most common question I get is, 'You'll take the fat off and I'll go out and eat and come back in six months and you'll take it off again?' " Bircoll recounts. "It's not a reduction operation. I don't want to encourage people to get involved if they're overweight."

Bircoll says he performs more than 10 operations a week.

Dr. Frederick Grazer, past president of the California Society of Plastic Surgeons, says fewer than 24 doctors in the U.S. are currently performing the operation. He says the operation can be beneficial for the right patient — someone younger than 35, with resilient skin and fatty deposits to be removed only from the upper thighs.

ONE PROBLEM FOR SOMEONE considering the surgery is weighing all the conflicting opinions.

"The lay person is really up against it," Grazer says. He suggests that potential patients call major non-profit hospitals — where surgeons are subject to periodic peer reviews — to obtain names of doctors performing the operation there.

Kids, braces and orthodontists

Editor's note: While Erma Bombeck takes a one-week vacation, we are reprinting three of her most popular past columns.

By ERMA BOMBECK

Whatever history may say about this generation, it will be duly recorded they had great teeth.

I can just see historians digging through the ruins and observing, "Good grief, Professor Harkins, there isn't one overbite . . . one chipped tooth . . . a single overlap. What do you suppose that means?"

What they may never know is that behind every successful smile stood a self-sacrificing mother who devoted her life to her child's teeth.

Braces became the status symbol of the '60s and even today outrank cruise control and colored sheets as luxury items. I dedicated myself to love and serve my son's mouth back in the late '60s when a dentist suggested to me that we see an orthodontist.

I shrugged. "It's a little drafty sometimes from being open so much but other than that . . ."

"Look at it!" he chided. "Do you actually think he can approach adulthood with those teeth?"

"What's the matter with them?"

"Nothing, if he's going to go through life biting necks."

Sitting in his office week after week reading the Bleeding Gums Journal while my son was being fitted into braces, I heard stories from the other women in the Tooth Cult.

"This is only the beginning," said one. "You'll make so many trips to this office your car will come here automatically."

"You'll have to remind your son to brush morning, noon, and night."

"You'll buy 50 toothbrushes in a month which he will lose."

"Wait until he gets into retainers. He'll procrastinate, complain, and lose them every time you turn around."

"The worst is when you've gone through eight or nine years of straightening his teeth and he enters into a mixed marriage with a girl with an overbite!"

"Someday," said a woman who never seemed to do anything but write checks and shake her head, "You'll laugh at all this."

"When?" I asked.

She looked at me with tears in her eyes. "Don't pin me down."

DEAR ABBY

Whooping cough vaccine saves thousands of lives each year

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Thousands of parents are frightened and confused because of recent TV publicity emphasizing some extreme side effects of pertussis (whooping cough) vaccine. Many are asking if they should avoid having their children immunized. "That would be unwise," says the American Public Health Association.

Whooping cough can cause brain damage or permanent disabilities, and death! Forty years ago the United States averaged 265,000 whooping cough cases with about 7,000 deaths per year. Thanks to routine immunizations, we now average only 3,000 cases annually with five to 20 deaths.

True, in rare cases vaccines can cause some of the same damage as the diseases they seek to prevent. Pertussis vaccine commonly produces irritability, drowsiness or fever in about four out of 10 children. One in 300 might develop high fever. One in 7,000 might have a seizure. One in about 100,000 might suffer permanent nerve or brain damage.

But the benefits still vastly outweigh the risks. In Great Britain, sensational publicity about vaccine side effects has caused the immunization rate to drop from 80 percent to about 40 percent. Now the British are again suffering whooping cough epidemics — 100,000 cases in the last three years, with 6,000 hospitalizations and 60 deaths. Equivalent contagion rates in the United States would produce 500,000 cases instead of the 3,000 we now have!

The American Public Health Association strongly urges all parents to continue whooping cough immunization for their children. After each shot the child should be carefully watched. If side effects appear, the family physician or clinic should be consulted so consideration can be given to discontinuing the vaccine series and to not vaccinating younger children in the same family. But to avoid immunization is to ask for trouble rather than avoid it. — STANLEY J. MATEK, AMERICAN PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION

DEAR ABBY: A friend of mine told me that in Denmark, the girls don't have to worry if they've lost their virginity because they do an operation over there that makes virgins out of non-virgins. This friend told me that there is no way for a man to know for sure if the girl is a true virgin or not because this operation is so perfect.

Is this true? — JUST CURIOUS

DEAR CURIOUS: It is possible to restore a woman to her virginal state surgically, and it can be done in any country where sophisticated plastic (and gynecological) surgery is performed.

However, my experts tell me that in some cases this could be a very complicated and costly procedure, and is sure to hurt more than the truth.

DEAR ABBY: Something has been bothering me for a long time, and I want to get it off my chest. We recently saw the movie "On Golden Pond." The acting was superb, the scenery was beautiful, the story was touching and very entertaining, but the language was foul!

Some of us in the audience missed so much because of the time lost recovering from the vulgar language.

This movie was rated "P.G.," and there were people of all ages in the audience. How do parents stand a chance of convincing their children that profanity and filthy language are not OK?

"On Golden Pond" was such a lovely story; it would easily have been a hit without all that objectionable language.

How do you feel about it? — PAT IN PUEBLO

DEAR PAT: You took the words right out of my typewriter.

Survey shows women, men differ sunglasses choice

NEW YORK (AP) — Men and women see eye-to-eye on many issues these days but seldom when selecting sunglasses, according to a 16-city study covering the nation's Northeast, South, Midwest and Western regions.

When it comes to lens sizes, men are more partial to smaller ones and women to larger lenses, the study shows. Some 56 percent of the men had "aviator"-shaped lenses as compared with the 22 percent of women wearing this style. The most popular shape among women is called "square, small hump on bottom," with 25 percent of the women's glasses having this basic-shape lens.

Men are more likely to own sunglasses with polarized lenses, according to the report — 39 percent of the men compared with 28 percent of the women.

In shopping for sunglasses, women in the survey were found to be more particular than men.

Taking proper care of gas grills

By DONNA LEE
Hearst Feature Service

Charcoal cookery tastes wonderful, but what a hassle! Your hands get grubby as a coal miner's and it's always at least a 30-minute wait until you can cook.

That's one reason that sales of gas grills for outdoor cooking have risen 30 percent in a year. An industry representative says that sales are growing faster than for any other appliance — even food processors.

It's certainly an easier way to cook outdoors. Many of the newer gas grills have an automatic igniter. You turn on the gas and the burner and push a button to start the grill. Even with grills you have to light, there's no wait; you can cook immediately.

A refillable 20-lb. LP (propane) tank provides the fuel; it's enough for about 30 hours of cooking. When Nancy Elmont tested more than 200 recipes for a gas grill cookbook, a tank lasted nearly all summer.

THE BIG QUESTION is flavor. Can you get the smoky "charcoal grill" taste from a gas grill? Flavor in charcoal cooking comes from smoke generated as fat drips onto the hot coals. Gas grills have lava rocks, which look like charcoal, spread over the gas burner. The fat dripping on those rocks generates smoke and the same charcoal flavor, say manufacturers.

Elmont notices a slight difference.

She cooked fish on her gas grill to demonstrate. Its flavor would be hard to distinguish from charcoal grilled. "It has a smoky taste because I let some of the fat flare up," she explained.

"You can soak hickory chips and put those on the rocks for flavor. And now you can buy mesquite chunks; I'd love to use some of those."

Prices of gas grills range from $90 to $450, depending on size and luxury level. Most of the more expensive grills have cast-iron grates for cooking, rather than chrome. They also have up-front controls so you needn't stoop. Elmont likes to add a step-up rack to provide two levels of grill. You could warm rolls on the step-up or do slower cooking there.

SOME OF THE MAJOR BRANDS are Bradley, Meco, Turco, Patio Kitchen, Structo, Sunbeam, Jacussi and the elite Morris "Warm Morning," which costs $450.

The drawback of gas grills is that like those "easy to assemble" toys, someone has to put them together.

Many people burn off the residue on the grids after cooking and then brush with a stiff grill brush, although manufacturers recommended washing. Elmont washes grids several times during the summer, and whenever she cooks anything sticky.

She offers these tips: COOKING WITH GAS GRILLS:

— To prevent rust on cast-iron cooking grates, before the first use, scrub with warm water, mild cleanser and cloth. Rinse, dry well and coat generously with cooking oil. Place on large, rimmed baking pans and place in 350-degree stove oven for two to three hours. When grates are cool, rub again with oil and wipe off excess.

— After each use, turn gas off and while grates are still warm, loosen cooking residue with a stiff brush and wipe with paper towel. Do not clean cast-iron by burning off at high temperatures.

— If you have shiny chrome wire cooking grates, you do not need to season them as you do cast-iron. Instead, you may apply a light coating of oil or non-stick vegetable spray before cooking to prevent sticking. Chrome grates may be washed by hand or in the dishwasher.

— To prevent grease buildup on the radiant or lava rocks, you may occasionally boil the rocks in water with a tablespoon or so of low-sudsing dishwashing detergent for one hour, rinse well and let dry completely before returning rocks to the grill.

— Occasionally you may remove the H-shaped burner from the grill to clean it. Brush with a wire brush to remove residue. If gas ports are clogged, push a small wire through the ports.

— Locate grill away from dry grass and other combustibles when cooking. Before using your grill for the first time, fire it up and heat for 30 minutes before putting on any food. Any odor you notice is the solvents leaving the paint finish. This is only necessary the first time you use it.

If the grill is to be stored for winter, wipe cooking grates and burner clean and rub with oil. Wrap in paper towels and store indoors. Store the LP tank outside, out of reach of children, with valve knob removed. Cover valve orifice of the grill with foil or tape so small insects can't enter during storage. Cover grill if left outdoors. Coat wooden side shelve with mineral oil and store indoors.

— It's possible to refinish a weathered grill: brush with wire brush, then lightly sand with fine-grit sandpaper. Wash with soap and water, wipe with vinegar and refinish with heat-resistant grill paint.

Gale Warren brings new design firm to life

By ILONA ROSS
AP Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The smudges under her eyes, and a few gray hairs threaded in her blonde pageboy, are reminders that Gale Warren works 14 hours a day, seven days a week, at her version of the American Dream.

And when she leaves her office, the 30-year-old designer goes home "to more paperwork" so she can keep her fledgling dress company in business.

"Because the company is so small, I have to do a lot of things myself," she says, including working as her own house model. That comes easy, because she modeled for a specialty store in her hometown of Lincoln, Neb.

Miss Warren, who cut her first design when she was in the fourth grade, has been selling her couture line to top New York department stores for 1½ years. She now is launching her first ready-to-wear collection under the "Little Black Dress" label.

The couture line wholesales from $300 to $700. The ready-to-wear collection will sell from $180 to $300.

Miss Warren's sales volume — which she declined to give — is too low to merit a formal show. So she pulls her designs one by one from the racks for the steady stream of buyers who stop by during market week.

She conducts all her business from her three-room office in New York's garment disrict — design, pattern cutting and manufacture; promotion, paperwork and advertising; haggling with salesmen; courting the buyers.

"It's very hard to do this kind of thing on your own," she said. "We're not backed by a large corporation."

Miss Warren brought her dreams to New York in 1976, leaving behind in Lincoln her modeling and a small private clientele, mostly friends, for whom she designed wedding and party dresses.

"I had a lot of friends who said, 'Sure, have a nice time in New York. We'll see you in a year,'" she said.

Instead, it took her three days to land a job at Kaiser Roth, designing clothes for J.C. Penney Co., and Sears Roebuck and Co.

In 1979, she met film producer Gustave Reininger. They married, and two years later committed their life savings of $150,000 into her firm.

Three seasons of couture sales to stores such as Saks Fifth Avenue and Bergdorf-Goodman have helped her to move to a better showroom, where her new neighbor is Beenebag, the sportswear line by Geoffrey Beene.

Still, there are problems that plague small designers, she said, citing retailers who don't pay on time and fabric houses that cancel orders.

It is standard practice, Miss Warren said, to give an 8 percent discount on garments if the buyer agrees to pay within 10 days of the end of the month.

"So people place the orders under those terms, I give them 8 percent off and then they don't pay on time," she said.

"The worst thing that ever happened was when I bought fabric — a beautiful printed lame — and they canceled the fabric," she said. "Either they didn't want to make it, or someone with more clout wanted it.

"That's the problem with being small," she said. "I lost business. I had taken orders on those dresses. And the only thing you can do is tell them (the buyer) right away.

"It happens quite frequently," Miss Warren says. "But if it keeps happening to you, you get a bad reputation."

Her clothes are pretty, well made and the fabrics are the best quality. Her Little Black Dress Line, which also comes in red, brown and dark colors, includes drop waist knit dresses, tents and two-pieces.

Area author and historian has 'interesting life'

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Clayton Williams Sr. has worked as a cowboy, an electrical engineer, an oil landman, a rancher, a county commissioner, a highly successful businessman. Now at 65, an age when other men are retiring, he has begun a new career as a writer and historian.

Williams has written three works concerning the history of West Texas. His trilogy, titled "Never Again", published in 1969, covers the time from the Spanish explorers until 1861. "Animal Tales of the West", published in 1974, consists in part of some stories his father wrote, in part of some stories told to Williams by government trappers, and in part from his own experiences with animals. The third and most recent book is "Texas Last Frontier: Fort Stockton and the Lower Pecos, 1861-1895", published in 1982. "This book pulls in my horns a little bit and confines to a smaller area," Williams said.

Williams said he wrote his West Texas histories because "I thought I should do something nobody else would probably do and ought to be published for the sake of posterity."

His most recent book details the history of an area of West Texas, rather than certain individual lives or families. Included in the book are stories of some West Texas feuds. "It's more interesting for somebody to pick up somebody's life — it's more romantic and certainly pays more," Williams said, adding that as far as he knows, no one else but him has written a history of West Texas as an area.

Williams has lived in many of the places about which he has written. He was born April 15, 1895 in Fort Stockton, in one of the old fort houses.

"It was still standing and my family lived in it," he said. "We lived there until my father bought another one of the ex-officers' quarters, and I grew up in that house. The fort had been abandoned about nine years before I was born."

"My father was serving as county judge when I was born," he said. "Mother ran the ranch while he worked in town."

Williams said he went to work as a cowboy when he was nine years old. "I had my own horse and I'd charge them 75 cents a day when I rode my own horse and 50 cents a day when I rode their horse."

He graduated from Texas A&M University in 1915 with an engineering degree, and served in the armed forces during World War I.

During the years 1923—24 and 1928, he worked for Frank Pickrell and the Group No. 1, Oil Corporation 1B, and recommended drilling on the site of what became the deepest Ellenburger well of that time. "I became a petroleum engineer by necessity before they had any such courses as petroleum engineer," Williams said.

He served as county commissioner for Pecos County for 18 years, and, along with his brother, ranched from the early 1930s to middle 1950s.

Williams also did some engineering for different counties in West Texas. "I did highway work — a lot of these state roads through Terrell and Brewster counties, I did a lot of work, located a few of them," he said. "I saved the counties dollars, especially in Terrell County, by not going through big rock cuts (and curving the roads instead)."

"I went generally where the action was. Before World War I, the action was at the copper mines, Chino Copper Company in New Mexico," he said. "When I came back from the war, the action was in the oil fields of Eastland, Ranger. I always looked for more pay, like anybody would."

"My family has always been on the frontier," Williams said. "Kit Carson moved west with my great-grandfather, Richard Gott Williams. My father came as an early surveyor in Fort Stockton. He and two or three other men were the only men I ever knew who survived a buffalo stampede — that was in about 1878."

"I'm not a professional writer; I've never had any training in writing," he said. "I've always had to have someone go over it and streamline it."

Williams said that he may have been partially influenced to write books on West Texas history because "I've been going to history meetings for the last few years. I've been president of the Fort Stockton, the Permian Basin, and the West Texas Historical Societies, and I serve on the Executive Committee of the Texas State Historical Society."

"I've had a lot of luck in my life," Williams said. "I grew up in horse and buggy days. I think if I write another book it will be my life. I've had an interesting life."

Save energy with high-efficiency a/c and get a bonus
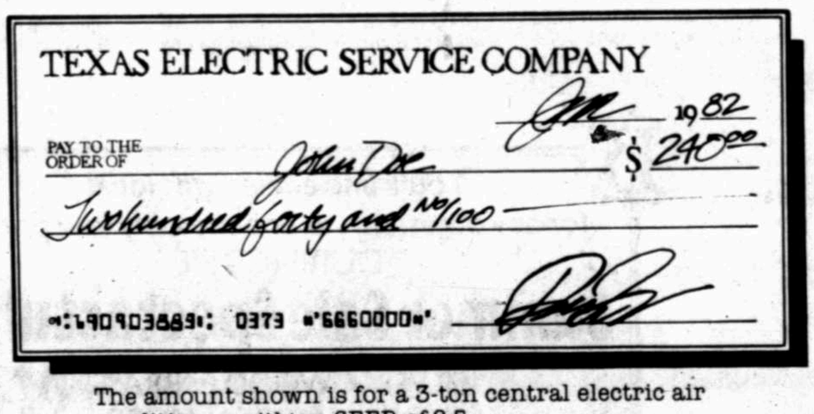
from Texas Electric



The amount shown is for a 3-ton central electric air conditioner with an SEER of 8.5.

If you replace your central electric air conditioner with one that's more efficient, Texas Electric will pay you a bonus of $80 per ton.

Not only that, you'll save on your electric bill as well. For example, a high-efficiency 3-ton unit will save you up to $160 a year.

This equipment costs more initially, but the bonus from Texas Electric plus the savings on your electric bill will make up the difference in just a few years.

If enough people buy high-efficiency equipment, summer peak load growth will be slowed—and so will the need to build new generating plants. In the long run, this will help hold down everyone's electric bill.

Before you replace your old air conditioner, ask your dealer about central air conditioners, heat pumps, and window units that qualify for this program.

Children cope with pain at special center

By SHARON COHEN
AP Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Ron was a prisoner in his own body. His back was hunched and he refused to walk. But no one else knew how much he ached, because at the age of 16 months, he had no words to express his agony.

What Ron did, was point to his tiny leg, crying and screaming while his mother fretted. A neurologist thought he was fine, and X-rays failed to find a problem.

It wasn't until the youngster was taken to a special pediatric pain clinic at Children's Memorial Hospital in Chicago that doctors unraveled the mystery: Ron had a tumor in his spinal cord, causing sharp pains to shoot through his leg and curl his body.

Ron's, and cases similar to his, are the focus of the pediatric pain clinic. The special medical team knows precisely how to cope with crying jags, pouting faces and the mysterious pains that cause their two-foot-tall patients to endure sleepless nights.

"Pain is ageless," says Dr. Yoon S. Hahn, director of the clinic. "Children do have headaches. They have psychosomatic problems. They have back pains, They have leg pains, too"

But, he said, it is difficult to understand their complaints because very young children cannot articulate what is wrong with them.

The medical team at the pediatric pain clinic includes a neurosurgeon, a physical therapist, psychologist and anesthesiologist. Their tiny patients may be suffering from burns, arthritis, tumors, hemophilia, or sickle cell anemia.

The team focuses on both the problems of the mind and the body.

"In those cases, "the process of being in pain (has continued) so long, it's gotten to be a habit," he said. "We try to help the child break the pain habit."

The clinic is believed to be one of the first in the nation. It has patients ranging in age from 15 months to 16 years.

The communication gap is only a problem in the very youngest of patients, Hahn said. "Above three years of age, they're like adults."

With the small children, Hahn said, doctors often must rely on an itch, a curled leg or a high-pitched whine as their clues.

Little children "have non-verbal pain descriptions which you have to understand early," he said.

In the case of one little girl, it was constant scratching. Hahn said that the girl's mother ask her if she itched.

"She learned the pain was itch," Hahn said. "She said, 'Itch, itch, itch.'"

As she learned more words she could say that her neck hurt and her chest hurt, Hahn said. When she reached the age of two, she finally could tell doctors it was her throat annoying her. The girl was suffering from a spinal cord tumor.

"Sometimes they hide it," he said. "Maybe they are anxious. They are just stunned by the different feeling they never had."

And some toddlers, who have been in and out of the hospital facing an endless array of needles, white gowns and sterile hospital rooms, want to avoid more anguish, Hahn said.

"Even with the pain and suffering, they'll say, 'I feel just fine,'" Hahn said.

The biggest trauma for the youngsters is the interruption of their day — the moments they spend with families and playmates, Hahn said. For that reason, he said that doctors should try to develop ways to relieve a child's aches and pains while he or she is at home in comfortable surroundings. Parents are taught to lend a hand in the techniques used to help their ailing children.

Still, some pains stemming from diseases and illnesses must be treated at the hospital. A variety of approaches are used, including biofeedback, relaxation techniques, counseling and a special nerve stimulator, which involves placing two electrodes in the area of the body where the child feels pain.

'Trombe wall' used for heat storage in passive solar house

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. —It seems to me hardly a week goes by that I don't read about a Trombe wall in connection with a passive solar house. I looked for it in my dictionary, but couldn't find it. Presumably it has something to do with a storage wall, but can you tell me more precisely how it works?

A. —A similar question was answered in this column about a year ago. Many more such queries have since come in, indicating a lot of new readers or a sudden interest in a subject most people were not too concerned about in the past. A Trombe wall is not just a storage wall. It is a HEAT storage wall, located behind an expanse of glass on the south side of a house or other structure. The sun's rays pass through the glass and are absorbed by the wall, usually constructed of masonry, but sometimes of anything that retains heat, such as glass containers. The wall holds the heat and then releases it, sometimes without assistance and sometimes with it.

Q. —We bought a very old house that has the kind of plaster walls you don't see much any more. We painted two of the rooms about a year ago and had no trouble — at least, not yet. In one of the bedrooms, which was painted with the same kind of paint and in the same way, the wall has started to peel. However, in one spot, where there apparently was some kind of patch, the new paint has held very well. Have you any idea of why this has happened and what we can do about it? I don't want to start repainting the wall unless I can be reasonably sure it won't happen again. Do you have any idea why the paint should be peeling everywhere except where the patch is?

A. —There are a variety of reasons why this might have occurred, one of which is that the plaster might have been painted before it had dried properly. While this is not necessarily the answer, the mystery of the patch is that, after the repair, the wall was repainted. The patch probably was sealed prior to the new coat of paint, giving it extra protection against failure. Admittedly, these are only probabilities, but the chances are they are correct. Your best bet would seem to be taking off all the paint with a remover and putting on a sealer. When the sealer has dried for a couple of days or more, repaint.

The Philippines: A fascinating diversity

Copley News Service

CEBU CITY, The Philippines — At home in the cultures of both East and West, the unfailingly outgoing and exuberant Filipinos dwell in an island nation whose appeal transcends its borders.

Attitudes and traditions intrinsic to this archipelago of 7,107 islands abound. To wit, the joyful embrace of anything musical and the deeply rooted reverence for family unity. But there's also an extraordinary variety of sights and features that bespeak the presence of many cultures from beyond the horizon.

The Philippines is an Asian country unlike any other. Yet it mirrors the region's fascinating diversity of cuisines, religions and lifestyles. And so do its people.

Primarily of Malay and Polynesian stock, the Filipinos count among their many attributes a sophisticated culture strongly influenced by such divergent socioeconomic forces as those of 16th century Spain and today's America.

Western ideas first reached these shores in 1521 when Ferdinand Magellan landed at a spot close to what is now the bustling heart of Cebu City, the nation's oldest town. Though the Portuguese navigator died shortly after, also near here, others in the service of the Spanish crown — notably Miguel Lopez de Legazpi — subsequently arrived, established a colony and remained for more than three centuries.

The United States was awarded control of the islands by the Treaty of Paris after Commodore George Dewey defeated the Spanish navy in Manila Bay in 1898. Four years of hostilities between the Americans and Filipinos followed before peace was achieved and the United States began paving the way toward Philippine self-government. World War II found American and local soldiers fighting side-by-side. And a good many of them were on hand when at last complete independence came in 1946 and Manuel A. Roxas assumed office as first president of the Republic of the Philippines.

But others preceeded the Americans and the Spaniards.

First here were the Negritos, or small Negroes, whose origins date back 25 centuries and whose descendants still cling to their rudimentary life in the forests. Indonesians came next, to be followed by the seafaring Malays, who first landed around 300 B.C. Then Chinese merchants appeared. And Arab traders. And Indian farmers.

Thus the variegated nature of the Phillipine body and soul. And thus its unmatched appeal for the traveler.

Eclectic, noisy and cosmopolitan Manila seldom fails to captivate its visitors. Unlike others, the sprawling capital is indeed a microcosm of the country.

On the other hand, Cebu City and its surroundings offer ample servings of the country's many natural and cultural facets in a relaxed ambiance enhanced by the Cebuanos' gracious but casual approach to life.

Located a little more than an hour by jet south of Manila, this flowery town on the eastern shores of Cebu Island was already a thriving trading port when the Spaniards arrived. Today it ranks as the largest commercial hub outside Manila and has a population of nearly half a million. Yet, despite its share of modern buildings, factories and highways it retains a soothing provincial flavor.

Considered the cradle of Christianity in the Far East, Cebu City boasts numerous historic treasures and worthwhile sights as well as many options for the active vacationer. For one, scuba divers say the waters here and elsewhere around the island are the best in the archipelago. Clean and quiet palm-fringed beaches are as abundant as grape-growing fields wedged between the eastern shore and the forested mountains just behind the town where hikers and hunters find their pleasures and challenges in solitude. And nearly every way one looks there are flowers — orchids, hibiscus, lillies and countless others — so many, in fact, that vast quantities of them are shipped daily to Manila and other cities.

History pokes its primarily Castilian face throughout town but, as even a brief tour reveals, other equally fascinating elements are part of the cityscape. Key attractions would include:

Magellan's Cross. A hallow cross that contains fragments of the original planted by the explorer to mark the spot where the first Filipino converts to Roman Catholicism were christened. It stands across from City Hall in a small domed chapel with a beautiful ceiling mural that depicts Magellan's landing.

Fort San Pedro. Oldest of the Spanish forts remaining in the country, it was built by Legazpi in 1565 to protect his forces against attacks by pirates. Very well kept, it has several of the original cannons still in place.

Taoist Temple. Towering 500 feet above the city atop a bougainvillea-covered hill, this collection of shrines and pagodas topped by fiery dragons requires a 99-step climb. Another 49 steps lead to a rooftop lookout. The views from the top are worth the effort, the faithful find a priest who provides heavenly advice on request, and everyone reaches the temple via a sentry gate whose sign reveals the name of the posh residential area lorded over by the elaborate Taoist structure — Beverly Hills.

Basilica Minore del Santo Nino. This, the oldest church in the Philfppines, houses the bejeweled image of the Holy Child, the country's oldest religious relic. Said to have been presented by Magellan to the reigning Filipino king and queen he had baptized, the original figure is on display only during special Catholic holidays. An equally revered replica is on view most of the time. To the side of the large church, rows of colorful votive lamps brought by parishioners and visitors flank a handsome courtyard.

Mactan Island. Once accessible only by boat and the site of a small U.S. Navy base, Mactan is now linked to Cebu City by a tall modern bridge. The city's modern airport is located on this small isle where the native chief Lapu-Lapu ended Magellan's life. Here, too, are several of the area's famous workshops where guitars, banjos and ukuleles are painstakingly handcrafted. Several resorts hide amid the palms along Mactan's east coastline; relatively small, they nevertheless offer top-notch air-conditioned accommodations along with water-skiing, scuba diving and other sporting facilities at very reasonable rates. The Costabella Tropical Beach Hotel and the Tambuli Beach Resort are two of the best.

Shopping for woodcarvings, woven goods, rattan furniture, superbly tailored clothes and other local products as well as those from other parts of the country can be enjoyed in Cebu City with less bustle than in Manila. And the same goes for sampling some of the region's and the country's culinary offerings which, once again, include both native as well as Chinese, Malaysian, Indonesian, Arabian, Indian and other dishes.

TRAVEL

Several hotels cater to visitors with a wide range of facilities and excellent service. The luxurious Cebu Plaza, often the choice of discriminating travelers, sits atop a hill overlooking the city. A 22-floor addition, scheduled for completion this summer behind the original low-rise building, will give the Plaza a total of 450 rooms. Rates range from about $30 to $70 a day.

Other fine hotels include the Magellan International, the Montebello Villa and the De Mercedes. There are also several inexpensive guesthouses as well as small hotels.

From Japan to Australia and from Tahiti to Thailand, what we perceive as the exotic lands of East draw us primarily because of their diversity. The Philippines in general and its oldest town in particular strike me as a very hospitable and rewarding capsule of that wondrous diversity.

Detailed information on regional attractions, hotel rates, special-interest tours and other subjects of interest to would-be visitors is available from the Philippine Ministry of Tourism, 3325 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 606, Los Angeles, CA 90010 and its offices in New York, San Francisco and Chicago.

Rafting

By SHARON DIRLAM
Los Angeles Times

While Pac-Man and his ever-growing army of computerized processes catapult us into the technocratic future, another part of the mind longs for the good old days of communing with nature and battling the elements.

River rafting has become a popular outdoor adventure, as more and more vacationers discover the excitement and the beauty of shooting the rapids or floating along between mile-high rock walls. Rafters are among the most outspoken opponents of the dams, man-made lakes and diversionary canals that provide water to burgeoning populations where water is short, but dry up natural rivers in the process.

The wilderness is precious, and increasing numbers of people are feeling the need to get back to it. About 15,000 people float down the Colorado River through the Grand Canyon every year, the maximum number allowed. Any more would destroy the delicate wilderness at the bottom of the 300-mile-long canyon, people at the National Park Service say. In comparison, before 1950, they say, fewer than 100 people had made the trip.

The trip begins at Lee's Ferry, 17 miles below Glen Canyon Dam on the Colorado, and ends 280 miles downstream at Pierce's Ferry on Lake Mead. In between are 4 billion years of geological history, some of the best white water in the world, hikes through stunningly beautiful canyons and fishing for trout weighing 15 to 20 pounds.

Western states, including Alaska and Hawaii, have an edge on river rafting, but the adventure is spreading to the far corners of the earth, including for the first time this year navigation of the Dar Dung Guo and Jiang Jun Guo rivers in China. The two rivers have never been floated and information is sparse, according to Sobek Expeditions, which is arranging the adventure in conjunction with Mountain Travel Nepal. The river run is part of a wilderness trek in western China to Mount Bogda in the Tian Shan Mountains.

River trips range from a day to two weeks or more and the crafts come in a variety of sizes, huge motorized rubber rafts to hard-bottom dory boats, one-person sportyaks to canoes and houseboats.

Jamaican hospitality, tourism industry return to island paradise

By ROBIN AND PATRICIA HARRIS
Hearst Feature Service

OCHO RIOS, Jamaica -- The traditions of warm Jamaican hospitality are instantly evident from the moment newcomers are welcomed at Montego Bay's modern airport. Gone are the sullen stares and rudeness which marred our last arrival on this Caribbean isle three years ago.

It was all smiles and cordiality this time on the part of everybody, from cooperative entry officials and porters to an ebuliently cheerful bus driver who immediately put us in a holiday mood with spirited, if slightly unprofessional, calypso singing.

In a year and a half the new administration of capitalist-oriented Prime Minister Edward Seaga has rescued the spectacular tropical paradise from growing Marxist domination. Before he took office the tourism industry, essential to the economy, had been steadily sagging, but this season looks to break all records.

Ocho Rios ("Eight Rivers" in Spanish), lying on the popular north coast 60 miles from Montego Bay and 30 from Kingston, is Jamaica's main tourist center today. Mingling high-rise luxury and urban development with picturesque ethnic ambiance, it provides a variety of diversions to satisfy almost any guest. Cruise ship traffic has become so heavy that a second pier is under construction.

Nearby are dramatic White River, site of nightly reggae concerts, dancing and barbecues; Friendship Farm, a model for the country's great agricultural progress; and Shaw Park Gardens, a magnet for naturalists, exhibiting every species of all the colorful island trees, plants and flowers.

Jamaica's history must be noted, if only for the surprising fact that it once belonged to the ubiquitous Christopher Columbus, who landed here on May 4, 1494 on his second New World voyage. Unlike his countless other Carib discoveries, which were annexed by the Spanish Crown, the 4,243 square miles of Jamaica were granted entirely to him.

He stopped here briefly on a later trip but never returned again to exploit his mammoth holdings.

The British defeated a token Spanish garrison in 1655, anyway, and Jamaica belonged to the empire until 1952, when it achieved nationhood. It remains a member of the Commonwealth but is completely self-supporting and independent except for one unbreakable tie to the motherland.

Every community, large and small, has legal off-course betting parlors, taking incessant action on English thoroughbreds running 4,000 miles away.

With its superb year-round climate, lofty mountains, jungles, rivers and beaches, Jamaica is becoming an important movie-making location. Nobody knows how many films have been shot here but they include most of the James Bond thrillers and "Blue Lagoon," which gave us that star of stars, Brooke Shields.

The ghosts of Noel Coward and Errol Flynn haunt the island, too. Coward's estate, overlooking Blue Harbor, gives surprising insight into his odd life style. Although he spent his long career appearing before millions all over the world, he was a virtual recluse at home.

He lived in a minute, sparsely-furnished cottage, undistinguished but for his more than acceptable oil paintings. He prized privacy so highly that he refused to have a radio, TV or even a telephone. Yet a short walk away is an impressive mansion he maintained, fully staffed, for his frequent celebrated guests often numbering British royalty.

Over dinner one evening with Flynn's statuesque and charming widow, born Patricia Wymore, we gathered that he, too, was a different person at home. For all his notorious global reputation as a dedicated and improvident hell raiser he was relatively serious and sedate here.

He acquired extensive and valuable property which she now operates as a successful coconut and cattle farm, and Flynn also had the imagination to turn a routine local custom into one of the island's most profitable tourist attractions.

Flynn saw crude bamboo rafts carrying produce and supplies along the Rio Grande River near his Port Antonio home and realized they could be used for rafting people as well.

He formed an association of rafters and now there are more than 400, licensed only after six years apprenticeship, bearing happy travelers down the Rio Grande to the ocean. He did leave one typical Flynn touch, however. Every mile or so there is an anchored raft, actually a floating bar, where thirsty passengers can stop for a drink.

Jamaica is easy to reach and this is the best time to come, for from now until the winter season all prices are drastically reduced. We came on Eastern Air Lines, which flies daily from New York, in four and a half hours with a stop in Miami. It is also served by Air Jamaica, American, Air Florida, Air Canada, and many inter-Caribbean carriers.

Pat's Notes: Bring home some of the Jamaican Blue Mountain coffee, which many rate the best on earth. It is not on the American market, all being exported to Japan in gratitude for the aid that country gave in combating a blight years ago. Those who like challenges should tackle the 600-foot high Dunn's River Falls. The mountain water is cold and the climb steep, but you feel wonderful when it's over. And we hardly need mention the delicious and potent Jamaica rum, which costs less than half what it does at home.

Martinique: Caribbean island of fiery past and promising future

By JACK BIESTERFELD
Copley News Service

From a fiery past, a tropical island has emerged as a rich and varied vacation paradise with a French flair.

When tourists come to see the volcano, they discover tropical rain forests, mountains, white sand beaches, quaint fishing villages and a rich history.

Columbus was the first tourist here, in 1493. But he was greeted with arrows and spears by the fierce Caribe Indians. Although the explorer beat a hasty retreat, other Europeans followed.

In 1685, after violent combats, the last of the Caribes died and a legend says that he died leaving a curse: "The Mountain of Fire will wreak vengeance of us."

That curse came to pass on May 8, 1902, in the prosperous West Indian port town of St. Pierre. The city was the jewel of the French colonial crown and was considered the Paris of the West Indies. It theater was modeled after the famous Bordeaux theater in France, and its formal gardens were unsurpassed. It had banks, distilleries, a busy harbor, newspapers — everything a cosmopolitan city should have.

All that ended instantly. On that day, the entire side of Mount Pelee exploded, sending a superheated wall of poisonous gases down onto the doomed city. Within three minutes, all the city's 30,000 residents died a horrible death. There was only one survivor, a prisoner kept deep in a dungeon in the city's prison.

The volcano is quiet now and is a beautiful sight to see. Adventuresome climbers can scale the heights in about two hours, but most visitors are content to see the 4,656-foot volcano from the road that passes through the nearby town of Morne Rouge.

St. Pierre has never fully recovered from the disaster. Although many houses and businesses have been built on the foundations of destroyed buildings, much destruction is still evident.

Some of the best ruins can be seen along a drive skirting the beach that makes up the new waterfront of the town. Visitors are free to explore the ruins wherever they can find them.

Up a hill amid the ruins is a museum graphically depicting the destruction of that day. Watches and glassware are melted into grotesque shapes. Nails and hardware are fused into a single lump. Other relics and pictures show the total destruction of this, the Pompei of the Western Hemisphere.

The roads connecting St. Pierre with the island capital, Fort-de-France, provide a much more lively but no less interesting view of the island. The route along the coast winds along rocky bluffs and sandy beaches. It dips down into Corbet, a quaint fishing village.

The beaches are often lined by colorful fishing boats used by the natives to reap the bounties of the sea. Their nets can often be seen drying in the sun.

Along the inland route, the road twists and turns through a lush tropical rain forest and through the mountains. Blooms and waterfalls abound. The verdant vegetation often forms a cool canopy overhead, sheltering residents from the the hot tropical sun.

In flat areas, the jungle gives way to plantations and huge bunches of green bananas hanging from trees are a common sight. Pineapple, cinammon, sugarcane and coffee are also grown here. An occasional sugar factory dots the landscape.

The capital city of Fort-de-France encircles the harbor like a stepped amphitheater. Jutting out into the harbor, often overflowing with private yachts and cruise ships, is Fort St. Louis, built long ago to defend the island. The center of town is the Place de la Savanne, a waterfront park that contains a statue of Empress Josephine, Napoleon Bonaparte's wife and lover.

In 1763, she was born in Trois-Ilets, a small town across the bay. Part of her home is now a museum containing memorabilia from her past.

A drive around the southern end of Martinique takes visitors past more beaches and to the famed Diamond Rock. This giant 450-foot monolith off the coast was commissioned as a British sloop-of-war in 1804 and was manned by a garrison of soldiers intent on driving the French from the island. After a long seige, the HMS Diamond Rock was recaptured by the French.

Like all Caribbean islands, water sports are a great attraction. Its beaches range from white and ocher to black volcanic sand. Modern hotels, as well as restored 18th century inns and buildings, provide excellent restaurants — most with a French accent.

As the island is still a department of France, the people speak mainly French or a Creole dialect, and the currency is the French franc. But visitors with a little bit of French or a good French-English dictionary can get along well.

Besides, a fascinating tropical island is beautiful in any language.

Travelers meet...um...interesting people

By JERRY HULSE
Los Angeles Times

Damon Runyon would have loved all of the characters I've met from here to Tahiti and from Paris to Hong Kong during the last 22 years.

Take Suzie No Pants. Suzie's hangout was Quinn's old bar in Tahiti, the watering hole for dopeheads and derelicts, French legionnaires, runaway husbands and curious tourists. Suzie would drink with anyone who could muster the francs to buy her a beer. This was an island girl with flashing eyes, a huge thirst and a passion for living that burned deep into the soul. To live today was what counted with Suzie No Pants, a philosophy that's common with all Tahitians. Worry about tomorrow? Why? Drink up, cried Suzie, and the band would play and she'd grab the nearest partner and dance away the entire evening.

She had spirit, that girl.

Well, Quinn's is no more, of course. Some fool tore down the place, which is too bad because Quinn's was wonderful — the dirtiest, most shameful and beloved bar in the entire South Seas. Now it's been replaced by a modern office building. And Suzie No Pants? The last time I was in Tahiti she had disappeared, vanished. She's a legend, though; they still talk about her whenever and wherever Quinn's old gang gathers at some other waterfront joint in Papeete.

It was in another watering hole that I met Jilly Rizzo, a roughneck mug with big paws and a big heart. He was talking about his growing-up days in New York.

"You hadda be tough," Jilly said. "You hadda be tough. You rode your bicycle and carried a baseball bat. I mean, you hadda survive, see?"

Jilly operated a bar in New York with his name over the door. Jilly's. Maybe you've been there, over on 52nd Street. In the beginning it had no door, and so Jilly's customers crawled through a window. No other bar in Manhattan was without a door. Only Jilly's. Finally the fire department complained and so Jilly acquiesced and cut one through the wall.

Jilly operated other bar-restaurants in Miami and Palm Springs. New York, though, was his celebrity hangout. Jilly grew up near Hell's Kitchen and getting as far as 52nd Street was like a miracle. He had "lotsa fights" on his way uptown. He had others after he got there. "There was some punks who used to scare the customers off, so I told 'em: 'Either get off the block or I'll knock yours off.' They got off."

It was during this time that Jilly met his pal Frank Sinatra ("He'd die for him," said a friend of Jilly's looking up from his ginger ale on the rocks). At his New York restaurant, Jilly reserved a special booth for Frank with a private telephone. Dozens of jazz greats hung out in Jilly's. Musicians, celebrities. Judy Garland sang there once. So did Cab Calloway.

It was Frank Sinatra, though, who lured Jilly west to California. After Jilly discovered Palm Springs he was hooked. Now he blows into the desert each year about the time the first snow falls on Manhattan. Meanwhile, he sold the Manhattan saloon that still carries his name.

Well, he done good, to put it in Jilly's vernacular. It was a long haul from the Village to 52nd Street, and even a longer one out to Palm Springs. "I like it here so much it's not even funny," he said the other day as he stretched out by his swimming pool. Presently he manages a couple of singers (Marlene Ricci and Luther Hunt) and dreams about opening another saloon.

"You know me," he sighed. "I love a saloon . . . ."

Dilly Griffey. By car from Shannon Airport it is less than an hour to Dilly Griffey's farmhouse. She's a dear, this woman who takes in guests. She wears the face of Ireland itself: old and rain-fresh. She was in the kitchen brewing tea when I arrived and her late husband, Tom, sat rocking in the living room. He raised his cane, motioning to me.

"Come in, come in."

During my visit Tom Griffey rocked and drank tea or sherry (depending on the hour) and Dilly, bless her, scrubbed and cooked and milked the cows and did a dozen other chores. She said she didn't mind, though; she rather enjoyed her life. She explained that Tom couldn't work: "Poor dear, his health is a wee frail . . . ."

One night we were sitting by the fire sipping sherry (the wind was crying mournfully outside) and I studied that lovely, tired face that belonged to Dilly Griffey, and I knew why, in that harsh land, the Irish had survived.

In Rome several years ago, a full moon spotlighted Remington Olmstead, a big man who sat brooding, whiskey in hand, huge shoulders hunched over the balcony of his second-floor flat, his eyes riveted on a crowd gathered in the street below. Their laughter was an irritant to his own sullen mood this night. They were his guests — the guests of Da Meo Patacca, his enormously successful restaurant in a medieval piazza across the peaceful Tiber. But he was in no mood for gaiety, not this night. Watching from a balcony, Remington Olmstead grunted, backed away from the railing and looked up at the moon, his thoughts an ocean and a continent away. He was thinking of California.

All his growing-up years he'd sung — first in the choir at All Saints Episcopal Church in Pasadena, Calif., and later in high school and college. He'd studied at Pasadena Playhouse and after that he hopped a freight to New York. On Long Island he worked as a bellhop and lived in a $2-a-week apartment and dreamed of stardom and ate oatmeal and beans.

"Those were the good days," said Remington Olmstead, "the days of hopes and dreams of what could have been."

He appeared in "Oklahoma!" and after that went on to London and finally Italy where he fell in love with Rome.

This night, though, his thoughts were of California and a recent visit home.

"Seeing old haunts stirred something inside me," he said. "The desert, the Sierra, the missions. But it's difficult to go back. When you've been away a long time there is this feeling that you've been left out of things .... You see all the new people and it seems they have taken your place ...."

The huge man looked up at the moon, bright and full now. At last he got up and struggled downstairs to the street and the loud singing. Remy stood for a moment. Then he joined the crowd. Moments later a strong tenor voice filled the night and the piazza.

I met Jacky Kennedy several years ago, an ex-San Francisco schoolteacher living in Paris. His day began at 6 o'clock each evening. Just as dusk fell across the City of Light, his boots would strike sparks against the pavement of Rue Jules-Chaplain, his tall figure silhouetted in the dismal, yellow glow of a street lamp. The light bathed the entrance to a smoky cave, Jacky's Far West Saloon. From dusk till dawn Jacky played hillbilly melodies and pop tunes for an enthusiastic crowd from a dozen lands.

Jacky stood taller than six feet in his cowboy duds, looking for all the world like the good guy in some TV Western. His saloon was only a block from La Coupole and Le Dome, the sidewalk-cafes where Hemingway wrote and Modigliani painted and a whole lost generation struggled to find itself.

Inside Jacky spun a record. The words spattered against the walls: "Come sit by my side if you love me," and his eyes reflected a sadness, a melancholy for the West, for home.

"The nostalgia is always there," he said. "I have a terrible yearning for the California redwoods and for Monterey and Carmel. Mostly what I miss are the open spaces and the ability to move from a city to an ocean to a mountain, all within minutes. And then there is San Francisco itself."

"A flower tonight, Monsieur Kennedy?"

Jacky didn't consider himself an expatriate. Of course, he said, the longer one remains away from home the easier it becomes. Still, it is not easy to forget one's own country.

He smiled sadly. "You only become an expatriate of yourself, do you understand . . . ?"

How to repair a sagging old floor

By GENE GARY
Copley News Service

Q. Our house is very old, but apparently in good condition except for a slight sag in the center of the living room floor. The living room is directly over a lower level living area, where there are five large wooden support posts, but there is none at the point where the floor is sagging. Could I put in another post there? — Sam N. H.

A. If you wish to straighten the floor and, at the same time, provide additional support, you should install what is called a jack post. A jack post takes the place of a wooden support. It is metal, comes in various heights and is adjustable. Instructions come with the post, the most important being that the sagging floor can be raised only a fraction of an inch at one time.

For the sake of an explanation, say the floor has a sag of 3 inches. The post is set in place, the adjusting screw is turned so that the post is raised only one-eighth to one-fourth inch. Do not touch it then for several weeks. Follow the directions in that respect. Then it is raised another one-eighth to one-fourth inch. And so on.

It thus may take six months or more to complete the operation. If any attempt is made to raise the floor more quickly than the manufacturer recommends, the entire floor may be thrown out of whack, damaging walls, windows, ceilings and the beams.

Q: I have a problem with my cement under my patio cover. The large slab of concrete has become stained from the overhead painted cover. I have tried muriatic acid and straight bleach and it doesn't affect it. Nobody seems to know what causes it or how to clean it. Can you help? — Erwin K., Escondido, Calif.

A: For fresh paint stains, apply a commercial paint remover or a solution of tri-sodium phosphate in water — two pounds of tri-sodium phosphate in one gallon of water. Allow to stand and remove the paint with a scraper and wire brush. Wash with clear water. For very old dried paint, organic solvents similar to the above may not be effective, in which case the paint stains should be removed by sandblasting or scrubbing with steel wool. Without a personal inspection, I have no idea what causes the stains from your painted patio cover. I suggest you have it inspected by a competent painter or builder.

Q: Three years ago we purchased a small ranch-style house which is on a concrete slab. The heat ducts are within the concrete. Small, reddish-brown ants have made their home in all the ducts. We have tried, with some success, to eliminate them. We have ant traps under each register and use ant spray around very duct and woodwork area whenever the ants appear. As we have two pre-school children, we are now at a loss as to the most effective yet safe way to eliminate this ant problem. Any suggestions will be appreciated. — Richard W., Jr., North Huntingdon, Penn.

A: I strongly recommend calling in a professional pest exterminator who has products and methods not available to a do-it-yourselfer. Chlordane is a very effective ant control product, but not available now in most areas because of ecologic concerns.

Q. Sometime back I covered my front walk with unglazed Mexican tile. After the mortar set, I sealed the tile with a water seal which, of course, did not put a coat on them. Recently some of the tiles have begun to disintegrate. I am wondering if there is some other kind of sealer I can use which will put a coat on them? Any coat would, of course, have to be non-slip for rainy weather. Suggestions will be greatly appreciated. — Kingsley B.

A: All the information I have available applies to American manufactured tile. One recommendation for quarry tile is sealing it with Watco sealer, which may be applicable to the Mexican tile. However, this involves a very technical application process and manufacturer's instructions must be followed closely. Sealing is not recommended for most quarry tiles, but this applies only to tiles manufactured in the United States which are presealed. For further information and advice, I suggest you contact Ceramic Tile and Marble Institute, at 7865 Balboa Ave., San Diego, Calif. 92111.

Women more involved in financial planning

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

"Women are finding, more and more, that they need to learn personal financial savvy in handling their money," said Ann Benson, investor information specialist for Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, and creator of its widely praised Investor Education program for women.

Ms. Benson will be in Midland June 23 to present her "Money Management for Women" seminar. Program begins at 7 p.m. in the Midland Community Theatre.

Proceeds from the seminar will go to the Permian Civic Ballet Guild. Admission is $10. For information and reservations, call 682-1022.

"Don't protect me, educate me so I can protect myself," said the former actress. "Those words are what I hear constantly from women all over the country—from working wives who are single, divorced or widowed and feel, as heads of households, that they should be independently prepared to face their financial future."

Ms. Benson's response to this nationwide need for education ultimately became a crusade to help women gain their financial independence.

"It is a fact (from Census Bureau statistics) that 85 per cent of all married women will end up living alone, either because as women we outlive our husband or because the divorce rate is higher than it ever has been. A lot of young single wmen are also choosing to marry later, or to remain single.

"AS A RESULT, WE really have to look to ourselves. We can no longer expect a man in our life to be responsible for our money.

"And it's not enough to just earn money" said Ms. Benson. "You need to have a financial plan and yu need to have alternatives to that financial plan."

She explained the purpose of the money management seminar. "We do an overview of that financial plan," she said. "This seminar is for any woman at any stage of her life.

She said that topics to be discussed include determining personal investment objectives, setting personal goals, understanding the language of investing, choosing a financial advisor, getting information about securities, retirement planning and avoiding common investor pitfalls.

"It should be good for two types of women: those that are knowledgeable about their finances and for those who don't know how to manage money, but have a desire to learn," said Ms. Benson.

"I think that women, for a long time, have been handling the family budget," she exlained. "No one can deny that we are good consumers—we are excellent at handling the family budget.

"But now that so many of us are going to work, a lot of women like us are concerned, not only about how it is spent, but how it is invested.

She added that she believes homemakers, too, can be a marvelous asset to their husbands by sharing the experience of assisting them in managing the money.

"If they read or hear enough about it to discuss it with their husbands, they can, as a team, make better and wiser decisions about finances.

"I really feel that it is not necessarily fair to men to be burdened by not only being the main breadwinner but also to be responsible for how the money is spent." said Ms. Benson. "It can be a shared responsibility that a woman can find rewarding and can add to the marriage itself."

SHE HAS POSITIVE hopes in this direction.

"A lot of women have formed to make an investment club," said Ms. Benson. "They work at how to invest and how to make money. We are living in times that require so much expertise, not only to survive, but to get ahead.

We've seen inflation, high interest rates and unemployment. It really behooves us to become as educated as we can about financial matters.

She said that she finds it interesting to see mothers and daughters attending her seminar together. "It's great when we see them both interested in their financial planning."

She said that women know more about money than they think they do. "They have a critical eye and extensive experience as consumers. To learn about the world of finance, all you need is common sense and confidence.

Staff artist: Jan Drake

Desite the growing financial sophistication, however, many women still fear making investment decisions because they generally lack the education and experience necessary to do so.

In a survey made by Merrill Lynch, there was uncovered a startling lack of diversification in unmarried women's financial holdings; an overwhelming number have only savings accounts. One of four also owned U.S. Savings Bonds, but only 15 per cent owned stocks and less than 8 per cent owned mutual funds of any kind. This lack of diversification is, in most cases, attributed to an information gap with respect to various investment alternatives.

"Women still tend to play it safe," said Ms. Benson. "They often make the mistake of undervaluing their net worth and putting extra cash in low-yield savings accounts, rather than in financial programs that offer larger returns. With education, and the confidence that comes with it, we see a greater desire by women for growth as well as security."

"Hundreds of people visited me daily at the center to get current quotations on their investments, to find out opinions on particular issues or to discuss other investor services," Ms. Benson explains. "My background in communications was invaluable."

She then became spokesperson for Merrill Lynch's award-winning National Investment Seminar Week, the most extensive investor education campaign ever initiated.

Because of her experience, Merrill Lynch decided that the time had come for a special education program for women.

Merrill Lynch responded by establishing a women's seminar program. It was designed to educate women to the language of money and to investment opportunities and help them meet their personal financial objectives.

"THE PROGRAM HAS established a nationwide information network for women," explains Ms. Benson.

"We wanted to let women know that they don't have to give up their more traditional interests to take on new responsibilities," she says.

To date, more than 200,000 women have attended these seminars, and about 50 per cent of them have signed up for the advanced course.

Ms. Benson studied drama at Southern Methodist University and the University of Texas and hosted a television program in Dallas, her hometown.

Ms. Benson married her childhood sweetheart, screenwriter Jerry Segal. They live in Los Angeles and have two children.

"Finances is a joint effort in my family," said Ms. Benson. "I have a great deal of input. I not only am involved in what we do, but I also am participating and am involved in what my son does.

Her son is Robby Benson, well-known film star. He and her husband wrote the film "One on One." Robby's latest films are "Tribute" and "The Chosen."

"When you work on a couple of projects a year, you have tax problems and you want to get the best out of your money," she explained. "My husband and I are responsible for setting up a company pension program and we have our own individual retirement program."

Couple sympathizes with 'Baby Doe' case

By JAY MATHEWS
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — Brian James West was born 19 months ago with the same tragic maladies that led to the controversial death of a Bloomington, Ind., baby last month — the severe mental and physical retardation of Down's syndrome and an esophagus so deformed he could not eat.

But unlike Bloomington's "Baby Doe," Brian's parents were blocked in their effort to let their baby die. So today, after the intervention of a juvenile court and the medical profession, Brian lives, but his is far from a normal life.

He weighs only 16 pounds and cannot walk, talk or eat. He has had two major operations, one heart failure, collapsed veins, stomach acid spills on his skin, regular injections of nutrients and antibiotics in nearly every part of his body, several weeks of being bound hand and foot, and has a tube permanently attached to his stomach so he can be fed.

"Baby Doe's" story is one side of the difficult equation of life and death. Brian's is another.

Susan and John West decided to tell their story because they were moved by what they consider to be unfair criticism of "Baby Doe's" anonymous parents.

THE FAMILY'S DECISION to let Brian die "was not based on any thoughts that he was not worth saving," said John West, 37, a physicist who works for a defense contracting research firm here. "It was based on love for Brian and the desire to minimize his suffering. From a Christian point of view, death is not a final happening, and I do not believe death is something to be avoided at all costs. ... It is my strong feeling that there is a better place for a child like Brian."

The Wests met when they were undergraduates at the University of California at Santa Barbara, and married 13 years ago, waiting until he completed his doctorate before they had children. The birth of their first child, Steven, was "beautiful," said Mrs. West, a former primary school teacher.

When she became pregnant again at age 34, "I knew that I was getting close to the age when amniocentesis (the process of detecting birth defects in fetusus) is recommended, but there are risks in that procedure itself, and I felt I was getting in under the wire."

At Brian's birth, the doctor "went over to the table and stood there just looking at the baby for what seemed like a very long time."

Much later, the baby's pediatrician walked into Mrs. West's room, told her husband to sit down, and said, "The baby has a number of problems ranging in degree of severity." He had Down's syndrome and no esophagus — no tube to carry food from his throat to his stomach.

WEST GREW ANGRY as the doctor persisted in referring only to the "baby." "He has a name, you know," Mrs. West remembered her husband saying.

"I remember saying, 'Please, no heroic medicine, let him go,' " she said. They had talked about such a situation hypothetically and they became more resolved to let the baby die as Brian's problems became more apparent. They baptized him when he was three days old, holding him with his various monitoring devices still attached.

As it became clear that the hospital was not going to respect their wishes, they gave way to what Mrs. West calls "panic responses." She remembered telling her husband, " ... let's take him out of the hospital, drive to a motel somewhere and not tell anybody, and let nature take its course."

The hospital staff called a hearing of its ethics committee to decide what to do about Brian. The doctors and social workers present determined that his life should be saved. Down's syndrome could not be cured, but surgery, they decided, could replace his missing esophagus.

The Wests were told they could fight the action in court, as the parents of Bloomington's "Baby Doe" did last month in winning court permission for their baby to die. They decided, however, that they did not want the publicity or the $20,000 legal bill that would come from a court challenge that, they were advised, they could easily lose. They pleaded no contest to a charge of child neglect and surrendered legal responsibility for Brian to the juvenile court.

ONCE THE DECISION WAS MADE, doctors inserted a tube into Brian's stomach so that he could be fed. The tissue around the tube regularly became infected, however. Saliva and other foreign matter dripped into his windpipe, despite regular suction through a tube stuck into his nose. He caught pneumonia three times and once his heart stopped, but doctors revived him and cut a hole in his neck to allow saliva to drain more easily.

The Wests wrestled with their strange status: were they still Brian's parents? Mrs. West said she turned the problem over to God, and "one of the first messages I received through prayer was that I should go visit Brian on a regular basis."

She was appalled at how thin he was. The doctors had hoped to wait until he weighed 20 pounds before they tried to fashion his new esophagus, but after he reached 15 pounds in December and seemed able to gain little more, they decided to go ahead.

In an operation lasting more than four hours, a pediatric surgeon, Dr. Barbara Towne, formed one partially detached piece of Brian's stomach into a tube and attached it to a second hole in his neck so it could be exposed to the air and heal. Unfortunately, it had no valve to keep stomach acid from pushing up through the makeshift tube and out.

"He was holding a toy, looking at it," she said. "He was placid and then all of a sudden he arched his back and just screamed. You could see stomach acid coming out onto his skin." Nurses had always strapped him into an infant seat when formula was pumped into his stomach so that it would not spill out, but for about six weeks after the first operation they had to keep him bound hand and foot with soft cloth restraints.

In February, Towne completed the process, attaching the new esophagus to the throat and closing the two holes in Brian's neck. But when nurses tried to feed him through the mouth, he coughed and gagged. The new esophagus had too much scar tissue to let anything through. The Wests said they had been told from the beginning that the operation would work; it was an important reason to reject their plea to let Brian die.

At the home 40 miles southeast of Los Angeles, doctors have put Brian on a heavy dose of antibiotics in preparation for another operation to clear the scar tissue from the new esophagus. Towne said she plans to pass a string from his stomach up to his mouth and pull it back and forth with a device attached that can widen the blocked passage so that he will finally be able to chew and swallow.

Ron Dodgen, regional supervisor for Beverly Enterprises, which runs the Hy-Lond home, declined as "inappropriate" a Washington Post request to visit Brian.

Towne, however, said, "Most of the time Brian is a happy little boy. He responds well to people. The people at the hospital are delighted when I have had to admit him to the hospital, because he is a delightful child."

Brian's parents admit they have not quite worked out how to handle their emotions. With Brian out of immediate danger, the Wests find that they are remaining in close touch with him, although they no longer have legal custody.

THEY HAVE BEGUN TO DISCUSS trying to regain custody, which they have been told would not be difficult. "You love him whether you want to or not," Mrs. West said. "He can't help being the way he is."

Manager's good example has impact on employees

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Offering employees incentive programs with cash prizes or more flexible working hours won't improve their work ethic as much as will effective supervision, according to a business analyst.

Dr. David Cherrington, associate professor of organizational behavior at Brigham Young University, says a manager's good example can have a dramatic impact on work values.

"Managers do not need a new model of human behavior or another novel theory of motivation. They need to manage more effectively," said Cherrington, author of the book, "Work Ethic," and numerous articles on the subject.

Supervisors exert a much greater influence on subordinates through their personal behavior than through the things they say, Cherrington believes.

"If supervisors expect subordinates to be punctual, supervisors should be punctual. Company policies about quality, service, punctuality or pride are just so many words if supervisors disregard them in their actions," he explains.

While some business experts blame the slump in productivity on a decline in work values, Cherrington thinks management must share the blame.

After surveying hundreds of workers in more than 53 companies, Cherrington found that the organizations with the worst labor problems failed to set clear expectations about productivity, establish individual accountability, provide feedback through appraisals, or encourage their employees to develop their skills.

"It's inconsistent," said Cherrington, "to expect a worker to take pride in his job if the job is poorly organized."

For example, when a Texas oil company centralized its repair operations, leaving some of its most valued employees idle for several hours during the day, job morale declined.

"One older worker felt he was cheating the company because he wasn't doing an 'honest day's work.' It was a bad design and management should have changed it," Cherrington says.

Managers who set high expectations about worker productivity have better productivity records, according to Cherrington's research. In one study he conducted, supervisors were told to communicate either high, low or no performance standards. The highest performance rates were achieved by the groups whose supervisors expected high performance.

Cherrington surveyed work-ethic attitudes throughout the country but didn't find stronger work values in any one geographical section. He did discover, however, that workers in rural areas had a greater sense of work values than those in urban areas.

Although we no longer live in an agrarian society where many of our traditional work values were fostered, says Cherrington, he thinks that work values can be taught and reinforced in employees who may not have been exposed to them at home.

"Believing in the dignity of labor and taking pride in one's work are not inherited characteristics," he said.

"While the work values of most people are developed in youth, they can also be influenced on the job. People who have not developed positive work values in their youth can go through a similar developmental experience to learn initiative, responsibility, commitment and perseverance as an adult."

Cleaners group urges consumers to use care in clothing choice

NEW YORK (AP) — Inflationary trends have caused many consumers to look upon their wardrobes as a major investment, so buying carefully and wisely is more important than ever, warns Bill Seitz, an expert in the clothing field.

Style continues to be important to most consumers, but more and more are paying attention to the serviceability and wearability of the garments they purchase, reports Seitz, executive director of the Neighborhood Cleaners Association (NCA), a group representing more than 3,000 drycleaners in nine eastern states.

"If you're looking for quality, don't judge a garment on face value," says Seitz, cautioning that the cost of a garment or the designer name is not always a guarantee the consumer is getting quality merchandise.

"And the care labels don't always tell the whole story," he adds. "Read the labels carefully and closely examine garments for workmanship. Be aware: the more you understand about fabrics and their limitations and qualities, the less likely you are to be disappointed in a purchase."

Seitz regularly examines garments being sold in major department stores as part of the NCA's consumer-education program. Some potential problem areas he and the NCA are advising consumers to look out for when they shop are:

—Silk: Good European and Japanese silks should provide reasonable wearability, but avoid the cheaper types produced in some other parts of the Orient. Take care when selecting brightly colored silks. Many of them will fade from sunlight and sometimes even from fluorescent lighting. Many silk prints bleed due to perspiration or liquid staining substances.

—Linen and linen-look fashions: These garments will be seen in whites and pastel shades. Both the linen and linen-look are likely to be sized. Dye crocking or color loss may occur in areas of wear. Loss of sizing may result in substantial shrinkage.

—Imitation suede or leather: Imitation leather made of vinyl can never be drycleaned. It will become stiff and unwearable. Imitation suede made of polyurethane may be drycleanable, if the manufacturer uses careful quality control in the necessary pressure and proper temperature to ensure that the fabric is serviceable. If not, peeling and puckering will occur.

Flocked imitation suede is unserviceable because the tiny fibers that create the suede look are attached to the basic fabric with an adhesive. Normal wear and subsequent drycleaning will remove the adhesive, leaving bald areas.

—Cotton prints and solid colors: Some cotton fabrics are printed and dyed with dyes that are soluble in either drycleaning solvent, water, or both. Dyes which can stand up to both solvent and water are available and widely used.

French cooking school run by royal princess

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

She is a member of a distinguished family — one that has given France numerous generals, three field marshals, one prime minister and a winner of a Nobel Prize in physics. A family in which royal titles abound. But her friendly informality makes her as enjoyable as that American institution — apple pie.

Although she is the Princess de Broglie, she encourages the people she meets to call her by her first name — Marie-Blanche — and they do. She holds a baccalaureate in philosophy, but chooses to run a cooking school in her Paris apartment and at her family's Normandy chateau.

As a result, she is in the kitchen a good deal. When I asked her how she happened to start giving cooking classes, she said with some humor, "The manors are no more, the staffs have vanished."

At the time of her marriage, she didn't know how to cook. Then her husband — a computer engineer — suggested she attend the Paris Cordon Bleu cooking school. After a year there, she won the Cordon Bleu's Grande Diplome.

At first she planned to use her culinary skill for entertaining at home. But before she knew it, she was giving cooking lessons to friends in France and to groups in the United States. In 1975 she opened her cooking school (Princess Ere 2001) that now specializes in both regional and haute cuisine and has an international clientele. She speaks fluent English and Spanish and courses are taught in these languages as well as in French.

Although running her cooking school is a full-time job, Marie-Blanche spends lots of time with her family. She and her husband have an 18-year-old daughter and a 15-year-old son. The family has dinner at home. "We often have the dishes we make at my school," she told me. "I should dislike to deprive my husband and children of such good things." One of those "good things" is Veal Scallops with Hazelnut Sauce, and Marie-Blanche's recipe for it follows.

VEAL SCALLOPS WITH HAZELNUT SAUCE

12 thin-sliced veal scallops (each 2 ounces)
Flour seasoned with salt and pepper
6 ounces butter
4 ounces hazelnuts
2 tablespoons heavy cream
Salt, pepper, cayenne and Worcestershire sauce

Dredge the veal scallops in the seasoned flour and tap off the excess. Over medium heat, melt two ounces of the butter in a large skillet. Saute the scallops in the butter, about two to three minutes on each side. Remove to a heated platter and set aside in a warm place.

On a baking sheet, toast the hazelnuts in a 350-degree oven until golden and the outer skin flakes off. Remove the skin by rubbing the nuts vigorously together in a dry towel. Finely grind the nuts in a food processor; remove two tablespoons of them and reserve. To the remaining nuts in the processor, add the remaining four ounces butter. Process thoroughly but avoid overheating and melting the butter. Wrap the nut butter in wax paper and refrigerate until cold and hardened. Cut into medium chunks.

In a saucepan bring the cream, a tiny pinch of the salt, pepper and cayenne and a dash or two of the Worcestershire sauce to a boil; reduce by half. Whisk in the nut butter, piece by piece, until it is all incorporated. Remove immediately from the heat and keep in a warm place until serving time. Serve two veal scallops per person napped with the sauce and a sprinkle of the reserved ground hazelnuts. Makes six servings.

(This recipe is from the Princess Ere 2001 cooking school. For information about courses there, write Marie-Blanche de Broglie, Ecole de Cuisine, 18, Av. de la Motte-Picquet, 75007 Paris, France.)

Make short sleeves from long

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

Making a short-sleeve shirt out of a long-sleeve shirt is no big deal. You chop off the sleeve and hem. However, you can make the transformation more professional by using the following hemming technique.

Determine desired length of short sleeve. Mark. From this mark, measure down two inches. Turn one-half inch of hem to inside; press. Turn hem to inside again, folding right at the raw edge of the hem allowance. One-quarter inch from this second fold machine stitch around sleeve through all layers.

Now, bring hem allowance back to outside and you have a very impressive sleeve hem. The raw edge has been encased and the one-fourth inch fold you stitched has the appearance of a cuff. It's a neat trick.

Did you know sleeves can make you look heavy? That's right. Full, full sleeves; puffy sleeves; sleeves that end right at the bustline; tiny cap sleeves; and ordinary long sleeves all can add "width" to your figure. To check for yourself, put on a blouse or dress that has long sleeves. Stand before a full-length mirror. Push one sleeve to the elbow. Look at the difference. Showing some skin makes you look thinner!

If you have long, skinny arms, avoid three-quarter sleeves or long sleeves that don't quite make it all the way down. Also, avoid tight, skinny sleeves and cap sleeves.

If you have eased the sleeve cap in with a couple of rows of machine stitching just inside the seam line, you may not think it is necessary to take out those two rows since "they won't show." Well — think again. Leaving those two rows of ease stitching in the seam allowance can cause the sleeve cap to look puckered.

So — take them out.

Sweet summer treats can sour children's behavior

NEW YORK (AP) — Ice cream cones, hot dogs, marshmallows and soda are typical summer fare for many children. But these foods may make their behavior not-so-typical if they are among the almost nine million children who cannot tolerate too much sugar in their diets, warns Dr. Jerome Vogel, medical director of the New York Institute for Child Development.

"Nutrition plays a definite role in behavior," says Vogel, "and a diet high in sugar and refined carbohydrates can cause overactive behavior, restlessness and irritability. The sibling rivalry that often develops into full-scale wars during those long car rides to the beach may not be due to cramped quarters but to the milkshakes, french fries and candy bars eaten along the way."

The negative effects of too much sugar on behavior have been documented, Vogel reports, in a research study by the NYICD, a non-profit facility that diagnoses and treats the physical causes of learning disabilities and hyperactivity.

Of 265 children tested, 74 percent were unable to properly handle refined carbohydrates and showed not only behavior problems, but learning difficulties as well, Vogel says.

Even though most routines are forgotten during the hot summer days, don't let children make a routine of junk-food snacks, Vogel urges.

He advises homemade lemonade and iced herbal teas instead of overly sweetened sodas and suggests making ice pops out of fruit juices instead of buying ice-cream bars.

"Take advantage of what warm weather yields and serve fresh summer fruits such as watermelon, cantaloupe, peaches," says Vogel.

Program gives students look at future careers

FOREST GROVE, Ore. (AP) — Business and professional people who remember what it was like being in college, not knowing for sure what career they wanted to follow and having little information about some of the potential careers, are helping current students bridge that gap.

They are working with Pacific University students in an unusual "extern" program started this year by Peter DePaoli, director of the campus Career Development Office, and his assistant, Sarah Lohaus.

During the spring students applied to spend a week of vacation time experiencing a daily work week in the field of their choice to learn what that career is like. The Career Development Office then sought sponsors for the students among alumni and others in the business and professional world.

The 20 students in the program worked with: a veterinarian, an optometrist, a dentist, a technical writer, in the offices of a county juvenile department, a marketing firm, a public relations company, a chemistry laboratory, a clothing manufacturer, a hearing and speech center, a physical-therapy clinic, hospitals, a printing firm, and savings and loan institutions.

In an after-the-fact evaluation students said that they had benefited from the week. Most had their interests in particular fields reaffirmed. All said that they had gained more information about careers.

"It tested my patience," says Ken Crutch of Tacoma, Wash., who spent a week with an attorney. He learned more of what he has to do "to prepare for law school and the legal profession after school."

Most of the students said "it was too short" or "that's a bigger field than I realized." But Glen Uekewa of Hilo, Hawaii, said with a laugh, "I had pictures made to send home of me in my suit and tie; that doesn't happen too often."

The business and professional sponsors also evaluated the program. John Jordan of Washington Federal Savings and Loan in Hillsboro, Ore., said that the extern program gave students a realistic idea of what to expect and offered the participating institution an opportunity to examine itself and see how others perceive it.

"The process of explaining and answering questions can reveal factors about itself to the business institution," he noted.

Attorney John Rodgers of Forest Grove agreed. "It gave me a chance to explain what I had never explained before." He added that when he was a student he "would have jumped at the chance" to be an extern.

After the extern matches were made between students and off-campus sponsors, the individual student and his sponsor made the final, specific arrangements for the "externship."

DePaoli likes to use the word "hook up" in speaking of the matches. "Hooking a freshman with an alumnus can be good for all," he explained. The student gains knowledge and background he needs, and the alumnus learns more about current students and draws closer to his alma mater while performing a service, DePaoli pointed out.

DePaoli said that he had more offers of sponsorships than he did students applying to take part during the first round of the program.

Post-polio syndrome puzzling ailment

By MAUREEN McTAGUE DANA
Hearst Feature Service

He was one of the lucky ones — his bout with polio in the 1950s left him with one mildly atrophied leg, but with his health intact.

But about two years ago, the man, now in his 50s, began experiencing pain in his hips, new difficulties in walking and weakness in his joints.

He was forced to curtail many of his activities, opt for early retirement and rely more and more on a wheelchair.

He — like hundreds and perhaps thousands of survivors of the massive polio epidemic of the 1950s — is believed to be a victim of a baffling ailment that has surfaced over the past few years — post-polio syndrome.

DR. EDWARD POSKANZER, chief of rehabilitative medicine at St. Peter's Hospital in Albany, N.Y., said the man, whose name he could not make public, is one of three 1950's polio victims he has treated in the past two years for what the physician believes to be post-polio syndrome, more formally known as a long-term sequel (consequence) from polio.

ALTHOUGH THE APPARENT ailment goes by many names, puzzled researchers still have no clear idea what is causing it or how prevalent it is.

And although it is generally believed to be a long-delayed side effect of polio, researchers can't even say that for sure, according to Dr. Anne Bailey of the Roosevelt-Warm Springs Rehabilitative Center in Warm Springs, Ga.

Dr. Bailey, a rehabilitative medicine specialist, is helping conduct a survey of Warm Springs patients who contracted polio in 1952, when the epidemic reached its peak, striking 57,879 Americans.

SO FAR, THE LIMITED results appear alarming, showing 80 percent of the 400 respondents have symptoms appearing to be post-polio syndrome.

But Dr. Bailey cautioned that the statistics may paint a much bleaker picture than necessary. She said many of those who responded to the survey probably did so because they had the ailment, while the request for information was likely ignored by non-sufferers.

In addition, she said, many of the participants were not Warm Springs patients but had contacted the center because they had heard about the survey and realized their symptoms matched the description of the syndrome.

"There does seem to be a fair percentage of polio patients who after 20 to 30 years do begin to lose strength that they had previously regained," she said.

THE MAJOR SYMPTOM is loss of strength in the limbs, although some patients also have unexplained muscle pain, Dr. Bailey added.

There are many theories, but perhaps the most popular is that the added strain put on the polio victim's body by trying to compensate for his partially disabled limbs catches up with him after two to three decades.

There is little consistency in how patients are afflicted, Dr. Bailey said. Although some experience new weakness in the limbs originally disabled by polio, others have problems with "the so-called good leg."

"Maybe that's because the good leg has been called on to do the work of one and a half legs, so it may be explained by the added strain," she suggested.

And the victims of post-polio sydrome appear to include both those who had very mild cases of polio and those who were severely afflicted.

Dr. Bailey said most of the patients have found their symptoms developed over periods ranging from several months to several years.

Poskanzer, though, said his patients, who must now rely partially on wheelchairs, had more of a "sudden onset," with symptoms developing over about two months.

THE AILMENT, if positively linked to polio, is probably not a new one. It could be as old as polio itself, believed by some to have been around as long ago as 1400 B.C. But because polio occurred in epidemic proportions between 1943 an 1953, and many of its victims survived, there are large numbers of polio sufferers now in their middle years.

In 1955, Dr. Jonas Salk produced with spectacular success the vaccine which almost eliminated the disease then generally called infantile paralysis.

Because there are still so many unanswered questions about post-polio syndrome, Dr. Bailey said researchers at her center "have been kind of soft-pedaling it.

"We've tried as much as we can not to alarm anybody."

BUT UNTIL SOME CLEAR answers become available, she said the staff is cautioning polio victims not to deplete their reserves of physical strength.

"We don't want to say that every polio patient can look forward to this, but we are just really not sure what's going on."

'Oliver's Olives'

By JOHN TODD
Hearst Feature Service

SAN RAFAEL, Calif. — For a New Yorker who never saw an olive tree until he moved to California, Marc Fleischer has come a long way. He and his wife not only sell them, they also make them and, of course, eat them.

The Fleischers' latest creation is the pimento-stuffed "dry martini" olive, made possible by including vermouth in the olive brine, which produces an olive with just a suggestion of the wine. Among the martini set, who have been reducing the ratio of gin to vermouth from about seven to one to the squeeze of an atomizer over the last 30 years, this could be a winner.

Fleischer's interest in olives began when he purchased several cases of California olives. "The more we ate, the more our minds percolated. After tasting ripe olives, the commercial ones tasted like cardboard," he recalls.

The percolations led them back to the farmer, whose family had been making olives in California from an old Spanish-style recipe since 1878.

Fleischer's plan was to market the farmer's olives under his own specialty brand name. The idea worked, a contract was signed, and a brand name — "Oliver's Olives" — was born.

One thing the Fleischers learned early was that it isn't easy to sell olives. "Until you try selling olives, you don't realize how many people don't like them. You have to spend five minutes just to get them to taste one. Then they walk away with a beautiful smile, carrying a gallon of olives. People often don't like olives because they are generally too sour, too bitter or too salty. They don't know anything better."

How to handle garden hoses with care

By AL CARRELL

By now a lot of you folks have hauled out the garden hoses and have already run the power mower over them. Proper care for a garden hose should enable you to get many years of use from a good one. Unfortunately the mower isn't the only abuse we give these hoses. Today I'd like to pass along some common-sense rules for hose care, and then show you some good ideas from other readers.

Right now there are hundreds of hoses left stretched across the driveway. How much would you bet that the driver of the next car going over the drive would stop and move the hose? The weight of the car doesn't do the hose any good. If the car runs over the hose end just right, it can mash it out of round and make it impossible to attach a nozzle or sprinkler.

Another strain on the hose is to cut off the flow at the nozzle instead of at the hydrant. It's even worse to stop the flow by crimping the hose.

When using the hose that won't quite reach, many folks will pull tight to stretch it out. This is bad on the hose, but could be worse on the hydrant.

Also don't stretch the hose around a sharp corner of the house.

Dear Al: Cluster seven two-pound coffee cans to form a sort of circle. Attach these to the garage wall in that pattern with screws through the bottoms. You now have seven bins for all sorts of small garden tools, and your garden hose can coil around the circle. — G.O.

+ + +

Dear Al: A wooden coat hanger can hold a coiled garden hose while hanging from a nail. When the hose is to be used, the hanger makes carrying easier too. — T.N.

+ + +

Dear Al: When you remove a nozzle from the hose, it's a candidate for getting lost. Not mine. I attached a metal wall hanging broom clip to the wall next to the hydrant. The broom clip holds the nozzle until it's again needed. — R.Y.

+ + +

Dear Al: I mounted empty spools that had held electricians wire at each corner of my house. A spike through the center opening of the spool does the job. Now my garden hose contacts the spool when the hose has to turn the corner instead of being rubbed against the sharp square corners of brick. — R.E.T.

+ + +

If you've ruined the hose, it's possible that it can be revived. A tiny leak in some plastic hoses can often be mended by merely touching the hole for an instant with the hot tip of a solder gun.

A slice in any type hose can be cut out, and the two sections joined with a device called a hose coupler, which you can buy at the hardware store or home center. There are several types on the market. With some of these units, you have to match the diameter of your hose. Some are only for rubber hoses, while others are for plastic. Others work on either type.

When working with a plastic hose, you can often dip the ends in hot water for a few minutes and find the plastic becomes much more pliable for easier working.

With either type hose, it is important to make the ends as square as possible when cutting.

There are also replacement units for hose end couplers that have been smashed.

One of the best hose tricks I ever saw was a guy who took his new garden hose and wrapped a piece of black friction tape around it in a couple of places as if to patch a leak. Then he smeared mud over the surface. His reason was to make the hose look so bad that no one would even steal it. The tape is a lousy way to patch a leak, but a good way to keep your hose.

Chicago's Deep Tunnel: Boon or boondoggle?

By TED J. RAKSTIS
(Special from Reader's Digest)

They're building it in Chicago, in the hard rock 150 to 300 feet beneath the city's streets and rivers. If it is completed, the Tunnel and Reservoir Plan, known as TARP or Deep Tunnel, will have cost $12.5 billion, and it will be one of America's biggest public-works projects ever.

On paper, TARP is a 131-mile network of 9-to-36-foot-wide tunnels linked with five underground reservoirs, each the size of a football stadium. Its purpose is to "park" overflow sewage and rainwater until it can be treated and released into Chicago's waterways.

Promoters claim TARP — which could not be completed until about the year 2000 — will eliminate most pollution in Chicago's filthy rivers, reduce home basement flooding and stop occasional backflows of the Chicago River's polluted water into Lake Michigan, the city's principal source of drinking water.

TARP was created by the Metropolitan Sanitary District of Greater Chicago (MSD), a super-government bureaucracy noted for its huge salaries and grandiose engineering schemes.

MSD compares Deep Tunnel with the Great Wall of China and the Egyptian pyramids as an engineering miracle. But J. Terrence Brunner, executive director of Chicago's watchdog Better Government Association (BGA), brands it "a political, financial and environmental fiasco."

The Chicago Tribune has revealed that TARP contracts worth tens of millions of dollars have been give to influential friends of the city's political establishment. And evidence is mounting that Deep Tunnel will not only fail to perform as intended but may create new environmental hazards.

In Chicago today, any rainfall of more than a quarter of an inch overloads the system. Raw sewage and storm water from 640 overflow points surge into Chicago's waterways some 100 times a year. Home basement flooding is common and causes millions of dollars' worth of damage annually.

Beginning in the 1960s, MSD joined with officials from the city, county and state to seek a solution. They settled on TARP, maintaining that it was the most "cost-effective" and workable plan. MSD began to sell the program to civic groups.

Because a major part of the Deep Tunnel plan involves pollution control, MSD assumed it could get 75 percent of the funds for the project from EPA. But the U.S. Office of Management and Budget ruled that EPA grants could not be used for flood control. That effectively eliminated federal funding for TARP's five reservoirs.

Now it was the turn of local taxpayers to reach deep into their pockets. In 1970, MSD had a tax rate of 23 cents per $100 of assessed property valuation. Thee present tax rate is 76 cents and is expected to reach 90 cents in the near future.

Besides the 4.4 million people in the 53 sewer communities, the tax hike will also hit homeowners in 72 communities outside the MSD combined-sewer area who will never gain any flood-control benefit from the project.

The tunnel boring, carried out by 10 specially designed mining machines — "moles" that cost as much as $5.8 million each — began in 1975. By 1978, MSD's original cost estimates having nearly tripled, Deep Tunnel finally came under public scrutiny.

It was revealed that millions of dollars' worth of TARP- no-bid consulting-engineering contracts had gone to financial supporters of Chicago's late mayor Richard J. Daley, a strong TARP booster, and other Democratic Party leaders.

Sen. Charles H. Percy (R., Ill.) began to see TARP as potentially the biggest public-works boondoggle in American history. Early in 1978 he persuaded the U.S. General Accounting Office (GAO) to investigate the project.

In May 1979 the GAO published a report highly critical of Deep Tunnel. Unless all the tunnels and reservoirs are built, the report said, Chicago's rivers would not meet the state's lowest water-quality standards.

Moreover, even if the entire project were completed, only 65 percent of the Chicago area's flooding problems would be solved. The GAO concluded that more than one-third of the homes there could be helped only by upgrading local sewers.

The price of completing TARP? MSD, ignoring all the related costs other than those for the tunnels and reservoirs, insists the job can be done for $3.3 billion. But in 1979 the GAO calculated the real costs at $11 billion by 1983.

The money already dumped into Deep Tunnel cannot be retrieved, but it is questionable whether any more funds should be allocated.

Senator Percy warns: "There are 55 other U.S. cities that could use the same technology Chicago is attempting. EPA funding for TARP-style tunnels could run up to $600 billion — almost as much as the national budget. We must stop this wasteful and irresponsible spending immediately!"

Alterations easier with right attitude

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

In the last two years we have done every conceivable alteration there is to be done on garments, and there is one thing I have learned for sure — the attitude with which you approach the task makes all the difference in the world.

Do not look at an alteration as a "make do" effort, but as the recreation of a garment.

Approach the job of ripping out as "clearing the field." We have a tendency to rip as little as possible just to get by. That's a mistake. Rip out enough to make room for what you must do. You can always put it back.

Alterations should never be done with "any old thread that's on the machine." Match the thread used in the garment as closely as possible (this color may or may not match the fabric exactly). Also, make sure you match the length of stitch, especially in topstitching.

Always check the fit before trimming anything off! Once trimmed, there is nothing to work with. However, DO NOT leave excessive seam or hem allowances just because you are afraid to trim.

Do not try the impossible. You may be able to convert a size 14 to a size 10, but is it worth it? And will you be pleased with the results? In such a case, your best bet is to take the garment completely apart and re-cut to the new size. Much easier.

Use as much care in selecting needle size for alterations as you would for custom sewing. And re-use hem tapes only if they are still in good condition.

Young pinball wizard just keeps playing

By GARY LANGER
AP Writer

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Pop music booms from a gigantic juke box. Lights flash, alarms ring and pinball machines around the room whirr, buzz, even speak. Bob Lee hears nothing.

His face is impassive, lips tight, as he stands before a pinball machine. In a boxer's stance, his knees flex, his hips thrust forward and his hands slap the flipper buttons. Lee double-flips a magnificent save, gives a shake, bangs down a target and slams the ball around for the bonus.

"I just love pinball. It's part of my life," the 19-year-old pinball wizard says. "It's almost like I'm the only one around for miles. It's like I'm almost hypnotized."

LEE, THE STATE PINBALL CHAMPION, is tall, thin and slightly stooped. He says he plays 25, maybe 30 hours a week. He once played one machine for seven hours. Pinball has strained his home life and ruined his education. He won't stop.

"It's almost like a mystery," says Lee. "I see the points there and I get really excited. It builds up inside of you. If I didn't have to go home and eat to keep up my strength, I'd stay all day."

Lee became state champion by racking up 5.5 million points on 20 machines in 2½ hours. He once scored 4,782,860 points in a single game of Eight Ball.

In the arcade, Lee is in the eye of a howling electronic storm. Banks of machines flash garishly, awash in lights and colors. Some beckon in metallic voices. Others offer mid-game counsel.

"Try a tube shot," urges Xenon, offering megapoints for a shot up a ramp and down a clear plastic tube festooned with flashing lights.

Lee remains unflustered. "You've got to be aware. You've got to be ready at all times," he says.

A PINBALL PLAYER must instantly gauge the changing trajectory of a rolling steel ball, which ricochets through a forest of bumpers, flip-down targets and sink holes. The perfect touch shakes the ball into optimum targets — or out of trouble spots. Lightning reactions keep flippers aflurry and the ball in play.

"I got reflexes," Lee says. "And it's the way I stand — I position myself."

It wasn't a paying job until Lee took home a three-foot trophy and $300 in prize money from a tournament last month, sponsored by Funspot, an arcade in Concord.

"Would you rather see him smoking pot in a bar?" asks Lee's father, Robert. "The Funspots are clean and well run. It's a social event for him."

At first, the elder Lee was opposed to his son's playing. "It was the money then," he says. "He earns his own now."

The expense was high when Lee started playing six years ago — sometimes $5 for an hour's play. But Lee stuck with it. He can play now for hours on a single quarter. He can win free balls, free games and high scores on any machine.

EVEM WITH THE FREE GAMES, the excitement and the recognition, there's a cost. Lee, now a year out of Concord High School, lasted just one semester in vocational-technical college.

Lee has a carpentry job and does grounds work. "With carpentry work, I can make something of myself," he says.

But whatever his future, Lee says pinball will be in it. "Sometimes I get the urge to play, and no matter where I am, I'll find a machine," he says. "I'm not hooked on it. I just love it."

'Hearing' dogs for deaf

By JOE HEANEY
Hearst Feature Service

Once a month, dog trainer Pat Reilly arrives at Boston's Animal Rescue League to audition homeless mongrels with sharp ears and big brains.

Reilly, a bubbly, 35-year-old wisp of a woman, moves carefully along a virtual death row of caged canines, hoping to spot a hearing dog prospect — a dog that can actually become the household ears of a deaf person.

The dogs — big, little, fat, skinny, many with fleas — stare back at Reilly, sometimes barking as if they knew she could commute their sentence.

"I'm looking for dogs who are curious, intelligent, people-oriented and highly responsive to sound," explains Reilly, chief trainer for Red Acre Farm Hearing Dog Center in Stowe, Vt. "The dogs selected average a year in age, are spayed or neutered and have not been accepted as donations from private homes," she adds.

Reilly will have looked at 20 dogs today, but will leave without one.

"This happens more often than not," says assistant trainer Pam Bundy, "because even though most of our dogs come from pounds and animal shelters, they have to be special."

Back at Red Acre Farm, a regional non-profit hearing dog center sanctioned by the American Humane Association, nine "special" dogs are being trained for eventual placement in the homes of deaf persons, much as seeing eye dogs are placed with blind persons.

The training process takes three to four months and costs about $5,000. Reilly, who has 16 years' experience in dog training, begins with basic obedience instruction, using both hand and voice signals.

"Then the training focus turns to 'sound keying,' zeroing in on specific household noises such as those of an alarm clock, smoke detector, door bell, a child's cry or telephones electronically designed for deaf persons," says Reilly.

The dogs are placed free of charge, if donations are not possible, with anyone at least 21 years old with a severe hearing loss who lives alone or with other hearing-impaired persons.

The hearing dog program began nationally in 1976. The Red Acre Farm program, which supplies dogs in New England and New York State, is not yet a year old, but has trained 12 dogs.

Mary Boudreau, who has a beagle-mix named Peppy from Red Acre Farm, explained just how a trained dog can help a deaf person:

"One morning I forgot to turn off the alarm clock when Peppy awakened me. It must have buzzed continually for 15 minutes.

"While I was dressing," Boudreau continued, "I noticed Peppy kept going to the alarm clock and then back to me. I was still half asleep and didn't realize what she was trying to tell me. I started to leave the bedroom, but she blocked the way downstairs.

"I asked her what she wanted and she led me to the alarm. I touched it and felt it buzzing. I was so happy Peppy wouldn't give up until the alarm was shut off. I gave her lots of praise and hugs."

Before David and Joanna Nash got their dog, they had a scary experience that convinced them how valuable the right dog could be in their home.

Their youngest child, Natalie, 3, was crying steadily late one night. The child's deaf parents could not hear Natalie, but a neighbor did.,

"The neighbor cut through a screen door, pacified the child and then left without waking the parents," recalls Carolyn G. Bird, executive director of Red Acre Farm.

Next morning, Nash found the broken door. It wasn't until later that he learned the neighbor had left unannounced because she didn't want to startle them.

"It would have been different if the family had a trained dog," Bird says. "The dog would have been trained to wake the parents by jumping on the bed to get them to respond to the crying child."

The hearing dog program has its headquarters in Denver, with regional centers in San Francisco, Milwaukee and Stowe. With about two million Americans afflicted with severe to profound hearing impairment, the centers have a constant demand for dogs.

Homemade cherry preserves

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

First find yourself some tart red cherries. Cadge them from a tree in a neighbor's backyard or buy them at a market. You'll have to watch out for them because their season is short.

Then when you have a couple of pounds of that bright light-red fruit, consider putting up some cherry preserves. We can vouch for the following recipe. It produces a beautiful sweet. Great to have on hand to serve with hot biscuits for a weekend company brunch.

CHERRY PRESERVES

2 pounds (about) fully ripe tart red cherries
2½ cups sugar
½ cup light corn syrup

Rinse, stem and pit cherries. Measure four cups. Place cherries in a 5-quart stainless steel or enamel saucepot. Crush lightly to start the flow of juice. Over low heat, stirring often, bring to a boil. Increase heat to medium; boil until cherries are tender — about five minutes. Add ½ cup of the sugar; stirring often, boil five minutes. Add the remaining two cups sugar and the corn syrup; stir to dissolve sugar and mix thoroughly. Return to a boil; boil about five minutes. Cover; let stand in the syrup for 15 minutes to absorb it and plump the fruit; skim as necessary.

Bring to a boil again and, stirring often, boil steadily until mixture thickens — about five minutes. (To test thickness, pour a small amount of the boiling mixture on a small cold plate; place in the freezer for a few minutes; if mixture gels, it is done.) Remove from heat; skim surface. At once pack into clean hot ½-pint jars, leaving ½-inch headspace. Wipe top edges with damp towel. Seal according to jar manufacturer's directions. Process in a boiling water bath for five minutes. Cool jars on a wire rack or folded towel. Store in a cool place. Makes four ½-pint jars.

How to minimize losses from freezer failure

By IRENE GARDNER KEENEY
Hearst Feature Service

Who pays when you find yourself with a refrigerator full of thawed, spoiled food? If the loss is due to failure of the freezer or refrigerator, you may be able to collect from the manufacturer under the terms of your warranty or maintenance contract, says the Major Appliance Consumer Action Panel (MACAP).

If you have a loss, you'll have a much better chance of being reimbursed if you follow these tips from MACAP.

* If you'll be away from home for a week or more, remove the food from your refrigerator or freezer before you go, or have someone check it every few days.
* If temperatures begin to rise unreasonably in your refrigerator or freezer, attempt to minimize possible food loss. Keep the door closed until the food is removed to maintain as cold a temperature as long as possible. Consider putting the food in a frozen-food locker or obtain dry ice to cover the food. You also can ask a neighbor to keep your food, or cook as much of it as reasonable.
* Request service on the appliance immediately after discovering the problem.

If a loss occurs, your compensation chances are better if you do the following:

* Make timely, complete, separate lists of food loss from the refrigerator and freezer, noting the type, amount and dollar value of the food that must be discarded. Ask a service person or neighbor to confirm the loss list. Submit the claim to the service agency and-or manufacturer promptly after the failure — but keep a copy for yourself.
* Ask for and save receipts related to appliance repair, even if it is done in-warranty and at no charge.

The request for loss reimbursement should first be made to the manufacturer or service agency. MACAP will review situations that are not resolved after these initial contacts, and says that warranty limitations on food loss are an important factor but not an absolute limit on its recommendation.

MACAP says that a consumer's effort to follow MACAP's guidelines in food-loss situations will not guarantee reimbursement. The terms of the warranty or maintenance contract govern th t. Read the warranty, MACAP stresses.

* Know uour service agency and the terms of your appliance warranty before you purchase.

FOCUS: James E. Borron

He went from dentistry to marketing

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

When former dentist James E. Borron made the decision in 1978 to stop fixing patients' teeth, and instead, help them dress to the teeth, it must have been the right thing to do.

Not quite four years later, his clothing store, J.E. Borron, has flourished, even though 66 percent of all men's clothing stores fail within the first five years.

In 1981, sales increased by 54 percent, and he is more successful now than he had been with a lucrative dental practice.

He opened a second store in San Angelo a few months ago which, although still a fledgling, seems to be well on its way. And, Borron has plans under wraps to open two more stores in a couple of years.

"I never want to get to a chain store level where I have no control," said Borron, who insists on greeting his customers as they enter the store, even if he can't actually wait on each one personally. Many of them have become friends as well as clients, he said, and they drop in just to have a cup of coffee and talk.

"BUSINESS IS EXCELLENT. We'll continue to grow, but to do that we have to develop new customers. But we cannot forget the loyal customers who have brought us to the level where we are now."

That level is a fine one, both from an economic and from a fashion stand point, and it has meant a different life style for the former dentist.

Borron practiced in Midland for four and a half years, and began to see that the stresses of the job could adversely affect him. (He is health conscious, and a regular jogger. In fact, his store sponsors a road race in conjunction with Septemberfest each year.)

At first, he thought of a men's clothing store just as a sideline to his dental practice, and was going to hire someone else to manage it for him.

Borron wanted to offer something rarely available in Midland stores at that time — finely constructed, conservative, traditional menswear of enduring quality — much like the clothing he himself had been wearing since he was 15. Blazers, suitcoats, button-down shirts — these were the items he wanted to bring to Midland.

"IN THE '60s AND '70s, everything was double knit. For a while, no one in Midland carried a button-down shirt. My current customer was lost," said Borron.

He spent two years planning the store, relying, in part, on his experience working and buying for a men's store while attending Baylor University School of Dentistry.

"The more that I planned, the more I saw the amount of time and effort and dedication it took to doing both professions. I finally came to the point where it was either one or the other," said Borron.

He admitted becoming so excited with the new store's prospects that subconsciously, he had already made up his mind.

It was a big career change, especially after all he had invested in dentistry. "It was a big decision, but I've never regretted it. But I had a few sleepless nights during the change."

BORRON STILL GETS CALLS almost every week from former patients who need advice about their teeth, or their clothing, or both, he said with a laugh.

Traditional clothing such as Borron carries normally occupies about 5 percent of the clothing market, although the current recession has altered that somewhat.

"In times of slow economy, tight money and high interest rates, the market tends to move back toward traditional clothing, so this may account for 15 percent. In slow times, the traditional look always has a resurgence."

A traditional look is conservative, which is the way people are feeling these days because of the economy. The clothes are a good buy because of their quality construction also. This clothing is "wearable and correct (for any business or social occasion) for the life of the garment — it's not going to be obsolete in one season," Borron explained.

"Preppie is a word the fashion industry came up with, to get everybody on the bandwagon. Preppie is a fad, but the traditional look is here to stay. Brooks Brothers, for example, was founded in 1815 in New York."

THE SUCCESS OF THE LOOK is evidenced by its universality. Borron said Brooks Brothers' largest volume store right now is in Japan.

"You know, it's funny, I go to market in Dallas and I see all these little Japanese men wearing their blue blazers and their khaki pants. They love it."

Going to market in Dallas and New York City has become more of a headache for Borron because there are enough markets, between the men's and women's wear, that he could spend all his time there.

In addition, the lag time between ordering and receiving clothing has increased because of the way the economy is affecting clothing manufacturers.

Borron is already making purchasing decisions for the spring and summer, 1983 season.

"THE TEXTILE MANUFACTURERS ARE requiring the clothing manufacturers to commit a year in advance. It's a chain. But fortunately, we don't ask a customer to commit a year in advance," said Borron, laughing.

"Believe you me, it makes it quite difficult," to decide on styles, colors, how many items to order in each size, and so on, he said.

Knowing his customers' needs and wants helps him in this process, Borron added. Some of them know when he's going to market and they request specific items they haven't been able to find, or that were sold out last year before they had a chance to buy.

"The lines initially break in New York. They are available for viewing two or three weeks in advance of the Dallas market," Borron said.

"If it's a line that's particularly hot, there's a possibility it will be sold out before it even gets to Dallas. We don't like to take the remains."

AT THE MARKET, BORRON will make eight or nine appointments a day for three or four days, then spend three days reviewing what he's seen. He looks for trends in style, cut, fabric and color.

New colors are usually introduced in women's wear, then become accent colors in men's wear, such as a thin stripe within a more conservative plaid shirt. Eventually, the color appears in a solid sport shirt or dress shirt for men, Borron said.

He does a lot of wardrobe planning for customers, especially those who don't like to shop, or don't have time. This used to be mostly for the male customers, but as women become more busy in the business world, Borron said he is finding women customers with less time to devote to shopping.

One problem inherent in the apparel business is the amount of money it costs to carry inventory. "As an example, if you were carrying $300,000 of inventory per month, on the average it costs you 36 percent of that, or 3 percent a month, plus the cost of the goods," Borron said.

His store started with a very small inventory, but today it has reached the point where he will shortly begin a major remodeling of the downtown store in Midland, to increase sales space.

"NET PROFIT IN THE APPAREL business, in comparison to the amount of investment you make, is very low," Borron said, "especially if you're concerned about service and the fit of a garment. You have to hire knowledgeable employees.

"We have three full time tailors working here, who do alterations."

Borron's store reflects his personality and the way he dresses — calm, warm, sharp and precise. He is determined to maintain high standards for the clothing on his racks. "I have one manufacturer who uses 200 yards of thread in one pair of pants," he said.

Less expensive pants may have only 150 or 175 yards of thread, an indication of their durability, or lack thereof.

But Borron isn't rigid. He doesn't believe every stitch in his closet should be coordinated with every other stitch. Some use of bold colors or new styles is fine, as long as a person doesn't rely on fads, but sticks to good quality, traditional clothing.

"Somewhere, some place, you can always find a discounted garment, regardless of what it is, all the way up to the very finest designer things," Borron said.

On the other hand, "it's not hard to go to market and find really expensive clothing, but it is hard to find a legitimate value. The bottom line, of course, is you get what you pay for. The critical thing is to watch for when you are not."

James E. Borron has made it his business to watch.

Chinese have opened bidding for offshore oil exploration

By Sterling Noel
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — The thousands of miles of offshore formations along the coast of China have been opened to bidding for oil exploration and development.

Representatives of 40 oil companies, mostly European and U.S., are participating. The Chinese government is offering 43 parcels, and the oil companies will have until the middle of August to make up their minds on how much they will pay and how they will go about tapping China's estimated 30 to 40 billion (B) barrels of recoverable crude.

Cost of exploration will probably range from $20 billion to $40 billion, says The Economist of London, and problems facing the participants will likely be of equal amplitude.

This will be the first major test of China's determination to exploit to the fullest Western technology and management, as well as to maximize their foreign currency earnings.

The issues that are expected to call for the toughest negotiations are taxes to be levied on the oil, the extent to which Chinese industry will be involved and the way the oil will be split between the Chinese government and the oil companies.

China's domestic oil production, largely onshore, has been stagnant since 1978. Last year it dropped from 771 million barrels a year to 737 million. Exports to their biggest customer, Japan, were frozen at 57.6 million barrels a year, well below the 65.7 million barrels promised.

So China needs both oil and technology, lacking the expertise to expand production quickly on its own. The Chinese have critical shortages in qualified crews to operate their onshore and offshore drilling rigs, according to Western observers, and in 1980 lost a huge offshore rig and 72 personnel in a storm, because the crew had not read the safety instructions.

The experience of foreign oil companies dealing with the Chinese raises fears that China may attempt to drive too hard a bargain. Four western companies have been operating there since 1979, when they were invited to make basic seismic studies on the offshore formations.

They spent between $200 million and $400 million charting the geological strata of China's continental shelf. All their findings were turned over to the Chinese.

Japan National Oil Company and two state-owned French companies, Elf Aquitaine and Total, went beyond map-making and, in 1980, signed exploration and development contracts.

The terms, according to some Western oil men, were appalling and could have been accepted only by state-owned companies more in need of oil than profits. The terms on costs were normal enough, but the time allotted to the French for exploration — four years — and the time given to the Japanese — five years — was considered entirely unacceptable. Most international oil contracts allow 10 years for exploration.

And more important, the contractual split in the oil at the start of commercial production was limited to 15 years, whereas the normal contract is for 20 years.

The fourth company working China offshore is Atlantic Richfield (ARCO). No details were released about its negotiations with the Chinese, which have been proceeding sporadically since 1979. A memorandum of agreement for exploration and development was signed last June, but negotiations on a full contract have stalled.

Two points of disagreement are taxation and the contracts to be reserved for Chinese industry. The only consolation ARCO can offer other oil companies that are now seeking to enter the world of Chinese business is that it is proceeding with exploration.

The snag, then, for American companies, which make up half the bidders, appears to be a combination of bureaucratic confusion, lack of taxation agreements and contracts that may restrict profits to an unacceptable level.

Painfully high interest rates persistent

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD

NEW YORK (AP) — Forecasts of rising interest rates during the summer persist despite two favorable signs this past week: an apparent end to the budget impasse in Congress and a government report that wholesale prices held steady in May.

Many financial economists say interest rates could dip slightly in the next few weeks. But a summer surge is forecast as the Treasury steps up its borrowing to finance a record federal deficit; a July tax cut and increase in Social Security benefit payments are expected to stimulate growth of the nation's money supply. A bulge in the money supply would raise chances that the Federal Reserve Board would tighten its monetary policy.

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, who on June 1 said interest rates "will be down quite a bit by the end of 1982," said Thursday that even with congressional approval of a Republican budget plan, the prime rate would wind up the year near 14 percent.

The prime rate, the base upon which banks compute interest charges on short-term business loans to their best customers, currently hovers between 16 percent and 16.5 percent.

Among those predicting a rise in interest rates, the investment firm of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc. says the prime rate could reach 18.5 percent by the end of September and Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. says the prime will approach 18 percent by summer's end.

On Thursday, the Democratic-controlled House adopted a GOP spending plan that projects a $99.3 billion deficit for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

The breaking of a deadlock that had sidetracked action on the federal budget "significantly reduces chances of new peaks in interest rates later this year," says economist Maury Harris at the investment firm of Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis Inc. "But we will not get relief until the budget gets much closer to being signed, sealed and delivered than it is now."

Albert E. Sindlinger, chairman of Sindlinger & Co. Inc., a private economic forecasting and public opinion firm, says the inability of the House to act earlier on a budget "has been holding interest rates from falling."

Sindlinger says the prime rate may fall to 14.5 percent by mid-July, then start soaring to nearly 26 percent by November. That would be well above the record 21.5 percent prime rate reached in December 1980.

Without relief from high interest rates, any recovery from recession will be choked off as businessmen will be unable to finance stepped up production and consumers will find it too costly to borrow money to buy goods like cars and appliances, economists say.

The Commerce Department reported this past week that business leaders have again scaled back their plans for spending on expansion and modernization this year. High interest rates and a slowdown in business were blamed.

The government survey taken in April and May said that after adjusting for inflation, capital spending this year would be down 2.4 percent from 1981 levels, more than double the cutback of earlier surveys and the first decline in such spending since 1975.

But inflation continues to moderate, and with a 10 percent cut in federal income tax rates and a 7.4 percent rise in Social Security benefit payments in July, consumers will enjoy additional spending clout this summer.

The Labor Department reported that with wholesale prices unchanged in May, inflation at the wholesale level has been held to a 0.4 percent annual rate over the first five months of this year.

The Commerce Department reported that retail sales rose 1.5 percent in May and the Federal Reserve Board said growth of consumer borrowing in April was the biggest in seven months.

In other business and economic news this past week:

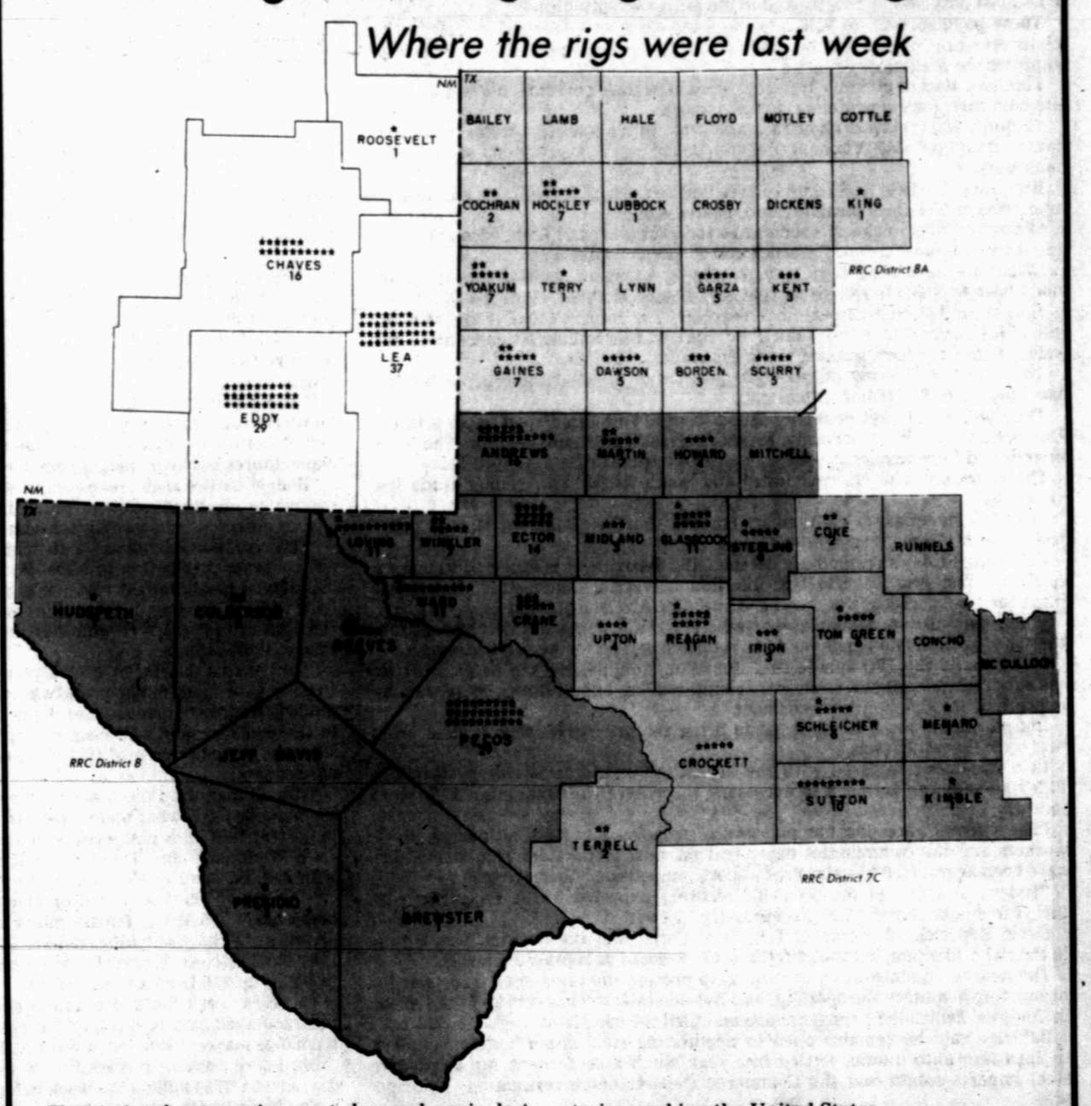
—The Commerce Department said nine foreign governments unfairly subsidized steel exports to the United States. The preliminary ruling in a complaint brought by U.S. steelmakers means U.S. importers of steel products from those countries will be required to post cash or bonds equal to the estimated subsidies. The subsidies range from less than 1 percent to more than 40 percent of the value of the imports.

—The American Iron and Steel Institute, an industry organization, reported that in the week ended June 5, steelmakers used only 42.5 percent of their production capacity, down from 46.1 percent the previous week and the lowest operating rate since the weekly average of 39.6 percent in 1938. Steelworkers have reportedly been asked to renegotiate contract benefits, but United Steel Workers President Lloyd McBride says the industry may be able to recover from its severe slide without wage concessions from the union.

—Dun & Bradstreet Corp., a private credit information service, says the number of weekly business failures has dropped 27 percent after hitting a post-Depression high in early May. But the casualty count remains above last year's pace.

Basin rig count going down again

Where the rigs were last week



The regional rotary rig count dropped again last week. According to a survey by Reed Rock Bit Co. the total for the area covered by the map was 320. The previous week's tally was 327.

In past weeks the count has been: 321, May 28; 327, May 21; and 358, May 14.

One year ago the bit makers added up 430 rigs making hole in the Permian Basin.

Nationally, the rig count continues to decline, although the rate of decline has slowed — at least briefly.

The International Association of Drilling Contractors reports the count June 7 was 2,907. One week earlier it was 2,931. The difference between the figures is the smallest observed in many weeks of shrinking numbers.

On June 8, 1981 the IADC observed 3,860 active rotaries working the United States.

The IADC count shows 795 rotaries working inland Texas last week. In New Mexico there were 92.

The international rigcount for April, released by the IADC, reveals a slight decline in activity worldwide. The April total was 1,462. The March count was 1,470.

During April there were 201 rigs working Africa; 249 in Europe; 259 in the Far East; 542 in Latin America; 177 in the Middle East; and 34 in the South Pacific.

From March to April the rig counts for the Far East and South Pacific declined. In all other areas they were up.

The big plays are in Algeria, 68 rigs; Italy, 36 rigs; Indonesia, 58 rigs; Mexico, 191 rigs; Turkey, 26 rigs; and Australia, 23 rigs.

No enemy in sight, but the ship kept firing its guns nonstop

GALVESTON — The ship had been firing its guns nonstop for three days, but no enemy was in view and no battle in progress. The target for this particular sea maneuver was layers of ocean sediment, the ammunition was comshortly after the R/V Fred H. Moore had left its dock at Galveston. The 165-foot seismic ship, belonging to The University of Texas at Austin Institute for Geophysics, had embarked on its first training cruise for students.

During the four-day trip into the Gulf of Mexico, the 12 UT-Austin seniors and graduate students on board had the opportunity for hands-on experience in collecting seismic data, the raw material geophysicists use to determine what lies beneath the earth's surface.

Although the Moore had made numerous scientific cruises in the past, this was the maiden voyage dedicated exclusively to students, and particularly undergraduates.

The trip was the culmination of months of planning on the part of Dennis Brock, president of the UT Austin Geophysical Society. What better way to learn marine geophysics than to do the actual work, had been the graduating senior's point of view.

"This is a unique experience for undergraduates," said Dr. Clark Wilson, a UT assistant professor of geological sciences and advisor for the student society.

"I don't know of any other place in the world that does this," he observed. The Institute for Geophysics now plans to offer the training cruises regularly.

BACK IN THE SHIP'S LAB, Dr. Buffler, a geologist at the institute, was giving the students an overview of what they would be doing for the next four days and how they would do it.

"You want to record everything you can in the logs," he said. "You'll need that information for processing the data later."

He made assignments for the watches: three groups of four students each alternating duty in the lab, four hours on, eight off, to begin at midnight that night.

"Instead of sunning yourselves in your off hours, I want you in here reading the literature," he ordered, pointing to a stack of maps and technical papers on the geology of the Gulf of Mexico.

"I get to sun," he added with a grin.

THE LAYERS OF SEDIMENT to be studied during the cruise, he went on, are part of the Texas-Louisiana slope, a step-like region under the Gulf that extends from the continental shelf to the deep sea floor. Underlying the slope are salt domes, geologic features that can be big traps for oil and gas.

"It's your cruise, too," Dr. Buffler told the students. "If you want to alter the route, we're open to suggestions."

He went through the routine to be followed in the lab, explaining the specific entries the students would make in the numerous logs and the equipment they would be monitoring.

"We'll shoot for three days straight," the scientist announced.

He was referring to the ships air guns, which later would be lowered into the water. The guns are timed to emit periodic bursts of air, compressed at about 500 pounds per square inch. The blasts are the souce for sound waves, the backbones of what geophysicists call "continuous seismic reflection profiling." It's the primary method of geologic exploration in deep water.

In the technique of reflecting profiling, sound waves are generated at precisely controlled and closely spaced intervals. Some of the waves travel downward through the water and into the sediments below the sea floor. At the boundaries of the different kinds of sediment, part of the sound waves are reflected back toward the surface of the water.

FLOATING DETECTORS — hydrophones — capture that reflected acoustic energy, convert it to electrical energy and transmit it back to computers and monitors aboard ship. The end result, after subsequent digestion of the complex data by computers on land and then more painstaking interpretation by geophysicists and geologists, is a geologic cross section, a picture of the many layers of sediment deep in the earth.

Early the next morning the students donned life vests, for safety, and converged on the Moore's stern, where the 24-channel streamer sat looking like a giant 10-foot spool of thread turned on its side.

Inside the mile-long "thread" — really five-inch diameter plastic tubing — were 24 evenly-spaced "live" and "dead" sections. Each live portion had 25 to 30 sound-sensitive hydrophones, followed by an empty or dead space.

With a radar buoy attached to its end, the streamer was slowly unreeled and fed into the water. At regular intervals, the students clamped around the streamer "birds", pressurized fiberglass cylinders with wings that maintain the streamer at an optimum depth of about 35 feet as it trails behind the ship. If the streamer rides deeper than that, the hydrophones pick up too much reverberation; if it's too shallow, there is too much noise from the water's surface.

After the two 750-pound torpedo-like air guns were hoisted from the deck and lowered over the stern about 25 feet down into the water, the data collection was about to begin. The Moore began streaming away at 6.1 knots, the precise speed needed to fire the computer-controlled guns every 22 seconds. As the shots commenced, the returning sound waves triggered the magnetic tape drives in the lab and the students started making entries in the logs, some every few minutes, others hourly.

With a short course in navigation from Patty Ganey, a research associate at the institute in charge of organizing the lab for the cruise, the students took over plotting the ship's course.

By the second round of watches, everyone had settled comfortably into the lab routines. Fine weather and plenty of good food added to the comfort.

"I'm proud of you all for how quickly you caught on," Dr. Buffler said with sincere approval. "The record keeping is very important. It pays off a million times."

DURING THE THREE DAYS of shooting, the Moore covered 400 miles of the Gulf.

The data collected, which some of the students will process later as class projects, will tie together existing multi-channel lines from earlier UT research projects along the slope. The whole thrust of the work at the Institute for Geophysics is toward a better understanding of the geologic history of the Gulf and other areas and the dynamic processes taking place in the earth.

Such knowledge has direct bearing on earthquake studies and is critical in the search for new petroleum reserves.

Most of the students on the training cruise soon will be involved in that search in one way or another. Many have jobs lined up with oil companies.

So was the trip beneficial to them? Had they really learned anything?

"A LOT," was a succinct, but virtually unanimous, response.

"The trip far surpassed my expectations in every way," said one student. "I've been writing my thesis on all this kind of data, but I never knew all the pain they went through to get it."

Energy advisor says there will be no gas shortage

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements' energy adviser says despite what Americans may hear from the press, there should be plenty of gasoline to go around for summer vacation travel.

"It would not suprise me to see the Texas press and the national press start talking about gasoline shortages this summer," Ed Vetter told the Texas Energy and Natural Resources Advisory Council recenly.

Vetter said he had asked the council's staff to put together a report on motor fuel supplies.

"Interestingly enough," he said, "Exxon, Gulf, Mobil, Phillips, Shell, Texaco, Conoco and Chevron, which are the major suppliers of gasoline in the state, are putting their dealers on some kind of allocation.

"The allocation tends to be 100 percent of the contract requirements, and there's no reason to believe that there's going to be any fuel shortage, if everybody does not panic."

Vetter said there is a 30-day supply of gasoline on hand, on a national average. This is relatively low, he said, because the supply in May 1979 — "before trouble arose" — was 32 days.

"However," he said, "there is an enormous amount of crude oil."

He said refineries are running below capacity and could increase production to match a rising demand.

Council members voted Wednesday to oppose any additional domestic energy taxesm, saying if an energy tax is absolutely necessary it should be placed on imported oil.

Texas' top statewide elected officials on the council — Clements, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, Speaker Bill Clayton and Attorney General Mark White — all supported the resolution.

Since the resolution deals with domestic taxes, it would not cover a tax on oil imports, which has been proposed in Congress to reduce the federal budget deficit projected for next year.

Hobby said more energy taxes would increase the disparity between the money Texas sends to Washington and the amount it gets back.

The council was told a $5-per-barrel tax on imported oil would raise $12 billion in 1983.

Although such a tax would increase incentives for domestic oil production and would reduce imports, the council staff said it also would cost consumers up to $30 billion per year and would raise the inflation rate by up to 1 percent and the unemployment rate by as much as 0.3 percent.

Clements said the import tax "is the most likely and the most desirable" of the proposals before Congress.

Those proposals include a barrel tax on imported and domestic oil; an increase in the federal gasoline tax; a tax based on the energy content of fossil fuels and a 30 percent national severance tax on crude oil.

Dan Matheson, director of state-federal relations for Texas in Washington, said Congress was not giving serious consideration to a national severance tax.

Nine governments accused of subsidizing steel exports

By GENE GRABOWSKI

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Commerce Department said Friday that nine foreign governments, including seven Common Market countries, have illegally subsidized steel exports to the United States.

The decision, which is a preliminary ruling on a complaint brought by domestic steelmakers, means U.S. importers of steel products from those countries must post cash or bonds equal to the estimated subsidies.

Those payments, up to $240 a ton in some cases, are designed to ensure that countervailing duties will be paid if a final ruling expected later this year supports the preliminary finding.

"I don't like talking about a trade war, but obviously, we're in a very tense situation," said Viscount Etienne Davignon, vice president of the Common Market.

But Gary Horlick, U.S. deputy assistant secretary for import administration, tried to downplay possible trade repercussions.

"I don't want to make this sound like some kind of war. Both sides are applying their own internal laws," Horlick said at a news conference.

"What we have done here is guarantee to American steelworkers that they don't have to compete against any element of subsidization," Horlick said.

Horlick and Lionel Olmer, undersecretary for international trade, said the subsidies range from less than 1 percent to more than 40 percent of the value of steel products shipped to the United States in 1981.

The ruling was based on about 20 percent of all steel imports, or 3.9 million tons worth $1.4 billion, Olmer said.

The Common Market countries found to have subsidized steel exports to the United States are West Germany, France, Italy, Great Britain, Belgium, The Netherlands and Luxembourg.

The complaint also charged Brazil and South Africa with similar trade law violations.

The U.S. steelmakers charged in January that the Common Market countries are subsidizing 28 categories of steel.

Following Friday's preliminary decision, the department is expected to make a further ruling Aug. 24. The U.S. International Trade Commission, which will make the final decision, will then have until Oct. 8 to issue its finding.

If the commission decides imported steel is not being unfairly subsidized, the collected cash and bonds would be returned and no further ones assessed.

However, if the ITC agrees that domestic steelmakers are being hurt by the subsidies, permanent, retroactive countervailing import duties could then be imposed by the Commerce Department.

Import duties would be designed to bring the price of European steel products up to domestic levels.

In a statement released with the decision, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said the action was necessary to protect the struggling U.S. steel industry.

"The current recession has put severe stress on our steel producers, steelworkers and the communities dependent on steel production. That stress may have been aggravated by subsidized import competition," Baldrige said.

"Today's actions and the economic recovery expected in the second half of this year should help the U.S. steel industry," he added.

David Roderick, chairman of U.S. Steel Corp., said the decision was a step in the right direction, but that it fell short in some of its subsidy estimates.

The Reagan administration has sought to prevent the threatened trade war by negotiating voluntary European quotas. But domestic steelmakers and their allies in Congress demanded stronger action and filed the complaint.

Baldrige said he remains open to negotiating steel import quotas, similar to Japanese auto quotas settled last year. Such a settlement for European steel imports would end the Commerce Department investigation, Baldrige said.

Wall Street responds to budget resolution

By CHET CURRIER

NEW YORK (AP) — Wall Street has given a warm initial response to the apparent resolution of the deadlock in Congress over the federal budget.

But many analysts warn that the news shouldn't be read as a miracle cure for all the woes of the securities markets.

Word late Thursday of a House vote in favor of a budget plan supported by President Reagan helped produce a dramatic turnaround in the stock market. Only two days after a close brush with its lowest level in more than two years, the market staged a sharp rally.

If the arguing over the budget is just about over, however, analysts note that the problem of a gaping deficit between projected government revenues and expenditures has by no means gone away.

"Budget battles aside, investors in stocks have little enough to cheer about," the Value Line Investment Survey observed in its weekly appraisal of the outlook.

"The recession, combined with high interest rates, has cor'orate profits in a squeeze. Weak demand and disinflation have brought revenue growth almost to a halt, while increasing debt burdens and high interest rates mean that more revenues go to lenders rather than to shareholders.

"For the first quarter of 1982, a year-to-year drop of 10 percent or more in net profit was typical for major publicly traded companies. And the next set of reports to shareholders may well bear even grimmer $idings since the second quarter of 1981 was a relatively strong one for profits."

With all that, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials came through what many analysts regarded as an important "test" this past week with a passing grade.

On Wednesday and Thursday, it flirted repeatedly with the 795 level — threatening to eclipse the 1982 closing low of 795.47 it reched on March 8. A decisive break below 795, it was feared, might lead to stepped-up selling by chart-watching traders.

By Friday's close, however, the average had climbed to 809.74, up 4.76 from a week before.

The budget vote was accompanied by several other favorable news developments late in the week — including a cease-fire in Lebanon and fresh evidence of progress in the effort to curb inflation.

This diamond is colorless and internally perfect when viewed under 10-power magnification. That's what D-flawless means.

But the rumors you've been reading lately are full of flaws. Because they suggest that the diamond market has collapsed. That's nonsense.

The reports go that a D-flawless, round-cut diamond of one carat in weight has dropped in value from over $65,000 two years ago to about $20,000 today. That's true.

It happened because there are only a very few stones that meet this exceedingly rare standard of perfection. (Only 38 stones were newly graded D-flawless by the Gemological Institute of America in 1981.) And speculators—both within and outside the industry—simply bid up the price of the few D-flawless stones until it made no sense.

Then the price declined. Not an unusual result when speculation gets out of hand. Speculation in anything.

By the way, this same D-flawless one-carat diamond sold for about $1,625 in 1971. So its value has still stayed well ahead of inflation over the test of time, which is the only true measure of lasting value.

But the major flaw in the unbalanced media headlines of the last 6 to 12 months concerns the market for all the other grades of fine diamonds being sold as diamond jewelry—not the handful of D-flawless stones.

Research shows that 9.6 percent of American married women acquired a new piece of diamond jewelry in 1981. That's 13 percent more than in 1980 and more than twice as many as in 1974. Hardly the picture of a market in distress.

Now may or may not be the time for you to buy a D-flawless one-carat diamond (or some bonds, stocks, or even a few pork bellies). That's a decision for you to make.

But we're totally confident that this is a good time to buy your wife diamond jewelry. Any time is. Try it. And see. What other gift lasts forever?

Unique real estate service deals in million dollar property

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Buyers looking for million dollar property — a Hawaiian penthouse, executive jet, Colorado estate, or a flourishing business — don't usually leaf through pages of classified advertisements in their local newspaper.

Instead, they rely on their business acquaintances and friends for hot tips.

Now, a unique real estate and property exchange service has come to Texas, and to the Permian Basin, which will serve these buyers, and the sellers, more efficiently.

Bo Sharp of Odessa has been named as the sole account executive for Texas by the Million Dollar Property Exchange, a network of buyers and sellers of expensive property.

The MDPE was created in 1981 by Leon Fedderson, a developer and builder in Fort Collins, Colorado, after he had trouble trying to trade a ranch for a jet.

THE FIRST MONTHLY catalog listed $86 million worth of property. Just seven months later, the May issue topped $1 billion.

Recent Texas listings have included a hotel, numerous apartment complexes, an office building, ranches, and an English Tudor estate.

Sharp said she has been talking with area investors about the Million Dollar Property Exchange and feels Texas is an excellent place for the exchange to help buyers and sellers know about each other.

"I thought it would go well here because of the building boom, especially with some of the homes in Midland," said Sharp.

"But it doesn't have to be property like real estate," Sharp said. "You could list a race horse or an oil rig."

THE GOAL OF the MDPE is to make it easier, and more discrete, for people to market exceptional, million dollar properties without the expense of listing them in national publications such as the Wall Street Journal.

When a person joins the group, or gets a seat on the exchange, he may list an unlimited number of properties free of charge.

The property is listed in the Registry, the monthly magazine of MDPE, which is sent to 80,000 selected buyers, as well as members of MDPE.

"Compared with anything you could do on your own, this is the way to go," Sharp said. "Where else could you let 80,000 people know about your property? And all of them are qualified buyers.

"You could list something in the local paper, but how many readers would be really interested?"

IN THE MAY issue, there were listings for properties all over the United States, as well as in Canada, Brazil, Costa Rica, Mexico, and the Caribbean.

In addition to undeveloped land, hotels, shopping centers, mines, apartments and elegant homes, there were more exotic entries listed for investors with particular tastes.

Some examples were: frescoes by Pablo Picasso, gemstones, a private school in California, and a customized Boeing 727.

For the really big spender, there was a $45 million residential development in the Caribbean, and a 20-story office building in downtown Philadelphia.

The Million Dollar Property Exchange is not a realty company in the traditional sense; Sharp doesn't even have a brokers license. Neither she nor any of the 40 MDPE account executives in the country receive any commission on the sale of any property.

WHEN A MEMBER of the exchange reads of an interesting property through the monthly magazine, he makes an inquiry to MDPE, which in turn furnishes him with information on whom to contact.

The buyer contacts the seller directly. Whether a deal is made or not depends solely on the two parties, with no middlemen involved.

To join, a person must either own or control as an agent a property with a market value of at least $250,000; or have a net worth of at least $500,000; or represent capital funding of at least $1 million.

Members may place an unlimited number of properties in the Registry for sale, but they are not obligated to place any.

PROPERTIES are listed in the Registry for one year unless the seller requests they be deleted, in case of a sale or other circumstances.

The publication is also mailed to selected groups of companies or individuals who normally deal in million dollar properties.

Members also receive a confidential weekly hotline of new listings, before they are printed in the Registry, and they may use an optional, discrete listing service where only that information which the buyer wants revealed is printed.

The Registry is a discrete reference work. None of the sellers' names, addresses or phone numbers are published — interested buyers contact the MDPE itself, which in turn furnishes the buyer with information on whom to contact. The buyer is free to pursue the matter as he wishes.

THE MILLION DOLLAR Property Exchange does not receive any commission or fee for a sale, nor does it guarantee that a property will be sold.

What it does promise is that a property will have national, but at the same time, discrete, exposure.

In addition, the MDPE is sponsoring a symposium in Vail, Colorado, in September, 1982, for interested members and their guests.

Mini-seminars will be held at the three-day event, covering investments, economic forecasts, taxation, and strategies for property managers in the 1980s.

Constrution unions fighting standards

By MERRILL HARTSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — The AFL-CIO took legal steps Friday to thwart implementation by the Reagan administration of rules the labor group says "would repeal by administrative fiat" a Depression-era law protecting wage standards for workers on government construction projects.

The federation's Building and Construction Trades Department filed a complaint in U.S. District Court here saying the regulations, due to take effect July 27, violate the 51-year-old Davis-Bacon Act.

Enacted by Congress in 1931 during the Depression to protect people against wage exploitation, the law requires that workers on federal construction projects receive the "prevailing" wage that workers receive for similar jobs in the area where the project is located.

Last month, Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan announced final publication of regulations, which tighten administration of the law.

Donovan said the changes would save the Treasury $670 million a year. The government spent approximately $18.7 billion on federal construction projects in 1981.

The new rules, he said, "would protect the employee, save federal money, reduce contractor paperwork and more accurately reflect the intention of the act."

At a news conference Friday, Robert A. Georgine, president of the 4.1 million-member AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Department, said, "The regulations written by bureaucrats are political decisions against fundamental principles which have been on the books of this nation for a half century."

Terry Yellig, an attorney for the department, which represents 15 building trades unions, said the complaint filed Friday will be followed within two weeks by a petition seeking a preliminary injunction against implementation of the rules.

Georgine maintained that "the regulations are what anti-union elements have long sought without success. And we are going to do eveything within our power, on Capitol Hill, within the present administration, in the courts, in the field and at the ballot box to see that they never become operative."

Of the major AFL-CIO leaders, Georgine has been least critical of President Reagan's policies. The chief executive addressed the building trades legislative conference here in early April.

In a "Dear Bob" letter last fall, Reagan told Georgine he wanted "to assure you and your general presidents that I will continue to support my campaign pledge not to seek repeal of the (Davis-Bacon) act."

Asked whether Reagan had broken that promise, Georgine said, "If they know what they're doing with these new regulations, yes."

War against inflation scores victory as prices rise

By the Associated Press

The war against inflation scored a victory Friday as the government reported that wholesale prices were unchanged in May, further buoying a stock market already jubilant over an apparent end to the federal budget impasse.

However, the upward drive of gasoline prices accelerated as Exxon Co. USA, Chevron USA Inc. and Amoco Oil Co. said they were raising prices by one to two cents a gallon in many parts of the country.

The Labor Department said producer prices on finished goods were the same as they were in April. That meant, the department said, inflation at the wholesale level for the first five months of the year rose at an annual rate of only 0.4 percent.

Energy prices fell for the fifth month in a row to wipe out increases in food prices. Gasoline prices for May were down 5.9 percent.

The sharp recession and worldwide oil glut have been largely responsible for the better results on inflation, according to private analysts.

"Progress on inflation has been nothing short of sensational," said Allen Sinai, senior economist for the consulting firm of Data Resources Inc. in Lexington, Mass.

The oil glut, however, has been working itself off, and demand for gasoline is up. As a result, U.S. gasoline marketers have been raising wholesale prices a few pennies at a time in recent weeks — increases that already are making their way to the pump.

Economists said the inflation report, teamed with a ceasefire in Lebanon and Thursday's House adoption of a Republican-backed budget, boosted the stock market. House and Senate conferees now must work out a compromise between their differing versions of the budget bill.

Stock prices were up across the board in heavy trading. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials gained 11.03 points to 809.74, and stocks gaining in price outnumbered losers by a 4-1 margin on the New York Stock Exchange.

"Any resolution of the budget, whether you like it (the budget) or not, is a positive surprise," said Michael Metz, an analyst with Oppenheimer & Co. "It takes away the uncertainty."

The bond market, however, showed little reaction to the good economic and political news, largely because a key indicator of short-term interest rates was moving higher because of brisk demand for corporate loans to cover federal tax payments due June 15. The rate on federal funds, the overnight loans among banks, rose to 14.25 percent from 14 percent the day before before closing at 13.875 percent.

Just before trading ended, a disappointing Federal Reserve Board report that two measures of the nation's money supply grew in the latest reporting periods sent bond prices lower and interest rates up. As interest rates rise, bond prices fall.

The price of a long-term government bond, which had been up $1.25 for each $1,000 in face value shortly before the figures were released, fell $5 within minutes to wind up off $3.75 for the day. The rate on a six-month Treasury bill rose about one-fifth of a percentage point to 12.41 percent.

The Fed said M1, a measure of funds readily available for spending, rose $1.5 billion to a seasonally adjusted $452.8 billion in the week ended June 2. It said a broader money supply measure, known as M2 and adding such funds as savings account deposits and money market funds to M1, averaged $1.8947 trillion in May, up $14.9 billion from April.

Economists say even a compromise on a budget deficit in the range of $100 billion sought by many congressmen will mean continued brisk borrowing on the part of the Treasury Department to pay the government's bills.

PROBLEM:
How to fill the diverse office needs of seven division heads.

SOLUTION:
Heritage Center . . . and HBF.

"We needed a first-class, quality developer, and management we could depend on. In Midland, that means HBF.

"Our quarters at Heritage Center are built with an emphasis on quality. You can see it in the striking design, the top-flight materials, the attention to detail. And there's more than enough parking provided adjacent to the Center.

"But the best part for us: We've got the confidence that comes with officing in an HBF building, developed and managed by Midland's most experienced professionals. All this at a leasing rate that's well within our budget! Heritage Center and HBF—two of the best business decisions we've made."

Are you one of the people in our area who should speculate in commodity futures?

The opportunities for profit are enormous. So are the risks. For example: during 1981, December 1981 cotton futures ranged from 86.00 down to 60.00 cents per pound. Potential profit of this range: approximately $12,500 per futures contract. (The margin required was 2,000 per contract.)

To qualify, you need substantial risk capital, and plenty of self-control. That's why Merrill Lynch recommends that you have a net worth of over $100,000, and at least $10,000 in risk capital before you invest in commodity futures.

We'll tell you more about it at a special Merrill Lynch Seminar we've arranged for people who meet these qualifications.

The atmosphere is informal. You'll personally participate in a frank (and no doubt lively) discussion. We'll give you food for thought and facts for action. For example, you'll learn:

- How you can make money on only 30 percent of your trades—and still come out ahead.
- 3 important trading techniques.
- 12 guidelines that can help make you a better speculator.

And there's much more. Our simple learning technique will help you soak up more on this complex subject than you ever thought you could in one setting.

You'll get a Speculator's Information Kit to take home and study. Kit includes: Commodity Speculator's Manual, our latest situation reports with quick trading Fact Sheets, and more.

Before you begin trading, you'll need facts. So don't miss our Seminar. It's free, but please reserve your seats now.

Col. Drake's backyard gets gasser

THE WOODLANDS (SWN) — In the rolling farm country of Northwest Pennsylvania, Texas-based Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. has hit pay dirt on each of the 50 wells drilled since operations began there in late 1980.

This is the same area where Col. Edwin Drake's successful well in 1859 gave birth to the petroleum industry. Drake discovered oil; by contrast, Mitchell is finding natural gas in "tight rock" formations so dense that concrete is porous in comparison.

Production potential tests conducted on each of the completed Mitchell wells average 850 thousand cubic feet of gas per day — not a gusher by petroleum industry standards, but significant, since "tight" gas sells for $5.28 per thousand cubic feet. That's double the rate permitted for most natural gas production.

The government allows higher prices on "tight" gas because it is difficult and expensive to produce. Mitchell Energy is no stranger to "tight" formations, which must be fractured, or cracked, in order to release the hydrocarbons inside.

"We've accumulated a lot of valuable experience in hydraulic frac-turing," says F. D. Covey, president of Mitchell's Exploration and Production Division. "In the Limestone County area of Central Texas, fracturing and the additional wells we've drilled as a result of our success with this technique have boosted ultimate recoverable gas reserves from some six billion cubic feet to more than 150 billion cubic feet. We're employing the same technology on our Pennsylvania wells."

The relatively shallow gas wells are in a geological formation known as the Clinton-Medina sand trend, which runs through eastern Ohio, western Pennsylvania and western New York. Mitchell has about 350,000 acres of leaseholdings in the trend.

"The area looks very promising," says Covey, "and we have the technological know-how to get the most out of it."

Covey says Mitchell expects to drill nearly 100 wells in the Clinton-Medina trend during the company's current fiscal year, which ends January 31, 1983. About 60 of these wells will be in northwestern Pennsylvania, where the company is building a gas gathering system and has already brought several wells into production.

Moran reports results on discovery

HOUSTON (SWN) — Moran Energy Inc. said its previously announced natural gas discovery well, the Burton Number 1 in Calcasieu Parish, La., has been completed.

The well, which has 80 net feet of Hackberry sand, initially tested at a rate of 10.5 million cubic feet of gas and 682 barrels of condensate per day from perforations between 14,591 and 14,626 feet, through a 1/4 inch choke, with 8,975 pounds per square inch of flowing tubing pressure.

The company anticipates that natural gas produced from the well will initially be eligible to be sold at the maximum price allowed by Section 102 of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, which is presently about $3.30 per thousand cubic feet.

Rowan to participate in program

HOUSTON (SWN) — C. R. Palmer, chairman and president of Rowan Companies, Inc., announced the entry into an agreement with Walter Oil & Gas Corporation to participate in a diversified three-year exploration program with 19 present prospects scheduled for drilling in Texas and Louisiana. Rowan's annual expenditure will be approximately $4 million for its one-third of 7/8th interest.

Joseph C. Walter, Jr., former chairman of the board of Houston Oil and Minerals Corporation, is president of the newly formed Walter Oil & Gas Corporation which serves as the managing partner for the group. Of three wells presently drilling, two deep tests are in Lafourche Parish, La. and the third test well is offshore Texas near Mustang Island.

Rowan is also presently participating with Halbouty Energy Co. in three wells in Live Oak County, Texas and six deep tests in Oklahoma including five wells in the Fletcher Area in which Rowan also owns an additional individual interest. These wells are included in the broad-based, three-year exploratory program in which the company engages with Halbouty Energy Co. and Texaco.

Palmer said, "Over the next three years, our total expenditure on these exploratory ventures is estimated to be $50 million. As pre-viously announced, Rowan's strategy is to continue primarily as an offshore drilling contractor, but the current industry situation is such that there are unusual exploration opportunities for investors with financial resources and the courage to act. With a total of 12 rigs now drilling on prospects in which Rowan has an interest, our decision to act is apparent".

Louisiana company opens Odessa office

ODESSA — D & Carter Leasing, a Louisiana-based company which leases complete oilfield drilling camps and water systems, has opened a regional sales office in Odessa. Bruce Shapiro is local manager.

The office will market modular quarters for drilling crews, galleys, mud labs, consultant-operator's offices and related facilities throughout the exploration and production industry in the area.

D & Carter has offices in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Mississippi and does business throughout the South. Shapiro explains that the rising cost of interest, maintenance, transport and storage plus the tax advantages of leasing have made outright purchase of drilling camp facilities for producers and operators cost prohibitive. D & Carter provides short and long-term leasing of such facilities in addition to assuming all responsibility for transport, set-up, repair and moving when the well is completed.

Telephone number of the Odessa office is (915) 381-8730. The office is located at 5824 West Highway 80. Shapiro says a color brochure describing the company's services is available from that office.

Salary study needed

Members of Congress are rushing to repeal a politically explosive tax break they voted themselves last year. But what are they rushing to put in the place of that $75-a-day tax deduction that caused such a public outcry?

Both houses are on record as favoring repeal of the tax deduction that would have been worth more than $19,000 a year to most congressmen. That's wise in light of the fact that the offices of many congressmen were flooded with protest letters following the disclosure of the controversial deduction. Internal Revenue Service, too, received more than 34,000 letters protesting the action.

If the congressmen do choose to wipe out the deduction and reinstate the $3,000 annual writeoff previously allowed for Washington living, there will be no problem. But there's little chance they'll do that.

The word is that it's costly to live in Washington and, like it or not, that's where member of Congress spend most of their time. The folks back home, outside of an occasional trip to the nation's capital to view the White House, Washington Monument and so forth, just get the bills ... and pay them.

For the most part, the nation's taxpayers don't gripe about this system. We may not particularly like paying taxes, but we understand the necessity for it. The taxpayers do, however, expect a degree of frugality on the part of elected representatives. We do not want to keep our government's officials on a starvation budget, but neither do we want to give them a blank check.

The "sneaky" manner in which the $75-a—day tax deduction was approved, in the House at least, (as a rider to a black-lung bill) didn't help the public image of congressmen, either. Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., who has led the House fight to wipe out the tax break, noted, "All this body has is its honor and its integrity."

While there is no doubt that the $75-a-day tax break should be repealed, there is evidence that some allowance above and beyond the $3,000 annual deduction for Washington living expenses may be in line. The taxpayers, of course, are simply not going to go along with giving congressmen a blank check.

It's time for the entire matter of congressional pay to be reviewed, a new salary structure drawn up and the appropriate legislation enacted. It should be done quickly, fairly and totally above board.

We'll all probably complain about it, but that's our right as taxpayers. At least Congress' honor and integrity won't come into question.

A national heartbreak

An Associated Press story published recently told about a boy, perhaps 13 or even as old as 17, who was killed in Durango, Colo.

The youth was attempting to cross the highway in misty rain. He ran into a pickup truck. He was thrown back against the curb, dying there.

The Durango police worked diligently, following meager leads, to identify him. Results added to zero. The town took up a collection and purchased a gravestone. It reads, "Durango's Unknown Traveler."

The boy who died in Durango was one of 1.8 million children who disappear each year in the United States. Most all are found quickly and returned to their homes, but 50,000 a year remain unaccounted for.

That is a heavy statistic loaded with lingering heartbreak for thousands of families. And it seems most unnecessary. In this age of computers and sophisticated investigative procedures it would seem we could do a much better job of keeping track of our children.

One answer may lie in the Federal Bureau of Investigation files. The bureau's Crime Information Center computers hold 9.6 million records, but less than three-tenths of 1 percent of the center's capacity is used for missing person statistics. The FBI has no separate category for missing children.

At the present time, Congress has a bill which would authorize the FBI to compile information and help local, state and federal officials search for missing children and to identify unclaimed bodies. The measure has the support of the American Bar Association and the National Association of Police Chiefs.

Such an identification system is bound to be expensive, and that is one of the reasons the bill is opposed at this time by the Justice Department. We can understand the difficulty of approving this sort of program at a time when the whole federal system is budget cutting.

We believe, however, an information data bank on missing children is vital and should get a high priority when the economic picture is healthier.

Another View:

A question of arms

The United States has been selling huge amounts of sophisticated weapons to Arab countries that have the oil wealth or the oil-wealthy friends to pay easily for them. Meanwhile, Israel has found it harder and harder to afford its qualitative military edge. Therein lies the dilemma that came to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee the other day.

In 1983, Israel will have to pay the United States $910 million for past arms purchases. Some $785 million of that will be covered by economic aid. To close that $125 million gap — it will be more in 1984 and 1985 — Sen. Alan Cranston urged the United States to establish the principle that new aid at least match the debt repayment.

This measure, if enacted, would relieve Israel of a large burden. But it would be an unacceptable precedent: it would put Israel alone in a category where, as Sen. Charles Mathias put it, "There would be no limit to the amount of debt Israel could absorb, because someone else is servicing the debt." One does not have to suspect the Israelis of the slightest sinister intent in order to recognize the great pressures on them to keep building up their arsenal. But Israel is already the largest recipient of American aid — the yearly total approaches $3 billion.

Cranston asserts that the United States is morally bound to offset those arms it sells to Arabs formally at war with Israel. That this country has been careless in furnishing arms in the area is undeniable. But it has been even more careless in not relating arms sales to the contribution of Mideast nations to a full regional peace settlement. The danger to Israel does not arise simply from the fact that nearby countries are heavily armed. It arises from a political dispute — the Israeli-Palestinian dispute — for whose prolonging Israel bears its share of the responsibility.

In the past, Israel may have benefited in a narrow sense from the American practice of distributing arms across the Middle East with only secondary concern for the peace process. In conditions of abundant American sales to rich Arab states, however, Israel fears it may lose its advantage, unless there is an extraordinary new American financial commitment.

Secretary of State Haig took up the Arab-Israeli issue in his Mideast policy speech Wednesday night in Chicago. Regrettably, he did not address the arms question. More regrettably, he indicated that the administration is still not ready to give the Palestinian question the priority that American interests require.

ART BUCHWALD

Art Buchwald

What you see on TV is directed by frantic men in television trucks parked next to buildings out of camera range, who scream at other men and women, pushing buttons and drinking black coffee.

"I want a shot of Reagan pulling out Thatcher's chair as they sit down at the dinner. Why is Mitterrand pulling out Thatcher's chair? The script here says Reagan is supposed to pull out the Brit's chair. Okay stay on Mitterrand until Thatcher is seated. Then we go to Ronnie-baby. Charlie, get the shot of Schmidt whispering in Ronnie's ear. Charlie, what are you doing on Trudeau? I told you we only go to Trudeau if he spills soup on himself.

"Who's sitting next to the Japanese guy? The Italian premier? Anybody know his name? Anybody know the Japanese guy's name. Never mind, it's too late to super their names in. Harry, get the waiter pouring wine in Ronnie's glass. Ralph, I want a closeup of the guy passing Mitterrand a note. Camera one, that isn't Mitterrand, that's the German. I thought we went over their photos in rehearsal.

"Camera four, let's get a shot of the chandeliers. Camera number two, are you picking up Thatcher drinking her soup? Slurp, slurp. Okay, that's enough. Gimme a shot of the Japanese guy putting butter on his bread. Anybody find out his name yet? Harry, pan to the paintings on the wall. Ralph, stay on Reagan. He looks like he's going to tell a joke. When he finishes, I want a tight shot of Schmidt, to see if he laughs. After the joke we go back to Mitterrand. Who put that camera on Trudeau? If you don't know what to do shoot the violinists.

"No one is talking to the Japanese guy. Give me a long shot of everyone ignoring him. Damn it, the Italian guy is now talking to him. No, I don't want the Italian guy talking to him. Camera one, I think Thatcher is scolding Ronnie. When she finishes, let's get Ronnie's reaction, and then swing over to the kitchen door. It says here the fish course is next and the waiters are supposed to march out and show it to Mitterrand before they serve it. I love show business!

"Let's get the outside of Versailles. No, Tommy, the fireworks don't start until after the toasts. You have at least an hour and a half. Just give me some wide stuff of the building. Okay, now go to the police guarding the palace. Are there any crowds at the gates? Ten people? I'll take them. Close in so it looks like a mob.

"Camera number one, stay on Schmidt. And, camera number two, stay on the Italian. Anybody find out his name yet? Well, have New York call the Italian Embassy in Washington. Okay, number three, we might as well go to Trudeau. Trudeau, dummy, not Mitterrand. I know they both don't have much hair, but Mitterrand is the heavy-set guy, and Trudeau is the thin one. You've got it. Beautiful. Wait a minute. Forget Trudeau. No one is talking to the Japanese guy again. Camera number one, you've got him. He doesn't seem to be eating his fish. Beautiful. Give me a shot of the plate. Now go back to his face. Slowly, slowly. Pan to everyone ignoring him. I like it. I like it.

"What's that, Harry? Ronnie's telling another joke. No, forget it. We have enough of Ronnie telling jokes. Stay on him just in case he says something serious. Thatcher seems to be scolding Mitterrand. Give me a two-shot of her lips moving, and the Frenchie tugging on his collar.

"Here comes the meat. Everyone on their toes in case somebody dumps a platter on a head of state. Don't get tired, guys. We still have salad, cheese and dessert to go. Give me some long shots of the hall again. Camera number one, I'd like to see candles. I said candles, number one — you're giving me Trudeau...

"Okay, guys, here comes the champagne. We're going to pick up the sound for the toasts... Hello, New York, New York, this is Gus in the truck at Versailles. Yeh, I got the whole dinner and I'll have the toasts and fireworks wrapped up in a half-hour. It should be good for one minute and 40 seconds on the evening news. I can't cut it to one minute and 15 seconds. It will mean losing every chandelier shot I've got."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Decade later, Watergate mysteries remain

WASHINGTON — As the tenth anniversary of the Watergate break-in approaches this week, three mysteries of the celebrated coverup remain publicly unresolved.

Jack Anderson

One is the identity of "Deep Throat," the source who leaked the first Watergate stories to the Washington Post's Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein. Sources close to the investigation say they recognized the specifics that appeared in these stories. The information could only have come, they say, from a source inside the FBI's Washington field office. But Woodward and Bernstein still aren't talking.

Another mystery is the identity of the person who erased 18-and-a-half minutes from the tape of Richard Nixon's conversation with H.R. Haldeman a few days after the break-in. The same investigators, after examining all the available leads, say the circumstantial evidence points to Nixon himself. But there is no proof.

The third mystery involves the first, all-but-forgotten congressional investigation of Watergate in the summer and fall of 1972. How and why was this investigation, by the late Rep. Wright Patman, D-Texas, strangled in its crib?

I can now clear up this mystery, as an anniversary observance of the greatest political scandal in American history. Nixon pulled out all the stops to derail the Patman investigation. He enlisted the help of Gerald Ford, then a Michigan congressman. On a lower level, Nixon aides tried to smear Patman by making his totally aboveboard association with a Greek resistance leader, Elias Demetracopoulos, seem somehow sinister. Here's the story:

Wright Patman, an amiable populist from southeast Texas who was chairman of the House Banking Committee, realized that money was the trail that would lead to solution of the Watergate scandal. Within five days of the Watergate burglars' arrest, Patman's people were tracing the numbered $100 bills found on the burglars through Mexico. They identified the Nixon re-election committee as the source of $89,000 in checks found in Watergate burglar Bernard Barker's Florida bank account.

By August 1972, Patman's staff was already preparing a preliminary report that alleged the involvement of the committee's treasurer, Maurice Stans, in the Mexican money-laundering scheme. The staff was also checking into the suspiciously swift approval of a federal bank charter for Dwayne Andreas, one of the Nixon campaign contributors whose money had wound up in Barker's bank account.

Clearly, Patman and his investigators were hot on the Watergate trail. But Patman needed the power to subpoena witnesses and documents. His staff prepared a lengthy list of individuals to be subpoenaed — a veritable Who's Who of Watergate figures.

The president's men realized that the Patman committee investigation was a loose cannon that might sink Nixon's re-election chances. Patman must somehow be denied his subpoena power. The way to do this, they agreed, was to persuade the Banking Committee members to vote against their chairman.

"Jerry has really got to take the lead on this," Nixon was later heard saying on the White House tapes. The reference was to Jerry Ford, who was entrusted to rally the Republicans against Patman.

Then Nixon's operatives went to work on the Democrats, who received quiet warnings that the administration was going over their campaign finances with a magnifying glass and would expose any violation of the election laws, however trivial or technical.

Finally, the Nixon aides set out to smear Patman himself. The vehicle they chose for this one was "the Greek connection."

In 1971, the fact was leaked to the press that Patman had been paid $1,500 for a Wall Street speaking engagement arranged by Greek exile leader Elias Demetrocopoulos. Neither the speech nor the payment was any secret. But by identifying Demetracopoulos as a dangerous foreign agent to Patman's colleagues a year later, the White House aides gave sinister overtones to the incident.

The intrepid Demetracopoulos, an editor who fled Greece when the military junta seized power in 1967, had long been a thorn in Nixon's side. He had repeatedly criticized the Nixon administration for its close ties to the Greek junta. He also charged that CIA funds had been funneled to the Greek intelligence service and then, through Nixon bankroller Thomas Pappas, back into the 1968 Nixon-Agnew campaign.

In return, Demetracopoulos was repeatedly smeared as a communist agent by the Nixon administration. One secret cable was circulated from pro-junta U.S. Ambassador Henry Tasca in Athens, charging that the Greek exile was the head of a "well-organized conspiracy" and was being paid by a foreign power.

None of this was true; on the contrary, Demetracopoulos had fought against the communists. But copies of the Tasca cable — sent to then-Attorney General John Mitchell — were shown to Banking Committee members, along with evidence that Demetracopoulos had arranged for Patman's speaking fee and expenses. "Patman himself told me this," Demetracopoulos told my associate John Dillon.

The effect was to cast a shadow over Patman and demonstrate instructively the lengths to which the White House would go in vilifying individual congressmen. Six Democrats jumped the fence and voted with the Republicans against authorizing the subpoenaes. It was enough to kill the Patman investigation and delay the demolition of the Watergate stonewall for nearly two years.

GEORGE F. WILL

West should support Lebanon's Christians

WASHINGTON — One Sunday last October, a PLO brigade with tanks and artillery staged a mock attack on a Lebanese settlement resembling a fortified Israeli village on the West Bank. This training exercise was evidence of the accelerating evolution of the Palestine Liberation Organization in southern Lebanon into a quasi-state with a conventional army of 15,000, and logistical support from 23,000 Syrians.

George F. Will

The PLO benefited from U.S. diplomacy last spring when Syria put missiles in Lebanon. Only a patch of bad weather prevented Israel from promptly destroying them.

Such a shot across the bow of the PLO and Syrian occupation forces in Lebanon might have slowed the slide toward today's crisis. But by the time the weather cleared, President Reagan had sent an entreating letter, soon followed by a special ambassador, to paralyze Israel. Did the Reagan administration expect to talk the PLO into tranquillity? Perhaps the administration's Saudi Arabia enthusiasts expected Saudi "leverage" on the PLO —leverage supposedly resulting from Saudi financial support — to be used for moderation. But Saudi payments to the PLO are protection payments from the timid to the ruthless.

Israel repeatedly told U.S. officials it could not tolerate on its border a quasi-state that is terrorist in morality and form. Today Israel's primary aim is more ambitious — an aim that serves U.S. interests — than the stated aim of pushing PLO artillery too far north to hit Galilee. It is to drive 15,000 PLO members off the land they have usurped for bases and training. The PLO, a state without a nation, would become an army without an infrastructure. This would leave them with no place to go, and a powerful incentive to melt away.

Israelis believe that any PLO attempt to relocate in northern Lebanon would kindle a salutary Lebanese nationalism, sparked by resentment of PLO and Syrian occupation.

The existing Palestinian state is Jordan. It has a Palestinian majority, and a majority of all Palestinians hold Jordanian citizenship. But it will not receive the PLO. Jordan could have established a separate Palestinian state on the West Bank during the 19 years it held that land. Jordan never considered it. And in "Black September," 1970, Jordan expelled the PLO, bloodily.

Might Syria's rhetorical solidarity with the PLO extend to allowing the PLO to locate in Syria? Not likely. Syria has engaged Israel's forces to protect its own forces, not to aid the stricken PLO.

The disorganization and demoralization of a dispersed PLO should diminish the terrorist organization's diplomatic weight in the world's capitals. It also might reduce PLO intimidation that has impeded West Bank accommodation.

Only the Soviet Union has an interest in a strong PLO. But many European governments, and elements of the U.S. foreign policy establishment, have invested a lot of ingenuity in rationalizing appeasement of the PLO. They have treated the PLO as a state governing a diaspora, and the sole legitimate representative of Palestinians. Israel's eviction of the PLO has been made especially necessary by Western diplomacy that has sanitized the terrorist organization, and thus emboldened it.

If Israel succeeds in creating a political vacuum in the portion of Lebanon the PLO controlled, the urgent task, for others as well as Israel, will be to fill the vacuum. There are three basic options. Two seem improbable, the third presupposes a rationality and coherence rare among indigenous Lebanese forces.

One option is for the United Nations to expand its peacekeeping presence. But the United Nations, a plaything of its anti-Israel majority, is not apt to adopt a plan so compatible with Israel's purposes.

A second option is a peacekeeping machinery constructed outside U.N. auspices. But who will do it? France has historic ties to Lebanon, but is not apt to initiate a solution. No first or third volunteers spring to mind.

The third option is to stitch together a fabric of Lebanese sovereignty. Nation-building is a dicey business at the best of times. It is staggeringly so when the society is as invertebrate as Lebanon's is now. But the place to begin is with the central government, such as it is, and the Christians, the most cohesive indigenous force. The Christians have an ideology, a political party and considerable military command.

The splotchy map of Lebanon — a Jackson Pollock canvas of PLO and Syrian units — must have told Israel's experienced soldiers that they could not operate against PLO units without engaging Syrian units. Evicting both would serve Israel's purpose by enabling northern and southern Christian elements to join. As has been said, the West should support Lebanon's Christians, or the West should change its name.

SPEAKING OUT

Some city problems are citizen problems

By WARREN CLOYD

Warren Cloyd, a code enforcement officer for the City of Midland, has lived in the Tall City 14 years. He attended York College in York, Neb., for two years.

In the past, I, like most of you, have had some doubts and reservations about our local governing bodies and the way they have handled the growth and expansion of our "Fair City."

Working at City Hall these past few months has given me a new perspective and insight to some of the problems faced on the daily basis by city employees. For the most part, it's a thankless task. Most of the people I talk to are either mad at the city for one reason or another, or they are mad at their neighbors for some violation. Very few people call up to say, "Hey, thanks for a job well done." But, that's OK with me. My paycheck stays the same either way.

I would like to express my appreciation to the mayor, City Council and all city employees for the job they are doing during this period of rapid growth, under less than ideal conditions.

Lately I have read in this paper where people have aired their opinions about everything from our traffic problems to the lack of interest in the south side of town. I would like to offer my personal opinions on some of these observations that others have complained about.

These observations and remarks are mine and do not reflect the views or opinions of any other person or persons associated with City Hall.

OBSERVATION: The south side of town is a mess and a poor example of our city to be seen by travelers, and the city doesn't care enough to do anything about it.

IN MY OPINION: The people who live there must want it that way! No one can make you leave a junk car or truck in your yard, and no one can make you grow a weedy lot on a vacant piece of property, and no one can make you dump your trash and garbage on these vacant lots. I know some of the people south of "the tracks" must care about how their property looks, because they keep neat houses, mowed yards and clean alleys and lots. The city shouldn't have to tell anyone to clean up their own property; it should be a matter of pride, and by no means are these problems limited to the south side of town. You can find problems on virtually every block in town.

OBSERVATION: Midland's traffic flow is poorly designed and confusing at best, and there is usually a reference made to "drunk Indians" having laid out our traffic patterns.

IN MY OPINION: A lot of Midland's traffic flow would be enhanced if we (I'm guilty too) would practice good driving habits and observe some common courtesies. I am totally amazed at the number of people who don't know or can't remember that you can make a right turn on red, after stopping. Also, it is a daily occurence to see someone make a mad dash straight ahead from a "right-turn-only" lane on one of our new one-way streets. This causes all of the legal straight-ahead traffic to slow or stop to let the "mad dasher" into the proper lane. There are also a lot of people who evidently can't read, that look straight at a large sign which reads, "NO LEFT TURN" and make a left turn anyway. It's no wonder our traffic flow isn't working, we won't let it.

As for confusing, I'm going to have to give you that one. I find the new signs with the red slash marks a bit confusing too. It isn't easy to decifer signs that tell you what to do, as well as what you can't do, when you're doing 30 mph and have a string of cars behind you ready to blast you into oblivion at the slightest hesitation on your part. It would also be a great help if all the traffic signals in town were standarized with the left turn arrows either before or after green, but not both and in some cases, there is a left turn arrow at certain times of the day, and none at other times. Now that's confusng.

OBSERVATION: The city is insensitive to my problems and slow to act on violations reported by the public.

IN MY OPINION: People in general are two-faced when it comes to dealing with code violations. On one hand, if they are complaining, they want action right now, and no questions asked. If they are on the receiving end of a complaint, they often feel the 10 to 15 days allowed for correction isn't ample enough, or that the city has no right to tell them what to do on or with their property. City ordinances were set up for the good of all people, and what's fair for the complainant is fair for the complainee.

OBSERVATION: Building permits are unneccesary. I can build anywhere with anything as long as it stays on my property.

IN MY OPINION: It's a lot cheaper to obtain permits and find out about restrictions in your area before starting construction, than to have to tear something down because it doesn't meet standard building codes or violates some aspect of the city codes. It's also a lot safer for you, your family and your neighbors.

OBSERVATION: Some people think they are not paying to have their vacant lots mowed or cleaned if the city can't find out who owns the lot or where to send the notice.

IN MY OPINION: The city may not be able to find out who owns a particular piece of property, and you may not bear the full cost of cleaning the lots, but if the city has to clean it for you, with city employees and city equipment, then you are in a round-about way paying for it through your taxes, and so are your neighbors.

Some of the lots in Midland have been let go for so long that the mesquites are now too tall for mowing, and when they get tall enough to hide trash, they become dumping grounds for all manner of debris, and breeding grounds for insects and rodents and snakes. These must be controlled by the city and you must pay for it with your taxes.

While I'm on the subject of not being able to find people, it was brought to my attention that there is a city ordinance on house numbers being displayed. This seems trivial to some, but not to those who need the assistance of either the fire department, police department or ambulance service. Having a clearly marked residence or business number that's easy to read from the street could make the difference between help arriving in time, or too late.

As a concerned citizen of Midland, I would like to make the following suggestion: Do your part to keep your neighborhood a clean, decent, safe place to raise our kids.

Well, that's my two-cents worth on the subject, and even with today's rate of inflation that's probably all they're worth. Help keep Midland a CLEAN, decent place to live. Everyone will benefit from your individual efforts.

Similarities, dissimilarities carry their own messages

Those critical sorts always like to put you down, boost themselves and say, sans wisdom, "Don't compare apples with oranges" when they really didn't get the crux of your analogy. Let them eat their own fruit.

Well, why not compare dissimilarities? It'll give Edwin Newman an idea for another book on the waning preciseness of the English language. And it'll give you something to find fault with or with which to fault.

The tendency is to see another's fault before confronting your own and before finding out that your fault wasn't really a fault but an oversight. Beg your pardon.

Compare a Chevrolet to a Rolls-Royce if you wish; the concepts of the two cars essentially are the same, but the auras are vastly different. Either will get you from one place to another, but in different styles.

Compare an eagle to a sparrow; they both fly, but the image of the former graces gold and silver coins and a bank.

Compare a Learjet to a hang-glider but don't confuse their stall speeds. Both fly but on different planes.

Would you compare wood screws to metal screws? Maybe, but only if you were comparing similarities and dissimilarities.

Have you ever slipped and compared one wife (or husband) with another or with the ex? That's a mistake. You can forget about the rhetoric and plan on working out an armistice.

Considering how equal and dissimilar some basic things are, would you compared Jack to Jill or Jill with Jack?

Would you compare apples to oranges or apples with oranges?

Maybe the critic has something to say about the fruit principle. Nevertheless, forget about the comparisons and ferret out the virtues.

Jail compliance sort of comes, goes

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — After years of urging, threatening, cajoling and litigating, the Texas Jail Standards Commission can report that nearly all of Texas' county jails are in compliance with state standards — or are on the way to complying.

It also reports that many of those jails won't be able to stay in compliance.

Commission Director Robert O. Viterna reports a check of Texas' 254 counties shows 134 have jails which are in compliance, with 65 "in the process of construction or renovation work that will put them in compliance also."

Ten jails are closed and 29 "are somewhere in between," he says.

"I expect," Viterna comments, "that sooner or later every jail in the state will have been in compliance.

"That's the other side of the coin," he adds, noting that 12 jails have become out of compliance due to overcrowding.

"I think that this is a fact that we're probably going to have to live with for as long as the next five years," he says.

The reasons for that overcrowding appear fairly obvious — but the solutions aren't.

Texas has an increasing population, and judges and juries seem to be handing out longer sentences.

And the Texas Department of Corrections has reached the saturation point on inmates it can accept due to federal orders — which has limited the number of prisoners which counties may transfer to TDC.

For many years, the Jail Standards Commission has fought with county officials over its standards, with effort being made in 1979 to abolish the commission, partly because of complaints from county officials that the commission's standards were too severe.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

The commission was created in 1975 and two years later it reported that only five jails in Texas met the minimum standards which had been in existence since 1958.

Those standards were incorporated into the law creating the commission.

The commission argued, in response to complaints by county officials, that it was simply trying to enforce what the law was and had been.

It also told counties some three years ago that it had been trying to ease them into compliance, but that it had been criticized by the Legislature for not pushing the counties hard enough.

The Legislature, Viterna told the counties, wanted jails "to comply with minimum standards of safety, cleanliness and security."

And, he said, "it wants its laws enforced."

Today, Viterna says, county officials "are all aware of what the standards are" and have been trying to meet them.

"It's this unexpected overcrowding that's going to be hurting all the jails in the future," he says.

First, he notes, there usually must be a bond issue, then an architect must be hired to design the jail, then land acquired, and bids received and examined, and then construction. And, he adds, getting past the bond issue phase isn't easy because paying for jails isn't particularly poplular with the voters.

Meanwhile, the commission continues under attack from some quarters as not having done enough to get county jails into compliance.

The Texas Civil Liberties Union has been pursuing legal action against the commission, saying it's been too lenient with the counties.

A hearing was held earlier this spring on whether the lawsuit would become a class action case, Viterna says, but no ruling has been made on that.

Counties are hunting for ways to solve their overcrowding problems, however.

Midland County, for example, is proposing a stockade for low-risk prisoners, Viterna notes. The commission will consider that proposal at its June 23 meeting.

"We have agreed to look at it," Viterna says, "to see if it is consistent with our guidelines."

Such a facility, he says, "would have to be safe, secure and sanitary," and meet various requirements for such items as drinking fountains, showers, fire-resistant construction, etc.

"It depends on how Midland County develops the concept and what they come in with," Viterna says. The commission, he adds, is interested in helping counties solve their problems — not in creating problems for them.

And it looks as if the counties will need all the help they can get to solve the problems they have.

Readers are invited to submit letters to be considered for publication. They may be on any subject, but should not be slanderous or defamatory. They must be signed by the writer and must include the writer's correct mailing address and a telephone number at which the writer may be contacted during the day, either home or office.

No letter will be published anonymously and names will appear. Addresses and phone numbers are for verification only and will not be published.

Writers should be as concise as possible and the right to condense letters is reserved. They will be published as soon as possible after being received.

They should be addressed to: Letters to the Editor, The Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702 or brought to the newspaper's editorial department.

And what if...

To The Editor:

Now our paper is really getting ahead. We have the Editorial Page for the Editor's Say and the "Letters to the Editor" where they can tell "all about it," and we have "Speaking Out" for the long-winded, and we have "Focus" for the "I told your so" and weekly we have the view from the top dog on Sunday. But we need one more. Call it the "What If" paragraph.

So I offer the following beginner for "What If" paragraph.

What if the street boss would get his crew out at 11 p.m. with sweeper ready and paint machine ready and good bright colored paint ready and begin at low traffic flow midnight to paint traffic lanes on Florida-Industrial-Missouri-Wall-Texas-Illinois-Michigan-Louisiana-Cuthbert-Golf Course-Scharbauer-Neely-Wadley?

Then paint on Lamesa-Main-Colorado-Loraine-Marienfeld-A-Garfield-Andrews-Midkiff-Thomason-Midland Drive so that us old folks and the "high" young ones can tell which traffic lane we are driving. It would be nice! That's what if.

Dismiss the crew at 7 a.m. with double pay until the work is completed.

The deep six

To The Editor:

In the Navy we called burial at sea "The Deep Six." Anything unwanted was given the deep six, just throw it overboard.

But what should we call it when truth is buried by media and government?

Each June the heroes of a day of treachery and times of perfidy gather for their annual reunion. Those still living who survived the assault by Israeli jets and torpedo boats on the USS Liberty gather in Washington, D.C., and are ignored both by the media and our representatives who don't have the intestinal fortitude to defy Zionist influence and demand a full and open investigation of the disgraceful incident and cover-up.

Honorable men are waiting in vain while officialdom considers pension and compensation checks adequate "hush money." Truth in the District of Corruption is buried as effectively as if the sea had closed over it.

Concerned women

To The Editor:

Achieving far from equal time or coverage in this paper or media in general, I wish to comment on last week's pro-ERA letter. You can hardly judge the entire "stop-ERA" group (millions of women around the country and clearly a democratic majority, if a true polling could be done) on the basis of a handful who ate lunch in front of the few poor, pitiful women who insist on beating a dead horse and think we'll feel sorry for such a militant handful and grant them the masked-as-freedom ERA.

What the media hasn't covered is that thousands (not a handful as a last ditch effort) of Christian women under the heading of Concerned Women for America have been fasting and praying once a week at least for months for the defeat of the ERA!

I demanded no pity or inflated attention, just a quiet protest that has won at last! And if you really wonder why ERA is dead, research it in depth with an open mind and you'll find out.

Handle with care

To The Editor:

With 72 hours notice I went to the City Council meeting this week to argue on behalf of my neighbors to prevent the city from making Michigan Street a one-way thoroughfare. Some of my neighbors who are long-time Michigan Street residents didn't want to come to the meeting. They said to oppose the council would be in vain because they do what they want to. They were right.

Time spent on my presentation was wasted as logic and historical fact fell on deaf ears to half of the council. That half with their layman's intuition discarded my arguments as if they were prophecies from a soothsayer with a crystal ball.

Several years ago, anticipating the possible negative effect explosive growth would have on the state's fragile heritage, the Texas Society of Architects issued a bumper sticker that read "TEXAS HANDLE WITH CARE." Tragically for Midland, the power in its city council didn't heed that warning. The council wants it one way. They like ugly. I doubt that's an accurate evaluation by a community that prides itself on being culturally conscious.

KINGSBURY-SMITH

Adviser feels it's time to tiptoe into Mideast relations

By JOSEPH KINGSBURY-SMITH
National Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — A leading foreign and defense policy adviser to Ronald Reagan during the 1980 campaign believes Israel's military success in Lebanon offers a golden opportunity for American diplomacy to establish a stable situation in the region which would facilitate a peaceful settlement of the Palestine Arab problem.

Dr. Joseph Churba, newly-appointed president of the Washington-based Center for International Security and a senior policy adviser of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency until last month, thinks, however, it would be a tragic mistake for President Reagan to insist on Israel's military withdrawal from Lebanon until agreement has been reached on the simultaneous withdrawal of all foreign military forces from that war-ravaged country, including Syrian and Palestine Liberation Organization forces.

In response to strong pressure from President Reagan, Israel agreed to join Syria in declaring a cease-fire Friday after Israeli forces had routed the Palestine Arab guerrilla forces in southern Lebanon, smashed the Syrian missile bases in the Bekaa valley, and pushed north to threaten the strategic Beirut-Damascus road. The PLO announced it was not joining in the cease-fire. The Israeli government said its forces would not fire unless fired upon, which apparently means that if the Palestine guerrilla forces attack Israeli occupation troops, the war against the PLO will continue.

Churba considers Israel's military move into Lebanon to smash the PLO forces and drive them beyond artillery range of northern Israel to represent the most important step toward a solution of the Arab-Israel problem since the late Egyptian President Anwar Sadat concluded a peace treaty with the Jewish nation.

In an exclusive interview with the Hearst Newspapers, Churba said that if the PLO's military power is smashed, Syrian, Palestine guerrilla and Israeli forces withdrawn from Lebanon, and the independence of that country restored under Christian Arab leadership, the way will be open for an agreement between moderate Palestine Arabs and Israel for a solution of the Jordan River West Bank problem.

If on the other hand, Israel should be forced to withdraw from Lebanon and Syrian and PLO forces are allowed to remain there, Churba predicted "there will be another explosion a year from now."

"If the new situation created by Israel's military success in Lebanon is skillfully exploited by American diplomacy, we can have a comprehensive solution of the Lebanese problem that will restore the independence of that country which was destroyed by Syrian and PLO intervention," Churba added.

He noted that before the Moslem half of the Lebanese population, supported by Syrian and PLO forces, had plunged Lebanon into civil war, the tiny country, under Christian Arab leadership, had been the most civilized, cultured and economically prosperous nation in the region. "It was the Switzerland of the Middle East," he said, recalling also that it had stayed out of the 1967 and 1973 Arab-Israel wars.

Failure of the Christian world, "including the papacy," to take more effective action to prevent the destruction of Lebanon by the Syrian and PLO forces was, Churba continued, "incomprehensible" and "mystifying. Syria and the PLO destroyed the only pro-Western Christian Arab state in the area."

It was, in Churba's opinion, a great mistake on the part of the United States and Israel to agree to allow Syria to put so-called peacekeeping forces in Lebanon. They began with 15,000 troops and increased them to 60,000.

"Syria's ultimate aim in the area is the creation of a Greater Syria, including Lebanon, Jordan, and Iraq," Churba said. "If Syria and the PLO were allowed to continue controlling Lebanon, that country would become a Mediterranean outlet for the Soviet Union."

Now, he feels, an opportunity exists to avert that danger by insisting that Israel's withdrawal must be accompanied by the withdrawal of the Syrian and PLO forces and their replacement by a strong international, but not necessarily United Nations, peacekeeping force to maintain order until the stability of an independent Lebanon can be restored.

"This should be the American government's objective," Churba concluded. "Unless we recognize this, we will continue with the bankrupt policy of demanding cease-fires which simply give the PLO time to build up its strength again. During the 10 months period of the cease-fire that presidential envoy Philip Habib negotiated last year, the Soviets armed the PLO in a way they never had before, providing sophisiticated rocketry, long-range artillery and tanks."

If the PLO guerrillas ignore the Syria-Israel cease-fire and attack the Israeli forces, Churba hopes the latter will be allowed to "finish the job" without American pressure to stop fighting.

High utility bills from cooling units got you in hot water?

By MARJORIE RICE
JAN JENNINGS
Copley News Service

It is better, they say, to light one candle than to curse the darkness. These days we're cursing, but the target is high utility bills. Today we'll shed some light on ideas for bringing them down a bit.

Summer is upon us. Peaches, nectarines, apricots and other summer specialties are in the produce counters. The barbecues are back in action. Our Memorial Day sunburns are starting to peel.

Soon it will be time to crank up the air conditioner. And with it, the utility bill, which takes a beating from those electricity-devouring coolers.

The beginning of summer is a good time to think about conserving energy — ours and the local utility company's. Who wants to work hard on a hot day? Who wants to fire up the stove and the entire kitchen every day? Who wants to pay even a nickel more in utility bills?

THE KITCHEN is a good place to start saving. Refrigerators and freezers take a big chunk of electricity. Hot water heaters also can fire up the bills. For cost-trimming tips, Copley News Service talked to experts in cooking.

It's debatable whether hot water or refrigeration use more energy. But costs for both can be reduced by taking these steps:

Keep the hot water heater between 120 and 130 degrees. Most dishwasher instruction booklets recommend 140, but 130 will do. If dishes are spotted, turn it up to 140, but only when you plan to use the dishwasher.

It's cheaper, energy-wise, to use a dishwasher once a day than to wash dishes three times a day. Only run the washer with a full load.

Close the door, literally, on utility costs by keeping the doors to the refrigerator and freezer closed. When shopping, separate items for the freezer and refrigerator from other groceries. That way they can be put into the appliances quickly and efficiently. (They'll also stay colder if bagged together.)

TRAIN YOURSELF to know what you want when you open the refrigerator, rather than planning a leisurely scenic tour. Get in and out quickly.

Keep the freezer and refrigerator full. Frozen items help keep their neighbors frozen, and the same goes for cold foods in the refrigerator. There should be some air circulation, but keep the space between food to a minimum. If you don't usually have a full refrigerator or freezer load, fill clean milk cartons with water and put them in the appliances. Keep plenty of ice made to fill empty freezer space.

Clean the condensor coils on the bottom of the refrigerator every three to six months, depending on how much oil and dust build up. Larger families and families with pets will have to do the cleaning more often. Cleaning the coils helps the heat escape instead of allowing it to be trapped.

Clean the rubber gasket around the doors so they seal tightly. Defrost the freezer before ¼ inch or more of frost accumulates. The frost creates an "igloo" effect, holding heat in.

Make the most of your oven and range by cooking full-oven meals and big quantities for planned leftovers.

WHEN COOKING, keep the lid on and use a pan that fits the heating unit. Use timers and, if your oven is well-insulated, turn it off 10 minutes or so before the end of the recommended cooking time. It should retain enough heat to finish the cooking process.

Many items, such as roasts, casseroles and other long-cooking dishes, don't need to be put into a preheated oven. Cakes, breads, cookies and other foods that require a quick blast of heat should be baked in a preheated oven, but could be combined with other items to make the most of the baking time.

Always clean the oven right after each use. It takes much less hot water (not to mention elbow grease) to clean it when the oven is warm.

Microwave ovens will save energy because they cook foods much more quickly. They also don't heat up the kitchen, which reduces air-conditioning costs in summer.

Over the last few months, cooking experts have been asked for their energy-saving tips. Here's a sampler:

JACQUES PEPIN lives in Connecticut and utility bills are high there, the French cooking authority says, "so we are careful." When he bakes a big batch of bread, for example, Pepin will bake other dishes as well. To keep the kitchen cool, the Pepins also do a lot of summer barbecuing, cooking the side dishes over the coals as well as the entree. "You saturate the amount of heat that you have," he says.

Judicious use of leftovers also is important in energy-saving, Pepin says. Thin slices of cold roast beef, served with a green sauce (garlicky vinaigrette with parsley or watercress blended or processed smooth) is a lovely day-after main dish served cold.

James Beard serves tepid main dishes during hot summer months. Roast chicken or Cornish hens are allowed to cool down, then served with appropriate garnishes. Salads also lead his summer menus.

"I do 'winter bakes,'" she says, "things like a chuck roast and a meatloaf and squash and apples — an array of things. I would sometimes simply take an eggplant in the skin and put it in that oven, all at once. It was a great economy in time and effort."

SHE THEN SERVES the meatloaf at room temperature. "This thing of having things extremely hot or extremely cold really is not necessary lots of time," she says. "Room temperature, in truth, has the flavors at their peak."

"I do lots of cold things in the summer. There is nothing like having your refrigerator full of things like cold roast chicken and meatloaf." She'll also cook in quantity on the stovetop. If she's cooking potatoes, for example, it will be a big batch. The leftovers can be sliced into salad, sauteed, or put into a vinaigrette for a couple of days' marinating.

Airline boarding up in May

Boardings at Midland Regional Airport were up in May over the same time a year ago, although the figures didn't set a new record.

Figures for May show 56,384 boardings compared to 49,156 in May 1981, according to Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation for the city of Midland.

Previous record had been set in March with more than 59,000 boardings.

For the calendar year to date, boardings are up to 276,174. This is a 28.7 percent increase over the 214,567 for the same period last year.

Banks said that May normally isn't a record-setting month. "I look for the boardings to increase during the summer months," he added.

How to survive in a nuclear world

By JOHN E. JACOB
Copley News Service

President Reagan deserves high marks for flexibility in his proposal to negotiate a reduction in nuclear armaments with the Russians.

He came to office with hard-line views on the subject, scrapping the SALT II Treaty and engaging in a war of words with his counterparts in Moscow.

The tough talk, along with an unprecedented arms buildup plan, just served to heighten international tensions. It scared Europeans to the point where a relatively dormant nuclear disarmament movement revived and suddenly swept the continent.

Here at home the same reaction was triggered. Loose talk about a nuclear war being "winnable" and absurd plans to evacuate entire cities in a crisis spurred activism for an international agreement even among many who share the president's hard-line views.

That is a sane reaction in a world where the nuclear threat hangs heavy over an uncertain future. Whatever strategists may think about the survivability of our nation in a nuclear holocaust whose victims would run well into the tens of millions, it is impossible for any country to win a nuclear war.

By his overtures to the Soviets for negotiations, the president seems to have understood both the reality of the horrors of nuclear war and the ground swell of popular sentiment for arms reduction.

Whether that message has also reached the leaders in the Kremlin is an open question. But unless we are dealing with a group of madmen willing to destroy their own country, it is likely that the Russians, too, will see nuclear arms reduction as being a rational course to take.

The June U.N. meeting on arms control can serve as a good starting point for the coming East-West dialogue, but it has to be followed by serious bilateral negotiations in which both sides demonstrate the will and the courage to compromise their differences.

The dispute over the Falkland Islands highlights how changed the world military picture has become. That conflict took weeks to come to a head; almost a month passed before the two sides were even physically able to fight each other.

But a nuclear confrontation would not take a month — a push of the button and enough firepower can be launched to incinerate half the Earth within minutes.

The fragile nuclear situation and the lessons of the Falklands dispute ought to lead to re-examination of our defense plans, too. So far, they seem to be based on piling as many new weapons as possible on top of an already bulging stockpile.

But since we already have more than enough nuclear weapons to deter a Russian first strike and devastate any aggressor, we ought to be asking if that is the correct strategy.

Civil Rights head pushes summer jobs

By BENJAMIN SHORE
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan should more actively urge business and industry to provide summer jobs for urban youths and invest in the revitalization of depressed cities, Clarence M. Pendleton Jr., chairman of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, said recently.

Pendleton, nominated by Mr. Reagan and sworn in two months ago as the first black to head the 25-year-old advisory panel, told reporters: "I would hope the administration will step up the call for the private sector to provide summer jobs."

The White House, with most of its key staff in Europe with the president, had no immediate comment on Pendleton's suggestion that Mr. Reagan could do more to inspire private-sector involvement in what Pendleton characterized as a major social problem.

Commenting as the commission released a report on the 1980 riots in Miami, Pendleton said "the exclusion of the black community from the social and economic mainstream ... is not limited to Miami, it is woven into the fabric of American society."

"Conditions in our blighted inner cities, so disproportionately inhabited by blacks and other minorities, can be turned around, but success will require a partnership of the public and private sectors and the American people," Pendleton said.

"Our effort will require the same degree of commitment and purpose exhibited by our determination to place an American on the moon."

Pressed by reporters, Pendleton said, "The federal commitment, in more cases, could be better."

But he said the effect of federal funds, which have been sharply reduced in administration budget-cutting, differs from city to city, depending on how the financial assistance has been used.

Pendleton, after insisting "I'm not a spokesman" for the administration, then defended the administration's apparently small effort to press the private sector to invest more in inner-city businesses and jobs by noting the "present economic conditions" have thwarted economic expansion.

"I'm not sure whether he could do anything," Pendleton said of Mr. Reagan. "He has no capacity if no one will hire."

"The federal government alone cannot erase racial discrimination and solve our urban problems," Pendleton said.

"No solution, however, will be effective without the leadership of the president and financial commitment of the federal government. Where budget constraints on the public sector have resulted in cutbacks in crucial social programs, the private sector must be induced to accept an increased role."

Pendleton refused to predict that social tensions caused by rising unemployment among blacks, highlighted by a 50 percent jobless rate among black youths, would erupt into riots this summer.

But he noted: "Many of these unemployed, inadequately trained and discouraged youth reside in inner-city neighborhoods where social, economic and political disorder has led to increases in violent crimes, crimes against property, and drug and alcohol abuse.

"The young people of these urban communities, disadvantaged in their search for scarce work by a lack of skills and by prejudice, sit idle."

Pendleton pointed out that in 90 percent of the 125 cities surveyed by the U.S. Conference of Mayors, "cuts in the federal Summer Youth Employment Program will force significant reductions in the number of youth served."

New training program may replace CETA

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Congress and the White House appear near agreement on a new job training program for disadvantaged youths that would replace the Comprehensive Employment Training Act (CETA) due to expire in September.

Though a deal has already been struck between the administration and a Senate committee on a CETA replacement, administration officials nevertheless admit to problems with a House panel which has insisted on its own substitute.

A Senate committee has reported its own measure, patterned after the administration's bill, for floor action. A House committee has also sent to the floor a more expensive proposal. If each body enacts its own version, it seems likely an agreement will be hammered out on a joint plan by the Senate-House conferees.

The administration earlier this year asked for a $2.4 billion annual spending level for the new Training for Jobs (TFJ) program and requested that $1.8 billion of that money be earmarked specifically for job training.

President Reagan had also recommended that unlike CETA, which at one time provided subsidized work for 750,000 people, the TFJ contain no funds for public service employment.

During the protracted battle over the bill with the White House the Senate Committee on Human Resources finally agreed to exclude from the TFJ the payment of allowances to trainees — sometimes more than the minimum wage.

Enacted eight years ago, CETA has provided about $7.5 billion a year for employment training in local vocational schools and for subsidies to private employers who offered on-the-job training to youngsters.

CETA has often been attacked as a make-work program that has "wasted" some $53 billion during its lifetime. The criticism has included charges that the money has gone down the drain without significantly improving the chances of disadvantaged persons to find and hold jobs.

And they have insisted that only $1.3 billion a year, approximtely 18 percent of the total, has gone for job training.

Unlike CETA the proposed new Training for Jobs (TFJ) will only have the slightest hint of public service employment -and that's only if the House conferees can win concessions from the Senate.

If enacted, the TFJ will reduce the scope and cost of CETA training and shift control of the local councils which administer the program from municipal agencies to the state and local governments, private business and labor groups.

TFJ would also focus efforts of the private sector groups on training poor youths who have dropped out of school in skills that are needed in their localities.

The administration, which cut CETA's funds by a third for the current fiscal year, has opposed four separate congressional proposals to continue and expand CETA.

The intransigence of the two sides made it appear unlikely for the longest time that they could reach an accommodation.

Sources said the logjam was finally broken when the White House personally intervened in the talks. The administration's decision was dictated by a reminder by congressional sources that under a provision included in last year's Budget Reconciliation Act, failure by at least one house to approve a new training bill by Sep. 10 would result in an automatic one-year extension of the CETA program.

An administration-Senate compromise hammered out in the last few days includes incentives for private business to contribute more money to train women and minorities for jobs, in exchange for less paperwork under affirmative action regulations.

There are major differences between the House and the Senate measure over issues such as funding levels and control of local programs. But the two plans emphasize job training rather than the public service employment that dominated CETA for most of its history.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

The Senate Finance Committee is scheduled to begin discussions next week on the fate of a comprehensive tax package, including proposals related to industrial revenue bonds (IDBs).

Industrial development bonds are tax-exempt obligations issued by municipal governments for certain qualified economic development projects. These bonds usually have been sold at face value, or par.

As part of that package, Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., will introduce the Reagan administration's IDB proposal which calls for drastic changes in the issuance of IDBs, including elimination of most of the present qualified users.

As a substitute to the administration package, Sen. John H. Chafee, R-R.I., plans to offer his own measure that is designed to continue the use of bonds while eliminating abuses and excess volume from the program.

The Chafee plan would preserve tax exempt bonds to finance student loans, hospital, nursing home and education facility construction, construction of low-income family rental housing, the purchase and installation of pollution control and abatement equipment, construction and purchase of equipment for mass transit, the improvement of port and airport facilities and commercial and industrial development.

The Internal Revenue Service has also gotten into the IDB act. The agency proposed earlier this week regulations to limit the use of deeply discounted state and local bonds.

Discount bonds are sold at prices below the face value. Because they are redeemed at face value at maturity, they generally carry lower interest rates than do bonds sold at face value.

The IRS proposal said that industrial development bonds sold at "a nominal discount" of 5 percent or less would continue to be eligible for tax exemption. If the discount is deeper than 5 percent, the issue could be ruled as taxable in some instances.

COSTS UP

Regardless whether you rode the bus, bought a home, ate a hot dog, got a haircut, you paid more for most goods and services in 1981 than a year ago, says Labor Department. According to the department's latest statistics, mortgage interest rates increased 24.4 percent; mass transit fares went up 28 percent, the cost of a man's hair cut increased 8.2 percent.

UNDEREMPLOYMENT

Ronald E. Kutscher, an assistant commissioner at the Bureau of Labor Statistics, told a recent Senate subcommittee that between 1970 and 1980 there was a marked increase in the proportion of college-educated workers employed in jobs not traditionally requiring a college education -retail sales, clerical, blue-collar, and service jobs.

"These mismatches could have contributed another element which, not easily quantified, may have added to a decade of slowing productivity growth," he said. "Clearly, placing individuals with an education higher than required to perform a job could at some stage have an offsetting or negative effect because of worker discontent."

Muse Air reports traffic surges

DALLAS (SWN) — Muse Air Corporation announced revenue passenger miles in May increased 77 percent over the levels experienced in April, with available seat miles (ASM's) increasing 57 percent. The company said that it boarded 64,687 passengers on 985 flights operated between Dallas, Houston, Tulsa and Midland/Odessa, resulting in a 44.5 percent systemwide load factor.

Michael L. Muse, president, noted that the Company's load factor in its Dallas/Houston market increased to 54.2 percent in May, up from 39.7 percent in April, benefiting from Braniff Airways' suspension of service on May 12, as well as the Company's inauguration of service to Tulsa and Midland/Odessa on May 16, six days later than originally planned. He also noted that traffic development in the Midland/Odessa and Tulsa markets was gratifying, given the fact that the Company had not been allowed to do any preinaugural advertising due to its delay in obtaining landing slots from the FAA. He indicated that he was very pleased with the Company's overall increase in load factor in May to 44.5 percent from 39.7 percent in April, in light of the substantial increase in ASM's, due to the addition of Tulsa and Midland/Odessa service.

Committee to recommend changes in compensation system

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Legislative Advisory Committee of the Industrial Accident Board plans to report its recommendations for any changes in Texas' workers compensation system in September — in order to have those proposals available to the 1983 Legislature when in convenes in January.

Principal area of study for the panel will be late delivery of worker's compensation benefits to disabled workers, and the related "frequently arising" problem of securing carrier authorization for treatment by a health care provider or hospital.

IAB has provided some general guidelines to the advisory group, but has urged the panel to review any other alternatives it may find "both practical and cost efficient," the IAB reports.

IAB chairman N.S. Harris Jr. chairs the panel, with Texas AFL-CIO president Harry Hubbard as vice chairman. Other members include attorneys and representatives of insurers and employers groups.

The committee has established three subcommittees, on benefits, delivery and administration and employers groups.

The Texas Credit Union Department has asked Attorney General Mark-White to rule on securites proposed to be isssued by a state-chartered credit union.

The request asks whether such a credit union may offer debt securities for sale "to its members or the general public" other than various forms of savings account instruments, such as share accounts, deposit accounts and certificates of deposit.

The request also asks to what extent such securites are exempted from the Texas Securities Act.

The State Board of Insurance will hold a hearing in Austin Aug. 12 on rate adjustments and rules and forms changes for private passenger automobile insurance.

Time and location of the hearing are to be announced later, SBI says.

July 9 was set as the deadline for filing proposed rules and policy form changes with the agency.

Air Control Board officials extended to Thursday the period for comment on its proposed permit fee rule — on which it received 75 comments, oral and written, at hearings in Austin, Beaumont, Houston and Odessa, and in response to the agency in Austin.

ACB reports that the majority of the comments were from the oil and gas industry in opposition to adoption of a permit fee rule.

"The relatively few comments which have been received from private citizens and non-industrial organizations support the adoption of a permit fee rule," the agency says.

"Only a few comments," it adds, " have addressed specific requests for changes to the rule as proposed."

Figures from the Secretary of State's office show new corporations chartered in Texas increased during the first quarter of 1982 compared to 1981, with 10,124 total filings, compared to 9,318 in 1981.

That office also reports that net additions to the stock of business corporation in Texas which it has recorded "reflect the phenomenon that the national recession has left Texas' economy relatively unscathed."

Uniform Commercial Code filings also indicate "a healthy business community with growing credit needs," the agency says.

Those UCC filings — including such things as financing statements, federal tax liens and utility security agreements — increased from 203,489 in 1980 to 229,932 in 1981.

The dollar value of those filings is "indeterminate," the agency says, but notes that the filings have increased at a rate of eight per cent a year and says it "seems reasonable to assume" that the real value of the filings has remained constant.

"Under this assumption, this increase in UCC filings indicates increased business activity, requiring increased credit.

"The higher credit requirements in the face of highly restrictive monetary policy accompanied by historically high innterest rates indicates a very healthy business climate," the office concludes.

The State Securites Board reports total dollar volume for securities applications processed in the first eight months of fiscal 1982 exceed $22.9 billion, compared to 15.5 billion for the comparable period in the previous fiscal year.

Over $13.79 billion of that total represented money market funds, the board reports.

Three indexes are combined as the Producer Price Indexes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The wholesale price report issued by the Labor Department actually is one of three indexes, known collectively as the Producer Price Indexes.

The indexes reflect price changes for goods at three levels of production before the goods are sold to the final user. For the consumer, it serves as a barometer of inflation to come.

The first index is the "crude materials" index for products which have not yet undergone any processing, such as wheat, cotton, iron and steel scrap and crude petroleum.

The second is the index for "intermediate materials," or goods that have been processed, but require further changes, such as flour, cotton yarns, steel mill products, lumber and motor vehicle parts.

The third — and most widely watched measure — is the "finished goods" index, which also is referred to as the "wholesale price" index. This is for goods that will not undergo further processing and are ready for sale to the ultimate user. These include such things as autos, furniture, apparel and gasoline.

TO COMPILE the index, the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics collects price data monthly by mailed questionnaire on nearly 2,800 commodities at various stages of production.

The price information is used to compile a specific numerical index that compares with a 1967 reference number of 100. In this way, the report shows how prices have increased over time. Reports on price increases from month to month, expressed in percentage terms, are adjusted for seasonal variations, but the actual index number is not.

To say that wholesale prices have increased by a specific percentage means that all of the prices taken together at the finished goods level have increased by that amount, on average. To compute the index, different weights are assigned to different commodities to reflect their relative importance in the economy.

—Employment: Calculated monthly by the Labor Department, this report is designed to show employment trends in the economy. It includes the number of people with jobs and those without. People who are looking for jobs and cannot find them are counted as unemployed. People who have given up looking for jobs, called discouraged workers, are no longer considered in the labor force and therefore are not counted.

IN ADDITION to overall totals on employment and unemployment, the report also gives specific information on employment in major industries and on job trends by age, sex and race.

Information for the report is obtained in two separate and distinct surveys. There is the household survey, from which overall job totals are calculated, including statistics for age, sex and race. The information on employment experiences is obtained monthly in a survey of about 56,000 households selected to represent a cross-section of the nation's population over age 16.

The second survey is the payroll survey, which is conducted in cooperation with state agencies. Information is obtained monthly from payroll records of approximately 165,000 establishments representing a cross-section of the nation's industries and enterprises. Employment in various industries is obtained from this survey.

Although the employment and unemployment figures are watched carefully by economists and the government, they do not reveal much about the future course of the economy because changes in the economy normally are not reflected in the job market until months later. Thus, a recovery from a recession could be underway at the same time that unemployment is rising, and a recession could be starting even as unemployment is falling.

An attempt is made to adjust the figures for seasonal factors, such as the surge of teen-agers looking for work during the summer school break. Officials admit that the seasonal adjustments involve some guesswork, which can lead to some misrepresentations of the true job picture.

—Consumer Price Index: Calculated monthly by the Labor Department, the index is the broadest gauge of the impact of inflation on the consumer. It measures average price changes at the retail level for specific items of food, clothing, shelter and fuels and services, including medical services.

PRICE INFORMATION is obtained from 85 urban areas, from over 18,000 tenants, 18,000 housing units and 24,000 establishments, including grocery and department stores, hospitals and filling stations. Prices of foods and fuels are obtained monthly.

The price information is used in compiling a specific index number that compares with a 1967 reference number of 100. The index this past April, the last month to be surveyed, was 284.3, meaning that goods which cost $100 in 1967 had risen in price to $284.30. Each item in the index is weighted for its relative importance to an average household. For example, the cost of food and beverages makes up 17.5 percent of the index, while housing and housing costs account for another 46 percent.

A weakness of the index is that it doesn't always keep up with the change in quality of goods - which may affect the price apart from inflation - or in changes in consumer preferences. However, it is periodically revised in an effort to account for changes. A major revision will occur starting next year, when the measurement of home purchase costs will be changed to reduce a widely acknowledged distortion in the index.

Many government and private payments are linked to changes in the CPI, including cost-of-living increases for Social Security recipients and government workers, and for workers in private industry who have cost-of-living clauses in their contracts.

—Gross National Product: This is considered the bottom-line report card on the performance of the nation's economy, as it measures the market value of the total output of goods and services, both before and after discounting for the rate of inflation.

THE AFTER-INFLATION GNP, known as "real" GNP, is the most meaningful and is expressed as an annual rate. An annual rate means that if the same rate of growth were continued for an entire year, the quarterly — or three-month — rate would be the growth for the year.

The report is issued quarterly by the Commerce Department, usually in the third week following the end of the preceding quarter. It is subject to frequent revision, as the initial figures are based on preliminary estimates in many instances.

GNP is the total of the following: consumer spending on goods and services of all kinds; total private investment, including purchases of homes and changes in business inventories; total exports, less imports; and government purchases of goods and services, including defense purchases.

Historically, economic policymakers have aimed for growth in real GNP of about 3 percent a year, which they considered to be the nation's growth potential. A decline in GNP for two consecutive quarters usually is considered to denote a recession.

—Composite Index of Leading Indicators: Prepared monthly by the Commerce Department, this index is designed to foreshadow economic trends in the months ahead. Several consecutive months of decline is regarded as signalling the coming of a recession, while strong gains are considered as pointing toward healthy economic growth.

HOWEVER, IT IS by no means foolproof, in either direction, and few economists will venture to base predictions on the performance of this index alone.

Actually, the index is a composite of 12 other statistics. These are average workweek; average weekly initial claims for state unemployment insurance; new orders for consumer goods and materials; vendor performance, or sales deliveries; net business formation; contracts and orders for plants and equipment; building permits; changes in inventories; changes in sensitive prices;stock prices; changes in total liquid assets, and changes in the money supply.

The 12 statistics are weighted according to their importance to the overall economy. The result is a specific index number, which is compared to a 1967 reference figure of 100.

—U.S. Export and Import Merchandise Trade: Prepared by the Commerce Department's Bureau of the Census from customs data, this is the monthly scorecard on the nation's trade performance, after adjustments for seasonal variations. It is simply the value of the nation's exports and imports expressed both as totals and by specific categories.

Continental to participate in project

STAMFORD, Conn. — Continental Group has announced its energy unit, Continental Resources Company, will participate with Shell Oil Company and Mobil Oil Corporation in the construction and ownership of a 500-mile pipeline that will transport carbon dioxide from Colorado to West Texas. The CO2 will be injected into the underground formations of an old oil field to revive the field's declining oil production.

Continental Resources will have a 13 percent ownership interest in the project, to be known as the Cortez Pipeline. Shell, the major partner, will own 50 percent and Mobil will have the remaining 37 percent.

The 30-inch-diameter pipeline will connect two CO2 production fields in the McElmo Dome and Doe Canyon areas near Cortez, in southwestern Colorado, with the Denver Unit of the Waasson Field, near Denver City, Texas.

Injection of CO2 into the 46 year old field in a tertiary-recovery process is expected to produce about 280 million barrels of oil at the Denver Unit that would not otherwise be recovered, and to extend the field's productive life by an estimated 25 to 30 years.

The Cortez Pipeline will cost approximately $700 million. Construction is expected to start in mid-1982, and the pipeline is scheduled to be in operation by mid-1984. The line has capacity to carry enough CO2 for sale to other oil recovery projects in the West Texas area.

Continental Resources, which recently moved its headquarters to Houston, Texas, from Winter Park, Florida, is a diversified energy company engaged in natural gas transmission, oil and gas exploration, and hydrocarbons extraction.

Temporary workers dormitory-style rental hotel becomes reality

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Billed as the "working man's place," although a section will be set aside for women, the Midland Dorm, Ltd. began to become a reality Thursday afternoon when the first dirt was broken for the temporary workers' living facility.

The 108-unit dormitory-style rental hotel will be located on Rankin Highway near Interstate 20.

Estimated to cost $1 million, the project is being undertaken by Rutter and Wilbanks. Architect is Ed Maurer, who is a well-known hotel architect, according to John Buster, a spokesman for the project.

Of the 108 rooms, said Buster, 24 will be reserved in a separate section for women. Cost will range from $10.50 to $12 per person per night. The two-story building will have community bathrooms, said Buster.

A restaurant will serve buffet breakfasts and will prepare box lunches to take to the job site, according to Buster. There will be a game room and a coin-operated laundry. Outdoor grills will be located in a patio area. Maid service will be provided once a week.

Mini-warehouses will be available at a fee for workers who want to store tools or park their trucks.

Contractor is Advanced Concrete Technology of Humble. Buster explained the dormitory is being built in sections, shipped in and then will be put together on the site.

"We think there's a definite need for this with all the construction that hasn't even started yet. A lot of subcontractors haven't come in yet and several office buildings haven't been started," said Buster, who pointed to First National Bank's Eagle Plaza, Clay-Desta and One Energy Square.

Motels are charging about $25 to $26 a day for these workers to have a room. At these prices, said Buster, workers aren't wanting to stay in Midland.

And if some companies have been picking up the tab, he said, the firms would prefer finding a cheaper place.

"The companies don't want to pay that kind of money," said Buster. "We feel we'll have 70 percent of the rooms rented out to corporations."

Pre-tax operating losses of title insurers down

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Pre-tax operating losses of the nation's title insurers dropped to $55.8 million during first quarter 1982, slipping $23.5 million below the same period last year, for the worst quarter in the history of their industry, the American Land Title Association reported.

This is the ninth consecutive quarter during which the industry has registered a loss, according to ALTA Director of Research Richard W. McCarthy.

Title insurer operating revenue for the first quarter was $216.2 million — down more than 7 percent from the same period last year, as the effects of high interest rates and a depressed real estate market continue to batter the industry.

Title companies search, review and insure land titles to protect investors, including home buyers and mortgage lenders.

Operating expenses of the industry totaled $244.3 million for the 1982 quarter compared to $243.8 million a year ago.

McCarthy said that, despite impressive cost reduction by the industry during a period of high inflation, income has continued to shrink faster than cost of operation.

Title insurer loss and loss adjustment expense for first quarter 1982 was $27.8 million, nearly 13 percent of operating revenue and an increase of $6.1 million above the same period last year. McCarthy said title claims have no particular relationship to current financial performance in the industry. Since title companies emphasize loss prevention and typically spend close to 90 per cent of their operating revenue for operating expense including risk elimination capability , he said the current loss and loss adjustment expense figure is viewed with serious concern.

Exxon adds 1 to 2 cents to wholesale prices

By ROBERT BURNS

NEW YORK (AP) — The upward drive of gasoline prices accelerated Friday as Exxon Co. USA, Chevron USA Inc. and Amoco Oil Co. said they were raising prices by one to two cents a gallon in many parts of the country.

The moves came in response to greater demand for gasoline and tighter supplies. They continued a two-month trend that has pushed up wholesale gasoline prices by as much as a dime a gallon in some regions.

Exxon USA, the nation's third-largest gasoline marketer, said it added as much as two cents a gallon to wholesale prices in some regions, effective Friday. The company is a unit of Exxon Corp.

Chevron USA, the marketing arm of Standard Oil Co. of California, said it would raise prices Saturday in the South, East and West by one-half cent to one cent a gallon. Chevron USA had posted similar increases Thursday.

Amoco, the marketing arm of Standard Oil Co. (Indiana), confirmed it had boosted prices by one cent to two cents a gallon throughout its market on Thursday. The company ranks as the nation's largest gasoline seller.

Changes in wholesale prices, which apply to station dealers, usually are passed along to consumers. The price at the pump rose an average of about 3.5 cents from mid-April to mid-May, according to industry estimates.

Gasoline prices had fallen about 20 cents a gallon from April 1981 to this past March, to a national average of about $1.18 a gallon, because of slack demand and lower worldwide prices for crude oil.

Ben Kinchlow, the son of a Methodist minister, was born and raised in Uvalde, Texas. The vetreran of 13 years of military service earned a third degree black belt in Karate, and is also a graduate of Southwest Texas Junior College where he was a member of Phi Theta Kappa, President of the Senior Class and listed in "Who's Who in American Small Colleges".

While driving a test car around a track at 80 MPH, "Jesus Christ changed my life." Sitting behind the wheel, he asked, "Are You really out there? If You really are, show me." God showed him. His life was changed. He was a born-again Christian, or as the Bible says, "a new creation".

Ben quit his job and opened "His Place" in Uvalade, Texas to minister to runaways, then worked at a Christian drug and alcoholism rehabilitation farm in Killeen, Texas. After a guest appearance on the "700 Club", he joined the Christian broadcasting Network, Inc. (CNB) as Dallas area director, and in 1975 he accepted the invitation to be Co-Host of the "700 Club".
