Ex-hostage clung to anger

■ Robert Polhill is reunited with his Lebanese wife in Damascus and flown to Wiesbaden, West Germany, as President Bush calls for the release of all hostages.

By Neil MacFarquhar

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — A gaunt, pale Robert Polhill was freed Sunday by pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem militants in Beirut after 1,182 days as a hostage, and he said his anger kept him alive.

The Iranian foreign minister was quoted as saying the Shiite movements in Lebanon wanted a prompt reciprocal move for freeing Polhill, but President Bush said he would make no deals with the kidnappers.

■ Hostage's mother overjoyed; readjustment ahead/3A, 2D

An Iranian newspaper close to Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani said today that the Lebanese kidnappers should release another American hostage immediately without conditions.

Polhill was the first American hostage to be released in nearly 3½ years.

Polhill, 55, of New York, was freed near the seaside Summerland Hotel in Moslem west Beirut at 5:15 p.m. Sunday (11:15 a.m. EDT) and driven immediately to Damascus where he was turned over to U.S. Ambassador Edward Djerejian.

"I want to tell you I'm a very happy man tonight," Polhill told a news conference in Damascus, looking dazed but elated. "I'm am sorry I kept you waiting so long. Thirty-nine months is a long time."

Early today, he and his Lebanese wife, Feryal, took off from the Syrian capital in a U.S. Air Force C-141 plane for Weisbaden, West Germany.

In Weisbaden, Polhill will undergo medical checks and a debriefing by U.S. intelligence officers at a U.S. military hospital. Other American captives freed in the past have also gone there.

Bush thanked Syria and Iran for their roles in freeing Polhill, and called for the release of all the hostages. He said the United States would make no deals with hostage takers.

Iran's foreign minister, Ali Akbar Velayati, was quoted early Monday as saying the pro-Iranian extremists in Lebanon wanted a quick reciprocal move. The official Syrian Arab News Agency, quoting Velayati in New York, specified the release of Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid, a Lebanese Shiite clergyman, abducted by Israeli soldiers in July.

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Lyndon Johnson didn't steal the 1948 U.S. Senate election, as a recent biography contends, but a political boss might have rigged the election to "get" Johnson's opponent, says a former Johnson aide.

Johnson

Dr. Joe B. Frantz, former chair of the history department at the University of Texas, contends the election was stolen for Johnson, possibly without his knowledge, by a disgruntled South Texas political boss eager to derail Johnson's opponent, Coke Stevenson.

Johnson won the election by 87 votes out of almost a million cast, collecting 99 percent of the South Texas vote.

Soviets disagree

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. (AP) — A senior Communist official from Moscow said Sunday the Lithuanian independence movement is leading the republic to catastrophe, and denied the Kremlin has imposed a total economic blockade.

The Sajudis independence movement, whose leaders dominate Lithuania's government, declared its determination to stand by the March 11 declaration of independence.

However, in Tokyo, Soviet reformer Yuri Afanasyev condemned his nation's economic sanctions against Lithuania.

"Leaders just want to maintain imperialism," said Afanasyev.

Caged songbird

SEATTLE (AP) — Folk singer Peter Yarrow said he felt honored to be performing in the King County Jail.

Yarrow

About 100 male inmates heard one concert and 20 women another Friday, clapping and tapping their feet to "Puff the Magic Dragon," "Leaving on a Jet Plane," "Day Is Done" and "Blowing' in the Wind."

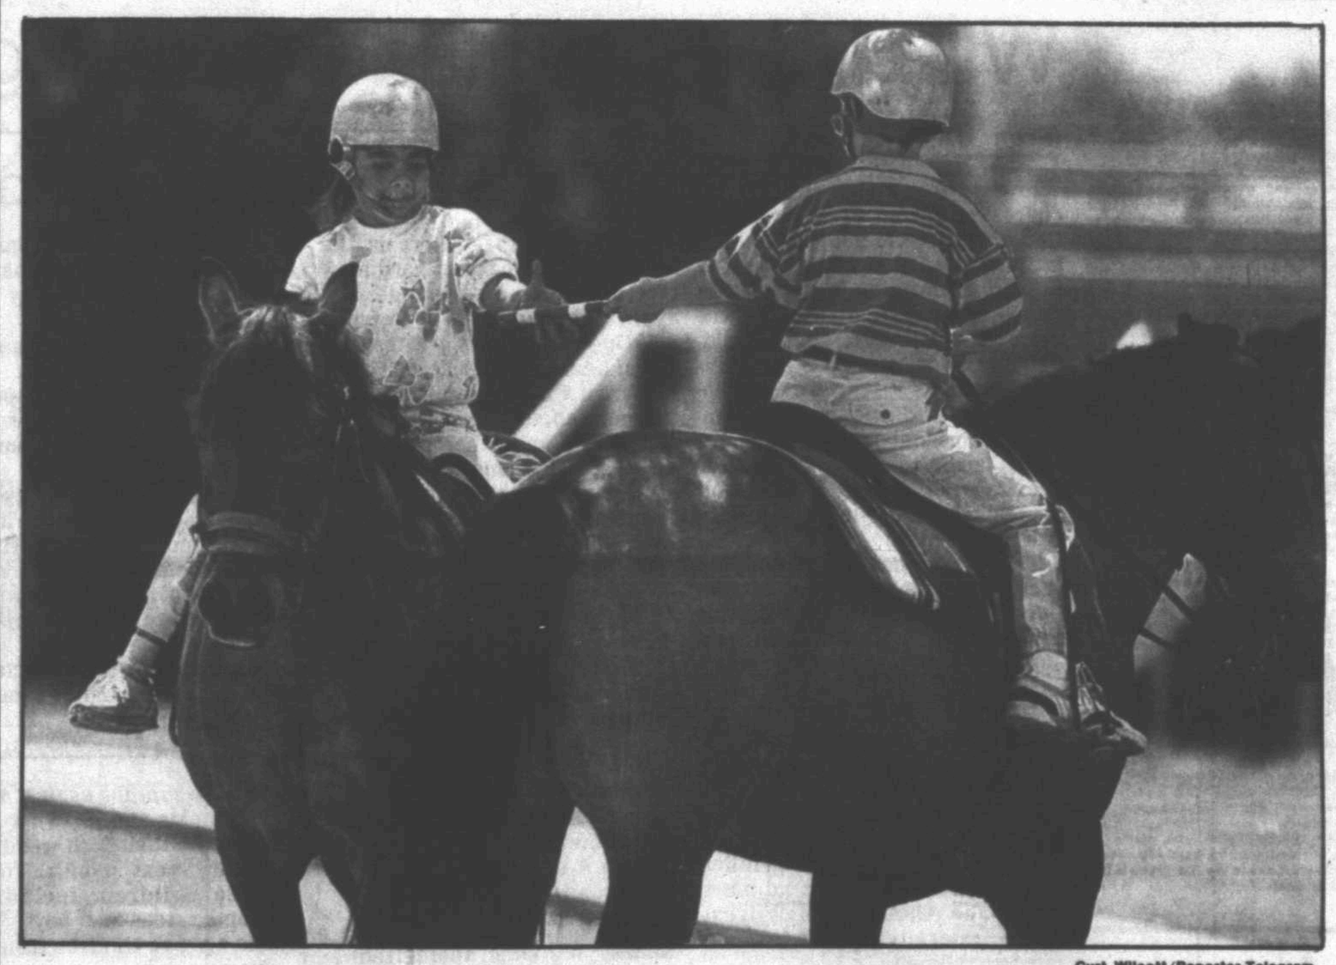

The veteran of the 1960s group Peter, Paul and Mary said it was at least as important to sing in the jail as at his concert later Friday, where tickets cost $19 to $25.

"I wish you all, when you get out, a sense of what these songs say," he said. "It is not just dumb words that fall to the floor without meaning."

Girl's body found; Murder is suspected

■ Four women find the badly decomposed body, believed to be that of an 8-year-old girl missing since April 14, in a West Odessa field.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A body believed to be that of a missing West Odessa girl was discovered Saturday night in a field about five miles west of the girl's home and the case is being investigated as a possible homicide, the Ector County Sheriff's Department confirmed Sunday.

Sheriff's Capt. Gene Kloss said clothes found on the body matched a description of 8-year-old Gloria Castillo of West Odessa, who has been missing since April 14.

Kloss said the body has been sent to Austin for autopsy and positive identification.

The fully clothed, badly decomposed body was found Saturday about 8:15 p.m. in a field near Damascus Avenue and 16th Street, Kloss said. He said four women discovered the body under a blanket in an area used for trash dumping.

House, Senate panel agrees on school finance bill

■ A compromise formula will allocate $555 million in new aid to schools next year.

By Rick Brown
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A joint House-Senate conference committee Sunday reached final agreement on a new school finance plan that would replace the system the Texas Supreme Court ruled illegal in October.

Conferees are expected to meet again today to approve the compromise dollar allocation formula, which would distribute $555 million in new state education aid to schools next year.

By the plan's fifth year of implementation, it would provide an additional $1.5 billion in state aid.

Gov. Bill Clements has said he would veto a measure such as the one conferees are considering because most of its first-year aid would come from a proposed half-cent sales tax increase.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur and Senate co-chairman of the conference committee, said the Senate likely will vote on the compromise Tuesday. Senators are expected to approve the bill easily, he said.

Consideration in the 150-member House likely will come Wednesday, said Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield and a conferee. He predicted the vote would be close.

"The House is so fractionalized that you're still going to have probably 50 or 60 votes against it," he said.

Rudd said he will urge members to approve the bill, which he called "probably the best combination of things that can be interwoven so we can get something out."

In an unspoken reference to Clements, he said that the bill "is as close we can get at this point in time without additional direction from somebody."

Another conferee, Rep. Kent Grusendorf, R-Arlington, said he could not support the legislation.

Theater kicks off campaign with twin $50,000 donations

Staff Report

The campaign drive for Midland Community Theatre's Operating Endowment Fund was to kick off this morning with the announcement of twin $50,000 gifts from Wagner & Brown and the Abell-Hanger Foundation.

The $100,000 total puts the endowment already at one-fifth of its $500,000 goal.

Bill Pomeroy and Bill Pennebaker are co-chairmen of the drive that will focus on donations, estate planning, deferred giving and gifts of appreciated securities and property.

The Endowment Operating Fund will be a tool that will be used to build a strong future for Midland Community Theatre, according to Arlen Edgar, chairman of MCT's Board of Trustees.

Only a percentage of the income from the fund will be available to the theater. The theater's Board of Governors will determine how much of the income can be used for operating expenses in any given year.

The operating endowment, started in 1988, now holds $70,000 in funds. Said Edgar: "The Endowment Operating Fund was designed to grow in the way the theater has grown — through the care of concerned people who are dedicated to the quality of life in West Texas."

Wagner & Brown has been a longtime supporter of MCT, co-producing "Jesus Christ Superstar," "Guys and Dolls," "Annie," "Peter Pan," "The Sound of Music," "South Pacific," Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" and "Pippin."

The Abell-Hanger Foundation support for the theater has been evident most recently in the origination of "Reach Out!" a program which provides theater opportunities for the disadvantaged and handicapped.

The 8 a.m. kickoff breakfast at the Wagner & Brown offices in the Summitt Building was to be served by Bill Franklin, chairman of the board of First City National Bank, and bank employees as part of its "Breakfast on the Bank" marketing program.

Williams admits paying for prostitutes in his youth

Williams

HOUSTON (AP) — Republican gubernatorial nominee Clayton Williams disclosed that he paid prostitutes for sex a number of times in Mexico and his native West Texas, a newspaper reported Sunday.

He said it has been at least 35 years since he visited a prostitute and considered it a rite of passage.

"Why, of course," Williams, 58, told The Houston Post when asked whether he ever paid women for sex.

"It's part of growing up in West Texas. ... It's like the Larry McMurtry book, 'The Last Picture Show,'" the Midland rancher and oilman said. The book is about teen-age affairs in a small Texas town in 1951.

Williams told the Post he first paid for sex at age 16.

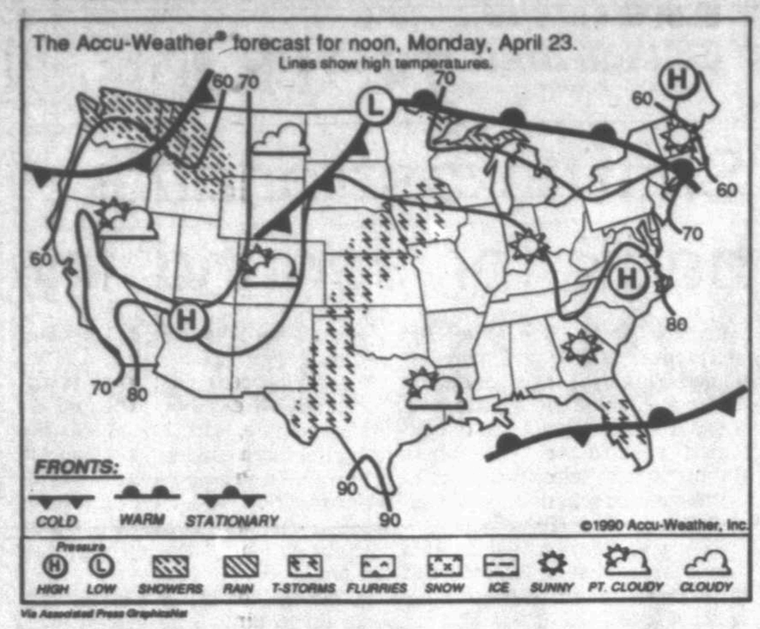

In addition to patronizing prostitutes as a teen-ager, Williams said he paid for sex while a student at Texas A&M University.

Prostitution is illegal in Texas and was illegal 35 years ago; it is legal in parts of Mexico.

Williams, who faces Democratic state Treasurer Ann Richards in the November gubernatorial general election and has campaigned as a law-and-order candidate, said the disclosure has no bearing on his leadership capabilities as a mature adult.

Thunderstorms possible

Staff Report

Thunderstorms remain a possibility for the Permian Basin, National Weather Service forecasters at Midland International Airport said Sunday.

Today should be partly cloudy with a less than 20 percent chance of afternoon thundershowers. The high will be in the mid-80s and winds will be out of the south at 10 to 20 mph.

Tonight will be mostly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms, a few possibly severe. It will be partly cloudy after midnight with a low in the mid-50s.

Tuesday will be partly cloudy with a high in the mid-80s.

Sunday's high was 82, 18 degrees off the record of 100 set last year. Today's record low is 37, set in 1944.

STATE

Scattered showers and thunderstorms developed over far South Texas and the southern Panhandle Sunday. Skies were partly to mostly cloudy over the state.

It continued to be humid over most of Texas Sunday due to the inflow of moisture from the Gulf of Mexico. The winds were generally from the southeast to south except in the Panhandle and far west sections where southwesterly winds prevailed.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

U.S. hosts national Earth Day party

By Paul Raeburn
AP Science Editor

Millions of Americans cleaned up beaches and roadsides, planted trees and listened to music with a message as they celebrated the 20th anniversary of Earth Day, the "environmental teach-in" that launched a movement.

In all, some 3,600 American cities and towns mustered forces to rejuvenate the environmental movement that was launched by the original Earth Day in 1970.

"I get a real sense of a renewal, and a kind of rededication, that will provide the support for change at the grassroots level," said John McLachlan, scientific director at the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences in Research Triangle Park, N.C. "There's a sense of urgency that hasn't been there."

Thousands watched a hot-air balloon — decorated as the Earth — rise in New York's Times Square where the ball falls on New Year's Eve. The Environmental Protection Agency unveiled a fleet of cars and trucks powered by alcohol, natural gas and electricity in Ann Arbor, Mich.

Students at Susquehanna University in Pennsylvania buried a paper mache "Old Earth" containing a plastic foam cup, aerosol can, disposable diaper and container of leaded gasoline.

At a gathering of 125,000 people at the U.S. Capitol in Washington, several activists criticized President Bush for spending the weekend fishing in Florida.

One was Peter Bahouth, president of Greenpeace USA, who brought with him a life-size cardboard cutout of Bush.

Gaylord Nelson of The Wilderness Society, who originated the first Earth Day when he was a senator from Wisconsin, called for a grassroots campaign to keep the spirit of Sunday's celebrations alive in the years to come.

"I don't want to come back here 20 years from now and have to tell your sons and daughters that you didn't do your duty," Nelson, 74, told his listeners. "We've got to raise a conservation generation."

Pennsylvania's Gov. Robert P. Casey led an "All Species Parade" in Philadelphia, playing the pied piper to children dressed in animal costumes made from recycled materials, and at least one marcher got the point.

We must recycle, said eleven-year-old Lauren Derby of Philadelphia, "so that the future generation can have a nice Earth and a nice environment."

Hall and Oates, the B-52s, the Saturday Night Live Band and Edie Brickell and the New Bohemians were among the performers in New York's Central Park, where an estimated 300,000 people turned out.

On an expressway near the Charles River in Boston, artists used biodegradable chalk to draw a half-mile-long, multicolored tableau of birds, butterflies, flowers and messages like "Recycle!" and "Save The Earth."

Unlike the first Earth Day, this year's commemoration was an international event. More than 140 countries on all seven continents participated, according to Earth Day 1990 of Palo Alto, Calif.

The international celebration will "give the clear message to politicians that millions of people are aware of the problems facing the earth," said Andrew Lees of the British branch of Friends of the Earth.

President Bush took a break from his fishing trip in the Florida Keys to give what he calls a "point of light" award to the citizens group Reef Relief, which is working to save the coral reef flanking the Keys.

Bush also said he would back a resolution to keep merchant ships off the reef. When Craig Quirolo, one of the founders of Reef Relief, asked for a ban on oil drilling in the Keys, Bush said the answer would come soon and that Quirolo wouldn't be disappointed. Nine oil companies hold 73 leases off of the Keys.

In Boston, the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles performed for Earth Day. They "serve as reminders of how we must care for our environment," the show's organizers said. The story goes that it was a toxic chemical that transformed them from ordinary terrapins into Hollywood's box-office champs.

The Nature Conservancy marked Earth Day with the signing of land-protection deals in all 50 states that will protect a total of 71,000 acres of natural terrain. The aim is to help save rare plants and animals from extinction, the organization said.

WILLIAMS: Attitude 'insulting to women'

(From 1A)

In a written statement, Ms. Richards' campaign Press Secretary Glenn Smith condemned Williams' attitude toward women reflected in his patronization of prostitutes.

"He implies that women are here to 'serve' men," Smith said. "That kind of attitude is as insulting to men as it is to women. We hope that the dialogue in this campaign will be about ... the serious issues facing the state. ... Those issues face all Texans — men and women, African-Americans, Hispanics and Anglos."

The statement also said the Richards campaign does not believe Williams' "private behavior is a legitimate subject for discussion in the context of public political debate."

Margaret Justus, Ms. Richards' deputy press secretary, said Ms. Richards was vacationing out-of-state until Monday.

The Post interviewed Williams at a posh desert resort in Scottsdale, Ariz., where he was spending the weekend for the annual meeting of the All-American Wildcatters, a fraternity of sorts for independent oilmen.

The colorful millionaire, never before elected to public office, has sunk $5.6 million of his own money in an $8 million campaign.

Williams came under fire from women's groups and political opponents last month when he jokingly likened bad weather to rape, saying if it was inevitable to "just relax and enjoy it."

The day after he made the remark, Williams apologized and said he realized his comment was "insensitive."

During a visit to Washington earlier last month, Williams told reporters he would feel uncomfortable running against a woman.

Williams and his wife, Modesta, celebrate their 25th wedding anniversary next month. They have three children, including two adopted teen-age boys. Williams also has two children from a previous marriage.

As she did when her husband faced heat for the rape remark, Modesta Williams stood by him Saturday on the subject of prostitution, the Post reported.

"What he did before we were married is certainly his business. That doesn't bother me at all," she said.

Meanwhile, Williams campaign workers said Williams' weekend admission was merely a reflection of his integrity.

"One of Clayton's greatest strengths as a person is one of his greatest weaknesses as a politician — he always tries to be honest," said Williams' Press Secretary Bill Kenyon in a written statement. "Clayton surprised some folks by conceding once again that he's not perfect and telling the truth about incidents earlier in his life, even when it wasn't politically expedient."

Kenyon said Williams has been unfairly targeted by the media during the campaign.

"We are saddened for the people of Texas that political reporting has sunk to this level, but the press has now set the stage for much closer scrutiny of candidates' personal lives," Kenyon said. "We believe that in fairness, Richards should also be subjected to this level of scrutiny."

Staff writer David Morris contributed to this report.

Williams' campaign responds

AUSTIN (AP) — Here is the text of the statement from Clayton Williams' campaign regarding Williams' acknowledgment that he paid for prostitutes as a young man. The statement was issued by Bill Kenyon, Williams' press secretary:

"One of Clayton's greatest strengths as a person is one of his greatest weaknesses as a politician. He always tries to be honest.

When Clayton was tracked down by a reporter chasing outlandish rumors about Clayton's past that have been fanned by the Richards campaign and other Democrats, he dismissed them as absurd.

Most politicians would have stopped there.

But when the reporter went further, and asked if he had ever visited a prostitute, Clayton surprised some folks by conceding once again that he's not perfect and by telling the truth about incidents earlier in his life, even when it wasn't politically expedient.

We are saddened for the people of Texas that political reporting has sunk to this level. But the press has now set the stage for much closer scrutiny of candidates' personal lives.

We believe that in fairness, Richards should also be subjected to this level of scrutiny. We hope she displays the same kind of candor when questioned about her personal life, past and present."

HOSTAGE: Syria, Iran seem to be behind release

(From 1A)

ness studies and accounting at Beirut University College, and two other U.S. educators, Jesse Turner and Alann Steen, were held by the Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine.

In a Syrian TV interview, Polhill said he was grateful to those who helped him, but added: "I'm still deeply concerned about my two friends and others who are still held in the conditions I was held in."

Polhill said he played cards with other hostages during his captivity and tried to keep his mind off the possibility of freedom.

"I strived to continue to be angry, knowing at all times that if I began to lose that anger I would just sort of become a vegetable and I didn't want that to happen," he said in the interview.

The terms of the release, which followed a series of communiques from the Shiite Moslem kidnappers, were not known.

Guards outside the Summerland who witnessed the release said Polhill stepped out of a car that screeched to a halt about 50 yards from the hotel.

He was immediately picked up by a three-car Syrian convoy and driven off at high speed.

The Syrian TV footage showed Polhill being driven through Beirut, sitting in the back of a car and puffing heavily on a cigarette. He appeared drawn after his long ordeal and smiled wanly several times.

BILL: Panel argued over funds' allocation

(From 1A)

The bill contains substantial changes in such areas as how state education policy is administered and also attempts to promote excellence in schools with new tests and rating systems.

But Grusendorf said he doesn't "really see the changes we need to improve the system if we're going to increase spending to that extent."

The conference committee has met since April 12 in hopes of satisfactorily blending separate school finance measures approved by the House and Senate earlier in the session.

After conferees reached agreement on a range of issues such as governance and excellence, they became hung up on the vastly different dollar allocation formulas each chamber had approved.

The House version attempted to give every district the same access to money as those whose wealth per student is at the 95th percentile among districts statewide, a standard that would change year by year.

House members criticized the Senate version as only slightly different from the current system. They said it equalized access to revenue only to the level of districts of average wealth.

Parker said the compromise follows the Senate plan in its first year of implementation and phases in the House plan in the four years that follow.

The House system was supported by school districts who won the Edgewood v. Kirby lawsuit, the case that threw the current system into question.

But Parker had criticized the formula for keying aid for all districts to the amount spent on students by one of the state's wealthiest districts.

GIRL: Blanket placed over body indicates a homicide

(From 1A)

"They were just going out there on their own because they kind of felt (concerned)," Kloss said. He did not say who the women were or what may have led them to the field. He said the women noticed a foul odor in the area.

The women called the sheriff's department after the discovery, and Justice of the Peace J.E. Pressly pronounced the girl dead at 10:10 p.m. Saturday, Kloss said.

The case is being investigated as a possible homicide, Sheriff Bob Brookshire said.

"The body was found under a blanket — we think surely it's a homicide," Brookshire said.

Brookshire said his department is pursuing several leads in the case, but said no arrests have been made.

He would not elaborate on the leads and did not say if any suspects are being sought.

According to reports, Gloria Castillo was last seen about 4 p.m. April 14, playing with her brother near her home in the 7300 block of West 21st St. in West Odessa.

Gloria, daughter of Jose and Ninefa Castillo, reportedly suffered from a hearing loss and a learning disability.

Brookshire, who offered a $500 reward out of his own pocket for information leading to the girl's recovery, said he has had as many as 40 officers working the case in the past week.

"I've been up for a week — not much rest since before Easter until now — and we're doing all we can," Brookshire said. "I've got everyone available working it."

Hostage's mother 'never lost hope'

Associated Press

The release Sunday of Robert Polhill after more than three years of captivity in Lebanon brought joy to his mother and hope to the relatives of Americans still held hostage.

"It's Bob? Oh, I can't believe it," Polhill's mother, Ruth Polhill of Fishkill, N.Y., said when the State Department told her he had been released in Beirut after nearly 39 months in captivity.

Mrs. Polhill, 85, wore a big smile as she spoke to reporters gathered outside her home, but said her 55-year-old son's appearance on television was "a little shocking."

"I thought he looked pretty weak, pretty thin," she said. "But I think he'll come out of it with help from his family and the loving care of his wife."

President Bush called Mrs. Polhill to congratulate her. He was "very nice," she said. "He sounded exactly like he does on TV."

Mrs. Polhill said she never lost hope her son would be freed. "I can't understand it, but I haven't faltered at all," she said.

"I think it was good news for all the hostage families," said Peggy Say, whose brother, Associated Press chief Middle East correspondent Terry Anderson, has been held for five years, longer than any other U.S. hostage.

Polhill, a professor from New York, was the first American hostage released in nearly 3½ years. He was to be flown to West Germany for debriefing and a medical exam before returning to the United States.

Polhill had been held with Alann Steen and Jesse Turner since their abduction from Beirut University College on Jan. 24, 1987.

Until Sunday, it hadn't been clear which of the three held by the Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine would be released. The news that it was Polhill was bittersweet for Turner's 68-year-old mother, Estelle Ronneburg of Boise, Idaho.

Mrs. Ronneburg's hopes were raised Wednesday by the release of a photograph of her son along with an announcement that an unspecified American would be released. But Islamic Jihad's announcement Thursday that it was postponing the release was accompanied by a photo of Polhill.

Ruth Polhill, mother of hostage Robert Polhill, reacts to the news Sunday of her son being released from Beirut, Lebanon. Her son was held captive there for over three years.

For Mrs. Ronneburg, all doubt ended Sunday.

"It can't help but hurt a little bit because I had high hopes," the bank bookkeeper said. "But I am very happy for Mrs. Polhill. I know how she feels. She's getting her son back. I'm sure she's overjoyed."

Mrs. Ronneburg said she hoped Polhill would have information about her son. "They've been kept together for so long ... ," she said. "He can answer some of my questions."

"I will never give up hope," she said.

Mrs. Polhill said she felt sadness for the families of the remaining hostages, and said she spoke to Steen's wife, Virginia Rose Steen.

Mrs. Steen said she was thrilled to hear Polhill had been freed.

"I hope that Robert will bring home some news about Alann. It's been an endless roller coaster," Mrs. Steen, 33, told reporters outside her parents' home in Clarklake, Mich.

Steen turned 51 on Sunday. "I certainly wish I could have given my husband a birthday present today," his wife said. "It's his fourth birthday in captivity, so it's even harder."

Mrs. Steen is working on a doctorate through the University of Iowa while staying in Michigan, but said she spends much of her time watching the news.

"All hostage relatives are TV addicts," she said. "I hope the journalists will continue to focus on the plight of the hostages. I hope this will be the beginning of the end for all hostages and they will all come home."

"The release of Robert Polhill is a cause for great happiness," former President Reagan said a statement released in Los Angeles. "Nancy and I join the Polhill family, their friends and all Americans in rejoicing that freedom has finally come to this brave man.

In welcoming Robert Polhill home, we again call for the immediate release of all the hostages," Reagan said. "Our deep hope and prayer is that the joy which has come to the Polhill family today will soon come to all those who have relatives or friends held hostage."

"It's given us a lot of encouragement," said Thomas Cicippio of Norristown, Pa., whose brother, Joseph, has been held hostage since Sept. 12, 1986 "I really feel this is the beginning of the release of all the other hostages."

For some, Polhill's release brought back memories.

"Well, I'm reliving my release and the emotions of it," former hostage David Jacobsen said in an interview with CBS News.

Say, interviewed by telephone from her home in Cadiz, Ky., said she was encouraged by Polhill's appearance on television "because I need to believe that that is indicative of the improved conditions of the hostages that we have been told about over the past year or so."

She said she was also encouraged by President Bush's remarks that he prays for the hostages every night and that the burden remains with him every day.

"I know it's impossible to have something on your mind to that degree without transferring that concern to action," said Say, who has been critical of the government's efforts to win the hostages' freedom.

She said she hoped "with the cooperation of Iran and Syria and the U.S. that, God willing, the rest will come out in short order."

Shuttle astronauts back for second try

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Discovery's five astronauts returned Sunday for a second attempt to launch the shuttle with NASA's most valuable and celebrated payload, the $1.5 billion Hubble Space Telescope.

Discovery is scheduled to lift off at 8:31 a.m. EDT Tuesday.

"We feel very confident that things are going to go well this time," said Discovery's commander, Air Force Col. Loren J. Shriver.

"We're going to come out OK on Tuesday morning and, if not, we'll just keep trying until we do. That's kind of the name of the game here," Shriver said.

NASA test director Mike Leinbach said Sunday that the countdown was proceeding smoothly and the shuttle appeared to be in perfect condition. The countdown got under way Saturday afternoon.

A faulty power unit forced the first launch attempt to be scrubbed four minutes before liftoff April 10. The unit was replaced with a new one, which tests showed to be fine.

"Hopefully, we'll get the shuttle off the pad this time," Leinbach said.

A 70 percent chance of favorable weather was expected at launch time, with low clouds being the main concern, said the Air Force's Ed Priselac, shuttle weather officer. A weak cold front from the north was expected to pass through the area by Monday night.

The outlook is considerably better for Wednesday and Thursday, Priselac said.

As Discovery's astronauts arrived from Johnson Space Center in Houston early Sunday afternoon, the shuttle Columbia was being transported to a launch pad 1.6 miles from Discovery.

It is only the second time both shuttle launch pads at Kennedy Space Center have been occupied simultaneously. The first time was in January 1986; 16 days after Columbia lifted off, Challenger exploded.

Discovery's payload bay was sealed late Saturday night, drastically reducing the risk of contamination to the telescope's finely polished 94.5-inch mirror.

Lockerbie victims remembered

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — The memory of the 35 students killed in the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 will endure as long as Syracuse University stands, the chancellor said Sunday as the school dedicated a memorial to the students.

More than 600 people, including the families of the victims, gathered at the heart of campus to watch the university unveil "The Place of Remembrance" for the students.

The centerpiece of the memorial is a 4-foot-high, semicircular limestone wall. The names of the students are engraved in an 18-inch granite band around the top.

The 35 students, returning from a semester studying overseas, were killed Dec. 21, 1988, when a terrorist bomb destroyed the jetliner over Lockerbie, Scotland. All 259 people aboard the plane were killed, and 11 Lockerbie residents were killed by falling wreckage.

"For the next generations of entering students who look upon The Place of Remembrance ... they will know that the students who were lost will be remembered so long as this university shall stand," said Chancellor Melvin Eggers.

Proof of Texan James Baker's power lies in Bush

EDITOR'S NOTE: James Addison Baker III, secretary of state, has been one of the most powerful men in Washington since Ronald Reagan first moved into the White House. And one of the most paradoxical, like his current boss and pal, George Bush. Above all, the nation's top diplomat is an adroit politician.

By Lee Byrd

WASHINGTON (AP) — He swills beer right out of the can at black-tie banquets, and spits horrid little gobs of tobacco juice upon the acutely manicured greens of choice country clubs. He's a charmer, this Jim Baker.

He has charmed the president and the Congress of the United States, and the president and the Congress of People's Deputies of the Soviet Union. Nancy Reagan, no slouch for loyalty, adored him despite his prior command of two campaigns against her husband.

He was the hit, rather than boss George Bush, of the National Prayer Breakfast a few weeks back, and his raunchy stories are rollicking triumphs with fellows in the locker room. Michael Dukakis' campaign manager was dazzled by him. Media misanthropes gush over him.

Not bad for a man who, as secretary of state, has claimed little global vision, who reads few books, and has, for the longest intervals, had so little to say to so many eager to hear him say so much. Ask Mikhail Gorbachev. Or Eduard Shevardnadze. Or the tentative leadership of a tentatively free Lithuania. Or the Chinese students.

Jim Baker, 59, does not hesitate to hesitate. Nor, when he likes, even to jump ship.

He is the most paradoxical member of the president's team, save the president himself. And they are like twins, fellow Houstonians, except Bush is the highbred Easterner turned Texan and Baker the highbred Texan schooled in the East. Both tall, taut and athletic Ivy Leaguers, at home in tennis whites and golf pastels, but with a yen for sagebrush and bluejeans. For shooting quail and ducks and turkeys and wade-fishing in the bayous. For sharing thoughts, just one to the other.

For months, James Addison Baker III was as mute as the statues in the Kremlin's Catherine Hall about the gusts of change in the Soviet empire. Some, including Gorbachev, leaders of the NATO allies and of the U.S. Congress, were dismayed that the secretary of state seemed almost spooked by the opportunities inherent in the Cold War thaw.

While Gorbachev toured the world with a song of conciliation and unfolded one new arms-control initiative after another, Baker and his Texas friend, Bush, demurred to the outcome of a "strategic review" of Ronald Reagan's rush to detente with Moscow.

No one need have been surprised at the tactics of the new team. Jim Baker, as architect of Bush's less-than-meteoric rise to the presidency and now as vicar of his foreign policy, is given even less to risk than Bush. Together, they have made "caution" and "prudence" the watchwords of this administration.

Which is not to say that either suffers diplomatic lockjaw, nor, for that matter, that there haven't been some embarrassing slips. But as Baker himself explains it, "Sometimes a pro-active policy is best advanced by doing nothing until the right time."

And after that agonizingly dilatory start, the president and Baker have moved from tentative probing to vigorous advocacy of a friendlier East-West relationship. A so-called "no agenda" shipboard summit off Malta in December led Bush to advance 21 specific proposals for greater comity between the superpowers. Stay tuned. Bush-Gorbachev II is coming to Washington on May 30.

To Jim Baker, timing is everything. Any politician knows that. Any lawyer knows that. He is both, even if he doesn't care to admit it. Years ago, in his sole, unsuccessful stab at elective office, he campaigned on the slogan, "Texas needs a lawyer, not a politician, for attorney general." And he was once overheard snapping at an aide: "I'm a lawyer. Not a politician. And don't ever forget it."

Don't believe it, either. Fact is, Baker, who once regarded election days as a chance to go hunting, ranks as one of the most politically oriented secretaries of state in history. From the moment he settled into his small back office, behind the huge ceremonial one, he let it be known that he was "George Bush's representative at the State Department and not the State Department's representative at the White House."

At times, Baker acts as if he were still running Bush's 1988 campaign. Last September, he was challenged to respond to the complaint of Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, that the administration was dragging its feet on superpower issues. Baker, rather than addressing that charge, replied: "When the president is rocking along with a 70 percent approval rating on his handling of foreign policy, if I were the leader of the opposition, I might have something similar to say."

AP Laserphoto

Secretary of State James Baker appears at the House Appropriations Committee's March 1989 hearing on State Department operations.

Baker's poll-watching galls the Foreign Service's idealists, who argue that in a rapidly changing world, the boldest vision can be the most realistic, the most aggressive policy the most prudent.

Baker, first as Ronald Reagan's chief of staff, then as treasury secretary, and now as secretary of state, has been a master at working Congress, and he insists that his lieutenants emulate his meticulous courtesy when dealing with the legislative branch. He typically works until 9 p.m. or so, with most of those evening hours occupied with initiating or returning calls to Capitol Hill on his 41-line telephone.

At Cabinet meetings, Baker occupies the traditional seat of honor, at the president's right. Rightly so. No man or woman enjoys more presidential confidence.

Without Jim Baker, George Bush might not have become president. Because without Baker, Bush would not have been vice president, and Ronald Reagan's anointed successor.

It was in May, 1980, when Baker looked at Reagan's delegate numbers and leaked it to the press that his candidate, Bush, would be withdrawing from the presidential race. That was news to Bush, who, several hundred miles away at the time, fully intended to press Reagan in the windup primaries in New Jersey, Ohio and California — Reagan's home state.

A furious Bush summoned Baker and his staff to his home in Houston. As Bush tells the story in his book, "Looking Forward," he insisted to Baker that he still had a shot.

Baker: "George, you've got to know when to hold 'em and know when to fold 'em."

Bush: "Jim, I've never quit anything until it was finished."

Baker: "But the campaign IS finished, George. You're the only one who doesn't seem to know it."

Bush withdrew, and Reagan got a unified convention in Detroit. "What I'll admit to, but George never will," Baker said in 1981, "is that the veep thing was always the fallback. It was always in my mind. That's why, at every opportunity, I had him cool his rhetoric about Reagan." And Reagan, he added, would have been "terminally ticked off" had Bush pursued him into California.

It wasn't the vice president-elect who landed him his job in the Reagan White House, a fact Baker is quick to confide to anyone who suggests that he remains especially beholden to Bush. Instead, it was Reagan's longtime California confidant, Michael K. Deaver, and Nancy Reagan who sold the new president on making Baker the White House chief of staff.

Though generally familiar with global issues from his years with Reagan, Baker came to his new position as Secretary of State with huge gaps in his knowledge of the international players and the nuances of diplomacy. He was upstaged during some of his early encounters, like that first trip to Moscow, where Gorbachev caught him off balance with an announcement of Soviet troop cutbacks in Europe. But after more than 300 meetings with foreign leaders and 150,000 miles of travel, Baker is much more self-assured.

Baker had help getting where he is today

WASHINGTON (AP) — No one in the Ronald Reagan administration, with the possible exception of Secretary of State George Shultz, achieved the stature that Jim Baker did.

As White House chief of staff, he cultivated members of Congress from the start, and rolled up legislative victories that eluded other couriers of the Reagan program. He also assiduously courted the news media, provoking Donald Regan, his successor as chief of staff, to tell a Republican group that he was "appalled" at the amount of time Baker spent with reporters, and then-CIA Director William Casey to complain that Baker was the biggest leaker in town.

But his supporters credited Baker with pushing the essential elements of Reagan's first-term agenda through Congress, including those surprisingly early triumphs on the budget and taxes — fashioned by luring "Boll Weevil" Democrats into a new Hill majority.

Some critics fault him for just those successes — saying he too often orchestrated short-term victories without much caring about the lasting consequences, a burgeoning federal deficit foremost among them.

He was "much more of a Mr. Fix-it" than planner, "much more interested in politics than in policy," said former Reagan Treasury official John E. Chapoton, a one-time law partner and neighbor of Baker's.

William A. Niskanen Jr., a former member of the Council of Economic Advisers, said, "He doesn't bring any particular convictions to bear on a job ... other than doing a good job. I don't think he has any particular vision."

David Stockman, director of the Office of Management and Budget during Baker's tenure at the White House, wrote that "Baker was, deep down, neither very versed on matters of policy nor intensely interested in them."

Baker might have found himself the odd man out among Reagan's coterie of Californians around the Oval Office, but, under a plan drawn up by his prickly but creative sidekick, Richard G. Darman, he quickly managed to seize control of the White House paper flow to the president.

NATION IN BRIEF

Pilot remark was a 'joke'

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A woman blamed for a four-hour delay of a Detroit-to-Atlanta flight says Northwest Airlines officials overreacted to her "joke" about the sobriety of a substitute pilot.

"All I did was make a remark jokingly," Ann Beaver of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., said in a telephone interview Saturday from Atlanta, where she was visiting her children.

"I said, when they told us that a pilot was on his way in to staff the plane, 'I hope he hasn't been partying.' I didn't even say 'drunk.' I said 'partying.'" The scheduled pilot was unable to get to the airport.

But a flight attendant and the pilot, whom Northwest officials have refused to identify, took it seriously.

The pilot took a blood test, which showed he had no alcohol in his system, the airline said. Results of a urine test are expected to be available Monday.

Flight 497 was delayed nearly four hours Thursday night while a second substitute pilot was located. When the plane finally left, Beaver and her husband stayed behind because other passengers were enraged with them, Northwest spokesman Douglas Miller said. The couple took another flight Friday morning.

N.Y. cabbie killed

NEW YORK (AP) — The killing of the seventh cabbie in just over six weeks prompted Mayor David Dinkins on Sunday to order stepped-up police action — including undercover officers as drivers.

Police believe one person was responsible for the killings of three cab drivers earlier in the Bronx, presumably during robbery attempts.

They were trying to determine if killings Sunday in the Bronx and Saturday in Brooklyn were related.

The body of the latest victim, whose name was withheld, was found Sunday morning in his car in the Bronx. He had been shot in the head.

Violence surveyed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Blacks are more likely than whites to be victims of rape or aggravated assault and are more than twice as likely to be robbery victims, according to a federal study released Sunday.

The rate of such violent crimes occurring against black Americans age 12 or older was 44 per 1,000 compared with 34 per 1,000 whites in the same age group, according to data collected by the Justice Department's National Crime Survey between 1979 and 1986.

The survey does not include murder statistics. But the report contained FBI crime statistics for 1986 showing that the murder rate among blacks was 31.2 per 100,000 compared with 5.4 per 100,000 whites.

Cigarette trial opens

LEXINGTON, Miss. (AP) — Jury selection begins Monday in the second trial of a lawsuit filed by a Mississippi family seeking $17 million against cigarette industry giant, the American Tobacco Co., in the death of Nathan Horton who died in 1987.

Last week, Circuit Court Judge Eugene Bogen issued a gag order for attorneys in the case.

The plaintiffs, Nathan Horton's widow and children, are claiming Horton's death was caused by cigarettes. They are seeking $17 million in compensation and punitive damages from the American Tobacco Co. Horton, 50, of Durant, was a two-pack-a-day smoker of unfiltered Pall Mall cigarettes when he died Jan. 27, 1987. He smoked for 35 years.

Horton told his lawyers before his death, "Sure, I saw the warning on the package, but I didn't think it would hurt me."

Nigerian government says coup attempt by rebel officers crushed

WORLD

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — Nigeria's military government said it had crushed a coup attempt Sunday after heavy fighting with rebel troops for control of the capital of Lagos.

Babangida

The rebellion in Africa's most populous nation was launched by middle-ranking officers opposed to President Gen. Ibrahim Babangida. The rebels said they wanted to break up Nigeria's federation of 19 states to end Moslem domination.

"The unfortunate situation in Lagos this morning has been brought under control," Babangida told reporters Sunday night.

The general said the fighting had been heavy and his aide, Lt. Col. U. K. Bello, was among those killed during a gunbattle at the military headquarters in Lagos, the official News Agency of Nigeria reported.

Babangida gave no other information about casualties. Official reports also did not mention any figures for dead and wounded. Reporters who observed the fighting said there appeared to be heavy casualties.

Most of the rebel officers involved in the coup attempt had been arrested and would be brought to trial soon, Babangida said.

The rebellious soldiers took over the Lagos station of the state-run Radio Nigeria early Sunday and broadcast appeals for support.

Loyal troops won back the radio station "after heavy bombardment and sporadic shooting," the news agency said.

Witnesses reported heavy fighting around State House, where Babangida was believed to be, and at the military headquarters at Dodan Barracks.

Gunfire was also reported at several other military installations in the city of 6 million on the Atlantic Ocean.

But by early afternoon the sounds of gunfire and exploding mortar shells had died down in central Lagos.

Eleven hours after the fighting began, Lt. Gen. Sani Abacha, army chief and chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, went on the national radio to say the coup had been smashed. He also urged remaining rebels to surrender.

The News Agency of Nigeria quoted Col. Ishaya Bamaiyi as saying earlier announcements by rebel troops who seized the Lagos radio station represented "the view of a few disgruntled officers."

Army tanks guarded the Federal Secretariat, a compound of high-rise buildings housing government ministries.

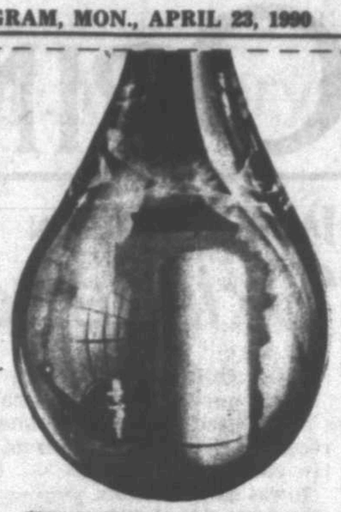

The Nigeria news agency said other parts of the country were calm. However, in Ibadan, a southern university city, thousands of students took to the streets to support the coup plotters.

The rebellion apparently was led by officers opposed to traditional domination by Moslem northerners over the central and southern states, which are mainly Christian and animist.

The coup attempt began around 2 a.m. Sunday.

In a rebel broadcast, a man identifying himself as Maj. Gideon Ngwozor Oka announced:

"Fellow Nigerian citizens, on behalf of the patriotic and well-meaning peoples of the Middle Belt and southern parts of this country, I ... wish to happily inform you of the successful ousting of the dictatorial, corrupt, drug-baronish, inhumane, sadistic, deceitful, homosexually centered and unpatriotic administration of General Ibrahim Babangida."

SMALL INCISION CATARACT SURGERY

FREE TO THE PUBLIC

Tuesday, April 24th, 1990 - 7:30 p.m.

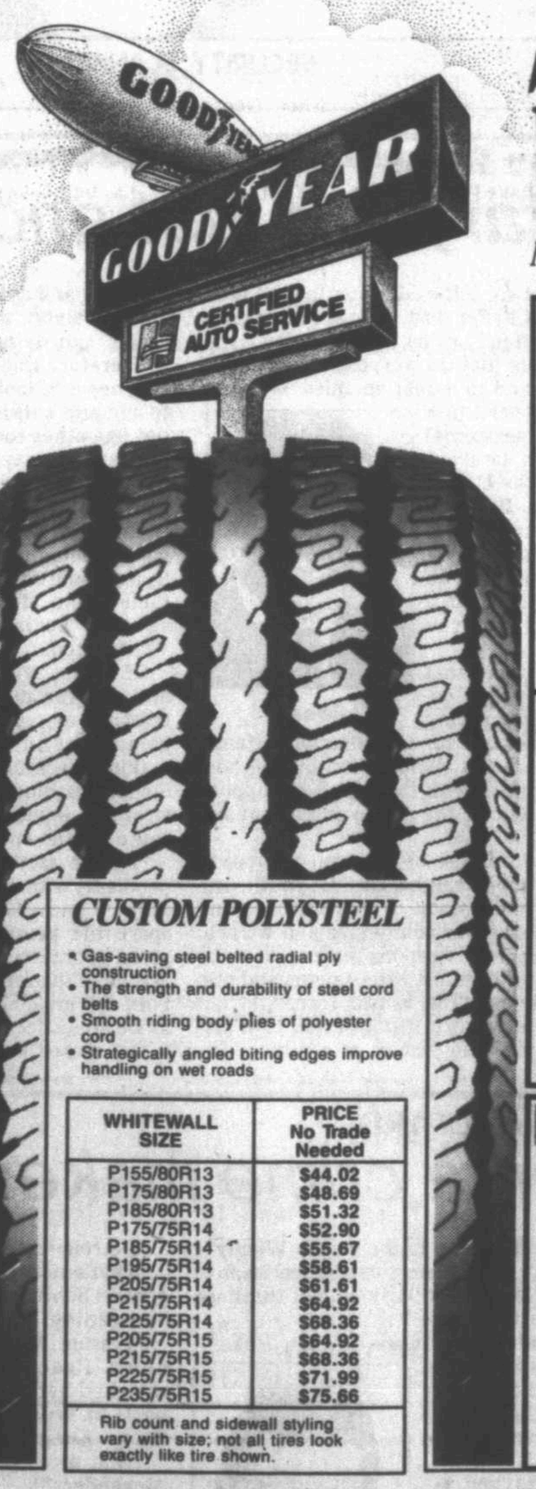

Women's and Children's Hospital Auditorium

Presented by
DR. NALIN TOLIA
Board Certified Ophthalmologist

Cataract surgery has become the safest elective surgery of today. The micro-surgical techniques have revolutionized the "after care" and hastened the healing period. The cataract is removed through a small incision by a technique called phacoemulsification. A narrow profile intraocular lens is implanted. The wound is then closed with only one suture, therefore it heals faster. In this lecture, Dr. Tolia will explain the new technique and its advantages. You will also be able to view the hi-tech equipment used in surgery. The seminar will give an opportunity for the audience to ask questions.

'Games' take fun out of playing

There's a new "game" in New York City that's attracting a number of the Big Apple's young people. It's called "elevator action" and it'll just kill you. Literally.

In this new sport, if you can call it that, young people ride up into that city's skyscrapers on the top of elevators. Some even jump from the top of one elevator to the top of another — as the two machines are moving. Other youngsters ride underneath elevators, clinging to the cables that pull the compartments.

Sometimes the unusual elevator ride is the daredevil's last.

Were this the only indication of society's flirtation with death, it might be brushed aside as a mere fad. But it isn't the only death-defying activity finding popularity with Americans. Others elsewhere in the country are plunging off the top of bridges and out of hot-air balloons headfirst, saved from almost certain death on the ground below by a small elastic cord tethered to their feet and the structure from which they jumped.

Although there have been about 8,000 "bungee jumpers" in this country so far, no deaths have been reported in the United States. But two French jumpers fell to their deaths last year after their cords snapped, and a third died after colliding with a tower after a leap.

One has to wonder what in our society is causing so many individuals to seek such perilous thrills. Is the pace of our lives too hectic? Have modern conveniences made our jobs and our home lives too predictable, too easy? Or are our lives merely too staid and boring?

Americans have engaged in dangerous sports for years, of course, but with a different motivation. Skiing, parachuting, even skateboarding can be extremely dangerous. But the motivation is to have fun and to excel at the sport, not to commit suicide.

"Bungee jumping" and "elevator action" are more similar to "Russian roulette," in which the player puts one cartridge in a revolver and spins the cylinder. Then the gun is placed to the temple and fired. If the hammer lands on an empty chamber, the player obviously has won. If not, the "game" is over — for good.

In "elevator action" or "bungee jumping" the end result is the same if something goes wrong.

There's not much fun in such a game.

'Skinheads' no longer unknown group

WASHINGTON — Once consigned to television tabloid programs, skinheads are finally prime-time as they receive belated attention from the nation's law enforcement officials.

Anderson

It was easy to dismiss these teen-age terrors who sport shaved heads and vacant stares, and who spew racial and religious hate. That was before they began exchanging their trademark steel-toed boots, chains and knives for handguns, shotguns and semi-automatic weapons. That was before they went from Nazi salutes and spray painting to assault and murder.

No longer are skinheads an unknown subculture. And the "Aryan Woodstock" put to rest any residual hope that their numbers were small. At that event for skinheads in Napa Valley, Calif., in March 1989, they showed up with automatic weapons, including an AR-15, an AK-47, automatic pistols and shotguns.

Skinheads are reported to be in every corner of the country. They are active in 31 states, boasting a following about 3,000 strong. Although nearly every state has been touched by the brand of bigoted brutality practiced by these white youths, most skinhead gangs are clustered in the Western states.

In La Verne, Calif., skinheads threatened to kill a couple they thought were Jewish. In Portland, Ore., they clubbed to death an Ethiopian immigrant. In Columbia, S.C., skinheads circulated racist flyers and painted anti-Semitic graffiti on downtown buildings.

Felix Sherrard was a victim. On an August night in 1988, Sherrard and his girlfriend were chased out of a Dallas park by a band of skinheads shouting racial slurs. Sherrard is black and skinheads thought the park belonged to whites only.

Sherrard eventually testified at the trial of five white supremist skinheads charged and convicted in a series of anti-Semitic and racist crimes. As U.S. marshals escorted the defendants from the courtroom, one of the defendants stopped long enough to give the Nazi salute.

Our associate Melinda Maas asked one skinhead leader what motivates them. "The white race is close to extinction," said Michael Patlasch, head of the National White Resistance of Metairie, La. "Our movement's objective is security for the white race."

Although all skinheads may look alike with their shaved heads, multiple tattoos, flight jackets and Doc Martin boots, there are actually some distinctions worth noting. "Non-racist" skinheads — known in the parlance as "baldies" or "two-tones" — outnumber their racist counterparts. What's clear is that skinheads have been bad for the Klu Klux Klan. The hooded Klansmen are being edged out in public profile by the more radical, neo-Nazi influenced groups, who prey on desperate white youths with bleak futures.

A recent Anti-Defamation League study indicates that skinheads are successfully recruiting high-school students, dropouts and the generally disaffected. The "fraternity" of skinheads offers youth a missing identity and support network, according to experts.

The Justice Department is cracking down. The federal grand jury that indicted the five in Dallas has been conducting what one Justice office called a "showcase effort" to punish the moguls of race- and religious-inspired violence. The rising tide of hate crimes around the country prompted Rep. John Conyers Jr., D-Mich, and Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill, to sponsor the Hate Crimes Statistic Act, passe by Congress last year, calling for law enforcement offices around the country to monitor hate-related violence.

CREDIT CARD CAPERS — It may seem innocent enough, but when a sales clerk writes your credit card number on your check, or your phone number or address on your credit card, you may be inviting fraud against yourself.

In response, consumer activists are planning to challenge laws or regulations requiring such practices. In the case of the check, the problem is it contains your name, address, home phone number, and now your credit card number. These are the only elements necessary for someone to apply for credit in your name. If the person committing the fraud knows his or her business, your credit rating can get severely damaged by the time you realize what happened.

What to do if the store merchant insists on the extra documentation? Consumer experts say that store managers usually waive the requirement when consumers protest.

Dairy product surplus melts

As Congress gets down to debating the 1990 Farm Bill, pressure is already building to reverse the downward trend in milk price supports that began in 1982. That would be a mistake.

The combination of rollbacks in past dairy support prices from $13.49 in 1981 to $10.60 currently, the free cheese and milk distribution programs and the "whole herd" buyout program has melted away the mountain of dairy product surplus stocks in government hands.

Since 1983, the non-fat dry milk stocks have plunged from 1.4 billion pounds to less than 50 million. Cheese has fallen from 1.3 billion pounds to less than 300 million, while butter has fallen from 500 million pounds to less than 200 million. All of this has come in the face of falling per capita consumption of dairy products but rising export demand.

In other words, we are no longer paying farmers to produce surpluses to be sold to the government. Not only has this been good for the taxpayers, cutting total dairy support outlays from $2.5 billion to less than $110 million this year, but it has been good for dairy farmers.

As supplies tightened both in the United States and abroad, market prices began to soar above support prices. By the end of 1989, milk was selling at $15.90 per hundredweight, nearly 18 percent higher than in December 1988 and 30 percent above the average price for 1988. With total milk production costs now running at about $12 per hundredweight, dairying is once again a profitable business. Income to dairy farmers is at a historic high.

Consumer milk prices have drifted up somewhat recently, but they are still less than $2 a gallon in most markets and substantially below the inflation trend for all food and for all commodities since 1980.

There is no better time to end dairy price supports completely than the present. Dairy farmers themselves should welcome such a move, because so long as there are support prices, there will be political pressure to raise them — and if they are pushed up again, they would only invite more producers back into the market. The dairy glut would soon return. Taxpayers have shelled out more than $1 billion in the hopes of getting into the current situation. Now it's time to withdraw the federal treat.

Military not just another social program

Axioms are self-evident truths but in an age of heifer dust, they are frequently forgotten. Let us review a few.

It is an axiom that the purpose of an army is to wage war and to defeat enemies. War consists of the destruction of enemy's personnel and property. In more honest days, the United States had a War Department, not a Defense Department.

Reese

It is an axiom that an army that cannot win a war, cannot deter a war.

It follows then that the purpose of the Congress, in approaching its duties to provide for the common defense, is to put together a combination of men and weapons, together with the logistical support, sufficient to engage the enemy in combat and win.

It is not the purpose of the armed forces to provide vocational training for idle youth, provide college educations or mind-broadening travel experiences for young men and women, profits to corporate weapons makers, or to be a laboratory for feminist experiments and other social schemes. The armed forces do not exist to provide a sort of uniformed civil service for people who just want a job.

Killing and dying are what the profession of arms is about, and if one is not engaged in killing and dying, one trains to kill and die.

Therefore Congress, in approaching its duties, needs to look at the question of capability to win and nothing else. The armed forces are not like other social programs where you can, for example, say, well this year we're just going to cut it 10 percent or freeze it at last year's level.

This is an irresponsible approach. OK, so an irresponsible approach when applied to anything Congress does is a redundancy. Nevertheless, the idea of funding defense as just another social program is prevalent in Washington.

Of course what you need in terms of men and weapons depends not on the state of your treasury or on the score of partisan "gotcha games" but on the state of your enemy's war-making machine. What dictates our needs are Soviet capabilities in missiles, submarines, and strategic bombers. We cannot base our defense on the speeches of Mikhail Gorbachev.

"I have attacked all seemingly impossible problems with a firm will to solve them peaceably... I know how terrible war is... I want to spare the people this experience... we have given guarantees for all the States in the West. We have guaranteed to all contiguous neighbors the inviolability of their territory so far as we are concerned. That is not a phrase. That is our sacred will. I now pray to God that he will bless in the years to come our work, our deeds, our foresight, ourselves... that he may always give us the courage to do the right thing."

So spoke Adolf Hitler in September 1938.

From the secret catacombs of the Kremlin, a man has emerged. He stands as sole ruler of a militaristic empire armed to the teeth with the most wicked weapons perverted science can provide. Behind him lies a long history of cruelty and deception. He smiles.

Let us recall the words of Rudyard Kipling: "When he stands up like a tired man, tottering near and near; When he stands up as pleading, in wavering, man-brute guise, When he veils the hate and cunning of his little, swinish eyes; When he shows as seeking quarter, with paws like hands in prayer, That is the time of peril — the time of the Truce of the Bear. There is no truce with Adam-zad, the Bear that looks like a Man."

We Americans have not survived this long bloody century to be duped into destruction or slavery by a balding dictator. Let us not rush to disarm. We need patience and fortitude, not folly. The Bear continues to modernize his strategic forces. We must complete the modernization of ours.

The only way to get a peace dividend is to invest in a strong military force.

Atlanta crime makes it dangerous to go out

"Hoke, drive me to the Piggly Wiggly. I need to pick up some groceries."

"Nome, Miss Daisy, I don't think we should leave the house."

"What kind of foolishness is that, Hoke."

"Didn't you know, Miss Daisy, that Atlanta has the highest crime rate of any large city in the country."

Grizzard

"Where did you get such notions as that, Hoke?"

"It was in the paper, Miss Daisy. According to FBI statistics, Atlanta ranks number one in crime."

"That's silly, Hoke. Everybody knows that New York City has the highest crime rate. My son, Booli, went there once and somebody broke into his hotel room and stole his socks and underwear and he was wearing them at the time."

"Nome, Miss Daisy. New York was way yonder behind Atlanta in crime."

"Well, where was Detroit? I had a cousin who went to Detroit and somebody snatched a purse in front of the Ponchatrain Hotel."

"Detroit was fourth, Miss Daisy."

"That's nonsense, Hoke. Atlanta is a kind, genteel Southern city. I've never heard of anyone getting their purse snatched here."

"Yessum, Miss Daisy. My cousin was walking down Peachtree Street and somebody snatched her purse and hit her in the head to boot. In broad daylight, Miss Daisy, and she knows Kung Fu."

"That nice Chinese man who works for the Alexanders?"

"Nome, Miss Daisy. Kung Fu is a martial art. Didn't do my cousin no good to know it, though. The thief knew Tire Tool."

"Hoke, I have lived in Atlanta my entire life and we do not have a serious crime problem here. I don't know a single person who has been murdered."

"That's because you live in this rich, white neighborhood, Miss Daisy. Everybody up here dies from old age and colon cancer. In my neighborhood we don't need no alarm clocks. The ambulance wakes us up in the morning going to pick up another dead body."

"Well, why don't you move out from down there, Hoke?"

"And move up here next to you, Miss Daisy? I'd have to rob a bank to get that kind of money and you got to stand in line to rob a bank in Atlanta."

"It doesn't matter, Hoke. I still must go to the Piggly Wiggly. If you won't drive me I'll take a street car. I always took a street car when I was a girl."

"That was 65 years ago, Miss Daisy. They done put extra drivers on the street cars now to ride shotgun."

"I don't care, Hoke. Now I insist you go get the Hudson and take me to the Piggly Wiggly."

"Don't have the Hudson no more, Miss Daisy."

"What happened to it?"

"Your son traded it in for a Wells Fargo truck, Miss Daisy. You can't take no chances in Atlanta anymore."

"Well, why don't city officials do something about the crime problem in Atlanta?"

"They say they're working on it, Miss Daisy. But that them statistics is a lie."

"What do you think, Hoke?"

"I think I'm moving to Detroit, Miss Daisy. Here's the keys to the Wells Fargo truck. The shotgun's under the seat."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, April 23, the 113th day of 1990. There are 252 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

April 23, 1564, is the generally accepted birthdate of the English poet and dramatist William Shakespeare. He died on the same date 52 years later.

On this date:

In 1348, King Edward III established the Order of the Garter.

In 1616, the Spanish poet Cervantes died in Madrid.

In 1789, President-elect George Washington and his wife moved into the first executive mansion, the Franklin House, in New York.

In 1791, the 15th president of the United States, James Buchanan, was born in Franklin County, Pa.

In 1896, the Vitascope system for projecting movies onto a screen was demonstrated at a music hall in New York City.

In 1940, 50 years ago, about 200 people died in a dance hall fire in Natchez, Miss.

In 1954, Hank Aaron of the Milwaukee Braves hit the first of his record 755 major-league home runs, in a game against the St. Louis Cardinals. The Braves won the game, 7-5.

In 1968, the Methodist Church and the Evangelical United Brethren Church merged to form the United Methodist Church.

In 1969, Sirhan Sirhan was sentenced to death for the assassination of New York Sen. Robert F. Kennedy. The sentence was later reduced to life imprisonment.

World greens up for Earth Day

LONDON (AP) — Environmentalists collected tons of garbage from Japanese beaches, sculpted a giant thermometer from a French glacier to protest global warming and rallied on the world's streets and mountaintops Sunday to mark Earth Day.

Organizers estimated that 200 million people in 136 countries took part in events dedicated to saving the environment.

"If Earth Day does nothing else, it will ... give the clear message to politicians that millions of people are aware of the problems facing the earth and what needs to be done about it," said Andrew Lees, of the British branch of Friends of the Earth.

Students carried a globe on a stretcher, symbolizing a sick Earth, in a parade in Hong Kong's twin city of Kowloon. About 1,000 people marched, many dressed as trees or animals and waving green ribbons and banners.

In Chamonix, France, ice sculptors Christian Claudel and Francis Cuny carved a giant thermometer on the Mer de Glace glacier to protest global warming resulting from air pollution.

In Japan, about 35,000 people gathered on Yumenoshima, or Dream Island, an artificial island in Tokyo Bay made from landfill consisting mostly of garbage from Tokyo. A temporary facility for recycling tin cans was set up to emphasize the problem of waste disposal on the island nation.

In western Japan, volunteers gathered six tons of trash on a beach and set it ablaze, according to the public TV network NHK.

In Gdansk, Poland, students bicycled through the Baltic port's Old Town to protest air pollution, and a similar protest was held in Rome. Environmentalists on bicycles, roller skates and other motorless vehicles marched through the Lithuanian capital of Vilnius, which is currently fighting a Soviet energy blockade designed to break its independence drive.

East Germans gathered near the Berlin Wall to view exhibits and celebrate their newly won freedom to raise environmental issues. Under the Stalinist regime ousted in October, environmentalists had to operate underground.

In Istanbul, Turkey, police arrested 11 people for holding an unauthorized demonstration to celebrate Earth Day, the semi-official Anatolia news agency reported.

Hundreds of people lined the main highway along the Cape Peninsula in South Africa to protest a government plan to allow mining on scenic Chapman's Peak.

Israelis honor memory of Holocaust victims

JERUSALEM (AP) — Sirens wailed for two minutes throughout Israel Sunday as life briefly came to a standstill in remembrance of the 6 million Jews slain in the Nazi Holocaust.

As the sirens sounded at 10 a.m., traffic ground to a halt, and thousands of Israelis stood silently at attention to honor the victims.

Hundreds of Israelis also marked Holocaust Martyrs' and Heroes' Remembrance Day by participating in ceremonies across the country at which the names of victims were read by relatives and friends.

According to recent statistics, there are 302,404 Holocaust survivors living in this nation of 4.7 million people, including Polish-born Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and other top military and political leaders.

"I remember my family members who have died in those terrible and fearsome days," said Shamir, 74, who lost his parents, two sisters, their husbands and children during World War II.

"My father, Shlomo Ben Yitzhak Ysernitsky, was killed by Polish farmers, his friends from childhood, when he came to them seeking refuge after escaping from a death train," he said.

Leading the main name-reading ceremony outside the Knesset, or parliament, Shamir then named other Nazi victims — his mother, Pearl; his sisters, Miriam and Rivka; their husbands, Mordechai and Yaakov, and their children.

The Israeli prime minister, who was born in the Polish town of Ruzinoy and according to aides has never disclosed full details about how his family perished, also gave an account of Miriam's death:

"My sister, Miriam, was married to Mordechai Shklarevitch. They and their children were killed by a forest guard who used to work for them, when they came to hide in his house."

The name-reading program, called "Unto Every Person There Is A Name," was introduced last year as part of an effort to remind young people of the Jewish loss in the Holocaust.

The tragedy still deeply influences private lives and politics.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Israel funded group

JERUSALEM (NYT) — The Israeli government acknowledged Sunday night that it had secretly provided almost $2 million to help establish a new Jewish settlement in the Christian quarter of Jerusalem's Old City 10 days ago.

The settlement set off riots and widespread local and international condemnation when the 20 Jewish families moved into Saint John's Hospice, on Good Friday eve. The government had at first denied any connection with the move.

Jerusalem's mayor, Teddy Kollek, condemned the settlement, saying it would damage tourism and trade.

Immigration officials raised fears that the controversy could jeopardize Soviet Jewish immigration to Israel. And the Israeli courts ruled the settlement illegal, though the judgment is under appeal.

U.S. casualty honored

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Americans and Norwegians Saturday honored a young army captain who became the first U.S. soldier to die in World War II when he was killed in a German air raid.

Capt. Robert M. Losey died April 21, 1940, at age 31 in the central Norwegian village of Dombaas. He was on a mission to help American civilians flee the April 1940 German invasion of Norway.

U.S. and Norwegian officials and war veterans joined 400 people for the ceremony in the village memorial park, laying a wreath on an eight-foot-high stone monument marking his death.

Bomb kills Salvadoran

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — An economics professor was killed Saturday after a bomb exploded in his car as he was preparing to leave the University of El Salvador, police reported.

Randolfo Tejada, who also was the director of the Salvadoran Institute for Rehabilitation of the Disabled, died in surgery after the explosion and fire, a police spokesman said. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

No suspects have been identified in the bombing, and no group has claimed responsibility.

Moscow official warns Lithuania of potential catastrophe ahead

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. (AP) — A senior Communist official from Moscow said Sunday the Lithuanian independence movement is leading the republic to catastrophe, and denied the Kremlin has imposed a total economic blockade.

The Sajudis independence movement, whose leaders dominate Lithuania's government, declared its determination to stand by the March 11 declaration of independence.

In neighboring Latvia, meanwhile, the drive for independence received a show of support in a rally attended by 8,086 of the 16,000 newly elected members of city councils, regional bodies and the republic's parliament, a journalist reported. Only 307 people attended a nearby meeting of a group opposing Latvian independence.

In Tokyo, Soviet reformer Yuri Afanasyev condemned his nation's economic sanctions against Lithuania.

"Leaders just want to maintain imperialism," said Afanasyev, a legislator who recently split with the Communist Party.

But in Vilnius, Andrei N. Girenko, a secretary of the Soviet Communist Party Central Committee, defended the Soviet move and said that Lithuania's declaration of independence meant a loss of preferred prices and favorable trade conditions.

"This would sharply, catastrophically affect the republic's affairs and the living standards of its people," he said.

Girenko denied Moscow had imposed a total economic boycott, saying that only oil and natural gas were affected.

"This is only a small part of the products that are supplied," he said. "Plans for a total blockade don't exist."

The streets of Vilnius, the Lithuanian capital, were calm Sunday, with people walking rather than using cars as they coped with stringent gasoline rationing that permits about 7 gallons per month for private cars.

Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia are all trying to restore the independence they lost in 1940 when they were occupied and forcibly annexed to the Soviet Union. Lithuania has declared independence, Estonia has dropped enforcement of the Soviet Constitution, and Latvia is expected to declare its freedom from the Soviet Union on May 3.

Lithuanian Deputy Premier Romualdas Ozolas charged Saturday that the Kremlin was implementing a full economic embargo, halting all rail and truck traffic.

Pope seeks meeting of European bishops

BRATISLAVA, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Pope John Paul II announced plans Sunday for an unprecedented European-wide meeting of bishops to discuss spreading the church's message across the continent after the fall of Communist regimes.

A spokesman also disclosed that the Roman Catholic leader would visit Cuba in December.

At an outdoor Mass later in Bratislava, which drew several hundred thousand faithful on a rain-drenched field, the pope lauded the perseverance of Roman Catholics and gave special thanks to Czechoslovakia's youth, who sparked the peaceful November revolution.

"I am thinking of the young people, whom others tried to lead astray, but who did not lose their thirst for truth, justice and love, and who, in the light of such values, became the agents of recent changes," he said.

The 69-year-old pontiff, ending a two-day tour of Czechoslovakia, left for Rome later Sunday from Bratislava, 35 miles northeast of Vienna.

He was seen off by Prime Minister Marian Calfa, who said the visit had "strengthened the feeling of togetherness in all of us."

The pope made his announcement of a synod as he visited a Moravian shrine in the city of Velehrad, 90 miles from Bratislava. The shrine was dedicated to Cyril and Methodius, two patron saints of Europe.

"We could find no better occasion for an announcement that intimately concerns this continent, which throughout the centuries has been torn by wars, but also blessed with a presence and work of countless saints who sowed the gospel seeds far and wide."

French TV shows Ceausescus begging for mercy, weeping

PARIS (AP) — Romanian dictator Nicolae Ceausescu wept silently and his wife Elena begged for mercy as soldiers readied them for the firing squad, according to footage of their execution broadcast Sunday.

Extracts of the graphic 90-minute videotape were aired exclusively by the French television network TF1. They are the most detailed look yet at the execution Dec. 25 at a military base outside Bucharest. The Ceausescus were executed days after being toppled by a popular revolution.

"Don't attack us! We have the right to die the way we want," Elena Ceausescu told soldiers and the 10-person civilian-military tribunal that sentenced the couple to death.

"Children ..." Mrs. Ceausescu sniffed at the soldiers who tied her hands behind her back. "You are bruising my hands. This is shameful. Why, why? I raised you all like a mother."

Nicolae Ceausescu, who ruled Romania with an iron fist for a quarter-century, struggled briefly with the soldiers but said nothing. Tears rolled down his cheeks.

Soldiers placed the couple, who were not blindfolded, against a brick wall and others rapidly opened fire, emptying their magazines. The Ceausescus crumpled under the bullets, which also peppered the brick wall.

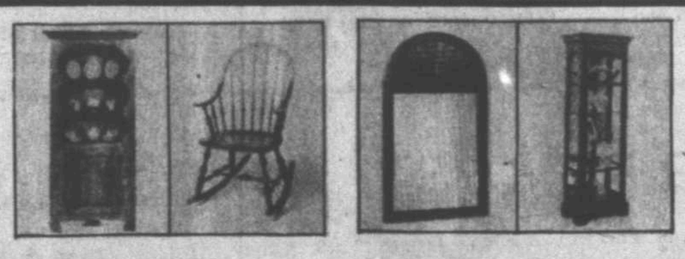

A medic then looked for signs of life in the eyes of Elena Ceausescu as blood poured from her head. He found none.

Subsequent images showed Nicolae Ceausescu embalmed and prepared for burial. His face appeared broken and gray.

New radiotelescope will rise from wreckage

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — George Seielstad stood numb as he looked upon the wreckage of his "one-of-a-kind" radiotelescope set in a valley of the rugged Allegheny Mountains.

The radiotelescope, which is as long as a football field, had collapsed in on itself one cool November night in 1988, the result of metal fatigue after 26 years of searching the heavens from a special "radio quiet zone" about 220 miles west of Washington, D.C.

"I was speechless and felt total disbelief. That telescope was one of a kind," said Seielstad, director of the National Radio Astronomy Observatory at Green Bank.

But the heap of twisted metal has given scientists a stellar opportunity. Plans are under way for a radiotelescope to tower 35 stories above and 330 feet around isolated Deer Creek Valley.

By 1995, the $75 million telescope should be ready to map the undiscovered universe by listening to the radio waves of outer space instead of peering into it.

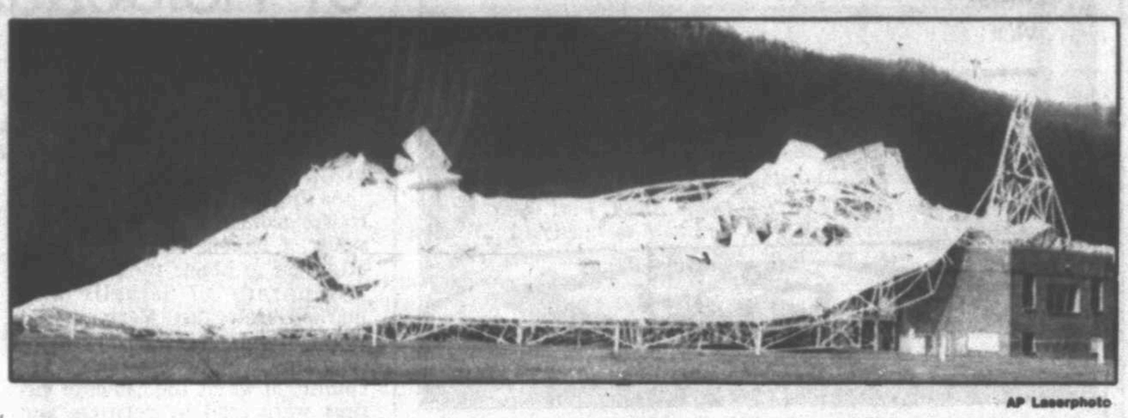

"We're making something that will define the state-of-the-art radiotelescope technology to take us well into the next century," Seielstad said.

Astronomers said the telescope's technical advancements will open more doors to understanding the evolution of the universe and composition of gases between galaxies. Scientists also can pursue more in-depth studies of pulsars, small and quick-moving stars.

The first telescope, completed in 1962 for $850,000, detected radio signals from far beyond the Milky Way and helped unlock the secrets to pulsars and quasars.

The new telescope will be designed to receive more and clearer signals with a solid surface of about 2,000 individually controlled panels to counteract the sagging effects of gravity as the telescope moves.

"It will be 10 times more sensitive than anything else we have on Earth," said Ludwig Oster, program manager for the National Science Foundation, which is funding the project. "It will be on the cutting edge of technology and will do research that can't be done anywhere else. We can look further back in time toward the 'Big Bang.'"

Scientists say a new, bigger telescope will be built on the same site where a 26-year-old radio telescope collapsed at Green Bank, W.Va. in November 1988. The instrument had a diameter of 300 feet.

Big radish surprises gardener

JONES CREEK, Texas (AP) — Wallace Schlemmer swings a chicken-wire gate to one side and steps into the fertile, black soil of his garden.

He walks toward a long row of lush greenery and stops to explain that hidden below a massive burst of leaves is his spring crop of cream-colored, carrot-like Chinese radishes. Here is where the rich earth recently offered up a surprise — a single, foot-long radish that weighed a whopping 2 pounds.

"I just couldn't believe that that booger got that big," says 67-year-old Schlemmer, who in his boots, denim shirt and well-worn and much-loved hat looks as though he just stepped off the set of "Lonesome Dove."

"I was thinning 'em out and it had protruded 3 or 4 inches above the ground," Schlemmer says of his discovery. "But I couldn't see it because there were so many radish leaves down in there.

"When I felt it, at first I thought it was a stob or something I had driven in the ground. When I realized it was a radish, I had to be real careful. If you're not careful, sometimes they'll pull in two when you try to pull them out of the ground.

"And, oh did I ever work on that baby to get it out whole."

Schlemmer says he was introduced to Chinese radishes last year.

"A friend of mine in town said, 'Let me show you what I lucked into.' He pulled one of them up and it tasted real good," Schlemmer recounts. "So this year he brought me a couple of packages of seeds and I planted 'em.

"Now we eat them in salads every night. I don't know what I'm gonna do when they play out. I used to raise the little red ones, but they gave me indigestion and I don't like them. So I just quit foolin' with them."

Schlemmer's every step is shadowed by Curly, a bright-eyed dog who is part Chow and part timber wolf, Schlemmer says.

When Schlemmer pauses outside his garden, Curly positions himself close to his master's blue-jeaned legs. The adoring dog shoots Schlemmer a look that means only one thing.

"You want a peanut, Curly?" Schlemmer asks, nonchalantly.

Curly's bushy, salt-and-pepper tail waves wildly back and forth and he rears up, placing a paw on Schlemmer's hand.

Schlemmer, smiling, reaches into his shirt pocket to retrieve a peanut, shells it and feeds Curly its red-skinned contents. The dog gulps it down in an instant.

"He stays right with me every step I move," Schlemmer says.

Schlemmer has several garden patches where his green thumb is producing wonderful results. Some of his produce includes sweet onions, cabbage, cauliflower, broccoli, brussel sprouts, mustard greens, leeks, pole beans, collards, sweet potatoes, tomatoes and a peculiar variety of bean with a pod that measures 8-10 inches in length. It contains four magenta-colored beans a little larger than a big lima bean.

Since Schlemmer isn't sure the beans are edible, he dries the huge pods intact and hands them out as noisy novelties that rattle when shaken.

Schlemmer kneels near an outside faucet to wash the dirt from several "standard-sized" radishes he has pulled from his garden. He heads inside the house and takes a knife to the giant radish he so proudly displayed a few moments earlier.

"I want you to see how good these are," he says. "They're for eating purposes, and I'd rather we eat this big one than let it go bad."

Like the man who cultivated it, the radish has a lot of zing.

Plain HORSE Sense

For 10-year-old Chris Stephens, riding horses has become old hat.

"I've been on them for awhile," said Chris, a third-grader at Sam Houston Elementary School. "I like trotting. It's fast."

Horseback-riding youngsters in West Texas are nothing new, of course — a lot of little buckaroos have been in the saddle as long as they've been able to walk.

But unlike Chris, most buckaroos don't have to contend with cerebral palsy.

Chris and about 30 other handicapped youngsters ride horses twice a week at the Midland Cerebral Palsy Center.

Debbie Newcum, coordinator of the center's Therapeutic Horseback Riding Program, said riding is good physical and emotional therapy for children with many types of disabilities.

"It's kind of like therapy in disguise," said Ms. Newcum, an occupational therapist at the center. "You're providing a functional activity where their mind is not on the exercise — it's something fun.

"We work on the same goals that we work on in physical and occupational therapy — balance, strength and coordination."

Ms. Newcum said the center's four horses — three mares and a miniature horse — were all gifts. Not all of them, however, have shown a particular fondness for either children or physical therapists.

"When I first started, this one horse chased me all around the back yard," Ms. Newcum said. "She'd get right up to me...and try to kick me. Let's just say she's in need of further training."

Needless to say, the children don't ride that horse.

Fortunately,the other mares have been docile and cooperative partners in the therapy program.

The program started several years ago, Ms. Newcum said, when a local horseowner would bring a horse to the Cerebral Palsy Center for children to ride. After that, horse loans eventually evolved into horse donations.

The center, which opened in 1956, is a private, non-profit organization funded by donations. Ms. Newcum said the center annually serves between 200 and 250 children with cerebral palsy and other disabilities.

The therapeutic riding program has proven popular among the center's clients, Ms. Newcum said.

"A lot of these kids can't do a lot of the things their peers and siblings do — it gives them a chance to do something that they can show off to the other kids," she said.

Ms. Newcum said finding horses for the riding program usually isn't difficult, but finding a place to keep them can get tricky. Right now, the horses are stabled by north Midland residents who live adjacent to the site of a proposed junior high school.

DEATHS

Charlene Shepherd

Services for Mrs. Ernest L. "Charlene" Shepherd of Midland will be held at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday at the Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with the Rev. Bob Porterfield officiating. Burial will follow at Evergreen Cemetery in Stanton with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Mrs. Shepherd died Saturday at a local hospital.

She was born Aug. 10, 1926 in Stanton and had lived there until she was four years old. At that time she moved to Midland with her family. She attended school here and graduated from Midland High School in 1944. She married Ernest Leonard Shepherd on Nov. 19, 1948 in Midland and had lived lived here ever since. She worked for Midland Hardware for many years and also was employed with the Midland Tax Office.

She was a member of Epsilon Delta Sorority and First Baptist Church.

Mrs. Shepherd was preceded in death by her husband on April 6 of this year.

Survivors include two sons, Bob Shepherd and Jim Shepherd, both of Midland; one sister, Delphya Reynolds of Midland; two grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

Pallbearers will be Tom Shepherd, Bob King, Virgil Stewart, Kenny Venske, Copper Daugherty and O.W. "Preacher" Roberts.

Terry E. Stewart

Graveside services for Terry Eldon Stewart of Midland, infant son of Angela Smith, will be at 10 a.m. today at the Fairview Cemetery with Lucian Rudd, pastor of Ranchland Heights Baptist Church, officiating. Ellis Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

The child died Thursday at a local hospital.

Survivors include the mother, Angela Smith of Midland; two sisters, Tifany Smith and Dasha Smith, both of Midland; and grandparents, James and Cecilia Stewart of Midland.

Eda Vietmeier

Eda Vietmeier, mother of Mrs. Dorothy Clader of Midland, died Saturday at a local nursing home.

Burial will be in Jordanville, N.Y.

Local arrangements are being handled by Ellis Funeral Home.

Eddie Lee Atchison

Funeral arrangements for Eddie Lee Atchison, 38, are pending with Baker-Jackson Funeral Home.

He died Sunday at a local hospital.

HORSE: Center's riders work towards May show

(From 1B)

"If they put that school there, I don't know what we're going to do," Ms. Newcum said. Neighborhood residents have told school board members that they might not be able to keep their horses if a school is built nearby.

Meanwhile, therapy goes on. And center employees are convinced of its effectiveness.

"I really think it's very effective if it's applied correctly," said Melissa Griffin, a physical therapist at the center. "Even if we (the therapists) have no input, the kids are getting something out of it from the movement of the horse and the warmth of the horse."

Ms. Newcum agreed.

"There's a certain movement that a horse makes which can't be duplicated by equipment," she said. "It relaxes kids with spastic muscles."

She said the idea of therapeutic horseback riding has grown in popularity in recent years and estimated that there are more than 20 therapeutic riding programs statewide.

She said some of the children at the center have been riding for three years and have grown proficient enough to warrant their entry in a horse show next month.

For all the physical benefits of riding, she said, it is perhaps the psychological benefit which is the most important.

"Their self-confidence has changed a lot," she said. "It takes them about a year of riding before they're confident enough to trot. They almost get kind of cocky now."

Texas captures academic gold metal

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — High school senior David Campbell is a so-so student with a C average, but he helped pull Texas to a first-place finish in the 1990 Academic Decathlon Sunday.

"I don't really think that grades measure intelligence," Campbell said. "I struggle with laziness myself, but this has given me the opportunity to prove myself."

The gold medal in the best overall student category hung around Campbell's neck as his teammates surrounded him.

The team from Lake Highlands High School in Dallas clinched first place with 46,627 points and won a trip to the White House. They'll be received by President Bush in the Oval Office on Thursday.

Laguna Hills High School in Laguna Hills, Calif., finished a close second with 46,035 points. Third was Mountain View school from Mesa, Ariz., with 45,949.

Nine-member teams from 39 high schools nationwide have put in extra hours after school and reserved Saturday afternoons to prepare for the annual contest, which began in 1968 in Orange County, California. It became a national event in 1982.

Teams were grilled for two days on a variety of subjects, ranging from the fine arts to mathematics. The competition ended this year with a Super Quiz on American Indians.

Each student was graded on a seven-minute interview, a one-hour essay and an impromptu speech. They were tested in economics, fine arts, language, literature, mathematics, science and social science.

The competition isn't just for the best and the brightest. It's a real team effort, with students with A, B and C averages competing against each other in separate categories and contributing to the overall team score.

"I love being with my team," said Campbell. "Our whole team is real consistent. It's a team thing."

Preparing the students for the competition was like a marathon which paid off, said Texas coach Carole Buchanan. It was the first time Lake Highlands had won the Texas contest and earned a spot in the national competition.

"We worked hard and we knew we had a chance to win. But we all knew it was going to be very close with California," she said.

Laguna High School in California finished a close second with 46,035 points.

"We didn't know until the last moment when they announced California was second. Then we could believe it," Buchanan said.

Laguna coach Kathy Lane didn't hide her disappointment at the second-place finish. Texas and California have been close rivals in the competition, with each state winning the national competition four times before. Ms. Lane vowed to be back again next year to win the gold.

"We have the spirit. We're going to use it to plan strategy for next year," she said.

Midland Exxon contributes $20,000 for park upgrade

Staff Report

Exxon's Southwestern Production Division and Western Exploration Division, which are based in Midland, have made a $20,000 contribution to Keep Midland Beautiful for major enhancements to the city's 55-acre Windlands Park.

Exxon and city are each contributing $20,000 for the improvements to the park, with additional funds to be raised later in the year by the city. The improvements include the planting of mature trees, landscaping of park areas, and the construction of a pavilion which will include a large gazebo. The enhancements will be completed in two stages over the next 10 months.

The project was dedicated Sunday at a special ceremony at the park. Following the dedication, Exxon employee volunteers planted 38 trees.

The second phase of the Windlands Park project is scheduled to be completed in February of 1991, and will include additional trees, landscaping, installation of an irrigation system and the construction of the pavilion and gazebo, restrooms and shade ramadas.

"Enhancing our parks helps us meet the city's developmental goal of providing additional recreational areas," said Robert Olsen, Exxon's Southwestern Production Division manager. "In adopting this park, we are pleased to provide ongoing support, and also co-sponsor these Earth Day activities with the city and with Keep Midland Beautiful, Inc. We look forward to seeing the improved Windlands Park facilities take shape and to providing the people of Midland additional opportunities to enjoy outdoor acitivities."

Mayor Carroll Thomas added, "On behalf of the city and all the citizens of Midland, I would like to express our gratitude and excitement over the opportunity to participate with Exxon in this project. The beautification project will become the centerpiece of one of Midland's most active community parks. The involvement of local Exxon employees is a testimony to their civic pride."

Democratic committee may not find a welcome mat

HOUSTON (AP) — Members of the Democratic National Committee plan to visit New Orleans as a potential 1992 convention site, but officials there wonder whether whether the Democrats are interested in fun and games or a working visit.

"They're not welcome," one New Orleans official involved in the city's bid to host the 1992 Democratic National Convention told the Houston Chronicle's Washington bureau.

The Democrats have been assured free room and board at four of the city's best hotels for the three-day inspection visit.

But some of them have asked to extend their stay over the weekend for the start of the annual New Orleans jazz festival.

It is one of the busiest times of the year for the city, and the hotels have complained that bumping paying customers for two nights to accommodate the Democrats is bad enough without having to spring for a weekend stay as well.

"We're trying to discourage them from staying over. This is a site visit, not a ... whatever," said the New Orleans official, adding that Democrats had rejected a New Orleans' proposal that they visit in January.

About 75 members of the DNC's convention site selection group — including staff and technical advisers — are expected to arrive in New Orleans on Wednesday.

Yolanda Caraway, senior adviser to Democratic Party chairman Ron Brown, said she was surprised at the New Orleans attitude.

"We told them we couldn't do it in January. But they're the ones that suggested this weekend, not us. If they've got a problem with it, then they ought to tell us ... And I don't think any committee member expects to stay free over the weekend," she said.

The complaint from New Orleans is just one example of the problems the Democrats have encountered this year as they decide which city — New Orleans, Houston, Cleveland or New York — will host the 1992 convention.

Detroit, facing an $81 million budget deficit, dropped out two weeks ago complaining that the party's site selection process is too costly.

In addition to concern about a minimum bid of $15 million required as each city's share of convention costs, some local officials are apparently fed up with the cost of financing the party's convention-site scouting trips.

New York and Cleveland each spent more than $300,000 on the site group's visit there, while Houston shelled out $100,000.

New Orleans, which hosted the 1988 Republican convention, will spend less if possible, one business leader said.

Houston has told the Democrats that its bid for underwriting a convention at the Astrodome will not exceed $12 million, which is short of the $15 million the Democrats want.

New York, by comparison, is offering at least $22.7 million, which may be the primary reason it is considered by some as the city to beat in the competition.

"New Orleans will not get into a bidding war with other cities," said Sen. John Breaux, D-La. "If (the selection) is based on money, then they should go someplace else."

Eight cities, including Houston, were not asked to submit a financial bid when they were made preliminary presentations several weeks ago to host the 1992 Republican convention.

Ms. Caraway defended the party's procedures against criticism by the competing cities.

"It was their choice to bid. We sent out requests for proposals that laid out exactly what we were looking for," she said.

"They knew the size of the committee, what we expected from them, everything. So I don't understand why they're complaining now. It's not like they haven't done this before."

LBJ not responsible for '48 'theft', says Texas historian, political boss Parr was

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Lyndon Johnson didn't steal the 1948 U.S. Senate election, as a recent biography contends, but a political boss might have rigged the election to "get" Johnson's opponent, says a close Johnson associate and former White House aide.

Dr. Joe B. Frantz, former chair of the history department at the University of Texas, contends the election was stolen for Johnson, possibly without his knowledge, by a disgruntled South Texas political boss eager to derail Johnson's opponent, Coke Stevenson of Junction.

Johnson won the election by 87 votes out of almost a million cast, collecting 99 percent of the South Texas vote.

"There's no question the election was stolen," Frantz said, but he contends that political boss George Parr filched it to spite Stevenson, not necessarily to help Johnson.

And it may have been without Johnson's knowledge, Frantz said.

Frantz, Turnbull Professor of History at Corpus Christi State University, put together the Oral History Project for the Johnson Presidential Library in Austin.

Frantz, who was a White House aide during Johnson's presidency, taped interviews with nearly 1,000 people for the library, including Johnson's political enemies.

He said his information about Parr's political vendetta against Stevenson came from an interview he conducted with Stevenson when the former governor was in his 80s. Stevenson died in 1975 at age 87.

"It would have been in the early 1970s," Frantz told The Associated Press. "He set me down and he said, 'I'm going to give you the straight story,' and he said, 'You are not going to take any notes and you're not going to tape anything and it will be my word against yours and I am the governor.' In other words he has more credibility than I do, and he pretty well told me the whole story."

Stevenson and Parr had always been close allies, Stevenson told Frantz, until Parr asked Stevenson, who was then governor, to name a certain man judge at Laredo.

Stevenson told Parr that "the fellow was an absolute rascal and into every sort of political sin available," Frantz said.

Parr reportedly responded, "That's the man I want."

Stevenson refused to name the man judge.

"All right, Coke," Parr reportedly told Stevenson. "You'll be sorry."

"And, by God," Stevenson told Frantz, "I was."

"The feeling is that Parr decided, 'I'm going to teach Coke Stevenson a lesson and, at the same time, get in very good with the new senator from Texas.' "

Frantz said he also interviewed the man who was responsible for disposing of the votes from the contested box before a recount could be held.

He said he came away from the encounter convinced that the South Texans were guilty of stuffing ballot box 13 with illegal votes. The box disappeared after the count.

"They were a bunch of rascals," he said.

Frantz said he revealed the information for the first time publicly at a recent West Texas Historical Society banquet because of accusations made against Johnson by Robert A. Caro in "Means of Ascent," the second volume in Caro's biography of LBJ.

Frantz said he thought Caro's characterization of Johnson was heavily slanted against Johnson in the first book. In the second book, which details the 1948 race, "It was just annoyance that Caro's acting as if Johnson had pulled off the dirtiest steal in history. He doesn't see things in the context of the times," Frantz said.

"We didn't know what a secret ballot was," Frantz said. "I grew up in Weatherford, and all the precincts used to vote in the same room in the courthouse and all the courthouse hangers-on would stand around and watch you."

It was not at all unusual for campaigners to know how a vote was going before the balloting ended, he said, and for people to round up votes midway through the voting to counteract trends.

"The secret ballot came in in Texas in the 1960s," he said.

"I was sort of amused by Robert Caro's almost innocence in how dirty all this was. When the national press seized on it, it's like he expected some sort of local paradox down here. Actually it's no dirtier than anywhere else."

Frantz says Johnson's 1941 unsuccessful run for the U.S. Senate was stolen from him. "It was just every-year politics in Texas," he said.

Parr, who Frantz said he was not able to find at the time, died in the mid-1970s. He came from a strongly political family in South Texas and was characterized as a "political boss" in Duvall and Jim Wells counties in the 1940s.

When the election-stealing charges first surfaced after the 1948 election, Parr's nephew, Archer Parr, said the Parr family "had as much to do with (it) as any citizen of Dallas." Dallas is hundreds of miles away.

Texas politics, Frantz said, made Caro's "hair stand on end, and he decided this was the worst place that he's ever been."

"This is an assault on Johnson and it is a beautifully written book and it will be the starting point," he said. "If you take Johnson with his warts — and he had them — (his life) is still a remarkable achievement."

Contrary to biographer Robert Caro's controversial account of Texas' 1948 U.S. Senate election between Lyndon Johnson and Coke Stevenson, LBJ did not steal the election, says Joe B. Frantz, a former history department chairman at the University of Texas at Austin. Frantz contends politcal boss George Parr was, in part, responsible for the mysterious disappearance of vote tallies in Jim Wells County.

Horace Hatfield strives for authenticity in his hobby of restoring chuck wagons. The 46-year old West Texan, who began restoring broken down wagons less than a year ago, calls his weekend hobby "good therapy."

Texan allows old wagons to take him for a ride

By Larry Zelisko

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Restoring wagons started out as a hobby for Horace Hatfield, but it's gotten out of control.

Hatfield, a 46-year-old general contractor, bought his first chuck wagon less than a year ago. Now, his construction shop is full of wagons in various stages of restoration.

"This started out as a hobby and the hobby got out of hand. I've got so many of them, I've got to sell some," he says. "I'm not in the wagon business, I'm in the construction business. We work on these on weekends, in the evenings and when we have free time."

Hatfield became interested in restoring chuck wagons because he saw how much fun a friend in Amarillo was having with one.

His wagon is outfitted with cooking utensils like those used in the 1890s to early 1900s, when he believes his wagon was built.

Finding original hardware is the biggest challenge in restoring a wagon, he says. The woodwork he can duplicate and many of the metal parts can be welded, but many folks, himself included, prefer the original parts.

"Ranches got away from using chuck wagons in the late 1960s and '70s," says Hatfield, who worked on the 6666 Ranch for two years in the mid-1960s. "But now a lot of them are going back to using them when they're working cattle."

Dig traces roots of intrigue

By Mimi Mann

SOUTH SAKKARA, Egypt (AP) — More than 4,200 years ago, Pharaoh Pepy I heard one of his queens was plotting against him. He sent Weni the Scribe to find out.

Weni did. History didn't.

Guilty or innocent? Cunning or faithful?

Pepy's hapless queens have been suspects ever since.

Now a French-Egyptian archaeological team, digging and recording a queenly pyramid field 20 miles south of Cairo, is on its way to unraveling one of ancient Egypt's most tantalizing intrigues.

"We have mention of three Pepy queens" in ancient texts, "and now we have three burials," said Vassil Dobrev, a Bulgarian-born Egyptologist on the team led by French historian Jean Leclant. "As we search on, we'll find the answers."

Which was the queen in question, and did she do it?

Weni went to his grave with the secret, leaving a record of his investigation that ended: "I know the truth."

The scribe's silence did not enhance the pharaoh's reputation. Pepy I, who died in 2255 B.C. after a 34-year reign, is remembered for two things: an ability to keep Egypt's far-flung, troublesome colonies in line and an inability to do the same with his queens.

Early grave robbers, peasants revolting against the pharaohs and generations of stone thieves left few clues to the alleged conspiracy intact. The pyramids of Pepy's queens were so completely ransacked that restorers work alongside archaeologists to minimize the danger of falling walls.

Generations of sycophantic tomb artists depicted ancient Egyptian queens as perfect mates: beautiful, submissive, adoring.

Egyptologist Zahi Hawass said the story of Pepy and his queen shows that some ancient royal marriages were less than ideal, especially since pharaohs had to deal with multiple wives and had both major and minor queens.

A pharaoh's chief queen, as consort of a god, received special privileges, including the title "great royal wife." Because of the numerous other royal offspring, a young pharaoh-to-be often married his sister to enhance his right to the throne.

A few queens even managed to rule Egypt.

"We can understand the queens' importance by their tombs," said Hawass, who directs the pharaonic cemeteries of Giza and Sakkara to the south. "The largest was the pharaoh's tomb. After all, he ruled Egypt. His tomb had to show that power.

"But directly after his tomb in size came the queens', then the princes', then the nobles' and officials'; a cemetery easily shows their ranks in life."

Allegations of a palace plot by a main queen was taken so seriously that Weni was allowed inside the forbidden harem to investigate the rumors. Hawass said Weni left no record of the queen's name, referring to her only as a "main consort" of the pharaoh.

Until this dig, the only Pepy wives whose names were known were Ankh-nes-meryre I and Ankh-nes-meryre II. Both were recorded by an official named Khui, who said the king married two of his family members. It is unlikely either sister would have been the main queen because their blood wasn't royal enough.

So who was the alleged plotter? Dobrev and his colleagues, who are at the end of the dig for the season, hope the answer lies in the third pyramid.

AP Laserphoto

Officials of the Egyptian Antiquities Organization work inside ruins of a newly found pyramid that archeologists hope will help solve a centuries-old crime story involving a queen of Pharoah Pepy I.

The French-Egyptian expedition first came to South Sakkara, site of the pyramids of Pepy I and his pharaoh sons Merenre and Pepy II, in 1965.

Its task was to record the last of the Old Kingdom's great pyramid complexes on the edge of a 3-square-mile stretch of desert graves spanning 3,000 years.

Pepy I's pyramid proved particularly important because of intricately carved texts of spells, rituals and myths designed to help propel the soul of the dead pharaoh into the afterlife.

For two decades, archaeologists were too busy to look for his queens, but by 1988 high technology was available to help. Experts combed 50 acres of rubble-strewn dunes adjacent to Pepy's pyramid with ultrasound equipment.

Soundings monitored by French technicians pinpointed two good possibilities. The team started digging, and found two queens' pyramids.

A portion of a third pyramid was discovered last year, wedged between the first two and roughly the same size, about 66 feet tall.

Three pyramids. Three queens.

Diggers began excavating the new pyramid early this year, uncovering pottery shards, a chapel, a passageway and a burial chamber.

By the time digging ended March 28, there were two important clues that could help solve the mystery of the accused queen.

One was the name Nub-Unet on wall reliefs. The queen was unknown to Egyptologists and may have been the royal wife Weni described. She was buried in the eastern pyramid.

The second clue was an empty basalt sarcophagus, its lid buried beneath two massive boulders that once closed the burial chamber of the middle pyramid.

Dobrev hopes the lid, when uncovered, will bear the name of the queen.

Airlines slow to commit to high-tech detectors

WASHINGTON (AP) — Resistance from airlines, airports and foreign governments is hindering federal efforts to install sophisticated bomb detectors at high-risk airports.

The machines, which scan luggage with neutrons, are very costly, bulky and not foolproof, critics say. They can't be used on passengers, and in the two airports where they're installed they are inspecting only a fraction of the total luggage load.

But proponents say the devices should be used until better anti-terrorist technology comes along. They cite sobering statistics to make their point: three bombs planted aboard passenger jets killed 548 people during the past 16 months, and bombs were found or threats made affecting several other flights.

James Busey, head of the Federal Aviation Administration, has ordered U.S. airlines to buy and install at airports scores of the nearly $1 million thermoneutron analysis (TNA) units or any other machine that can meet its specifications.

France, Japan and possibly other countries are developing competing systems, FAA officials say. And a Massachusetts company has placed portable units using other technologies at some embassies and foreign airports, but only for hand-carried items and passengers.

Plastic explosives that can be molded into virtually any shape and elude detection in hand or ordinary X-ray searches have replaced hijacking as the major threat to world aviation.

Despite the threat, the TNA devices are in use at only two of the 40 world airports the FAA considers most likely to be used by terrorists. Miami has one, as does New York's John F. Kennedy airport. But at JFK, fewer than 500 of the estimated 75,000 daily pieces of luggage are inspected by the TNA machine.

The TNAs are built by Science Applications International Corp. of San Diego. The machines, which are radioactive and cannot be used to scan passengers, put out a neutron cloud that penetrates and interacts with elements of explosives, enabling the machine to identify them.

The FAA has purchased six TNA units which it eventually will turn over to airlines or airports, and is expected soon to issue deadlines for airlines to buy their own. The third FAA unit is to be installed in London next month.

But the agency is having difficulty placing the remaining three.

Airlines think the government, since it is most often the target, should pay for all of the detectors. Airports say they don't have space for the 10-ton TNA units which are about the size of a small bedroom. Some foreign governments don't trust them.

Busey said the installed units are meeting expectations. But he told the Presidential Aviation Security and Terrorism Commission earlier this month that he will review his directives, partly because effectiveness of the machines may be compromised by all the publicity they have generated.

Aussies to mark Gallipoli anniversary

By Emel Anil

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — At dawn on April 25, 1915, Allied soldiers waded onto the Gallipoli Peninsula in an invasion that would cost hundreds of thousands of lives and end in failure.

Seventy-five years later, veterans of the campaign, government oficials and tourists will come from as far as Australia and New Zealand for a commemoration some Turks liken to a second invasion.

All hotels and boarding houses have been fully booked for months, said Muzaffer Ecemis, governor of Canakkale province, which includes the Dardanelles Strait and the peninsula north of it.

Visiting dignitaries will be housed on a cruise ship. They include Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain, the prime minister and defense minister of Australia, New Zealand's governor general and delegations from France and West Germany.

Two Australian warships and a submarine set out from Sydney. France and Britain also are sending two warships each, with military bands and honor guards.

In World War I, the Ottoman Turkish Empire was allied with Germany and Austria against Britain, its dominions, France and Russia.

About 70 veterans of Gallipoli, aged 91 to 103, will be the most honored guests.

Australian newspaper reports said one veteran, John McCleery of Perth, planned to celebrate his 103rd birthday at "ANZAC Cove," the place where Australian and New Zealand soldiers landed on his 28th birthday.

The object of the Gallipoli campaign, which military historians call the first combined naval and land operation of modern warfare, was to open the Turkish straits to Russia; capture Istanbul, then known as Constantinople in the West; and take the Ottoman Empire out of the war.

An Allied naval effort to break through the Dardanelles, the ancient Hellespont, had been halted after the loss of three battleships.

Turks held their own victory celebrations March 18 to mark the end of that battle, when they stopped the British navy from reaching the Marmara Sea.

Gallipoli then became a battleground for nine months, until the invading forces were evacuated in December 1915 and January 1916.

Half a million soldiers from Britain, France, Australia, New Zealand and India fought on the peninsula and more than half became casualties, including 55,000 killed in battle, 10,000 listed as missing and 21,000 who died of disease, mainly dysentary.

An equal number of Turks were sent into battle. Estimates are that half were killed.

Historians still debate the mistakes made and opportunities missed by both sides.

Some say an Allied victory would have shortened the long, costly war by two or three years and prevented or delayed the Bolshevik revolution in Russia.

It was the only victory for the Turks in World War I and provided the self-confidence they needed to salvage a nation from the dismembered empire.

The battle also gave them a modern hero, Kemal Ataturk, who made his name as a military genius in Gallipoli. He later established Turkey, a predominantly Moslem country, as a secular republic with Western-style laws.

Australians celebrate each April 25 as a national holiday. Gallipoli was their first appearance on the global scene, and historians say it gave them a sense of pride.

Britain and France now are allied with Turkey in NATO, and Australia is a valued trading partner. Thousands of Turks have emigrated to Australia.

Huseyin Goseler, a Turk, and Jane Urwin, an Australian, will join the celebrations by getting married April 25 at an old fortress that overlooks the Dardanelles from the hills of Gallipoli.

Just in time to serve the visitors, they and another Australian have opened Bob's Burger Pub, named for Bob Hawke, prime minister of Australia.

Lawmaker sees U.S. benefiting from Eastern Europe's pollution

NEW YORK (AP) — An unusual financial arrangement devised to promote conservation in the Third World could help Eastern Europe begin to repair its badly damaged environment, a U.S. lawmaker says.

Rep. John LaFalce, D-N.Y., has proposed in a letter to President Bush that the United States initiate so-called debt-for-nature swaps with Eastern Europe to clean up what LaFalce said could be "the final and longest lasting legacy of the Stalinist period."

Under his proposal, the Eastern European countries' debts to the United States would be forgiven in exchange for their commitment to redirect the savings to cleaning up their environment.

LaFalce also proposed that a multinational environmental trust fund be set up for Eastern Europe.

"The problems seem to be very severe," said Peter Preuss, a toxicologist at the Environmental Protection Agency who recently visited Poland and Hungary.

In the Upper Silesia region of Poland, for example, researchers have observed an increase in mental retardation because of metal particulates in the air.

Life expectancy is decreasing in Hungary, and mothers are protesting about the respiratory problems that polluted air is causing their children, LaFalce said.

LaFalce's staff said legislation to provide for the debt swaps and the trust fund, to be administered by the new Central European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, will be introduced this month.

The encouragement of environmental clean-up projects in Eastern Europe could benefit American business, LaFalce said.

"Businesses in the United States have the experience and technology needed to deal with these problems," he said.

Women campaign to narrow gender gap

By Sharon Spivak
Copley News Service

It may be the year of the horse according to the Chinese calendar, but according to governor campaigns, this is the year of the woman.

This year, at least nine women are waging serious gubernatorial races among the 36 states holding such elections. With candidate filing periods not yet closed in many states — or still to open in some — there are indications that at least 15 women ultimately could be vying for governor.

"This is certainly the highest number of women who've fought for governorships," said Chung Seto, director of communications for the National Women's Political Caucus.

Last year, women claimed about 17 percent of the seats in state legislatures and 5 percent of the seats in the U.S. House of Representatives. Executive offices have remained among the most elusive.

Since 1925, when Wyoming's Nellie Taylor Ross became the first woman in the nation to be elected governor — she replaced her deceased husband — only eight other women have won the title.

All but one were Democrats. Just five were elected on their own — without succeeding their husbands. No more than three have ever served at one time.

Among those waging campaigns this year are both of the women who currently serve as governors.

Vermont's Madeleine Kunin, a Democrat and the first woman governor elected to serve three terms, came up from the Legislature, then became lieutenant governor. Nebraska's Kay Orr, a former state treasurer who won the seat in 1986, is the first Republican woman governor and the only woman to have run against another woman for the post.

IN CALIFORNIA, former San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein is campaigning against state Attorney General John Van de Kamp to become the Democratic nominee for the governor's election.

Dick Dresner, a New York City-based political consultant and pollster who is working for Orr and for U.S. Sen. Pete Wilson, the Republican who will face the winner of the Feinstein-Van de Kamp contest in the November general election, says the gender issue cuts both ways for gubernatorial candidates.

"It certainly hurts in a state like Nebraska," he said of Orr. "I think it definitely hurts her. ... Kay Orr is a very good-looking woman. People, whether they like her or not, when you do focus groups, will comment on her hairdo or how she dresses."

Of the effect of gender on Feinstein's campaign, Dresner said: "Who knows? I really don't think it's much of a factor. Right now she's got this new, fresh-face syndrome. Probably it will wear off."

Of course, Feinstein's staff doesn't think her voter appeal is just a phase. But her campaign manager acknowledges that she could face certain obstacles as a woman running for executive office.

"Women have a more difficult time proving that they can manage in an executive capacity," said her manager, Darry Sragow. In Feinstein's case, however, that job may be less difficult because she had two decades of relevant experience in San Francisco, he said.

Other consultants maintain that men running against women face special problems, too. In such a case, it can be more difficult for the man to successfully conduct a critical, negative campaign.

BASED ON INTERVIEWS with a dozen secretaries of state, the Democratic and Republican national committees and women's political organizations, the San Diego Tribune compiled the following list of women who will join Feinstein, Kunin and Orr in 1990 gubernatorial battles:

Oregon Secretary of State Barbara Roberts, a Democrat from a well-known political family, is seeking to fill the seat of retiring Democratic Gov. Neil Goldschmidt.

Alaska state Sen. Arliss Sturgulewski is a Republican making her second try for the seat after defeating a former governor to win the Republican gubernatorial primary in 1986. Gov. Steve Cowper, to whom Sturgulewski lost by about 8,500 votes last time, is not seeking re-election.

State Treasurer Ann Richards won in a runoff campaign for the Democratic nomination in Texas. She gained a high profile from her acerbic keynote speech at the Democratic National Convention in 1988, in which she described George Bush as having been born "with a silver foot in his mouth."

State Auditor Barbara Hafer, a Republican who is promoting her support of legalized abortion, is seeking the top job in Pennsylvania.

In Iowa, Lt. Gov. Jo Ann Zimmerman is one of a potential slate of five Democrats vying in the primary. Zimmerman gained national attention in 1987 when she lost her home to a bank to pay off a bad farm loan, becoming a symbol of her state's farm crisis.

Massachusetts Lt. Gov. Evelyn Murphy, a Democrat who led the polls after Democratic governor and former presidential nominee Michael Dukakis announced his retirement, could face four or more Democratic opponents.

ACCORDING TO THE Republican Governors Association, other likely candidates for gubernatorial races include Florida Republican state Sen. Marlene Woodson-Howard, Idaho Republican state Sen. Rachel Gilbert, Kansas Democrat and state Treasurer Joan Finney, and New Hampshire Democrat Jeanne Shaheen.

Arizona Democrat Carolyn Warner, a former state school superintendent who lost the 1986 gubernatorial election in a three-way race, also is reported to be considering another run.

And in Massachusetts, a welfare recipient named Dorothy Stevens has announced a Democratic bid on a platform of raising the minimum wage to $10 per hour.

Since candidate filing periods haven't opened in many states and primary elections extend through late September, still more women could enter the fray.

The women they look to from history include Miriam "Ma" Ferguson, who was elected in 1925 as Texas governor as a surrogate for her husband, who could not run for re-election. Lurleen Wallace of Alabama, in the same situation, won election in 1966; she died in office in 1968.

CNS Graphic

ACCORDING TO THE Center for the American Woman and Politics and its National Information Bank on Women in Public Office, the first woman elected governor in her own right was Ella Grasso of Connecticut in 1974. The others were Washington state's Dixy Lee Ray, Kentucky's Martha Layne Collins, Kunin and Orr.

The gender gap has narrowed in other state offices.

Women have been elected to a state-government executive office at least once in 40 of the 50 states, according to the center.

In three states — Maine, New Hampshire and New Jersey — only the governor is elected statewide, and women have never held the seat, the center confirms.

Women have never been elected to statewide jobs in Alaska, Georgia, Illinois, Maryland, North Carolina, Utah and West Virginia.

The center, which tracks women in the political system, is part of the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers University.

Record number attends Annual Parade of Homes

By Elizabeth Edwin
Lifestyle Editor

For a day that started out cloudy and cold, then turned humid and hot, the 21st Annual Parade of Homes Sunday afternoon was a great success with a record number of approximately 1,000 people touring the homes. The event is sponsored by the Midland Junior Woman's Club and serves as their major fund-raiser.

This year, the event raised approximately $13,000 gross including $5,000 raised in scholarships, according to Lois Martin, publicity chairman for the event. Proceeds will benefit the Attention Deficit Disorder Association of Parents and Teachers, the Palmer Drug Abuse Program, the Problem Pregnancy Center and Special Care Infants.

The 1990 Parade of Homes got underway 7 p.m. Saturday with a Candlelight Tour for club members and special guests, followed by a reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Allen Teer.

Sunday, the homes were open for public touring from 1-5:30 p.m. Instead of long waiting lines as previous Parade of Homes viewers had experienced, this year's lines seemed to move at a steady pace with very few waiting periods, Ms. Martin said.

There were 65 workers, including Junior Woman's Club members, their spouses and former club members. Homeowners donating their homes for all to see during this year's benefit were Norma and Joel Castello, Flo and Max Curry, Elizabeth and Richard Long, and Jo Ann and Shelton Viney.

Tickets for the event were $7.50 per person. Ticket chairmen were Jeannie Mayne, Lyndolyn Plant and Stephanie Plant. Kathleen Haynes and Liz Rose wrote the program text. Florist for the homes were Classical Greenery and Imperial Peppertree.

Chairmen for the parade were Ms. Hayes and Cindy Zoller. President of the organization is Ms. Rose. Home chairmen were Peggy Kuss and Pam Walsh for the Castello home, Sherry Johnson and Ms. Mayne for the Curry home, Marsha Crawford and Susan Reeves for the Long home, and Lyndolyn Pervier and Martha Manulik for the Viney home.

Sponsors for this year's Parade of Homes were Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Kaufman and Parker and Parsley Petroleum Co. Patrons were Discovery Operating Inc., The Insurance Man & Associates, Dr. and Mrs. Tom McIntosh, Mobil Exploration & Producing U.S. Inc., Modern Appliance and Van Stavern Interiors.

Vos Savant considered Ms. know-it-all

Copley News Service

Marilyn vos Savant doesn't eat fish or have a particularly high forehead. She doesn't even have a college degree. The "world's smartest person" (as she is billed by her publisher) got her lofty title the hard way:

She learned it.

"As a child, I always strived to be smarter each day," said vos Savant, who writes the "Ask Marilyn" advice column in Parade magazine. "I learned to develop my brain power and strengthen my intelligence."

Apparently the mental push-ups worked. At 9, she scored the highest grade ever on the Stanford-Binet test, a standardized measurement of intelligence.

Vos Savant is currently promoting her recently published "Brain Building: Exercising Yourself Smarter."

She maintains that anybody — even the poor slob guzzling beer in front of the boob tube — can improve his or her intelligence in 12 weeks.

In fact, there are three exercises she guaranteed will bring on "instant smarts":

Stop using the phrase "this is my opinion" when talking to people.

"What you're really saying to them is you have no support for your views, that they're likely groundless," vos Savant said. "It tempers the authority in your statements."

Save broken telephones, clocks and other devices and appliances.

"Take them apart for the fun of it. The object is to demystify technology," she said. "After dismantling a blow dryer, it becomes clear that something didn't magically blow out hot air."

Get off the telephone.

"If you spend one hour a week or more with somebody on the phone, start getting together with them instead," she said. "On the phone, people tend to talk in ambiguities. Even writing a letter is better than using the phone because at least you can revise and perfect your message."

CNS Photo

Although Marilyn vos Savant doesn't even have a college degree, she is billed as the "world's smartest person" by her publisher.

Soft-spoken and a bit detached in manner, vos Savant looked more like a dinner host than genius author in low-cut black dress and high heels.

But she became dead serious when pooh-poohing the IQ and experimental tests on which she has consistently scored perfect or near-perfect numbers since she was in grade school.

"IQ tests aren't the Rosetta Stone or the uncoded DNA," she said, pulling on a strand of her wispy black hair. "They're a primitive means of measuring intelligence. But they're the only thing we have."

Never mind that her gray cells have been immortalized in the Guinness Book of World Records under the category "Highest IQ."

A perfect score on the Binet test doesn't prove one is a genius, just as a poor grade isn't in itself indicative of an inferior mind, she said.

"I've read that Thomas Edison was a rather inarticulate man who didn't do well at math or history in high school," vos Savant said. "But he had a constellation of abilities that went unrecorded by his teachers."

Maybe that's why her extraordinary scores on numerous IQ tests didn't translate into especially good grades in school or a successful college career.

She maintained a solid B average in high school and went on to study for two years at a community college.

It wasn't until years later — after marrying Dr. Robert Jarvik, the developer of the first artificial heart — that she began putting her brain power to good use by conducting seminars and writing feature articles on "exercising yourself smarter," she said.

Jarvik and vos Savant are a popular speaking team on the lecture circuit and were recently dubbed "the smartest couple in New York" by New York magazine.

But vos Savant said she tries to discourage such high-minded designations.

"Being called the smartest person alive trivializes what I'm trying to do," she said, noting that she tangled with Bantam Books, her publisher, because the cover of her new book "overstates" her intellectual powers.

For the record, she stressed that her last name really is vos Savant.

"It's just coincidence that the definition of savant is learned person, eminent scholar," she said.

DEAR ABBY

Comforting gifts of life come from death

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Last May, our 22-year-old son, Michael, was involved in a motorcycle accident. He was pronounced brain dead three days later. Because of an article he had read in your column, he carried an organ donor card in his wallet. The Lord took our precious son 10 days later, but we were comforted knowing that Michael gave two blind people the gift of sight, and a young father who had been on a kidney machine for three years is now living a normal life.

Van Buren

Abby, please let your readers know how to will their organs after death. — MICHAEL'S FATHER

DEAR FATHER: My heart goes out to you and your family on the loss of your beloved son. Because this is National Organ/Tissue Donor Awareness Week, may I again offer this beautiful essay written by Robert N. Test:

TO REMEMBER ME

At a certain moment a doctor will determine that my brain has ceased to function and that, for all intents and purposes, my life has stopped.

When that happens, do not attempt to instill artificial life into my body by the use of a machine. And don't call this my "deathbed." Call it my "bed of life," and let my body be taken from it to help others lead fuller lives.

Give my sight to a man who has never seen a sunrise, a baby's face or love in the eyes of a woman.

Give my heart to a person whose own heart has caused nothing but endless days of pain.

Give my blood to the teen-ager who has been pulled from the wreckage of his car, so that he might live to see his grandchildren play.

Give my kidneys to one who depends on a machine to exist from week to week.

Take my bones, every muscle, every fiber and nerve in my body and find a way to make a crippled child walk.

Explore every corner of my brain. Take my cells, if necessary, and let them grow so that someday a speechless boy will shout at the crack of a bat and a deaf girl will hear the sound of rain against her windows.

Burn what is left of me and scatter the ashes to the winds to help the flowers grow.

If you must bury something, let it be my faults, my weaknesses and all prejudice against my fellowman.

Give my soul to God.

If by chance you wish to remember me, do it with a kind deed or word to someone who needs you. If you do all I have asked, I will live forever.

Readers: Donor forms are available by writing to: The Living Bank, P.O. Box 6725, Houston, Texas 77265. I have carried a donor card for 20 years and feel there is nothing I can leave after my death that will be of greater value.

This is strictly a non-profit organization, operating on a shoestring as a public service, so please be a sport and send a dollar or two along with your request. It's tax-deductible.

Write to: Dear Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. Personal replies require a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Office decor tells people who you are

Copley News Service

How you decorate your office tells people who you really are.

According to Working Woman magazine, there are three styles found in offices these days.

One is the Edwardian social-club look that screams "power office" and acts as a substitute home. Executives who have these offices pack them with real oak furniture, paintings, collectibles from around the world and sit behind grand French-style desks.

Then there's the Peter Pan syndrome, where executives think they're decorating their college dorm. When Peter Pan execs decorate the office, it's a chance to shed tastefulness and put up things such as a lifesize cardboard dog wearing a fez.

And then there's the practical '90s worker with the form-function office. Workers who have form-function offices pooh-pooh the idea of decorating and think bare walls and productivity are cause-and-effect related.

But its best to put something on the walls because bare walls make

Coody gets win

AUSTIN (AP) — Charles Coody and Dale Douglass completed a runaway victory in the Legends of Golf tournament Sunday, coasting to a seven-shot win and setting a scoring record in the process.
Coody and Douglass shot a final-round 66 — by four strokes their highest of the tournament — to break the 72-hole scoring record for the Senior Tour event. They finished at 249, 39 under par for four trips over the Barton Creek Country Club course.

Coody

That compares with the old mark of 251 set by Al Geiberger and Harold Henning last year at Onion Creek, a par-70 course. Geiberger and Henning were 29 under par on Onion Creek.
Coody and Douglass, who took the lead with a first-round 59 in the better-ball tournament, had an eight-shot lead at the start of the final round and never led by less than seven.
"There was really nothing we could do with the leaders," said Geiberger, who again teamed with Henning and finished a distant second. "They just took off and ran away. They kept it under control and nobody else did anything."
But it got a little messy at the end.
"We sure didn't play very well," said Coody, the 1971 Masters champion. "Fortunately, we played well enough to get to the 72nd hole before we totally embarassed ourselves."

Buechele on DL

ARLINGTON (AP) — The Texas Rangers placed third baseman Steve Buechele on the 21-day disabled list Sunday after he sustained a broken bone in his right wrist.
He was hit by a pitch in Saturday night's 6-5 victory over the New York Yankees.
The Rangers called up third baseman Scott Coolbaugh from Oklahoma City to replace Buechele.

M-Angels halt losing skid

The Midland Angels broke out of a seven-game losing streak and a 1-11 start with a sound 10-4 victory over the El Paso Diablos Sunday at Angels Stadium.

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

Eddie Rodriguez had a closed-door discussion with some of his Angels after their 12-8 loss to El Paso Saturday night, a debacle in keeping with Midland's early-season woes.
That talk seems to have paid off.
The Angels put it all together Sunday. They collected 11 timely hits, enjoyed outstanding pitching and severed their seven-game losing streak with a 10-4 victory over the Diablos. Midland, now 2-11, dropped El Paso to 9-4 with the win.
"I mainly told Ruben (Amaro) to spread the word to some people about how they should be going about their jobs," Rodriguez decribed his tirade after Sunday's loss.
"I guess he did a good job of spreading it."
It spread like wildfire in the first inning as Midland sent 12 men to the plate and scored eight runs on eight hits to give starting pitcher Joe Grahe a comfortable cushion.
Grahe, who gave back three runs in the second and another in the fourth, picked up his first win as a professional. Mike Butcher, who relieved Grahe after a one-out walk in the seventh, did not get a save. But his no-hit, four strikeout performance over the final 2⅔ innings earned the respect of his manager.
"That's the best Mike Butcher has pitched all year," Rodriguez said. "That's the Mike Butcher we've been waiting to see. He didn't get a save, but he gained confidence for when he tries for a save tomorrow or the next day.
"We got very good pitching from Grahe, we got base hits when we needed them and great relief pitching. That's what it's all about. We did some damage early and didn't have to play catchup."
The initial damage came off the bat of center fielder Mark Davis, who led off Midland's first with a double and scored on Steve DeAngelis' single. Seven Angels followed with RBI singles, including Davis who had two hits in the first and scored both times.
El Paso starting pitcher Steve Monson (0-1) remained on the mound throughout the onslaught. Thanks to a two-out fielding error with just three Midland runs across, Monson was charged with only three earned runs. But Monson got the heave after walking the bases full in the third, and John Miglio put out the fire by getting Jim Aylward to ground out.

Midland's Mark Davis goes into second base with a double in the Angels' eight-run first inning. It was Davis' first of two hits in the inning.

Cowboys, Oilers on different draft road

■ The Dallas Cowboys go for offense while the Houston Oilers grab defensive help in early NFL draft rounds.

Associated Press

The talent-needy Dallas Cowboys went for offense in a hurry — literally — in the NFL draft, getting gifted running back Emmitt Smith of Florida and speedy wide receiver Alex Wright of Auburn in the first two rounds while the Houston Oilers had a first round reunion.
Lamar Lathon, who overcame an auto accident and major knee surgery last year, was reunited with Coach Jack Pardee Sunday as the first round selection of Houston.
"It wouldn't have taken a lot for us to be significantly better than last year, but there will be a drastic difference in the play of the Cowboys this coming season," a pleased Coach Jimmy Johnson said Sunday.
Smith, who was clocked between 4.39 and 4.5 in the 40, came into the draft as a junior and Dallas traded a third-round pick to move into Pittsburgh's No. 17 slot in the first round to get him.
"He was among our top three or four picks on the board," Johnson said. "He's just a quality player. He's star quality. And he's only 20 years old. Our scouts gave him rave reviews."
Johnson said Wright's 4.28 speed "will stretch defenses and really help our offense. I'd be surprised if both these players aren't in the starting lineup next year."
Dallas traded for running back Terrence Flagler of the San Francisco 49ers earlier in the week.
"We've got a lot of quality in the backfield, which is where we struggled last year," Johnson said.
"I know what Jack Pardee expects of me, this is the biggest moment of my life," Lathon said in an emotional response to being the 15th pick in the draft.
The Oilers continued to add defensive help in the second and third rounds.
They selected Notre Dame defensive tackle Jeff Alm, 6-5, 274 and Miami defensive end Willis Peguese, 6-5, 262, in the third round.
Lathon will be represented by former Oiler assistant general manager Tom Williams, who promised there would be no holdouts for his client.
"He needs every little bit of help that he can get," Williams said. "Wherever they want him before he's signed, he'll be there. I don't agree with this holding out anymore."
Wright said he ran a 4.27 in cleats on the grass for the New York Giants last Friday.
"I'd say that's pretty fast," he said. "I'll love being on the same team with Michael Irvin."
"He'll be faster than anybody I've ever coached," Johnson said.
Johnson said the Cowboys tried to trade up for defensive help — specifically linebacker James Francis of Baylor — but no other club would cooperate.
The Cowboys couldn't make a trade for quarterback Steve Walsh.

NFL goes for underclassmen in draft

■ Five college juniors were among the first seven picks in the NFL draft Sunday.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The year of the junior started early Sunday as five underclassmen were taken with the first seven picks of an NFL draft dominated by defense.
It was the first draft ever open unconditionally to underclassmen, and teams jumped on them despite reservations about their lack of experience.
Altogether, eight were chosen with the 25 picks of the first round, starting with Illinois quarterback Jeff George as the No. 1 pick by the Indianapolis Colts and including Alabama linebacker Keith McCants by the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, Southern Cal linebacker Junior Seau by the San Deigo Chargers, defensive back Mark Carrier by the Chicago Bears and Houston Heisman Trophy winner Andre Ware by the Detroit Lions.
"Experience will take place during mini-camp," said Seau, the fifth pick overall despite having started just one year at USC after sitting out as a freshman because he failed to meet academic standards.
"I'll be the first to admit I'm lacking experience, but I think I'll be up to the challenge."
Seau was one of seven linebackers and 13 defensive players chosen with the first 18 picks in what was supposed to be a year for linebackers and running backs. It sure was for linebackers, but the running backs waited until later as the eternal quest for big men had them going early.
No running back was selected between the second choice, when the New York Jets took Penn State's Blair Thomas, and the 17th, when Dallas traded up to choose Florida's Emmitt Smith, another junior. A total of six runners were picked, almost all of them late, while 14 of the 25 first-rounders were defensive players.

AP Laserphoto

As expected, Illinois quarterback Jeff George, left, became the first NFL draft pick of the 1990s as he is presented his Indianapolis Colts jersey by NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue Sunday.

George, who on Friday signed a six-year, $15 million package with Indianapolis, was the first pick, the Colts having obtained it for tackle Chris Hinton, wide receiver Andre Rison and next year's No. 1.
He was followed by two seniors, Thomas and Miami defensive tackle Cortez Kennedy, who went to Seattle after the Seahawks gave up the eighth and 10th picks to move into New England's No. 3 slot.
Then came the rush to underclassmen:
—McCants, projected as the top pick only two weeks ago but dogged by reports of a bad knee, went to Tampa Bay, where he will be reunited with the man who recruited him for Alabama, Ray Perkins.
—Seau went to the Chargers, who had been ready to take huge offensive tackle Richmond Webb of Texas A&M and were delighted to get what they hope will be an instant star for their defense.
—In the first big surprise, Seau's USC teammate, Carrier, went to Chicago, and the Bears signed the safety immediately to avoid training camp holdout problems that coach Mike Ditka said hurt both their No. 1 choices a year ago.
—Ware went to Detroit, where he will find a familiar run-and-shoot offense and fellow Heisman winner in Barry Sanders waiting in the backfield.
Of the juniors, Carrier was the shocker — he was considered no more than a late first- or second-round choice by most teams. One reason is that he had already agreed to a five-year deal.
"Maybe we sent a message," Ditka said. "He'll be here for camp and he'll contribute right away."
Another one came five picks later at No. 11, when the Raiders made one of their classic picks — Anthony Smith, a defensive end from Arizona who has a history of knee problems and played at three colleges, starting with Alabama.
"I'm really shocked I was picked on the first round," he said. "I had no idea when I would be picked, but I knew who would pick me. Being with the Raiders fits my personality and my style of play."
McCants was chosen by Perkins despite a report in Sunday's Atlanta Journal and Constitution that he might need knee surgery and miss the season.
"Everybody's talking about my knee. I had an arthroscope in my junior year," he said. "It's mind-boggling to me that this can come up the day of the draft. Twenty-seven doctors of the NFL looked at it and they all said it looks well. My knee is not major."
Perkins said McCants would probably need arthroscopic surgery, but no more.
"There's been a lot of speculation in the last few days about a possible injury or a knee problem," Perkins said.

ANGELS: Halt skid at seven

From 1C

Midland bats fell silent after the first inning, and they stayed quiet five full innings before Mike Knapp punctuated the seventh-inning stretch by belting the first pitch of the inning over the left-field wall for his first homer of the season.

"I made some adjustments in my swing during the off season. I worked on pulling the ball more," Knapp said. "I'm not trying to hit home runs, but it's okay if they get out."

Amaro, who had three RBI in the game, singled home Davis for Midland's final run which also came in the seventh.

And Butcher, who allowed just one baserunner - that thanks to Mark Flora's throwing error - finalized the win by striking out the Diablos in order in the ninth.

"I think this game will mean a lot more to us than our second win of the season," said Rodriguez. "We need to look at it like we're 2-0 and take it from here. I think we can do that with this one," he said.

Elkington wins at Greensboro

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Steve Elkington came from seven shots off the pace Sunday with a 31 on the back nine for a 6-under-par 66, then watched his challengers fade away to win the Greater Greensboro Open, his first win in three years on the PGA Tour.

Elkington, an Australian who hasn't missed the cut in his 11 starts this year, started the day seven shots behind third-round leader Mike Reid. It marked the second time this year that a golfer came from seven shots back to win. The other was Elkington's countrymate, Greg Norman, who won the Doral Open in a playoff.

"A long way back in the tournament, I was 4-over-par on my first nine holes and I made a long way back from there," he said.

Elkington finished with a 72-hole total of 282 to earn $225,000 from the $1.25 million purse, raising his winnings in 1990 to nearly $350,000.

After three days in which golfers were tested by gusty winds and high rough which kept their play conservative, the winds subsided and the scores came down.

"The weather was better today — no wind," Elkington said. "Today, you felt like you had a little more confidence in pulling the club out because there's no wind."

Elkington, an early finisher, finished his round tied with Jeff Sluman at 6-under. But the possibility of a playoff disappeared when Sluman bogeyed 15 and 17 and finished with a 71 for 284. He was tied with Reid, who faded with three bogeys on the back nine for a 75.

Fred Couples was within two shots with two holes to play, but his bogey at the par-3 17th hole ended his hopes. He finished with a 73 and was at 285 along with Mike Hulbert, who had a 69, and Paul Azinger, who shot a roller-coaster 67.

After overcoming an upset stomach overnight, Azinger climbed to 4-under for the tournament by posting four birdies and an eagle for a 30 on the front nine. For his first nine holes in the four rounds, Azinger was 15 under par.

It looked as though Azinger would beat the back nine hex which had plagued him during the first three rounds when he had successive birdies at 10 and 11, putting him at 6-under. But from there, he had three bogeys and had to scramble to save at least two pars, shooting himself out of contention.

For his back nine at Forest Oaks, Azinger was 12 over par.

Lamphere nails third hole-in-one at MCC

Staff Report

Richard Lamphere produced the third hole-in-one of his career Sunday by acing Midland Country Club's 159-yard No. 3 hole with a six-iron.

He was playing with Gerry Zoller, L.D. Robbins and wife Jane.

NBA ROUNDUP

Spurs clinch Midwest Division

Associated Press

The San Antonio Spurs clinched the Midwest Division title and No. 2 spot in the Western Conference playoffs with a 108-93 victory over the Phoenix Suns on Sunday behind Terry Cummings' 27 points.

The Spurs (56-26) won the division for the first time since 1983 and will play host to the No. 7 seed in the conference when playoffs begin Thursday. They finished the regular season with a seven-game winning streak and won 35 games more than last year, an NBA record for one-season improvement.

Phoenix, finishing the regular season at 54-28, had a chance for the No. 4 spot in the Western Conference, but the loss dropped the Suns to No. 5. They will open the playoffs against the Utah Jazz in Salt Lake City.

Rockets 100, Jazz 88

The Houston Rockets won the final Western Conference playoff berth in their last game of the season, beating Utah behind Akeem Olajuwon's 28 points and 12 rebounds and Vernon Maxwell's 27 points.

The Houston victory, combined with Seattle's 124-122 loss to Golden State in an afternoon game, clinched the Rockets' sixth straight playoff appearance. They finished in a tie with Seattle at 41-41, but Houston was 28-28 in conference play compared to the SuperSonics' 26-30.

Larry Smith had a season-high 18 rebounds and Otis Thorpe added 19 points and 15 rebounds for the Rockets.

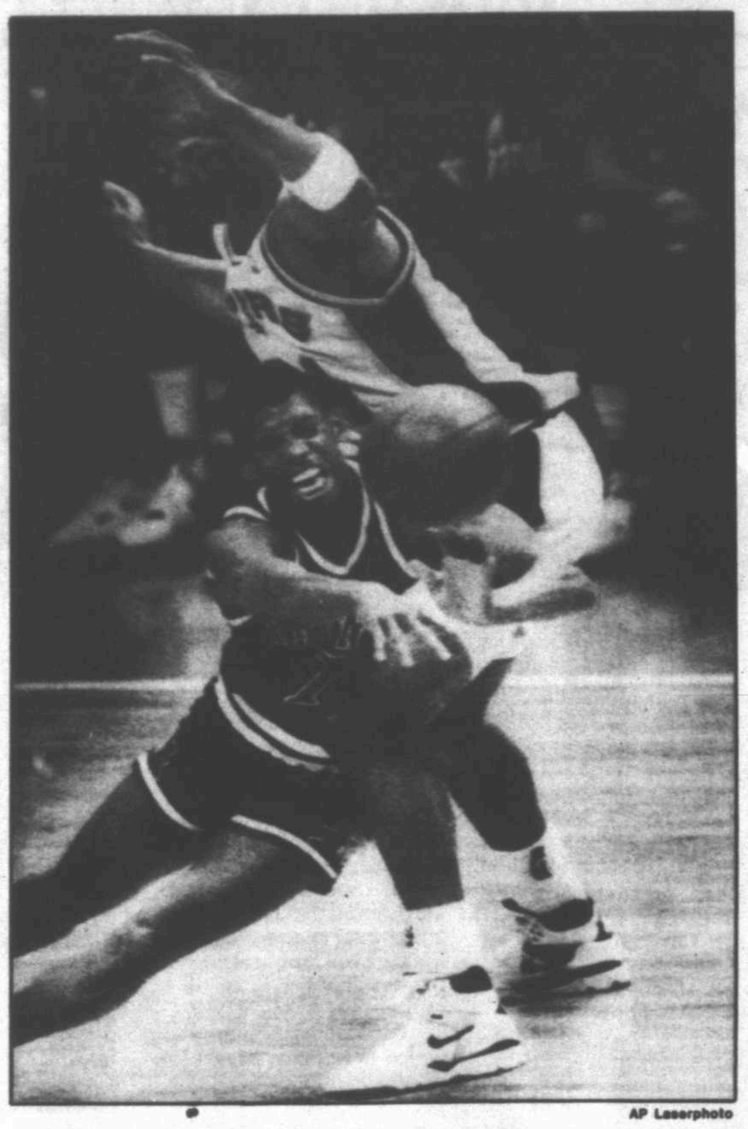

John Stockton had 11 assists to break his own NBA single-season record, increasing his total to 1,134, six more than he had in 1987-88. He also broke Isiah Thomas' 1984-85 record of 13.9 assists per game with 14.5.

Mavericks 118, Hornets 107

Sam Perkins scored 17 points in 22 minutes as Dalias ended the regular season with a four-game winning streak.

The Mavs finished their home schedule with a 30-11 record and prevented the Hornets from matching last season's total of 20 victories. Charlotte lost six of its last seven games, playing again without injured guard Dell Curry.

Mavericks guard Brad Davis, who returned to the lineup Thursday after missing eight games with a torn tendon in the right knee, severely pulled his right hamstring on a drive to the basket early in the second quarter. Davis will miss a minimum of two weeks, although he will remain on the club's playoff roster for their first-round matchup against Portland.

Celtics 118, 76ers 98

Kevin McHale scored 22 points and Reggie Lewis had 19, leading Boston to victory over Philadelphia in the regular-season finale for both teams.

Philadelphia, the Atlantic Division champion, will meet the Cleveland Cavaliers in a first-round playoff game Thursday night at Philadelphia.

Boston, winner of nine of its last 10 games, also will begin the playoffs Thursday night, at home against the New York Knicks.

Cavaliers 115, Knicks 99

Brad Daugherty scored 26 points as Cleveland clinched seventh place in the Eastern Conference and won its sixth straight game.

The Cavaliers will begin a best-of-five playoff series Thursday night in Philadelphia against the 76ers.

New York lost its final three games and 21 of its last 33. The Knicks (45-37) open their best-of-five series Thursday in Boston against the Celtics.

Pacers 127, Bullets 115

Detlef Schrempf scored 25 points to lead six double-figure scorers as Indiana defeated Washington in the regular-season finale for both teams.

The Pacers start the playoffs against the Detroit Pistons on Thursday.

The Bullets end their season at 31-51, their worst record in 20 years. The Bullets' 20-21 record at home is the worst for the team since the 1967-68 season.

Nuggets 115, Timberwolves 108

Michael Adams scored a season-high 32 points as Denver clinched seventh place in the NBA's Western Conference.

The Nuggets will play Midwest Division champion San Antonio in the first round starting Thursday at San Antonio.

Pistons 111, Bulls 106

Bill Laimbeer's jumper with 25 seconds left gave Detroit a season-ending victory over Chicago.

Both teams now head for the NBA playoffs. The defending champion Pistons, who finished the season with a record of 59-23 to lead the Eastern Conference, will face the eighth-seeded Indiana Pacers in the first round.

The third-ranked Bulls (55-27) will play the sixth-seeded Milwaukee Bucks.

Warriors 124, Sonics 122

Seattle blew a chance to clinch an NBA playoff berth when Tim Hardaway's layup with three seconds remaining gave Golden State a victory.

The Sonics needed to win in order to clinch the final playoff spot in the Western Conference. They still had hopes of making it with a loss by Houston against Utah later Sunday.

Magic 110, Nets 102

DRAFT: NFL likes youth

From 1C

"Our doctors have looked at his knee, have looked at X-rays and all the other kinds of tests. He does have a little problem. He'll probably be in the next week or so to have it scoped to take care of that problem."

It was a long round, lasting 3 hours and 24 minutes for the 25 picks, 11 minutes longer than last year, when there were 28 picks, as teams waited for an expected flurry of trades that never materialized.

After Ware, taken by Detroit with the seventh pick, came Arizona linebacker Chris Singleton to New England; Webb, the Texas A&M offensive tackle, to Miami; North Carolina State defensive tackle Ray Agnew to New England; Smith to the Raiders; Baylor linebacker James Francis to Cincinnati; Michigan State linebacker Percy Snow to Kansas City and West Virginia defensive end Renaldo Turnbull to New Orleans.

Then came another junior, Houston's Lamar Lathon to the Oilers, where he will play for his college coach, Jack Pardee, followed by defensive back J.D. Williams of Fresno State to Buffalo and Smith, the seventh junior, to the Cowboys, who gave up an extra third-rounder to move up.

Green Bay had two picks, one for linebacker Tony Bennett of Mississippi, the other for running back Darrell Thompson of Minnesota. Then Washington's Steve Broussard became the third running back in four picks when he was chosen by Atlanta.

Pittsburgh took Eric Green, the 270-pound tight end from Liberty; Philadelphia added speed to its secondary with Georgia's Ben Smith; the Los Angeles Rams took Washington center Bern Brostek; the New York Giants took Georgia running back Rodney Hampton, another junior, and San Francisco finished the round by picking Dexter Carter, a running back-wide receiver from Florida State.

By position, the first round included seven linebackers, six running backs, four defensive linemen, three defensive backs, two quarterbacks, two defensive linemen and one tight end.

Cleveland, Minnesota and Washington didn't have first-round picks as the result of trades, while Phoenix (Timm Rosenbach) and Denver (Bobby Humphrey) forfeited theirs in last year's supplemental draft. Dallas also used what would have been the first pick for Steve Walsh but got a pick back from Minnesota for Herschel Walker.

Rangers sweep over Yankees

Associated Press

Harold Baines and Mike Stanley hit three-run homers Sunday and the Texas Rangers beat the New York Yankees 10-4 to sweep a three-game series.

The Yankees outhit the Rangers 12-8 but Texas had three home runs, a triple and a double. The Rangers outscored New York 25-15 in the three-game series.

Kevin Brown (3-0), who joined Nolan Ryan as the Rangers' second three-game winner, gave up four runs and 11 hits in 7⅓ innings. Jeff Russell got the final fours outs for his fourth save.

Tim Leary (1-1) allowed three hits and four runs in 6⅔ innings but just one of the runs was earned. He struck out eight and walked four.

New York has lost five consecutive games and had dropped its last seven in Arlington Stadium.

Baines' first-inning homer, a 403-foot shot to straighaway center, came after Leary bobbled Julio Franco's two-out bunt and walked Ruben Sierra.

Mel Hall hit a two-run homer in the eighth after Don Mattingly doubled, Hall's second home run of the season.

Royals 7, Blue Jays 1

Bo Jackson hit his first home run of the season and Tom Gordon allowed five hits in seven innings.

Jim Eisenreich drove in three runs with a homer and a two-run single as the Royals won for the first time in three road games this season.

Gordon (1-1) struck out nine and walked two before Jeff Montgomery and Mark Davis finished up.

Indians 5, White Sox 2

Cory Snyder hit a two-run, go-ahead homer in the fifth inning and Bud Black allowed five hits in eight innings as Cleveland beat Chicago for their third straight win.

Cleveland's Felix Fermin added a solo home run in the seventh, his first career homer in 655 at-bats over 231 major league games. It came off White Sox reliever Donn Paul and barely reached the seats in left.

Chicago has lost three in a row after starting 5-1.

California 5, Minnesota 2

Donnie Hill had three hits, including a tie-breaking single in the seventh inning.

Chuck Finley (3-0) allowed seven hits in 6⅓ innings and Mark Eichhorn finished for his third save as California stopped a four-game losing streak. Finley had pitched 16 consecutive innings without allowing an earned run before the Twins scored twice in the third.

Allan Anderson (1-2) allowed three runs and eight hits — including four doubles — in 6⅔ innings. He has a 5.97 earned-run average in four starts.

Kirby Puckett hit his 200th career double to lead off the ninth inning.

Orioles 3, Tigers 2

Mike Henneman walked Brady Anderson with the bases loaded in the 12th inning.

Detroit pitchers issued 12 walks in the game, including four to Anderson. Tigers pitchers walked 35 batters in the four-game series.

Henneman (0-1) entered the game in the 11th inning but didn't get anyone out in the 12th.

Red Sox 4, Brewers 2

Jody Reed's two-out, two-run single off Dan Plesac in the 11th inning lifted Boston over Milwaukee.

Milwaukee's club record of 31 consecutive scoreless innings ended in the third when Ellis Burks hit an RBI single. It was the first run in 22 innings for Boston, blanked by Milwaukee on Friday and Saturday.

Lee Smith (1-1), the fourth Boston pitcher, allowed one hit in the final three innings, struck out four and walked two.

Mariners 5, Athletics 2

Ken Griffey Jr. and Jeffrey Leonard drove in two runs each as Seattle beat Oakland for a split of their four-game series.

Erik Hanson (1-0) and Mike Jackson combined to scatter seven hits. Hanson struck out seven and walked three as he pitched past the fifth inning for the first time in three starts this season. He is 6-1 in 10 starts since coming off the disabled list last season.

Braves halt Reds' streak at nine

Associated Press

The Cincinnati Reds finally lost, falling to the Atlanta Braves 3-1 Sunday after starting the season with a team-record nine straight victories.

Dale Murphy's three-run homer in the first inning helped the Braves end their seven-game losing streak and protect their record for the best start in National League history. Atlanta won its first 13 in 1982, a mark matched by Milwaukee in 1987.

Manager Lou Piniella lost for the first time with Cincinnati. The Reds' winning streak, which included four victories over Atlanta, was their longest since 1975, when they won the World Series.

Tom Glavine (1-2) held the Reds, who had been batting .337, to seven hits in 7⅔ innings. He gave up Todd Benzinger's home run in the seventh and left in the eighth after Chris Sabo's two-out single.

Reliever and former Midland High star Mike Stanton walked Billy Hatcher, loading the bases. But Barry Larkin, who began the game leading the majors with a .564 average, ended the threat by grounding out for the fourth time of the day. Larkin finished with his first hitless day of the season, and Stanton got his second save.

Dodgers 2, Astros 0

Ramon Martinez pitched a three-hitter and Lenny Harris drove in both runs as Los Angeles beat Houston.

Martinez (1-0) pitched his third career shutout in 24 starts. The right-hander, beginning his first full season in the major leagues, struck out nine and walked one.

Martinez retired 14 of the first 15 batters. He lasted more than five innings for the first time in three starts this year. Terry Puhl had two of Houston's hits, including a bunt single in the ninth.

Mets 5, Expos 0

Sid Fernandez pitched a two-hitter and Keith Miller hit a two-run homer Sunday as New York beat the Montreal Expos 5-0, giving the Mets consecutive victories for the first time this season.

Fernandez (1-1) struck out four and walked two in his sixth career shutout. He allowed just a pair of singles by Tim Raines in his fifth lifetime two-hitter, and 16th complete game in 166 starts.

Phillies 5, Cardinals 3

Randy Ready hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning and drove in three runs as Philadelphia rallied past St. Louis for a three-game sweep.

The Cardinals lost their fourth straight game and have dropped five in a row at home, their longest skid at Busch Stadium since five consecutive losses May 27-June 2 last year.

The Phillies have won five straight against St. Louis in two seasons. Philadelphia completed its first sweep in St. Louis since June 27-29, 1986.

Pirates 3, Cubs 2

Bobby Bonilla hit a two-run double, raising his National League-leading RBI total to 16, and Neal Heaton won his eighth straight decision.

Heaton (3-0) gave up two runs on five hits in six innings.

Chicago lost its fourth straight game. Ryne Sandberg of the Cubs set a major league record for second basemen with his 480th consecutive chance without an error, breaking the mark set by Philadelphia's Manny Trillo in 1982.

Giants 3, Padres 1

Atlee Hammaker pitched three-hit ball for eight innings in his first victory since last June and Kevin Bass hit a two-run homer San Francisco beat San Diego.

Hammaker (1-1) made his first start since last Aug. 3, when he went on the disabled list with torn cartilage in his left knee. He moved out of the bullpen to replace Scott Garrelts, who missed his start because of a pinched nerve in his neck.

Hammaker struck out one and walked two in his first win since June 13. He left after a leadoff walk in the ninth and Steve Bedrosian retired the final three batters for his second save. The Padres lost for the fourth time in five games.

The Giants scored all their runs off Eric Show (0-2). In the first inning, Will Clark's sinking liner to left field skipped past Jerald Clark and went for a triple, and Kevin Mitchell singled.

Bodine survives Waltrip charge

WILKESBORO, Pa. (AP) — Brett Bodine held off a late charge by Darrell Waltrip to capture his first career Winston Cup victory in Sunday's First Union 400 NASCAR stock car race at North Wilkesboro Speedway.

Bodine beat Waltrip to the checkered flag by less than a second to win the $120,000 purse. He took the lead just before the race's 10th caution period and never relinquished it.

"I got the feeling that if we could get to the front we'd stay there all day," he said.

Bodine, 31, the younger brother of Winston Cup driver Geoff Bodine, used a timely pit stop to take the lead. He took on four tires on the 301st lap, before leaders Dale Earnhardt and Waltrip made their final pit stops.

On the 321st lap, the final yellow flag of the day went up when Davey Allison tangled with Kenny Wallace.

After the delay, Bodine's Buick was the leader. For the next 83 laps, he held off Waltrip, who narrowed the lead but lost by less than a second.

Unser Jr. wins street battle

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Al Unser Jr. held off tenacious Emerson Fittipaldi in a tough street battle Sunday to win his third straight Toyota Grand Prix of Long Beach.

The 28-year-old Unser led for all but four of the 95 laps on the 1.67-mile, 11-turn downtown circuit, beating Fittipaldi, the defending CART Indy-car series champion, to the finish line by 1.724 seconds.

Unser, who now has 10 career victories — all on road courses or temporary street circuits like Long Beach — started from the pole for the second straight year and was in control most of the way.

Unser averaged 84.227 mph and earned $143,908.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, APRIL 23, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Look forward to wonderful advances where your business and finances are concerned. A windfall in July will reduce domestic tension. Consult a loved one before making any new investments. Your mate will do a lot to keep romance alive. Be responsive. A December vacation will bring about new family unity. Reviewing your priorities next January puts you on the road to even greater monetary success. Travel for both business and pleasure.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: playwright William Shakespeare, actress Valerie Bertinelli, actor Lee Majors, ambassador Shirley Temple Black.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A trial arrangement could lead to a permanent position. You get an earful when you talk with a child's teacher. A compromise may not be acceptable. Hold out for the whole package.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Work hard to repair your relationship with a client or customer. A retiree could receive a windfall. Broach the subject of commitment with care. You do not want to scare someone off!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A personal relationship is revitalized. You look forward to getting together soon. Someone's opposition to an original idea is weakening. Your enthusiasm wins you a coveted assignment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): It is time to get out and socialize again. Forget past disappointments. You are a vital person and need to be where the action is. Take a chance on a blind date!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Avoid running up new credit charges if you already have trouble paying the bills. Settle a long-standing debt. Get together with an old friend and discuss a business problem. Family ties deepen.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep your promises. New contracts bring results sooner than anticipated. Celebrate with someone who shares your interests. You meet a challenge head-on and emerge victorious. Good luck blesses a romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Return telephone calls promptly. Discussing money with an outsider invites trouble. Rely on experts to interpret a contract. Member of opposite sex could distract you from work.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Keep your emotions under control and things will begin to look up in business. Refuse to tolerate prejudice. Check insurance coverage on your valuables before making a trip.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Work alone today and you will accomplish more. A telephone call from a college chum could turn your weekend plans upside down. Rearrange your schedule if this person means a lot to you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Who and what you know are the keys to success today. Behind-the-scenes alliances help someone land an executive job. Recycle old projects to boost profits. Romance is both delightful and funny.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Deal with stress before it affects your work or health. It is time to chart your own course. Others will follow your lead. The little things you do now will pay rich dividends.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Give your work top priority. A timely business tip puts you on the road to success. Your social life begins to accelerate. A financial deal requires the assistance of an accountant or lawyer.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are loyal to their friends and ruthless to their enemies. Although receptive to constructive criticism, these Taureans cannot tolerate negativity. Work is their passion. There could be a tendency to overindulge in rich foods and vintages. Help these youngsters find healthy outlets for their restless energy. They enjoy life's luxuries and are willing to work hard to attain them. Although these Taureans like to project the image of a "play person," they are truly devoted to mate and home.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J10652 ♡Q85 ◇72 ♣A83
Partner opens the bidding with a demand bid of two hearts. What do you respond?
A.—When partner opens with a forcing two-bid, odds are he has a long, strong suit. With such good support, don't waste time puttering around with the spade suit. Bid three hearts, to set the trump suit and allow for the orderly investigation of slam.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KQ9 ♡AQ7 ◇9872 ♣AQ7
Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?
A.—There's a textbook response when you hold a balanced 16-18 points and no ruffing value, i.e, a 4-3-3-3 hand pattern. Jump to three no trump.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ108763 ♡85 ◇AKJ8 ♣Void
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?
A.—There are two ways to treat this hand—either an immediate jump shift to two spades, or a simple one-spade response, with the intention of jumping in diamonds on the next round. Since your spade suit is almost self-sufficient, we lean toward the immediate jump shift.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ108763 ♡85 ◇AKJ8 ♣Void
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
2 NT	Pass	3 ◇	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♣	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—When partner could not cue-bid hearts or take some action other than sign off with four spades, you should give up all thoughts of slam. Indeed, we could construct hands consistent with the auction where even game might fail. Pass.

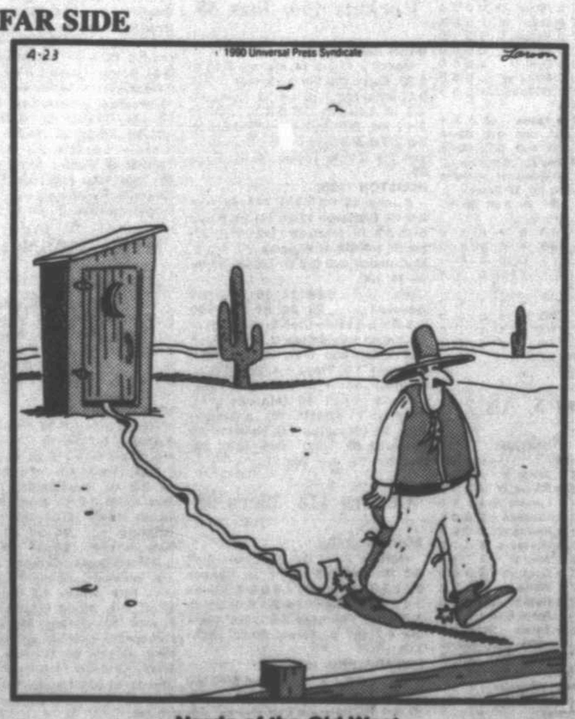

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQ1085 ♡QJ93 ◇AQ8 ♣Void
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one diamond. What action do you take?
A.—Despite the strong spade suit, your hand is suitable for playing in either major. It is more than strong enough to start with a takeout double and then bid a new suit, so our vote is for the double.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQ1085 ♡QJ93 ◇AQ8 ♣Void
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ◇	Dbl	Pass	2 ♣
Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Since you are likely to get a diamond lead, you need next to nothing from partner to make game. Our gut feeling is to jump to four spades, but we don't mind a slightly conservative three spades. The latter action virtually guarantees nine tricks in hand, and partner should raise to game with any key card.

McCartney sings old Beatles hits for 130,000 fans in Rio

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Paul McCartney sang old Beatles hits for 130,000 fans jammed into Rio's Maracana soccer stadium Saturday to end a scheduled 33-city tour.

McCartney performed a number of his own songs, before launching into "The Long and Winding Road" and "Hey Jude." Fans lit cigarette lighters, cheered wildly, and sang along in ecstasy as McCartney performed.

McCartney

The huge crowd was described as the largest ever to see a McCartney concert, breaking the previous mark of 80,000. Some 60,000 Brazilians saw McCartney's first Rio show Friday night, which was marred by heavy rains.

The show cost $2.9 million, and featured a 100-foot-long stage packed with more than 20 truckloads of sound equipment, a huge screen where Beatles scenes and parts of the concert were shown, and sophisticated laser cannons.

McCartney said Friday he might extend the tour to Liverpool, England, in May.

WOODSTOCK, Ill. (AP) — Flash! A bulletin crackles over Dick Tracy's two-way wrist radio: "Dick Tracy is coming home."

The chisel-chinned cartoon character and radio message will go up next week on billboards around this northern Illinois community, advertising a special premier of the "Dick Tracy" movie in the hometown of the character's creator, Chester Gould.

On June 13, the film starring Madonna, Warren Beatty, Dustin Hoffman and Al Pacino will be shown in the century-old Woodstock Opera House in this town of 13,000 about 50 miles northwest of Chicago.

Beatty

The movie opens around the country two days later.

Gould began drawing Dick Tracy in 1931 and took up residence at a farm outside Woodstock four years later. He retired in 1977 and died in 1985.

Mayor Jim Shoemaker, who's lived there 30 years, says locals tell him stories of their children biking to the Gould house and returning home with cartoons on their clothing.

"He would draw right on their T-shirt, and it was just a great thing he did," Shoemaker said in a telephone interview Saturday.

Woodstock is a town that cherishes its history. Three Academy Award winners — Paul Newman, Orson Welles and Geraldine Page — got their start in summer stock at the opera house, Shoemaker said.

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Author Hunter S. Thompson, sporting a green baseball cap emblazoned with a badge, bemoaned his legal problems and said he is crusading against improper police power.

"I'm a kind of fugitive from justice," Thompson said in a 30-minute speech at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

"I've been anointed as the point man to carry the ball for a lot of people in the country who thought the police didn't have a right to come search your home on the word of any informant," he said.

Thompson faces felony charges in Colorado of possession of cocaine, LSD, valium, marijuana, dynamite and blasting caps. In a separate case, Thompson faces a felony charge of using cocaine and misdemeanor charges of third-degree sexual assault and third-degree assault.

Thompson sipped bourbon and smoked cigarettes from a holder throughout the disjointed address Friday night.

He rose to fame in the '70s through his books "Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas" and "Fear and Loathing on the Campaign Trail" and his articles in Rolling Stone magazine. The author, 52, is a long-time proponent of the legalization of marijuana and other drugs.

After reading the results of an ABC News poll that indicate wide support for President Bush's anti-drug policy, Thompson repeatedly urged the crowd to vote and participate in the democratic system to try to counter law-and-order hysteria.

But he admitted he has not followed his own advice.

"I didn't vote last time. I was way too insulted to vote for a party of professional losers," Thompson said. "In a democracy, we do deserve a two-party system, a loyal opposition. But the Democrats aren't going to do it."

NEW YORK (AP) — A biography of the elusive Greta Garbo will finally be published after being locked in a vault.

"Garbo" was written by the late novelist and poet Antoni Gronowicz. Publisher Simon & Schuster said the company acquired the book in 1976 on the understanding that it would not be published while the actress was alive. Garbo died April 15 at the age of 84.

Much of the book is told in Garbo's own words as she talked to Gronowicz, with whom she became friends in 1938.

The book "tells of her relationship with her discoverer, mentor and lover Mauritz Stiller; and deals with her long and not always happy years as the greatest and most reluctant of movie queens," the publisher said in a statement.

Oil mostly lower

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil futures finished mostly lower Friday as the dramatic rebound that started a day earlier on the New York Mercantile Exchange ran its course.

The contract for May delivery of WTI slipped 11 cents per 42-gallon barrel to settle at $17.95. On Thursday, the contract jumped $1.10 to $18.06.

The May contract expired Friday. Most other contract months showed smaller declines.

Oil analysts estimate the 13-nation cartel is pumping more than 24 million barrels of crude a day, well over its ceiling of 22.1 million barrels a day for the first half of the year.

Chris Gohler, an analyst at Elders Futures Inc., said the rally continued into Friday morning but later tapered off as the effects of the OPEC news faded.

Refined petroleum products traded on the exchange were mixed.

The contract for May delivery of wholesale unleaded gasoline rose 0.15 cent to settle at 61.93 cents a gallon. Other contract months posted larger gains, with the June contract advancing 0.32 cent to 60.93.

Wholesale home heating oil for May delivery rose 0.14 cent to 52.94 cents a gallon. Other contract months declined, however. The June contract dropped 0.51 cent to 50.88 cents.

Meanwhile, natural gas for June delivery finished at $1.543 per million British thermal units, down from $1.570 on Thursday.

Market suffers

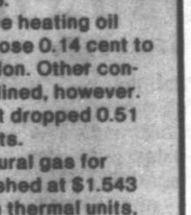

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market suffered another broad setback Friday in selling attributed to inflation and interest-rate worries.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 15.99 to 2,695.95, closing out the week with a 55.85-point loss.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by more than 5 to 2 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 401 up, 1,079 down and 500 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 174.26 million shares, against 152.93 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 205.96 million shares.

Dollar higher

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar closed higher on world currency markets Friday as investors sought a safe haven amid heightened tensions between Lithuania and the Soviet Union.

Volume was heavy. Shortly after midday, the dollar took a dive as traders turned their sights to weakening U.S. stock and bond markets, but the currency managed to finish higher.

Dollar rates in New York: 1.6872 West German marks; 1.4895 Swiss francs; 5.6655 French francs; 1,238.20 Italian lire, and 1.1626 Canadian dollars.

Inflation, interest worry Wall Street

■ Creeping inflation, a sluggish economy and interest rates are beginning to spoil Wall Street's outlook for the remainder of the year.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Renewed inflation and interest-rate worries are threatening to spoil the view as Wall Street looks ahead to mid-1990 and beyond.

To judge from the latest inflation statistics, a long spell of sluggish growth in the economy has not yet subdued upward pressures on the cost of living enough to satisfy the Federal Reserve Board.

Bond traders, who often match or exceed the Fed in their anti-inflationary zeal, have wasted no time in recent days registering their displeasure with the way things are shaping up.

The result has been a new rise in interest rates that has dampened hopes for an improvement in business activity and corporate profits as 1990 progresses.

The government provided the latest reference point in the debate over the inflation outlook this past week when it reported that the consumer price index rose 0.5 percent in March.

That put the increase in the CPI for the first quarter of 1990 at an 8.5 percent annual rate — a figure that sat well with hardly anybody in the financial world.

Optimistic analysts quickly issued assurances that inflation wasn't likely to keep up that pace for long. Among battered bond investors, the attitude seemed to be "it had better not."

Interest rates on long-term Treasury bonds climbed close to 9 percent, hitting their highest levels in almost a year.

"Unfortunately, as we see it, the risks to inflation remain very much on the upside," said Stephen Roach, economist at Morgan Stanley & Co.

With worries like that to contend with, the stock market suffered a broad setback in the past week. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which had risen 47.52 points over the three previous weeks, tumbled 55.85 to 2,695.95.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index fell 4.74 to 184.06; the NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market lost 10.52 to 425.79, and the American Stock Exchange market value index was down 9.92 at 347.96.

Volume on the Big Board averaged 149.02 million shares a day, against 133.63 million the week before.

To some observers, talk of revived inflation still represents a red herring, distracting investors from problems capable of causing very different kinds of mischief.

The banking system, for one thing, is undergoing a squeeze on lending that hardly paints a picture of an "overheating" economy.

There's nothing inflationary, they add, about the depressed state of the real estate market in many areas of the country.

Greyhound lays off number of mechanics

DALLAS (AP) — Greyhound Lines Inc. said Friday it has laid off almost one-fifth of its maintenance force, citing reduced workloads caused by a 7-week-old strike by bus drivers. Union officials claimed the layoffs were a sign the company is struggling.

"Because of the present volume of business, we have more mechanics than we need," said Greyhound spokesman George Gravley. "It's not that we can't pay them, we don't want to pay them if there's no work to do."

Gravley said the mechanics will be recalled as work loads increase.

"Every indicator points to financial disaster for Greyhound Lines Inc.," said James La Sala, international president of the Amalgamated Transit Union. "Greyhound management is now at a crossroads. It can either negotiate a settlement to this contract dispute or allow this country's only national bus system to slide into financial ruin."

Gravley said 275 of the current 1,395 mechanics, mechanics helpers, storekeepers, truck drivers and service workers were laid off beginning Monday.

Before the strike, Greyhound had 2,165 maintenance workers. Of those, the 690 represented by the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers remained on the job. Gravley said 695 ATU members also ignored the strike.

The layoffs are spread throughout the country and involve 120 Machinists and 155 ATU members, he said.

The ATU, which also represents about 6,300 drivers and 1,660 office workers, has been on strike since March 2, walking out in a dispute over wages and job security. There have been no negotiations since mid-March, as Greyhound has refused to meet with union representatives until seven straight days have passed without violence.

The latest incident occurred Wednesday, Gravley said, when a bus traveling from Dallas to Oklahoma City, Okla., was struck by two bullets.

On Friday, a driver reported he thought a shot was fired at his bus as he drove through North Little Rock in a 3-bus convoy. Authorities said there were no injuries and no apparent signs that any of the buses was hit.

Greyhound officials did not immediately have information about the incident.

Bakes steps down

■ Phil Bakes, a longtime cohort of Frank Lorenzo and president and CEO of Eastern Airlines has stepped down, following the appointment of a court-appointed trustee.

Associated Press

MIAMI — Phil Bakes resigned Friday as president and chief executive officer of Eastern Airlines, as a court-appointed trustee replaced parent Texas Air Corp. as head of the airline.

Bakes, a long-time cohort of Texas Air Chairman Frank Lorenzo, urged Eastern employees to support trustee Martin Shugrue, who was appointed Wednesday by U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Burton R. Lifland.

The judge appointed Shugrue over the opposition of Eastern and Texas Air after the airline's unsecured creditors argued that present management appeared unable to halt the company's financial deterioration.

"I know you will give Marty the complete support and commitment you afforded me. I have been privileged and inspired to be associated with you," said Bakes in a statement issued to Eastern's employees.

"The last 12 months, in particular, have been the most satisfying of my life because of your accomplishments. I am confident you will continue to succeed," Bakes said.

Eastern has lost $1.2 billion since Machinists, pilots and flight attendants walked off their jobs in March 1989, prompting the airline to seek protection from its creditors under Chapter 11 of the bankruptcy code.

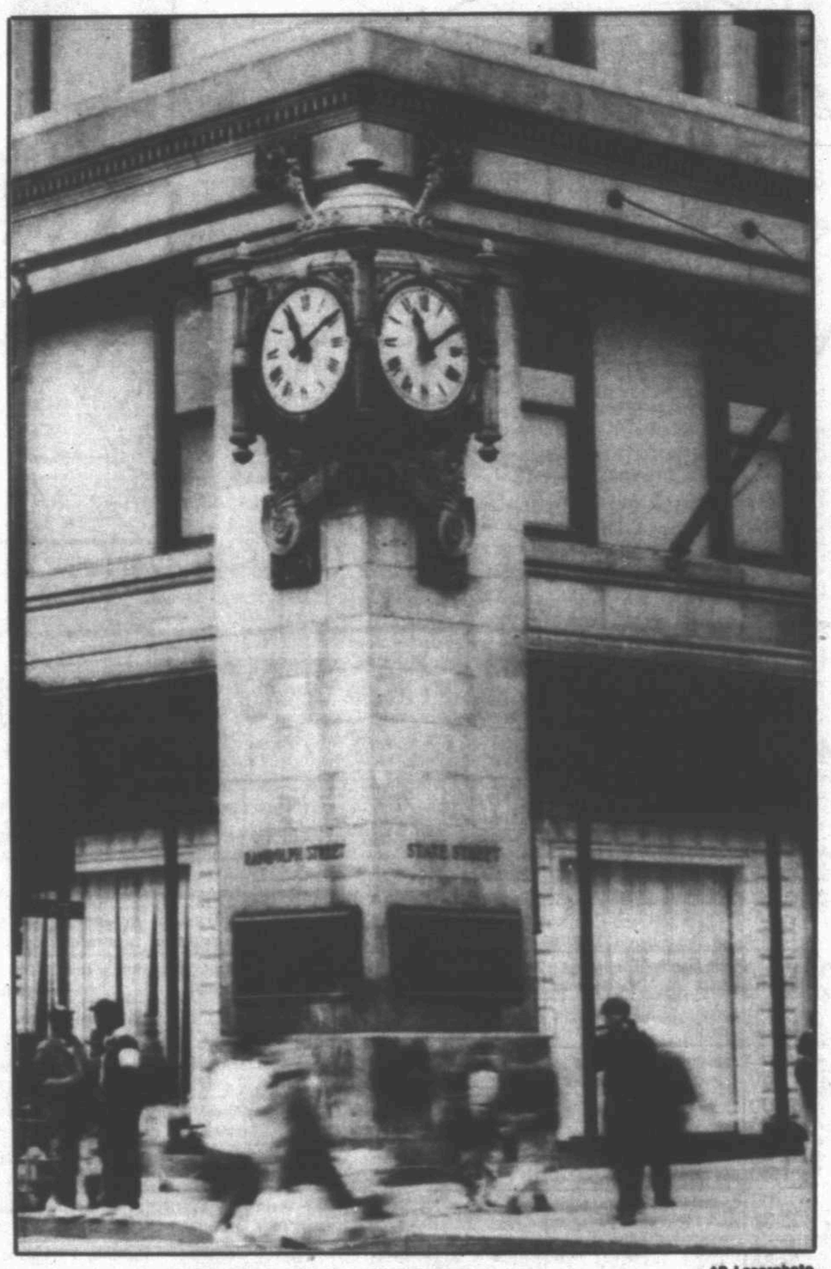

Lorenzo has denied reports that he had offered Bakes' resignation to creditors this past week in exchange for withdrawing their request for a trustee.

Bakes' announcement came hours after Shugrue met Friday morning with Eastern's officers. Company spokeswoman Karen Ceremsak said Bakes' resignation was freely offered and was not part of a deal with creditors.

Ms. Ceremsak said no other resignations were expected.

Bakes joined Texas Air in 1980 and became president of Eastern's sister carrier, non-union Continental Airlines, before leaving to run Eastern in October 1986.

Under Bakes, Eastern suffered continued financial losses — including $852.3 million in 1989 — and labor turmoil culminating in the strike and bankruptcy filing.

Austin seeks United facility

AUSTIN (AP) — Tax abatements and exemptions will be offered in a last-minute inducement to an air carrier to build a $700 million maintenance facility wherever the City Council ultimately decides to build a new airport.

The unanimous decision to submit an offer to United Airlines came Tuesday in a special council meeting.

The offer includes a 10-year abatement of real and property taxes, provision of tax-exempt revenue bonds to finance its construction, waiver of city building and development fees through 1998, and the allocation of city employees to speed site development.

Mayor Lee Cooke put the city's chances of success at "between zero and 5 percent." Councilman Smoot Carl-Mitchell, author of the resolution to pursue the possibility of luring the United facility to Austin, put the odds of success at no more than 10 percent.

What's the difference between OS and DOS

By Dennis Sever

Sever

Q. Could you please explain just what an operating system is? I have heard all the recent discussions about MS-DOS versus OS/2 and OS/2 versus Unix, but I still don't understand exactly what an operating system is.

A. An operating system is a program or collection of programs that allow a box containing all the correct components to become a computer.

The components are the "hardware" and are useless unless we have some method of giving these components instructions. Since the instructions that the components receive must be a series of electronic pulses, we humans have a difficult time communicating directly to the hardware. We therefore require the assistance of an operating system, which is software.

The operating system takes care of reading the keyboard and other input devices, translating instructions received through the input devices into a format that the components of the computer can understand, sending those instructions to the devices and then sending any error or report messages to the appropriate output device.

Operating systems come in varying sizes and levels of sophistication; they are also usually designed to work with a specific computer or specific family of computers. What the user has to learn about an operating system is what the commands are, how the operating system expects the commands to be issued, what the commands do when they execute, and how they can be combined in command sequences to accomplish more sophisticated tasks.

The most popular operating system for microcomputers is MS-DOS. MS-DOS is a pretty simple operating system that provides minimum services to a single user at a time. More complex operating systems like Unix and VMS may or may not work in a microcomputer environment and these operating systems are capable of providing services to as many as several hundred sinmultaneous users. Accordingly, the more sophisticated the operating system is, the more powerful the computer is for solving varied types of problems.

Q. I have recently begun experiencing a lot of write errors to the harddisk on my XT clone. Also, I had an ever-increasing number of bad sectors.

One guy that I talked to said I should by a new harddisk, which I can't afford. Another guy said I ought to reformat the harddisk, so I did, but the format program aborted because of errors. The guy that told me to format the disk has suggested that I do a low level format. I can't find a reference to this anywhere in my manuals. Have you ever heard of such?

A. Yes, and I believe you ought to try it. There is software on the market that is available for this purpose, but I would try the following steps first.

1) boot the computer from drive A:
2) execute the program called DEBUG (it should be on your original MS-DOS diskettes)
3) When you get the debug prompt, a minus sign (-), issue the following command:

G=C800:5

Depending on the type of controller you have installed, you may be asked some questions as the formatter executes. You should usually just accept the defaults offered.

Panama records results in frozen U.S. bank accounts

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department has announced that based on a review of bank records seized in Panama after the American invasion, as well as in other foreign countries, it had obtained a court order freezing hundreds of bank accounts in the United States suspected of having been used to hide nearly $400 million in Colombian drug profits.

Federal investigators said that while relatively little money remained in the accounts, a review of the bank records would offer the government its best opportunity to date to determine how the Medellin drug cartel had conducted its day-to-day business in the United States.

More than half of the 173 banks involved are in New York and Florida, where many of the nation's largest drug-trafficking organizations are based.

The banks, which include Chase Manhattan, Chemical and the Bank of America, have not been accused of any wrongdoing.

Justice Department investigators said that the banks appeared to be largely unaware that the accounts were being used to launder drug proceeds.

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh hailed Tuesday's move, saying in a statement that "our ability to examine these bank records may well be the key to unlocking the totality of the secret financial arrangements of the Medellin cartel in the United States."

The other nations in which bank records were obtained were: Colombia, Uruguay, Luxembourg, Switzerland, Britain, Canada and Austria.

The move to freeze the bank accounts is the most recent effort in Operation Polar Cap, a year-old investigation by the Justice and Treasury Departments to determine how Colombian drug dealers secretly transfer the proceeds of drug sales through American banks.

These transfers are known as money laundering.

The Justice Department has estimated that more than $1 billion in drug profits was taken out of the United States from 1987 to 1989.

"We've had no idea how they go about their day-to-day business," said Peter G. Djinis, a trial lawyer at the Justice Department. But he said in an interview that with this week's action, "now we're going to find out where the money is going and about the frequency of these disbursements."

Investigators said that the examination of foreign bank records showed that of the $1 billion in drug profits moved out of the United States, nearly $350 million was eventually transferred back to American banks.

Some $50 million in drug money apparently never left American accounts, they said.

"The cartel needs these secret U.S. accounts in order to run their illegal business here," Thornburgh said.

"The massive scope of the cocaine trade in the U.S. requires large amounts of capital for the operation of the cartel's daily activities, as well as to maintain the company's payroll."

Under the court order, signed Monday by Federal District Judge William C. O'Kelley in Atlanta, banks in 22 states and the District of Columbia must turn over records on 754 bank accounts.

Of those accounts, 684 were also frozen under the court order, pending a move by federal prosecutors to seize any remaining drug money.

Federal investigators said that the frozen accounts were linked to Eduardo Martinez Romero, the reputed financial leader of the Medillin cartel.

Martinez, who was extradicted to the United States from Colombia last year, is now awaiting trial on money-laundering charges.

Djinis, the Justice Department lawyer, said that because Martinez is in custody and the money-laundering operation had been largely shut down, prosecutors expected to find relatively little money in the accounts.

"We're looking for information instead," he said.

Maxus issues stock

DALLAS (AP) — Maxus Energy Corp. plans to issue new stock and restructure debt to improve the company's balance sheet.

The Dallas-based oil and gas company said Wednesday it has filed a registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission for an offering of about 9 million common shares of stock. About $67.5 million of that will be used to restructure debt held by the Prudential Insurance Co.

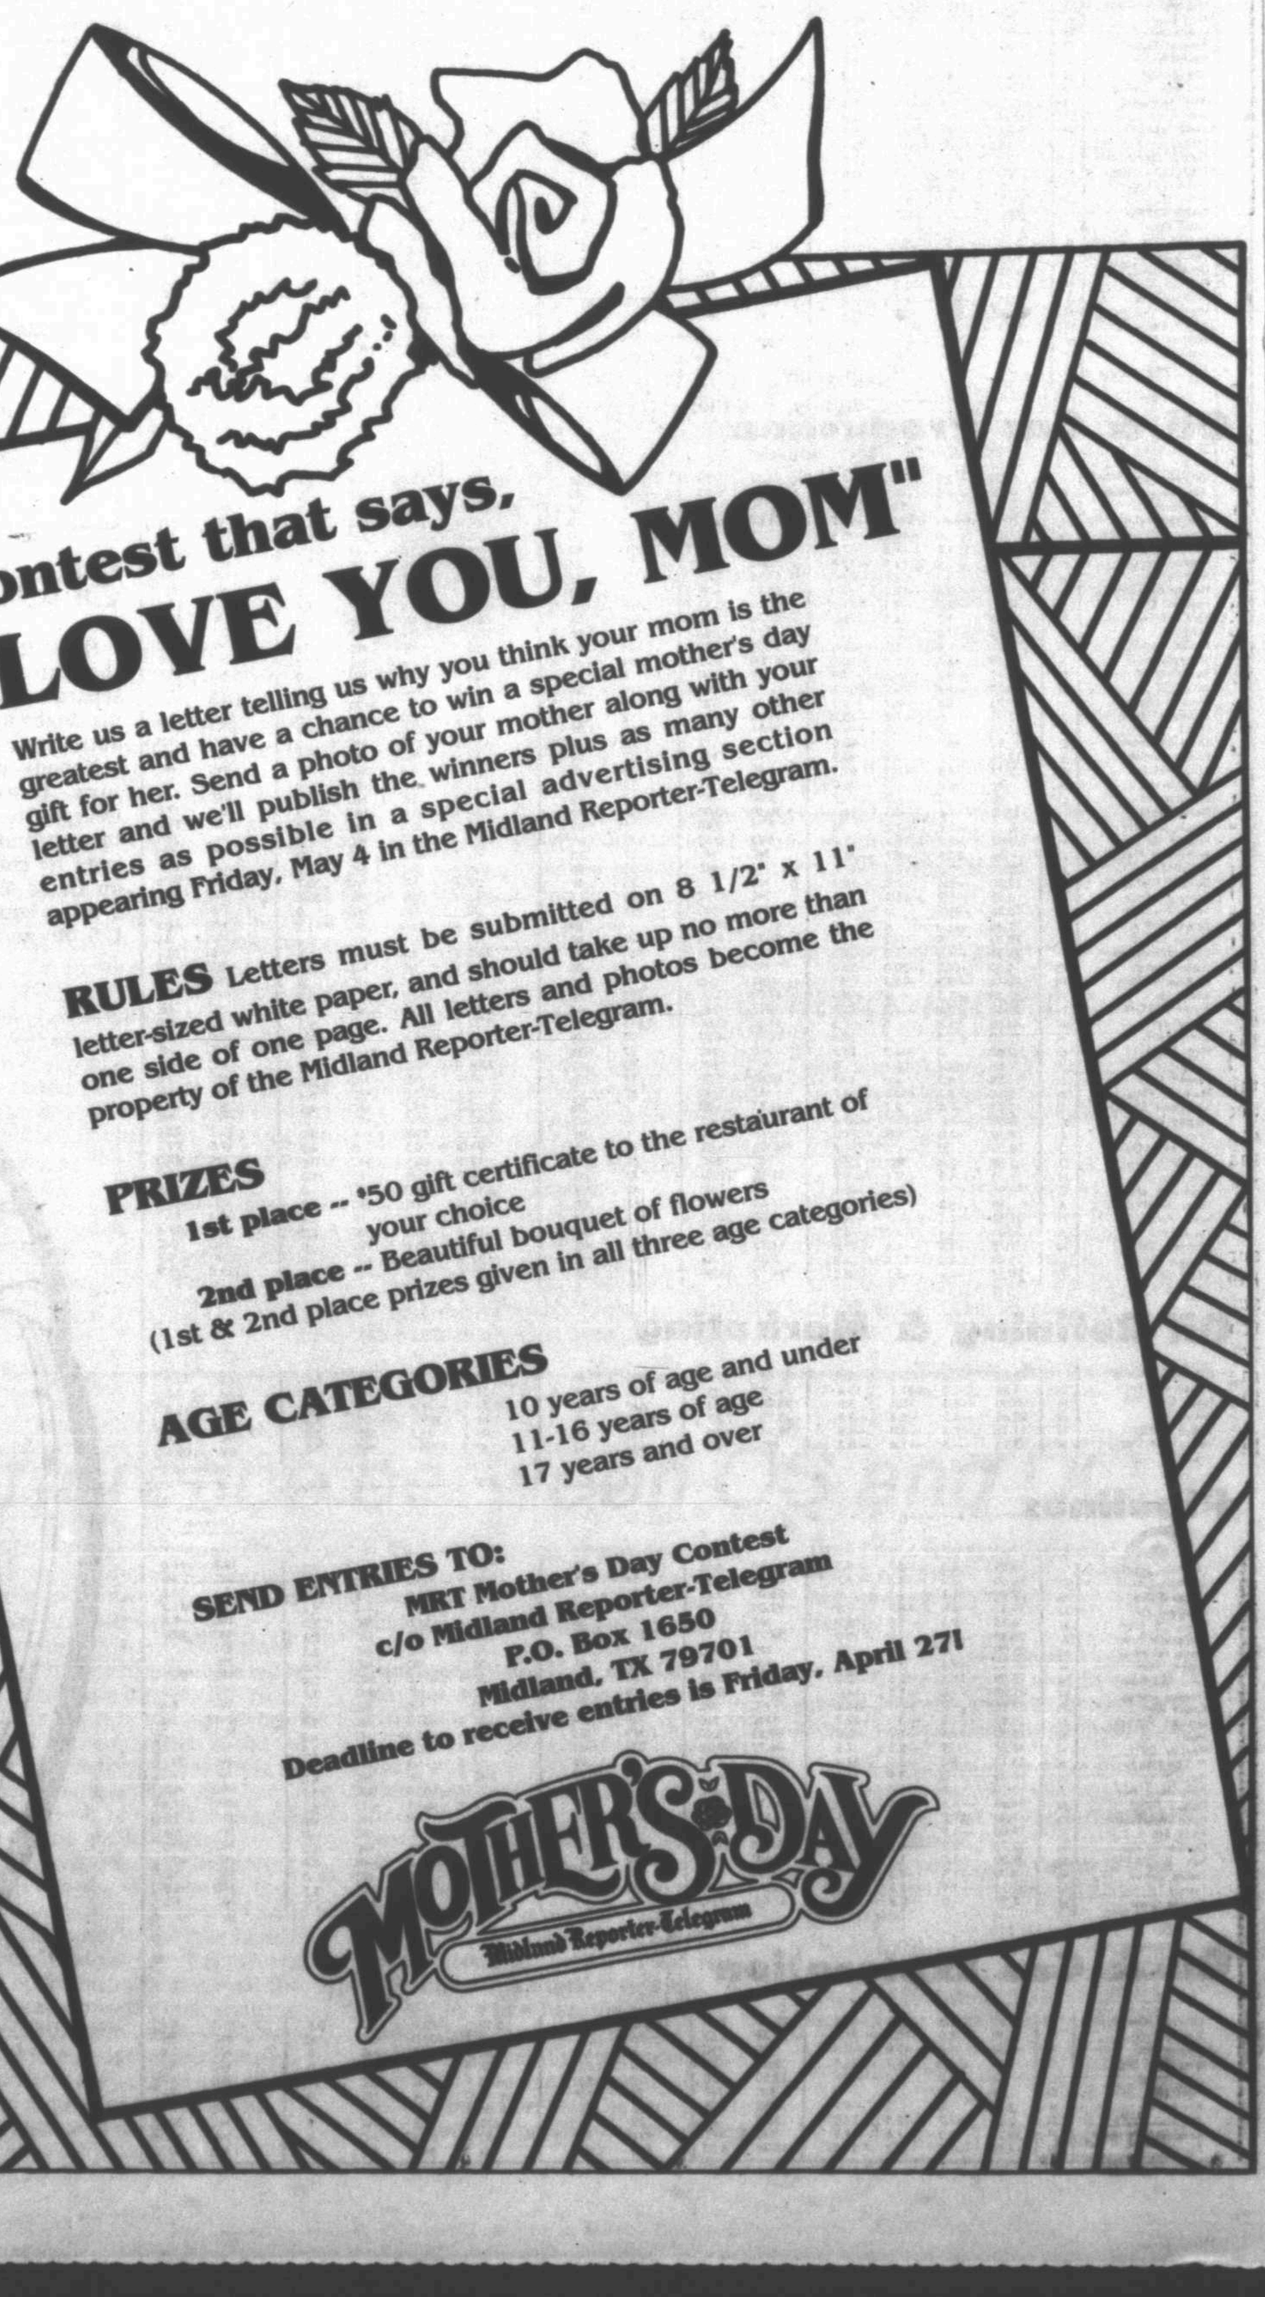

About $300 million worth of convertible preferred stock were sold to Prudential in February 1987 in the restructuring of Diamond Shamrock Corp. into Maxus and Diamond Shamrock Inc.

In another development Wednesday, Maxus said a July 19 trial date in a Texas state court has been set for its case against convicted arbitrager Ivan Boesky, Kidder Peabody & Co. and Martin A. Siegel, a former Kidder investment banker.

A Maxus spokeswoman said the company is confident it can go ahead in state court despite a New York judge's ruling that federal securities acts violations cannot be heard in state courts.

Maxus alleged that Siegel linked information to Boesky in 1983, which resulted in an inflated price Maxus ultimately paid for Natomas Co.

Maxus also announced it has agreed to pay a $2.5 million fine and about $51.5 million to clean up 26 chromium waste sites in New Jersey, once operated by Diamond Shamrock Chemicals.

Hotel is 'oasis of opposites'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Minutes after Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir swept out of the Grand Hotel with his bodyguards in tow, a robed Arab leader was whisked into the suite Shamir had just vacated.

It's a revolving door at the hotel, an oasis of opposites in Washington's diplomatic and political whirl.

Democrats hold fund-raisers there. Republicans, too. AT&T stays there, as does MCI.

And for $2,500 a night, intransigent foes from the Middle East also call the Grand home.

You won't see Greta Garbo strolling languidly through the lobby, as she did in the hotel's namesake movie. But on a recent March morning, singer Janet Jackson went bouncing past the reception desk trailed by an entourage laden with luggage.

Jackson wasn't the only celebrity.

Guillermo Ford, Panama's vice president, was holding court in the lobby; Raphael Calderon, the president-elect of Costa Rica, was on a pre-inaugural visit to Washington; and Morocco's top military generals were in town.

"The lobby looked like a parking lot for bodyguards," said Samir Darwich, the Lebanese-born, French-educated manager.

Arabic and Spanish drowned out English.

The presidential suite, where kings and presidents stay, is vast.

A grand piano graces the living room, a jacuzzi dominates the bathroom and the beds are truly king sized.

Darwich says clients are drawn to the 260-room hotel by its European elegance, multilingual staff and unobtrusive service. But for some of his guests, security is the paramount consideration.

"We have proven we have the toughest, most sophisticated security in town," he said.

Plainclothes guards, their identity often unknown to the hotel staff, mingle with the guests.

It can get crowded, because visiting dignitaries also are protected by the U.S. Secret Service.

"We tell our security to use their brain, not their muscles," Darwich said.

There has never been a clash between the guests or the guards, although a few close calls have pumped some adrenalin.

There was the time former Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres changed course and decided to shake hands with guests in the lobby on his way out, rather than use the side door to leave the hotel.

Several Arab officials were in the lobby and the security agents were "freaking out," said one witness.

Several months ago, Israel's Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin was coming to town and asked to stay at the Grand. Rabin was not deterred after being told that a PLO official, Khaled al-Hassan, also was staying there, a source said.

If the Palestinian is concerned, let him move out, Rabin reportedly said.

In the end, al-Hassan stayed on the 5th floor, Rabin on the 9th.

"The hotel people did all they could to make sure they wouldn't bump into each other," said the source.

The hotel staff is used to unexpected events.

On a Sunday evening two years ago, Darwich got a frantic call from the State Department's protocol office: King Juan Carlos of Spain was stranded in Washington during a refueling stop because of mechanical trouble with his jet.

No middle ground found in dispute over ancestors

By Daniel Q. Haney

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Did we all descend from Eve, an African woman whose offspring quite literally conquered the world?

Though of course no one knows her name, some biologists and anthropologists believe that all humanity traces its roots to just one woman. This idea, known as the Eve hypothesis or the Garden of Eden theory, is intriguingly simple:

Eve lived in sub-Saharan Africa 100,000 to 200,000 years ago. As the ancestors of modern humans, her children and grandchildren spread throughout Africa and eventually across the world, triggering the extinction of other primitive peoples.

Or so some scientists believe.

Others ridicule the idea. The theory, based on a comparison of the genes of people around the world, is one of the most hotly contested controversies in the often-rancorous field of human origins.

At a meeting earlier this year of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, both sides argued their cases with facts, speculation and sarcasm.

Allan C. Wilson of the University of California at Berkeley, one of the architects of the Eve hypothesis, said the evidence is so strong that the "argument is done, clinched, finished. It's over."

Not quite, countered the other side.

"There are serious and obvious flaws in the Eve hypothesis," said Geoffrey G. Pope of the University of Illinois.

Most everyone agrees that small-brained, humanlike creatures arose in Africa 1.5 million to 2 million years ago. They spread throughout Africa, Europe and Southeast Asia and flourished for hundreds of thousands of years.

But what became of them? The theory favored by Pope and many fossil experts holds that those creatures, known as homo erectus, are the true ancestors of us all.

If they are right, these early hominids parted company in Africa but went on to evolve in unison. Useful genetic changes that arose in small pockets of population slowly spread throughout the world as neighboring tribes mingled. After thousands of centuries, they became us — modern humans who differ only in superficial racial features.

However, Garden of Eden theorists believe those early settlers disappeared leaving no trace in humanity's genes. Instead, they say they have evidence that a new kind of people arose in Africa much more recently. Their kin also spread throughout the prehistoric world, somehow killing off or squeezing out the European Neanderthals and other descendants of the first wave out of Africa.

"There is no question on this issue. One of us is absolutely wrong.'

— Alan Thorne, Australian National University and an Eve skeptic

"There is no question on this issue," said Alan G. Thorne of the Australian National University, an Eve skeptic. "One of us is absolutely wrong."

The debate began about three years ago with the use of new scientific techniques to look for signs of the family tree inside the genes of modern humans. This intrusion of the glitzy tools of molecular biology have not always been accepted graciously by the traditional fossil hunters, who rely largely on meticulous measurements and comparisons of bone fragments to fathom human origins.

David W. Frayer, a Neanderthal expert from the University of Kansas, said the quick acceptance of Eve reflects a preference for sensational catastrophe over mundane gradual change, as well as a "willingness of some to accept without criticism, or even suspicion, the results of molecular biology."

Molecular biology's role has been to decipher the genetic information inside mitochondria. These are structures within human cells that help produce energy.

Mitochondria have their own genes, separate from the chromosomes that carry all the other blueprints for human beings. Ordinary genes are a mishmash contributed equally by mothers and fathers. Mitochondrial genes are passed along only by mothers.

Therefore, each new generation gets an almost exact copy of the mitochondrial genes of their forebears. The only difference is the occasional variation caused by genetic mutations.

These mutations are the key to reading mitochondrial genes as a clock. Biologists believe they know how quickly the mutations occur. By comparing the degree of mutation in the genes of people from different parts of the world, they believe they can trace the various lines back to the point at which they all converge: Eve.

The latest study of this sort, conducted by Linda Vigilant at Berkeley, uses hair roots plucked from 199 people from Europe, Asia, New Guinea and seven ethnic groups in Africa. Analyzing the root genes, she calculates all the people descended from a common ancestor who lived in Africa 207,000 years ago.

Noriega prosecutors come up short

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON – When U.S. troops seized almost 100 tons of documents belonging to Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega during the American invasion of Panama, civilian and military officials proclaimed they had a "treasure trove" of potential evidence against him.

But the highly touted trove has turned out to be a cache of fool's gold.

Justice Department lawyers who once boasted that the documents would prove invaluable in the prosecution of the Panamanian dictator on drug-trafficking charges now concede that investigators have gleaned little new information from them.

Noriega surrendered to U.S. troops on Jan. 3, just two weeks after the massive U.S. invasion that deposed him. U.S. forces seized the documents from Noriega's headquarters and other Panamanian military facilities.

The documents, however, contain little more than the humdrum accountings of Noriega's bureaucracy – payroll records, airplane maintenance logs and bank statements. Together, their volume is enough to fill a railroad boxcar.

"It may well have been a treasure trove of documents to the Pentagon from an intelligence standpoint, but a treasure trove from a prosecution standpoint it was not," said one law enforcement source, who asked not to be identified.

Even tantalizing items such as a letter from Colombia's M-19 guerrillas offering to train Noriega's "dignity battalions" of roaming thugs are of little use to prosecutors, sources say.

"Noriega is an intelligence officer by training," the law enforcement source said. "To think he would sit down and dictate letters and memos back and forth incriminating himself is sheer naivete at best."

Justice Department spokesman David Runkel confirmed that the documents would have little bearing on Noriega's trial, scheduled for next January, on 12 drug-trafficking counts.

Even if the documents contained valuable information, introducing them in court would present legal difficulties. Their handling by U.S. troops broke the so-called "chain of custody" necessary in court to establish that documents are authentic.

"If you introduce a document in a criminal proceeding, you must show who seized it, where it was seized, who handled it and where it went," the law enforcement source said. "The integrity of the document has to be maintained. Clearly, in an invasion, you don't have document integrity."

Noriega, who was indicted in Florida in February 1988 is charged with accepting $4.6 million from the Colombian Medellin drug cartel in exchange for turning Panama into a worry-free waystation for drug trafficking between 1981 and 1986. He faces 165 years in prison if convicted on all counts.

The prosecution reportedly will base its case on a string of witnesses, mostly former drug partners of Noriega.

Chief among them is Floyd Carlton Caceres, Noriega's personal pilot, who has told investigators and a Senate committee that he ferried loads of cocaine for the cartel from Panama to the United States. Upon his return to Panama, he gave intermediaries a total of $700,000 in payoffs that ultimately went to Noriega, the indictment alleges.

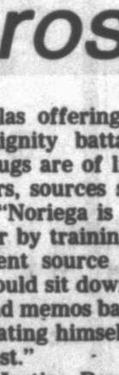

Carlton is serving a nine-year sentence in federal prison for drug trafficking.

In addition, defense attorneys will seek to take advantage of classified documents – not part of the "treasure trove" – now undergoing a sifting process under U.S. District Court Judge William Hoeveler to edit out non-relevant secret information.

These documents will show that Noriega was in fact a reliable ally of the DEA and U.S. intelligence agencies, according to Jon May, a Miami lawyer who is one of four Noriega defense attorneys.

Former hostages recall emotions upon being released

Robert Polhill

Kidnapped
Jan. 24, 1987
Released
April 22, 1990

Polhill was held hostage by the Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine.

- Age 55, New York
- Professor of business studies and accounting at Beirut University College
- Currently married to his second wife, Feryal. Polhill has two children from his first marriage.
- Polhill is a diabetic who requires daily medication.
- Attended Cornell University and graduated from New York University in 1961, after which he began work as a New York accountant.

Associated Press

Robert Polhill is being bombarded by sensations and emotions after more than three years of captivity in Lebanon, and faces physical and mental challenges in the coming months, former hostages said after his release Sunday.

"Bob Polhill probably only learned he was gonna be released about two hours ago," former hostage David Jacobsen said Sunday afternoon.

Polhill, 55, of New York, was freed in Beirut nearly 39 months after he and two other Americans were abducted from Beirut University College on Jan. 24, 1987. He was taken to Wiesbaden, West Germany, for debriefing and a medical examination.

Polhill will have to grapple with guilt, said retired Air Force Col. Thomas E. Schaefer, one of the 52 Americans held hostage for 444 days in Iran.

"One of the major things he'll feel is: 'Why did they let me go?' " Schaefer said. "And the first thing I would tell him is to, 'Don't let it bother you,' because those guilt feelings are not substantiated."

In a telephone interview from Peoria, Ariz., Schaefer said that on his release in January 1981 he felt guilty that he'd been captured and had put his family, the nation and the Air Force through such an ordeal.

After Schaefer was freed, he opened an agency to help people deal with stress and adversity.

Schaefer, 59, said Polhill will probably spend the next few days physically recovering from his ordeal, then try to regain some semblance of order in his life. He said Polhill will have to deal with changes in the world, his loved ones and himself since he was taken captive.

"He'll get the best professional help in the world in Wiesbaden. And he will have access to whatever assistance he may need," Schaefer said.

Jacobsen, who was held in West Beirut from May 1985 to November 1986, said in a CBS News interview: "I'm reliving my release and the emotions of it.

"In the hour drive to Damascus from West Beirut, it's been the first time he's been able to use all his senses to see more than 10 feet away; it's probably the first time he's been out of doors in three years. He's been held in a little basement dungeon most of that time," Jacobsen said.

"He's being bombarded. He's seeing the stars, he's seeing people, he's hearing noises, he's smelling the breeze, and everything," the former hostage said.

"He is going to be thinking about his friends who remain behind, wishing that they could be sharing that moment," Jacobsen said. "He's going to be very concerned that he says nothing that in any way would jeopardize the welfare of his friends."

In an interview later with Syrian television, Polhill said he was "happy and grateful" to people who worked on his case, but remained deeply concerned about fellow captives Alann Steen and Jesse Turner.

Schaefer said Polhill's next step will probably be dealing with the press and requests to speak.

"It can be overpowering; he'll get thousands of requests," Schaefer said. "He has to learn to say, 'No.' "

Schaefer credited his own recovery to the hostage reception team and his wife, Anita.

He said it took him several months to get over his ordeal, and that for weeks after his release he would wake up screaming in the middle of the night.

"It took me several months just to get used to crowds," he said. Schaefer now frequently speaks to groups, and has made about 250,000 appearances, including at schools and conventions, since his release.
