Midland's cost of living rose 0.1 percent in June, after decreases in the two previous months, according to ClayDesta National Bank officials.

Anti-apartheid activist taken before talks

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The leading white anti-apartheid activist in strife-torn Cape province was arrested today, an hour before she was to meet with three former U.S. Cabinet members, a witness said.

Meanwhile, police said they had detained 441 activists without charge under state-of-emergency powers invoked Sunday for the first time in a quarter century. Col. Jaap Venter of national police headquarters in Pretoria said a list of those detained would be issued later.

Anti-apartheid activist Molly Blackburn was detained at her home in Port Elizabeth for allegedly attending an illegal gathering July 14, said Mike Calabrese, an American lawyer who was at her house when she was arrested.

She had been scheduled to meet with former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and former U.N. Ambassador Donald McHenry, both of whom served in the Carter administration; and Robert McNamara, secretary of defense in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations.

They are in South Africa on a fact-finding tour for the Ford Foundation.

Calabrese quoted Mrs. Blackburn as asking the officers before they took her away, "Do you mind if I take my knitting?"

Mrs. Blackburn, of the opposition Progressive Federal Party, is a member of the Cape province legislature. She made a brief court appearance in Port Elizabeth, and was released on $50 bail.

She was not asked to plead, and the case was postponed until Aug. 13. Andrew Savage, a member of Parliament from Mrs. Blackburn's party, said the arrest was under the Internal Security Act, and did not fall under the three-day-old state of emergency.

Calabrese, who was held by police for an hour Monday in Graaff-Reinet while he traveled with Mrs. Blackburn, said three policemen arrived at her home this morning.

He said they told her she was under investigation for having attended an illegal gathering in the black township of Zwide in honor of four prominent activists killed last month.

Several area stores to defy 'lame duck' Blue Law

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Permian Mall officials announced that two major retail outlets will open on consecutive Saturdays and Sundays beginning this weekend, but Midland Park Mall officials said retailers there plan to wait until Sept. 1 — the date set for bringing an end to the 24-year-old Blue Law.

Representatives of Sears Roebuck and Company and J.C. Penney Company Inc. made the official announcement during a press conference Monday. Both Odessa stores will open for business beginning at 12:30 p.m. Sunday.

John Marroquin, a spokesman for J.C. Penney, explained the company's decision to open one month prior to the scheduled repeal of the law. "Our original stance was to open on Sept. 1 unless one of the others decided to open earlier, he said."

The opening, according to Marroquin, is in reaction "to our customers' wants and needs rather that in reaction to a law that's not being enforced."

Gov. Mark White in May signed a bill repealing the Blue Law which restricts the sale of 42 types of merchandise on consecutive weekend days. Prohibited items include kitchen ware and utensils, clothing, footwear, toys, tools, hardware, rugs, lawn furniture and bed coverings. The law will go into effect Sept. 1.

Permian Mall manager David Long said the mall has "always been open" on Sundays to accommodate such businesses as cinemas and restaurants.

Long said of the additional openings, "We'll just accommodate them in any way we can."

John Wheeler, manager of Midland Park Mall, noted retailers there are "free to open if they want to," but added that since the announcement Monday, "all of our stores have informed me that they plan comply with the law unless the competitive situation prevents them from doing otherwise."

According to John Moore, director of state tax information in Austin, Texans are obligated to abide by the Blue Law until the fall deadline, but punishment should be determined by local jurisdiction.

Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman has said that a person can be assessed a fine of $100 for first offense violation of the Blue Law, which is handled by the city attorney's office.

Second offense violators can receive a possible $500 fine or six months imprisonment through the county attorney's office, according to Dettman.

Dettman said he doubted anyone would bring a Blue Law violation to the attention of either the city or county attorney. "It's still against the law, but the Legislature made its decision. I doubt anything will happen."

Cpl. John McAhon, spokesman for the Odessa police department, said there are no plans to prosecute Odessa violators to his knowledge. "It's not under our jurisdiction," he said.

Wayne Gideon, Midland chief of police, said, "I hope it (the question of enforcing the law) doesn't come up."

Gideon said he has received no complaints of Blue Law violators but is sure several Midland stores do violate the ordinance. "When you're looking at legality in a month, I think it (the decision to enforce) would require discussion between this office and the prosecutors involved in the case."

Summer trends boost local joblessness

From Staff Reports

Students coming into the labor force caused the Midland unemployment rate to take a substantial hike for the month of June, up to 5.3 percent from last month's 4.5 percent. It is a substantial increase over last year's 3.6 percent, which is considered almost "bare bones" in unemployment rates.

Still the increase was not enough to dislodge Midland from its traditional third place statewide ranking, behind Austin with 5.1 percent unemployment and Dallas with 5.2 percent. Tied with Midland in third place were Bryan-College Station and Fort Worth-Arlington. Odessa was in eleventh place with 6.4 percent unemployment, just below San Angelo with 6.2 percent unemployment. The bottom of the pack was held by McAllen-Edinburg-Mission with 19.8 percent unemployment.

In Midland, 100 fewer workers were employed, as total employment dropped from 61,200 to 61,100, compared to 63,700 the previous year. The total number in the unemployment ranks was 3,400, up 1,000 from the same month in 1984.

Odessa showed a similar increase in unemployment up to 6.4 percent for the current period, compared to 5.6 percent unemployment last month. It was 4.8 percent for the same period last year. The total number unemployed in Odessa was 4,400 up from 3,800 last month and 3,300 a year ago. Total employment in Odessa was 63,900, showing 200 more on the rolls than last month and substantially less than last year which showed 66,100 employed.

Texas fared better than the U.S. with an average statewide unemployment of 5.5 percent, compared to 7.4 percent for the nation.

Charmian Carl, employment supervisor for Texas Employment Commission in Midland, said the unemployment hike was traditional for June, because of the influx of students into the labor market in June.

"We normally have 500 or so students in for placement in the summer. This year we have been successful in placing just over 300. We normally do better, but things seem a bit tighter this year. Employers don't seem to be spending as much as they would in a better economy."

Moderate costs hold inflation to 0.2 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prolonged moderation in food and fuel costs held the June inflation rate to 0.2 percent at the retail level, the government reported today.

Grocery prices fell for the fourth straight month, but food and beverage prices overall edged up 0.1 percent, mostly because of a 0.6 percent increase in the price of restaurant meals. Prices for food eaten in the home declined 0.2 percent.

Gasoline prices rose a small 0.2 percent, despite the slackness in world crude oil prices. Transportation costs overall, however, were down 0.1 percent, largely because of a 1.6 percent decline in used car prices.

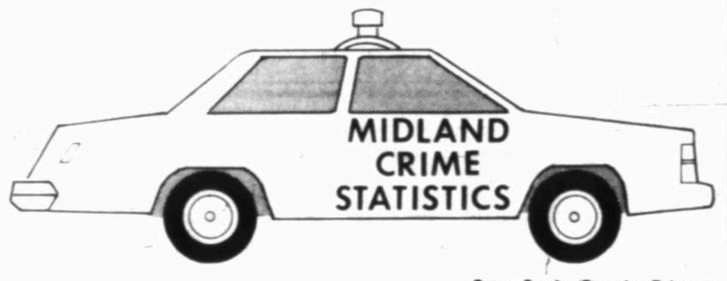

Analysts have noted that gasoline prices have been rising slightly in the face of falling oil prices, a phenomonon the experts attribute largely to aggressive price increases following the government's July 1 tightening of allowable lead levels in leaded gasoline.

Meanwhile, the government also reported today that orders for durable manufactured goods rose a moderate 1.8 percent in June, a signal that the economy may at last be rebounding somewhat from its prolonged sluggish growth.

The Commerce Department said the June increase in orders for durable goods, items expected to last at least three years, followed an even larger 3.3 percent May gain. In both months, a large part of the improvement came from an increase in orders for military equipment, reflecting the government's huge defense buildup. Without the surge in defense orders, new orders would have risen only 0.7 percent in June and 0.6 percent in May.

All in all, the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index report for June was a reaffirmation of analysts' longstanding assessment that inflation is unlikely to be any more of a problem this year than last, when prices rose 4 percent.

For the first six months of 1985, prices have risen at a moderate 3.7 percent annual rate. Prices have also risen at the same pace over the last 12 months.

Major crime reports down, officials say

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Incidence of major crime has decreased in Midland through the first six months of 1985 when compared to the same period a year ago, according to statistics released by the Midland Police Department and the Midland County Sheriff's Department.

Rape, robbery and assault are down, while the number of murders remained constant at eight, the statistics show.

"The statistics county-wide look very good," said Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter. "The reductions are very encouraging."

Burglaries were down in the county but up in the city, with increased burglaries of cars and businesses making up for a decrease in home break-ins. Police Chief Wayne Gideon saw the increase in burglaries as part of a ripple effect from the big jump in the city's narcotics-offense reports (from 83 to 128).

"I'm most concerned about burglaries and narcotics. Of course, they're usually tied hand in hand," he said. These increases contributed to an overall increase in the number of offenses reported (the county showed a decrease) but Gideon pointed with pride to the 1,402 people arrested by police officers in the first six months of 1985.

"While we do have a rate we're not proud of, at least we've been able to arrest so many," he said.

There were five murders in the city, the same as for January through June 1984, and three in the county, according to the statistics. Rapes in the city were down from 24 to 13, and in the county from 11 to 4, a decrease Gideon ascribes to more women taking "the necessary safeguards."

Robberies were down from 26 to 19 in the city and from two to one in the county, and assaults declined from 226 to 215 in the city and from 69 to 58 in the county. County burglaries also declined, from 229 to 159, but this crime increased in the city from 1,109 to 1,141, helped by an increase in auto burglaries from 287 to 311. Felony thefts (more than $750 value) were up in both city and county.

Thirteen OPEC ministers continue urgent talks on crude price cuts

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — OPEC oil ministers, divided on a strategy for regaining control of the oil market, resumed urgent talks today on a Saudi Arabian proposal for cutting the price of some crudes.

The 13 ministers had little to say as they entered the ballroom of a Geneva hotel where they convened their third session since the talks started Monday.

Indonesian Oil Minister Subroto, who is president of the organization, told reporters the group would discuss in depth the Saudi proposal for a price cut. He declined to offer any details of the plan.

Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the influential Saudi oil minister, said Monday he believed most of the 13 member nations saw the need to cut prices for lower-grade oils.

But other ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries made it clear to reporters on the first day of the group's summer conference that they think price cuts would hurt OPEC.

Dam collapse victims buried in rites near Italian village

New York Times News Service

TESERO, Italy — The burial of the dead from a collapsed dam began at a ceremony here Monday evening, just a few hundred yards from the valley that was scarred and swept by floodwaters on Friday.

In nearby Trent, a state prosecutor said the tragedy was the sort that happened in "some Third World country" and should not have occurred in Italy.

The prosecutor, Francesco Simeoni, said at a news conference that he had issued more than 50 judicial notices informing public officials and owners of the mining company that owned the dam that they may face prosecution for criminal negligence.

Military spokesmen listed the official death toll Monday evening at 197.

The officials lowered the number of dead overnight. Col. Fulvio Vezzalini, one of the spokesmen, said some bodies had been counted twice.

There were conflicting figures on the number of missing, with military spokesmen listing 50 and civil defense spokesman estimating less than half that number.

Some 2,000 people, virtually the entire population of this town in a valley just below Stava, the hamlet that was destroyed by the flood, attended the simple outdoor funeral mass and the burial of 33 flood victims.

The Rev. Giovanni Conci, who led the service for his parishioners, generally skirted the angry demands of his flock for vengeance against those they believe to be responsible.

But Conci referred to the promises from many public officials that justice would be done in the case, asking God's blessings on "our legitimate request for clarity amid all the promises being made."

As Conci read the list of the dead, many times naming whole families, there were sobs and cries from those in the church courtyard, where the mass grave had been dug.

At his news conference in Trent, Simeoni said investigators had found "unsigned technical reports" on the dam that should have been attested to by officials.

"This is not India or some Third World country," he said. "This is a civilized country and a disaster like this should never have happened."

Simeoni said that more judicial notices would be served — "I can't tell how many right now," he said — and that he had named technical experts to help him investigate.

Behind the dam were two ponds used to purify fluorite from a mine that belonged to the Prealpi Mining Co. Judicial notices have been given to company and local officials, including Tesero's mayor, Adriano Iellici.

"The objective of our investigation," Simeoni said, "is to determine whether the approval for the two lakes had been given after proper examination and whether the work had been carried out according to the plan."

Giuseppe Zamberletti, the minister of civil defense, gave a report on the disaster to Parliament in Rome on Monday. He said the disaster was "not linked to natural factors, but obviously due to actions and omissions of men."

Dam expert says U.S. has many unsafe structures

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Four years after a massive federal study identified 2,884 unsafe dams in the United States, little is being done to prevent the type of tragedy that claimed about 200 lives in Italy last week, a dam safety expert says.

"You're talking about hundreds of millions of dollars to upgrade dams," said Joe Ellam, director of Pennsylvania's dam safety program and head of the Association of State Dam Safety Officials.

"Little is being done to correct these dams," according to Ellam, who says the effort is being hampered by a lack of federal money.

Ensuring the safety of U.S. dams is a patchwork process, with states responsible for the bulk of the facilities. There is no uniform safety law and little federal assistance, according to Ellam and officials in Washington.

Federal agencies like the Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation look after the dams they build, but federal dams account for only about 5 percent of the approximately 67,000 dams — both earthen and masonry — across the country.

The rest are either state facilities or privately owned, and their inspections are left to the states — only 10 of which have safety programs considered effective by the Association of State Dam Safety Officials.

Ellam says that while "things have improved" in his business in the last decade, disasterous failures "could happen here. They have occurred. They will continue to occur. Of man-made structures, dams pose the probability for greatest loss of life and economic damage."

His state was the site of the worst earthen dam collapse in U.S. history — the 1889 disaster that claimed 2,200 lives in Johnstown when the South Fork dam gave way nine miles north of the city.

In the 1970s, a series of dam disasters caught Washington's attention.

In February 1972, 125 people were killed in West Virginia in the failure of a mine-tailings dam similar to the one that gave way in Italy. Four months later, 240 people died as Rapid City, S.D., was inundated after the Canyon Lake dam, also earthen, broke.

Those disasters quickly resulted in a law establishing a federal program to make an inventory of U.S. dams — big and small — and to inspect those considered "high hazard" — meaning that lives and property would be lost in a failure.

This program still wasn't off the ground in 1976, when the earthen Teton dam failed in Idaho, killing 11 people. It was a Bureau of Reclamation facility.

But the program still hadn't begun in July 1977 when disaster again struck Johnstown, Pa., with the collapse of the Laurel Run dam, killing more than 40 people.

The Carter administration's attention was captured in November 1977, when an earthen dam gave way in northeast Georgia, killing 39 people in a wall of water that engulfed Toccoa Falls Bible College.

As rescuers cleaned up the mess in the president's home state, Jimmy Carter gave the order that started the long-delayed dam survey by the Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation.

When it was completed in 1981, the agencies reported that 2,884 of the 8,639 "high hazard" dams inspected were unsafe. A high percentage of them were earthen dams, according to Jack Thompson, assistant chief of the engineering division for the Corps of Engineers.

The worst 132 unsafe dams since have been repaired, but there have been no federal reinspections to determine whether problems at the other 2,752 dams have been corrected, according to Thompson.

"Nothing's been done since 1981 except at the state level," Thompson said. "We've tried to put the responsibility on the states."

Ellam says that at the state level, "the situation is a mixed bag right now."

Twenty-six states have what his association considers effective dam safety laws on the books, but only 10 have effective programs to carry out their laws, according to Ellam.

At the other end of the spectrum, four states — Alabama, Delaware, Florida and Hawaii — have no laws at all, Ellam said. He added that Missouri — which led the nation with 451 "unsafe" dams in 1981 — passed a law, but exempted dams built before 1983.

Asked about the state of dam safety in the nation today, he said: "Without a (new) inventory, it's difficult to discuss where we're at."

Ancient religion, animal deaths linked

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The dismembered animals, buckets of blood and priestesses in white robes found by police when they made 19 animal cruelty arrests were part of a religion with roots in Africa, an anthropologist says.

The arrests Sunday in a blood-spattered apartment in this resort city were the third time this month that police have been confronted with similar scenes, which anthropologist Mercedes Sandoval said are evidence of a Cuban-based voodoo sect known as Santeria.

The 19 people, all believed to be Cubans, were arrested after neighbors called the police.

Investigators said they found a robed woman kneeling, surrounded by other worshipers dressed in blood-smeared clothing, while in the kitchen two women were standing over a sink, butchering chickens.

Officers charged all 19 with cruelty to animals. They face maximum fines of $250 or six months in jail.

Strewn around the apartment were hundreds of chicken, duck and lamb parts, three lamb carcasses without legs and several live chickens and pigeons, along with the buckets of blood and animal intestines, police said.

The discovery came a week after Atlantic City detectives searching for two men wanted for assault found a similar scene in neighboring Pleasantville, said Detective Richard Roff.

On July 10 in Miami, police tipped by an anonymous caller found dead goats, chickens and ducks in a house. Fifteen people were arrested and charged with cruelty to animals, authorities said.

Ms. Sandoval, who teaches at Miami-Dade Community College and the University of Miami, said investigators probably found Santeria worship sites.

The religion, which has its roots in Africa, was brought to Cuba on slave ships centuries ago and has arrived in the United States with recent mass immigrations of Cubans, she said.

In Santeria, believers visit the priest or priestess, called "santero" or "santera," who perform animal sacrifices to the gods, Ms. Sandoval said in a telephone interview from Miami. The animals' blood is poured into bowls as offerings to the gods, she said.

Because the rites of Santeria have been blended with Roman Catholic ritual in Cuba, its gods have taken on some characteristics of Catholic saints. A cross was attached to the altar Roff found in the Pleasantville house.

Investigators said no ritual was going on in the Pleasantville house, but chicken heads were found and a state police analysis determined that blood found in the house belonged to dogs, rodents, rabbits and chickens.

Doris Clossey, president of the local Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals said there was other evidence linking the Pleasantville and Atlantic City discoveries.

"They had exactly the same symbols — knives, cast-iron pots, horseshoes and an altar set up with candles," she said.

Police said a 16-year-old girl was in the apartment along with an infant boy who was lying quietly on a bed under which investigators found lamb remains. The girl was not charged, police said.

Ms. Sandoval said that while Americans might be shocked by such cases, they they should remember that most religions have, at some time in their history, included animal sacrifices in rituals.

"I think this is America confronting Africa after 300 years of denying it," Ms. Sandoval said, adding that the community's reaction may show "how tolerant America can be."

Man who steered truck from running board detained

MONAHANS (AP) — A man who stood on the running board of an 18-wheel truck and steered it through the window while leading police on a wild interstate highway chase through three counties has been taken to a state hospital for tests, authorities said.

Bradford C. Moore, 37, of Decatur, Ga., was arrested early Sunday eight miles east of Midland. The stolen truck he was driving finally came to a stop after officers shot out both front tires, authorities said.

Officials said the truck was stolen at a truck stop at Wickett, five miles west of Monahans, and the chase began soon afterward. For about two-thirds of the 62-mile chase on Interstate 20, Moore was driving the truck eastbound in the westbound lane, authorities added.

Twenty-five police vehicles from six different law enforcement units were involved in the chase, officials said.

Moore was taken to the Ward County Jail in Monahans and charged with unauthorized use of a motor vehicle. But officials decided he should undergo psychiatric examination at Big Spring.

"They carried him down there this afternoon," Ward County deputy Fred Clark said Monday.

The chase began in Ward County and proceeded into Ector County and finally into Midland County.

A roadblock was positioned about 12 miles west of Odessa on I-20, but Ector County sheriff's lieutenant Carl Watters said Moore saw the blockade, drove across the median and continued traveling east in the westbound lanes.

Deputies fired several rounds into the radiator of the vehicle, but the truck continued on, still forcing traffic off the road, Watters said.

"So we shot the right front tire of the truck out. The truck didn't stop. It still continued eastbound, running cars off the road. So, we shot the left front tire off the vehicle. The vehicle still didn't stop. It was traveling about 50 mph to 60 mph with no front tires," Watters said.

In the meantime, Odessa police units were driving in front of the truck directing oncoming traffic to the shoulders of the roadway to clear a path for the truck, Watters said.

The truck finally came to a halt about eight miles east of Midland near a rest area.

CRIME

Midland's combined figures for certain major crimes were lower than the combined figures for Odessa and Ector County, but the difference in murders was less than many Midlanders might assume, especially considering Ector County's larger population. For murder, Midland had eight to Ector's 10; for rape, it was 17 to 31; for robbery, 20 for Midland and 50 for Ector; for assault, 273 to 443; for burglary, 1,300 for Midland and 1,748 for Ector.

"Midland is coming up," said Ector County Sheriff's Captain Larry Crawford.

Crawford and Gideon agreed the increase in reported child-abuse cases didn't mean more of these crimes were being committed, but that more attention was being focused on the problem. Indecency-with-a-child cases increased to 16 from five reported the first six months of 1984, and the Sheriff's Office showed an increase in "sex offenses" from nine to 12.

Mrs. Blackburn, besides being a member of the provincial council, is a member of the Black Sash anti-apartheid organization. She is the best-known white activist in the riot-torn eastern province, and frequently intercedes for black leaders in trouble with the authorities.

Thousands of blacks were gathering in Kwa-Thema township, east of Johannesburg, for a funeral for 14 or 15 victims of anti-apartheid riots, reporters said. No violence was reported. Most adults heeded a call for a one-day strike to coincide with the funerals.

A government spokesman said about 120,000 black students were boycotting classes across the country.

Priscilla Jana, a well-known Indian lawyer from Johannesburg, said she was detained briefly Monday on her way home from the airport after a trip to the United States. She said police searched her home, and told her to "keep my bags packed."

Police said about 4,000 people attacked a black policeman's home in the township of Tsakane, east of Johannesburg, on Monday, and police killed two blacks and wounded five others.

Another black was killed east of Johannesburg when officers fired into a crowd attacking them, police said.

Nearly 500 blacks have been killed in 11 months of violence. Most of the attacks have been aimed at black local government officials and policemen seen as collaborators with the white government.

"(President P.W.) Botha's desperate actions signify the beginning of the end of the apartheid system," African National Congress' secretary-general, Alfred Nzo, said in Lusaka, Zambia. "The proclamation ... constitutes an open admission by the Pretoria regime that it is losing control."

The African National Congress is the main guerrilla group fighting apartheid, South Africa's system of racial segregation under which 5 million whites rule 22 million blacks.

Under the state of emergency, police may arrest people without warrants, detain and interrogate suspects for 14 days, seal off areas, seize property, impose curfews and control press reporting.

OPEC

"We must defend the price," said Fawzi A. Shakshuki, the oil minister of Libya.

Yamani did not say how big the cut should be.

OPEC is divided between a faction that thinks the solution to OPEC's problems is a further cut in production and another group that believes lower prices are the answer.

Industry analysts say neither action is likely to halt a trend toward lower oil prices and waning OPEC power and wealth in the last half of the 1980s.

In less than 3½ hours of meetings Monday the ministers made only one significant decision — to put off until a later meeting the question of whether to cut production in order to support prices.

Subroto, who was re-elected president of the organization, told reporters the ministers were focusing mainly on the Saudi proposal for a cut in some oil prices.

"I think we agree now that we have to change" the spread — currently $1.50 a barrel — between prices for top-quality crudes and those of a lower grade, Yamani told reporters Monday evening.

He conceded, however, that not all his colleagues agree that the $26.50 a barrel price for lower-grade oils should be reduced. OPEC's base price for better-quality oils is $28 a barrel.

Mana Saeed Oteiba, the oil minister for the United Arab Emirates, made his view known in a poem that his aides distributed to reporters during Monday's meeting at a Geneva hotel.

"Lowering prices is the impotent's step to surrender," he wrote, "inclining with the wind wherever it blows."

WORLD

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — Police said today the terrorists who bombed an American airline office, a downtown synagogue and a Jewish nursing home could have escaped Denmark immediately afterward.

A caller claiming to represent the shadowy terror group Islamic Jihad said it set off the bombs Monday and pledged to target the residences of Western leaders, the Kremlin, and leaders of "imperialist" countries.

But the claim did not come until about five hours after the explosions. Until then, Danish authorities said they had not identified who was responsible.

"We alerted the airport and the border authorities, but that could not be entirely effective since we had no suspects at the time," inspector Wolmer Petersen said in a radio interview.

Police detained six foreigners, but none of them were charged. All were released later.

Four Algerians and one Jordanian who were among 27 people injured in the blasts, remained hospitalized late Monday. Police said one Algerian was severely burned. None of those hospitalized was a suspect in the attacks, police said.

Police said about half of the injured were Danes and about half were foreigners. The U.S. Embassy said three Americans were slightly injured.

The first of the bombs ripped apart the Copenhagen office of Northwest Orient Airlines, the only American air carrier with an office in Copenhagen. A second blast minutes later damaged a synagogue several blocks away, as well as an adjacent Jewish nursing home.

Police said at a news conference that both bombs appeared to have contained about 4½ pounds of an unidentified explosive.

A third bomb was found later Monday in the waters of Copenhagen's New Harbor, a restored area which attracts many tourists. That bomb was found in a Northwest Orient flight bag and taken from the scene in an armored, blastproof trailer.

Police said today they would not try to examine that bomb until later today.

News photographers said another suspected bomb was found in a courtyard of Christiansborg Palace, seat of Denmark's Parliament, but police said later it was not an explosive device.

In Beirut, Lebanon, an anonymous caller claiming to represent Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, claimed that it had carried out the two bombings in retaliation for Israeli raids.

Two charged with murder in bombing of Rainbow Warrior

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (AP) — A man and a woman were arrested today and charged with murder and arson in connection with the bombing of the Rainbow Warrior, a ship used in protests by the international environmental group Greenpeace, police said.

Detective Superintendent Allan Galbraith said the two were charged with the murder of Greenpeace photographer Fernando Periera, 36, who died in the July 10 explosion, arson and conspiracy to commit arson.

Galbraith, who is heading one of New Zealand's biggest ever police inquiries, said the arson charges related to damage to the Rainbow Warrior caused by explosives.

He said the pair would appear in Auckland District Court on Wednesday morning.

Investigation had focused on a Swiss couple arrested with false passports but Galbraith would not confirm it was the same pair.

New Zealand police said the two people arrested were a man and a woman, but said the investigation was continuing.

Galbraith said police still plan to question the French crew of a yacht that was in Auckland harbor at the time of the explosion.

WORLD in brief

U.S. conference delegate backs anti-terrorism plank

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — The only male American delegate to the politically charged U.N. women's conference clashed with Cubans, Nicaraguans and the PLO over the U.S. proposal for the conference to condemn terrorism.

East-West rancor, sharp condemnation of South Africa's policy of racial segregation and Arab-Israeli disputes have punctuated the conference, which ends the U.N.'s Decade for Women and is to map women's strategies for the next 15 years. The conference began July 15 and ends this Friday.

On Monday, for instance, about 70 delegates walked out when an Israeli delegate began an address.

The chief U.S. delegate, President Reagan's daughter Maureen, said the terrorism proposal was a bargaining chip to counter other political planks. The United States had said at the beginning of the conference that it wanted to limit disussion of world politics and focus instead on the "genuine concerns" of women.

The Palestine Liberation Organization asked the United States to withdraw the anti-terrorism resolution during a Monday meeting of the committee dealing with political issues.

Nicaragua, Tanzania and the South-West African People's Organization, which seeks independence for Namibia, supported the PLO.

Shamir seeks clemency

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir is campaigning for clemency for 25 Israelis convicted of carrying out terrorist attacks on Palestinians, an aide said today.

The trial of the terror ring ended Monday with life sentences for three Jewish settlers convicted of killing three Palestinians and wounding 33 others in a 1983 shooting spree in the occupied West Bank town of Hebron.

Lesser sentences ranging from four months to 10 years were handed down to the 22 other defendants during the 13-month trial, which pitted nationalists who condoned the vigilante actions against liberals who demanded severe sentences for the men.

The group was dubbed the Jewish underground after it was uncovered in 1984 and many Israelis refuse to view the men as terrorists.

Gunboat fires on vessel

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — An Israeli gunboat fired at a cargo ship off south Lebanon's port city of Sidon today and smoke was seen billowing from the vessel carrying a cement shipment from Romania, Sidon police reported.

Meanwhile in Beirut, Christian and Moslem militia gunners shelled each other's positions along Beirut's dividing Green Line and police reported four civilians were killed and 17 wounded.

The reported Israeli naval attack occurred at 11:30 a.m., about a mile off the coast of Sidon, where the ship Roula was bound, a police statement said. It did not mention the ship's nationality.

Hecklers to be controlled

LONDON (AP) — Police will protect orators at Speakers' Corner in London's Hyde Park from people who deliberately disrupt proceedings there, says Attorney General Sir Michael Havers.

Speakers' Corner, an outdoor forum open to anyone who wishes to speak, has recently been plagued by abusive hecklers. Havers said in Parliament on Monday the police had been instructed how to use existing park rules to send disruptive people away.

"Ordinary heckling is part of the fun, but when it is designed by a group of people scattered around the audience whose intention is total disruption, that cannot be tolerated," Havers said.

Reagan, Chinese president to discuss nuclear agreement

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, in his first high-level diplomacy since his cancer surgery 10 days ago, was receiving Chinese President Li Xiannian today to discuss a nuclear cooperation agreement and basic strategy toward the Soviet Union.

Officials said the long-stalled nuclear agreement probably will be signed this week, although not by the two presidents.

Reagan's schedule for his meeting with the 76-year-old Li has been somewhat abbreviated because of his surgery.

White House South Lawn welcoming ceremonies for the Chinese leader — normally heralded with trumpeteers, military bands playing national anthems and booming cannon and gun salutes — were to be cut back by about five minutes from the normal 30 minutes.

The two leaders were to meet afterward in the Blue Room, a formal reception room on the White House first floor, accompanied by their top advisers.

Normally, Reagan meets with a head of state in the Oval Office, then moves to the Cabinet Room next door for discussions with the leader and specialists from both governments.

Reagan will host a formal state banquet in Li's honor in the evening, but in order to shorten the normally scheduled four-hour event, the Chinese leader and his wife, Lin Jiamei, will arrive about 15 minutes later than usual.

Reagan planned to deliver a toast in Li's honor after the state dinner, but would not remain for the entertainment that follows such functions, said White House spokesman Larry Speakes.

He will spend a few moments in the Blue Room saying farewell to his Chinese guests and then retire to his private quarters, Speakes said.

A senior administration official said the nuclear cooperation agreement, first initialed during Reagan's visit to China 15 months ago, would be discussed by the two leaders, but they would spend most of their time on broader issues "like basic strategy of how we are both going to approach the Soviet Union."

Sino-Soviet relations have improved considerably in recent months. The two communist giants recently concluded a major trade and economic cooperation agreement. However, the official, who insisted on anonymity, said the Reagan administration sees no cause for alarm.

He said a reduction in tensions between Peking and Moscow "makes sense for them just as our current effort to engage the Soviets in a dialogue makes sense for us."

The visit is the first to the United States by a president of China's communist government. Li was invited by Reagan during his visit to China in April of last year. While the post of president in China is largely ceremonial, Li also is a member of the six-member standing committee of the party Politburo, which makes him a powerful figure.

After his 1984 trip, Reagan referred to the Chinese as "so-called communists," suggesting he thought they had become something different. But the senior official who briefed reporters on the visit said that isn't the view now being held.

While he said there have been some changes in China's economy that suggest capitalist influence, "it is equally clear that it is a communist country and the dominant institution of that country is a Communist Party. None of this will change in the foreseeable future."

White House peace pipe offered to dissatisfied Republican Dole

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House is offering a peace pipe to Republican senators as part of the effort to revive congressional budget talks and salvage deficit-reduction action on Capitol Hill this year.

White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan invited the top GOP leaders from the House and Senate to a White House meeting this afternoon to discuss the congressional agenda with less than two weeks remaining before Congress begins a month-long recess.

The White House meeting follows conciliatory gestures from the administration intended to soothe bitterness among Republican senators over President Reagan's actions in recent budget negotiations and criticism Regan has aimed at Congress.

The president called Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., on Monday to wish the senator a happy 62nd birthday. Reagan also offered to help Dole rescue a measure foundering on the Senate floor that would give the president authority to veto individual parts of legislation rather than rejecting the entire bill as he must do now.

Later, White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan arrived for a meeting on farm legislation in Dole's office bearing a birthday present.

Dole jokingly wondered aloud as he accepted the package whether it was ticking, like a bomb.

Dole unwraped the package and displayed an authentic Indian peace pipe for photographers. The senator pretended to take a puff and Regan smiled.

"I want to make sure Senate Republicans know I'm at peace with them," Regan said.

Barely two hours before, Dole, asked if he was still on speaking terms with the president's top aide, said sarcastically, "Yeah, we call each other a lot."

Republican senators have publicly expressed their frustration about the president at first urging them to pass a budget including a freeze on Social Security cost-of-living increases to trim deficits, and then backing away from the politically-sensitive provision under pressure from House Democrats and Republicans.

The GOP senators also were smarting about Regan last week angrily calling the budget impasse on Capitol Hill "ridiculous" and rebuking Congress for failing to come to grips with cutting federal spending.

Regan played down his previous remarks about Congress' inability to settle on a budget this year, saying "that's last week's story."

Regan also acknowledged the probable death of that "framework" for a budget compromise in which the president backed away from the Social Security freeze and raised the ire of GOP senators.

Dole has said that Senate Republicans hope to have a counteroffer to make to the House this week in an effort to revive the stalled budget talks.

Naval Academy court-martial begins

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — For only the third time this century, the U.S. Naval Academy has convened a general court-martial to hear charges against one of its midshipmen.

Clayton M. Lewis, 20, a second year midshipman whose court-martial was scheduled to begin today, is accused of stealing clothing, record albums and other goods worth about $8,000 from the midshipmen's store.

Lewis, of Roanoke Rapids, N.C., is charged with larceny, conspiracy to commit larceny, receipt of stolen goods and unauthorized absence from the Naval Academy.

The maximum penalty for conviction on all charges would be confinement for 11 years.

Aborted launch to get second chance

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Challenger's engines are ready for a second attempt Monday at the launch that was aborted because of a valve failure July 12, just three seconds before liftoff.

Challenger will blast off at 3:23 p.m. on Monday and return to Earth seven days later at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., shuttle managers said after final testing was completed on the engines.

Because they had been fired up July 12 before the launch was aborted, the engines had to be thoroughly checked before a new launch date could be set. The first launch was halted when a computer sensed that a valve in Challenger's No. 2 engine did not close properly and commanded all three main engines to shut down just three seconds before seven astronauts would have blasted off on a science mission.

Engineers believe a valve actuator was responsible for the abort. But they could not pinpoint the exact fault and the valve, actuator and a control system were replaced in No. 2 engine.

Officials decided to go ahead with the flight even though a computer that controls experiments in the cargo bay failed Friday. A backup computer could do the job, they said, but if it failed in flight, much of the science from a $78 million array of mainly astronomical instruments would be lost.

Meanwhile, engineers concluded Monday that about 1,000 of shuttle Columbia's 31,000 heat protection tiles were damaged by a rainstorm last week as the ship was being flown here from California.

Man says he'll raid church again to free daughter from preacher

LEE, Maine (AP) — A man seeking the return of his teen-age daughter from a fundamentalist church says he will "make another commando raid" even though an attack by pipe- and chain-wielding townspeople ended in a bloody brawl.

"We won't be so lenient next time," John W. Crooker, 43, told a radio call-in program Monday in nearby Lincoln, vowing to do whatever it takes to get his 16-year-old daughter to leave the congregation.

At least four people were injured when Crooker, accompanied by at least six men, some wielding pipes and chains, barged in on Sunday evening services at Lee Baptist Church, attended by about 85 people.

The next church service is planned for Wednesday, said Debby Dunphy, the Rev. Daniel Dunphy's wife, adding, "The Lord's work must go on."

"We're fundamental Bible-reading Christians," said Mrs. Dunphy on Monday. "We're not hurting anybody."

Although no one was arrested, extra state police have been sent to the remote community of about 700 people in northern Maine, and Penobscot County District Attorney Christopher Almy ordered an investigation.

"That wasn't my idea to spill blood," Crooker said of Sunday night's violence, "but we've got flesh and blood in there."

Crooker, a resident of nearby Prentiss, said Rev. Daniel Dunphy leads a "cult" that has lured at least four children from different families and caused three divorces.

Crooker's two daughters, Sheila, 16, and Rebecca, 17, left home after joining Dunphy's congregation. Crooker arranged to have them live in a foster home to keep them away from the pastor.

Dunphy, 34, a former Marine who opened his ministry in Lee three years ago, was charged with assault and criminal trespass after taking Sheila from the foster parents.

Rebecca has since married, but her parents said they are trying to have the marriage annulled.

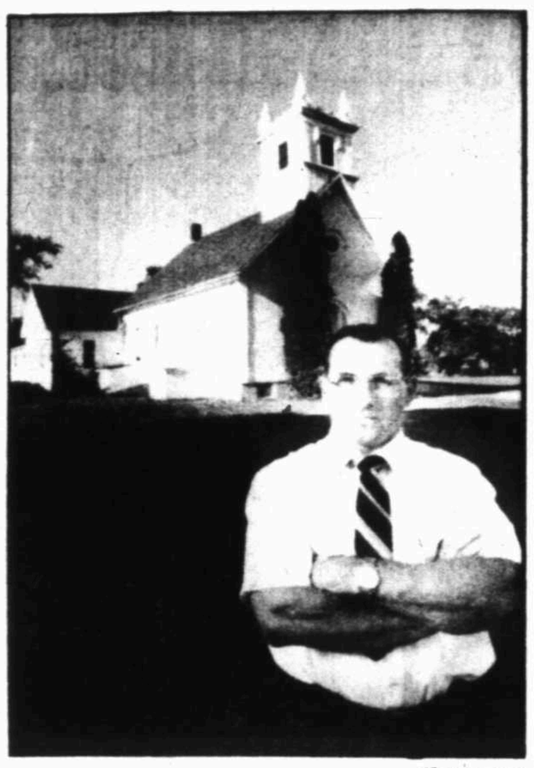

Most townspeople who are not members of the congregation are critical of Dunphy and say police haven't done enough to get Sheila returned to her parents.

Soon after his arrival in Lee, Dunphy created a stir when he preached via a loudspeaker from the steeple of his white church in the middle of town. He was also criticized for sending members of his ministry door-to-door and for baptizing by immersion.

At the time, he said he dreamed of having a congregation of 1,800 people.

Members now say as many as 100 people show up for services. Crooker and his wife, Madeline, said they attended his church but later decided it was a cult.

Dunphy said he has been ridiculed and his church attacked. More than a year ago, the pastor said his church had been vandalized, people spat at him and played loud rock music and threw firecrackers outside during services.

Officers scalped Springsteen tickets

JERSEY CITY, N.J. (AP) — Police officers scalped tickets for a Bruce Springsteen concert for as much as $150 apiece after pushing to the head of a line of hundreds of people waiting to buy tickets, some of the fans say.

One fan, Joe McAllister, said he was offered tickets by one of the officers for $170 apiece. He said he talked him down to $150 per ticket and bought four.

Sgt. Peter Norbach, of Jersey City police internal affairs division, told WOR-TV in Secaucus Monday that an investigation is continuing into the affair.

The officers were supposed to be controlling the crowd of fans who stood on line outside a Ticketron outlet at St. Peter's College to buy tickets for Springsteen concerts scheduled at Giants' Stadium in August.

"We're trying to contact the people who made comments (on the television report) and if we can't locate them, we're asking that they call us," Norbach said.

Alaska impeachment trial starts

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Bill Sheffield's future as Alaska's chief executive may ultimately hinge on whether some perjury should not be grounds for impeachment — what one lawmaker said was the difference between "the good lie and the bad lie."

Sam Dash, the former chief counsel to the U.S. Senate's Watergate Committee during the impeachment hearings against former President Richard Nixon in 1973-74, was acting in the same capacity Monday for the Alaska Senate.

In a hot, crowded state Capitol hearing room, Dash summarized the evidence that led a grand jury to recommend that legislators consider impeaching Sheffield for his alleged role in negotiating a state office lease in Fairbanks.

The grand jury issued no indictments, but suggested on July 2 that lawmakers consider removing the first-term Democrat from office for allegedly steering a $9.1 million state office lease to a friend and fund-raiser.

The panel also faulted Sheffield, a millionaire hotel chain owner, for his testimony, which it said "reflects a lack of candor and a disrespect for the laws of this state."

Dash and Philip Lacovara, a former Watergate counsel now on Sheffield's legal team, argued Monday over what should constitute an impeachable offense. The Alaska Constitution is not clear on the issue.

Cursive writing unneccessary?

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — The smooth, flowing lines of cursive writing are a waste of school time, says a University of Iowa professor who argues that the homely blocks of printed lettering are all a child ever needs to learn.

"It's important for teachers and parents to be aware that there's nothing magic about cursive writing and that a child can go through life successfully without ever using cursive writing," says Beatrice Furner, an education professor who's been studying handwriting for more than 20 years.

She said she first became interested in the problems caused by teaching cursive writing, or script, when she was a third grade teacher.

"In a class with 20 to 25 kids, you're going to have four or five with difficulties learning cursive and another group that makes the transition but doesn't make it easily. And it's all so unnecessary," she said.

Exciting times

This is an exciting time in which to live — especially because of revelations from the astronomical world about the solar system, the galaxy and the universe around us.

One mind-boggling revelation after another has been unfolding for the past few years, and it seems that each new "discovery" virtually eclipses the last.

Most recently was the announcement that astronomers next door to us in New Mexico have discovered what they believe is the biggest known structure in the universe — an enormous string of galaxies which could lead astronomers to unravel the very origin and possibly the fate of the universe.

For centuries, man has turned his eyes to the heavens in hopes of discovering the answers to questions that were perplexing. How was the world, the solar system, the galaxy and the universe formed? Is man alone in the universe or do other forms of "intelligent" life exist outside our earthly confines? What "force" or "power" is responsible for this monumental design? These and many other questions have nagged at man's consciousness for centuries on end.

Of course the answers aren't known today. But in recent times, the misty uncertainty has been burned away by technological advances which have given mankind the ability to send probes into deep space to seek life on different worlds and to attempt to unravel some of the universe's mysteries.

Modern man has reveled in the striking beauty of other planets sent back via Voyager probes. They have revealed to mankind that the beauty of the solar system — the Milky Way — and the universe is not limited to Earth but is spread around.

As man's technological abilities increase without a doubt the exciting revelations of the universe will become more frequent. The future promises to be an even more fascinating time to enjoy learning of the universe.

Refilling classrooms

Life in the United States appears to be pegged to 20-year generational cycles. The passage of every two decades can almost be counted on to bring a revival of former dress styles, cultural fads, social movements and even political attitudes — with a few superficial modifications.

That history indeed repeats itself is evident in the "discovery" that the country's school systems are on the brink of another "baby boom." The baby boom youngsters who burst the seams of classrooms in the early 1960s have now produced a boom of their own.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, the nation's pre-school population grew by 9 percent between 1980 and 1984. As of the moment the under-five years of age population is at its highest level since 1968. The post-war baby boomers obviously have now moved into the prime years of child bearing.

Ten years ago, many U.S. communities, particularly those in which large-scale housing developments had sprouted, saw the classrooms emptying in the new schools they had erected. Some school districts were even forced to shutter buildings which had been standing only about five years. That wasn't the case in Midland, but Midland doesn't always reflect the norm.

It is to be hoped that the inventories of classrooms have been adequately maintained to accommodate the anticipated new influx. School districts certainly are in a better position to handle swelling enrollments than they were in the late 1950s and early 1960s. Moreover, the possibility of the dreaded "double session " should be less of a threat today to pupils and teachers.

Another View:
Enhance police safety

The Senate dealt a body blow to gun control this month by approving Senator McClure's bill to weaken the 17-year-old ban on interstate gun sales. Now it appears ready to make some amends by restricting armor-piercing ammunition. More than just a consolation prize, the bill would significantly enhance public safety, especially that of the police.

So-called "cop-killer" ammunition, made of hard alloys, has no legitimate purpose in law enforcement, hunting, or target shooting. But it is favored by narcotics traffickers and other criminals because it can penetrate a police officer's protective vest. For years, police groups have demanded that it be outlawed. Senator Moynihan and Representative Biaggi have led a determined campaign for such a ban.

At first the Reagan administration bought the loud but specious complaint of the National Rifle Association that the offending bullets could not be properly defined without also jeopardizing the sale of popular sporting ammunition. Then last year, faced with mounting pressure from police groups, the gun lobbyists backed off, and the White House agreed to accept a definition worked up by experts at the Justice and Treasury Departments.

Last October, however, the gun lobby mounted a quiet election-time campaign. That led to withdrawal of the bill in the House while the Senate version ran afoul of late-session parliamentary maneuvering.

That defeat, however, may now yield a net gain. The lobbyists' last-minute mischief annoyed many legislators and left them determined to pass a strong bill this year. Whereas last year's Senate bill would have banned only the manufacture and import of the hard bullets, the measure pending in both houses is likely to prohibit their sale as well.

The administration's support now seems secure and the outlook for passage is favorable. Senators who offended police groups by supporting the McClure dilution are grateful for the chance to do something for law enforcement. Yet the bills' supporters have been burned before and worry about a gun lobby emboldened by the McClure victory. Congress needs to be reminded that the lives of police officers throughout the nation are at stake.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1829, William Austin Burt of Mount Vernon, Mich., received a patent for his "typographer," a forerunner of the typewriter.

In 1886, New York City saloonkeeper Steve Brodie claimed to have jumped off the Brooklyn Bridge into the East River.

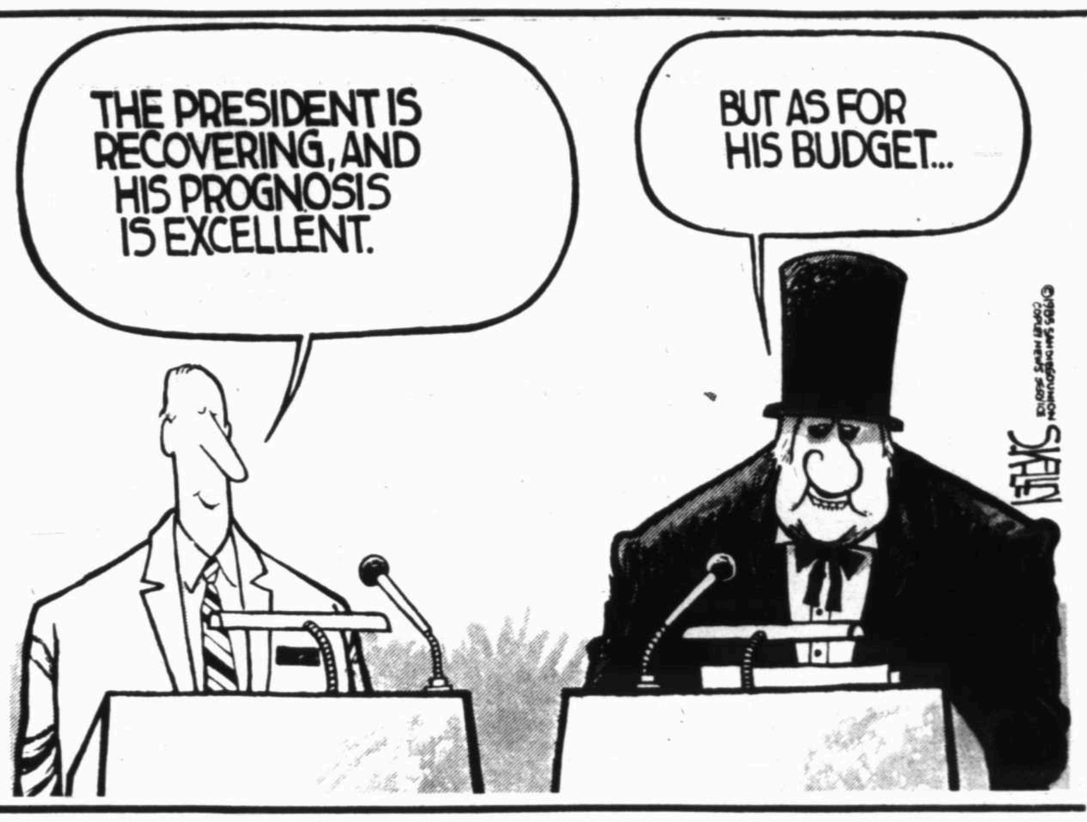

In 1904, according to some accounts, the ice cream cone was invented by Charles E. Menches during the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in St. Louis.

In 1914, Austria-Hungary issued an ultimatum to Serbia after the killing of Archduke Francis Ferdinand by a Serbian terrorist. The dispute led to World War I.

In 1945, French Marshal Henri Petain, who had headed the Vichy government during World War II, went on trial, charged with betraying his country. He was convicted and sentenced to death, but his sentence was commuted.

In 1951, Henri Petain died.

In 1958, Britain's Queen Elizabeth II named the first four women to peerage in the House of Lords.

JACK ANDERSON
FBI admits 'deficiencies' in case

WASHINGTON — The FBI, in an internal review, has acknowledged "certain management deficiencies and inattention to detail" in its background investigation of Raymond Donovan, following his nomination as secretary of Labor.

Jack Anderson

That's an understatement of classic proportions.

The FBI was told early in January 1981 — before Donovan's confirmation hearings — that the New Jersey contractor, "is supposed to have been introduced to Genovese (crime family) 'capos,'" This startling tidbit came from an underworld informant and was dutifully passed on to FBI headquarters in Washington.

Obviously, if the informant's tip was true, the Senate Labor Committee should have been told about it. And the least the FBI could have done was try to ascertain the accuracy of the accusation.

Yet the agent who had heard the tip was told by his superiors not to pursue the matter. The reason, according to a bureau spokesman, was that the informant, Michael Orlando, had been accused of being "uncontrollable" and the agent had been ordered months earlier to break off contact with him.

This bureaucratic nicety prevailed, despite Orlando's track record of reliability in many earlier investigations. In fact, knowledge of Orlando's reliability extended to the very top: FBI Director William Webster. Yet nothing was done to develop the information, and the Senate was never told about Orlando's information.

In June 1981, four months after Donovan was confirmed, Webster asked the agent who "ran" Orlando, Lawrence Sweeney, to tell him what he knew about the informant. Sweeney responded with a 26-page letter on "Smitty," as Orlando was called in bureau communications. Our associate Tony Capaccio obtained a copy of the letter.

"Smitty is widely accepted in organized-crime circles and has acted as a courier of sensitive criminal information between the five New York families, as well as organizations in Miami, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Atlantic City, Buffalo and Montreal," Sweeney wrote.

"While acting as an informant (since 1977), Smitty was generally regarded by Organized Crime agents as one of the most productive sources in the FBI," Webster was told.

Among Orlando's 10 "most notable accomplishments," Sweeney listed his identification of "the principals of a new 'French Connection' heroin operation as well as numerous other multi-kilo heroin deals in the U.S."

Webster was also told that Orlando "identified the murderers in over 20 separate oganized-crime homicides since 1977," and furnished details on the 1979 gangland slaying of mob boss Carmine Galante.

Sweeney then told Webster that Orlando "volunteered information concerning personal knowledge he had of Donovan's alleged strong ties and prior clandestine meetings with various Genovese family figures." Orlando also indicated, Sweeney wrote, "that if directed, he would be willing to attempt to develop further information concerning these allegations."

Sweeney passed this offer along to his superiors. "I received no response to this offer," he told Webster.

A month after receiving Sweeney's letter, the FBI director wrote to Sens. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., giving them previously withheld details of allegations against Donovan. He did not tell the senators about Orlando.

CONSUMER REPORT: Americans who buy a fancy foreign car overseas for as little as half the price they'd pay in this country may not be getting quite the bargain they counted on. It could take expensive modifications to bring these so-called "gray market" cars up to U.S. pollution and safety standards.

Recently the Environmental Protection Agency and the California Air Resources Board conducted emissions tests on 27 gray market cars: 24 Mercedes, two BMWs and one Rolls-Royce. All but one failed.

The federal highway safety agency, meanwhile, subjected two cars to safety tests — brakes, power windows, bumpers — and both cars flunked.

Rep. Timothy Wirth, D-Colo., has introduced a bill that would impose a $50,000 fine and up to a year's prison term on any manufacturer who knowingly fails to comply with safety standards. A Wirth aide noted that there would be no need for this draconian legislation if gray market cars were simply banned from the country.

THE OMBUDSMAN: Ricardo Bofill, a professor of Marxism, sociology and journalism and former vice-rector of the human sciences faculty at the University of Havana, has learned the cruel cost of publicly criticizing Fidel Castro. Since 1967, he has spent more than seven years in prison. His current sentence is 12 years for "ideological deviationism."

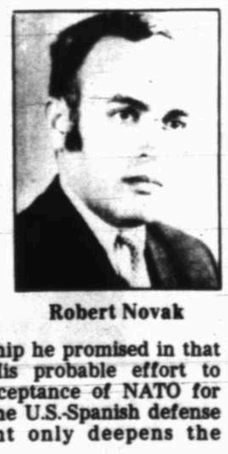

But Bofill's spirit is apparently unquenchable. In two letters smuggled out of prison to Of Human Rights, a Washington-based group, Bofill told of the formation of the Cuban Committee for Human Rights — which he heads though he's a prisoner.

Spain isn't in love with NATO

MADRID — Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez's purge of his NATO-bashing foreign minister cannot alter the anti-American political climate in newly-democratic Spain that, despite Iberian exaggeration, reflects not only approaching crisis here but U.S. political weakness in Europe.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Fernando Moran, called Spain's most adept foreign minister this century, was replaced because he wants his country out of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization — an exit pledged by Gonzalez in campaigning for his 1982 landslide election. Although the prime minister now embraces NATO, he confronts a seemingly unwinnable referendum on membership he promised in that campaign. His probable effort to trade off acceptance of NATO for weakening the U.S.-Spanish defense arrangement only deepens the problem.

The problem is less Gonzalez and his Socialist government than phobia of America, pronounced here but a problem almost everywhere in Western Europe. Spain suggests the U.S. is losing the war of ideas on this vital continent.

Spain is no microcosm of Europe. Its traditional isolationism persisted through two great European wars and was reinforced by Francisco Franco's long dictatorship. With polls showing only 25 percent support for NATO, the charismatic Gonzalez pledged withdrawal in the 1982 campaign.

Once elected, he was convinced by the U.S. that withdrawal would be folly. But NATO's 25 percent popular support has not grown, showing the Spanish people no less neutralist than the purged Moran. With Gonzalez unwilling to call off the referendum, he seeks some way to soften NATO membership.

What worries Washington is Spain staying in a NATO weakened by corroded U.S.-Spanish ties: "Europeanizing" Spanish defense interests. That would mean weakening the generation-old agreement with the U.S. for air bases essential to European defense plans. That agreement gets only 5 percent support in polls.

Those surveys suggest that Spaniards regard the U.S. as less a friend and more an enemy than the Soviet Union. After historic problems with English-speakers, Spain did not share Western Europe's relationship with the U.S. as liberators and allies. That's why criticism of President Reagan's Central American policies represents resentment of U.S. power more than policy differences.

Widespread imitation of U.S. culture is frequently interpreted here as part of a love-hate relationship. In fact, it may be more envy-hate in a society whose least attractive feature is, admittedly, envy.

Public mood echoes government performance. Instead of addressing the Cortes (parliament) in May, President Reagan spoke to "community leaders" at a private foundation. "No head of state has ever been treated worse in Spain," one business executive told us. A much warmer reception was given Nicaragua's Marxist President Daniel Ortega the following month.

The symbolic coup de grace came at last year's famed Pamplona festival. The leading local official tied the traditional red kerchief around the neck of Soviet Ambassador Dubimen but left out U.S. Ambassador Thomas Enders. Only with difficulty did Enders rectify the insult.

Anti-Americanism is abetted by the news media, particularly state-owned television which dispenses a straight left-wing regimen (treating the recent Soviet elections as serious news). Last month's massacre in San Salvador by a left-wing death squad was hardly mentioned.

Nor is Washington helped by the political right — divided, disorganized and itself not immune from anti-Americanism. Avowedly pro-American Spaniards blame Enders, a senior career diplomat and former assistant secretary of state, for his necessarily close contacts with the Socialist government. Indeed, Nancy Reagan's rich friends with contacts in Madrid's right-wing cafe society spread such poor reports on the ambassador that the first lady nearly had him fired just before the president's trip.

Although Enders is accused by some officials in Washington of "clientitis" (over-identification with the host government), he has built bilateral educational and cultural contacts where none previously existed. Still, the U.S. trails Soviet efforts under the aggressive and attractive Dubimen.

The prospect of Spain leaving NATO, or remaining a weak member with a reduced U.S. defense role, highlights this anti-Yankee backdrop. America losing the propaganda war to the Kremlin here has distinctive Spanish characteristics, but is disturbingly close to general U.S. decline in Europe. Washington needs to reconsider how it woos the masses of its most important allies.

JAMES RESTON
President's health not only his

WASHINGTON — The president is back at the White House, to everyone's relief, but his aides are still sore at the press for asking all those questions about his medical record. They say it's "distasteful" to intrude into the private relations between a doctor and his patient.

Maybe so. The only trouble is that this is precisely what the White House said when they were covering up the illnesses of Woodrow Wilson and Franklin Roosevelt.

James Reston

All would be well, they said. Besides, the questions were not only "distasteful" but painful. Since then, the historians, with good reason, have condemned the press for misleading the people.

The intention here is not to suggest that President Reagan's illness is as serious as Wilson's in 1919 or Roosevelt's in 1944, but merely to question the popular idea that the confidential relationship between doctor and patient also applies when the patient is president of the United States.

The health of a president is not merely a private but a public concern, as Reagan recognized by authorizing the disclosure of the most intimate details of his cancer operation. But there are two problems.

The first is that the people get almost too many medical facts about a president's illness in the White House, and too few about the state of his health before he gets there. And the second is that they seem indifferent to the health of presidential candidates during the election campaign.

The facts in Reagan's case are not in dispute. Everybody knew he was no spring chicken. His doctors told him in March of 1984, at the beginning of the last presidential election campaign, that they had found a polyp in his colon that was not malignant but a warning sign.

The White House doctor then was Daniel Ruge. We don't know what Ruge's advice was at that time, but Larry Speakes, the White House spokesman, whose manners are no better than his memories of history, said he would not make Ruge "available for questioning," again on the ground of confidential doctor-patient relations.

In any event, nothing was done about that first medical warning, and there are two theories here about that.

The first is that Reagan didn't take the news all that seriously, and didn't really want to think about it. The second is that he thought vaguely about it, but decided it was no big deal. And if he went into the hospital to have it removed, even if the doctors found nothing else, it would be front-page news and raise in the election campaign the issue of his age, which was the one thing he feared the most.

So what? Was it a medical decision or a political decision? Nobody but the president really knows.

What we do know is that the White House is now saying — and you can't blame them at this late date — that there was never really any discussion in 1984 of the president's health in relation to the re-election campaign, which is probably true. But why wasn't the matter discussed? This is one of many unanswered questions.

It's interesting to compare all this with how President Eisenhower dealt with the health-and-age issue after he had a heart attack and before he decided to run for a second term.

On Jan. 13, 1956, he invited several members of his Cabinet to dinner at the White House. Among them were Secretary of State Dulles and Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey; his chief of staff, Sherman Adams; Henry Cabot Lodge, Jim Hagerty, his press secretary, and his brother Milton.

The president placed before them the detailed medical reports of his doctors, and asked some hard questions: What if he died during the campaign, or shortly after the election if he won? Who would be left behind? He mentioned some possible successors. He went round the table asking each one what he should do.

All said he should go for a second term, including Mamie, who told him his health would be cared for better in the White House than anyplace else; all except his brother Milton, who insisted to the end, and lost, that Ike should quit while he was ahead.

Again, personal and historical analogies are reckless if not treacherous. But at least Ike tried to make a rational and orderly transition of presidential power and wondered, as he told me one night, that maybe there should be some outside panel of doctors that could consider or confirm the health problems of presidential candidates before it was too late.

Lawmaker: IRS hurting unemployment fund

AUSTIN (AP) — Rep. Lloyd Criss, D-LaMarque, says slow action by the Internal Revenue Service in handling Texas' repayment of a federal loan is threatening to cost Texas businessmen more taxes.

Criss, chairman of the House Labor and Management Relations Committee, appealed Monday to Texas members of Congress to put pressure on the IRS.

He said it was a repeat of an appeal made last April.

"The IRS is again threatening the solvency of our state's unemployment fund," Criss said in his letter to Texas senators and congressmen. "Their bureaucratic inertia could easily cause a $600 million tax increase of Texas business. That means $105 per employee for each business in Texas."

Because of record unemployment in 1982, Texas' unemployment compensation fund was bankrupted and the state had to borrow federal money to continue paying benefits to jobless workers.

The state borrowed $825 million of which $84 million is still owed.

Criss said several federal regulations govern the repayment of this loan. If Texas' fund is insolvent on any Nov. 10, employers lose 0.3 percent of the credit to their federal unemployment taxes.

Normally, employers receive a 5.4 percent credit against the 6.2 federal unemployment tax, paying a net tax of 0.8 percent to the federal government. Last November, 0.3 percent of the 5.4 percent credit was lost because the fund was still in debt. If the fund is again insolvent Nov. 10 of this year, employers will lose an additional 0.3 percent or a total of 0.6 percent, for an effective tax rate of 1.4 percent.

In addition, Criss said, a different federal regulation requires businesses in states which have been insolvent on Jan. 1 of three or four consecutive years to be charged a percentage in addition to the 0.3 percent federal unemployment loss. The added tax is calculated by a Department of Labor formula, and could be as high as 0.9 percent for Texas employers.

This 0.9 percent, added to the 0.6 percent credit loss, would result in a 1.5 percent tax increase for Texas businesses, if the IRS actions cause the fund to be insolvent Nov. 10. In dollar terms, this is a $600 million tax increase, Criss said.

Criss said that Gov. Mark White on July 1 asked the U.S. Department of Labor to put a limit on the amount of taxes that could be generated by any federally mandated increase. However, in order for that cap to be approved, Texas' fund must be solvent by Sept. 30, Criss said.

"The IRS' collections are crucial to our ability to meet that deadline and limit the amount of money our employers may have to pay," Criss said.

"They assured us they would improve their collection and crediting procedures," he said. "Now they are telling us they will never credit Texas' account with the entire amount we are owed, because 'it has never been that way in other states.'

TDC officials haggle over magazine

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Prison officials and inmates are haggling over why a Texas Department of Corrections official temporarily barred an award-winning inmate magazine from being published.

Inmate editors contend Lane McCotter, then deputy prison director, halted the printing of the magazine because of an article criticizing TDC administrators.

But prison officials say the TDC presses were too busy printing other publications to accommodate the glossy 70-page periodical, titled Joint Endeavor.

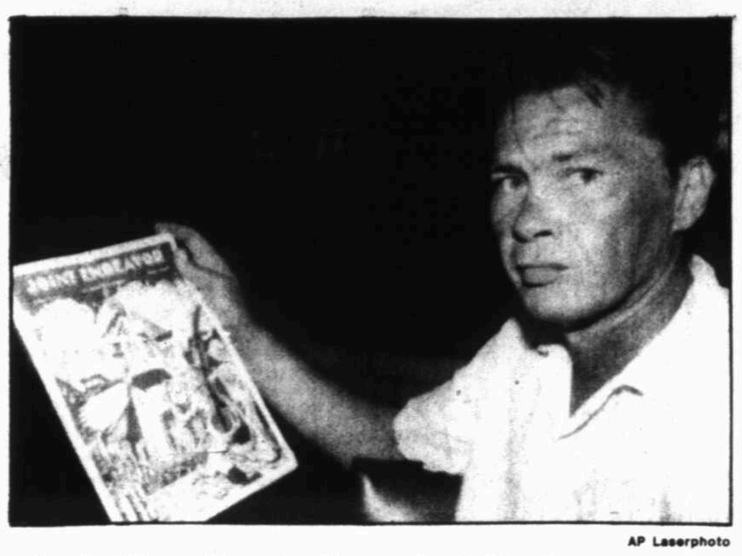

"We weren't designed to print a newspaper or magazine," said Jack B. Pursley, warden at the Huntsville Unit, which houses some of the magazine's inmate editors.

The Endeavor, which won 17 national prison press awards last year, started as an inmate newsletter.

McCotter on June 11 canceled publication of the quarterly magazine. Prison officials had taken the June edition, which was ready for printing in April, but never returned it.

However, last week McCotter — who in June 17 was named to succeed Raymond Procunier as TDC head — changed his mind, saying the magazine could be printed at least temporarily.

"We never intended to cancel the project permanently," McCotter said."We were just trying to let the print shop catch up on some work. It was a big mistake to have everyone think the magazine had been discontinued."

AP Laserphoto

Lonnie Griggs, 45, serving 15 years for Dallas County convictions of robbery and illegal possession of a firearm, holds a copy of the magazine Joint Endeavor, put out by the inmates.

Pursley said the main reason the magazine was stopped was because of an overload of printing jobs piling up in the prison system.

"It had nothing to do with the content" of the magazine article, Pursley said.

In addition to the Endeavor, the TDC presses print all prison forms, guard post orders, policy manuals, annual reports, court ordered documents and a variety of other prison-related publications.

John Sullivan, an inmate editor for the Endeavor, said a controversial article in the June edition prompted prison officials to stop the printing.

"They felt it slanderous towards all the old administration," said Sullivan, 36, serving 30 years at the Huntsville Unit for a Harris County murder conviction. "They felt it insinuated that the old administration condoned the brutality and all that occurred."

The article eventually was printed in the Texas Observer, a biweekly liberal political journal. It described problems in the TDC such as brutality and mismanagement.

"The idea that Texas had a model prison system was a myth created and propogated by the TDC, with the unwitting help of the media," stated the article, written by inmate Michael Vines..

Vines, 32, serving a life sentence at the Huntsville Unit for Tarrant County convictions of murder and murder with malice, said a warden's secretary told him the magazine was disbanded because he wrote "with a poison pen" about prison adminstrators.

Inmates said they offered to delete the article from the edition in order to keep the magazine.

Pursley said prison officials didn't have time to censor the magazine properly.

Astronauts preparing for salvage mission

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Five astronauts will be practicing every day for the next month to prepare for an Aug. 24 launch of one of the most complex and dangerous space salvage missions ever attempted, the spacemen said Monday.

Astronaut Joe Engle, commander of the eight-day space shuttle mission that will include the salvage of the crippled Syncom 3 satellite, said he and his four crewmates will be practicing seven days a week until launch day to prepare for the tricky orbital flight.

In the final pre-mission news conference, Engle said, "I can't tell you that we are ready today, but we've got a month and we'll be ready by launch time."

With Engle on the flight will be pilot Richard Covey and mission specialists James D. van Hoften, Dr. William F. Fisher, and John M. Lounge.

Engle and Covey will guide space shuttle Discovery to a rendezvous with the Syncom and van Hoften and Fisher will then conduct a space walk to capture and repair the craft.

Syncom 3, an $85 million communications satellite that was to be used by the Navy, was deployed from the space shuttle last April. It failed to turn itself on and has been drifting uselessly in orbit since.

The satellite's three rocket engines are still loaded with powerful and explosive propellants, posing an unprecedented hazard to the rescue attempt.

Engle said a final decision to attempt the salvage was made only three months ago and since then, engineers for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and for the satellite manufacturer, Hughes Aircraft, have planned the entire rescue effort. This included design, manufacture and test of an array special tools needed for the repair.

The mission plan calls for van Hoften to snare the satellite by hand using a special tool. Engle said that Fisher, a physician, will then perform "bypass surgery" on the satellite by installing electrical wiring to bypass a failed power circuit within the spacecraft.

At points during the repair, both Fisher and van Hoften will have to steady the spacecraft by hand, which van Hoften described as "kind of like holding onto your house and moving it around."

Fisher said in the weightlessness of space, moving the 15,000-pound satellite, should be "surprisingly easy."

Schools offer 'perks' for bilingual teachers

DALLAS (AP) — Marella Ramirez isn't worried about getting a job when she graduates from college in December. She wants to be a bilingual teacher, such a rare commodity that schools nationwide are frantically vying for their services.

"I've gotten so many offers, I've lost count," the 22-year-old senior at Pan American University in Edinberg said.

About 4.5 million children nationwide speak so little English, they need bilingual education. But there are only about 158,000 bilingual instructors in the country, The Dallas Morning News said.

As a result, school districts are offering bonuses of up to $6,000 a year and other perquisites to bilingual teachers.

"They offer good money. They say their bilingual programs are good. They say their campuses are nice," Ms. Ramirez said of the recruiters. "But I haven't really looked into any of them. I want to stay in the (Rio Grande) Valley."

National bilingual education experts say the number of bilingual teachers would almost have to double to reach the ideal ratio of one teacher for every 15 students.

"We are all competing for the same scare resource," said Ross Taylor, head of the multilingual education department for Chicago public schools.

Taylor said that the bonuses offered by some schools in Texas, which is second only to California in the number of pupils who speak little English, "are going to wipe us off the map."

The vast majority of students needing bilingual education are Hispanic, according to the U.S. Department of Education.

Texas education officials estimate the state has 285,000 children who qualify for bilingual education, but only 7,500 teachers — 1 for every 38 pupils.

Bonuses aren't the only lures. Some school districts offer free college tuition to high school students who pursue a degree in bilingual education, The News said.

According to Sarah Melendez of the National Association of Bilingual Education in Washington, the situation isn't getting any better because the number of students who need bilingual teaching is growing at such a rapid clip.

"And there is a very small number of bilingual teachers being produced," she added. "The number is under 2,000 a year."

The competition for bilingual teachers in Texas has become even fiercer since the passage of a new state law requiring districts to offer free bilingual classes to preschoolers.

In Houston, where bilingual teachers are offered bonuses of up to $6,000 a year, the ratio of bilingual teachers to pupils is 1 to 44. In Dallas, where school officials say they need at least another 100 bilingual teachers, the ratio is 1 to 26.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Conditions forecast for 8 a.m. Wednesday

Heavy rainfall possible

From Staff and Wire Reports

A flash flood watch will be in effect tonight as the National Weather Service expects heavy rainfall in the Midland area but forecasters say the chance for rain is expected to decrease Wednesday.

The outlook for tonight calls for cloudy skies and a 60 percent chance of thunderstorms with locally heavy rainfall, causing possible flash flooding. A low in the upper 60s will be accompanied by southerly winds at five to 10 mph.

Wednesday will be partly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms and a high in the upper 80s. Winds are expected to increase from the south at less than 15 mph.

Monday's high of 91 was 12 degrees below the record set in 1981. This morning's low was 16 degrees above the 1978 record of 53.

STATE

A high-pressure ridge over the Gulf of Mexico brought warm, humid air and widely scattered thundershowers to West Texas early today and forecasters predicted more rainfall later.

Thundershowers developed over the Permian Basin of Southwest Texas, while partly cloudy skies were common across northern and western sections of the state.

Violent weather in West Texas on Monday prompted a tornado warning for Ector County, and several other funnel clouds were reported near Abilene and Lubbock. But no damage or injuries were reported, authorities said.

Skies were fair over much of South and Southeast Texas today. Winds were light and southerly statewide, the National Weather Service said.

Low temperatures ranged from the 70s to 60s in the south plains and southwestern sections. Extremes at 4 a.m. were 65 at El Paso and 83 degrees at the Corpus Christi Naval Air Station.

NATION

As tropical storm Bob brought heavy rain and six-foot waves onto Florida's southwest coast, thunderstorms ranged across the Rockies and down into the Texas Panhandle early today.

Bob, the second named storm of the 1985 hurricane season, was about 60 miles southwest of Fort Myers, Fla., around midnight, the National Weather Service reported.

Gale warnings remained over a part of the Florida Keys and along the coast from Flamingo to Venice as 60-mph gusts blew in from the Atlantic.

Angels return home in rare form, rip Jackson, 10-2

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

For a Midland pitcher, Doug Banning turned in a rare route-going performance and second baseman Mark McLemore supplied the muscle as the Angels cooled off the Jackson Mets, 10-2, in the opener of a six-game Texas League series at Angels Stadium Monday night.

The two teams make up a rained out game in Jackson with a doubleheader starting at 6:30 p.m. tonight.

While complete games may not be an every day occurrence on the Angel pitching staff, Banning is no stranger to nine innings. This was his third since joining the Angels — one an 11 inning effort—and 10th of the season. And but for a two-run homer in the second by Kevin Elster, the right-hander from Englewood, Colo., might have achieved something even more rare in Midland — a shutout.

"I got behind in the count, 2-0, and he was looking for my fast ball and I challenged him. More times than not I'll come out ahead in that situation," said Banning, "But this time he hit it and he hit it hard."

THAT GAVE Jackson, which came into the game with a series sweep of Beaumont behind it and enjoying a 2½-game lead in the TL East, its biggest lead of the season, a 2-0 lead at this point. But not for long.

Keyed by McLemore's three-run double, Midland scored five runs in the home second and never looked back.

For McLemore, wallowing in a 2-for-30 slump, home was a welcome sight. He snapped the slump with a single in the first and before the night was over added a single to center to go three-for-four.

"I got away from some things," said McLemore, whose average dropped from .320 to the .280s on the road trip. "It takes time, but I'm swinging a lot better."

The return home also gave the Angels a chance to take some "extra whacks", as Manager Joe Maddon put it, "this afternoon. That's something we weren't able to do on the road."

Sap Randall beat out an infield hit, Brian Hartsock singled to left and Mike Madril walked to set the table for McLemore's game-winner against Jackson left hander Dave Wyatt, 1-1. "I hit a fast ball. He hadn't been throwing too many fast balls. I hit if off the end of the bat and it went into the left field corner. I had to do something after the first inning." he said in reference to a missed scoring opportunity.

About the only thing wrong with McLemore's performance was that he got picked off base once and was caught stealing another time. "I haven't been on base much lately," reminded McLemore, who has stolen 28 bases. "I'll get the hang of it again."

THE OTHER big blow in the Midland attack was a three-run homer in the fifth by newcomer Brian Harstock to feature a four-run Midland fifth, a healthy wallop that cleared the fence in left-center.

After that it was just a question of whether Banning could last the distance. Relying on a fastball, curve and slider, Banning fanned five and walked five.

"With a lead like that, my main job was to get the ball over, keep it low and let them hit," Banning said. "No, I wasn't tired, but in a different situation — if the game had been closer — Joe might not have left me in there."

"If he had walked that last batter," said Maddon, "He'd have been out of there. He had already thrown 140 pitches, which is about 10 over my limit."

It was in the ninth, Felice hit a one-out single and with two out Banning walked Marlin McPhail before getting Darryl Denby on strikes for the final out.

Banning, a free agent out of Northern Colorado last year, broke into pro ball with a 1-6 season for Maddon at Peoria last year, but was 7-3 at Quad Cities, Midwest League, before reporting to Midland last month.

Banning got off to a rocky start when he gave up a single to lead off batter Stanley Jefferson, whom he picked off first. He then walked Mark Carreon, who was thrown out by catcher Dave Heath trying to steal.

HALO-CINATIONS — Craig Weissman, 4-5, and Scott Murray, 0-1, will go for the Mets in tonight's doubleheader. Maddon will counter with Bob Kipper, 3-3, and Don Timberlake, 3-7, maybe. Timberlake suffered an insect bite in Arkansas and was sporting a ballooned elbow Monday night. "We'll have to see how it responds," said Maddon....Third baseman Billie Merrifield suffered a muscle pull during batting practice and when he experienced a chest spasm after singling home McLemore in the second and was forced to retire for the night. He is listed as doubtful for tonight....Phil Stephenson is on loan from the Oakland organization. Last year he hit .302 with 10 homers for Tacoma, Pacific Coast League, but like Sap Randall wasn't getting to play that much in AAA ball this spring, so was sent down. "He's just getting back into stride," says Maddon. "He should help us." Monday he had a double and two walks in four appearances.

Oddibe's speed, power, defense propel Rangers to another win

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Oddibe McDowell called the pitch a mistake and Vern Ruhle said it wasn't, but either way it ended up being the deciding play of the game in the Texas Rangers' victory over the Cleveland Indians. It was Texas' fourth win in five games since the All-Star break.

The pitch, a 0-1 curve ball from Ruhle in the bottom of the eighth inning, was deposited over the right field fence by McDowell, providing the winning run for the Rangers in a 2-1 victory Monday night.

"I wasn't looking for a curve ball," McDowell said, "but he made a mistake and got it up, and I got lucky."

Ruhle just called it good hitting on the part of McDowell.

"I wouldn't call it a mistake," said Ruhle, who lost for the sixth time in eight decisions. "I threw a curve ball and he swung at it. He did a good job of hitting the pitch. If I knew he was going the hit the ball that good, I wouldn't have thrown it."

McDowell had two other hits and also saved at least one run for the Rangers in the second inning when he made a spectacular diving catch of Chris Bando's sinking drive in right center. The Indians had men on first and second at the time.

"THAT MAN did a helluva job, saved a run and scored two," said Texas Manager Bobby Valentine. "He played one of those games where he displayed his outstanding abilities — speed and power.

"He has a chance to be one of those unique players who can do everything."

The Indians scored first in the third inning when Brett Butler singled, went to third on Julio Franco's single to right and scored on Pat Tabler's infield out.

The Rangers tied the score in the fourth inning. McDowell led off with a single, stole second, took third on a groundout and scored on Gary Ward's single.

Greg Harris, 3-3, picked up the victory for Texas in relief of Chris Welsh, who pitched the first seven innings.

Harris, who leads the American League in strikeouts by a relief pitcher, got out of a jam in the top of the ninth inning.

AL Roundup

Twins 5, Orioles 4

Kent Hrbek's second-inning grand slam, his second grand-slam home run in four games, lifted Minnesota over Baltimore.

The Twins filed a protest in the fourth inning after Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver was ejected for arguing after Minnesota's Randy Bush made a running catch of Fred Lynn's line drive.

Weaver spent several minutes arguing with umpires, then, after he was ejected, marched out toward Bush in left field. Weaver was led back to the dugout by two umpires and then bowed to the crowd.

Then, Minnesota Manager Ray Miller announced his club would play the game under protest because starter Mike Smithson, 9-7, was not allowed to warm up during the delay.

Hrbek's slam erased a 2-0 deficit. With one out in the second, Mark Salas doubled and Greg Gagne singled. Storm Davis, 4-6, walked Kirby Puckett and Roy Smalley, forcing in one run, before Hrbek hit a 430-foot shot over the right-field wall. It was the third homer in four games for Hrbek, whose grand slam beat New York on Thursday.

Smithson pitched six innings and Ron Davis worked the final 1 1-3 innings for his 13th save.

Baltimore's Eddie Murray hit his 14th homer into center field in the first inning to score Lee Lacy, who had walked.

Red Sox 6, Oakland 4

Wade Boggs continues to chase the DiMaggio brothers, even if he doesn't like to discuss it.

Boggs extended the longest hitting streak in the major leagues this season to 25 games with two doubles and a single in leading Boston past visiting Oakland.

Dom DiMaggio set the Red Sox record by hitting in 34 straight games in 1949 and Joe DiMaggio set the all-time major league record of 56 consecutive games in 1941.

"We've got to win ballgames, not talk about what happened in the 1940s," said Boggs, now batting .344.

Boggs, who has reached base via a hit, walk or hit by pitch in 46 straight games, drove in two runs and scored once to help Tim Lollar win his Boston debut. Lollar, traded from the Chicago White Sox to Boston on July 11, pitched six innings.

Blue Jays 3, Mariners 1

Tom Filer pitched seven innings of one-hit ball to win his first game in the majors since mid-1982.

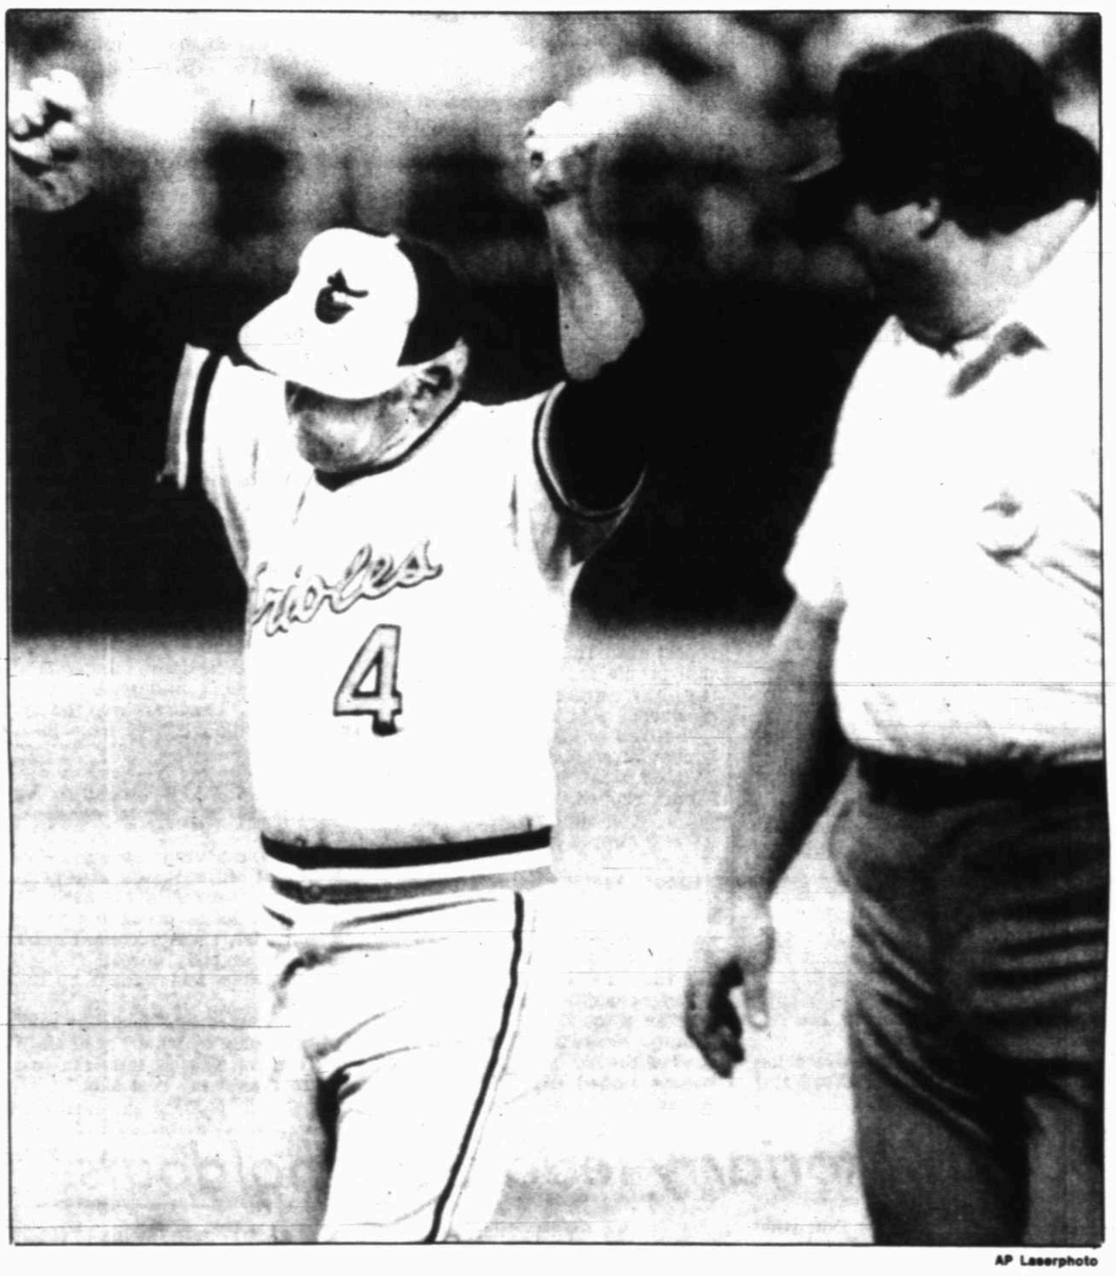

Filer, recalled from Toronto's Class AAA Syracuse team on July 5 when Luis Leal was sent down, allowed just a leadoff single by Gorman Thomas in the second. Filer's only other big-league victory came with the Chicago Cubs in July 1982.

Jim Acker replaced Filer after the seventh, and Jim Presley hit Acker's first pitch for his 22nd homer. Gary Lavelle and Bill Caudill also pitched for the host Blue Jays, with Caudill notching his team-record 12th save.

White Sox 9, Tigers 4

Carlton Fisk continued his power surge for Chicago, matching his career-high with his major league-leading 26th home run as the White Sox handed Detroit its seventh loss in the last nine games.

Little by little, two sides move closer in baseball talks

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — With a strike deadline two weeks away, it may not be enough that the two sides in baseball's labor talks are coming closer on the issue of projected management losses, the union says.

"We're closer together on the figures," said Don Fehr, acting executive director of the union, "but I don't want to dwell on those. We may never agree on the numbers, but we still have to find some agreement on a contract."

Facing an Aug. 6 deadline imposed by the union, management on Monday lowered — from $155 million to $86 million — its original estimates of how much money baseball stands to lose by 1988. Projected losses for the years preceding 1988 also were lowered.

Lee MacPhail, president of the owners' Player Relations Committee, said the 45 percent decrease resulted in revised bookkeeping methods. He said the primary source of the reduction was a decision not to declare player depreciation as an operating loss when a team is sold.

"I think this was a step in the right direction," MacPhail said. "At least we have narrowed the differences between us."

THE TWO sides met twice on Monday, once informally in the morning to go over the revisions and again in formal session in the afternoon. Besides discussing the projections, the two sides also discussed protection for players with deferred contracts.

The meeting was the second since the Major League Players Association's executive board set an Aug. 6 strike deadline. Further negotiations were scheduled today.

The major area of disagreement is how to divide baseball's $1.1 billion network television contract. Traditionally, one-third of baseball's network revenue has been donated to the players' pension fund. The union would like to continue this practice, while management would not.

Last year, baseball donated some $15 million to the players' pension fund. If union demands prevailed, the yearly donation would jump to about $60 million.

The owners' side has yet to make a proposal on this issue and says it won't unless it can convince the union there are serious financial problems to solve first. To this end, management has proposed a salary cap.

Either management bargainers "don't want to or they feel they can't" make a proposal on the pension issue, Fehr said. "I don't know how far apart we are because I don't know what they are thinking about."

MC's 'Spud' ready to take on NBA and the world as Piston rookies report

ROCHESTER, Mich. (AP) — At 5-foot-7, Anthony "Spud" Webb stands about 4½ feet shorter than the hoop and nearly two feet shorter than the Los Angeles Lakers' 7-5 Chuck Nevitt, the National Basketball Association's tallest active player.

No other player in the NBA is listed below 6 feet, said Terry Lyons, a spokesman at the league's New York offices.

It doesn't seem to bother the Detroit Pistons fourth-round draft pick — the pint-sized playmaker who led Midland College to a national junior college title in 1981. "Spud" began a three-day camp at Oakland University here Monday with Detroit's other rookies and free agents. He hopes to become the league's shortest active player if he makes the team.

"Because of my size, I have to concentrate on being smart and keeping myself in the right position at the right time," the former North Carolina State guard said. "I concentrate on all parts of the game and helping out other players.

"And I don't put myself in situations where height is a factor. That may mean I set up to run the offense a little further out. Or I shoot from a little further out."

Webb, 22, has statistics to back up his brainy play.

HIS VERTICAL jump measured from a standing start is 42 inches, only two inches off one of the NBA's all-time best leapers, David Thompson, who at 6-6 had a 44-inch leap.

At Wilmer-Hutchins High School in Dallas, Webb was dunking the ball by the 11th grade.

In 1981, playing for the championship-bound Chaparrals, Webb slammed 40 dunks, blocked 20 shots and was called twice for goaltending during the National Junior College Athletic Association Championship season.

In the finals against top-ranked Miami-Dade Junior College, four guards fouled out trying to stop Webb, who finished with 36 points for MC.

Webb spent two years at N.C. State in the Atlantic Coast Conference, where he once told a reporter asking why he drove the lane so often against much taller players, "That's where the basket is."

Pistons' Coach Chuck Daly has seen Webb play only on film, but he says he's impressed with his offensive and defensive skills.

"I'm hopeful he comes in and gives it his best shot. He certainly has a chance (to) make the club," Daly said. "Obviously, he has a size handicap, but evidently his heart so far has taken care of that."

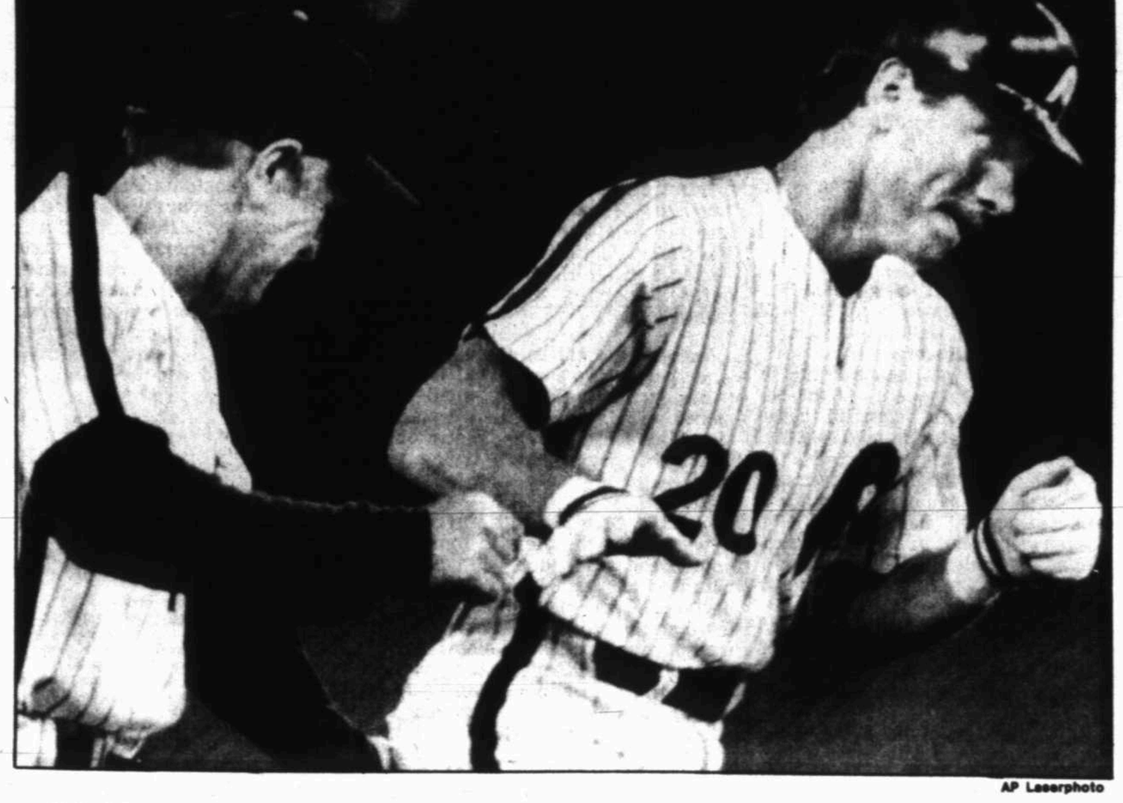

POTENTIAL PISTONS teammate Isiah Thomas is listed at 6-1 and a handful of other players, including Rickey Green of Utah and John Bagley of Cleveland are listed at 6-feet even.

Webb long ago stopped worrying about his size.

"When I go to camp, I know guys will be there fighting to put bread on the table, just like me," he said. "There are always guys trying to do this or that on me. You can almost see it in their expressions — they're so anxious. But after a couple of times down the court they usually change.

"I just show 'em."

Given second chance, Schmidt makes Astros pay

AP Laserphoto

Philadelphia's Mike Schmidt took advantage of an Astro error on his foul pop fly and hit a game-winning homer with two out in the bottom of the ninth inning.

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Schmidt has been in a season-long slump but he's still a dangerous man to give a second chance.

Schmidt came to bat Monday night with two out in the ninth inning of a tie game between the Philadelphia Phillies and Houston Astros and hit a foul pop to the third base side of home plate.

Three Astros — third baseman Phil Garner, pitcher Jeff Heathcock and catcher Alan Ashby — converged at the plate. At the last second, Garner lunged for the ball. It popped out of his glove for an error.

Schmidt returned to the plate and on the next pitch lined a home run over the left field fence to give the Phillies a 7-6 win.

"I know you can miss one like that," he said afterward. "I did. Crazy things happen."

It was one of the few times this season Schmidt smiled after a game. He is hitting just .241 in what has been one of the worst seasons in his 13-year career.

IT'S BEEN a season in which Schmidt, a nine-time Gold Glove third baseman:

—became a first baseman;

—wasn't voted to the National League All-Star team for the first time in seven years;

—ripped the fans as "beyond help" and "uncontrollable;"

—and has only 13 home runs.

"I can't put my finger on any one thing," said Schmidt, who has hit 30 or more homers in a season 10 times in his career. "Maybe I'm trying too hard with men on base. Maybe I have bad mechanics with men in scoring position and good mechanics with none on."

NL Roundup

Pirates 6, Dodgers 3

Rookie Sammy Khalifa and catcher Tony Pena made up for fielding miscues with home runs, leading Pittsburgh over Los Angeles.

Despite the loss, the first time in more than a month the Dodgers have dropped two straight games, they retained their half-game lead in the NL West over San Diego.

The Pirates scored twice in the first inning on Bill Madlock's RBI double and Jason Thompson's run-scoring single, but an error by Khalifa at shortstop and Pena's passed ball set up a bases-loaded walk to Bill Russell in the second.

But Khalifa gave Pittsburgh a 5-1 lead in the fourth with a three-run homer, his first in the major leagues, and Pena added a solo shot in the eighth.

Reds 5, Mets 1

Mario Soto snapped a personal eight-game losing streak by pitching shutout ball until the ninth inning as Cincinnati defeated New York.

The Reds' five runs were the most Soto, 9-11, had gotten since his last victory June 4, but for a while it looked like it would be another frustrating outing for him because of the Mets' pitcher, Sid Fernandez.

Braves 7, Expos 1

Rick Mahler, who now has four of Atlanta's five complete games this season, won his career-high 14th game with a six-hitter against Montreal.

Mahler, a 13-game winner in 1984, broke a string of poor pitching performances by the Braves, who had given up 31 runs in their previous two games against the Mets.

Cardinals 4, Giants 3

Joaquin Andujar, the winningest pitcher in the major leagues this season, notched his 16th victory in 20 decisions with the help of run-scoring singles by pinch-hitters Terry Pendleton and Steve Braun in the eighth inning against San Francisco.

Jeff Leonard's 11th home run for the Giants had broken a 2-2 tie in the sixth, but in the eighth Willie McGee walked and Tito Landrum singled, chasing Dave LaPoint, 4-6.

Cubs 5, Padres 3

Chicago broke a 3-3 tie against San Diego with no outs in the eighth inning when Keith Moreland singled home Davey Lopes from third base.

The 39-year-old Lopes set up the game-winning run when he doubled off Roy Lee Jackson, 0-1, then stole third, his second steal of the night and 35th of the year in 37 attempts. Moreland then bounced his game-winning hit over a drawn-in infield.

Ron Meridith, 1-0, won his first major-league game, working one inning in relief of Cubs starter Steve Trout, who left the game when the left elbow problems that have plagued him all year flared up again. Lee Smith pitched the final two innings to record his 22nd save.

Ron Springs wants his trial over, and to win back his fullback slot

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Ron Springs believes he will be freed from his legal troubles by Sept. 9 and be the starting fullback for the Dallas Cowboys that night against the Washington Redskins.

The six-year veteran fullback faces trial on a felony assault charge against a police officer for an off-season nighclub incident that involved a Dallas policewoman. The trial date is Sept. 9.

"I'm not going down without a fight," said Springs, during a break at training camp. "I still think I'm the best fullback in the league.

"And I'm ready to go to court right now. They keep moving the trial date around. I'd like to get things settled."

Springs doesn't say a lot about the incident in question only to note: "It's a bad situation. I'm charged with something I did not do. What happened should be made a misdemeanor at the most."

He thought for a minute then said "It's something that happened and now I have to deal with it."

SPRINGS ALSO feels he is a victim of "negative press."

"The positive way I can overcome all this is to play good football and make the fans happy."

Springs could be fighting an uphill battle for a job.

Timmy Newsome is already installed as the No. 1 fullback and the Cowboys raided the United States Football League to sign Todd Fowler.

They also drafted Gary Wilkins of Georgia Tech who has been one of the big hits in camp.

Springs said he felt some other National Football League team would want his services if the Cowboys didn't.

"When it comes right down to it if the Cowboys don't want me I don't think I'll have any trouble getting on somewhere else," Springs said.

Springs said his relationship with Coach Tom Landry has been a sweet and sour affair.

"Sometimes he doesn't understand me and I don't understand him," said Springs. "I have enjoyed the last six years although they have been up and down."

SPRINGS SAID although he weighed 220 he felt in excellent condition.

"I feel great," said Springs, who played part of last season with painful pinched nerves in his neck. "I didn't get a lot of credit for doing that but I felt I was needed. I don't like to let anybody down."

Does Springs feel wanted by the Cowboys?

"I have mixed emotions," he said. "I'm just going by what I read and I can't control what is said. I'm just here to give it my best shot."

Where's TD?

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) - Dallas running back Tony Dorsett missed practice for the second consecutive day on Monday to hold financial discussions with agent Whit Stewart in Los Angeles, team officials say.

Dorsett is the only Cowboys' veteran running back not in training camp.

He technically doesn't have to report until Thursday but all the skill people are on hand, including the quarterbacks and receivers.

"I talked to his agent (Stewart) Sunday afternoon," Landry said.

Asked what he told Stewart, Landry replied, "I told him they had a lot of time between January and now to get things taken care of."

Landry said he expected Dorsett in camp soon.

Rain stalls Texas Teenage tourney openers

From Staff Reports

Rain claimed several games in opening night action of the Texas Teenage baseball district tournament in here Monday night, but three games were played with one of the two Tall City teams playings its scheduled game.

Holdiay Driling defeated Odessa Super Sports in a 10-0 rout to move on into the winner's bracket of this double elimination tournament for 13-14 year-olds on Wednesday. Steven Guerra and Juan Dominguez combined for the one-hit shutout over Super Sports. Guerra also knocked in a pair of runs as did Kyle Greeley.

The other Midland team in the tournament, Midland Trott and Co. was rained out in it's game with San Angelo Kiwanis and will make up the game tonight at 6 p.m. at the East side sophomore field, grounds permitting. The loser of that game will play the loser of the Odessa Stockton Packers-Scott Phane Ditching game at 9 p.m. at the same field.

USFL's Gunslingers to play in '86 in spite of releasing entire team

By SHEILA ALLEE
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO — The San Antonio Gunslingers will play in 1986 despite management's decision to waive the entire United States Football League team, General Manager Roger Gill says.

The team front office announced the waiver of all 46 players late Monday, just minutes before a deadline for owner Clinton Manges to make good on two overdue paychecks.

Manges failed to make the payrolls by the 5 p.m. deadline set by an arbitrator for the USFL Players Association.

The arbitrator's ruling would have ordered the players on the USFL waiver wire at 5 p.m. if the deadline was not met.

"Our intentions are to play in the 1986 season," Gill said. "We've got a year to prepare."

Gill said Manges still intends to pay the players for paychecks due June 11 and 25, but he did not know when.

He would not say why the team decided to waive the players.

RELEASING THE players, he said, would allow them to join a National Football League team.

"If they don't make it with another team, we'll give them a chance to play with us," Gill said. "As soon as we fulfill our payroll obligations, we'll start to pursue players."

But Jeff Leiding, a linebacker who showed up at team offices late Monday, said it is too late for any players to get picked up by any NFL teams. Those teams, he said, already are in training camps.

Terming the developments a betrayal, Leiding said, "It's crazy. There are no more surprises. Now I know what it feels like to be a steel worker. I've been laid off.

"I NEVER thought it would come to this," he said. "For us to come to being released and the core of the operation being abolished — how can you foresee that happening at the beginning of the year?"

Safety Mike Ulmer said, "I thought he (Manges) might pull it out right at the last. But it's a business. Evidently something he did failed."

USFL Players Association executive director Doug Allen said he was not surprised that the players were not paid.

"I'm very disappointed, but not very surprised," he said. "It's typical of the way Clinton Manges has conducted himself with this team."

Manges faced an identical payroll situation in early June, but he managed to make good on two overdue paychecks just hours before a June 8 deadline.

WHEN HE failed to make the two June payrolls, the players association filed a grievance, which concluded with Monday's 5 p.m. deadline.

Players will remain on the waiver wire until 5 p.m. Tuesday, when they will become free agents and able to negotiate new contracts.

Leiding and Ulmer were the only two players at the stadium when the team made the announcement.

Most of the other players returned to their homes elsewhere in the country after the season ended.

Former coach Jim Bates, fired in May, was at team offices late Monday but said he had no luck collecting his overdue paychecks, either.

Baker, Moriarty lead Oiler holdouts

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Defensive end Jesse Baker, running back Larry Moriarty and three rookies are holding out on the Houston Oilers of the National Football League.

Oiler veterans reported to training camp Sunday. But Baker, a free agent who has led the Oilers in sacks for six consecutive years, has been unable to come to terms on a new contract. Moriarty insists he is a free agent.

Ray Childress, the Oilers' No. 1 draft pick, has been unable to reach an agreement with the club. Cornerback Richard Johnson, the team's other first-round pick, and offensive ineman Mike Kelley, the third-round selection, also have not signed contracts.

Midessa, Steelers advance to state tourney

From Staff Reports

A pair of Midland teams advanced out of the District 26 State Qualifying Women's Slo-Pitch tournament at Hogan Park last weekend and will make a drive for the state title beginning Saturday morning in San Marcos.

Midessa Telephone Systems, known as Rogers Volkswagon during the regular season, defeated the Midland Steelers 8-6 Sunday to take the district title and advance to San Marcos. The Steelers, by virtue of their second-place finish, will also attend the state tourney this weekend.

Denise Lanz, an All-Disrict 4-5A basketball player at Midland High, was named the tournament's most valuable player for Midessa, while teammates Cindy Reese, Susan Nix, Deann Hamilton and Sherri Stokes were also named to the All-Tournament team for Midessa. The Steelers' Connie Eddy, Pam Harper and Janna Davis were also named to the all-tourney team. Liz Watson of Midland GSI was also named all-tournament.

Fisk connected in the second inning off Randy O'Neal, 5-3, to give the host White Sox a 1-0 lead. Eight of Fisk's last 13 hits have been home runs.

"Hitting homers is like having hogs plant acorns," joked Fisk, "because it looks like it would be a lot of fun."

Gene Nelson, 6-4, pitched seven shutout innings, giving up only five hits. Detroit's Darrell Evans hit an RBI double and Larry Herndon hit a two-run double off Juan Agosto in the eighth, and Jerry Gleaton got the final out for his first save.

Brewers 16, Angels 3

Ben Oglivie, who drove in five runs, Cecil Cooper and Ted Simmons all homered during a 15-hit barrage as Milwaukee battered California.

The Brewers turned the game into a rout in the eighth when they scored eight runs on four hits and three errors.

Oglivie had a two-run homer, a two-run triple and an RBI groundout. Cooper hit a two-run homer in the fifth and Simmons followed with a home run.

Oglivie has been on a hot streak the last 16 games, having raised his batting average from .233 to .275 with 24 hits in 58 at-bats for a .414 average.

Royals 5, Yankees 4

Willie Wilson and Hal McRae delivered bases-loaded singles in the fifth inning as Kansas City scored five times to erase a 3-0 deficit.

The Royals had been shut out on four hits by Dennis Rasmussen before erupting. Steve Balboni led off with a double and took third on Darryl Motley's short double. Wilson singled home the first two runs, Lonnie Smith singled in the tying run and McRae's two-run single put the Royals ahead.

Vikings' Senser may hang it up

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Minnesota Vikings tight end Joe Senser, responding to a television report that he will retire, said Tuesday he hasn't yet decided on retirement.

"I'd be lying if I said I wasn't contemplating it with the knee I have," Senser said. "But I haven't made a decision."

Senser said he planned to decide whether to return to the Vikings by the time they open training camp Aug. 1.

"My main thing is I'm still interested in signing a contract and reporting," said Senser, whose contract expired after last season. "The deciding point is my leg. How will it stand up?"

SENSER, 30, injured his right knee late in the 1981 National Football League season and has undergone two operations since then.

WCCO-TV, Minneapolis, reported Monday night that Senser would not return for his sixth season with the NFL club because of his knee problem. The station said Senser made his decision after being told by Vikings Coach Bud Grant that his knee injury would make it nearly impossible for Senser to make the team.

Senser has been playing with the Vikings since 1980 and set an National Football Conference record for the most receptions by a tight end in a season with 79 in 1981. He had surgery for the second time on his right knee during training cqamp in 1983 and was placed on injured reserve.

Race postponed at 'savings of life'

CAMBRIDGE JUNCTION, Mich. – Silence, like morning mist, rolled over the treacherous corners and turns of the Michigan International Speedway this Sunday morning where 225 m.p.h. four-wheeled missiles were supposed to be splitting the pastoral splendor of these verdant hills with the deafening roars of 30 of the most powerful power plants this side of railroad guns.

TV cameras stood with one blind eye focused on nothing, pit walls stood empty, chemical toilets stood like lonely sentries on stretches of bean fields, winds blew drifts of paper cups aimlessly through the gaily-colored grandstands.

The Michigan 500 auto race would be run another day when the sponsors could be sure that pieces of treated rubber were as equal to the heat and tensions of the course as human beings were. The suspicion was that speeds were getting to be such they were giving nervous breakdowns to pieces of rubber.

THE MICHIGAN International Speedway has been one of the most jittery venues of super-speedway racing ever since its inception 17 years ago.

Even though only one person has been killed at this raceway since its construction, and that was a spectator, the evidence is that this high-speed roadway cut in the center of this lush part of mid-America known as the Irish Hills is resented by the great spirits that hover over this Indian land of a hundred lakes.

Thunderstorms have rolled periodically through the races here, a tornado once touched down one year, slamming cars and cameras and people and setting pit fires as if the gods were anxious to change these blasphemous machines back into scraps of metal.

THE TRACK itself, severely banked, is the fastest in the world for this kind of racing but so bumpy it could serve as a ride at Coney Island. As track owner Roger Penske points out, "This ain't some Sun Belt course in Daytona. The frost buckles this surface unpredictably and you have to keep searching for the low and high spots."

At 225-miles-per-hour, a race car is a bit like a crashing plane. You have only hairline control of its direction and aim.

"I found a new bump out there," Ace driver Mario Andretti cheerily announced as he came into the press headquarters one day after a duel with the track in which he spun 360 degrees several times before coming to rest in one piece.

Drivers at Michigan generally climb into their cars in the frame of mind of the World War I pilots of the Lafayette Escadrill just before they went up over the battle of the Marne for dawn dogfights. Gladiators never went more nervously in to the lion's den.

LAST YEAR'S race, for instance, had been one of those where you cover your eyes, cross yourself and make one call to your lawyer. Five crashes and 10 accidents dotted the landscape and sent two drivers to the hospital and several hundred spectators to their knees. One hundred and five laps were run under the yellow light, racing's warnings there is trouble on the track ahead, a lot of debris, probably human.

So, the 1985 race started with fingers crossed and rosary beads out. And ambulances ready. The fact they were going to try out a new brand of radial tires instead of bias-ply for the first time reassured no one.

When A.J. Foyt, no less, crashed during the first day of practice, sponsors looked at each other. When he was followed by by Rahal and Roberto Guerrero, plus Andretti's spin, the reaction of the wise racegoers was "Oh, (bleep)! Here we go again!"

WHEN RAHAL went out and won the pole, with the fastest closed-circuit time ever run, 215.202, and Guerrero made the grid with a sizzling 205.175, fears were allayed.

And then both Rahal and Guerrero went out within minutes of each other and slammed into the wall as a front tire blew. The track knew it needed more than a yellow light. A red one. The hold-everything flag.

When one unexplained crash comes, it can be an accident. Two can be a coincidence.

Three is a trend. And four is tires.

They had picked the wrong place and time to break in a new pair of shoes. Super-speedway races had always been contested on bias-ply rubber. Goodyear reasoned that the radials had been tested enough for Michigan.

The Speedway had other ideas.

THE PROBLEM was a neat one for track owner Roger Penske. Roger had bought MIS at a distress real estate sale 15 years ago and since elevated it to Triple Crown status in racing. NBC was poised to televise the event live. Tickets had been sold out, motels were full. Visitors were rolling south from Canada to Detroit. Concessions were stocked. A multi-million dollar investment was at stake. So was Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co.'s reputation.

But, so were the lives of 33 drivers.

An emergency 11th hour meeting was held. Sanity won out. Safety got the checkered flag.

This is not as automatic as you might think in auto racing. The motor sport, like the Broadway theater, tends to feel ordinarily that "The show must go on" or "'Carmen' was announced, 'Carmen' must be sung."

This was one time the curtain was rung instead. There was no time to van in the 700 or 800 bias tires that might be needed. The mission was scrubbed.

SOME YEARS ago, the famed writer, Ring Lardner, describing a fire that had burned to the ground an auto race track in California, wrote: "The Astoria race track near Los Angeles burned down last night at a great saving of life."

The Michigan 500 had a blowout Saturday afternoon at a great saving of lives. The fault may not be the tires. But the tire company is quitting while it is behind. It is to be commended for not trying to find out if its tires are road-worthy with flesh-and-blood dummies. If the tires are overmatched on this racing surface, anything that bleeds or breathes certainly is. There are worse things than air leaving a tire.

Air leaving a lung for example.

Prosecutors decide Yanks 'decent,' drop charges

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — New York Yankees players Don Mattingly and Dale Berra had been scheduled to appear in court today on indecent conduct charges, but prosecutors have now dropped the charges that stemmed from separate May incidents.

Yankees spokesman Joe Safety issued a statement during Monday night's Yankees-Royals game announcing that the charges had been dropped. Both players were to appear in Municipal Court.

Kansas City Prosecutor George L. Sharp confirmed Monday night that all charges against the two men had been dropped.

Berra, 28, a reserve infielder, and Mattingly, a 24-year-old first baseman and the American League's batting champion in 1984, were arrested in separate incidents while the club was in Kansas City for a three-game series in May.

Mattingly, the major-league leader in runs batted in, was arrested May 9 for urinating in public at a street corner in the Country Club Plaza, a stylish shopping and dining area. He was issued a municipal summons for indecent conduct and released on a signature bond.

BERRA WAS arrested for indecent conduct two days later after a security guard allegedly saw him urinating in a parking garage. Berra was also charged with assault after trying to strike the security guard officer who arrested him, according to the Kansas City Police Department.

"The prosector's office has reviewed the circumstances surrounding the incident and has determined that the best interest of all concerned will be served by withdrawing the charges," the statement said. "Both players expressed regret about the incident and appreciate the fact that the charges have been withdrawn and we now consder the matter closed."

The prosecutor was assured that Mattingly and Berra were good citizens and "will conduct themselves as such," the statement said.

Ferragamo finds Buffalo a far cry from Tinseltown

FREDONIA, N.Y. (AP) — So far, Vince Ferragamo is enjoying the trip from Tinseltown to a city where chicken wings are much more likely to be found on the menu than tofu.

"The people have been real nice," said the newest quarterback for the Buffalo Bills Monday after his first day at training camp here. "One thing I've noticed about Buffalo is it's a lot like Lincoln (where Ferragamo attended the University of Nebraska). The people are real warm and friendly. It makes you feel good. In L.A., it's just a little bit different."

How different?

"It's Hollywood," he said. "They've got so many things going on in L.A. with the baseball and the beaches and Disneyland."

What's also a little different for Ferragamo, traded to the Bills Thursday in exchange for tight end Tony Hunter and a draft choice, is that he is wanted here.

After the Rams obtained former Canadian Football League quarterback Dieter Brock several months ago, it was no secret that the Rams were looking to unload Ferragamo, who had tryouts with several NFL teams before joining the Bills.

"That's always something that you like, to go to a place where you're wanted," he said. "You don't want to be someplace where you're not wanted, where they don't feel good about you."

IN FACT, with long-time Bills starter Joe Ferguson traded to Detroit and only third-year quarterback Joe Dufek under contract, some might even say Ferragamo, an eight-year veteran who led the Rams to the Super Bowl in 1979, is desperately needed.

But Ferragamo did not claim the starter's job, instead saying that he preferred the challenge of having to earn it.

"I've seen both sides of it," he said, "coming into camp being number one, and coming into camp trying to work your way up. And really, I think it's better for a player to have that competition and to go in there and work real hard to make that starting lineup."

Finally, assuming he is the Bills starter when the season opens, Ferragamo also faces the severe challenge of reviving a team that went 2-14 last season, the league's worst record.

"We've got all the potential," he said. "It's a fact of how well you play together as a team that determines how good your season is.

Hulk Hogan can wait; Fralic signs with Falcons

SUWANEE, Ga. (AP) — The Atlanta Falcons announced Monday the signing of first-round draft choice Bill Fralic, an All-American tackle from the University of Pittsburgh.

Terms of the contract weren't disclosed.

Fralic, a 6-foot-5, 285-pounder, was signed in Pittsburgh by Falcons General Manager Tom Braatz, who had spent the weekend negotiating with Fralic and his agent, Ralph Cindrich.

Falcons officials had reported earlier that negotiations with Fralic were making progress.

Coach Dan Henning said before the announcement that he expected Fralic to report this week. "I don't think the guy wants to come in after the veterans," who report Thursday, Henning said.

Fralic had been threatening to become a professional wrestler if a contract agreement could not be reached with the Falcons.

Dollar falls

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against all major currencies in early European trading today amid continuing concern over the strength of the U.S. economy. Gold bullion prices rose in a dull market.

Dealers said Monday's brief surge for the dollar fizzled out as the market again expressed anxiety over the U.S. economy and the possibility of a cut in U.S. interest rates.

In Tokyo, where trading ends as Europe's business day begins, the dollar plunged 2.45 Japanese yen to close at 238.10 yen compared with 240.55 yen late Monday.

In London, the pound sterling, which had been damaged by speculation that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries would lower oil prices at its meeting in Geneva, rebounded sharply. It cost $1.4130 to buy one pound this morning, up from $1.3897 late Monday.

Other mid-morning dollar rates compared with late Monday's:

—2.8532 West German marks, down from 2.8965.

—2.34125 Swiss francs, down from 2.3757.

—8.6650 French francs, down from 8.8000.

—3.2050 Dutch guilders, down from 3.2555

—1,917.50 Italian lire, down from 1,945.50.

—1.34505 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3508.

Dealers said the dollar's losses failed to stimulate gold prices much after their initial advance.

In London, gold opened at a bid price of $322.30 an ounce and the city's five major bullion dealers later fixed a recommended trading price of $322.75, both up from Monday's closing bid of $318.00.

In Zurich, gold was selling at a bid $322.30 at noon, up from $318 bid late Monday.

Earlier in Hong Kong, gold rose the equivalent of $5.40 to close at $322.98 compared to Monday's $317.58.

Silver bullion prices also rose on the London market where the metal was selling at a bid price of $6.16 an ounce, up from $6.11 the previous day.

Survey shows boost in Midland cost of living

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

The cost of living in Midland increased 0.1 percent during the month of June, following a decrease in the previous two months. Annualized, the city's inflation rate would equal 0.9 percent, according to figures compiled by ClayDesta National Bank.

The only category to show a decrease was food at home, which showed a decrease of 2.6 percent. This was offset by increases in housing, clothing, utilities, medical and transportation. The decrease in the food at home category follows four months of increased prices. "Higher alcohol prices were offset by lower produce, shelf items and meat prices," according to ClayDesta assistant vice president Susan Zurawski.

She said higher rent is being blamed for a 1.9 percent increase in housing during the month. Over the past five months, Midland's housing costs have increased 2.4 percent.

Clothing prices increased 1.3 percent, due to higher prices for women's apparel. Despite June's trend, clothing expenses in Midland have dropped 0.2 percent in the past five months.

Midland utlity bills for the month of June rose 1.3 percent. This is the third month in a row utilities have been up. Nevertheless, gas rates were down 0.7 percent in June, while the electric fuel adjustment charges rose 4.1 percent as the annual summer rate schedule took effect. The water rate remained stable for the month of June. Over the past five months, Midland's utility costs have increased 3.2 percent.

Following two months of dramatic decreases in transportation costs, Midland saw an increase of 0.1 percent, due to a third month of higher gasoline prices. However, Midland transportation costs have decreased 3.6 percent over the last five months.

Restaurant prices for Midland remained stable during June, following increases in the previous three months. Despite the upward trend of late, the cost of food away from home in Midlan has actually gone down 0.2 percent over the past five months.

Figures compiled by ClayDesta for the city of Odessa showed a 0.6 percent increase in the cost of living for June. This equals an annualized inflation rate of 4.6 percent.

Toyota to begin production in U.S. and Canada

TOKYO (AP) — Toyota Motor Corp., Japan's largest car maker and leader in Japanese car sales in the United States, announced today it will begin producing passenger cars in the United States and Canada in 1988.

About 200,000 cars a year will be built at a U.S. plant in a location yet to be decided, said an official announcement released by Toyota's board of directors after a meeting.

Recent Japanese news reports said the company is focusing on sites in Tennessee, Georgia or SoCarolina in addition to Midwestern states, but Toyota officials said a location has not been decided.

The announcement said the U.S. plant will produce medium-size, 2-liter (122 cubic inch) cars. Kyodo News Service said the plant was expected to produce the Camry series car, but Toyota officials would not confirm the report.

"The Camry will be one of the candidates, but we are not sure which car will be most popular or convenient to produce in 1988," said Takaharu Kurasaki of Toyota.

Toyota also plans to produce about 50,000 1.6-liter (98 cubic inch) passenger cars a year in Canada, at a location yet to be decided, and expand production at a California joint venture with General Motors to include Toyota models, the company announcement said.

Toyota currently makes cars in Fremont, Calif., in a joint venture with GM begun last year. The cars are sold by GM under the name Chevrolet Nova, and plans call for a production level of 250,000 a year.

Starting in 1986, Toyota plans to build annually at California 50,000 cars that will be a variation on its Corolla, a model similar to the Nova, Kurasaki said.

"The two vehicles are really the same in the engines and chassis, so they can probably be built on the same assembly line," Kurasaki said.

With today's decision, Toyota becomes the last of the big three Japanese automakers to produce cars independently in the United States, after No. 2 Nissan Motor Co. Ltd. and Honda Motor Co. Ltd.

Earlier reports said Toyota began planning to produce cars independently in the United States after the Japanese government announced on April 1 that it would continue quotas on automobiles shipped to the United States for a fifth year, even though the U.S. government did not ask for their continuation.

The government said exports to the United States would be limited to 2.3 million cars in fiscal 1985, up from 1.85 million in the previous year.

Last week, Toyota announced that the company posted records in production, domestic sales and exports in the first half of this year.

Toyota officials said the exports of 985,850 vehicles, up 11.4 percent from a year earlier, were boosted by brisk sales in the United States and China.

Japanese automaker to export cars to U.S.

TOKYO (AP) — Daihatsu Motor Co. Ltd., Japan's sixth largest automaker, will start exporting its small passenger cars to the United States after April 1987, a company official said today.

The official, who spoke only on condition he remain anonymous, said the company plans to export its "Charade" passenger cars through U.S. dealers. The Charade is one inch shorter than the smallest car now sold in the United States and is equipped with a 61 cubic inch engine.

Daihatsu, an affiliate of Japan's largest carmaker, Toyota Motor Corp., will be the ninth Japanese firm to enter the U.S. car market.

Under so-called "voluntary restrictions," Toyota, Nissan and the six other firms have made plans to export 2.3 million vehicles to the United States in the year ending March 1986.

The firms have agreed on their own fixed shares within the overall ceiling, but Daihatsu currently does not have an allotment. The official said his company will try to decide by early 1987 what to do about the allotment and how many vehicles to sell in the United States.

In 1984, Daihatsu produced about 162,000 passenger cars and about 403,000 trucks and buses.

UnitedBank announces sale of common stock

Wayne Merritt, Chief Executive Officer of UnitedBank in Midland, has announced the successful sale of 371,000 shares of the bank's common stock for $13.50 per share. The effective date of the sale was July 1. The sale resulted in $5,008,500 new capital for the bank and increased total capital to over $17 million.

Merritt also announced that MCorp, through a wholly-owned subsidiary, purchased 46,897 shares of this offering of common stock. The purchase represents 3.6 percent of the 1,316,551 shares outstanding. MCorp also owns 168,358 shares of non-voting preferred stock and is awaiting final regulatory approval to purchase 136,284 shares of preferred. MCorp will then have approximately $5.2 million invested in UnitedBank and will be able, under certain conditions, to acquire 21.7 percent of the outstanding common stock.

According to Merritt, United's board of directors "has consistently emphasized the importance of capital strength. The oversubscription of this offering certainly indicates that many Midland investors agree with that philosophy." United has the highest capital-to-asset ratio of any financial institution in Midland and the third highest in actual capital funds.

Major holding companies show increases in quarterly income

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The second quarter was a period of strong earnings for most of the nation's major bank holding companies, despite a continuing high level of loan losses.

Twelve of the 15 largest bank holding companies showed increases in per-share net income over the second quarter of 1984. The increases ranged from 75 percent for Pittsburgh's Mellon Bank Corp., to 7.1 for the Crocker National Corporation of San Francisco, which is still trying to overcome serious problems of recent years.

The three whose net income did not rise were extraordinary cases: the BankAmerica Corp., which reported a $338 million loss for the quarter, the second-highest ever; the First Chicago Corp., whose net income plunged almost 96 percent because of a special $115 million reserve established for a Brazilian affiliate, and the Continental Illinois Corp., whose change in earnings could not be calculated because of its $1.2 billion loss in last year's second quarter, the largest loss ever by an American banking company.

For most others, however, the quarter was a good one, helped by lower interest rates, strong foreign-exchange and bond-trading results, and higher fees from both consumers and corporations.

J.P. Morgan & Co. continued to hold the first place in terms of basic profitability. At an annual rate, net income applicable to its common stockholders amounted to 93 cents on each $100 of average total assets. It is rare that a major bank holding company achieves a return of more than 80 cents, but Morgan's latest quarter, despite its strength, was down slightly from its two spectacular previous quarters, when the return exceeded $1. It was up sharply, however, from the 65 cents earned in 1984.

In a dramatic recovery from relatively low earnings of recent quarters, Mellon Bank came in second, with an 86-cent return. Its earnings had been dragged down for a while as a result of its acquisition in 1983 of the Girard Bank in Philadelphia. In last year's second quarter, for example, its return was only 53 cents. But its strong-willed restructuring of Girard appears to have paid off.

The Bankers Trust New York Corp. remained among the top three, with a 74-cent rate of return on net income applicable to common stockholders, compared with 64 cents in the period a year earlier.

And the Chemical New York Corp., whose basic profitability has been improving significantly, placed fourth with a 70-cent return, up sharply from the 48 cents earned in the comparable period of 1984.

A key reason for the strong profitability has been the continuing decline in interest rates: On loans to small businesses and consumers, in particular, the banks have not been reducing the amount of interest they charge on loans as fast as their own interest costs have been declining.

Robert B. Albertson, an analyst for Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co., says the relatively high interest rates being charged have been discouraging borrowing. "For the larger banks there is no loan growth," Albertson said, and he predicted the future profitability of the banks will depend partly on their ability to put more loans on their books.

Another problem they will have to deal with, he said, is the continuing high level of loan losses. "Much depends on whether the loan-loss provisions will come down," Albertson said. "If we're going into another recession, I'd be concerned."

Although the economy may be slowing down, and might even be entering a new recessionary period, most banks reported high provisions to loan losses during the second quarter. Usually loan losses are low in this phase of the economic cycle.

Even Morgan doubled its provision for loan losses to $90 million in the latest quarter, from $45 million in the second quarter of 1984.

Petroplex S&L sale terminated

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

A contract for the sale of Petroplex Savings & Loan to Dallas investor Jack Sommerfield has expired, according to Jim Everett, president.

The contract to sell the Midland savings & loan to Sommerfield for $43.25 per share less legal and accounting considersations, apparently collapsed when Sommerfield was unable to obtain necessary financing to close the sale.

The contract for the sale was originally approved by the stockholders April 30 and expired June 15, but was extended by the board for another 30 days to allow Sommerfield to coordinate financial arrangements. He was unable, however, to complete the contract after the Federal Home Loan Bank reportedly failed to approve Sunbelt Savings as lender for the sale.

Under terms of the agreement Petroplex stockholders would have received not less than $40.15 per share for 100,000 shares outstanding. The stock originally sold for $15.75 when the firm was founded in June 1982.

"We are uncertain at this time whether to remain independent or to seek a new buyer," said Everett. "We originally had a good price for a sale, but now feel it right be to the best advantage of our stockholders if we remain independent. Big is not always better."

Everett said the lending firm had originally entertained a sale to provide Petroplex with a statewide organization and the ability to capitalize upon the hot real estate markets outside the Midland market.

"We are a traditional s&l," he said. "Our board has never been comforatable with commericial or oil and gas loans. We're basically a real estate lender."

Everett said Petroplex was attuned to attuned to high performance, but had been unable maintain anticipated high volumes within the confines of the Midland market. During the month of June, the firm made only $7 million in loans compared to $30-$40 million per month during the boom. He said to generate those high volumes the Petroplex board had decided to use a sale as a vehicle to go outside the Midland market to generate loans in areas such as Austin and Dallas where the real estate market is very active.

"At this point, the board doesn't know if it will seek a new buyer or not. If we remain locally-owned and independent, we will continue to be a valuable asset to Midland," said Everett, who continues to act as temporary chairman of Petroplex following the resignation of W.V. Roberts.

Everett said Petroplex was considering the $250,000 earnest money put up by Sommerfield to be its money, but was seeking legal counsel on the matter.

Panhandle Pipe Line cuts prices by seven percent

HOUSTON--(SWN)--Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co. has announced that it will reduce its wholesale rates by seven percent, effective Sept. 1. PEPL is a subsidary of Panhandle Eastern Corporation.

The lower rates were filed with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission as PEPL's regular purchased gas adjustment (PGA) covering the six-month period of September through February 1986.

The rate schedules supercede the PEPL "summer sale" discount which runs through August. For those utility customers using the "summer sale" rates, the September reduction will be a decrease of two-percent below the "summer sale" level.

The PEPL commodity rate, the key component in its wholesale charges to utility customers, will be $3.34 per million Btu (MMBtu) on Sept. 1, down from $3.61 in September 1984 (seven percent) and $3.94 in September 1983 (15 percent).

The upcoming reduction is made possible by a decrease in the amount of deferred gas purchase costs (A) included in rates and lower gas costs primarily from affiliate supplier Trunkline Gas Co. The lower Trunkline costs are from a rate settlement which is pending FERC approval.

The primary PEPL market area covers large portions of Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri. The pipeline also has customers in Kansas and Texas.

Site selection ends national scramble for GM auto plant

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

DETROIT — Sometime very soon, perhaps this week, General Motors will announce where it will build its Saturn plant, and the monthslong frenzy surrounding the selection of a site for the most sought-after industrial development of the 1980s will finally end.

When that happens, governors desperately seeking Saturn will no longer appear on the Phil Donahue show to explain why their states are just right for the new, $5 billion GM subsidiary. Billboards on Detroit's freeways paid for by cities and states such as Chicago, Youngstown, Ohio, Iowa and Missouri in an effort to woo the economic plum will come down. And eager Detroit-area newspaper reporters will no longer search garbage cans in back of GM office buildings for hints about where Saturn will land.

Ever since GM announced in January that its new Saturn subsidiary will build a plant somewhere in the United States in a last ditch effort to compete profitably with the Japanese in producing small cars, the battle for Saturn has been noisy and fierce.

Politicians have been after Saturn because GM has been touting it as the most important project in the modern history of the auto industry. The company has even taken to describing Saturn as the private sector equivalent of the Apollo moon-landing project of the 1960s — a huge, crash project with an ambitious goal — to outdo the Japanese at their own small car game. (GM even named Saturn after the rocket that took American astronauts to the moon.)

THE AUTOMAKER set up an independent subsidiary with assets of $5 billion in an effort to build a cost-competitive subcompact in a high-tech assembly complex expected to employ 6,000 workers by the end of the decade, and almost every state has hungrily sought the venture.

In addition, Saturn is expected to indirectly create another 14,000 jobs, including many at outside parts suppliers and service companies located near the assembly complex.

Governors of 27 states have shuttled in and out of Detroit since January to meet with GM Chairman Roger B. Smith, and 35 to 40 states have officially submitted bids, a GM spokesman says. GM initially planned to look at just 20 locations around the country and make its site decision by the end of April, but it was forced to delay the announcement after being stunned by an enormous outpouring of interest in Saturn.

Company spokesman Stan Hall says state and local government leaders have submitted data on about 1,000 potential sites for Saturn, and GM executives have filled 20 large office cabinets with data submitted by the various states and individual communities.

LAST WEEK, GM officials said they have finally selected a site, but they won't announce it until the company hammers out a labor agreement with the United Auto Workers covering Saturn's workers. Sources at the UAW, meanwhile, say they hope to put the finishing touches on a contract within the next few days, and that both the new contract and the Saturn plant's site could be announced simultaneously later this week.

UAW officials say last-minute wrangling inside the union over controversial contract language that would fundamentally alter the union's relationship with management has delayed an announcement of a Saturn labor accord, which had been expected last week.

Despite the press scrutiny and heavy political lobbying, however, GM has been remarkably successful in keeping its secret. The current betting in Detroit is that the Saturn plant will be built in one of three communities — Schoolcraft Township, Mich., about 20 miles south of Kalamazoo; Shelbyville, Ky., about 30 miles east of Louisville, or Spring Hill, Tenn., about 30 miles south of Nashville.

ALTHOUGH GM has labeled as "highly speculative" press reports listing those locations as finalists, industry observers close to GM say they have been told that sites in Michigan, Kentucky and Tennessee are the only ones that have recently been under consideration. And local economic development officials in Kalamazoo said Monday that they were told late last week by state officials that their area, along with one or two others, is still in the running.

In fact, Kalamazoo (population 80,000) is so sure that it is a finalist that local officials are already double-checking the hotel availability for an expected horde of reporters that will descend on their southwestern Michigan community after the announcement.

"It's hard not to be informed about what's going on with Saturn around here," says Lucinda Huis, assistant director of the Kalamazoo County Economic Expansion Corporation. "It is in the headlines of all the papers and on every TV all the time. I think the press here is running out of stories. The rumor mill is running dry."

In the midst of all the speculation, one thing seems clear: most observers believe that the Saturn site selection has dragged on too long, and that GM may encounter public resentment for allowing the hopes of so many communities to be raised falsely.

CONSUMER ACTIVIST Ralph Nader has blasted GM for holding local elected leaders around the country hostage during the long process. In a letter to GM's Smith which Nader made public, he even called Sen. Donald Riegle, D.-Mich., a wimp for allegedly pledging loyalty to GM on other issues in exchange for considering Michigan as a site for Saturn. Riegle dismissed the charge.

"This (public competition for Saturn) has been sort of a mistake for GM," observes David Cole, director of the Center for the Study of Automotive Transportation at the University of Michigan. "This thing has been hyped up beyond what was reasonable, and the hysteria may be an impediment," notes Martin Anderson, a widely respected auto industry consultant. "The expectations are far too high."

Local officials in the towns rumored to be finalists seem to agree. "There is a lot of talk around town, but I'd just like to have the announcement made so we can go on with our daily business," complains Neil Hackworth, mayor of Shelbyville (population 5,500).

10-story Dallas building empty for four years

DALLAS (AP) — Because of building code violations, a high-rise condominium tailored to young professionals stands vacant in far north Dallas. It has never been occupied and, some say, may never be.

The lobby of the $4 million, 10-story Embassy Tower in Preston Center is filled with debris from unfinished construction, and the parking lot sits unused.

Cherryl Peterman, a Dallas assistant building official, said the Embassy Tower remains the only building of its size in the city to sit empty for so long.

The problem stems from unsettled building code violations, city officials say.

Ms. Peterman said the building owner failed to have electrical wiring and the sprinkler system inspected before the plumbing and wiring were sealed into the walls.

Although all the violations can be corrected, ripping out the walls and ceilings could be very costly, she said.

Last summer, the building's owner planned to convert the building into a 121-room hotel, but the idea was scrapped after city officials refused to ease rules requiring more parking spaces for tenants.

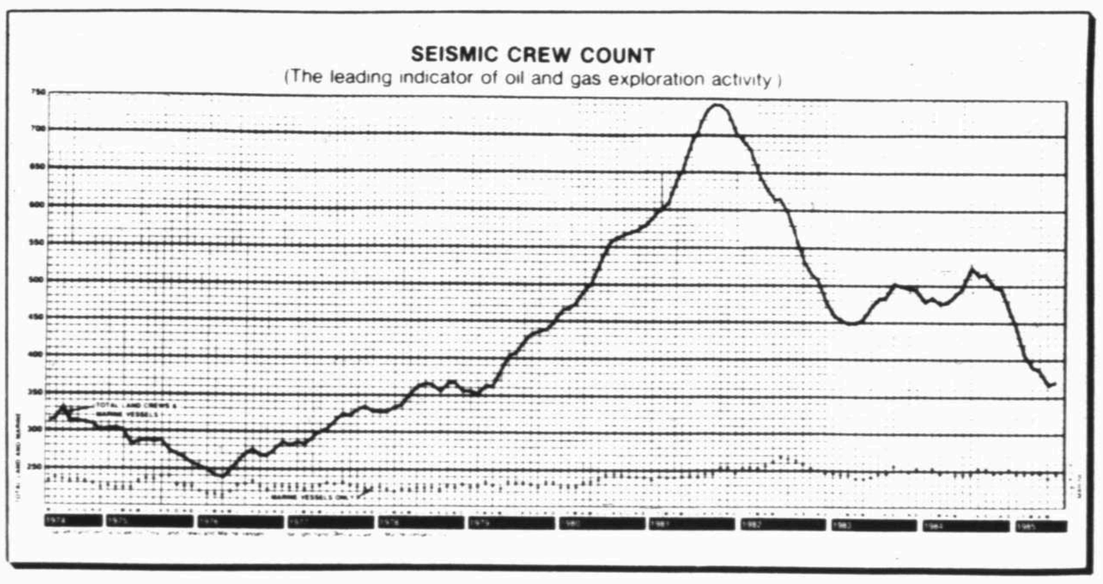

Building owner Les Longcrier, of the Addison-based Longcrier Co., was unavailable for comment.

"It's always been a mystery to me," said an elderly man who lives next door on Douglas Avenue at Wilcox Apartments. "They finished the building and there it was."

Clarke Blacker, who has lived nearby for 4½ years, said he expects the 100,000-square-foot tower to be torn down.

"I'd at least like to walk up there" to the penthouse, he said. "I think it's kind of humorous. It's a little more of man's follies. What a great waste of money."

But Blacker added, "It makes a good landmark. It's the first thing I see when I walk out my back door."

Crews increase

The number of seismic land crews and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U.S. and U.S. waters during June showed an increase for the first time since September, 1984. The land crew total increased by one crew, and the marine crew total increased by six for a net increase of seven crews. The June total represents an increase of 2 percent over last month, and a decrease of 26 percent over a year ago.

Western Co. reports $12.6 million loss

FORT WORTH—The Western Co. of North America has reported a net loss of $12.6 million, or $.32 per common share, for the quarter ended June 30, on revenues of $132.6 million. In the same 1984 quarter, the company reported a net loss of $3.7 billion, or a loss of $.12 per common share, on revenues of $146.7 nillion.

H.E. Chiles, Chief Executive Officer, said "During 1985's second quarter, Western's markets for domestic pressure pumping services continued to reflect low demand and resultant industry excess capacity. This contributed to further increased price competition, thus limiting improvement in revenues and operating margin for Western Co. Although this segment's revenues and operating margins declined from the levels recorded for the second quarter of 1984, they were up slightly from the first quarter of 1985."

Chiles also noted that "Western Oceanic, our offshore drilling subsidiary, reported virtually unchanged revenues and operating margins from the first quarter of 1985, in spite of a decline in average industry utilization of drilling rigs for the second quarter. Second quarter revenues were significantly below those in the same 1984 quarter, due to five relatively high day rate drilling contracts expiring in late 1984 and early 1985. Western Oceanic's fleet utilization for the second quarter aveaged 90 percent compared with 96 percent a year ago."

PUC staff submits SWB service recommendations

AUSTIN (AP) — The Public Utility Commission staff has recommended that Texas residential telephone customers pay 35 cents to 45 cents more a month for Southwestern Bell local service.

The PUC said Bell had asked for monthly residential increases ranging from $1.50 to $2.

The local rate increase would depend on the city's group classification. Telephone customers in Laredo and Longview, for example, would pay 35 cents more a month under the PUC staff proposal but those in Houston and Dallas would pay 45 cents.

Business rate increases proposed by the staff Monday would range from 80 cents to $1.20 a month. Bell proposed rate increases ranging from $3.55 to $5.25 per month.

Increases would be added to current rates ranging from $19.15 to $28.25.

The business and local exchange rates would raise an estimated $41.7 million, which is less than half of the overall staff rate increase recommendation of $92.7 million.

Bell asked for an additional $277 million in a hearing that began July 1 and is continuing.

The PUC staff recommended a 4.2 percent increase in Bell long distance rates, which would raise $11.2 million.

A 3-minute daytime call from Dallas to Cleburne would go up 3 cents, to $1.09, which is 16 cents less than the Bell proposal. The same call from Houston to Galveston also would go up 3 cents to $1.09, again 16 cents under Bell's request. Austin residents would pay $1.27 for a 3-minute call to Lampasas, up 6 cents but 16 cents less than sought by Bell.

The staff recommended adoption of Bell's proposal to reduce free directory assistance calls from five to three. After three calls, each call to directory assitance would be billed at the current rate of 30 cents.

Increases also were recommended for WATS, CENTREX, Touch Tone and Custom calling.

No increases were recommended for service connection charges, coin telephone or private line services. However, the PUC said in a statement, El Paso private line customers — former Mountain States' customers — will see an increase in private line service to bring those rates up to the level of current Bell rates.

The PUC said the hearing on the staff's specific rate proposals is expected to begin in mid-August.

Long distance competitors plan merger

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two of the smaller nationwide long-distance telephone companies have agreed to merge, vowing to become "a major force in our industry."

The merger of Allnet Communications Services of Chicago and Lexitel Corp. of Birmingham, Mich. continues the shakeout of the long-distance market, long dominated by American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The creation of a new long-distance company comes on the heels of the marriage of IBM's SBS phone system and MCI, the second-largest long-distance company.

In the merger arrangement, Allnet shareholders will receive $15 million cash, $40 million in 10 percent securities and 21.6 million common shares in the new company.

The smaller Lexitel must contribute $43 million in new investment to the merged company. Its shareholders will also get 21.6 million shares of stock.

Meanwhile, AT&T told the Federal Communications Commission Monday there was no need to grant a June 17 request by Allnet and three other companies to slow deregulation of the long-distance industry.

The small companies said such a move would help preserve competition. But AT&T said the granting the request would amount to setting an "anti-competitive, re-regulatory agenda."

The commission had been asked to consider whether deregulation of the telephone industry is happening too fast for competition to take hold.

The four smaller companies had asked the FCC to go slow in removing restraints on AT&T to give them time to grow stronger. But AT&T said the competitors were "asking the commission to protect them from the very competition they claim to seek."

The smaller companies want access to lists of AT&T's subscribers and information on their long-distance calling patterns.

AT&T's response said the competitors "want to appropriate to themselves a a variety of AT&T assets, instead of incurring the normal competitive expense of developing their own."

Michael Richer, chairman and chief executive officer of Allnet, said the combined company will still be a distant fourth behind AT&T, MCI, and GTE Corp.'s Sprint system.

But he said the new company is "reaching critical mass. The bigger you get, the more traffic you carry, the more traffic you carry, the lower the cost of carrying that traffic."

Lexitel chairman George asilakos and Richer said in a joint statment: "We believe that a number of consolidations will take place in the long-distance market during the next two years and are confident that through this combination we will continue, profitably, as a major force in our industry."

Both Lexitel and Allnet have ended up with many subscribers in small- and medium-sized businesses.

If you're in the 50% bracket, cut that CD rate in half.

Or subtract 55%. (Or whatever your taxable income bracket is.) Since Certificates of Deposit are subject to the IRS, that CD interest rate is not what you'll put in your pocket.

Howard Weil has alternatives to the CD; many of which are tax free: the Alliance Tax Exempt Fund, Short Term Municipal Bonds, and Nuveen-10-year Trust to name a few.

Even those investments with taxable earnings have high enough rates to survive taxation. For instance, Howard Weil's Franklin U.S. Government Securities Fund pays taxable monthly dividends, but the rate is 11.3%.

Call a Howard Weil representative, or mail in the attached coupon. We'll send you our list of alternatives to the CD, complete with the taxable equivalent earnings. Much better than the half picture.

Be the smartest investor you know.

This is neither an offer to sell nor a solicitation of an offer to buy. Nuveen, Alliance, and Franklin offers are made only by the prospectus which includes full charges and expenses. Rates are as of July 17, 1985.

☐ Before I re-invest my CD, please send me information on the alternatives at Howard Weil.

Rancher, horticulturist propose farmers' market

Timber Floyd

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The concept of a farmers market in Midland to bring added income to cotton-poor farmers and to offer consumers "quality" produce fresh from the farm may turn into reality.

Rancher Timber Floyd and horticulturist Guy Richards in representing a group of Midland farmers proposed the concept to Midand County Commissioners Monday. Farmers markets operate successfully in such places as Dallas, Weatherford, Houston, Lubbock and San Antonio.

"It could become the hub of the agricultural community," speculated Richards. "It would really be good for the farmers if we could get a market (established)."

"It sounds like a very good idea to me," said County Judge Bill Ahders.

Cotton farmer Vernon Chandler of the Warfield community and Richards already are producing marketable produce. Richards, 29, has developed a market for his produce at a restaurant and a grocery store. Chandler is selling from his farm. And Floyd, who ranches southeast of Midland in the Spraberry area, is considering hydroponic farming by growing vegetables in nutrient-rich water.

RECENTLY, ABOUT 40 Midland County farmers gathered at the Midland County Texas Agricultural Extension Service Building to discuss crops; about 15 of the number indicated an interest in growing produce to supply a farmers market.

"There are people that need this market," Richards said, "and need it because they are in trouble financially."

Floyd and Richards said County Agent Earnest Kiker, who is on vacation, is promoting the idea.

"This is something that we started from scratch," said Floyd, a 41-year-old rancher-lawyer. "It can be a good market for the community. It can produce some good income for the farmers."

"We're hoping for a fall market," said Richards, who is growing asparagus, tomatoes, canteloupes, black-eyed peas and peaches using drip irrigation on part of his 22-acre tract southeast of Midland. "I'll have a good crop of tomatoes for the fall market.

"We're going to sell better quality fresh fruit and vegetables" than are available in grocery stores."

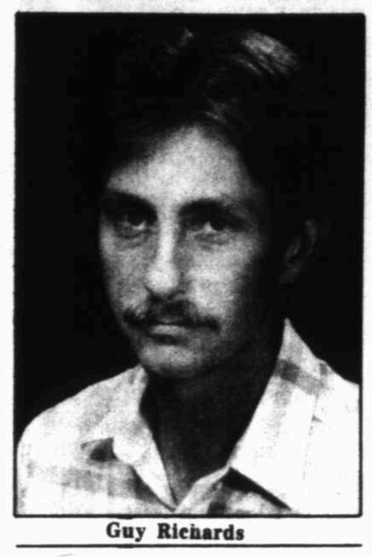

However, Richards said it may be next year before a farmers market gets established if farmers already have not planted for fall sales. Richards said he wants to get into farming but economically can't afford the capital expenditure and land required for farming cotton. Besides, he said, in today's market, cotton farming is or can be a losing venture, since the price for cotton often is below production costs, which is pegged at about 50 cents a pound.

RICHARDS SAID farmers growing produce could earn $300 to $400 per month during the several months of the harvest season, but that cotton farmers might earn only $200 per acre in one year. However, he did note that vegetable farming could be labor intense.

Meanwhile, persons interested in setting up a farmers market first must set up an association of producers.

"There are a lot of things that will grow here," Richards said, "but there is no (developed) market. Most of what you are looking at is being produced. It's just not being marketed."

Officer testifies in criminal-solicitation trial

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Taped conversations between a man accused of plotting murder-for-hire and a Midland County sheriff's lieutenant posing as a hit man were played for a 238th District Court jury this morning as testimony resumed in the criminal-solicitation trial of Mohammed Majid.

Lt. Roy Harrison described a March 23 meeting with the defendant in which Harrison, posing as a hit man, showed Majid "evidence" of the supposed murder, including a faked photograph of a woman lying dead in a field.

But Majid refused payment until he had more evidence, Harrison said. Shortly afterward, officers moved in and arrested Majid.

The trial began Monday with testimony from a key witness whose disappearance had led District Attorney Al Schorre to offer a plea-bargain arrangement to the 28-year-old Majid last week. Majid had agreed to the deal but backed out when reporters showed up at his hearing Friday. Instead, he vowed to go to trial and face a possible sentence of five to 99 years or life in prison.

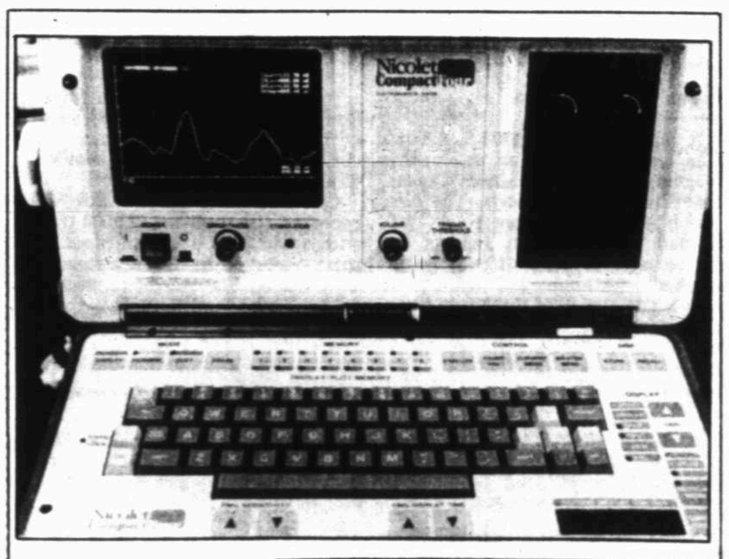

Robert Campbell, the man who brought the case to the Sheriff's Office, had fled the state, placing the prosecution's case in jeopardy. But he returned to Midland of his own accord Saturday, according to Schorre.

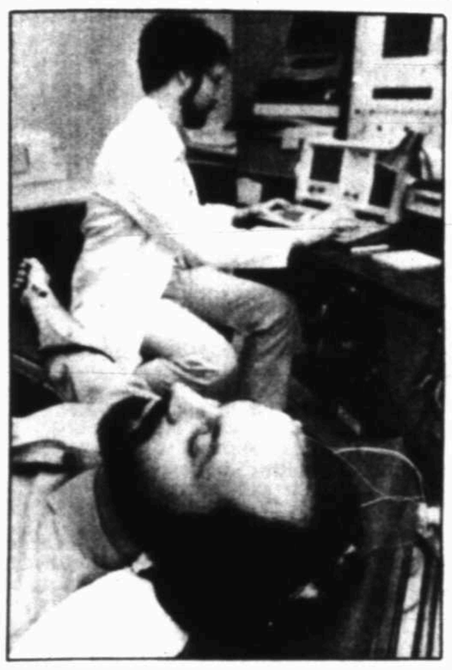

"Did you leave the area unannounced for reasons of your own personal safety?" asked Schorre after Campbell had testified Monday that Majid approached him with a murder-for-hire scheme.

"Yes sir," replied Campbell, who remained unruffled under aggressive cross-examination by defense attorney Edward T. Garza. According to Campbell, Majid wanted to hire him to murder his brother Khalid Majid's ex-wife, who was apparently denying Khalid visitation rights to his 3-year-old daughter.

Campbell, 52, worked as a truck driver for the Fairgrounds Fruit Stand on Fairgrounds Road, which is near the Kent convenience store where both Majid brothers were working. He said he visited the store

Machine tests brain, nervous system

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Dean Rector, a neuro-diagnostic specialist at Midland Memorial Hospital, works daily with Evoked Potentials.

However, Rector, 28, and a newcomer to Midland, is not the well-adjusted result of group therapy or the enlightened benefactor of a self-help best seller. He is the overseer of an expensive piece of hospital equipment that in his own words, "is the only effective way to diagnose multiple sclerosis."

Evoked Potential (EP's), is a $40,000 mobile unit consisting of a computer terminal, a testing screen and various odds and ends of electronic wizardry that, in the hands of a trained technician, test the brain and nervous system for proper functioning.

"It's a very useful type of neurological testing," said Rector who has been working with the systems since 1982. "EP's can be used to test for a variety of neurological problems such as MS, certain types of hearing loss, tumors, and eye problems."

One of the more useful aspects of EP's is the ability to test unconscious, comatose and infant patients, he added.

The mobile unit is wheeled to the patient's bedside and the test run in "about an hour." A series of three tests can be done, but the combination depends upon the patient's particular problem.

The first step, according to Rector, is to paste three to 10 electrodes onto the scalp with a white "toothpaste-like" substance that washes out easily.

Lawyer: Client fired because she knew of 'irregularities'

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A Fort Stockton attorney representing a former Ector County data processing programmer contended Monday 35-year-old Tana Stewart Perry was fired because she "became aware of irregularities in the department and did not want to become a participant."

Stephen W. Spurgin told Commissioners Court members Ms. Perry was hired Nov. 1, 1984 and soon became aware of the alleged irregularities and began making notes and keeping records.

Spurgin said Ms. Perry made Precinct 2 Commissioner Bryan Henderson aware of her suspicions and that she was fired shortly thereafter. The Fort Stockton attorney would not specify the nature of the alleged "irregularities," but courthouse sources have indicated computer equipment purchases may be involved.

In a letter to County Judge Jan Fisher dated July 17, Spurgin asked that commissioners "hear Ms. Perry's statement of the facts leading up to the termination of her employment and for the Commissioners Court to take action on Ms. Perry's request to be reinstated to her former position."

Spurgin also asked that the hearing be in open court rather than a closed executive session.

Addressing county commissioners Monday morning, Stephen W. Spurgin asked the court to investigate the June 25 termination of Ms. Perry by data processing manager Mike Holden and to order her reinstatement and payment of back pay pending the outcome of an investigation.

Ms. Fisher took exception to the request for an open hearing during Monday's regular session, questioning whether such a hearing might violate the rights of other people.

Responding to a question from the judge, County Attorney Gary Garrison said he didn't see how the matter could be addressed in open court

Painter: More than $36,000 spent in inmate transfer

Midland County has spent an estimated $36,015 in transferring inmates to other county jails in the last three months, Sheriff Gary Painter told the Midland County commissioners on Monday.

The costs include fees for housing more than 200 inmates in six West Texas county jails, noted Lt. Bennie Cureton of jail operations.

Painter said other expenses include the wages deputies are paid to transport prisoners to and from the Midland County jail, fuel, oil and other vehicle expense. Midland County also is liable for any medical expenses incurred by farmed-out Midland inmates.

"It's pretty high right now," said Painter.

"That's more money now than we do have budgeted," said Commissioner Win Brown.

Commissioner Durward Wright estimated the annual cost of farming out inmates to be as high as $140,000.

The sheriff began farming out inmates on April 23 after the Texas Commission on Jail Standards placed Midland County under a remedial order and limited inmate population to 85.

Meanwhile, the sheriff and Commissioners C. Wallace "Wally" Craig and Wright are to meet with the Jail Commission in Austin on Wednesday on the county's request to obtain variances on rules affecting the jail's planned renovation.

LANA CUNNINGHAM

Who said women don't have 'the right stuff?'

"Be a teacher," they said.

That was the popular advice given young girls by high school counselors many years ago when I was approaching the threshold of high school graduation and facing the empty blackness of college.

I had to do SOMETHING and teaching, I knew for a fact, was not my calling.

What I really wanted to do was become an astronaut. I preferred the empty blackness of space to that of college. But friends laughed at the idea. The counselors guffawed.

"Women can't become astronauts. Only men can do that," they said. "How would you use the bathroom on a spaceship with all those men? And how could you expect to spend a week alone in space with all those men." (True, living with my dog is much easier than spending a week in a confined space with a group of men).

So I dropped my dreams of flying in space and defied the wishes of God, mother and other knowledgeable people and became a journalist.

But what did NASA do? They started putting women in space. And last week was the ultimate blow — they chose a teacher. A woman. And the runnerup was another woman. Out of the hundreds of thousands of teachers in this country, it was two women who ranked the highest.

In recent years I discovered I wasn't the only female who had dreamed of going into space. One day at lunch a friend was talking about how she decided to major in a particular field at college. She paused and then lowered her voice. "If you promise not to laugh, I'll tell you what I really wanted to do."

She looked around and then said, "I wanted to be an astronaut, but my high school counselor talked me out of it."

Space always fascinated me. I remember the talk when the first space ship went up with a monkey. And I remember climbing out of bed in the early morning hours to watch John Glenn's flight take off, and then doing the same thing for each succeeding flight.

That first moon walk consumed my waking hours one July and became a priority over my birthday. And now as each shuttle takes off, a little bit of my dreams go with it.

When "The Right Stuff" came along, I rushed to the local theater and flew in my imagination along with those astronauts. But I was dismayed to see numerous parents dragging along their young sons, not daughters, to get some inspiration. It was I who was inspired. When I came out of the theater, I had pushed Ms. Panther (my car) up to 70 mph on the Loop before my head came out of the stars and I realized I wasn't in a rocket ship defying earth's graviational pull.

When the TV series "Space" was aired last spring, I forced my parents during a vacation to give up their sitcoms so I could watch how the space program developed.

Sally Ride's historic trip sent my heart thumping, but it also saddened me. SHE was doing what I'd always dreamed of.

Each succeeding woman astronaut has torn down those old stigmas that flying in space was only a job for men and proven that women, indeed, can boost the program. They have given additional technology and, in some cases, simple common sense the space program never had before.

Looking back, it's easy to blame the counselors for their outdated ideas of what a woman could do for my not being an astronaut today.

But with a degree of chagrin, I can now say I should have been a teacher. And then I could have become an astronaut.

Lana Cunningham is assistant city editor of the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

MISD tax levy raised 13.7 percent for '84-85

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — State aid to local schools increased by $1 billion last year to a total of $4.6 billion. To pay for it, the special session of the legislature last summer enacted the largest tax bill in the state's history.

Not to be outdone, school trustees in the 1,068 local school districts levied the largest school property tax increase in history — $519 million — for a total tax bill of $4.1 billion.

Locally, the Midland Independent School District's tax levy was increased by 13.7 percent for 1984-85 as compared to a 14.3 percent increase for the average school district in Texas. The Greenwood Independent School District reported a decrease in its tax levy by 1.2 percent.

The figures come from the latest issue of "Bench Marks for 1985-86 School District Budgets in Texas," an annual publication of the Texas Research League, an Austin-based educational corporation engaged in governmental research.

School budgets adopted last year called for spending $3,103 per student for current operations. MISD's budget provided for $3,026.55 per student based on the 15,960 students in average daily attendance in 1983-84. GISD's budget called for $3,091 per student based on its enrollment of 1,138.

Four of each five of these dollars were spent for salaries. Statewide, payroll expense averaged $2,487 per student, as compared to $2,518 in MISD and $2,198 in GISD. Payroll expense is a combination of salary levels and staffing patterns.

The average salary for classroom teachers paid by MISD in 1983-84 was $23,199. GISD reported teacher salaries were $18,889. The average among all school districts in Texas was $20,117 per classroom teacher.

There was an average of one teacher for 5.2 students at MISD and 3.5 students at GISD compared to a statewide pupil-teacher ration of 1 to 16.2. Because of small classes, especiall at the high school level, and abbreviated teaching schedules, many classes have more than the average number of students. The new law require no more than 22 student in kindergarten, first or second grade classes this fall.

School property tax rates in 1984-85 average $0.622 per $100 of market value (selling price). The school tax on property selling for $100,000 was $622 in the average school district. Locallyk the rate on market value in MISD was $0.662 or $662, and $0.998 or $998 in GISD on a property selling for $100,000.

If the property were a homestead or owned by a senior citizen, the school tax would be less because of various exemptions. Open-space land that qualified would be valued on its productivity value rather than market value.

Revenue lost from exemptions totaled $780 million, which was $99.5 million more than the total for the previous year, according to statistics. To balance school budgets, the revenue loss from exemptions was imposed upon other taxpayers in the school district.

As compared to the billion-dollar increase in state aid last year, only $129 million more state funds will be distributed to schools next year; meaning 492 school districts will receive more while the remaining 576 districts will receive less. This strategy to equalize presupposes that local property taxes will remain about the same. However, the large property tax increase last year, the report concludes, substantially negated the equalization improvement that the Legislature tried to achieve.

'Suspicious' fire damages house

From Staff Reports

A vacant house at 1302 S. Atlanta was heavily damaged early this morning by a fire of unknown cause, according to fire reports. The fire, which began in a store room, was termed "suspicious" by reports. Reported at 2:56 a.m., it was extinguished with about 2,000 gallons of water. The owner of the house is unknown, reports said.

TRIAL

frequently and often talked with Khalid Majid about his problems with his ex-wife, 24-year-old Lisa Bell, who had remarried and was living in Abilene with their daughter Amber.

"He (Khalid) seemed kind of upset about it," said Campbell, and Mohammed Majid "was kind of hostile against the child's mother."

Around March 10, "He said he wanted to talk to me about a personal problem," Campbell testified. "He told me he wanted the child kidnapped and taken to Mexico and the other problem eliminated."

Campbell said he told Majid he wouldn't do it, but might know someone who would. Then he had second thoughts.

"I thought it over and I called the Texas Rangers."

They told him to call the Sheriff's Office. On March 19, sheriff's officers taped several conversations in which Campbell told Majid he'd found a friend who could help him. The two discussed setting up a meeting with the man at the Executel Motel at Midland Regional Airport. Majid agreed to pay $3,000 and $400 for expenses for the job, but never specifically mentioned what it was about. He also refused Campbell's repeated suggestion that he pay the man some of the money up front.

"I will know immediately when it's done," Majid said on the tape. "And by God right then and there the money you'll see."

"Robert, I trust you," he told Campbell at one point, but he didn't trust the man they were going to meet — "I don't know him. I need to be on guard — How would I know the place is not bugged?"

Harrison testified Monday afternoon that Majid was suspicious when they met at the Executel on March 20. He said Majid wanted to check him for sound equipment, but Harrison refused: "I said I wasn't going to play cops and robbers. I was down here to do a job."

Harrison said Majid gave him his former sister-in-law's photograph and address in Abilene.

Majid, a native of Bangladesh who is in this country on a student visa, has been held in county jail on a $250,000 bond since his arrest. At the time, he told reporters he had been "set up," and had only wanted to hire someone to locate, not to kill, his brother's ex-wife.

MACHINE

The electrodes record the responses of the brain to stimuli used in testing.

Then, three tests may be given —, an auditory test, consisting of loud clicking and static noised transmitted through headphones; a visual test of flashing patterns on a television screen or goggles placed over the patient's eyes or an arm; and leg test, with mild electrical shocks administered to the wrist or ankle.

The entire process, according to Rector is painless, using no needles, drugs or radiation.

While testing patients with the system can get monotonous, said Rector, there are some exciting and some unforgettable episodes, as well.

He remembers the time an elderly patient died as he was testing her.

"It had nothing to do with EP's," he said. "She was very ill and wasn't expected to last much longer."

Still, the patient's death was unexpected by Rector, who for a brief moment, was baffled by the lack of response during testing.

Monitoring surgery patients is a routine part of Rector's job.

"EP's is very useful in detecting possible problems, particularly in spinal cord surgery," he said. "Before, some problems wouldn't show up until after the surgery was completed, but now if I notice something that doesn't look right, I can mention it to the surgeon while he is operating."

Experiments with EP's outside of the hospital environment are bringing exciting results in education, as well, said Rector.

"When I was working at the Neuro-Psychology Brain Research Laboratory at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville, they were doing some testing that was related to learning disabilities," he said.

"They were actually testing for LD, normal and gifted children and trying to come up with a better way to group them than what is normally done."

Rector, who holds a degree in environmental science, stated that the Evoked Potentials field is relatively new.

"There are no schools that teach EP testing," he said. "The company will teach how to use the machine, but you basically have to find a doctor who understands them and who will work with the technician in setting up laboratory procedures."

Rector added that Duke University has a program, but it is essentially "on the job training."

Although he has worked with EP's in Tennessee, Rector stated that every machine must have a "data base" to determine what is normal, so that abnormal responses can be identified.

"The readings can vary from location to location due to a variety of factors such as electricity in the air," he said.

Rector is currently searching for volunteers to establish baseline values for the system.

"Healthy men and women of all ages are needed," said a statement from MMH. "The tests are not painful and do not involve needles, drugs or radiation. All test records will remain on file. Tests may be scheduled for days and early evenings, Monday through Friday, by calling Dean Rector at 685-1623. The test will take approximately 1½ hours."

MARKET

And then the farmers would develop a site or sites for the shaded but open-air market for their farm products.

Floyd and Richards said they had considered setting up a sales market somewhere along the heavily trafficked Loop 250, in one of the city's shopping centers, or on or about the downtown courthouse square. But they said some city council members nixed some of the more favorable sites along the loop because the city's zoning laws provide for enclosed retail sites and not for open-air or partially closed buildings.

SOME CITY OFFICIALS "were really very, very supportive and excited," Richards said.

Chandler, whose main cash crop is cotton, said he was "real surprised" at the interest in a farmers market here.

"I think there's a good chance for it if we organize right and don't open up before it's ready," he said. "First impressions are pretty important."

Each year, he plants two or three gardens. This year, he has planted black-eyed peas, squash, orka, watermelons and some canteloupes. He sells his produce on a "pick-your-own deal." He said "a lot of people really enjoy it."

Floyd said a farmers market wouldn't disrupt the already-established food market.

"We can't compete with the guys out of Chicago who market produce," Floyd said. "There's no way of doing it. We're just trying to get extra money for the farmers and supply the community with fresh produce."

Crime Stoppers wants information

This week Crime Stoppers is seeking information on a July 5 crime involving the destruction of property.

Area Builders is building a new alcohol and drug rehabilitation center on Loop 250 near Thomason Drive. At 7:30 a.m. on July 5, Building Supervisor Michael White discovered that during the night, someone had entered the construction sight with a hacksaw and cut two copper water lines, allowing water to spray out. The floor was covered with about an inch of water.

This act of criminal mischief caused more than $10,000 in damage to the building. Crime Stoppers will pay a $1,000 cash reward for information resulting in the arrest and indictment of the person or persons responsible.

Call 694-TIPS in Midland or 333-TIPS in Odessa. Callers need not reveal their names to win the rewards.

without affecting the rights of other people.

Ms. Fisher also questioned whether, under the open meetings law, a former employee could ask for an open meeting on a personnel matter. She noted that current employees under the law do have the right to request either a closed or open hearing on personnel matters.

Ms. Fisher further stated she didn't feel Commissioners Court, or any other governmental body, should be used for grandstanding purposes or in an attmept to resolve a matter in the media.

Spurgin stated he didn't intend to grandstand, that it was his intention only to ask the court to investigate the circumstances of Ms. Perry's firing and that she be reinstated with back pay. The Fort Stockton attorney said he didn't intend to name names or get into specific allegations.

Spurgin also stated that if Commissioners Court members refused to hear Ms. Perry's request and grant her reinstatement he would take whatever other action was warranted.

The judge bristled, saying she didn't think Spurgin needed to threaten the court.

Precinct 4 Commissioner Willie Hammond said he would like the court to put Ms. Perry back on the payroll, without actually putting her back to work, then conduct an investigation into the circumstances of her termination. Hammond later put this in the form of a motion but it failed for lack of a second.

Ms. Fisher asked Spurgin if criminal violations were involved in Ms. Perry's allegation that she was wrongfully discharged. Spurgin said he was not prepared to discuss that now, but stated there was an "abundance of evidence" to support allegations of wrongful termination.

Commissioners finally agreed to have the county personnel office conduct an investigation but did not reinstate Ms. Perry pending the investigation that is expected to last about two weeks.

Atlas Transmission Service, located at 2810 W. Front, offers Midlanders top quality transmission service on commercial and personal vehicles. Even standard transmissions, clutches, foriegn cars, and 4x4 transfer cases are no problem for these professionals.

The Atlas franchise was started 22 years ago and has been built on a commitment to customer satisfaction. Midland's franchise is new and manager Carl Muchler says they are anxious to establish their business by giving Midlanders the quality service they deserve. It's the Atlas tradition.

Atlas franchise owner "Mitch" Mitchell says, "know before you owe" and his customers appreciate the free tow service and free diagnostic service when the transmission does not have to be pulled. (Further diagnosis which requires the transmission to be pulled obligates the customer for $75 which may be applied to actual reconditioning or rebuilding job.) However, the quality work is what customers appreciate the most.

The experts at 2810 W. Front have combined experience of half a century. Atlas has 65 units ready to go. That means particular models can be ready in less than a day. Moreover, they stock kits for nearly every popular domestic vehicle and for most popular foreign cars. If the parts aren't in stock, Atlas can have them overnight.

As a member of the Automatic Transmission Rebuilders Association, Atlas Transmission backs its work with the Golden Rule Guarantee. Perhaps, that is why companies like Big D Equipment, TMBR Drilling and West Texas Oil and Gas have turned to Atlas Transmission for qualitiy transmission work.

Open Monday-Friday, 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m., Atlas Transmission accepts Mastercard and Visa.

Atlas Transmission, located at 2810 W. Front, handles rebuilt and reconditioned transmissions even for standard transmissions.

Remember "steam" is just a lot of water. "Rotary brushes" just take dirt for a joy ride. "Hand application" only does superficial cleaning. ONLY B & J Carpet and Upholstery's Von Schrader Carpet® Extractor shampoos deeply with a dry foam and then gets rid of the foam along with the dirt!

Warning! Before having any carpet cleaned get the facts

WARNING! Before you have your carpet cleaned on the premises know this: So-called "steam" cleaning methods can be injurious to your fine carpet. If steam (212 F) were used it would be ruinous! Actually, what is used is just hot water, sometimes with added detergent. And water left in carpert is often harmful -causing mildew, shrinkage and browning injuring carpet fibers, backing, under pad and flooring. Tests show up to six gallons of liquid left in a 9'x12' area. That's a whale of a lot of liquid! Such soggy carpet can take as much as nine hours for even the surface to dry! And that still leaves the backing, under pad and floor damp!

So, you would be well advised to play it safe by using the method recommended by leading carpet manufacturers - the Von Schrader Shampoo method used by B & J Carpet and Upholstery Cleaners. This method has been proven by more than 40 years of experience. Carpet cleaning experts Betty and Jerry Massey begin by with BeFORE Prespary in heavy traffic areas (no extra charge). Then their Von Schrader equipment deposits dry (not liquid) foam with anti resoil characteristics, brushes it deep into the pile and vacuums the soiled foam back into the machine. The dirt, engulfed in foam, is removed simultaneously before it can sink back down into the carpet. Result: your carpet is cleaned thoroughly, not superficially. Since only foam is used, carpet is ready for use in about an hour. Shrinkage, mildew and browning (often resulting from "steam" or other hot water extraction methods) are eliminated. Von Schrader is the only single unit that both shampoos and vacuums in just one pass. It's patented.

In addition, this Von Schrader Associate can get rid of smoke odors with the Smoke-X product. They also feature Du Pont Carpet Protector which will protect your carpet from future spills.

So - for a safe method with beautiful results - you'll be wise to call B & J Carpet and Upholstery Cleaners at 697-0444 for further information and free estimate. They are bonded and insured and offer senior citizens discounts.

Super-Stone® offers natural stone surface tougher than concrete

Is your concrete cracked or freeze damaged? Has your pools cool deck worn thin? Are you planning a new pool, patio, driveway or walkway? Stop...think Super-Stone®, a decorative natural stone surface of unexcelled beauty with stronger than concrete roughness at a fair price. E.O. "Gene" Duke, president of Super-Stone of the Permian Basin, Inc., explains that this durable surface is a unique, porous surfacing material designed for patios, pool decks, pool coping, walkways, steps, driveways and any other outdoor area. It is also used on indoor areas in stores, lobbies, restaurants, banks or offices where its slip-proof qualities are especially important. It can even be appied vertically on walls.

This durable surface is applied over concrete - what a beautiful way to rid your walkway of those unsightly cracks and stains. Super-Stone® is composed entirely of the world's most beautiful natural stones, pebbles, or crushed marble, granite and quartz- with over 30 colors available. It is completely natural - a surface created by nature itself - so much in keeping with today's indoor-outdoor natural look.

Super-Stone of the Permian Basin, Inc. Manager Jeff Duke says that each individual stone is coated with an "invisible shield" of Super-Stone's® crystal clear epoxy resin system. This resin system bonds each stone to the stone next to it and bonds all the stones to the subsurface below them to form a permanent locked-in-place surface that is considerably stronger than concrete.

In fact, Super-Stone® is beautiful on driveways and is so strong that is is even used in parking areas for tractor trailer trucks.

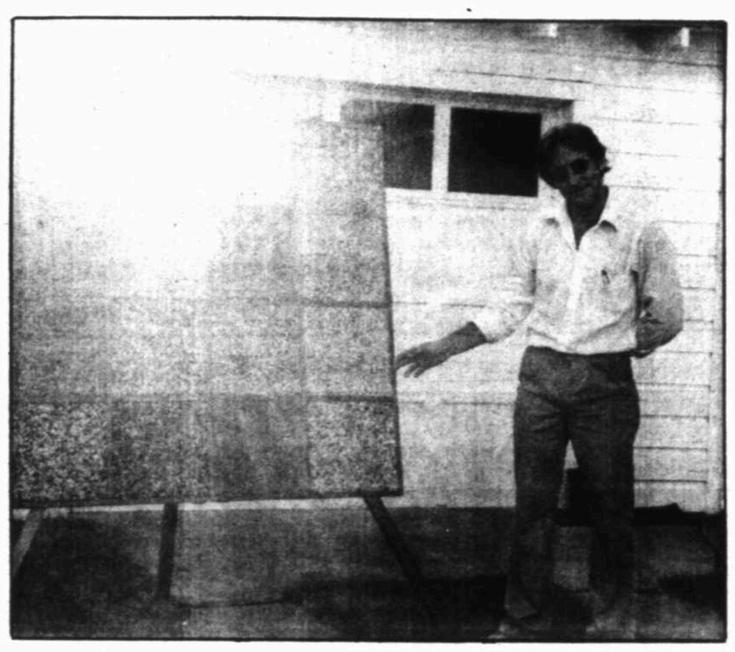

Super-Stone® surfaces are unaffected by ice,-snow, sleet, freeze or thaw. The West Texas heat - that's no problem either. Super-Stone has been installed in saunas where temperatures reach 200 F degrees, with absolutely no effect. The Super-Stone® epoxy coating does not get tacky or soft.l It's hard and solid at all times. And the stone and epoxy surface is fire proof.

Moreover, each individual stone is coated with a transparent film of Super-Stone® Resin, forever preserving the natural beauty of the stone and completely protecting the stone from the effects of salt, chemicals, gasoline, oil, other petroleum products, fertilizers, moisture and poisons.

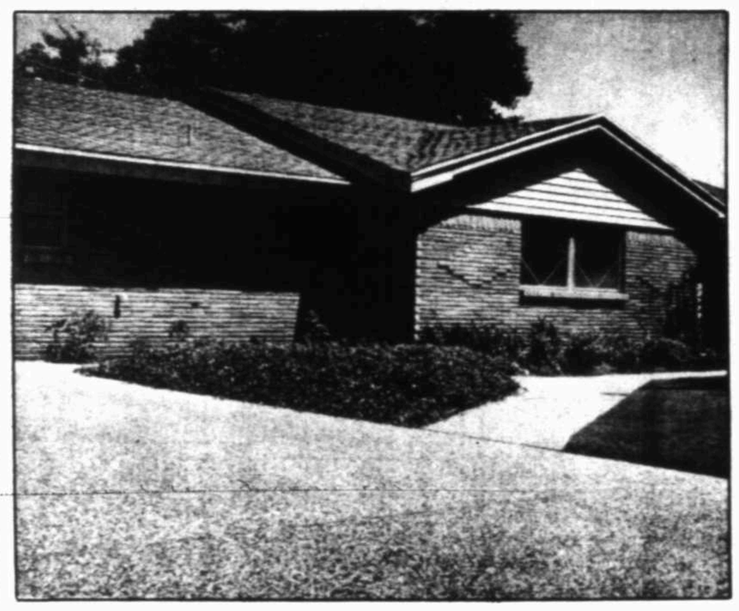

No surface is totally maintenance free. But a Super-Stone® surface is about as close as you can get. Outdoors (or indoors with proper drains) just hose it down. That's about all you'll ever have to do.

Jeff reports that you can walk on your beautiful new surface just eight hours after installation and within 48 hours you can drive your car on it.

Superstone® of the Permian Basin, Inc. gives you a beautiful and natural surface resistent to cracking, chipping and staining for years. Call the Super-Stone experts at 683-6063 or333-6198 and let them show you how this remarkable surface can enhance the beauty of your home.

Jeff Duke, manager of Super-Stone of the Permian Basin, Inc. points out that this tough surfacing product, which is applied over concrete, is available in more than 30 colors.

Super-Stone, a decorative natural stone surface designed for cool decks, sidewalks, driveways and more, will enhance the beauty of any home.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Wednesday, July 24, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: An off-again, on-again romance may not be worth all the effort involved. Listen to your intuition and become more independent. New responsibilities come your way at work. Handle them efficiently and a big promotion is possible. Keep in close touch with those who work behind the scenes. The financial outlook is brighter than ever. Review investments. An inheritance changes your needs. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Actress Lynda Carter, Ruth Buzzi, textile designer Vera, singer Bob Eberly, Sen. Charles Mathias (R-Md.), actress Alexandra Hay, aviator Amelia Earhart, South American liberator Simon Bolivar, author Alexandre Dumas.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Review old work methods and you find new ways to boost profits. Those who work at home need great self-discipline. Set regular "office hours" for yourself. A new romance creates excitement.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A financial decision may be difficult to make all alone. Seek advice from experts only. A teen-ager needs advice but is reluctant to ask for it. Make the first move.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Find a tactful way to break off an unproductive relationship. Hard work takes you where you want to go. Be more cordial when dealing with a co-worker and you will gain new cooperation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Romance plays a significant role in today's events. Catch up on correspondence. Presenting your ideas in a dramatic manner helps you win approval. You receive good news from government or court officials.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Review your options before going any further with a controversial project. Ask higher-ups for additional work space if feeling cramped. It's time to get to the heart of a romantic problem.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Follow up on a lead provided by an old friend. Discovering a valuable secret could mean greater financial security for you and your loved ones. An unexpected visitor brightens your day.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): What once seemed out of place could now be appropriate. You get a chance to move into a position of greater authority. You will know what to do when the time is right.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your timing is improving. A power play will probably succeed. Hard work and innovative ideas bring financial progress. A personal relationship becomes more rewarding when you open up.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A professional relationship is very delicate. Listen to the experts. Extra money is not nearly as important as a happy family life. That invitation to a prestigious social affair may still come.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't accept the first offer you get today. A good friend may be developing a far more interesting one. Play a waiting game. Leave your work at the office and dine with friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Check the fine print before signing final papers. Be sure you know all the players before making your move. Have faith and your prayers could be answered. Love works miracles.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): An emotional response could work to your advantage. Go ahead and wear your heart on your sleeve. Pursue a romance you have often dreamed about. You are entering a very lucky financial period.

Opening lead: Queen of ♠.

Of late, bridge had been uninteresting for Trump Coup Tommy — which is a polite way of saying that he had been losing. Suits had been breaking normally and, as our readers well know, Tommy starred only when he encountered a bad trump break. On all other hands Tommy pitched points with gay abandon in both bidding and play.

At first, Tommy thought that this was going to be another of those easy hands. He and his partner reached four hearts on a normal auction and, when dummy hit the table, it seemed that, at worst, Tommy would lose a trick in each suit except spades.

All that changed rapidly. Tommy won the opening lead with the table's ace, ruffed a spade and cashed the ace of hearts. East's spade discard was like a breath of fresh air to Tommy — he was a man transformed. Now he was faced with two trump losers, and only a very special distribution would permit him to land the contract.

Tommy played quickly and surely. He crossed to the king of diamonds, took the club finesse successfully (it would not have mattered if it lost), cashed the ace of clubs and exited with a club. East won and could exit safely enough with a diamond, won on the board with the ace. Now Tommy simply led a trump and ducked it to West, who was faced with losing alternatives.

He could either lead a trump and give up one of his trump winners, or else lead a spade, which would allow Tommy to ruff in dummy while discarding his losing diamond. Either way, the defenders could get no more than three tricks.

Dolly Parton hopes park will bury 'hillbilly' stereotypes of Hollywood

PIGEON FORGE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music star Dolly Parton says she hopes her plan to expand a 400-acre theme park into "Dollywood Park" eventually will put to rest the "hillbilly" stereotypes of Hollywood.

Miss Parton unveiled her plan Monday night at a Pigeon Forge City Council meeting held in an open air theater at the Silver Dollar City amusement park, where about 2,000 residents and fans had gathered.

"It's something I want to take pride in, to preserve the Smoky Mountain heritage rather than have Hollywood portray us as they often do," she said.

The plan, which will be considered by the council during the next two months, calls for an immediate, $5 million expansion of Silver Dollar City.

Miss Parton first proposed "Dollywood" in 1983, saying she wanted a museum to include some of her personal mementos. She and her husband, Carl Dean, own a farm in Sevier County near where she was born.

Willie Nelson

PORCUPINE, S.D. (AP) — Entertainer Willie Nelson just happened to be in the neighborhood of radio station KILI-FM, on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, so he thought he'd drop in.

Nelson, who had performed the day before in North Dakota, stayed for about three hours Sunday, signing autographs, singing a few songs on the air and taking requests before going on his way, said disc jockey Mark Tilsen.

"I wasn't here at the time," Tilsen said. "My wife called from the station and told me there was someone here who wanted to see me."

Tilsen's wife, Joann Tall, does a Lakota language program Sunday mornings at the station.

Nelson arrived at 9:15 a.m. and stayed until just after noon. He played his new albumn, "Half Nelson," which will be released soon.

"His visit gave an emotional boost to the people at the station and on the reservation," Tilsen said. "It shows he cares a lot about Indian people."

BOSTON (AP) — Rose Kennedy, the mother of two senators and a president, was honored on her 95th birthday with roses, Irish music, and the dedication of a harborside garden in her name.

Mrs. Kennedy, who is still recovering from a stroke she suffered a year ago, was unable to attend the ceremony Monday just blocks from her birthplace.

Surrounded by grandchildren and great-grandchildren, Mrs. Kennedy celebrated her birthday Sunday by attending Mass and eating birthday cake at the family's Cape Cod compound, said Brian Delaney, a Kennedy aide.

CHICAGO (AP) — Amy Carter, the 17-year-old, freckle-faced daughter of former President Jimmy Carter, is wrapping up a six-week summer job as a runner on the trading floor at the Chicago Board of Trade.

"It's not bad — when you know you're not going to be here for the rest of your life," said the soft-spoken Miss Carter, who is leaving for a 12-day trip to the Soviet Union, a high-school graduation present from her parents.

As a runner for the Shatkin Trading Co., she literally rubbed elbows with the shouting and frantically gesturing traders, but has no plans to make commodities trading her career.

"I'm sure it's not something I'd want to do," Miss Carter said. "I wouldn't like all the noise and tension."

Miss Carter has been living in suburban Evanston with her brother Jack, 38, who works on the trading floor for Continental Illinois Corp.'s futures division and helped get her the job.

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — British rockers, chased from atop the 1984 record charts by big U.S. guns such as Prince, Bruce Springsteen and Cyndi Lauper, have retaken the No. 1 spot, armed this time with synthesizers.

Tears For Fears, Phil Collins, Paul Young and Sting are among the artists dominating the top 10 of this week's Billboard magazine record sales charts, while groups like Depeche Mode and Orchestral Manoeuvres in the Dark are attracting young listeners.

"It has caught us all off guard. It seems to be a trend among teen-agers this summer," said George Briner, marketing manager for the 33 Licorice Pizza record stores.

Tears For Fears, a duo from Bath, England, was No. 1 on Billboard's album chart for the third week in a row, with Phil Collins at No. 3 for "No Jacket Required." The British group Power Station was at No. 6 for its eponymous release, and Sting's "The Dream of the Blue Turtles" was at No. 9.

No foreign act got to the top of Billboard's album charts in 1984, said Paul Grein, who writes about chart trends for the magazine. But so far in 1985, Wham!'s "Make It Big" and Phil Collins' "No Jacket Required" have both topped the album charts, along with Tears for Fears.

"I think people have looked to what Britain has done (for musical trends) since the Beatles," Curt Smith, bassist and singer for Tears For Fears, said in a recent interview.

"American rock was, and still is to some extent, a closed shop. REO Speedwagon, Toto, Boston, Foreigner — all those bands, and I wouldn't be able to tell which from which. For over 10 years, they've been playing the same things," Smith said.

"In England, people get bored very quickly," he said. "People aren't satisfied with one thing. You can have hits, but to stay there you have to start doing new things."

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Donna Russell, a 31-year-old model from Brandon, Miss., was crowned Mrs. America 1985 in Monday night's finals for the country's only beauty competition for married women.

Mrs. Mississippi, who topped representatives from every state, will represent the United States in the second anual Mrs. Woman of the World pageant in Honolulu in September.

First runnerup in the ninth annual Mrs. America pageant was Dwan Smith-Fortier, 41, of Lakeview Terrace, Calif. Second runnerup was Dianne Rooker, 38, of Pelham, Ala.

Rounding out the five finalists were Jan McGowan of Holloman Air Force Base, New Mexico, and Carmen Hughes, 30, of Walker, La.

The new Mrs. America has been married nine years and has two children.

Competitors in the pageant ranged in age from 23 to 44 and were judged on beauty, poise and personality and their appearance in swimsuit and evening gown competition.

Friden Alcatel: first in electronics, first in savings

Chaparral Mailing and Office Systems, Inc., headquartered in Midland, Texas is the exclusive agent for Friden Alcatel in the West Texas area. Friden, which has been marketed in Midland/Odessa for over 14 years, is nationally known as the leader in its electronic technolgy of postage meters, eletronic scales, mailroom charge back accounting systems and mailroom related products.

The Friden Alcatel slogan is "First in Electronics, First in Savings." Friden marketed the first electronic postage scale in 1975 which eliminates wall charts and computes postage rates at the touch of a button. Friden also introduced the first electronic postage meter in 1979 which allows the customer to spend postage down to the zero value in the meter.

Chaparral Mailing, one of 75 offices across the country, offers its customers local sales and service coverage for Midland/Odessa and the surrounding area. Friden Alcatel electronic postage meters and scales are equipped with diagnostic sensors that tell the mailroom operator if he/she can fix a minor or major problem or if the Chaparral Service Department should be called.

Each Chaparral service technician is equipped with portable diagnostic equipment that can be plugged into a customer's machine or scale. Immediately, this equipment will diagnose where the problem is, allowing it to be fixed quickly so the customer can finish getting the day's mail out.

Bob Graham is the President of Chaparral Mailing and Office Systems, Inc. He is not new to the Midland area by any means. In fact, he spent his first 18 years in Midland. The last eight years he has spent in Dallas, Texas employed by Friden Alcatel as sales manager and later as Branch Manager over the Friden Sales and Service Department for Dallas and Ft. Worth.

Bob understands the mailroom and shipping department and the necessary timeliness in getting the mail out on a daily basis. That is why his branch in Dallas had a reputation for fast dependable service whether the customer's company was large or small. His Dallas/Ft. Worth Branch won several awards for service excellence and Bob says the trend will continue in West Texas.

Just like his Dallas operation, Bob will have the same fast service philosophy here. Chaparral Mailing and Office Systems is committed to offering its customers a one to two hour servcie response time in Midland/Odessa and the surrounding areas.

It also offers a local delivery service program for its customers. Chaparral will pick up a customer's Friden postage meter and have it filled at the designated post office for a nominal charge.

Whatever size your company is, if you want to know what benefits Friden Alcatel mailroom and shipping products can offer your business, call Chaparral Mailing and Office Systems at 683-1351 or look for them in the Yellow Pages.

Underwear moves outside

Copley News Service

Corsets be hanged!

Women's undergarments, once breathtaking (literally) and binding, now are anything but confining, thanks to new fashion trends popularized by Madonna and her clones.

Underwear is outerwear in 1985, but it's been a long struggle out of the corset.

At one time, women strove for illusion or erotic appeal, corseting their torsos to achieve ultimate slimness.

Who can forget the rib-tickling (and painful) scene in "Gone With The Wind" when Scarlett O'Hara's fervent maid cinched her into a ball gown by pulling mercilessly at stays and strings?

Social freedom today means fashion freedom, and undergarment fashions have gone from restrictive to liberating.

In the 1900s corsets were stiffened with whalebone, producing an S shape from bosom to hip. Great workmanship was lavished on this tormenting undergarment whose lace and ribbon trimmings were added by hand.

THE CORSET was meant for slinking around in under form-fitting evening clothes, but certainly not meant for evening erotics, as are today's equivalents.

As dresses became scantier in the 1920s, so did underwear, in an attempt to conceal the figure without altering its natural shape.

Garter belts and strapless suspenders in colors of the rainbow were the vogue.

By the 1930s women became fascinated with Ginger Rogers' glamour and the appeal of satin and lace.

Fewer underpinnings and less altering of the female figure were the order. And less artificiality seemed charming — until the advent of synthetics.

With the introduction of rubber and elastic corsetry, the pendulum of fashion undergarments swung back. Tormenting whalebone was reintroduced.

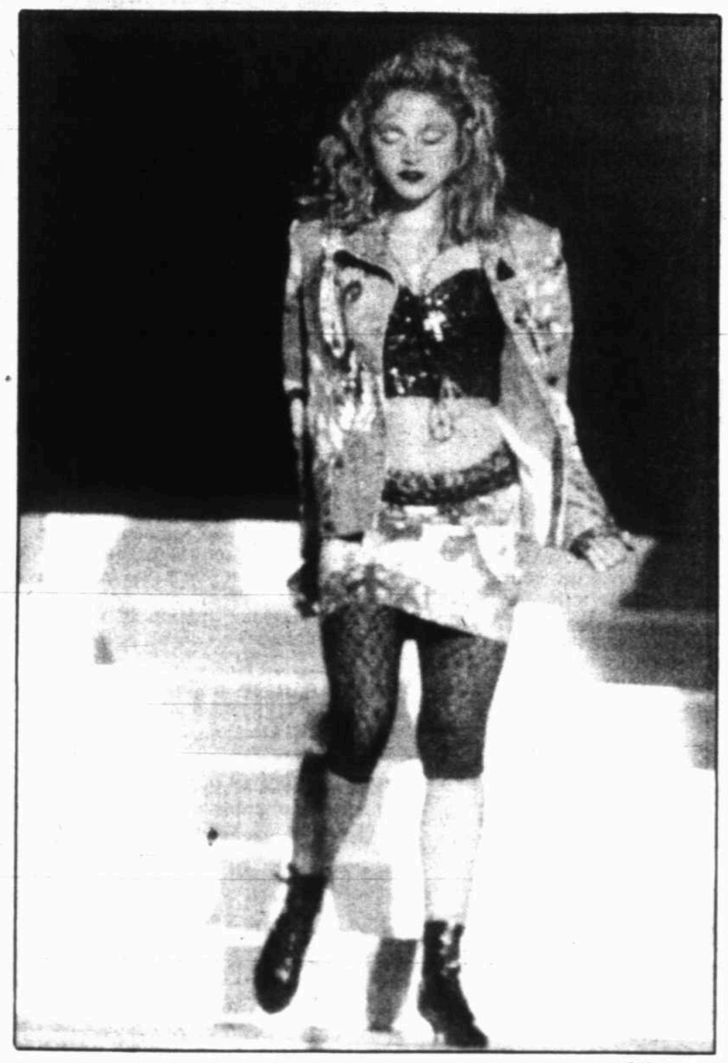

Colors were limited to white, black, coffee and peach. Gone were the homemade camisoles and underpinnings of the World War II economy.

WOMEN, FICKLE and uninterested in comfort, embraced the push-up bra and wasp-waisted corset.

Then came Twiggy and flat was that. Fashion focused on the thighs and midriff, leaving the bosom to the lingerie of the '50s.

The no-artificial-forms trend continued into the '70s, and the return of color and underwear as outerwear were the only new developments.

However, with retro '50s fashions and Madonna rising in the '80s, the corset and garter belt, along with the push-up bra, have returned to the boudoir.

While certainly not to everyone's taste, women's undergarments are at the forefront of today's fashion scene. Worn as outerwear, garter belts, push-up bras and other lingerie are gaining popularity with the help of such trendsetters as rock singer Madonna.

Body cinchers come back

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Back in 1924, just when "the new active woman" of the flapper era thought she had liberated herself from the constraints of steel boning, back lacing, front lacing, stays, hooks and garters, a headline proclaimed: "The Corset is Coming Back."

Don't look now, but it's happening again. In another of the periodic reincarnations that follow the cycles and vagaries of fashion, a control garment comeback is again in the works. The body shaper — known to other generations as corsets or girdles — is racking up increasing sales at the lingerie counter, major retailers and manufacturers report.

This latest fashion "squeeze" is timed to underpin the curvaceous, form-fitting clothes shown by many designers for fall. And despite the perception that today's "with-it" woman is staying in shape with hours spent on the Nautilus machine, aerobics, Jane Fonda workouts and jogging, many women are apparently looking for quicker solutions.

"The girdle is a state of mind," said Alan Lesk, president of the Intimate Apparel Council, which represents the $5-billion undergarment industry.

It is a state of mind familiar to the millions of old movie and TV viewers who have seen the 1939 classic, "Gone With the Wind." "Sakes alive, Miss Scarlett, do you want to shame me in front of all those gentlefolks? said Hattie McDaniel's character, Mammy, as she cinched a teen-age Scarlett O'Hara into a corset that would give her a 17-inch waist and probably a permanently truncated rib cage.

TO CONSIDER going back to such serious constraints would be "a step back to the Dark Ages," said Lesk, senior vice president of Maindenform. "What we're seeing now," he said, "is improved use of Lycra spandex stretch fabric combined with nylon or cotton to produce a kind of hybrid, a cross between a panty and a girdle. It has the appearance of a panty but with a touch of lightweight control."

By any name, the new shape wear is selling "phenomenally better than last year," according to Caroline Paull, who manages the lingerie department at Bloomingdale's in Garden City, N.Y. "I even have 16- and 17-year-olds looking for more control," Paull reported. "Young women who usually ask for something lacy like a teddy are now looking for an all-in-one that will pull in and give them a smooth line."

At Abraham & Straus, body wear buyer Marcia Clark reported a 12 percent increase in foundation sales for the first half of this year over the same period last year. Most of the expansion, she said, was in "light-control briefs and body-briefers." Among her best sellers: stretch briefs with high-cut legs, like swim suits, "that make the leg look longer and thinner."

But Clark also reported a brisk business in "heavy-duty girdles, with tummy panels, hip panels and thigh panels," as the older crowd girds for clingy knits and hip-hugging silks.

Girdle manufacturers and retailers expect the phenomenon will pick up with exposure to the new hip-conscious silhouette in the fall. That's when True Form Foundations will hit the retail market with its Subtract Elite, made of a new lighter-weight Lycra spandex and nylon fabric knit to "stretch (and come back) 200 percent in every direction, up, down and across," according to True Form president Sidney Goldberg.

The company developed the original Subtract girdle with "memory stretch," which could still be worn after a dieter reduced her figure two sizes. "If she loses the equivalent of 20 pounds and goes from a size 30 to a size 26, our girdle will still fit her," said Harold Pearl, vice president for sales. Subtract Elite will also be geared, he said, "to the 80 million American women who are always on a diet."

GOLDBERG, 64, learned the business from his father, who, he recalled, manufactured "a backlace corselet that sold for one dollar. I used to cut it, lace it, deliver it and collect the money." Four years ago he came out of retirement to buy True Form and expand it into a $25 million concern turning out Subtract, Flexees and Sarong girdles. To promote the new Elite line, the company will offer Weight Watcher cookbooks as a bonus incentive to purchasers, along with an introductory price of $15 for the brief and $19 for the panty.

"We expect to give out 20,000 cookbooks," said Goldberg's daughter, Ellen, a member of the third generation in the business.

But Goldberg is by no means the first manufacturer with a claim to revolutionizing foundations. According to Richard McComb, research director at the Fashion Institute of Technology, unsung innovators throughout history have reshaped women — and sometimes men — according to the fashion and sexual fetishes of the era. American men in the 19th century, he points out, willingly corseted themselves for the sake of a trim figure.

By the turn of the 20th century, women were being redesigned in the shape of "S." This was accomplished by a corset that started just below the breast and, by means of extensive interior structuring, tightly compressed the waist, hips and upper part of the thighs. The woman thus became "a living embodiment of the Art Nouveau" curves popular at the time, McComb wrote in his introduction to an FIT exhibition called "The Undercover Story."

"Corsets and bound feet were the ultimate discomfort in fashion," McComb said. Compared with such violent reshaping of the skeleton, today's girdles merely provide "gentle support of the figure."

THE FIRST break with rigidity came in 1932 when the United States Rubber Co. introduced a new rubber yarn called Lastex, which gave birth to the boneless "two-way stretch girdle. The rubber later gave way to Du Pont's lighter and stretchier synthetic Lycra.

Indeed, most girdle manufacturers are now concentrating on panty girdles that offer control through the stretch fabric itself rather than by crossovers or other structuring. Sales of "briefs that support" are up 50 percent over last year, according to Stephen Wayne, who heads the 124-year-old Strouse, Adler Col, purveyors of the Young Smoothie line.

Today, the company still makes a formidable corset, structured with galvanized steel stays, for "Little old ladies out there who have never worn anything else," Wayne said. But, he said, those customers become fewer each year.

The Sears, Roebuck Catalog, which in 1902 offered a "Flexibone French Model Military Figure" corset for $1.33, still includes several pages of firm-control girdles and corsets, some laced or zippered. "That market is still going strong," a Sears spokeswoman said. "But the biggest growth is among young customers who have never worn a panty girdle before, and want shape without structure."

Hi! I'm Roxie Forrest, owner of Nutri/System weight loss centers in Odessa, Midland and Big Spring. But weight loss is more than a business to me because it wasn't long ago that my clothes stretched instead of hung. That I used a cover up over my swimsuit. That all my clothes had long sleeves to cover up my arms. And everytime I bent over to pick something up, I got in my own way. After four children I had accumulated my share of baby fat. At Nutri/System we know how self-conscious being over weight can make you. Nutri/System is not magic; you have to want to lose weight. But if you are fed up with being overweight, Nutri/System can help. You can lose up to a pound a day. And more importantly, you can keep that weight off with our program.

For a limited time only you can receive 4 weeks of the Nutri/System program or become 20 lbs. slimmer for only $49.00.

Won't you join me and hundreds of others and become one of our Nutri/System success stories. It does work! I went from being a size 12 to a size 7 three years ago and have not changed.

Japanese designers consolidate activities

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

TOKYO — Japanese fashion designers are working hard, if somewhat belatedly to boost overseas sales of often-innovative Japanese lines by making things easier here for foreign buyers.

Japan is the second biggest fashion market after the United States and designers, led by Issei Miyake, aim at protecting the designers' interests in the lucrative ready-to-wear industry.

The Council of Fashion Designers of Tokyo will have the key job of hosting a comprehensive ready-to-wear collection to be shown, over a short period of time and in a restricted area of this congested city.

Foreign fashion pros who flock here each season to size up potential buys have complained about the expense and trouble involved in seeing more than 50 shows held over two months and scattered at locations throughout the city.

Tokyo designers – who mapped out an entirely new direction in world fashion with their extensive use of the color black and the shapeless, sack-like look — have never hosted an organized collection by themselves, although a "first" Tokyo collection was held in April by a media enterprise here.

But the council is moving swiftly to change the situation.

Miyake, who chairs the council board, said the group would host a spring-summer Tokyo collection Nov. 5 - 15 at one main site with two sub-locations in the city's fashion district.

"We are seeking solidarity and understanding from the world's other fashion capitals, and we would like to achieve the role of Asia's fashion center," Miyake said.

Other prominent council members include Kansai Yamamoto, Rei Kawakubo of Comme Des Garcons, Hanae Mori and Yohji Yamamoto of Y's.

The Tokyo collection comes 20 years after designers like Madame Mori first took their works to Paris.

To further promote Tokyo fashions, the council will also "host symposiums and studies on fashion-related subjects and promote exchanges of views and information within the group and with overseas pros," a council official said.

Government and garment industry officials, meanwhile, are keenly aware of Japanese high-fashion's brisk business potential overseas. Tokyo's fashion market is second in size only to the United States. The total market here in 1983 was estimated at more than $10 billion, with women's wear accounting for more than 70 percent.

The Ministry of International Trade and Industry and the fabric industry think that the survival of the Tokyo market depends on high-fashion because nations like China, South Korea and Taiwan are strong competitors for cheaper products.

Government and business leaders are working on plans to build a multi-use Tokyo fashion center, with conference rooms and exhibition halls suited for fashion shows, lodging facilities and a fashion library.

The aim of the center, expected to cost about $400 million and to draw 30,000 foreign buyers a year, is to "make Tokyo a transmission center of Japanese fashon to the world," a ministry spokesman said.

Tammy Taylor is representing Midland at the 1986 Miss Texas-USA pageant this week in San Antonio. Winner of the pageant will be chosen in the finals on Monday night.

DEAR ABBY

Training still won't bring proper thanks

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: What does the mother of an adult (22-year-old) child do when aforementioned adult child is so remiss about acknowledging important gifts that it becomes embarrassing?

I refer specifically to my daughter who was married last November, and has yet to send thank-yous for her wedding gifts. (Her excuse: "I've been busy.")

Abby, she was not raised that way; ever since she was a child, I have stressed the importance of sending thank-you notes promptly. Evidently it never got through to her. It's very embarrassing when friends and relatives ask me if "Ellen" ever received their gift.

Any suggestions? — EMBARRASSED MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: First, bear in mind you are not responsible for what your daughter does — or does not do.

Some years ago I received a letter from a mother who had the same problem. She enclosed a copy of the letter she had sent to friends and relatives.

Her solution not only got the job done, it made her feel better. The letter:

"Dear ( ): I think six months is long enough for anyone to wait for a thank-you note, so I am taking it upon myself to thank you for the beautiful wedding gift you sent to our daughter.

"Please accept my apologies for her inexcusable negligence. I assure you, she wasn't raised that way."

— MARY SMITH (NOT MY REAL NAME)

DEAR ABBY: Guess what? I have the same problem about a million other people have: in-law trouble.

Mike and I have been married for 15 years and have three beautiful daughters, 13, 12 and 9. When our girls were little, my in-laws had very little time for them, but six years ago, my husband's sister got married and had two boys, and let me tell you, these boys are No. 1 and No. 2!

The grandparents take the boys shopping, picnicking and on little trips. The boys get to ride on the tractor with "Pop Pop" — you name it, they do it — while my daughters sit in the window, watching and crying.

Abby, my in-laws read your column religiously. I hope they see this because in it is a message for them: "Grandma and Grandpa: My kids need you. It's not too late." — HURT IN MARYLAND

DEAR HURT: And what if they don't see it? Your message is too important to leave to chance.

If you haven't the courage to tell them , write a letter saying: "Our girls feel hurt and left out because you so obviously favor your grandsons. I am hurt because my kids are hurting. Won't you please try to make up for lost time?"

DEAR ABBY: I have a sister-in-law who likes everything just so, but she dislikes putting her thoughts into spoken words. Example: When you go to her house, the first thing you see in her entrance hall is a sign that says: "You have just entered a no-smoking zone."

In the bathroom, there's a sign above the john that says: "Please keep lid down. Thank you."

She has little signs on her light switches that say: "Have you turned off the lights?"

And just in case someone missed the no-smoking-zone sign, she has little signs all over the place that say: "Thank you for not smoking."

What is your opinion of all this sign language? — JUST ASKING

DEAR JUST: It gets the message across. It's not very subtle, but undoubtedly effective.

(Problems? Write to Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. All correspondence is confidential.)

AT WIT'S END

We'll probably puzzle future generations

By ERMA BOMBECK

I don't spend my life worrying about it, but sometimes I wonder how history will regard us.

When they go through the microfilm of our existence will they just see the crime, the violent behavior, the dishonesty and the mistakes, or will they dig deeper and resurrect the decency that existed in great numbers?

Will they duly record all the drunk drivers, or will they note that nearly every citizen stops for a red light?

It can be three in the morning and there won't be another car within 50 miles of that intersection, and yet most people will stop dead and wait for the light to change. They don't even know why they do it.

Will they know only of the jaywalkers and lawbreakers, or will they reflect on nearly every American who stops and looks BOTH WAYS on a one-way street?

The clippings will reveal a civilization that was rude, arrogant and considered "Miss Manners" a writer of fiction.

Yet how many people do you know who consistently say "thank you" to a recording and rarely hang up before the recording is finished?

Oh sure, there is an abundance of crime, but there's an entire generation of people out there who sleep every night with the tag from a pillow in their noses. It is there only because it is printed that to remove it is unlawful. Who's to check? A pillow inspector who visits your home and demands to see your labels?

Basically, we are an orderly people who fold up a road map after we've read it, even if it takes three days. We return chairs under the table when we leave a restaurant. And to this day I will not waste air in a restroom dryer that blows on your hands, but will keep my hands under it until it shuts off.

We're a tolerant nation that makes the best of an intolerable situation. When given a paper dress in the gynecologist's office, I find myself lining up the shoulders and arranging the sheet in a drape as if I'm considering buying it.

It takes a lot to break our spirit. For years we have tolerated envelopes with not enough glue on the flaps to hold them together, gas pump hoses that reach only one side of the car... the side you have to move the car to reach, and parking spaces that are wide enough to accommodate your car but prohibit you from getting out of it.

We're a proud people who get our dogs' teeth cleaned and who put on full make-up to go to an aerobics class to sweat. We paint flowers on garbage cans and plant trees in our office buildings.

It would be nice if future generations knew how caring we were. I had an important appointment the other day. I checked my own watch, the digital one in the car, the large one outside the bank building and then stopped a stranger and asked him what time it was.

Erma Bombeck is a columnist for the Los Angeles Times Syndicate.
