Terry A. Anderson

U.S. reporter kidnapped in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Terry A. Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, was kidnapped Saturday morning in west Beirut by armed men who forced him inside a car and sped off.

Late Saturday, Anderson's whereabouts remained unknown.

No group claimed responsibility immediately.

AP photographer Donald Mell saw the abduction. He said three men, two of them armed with pistols, shoved Anderson, 37, into a green Mercedes Benz sedan with no license plates and drove off.

"I suppose the whole thing took 20 seconds from the time they got out of the car to the time they sped away," said Mell, 22, of Wilmington, Del. "None of them said anything."

According to Mell, the men were in their early or mid-20s, two of them had beards and the third was clean shaven. He said a fourth man drove the car but could not been seen clearly.

It was the third kidnapping of a foreigner in mostly Moslem west Beirut in three days. The two previous victims were British. Five other Americans were kidnapped in Beirut since February 1984 and all but one still are missing. Jeremy Levin, the Cable News Network bureau chief, escaped his captors on Feb. 15.

In Washington, State Department spokeswoman Vivienne Ascher would say only of Anderson's kidnapping, "We're working on it."

A shadowy group believed composed of Shiite Moslem extremists and calling itself Jihad Islami, or Islamic Holy War, has claimed in anonymous telephone calls it holds the other four. The organization is believed to be radical Shiite Moslems loyal to Iranian patriarch Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Nate Polowetzky, foreign editor of The Associated Press, said in New York: "We are deeply concerned about the events in Beirut, and are seeking all possible information regarding the welfare of Associated Press correspondent Terry Anderson. We will, of course, pursue all avenues for his release and safe return."

In Beirut, G.G. Labelle, the AP's Middle East news editor, said the worldwide news agency had been in contact with various government and militia officials and had been promised cooperation in seeking Anderson's release.

Mell said he and Anderson had played tennis and that Anderson dropped him off shortly before 8:30 a.m. in the Ein Mreisse section of the Lebanese capital.

"I got out of the car and was talking to him through the window," Mell said. "And at that time, a green Mercedes pulled up and stopped in front of us."

Mell recalled that he had seen the car earlier near the tennis court and said he warned Anderson: "I don't like this. Get out of here."

But the abductors already had gotten out of their car.

"One of the three came toward Terry, reached into the car, opened the door, grabbed Terry like with a bear hug," Mell said. "The three men got into the car, where there was a fourth driving, they pushed Terry into the back of this green Mercedes with a curtain around the back of it ...and sped off."

Businesswomen learn lessons from mistakes

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

It took hard work, long hours and many mistakes. But today Cecilia Ochoa Wollschlager and Celia Morales can be classified as successes in their endeavors. They are typical of the members of the newly formed Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

Like the other members, they're willing to pass on what they have learned to younger Hispanics dreaming of getting into the business world, helping them to become successes, sans the stumbling mistakes. Mrs. Wollschlager is in the garment industry, producing others' designs now but hoping to someday include her own. Mrs. Morales started a local restaurant that became successful and she now is getting into a clothing boutique.

Mrs. Wollschlager studied geology in college, but her creative side took over a few years ago. "I've always liked to sew and create. I'd go to the store and couldn't find what I wanted. I saw the potential of a very big business."

The concept of twin industries, or maquiladora, between border cities in the United States and Mexico began growing. With her family in El Paso and an attorney brother who handles the legal work for twin industries in El Paso-Juarez, Mrs. Wollschlager's idea began to take shape about two years ago.

FOR SEWING garments — whether her designs or someone else's — Mrs. Wollschlager saw the labor force in Juarez was excellent. She and her brother opened up a small factory in Juarez with 12 employees making uniforms for Juarez police officers. She began to seek contracts with other companies and designers.

She even looked in Midland for a market but found little. Eventually, her contracts came with larger, nationally known companies, such as Brittania jeans or Blue Bell. "I saw it was easier working with big companies."

Starting with a dozen workers, the Juarez factory has grown to 45 employees. The El Paso plant now has 75 operators, she said. From producing 150 garments a week a year ago, the twin industries now are putting out about 20,000 a week. And she recently obtained an 84 week contract with a major retailer.

After spending last summer in El Paso with the two factories and working from 6:30 a.m. to 10 p.m., Mrs. Wollschlager pulled out some and is leaving more of the daily operations to three partners while she stays in Midland with her husband and three children.

Cecilia Ochoa Wollschlager, seated, and Celia Morales each pursued their dreams of a business, made a lot of mistakes but came out winners. They're still learning, but are willing to serve as role models for young Hispanics.

Iraq: Jets bomb 11 Iranian cities in retaliation

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq said its jet fighters attacked "selected targets" in 11 Iranian cities Saturday after a powerful explosion shook Baghdad, the Iraqi capital. Iran claimed it retaliated with air raids and artillery attacks on 10 Iraqi cities.

Iraq reported the explosion in downtown Baghdad shattered windows, but it made no mention of casualties. Iran claimed its forces had fired a missile into the city, but Iraq denied that and said the blast was caused by a car bomb detonated by saboteurs.

War communiques issued by Iran and Iraq also described fierce ground fighting in the southern Iraqi Huwaizah region for control of the strategic Basra-Baghdad highway.

A communique distributed by Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency (IRNA) said Iranian forces killed or wounded 3,100 Iraqi soldiers and took more than 1,019 prisoners in the Huwaizah fighting.

The agency, monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus, also reported that Iraqi air raids on residential areas of the Iranian cities killed 109 people and wounded 296.

Iran and Iraq have been at war since September 1980 in a conflict over their common border, but ground fighting and air raids intensified last week.

Iraq's official Baghdad radio, in a broadcast monitored in London, said Saturday that Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz had sent a letter to the president of the U.N. Security Council proposing a truce.

It said Aziz urged the United Nations "to reach a comprehensive solution to the conflict."

The broadcast quoted Aziz' letter as saying the solution would require both sides "to cease fire and immediately end all military operations, to withdraw forces to internationally recognized borders, and to dispatch a team of U.N. observers to monitor the cease-fire, withdrawal, and the two sides' adherence to this."

It said Aziz was responding to a statement issued Friday by the Security Council. Iran has rejected numerous mediation efforts, saying Iraqi President Saddam Hussein must first be removed from power.

Baghdad radio reported Aziz also said Iraq was willing to discuss "a moratorium on shelling of purely residential areas and the exchange of prisoners of war."

IRNA said Iran carried out air raids on the cities of Agra and Dyana and fired artillery rounds into Basra, Badra, Khanaqin, Zorbatieh, Mandali, Khormal, Seyyed Sadeq, Shahr Dari and Halabjah.

Tests to keep illiterate from graduating, school official says

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

House Bill 72.

Persons responsible for its passage have been praised nationwide for pioneering such massive reforms in education.

In Texas, however, those same pioneers have come under fire from residents who claim the law will have a detrimental effect on public education.

A specific chapter of the bill gaining notable criticism among Texas youth is that which requires every student to pass an examination before a high school diploma is awarded.

Beginning in 1987, students are to be tested in mathematics, reading and writing skills. And "no student will be granted a high school diploma until they have passed the examination, regardless of the grades they have made in high school," said Midland Independent School District superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi.

"I think it's unfair because those who are juniors and seniors don't have to take it," Midland High School sophomore Malgorzata Rudzki said.

"It's our class that's getting all these rules thrown in our face. I don't think they've made the schools any better," interrupted classmate Shelley Morrow.

Another student expressed concern over the examination required in addition to more intense demands on curriculum. "If you make straight A's in all your classes you shouldn't have to prove yourself. You can't prepare for a test like this," said sophomore Kim Nix.

But Drina Boban argued, "I think it's something they should have done a long time ago because some people cheat their way through school."

Maridell Fryar, coordinator of secondary education, implied that's precisely the point.

"I believe the Legislature's intent in passing this part of the bill was to ensure that any person receiving a high school diploma in Texas is not functionally illiterate," she said. "The intent of the state was to set up a systematic approach to measure and prove that the grades given are the grades earned; the credits given are the credits earned, and the diplomas given are the diplomas earned."

According to Ms. Fryar, the examination first will be administered statewide in October after which all students will be tested in October of their junior years. Those who fail the examination will have an opportunity to take it again in May of the junior year; and in October and May of their senior year.

Asked whether MISD should concern itself with the possibility of low test scores, she answered, "We are confident that the test is not unreachable for students attending school in Midland, but yes we are concerned about the failures."

The reason for the concern, she noted, is the result of statistics released following the conclusion of the most recent six weeks grading period. Of the estimated 7,000 secondary students enrolled, 2,720 or 37.7 percent failed at least one or more courses, she reported.

Carrasco disavows role in move to alter ballot

From Staff Reports

Manuel Carrasco, an at-large candidate for Midland City Council in the April 6 election, issued a statement Saturday in which he disavowed any association with efforts to alter the ballot language or to encourage the practice of "single-shot" voting.

In a news article published Friday in the Midland Reporter-Telegram concerning efforts by minority organizations to force a change in the wording of the April 6 city election ballot, Joanne DeWitt referred to Carrasco's candidacy for one of the two at-large seats.

Two minority organizations are seeking to have the city change wording of the at-large ballot from "vote for two" to read "vote for one or two." At issue is the strategy of "single-shotting" by voting for one candidate only, thereby increasing his or her chances of winning.

"...The reader of the (previous) article might incorrectly infer that I support these efforts to encourage citizens to 'single-shot' vote for their preferred candidate instead of selecting two from the at-large slate. This is not true."
— Candidate Manuel Carrasco

"The mention of my name by Mrs. DeWitt in connection with efforts by the League of United Latin American Citizens and the Black Advisory Council to negotiate changes in the wording of the city election ballot is more unfortunate. The reader of the article might incorrectly infer that I support these efforts to encourage citizens to 'single-shot' vote for their preferred candidate instead of selecting two from the at-large slate.

"This is not true.

"I agree with Mayor (G. Thane) Akins, who was quoted as saying that 'single-shotting is contrary to the spirit of the at-large elections.' I hope that the voters will consider the qualifications of each candidate for the two at-large places and select the two they favor," said Carrasco.

He said he is running for the City Council because "of my qualifications and keen desire to serve. It is demeaning to anyone to be labeled according to their ethnic or cultural background, as if that label could somehow summarize the qualities of that individual. Such an idea is absurd, and Midland voters have proved this several times by electing Mexican Americans and blacks to the school board and Midland College board.

"I n proud to be a Mexican American and part of a family that values hard work, education and loyalty to one another. But the fact that I was born Mexican American has nothing to do with my reasons for wanting to be a city councilman. I happen to believe I have the qualities of honesty, fairness and good judgment that will help me represent all the people of Midland," he said.

Carrasco said that if he were strictly a minority candidate he wouldn't have the endorsement of such civic leaders as Bill Franklin, Jane Wolf, Ted Kerr, Parker Humes or Joe Dominey. "I expect many others to endorse me before the election," he said.

Carrasco operates his own insurance and real estate business, and is a member of the Midland Board of Realtors and Life Underwriters Association. Until three years ago, he was director of elementary education for the Midland Independent School District.

Syrian troops moving near Christian heartland

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syria moved troops and tanks to the northern fringes of Lebanon's Christian heartland Saturday, saying it was supporting beleagured Lebanese President Amin Gemayel against pro-Israeli militia rebels within his own Christian community.

The rebel leaders convened a war council after Syria's declaration and said commanders of all fighting units of the Lebanese Forces militia "have placed their entire potential at the disposal of the rebellion to face any emergency."

The statement by the rebel command did not specifically refer to the movement of Syrian troops and armor. The command had earlier denied the "presence of any abnormal military moves" in northern Lebanon.

Israeli forces and their Lebanese militia allies meanwhile came under attack six times Saturday in south Lebanon, military sources in Tel Aviv said. The Israelis also sealed off a village in the south and conducted house-to-house searches, U.N. spokesman Timur Goksel said.

Local radio stations in Beirut said Syrian tanks were seen rolling south of the Madfoun bridge on the coastal highway toward Christian areas from Syrian-controlled northern Lebanon.

But Lebanese security sources said the Syrians used a few tanks and personnel carriers and less than a battalion of 800 men in the move.

"I don't think they've massed a big enough force for a military thrust," said one source.

The Lebanese sources, like the Tel Aviv sources, spoke on condition of anonymity.

Syria's defense minister, Lt. Gen. Mustafa Tlass, said in Damascus the objective of the Syrian military move "is to assist...Gemayel and the legitimacy. It is aimed at supporting the Lebanese army and preventing the situation from further deterioration."

The move appeared designed to bring pressure on the insurgents rather than to invade the Christian hinterland, most of which has been seized by the anti-Gemayel mutineers in the previous five days.

Tlass said the revolt staged by pro-Israeli militia commander Samir Geagea against the authority of Gemayel's Phalange Party on Tuesday was an "obvious attempt to sabotage the course of national reconciliation in Lebanon." He added, "Syria cannot stand idly by."

There was no word how far south the Syrian units pushed from the regular checkpoint the Syrian army maintains on the Madfoun bridge, 29 miles north of Beirut.

The Lebanese army mans a permanent checkpoint a mile south of the Syrian checkpoint. Another mile southward on the highway, the rebel militiamen control the so-called Barbara position at the entrance to the Christian zone.

In the previous two days, Syria twice warned it would not tolerate the rebellion in the ranks of the rightist Christian Lebanese Forces.

The rebels demanded the militia's independence from the Phalange Party and separate representation in future negotiations to end Lebanon's nearly 10-year civil war. They also grumbled about Syria's influence on Lebanon's government.

Thousands of South African blacks boycott work, shops

PORT ELIZABETH, South Africa (AP) — Tens of thousands of blacks boycotted work and shops Saturday at the start of a three-day "stayaway" to protest increases in bus fares and gasoline prices.

Police spokesman Lt. Cecil Vermaak said there were minor incidents of stone-throwing and arson, but no major violence in the work stoppage by residents of Port Elizabeth's black townships.

At the main entrances to New Brighton, the largest of this Indian Ocean port city's segregated townships, almost no traffic passed through police roadblocks. The few buses that emerged were all but empty. Police barred whites from entering the township.

Sipo Hashe, secretary of the Port Elizabeth Black Civic Organization, which called the boycott, said it was "100 percent successful so far." He and others said it was the first time a protest strike had succeeded on such a scale in the industrial, eastern Cape Province.

Hashe said it had given notice to whites "of what we are going through, that the people are suffering."

The stayaway reflected the increasing degree of organizational muscle and skill by black opponents of white-minority rule.

It was opposed by the unions.

The protest was over a rise in bus fares from 33 to 36 South African cents one way in Port Elizabeth. A South African cent is worth about half a U.S. penny. Gasoline prices were increased by 25 to 40 percent. It now costs about $15 in Port Elizabeth to fill up the tank of the smallest economy car.

It was the first such black boycott since an estimated 800,000 workers stayed home in the Johannesburg area Nov. 5-6 in a protest that led to fierce rioting and 25 blacks being killed.

Bush visit encompasses palaces, refugee camps

By W. DALE NELSON

BAMAKO, Mali (AP) — At El Obeid in Western Sudan, white-clad Sudanese perched in the acacia trees to catch a glimpse of their American visitor.

At Bayan Gada in Eastern Niger, children and adults squatted in the dust with slates on their knees, learning the word for tent.

At the Hotel l'Amitie in Bamako, a reporter ran into a delay in filing his story: the Moslem telex operator was on his knees saying his morning prayers.

These are snapshots from Vice President George Bush's journey through three African countries, a journey that mingled the misery of famine camps with the splendor of presidential palaces.

The first stop was Khartoum, Sudan, where Bush and Sudanese President Gaafar Nimieri met in the palace where Maj. Gen. Charles George Gordon, the legendary "Chinese Gordon," was killed 100 years ago.

Then the vice president flew to Kassala, near Sudan's eastern border with Ethiopia, where huge rock outcroppings form a backdrop to the oasis of palmetto trees and mud and grass huts, and the harsh desert around it.

As always, Bush's limousine followed him in an Air Force C-130 transport, and a vice presidential motorcade with camels racing alongside made its way over a dusty road to the nearby refugee camp of Wad Sheriffe.

Here were the grimmest scenes of the entire trip: listless, spindly legged children barely staying alive on feedings of dried milk enriched with oil and sugar; gaunt, weary women who walked miles at night from their homes in Ethiopia's Eritrean hills to reach this refuge of straw mats and cots; mounds of earth marking the graves of drought victims stretching as far as the eye could see.

The next day, the vice president's party flew to El Obeid, a town in Western Sudan that was conquered by the 19th century Islamic fundamentalist al-Mahdi before the final assault on Khartoum in which Gordon fell. It is now the capital of Kordofan, a region the size of California that has only one road, 62 miles long.

At a camp west of town, families driven from their homes by drought had made huts by stretching straw and burlap over thorn bushes. A doctor said 16 people had died that week, mostly children succumbing to respiratory complications of measles. Makeshift signs were everywhere. One said, "Nice to come and see us, Bush."

At the Khartoum Hilton, at the confluence of the White Nile and the Blue Nile, the swimming pool had separate hours for men and women, a reflection of the strict Islamic law imposed in Sudan.

There were other reflections. An Agency for International Development official said that when some of her grandmother's jewelry that had been handed down to her was stolen from her apartment, she suspected a guard in the building. He was not apprehended, but when a friend of hers moved into the building, she warned him about the guard. The guard was later caught with her friend's stolen bicycle. His right hand was cut off. "Grandmother's jewelry was not really worth somebody's hand," she said.

The next stop was Niamey on the Niger River, the capital of French-speaking Niger.

Journalists were warned to be cautious of photographing anything of military value, such as a bridge.

The morning after a state dinner, complete with whole roast lambs, at the presidential palace, Bush was to fly to Maradi, east of the capital, to see an off-season farming camp, but a dust storm that all but blotted out the sun kept his airplane, Air Force Two, on the ground.

WORLD IN BRIEF

U.S., Japanese talks set

TOKYO (AP) — Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe will meet U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz on April 14 to discuss contents of a package of trade measures that the Japanese government is preparing, the Kyodo news service reported Saturday.

Kyodo said Abe will explain progress made in opening up its markets to foreign companies in the fields of telecommunications, electronics, pharmaceuticals and medical equipment and forest products.

In a Los Angeles meeting in January, Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone and President Reagan agreed to take up those areas in an attempt to redress some of Japan's $36.8 billion trade deficit with the United States.

Tiger cleared in death

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Dhitoo, a tiger at India's Corbett National Park, has been cleared of killing a British ornithologist, a government official reported Saturday.

H.S. Pawar, director of India's Project Tiger, said it had been established that a female tiger killed David Hunt, a resident of the Scilly Isles off southwest England, on Feb. 22.

The official said Hunt was "irresponsible" in being on foot in the park. Hunt, trying to track an owl, reportedly strayed from a group he was leading and accidentally went near a female tiger guarding her newborn cubs. News reports said the tiger clawed Hunt on the face and mauled his leg.

Turks protest coercion

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — An estimated 4,000 Turks demonstrated outside the Bulgarian Embassy on Saturday to protest what they said were that nation's attempts to force its Turkish minority to adopt Bulgarian names and customs.

Reagan, Mulroney to hold 'Shamrock summit'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan flies to Quebec today for two days of talks with Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney in a personal effort to forge a more harmonious partnership with America's northern neighbor.

Disputes that have festered in the past over trade, superpower relations and acid rain will be dealt with, but are expected to be overshadowed by expressions of hearty goodwill and cooperation between the allies, the world's two largest trading partners.

Reagan, giving an upbeat preview of the visit in his Saturday radio address, said he and Mrs. Reagan were going to Canada "for one simple reason — no other country is more important to the United States."

The talks between the two men — who share an Irish heritage — have been dubbed "the Shamrock summit," since they begin on St. Patrick's Day. U.S. officials hint that the harmony may even extend to a vocal note with the leaders participating in a rendition of Irish tunes at a gala tonight.

Quebec City, the capital of Mulroney's home province, is the site for three sessions today and Monday between the two leaders.

Besides acid rain and trade, the leaders will discuss an agreement to improve an airborne defense system, the arms control talks in Geneva, Switzerland, and relations with the Soviet Union and Central America.

It is the third meeting between the two men, who share a strong belief in free enterprise and the need to improve their nations' defenses.

Reagan has praised Mulroney as a "an articulate and effective defender of Canadian interests and a strong friend of the United States." In an interview with a Canadian magazine last week, he said, "I confess that I like Brian Mulroney a lot...he's a true Canadian patriot."

For his part, Mulroney has called the United States "our greatest friend, neighbor and ally, period...But like all valuable relationships, it must never be taken for granted."

Because the two nations share an undefended 5,000-mile border, engage in bilateral trade that amounts to more than $110 billion and are allies in vital defense pacts, the purpose of the meeting is "to coordinate policy," said Richard Burt, assistant secretary of state for European and Canadian affairs.

He also said the two leaders will discuss East-West relations in light of Mulroney's meeting last week with the new Soviet leader, Mikhail Gorbachev.

In his radio address, Reagan referred to some problems that have cropped up in the past between the two nations and said, "We've been working hard to set things straight."

The president is known to have a better rapport with the more conservative Mulroney than he did with Canada's previous leader, Liberal Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, who had tried to assert Canada's sovereignty and independence from U.S. economic and superpower policies.

Reagan lauded relations with Canada, saying they were "as good as they ever have been" and said he looked forward to dealing with Mulroney. The Canadian prime minister is supportive of Reagan's position in the arms talks and his government has begun a study to liberalize trade. But Candadian officials have expressed fears of growing protectionist sentiment in the United States and moves to increase tariffs.

The president also touched on one issue that has clouded ties in the past — acid rain. He said that the problem is shared by both countries and he was "anxious to hear the prime minister's views" on the subject.

Acid rain is said by some to be caused by sulphur dioxide emissions from power plants. Canada has launched a program to cut its emissions and would like the United States to do the same. But the Reagan administration has opted for more research rather than an expensive clean-up program.

A statement on the matter is expected, but it may not be enough to satisfy those Canadian critics who are pushing for a more active U.S. position.

U.S. and Canadian officials have said that Reagan and Mulroney will sign an agreement for a new $1.2 billion system to replace the outmoded "Dew Line," or Distant Early Warning Line, which was built to detect incoming Soviet bombers but cannot now detect the new, low-flying cruise missiles.

Other possible accords ready to be signed involve fishing and improving law enforcement cooperation.

An array of Cabinet officials is accompanying Reagan, including Secretary of State George Shultz, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, Attorney General Edwin Meese III, Special Trade Representative William Brock and Lee Thomas, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency.

Odessan killed when car hits well-head unit

From Staff Reports

A 35-year-old Odessa truck driver was killed early Saturday morning after his vehicle struck a hydrill well-head unit that had fallen into the north service road of Interstate 20, west of County Road 1310.

Ronnie Ray Steen was pronounced dead at the scene shortly after the 6:30 a.m. accident by Midland County Justice of the Peace Robert Pine.

His body was taken to Easterling-Wilson Funeral Home in Odessa, according to the Department of Public Safety.

DPS reports indicated Steen was driving east in a 1976 Chevrolet Surburban when his car struck the unit lying in the service road.

His vehicle rolled onto its top after hitting the unit, which had fallen from a Hillin Drilling Co. truck shortly before the accident, reports said.

DPS Trooper Matt Andrews of Midland investigated the accident.

KIDNAP

Mell said he did not know if he was going to be kidnapped as well.

"One of the three, the one without the beard, was pointing one of the pistols at me from a distance of three to five yards. I didn't move," Mell said. "He didn't say anything. None of them said anything."

Mell started to advance toward one of the gunmen, then added: "As I did that, he waved his pistol for me to back off, which I did. At that point, I realized they had no interest in me."

He tried to follow in Anderson's car but lost the vehicle in little more than a block, Mell said.

Mell said that his eyes met Anderson's as Anderson was being pulled away.

"His look said 'Do something.' Mine said 'I can't,'" Mell recounted. "I felt absolutely helpless."

Anderson, who was born in Lorain, Ohio, and grew up in Batavia, N.Y., has worked in Beirut for more than two years. He reported for the AP in Detroit, Mich., and Louisville, Ky., then in Tokyo and South Africa, before coming to Beirut. The AP has maintained an office in Beirut since 1954.

His wife, Mikki, and daughter, Gabrielle, 8, left Beirut during earlier troubles because of concern about their safety. They now live in Japan.

The correspondent's father, Glenn Anderson, who lives in Deleon Springs, Fla., said he last saw his son several weeks ago when Anderson was in the United States on vacation.

"He loves his work," the elder Anderson said. "I tried to tell him (about the danger) — it's one of those things. It's kind of hard on us, but if he knows the risks — and he's a good reporter — what can you say?"

Anderson graduated from Iowa State University at Ames in 1974 with a degree in political science and journalism, his father said.

The Saturday abduction followed repeated threats against Americans in Lebanon over the U.S. veto of a U.N. Security Council resolution last Wednesday condemning Israeli occupation army practices in south Lebanon. Israel is the chief U.S. ally in the Middle East.

The kidnapping also came amid a rebellion among Christian militiamen in east Beirut, where the U.S. Embassy maintains its only offices in Lebanon. In the previous three days, at least 29 Americans, most believed to be U.S. diplomats, were flown from Lebanon to the nearby Mediterranean island of Cyprus.

After the two Britons were abducted in west Beirut Thursday and Friday, British Ambassador David Miers warned British citizens to leave Lebanon unless they had compelling reasons to remain.

Four other Americans were kidnapped since Feb. 6, 1984, when Druse and Shiite Moslem militias drove the Lebanese army out of west Beirut in the latest round of Lebanon's nearly 10-year civil war.

The four Americans still reported as missing are:

—William Buckley, 55, political officer of the U.S. Embassy. Buckley, of Medford, Mass., was abducted on March 16, 1984.

—Benjamin T. Weir, about 60, a pastor of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A). Weir, born in Salt Lake City but a resident of Lebanon for three decades, was kidnapped on May 8.

—Peter Kilburn, about 60, a California-born librarian at the American University of Beirut, who failed to report for work on Dec. 3.

—The Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco, 50, of Joliet, Ill. Jenco, a member of the Roman Catholic Servite Order, was kidnapped on Jan. 8.

LEARN

SHE CREDITS the company's continued success to the three partners: Robert Tibbs; Andres Ochoa, her attorney brother; and Jim Hines, who formerly was a plant operator for Blue Bell. Hines, she said, "sees the potential of expanding."

"It's better to make it in Mexico," she said of the garment industry. "Otherwise, people are going to the Orient and using Orient fabrics. In Mexico, you can use American fabrics. By employing the Mexicans, you're giving them jobs and they don't have to come across the border as illegal aliens."

This twin industries is being practiced increasingly in Juarez and El Paso, she said, citing Tonka Toys and RCA as examples.

In her case, the clothes are cut at the El Paso factory, shipped to Juarez to be sewn together, and sent back across the Rio Grande for shipping all over the United States.

The work has ranged from vinyl garment bags to children's, women's and men's clothing and related articles, said Mrs. Wollschlager.

By working on the production side of the clothing industry, Mrs. Wollschlager said she understands how many people are involved to make it successful, ranging from pattern cutters to the sewers. "I admire those seamstresses. They sit there day after day sewing, but they make this industry go."

BUT ONE DAY, she would like to be on the designing side, and on April 18 she will be showing 36 of her designs to the Medical Wives' Club luncheon.

"To me, it's a step at a time. I have the production behind me. Now, if I can sell something and market it, I can produce it." She's waiting, though, until her children get older so she can undertake the required travel, especially to New York and Los Angeles to find the right fabrics.

"I'm not a luncheon lady; I can't just sit there. Once you get into a business, you can't go home and sit there," she said.

That has been Mrs. Morales' problem and one of the reasons she got into the restaurant business. It's also why she is getting ready to open a boutique.

"You learn to stay so busy. If you slow down, it seems like you're missing something," said Mrs. Morales.

Given a piece of land on North Big Spring Street by her sister, Mrs. Morales decided it would be a good spot for a small cafe. Her husband, Felipe, had an insurance company, and they decided to construct one building to hold both businesses.

Mrs. Morales thought she could work as her husband's secretary until it was time to open the restaurant, work there until it closed at 2 p.m. and then resume her secretarial duties. What she jumped into was a Mexican food restaurant that became so successful it took over her husband's office space and he eventually had to set aside his insurance work to assist her.

"I DID RESEARCH for a year," she said of the "small eating place" she was going to open. She had never worked in a restaurant, never waited tables, never took an order.

Whenever she and her husband traveled to other cities, Mrs. Morales invariably wound up in the restaurants' kitchens talking to chefs and employees about equipment and food preparation. Then she spent hours in her kitchen preparing the meals she had served her family for years, but trying to figure accurately how much ground beef and how much cheese would be needed for a lot of people. Menu prices also were determined in her kitchen.

Then came the hours spent on where each item of food should be placed on the plate.

She hired a chef to carry out her recipes.

The day she opened the doors of her 50-seat Casita Gerardo in December 1977, Mrs. Morales said she, her daughter Cindy and one waitress had thought the few customers they expected would give them a chance to practice.

"I'll never forget the day we opened. When we unlocked the door at 11 a.m., in walked two women. We had a full house that day and we didn't know what to do. I was in high heels and a nice dress taking orders. I didn't know how to take orders. The chef told me to go by the numbers on the menu. I screwed it up. I'd say I wanted a plate of enchiladas."

AT NOON, her husband — dressed in a suit and tie — walked in for lunch and was put to work cleaning tables. "The poor guy didn't have a chance," said Mrs. Morales with a laugh. "He wasn't supposed to get involved."

Before long, the whole family — including two sons and a sister — were working at the restaurant.

It was from the School of Errors that Mrs. Morales learned how to make the Mexican restaurant a successful business — details like it takes hours to prepare the place for customers, that it takes more than five minutes to make a lot of iced tea, that two boxes of homemade tostado chips didn't last two days as planned but customers were eating through six boxes in one day.

"I had some fantastic ideas that just didn't work out," she said.

But some did, and a few months after opening, she threw her husband out of his office and converted it to another dining room with 28 seats. In 1979, they put on another addition to seat 35 people plus a bar area.

"This establishment was something that didn't go the way we thought," she said. "It was supposed to be a hobby for me." But it grew to the point she couldn't run it herself and in 1982 sold it to other family members.

"It hurt a lot for me to sell it, but my husband's insurance business was also hurting."

SHE KEPT notes during those years, and someday would like to write a book, including all her mistakes. "There are so many little things I learned that people would need to know."

Immediately after selling the restaurant Mrs. Morales wanted to jump into another venture, but her husband suggested she take a break. With a dream to eventually own three businesses — a tea room, gift shop and apparel store — Mrs. Morales chose the latter for her next attempt. The boutique, also located on North Big Spring Street, will open in late April or early May.

Like the previous time, the family is involved, but it's her daughter Cindy who is the partner. "She has a degree in fashion merchandising," said Mrs. Morales.

Like before, she's already made some mistakes, which have educated her about what to do in the future.

But if the purpose of the Hispanic chamber is to assist others, Mrs. Morales is working on that goal.

"A woman who is moving to San Angelo with her husband came to me and said she always wanted to open a boutique and may do it in San Angelo. She offered to work free for me so she could get some experience," said Mrs. Morales.

In the case of these chamber members, teaching can be the supreme compliment.

Barclay, Dodson Centennial Citizens

From Staff Reports

James "Doc" Dodson and C.W. "Winston" Barclay were chosen as last week's Centennial Citizens by Leadership Midland Alumni and the Midland Centennial Commission. Their names now will go into a hat for a chance to win a trip to London, England.

Dodson has given 26 years to the youth and adults of this community. As an educator he has touched the lives of thousands with great influence and help. Dodson is an athletic trainer, physical education teacher and chairman of the physical education department at Midland High School. He has been the head athletic trainer since 1959. He also served as trainer for the United States Olympic Team that traveled to Munich in 1972.

Barclay Dodson

Dodson is a board member of the First United Methodist Church and has been a Sunday School teacher for 20 years. He belongs to various teaching and athletic training organizations. He has had two publications in the Journal of National Athletic Trainers Association and the Texas High School Coaches magazine. He was named Outstanding Young Man in 1973 by the Midland Jaycees. Dodson also served on the American Cancer Board. Dodson, his wife Gayle and their two children were selected Family of the Year in 1982.

Barclay is division manager for Texas Electric Service Company. In the 25 years he has lived here, he has been dedicated to and involved in almost every aspect of helping this city.

He was a director and president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce. He was named Engineer of the Year in 1971 and Boss of the year by the Midland Jaycees in 1973. He received the Optimist Community Service Award in 1970.

Barclay was a chairman of Junior Achievement of Midland and the High Sky Girls Ranch. He is director of the Industrial Foundation of Midland and chairman for the long range planning committee.

Each week until July 7 two Centennial Citizens will be chosen and announced by KCRS radio. American Airlines is donating the trip to England, local travel agencies are donating accommodations and Regency Limousine has donated limousine service.

Entry blanks for the contest are available through the Centennial Office, 686-1985, 109 N. Main St., or by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Centennial Citizens, P.O. Box 1985, Midland, Texas 79702.

JETS

The Iraqi high command in a communique read over Baghdad radio, confirmed that three Iranian jet fighters attempted to raid Aqra and Dyana, but claimed ground troops shot all three down. It did not acknowledge other attacks.

An Iraqi military spokesman reading communiques on Baghdad radio said the Iraqi jets struck undisclosed targets in the Iranian cities of Isfahan, Tabriz, Rasht, Ilam, Karand, Gilan-e-Garb, Serbil Zahab, Saoz and Senenjed.

Hours later the Iraqis said their warplanes also raided the Iranian cities of Dezful and Kermanshah.

The Iranians initially confirmed only the raid on Tabriz, but IRNA reported later an Iraqi jet flew over the capital of Terhan early today and at about the same time bombs were dropped on the cities of Hamadan and Kashan.

It said anti-aircraft fire drove away the plane over Tehran, but one woman was wounded in the raid on Kashan, 120 miles south of Terhan. It said bombs struck at two locations on the outskirts of Hamadan, southwest of the capital, but there were no reports of damage or casualties.

Iran urged Iraqi citizens to evacuate their cities and seek shelter in Karbala, Najaf, Kathemain and Samerra, IRNA reported. Iran has promised not to attack the four cities since they contain shrines considered holy by Moslems in both countries.

IRNA quoted Parliament speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani as saying that continued Iraqi raids on Iranian cities would force his government to retaliate by bombing Baghdad and other cities.

The Baghdad explosion shattered windows in central hotels and caused minor damage to nearby buildings.

Local residents said that after the blast, security forces spread along the Baghdad Airport highway, searching cars and allowing only people with plane tickets to proceed to the facility.

Air raid sirens went off at midday, but reporters heard no Iranian warplanes or anti-aircraft fire. School children were rushed to basement shelters where they stayed for about 15 minutes.

The Baghdad blast was the second since Thursday, when the Iranians claimed they fired a ground-to-ground missile into the headquarters of the Rafidain bank in the center of the capital.

The Iraqis at the time said the bank explosion was the work of saboteurs who, they claimed, had planted explosive charges in the building's ninth floor.

The stepped-up attacks on cities occurred as troops continued their battle in the southern sector of the 73-mile warfront that began Monday.

On Saturday, Iranian forces in the Huwaizah marshland thrust westward in an apparent bid to capture the north-south highway and cut off the southern province of Basra from the rest of Iraq.

The Iraqis quickly poured three brigades into the region, while their jet fighters and helicopter gunships went into action.

The Iraqis, according to a communique, "wiped out" an attempt by the Iranians to cross the Tigris river at an undisclosed location across the 48-mile marsh front. The river runs few hundred yards east of the highway.

Owner of vandalized Cadillac posts $100 reward

From Staff Reports

The vandalism Thursday night of three Cadillacs has prompted one owner to post a $100 reward for information that results in the conviction of those responsible for the green spray-paint job on his car.

Bill Grauten, 2823 Metz Drive, said estimates he received Friday placed a new paint job for his 1981 Fleetwood Brougham at $1,800.

"We had a perfect car," said Grauten, who can be reached at 694-1429. "It looked like it had never even been sat in. We even polished the handles."

Grauten said he parked his all-white Cadillac with dark-red pinstripes at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in the street in front of his house. The next morning, he got in from the passenger side and didn't notice an obscenity had been sprayed in dark-green enamel paint across the driver's side until he got out of his car in the basement of a downtown parking garage. He immediately called police.

According to Sgt. Ed Nicks of the Midland Police Department, two other Cadillacs parked on Douglas and College streets also were vandalized in a similar manner that night.

"We have no witnesses, no suspects, no nothing," said Sgt. Milton O'Bryant.

"I would just like to see these perpetrators brought to justice," Grauten said. "Especially if it's a body shop."

The type of paint, used in professional body shops, is what led him to suspect adults drumming up more work, he said. But Midland youths with nothing to do are also suspected.

"I think there's a lot of rich kids driving around on a Thursday night without enough supervision," said Grauten. "Maybe they're rebelling against the establishment. They probably resent the establishment and their fathers probably drive Cadillacs, too."

When told he sounded like a psychiatrist, Grauten, in his mid-50s, said he was a geologist.

"But we look for clues, too," he said, laughing.

Panel sets hearings on Stacy project

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Water Commission has set formal hearings for 1 p.m. Saturday on amended permits for the Stacy Reservoir project.

TWC delayed action approving permit changes last week in order to send notice to any affected water rights permit holders in the Colorado River between Lake Buchanan and the Stacy Reservoir site.

The changes involved include an amendment to the permit of the Lower Colorado River Authority for the diversion of 113,000 acre-feet of water annually for Stacy.

LCRA is to receive releases from the Colorado River Municipal Water District from Stacy if LCRA's downstream reservoirs drop below 65 percent of their capacity, except when the water is needed for CRMWD's municipal needs, or if the Stacy level would be reduced below 1,530.5 feet elevation.

TWC officials said three commission members will consider the changes at the hearing Saturday, but if there are any other water rights permit holders seeking to become parties, the matter could be referred to a hearing examiner for additional hearings.

The changes requested are to complete the settlement agreement reached by the LCRA and CRMWD on Stacy in February.

TESTS

Also, she said, "We are very disappointed the response we've had to the secondary tutorials," noting that attendance reports indicate limited use by students.

Asked what students may do to prepare for the examination, Ms. Fryar said, "We will continue to offer tutorial programs and the correlated language arts classes, reading labs and math classes will be utilized. But the material on the test must be material a student can expect to encounter in the course of his high school career."

Ms. Fryar explained she doesn't anticipate a concerted change in instruction at MISD and assured parents and students that the district includes all necessary skills in its instructional program to ensure each student is adequately prepared for the examination.

"We're not giving parents and students the message that we're going to give away grades because that's not what we're going to do. But we don't intend to turn our classrooms into test preparation centers either," she emphasized.

Noting that never before have MISD students been in a situation where a standardized test would have such an effect on their lives, she indicated, "Now, we have no choice and the students have no choice. It will be enforced."

U.S., Soviet negotiators set stage for lengthy, complex arms talks

By DAVID MASON

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — American and Russian negotiators have set the stage for what is expected to be lengthy and complex bargaining on nuclear and space arms.

The eventual aim of the talks is ending the nuclear arms race on earth and preventing its extension to outer space.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., who was a member of a senate observer group at the opening of the talks last week, summed up the prospects for an accord when he told a reporter "It will be a long, long, long haul."

The U.S. spokesman, Joseph Lehman, took a similar line when he said, "I think it's going to take quite a few more negotiating sessions for us to make an assessment of whether or not we are near agreement or not."

The chief Soviet negotiator, Victor P. Karpov, on the other hand, sounded a more hopeful note when he told reporters in the Soviet mission that if both sides want an accord "you can do that on the kitchen floor, here or somewhere else."

The past week has seen the usual routine of delegation arrival statements, promising serious and constructive negotiations, an opening get-acquainted session and a first full-scale meeting at which opening positions were put on the table by Karpov and by the chief U.S. delegate, Max M. Kampelman.

Nothing of substance has slipped by a "confidentiality" agreement the two sides reached at their get-acquainted meeting Tuesday in the Soviet mission, a modernistic structure behind a black steel fence.

On Thursday came the first full-scale meeting of the three negotiators on each side who will head working groups on long-range and medium-range nuclear missiles and on space and defensive weapons systems.

The meeting was held in the offices of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency in a business block about a mile from the Soviet mission. The conference sites will alternate. Both are on the Avenue de la Paix (Peace Avenue) in the northwestern part of the Swiss city, a traditional international conference center.

The next meeting will be held Tuesday in the Soviet mission. Further sessions will go on probably until late April, when both delegations will return to their capitals for consultation, then come back to Geneva. Each side has fielded a delegation of about 80 people.

While a news blackout on substantive matters has masked what the delegations are talking about, public statements by both sides prior to the conference left little doubt about the main issue.

It is President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, more commonly known as "Star Wars," a $26 billion research program to determine the feasibility of a space-based shield against nuclear missiles.

Reagan envisages the day when nuclear missiles would be "impotent and obsolete."

But the Soviet Union — which some Western officials believe began its own space defense research program as far back as 1977 — has assailed Reagan's project, saying it will lead to the militarization of space.

Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the new Soviet leader, said during a visit to Britain in December that "in the present circumstances it is especially important to avert the transfer of the arms race to outer space. If it is not done, then it would be unreal to hope to stop the nuclear arms race."

Gorbachev, who became general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party last Monday, repeated his concern over Star Wars in talks with some Western leaders attending the funeral of Konstantin U. Chernenko.

'Furious' worker kills four supervisors

NATION

SOUTH CONNELLSVILLE, Pa. (AP) — A factory worker "furious" over a reprimand knocked out a security guard, killed four supervisors and wounded a fifth before shooting himself to death Saturday, authorities said.

The gunman, Mansel "Sonny" Hammett of nearby Dunbar, was an employee of the Anchor Glass Container Co. plant in this Fayette County town, about 50 miles southeast of Pittsburgh, said police Chief Pete Casini.

Hammett, who was believed to be about 39, "had been sent home for disciplinary action" shortly before 10 a.m., said Casini.

"He returned to work with a handgun, overpowered a gate guard, entered the plant, shooting and taking the lives of four individuals and wounding another" before turning the gun on himself, Casini said.

Phillip Halfhill, 46, a box loader at the plant, said Hammett was angry about being disciplined for talking to his wife, who also works at the plant.

"He was talking to his wife and I guess his shift foreman told him not to," Halfhill said. He said the foreman was one of those who were killed.

"He got furious over that and so they took him into the office and suspended him 'til further notice. So he left and came back with a gun and started shooting," Halfhill said.

James W. Cable, an auxiliary police officer, said he arrived at the plant shortly after the shooting and saw the guard "lying down inside the gate...in a pool of blood."

A guard who answered the telephone at the factory but refused to give his name said about 600 to 700 people were working at the time of the shootings and everyone had been evacuated.

Casini said the dead were Donald Abbott, 48, Hammett's shift foreman; John Coligan, 31, a quality control supervisor; and Ralph Tamaro and Paul Gabelt, both 52 and both department managers.

The wounded man, plant supervisor Richard Hosier, 38, of Uniontown, was taken to Allegheny General Hospital in Pittsburgh, police said. He was listed in critical condition Saturday night with two gunshot wounds in the face and one in the back, hospital officials said.

Bodies of man, woman pulled from lodge's rubble

ALTA, Utah (AP) — The bodies of a man and a woman killed when an explosion demolished a wing of a ski lodge were pulled from the rubble Saturday, and authorities said they did not believe anyone else was trapped inside.

The blast, believed caused by a propane leak from a 10,000-gallon tank in the basement, also injured at least five people, one of them critically, and collapsed the three-story building's left side Friday.

The dead man had been in a room at the Goldminer's Daughter lodge when the explosion occurred, said Salt Lake County Sheriff Pete Hayward. He had been only tentatively identified.

"He was dead when we got him out," said Hayward. "At this time we don't feel there is anyone else in there."

Rescuers earlier removed the body of a woman, identified as Barbara Corallo, 49, Livermore, Calif., said sheriff's dispatcher Gary Lucier.

Most of the 170 lodge guests were on Alta's slopes, 20 miles southeast of Salt Lake City, when the explosion occurred.

Paralyzed woman gives birth to premature girl

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — A 26-weeks pregnant woman, paralyzed since she was improperly injected with a cancer-treatment drug last month, gave birth to a baby girl by Caesarean section Saturday, medical officials said.

Doctors at Albany Medical Center Hospital said the 1-pound, 15-ounce girl has a 60 percent chance of surviving. The child was named Lillian Kathy.

Dr. Anthony Tartaglia, the hospital's vice president of patient and clinical affairs, said a decision was made Saturday morning to induce the birth after Lillian Cedeno, 21, developed breathing difficulties overnight and X-rays confirmed her lungs had been injured by her brain damage.

Ms. Cedeno, of Schenectady, was undergoing chemotherapy for a malignant tumor in her sinuses Feb 27, when staff residents misread the label on a syringe and incorrectly injected a drug called vincristine into her spinal column.

She has been paralyzed since and has been in a coma for a week, breathing with the aid of a respirator. Hospital officials expect her to die.

"Although we are still terribly saddened by the tragedy, we are uplifted by the birth," said Tartaglia. "There is a sense that something good had come from this tragedy."

Tartaglia said the baby, delivered at 1:06 p.m., was breathing on her own but also was connected to a respirator.

"For the first weeks of the baby's life the most critical aspect are the lungs," said Dr. Allan Geis, a member of the hospital's neo-natal unit.

"She's named Lillian because she is beautiful like her mother," said Anibal Cedeno, the baby's grandfather.

Herpes vaccine tested successfully

SOUTH SAN FRANCISCO, Calif. (AP) — A herpes vaccine has been tested successfully on guinea pigs, and scientists hope it eventually can be used for humans, researchers reported.

Researchers at Genentech Inc., the nation's largest biotechnology company, used gene-splicing techniques to isolate a herpes virus protein for the vaccine.

"Right now, we're concentrating on the animal studies, and until we can get conclusive results about its efficacy, we don't want to take a chance on human trials," said researcher Phillip Berman.

He added it would be years before the vaccine could be given to humans.

The results, published in the current issue of the journal Science, mark the first time scientists have reported immunizing animals from herpes with a genetically engineered vaccine, said Lawrence Lasky, another Genentech researcher.

The vaccine appeared effective against both the genital and cold sore varieties of herpes.

The vaccine in the form administered to the guinea pigs is unsuitable for human use because it contains a substance, known as Freund's adjuvant, which is made from mineral oil and kills bacteria. It was added to allow very high doses of the vaccine to be administered to the guinea pigs without killing them.

Celeste: Thrifts may not reopen Monday

CLEVELAND (AP) — Gov. Richard Celeste met Saturday with banking officials, and said after seven hours of discussion that he could not promise that Ohio's 71 savings and loan associations would reopen Monday.

Celeste on Friday declared a three-day holiday for the institutions. He acted after one S&L closed following a run on its deposits, and depositors lined up overnight at two other institutions.

Celeste said Federal Reserve officials, state officials, and state banking executives probably would continue their meetings through the weekend as they sought ways to prevent runs on the institutions.

Celeste, when asked at a news conference about whether the institutions might re-open Monday, said, "I can't really give you an accurate answer to that. I know we're working very energetically here...to get them open as quickly as we can."

Celeste has said he acted to give the financial community time to develop a plan to restore confidence in the institutions. Among the possibilities are providing state-chartered institutions with federal deposit insurance or having Ohio's major commercial banks consider taking over the affected S&Ls.

State legislators were alerted Friday that a special session might be called over the weekend for work on emergency legislation. But Celeste said such a session would probably not take place, adding that it was too early to tell whether any proposed remedies would require legislative approval.

Asked about statements from some of the closed thrifts that they are in good financial shape, Celeste said, "I would emphasize that there are a number of healthy institutions...there's no question about that."

Customers, alarmed by the March 9 closing of the Cincinnati-based Home State Savings Association, had camped overnight last week outside at least two other Cincinnati thrift institutions to withdraw their money. The lines were blamed on eroding confidence in the Ohio Deposit Guarantee Fund, which insured Home State as well the 71 institutions covered by the governor's order. The closing did not affect federally insured S&Ls.

Federal officials and bank executives said they could not recall an action like Celeste's since President Franklin Roosevelt shut all the nation's banks in 1933 to stem a panic during the Great Depression.

In a proposal before the Federal Reserve on Friday, Celeste called for some of the state's major commercial banks to take over the privately insured institutions. They would then receive federal protection as banks, insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

"Yes, that's under consideration," said Oliver Waddell, chairman of the First National City Corp. in Cincinnati.

In Washington, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board on Friday granted conditional approval for Columbia Savings and Loan Co. of Cincinnati to receive Federal Savings Loan Insurance Corp. deposit insurance and membership in the Federal Home Loan Bank system.

Home State, which had closed on its own a week ago, was negotiating with CitiCorp of New York for a possible sale, as well as with other financial institutions, said Kenneth Cox, state commerce director. A spokesman for Citicorp would neither confirm nor deny this.

Celeste said Friday that he was working on a complex plan that could lead to the savings and loans being reopened Monday, but he made no promises.

On Friday, 65 S&Ls forming a new guarantee fund, using 1 percent of their assets, called on Celeste to rescind the closing order and allow them to open Saturday.

Racial tensions lead town to impose nighttime curfew

LUDOWICI, Ga. (AP) — A public high school has become a focal point of violent, festering racial tension, leading the city to impose a nighttime curfew and the school board to schedule a public meeting that it hopes will clear the air.

"From what I'm hearing from the young people, the civil rights movement passed this town by," said Bob Ensley, an Atlanta-based conciliation specialist from the U.S. Justice Department who visited Ludowici on Friday. He blamed the disturbances on a few agitators.

Many blacks "fear for their safety in Ludowici," said the Rev. J.T. Smith, a local Baptist minister.

"The black people are concerned about this matter," he said. "We don't want no violence, we don't want no guns, we don't want no blood. We want what's right."

The 8 p.m. to 5 a.m. curfew went into effect Friday night.

"We're going to enforce it. When we feel like things are comfortable, we'll lift it," said Long County Sheriff Cecil Nobles.

"Things look real good...real quiet," he said Friday night.

The county school board scheduled a public meeting Monday night to give parents an opportunity to air their concerns.

In anticipation of a Ku Klux Klan rally Friday, more than 60 law-enforcement personnel, including members of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, the State Patrol and neighboring local departments, converged on the town of 2,000 in southeastern Georgia to maintain order.

When eight white-robed Klansmen arrived about noon, groups of blacks and whites gathered on separate sides of the town's main street to watch them pass out leaflets. The Klansmen later were joined by five others.

Ed Stephens, Grand Dragon of the Klan in Georgia, said the Klan's appearance was "to show the white people, the parents and the students, that we are here to support them."

In what local black leaders described as the boiling over of long simmering racial tensions, a brawl broke out March 8 at the county's only public high school.

Witnesses said the fight started when a white student insulted two white girls who had been talking to a black student. One teacher suffered a broken nose.

Woman spends settlement on party for city, charities

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — A woman who won a free speech suit against the state for firing her celebrated by throwing a champagne party for the whole city, and doled out $10,000 of her settlement to famine-relief groups, environmental organizations and other non-profit causes.

Sharman Haley, who won a $258,714 settlement — less $114,942 for lawyers' fees — after a six-year court fight, gave the party at a community hall Friday night, open to anyone in this city of 30,000 people with no admission charge.

But along with the dinner, free champagne and entertainment, the three-hour bash was something of a fund-raiser as she offered to give away a total of $10,000 to match people's contributions to their favorite causes.

It turned out that her money was not quite a match, as the roughly 300 people who accepted her invitation donated nearly $30,000 to various causes.

The party, billed as a victory celebration, featured performances by local musicians and speeches about Ms. Haley's case and freedom of speech by her lawyers and participants in the original rally that led to her firing, along with pleas for donations.

Ms. Haley, 33, was fired from her job with the House Research Agency in 1979 for participating in a lunch-hour rally protesting the presence of multinational corporations in Alaska, and then discussing the issue in a television interview.

The state said she had violated a law prohibiting partisan political activity by some legislative employees.

But after a series of appeals, the Alaska Supreme Court ruled in August that Ms. Haley had been fired illegally, that she had a constitutionally guaranteed right to freedom of expression and that she was entitled to back pay and benefits.

Ms. Haley was reinstated to her research job in October. She reached final settlement with the Legislature late last month.

Schroeder equals 112 days' survival of Barney Clark

JASPER, Ind. (AP) — William Schroeder missed his son's wedding Saturday, but it was a historic and happy day for the second artificial heart recipient, who equaled the 112 days' survival of his predecessor.

"He's in really good spirits today," said Larry Hastings, clinical director at Humana Hospital Audubon in Louisville, Ky., where Schroeder remained Saturday.

Doctors had decided the 90-mile trip to Jasper for his son Terry's wedding would have been too much stress for him. Instead, the hospital took the wedding party to Louisville on Friday for a dress rehearsal and dinner which Schroeder attended.

"That was real special for him," Hastings said.

No mention of Schroeder was made at the wedding of Terry Schroeder, 25, and Julie Schnarr, 22, at St. Joseph Roman Catholic Church.

But before leaving for a reception after the wedding, the newlywed said his father "really enjoyed the dress rehearsal. I think last night was just as special as today."

Bach's birthday celebrated

Associated Press

The 300th birthday of Johann Sebastian Bach will be celebrated in the United States with generous helpings of music, including a Bach premiere this Sunday.

Yale University has the honor of the first performance of 33 choral preludes for organ, all previously unknown and discovered last year in the university's library. The concert, with organists Charles Krigbaum of Yale and John Ferris of Harvard, will be broadcast live by American Public Radio starting at 1 p.m. CST today.

Church bells will be rung at noon Thursday in Minneapolis, where Mayor Donald Fraser and Gov. Rudy Perpich have proclaimed the week of March 17 as Johann Sebastian Bach week.

The Houston Symphony and Texas Chamber Orchestra plan two joint concerts March 23, presenting a range of Bach's work.

Florist gets five years

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A florist has been sentenced to five years in prison in connection with what federal authorities say was one of the largest counterfeiting operations in the United States.

William C. Olsten, 50, also was fined $2,500 and placed on five years' probation following his prison term. He had pleaded guilty in February to two charges of passing counterfeit bills and agreed to cooperate with the government. Two other men are awaiting trial.

Jay Foushee, special agent in charge of the Secret Service here, said the $5.2 million seized from Olsten personally and from a storage locker in December was the largest amount of counterfeit money ever confiscated in the Midwest.

Police won't be prosecuted

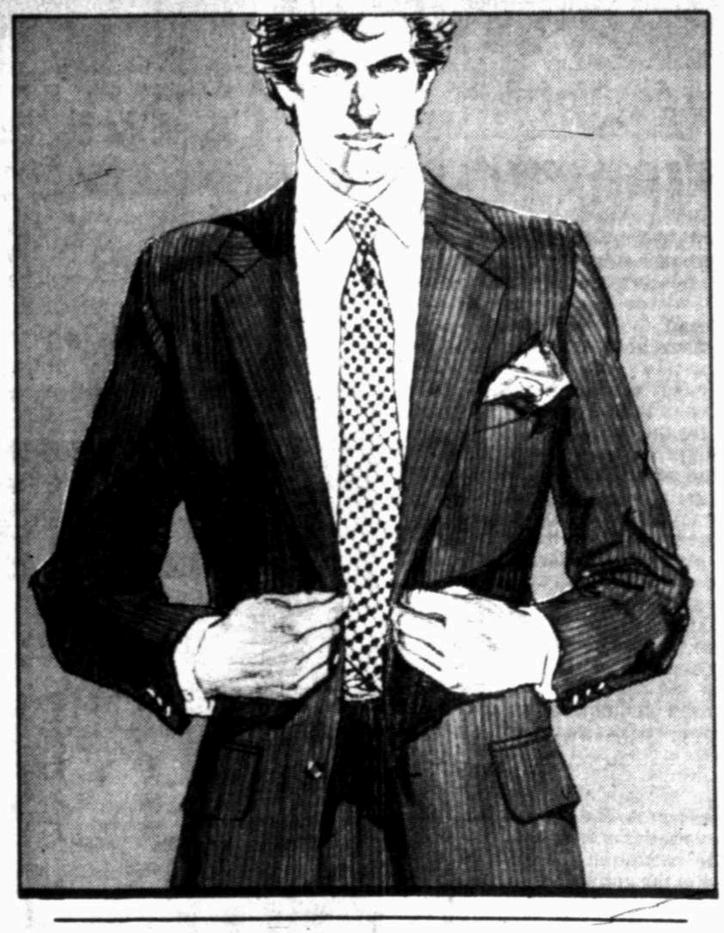

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Twenty plainclothes police officers who stormed Lord Jim's fern bar and held 60 patrons at gunpoint for 90 minutes will not be prosecuted, District Attorney Arlo Smith has decided.

Smith said Friday that the officers showed bad judgment, but had not committed a crime.

Californa growers say Interior decision will bankrupt them

LOS BANOS, Calif. (AP) — Growers who farm 42,000 acres of land made richly productive by federal irrigation water charge they will be put out of business by an Interior Department decision to stop letting polluted water drain from their fields into a wildlife refuge.

"I can't believe the government has done this to these people. They absolutely don't have a prayer," said Jim Verboon, who farms 1,000 acres.

Irrigation water drains from the Fresno County farm land into 1,250 acres of ponds at the Kesterson National Wildlife Refuge 15 miles north of Los Banos, carrying farm chemicals and minerals leached from the soil. There is no natural outlet so pollutant levels have gradually risen.

One of the minerals, selenium, is blamed for killing and deforming migratory waterfowl protected under international treaties. The element is needed by humans and animals in minute amounts, but is toxic in large amounts.

The decision to close a drainage canal and stop delivering water was announced without notice Friday at a congressional hearing in this farm community 130 miles southeast of San Francisco.

Without irrigation water in the arid valley, farmers might be unable to plant or harvest a crop this season. The shutoff also means the refuge could dry up if the pollution problem isn't solved.

Westlands Water District, which transfers federal water to the farms, likely will go to court as early as Monday to stop the Bureau of Reclamation from plugging the canal and halting water deliveries.

"Basically, we're going to do everything we can to prevent this from happening and keep the farmers in business," said Westlands spokesman Don Upton. "Some of the farmers can pump ground water, but many of them can't."

The region gets less than 10 inches of rain a year.

Third-generation farmer Darrell Silveira estimated his family's 960-acre ranch in the affected zone grosses $900 to $1,500 an acre annually with 25 employees. Without irrigation, he said he can expect $2 an acre in rent for grazing cattle.

"We are for closing Kesterson, but we have to have enough time" to prepare, he said.

David Houston, the bureau's regional director, said the region's 274 corporate and family landowners provide 1,450 jobs and annually produce $40 million to $45 million worth of cotton, tomatoes and other row crops.

The dollar amount is roughly 2 percent of the 1984 gross production value from farms in Fresno County — the nation's No. 1 farm county by value.

"The impact of this is severe," Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., told the 500 people attending the hearing of the House Interior Subcommittee on Water and Power Resources.

Craig Ulrici, a Westlands board member who runs a cotton gin, predicted "financial disaster" if drainage to Kesterson ends. "If you don't have any cotton to run, we're out of business."

Most farmers already have received their annual production loans but now don't know whether to spend the money.

Fresno County Supervisor Deran Koligian said he will ask his five-member board to consider suing the bureau and declaring a disaster area.

Program so far aids just 61 farmers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Only 61 American farmers have been helped so far by a Reagan administration loan guarantee program to help banks restructure their most troubled farm loans, the Agriculture Department said Saturday.

Joe O'Neill, a spokesman for the department's Farmers Home Administration, said about $8.4 million in the special guarantees has been issued since the fiscal year began last Oct. 1.

"Banks are not coming into the program as quickly as we might have expected," O'Neill said. "One possibility is that it is taking some time for banks to process applications."

O'Neill said rural banks holding delinquent farm loans may have put off applying for the guarantees until seeing whether President Reagan would veto a more generous program Congress passed and sent to the White House last week.

The president did veto that proposal, which would have authorized the federal government to pay part of the interest rate on shaky farm loans.

O'Neill said a total of $650 million in loan guarantees has been set aside this year and about $80 million of that has already been used for regular loan guarantees. The $8.4 that has gone to aid the 61 farmers is part of the Special Debt Adjustment Program set aside for worst cases, O'Neill said.

An Agriculture Department study released last week estimates that 93,000 farmers are insolvent or almost broke and 136,000 others have serious financial problems.

Teen gets 75 years in woman's murder

NEW BRAUNFELS (AP) — A teen-ager whose parents were jailed for refusing to testify against him was sentenced Saturday to 75 years in prison for murdering a woman mail carrier.

The case against David Port, 18, of Houston, drew national attention when his father and stepmother, Bernard and Odette Port, were jailed on contempt-of-court charges after refusing to testify before a grand jury.

The Ports, who claimed the same legal protections that allow spouses not to testify against each other, were jailed Sept. 12, while their son was free on a $20,000 bond.

Bernard Port was released two months later; his wife was released Jan. 30. Neither was subpoenaed for their son's jury trial, which began Feb. 25 after being moved here because of publicity.

The jury, which deliberated 2½ hours Saturday, also sentenced David Port to pay a $10,000 fine for his conviction in the June 7 slaying of Debora Sue Schatz, 23. Prosecutors said she was killed in the Port's home after being ambushed while making her rounds.

David Port showed no emotion when the recommendation was made by the jury, or when State District Judge I.D. McMaster pronounced formal sentence moments later.

Bernard and Odette Port, who were holding hands after the sentencing, were taken into McMaster's chamber for a meeting with their son. As he left the courtroom, Bernard Port wiped a tear from his eye. The couple arrived at the courthouse Saturday afternoon, their first appearance since the trial began.

Following the meeting, David Port was led to the Comal County Jail in handcuffs. His stepmother was crying as she left the judge's chambers.

Defense attorney Jack Zimmerman said the verdict and sentence would be apealed.

Woody Schatz, 33-year-old brother of the victim, said the sentence was "still not enough. We'll never have our sister back again."

Earlier, a prosecutor had asked jurors to recommend the maximum sentence of life in prison.

"Anything less than 75 years would be an absolute gift to David Port, a gift he did not deserve," said Harris County Prosecutor Mary Milloy said.

But Zimmermann begged the state district court panel to put the teen-ager on probation.

"All of you know what the conditions are in any penitentiary, and you know what it can do for an 18-year-old who has never been in trouble before," Zimmermann said. "If you recommend probation, he can be rehabilitated."

The jury deliberated 2½ hours Friday before finding Port guilty of murdering Ms. Schatz.

As he left the courthouse during a lunch break Saturday, Zimmermann said he feared the Ports would have been subpoenaed and subjected to another possible jail term if they had attended the trial.

Prosecutors never established a motive for the slaying, but relied heavily on a confession Port gave police. Police Officer Irma Sauseda said Port admitted while he was being taken to police headquarters that he had killed Ms. Schatz.

Southwestern Bell to submit rate-hike request to PUC

AUSTIN (AP) — The Public Utility Commission will face another rate increase request from Southwestern Bell this week, telephone company officials say.

Officials said the telephone company will formally request an 18 percent rate increase March 22. The increase would raise Texans' residential bills by an average of $1.75 per month.

"It will be a broadly based rate increase, but will be considerably less than our last request," said Richard Harris, Southwestern Bell vice president for revenue and public affairs.

In all, the company will request about $324 million in new revenues, Harris said Friday.

The company asked for a $1.7 billion rate hike in mid-1983. The PUC granted Bell $816.7 million in additional rates last May.

Harris said the average rise in the basic residential rate would be $1.75 statewide. Rate increases for cities served by the company would range from $1.50 to $2 per month.

Southwestern Bell also wants additional charges for touch-tone dialing, custom calling, directory listings and some long-distance calls.

Bell officials, who advised the PUC Friday of their plans to file the rate increase request, said the higher rates are needed to handle the company's increased operating expenses.

"It is also our position that our stock is not yielding an adequate rate of return," Harris said.

Woman accepts $428,000 in suit's settlement

HOUSTON (AP) — A woman who sued the city because a gun was planted near her son after he was shot to death by police has accepted a $428,000 settlement offer.

Billie Ruth Webster, whose 17-year-old son, Randall Alan Webster, was shot by police after a chase in 1977, said the settlement was offered by city attorneys.

"I really didn't believe I'd live to see this finally settled," Mrs. Webster, of Shreveport, La., said Friday. "It's a big relief to get it all over with after all this time."

The settlement is to be presented to the City Council this week for approval.

Webster was shot by police Feb. 8, 1977, after a high-speed chase that started when he allegedly stole a van in southeast Houston.

Police claimed Officer Danny Mays shot the youth after two other policemen, J.T. Olin and Norvel Holloway, warned him the teen-ager had a gun.

However, a federal grand jury was convened after investigators learned the .22-caliber handgun found near Webster had been listed as destroyed evidence from a police property room.

Mays and Holloway were convicted in 1979 of conspiring to plant the gun and of lying about it to a grand jury. Each was sentenced to five years of probation. Olin was granted immunity for his testimony.

Mrs. Webster and her husband, the late John Webster, filed a civil lawsuit in federal court.

The court ordered the city and two former officers to pay $1.4 million in damages. The city's $200,000 share of the judgment eventually was dismissed on appeal and a new trial ordered. The officers declared bankruptcy.

Ex-A&M cadet wants new trial

BRYAN (AP) — A former Texas A&M University cadet convicted of tampering with evidence police needed in their investigation of the hazing death of another student says he wants a new trial.

Gabriel Cuadra, 21, of Key Biscayne, Fla., made the request Friday, accusing the prosecutor and the jury of misconduct during his trial in January.

During closing arguments, the motion said, Brazos County Attorney Jim Kuboviak twice mentioned punishment for Cuadra when jurors were asked only to decide guilt or innocence.

The motion also claimed jurors discussed giving Cuadra probation when they were supposed to considering guilt or innocence.

'Shadow jury' helped Mattox's defense attorneys fine-tune case

AUSTIN (AP) — A six-member surrogate jury sat in the gallery during Attorney General Jim Mattox's trial on a commercial bribery charge and helped defense attorneys fine-tune their case.

"I think what they did is give us a whole lot of confidence of where we were going," Mattox said Friday, the day after he was acquitted by a state district court jury.

Mattox had been accused of threatening to disrupt the lucrative municipal bond business of the Houston law firm Fulbright & Jaworski if the firm's attorneys did not stop trying to question his sister, Janice Mattox, about a civil case involving the Mobil Oil Corp. and the state.

Each afternoon, the surrogate jurors met with three people they were told were employees of an Austin polling company — but who actually were working for Mattox.

In turn, the intermediaries gave Mattox's lawyers a nightly account of how their case was going.

"We weren't supposed to know who we were working for, but I had a pretty good idea," said Bob Beauvais, one of the surrogate jurors.

The panel was the idea of Tom Green, Mattox's first assistant, who said the technique is still relatively new in the legal profession.

It wasn't until after the trial that the six learned who they were really working for, Mattox aides said.

Elna Christopher, Mattox's press secretary who helped conduct the daily briefings, said the panel thought she worked for the Austin polling company that helped recruit them.

Another member of the panel, John George, a retired Air Force captain, said he was recruited after being recommended by a neighbor.

"All we were told to do is to pretend we were jurors," George said. "We couldn't read the newspaper, watch TV or talk to the wife or kids, which just killed me because I wanted to talk to somebody about it."

The shadow jurors were paid $7.50 an hour — while the 14 regular and alternate members of the real jury received $6 a day.

Ms. Christopher said she, her assistant, Loretta Hadley, and a volunteer conducted the debriefings without pay.

Mattox's chief accuser wishes him well

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox, acquitted last week of a commercial bribery charge, received scores of telephone calls from well-wishers — including his chief accuser.

Mattox said Friday one early congratulatory call came from Fulbright & Jaworski lawyer Thomas McDade, who volunteered to work on Mattox's re-election campaign in 1986.

"He told me he would be more than pleased to serve on any kind of committee that I might set up," Mattox said, "and he'd be quite willing to participate in any re-election-type committee."

During the five-week trial, Mattox called McDade an "unethical lawyer" who engaged in a "personal vendetta" to ruin his political career. Mattox's defense lawyer, Roy Minton, called McDade "a liar" and "a snake."

On Friday, one day after a state district court jury acquitted Matto of threatening to ruin Fulbright Jaworski's bond business, McDa called Mattox at home.

McDade said he intends to make contribution to Mattox's re-electio campaign.

"I'm happy for Mr. Mattox, McDade said. "I don't dislike hi at all. I like him, and I hated see him go through this trial."

Mattox accepted McDade's congr tulations and said he'll accept.

Man convicted in gang rape of six-year-old girl

HOUSTON (AP) — The second of seven defendants charged in the gang rape of a 6-year-old girl last year has been convicted of aggravated sexual assault and faces up to 99 years in prison.

A state district court jury deliberated nearly two hours Friday before returning a verdict against Marvin Coleman in the Oct. 6 attack on the child. The same jury will decide Coleman's punishment Monday.

The girl's father, whose name has been withheld to protect his daughter, was convicted earlier in the incident and sentenced to 99 years in prison.

The girl testified against both men.

Three other men and two women, including the girl's stepmother, are awaiting trial on charges of sexually abusing the girl. An uncle has been charged with threatening the child to keep her from testifying.

"They robbed her of her right to be a normal child," Harris County Assistant District Attorney David Knight told jurors.

During final arguments Friday, defense attorney Tom Jackson suggested the girl made up the story to help her mother, who had been spurned by her husband and wanted revenge.

Jackson also argued the girl would have required hospitalization had five male adults had intercourse with her in one afternoon.

But Knight told the panel of eight men and four women that if the child is lying about the rapes, she had fooled police officers and social workers trained to recognize sexual abuse victims.

Did wrong Gramm enter Texas politics?

By KATHRYN BAKER

WASHINGTON (AP) — After talking with Wendy Gramm, director of the economics division at the Federal Trade Commission, it's easy to wonder if the wrong Gramm entered politics.

"Will Rogers said, 'I never met a man I didn't like,'" says her husband, freshmen Republican Sen. Phil Gramm. "I can't say that. Most people can't. But I never met anybody that didn't like Wendy."

Wendy didn't necessarily like Phil at first.

She had grown up in Hawaii, gone to college in Massachusetts and gotten her Ph.D. in economics from Northwestern University in Chicago. She applied to teach at Texas A&M University because she had never lived in the South. Gramm introduced himself at the interview.

"I had never been in that part of the country, and to have somebody with a very thick southern accent come up and say, 'Well, as a single member of the faculty, I'd be especially interested in having you come to Texas A&M,' my first response was, 'Ew, yuk!'

"But he overcame that," she said, laughing, during a recent interview in her office at the FTC.

On the wall is a photograph of Wendy and Phil Gramm in the Oval Office with President Reagan. The photo is inscribed, "To Wendy Gramm, my favorite economist, Ronald Reagan." There also are photos of the Gramms' two boys in a field of bluebonnets, and a photo of Phil riding a four-wheel motorcycle on a country lane.

Mrs. Gramm said the first thing that changed her mind about her husband was the way he worked with kids. Gramm was coaching a boys football team at the time.

"He would talk to those kids like they were adults," she said. "The kids just absolutely loved him."

Her parents, who still lived in Hawaii, "liked him a lot," Mrs. Gramm said. "I think they were a little shocked when I said I was going to get married to him. My sister lived in L.A. and she drove to Texas to check Phil out."

He passed muster and they were married in 1970.

During the years of dual teaching careers at A&M, politics "was something I don't remember us talking about early on," Mrs. Gramm said. "It was something that just developed over the years.

"As economists, we could see that the economy would do poorly in the future if something wasn't done," she said. "And Phil started to testify and become more involved and to see that a lot of the problems had to do with people up here in Washington, so he started getting interested in having a say."

His first political race was against Democratic stalwart Lloyd Bentsen in the Democratic primary in 1976.

Two years later, Gramm won the House seat that Olin "Tiger" Teague left, again running as a Democrat. In 1983, he switched parties, resigned and ran in a special election, getting the seat back and propelling himself into position to run for the U.S. Senate seat vacated by retiring John Tower.

Mrs. Gramm resigned her job two months before the election and campaigned full-time for her husband while her parents stayed in Washington with the children.

"I loved it," she said. "I really enjoyed the campaign, maybe partly because I hadn't been able to campaign before so I was really ready to get out and go."

Though she enjoyed her time on the campaign trail, she never has given any thought to ever seeking office, Mrs. Gramm said, adding, "It's enough just to get Phil elected."

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Insurance industry entering 'dry spell'

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — Like water, insurance is something folks expect will be available, as long as they're willing to pay for it.

But the insurance industry may be having a bit of a dry spell, which legislators and regulators are hoping doesn't turn into a drought.

In past years, there have been various "crises" in insurance — including medical malpractice, products liability and auto insurance — which have come in for attention.

Currently, there's a good bit of concern over insurance solvency — and while no one is calling the matter a crisis, lots of people are admitting they're worrying.

Rep. John Gavin, D-Wichita Falls, chairman of the House Insurance Committee, says problems in the industry are likely to mean consumers will find it somewhat harder to get some lines of insurance — and will be paying more when they get coverage.

Last year, Gavin says, "for the first time maybe in a hundred years," investment income for insurers didn't exceed their underwriting losses.

Insurers use both income from investments and premiums paid by policyholders to run their operations — and the State Board of Insurance has been considering investment income in setting rates.

Texas differs from most other states in that an agency of the state government determines the standard rate for such lines of insurance as auto, fire and homeowners.

That system has come into criticism over the years as being anticompetitive, and benefitting insurance companies by "guaranteeing" them a profit.

In recent years, however, that criticism has subsided — with the Board of Insurane seeming to have struck a balance between the interests of insurers in making sufficient profit to continue in business, and that of the insurance buyer in not paying an excessive amount for his or her coverage.

SBI has worked to strike that balance partly through the use of rate deviations, which allow an insurer to charge a different rate (usually lower) than the standard or "manual" rate set by the agency.

That system has allowed companies to compete for business by offering (with SBI approval) a version of competitive rates.

But the deviation system also is seen as having contributed to insurer's problems by encouraging companies to seek to alleviate cash flow problems by bringing in a lot of new business with new premiums — while hoping to avoid having to pay out even larger amounts later for losses on those new policies.

Before 1957, SBI officials recall, the agency had no control over deviations — which "got out of hand."

After SBI got control, it eliminated deviations from 1970 to 1973.

But companies discovered they could get around SBI regulation through use of "Lloyds" companies — which aren't rate-regulated by SBI.

The contest between insurers and the board has seesawed back and forth over the years, with the latest phase in the contest involving SBI's attempt to control activity by the Lloyds.

Gavin feels the board has "exercised good judgment" over the deviations issue, and says he's "confident that will continue."

But he admits he's concerned about company solvency, and the effects on the current insurance "crunch" on consumers.

Companies are "backing away" from unrestrained marketing through deviated rates, Gavin says. Some are cutting back on the availability of insurance and others are reducing the deviations offered.

Homeowners who have been able to get policies on their dwellings at 30 to 35 percent "are going to find their policies will be written at 10 to 15 percent deviation," or at the rate set by SBI.

Although Texans may be seeing some problems with insurance, he comments, "we've been fortunate here. We haven't had any of the disastrous failures that there have been in some places...like Baldwin-United."

Texas is feeling the effects of that bankruptcy, however — with Attorney General Jim Mattox (at SBI's request) seeking $500 million in refunds for thousands of Texans who bought annuities through two companies owned by Baldwin-United.

Insurance, Gavin notes, is a perennial subject of attention by legislators — because of its importance to modern society — and its impact on consumers.

"It eventually effects the pocketbook of everyone," Gavin says.

'No-pass, no-play' rule hits students, schools hard

By KEN HERMAN

AUSTIN (AP) — Thirty opponents could not stop Fort Worth Southwest's march toward a Texas high school basketball title. Report cards did.

As a result of the state's new "no-pass, no-play" rule barring extracurricular activities for students failing even one class, three Rebels became ineligible when report cards came out. That was the same day as their state semifinal game against Houston Madison, and they lost it 75-47.

The rule that has thinned the ranks of everything from choirs to track teams is part of last year's tough public school reform bill, pushed by Gov. Mark White and Dallas electronics magnate H. Ross Perot, chairman of a special committee that studied public education in Texas.

As of Jan. 1, students had to pass every course to participate in extracurricular activities. But the shock wave didn't hit until six weeks later when report cards came out.

Dallas Roosevelt High School has lost one-third of its track team that was last year's state champ. Report cards have silenced half the voices in the Grand Prairie choir.

James Wood, coach of the Fort Worth team, supports the rule even though it cost him three players at tournament time.

"They are referred to as student-athletes. Student always comes first. I am a teacher-coach, not a coach. As a coach, naturally I was disappointed. As a teacher and parent I think it's neccesary," said Wood.

But that feeling is not unanimous in Texas, where extracurricular activities, especially sports, provide the only entertainment in hundreds of smaller towns.

"The rule has pretty well decimated our athletic program," said Jim Marcus, principal of Crane High School in West Texas. "Our athletic programs are depleted."

All that glitters and glows is gold.

Wycliffe Associates Presents "Latin America Leap" Banquet

Wycliffe Associates will present Wycliffe's thrust to complete the Bible translation task in Latin America at a "Latin America Leap" banquet at 7:00 p.m. on Monday March 25th in Midland at Holiday Inn 4300 West Hwy. 80.

The "Latin American Leap" will dramatically move Wycliffe closet to completion of its work in the Americas, one of Wycliffe's major goals for the 1980s. In spite of turmoil and unrest in several Latin America countries, Wycliffe translators are faithfully moving forward.

More than 5000 Wycliffe translators and support workers are ministering to Bibleless peoples around the world. A few months ago Wycliffe reached a major milestone. A translation team began work in the 1000th language, the Irarutu in Indonesia.

A monumental task lies ahead. Two thousand language groups still do not have any written words. Translators are needed to develop an alphabet, a dictionary, and literacy materials for each of these languages, as well as translate God's Word.

Your local Wycliffe Associates banquet will celebrate Wycliffe's 50th anniversary. An experienced Wycliffe missionary will report on the exciting progress of Bible translation among the unreached tribes and remote peoples in 45 countries.

The banquet will also include dinner, Christian fellowship, audio-visuals, and opportunities for lay people to be involved in Bible translation. For more information call Kay Holder at 915-689-9667.

In North Texas, partial clearing expected from the north today. Fair north to partly cloudy south tonight and Monday. Highs today 60 to 70. Lows tonight 40 to 50. Highs Monday 70s.

In West Texas, it will be fair through Monday. Warmer. Highs today mid 50s Panhandle to upper 70s Big Bend. Lows tonight mid 30s Panhandle to mid 40s Big Bend. Highs Monday mid 60s Panhandle to lower 80s Big Bend.

Partly cloudy conditions expected

From Staff and Wire Reports

Early morning clouds should clear somewhat by this afternoon with partly cloudy skies in the forecast through Monday.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, temperatures will reach near 60 today and 70 Monday, with a low tonight in the lower 40s.

Winds will be light and variable, turning southeasterly at 5-15 mph by late this morning.

Saturday's high of 53 was 33 degrees below the record low of 86, set in 1966. Saturday morning's low of 41 was 15 degrees warmer than 1970's record low of 26 degrees.

STATE

A blanket of low clouds covered Texas on Saturday, and light rain was reported across much of the state as a weakening upper-level disturbance lingered over the Panhandle and South Plains.

Cool afternoon temperatures were common throughout the state with most readings in the low to middle 50s. A few readings in the middle 40s were evident across the High Plains, while extreme South Texas warmed into the lower 60s.

At 4 p.m., temperature extremes were 61 degrees at Kingsville and 40 at Dalhart. North to northeast winds at 10 to 15 mph prevailed statewide.

For St. Patrick's Day, the National Weather Service said there should be partial clearing in North Texas and most of West Texas, but scattered showers were expected to continue in South Texas.

NATION

Snowshowers persisted Saturday across most of Upper Michigan, dumping up to 7 inches of snow, while rain was scattered over parts of the Southeast and elsewhere.

Six to 7 inches of snow fell overnight at Munising, Mich., with generally an inch or less over the rest of the Upper Peninsula.

Rain was scattered over the southern Atlantic Coast states, the central Gulf Coast states, the southern Plains, parts of the southern Plateau and parts of Lower Michigan.

Heavier rainfall during the 6-hour period up to 1 p.m. EST included 1.70 inches at Moody Air Force Base at Valdosta, Ga., and 1.64 inches at Boothville, La. Amounts elsewhere were less than an inch.

Sunny skies were common over New England, parts of the mid-Atlantic states, and from the upper Mississippi Valley across parts of the central Plains to the northern and central Plateau.

Kim Poor of Tuscon, Ariz., creates realistic space scenes which are on display at Midland Park Mall.

Artist's work 'out of this world'

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

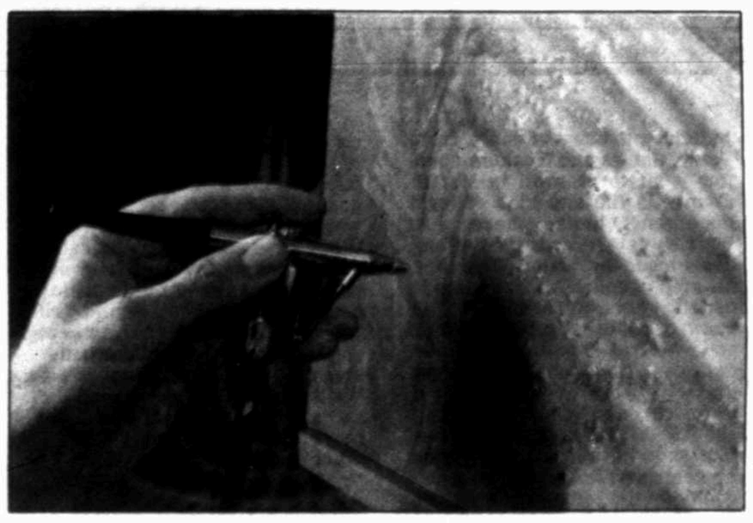

The lure of outer space has induced many a star-struck youngster to strap a calculator on his hip and enter such highly technical fields as astronomy and astrophysics.

But one astronomy-school dropout from Tuscon, Ariz., has allowed his fascination with all things extraterrestrial to lead him into a slightly less scientific career: space artist.

After dropping out of the University of Arizona's astronomy program and being rejected from art school, Kim Poor decided to combine art and astronomy. "And it just kind of snowballed from there."

Space artists paint realistic scenes of other planets from perspectives unavailable from Earth, even with a telescope: Jupiter viewed from one of its moons, say, or Earth and its moon as seen from a passing asteroid. Some space artists merely use their imaginations to create the scene, but Poor belongs to a group which combines creativity with careful research to make the paintings as realistic as possible.

"For example, if you want to figure out how big Jupiter would appear from its first moon, there's a formula for that," says the 33-year-old artist, who exhibited his work at the Midland Park Mall as part of the "Fiesta de Artes" last week.

Cody Bell/Reporter-Telegram

Poor's paintings, created with an airbrush and acrylic paint, are termed "hyper-realism."

With his beard and casual clothes, Poor would look right at home in the artist colonies of San Francisco or New York's Greenwich Village, but his realistic style would not: There's nothing abstract or expressionistic about his moonscapes. He paints them exactly as he thinks they look, which is one reason he is able to sell so many of them.

"Realism and representational art have always been the standard for the normal art buyer," says Poor, who uses acrylic paint and an airbrush to create what he calls "Hyper-realism."

"It's more real than you can actually see with your eyes," he says.

However realistic they may be, Poor's paintings would have been considered surrealistic 40 or 50 years ago, when space travel was only taken seriously in Flash Gordon movies. But people who have seen Neil Armstrong walk on the moon and perused the close-up color photographs of Mars and Saturn beamed back from the Voyager space probe are less likely to consider Poor's work pure fantasy.

"It's the same thing with science fiction," says Poor, who has done illustrations for such magazines as Omni, Science Digest and Discover.

There are several dozen space artists in the International Astronomical Art Association, of which Poor is a member of the steering committee. But in a sense, he has a chance to be the first true space artist, if he succeeds in getting himself chosen as a passenger on one of the space-shuttle missions.

"I've lobbied for that position," says Poor, who hopes the National Aeronautics and Space Administration will make good on its promise to send writers and artists into space so they can translate the typical astronaut's description — "Gee, it sure is pretty up here" — into something a bit more meaningful to people back on Earth.

5 Wells Ranch started near Andrews 1879-80

By BOB BEVERLY

One of the truly notable historic characters of Midland country was Bob Beverly, old-time cowboy, trail hand and sheriff of Midland County from 1908 to 1912. He was born May 5, 1872, in Georgia. He died April 6, 1958, and is buried in Lubbock. He came to Texas as an orphan and a "hobo cowboy," as he put it, but became in time a legendary figure of the cow country and the South Plains of Texas. His interest in our history was insatiable, and he became an authority on ranches and the cowboys, noble and perverse, of the Midland country.

The Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, as a benefactor of his heritage, has an extensive file of interviews, photographs and other historical material relating to his life and career. This fragment from the library's interiew files of one of our most famous ranches originally was written in 1945 for the "Handbook of Texas" at the suggestion of his close friend, J. Evetts Haley, but was never published.

The 5 Wells Ranch was started in Andrews County, Texas, in 1879 or 1880. As there were no wire fences, or any other kind of fence, in that part of Texas at the time, the stock wearing the 5 Wells brand had access to all the open range country of several different counties of Texas and as far west as the Pecos River country of New Mexico.

Growing livestock at that date was a matter of grass and water. The buffalo hunters, in exterminating the vast herds of buffalo, had to hunt out and locate water for their camps. Barney and Jim Whalen, two buffalo hunters, had located the water where the ranch was afterward located by Major Wells. The records do not disclose whether Wells was a Yankee Major or Confederate, but he was originally from Missouri and had with him one Jim Smith, who became his ranch foreman, and probably first induced Major Wells to go into the ranching business.

George Henry Sr., a friend from Missouri, furnished money for Mr. Wells to place the first stock upon the range at 5 Wells, and the brand was started and was named from the fact that Barney and Jimmie Whalen had dug wells by hand, with pick and shovel, until they had five wells on the draw. And from that day until now, the draw is called 5 Wells Draw.

Major Wells operated the ranch as sole owner for some 10 years or more. Then Dr. Elliott, late of Midland, together with W.E. Connell, late of Fort Worth, bought Major Wells' interest, and they operated 5 Wells Ranch some four or five years.

John Scharbauer, late of Midland, bought the interest of W.E. Connell, and the ranch was run for several years by Scharbauer and Elliott. Then John Scharbauer and his brother, Chris, organized the Scharbauer Cattle Company. But still the Elliotts held their interest in 5 Wells, and the checks were signed "Scharbauer Cattle Company and Elliott" for some four or five years.

Scharbauer Cattle Company was then enlarged, taking in as partners Clarence Scharbauer, son of Chris, and Phil Scharbauer, a younger brother of John and Chris. Also, the company bought out the interest of George Elliott, a son of Dr. Elliott, who formerly owned interest with W.E. Connell. George Elliott had married Chris Scharbauer's daughter, a sister of Clarence Scharbauer. Thus the 5 Wells Ranch became the property of Scharbauer Cattle Company about 1905 and so remains up to the present.

For many years the ranch included land both owned and leased in Gaines, Martin, Andrews and Dawson counties. When the ranch was first established by Major Wells, supplies were hauled on wagons drawn up by mules and oxen and bought mostly in Abilene and Colorado City. Later, in 1881, the Texas and Pacific Railroad built west into Big Spring, then on across the Plains, and Midland became the trading post for the ranch.

The only thing to remind anyone today that the Whalen brothers were ever the cause of water being at 5 Wells Ranch is the fenced pasturage, which yet includes the lake where Barney and Jimmie Whalen first located their camp and turned their small bunch of range horses loose upon the range, after the Indians had been placed on the reservations. And I guess as long as time goes on, the lake will be called Whalen Lake, but few people today know why.

Pickens expects oil prices to drop to $23-$24 per barrel

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — T. Boone Pickens predicted Friday that by January 1986, the price of domestic crude oil will drop to as little as $23 to $24 per barrel.

Pickens' remarks came during a news conference that followed his address at the Texas Commerce Bank Silver Bar Award luncheon at the Holiday Inn Centre here.

In about six weeks, Pickens said, he expects to see the drilling rig count pass downward through 1,807 nationwide and by January 1986 he believes the nationwide rig count will have bottomed out between 1,700 and 1,800.

When it was suggested crude oil prices appear to be firming up lately, Pickens said the stabilizing is a seasonal thing and once the heating oil season is over there will be further crude oil price weakness.

PICKENS, WHO has gained considerable notoriety recently with takeover efforts involving Cities Service, Phillips, Gulf and General American, is president and chairman of the board of Amarillo-based Mesa Petroleum.

Pickens, who noted takeover efforts the past three years have made Mesa and its partners about $800 million, said he doesn't see any real upturn in the price of crude until sometime in the 1990s.

"We've got problems," said Pickens.

Loss of deductions for intangible drilling costs and the depletion allowance through tax reform proposals would further compound problems of the oil industry, Pickens indicated.

However, he said, he has talked to Congressman Tom Loeffler in the past 30 days and he believes, because of Loeffler's effectiveness in Washington, the Reagan administration and Congress eventually will realize the oil industry is entitled to some relief.

As to suggestions that deductions for intangible drilling costs and the depletion allowance represent special tax allowances for an industry, Pickens said his response is, "Tell me another industry that got windfall profits tax put on 'em too. It's about time to give this industry some kind of relief."

Prior to Pickens' speech at the luncheon, Ronald Fancher, president and chief executive officer of Texas Commerce Bank-Odessa, presented the 10th annual Silver Bar Award to Tom "Pinkie" Roden for his achievements under the free enterprise system.

FANCHER DESCRIBED Roden as an outstanding example of the rags-to-riches story of a young man who built a diversified business enterprise while also working for the betterment of his community and state.

"Tom has invested countless hours and money in promoting a political climate favorable to business," Fancher said. "He believes in a participatory democracy and actively supports candidates with free enterprise, pro-business philosophies."

Roden, an Odessan since 1936, was named Outstanding Citizen by the Odessa Chamber of Commerce in 1976 and received the Ector County Bar Association's Liberty Bell Award in 1979.

Following the presentation of the Silver Bar Award to Roden, Texas Commerce Bancshares chairman and chief executive officer Ben Love introduced Pickens, who focused his remarks on restructuring the U.S. petroleum industry, why it must be done and what benefits will come from it.

A part of the restructuring involves merger and acquisition, both of which are perceived to be a problem by some in the media, the public and some industry colleagues.

Sunday day with most distinctive personality

Of all the days of the week the one with the most distinctive personality is Sunday.

That is not to say it is best, because it's not. Saturday is. Always has been. Wednesday historically gets high marks too since it helps break up the week. Friday, for obvious reasons, is a favorite as well. I could go on but the point is, when you're ranking the days of the week, Sunday doesn't generally get top billing.

By the same token, it doesn't belong at the bottom, either. Monday does. Stormy Monday. Blue Monday. Call it what you will. Even Garfield the cat knows that day is for losers. The only people who appreciate Mondays are those wimpy little junior executive-types who figure the quickest way to the top is by getting a head-start. So they begin their week with a full head of steam, laughing at those of us who were last seen trying to wash down a couple of Tylenols with that fourth cup of coffee.

Those kind of people should be flogged, of course, but that's neither here nor there.

What we're talking about today is Sunday, that uniquely bland yet intriguing first day of the week.

It has its good points, the most obvious of which is that for most people it represents a day off. Better yet, it is perfectly acceptable behavior to do nothing on Sunday. Waste away all 24 hours and no one will think the worse of you. Indeed, laziness and Sundays have become synonymous over the years. They go together like gravy and hot buttered biscuits.

That's why a typical Sunday for many consists of something like this:

— 10:45 a.m.: Left eye opens.
— 10:46 a.m.: Left eye closes.
— 10:53 a.m.: Both eyes pop open simultaneously, but only after great pain and effort.
— 10:54 a.m.: Groan.
— 10:55 a.m.: Groan some more.
— 10:56-11:13 a.m.: Stare at the ceiling and try to piece together the previous night's activities.
— 11:14 a.m.: Make a mental note to apologize for your behavior from the previous night.
— 11:16 a.m.: Swear you will never have another drink as long as you live.
— 11:21 a.m.: Light up your first cigarette of the day.
— 11:22 a.m.: Suffer coughing attack.
— 11:41 a.m.: Roll out of the sack, stumble into the kitchen, open the refrigerator, gag, stumble back into the living room, turn on the TV, narrow your choices to an old John Wayne movie and professional wrestling, opt for the movie, plop down on the couch, fire up cigarette No. 2, wheeze, notice a faint chest pain, blow it off, flip through a stray magazine, switch back to the wrestling.
— 12:14 p.m.: Give serious consideration to a late breakfast at an old-fashioned cafe, preferrably one that features spicy huevas rancheros with a side order of greasy hash browns.
— 12:15 p.m.: Realize Midland doesn't have any old-fashioned cafes that feature spicy huevas rancheros with a side order of greasy hash browns.
— 12:17 p.m.: Shrug and break open a bag of chips.
— 12:20 p.m.: Switch the TV over to a basketball game.
— 12:57 p.m.: Sneak a glance at your wallet.
— 12:58 p.m.: Try and figure out how you managed to spend $75 and only have a headache to show for it.
— 1:07 p.m.: Give up.
— 1:47 p.m.: Open the refrigerator.
— 1:48 p.m.: Wonder why you keep doing that when you know there is nothing in there.
— 1:50-3:46 p.m.: Hang out on the couch.
— 3:47 p.m.: Consider getting dressed.
— 3:48 p.m.: Say to yourself, "Why should I?"
— 4:17 p.m.: Open the front door, take one step outside, suck in some fresh air, cough, cover your eyes, realize you are wearing only your underwear, retreat back to the couch. Quickly.
— 4:18 p.m.: Feel proud of yourself for getting some exercise.
— 5:42 p.m.: Become overwhelmed with a surge of energy.
— 5:43 p.m.: Try to figure out why.
— 7:28 p.m.: Take a shower, amusing yourself by singing the first three verses of "Amazing Grace."
— 8:15-10:55 p.m.: Hang out on the couch.
— 11:07 p.m.: Hit the sack.
— 11:22 p.m.: Congratulate yourself for leading such a productive life.

Tendency to leave past behind costs us, author says

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The resurgence of the fading spiritual life of the American Indians could offer a hope for saving this downward spiraling culture from destruction.

"Our tendency is to leave our monuments behind and to press on to the future," said Thomas E. Mails, an ethnologist, artist and author, "...and this is costing us something dearly."

His books and art works on the North American Indian are on exhibit in the Museum of the Southwest's Stables Gallery today through April 28.

Mails, a former Lutheran minister and a descendent of explorer Meriwether Lewis, will be autographing his books from 2 to 3 p.m. today at the museum. His works include "Mystic Warriors of the Plains," "Dog Soldiers," "Bear Men and Buffalo Women," "The People Called Apache," "Sundancing at Rosebud and Pine Ridge," "Fools Crows" and "The Pueblo Children of the Earth Mother."

The wish of some Indians, particularly the Pueblo Indians in New Mexico and Arizona, is to preserve their heritage — their "monuments," which are "living things."

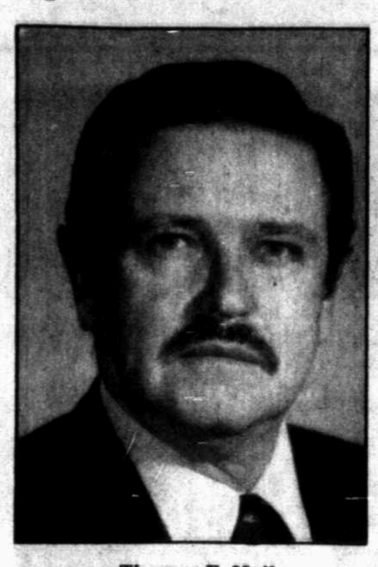

"IT'S A LIVING pulsating core from which all energy flows," said Mails, 62, of California. "The past always retains intense value for them."

The Pueblo Indians hold their rituals, such as the winter solstice rites, in kivas — religious places of worship — and pray to their ancesters so they may participate in the ceremonies. Evidence of that participation is the rainfall from the clouds, the sunshine, and the renewal of life.

"There is a wholesome richness in it," Mails said. "I think it is marvelous...It's not nostalgia. It's a way of life."

Mails cited the Indians' spirituality, their view of oneness with nature and of their taking no more from a hunt than what is needed. They ensured the perpetuality of life — from the antelope to the eagle.

"The have their virtues, and they also have their faults."

Thomas E. Mails

In many segments of today's society, the search for a spiritual life seems to be lost.

"This mechanical world is dehumanizing us," he said. "You can work with a computer, but you can't make love to one. I've never seen anyone hold hands with a computer. They are uncaring."

Mails cited California's Silicon Valley, a region of the country's highest divorce rate.

Mails said if "you base your life" on material goods and what you can acquire, then that existence can and has brought about such phenomena as the high divorce rate, the consequences of nuclear development, "the horrendous pollution problem we're dealing with" and in cases the forfeiture of love. He cited today's obsession with sex and the accompanying deprivation such as is evidenced in rape and child molestation.

"I'm a firm believer in physical relations between husbands and wives and so forth."

To a fault, Americans are "eternal optimists....We have learned to believe we don't have to worry about the solutions." That's got to change for the country's survival, but would take billions of dollars and even then might be virtually impossible.

THE INDIANS, who lived on what is termed the North American continent for 40,000 years, had developed an inner peace.

"They were not warlike as movies made them out to be," Mails said. "They did have battles, but they never had massive civil wars like we did in this country. Their battles were small and controlled.

"It's all a matter of what we want. I don't want to live the Indian life. I'm at peace in the white man's world I live in.

"The Pueblos still live pretty much according to the old ways," he said, while most of the other tribes on the continent either "gave up or had taken away" those spiritual aspects of their lives.

In order to endure, the Indians may have to find a balance between their "old ways" of spiritual worship and the white man's way of making a living in the largely urban society that is mechanized and computerized.

"They have to maintain their Indian-ness, and this is very wise."

Mails is carrying his message in the screen play for the movie, "Red Wind," which portrays a critical time (1872-78) in the lives of the Crow Indians. The movie depicts the interweaving of the lives of an Indian man and a white woman and how "their problem could be addressed" through the Indian's view.

"I THINK what I'm telling is an honest story."

Throughout the years, many of the Indians' spiritual rituals have been lost and are virtually "not recoverable."

He noted the Indians' rituals are "not nostalgia" but are a "way of life."

"They are very private." In the 1500s, the Spaniards persuaded the Pueblos to let them view their rituals. The Europeans found the rituals "heathen and unconscionable and they tried to exterminate them. Since then, the Indians keep the ceremonies closed."

Mails cited his Pueblo son-in-law, a college graduate, who "lives the tradional life."

"He's a competent businessman and he's Anglo to that degree." Mails said his son-in-law's spiritual life "colors everything he does."

And that approach to life and worship gives the Indians their roots, a sense of worthiness and dignity.

PICKENS

One group starting to understand the restructuring process and who now love it, Pickens said, is the stockholders.

RESTRUCTURING itself is not a problem, he said, but a response to a problem.

The oil industry is currently responding to changing economic and world oil conditions, trying to correct through the free market system to fix imbalances and set itself on a more efficient and productive course, he said.

The world oil picture must be understood to place the U.S. petroleum industry in proper perspective and the dominant feature of that world picture is oil prices, he stated.

A continuing glut and worldwide over-capacity of refining has produced a great deal of instability currently in the oil market.

While the U.S refining sector is contracting, and at the same time upgrading its ability to process lower gravity crude, Pickens observed, the OPEC countries, plus Egypt and Mexico, plan to increase refining capacities over the next three years by at least 1.2 million barrels per day.

Until the glut of crude and refining capacity is worked off, he stated, the instability in pricing will remain and it could cause a significant decrease in the price of oil.

Exploration costs are unacceptably high in relation to the price of oil and gas, he said, and price stabilization is necessary for U.S. exploration activity to be aggressive.

The industry as a whole hasn't replaced its domestic reserves since 1971, Pickens said, noting that in 1983 it replaced only 63 percent of the oil produced and the majors, collectively, replaced only 57 percent. Independents replaced 121 percent, he stated.

THE RESERVES problem becomes critical, Pickens contended, because for public-owned companies reserves represent the shareholders' primary asset. When reserves aren't replaced, the asset base is being eroded.

That factor, Pickens says, plays a very significant part in undervaluation of oil company stocks currently on the market. Shareholders are losing value and the market recognizes it, he stated.

Making money for shareholders is what it's all about, according to Pickens, and that can be accomplished through the creative management of assets, which can move the market price closer to appraised value.

Maintaining that many executives fail to recognize the urgency of the declining reserves bases because they aren't substantial shareholders themselves, Pickens stated, "If they were, they would understand the loss that shareholders are suffering.

"As restructuring takes place," he said, "we're going to see a lot of changes — increased efficiencies, higher productivity and better value for shareholders."

Industry restructuring will lead to contraction, which will mean the loss of some jobs, he indicated, but pointed out there are many ways to restructure and not all of them have to lead to job loss.

Man reports home burglarized

From Staff Reports

A Midland man reported to police his home was burglarized between midnight Friday and 5 a.m. Saturday while he slept, according to reports.

William Currie, 1006 S. Fort Worth, said he awoke Saturday morning to find the front door of his residence standing open. Entry apparently was gained through an eastside window.

Taken were a $500 video cassette recorder, $300 cable television converter box, $8 wallet containing $32 in cash and a $15 cassette tape dispenser containing $30 of cassettes.

In complaints filed with city police Friday, about $1,600 worth of items were reported stolen March 6 from the Georgia Jones residence, 1517 S. Terrell.

According to reports, Ms. Jones said the burglary took place between 8 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. Taken were a $200 home computer, $700 jade and diamond ring, $250 diamond wedding band, $90 silver watch, $200 cable television converter box and $150 in gold coins.

Victoria Torres, 2900 W. Illinois, Apt. 62, reported four hubcaps valued at $400 were stolen from her car between 5:30 p.m. Thursday and 2 p.m. Friday. According to reports, the 1978 Ford Brougham was parked in the apartment lot.

CHRONICLES

Now the lake will not hold water, even in wet years. When the buffalo gathered by the thousands and tramped the bottom of the lakes, the water stood during wet years nearly all the year round, and ducks would stay on the lakes and raise their young through the summer. Sixty or 70 years ago, the water was very shallow in the 5 Wells Draw, which goes on and makes the North Concho River, further down in Texas toward Sterling City.

When Martin County was organized all the counties surrounding the 5 Wells Ranch were attached to Martin County for judicial purposes. People from Terry, Gaines and Yoakum counties went to Stanton in Martin County to file any kind of legal documents; hence, there were but very few records filed of any deals made by Major Wells and his kind of folks. All trades made usually were agreed upon, by word of mouth, and but few if any ever had to go to court to be enforced. And none that I ever knew of were ever foreclosed upon for non-payment, up to about 1900. Then it became customary to have an attorney draw up contracts, so another attorney could get the job of breaking the first contract.

Major Wells, Dr. Elliott, W.E. Connell, John Scharbauer and others of their kind would squat down on the ground in the shade of the First National Bank of Midland and mark in the sand on the ground about where the fence was on the 5 Wells Ranch and there were about so many cattle and so many horses that went with the ranch. And in a day or so, some cowboy would tell you as he stopped overnight at your camp, that John Scharbauer or Dr. Elliott had bought the 5 Wells Ranch, and that was all the news as he rode off the next morning to his camp on some other part of the range.

There were no records to be kept. If the buyer hit hard markets or drought and owed money and could not pay that year, his stock was still out there on the range. And if he stayed out there and saw that they had grass and watar, he would pay in the course of years, so no one worried.

5 Wells Ranch made money some years, and a lot of years it did not. But based on the law of averages, 5 Wells Ranch made money for the owners as often as any ranch located on the south end of the Staked Plains.

Centennial Chronicles will appear on this page each Sunday through July 7 in observance of Midland's Centennial. The columns were contributed by local writers in cooperation with the Midland Centennial Commission.

SPACE

Making outer space more accessible to people — at least visually — is one of space art's goals, Poor says. He compares his colleagues to the naturalist-artists of the 19th century who painted the scenes from the western wilderness which helped persuade Congress to create the first national parks.

"Nobody really knew what Yellowstone looked like" until the artists returned with their paintings, Poor points out, and space artists have adapted that mission to the needs of the space age.

"I consider myself a space militant — I think man's future is in space," he says. "We guide people's consciousness toward other worlds."

For variety, Poor does occasionally paint subjects a little closer to home, perhaps because his home happens to be in the arid Southwest, which more closely resembles peoples' idea of what other planets look like. He always returns to space art, though.

"Southwestern art is nice, but it looks into the past. This art looks into the future."

Even so, the differences between an imagined Mars landscape and a directly observed Arizona landscape are sometimes difficult to detect. In the mall, a Poor painting which appears to depict a bizarre rock formation from some distant world turns out on closer inspection to be a scene from Monument Valley, Utah.

"There are many strange things on earth which could pass for space art," concedes Poor, and the Southwest is home to so many of them that the space artists' association usually decides to hold its conferences in the region, "since we're stuck here on Earth anyway."

He pauses.

"So far."

DEATHS

Henry L. Starr Sr.

Services for Henry L. Starr Sr., 60, of Midland, were Saturday at Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Ross Pane, pastor of Cotton Flat Baptist Church, officiating. Burial was in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Pallbearers were Louis Phelps, Howard Brault, Lonnie Lara, James Diamond, Victor Holland and Nino Gamboa.

Starr died at a local hospital after suffering an apparent heart attack at his home Thursday morning.

He was born Nov. 30, 1924, in Brady. He spent his early life in Brady and Winters. During World War II, he served in the U.S. Calvary and was stationed in the South Pacific. After his discharge, he returned to Winters, where he lived until moving to Midland in 1954. He married Margaret Kenney in 1961. He had been employed with the Texas Highway Department since 1973. He was a member of Cotton Flat Baptist Church.

Survivors include his wife of Midland; a son, Henry L. Starr Jr., of Midland; three daughters, Debra Kay Osborne, Carrie Jean Gray and Barbara Jean Starr, all of Midland; several brothers and sisters and five grandchildren.

E.W. Stone

GRAHAM — Services for E.W. Stone, 70, of Graham and formerly of Midland, will be at 2 p.m. today in the First United Methodist Church of Graham. Graveside services will be at 2 p.m. Monday in Resthaven Memorial Park in Midland.

Stone died Friday in Graham..

Survivors include his wife, Berla Mae Stone; a son, Bud Lea of Midland; three daughters, Mrs. Larry Sullivan of Graham, Carla Foster of Midland and Wanda Smith of Odessa; a brother, Bobby Stone of Joliet, Ill.; four sisters, Ollie Krebs, Georgia Shuetz and Doris Sowder, all of Horton, Kan., and delores Salsbury of Tampa, Fla.; nine grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren.

Wilmer council, citizens still oppose dumping

WILMER (AP) — City Council members and residents say they will continue to oppose dumping of lead-contaminated soil from a former West Dallas lead smelter.

"Every time we drink the water, we think about that soil," said Wilmer Mayor Billy Wickliffe. "We haven't about given up the fight and we're not going to until we can be certain that the soil does not pose a health hazard today or 100 years from now."

Officials say 18-wheelers are scheduled to begin rolling in about two weeks after a winter shutdown.

People of our community who make a difference.

Dr. Henry Page, Jr.

As a community we are celebrating a centennial in 1985. As individuals we will each face a birthday this year. Hopefully, all of us, both young and old, have developed an attitude that allows us to celebrate each year as a segment of a full life. Dr. Henry Page, Jr., an expert in geriatrics who serves as medical director for four Midland nursing homes, Trinity Towers, and Trinity Towers Manor Park, strives to help Midlanders make the best out of every year of their lives.

Prior to moving to Midland over 13 years ago, Dr. Page served as head of the Department of Research on Aging at Lankenau Hospital in Philadelphia. Dr. Page's research included a study of how aging has been viewed by various civilizations and how it is dealt with in today's society. Though he comments that Midland deals with aging pretty well by supporting facilities such as Trinity Towers Manor Park, which allows senior citizens to enjoy an active life, he still explains that our views could use some fine tuning. It's time, he says, that we put more of an emphasis on a mature society, rather than a young one. Moreover, we need to develop health care facilities for chronic disease, not just for acute diseases.

At any age, according to Dr. Page, a full life comes from maximizing personal energy with exercise, rest, and food, minimizing the dispersion of energy on disease and boredom, and adding to that strong motivation. Dr. Page can certainly help others make the best of each day, because he lives each day to the fullest.

When many of Dr. Page's contemporaries were retiring, he moved to Midland to start a third career (his first was in the navy and second was as a doctor of internal medicine in Philadelphia). Though he intended to slow down, he found himself busier than ever since Midland was fairly short on physicians.

Finally, just four years ago he was able to slow down a little when he stopped seeing private patients and began serving as medical director at Midland nursing homes and retirement homes.

Despite his "semi-retirement" he is still very actively serving our community. He is on the board for Hospice of Midland and is an ex officio member of the Trinity Towers board.

Dr. Henry Page, Jr. makes a difference in Midland by living life to its fullest and showing others how to do the same.

Stallings to be guests at 'Tree' of Life' program

From Staff Reports

Gene Stallings

Midland Christian School will host a reception at 7 p.m. Tuesday at Green Tree Country Club to kick-off its "1985 Tree of Life" program.

Guest personality for the event will be Gene Stallings, a defensive coach of the Dallas Cowboys.

Also, the annual ladies luncheon to be held Sept. 16 will feature guest speaker/entertainer Anita Bryant.

Ticket reservations for both events may be obtained by calling Pam Lout, Midland Christian School Development Office, at 686-0319 or 694-1661.

MC respiratory program receives accreditation

From Staff Reports

The Respiratory Therapy Education program at Midland College has received a full five-year accreditation by the Joint Review Committee for Respiratory Therapy Education and the American Medical Association Committee on Allied Health Educatuon and Accreditation.

Midland College offers a one-year certified program for respiratory therapists, plus a two-year associate degree in applied science.

Students receive classroom instruction and labs at the college while much of the clinical observation and instruction is completed at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Housing Authority board to meet

Executive director of Community and Senior Services of Midland, Inc., the Rev. Steve Edwards, will talk about the program when the Midland Housing Authority board meets at 2 p.m. Thursday in City Hall Council Chambers.

Donald Craig, Housing Authority secretary, said Edwards is expected to make a short presentation to let the board know of the services performed by the program. This is part of the Housing Authority's objective to invite persons working with programs for the elderly to the meetings and inform board members of what is being done.

The board also will hear an update on the housing rehabilitation program using federal funds, discuss a method of tenant rent payments and approve a revision to the current budget and proposed Fiscal Year 1986 budget.

A bid for lawn care at Hillcrest Manor will be reviewed.

LULAC to host forum

The League of United Latin American Citizens and Crown Royal Club will host a political forum at 3 p.m. today at the Crown Royal Club, 1110 E. Scharbauer Drive, for Midland City Council District 2 candidates.

Candidates are Clarence Meekins, Pat Aleman, Oralia Corrales, Tony Carrillo and Raul Salazar.

They will be asked to present their platforms and answer questions from the public.

All residents of District 2 are encouraged to attend.

Home Show continues at Chap Center

By H.A. TUCK

The Home Show continues today at Chaparral Center. The event is open from 10 a.m.-9 p.m. There is a small admission fee. Included are all sorts of home repair and improvement ideas.

• • •

And while you're on the campus, you might want to drop by the McCormick Gallery in the Allison Fine Arts Building to see the current art exhibit. It's a collection of drawings by graduate art students from the University of Texas at San Antonio.

Hours for this exhibit are 1-5 p.m. on Sunday, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday.

This show remains on display through Friday, March 29.

• • •

Since this was written before the bi-regional basketall play-off game, we don't know whether the Chaparrals are going to be playing at the NJCAA national tournament March 19-23 at Hutchinson, Kan. Technically, the bi-regional game is classed as a first round NJCAA tournament game since all regional winners qualify for the national tourney; however, 16 of the 24 regional winners have to play an extra game each year.

What we do know is that the Chaps have given their fans another exciting season. It was their 10th year of competition without a losing season, eighth year to win at least 20 games, their fourth conference title, and their third regional crown.

Coach Jerry Stone, assistant coach Reggie Franklin, and all the members of the 1984-85 edition of the Chaparrals are to be congratulated on their achievements!

Special plaudits are due Teviin Binns for being conference co-MVP and Region V All-Tournament; Vernon Coleman, All-Conference and the Region V Tournament MVP; Chuckie Graves, Region V All-Tournament; and Lawrence Chumbley, conference honorable mention.

Midland College tennis players had an outstanding tour of California during the spring break and have been playing in the Arlington-Fort Worth area this weekend. Today, they wind up action there with the women playing Southwest Missouri and UT-Arlington.

Both the men and the women will return to conference action on the MC courts Tuesday at 2 p.m. when they host South Plains College.

Since the Chap men are ranked first in the nation among junior college teams, and the women not far behind, it's a chance for tennis enthusiasts to see some of the best collegiate players in the country.

MC president, Dr. Jess Parrish, is slated to visit Holmes Junior College in Goodman, Miss., Monday and Tuesday as chairman of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools' accereditation committee for that school. It's a preliminary visit, to be followed by a visit of the entire committee in mid-April.

The committee then decides on accreditation status for the college, making recommendations for improvement of the school in various areas as they might be needed.

Two concerts are scheduled at Chap Center week after this. "Petra", a Christian rock group, is playing at 8 p.m. Tuesday, March 26 and Tom Jones is returning for an 8 p.m. concert Wednesday, March 27.

Tickets for Petra may be purchased at Christian bookstores in the area. Tom Jones tickets are being sold at Chap Center and at Endless Horizons in Midland or Odessa.

It warmed up so quickly that, with spring break, many of us missed the blooming trees and early flowers on campus. However, the grass is turning green while many other flowers are beginning to bud out. Even the roses are starting to make their first buds.

• • •

At long last, the repaving project in front of the campus is about finished. Traffic patterns are back to normal after several months of confusion. We appreciate everyone's patience and courtesy during the one-lane entrance and exit times. It also was nice to see that the entrance-exit behind Chaparral Center worked well with the traffic light functioning.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director for Midland College.

EDUCATION in brief

Education program OK'd

ABILENE — A new bachelor of science in education degree program received approval from the McMurry College Board of Trustees at its annual spring meeting recently.

The program, installed to bring the McMurry College Teacher Education program in compliance with the 1984 Standards for Teacher Education passed by the State Board of Education, initially will be offered in the fall.

A total of 126 semester hours are included in the four-year program, which allows students to elect a major in either elementary or secondary education. Three certification options will be offered for elementary education majors and four options will be offered for certification at the secondary level.

All-level certification will be available in four subject areas: art, music, physical education and speech communication/theatre art. The program offers two options for all-level certification.

The professional education curriculum of the program consists of three segments including core course requirements, methodology requirements and field experience requirements. Students teaching will be increased to an all-day experience extending over a period of 12 weeks.

PTA meetings scheduled

The following Midland Independent School District Parent-Teacher associations will meet this week:

— Goddard Junior High School PTA will meet at 7 p.m. Monday in the school cafeteria.

Members will elect new officers, discuss electives for 1985 and offer an orientation to parents of next year's seventh grade students.

— Sam Houston Elementary School PTA will meet at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the school cafeteria. Joan Baskin will speak on the "Midland Centennial."

Teachers group to meet

The Classroom Teachers Association of Midland will meet at 4:15 p.m. Monday at Midland High School.

Members will hear a report from delegates to the state convention and will introduce candidates for office.

Officer training slated

ALPINE — Sul Ross State University Criminal Justice Department is preparing for its fourth annual 10-week Basic Peace Officer Training Academy scheduled to begin June 3.

The academy, operated under the auspices of the Texas Commission on Law Enforcement Officer Standards and Education, will provide the required instruction for state licensing.

The academy is open to all local and area law enforcement agencies who wish to send regular or reserve officers, jailers, dispatchers or or other employees and to any citizen with a letter of sponsorship from a police chief or sheriff.

All applicants must submit a background investigation including a fingerprint and records check with the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Texas Department of Public Safety prior to admission to the academy.

The academy consists of both academic and physical training beginning at 7:30 a.m. and ending at 6 p.m. each day. Cadets will receive concentrated instruction in criminal law, criminal procedure, criminal investigation, criminalistics, police procedures, police administration, drug investigation and identification, civil law and process, defensive tactics, traffic law, firearms training, physical training and other related topics.

For information, call John R. Hudgens, chairman of the Criminal Justice Department at (915) 837-8166.

Water amendment introduced

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Legislation amending the law regarding unappropriated water, a key issue in the Stacy Resevoir lawsuit, has been introduced by Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock.

SB 1144 would amend the Texas Water Code to clearly provide that water not being "beneficially used" is subject to a new appropriation.

The Texas Supreme Court, in the lawsuit between the Lower Colorado River Authority and Colorado River Municipal Water District, concluded unappropriated water means the water remaining after taking into account all existing permits and certified filings valued at their recorded levels, and that "double permitting" isn't allowed by the water code.

SB 1144 states that the court's interpretation results in "preventing substantial quantities of water from being beneficially used."

The bill provides that the Texas Water Commission, in determining whether there is unappropriated water in a stream, may consider historical data, demographic and other water use projections, "expenditures made or obligations incurred by the holders of existing water rights or vested riparian rights," the amount of time "usually necessary" to put water to beneficial use, and "any other matters" TWC considers relevant.

Those factors would determine whether water can be beneficially used, and where it isn't so used, TWC may make new appropriations.

The bill is proposed to take effect after its passage.

Stuttering: 'Bumpy speech'

There are three kinds of stutters, pathologists say

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Sherry Robb calls it "bumpy speech."

"There are no written-in-stone reasons why a child stutters," said the speech pathologist, who works with children in the Midland Independent School District.

Ms. Robb compares the stutter to a "bump" in the normal flow of speech.

"The ultimate goal is smoother speech at least 95 percent of the time," she said.

Working for that goal keeps Ms. Robb busy at area schools where she sees 115 children a year. With 11 other speech pathologists, she teaches children how to overcome their speech disfluency.

"They each get two half-hour sessions per week," she said. "We also discuss the problem with the parents and ask them to help the child work on their speech at home."

According to Ms. Robb, it is "within normal limits for anyone to have 2 percent of their speech stuttered."

"Everyone does it once in a while," she said.

But for the three to four children that the speech pathologist sees per session, it is a handicap.

"It can range from very mild to very severe," said Ms. Robb. "There is also the problem of secondary behavior problems such as eye ticks or arm twitches."

"It involves things that help them get out of the stuttering," said Cynthia Burton, a speech pathologist for Permian Basin Rehabilitation Center. "Eye blinks and head jerks are real common among stutterers."

Both women noted that repetition of a word or beginning of a word is the most common type of stuttering.

"There are three basic kinds of stuttering behavior," said Ms. Robb. "Repetitions, prolongations (stretching the word out) and blocks.

"Blocks are probably the second most common," she said. "That is when the child starts to talk and nothing comes out."

Ms. Robb uses both modern and standard therapy techniques such as "cancellations" and the "Initial H Phonation" when working with the children.

"One of the most sophisticated machines is called the Delayed Auditory Feedback Machine," she said. "It is basically a tape recorder with an enclosed loop that plays back the child's voice at a slower speed almost immediately."

Still, machines are not always the most effective method.

"Cancellations help the children overcome repetitious stuttering," she said. "As soon as they start to repeat a word or word beginning, I have them stop, whisper and then say it.

"You must first have the child identify what they are doing," she said. "If they can say — 'oops, I just did a repetition,' — then they can correct it."

The school therapist also helps children who have "blocks" by having them use the letter "H" in front of a word.

"When you talk, the vocal chords are constantly opening and closing," she said. "The letter "H" opens them."

Ms. Burton uses a similar technique called "easy speech" using breath control to help the children "pull out of a word."

"I use structured play activities with children where I model 'easy speech' for them," she said. "This involves a slow rate of speech and an easy onset of voicing and, later, emotional support."

Emotional problems often accompany the disfluency, according to both women.

"There is a lot of avoidance by people who stutter," said Ms. Burton. "They won't look at you and won't answer the phones."

Exactly what causes stuttering is not known, said the two speech pathologists.

"Some think it may stem from an emotional experience ('Johnny' witnessed a horrible accident) or that it might even be a natural phase of learning to talk," said Ms. Robb.

"And some scientists believe that there may an inherited tendency to stutter."

"There are three basic theories," said Ms. Burton. "There is the learning theory, which states that stuttering is 'acquired.' Emotional causes are blamed in the psychogenic theory and 'organic' theories say that there is a 'timing mechanism' that somehow goes wrong in the brain and nerve impulses."

Still another theory is suggested at the National Center for Stuttering in New York City — stress.

"Some people focus attention in their heads and get headaches — others in the back, with backaches," said Lorraine Schneider, administrative director.

"We believe that the stutterer focuses that attention in the larynx."

The center's method of treatment differs from standard speech pathology by "working on the vocal chords, not the speech."

"We teach a breathing technique that reduces tension on the vocal chords," said Ms. Schneider. "It's a technique that they can use when under stress."

The center, started by Dr. Martin Schwartz, author of a controversial book entitled "Stuttering Solved," has been in operation for "about 10 years."

"I think most speech pathologists are highly reticent about Schwartz's book," said Ms. Burton.

While treatment and theories on causes of stuttering may vary, most agree that stuttering, while highly noticeable, does not affect a large percentage of the population.

"I think that when people do see a stutterer, it really sticks in their mind," said Ms. Robb.

Spelling affair

When one considers the ramifications of international summitry or space technology, something seemingly as trivial as spelling in the scope of world affairs becomes insignificant. Yet little else is as important.

That's why we're extending hearty congratulations to Katie Setzer, a seventh grader at Goddard Junior High School, who walked away this week as champion of the citywide Spelling Bee. In winning the honor, Miss Setzer established herself as a student of discipline.

Of course, she isn't the only Midland student to be congratulated. There are many deserving of recognition. Miss Setzer merely won the competition by correctly spelling toxicosis and proved herself worthy of representing Midland at the regional competition in Lubbock March 23. We wish her the best of luck at that competition.

But none of that information is indicative of why students who excel at spelling are deserving of society's admiration. The answer is that spelling is a discipline that requires concentration and attention to detail. A spelling competition further taxes the student by placing him or her under intense public and peer scrutiny. The opportunity for failure abounds, yet many of those appearing in spelling bees today do not; they spell correctly and progress.

Yes, there are winners and there are losers, just as there are on the football field or the basketball court or in the chemistry lab. But all the students involved in a spelling competition or any other scholastic competition that tests the ability to apply oneself to the discipline of learning are winners. They are winners in that they acquire a skill of learning that will follow them throughout their lives, even into the workplace.

Teachers in colleges and universities throughout the nation have lamented for years the quality of spelling they receive from their new students. They do so for an important reason. If a student places little emphasis on something as trivial as correct spelling, what can be expected from that student when even more discipline is required?

We're glad to see spelling still occupies a place of honor in the schools of Midland and the nation. To Miss Setzer and all the other students who place an emphasis on that discipline, keep up the good spelling!

Another View:

Democratic incentive

The United States should promote democracy in Nicaragua. Supporting the contra forces that are fighting the Nicaraguan government could help.

Americans have little reason to admire the Sandinista leadership of Nicaragua. Even some Americans who oppose U.S. aid to the contras acknowledge that the Sandinistas have lied, abused the people and oppressed the Catholic Church, and that they represent a threat to U.S. goals in Central America.

The question America needs to answer is how best to advance freedom in Nicaragua and protect U.S. national interests. Part of the answer may be to maintain military and political opposition to Sandinista rule.

Although some of the contras are leftovers from deposed dictator Anastasio Somoza, others, including some of the contra leadership, are democrats who have become disenchanted with the leftist thrust of the Sandinistas. Some are former Sandinistas who say the Sandinistas betrayed the revolution by turning increasingly totalitarian.

Nicaragua is not yet lost to Marxism. A measure of opposition is permitted, and press freedom is exercised sporadically. There is reasonable hope that skillful diplomacy and military pressure could prevent Nicaragua from irrevocably becoming an expansionistic, hostile communist nation.

Part of the contras' potential for advancing democracy is to help check the hard-core Marxists within the Sandinista leadership. So long as there is a viable alternative to the Sandinistas, the Marxists might be hesitant to crack down further on dissent. Without pressure from the contras, the Sandinistas might have consolidated their power by now and suppressed all opposition.

Eventually, the Sandinistas may realize that democracy is the best way to settle disputes, and that could lead them to opening the political process to all comers. Such an opening has been one of the demands of the contra leaders.

Along with supporting the contras, the United States should move diplomatically to deal with the Sandinistas. Bilateral negotiations should be pursued. The Contadora process should be encouraged, and other countries in the region should be encouraged to seek long-term solutions to the problems of Central America.

The Sandinistas must realize that the United States cannot tolerate a heavily armed, aggressive Nicaragua doing the bidding of the Soviet Union and Cuba. The United States cannot allow the Russians to gain another foothold in the Western Hemisphere. The principles laid down in the Monroe Doctrine in 1823 remain valid today.

Democracy and respect for neighbors is what the United States should seek in Nicaragua. The contras can contribute to those goals.

JAMES RESTON

Gorbachev role spotlighted

GENEVA — The first glimpse of Mikhail Gorbachev's leadership in Moscow may come in the United States-Soviet nuclear-weapons talks that are taking place here.

James Reston

Nobody in Geneva expects Gorbachev to make any sudden change in the Kremlin's nuclear-arms policy, but there is a hope that at least he may change the atmosphere.

For example, if these talks are to have a chance, a freeze on vicious propaganda, if not on weapons, would be useful.

Seldom has a critical international negotiation started under more peculiar circumstances. Both sides have arrived here proclaiming common objectives of peace and the reduction and even abolition of nuclear weapons, while disagreeing wildly and publicly on the means to this end.

The Moscow radio, even after the death of Konstantin U. Chernenko, is still battering Western Europe with charges that President Reagan's proposed Strategic Defense Initiative research project is not research and not defensive, but a dangerous effort to create a nuclear system that could destroy the Soviet Union while protecting the United States from nuclear attack.

Meanwhile, the White House has approached the Geneva negotiations by dramatizing its "Star Wars" program, as the Strategic Defense Initiative is known popularly; calling for another large increase in the military budget, including the development of the MX missile and announcing that while all issues may be discussed, the Star Wars program will go on.

So making allowance for these intimidating propaganda arguments, there are two preliminary questions for the talks here.

First, what are the actual facts about the present United States-Soviet balance of military power?

Second, what is the truth about the charges and countercharges regarding violations by both Moscow and Washington of past nuclear-weapons agreements?

These are the threshold issues that have to be faced.

The leaders of the United States Congress are here to demonstrate bipartisan support for the success of the Geneva talks; but they are not likely to ratify a new American-Soviet nuclear treaty unless they can verify the agreements of the past and are assured of verification in the future.

There are some fundamental and immediate questions that have almost been forgotten. The first of these is that while Washington and Moscow have been star-gazing for months, they are producing a total of about five new nuclear missiles a day, and while they are also discarding some old nuclear weapons, the new ones are more powerful and accurate.

In short, the two superpowers are talking and arguing about what might happen in outer space later on while ignoring what is happening on the ground right now.

Even here in Geneva, an odd thing has been taking place this week. The Congressional leaders came here hoping for a United States-Soviet reconciliation, and ran into a funeral for Chernenko.

Most of them thought that President Reagan should have gone to Moscow to regret the past and talk to Gorbachev about the future. This idea was rejected in the White House.

Vice President Bush was here with an airplane on his way to Moscow for the funeral, and the Congressional delegation wanted to go along to indicate their support for an improvement in United States-Soviet relations. But they were not invited.

There are, however, some hopeful signs. A new generation of leaders is now emerging in Moscow, better educated and more aware of the outside world. It is true that they don't have the terrible memories of the last two World Wars; but maybe, just maybe, they won't have the tragic suspicion that the world is full of Napoleons and Hitlers determined to destroy their country.

The Geneva talks may give us a tip about whether Gorbachev sees the world in a different way and signifies a change. But whether he does or not, it will obviously take him some time to establish his authority.

GEORGE F. WILL

MX a product of arms process

WASHINGTON — Something that is an interesting concept in geometry is a depressing commonplace in Washington. In geometry, a line can have length without breadth. In Washington, the argument about the MX missile is like that.

George F. Will

Most MX opponents are ardent for the arms-control "process," one sour fruit of which is ... the MX. In 1972 the misbegotten ABM treaty banned defense of ICBMs, thereby making a necessity of what many analysts, then as now, considered a virtue: deterrence based on mutual vulnerability. SALT I, signed simultaneously, was permissive and porous. (For example, it limited but neglected to define "heavy" missiles.) So the Soviet buildup, unconstrained by SALT I but legitimized by it, soon made U.S. land-based ICBMs vulnerable to a disarming first strike.

The MX was supposed to cure the vulnerability of Minutemen ICBMs in fixed silos. But after a decade spent considering 34 basing modes, the Pentagon now proposes to put MX in "improved" silos. The Reagan administration could candidly admit that this might create a "use-'em-or-lose-'em" hair-trigger situation in crisis, and could plausibly argue that this might deter Soviets from provoking a crisis. Instead, the administration lamely argues that improved "hardening" makes silos invulnerable after all.

The Reagan administration is stuck with an MX that others wanted for reasons related to arms control. Arms controllers are not actually hostile to strategic rationality, if rationality is compatible with arms agreements. But first things — agreements — first. Arms controllers know that the way to get agreements is to agree to limit things that are easy to count. So SALT I limited the number of launchers. Result? Bigger launchers packed with more warheads — more eggs in more vulnerable baskets, like MX.

MX will survive in Congress this year and by next year will have become a jobs program and probably will be invulnerable (to Congress, not Soviet missiles). It will survive this year thanks to only one thing — the arms control "process," in which MX is, the administration says, a "bargaining chip." Actually, it is a bargaining chip between the administration and Congress, which supports it lest U.S. negotiators be weakened.

The President says the MX vote is "a vote on Geneva." By "Geneva" he means the arms-control "process," during which, since SALT I, the number of nuclear warheads has quadrupled and the Soviets have deployed 21 new nuclear weapons systems. So, although it is fitting that Congress supports a new missile in order to sustain the arms-control "process," it is dismal that, to sell this misbegotten missile, Reagan has become a zealous worshipper at the barren altar of arms control.

He says Moscow considers the MX vote a test of U.S. "resolve." But a nation driven from Lebanon by a truck bomb can not restore its reputation by buying a missile for which three administrations have failed to find an adequate basing mode. A nation that lacks the resolve to use its ships to quarantine a regime like Nicaragua's, or its rifles to overthrow that regime, or even its dollars adequately to support Nicaraguan freedom fighters, cannot show relevant "resolve" by buying high-tech hardware. The West is losing the Third World War in small wars, not big missile competitions.

Perhaps the President means that Moscow considers the MX vote a test of U.S. "resolve" to spend for defense. But Moscow would be distraught were Congress to spend the MX dollars on rifles and ships we might actually use, and on aid for freedom fighters in Nicaragua, Cambodia, Vietnam and Afghanistan. Congress could use the small change to buy better radio transmitters to override Soviet jamming that violates the Helsinki accords which, speaking of resolve, the administration lacks the resolve to repudiate as dead letters.

But there is the rub, and the reason why it is sensible to hold your nose, grit your teeth and support MX. If Congress kills MX, it will use the dollars to solve a different vulnerability crisis — the vulnerability of Congress to constituents armed by domestic spending cuts.

The current round of arms controlling in Geneva may last a generation. Or perhaps now that the kids have seized control of the Kremlin, the pace will quicken, in which case the two sides can reach a deadlock quickly. The only certainty is that the "process" will have produced MX, a missile conceived as a result of SALT I, gestated during SALT II and born in the hope of SALT III. Actually, the MX argument resembles not geometry, which is reasonable, but modern art — say, abstract expressionism, which is the work of the confused, sold to the earnest.

ART BUCHWALD

Selling's all in pricing!

There was a great deal of excitement in our neighborhood last week. The first house advertised to sell at over a million dollars was put up for sale.

Art Buchwald

Most of the homes in our area were built in the '40s and '50s and originally sold for $30,000 to $50,000. Over the years they have increased in value, but no one ever dreamed that one of them would ever be advertised for a million.

Trembling, who reported the news to me, said, "I knew someone would break the six-figure barrier sooner or later, but I never thought it would be Ed Hurwitz."

"I can't believe Hurwitz is asking a million for his lean-to. I don't think he paid more than $63,000 for it 10 years ago."

"I saw the ad in the paper this morning. It said, 'Historical miniestate, located in one of the most prestigious neighborhoods in Washington. A once-in-a-lifetime opportunity for that special affluent family who wants more from a home than just a place to live. Offered at $1,450,000. Within walking distance of the Swedish Embassy.'"

I said, "It's a joke. It has to be a joke."

"Oh yeah? You should see the lineup of cars in front of the house. You would think T. Boone Pickens was coming to dinner."

Out of curiosity we decided to wander over to Hurwitz's house. Sure enough, there were Mercedes-Benzes, BMWs, Jaguars, Lincolns and chauffeured Cadillacs parked all along the street. Women in fur coats stood in line waiting to get in, and Hurwitz passed out a mimeographed sheet describing the features of the house. This included "antique lighting fixtures, a wet bar in the basement, contemporary library with original moldings, and a state-of-the-art laundry room."

"What a turnout," I said to Hurwitz.

"It even surprised me," he said, "but not the real estate agent. She said the only way to keep out the bargain-hunters and attract the upper-bracket crowd is to ask for more than a million dollars for your house."

"Aren't they disappointed when they arrive?"

"They don't seem to be," Hurwitz said. "They figure if you're asking over a million there's got to be more to it than they can see. Besides, people who can pay prices like that want to gut the structure anyway, and spend another million to make it 'livable.' One of the big attractions of this place is they can throw out everything in the house and not feel guilty about it."

Hurwitz took Trembling and me inside.

"You didn't even paint it," I said.

"Why paint it? Whoever is going to buy it will only repaint it. Women's eyes light up when they see this joint and they can hardly wait to call their decorator. The one thing I learned in selling a house for a million bucks is the less you offer somebody the more chance you have of getting them to buy it."

We went into the kitchen. There was a 1960 gas stove, a 1970 refrigerator, a scarred wooden table, two chairs, and a spice shelf that Hurwitz had gotten with green stamps.

One of the women said to the other, "It's utterly charming. You don't see kitchens like this anymore."

The second woman said, "It's a dream. You can start from scratch and do anything you want with it."

"That's true of the bathroom too," Hurwitz told them.

When we got back into the living room I said, "I wouldn't believe it if I hadn't seen it with my own eyes. The people are actually salivating to buy this hunk of junk."

Hurwitz seemed offended. "It may be a hunk of junk to you, but for the people who came here today it's the dream they worked for all of their lives."

"Hey, wait a minute," Trembling said. "If you get one million four for this wreck that means all our homes in the neighborhood will be reassessed for tax purposes and we'll be paying for your scam."

"Don't blame me," Hurwitz said. "I originally asked $100,000 for the house and had no bites. Now that I'm asking for a million I can't keep people from kicking down the door."

'Learn from experience' best advice one can give

Bill Modisett

I never have been good at following the advice of others.

That's probably because, on the one hand, I've always suspected that the advice of others was intended to get me to do their bidding, without regard for how I was affected and, on the other, because following the advice of others can be construed as defeat. By accepting the advice of others, I've always felt, I was admitting my own inability to find a solution.

Of course I'm not the only human being to suffer from this shortcoming, if indeed that's what it is. There are plenty of people around today who don't want to accept the advice of others. Sometimes they're called obstinate. Sometimes belligerant. Sometimes just plain stupid.

Many times those not taking the advice of others are youngsters — either in years or in experience. Plenty of parents will attest to the fact that their children will not learn from the advice of the parents; life seems to show they have to learn from their own experiences.

Harry S Truman — and I intentionally did not put a period behind the S in his name because it didn't stand for anything. Truman didn't have a middle name; his parents picked the middle initial "S" so Truman's grandfathers, Solomon Young and Anderson Shippe Truman could each claim he was named after them — had a bit of good advice for those in our society who are fond of dishing out advice. Said the late president: "I have found the best way to give advice to your children is to find out what they want and then advise them to do it."

If any advice can be labeled good, Truman's fills the bill. Most individuals seeking advice simply want agreement for what they have already decided — whether they are right or wrong. A person can save many disagreements and hard feelings by telling people what they want to hear.

But there's another way that may be even better. Don't give advice. Don't give advice to your friends — or you may not have many for long. Don't give advice to your brothers or sisters or parents — or you'll convince them you're as crazy as they've always suspected. Don't give advice to your spouse or your in-laws — or there goes the inheritance.

Now here's the tough part: Don't give advice to your children. It won't help, even if you do.

I'm not saying avoid fulfilling your parental responsibilities. Love them, help them, teach them to become upstanding, courageous and truthful individuals. But don't give them advice.

Let them learn from their own mistakes — the greatest yet most incompassionate teacher of all. Once they've learned a lesson from experience, they won't forget.

That's the only advice worth giving anyone.

SPEAKING OUT

Youths' dreams, hopes deserve a chance

By LANCE STEWART

Lance Stewart is a sophomore at Lee High School. He came to Midland with his family in 1970. He has maintained a 4.0 grade point average for four semesters, plays football and is a member of the French Club. He hopes to attend an Ivy League college.

The youth of America, and indeed the world, have an opinion that should not only be listened to, but respected. It is our future the leaders of the world are so callously playing with.

James was a promising young high school senior. He had worked hard at maintaining his 4.0 average, and was very proud of having done so. He was president of the Student Council, and an officer of the National Honor Society. James was blessed neither with rich parents nor an athletic body, but through hard work and self-discipline, would have been attending a state college on a football scholarship. He had hopes of being a doctor one day; of having a family, and raising children of his own. However, like many others, he was struck down in the prime of his youth — a victim of the greatest killer of children in the history of mankind. Does this sound like polio? Or perhaps he was on the receiving end of a drunken driver's car?

Actually, it was neither, for this is a tale of the future. James was the victim of a slow, excruciatingly painful death known as radiation poisoning, one of the unlucky few who survived the initial bombardment of a nuclear attack, only to be cut down by the deadly after-effects of the holocaust.

When this happened is of little consequence. The simple fact is that it did. Or, should I say, it can, and most likely will, if something is not done to prevent it.

To a young child, political divisions and discrepancies are meaningless. There is only his small, protected world. He has harmed no one, is totally naive about the outside world. The living embodiment of innocence, and the adults of this world would have him burned to ashes for the simple possession of a piece of land or the pursuit of an idea. We are to remain silent, hidden in the shadows while our parents decide whether we are to live or die. Even though a few short years separate us, do we live, feel, or love any less? No. We are human beings, entitled to the same basic rights and privileges as anyone. The rights you were given as children. Basically, the right to live. The right to pursue our own hopes, dreams, and aspirations.

These simple things which you took for granted are now being denied America's youth and you don't even realize it. You are oblivious to the damage you are doing. The full effects of this may not be felt in your lifetime. Ours, on the other hand, are very long and are being changed by your mistakes every day. The realistic way to stop this process before it has become irreversible is simply to do it.

This brings up the question: How do you safeguard the lives of five billion people? This problem, I am sure, has been on the mind of every U.S. President and Soviet Premier since the mid-50s. And, as you can see by our present situation of military build-up, has not yet been solved. The solution, however, does not lie in the brains of our leaders, but in our own hearts. European citizens have already seen the light. Rallies and protests against nuclear buildups are now commonplace, yet, are increasingly important events, and are attended by both the young and the old. These people are taking the necessary actions required to accomplish the goal at hand. If everyone who reads this would stand up to the leaders of the world and make his or her opinion known, this planet would be a safer place on which to live.

The power of the press is a strong, yet easily manipulated force; this has been proven as such by politicians for centuries. The fact that my writing has been published in a newspaper with a circulation like that of the Midland Reporter-Telegram is proof of one of the most wonderful freedoms in America — the freedom to express one's opinions as loudly and as clearly as possible. Speak out! Speak out to protect yourself, your rights, and the lives of those you love. Do it for all the young. The innocent. Do it for me.

I realize that not all adults feel they are responsible for bringing about the "crushing of the dreams, hopes, and aspirations" of the children of the world, as I implied earlier. But, in a way, you are doing so simply by staying silent. I was not different than anyone else until my sixteenth birthday a couple of weeks ago. I, too, was quiet and content — until I realized, while watching "War Games" for the sixth time, that I might not make it to seventeen. That my carefully laid plans for college might have been for naught. That scared me.

I hope that it will scare you a little, too. When I die, please let it be of old age, not cell poisoning.

Midland College music department gold mine

Midland is a town with strong cultural interests — Midland Community Theatre has boasted many successful productions, Summer Mummers is known worldwide, the Midland Jazz Classic is graced by some of the biggest names in the jazz world, the Midland/Odessa Symphony is highly respected...need I go on?

However, there is a group of Midland residents who also deserve the respect and support of our city, but for the most part are overlooked. These people are the "Amateurs." More specifically, the Midland College Jazz Ensemble and the Midland College/Community Concert Band.

Yes, these two groups are based at the college, but 98 percent of the members are community members — residents of our town who donate their time and talent to provide free entertainment for this community.

As a member of both groups, I have personal knowledge of the hard work each member puts into these groups. I also know how hard Dr. Donald Grant and Walter Osadchuk work with us. Quite frankly, they deserve better attendance at the concerts. Midland College, you have a gold mine right under your noses in the music department! And I can count on one hand how many faculty members show up for the concerts!

The key word seems to be "free." It apparently is one of those four-letter words that scares Midlanders. Attendance at past concerts has proven this. Obviously, people feel "safe" paying $8, $12, $15, and more to attend a production. However, "free" does not mean "bad."

Both groups have concerts scheduled during the next three months. We don't devote our time just to hear ourselves play; we do this for your entertainment! We give you plenty of advance notice — look around and you'll see the posters, the newspaper announcements. Listen, you'll hear the radio announcements.

Midland, give these groups a chance! I honestly think you will be pleasantly surprised! I'll be at the concerts and I hope you will, too.

Use of troops in 'Big Pine' exercise a concern

I am inalterably opposed to the Pentagon's request to use 450 Texas National Guardsmen in the Big Pine III "training exercises" in southwestern Honduras.

The importance of troop safety in this volatile area of Central Ameriea — which safety cannot possibly be assured, neither by the Pentagon, Department of Defense, the Army, nor National Guard — is only part of my concern. I consider these "exercises" to be highly provocative maneuvers designed to intimidate the already beleaguered, violence-plagued Nicaraguans and play on their justifiable fears and mistrusts.

The Big Pine "war games" have no value to our national defense, but do present every opportunity for a very real and disastrous confrontation. Surely our government is not alone in perceiving the various political advantages inherent in this show of force, or in willingness to make use of this fertile medium to its own benefit.

To exacerbate tensions in these strife-torn nations is intolerable. To permit our friends, neighbors and countrymen to be used as pawns in this madness is untenable.

Let us all take these points into serious consideration and direct Gov. Mark White to reinfore California Gov. Deukmejian's stand in refusing the Pentagon's request for more grist for its militaristic mill. Tell Gov. White and the Pentagon "no Texas National Guardsmen in Central America!"

Planned Parenthood 'disregards' ideas

We were amazed in two respects at the ethical gymnastics performed by Planned Parenthood in the article on abortion printed March 10. First, the profound disregard toward the primary party involved in an abortion — the unborn child. And, secondly, the total disregard of the cause-effect relationship regarding sexual intercourse and pregnancy (they are directly related).

It is sobering and startling that Planned Parenthood coldly acknowledges that "anyone with any biological knowledge..." knows that abortion is the destruction of an unborn child. Anyone with any biological knowledge also realizes the complete humanness of the unborn, that in fact the unborn looks, responds, and functions like a real person, and in fact is a real person.

Arguing that the unborn "fetus" is just a blob of protoplasm, while wrong, would at least allow Planned Parenthood to stay within the realm of humanity. But knowingly assenting to the wholesale destruction of a segment of the human family, with no thought for their individual rights, is simply monstrous!

Consider an additional statement which demonstrates the total disregard for the unborn child: "... no woman should be forced to go through the trauma of an unwanted pregnancy and childbirth just to gratify the desires of a childless couple." Absolutely no significance is placed on the birth of the child. Only the gratification of the adopting couple receiving such a child is noteworthy.

We suggest that accusing us of "hatred and intolerance" because we do not care about the individual worth and inalienable rights of the unborn is turning logic on its head.

Regarding the cause-effect relationship of sexual intercourse and pregnancy, it astounds us that Planned Parenthood says of the cause for teen pregnancy: "...no single reason...has been determined." We suggest they investigate teen sex as a probable cause. They love to emphasize "choices." Certainly teen sex involves a choice. What they then do, however, is ignore the responsibilities created by that choice.

Planned Parenthood says "...no citizen should be forced to conform to your set of values." Whose values are the aborted children of our land being forced to conform to?

Pre-empted shows should be replayed

In the past week two prime time, highly-rated shows have been pre-empted by our local stations in order to show something else. Also, about a month ago a whole week of some prime time shows were also pre-empted.

There are not many decent shows on the networks to watch anyway, but the least these bonehead program directors could do for the viewing audience is to tape them and replay them at another time during the week or weekend.

The two stations involved were KTPX, Channel 9, for pre-empting "Cheers" and KOSA, Channel 7, for pre-empting "Newhart." These two programs have a large following and I'm sure there were a lot of people who were not pleased.

Be a little more courteous and at least replay them at another announced time the next time or we'll pre-empt you by watching another channel.

Battle's criticism of Pittsburgh unwarranted

I have some words for Ted Battles concerning his March 8th article entitled, "Say it isn't so, Rand McNally." Apparently Mr. Battles has never been to Pittsburgh (or it has been a long time...1925 perhaps).

I lived my first 20 years in and near Pittsburgh and its ranking on the Rand McNally charts is well-deserved. Granted, when I was growing up in the 60s, I deplored it because of the "smoke." But since then they have cleaned it up. It is true that the steel mills are shut down and Pittsburgh has its troubles. But who doesn't?

Pittsburgh is coming back with an aggressive renaissance program — new skyscrapers, a subway system, a great symphony, and "number one" sports. Furthermore, Pittsburgh has always had TREES — green TREES.

There is an age-old saying about Pittsburgh: "It's a great place to live, but you wouldn't want to visit there." I would suggest that Mr. Battles stay with sports since Pittsburgh has always been an unwarranted target of criticism.

Gorbachev viewed as shrewder, brighter than past leaders

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — The big news this week was, of course, the accession to power in Moscow of Mikhail Gorbachev, the youngest man, age 54, to become Soviet leader since Josef Stalin.

From what I have been able to learn about this man, there seems to be reason for both encouragement and wariness. The most encouraging signs are that he represents a new generation of leadership in the Kremlin; that he has the reputation of being more of a pragmatist than an ideologue; and that he is on record as wanting to reform economic policies, decentralizing authority and giving more incentives to workers and managers to increase productivity.

This sounds very much to me like what Deng Xiaoping, the little ruler of mainland China, has been doing in recent years: Moving away from the economic failures of communism toward the enterprising spirit of capitalism.

What impressed me most about Gorbachev's acceptance speech was his emphasis on the need to "carry out profound transformations in the economy and in the entire system of social relations." If, as he has said, he wants to improve the standard of living of the Russian people, he may be genuinely interested in spending less money on military might. That might be a good omen for the nuclear arms talks.

The other side of the coin is that western Kremlinologists view him as brighter, shrewder and more skillfull than any Soviet leader since Stalin. During his visit to London last December, he launched a propaganda offensive against President Reagan's space defense program while charming Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and the British press at the same time.

In Washington, a State Department official joined former White House National Security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski in warning that we may face a much more dangerous time with Gorbachev than we did with his recent sick and aged predecessors.

Now working on this report is beginning to fatigue me a bit, since while I feel much better, I still haven't recovered completely from my recent illness. So I am going to conclude with a summary of the European reaction to this important development as sent to me from Paris by Bernard Kaplan, our distinguished European Correspondent.

"As in America, an extraordinary amount of goodwill is being displayed in Western Europe toward the new Soviet leader, Mikhail Gorbachev. Behind it is a strong belief that if someone like him, equipped with comparative youth, superior education and lack of personal involvement in the scarring traumas of Soviet history during the past 45 years can't make right a lot of what is wrong with Russia, then there's not much chance it will ever be done as long as the Marxist system survives.

"Claude Cheysson, a former French foreign minister, put it to me this way: 'His personal traits mark him out strikingly from his recent predecessors. The question is whether that will be enough to move the monolith.

"As Europeans see it, his first speech after formally taking over, with its emphasis on tackling the Soviet economic mess — hinting at introducing elements of 'autonomy' into the botched-up centralized system of control — looks like a pointer to his real intentions.

"However, Michael Heller, a top French historian of the Soviet Union, said everyone in Russia knows agricultural self-sufficiency would mean vast investment, as well as structural changes. 'The enormous sums required could only come out of the armaments budget,' he told me. 'The litmus test for Gorbachev will be whether he dares to become the first Soviet leader to carry out such a truly revolutionary policy.'

It's already obvious Gorbachev has brought a new style to the Kremlin. After his visit to Britain last December, everyone agreed he has the whatever the Russian word is for charisma. Even Prime Minister Thatcher, whose 'Iron Lady' sobriquet was given to her by Pravda, said she 'liked' him and could 'do business' with him.

"But even if the new style really does reflect something deeper, European diplomats say it may take time to produce tangible results in East-West relations. Collegial leadership still operates in Moscow. The old guard has effaced itself, but remains very much in business.

"Heller put his finger on it when he said, 'Just because Gorbachev cracks jokes and Mrs. Gorbachev is elegant and slim doesn't mean totalitarianism has ceased to exit.'"

Service station owner enjoys solving automotive problems

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Bill Thorne is good at what he does and is dedicated to his work. But too much is more than enough.

One he tried tripling his work, but the pleasure and satisfaction didn't match the volume.

"I wasn't too successful at it," Thorne said, "because you can't stretch yourself out too much."

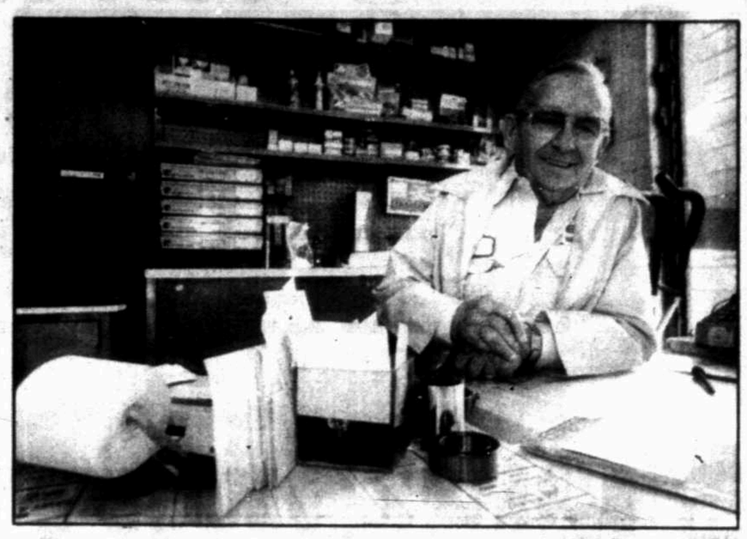

Today, Thorne operates his one service station, an Exxon outlet in a former cotton field in north Midland, and just aims to please.

He figures that's not too much to ask of a businessman.

Back in the early 1960s, he tried running Gulf, Texaco and Enco (now, Exxon) service stations at one intersection, at Midkiff Road and Wadley Avenue, but found the triple chore too taxing.

"That was a mistake," he said. "That was when I tried to get real big and lost control. I couldn't be at all of those places at one time."

Today, he's back to one operation, which he commands six days a week even though he's confined to a desk and crutches due to the crippling effects of arthritis. "If I had the money I've spent on this stuff, we could vacation in Bermuda all the time.

Ron Jaap/Reporter-Telegram

Bill Thorne has cut back from three service stations to one, but he still offers the same full-service to customers.

"I THINK YOU may have to be a half bubble off to help people solve their automotive problems," Thorne said with smile. "And we get a bang out of it." Here's a case: It's his policy to help out widows and divorcees "who don't have anybody to look after them."

A dependable car, he noted, is a security blanket for many of the elderly.

"They may not run it more than once a month, but they have it, and they want it to percolate."

Thorne, 63, has been percolating since 1921. That's the year he was born in Haskell, where his father ran a general-merchandise store, which carried wares and furniture from baby beds to caskets.

The family moved to Odessa with an oil boom. There, his father opened a clothing store.

"Of course, Odessa was booming then, and the great money was there...We were there in the great bust of '29 and '30."

Afterward, the family moved to East Texas, where his father bought bankrupt general merchandise in such towns as Arp, Overton and Troup and set up shop in Kilgore, a boom town in the heart of the East Texas oil field.

"He bought stuff (in bankruptcy sales) probably 25 cents on the dollar."

In Kilgore, a town of tents, leantos, tarpaper shacks, shanties, modest places and houses of affluence, derricks virtually were overlapping.

THORNE RECALLED a Texas Ranger, dubbed Two-Gun Gonzales, who helped clean up the oil town. He'd round up the undesirables, chain them to the railroad tracks "'til he got a box car load of those people, and would ship them off on the train."

Like other boom towns, Kilgore had its affluent side.

"We saw it from the wild side to the cultural side," Thorne said. "At the time, Kilgore was probably the richest city in the world."

When the United States got involved in World War II, Thorne went into the U.S. Air Army Air Forces and flew the B-24 Liberator on weather reconnaissance missions in the Pacific Theater.

"It was a great airplane," he said. "It was like landing a box car. You feel your way in...One out of 10 might be a smooth landing." The bomber often was beset by hydraulic and electrical problems. There were plenty of people to keep the aircraft flying, he said, but getting spare parts was a problem. "We had to rob one airplane to keep two more flying."

AFTER THE WAR, he set aside his wings and flying jacket. "There wasn't any money in it (flying), and the world was loaded with pilots.

"On the commercial routes, you couldn't make a living at it, and the few that did were fortunate."

After the war, he went to work for Magnolia Pipe Line at Greggton in East Texas.

"They issued us long-handled shovels, sharp-shooters and picks and that was our tools." He dug ditches, laid pipe, and did general maintenance work. Later, he joined a machinist gang in Eastland and repaired and installed pumps on stations which kept crude oil flowing.

"If anything happened to the pipeline, the oil industry would go down the tube," he said.

In 1948, he landed in Midland under the wings of Magnolia and also worked for Texas-New Mexico Pipeline.

In 1959, Thorne opened his first service station, an Enco, associated with the Humble Oil & Refining Co., later tried for the big time with those three filling stations and opened Midland's first automotive diagnostic center.

He has been at his present location on Midkiff Road since 1971, when he bought the station from Malcolm McPhail.

"He probably sent more boys through high school and college than any service station operator in the country." Thorne also hires young men to work at the station.

ANYTIME A CAR came into the station, its windows were cleaned, tires were checked and aired, the interior was vacuumed whether motorists came in for information or to use the restroom. "We'd fix bicycle flats for kids. We didn't charge them anything."

Thorne operates a full-service station even though the labor is not as intense as it once was.

"We're not going to let a car get by without looking under the hood and taking care of it. We give full service. Our mechanics are as good as any in the country.

"To me, this is the most fascinating business in the world. Most of the customers are real understanding. All they want to do is to be treated with respect and get what they pay for."

THROUGHOUT the years, he has seen Midland grow from a "laid-back" community to a hustle-and-bustle city.

"I don't like all the hustle and bustle," he said. "It was more of your typical West Texas town; it was laid back. It's just an all-together different climate now. It's more metropolitan than it ever was before."

Not that many years ago, people felt safe not to lock their houses and were neighborly.

"They took care of their business and everybody else's if they could."

Even today, within the fraternity of Exxon service stations, operators help each other out of binds "by being neighborly" by swapping out help, parts and goods similarly to the neighborliness of farmers and ranchers, he said.

"We're competitive, but we're still friends."

Thorne, who obviously delights in his work, said a person "really has got a problem if he can't enjoy his work."

And Thorne revels even in the challenges posed by problems.

"We like the people; that's the main thing. I think that keeps us here."

Ballots can be counted if Justice OK's annexations

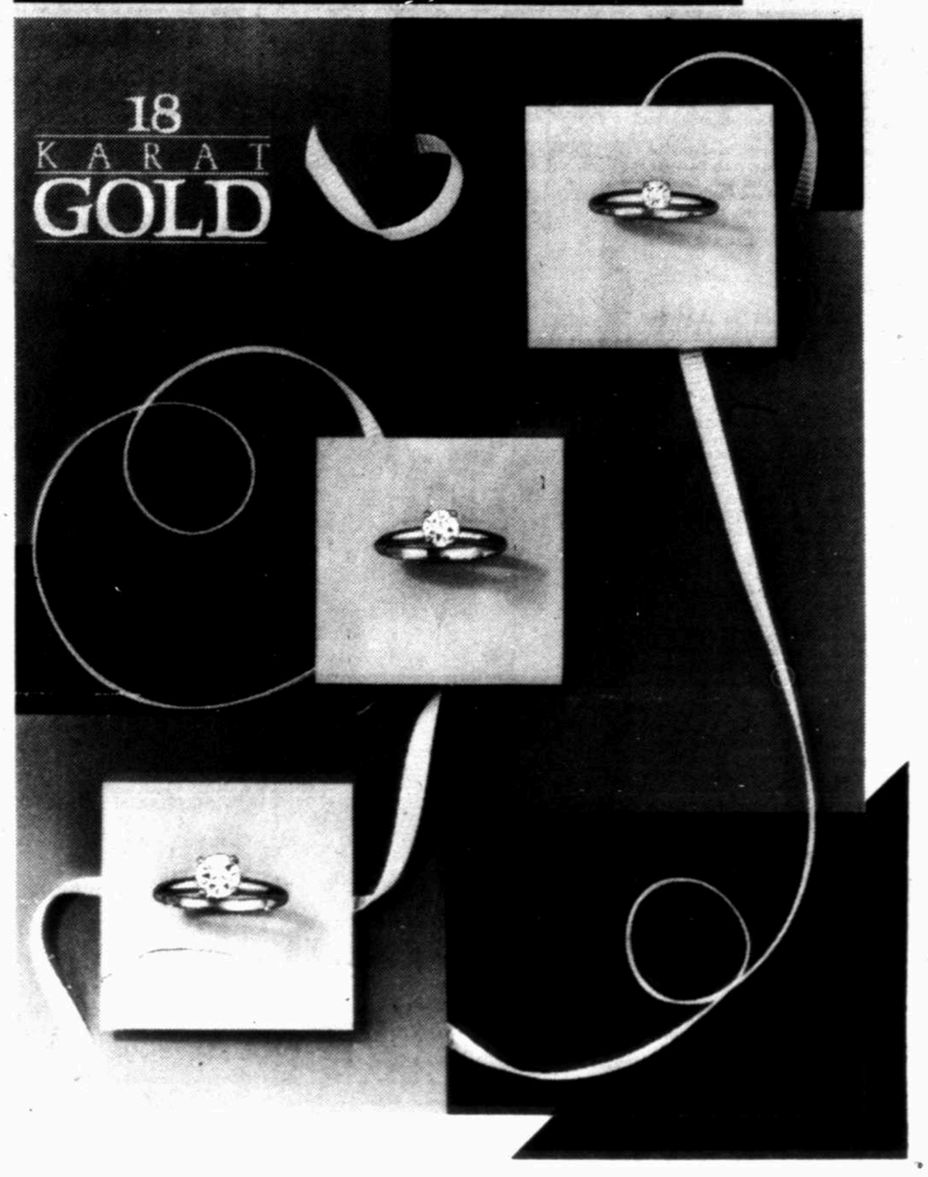

AUSTIN (AP) — Residents in newly annexed areas of the city will be able to vote in an upcoming election but their ballots can only be counted if the Justice Department approves the annexation, Austin's mayor says.

Mayor Ron Mullen said an order by U.S. District Judge James R. Nowlin paved the way Thursday for voters living in the 30 newly annexed areas to cast ballots when absentee voting begins Monday.

The ballots will be held separately and counted only if the annexed areas are approved, Mullen said.

The 4,000 residents living in areas annexed for full or limited purposes on and after Sept. 13 were barred from voting on all but one of the 20 issues in a Jan. 19 referendum.

Indictments Dismissed

James Leslie Martinez, indictment for indecency with a child by sexual contact Sept. 10 dismissed because defendant pleaded guilty to companion case of injury to a child Sept. 10 and was sentenced to 10 years probation.

Regino Moralles, indictment for delivery of more than ¼ of an ounce but less than four ounces of marijuana Nov. 6 dismissed because lab reports indicate the amount of marijuana was less than ¼ of an ounce.

Charles D. Schrode, indictment for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle April 2, 1980, dismissed pursuant to the Texas Code of Criminal Procedures Annotated, Art. 32A.02.

David Stark, indictment for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle June 3, 1980 dismissed because of insufficient evidence, the offense occurred in June 1980 and the defendant remains unapprehended. In addition, the victim has not notified the district attorney's office of a change of address or telephone number and cannot be located.

Vasco Lester Walter, indictment for theft of more than $10,000 worth of property March 30, 1981, dismissed because complaining witness requested dismissal and, pursuant to the Texas Code of Criminal Procedures Annotated Art. 32.02, and in accordance with the victim's wishes, attendant circumstances and facts and in the interest of judicial economy and expediency, the state dismisses the cause.

James Lee Washington, indictment for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle Sept. 27, 1981, dismissed because of insufficient evidence, the offense occurred in 1981 and the defendant remains unapprehended. In addition, the witness who could identify the defendant cannot be located.

Rebs tag Cougars

Give Lee defense a save

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Midland Lee baseball coach Ernie Johnson isn't ready to claim the favorite's role in the District 4-5A baseball race yet, but one thing is clear after Saturday's 5-4 win over district favorite Abilene Cooper: The Rebels will back down to no one.

Cooper came to Lee's home field riding an 11-0 record and a No. 2 ranking in the state baseball poll and was hoping to put a game between themselves and the challenging Rebels. The Cougars even had undefeated and highly touted fireballer Terry Suggs on the mound for this early season showdown.

But Suggs, and consequently the Cougars, weren't able to hold a 4-1 lead as the Rebels touched the righthander for a run in the third, three in the fourth to tie the score and the winning run in the fifth.

"Not to take anything away from Lee, but (Suggs) didn't pitch good. When you get a 4-1 lead and start walking people, that can happen," Cooper coach Andy Malone said. "When he's wild like that (three hit batsmen and three bases on balls), he can get in trouble. He's definitely all-human, he just wasn't throwing well.

"I was telling our kids we're in a battle for the district championship, now. I look for a solid four-team battle between ourselves, Lee, San Angelo and Abilene High."

Johnson prefers to leave the favorite collar on Cooper's shoulders, however.

"I think Cooper will stay the favorite, but they are one game behind now," Johnson said.

"They've got to catch up, and I know one thing, if we don't lose they can't do it. In a short high school season, the lesser teams have a way of creeping up on the good teams."

LEE ACE Mike Rittenberry worked out of jams in the second, third, fourth and sixth innings to preserve the win and give the Rebels a 2-0 district mark, 10-4 overall. Rittenberry scattered 10 hits and five free passes in seven innings to up his record to 4-1. Rittenberry struck out five and was helped by a trio of Rebel double plays.

Suggs, now 5-1, yielded just six hits and struck out six, but walked three batters and hit three more in going the distance.

The Rebels fell behind 2-0 early, on a walk, a single, a throwing error by centerfielder Tuey Rankin that let in one run, and an RBI single by leftfielder Scott Anderson in the top of the second.

Lee responded in its half of the inning with an RBI ground out by shortstop Keith McDonald sending home Donny Rivas who had doubled. Cooper came back with two more runs in the fourth on four hits and a walk, and with the bases still loaded and just one out, Lee looked to be digging itself a hole.

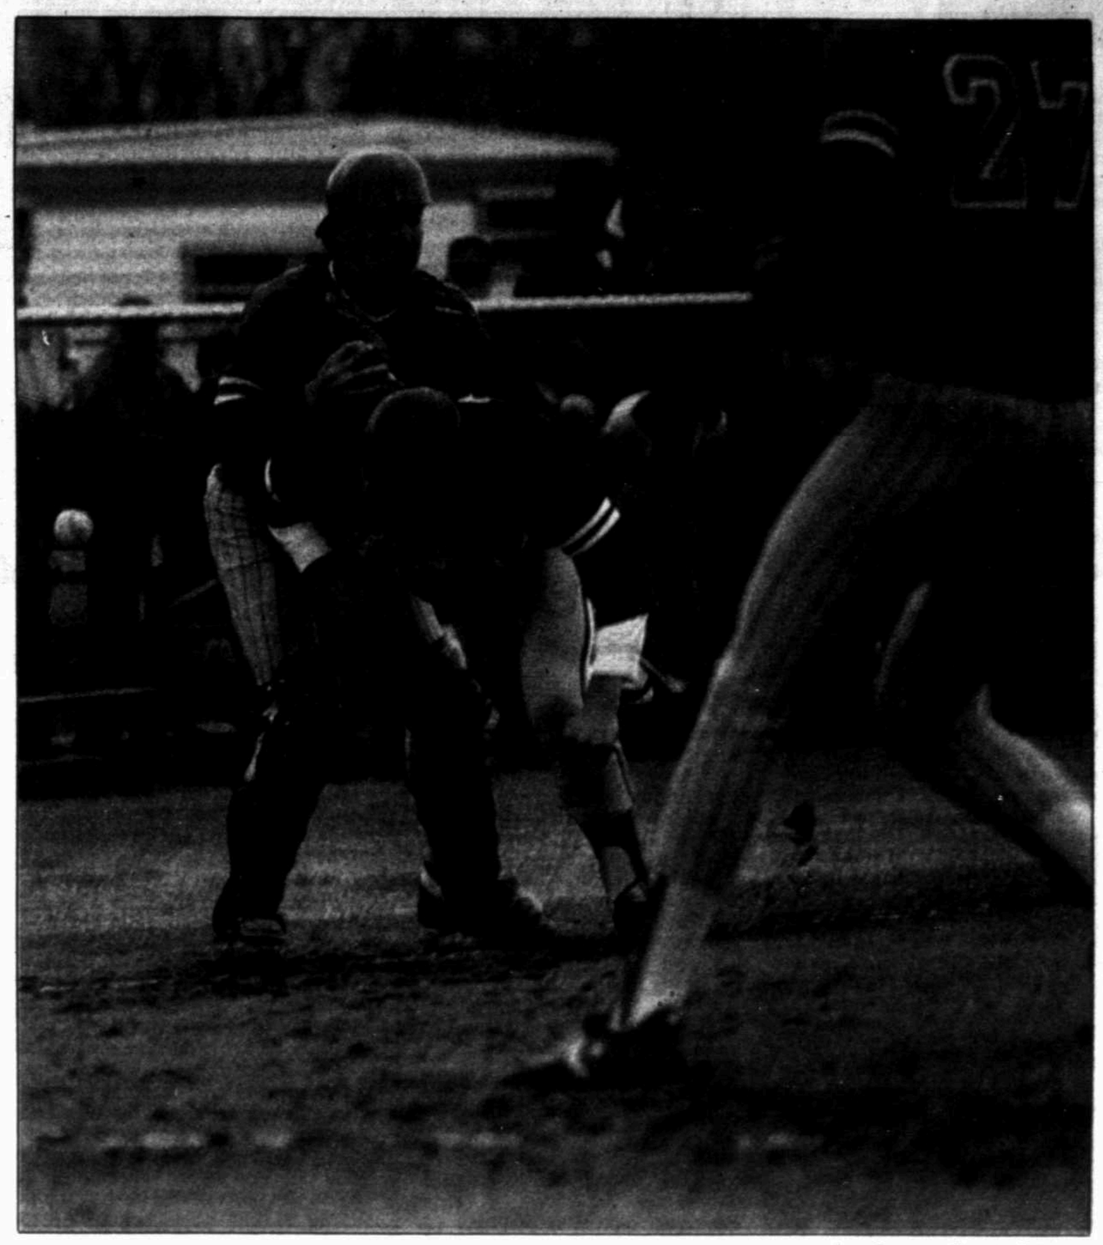

Rittenberry escaped further damage when Cougar shortstop Nathan Jones bounced back to the mound for a quick 1-2-3 double play.

THE DOUBLE play was something Rittenberry relied on all afternoon. Lee ended the fourth, fifth and sixth innings with two-for-one ground balls to get out of jams.

"You've heard the old saying, 'I'd rather be lucky than good,' well that's what we were today," Johnson said. "But we did play well. I think we competed well at the plate and in the field. And Rittenberry threw about as good as he can pitch, except for maybe his breaking ball. He could've gotten that over the plate more."

And with Rittenberry working out of jams and holding Cooper back, Lee responded at the plate with a pair of crucial rallies in the latter innings.

Little Ramblers squash big Ponies, 70-57; Hoyas next

AP Laserphoto

Loyola forward Dave Klusendorf (42) and Southern Methodist's Larry Davis fight for a rebound in the NCAA regional game Saturday in Hartford, Conn.

Associated Press

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Loyola does a lot with a little, but the littlest Rambler, 5-foot-9 Carl Golston, was talking big after scoring 20 points to lead them to a 70-57 NCAA tournament victory over Southern Methodist Saturday.

The triumph in the East regional moved Loyola (Ill.), the 1963 NCAA basketball champions, into the third round against top-ranked Georgetown, the defending champions who have won their last 14 games. They will play Thursday night in Providence, R.I.

"It will be power and speed vs. our speed," said Golston. "Georgetown has all the advantages, but this year it will be our turn to be giant killers."

The 14th-ranked Ramblers also may need the stamina of marathon runners against the very deep Hoyas. Loyola used four starters for 39 of the 40 minutes Saturday and the fifth for 31 minutes.

"They (the Mustangs) run pretty well. They just decided not to. That probably helped us out a lot," said Loyola Coach Gene Sullivan. "They (the Ramblers) like to play. It's hard to get them out of the game."

Southern Methodist Coach Dave Bliss had trouble getting his players into the game.

"For some reason, I thought that we were a very flat basketball team today," Bliss said. "We didn't get the job done offensively."

"We turned the ball over five times to their 16. That was probably the key to the game," Sullivan said.

The Ramblers broke the game open with a seven-point run late in the second half and stretched the nation's longest winning streak to 19 games.

TRAILING 56-50 with 7:28 left in the game, Southern Methodist suffered a 5:03 scoring drought while Loyola was building a 63-50 advantage with 2:40 to play.

Alfredrick Hughes, the nation's leading scorer, started the surge with a 14-foot jumper from the left. Andre Moore then hit one of two free throws. Greg Williams stole the ball and was credited with a basket on a goaltending call. Williams ended the uprising with two foul shots.

Loyola's lead never dipped below 10 points the rest of the way.

The Ramblers, 27-5, got 14 points from Hughes, who started the game with a 27.3-point average, 12 from Andre Battle and 10 from Williams.

Southern Methodist, 23-10 after going down to its fifth loss in its last nine games, was led by center Jon Koncak with 19 points, Larry Davis with 14 and Carl Wright with 13.

The Mustangs led from the first basket of the game, a layup by Koncak with 12 seconds gone, until late in the first half when the Ramblers reeled off six consecutive points.

Moore hit a short shot before Mike Cenar, the only substitute used by Loyola in the first half, sank a layup 3:35 before halftime to give the Ramblers a 27-26 lead. Cenar followed it with a 15-foot bank shot.

Loyola never trailed again and held a 31-30 edge at intermission.

Georgetown 63, Temple 46

HARTFORD, Conn. — No. 1-ranked Georgetown wasn't very neighborly toward Temple. Every time the Owls tried to come inside, the Hoyas slammed the door.

Georgetown used an intimidating inside defense and a balanced scoring attack led by guard Michael Jackson's 14 points to defeat Temple and advance to the round of 16 in the NCAA college basketball tournament.

"We were able to get help from everyone," Jackson, a junior, said afterward. "Because we knew who their money players are, we were able to cheat a little."

Georgetown, the tournament's defending champion, ran its winning streak to 14 games and improved its record to 32-2 on the way to a meeting Thursday in Providence, R.I., against Loyola, Ill., which defeated Southern Methodist 70-57 in Saturday's second game.

"It's our time of year," said backup center Ralph Dalton, who chipped in six points. "We've worked hard to accomplish what we've started.

"This game was another game on the way to where we're going."

Temple ended its season with a 25-6 record. It was the second straight year the Owls were knocked out in the second round of the NCAA tournament by the nation's top-ranked team. Last season they were beaten by then No. 1 North Carolina.

Reggie Williams scored 13 and Patrick Ewing and David Wingate each added 12 for Georgetown. Point guard Nate Blackwell scored a game-high 15 points for Temple and his backcourt mate, Ed Coe, had 10.

However, the Owls got a total of just 15 points from forwards Granger Hall and Charles Rayne, who had combined for 31.2 points per game this season.

"We weren't so much concerned about the inside," Temple Coach John Chaney said. "If a team is going to double down on you, you have to take shots from the outside. We figured every time we'd get it to Granger, they'd double down on him."

TEMPLE CAME out confident at the start. Hall, the Atlantic 10 Conference's player of the year, popped a jump shot over Ewing for the first basket of the game and Coe followed with another jumper to give the Owls a short-lived four-point lead.

Temple remained close, but of its 10 first-half field goals, just one came from closer than 15 feet.

Chaps Hutchinson bound

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

The defending National Junior College Athletic Association champion won't be back this year. Midland College is taking their place and Coach Jerry Stone is hopeful his Chaparrals can make that statement stand up through next Saturday.

San Jacinto College, winner of the NJCAA in Hutchinson, Kan., the last two years, was expelled in the south Texas regional tournament by Laredo Junior College, the team Midland beat Friday night, 82-79, to gain the berth.

It was San Jacinto that kept MC from returning to nationals in 1983 to defend the title it had won in 1982. SJ beat MC in a playoff game at Fort Worth and then monopolized the last two titles.

HOW GOOD are the 29-4 Chaps' chances, a team that didn't receive any attention in the national rankings?

As Coach Jerry Stone views it, "Any team coming out of Texas has a chance."

The records back him up. Since the tournament began back in the 1940s, Texas has supplied 12 champions and four of the last five, so MC has a reputation and tradition to live up to.

San Jacinto didn't pick the most popular way to win friends and influence people at Hutchinson in beginning its two-year run. In 1983, SJ brought a sudden and abrupt end to the love affair between 5-7 Spud Webb and the basketball-mad Kansas fans, where they still talk about the play-making guard who today makes North Carolina State games the most popular on Hutchinson cable-TV.

One tournament official, contacted Saturday about press credentials, preferred to inform, "I watched Spud on tv yesterday." He was finally brought back to the subject of the call, but not before having his say about Spud.

"Midland has the floor for a practice at 3:30 p.m. Monday," he informed, "But shucks, they don't need the floor. They've been here before." Perhaps there is some carry over, but not that much. This is a first for everybody on the current team.

THE FIELD for the tournament was completed Saturday night with the winner of the Dixie, Utah, vs. Eastern Arizona, in a late game, supplying the final berth.

Although Midland College will play its opening game against Westark (33-3) at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday, the tournament begins with six games Tuesday...tip offs at noon, 1:45, 3:30, 6, 7:45 and 9:30 p.m.

Baylor defeats Tech in SWC season opener

WACO (AP) — Kyle Todd doubled in the eighth inning and later scored the winning run on a throwing error as Baylor defeated Texas Tech, 3-2, in the first Southwest Conference baseball game of the year for both teams.

Todd doubled off Tech starter and loser Bret Marshall with one out. One out later, he advanced to third when shortstop Tommy Dobyns bobbled Tony Huey's routine grounder. Marshall threw wildly on Huey's attempt to steal second, and Todd scored.

Chaparrals scale Laredo's Mount Everest

Even at 6-9, a 290-pound center isn't going to be a leaper with eel-slippery moves to the basket, but everybody goes around Everest, not over or through it, so, it was suspected, there might be a problem.

Besides, that 290 was a compromise weight. MC Coach Jerry Stone estimated that Junior Rey weighed 280-285. The writer at the Laredo paper said 300 pounds.

Then, it was discovered there was a 6-10 starter and another 6-9 over on the bench. More trouble.

After seeing Junior, the inclination is to believe the writer was closer to the actual tonnage.

STONE, ON the basis of one hasty scouting report, described Laredo as a half-court team that played a deliberate game. Once on the floor against MC at Angelo State University gym Friday night, the only acquaintance the Herd from the Border had with "deliberate" was "deliberately in a hurry" to get the ball in scoring position.

And, finally, there was that 10-point deficit midway through the final half, a problem it didn't look as though the Midland College Chaps would solve in time to earn that talked of dream in the sky — a trip to Nationals in Hutchinson, Kan.

By his own admission, Stone had tried every combination. "I've been doing that all year and usually I eventually find something that will work. Tonight we were behind, but still it wasn't with something like two minutes to go, so I didn't feel it was a lost cause. Yet, I knew I had to do something in a hurry."

Six-nine Teviin Binns, who still had 16 points for the night, was having trouble adjusting to Rey, the guy was just so big. "I blocked some of his shots clean," Teviin said later, "but they called me for the body. I don't agree. He used a lot of body on offense and nothing was called."

Offensively, Rey had a nice soft touch off the post for the basket. When he whirled (as in tornado force), he left a few bodies on the floor. Nothing deliberate, but when a 280-300-pound body moves, well....

CHUCKIE GRAVES and Ricky Grace kept the Chaps in the game with their shooting the first half. In fact Graves, who had 15 points, had a superb all-around game while Grace gave Stone part of that "right combination" for which he had been searching midway through the final half.

It turned out that Eddie Frazier and Tony Wright gave MC the size it needed inside to Summo style with Rey, who by this time was wearing three personals. Meanwhile, Vernon Coleman and company finally put a lid on No. 22, unheralded Pat Covington, a 5-11 sharpshooter who hit 10 of 18 from the field, all cross-country shots.

Coleman's post-game, "Coach told us to watch No. 10, but he didn't tell us about No. 22" said it all. Duane Washington had the statistics, average-steals-assists, but Covington was something out of the woodwork.

In running off a 15-0 streak from 10:42 to 5:39 in the last half, the Chaps played defense with a desperation that made it look like a trip to Hutchinson depended on it and it paid off. And along the way, 6-10 David Willard fouled out.

FROM A peronsal standpoint, this had to be the season's most exciting game, not only because of what was at stake and the odds faced in that second half, but the furious pace of the action and the frenzied crowd reaction. There weren't 4,200 in the stands like there was for the MC-Odessa game, but it sounded as though there were.

Midland brought a large contingent and considering the 357 mile bus trip, "We had to go out of our way to change bus drivers", Laredo was well and loudly represented.

It's history now and the Chaps leave for Hutchinson today and will work out Monday and Tuesday before Wednesday's game with Westark, which sounds like a leap from the frying pan into the fire.

The last time MC was at Hutchinson, it was only some defensive heroics by Puntus Wilson in the final seconds that preserved MC's victory over Westark. With a 33-3 record, the Region 14 champs look as tough as ever.

LEE —— 'Dogs notch first 4-5A win

In the fourth, a three-run Lee rally tied the score with the help of an error by Cooper second baseman Bill Dehlinger. With one out and the bases full, McDonald squeezed Paul Colwell home with the fourth run, but DH Cary Brown rounded third too far and was called out at home for deliberately running into Cougar catcher Mike Hood for the controversial third out.

Rankin scored the game-winner in the fifth after being nipped by a Suggs fastball. Greg Shaw singled, catcher Jimmy Phillips walked and leftfielder Mike Small brought Rankin home with a bloop single to center. That was all Rittenberry needed.

DeKalb, Ga., which faces Erie, N.Y., brings the best and worst record into the tournament. DeKalb was 33-1 on the court, but wound up 14-20 as a result of forfeits when some ineligible players were discovered during the playoffs.

Other familiar names returning to this year's field include Westchester, N.Y., Moberly, Mo., which pairs off against Shelby State; Highland Park, Mich.; Hinds, Miss., and Westerk.

From Staff Reports

It wasn't the high-scoring free-for-all that Midland High coach Tim Whalen expected, but the Bulldogs are more than happy with the results of Saturday's 5-2 victory over host Abilene High.

The win is the first of the District 4-5A season for MHS and it couldn't have come at a better time for the struggling Bulldogs, now 1-1 in district play.

In other district games it was Odessa High upsetting San Angelo, 4-3, and Odessa Permian shooting down Big Spring, 11-3.

FOR THE Bulldogs, it was a hard-earned defensive struggle, but starter Mike Stanton and reliever Mike Gonzales managed to handcuff the Eagles to two runs on seven hits. Stanton's record moves to 2-0, while Gonzales notched his first save of the season.

While the pitching shone, it was little-used first baseman Anthony Deande that emerged as the hero for MHS. Deande, a .167 hitter going into the game, drove in three runs with a pair of well-timed singles to rightfield in his first district start of the season at first base.

Designated hitter Mark Torres also cracked a pair of doubles and knocked in a run for the Bulldogs. Ricky Castaneda helped ignite each MHS rally and scored three times.

The win leaves MHS in the middle of the District 4-5A pack trying to catch early leader Midland Lee.

With AHS and Cooper losing to the Tall City teams, that leaves Lee all alone at the top after the first week of district play. But right behind the Rebels are six teams, MHS, Cooper, AHS, Big Spring, Permian and OHS with 1-1 records. San Angelo brings up the rear at 0-2.

District 4-5A

Next week Lee travels to Permian for a 4 p.m. start on Tuesday then it is on to Big Spring for a 2 p.m. game Saturday. MHS will hosts Odessa Tuesday, also at 4 p.m., at Zachery Field, then hosts San Angelo at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Jordan takes third; MHS in 5A Top 10

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — Midland High's Andrew Jordan came away with a third place finish in the 50 yard freestyle here in the State 5A swimming meet here Saturday.

Jordan, who swam a 21.60 in the 50, was the highest Bulldog finisher in the meet. In the 400 relay, which finished 10th in 3:19.71, Jordan led off with 100 time of 47.41 which qualified him for consideration for high school All-American honors.

Joining Jordan on the relay were: John Brenner, Jay Green and Ricky Perkins.

The only other MHS swimmer to place in the meet was Sam Perry in the 100 backstroke, 10th in 55.95.

No MHS girls made it to the meet finals.

"Outside of the medley relay (which didn't qualify for the finals), I was very pleased with our results," said MHS coach Jesse Marsh. "We had a bad exchange on one of the medley legs and it cost us a second and a half. Give us that time back and we'd have made the finals."

Four swim records broken

AUSTIN (AP) — Four state records fell Saturday and Richardson Pearce High School swimmers tallied 92 points to take the boys' team title in the University Interscholastic League state swimming meet.

San Antonio Clark ran up 104 points to take the team title for girls' teams in the meet.

Doug Gjertson, a Houston Stratford junior, set two UIL records of 51.87 in the 100-yard backstroke and 1:49.78 in the 200-yard individual medley.

Paul Robinson, a Richardson Pearce junior, set a record of 4:25.01 in the 500-yard freestyle. And Duncanville junior Jeanne Doolan recorded a new pace of 23.49 in the 50-yard freestyle.

BOB BRUNDAGE

Returning to younger days can be depressing

Whoever said it was right! You can't go back. At least not to your youth once it has gone.

A couple of weeks ago I had the opportunity to spend two days practicing with the Midland High baseball team. In theory I was using it as a chance to get to know some of the players better — maybe find a feature or two — but in the back of my mind, I think I was trying to rediscover my youth.

You might be wondering what brought this on? Or, at the age of 28, you might think I haven't exactly reached the retirement or medicare stage of my life.

True. But when I graduated from high school in the spring of 1975, I never thought the years would go by so fast. I have often heard people ask, "Where does the time go?" My answer used to be "past, minute by minute." Now it seems more like "year by year." I'm now asking the question.

So, donning a practice uniform I wear for softball, I showed up at, as MHS coach Tim Whalen put it before it was renamed Zachery field, "Doggie Diamond" for my first workout.

First came the taping of an ankle that has been injured so many times just looking at it cross-eyed causes pain. It was in the training room that I recalled Whalen's warning to "keep your eyes open."

I remembered too late. When the student trainer was finished with my ankle, I put on my socks and reached for my shoe. It was gone. Some enterprising student saw me for an easy mark and nabbed it.

Casually looking around the training table did no good. I was forced to bring my plight to the attention of everyone present.

"OK," I said. "Where's my shoe?"

So much for a witty come-back to the situation. A few students were snickering. I think those in on the plot were in another room rolling on the floor, suffering from hysterical laughter.

That's when trainer Doc Dodson started an intensive investigation into the matter, asking everyone who walked in if they'd seen the missing shoe. My embarassment was growing and Doc was playing it for all it was worth.

Finally, feeling sorry for me, Doc pointed out that it was sitting beside a microwave oven in the training room. Welcome back to high school, Brundage.

The embarassment had just begun.

Having never been much of a baseball player in the first place, I took the field and reconfirmed a suspicion I've long held: Throwing, whether baseball, softball, football..., isn't one of my strong points. My fielding isn't much better. Neither is my hitting.

Trying to keep me "from being killed," Whalen stuck me in the outfield to "shag flies" for batting practice. The first time a pop-up came my way I casually moved under it, snared it and threw to the infield cutoff man thinking "that wasn't so tough."

For the rest of the afternoon I was running in 20 different directions trying to catch up with hits. I think Whalen felt sorry for me and eventually sent out more help. The running slowed some.

Then came my turn at the plate. Whalen went to the mound and started firing what, to his players, are known as "meat pitches."

Yeah, right. I'd swear Whalen looked like Nolan Ryan standing behind that screen, raring back and unloading for all he was worth. He claimed he threw the ball but I never saw it.

I don't think I came anywhere near his first half dozen pitches before finally timing one right. I started my swing while Whalen was grabbing a ball out of a bag. I swung for all I was worth and made a solid connection, rolling it all the way to the shortstop before it came to a stop. My goal became getting one out of the infield. Two finally went, both well into foul territory. The rest...well.

"Not bad for a sports writer," came a remark from someone in a group of purple-clad players waiting their turn to bat. I also thought I heard a few more snickers. The only thing of mine that left the infield that day was my ego. It waved goodbye as it headed home for a hot shower. I should have followed.

DAY TWO got off to a better start. Doc sent wave after wave of students and trainers to the table I was sitting on in a desperation attempt at stealing my shoe for a second time. Once fooled by his ploys, I was well prepared. This time I sat on it until I was ready to join the players on the field.

Whalen divided his players into four groups and sent them to different stations around what was left of Zachery Field. Earlier in the day construction workers had broken a water pipe next to the third base dugout and the entire left side of the field was under water.

When the workout finally began, I again found myself shagging flies in the outfield. This time, however, when Whalen wasn't looking, I sneaked in closer to the hitter for a chance to field a few grounders. Those that didn't bounce off my glove rolled easily beyond my reach.

Eventually I found myself in the batter's box and, remembering to swing a little quicker, finally jacked one out of the, ahem, infield. Even though it was caught, I got a round of applause from the few players who saw it. One even commented, "You're hitting a bit better today."

Overall, that second and final day I thought things were going smoother. I managed to keep from getting my head taken off, although Whalen later admitted he thought for sure I'd "bought it" a couple of times. "Especially on that line drive when you stumbled and almost fell in front of it in the outfield."

I didn't think Whalen had seen that one. Grace has never been one of my greatest accomplishments in life, along with baseball.

As I was leaving, I could have sworn I heard Whalen say to one of his players something to the effect of "my grandmother plays better than Brundage and she can't go to her left either."

I think it's the same thing a little league baseball coach once said nearly, gasp, two decades ago. Maybe I'd better stick with grown-up games and let high schoolers have their own. Besides, who needs all those depressing memories.

Genalo rolls 258 to win King Louie

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. (AP) — Don Genalo outscored his doubles partner, Jim Miller, 258-246 on Saturday to win the $130,000 King Louie Open and his fourth career Professional Bowlers Association title.

Genalo, of North Merrick, N.Y., collected $21,000 after the nationally televised contest, his first PBA victory of the year.

"I was a little more relaxed today than I usually am for TV because Jim and I are good friends," said Genalo, who rolled nine strikes in the title match. "I wanted to see Jim bowl well — as long as he didn't bowl better than I did."

Miller, who won his only PBA title in 1982, earned $12,000 for second place.

Mark Roth of Spring Lake Heights, N.J., picked up $8,000 for third, while Jeff Bellinger took home $6,000 for fourth.

Mojo avenges loss to Lee; Eyepopping marks reached

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Mustang Relays

ANDREWS — The Odessa Permian-Midland Lee nip-and-tuck track struggle continued here at the Mustang Relays Saturday, but it was some incredible individual performances that stole the show from the team race.

Permian ended up avenging its loss to Lee in the West Texas Relays last weekend with a razor-thin 145-143 margin over the Rebels while Midland High placed third in a good showing with 80 points.

But the real story came from eye-popping times and distances as West Texas track is beginning to heat up despite the cool temperatures that the athletes are enduring at this time of year.

The list can almost take the breath away.

—Midland Lee's Walter Jones became the first athlete in Rebel track history to win four first place medals in one meet, according to head track coach Sam Volpe. Jones won the long jump, 100-meter dash and ran legs on two winning relay teams.

—Midland High's Darrell Davis, who was third in the state shot put last year, but who had lost two weeks in a row to Permian's Alfred Clark, exploded with a throw of 61-4¾, a career best.

—Sophomore distance sensation Mike Garza won for the fourth straight time in the 1600, but turned heads when he won his first 3200-meter outing in a stadium record time of 9:42.0.

—Permian hurdle ace Gary Guster won both hurdle events as usual, but he clocked a 36.8 in the intermediates, which is believed to be the best in the state this year.

But when it was time to decide the team title, it came down to a third place finish by Permian in the 1600 relay when sophomore Marcus Dickson held off Odessa High down the stretch for third place and the team title. Midland High tried to help Lee with a strong second place finish, but OHS couldn't repeat beating Permian again like they did last week.

Lee won the 1600 relay in 3:21.7 runaway speed, but needed Permian to finish no higher than fourth to take the title.

But when this one was over, there were no frowns from anyone. The individual shows were enough to keep all happy.

Jones, who has won three events many times in one meet, insured his four-event marathon early in the afternoon when he posted a 21-11½ in the long jump in his first try at that event this year.

"We didn't want Walter to jump in the first few meets because his legs weren't in shape," said Lee assistant coach Eddie Wolski.

Jones, the senior who is bound for Texas Tech and a football career, added the stinger when he said, "Friday was the first day I even worked on the long jump."

Coach Volpe, who is in his 24th and last year at Lee, should know if Lee has ever had a four-event winner because he is the only coach Lee has ever had.

Coach Johnny Williams was also singing the praises of Davis after his march over the 60-foot barrier. "We're thrilled to death with what Darrell did. I think he may be capable of going around 63-feet on a given day. This is the first full week of practice he has had with us due to basketball and other trips."

Davis is bound for Texas Christian on a football scholarship. Last year he didn't bust the 60-foot barrier until the Region I meet when he had a 60-8.

"I've been a little frustrated in the shot put this year," said Davis. "It's not that I lost a couple of times to Clark, but because I wasn't throwing as well as I did last year at this time. It all worked today and I'm ready to go even farther. I would really like to be around 65 by Region time."

MHS assistant Bernie Hagins said, "All we need to do now is work hard with him and stick with technique. We got to work on some things this past week and it really paid off."

Garza had never run the 3200, but his coaches wanted him to shoot for a 9:40 to qualify for the Texas Relays. "I didn't think I could get anywhere near 9:40, but maybe I can qualify for the Texas Relays. That's what the coaches wanted."

Garza came to Lee as a highly touted tracksters. As a freshman, Garza set seven ninth grade records in one year. "This is really amazing for a sophomore. I think he may be a good one," understated Volpe.

Permian's Guster is a senior, but missed most of last year with a leg injury. Permian coach Waymond Griggs said, "He tried to come back late last year, but hurt his leg in the district meet during the high hurdles. I think the all-time best in Texas is around 35.7 in the intermediates, so he's getting on down there."

Lee's other first came from sophomore Mike Courtney with a 6-0 in the high jump, his first varsity victory. Lee's Marq Brackens, who has been hampered with a leg injury, ran smooth, but finished second in the 400 meters. Midland High's Randy Simmons paid the Guster price again, finishing second in the highs while Lee's Quintus Hampton also felt the Guster sting with a second in the intermediates. Simmons also tied for second in the high jump.

Coach Williams, who is heavily ladened with sophomores and juniors this season, got some more good news Saturday as Midland High won the junior varsity division with 133½ points. OHS was second with 109 while Lee was third with 100. The Bullpups won five events while Lee won three.

In the 4A division, Lovington, N.M., posted 190 points to outdistance Andrews' 129. Lovington's James Hilliard won three events to lead the way. Andrews got a 6-4 victory in the high jump from Randy Friemel and a 13-0 vault from Kurt Willems.

Lovington also won the girls division with 172 points while Andrews was second with 135. Andrews won five events as Charlotte Jones won twice in the long jump (16-9½) and triple jump (34-6¼.) Other Andrews victories came from Treva Maxie in the shot put (34-6), Bonnie Flores in the 800 (2:20.1) and LaYana Maxie in the 100 hurdles (16.0.).

The unbeaten Toronto Blue Jays made it eight exhibition victories in a row Saturday, defeating the Philadelphia Phillies 8-3 behind George Bell's two-run homer and solo shots by Jeff Burroughs and Fred McGriff.

Trailing 3-2 after Philadelphia's Steve Carlton pitched four scoreless innings, the Blue Jays tagged Ed Olwine for three runs in the sixth on Bell's towering drive over the left-field fence with one out and Burroughs' two-out homer. Burroughs, purchased from Oakland during the off-season, has three spring hits, all home runs.McGriff hit his third spring homer in the eighth off Larry Andersen.

Garry Templeton's two-run triple keyed a four-run eighth inning as the San Diego Padres posted their first exhibition triumph, 7-1 over the California Angels.LaMarr Hoyt went the first four innings and limited the Angels to a third-inning run scored on a balk, one of two called on the former American Leaguer by National League umpire Doug Harvey.

The St. Louis Cardinals also won for the first time as John Tudor, Danny Cox and Rick Horton scattered eight hits and Willie McGee and Terry Pendleton both tripled and scored in the first inning of a 2-0 triumph over the New York Mets.

Meanwhile, St. Louis pitcher Joaquin Andujar formally signed a three-year contract worth more than $3 million.

Rookie Marc Sullivan, son of Boston co-owner Haywood Sullivan, belted a two-run homer in the sixth inning off Aurelio Lopez and Glenn Hoffman delivered a bases-loaded triple in the seventh, powering the Red Sox over the Detroit Tigers 5-0 behind the seven-hit pitching of Roger Clemens, Steve Crawford, Jim Dorsey and Bob Stanley.

Clemens, who missed the last month of the 1984 season because of arm trouble, pitched three innings, allowing three hits and striking out three. Detroit ace Jack Morris allowed just two hits and struck out five in five scoreless innings.

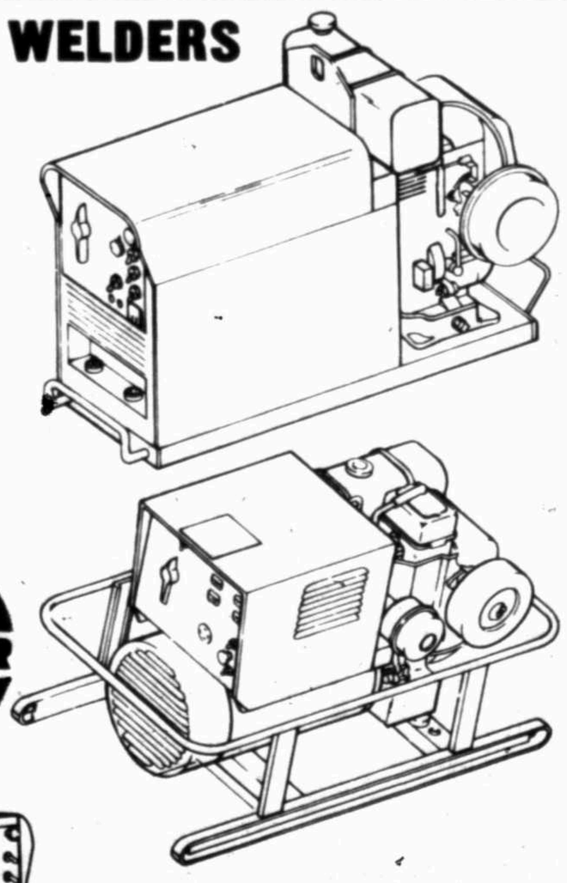

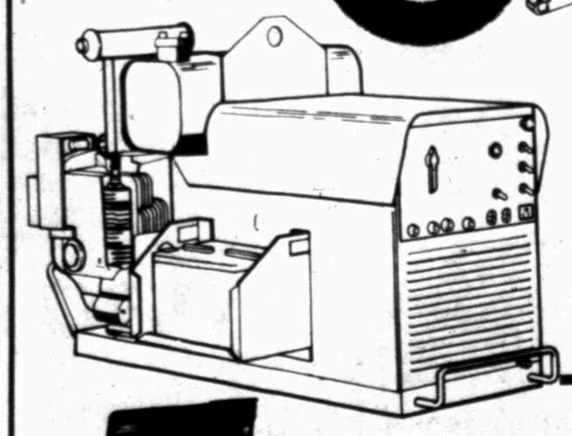

Thad Bosley's two-run single off Danny Darwin broke a tie in the third inning and the Chicago Cubs went on to a 5-1 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers. Randy Ready led off the Brewers' first with a home run but Scott Sanderson, Derek Botelho and Lary Sorensen held the Brewers scoreless the rest of the way.

Mel Hall had four hits and Julio Franco added three in leading the Cleveland Indians to a 6-3 victory over the San Francisco Giants.Franco tripled to lead off the third inning and scored on Hall's double off Jim Gott, putting the Indians ahead to stay 2-1.

Pat Sheridan's solo homer in the first inning and Mike Brewer's three-run homer in the eighth led the Kansas City Royals to a 4-3 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Express romps 'Slingers

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Quarterback Steve Young ran for one touchdown and threw for another Saturday as the Los Angeles Express scored a team record 38 points for its first United States Football League victory, a 38-7 breeze over the San Antonio Gunslingers.

The Gunslingers avoided a shutout by scoring with 3:07 to play on a 15-yard pass from quarterback Fred Mortensen to Danny Buggs. Otherwise, the game belonged to Los Angeles, with Young completing 10 of 18 passes for 128 yards in just over three quarters of work.

The victory before 11,757 at the Coliseum was the first for the Express in four games, while San Antonio fell to 1-3.

The Express rolled to a 17-0 lead in the first half, the defense twice intercepting San Antonio quarterbacks to set up a touchdown and a field goal.

Young gave his team a 7-0 lead early in the second quarter on a 2-yard bootleg. Andy Melontree set up the drive with an interception and a return to the San Antonio 11-yard line. Three plays later Young rolled untouched around left end for the score.

Two series later, Mel Gray got a key block from Toddie Bodie and ran 25 yards up the right side to pad the lead to 14-0 with 1:53 left in the half.

The Express got the ball back on San Antonio's 30-yard line four plays later when Darrell Patillo grabbed his first of two interceptions. Seven plays later, Tony Zendejas kicked a 40-yard field and the score was 17-0 with just 10 seconds left.

Starting the second half, the Express moved the ball 77 yards in 8:23 before running back Kirby Warren went over from the 1-yard line and increased the lead to 24-0.

The Express quickly made it 31-0 when Young passed 16 yards to Jojo Townsell with 2:04 left in the third quarter. They added a final touchdown with 10:30 left in the game when reserve safety John Higgins recovered a wild pitchout from San Antonio quarterback Rick Neuheisel in the end zone.

USFL Roundup

Through three quarters, San Antonio amassed only 37 yards passing and 29 yards rushing and didn't pass midfield until less than six minutes were left in the game.

Bandits 23, Outlaws 13

TAMPA, Fla. — Gary Anderson rushed for 162 yards, including a 51-yard touchdown run, to lead Tampa Bay to a victory over the Arizona Outlaws.

Anderson's scoring run capped the Bandits' opening drive and gave them a lead the Outlaws never could overcome, despite frantic attempts by Arizona quarterback Doug Williams.

The Bandit defense, thinned by injuries to two starters during the game, intercepted Williams twice, both times in the Bandit end zone, and sacked him three times.

Bandit quarterback John Reaves appeared erratic at times, but duplicated some of his heroics against San Antonio last week, completing 18 of 36 passes for 204 yards, suffering only one sack and no interceptions.

For Anderson, it was his best day ever as a running back. His previous personal best was 147 yards rushing in a single game.

The victory evened Arizona's record at 2-2, while the Bandits rose to 3-1 in the non-conference match. Officials announced 41,381 tickets distributed, but the crowd on the sunny afternoon appeared to be substantially fewer.

Arizona scored all its points in the second half as Luis Zendejas kicked field goals of 28 and 38 yards after Kevin Long scored on a 12-yard run at the start of the third period.

But Tampa Bay's Zenon Andrusyshyn kicked field goals of 43, 42 and 20 yards to secure the Bandits' lead. Reaves also scored on a 12-yard pass to Eric Truvillon before the half.

Breakers 23, Renegades 17

PORTLAND, Ore. — Running back Buford Jordan rambled for 175 yards and Tim Mazzetti kicked three field goals as the Portland Breakers held on for a victory over winless Orlando.

The Renegades nearly pulled off a miracle finish as Victor Jackson raced 71 yards on a punt return, bouncing the ball off the turf and catching it en route, before Portland's Robert Pennywell made a desperation, game-saving tackle at the Breakers' 14-yard line as the game ended.

The bruising, 230-pound Jordan, who topped the 100-yard mark for the third week in a row, carried the ball 19 times and scored what proved to be the winning touchdown on a 25-yard run early in the fourth quarter.

Portland, 2-2, dominated the statistics but turnovers, including two Jordan fumbles, helped the Renegades stay close.

Veteran quarterback Matt Robinson, playing for the first time this season, gave Portland an early lead with a 35-yard scoring strike to Randy Beverley one minute into the second quarter.

A bad snap foiled the conversion try, and Mazzetti's 35-yard field goal gave Portland a 9-0 halftime lead.

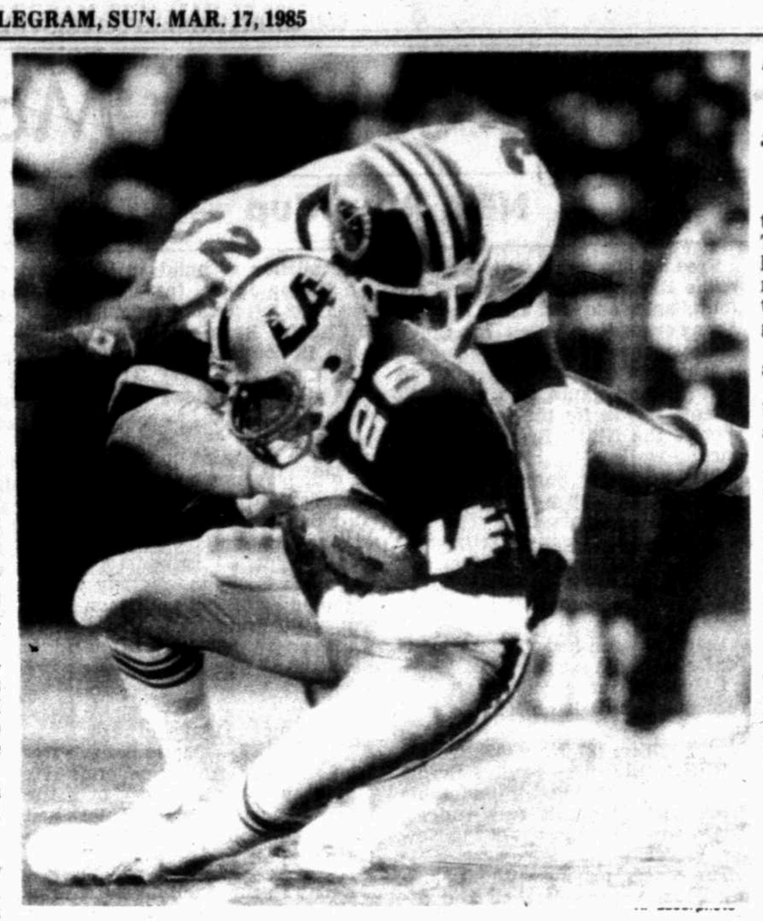

Mazzetti added field goals of 30 and 43 yards in the second half, while Orlando managed its first score on Jeff Brockhaus's 37-yard field goal as Portland built a 15-3 advantage early in the final period.

The Renegades, 0-4, narrowed the margin in a hurry when Jerry Parrish scooted 94 yards on a kickoff return to slice the margin to 15-10 90 seconds into the fourth quarter.

Jordan capped a quick, two-play, 51-yard drive by bursting 25 yards up the middle just one minute later to put Portland back in control at 27-10.

The Renegades pulled to within striking distance one more time, with Curtis Bledsoe's one-yard run with 3:28 to play, capping a 52-yard drive directed by backup quarterback Reggie Collier.

Jordan gained 44 yards on four carries on Portland's final possession. The Breakers' only punt came with 15 seconds left in the game and set up Jackson's wild final effort.

Los Angeles wide receiver Jojo Townsell hangs onto the football as San Antonio defender Clyde Johnson (32) hauls him down.

'Horns claim two from OCU

AUSTIN (AP) — Greg Swindell threw a no-hitter as the third-ranked Texas Longhorns defeated Oklahoma City University 4-0 Saturday night for a sweep of a doubleheader that ran their winning streak to 20 games.

OCU hit one ball out of the infield, a pop fly to right field.

Swindell, now 4-1, struck out 14 batters in the seven-inning nightcap and walked only two.

Earlier in the week, the sophomore from Houston tossed a one-hitter against Emporia State in which he struck out 17. That gives him 31 strikeouts and only one hit allowed over the past 16 innings.

Bud Ray's two-run triple in the fifth inning gave Swindell all the runs he needed.

Texas won the first game, 4-3, in extra innings on Mike Simon's one-out triple that scored Bobby Behnech from first base in the eighth inning. Lanny Hengst, 4-0, got the victory in relief.

Texas raised its record to 29-3 while Oklahoma City fell to 6-16.

Once again Lloyd, Navratilova to meet

DALLAS (AP) — Chris Evert Lloyd played her best tennis of the week Saturday night to set up a final battle against top-seeded Martina Navratilova in the $150,000 Virgina Slims of Dallas tennis tournament.

Lloyd, who half-jokingly said she "stumbled my way into the semifinal," defeated unseeded Catarina Lindqvist of Sweden 6-1, 6-3 after winning most of the back-court rallies.

Earlier, Navratilova relied on a seldom-used forehand lob to break open a tight second set and defeat No. 3-seeded Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia 6-2, 7-5.

Navratilova and Lloyd, the No. 2 seed, will square off Sunday afternoon for the title.

"I don't usually lob much off the forehand side," Navratilova said. "But I picked the right spots to do that, and those were big points. After that, I felt at least I was in control. I played solid tennis."

Biggers leads UCLA thinclads past Texas

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Double-threat sprinter Dwyan Biggers paced the UCLA men's track team to a 94-60 victory over Texas in a dual meet at Drake Stadium Saturday.

Biggers ran a personal best of 45.93 in the 400 meters and anchored UCLA's victorious 1600 relay team.

In the field, the Bruins were lead by junior John Frazier who won the shot put with a toss of 62-9¼ and by sophomore Dwain Washington who won the triple jump with a mark of 51-5 on his final jump.

UCLA is undefeated in three dual meets. Texas was participating in its first outdoor event of the season.

Despite three winning performances by Toni Lutjens, the UCLA women lost to the Longhorns 72-64.

Lutjens won the shot put, javelin and discus throws but the Bruin women were overwhelmed in the track events.

Rain drops USF&G from 72 to 54 holes

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Today's third round of the USF&G Golf Classic at Lakewood Country Club was canceled because of rain, and tournament officials said they planned to make it a 54-hole competition concluding with a full round Sunday.

As the second round ended Friday, the youngsters in the pack were the ones with the good scores, although the veteran had the better jokes.

Brett Upper, playing his second year on the PGA Tour, and Tony Sills, in his third year, were tied for the lead in the $400,000 tournament. Each had a three stroke lead with 135 — 9 under par.

Chi Chi Rodriguez, in his 25th year on the tour, was in a pack of seven at 139, just four strokes off the pace.

"I'll never quit," Rodriguez said. "I want to earn a million dollars because I've already spent two million."

Friday's play started with the conclusion of the first round, which had been interrupted by rain and lightning on Thursday.

The day at Lakewood Country Club began under heavy clouds, but turned sunny as the day wore on.

"You can tell Jack Nicklaus and Tom Watson are playing now — the wind has stopped and the sun has come out," Rodriguez said after finishing his round.

Nicklaus, frequently referred to as one of the greatest golfer ever to play the game, was at 140 going into today's third round. Watson, acclaimed as his heir-apparent, was at 142.

The cut for the final two rounds was even-par 144, with 79 of the players making it.

Scores averaged 2.3 strokes higher on Friday, after nightlong rains. Where there were 14 eagles scored on Thursday, there were only three on Friday — one of them by Upper, one by Corey Pavin one by Spain's Seve Ballesteros.

All three eagles came on the sixth hole, a 540-yard double dog-leg.

Part of the reason for the higher scores was the wind, the golfers said. Part of it was that fairways were somewhat softer after the rain.

"The wind swirled a lot today. You'd judge a shot and pick a club, but by the time you were ready to hit, it would switch," Upper said.

Sills said he and his caddy spent a lot of time trying to figure which way the wind would blow, then decided to just settle on a club and use it.

Blalock gains Kemper lead

KAANAPALI, Hawaii (AP) — Shooting an eagle on the 18th hole, Jane Blalock took the lead Saturday after three rounds of the $300,00 Women Kemper Open with a 7-under-par 212.

One stroke back was the second-round leader, Pat Bradley, with a 6-under 213. Another four strokes further back was Patty Sheehan at 217.

Blalock started the third round two strokes behind Bradley at 6-under-par. She bogeyed the par-4, 380-yard fifth hole and, ignoring the frequent rain squalls and winds gusting to 28 miles per hour, shot pars from the sixth to the 17th holes.

On the par-5, 440-yard 18th hole, Blalock, who has not won a tournament since 1980, finished up the round with an eagle.

Bradley went into Saturday's round as the leader with an 8-under-par 138. She sank her first bridie on the par-4, 365-yard seventh hole to bring her to 9-under. But she four-putted the par-3, 135-yard ninth hole for a double-bogey.

The tournament is being played on the par-73, 6,182-yard Royal Kaanapali North Course on the island of Maui.

Henning birdies way into Vintage tie

INDIAN WELLS, Calif. (AP) — Harold Henning birdied his last three holes Saturday and gained a share of the third-round lead with Gene Littler at the $300,000 Vintage Invitational senior golf tournament.

Henning, a 50-year-old from South Africa, shot a 3-under-par 69 on the Vintage Club's 6,911-yard Mountain Course, which was the same score recorded by Littler, who won the inaugural Vintage in 1981 and repeated again in 1983.

Lee Elder turned in a 2-under-par 70 and is one shot back of the co-leaders.

Arnold Palmer, who had a share of the lead most of the day, finished with a 70 and is 4-under-par 211 for 54 holes, two strokes back of the leaders. He is tied with five-time British Open champion Peter Thomson, who fired a 3-under 69 Saturday.

Dan Sikes had a 71 and is three strokes off the pace.

Miller Barber, Gay Brewer, Don January, Billy Casper and Jim Ferree are all four shots back heading into Sunday's final round of the 72-hole Senior PGA Tour event.

The winner will receive $40,000, with the runnerup earning $23,500.

Henning, a rookie on the senior tour, which is for golfers age 50 and over, said, "I was trying to keep the leaders in sight, and then I just had a fast finish."

Henning had five birdies and two bogeys on his third round. His longest birdie putt was eight feet. Three of the birdies came on par-5 holes.

Littler also had five birdies and two bogeys.

"I played a bit shaky today," he said. "I had some good holes and some poor holes, but was never in any real trouble. I'm just going out tomorrow and try to break 70. That may not win, but that should be close."

He had a 25-foot birdie putt on the 16th hole, a 15-footer on the 14th hole and a 10-footer on the fourth hole.

Palmer was 5-under-par for the tournament after his 15th hole Saturday, but then had consecutive bogeys on the 16th and 17th holes before ending his round with a birdie on the 18th.

"I guess I should have quit after the 16th hole," he said.

Thomson was 4-under and had four straight birdies on the round, but he missed a 3-foot par putt on the 16th hole and ended up with a 69.

Bill Johnston, one of three second-round leaders, had a 78 and fell eight shots off the pace Saturday.

Bob Rosburg, another of the second-round leaders, was also in the rocks on the 16th hole and ended up with an eight. He, too, recorded a 78 Saturday.

Cavaliers take care of Mavericks in OT, 135-128

Associated Press

DALLAS — Center Ben Poquette broke a 128-128 tie with a 14-foot jumper with 59 seconds left in overtime and World B. Free nailed a three-point shot to lift the Cleveland Cavaliers to a 135-128 victory over the Dallas Mavericks in a National Basketball Association game Saturday night.

Mark Aguirre tied the game for Dallas on a seven-footer 18 seconds before Poquette hit his shot. But the Mavericks never scored again. After a miss by the Mavericks' Rolando Blackman, Free hit his third three-point shot of the game with 24 seconds left to seal the win.

The Cavaliers added two free throws for the final margin.

Cleveland led by one point at the half after guard John Bagley connected on a shot fired three-quarters the length of the floor. His 70-footer at the buzzer for a three-pointer gave Cleveland a 67-66 lead at intermission.

The loss was doubly devastating for Dallas, since the Cavaliers are fighting for a chance to make the playoffs, thereby missing the lottery for the No. 1 pick and the next six positions in the NBA draft. Dallas owns Cleveland's top 1985 draft selection.

Poquette, who finished with 13 points, gave the Cavaliers a 120-118 lead with two seconds left in regulation with a rebound and lay-up of a miss by Phil Hubbard, who scored 27 points.

Blackman sent the game into overtime with an 18-footer as time expired.

NBA Roundup

Free led all scorers with 30 points. Willie Hinson scored 20 points and John Bagley added 17 and a Reunion Arena-record 19 assists for Cleveland, which snapped a two-game losing streak. The Cavaliers, 27-40, entered the game tied with the Atlanta Hawks for the final playoff spot in the NBA's Eastern Conference.

Rookie center Sam Perkins led Dallas, 38-30, with a career-high 29 points and 16 rebounds. The loss snapped a four-game Dallas win streak and spoiled the Mavericks' chance to go 10 games above .500 for the first time in their five-year history.

Blackman finished with 27 points for Dallas and Aguirre had 23.

Cleveland increased its all-time record against Dallas to 8-2.

76ers 127, Nets 107

PHILADELPHIA — Julius Erving led the injury-riddled Philadelphia 76ers with 31 points and Andrew Toney added 16 in a rout of the New Jersey Nets.

The Sixers, playing without starting center Moses Malone and his backup, Clemon Johnson, won their third straight game and the fifth in their last six.

The Nets, who got 20 points from Darryl Dawkins and 16 from Kelvin Ransey, have lost four of their last five.

The Sixers broke the game open with a 43-point first quarter. They hit 12 of their first 15 shots after intermission to build an 88-68 lead on Bobby Jones' fast-break dunk with 2:38 left in the third quarter.

Charles Barkley, who finished with 19 points, capped a 76ers' 14-2 burst minutes later with a slam dunk for a 102-72 lead wit 21 seconds left in the period.

Jones, who scored 10 of his 15 points in the third quarter, was one of four players who shared the center position. Sam Williams started and Barkley and George Johnson also saw time in the pivot. Johnson had 16 points.

Knicks 116, Pacers 114

NEW YORK — James Bailey's two free throws with six seconds left gave New York a victory over the Indiana Pacers after the Knicks had blown a 19-point lead in the fourth period.

Bailey's game-winning shots were set up by a steal in the Knicks' backcourt by Darrell Walker from Indiana's Jerry Sichting. Walker drove two-thirds of the way to the New York basket before passing to Bailey, who was fouled by Steve Stipanovich.

Bailey, whose only other points of the game were a field goal with 7:12 remaining in the final period, broke a 114-114 tie with his two free throws. Then, Herb Williams, who led all scorers with 30 points for Indiana, missed a five-footer that was rebounded by Bernard King, who paced the Knicks with 29 points.

The Knicks carried a four-point lead into the third period before holding the Pacers without a field goal for 5:04 during a 15-2 streak that gave New York a 77-60 lead. The Knicks went on to take a 87-68 lead late in the third period and took a 93-76 advantage into the fourth quarter before the roof nearly fell in.

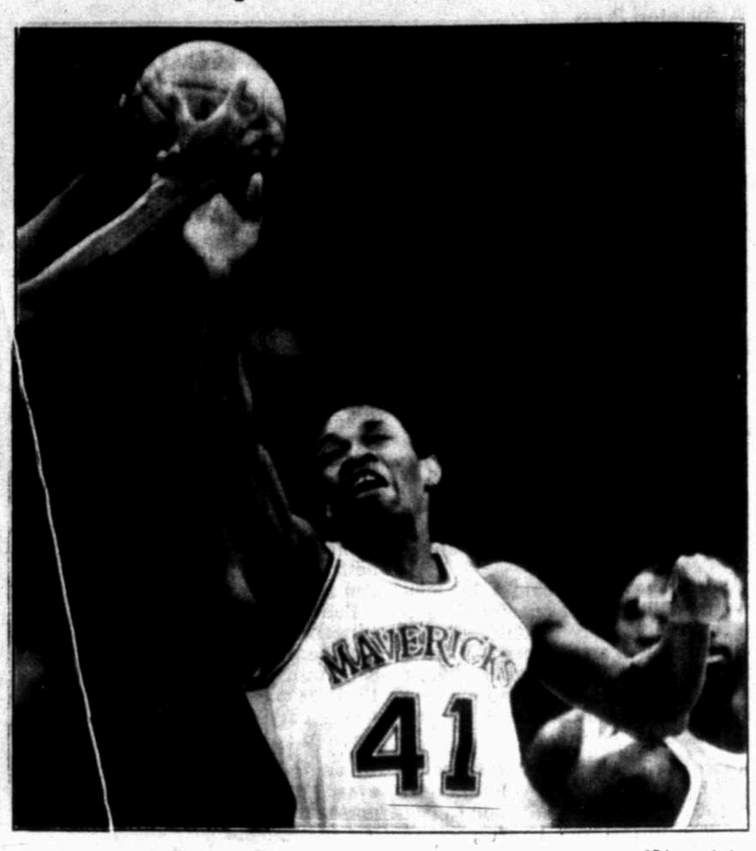

Williams scored 10 points, Clark Kellogg 12 of his 20 and Sichting eight as Indiana had 31 of the first 42 points of the fourth quarter to erase the deficit and take a 107-104 advantage with 2:42 left. There were five more lead changes and five ties the rest of the way before Bailey's decisive shots.

Trent Tucker spearheaded the New York drive in the fourth quarter with nine of his season-high 24 points.

Bucks 125, Suns 96

MILWAUKEE — Reserve center Randy Breuer scored a career-high 18 points as the Milwaukee Bucks extended their winning streak to six games by overwhelming Phoenix.

The Bucks, 47-19, who lead the NBA's Central Division by 10½ games over second-place Detroit, broke away early in the game, gaining a 33-22 lead after one quarter. Sidney Moncrief tossed in 11 points and Terry Cummings eight in the period, and the Bucks made all 11 of their free throw tries.

Dallas' Taylor wins third straight GG title

FORT WORTH (AP) — Middleweight Gilbert Taylor of Dallas hasn't mastered left-handers, but he figured out Ronnie Collins of Houston just enough to earn a 4-1 split decision Saturday night and win his third straight Texas State Golden Gloves title.

The only other defending champion to win was lightweight Lupe Miranda of San Antonio.

Two fights failed to go the distance as light welterweight Robert Guy stopped Booker Kidd of Dallas in the third round, and light heavyweight Donald Stephens of San Antonio stopped Tony Bristow of El Paso in the third.

Other champs included light flyweight Brian Lonon of San Antonio; flyweight John Reyes of Wichita Falls; featherweight David Gonzales of Houston; welterweight Greg Lonon of Fort Worth; light middleweight Fabian Gillyard of San Antonio; heavyweight Orlin Norris of Odessa, and super heavyweight Melvin Saulsberry of Dallas.

Breland, Taylor to fight in San Angelo

Wilson's goals lift Flames to 5-3 win over Bruins

BOSTON — Carey Wilson's second goal of the game in the third period lifted the Calgary Flames to a 5-3 National Hockey League victory over the Boston Bruins Saturday.

Geoff Cortnall had two goals for Boston but Calgary goalie Reggie Lemelin's 36-save performance stifled the Bruins' attack.

Wilson blew past Boston defenseman Mike Milbury and flipped a backhander over goalie Pete Peeters' shoulder for the winning goal with Milbury hanging on him.

Wilson also scored the first goal of the game in the first period when he stole an errant Boston pass and beat Peeters for his 20th goal of the season.

Cortnall tied it up with a dash down the left boards around Calgary defenseman Paul Baxter to fool Lemelin with a 25-footer.

Keith Crowder gave the Bruins a 2-1 lead when Charlie Simmer's shot went in off his skate in the second period but Eddy Beers tied it for Calgary.

Cortnall's second goal of the game gave the Bruins another lead in the second period but Mike Eaves came back to tie it once again.

Doug Risebrough scored the clinching goal for Calgary with less than three minutes to play.

Penguins 5, Rangers 0

PITTSBURGH — Mike Bullard and Mario Lemieux scored unassisted first-period goals and Denis Herron stopped 26 shots for his first shutout of the season as the Pittsburgh Penguins beat the New York Rangers.

The victory, Pittsburgh's fourth in the last 12 games, gives the Penguins 51 points, three points behind the fourth-place Rangers in the race for the Patrick Division's final playoff spot.

Bullard scored at 4:52, stealing the puck from Bob Brooke and beating Ranger goalie John Vanbiesbrouck on the glove side with a shot from the top of the slot for his 28th.

Lemieux scored his 34th of the season at 15:11. He took the puck off the stick of New York's George McPhee in the defensive zone, skated the length of the ice and, with Steve Richmond checking him, circled behind the net and used his reach to push the puck in the net.

Gary Rissling converted a pass from Bullard at 16:04 and Dave Hannan scored the only goal of the second period after he and John Chabot worked a two-on-one break at 3:59.

Arto Javanainen scored his third of the season in the third period.

Both benches emptied at 6:18 of the third period but referee Andy Van Hellemond issued only four penalties for the incident. Rissling and Beck each received roughing minors and 10-minute misconducts after their shoving started the incident. The game was interrupted less than 10 minutes by the shoving match.

Rookie Pittsburgh defenseman Todd Charlesworth suffered a cut over the left eye during the fight that required nine stitches. The shutout was the ninth of Herron's career and his first since Oct. 14, 1983. The Rangers are 0-4-1 in their last five games.

NHL Roundup

Islanders 6, Capitals 4

UNIONDALE, N.Y. — John Tonelli's second goal of the game with nine seconds remaining in the second period Saturday lifted the New York Islanders to a victory over the Washington Capitals in what could be a preview of an opening-round NHL playoff series.

The Capitals stand second in the Patrick Division and the Islanders are third. If they finish that way, they would oppose each other in the best-of-five first round in the Stanley Cup playoffs.

The Islanders have eliminated the Capitals from the last two playoff series.

Tonelli snapped a 4-4 tie when he picked up a loose pick along the right wing boards and sent a slapshot toward the Washington net. The puck tipped off the arm of Capitals defenseman Darren Veitch, then sailed past goalie Pat Riggin.

Duane Sutter clinched the Islanders' fourth straight victory with a 40-foot slapshot at 13:57 of the third period that went in off Riggin's stick.

The Islanders jumped out to a quick lead when Mike Bossy converted Bryan Trottier's cross-ice pass just 20 seconds into the contest. But Washington surged ahead on goals by Larry Murphy and Craig Laughlin, both of whom beat goalie Kelly Hrudey to the stick side.

Denis Potvin tied it with a 40-foot slapshot just 80 seconds into the second period and Tonelli got his first goal of the game at 8:03. Tonelli, who twice earlier had missed open nets, sent a short backhander through Riggin.

It took Washington's Bob Carpenter 26 seconds to tie it. During a scramble in front of Hrudey, the puck bounded off Carpenter and into the air. New York defenseman Paul Boutilier juggled it and it fell into the net.

Ken Morrow's first goal of the season gave the Islanders a 4-3 lead, but Mike Gartner got that goal back for Washington on a power play.

Flyers 6, Maple Leafs 1

TORONTO — Doug Crossman and Ron Sutter scored first-period goals and the Philadelphia Flyers skated to a victory over the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Peter Zezel and Todd Bergen added power-play goals in the second period as the Maple Leafs absorbed their sixth loss in a row and 46th of the season, breaking the club record of 45 they set last season.

Ilkka Sinisalo and Rick Tocchet scored the other Philadelphia goals as the Flyers waltzed to their sixth straight victory and took a four-point lead over second-place Washington in the Patrick Division.

Flyers goalie Pelle Lindbergh lost his shutout bid when rookie Toronto defenseman Todd Gill scored his first NHL goal at 4:32 of the final period.

The Flyers took a 1-0 lead with their first shot at Toronto goalie Tim Bernhardt.Zezel carried the puck into the corner and one-handed a pass to Sinisalo, who was uncovered behind the the net. Crossman moved in from the point, took a pass from Sinisalo and ripped a 20-foot wrist shot past Bernhardt's stick side.

Sutter made it 2-0 at 8:41 when he beat defenseman Borje Salming to the puck and slapped Murray Craven's rebound past Bernhardt.

The Flyers totally dominated the second period and ran the score to 5-0 on goals by Sinisalo, Zezel and Bergen.Sinisalo collected his 32nd of the season at 1:31 after beating Gill to the puck, which bounced out of the corner.Zezel tapped in Mark Howe's rebound at 4:57 and Bergen scored at 10:23 when he beat Bernhardt high on the stick side to cap a 3-on-2 rush.

Toronto captain Rick Vaive was benched for the game by Coach Dan Maloney. Vaive and Maloney had a run-in at the conclusion of Friday's practice with Vaive swearing publicly at both Maloney and assistant coach John Brophy.

Whalers 5, Blues 0

ST. LOUIS — Risto Siltanen, Ron Francis and Ray Neufeld each had a goal and an assist, leading the Hartford Whalers out of a six-game winless streak with a triumph over the St. Louis Blues.

Hartford goalie Steve Weeks kicked out 28 shots by St. Louis while registering his third career shutout and second of the season. The Whalers, who had not won since March 1, also severed a 10-game unbeaten streak in the nets for Blues goaltender Rick Wamsley.

Siltanen's goal, his 12th of the year, came on a power play two seconds after Pat Hickey of St. Louis was whistled from the ice at 3:52 of the second period for tripping.

Wamsley had little chance against a 50-foot blast that was screened from the slot. Less than eight minutes later, Francis rebounded Neufeld's blocked shot past Wamsley from in front for his 22nd goal.

Former Blues forward Mike Zuke capped a three-goal period for Hartford by converting Dave Tippett's pass into his fourth goal. Neufeld scored his 23rd of the year with 11:30 remaining, and Paul Fenton added his fifth with 8:26 to go.

It was St. Louis' first game since the lost at midweek of center Doug Wickenheiser with a knee injury requiring surgery. The Blues, while failing to add to their six-point grip on first place in Norris Division standings over the idle Chicago Black Hawks, outshot their opponents 28-25.

North Stars 4, Canadiens 2

MONTREAL — Dirk Graham scored the winning goal and assisted on two others Saturday night to pace the Minnesota North Stars to a victory over the Montreal Canadiens.

Graham, who snapped a 2-2 tie at 12:39 of the second period, also assisted on an insurance goal by Ron Wilson, who blasted a slapshot past Montreal goalie Steve Penney at 6:14 of the third period.

MC women rout Cooke County; Chaps take on South Plains next

From Staff Reports

ARLINGTON — The Midland College women's tennis team defeated Cooke County in a 7-2 dual match here Saturday to run their overall record to 6-2.

MC coach Joe Williams feels like Cooke County will be one of the Chaps major threats in regional tennis action later this spring.

Kim Gidley, the Chaps' No. 2 player, went down with a knee injury during a doubles match against Cooke County. Williams said he didn't know the extent of the injury, but it was the same knee that she injured badly about this same time last spring. She left Arlington for Abilene Saturday to see a doctor.

The MC women will face Southwest Missouri here today to end its road trip, but there won't be any time to relax since they host South Plains in a WJCAC match at Midland College Tuesday.

The top-rated Midland College men's tennis team and the MC women's team will make their first Tall City appearance of the season Tuesday when the Chaparrals host conference-foe South Plains College at 2 p.m. on the MC courts.

Both squads made their Western Junior Athletic Conference debuts last week by shutting out Odessa College by identical 9-0 scores The men are just back from a grueling two-week stint in California and a three-day competition in Arlington and are ready to stand up to their high ranking.

"It's been a tough schedule, but we need that type of competition to prepare for the rest of the conference matches and the regional tournaments," MC coach Joe Williams said.

The Chap doubles team of Brad Bailey and John McCauley are still the top-rated doubles team in the nation.

Following are the results with MC players listed first:

Midland College 7, Cooke County 2

Singles: Helen Lebeller def. Smantha Gough, 6-4, 7-5; Kim Gidley def. Judith Hosie, 6-2, 6-1; Charissa Pruim def. Betty Chaves, 6-4, 6-3; Sarah Swan def. Helen Mansam, 6-0, 6-2; Rachel Hostutler def. Lissa Rocha, 1-6, 6-3, 6-0; Jane Howe lost to Ase Anderson, 1-6, 6-3, 6-3.

Doubles: Lebeller-Swan def. Chaves-Hosie, 6-0, 7-5; Gidley-Hostutler defaulted to Ryan-Gough, 4-6, 5-5 default; Pruim-Howe def. Mansam-Rocha, 7-5, 7-6.

Iowa's Davis wins third wrestling title

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Iowa's Barry Davis, a two-time champion who was redshirted last year en route to an Olympic medal, wrapped up his third title and was one of two Hawkeye individual winners crowned Saturday at the NCAA wrestling finals.

Davis, a 126-pounder, was joined by 158-pound teammate Marty Kistler as individual champions.

Other champs were Ricky Bonomo of Bloomsburg at 118, Jim Jordan of Wisconsin at 134, Iowa State's Joe Gibbons at 142, Eddie Urbano of Arizona State at 150, and Chris Edmond of Tennessee at 167 — the first NCAA champion in that school's history.

Also, Oklahoma's Melvin Douglas at 177 and the Sooners' Dan Chaid, who upset No. 1 seed Duane Goldman of Iowa at 190, and Temple's Bill Hyman at heavyweight.

Iowa also wrapped up its eighth straight title — and ninth in 10 years — with 145¾ points. The Hawkeyes were followed by Oklahoma with 98½, Iowa State with 70 and Oklahoma State with 56.

Davis, with a 42-1 record this year the all-time winningest wrestler in Iowa's storied history, decisioned Michigan's Joe McFarland, 8-4, in a match that featured the top two seeds at 126.

Davis won individual titles at 118 in 1982 and 126 in 1983.

"This is the best one — the best one ever," Davis said. "It's the last one, and my last match, since I'm a senior."

Kistler eeked out a 4-3 decision over Penn State's Greg Elinsky to win the 158 championship.

Kistler, wearing a "Mr. Nice Guy" T-shirt, had been dogged by controversy following two close preliminary matches which were questioned by other coaches, and for refusing comment to an interviewer following one match.

"I really am a nice guy," Kistler insisted. "The press was unfair. There wasn't one good thing said about Iowa."

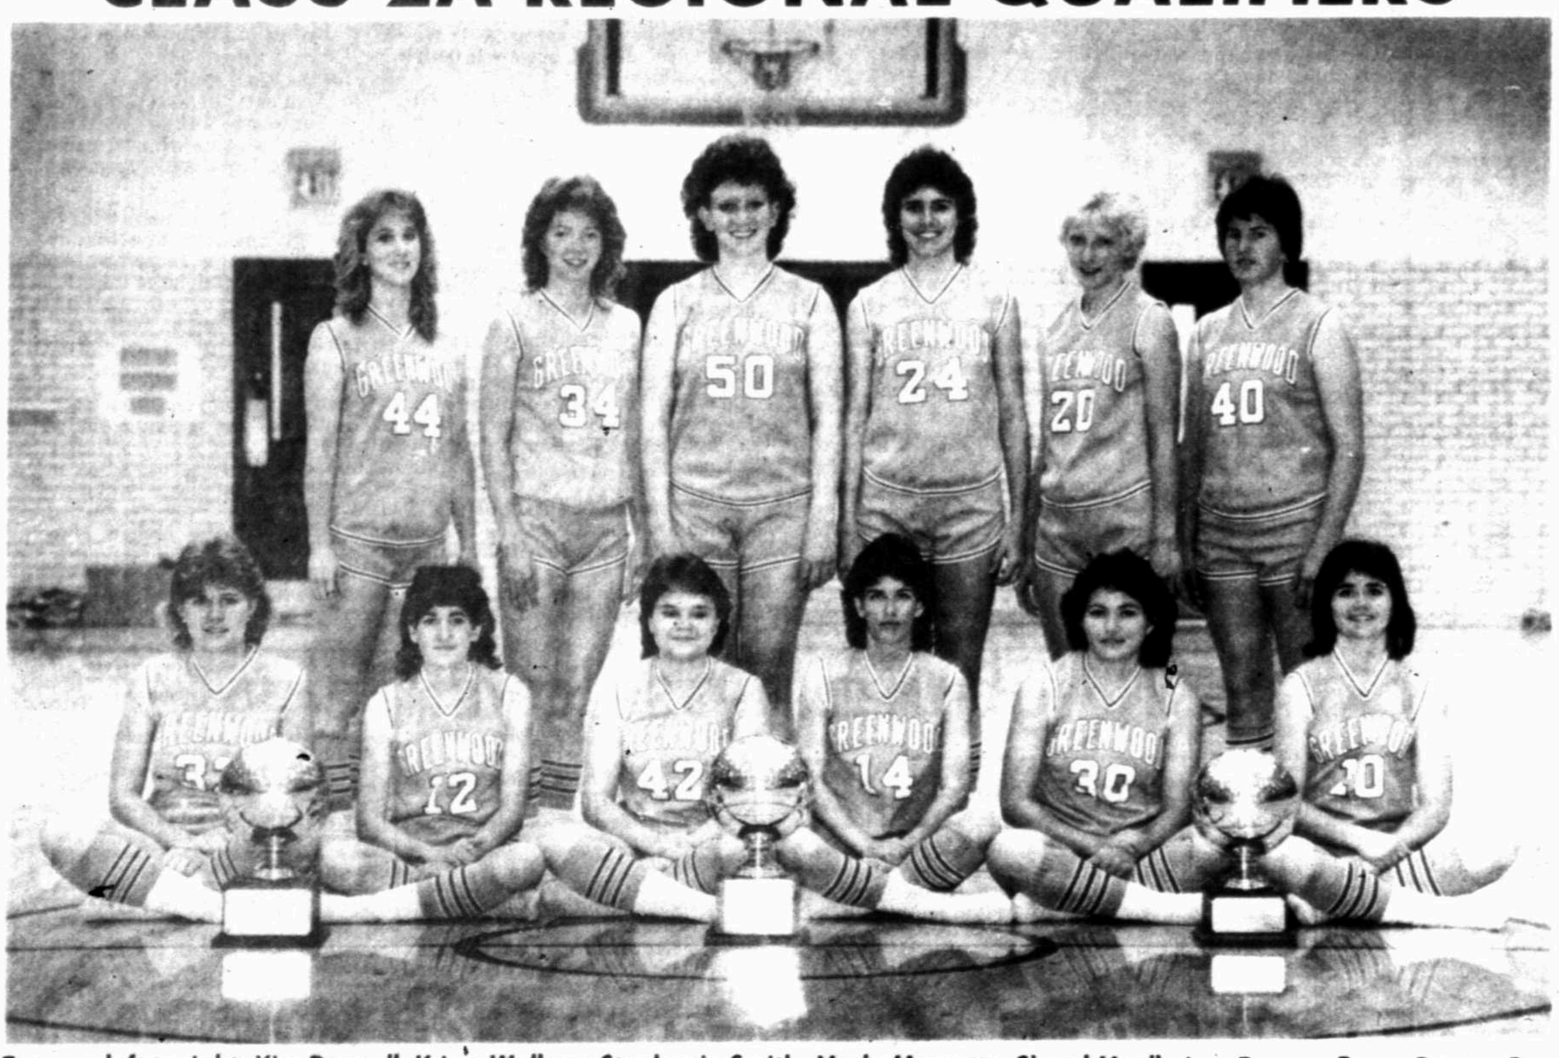

Tennessee's Edmond, ranked fifth at 167, became the first Volunteer to win a national title when he bested Hoftra's Pete Capone, the No. 3 seed, 14-10.

Edmond defeated John Monaco of Montclair State, the Division III champion who had upset top-seed Kevin Jackson of Louisiana State, en route to the finals. Capone decisioned No. 2 seed Lindley Kistler of Iowa in the semis.

Tisdale eats up ISU; Louisiana Tech rolls

Oklahoma's Darryl Kennedy (30) waits for a pass from a teammate as Illinois State's Michael McKenney reaches over his back in the Sooner's 75-69 victory.

Malone, Sooners to meet

Midwest Regional

Associated Press

TULSA, Okla. — Oklahoma center Wayman Tisdale used his left-handed jump shot to near perfection, scoring 29 points as the No. 4 Sooners held off Illinois State 75-69 in the second round of the NCAA Midwest Regional basketball tournament Saturday.

The 6-foot-9 Tisdale hit 14 of 16 shots from the field and grabbed eight rebounds for Oklahoma, the Big Eight champion which improved to 30-5. The Sooners, top-seeded in the Midwest, shot 66 percent from the floor and outrebounded Illinois State 30-22.

Oklahoma advances to the Midwest Regional semifinals in Dallas next Thursday to take on No. 8 Louisiana Tech, a 79-67 victor over Ohio State in an earlier second-round game.

Oklahoma appeared ready to take charge of the contest at Oral Roberts University's Mabee Center three times, but each time the Redbirds of the Missouri Valley Conference battled back into contention.

Tisdale sparked a run of 12 unanswered Sooner points that took them from a 7-6 deficit to an 18-7 advantage midway through the first half.

But the Redbirds bounced back with a 16-7 flurry of their own to trail 25-23 with 6:47 left before intermission and the teams traded buckets until halftime.

With Tisdale muscling in short-range jumpers in spite of a tenacious defense, Oklahoma built its lead back to 47-37 early in the second half. But with forward Lou Stefanovic and center Bill Braksick providing the fuel, the Redbirds climbed back to within 57-54 with 7:43 left. Tisdale collected 12 of 14 Sooner points in that stretch.

With yet another 12-4 run, Oklahoma surged back to a 69-58 lead with 2:15 left and coasted to the victory over the Redbirds, who ended the season 22-8.

Tisdale hit five of six from the field to lead the Sooners to 63 percent shooting from the field in the first half. Oklahoma improved to 69 percent in the second half, hitting 18 of 26 field goal tries.

Darryl Kennedy added 16 points and eight rebounds for Oklahoma, while Anthony Bowie and Tim McCalister had 12 apiece.

Stefanovic had 21 points, Ricky Johnson added 14, Brad Duncan had 11 and Michael McKenny had 10 for the Redbirds.

Louisiana Tech 79, Ohio State 67

Karl Malone scored 27 points and grabbed 14 rebounds as No. 8 Louisiana Tech downed Ohio State in a NCAA Midwest regional second-round playoff game.

Ohio State of the Big Ten ends the season with a 20-10 record.

Louisiana Tech held a 37-28 lead at the beginning of the second half when Malone, a 6-foot-9 junior forward, scored nine straight points to give the Bulldogs a 46-30 lead at 16:31.

The Bulldogs took it from there, building a 51-32 lead at 14:48 on a hook shot by 6-10 senior center Willie Simmons.

Ohio State rallied in the final six minutes, stealing the ball and forcing Bulldog turnovers. The Buckeyes were able to pull within eight, 69-61, on a jump shot by senior guard Troy Taylor at 2:31. But a layup by guard Adam Frank and a dunk by Simmons assured the Bulldogs of the victory.

Sophomore forward Dennis Hopson led the Buckeyes with 20 points and grabbed nine rebounds. Taylor added 18 points for Ohio State.

Wayne Smith, a 6-4 junior guard, scored 11 points for the Bulldogs and Simmons had 10.

Ohio State grabbed its only lead of the game, 16-14, at 10:05 of the first half when guard Ronnie Stokes sank two free throws.

Louisiana Tech regained the lead 24-18 at 7:10 as Malone poured in six straight. The Buckeyes had prevented Malone from scoring to that point.

St. John's nips Arkansas, 68-65; Hall, Kentucky move past UNLV

West

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton was philosophical about what he and Razorback fans felt were some questionable officiating calls in Saturday's 68-65 loss to St. John's in the second round of the NCAA West Regional.

The win sends St. Johsn into the West semifinal game with Kentucky, a 64-61 wnner over Nevada-Las Vegas, next week.

"The officials don't beat you, you beat yourself or the other team beats you," said Sutton, who walked behind the Arkansas bench several times to converse with Brigham Young Coach Ladell Andersen, who was sitting nearby.

Sutton was assessed a technical foul early in the game and that seemed to set the tone for his general mood throughout the contest. The technical came with 13:23 left in the first half and Chris Mullin coverted both free throws to give St. John's a 14-7 lead. Arkansas was never able to catch up.

"I called time out; they should have given us the timeout," Sutton said of the sequence that took place as his team was at the other end of the floor. "Evidently the official didn't see it. I stepped outside the (coaching) box. He assessed it. We might have bumped, but it was nothing intentional."

While Sutton was trying to call the timeout, Arkansas turned the ball over and St. John's scored before the timeout was finally granted.

Sutton also was angered by several calls, in particular a defensive play under the basket on which the officials called a foul against Arkansas but which a replay clearly indicated was a blocked shot.

Sutton explained that when he was upset by calls during the regular season, he would walk behind his bench and voice his complaints to the Arkansas radio announcer, who was not in that location during the tournament.

Kentucky 64, UNLV 61

When Kentucky Coach Joe B. Hall lost four out of his first five games this season, he had to keep himself from packing his bags. Now, there's talk of going home to Lexington, Ky., for the Final Four.

The Wildcats, behind 23 points from forward Kenny Walker, including the game-winner, upset ninth-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas 64-61.

Kentucky, 18-12 and tied for third in the Southeastern Conference, owned the poorest record of any NCAA tournament at-large team one year after having lost in the Final Four to Georgetown. This year, Hall's 1-4 start was the worst start at the school since 1926.

"I had to hold myself from packing my bags and getting out of town," Hall said.

The victory — Kentucky's 50th in NCAA tournament play — was especially sweet to Hall, who was carried from the floor by his jubilant players.

"We never doubted for a minute we belonged in this tournament, and the critics who said we shouldn't be gave us some added incentive," Hall said.

Two victories in Denver would send Kentucky home to play host to the tournament semifinals and final in Lexington, and Hall didn't have to be told.

Master coaches to meet head on in UTEP-N.C. State NCAA play

By CHRIS JENKINS
Copley News Service

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Of the many congratulatory letters Jim Valvano received after North Carolina State won the NCAA basketball championship, one carried the most weight.

"Your effort in the tournament this year (1983) and that of Don Haskins in 1966," the letter read, "are the two finest coaching jobs I have ever seen."

Signed, John Wooden.

Well, then, lookee here. The two coaches who received such high praise from Wooden, the UCLA legend who made a routine of winning NCAA tournaments, are paired against each other Sunday in the second round of the West Sub-Regionals.

Haskins, who coached what 19 years ago was called Texas Western to an upset title victory over Kentucky, reached the second round with the University of Texas at El Paso's 79-75 defeat of Tulsa at "The Pit." Valvano's Wolfpack , meanwhile, played mediocre basketball but still took a 56-55 victory over Nevada-Reno.

Valvano is a pup compared to the 53-year-old Haskins, but he's been to enough of these national tournaments to know that "nobody has ever won the NCAA championship after losing the first-round game," as Valvano jokingly put it. But funny things happen in round one.

In the case of UTEP, representing the Western Athletic Conference as its regular-season champion, it was a matter of sinking a record 39 free throws and still not assuring itself of victory until the last two went through.

Having beaten Tulsa's traditionally tough press all afternoon, the Miners suddenly forgot how and let their six-point lead slip to 77-71 in a matter of 17 seconds. Only 10 seconds remained in the game when a travelling call turned the ball back over to Tulsa.

The Hurricanes had set up a play to All-America guard Steve Harris, who already had 31 points, but David Moss instead drove across the lane and lifted Tulsa's last shot. Feitl grabbed the rebound, was fouled and hit both free throws with three seconds left.

Tulsa coach Nolan Richardson could've used a break. Admittedly, his mind was back home in Tulsa with his 13-year-old daughter, Yvonne, a victim of leukemia. Only when doctors assured Richardson that his daughter could be cured did he even make the trip to Albuquerque.

"There are a lot more important things in life," Richardson said. "One of them is home right now. That's what makes me go around."

There was some small consolation in defeat, however. Richardson played for Haskins at Texas Western, graduating in 1963. "If I had to lose," he said, "I might as well lose to the guy who showed me what I know."

N.C. State, on the other hand, took charge of Nevada-Reno midway through the first half and left the rest to power forward Lorenzo Charles. Charles, who as a sophomore scored the last-second basket to beat Houston in the '83 title game, had 22 points and 12 rebounds against Nevada-Reno.

Irish stall backfires; Auburn nips Jays

Southeast Regional

Associated Press

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Kenny Smith's basket with three seconds remaining after a North Carolina recovery helped the seventh-ranked Tar Heels score a 60-58 victory Saturday over Notre Dame in second-round play of the NCAA Southeast Regional basketball tournament.

The Irish had been in a stall more than a minute when star freshman David Rivers lost the ball and Curtis Hunter picked it up and passed to Smith as he broke downcourt.

There was confusion on both sides as to how the ball got loose. Smith said he saw Rivers bounce it off his leg, and Rivers said the ball was tipped by a Tar Heel player.

Notre Dame opted for taking the last shot after going into the stall.

Smith, who scored 12 points in the game, then deflected the inbounds toss to spoil Notre Dame's last hope of tying the contest.

Brad Daugherty scored 18 points, high for the game to lead the Tar Heels, while Rivers scored 15 for Notre Dame.

North Carolina will meet Auburn, a 66-64 upset winner over Kansas, in the next round of the Southeast Regional tournament.

The Irish battled back from a six-point deficit to tie at 56 on a pair of free throws by Donald Royal, but Daugherty returned to the lineup with four fouls and North Carolina regained the lead on his two free throws.

Rivers tied the game again at 58 with two minutes left, but Royal missed a free throw seconds later.

The first half ended tied at 35 after the lead changed hands twice in the closing minute.

Buzz Peterson, who replaced injured guard Steve Hale in the starting lineup, put the Tar Heels in the lead 33-32, on a field goal with 58 seconds left, but Jim Dolan of tghelrish countered with a basket seconds later before Smith tied it up with a field goal.

The Tar Heels controlled the lead most of the half, paced by 14 points from Daugherty, before a field goal by Joseph Price gave the Irish a 28-27 lead at 4:26.

North Carolina opened the game with six straight points, including four by Dave Popson. Ken Barlow put the Irish on the scoreboard more than three minutes into the game.

The Tar Heels twice gave up seven-point leads in the half.

Auburn 66, Kansas 64

Frank Ford scored 23 points and Chuck Person added 21 as the two Auburn players took control late in the second half and helped their team edge Kansas 66-64 Saturday in the NCAA Southeast Regional basketball tournament.

Ford gave Auburn the lead for good on a basket with just under three minutes remaining in the game. The Tigers then pulled away by seven on two baskets by Person, their leading scorer for the year.

Kansas, which finished the year at 26-8, made it close again on two baskets by Calvin Thompson, pulling them to within one point, 65-64, with six seconds remaining. But Person hit a free throw to give Auburn its final margin and continue the tenure at Auburn of Coach Sonny Smith, who has already announced he will leave the school at the end of the season. Auburn is 22-11.

Kansas roared back after Auburn had taken a six-point lead, 40-34, with just under 13 minutes remaining in the game.

The Jayhawks, who had been hampered by their second-leading scorer Danny Manning being forced to the bench in the first half because of foul trouble, rallied behind behind two Auburn turnovers and two baskets by Thompson to take the lead with 10:42 remaining in the game, 41-40.

The two teams then traded leads before Ford and Person opened Auburn's lead for the final time.

Person also had to sit out parts of both halves after he picked up three fouls in the first half and his fourth foul with 15 minutes remaining in the game.

Ford hit six straight points midway thourgh the first period when Auburn opened its biggest first-half lead, 21-16.

Thompson, who finished with 21 points, then matched Ford's feat with six points of his own to put Kansas in the lead with 9:08 to play.

Auburn moved back out front with 5:42 remaining on a basket by Ford and held a 30-28 lead at halftime.

SHERIFF'S NOTICE OF SALE
THE STATE OF TEXAS
COUNTY OF MIDLAND

WHEREAS by virtue of Writ of Execution issued out of the County at Law No. 4 Court of Bexar County, Texas, on the 10th day of October 1984, in Cause No. 152087, where Central Distributing Company was Plaintiff and Jimmy D. Shaw d/b/a American Carpet & Tile was Defendant, on a judgment rendered in said Court against Defendant and in favor of the said Plaintiff, for the sum of $1,604.41 DOLLARS, with interest thereon at the rate of 10 per cent annum, from date of judgment, together with all costs of suit; I did on the 25th day of February, 1985, at 3:45 o'clock P.M., levy upon the following described lots, tracts and parcels of land situated in Midland County, Texas, as the property of Jimmy D. Shaw to-wit:

.94 ACRES. Being all of the South 205 feet of Lots 23 & 24 in Block 2 of Westview addition, an addition to the City of Midland, Midland County, Texas, according to Plat recorded in Volume 338 page 9 of the Deed Records. Warranty deed Volume 738 page 170.

and on the 2nd day of April, 1985, being the first Tuesday of said month, between the hours of 10 o'clock A.M. and 4 o'clock P.M. on said day, at the courthouse door of said County, and I will offer for sale and sell at public auction, for cash to the highest bidder, all the right, title and interest of Jimmy D. Shaw in and to said above described property.

The Auction will begin at 10:00 A.M.

Witness my hand this the 25th day of February, 1985.

Gary Painter Sheriff,
Midland County, Texas
By J.A. Stevens, Sgt Deputy

THE STATE OF TEXAS
TO: THE UNKNOWN HEIRS OF GLORIA MALDONADO

You are hereby commanded to appear and answer before the 238th Judicial District Court in Midland, Midland County, Texas at or before 10:00 A.M. on the first Monday at the expirations of forty two (42) days from the date of issuance hereof, being at or before 10:00 A.M. on Monday, the twenty-second day of April, 1985, then and there to answer the petition of Miles Homes in Cause No. 8-34,547, styled Miles Homes vs. Diego Maldonado and the Unknown Heirs of Gloria Maldonado, in which Miles Homes is the Plaintiff and Diego Maldonado and the Unknown Heirs of Gloria Maldonado are Defendants. The said petition filed February 27, 1985, discloses that the nature of said suit is as follows:

On or about November 29, 1977, Defendant, Diego Maldonado and now his deceased wife, Gloria Maldonado, executed a Materialman's Lien Contract, a Materialman's Lien Note, and Deed of Trust concerning certain improvements to be made by Plaintiff to-wit:

The construction of a house on real property described in Volume 159, page 477, of the Deed Records of Midland County as two acres out of a five acre tract in the Northeast one-quarter of Section 15, Block 39, Township 2 South, T&P Railway Company Survey, Midland, Midland County, Texas. Said Materialman's Lien Note is now in default and Plaintiff is seeking foreclosure of the Deed of Trust.

If this citation is not served within ninety (90) days after date of its issuance, it shall be returned unserved.

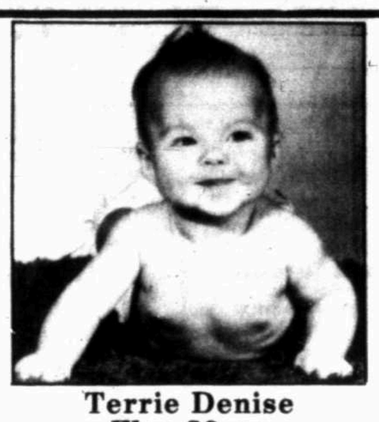

ISSUED AND GIVEN UNDER MY HAND AND THE SEAL OF SAID COURT, on this the 5th day of March, 1985, at Midland, Midland County, Texas.

Vivian Wood
Clerk of the District Court
Midland, County, Texas
By: Angie Welch, Deputy

Sleep 15 Minutes Later...
*And We'll Give You The Bed!!

Town Plaza's convenient location takes the "hurry" out of your morning. Turn the alarm off and snuggle in for precious extra moments. Then leisurely enjoy your coffee on your own private lushly landscaped patio. As a Town Plaza homeowner, you're not miles out on the loop, but only a few minutes from downtown. A spacious one or two bedroom townhome, luxuriously redecorated and at a convenient location can be yours for as little as $310.00 per month!

The pride of ownership instead of the hassle of renting? Isn't it time for you to consider it?

*And if you buy before April 15th, we'd love to give you a new queen size bed!!

A HEALTHY PIZZA PIE

TEXT BY DAVID LEE FORREST

In recent years, nutrition awareness has become widespread. At young ages, many Americans are able to recite the four food groups — meat, dairy, breads, and fruits and vegetables.

"I think it's something that's evolved," said Patricia Grillos, food service director for Midland Independent School District. "People have become much more aware of good nutrition."

And today's nutritious meals aren't necessarily the the stereotypes of yesterday — a plate of spinach, liver and cottage cheese.

Pizza, for example, "is very nutritious," said Miriam Curry, a nutrition consultant with Associated Milk Producers Inc. in Midland.

"One-quarter slice of a 14-inch combination pizza contains, of the percentages based on the eight leader nutrients: 28 percent of the protein, 19 percent of the vitamin A, 20 percent of the vitamin C, 25 percent of the thiamine, 29 percent of the riboflavin, 18 percent of the niacin, 34 percent of the calcium and 16 percent of the iron of the Recommended Daily Allowance for adults," she said.

Variations of the percentages vary according to brands of pizza, she added, but the average combination pizza contains necessary nutrients.

In addition to its percentages of nutrients, however, "it also contains 18 percent of the daily caloric requirement," and because it is also high in fat content and sodium.

Most nutritional recommendations are geared for the average healthy person, Mrs. Curry added. People on restrictive diets for special health reasons, such as s low-sodium or low-calorie, need individual evaluation.

The most important aspect of nutrition, she said, is to include many different foods.

"We encourage a wide variety of foods because no two foods have the exact same nutrients, even those foods which are nutritious.

The MISD food service conducts educational programs on good nutrition for Midland students, she said, which begin by teaching first graders about the four basic food groups.

An informational exhibit will be displayed throughout March, proclaimed Nutrition month by Mayor Thane Akins in conjunction with the institution's national campaign. The display, prepared by the National Dairy Council headquartered, incorporates the latest research information about calcium compiled at the end of 1984.

Though nutrition is not a subject foreign to most Americans in this day and age, it is something often ignored in today's fast-paced lifestyle. The food groups are nothing new. "Almost anybody can rattle them off," said Kelli Burkett, clinical dietitian with Midland Memorial Hospital, "but they don't always take time to follow them."

"We hope to encourage consumers to go back to the basics," said Donna R. Watson, president of the 50,000-member ADA.

This information on the four basic food groups provided by the National Dairy Counsil is based ondaily nutritional recommedations made by the Food and Nutritional Board of the National Academy of Sciences' National Research Council.

DIARY GROUP

While diary products are best known for calcium, they are also important sources of riboflavin (vitamin B2) and protein.

Teen-agers, pregnant and lactating women have the greatest need for the calcium in dairy products; the RDA for them is four servings a day.

The average child should have three servings a day and the typical adult needs two servings a day.

These recommendations may soon be changing, however, to encourage greater calcium intake, particularly among older women.

"Recent research in calcium and its effect on osteoporosis leads many researchers to believe that when the new RDAs are issued they will increase for adult women, especially postmenopausal women," said Mrs. Curry, "All evidence leads to that conclusion."

Please see NUTRITION, Page 2F

NUTRITION——

One serving from the dairy group, or the calcium equivalent, can consist of:
— 1 cup milk, or
— 1 cup yogurt, or
— 1½ slices (1½ ounces) cheddar cheese, or — 1 cup pudding, or
— 1¾ cups ice cream, or
— 2 cups cottage cheese, or

Note: One serving of cheese should be counted as either a portion from the dairy group or the meat group, but not both simultaneously.

MEAT GROUP

Meat is the most important source of protein but it also provides iron, niacin and thiamin (vitamin B1). Other sources of protein include beans, nuts, eggs and dairy products.

Pregnant women have the highest need for protein from the meat group. The RDA during pregnancy is three servings a day. The RDA for other persons is two daily servings.

One serving from the meat group, or the protein equivalent, can consist of:
— 2 ounces cooked, lean meat, poultry or fish, or
— 2 eggs, or
— 2 slices (2 ounces) cheddar cheese, or — ½ cup cottage cheese, or — 1 cup dried beans or peas, or
— 4 tablespoons peanut butter.

Note: One portion of cheese should be counted as either a serving from the dairy group or the meat group, but not both simultaneously.

FRUIT, VEGETABLE GROUP

Fruits and vegetables are the best sources for vitamins C and A.

Most Americans should have four servings from the fruit and vegetable group daily.

Dark green, leafy or orange vegetables and fruit are recommended three or four times a week for their vitamin A content. A daily serving of citrus fruit is also suggested to help provide vitamin C.

One serving from the fruit and vegetable group can consist of:
— ½ cup of cooked fruit or vegetable, or — ½ cup of fruit or vegetable juice, or — 1 cup of raw fruit or vegetable, or — 1 commonly served protion of a fruit or vegetable, such as a medium-sized apple or banana.

BREAD, GRAIN GROUP

Bread and other grain products, including rice, cereal and pasta, provide carbohydrates, iron, niacin and thiamin (vitamin B1).

The RDA of bread and grain products for most persons is four servings a day.

One serving from the bread and grain group (preferably whole grain, fortified or enriched) can consist of:
— 1 slice bread, or
— 1 cup ready-to-eat cereal, or — ½ cup cooked cereal, pasta or grits.

Cheese named for dairy owner

Monterey Jack cheese was named after a California entrepreneur, David Jacks, who owned 14 dairy farms. He put his name on cheese produced from his farms to differentiate it from competing brands.

Disease linked to clove cigs

Hearst News Service

The latest teenage fad of smoking kreteks, or clove cigarettes, could have harmful effects. At least one death and several reports of lung inflammation have been linked to the aromatic cigarettes.

Kreteks, an Indonesian concoction of 60 percent tobacco and a mixture of cloves, are popular with teens across the country.

Clove cigarettes have been around since 1968, but sales didn't take off until three years ago, according to Hugh Kassar, president of Kretek Imports in California, the nation's largest distributor. New York City importer George Georgiopulo reports that sales of the two leading brands — Jakarta and Djarum — have jumped 40 percent in the past year alone.

Though billed as a herbal low-tobacco substitute for regular cigarettes, kreteks actually contain 60 percent tobacco and at least as much tar and nicotine as regular cigarettes. They also contain eugenol, a natural anesthetic found in cloves. Although eugenol has long been used by dentists to relieve pain, no one knows what happens when it is burned.

According to an article in Time Magazine, researchers suspect eugenol — or some byproduct created when it is burned — immobilizes infection-fighting cells, allowing viruses and bacteria already present in the lungs to run amok. The other possibilities, says the article, are that eugenol or another ingredient has a direct toxic effect or that it triggers an acute allergic reaction.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

One of Midland's most avid bridge players, Jerry Chapman, recently won the prestigious Life Master's in Duplicate Bridge at the Bermuda Regional Tournament.

Leonora (Mrs. Jack) Slusher was Jerry's partner for the Swiss Team when Jerry received her final gold point necessary for the award. Others on the team were Bobbie (Mrs. John) Weideman of Midland, Lena Nichols of Odessa and Ann Carb of Fort Worth. All of Jerry's other gold points were won with Betty (Mrs. Carroll) Reeves of Midland as her partner. Betty and Jerry teamed up to win the Master's Event in a Midland bridge tournament last year.

Accompanying Jerry on the Bermuda trip to cheer her on were her husband, pioneer West Texas oilman Ford Chapman, and longtime friends and former Midlanders, retired Phillips Petroleum vice president Jimmie Smith and his wife, Eleanor, of Houston. Other Midlanders at the tournament were Mary (Mrs. Ralph) Hammond, Beulah (Mrs. C. Ed) Prichard, Peg and Al Buehler, Jane and Bob Myers, Bonnie and Wayne Roye, Brooksie and Joe Salmon and Marie and D.E. Morris.

In a recent visit with Jerry, she told me of her longtime fascination with bridge. As a girl, she learned auction bridge from her grandmother in Broken Arrow, Okla. Later when she and Ford moved to Pecos she took contract bridge lessons. But it wasn't until sometime after the couple came to Midland that Jerry was introduced to Duplicate by Louina (Mrs. Joe) Smith at Katy (Mrs. V.V.) McGrew's club, and she has been playing for the past 19 years.

TANNED AND RESTED, Paula and Jack Beshears and their children, Holly and Brad, have returned from a fun Spring Break trip to the Bahamas. Staying in the charming Sheraton British Colonial Hotel in Nassau, they reported a thoroughly relaxing stay, which included beaching, sightseeing, shopping and the great seafood. They had a splendid view of the ocean from their hotel room and enjoyed watching the cruise ships dock.

A high point of their trip was a visit to the nearby uninhabited Rose Island, where they enjoyed a picnic lunch and snorkeling. In Nassau, they were fascinated by a tour of Fort Charlotte, which was built in 1787 to defend the island from Napoleon but was never used. The cannons were only fired during our Bicentennial.

Their hotel also has an interesting history. Originally built in 1899, it burned down in 1922 and was completely rebuilt the next year. The James Bond movie, "Never Say Never Again," was filmed on its premises, and the Beshears family has watched the film with great interest since their return.

From the "It's a Small World Department:" While shopping on Nassau's Bay Street, they encontered Midlanders Susie and Gary Burnett, Donna and Ted Ferguson and Polly and Ferrell Davis, who were staying on Paradise Island with their families.

ALTHOUGH I'VE HEARD of many causes for celebration, none strikes me as quite so novel as the party to celebrate the rebuilt kitchen sink. It seems D.A. Plumlee's kitchen plumbing went on the blink. After waiting a month or so for her handyman son to fix it and refusing to cook in the meantime, she and a friend decided to tackle the job with silicone glue and PVC pipe. Viola! Their efforts were successful. With running water again, D.A. felt a celebration was called for, so she invited a group of close friends to her home for a "hen party."

Frozen strawberry daiquiris, as well as Irish cream coffee and chocolate macaroon coffee, were served with a variety of delicious "munchies."

The guest list included LaMoyne (Mrs. Sam) Bass, Mary Frances (Mrs. Jim) Beverley, Rita Buckley, Mary Lou Cassidy, Ruth Cole, Cherry Jones, Trudie (Mrs. Glen) Thomason, Dottie (Mrs. Jack) Fox, Bebe Fisher, Sally (Mrs. Martin) Mogford, Alice Moxey, Gloria Stephenson, Nancy (Mrs. Billy) Cook, Charlotte (Mrs. Neal) Larson, Mae (Mrs. Ken) Dawson and Douthea (Mrs. Bill) Shaner.

Although Douthea could not attend, she sent a pretty floral centerpiece, accented with balloons, and a note that read: "Have a great party! If you talk about me, make it outrageous."

BECKY EAVES, daughter of Pat and Willie Eaves, recently returned from a memorable three-week trip to Egypt. Traveling with a gospel group, the Singing Deweys from Nashville, Tenn., she was privileged to perform with the family on their tour, which included 14 services in a ten-day period. Over 10,000 people atended their first service, with the rest of their audiences ranging from 500 to 2,000.

The group traveled from Cairo to many smaller towns and villages by train, learning much about the Egyptian culture by living among the people and sharing meals with them.

In Assuit, they particularly enjoyed their visit to the Lillian Trasher Orphanage, which was founded by an American woman and is celebrating its 75th year. They were honored to have the governor and chief of police attend several of their services in Assuit and were further gratified that while they were there the government chose to reopen a church which it had previously closed down.

Other highpoints of their trip were a visit to the Pyramids, a camel ride and a two-day stopover in Athens, Greece, en route home. But Becky says the trip's true highlight for her was touching the lives of so many people, and particularly children, with the gospel message through their services and song.

Portraits of the future bride and bridegroom in one photograph may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

Photos should be black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Quality reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

Sprouting interests not all alfalfa, mung beans

BY ELVIN MCDONALD

I was writing on this yesterday when the March "Flower and Garden" magazine arrived, demanding my undivided attention. An article on sprout gardening really hit the spot as that had been my subject all along.

No pun, but sprouts have grown on me. Some folks miss out on a lot of fun and the possibility of improved health by dismissing sprouts as having something to do with the counter culture. Maybe a little of that prejudice once kept me away.

Sprouts, it turns out, are living food, vegetables vital to health and a sense of well-being. Sprouts let us be involved every day in the miracles of planting seeds, without needing greenhouses or fields to accommodate the maturing seedlings.

The benefits of sprouts in salads, sandwiches, soups, homemade whole grain breads and stir-fry cooking are well known. They can also be eaten out of hand, a pick-me-up that will not let you down.

Less known is that some individuals live by a sprout-centered diet, consuming six cups a day and more. There are lots of gardeners and farmers who can grow that quantity of vegetable matter outdoors all or a part of the year. A very few have greenhouses or other controlled environments to afford all-season production. But only in sprouts do we find a produceable crop accessible to just about every living human — everyday of the year. Almost no light or space is required and little or no cash outlay for equipment.

Sprouts aren't all mung beans and alfalfa either. I have before me a chart listing the who-what-why-when-wheres of 39 kinds you can put to work empowering your life any and every day: always something to look forward to, even the several-times-daily rinsing with water becomes a welcome ritual accompanied by feelings of serenity.

For raising my consciousness about sprout gardening I have Jeff Breakey to thank, the originator of a six-times-yearly "Sproutletter." I promise you'll be glad if you send Jeff $2 for a sample copy, to Box 62, Ashland, Ore. 97520.

The 8½x14 "Complete Sprouting Chart," mailed flat with alfalfa seeds to get you started, or rather sprouted, is $2 handling charge from Elvin McDonald Reader Service, 225 E. 57 St., New York, N.Y. 10022.

Another productive way to escape winter drearies is to do every bit of gardening possible indoors. Place orders. Write out labels. Draw plans. Pot, repot, topdress, divide, air-layer.

When a plant is brought to the kitchen or bath for a trim and rinse is also when I most often detect mealybug, spider-mite, whitefly, brown scale or aphid. Bugs also have a way of showing up when you offer to share a plant with a visitor; even then I am thankful for it's the undetected ones that cause harm.

You have to judge for your area, but as we move toward spring, the longer days, hopefully more of them sunny, with gradually increasing temperatures push plants into activity. More water may be needed and leafy types such as ficus and dracaena will yellow and shed more heavily than necessary if they don't have ample nitrogen when the call to active growth is sensed. The time-honored treatment for this is a top-dressing of well-rotted cow manure.

Manure tea can also be used: soak for several days a few cups of the dried product in a 2-gal. pail of water, then dilute and apply the color of weak tea. This is especially good for any plant left to grow year after year in the same pot of soil, things that may not need transplanting until they nearly break the pot: clivia, amaryllis, crinum, any large indoor tree or shrub.

Now is also a time when bugs hatch out with similar suddenness. In the reader survey I have been conducting they are the single most persistent problem for indoor gardeners. (I'll gladly send you a survey, in return for a long SASE wth with "R.S." written on the back flap and addressed to me at 225 E. 57 St., New York City 10022.)

For house plant bugs I am back to basics, no scary chemicals. One teaspoon Ivory Liquid in a quart-size mister filled with water is excellent against spider-mites and the other insects I mentioned. Dip cotton swabs in denatured alcohol and literally wipe out entrenchments of mealybugs or other scales.

Before the thick of a new gardening season is an ideal time to once and for all come to terms with plants that have not done well. Take each in hand; make decisions, cuttings, repot or consign to the compost pile — but take some action. There is instant gratification in this and pleasure in the promise of a better garden on the way.

Whether beautiful or funny, rugs becoming floor art

Associated Press

When was the last time a rug made you laugh?

For most people, the answer would be "never." But those who have seen the "For the Floor" exhibition at the American Craft Museum in New York might come up with a different reply.

The variety of funny, beautiful, serious, colorful and conceptually interesting rugs created by 48 international craftsmen in this show is likely to cause stronger-than-usual reactions to floor coverings.

After its run in New York is over this spring, the exhibition will circulate to 10 American cities for two years, according to Paul Smith, director of the museum. Except for its first stop in Tacoma, Wash., a definitive list of cities has not yet been completed, he added.

Aside from their visual power, another difference between handmade and mass-produced rugs which surfaced at the show is just how much trouble some people are willing to go to for art.

Take Carolyn S. Bowler, for example. Ms. Bowler, of Moscow, Idaho, made the wool felting for her black and white rug, which comes with 10 brightly colored felt balls to roll about and play with on the rug or to use as pillows while lounging. She dyed the balls herself. She also raised and sheared the sheep that furnished the wool. The rug's black and white pattern was inspired by the view from her window of grazing sheep, she said.

Gloria Crouse of Olympia, Wash., invested three months of full-time effort to complete her rug. It is made with four different techniques. Weaving, hooking, an application of paint to some of the surface, and applique were employed to create the variety of surface textures which together make the rug a kind of landscape in fiber.

Commercial rug designs usually emphasize repetitive patterns which are easily duplicated in the manufacturing process. In handmade rugs, variety is the rule. An artist may incorporate a number of themes in a rug. The rug may be woven and hooked and have painted images, each method from a different tradition. A design source might be a Navajo blanket, but the colors selected could be the pastels associated with an oriental kilim.

These choices are merged into a completed work through the vision of the artist. It is this originality which makes for visually exciting work as onlookers discover for themselves the many themes brought together by the artist.

While a major goal of the exhibition is to give pleasure to those who see the work, another purpose is to correct a neglect of the floor in fiber art recently, said Smith. He said handmade paper, wearable art and wall hangings — all different aspects of fiber art — have been illustrated in exhibitions recently, while the floor has been forgotten. That's why one requirement for works in this exhibition was that they had to be primarily for use on the floor.

BACK TO RATTAN

Rattan is a popular natural fiber. Its use began in Europe in the days of the British Empire when the English brought it home from India. It is solid in color with natural dark markings, stronger than bamboo and can be securely fastened like wood. Its tough outer coat, which is impermeable to weather, is a distinctive quality that rattan shares with bamboo. As a result, it can be used outdoors. Rattan cannot take paint. Since nothing penetrates it, it can only be enameled. Some furniture companies use hardwood frames that are wrapped with rattan peel. Rattan can be bent under steam and pressure and elegantly curved furniture can be created.

We know you'll be pleased with results of decorating if you use our services at WINDOW DECOR, 30 West Industrial Loop, 685-0875. Marriages 'serial'

By ERMA BOMBECK

When psychologists and therapists speculated on the gloomy future of marriage, they always figured it would be a time when couples stopped saying, "I do."

That hasn't been the case at all. More couples than ever are saying, "I do." But they're saying it often.

The drip-dry wedding dress is a reality. Better or for worse is a comparison of Wife No. 1 and Wife No. 2. The symbol of a first anniversary is no longer paper ... it's a milestone.

Fifty percent of marriages today will end in divorce. Of that number 60 percent will remarry within five years. About ¾ of these will go on to marry for a third and even a fourth time. They're called Serial Marriages and their numbers will make a big difference in society.

If you can stand any more Future Shock, here's what you can expect.

In the year 2,000, the ruling class will be lawyers. They will drive around in big cars, live in mansions, and have kidneys shaped like swimming pools. Many of them will enter politics. One will be elected King.

Some enterprising entrepreneur will come out with a videocassette on how to get your own divorce. It will be choreographed with Prince singing in the background. It can be rented, or if you're someone who is in and out of the marital state, you may find it cheaper to buy one.

Open House for parents will have to be held on three nights to accommodate double and triple sets. The Parent-Teacher Association will become one of the largest and richest organizations in the country on sheer numbers alone. They will eventually buy CBS and Dan Rather will be putty in their hands.

The logistics of so many children who are offspring of so many unions will have to be resolved by computers. In addition to blood tests before a marriage, names will have to be run through a computer to make sure you are not marrying someone to whom you are related through divorce.

A more efficient way for "singles" to meet new mates will have to be devised. In California, at present, several dating services are being used. One is a Tail Dater that has a bumper sticker indicating you're interested, and another is called "The Freeway Singles Club," where you flash a numbered decal in the car window if you like what you see at the traffic light.

Serial marriages will bring about a lot of social changes in the year 2,000. Greeting cards will read, "Merry Christmas to Dad and Whatshername." The IRS will have group rates. And a child of divorce will have enough Advantage Hours in the air to own the airplane.

So how will you know if you're one of the 50 percent who can make a lifetime commitment?

Easy. Before the two of you take your vows, (1) pick out a carpet together, (b) hang a picture, (c) play Monopoly.

It could save you from becoming a statistic.

New lawnmower unique design

Hearst News Service

Ever since the 18th century, when gardeners traded the scythe and hook for the rotary lawn mower, there has been constant improvement of the basic turf-trimming appliance.

Following the reel mower — still claimed to be the best appliance by many gardeners — there were the power models, gas or electric, most of them with rotary action motors.

Then, from England, there was the amazing floating-action mower. In between and along the way, there have been thousands of variations and modifications of each of these basic models.

One such innovation — called the Tennessee mower — is causing quite a stir. Although it has to be seen to be believed, here's a nutshell description.

For openers, the Tennessee mower is made in Yakima, Wash. — not Tennessee. It is a reel-type, hand-push mower that weighs in at 36 pounds. The width of cut is 16 inches.

At first glance, the most notable feature of this mower is its unusual configuration. The machine is, quite frankly, peculiar looking — appearing more like a weird torture appliance.

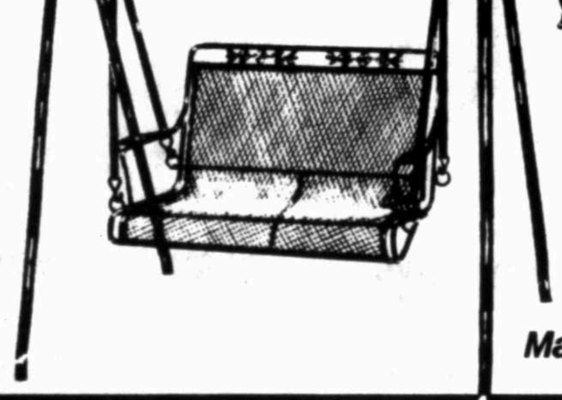

The most notable cosmetic difference in this mower over conventional reel mowers is that it has no wheels. Instead, the mower rolls on a series of spike-like fingers, mounted forward of the blade assembly, and on a conventional rear roller.

Although it's easy to assume that the spikes serve some kind of thatching or coring function, they do not. The manufacturer says the rolling finger bar allows the lawn to be clipped to a taller stand of grass without leaving unsightly wheel tracks. And because the motion of the rolling finger bar puts the grass in an upright position, rather than mashing it down (as a rotary mower will do), the blades cut through the leaf, rather than the stem. Another plus is grass that is slightly wet can be easily mowed with the Tennessee machine.

As for cutting height adjustment — an important consideration for seasonal changes in turf growth — the mower can be easily adjusted to cut from ¼-inch to 2½-inches. Due to the fact that there are no side wheels, close trimming is possible without the problem of wheel tracks.

The machine is rust-proofed, and the five-blade cutting mechanism has a self-sharpening feature. The mower is priced at $160.

Lullaby record soothes, relaxes

By STEVE WILSTEIN

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The surest test of a collection of lullabies is its ability to put children to sleep.

On that score, and many others, a recent release titled "Nursery Songs & Lullabies" lives up to its promise.

Take it from a parent of a typically rambunctious 4-year-old, this collection of traditional children's songs by silky-voiced soprano Francine Lancaster and her husband, violinist-arranger James Shallenberger, really works.

The collection also has had startling success on the business side since it was released by Ms. Lancaster's new company in October. In the first two months, some 100,000 copies were sold in 11 states, she said. Over 4,000 had sold just in the San Francisco Bay area by Christmas.

Parents have written to thank her for the album, and one grandmother wrote to say she cried through the whole collection because it brought back memories of her own childhood.

The music, in Dolby stereo, has a full range of orchestral instruments and sound effects such as a lamb gently bleating.

The collection of 17th- to 19th-century songs features nursery rhymes on one side and lullabies on the flip side.

Featured on the lullabies side, in order, are "Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star," "The Fairyship," "Little Boy Blue," "Hush, Little Baby," "Rockabye Baby," "All the Pretty Little Horses," "All Through the Night," "Sleep, Baby, Sleep," "Brahms' Lullaby," and "When At Night I Go To Sleep."

After 20 minutes of that, nearly any weary toddler will nod off.

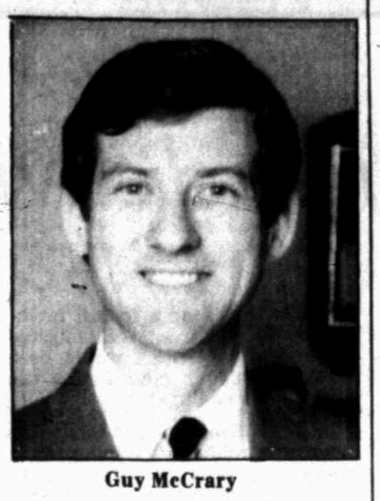

Ms. Lancaster, 34, has her own 4-year-old boy. She debuted with the San Francisco Opera in "Electra" last fall, and says she doesn't mind at all that her singing puts people to sleep.

"Certainly not for the lullabies," she said in an recent interview. "I think it's wonderful. I even fall asleep listening to the songs. I find them very consoling."

She said she and her husband and partner, Anya Horvath, an artist who designed the cover, wanted to present song collections that would "help parents share an experience with their children and also have a respite."

Their next album, expected this spring, is a collection of songs about animals.

Woman's Club to host McCrary

Guy McCrary

Guy McCrary of Bridgewater Marketing Consultants will be guest speaker at the meeting of the Woman's Club, scheduled for 11:30 a.m. Thursday in the Woman's Club building in Hogan Park.

McCrary, who is president of the Midland Centennial Plaza Association, will show slides of the completed Plaza and discuss its progress.

The Woman's Wednesday Club will host the social hour for members and guests.

Hammett 40th wedding anniversary celebrated

Mr. and Mrs. John P. Hammett of Midland celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary Saturday with a surprise party in their home. Hosts at the gathering were Bill and Nancy Burnett, Sara Hammett and David Hammett.

Hammett and the former Joyce Sidney Self were married March 11, 1945 in Dallas. They have three children, David Paul Hammett of Fort Lauderdale, Fla.; Nancy Hammett Burnett of Amarillo; and Sara Frances Hammett of Lubbock, and one grandchild.

They have lived in Tulsa, Okla.; Hobbs, N.M.; San Angelo, Longview and since 1965 have lived in Midland. Hammett is a petroleum engineer with ARCO. Both are members of Santa Rita Club, volunteers of Permian Basin Petroleum Museum. Mrs. Hammett is a member of Musician's Club.

DENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Philip O. Warlick D.D.S.

PARTIAL DENTURES & BEDTIME

QUESTION: Do you advise wearing partial dentures to bed at night?

ANSWER: As a general rule, partial dentures should not be worn at night-unless your dentist advises doing so for a special reason. On the other hand, "partials" should not be left out of the mouth for any extended period (such as several days because of discomfort). Teeth remaining in the jaw can shift their position within a few days, ruining the fit of a partial denture and making it necessary to remake the denture.

Also, partials should be cleaned after each meal and special attention given to cleaning the inside of the clasps. Food residue trapped under these clasps can be harmful to the natural teeth.

DEAR ABBY

Officiating clergy need invitations, too

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: As a member of the clergy, I am asking you to print this on behalf of those of us who are asked to officiate at weddings.

I have been told that it is customary for pastors to attend both the rehearsal dinner and the reception. Others have told me that they invite the pastor only because they think they have to. I've been told by some folks that they would prefer that the pastor didn't attend the rehearsal dinner.

I am aware of the expense involved in having a wedding. I'm also aware that some folks feel awkward around clergy, so I am calling upon you, Dear Abby, to tell couples to be straightforward about their expectations.

I enjoy wedding festivities, but I would like to know in advance whether I'm invited. I am not married, and I often end up attending alone when I would have enjoyed bringing a friend.

My married clergy friends say they never know whether their wives or husbands are invited to the rehearsal dinner and wedding reception.

So, Abby, the questions many clergy would like to have answered are:

1. Do you want me to be present at the rehearsal dinner?
2. Do you want me to be present at your wedding reception?
3. May I bring my spouse or a friend?

Abby, I cannot count the number of times I am half out the door following a wedding rehearsal when the bride runs after me saying, "Aren't you staying for the dinner?" (I wasn't invited.)

Any advice you can give us would be appreciated. — CONFUSED CLERGYPERSON

DEAR CONFUSED: Let's clear up the confusion here and now. To those of you who are planning a wedding: When you ask a clergyperson to officiate, your request does not automatically include invitations to the wedding festivities. If you want to include the clergyperson — and spouse or friend — extend an invitation.

Many couples have told me that they want their clergyperson to attend the festivities, but they're afraid if they send a formal invitation the recipients will feel obligated to send a gift, which would be a financial burden considering the number of weddings they attend.

I advise them to extend the invitation by telephone. A final word to wedding planners: If you do not want the clergyperson at the wedding festivities (most do — but some do not), please tell him that he is not expected to attend.

DEAR ABBY: My daughter was going to get married, so her friends had a shower for her.

Now she's called off the wedding. What do we do with all the gifts? I'd feel foolish giving them back. — OHIO MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: Give them back anyway. Better to look foolish than piggish.

DEAR ABBY: The woman who wrote that her husband wouldn't pay for a breast reconstruction is lucky. When I told my husband I had to have a mastectomy, he said, "I won't be here when you get back." My breasts, apparently, were more important to him than I was.

I met a wonderful new guy who loves me for myself. He paid $900 out of his pocket for a custom-made prosthesis that exactly matches my "good" breast and adheres to my body with a spray-on adhesive. I can't tell you how good he makes me feel when he teases me about being his "one-winged angel" or his "rubber doll." It makes up for all the hurt and rejection and loss of that first boob. ("Boob" refers to my first husband, not my breast.)

I never miss your column, but don't use my name, OK? — COUNTRY GAL FROM OREGON

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

AT WORK

Motion made for new order of parliamentary procedure

By ADELE SCHEELE, Ph.D.

So many of us belong to professional associations and other groups, in order to make valuable contacts and develop our careers. Is there any one of us who can't remember a meeting without capitulating to Robert's Rules of Order? Even though we felt impatient, intimidated, or completely befuddled?

Yet it seems almost blasphemous to question this system. After all, it's part of our establishment, a staple of the "old boys" network. Our "rules of order," in fact, evolved from the British parliamentary system for use in Congress and state legislatures. I never thought much about where they came from until I read a brilliant monograph about it by Dr. Rachel Hare-Mustin of Harvard. Henry Robert wrote down a procedure over a 100 years ago to meet the needs of "ordinary societies" to ensure effective participation and discourage capriciousness of the chair. Since then, a lot has changed. The original intent seems more noble than its current usage, or should I say misusage.

Try reading Robert's Rules yourself (your local library should have a copy). That once very democratic procedure now becomes discriminatory in itself to new members or those not already included in the old boys network who don't buy the clipped, arcane jargon: points of order, motions, no discussions until motions. Such autocratic rule by the knowing few! Such unfair play! Such a strange culture!

This explicit ordering of discussion is a puzzle in particular to women who typically like more emotional speech and more egalitarian participation. Yet over the past two decades experiments in unstructured meetings prove they don't always work successfully either. Witness more and more women's organizations adopting old Robert's Rules right back again. The televised International Organization of Women's Conference in Houston displayed the following of the Englishman's procedures. As an organization NOW tries now to do both — incorporate Robert's Rules and still attend to members' needs in what's called "loose chairing."

There is hope. Keesey's "Modern Parliamentary Procedure," (Houghton Mifflin, 1974) only 11 years old, offers a more simplified guide. No more seconding of motions; members can just simply question frivolous or unnecessary motions. But beyond that, Keesey encourages small, harmonious groups to be informal.

Ingenuity depends on new blood, old agonies, and seeing the need for a better way. New products and higher technology we have plenty of, maybe more than we ever need or can use. But how to be together, how to work out our different opinions, how to support the group without giving up our individuality — that's still the new frontier. And the newest organizational development theories depend on cooperation and acknowledgement. And maybe that's what the latest wave of workers — women — bring as their first unique contribution to a system as old as the hills.

For right messages, send right flowers

DALLAS (AP) — If the arrangement is well selected, flowers can speak eloquently — without the sender's having to utter a word, says a floral designer and consultant to a nationwide flowers-by-phone service with headquarters in Dallas.

"Flowers have a literal language all their own that should be taken into account no matter what the occasion," says Diana McDermott. "Take the rose, for example. Red roses symbolize pure passion; dried, white roses mean death, and Lancaster roses mean all-out war."

Roses aside, there are dozens of other flowers that can send conflicting signals, adds the 800-FLOWERS consultant. "And if you don't know the hidden meaning of flowers, a mixed message could put you in the doghouse."

There are special flowers for secret affairs — such as the scarlet pimpernel; and for doomed relationships — the yellow tulip declares hopeless love. Flowers can take the place of the proverbial "Dear John" letter — the spiderwort means "esteem but not love," the scabiosa "unfortunate love" and the ice plant signifies rejection.

The language of flowers also provides a handy way to nip a dead-end relationship in the bud, Ms. McDermott says. Having chosen one lady over another, the clever rejector might send the "also-ran" a bouquet of red poppies for consolation.

Or, if it's the lady telling the gent "no dice," a crocus indicates "I am his." Thwarted lovers of either sex might retaliate with a thistle or cactus.

The astute male courting that special someone might express his first emotions of love by sending her a nosegay of purple lilacs, the flower expert points out. Jonquils, on the other hand, would indicate his desire for a return of affection, while red tulips would serve as a definitive declaration of his love. Most poignantly, the suitor can confess that he is consumed by love by sending the syrian mallow.

Why, asks Ms. McDermott, should the gentleman grope for just the right words to tell his love he finds her charming when a ranunculus says it so much more romantically?

"There's no question that we're returning to an era of romanticism," says Ms. McDermott, who designs flower arrangements for weddings. "We're seeing a steady stream of old-fashioned bridal gowns, decorating characterized by English chintz, and sophisticated urban women sporting a distinctly feminine look in fashion. Sending carefully selected flowers continues to be the ultimate expression of romance."

Choosing an arrangement that's right for a business occasion, without knowledge of a few basic guidelines, is no bed of roses, Ms. McDermott notes. Flowers for success-oriented individuals should make a "power" statement in their color and design, as well as in their hidden meanings, she explains.

In flower language, the hollyhock stands for ambition, the narcissus for egotism, sage for esteem, tulips indicate fame, the white dianthus, talent, and the sweet william is a sign of gallantry, she says.

Arthritic joints can accurately predict weather

ATLANTA (AP) — Did you ever wonder if your grandfather's knee could really tell him when it was going to rain?

According to the Arthritis Foundation, there is some medical evidence that he wasn't just pulling your leg.

It says rising humidity and falling barometric pressure can affect the fluid in the joints, causing many people with arthritis to experience increased pain just before rain or colder temperatures. When the barometer and humidity level off or reverse, the discomfort lessens.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Development of ulcers not limited to 'type A' personalities

Dear Dr. Solomon: You may have answered this question at some time, but if so, I missed it. If it is true that people with type A behavior are more likely to get heart attacks, and if they actually get one and recover, then what's to prevent them from getting another heart attack unless they change their personality? And if this is true what can they do about it? As far as I know, getting one heart attack does not prevent a person from getting another heart attack. — Anthony, Hanover, Pa.

Dear Anthony: Researchers at Mount Zion Hospital and Medical Center in San Francisco agree that type A behavior does have an effect on the possibility of recurrence of coronary heart disease, and they suggest that patients have to learn a new way of living.

One approach to changing type A behavior is through behavior modification therapy. The researcher reported that this form of treatment may reduce the risk of additional heart attacks by about 50 percent.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've heard it said that when a dog bites a man, it's not news, but when a man bites a dog, it is news. My husband has just been told that he has an ulcer, and that should be news because he's the calmest person you would ever want to meet. And everyone who knows him will tell you the same thing. How do you account for someone with such an even disposition getting an ulcer? — Mrs. A.S., Dover, Del.

Dear Mrs. S.: I'm afraid that your letter falls into the dog-bites-man category. Ulcers do not occur, as you imply, only in persons who are nervous, high-strung, up tight, etc. Almost anyone, regardless of personality, is susceptible to the development of an ulcer.

For Lila, Queens, N.Y.: The pain experienced by patients with arthritis is real. Failure to perform a task may not be because the person is unwilling to do it, but because he is unable to do it.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Research studies attitudes before, after sterilization

By SUE CROSS

BOWLING GREEN, Ohio (AP) — A follow-up study of 600 married couples questioned in 1978 about their views on having children may provide a clue to the reasoning that has produced a boom in sterilization as a birth-control method, researchers say.

"It's incredible, even in the United States ... we really don't know much about the psychological anticedents or consequences of abortion ... It's a sensitive sort of thing and it's the same thing with sterilization," says H. Theodore Groat, director of the Population and Society Research Center at Bowling Green State University.

Groat and two university colleagues, Jerry Wicks and Arthur Neal, have received $145,000 from the National Institutes of Health to question the 1,200 individuals they asked seven years ago to define their lifestyles and feelings about having children.

Groat said there have been smaller studies of attitudes toward sterilization.

"Most of the research on sterilization has been medical, biological in nature. Only recently, as sterilization has become more popular, there has been interest in its psychological effect," he said.

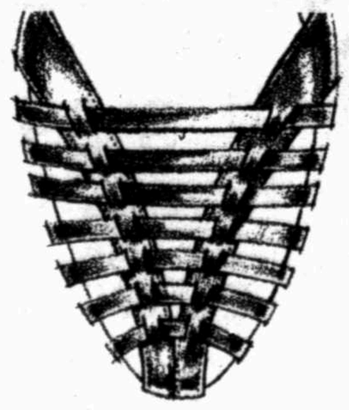

The researchers are not interested in how many couples choose sterilization — Groat said it is widely known that it is increasing in popularity — but in how they reach that decision, why they decide which partner should be sterilized, and how the choice reflects their beliefs and expectations.

Midland Reporter-Telegram

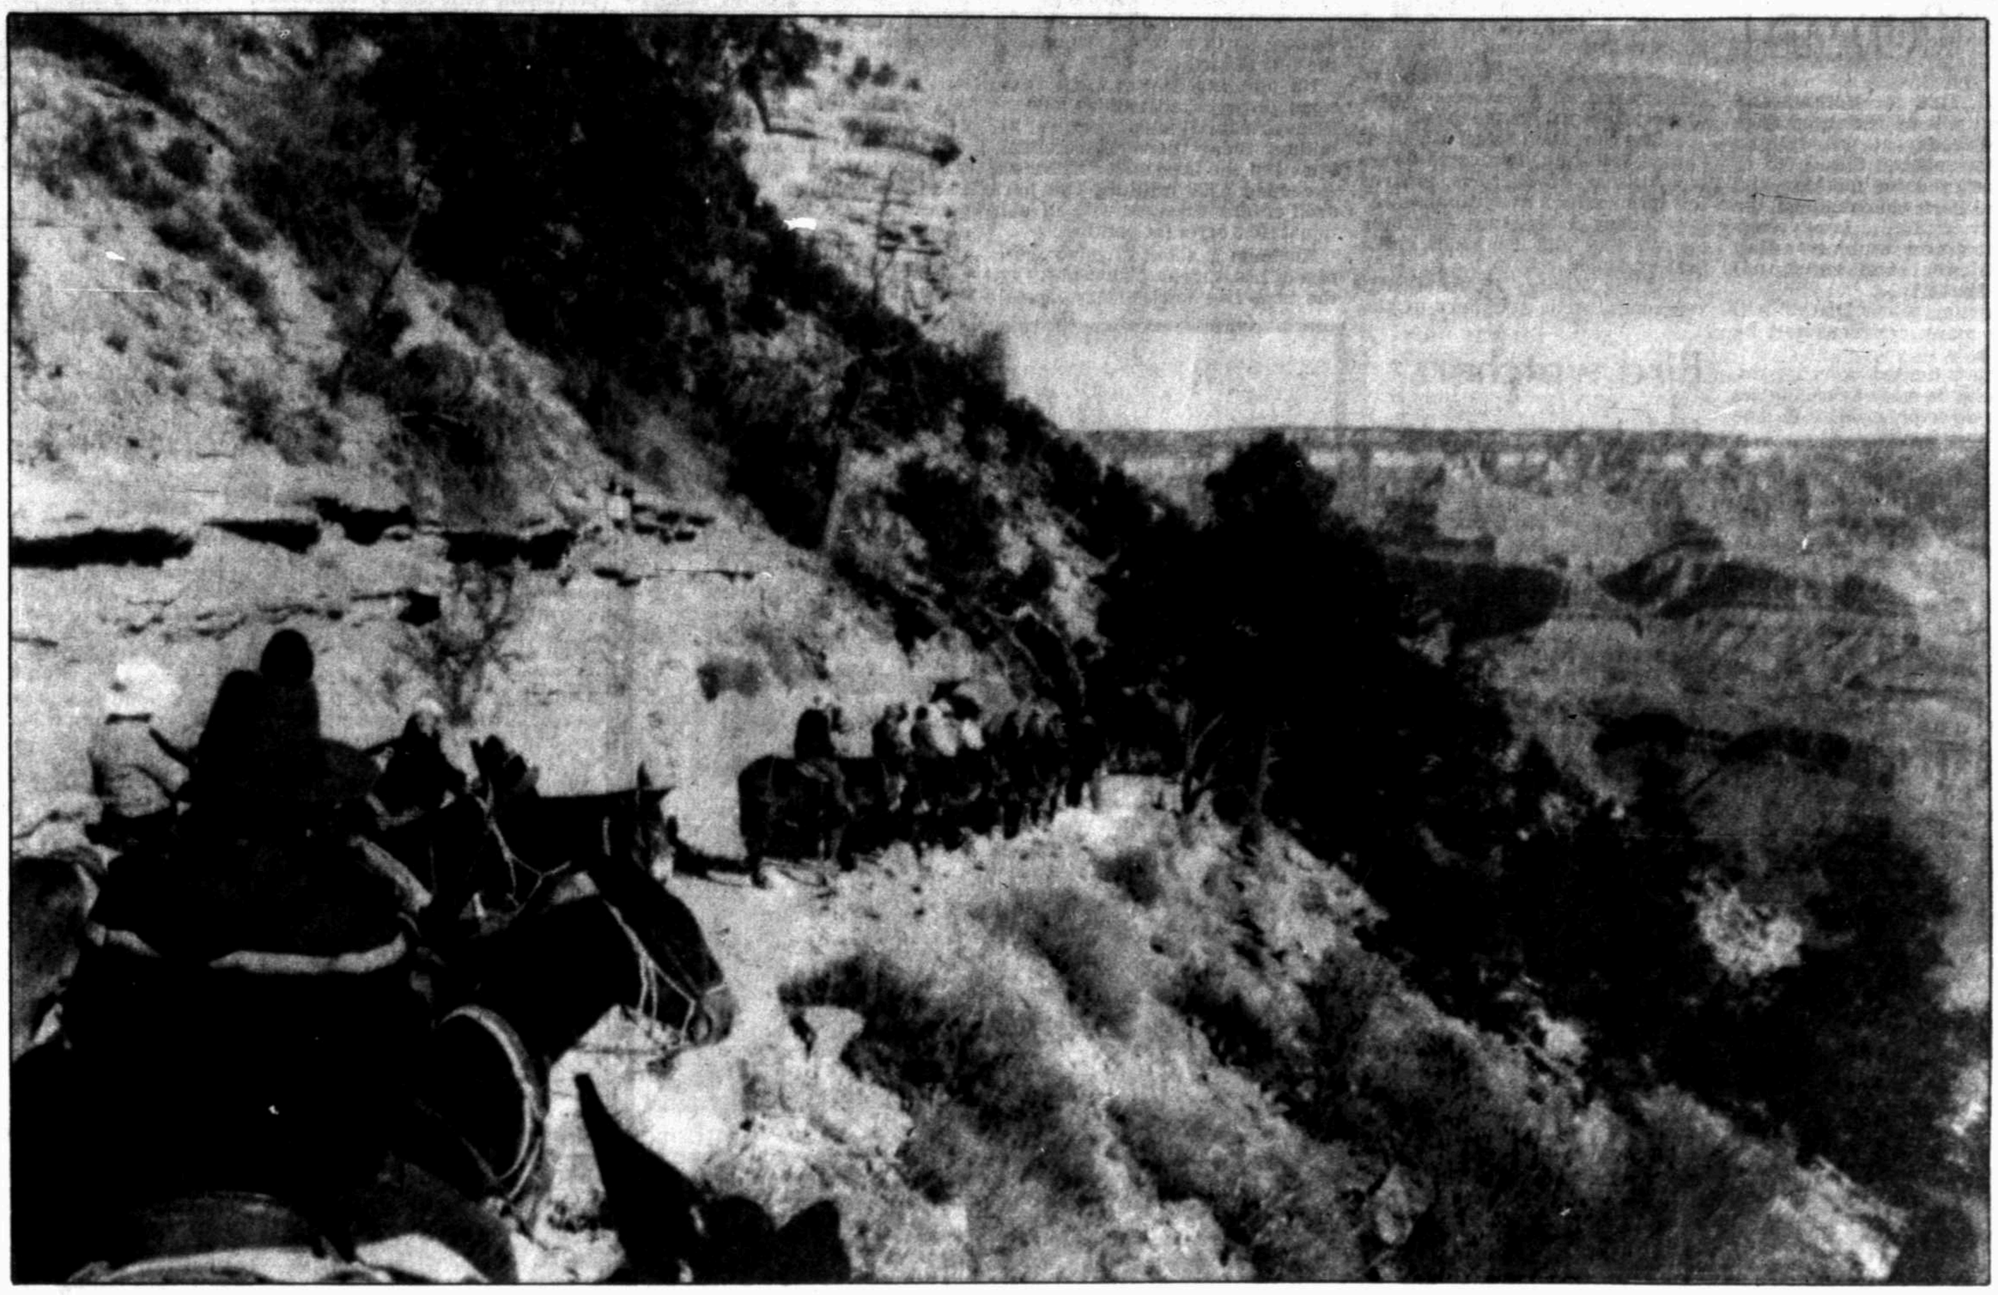

ATTENTION: TRIVIA ENTHUSIASTS

For the past few days you have been seeing questions in the MRT, and if you have been listening to A.M. 1510, KMND Radio you have heard the same questions. This is leading up to a 14 week trivia game. Each week there will be 10 questions read on A.M. 1510 KMND. Look for your official Midland Reporter-Telegram/A.M. 1510 Trivia Game entry form for the first weeks game in tomorrow's Midland Reporter-Telegram. You will also find complete rules and details about the game.

Starting tomorrow A.M. 1510 KMND Radio will read 4 questions daily. The questions will be read on the half hour between 6:00 A.M. and 6 P.M. Each of the 10 weekly questions being read at least once by 6:00 P.M. Thursday. The questions will not be read in any particular order so begin listening to AM 1510 KMND Radio tomorrow morning and write down your answers and transfer them to your official entry form. All entry forms must be completed and postmarked no later than midnight each Friday and received at the contest address by 2:00 P.M. the following Tuesday to be eligible for the 3 weekly prizes. Each week, we will award a 1st prize of $200.00. 2nd prize weekly is dinner for 2 at Anasazi Restaurant on Midland Drive next to M System. 3rd prize weekly is 2 tickets to Midland Community Theatre. At the end of the 14 week trivia game we will take all weekly 1st, 2nd and 3rd prize winners and in a drawing award the grand prize, a 4-night cruise on the Mississippi River on the Legendary Delta Queen or the Mississippi Queen including round trip air travel to New Orleans, the origin of the cruise.

Once again, for complete rules and details of this game of skill and knowledge, see tomorrow's Midland Reporter-Telegram and begin listening to AM 1510 KMND Radio for the first weeks questions.

'Carefree'

ARIZONA

By JERRY HULSE
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

CAREFREE, Ariz. — Somebody got awfully cute with Carefree.

Somebody got rich too.

Should anyone be wondering what it is like to live like a Rockefeller, set the jalopy on a course for Carefree. And bring money. Only last week Laurance Rockefeller unveiled the West's slickest new resort.

He calls it The Boulders and it is superb.

Never mind that the site was a desert wasteland once. Indeed, once upon a time Carefree, which is 20 miles outside Scottsdale, was about as inviting as Jaipur in July.

Then along came a couple of developers, Tom Darlington and K.T. Palmer. That was in the '50s and they had heard that a natural reservoir runs beneath Carefree. With an unlimited supply of water, Darlington and Palmer transformed desolation into inspiration, desert sand into gold.

Darlington and Palmer lured buyers with man-made waterfalls, a golf course, elegant homes and avenues with storybook names. Residents shop on Easy Street and live the good life on Never Mind Trail, Breathless Drive, Leisure Lane and Ho-Hum Drive. The latter, wouldn't you know, splinters into Ho and Hum streets.

One also can stroll down Primrose Path.

I said they got cute with Carefree.

For the developers the effort paid off handsomely. (The town even named its main drag for Tom Darlington.)

Others who have settled in Carefree are doing nicely on Easy Street. Artist Mary Welsh, who operates a studio displaying her own paintings and the works of nearly a dozen other Arizona artists, smiles cheerfully. "Life's been good to me on Easy Street," she says. "No complaints."

While her shop is not exactly the Louvre, it draws shoppers in search of oils, pottery and other artworks.

Next door the proprietress at an odds-and-ends shop called the Collector has on sale a reconditioned barber's chair done up in green velvet and tagged at $2,200. And in the same mall, Don Young, an ex-printer from Ohio, turns out handsome handmade clocks, including a grandfather with a German movement. Priced at $3,500, it is a treasure.

But I get ahead of myself.

Carefree is abuzz over Laurance Rockefeller's splendid new resort, The Boulders. With nearly 100 adobe-like casitas, it lies in the shadow of an immense rocky pyramid from which pours a man-made waterfall, its mists settling over swimmers paddling in a pool below.

What with the earth tones of the casitas blending with the desert, Rockefeller's newest prize appears for all the world like some Southwestern Indian village that has been saved for posterity.

It is impossible to fault The Boulders. Without argument it is the conversation piece of the season, and Arizona's most unusual new resort.

With his penchant for conservation, Laurance Rockefeller lent his name to a development that boasts miles of saguaro trees, brittle brush, ocotillo, sage, palo verdes and acacia, which in turn provide shelter to road runners, cottontails, coyotes, gila monsters, javelina, the cactus wren and vultures. Even a rattlesnake here and there.

With a $200 million purse, the developers of The Boulders created their own lakes and an 18-hole golf course whose carpet of greenery unfolds across desert sands like an oasis in North Africa.

In another year or so an extra 18 holes will make it a championship 36-hole attraction.

From the beginning, Rockefeller's associates went out of their way to spare the natural flora surrounding The Boulders. It is not the ordinary garden variety type of desert terrain. Instead, a forest of saguaro trees rises and falls with undulating grace over Carefree's breathtaking countryside.

It is the Old West with modern touches.

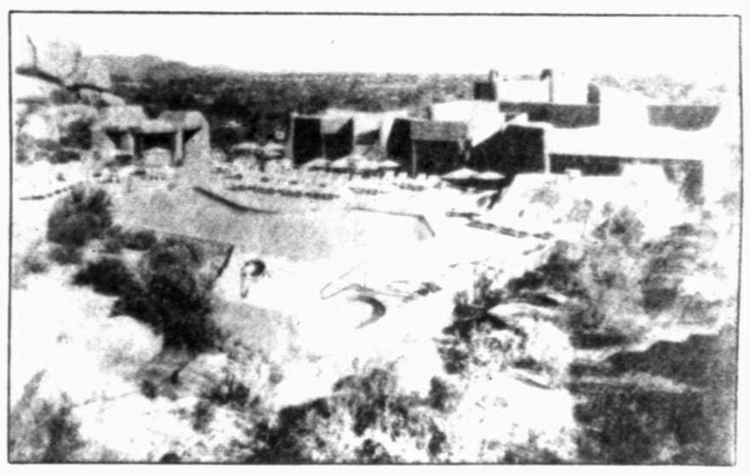

Casitas feature desert earth tones: beige carpets that match the walls and Mexican glazed tiles. And there are baths with his and her vanities, immense tubs and baskets filled with shampoos, lotions and sunscreens. Wet bars and refrigerators provide spirits, juices and soft drinks — and private patios provide choice settings for those spectacular Arizona sunsets. Later, the sky laced with stars, there is the silence of the desert and the comfort of a wood-burning fireplace.

Peace. That is what The Boulders is all about. (Rates are $220 a day for a single, $270 for a double, which includes breakfast and dinner. After April 15 prices will drop to $180-$230.)

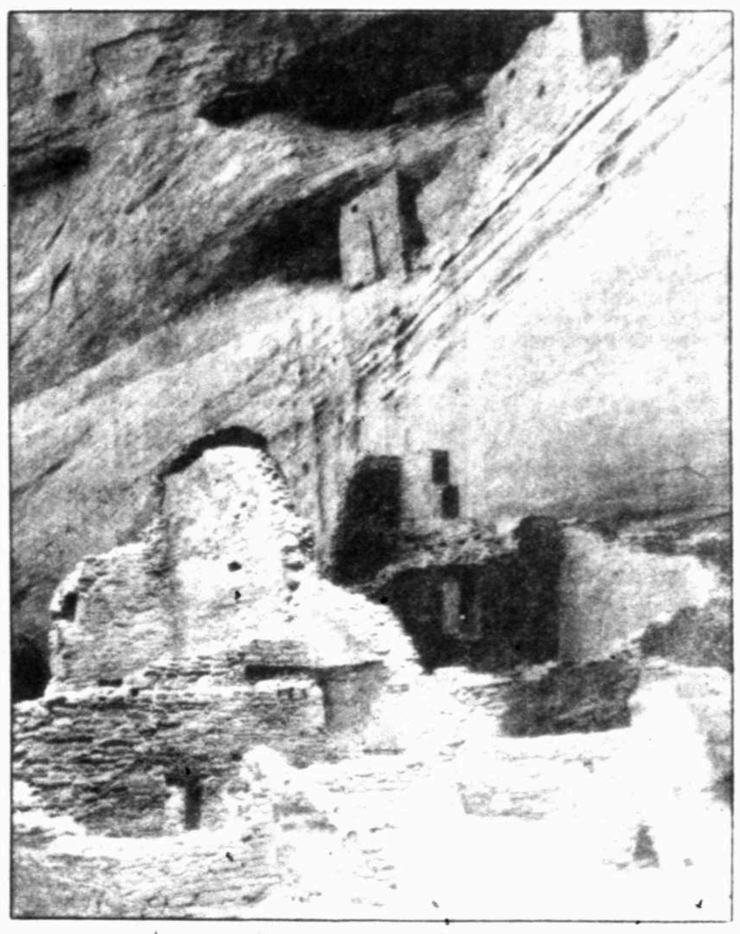

Other casitas are nearing completion and more will become condominiums priced from $200,000 to $275,000 apiece. Homes in the development will fetch up to $1 million a copy.

At The Boulders, registration formalities are dispensed before an open fireplace in the main lodge. And it is here that guests gather of an evening in the Discovery Room with its immense Indian lodge pole supporting the ceiling. More than $1 million in artifacts from Rockefeller's private collection grace the walls.

In Carefree, matrons from the East snuggle in mink when the sun melts into twilight. The McDowell Mountains form the backdrop. Spilling before them are those waves of saguaro and sage. Well-heeled residents tool around town in limousines. Dick Van Dyke lived in Carefree once. Hugh Downs still does.

Rockresort's newest luxury property is The Boulders, which was designed to harmonize with the surrounding Sonoran desert.

Indian ruins nestle against the walls of Canyon de Chelly in northeastern Arizona.

Locals tell how Carefree is "where the sun marks time." To impress visitors, a giant sundial casts its shadow dead center of town.

It goes without saying that this is no tank town. Residents amuse themselves counting their money. So do tourists. Some visitors arrive in private airplanes, settling down on a 4,100-foot runway that is paved and lighted. Carefree is growing. The way things are going, the town could get carried away and become another Scottsdale. That would be a shame.

What would they call it then? Careless, maybe?

Disneyland: Classic American institution for 30 years

By MORRIS D. ROSENBERG
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Disneyland opened at Anaheim, Calif., on July 17, 1955, and now the "Magic Kingdom" is preparing to celebrate its 30th year and welcome its 250 millionth visitor.

The year-long jubilee began in January and will showcase a variety of special events. Among them:

— The New Main Street Electrical Parade, featuring illuminated scenes from Disney productions, returns this spring after a two-year absence.

— Galaxy, a high-tech entertainment facility with live bands, opens in the summer.

— "The Mickey Mouse Club" weekends, with members of the original Mouseketeers performing live, are scheduled for October and November.

— 400,000 prizes will be awarded to visitors during the 12-month period — primarily admission tickets, toys and watches, but including an estimated 400 new cars.

— A 30-hour round-the-clock anniversary party is being planned for the July 17 birthdate.

On opening day in 1955, there were 18 major attractions and the Disney financial investment was $17 million; today there are 55 attractions and the investment figure has exceeded $300 million. The park itself covers 76.6 acres, with an additional 107.3 acres for parking.

Anaheim is about 27 miles southeast of Los Angeles. Thirty years ago the city's five hotels and two motels had a total of 87 rooms and there were 34 restaurants; now it boasts 15,000 rooms in more than 170 hotels and motels, and more than 450 restaurants.

For residents of the eastern half of the country, however, Walt Disney World near Orlando, Fla., provides a closer and more varied outdoor theme-park experience than its older — and much smaller — sibling on the West Coast. There are obvious similarities, of course. But besides the familiar theme lands (like Fantasyland and Adventureland) and rides, Disney World at Lake Buena Vista offers unique pleasures, including boating and swimming.

Now marking its 14th year and already set to greet its 200 millionth guest this summer, Disney World has announced new attractions, an expansion of hotel and restaurant facilities, and increased capacity for visitors at Future World and World Showcase in the 2-year-old Epcot Center. Developments include:

— Mickey's Street Party, a musical procession with Disney characters, will be parading down Main Street U.S.A. throughout spring and summer.

— World Showcase, housing the international pavilions centered around a 40-acre lagoon in Epcot Center, presents a daily series of folk festivals with salutes to Canada this month, France in March, Japan in April, Mexico in May and a "Star-Spangled Summer" featuring American music. Singers, dancers, artists and craftsmen dramatize each nation's culture.

— Morocco has opened the latest World Showcase pavilion, which recreates a desert marketplace, palace and fortress.

For more information on both parks: Disneyland Information, 1313 Harbor Blvd., Anaheim, Calif. 92803, (714) 999-4565; Walt Disney World Guest Information, P.O. Box 40, Lake Buena Vista, Fla. 32830, (305) 824-4321.

Bird watchers flock to resort

New York Times News Service

The Society for the Protection of Nature in Israel has joined with a resort near the Red Sea to attract bird watchers to an area that is rich in its variety of birds.

The facility in question, the Red Sea Resort, is four miles from Elath, and Elath, it seems, is at the crossroads of Europe, Africa and Asia — in the Syrian-African Rift Valley, a route followed in spring by European birds that winter in Africa.

Each year, millions of birds among 150 species, particularly such raptors as eagles, vultures and falcons, as well as storks and pelicans, fly along this route on the warm currents rising from the cliffs lining the valley. And millions of small birds are attracted to the salt ponds and fields of Kibbutz Elot. In 1977, Danish watchers recorded 315,767 common buzzards, 226,060 honey buzzards and 19,288 steppe eagles over Elath.

Three times a week guides from the Society for the Protection of Nature in Israel conduct free bird-watching tours of the beach, the salt ponds and the kibbutz. Twice a week, slide lectures are given. Spring migration runs from February through May.

Additional information and reservations are available from Ladbroke Hotels (Post Office Box 199, Parsippany, N.J. 07054; 201-428-0550 or, from outside New Jersey, 800-526-0817).

Tahiti, Bora Bora magical South Pacific paradises

By KATHERINE L. DAVIDSON
Copley News Service

"I thought I was transported into the Garden of Eden. ..." — Louis-Antoine de Bougainville

Over the years, the South Pacific has enticed adventurers and artists alike. Lush islands abounding with bright, exotic flowers and trees. Waterfalls cascading down towering peaks. The clear turquoise blue ocean metamorphosizing into a marine world of astounding beauty.

This — and more — prompted early explorers to describe Tahiti and Bora Bora in their logs as some of the most beautiful islands in the world. But the artist Paul Gauguin perhaps best depicted the enchantment of French Polynesia with his paintings of the islands and their peoples.

"The landscape with its clear warm colors dazzled me. ... Why should I hesitate to put all this gold, all this joyous sunlight on my canvas?" he wrote.

TAHITI AND BORA BORA are two of eight inhabitable islands in the chain of Society Islands. Within a few years after their discovery by Samuel Wallis in 1769, these islands had such visitors as Capt. William Bligh of Bounty notoriety and Capt. James Cook, who named the islands "the Society Islands ... because they lie contiguous to each other."

Tahiti, which covers an area of 402 square miles, is the biggest island in French Polynesia and volcanic in origin.

About half of the 140,000 inhabitants of French Polynesia live on Tahiti, which also is the location of the territory's capital, Papeete.

Papeete, with a population of about 40,000, is a port city that has been modernized in the last few years. Its harborfront is busy with copra schooners, ocean liners and yachts of every size from near and distant ports. As a result, French and Tahitian are spoken everywhere, while English is spoken in most shops and hotels.

Adding to Papeete's new look is the Vaima shopping center. Here you will discover bowls and cooking implements carved from wood native to the island, colorful batik pareos — versatile cotton "sheets" that can be tied into dresses, skirts and shorts — and lustrous black pearls from the Tuamotu lagoons.

Shops usually open at 7:30 a.m. and close at 5:30 p.m. But lunch can last from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., so plan accordingly.

RESTAURANTS IN Papeete feature a variety of cuisines, including French, Chinese, Vietnamese and Polynesian. And if you're yearning for something closer to home-style fare, Le Retro on Boulevard Pomare serves great burgers and fries. Just remember — tipping is not the custom in Tahiti.

A major source of daily activity — and picturesque scenes — is the large open-air market downtown, two blocks east of Boulevard Pomare. Here, fishermen sell their catch fresh from the sea — fish, crabs and lobsters. Women display ripe, luscious fruit such as pineapples, mangoes, breadfruit, papayas and guavas. Vendors of local handcrafts sell baskets and shell necklaces, while others sell bunches of fresh, multicolored flowers and leis.

The marketplace also serves as a gathering place for the young — and the young at heart — to discuss the day's occurrences and paru paru, or gossip. It's here one can find out the latest news and rumors of the island.

Adding to the noise and commotion of the marketplace is le truck, Tahiti's rapid transit system. Since the marketplace is the terminus, everyone sets out — and ends up — here. Luckily, the system is simple. You have a choice of only two directions in which to travel, and can catch trucks departing in opposite directions from either end of the marketplace.

WHILE THE TRUCKS are comfortably padded and clean, be forewarned — they are not quiet. Each truck is equipped with a large speaker and drivers favor continuous full volume — whether it's "Vaya Con Dios" or "Billie Jean."

On a hilltop 2,000 feet above the city noise is Le Belvedere, Tahiti's highest restaurant. Built facing the ocean, the open-air dining room presents a panoramic view of Tahiti and its long, curving coastline.

As well as boasting a spectacular view, Le Belvedere prides itself on its house specialty: Fondue Bourguignonne, or Meat Fondue. You are the cook, skewering chunks of raw meat on a fondue fork, deep-fat frying to desired doneness and then dipping into a selection of sauces. Along with the fondue is ever-present french bread, french fries and green salad made with island-grown vegetables.

Able to please the eye as well as the palate, Tahiti is home of the Gauguin Museum. Inaugurated in 1965, the museum documents the work and life of Paul Gauguin in Tahiti and the nearby Marquesa Islands. Reproductions and paintings by contemporaries of Gauguin complete the exhibition, which is open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

IN THE GARDENS around the museum are two tikis of Raivavae. These authentic tikis, which are sacred art, are said to possess mana, or power. Traditional Tahitians, whose beliefs are based on spirits who live in the sea, wind, sky, etc., have great fear of all tikis, for they represent supernatural forces in material form. Their grotesque and exaggerated lines are symbolic of a particular aspect of life such as fertility, and attached to them is a legend cursing the unlucky one who dares to move them. How much validity there is to this curse is not known, but it is said a tiki will have its revenge on the one who steals it.

However, the wood and stone tikis sold in shops will guard the homes of those who buy them, while a tiki of gold or silver is said to be a good luck charm.

A great deal can be learned about Polynesian customs and life through a visit to the Museum of Tahiti and the Islands. Open Tuesday thru Sunday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., the museum features four exposition rooms and outside displays, as well.

A 50-minute flight from Tahiti-Faaa International Airport in Papeete brings you to the Bora Bora Airport on Motu Mute. Awaiting your arrival is a vedette, or launch, which will deliver you to the main village of Vaitape in 30 minutes.

The island of Bora Bora has been chosen by royalty and movie stars for their hideaway vacations in Polynesia — and for good reason.

IN THE PLEASANT, sunny climate of this enchanted setting, relaxation-seekers can lounge on the beach, sunbathe, enjoy the view or collect shells. For those with more get-up-and-go, there are bicycling and watersports — which surely will work up a thirst for a locally brewed, schooner-distributed Hinano beer.

Snorkeling is by far the most popular watersport here, with scuba diving and offshore fishing not far behind. Because Bora Bora is surrounded by a reef, the island is encircled by a magnificent protected lagoon, providing an excellent opportunity to view the myriad underwater creatures who swim in these aquamarine waters. Green parrot fish, butterfly fish, angel fish, puffer fish and manta rays can be found swimming here, to make sea life at Bora Bora some of the most fascinating in all of Polynesia.

As Gauguin wrote, Tahiti and Bora Bora truly are dazzling — from their people to their history, from their customs to their landscape.

Polynesia, with its beauty and charm, is a dream come true for those seeking a South Pacific paradise.

Among the jagged peaks and deep valleys of the Peruvian Andes is the famed lost city of Machu Picchu, undiscovered until 1911, but now accessible to tens of thousands of tourists each year. Some of them hike along the royal road built more than 500 years ago, and their debris has accumulated. The nonprofit Earth Preservation Fund, in association with Journeys International, offers an Inca Trail Clean-Up Trek, Aug. 2 to 13, including a five-day hike to the lost city plus meetings with archeologists and conservationists, visits to Lima museums, Indian markets and Cuzco, and an overnight at Machu Picchu. Land cost is $850; air fare is $759 from Los Angeles or $459 from Miami. To join, contact the Earth Preservation Fund, Inca Trail Project, P.O. Box 7545, Ann Arbor, Mich. 48107, phone (313) 665-4407.

State receptions and dinners in France with lord mayors, diplomats and other officials will highlight a tour of France offered by the Los Angeles World Affairs Council, May 18 to June 1. Tour members, limited to 24, will be guests of the American Embassy; the Hon. Jacques Chirac, mayor of Paris and France's former prime minister, and members of the Comite d'Honneur. Receptions will be hosted in private residences and chateaux by members of the Montcalm, De Havilland and Rothschild families. The group will visit Paris, the Loire Valley, Limoges, Perigord in the Dordogne region and Bordeaux. The tour costs $4,242. For details, contact the Los Angeles World Affairs Council, 900 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 230, Los Angeles 90017, phone (213) 628-2333.

Royal Caribbean Cruise Line's Sun Viking will begin a summer schedule of eight- and 10-day Caribbean cruises out of Miami on April 13, and the line's Nordic Prince repositions to New York for seven-day cruises between New York and Bermuda, starting April 20. Sun Viking's eight-day itinerary, with Saturday departures, stops at Nassau and San Juan and spends two days at St. Thomas. The 10-day voyages, with departures Sunday and Wednesday, head for St. Thomas, Antigua, Barbados, Martinique and St. Maarten.

Theme cruises ranging from TV newscasters to chocolate nuts are in the lineup for Princess Cruises this season. NBC news correspondent Edwin Newman will lecture on a week's cruise to the Mexican Riviera March 23. Cruise prices start at $1,035 with discounts. ABC's Ted Koppel of "Nightline" will lecture aboard the Pacific Princess on a 12-day Mediterranean cruise out of Athens July 7. Sheila Cluff, fitness expert, will lead a series of Mexico cruises aboard the Island Princess. Football and fashion (the San Francisco '49ers and Mr. Blackwell) kick off summertime Alaska cruises aboard the Royal Princess on May 27. Chocolate lovers have their fill on a 10-day trans-Panama Canal cruise of the Royal Princess Oct. 26.

Prices and schedules should be confirmed with airlines, cruise lines, tour operators or travel agents.

Anne Frank's hideaway stirs tears, hope

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands — Forty years ago — in March 1945 — a young girl, probably weighing no more than 40 pounds although she was 15 years old, died. Her death was noted by very few — her mother was already dead, and her sister, and her handsome young friend, Peter.

She was a Jew, and this was Bergen-Belsen, a place of genocide as wicked as any in the world. So many millions had already died in the horror of Hitler's years that one more child meant little.

But one member of her family did survive. Her father, Otto, was liberated a few weeks later from Auschwitz by Russian troops and allowed to return to his home in Amsterdam. And there, incredibly, he found the diary of his little girl — a diary that had been discarded by Gestapo stormtroopers as they ransacked the house while arresting the Jews.

AND SO IT WAS that we all came to know Anne Frank, and she touched the world.

Most of us, I suspect, read the "Diary of Anne Frank" in high school or college, and few among us could remain unmoved by this brilliant little girl. Her optimism and humor, even at the end, were remarkable. Her eloquent writing is much advanced of her years, and her insight into life as a Jew in a country under Nazi occupation is remarkable and heartbreaking.

"The Germans," she wrote shortly before the family went into hiding. "ring at every front door to inquire if there are any Jews living in the house. If there are the whole family has got to go at once. No one is spared — old people, babies, expectant mothers, the sick — each and all join in the march of death."

It was to avoid this fate that the Franks, on July 6, 1942, moved into a secret annex to a business once owned by the family. They and their friends the Van Daans and Mr. Dussel — eight terrified Jews — lived out the next 25 months in five tiny rooms hidden behind a hinged bookcase.

But on August 4, 1944, information provided by an informer (who got $1.40 for his information) unmasked the secret hiding place and the eight were taken away. Three days before, Anne had written the final words in her diary:

"I TWIST MY HEART round again, so that the bad is on the outside and the good is on the inside and keep on trying to find a way of becoming what I would so like to be, and what I could be if there weren't any other people living in the world."

Visiting this house which sits forlornly beside the Prinsengracht Canal, is a shattering experience even today, 40 years after Anne and her family and friends were marched into stifling boxcars to begin their journey into hell.

Your first introduction to the terrors of being a Jew in German-occupied lands comes in the visitor's center, where a series of slides is flashed on a small viewing screen. They show the death marches, the rows of emaciated Jews waiting in line for the gas chambers, the glow of the crematories, and the smiling — always smiling — prison guards. Although the room is crowded, it is silent, with a sob the only sound, accompanied by the silent course of a tear. You can imagine the cries of the little children and the howls of their anguished mothers.

With that introduction you climb the same winding, narrow stairs little Anne once trod, duck through the hinged bookcase, and arrive in the Frank family room, where Mr. and Mrs. Frank and their daughter Margot slept. A tattered map of Normandy is on the wall, showing how the hopeful family traced the progress of the Allies — a progress tragically too slow to save these people.

BUT IT IS Anne's room that is so heartbreaking. Still on the walls is evidence of the dreams of a little girl. Pictures Anne tore out of magazines still cover the walls: They show Princess Margaret and Princess Elizabeth (now Queen Elizabeth II) of England as they romped on their family's sumptuous estates, and romantic shots of movie stars like Rudy Vallee and Ray Milland, Greta Garbo and Ginger Rogers. Most disturbing, perhaps, are pictures of unknown little girls playing with their puppies, or dressed for dinner, or walking hand-in-hand with one another along a long sweep of beach. Things Anne would never do.

Downtown bank boom rolling on

Fourteen locations on line

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

"It would have taken a lot of guts then to even think about opening a bank in the shadow of First National Bank — even in the same town. Its dominance was so strong and the loyalty to it so firm that Midland was almost a one bank town." That's how one Midland banker described the once dominant status of former First National Bank.

But, if First National once scared all the competition out of downtown Midland that is no longer the case. At latest count, there were 5 savings and 7 bank banks operating in greater downtown Midland, with at least two and maybe more planned for downtown openings.

Indeed, for many years downtown Midland had only two banks, First National (now RepublicBank First National Midland) and Midland National (now First City National), but it was somewhat of a lopsided affair. First National had about 70 percent of the deposits and loans, Midland National about 12 percent and the rest were divided among the other banks, according to a former First National Bank officer. "It was dominance by desire and design," he remembered. "First National did not want any competition; they wanted all the deposits and loans in town, and to get it they paid the best rates and had no service charges.."

Said Jerry King, senior vice president, marketing, for First City Bank: "It was incredible. First National had a lock on the market that some thought would never end."

BUT END IT DID. For a number of reasons, where once there were only two banks and several savings institutions downtown, there are now 14 banks located or planned for the greater downtown area. That number includes the four thrifts Briercroft, Petroplex, Home, First Bankers Trust, and City Savings.For all practical purposes, these savings institutions can now be classified as banks and viable banking competitors, in the wake of deregulation. It also includes Community Bank on the south side, ClayDesta's proposed downtown center and the coming entry of National Bank for Midland. Others represented by downtown locations include: Texas American, United, Midland American, and Texas Commerce. Only Security and Western banks are not represented by downtown locations.

What has prompted the proliferation of banks in downtown Midland?

The failure of First National must be listed as the prime factor. The end of its dominance scattered the market and competitive institutions rushed in to grab a piece of the pie.

"The pie slices are definitely thinner," says Bob Southerland, president Midland American Bank.

THAT THINNING of the market is best typified by the 1984 comparisons of RepublicBank First National deposits and loans and those of First City.

While old First National had commanded a 70 percent share of loans and deposits in the city, last year RepublicBank First National had 40.6 percent of the deposits, while First City had 25.5 percent of deposits among banks. In loans First City actually exceeded RepublicBank First National with 32 percent of the loans as compared to 30.6 percent.

Texas American Chairman, Charles Grimes, standing, and Don Platt, president, say their move to downtown Midland was based primarily on the availability of the uniquely decorated frontier facility, which was remodeled by failed First National as a branch facility, but never used.

Videos help spur sales of real estate

Practice popular in wealthy market

SHORT HILLS, N.J. (AP) — Hundreds of people walk from their BMWs, Mercedes-Benzes and Rolls-Royces into a local shopping mall each week, where one of the first things they see is Tom Skobo's television showing videotapes of million-dollar houses.

Often enough, one of them buys, Skobo says, producing a commission of $20,000 or more for his 2-year-old real estate firm, Distinctive Properties Inc.

"One woman told me she could never have gotten her husband to go to a real estate broker until she showed him the video and whetted his appetite," Skobo said.

Distinctive Properties specializes in selling houses worth $250,000 or more, and Skobo said sales had increased enough recently to justify the cost of professional-quality videos and prime shopping-mall space.

"I think that for brokers who want to compete in the high-priced real estate market, videos are going to be a necessity in the very near future," he said.

The National Associaton of Realtors, based in Washington, said only a few members were using videos to sell houses, but spokesman Bill Adkinson said the practice was catching on among those who serve the wealthier market.

Joan Knox, president of the San Fernando Valley Board of Realtors in California, said most West Coast real estate firms saw videos as "a thing of the future," with just a few companies in areas like Beverly Hills able to afford them.

Even Skobo, who credits videos with helping his firm earn hundreds of thousands of dollars since he started using them last summer, said, "If I were selling $100,000 houses I wouldn't use them."

But, he added, "because of the market I'm in, videos are worth it. It takes a little extra effort to sell a home in the affluent market."

One advantage is that he can show the videos constantly on the TV outside his shopping mall office.

The mall, which attracts upper-income shoppers with brokerage firms and stores that sell designer clothes, is particularly suited to Skobo's firm.

"I'll take out a $1,000 ad in a national magazine and I'm very lucky if I maybe get 20 calls," he said. "But on a typical day in this mall I'll have maybe 15 to 20 people stop in to look at videos of different homes.

"You wouldn't believe how many houses we've sold where people are just passing through the mall here and happen to see a video tape," he said. "They stop to look and end up buying."

To attract potential buyers, it is important that videos be made professionally, he said. "I tried making some with a little hand-held camera, but they came out terrible and actually made the house look worse than it does in real life."

Shamrock supports halt of import oil products

DALLAS (SWN) — There are two ways to kill a free market," says William H. Bricker, chairman of Diamond Shamrock Corporation, "by strangling it or flooding it." That's why Diamond Shamrock is part of a refiners' coalition seeking to halt the dumping of subsidized refined products in U.S. markets, he said.

Speaking to Wharton Business School graduates in New York City's Union League Club, Bricker, an advocate of open markets, was unapologetic in his call for government action.

"Foreign producers are selling themselves crude oil at a price below world market, and slipping it into the U.S. as heating oil and gasoline," charged Bricker. "Meanwhile, U.S. refiners must buy crude at the higher prices maintained by OPEC, and sell their products in a marketplace already depressed by excess supply," he observed.

"We are saying that OPEC can't have it both ways," declared Bricker. "Open markets work best when everyone understands the benefits, and plays by the same rules. We should use appropriate tariffs to enforce those rules, and discourage anti-competitive practices."

Bricker added that the necessary tariffs may already be on the books. He recommended that current regulations be enforced before new legislation is created and applied.

Bricker also suggested that the United States needs a national energy policy that would ensure our energy security, promote a healthy U.S. energy industry, and encourage economic development among our trading partners. "The cornerstone of our energy policy should be competition, free and fair," said Bricker.

He noted that declining oil prices, while benefiting the consumer, are creating turmoil in the energy industry. "As CEO of an oil and gas company," said Bricker, "I am not thrilled by the prospect of declining petroleum prices. If I were an idealist, I would probably be up here singing the siren's song of protectionism. But I'm a realist, and the reality is that nearly every regime on earth, including our own government, has tried and failed to control the price of energy."

There is a danger, he continued, that some protectionist policies being debated in Congress could blunt our competitive edge. "I don't want to see the oil and gas industry running neck and neck with steel and farm equipment for first place in the rust bowl," said Bricker. "That's why we must resist inappropriate taxes, subsidies and tariffs–the kind that discourage competition." We can encourage competition by continuing to deregulate the energy industry, said Bricker.

PBGC offers trip, Spanish class

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer two courses in the PBGC Building, 105 W. Illinois.

"Spanish for the traveler" will be offered from 7-9 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays, March 21-April 18. Emphasis will be developing speaking skills. Paul J. Brooks Jr. will instruct the course. Fee is $60.

"Field Trip: Modern and Pleistocene Shelf Carbonates of Belize," will be April 25-30. This 6-day trip focuses on Holocene and Pleistocene shallow marine, intertidal and supratidal carbonate depositional environments in the northern Belize shelf. It includes four days of boat and land excursions on and around Ambergris Cay and an overflight of the northern and southern clastic Beliz shelf. Drs. S.J. Mazzullo and Al Reid will lead the field trip. Fee is $1,200, which includes airfare Houston/Belize/Houston, all meals and lodging. Deadline for registration is March 22. A non-refundable deposit of $600 is due by this date.

Just singing the praises of cold soda pop

Wine is fast becoming big business in the state, with vineyards sprouting up all over West Texas and commercial wineries already in operation in Lubbock and Pecos counties.

To date, just about every publication in Texas has sung the praises of this new industry. Sonnets, songs and even an edition of Texas Monthly have been devoted to the joys and of wine sipping.

At the same time cults of newly converted "wine snobs" have suddenly found new purpose in life by taking tiny sips of wine followed by outburts of adjectivitis — "amusing, delicate, fruity."

So where are the cults and fanatics for "sodee water" the drink that really made Texas. Why no odes to Coke, Dr. Pepper or Big Red? Because looking back, life in this hot, bleak, dry land would have been near unbearable for us nonhonky-tonkers without ice cold soda op, and iced tea. And, we should not forget that. Dandy Don Meridith can sing the praises of iced tea, as for me I have appointed myself to proclaim the virtues of soda pop.

THERE WERE HUNDREDS of small, regional pop brands in Texas, but the major brands were: Coca Cola, Pepsi, RC, Grape Nehi, Big Red and Orange Crush. It saddens me, what they have done to Orange Crush, for in its beginning it not only had a distinctive flavor but also orange pulp or a pulp-like substance. It was good enough stand alone, as a competitor against all other oranges.

Perhaps if any brand could be called the national soda pop of Texas it would be Dr. Pepper, which was created in a Waco soda fountain. I have known some whose devotion to Dr. Pepper bordered on addiction. I knew a farmer who kept cases of it stacked to the ceiling in the kitchen, and always started his day with a half-case iced down in his pickup. Before it was available in Colorado, a friend from Lubbock who moved to Colorado to open a business would make periodic trips to Texas and return with a truck load of Dr. Pepper, Lone Star Beer and mesquite wood for herself and other Texas expatriates.

"It was hard enough living without Cowboy football," she informed me. "We couldn't give up all the refinements." Then there is the former owner of a West Texas radio station, well-known for his Dr. Pepper consumption — eight to ten bottles a day.

WINE MAY BE FINE for haute cuisine (fancy eatin'), but when it comes to basic eatin', people need a basic drink, and nothing is more basic that pop.

More important to a Texan than what wine fares well with pheasant under glass or lobster crepes is what brand of soda goes best with chili, tamales, beans, chicken fried steak, barbecue, menudo and burritos de tripas.

Given the uniquely greasy nature of Tex-Mex cuisine, it's only natural that Texans would have developed a natural affection for soda pop.

It takes an ice cold, "burning" beverage to wash down hot, greasy food — not something "fruity" or "amusing." Yea, man hath not invented the wine that puts down a cheeseburger with jalapenos as well as a tall Coca Cola, which, incidentally, burns better than all the other brands.

Coca Cola may have the lead today, but how many remember when RC (Royal Crown) Cola was not only the biggest and tallest, but the undisputed number one drink in West Texas. RC, not Coke, was synonymous with soda pop. My grand dad would alway slip me an extra dime with my picture show money and say: "Here's you some RC money." Friends would come by the house and hollar: "Wanna go get an RC?"

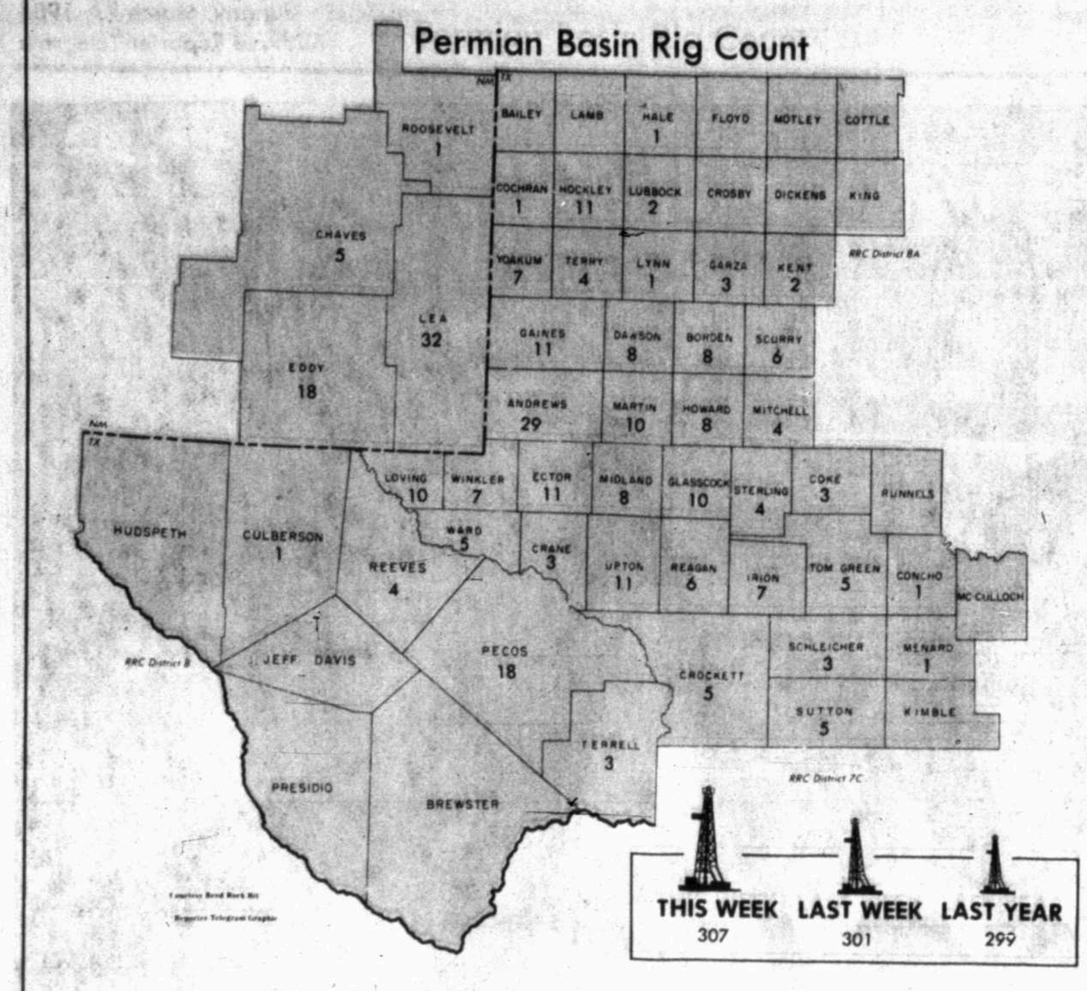

THE PREFERRED WAY to enjoy an RC was with a bag of peanuts poured into the bottle. That way you could eat peanuts and drink RC in one motion. The other preferred way was with a Moon Pie. There was nothing like hanging around the filling station on a lazy Saturday morning, drinking RC's, eating Moon Pie and listening to the big boys tell dirty jokes.

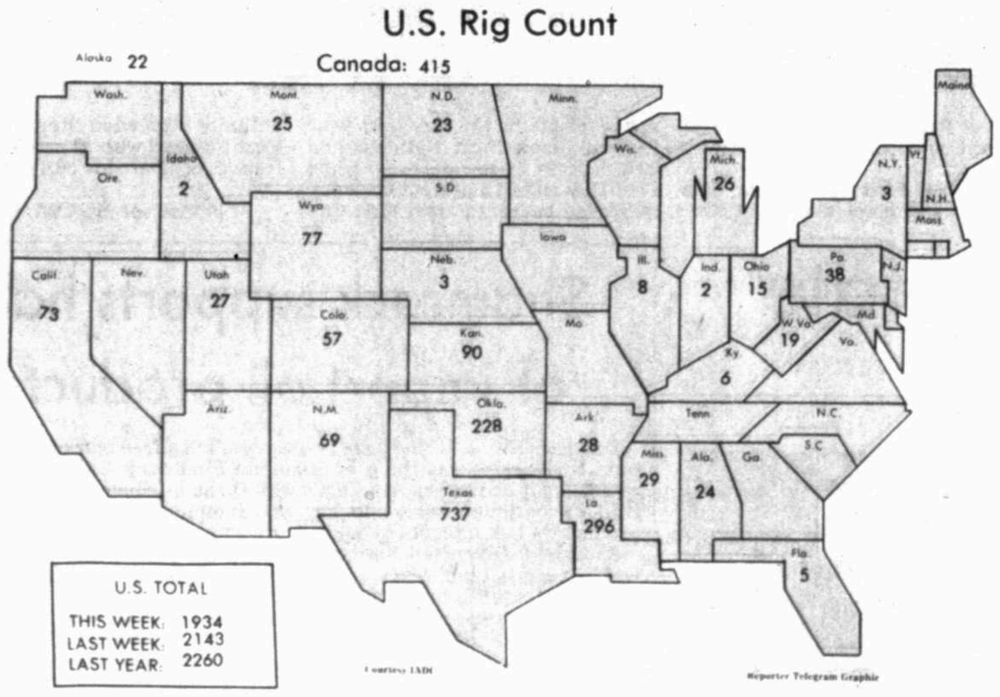

Of course these bottles of West Texas, heat stroke elixer were always kept iced down in a box with a sliding top, and the coldest ones were alway found laying on the bottom, where they had been resting in the icy water for at least a week. One of the great pleasures in life was coming in from a hard day's work in the hot, West Texas oilpatch, stopping at the grocery store, filling station or feed store and fishing in that box for a pop that was so cold it would give you a headache. People, then, would actually advertise — "Coldest Pop in Town."

But, alas, no more. Now you have to drink your pop chilled, and sometimes not even very chilled at all. That's because all the convenience stores keep them in a refrigerated cooler box with baloney, pickle loaf and snuff. Chilled may be fine for wine and snuff, but not soda pop.The last ice cold pop I bought in a store was last year from a small store in Fort Sumner, N.M. If anybody knows where you can buy a bottle of iced down soda water in Midland, please let me know.

Permian Basin gains six rigs

The rig counts were mixed this week, as the Permian Basin count posted a small gain and the national rig count continued to fall.

Locally, Midland County lost three rigs, lowering the total to eight for the week. Ector County gained four rigs, raising the total to 11. Three rigs moved out of Andrews County, leaving 29 at work.

Concho and Culberson counties each moved in a rig, giving each a rig for the first time in several weeks. Lea County, New Mexico continues to be the most active even though two rigs left the county, leaving 32 working this week.

For the week, the rig count is 307. A week ago the count was 301. A year ago the count was 299.

Nationally, the state of Texas lost 23 rigs this week, leaving 737 working in the state. New Mexico added a rig, raising the count to 69. Louisiana lost two rigs, leaving 296 working. Fifteen rigs shut down in Oklahoma, leaving 228 this week.

Kansas gained 14 rigs this week, putting 90 rigs to work in the state. South Dakota was left with no activity with the loss of its one rig. Alaska and Canada remained the same, with 22 and 415 rigs, respectively, at work.

For the week, the rig count is 1,934. A week ago the count was 2,011. A year ago the count was 2,260.

BOOM

Spreading deposits and loans among the savings institutions cuts the Midland financial pie even thinner.

It should be pointed out, however, that about $500 million that left First National was brokered money that got out when the bank's troubles started.

Another factor in the proliferation of downtown banks was a change in state banking rules, allowing banks to establish branch facilities within 10,500 ft. of its main office. A proposal to change that to 50,000 ft. would probably prompt every bank in Midland to open downtown facilities.

The present rule, permitted Texas American to, by virtue of its location, to establish a facility downtown and ClayDesta National, with strategic relocation of its main office to utilize the downtown Gulf Building as a branch facility.

IT ALSO ALLOWED Midland American to move into the downtown area, from a northwest location where it had only nominal growth and still maintain a northwest facility. "We did not get the growth he had expected in the outskits of the city," said President Bob Southerland, "but partially as a result of moving downtown, we have had a growth of 65 percent."

Texas American's move to downtown was prompted more or less by a good deal. "When the facility at the cornor of Texas and Colorado became available, it was almost a non-decision. It was a dream too good to pass up," said Don Platt, president. Texas American moved into the former West Texas Utilities building which First National had remodeled at great expense into a turn-of-the-century, branch facility but never occupied.

Marshall Surratt, one of the organizers of the proposed National Bank for Midland, which has announced plans to open in Empire Plaza, says it was the intention of his bank to take advantage of the small to moderate sized accounts in downtown Midland. "Downtown Midland has a working population of over 15,000 secretaries, managers and executives that we hope to service," said Surratt.

Ed Jones, president Texas Commerce Bank, which recently opened in Independence Plaza, said Texas Commerce never entertained any option but a downtown location. "We are a commercially orientated bank, and the name of the game is get close to the customer. If you want to finance the heartbeat of Midland, you almost have to locate downtown. You have to be convenient to the independents."

Jones said he saw the proliferation of downtown banking as a good sign. "I wish we could get more businesses to come back into the downtown area. A strong downtown business sector is vital to the continued growth of Midland.

Summit oil, gas sales up over past year

DALLAS (SWN) — Summit Energy, Inc., a Dallas-based oil and gas exploration company, reported oil and gas sales of $3,818,665 for the first six months of fiscal 1985 compared to $3,737,215 for the same period in the prior year.

Total revenues for the six months ended January 31, 1985 were $3,810,186 compared to total revenues of $4,511,510 for the same period in fiscal 1984. The 1984 revenues, however, reflected a $715,801 non-recurring gain on the sale of an office building in Denver, Colorado recorded by the company during the first three months of fiscal 1984.

Cash flow from operations for the six months period amounted to $2,151,610 compared to $2.929.056 for the same period in the prior year.

England geology trip planned

A Geology of Southern England field trip is being arranged for May 26-June 8 by Louise S. Durham, consulting geologist, of Baton Rouge, La.

Ronald H. Roberts, prinicipal scientific officer of the Geological Museum in London, is the technical consultant and trip commentator.

The excursion is designed to provide an overview of the diverse geology of one of the areas in which the science of geology evolved in its infancy. Exposures ranging in time from the Silurian to the Pleistocene will be observed with sediments, volcanoes, intrusives and metamorphics all represented.

The tour will include classic areas of discovery by pioneers in geology such as William Smith, Henry de la Beche, Roderick Murchison, Adam Sedgwick and Mary Anning.

The excursion is limited to 26 participants.

Cost is $1,850 per person based on double occupancy. Single accommodations are an addition $111. This amount includes roundrip air fare to London from Houston, hotel accommodations, meals, tours and escorts.

A deposit of $200 should be made as soon as possible to confirm booking. Final payment is due March 25.

For more information or to make reservations, phone Louise Durham at 504-769-2869.

The Webbs: Basketball fanatics thrive as developers

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Donald and Dudley Webb are basketball fanatics, and they are successful developers, and sometimes they are both at the same time.

For instance, they built a $40 million hotel to help lure this year's NCAA basketball finals to Lexington, and they have bought inns and researched construction projects during their travels with the University of Kentucky basketball team.

The brothers started out 13 years ago with a pair of law degrees and a $3,000 loan and have built their Webb Companies into an operation with properties in 11 states.

"My contribution to the (NCAA basketball finals) was a $40 million hotel," Donald Webb, 45, quipped, but then added: "Obviously, you don't build a hotel for three basketball games. But sometimes some odd things trigger a project ... and you can be sure Metropolitan Life's decision was not based on the NCAA."

Lexington's bid to be host for the National Collegiate Athletic Association's basketball tournament was rejected in 1977 because it was short of downtown rooms.

The Webbs, however, rented bulldozers and had them "push some dirt around" near Rupp Arena when the NCAA selection committee returned in 1980. A sign proclaimed: "400-room hotel coming."

And with the Webbs' Radisson Plaza, a 367-room hotel built with Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. as partner, Lexington will be host at the end of March to the NCAA basketball tournament.

Another Webb company has just bought a Birmingham, Ala., hotel where the brothers have stayed on basketball trips. Annual excursions to Nashville, Tenn., and Baton Rouge, La., have led to deals, too.

Business is not always basketball for the Webbs, who completed $368 million worth of offices, mixed-use projects, retail centers, housing and warehouses in 1983. They were ranked No. 9 among the nation's "owner giants" by Building Design & Construction magazine.

Atop the list were Trammell Crow Co. and Olympia and York, with more than $2 billion in projects each.

The Webb network stretches through 34 cities, up from 15 in 1982 and one in 1978, from Newport Beach, Calif., to Boston and from McAllen, Texas, to Toledo, Ohio.

Though it is in a few major cities, the privately held partnership specializes in "second-tier" communities like Lexington, Austin, Texas, and Fort Myers, Fla.

The Webbs like smaller markets because they do not have to "beat our brains out against the big guys" there, said Dudley Webb, the 41-year-old partner who specializes in out-of-town deals.

The Webbs' profile is highest in Lexington, with 37 completed buildings or complexes, and 10 more under construction.

"They have helped revamp the skyline," Mayor Scotty Baesler said. "They always do what they say they'll do. They're very progressive. They have a lot of imagination. ... We like to work with people like that because, once you get out on the limb a little bit, you know they'll get it done."

It all started with toy playhouses in an eastern Kentucky coal camp called Hot Spot. The sons of the camp bookkeeper came to central Kentucky for college and decided to stay.

They became law partners in the early 1970s and soon were into real estate. Dudley finagled a $3,000 loan for the first deal, a $35,000 house.

"After a while, I flipped that and reinvested in a duplex," he said. "Then came a fourplex. Then warehouses, then office buildings, shopping centers and hotels."

The Webbs built the business with what Donald calls "sweat equity," running the law practice between 9:30 a.m. and 4 p.m. and spending the rest of the day at construction sites or on their car phones, learning the business as they went.

Their first venture out of town in 1979 — a condominium complex in Vero Beach, Fla., — sold out fast, so more followed.

Now seven partners run the law firm. The Webb Companies include subsidiaries in development, design, construction, real estate, property management, maintenance and security, finance and real estate equity. Sixty-five people work at Webb headquarters.

Jury awards $125 million in damages to ComputerLand

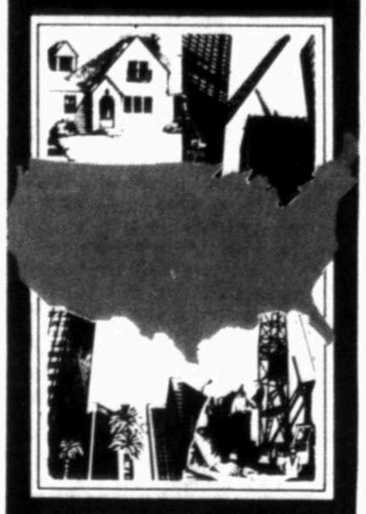

A state Superior Court jury in Oakland, Calif., Wednesday levied $125 million in punitive damages against ComputerLand Corp. and its founder, William Millard, for failing to honor the terms of a 9-year-old note for $250,000.

Of the total, $10 million was levied against Millard and the balance against ComputerLand, one of the nation's largest retailers of personal computers.

Earlier this week, the jury ruled that Millard owed the note holder, an investor group named Micro-Vest Corp., compensatory damages consisting of a 20 percent stake in ComputerLand.

Attorneys for Micro-Vest say that stake may be worth $400 million, although ComputerLand, a closely held Hayward, Calif.-based company, has disputed that valuation.

With supplies short, some car dealers charge above sticker price

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

These are the halcyon days that auto dealers only dreamed about three or four years ago, when the bottom seemed to have dropped out of the new car market.

Now, with U.S. auto production straining to keep up with sales while quotas continue to restrict imports of popular Japanese cars, the law of supply and demand is working in the dealers' favor — with a vengeance.

As too many would-be buyers chase too few of the most desired models, some car prices are going through the showroom roof. Many dealers across the country are adding special charges, increasing the price of dealer-added optional equipment and demanding higher than manufacturers' suggested "sticker" prices for some models, but so far consumers have not been complaining too loudly.

ALTHOUGH A FEW dealers have been charging premiums for popular cars — particularly imports — even before the economic recovery began in 1983, the practice has become widespread recently, according to a survey of 200 dealers conducted by Ward's Auto World, a trade publication, for its January edition. More than half those surveyed by the magazine acknowledged that they charge more than the sticker price for at least some popular models.

The survey also found that charging above the list price has now become nearly as common among domestic car dealers as it is among those selling scarcer imported models. Although the Ward's survey did not disclose how much extra dealers are charging, a number of dealers interviewed by the Los Angeles Times acknowledged that the premiums varies from several hundred to more than $1,500, depending on the scarcity and popularity of the model.

SELLING CARS ABOVE the manufacturers' suggested prices is perfectly legal. Dealerships are independent businesses and therefore may charge whatever they can get for the cars they buy from the factories, although traditionally dealers have sold cars below the sticker price. Just as dealers may offer deep discounts when sales are slow, they may also increase prices when sales are brisk.

The Ward's survey determined that most dealers polled aren't worried that the practice of selling above sticker prices may tarnish the already tattered public image of the American car dealer, Ward's said. While 52 percent of the dealers surveyed said they now charge more than the sticker price on some cars, only 1 percent said they believe that there is strong customer resistance to the higher prices.

IN CALIFORNIA, where the practice is thought to be the most rampant, dealers acknowledge that the Ward's survey findings are on the mark, and that prices higher than those suggested by the car makers are now commonplace.

"There are a lot, especially import dealers, charging over list," says William J. Symes, owner of Symes Cadillac in Pasadena, Calif., and newly installed president of the National Automobile Dealers Association. "We (the dealer association) are against charging over list price, because in the long run it will hurt the image of car dealers. But a lot of dealers are going to go their own way no matter what we say."

Says Harlan McHugh, sales manager of McHugh Lincoln-Mercury in Los Gatos, near San Jose, Calif.: "I think California is where (the practice of charging over list price) originated, with the imports, and now it has trickled down to us (domestic dealers)."

HE ADDS THAT his dealership is now charging $1,590 above sticker price on Ford's new German sports coupe, the Merkur, whose base price is $16,361. "There just aren't that many of them around, and import buyers have been programmed to pay more, anyway."

Lionel Canerday, who owns Pontiac, Cadillac and Oldsmobile franchises in Porterville, near Bakersfield, Calif., acknowledges that he is adding extra charges to the sticker prices of some popular models.

"On the Pontiac Fiero (base-model price of $8,495) my dealer markup (extra price over sticker) is $295," Canerday says. "And on the N-cars (General Motors Corp.'s new mid-sized, front-wheel-drive Oldmobile Calais, base price $9,039, and Pontiac Grand Am, $8,149) that are equipped with V-6 engines, which are scarce, we're also adding $295."

He adds: "But you should see it up in Silicon Valley (the high technology district near San Jose, Calif.). Some dealers are adding $1,000 or more on hard-to-get cars."

NOT ALL DEALERS are quite as open about the higher prices, however. Some pad their profit margins by making expensive optional equipment (such as stereo radios and air conditioning) standard or adding a charge for normally optional rustproofing treatment on all cars, then listing those costs as part of the sticker price. Others have increased their prices for such items as floor mats, exterior trim, and certain types of interior fabrics.

None of this makes auto executives in Detroit very happy, especially since manufacturers don't share in the extra profits from sales above sticker prices. They also worry that price-padding is often blamed on the manufacturers as well as the dealers.

But auto company executives say that, because dealers are independent and generally stuck by Detroit during the bad times, they are criticize the dealers now for trying to make an extra buck.

"We try to discourage the blatant blowing up of prices, but you can't discourage them from getting a high price on a hot car," says Ford Executive vice president Philip E. Benton Jr.

STILL, HE ACKNOWLEDGES that Ford is frustrated that some of its most popular models, such as the Ford Mustang convertible and the Lincoln Town Car, are commanding above sticker prices at many dealerships, especially on the West Coast.

"We don't like to climb all over our dealers, but when it is just excess dealer profit, that smacks of a ripoff," Benton says.

Bennett E. Bidwell, Chrysler Corp.'s executive vice president in charge of sales and marketing, tries to defend his dealers by claiming that import dealers are still much worse offenders than those handling domestic cars.

"The Honda dealers have been sticking it to the public for five years," he complains. Honda's cars have been such sales successes and the supply has been so limited in the United States that dealers frequently have been charging over sticker for such models as the Accord and Prelude virtually since they came on the market.

BUT EVEN BIDWELL concedes that Chrysler dealers have joined their Honda comrades in charging above list, especially for hot models such as Chrysler's minivans. "You talk to (the dealers) about it, and you tell them that you want this customer to come back for the long run," Bidwell says. "But the problem is that you have demand chasing supply."

Economics may soon come to the rescue of American car buyers, however. Although limits on Japanese imports are expected to be continued for a fifth year, most industry officials expect the quotas to be increased by about 10 percent beginning in April, thus increasing the supply of many models. At the same time, domestic production capacity has been increased, which should eliminate shortages of U.S.-built cars.

Baskets and Blades to close in 6 states

New York Times News Service

SHELTON, Conn. — Forschner Group says that it will close or sell all but one of its 18 Baskets and Blades stores, most of them less than a year old, producing a "substantial" charge against earnings and perhaps a loss for the year.

The Shelton-based company, which was originally only a wholesale distributor of Swiss Army knives and imported baskets, will retain only its original store in East Norwalk.

Forschner opened its Norwalk factory outlet store in 1982, a Raleigh, N.C., store in 1983, five additional stores by June 1984 and 11 more during the remainder of 1984. They were located in New York, North Carolina, Florida and Georgia.

"Before we opened any of our stores, we had a business plan," Tony Mortimer, Forschner vice president of planning and development, said. "The critical period in that plan was the Christmas season."

But Christmas sales last year were generally disappointing throughout the industry, since overall sales increases were below the 8 percent to 10 percent retailers had expected.

When sales at Baskets and Blades did not reach expected levels during Christmas, Forschner decided to sell or close the stores, Mortimer said.

"This was a new venture for us, and not related to our core busiess," he said. "We are returning to what is essentially our basic business."

At a board meeting next month, company officials will decide how much of a loss to record from disposing of the Baskets and Blades stores, Mortimer said.

The cost of opening the stores had depressed Forschner's earnings during the first six months of its fiscal year. Profits declined 60 percent for the six months ending Dec. 31, to $506,000, compared with the similar period a year earlier, although sales increased 14.5 percent to almost $19 million.

Transco announces quarterly dividend

HOUSTON (SWN) — Transco Exploration Co., managing general partner of Transco Exploration Partners, Ltd., today announced that TXP will make a quarterly distribution (return of capital) of $.55 per unit payable June 3, 1985, to TXP unitholders of record March 29, 1985.

TXC currently owns approximately 82 percent of the outstanding TXP units and will continue to invest its distribution of about $26 million payable to it June 3, 1985.

Striking flight attendants say Pan Am 'zeroing in' on them

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

Early last month, Selina Swee Singh, a veteran flight attendant, received her latest gold star from Pan American World Airways — a letter informing her that she had been selected as one of the company's Employees of the Month.

But now Singh, a Westchester resident who has spent 12 years with Pan Am, is afraid that she, and some of her attendant colleagues, may soon be out of a job.

Singh said that her position is in jeopardy because of a company proposal that would allow Pan Am to hire a large number of foreign nationals for use in flights abroad and thereby eliminate hundreds, perhaps thousands, of jobs now held by members of the Independent Union of Flight Attendants.

"I feel they (Pan Am) are doing it because they want cheap labor to kill the union," said Singh, a native of Singapore who speaks five languages. She said that a company official has told union negotiators that the airline could hire flight attendants in Singapore for $600 a month. Singh's current base rate of pay is $1,948 a month. sh See Pressure Campaign

SINGH AND OTHER Pan Am attendants feel that the proposal is part of an escalating pressure campaign to stop them from observing picket lines, make them accept an inferior contract and return to work.

For the last two weeks, the attendants have been refusing to cross the picket lines of the striking Transport Workers Union.

(A resumption of talks between the Transport Workers and the airline had been ordered Wednesday in New York by federal mediator Robert Brown, but the talks were rescheduled for Thursday due to what sources described as deep divisions within the union negotiating committee.)

The attendants themselves are in the midst of a 30-day federally mandated "cooling-off period," which expires April 1. At that time they will be free to strike and the company will be free to impose its contract proposal.

With the company's pilots and flight engineers crossing the picket lines of the Transport Workers Union, Pan Am is now trying to exert maximum leverage on the attendants, the group the company apparently feels is most vulnerable of the three unions not working.

Margaret Brennan, vice chairman of the attendants' union local in Los Angeles, said that there is a clear reason why Pan Am is taking a tough stance with the attendants.

"THEY THINK WE'RE the most vulnerable of their five unions because we're overwhelmingly female," she said, a reference to the fact that 80 percent of the union's members are women. "They're targeting us," she added.

And union spokesman Brian Moreau said that Pan Am's attempt to save millions of dollars by gaining the right to hire foreign nationals, who would not be covered by a U.S. union contract, is only one of a number of thorny issues in negotiations with the independent union, which represents only Pan Am's 6,000 attendants.

Pan Am traditionally has done considerable hiring abroad because it needs attendants who are fluent in languages other than English and who are familiar with foreign customs. Attendants hired in foreign countries, such as Singh, have been trained in the United States and have had to establish legal U.S. residency in order to work for Pan Am.

In its contract proposal, Pan Am also is demanding that the attendants work more hours, agree to reduced staffing on some flights, assent to lower pay for layovers, make concessions on their health and pension plans, allow the carrier to delay pay increases that the attendants were supposed to have already received, accept a lower overtime wage scale and permit Pan Am to hire new attendants at considerably lower rates of pay than the contract currently calls for, Moreau said in a telephone interview from New York.

MOREAU SAID THAT if the company gets everything it is seeking, 60 percent of the union's members might lose their jobs and the economic well-being of those remaining would be threatened.

Pan Am said that it needs the concessions, as well as those it is seeking from its other four unions, if it is to return to profitability in an increasingly competitive industry. Jeffrey Kriendler, the company's vice president of corporate communications, said that the union's estimates of how many attendants would lose their jobs are "grossly inflated."

In any case, as the strike moves into its third week, Pan Am has turned more and more attention on the attendants. The campaign began last weekend after the pilots and flight engineers decided to return to their jobs, and Pan Am announced that it would reactivate many routes that had been halted because of the strike, generating a need for more attendants.

Earlier in the strike, Pan Am furloughed about 70 percent of the attendants. On Saturday, the company started directing some of the attendants to report to work. But the attendants maintain that they have 15 days to return because of their furloughed status.

Pan Am contends, however, that the attendants must return as soon as they are asked because the company is in an "emergency" situation. "They are expected to return to work and there could be consequences if they do not," Kriendler said.

Holly Corp. reports net income for second quarter

DALLAS (SWN) — E. I. Parsons, President of Holly Corp., today reported results for the company's second quarter and first six months ended January 31, 1985.

Parsons said Holly's net income was $434,000 for the quarter ended January 31, 1985, compared to a net loss of $240,000 (including income of $429,000 from discontinued operations) for the second quarter of fiscal 1984. Net income per share for the second quarter of fiscal 1985 was $.11, compared to a net loss per share of $.03 (including income of $.05 per share from discontinued operations). The improvement in income from continuing operations compared to the prior year quarter resulted primarily from increased sales of refined products. The prior year quarter was also affected by a pre-tax charge of $600,000 resulting from a state sales tax settlement.

Net income was $54,000 for the six months ended January 31, 1985 compared to $1,388,000 (including $805,000 from discontinued operations) for the first six months of the prior year. Earnings per share were $.01 for the first half of the current fiscal year, compared to $.17 (including $.10 from discontinued operations) for the same period of the prior year. The decline in income for the first six months as compared to the prior year was due to somewhat lower margins on refined products in the first quarter of fiscal 1985 which were partially offset by the referred to sales tax settlement in the prior year and increased interest income in the current period.

Earnings continue to be impacted by industry-wide poor refinery margins resulting from intense price competition, instability in the crude oil markets, excess refining capacity and the growing volume of low-priced petroleum product imports.

Because of the previously reported sale of the Company's oil and gas properties, the historical consolidated financial statement of the Company for the three months and six months ended January 31, 1984 have been restated to reflect the Company's oil and gas exploration, development and production business as a discontinued operation.

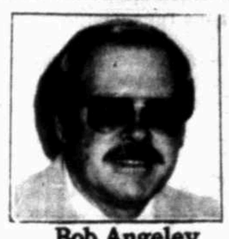

Holly Corporation through its subsidiary, Navajo Refining Company and its interest in Montana Refining Company is engaged in the refining and marketing of petroleum products.

The good life just got better.

Until May 15th, enjoy 13.5% on a special RepublicBank IRA opened by April 15th.

You already know a RepublicBank IRA can help you plan for the good life. Well, the good life just got better. From now until May 15, 1985, RepublicBank is offering a premium rate of 13.5% on a special IRA opened by April 15.

Our special IRA pays the premium rate through May 15; beginning May 16, it will pay a fixed rate for 30 months of the higher of 11.0% or 1.25% above the 90-day U.S. T-Bill discount rate. Interest will be compounded quarterly, and there is a minimum deposit of $1,000.

13.5% Until May 15th

The good life means a tax break every year.

Every cent you have in your RepublicBank IRA, including the interest you earn, is tax deferred. So you don't pay any taxes until you retire or begin to withdraw funds.

And since your investment is tax deferred, your money adds up quickly. So the earlier you open your IRA, the more you'll have when you retire.

And there's still time for a 1984 tax break.

There's an added bonus if you open your RepublicBank IRA by April 15: you can apply your deposit to your 1984 tax return. That could mean a savings of hundreds of dollars for you to enjoy a taste of the good life right now. But remember, the deadline has changed, and you must make your deposit by April 15 to apply it to your 1984 taxes.

Secure the good life now.

With a RepublicBank IRA, you'll also have the added assurance of knowing your investment is secure and insured up to $100,000 by the FDIC.

So don't let the good life pass you by. Open your special RepublicBank IRA by April 15, 1985. With our 13.5% premium rate, the good life can be even better.

Board approves increase in commercial auto insurance rates

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN – State Board of Insurance has approved an increase of 9.38 cent in commercial auto insurance rates, effective May 1.

Private passenger auto rates will be considered later this year.

In setting the rate, SBI members included a negative "loading" for profit and contingencies in the rating formula.

If that factor had been zero, the increase would have amounted to a 13.7 per cent increase.

SBI staff members recommended the negative loading, while SBI Chairman Lyndon Olson recommended the zero loading.

In arguing for the staff position, SBI member Carole Rylander said 1984 was a "terrible year for underwriting and a great year for investment."

By using the negative loading, the board is, in effect, using the investment income of companies to offset their losses on the risk being insured — and a number of companies are not happy about it.

Professional Insurance Agents of Texas head Steve Hacker argues the measure is a consumer bill, intended to help policyholders in the event an insurer becomes insolvent.

Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin, has introduced legislation to authorize the Texas Guaranteed Student Loan Corp. to act as a "lender of last resort" for student loans.

HB 1026 would allow the corporation to make loans under specific conditions, including when a borrower certifies that he has applied to at least two commercial lenders and has been unable to obtain a loan.

A borrower also would have to certify he wasn't able to obtain a guaranteed student loan from the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System. The bill would take effect Sept. 1.

Legislation changing the definition of intoxication under worker's compensation policies to include intoxication from a controlled substance, as well as alcohol, has been introduced by Rep. Betty Denton, D-Waco.

HB 1100 provides that an employer may defend an action on grounds an employee was injured while in a state of intoxication "caused by alcohol or a controlled substance." Current law refers to intoxication from alcohol.

Banks continue coming in for attention in legislation being offered by Texas lawmakers, including proposals on "non-bank" banks and foreign banks.

Senator O. H. Harris, R-Dallas, is offering SB 718, aimed at prohibiting "non-banks" banks in Texas.

Such banks are permitted under Federal law to operate across state lines, by not offering either demand deposits or commercial loans thus avoiding falling under the legal definition of a bank.

SB 718 cites the "long-standing constitutional prohibition against branch banking" as requiring that banks "be empowered to provide the full range of financial services needed by the public."

The bill would require insured banks operating in Texas of offer both demand deposits and commercial loans, which Harris says is aimed at interstate "non-bank" banks.

Another bill, SB 746, is being offered by Sen. Don Henderson, R-Houston, dealing with operations of foreign bank agencies, which would be permitted to operate in counties of more than 1.5 million population.

Texas Dept. of Health is preparing revisions to municipal hazardous waste rules which could affect "small quantity generators" such as dry cleaners, print shops, car dealers, paint and body shops, photo labs and school and business laboratories.

Facilities are classified as small quantity generators if they produce less than 1,000 kilograms of hazardous waste in a calendar month.

Under the proposal, generators producing or accumulating between 100 and 1,000 kilograms monthly would be required to notify TDH of their activities, use a manifest and registered transporter when shipping wastes, assure that waste goes to a proper treatment facility, and comply with full reporting and record keeping requirements.

Generators producing less than 100 kilograms monthly would be required to select a proper treatment, storage or disposal facility, and to maintain records of off-site shipments for three years.

The proposals also would allow storage facilities to be established for small quantity generators or for waste destined for recycling — allowing such facilities to store up to 165,000 pounds of wastes for up to 180 days, in containers or above-ground tanks.

ESM's closing a nightmare for Bradford

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — For the Bradford Trust Co., last week's closing of ESM Government Securities of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., was a nightmare revisited. Only four months earlier, Bradford disentangled itself from the collapse of the Lion Capital Group — another government securities dealer for which it acted as clearing agent — at a loss of $13 million.

As a clearing bank that specialized in sending and receiving money and securities for smaller government securities dealers, Bradford Trust was a small part of the giant Treasury market. Over-all, the clearing of Treasury securities and tax-exempt bonds was only about a fifth of Bradford revenues and had not been profitable recently.

After the problems emerged with Lion Capital, Bradford managers decided — as one of them put it — that the clearing business was "too much risk for too little reward." Last January, the company announced plans to stop clearing Treasury and municipal bond trades for about 225 non-bank securities firms.

IF ESM HAD STAYED in business a few few weeks, Bradford's embarrassment might have belonged at least in part to the Security Pacific Clearing and Services Corp., which is buying the Bradford business at a price expected to be less than $10 million. Following 1983's loss of $8 million on revenues of $144 million, Bradford earned $3.9 million on revenues of $110.4 million in the first nine months of 1984, excluding the extraordinary loss from the Lion settlement. Complete results for 1984 have not yet been published.

"The timing could not have been worse," said Michael H. Mindlin, executive vice president of the Fidata Corp., formerly known as the Bradford National Corp., the holding company for Bradford Trust, referring to the ESM debacle.

"We had planned to announce our new name — Fidata Corp. — in the latter part of the first quarter when we anticipated announcing a very profitable year for 1984. Barring the problems with Lion, we would have had a profitable year. Then lo and behold on the same day we sent out all the literature and placed an ad in The Wall Street Journal, we got clobbered with this ESM business."

Although the company has said it does not expect to take any losses as a result of the Florida firm's problems, untangling ESM's role has distracted management from new ventures, Mindlin said. The name Fidata, which focuses attention on the company's activity in financial data processing, is an effort, Mindlin said, to overcome a "negative image" created by past litigation over some government service work that Bradford no longer provides. It also takes the company further from a fiercely contested takeover by new management in 1983 in a proxy fight that cost Bradford $2 million.

AS PART OF THE MANAGEMENT team that took over Bradford, the 44 year-old Mindlin is focusing on the growing demand from banks and mutual funds for financial data processing. He is optimistic that deregulation of the financial markets will increase demand for Bradford's services but concedes that, "every time we take two steps forward, it seems like we have to take a step back."

"We had to put out a lot of fires," Mindlin said, referring to the company's earlier pullout from the stock clearing business, its sale of a troubled insurance company and problems with Lion and ESM. "But prospects are very bright, and this company is going to be around for a long time."

Alan C. Winters, a certified public accountant and president of Fidata, is in Europe seeking more capital to replace funds lost in the Lion settlement.

Before Bradford can move on to new ventures, it must finish extricating itself from the government securities business, where it acted as clearing agent for both Lion Capital and ESM. In addition, it would routinely make overnight "broker loans," which would be fully collateralized by securities held in Lion's or ESM's account at Bradford.

IN THE LION CASE, Bradford's claim to the securities in Lion's account was disputed by municipalities that had lent money to the securities firm, and were told by Lion that collateral was held in their name at Bradford. Charging that Bradford "knew or should have known" of Lion's deceit, the municipalities eventually settled for $17.5 million of their $40 million in claims.

Although investigators have said that ESM — like Lion — has misled municipalities that lent it money, by counting twice the securities it had available for collateral, Charles F. Martin, president of Bradford Trust, said the bank "has no reason to believe that it will suffer any loss as a result of its dealings with ESM Government Securities."

Leopold S. Rassnick, general counsel to Bradford, noted that the bank had only one master account with ESM and did not have any segregated or subaccounts for ESM customers. He added that Bradford, like other market participants, "was misled by financial statements showing that ESM was one of the better-capitalized participants in that market."

ESM's financial statements, Rassnick said, appeared to compare favorably with some of the "primary" dealers — the select group of big bond traders who report their transactions daily to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. After the Lion episode, when Bradford was reviewing its operations, Rassnick noted, Bradford officials made a personal visit to the Fort Lauderdale firm.

Mindlin is optimistic that Fidata's primary businesses — financial record keeping for tax-exempt bond unit investment trusts, mutual funds and bank trust departments — will thrive in coming years. Although Bradford Trust is chartered as a bank, "we don't compete with our bank customers," Mindlin said, "which makes them more willing to do business with us" than with other large banks that provide financial record-keeping services.

BEGINNING IN THE FOURTH quarter of 1984, Mindlin said, there was a "noticeable" increase in demand for Fidata's record-keeping service, which allows banks to provide their customers with a single statement showing the status of all their accounts — including non-traditional banking products such as insurance and mutual funds.

In the unit investment trust business, where securities firms accumu)ate a pool of municipal bonds and then sell $1,000 shares of the pool, Bradford handles about 25 percent of the market, Mindlin said. The company's computers provide a new on-line, real-time system that allows it to handle 20,000 phone calls a month from the 700,000 investors who hold the 1,000 different trusts with assets of $15 billion.

Supercomputers may soon be replaced

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Supercomputers have long been the heavyweights of number crunching, their terrific speeds achieved by an equal mix of artful design and brute force. Most have relied on a single, state-of-the-art processor that goes about its tasks methodically, bringing down even the most intimidating chore with a barrage of lightning-quick punches.

But soon the speed title may be stolen away by some lightweights.

On university campuses and in corporate development laboratories, scientists are stringing together hundreds — sometimes thousands — of microprocessors in a single machine. The result is what experts call a "massively parallel computer," capable of dividing a problem into hundreds of parts and parceling each of them out to a separate microprocessor, exactly the kind used in personal computers.

Most computer scientists think such machines will prove far more efficient and flexible than traditional supercomputers, to say nothing of a lot cheaper. But getting several hundred independent-minded microprocessors to stick together is a little like organizing a busload of schoolchildren on a trip to Coney Island. More than a few are likely to wander off.

"There is a crucial balance to be struck and no one is quite sure where it is," said Kenneth Kennedy, chairman of the computer science department at Rice University. "Everyone knows that it takes less time to get things done when a bunch of people are working together. But you reach a point where everyone is getting in everyone else's way — and that's when there's just chaos."

Computers, of course, hate chaos. And the current generation of supercomputers, called vector processors, is designed to bring rigid order to unruly problems. They achieve their tremendous speeds — upward of 800 million floating point instructions per second — by dividing their problems into similar mathematical operations.

Thus, in a complex equation involving millions of calculations, a vector processor would sort out all of the multiplication operations first, then all of the division operations and so on. By doing all like operations at once — without having to shift gears by switching to another type of calculation — the machines can achieve remarkable speeds.

But there are trade-offs. Vector processors perform most efficiently when they are handling repetitive scientific calculations; the range of small, separate problems dispatched with ease by a general-purpose mainframe would reduce a supercomputer to a mass of helpless circuits. Even with more orderly problems, most supercomputers are able to operate at only 15 or 20 percent of the optimal speed. "I compare vector machines to those pens that bureaucrats used to use to sign letters," said Jacob T. Schwartz, a professor at New York University's Courant Institute.

"You sign with one pen, and all the attached pens copy that signature. It's efficient, but the use is limited."

It was the search for flexibility that led computer designers to massive parallelism. The idea is simple: rather than reorganize the equation, just parcel out each discrete calculating task to a different microprocessor, a self-contained computer-on-a-chip. The processors act in parallel but independent of each other. It is hardly a new idea, but until now it was an expensive one. Only with the rise of very large scale integrated circuit, or VLSI, technology, has the idea of multiple processors become affordable.

"Obviously, the problem now is synchronization among the processors," Schwartz said. "That is the issue we are just beginning to attack."

It is no small challenge. To retain speed, massively parallel computers must be designed without a central processor that plays traffic cop. Otherwise there will be huge bottlenecks as each independent processor awaits its work. Without a single ringmaster, though, microprocessors could pick up the same tasks or fight for access to the same information in the computer's central memory. In either case, the result would be disorganization and inefficiency.

"There are a variety of solutions, all in their infancy," said Tilak Agerwala, the director of symbolic and numeric processing at the International Business Machines Corporation's T.J. Watson Research Laboratory in Yorktown, N.Y. Each involves different types of networks connecting the processors, so that they can communicate at high speed, and different types of memory.

The best machines seem to have two types of memory — a central memory area shared by all the microprocessors and "local" memory surrounding each chip.

Results are already on the way. IBM researchers have developed an experimental 512-microprocessor system called the Yorktown Simulation Engine. It is based on another machine, called Ultra, developed at Professor Schwartz's NYU laboratory. And IBM is contributing $30 million in equipment and personnel to a Cornell University project, run by Kenneth Wilson, a Nobel laureate.

NHTSA investigates defects in GM cars

WASHINGTON (AP) — Allegations of possible brake and engine defects involving 11 million General Motors cars are being investigated by federal authorities, officials said.

The probe centers on 9 million 1978-1984 model A-, G-, and F-cars, including the Oldsmobile Cutlass, that allegedly experience corrosion of rear brake backing plates. Such a defect can lead to loss of rear brakes.

Another 2 million 1982-1985 model J-cars are under government study for alleged engine surges that could cause uncontrolled acceleration.

The investigations and the allegations of problems were announced by the non-profit Center for Auto Safety and confirmed by National Highway Traffic Safety Administration spokeswoman Roslyn Kaiser. Neither GM nor NHTSA could confirm the numbers of cars that the center said were involved in the investigations.

An internal NHTSA report released by the center said the government was conducting "active preliminary evaluations" of the GM cars to determine whether additional action is necessary for either alleged condition.

If a preliminary study suggests the possibility of a defect and the carmaker refuses to recall the cars, NHTSA opens an "engineering analysis" to determine if a defect is safety-related and, if so, to convince carmakers to conduct a recall.

The center said GM in January recalled 63,865 of the A-,G-, and F-cars in Canada for the plate corrosion problem.

GM said in a statement that it had notified NHTSA of the corrosion problem in cars in the Canadian maritime provinces where severe corrosion conditions exist.

Tiny electronic chips could help handicapped

Cox News Service

Electronic chips smaller than a freckle and thinner than a human hair may one day enable computers to be operated by the power of thought, using human nerve impulses to bridge the gap between man and machine.

David Edell, an assistant professor of bioengineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, says he has successfully implanted experimental versions of the chips in laboratory animals, where they have detected and relayed the faint electrical currents generated by muscle nerves.

"We have proved it's feasible to do this sort of interface with a silicon device and the peripheral nerve of a mammal," Edell said. "The nerve grows into the slots we machine right through the chip."

Edell says the chip could enable amputees to use muscle nerves to control sophisticated artificial limbs or to plug into a computer controlling office typewriters, industrial lathes, mills or drill presses.

Development of artificial substitutes for human organs like the heart, the pancreas or the kidney has paralleled surgeons' success in transplanting natural organs. But the natural wiring of the body's central nervous system so far has resisted attempts to develop substitutes.

The chips, which Edell has been working on since 1976, tap directly into the body's nervous system.

When the brain wills a muscle to move, it generates an electrical impulse carried by thousands of individual nerve fiber filaments, or axons, which twitch the proper muscle cells. It is that impulse that the chip detects and amplifies.

"Within five years, we'll be thinking about clinical applications," Edell says. "The computer interface would be the easiest. We would take that information generated by the nerve impulse and put it into machine-usable code."

Edell's group is one of several across the United States that have turned to microelectronics for ways to repair or bypass damaged human nerves.

At the University of Michigan, for example, electrical engineers are attempting to develop brain implants that might enable quadriplegics to control paralyzed limbs.

Using computer chips and implanted electrodes, researchers in Cleveland and Case Western Reserve University have developed very primitive artificial nerves to help paraplegics regain some limited use of their legs.

In Utah, researchers have mated a tiny television camera and a computer to implanted electrodes to make a primitive artificial eye. Work also is under way at the Institute for Artificial Organs in New York City. Blind volunteers using the experimental systems have been able to distinguish simple patterns of letters and figures.

"We are at the beginning," Edell cautioned. "I was at the beginning in 1976 and I'm still at the beginning. It's been small incremental progress over a long number of years."

Edell, however, has cleared two major hurdles. The chip itself, coated with silicon dioxide, does not cause any allergic reaction in the nerve tissue in which it is implanted. And Edell's group has managed to make splicing the severed nerve to the chip routine microsurgery.

Edell's next step is to begin analyzing the pattern of nerve impulses that control different muscles and begin building a usable code. This year, he plans to teach laboratory animals to use the implanted chips to activate a simple electric feeder.

"We're hoping to learn how to recognize the normal patterns of muscle activity so a patient won't have to learn a substantial number of new patterns," Edell said. "The patient would use the patterns that control the limbs normally."

In time, the MIT researchers hope to make the chip more sensitive and more selective in recording the nerve impulse. Complex integrated circuits to amplify and code the faint nerve impulse may also be incorporated in the chip. The chips now are wired to connectors and an amplifier taped to the animal's skin.

Airline trying to reorganize under bankruptcy laws

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A lawyer who assumed control of Provincetown-Boston Airline last month will loan the financially troubled carrier $500,000 to help keep it flying as it reorganizes under U.S. bankruptcy laws, a spokesman says.

PBA, struggling after it was shut down briefly in November by the Federal Aviation Administration and a crash that killed 13 people, filed for protection from creditors Wednesday under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code.

The 35-year-old, Naples-based airline "will continue operations as normal," said attorney Stephen Story, a spokesman for Hugh Culverhouse, owner of the National Football League's Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

Culverhouse on Feb. 1 assumed voting control of the carrier and was given options to buy 51 percent of PBA's stock at below market prices after co-signing a $1 million loan.

He planned to loan the airline $500,000 today, said Story, Culverhouse's law partner and a member of the PBA board of directors.

PBA has "a positive net worth, probably in excess of $10 million," but was forced to seek protection because of cash-flow problems due to $5 million in accounts payable for fuel, parts and other operating items, he said.

U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Alexander Paskay signed an order allowing PBA to accept tickets sold before the Chapter 11 filing, which protects the airline from creditors while it develops a plan to put its finances in order.

A year ago, PBA was the largest U.S. commuter airline and a consistent money-maker.At its peak, the carrier served 36 cities in Florida and the Northeast, and employed 1,500 people.

The FAA shut it down for two weeks in November for alleged safety violations. After the airline returned to service, a 19-seat PBA plane crashed on takeoff in Jacksonville, killing all 13 people aboard.

Passenger traffic fell off dramatically afterward and the airline reported "substantial losses in the fourth quarter," Story said.

PBA's directors held a telephone conference meeting Tuesday and approved filing the petition after learning of the cash-flow problems. Story said he and airline President C. Bill Gregg recommended the action to the board.

None of PBA's 585 current employees is expected to be laid off, although salaries may be reduced, he said.

It is the third Florida airline to seek court protection from creditors in the past eight months.

RCA Corp. names new chief executive

NEW YORK (AP) — RCA Corp. President Robert R. Frederick has been elected chief executive of the entertainment and communications company, which is showing record profits after returning in recent years to its "electronic roots."

Frederick assumed the chief executive's post from Thornton F. Bradshaw, who remains chairman of RCA, the owner of the NBC television network.

The move was expected. Bradshaw had said at RCA's annual meeting last April that he would turn over the chief executive's position to Frederick, 59, before the company's annual meeting this year.

RCA also said William French Smith, who just stepped down as U.S. attorney general, and Grant A. Tinker, chairman and chief executive of NBC, were elected to RCA's board of directors.

Frederick, who has been RCA's president and chief operating officer since September 1982, will lead a company that has changed substantially since Bradshaw arrived four years ago after serving as president of Atlantic Richfield Co.

At the time RCA was a company that had mushroomed from its main businesses — communications, electronics and broadcasting — into a host of unrelated activities, such as financial services, greeting cards, publishing, foods and auto rental.

However, RCA lacked a coherent plan to operate the disparate units as a successful whole. As it switched from one strategy to another, its balance sheet deteriorated under the weight of excessive debt, management continued to turn over and profit as a percentage of sales remained flat.

Bradshaw, however, led an effort to improve RCA's financial health by returning the focus to its three core operations — RCA's "electronic roots," as he called them — and shedding most of the unrelated operations. One such operation, Hertz Corp., remains in RCA's stable, however.

Among the companies divested was CIT Financial Corp., a financial services concern whose $1.51 billion sale substantially bolstered RCA's balance sheet.

Bradshaw also brought in a host of new managers including Frederick, who had been executive vice president of General Electric Co. Frederick held several positions during his 34-year tenure at GE, but was known particularly for his experience in electronics and consumer products, which overlapped many of RCA's interests.

In 1984 Bradshaw declared that RCA finally had "its house in order" and its profit climbed to $341 million from $227 million in 1983, while sales rose to $10.1 billion from $8.98 billion.

"With RCA restored to record profitability, with our balance sheet in excellent condition and with our businesses strongly positioned for long-term growth, this is the natural time for a transition," Bradshaw said in a statement Wednesday.

Bell Petroleum has improved performance

Bell Petroleum Services, Inc. has reported improved operating performance for the third quarter ended January 31, 1985, compared with the same period last year. Revenues for the period were $4,696,000, up 13.5 percent from the same period a year ago. The Company reported an operating loss of $3,000 during the third quarter, compared with an operating loss of $303,000 last year. Net loss for the quarter was $23,000 or $.01 per share, compared with a net loss of $202,000 or $.08 per share for the third quarter last year.

The wireline services and equipment segment continued to lead all segments for the third quarter as revenues increased 12.8 percent from last year's third quarter. Operating profit for the segment was $255,000, compared with an operating loss of $63,000 for the same period last year. Revenues in the oilfield rubber products segment increased 7.9 percent and operating earnings were $194,000. The H2S Safety and Laboratory services segment was not profitable for the period due primarily to the reopening of laboratory operations in Casper, Wyoming.

For the nine months ended January 31, 1985, revenues were $13,928,000 — an increase of 27.4 percent from last year's nine month revenues of $10,936,000. Year-to-date losses were $54,000 or $.02 per share, comapred with losses of $566,000 or $.22 per share, for the same period a year ago.

Bell Petroleum Services Inc. is an oilfield service and manufacturing company headquartered in Midland, Texas.

Cenergy Corp. wins judgement of $2 million

DALLAS (SWN) — Cenergy Corp. has announced that a judgment in favor of the company for approximately $2 million including interest became final on March 8, 1985.

According to Cenergy Chairman and Chief Executive Officer James W. Hunt, the Texas Comptroller of Public Accounts had assessed and collected severance taxes, penalties, and interest from a Cenergy subsidiary. The judgment became final after the Texas Supreme Court refused to hear the Comptroller's appeal of a lower court ruling for Cenergy, and the company will recover amounts previously paid under protest to the State of Texas.

Cenergy Corp. is a Dallas-based company involved through its subsidiaries in oil and gas exploration and production and intrastate pipeline operations.

Report: Texas economy to grow

The Texas economy is projected to expand its gross state product by about 3.5 percent per year through 1986. This forecast is the principal finding from a recent release of the Texas Economic Forecast: The Perryman Report from Baylor University Forecasting Service.

The study also found that personal income is expected to advance at a rate of approximately 9 percent per year. This level of expansion is well in excess of projected inflationary patterns, and results in gains in purchasing power in excess of 4 percent per year. Moderate improvement is also foreseen in the labor market.

Growth of about 2.4 percent per year in job creation is anticipated. This rate is sufficient to maintain the unemployment rate at levels comparable to those presently being observed, i.e., in the 5.5-6.0 percent range. Total population is projected to grow at an annual pace of about 1.9 percent, while industrial production should expand by slightly more than 5 percent per year. Because of the sluggishness in world oil markets, a moderate downturn in drilling activity is projected in 1985.

In particular, the rotary rig count will drop well below the 800 threshold before beginning a comeback late in the year. In 1986, a pickup is expected in drilling activity in response to firming energy prices. Inflation should remain quite moderate in the Texas economy over the next two years, with the Consumer Price Index for the state rising by only about 4.5 percent. Housing permits will continue to reflect the excess supply of residential units within the state, and will gradually fall throughout the next two years.

Retail sales expands at a rate of about 8.0 percent per year. The most significant growth is observed in the regulated industries and in the service sector. Additionally, wholesale and retail trade activity is projected to grow at rates above overall state expansion. These findings are consistent with a moderate recovery which is primarily led by consumer spending.

Dr. M. Ray Perryman, Director of Baylor University Forecasting Service and author of the report, noted that the general perception may best be described as one of cautious and restrained optimism. Barring a further dramatic deterioration in world oil markets, the state should avoid a renewed cyclical downturn.

Honda successfully molds Ohio plant to Japanese management style

MARYSVILLE, Ohio (AP) — Unemployment lines bulged with veteran autoworkers when Honda began building cars in America. But the company hired baby sitters, store clerks and farm hands to assemble Accords in rural Ohio.

"I don't know of anyone here who ever built a car before," said Tim Garrett, a spokesman for Honda of America Manufacturing Inc., a subsidiary of Japan's Honda Motor Co. Ltd.

Brent Miles, 25, was a jobless railroad signal installer when he signed up.

Russell Yocom, 21, was pumping gas for $3.35 an hour when he was hired two years ago. "Most of us were recruited right out of high school," he said.

Susie Comer, a 31-year-old mother of three, had worked in a doctor's office and a machine shop.

The first Honda Accord rolled off Marysville's line in 1982. Honda now is building 150,000 a year, and has eclipsed American Motors Corp. as America's No.4 automaker.

The car has been so popular that the average dealer has "absolutely zero" on hand, says the trade weekly Automotive News. Honda contends its workers and their methods are one reason for the success.

THE COMPANY HAS TRIED to mold them to its Japanese style. Parts are inspected by workers before the car is assembled. Management and labor dress alike, in white overalls; they take breaks at the same time and share dining rooms and parking lots.

Unlike Big Three car factories, there are no job classes. Workers maintain their own machines and trade asssignments. All are referred to as "associates," not workers.

"The theory is, What is a human being capable of doing?" Garrett said. "It's that kind of situation."

It's the kind of situation which has confounded organizing attempts by the United Auto Workers union.

"You go through four screenings before they'll hire you, and they pretty well weed out anybody they don't want in those plants," said Joe Tomasi, the director of UAW Region 2B.

The only other major, non-union car assembly operation in the United States also is Japanese-owned — Nissan Motor Co. Ltd.'s plant in Smyrna, Tenn., where pickup trucks are made and car production begins this spring.

HONDA IS THE BIGGER embarrassment for the UAW. Marysville is only 150 miles from Detroit and Honda has been in Ohio for more than five years, at first making motorcycles.

Union organizers claim they are gaining, but they say they want backing from at least half the plant's 2,075 carmakers and 425 motorcycle builders before demanding an election. Only 30 percent support is needed to call one.

Last month, the UAW signed a contract with Honda covering more than 30 workers in the shipping yard and is negotiating on a contract covering three workers in the boiler plant.

The union also is trying to sign up 200 employees next door at Bellemar Parts Industries Inc., 80 percent owned by Honda.

The UAW has stepped up pressure with radio ads, a billboard near the plant and a campaign to have workers swap their green-and-white company work caps for dark blue UAW hats, permitted since a UAW court victory against Honda in 1981. Many have made the switch.

"On day shift, we're in excellent shape in both buildings," veteran UAW organizer Hugh Smith said. "But the night shift, that's the big holdup." Most new workers are hired for the night shift.

DISTANCES MAKE IT DIFFICULT to organize anything here, from unions to high school sports teams. The plant, which draws workers from a dozen counties, is seven miles from Marysville and is surrounded by farms.

The clip-clop of horses pulling black Amish buggies resounds on back roads near the plant. The skyline is church steeples, grain silos — and Honda.

"We're dealing with people who have been baling hay for $2 an hour. They don't understand us," said Bill Woodward, 30, who wears a UAW cap and attends weekly union meetings. "These guys are young, real young. I'm an old man for Honda."

Many workers in blue hats want more money and have concluded that the Japanese-style workplace democracy is a sham.

The morning calisthenics so widely publicized a few years ago are poorly attended now. Unionists claim a recent affirmative worker vote on overtime four days a week was railroaded through because of pressure for more cars from American Honda Motor Co. Inc., the Gardena, Calif.,-based sales and marketing subsidiary.

"They're no different than any non-union plant in the United States. None," said Randy Neighbarger, 36, who works in the welding shop.

"I'm harassed constantly," said Ralph Stidham, 46, who claims to be the most active union man at Honda.

OTHER WORKERS SAY that to keep up with demand, the line speed has been raised far above the original goal of 300 cars a shift.

"Today it was 322," said polisher Don Preston, 26. "Some guys cry, they're so tired at the end of the day."

Garrett said the speedup was made possible by the transfer of 100 workers from motorcycles to cars. "We've never laid anybody off," he said.

Miles and Mrs. Comer said they're against the UAW effort. "They (Honda) handle our problems well enough without a union," Miles said.

"It's a factory, but not like most people think," Mrs. Comer said, adding a statement rarely heard in Detroit: "The assembly line is challenging and exciting."

"Our associates are treated with dignity and respect and have some of the best working conditions in the country," said Honda vice president Al Kinzer.

Honda's top scale is $10.90 an hour, with up to 50 cents an hour more on night shift. Monthly perfect attendance bonuses can reach $48. Workers say a small raise is coming this month.

Disney family company offers to buy major agriculture firm

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

Shamrock Holdings Inc., the private company owned by the Roy E. Disney family, Thursday departed from its traditional broadcasting and real estate business by offering to acquire Central Soya Co., a major agricultural commodities company.

Shamrock proposed to pay $289.5 million cash for the 89.4 percent of Central Soya it does not already own, offering $23 per share for the Fort Wayne, Ind.-based company.

The holding company disclosed that it already owns 4.7 percent of Central Soya's 14 million shares outstanding, and said it has signed agreements to acquire another 5.9 percent from two investment groups.

Central Soya chairman Douglas G. Fleming issued a statement saying that company executives have not yet seen the Shamrock proposal and had no immediate comment.

At first glance, the bid appears out of character for Shamrock, whose other holdings consist of three television stations, eight radio stations, real estate and an investment portfolio.

But in a telephone interview, Shamrock spokesman Clifford Miller characterized the proposal as an "absolutely" sincere bid. "Its core business is excellent," he said, explaining that Shamrock officials consider the long-term prospects of the soy bean business "awfully good."

Miller declined to disclose Shamrock's balance sheet or earnings, but he said the company is confident that it can arrange "traditional financing with some of the usual commercial banks," and also plans to bring in a "couple of equity partners" for the Central Soya acquisition. Miller said Shamrock has sought the advice of the New York investment banking firm of Lazard Freres & Co.

Miller said Shamrock intends to operate Central Soya as a wholly owned subsidiary.

Although he would not identify Shamrock's prospective partners, Miller said the Bass Family of Fort Worth, Texas, is not involved in the proposed takeover. The Disney and Bass families have substantial holdings in Burbank, Calif.-based Walt Disney Productions, and worked together last fall to install the studio's current management team. Roy E. Disney is a son of the studio's co-founders and currently serves as its vice chairman.

Miller said Roy E. Disney has no plans to sell any portion of Shamrock's 5.2 percent stake in the Disney studio to finance the Central Soya bid, nor does Shamrock plan to make a public offering of its shares.

Shamrock released the contents of a letter it sent to Donald P. Eckrich, Central Soya's president and chief executive, outlining the proposed terms and seeking Central Soya's cooperation.

Stanley P. Gold, Shamrock's president and chief operating officer, said in the letter that Shamrock wants to maintain Central Soya's headquarters in Fort Wayne, "and to continue to operate the company's businesses, with the possible exception of branded foods, in their present locations with existing employees. We would also hope to retain current management."

Gold also noted, however, that Shamrock is taking legal steps in a federal court in Indiana "with respect to the enforceablility of the Indiana Takeover Statute." The legal action is apparently intended to head off any defensive action by Central Soya, should the company attempt to invoke anti-takeover measures allowed by state law.

Central Soya reported net sales of $1.73 billion in its last fiscal year ended Aug. 31, 1984, compared to $1.51 billion a year earlier. The company reported net income of $21.87 million for the last fiscal year, compared to $25.20 million a year earlier.

Soybean processing and other commodity operations accounted for about 38 percent of the company's profits last year. Feed and farm supplies accounted for about 33 percent of Central Soya's profits, with food products contributing the remaining 29 percent. The company has divested broiler processing plants and some underperforming operations.

Shamrock's announcement was made after the New York Stock Exchange had closed Thursday. Central Soya's shares closed at $19.25, up 25 cents on a volume of 61,600 shares traded.

'Strange assets' can be good business

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Some of the strangest assets are showing up on the books of many large American corporations. Food companies are suddenly buying oil rigs and computer companies are purchasing hay balers.

They are not on a buying binge for themselves, however. These corporations are among a group of new entrants in the booming business of lease financing — buying equipment for other companies that will rent the equipment back.

The Olin Corp., a maker of chemicals, brass, ammunition and skis, went into the leasing business a few months ago and will buy virtually any type of equipment for its new customers: computers, drill presses, jet aircraft and everything but the walls and roof of a new steel mill.

Other newcomers to the field include the United Technologies Corp., which last May formed a subsididary to expand beyond leasing the helicopters it makes, and major consumer goods companies such as Phillip Morris, General Mills, General Foods and Pillsbury.

IBM ALSO HAS BRANCHED out over the past year to take onto its own books a potpourri of non-computer items for lease to others.

"You can't go to a cocktail party these days without running into someone who is in the leasing business, or who wants to know how to get in," said Gary Wendt, executive vice president of the General Electric Credit Corp., the largest, and one of the oldest, leasing companies.

In just the past year, the number of equipment-leasing companies listed as members of the American Association of Equipment Lessors has jumped to 950 from 800.

The amount of new leases each year has jumped from $43.5 billion in 1980 to an estimated $74.4 billion in 1984 and Michael Fleming, president of the leasing association, expects it to approach $88 billion this year.

A STUDY BY BRIMMER & Co., a consulting firm, has noted: "Lease financing has expanded to the point where it is the most important single source of funds to support business expenditures for capital equipment."

The big appeal for many of the new entrants is lowering the parent company's taxes. Leasing companies can get the benefit of the 10 percent investment tax credit and accelerated-depreciation write-off for the equipment placed with their customers.

The parent company of a leasing company that purchases a $1 million piece of equipment, for instance, would be able to reduce its taxes by $100,000 from the investment tax credit — and deduct from taxable income approximately $142,000 in the first year for depreciation. At the same time, the leasing company would be charging annual rents that would enable it to recoup most, if not all, of its costs before the lease is up.

THE TAX BENEFITS ARE often multiplied on big-ticket items, such as airliners and railroad equipment, which are the two largest leasing markets. In such so-called leveraged lease financing, leasing companies turn to the banks for loans to pay more than half of the costs — but the leasing companies still receive all of the tax benefits, plus deduct the interest they pay on the loans.

Also, "it's an attractive business to be in," said " Michael Allik , a group president of the Dart & Kraft Corp., which has acquired two leasing companies in recent years. Said William Strachan, president of Olin Financial Services Inc., " It's just like banking; it's another way to make money."

The business judgments that can make or break a leasing company: determining the creditworthiness of customers, pricing the deal and figuring out what the value of the equipment will be during, and after, the life of the lease.

SOME LEASING subsidiaries of large corporations minimize risk by entering into joint ventures with established players. Florida Progress, the holding company for the Florida Power Company, for instance, formed the Progress Leasing Corp. last year, a corporation that could not use the investment tax credits available to it from the purchase of new equipment could sell those credits to another company.

From the customer's standpoint, leasing is appealing because there is an indirect return of the tax benefits through reduced rental costs. Many leases, especially those on lower-cost equipment, also allow the customer to claim the investment tax credit. The leasing subsidiary still gains in such cases because it prices the rental equipment at a profit, and the company can make money from reselling or leasing it again later on.

Customers also lease, as opposed to borrowing from a bank to purchase the equipment, because there is little or no down payment, maturities of leases can be longer and payment charges can be fixed, rather than floating with interest rates.

LEASING IS ESPECIALLY popular for high-technology equipment, which can become obsolete in a short period of time. Even companies that are taxpayers and could receive the tax benefits of ownership may choose to lease.

Companies in the so-called rust bowl of mid-America, where aging industrial giants are losing money or are barely profitable, are among the leasing industry's best customers. As a non-taxpayer, the Inland Steel Co., is "a prototype lessee" said Theodore A. Myers, its vice president for finance.

Post to buy 17 percent of Cowles Media

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The Washington Post Co. said Thursday it has agreed to acquire 17 percent of Cowles Media Co., publisher of the Minneapolis Star and Tribune newspaper, from dissident Cowles stockholder Kingsley H. Murphy Jr.

Terms of the transaction were not disclosed. The thinly traded Cowles Media stock jumped $40 a share Thursday, with a block in excess of 10,000 shares changing hands at $120 a share, according to Gordon Bowles, a stockbroker with Piper Jaffray & Hopwood.

At that price, the cost to The Post Co. would have been about $64 million.

According to documents filed in a lawsuit by Murphy's family against Cowles Media, Kingsley Murphy said The Post made a preliminary offer in early January to buy his family's shares for about $45 million to $60 million, or $85 to $113 a share.

A spokesman for The Post Co. said Thursday the purchase of Murphy's stock was for investment purposes only. Securities industry experts said they believe The Post Co. purchased the 17 percent block with the hope that it might be able to acquire the rest of Cowles Media at some point in the future.

While about half of Cowles Media stock is held in a trust and the company repeatedly has said it is not for sale, speculation that the company might be sold has increased recently. The Cowles family decided in December to sell another company it controls, The Des Moines Register and Tribune Co., after making similar statements that it was not for sale.

Gannett Co. Inc., publisher of USA Today and the nation's largest newspaper chain, was the winning bidder for The Register's newspaper operations, with an aggressive $200 million offer.

The announcement by The Post Co. Thursday came just one day before First Boston Corp., the Des Moines Register and Tribune Co.'s investment banker, is to receive preliminary bids from parties interested in buying a 14.3 percent block of Cowles Media stock owned by The Des Moines Register. The Cowles Media stock was not part of the Gannett purchase.

The company is trying to decide, as it moves ahead with its liquidation, whether to sell the stock to a single party or distribute it broadly to Register stockholders.

Register Chairman David Kruidenier, who also is chairman of Cowles Media, said Thursday he hopes a decision on what to do with the 14.3 percent block will be made by March 25, when The Register's directors meet.

Several securities industry experts said they believe The Post will bid aggressively for the 14.3 percent block, because a winning bid would give The Post a 31 percent stake in Cowles Media. "If they end up with 31 percent, I'd be surprised if they didn't end up with the whole thing eventually," said one informed observer.

Cowles Media Chairman Kruidenier issued the following statement to Cowles employees in Minneapolis Thursday:

"We have learned this morning that The Washington Post Co. has agreed to purchase the 17.1 percent interest in Cowles Media Co. held by Kingsley H. Murphy Jr. and his family. Financial details of the transaction were not disclosed.

"This purchase in no way changes the position of the voting trust (owners of more than 50 percent of Cowles Media voting shares): the company has not been for sale and is not for sale now. While we have had no discussions with The Post about their purchase, we are sure that they understand our position about the future of Cowles Media.

"The stock owned by the Murphy family has been for sale for a number of months. We are glad to have the matter resolved and are delighted that a company of the stature of The Post wants to make this long-term investment in this company."

Kruidenier also said Thursday that an announcement Feb. 26 by Cowles Media that it plans to invest about $110 million in a new satellite plant and presses can be regarded as symbolic of the company's plans to remain under the current ownership.

Metals futures firm ordered to liquidate

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

Acting in response to a lawsuit filed by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, a San Francisco federal judge late Wednesday ordered the liquidation of First International Trading Corp. But an attorney for the San Francisco seller of gold and silver futures contracts said Thursday that FITC plans to appeal the ruling because it has filed for protection from creditors under federal bankruptcy laws.

In its suit, the commission charged that FITC, with offices in Irvine, Calif., Dallas and Houston, collected about $15 million from 2,500 investors in the last 18 months through illegal sales of deferred-delivery contracts for gold and silver.

U.S. District Judge Eugene Lynch also ordered FITC president Christopher Rubenstrunk to with draw the company's bankruptcy petition by 3 p.m. Friday or face criminal contempt charges. Hours after Lynch placed FITC in temporary receivership on Feb. 27, the company, incorporated in Nevada, filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code in a Las Vegas, Nev., court.

In his ruling, Lynch said the bankruptcy action was a "sham" designed to stave off receivership and said there has been a "systematic attempt by FITC and its officers to conceal records and assets and to impede this court and its receiver in this action."

Rubenstrunk received checks totaling $964,273 between August and February, according to documents filed by the CFTC in U.S. District Court in San Francisco. The checks were drawn from investor funds "without any reasonable explanation or indication that they were appropriate," according to the court-appointed receiver, San Francisco attorney Frederick Wyle.

According to court records, FITC required investors to make a down payment for fixed quantities of precious metals to be delivered within five years at a predetermined price. Lynch ruled that these deferred-delivery contracts are illegal because they were not offered through a regulated commodity exchange. The ruling said FITC also violated federal anti-fraud laws and misrepresented itself to the public as a registered commodities broker.

Lawrence Merryman, an attorney representing FITC, said, "We plan to ask the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals to prohibit Judge Lynch from ordering Rubenstrunk to dismiss the bankruptcy."

FITC filed for bankruptcy protection because the company "intends to pay everybody off," Merryman said in a phone interview Thursday.

FTC chief calls for change in merger policy

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Federal Trade Commission Chairman James C. Miller III Thursday called for an easing of restraints on hostile corporate mergers, blaming the existing regulatory system for some management defense tactics.

Miller said the problem was not the number of takeovers, but certain forms of management resistance. Tactics such as paying "greenmail," or huge ransoms to speculators, and using "shark repellants"-actions to discourage raiders by making takeovers more difficult-are "manifestations" of the regulatory system, he said.

"We, as a society" should consider either lessening the restraints on takeovers that enable such tactics, or regulating the resistance to takeovers, Miller said in a meeting with reporters, adding that he would prefer the first route.

We "need a competitive market for assets and capital" to "keep management efficient, to keep managers on their toes," said Miller, echoing arguments expressed by the Reagan administration in recent congressional testimony.

Some critics of management defense tactics argue that they enrich the wealth of individual raiders at the expense of other stockholders, and may prevent mergers that would benefit consumers. Critics of the takeover artists argue that they divert capital from more productive uses, and divert management's attention from long-term goals to short-term threats.

A House subcommittee held hearings recently to examine the arguments and to consider whether a legislative response is needed.

Miller cautioned that regulating takeovers lies beyond the narrow scope of the FTC. But, he said, "We have been reviewing these matters and have identified some problems.

"We need to look at how the regulatory structure gives rise to greenmail," said Miller, one of the administration's most active proponents of deregulation.

He said that objectionable defense tactics arise out of "a portfolio of restraints," such as federal requirements that reports be filed as stock is acquired and waiting periods between filing forms and buying stock.

The 1968 Williams Act, which governs the procedures involved in the takeover of a publicly held company, is a "potpourri of restraints," Miller said.

Various provisions of the act, together with "various interpretations" by the Securities and Exchange Commission, create incentives to corporate defense tactics that cause public concern, he said. "Greenmail is a manifestation of an institutional arrangement that we might take a look at."

He also suggested reviewing the tax code to determine if it creates incentives for takeovers.

The current wave of takeover activity does not reflect any weakness in the antitrust laws or administration enforcement policies, the FTC chairman said.

Miller also said he opposes Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige's proposal to repeal part of the antitrust laws. Baldrige recently proposed repealing Section 7 of the Clayton Act to improve America's competitive position in world trade by allowing more mergers that would improve economic efficiencies.

"The antitrust laws serve us well," Miller said, adding that the courts and federal agencies evaluate proposed mergers by analyzing foreign as well as domestic competition, and by considering the possibility of improved efficiencies.

Ford replacing silicon with galium arsenide

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

Ford Motor Co. says it will make and sell semiconductors made of gallium arsenide, a promising material expected to replace silicon in many types of integrated circuits.

Ford, which now designs and oversees the manufacture of silicon-based chips for use in its own cars and aerospace products, will be the first high-volume producer of the exotic new chips for sale on the open market.

Gallium arsenide can transmit electronic signals up to 10 times faster than silicon, making it attractive for powerful computers and other uses. It is expected to be used in the next generation of so-called supercomputers in this country and Japan.

However, experts say the material — a compound of the elements gallium and arsenic — is expensive and tricky to make into chips on a high-volume basis.

Ford is to announce details of its production plans Friday when it opens a $33 million factory in Colorado Springs. The facotry will be operated by its 3-year-old high-technology subsidiary, Ford Microelectronics Inc. Ford says the plant is the first designed for low-cost, high-yield production of gallium arsenide circuits.

Silicon is the most commonly used conducting medium for microchips. One limit on the speed and capacity of memory devices is the speed at which a semiconductor permits electrons to travel through it.

Ultra-fast computers now on the drawing boards "are requiring performance levels that are out of the reach of silicon," said Anthony Livingston, sales and marketing vice president at Gigabit Logic Inc. of Newbury Park, Calif., the first company to specialize in production of gallium-arsenide chips for outside use.

Ford, one of the recently rumored buyers of computer maker Sperry Corp., has become a major designer and producer of microchips for under-the-hood computers that control emissions, engine timing and other functions in today's cars. As the auto companies have gained expertise in electronics and industrial automation, they have been diversifying into high-technology areas.

Ford's microelectronics unit was formed in 1982 largely to design proprietary semiconductors for Ford Aerospace & Communications Corp., a maker of satellites and various defense products, and for Ford's car engines. Its president is John R. Wallace, a former executive at Intel Corp., the Santa Clara, Calif., semiconductor giant.

Despite such experienced executives, Alan E. Heimlich of SSP Inc., a semiconductor industry consulting company in Santa Clara, called Ford's move a gamble because of inherent manufacturing difficulties with the material.

"Every major semiconductor manufacturer has had research projects in gallium arsenide," Heimlich said. "For Ford to move into that market without having produced a hell of a lot of silicon circuits, I'd be very dubious about their ability to produce gallium arsenide (chips) in large volume."

Most production of gallium arsenide material has been by companies using it internally, in microwave transistors, fiber-optic systems and a few other specialized uses, or for military purposes. In addition to being fast, gallium arsenide tolerates a wider range of temperatures than silicon, needs less power and performs better in the presence of radiation, a key military advantage.

As the technology advances and costs come down — a gallium arsenide wafer today costs $200, or 15 times as much as a silicon one, Ford says — wider uses are seen for the material in computers, telecommunications equipment, industrial instruments, testing equipment and other products that demand high-speed operation.

Market research puts the total 1983 gallium-arsenide market at $75 million, two-thirds of it from the military. It is expected to reach about $7 billion by 1990, when gallium arsenide would account for 5 percent to 7 percent of the semiconductor market and the military share would have dropped to one-third.

Among Gigabit Logic's customers is Cray Research Inc. of Minneapolis, the leading producer of supercomputers, which plans to use gallium arsenide chips in its Cray 3, which is due out in 1987 and will be the first computer so equipped. Livingston said Japan's much-publicized "fifth generation" computer now under development would require the speed afforded by gallium-arsenide chips.

MCA gives FBI evidence on counterfeit tapes

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Executives of Los Angeles-based entertainment giant MCA Inc. Thursday turned over to the FBI evidence of a large-scale illegal tape duplicating operation that has distributed suspected counterfeit audio cassettes to major record chains around the United States.

Major U.S. record companies have been complaining for years that counterfeiting costs them and the recording artists millions of dollars annually in lost revenues. Despite the industry's much-heralded anti-counterfeiting efforts, however, there have been few cases involving major distributors or retailers.

The current counterfeiting operation is centered in the New York area and apparently targets records by artists on the MCA and Motown record labels. It is believed to be different from others uncovered in recent years because it focuses not on a few current hit albums but rather on the record companies' older releases, the so-called "mid-line" products that are usually sold at reduced prices.

The suspected counterfeit cassettes found by MCA are of albums by such well-known performers as Neil Diamond, Elton John, the Who, Tom Petty, Olivia Newton-John, Jimmy Buffett, Steely Dan, Stevie Wonder and Diana Ross.

MCA's evidence includes suspected counterfeit cassettes bought last week by MCA's internal audit manager and a Los Angeles Times reporter at record stores in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Los Angeles. The reporter had previously uncovered apparently counterfeit MCA cassettes during an investigation of the budget record business.

"We have reason to believe that this organization is counterfeiting most of our big mid-line titles, and the number of units already sold could reach hundreds of thousands to millions, with losses (of potential revenue) in the millions of dollars," MCA Records President Irving Azoff said.

MCA Inc., parent of the giant Universal Studios complex, reported 1984 profits of $8.8 million for its MCA Records Group, which distributes MCA and Motown records in the United States.

The sixth-largest U.S. record distributor, MCA Records "depends heavily on our mid-line catalog for sales, so something like this is really a threat to our existence," MCA Senior Vice President Charles Morgan said.

Morgan met with the FBI in Newark, N.J., Thursday morning and turned over cassettes gathered during the company's investigation. Larry Playford, an FBI agent in the Newark office, said that the agency will look into the matter.

MCA executives say that many of the cassettes given to the FBI are easily identifiable as counterfeits because of their poorly reproduced artwork, incorrect labeling and in some instances almost comical misspellings. For example, one Neil Diamond cassette bought at a New York store lists MCA Records' address as Universal City "Clifornia."

"They are amazingly bad, not even close to the real thing," said Jeff Adamoff, MCA Records' director of creative services. "Even on our worst day, blindfolded, we do better than this."

An angry Azoff said: "In all my years in the music business, I've never seen more blatantly obvious counterfeit product, and I'm shocked to find it in so many (record retailers) in such large numbers."

Times sources say that the operation has been going on for at least six months. "My distributors told me they had sold 6 million units of the MCA stuff," one manufacturer of budget cassettes said. "There are very legitimate distributors spreading it around."

Many of the distributors and stores may be selling the suspected counterfeits unwittingly. Sources said that the cassettes are being offered to distributors and record chains with the explanation that they are part of an MCA sale last summer of nearly 5 million discontinued or "cutout" records.

It is a common, although controversial, industry practice for record companies to sell huge amounts of cutouts to a network of budget record distributors, often for as little at 10 cents apiece. One controversial aspect of the practice is that artists receive no royalty on records sold as cutouts, on the theory that they are virtually worthless.

Cutouts are usually marked in various ways by the record company, either by having a corner cut off an album jacket or having a burn mark or a hole drilled in a cassette case. The budget distributors then sell the records and tapes to retailers at prices ranging from 50 cents to $3 each, and the retailers in turn sell them from specially marked bins at prices ranging from 99 cents to $4.99.

MCA officials contend that none of the albums that it believes have been counterfeited were part of that cutout sale. But The Times has obtained catalogs of several budget record distributors around the country offering cassettes of the albums at prices ranging from $1.50 to $2.50.

"Our lowest wholesale price is substantially higher than that on those titles," said Terry Reagan, director of MCA's corporate internal audit department.

Some sources speculated that at least a few legitimate copies of the albums that MCA believes have been illegally duplicated somehow were included in last summer's cutout sale, thus giving the counterfeiters a "cover" to produce great quantities of those titles.

Azoff said that MCA Records would immediately begin placing an inaudible tone on all of its tapes so that future counterfeits will be easily detectable. In addition, he has instructed MCA's sales representatives to check all accounts.

One distributor of the suspected counterfeits is a company called Golden Circle Inc., based in Stamford, Conn. Golden Circle is part of Tapecom Inc., which bills itself in Billboard magazine's international buyer's guide as "New England's largest cassette duplicator."

Accompanied by a Times reporter, MCA's internal audit manager Allen Clement last week bought suspected counterfeits of MCA and Motown artists from specially marked Golden Circle racks in New York-area record stores. Clement and the reporter also went to the Tapecom-Golden Circle plant and, through an intermediary, bought 49 cassettes for a total of $87.19 cents.

A spokesman for Tapecom-Golden Circle told The Times Thursday that the company sells "some of our own product that we produce here, some imports, some cutouts or surplus amounts from the major companies."

When asked where Tapecom had obtained the MCA cassettes, the spokesman said: "I can't tell you that off-hand" and referred the reporter to the company's owner, Gene Tornatore, who said that they were "imported products" that he had bought from a company called Recording Specialists in Kingston, Jamaica.

Tracor, Inc. has $6.6 million in contracts

AUSTIN (SWN) — Tracor, Inc. has received contracts totaling $6.6 million from McDonnell Aircraft Company, St. Louis, Mo., to provide countermeasures dispensers, tooling and test equipment, and technical manuals for the F-15 aircraft being built by McDonnell Aircraft Company under contract to Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Aeronautical Systems Division, Ohio.

Don F. Carrier, group vice president for Tracor Aerospace, said the contracts are for the production of countermeasures dispensers for fiscal 1985 aircraft, and for installation on fielded F-15 aircraft. In addition, special tooling and test equipment will be manufactured, and technical manuals will be produced.

The programs will be under the management of Stephen L. Addington, program manager, Aircraft EW Countermeasures, and the hardware will be produced in Tracor's Austin, Texas facilities under the management of Jesse South, executive director, Manufacturing Division.

Production deliveries will begin in April, 1986.

Tracor, Inc., headquartered in Austin, Texas, is an international technological products and services company with 1984 annual sales of $515.7 million. The Company is a major technical contractor in sonar, communications, and aviation programs; a leader in the development and production of passive electronic countermeasures systems and military telecommunications terminals; and a major manufacturer of scientific instruments and electrical and electromechanical components.

Susan Clark and Emanuel Lewis are two of the stars of ABC-TV's "Webster." Ms. Clark's husband Alex Karras also stars in the situation comedy.

Superwoman dream came true

By Jane Ardmore
King Features Syndicate

To have an exciting career, a romantic marriage, the joy of motherhood, independence, two or three jobs, "it's the superwoman dream of many of my peers," says Susan Clark.

She is leaning back thoughtfully in her chair in her office at Georgian Bay Productions, the company she and her husband, Alex Karras, founded at the beginning of their relationship — long before they were married.

"We did everything backward," she explains in that poised, patrician way of hers. "We met working together on 'Babe,'" the film in which Ms. Clark's portrayal of America's great woman athlete Babe Didrikson Zaharias brought her an Emmy Award as best actress, "and married five years later.

"But what we did first was share the responsibility of our own production company — which you'll have to agree is an interesting way to start a relationship.

"...All of us — men and women — fall...into this old deal of role-playing like who should take out the garbage... and who should do this and who should do that."

The star of ABC-TV's "Webster," continues, "Alex and I didn't really know each other at all! He had been a famed football player for 13 or 14 years, something of which I had no knowledge. I had studied acting at the Royal Academy in London. I went to England from my home in Toronto, Canada, when I was 17 and had those great years of living and learning in London. He thought I was some kind of classicial actress. So we met on a kind of middle ground, which I think very healthy for a new relationship which eventually became a second marriage for both of us.

"What was wonderful for the company and for me was that Alex has a very interesting down-to-earth practical, totally unromantic view of Hollywood. Total reality. It's a business like any other business. It's all about deals, not glamour. Who wants to sit around and wait for some agent to call and tell you that you can work? So we started our own company, and we've been working at what we wanted to do ever since.

"Again, there were the old ...prejudices to overcome. In the beginning, it seemed he might be better at finances — which he isn't really; and I'd be better at creative matters — which I am not. My training was in the theater, and I'm OK with beginning-middle-to-the-end projects, which a play or a movie is. With something like a television series, Alex is far more creative."

She reflects, "The success of 'Webster' isn't in the least accidental. Alex planned every step of it. After we'd produced a number of films and worked together a number of times, including the film 'Made in America,' suddenly the producing community of Hollywood came to us and asked us to work together as if we were Burns and Allen or Laurel and Hardy.

"I am the kind of person who justs floats from project to project and lets life carry me along. Not Alex.

"Demographically, he was looking for a sound concept, a family show because if it hits, it has longevity; a show to which I would bring a woman's audience; a show to which he would bring in a male audience who can identify with an ex-football player; and a show that that darling young man, Emmanuel Lewis, would bring in the kids — which is pretty much what happened."

It didn't always look as if it might. Like many successful series, "Webster" in its debut was hardly the critic's darling.

"I can't ever remember getting such bad reviews," Ms. Clark says candidly. "But because our production company gets a credit on the series, we're given a lot of imput on what is going on and within a very short time, the trend reversed and we had built up a solid following.

"This is lovely because working on a series which is being shot in our own town, I've never been so organized in my life. I'd never before known what, in September, I'd be doing in June. Now I do know and that is very pleasant, especially with a 5-year-old daughter who is so much a part of our lives."

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. I would like to know about Madonna.

J.A. Howell
Fresno, Calif.

A. Madonna Louise Ciccone was born in Bay City, Mich., 24 years ago, the oldest daughter of six children of a Chrysler engineer and his wife. When Madonna was 6, her mother died, which devastated her. It also made her the woman of the house.

That changed two years later when her father announced that he planned to marry the family's housekeeper. Shocked and feeling extremely rejected, she threw herself into various worlds of make-believe to escape: She became addicted to old movies, acted in school plays and began to study ballet, which she soon saw as a world of sophistication and glamour — and her ticket out.

After graduating from high school, she attended the University of Michigan on a dance scholarship. While there, she made a distinct impression by turning up for dance classes in torn leotards and tights adorned with safety pins — pre-punk fashion. Five semesters later, she headed for New York, where she joined a sub-troupe of the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater, followed by a stretch with Pearl Lang, a Martha Graham disciple.

Shortly after, though, she went out on her own looking for jobs in which she could sing as well as dance. One led to a trip to Paris as a backup singer, but feeling lonely and out of place, she returned to New York and began to put a band together, helped by a drummer who was a former boyfriend from the University of Michigan.

Another boyfriend, a disco D.J., impressed with her voice, produced a demo for her and arranged a deal with a record company. The results: her two hit albums, "Madonna" and "Like a Virgin," the latter number one on both the singles and albums charts as we go to press.

Next up, Madonna takes on the movies. She has a singing role in the currrent "Visionquest" and co-stars in "Desperately Seeking Susan" due for release at the end of the month.

Another film, a proposed punk version of "Oliver Twist," has been mentioned, but according to a spokesperson, it's far from definite. What is definite is that she wants to do other movies.

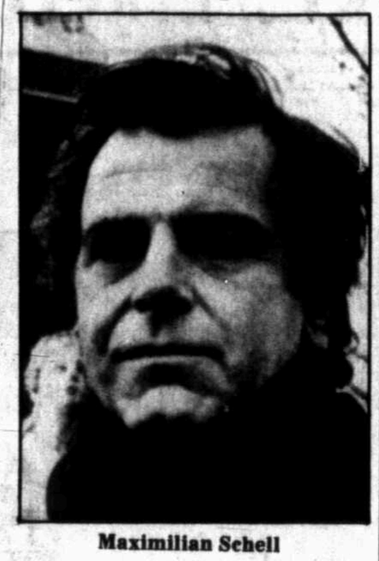

Also planned is a two-month national tour set to start next month. Don't expect another album for a while, though; her record company is convinced that there are a number of hit singles yet to come from "Like a Virgin."

Q. I'd like to know what Maximilian Schell has been doing lately in films. Does he live here in the U.S.A.?

A fan
Brigantine, N.J.

A. He's been in Russia lately filming the 10-hour NBC miniseries "Peter the Great" due to air, tentatively, in November. He also directed and appears in "Marlene," a documentary about Marlene Dietrich, and has a new film, "Man Under Suspicion," that is the German entry for best foreign film at the Academy Awards.

He doesn't live in the U.S., although he does visit from time to time. He lives in Switzerland but also has a family farm in Austria and an apartment in Germany.

Maximilian Schell

Q. Please tell me if Menudo will be doing any concerts in Hawaii in 1985.

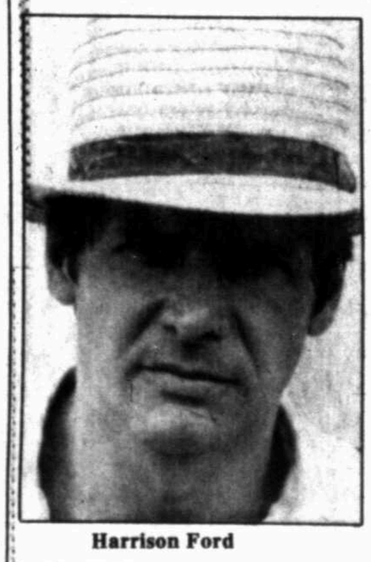

Deana Medeiros
Maui, Hawaii

A. Yes, they will; they're due in the islands in April. They're in Brazil right now, then they move on to New York, Hawaii, Japan, Italy and France.

To further their international base, they've also just released their first album in English, they have an album in Portuguese due out this month and one in Italian due out this summer. You'll also be seeing them on TV: Their commercials for Pepsi start this month on the networks, and in May they do a guest appearance on "The Love Boat."

Anything you'd like to know about prominent personalities? Write Josie: SUNDAY WOMAN magazine, 235th E. 45th St., New York, N.Y., 10017. Sorry we can't answer any letters individually.

Harrison Ford

Q. I would like to know about Harrison Ford's new movie, "Witness," and whether there will be an Indy III?

Soddy-Daisy, Tenn.

A. "Witness," which opened in February, is about a Philadelphia police captain searching for a murderer in Pennsylvania Amish country. Ford is said to like it a lot.

It's also a breakthrough for him: "It's being presented as an action film," explains a source at the film's studio, Paramount, "but it really is more of a love story. It's the first time Harrison has spent more time looking lovingly at a woman (Kelly McGillis) than at some ancient object."

You can, though, expect him back as Indiana Jones for a third installment. "He's committed to it," explains the studio source, "but the script hasn't been written yet, so we don't know what the plot will be." Director Steven Spielberg and producer George Lucas are expected back. It will, most likely, go into production next year for an '87 release.

Q. A friend of mind bet $200 that Loretta Lynn was married to George Jones, but I say that she has had only one husband, the one she married at 13. Who is right?

Joe Newell
Gander, Nfld., Canada

A. Collect your money. Loretta Lynn has been married to Oliver Vanetta Lynn, known more commonly as Doolittle or Mooney, since the age of 13. The story of their courtship and marriage and his encouragement of her singing career was chronicled in the film "Coal Miner's Daughter." Your friend may be thinking of Tammy Wynette, who was married to George Jones.

Loretta Lynn

Q. I'm a fan of the series "V." Is it going to stay on the air?

Y.T., Fredericton
N.B., Canada

A. As it stands now, yes. The series was picked up for six more episodes to carry it through the rest of the season, and the time slot was changed, which may or may not help it. It's too early to tell, though, whether or not it will make it onto next season's schedule. That decision will be made in the next couple of weeks.

SUSAN

Katie was as much a surprise as anything else in the Clark/Karras relationship. They had started their company with $10,000, a lot of finger-crossing and had sold the first project, "Jimmy B and Andre," to CBS.

They went out on their own to get winter location shots in Detroit and then finished the film in the summer of 1979. "Our child was conceived during production, and I was so nervous about producing (the picture) I kept thinking I had the flu and didn't have an idea I was pregnant until we got back to Los Angeles.

"What a wonderful surprise! It was interesting. Nature has such an incredible way with hormones and all of the changes that happen.

"I think Katie was 7 or 8 months old before I realized that in addition to my portion of work at the office, I had assumed almost the entire care for this baby.

" It took me until she was about a year old before I could say to myself, 'You stupid woman, what are you doing? Paying 50 percent of everything...working 50 percent of the time and not getting any break on baby care!' Well, the point was that I was breast feeding so there wasn't all that much Alex could do. He couldn't take her and shove a bottle in her mouth. But what was interesting was my reaction to the situation and the fact that I had calmly thought that's what I should be doing.

"It's absurd that today's women feel we must pay these dues! I spoke with Alex. 'I think we'd better work this out,' I said, 'I don't think this is fair.' 'You're absolutely right,' he said. 'You didn't mention it before. Now let's put it in the perspective of a business.' The same thing suffragettes and feminists have been saying for over 100 years: take the role of the mother, the housekeeper, the wife and equate what that job means in the market place.

"SO WE kind of worked it out and now I am able to take several steps back because father and daughter have established a wonderful relationship. A lot of women told me it would happen as our child grew out of babyhood, and obviously, they were right."

Also, Ms. Clark is a woman who is essentially fair-minded and remarkably objective. She realized that for her, Katie was the greatest thing that had ever happened...a very wanted child. "I had an incredible love affair with this baby, and Alex was feeling slightly out in left field for a while. He had already had five children, so that, thrilled as I'm sure he was, it was not the same big exciting deal as it was for me. The same with marriage itself.

"We did marry after Katie. I hadn't thought I'd want to marry again. I was married first in 1970 to a writer-producer, and although we'd had a wonderful relationship before marriage, it didn't last afterward."

She continues, "I think I've always wondered...The reason to marry is to have a family. All that 'until death do us part' is probably true if you've raised a family. For Alex it was to college and then a family. Most football players do marry young. It's kind of like the army. They take these young men in their 20s who have promise and prowess and shove them through the process of induction into one of the teams of the NFL, and these kids, like actors and dancers, are very good at one thing and very inexperienced in everything else. So that they marry their childhood sweethearts, have families early, and who thinks at 18 or 20 what they are going to feel and think in another 20 years?

"Football took so much of Alex's early life. He came from Iowa. His wife was an Iowan, and they had 16 years together. Then a year or so on and off and then we got together. It became a very different kind of relationship for me being with him because he was already practical and organized about futures and commitments and life; our romance really came later."

She smiles, "You know, you have to be taught to be romantic. It is kind of a learned thing — how to prepare for the great seduction, how to order the beautiful dinner and the right wine and chose the right flowers. It was a life experience that came to Alex in his late 30s, and it's been lovely."

MS. CLARK adds, "and his other children have become a part of our life too. He was separated but not divorced when we met, and the kids had to go through the awful traumas children endure because of divorce. It is tough. I think most of that has all been worked out now. The youngest three are very close to us. I've sort of grown up with Carolyn. She's 18, and I've known her since she was 10; George is 16, and Reynold is 11. The two older boys are pretty much on their own now, but these three come to visit us all the time."

Ms. Clark says she had always wanted to act. "I wasn't good enough a musician to become professional. I was invited out of ballet because in those days when you reached a certain eight you were out. Today I would have been fine. What's 5-foot, 9-inches? But not then. So I had to be an actress. The idea was totally mine. By 9, I was into drama classes. At 11, I tried to get into the Toronto Children's Players' Theater and was refused because I was too young. They took me finally at 13."

She continues, "I don't know where the dream came from or why, but I had a wonderful mother who indulged me in any kind of learning experience and was always supportive. There is a whole school of thought that feels children act out their parents' implicit fantasies, and mother was a writer who wished she had written the great American novel. My mother instinctively felt it was important for a women to be self-sufficient and educated and a partner to her mate, rather than someone who must be taken care of.

"Of course, today a girl doesn't have to be an actress or a doctor to have a career. You can be anything. When I became an actress, under the tutelage of Dorothy Goulding at Children's Theater, that meant art. Any person who acted for money was vulgar. It was the Isadora Duncan, Marcel Marceau school of expressionism.

There is something marvelously calm, collected and humorous about Susan Clark. You have the feeling she improvises vastly with each year of living. "Oh, yes, I hope so,"

"But personally," she says, "I feel life keeps getting better. You keep dropping away all the baloney of the should — all the things you feel you should do."

There are a minimum of shoulds for Ms. Clark. People keep asking her how in the world she manages a 24-hour-day marriage. How does she keep her marriage thriving while she's working with her husband? She explains.

"ALEX AND I are surrounded at the studio by 30 to 100 people. We also have many different projects. During the day, we have different appointments, often take different cars, give different interviews, have totally different ways of studying.

"I think it would have been very difficult for us to work together on 'Webster' had we not worked together for ourselves."

Morita says positive thinking helped him keep going

TOKYO (AP) — Actor Noriyuki "Pat" Morita dropped out of college as a pre-med student, dabbled in computers and corporate life and gave it all up for comedy.

"I had no degree, no possibility of further advancement, I was overweight and pushing 30," said the 53-year-old actor who's been nominated for an Academy Award as best supporting actor for his role of Mr. Miyagi in "The Karate Kid."

Morita's career has been a rocky one, and he credits "positive thinking" with helping him to stick it out. He skyrocketed to fame with his portrayal of Arnold, the happy-go-lucky proprietor of the drive-in restaurant in "Happy Days," the hit 1970s' TV series.

That led to appearances on talk shows and a starring role in "Mr. T. and Tina." When the TV series was axed after four episodes, he slipped into obscurity. Or, as Morita puts it, "I went back to square one."

Morita grew up a Nisei, or second generation American of Japanese ancestry. The son of itinerant fruit pickers in northern California, he spent most of his childhood in hospitals, suffering from spinal tuberculosis.

When he was finally able to walk at age 11, his movement was restricted in a different way: He was surrounded by barbed wire, along with 120,000 other Japanese-Americans who were interned in relocation camps during World War II.

After college and corporate life, Morita spent eight years on the club circuit in southern California. Then he began supporting himself by doing commercials and character roles on television, eventually snaring his role on "Happy Days."

"My world really dropped out from under me in 1980," he recalled in a recent interview in Tokyo, where he was promoting his latest film. A mudslide destroyed his house, his mother-in-law died and a five-month actors' strike left him "devastated."

That's when he began using positive thinking to keep him going. "Every time I began to despair... something would always break," he said. "Everytime I bounce back, I always seem to bounce back a little bit higher. This time, I really hit the top of the vama (mountain)."

He fled to Hawaii to recover his "spiritual and emotional self" and in 1983, "along came 'The Karate Kid,' and the rest is history."

Youngsters need lessons from a pro

By GEORGIA TEMPLE

Georgia Temple

Presentations by the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Midland Community Concerts last week offered Midlanders the opportunity to hear music which spanned centuries presented by the young and the experienced.

The National Young Artists Competition winners returned this week to play selections which encompassed close to 200 years of musical genius from four countries — Finland, Germany, America and Russia.

Works performed included:

—Lucia Lin, 22, the allegro moderato movement from Jean Sibelius' Concerto in D Minor for violin and Orchestra;

—Remi Fujisawa, 23, the allegro movement from Ludwig van Beethoven's "Emperor" Piano Concerto No. 5 in E flat, Opus 73;

—Maya Iwabuci, 17, three movements of Samuel Barber's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Opus 14;

—And Lori Sims, 17, two movements of Peter Ilyitch Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor, Opus 23.

THEN, MCC brought the Max Morath Quintet to town for an evening of American popular music and how it got that way in "Pop!! Goes the Music." The 59-year-old Morath has been performing professionally since the early 1960s.

Both concerts were enjoyable.

Although those who performed from the NYAC were all winners musically, they could take lessons in stage presence from Morath.

Admittedly, Morath's joking manner and playing style interspersed with tidbits of information about the trends in American popular music beginning around the turn of the century is not in the tradition associated with a classical performance; however, his ease, comfortability and charm certainly are.

For example, Miss Iwabuci of Santa Monica, Calif., has an amazing talent on the violin, but her playing of the Barber piece, with the exception of two tiny smiles, was void of expression. She also has a habit of turning her mouth down. This detracts from her performances for those sitting close because she looks so bored.

OFTEN YOUNG performers don't quite know what to do with themselves when the symphony is playing and they are not. Those sitting at a piano have it easier than those standing with an instrument. Perhaps it would help, especially the violinists, to watch such performers as Eugene Fodor, who has no difficulty commanding the attention of the audience and is always at ease, even when he's not playing.

It would certainly be beneficial for all of the NYAC winners to see themselves on video. Regardless of the type of performance, showmanship is a vital part of the game and the element which separates the players from the stars.

Morath charmed his audience with his presentation of background material on what made pop pop. He laced his presentation with stories about, to name a few, Irving Berlin, Ella Fitzgerald, Eubie Blake, Scott Joplin and Hoagy Carmichael.

"Any time we deal with American popular music we better start with Irvin Berlin," Morath said. Then he added, "This selection was recorded in 1927, used in the movie 'Young Frankenstein,' and then recorded on video by a Scandinavian rock group," before playing "Puttin' on the Ritz."

HE CARRIED THE audience through penny arcades, vaudeville, and asked the question, "Where would American pop be without records, radio, movies, television?"

Then, he played theme songs from old radio shows and asked the audience to guess what they were. Before he announced the answers, he said, "If you got all those right, you ought to be home in bed."

The answers? "Jack Armstrong," "Little Orphan Annie," "The Bob Hope Pepsi Hour," "The Lone Ranger," "MASH," "Amos and Andy," "Eddie Cantor," "I Love Lucy" and "Dragnet."

The next comment caused the audience to laugh.

With today's modern equipment, he said, "We can listen to our favorites while working, jogging or talking with our in-laws."

His talk of love also had the audience laughing.

"EVERY COUPLE has its special song, whether it be 'Starlight,' 'You Light Up My Life' or 'Rock Around the Clock.'" He paused, then added, "Woe be it to the man who tries to remember more than one girl under one song."

Morath gave the other members a chance to demonstrate their musical expertise. Jim McElwaine, alto sax and clarinet; Don Haviland, tenor sax, clarinet and flute; Howard Alden, guitar and tenor banjo; and Chuch Spies, percussion; were all competent solo players as well as complementing one another in ensemble work.

Morath closed his performance with this comment and this song. He had prefaced it by saying that some say a fast tempo in a major key is preferable in pop music.

"Any popular music presentation begins and ends with Irving Berlin. This is not a fast tempo, it's in a minor key and it evokes the color blue. It breaks all the rules, but then Irving gets to break all the rules, he made most of them."

As he sang the last line of "Blue Skies," he said softly into the microphone, "Hope so. Good night."

Nice touch.

MPAA should rate moviegoers

By MOLLIE FERMAGLICH
King Features Syndicate

For too many years, we have lived with the Motion Picture Association of America's movie ratings, and the letters G, PG, R and X have given us some indication as to the type of movie we're about to see.

While R lets us know that no one under 17 is permitted without a parent, and X tells us we're about to see a movie we wouldn't want our parents to know we're seeing, there have not been, to date, any warning signs to indicate who will be sitting in the theater with us.

It certainly makes sense for the MPAA to devise a similar code for movie patrons. Before this is possible, however, the moviegoing audience must be broken down into various categories, and I have taken the liberty of doing the legwork for the MPAA. Below are some of the most common types of moviegoers. You know who you are, so if the code fits...

OFS — Obsessive Film Student. This irritating moviegoer usually holds a master's degree in film studies from N.Y.U. or U.C.L.A. and tends to go to the movies alone, as he has succeeded in alienating all of his friends and loved ones.

He has intimate knowledge of what goes on in the minds of every major film maker and is eager to share this knowledge with whomever is within hearing range. It is not uncommon for the OFS to impart such information as the number of films Francois Truffaut has made, the relationship between Jean Renoir and his father and Luis Bunel's zodiac sign.

NSSS — Non-Smoking-Section Smoker. People in this grouping are wise in believing that their chances of being fined and/or jailed by the Fire Department are, indeed, pretty slim. Though it certainly is within your rights as a paying customer to ask these folks to refrain from smoking, most will respond by coughing up phlegm or putting their cigarettes out in your palm.

TWM — Talks With Movie. There are approximately 27 million paranoid schizophrenics living in this country and many of them can be found assuming the roles of your favorite stars during your favorite movie.

Particularly rampant in "revival" houses, this type of patron feels that the director made a poor choice in giving the role to the on-screen actor and will often make you feel as though you're sitting in the middle of a open audition.

Though incredibly annoying, the TWM poses no real threat to the moviegoer, especially when you consider the alternative that he could be talking with you instead of with the movie.

CG — Cracks Gum. It is not uncommon to be sitting directly in front of a person who can crack his gum to the tune of "Hey, Jealous Lover." Most theaters, however, would prefer that you do not ask these people to spit out their gum, for they generally will oblige ... and stick it under the seat.

CTE — Comes to Eat. Two types of moviegoers fall into this category, the first being all those people who don't mind spending $1.75 for one small package of Chuckles, and who generally wait until the film's climax to fondle the cellophane wrapper.

The second variation of the CTE are those moviegoers who bring their own food to the theater. While these people should be commended for their foresight and thriftiness, there is something inherently pathetic about anyone willing to peel hard-boiled eggs in the dark.

BTK — Brings the Kiddies. A bold and blatant act against society, this should be considered a felony in all states. Moviegoers in this category feel that hiring a baby-sitter is excessive and can't for the life of them understand why the rest of the audience has little interest in hearing their toddler count to 10 in French, recite the alphabet or say, "Mommy, I gotta tinkle!"

However, there is hope in dealing with BTKs. As they usually feel a tad self-conscious to begin with, one good long stare can be enough of a hint to get them to throw a large ski parka over junior's head for the duration of the film.

TDM — Talks During Movie. These are the people who have nothing to say to each other prior to the film, are often at a loss for words during the coming attractions, yet have little trouble arguing over whose turn it is to take out the garbage once the film begins.

Asking them to keep quiet will only encourage them to continue talking. Saying "Shhhhh!" in a loud whisper will elicit equally loud "Shhhhhs!" from the rest of the audience, all directed at you. Perhaps the only effective way of dealing with the TDM is to join in their conversation, for it is only then that they will think you are a bona fide crazo, and they will change their seats.

CFS — Can't Find Seat. These folks can be broken down into the non-English-speaking patrons, to whom it matters little whether one enters the theater at the beginning of the film, in the middle or as the credits roll, and those willing to endure first-row seats and severe neck cramps, all in the name of arriving anywhere "fashionably late."

Sarandon nothing like his role in 'Protocol'

Hearst News Service

As a student in high school and college, actor Chris Sarandon was a BMOC: "I was in student government and in fraternities," he says. "I cut my hair exactly the way the guy in the movie cuts his hair. That was me in college — Mr. Ivy League."

The "me" Sarandon refers to is Michael Ransom, his character in the movie "Protocol," with Goldie Hawn. Michael is a sweet, bespectacled State Department official who falls for Hawn's Sunny Davis, a cocktail waitress who becomes an international celebrity after she saves the life of an Arab official.

Off-screen, Sarandon looks nothing like the straight-arrow he plays in "Protocol." The 42-year-old actor admits that he was drawn to the character of Michael because he had never played a "WASP prince" on screen or on TV.

Sarandon got the part because he and Ms. Hawn hit it off during the audition. Ms. Hawn, he says, was a joy to work with, even though she served as executive producer as well as the star of the film.

"Goldie does not play that role," he states. "She's just Goldie. I never felt restricted in any way because I was playing opposite one of my bosses. At times, I gave her a real hard time on the set, because Goldie is a lot of fun to kid. It was helpful, because we were playing comedy."

Sarandon, the son of Greek immigrants, began his acting career in the New York theater. His big break came with his first film role (for which he received an Oscar nomination) as Al Pacino's transsexual lover in "Dog Day Afternoon." He says that he had no qualms about playing the part, but did come out to California to do publicity after the film opened because "most people were under the idea that (director) Sidney Lumet had found somebody on the streets of Queens or 42nd Street and hired me."

Though he says the role didn't hurt his career, he admits that after he played a rapist in his next film, "Lipstick," Hollywood thought of him as some type of deviant.

"I didn't really think at the time it was possible people would think I was a wacko, a weirdo, because I played those two roles back to back."

Sarandon had to return to the theater, however, when he found he was only offered roles in film as "somebody no one wants to be around. I just decided it was not worth spending the rest of my life playing creeps. For a time I was bitter, upset and angry. I'm not now. I realize that's just how it is."

Besides the theater, Sarandon also found he could avoid typecasting on TV. One of his most challenging roles was that of Jesus in the CBS drama "The Day That Christ Died." Of his performance he says, "It was really a nice effort. It's hard not to get caught up in playing Jesus. I've seen so many people do it. Everybody stands around and acts as if they know they're going to be famous in 2,000 years and they're going to be the figurehead of one of the world's greatest religions."

Sarandon says at times he fell into the same trap:

"I found myself looking up into the light, feeling the halo sort of hovering above my head."

Two years ago, Sarandon got a chance to work with director Sam Peckinpah on what was to be his last film, "The Osterman Weekend."

"I had a great time on that picture," he says. "I was grateful to be working, and I also was intrigued by the opportunity to work with Sam, because I had heard so much about him — both positive and negative."

Sarandon, though, has only positive things to say about the late director.

"As far as I'm concerned," he says, "he was just a splendid gentleman."

Polish group tries American style

By the Associated Press

Lady Pank got together, a five-man rock group in Poland, and decided to do things "American style." They weren't talking about the music.

Through interpreter Greg Kuczynski of their English management company they explain:

"We went to a director-manager in Poland. We said to him, 'We are the best. We'll be the best group in Poland within five months. We need a manager and much money to record a group of songs.'"

They used that brash "American" approach, they say, "because we watch a lot of movies." It worked.

The story continues, "When we got the money, we went outside, shook hands and started to sing, 'She's my lady rock 'n' roll,' the Rolling Stones song."

From that start, Lady Pank became the top group in Poland and the first Polish rock group signed to a worldwide contract, by MCA Records. In March, Lady Pank visited America on a promotion tour, doing a few performances, for press and concert bookers and taped an "American Bandstand" segment for April 23. The group, obviously, would like to return and tour.

The LP, "Drop Everything," was released as they arrived. They made a video for the first single, "Minus Zero," after they arrived.

The first record out in Poland was a hit there, "Little Lady Pank," inspired by the girlfriend of Jan Borysewicz, the group's guitarist and music writer. From that title, they took their name, which they pronounce Lady Punk. The second record was also a hit, "Stranger." In May 1983 vocalist Janusz Panasewicz came in and sang on "Minus Zero." That became a hit as well. "Stranger" and "Minus Zero" are on the album.

The group tells its story in a New York office of MCA Records. Personnel is Borysewicz, 30, Panasewicz, 28, Edmund Stasiak, 25, on rhythm guitar, Pawel Mscislawski, 24, bass, and Jaroslaw Szlagowski, 25, drums.

The group's nonperforming lyricist, Andrzej Mogielnicki, who doesn't give his age when the others do because he's a bit older, says, "I met Jan in a small town when he was playing guitar in another Polish group. I was lyricist for this group. We decided to make a band. We were looking for guys all over Poland.

"Edmund Stasiak was a roadie before he played guitar. Pawel and Jaroslaw were stolen from another top Polish group. Janusz was the singing star of a group in the army. Later, when we went to play dance halls, there he was on the wall in a autographed poster in military uniform."

Mogielnicki explains that the first singles really were made by himself and Borysewicz, the latter singing. Panasewicz dueted on one with him, while still in the army. "He had to escape two days to do the recording and was put in solitary for that," Mogielnicki says.

After the first single was big, he continues, "We were looking for young men to fit different instruments. We were looking for the tall, slim, Rolling Stones type."

Bad luck has hindered career of Toni Tennille

By CYNTHIA ROBINS
Hearst News Service

At 40, Toni Tennille is receiving rave reviews for both her musicianship and the ease of her delivery in her night club appearances. But there's been a dearth of pop hits from the Captain (Darryl, her husband of 11 years) and Tennille, who 10 years ago owned the charts and the airways with songs like "Love Will Keep Us Together" and "Muskrat Love."

It isn't for lack of talent that the gregarious Toni and her silent, low-key husband are not turning out the hits. Instead, it was a series of unfortunate events that allowed them to fall through the cracks of a business Ms. Tennille refers to as "unsavory."

When the Captain and Tennille rocketed to the top in 1975 with the Neil Sedaka-penned "Love Will Keep Us Together," they were signed to A&M Records and had a good run, creating enough gold singles to put them in a 21-room palazzo in Pacific Palisades, Calif. Then, in 1979, they jumped companies, bopping on over to Casablanca Records, where they were signed by president Neil Bogart. For Bogart, whose company was built on Donna Summer's orgasmic moaning and the Village People's disco cadences, Ms. Tenille and her spouse had a gold record in "Do That to Me One More Time," plus a gold album, "Make Your Move."

Then the bottom fell out. Bogart, who was dying of cancer, sold his shares in Casablanca back to Polygram, the parent company. Casablanca was, says Ms. Tennille, "in a devastated state. They closed down for two months at the time we had just delivered our second album. There was no staff, no money for promotion. Once that happens, you're done as far as the record business is concerned."

The duo was then signed by a Columbia Records exec who was out the door in six months, and once again, the Captain and Tennille became, says Ms. Tennille, "persona non grata. We just felt stifled and stymied."

Bad luck probably would have finished the career of a less hardy person, but Ms. Tennille is a survivor — a very talented one. She and Dragon, who owns a recording studio in Los Angeles that caters to the likes of REO Speedwagon, Dolly Parton, Stevie Nicks and John Cougar Mellencamp, decided to let she would concentrate on her own singing career. Dragon, who is busy with the studio and mastering the tapes of his wife's new songs, considers himself a pop keyboardist and arranger.

"He doesn't do my kind of music," says Ms. Tennille, whose nightclub act is almost exclusively pre-'50s standards. "It's not his thing. When we began working in clubs together, he knew about my jazz background. He said that he could do anything, pop, rock and all. He's always been boogie. But he's Fats Domino and I'm Gershwin."

Meanwhile, Ms. Tennille has great hopes for a new syndicated TV show based on her successful Jan. 25 special, "The Music of Your Life," based on the widely listened-to radio format of the same name. The show's pilot was seen in 48 of the top 50 markets nationwide.

So far, there's not an official "go," but the show's producer, Bob Banner, has been quoted as saying, "I'm chilling the champagne, but I've not opened the bottle yet." Dick Hammer, a Group W spokesman, says there is an "unofficial yes" to the show and that a decision will be made in about three weeks.

As for Ms. Tennille, who betrays no nervousness in her waiting, she can move from one kind of music to the other with the ease of a Circe seducing a sailor.

"I wouldn't bite the hand that feeds me," she laughs. "I once worked in aerospace and if it wasn't for 'Love Will Keep Us Together,' I'd probably be a vice president at North American Rockwell and out of it altogether."

Odessa Shakespeare Festival ends with 'Lovers, Liars and Clowns'

ODESSA — "Lovers, Liars and Clowns," a montage of Shakespeare and Broadway conceived by Jeryl Hoover and Mary Skinner, will complete the 1985 Odessa Shakespeare Festival at 8 p.m. Thursday, Friday and Saturday at the Globe Theatre.

Performed by Hoover, "Lovers, Liars and Clowns" shows what happens when some of the world's well known composers combine their talenst with those of the Bard. The show features numbers from "West Side Story," by Stephen Sondheim and Leonard Bernstein, "The Boys from Syracuse" by Richard Rogers and Lorenz Hart, and "Kiss Me Kate," by Cole Porter.

In addition, Hoover will perform original compositions written for Shakespeare's sonnets 17 and 130. A native of Odessa, Hoover lives in Fort Worth where he attends Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary. He has been featured at the Globe in such shows as "Camelot," "Sound of Music" and "Scratch."

Tickets, priced at $7 for adults and $4 for students and senior citizens, may be purchased at the Globe. Permian and Odessa high school students and full time UT Permian Basin and Odessa College students will be admitted free with ID cards. For more information call the theater, 1-332-1586.

The Odessa Shakespeare festival is supported in part by a grant from the Odessa Cultural Council.

Joe Ely to perform at Yucca

Joe Ely will perform at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave., March 29.

Born in Lubbock, this 34-year-old singer-songwriter has six albums to his credit, including the 1981 release "Musta Notta Gotta Lotta," considered by many his best. His sound has been described as hard-rockin', Tex/Mex Country Swing.

Robert Hilburn of The Los Angeles Times has said of Ely's performances, "Joe Ely, more confident and dynamic each time he comes here, exhibits on stage much of the exhilarating energy and crowd pleasing determination that we expect from Bruce Springsteen." And Dale Adamson of The Houston Chronicle has said of Ely, "Joe Ely, it's safe to say, is the most exciting thing to come out of the dry, flat, dusty terrain of West Texas since Buddy Holly."

Tickets, priced at $12, can be purcased at Endless Horizons, here and Odessa. Special guest is Jesse "Mr. Guitar" Taylor and Tornado Alley.

Ex-Midlander's works on display

Nancy Klinger, a graduate of Midland High School and Colorado Women's College in Denver, is exhibiting a selection of dry brush watercolors in the lobby of RepublicBank First National Midland through March 29.

The subject of Ms. Klinger's work varies from still life to landscapes, wildlife and wildflowers. She has recently been working on a series using pottery, Kachinas, moccasins, drums and western memorabilia from her private collection. She also relies on material from other private collections, museums and photographs.

The exhibit is open to the public free of charge during banking hours.

'Peter Pan, 'Dining Room' extended

Due to popular demand and sold-out houses, both plays currently running at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., are being held over.

"Peter Pan," Theatre One, will run Wednesday and Thursday at 7:30 p.m., Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. and March 24 at 2:30 p.m.

"The Dining Room," Theatre Two, will run Thursday at 7:30 p.m. and Friday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m.

For reservations call Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

Savalas to play Long John Silver

Telly Savalas

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If things go according to plan, Telly Savalas may soon be hobbling around as Long John Silver in a Broadway musical version of "Treasure Island."

Savalas hasn't signed yet for the show, which would be his Broadway debut. It all depends on whether CBS decides to bring back "Kojak" as a series. He recently revived the character for a TV movie.

Savalas will also make a cameo appearance as the Cheshire Cat in Irwin Allen's miniseries for CBS, "Alice in Wonderland."

The musical version of Robert Louis Stevenson's classic tale of a young boy's encounter with pirates was written by Sherman Yellen. The lyrics and music are by Gary William Friedman and Will Holt.

Yellen said Savalas would be able to perform the role of the peg-legged pirate with both feet on the stage. "One of his own legs will actually fit into the peg," he said. "It works so well that he'll even be able to do a one-legged jig."

The show will go into rehearsals this spring and will tour the country before reaching Broadway.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

DEAR READERS: We have had many requests over the years for those hands we consider to be our favorites. That makes quite a list. For the time being, therefore, we are devoting the Sunday column to a series of famous hands. At the end of the series we will go back to our weekly question and answer column.

East-West vulnerable. East deals.

NORTH
♠ A K 8 3
♡ 9 8 6 3
◇ A 7
♣ A 9 6

WEST
♠ Q J 7 6
♡ 7 4
◇ K 10 9 5 3
♣ Q 8

♠ Void
♡ Q J
◇ Q J 6 4
♣ K J 10 7 4 3 2

SOUTH
♠ 10 9 5 4 2
♡ A K 10 5 2
◇ 8 2
♣ 5

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
3 ♠	3 ♡	Pass	6 ♡
Dble	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ten of ◇.

"All conventional bids should be barred," stated the Seven of Diamonds emphatically. "Now it's not that I don't believe that some of them have their uses. However, as far as I am concerned they all fall into the category of giving aid and comfort to the enemy."

Had the Seven of Diamonds been an ordinary player, his outburst might have been treated with scepticism. But he was a many times world champion, so we wondered what gave rise to these thoughts. He quickly jotted down the following hand on the tablecloth.

"My partner was regarded as one of the world's great players," he continued, "and if you follow his play on this hand you will see why. I can't say that I am enamored of his three heart overcall, and you certainly can't fault my jump to six hearts. East made a Lightner double to tell his partner that he wanted an unusual lead, not the suit he had bid.

"Luckily for his side, West could not visualize that his partner was void in spades, so he led from his longest suit. With a spade lead, my partner would simply have covered any card led and, after East's ruff, he would have no problem picking up the suit and getting a diamond sluff from the table on the long spade. After the diamond lead, however, my partner did not fancy his chances. Even with an even trump distribution, he still had a diamond and a spade loser to worry about. But he did have the auction to guide him.

"He won the ace of diamonds and drew two rounds of trumps. It was obvious that East's Lightner double had been for spades, so he had to be void in that suit. My partner cashed the ace of clubs, ruffed a club in hand and then led the ten of spades. West covered and the king won. Declarer ruffed dummy's last club, then finessed the eight of spades to bring about this position:

	♠ A 3 ♡ 9 8 ◇ 7 ♣ —
♠ Q 7 ♡ — ◇ K 9 5 ♣ —		♠ — ♡ — ◇ Q J ♣ K J 10
	♠ 9 5 4 ♡ 10 ◇ 8 ♣ —

Now declarer launched me into battle, and he didn't care which defender won the trick. If it was East, he would have to return a minor suit, allowing declarer to ruff in hand while discarding dummy's losing spade. If West won the trick, he too would have to yield a ruff sluff, or else lead a spade away from his Q-7 into declarer's combined A-9 tenace. The spade loser had vanished."

Send any questions for this column to Charles H. Goren and Omar Sharif, care of this newspaper. Each week a prize of a copy of the new "Goren's Complete Bridge," a $9.95 value, will be awarded for the question judged to be the best received.

Charles Goren and Omar Sharif personally cannot undertake to answer all questions submitted.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

Monday, March 18, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: You finally have a plan. Follow it and everything else will fall into place. Get agreements in writing, even when dealing with friends. A recent loss will have faded by summer. The best investments are those recommended by experts. Develop your natural talents. Good luck accompanies you on your travels. Mate helps you make the right business and financial decisions. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: authors John Updike and Irving Wallace, actor Peter Graves, country music's Charley Pride, Oakland A's slugger Dwayne Murphy, former Miss America Vanessa Williams, George Plimpton.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Someone else's negligence could cause fireworks at place of employment. Getting better organized will increase your efficiency. Be friendly to a newcomer.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Think twice before speaking to a sensitive Leo. Taking a realistic approach to a professional or personal problem wins you the respect of your peers. Keep any diet or exercise resolutions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An exciting day lies ahead. Your plans begin to fall into place thanks to an attractive member of the opposite sex. Buy clothes at sales. A small family dinner enjoys favorable influences.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A short business trip will produce fine profits. Refuse to be upset by an uninhibited person's comments. He/she is simply being catty. Mate or partner is unusually supportive now.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Write a letter to someone living overseas. An expert recognizes your natural talent; put your skills to commercial use. Your love life is more exciting than in the recent past.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A good day to approach higher-ups about an urgent matter. Your requests are apt to be granted. Solo endeavors receive new attention from someone influential.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You enjoy being around younger people. Seize an opportunity to exchange views with them on vital subjects. You glean pertinent information while making a wonderful impression. Romance looks terrific.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your efforts at work are rewarded. A promotion or raise is in the wind, even if you must wait a bit longer. A direct approach is best in romance. Speak from the heart.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Those closest to you have important information to share. You benefit financially. Define your goals and you will make faster progress. Refuse to indulge an inappropriate desire. Romance is almost magical!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take wild-sounding schemes and bargain offers with a grain of salt. Conventional methods work best in business. Stick to the tried-and-true. Giving a teenager more independence improves your relationship.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Hard work and high ideals will take you to your goals. Steer clear of the get-rich-quick schemes advanced by strangers. A Leo proves to be an important ally.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Consistency is the key to success, especially if starting or expanding a business. A candid conversation helps you and a loved one reach a better understanding. Share your hopes and dreams.

Taking two young children to museums can be disaster

By RACHEL COPE GOLDFARB
King Features Syndicate

What a noble thing I was doing, I assured myself, as I wrenched my groggy children out of their warm, wonderfully disheveled beds. The school holiday could have been spent lazily around the house. But no, this day off was going to be productive in an experientially educational way. We were going sightseeing. (My husband had the wisdom to be swamped at work.)

Our proximity to the Nation's Capital and some of the world's most revered collectibles had never played a major part in my growing up. I was going to make sure my children were different.

They were going to be able to spot a chair out of place in the Green Room at the White House, a misclassified arachnid at the Natural History Museum or a slight fading in Georges de la Tour's rendition of the "Repentant Magdalen" at the National Gallery. Washington, D.C., was going to be their childhood playground.

I never expected my hopes to be taken so literally.

We had been in the National Gallery about three minutes. I was discussing a tapestry with my daughter, calling attention to the various textures, when out of the corner of my eye I saw three guards running toward the spot where I thought my son was.

Sure enough, the little darling was attempting to sit on a seventeenth century velvet and rosewood hand-carved chair. The ropes, intended to ward off would-be sitters, meant nothing to a 6-year-old with tired feet.

After an apology to the guards, an explanation to my son and several deep breaths, we continued our tour.

I noticed my children balancing a large collection of gallery maps, brochures and description sheets and realized that I had no idea where they came from or what they were going to do with them.

My daughter, who has an answer for everything, explained that she was taking them for "her poor friends whose mothers couldn't take them sightseeing."

Although I complimented her generosity, I'm always a bit suspicious of her magnanimity and suggested that she make one complete collection to show these deprived youngsters. We replaced most of her booty, much to the relief of lost art lovers all over Washington.

Some of the exhibits were received with much interest and enthusiasm by my children, while others were rushed through, as if they were looking for something else. It took me longer than it should have to figure out the amount of clothing the objet d'art wore (or did not) was directly related to the length of their attention span.

So much for art. Amidst the exhausted cheers and handshakes of the guards, we left.

Next, we hit the Natural History Museum. (If the term "hit" puts you in mind of bombs and destruction, hold that thought.)

I discovered early on that any exhibit without earphones had the appeal of a three-day-old bologna sandwich. They would, however, sit for 20 minutes at a time listening to a detailed description of an atomic ocean-floor sweeper while a crowd eight deep gathered about waiting a turn.

If not for my vehement insistence that he was not allowed, my son would have held an earphone on each ear "so he wouldn't miss anything."

When the earphones finally lost their charm, we did get to examine some of the mammal exhibits. Upon discovering that the animals were stuffed, my daughter's shocked and startling loud question was, "What do they do with the guts?"

Quietly, calmly, I explained that I wasn't sure but that they may have been turned into fertilizer. The wheels turned rapidly and her next astonished interrogation to anyone who cared to hear was, "You mean our food has animal guts on it?"

The Insect Zoo is always fun and this day was no exception, for anyone but me. The children delighted in fondling the vividly colored monstrosities that the museum employee cheerfully handed them and in trying to trick me into touching them.

At a point when my skin was crawling most actively, my son called from across the crowded room, "Hey, Mom, look at this one. It's just like what ran under the washing machine yesterday!"

I needed lunch to settle my stomach. We took our carefully, prudently prepared brown-bag lunch to eat on the spacious Mall. We sat on a bench, opened our sandwiches and were descended upon. An ocean of self-assured pigeons gathered at our feet while ravenous seagulls swooped at our heads.

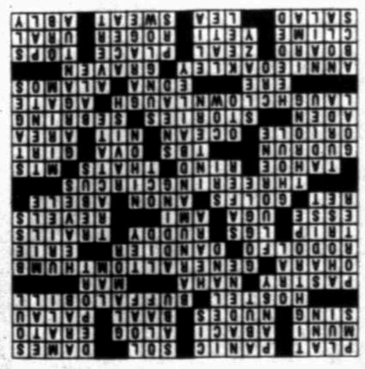

The children thought it was a terrific way to eat a meal — I was having difficulty breathing. And when I looked for human support, all I found was a thundering herd of joggers who looked neither left nor right, only at their pedometers.

The subway trip home was not without incident. Those entry gates that eat your tickets and open for a split second for you to spring through had a personal vendetta against me.

The one I went through digested my ticket, lit up as if a carnival were taking place and called for the attendant. While taking care of the nasty business of convincing the worker that I was not trying to cheat the system, my children (who were already through the gates) jumped with glee. Jokes at my expense have always been their favorite brand of humor.

Well, nobility aside, the kids learned and enjoyed and I was glad. Next school holiday, though, maybe I'll be smart enough to be swamped with work!

Grace's book covers workers in private sector

By JOHN W. DEATS

We have all used or heard the expression, "caveat emptor," or "let the buyer beware." Similar logic dictates that it is often unjust to label a book either factual or fictitious, simply according to whether it is classified as economics, say, or as a novel. For instance, did Carl Marx's DAS KAPITAL more explicitly portray the real world than Charles Dickens' OLIVER TWIST?

J. Peter Grace, the chairman of the president's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control, has written BURNING MONEY to account for the work of his commission of over 2,000 staff and volunteers from the private sector. The book cites many horror stories about routine equipment and appliances costing the government many times the purchase price charged the private consumer. It then goes on to examine all major government programs, from Aid to Dependent Children to the Veteran's Administation.

While some of the criticism may be valid, the reader should keep in mind that the majority of the members of the commission are executives in banking, insurance, private corporations, and management consultingfirms, who traditionally have an open bias against publicly financed programs. The Grace study seems to encourage the privatization of virtually all social services as the panacea for the nation's fiscal problems.

A related topic is probed in Donald Lambro's WASHINGTON: CITY OF SCANDALS: INVESTIGATING CONGRESS AND OTHER BIG SPENDERS. Lambro's first book on this subject, FAT CITY, had been required for President Reagan's incoming cabinet members in 1980. In a similar vein, CITY OF SCANDALS describes how both houses of Congress appropriate nearly three quarters of a trillion dollars for countless programs in which many members have little knowledge of where the money is actually going. Few Congressmen attend the oversight committee meetings which they are assigned, instead concentrating on selective items in the budget which can provide patronage jobs, income for their districts, or media attention which can help them win future campaigns. Lambro examines the federal bureaucracy and the many cases of "whistle blowers" who report spending or graft in their own departments, who in turn are often harassed or even terminated by their superiors. The author evaluates the Reagan administration's successes and failures in cutting back poorly operated programs. He reports that Congressmen have largely ignored his pleas and continue to fund questionable programs.

A provocative work by Christopher Lasch, THE MINIMAL SELF, explores contemporary cultures with all its consumerism, survivalism, and apathy, what one might describe as the idealogical assault on the ego. In Lasch's own words, "The minimal or narcissistic self is, above all, a self uncertain of its own outlines, longing either to remake the world in its own image or to merge into its environment in blissful union." Also, "selfhood is the painful awareness of the tension between our unlimited aspirations and our limited understanding." Lasch's excellent book will not disappoint those who read his popular work of the late '70s, THE CULTURE OF NARCISSISM.

Thomas Pawlick's A KILLING RAIN: THE GLOBAL THREAT OF ACID PRECIPITATION is yet another book on a deadly serious topic. Pawlick documents many examples of the effects of acid rain. Sports fishing has virtually disappeared in Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New York, Germany's vast forests are beginning to lose trees, manmade objects such as monuments are revealing increased damage and corrosion, and wildlife are being devasted in many areas. The EPA has reluctantly obeyed a court order and tightened the reins on sulfur-dioxide pollution from coal-burning power plants, the primary source of acid rain. In the 1960s, in a short-sighted move to prevent local pollution, steel and paper mills could comply with the Clean Air Act by simply building taller smokestacks, some up to 1200 feet high. This merely served to propel the toxic substances into higher reaches of the atmosphere, and increasing their range.

Defector details break with Moscow

"Breaking With Moscow," by Arkady N. Shevchenko; Knopf; $18.95; 378 pp.

A Review

By JULIANA PILON

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

"Breaking With Moscow" will probably not have the impact of Alexander Solzhenitsyn's "The Gulag Archipelago." But despite its deceptive lack of pathos, Arkady N. Shevchenko's memoir deals with the same subject matter as Solzhenitsyn's: the anatomy of evil or.

The subject of Shevchenko's inquiry are quintessential bureaucrats. Of various abilities, temperaments and tastes, they are nonetheless all suffused with a common commitment to the ultimate triumph of communism. The mass murder of flesh and spirit to which their commitment leads is mentioned only in passing in Shevchenko's book. He portrays a Soviet ruling class armed with the justificatory mechanism of a powerful ideology and engaged in a sophisticated, spectacularly effective assault on the West and its ideal of individual liberty.

"Breaking With Moscow" is, in one sense, a misnomer, for the author explicitly denies having broken with the city of his youth, the home of the Tretyakov Gallery and the Novodyevichii Convent. The title is accurate, however, as it refers to the unbridgeable gulf between the leaders of the Soviet state and the people whom they claim to lead; between the engineers of this evil and those who suffer it, perhaps forever.

The architects of Soviet state terror are not only sane; they are often eminently intelligent. Above all, they have a quasi-religious depth of purpose. Andrei Gromyko, Anatoly Dobrynin, Nikita Khrushchev, Leonid Brezhnev and Oleg Troyanovsky may have had different approaches to their ultimate goal, but their commitment itself has been univocal. Shevchenko writes that Soviet leaders and ideologists have never tried to hide the fact that their policy then and now adheres to the conclusions Lenin had articulated soon after the 1917 Revolution in Russia.

At times, tactical consideration may require the appearance of abandoning ideology. Thus, Shevchenko relates that Andrei Gromyko once advised a group of Soviet diplomats to pretend in their talks with Americans a lack of strong commitment to Marxist dogmas. But pretend is the key word: At no time is the significance of that philosophy seriously in doubt either for Gromyko or for his colleagues.

Not that a man of Gromyko's manifest talents could ever subscribe simplemindedly to the precepts of Marxism-Leninism. There is no doubt that, in varying degrees, the members of the the Soviet elite, are subtle and even profoundly cynical. Yet, Shevchenko demonstrates convincingly that their commitment to their quasi-religion is real and continuing. The Western predilection to distinguish by temperament the "hawks" from the "doves" of the Politburo, therefore, entirely misses the point. Shevchenko charitably calls this distinction a "fable," making it clear that slowly but irrevocably he came to realize "how irrelevant individual traits are to the collective behavior of the Soviet rulers." The same theoretical system that gives their deeds an aura of meaning imprisons them in an iron jacket of lies and fear and sets them inexorably against the rules of conscience, human kindness and tolerance.

Shevchenko's decision to defect ripened slowly over the years, but there were some crucial landmarks. First came the realization that Khrushchev would not bring a human face to Soviet-style communism. Then followed the knowledge, after the 1975 Helsinki Accords, that Soviet leaders "would violate elementary human rights no matter what they might sign, and that the Soviet system itself was intrinsically antithetical to such rights."

Perhaps the most important knowledge, however, was self-knowledge, the most common cause of all political defections. It was Shevchenko's acknowledgement to himself of basic, long-denied needs: to breathe freely, to stop lying, not to be afraid, not to be a partner in evil.

It was this last revelation that left him with no choice but to defect. He is uncomfortable with that word, whose Latin root, anachronistically enough, means "to desert, to fail," but a better word does not come easily to hand. Shevchenko's wife was prevented from joining him in the West, drugged, taken back to Moscow, and later declared a "suicide." What kind of personality, what order of courage is required to run such a risk? The reader will not be able to answer that question after reading this book. But that inability is not necessarily Shevchenko's fault. There probably are no answers.

Engineer buys Hitler's yacht for $1

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — The Ostwind, a sailing yacht built for Adolf Hitler, was sold for $1 by a man who spent a fortune trying to restore it.

Horace Glass, who spent 12 years and $178,000 trying to restore the aging vessel, said last week he sold the vessel to Charles Sanderson, a Plymouth, Mass., engineer and developer who plans to put the yacht in a military museum.

"I'm losing everything I put into it, plus 12 years of labor not just from me, but my family too," said Glass, who lives in New Hampshire.

Glass invested $131,000 of his own money and $47,000 from 20 Jacksonville investors in the restoration work of the yacht, which was built in 1939.

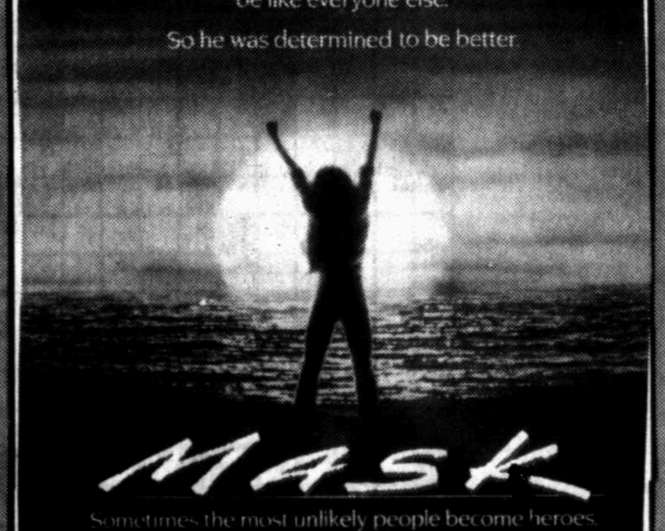

Under the agreement, Glass said Sanderson would assume all the bills on the yacht, including a $12,000 charge owed for docking the boat on the Trout River.

Failing health and financial problems prevented Glass from finishing the restoration.

The U.S. Navy seized the vessel following World War II and it was later used as a training vessel at the U.S. Naval Academy. It was later declared surplus and passed through several owners until Glass bought it in 1971 for $5,000 from a Daytona Beach man.

Cookbooks exist for people who want to eat heathful

By SANDRA SCOTT KLINK
King Features Syndicate

Ellen Kawdler

Mabel Caviani

Not all cookbooks are full of recipes for wicked desserts, haute cuisine, rich sauces and high-calorie indulgences. It may require some searching beyond the flashy displays in the bookstores, but others are there too — books for those with specific health problems, needs or interests or for those who simply want to adjust their eating habits in a more healthful direction.

Deliciously Low: The Gourmet Guide to Low-Sodium, Low-Fat, Low-Cholesterol, Low-Sugar Cooking by Harriet Roth (NAL, $17.50) is a collection of over 300 recipes low in the evils in the title but high on taste.

Ms. Roth's husband's health problems required adapting many of her French and Italian recipes, but she was determined to do so without sacrificing flavor. She based her adaptations on the principles of Nathan Pritikin and in an early chapter she relates many helpful tips that she learned in doing so. They're most informative, worthwhile to everyone.

The recipes are eclectic, bouncing from one type of cuisine to another and providing a wide choice of ideas. Aside from a few slightly complicated recipes that require tedious assembly, most are clear, simple and appetizing, even elegant.

Along the same lines, The Healthy Heart Cookbook: A Gourmet Recipe Guide for Low-Calorie, Low-Fat, Low Cholesterol, Sodium-Restricted Cooking by Ellen B. Kawadler and Lillian A. Czech (Van Nostrand Reinhold, $26.50) is specifically designed for those with heart problems.

Once again, though, the recipes provide a basis for correct eating habits for anyone. What we have here is well-balanced good food with a flair.

International in their approach, the authors have accumulated recipes from many sources, including doctors, nurses and patients who have had to live with restricted diets. All recipes have been tested and all contain calorie, sodium, fat and cholesterol information.

Herbs, spices and spirits take the upper hand in this book — and why not? They are certainly flavor enhancers. However, those not fond of the taste of wine, brandy, sherry and vermouth beware. There's plenty consumed here, even in the vegetables. The alcohol is generally cooked away, but the flavor stays. In general, the recipes are easy to prepare and the directions suitably concise.

Anyone with a diabetic in the family knows that special cooking requirements must prevail. The New Diabetic Cookbook by Mabel Cavaiani (Contemporary Books, $16.95) is a thorough, well-thought-out book that follows the American Dietetic Association's new guidelines: food that is high in fiber and complex carbohydrates and low in salt, cholesterol, sugar and saturated fats.

Don't look for exotica in this cookbook. The food is basic, everyday fare, foods that most people find appealing if not fascinating. Homey little comments precede nearly every recipe, telling the reader where the dish originated (often from neighbors, cousins, friends), along with a comment or two. It's a friendly touch and gives the book a special kind of credibility.

Those in need of guidance will find it here: in menu planning, adjusting recipes, calculating food exchanges. In short, a good beginning for those who have to learn how to cook for a diabetic.

Now, on to the special kind of cooking that includes probably the greatest number of people: low-calorie. Most people at one time or another attempt to lose some weight. Whether or not they join a plan or a diet group, it's always a good idea to have some dieter's recipes on hand.

Weight Watchers Quick Start Program Cookbook by Jean Nidetch (NAL, $17.95) is the latest in a string of cookbooks put out by this organization. Focusing on a new approach for quicker initial weight loss, it provides menus, nutrition information and — probably the forte of this book — a huge number of recipes: 500 of them.

Most recipes are uncomplicated and straightforward, and they're good — even if there is an undue emphasis on puffed, stuffed or rolled-up items. I suppose the embellishments make spare rations seem more festive to the deprived dieter.

Along the same lines, many fattening foods are imitated: "Fried" Cauliflower, Frozen Cantaloupe "Ice Cream," "Calzones," Oven "Fried" Potatoes. Wistful attempts at the real thing, but they must assuage a lot of cravings.

So, whatever your particular health or nutrition needs, you'll find a book to guide you. A sample menu:

Start with a soup from "The New Diabetic Cookbook."

MULLIGATAWNY SOUP

¼ cup chopped onions
¼ cup chopped fresh green pepper
¼ cup diced celery
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
⅜ cup flour
5 cups fat-free chicken broth at room temperature
1 small tart apple
¾ cup drained, crushed canned tomatoes
¼ teaspoon curry powder
⅛ teaspoon ground cloves
Dash white pepper
1 cup diced cooked chicken with fat and skin removed
1 cup cooked rice

Fry onions, pepper and celery in oil in a heavy saucepan over moderate heat, stirring frequently, until the onions are limp but not browned. Remove vegetables from the pan with a slotted spoon and reserve for later use.

Add flour to oil in pan and cook and stir over moderate heat until smooth and lightly browned. Add broth to flour mixture and cook and stir over moderate heat until thickened. Add the reserved vegetables.

Wash and core apple and cut into small pieces as though you were going to make Waldorf salad. Add to soup. Add tomatoes and seasonings to soup. Cover and simmer for 45 minutes or until the vegetables are tender.

Add chicken and rice to the soup just before it is served. Reheat soup if necessary and serve 1 cup hot soup per serving.

"Deliciously Low" offers this savory turkey dish.

TURKEY TONNATO
(Roast Turkey with Tuna Sauce)

1 7-ounce can salt-free light-meat tuna in water, drained
⅓ cup nonfat yogurt
2 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
1 teaspoon capers, drained and rinsed
½ cup watercress leaves, washed
1 2½-3½-pound turkey breast, roasted to 160 degrees, and chilled overnight
1 bunch watercress for garnish
1 tablespoon capers for garnish
Cherry tomatoes for garnish
Radish roses for garnish

To make sauce: Puree drained tuna in a blender or food processor. Add yogurt gradually while machine is in motion. Scrape down bowl and blend thoroughly.

Add lemon juice, capers and watercress. Process until flecks of green appear.

Chill sauce until serving time. Sauce may be prepared a day ahead.

Just before serving time, skin chilled turkey breast and slice into ¼-inch slices.

To serve: Arrange overlapping turkey slices on a bed of watercress. Spoon sauce over turkey slices, sprinkle with capers and garish with cherry tomatoes and radish roses. When served as an entree, a cold rice salad makes a lovely accompaniment.

Add a touch of drama from "The Healthy Heart Cookbook."

FLAMING MUSHROOMS

1 pound large mushrooms
2 tablespoons melted polyunsaturated margarine
⅛ teaspoon celery seed
3 tablespoons Parmesan cheese
¼ cup chopped fresh chives
¼ cup brandy
Vegetable spray

Remove mushroom stems from caps. Chop stems and set caps aside.

Combine mushroom stems, margarine, celery seed, cheese and chives. Stuff caps. Place stuffed mushrooms on a lightly sprayed jelly roll pan. Broil 6 inches from heat source for 5 to 6 minutes, or until golden.

Transfer to a serving dish. Warm brandy in a small saucepan, ignite it and pour, flaming, over mushrooms just before serving.

End with this Weight Watchers "dessert."

CREPES SUZETTE

Crepes:
1 cup skim milk
¾ cup all-purpose flour
2 eggs
Sauce:
2 tablespoons unsalted margarine
1 tablespoon granulated sugar
1 cup orange juice (no sugar added)
¼ cup thawed frozen concentrated orange juice (no sugar added)
1 teaspoon brandy extract

To prepare crepes: In blender container combine milk, flour and eggs and process until smooth; let stand for 15 minutes so that bubbles will subside.

Lightly spray 6-inch nonstick skillet or crepe pan with nonstick cooking spray and heat (to test, sprinkle pan with drop of water; if water sizzles, pan is hot enough).

Pour ¼ cup of batter into pan and quickly swirl batter so that it covers entire bottom of pan; cook over medium-high heat until edges and underside are dry.

Using pancake turner, carefully turn crepe over; cook other side briefly just to dry, about 30 seconds. Slide crepe onto a plate. Repeat procedure 7 more times using remaining batter and making 7 more crepes.

To prepare sauce: in 12-inch nonstick skillet melt margarine; add sugar and stir until dissolved. Stir in orange juice, concentrated orange juice and extract and bring mixture to a boil. Reduce heat to low.

To prepare "Crepes Suzette": Add 1 crepe to skillet, coating both sides with sauce; fold crepe in half, then fold again to create triangular shape. Slide to side of skillet and repeat procedure with remaining crepes; serve immediately.

WE'RE HURTING.
Saving lives can be very expensive. The costs of our disaster relief and other humanitarian programs keep mounting. And we can't afford to come up short.
Please help.
