War doesn't halt Lebanese celebrations

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Battered by war and occupied by foreign troops, Lebanon is celebrating its independence day today. The newly rebuilt Lebanese army led a cheerful parade past thousands of people waving red, white and green Lebanese flags along the line that used to divide the capital.

President Amin Gemayel opened the celebrations with a speech Sunday night vowing to regain control of his country with the help of Western and Arab friends.

Smiling broadly, he reviewed the parade today from a stand a few yards from the line that divided this capital into Moslem and Christian sectors since the 1975-76 civil war until after the Israeli invasion last summer.

The Lebanese army, which now has about 28,000 men and new equipment provided by the United States and France, is re-establishing control over Beirut with the help of 4,000 American, French and Italian peacekeeping troops.

Gemayel, a Christian, sat in a cream-colored easy chair, flanked by Moslem Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan and Parliament speaker Kamel Assad, who is also a Moslem. The one-hour and 15-minute parade was part of Gemayel's efforts to promote unity in his patchwork republic of 17 officially recognized religious sects, which are further splintered along political and economic lines.

Lebanese tank crews and other military units marched double-time to the sound of bagpipe music across the "Palace of Peace" horse racetrack, whose grandstand was leveled by Israeli air strikes last August. The troops were followed by sports clubs, Lebanese Red Cross workers and a bicycle club.

Most of the buildings along the parade route were pocked by shells, bullets and rockets from last summer's Israeli siege of the PLO's stronghold in Moslem West Beirut and the preceding seven years of sectarian strife.

Gunmen marred the holiday by storming the main government building in the ancient city of Baalbek on Sunday, tearing down Lebanese national flags. State radio and television blamed the attack on hundreds of Iranian Revolutionary Guards.

No injuries were reported during the six-hour siege.

In his speech marking Lebanon's 39th anniversary of independence from France, Gemayel promised that the bloodied nation would regain full independence on its own terms with Western and Arab support.

"We will not negotiate on the basis of anyone else's security...nor will we give to those through negotiations what they failed to gain through force or war," Gemayel said in his nationwide broadcast on the eve of independence day.

He apparently referred to Israeli terms for withdrawing troops that invaded Lebanon last June to rout the Palestine Liberation Organization following attacks on Israel's northern settlements near the border.

Israeli demands include a permanent military watchpost atop Barouk mountain overlooking the Syrian-occupied Bekaa Valley in eastern Lebanon and the right to patrol Lebanon's air space and territorial waters.

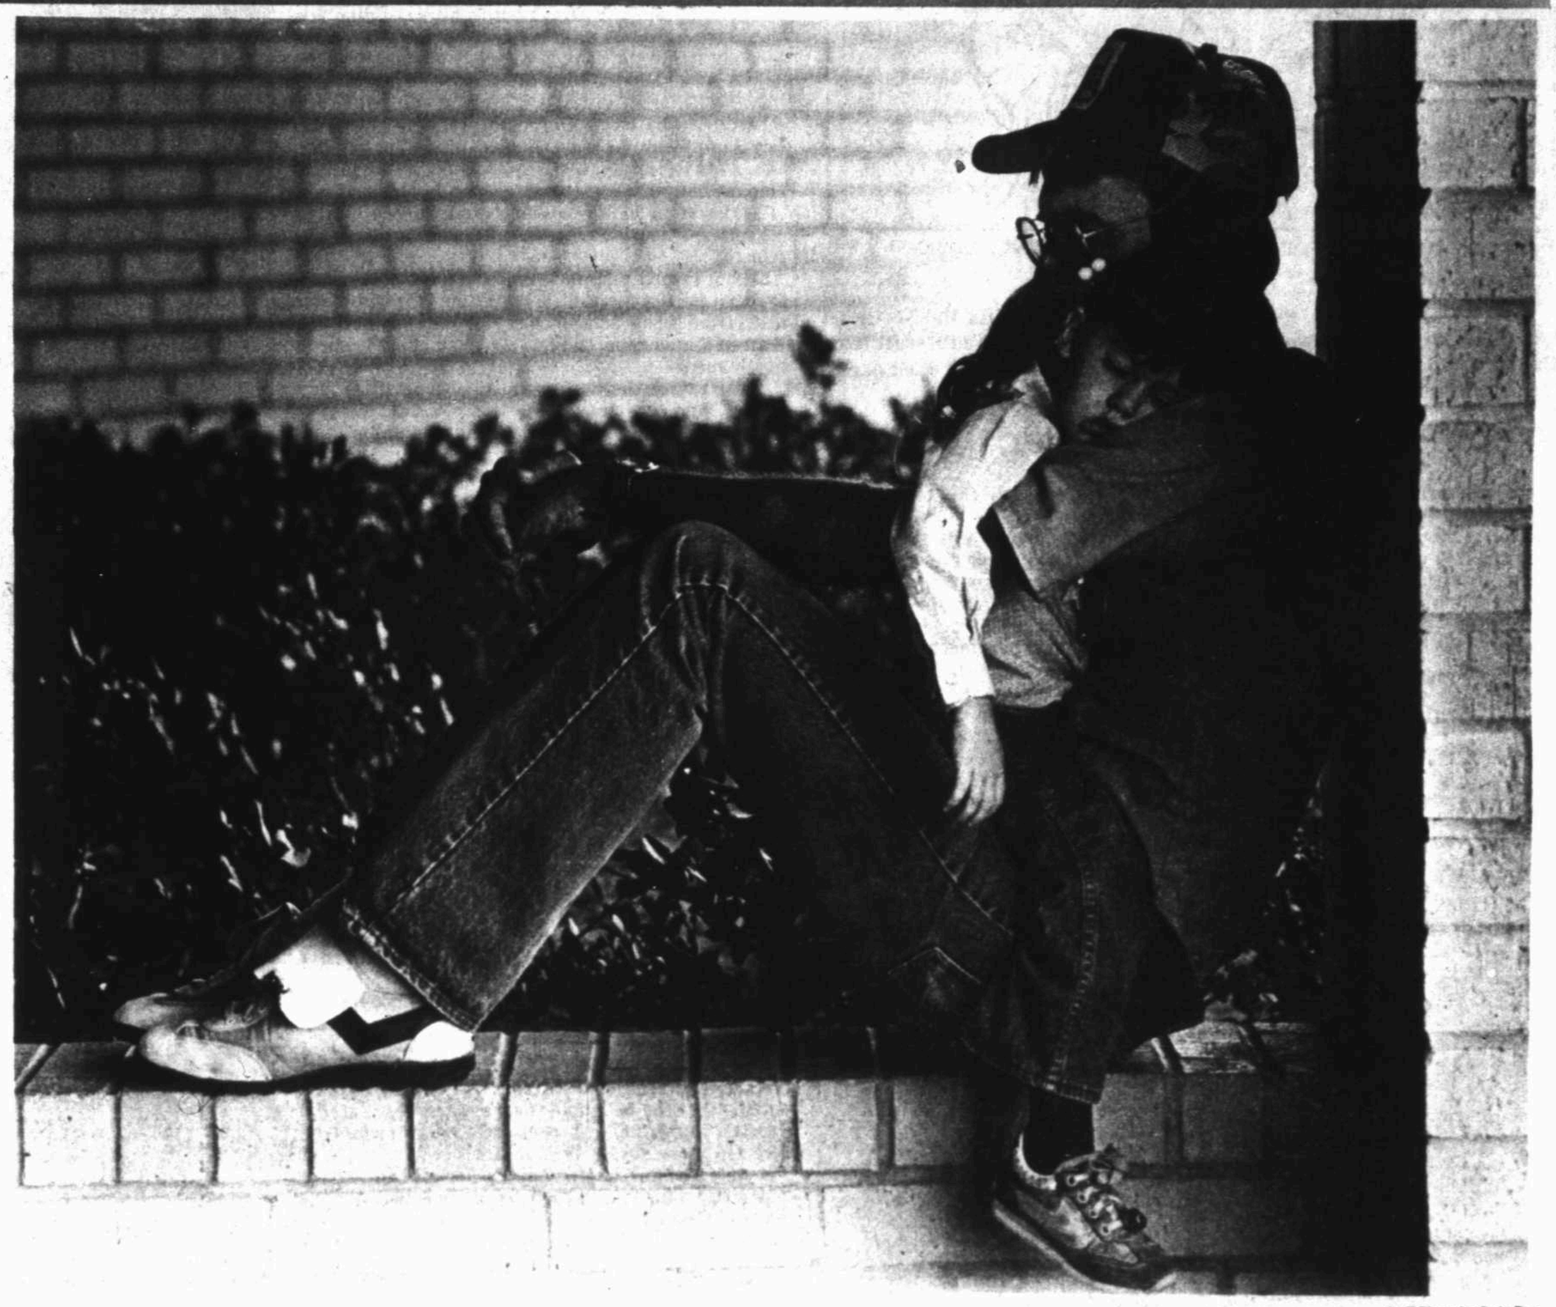

Lebanon has told U.S. presidental envoy Philip C. Habib it rejects Israel's demands. Gemayel said Lebanon would negotiate "in the manner and level prescribed by our own national interests and dignity..."

Gemayel said the "sympathy of friendly Arab states and the cooperation of other friendly countries," including the United States, will help Lebanon.

Habib's latest round of talks will involve the withdrawal of Syrian, Palestinian and Israeli troops from Lebanon. State radio said Habib, who started consultations in Beirut Sunday, will go to Syria and Israel after talking with Lebanese leaders.

The Israeli occupation force in southern Lebanon is estimated at 35,000 troops.

Syria has 35,000 troops in the Bekaa Valley and northern Lebanon. They entered under an Arab League peacekeeping mandate after the 1975-76 civil war between Christians and an alliance of Palestinians and leftist Moslems.

Kirilenko ousted from Soviet Politburo

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Communist Party announced today that Andrei P. Kirilenko, long rumored retired or ousted, was dropped from the ruling Politburo.

The Soviet news agency Tass said Kirilenko, 76, was "released" for health reasons and that Azerbaijan party leader Geidar A. Aliev, was elevated from an alternate, or non-voting, member of the Politburo to full membership on the ruling body.

Tass was reporting on the Communist Party Central Committee plenum, meeting 12 days after the death of President Leonid I. Brezhnev.

Yuri V. Andropov, named to succeed Brezhnev as party general secretary two days after the Soviet leader's death Nov. 10, delivered a major speech on the economy, Moscow radio said.

It has been widely expected that Andropov, 68, may also take over Brezhnev's mantle as president of the Soviet Union but Tass gave no indication a decision had been made.

Radio Moscow said Andropov noted several economic targets set for 1982 were "not fulfilled," singling out transportation, steelmaking and construction. He also said labor productivity failed to meet the nation's needs.

Andropov noted that the grain harvest this year was "notably" better than last year but first reports of his speech did not give the size of the crop.

The Central Committee is thought to decide the presidency, even though the task lies constitutionally with the Supreme Soviet, or national Parliament, which opens its session Tuesday. It has been expected that several vacancies on the Politburo will be filled before the presidency is filled. Among those candidates considered leading contenders as president, if Andropov is not named, are Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko, 73, and Brezhnev protege Konstantin U. Chernenko, 71.

Brezhnev's death stripped the Politburo of its third top member since the January death of Kremlin ideologist Mikhail Suslov, who was No. 2 man behind the president. Kirilenko had been considered the No. 3 man.

Vladimir I. Dolgikh, 57, and Boris Ponomarev, 77, had been considered the top contenders for the Politburo vacancies and more appointments may be announced later.

Andropov is said to be grooming Dolgikh, who has a successful background in heavy industry, to replace Premier Nikolai A. Tikhonov, 77, and a Brezhnev protege.

Dolgikh is a non-voting Politburo member, a member of its Secretariat and chief of the Central Committee's heavy industry department.

Ponomarev is expected to be moved from candidate to full Politburo membership to assume the Politburo ideology portfolio, which Andropov had been handling before he was named general secretary. Suslov had it before him.

Brezhnev took control of the party after ousting Nikita S. Khrushchev in 1964. He took the presidency from Nikolai V. Podgorny in 1977.

Besides settling leadership questions, the Central Committee was expected to approve next year's economic plan and study this year's performance figures.

The Soviet grain harvest is traditionally announced during the autumn Central Committee-Supreme Soviet sessions. But the 1981 figure was withheld, presumably because it fell embarrassingly below target for the third straight year.

This year's crop is reportedly better — estimated by the U.S. Agriculture Department at 180 million tons — but still below the annual output of 239 million metric tons required by the end of 1985 under the 11th five-year plan.

Soviet industrial output is expected to grow by only 2.5 percent this year.

Demand for Kremlinologists increasing

AP Laserphoto

Because of recent changes in the Soviet Union's leadership hierarchy brought on by the death of Leonid Brezhnev, U.S. experts on Soviet relations find themselves in heavy demand.

WASHINGTON (AP) — These are heady days for America's Kremlinologists.

During the current Soviet leadership shakeup, U.S. government and academic specialists in the murky world of Kremlin personalities and policy-making have found their talents in greater demand than at any time since the 1960s.

Jerry F. Hough, a Duke University political scientist, said that in the first few days after Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev died Nov. 10 he received more than 30 calls from newspapers and broadcast stations requesting interviews.

"As soon as I put the phone down it would be ringing again," said Hough, who has drawn wide attention for his provocative hypothesis that Yuri V. Andropov, the former KGB chief succeeding Brezhnev as Communist Party leader, may be a "closet liberal" amenable to sweeping economic reforms.

While analysts at the State Department and Central Intelligence Agency worked long hours poring over classified cable traffic, other Soviet-watchers — ranging from former U.S. envoys to once-imprisoned dissidents — have gone before television cameras to discuss the end of the Brezhnev era.

This visibility contrasts sharply with the near-obscurity that engulfed many Kremlinologists during the past decade, once Brezhnev had consolidated his power and Soviet political change seemed to proceed slowly.

However, the current surge of attention toward events in Moscow also has intensified concern over the long-term adequacy of this country's brainpower pool for analyzing the Soviet Union and forecasting Soviet behavior around the globe.

Sen. Richard G. Lugar, R-Ind., notes that although many American experts had predicted there would be a considerable delay, the 68-year-old Andropov was named to succeed Brezhnev swiftly.

Pointing to the range of assessments about Andropov voiced by American Soviet-watchers, Lugar asserted: "The lack of much depth and certainty in any of the analyses shows a glaring gap in our relations with the Soviet Union."

"The unfortunate and dangerous fact of the matter is that we really don't know that much about the one foreign nation which constitutes the greatest threat to our democratic and economic freedoms," he said in a statement.

Lugar, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on Europe, said he hopes the Kremlin changeover will help accelerate congressional action on legislation he has introduced to establish a $50 million federal endowment for Soviet studies in the United States.

Other criticism over the performance of America's Soviet specialists has come from within their own ranks.

Reagan decision on MX expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is poised to announce his decision on deploying the huge new MX intercontinental missile, with all signs indicating he will chose a closely spaced basing scheme that faces opposition in Congress.

Administration sources said in advance of Reagan's announcement, expected late today, they understand he has accepted a recommendation to place 100 MX weapons in super-hardened launch silos spaced about 1,800 to 2,000 feet apart in the West, probably at Warren Air Force Base, Wyo.

The entire MX project is expected to cost about $30 billion.

Such a deployment pattern would rely on a theory called "fratricide" to assure the survival of the missiles. According to the untested theory, incoming Soviet warheads would disable each other through blasts, radiation or debris and most of the MX weapons would survive to launch a retaliatory strike.

What makes fratricide work, the experts say, is the close spacing of the MX missiles, which narrows the Soviet target area.

The close spacing concept, which the Air Force calls "dense pack," is a dramatic departure from past missile deployment plans, including the Carter administration's scheme.

The sources, who asked to remain anonymous, said they expect Reagan's package to include a number of "growth options," which might be built into the system in the 1990s if the Soviets develop ways to counter closely spaced basing.

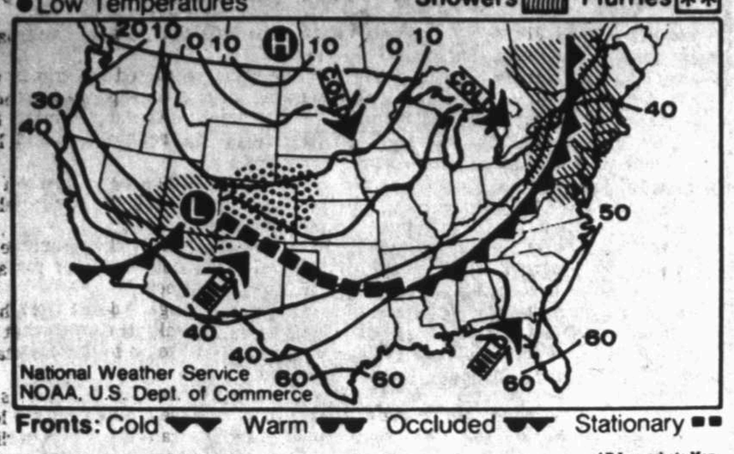

Among those options is "deceptive basing," a method of distributing MX missiles among additional holes.

Last week, sources said, Pentagon specialists and the Air Force were asked to come up with a way to scatter 100 MX missiles in up to 300 holes. Such deployment would force the Russians to guess where the missiles are.

That option was said to have been favored by Thomas Reed, a top Reagan weapons advisor. However, sources said these late studies were abruptly halted over the weekend.

At the same time, sources said they understood that Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and Reed had debated the "deceptive basing" proposal in what were described as "tough phone calls."

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, it should be partly cloudy and cooler this week.

Tonight should bring light and variable winds with the temperature reaching near 40.

Northeasterly winds should blow through at 10-15 mph Tuesday.

A NWS spokesperson whispered something about rain this week, but unlike the turkey, he wouldn't stick his neck out to say how much or when.

Sunday's high of 78 was three degrees away from the record high of 81 set in 1970, while the overnight low of 47 was a far cry from the record low of 24 set in 1957.

Kennedy death theories number remains high

DALLAS (AP) — Nearly two decades after President John F. Kennedy was shot in Dallas, the theories on who killed him and why still number in the hundreds.

Nineteen years ago today, Kennedy was mortally wounded by shots that rang out as he was riding in a motorcade downtown. A block from the site of the shooting stands the John F. Kennedy Memorial, where people have gathered for a brief service every Nov. 22 since 1963.

Last year the body of accused presidential assassin Lee Harvey Oswald was exhumed, dispelling two decades of theories that his grave was empty or instead held the body of a Soviet spy.

But historian John E. Sissom says hundreds of other conspiracy theories regarding Kennedy's death still remain.

Sissom owned and managed the John F. Kennedy Museum for 13 years until it closed one year ago. It was east of the Texas School Book Depository, where the Warren Commission said Oswald acted alone in shooting Kennedy.

"I don't think that the exhumation stopped the speculation from conspiracy buffs," said Sissom. "They, of course, all have their own different opinions of what happened. We are aware of several hundred printed conspiracy theories, all different."

In testimony earlier this month, El Paso attorney Joseph Chagra testified in a San Antonio federal court that convicted hit man Charles V. Harrelson claimed to have assassinated Kennedy.

But Chagra, testifying in Harrelson's trial in the slaying of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr., said he did not believe Harrelson's claim.

Chagra said Harrelson drew maps depicting where he was hiding when he shot Kennedy.

The FBI has apparently discounted any involvement by Harrelson in the Kennedy assassination.

Oswald's mother, Marguerite Claverie Oswald believed that members of the U.S. government plotted Kennedy's assassination and that her son was framed because he informed the FBI of those plans.

Twenty cardboard boxes of memorabilia on the Kennedy assassination, saved by Mrs. Oswald, are being cataloged by the library at Texas Christian University.

Mrs. Oswald died in January 1981 and was buried next to her son in a Fort Worth cemetery.

A team of pathologists found "beyond any doubt" that Lee Harvey Oswald was buried in the grave marked with his name.

"There is no reason to ever disturb that body again. Ever," said Dr. Linda Norton, head of the team that examined the body exhumed in October 1981.

Michael Eddowes, British author and assassination theorist, had agreed to pay for the exhumation, contending that the body in Oswald's grave was that of a Russian imposter who replaced Oswald when he defected to the Soviet Union in 1959.

Oswald's widow, Marina Oswald Porter, had tried to legally force the exhumation because she believed the grave was empty.

Oswald was buried Nov. 25, 1963, one day after he was shot to death by Dallas nightclub owner Jack Ruby.

Oswald had defected to the Soviet Union after he was discharged from the U.S. Marine Corps.

Is U.S. involved in 'fake' radio station?

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — There's something new on the air in El Salvador: bogus clandestine radio.

For two years, leftist guerrilla forces here have been broadcasting their version of the civil war over what they call Radio Venceremos — "We shall overcome" — from a secret radio station.

Starting Nov. 1, on almost the same shortwave frequency, a similar-sounding broadcast is heard at the same early morning and evening hours as the Venceremos news. It claims to be Venceremos, but it is a fraud.

"OUR NICARAGUAN brothers are helping us with planes," the new station told listeners last week, pretending to be broadcasting from the rebel camp. "Unfortunately they bombed our own men by mistake."

No such thing happened, but it is presumed that at least some listeners may have thought it an authentic rebel broadcast. Radio Venceremos later warned its listeners:

"When you hear imperialist interference, quickly change to our station."

By "imperialists" Venceremos means the Americans. In the 1954 coup engineered by the CIA in Guatemala against a leftist government, such bogus radio broadcasts were used, according to details of the operation that were recently declassified. Such broadcasts are known in the field of psychological warfare as "black radio."

Is the United States, which supports the government here, putting out the bogus broadcasts?

"WE CANNOT COMMENT on covert operations," a spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in San Salvador said. It was learned, however, that if there is such a CIA-backed station, the local embassy has not been told of it. The army of El Salvador also denies being involved.

Some of the news broadcast on the station seems to be tinged with the opinions of the far right-wing factions in the El Salvador political spectrum, and there are suspicions that right-wing groups may be financing the station.

The broadcasts have labeled as "fellow leftists" priests at the Jesuit-run University of Central America and have predicted failure of a proposed dialogue about peace. These views disagree with the U.S. position here, which favors the survival of above-ground leftists and a political solution to the war, but they fit in with right-wing views.

The politicians of the far right deny they are involved, although clearly anyone who admits the fakery would render it useless. Already, people here are calling the station Radio Mentiremos —"We shall lie"— a Spanish pun on the name of the guerrillas' Radio Venceremos.

Last week, the bogus broadcast reported that Cayetano Carpio, leader of the Popular Forces of Liberation, the most intractable of the five guerrilla groups, had been killed in fighting on Guazapa Volcano north of San Salvador.

ACTUALLY, THERE WAS no fighting in that area, and Carpio's clandestine radio station, Radio Farabundo Marti, broadcast a bitter denial that blamed the bogus broadcasts on the United States. "The Reagan administration is intensively broadcasting anti-revolutionary and provocative statements," Carpio's station charged.

The rebel groups claim the broadcasts are emanating from the Escalon section of San Salvador, the Beverly Hills of the capital, which is several miles from the U.S. Embassy. Many wealthy right-wingers have mansions there.

Venceremos shortwave broadcasts are believed to emanate either from a camp in the far north of El Salvador or from a station in Nicaragua whose broadcasts are relayed from inside El Salvador by a radio repeater.

For a year, rebel bands that stopped cars, trucks and buses have included in their "war tax" the vehicles' batteries, which some guerrillas say are used to power Radio Venceremos — for its hidden repeater.

Foreign experts based here noted that although Venceremos also has an FM broadcast, believed to originate from Guazapa Volcano, the imitation program goes out only over shortwave. FM is a line-of-sight broadcast, while shortwave bounces off the ionosphere and back to Earth. FM Venceremos is aimed at the capital of San Salvador while the shortwave version can be heard over the whole country.

"THEY KNOW THAT the rebels in their camps can pick up the shortwave version but probably couldn't hear the FM," one expert said of the spurious broadcasters. "They want the guerrilals in the field to hear it." A local communications researcher remarked, "It would seem that they have some excellent technical assistance."

Local newspapers have printed articles based on the fraudulent broadcasts, including the reported death of Carpio. Some have been attributed to Radio Venceremos, others merely to "a clandestine radio." The San Salvador papers generally reflect a right-wing political bias.

Soviet changes increase demand for U.S. experts

Soviet and Eastern European Research, said he found the spate of commentary prompted by Brezhnev's death "striking for its lack of imagination...People don't want to stick their necks out. They don't want to be out of line."

"The field as a whole has ossified," Ruble said. "It has to do with the generational politics of the academic discipline and with the limited number of people who participate in discussions in Washington. What happens is that it becomes very difficult for new perspectives to arise and debates quickly become framed in cliches."

Another Soviet specialist, Stanley H. Kober of SRI International, a think tank in Arlington, Va., said: "Given the amount of information we have to work with, and given that people are pressing us for answers, I think the performance has been reasonably good."

Professor Seweryn Bialer of Columbia University's Research Institute on International Change said that unless more funds are pumped into Soviet research at universities and other U.S. institutions, "America will be in very bad shape" as seasoned specialists retire.

"I think the (Lugar) legislation should be passed because it is really clear that we have to make a very major effort in the next five or six years to produce some first-rate analysts," Bialer said.

Malcolm Toon, who served as U.S. ambassador to Moscow during the late 1970s, expressed concern that some American Sovietologists have been paying too much attention to reports that Andropov himself is a worldly, cultivated man with a taste for Western art and music.

"I understand that he likes modern art, that he's more sophisticated in that respect than Brezhnev was, but that really is sort of confetti" Toon said in an ABC News interview. He contended that such stories are part of a "disinformation program that is coming out of Moscow now."

Background of American's death not wholly known

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — On Oct. 13, in a gully in El Salvador's Morazan province, a young American named Michael Kline, 21, was shot to death by Salvadoran soldiers.

"We killed a gringo mercenary," a colonel in the army's information office told reporters in the capital two days later. "Probably an American or a Canadian."

Since then, the story has changed in some ways. Kline has been identified as a young drifter whose closest relatives are a mother in West Germany and a sister in San Deigo. The government version now is that he was killed trying to escape. But what he was doing in war-ravaged El Salvador is still unclear.

It took a month to identify him, because the soldiers who shot him said that he had "no papers" — meaning no passport. Consular officers for U.S. embassies here, in Mexico and in Costa Rica have traced his wanderings, but his passport was never found.

Kline told American Express in Mexico last summer that his traveler's checks and his passport had been stolen. But records indicate that he had his passport again when he entered El Salvador Oct. 11, and on his body were found his traveler's checks, including some of those he had said he lost, consular officials reported.

The report of the Salvadoran army about his death comes in two versions. After he was killed, the army said he was believed to be a mercenary because he was carrying "lubricating oil"in his pack, presumably for cleaning a weapon.

The later report made no mention of his being a mercenary but said that he was ordered off a bus and taken into custody because he lacked proper identification. The report said that, en route in a truck to army headquarters at San Francisco Gotera, he tried to wrest a rifle from a soldier when the truck slowed to cross a gully. When he failed to do so, he jumped from the truck and ran, ignoring warning shots until he was killed, the report said.

The description of Kline is typical of restless backpackers who wander through Central America: 5 feet 11 inches tall, 150 pounds, a wispy beard, longish hair, dirty jeans, a T-shirt, rubber sandals and a sleeping bag. His only identification, apparently, was the traveler's checks.

Acting on the possibility that he might be an American, U.S. consular officials traced his comings and goings.

California church finds giving to receive works

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

REDONDO BEACH, Calif. — When the collection plate was passed at the Riviera United Methodist Church here one Sunday last August, the congregation got a surprise - they were asked to take rather than give.

"We asked people to take $10 and use it with some particular talent they had to multiply it," recalled the Rev. Orlie White, pastor for the 750-member church.

All told, congregation members took $2,000 in $10 bills. When the plate was passed again Saturday at the church's Harvest Festival, the deadline for returning the money and profits, it came back with more than $8,000.

"I was totally surprised by the response and energy," White said.

The pastor drew the idea for the fund-raiser from the biblical "Parable of Talents." The parable tells of a farmer who left sums of money with three servants before going on a trip. When the farmer returned he asked what had been done with the money. Two servants had used the sums to earn more money and were praised; the other had done nothing and was banished from the farm.

"The point of the parable is: 'Do something with what you have,'" White had told his congregation.

With such inspiration, members found a variety of ways to multiply their funds. Pat Davoli gave hula lessons, while Bev Roberts sold homemade soap to neighbors and friends.

Frank Herbert staked his $10 on the stock market, and the next day it soared to its greatest volume in history. Mable Conroy wagered the money on her athletic skills and won $75 in a bowling tournament.

Margaret Wood persuaded people to pledge dimes, quarters and dollars for every pound she lost during the three months. She came to church Saturday 12 pounds lighter and $152 richer.

Besides raising money for the church, the fund-raiser united the congregation, said Ruth D'Arcy, the Harvest Festival chairwoman.

"There was a real spirit at church that I haven't felt before," Ms. D'Arcy said.

White agreed: "A lot of people realized they had talents and were needed, but they needed help from others to develop their talents. This has drawn people in the congregation together."

Cycling canine may be leashed

WEST MILFORD, N.J. (AP) — Sheeba the mutt, a dog that wears goggles and rides in the fast lane, has been grounded while a court decides whether to mend her motorcycle-riding ways.

"She rides on the gas tank in front of me, and I keep it padded," the dog's master, Swen Bos, said of the pooch that has accompanied him in open-air riding across the country.

"She holds the front of the tank with her paws," Bos said. "And she wears goggles as a safety precaution."

Bos, a 23-year-old ironworker, has been hauled into Municipal Court by the Society For the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, which objects to his giving Sheeba cycle rides.

The case comes up Tuesday night before Judge George Cluff. Bos predicts he'll lose. But if he does, he said, "I'll appeal it."

Meanwhile, "Sheeba is grounded until Tuesday," Bos said.

"I was hoping the SPCA would give it up," Bos said. "But they haven't. They're pretty stubborn."

He faces a charge of transporting an animal in a cruel manner. The violation of state law carries a maximum sentence of a $250 fine, six months in prison or both, SPCA Chief Richard Altrath said.

"We're law enforcement and we have to go by what the law says, and the law says you can't carry an animal in an open vehicle," Altrath said from the SPCA's Clifton office. "It's a real sympathy case, but the guy is dead wrong."

Sheeba is an off-white mix of collie and malamute. Bos got her at a dog pound four years ago and said he realized her tastes in transportation when he began giving her horseback rides.

Motorcycle rides followed. The dog was small enough to fit in the pocket of his parka.

But Sheeba now weighs 42 pounds, so Bos made her a seat on the gasoline tank. Bos said he has driven at least 35,000 miles with Sheeba, including trips to New Orleans, Florida, New Hampshire and Cape Cod.

"She enjoys it a lot," he said. "You can see she's very alert."

Bos got his first SPCA warning in August and several days later he was ticketed by West Milford police for carrying a passenger without a helmet. The charge was dismissed in court.

A few days after that, Altrath said he mailed Bos the ticket that has him in court. Postponements have delayed the case until now.

"The guy loves the dog, and I have no problem with that," Altrath said. "But if you love the dog you don't endanger him by doing this. We've suggested that he put a sidecar on. But the law says you just can't carry him on an open vehicle, even if it was a flatbed truck."

"It will cause an accident some day by other motorists gawking," he said. "This is a definite part of the problem."

"We could have impounded the vehicle until the case was resolved and we could have hit him with a misdemeanor," Altrath said. "So if we're the bad guy here, we could have been a lot badder."

More mutilated pelicans found

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

DANA POINT, Calif. — Five more pelicans with mutilated beaks were discovered in the harbor here Sunday, victims of the second major round of mayhem to be directed against the wild, fish-stalking seabirds since Oct. 15.

Three of the birds, their beaks rendered useless by what was believed to be a knife, were gathered with nets and taken to a veterinary hospital. Two eluded capture and will be the target of a second round-up today.

The discovery brought to 18 the number of pelicans that have been found with their upper beaks either hacked off or irreparably damaged in Southern California within the last five weeks, an unprecedented outbreak of violence against the graceful fowl that has stirred nationwide outrage.

State game officials concluded that all but perhaps one of the first 13 mutilated birds had been attacked near Dana Point at the same time and by the same culprit.

The freshness of wounds inflicted on the five birds spotted Sunday indicated they were probably attacked this weekend, veterinary experts said, leading game wardens to conclude that either the original mutilator had struck again or was copied.

The new attack surprised state investigators, who have developed leads but pinpointed no specific suspects in their intensive investigation. They had hoped widespread publicity about stiff penalties awaiting anyone convicted of the attacks, along with $14,000 in reward money, would influence whoever was responsible for the first batch of mutilations to leave the birds alone.

"I thought it was over with," Lt. Dan W. Murphy, a 34-year-old state Department of Fish and Game warden, said Sunday afternoon as he looked out toward the heavy nautical traffic on picturesque Dana Point Harbor. "Since this thing had been on the news all over the nation, everybody knows about the pelicans.

"The first thing they ask me is, 'Have you caught the guy who mutilated the pelicans?' And I figured that the person or persons responsible had by now realized it was a dumb thing to do and, because of the heavy penalties if they get caught, wouldn't do it again."

Murphy and other investigators suspect either a single fisherman or fishing boat crew was responsible for at least the initial attack. He would not rule out the possibility that the birds discovered Sunday were victims of a copy-cat mutilator.

Woman, attacked, takes action against assailants

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) — A 43-year-old grandmother who was robbed at gunpoint ran her assailants down, smacked one with her own gun and retrieved her stolen necklace before calling police, authorities said.

"Those guys messed with the wrong person," said Martha Kate Cross of LaBelle. "It was a terrible week and I'd had it."

Mrs. Cross was on her way to see her hospitalized 2-year-old grandson here Sunday when three men approached her in the parking lot of a shopping center, police said. One pulled a .38-caliber revolver from his windbreaker and demanded that she drop her purse. She refused.

"It really never occurred to me to give them my purse," Mrs. Cross told officers later.

One of the men then ripped a heavy gold chain from her neck and the three ran away. Mrs. Cross jumped in her 1979 Cadillac and sped after them, reaching for her .22-caliber Smith & Wesson locked in a glove compartment.

She finally cornered the trio in the parking lot of a coin-operated laundry several blocks away and pointed the revolver at the robber who had her necklace.

"He really started begging when he saw my gun through the windshield," Mrs. Cross said.

The robber threw the necklace at her before she got out of her car and "hit him pretty good."

"I was really angry I didn't work him over harder...break his nose so that he would have had to go to the hospital," she said.

She didn't hit him harder, she explained, because she had cut her left hand opening a can of peaches earlier in the week and was afraid she might loosen the seven stitches.

The robbers ran away and Mrs. Cross went on to visit her grandson, William Paul Byrd III, who was hospitalized earlier in the week.

Burbank Big Boy missing

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Police are looking for a cherub-faced figure wearing red-and-white-checked overalls and carrying a cheeseburger on a platter.

The 5-foot-6-inch fiberglass statue disappeared early Sunday from outside of Bob's Big Boy restaurant, just a week after a full-sized fiberglass cow was snatched from a dairy here.

"He is wearing red-and-white checked overalls, has brown hair and brown shoes and is carrying a cheeseburger on a platter," police Sgt. Frank Miller said. "We don't know who took him."

Thieves broke a padlock to take the cherub-faced mascot, said Miller. He noted it has been stolen before.

"One time somebody tied a rope around it and tried to drag it off, but it ran into a bunch of cars," he said.

"We have no witnesses or leads, but there was a cow stolen from the rooftop of a dairy last week. It was a big full-sized cow and it was found over at one of the Glendale high schools."

Miller said the cow had a new coat of purple paint.

Restaurant manager Bob McGrew said the theft distressed some customers.

"One little girl had tears in her eyes," he said.

'Army of God' member sought in abduction

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Federal authorities were searching for a third member of the "Army of God" accused of kidnapping and threatening to kill an abortion clinic operator and his wife unless they stopped performing abortions.

Two other men charged in the August kidnappings were arrested Sunday, three months after Dr. Hector Zevallos and his wife were released unharmed after eight days in captivity.

After abducting the couple, the culprits sent authorities rambling "epistles" laced with Biblical quotations and references to abortion, signed "The Army of God," police said.

Authorities arrested Wayne Allen Moore, 18, of New Caney, Texas, at a friend's home here Sunday. Later in the day, Moore's brother, Matthew Maxson Moore, 20, was arrested in Alvin, Texas.

A third man identified as Don Benny Anderson, 41, of Pearland, Texas, was still being sought, said Joseph E. Ondrula, special agent in charge of the FBI's central Illinois office.

Anderson is believed to have been in Springfield as late as Friday, but his current whereabouts are unknown, Ondrula said.

All three men have been charged with violations of federal extortion and illegal travel laws, Ondrula said.

As far as investigators can tell, Ondrula said, the Moore brothers and Anderson are the only members of the "Army of God" and the only people involved in the abduction.

"The motive, as was stated in the epistles, is the abortion issue," Ondrula said.

But Frederick Hess, U.S. attorney for the southern district of Illinois, said investigators aren't sure why Zevallos, 53, and his wife, Rosalie Jean, 45, were kidnapped.

"At this point in time, I don't believe we know what is in the minds of the men," Hess said.

Zevallos had operated the Hope Clinic for Women Ltd. in Granite City. The clinic is still open, but Zevallos plays a less active role in its activities, clinic officials say.

The FBI said the three men threatened to kill Zevallos and his wife if they continued to operate the clinic after their release.

According to FBI reports obtained shortly after the kidnapping by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, authorities found a 44-page letter signed by "The Army of God" and a tape that said Zevallos and his wife would be killed if President Reagan did not end abortion in the United States.

Hess said that in addition to a possible anti-abortion motive, profit may have played a role. He said a demand for money was made, but would not disclose the amount.

Officials have found no evidence to link the men to two fires at abortion clinics in Florida, where authorities received similar "Army of God" letters, Ondrula said.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF
©1982 Tribune Company Syndicate, Inc.

Q.1—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠752 ♡K83 ◇AJ9873 ♣A
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
1 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—You have an almost insoluble problem unless you use a convention where a bid of the fourth suit, in this case spades, would be an artificial forcing bid. Without that bid, the only sensible thing to do is to jump to three diamonds. Although your suit is not good enough and your hand perhaps a trifle weak (because of the possible misfit) for that action, we can think of no better bid — certainly we don't want to jump raise partner's second suit with only three-card support.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠73 ♡A7 ◇64 ♣AKQ10843
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
3 ◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—This is a hand where we would not waste time. We would wheel out the old Blackwood and bid a grand slam if partner were to show two aces and two kings. We would choose no trump for the final strain, because we might be able to take ten tricks in the other three suits if the clubs don't behave.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ7653 ♡A8 ◇K543 ♣3
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Go to the bottom of the class if you bid either two or three spades — the first is an underbid and the latter shows a better suit. One thing is sure — North must have a six-card heart suit. Our first choice is to jump to four hearts — our ruffing value should prove useful. Our second choice would be three diamonds, to give North a chance to show three-card spade support.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQJ106 ◇AQ72 ♣AQJ6
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—West's preempt has really put it to you. A double would be for takeout, but it gives partner the option of converting to penalties. Although that could be the winning action, we need so little from partner to make slam in any one of three suits that we are prepared to take even stronger action — a cue-bid of five hearts.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♡KQ854 ◇AQJ983 ♣Q7
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	3 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—North's bidding has been music to your ears for it sounds as if there is minimal duplication in the spade suit. A slam is a distinct possibility — indeed, even a grand cannot be ruled out. For the moment, however, be content to simply complete the description of your hand. Bid three hearts; that shows a five-card suit and, by implication, guarantees six or more diamonds.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠74 ♡93 ◇AK764 ♣A876
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	4 ♣	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—Facing a partner who could jump, your hand, with its three prime controls, could easily produce a slam. However, you have no convenient cue-bid. The solution is to raise to five hearts. That not only conveys your slam aspirations, but also highlights your two losers in the spade suit.

Thanking the unthanked

An event which occurred last week should not pass without comment. The event was the annual Law Enforcement Appreciation Dinner at which four local officers were honored for their service to the community and the outstanding manner in which they carry out their duties.

The four men honored were Joe Lopez, a patrolman with the Midland Police Department; Lloyd Brazell, a deputy of the Midland County Sheriff's Department; David L. Jones, a Department of Public Safety trooper; and Bob Billhimer who is with the Midland FBI office.

Created in 1978 by Midland businessman, oilman and rancher Clayton Williams Jr., the Law Enforcement Appreciation Dinner is a commendable vehicle for bestowing gratitude and honor on fine public servants who repeatedly risk life and limb to protect society by upholding the laws Americans have enacted as a guideline for conduct.

All too often the efforts of law enforcement officers are taken for granted by what appears to be an unappreciative populace. It isn't necessarily that Midlanders don't appreciate the work of the officers; it's simply that we have delegated to them the difficult, sometimes dangerous, never-ending but nearly always thankless job of keeping us in line. It's a job few of us would accept, but one they perform exceedingly well.

Through the efforts of public-spirited individuals such as Mr. Williams and the members of the law enforcement-supporting Two Hundred Club, the officers now are getting the recognition they richly deserve.

In a manner of speaking, the four men honored last week are the "cream" of this year's law enforcement crop. They set an example of conduct and a standard of professionalism that their fellow officers would do well to emulate. Each is deserving of the recognition and thanks of the Midland public for a job well done.

Everyone should pay

The government reports that 198 Americans with incomes in excess of $200,000 — averaging $354,000 — had no income tax liability in 1980.

While many are having a difficult time meeting their tax commitment, there are thousands of citizens plotting with their attorneys and their tax experts to get off as cheaply as they can.

The problem is not that people try to avoid taxes; courts have always upheld their right to do so. The problem is the endlessly complicated tax code that encourages people to invest in ridiculous schemes with no intention of earning a profit, simply to avoid taxes. And these tax shelters often accomplish no social purpose, although every exemption built into the tax code by Congress was justified by its defenders as serving the public interest.

Federal income taxes took an average of 20 cents from each dollar of income reported on 94 million income tax returns last year.

Taxes hurt, and they should hurt all of us alike. Fairness is essential, and there must be a perception by taxpayers that the system is fair. Otherwise the typical American will no longer cooperate with a system of self-reporting of income and deductions. Already that practice has been on the increase in the United States, statistics show.

Congress needs to come up with a tax program that will ensure that everybody pays their fair share. That's the only way to restore integrity to the income tax system.

Another View:

Tax cuts and reality

President Reagan wants you to believe that all the talk about tax cuts and defense spending driving up the deficit is "real dipsy doodle." In his first post-election speech, delivered this week to an association of savings institutions, the president made it clear that he sees no need to respond to congressional demands that he reshape either his tax or defense programs because, he says, "current and projected deficits result from sharp increases in non-defense spending."

Is this really the reason that the federal deficit, which was $28 billion in 1979 and just under $60 billion in 1980 and 1981, hit $111 billion in 1982 and is now aimed in the range of $185 billion in the coming years? Well — no. It's not as simple as that.

Bad economic conditions account for part of the trouble — high unemployment and sagging profits drive up benefit costs and depress revenues. This is not entirely the administration's fault, but there is much reason to think that under a somewhat different set of economic policies, things needn't have gotten so bad. Other contributors to current and future deficits, however, were clearly under the administration's control, and here the facts tend to depart from the president's recollection of them.

The 1981 tax-cut bill, the administration's first priority, cut corporate and individual income tax revenues by an estimated $377 billion over the 1982 to 1985 period — and that's allowing for the corrective tax increases passed by Congress last summer. The president notes that these tax cuts simply "neutralize" rises in Social Security taxes. In fact, increases in combined employer and employee taxes for both Social Security and Medicare will be only about $78 billion over this same period.

The president says that growth in non-defense spending is to blame for future deficits. But — even ignoring inflation — the only areas of the non-defense budget slated for any growth at all are interest on the debt (an unavoidable obligation), Social Security, Medicare and other health and pension programs. The public has given the president good reason to believe that it doesn't want any major changes in Social Security or Medicare. But if you set these two programs aside, you will find that the entire increase in projected spending over the 1982 to 1985 period is accounted for by defense.

In fact, if defense spending and taxes are kept at the levels that the president wants, all federal programs except Social Security and other pensions, the court system, foreign-policy costs and a few other basic functions will have to be terminated in order to balance the budget by 1985.

That comes from a calculation that the many budget analysts on Capitol Hill and Wall Street can make for themselves very easily. The question the president must answer in his January budget is what he proposes to do about it. Harking back to an era when social programs were woefully inadequate — or looking around for someone else to blame — won't help in framing an answer that Congress, the financial markets or the general public is likely to find plausible.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Yuri Andropov's rise means end of detente

WASHINGTON — Despite the Kremlin's not-so-subtle disinformation campaign to paint Yuri Andropov as a moderate, or even a liberal, the new boss of the Soviet Union is a hardliner whose elevation means rough times ahead for the longsuffering Russian people and the rest of the world.

Jack Anderson

Actually, anyone who thinks a man who ran the KGB for 15 years could be a liberal must also believe in the Tooth Fairy. The KGB is a combination of the CIA, the FBI and the Bureau of Prisons — but without any legal restraints whatsoever. The head jailer is now in charge of the entire country.

For years, our intelligence agencies mistakenly thought that no one with a KGB background could hope to rise to the top of the Kremlin heap. At most, they believed, Andropov would have veto power over any would-be successor to Leonid Brezhnev.

As I reported three years ago, the CIA evaluated Andropov's position this way: "Any serious contender for the job of general secretary must ensure that he has the tacit approval of the security organ if not its active support."

Within the last year, however, Western intelligence began to rethink its assessment of Andropov's chances. In fact, as early as last May, I reported my intelligence sources' hunch that Andropov would be the one to grab the brass ring on the Kremlin merry-go-round.

The CIA may have been slow to consider the possibility that Andropov would be Brezhnev's successor, but it was never under any illusions about the nature of the beast. In November 1979, sources told my associate Bob Sherman that Andropov is "an astute, ruthless party bureaucrat whose cold and calculating attitude" fit him well for his job as KGB boss. Any notion that he has softened since then is dangerously wishful thinking.

What this means for Soviet-American relations is that detente is dead. As long as Andropov is in charge at the Kremlin, the United States can expect a tough Soviet policy on all fronts. The man who supervised the crushing of the Hungarian uprising as Soviet ambassador in 1956 can hardly be expected to take a lenient position on Poland or other restive satellites.

The big question now is how long Andropov will remain in charge. I've seen secret CIA reports on his health; he is far from robust.

At 68, Andropov is a relative stripling by the standards of the Soviet gerontocracy. But he has serious health problems. In 1966, he suffered a heart attack, and in the mid-1970s he required surgery so major that he spent 10 weeks in the hospital, according to the CIA.

Power, as Henry Kissinger fondly believed, may be the ultimate aphrodisiac; it may also be the ultimate tonic. Brezhnev was in frail health for years, yet he never relinquished his grip on the Soviet power apparatus. Andropov can be expected to be every bit as tenacious now that he has reached the pinnacle.

In the Byzantine atmosphere of the Kremlin, no one can relax in the top job. The other old men Andropov beat out will not give up easily.

But Andropov still has the ace in the hole that put him where he is: the loyalty of the KGB. The men who run the Gulag Archipelago now have one of their own in control for the first time in Soviet history, and they're not likely to abdicate their newly enhanced power and prestige.

DRESS RIGHT!: Starting Dec. 1, the 110 inspectors in the Interior Department's Office of Surface Mining will be required to wear uniforms, and some of them aren't at all pleased by the gussy-up effort.

One inspector sourly suggested that if the field troops have to wear uniforms, then the director of the office should also be required to. And another filed this complaint with his bosses:

"The OSM inspectors would be similar to Park Rangers chasing the elusive Yogi Bear. We would be likened to zookeepers with whips taming the animals in the cages.

"The next step after uniforms is the issuing of guns to complete the Police Power concept. Instead of issuing a Notice of Violation, a warning shot would be fired. Authorization to fire fatal shots would probably be reserved by Interior Secretary (James) Watt."

One inspector even complained that he was allergic to the $250 polyester uniform. It did him no good; he was issued a cotton one.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES: When the Arthritis Foundation took over a two-story building in Atlanta for its new national headquarters, it had to install an elevator to accommodate arthritics who can't negotiate the stairs. What's odd about the lack of an elevator is that the building's previous owner was the Otis Elevator Co. The elevator installed was an Otis.

— "Blue Monday" is evidently a well-founded expression. According to the National Center for Health Statistics, more people commit suicide on Monday than on any other day of the week. Saturday has the lowest score in suicides — but the highest in motor-vehicle deaths, 83 percent more than on Tuesday, the lowest day. Saturday is also the day when most murders occur; its average is 74 percent higher than Wednesday, the lowest in that respect.

INSIDE REPORT:

Regan's tax cut plan 'scooped' by Baldrige

WASHINGTON — Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, prime mover in trying to advance the next 10 percent tax cut by six months, was mortified when he was scooped by his Cabinet colleague and sometime rival, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Seeking to get back in the limelight after many months in the shadows, Regan had been quietly pushing the accelerated tax cut for two weeks. President Reagan was so impressed that he called the Treasury secretary at home one night to convey his interest. But it was Baldrige who slipped the news to the world.

With this premature release, Treasury operatives had to make up for lost time in plugging the idea to skeptical Republicans in Congress. Don Regan himself was traveling the Capitol Hill circuit last week. But a strong attack against the idea inside the administration — led by Dr. Martin Feldstein, the aggressive new chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers — may abort Regan's plan.

PACKWOOD'S COMMITMENTS

Sen. Robert Packwood's reputation as a slick political operator was enhanced when it was learned that he won commitments for re-election as Senate Republican campaign chairman from two newly-elected conservatives at the moment he was handing out 1982 campaign funds to them.

The commitments for liberal Packwood from the Senate's two new conservatives, Rep. Paul Trible of Virginia and Chic Hecht of Nevada, was a body blow to conservative Sen. Richard Lugar's challenge against Packwood. That they were obtained at a time when Packwood was dispensing Senate campaign committee funds has raised eyebrows.

A footnote: New Right operatives grumble Lugar's campaign has been sluggish. Calling conservative senators to line up votes for him, these operatives were surprised to learn that Lugar himself had not yet called the senators. Packwood has collected an impressive string of commitments from conservatives, headed by Sen. Charles Grassley of Iowa.

A HASTY SUMMIT

High-level officials in the administration were dismayed that President Reagan's two top foreign policy advisers, Secretary of State George Shultz and national security assistant William P. Clark, were willing to expose their chief to an unprepared summit in Moscow by sending him to the Brezhnev funeral.

These critical officials were not so much concerned that a visit would give the wrong message to the world — particularly Poland. Rather, they felt it would be an unjustifiable gamble to send the president unprepared into a summit with Soviet leader Yuri Andropov. Reagan in Moscow would have triggered far more comprehensive talks than did his standby, Vice President George Bush.

A Footnote: Friends of White House chief of staff James Baker hoped he would get some credit from the right for successfully blocking a Reagan visit to Russia. But conservatives, deeply distrustful of Baker, were unimpressed.

PERCY'S PRIMARY

Rushing conservative Rep. Tom Corcoran's plans to challenge liberal Sen. Charles H. Percy in the 1984 Illinois Republican primary did not achieve its desired effect: keeping President Reagan away from a Jan. 19 fund-raiser for Percy in Chicago.

Percy's invitation to the president was accepted months ago at the recommendation of Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker. That was a preemptive strike to give Percy a free ride for a fourth-term nomination. But Corcoran counterattacked by unveiling his potential candidacy in a letter to the state's 102 Republican county chairmen.

Corcoran's letter was intended to help White House aides keep Reagan out of such intramural tangles, but it failed. Although Percy is by no means the favorite senator at the White House, his power as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee means nobody there wants to antagonize him.

NO HEIR TO JESSE

The unexpected defeat of congressional candidate William Cobey in North Carolina was particularly galling to the state's Republican leaders because they saw him as heir apparent to Sen. Jesse Helms.

Helms, voted by readers of the Conservative Digest the most admired conservative in Congress, faces an uphill battle for re-election in 1984 against Democratic governor Jim Hunt. Hence, Republicans wanted Cobey, former University of North Carolina athletic director, seated in Congress as his successor in case Helms should lose.

Moreover, on the chance that Helms might not seek re-election in 1984, Cobey as a sitting congressman would be his obvious replacement. But Cobey is now a two-time loser (he was defeated for lieutenant governor in 1980), defeated in the 1982 debacle in North Carolina that also knocked out two Republican congressmen.

CHARLEY REESE

U.S. banking practices rob people

I have been chastised by a banker for not knowing what I'm talking about. It's true that I am no financier. The very image of that would cause my own banker to fall over in a convulsive fit of laughter.

Charley Reese

But I know what I'm talking about when I say the present monetary system in this country, which was created by the Morgans and the Rockefellers, is grossly unfair and disguised from one end to the other in deceptive rhetoric.

Fractional reserve banking came about when European merchants began to deposit gold in depositories for which they received a receipt. They soon learned that in their trading it was more convenient to simply transfer the receipts than to retrieve the gold and exchange that.

Some bright owner of a depository discovered that the owners of the gold almost never came to withdraw it all at the same time. It occurred to this ingenious man that he could issue more receipts than there was gold on deposit. Thus was born the fractional reserve banking system we use today.

People generally believe that they deposit their money, that the banker sets aside a cash reserve, and lends the balance. Bankers like to say they "invest it in the community." It sounds better than saying they rent money.

What actually happens, however, is that people deposit their money, the banker sets aside a cash reserve, and then lends several times the amount actually depositied. This additional "money" which actually is a bank credit is created out of thin air with a bookkeeping entry. Furthermore the loan of heretofore nonexistent "money" is counted as an asset of the bank, which entitles the banker to lend even more.

Thus a bank charter is a legal license to create money out of thin air and charge interest for it. That will tell you why a bank charter is so highly valued.

There seems to be nothing especially wrong with this system so long as the bankers are careful not to lend too much, for each bank credit is retired, as the loan is paid back, by earned money. The problems arise from greed — when bankers lend excessive amounts and when they charge too much for what is, after all, a privilege granted by the government to create money out of nothing.

Bankers would have you believe that money is only a commodity like wheat and that the price is determined by the free play of the marketplace. Oddly enough, most bankers don't carry the flag of the free market when it comes to the government regulating how much they could pay depositers. They like that.

To some extent money is a commodity. Individual banks do compete for money, although they have made sure, through the government and the central bank, that the competition is within carefully prescribed limits.

On the other hand, the price they charge for money is not determined by the free market either. It is determined by them and by the central bank which the banks own.

Secondly, since the value of a currency backed by nothing is determined solely by the amount in circulation, the central bank, with its power to increase that amount, has the power to rob people of the fruits of their labor.

Take a working man, for example, who put away $10,000 in 1941. He earned his money based on the value of money at that time. He has put away dollars worth a certain amount of purchasing power. Thirty years later, his $10,000 has been reduced to about $2,000 in purchasing power.

He himself did nothing to cause this $8,000 loss. There was nothing he could do to prevent it. The power to increase the money supply rested with the central bank and it increased it, thereby decreasing the value of his dollars, for its own selfish purposes.

The Congress should be forced to do two things: (1) it should take away from the central bank the power to rob people of their savings; and (2) it should regulate the amount of interest a bank can charge so that big banks can no longer strangle the American economy while they play the international money game for their own profits.

VA director believes undeserving vets receiving disability payments

WASHINGTON (AP) — Robert Nimmo, director of the Veterans Administration, says many veterans suffering nothing worse than a case of hemorrhoids are drawing monthly disability checks from the VA.

Nimmo called for reform of the VA's programs of health care and disability payments, but said it would probably require a presidential commission and a courageous president with the will to buck the powerful veterans organizations to get anything done.

"There are some people in the House and the Senate who I wouldn't want to name but who understand that something should be done, but they are outnumbered by those who are political opportunists and who will demagogue any issue to get the veterans' vote," he said in a recent interview.

NIMMO HAS announced his resignation and said he will leave when a successor is confirmed by the Senate. President Reagan has not announced a candidate yet but a decision is expected soon.

Turning his attention to the VA's system of compensating veterans for conditions incurred in service which impair their earning ability, Nimmo said:

"Our ability to rehabilitate people and get them back into employable status has changed enormously and yet we're paying out millions of dollars in continuing disability payments for such things as sinusitis, hemorrhoids and hysterectomies that are not disabling," Nimmo said.

"Even though the problem has been taken care of and people are back at work, they are continuing to draw disability. There are lists of literally dozens of conditions of that sort where we are continuing to pay disability based on a presumption that that person is X-percent unemployable when in fact he is working."

He said veterans' benefits, pensions and health care, if uncurtailed, are likely to triple the VA's $25 billion budget by the end of the century.

ABOUT 2.2 million veterans — one American of every 100 — get VA disability payments ranging from $62 to $1,213 a month.

Nimmo said it's proper to compensate "a guy who was injured in combat and bears some defacement that may not have an effect on his employability.

"But it does trouble me to pay continuing disability for the hysterectomy or the sinusitis or the hemmorhoids type of thing that have nothing to do with being shot at and are simply illnesses that everybody encounters as he goes through life and are no longer disabling."

But Bob Macomber, chief of the VA rating policy staff, said payments are only made when a veteran's service-connected disability "has resulted in disimpairment in earning ability."

In response to questions, Macomber said veterans are examined three times during a five-year period to make certain that the disability is persistent and disabling.

MACOMBER SAID hemorrhoids or sinusitis or even varicose veins sometimes can be so severe as to cut into a person's earning power.

Nimmo also called for changes in a law which offers free medical care, if hospital space is available, to any veteran over age 65, even if his ailment is not related to when he was in the military.

He said 70 percent of the VA's 1.3 million annual hospital patients are treated for conditions which have no service connection.

AP Laserphoto

Robert Nimmo, Veterans Administration director who plans to retire as soon as a successor is approved, believes too many undeserving veterans are receiving disability payments and medical help in the form of VA hospital stays. Nimmo feels that an approved system for screening applicants for such payments could save the government money.

Many of these elderly veterans are poor, as veterans organizations insist, but some are not, Nimmo said.

"I personally know of people of very substantial means" who will pay for their own minor medical treatment, Nimmo said, "but for any major surgery — a bypass operation or something of that sort — they go to the VA hospital because they don't want to be put out even a share of a $40,000 operation."

HE SAID "maybe the answer" is a means test — a denial of services for those with the means to pay for them.

He asked: "Is it good public policy to take a veteran who suffered nothing resulting from military experience and who has reached the age of 65 and has means and is able to pay for his health care — should he have access to a tax-supported institution without any cost to him?"

On another matter, Nimmo dismissed as "birdseed" the criticisms of him — by the VA's own inspector general and others — for renovating his office, using his government driver on personal trips and demanding a larger car than he was entitled to.

"I don't have any apologies at all for any of the things I've been criticized for," he said.

"The only things I would apologize for is that I didn't make more progress on getting a management system in here and in cutting waste."

FBI official should be charged

WASHINGTON (AP) — An FBI supervisor who is an expert on office break-ins is expected to be indicted by a federal grand jury on several charges arising from his alleged receipt of stolen diamonds, his attorney says.

Attorney Kenneth Michael Robinson said Sunday that a six- or seven-count indictment would be returned against H. Edward Tickel, 42, a $40,000-a-year agent working at FBI headquarters.

Robinson, saying he wanted to make sure his client's side was publicized, told the Washington Post the charges would include receiving stolen property, income tax evasion, obstruction of justice and soliciting perjury.

Tickel told the newspaper he has been under investigation for three years, adding, "I'm glad for the opportunity to fight back."

An FBI spokesman declined to comment Sunday on the indictment or the allegations against Tickel.

Tickel, a 14-year veteran of the FBI, worked as a member of the bureau's technical services division until November 1981 and has been described as the bureau's "black bag" expert, conducting court-approved office break-ins and planting hidden microphones.

Robinson said Tickel was accused of receiving diamonds stolen in a North Carolina jewel heist. The lawyer said the gems came from Tickel's own collection and that their sale wasn't listed on his client's tax return because he received no capital gain from the transaction.

"I needed the money and I sold the jewels legitimately to a jeweler in Florida...diamonds and mounted diamonds," Tickel told NBC News.

In September, Associate Attorney General Rudolph W. Giuliani confirmed that Tickel was being investigated but refused to comment on the allegations against him.

NBC quoted an unidentified Justice Department source as saying, "This will be the most embarrassing indictment in the history of the FBI."

Tickel said, however, that he was being made a scapegoat.

"They (the FBI) finally think they've found some things they can hang their hat on," he added. "We're gonna have to fight. No problem. I think that we'll be OK in the end," the agent told NBC.

Robinson said the FBI would hold a news conference today, that the indictment would be returned against Tickel and that his client would surrender to authorities and plead innocent.

Suit reaches courtroom 13 years after filing

WASHINGTON (AP) — A lawsuit brought by two former civil rights workers who claim a U.S. senator and a Kentucky prosecutor violated their constitutional rights in the 1960s is going to trial after 13 years.

Opening arguments are scheduled today in the U.S. District Court case brought in 1969 by Alan and Margaret McSurely, who are seeking up to $8 million in damages.

The case took so long to come to trial that three of the five defendants, including the late Sen. John McClellan, D-Ark., have died. Their estates are now defendants. Besides McClellan and the prosecutor, three Senate staffers were named as defendants in the lawsuit.

The lawsuit stems from incidents in Pikeville, Ky., where the McSurelys were trying to organize poor whites against the local political establishment, and in Washington, where they were held in contempt of Congress for refusing to cooperate with McClellan's permanent subcommittee on investigations.

'New poor' causing new problems as winter looms in nation's cities

WASHINGTON (AP) — With winter a month away, city officials and social workers are worried that communities across the nation will not be able to provide food and shelter for a growing number of poor people with nowhere to go.

City leaders and officials of the country's major service agencies are holding a "war council" here today to discuss the problems of caring for the unemployed during the winter ahead.

"Cities across the country are attempting to cope with a life-threatening situation posed by the winter of 1983: increasing numbers of unemployed and homeless persons requiring food and shelter," according to the U.S. Conference of Mayors, which organized the meeting.

"IN MANY cities, existing resources cannot meet needs in a winter predicted by many to be the worst of the century," a briefing paper prepared for the conference said.

The problem is coming from people who aren't ordinarily poor and don't know how to cope. A recent study by the U.S. Conference of City Human Services Officials called them the "new poor."

They are in part the product of a 10.4 percent national unemployment rate, which has nearly 11.6 million Americans out of work — the highest since the closing years of the Depression.

"In cities across the country there is emerging a group that may be termed the 'new poor' — people who are losing their jobs, exhausting their financial resources, exhausting their unemployment benefits and loosing their homes," the report said."These people are coming to human service agencies for the first time and it is difficult for them to do so."

Officials are most worried that there are not enough resources to care for these people.

"APPROXIMATELY 600 people are homeless in Baltimore on any given night," Baltimore officials reported in a sampling of troubled cities in advance of today's conference. "There is a need to increase the number of shelters available in the city, particularly for families.

"The local public health department which has traditionally served two priority populations — children and the elderly — is now serving a new priority group," Baltimore officials reported, "Middle age persons, mostly men, who are unemployed.

"Neighborhood health centers are seeing more and sicker adults in need of medical treatment, many of whom are unemployed," Baltimore officials said.

And in Berkeley, Calif., officials reported "a marked increase in the number of students and unemployed professionals using food banks and scup kitckens."

Cambridge, Mass., officials said that over the past two years, "The number of people seeking housing assistance from the city has increased substantially. The city does not have the resources to help them, however.

"CAMBRIDGE HAS only one shelter for the general population which can accommodate 20 people," that city reported. "A second shelter, specificially for alcoholics, accommodates 40 people.

"People using the shelter, including families with children, must vacate it at 8:00 a.m., even if they have nowhere else to go," the Cambridge report said.

Homeless children spend their days in public libraries, fast food restaurants and any other place that is warm and open.

Cleveland officials said cuts in the federal food stamp program "have created problems of malnutrition, especially among the elderly, which has, in turn, created health problems and led to a demand for more medical care.

"People are having to make the choice between eating and heating their homes — many are choosing to keep warm," Cleveland reported. "Soup kitchens are not able to handle all of the families seeking assistance."

THE MAYOR of Denver issued a public call for religous groups to help in providing emergency food and other services.

"There has been a substantial increase in the number of people needing emergency shelter," Denver reported. "Many people, including families, have been evicted from their homes because they are unable to pay the rent. The homeless include individuals who are well educated and have skills, but are unable to find employment."

The mayor of Detroit started a hunger hot line to refer people to food banks and soup kitchens.

"It is now open 12 hours per day, but will be expanded to 24 hours per day," Detroit officials reported. "The lines are always busy with people calling both to ask for help and to offer it."

In New Orleans, food banks are serving 64 percent more people than they did a year ago and officials expect the total increase in demand to rise almost 150 percent by 1983.

Bridegroom charged with murder

CULVER CITY, Calif. (AP) — A bridegroom and three of his friends were charged with murder and the wedding was cancelled after a confrontation outside a motel room.

The groom, Ben Richard Ballinger of El Cajon, 26, was booked on a murder charge along with his friends after they confronted three men just before midnight Friday outside a motel room rented for a wedding party the next day.

The three apparently were trying to break into one of the rented rooms, said police Sgt. Don Ruetz.

Two of the would-be robbers fled, but 39-year-old Darella Daniels of Los Angeles was beaten and shot once in the head, Ruetz said. He declined to say who fired the gun but said the shooting appeared intentional.

Also arrested were Ballinger's brother, Nick, 22, and Wayne Mike Jewel, 26, both of La Palma, and a 49-year-old El Cajon man, Len Swearingen.

All were held Sunday without bail pending arraignment, Lt. Sharon Blawn said.

Ballinger's wedding, scheduled for Saturday at St. Monica's Catholic Church in Santa Monica, was canceled.

Give thanks.

Diary may help ease waiting

Dear Dr. Solomon: Can syphilis cause a person to become impotent? — Ron, Sacramento, Calif.

Dear Ron: Syphilis which has advanced to the third stage can result in impotence.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have been on antidepressant medication for 20 days. I know that you have written in your column that it will work; it just takes time. But is there anything constructive I can do in the meantime? — Mrs. C.N., Atlantic City

Dear Mrs. C.N.: Waiting for an antidepressant to work, and for side effects to subside, is difficult. One way to help ease the wait is to keep a record of how you're feeling from day to day. Feel free to write down anything that comes to your mind. This diary is purely personal and confidential; your doctor will never ask to see it. You may want to jot down questions to ask your physician when you see him/her. You may feel like expressing some of your thoughts and feelings, or even recalling your dreams. Or perhaps you want to keep a running record of your daily activities. Like a scientist, you can chart the progress of your therapy from those unpleasant side effects through the feeling of becoming happier and healthier. Good luck for a brighter future.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I tried to get my daughter to lose weight before she decided to start a family, but it was no use. Now she is pregnant and still very much overweight. In spite of this, she says that her obstetrician wants her to gain more weight during her pregnancy. If she is already too heavy, why should she gain any more? — Mrs. E.V., Miami

Dear Mrs. V.: Adequate weight gain during pregnancy is very important; in fact, Dr. Myron Winick, of the Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, says that adequate weight gain — about 25 to 30 pounds — is the number one priority in prenatal care. Moreover, weight gain during pregnancy is equally important for the obese woman, although in her case the gain may be more limited but still amount to at least 16 pounds, Dr. Winick says.

Physicians are concerned about adequate weight gain during pregnancy because it is the key to fetal weight gain. The intake of calories is particularly important because the fetus will receive other nutrients even if the mother's own body stores are depleted; however, this is not true of calories. The mother's body reserves can be spared by providing her with protein, iron, and calcium supplements.

It would of course have been better if your daughter had been at her ideal weight when she becane pregnant. But pregnancy is not the time to go on a diet.

For Beverley, St. Paul, Minn.: Older people, too, can benefit from the exercise listed in my book "Stop Smoking, Lose Weight." I have seen improvement in both endurance and psychological functioning in a number of my older patients who undertook a regular exercise program.

Dating service set up for people with herpes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Singles who meet each other through one of the newest dating services in the nation's capital don't have to worry about getting herpes. They already have it.

"You're intelligent, attractive, a success. And you also have herpes," starts the brochure put out by Herpes Anonymous Research and Placement Service — HARPS — founded by 32-year-old Dennis Davidson.

HARPS is aimed at overcoming the stigma and practical social problems — to tell or not to tell a date — faced by some of the 20 million Americans the federal Centers for Disease Control estimates have the communicable virus.

For $15, Davidson is promising HARPS customers at least three and as many as six introductions a month with fellow sufferers. A year's membership with unlimited referrals costs $75.

Along with the dates comes a monthly newsletter with information about herpes and news about the still-unsuccessful search for a cure for the virus, which is usually contracted through sex with an affected partner.

Davidson, a one-time commercial scuba diver from Davidsonville, Md., says he wants to do more than make a profit from HARPS. Other goals are uniting sufferers with researchers and donating money to research.

Davidson, who is single, says he got the idea for his operation last year when a lesion appeared on his genitals.

"Doctors haven't conclusively diagnosed it as herpes, but I had to assume I have herpes," he said, adding that he, like millions of other people, suddenly found complications in his social life.

HARPS began advertising last month in small weekly newspapers in Washington and put an ad in this month's Washingtonian magazine, which usually has about 300 classifieds placed by individual singles and dating services.

Two health professionals familiar with HARPS say they think the dating service can fill a needed social role.

NFL is back—Scalpers get $2 for $13 tickets

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

In East Rutherford, N.J., John Cancillieri stood outside Giants Stadium trying to unload his tickets to the Giant-Redskin game. "The thrill is gone," he said. Outside Atlanta Stadium, the scalpers were trying to unload $13 tickets for $2. There were few takers.

The nation's football fans, who went eight weeks without the National Football League, sent the NFL a message Sunday: they can still do without it.

There were 115,586 no-shows at the day's 13 games and a total of 204,575 empty seats, meaning that the league played to about three-quarters of capacity. On the first weekend of the season, Sept. 12, there were 32,373 no-shows, and last year, the league played to nearly 94 percent of capacity.

Many of the fans who did show up were bitter about the 57-day strike, which left the league with a nine-game season and an expanded 16-team playoff format.

"The season is shot, it's not the same," said Greg Mees of Sandusky, Ohio, who was at the Browns-Patriots game on his uncle's season ticket. "But I'm glad to see a football game."

"They wanted 55 percent of the gross; they're not worth five percent," Dick Winn, a Philadelphia Eagle season ticket holder for 23 years, said of the players. He left Veterans' Stadium in the third quarter of the game between the Eagles and the Cincinnati Bengals and said he wasn't sure he'd be back again this year.

"We wouldn't be here today if we didn't have free tickets," said Dennis Dover, who was at the Houston Astrodome with his wife Connie to watch the Oilers lose to the Pittsburgh Steelers. Another Oiler fan, Nat Messer, said: "Personally, I would have liked the owners to have shut them down and cut them loose, not let any of the veterans play and sing all new players next year."

But other fans felt that once the anger abated, it would be business as usual. "I think people will complain, but they'll forget about it," said Ray Tinter of Cleveland. "I'm a football fan," said Frank Odum of Atlanta, a Falcon season ticket holder. "I think the people like me will keep coming to the games no matter what."

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle attributed some of no-shows to the fact that the league lifted the blackout on televising non-sellouts in home cities. But he acknowledged that the league had a selling job to do.

"Hopefully," he said of the fans, "they'll get back in the mood for football."

The biggest falloff was in Atlanta, where 20,228 ticket holders failed to show up. But perhaps the biggest surprise was in Irving, Texas, where there were 13,439 no-shows for the game between the Dallas Cowboys and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

It was the first time in 45 games that the Cowboys had failed to fill the stadium. "I guess they had plans they couldn't cancel," said Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "I had plans myself, but I cancelled them."

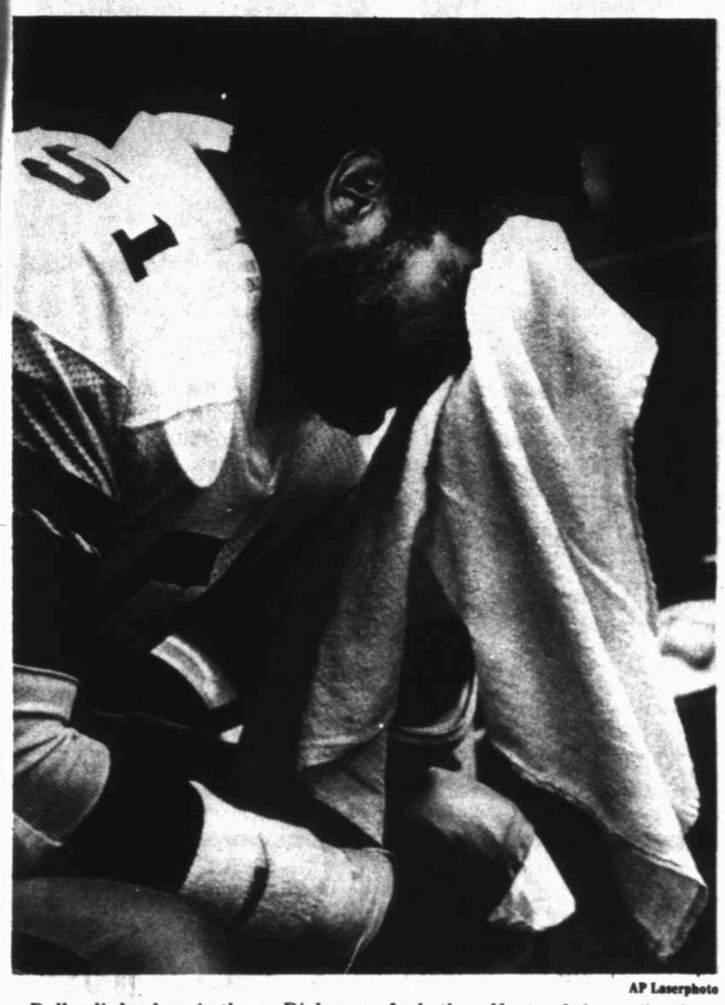

There were exceptions. In Denver, the no-show total of 1,187 was the lowest in the Broncos three games this year. The previous no-show totals in Mile High Stadium this year were 1,539 in the season opener and 1,204.

The fans who did show up elsewhere made their feelings known. In Cleveland, there were boos when the Browns and Patriots shook hands at midfield before the game in a gesture of union solidarity. The Bears and Lions did the same in Chicago, again to a chorus of boos.

There were also boos when the players took the field in most of the stadiums. But they turned to cheers once the action started.

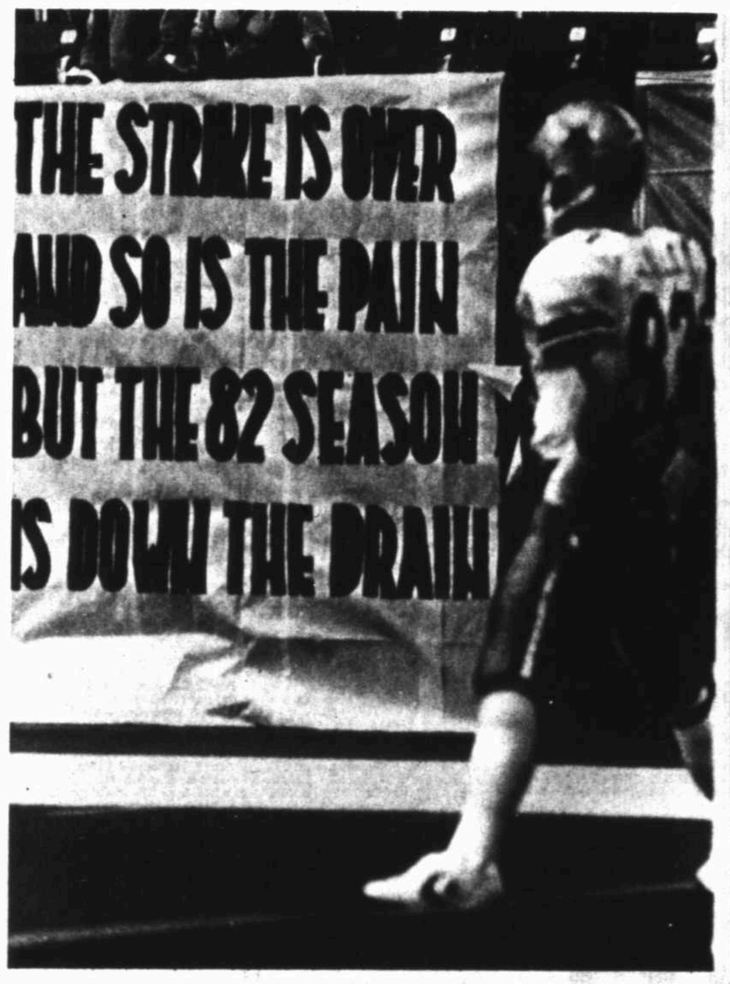

The players? They didn't seem to care much.

"Empty seats don't bother me," said running back Walter Payton of the Chicago Bears. "My job is to play football and not look up into the stands."

Pittsburgh beats Oilers for 3-0 mark

HOUSTON (AP) — The Pittsburgh Steelers today have an elixir to ease to their sore muscles, one the Houston Oilers have trouble finding in their medicine bag — a victory.

"A win is the best tonic for soreness," Pittsburgh Coach Chuck Noll said Sunday after the Steelers picked up where they left off prior to the 57-day player strike with a 24-10 victory over the Houston Oilers.

The Steelers' chief medicine man on the field was quarterback Terry Bradshaw, who admitted he never felt comfortable, but nonetheless completed three touchdown passes and riddled the Oiler secondary for 228 yards on 16 completions in 40 attempts.

THE STEELERS now are 3-0 on the season and the Oilers, struggling offensively just as they did prior to the strike, dropped to 1-2.

"It was easier physically to throw the ball so we went with our passing game," Noll said. "Still, most of the guys will be in trouble Monday morning with soreness."

The Steelers regained their battle readiness before the Oilers, taking a 10-0 lead on a 48-yard field goal by Gary Anderson in the first quarter and a 17-yard touchdown pass from Bradshaw o Greg Hawthorne in the second period.

But the Oilers got on the scoreboard late in the second quarter with Florian Kempf's 31-yard field goal and pulled even in the third period when quarterback Gifford Nielsen hit tight end Dave Casper with a nine-yard touchdown pass.

CASPER, WHO arrived in town last Friday from a fishing trip, caught eight passes for 98 yards in the game, a personal high, including four catches for 62 yards in the toucdown drive.

During the Oiler spurt, Bradshaw hit a dry spell, missing on 12 straight pass attempts.

But then he came back with 17-yard touchdown strike to Ben Cunningham and a 27-yard shot to Jim Smith to seal the Oilers' fate.

BRADSHAW WAS intercepted twice, losing his his string of 119 consecutive passes without a theft.

Nielsen completed 17 of 39 passes for 20 yards but was intercepted three times, twice by strong safety Donnie Shell, and newly acquired Archie Manning replaced Nielsen in the third quarter.

Manning promptly fumbled at the Oiler 17 with the score tied 10-10, providing a key turnover that allowed the Steelers to regain the momentum. Bradshaw hit Cunningham for a touchdown on the first play after Manning's miscue.

Dallas survives Tampa

IRVING, Texas (AP) — They were booed. They were outplayed. But the National Football League strike couldn't change one thing — they were still the Dallas Cowboys in the crunch.

Thanks to player representative Robert Newhouse's three-yard touchdown run on his only carry of the game, the Cowboys survived the bruising Tampa Buccaneers 14-9 Sunday before a paltry turnout of 49,578 fans with 13,439 no-shows.

It was the first time in 45 games Dallas didn't play before a soldout house and the smallest since 1975.

Winless Tampa Bay, 0-3, beat Dallas, 2-1, in every department but the scoreboard.

THE BUCS got more first downs, 21-13; rushing yards, 135-78; and passing yards, 247-107. The time of possession was 35:50 to 24:10, Tampa Bay.

But Tampa Bay drove into scoring position five times, settling for three field goals by Bill Capece and a critical miss and a fumble near the goalline.

The boos?

Quarterback Danny White was heavily booed twice in the first half when the rusty Cowboys' offensive machine sputtered and stalled.

A 9-yard touchdown pass from White to Drew Pearson and Newhouse's tackle-breaking run up the middle in the third period turned the razzberries to cheers.

"I think Tom Landry does a great job with his team, but they're not that more talented than us," said Tampa Bay Coach John McKay. "We moved the ball well and had our chances to win but couldn't get it into the end zone."

TAMPA BAY linebacker Andy Hawkins said, "I don't think we could have played any better ... I think it was the best game we played in three years."

And the Bucs still lost.

Capece kicked field goals of 26, 27, and 26 yards but missed a 24-yarder that would have narrowed the score to 14-12 in the fourth quarter.

As it was, Tampa Bay was deep in Dallas territory in field goal position when the game ended. In fact, tight end Jimmie Giles caught a pass over the middle and fumbled it away to safety Mike Downs at the Dallas four at the final gun.

"It was important for us to win," said Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "If we had lost, and then had to practice Monday for the Thanksgiving Day game with Cleveland it would have been a difficult emotional test."

It was a remarkably injury-free game, considering it had been more than 57 days since the players had any contact.

On the Tampa Bay side, center Steve Wilson sprained an ankle.

FOR DALLAS, the list was a little more lengthy. Defensive tackle John Dutton and end Harvey Martin bruised shoulders, defensive back Monty Hunter bruised a leg, and running back Tony Dorsett twisted a foot.

Dutton was the only player to leave the game and not return.

Reserve fullback Newhouse's touchdown run was a popular item with the Dallas players, who mobbed him after the score which put the Cowboys ahead to stay.

Wide receiver Butch Johnson said, "We wanted him to score to show the people who were coming down on Robert that we support him and the union."

Newhouse said, "It was a great feeling to score ... the strike took a lot out of me."

Holtz, Collins both avoided gamble for 2

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Southern Methodist Coach Bobby Collins and Arkansas Coach Lou Holtz backed off decisions in the the final six minutes that could have kept Saturday's Southwest Conference game from ending in a 17-17 tie.

The deadlock gave second-ranked SMU the Southwest Conference championship and a berth in the Cotton Bowl New Year's Day against Pittsburgh, while sending the ninth-ranked Razorbacks to the Bluebonnet Bowl Dec. 31.

Arkansas' Gary Anderson scored on his second 3-yard touchdown run with six minutes to play to put Arkansas ahead 16-10.

Knowing that a tie would give SMU the title and the Cotton Bowl, Holtz decided to order the extra point that made it 17-10. He knew that Arkansas had to beat SMU and Texas Dec. 4 before it could win the league title.

SMU charged back with the aid of a 40-yard interference penalty on Nathan Jones and Lance McIlhenny scored from 2 yards out with 2:51 to go. Collins ordered Jeff Harrell to kick the point instead of going for two that would have kept the Mustangs' perfect season intact.

Holtz was asked why he didn't go for the two-pointer that would have given Arkansas an eight-point lead.

"I thought about it," Holtz said. "But I figured they (SMU) are undefeated and they have a chance for the national championship. We had to play our own football game — kick it and let them make the decision.

"When they scored (with 2:51 left), I thought they might go for two, but then again I don't coach that side. Would I have gone for two if I had been in their shoes? You'll have to ask me when I get there. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred you make the right decision by kicking it. You've got to go with the percentages. They (SMU) had something riding on it, too."

Collins' decision to go for a tie put SMU in the Cotton Bowl for the first time in 16 years, but may have cost the Mustangs a shot at their first national championship. SMU finished its regular season with a 10-0-1 record. Top-rated Georgia, 10-0, is the only team with an unblemished slate.

"There was still enough time left to kick off, hold them and get the ball back," said Collins, who won the SWC crown in his first year as SMU's coach. "We got the ball back, but we just didn't get it back in the right field position.

"It wasn't a tough decision. A coach's responsibility is that you take a chance to win a game, but you don't take a chance to lose a game. The national championship crossed my mind, but we're in the Southwest Conference and our goal each year is to win the conference and go to the Cotton Bowl. I'm not sure if you go for two and miss it but what it wouldn't take the starch out of you. The play in that position is to try and get the ball back."

New Mexico's best football team (10-1) in history goes uninvited

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — Bowl selection committees throughout the country accomplished what 11 football teams couldn't this season — shut out the University of New Mexico.

The New Mexico Lobos Saturday culminated the school's most successful football season in history with a 41-17 win over Hawaii. It gave the Lobos a 10-1 record and, as it turned out, a false sense of security as far as the post-season bowl picture was concerned.

Overlooked throughout the season, New Mexico was ignored by every bowl committee in the country this weekend, when the bowl invitations went out. It was a sad ending for a season filled with second half rallies, defensive big plays and last second winning touchdowns.

The Lobos finished second in the Western Athletic Conference to Brigham Young University, the only team to beat them this season. BYU clinched its seventh straight league title with a 17-12 win over Utah and an automatic berth to the Holiday Bowl in San Diego.

New Mexico's final victory was viewed by a national cable television audience. And going into the game, New Mexico officials were optimistic a victory would assure the Lobos of an invitation from the Hall of Fame Bowl. But the selection committee in Birmingham, Ala., instead invited another WAC team, Air Force, which upset Notre Dame Saturday.

Ironically, New Mexico beat Air Force 49-37 during the season and finished with a better overall record than the Falcons.

Head football Coach Joe Morrison was unavailable for comment, but Athletic Director John Bridgers expressed the disappointment among the Lobos and their fans.

"I know how much the players and coaches put into this season," said Bridgers. "They're the ones I feel sorry for."

Morrison, the former New York Giants star, took over a struggling New Mexico football program in December 1979. After two losing seasons, New Mexico this season emerged as a power in the Rocky Mountain area and was in the WAC title chase until the final game of the season.

Frank Sadler, a former assistant to Morrison at the University of Tennessee-Chattanooga, rejoined Morrison at New Mexico this season and his installation of the Veer offense turned out to be a perfect compliment to the team's gambling, blitz-happy defensive unit.

The team was ranked sixth nationally in scoring with an average of 33.3 points a game, ninth in rushing and tenth in total offense.

William Jewell quarterback Kelly Groom (10) is knocked into nickel seats by Sul Ross' Carl Lee, but not before he got off his pass, which was complete. Photographer in background, who shouldn't be on field, snaps picture of another photographer, who also shouldn't have been on field.

Yes, this is a college football game in Texas. No, the mountains were not imported just for this game. Sul Ross quarterback Larry Hill (10) eludes pursuit to complete a pass for part of his 457 aerial yards Saturday. Action came in NAIA playoff game against William Jewell in Alpine.

Overtimes can, and do, go on forever

If it hadn't been for the compassion of Joe George, William Jewell College and Sul Ross State might still be slugging it out in their NAIA Division II quarterfinal game at Alpine.

Kickoff was at noon and they were still staging a tug of war with no end in sight as the clock approached 4 p.m. and the combatants lined up for the third overtime.

It was then someone remarked, "Oh no, they've got lights."

Luckily, the suspense was getting the best of George, the Sul Ross coach, and when both teams scored, he elected to go for all or nothing, a two-point conversion that would send the Lobos on to the semifinal round or end the season.

What happened is history. Sul Ross went for two, twice, thanks to a penalty, and failed both times. William Jewell, as a result, advanced to the semis.

THIS WAS our initial first-hand experience with the tie-breaker in which a coin flip awards the option of possession at the 20-yard line and then each team is given an opportunity to get the ball into the end zone. If the game is still tied, the teams do it all over again.

The Yankee Conference has a similar tie-breaker rule for the regular season. The only difference is that the teams are awarded the ball on the 15-yard line. Admittedly, in reading about Rhode Island's six overtime 58-55 victory over Maine, we felt deprived.

When it was over, both players and coaches were unhappy with the method. They'd rather have gone home with a 21-21 tie, which is what the score was at the end of regulation. At the time, it was difficult to understand their reasoning. Isn't overtime what every fan looks forward to?

It didn't help matters when Maine was involved in another three or four overtime game the next week. It's something one might become accustomed to, if exposed to it enough, but sudden death in which the clock runs and the game is, for all purposes, just continued until one team scores, is more dramatic.

HANDING A team possession on the 20 doesn't really seem like football. It's more like a controlled preseason intersquad scrimmage. While defense is still important, it eliminates the punting game, the returns and puts an unnatural emphasis on offense, although the way Sul Ross and William Jewell perhaps it was only doing what came natural. They were 30-30 after four periods.

While most winners of the coin toss exercise the option to receive the kickoff, it is exactly the opposite in the tie-breaker overtime. In each case, Saturday, the team with the option chose to play defense.

"By playing defense first, you know what you have to do when you get the ball," said William Jewell Coach Vic Wallace. "If it's third or fourth down, for example, and two to go, you know whether you have to go for the touchdown or can settle for the field goal."

"I've got to admire Joe for going for two, especially after the penalty. That left them a 1½ away."

WALLACE ADDED, "He'd prefer the extra period. This way it eliminates the punting game. The argument against the sudden-death is that if a team takes the kickoff to a score, the other team has no chance."

From a fan's standpoint, one of the fringe complaints is that all the action takes place at one end of the field. The fans at the west end of Jackson Field Saturday must have felt like they were in Chicago's Soldier Field, where the stands stretch another 100 yards beyond the north end zone.

Incidentally, Maine and Rhode Island might still be going, except that the Maine coach, like George, decided enough was enough. Trailing 58-55, he decided to eschew the field goal and go for the touchdown and a win. He, too, lost.

Pittsburgh, Miami share AFC lead

By Associated Press

Pittsburgh and Miami in the American Conference and Green Bay and Washington in the National Conference got the jump on the rest of the league Sunday in the race for the wide-open playoff field, raising their records to 3-0 as the National Football League season resumed following an eight-week strike.

The Los Angeles Raiders, making their debut in their new home, the Memorial Coliseum (about 300 miles south of the Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum), can match the Steelers, Dolphins, Packers and Redskins Monday night when they face the San Diego Chargers.

UWE VON Schamann's 21-yard field goal 1:51 into the fourth quarter gave Miami a 9-7 victory over Buffalo. He also kicked field goals of 42 and 29 yards in the second quarter for the Dolphins. The Bills' only touchdown came midway in the second period when quarterback Joe Ferguson picked up a fumble by teammate Joe Cribbs and ran one yard into the end zone.

Eddie Lee Ivery's diving end zone catch of a Lynn Dickey pass that bounced off fullback Gerry Ellis' hands put Green Bay ahead of Minnesota, and Maurice Harvey scored on a 25-yard run with a recovered fumble to help build the Packers' lead in their 26-7 rout of the Vikings.

Dickey, who left the game with a bruised hip in the third quarter, hit 15 of 22 passes for 244 yards for the Packers, 3-0. Ivery set up his own winning score when he caught a seven-yard toss from Dickey and turned it into a 62-yard play with a run to the Vikings' eight-yard line.

Joe Theismann threw touchdown passes covering one yard to Otis Wonsley and 39 yards to Charlie Brown as the Redskins$built a 21-3 halftime lead en route to their 27-17 victory over the New York Giants.

THE NEW York Jets, who shut out Baltimore 25-0 last year, blanked the Colts 37-0 this time as Freeman McNeil rushed for 123 yards and two touchdowns, and Richard Todd tossed two scoring passes, this even though the McNeil scored on a 34-yard run on a dvaw play for the only TD New York needed and caught a 37-yard TD pass from Todd, who also hit Lam Jones with a 23-yarder.

The Rams were in pre-strike form, building an early lead, then squandering it as they had done in the season opener against Green Bay. This time they led Atlanta 14-0 before losing 34-17.

Steve Bartkowski completed 19 of 24 passes for 213 yards, including a 47-yard scoring strike to Alfred Jenkins. William Andrews ran 19 yards for a score and rookie Gerald Riggs burst in from one and six yards out for two TDs. Bert Jones passed for one of LA's touchdowns, a play covering 51 yards to Ron Battle.

IN NEW Orleans, Ken Stabler completed 13 of 18 passes for 126 yards and a TD and the Saints also got a TD pass of 15 yards from Guido Merkens to reserve running back Wayne Wilson on a fake field goal en route to beating Kansas City 27-17.

The Chicago Bears spotted Detroit a 14-3 lead on two interceptions, one of them run back 35 yards by Ray Oldham for a score, then rallied to beat the Lions 20-17 on John Roveto's 18-yard field goal with five seconds left. Jim McMahon, who passed 44 yards to Emery Moorehead to set up the field goal, threw TD passes of 11 yards to Ken Margerum and 28 yards to Moorehead.

Matt Bahr's 24-yard field goal on the game's final play, following a New England fumble, gave Cleveland a 10-7 victory over the Patriots.Running back Mark Van Eeghen of the Pats fumbled at his 20-yard line with 1:24 to go, Clinton Burrell recovered the ball for the Browns and, three plays later, Bahr kicked his winner.

Jim Zorn, who lost his job as Seattle's starting quarterback under the Jack Patera regime, regained it under Mike McCormack, the Seahawks' new head coach, and Zorn rewarded McCormack with a 34-yard TD pass to Steve Largent with 49 seconds to play to beat the Denver Broncos.

JOE MONTANA shook off the effects of a costly fumble and an interception to toss three second-half TD passes and propel San Francisco past St. Louis. The passes covered 6 yards to Russ Francis, 33 to Dwight Clark and 17 to Earl Cooper in a 13-minute span.

Three field goals by Jim Breech and linebacker Reggie Williams' safety sack of Philadelphia quarterback Ron Jaworski helped Cincinnati build an 11-0 halftime lead, then Ken Anderson passed two yards to Dan Ross as the Bengals withstood a late charge and beat the Eagles 18-14.

Roy Hofheinz dies at 70

HOUSTON (AP) — Roy Mark Hofheinz, a politician, businessman and sports czar who became the driving force behind the world's first domed stadium, died late Sunday. He was 70.

Hofheinz died after being brought to Twelve Oaks Hospital by ambulance, according to a nursing supervisor who asked not to be identified.

Cause of death was not immediately known, according to an employee of the Harris County medical examiner's office who asked not to be identified.

After building his financial empire, Hofheinz made a political comeback in 1952 as a late, but successful entry in the mayor's race. He served two terms in that post.

Along with a coalition of other wealthy investors, Hofheinz formed the Houston Sports Association in 1960.

Carlsbad advances over Belen

BELEN (AP) — Running backs Chris Lara and Grant Willis scored two touchdowns each to lead Carlsbad to a 36-15 victory over Belen Sunday in an opening round game of the controversy-filled Class AAAA high school football playoffs.

Belen and Carlsbad were both 11th hour additions to the playoffs. The two schools waged a lengthy legal battle last week after both were voted out of the playoffs in votes within their respective districts.

Carlsbad advances to play Alamogordo in a second round game this week.

Belen's Marty Trujillo shocked the Carlsbad defense by returning the opening kickoff 95 yards for a touchdown. Trujillo added the extra point, but it was to be Belen's only lead of the day.

Carlsbad, now 9-2 for the season, came right back with a five-play drive that was capped by Lara's 47-yard touchdown run. Quarterback Jimmy Townley then hit Willis with a two-point conversion pass and the Cavemen were on top to stay.

Carlsbad's massive offensive line took charge and the Cavemen scored the next two times they handled the ball.

Would you believe no fast break by Midland cagers?

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland High basketball coach Jack Stephenson was biting his tongue, just hoping his mild-mannered joke would pass unnoticed.

"We've really changed up this year. We will go with a set five-man starting lineup. We'll bring the ball down court and set up — no fast break or pressing this year," he said — before rolling in the floor with a spasm of laughter.

Any self-respecting Bulldog basketball fan knows that won't be the case at Midland High during the 1982-83 season. The Bulldogs come at you in waves off the bench with a full-court attack, featuring a ball hawking defense and a wide-open offense. The "Wave Attack" at MHS was born with Stephenson two years ago, and he isn't about to change tactics with this year's team.

"IF YOU THOUGHT we used 'The Wave' in the past, just wait until you see us this year," Stephenson said while returning to reality. "We've got some kids who can play and we are better than we were last year. People better be ready for a game when we play. We may not win, but we're better than last year."

Last year the Bulldogs ripped off a 22-9 record, only to fall one game shy of forcing a district playoff with Abilene High by losing a first half game to Midland Lee.

The Bulldogs do not have the size they have possessed the last two years, but this may be the quickest team Stephenson has ever had.

"Our biggest problem will be board strength because we don't have a lot of height, but none of our kids can be pushed around. I don't think it will make that much difference. We'll come at everyone from all angles and we have some great shooters," Stephenson said.

Doug Hixon, Tony Carrasco, David McFarland, Johnny Pannell, Blake Liberty and R.J. Thomas are names that Bulldog fans will recognize from last year's bench clearing "Wave Attack." Hixon and Carrasco can handle the ball and shoot. Pannell (6-3) and Liberty (6-2) will have to handle the post positions while McFarland is known for throwing his body to the wind in a defensive role. Thomas is a shooter.

ERIC BRUNSON (6-3 and over 200 pounds) is up from the junior varsity to give some inside help. "Not many teams play us man-to-man and there are not many teams that can push Pannell, Liberty and Brunson around. But our strength is quickness. This is the quickest team I've ever had," notes Stephenson.

Brunson, James Pitts, Terry McGowan, Kenneth Johnson and Fred Franklin are also up from the JV and it wouldn't be surprising to see Stephenson occassionally throw this team on the floor as a unit.

Chris Herbert, Chris Rooker, Ben Conley, Cary Wallace and Bret Hotchkiss, the tallest Bulldog at 6-7, will also be able to help out.

The MHS skeptics still worry about the lack of height on the Bulldogs, and the team still has to make a name for itself. None were really known as true starters last year. Still, most feel the Bulldogs will make a major run at the District 4-5A title this year. Basketball tradition at MHS gives all players a positive attitude entering every season.

"IT'S HARD to say who will be good in the district. I think we will be one of the teams to beat. San Angelo and Big Spring have some talent back, but both have new coaches. Odessa High had that great JV team last year and they have some new Ector kids along with Odessa Permian. Odessa High will be improved over last year, but I don't know about Permian. Abilene High will be another good team," said Stephenson.

The Bulldogs should find out just how good they are in a hurry as they open an ambitious schedule Tuesday by facing defending 4-5A champion Abilene High on the road. They return to Midland for the Tall City tournament Friday and Saturday.

In non-district games, the Bulldogs will face some hot powers, including Hobbs, N.M., twice, highly touted Plainview and a trip to the Optimist Classic in San Antonio, one of the most respected tournaments in the state.

Midland girls may wear out Nelson record

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The 1982-83 edition of the Midland High girl's basketball team is going to sleep at night with Willie Nelson on the mind as it gears for the opening of the cage season Tuesday.

Coach Jane Young's squad may wear out Nelson's record of "On the Road Again" before it ever sees the comfort of home. The MHS girls will not make a home appearance until Dec. 10 when they enter the Tall City Invitational Tournament at Chaparral Center.

In between the Bulldogs travel to Colorado City, Plainview and Hobbs, N.M., with tournament stops at Andrews and Amarillo, which means MHS may have nine games under its belt before facing a home crowd.

"SOMETIMES YOU have to play who you can get and where you can get them," Young said. "It will be a tough time for our team, but we shouldn't be afraid of playing on the road after this."

The Lady Bulldogs were 19-13 a year ago and will have a lot of experience to call on this trip around despite the loss of leading scorer Janice Littlefield.

"It's really too early to say what kind of team we are going to have at this point, but I think we will be at least as good as we were last year. We do have some experience, but we will have to wait to see how some of our newcomers will work out."

SHEILA CHRISTIAN, a 5-7 senior, returns for her third year as a starter and that's a good place to start for the Bulldogs. Christian averaged over 10 points a game last year as a junior and is a class player in District 4-5A.

Penny Griffin, a 5-6 senior, also returns in a starting role and that should give Young a big one-two punch to start with.

But the Bulldogs don't stop there since four others on this year's team had a lot of playing time from last year. Cindy Besek returns for her third year while Virgie Cooks, Sharon Mendenhall and Rebecca Caton all had playing time last year.

SALLY SEAL, the tallest Bulldog at 5-9, is up from the junior varsity along with Lisa Bowers, Margaret Stanley, Orvetta Johnson, Karen Tabor, Teresa Mason and Tammy Smith. Denise Lanz, who proved to be a valuable asset to MHS' Area champion volleyball team, is also on the Bulldog varsity.

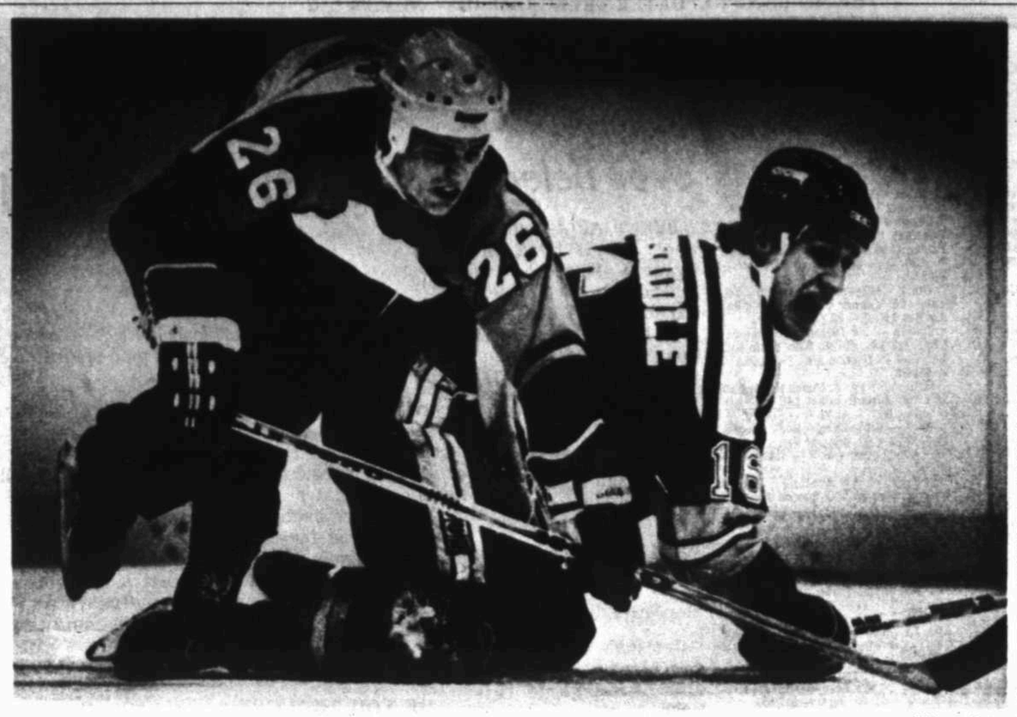

Since Christian, Griffin and Lanz all played key rolls in winning the 4-5A co-championship in volleyball along with Bi-District and Area titles, the Lady Bulldogs could start slow in basketball with quick improvement. The above three have had little time to move into the basketball program from volleyball and will only have a week of work under their belts when the season starts.

Young's team takes to the road to Colorado City Tuesday to open the season and will face Slaton at noon Friday in the opening round of the Andrews tournament.

OTHER THAN the Tall City Tournament, the Bulldogs will not be at home until Dec. 21 when they host Andrews in a non-conference game. They open 4-5A play on Dec. 20 at Abilene High.

Lady Bulldog Varsity Schedule

Nov. 23-at Colorado City; Nov. 26-27-at Andrews Tournament; Dec. 2-at Plainview; Dec. 3-4-at Amarillo Tournament; Dec. 6-at Hobbs; Dec. 10-11-Tall City Invitational Tournament; Dec. 13-at Big Spring; Dec. 14-at Lamesa; Dec. 20-at Abilene High; Dec. 21-Andrews; Dec. 30-Midland Lee; Jan. 3-Odessa Permian; Jan. 6-at Big Spring; Jan. 10-Abilene Cooper; Jan. 13-Odessa High; Jan. 17-at San Angelo; Jan. 20-Abilene High; Jan. 24-Midland Lee; Jan. 27-at Odessa Permian; Jan. 31-Big Spring; Feb. 3-at Abilene Cooper; Feb. 7-at Odessa High; Feb. 10-San Angelo.

Waltrip won with the help of Allison's bad luck with tires — two of which went flat — and despite his own problems with a balky gearbox, which had him running nearly half the race with only two gears...

Edmonton nips Winnipeg, 24-21, in CFL West final

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — The Edmonton Eskimos took advantage of a rough play penalty against Winnipeg Blue Bombers defensive tackle John Helton to score the winning touchdown midway through the fourth quarter, then held on to capture the Canadian Football League's Western Conference final 24-21 Sunday.

The victory sends Edmonton to the Grey Cup — the CFL's Super Bowl — for a record sixth consecutive time.

The Eskimos, who have won the last four Grey Cups, struggled all afternoon, while the Bombers saw their hopes for an upset die with the erratic kicking toe of Trevor Kennerd.

Twice in the final seven minutes, Kennerd missed field goals from inside the 45-yard line. Those missed points were the margin of victory for Edmonton.

Edmonton's offense also was erratic, but quarterback Warren Moon of the University of Washington threw 47 yards to Washington State's Brian Kelly for one touchdown and handed off to Neil Lumsden and New Mexico's Jim Germany for three-yard touchdown runs.

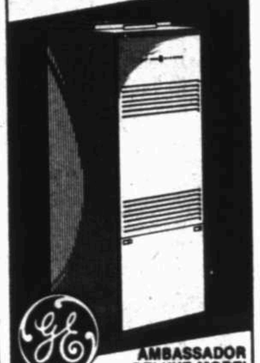

Holloway sparks Toronto

TORONTO (AP) — Quarterback Condredge Holloway threw three touchdown passes, including two to wide receiver Terry Greer, as the Toronto Argonauts thrashed the Ottawa Rough Riders 44-7 Sunday in the Canadian Football League Eastern Division playoff final.

The lopsided victory enabled the Argonauts to gain their first Grey Cup final since 1971. Toronto, which finished first in the East with a 9-6-1 record, has not won the Cup since 1952.

Slotback Paul Pearson caught the other TD from Holloway.

Look-alike Czechs befuddle Edmonton

By Associated Press

It just wasn't fair.

The Edmonton Oilers had Wayne Gretzky, hockey's most dynamic scorer. Gretzky was having his best night of the season with three goals and three assists and moved three points ahead of his record points pace of last season.

But Gretzky wasn't enough because the opposition, the Quebec Nordiques, had Peter, Marian and Anton Stastny.

"You could switch their sweaters around and you wouldn't know the difference," said Gretzky of the high-flying Czechoslovakian brother act, which combined for five goals and six assists Sunday night in a wild 9-7 Quebec victory over Edmonton. "What makes it easy for those guys is that they play the exact same style."

That style was just too much for the Oilers, who probably wouldn't have come as close as they did had Quebec's Dale Hunter not received a five-minute major penalty for highsticking midway through the second period. The Oilers scored three times on the ensuing power play, giving them four goals in three minutes, to tie the game 6-6.

But Anton Stastny broke the deadlock at 3:25 of the third period and Peter Stastny also scored in the final period. Peter's first goal came in the opening session, while Marian had two goals in the first 20 minutes.

Canucks 5, Capitals 3

Vancouver rallied with a four-goal third period. Dary Rota broke a 3-3 deadlock when his pass from behind the Washington net deflected into the goal off the stick of goalie Pat Riggin. Stan Smyl scored twice for the Canucks.

Black Hawks 3, Red Wings 0

The punchless Red Wings were blanked for the fourth time this season as Murray Bannerman registered his second shutout in 10 starts this season and third shutout of his career. Defenseman Bob Murray scored twice for the Black Hawks and Doug Wilson had two assists.

Rangers 7, Islanders 3

Mark Pavelich scored three goals and Ed Mio played spectacularly in goal for the Rangers while his counterpart in the Islander net, Billy Smith, struggled and was lifted for the first time in more than a season.

Flyers 3, Blues 1

Brian Propp had a goal and an assist, Glen Cochrane notched the game-winner with his first goal of the season, and goalie Pelle Lindbergh made 22 stops to hold off St. Louis. The Blues are 0-23-3 at the Spectrum since Jan. 6, 1972 and last beat the Flyers on Dec. 30, 1978.

Bruins 2, Flames 1

Pete Peeters had to make only 16 saves to earn the victory and lower his league-leading goals-against average. Rookie Mike Krushelnyski and Tom Fergus got first-period goals for Boston, while rookie Carl Mokosak got the only Calgary score.

Death by bludgeoning legal in ring

The Washington Post and Los Angeles Times

Death by bludgeoning is common enough in this country. They find victims all the time, lying under copses in municipal parks, along highways in Middle America, down dark alleys sprawled among the ash cans.

And, sometimes, they find them in center ring under bright lights while a referee counts and thousands cheer.

That's where they picked up Duk Koo Kim, a Korean lightweight, in Las Vegas last Saturday. That's where they found Benny (Kid) Paret and Davey Moore and Johnny Owen and several other victims this century.

EVERYBODY IS terribly sorry. But it's perfectly legal. The coroner terms it "justifiable homicide." That's because they sold tickets to it. He finds the cause of death to be "multiple blows to the head by a blunt instrument." On a street corner, someone would go to jail. Plenty of eyewitnesses. But, no indictment. Just an unfortunate industrial accident.

Public suffering and death has been an acceptable form of entertainment since Nero. Prize-ring omicide probably goes back to antiquity, but the earliest publicized instance in this century came in 1913 in Calgary, Canada, when a young giant from the Platte country, Luther McCarthy, was killed in the ring by a nondescript opponent named Arthur Pelkey.

As McCarthy lay dying in the ring, a shaft of sunlight drifted eerily down through the rafters of the converted barn arena and played about the head of the fallen fighter. An enterprising photographer snapped the picture and this Hogarthian photo made boxing anthologies for years.

SOMETIMES, THE victim dies amid a torrent of abuse from ringsiders. In 1933, when the Boston Sailor, Ernie Schaaf, was killed in the ring by Italman giant Primo Carnera, the last voices he heard on this earth were from the crowd standing on chairs shouting, "Fake!" and, "Get up, ya bum ya, yer not hurt!" People actually threw things at the dying man.

In 1947, when Sugar Ray Robinson killed Jimmy Doyle in the ring, he put just the right cynical light on the whole barbaric game when, badgered at the inquest by a headline-hunting D.A. with "Couldn't you see your opponent was hurt?" Sugar Ray replied, "Mister, it's my business to hurt people." Exactly.

Ring death is sometimes a cumulative business. When Schaaf was killed, it was widely believed the fatal blow was really delivered in his last previous fight when he was KO'd by Max Baer with the bout's last punch. The bell "saved" Schaaf but it took 20 minutes to revive him and the prevailing opinion was it was this blow which marked him for death rather than the comparatively light ones from Carnera.

IN 1962 a South American heavyweight, the handsome Alejandro Lavorante, who looked more ready for a tango parlor then a fight arena, died at the hands of an unknown heavyweight, John Riggins. But it was widely believed that his two previous fights, with Archie Moore and Muhammad Ali, in each of which he was knocked out and carried out of the ring, had more to do with his death than the Riggins beating.

But the most alarming thing that's happened to pugilism in this decade is the fact that fatalities are no longer occurring only to the unskilled. Now, they are killing the best and the biggest.

Jimmy Doyle was the first fighter in this century to lose his life in a championship fight. Then, two reigning champions lost their lives in the ring, Paret and Davey Moore. The pathetic little "Merthyr Matchstick," Johnny Owen, was buried on a Welsh hillside after he was killed in a title match with Lupe Pintor. And now, Duk Koo Kim has been killed in a lightweight title fight. They used to say wars would be outlawed as soon as they started killing kings. Boxing would do well to listen to that old saw.

The human brain was not built to withstand a 45-minute barrage of bludgeons to the head, as any Gestapo goon or Mafia enforcer could tell you. Mugging foreign visitors should no longer be classed as high-priced American entertainment. If it is, they should put booths around Central Park.

Former Rangers' owner dies

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Robert Short, a businessman, politician and one-time big league sports club owner who died over the weekend, was called a "battling Irishman" by a friend, and one who "went peacefully" by a son.

Short, 65, died Saturday of cancer, which was diagnosed about a year ago.

He owned the Leamington Hotel and several other properties in downtown Minneapolis and had been active in the trucking business.

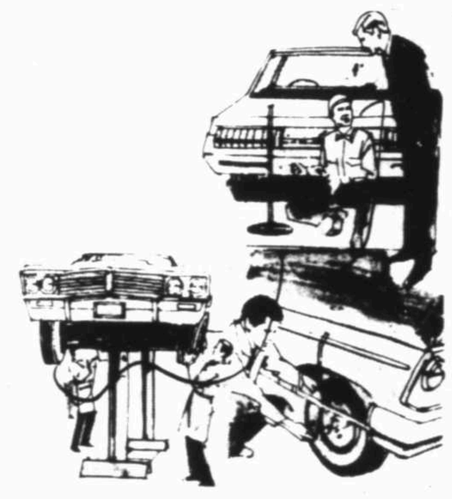

He had owned the Los Angeles Lakers of the National Basketball Association and the Texas Rangers baseball team in the American League. He moved both teams, the Lakers from Minneapolis and the Senators from Washington, D.C., and renaming them the Rangers.

Short, a Democrat, entered politics in 1946, running unsuccessfully for Congress in Minneapolis.

Mobil Corp. announces reorganization

By THOMAS W. LIPPMAN
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

Mobil Corp., in a corporate reorganization that apparently presages new diversification, announced Sunday that its two top executives are relinquishing their posts as head of Mobil's oil subsidiary but will continue to run the parent holding company.

Rawleigh Warner Jr., 61, will remain chairman and chief executive officer of the parent company, and William P. Tavoulareas, 63, will continue as president. But as of Jan. 1, Allen Murray, 53, a career Mobil executive, will take over as president of Mobil Oil Co., the principal subsidiary.

Another Mobil veteran, Richard Tucker, 55, will become president of a new subsidiary to be called Mobil Diversified Businesses. This unit will make up Mobil's far-flung operations outside of oil — the struggling Montgomery Ward retail chain, Container Corp. of America, Mobil Chemical Co. and a variety of alternate-energy, minerals and coal subsidiaries.

In effect, a company official said, Warner and Tavaoulareas are installing trusted subordinates as heads of current operations, leaving themselves free to direct the parent company. The "real significance" of the announcment lies in the distinction it makes between Mobil Corp., the parent conglomerate, and the Mobil Oil Co., which formerly represented Mobil's only line of business, he said.

Mobil is the nation's second largest oil company, with worldwide sales of $68.6 billion in 1981.

The reorganization announcement gave no indication of what new directions the company might take. Mobil's previous attempts to expand and diversify have had a troubled history. The company failed in bids to acquire Conoco Inc. and Marathon Oil Co., and its acquisition of Montgomery Ward has been a drain on the company because the stores have lost money for several years.

Murray, who becomes president of Mobil Oil Co., was previously the subsidiary's executive vice president, as well as a director of the parent company. He has been with Mobil 30 years, starting as an accountant and working his way up to president of the U.S. marketing and refining division.

Tucker, who joined Mobil in 1961, has been serving as president of the Container Corp. of America division and of Mobil Chemical. In his new position, in which he takes on responsibility for the retail stores as well and reports to Tavoulareas, he apparently moves ahead of Stephen L. Pistner, the department store executive Mobil brought in last year to direct the so-far unsuccesssful effort to reverse the decline at Montgomery Ward.

Budget deficit could balloon in FY '84

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal budget deficit could balloon to $200 billion in fiscal 1984 unless the government substantially curbs spending, President Reagan's top economist says.

Martin S. Feldstein, chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, said Sunday that the deficit for the fiscal year beginning next Oct. 1, "will be somewhere between $150 and $200 billion if there are not significant actions by Congress and the administration."

Although administration officials have hinted in recent weeks that the deficit could soar, Feldstein's red-ink estimate marked the first time a senior administration official has publicly acknowledged a problem of that magnitude.

The White House economist, interviewed on NBC's "Meet the Press," also said that despite the economy's serious problems, "the foundations are really there for an economic recovery ... I think the economy is now ready to recover."

But Feldstein was unwilling to predict when the long-overdue upturn would occur. He said he held little hope for much progress on the unemployment front. The jobless rate, now at a 42-year high of 10.4 percent, will hover "somewhere around 9 percent" next year, even assuming a moderate recovery, he said.

"Those numbers reflect what would happen if there were not significant actions to bring down spending and shrink the size of the deficit," he added. "What has to be done is to slow the growth of spending, bring down some of our spending programs."

He refused to suggest where savings should be made, saying that the president has yet to make those decisions.

The budget deficit nearly doubled from $58 billion in fiscal 1981, to a record $111 billion in fiscal 1982, which ended in September. The deficit for the current fiscal year, 1983, is expected to set a new record at between $150 billion and $170 billion.

According to administration sources, Reagan has ordered his budget office to find approximately $30 billion in non-defense spending cuts for 1984.

Many of his advisers and congressional leaders are pressing for tax increases and cuts in the president's record defense spending plan in addition to domestic cuts to reduce red ink. But so far, Reagan is resisting those calls.

In fact, the president is giving serious thought to a proposal to move up next year's 10 percent cut in income tax withholding from paychecks to Jan. 1, rather than keeping to the July 1 schedule. The Treasury Department proposal is designed to put nearly $15 billion in consumer pockets to help trigger a recovery, but it could also increase the deficit by nearly $15 billion.

Feldstein opposes accelerating the tax cut because he said it would increase the deficit and lead to higher interest rates.

Meanwhile, Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., said on the ABC television program "This Week With David Brinkley" that moving up the tax cut "would increase the deficit. It seems we ought to be focusing on ways to reduce the deficit, not on ways to increase it."

Dole, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said he wasn't consulted by the White House before the administration floated the idea.

"My guess is it won't happen," Dole said, adding that he didn't see any enthusiasm in Congress for such a plan.

Chrysler, UAW talk again

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — The United Auto Workers union is waiting until Chrysler Corp. "bellies up to the bargaining table" before deciding if negotiations are "an exercise in futility," a union spokesman says.

The No. 3 U.S. automaker and the union planned to resume contract talks on two fronts today — in Toronto for 10,000 Canadian workers who have been on strike for 17 days, and in this Detroit enclave for U.S. workers who agreed to work without a new contract.

"Once the corporation bellies up to the bargaining table and makes a serious economic proposal, we'll see if we're within striking distance and we'll start to bargain," said Robert White, director of the Canadian UAW.

"We'll find out within a matter of days whether or not this is an exercise in futility," White said.

Today's talks were to center on non-economic items such as seniority rights, union representation and absenteeism provisions, with money issues to come later, officials said.

U.S. contract talks broke off Oct. 18 after Chrysler rejected workers' demands for an immediate wage increase, which the company said it could not afford. U.S. workers voted against a strike and in favor of recessing talks until January.

But UAW President Douglas A. Fraser said the talks are resuming now to coincide with negotiations between Chrysler and the Canadian autoworkers, who walked out Nov. 5 over the same issue.

"If there is any hope at all of reaching a settlement before the turn of the year, it has to be done this way, simultaneously," Fraser said.

About 4,600 of Chrysler's 43,200 U.S. workers have been laid off in recent weeks because of production cutbacks due to the Canadian strike. An additional 42,300 Chrysler workers are on indefinite layoff.

Some doubt bull market

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Three months of soaring stock prices haven't convinced everybody in the financial world that a new bull market has been born.

Observers who see nothing in the economy's pervasive problems to justify the market's upsurge have repeatedly dismissed it as a fit of madness. Joseph Granville, the forecaster who has been bearish for almost two years, has called it "a bubble market" that is likely to burst befor long.

But the way some believers in the market's rally see it, this kind of skepticism is nothing to get disturbed about. In fact, they say, it may actually improve the chances of further market gains as long as it persists.

All market turns for the better in recent history have been "marked by caution, concern and apprehension," said Raymond F. DeVoe Jr., analyst at Legg Mason Wood Walker Inc., in a recently published commentary.

Conversely, he said, market tops — which are, of course, the worst possible time to be buying stocks — usually occur amid mass enthusiasm. Says DeVoe, "When you don't have worries or anything to be concerned about — watch out!"

This apparently upside-down reasoning has a long-standing place in market lore. As illogical as it may seem, analysts say, it has its roots in common sense.

In somewhat over-simplified terms, the idea is that when gloom is everywhere, most investors have already sold stocks, exhausting the potential future downward pressure on the market. At the opposite extreme, when everything looks rosy, all the bulls have already bought all the stock they can pay for, leaving nobody to show up the next day and bid prices still higher.

Under this line of thinking, all of today's doubters are tomorrow's prospective buyers once they are converted from skepticism to optimism.

John W. Schulz at BMI Capital, an investment management concern, noted that this theory has been summarized in a long-standing Wall Street maxim: "A bull market climbs a wall of worry."

"By this test," Schulz said, "the major uptrend which began on Aug. 13 should still have plenty of time and mileage left."

The collective mood of the huge numbers of investors active in the market is no simple thing to try to measure. It is hard to know at any given moment just how optimistic or pessimistic "the market" as a whole is.

In spite of his generally optimistic view, Schulz confesses to some reservations about recent talk that the market is not just staging one of its periodic cyclical rallies, but has entered a "new era."

"Only curmudgeons would point out that, just now, it seems extraordinarily unclear whether and when these implications might be validated by fundamental realities," he observed. "On the other hand, it takes a prevalence of curmudgeons to keep a bull market going."

As sensible as this the-more-skeptics-the-merrier principle may seem as a guide to profitable investing, DeVoe points out, it is not so easy to put into practice.

"Every investment book will tell you that the time to buy stocks is when they're out of favor," he said. "Unfortunately, the books don't tell you how to get up the courage to buy when things still look bleak. Human nature still prevents many people from buying when stocks are depressed and most attractive."

Reagan behind gas decontrol

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says he still is committed to removing the remaining price controls on natural gas, sending another signal that the administration will push for decontrol in the next session of Congress.

Accelerating the current decontrol timetable was a Reagan campaign pledge, but the administration has yet to send any plan to Congress.

In a telegram to the Natural Gas Supply Association on Friday, Reagan said, "My administration remains strongly committed to the deregulation of the natural gas industry. The adoption of this policy will produce greater and more economical supplies of this valuable resource, strengthen our nation's security by lessening our dependence on foreign energy suppliers and permit the market to reflect and allocate resources for energy production and conservatin efficiently."

Reagan did not mention any deadline for coming up with a decontrol proposal.

Price controls are being gradually lifted from gas discovered after April 20, 1977. But under terms of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, about half of current supplies, from wells drilled before April 20, 1977, will remain under controls indefinitely. The administration has said it would like to remove price controls from old gas supplies and speed up price increases on new supplies.

Fed's new rate takes effect

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve Board's reduction to 9 percent in the interest rate it charges on loans to private financial institutions took effect today.

The central bank announced the one-half percentage point reduction last Friday, a move that economists said could prompt new declines in other kinds of interest rates.

The cut is the sixth since mid-July, when the rate stood at 12 percent. Each of the cuts has been by one-half percentage point.

The latest action, approved 6-0 with one member absent, brings the rate to its lowest point since Nov. 1, 1978, when it was raised from 8.5 percent to 9.5 percent.

The decline in the discount rate since the summer parallels similar drops in short-term and long-term interest rates.

Reductions in the discount rate do not automatically trigger lower commercial rates, but that is often what happens because a lower discount rate can lower a private bank's borrowing costs.

Spurt in money supply ends

NEW YORK (AP) — A recent spurt in the nation's money supply has ended, at least for now.

The Federal Reserve Board announced Friday that its main measure of the money supply fell $100 million in the week ended Nov. 10. The money supply still remained well above the upper limits of the Fed's anti-inflationary growth targets.

In recent years, rapid money supply growth has triggered Fed moves to push interest rates higher.

But analysts said a one-half percentage point reduction in the Fed's discount rate Friday signaled the central bank is paying more attention to the weak economy than to the money supply.

"It's a good sign for the economy," said John O. Wilson, chief economist at Bank of America in San Francisco. "The economy is so weak that we certainly don't need even a mild runup in interest rates."

"The prime will come down promptly to 11.5 percent, but not anything much beyond that for the time being," predicted David Jones, an economist at the investment firm of Aubrey G. Lanston & Co.

Economy stood still in summer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The economy, as measured by the gross national product, stood still in the summer quarter.

The Commerce Department on Friday revised downward its earlier estimate that the GNP, which measures the value of all goods and services produced in the nation, had risen 0.8 percent in the July-September quarter. Instead it estimated no change.

The report also said companies' profits improved slightly in the third quarter. But those profits, too, stayed at a relatively low level.

As for the economy in general, the report said, inflation-adjusted, or "real," gross national product remained in the July-September quarter at exactly the second-quarter annual rate of $1.478 trillion.

The recession has lingered far beyond most economists' forecasts, pulling factory use to a record low and pushing unemployment to the highest level in 42 years.

Profits encourage economists

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government and private analysts say they are encouraged by a slight rise in corporate profits for the July-September business quarter.

The Commerce Department reported Friday that pre-tax profits rose 4.8 percent in the third quarter while after-tax profits jumped 2.4 percent. It was the second modest gain in a row after two quarters of steep declines.

Commerce Undersecretary Robert Dederick said corporate America "is now beginning to regain its footing" after being knocked offstride by the recession that has stretched into a 16th month. And he said rising confidence on the part of business officials should help bring recovery for the national economy as a whole.

The report also said profits from current production — a category that excludes profits attributed to goods already produced but still being held in inventories — rose 6.8 percent to a rate of $165.9 billion after declining 1.1 percent.

Some wrongdoing almost OK

WASHINGTON (AP) — The enforcement chief for the Securities and Exchange Commission has suggested that companies do not have to disclose wrongdoings that have no financial impact on investors.

"Information about illegal conduct is not per-se material to investors," SEC Enforcement Director John M. Fedders said Friday in a speech before an American Bar Associaton conference.

"If unlawful conduct could not have a material economic effect on a corporation, it is unlikely to be considered important by a reasonable investor contemplating an investment or voting decision," Fedders said.

"... Therefore, it would be difficult to prove in a law enforcement proceeding that the information would be otherwise important to investors," he added.

The SEC established a tough stance against corporate wrongdoing in the 1970s, when it charged companies with making questionable payments to foreign officials to obtain business.

Although the payments were not clearly illegal at the time of the SEC actions, Congress outlawed such payments in 1978.

'Fallen woman' says words like grenades

M. Cunningham

NEW YORK (AP) — Mary Cunningham, who says she has become known as "the fallen woman of Bendix," went through a "press wringer" over her relationship with her former boss.

Words "are like hand grenades. Handled casually, they tend to go off," she wrote in the "My Turn" column in the Nov. 29 issue of Newsweek magazine.

She says rumors of a romance with Bendix Corp. Chairman William Agee prompted reports that she "slept her way to the top of the corporate ladder." Agee named Ms. Cunningham a vice president of the company before she resigned.

Now an executive with Joseph E. Seagram & Sons Inc., Ms. Cunningham wrote, "What interests the press — what makes for 'good copy' — is my short-lived career at the Bendix Corp.; not what I accomplished professionally there, but whether my advancement was tied to a rumored — and firmly denied — romantic relationship with my boss."

Ms. Cunningham adds, "I'm still a firm believer in a fair and free press. But it isn't perfect, any more than business is."

Ms. Cunningham and Agee were married after she left Bendix.

C. De Lorean

NEW YORK (AP) — John Z. De Lorean might never have been arrested on drug trafficking charges if his young son had not made friends with the son of the FBI informant, his wife says.

"If, if, if...," Chrisitna Ferrare De Lorean wrote in a diary she kept between her husband's arrest Oct. 19 and his release on bail 10 days later. The diary was published in the Nov. 22 edition of People magazine.

"If we hadn't bought the Pauma Valley house," she wrote. "If we'd stuck by our rule: no outsiders... If Zachary hadn't become friends with one of the neighbors children... If we hadn't met the parents, the father."

The magazine identified the father as Jim Hoffman, a confidential informant for the FBI who was instrumental in De Lorean's arrest.

People said Mrs. De Lorean, 32, agreed to sell the diary because, "while people are making jokes, I want them to know what it's like for the family."

The magazine also quoted her agent as saying the family needs the money, but did not say how much was paid for the diary.

De Lorean, 57, is accused of taking part in a $60 million cocaine deal in an effort to raise cash for his failing auto company.

J. Watson

ATLANTA (AP) — Jack Watson, former White House chief of staff under Jimmy Carter, was introduced at a fund-raising dinner as the man responsible for some of the more embarrassing events of the Carter presidency.

The occasion was a $100-a-plate fund-raising "roast" Friday night to help pay the debts Watson built up in his unsuccessful run for the Democratic nomination for governor of Georgia.

Former presidential news secretary Jody Powell introduced Watson as "the man who introduced Billy (Carter) to the Libyans, Andy (Young) to the PLO and Hamilton Jordan to the Egyptian ambassador's wife."

The former president's brother embarrassed the administration by his dealings with Libyan officials, Young was forced to resign as U.N. ambassador because of unauthorized talks with members of the Palestine Liberation Organization, and Jordan, who preceded Watson as chief of staff, was notorious for reported confrontations with women.

U.S. 'needs few more traitors,' spy says

NEW YORK (AP) — The U.S. government "needs a few more traitors" to keep it honest, says a spy convicted of selling U.S. defense secrets to the Soviet Union.

Christopher Boyce said in an interview broadcast Sunday on the CBS-TV program "60 Minutes" that he doesn't mind being called a traitor because his treason was necessary.

The son of a former FBI agent, Boyce said he became a spy for idealistic reasons. He also claimed to have information that the CIA had meddled in Australian labor strikes and helped topple the government of former Prime Minister Gough Whitlam.

"It's supposed to be an independent, English-speaking, parliamentary democracy," Boyce said. "And if we're not...playing it straight with those guys, we're not even playing it straight with ourselves.

"...The United States government needs a few more traitors," he said. "Humanity needs a few more."

Boyce was convicted of selling secrets to the Soviets between 1975 and 1977 while he worked for TRW Defense and Space Systems Group, a major defense contractor.

He was sentenced to life in prison and his childhood friend and accomplice, Dalton Lee, received a 40-year sentence. But Boyce escaped from prison in Lompoc, Calif., and was free for 19 months before being captured by U.S. marshals in August 1981 at Port Angeles on Washington's Olympic Peninsula.

While he was hiding out, Boyce supported himself by robbing banks. He was sentenced to another 25 years in prison on 21 counts of bank robbery, conspiracy and firearms violations on May 31, 1982.

Boyce said there was "no security" at TRW, where he worked in a code room that gave him access to defense secrets.

"The codes are supposed to be destroyed every day but we used to just throw them in the corner," Boyce said. "And there was a large blender to put the codes in and we'd blend them down to mush. Well, they never used that to destroy codes with...We made daiquiris in it."

He said he smuggled out secret documents in a bag he used to bring in liquor for his superiors.

Julie M. Wright, public relations director for TRW's Los Angeles office, said Sunday that Boyce's defense lawyers had tried to get a lenient sentence by suggesting the company had lax security, but the judge had decided the claims were not supported by testimony.

"We have to have some reservations about getting into a dialogue with some individual who is a spy, who is a traitor to his country," she added.

Michael Johnson, manager of media relations for TRW, which is based in Euclid, Ohio, said Sunday night, "When anyone has called for comment on his (Boyce's) escape, his capture, his trial or his statements, we have referred them to the court records.

"What he says now in any form is not going to cause anything new to take place that might not have occurred several years ago."

Defense experts say the information passed on by Boyce and Lee gave the Soviets the potential to interfere with U.S. satellite systems.

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., vice chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said Boyce's spying sabotaged the Strategic Arms Limitations Talks.

Bone surgically removed from Queen Mother

LONDON (AP) — The Queen Mother Elizabeth, 82-year-old mother of Britain's Queen Elizabeth II, gagged on a fishbone at dinner and after hours of choking was taken to a hospital early today for an operation to remove the object.

The surgery was successful, the queen mother was making "good progress" and should be home by Wednesday, her official spokesman, Maj. John Griffin, told The Associated Press.

"She choked over dinner," he said of the nation's beloved "Queen Mum," widow of King George VI.

Asked if her life had been in peril from the fishbone, he said: "Absolutely not. It was more uncomfortable than anything else."

Several hours passed before the queen mother was driven at 1:30 a.m. (7:30 p.m. CST Sunday) from Royal Lodge, her home outside London adjacent to Windsor Castle, to the King Edward VIII Hospital for Officers for an emergency operation.

Griffin, speaking from Clarence House, the queen mother's London residence, said her dinner companions and doctor at first tried to dislodge the fishbone. They failed and it was decided to take her to the hospital.

"It was the only way," Griffin said. "She made it up to town quite happily."

He said the operation was performed under general anaesthetic.

Princess Margaret, the queen mother's 52-year-old daughter, accompanied her to the hospital and stayed until after the operation, the spokesman said. The queen and the rest of the royal family were kept informed.

The queen mother for many years has been the British public's favorite royal because of her warm personality and frequent public appearances. Her spokesman said because of the operation she has canceled five engagements scheduled this week.

Not much hope Spellman will recover

BALTIMORE (AP) — Former U.S. Rep. Gladys Noon Spellman remains semi-conscious in a nursing home more than two years after suffering a heart attack while campaigning, and doctors have little hope she will recover.

"It doesn't look very good, but you never give up hope, I guess," said Mrs. Spellman's 73-year-old husband, Reuben, who made an unsuccesful bid for his wife's seat last year.

Mrs. Spellman, now 64, can breathe without the aid of a respirator but cannot acknowledge visitors.

The Maryland Democrat suffered a heart attack in 1980 while judging a Halloween costume contest at a shopping mall. Two days later she won re-election by a landslide over Republican challenger Kevin Igoe.

"There is no appreciable difference from two years ago other than she's stabilizing," said Edna McClellan, a long-time aide who now works for Mrs. Spellman's successor, Democrat Steny Hoyer.

"I guess you always have hope, but the doctor's prognosis is just not good, you kind of have to face reality," said Mrs. McClellan, who worked for Mrs. Spellman for 18 years and was a close friend.

Mrs. McClellan said she can't tell whether Mrs. Spellman hears voices or understands conversation.

"There's no communication, so there's no way to know. It's not likely but we never give up the hope she does hear," said Mrs. McClellan, who makes periodic visits to the nursing home.

Spellman, a retired Defense Department employee, declined to discuss at length his wife's condition. Nor would he identify the nursing home where Mrs, Spellman lies in a semi-comatose state.

Mrs. Spellman remained hospitalized on the critical list for several weeks after the heart attack, but her condition eventually stabilized and she could breath without the aid of life-support equipment.

When it became clear Mrs. Spellman could not resume her duties, the seat was declared vacant. A total of 32 Republican and Democratic candidates entered a special primary on April 7, 1981, in the Fifth District, including Reuben Spellman.

Spellman was defeated for the Democratic nomination by Hoyer, former president of the state Senate who defeated Republican Mayor Audrey Scott of Bowie in the special election on May 19.

Gem of a show

Minerals blossom into precious gems

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Precious stones are much like blooming flowers.

Dull lumps of mineral matter can be cut and polished into brilliantly flashing gems as tiny buds burst into beautiful blossoms.

That's what took place this weekend at the Midland Gem and Mineral Society's annual show at the Midland County Exhibit Building.

Glowing gems were everywhere, interspersed with Permian Basin residents who strolled through the building ooohing and aaahing.

In general, all minerals and stones that are used for jewelery and other ornamental purposes are called gems.

The most prized gems are diamonds because they surpass all others in hardness and brilliance. Besides diamonds, other precious gems displayed at the show were agates, ambers, amethysts, corals, emeralds, garnets, jade, opals, pearls, rubies, topaz, turquoise, zircon and more — anything you could possibly imagine, including dinosaur bone.

J.B. Sanchez, of Colorado and one of the exhibitors at the show, said he got his start in the gem business 30 years ago when he began collecting dinosaur bone.

With the petrified bone, Sanchez makes rings, bolas, bracelets and other "little trinkets."

His other specialty is pearls. The pearl is one of the most valuable gems, according to Sanchez. It is not a stone; in fact, it is quite different from other gems. Pearls are formed inside the shell of an oyster.

Sanchez's display offered oysters to those who wanted to purchase the pearl "factory direct." One woman bought a chance of finding one or more of the precious gems hidden in the body of the oyster. Sanchez cracked the shell and fingered the muscle-like substance until a dark, grayish tiny cultured pearl slipped out of the oyster bed. It was a "black" pearl, the most valuable of pearls. But the shape of the pearl is as important as the color; this one happened to be a baroque black pearl which has less value than perfectly round ones.

Experts identify the different types of gem minerals by the shape of the uncut crystal, the color, the index of refraction, hardness, specific gravity and other physical properties, Sanchez said.

At another display, an elderly man was demonstrating marble making. Red Wilson "can make marble out of any good hard rock," one bystander quickly said.

Red's wife, Ann, said he grinds Brazilian cubed quartz and rounds it with his hands to make Texas Marbles. The smooth, round marbles started out as a hobby which lasted for 16 years and then Red began his business. For the last 14 years, Red, who lives in New Mexico, has been pressing rock against the spinning wheel to produce his marbles.

Charles Courim, a custom gold designer from Ransom Canyon, gave a gold casting demonstration. Courim also dabbles in bronze. With the help of a plastic toy gunfighter, Courim made a mold and created a bronze figurine valued at about $25. One of his more exotic creations included a large amethyst surrounded by zircon set in a gold ring. Although its value is about $850, Courim said if he replaced the zircon with "real" diamonds, the dinner ring could sell for $10,000.

An interesting display by D.M. Yale of Buena Vista, Colo., featured stone carvings of the U.S. Presidents, including President Reagan.

And probably the most unique display was a dinner setting, complete with food — agate (a fine-grained variety of quartz) food. Various shapes and sizes of agate atop plates resembled a potato, bacon and eggs, steak, peanuts and black olives.

More than 100 members of gem societies throughout the U.S. exhibited 88 displays, including silverwork, casting, gold wire work, marble making, faceting, cabachon making and polishing.

And from reactions at the show, don't be too sure that "diamonds are a girl's best friend."

Midlander trying to forget what he saw in prison

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Not even the streets of San Antonio and the southside of Midland had prepared 40-year-old Levi Duson for what he was about to see as he looked out the window of a farm shed on the grounds of Huntsville penitentiary 19 months ago.

"It was a shock," said the four-time loser who was paroled six months ago after serving three years of a 10-year sentence for burglary. "I'm really trying to forget it now. But I probably won't be able to because it happened the day before my birthday."

It was half-past noon on April 4, 1981. Duson and two other inmates at the Ellis Unit — considered the toughest criminal repository in the Texas prison system — watched as farm manager Maj. Billy Moore and an inmate by the name of Eroy Edward Brown pulled alongside the shed in Moore's pickup and parked about 20 feet away.

"I didn't know Brown was an inmate at first," said Duson, who would later testify at both of Brown's trials. "He had a coat over his face. That's what made me notice him."

BROWN, IN his mid-30s, remained in the truck as Moore got out and stood beside it three or four minutes before Warden Wallace Pack pulled up in a green car. Both officials then drove toward a bridge over Turkey Creek, about 100 feet from the building where Duson and the other two inmates stood watching.

Moore and Pack had gotten out of their vehicles and were talking when Brown emerged from the pickup and was told to get back in it. "There were a few words, but I couldn't hear what was said," Duson recalled.

Although apparently unarmed at that point, Brown refused to get back in the truck and was forcibly placed in the back seat of Pack's car after the inmate and Moore "got into a little scuffle," said Duson.

But instead of remaining in the car, Brown scrambled out and "that's when we heard the first shot," said Duson. "They say it was Pack's gun. I'm not sure if he took it from Pack or had gotten it from his car."

The warden sank to the ground as Moore and Brown got into another fight. A large man, Brown was able to overpower Moore. "Moore was trying to get back on his feet when he was shot," said Duson.

"Then Brown turned toward us. We were the only ones who knew what he did."

BUT PACK, who apparently had suffered only a minor hand wound, got up and tried to escape by stumbling toward the bridge. Brown soon turned and disappeared down the embankment after him.

During testimony at Brown's first trial — which ended in a hung jury, with the majority favoring acquittal — Duson said he saw Pack remove something from the trunk of his car as Moore struggled to put Brown in the back seat.

Asked what Pack took from the trunk, Duson — over prosecutor objections that his answer was speculative — testified: "I guess he was getting handcuffs."

After shooting Pack, Duson told the court, Brown started toward Moore, saying: "I'm tired of this ----."

As soon as Brown and Pack disappeared down the embankment, one of the convicts who witnessed what had happened used a phone in the shed to call for help. An assistant warden by the name of Williamson appeared shortly and started toward the bridge, calling Brown's name.

BROWN EMERGED from the water with Pack's wallet and keys and, according to Duson, said: "Here I am, warden. You missed the whole damn show."

Pack had been drowned in a drainage ditch. Duson helped pull his body up the embankment and lay it beside the bridge. It took four hours to drain the ditch and recover the gun that had been used to kill Moore, who had been shot in the head.

During the 12-day retrial in Galveston last month, Brown pleaded self-defense and a racially balanced jury acquitted him of the charges against him. He reportedly has been transferred to a federal prison to serve out the rest of his term.

Talking about the trial from his southside home last week, Duson said: "Brown testified he thought they (Pack and Moore) were gonna take him to the bottoms and whip him. That's what he was afraid of.

"They (the defense attorneys) wanted me to testify to brutality (in the prison). That's what they were using to try his case. But I hadn't seen any brutality and all I could testify to was what I saw.

"I COULDN'T say if there was brutality or not. I was there to testify on a murder case and that's what I did. I don't know one way or the other if my testimony helped or hurt Brown."

Almost as unnerving as what he witnessed is the harassment he's experienced since that day in April.

Duson and the other two inmates were transferred to the Diagnostic Unit at Huntsville for their own protection. As it rippled through the grapevine that they'd be testifying, the threats began.

"We heard talk, but nothing happened," he said. "Some of the inmates thought we should keep our mouths shut and refuse to testify. The whole thing is, they didn't want us cooperating with the law. I didn't want to get involved. I was subpoenaed. You were in a cross if you did or didn't.

"But I felt I was doing the right thing. I've been in and out of trouble all my life. You've got to make a change and do what's right. I've got five kids and if I'm going to keep them on the right track, I've got to be on the right track myself.

"It took a lot out of me. Four and five days of straight testifying with everybody looking at you is nerve-wracking. But I'd do it again. I feel I did the right thing and I'll feel that way for the rest of my life."

The rest of his life will be shadowed by his past, however. He still gets disconcerting phone calls from people who hang up without saying anything and he's having trouble getting a job.

A cabinet maker and welder by trade, Duson has managed to get by with odd jobs as a roofer and bartender. But it's wearing thin:

"It's been hard — especially this last time — 'cause I've been in the pen. It's really beginning to get close to me 'cause I want steady work."

Harrelson says he believes FBI agents set him up for arrest

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Convicted hitman Charles V. Harrelson testified today he believes federal agents investigating the assassination of Judge John H. Wood Jr. set up his arrest on state weapons and narcotics charges in early 1980.

The somber Harrelson, testifying in his own defense of a federal charge that he shot Wood to death for a $250,000 fee, said that two of his friends who were cooperating with the FBI may have planted guns and drugs in his car prior to his arrest.

He also testified he was high on narcotics and believed he was about to be killed on Sept. 1, 1980, when officers finally took him into custody about 15 miles east of Van Horn in West Texas. He had held a .44-caliber Magnum pistol to his throat for several hours.

"I don't know whether they arrested me or rescued me," Harrelson told the jury. "I was really messed up. I was 40,000 feet and climbing," he said in response to a question from his attorney, Tom Sharpe Jr., about whether he was high on drugs at the time.

Harrleson testifed he believed he had been followed by federal agents for some 500 miles from Houston and that, during a previous stop at a service station, someone had placed "an incendiary device" beneath his automobile.

He said he stopped the car and began trying to shoot off the muffler, where he believed the bomb may have been placed. The bullet ricocheted and shot out his tire.

At that time, he told the jury, a Culberson County deputy sheriff arrived and he held the gun to his throat, demanding that someone he knew be present before he would surrender.

"I put the .44 under my chin and told them I wanted someone there who knew me and could attest to the fact that I was in one piece when they took me into custody," he testified.

Eventually El Paso businesswoman Virginia Farah, a former employer, was brought to the scene and Harrelson was taken into state custody. Last year he was sentenced in Houston to 40 years on state weapons and narcotics charges.

On April 15 he was indicted on charges he killed Wood on a murder contract let by imprisoned narcotics trafficker Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra.

Harrelson, who Sharpe said may be on the stand until the Thanksgiving recess, is the 101st witness and the 18th called by Sharpe in the trial that began on Sept. 28.

The government rested its case after presenting 83 witnesses and 281 exhibits.

Harrelson is on trial along with his wife, Jo Ann Starr Harrelson, and Elizabeth Chagra, the wife of the man accused of financing the contract killing of Wood.

Mrs. Harrelson, 41, is accused of conspiracy to obstruct justice and Mrs. Chagra, 28, is charged with conspiring to kill Wood and to obstruct justice.

Photojournalism display at MC

Four decades of photojournalism are represented in the current show hanging at the McCormick Gallery at the Allison Fine Arts Building at Midland College. The exhibit, which includes numerous shots of the United States during the Great Depression, will close Wednesday.

Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday and 1 to 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

The current exhibit features the work of Russell Lee — artist, photographer and teacher.

Several of the photographs in the exhibit are from his individual jaunts into New York during the winter of 1935-36. Others were done after Lee went to work as a photographer for the Resettlement Administration (better known as the Farm Security Administration). The director of the administration's photographic project was Roy Stryker.

His career as a government photographer came to a close in 1947 when he discovered he had an ulcer. His assignments for the U.S. government prior to that time had included the Middle East and China during World War II. Some of these photographs are also included in the exhibit.

Lee spent a great portion of the next two decades working for various companies in the field of industrial photography and some of these photographs are also in the current show which is from the International Museum of Photography at the George Eastman House.

There is no charge for viewing the exhibit.

Reagan nominates Walters to head VA

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today nominated Harry N. Walters, a West Point football star who left the military after serving the obligatory four years, to head the Veterans Administration.

Walters, 46, an assistant secretary of the army for manpower and reserve affairs, would become the first VA chief who never served in combat.

At a confirmation hearing for his present post, Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., noted that Walters spent only four years in uniform after getting a West Point education.

Walters said he left the military because he could earn more money as a civilian to meet his family's growing needs.

He had been picked for the job early this month but the announcement was delayed after a number of influential members of Congress complained that their candidates had received no consideration.

Before taking the Pentagon job, he was the principle owner of the Potsdam Paper Corp. in Potsdam, N.Y., and had held a number of other jobs in the paper industry.

If confirmed by the Senate, he would succeed Robert P. Nimmo, a Korean War veteran who had come under fire for the way he ran the VA, an agency with a budget of $25 billion, a staff of 220,000 and a constituency of 30 million veterans. Nimmo said in October he was resigning for "compelling personal reasons."

After word of Walters' selection leaked out three weeks ago, he was introduced to leaders of the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, a sure sign the nomination was imminent.

But Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., chairman of the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee, complained that Congress had not been consulted and his own candidate for the job had been snubbed.

Simpson's candidate was Tom Harvey, a Vietnam veteran and staff director of Simpson's committee.

"I think they should have given him the courtesy of at least an interview," Simpson said at the time. "He got not even a phone call or an old howdy-do."

Walters graduated from the military academy in 1959 and served in the Army from 1959 to 1962 with the 25th Infantry Division in Hawaii and Thailand. He was in the Army Reserves from 1962 until 1968.

Walters held a variety of corporate positions before going to work for the Defense Department in 1981. From 1977 until 1981, he was president and chief executive officer of Potsdam Paper Corp., in Potsdom, N.Y.

At West Point, Walters, a native of Fostoria, Ohio, played fullback on coach Earl (Red) Blaik's undefeated Army "lonely end" team in 1959. He also played basketball.

Rock & Roll beer can't be sold in Texas

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Joe Edwards can't sell his Rock & Roll beer in Texas because the state's Alcoholic Beverage Commission says there's no proof the man on the label sold his soul for Rock & Roll.

The commission cited false advertising in banning the sale of the beer, which has a label depicting the fictitious character Johnny Longshot, a rock music fan who proclaims, "I sold my soul for Rock & Roll."

"How can anyone prove they sold their soul for rock 'n' roll?" asked J.M. McCarthy, a commission representative. "For someone to prove that claim, they'd have to be dealing with realms that I'm not aware of."

Two persons hospitalized after wrecks

Two persons, one of them a 2-year-old boy, were hospitalized after unrelated weekend traffic accidents.

In critical condition this morning at Midland Memorial Hospital with head injuries was 2-year-old Dayton Lee Williams of 1207 E. Cowden.

According to police, he was struck by a southbound car in the 1700 block of Lamesa Road about 8:55 p.m. Saturday.

The driver of the car was identified as Christene P. Soloman of 406 E. Cedar Ave.

In satisfactory condition at MMH was Randy J. Martin, 21, of 1216 Century. Police said he was a passenger in a 1978 Jeep CJ-5 driven by 22-year-old Dale M. Barden of the same address.

Barden was attempting a lefthand turn onto Seminole from Midland Drive about 5:25 p.m. Saturday when Martin fell from the vehicle. He suffered cuts and abrasions.

Tent city residents learn to swallow pride

HOUSTON (AP) — One resident of a modern-day Hooverville east of here says many unemployed people who populate the community must swallow their pride before they can swallow the donations of food flowing into the odd suburb.

But Herb Shondel, a former St. Paul, Minn., computer data entry supervisor who helps distribute food at the camp, says most adjust when "they get hungry enough and start looking at their kids. Then they take their share."

J.D. Dunn

A spray-painted sign by the entrance near the San Jacinto River places the population of "Tent City" at 150. J.D. Dunn, who says he's the mayor, says as many as 300 people have lived there at one time.

Recent news stories about the area have made things easier for residents. Local churches have brought food and clothing, and some people are living in donated tents. A Christian radio station broadcasts the job qualifications of the campers and some have found jobs.

Michael Hammac, a 21-year-old former pipefitters helper who moved in a week ago with his wife Joyce, 19, their two children and three other relatives, has overcome any qualms he had about taking charity.

"As long as they got food here and they give it out, I'm going to take all I can get," he said.

Hammac's family was evicted from their two-bedroom apartment in Houston after he was laid off two months ago.

"This is better than being out on the road worrying about where you are going to lay your head," Hammac said.

But it's not the way he would choose to live. "I ain't figuring on being here long," he said.

The observations Nick Criolla made on his way to the camp don't leave room for that kind of optimism.

"I come here from California in June," said Criolla, 48. "I've worked some odd jobs, but I couldn't find nothing steady. I was an ironworker. The work just run out, and I heard there was plenty of work in Houston.

"There wasn't no work in Arizona. There wasn't no work in New Mexico. All the way here there wasn't no work."

Nonetheless, Dunn, who took refuge in the encampment 1½ months ago when he ran out of money while job-hunting in Houston, says the citizens have reason to be thankful.

"We have our health and we have God to look to, and as long as we have that, we should be thankful," he said. "We may not have jobs or money or nice warm homes, but we're still thankful."

This time last year, Dunn was looking forward to a few days off from his job as a construction foreman, which he planned to spend with his wife, his parents and his two sons at his home in Livingston.

He left home seven months ago when hard times closed the construction firm where he worked.

Akins proclaims Adoption Week

Mayor Thane Akins has signed a proclamation recognizing Nov. 21-28 as Adoption Week in Midland. Adoption Week is an annual campaign during Thanksgiving that celebrates families that have been formed through adoption. Its purpose is to focus attention on the vast number of children still in need of a permanent, nurturing home with loving parents to call their own.

It is not known exactly how many children are in foster homes, because many states don't have adequate tracking systems of the children in their care. However, the National commission of Children in Need of Parents, the Child Welfare League of America and the Children's Defense Fund agree that close to a million children are in foster care in our country alone. About two-thirds of these children will return to their families, remain in foster care or be institutionalized for some reason or another. This leaves approximately 300,000 children that could be adopted. Many of these are "special needs" youth.

"Special needs" children are those who have not traditionally been viewed as candidates for adoption. Most are over 6 years old, and some are part of a sibling group. About 60 percent are minority children; some have physical handicaps or emotional problems. Some have been abused, neglected or abandoned. They have special needs to be fulfilled — one of the greatest being full-time parents.

Agencies have changed their requirements a great deal to help meet the needs of homeless children. They're not as rigid as they used to be. Of course, they must comply with state laws and policies, but generally, most agencies have become more relaxed and accepting. Single people are now allowed to adopt with much greater frequency. Even disabled people can adopt and the financial requirements are not so strict.

Another purpose of Adoption Week is to let interested people know where information can be obtained. The North American Council on Adoptable Children sponsors this yearly event with the help and cooperation of member adoptive parent groups. The Permian Basin Chapter of Council on Adoptable Children (COAC is one such adoptive parent group.

COAC is a group of parents who have adopted or are waiting to adopt. Members support and encourage each other. The monthly meetings, alternating between Midland and Odessa, consist of informal group sessions, family picnics and parties, or guests speaking on a variety of topics.

For information concerning COAC, Texas adoption or foreign adoption, call COAC, 697-0670.

Kramer: Protecting society's good taste

By JAN JENNINGS
Copley News Service

Did you ever stop to think how much less comfortable your life would be without blue jeans?

Ever wonder who's the genius behind today's widespread acceptance of blue jeans — like the Edison behind the light bulb?

Hilton Kramer has thought about it — a lot. And he knows.

But, no, it's not Levi Strauss, Calvin Klein or any other tip-of-the-tongue personage. At least, not according to investigative work by this highbrow intellectual, journalist and critic.

The genius behind the blue jeans is you, and other people like you — if you are a person of innovative mind bent on propelling modern culture in a positive direction. It was the acceptance of blue jeans by such high-thinking individuals — not by laborers who liked their comfort and sturdiness — that made jeans a familiar costume on all levels of society.

THAT DEDUCTION comes from the mind of Kramer. And he's dedicated to protecting the taste and standards of society. But more about his logic — and goals — later.

Called by New York journalists "the most powerful critic in America," Kramer, 54, has scrutinized and written about every innovative artist and modern style to strike his fancy in the past two-and-a-half decades. As chief art critic for The New York Times from 1972 to 1981, he was in a position to shape critical and public opinion on the visual arts in history-in-process reviews and analyses.

So what does that have to do with blue jeans?

CURIOUSLY, NOT ONLY did Kramer "grow up" in an era he terms "before jeans," this New York devotee of a lofty "high art" and "independent high culture" sees blue jeans as one of modern society's pivotal expressions.

In one breath, he talks of art intellect "purely of the mind," and in the next of the phenomenon of blue jeans and their effect on the changing attitude toward displaying the body.

Kramer's recent venture, The New Criterion, is a magazine geared to uphold the standards of "high art" and art criticism.

In an interview, a relaxed and genial Kramer engaged in a tete-a-tete about high art, blue jeans and his role and the posture of The New Criterion in the composition.

"In today's society, blue jeans express an easygoing way of putting our bodies on display," explains Kramer. "We can feel comfortable in jeans in practically any situation in our variegated lives."

But general acceptance of this phenomenon, Kramer claims, came only after skirmishes on the intellectual battlefields of innovative minds. And such minds, he tells you, belong to disciples of high art.

IN OTHER WORDS, the concept of wear-everywhere blue jeans is the product of forward-thinking minds which set the stage for the appeal of jeans among the general populace.

"And so it is," said Kramer, "with any movement within humanity that takes on such significance. It begins in the realm of high art — thought, consideration of human values and fundamental emotions, exploration of the unknown by a few within society which then filters to the many."

Voila! The widespread popularity of blue jeans.

Kramer's disciples of high art may well be linked, if you will, with the likes of "Star Trek's" Capt. Kirk, daring to "boldly go where no man has gone before ..." distilling what they feel to be the good and thence making it palatable to every man.

And Kramer sees himself as a modern-day pioneer in search of high art and the standards it needs to survive and thrive.

But, alas, according to Kramer, the status of criticism — and thereby the state of high art — is in alarming decline.

Enter: The New Criterion (edited by Kramer) which bowed to an elite audience with publication of the first edition in September. The $27-per-year magazine will be published 10 times a year, from September to June.

"The role of the critic in high art and therefore the goal of the magazine is to distinguish what qualifies as high culture," said Kramer. "To distinguish it from popular culture and commercial entertainment." (To Kramer, a rock festival may be an expression of the times, but certainly not high art. Pop art was a reaction to the times — facetious for the times — but not to be considered serious in terms of cultural advancement. "High art does not make a joke of the life of the mind it seeks to improve and expand.")

KRAMER SAID there are no formulas or recipes in determining high art.

"In the highest sense, the critic is dealing with virgin territory and must take the risks and set the standards," he said. "He must clarify issues and reorder our sense of cultural priorities."

Scientists protect children's vision

By JOANN RODGERS, Science Writer
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Dr. David Hubel, winner of a 1981 Nobel Prize for research that is revolutionizing children's eye care, says his work might never have been done under today's federal research funding policies, although they are still the best in the world.

"We came into research just at the right time in the 1950's after Sputnik led to a heavy federal research investment," said Hubel, who won the prize with Harvard Medical School colleague Torsten Wiesel.

"But so many scientists were trained that, with today's cutbacks, no one is getting enough money. We are seeing the breakdown of the whole system."

Hubel called the current research funding system "a lottery" that favors the "conventional." He and Wiesel are honored guests at the 24th International Congress of Ophthalmology here.

Because there is not enough money, many projects the peer review system declares equally excellent are arbitrarily left unsupported.

"It's much riskier to be somewhat unconventional as we were when we started," he said. "We were just curious about cells in the brain involved in vision. Only much later did the clinical possibilities become clear."

The two agreed that the federally-supported research operation in the United States is the best in the world. Young American scientists with new ideas have a better chance than their peers anywhere to win support for their work.

But Hubel called that operation in "sunset" because of economic woes and called on industry to step in. "Industry has been bumming a free ride for a long time. They need to chip in."

During the week-long Congress, held jointly with the American Academy of Ophthalmology, Hubel and Wiesel are to describe how their 20 years of research on the brain has influenced the treatment of children's eye disease.

Their experiments on cats and monkeys demonstrated that where vision is concerned, infants and children are not just little adults. The connections between the eye and the visual cells in the brain that control sight are rapidly developing and locking in.

Further, they showed that cataracts, crossed-eyes and other visual problems present at birth can cause permanent damage to those connections if not corrected in early infancy.

At a news conference, Wiesel said their work laid to rest the notion that the blindness which afflicted many children who had surgery or other treatment later in childhood was due to disease or damage to the eye itself.

They recreated cataracts — a clouding of the lense of the eye — and other childhood eye problems in newborn animals by sewing eyelids shut for a year or more.

When the lids were later opened, studies of the eye and the nerve fibers that connect to the brain's vision cells proved the blindness was due to brain damage, not eye defects.

"If we closed the eyelids later in life, the blindness did not occur," said Hubel, just as when adults get cataracts removed, their vision is retained.

"But in a child, waiting is a disaster."

In crossed eyes or strabismus, animal imitations showed that uncorrected victims develop lazy-eye, where the stronger eye takes over and shuts off the brain connections of the weaker. This loss of two-eyed vision may create permanent vision loss unless corrected by surgery, exercises and drugs very early in life.

Hubel and Wiesel said that lost connections to the brain result in actual damage to brain cells and to the way chemical messengers function in the brain.

"Since the risk to do operations in infants is somewhat higher than in adults," Wiesel noted, "the eye surgeons used to wait to age eight or nine sometimes before correcting strabismus, or beyond infancy at least to remove catatacts.

"Now we know that it must be done in infancy, as early as possible, to prevent loss of vision."

Dr. Creig Hoyt of the University of California San Francisco, for example, has operated on 21 infants less than six weeks old, fitting them with contact lenses.

Although there are problems with lost lenses and cost as the child grows, the payoff is "worth it," Hoyt says.

Practicing eye doctors at the meeting say there is a growing move to push the age of correction back further because of the Nobelists' discoveries.

Hubel also speculates that other kinds of sensory loss infants and young children — hearing, touching, tasting and social interaction — may do permanent brain damage.

"With the eye we could show this because we knew where the brain connections were," Hubel noted. Perhaps in 20 more years, efforts to map the brain will have succeeded well enough to prove the same point with other early sensory experiences, he concluded.

DEAR ABBY

Unwanted callers trip on language barrier

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: When I was a student nurse in Chicago, I used an effective method of dealing with unwanted attention, whether it came from an obscene phone call, men trying to pick me up in the Loop or panhandlers who hung around the train station. I pretended I couldn't understand English!

No matter what was said to me, I rattled off two sentences I had learned in my high school German class. The ones I used were, "Let us go to the library" and "I would go with you, but I don't have my notebooks."

I kept repeating these sentences in a perfect German accent as though I really knew what I was talking about, and I was left alone immediately. This worked with telephone solicitors, people trying to sell me siding, roofing, magazine subscriptions, etc.

The only difficult part was keeping my face straight while delivering this spiel in German. (I heard some unusual comments from people as they hung up or walked away.)

Any high school student who is currently learning a foreign language could teach you a sentence or two for this purpose. So many people speak Spanish today, I think it might be wise to pick some other language. Auf Wiedersehen! — SHERRY IN WATSEKA, ILL.

DEAR SHERRY: Bitte spreche kein Deutsch in Milwaukee (or parts of Pennsylvania) or your little Kunst will be kaput!

(Translation: Please don't speak German in Milwaukee — or parts of Pennsylvania — or your little trick will be finished!)

DEAR ABBY: Over a year ago I met a retired gentleman (I'll call him George). He is 75. I am 71 and have been a widow for three years. George was married a very short time when his wife died. He's been living with his sister ever since. He is handsome, refined, charming and well-educated. (Would you think me terrible if I told you that he is also a wonderful lover?)

George has told me that he has known a lot of women but he has never wanted to marry again — until he met me. The feeling is mutual, but we have been getting a lot of resistance from our families.

His sister tells me (behind his back) that George is too set in his ways to marry now. And my children warn me that although George is in good health now, if he should get sick I will spend the rest of my life being a nurse for an "old man."

I think I've made up my mind to marry him, Abby. All I need is a nod from you. — YOUNG AT HEART

DEAR YOUNG: I'm nodding. (Now, please don't say, "Thanks for nodding.") Good luck and God bless you both.

DEAR ABBY: Will you please say something in your column about letter-writing? Some people seem to think that they cannot send a letter to a friend or relative unless it is long, so they put off writing until they have time to write 10 or 12 pages.

I don't know about others, but to me, a short letter NOW is a lot more appreciated than a long letter LATER. — DOTTY

DEAR DOTTY: I agree. Most long letters are so long the recipients put off reading them until THEY have more time.

(If you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say, send for Abby's complete booklet on letter-writing. Send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents) self-addressed envelope to Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Kathleen Blackburn reaches out to take her 3-year-old son, Nickolas, from his father Sunday during an emotional reunion in Millen, Ga., which was ordered by the Georgia Supreme Court. Ms. Blackburn, 27, lost custody of Nickolas, who is white, last year after she bore an illegitimate, racially-mixed daughter. Her ex-husband, Mark Blackburn, has vowed to continue his legal battle to regain custody of the boy.

Mother meets with young son she lost in custody battle last year

MILLEN, Ga. (AP) — A tearful father pledged "I'm going to get my son back" after the 3-year-old was whisked away by his mother, who lost custody a year ago after giving birth to a racially mixed daughter.

Kathleen Blackburn sobbed, "Come here my baby, come here my baby," as she took her young white son Nickolas at a court-ordered reunion Sunday.

The 27-year-old mother, holding her 1-year-old daughter, Jennifer, in the other arm, rushed the boy to a waiting car and sped away from the Jenkins County Courthouse in this east Georgia town of about 3,700 people.

With tears streaming down his face, Mark Blackburn, the boy's father, said he would continue his legal battle for custody.

"No matter what it takes, I'm going to get my son back," he said.

Last year, Jenkins County Superior Court Judge W.C. Hawkins awarded custody of Nickolas to his paternal grandmother, Nancy Blackburn, ruling that Kathleen Blackburn was an unfit mother after she had an illegitimate daughter by a black man.

Nickolas is white, as are both his parents.

The Georgia Supreme Court overturned Hawkins' custody decision in June. Mark Blackburn filed a suit seeking custody of the boy himself, and Hawkins delayed returning Nickolas to his mother, citing the new custody suit.

On Tuesday, the Supreme Court ordered the reunion take place anyway.

Hawkins, who will preside at a Dec. 1 custody hearing on Blackburn's suit, denied the original decision was racially motivated. He once said "this court is colorblind," but also has said Millen "is not ready for that sort of integration."

Nancy Blackburn, her son and their attorney all denied Sunday that their legal efforts are motivated by race.

"Race had nothing to do with it," the grandmother said. "If that had been the issue, why would I have sought custody of Nickolas more than a year before Kathleen became pregnant (with Jennifer)?"

Blackburn said he did not originally seek custody of Nickolas because he was not married. But since he has remarried, he said, his life is more stable "and we can offer Nickolas a much more wholesome lifestyle."

In the latest twist in the case, Blackburn's attorney, Sims Lanier, said he plans to mail a petition today to the Jenkins County Superior Court asking that Kathleen Blackburn be held in contempt of court for denying his client visitation rights on Sunday.

Under the Blackburns' divorce decree, Blackburn was granted visitation rights each Sunday from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. But Mrs. Blackburn and her children were driven off by her lawyer to an undetermined location after Nickolas was turned over.

Adlai Stevenson III vows to demand recount in Illinois governor's race

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Democrat Adlai E. Stevenson III has vowed to demand a recount after the state Board of Elections certifies Gov. James R. Thompson's re-election victory in the closest gubernatorial race in the state's history.

An Associated Press survey of the counties showed Thompson was elected to an unprecedented third term with 1,816,028 votes to 1,811,000 for Stevenson, a margin 5,028 votes or 0.138 percent.

The state Board of Elections was to officially proclaim Thompson the winner today when it certified results from an official canvass of votes in all 102 Illinois counties.

Ronald Michaelson, elections board director, said the board vote totals will vary by "a few votes" from the AP count, "but the outcome will not be different."

The board usually certifies all statewide legislative, judicial and other races with a single vote, but Michaelson said Board Chairman J. Phil Gilbert wanted the seven-member body to vote separately on the governor's totals "to highlight the numbers because of the closeness of the race."

Stevenson, who was trailing Thompson badly in pre-election polls, said Thursday he will "push this to the end."

"We've come a long way and we're not going to let up now in the last mile," he said at a party to raise funds for the recount, which he says will cost at least $350,000.

Stevenson said he is confident a recount will favor him because of "inevitable" human and machine error in any election where more than 3.6 million ballots are cast.

The former U.S. senator held another fund-raiser in Springfield on Sunday. Dubbed a "Stand Up and Be Recounted" affair, people paid $5 each to see Stevenson, dance to band music and consume beer, soda and popcorn at a local United Auto Workers union hall.

Under state election law, a candidate may have 25 percent of the precincts recounted in as many counties as he wants.

There usually is no incentive for a winner to seek such a discovery recount, but the law does not bar it. Thompson has vowed that he, too, will seek such a recount if Stevenson does, to blunt Stevenson's next legal step — asking the Illinois Supreme Court for a total statewide election recount.

There has never been a statewide recount in Illinois.

Under the law, the discovery recount would have to show specific cases where there was enough fraud, irregularities or tallying errors to indicate the election's outcome could be reversed.

Stevenson has 15 days from the board's proclamation to challenge the election results before the state Supreme Court, which has four Democratic and three Republican justices. The court then would name a three-judge panel from the circuit court district encompassing Springfield to hear arguments by both sides.

Diplomat charged with sexual abuse still holed up in country's mission

NEW YORK (AP) — A North Korean diplomat charged with sexual abuse has been holed up in his country's mission for almost two months in a stalemate with police over diplomatic immunity, and his lawyer says he won't "sneak" out of the country.

A United Nations committee is tentatively scheduled to meet this week to try to resolve the issue, but meanwhile, police are getting nowhere in their effort to arrest Nam Chol Oh.

"It's a stand-off at this point," Richard Molea, a spokesman in the Westchester County district attorney's office, which brought the charges, said Friday.

Nam, third secretary for the observer delegation of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, is accused of sexually abusing an unidentified 43-year-old Bronx woman on a bridle path in Eastchester on Sept. 5.

The woman was grabbed from behind, knocked down, threatened with a rock and sexually abused. Nam, who has maintained his innocence, faces up to seven years if convicted.

The arrest warrant was issued Sept. 28, and an indictment was filed on Oct. 22.

Eastchester is a suburb of New York City in Westchester County, and county police staked out the Manhattan apartment building housing the North Korean mission. Nam's attorney says his client remains inside.

Salvatore D'Iorio, Westchester County police inspector, declined to say whether his officers are still watching the mission 24 hours a day.

Nam's attorney claims his client is immune from criminal prosecution because of his status as a diplomat, but Molea says the North Koreans' limited immunity does not protect him in this case.

As U.N. observers, North Korean diplomats sit in on U.N. meetings but cannot vote and have only "functional diplomatic immunity," which is limited to acts while performing official diplomatic business.

"We're satisfied he does not have the type of immunity which would absolve him from liability for a criminal act," said Molea.

Stanley Faulkner, Nam's attorney, says the concept of "functional immunity" doesn't make sense.

Average smoker puffed 1½ packs daily

WASHINGTON (AP) — The average American smoker went through more than 1½ packs of cigarettes a day in 1980, the Federal Trade Commission reports.

All told, the FTC said, smokers bought a record 628.2 billion cigarettes in 1980 — an increase of 6.4 billion or 1 percent over the previous year.

Since 1963, annual domestic cigarette consumption has increased by more than 100 billion, the FTC said today in its annual report to Congress on smoking data.

In 1980, the average smoker consumed more than 11,633 cigarettes — or about 960 cigarettes every month, the FTC said.

The surgeon general has estimated that there are about 54 million smokers in the United States.

Although cigarette sales rose in 1980, per capita consumption of cigarettes declined to 3,848 for all U.S. residents and overseas military personnel 18 years of age and older, the FTC said.

For the first time, the average cigarette on the market contained less than 15 milligrams of tar, according to the FTC. This compares to 1968, when the average tar content of cigarettes was 22 milligrams.

Low tar brands accounted for a record 44.8 percent of all cigarette sales, and 65 percent of advertising expenditures by cigarette companies, the FTC said.

All but 8 percent of the cigarettes sold in 1980 had filters, 1 percent more than in 1979 and 34 percent more than in 1963, the FTC said.

The report also noted that the popularity of menthol and longer length cigarettes had increased during the year.

Quiz measures your 'healthstyle'

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

How's your healthstyle?

The federal government is encouraging people to ask themselves that question with a quiz designed to help measure the effect of the way you live on the state of your health.

The test was designed by the Public Health Service of the Department of Health and Human Services. Here's how it works:

Read each statement and decide if it matches your behavior "almost always," "sometimes" or "almost never." Look at the numbers following the statements. Circle the first number if your answer is "almost always," the second number if it's "sometimes" and the last number if it's "never." Top score for each part is 10 points.

SMOKING

(If you don't smoke, skip these questions, give yourself a score of 10 and go on to the next category.)

1. I avoid smoking cigarettes. 2. 1. 0.

2. I smoke only low-tar and nicotine cigarettes or a pipe or cigars. 2. 1. 0.

ALCOHOL AND DRUGS

1. I avoid drinking alcoholic beverages or have no more than one or two drinks a day. 4. 1. 0.

2. I avoid using alcohol or other drugs (especially illegal drugs) as a way of handling stressful situations or problems. 2. 1. 0.

3. I am careful not to drink alcohol when taking certain medicines or when pregnant. 2. 1. 0.

4. I read and follow label directions when using prescription or over-the-counter drugs. 2. 1. 0.

EATING HABITS

1. I eat a variety of foods each day, such as fruits and vegetables, whole-grain breads and cereals, lean meats, dairy products, dry peas and beans, and nuts and seeds. 4. 1. 0.

2. I limit the fat, saturated fat and cholesterol I eat. 2. 1. 0.

3. I limit the amount of salt I eat. 2. 1. 0.

4. I avoid eating too much sugar. 2. 1. 0.

EXERCISE

1. I maintain a desired weight — neither over nor under. 3. 1. 0.

2. I exercise vigorously for 15 to 30 minutes at least three times a week. 3. 1. 0.

3. I do exercises that enhance my muscle tone for 15 to 30 minutes at least three times a week. 2. 1. 0.

4. I use part of my leisure time participating in activities that increase my level of fitness. 2. 1. 0.

STRESS CONTROL

1. I have a job or do other work I enjoy. 2. 1. 0.

2. I find it easy to relax and express my feelings freely. 2. 1. 0.

3. I recognize and prepare for stressful situations. 2. 1. 0.

4. I have close friends, relatives or other people I can talk to about personal matters and call on for help when needed. 2. 1. 0.

5. I participate in group activities or hobbies I enjoy. 2. 1. 0.

SAFETY

1. I wear a seat belt while riding in a car. 2. 1. 0.

2. I don't drive under the influence of alcohol or other drugs. 2. 1. 0.

3. I obey traffic rules and the speed limit. 2. 1. 0.

4. I am careful when using potentially harmful products. 2. 1. 0.

5. I avoid smoking in bed. 2. 1. 0.

Add your scores for each section. A score of 9 or 10 indicates your health practices are excellent. If you're between 6 and 8, look at the items answered "sometimes" or "almost never;" a few small changes could make a big difference. A score of 3 to 5 shows you are risking your health; check community groups like those run by the American Heart Association or the YMCA for more information about the dangers and what you can do about them. If you scored two or less in any category, you face serious and unncessary dangers; you probably need expert help.

A pamphlet called "Healthstyle, a Self-Test," including information on reducing your health risks, is available at no charge from the Consumer Information Center, Pueblo, Colo., 81009.

Prize-winning Holstein brings more than $1 million at auction

GREENLEAF, Wis. (AP) — A 9-year-old Holstein cow has been sold at auction for more than $1 million, a world record according to the man who sold it.

The price was nearly double the previous record for a single cow set at an auction in New York state two years ago, said Tom Pearson, who sold the cow Saturday for $1,025,000.

Cattle breeders said a prize-winning cow could command such a high price because embryo transplant technology gives it an earning potential that staggers the imagination.

By transplanting embryos to other cows, a prize-winner can produce far more offspring than ever before.

Democrats' plan would tax benefits

WASHINGTON (AP) — Social Security benefits would be taxed under a plan advanced by liberal Democrats who are serving on a panel trying to find ways to rescue the financially strapped system.

Robert M. Ball, a former commissioner of Social Security, said the plan calls for phasing in the tax over several decades and wouldn't affect people already retired or about to retire.

He outlined the proposal in an interview Friday with The Associated Press.

Several commissions have proposed in recent years that retirees pay income tax on the half of their benefits that stemmed from employers' payroll taxes. Employers and employees each pay a tax of 6.7 percent. Ball, who was Social Security commissioner from 1962 to 1973, has long advocated the payment of income taxes on employer contributions..

He was a member of the 1979 Advisory Council on Social Security that made such a recommendation, but the House killed that with a 396-0 vote. Taxation of Social Security benefits is still widely opposed in Congress and President Reagan has said he opposes the notion.

But with the Social Security retirement fund facing a possible shortfall of $150 billion to $200 billion, some Democrats say they are willing to compromise on the taxation issue.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said in a letter to all members of the new Congress on Nov. 12 that Congress should at least consider "excise taxes and taxing cash benefits" to make up part of Social Security's shortfall.

Rostenkowski, who is not on the 15-member National Commission on Social Security Reform, also promised to bring a "balanced" reform bill onto the floor of the House by late March.

The commission adjourned Nov. 13 after a three-day meeting without reaching agreement on any rescue plan. It may try again at its final scheduled meeting Dec. 10, but only if President Reagan and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill can agree in advance to a compromise.

The panel ostensibly has seven Democrats, but only five were appointed by O'Neill and Senate Minority Leader Robert Byrd: Ball, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., and former Rep. Martha Keys, D-Kan. The rest were appointed by Reagan or Republican leaders of Congress.

Pope John Paul II is shown amid Greek-Orthodox believers who try to reach his hands as he leaves the "Martorana" church after attending a religious service Sunday morning in Palermo, Sicily.

Pope returns from Sicilian trip

PALERMO, Sicily (AP) — Pope John Paul II ended a two-day visit to this Mafia stronghold and multi-billion dollar heroin traffic center by calling on Sicilians to reject corruption, drugs and violence.

But the pope, addressing thousands of young people in a central Palermo square Sunday, dropped a passage from prepared remarks in which he explicitly condemned Mafia crimes for having left "too much blood and too many dead on your streets."

The pope also omitted portions of his prepared speech condemning the code of silence that keeps witnesses from testifying against Sicily's organized crime syndicate, as well as another paragraph in which he supported an anti-Mafia campaign by Palermo's Roman Catholic bishops.

Rev. Romeo Panciroli, the Vatican's spokesman, told The Associated Press in Rome the pontiff's prepared speech stands "in its entirety."

Panciroli said the pope did not deliver part of his speech because he was running behind schedule and wanted to save time. "This is not the first time the Holy Father cut short his speech" because of schedule problems, Panciroli added.

John Paul arrived later Sunday at Rome's Ciampino military airport after a 67-minute flight from Palermo, where he had flown in Saturday amid heavy security.

Speaking from a bandstand at the square, the pope encouraged the island's young people to build a society in which "the ramifications of the Mafia attitude of some (Sicilians) are isolated and destroyed."

He urged the Sicilian youths to take courage, especially those "who grow up in an enviroment of subculture and superstition" and violence, who he said have become "easy prey for corruption, violence and drugs." He said drugs "strike a hatchet blow at the roots of life."

Before he spoke, a teen-age girl told him in brief remarks delivered before the crowd that Palermo's young people rejected the Mafia mentality of drugs and violence.

Palermo's Roman Catholic bishops last month renewed the penalty of excommunication for those committing murder and other violent crimes in Sicily. The church document, in repeating the threat of excommunication issued in 1944 and 1952, for the first time named the Mafia as the cause of violent crimes.

Byrne gears up for campaign

By SHARON COHEN

CHICAGO (AP) — Four years ago, Jane M. Byrne had no money, no clout and plenty of enemies. But she wanted to be mayor of the nation's second largest city — an ambition so heady that even she had her doubts.

Now, after almost a full term on the fifth floor of Chicago's City Hall, Mrs. Byrne's campaign war chest is bulging, the city's movers and shakers eagerly await an audience and the old-time political insiders have embraced her.

With prestige, power and perks, she is girding for another run for mayor. But it will not be easy.

Mrs. Byrne faces strong primary challenges from Cook County State's Attorney Richard M. Daley, 40, eldest son of the late mayor, and Congressman Harold Washington, 60, the first viable black mayoral candidate in the city's history.

Daley, bearer of the city's most famous political name, normally would be considered her principal rival but some observers say aggressive efforts to register black voters have made Washington the man to beat in the primary.

THESE FACTORS make the upcoming primary a "very difficult race" for Mrs. Byrne, says Thomas Roeser, head of the City Club and a frequent political lecturer.

Mrs. Byrne's official declaration of candidacy is set for today, and is likely to be followed Tuesday with an endorsement from the Cook County regular Democratic organization, which fought fiercely to keep her from sitting in the mayor's chair.

The Jane Byrne entering the 1983 mayoral race is a sharp contrast to the political novice who took office after the city's biggest election upset in this century.

"She's undergone a number of changes," says Don Rose, the political strategist who masterminded her 1979 campaign.

Jane M. Byrne

Foremost among them is style. When she first ran, "she was feisty. She was combative. She went for the jugular," says Alderman Roman Pucinski, a one-time mayoral candidate.

INDEED, MRS. Byrne, 48, clashed with the media, the unions and other political leaders during the first half of her term. The city stumbled through transit, fire and school strikes within her first year of office, with the mayor sometimes confronting angry striking workers on the picket lines.

The time since then has been considerably more placid. "I think she has become a mayor in the last two years," Roeser says. "She has gained a confidence in herself as well."

But more important than a change in style is the mayor's transition from outsider to insider.

Before she ran for mayor in 1979, Mrs. Byrne was city consumer sales commissioner — a job she got from her mentor, Mayor Daley. She also served as co-chairwoman of the county's Democratic Central Committee.

But when she accused Daley's successor, former Mayor Michael Bilandic, of greasing the way for a taxi increase, he dumped her. She became a party pariah.

She then decided to challenge the Democratic organization, prompting its leaders to laugh at the rashness and naivete of the woman who would take on the party's vast army of patronage workers.

"NOBODY THOUGHT Bilandic could be beaten," Pucinski recalls.

But Bilandic bungled attempts to get the city moving after a fierce snowstorm, and Mrs. Byrne capitalized on it. She was elected and soon after formed alliances with those she had denounced during her campaign, including two alderman she said were part of an "evil cabal." One of them, flamboyant Alderman Edward Vrdolyak, now heads the Democratic organization and is a key Byrne supporter.

"The people she called an evil cabal are now her cabelleros," says Roeser.

Such alliances disappointed Rose, who refused an offer to work in the mayor's 1983 campaign. "She overaccommodated the organization," he said.

But Pucinski says fence-mending isn't unusual. "In public office, we all have to eat crow once in a while," he said. "You soon discover it doesn't taste all that bad."

And the party backing, he says, strengthens her.

"THIS TIME SHE has all the advantages ...in terms of staff, fund-raising ability...and power. She controls 10,500 departmental jobs. She can generate media exposure," Pucinski says.

One of the mayor's biggest challenges is "fighting the Daley name and the sentiment attached to Daley," says Rose.

Daley declined to seek the official slating of the party, which his father dominated for more than two decades.

Vatican bank 'exploited,' cardinal says

ROME (AP) — The Vatican bank was "exploited" by private banking officials but the bank and its officials have been cleared of any wrongdoing and are not obligated to debtors in a major banking scandal, according to a U.S. cardinal.

Cardinal John Krol of Philadelphia, at the Vatican for a meeting with 15 cardinals examining the Vatican bureaucracy and budget, said that conclusion was reached by three independent financial experts summoned by the Holy See to investigate the bank and its president, American Archbishop Paul C. Marcinkus.

Krol made the statement in a telephone interview Sunday about the Vatican bank, known officially as the Institute for Religious Workers, and its dealings with Banco Ambrosiano, Italy's largest private bank which collapsed.

His statement was the first high-level confirmation that the financial experts had cleared the Vatican bank and its president.

"Those who say the Vatican bank owes money to Ambrosiano's debtors ignore documented facts," the 72-year-old cardinal said.

The controversy centers on the Vatican bank's role in connection with $1.2 billion in loans that the late Banco Ambrosiano President Roberto Calvi arranged for Panamanian companies, which were unable to repay them.

Some Italian officials and newspapers have claimed the Vatican bank is at least partly responsible for repaying the loans because they were covered by a so-called letter of patronage — similar to a letter of reference — from Archbishop Marcinkus to Calvi.

Marcinkus, 60, also received a letter from Calvi releasing the Vatican bank from any responsibility for the loans.

But Krol said "documented facts" show the letter of patronage was issued after "all the transactions" of Banco Ambrosiano had taken place.

Mountaineers plan new Everest route

CASA GRANDE, Ariz. (AP) — A team of American and Sherpa mountaineers plans a first-ever climb up Mount Everest's northern slope and down the southern side, a route that one climber says "doubles the problems" of the dangerous trek.

Five Americans have joined a group of native Sherpas in the plan to go over the top of the world's tallest mountain, up the Chinese face and down the Nepalese side.

"The logistical problems are that normally when you climb up the summit, you come back down with fixed ropes and lines established on the way up," said team member Jim Hatfield, of Casa Grande. "Obviously we're not going to have that benefit going down. So, it really doubles up the problems."

The traditional approach has been from the south because the Chinese side was closed.

Several Sherpas — who live on the southern slopes of the Himalayas and often serve as guides and porters for Western climbers — set up the expedition and got the permits, Hatfield said.

They "wanted to put together an all-Sherpa climbing team for the summit attempt," he said. "But they decided to involve some Americans for the financial aspects and our technical capabilities. They're good climbers but the Americans had more techincal expertise."

Everest peaks at 29,028 feet, or 5½ miles above sea level, rising from the Himalayas, which is Sanskrit for "abode of snow."

The northern route is expected to have more vertical or near-vertical climbing than the southern route, but with less chance of avalanches, said Hatfield, a 34-year-old construction company owner.

Gillette is one of only two people who have climbed Mount McKinley in Alaska in one day, Hatfield said.

Bush meets with president of Zaire

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — Vice President George Bush met today with President Mobutu Sese Seko to discuss bilateral and African issues, U.S. Embassy officials said.

Bush, who arrived here late Sunday on the last leg of a seven-nation African tour, also met briefly with Prime Minister Kengo Wadondo before going to the presidential People's Palace to meet Mobutu, the officials said.

Embassy Political Consul Jennifer Ward said in a telephone interview before the meeting was over that the talks with Mobutu were focusing on "general bilateral issues, including economic assistance, the general international situation and African issues."

Bolivia's jewelers close their stores to protest seizure of merchandise

SANTA CRUZ, Bolivia (AP) — Bolivia's jewelers have closed their shops to protest the government's seizure of merchandise from 24 major retailers in a crackdown on gem smuggling.

Police, customs and tax agents confiscated the retailers' entire stocks in simultaneous raids Friday in La Paz, Santa Cruz and Cochabamba, the country's three largest cities.

Customs director Carlos Montano told jewelers here that native and legally imported jewelry would be returned after a central bank inventory and the rest would be subject to a 45 percent import tax.

He said most of the precious stones and metals taken in the raids appeared to lack import permits.

Although the raids were backed by court orders, they produced friction between the business community and Bolivia's new leftist government, which is struggling with an economic crisis it blames largely on corruption under the former military regime.

The 5,000-member National Federation of Jewelers and Watchmakers urged the government Saturday to confine its crackdown to tax-evading jewelry importers and individual smugglers.

It ordered a nationwide shutdown by jewelery retailers — who it estimated will lose about $10,000 in business per day — until the confiscated merchandise is returned.

"We are not smugglers," Arnulfo Soto, the federation's executive director, said in La Paz. "There isn't a single retailer among us who brings in his own stones."

Soto said most jewelers were small artisans who limited their work mostly to agate, lapis lazuli and other stones mined in Bolivia.

But he conceded that some retailers bought imported jewelry without receipts and that much of it could have been smuggled.

"Military officers and their wives are selling jewelry that they smuggled from Panama and Miami," Soto said. "This activity grew considerably during the military regime, but customs agents didn't do anything about it."

Since taking power last month, the government of President Hernan Siles Zuazo has purged the customs office leadership and begun an investigation of 600 of the country's 1,600 customs inspectors on suspicion of corruption.

Draper told Israelis of killings, official says

JERUSALEM (AP) — An Israeli Foreign Ministry official has testified that U.S. special envoy Morris Draper was the first to inform Israel about the Beirut massacre and that Draper immediately blamed the Jewish state for the atrocity.

Bruce Kashdan, the ministry's liaison in Beirut, testified Sunday that Draper telephoned him after the killings by Lebanese Christian militiamen first became known, and asked him to relay a message to Defense Minister Ariel Sharon that said in part: "You ought to be ashamed."

Kashdan also said Draper's call early Saturday, Sept. 18, "was the first we heard something concrete about the massacre."

His testimony raised more questions about when Israeli officials say they first learned of the Sept. 16-18 atrocity by Israeli-backed Christian militiamen in Beirut's Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin has said he did not know about it until later Sept. 18 when he heard a British Broadcasting Corp. radio report. Begin said he was in synagogue earlier, observing the Rosh Hashana Jewish holiday.

Kashdan testified before an Israeli panel probing Israel's possible involvement in the mass killings. Begin has denied Israeli responsibility for the atrocity, but public outrage over Israel's possible involvement forced him to convene the special inquiry commission.

Israel forces controlling west Beirut during the time of the massacre said later they had let the militiamen into the camps with the aim of flushing out Palestinian guerrillas, not killing civilians.

The militias backed Israel's June 6 invasion of Lebanon to rout the Palestine Liberation Organization from its Beirut stronghold.

There was no immediate response to Kashdan's testimony from Draper. Israel television has reported the panel does not plan to seek testimony from American officials.

Kashdan told the commission Draper's call came at 10 a.m. Saturday, Sept. 18, three hours after the Christian militias withdrew from the camps. He said Draper asked him to transmit this message to Sharon:

"You must stop the massacres. They are obscene. I have an officer in the (Chatilla) camp counting dead bodies. You ought to be ashamed. The situation is rotten and terrible. They are killing children. You are in absolute control of the area and therefore have a responsibility for that area."

Kashdan said his first contact with Draper was Friday evening Sept. 17, when the U.S. envoy relayed rumors that unidentified soldiers were killing patients in the Akka hospital in west Beirut. Kashdan said he told Draper the Red Cross had said Akka hospital was empty but that he would relay Draper's report to the Israeli Foreign Ministry director-general, David Kimche.

Tyre blast due to gas leak

JERUSALEM (AP) — The explosion that destroyed an Israeli military building in southern Lebanon and killed 89 people was caused by an accidental gas leak, not an attack by Palestinian guerrillas, a panel of military investigators said.

The Nov. 11 blast in the city of Tyre was called Israel's worst disaster since the Jewish state was formed in 1948. Seventy-five Israelis and 14 Arabs were killed in the collapse of the seven-story building that housed Israeli military personnel.

Israeli troops have been posted in the southern Lebanese city since the early days of Israel's June 6 invasion of Lebanon to rout Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas.

A statement issued Sunday by the military command after the Cabinet studied the investigators' report said "the possibility that the building was destroyed through the use of an explosive charge was discounted with certainty."

It said "a tremendous gas explosion" took place in the northwest part of the first floor, causing "a significant horizontal movement of the building and as a result its collapse and complete destruction."

The building was poorly constructed, the statement said, and was "not planned to withstand significant horizontal loads."

The three-man panel of investigators, headed by Maj. Gen. Meir Zorea, inspector general of the Defense Ministry, "did not find one fact which can point to the supposition that the explosion was caused by terrorist activity," the statement said.

Loyalty oath replaced by permit

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Teachers expelled from the occupied West Bank for refusing to sign a pledge disavowing the Palestine Liberation Organization may be readmitted, a spokeswoman for the area's civil administration said today.

Alice Shazar said the anti-PLO pledge has been replaced by a work permit that all non-residents wanting to work in the West Bank, not just lecturers, must sign. At least 22 teachers, holding Jordanian, American and British citizenship, have been expelled for refusing to sign the pledge.

U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz last week criticized Israel for infringing on academic freedom in the West Bank by requiring non-resident lecturers to agree not to assist "the PLO or any other hostile organization."

Ms. Shazar said the work permit embodies similar language to the pledge, "but lecturers will now not be singled out as they were with the pledge. All foreigners wanting to work in the area will be bound by the same document."

"If the expelled lecturers sign the new permit," she said, "then they will be permitted back into the area."

She said the new provision brings Israel into line with work permit laws practiced in other Western countries.

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8 3/8%, loan to value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 12 3/8% for first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent Monthly Treasury Bill rate plus 4.5%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to have, at the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.5%. The 7.5% maximum interest rate be more than original loan principle received. 5% at each 5 year anniversary date the payments may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan.
