Croat offensive deals devastating blows to rebel aims

Croat soldiers celebrate on a street in Petrinja, a key rebel Serb-held town some 26 miles south of Zagreb, Croatia, after they took the town Sunday.

PETRINJA, Croatia — Government troops riding the crest of "Operation Storm" took another key rebel-held town Sunday. As Croats celebrated, tens of thousands of Serbs fled in the biggest refugee exodus in the former Yugoslavia in four years of war.

The fall of Petrinja, which came a day after Croatian troops recaptured the rebels' self-proclaimed capital of Knin, was another devastating blow to Serb dreams of establishing a separate state.

Fierce fighting continued across much of the Serb-held region, a crescent-shaped land that hugs northwestern Bosnia, and which Serbs call Krajina.

But the fall of Knin and Petrinja, combined with the capture of the strategic Udbina airfield and signs that the Serb-led Yugoslav army would not intervene, led the Croats to predict quick victory.

Since "Operation Storm" began at dawn Friday, the Croats claim to have achieved 80 percent of their territorial goals. Foreign Minister Mate Granic said Croatia expected "all major operations" would be completed by Monday.

Maj. Gen. Ivan Tolj, the Croatian army spokesman, said all that was left was to mop up resistance from "remaining terrorist ele-

Raid in Bogota snares reputed leader of huge Cali drug cartel

BOGOTA, Colombia — Police raided a Cali apartment and caught the reputed boss of the world's biggest drug gang in his underwear Sunday, days after the president's election campaign was accused of taking $6.1 million from the cartel.

Miguel Rodriguez Orejuela faces reporters at the Bogata police headquarters Sunday.

Miguel Rodriguez Orejuela, alleged leader of the Cali cartel, was arrested before dawn along with his ex-wife, a bodyguard, a chauffeur and a maid.

Agents broke down the front door, pushed past the bodyguard and found him trying to hide in a secret closet in a bedroom, said Gen. Jose Serrano, the national police chief. Police said they seized two suitcases of documents, but gave no details.

Rodriguez immediately denied traffickers contributed to President Ernesto Samper's 1994 campaign. He called Samper's former campaign treasurer a liar for saying that they had.

Appearing relaxed in a goatee and a blue sports jacket as police with automatic rifles showed him off to reporters in Bogota, Rodriguez said, "the president is an honest man."

McVeigh's attorney expects 3 indictments

Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY— The grand jury investigating the Oklahoma City bombing will return three indictments by Friday's deadline, naming Timothy McVeigh, Terry Nichols and their Army buddy Michael Fortier, McVeigh's lawyer predicted Sunday.

The addition of Fortier, who authorities say admitted to casing the federal building with McVeigh before the bombing, will be a "sham indictment," complained attorney Stephen Jones.

"That is to say, they've already made a deal and he is being named primarily as an inducement to produce his testimony for the government," Jones said in a telephone interview from his home in Enid.

Meanwhile, Jones plans to introduce exculpatory evidence in the final week of grand jury proceedings. The information includes reports of a severed leg and foot, clad in camouflage, that Jones says has not been matched to any of the known victims.

He speculated the leg may have belonged to the "real" bomber, who acted without McVeigh. The state medical examiner's office, however, has said all body parts have been matched to victims.

Fortier's lawyer, Michael McGuire, declined to comment Sunday on reports that Fortier, 26, would be indicted. So far, McVeigh, 27, and Nichols, 40, are the only ones charged in the April 19 bombing that killed 168 people and injured more than 500. Both are being held without bail at a federal penitentiary in El Reno, Okla.

Authorities say Fortier, a gun enthusiast in Kingman, Ariz., with

Boozy Sunday: Brits belly back up to bar

By Dirk Beveridge

LONDON — Instead of forcing down a few last gulps of beer as the clock struck 3 at The Warwick Arms on Sunday afternoon, patrons let out a cheer and bellied back up to the bar.

For the first time since well before World War I, pubs throughout England were allowed to stay open all Sunday afternoon. The laws that forced them to close between 3 p.m. and 7 p.m. Sunday became history.

"It's a great moment, a truly great moment for severe drunkards like myself, who enjoy sitting in a pub 24 hours a day, day after day, letting today run into tomorrow," said Adam Stonebridge, a patron at the bar.

Sunday's change was a vast improvement over the days when "you ended up headbutting the front door trying to get in," said Stonebridge, who treated his equally ecstatic friends to the next round of drinks.

The looser opening hours represent the latest in a series of changes in the country's restrictions on doing business on Sundays, which traditionally has been a day of rest for most British workers.

"Sunday's no different from any other day. It's just got a different name. If somebody wants to buy a pint, you should buy a

True to form: sunny, upper 90s

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies with a high in the upper 90s and southeast winds at 5-15 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low in the upper 60s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be mostly sunny with a high near 100.

After an overnight low of 69, Sunday's high reached 96, compared to the record high for that date of 107 set in 1964.

STATE

It was sunny in parts of South and West Texas on Sunday, but the rest of the state was partly cloudy to cloudy. Temperatures were hot and winds were mostly southerly at 10 to 15 mph.

Most readings peaked in the 90s, although temperatures ranged from 79 degrees at Harlingen to 102 near Del Rio.

Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms continued along the Gulf Coast, where winds were easterly.

West Texas is expected to be fair to partly cloudy. Highs from the upper 80s in the southwest mountains to around 106 along the Rio Grande. Lows in the 60s and 70s.

NATION

The remnants of Hurricane Erin spread rain along parts of the Northeast on Sunday, causing flooding in Vermont, after a night of stormy weather on the Plains.

More than 5 inches of rain caused flooding in parts of north-central Vermont.

The Lamoille River and several smaller streams washed out roads and flooded lowlands in Lamoille, Washington and Caledonia counties, authorities said.

And flooding on the North Branch of the Winooski River blocked both northern and southern access to the village of Worcester early Sunday.

Evacuation centers set up for residents and stranded travelers had helped more than 50 people as of Sunday afternoon, said Tim Stetson of the Red Cross.

Heavy rain also fell in parts of the central Appalachians.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

EXPECTS: Grand jury to hand up 3 indictments

a deep distrust of the federal government, told investigators he traveled to Oklahoma City with McVeigh in December to case the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building.

The Los Angeles Times reported Sunday that Fortier would be indicted not as a direct participant in the catastrophic explosion, but as a conspirator who lied to federal agents and dealt illegal weapons.

In exchange for a guilty plea, Fortier would become a key government witness at trial and will likely to get no more than a 15-year sentence. In addition, his wife, Lori Fortier, would be immune from prosecution, the newspaper reported, citing unidentified sources.

Weldon Kennedy, the FBI agent who led the initial bombing investigation, told Oklahoma City TV station KWTV Saturday that no more than four people will be indicted. He said Fortier "obviously had quite an involvement" in the case. Kennedy didn't immediately respond to a request for comment Sunday.

In Washington, Justice Department spokesman Carl Stern refused to comment Sunday on any aspect of the Oklahoma bombing investigation.

Jones told The Associated Press he does not expect a fourth person to be indicted.

Jones also said McVeigh does not plan to testify before the grand jury. Lead prosecutor Joseph H. Hartzler had notified him that McVeigh should report to the panel Tuesday or Wednesday if he planned to testify. According to speedy trial rules, the grand jury must finish its work by Friday.

"There's no reason for him to do it," Jones said. "Our position is the government has withheld information from us and access to evidence that is critical, repeatedly. I don't know any reason under those circumstances that we should reveal our defense strategy to the government."

SNARES: Police grab alleged drug-gang leader

(From 1A)

Serrano wouldn't say what led police to the apartment, but said they knew the general location for about a week and tracked Rodriguez down after the arrest Friday of a top aide described as his communications chief.

According to police, Rodriguez congratulated officers on the arrest, and said their intelligence service was excellent.

Rodriguez is the sixth leader of the Cali cartel to wind up behind bars in two months. The gang is believed to control 80 percent of the world's cocaine market and an increasing amount of the heroin trade.

Asked why Rodriguez' ex-wife was with him, Serrano suggested that Rodriguez and his fourth and current wife, a former Miss Colombia, weren't getting along.

At the White House, drug policy director Lee Brown hailed the arrest of the man he called "possibly the world's most wanted criminal."

"With four of their five top leaders now in custody, clearly the Cartel is crumbling," Brown said in a statement.

U.S. Drug Enforcement Administrator Thomas Constantine said the arrests of Rodriguez and the earlier capture of two other cartel leaders "strike a mortal blow against the unholy trinity who lead the Cali mafia."

The arrest of Rodriguez came in the midst of Colombia's highest-level drug corruption scandal. Samper's former campaign treasurer, Santiago Medina, testified that he obtained $6.1 million from the cartel during the campaign with Samper's approval.

Rodriguez was given a receipt for $4.9 million signed by campaign director Fernando Botero, Medina testified. Botero resigned as defense minister last week after Medina's testimony.

A pastor, Bernardo Hoyos, also testified that Rodriguez had shown him documents and played him audiotapes linking Samper's campaign to the cartel.

Rodriguez' denial that the cartel made campaign contributions immediately raised speculation that he could be seeking a lenient sentence in exchange for his silence on possible campaign contributions.

Under Colombian law, Rodriguez could get a big reduction in any prison sentence he receives by cooperating with prosecutors.

Samper's office said the arrest shows the president is committed to the fight against drug traffickers.

Prosecutor General Alfonso Valdivieso, who is leading an aggressive investigation of drug traffickers' corruption of Colombian business and politics, said neither Rodriguez nor those arrested with him put up resistance.

On Saturday, a cartel member said Rodriguez was afraid police would kill him to prevent him from speaking out about the influence of drugs in Colombian politics.

U.S. drug agents say Rodriguez was more involved in the daily drug business than his brother, Gilberto, who was arrested in June.

Miguel Rodriguez is also believed to have handled the cartel's legitimate business interests, and was chief shareholder of the America soccer club, based in Cali, during the 1980s.

Although he has been linked to drug trafficking for more than 15 years, Rodriguez was only charged in Colombia in October 1994, in connection with a 1990 shipment of 330 pounds of cocaine to Costa Rica.

He has been indicted in Miami, New Orleans and Tampa, Fla. on drug trafficking charges, but Colombian law does not allow citizens to be extradited.

Rodriguez is said to be obsessed with security and fiercely loyal to his family. He has eight children.

BOOZY: Business was a big proponent of change pint," said William Bolshaw, one of Stonebridge's drinking companions at the Warwick Arms.

Christian groups have fought to maintain the tradition of Sunday as a family day with no business dealings. They teamed up with labor unions who wanted to let workers stay home. The critics viewed all-day Sunday drinking as just one of many defeats.

"There's been a whole succession of things, which we suggest have had a corrosive effect on Sunday as a family day," said John Alexander, a spokesman for the Keep Sunday Special Campaign. "Every time one of these things happens, more people are being asked to work on Sunday. Eventually, there may be more people working on Sunday than taking the day off."

Stephen Cox, of the beer advocacy group Campaign for Real Ale, argued that churchgoers can still go to church but drinkers should be allowed to drink. "It's an issue of choice," Cox said.

'Sunday's no different from any other day. It's just got a different name. If somebody wants to buy a pint, you should buy a pint.'
— William Bolshaw, Warwick Arms drinking companion

Since licensing laws were loosened about a year ago, Sunday has been rapidly evolving into just another day of business.

Britons can not only go the grocery now on Sunday. They also shop for clothes and gamble on Sunday horse races. Some banks are looking into the possibility of some Sunday opening.

Business was a big proponent of changing the laws, which were attacked as inconsistent and pointless in the modern era.

Tourism officials argued that foreign visitors often wait until the end of the week to purchase their souvenirs — only to be shut out by the laws they did not even know about that kept many stores closed.

Large grocery companies complained smaller rivals could open on Sunday while they could not.

It was often pointed out that the rules prevented people from going into a bookstore to buy a Bible, while they could walk into many a newsstand and pick up Playboy magazine.

"It had to happen," said Michael Quinlan, who manages the Bloomsbury Tavern in London's West End entertainment area. "It's just a thing where we had to get in line with the Continent — and the rest of the world really."

BLOWS: Croat forces hope to complete offensive

(From 1A)

ments."

"Krajina no longer exists," Tolj said.

There was no accurate count of casualties. Alun Roberts, a U.N. spokesman in Knin, said "it appears there are very many dead," but peacekeepers were not allowed to inspect the town, 120 miles south of Zagreb and the coronation site for medieval Croatian kings.

Tolj claimed Croat losses were "minimal." Croatian military officials said 700 rebel Serbs had been "incapacitated" during the campaign for Knin. They refused to elaborate or detail casualties from other battle sites.

Croatian television showed President Franjo Tudjman in Knin, sniffing the "free" air.

"I feel like every Croatian citizen ... who has dreamed of Knin," he said. "I am proud. ... This is the culmination of my efforts."

On Sunday, the United Nations confirmed another Croatian victory laden with symbolism — the recapture of the Plitvice lakes, 90 miles south of Zagreb.

The picturesque resort is where Serb separatists and Croatian forces first clashed in 1991, setting off a six-month war that killed more than 10,000 people and left a third of the country in rebel hands.

The United Nations accuses the Croats of widespread human rights violations in their offensive, including attacks on U.N. peacekeepers.

The war turned to uneasy calm with the deployment of U.N. peacekeepers in early 1992. But frustrated by its inability to reintegrate Serb-held lands, Croatia decided to retake them by force.

Petrinja, the main town in the northern part of Serb holdings, fell to the Croatian army early Sunday.

There was no information on the fate of the town's civilians, estimated at up to 15,000 before the Croat offensive began. Croatian troops kept most reporters at a checkpoint in the city's northern outskirts, secured by two tanks.

A howitzer moved slowly toward the city center, from which small-arms fire still echoed Sunday afternoon. Houses on both sides of the road were in ruins.

"It was bloody," an identified Croatian soldier in Petrinja said on state television. "But there is no price on what we do for our country."

The road leading into Petrinja from the north was jammed with cars, many with belongings piled on roof racks — apparently former Croat residents returning after four years' absence. People living along the road spilled onto front lawns, waving flags and cheering.

As the Croats rejoiced, U.N. aid officials warned of what could become the greatest refugee tragedy since war broke out in former Yugoslavia four years ago.

Alemka Lisinski, spokeswoman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, said as many as 120,000 Serbs were fleeing areas taken or threatened by Croatian forces, and making their way into rebel Serb-held Bosnia.

The agency's office in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, reported that a line of Serb refugees from Croatia was six miles long and snaking toward Serbia along Serb-held northern Bosnia.

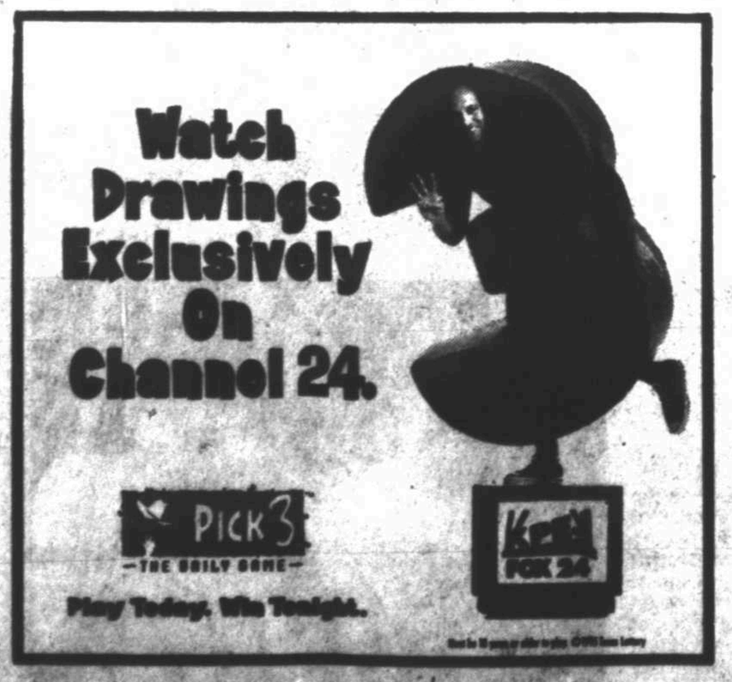

The United Nations accused the Croats of widespread human rights violations in their offensive, including attacks on U.N. peacekeepers.

Three peacekeepers were killed and nine wounded in what U.N. officials described as direct Croatian army attacks on U.N. posts. About 70 posts were captured or destroyed, and more than 650 peacekeepers were surrounded or detained. The fate of another 61 was unknown, U.N. officials said.

The Croatian army also disarmed seven Danish peacekeepers and used them as "human shields" in attacking Serb positions on Friday and Saturday, the United Nations said. The peacekeepers were later released unharmed.

In Knin, Croat forces stationed a tank outside the U.N. base, trapping inside hundreds of peacekeepers and about 800 civilians, many of whom told of large numbers of civilian casualties during the two days of shelling before Knin fell.

Croatia on Sunday promised the United Nations and aid agencies "full access" to civilians. But it reserved the right to exempt areas due to "security considerations," effectively restricting access.

Japanese pay tribute to Hiroshima's victims

HIROSHIMA, Japan (AP) — With tears and prayers for the dead whose corpses filled the rivers of Hiroshima half a century ago, thousands of people set glowing lanterns afloat Sunday night, capping a day of tributes to victims of the world's first atomic attack.

"People were crying for water after the bomb was dropped," said Eiko Dangame, 50, eyes filling as she spoke. "So we send the lanterns out onto the water to console them."

Dangame was an infant when the bomb fell. Her father died 25 years later of complications from radiation poisoning, and every year since then, she has come to send out a paper lantern with her father's name written on it.

People gathered on bridges and river banks to watch the lanterns float by on the two-mile journey to Hiroshima Bay.

The day began with a ceremony to mark the moment — 8:15 a.m. — when the bomb exploded over Hiroshima on Aug. 6, 1945, turning the city into an inferno of flame, superheated wind and radioactive dust.

All told, 140,000 people died in the explosion and over the following six months — half Hiroshima's wartime population.

On Sunday, about 50,000 people packed into the city's Peace Park — built on the wasteland left near the center of the blast — to hear appeals for the abolition of nuclear weapons and frank admonitions that Japan must face up to its own wartime aggression.

"At this 50th anniversary of the end of World War II, it is important to look at the stark reality of war in terms of both aggrieved and aggriever so as to develop a common understanding of history," declared Mayor Takashi Hiraoka.

Prime Minister Tomiichi Murayama laid a wreath of yellow chrysanthemums in tribute to the bomb's dead — and used the occasion to renew his government's condemnation of nuclear testing.

France has announced its intentions to carry out tests next month in the South Pacific, and a report in Japan's national Mainichi newspaper said China was planning a new test this month.

"Japan intends ... to promote further nuclear disarmament with a view to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons," Murayama told the crowd.

The Hiroshima anniversary was marked around the world with rallies, peace vigils, church sermons and anti-nuclear protests.

In Moscow, about 30 activists from the environmental group Greenpeace paraded in Red Square with wooden crosses. In Stuttgart, Germany, 25 anti-nuclear protesters cut a security fence at the European headquarters of U.S. military forces, then waited peacefully for police to take down their names.

Pope John Paul II, in his traditional Sunday blessing, expressed doubt that the world had learned a lesson from Hiroshima and condemned the widening of war in Croatia and Bosnia.

This 50th anniversary year has been a difficult one for Japan, where debate still rages over the nation's degree of war responsibility. Some conservatives still believe Japan has nothing to apologize for.

Despite attempts by Murayama's government to get lawmakers to endorse a war apology, Parliament balked and settled instead on a more lukewarm expression of remorse.

Some observers urged that Japan use its atomic anniversaries to reflect on the consequences of its wartime militarism.

"World War II was the greatest calamity humanity experienced in the 20th century," the Yomiuri newspaper said in an editorial Sunday. "Hiroshima and Nagasaki should continue to make efforts to convey the real picture of the consequences of atomic bombing to the world."

Japanese and U.S. views of the bombing are still widely divergent. A weekend poll by CBS News and Japan's Tokyo Broadcasting System said most Japanese believe the United States should apologize for the bombings — while most Americans believe it should not.

No official representative of the United States was invited to Sunday's ceremony. A delegate from Honolulu, however, attended because of the Hawaiian capital's sister-city ties with Hiroshima.

The Hiroshima anniversary also spotlighted lingering tensions with Japan's Asian neighbors. Shigeki Shimada, 32, inscribed a gray pebble with the word "peace" and placed it in front of a memorial to Korean victims of the bomb.

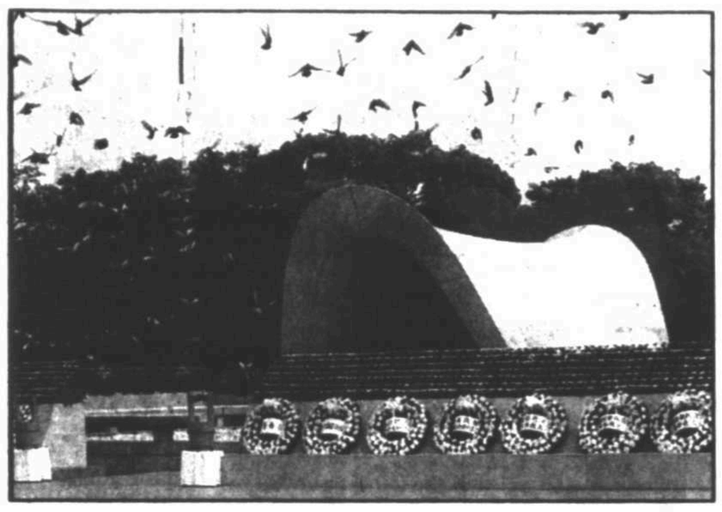

About 20,000 Koreans, many of them forced wartime laborers, were killed in Hiroshima, according to Korean estimates.

"It's about time Japan apologized for some of the bad things we've done to other Asian people," Shimada said.

This year, Hiroshima added 5,000 more names to its comprehensive list of all people believed to have died from bomb-related causes over the past 50 years, bringing the total to 192,000.

Chizuko Okamoto, 59, lighted a candle in a green paper lantern and released it into the Motoyasu River. Written on the lantern were the names of her sister and sister-in-law, both of whom were killed in the bombing.

"All war should stop," Okamoto said.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, AUGUST 7, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Conduct careful research before buying a new home of high-tech equipment. Romance takes on a certain luster as the year winds down. Plan a special winter getaway for two. A responsible teen-ager welcomes constructive suggestions. Offer encouragement, not criticism. Your career will zoom ahead early in 1996. Trust your intuition where creative projects are concerned. A well-calculated gamble will pay off next spring.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Lana Cantrell, marathon great Alberto Salazar, civil rights leader Dr. Ralph Bunche, World War I spy Mata Hari.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): When something does not work as expected, adjust. Continue to be cautious in financial matters. Seek advice from experts, not family members. Higher-ups think one way; you will think another way.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Those in charge will not tolerate blunt speaking now. Keep your own counsel. Creative endeavors remain profitable. Attending a cultural event will put you in touch with influential people.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Consult a friend or trusted associate about a proposed financial maneuver. An outsider's perspective could be a real eye-opener. It will be easier to communicate with difficult people later in the day.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A personality clash may make it difficult for you to deliver on a promise. Establish your priorities. A special tax arrangement makes a job especially attractive. Be a team player.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Romantic partner may not be too happy with certain social plans. Try to reach an agreement. At work, greater flexibility will get the job done. Put romance on the back burner while focusing on career concerns.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Participation in neighborhood events will help you make new friends. Map out a game plan for business with a red arrow pointing to success. Trimming everyday expenses will allow you to take a dream vacation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Use your common sense. Trying to juggle too many activities could turn your home into a three-ring circus. Emphasize your organizational skills when applying for a managerial position.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The yo-yo principle is in effect: All that goes up will come down. Avoid going out on a limb for someone who tells conflicting stories. Romance on the rebound has its risks. Go slow.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Let your psychic powers help you with a business decision. Turn to family members for support. A broken heart will mend sooner than expected. Take things one day at a time. Reach out to new people.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Examine a financial program carefully. A recent mistake can be corrected. Do not press your luck by changing investments. Be grateful for what you have. Make plans to attend a special event with a friend.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A neighbor asks your help with a community project. Say "yes." A former lover wants to see you again. Seize a chance to mix business with pleasure tonight. Socialize with a potential client or customer.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A hectic day will require careful attention to detail. Keep your work schedule flexible in order to accommodate last-minute changes. A business associate wants to be friends. Be cordial but keep your guard up.

GOREN BRIDGE

With Omar Sharif and Tannah Hirsch

Q. 1 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠J ♡K J 9 3 ◇K J 7 6 ♣J 10 5 4

The bidding has proceeded:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1NT	2♠	?

What do you bid now?

A - Had East passed, you would have employed the Stayman Convention to check on a 4-4 heart fit, intending to commit the hand to game regardless of the response. Now, a cue-bid in the enemy suit serves the same purpose as two clubs would have had there been no interference. Bid three spades.

Q. 2 - Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠K Q J 10 7 5 ♡A K 8 ◇A 9 3 ♣8

The bidding has proceeded:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♠	Pass	1NT	Pass

What do you bid now?

A - You have eight tricks in your own hand, partner has responded and your spade suit can play opposite a singleton in partner's hand. Since it is not too much to expect partner to cover two of your losers, jump to four spades.

Q. 3 - Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠A 6 ♡8 5 ◇A Q 9 5 4 ♣K Q 8 6

The bidding has proceeded:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1◇	2♠	3◇	3♡

What action do you take?

A - There's a good chance to make three no trump if partner has a heart stopper. The way to find out is to show your spade control by cue-bidding three spades and waiting for partner's reaction.

Q. 4 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠Q J 3 ♡Q 8 5 3 ◇K ♣K J 10 6 5

WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ ANSWERS

The bidding has proceeded:

EAST	SOUTH	WEST	NORTH
1♠	Pass	Pass	2◇

What action do you take?

A - There is nothing you can do without risking a massacre. Bear in mind that partner simply reopened the bidding with two diamonds, an action which doesn't promise much. If North had sound values, the usual course of action would be to double first and then bid diamonds. Pass.

Q. 5 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠J 10 ♡A Q J 9 ◇Q 8 ♣J 10 7 6 2

The bidding has proceeded:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
Pass	Pass	1♠	Pass

What action do you take?

A - You have a fair hand. However, there's nothing you can do for the moment other than rebid your original suit. On this auction it doesn't promise more than five cards. Bid two hearts.

Q. 6 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠A K 8 ♡A Q 6 5 4 ◇9 5 4 ♣Q 7

The bidding has proceeded:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST

What action do you take?

A - You have a fair hand. However, there's nothing you can do for the moment other than rebid your original suit. On this auction it doesn't promise more than five cards. Bid two hearts.

Sinn Fein leader admits teen talks with Protestants had different goal

LONDON — Gerry Adams admits negotiating with Protestants as a teenager. But his goals were different back then.

Gerry Adams admits negotiating with Protestants as a teen.

The leader of Sinn Fein, the party closely allied with the Irish Republican Army, says that like most youths growing up in Northern Ireland, he paid more attention to girls than politics.

"When I was in Ballymurphy as a teen-ager and we began to discover there was such a thing as sex and there was the opposite sex, our first fumbling explorations were ... with Protestant young women — simply because they were just across the road from where we were," he said.

Adams, 46, spoke in a television interview taped Saturday. He has been in peace talks with British officials since last year, when the IRA declared a cease-fire in the 25-year Northern Ireland troubles.

LONDON — Prince Edward is cruising the Western Isles of Scotland with his girlfriend, and his mother is also on board — increasing speculation that Queen Elizabeth II's youngest son will soon marry.

Sophie Rhys Jones, 29, a public relations consultant, slipped aboard the 412-foot royal yacht Britannia before the rest of the royal party.

The queen's presence was interpreted by newspapers as a signal of royal approval of the match.

A Buckingham Palace spokeswoman said Sunday the 10-day cruise was a "private holiday" and refused to comment further.

Edward, 31, who has a theatrical company, has dated Miss Rhys Jones for several years.

Meanwhile, his brother, Prince Charles, the 47-year-old heir to the British throne, flew to Greece Saturday with his sons, Princes William, 13, and Harry, 11, to board a yacht owned by Greek billionaire Yannis Latsis for a cruise of the Ionian and Aegean Seas.

Included in his entourage was Princess Alexandra, a cousin of Queen Elizabeth II and daughter of Princess Marina of Greece.

DOTHAN, Ala. — Heather Whitestone is well aware of the legacy she will carry with her after passing on Miss America's crown next month.

Whitestone became the first deaf Miss America when she was crowned in September 1994.

Heather Whitestone is well aware of the legacy she will carry.

"I'm sure that I will have that until I die and there is nothing wrong with that," she said Saturday.

She said she's "thrilled" about relinquishing her crown. Traveling to a different city every 36 hours — logging about 20,000 miles — has taken its toll.

"I hate hotels. I used to love airplanes but now I hate airplanes," she said.

Miss Whitestone was in her hometown to speak to a state convention.

MUSKEGON, Mich. — Ex-TV evangelist Jim Bakker made his first trip to his hometown in 25 years for a family reunion this weekend.

Bakker said he wanted to show off his hometown to his son, Jamie Charles, his daughter, Tammy Sue, and her two children. As many as 90 relatives were expected at Sunday's reunion.

Bakker, who graduated from Muskegon High School in 1959, spoke with The Muskegon Chronicle by telephone, but declined to meet face to face.

"I've been to reporter hell and back," he said.

The former head of the PTL Ministries was paroled from federal prison in December after serving five years for defrauding thousands of followers.

SACKVILLE, New Brunswick— You'll see plenty of Dana Plato in Live Bait Theatre's production of "Last of the Red Hot Lovers" — she plays all three female leads.

The actress, now 30, spent eight years on the TV sitcom "Diff'rent Strokes," and went on to a series of highly publicized run-ins with the law as well as drug and alcohol rehabilitation.

But she persevered and now welcomes the chance to do theater, even at a small regional company.

"I'm learning a lot, doing this play, about myself and about acting."

In January, a Las Vegas judge agreed to allow Plato to travel to look for work while completing probation for robbing a video store.

City's recycling effort gets bigger, better

During September Midlanders will begin noticing changes in the city's recycling program, changes that will make the program more visible and that will lead to an expansion of the program.

That's particularly impressive since Midlanders have already accepted the recycling program with open arms. Recycling has really been catching on here.

As part of the changes, two additional recycling bins will be located at each school this fall so that Midlanders will be able to recycle corrugated cardboard and No. 2 plastic (such as milk containers and water jugs) in addition to newspapers, magazines and other paper products and aluminum cans that are being recycled now.

New signs will be affixed to recycling receptacles, city sanitation trucks and all trash bins, reminding people of the importance of recycling.

In addition to those changes, a media campaign will urge the public to recycle and will encourage people to make such changes as mowing their lawns more frequently rather than bagging clippings.

This planned expansion of the city's recycling program will lead to a better, cleaner, more environmentally conscious community. We encourage all Midlanders to participate in it wholeheartedly and to think recycling.

Whom To Write

Following is a list of the names and addresses of various state and federal officials Midlanders may wish to contact from time-to-time:

PRESIDENT: Bill Clinton (D), The President, The White House, 1600 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D.C. 20500 or call (202) 456-1414, Fax (202) 456-2461.

Today in History

Today is Monday, Aug. 7, the 219th day of 1995. There are 146 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Aug. 7, 1942, U.S. forces landed at Guadalcanal, marking the start of the first major allied offensive in the Pacific during World War II.

On this date:

In 1782, George Washington created the Order of the Purple Heart, a decoration to recognize merit in enlisted men and non-commissioned officers.

In 1789, the U.S. War Department was established by Congress.

In 1912, the Progressive Party nominated Theodore Roosevelt for president.

In 1934, the U.S. Court of Appeals upheld a lower court ruling striking down the government's attempt to ban the controversial James Joyce novel "Ulysses."

In 1947, the balsa wood raft Kon-Tiki, which had carried a six-man crew 4,300 miles across the Pacific Ocean, crashed into a reef in a Polynesian archipelago.

In 1959, the United States launched Explorer 6, which sent back a picture of the Earth.

In 1964, Congress passed the Gulf of Tonkin resolution, giving President Johnson broad powers in dealing with reported North Vietnamese attacks on U.S. forces.

In 1970, an attempt by black militant James David McClain to escape from his trial in Marin County, Calif., ended in a shootout with police that claimed the lives of McClain, two of three cohorts, and Judge Harold J. Daley, one of several hostages.

In 1974, French stuntman Philippe Petit walked a tightrope strung between the twin towers of the World Trade Center in New York City.

In 1976, scientists in Pasadena, Calif., announced that the Viking 1 spacecraft had found the strongest indications to date of possible life on Mars.

In 1989, a plane carrying Congressman Mickey Leland, D-Texas, and 15 others disappeared during a flight in Ethiopia. (The wreckage of the plane was found six days later — there were no survivors.)

Ten years ago: Baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth announced the end of a two-day strike by major league baseball players.

Sen. Packwood considers public hearings

WASHINGTON — In what would be a bizarre twist to his two-and-a-half-year ordeal, Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., is "seriously considering" asking the Senate Ethics Committee to hold public hearings into the sexual and official misconduct charges against him, according to a source close to Packwood.

Anderson

With the help of his GOP colleagues, Packwood has been spared the embarrassing spectacle of a public airing of allegations that he engaged in a pattern of sexual misconduct involving 17 women in 18 incidents from 1969 to 1990.

But a couple of Packwood's GOP colleagues — Senate Ethics Committee Chairman Mitch McConnell, R-Ky.; Senate Majority Whip Trent Lott, R-Miss.; and Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo. — should not be spared a public airing of their unseemly conduct in this tawdry affair.

The Ethics Committee found "substantial credible evidence" supporting the charges against Packwood, who has refused his right to a public hearing. On July 31, the six-member committee split bitterly along party lines on the question of open hearings. And on Aug. 2, the Republican-controlled Senate defeated an attempt by Democrats to effectively override the Ethics Committee and order public hearings.

Packwood's predicament — and in a sense his Pyrrhic victory — is the fact that the Ethics Committee also voted to release all documents in the case: more than 16,000 pages, including interviews with 264 witnesses and 111 sworn depositions. Without a public forum to defend himself, Packwood is entering the equivalent of a no-contest plea in the court of public opinion.

"He's seriously considering now changing his position," one source close to Packwood told us. "When all this stuff comes out, the press is going to pick out the five or six juiciest items. In many respects, that's worse than a public hearing. Packwood seems to think he can rebut some of this (at a hearing)." A Packwood spokesperson refused comment.

If Packwood ultimately reverses himself, he will have come full-circle since he had originally called for full and fair hearings. It appears to have been as much a part of his public-relations strategy as the tepid apology he offered back in 1992 when he said he was "just plain wrong" to have made unwanted sexual advances. Yet Packwood has never shown contrition for trying to discredit and intimidate some of the women who came forward with allegations against him.

Some of that smear campaign is now being carried out by Simpson, who was one of the chief interrogators of Anita Hill in 1990. During a recent television interview, Simpson sent a message to Packwood's accusers: Be prepared to pay a personal price if public hearings are held. "What do you think happens in these kinds of situations, where you're trying to destroy a person?" Simpson asked. "People get destroyed in the process."

Clearly, the Packwood scandal has put the entire Senate on trial. And McConnell should be singled out for turning the name of the committee he heads into an oxymoron. After all, since when was blackmail considered ethical behavior?

That was McConnell's method for dealing with an effort by Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., to hold public hearings, which have been conducted on every major disciplinary case that has come before the 31-year-old committee. If Boxer persisted, McConnell threatened, he would call hearings on Sen. Edward Kennedy's role in the 1969 Chappaquiddick tragedy and into the unproven allegations against Senate Minority Leader Thomas Daschle, D-S.D., involving a South Dakota air charter company.

Liberals' specious charges hide facts of Waco

The attempt by the liberal attack dogs and the Clinton administration to hide the facts about Waco behind a cloud of specious charges is immoral.

The first specious charge is that the hearings are an attempt to discredit law enforcement. They're not.

Reese

The second specious charge is that it is all a plot by the National Rifle Association. The NRA is irrelevant. The assault weapons ban is irrelevant. David Koresh's character is irrelevant.

But it was especially calloused and cruel for Democrats to persuade a 14-year-old girl to expose herself to notoriety just to blacken Koresh's name. Koresh, after all, is dead, and death is generally considered sufficient punishment on this earthly plane for sins and mistakes. No one is claiming he was a good guy, but his bad character is not an issue.

The issue that the American public is interested in is whether or not an agency of the federal government can execute a search warrant for a gun control violation without so screwing it up that nearly 100 people are killed in the process.

The fact that Koresh may have been a kook and a man of loose morals does not give federal agents carte blanche to do whatever they please. The 25 children who died as a result of the botched and incompetent attempt to serve a search warrant had not violated any laws.

Local law enforcement officers arrest real desperadoes — killers and maniacs — every day without having to resort to helicopters and tanks, and without causing 100 casualties.

So the questions that Congress should seek answers to are, Why did you screw up, and why did you lie about your screw-up? Why did you fire two agents for lying and then reinstate them?

Why did you promote the FBI agent in charge to second in command when he already had a cloud hanging over him from another screw up involving the Randy Weaver family in 1992?

Why did federal law enforcement agents refuse to cooperate with people who the Justice Department appointed to investigate the incident? Why keep secret the statements that agents gave to Texas Rangers?

If Clinton and other liberals think that this issue only concerns people they consider right-wing kooks, then they are hugely mistaken.

Let me quote some poll results published in a recent issue of American Enterprise magazine.

In a Gallup poll taken in April (after the Oklahoma City bombing), 39 percent of those polled said they thought the federal government was an immediate threat to rights and freedoms of average Americans.

In a Los Angeles Times poll conducted the same month, 45 percent said the federal government was a threat to average Americans, and 47 percent said they were angry with the federal government.

A Yankelovich poll the same month found that 52 percent said they thought the federal government poses a threat to the rights and freedoms of ordinary citizens.

"Contrary to media reports," Karl Zinsmeister wrote in the article, "women, minorities, liberals and Democrats are as likely to be upset as conservative white men. All regions of the country, ages and income groups are involved. The backlash against overweening government is no fringe movement."

It is an extremely serious situation when a third to half of the American people express fear of the federal government. The Clinton administration had better wake up. If public confidence is not restored in the government, we'll all be in trouble.

Funeral wasn't news, was time of goodbye

Stefanie Richardson was a young and very lovely girl, just entering into the adulthood of her life. She died in a senseless and brutal act on July 26.

On July 30, services were held for Stefanie. These services were for those left behind; they were the beginning of a slow and painful healing process.

When the services were over and family and friends left the chapel, what waited outside was a Channel 7 news vehicle with a cameraman set up on the street filming. It made me sick to see this. I can't imagine how Stefanie's family must have felt, when they walked outside and were greeted by this sight.

Is the media so greedy for a story that they can no longer consider the grief the family is feeling? This was as thoughtless and disrespectful a display as I've ever seen.

The media tells us, the general public, that they have a right to cover the news. This wasn't news, this was a time of family and friends saying goodbye. I wonder if the people who made the decision that this was a news worthy event, would feel the same if this had been their daughter or their friend?

Peale's approach enriches many lives

Some years ago, I was privileged to live in another wonderful Texas town by the name of Brady. While we were there, the local paper's editor was pleased to accept a few of my words of review about some of the books of Norman Vincent Peale. I had not read him previously. At that time, my life was enriched by his very "positive approach" to living.

During this time, however, I did not come across his little booklet, "Expect A Miracle — Make Miracles Happen." Only recently, after some 25 years after my wife's death, and after learning that time and tide is causing what once was a healthy and youthful body to become an aging and frail one, have I been privileged to read this word.

Today, though Peale has left this earthly scene, he yet speaks to me, and also, to all others who will hear him. He very wisely has noted in this booklet for all of us who yet live that "What you think habitually will tend to happen."

This leads me to presume that if Midland and Odessa young people, middle-aged people, and elderly people will habitually think good thoughts, gangs will not roam our streets, "drive-by-shootings" will be a thing of the past, friends will not kill friends, and our schools will become places of enlightenment and delight rather than places where children must learn the meaning of fear.

Even more, if we, as a people, can begin to think as positively as Peale, perhaps we can help cause our cities and communities to become safe places of opportunity for all of us. If we can as he says, "Expect great things from God and you will receive great things from God," then we can begin to live without fear and abound in the hope that all of our tomorrows will be even better than today.

Holiday sees display of animal cruelty

One of the nation's most disgraceful displays of cruelty to animals is upon us once again. On Labor Day shooters in Hegins, Penn., gun down over 5,000 birds released one at a time from tiny boxes and then send in young children to clean up the mess. Kids collect the birds and rip their heads off, stomp on them or throw them into barrels to suffocate. Many of the downed birds never get collected and lay on the shooting fields for hours or for days dying a slow painful death.

Pennsylvania has refused to outlaw these events. You can help by writing to Pennsylvania's governor, the Honorable Tom Ridge, State Capitol, Harrisburg, PA 17120 or calling (717) 787-2500 to protest this horrible cruelty which effects us all. Also call the Pennsylvania Tourism Department at 1-800-VISIT-PA to register your complaint.

Time is running out, please hurry.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being re-submitted.
- We do not publish "open" letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702, or you may fax to 682-3793.

World in Brief

Police using water cannons enter Schaufelder Street in Hanover Sunday where hundreds of punks had set up barricades.

■ Anarchist punks leave Hanover

HANOVER, Germany — Hundreds of anarchist punks began leaving Hanover Sunday after a three-night binge of violence called "Chaos Days" that injured 170 police and led to about 1,300 arrests.

The punks, who favor wild-dyed hair and jewelry of chains and razor blades to symbolize rejection of authority, had set a goal of 10,000 arrests as they tried for a second straight year to "reduce Hanover to rubble."

The national police union was furious at politicians for putting 2,000 policemen out "to be stoned by a street mob" over the weekend.

Union head Gerhard Vogler said police needed a law to deal in advance with clearly violent people, and he hinted that next year the northern German city of 500,000 might not be so well defended.

"Imagine, Chaos Days 1996 in Hanover ... and no police," Vogler said.

■ Iraq releases weapons report

NICOSIA, Cyprus — One month after admitting it had worked on biological weapons, Iraq turned over a hefty report containing "very important information" about the program, the chief U.N. weapons inspector for Iraq said Sunday.

However, Rolf Ekeus told reporters in Baghdad that his specialists "need some time before verifying and judging" the 530-page report to determine whether it meets conditions set by the U.N. Security Council for the lifting of sanctions imposed after Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait.

Iraq is hoping for an easing of the crippling oil and trade embargo when it comes up for review at the United Nations next month.

Ekeus, who heads the U.N. Special Commission on Iraq, received what the Iraqis termed "a full, final and complete declaration" of the biological program upon his arrival in Baghdad on Friday.

■ Petitioners condemn nuclear tests

PARIS — To discourage France from testing nuclear weapons deep beneath the emerald surf of the South Pacific, Seishi Shimizu surfed the 'net.

So did more than 43,000 other people from 92 countries who have signed an electronic petition on the Internet condemning French plans to resume underground atomic tests next month at Mururoa Atoll in French Polynesia.

"We want to gather all the murmuring voices against the tests from all over the world and make them into a big movement," said Shimizu, 23, one of three Tokyo University graduate students who launched the protest over the Internet computer network's World Wide Web.

On Sunday, when the world marked the 50th anniversary of the atomic destruction of Hiroshima, about 2,000 protesters rallied near the Eiffel Tower to protest the government's decision to resume the tests.

■ Villagers evacuate after eruption

PLYMOUTH, Montserrat — The government ordered two villages evacuated Sunday after an eruption from a volcano that has been belching steam and ash for three weeks.

The eruption Friday was the third since July 18 on this island, which is 11 miles long and 7 miles wide.

On Saturday, three quakes rocked the southern part of the island, rattling buildings in Plymouth, the capital, three miles from the seismic activity in the Soufriere Hills.

"We're seeing a large number of earth swarms (quakes) and that has given us cause for some concern," Chief Minister Reuben Meade told reporters Sunday.

Fearing increased mud flows, Gov. Frank Savage ordered buses to help evacuate the 300 residents of eastern Long Ground and Tuitts villages Sunday.

■ Cubans protest U.S. trade embargo

MEXICO CITY — As many as 500,000 Cubans marched through Havana to show support for Fidel Castro and to protest the U.S. trade embargo against the Caribbean nation.

"Look with what force" the socialist government has remained in power despite the collapse of the Soviet Union, Castro told the marchers late Saturday. "This revolution is not crumbling."

His comments were reported by Cuba's official Prensa Latina news agency and by Mexico's Notimex agency.

No independent estimates of the crowd were available, but Prensa Latina said as many as 500,000 people marched in the rain.

The march was partly to commemorate the anniversary of a crackdown on rioting apparently set off by a failed attempt to hijack a Havana harbor ferry and take it to the United States.

The riots, an unprecedented show of discontent with Cuba's socialist regime, precipitated Castro to say he would no longer stop Cubans who wanted to flee to the United States.

Christopher urges Vietnamese economic reform

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — Secretary of State Warren Christopher urged young Vietnamese citizens Sunday to take a "giant leap" out of their communist economic system and open their society to a free press.

"Each of you ought to have the right to help shape your country's destiny, as well as your own," he told a student audience.

It was the strongest public statement on human rights and economic reform Christopher made during his ground-breaking visit to Vietnam. It came only a few hours after the secretary of state met with Do Muoi, general secretary of the Vietnamese Communist Party, which continues to maintain tight control over the country. There is no private ownership of land, for example.

Later, in an interview with ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley," Christopher said he had brought up human rights in all his meetings with Vietnamese officials.

"They understand it is a matter of concern for us," Christopher said. "I think it is very much in the United States' interest to move forward in an economic relationship with Vietnam but we are not going to ignore our other interest and that is our interest in promoting human rights."

The Vietnamese government has loosened control over its economy, which has entered a period of rapid growth that is attracting outside investors.

But Joan Spero, undersecretary of state for economic affairs, said there remains a lot of central control and regulation. Vietnam still has communist-style state industries.

AP Laserphoto

U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher greets Vietnamese on the street in front of the U.S. Embassy after its opening ceremony in Hanoi on Sunday.

She said the Vietnamese talk about opening state industries to private investment, but "The sense that I had is they are not planning any large-scale privatization. They are only selling pieces of the companies, not majority control."

Christopher referred to his audience as "the first generation of Vietnamese students in many decades to enter adulthood informed by the memory of war, but inspired by the promise of peace."

During a question period, one student asked Christopher what was the reaction of young Americans to the decision to normalize relations. Christopher said he was confident a great majority supported the move and "want to put tragic memories into the history books."

Christopher praised the government for moves toward free market reform, but said that a command economy "cannot be dismantled piecemeal."

"I would ask you to look at economic reform as a passage over a ravine: You cannot do it by taking several little steps; only one giant leap will get you across," he said.

He said the basic tenets of successful free economies, whether in New York or Tokyo or Bangkok, are that "one can borrow capital, buy insurance, and freely exchange information."

Vietnam needs a stronger banking system, along with "less red tape and more transparency," he said.

Maintaining economic development "is more likely where courts provide due process, where newspapers are free to expose corruption and where business people can make decision with free access to accurate information," he said.

Earlier in the day, Christopher met with American business executives trying to gain a foothold in Vietnam. From there, he went to the new U.S. Embassy, the first ever in Hanoi, to participate in a ceremony raising the U.S. flag and unveiling the identifying plaque on an outside wall.

In brief remarks, Christopher talked about the "transformation from old adversaries into new dialogue partners."

And he repeated what became the mantra of his visit, that the highest U.S. priority is "to determine the fate of our soldiers who never came home" from the Vietnam War.

Spero, who took part in the meetings, said the Vietnamese were particularly eager for investment in infrastructure, ports, roads and telecommunications — all of which were devastated by U.S. bombing raids during the war.

Settler-police confrontations have accent of '60s protests

By Serge Schmemann
N.Y. Times News Service

EFRAT, Israeli-Occupied West Bank — The recent wave of confrontations between Israeli settlers and security forces had many tactical hallmarks of the protests of the 1960s — the deliberate acts of civil disobedience, the passive resistance before the police.

That was no coincidence. The rabbi of the demonstrators was an American veteran of civil rights marches in Selma, Ala., and some of the most militant protesters were also immigrants from the United States.

Rabbi Shlomo Riskin, the charismatic former leader of the Lincoln Square Synagogue in New York City, has recently emerged as one of the staunchest opponents of the government's proposal to give Palestinians control over much of the West Bank.

He and other members of his community have given the resistance a distinctly American accent, not only in their Hebrew, but also in the modern camping tents, Coleman camping stoves, and portable toilets that they used to occupy contested hilltops in the West Bank.

Indeed, Efrat, the settlement just south of Bethlehem that Riskin helped found and now serves as chief rabbi, is a distinctly yuppie variant of the Israeli settlements that dot the West Bank. A large number of the 1,200 families who inhabit the neat rows of tile-roofed stucco houses are immigrants from the United States, many of them physicians and other professionals who commute to jobs in Jerusalem.

But behind the familiar patina of suburbia is a determination as fierce as in any other West Bank settlement to block the government from giving away lands that the settlers regard as intrinsically Jewish.

The basic tactic of the demonstrators, organized by a group of women from Efrat, consisted of occupying vacant hilltops in the West Bank and getting evicted by security forces. The "battle of the hills," rich in emotion, dominated the news, and quieted only when the demonstrators agreed to a truce for the Sabbath and the Jewish holiday of Tisha b'Av on Sunday.

The prominence of American-born settlers in the protests, and especially the leading role of women, has prompted much comment.

The Jerusalem Post noted that Israeli-born women might not have been as bold, and Riskin ran into some resistance among Israeli-born settlers. Some of the young female soldiers who were sent in to evacuate the women broke into tears under the emotional stress, and the police announced plans to form a unit of 50 women for this purpose.

Many former followers of Riskin have also expressed surprise that a charismatic and modern New York rabbi has emerged in the front ranks of a movement more often associated with the richly bearded ultra-Orthodox nationalists. As it happens, his synagogue in New York was Orthodox and a gathering place for young Orthodox singles.

Riskin, 55, rankles at the image of settlers as extremists. When he was still in New York, he said, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin visited his synagogue and urged Americans to go to Israel and settle the West Bank. And now it was the same prime minister who was preparing to "give away everything."

Like many other American immigrants, the rabbi insisted that there was no contradiction between their current activities and their past as American liberals.

"I marched in Selma with Martin Luther King," he said. "Now we, the settlers, have become the blacks of Martin Luther King. If someone is murdered inside the green line, he's an Israeli. If outside, he's a settler."

The green line is the pre-1967 border between Israel and the West Bank, which could eventually be revived if the negotiations on Palestinian self-rule are successful. The negotiators broke for the weekend at Eilat, at the southern tip of Israel, without any indication that an agreement was any nearer.

Rabin has been equally adamant that the settlers will not block an agreement. "A minority which isn't willing to accept the decision of the majority is telling fallacious stories about Israel's security being abandoned," he said.

But with elections just over a year away, the opposition Likud coalition has announced that it will join in the "battle of the hills" when it resumes.

Police find 5 kidnapped Americans abducted by bandits in Tanzania

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (AP) — Bandits abducted five Americans in a national park, then drugged them unconscious before dumping them in the bush and driving off with their car, the U.S. Embassy said Sunday.

The Americans — three missionaries and two 10-year-old girls — were found semiconscious but healthy Sunday morning by a search party of Tanzanian police and park rangers, said embassy duty officer Charlene Lamb.

The motive for the kidnapping was not immediately known, but the bandits may have wanted their four-wheel-drive vehicle, a prized item in a country with extremely bad roads.

Four gunmen abducted the Americans on Saturday in the Mikumi National Park, about 110 miles southwest of the Indian Ocean port of Dar es Salaam, Lamb said.

The Americans were identified as Sandy Harrington, 35, of Richmond, Va. and her daughter Christine, 10; David and Millie Moreland, 50 and 43, of Monroe, La.; and Joanna Giddens, 10.

Joanna is a friend of Christine's whose parents are missionaries in the northeastern town of Moshi, near Mount Kilimanjaro, Kelly said.

The Americans had stopped their vehicle — a white Nissan — briefly when the gunmen emerged from the bush, Lamb said. Mrs. Harrington's husband, William, had gotten out of the car and was not abducted.

The bandits commandeered the car and drove off with the five Americans inside.

Mark Kelly, a spokesman for the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, based in Richmond, said the bandits forced the Americans to take a powder before driving off.

Lamb said they were given a liquid drug. Neither knew what kind of drug was used.

The Richmond Times-Dispatch reported that Harrington flagged down another vehicle and gave chase, but could not catch up. Lamb said he reported the abduction to Tanzanian authorities, prompting the search.

After abandoning their captives in the bush, the bandits drove away in the Nissan and apparently crashed, Lamb said. One of the robbers was found dead in the wreck. No arrests were immediately made.

Democrats, GOP moderates could be allies on budget strategy

N.Y. Times News Service

While there have been open tensions between moderates and conservatives in Congress over social issues, when push came to shove the Republican factions have almost invariably stuck together on issues strictly relating to cutting government spending.

WASHINGTON — Looking ahead to a bruising confrontation with Congress after the summer recess, the White House is hoping to use a budget strategy that would rely on rallying a coalition of Democrats and moderate Republicans around an alternative to the Republican plan to produce a balanced budget in seven years.

While the Republicans have generally displayed a remarkable degree of unity on fiscal matters this year, in a recent interview White House Chief of Staff Leon E. Panetta pointed to fault lines between moderate and conservative Republicans.

Those fault lines, he said, had briefly come into view in past weeks as the House approved spending bills for programs on the environment, education, health and labor.

"If you can hold a core of Democrats together and pick up those votes, you have a coalition that might come together," Panetta said, adding that such a strategy would be most feasible in the Senate.

Panetta said that strategy of forming a coalition was only one of several scenarios that could develop as Congress and the president, facing the Oct. 1 start of the new fiscal year, reach the crucial moment in their battle over federal spending. But he said the strategy of building a coalition was the one he favored.

And his remarks and those of other White House officials made it clear that the president in the coming months would be in a struggle with Congress over which side best defined the political center and could attract the moderates.

Republican leaders scoff at the idea that the White House could make any headway within their ranks. While there have been open tensions between moderates and conservatives in Congress over social issues, when push came to shove the Republican factions have almost invariably stuck together on issues strictly relating to cutting government spending.

Senate and House Republican leaders virtually ignored President Clinton's late entry into the balanced budget debate this summer with his own plan to erase the federal deficit in 10 years. Instead, they moved ahead on their own plan to balance the budget in seven years and cut taxes by $245 billion.

And last week, despite a threatened mutiny by moderate Republicans upset by sections of a spending bill for labor, health and education programs, House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., triumphed and won passage of the measure, 219 to 208, losing only 18 Republican votes and picking up support from six conservative Democrats.

"In the Republican ranks now everyone to a person — right, left and center — wants the new majority leadership to succeed so you're finding people bending over backwards to be accommodating," said Rep. Sherwood L. Boehlert, R-N.Y., who swallowed his objections to support the bill.

Boehlert said he had voted for the spending bill after receiving assurances that some education, training and poverty programs facing cuts would be revisited in negotiations with the Senate on a final bill.

"We're going to have to see what unfolds when we come back in the fall," he said. "But our desire and objective is to work within party ranks."

Clinton has already been seeking to paint the Republican Party as one of extremists in the sway of polluters, the gun lobby and anti-abortion forces. And to some degree that message has started to unnerve Republican moderates in the Northeast.

But the White House believes the true test of whether the Republican leadership can keep its members united around a budget plan will come on Medicare, the federal health care program for the elderly in which the Republicans have proposed making $270 billion in savings. For his part, Clinton's plan would save $124 billion.

While Republicans have been on the defensive on the issue, they plan a political drive throughout the August recess to sell the idea that they are moving to "preserve, protect and improve" a medical system that will otherwise go bankrupt as baby boomers start to enter the Medicare rolls in 2010.

Democrats plan to fight back in town meetings by pointing to the $245 billion tax cut the Republicans are calling for and accusing them of cutting health care financing for the elderly to pay for the tax cut.

How the public responds to the warring political campaigns over Medicare could be crucial for Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., who heads the Senate Finance Committee. Packwood has already said he was unsure if he could muster a majority on his committee for the sharp slowing of Medicare spending the Republicans envision, if the Democrats vote as a bloc against the plan.

"Friday night, Judge Ito took the jurors in the O.J. trial to the circus. Boy, that seems redundant, doesn't it?"

"Apparently when the jurors were leaving the circus a man came out with a shovel after the elephants, and the jury thought it was Johnnie Cochran starting his closing arguments."

What's wrong with this story?

A man walks into a florist shop, intending to buy flowers for the people at whose house he's been staying. He walks directly to the woman behind the counter, and says, "I'd like to get some flowers that are fresh enough to last a while."

The woman responds coolly, "Sir, all our flowers are fresh." Then the two of them proceed to complete the transaction. This story is so unremarkable it seems to call for no comment at all, but my friend's grown daughter was with him, and later she gently took him to task.

"Dad, did you feel what was going on in there?" she asked. "You were so focused on your task that you forgot to slow down and tune in." She explained how she's learned to experience her own life. "When you go into a new place, you take a deep breath and feel your center. Then you do what you need to do. Checking in with yourself automatically slows you down and connects you with the situation. Think of how different it would have felt if you'd gone up to the clerk, said, 'Hello,' and spent a moment looking at the flowers. It

Keeping a watchful eye

By Georgia Temple
Staff Writer

Volunteer emergency medical technician Collin Craig and his partner, Sharief Savahl, have made summers in the city safe.

This summer's heat wave hasn't deterredMidlanders from leaving the comfort of their air-conditioned dwellings to be entertained Thursdays at the free outdoor Summer in the City events.

It has neither stopped the passionate rollerblading enthusiasts who've found their way to Centennial Plaza for the inline skating nor has it kept Collin Craig from being on the scene, ready to move into action if necessary.

Many weeks he's been joined by his partner, Sharief Savahl. Both have volunteered their time and their services, hoping the latter won't be needed.

"We've had our tough scrapes," said Craig, who works for Midland Memorial Patient Transfer and is trained, like his partner, to perform emergency medical services (EMS).

"One fractured wrist," said Savahl, adding that another skater twisted his knee when he fell.

"We've had some people get themselves hurt, but nothing that Sharief and I can't handle together."

Mostly, the two have worked on "minor cuts and bruises, and falling down," Savahl said. "We're only here to do first response."

Neither is hesitant to call an ambulance if they feel it's necessary. And they have. The response time was two minutes, Savahl said.

Whether they work or sit, what's been important to them and the people enjoying the free performances is their presence, which has been made possible through the Texas Society of Emergency Medical Technicians (TSEMT).

"We're doing the first aid for the TSEMT," said Craig. "They're involved with EMS. We all get together and do things like this."

He also has enjoyed his Thursday nights at Summer in the City events, which end this week with a "Victory Day" theme. "The people down here are real nice, and even the events were a lot of fun. I like listening to the music that they play, watching the kids play and the rollerblading."

Actually, Craig spends a good portion of his time engaged in volunteer work — about 30 hours a week. Sometimes it's more.

For example, the last week in July, in addition to Thursday night's Summer in the City, he spent from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. daily at the Cub Scouts' day camp. He called the experience "a lot of fun."

His paying job and the time he spends volunteering his services allow him to fulfill a dream he's had since he was around 10 years old.

"They had an ambulance crew come up to the school," Craig

Explosive tomato paste detonated in San Antonio

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Police and firefighters were called in to handle what could have been a sticky situation: an expanding, 55-gallon drum of tomato paste on the verge of exploding.

After covering the swelling metal drum Thursday in an explosive-resistant blanket, a bomb squad officer in full gear fired one shot from his .40-caliber pistol at the container.

But instead of producing the largest Bloody Mary in San Antonio, employees of Amigo's Canning Food were treated only to a steady stream of the red tomato paste spewing from the bullet hole.

"This is the first tomato incident I've ever been involved in," said District Fire Chief David Martinez.

Amigo's vice president of marketing, Beverly Velasco, said the drum had been sitting in the warehouse since Monday and probably was punctured accidentally, allowing bacteria to build up inside.

"For whatever reason, this is very common in the tomato industry," Velasco said. "I don't know how this one got so out of hand."

Honey ... I'm afraid the dog has eaten your diamond ring

Associated Press

GRASS VALLEY, Calif. — Once Sherri and Tim O'Connor realized what had gotten into their dog, they couldn't wait to get it back out.

Heath, a 5-month-old golden retriever, swallowed a $7,500 diamond ring as the O'Connors were getting ready to leave for a trip to Las Vegas.

When they realized later what happened, they called the kennel where the puppy was staying and asked workers to — pretty please — screen the droppings.

"We've had people ask us to check for worms, but never for a 4-karat ring," said Empire Kennels co-manager Pat DeNardo.

Employee Leah Owens was given the messy task.

"If anybody comes out to check if I looked through the poop, I'll just deny it," she said to herself after getting the assignment.

For three consecutive days, the O'Connors called the kennel from Las Vegas. On the fourth day, the puppy "gave birth to the ring," Tim O'Connor said.

The O'Connors gave Owens a cash reward for her dedication and sent flowers to the kennel.

Kids ... they have no appreciation for nostalgia

Something came over my wife and I that could only be described as a strong urge to return to the place where we first met years ago.

Patterson

We had talked about going back for several days before finally ending up there. And as we talked about our trip, we spoke of the memories that we would fondly recall when we arrived.

It'd been 12 years since we first locked eyes, and just over 11 years since we locked into that common bond known as matrimony, which to this day remains holy the majority of the time. Returning to the church where we said our "I do's" and "I wills" was nostalgic, as you can well imagine.

"Your daddy never even looked at me once during our wedding," my wife told our children as we stood in the empty church. "He was too busy trying to see if anyone was looking at him."

The children chuckled.

"Don't believe your mother," I barked.

(My wife was such a perfectionist on her wedding day. Everything HAD to go her way. Something about women and weddings and flawlessness that guys apparently can't even begin to understand.)

Truth is, I probably was looking at the people who had joined together to watch us be joined together. But as I recall, I was probably just harmlessly trying to get a few laughs, to lighten things up a tad. Weddings are such solemn occasions, I was just playing the room for some humor.

Anyway, there we were, a couple of weeks ago, walking down the same aisle that we walked down back in the big '80s.

My wife was moved almost to tears as we glided through the church. (She glided, I more or less just sorta walked).

"Walking down the aisle like this ... it's just so special. It brings back such great memories," she said.

"Yeah," I said. "And it's heckuva lot cheaper this time around, too."

(We husbands, see, have complex, unique strands of DNA that force us to think about everything from a financial standpoint. Guys know what I'm talking about here.)

Filled with memories, we loaded the children back into the car and took them on a cruise through the old hometown that we remain fond of still today.

"There's Kyle Field, girls," I said. "That's where those Corps 'guys' drew a sword on an SMU cheerleader and the school's mascot during a football game."

"Why'd they do that?" one of them asked.

"The cheerleader and the horse stepped on the football field and, well, of course you're not supposed to step onto Kyle Field during a game unless you're on the football team or in the Aggie band."

"Oh," one of them said, entirely bored with my explanation.

We drove a few more miles.

"Look girls," my wife said, "that's the store where daddy and I first rented videos when we got married. We used to go there all the time."

"Mom," our oldest child said. "It's just a store!"

"Oh, no it's not. It's a special store. We have lots of

The green hills of Ireland, and towns with weird names

I recently spent a week in Ireland, and I can honestly say that I have never been to any place in the world where it is so easy to partake of the local culture, by which I mean beer. Ireland also contains history, nice people, enormous quantities of scenery and a rich cultural heritage, including (more on this later) Elvis.

Barry

Geographically, Ireland is a medium-sized rural island that is slowly but steadily being consumed by sheep. It consists mostly of scenic pastures occasionally interrupted by quaint towns with names such as (these are actual Irish town names) Ardfert, Ballybunion, Coole, Culleybackey, Dingle, Dripsey, Emmoo, Feakle, Fishguard, Gweedore, Inch, Knockaderry, Lack, Leap, Lusk, Maam, Meentullynagarn, Muff, Newmarket-on-Fergus, Nutt's Corner, Oola, Pontoon, Rear Cross, Ringaskiddy, Screeb, Sneem, Spiddle, Spink, Stradbally, Tang and Tempo.

These towns are connected by a modern, state-of-the-art system of medieval roads about the width of a standard bar of hotel soap; the result is that motorists drive as fast as possible in hopes of getting to their destinations before they meet anybody coming the other way. The only thing that prevents everybody from going 120 miles per hour is the nationwide system — probably operated by the Ministry of Traffic Safety — of tractors being driven very slowly by old men wearing caps. You encounter these roughly every two miles, rain or shine, day or night. As an additional safety measure, the roads are also frequented by herds of cows, strolling along and mooing appreciatively at the countryside, reminding you very much of tour groups.

A typical Irish town consists of several buildings, one of which is always a bar, called a "pub." Next to this there will typically be another pub, which is adjacent to several more pubs. Your larger towns may also have a place that sells food, but this is not critical.

Inside the pubs you will usually find Irish people, who are very friendly to strangers, especially compared to the British, who as a rule will not voluntarily speak to you until you have lived in Britain for a minimum of 850 years. The Irish, on the other hand, will quickly start a conversation with you, and cheerfully carry it on at great length, with or without your help. One evening in a busy Dublin pub I watched an elderly, well-dressed, cap-wearing gentleman as he sat in the corner and, for two solid hours, struck up a lively conversation with every single person or group who sat within 10 yards of him, including a group of German tourists, only one of whom spoke even a little English. The man spoke to them in a thick brogue on a variety of topics for several minutes while they looked at him with the bright, polite smiles of people who do not have a clue what is being said to them. When he finished, they conferred briefly in German, and then the one who spoke a little English said, quote, "Everyone is pleased that he or she is welcome."

You definitely feel welcome in Ireland. But there's more to do there than just talk to Irish people in pubs. You can also drive around the countryside, alternately remarking "Look, sheep!" and "Here's another tractor!" You can visit a bunch of old castles built by the Normans, who at one point conquered Ireland despite being called the "Normans," which is, let's face it, not an impressive-sounding name. It's kind of like being conquered by the "Freds."

Probably the best-known castle is the one in the town of Blarney, which contains the famous Blarney Stone. To get to it, you have to climb steep, narrow, tourist-infested steps to the top of the castle; there, a local man holds you as you lean out over the castle wall and kiss the Blarney Stone. Legend has it that if you do this, you will give the man a tip. Also at a castle in a town called Kilkenny I saw a local radio station doing a live remote broadcast, featuring a Frozen Food Challenge in which a local resident had to answer a multiple-choice question on the history of refrigeration. She got it right, and won a hamper of frozen foods.

"Brilliant!" she said.

But in my opinion the cultural highlight of the trip occurred in the town of Ennis, where a pub called Brandon's had a sign outside that said "Traditional Irish Music." This turned out to be a traditional Irish Elvis impersonator. I realize that there are literally thousands of quality Elvis impersonators, and I'm sure you've seen some excellent ones, but I am here to tell you that this one, in this unremarkable town in western Ireland, was beyond question the worst Elvis impersonator in world history. He sang along to a tape of instrumental Elvis tunes, which he played on a sound system that he never, not once in two solid hours, got adjusted right. Every time he'd start singing a song, the sound system would screech and honk with feedback; Elvis would then whirl around and spend minutes at a time unsuccessfully adjusting various knobs while he mumbled the lyrics, so that for most of the evening all you saw was Elvis' butt, accompanied by screeching and honking and vague off-key singing. Often, by the time he'd finished twiddling the knobs, Elvis had lost track of what song he was singing; he'd frown into the distance, trying various tunes until he thought he was on the right track, at which point inevitably the screeching and honking would start up, forcing Elvis to whirl back around like a man being attacked by bees, and treat the audience to another lengthy view of his butt. The crowd, which I will frankly admit was consuming alcoholic beverages, enjoyed this performance immensely, cheering wildly at the end of each song. They like their fun, the Irish. I'm definitely going back some day. Maybe I'll rent a tractor.

would only have taken an extra minute or two, but it would have changed the whole experience."

"I must have seemed brusque, because the woman behind the counter was clearly annoyed with me," the man admits to me later. "I can see now that I was so preoccupied with my self-assigned task that I didn't notice anything about the shop or the woman I was dealing with. I think I do this a lot and I'm just becoming conscious of it."

This story made a big impression on me because I'd just heard a similar one from my own daughter. It seems that at the party she and her husband threw on the Fourth of July I'd broken into a group of people speaking to one another. I'd begun a long conversation with one of the women and hadn't acknowledged any of the others, one of whom I've known for at least 10 years.

"You do that a lot and sometimes people think you don't like them," my daughter said. "A lot of the time you don't really notice what's going on around you, and when you walk right past people you know without speaking to them, their feelings get hurt."

I tried to reconstruct my state of mind in the midst of 50 of my children's friends: the insecurity I felt at having forgotten the names that matched familiar faces; my fear of asking questions I'd probably had answered in previous years; my awareness that everyone knew me by now and would expect me to remember them.

I'd solved the problem by closing down, seeking out a few individuals I felt comfortable with and ignoring the rest. Actually, I hadn't ignored the woman I've known for 10 years. I literally hadn't seen her. I hadn't been aware enough of my surroundings to notice that she and her husband were even present that day.

"To be awake," says Thoreau, "is to be alive."

I was in a daze, so much on automatic pilot that by the end of the afternoon I knew no more about anyone than I had at the start.

Now I can imagine it differently: how comfortable I'd have felt if I'd taken a moment to acclimate myself, if I'd glanced briefly at each face, if I'd tuned into the conversation before beginning another. I have a tendency to barge in and take charge as a way of reducing my anxiety, but I think if I learned to relax first, to pay attention to my breathing, to listen instead of feeling compelled to interact immediately, I'd be one step closer to being at ease wherever I go.

In his book, "Facing the World with Soul: The Reimagination of Modern Life," Robert Sardello writes about how to enjoy architecture, but what he says about buildings is even more true about life.

"We make a building beautiful when we stop for it, arrest the motion of thoughts, and linger with it, rather than merely using it ... The soul work here consists of ... loosening the web of anesthesia."

I want to deal with my anxiety, not by anesthetizing myself to what's happening around me, but by finding a centered place within me and moving out from there. It sounds delicious.

It's never easy to take criticism from your own child, but my friend and I take our children's comments as a sign that they have faith in us. Why else would they want to keep us from sleepwalking through our lives?

Traveling artist covers easel after 60 years

By Richard Benke
Associated Press Writer

SANTA FE, N.M. — After 60 years drawing and painting the likes of Dwight D. Eisenhower, Irving Berlin, Jerome Kern and Arturo Toscanini, Bettina Steinke says it's time to turn the page on her easel.

"I said, 'No more.' It's tremendous stress," says the 82-year-old artist who has done hundreds of portraits, maybe 1,000, always traveling to her subject's chosen location.

"I love big portraits, but it's time to have some fun, do some sketches in various mediums ... drape nudes. I want to feel the flow of the figure again."

First, though, a major Steinke retrospective Aug. 11 through Oct. 29 at the Cowboy Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City. The exhibition of some 60 works features Indian portraits, some cowboys and several celebrities.

"I'd say she's one of the top portrait artists in the country," says Ed Muno, curator of art for the Cowboy Hall. "A lot of people feel she's the top portrait artist in the country."

The Santa Fe artist has been drawing since age 12, when she won a school prize in Irvington, N.J., for sketching a rose. She studied at New York art academies the way doctors learn anatomy: bones, muscles, sinew and skin. Among her teachers was Norman Rockwell.

"My first big job was Toscanini. I was 24," she says.

Toscanini conducted the NBC Symphony Orchestra. She had to watch him through a peephole above the stage.

The network liked the portrait so much, it commissioned her to do portraits of all 98 musicians in the orchestra. They were released in a book by NBC.

"That book put me on the map. I was recognized in the columns. Walter Winchell — several of the columns — wrote about the book."

Ironically, her first Toscanini portrait was destroyed by a janitor who dusted the charcoal right off the page. She had to do it again.

"I was a little mad at first, but then I thought: You know, it's all right. Maybe it's all for the better." She says she didn't like the first one all that much.

The NBC contact came through her father, William Steinke, who hosted a children's show for NBC Radio, "Jolly Bill and Jane," circa 1927-1940. Her father, she says, was a gifted caricaturist as well as writer and radio personality.

He bought his daughter her first art supplies, encouraged her, let her develop, then sent her to the Faucett School, an art institute in Newark, N.J., to Cooper Union in Manhattan and New York's Phoenix Art Institute.

During World War II, she and several other illustrators toured military hospitals, sketching portraits of wounded troops.

"We'd each do 20-25 portraits in a couple of days," she recalls. She occasionally hears from those soldiers.

After the war, she sat down with presidential candidate Eisenhower in Denver. A nervous political entourage fidgeted in the background.

"A senator was running around the room holding my purse while I was working."

Eisenhower told her to take her time.

The portrait still hangs in the Eisenhower home in Gettysburg, Pa., she says.

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, ASCAP, commissioned portraits of Berlin, Kern, W.C. Handy and others in the 1940s. She also did portraits of music stars for Baldwin Piano Co. along with assorted magazine ads and illustrations.

Kern still had shaving cream on his face when he answered the door to his Plaza Hotel suite in New York.

"He never would sit or have his photograph taken because he had one bad eye — a cocked eye. It was out of line completely," she says. "I covered up his eye with the rim of his tortoise shell glasses. He's looking at you like this (sideways) with a foxy look, and that covers it."

After Kern died, his widow wrote to her. "She said she stands and looks at that."

Berlin was in a ground-floor office on Times Square.

"I walked in, and the shades were pulled. I looked around, and way over there behind a desk was a little, dark man. ... He greeted me. He did stand up. He was polite. He said, 'Where do you want me to sit, and when shall we begin?' I said, 'First, Mr. Berlin, let's put the curtains up so I can see something.' I think it was the first time he had those curtains up for years and years."

EMT: Craig finds stress relief in friends, horse riding recalled. "They showed me the lights and siren and told me what they did. I was really interested. I enjoyed listening to them and letting them talk to me about what they did and how they helped people and why what they did was important and how EMS is important to the community. And that was it."

He's had other interests. While at Lee High School, he participated in drama.

"I was fairly good," Craig said. "I did lots of acting in high school and liked that a lot and stayed with acting for a while. But, EMS has been my first interest."

Before completing his EMS certification at Midland College, he was in retail sales, but he said, "EMS is just my first saw."

As much as he's been drawn to his profession, it also has its downside.

"EMS people usually last about seven years, and that's because they get burned out. They get tired of the same premonitions. Driving up to situations where you are facing life and death. Coming into a situation where you don't know what's going on until you get there. Facing life or death, especially death, is the most stressful. You have to have a strong will and have the heart to continue on and know what you are doing."

Surviving in the business, Craig has been told by his immediate supervisor, Doyt Lee, affectionately referred to as "Do It" Lee, "all depends on how you take it."

The son of Midlanders Mona and Don Craig, he has a brother, Erik, and a sister-in-law, Stacie Craig. He was born in Hobbs, N.M., lived in Artesia, but has been a Midland resident most of his life.

His future plans include becoming a paramedic. "I enjoy helping people. There's great joy in that." He paused and laughed. "And I think I've watched a little bit too much of 'Rescue 911.'"

The youthful Craig is optimistic about his chances of maintaining his enthusiasm longer than seven years. "It all depends on how you perceive it. I could probably go seven years and feel the same need to do it, but I haven't reached that point yet so I couldn't say. I know everyone handles stress in their own way."

A ham operator, this EMS practitioner has his own formula for relieving stress. "I ride horses. I hang out with my friends, my partner. We go out and do stuff. I even go into an acting class and just sit and listen. It's just enough to take my mind off the problem for that length of time and let it go."

PATTERSON: Memories lost on kids memories there. That's where we rented 'Heaven Can Wait' and 'Love Story,' and all those romantic Cary Grant movies."

"Yeah," I jumped in. "And 'Terminator' and 'Rambo' and 'Pale Rider.' Eastwood was great in 'Pale Rider.'"

We drove a bit further down the road.

"Look girls," my wife said. "There's where daddy first lived when we got married. I remember I used to go over to his apartment and he'd have these mountains of newspapers stacked high. He had a trail from the TV set to the couch to the kitchen to the bedroom. Everything else was newspapers and old baseball magazines."

The kids laughed softly, but a quick glance in the rearview mirror showed they were starting to nod off.

"It's also the place where your dad cornered a bug so big in the bathroom he had to use athlete's foot spray and a broom before he was finally able to kill it."

"No way," one of the kids said. "Dad was never an athlete!".

"Hey," I said, "that bug was so big I used to have to wrestle him over who slept in the bed at night."

"Gross!" they said again before nodding back off.

Kids. They just don't have a nostalgic bone in their body these days.

■ Sailing trip wasn't all adventure

JAMESTOWN, R.I. — Rosie Day is tired of people who assume her life has been nothing but adventure as she spent 4 1/2 years sailing around the world with her husband and their two sons.

There was the pain of separation from friends, anxiety over the boys' education and the constant fear that someone would fall overboard, she said.

At one point, a frustrated Tim Day, then 8, stuffed a note into a bottle and hurled it overboard.

"The note said, 'Help! I've been kidnapped by my parents and forced to take a trip around the world!,'" Ms. Day said with a laugh.

"It's not all dreamlike. People think that, but it's not true. It was life, it was just a different life. It still had its problems," she said as her husband, George, nodded. "It certainly wasn't just sailing off into the sunset."

But there were plenty of memorable sunsets, from the Galapagos Islands to Singapore, through the Suez Canal and to the Bahamas, before the trip ended in Cape Cod, Mass., last month and they returned home to Jamestown.

■ Wildfire burns about 17,000 acres

CABAZON, Calif. — Firefighters struggled in rough terrain and blistering heat Sunday to contain a wildfire that blackened about 17,000 acres and destroyed a trailer and some ranch equipment.

The fire in desert wilderness burned a couple of miles from Morongo Valley, but no other structures were threatened, said Iral Evans, a spokesman for the California Department of Forestry.

Erratic wind made firefighting difficult.

"The winds are changing out there and the fire is changing direction every 15 minutes. We can't keep up with it," Evans said.

The blaze, which began Friday, was 50 percent contained Sunday morning. Firefighters predicted full containment by tonight, Evans said.

The fire, about 20 miles northwest of Palm Springs, was started by a man charging the battery of his tractor. A drop cord leading from a house to the vehicle overheated and set grass on fire.

■ Phone company talks continue

WASHINGTON — Regional phone companies and the union representing their operators, technicians and other employees resumed contract talks Sunday, still at odds over issues of job security, wages and health care costs.

Midnight strike deadlines passed Saturday as four phone companies and Communications Workers of America negotiators extended their talks. Regional union officials negotiated separately with each company: Bell Atlantic, Pacific Telesis, Ameritech and BellSouth.

Discussions were also under way with Southwestern Bell, but the union and company had previously come to a 30-day, no-strike, no-lockout agreement.

Jeffrey Miller, CWA's spokesman in Washington, said the union agreed to contract extensions with all but Bell Atlantic, which refused a formal extension. Those agreements required at least 24 hours' notice before a strike or a lockout.

"A great deal of work remains ahead," Bell Atlantic said of its discussions with representatives of some 37,000 union workers in Washington.

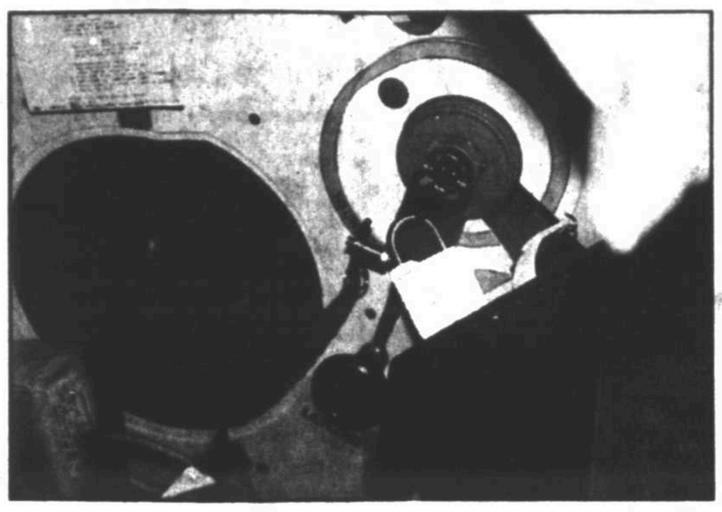

At issue in all the negotiations, Miller said, was access by union members to new jobs within the companies, guarantees that those new jobs would be union, wages, the use of subcontractors, and shifting health care costs.

With telephone companies expanding into new media markets, Miller said job security was of paramount concern.

Depression, boredom can be deadly for astronauts

By Marcia Dunn
Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — It was space shuttle commander Bryan O'Connor's call.

Worried someone might open the hatch and kill everyone — inadvertently or otherwise — O'Connor had a trusted crew member place a padlock on the hatch's handle as soon as Columbia reached orbit that overcast June morning.

Besides O'Connor, only two or three others on the seven-member crew knew the combination of the lock, which stayed put until it was time for the shuttle to come home nine days later. Among those not informed were the two payload specialists — NASA terminology for guest fliers, usually scientists.

"I'd known these other people for years and years," O'Connor explained. "These payload specialists, they're a little bit less of a known entity."

With Americans spending longer periods in orbit and construction of an international space station just two years away, the human factor — trust, boredom, despair — takes on added import.

Like it or not, people of varied nationalities, abilities and tastes will be stuck with each other for three to six months in orbit once the space station is up and running.

Luckily for Dr. Norman Thagard, the astronaut-physician got along well with his two Russian crewmates aboard Russia's Mir station.

His only moment of distress, compounded by cultural confusion, came when the mother of Mir commander Vladimir Dezhurov died unexpectedly in June, three months into the mission. The news was radioed up from Russia's Mission Control outside Moscow.

"I didn't know whether the typical American response, which is to try to console, would be the exact wrong thing to do," Thagard said. He took his cue from the other Russian on board.

Such devastating news easily could trigger depression, something space programs want to avoid because of the potentially deadly consequences in a confined craft.

O'Connor, who now directs NASA's shuttle program, expects this to become a more common problem as Americans spend more time in space.

As it stands now, NASA would notify an astronaut in orbit about the death of a family member only after consulting with the next-of-kin. While a shuttle mission would not be cut short because of a family emergency, O'Connor said every effort likely would be made to quickly bring a grieving crew member back from the international space station.

Until Thagard's 115-day space stint, the longest an American spent in orbit was 84 days — more than two decades ago. A Russian physician holds the world record of 439 straight days.

"If we expect to send people on (Mars) missions of two or three years, we darn well better deal with the psychological aspects in addition to the physiological ones," NASA Administrator Daniel Goldin said after Thagard and his Russian crewmates returned to Earth on July 7. "This hasn't been our tendency in the past."

For Thagard, spending almost four months in orbit posed no psychological problem. Had it been six months or more, he's not sure he would have made it, given the lack of news, sporadic family contact and sometimes slow work pace. He did not get most of his research equipment until the beginning of June because of a laboratory-delivery delay.

"May seemed to be a real long month," Thagard said. "I found myself, really, with too much time on my hands."

Throughout Thagard's stay on Mir, Russia's Mission Control monitored the crew's conversations and appearances, on the lookout for signs of stress.

The longer the flight, the less intense it is, and boredom and compatibility can become crucial factors, said Italian engineer and physicist Franco Malerba, who flew on a padlock-free Atlantis in 1992.

"I'm not saying claustrophobia, but that feeling of imprisonment," Malerba said. "That probably requires a personality that is similar to that of a monk, of somebody who likes loneliness."

NASA goes out of its way to select hardy individuals as astronauts, putting candidates through hours of psychological tests.

O'Connor, a 6-footer, recalls being zipped inside an inflatable ball about one yard in diameter for what seemed to be an hour when he applied to the astronaut program in the late 1970s.

Payload specialists, on the other hand, are not subjected to such intense scrutiny. Among those hitching shuttle rides over the years — a U.S. senator, a member of the U.S. House of Representatives, even a Saudi prince.

"They show up later. They don't go through the same selection criteria. They don't have all the meetings with the shrinks. They're kind of a different group," O'Connor said.

As for his flight in June 1991, O'Connor said a urine-monitoring machine was located near Columbia's hatch, used by the crew to get in and out of the shuttle. That machine meant a lot of traffic at one of the most potentially hazardous spots in the ship. Open the hatch even a crack in the vacuum of space, and the crew compartment instantly loses pressure and everyone dies.

Even though the handle has a safety pin to prevent an accidental opening of the hatch, O'Connor decided it would be "prudent" to use the combination lock. He said he discussed it with his crew and no one objected.

Payload specialist Millie Hughes-Fulford wasn't the least bit offended at not being told the combination.

"There were so many things on the shuttle we didn't handle," said Hughes-Fulford, a scientist at the Department of Veterans Affairs in San Francisco.

Besides, she said, "I had no desire to get out while I was in orbit."

Congress prepares for battle on Medicare after recess

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of Congress will spend their summer recess buttonholing constituents at county fairgrounds and senior citizen centers, as Republicans try to convince folks they mean Medicare no harm while Democrats warn of a looming "Medicare Pearl Harbor."

The opposing generals, House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., and Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., sent their troops home with thick packets and slide presentations arguing their views of Medicare's predicament.

Exhibit A for the Republicans is a document that three members of President Clinton's Cabinet had a hand in writing: the April 1995 Medicare trustees' report warning the hospital fund will go broke in 2002.

"This isn't a train wreck. This is an airplane crash," said Sen. Judd Gregg, R-N.H., pointing to a chart from the trustees' report showing the precipitous slide.

Democrats scoff at the Republicans' alarms and insist the GOP's real aim is to undermine the 30-year-old program, a mainstay of American life.

"The program is not broke. That is the big lie in their story," said Rep. Sam Gibbons, D-Fla.

But the Republicans say Democrats are ignoring Medicare's impending crisis as they try to foment a rebellion against the GOP budget plan and its $270 billion in reduced Medicare spending over seven years.

Gingrich was to kick off his sales efforts at an Atlanta forum Monday on how to avoid Medicare's bankruptcy.

The program was slated to feature Republican health experts and lawmakers; no Democrats accepted the invitation from the non-profit Congressional Institute to share the stage with Gingrich.

The GOP's 20 pages of charts and "suggested talking points" stress the need for lawmakers to convince constituents that Medicare is in deep trouble, but can be fixed by slowing its rate of growth.

"Medicare spending can increase, it just can't continue to increase at over 10 percent a year," the packet states.

It promises that older Americans, who want to keep fee-for-service Medicare coverage with unlimited choice of doctors, will be able to. But they will also have other choices, including "coordinated care" plans, medical savings accounts and even the option of staying in an employer's plan at age 65.

"We have a very important message to take to the country," said Sen. Paul Coverdell, R-Ga. The Republicans are offering "not a wonk solution, but an education about what the trustees have said very clearly."

DEAR ABBY

Woman's big mouth gets friendship off to bad start

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Please help me with an embarrassing situation I got myself into because of my big mouth.

Van Buren

Yesterday, a new neighbor that I have waved to, but never talked to, brought over a package that was addressed to me but delivered to her house by mistake.

I invited her in, and we sat in the den and talked a while. Then I asked her to come into the living room so I could show her a beautiful framed picture of my granddaughter. We had to walk through my kitchen to get to the living room. I can't remember my exact words, but they went something like this: "My kitchen is very small ... I hope you can make it."

As soon as the words were out of my mouth, I could have kicked myself, because this woman is a very heavyset person; she must weigh around 300 pounds. She didn't say anything, but I'm afraid I hurt her feelings.

This has upset me so much, I couldn't sleep a wink last night. Should I go to her and tell her I spoke in haste and apologize for being so insensitive?

Please help me; I'm a nervous wreck. My husband says I should forget it. I hate to leave my house for fear of running into her, but I can't stay holed up here forever. Sign me ... MRS. BIG MOUTH

DEAR MRS. BIG MOUTH: I agree with your husband. Forget it. Your neighbor probably has. As a gesture of appreciation, invite her over for coffee and a chat.

DEAR ABBY: My problem is a 13-year-old girl who lives up north, but comes to this Southern state to visit her grandmother for the summer. We have a son her age, and they have a lot in common and enjoy each other's company.

She is a very pretty girl, polite and intelligent, but she has a very offensive body odor. My children and I don't know how to tell her that she should use a deodorant. When she's in the car, I blast the air through the vents directly on my face so I can breathe. We have been trying to think of a way to tell her without hurting her feelings. Please help us. — DEPENDING ON YOU

DEAR DEPENDING: You would be doing her an enormous favor if you'd have a private chat with her concerning the importance of bathing daily, shampooing her hair and using a deodorant. Better yet, buy her some deodorant and tell her to use it faithfully after her daily bath.

DEAR ABBY: You blew it big time when you advised "Name Withheld to Protect the Guilty" to purchase a second wedding gift for the couple who didn't appreciate the first one and returned it for cash instead. Their gift was then the cash they received as a refund.

As a gift-giver, "Name Withheld's" duty was done when she gave the first gift. If they chose to dump the gift in the ocean, that's their business, and a second gift was not required! — MARLENE IN MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR MARLENE: The store issued the credit to the purchaser, rather than the bridal couple, which left the bridal couple giftless. Therefore, it would be gracious for the giver to send them another gift.

To order "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

Technology provides security screening for phone companies

DALLAS (AP) — Mark down another voice in the growing babel of speech-recognition technologies.

A Dallas company is marketing a new computer technology to long-distance telephone companies that would recognize the sound of a voice as that of an authorized caller before clearing a call.

Preferred Telecom said its system is the first voice-interactive security screen to be offered to the long-distance industry.

Tom Hunse, vice president for business development at the 2-year-old Dallas company, said the technology will offer greater security than comparable voice-interactive features already on the market.

"We use speaker-dependent voice recognition," Hunse said. "Once you dial into our 800 number, you no longer have to touch the keypad."

The company is promoting the service, unveiled July 24, as being more fraud-resistant than conventional calling-card services.

Calling-card fraud, using stolen authorization codes, will cost more than $1 billion in losses, according to industry estimates.

Currently, the only long-distance company to use technology responsive to a caller's voice is Sprint Inc. The Kansas City, Mo.-based company offers its Voice Foncard, which allows customers to talk their way to their destination rather than having to let their fingers do the walking.

'It also allows for minor fluctuations in a person's voice, such as a cold or a morning voice.'

— Tom Hunse, vice president for business development at Preferred Telecom

However, Voice Foncard callers still must dial their way through authorization codes before they can tell the computer to "call home," as demonstrated in Sprint's television commercials.

Preferred Telecom says that with its technology, the only dialing is of the access number. Then, callers talk their way through security screens programmed to recognize voices and, if necessary, verify confirmation cues unique to the caller.

"The technology is not unique, but the application is unique," said Nancy Jamison, an analyst who monitors the voice-processing technology market for Dataquest of San Jose, Calif.

Hunse said the technology has been tested for reliability.

"It also allows for minor fluctuations in a person's voice, such as a cold or a morning voice," he said. "The more you use it, the better it works. We store 20 voice prints on you at all times."

A telephone demonstration showed the system works, but it also revealed a pitfall: Calls placed from speaker-phones or areas with considerable background talk, like an office, can confuse the voice-recognition system.

That means the caller must answer five computerized questions to confirm his or her identity.

"The important thing is to speak clearly and not try to outsmart the system by over-enunciating," Hunse said.

Preferred Telecom provides the service to the long-distance companies, which funnel the subscribed calls into a Dallas service center, where computers process the calls and send them along.

But will the technology appeal to anyone but gadget addicts?

"Right now, we see it as just a gee-whiz kind of thing," said Bob Scarboro, MCI senior manager of product marketing. MCI provides the long-distance lines serving the Preferred Telecom system.

However, Ms. Jamison is not so sure. She said the Sprint Voice Foncard has proved to be a popular service. A service that can recognize the unique characteristics of a caller's voice, not just the words, could be even more popular.

Schools get ready for another year with new programs

Associated Press

Increasing enrollments and educational programs designed to keep up with a changing society dominate the plans of school districts statewide as another summer break winds down.

One area where enrollments will remain fairly static is El Paso, whose largest school district will see just a minor increase in attendance. The focus for the El Paso Independent School District this year is technology.

EPISD is introducing its distance learning system, which will allow elementary schools to interact with one another via satellite. The program will involve 29 of the district's 53 grade schools this year.

Ysleta ISD, the city's second-largest, is developing its Student Entrepreneur Center, a central location where student-run businesses can maintain offices and where they can sell their services and products at a Mexican-style mercado. It's slated to open Oct. 7.

Enrollments are up in the Dallas and Fort Worth ISDs, but a number of primary concern for those districts is zero. That's the amount of patience officials say they'll have with student discipline problems this fall.

"We've instituted a new student responsibility program," said Dallas Independent School District spokesman Larry Ascough, who compared it to the "zero tolerance" programs many police have instituted toward crime.

"We're just asking students to take responsibility for their own actions."

Also on tap for DISD is the opening of a $30 million centralized campus that will house six of the district's magnet schools.

Fort Worth officials said a stronger code of student conduct is in force this year. Schools will identify and attempt to deal with "chronically disruptive students" and use money from a half-cent sales tax increase to boost on-campus police presence.

Four revitalized elementaries in FWISD will be under scrutiny this school year as well. As outlined in a report by Superintendent Thomas Tocco, the Elementary Schools Initiative will give the schools a "fresh start" with changes including new staffs and a longer school year.

Houston ISD spokeswoman Lisa Bunse said enrollment in the state's largest school district was expected to climb by 3,000 to 206,000 when classes begin Aug. 21. She said the district is striving to maintain its 22-to-1 student-teacher ratio.

District officials consider a special school to be operated in conjunction with Texas Southern University as its most important initiative.

Using $1 million in donated funds, the district turned two buildings in a public housing complex into a school with the capacity for 130 students in kindergarten through fifth-grade. Students living in Houston public housing were given enrollment priority.

San Antonio's three major school districts — San Antonio, North East and Northside — face financial and administrative challenges entering the school year.

SASD, the city's largest, was one of 38 statewide to be rated "accredited warned" in the Texas Education Agency Accountability Rating System report for 1995. The warning is equivalent to a rating of "low-performing," given to districts or schools that fail to meet minimum state standards.

"The irony of it is, no school in the district has been labeled low-performing because of dropouts," said SASD superintendent Diana Lam.

NISD Superintendent Agustin Orci said $98 million bond package up for approval by voters only addresses current growth requirements.

"Our needs are, to say the least, extraordinary," Orci said. "The day we open these schools, we're going to have a whole bunch of kids to fill them."

Broncs seek Deion

DENVER — The Denver Broncos, last in team defense in 1994, may offer Deion Sanders a contract within the next 30 days, owner Pat Bowlen said Saturday.

Sanders, the 1994 NFL defensive player of the year, is a free agent who will begin the football season after his baseball season with the San Francisco Giants ends in October.

"We're not going to make a ridiculously low offer because that doesn't make any sense for us or for Deion," he said. "What we'll try to do is we'll try to negotiate with him and see where we come out. But the Broncos definitely will go after him."

Sanders won a Super Bowl ring while playing cornerback for the San Francisco 49ers in 1994. He has said he wants a chance to get back to the Super Bowl, and Denver is one of a handful of teams on his list.

Bowlen gave San Francisco the edge in the Sanders Sweepstakes, but he said Denver has as good a shot at "Prime Time" as all other teams — even though Sanders co

Harper not serious

TAMPA, Fla. — Alvin Harper and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers breathed a collective sigh of relief on Sunday.

The speedy receiver and the hard-luck franchise that signed him to a four-year, $10.66 million contract last winter feared the worst when Harper crumpled to ground, clutching his left knee, in the first quarter of Saturday night's 9-3 exhibition loss to the New York Jets.

X-rays taken in the locker room were negative, however, and an MRI performed Sunday confirmed the Bucs' prized offseason acquisition only had a mild sprain of the medial collateral ligament in the knee.

What figures to keep Harper out longer is another injury — a mid-foot sprain — sustained on the play that could have ended his season before it even started. His left leg was heavily bandaged from the knee down and he figures to be on crutches for at least three or four days.

Luttrell tames Hogan again, claims city title

■ Twenty-year-old golfer surpasses former champs to become Hogan's hero.

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Sports Writer

In 1976 when Steve Whiteside was 21 years old and won the first of his three Men's City Golf Championships, Jeremiah Luttrell was still in diapers.

But on Sunday at Hogan Park Golf Course, it was Luttrell cleaning up after Whiteside and another former champ Jeff Moses as he took advantage of a four-stroke swing over two holes in the final round to shoot a second straight 4-under par 66 and win the NationsBank Men's City Golf Championship at the ripe young age of 20.

And the Hogan Park regulars, who have known Luttrell since he first started playing the game on Midland's only municipal course, couldn't have been any prouder of the surrogate son they fondly call "J.B."

But no one was more grateful for the years of support than Luttrell, who will suit up for the defending national champion Midland College Chaparrals this fall as a sophomore.

"I have so much support out here," said Luttrell, referring to the gallery of mostly Hogan regulars that steadily grew in numbers as the threesome made its way around the back nine and up to the club house.

Shouts of "Way to go, J.B." and "Nice birdie putt, J.B." were heard as Luttrell sunk two straight birdies on No. 15 and No. 16 to blast past Whiteside, who chipped himself over the green and out of contention with bogeys on both holes. Whiteside held a one-stroke lead going into the pivotal two holes.

"I just want to thank everybody out here for pulling for me all this time," said Luttrell. "It gives me a lot of drive to win. They are the main reason I wanted to win this thing."

Whiteside and Moses, knowing what it takes to win a Midland title, seemed to look at Luttrell's accomplishment with "big brother" pride. Whiteside had blasted to the lead going into the final round with two straight 68s. Moses was four strokes back to start the day and Luttrell was two shots behind Whiteside.

Whiteside shot above par for the first time in three rounds and finished at 71 for a runner-up total of 207. Moses could never really bridge the four-stroke gap and finished with a 71—211 for third. Defending champion Tim Phillips finished with a three-day total of 220 to tie for 12th place.

Jeremiah Luttrell, 20, reacts to sinking a long putt in Sunday's final round of the NationsBank Men's City Golf Tournament at Hogan Park Golf Course. Luttrell shot back-back 66s to win the tournament for the first time.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

'It's good to see his name on the trophy. He's a good golfer but he's also one of the nicest people out here.'

— Jeff Moses, former Midland city champion.

"It's good to see his name on that trophy," said Moses, who won his only title in 1993. "He's a good golfer, but he's also one of the nicest players out there."

Whiteside added, "I thought if I could shoot another 68 that it would be enough. But it wouldn't have been because he shot another fantastic score. He had a lot of momentum and I opened the door and he walked right in."

Luttrell made up two strokes on the front nine to come even with Whiteside as they made the turn. But he smelled blood when Whiteside, who led by one shot again after Luttrell bogeyed No. 9, chipped over the green on his second shot on the par-3 No. 15. Luttrell had hit a perfect second shot and had a 20-foot putt for birdie.

Whiteside missed for birdie on his chip shot and Luttrell calmly sank the 20-footer and acknowledged his supporters with a wave and a smile as he took a one-shot lead.

Then on No. 16, Whiteside again opened

Nomo's knowledge of game shows in 1-hitter

■ Dodger manager Tommy Lasorda has come to expect great things from his rookie pitcher.

By Rob Gloster
AP Sports Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — Hideo Nomo didn't even have his best stuff when he pitched his one-hitter against the San Francisco Giants. And the Giants say it shows how well the Dodgers' pitcher really knows the game.

"I've seen him have better command as far as his splitter," said Royce Clayton, who broke up Nomo's no-hit bid Saturday night with a single to deep short with two outs in the seventh. "He had a lot of giddyup on his fastball and seemed to throw that well. He had enough control and velocity on his fastball to get guys out, and that's what he did."

Another sign of Nomo's prowess was that manager Tommy Lasorda was almost nonchalant in discussing his ace's 11-strikeout performance in the 3-0 victory.

Nomo (9-2) lowered his ERA to 1.89, second-best in the National League, and increased his league-leading strikeout total to 161 while getting his third shutout. The rookie has four complete games in 18 starts.

"He's pitched a lot of them like that. I think he's pitched this well before," Lasorda said. "He's been that consistent all year."

And his teammates, while marveling at Nomo's talent, aren't exactly thrilled at playing behind him, either.

"It's actually kind of boring," first baseman Eric Karros said, "because you don't get that much action."

As for Nomo, whose post-game comments are as terse as his 1-2-3 innings, his pitching seemed less memorable than his

Cowboys find receiver; McNair has up-and-down start

■ Dallas may have come up with wide receiver help in rookie Eric Bjornson, who also plays tight end.

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — The Dallas Cowboys, looking for wide receiver help, may have found some in Saturday night's 27-14 loss to the Oakland Raiders.

Rookie Eric Bjornson caught five passes for 57 yards playing at both tight end and wide receiver.

Bjornson, who can run the 40 in 4.5 seconds, said "the beauty of our offense is I can play tight end but still can be used like a wideout. Catching the ball for me is second nature no matter where I play."

The 6-foot-4 Bjornson was a quarterback and wide receiver for Washington.

"I'm not used to lining up and blocking the big boys at tight end and that will take some adjustment," said the 235-pound Bjornson, who also is being used on the special teams.

"It looks like I'm going to be busy," said the fourth-

HOUSTON — Arizona rookie Stoney Case is satisfied with his first impression on the NFL. Houston rookie Steve McNair will learn from his.

Case, a third-round pick out of New Mexico, threw a 29-yard touchdown pass with 4:18 remaining that rallied the Cardinals to a 16-13 exhibition victory over Houston and its first-round quarterback Saturday.

McNair bobbled his first snap, although he picked up the ball and completed a 20-yard pass. He was sacked four times for 20 yards, fumbled in his own end zone for a Cardinals safety and completed two of five passes for 37 yards.

"It was a learning experience and I'm glad this game is over," McNair said. "We knew they were going to have a difficult game plan. We made some mental errors and that's stuff we can correct. I know how hard I have to work."

Austin takes playoff to win Buick Open

The Associated Press

■ Golf Roundup

GRAND BLANC, Mich. (AP) — Woody Austin wants the folks back in Tampa, Fla., to know he's still willing to work at the credit union. It's just that now he may be counting his own money instead of the company's.

The bespectacled Austin, who has gone from part-time teller to PGA Tour regular in the less than a year, parred the second hole of a playoff with Mike Brisky on Sunday to win the Buick Open.

"I worked there the day before Thanksgiving last year," Austin said. "I want those people to know how much I appreciate everything they did to help me along."

As it happened, his last day at the GTE Federal Credit Union was a week before the PGA Tour qualifying tournament. That's where hopefuls go to earn the playing card which allows them to play big-time golf.

Austin, 31, who won the qualifying event in December, had five top-10 finishes in his first 24 starts, including a fourth-place finish in the Colonial. He earned $216,000 on Sunday to increase his season total to $558,115.

"I'm very proud of myself right now," Austin said. "Saturday, I played very tentative golf. I really beat myself up last night. I knew I had a chance. Today, I really played a good, solid round of golf."

Austin closed with a 5-under-par 67 and Brisky, who was 10th in the qualifying tournament, shot a 68 for 18-under 270 totals on the Warwick Hills Golf and Country Club course.

Jeff Sluman, trying desperately for his second career victory after finishing second seven times since winning the 1988 PGA Championship, shot a 71 to miss the playoff by a stroke.

Tom Byrum shot a 65 and Ernie Els had a 68 to join Sluman at 271. Defending champion Fred Couples, making his first start since withdrawing from the British Open because of a back injury, was two back after a 70.

After opening the playoff with pars on No. 18, Austin had the advantage on the 401-yard 10th hole when Brisky hit his approach into a greenside bunker. Austin, who was near the fringe 12 feet from the hole, made his par and watched as Brisky's par bid from 10 feet curled around the cup.

"I wasn't nervous in the playoff," Austin said. "You just have to go get it. It's a no-lose situation. So, once it starts, you just have to be aggressive and go for it."

Sluman, still trying to prove his PGA victory wasn't a fluke, was the only player to get to 19-under. But he couldn't hold it.

LPGA McCall's Classic

STRATTON MOUNTAIN, Vt. — For Dottie Mochrie, the McCall's Classic seemed more "like a major" than just another LPGA tournament.

Mochrie won in front of her mother and father for the first time and also reached a personal goal of winning $3 million before age 30.

When Mochrie dropped a birdie putt to finish at 12-under par 204 and post a three-stroke victory over Kelly Robbins, her mother ran onto the green to embrace her. Both had tears in their eyes.

"My mother cries like me," said Mochrie reached the $3 million mark 11 days before her 30th birthday. "My father did smoke a lot of cigarettes. I don't think he handled it well.

"It's the first time my parents have ever seen me win that made it extra special."

Mochrie, who started the day tied with Pat Bradley at 8-under, had four birdies and no bogeys to post a 68. Robbins matched Mochrie for the lowest round of the day and finished at 207.

The $500,000 tournament was shortened to 54 holes after fog wiped out Thursday's play.

Robbins, starting the day three strokes behind, had four birdies on the front nine to pull even with Mochrie at 9-under while playing several holes ahead.

VFW Seniors

BELTON, Mo. — Bob Murphy tied a Seniors Tour record with his second straight 63 and won the VFW Seniors Championship by one shot over defending champion Jim Colbert.

Murphy took the lead over crowd favorite Colbert with a curling, 12-foot birdie on the tough par-4 17th hole and finished 15-under for the three rounds. He and Colbert, who tied the tournament record with an 8-under 62, battled head-to-head over the last three holes for the $135,000 first prize.

"That putt on 17 was the winner," said Murphy, who had a 69 on Friday and said he was still adjusting from jet lag that lingered from a trip to Ireland.

"I just wasn't on my normal clock," he said.

With win Earnhardt grabs piece of history

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Winning the Brickyard 400 was more than just another victory for Dale Earnhardt. It was a piece of history.

On the same track where 79 Indianapolis 500s have been run, making legends of names like Foyt, Unser, Andretti, Mears and Bettenhausen, two editions of stock car racing's Indy have begun to meld with the rich tradition of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

When Earnhardt won Saturday's race on the historic 2 1/2-mile oval, earning a payoff of $565,600 from a $4.5 million purse, he was obviously thrilled with the richest and most prestigious victory of his career. But he also was awed to be in the company of racing greatness.

"When we came here and tested a couple of years ago, it's impressive because of seeing the people who have won here," said Earnhardt, who was fifth in last year's race. "Name after name of tradition.

"To come out fifth in the race last year was a great accomplishment. But I felt like to win here and be in the same sort of group with an Indy 500 winner or a Brickyard winner is a pretty impressive and pretty neat situation. I'm very honored to be there with them.

"Our races are different from the Indy 500. It's started its own tradition or history. It's great to be part of history. Now there's been two Brickyard races and I've won half of them."

Jeff Gordon, who won the inaugural Brickyard 400 and was the center of attention during the prerace buildup, was the favorite of the crowd of about 300,000, who waited through a nearly 4 1/2-hour rain delay for the start of the race.

But handling problems cost the 24-year-old any chance of winning and relegated him to a sixth-place finish. Still, the third-year Winston Cup star emerged from the 400-mile race with his series lead intact.

> "It's great to be part of history. Now there's been two Brickyard races and I've won half of them.'
> — Dale Earnhardt, Saturday's Brickyard 400 winner

After the first 19 events of the 31-event schedule, Gordon leads Sterling Marlin, who finished seventh, by 82 points and Earnhardt by 121.

"We're kind of scratching our heads right now as far as where we lost the handling," Gordon said. "We're sorry we didn't repeat. This is a big race and we would have liked to have won it."

At the end of the race, with darkness already on the horizon, the fans were cheering lustily for Earnhardt, whose recent slump in the shadow of Gordon's brilliant rise to the top of the standings had made him something of a forgotten man.

Even though Marlin, the winner of the last two Daytona 500s, is certainly in the championship chase, most of the attention centers on the 44-year-old Earnhardt, a seven-time series champion and NASCAR's king of the hill, and Gordon, the apparent heir to the throne.

Though he wouldn't come right out and admit it, Earnhardt's feelings about slowing Gordon's surge toward the top with his win at Indy were obvious.

"He has been doing great things and has been a great racer," said Earnhardt, who has 66 career wins. "He's due the press and response he's got. Any young driver comes along and made the things happen he's made deserves it. But there's a lot before him that have done the same thing, and some people forget about them, I reckon."

U.S. soccer places 3rd with victory over Portugal team

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — National team newcomer Roy Lassiter scored on a sharp header in the 68th minute Sunday, giving the United States a 2-1 victory over Benfica of Portugal and third place in the exhibition Parmalat Cup.

In the final, Hristo Stoichkov scored two goals and set up a third for Parma of Italy in its convincing 3-1 victory over Boca Juniors of Argentina.

Lassiter made one appearance with the U.S. national team in 1992 before breaking his ankle in a training session. He was invited back to the squad this week after many of the American regulars were recalled for preseason training by their foreign clubs.

"If I don't do it now, I may never have the chance to do it again," said Lassiter, who nearly made the trip to the America Cup but was promised by coach Steve Sampson that he would play here.

"Scoring the goal makes me feel like I'm in now."

Lassiter scored after Jeff Agoos, another non-regular, broke free on the left side and sent a chest-high cross into the penalty area. Lassiter, who plays for Alajuela in the Costa Rican first division, deflected the ball from 6 meters just inside the right post.

■ Parmlat Cup

'I'm an opportunist, and I took advantage of the opportunity," said Lassiter, who had 17 goals in 43 games with Alajuela last season. "That's basically where I score my goals, inside the six."

Benfica controlled the second half until Lassiter's goal, creating four early chances in a 90-second span.

Lassiter's goal came on one of the few counterattacks the United States had. After the goal, the Americans made several substitutions and reasserted more control in the final 20 minutes.

Frank Klopas gave the United States the lead in the 13th minute on a penalty kick, after Luis Gustavo was called for a handball.

Klopas started the play with a free kick that bounced off several players in the penalty area and came to Marcelo Balboa, whose volley struck Gustavo on the left arm.

Benfica came out strong in the second half, and finally equalized in the 63rd minute when Ilian Iliev got the ball on a counter, and rolled a left-footer past U.S. keeper Juergen Sommer from just inside the area.

"I thought the game was even until the penalty," U.S. coach Steve Sampson said.

CITY: Title winner gives credit to Whiteside, Moses

the door and Luttrell slammed it shut on his way through. Whiteside, who golfed collegiately for Texas A&M, again overshot the green on his approach shot. Luttrell answered with a beautiful 60-foot chip that left the ball just two feet short of the hole.

Luttrell then made his birdie and Whiteside passed the hole on his third shot and missed par before finally sinking it for another bogey. The swing put Luttrell firmly in the lead at 3-under par for the round.

"I was really surprised he hit it over on 15," said Luttrell. "But he had a tough break on 16 when he hit the tree. And I had the best shot of my life. That's where I felt I really had it."

"The whole thing came unraveled," said Whiteside. "The killer was on No. 15. I had figured on the back nine that I needed to try to par most of the holes and maybe get one or two birdies. I thought on several holes that I had put a little heat on him. But he responded well every time and came out on top.

"He's a talented golfer and deserved to win this thing."

Luttrell virtually sealed his victory when he hit a good first drive on the difficult No. 17. All three in the group ended up paring that hole and Luttrell and Whiteside pared No. 18 while Moses got in with a birdie.

Luttrell gave a lot of the credit for his strong play on Sunday to Whiteside and Moses.

"They are terrific to play with," said Luttrell. "They are both real supportive and I think that's one of the reasons why I played the way I did because I enjoyed the people I was playing with."

Richard Ashton shot a 72 on Sunday for a three-day total of 224 to win the President's Flight over Midland Lee senior to-be Charlie Prince's 72—225. Prince cannot win the prize money since he is still in school, so second was awarded to former Lee golfer K.J. Sanchez (71—226) and Frank Tryon (74—226).

Shawn Juaz (73—154) and Orlando Montanez (79—154) tied for first place in the First Flight. Don Vandivort (77—150) was first in the Second Flight beating out Ken Krawietz (77—151).

Jim Brimer (83—160) beat out Ron Kinsey (80—165) to win the Third Flight. Will Hill (78—167) was awarded second after Kinsey was named the net winner for the flight. In the Fourth Flight, Floyd Jarnagin (85—169) defeated Dicky Gatlin (92—173) to win the title.

Powerboat driver critically injured at Bud Light Grand Prix

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A powerboat driver was critically injured in a collision Sunday during a high-speed turn in the Bud Light Gran Prix.

David Dewald, 31, of Reading was pulled unconscious from the Allegheny River after a boat driven by Bill Joule of St. Petersburg, Fla., collided with Dewald's craft on the second lap.

Dewald was listed in critical condition at Allegheny General Hospital. Officials would not release details of his injury.

Joule, who was partially paralyzed in a Gran Prix accident in Pittsburgh two years ago, was uninjured Sunday.

Tim Seebold won the race.

Angels offense sputters again

Staff Report

EL PASO — The Midland pitching staff has put together its best string of performances lately, but the offense isn't taking advantage of it.

Korey Keling struck out 10 in 6 2/3 innings but didn't get any kind of run support Sunday night as the El Paso Diablos came away with a 4-1 win at Cohen Stadium.

The loss drops the Angels into sole possession of last place in the Texas League's Western Division with a 19-25 record, five games behind front-running Wichita. El Paso, which had been tied with Midland for third place going into the game, improved to 20-24.

Keling (8-3) has dropped his last two starts but not for lack of trying. He allowed only five hits through six-plus innings, but the Midland offense has been nonexistent. Sunday's loss was the Angels' fourth in a row and the fourth straight game they have scored just one run.

A crowd of 7,491 saw El Paso starter Frank Rodriguez (8-7) keep the Angels off the scoreboard until the fourth. He gave up six hits and struck out six to pick up the win and got help from two Diablos relievers. Doug Webb pitched a scoreless ninth to pick up his third save of the year.

The teams were scoreless until the third when El Paso put together two hits and a walk as well as a balk and wild pitch by Keling to take a 2-0 lead.

Cecil Rodrigues walked to open the inning then went to second on Keling's wild pitch. Roberto Lopez followed with an RBI single to put El Paso up 1-0 and then went to second on Keling's balk to put him in scoring position. Keling struck out Brian Banks but then gave up a two-out RBI single to Todd Landry, which fell right in front of Midland's Mo Daniels.

The Angels cut the lead to 2-1 in the fourth with what proved to be their only run of the game. George Arias, who went 2-for-4, started to climb out of a near-month slump with a sharp single and scored on a fielder's choice grounder by Steve Hosey.

Arias was in a 7 for 60 slump before the game and got two base hits as well as hitting a couple of other balls hard to the outfield.

El Paso made it 3-1 in the sixth when Banks tripled to right field and scored on a grounder that Midland's Leon Glenn could not handle and was ruled an error.

The Diablos scored their final run in the seventh to take a 4-1 lead. Tom Nevers singled, went to second on a two-out walk to Lopez and scored on a Banks single to center field.

The Angels will try to bounce back in the second game of the five-game series tonight.

Midland will send Willard Brown (7-9, 5.00 ERA) to the mound against El Paso's Byron Browne (8-3, 3.14) in the 8 p.m. start. The game will be televised by ESPN2.

Martinez wins Toshiba Classic

The Associated Press

CARLSBAD, Calif. — Spain's Conchita Martinez, ranked No. 4 in the world, breezed to an easy 6-2, 6-0 victory Sunday over Lisa Raymond in the finals of the Toshiba Tennis Classic.

Martinez, seeded second, used brilliant passing shots and overcame numerous deficits in the first set to win her fifth WTA Tour title this season.

Martinez earned $79,500 for the victory.

MONEY WATCH

Tax Seminar

The Midland office of Smith Barney is hosting a seminar entitled "Taxation of Lump Sum Benefits and Investing For Retirement" on August 16 from 7 to 9:30 p.m. at The Plaza Club.

Featured speaker Andrea Cooper, vice president, financial consultant and retirement planning specialist, will address such topics as evaluating retirement income needs, avoiding the 10 percent additional tax on pre-59-1/2 IRA withdrawals and 20 percent tax withholding on lump sum distributions, and how recent tax law changes may affect your retirement planning.

The seminar is presented by W. Keith Wood, vice president, financial consultant and retirement planning specialist, and Judy Galbraith, financial consultant. There is no charge but reservations are required and can be made by calling 685-1234.For release anytime

TV Couture

What do you wear when you're watching "Melrose Place" or "Seinfeld"? United States Satellite Broadcasting, which provides television programs for satellite dish owners, commissioned a survey of more than 1,000 TV watchers and found most of them like to be comfy while they're watching the tube. Forty percent of the respondents said they watch TV in their PJs, while 30 percent wear sweats, 14 percent wear loose clothing, and 2 percent are in their underwear. Another 1 percent watch TV in the buff.

Greetings!

After voice mail, faxes and e-mail, what's the next step in business communication? Greeting cards, contends Introknocks, a company that makes cards aimed at business people. Introknocks believes cards have more impact than traditional or high-tech channels of communication, especially if they have a clever message. Some of its cards are thank-yous for customers, invitations to meetings and follow-ups for contacts made at trade shows. Others are what the company calls tactful ways to remind customers they haven't paid their bills in a while.

Move over Cindy

There are no svelte swimsuit-clad women or hulking hunks on the cover of Sky magazine. The August issue of Delta Air Line's in-flight magazine has two Labrador retrievers modeling Ralph Lauren polo shirts. A spread inside, "The Dog Days of Fashion," features the two pooches and 12 other doggies modeling a variety of clothes and accessories. A basset hound named John-John sports a pair of $120 swim trunks, while a Jack Russell terrier has a Fuji disposable camera. Sky is no snob; it even has a mutt modeling. A greyhound-Lab cross wears a $250 Chanel scarf.

Seed Money

If you have only $1,000, but dreams of starting your own successful business, don't despair, says Inc. magazine. In its August issue, Inc. tells the stories of 11 companies with revenues in the millions — as much as $250 million — that were started with hardly any money.

When family matters turn into family problems

By Chet Currier
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Any time you're thinking about lending some money to a member of your family, remember your Uncle Sam.

No, he's not interested in putting up the money. The truth is, he's already heavily in debt himself.

But the government's tax authorities have a keen interest in any borrowing deals between private individuals, even those between parents and children, sisters and brothers and other close kin.

So before you go ahead and transfer the money, financial advisers suggest you give the deal some careful planning and set it up in a businesslike way. Otherwise, they say, you could run into problems that might put a heavy strain on your own finances, not to mention your relationship with the borrower.

"Before you pull out your checkbook, be aware of the pitfalls involved when loaning money to family," says the accounting firm of KPMG Peat Marwick in the current issue of its planning newsletter Financial Independence.

"Structure a family loan just like any other standard loan to avoid scrutiny by the Internal Revenue Service.

"If you loan more than $10,000 to a family member, you could be required by the IRS to show proof that the money was indeed a loan. Otherwise, the loan could be considered a gift and subject to gift tax.

"A written, enforceable note is the best format. The loan document should list the amount you are lending, the interest rate you are charging, the date payment is due and a description of the collateral, if any."

Commonly, people who make loans to family members are willing, if not eager, to set a low interest rate or charge no interest at all.

But except in some special circumstances, the IRS does not look kindly on below-market or no-interest loans, especially if they take a form that looks like an attempt to dodge taxes.

If some doting grandparents wanted to make a large gift to a grandchild without incurring any gift taxes, for instance, they might "lend" the money to the grand-

Shelly Wallace scoffed at her scoffers and now has 40,000 lawyers, paralegals and clerks on her temporary employment rosters.

Founder of temporary agency for lawyers had timing just right

By Diane Scarponi
Associated Press

HARTFORD, Conn. — For attorney and entrepreneur Shelley Wallace, the recession could not have come at a better time.

After sending her twin boys off to kindergarten, Wallace set out in 1987 to establish a temporary legal employment agency for working mothers, like herself, who did not want to put in 12 or 14 hours a day at the office.

Wallace got the last laugh — twice.

Her firm, Wallace Law Registry, capitalized on recession-driven cutbacks in corporate legal departments to grow from an office above a gas station into a 13-city company with more than 40,000 lawyers, paralegals and clerks on its roster.

And in May, the multimillion-dollar firm was acquired for an undisclosed sum by Kelly Services of Troy, Mich., the big temporary employment company.

"Lawyers are in many ways the quintessential temporary — they work for client for a certain period of time, then look for another client, or have many clients they work for," said Eugene L. Hartwig, senior vice president and general counsel for Kelly.

Wallace, who remains president of the company she founded,

Concentration or diversification?

By John Cunniff
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — One of the major philosophical considerations in the evolving world of electronic communications is whether the flow of information is destined to become more concentrated or more diversified.

Both sides of the issues can be argued, and probably will be, for the next few decades, as movie producers, telephone companies, cable companies, software innovators, news outlets, manufacturers and others blend their ideas.

The merger this week of The Walt Disney Co. and Capital Cities/ABC, and the day-later announcement from Westinghouse that it was buying CBS, would suggest that the information flow would become more tightly controlled.

At the same time, however, the development of computer software and the opening of the Internet to millions of nonprofessional users means direct access to incredibly rich information sources never before available.

To try forecasting the outcome is to venture into a world as yet not created, one that is still but a vision in the minds of the players in spite of their willingness to gamble multibillions of corporate dollars.

There are some clues to how the future will evolve, and one emerges from the experience of the past. It tells us that grand schemes to grow and control often do not work out as envisioned. Divestitures often follow acquisitions.

While that frequently happened during the conglomeration days of the 1970s, it doesn't necessarily follow that the fate of information mergers is the same. For one thing, the information companies have much more in common.

Nevertheless, size has its problems, and experience shows that one of the first to show up is the inability of management to deal with a diversity of businesses which, however neatly tied together, require different talents.

Size raises it ponderous head in another way also. Great expectations and claims of synergy are sometimes followed by disillusionment when the acquired company, an entrepreneurial creation, loses vitality in a bureaucratic morass.

The two possibilities — concentration and diversification — may continue to fight it out to no clear cut decision, both existing side by side, each with a segment of the industry. Who can say? Management cannot. Maybe the consumer?

The hectic activity occurring throughout the electronics and information world — not just mergers, but the incredible inventiveness that results in an outpouring of new products and an upgrad-

Compounding — the time has come to explore options

By John Cunniff
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — The sense of discovery probably is never more exquisite than when a new generation stumbles upon an age-old truth.

It is happening today, or at least it should be happening, because in one of those ancient verities may be the solution to some of our most pressing financial problems. Such as, for example, retirement planning.

The problem, as today's young people are coming to realize, is that Social Security is not a sure thing, since it could very well run out of money by the year 2013. The solution - yes, solution - could be compound interest.

Did you know that a 20-year-old earning $12,580 a year could become a millionaire in retirement if allowed to invest $30 a week tax-free at 8 percent a year, a rate well within the long-term average for stock market returns?

But, you say, $30 a week is a hefty sum for someone making $240 a week or thereabouts. Yes, it is. But it is no larger than the amount now paid by that person into the Social Security fund that may go broke.

True, inflation would drastically

How to survive on the Corporate Playing Field

By Leslie Gornstein
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

FORT WORTH — A top manager resigns, and the sharks begin circling.

'You look great today,' you hear a colleague tell the boss. 'That suit is so-o-o-o chic. By the way, who's getting Tom's corner office?'

Ah, the available corner office. The prime parking spot. That key management position.

All can spark a round of office politics — those games the white-collar world has loved to play ever since the first caveman rolled two boulders together and called it an office.

But those games can also turn out to be destructive, dividing loyalties and paralyzing a company.

The question is: Should you join in or stay on the sidelines?

The advice from consultants and career planners is straight to the point: Stay out of office politics unless you're willing to risk your job.

But, oh, the temptation to join the melee.

Brad Smith of the employment consulting firm Drake Beam Morin says the urge to get involved in the office "cause du jour" can be overwhelming.

"That is human nature," he says. "There are going to be office politics in the majority of corporate cultures."

But you can learn something from those who have become wartime casualties.

Here are some examples of some common office scenarios, plus some advice on how to handle such prickly situations.

EYES ON THE PRIZE

Michael Magill of KBK Capital recalls fondly the corner office he almost had during his days at MCorp, the defunct Dallas banking company.

"They came to me and said, 'This guy wants a corner office,' and I had been given one," Magill says. "I said, 'Fine, let him have it — if I can have this middle office that has a lot more space.' "

Magill's response showed both grace and tact. But not everyone would do the same.

In many businesses, the mere mention of an available corner office, key parking space or other perks, is enough to bring out the worst in coworkers.

Legal counseling and other professions are notorious for fights over corner offices, Magill says.

"The developers know it, too," Magill says. "Look at Dallas. Why do you think all the buildings look so weird over there? They build buildings in octagons so people can have corner offices."

Paul Lazzaro, who heads a Fort Worth advertising and public relations firm, remembers a former Hall of Fame football star employed by the Marriott hotel chain.

"He had, like, a full-fledged campaign to get a reserved park-

Make politics pleasant

FORT WORTH — Play nice. It's inevitable. You talk about your co-workers. They talk about you. Here's some advice from career and human resources consultants on how to make office politics more pleasant — and less damaging — for everyone.

★ DON'T FIGHT IT. If you find yourself a possible target of politics-related layoffs, take the hit. Do you really want to work for a company that doesn't want you?

★ DO SOME WORK FOR A CHANGE. Avoid spreading rumors within the office environment or with coworkers in a social situation. If you need to let off steam or spin a must-hear yarn, do it with a friend who doesn't work with you.

★ PICK A SIDE. Or don't. Advice varies on whether to forge alliances in an inter-office power struggle. The general consensus: If you don't really care about the players, lay low. If you want to take a stand, be sure it's for something or someone you believe in ... the effort may cost you your job.

★ DON'T COMPLAIN. You'd be surprised at the number of bosses who won't tolerate griping about peers. Broach a problem only if it immediately threatens productivity and even then, bring along your own suggestions for solutions.

★ AND THE ULTIMATE DANGER ... DO NOT date coworkers, advisers say. It provides too much fuel for workplace ire.

Interview process takes video turn as companies begin new trend

By L.M. Sixel
Houston Chronicle

The old college interview has gone high tech. Instead of spending lots of money for plane tickets, pricey hotels and restaurant meals, more and more company recruiters are interviewing students without leaving their offices.

They're using relatively inexpensive video technology that lets them sit at their desks and talk to prospective new hires at colleges across the nation.

Sometimes the students study at remote universities that are difficult to reach. Other times, an employer is interested in interviewing only a handful of candidates from a particular school. Colleges are driving the bus on the new technology. They're eager to help students find jobs when they graduate, and they figure video interviewing is the wave of the future.

One company alone, Viewnet of Madison, Wis., has sold video-interview equipment and software to more than 70 schools.

Colleges are finding that the equipment increases their chances of getting interviews for their students. "Not many companies want to fly up (to a remote school in Michigan) in the dead of winter," said Jill Nowicki, manager of sales support and administration for Viewnet.

Video interviewing is an economical way to find employees, Nowicki said.

"It's wonderful," said Karen Stauffacher, director of the career center at the University of Wisconsin, one of the first schools to install the video equipment. "It will revolutionize the way we do business."

When Stauffacher began to investigate video interviewing three years ago, the university could not afford the $30,000 price tag. But when the cost of the equipment dropped to about $5,000, Stauffacher leaped on the idea.

Many recruiters still come on campus to shake the hands of nervous graduates, but more students are meeting employers on computer screens. The employer and student can see each other, and they can pass documents back and forth.

Sometimes employers need just one new face, so they use the video network to screen out candidates, Stauffacher said.

For example, a bank in New York City called late one afternoon to say it needed a marketing intern. Stauffacher faxed some resumes to the company and by early the next week, bank officials had interviewed five students by video. They chose two promising candidates, flew them to New York for in-depth interviews and hired one of them.

At other times, only a handful of people graduate at one time in a speciality like real estate or distribution management. In the past, some interviewers canceled their scheduled visits because of a shortage of applicants, Stauffacher said. Now they use video technology to interview them.

Some hand-tying, tax protected annuities may affect retirement accounts

N.Y. Times News Service

Q: My question involves the appropriateness of annuities in a retirement account. Both I and my brother in North Carolina have been approached with this concept. Retirement accounts already are tax-protected, so they do not need the tax protection of an annuity. An annuity ties the investor's hands for several years and for that reason could be inappropriate. I do not need life insurance, which is another aspect of annuities. What do you think? —C.F., Glendale, Calif.

A: In general, I agree that annuities, specifically, variable annuities, don't make sense in a retirement account such as a 401(k) plan or individual retirement account. Variable annuities essentially are mutual funds wrapped in an insurance blanket, which gives them a tax-sheltering edge: earnings and interest compound tax free until withdrawn. Annuities carry insurance-related costs that regular mutual funds don't bear. So why not use funds inside retirement plans, which provide tax shelter anyway?

That's the consensus argument, and it makes sense. Yet some variable annuities cost less than certain mutual funds. Inexpensive choices include annuities from T. Rowe Price (1-800-469-5304), Scudder (1-800-225-2470) and Vanguard (1-800-522-5555), for which the yearly insurance costs add just $5.50 to $7 or so for each $1,000 invested.

Incidentally, the insurance component on annuities doesn't provide traditional life insurance but does protect your account balance and income stream under some scenarios.

Q: Is there a mutual fund that is based solely on insider transactions? —R.B., Phoenix

A: I don't know of any funds that select stocks based on the buying and selling of insiders, that is, a company's top executives and directors. Yet many fund managers like to invest in firms in which the leaders have a big ownership stake, under the theory that this better aligns their interests with that of shareholders.

Insider buying is typically viewed as a vote of confidence in a company. But insider selling isn't necessarily negative because execs may need to sell shares to raise cash for all sorts of personal reasons.

TECHNOLOGY: New users young, computer literate

ing of old — is all consumer-driven.

In short, while not absolute ruler of the marketplace the consumer might still be king. The consumer must be listened to and must be pleased or else it is no sale. The products envisioned must please a varied audience.

More than incidentally, that audience is not homogeneous. It could require a diversity of products better served by thousands of small companies rather than a few large ones. Witness the growth of the Internet.

Among the attributes of the Internet are diversity of sources, direct access to data and interactivity, and millions of new users over the past year suggest that these qualities are greatly appreciated.

A further check reveals that many new users are young, computer-bright and in synch with a rapidly evolving world. But will their interest wane with age? Will they, like their parents, prefer well-packaged, TV-type information?

The point is that nobody today can say which will prevail. The old signals can't be relied upon and the new ones might contain surprises.

Consider what has happened in investing.

Provided with more information than ever before, offered more stocks in which to invest than ever before, equipped with computers that can buy and sell at the flick of a finger — investors today have opted for mutual funds.

The latter, which offer packaged portfolios, relieving investors of choosing individual stocks, have become the investment growth product of the decade. Meanwhile, households have become net sellers of stocks.

child at no interest, and then let the grandchild "default" on the loan.

"The IRS expects the loan to be repaid," says KPMG Peat Marwick. "If it isn't, the money will be considered a gift."

When you make a loan to a family member, you can certainly save the borrower money by reducing or eliminating the fees a bank or other financial institution might charge, and setting an interest rate your relative might not be able to get from any institutional lender.

But the rate must be at least as high as the so-called applicable federal rate set and published monthly by the IRS, based on prevailing market interest rates. Otherwise, you will face the question of "imputed interest."

Under this principle, the tax authorities consider interest at least equal to the applicable federal rate to have been incurred by the borrower and received by the lender, whether it was actually paid or not.

Notes the J.K. Lasser Institute in the 1995 edition of its Your Income Tax guide, "as a lender, you are taxable on the 'forgone interest,' that is, the interest that you would have received had you charged interest at the applicable federal rate over any interest actually charged."

The borrower, meanwhile, may or may not be able to take a corresponding deduction for interest paid. If it counts as personal interest instead of mortgage interest, business interest or investment interest, it ordinarily qualifies for no deduction.

"The requirements and potential tax consequences of intrafamily loans can be complex," KPMG Peat Marwick concludes. "Their structure should be carefully considered, in light of your overall financial situation."

COMPOUND: At 8-percent, investment doubles in nine years reduce the buying power of that sum to perhaps $250,000 from a nominal $1.3 billion, but it still would be enough to buy an annuity at age 65 that would pay $18,256 a year.

These amounts would be in "real," not inflated dollars. Forty-five years of future inflation at an anticipated three or four percent a year has been wrung out of them to give the same buying power as today's dollar.

Sam Beard, a former staff associate of Sen. Robert Kennedy, now chairman of the National Development Council, offers these figures as an antidote to all the fears and frustrations now being expressed about Social Security.

Beard is convinced that private accounts, managed for individuals as part of a new Social Security concept that would cost no more than the present setup, could more than solve retirement needs.

He is so convinced of this, and so enthusiastic about the possibilities, that he call his new book, to be published this fall by the Institute For Contemporary Studies, "100 Million Millionaires."

In the meantime, he maintains in an article for The Heritage Foundation's "Policy Review" from which these figures were drawn, that the potential disaster of Social Security today could be turned into the triumph of tomorrow.

To wit:

"By making every American a capitalist, a funded Social Security system would unleash new economic growth, raise the living standards of our children, and return America to its historic role as the country of tomorrow."

It would rely on small investments, time and compounding, the value of which have been known since man learned to count beads and beans and shuffle them around, but you don't hear much about them today.

But, like art treasures forgotten in some old warehouse, they are as valuable today as before and probably more so, considering what they can do for a generation that must depend increasingly on its own resources.

Because of their inherent value and the challenges of the times, a renewed appreciation is evident in the popular and professional media. And the crises or potential crises in Social Security and Medicare add to the concern.

In contrast, however, you have Wall Street and the short-term mentality. While it has been shown that time and compounding are as valuable, for example, as the stock dividend yield, the notion is rarely promoted.

The securities industry is largely commission-driven, which means that the greater the trading action, the greater its income. The emphasis is on short-term trading, not long-term investing.

Compounding takes time. It is like an old steam locomotive that strains to get moving but eventually charges down the track with unrestrained power, its momentum enhancing the power of its engines.

At 8 percent an investment doubles in nine years, but it more than doubles in the next nine because interest as well as original investment compounds. Eventually, annual interest earned exceeds the original investment.

It's how the early investors in McDonald's, H & R Block and Microsoft became millionaires, and how investors in many tiny companies today will find themselves among the larger shareholders in big companies 20 years from now.

It is the success secret of the Mutual Investment Club of Detroit, begun in World War II with monthly investments of $10 or so, but which in later years funded businesses, homes, education, charities, travel and retirements.

CORPORATE: CEOs must clearly state what they expect from their managers

(From 4C)

ing space," Lazzaro says.

But he would have done better to spend more time at his computer, Lazzaro says, because such plums were awarded in direct correlation to the number of memos a staffer could write.

Magill says he is "floored that someone has the chutzpah to say they deserve this or that."

His advice: Don't ask for a thing.

He compares the number of favors granted by bosses to airline frequent flier miles.

"You only have a certain number of miles you can use," he says. "Later on, (a boss) may say, 'You were a pain in the rear to me, and now I am too tired to deal with you."

I SPY ...

But what happens when colleagues turn on one another to make points with the boss?

"I remember somebody who reported her boss was taking kickbacks, and this was not true," Lazzaro says. "She was trying to get his job.

"Eventually, he was exonerated. She ... left the company of her own volition."

But the incident caused a blizzard of gossip, he says.

Lazzaro recommends that employees caught between two warring factions be forthright.

"I come down on the side of the person I think is right," he says.

But Marc Silbert, a spokesman for the New York-based staffing for OfficeTeam, says that unless employees are willing to risk their jobs they should avoid confrontations and keep their mouths and ears shut.

"No matter what you do, avoid the rumor mill, and any situation that doesn't involve you directly," he says. "Never be in a position of confirming or denying a rumor. Try to be above it.

"Don't try to succomb to the Dark Side of the Force. You can be seduced very easily by gossip."

Another executive recalls more a high-tech game played by a coworker in an office where everyone was hooked into a centralized personal computer system.

This middle manager would log onto the system using other people's names in order to spy on them. Of particular interest: whether the person was playing a computer game instead of massaging spreadsheets or typing memos.

"He used it as a tool to irritate other peers," says the executive, who asked not to be named. "That manager would report it to a very high executive, and he would report it to personnel."

But the office spy may find that telling tales can backfire.

Ben Gunn, vice chairman of Summit Bancshares in Fort Worth says: "If someone come to me and tells me some dirt on someone, it infuriates the hell out of me."

POWER PLAYS

Add a new CEO to the office mix, and you're likely to see a pageant of managers trying to catch his eye.

That's what happened at a Fort Worth company back in the '80s when an acquisition forced an old guard of department heads to mingle with a new cadre of similar, middle-rank executives.

"That led to a lot of tension and friction among the executives," says one executive, who requested anonymity because he was a member of the management team. "You ended up fighting for control ... who would curry favor with the new CEO."

For the head of the finance department, a member of the old guard, the tactic was simple.

"He was reponsible for the cash-flow numbers, but he would not share information with the other managers," the executive says. "He held onto them tight."

The only person he showed them to was the CEO, a member of the new group of managers.

That didn't sit well with his colleagues, who believed they needed to see the numbers for their own management purposes, preferably BEFORE the CEO saw them.

The offender was eventually confronted by his peers, led by two members of the highly defensive old guard.

"I'm not going to give them to you," he told them. "It is the only thing that matters to this guy; I have got to have my showing in front of this guy."

Silbert says this is the kind of situation where the chief executive has to assert control.

"The job of the CEO is to take action," he says.

The chief executive should have informally discussed the matter at the next meeting of the department heads and insisted that the information be shared, he says.

The executive who was inolved in this particular drama agrees.

"It is important that the CEO clearly enunciates what he expects from his managers, what kinds of cooperation he expects and that he won't tolerate office politics," he says. "That if it happens, you're gonna get fired."

TEMPS: Early adaptability made registry successful remembers in the early days "people saying this was a Fulton's Folly kind of thing."

(From 4C)

She wasn't the only one on the receiving end of the derision.

Lesley Friedman, president of Special Counsel International of New York, who also founded her temporary legal staffing firm in 1987, recalled, "People said, 'You're crazy. No one's going to hire temporary lawyers.' They thought all temporary lawyers were bag people."

Wallace, 44, was born in New York and grew up in New Rochelle, N.Y. She graduated from Brown University in 1973 with a degree in American Studies, and got her law degree in 1977 from Hofstra University.

She practiced commercial and appellate litigation in Manhattan before taking time off in 1981 to care for her newborn twins.

When she returned to work six years later, she decided other working mothers might like to practice law on a part-time basis. She started Wallace Law Registry.

As it turned out, most of her first job applicants were men, many of them burning out from working long hours. Wallace also found she had chosen a perfect time to start the company: A recession was under way, and there were big changes in the way law firms had been traditionally run.

Law firms and corporate legal departments were being squeezed to cut costs. Firms appointed fewer partners, while corporations for the first time turned their red pens to legal departments to cut costs.

The workload did not decrease, however, and the demand for temporary legal help increased.

"A corporation has to be flexible, to staff with exactly the expertise needed at that time. Temporary workers do that — allow you to turn on a dime," Wallace said.

Still, the idea of temporary legal help was so new, law firms and corporations were hesitant to embrace the registry.

Many clients sought temporary paralegals or clerks, and asked for help in finding permanent placements. Although Wallace had not planned to offer these services, she quickly tried to provide what was needed.

She said this early adaptability is what made the registry successful; other companies provided various kinds of help, but "no one had really combined it in one place."

Most of Wallace's staff are experienced, specialized lawyers who have chosen temporary employment for a variety of reasons.

Many failed to reach partner status after a long time in a firm, while others were laid off, have shirked the law firm environment, or want to work part time to spend more time with their families.

Wallace Law Registry lawyers can make six-figure salaries, and are often hired by their temporary employer.

The company has branches in Hartford and Stamford, Conn.; Boston; New York; Newark, N.J.; Philadelphia; Washington, D.C.; Norfolk, Va.; Miami, Detroit; Chicago; Minneapolis and Los Angeles.

With Kelly's resources behind it, Wallace Law Registry plans to expand to Atlanta and Pittsburgh by the end of the year and then go overseas.

"Because our growth has been doubling every year, we needed more and more capital to grow," Wallace said of the deal with Kelly.

For Kelly, the acquisition of Wallace Law Registry means the company can expand its line of services into more high-end professions, Hartwig said. It also has engineers and accountants on its rolls.

The earnings of temporary professionals, including lawyers, doctors and managers, has more than doubled since studies on their earnings began in 1991, said Bruce Steinberg, spokesman for the National Association of Temporary and Staffing Services.

In 1994, they made $1.2 billion — nearly 5 percent of the temporary industry's total $24.7 billion payroll.

Steinberg predicted professional temporary employment will grow as more professionals shun the fast lane and fewer expect to stay with the same company throughout their careers.

Sears, Roebuck and Co. has used Wallace's firm since 1992 to supplement its corporate legal department in Chicago and recruit lawyers for its corporate team.

"It gives us better control of our fixed costs, to use their personnel to supplement our staff," said Jan Drummond, a company spokeswoman. "Our lawyers think their personnel do a fine job."

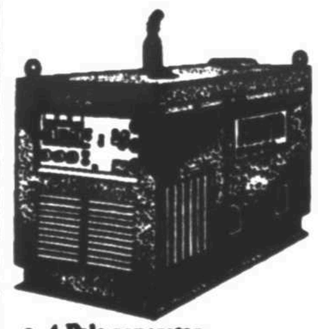

General Electric Co., based in Fairfield, has used the Wallace Law Registry's paralegals and junior lawyers for years to reduce its legal costs, spokesman Bruce Bunch said.

"The law profession is becoming more of a contract industry, in part because of the economy and in part because we have some great lawyers out there who want to be temps," said Friedman at Special Counsel International.

For Wallace, everything has turned out just right.

"It's been an exciting adventure," she said, "personally and professionally."

Bucs' Bell wins shortstop slugging duel

The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Pirates aren't very good now, and they haven't been good since 1992. Many players would be pleading for a trade to a contender, but Jay Bell prefers to stay.

Bell won a duel of homering shortstops and the Pirates, usually ineffective against left-handers, stopped Mike Hampton's six-game winning streak by beating the Houston Astros 6-3 Sunday.

Bell and Houston's Orlando Miller each homered twice as Pirates rookie right-hander Esteban Loaiza (7-5) outpitched Hampton for his first victory in six starts since the All-Star break.

"It shows you how smart I am," Pirates manager Jim Leyland said. "I was looking for a way to give (Bell) a day off."

Instead, Hampton (7-4) had an off day against a team that is only 9-20 against left-handers. Hampton allowed five earned runs on eight hits over six innings for his first loss in eight starts since June 18.

"I didn't have anything, really," Hampton said.

At times, the remarkably young Pirates look like they don't, either — such as their stretch of 13 losses in 15 games before Saturday's 3-1 victory.

But when one of the three rookie starters pitches well, as Loaiza did, and John Ericks did Saturday, a team carrying nearly as many rookies (12) as veterans (13) appears capable of rapid, dramatic improvement.

"You can say what you want about the Pittsburgh Pirates, but you look up and they're playing everybody tough," Astros manager Terry Collins said. "They've got good, young pitching and they're getting better."

Expos 6, Braves 2

MONTREAL — The Montreal Expos wasted little time giving Carlos Perez all the support he needed.

Montreal scored five runs in the first off Steve Avery and Perez went the distance as the Expos beat the Braves, stopping a five-game losing skid.

"That's how you win games, making big pitches to big hitters," said Expos manager Felipe Alou. "Carlos pitched great. I guess that's what it takes to beat the Braves."

Perez (10-3) gave up two runs on seven hits to end Atlanta's four-game winning string. He struck out four and walked two in his second complete game.

Mets 7, Marlins 3

NEW YORK — Florida's longest winning streak ever ended at eight games when Jeff Kent and Rico Brogna hit home runs that gave New York Mets a victory.

The Mets stopped their five-game losing skid.

Brogna's solo home run put the Mets ahead 2-1 in the fifth. Kent's three-run homer came during a five-run sixth. Brogna and Kent each hit their 13th home runs of the season.

Padres 16, Rockies 8

DENVER — Archi Cianfrocco homered and tied a career-high with six RBIs as San Diego beat Colorado in a game featuring eight home runs.

Phil Plantier, who tied a career-best with four hits and drove in three runs, Ken Caminiti and Brad Ausmus also homered as the Padres set a season-high for scoring.

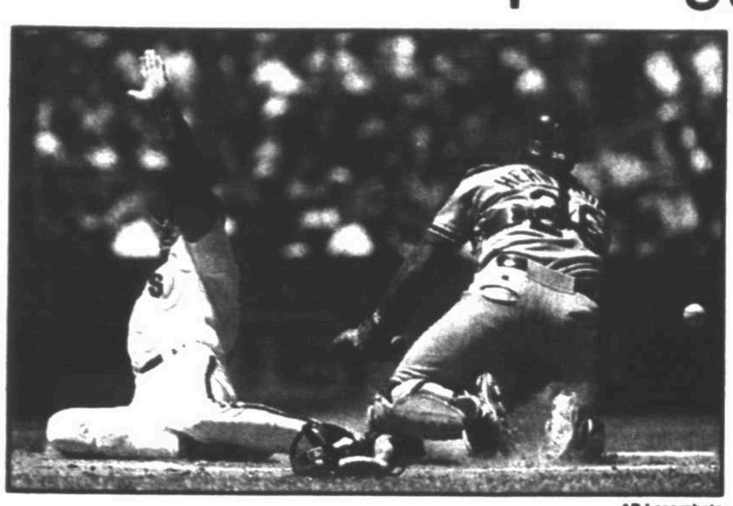

Jayhawk Owens homered twice for the Rockies and tied a career-high with four hits. Joe Girardi and Eric Young also connected for Colorado, which had won three in a row.

Dante Bichette, who had homered in five straight games for the Rockies, did not hit a home run, but extended his hitting streak to 18 games. Young has hit in 16 straight. The Padres finished with 19 hits and the Rockies had 12.

Cardinals 4, Cubs 3, 13 innings

ST. LOUIS — John Mabry faked a bunt, then singled through a drawn-in infield in the 13th inning as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Chicago Cubs 4-3 Sunday to avoid a three-game sweep.

Mabry, a rookie, had a career-best four hits for the Cardinals. Ramon Caraballo walked to start the 13th and Bernard Gilkey singled for his third hit before Mabry singled up the middle off Chris Nabholz (0-1).

San Francisco's Robby Thompson scores around the tag of Dodger catcher Carlos Hernandez at Candlestick Park Sunday.

Giants 3, Dodgers 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Mark Leiter pitched a five-hitter for his fourth complete game of the year and drove in a run with a groundout as San Francisco beat Los Angeles.

The Giants, shut out on one hit by Hideo Nomo on Saturday night, scored twice in the first inning against Ismael Valdes.

Leiter (7-6), who allowed a solo homer by Jose Offerman in the fifth, struck out 10 and walked two. Offerman's homer, his fourth, was one of only two hits off Leiter after the third inning.

Leiter, who has four of the Giants' seven complete games this season, has won four straight. He has a 4-1 record with a 1.70 ERA in his last six starts.

The Dodgers had two runners on in the first, but Leiter got Roberto Kelly to line to third to end the threat. They had two on in the seventh, but Leiter struck out Offerman for the third out.

Leiter struck out two batters in the first, seventh and eighth innings.

Reds 6, Phillies 1, 1st game

CINCINNATI — This is no Big Red Machine. It's just playing like one.

The Reds reached heights that have eluded them since the days of the Big Red Machine by sweeping the Philadelphia Phillies in a doubleheader Sunday. Pete Schourek pitched a three-hitter for a 6-1 win in the first game, and Reggie Sanders singled with the bases loaded in the 10th for a 2-1 victory.

The Reds swept their six-game homestand to move 27 games over .500 (59-32) for the first time since 1976, when Johnny Bench and Pete Rose were leading Cincinnati to a second consecutive World Series title.

There's no Bench, Rose, Morgan or Perez around, but the current lineup has a better winning percentage at the moment.

Pavlik comes back from blowout to beat Angels

The Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — It's safe to say that Roger Pavlik had a better outing Sunday against the California Angels than he did the last time he faced them.

Pavlik, who allowed seven runs in two-thirds of an inning of a 20-4 loss to the Angels on June 29, held California scoreless until the eighth inning Sunday in Texas' 5-2 victory.

"For four years here, everyone's been telling him that he can't do it," said Johnny Oates, in his first season of managing the Rangers. "I've told him, 'It's what we expect,' I also told him that if he gets into a good streak, we'll just leave him alone and let him do it his way."

Pavlik's way apparently doesn't include explanations. For the third start in a row, he declined to talk to reporters after the game. In those three games, Pavlik (6-6) has allowed only three runs in 22 2-3 innings, though he had to settle for no-decisions in the prior two outings.

Texas grabbed a 2-0 lead in the first inning when Lou Frazier bunted for a single and scored on a double by Will Clark. Luis Ortiz followed with an RBI single.

Brian Anderson (6-3) then kept the Rangers scoreless until the seventh, when Jeff Frye led off with a walk and took second on Esteban Beltre's sacrifice before scoring on a double by Otis Nixon. Frazier beat out a roller to short as Nixon held second, and the two engineered a double steal before Clark's sacrifice fly made it 4-0. Frye added a sacrifice fly in the eighth.

Mariners 15, Athletics 8

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Bill Krueger pitched well in place of the injured Randy Johnson and Mike Blowers hit another three-run homer as the Seattle Mariners beat the Oakland Athletics 15-8 Sunday.

The Mariners, who beat the A's 15-9 Saturday, matched their season-high in runs for the second straight game.

Royals 11, Twins 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Mark Gubicza pitched a four-hitter, retiring 21 in a row at one point, to lead Kansas City to an 11-1 victory over Minnesota.

The Royals hit a season-high five home runs and had 15 hits. Gary Gaetti's 23rd and 24th home runs gave him five in six games. He has 12 hits, five homers and 10 RBIs in 31 at-bats this season against his former team.

The Rangers' Lou Frazier lays down a successful bunt against California's Brian Anderson Sunday.

Tigers 6, Yankees 5

DETROIT — Derrick White's bases-loaded infield single with two outs in the 12th inning gave Detroit a victory over New York as the Tigers avoided a three-game sweep.

White's hit — his first RBI of the season — came after a hit batter, an error and an intentional walk loaded the bases with one out against Dave Eiland (1-1), the last of six Yankee pitchers.

Brewers 3, Orioles 2

BALTIMORE — Kevin Seitzer singled in the go-ahead run in the eighth inning and Milwaukee overcame a homer by Bobby Bonilla to beat Baltimore.

With the score 2-all, Jose Valentin opened the eighth with a single off Kevin Brown (5-7). Fernando Vina sacrificed, and Seitzer blooped a single to right to give the Brewers their second win of the three-game series.

White Sox 5, Indians 1

CLEVELAND — Dave Righetti won again in his remarkable rebirth as a starter, beating Cleveland and giving Chicago White its first victory in seven games at Jacobs Field.

With a steady wind blowing in from right-center field, the 36-year-old Righetti (3-0) limited baseball's best-hitting team to one run and six hits in five-plus innings.

Red Sox 6, Blue Jays 4

TORONTO — John Valentin had three hits, drove in three runs and gave Boston the lead with a two-run home run in the seventh inning to power the Red Sox to a 6-4 win over the Toronto Blue Jays on Sunday night.

Willie McGee drew a one-out walk in the seventh and Valentin followed with his 18th homer of the season, sending Edwin Hurtado's 0-1 pitch into the right-field bullpen.

NOMO: Pitcher's been at best against Giants batting. He outhit the Giants, singling twice and getting his first major-league RBI in the ninth.

(From 1C)

"I could have kept going like that for several more innings," he said through a translator. "I knew I hadn't allowed a hit, but I wasn't thinking about the no-hitter."

Nomo, who started for the NL in the All-Star game, has been at his best against the Giants.

He pitched five scoreless innings, allowing one hit and striking out seven, in his major-league debut at Candlestick Park on May 2. His first shutout came on June 24 in Los Angeles against the Giants, a two-hitter with 13 strikeouts.

Overall, Nomo has held the Giants to no runs and four hits in 23 innings, striking out 31.

"He has a very live fastball, and the fact that he hides the ball so well gives him an edge," Clayton said. "There are guys in the league that throw harder, but he is very deceptive."

Nomo's windup resembles that of former major leaguer Luis Tiant. He brings his hands way above his head, then twists his torso so his hands are hidden from the batter. Then he whips the ball toward the plate at up to 95 mph.

"You can't tell when it leaves his hand if it's a split-finger or a fastball. It looks the same," Giants manager Dusty Baker said. "You've got to wait just long enough to not swing at the bad split-fingers."

Nomo got stronger as the game progressed, striking out the side in the sixth, whiffing two each in the seventh and eighth innings and finishing the game by fanning Glenallen Hill.

He has struck out 10 or more batters in a game eight times this season. The only other Los Angeles Dodger to have at least eight games in a year with 10 or more strikeouts is Sandy Koufax, who did it six times.

In fact, the only thing that may have prevented Nomo from getting his no-hitter was a base-running gamble by Baker.

With Clayton at bat in the seventh, Baker decided to have Mark Carreon — who had walked — running on a 2-2 pitch. Clayton's grounder was backhanded by shortstop Jose Offerman in the hole, but the speedy Clayton beat the throw to first by a step.

"If he wasn't running, Nomo would have had a no-no," Baker said, "because Offerman would have thrown Carreon out at second base."

Traded Bonilla returns to N.Y. to face Yankees

BALTIMORE (AP) — Darryl Strawberry has already arrived, and here comes Bobby Bo.

Bobby Bonilla, traded by the New York Mets to the Baltimore Orioles on July 28, returns to the Big Apple on Monday to face New York's other team, the Yankees.

The three-game series matches contenders in the AL East. The Yankees have added David Cone and Strawberry in a bid to overtake first-place Boston, while the Orioles snared Bonilla to bolster their offense.

"Darryl is in town now, so the place will be rocking," Bonilla said.

He won't be nervous. Pressure, Bonilla claimed, is playing in Camden Yards in the wake of the Orioles' most publicized trade in years.

"I think I'm more nervous here in this ballpark," he said before Sunday's home game against Milwaukee. "The fans have been simply marvelous. Besides, I'm already used to the New York atmosphere. I'm not worried."

The series is critical to the Orioles, whose struggles of late have left them looking up at the second-place Yankees.

Flutie, field goals give Clagary win

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Doug Flutie ran 9 yards for a touchdown and Mark McLoughlin kicked five field goals Sunday as the Calgary Stampeders remained unbeaten with a 29-15 victory over the Baltimore Stallions.

The game matched the top teams in the CFL's North and South divisions, but was hardly a display of stellar football as the teams combined for nine turnovers on the rain-slick turf.

Calgary (6-0) extended its regular-season winning streak at McMahon Stadium to 27 games. Baltimore, which beat Edmonton 19-12 on Wednesday, fell to 5-2.

All of the Stallions' points, except for singles off missed field goals from Carlos Huerta, were the result of Calgary turnovers.

Calgary's PeeWee Smith fumbled the opening kickoff and Huerta kicked a field goal three plays later. Charles Anthony intercepted a Flutie pass to set up Mike Pringle's 3-yard TD run. A fumble by fullback Shawn Daniels led to another Huerta field goal.

Tony Stewart scored Calgary's first touchdown on a 3-yard run but fumbled on the Stallions' 3-yard-line to end another drive.

Flutie ran 9 yards for a TD one play after a goal-line interception by Kareem Bacon was called back because of a Stallions penalty.

Orlando rookie Mark Orlando caught a second-quarter Tracy Ham pass and was all alone and running for a TD but dropped the ball and the Stampeders recovered.

Johnson legacy hangs over 100

■ Track and Field Championships

GOTEBORG, Sweden (AP) — The spectre of Ben Johnson hung over the 100 meters at the World Championships on Sunday.

There was no drug scandal this time, just the bitter memory of the disgrace Johnson once brought on Canada's track program after countrymen Donovan Bailey and Bruny Surin led a 1-2 sweep in the men's 100.

Bailey, like Johnson, the disgraced 1987 world champion and 1988 Olympic gold medalist, was born in Jamaica. And like Johnson, he is big, strong and muscular.

But in contrast to the sullen and soft-spoken Johnson, Bailey is personable and outgoing. And Bailey wants nothing to do with Johnson.

"We don't answer questions about Ben Johnson," the 27-year-old Bailey said. "Bruny wasn't running when Ben Johnson was running, and neither was I."

Since Johnson was stripped of his Olympic and World Championships gold medals after testing positive for steroids at the Seoul Games, drug testing in Canada has stiffened considerably.

Ray Flynn, Bailey's manager, said the new world champion has been tested at least 15 times since last November.

This was the first time two Canadians had made a 100-meter final in the Olympics or World Championships since 1988, when Johnson and Desai Williams were the participants. And it was the first time they had swept the gold and silver medals at either.

With Mike Marsh finishing fifth, it was the first time the U.S. team failed to medal in the 100 at a major championship since the 1976 Olympics.

Meanwhile, Gail Devers, finally healthy after a series of injuries, skimmed to her second straight world title in the women's 100-meter hurdles.

Devers, clocking 12.68, beat Kazakhstan's Olga Shishigina, the world leader and unbeaten in 10 finals this year, by some two meters after taking command at the sixth hurdle.

Donovan Bailey crosses the finish line to win the men's 100-meters at the 5th World Track and Field Championships in Sweden Sunday.

Devers relished being the underdog.

"Coming into the meet, I wasn't favored," she said. "But if I wanted to find something (to motivate her), I could look back at 1993."

Italy's Fiona May won the women's long jump with a wind-aided 22 feet, 10 3/4 inches. A struggling Jackie Joyner-Kersee, the 1987 and 1991 champion, finished sixth with a wind-aided 22-1 1/2. Germany's Heike Drechsler, the 1983 and 1993 winner, failed to make the final.

Afterward, Bob Kersee, Joyner-Kersee's husband and coach, withdrew his wife from the heptathlon because of her poor physical condition. She was the world champion in 1987 and 1993, the Olympic champion in 1988 and 1992, and is the world record-holder.

In Sunday's other finals, Tajikistan's Andrey Abduvaliyev won his second consecutive hammer throw title with at 267-7, and Italy's Michele Didono took the men's 20-kilometer walk in a career-best 1 minute, 19: 59 seconds.

American sprint coach Ron Bazil ruled out asking Michael Johnson, saying he already has enough to do with the 200, 400 and 1,600 relay, and would use Tony McCall, a 21-year-old with no international experience.

Johnson, the defending champion in the 400, won his second-round heat, as did fellow Americans Butch Reynolds, the world record-holder, and Darnell Hall.

Daluiso field goals down Browns

CLEVELAND (AP) — Brad Daluiso kicked four field goals before Keith Elias scored on a 12-yard run as the New York Giants dominated defensively through three quarters to beat the Cleveland Browns 19-13 Sunday in the exhibition opener for both teams.

Dave Brown efficiently led the Giants on two ball-control drives before leaving in the second quarter with an injured right elbow. Precautionary X-rays confirmed the injury was just a bruise.

Cleveland rookie Eric Zeier led two Cleveland touchdown drives in the fourth quarter, the second capped by a 32-yard touchdown pass to Rico Smith.

Brown completed 5-of-12 passes for 63 yards and ran for 28 more.

Injured Giants' running back Rodney Hampton was not available, so New York opened with an 18-play, 64-yard drive featuring 10-year veteran Herschel Walker. Walker signed as a free agent after playing the last three seasons with the Philadelphia Eagles.

Walker gained 19 yards on six carries, including a 2-yard plunge on a fourth-and-1 to keep the first series going.

After Brown failed to connect with Thomas Lewis in the end zone, Daluiso was good from 33 yards out.

Late in the first quarter, Brown started the Giants on a 12-play, 62-yard drive that concluded early in the second quarter with Daluiso's 36-yarder.

New York took advantage of good field position after Lewis returned a Tom Tupa punt 9 yards to Cleveland's 39, and Kent Graham moved the Giants 28 yards in eight plays to set up a Daluiso 29-yarder.

Lewis withdrawals from Championships

GOTEBORG, Sweden (AP) — Carl Lewis withdrew from the World Championships on Sunday, blaming a hamstring injury for keeping him out of both the long jump and the 400 relay.

The 34-year-old American, who won eight gold medals and 10 in all at the previous four Worlds, announced his decision at a news conference after days of speculation since he arrived in Goteborg.

"This is it for the season," said Lewis, who first injured his left hamstring in the long jump at the Olympic Festival at Colorado Springs, eight days ago.

"I just finished a workout and my leg feels a lot better," Lewis added. "But I talked to coach (Tom) Tellez about how I feel now and I'm not going to compete at all. I would have loved to long jump but it appears risking injury would ruin my chances for next year. He's my coach, I respect his decision.

"I feel pretty good. I want to run. I'm emotional, that's me," said Lewis, who also has eight Olympic gold medals for sprints and long jumps.

"Coach Tellez thinks it would be putting too much strain on the leg."

Lewis said the risk of aggravating the injury in the long jump was too great.

"Just to say I'll wing it, that won't fly," he said. "It's a tough decision but it's the right decision."

With Lewis unavailable, the U.S. team has to make more changes to the 400 relay squad.

Because world record holder Leroy Burrell and Andre Cason failed to qualify for the championships, the Americans hoped to rely on Dennis Mitchell, Jon Drummond, Maurice Greene and Mike Marsh.

But Mitchell pulled up with a leg muscle injury barely 50 meters into his first 100 meters heat and is out.

"The four choices now are Greene, Drummond, Marsh and (Tony) McCall," said U.S. sprints coach Ron Bazil.

Adams: Oilers to leave 'Dome

HOUSTON (AP) — The 1997 NFL season will be the last one the Houston Oilers play in the Astrodome, according to team owner Bud Adams.

Adams says he's not threatening to take the Oilers out of town if he doesn't get a new stadium when the current lease ends, but he's not saying he'll stay in Houston either.

Adams distributed a prepared statement late Saturday about the stadium controversy after his Oilers dropped their preseason opener 16-13 to the Arizona Cardinals at the Astrodome. The crowd was announced at 42,424, about two-thirds of capacity.

"We have repeatedly stated the Astrodome has reached the twilight of its useful life as a playing site for NFL football," Adams said. "No amount of physical changes or lease concessions would be acceptable to the Oilers or any other NFL franchise."

The Houston Chronicle last week reported Adams contacted Houston Mayor Bob Lanier by letter and issued an ultimatum that either the city build a new stadium or he'll leave with his football team.

Lanier has said the city doesn't have the money.

Adams noted that if the Oilers remain in the Astrodome, they would be in the second-smallest and fourth-oldest NFL stadium, the only team playing in a stadium designed for baseball and the only one controlled and operated by a competitive major league sports team — the Astros.

"The sum total is that the Oilers would be relegated to a vastly inferior position in the NFL," Adams wrote.

coach, had McNair dizzy with the Cardinals' attacking defense.

"He (McNair) won't be tested in the preseason like he was today," Oilers coach Jeff Fisher said. "He has a lot of ability but he made a few mistakes. He bobbled a few center exchanges and got a safety, but he nearly broke a lot of runs."

Overshadowed by McNair's spotty beginning, Case was relishing in his early NFL success.

"I thought I played pretty well except for a couple of mistakes," Case said. "The first mistake was just stupid, the second mistake I was just in the wrong place. But the thought never crossed my mind we'd lose the game because of those mistakes."

Case threw an interception and lost a fumble in the fourth quarter. But he was 5-for-8 for 95 yards, the biggest pass going to Kevin Knox for the go-ahead touchdown.

"To come out and do fairly well with just a few mistakes, helps my confidence," Case said. "I feel I belong up here. A game like this definitely doesn't hurt you."

McNair fumbled in the end zone and recovered the ball for a Cardinals safety with 9: 33 elapsed in the third quarter, giving the Cardinals a 9-7 lead.

"The ball just kept slipping out of my hands, that's never happened to me before," he said. "I just kept making mental mistakes and errors that I know I can correct. A lot of it was just nervousness, from playing in my first preseason game."

McNair completed a 17-yard pass to Chris Sanders on his second possession of the third quarter that led to a 52-yard field goal by Al Del Greco, who also had a 43-yarder in the fourth quarter.

Arizona's Dave Krieg and Houston's Chris Chandler are the new starting quarterbacks for each team. Krieg completed a 19-yard touchdown pass to Frank Sanders and was 8-for-11 for 106 yards. Chandler hit three of five passes for 68 yards.

"Bjornson is a player," Dallas coach Barry Switzer said. "We'll be using him a lot this year. He fits into our offense nicely."

Kevin Williams, who is expected to take over the wide receiver spot vacated by free agent Alvin Harper, caught four passes for 58 yards.

"I thought Kevin had one of his best games," Switzer said. "He's going to do the job for us."

Cory Fleming, who will be used as a third receiver, caught three passes for 41 yards.

"Cory keeps showing flashes," Switzer said. "He dropped one ball. He has to be more consistent."

Fleming agreed.

"Any time a receiver touches a ball he's supposed to catch it," Fleming said. "It's still the preseason, I'll get better."

Fifth-round pick Ed Hervey caught two passes for 25 yards and averaged 25 yards on five kickoff returns.

"I have to keep improving," he said. "I think I keep getting better every week."
