Board studies crowded school problem

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Portable classrooms and permanent facilities are but two possible alternatives now under consideration by the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees to help resolve classroom space problems in its elementary schools.

A study presented recently to trustees showed that the need for additional elementary classroom facilities through the 1988-89 school year is "extensive, immediate and urgent."

MISD trustees say much of that urgency can be attributed to growth in enrollment and House Bill 72, which mandates school districts begin limiting the maximum class size to 22 in grades three and four by 1988.

With those factors in mind, trustees say 27 additional classrooms should be in place by the beginning of the 1986-87 school year, followed by 31 classrooms, 81 classrooms, 35 classrooms, 24 classrooms and 22 classrooms in each of the next six years.

Dr. James Malley, former MISD superintendent and independent advisor to the board of trustees, developed the study using two sources of data from the school district: A projection of enrollments for 1984-96, and a report of current MISD staffing practices.

Malley based his findings on a kindergarten ratio of 29.76 pupils per classroom, saying the ratios used to project enrollment as students move from one grade to the next appear to be both conservative and in reasonable harmony with past MISD data.

But he also cautioned the use of the projections, saying they "reflect a downturn in kindergarten enrollments after the 1989-90 school year" while the "yearly live births data recorded by Midland Memorial Hospital do not as yet give any indication that such a downturn is taking place."

Within the constraints of state law and district policies, Malley said the average class size for each grade level appears to be

Hunt continues for survivors at collapsed hotel

SINGAPORE (AP) — Rescue teams equipped with electric saws, tractors and cranes struggled today to find more survivors in the rubble of a six-story hotel that collapsed, leaving an estimated 100 people unaccountd for.

A civil defense official said six bodies had been recovered.

Nine injured people were removed from the wreckage of the 67-room Hotel New World after it collapsed at Saturday morning, said Lim Siam Kim, director of the Ministry of Home Affairs. He said there were no records to indicate how many guests were inside the hotel when it collapsed.

Some 500 rescue workers continued their search through the debris today. No Americans were known to have been in the hotel, believed to have been built about 20 years go.

The Hotel New World is in a low-income district in this Asian island nation and was frequented mainly by Indian and Malaysian tourists.

"We did not hear any sound when we used sensitive instruments to get sounds of those who have been trapped," Lim said

Later, when asked whether those trapped under the debris might still be alive, he said "there is always hope."

A 29-year-old salesman at a nearby store, who gave his name only as Mohammed, said he felt the walls shake and turned around to see the hotel collapsing, with little chance for anyone to escape.

"Like a horror film, the building tumbled down," he said in an interview published in the Sunday Times. "This was all over in seconds."

A police officer on the scene, asked about the prospect of finding survivors, replied, "Your guess is as good as mine."

"See for yourself what we are up against," he went on, pointing to the towering pile of concrete floor slabs.

No explanation was given for the tragedy, but Home Affairs Minister Shanmugam Jayakumar told reporters that officials would investigate the possibility of structural defects or gas explosions.

■ Related photo — Page 2A

He said there had been reports of strong odors of gas from the building after the accident, but gave no further details.

About 10,000 people gathered around the wreckage in the area known as Little India were held back by police.

Some 1,500 police, military men and employees of the Public Works Department and Civil Defense worked in rotating crews of 500 to clear rubble, Lim said.

Rescuers worked throughout the night under the glare of powerful floodlights, lifting out chunks of concrete by hand as electric saws cut through pieces.

Five cranes and one huge crane that can lift 100 tons were brought in to remove layers of concrete. When one large slab was lifted, other sections of the building caved in.

At one point, Lim said the cranes were halted temporarily so workers could use microphones and other instruments to detect sounds of survivors.

Sixteen of the missing are believed to be employees of a branch of the Industrial and Commercial Bank located on the hotel's ground floor, said Lim, adding that the hotel had a staff of 28.

The others inside may be bank customers or hotel guests, Lim said earlier, adding "We don't know."

Lt. Col. Lim Eng Kian, chief medical officer of the Singapore armed forces, said four of those hurt were hospitalized and five were discharged.

A 26-year-old Chinese woman, Tan Gek Neo, was rescued after being trapped for nearly 10 hours in the rubble. She was cut all over her body and was in shock, he said.

Another Chinese casualty, Tan Oi Ling, 20, had a broken arm and injured feet. "She has been operated on, but is suffering from shock. Her condition is stable," said Lim.

Many companies looking after employees' mental health

Employee assistance programs provide counseling, referral

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Employee mental health has become a concern of many local companies offering counseling and referral services to troubled workers, according to local Midland clinical workers.

To supplement medical benefits, many companies have employee assistance programs. The programs provide counseling for workers who have problems ranging from drug abuse to unhappy marriages.

"The advantage of it is you can catch someone early without having their lives fall apart," said Jim Hanophy, director of quality assurance at the Midland Mental Health Center.

Firing a worker whose life has fallen apart can result in high costs for an employer.

Most major corporations are interested in seeing their employees get help because it costs 25 percent of a person's annual salary to replace them, noted John Fenner, another employee counselor.

But the programs also signify a compassion in major industries, Fenner added.

"I think there is really a social conscience involved as well as the economics of it," he said.

In addition to the cost of rehiring and retraining a new employee, there are higher health costs involved. Between 70 and 75 percent of the the nation's employee health care dollars are spent on workers who have or are related to someone with alcohol or drug problems, said Bob Dickson, an employee assistance counselor.

About 60 percent of the Fortune 500 companies now provide mental health counseling for troubled employees.

The assistance programs may be one way to reduce increasing health care costs, Dickson said.

Treating alcoholics and drug addicted employees is cheaper then paying for the medical costs of resulting heart and liver problems later on, he said.

Through assistance programs, supervisors are trained to refer employees to counselors when problems are not solved through regular management techniques.

Assistance programs train managers and supervisors to be on the lookout for decreased production, increased absenteeism, tardiness and increased accidents.

Some employers are afraid that assistance programs may turn their managers into social workers, Dickson said.

"The EAP is not a witch hunt. Managers are not clinical people and they are not suppose to be," he said.

The secret is to document decreasing productivity, absenteeism or accidents, so you have evidence, Hanophy said.

"You're not trying to diagnose them. You're not trying to set them up...you're referring them," he said.

But not all employee counseling is drug related.

Fenner counsels employees who come to him on their own with marriage and family problems.

"If you have an employee who's going through a divorce, you have an employee who is going to be distracted and productivity will be going down," Fenner said.

Clearview marketing director Cathy Clayton says one out of four patients at the alcoholism and drug treatment center are referred through employee assistance programs.

"We've had employers bring people bodily in," she said.

Because alcoholism must be treated as an illness, most company's group insurance policies will pay for an employee's hospitalization and counseling, Ms. Clayton said.

"We fix broken equipment. If somebody's truck breaks down you fix it and I think people owe that to the employees, too," she said.

Lamesa pastor concerned about farmers' plight

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

LAMESA — West Texas farmers are a hardy, independent lot. They pride themselves on the self-reliant spirit that helps them scratch a living from what was once known as the Great American Desert.

But a Lamesa pastor is concerned that the same rugged individualism that made the arid plains bloom with produce may make farmers less likely to seek help in coping with the current family-farm crisis.

"The problem that we have is that the farmer and the West Texan is kind of a proud, self-sufficient person — that's just part of our culture," said Dr. C.H. Murphy Jr., pastor of the First Baptist Church of Lamesa.

Murphy, whose church is sponsoring a program this weekend "to deal with the spiritual and emotional needs of the farmers," was interviewed between seminars Saturday.

"This is totally new. We have sort of pioneered a ministry here to meet a need," he said. "You've heard of Farm Aid — they're trying to save the farm. We're trying to save the farm family."

A farmer whose sense of himself is threatened by economic failure can be counseled to "bring him to recognise the resources he has within himself," within his family, and through his faith, Murphy said.

"If we can cause that farmer to utilize (those resources), he can not only make it through these tough times, but he'll be a better person," he said.

Despite, or even because of, farmers' success at growing crops, depressed commodity prices and the high cost of agricultural debt are threatening the future of the family farm.

"The farmer finds himself in a situation where he has little or no control over his fate," Murphy said. "He has failed to be rewarded for his labors," and this produces psychological as well as economic distress.

While government agencies are trying to help the farmer with technical advice, "Not much is being done about the emotional and the stress factor — and his family," Murphy said.

Across the nation, farm families are succumbing to the pressures of the current crisis. Depression, divorce, family violence and suicide are all on the rise among farm families, Murphy said.

Seminars on such topics as "Dealing with Change," "Self Esteem" and "Stress and Grief Management" were conducted for about 350 people, mostly from the Lamesa area, who attended the church's program Saturday, Murphy said.

He had hoped for more.

"My biggest disappointment has been that there's a lot of people who are hurting that didn't come," he said. "They're fine people, they're good people, but they're hurting, and they have a tendency not to want to expose their weakness."

Farmers will go on and on about their economic problems, but "so few of them will confess that they have an emotional or spiritual problem," Murphy said. "They'll admit they're going broke."

But behind those perennially stiff upper lips lurks a growing sense of despair, according to Murphy.

Hostages in Lebanon mark anniversaries

For the Rev. Lawrence Jenco, today is his 432nd day as a hostage, for David P. Jacobsen his 292nd, for Thomas Sutherland his 279th. And Peter Kilburn, if he has survived, can count 468 days as the prisoner of fanatics.

Held by the anti-Western Islamic Jihad, the handful of Americans are lost somewhere in Lebanon's turmoil — four of them, at last word, crammed together in a small, windowless room.

In New York state, his home, today has been declared "Terry Anderson Day." But for Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, the day here in Lebanon may be one just like the others — some push-ups, some Bible-reading, some prayers with fellow captives Jenco, a Roman Catholic priest; Jacobsen, a hospital administrator, and Sutherland, a university dean.

Their prayers would be echoed in Washington, where the hostages' families are gathering for a morning church service and an evening candlelight vigil outside the White House, to mark the sad anniversary and pay tribute to their kidnapped kin.

The low-key observances underline the powerlessness their relatives and countrymen feel as the Lebanon hostage-holding drags on.

The U.S. government has been unable to secure their release, and a mediation mission by Terry Waite, an envoy of the Archbishop of Canterbury, has run up against a major obstacle.

In exchange for the Americans, the Shiite fundamentalists of Islamic Jihad demand release of 17 comrades imprisoned in Kuwait for bombing the U.S. and French embassies there in 1983. But the Kuwaitis reject the demand and will not talk to Waite.

The hostages' families sound ever-hopeful, however.

"We have a lot of faith in Terry Waite bringing it off," Peggy Say, Anderson's sister, said at the family home in Batavia, N.Y. "It's just a question of when."

Mystery surrounds the fate of the two Americans missing the longest.

Islamic Jihad — or Islamic Holy War — claimed last October it had killed Buckley, 57, a U.S. diplomat from Medford, Mass., who was seized outside his west Beirut home March 16, 1984. But no body has been produced.

Kilburn, 60, of San Francisco, a librarian at the American University of Beirut, disappeared Dec. 3, 1984. Islamic Jihad later said he was kidnapped, but its statements have not mentioned him for a year now, fueling speculation that Kilburn, who had a heart ailment, may have died.

More recently, fears for the Americans heightened when Islamic Jihad claimed March 5 it had killed one of a group of Frenchmen it had kidnapped.

Little is known about where and how the Americans are held. But they provided some insights in letters they were allowed to write to their families last November.

Jenco apparently is a pillar of faith for his fellow hostages. Anderson wrote that the 51-year-old priest from Joliet, Ill., who was a relief worker here, leads religious services twice a day, when the hostages choose Bible passages to read.

Anderson, at 38 the youngest captive, said his cellmates and the Bible "have kept me sane." But he lamented, "Keeping occupied is our main problem."

Jacobsen, 54, of Huntington Beach, Calif., gave a more chilling insight into how the hostages were treated when they were seized.

"We're no longer in chains, which is a relief," he wrote. "Conditions are primitive. Exercise is limited to the size of the room. We do some sit-ups, push-ups and walking in circles...Our captors have not physically abused or tortured us. At times the boredom becomes overwhelming."

Jacobsen, administrator of the American University of Beirut Hospital, was kidnapped last May 28. Sutherland, 54, of Fort Collins, Colo., the Beirut university's acting agriculture dean, was abducted 12 days later.

Islamic Jihad released another hostage, the Rev. Benjamin Weir, last Sept. 14 as a "humanitarian gesture" and to convince the U.S. administration that time was running out for it to pressure Kuwait into freeing the imprisoned Shiites.

Anderson wrote that he saw a videotape made by his family broadcast on Lebanese television last fall. It included a picture of a daughter born in June, a child he has never held.

"I saw our daughter on TV the other night and I cried for joy," he wrote.

"...I'd like to see us all together again at least once — Dad, Peg, Bruce, Jack and Judy — all the grandkids we could gather. Such joy that would be."

But when the reunion comes, the joy will mix with grief.

'White oil' dispute stagnates Panhandle economy, mayor says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Texas Panhandle is used to living from boom to bust.

"We've always lived in a kind of unique area," says Pampa Mayor Sherman Cowan. "You know, when there was a recession going around, we were the first to feel it but the first to get over it."

But, he says, "white oil" has changed that.

The argument over whether liquified natural gas — "white oil" — can legally be sold by independent oil drillers has tangled up the Texas Railroad Commission, which regulates the oil industry in the state, and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in Washington, which regulates natural gas in interstate commerce.

The independents were accused by major oil companies of tapping into the majors' natural gas reserves under the guise of drilling for oil.

Both the state and federal agencies have ruled against the independents, who have appealed in state and federal courts, and the state agency and the federal commission are arguing over who has jurisdiction in the case.

But as the wheels of bureaucracy grind away, the hum of drilling rigs has slowed in the Panhandle, and so has the area's economy.

Lingering uncertainties about the legality of the oil drilling has stagnated the area's economy, affecting it more than the recent drop in oil prices, says Cowan.

The Amarillo Globe-News reported recently that about 30 merchants in Borger and Pampa reported business was down from 20 to 60 percent.

"It's a snowball effect, and we're just starting to see the snowball begin rolling down the hill," said Pampa attorney David Martindale, who represents about 300 royalty owners.

"Unless there's something rather quickly done, I think what you're going to see — and I don't think I'm being overly dramatic — is the death of the Panhandle economy up here," he said.

With the FERC preparing for an August remedies hearing at which it could demand a return of their gas profits, independent oil drillers are pulling out.

Cowan estimates that his town's 25,000 population has dropped about 10 percent since the white oil boom, which began in the late 1970s, went bust.

"The majority of people that left came in during the boom years," said Cowan, who says his own business, oilfield construction, is off 50 percent this year over last.

"The area we live in is basically agriculture and oil," he said. "We don't live in an area that has a lot of high tech resources."

Martindale said his law firm's business is also down about 50 percent.

"I've got five bankruptcies sitting on my desk right now," he said.

The controversy over white oil had been simmering since the majors first complained to the Railroad Commission in 1981.

The commission tests wells and certifies them either as oil wells or as gas wells, depending on what they produce. That is significant, because in the Panhandle field — the only remaining field where oil and gas rights are sold separately — gas wells can be drilled only one per 640 acres. Oil wells can be drilled every 10 acres.

With the gas rights bought up under long-term leases, no one had paid much attention to the leftover oil leases because there wasn't enough oil to merit drilling.

Minister says OPEC loses ground during price drop

GENEVA (AP) — An OPEC oil minister confirmed Saturday that the cartel, despite its vow to win a bigger share of the world oil market, had actually lost ground during the recent rapid fall of oil prices.

Mana Saeed Oteiba, oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, also said he could not predict whether an emergency Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries meeting starting Sunday could find a way to push oil prices back up.

Libyan Oil Minister Fawzi A. Shakshuki said he would recommend coordinated cuts in OPEC production, but would not elaborate.

Without a firm OPEC agreement in Geneva, oil prices on the open market could remain at their current level of about $15 a barrel or fall further, analysts say.

OPEC is badly divided over whether to pursue its vow of last December to win back oil customers lost to Britain and other independent oil producing countries by raising production.

The tactic led to an unprecedented collapse of oil prices, prompting calls by OPEC hardliners such as Iran and Algeria to abandon the costly strategy, which was advocated by OPEC kingpin Saudi Arabia.

Algeria's oil minister, Belkacem Nabi, said Saturday he would urge the conference to cut production sharply to stabilize prices.

Many industry analysts say OPEC, weakened by years of falling revenue, no longer can afford production cutbacks big enough to reverse the price decline.

"We are in a strange market," Oteiba told reporters.

SCHOOL

about the optimum that can be achieved given the uneven grade-level distributions of children from neighborhood to neighborhood.

"The kindergarten ratio of 29.76 pupils per classroom is obviously an artificial figure, but it does adequately reflect the manner in which kindergarten pupils are being housed in the district," he said.

The enrollments at the time the ratio was calculated showed there were 1,756 pupils enrolled in kindergarten. Of this number, 616 were enrolled in full-day kindergarten and were using 29 classrooms for instruction and the remaining 1,140 pupils were attending half-day kindergarten classes.

Mailey said 588 pupils were attending morning classes which required 30 classrooms and the remaining 552 pupils attended afternoon classes and used 27 of the 30 classrooms that had been used for the morning kindergarten classes. Thus, a total of 59 classrooms were being used to house 1,756 pupils for a ratio of 29.76 pupils per classroom.

Provided student enrollment peaks by the mid 1990s as expected, Mailey said MISD will need a total 231 additional elementary school classrooms, meaning it may have to establish a desirable mix of temporary portable buildings and permanent facilities.

Trustees already have agreed to purchase portable classrooms for use next year and will consider asking voters to approve a bond election for new schools and other classroom additions.

If the construction of permanent facilities is to include entirely new elementary schools, Mailey has said that trustees would have to formulate cluster assignments for those schools to insure racial balance required under federal law.

Since the area around Crockett Elementary School is a rapidly growing area, at least insofar as the pupil population is concerned, it is conceivable that a new school could be built in this area, Mailey said. Its attendance area would include portions of Crockett, Milam and Pease and the building could ultimately serve as a replacement for the present Crockett school when enrollment in the area declines sufficiently to permit the abandonment of that building as a school facility.

Also, Mailey has said there is a sufficient number of pupils residing in the portion of the school district south of the city limits to fill an elementary school and thereby reduce some of the pressure on the Travis, Burnet and Bonham facilities. He added, that perhaps the school could be located in such a manner that it would ultimately serve as a replacement for the Houston-West school.

If not, another possibility might be to construct a facility adjacent to existing extended utility lines west of Loop 250 and south of Illinois Avenue, he said.

The growth rates in the west and northwest portions of the city also justify consideration of a possible elementary school in this area, Mailey said. He added that consideration also should be given to the possibility of constructing a primary school (kindergarten through third grade) in the Wydewood area to provide some relief for the pressure on the Rusk facility.

Mailey noted that there does not appear to be a sufficient pupil population in the Bunch Elementary School neighborhood to reopen this building as a full-fledged elementary school with a membership in a cluster.

FARMER

Farmers have always been prone to optimism — to looking forward to the next planting season, Murphy said.

"But now there's a depressed, defeated, sort of a hopeless spirit — sort of a 'What's the use?'"

Adding to the problem in West Texas is the recent, precipitous decline in oil prices, with its accompanying decline in income for many local residents.

"Since we've put it (the farm-family program) together, the oil crunch has hit," Murphy said. "In many ways the problems are the same."

To help people get through the crisis, "We're going to form a support group" similar to Alcoholics Anonymous and similar programs, Murphy said.

And next week, at the general convention of Texas Southern Baptists, Murphy will meet with convention leaders "to design a program or ministry which can be utilized in a local church."

Murphy is confident that things will eventually improve for the agriculture industry, but he is less sanguine about the fate of the traditional family farm.

"Farming will come back. The farm will always be around, but I don't think the farmer will be if we don't help."

Odessa man to be extradited in fatal shooting

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Ector County Sheriff's Capt. Gene Kloss late Saturday night said deputies would be dispatched to McAlester, Okla., Monday to return a 25-year-old Odessa man wanted in connection with the fatal shooting of a 54-year-old man Friday.

Kloss said John Eldon Samford was arrested by McAlester police based on information broadcast in an all-points bulletin issued by Ector County authorities after the body of Marvin Don Blackmon was found about 11 a.m. Friday along South Industrial Ave. in south Ector County.

Blackmon was pronounced dead about 12:30 p.m. by Ector County Peace Justice R.G. Hungerford and an autopsy was ordered. Reports indicated Blackmon had been shot several times in the head. Kloss said Samford was driving Blackmon's vehicle, a 1978 Chevrolet Impala, when he was arrested by McAlester police. According to Kloss, arresting officers found a .38 caliber revolver believed to be the murder weapon in the vehicle.

Samford has waived extradition and is expected to be returned to Odessa sometime Tuesday, Kloss said.

Gubernatorial hopefuls promise no new taxes

ROUND ROCK (AP) — Five gubernatorial candidates Saturday tried to show the Texas Association of Concerned Taxpayers that they are concerned about taxes.

It was a parade of no-more-taxes promises as two Republicans, two Democrats and a Libertarian spoke to about 100 members of the anti-tax organization.

"I carried the president's tax cut in 1981," said GOP contender Kent Hance of Lubbock.

"I'm just like you," Republican candidate Tom Loeffler of Hunt told the crowd. "I don't believe a government can tax itself into prosperity."

Democratic hopefuls Don Crowder and Andy Briscoe also said Texas government should be able to live on current tax levels. Crowder also continued his call for a state lottery.

Libertarian candidate Theresa Doyle indicated little confidence in the motives of the other four candidates at the meeting.

"Have you ever examined the word politics? Poly means many and ticks means blood-suckers," she said.

Hance spent part of his time complaining about the 1977 state law that set up central appraisal districts in each county — the Peveto bill.

"I think that's probably one of the reasons Bill Clements is not here today. He signed the Peveto bill. I don't blame him. I wouldn't be here either. He wants to talk about not raising taxes. I can tell you, he raised taxes tremendously when he let the Peveto bill get loose," Hance said.

In a statement released in conjunction with the Round Rock meeting, Hance said Clements "seems to be pulling back a little from joint appearances because his strategists are telling him that the more he appears before the voters, the more likely he is to make one of his famous misstatements and remind people that he's still the same Bill Clements."

A Clements spokesman said the ex-governor had other plans Saturday and could not attend the meeting here.

"We've had 10-12 joint appearances and there are going to be at least a half dozen more," said Reggie Bashur, Clements' press aide.

Gov. Mark White also did not attend the Saturday meeting.

Autumn Hills nursing home trial goes to jury

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The murder trial of a Houston-based nursing home heads to the jury this week after seven months of dogged courtroom work and nearly seven years of persistence by prosecutors.

Final arguments are scheduled Tuesday and Wednesday in the case against Autumn Hills Convalescent Centers Inc. and four of its current and former employees.

Jurors likely will begin deliberations Wednesday afternoon.

Medical and legal precedent could be set in the case, the first to charge administrators, executives and a corporation with murder in the death of a nursing home patient.

The nursing home chain, president Robert Gay, 59; vice president Ron Pohlmeyer, 43; nursing consultant Mattie Locke, 44; and former Texas City nursing home administrator Virginia Wilson, 62; are charged with murder in the Nov. 20, 1978, death of Elnora Breed.

Mrs. Breed, 87, died 47 days after she entered the Autumn Hills Texas City facility.

The state claims Mrs. Breed died of starvation and infection, both caused by poor nursing care.

The defense claims Mrs. Breed died of a recurring colon cancer, for which she had undergone surgery three times.

The defendants also are charged in the Oct. 16, 1978, death of Edith Mae Witt, 78, but they are not being tried in that case.

Prosecutors began investigating the nursing home in 1979 after state health inspectors filed numerous reports citing substandard conditions at the facility. The nursing home's Medicaid funds were cut off twice in 1979 because of inspectors' findings.

Former Galveston County assistant district attorney David Marks sought and won grand jury indictments in 1981. But because they were sloppily written, the indictments were thrown out.

A few months later, another grand jury issued indictments and a plea bargain was struck. But Marks refused to support the agreement and lost his job because of his stand.

When new district attorney Mike Guarino took office, he convinced a judge to dissolve the plea bargain. A third set of indictments was returned in 1984.

Meanwhile Marks was hired by Attorney General Jim Mattox, and he has remained on the case since.

Under the guiding hands of Marks and Guarino, the state focused testimony on conditions at the nursing home.

Witnesses said patients were left lying in their own waste for hours, that they were not turned regularly and that nurses and aides failed to properly document care given and in some cases, records were falsified.

One nursing expert testified there was an epidemic of bedsores in the nursing home.

State health department inspector Betty Korndorffer described the Texas City facility as a mess and said she told the nursing director there that the nurses were killing patients.

Witnesses said Mrs. Breed had three bedsores on her body. One was so severe the bone was exposed.

Texas schoolchildren help dedicate school in Mexico City

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A small delegation of Texas schoolchildren Saturday visited the earthquake-damaged school that will be rebuilt with Texas donations.

San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros and former U.S. ambassador-at-large to Mexico Bob Krueger, the co-chairmen of the Texas Response non-profit organization spearheading the fund drive for quake relief, also attended the ceremony at the Jose Lopez Portillo y Weber elementary school in the Coyoacan neighborhood of southern Mexico City.

It was the second ceremony at the school in nine days. Krueger also had attended the March 7 groundbreaking ceremony attended by Mexican Public Education Secretary Miguel Gonzalez Avelar.

The school will cost an estimated $350,000, Krueger said.

The group, of adults and about eight Texas children, arrived at the school at about 11 a.m. CST and toured the prefabricated classrooms the Mexican students now are using at their old school site.

The portable classrooms were moved in last month to allow the children to return to their school. They had been attending classes at a nearby school unaffected by the disaster.

Teachers glad TECAT's over but their resentment lingers

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

That pretty much sums up the attitude of the 250-odd teachers and administrators that took THE test at Midland's Alamo Junior High School here Monday.

"At least it's over," said teacher after teacher, man after woman, emerging from the cafeteria test site. None offered the slightest notion that he or she might have flunked.

"It was so easy, it was an insult to my intelligence," said one teacher, relaxing over a beer afterward.

We're talking here, of course, about the Texas Examination of Current Teachers and Administrators, the TECAT, THE test.

The once-called competency exam — now-acknowledged literacy test — that Texas teachers picked up as a fringe benefit of last year's pay raise is over. For most.

A certain number — Education Commissioner Dr. William Kirby estimates about 10,000 — will fail. Those teachers, counselors, principals, coordinators and superintendents will re-take the test June 28.

If they fail again, they're out. Their so-called lifetime certificate hits the grave. "Life is short," quipped one Midland teacher.

But as I said before, no one seemed to find themselves in that category. "No trick questions, not too bad," they said.

So let's assume they all pass. Great. So all of our educators can read and write well enough to teach our children. That's all we wanted anyway, right, assurance that all Texas teachers are literate.

But some teachers, so distrustful of a system they believe has dealt them nothing but losing hands for years, aren't so sure they want to see a 100-percent passing rate. Not that they particularly want one or another of their colleagues to flunk.

No, it's that old bugaboo in Austin — the Legislature. If not enough teachers flunk, they fear, the test and all its accompanying stress and anxiety will have been for naught.

"They'll say, 'The test was too easy,' " one teacher predicted.

Now why would the Texas Legislature — the all-knowing, kind, Texas Legislature that ordered THE test in the first place — react like that?

Just look at what happened with the high-school juniors last fall. They took a test, one the Legislature mandated, one the students needed to pass to graduate.

Back then Kirby predicted that about 25 percent of the juniors would fail the test the first time around. Surprise, surprise. The failure rate was closer to 15 percent.

And what happened? Well first Kirby & Co. praised the students for performing so well and the teachers for doing such a good job in preparation. But along came state Rep. Bill Hammond of Dallas, the man who wrote that portion of state law requiring the test in the first place.

He called the exam a "sixth-grade test," said the diplomas it insured remained worthless and said the test perpetrated a fraud on all Texas parents, teachers, students and taxpayers who had counted on the exam to bring accountability back to graduation ceremonies. Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis chimed in.

Well aware of who gives the marching orders, State Board of Education Chairman Jon Brumley promised to make future versions of the test harder.

Now the TECAT is, for the most-part, a one-time exam. If too many teachers passed Monday's test, the state board can't save face by making it tougher for teachers next year.

So where would that leave the teachers, already angry over the public's lack of confidence in what used to be an honored profession? In a morale hole that would make today's classroom situation seem like Eden, that's where.

Kirby, hoping that THE test marks the low point in the morale crisis, is just praying that it doesn't happen. No, he'd be happy with a 100-percent passage rate. Kirby just wants something that observers of the Texas Legislature haven't seen for a long, long time.

"If only they'd look at the bright side," Kirby says. Nice try, Bill. Lord knows teachers could use a little optimism from some corners of the Capitol.

And so on...Teachers: here's a little reminder that I still want to here from you. Write and tell me about morale in your school, conditions in your classroom, reaction and adjustment to House Bill 72, your thoughts on Gov. Mark White. Send your letters care of the Reporter-Telegram, PO Box 13104, Austin, 78711. Thanks again.

Gas war breaks out between Abilene stores

ABILENE (AP) — Lines as long as three city blocks knotted intersections as motorists waited up to an hour to buy gasoline that had fallen from about 90 cents a gallon to 59.9 cents a gallon.

What began Friday as an advertising promotion quickly escalated into a price war when several service stations matched a 69.9 cent per gallon special offered by an E-Z Serve store.

Store officials responded by slashing prices another 10 cents, and by day's end at least three stations were offering all types of gasoline, including premium-unleaded and diesel, for 59.9 cents a gallon. Three other stations offered fuel for 69.9 cents a gallon.

"We intended from the start to give our customers an especially good price for this promotion," said Randy Nicholson, the chain's president. That is why the company reduced prices even further, he said.

E-Z Serve plans to continue offering the low prices through Monday, the company president said.

"This is a real wildcat Friday," said Dan Edwards, an employee at a station which matched the reduced prices.

"It seems like half of Abilene has been through here today," he said, as he lit his first cigarette in seven hours.

★ POSTAL EXAM ★
EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY
Clerk-Carrier (9.48 hr)
The BIG SPRING, MIDLAND, ODESSA and ANDREWS Post Office will be accepting applications for the Clerk-Carrier exam March 17 thru April 2.
The Clerk-Carrier position currently pays $9.48 per hour plus excellent benefits. Serious postal candidates should begin preparing now because people are hired for these positions based on their exam score. You should not miss your chance to fill one of these highly desirable jobs.
POSTAL EXAM WORKSHOP
ADVANTAGES OF ATTENDING
1) The Postal Exam Preparation Center offers the original postal exam workshop. We have set the standards for over 5 years. Unlike many other postal preparation companies that have recently come on the scene, our methods were not created overnight.
2) Our founder, Stephen McNally, is the foremost authority in America on gaining postal employment. His credentials are matchless. Mr. McNally is a former postal employee, current Ph.D. in Education, author of 4 postal study guides, and has averaged 100% on 7 of the various postal exams.
3) Over 200,000 satisfied postal candidates have used Mr. McNally's methods. Most of these people were: a)seeking a higher paying job, b) Desiring a secure future, c) currently unemployed. If you are in one of these categories you must attend this workshop.
4) Over a two year period 80% of the Clerk-Carriers hired in one city used Mr. McNally's methods. Our former office manager currently works for the Post Office, and the current office manager and her assistant both scored 100% on their first CC exam in the summer of '85!
"This workshop was well worth my time and money. Using Mr. McNally's techniques allowed me to score 100% on my first 3 Clerk-Carrier exams!" K.A. Summerfield, IL
5) We are the oldest, most reputable and the only Postal Exam preparation organization with documented proof that our methods are effective.
6) THE EXCLUSIVE PEPC DOUBLE GUARANTEE: 1. At the end of the workshop, if you do not think these methods will significantly increase your score, your money will be refunded. 2. You will enter into a written contract guaranteeing you a score of 95% or higher or you tuition will be completly refunded.
WORKSHOP TUITION IS $35.00. Payable in cash, Visa, MasterCard or personal check. This fee includes the 2½ hour workshop, the textbook Clerk-Carrier which includes 3 complete tests, diagnostic practice exercises, tips to make you testwise and 10 additional practice tests.

Dublin coach acquitted of assaulting student

STEPHENVILLE (AP) — Dublin school athletic director Bill Bryant, who had been accused of choking a freshman high school student, was acquitted of an assault charge.

A county court-at-law jury deliberated about 30 minutes before returning the verdict Friday.

Bryant's attorney, Bob Glasgow, said he expects the Dublin school board to reinstate Bryant as athletic director and head football coach. The board suspended Bryant with pay Jan. 10 pending the outcome of the trial.

"I am just glad this is behind us, and I'm looking forward to getting back to coaching and teaching," Bryant said.

He had faced a maximum $200 fine if convicted of the Class C misdemeanor.

Bryant was accused of choking Willie Cosart, a student who testified that Bryant choked him and slammed him against a wall. Bryant denied the allegation, testifying that he merely admonished Cozart and another student, Landon Northcutt, for hitting and kicking a candy machine.

However, critics of Bryant, who has been the subject of controversy in Dublin, said they believe the verdict will strengthen their cause.

"I expect this decision will not be met with much satisfaction by the majority of people in the city," said John Cowan, a school board member and a critic of Bryant.

Bryant still faces allegations that he mishandled school district funds while he was in charge of a vending machine account. An audit by the Texas Education Agency shows that Bryant was reimbursed about $1,700 from the account for him and other coaches to attend U.T football games.

Philippine government to file federal suit in Texas

AUSTIN (AP) — The Philippine government plans to file a federal lawsuit in Texas this week in an effort to claim properties it believes were purchased with funds taken illegally by deposed leader Ferdinand Marcos, a lawyer says.

Michael E. Tigar, named to represent the Philippine government by the New York-based Center for Constitutional Rights, said the suit will ask to "recover property acquired from funds stolen from the people in the Philippines."

"Assets acquired in Texas with the funds are all real estate or interest in real estate," Tigar said. "We've heard a great many rumors (of property.) We're tracking them all down."

Property purchased, then later sold by the corporations also may be part of the federal suit, Tigar said.

"Just because the property has been sold doesn't mean there is no possible recovery," he said. "If you buy a watch from a thief, you may have to pay for it twice — once to the thief and once to the new owner."

No decision has been made on which city the suit will be filed in, Tigar said.

The Center for Constitutional Rights is representing the government of President Corazon Aquino in its effort to recover property in the United States. The group has appointed Tigar and two other Austin lawyers, Jay L. Westbrook and Pieter M. Schenkkan, to represent its efforts to reclaim property in Texas.

Tigar would not comment on specific holdings that are likely to be involved in the lawsuit, and he would not say whether those properties or corporations will be named in the suit.

The Philippine government last week froze assets of business leaders in the island nation identified as Marcos' cronies. Among those assets frozen in the Philippines were those of Jose Y. Campos, head of a major pharmaceutical corporation.

Perspective.

Three years as a member of the Planning & Zoning Commission, eight as a City Councilman, and, most recently, three years as a detached, objective observer of City government have given Carroll Thomas a new perspective on the issues. Indian artifacts may delay El Paso highway

EL PASO (AP) — The discovery of 800-year-old Indian artifacts at a highway construction site in El Paso might delay the $16 million project up to a year and cost $500,000 to excavate.

El Paso's leaders are not very happy with the development.

"It's absolutely ridiculous to spend $500,000 to find some more Coors cans," Mayor Jonathan Rogers said.

But federal law requires the investigation of archaeological finds along new highways, and an excavation could enlighten scholars on how one of El Paso's earliest cultures changed from a band of nomadic hunters and gatherers to semi-nomadic farmers, said Rex Gerald, a University of Texas at El Paso anthropology professor.

"We'd like to know what their environment was like," Gerald said of the Indians of the Dona Ana Phase, which lasted from 1100 to 1200 A.D.

But the environment city officials are interested in is the northeastern El Paso site of the expansion of U.S. Highway 54 and roadside drainage improvements.

State highway department archaeologists found more than 10,000 pottery shards during their excavation of the freeway right-of-way, which borders the site the city is required to excavate, Gerald said. The city is required to excavate alongside the freeway right-of-way, where it plans to spend $6 million on drainage improvements.

Gerald said the artifacts there are from a transitional period when the Indians went from living below ground in pits — subsisting on hunting and gathering mesquite beans, grass seed and yucca blossoms — to living in surface adobe pueblos and farming.

"They were beginning to get into agriculture enough to live in one area for several years at a time," Gerald said.

The excavation might lead researchers to the conclusion that rainfall was heavier at that time, if those ancient Indians were able to farm the land. Modern rainfall records go back 100 years or so.

"We know you can't farm out there now," Gerald said. "There's no water. But if they were living there, there must have been some surface water."

Gerald has estimated the excavation will take six months (analysis and paperwork could add another six months) and cost as much as $500,000. Archaeologists from New Mexico State University estimate it could cost half as much, but Gerald doubts that.

Ships' artifacts on display

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Spanish artifacts lost in two shipwrecks more than 400 years ago went on public display this weekend for the first time since their discovery.

The collection, owned by the Corpus Christi Museum, includes a navigator's astrolabe, a cannon, silver coins, gold bars, thimbles and belt buckles. The astrolabe, made in 1545, is the oldest known, museum officials said.

An astrolabe was an instrument once used to find the altitude of a star. It was later replaced by the sextant.

Salvagers also have recovered gunpowder, a rail gun and breech blocks.

"It gives us a wonderful glimpse of 16th-century Hispanic life," said Dr. Herman Smith, the museum's resident archaeologist.

The artifacts were recovered from the the San Esteban and Espiritu Santo, which wrecked in 1554, claiming the lives of more than 300 men.

The ships were part of a four-vessel fleet that set sail from Veracruz, Mexico, for Spain.

Association seeks ruling

HOUSTON (AP) — An attorney for the Grand Parkway Association says he plans to meet this week with the state attorney general's staff to clarify conflict of interest law relating to non-profit corporations.

The planned meeting follows criticism that some association members and backers of the parkway own property or have business connections tied to a proposed highway around Houston.

The association operates under a new state law that allows private, non-profit corporations to plan highway projects, seek donations of land and preliminary engineering work and submit them to the state for construction funding.

Bob Randolph, attorney for the parkway group, said he plans to meet with the attorney general's staff to discuss the conflict of interest law as it applies to the association.

Oilman named in drug ring

DALLAS (AP) — A Nevada oilman is among 28 people named in sealed indictments alleging a scheme to fly tons of marijuana and cocaine into Texas for distribution nationwide, federal authorities say.

Benjamin Phillip Barrington, 48, of Las Vegas, was arrested Nov. 12, 1985, with seven members of an alleged smuggling ring, officials said Friday.

Reagan campaigns relentlessly for Contra aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's speech Sunday night in defense of his Nicaragua policy will cap perhaps the most intensive tug-of-war between hawks and doves on a foreign policy issue this city has seen since the Vietnam era.

Reagan has been relentless in his pursuit of congressional approval of $100 million in aid, including $70 million in military assistance, to the Nicaraguan resistance. Not a day has gone by for the past two weeks without a public statement by Reagan in defense of his proposal.

His critics have not been able to dominate the media the way Reagan has. But the president so far seems unable to translate his own high degree of personal popularity into broad-based congressional support for his policy.

Both sides in the debate are bringing heavy pressure on lawmakers. "I feel caught between the rhetorical cries on either extreme of the question," Rep. Paul Henry, R-Mich., said Thursday.

Following Reagan's nationally televised speech Sunday night, Sen. James Sasser of Tennessee will deliver the Democratic response. House and Senate votes are scheduled this week.

If the proposal is not approved, the administration says, the United States might be forced to introduce American troops to stop the "red tide" from spreading to the U.S. border.

But critics, led by House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, say the administration has it backward. Approval of the request will lead inexorably to a U.S. troop commitment, they maintain.

Passions have been running high, and some Democratic opponents have angrily accused administration officials of questioning their patriotism.

The administration has unleashed White House communications director Patrick Buchanan in the campaign. He wrote 10 days ago that the Democratic Party will have to decide whether it stands with Reagan on the issue or with Nicaraguan President "Daniel Ortega and the communists."

This prompted Rep. Mike Barnes, D-Md., to complain of "red-baiting tactics." Buchanan's thesis was too much even for some Republicans. Sen. Nancy Kassebaum of Kansas said it was absurd to assume that those opposed to Reagan "want to abandon San Diego to the communists."

The administration has been doing its best to win over the swing votes. Following complaints that the resistance forces were hopelessly divided, Secretary of State George P. Shultz summoned the leaders of two rival Contra factions to his office a week ago in a fence-mending effort.

In response to complaints that he was not doing enough to pursue a diplomatic solution in Central America, Reagan dispatched Ambassador Philip Habib to the region to examine the prospects for a negotiated settlement. Habib returned Friday.

Since the start of the month, Contra leaders have been waging a high-visibility campaign on behalf of the request. Over the past week, the State Department has been releasing anti-Sandinista documents almost daily. A new document, titled "Revolution To Repression," is scheduled for release Monday.

On Wednesday, a classified CIA report on prison expansion under the Sandinistas was leaked to a reporter.

Nicaraguan facts, figures listed

Associated Press

GEOGRAPHY

Nicaragua is bordered by Honduras on the north and Costa Rica on the south. Its 57,000 square miles of territory make it about the size of Iowa. A mountain range with many volcanic peaks runs down the middle of the country. Its navigable inland waterways — most notably the large Lake Nicaragua — once made it a candidate for a canal between the Pacific Ocean and the Caribbean.

HISTORY

Nicaragua gained independence from Spain in 1821, then was briefly part of Mexico until formation of the United Provinces of Central America. It became an independent republic in 1838. U.S. Marines landed in 1910, and American troops often were present until 1933. In the 1930s, Anastasio Somaza started the family dynasty that exercised rightist rule until the Sandinista victory in July 1979 overthrew his son, also named Anastasio.

PEOPLE

Much of the country's population of 2.9 million lives in the Pacific third of the country, in a strip marked off by Lake Nicaragua and the smaller Lake Managua to the north. The nation is predominantly Roman Catholic, and the majority is of mixed Spanish and Indian origin.

ECONOMY

The economy has never rebounded from the substantial damages of the revolutionary war that brought the Sandinistas to power. The strains, from a scarcity of basic goods to a widening trade deficit, have grown increasingly visible. The cordoba currency, for example, is valued officially at 70 to the dollar. But a dollar can buy as many as 1,200 cordobas on the black market.

GOVERNMENT

The leftist Sandinista National Liberation Front, headed by a nine-member directorate, has held power here since July 1979. President Daniel Ortega, who also is one of the Sandinistas' commanders, was elected in 1984.

Reagan charges Sandinistas with murderous acts

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan charged Saturday that agents of Nicaragua's leftist government, posing as anti-communist rebels, "murder and mutilate ordinary Nicaraguans" to discredit the guerrilla forces.

Devoting his weekly radio address to Nicaragua for the second straight week, the president said Congress must resume military aid to the rebels because "negotiations with the Nicaraguan communists have failed again and again."

Rep. Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., delivering the Democratic response, said the Reagan administration has paid only "lip service" to efforts by Latin American nations to negotiate a settlement.

"Incredibly, we may be walking into the quicksand with our eyes wide open," said Foley, the House majority whip.

Reagan is delivering a televised address tonight to marshal support for his plan to provide $70 million in military aid and $30 million in medical and logistical supplies to the Contra rebels.

The House, controlled by Democrats, is scheduled to vote Thursday on the president's plan. Military aid was barred by Congress last year.

Reagan said new intelligence shows that Tomas Borge, the Nicaraguan interior minister, "is engaging in a brutal campaign to bring the freedom fighters into discredit."

"You see, Borge's communist operatives dress in freedom fighters' uniforms, go into the countryside, then murder and mutilate ordinary Nicaraguans," he said.

"This, then, is why I am asking the Congress to provide the Nicaraguan freedom fighters, not only with much needed humanitarian aid, but with military supplies. They must be given the means to fight back."

Miriam Hooker, press officer at the Nicaraguan Embassy, when asked to comment on the president's charge, responded, "The only thing we can say is that is absolutely false."

Reagan said he has appointed three special envoys to Central America in the past three years who have made made almost 50 trips to the region, "eager to engage in a serious dialogue." There have been 10 "high-level meetings with representatives of the Nicaraguan communists," he said.

"Each time, we left empty-handed," said the president, adding that the current envoy, Philip Habib, returned from a 49th trip on Friday, and "we have yet to see any concrete results."

After the radio address, Reagan had a 10-minute telephone conversation from Camp David with Habib. Denny Brisley, assistant White House press secretary, said, "Mr. Habib indicated his trip would be extremely helpful as we move forward with our Central American policy."

"The communists might meet their opponents at the table, but only when they fear meeting them in the field," the president said.

Reagan said other nations have also "attempted to engage the Sandinistas in good faith negotiation," but without result. He said Nicaragua had taken part in talks sponsored by the Contadora nations — Mexico, Panama, Colombia and Venezuela — "only to balk any time agreement seems near."

Wednesday, however, Nicaragua and Costa Rica signed an accord, after 12 hours of Contadora-sponsored talks, to establish a commission to police their 210-mile border, with the primary aim of halting border raids by the Contras. The agreement is subject to approval by the Costa Rican national assembly and the working out of financial arrangements.

Foley said the Reagan administration has failed to support the efforts of the four nations called the Contadora group to seek a regional settlement.

"The administration has been paying only lip service to the Contadora efforts and has actually either ignored or undermined them," he said.

"Rather than reject further efforts at negotiation, we believe the president of the United States is the one person who can breath new life into the process," Foley said.

Foley said the president could count on "full, bipartisan support" to prevent the establishment in Nicaragua "of Soviet or other hostile military bases" that threaten Nicaragua's neighbors or the United States, "but such a direct threat does not exist."

The president said, "recent revelations make clear (that) the communists are only tightening their grip

Anti-abortion activists target 'Senator Death' for defeat

By BRAD CAIN

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — Reviled by anti-abortion activists as "Senator Death," Bob Packwood has been targeted this year by a national anti-abortion group so intent on defeating him that it moved its headquarters to Oregon.

The staunchly pro-choice senator, a point man in stopping anti-abortion measures in Congress, doubts opponents will be able to use the emotionally charged issue to deny him a fourth term.

"I'm a living and visible symbol that you can be pro-choice and survive politically," the Oregon Republican said. "What they are banking on is if they can defeat me, it will cause other votes to change" in Congress.

That's exactly what Rick Woodrow, head of the Life Amendment Political Action Committee, had in mind when he moved the group's headquarters from suburban Washington, D.C., to the southern Oregon town of Medford.

The group — which in 1980 contributed to the demise of such Senate heavyweights as Birch Bayh of Indiana, George McGovern of South Dakota and Frank Church of Idaho — this year is concentrating all its resources on defeating Packwood.

"Our No. 1 goal is to get rid of Bob Packwood, and I will use anything moral or ethical to do it," Woodrow said.

Packwood, 53, calls himself a "national lightning rod" on the issue. As long ago as 1970 , three years before the Supreme Court legalized abortion, Packwood sponsored federal legislation to legalize abortion, earning him the eternal wrath of activists on the other side. Demonstrators regularly picket his appearances in Oregon. Recently, when Vice President George Bush appeared in Portland with Packwood, protesters chanted "Dump Senator Death."

Oregon Sen. Bob Packwood

But Packwood maintains the issue can be used against him successfully only if the race is close, a prospect that appears unlikely at this time.

"There is a small, well-intentioned group of people who will vote against you just on this issue," he said. "I don't know of any other issue that has this kind of zealous constituency."

"But most people are not single-issue voters," Packwood said.

The three-term senator also said, however, that anti-abortion groups in Oregon and around the nation have threatened to spend $1.5 million to defeat him this year.

They face a tall task.

Packwood has amassed $6.34 million in campaign money since 1961 and has $3.5 million on hand going into this year's elections, an unprecedented amount by Oregon standards.

He also has attained seniority in the Senate and prestige for Oregon as the influential chairman of the tax-writing Senate Finance Committee.

And a poll conducted for The Oregonian newspaper in Portland in December showed Packwood with a large lead over his opponent in the May 20 primary election, the Rev. Joe Lutz, a Baptist minister who equates abortion with "killing babies."

The same poll showed that Oregonians, by 61.5 percent to 32.3 percent, support allowing women to choose whether to have an abortion. However, when those surveyed were asked about state financing of abortions for poor women, 52.5 percent said they were opposed and 41.7 percent favored it.

Abortion opponents are collecting signatures to put an initiative on the November ballot that would prohibit state financing of abortions. If it makes the ballot, it could draw out voters who feel strongly on that issue.

Packwood said he wishes the long-running controversy over abortion "would go away and we would abide" by the U.S. Supreme Court's 1973 decision legalizing abortion.

Hormel strikers rip parent union's decision

AUSTIN, Minn. (AP) — Striking meatpackers maintained pickets outside Hormel's flagship plant Saturday, but ripped the international union affiliation from their placards to express anger with the parent union's decision to end support of the walkout.

"I think we'll keep on doing what we're doing to win our struggle here. It's our jobs...I think what the international did to us will bring us closer together as a union," said Duane Jendersee, a member of Local P-9 who has been a Geo. A. Hormel & Co. employee for nearly 19 years.

The international United Food and Commercial Workers union announced Friday in Washington that it was cutting off $40 weekly strike benefits for P-9 members and ordering leaders of the local to end the seven-month strike.

The local appealed the order to the international's executive board and vowed to continue the strike until it has a signed contract with Hormel.

"If the international is not willing to support its locals, then what is unionism?" Jendersee said. "People will be asking why the international sanctioned us seven months ago and now has turned its back on us."

A rank-and-file meeting was scheduled for today to discuss the UFCW action, which came one day after P-9 approved a resolution seeking to reconcile differences with the parent union and asking UFCW international officials to meet with P-9's executive board.

"There'll be the guys who want to go back and those who want to keep the strike going. We try to listen to all sides," striker Peter Heers said of today's scheduled closed meeting. "I'd probably go back in tomorrow, but I'm going to stick with the majority. I've got to live in this town and I've got to work with these people for a long time to come."

As the opinions of union members differ, so do those of townspeople in the southeastern Minnesota community of 22,000.

Many residents declined to discuss the strike with reporters, saying they didn't want to make their feelings known because the issue had split the town so badly. Most of those who would talk were cautious.

"I guess both sides lost," said Steve Persinger, who works for the local John Deere farm implement dealer. "There is no victor in this thing.

"I think everybody would agree that it has hurt the town a lot...You just learn to play the line when you have friends on both sides."

Tom Regenscheid, who teaches special education in the Austin Middle School, said teachers have been trying to stay neutral and keep strike issues out of the classroom, but that it has been difficult.

"It seems like no matter where you go, you are confronted with the situation," he said.

Manes spoke often of suicide, lawyer says

NEW YORK (AP) — Disgraced politician Donald R. Manes, concerned that he had become a burden on his family, spoke repeatedly of committing suicide in the weeks before he took his life with a kitchen knife, his lawyer said Saturday.

In fact, fear that the former Queens borough president would kill himself prompted his wife, Marlene, to call a psychiatrist Thursday night, said attorney Michael Armstrong.

The telephone conversation among Mrs. Manes, her husband and the psychiatrist about whether Manes should enter a psychiatric hospital ended when Manes plunged a 14-inch knife into his chest.

Manes' funeral was scheduled for today, at the same Queens funeral home where the seeds of his political destruction were sown almost three years ago, according to figures in the public corruption scandal.

Lawyer Michael Dowd, who co-owns a collection agency, has said he was attending a funeral at the home in May 1983 when Manes approached him and told him to begin making bribe payments to an official in the city's Parking Violations Bureau, Geoffrey Lindenauer.

Dowd went public with his story shortly after Manes attempted suicide by slashing his wrist and ankle in January. At that point, federal investigators were already becoming aware of the parking agency bribery scandal, which allegedly involved payoffs by more than one collection agency.

Among the dignitaries planning to attend the services were Gov. Mario M. Cuomo and Mayor Edward I. Koch, a longtime friend of Manes who called him a crook after Dowd's allegations were made public.

Koch called Mrs. Manes Friday to ask her permission to attend. Armstrong said Mrs. Manes did not seem upset about the request, adding, "I'm sure she had other things on her mind."

Mrs. Manes, her three children and her husband's brother and sister spent Saturday at the family home in Jamaica Estates, according to a family friend, attorney Sid Davidoff.

"I think the initial shock has worn off," Davidoff said. "They're now dealing with themselves...They seem to be a little more relaxed."

He said the family was seeing few visitors. After the funeral, the immediate family members will begin observing shiva, the traditional seven-day Jewish period of mourning.

Armstrong said he and Mrs. Manes, as well as other relatives and friends, had become increasingly worried about Manes' state of mind.

Great Peace March folds up

BARSTOW, Calif. (AP) — Members of the failed Great Peace March began folding up their tents and heading home Saturday, but about 400 hikers said they would continue under a different banner.

A new organization, Great Peace March Inc., was announced at the disintegrating campground 120 miles northeast of Los Angeles, where PRO-Peace founder David Mixner tearfully acknowledged Friday that his plan for an across-the-nation antinuclear weapons march had died.

PRO-Peace failed to raise $100,000 it said was needed by Friday to get the marchers across the Mojave Desert to Las Vegas. PRO-Peace said about 950 marchers were in the camp when it failed. California Highway Patrol officers said the number was closer to 500.

Those who decided to leave Saturday braved an icy 40 mph wind as they walked or hitchhiked along Interstate 15 to Barstow.

THE ESCAPE CLAUSE

Often buyers will make their offer to purchase subject to certain contingencies. Normally these are not major problems--such as: contingent upon an engineering inspection which can take place within a few days or a stipulation that financing can be obtained which is understandable. The one to think about is the sale contingent upon the buyer selling his present property.

Some sellers will outright reject such a contingency because they would now have two houses to worry about selling rather than one.

If you do accept such a contingent offer, it would probably be wise to have your attorney insert an escape clause. This provision allows you to continue showing your home. If you receive another offer that you want to accept, you notify the first buyer that they must remove their contingency or withdraw. Either they agree to buy your home by the specified date come what may, or else they must void the contract and drop out of the picture, allowing you to sell to your new purchaser.

A Message For the Heart, Then and Now! Dorthy D. Zachery

We come to share, and say, we care! to remember times gone bye, and we look to better days. We have shared so many happy times; our troubles were few, we pause, to say we thank the Lord for it is his love that pulls us through. We thank the Lord for friends who care and have shared our sorrows and pains. On the 22nd of March we will rejoice in song and sounds in praises of thy Jesus name. Jesus let this special time be a blessing for us all. "A Message for the Heart."

We all have our problems, times when we think no one cares. All alone in the midst of sorrows, God sends someone to share. Jesus shared his love and goodness as he lived then died upon the cross.

We share a message for the heart. Jesus loves you; He is King of Kings with everlasting reign. We will lift our eyes and heart to heaven and sing praises in his name.

Galberson Jr.

In life we set goals with high priorities, goals like abundant wealth, and of course high position. We often forget the rewarding feeling of love peace and joy received in Christ Jesus. Mankind admires material possessions and forgets to thank the Lord. Give Him Thanks!, He derserves it!

Eddie

Love, peace, and joy, are fruits of the eternal tree of rightousness.

Love is from the heart!, peace is everlasting; joy is from the soul. So love the one who first loved you; drink from the peaceful fountain of everlasting life. Let our souls rejoyce in His power and glory. Let's make a start, and we will find that through the end of time Christ is for the Heart.

Earl.

I would like to speak of a man, who always does the best he can. He speaks with wisedom straight from his heart, he speaks to me now, even though we're apart. In my memories I hear his voice, he says, "Jesus is King and reason to rejoyce."

Patty

My enemy and I came eye to eye, I stared him down and my throat went dry. I thought to myself, this foe must die! Memories of my teaching flash through my mind, an errection of emotion snapped my senses back. There is a message for the heart not with riddle of poetic rhyme its from my heart, The King is Alive, His will be done.

Sammy

love endures many tests of time and time heals many broken minds. Love is a certain amount of respect for somthing or someone. Love is a tree growing, branching, but often in peaceful seclusion stays, while love from the heart is real, eternal. One who truly loves his brother, from his heart will never ridicule his ways, but will open his heart and minds eye to his prophecies.

James

Blessed are those who can see through color. In seeing through the rainbow we see God's complexities. Our Father God only looks at Souls!

Jerry

I often think about Jesus. I try to comprehend his precious ways. I hope one day mankind and I will.

Terry

Smile! Jesus loves you.

Carlos

Deep within my soul, I know of Gods unlimited skills. He made every mountain, every star, and yes, every hill. I cannot fault the masters art, remolding one such as me. yet I find fault in me as I lift my head to praise Him high.

NASA didn't 'consciously' ignore safety

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — An astronaut who flew aboard the shuttle Columbia in January says he doesn't believe safety was consciously jeopardized for the sake of NASA's busy launch schedule.

"We were certainly pushed to the limit. But NASA did not compromise safety for the sake of the schedule, at least not consciously," astronaut George Nelson said Friday.

But a second astronaut said that Challenger nearly blew up on a 1985 flight because an O-ring seal on one of the two boosters failed and its backup nearly burned through. Failure of the seals is thought to be a likely cause of the Jan. 28 Challenger explosion that killed seven astronauts.

Don L. Lind, a scientist-astronaut on the Spacelab 3 science mission aboard Challenger last year, said Friday in Portland, Ore., that he was "disturbed" to learn after the flight that it "came the second-closest to destruction."

"We're not foolish people, we're not frightened people," Lind said. "I think we should know about the problems, and we obviously have not in the past."

"The crew did not know certain risks — we did not know the tradeoffs on the O-rings," he said. "The managers did not pass that knowledge on to the operational people, including the crew."

Sarah Keegan, a spokeswoman for NASA, said the agency "not having seen the story would not comment at this point" on Lind's remarks.

Other astronauts have made complaints similar to Lind's.

John Young, chief astronaut of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, has said safety was compromised during the shuttle Challenger's disastrous Jan. 28 launch to meet schedule demands.

In a March 4 memo, Young criticized the launching of the Challenger despite questions about booster rocket seals, whose failure may have led to the explosion of Challenger and the deaths of its seven crew members.

Young also cited safety problems dating to October 1984 and said crews on previous flights were lucky.

"Technically, John's memos are right," Nelson said, though disagreeing with his conclusions. "I think it's good that they're getting the attention they are."

Columbia's last flight had a series of delays in launch and landing.

Ships fight weather to recover rockets

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Navy and civilian ships bucked strong winds and thunderstorms Saturday in efforts to recover three large pieces of Challenger's booster rockets, more of the crew cabin and additional remains of its astronauts.

The USS Preserver returned to the search area 15 miles offshore where parts of the space shuttle's flight deck and some of the crew members' remains were recovered last week. The civilian salvage vessel Stena Workhorse moved into position to grapple and hoist to the surface heavy parts of the solid-fuel rocket boosters.

Two other ships that started out to the 361-square-mile recovery zone in the Atlantic turned back to port several hours later after encountering heavy seas, said Lt. Cmdr. Deborah Burnette, a Navy spokeswoman. Most of the flotilla of search ships had been forced into port by storms late Thursday and all day Friday.

A crucial missing piece in the investigation of the Jan. 28 shuttle explosion is the aft segment of the right booster rocket. Investigators believe its bottom seam leaked hot rocket exhaust, leading to the detonation of the large external fuel tank during liftoff.

One of the large pieces to be recovered by the Stena Workhorse, normally used as an offshore platform by the oil industry in the North Sea, was a 500-pound lower portion of a booster.

"The problem is we don't know whether it's from the right or left booster," said Burnette. "We don't know whether any of these large pieces are from the right or left SRBs, so we're going to bring them all up."

Video and still photos show that the 4-by-5-foot chunk, lying in 650 feet of water 32 miles northeast of Cape Canaveral, is torn along its bottom joint, officials said. But they have seen no evidence of fire damage.

The Stena Workhorse, which has a lifting capacity of 100 tons, also was to haul up a 6-by-18-foot piece of booster weighing 3,250 pounds and lying on its side in about 400 feet of water, plus a piece estimated to be 10 by 14 feet, the Navy spokeswoman said.

Experts: Radiation releases' effects may never be known

RICHLAND, Wash. (AP) — Experts say the health effects of massive radioactive emissions over the past 40 years at the federal Hanford nuclear reservation may never be known, because "some of the information just plain doesn't exist."

Department of Energy documents reveal that more than 1 million curies of radioactive materials may have been released from the 570-square mile reservation on the Columbia River in south-central Washington.

The documents, reviewed by The Associated Press, were compiled from environmental reports and studies released Feb. 27 by the department in response to numerous requests for information about operations.

They show numerous planned and unplanned releases of contamination into the Columbia River, and into the air, groundwater and soil in Washington, Oregon and Idaho.

Hanford opponents say the reports justify their fears about the safety of the reservation, but radiation experts say it may be impossible to determine whether health problems resulted.

Nurse held in deaths

ALBANY, Ga. (AP) — Officials of Phoebe Putney Memorial Hospital say its former patients have nothing to worry about following the arrest of a nurse on a charge of murder in the mysterious heart attack death of a patient.

Nurse Terri Rachals, 24, of Albany, was held without bond Saturday at the Dougherty County jail, charged with murdering Andrew Daniels, 73, an abdominal abscess patient, with an injection of potassium chloride on Nov. 14. She had been with the hospital six years.

Hospital officials suspected something was wrong when they noticed an abnormally high number of cardiac arrests at the hospital.

Dr. Douglas Calhoun, medical director of the intensive care unit, said Friday that eight patients in addition to Daniels suffered cardiac arrest in the hospital's intensive care unit in November, compared to the normal "three or four" such cases each month. Several patients died.

Haydon visits his home

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Artificial heart patient Murray Haydon went home for a visit Saturday and went into his house for the first time since he left in February 1985 to receive the Jarvik-7 pump, hospital officials said.

Haydon, 59, had made two other van rides, including one to his home in the Louisville suburb of St. Matthews, but had not gone inside.

"He went in for a short time after the photographers left," said Humana Hospital Audubon spokeswoman Donna Hazle.

Haydon had been confined to the hospital for nearly a year before he left the grounds in January to travel to a nearby apartment. He also took a van ride to his home in early February but did not get out because it was too cold, said Hazle.

Tainted grain linked to milk

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The use of a pesticide blamed for removal of milk products in eight states should have been banned by a federal agency that outlawed its manufacture in 1983, Sen. Dale Bumpers said Saturday.

Meanwhile, a state Health Department spokesman said the feed distributor suspected as the source of the contamination may have been using tainted grain to make feed since since November 1984.

The date had not been confirmed because of poor record keeping by the company, Valley Feeds Inc. of Van Buren, Tom Butler said at a news conference at Fort Smith.

Health officials said Friday that traces of the chemical, heptachlor, had been found in the milk of as many as 10 breast-feeding mothers but said the finding did not warrant a switch to formula.

Officials have quarantined nearly 100 dairy farms in Arkansas and Missouri where cattle had eaten feed contaminated with the pesticide, the manufacture of which was banned after scientists linked it to cancer when fed to laboratory rats. Herds in Oklahoma are being tested.

February's bad weather brings on brand new California gold rush

CHILI BAR, Calif. (AP) — California's Sierra Nevada, where the 19th-century gold rush was born, is the scene of a new scramble as hunters find the precious metal in streams and canyons where it was exposed by recent storms.

"I know a man who's been prospecting 20 years, and he says he has found more in the past two weeks than all the time before," said one prospector, a 34-year-old Indiana carpenter, who would only speak if he was not identified. "The rains have washed it all down into the streams or behind rocks or into gullies."

By tradition, gold-hunters are discreet, like this prospector who said he would take a reporter to his Amador County site "only if you wear a blindfold when we go in."

Last month, Northern California was lashed by nine days of storms that killed 13 people, injured 57, forced the evacuations of 50,000 residents and caused $320 million in damages.

But there was a nugget of good news: The soggy ground and rain-swollen rivers churned up fresh deposits of gold-rich soil and rock.

"We've had more people in here than at any time since gold was more than $800 an ounce," said Paul Bailey, owner of a hardware store 45 miles east of Sacramento that caters to gold hunters. "I normally put in one or two orders per week (for equipment), now I'm putting in one ever day." On Friday, gold sold for roughly $348 per ounce in world markets.

While few panners were seen along the major rivers, numerous ribbons or pennants were tied to tree branches, signaling the areas had been claimed.

Several prospectors said the isolated, rugged canyons and steep streams have drawn an unusually large number of gold-seekers. Their numbers are expected to increase, particularly on weekends, as the weather warms and the mountains' deep snowpack melts.

AP Laserphoto

Paul Bailey, using a sluice box and pan, demonstrates panning techniques in a stream near Placerville, Calif.

"There's probably more gold here (in the mountains) than has ever been taken out," said Jim Kain of Chili Bar, a tiny community of mobile homes, a slate mine and a restaurant. Chili Bar itself, however, has little gold, because of a dam upstream on an American River fork.

The focus of the new gold rush — "We're calling it a gold rush because that's what it is," said Camino prospector Sterling Fletcher — is the 200-mile-long western slope of the Sierra Nevada between Sonora and Downieville, a region crisscrossed by swift rivers. The towns dot north-south state Route 49, a winding, narrow highway through rustic communities like Jamestown, Angels Camp, Sutter Creek, Placerville, Pilot Hill, Auburn, Grass Valley and Nevada City.

The locals call the area "gold country."

It includes the most famous gold town of all — Coloma — where James Marshall hit pay dirt 137 years ago at John Sutter's mill on the American River. His find launched the California gold rush.

Today's prospectors have discovered gold-rich soil sticking to the roots of felled trees. Others have found the metal in rivers where roads have been washed away or mudslides have occurred.

The heavy metal weighs more than the sand or debris around it. Pouring water over the soil, known as panning, removes the silt but leaves the gold.

"Panning is really kind of an art, but you just learn to pick it up," Bailey said, as he swished water with a quick wrist action over deep black sand and twinkling yellow gold.

Pans, and sluice boxes which remove silt, abound, but veteran hunters use powerful underwater vacuums with gasoline engines that suck silt into sieves, allowing the operator to check for gold.

Eddy, a Sacramento mailman who wouldn't give his full name, has a Downieville-area claim which he dredges regularly. He said he finds 2½ to 3 ounces of gold "during a good weekend." "But it's a lot of work. You have to hike in a long way to get to the claim."

Most justices favor strict limits

An Analysis

By JAMES H. RUBIN

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court's stern approach to the rights of criminal suspects was advanced dramatically last week by a ruling that condones, at least at times, lying by police to defense lawyers.

The decision demonstrates that a solid majority of the justices favors strict limits on a 20-year-old constitutional landmark — the Miranda decision — that assured suspects the right to a lawyer and to remain silent when questioned by police.

Reagan administration officials who want the Miranda ruling curtailed or wiped out also are bound to take heart. Attorney General Edwin Meese has attacked Miranda as "an infamous decision" that most often protects the guilty.

In its 6-3 decision, the court said police may lie to a lawyer to keep the attorney away while they question a suspect and need not tell the suspect the lawyer is trying to contact him.

The ruling surprised some observers, particularly civil libertarians who said the court's law-and-order stance sanctions lawlessness by police.

But some scholars and seasoned court watchers were not surprised.

Professor Yale Kamisar of the University of Michigan law school said the court's reasoning is defensible.

He said the ruling does not frustrate "the purpose of Miranda...to protect the suspect against coerced self-incrimination." Preventing a lawyer from seeing a client is not coercion when the suspect has not asked to see an attorney, he said.

To the majority of justices as well, as long as the "magic language" of Miranda has been invoked — warnings familiar to viewers of television cop shows — the suspect's rights are protected.

Under Miranda, a suspect must first be told of his right to remain silent, to have a lawyer present and that anything he says might be used against him. Under the new ruling, if the suspect does not request a lawyer and agrees to talk, police deception used to keep his lawyer at bay is permissible.

"The constitutional right to request the presence of an attorney belongs solely to the defendant," not to his lawyer, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor said for the court.

Kamisar said that without the element of deception, the case would be an easy one to decide in favor of the police.

In other words, police would not violate a suspect's rights by truthfully telling his lawyer the suspect is being questioned and refusing to let the lawyer see him.

"I'm a great defender of Miranda and I point out it doesn't handcuff the police," Kamisar said. "This proves it."

The ruling reinstated Brian K. Burbine's murder conviction for the 1977 beating death of a woman in Providence, R.I.

A federal appeals court had suppressed Burbine's confession because police lied to a public defender who had been notified by Burbine's sister.

The lawyer was told by police that Burbine would not be questioned that evening. They then went ahead and interrogated him, concealing the attorney's effort to contact him.

Thousands of Swedes mark Palme's passing

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Tens of thousands of Swedes stood silently Saturday as Prime Minister Olof Palme's white casket was drawn through the streets from an international funeral to a quiet churchyard burial.

Soldiers in plumed helmets tapped drums muffled in black as teams of young people pulled Palme's catafalque along its route, city church bells pealed and red Social Democratic Party flags fluttered.

Before a funeral audience of royalty, world leaders and ranking envoys, Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson praised his predecessor as a "free and powerful bird, killed in full flight."

King Carl XVI Gustaf, standing over Palme's rose-covered casket, told Swedes their country had lost "a voice everyone listened to." U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar described Palme as the "quintessential man of peace."

Representatives of 120 nations gathered for the civic funeral organized by Sweden's governing Social Democratic Party, which Palme led for 17 years until he was shot Feb. 28 by an unidentified assassin while walking the streets of the capital with his wife Lisbet.

"This is the hour to say goodbye to a beloved younger brother," said former West German Chancellor Willy Brandt. Brandt, 72, was an old friend and political ally of the 59-year-old Palme.

Brandt was the last of nine speakers at the civic funeral attended by 1,500 guests. After reading his prepared text in English, he spoke to Palme's family in Norwegian: "Your loss is our loss."

Palme's deeds, he said, using the language he learned as a refugee in Scandinavia during World War II, "will prove stronger than violence."

They were followed by 280 bearers of red Social Democratic district flags, who stood quietly on a long balcony throughout the funeral.

Three thousand Social Democratic honor guards lined the route of the funeral cortege, some bowing their heads as the casket passed in the fading light of a cold, overcast afternoon.

Hundreds of other party bannerbearers also lined the route, joining the procession as it progressed to the cemetery of the 18th-century Adolf Fredrik Church, until nearly 1,000 red party flags, each trimmed in black mourning crepe, followed the casket.

Shultz: Relations with Soviets 'disappointing'

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov agreed Saturday that U.S.-Soviet relations have taken a disappointing turn since the Geneva summit four months ago.

"We agreed neither of us is satisfied with developments since that time," Shultz said after he and Ryzhkov met for an hour and 45 minutes at the Soviet Embassy. Ryzhkov said he agreed.

The meeting ran 45 minutes longer than planned and took place after both men attended funeral services for Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme. The socialist leader was assassinated Feb. 28 on a street in downtown Stockholm.

It was the first high-level talk between the superpowers since President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev met in Geneva last November.

Shultz described the session as a "very frank exchange," diplomatic parlance for a session at which participants disagree sharply. But he said both sides agreed that Geneva set a "good basis" for the superpowers' relationship.

Ryzhkov suggested the United States had not given serious attention to Gorbachev's latest proposal for a mutual freeze on underground nuclear tests.

"What is needed now, is for the United States to consider that proposal," Ryzhkov said.

Later, Shultz met with President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia and discussed independence for South-West Africa, also called Namibia, a territory governed by South Africa. Kaunda also reiterated his opposition to U.S. aid to rebels fighting to overthrow the Marxist government in neighboring Angola.

In Moscow, the official Tass news agency reported tersely that Shultz and Ryzhkov met and "some questions about relations between the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A. were discussed, as well as a variety of international problems."

Reagan has invited Gorbachev to send technicians to monitor the next U.S. nuclear test, expected in the Nevada desert in April. But Ryzhkov brushed the invitation aside when a reporter asked him if Soviet monitors would be there.

"We had hoped General Secretary Gorbachev's proposal of March 14 would be carefully examined," he said.

While you have been diligently putting $2000 a year into your IRA, it has grown to perhaps $8000 or even $10,000.

Is it getting the attention it deserves? Or has your IRA outgrown where you have it?

Soviet Union embarks on new stage of space exploration

By KEN OLSEN

MOSCOW (AP) — With the manning of its Mir orbiting station, the Soviet Union has embarked on a new stage of space exploration and taken a step toward realizing a century-old dream of building a city in space.

Soviet scientists say the Mir will become the largest man-made complex in orbit, with a permanently manned core linking large modules outfitted as research and production laboratories.

Mir is being hailed by Soviet news media as a "new generation" of space station that by its very name — the Russian word for peace — symbolizes Moscow's peaceful intentions in space.

"This paves the way for constructing a city in space, with numerous subsidiaries of leading terrestrial research centers and plants," Radio Moscow said Saturday in a report on the inaugural mission.

It said the dream of 19th-century space scientist Konstantin Tsiolkovsky, that human settlements could be opened in the cosmos, "is coming true."

Tsiolkovsky, who died in 1935, is considered the father of Soviet cosmonautics, although much of his work was conducted before the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution that established Soviet power.

Mir, launched Feb. 20, seems intended as a showcase of Soviet technological prowess, which Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev insists is the key to reviving the nation's sluggish economy and improving the lives of its citizens.

While the United States painfully reassesses its space future after the shuttle Challenger explosion, the Soviets are forging ahead with their manned space lab program.

The Mir station is a direct descendent of the Salyut-7 space lab, launched in 1982, and Salyut-6, launched in 1977.

Cosmonauts set space endurance records aboard both stations. The longest was 237 days by Leonid Kizim, Vladimir Solovev and Oleg Atkov in 1984.

Kizim and Solovev docked with Mir on Saturday and are busy preparing it to receive its first unmanned module, which Western experts predict will be ready to launch this spring.

"This is, indeed, a new generation of space station," said one Western diplomat, insisting on anonymity. "What they are intending to do is rather than keep all the equipment for the various experiments on board (one station), the experiments will actually be performed in the modules."

Despite heavy publicity, relatively little detail has been revealed about the Mir station itself and how it will operate. The launch last month was not announced until after Mir was safely in orbit.

Mir's exact size hasn't been disclosed publicly and Western news agency requests for photographs or an artist's conception have not been met.

Konstantin Feoktistov, space technology professor and former cosmonaut, was quoted as saying Mir is "significantly more automated" that the Salyut station and has more advanced computers.

Soviet media reports say the station has six docking ports, two for manned spaceships and four to accommodate separate modules, some of which could be larger than Mir itself.

The modules can be equipped on earth as research or production labs, then sent aloft on booster rockets to join Mir.

Soviet media have said Mir is larger than Salyut-7 and has more creature comforts for the crew. But beyond mention of separate sleeping compartments and armchairs and desks in the work area, few details were provided.

The official news agency Tass said the Mir complex would permit "large-scale production" in space for the first time.

Tass said the station will have special labs for research in medicine, biology, astrophysics, remote earth probing and various other scientific and technical experiments, but their exact nature has not been disclosed.

The Soviets have reported making purer chemical compounds, metal alloys, medicines, semiconductor materials and other items in the vacuum and zero-gravity conditions of space, similar to successes American scientists reported on space shuttle missions.

Imelda's 'dreams come true' may give new government headaches

By ALEX GAW

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Huge cultural, medical and educational centers that dot Manila's landscape were dreams come true for Imelda Marcos, but they could become financial headaches for the new Philippine government.

The Parthenon-like Manila Film Center, the spacious Folk Arts Theater and a luxurious guest house built entirely of coconut products were among the pet projects of Mrs. Marcos' "edifice complex," as her critics described it.

During her 20 years as first lady of the Philippines, she also sponsored four well-equipped, specialized medical centers, a convention center and a large university that attracted almost no students.

The new government of President Corazon Aquino, whose supporters forced Ferdinand E. Marcos to resign from the presidency Feb. 25 and flee the country, is apparently reassessing the status of the large projects, frequently criticized as money-losers.

The cultural palaces were built on land reclaimed from Manila Bay over a 12-year span starting in 1969, when Mrs. Marcos, later appointed governor of metropolitan Manila by her husband, set about transforming the city skyline.

Ronald Reagan, then governor of California, and his wife, Nancy, attended the dedication of the Cultural Center of the Philippines, one of Mrs. Marcos' first projects. The 1969 visit formed the basis for a long friendship between the Marcoses and Reagans.

Other buildings followed in quick succession: the Folk Arts Theater, where the 1974 Miss Universe beauty pageant was held, and the Philippine International Convention Center, site of a 1977 International Monetary Fund meeting.

The little-used University of Life offers mainly vocational classes for adults such as running a small store, basket-making and handicrafts, rather than a standard post-secondary education.

Its air-conditioned arena hosts professional basketball games and a German-language school rents classrooms, but the center's future is otherwise uncertain.

The "coconut palace" was built for Pope John Paul II when he visited in 1981, but the pontiff stayed instead at the residence of the Vatican's ambassador to the Philippines.

Observers said at the time that Filipino bishops did not want the pope to appear to be endorsing Marcos's rule.

Cardinal Jaime L. Sin, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Manila, stopped Mrs. Marcos from building a giant basilica to the Christ child on a hillside outside Manila, saying the project was too extravagant.

Critics condemned Mrs. Marcos' projects as lavish and not relevant to the economic development of a Third World nation.

But Mrs. Marcos shrugged off such attacks, saying she was erecting a "sanctuary for the Filipino soul." She ordered that cheap seats always be available for Filipinos, sometimes costing as little as 25 cents.

Isagani Cruz, a literary critic appointed by the new government to run the Cultural Center, said the government erred by building art centers and luxury theaters at a time when many Filipinos suffered from hunger, poor health care and inadequate education.

Rebels had plans to kill Colombian president

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — The leftist guerrilla April 19 Movement had recent plans to kill President Belisario Betancur, a newspaper on Saturday quoted a rebel leader as saying.

The movement, known as M-19, also planned to kill the defense minister and the chief of the national police, the daily El Tiempo quoted a guerrilla leader as saying in a telephone call to the newspaper.

WORLD in brief

Homemade bombs explode in two Panama City stores

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Homemade bombs exploded Saturday in two department stores, a restaurant and a government office, and two other devices were found and deactivated, police reported.

They said the only casualty was a cleaning woman, Marina Sacharek, who had an arm shattered when a bomb went off on the second floor of the El Machetazo department store.

No group asserted responsibility for the bombings, which came on the sixth day of a strike by the 70,000-member National Council of Organized Workers. The union is opposed to economic measures sought by the government to help refinance its foreign debt.

Friday night, one young man suffered fatal injuries as bands of rioters rampaged through Panama City, smashing windows and and setting six vehicles on fire. An official at the St. Thomas Hospital identified the victim as Barrantes Mendez, 22, but declined to say what caused his death.

Police said some arrests were made, but would not say how many. A sergeant with the military security service said no National Council members were among those arrested. The sergeant spoke with the condition that he not be identified by name.

Thousands support Duarte

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Tens of thousands of people marched through downtown San Salvador Saturday to show their support for President Jose Napoleon Duarte's economic measures.

Many carried signs saying "Move Ahead Today Or Never," and "For Peace." The throngs filled the downtown area and reporters estimated as many as 60,000 people joined in the rally organized by Duarte's Christian Democratic Party and the government.

Duarte, observing the march along with U.S. Ambassador Edwin Corr, said, "The left and the right together got less than 10,000 people." He referred to a demonstration held last month by both left- and right-wing groups opposed to the economic austerity plan.

Organizers of that protest march had said about 50,000 people participated.

Duarte announced in January his measures to bolster the economy, ravaged by the 6½-year-old war by leftist guerrillas against the U.S.-backed government. An estimated 60,000 people have been killed in the war, with most of the victims civilians.

Ecuadoran general jailed

QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — A rebel general who took over an air base with hundreds of supporters was killed at an isolated army post and calm returned to Ecuador Saturday after a week of tension and turmoil.

Gen. Frank Vargas, who had been fired as air force commander and chief of the Joint Armed Forces, was captured Friday night after he was found hiding in a military commissary at Quito's Mariscal Sucre air base.

Vargas was found about six hours after 2,000 army soldiers, backed by tanks, smashed their way onto the base and retook it in a battle that left four dead and 11 wounded.

Black mourners hail ANC

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Tens of thousands of mourners hailed the outlawed African National Congress with songs and banners Saturday, turning four funerals of slain blacks into the boldest display yet of support for the guerrilla movement.

Elsewhere, officials said rioting at a strike-bound gold mine killed six black miners and a black security guard and injured 176 miners.

Coffins at three funerals Saturday were draped in the green, gold and black flag of the ANC and police bans on political speeches were defied.

From Staff and Wire Reports

After a brief return to cooler temperatures, Midlanders can again look forward to sunny skies and warm days, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Today will be sunny and warm with highs near 80 degrees and winds out of the south at 10 to 20 mph.

Tonight will be fair and warm with lows near 50 degrees. Monday calls for mostly sunny skies and windy weather with highs near 80 degrees.

The warmest temperature recorded for today's date was 88 degrees set in 1974. A low of 23 degrees was recorded in 1947.

STATE

Thunderstorms producing hail and high winds were reported Saturday over north central and northeast Texas, southeastern Oklahoma, southwest Arkansas and northwest Louisiana, prompting the National Weather Service to issue severe thunderstorm watches.

An 80-mile-wide band of storms stretched from Lake O' the Pines in northeast Texas into southeast Oklahoma, was spotted about 5 p.m., and the band moved northeast about 25 mph. A narrower band of storms was reported east of the first one.

Hail marble-sized hail and larger, along with high winds were reported near Paris and Hughes Springs. The National Weather Service reported baseball-sized hail in the northwest corner of Louisiana, between Vivian and Plain Dealing.

NATION

A strong Pacific storm system spread rain and gusty wind from northern and central California to southwestern Oregon on Saturday, while a second storm spread rain over the southern Plains and snow in the north.

Heavy snow fell over the Sierra Nevada, with up to 2 feet expected, and snow and strong wind cut visibility to near zero at times over the passes. Blue Canyon, Calif., got 6 inches of snow in 6 hours.

A winter storm warning was posted into Sunday for much of the Sierra Nevada range of California and the Lake Tahoe area, and a winter storm watch was issued for the Sierra Nevada south of Kings Canyon Park.

In Southern California, a winter storm warning for heavy snow and high wind was issued into Sunday for the Owens Valley, with a winter storm watch for the mountains.

Casa helps people with tax returns, GEDs

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Casa de Amigos serves to "help people with what is necessary in their lives and to help them help themselves," said Judy Morris, the agency's education director.

And fitting into those goals of the 22-year-old outreach organization are such services as income-tax assistance; general equivalency diploma (GED) schooling and testing; seminars on starting businesses, health and nutrition, arts and crafts; recreation for senior citizens; meals; medical and clothing assistance; English as a second language and conversational Spanish.

"This is the first time I ever came to them (Casa de Amigos) for help for income tax," said 28-year-old Abel Natividad, who sought out help in preparing his 1985 federal income-tax return. "They helped us out real good," he said. "They're doing exceptional work out here."

"I learned something about the income tax that I didn't know before," Natividad said.

Volunteers such as Luis Marruffo, a self-employed welder; Dr. Norman Gould, an optometrist, and Dan Teed, a certified public accountant, help Casa de Amigos (House of Friends) participants with their income-tax returns.

"It's a lot of fun," said Marruffo, 34. "It gives you a sense of helping out people. It's a good feeling. You're helping someone. And it helps me out. I learn, too."

Aside from getting some training from the U.S. Internal Revenue Service, Marruffo said he has had "some experience filling out income-tax papers and bookkeeping" in his own business.

Through the services of Midland College, Casa de Amigos offers night school for those who wish to finish their high-school education and to earn a diploma through GED.

"We prepare them to take the GED test," said Thomas Coxey, instructor. "They go at their own speed. I get some students who get the GED in three months, and some take two years. We try to keep it a nice, relaxed atmosphere."

Students in the free classes range in age from 17 to 64. They study writing, social studies, science, reading and mathematics.

"It (the GED) is the equivalent of a high-school diploma," Coxey said. "They (GED holders) can be accepted in college or to a job that requires a high-school diploma. It's the same."

Coxey, 34, taught English as a second language for four years in Mexico. Coxey, who is fluent in English, Spanish and French, taught Mexican and French students in Chihuahua City.

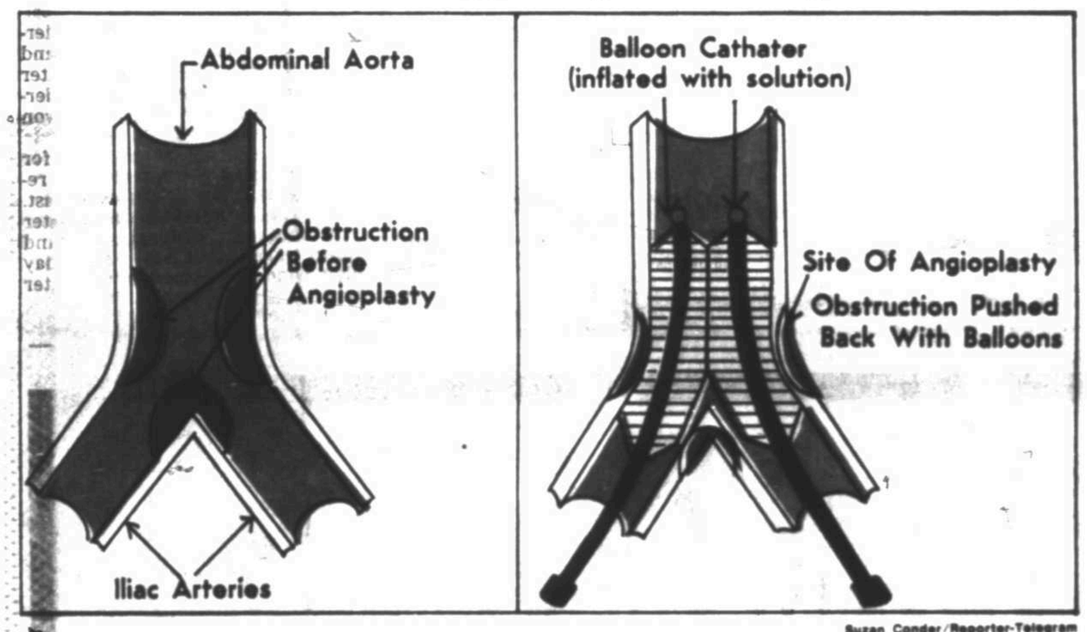
Balloon angioplasty simplifies cardiac treatment



Suzan Conder/Reporter-Telegram

The first balloon angioplasty performed in Midland by Dr. P.V. Patel, was an uncommon procedure called the "kissing balloon technique," which used two balloons.

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Balloon angioplasty, at first glance, appears so simple that it's easy to forget it's a state-of-the-art medical procedure gaining acceptance among heart specialists.

One of those specialists, Dr. Piyush V. Patel, a Midland cardiologist, believes the procedure will both simplify and reduce the cost of certain heart-related medical problems for patients.

He should know.

This week, Patel performed the first angioplasty on a local resident at Physicians and Surgeons Hospital's $1 million catheterization laboratory.

Balloon angioplasty — which involves threading a plastic tube through the patient's artery and then inflating a small, plastic "balloon" with warm, saline solution — works in much the same way as Roto-Rooter — it clears clogged arteries.

Through minute punctures in the patient's groin area, Patel guided the thin tubing into the main abdominal artery. Once in place, the balloon located at the tip of the tubing, was carefully inflated by shooting a solution made of saline and Renografin (a special dye which makes the procedure more visible on a television monitor) into the tube.

Patel used a small, hand-held, plastic "gun" to administer the solution. With a plunger-like handle, he was able to completely deflate the balloon before inserting the tube into the patient's body. By pulling back on the handle, he was able to create a vacuum which made the balloon flush with the tubing.

By very slowly pushing in on the handle, the solution, located in a special reservoir, was fed into the tube, thus inflating the balloon.

Once inflated, pressure from the balloon "pushed" plaque (a substance that builds up in the arteries, usually caused by too much cholesterol in the diet) back into the walls of the arteries, clearing the path for blood flow from the heart to the rest of the body.

While the angioplasty was Patel's first at the new cath lab, the procedure was unique in another aspect. It involved using two balloons at one time.

"Not too many people have been doing this particular procedure," said Patel. "It's rather unusual because you have to insert two catheter tubes at the same time. It's called the 'kissing balloon' technique."

Although Patel has done more than 70 diagnostic procedures at the cath lab which also involved inserting tubes into the arteries, the double balloon angioplasty was the first therapeutic undertaking.

"The patient was a woman in her 40's who was having difficulty walking," said Patel. "She had pain in both her legs, due to an occlusion (blockage) in the abdominal aorta."

Patel said the blockages were located at a point where two arteries fed into the aorta (a major artery leading from the heart.) The two arteries, called iliac arteries, supply blood to the legs.

"Currently, we're only doing angioplasties of the extremities (arms and legs)," said Patel. "We cannot do

Minor doesn't think lawsuit will affect election

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Voters in the April 5 elections in Odessa will find the names of 30 persons seeking 10 positions on the city council, the Ector County Independent School District and Odessa College boards of trustees.

Six candidates, including incumbent John Minor, are asking voters to give them a chance to serve as Odessa's mayor for the next two years.

The 34-year-old Minor, whose first term has been marked by several controversies, including a lawsuit he has pending against the city and council members, says he doesn't "anticipate any problems at all" because of the controversies. He said he has "taken a very strong stand on the issues," and plans a clean race.

Noting that the Odessa area is facing difficult times, Minor said, "I grew up, careerwise, in this city organization and I know it better than any other elected official by far.

"I've already demonstrated to the public that my major concerns are our economy and what we're going to do on the long term," said the incumbent mayor. But, as Minor sees it, the short term economic problems facing the area are the ones that must be immediately addressed.

He said assisting existing businesses expand sales of goods and services in international markets, would help local industries stabilize their operations and make them less susceptible to the cyclical nature of the petroleum industry.

Absentee voting to begin Monday

From Staff Reports

Absentee voting begins Monday for elections to be held Saturday, April 5, by the City of Midland, Midland College, Midland County Hospital District and Greenwood Independent School District.

Absentee voting, which will be held at the Midland County Elections Administration Office at 709 W. Washington Ave., ends at 5 p.m. April 1, said Elections Administrator Bettye Calvert.

At present, 55,141 Midland County residents are registered to vote.

The election of two trustees of the Midland Independent School District will be held on Tuesday, May 4, when the Democratic Party and Republican Party primary elections will be staged.

Stories of six Midland-Odessa writers win them awards

From Staff Reports

Four Midland-Odessa writers received awards Saturday at the 94th annual Texas Press Women's convention in Amarillo.

Meanwhile, two other Midland writers received awards including the Texas State Teachers Association's 1985 School Bell Award for excellence in journalism and one from the Texas Public Health Association.

TPW winners from District 2 were Lana Cunningham, Midland Reporter-Telegram; Linda Bond, recently with The Producers; Mary Frances Beverley, free-lance; and Skye Osborn, Odessa American.

Ms. Cunningham, assistant city editor for the Reporter-Telegram, received a first place for special articles — government or politics; second place, special articles — historical; third place, special articles — business; and honorable mentions for news reporting in daily newspaper 15,000-40,000 circulation and feature story in daily newspaper 15,000-40,000.

Ms. Osborn received the sweepstakes award, earning 14 points for her six winning entries. The point system stipulates: first place, three points; second place, two points; and third place, one point.

Ms. Bond, executive producer for her company, received a first place for feature story for non-daily newspaper 5,000 and over called "Dream Comes True with Channel Swim," first for electronic media advertising television retail called "Freeman Gallery," photography in publication other than a newspaper feature photo called "Who's Bringing Up Baby?"; second place, television public service announcement or promotion called "Clean Midland;" and honorable mention, personality profile for general or specialized circulation called "Remembering" and television production of a local news show.

Ms. Beverley received a third place for a special series titled "T&P Linked Railroad to Rest of World."

In addition, Ms. Cunningham was District 2's nominee for Communicator of Achievement. Also competing were Betty Casey of Kerrville, Helena Biasatti of Amarillo, Mary Jane Bode of San Antonio, Betty Stephenson of Gainesville and Ann McGrath of Wichita Falls. The nominees were judged on professional achievement, community involvement and involvement in Texas Press Women.

Julie Hillrichs, education writer for the Midland Reporter-Telegram, was selected to receive the TSTA School Bell Award for journalism excellence in the Outstanding News or Feature series category for her series "Drugs in the Schools."

Another award was won by Ron Gilmore, medical writer for the Reporter-Telegram from the Texas Public Health Association. A story on the dangers of smokeless tobacco took first place in the newspaper single feature category.

GARY OTT

Under normal circumstances, the sight of a small child doing something cute does not tug at my heart.

When it comes to children, I am decidedly indifferent.

I harbor no ill will toward them, of course, but, at the same time, I am rarely moved to the point that I want to go strap a big hug on them, either.

Still, I am not unreasonable on the matter. Children, like large dogs who drool a lot, certainly have their place in society. It is just that, other than in 30-minute intervals, that place should be as far away from me as possible.

That may sound harsh, but it isn't meant to be. I feel no disdain for the little darlings. As mentioned earlier, they can hang around with me anytime they want — but for 30 minutes only. After that, I demand my privacy.

I bring all of this up to make a point.

I witnessed something the other day, involving a small child, that did indeed tug at my heart. The feeling took me by surprise, as you can imagine, but there was no way to deny its presence. It was there, bigger than life.

Let me reconstruct what happened and maybe you will understand. It was really very simple, nothing out of the ordinary.

The setting was a playground at one of the local elementary schools. It was late afternoon, darkness was less than an hour away, and the only people around were an older man, probably in his late 60s, and a small child. I guessed the kid to be the old man's grandchild.

I was there because I was in the midst of a leisurely stroll through the neighborhood, something I engage in twice a year to convince myself that I really do get an adequate amount of exercise.

The two of them were playing together. As I leaned against a tree, I watched as the old man assisted his grandchild on the swing set. The kid, as all normal children do, kept insisting on going higher.

"Push me harder," he cried out repeatedly.

The old man, who was puffing on a pipe and looking content, just smiled and kept him at a modest height. Grandparents tend to err on the cautious side.

Soon the child grew bored. He wanted to move on to bigger and better things. They played catch for awhile, and even though the old man was softly tossing the baseball underhanded the kid was having a great deal of trouble catching it. He didn't strike me as a future big league shortstop. Still, his laughter could be heard clearly. It was the kind of happy sound that only small children can make.

A crispness was beginning to fill the air and the old man motioned for his grandchild to come forward. He bundled him up in an oversized coat and although the kid offered a mild protest, it was to no avail. Grandparents, as mentioned previously, tend to err on the cautious side.

Finally, as the sun began to slowly fade away, the two gathered up their things and, hand-in-hand, walked toward a brown sedan parked nearby.

The kid kept looking up and smiling at the old man. He was in the presence of his hero. And, although I couldn't see the grandfather's face, I'm reasonably certain the feeling was mutual.

Who foots bill?

An interesting paper from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce the other day made this startling observation: The approaching "liability crisis" now affecting the insurance industry someday could affect us all "from cradle to grave."

In the paper, Richard L. Lesher, president of the U.S. Chamber, noted that early February brought a strike by obstetricians in Boston who were fed up with rising malpractice insurance rates. And speaking of obstetricians, parents of newborn infants face problems in coming years attempting to get their children's vaccinations because many manufacturers, fearful of litigation because of adverse reactions to their vaccines, have merely stopped making them.

The point, of course, is simply that there is a cost to every action. Nothing is free. That seemingly never-ending list of lawsuits filed by consumers against businesses and businessmen does not merely affect a faceless villain. It is borne by every consumer in this land, and they are each hurt just as cruelly by decisions of business to no longer provide services.

The solution isn't really all that difficult to define. Certainly there will be occasions when events happen that justify legal action and even damage awards to the plaintiffs. After all, that's the purpose of our courts — to settle such differences in acceptable fashion. And, of course, there are many cases when that outcome simply is not justified. Unfortunately, in our litigation-happy society it has become more common for lawsuits to be filed and for judgements to be rendered, even by juries, that do not take into account the total impact on our society and that are not fully justified. The "let the insurance companies pay it" syndrome is now catching up with us.

What's a mere $1 million or $10 million judgement where insurance companies are concerned? Perhaps nothing, but more realistically the cost will be shown in skyrocketing insurance premiums which can't realistically be paid by consumers, cancellation of coverage or bankruptcy of the involved companies.

So the cost isn't so easy to push aside as insignificant.

What can change that trend? Voters can. They can put people into office who will take their responsibilities to society seriously and enact and enforce laws to the betterment, not the detriment of society. That's worth thinking about before the volume of lawsuits in this country topples the institution of business.

Another View:

The Marcos millions

For years Ferdinand Marcos, his wife, Imelda, their relatives and their clients plundered the Philippine economy and, on a massive scale, transferred their booty abroad. At the point at which President Corazon Aquino's government came to power, the foreign debt of the Philippines stood at about $26 billion.

How much of that is properly the debt of the Philippine state, and how much of it is the debt of the exiled Marcos and his extended family? Is there a way to distinguish between the debts the Philippine people are morally obliged to repay and those that ought to be assigned to the former president?

The answer begins with the distinction between public and private debt. Of the $26 billion, about two-thirds was loaned to public authorities or was guaranteed by them. One-third is money loaned to private companies or individuals.

Some of those borrowers are perfectly legitimate businessmen. But no one ought to be terribly surprised to learn that some of those private borrowers were shell corporations used simply to raise money and ship it out of the country.

To recover these loans to private businesses is the responsibility of the banks that made them, and no one else.

A bank that makes a bum loan in Maryland can't ask the government of the United States to make it good. Neither can banks properly ask the government of the Philippines to make good the loans that they unwisely made to spurious businesses there.

If a borrower turns out not to be a legitimate business and to have no assets in the Philippines, it's up to the banks to chase their money to its present resting places in the United States and Europe. The Philippine taxpayer has no obligation there.

The public loans are going to be harder to sort out. They clearly belong to the broad category of responsibilities that one government inherits from another, even when the earlier government was corrupt and the present one is not.

While some of the borrowed money may have been stolen, some of it built roads and sewers and other facilities that continue to serve the public. A country has to regard its undertakings as binding. That's one of the characteristics that distinguish a nation from a mere crowd of people.

But the new government has important weapons. Where the new government can prove that money was stolen, and can trace it abroad, it can go into the courts of foreign countries to recover the fugitive millions.

As it begins that process, it is entitled to the vigorous cooperation of American law-enforcement and banking authorities. The United States has promised Marcos and his party a safe refuge. It has not made any promises regarding assistance in grand larceny.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On March 16, 1802, Congress authorized the establishment of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y.

On this date:

In 1521, Portuguese navigator Ferdinand Magellan reached the Philippines, where he was killed by natives in April.

In 1751, James Madison, the fourth president of the United States, was born in Port Conway, Va.

In 1836, the Republic of Texas approved a constitution.

In 1850, Nathaniel Hawthorne's "The Scarlet Letter" was published.

In 1915, the Federal Trade Commission was organized.

In 1966, the Gemini 8 spacecraft docked with an Agena rocket while in orbit. The mission was marred when a maneuvering rocket on Gemini malfunctioned, forcing an emergency landing.

In 1968, U.S. Army soldiers in Vietnam killed at least 100 men, women and children in what became known as the My Lai massacre.

Ten years ago: President Gerald R. Ford defeated Ronald Reagan in the Illinois Republican presidential primary. Jimmy Carter easily won the Democratic preference primary. And in Great Britain, Prime Minister Harold Wilson announced his resignation.

Five years ago: The Dow Jones industrial average soared more than 17 points to close at 1,002.79, ending above 1,000 for the first time in more than two months.

One year ago: Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, was abducted by gunmen in Beirut, Lebanon. He remains one of at least six kidnapped Americans still missing.

JACK ANDERSON

Time drags on for American captive

WASHINGTON — One year ago today, a green Mercedes pulled in front of the parked car in which Associated Press correspondent Terry Anderson was sitting on a street in West Beirut. He had just been playing tennis with a friend, AP photographer Don Mell, and was talking with him through the window.

Jack Anderson

"I don't like this," Mell recalls saying, as the green car pulled up. He stepped back from Anderson's car, and said: "Get out of here."

But before either American could do anything, three men brandishing pistols jumped out of the Mercedes. They dragged Anderson out of his car and up to theirs, knocking his glasses off in the process. Anderson looked imploringly at his friend, but there was nothing Mell could have done.

It was clear that Anderson was the kidnappers' specific target. The previous day, he had told colleagues a green Mercedes tried twice to run him off the road.

Anderson (no relation of ours) was the AP's chief Mideast correspondent. The story of Anderson and his family in the year he has been held prisoner by terrorists is a particularly heart-rending one.

A respected foreign correspondent who had worked in Tokyo, South Korea and South Africa, Anderson was assigned to Beirut in late 1982. He soon won a reputation as an astute observer of Lebanese Shiite activities; he already had a solid reputation as a reporter who meticulously checked his facts.

"He had a sense of value about his work," his sister, Peggy Say of Batavia, N.Y., told us. "He honestly felt they needed him there because he felt he was unbiased."

The seemingly insoluble tragedy of Lebanon affected this compassionate reporter deeply. A close friend and fellow journalist, Robert Fisk, a veteran of a decade in Beirut, recalls the time Anderson came into the AP office to write after seeing an Arab child burned to death in some mindless act of violence. Anderson put his head down on his typewriter and wept unashamedly. Then he wrote his story.

"The only thing that happened he absolutely would not talk about was the bombing of the Marine compound," his sister said. An ex-Marine himself, Anderson "had spent a lot of time with those Marines," she explained. The devastating suicide bombing of the compound at Beirut airport killed 259 Americans in October 1983.

Anderson learned to live in the constant danger of Beirut with some degree of ease, and even humor. In 1984, he persuaded his father, Glenn, to pay him a visit. Concerned that his own apartment wasn't safe enough, Anderson checked his father into the Commodore Hotel, a reporter's hangout normally immune from attack by the competing armed factions in the city.

"Dad visited him until his hotel room was shelled by gunfire," Peggy Say recalled. "It blew out the wall in Dad's room, so he came back home." Noting that Anderson's apartment had remained unscathed during the father's visit,

Almost to the moment he was kidnapped, Anderson felt protected from deliberate acts of violence or at least assured his family that he was. He told them that the Shiite Moslem terrorists needed him to tell their story to the world, and must realize it would be counterproductive for them to harm him. Despite these assurances, Anderson took the precaution of sending his wife, Mikki, and their young daughter, Gabrielle, back to Mikki's native Japan a year before his abduction.

Anderson's captors have provided scant information about their prisoner. The family received two letters from him soon after his kidnapping, but both read as if they had been dictated by the terrorists. The release of a fellow hostage, the Rev. Benjamin Weir, last September brought the family a heartwarming report of Anderson's courage in captivity.

Weir told the family that Anderson's greatest concern seemed to be whether his newborn child was a boy or girl. It was a girl, born on June 7, not quite three months after the kidnapping. The baby's name is Teresa; the family calls her Terry.

To tell Anderson the good news, the family put together a videotape for his 38th birthday last October. His captors allowed him to see it, and in the only apparently authentic letter he sent, Anderson said he wept with happiness on seeing the film of his new daughter.

Since then, though, tragedy has stalked the Anderson family. His father, who had worked tirelessly for his release, died Feb. 15 of cancer diagnosed only five weeks earlier. The father tried desperately to live. "Right up until the end, he told me that every day he could hang on was a day he might see Terry," Peggy Say told us. At the funeral, the oldest son, Glenn Jr., had a heart attack.

GEORGE F. WILL

Fighting communism requires buying bullets

WASHINGTON — Prudent politicians are averse to answering hypothetical questions. They have problems enough with questions posed by immediate events. And in diplomacy, studied ambiguity about the future is often prudent. But there are moments, and this moment of decision on aid for Nicaragua's contras is one, when Lord Curzon's axiom is apt: Know your own mind and make sure the other guy knows it too.

George F. Will

The hypothetical question that the President and everyone voting on the issue should answer is: What if Costa Rica is next?

If Congress kills aid to the contras, it will kill the last impediment to the consolidation of Sandinista Stalinism. Suppose the Sandinistas mean what they say about waging a "revolution without borders." Suppose their military and destabilizing capabilities are aimed next at Costa Rica, which is democratic and unarmed. What then? The President and opponents of his aid proposal should be specific. Perhaps the President should propose for Costa Rica the kind of guarantee Britain gave Poland in 1939, and every congressman and senator should say whether he or she approves of such a pledge; and if not, why not.

It is one thing to vote against aid for the contras on the ground that the contras can not succeed or the Sandinistas are not as dangerous as they are cracked up to be. It is something very different to vote against the contras while also flinching from answering the question, "What if the Sandinistas are that dangerous?"

Such a pledge by the President would strengthen what the small size of his aid request subverts — a sense of seriousness. Anyone opposing both aid for the contras and the pledge to Costa Rica would stand reasonably suspected of using the idea of negotiations with taming of the Sandinistas as just a convenient excuse for flinching from hard facts.

As to the President, there is a stark disproportion between what he says and the reasons he gives for saying it. He rightly casts the issue in the language of his State of the Union reference to the "Soviet drive for domination." He rightly compares the contras to the Hungarian freedom fighters of 30 years ago. He rightly calls the overthrow of the Sandinistas, or at least an effective prophylactic measure, a vital U.S. interest, essential to hemispheric stability.

He has painted the picture in the strongest primary colors, but his request is a pale pastel: just $100 million, only $70 million of it for military aid. A request five times larger might be more successful because it would be more realistically related to the scale of the task and the President's assessment of the stakes.

This is not the first instance of a debilitating disproportion between the administration's intense characterization of an issue and a tentative commitment to action. The President says the Strategic Defense Initiative is a moral imperative and a prudential necessity. However, he is not even committed to deploying it. Indeed, his administration has made a fetish of the ABM Treaty, which must be changed if SDI is to exist.

Many critics of aid to the contras say that the President has failed to produce negotiations with the Sandinistas. There they go again, blaming America first. Can they not credit the Sandinistas' sincerity as revolutionaries?

Contra leaders, pushed into contortions by Congress, say they will have no moral right to continue if they cannot do the job in 18 months. But what is the job? The contras suggest it is to get the Sandinistas to the negotiating table. But setting such a deadline tells the Sandinistas how long they must stay away in order to win. Anyway, communist regimes have been stains on the planet for 68 years and never has one been talked down from totalitarianism to pluralism.

A sufficient reason for funding the contras is independent of a belief that they can win a military victory or compel the Sandinistas to accept diplomatic cauterization of their festering infection in Central America. The reason is bleak but serious: We should support any struggle that burdens the Soviet imperial system.

We fund the Afghan resistance although there is no realistic hope that Afghanistan will be anything other than integrated into the Soviet bloc. We do it to maintain a debilitating fever in the Soviet system. The contras can contribute to a better world by delaying the day, when Sandinista power is consolidated and the dynamic of Stalinism turns, as it eventually must, outward.

If people (democrats, ideally, but political hygiene is not the point) are willing to die shooting at appendages of the Soviet empire, it is prudent for us to buy the bullets.

RUSSELL BAKER

No place worth trip is only two hours away!

I was not among those who shouted, "Oh boy!" when President Reagan endorsed a flying machine to get people from the East Coast to Japan in two hours. There is something dull about places that are just two hours away, and I can't believe Japan will be an exception.

Russell Baker

Remember journeys you've made to places that were two hours away? They were pretty disappointing, weren't they? It is hard to explain, but there is something about being just two hours away that makes a place feel humdrum.

Yet people who love progress are forever congratulating themselves on living in an age when places that were once unreachable except by remarkable effort are now just two hours away.

I suspect President Reagan is one of these progress eccentrics. Otherwise, he surely wouldn't have used his State of the Union Address to announce support for this two-hours-to-Tokyo vehicle, which is bound to be stupendously expensive.

For the last five years he has tried to wipe out the Amtrak railroad-passenger system because, he complains, it costs the Government a lot of money. So why does he endorse an air-passenger system that would be the father and mother of Government-subsidized travel?

You can only suspect he really believes there is something wonderful about turning wonderful places like Japan into places that are only two hours away and, hence, boring.

Presidents can probably be forgiven for this. A nasty thing about being president is that you can never escape the latest technology. The president is dogged day and night by the Button Bearer with his reminder of the doomsday capability with which technology has afflicted presidents.

As for travel, it is forbidden to presidents. They are doomed always to be transported by the newest technology. The newer it is, the more tightly it seals presidents into secure containers until they can hardly be said to be traveling at all, except in the sense that canned salmon may be said to travel en route to the supermarket.

It is not too surprising then that President Reagan might welcome having Japan moved as close to him as Philadelphia. Those of us who aren't prisoners of technology are naturally less enthusiastic. Because we can travel via antique technology, we have cultivated a decent sense of how far apart various places ought to be.

England, for example, should be five or six days away; Italy, seven or eight. Regrettably, progress has made it almost impossible to get from the East Coast to either place in longer than a single, miserably sleepless night.

As a result, we are now rearing an entire generation that suffers from the suspicion that England and Italy are tiresome. You can't blame them. Any place that is only one miserable night away is bound to strike you, after the first few trips, as a place you can well do without.

If England and Italy were reduced to places just two hours away, would any American bother to go anymore? Oh sure, a few are always willing to make the two-hour trips. There are New Yorkers who go to Stonington, Conn., and Washingtonians who go to Richmond.

But they don't come back bursting with excitement and just dying to tell you all about their trips, do they? As a matter of fact, since England and Italy were moved into single-night range, people going there don't exactly come back bubbling either.

I am one of the sissified romantics who wish Europe was still about a week away. I don't go all the way with Miniver Cheevy and pine for the time when it took months to get there. I don't want to feel like Marco Polo; I just want to feel that I have traveled a little.

When a single miserably sleepless night is all it takes to reach lands you have dreamed about in childhood, you cannot feel traveled; you can only feel transported, like just another President in a can.

I have never been to Japan, But I want to go sometime, once my Japanese is good enough so I can eavesdrop on conversations and tell the waiter to take the martini back because it isn't dry enough.

The Japan I want to go to is about three weeks away. It lies a five-day train trip across the United States plus a three-day trip around San Francisco to get myself adjusted to the Pacific culture, and then a two-week trip by ocean liner westward.

I imagine I'd be a little tired of the sea by that time and ready to be absolutely delighted by Japan, the conversations on which I'd eavesdrop and the dryness of the martinis after the waiters take them back and have them repaired.

If Japan is going to become just two hours away, you can keep it. I have already spent a weekend in Gettysburg, thanks.

BILL MODISETT

Outcome in Nicaragua will affect U.S., like it or not

Bill Modisett

From this vantage point it's difficult to not look upon the world's — or the community's — happenings as static, written in concrete. After all, the main requirement of the job of an editorial writer is to analyze occurrences and to make observations with the specific intent of helping society to not make the same mistakes twice. Or repeatedly.

But I've hunted before, and I can assure you that it's a lot more difficult to hit a moving target than a stationary one. So arises the danger of accepting life as static. It doesn't exist in that way. Life isn't static. The world isn't static. The universe isn't static. Even time isn't static.

Truth as we perceive it today may have to be modified tomorrow because of additional factors learned. Everything is evolving. This is not the same world it was last year. It won't be the same world tomorrow that it is today. Ad infinitum.

How that fact affects us is simple: It's easy to fall into the syndrome of looking at life in a simplistic manner, reducing complex situations to simple explanations.

For example, the conflict now occurring in Central America. The situation appears simple: The Sandinistas are in control of the government, but are closely tied to communist forces. The Contras, the opponents of the Sandinistas, say they're fighting to free Nicaragua from communism. The United States naturally opposes communism and, thus, should support the Contras.

But to do so means waging a proxy war against communist forces. That's distasteful to even the "hawks" in the Congress and elsewhere. Blood-red is not any free people's favorite color. War is not a pleasant pasttime, in any form. But as mankind's history shows, it's going to be around for awhile longer.

Yet time marches on and as it does, the situation in Central America will evolve, undoubtedly, to another plateau. That isn't a pretty reality, but it is reality, nonetheless.

What happens in Central America, in Mexico, in Moscow is going to affect our lives whether we like it or not and even whether we choose to acknowledge that it is happening. The world is not static. It is evolving continually. We all are players on a grand stage and tomorrow, the "props" will look considerably different. Our leaders will attempt to "sell" the problem as a new one, but it isn't. The conflict will be the same.

It's for our own convenience that editorial writers attempt to reduce complex situations to simple "either-or" explanations. It gives us a feeling of being in control of "our" universe.

We aren't. As people, we have choices; that's all. And our decisions help to guide the course of our futures.

But even the future — even time — is not static.

Publicity, prosecution will end illegal dumping

Clean Midland, Inc. would like to thank the Midland Reporter-Telegram for the March 6 feature on illegal dumpsites in the city and county. Regular publicity is important in getting these sites cleaned up and in preventing their reoccurrence.

Clean Midland's primary emphasis is education. Through a number of programs, it encourages each citizen to understand that it is in his best interest to avoid littering and illegal dumping. The vast majority of people will, when the facts are properly presented, cease littering. Since this is an educational process it will take many years to complete.

Significant measurable reduction in litter has been made in Midland during the past few years, but as your photo showed, much remains to be done. Illegal dumpsites are among the most costly and difficult littering problems to correct, as city employee Jack Burns noted in the article. Unfortunately, many of the people who contribute to the problem are not influenced by any persuasive or voluntary efforts to get them to stop. For this small minority of the community, active enforcement of the existing laws and ordinances is the only solution.

Although the Midland Police Department has been active against illegal dumping, it has not publicized its efforts. These efforts have been restricted because an officer must arrest the offender and book him at the police station — a time-consuming process. Steps are now being taken, however, that will permit offenders to be ticketed in a manner very similar to that used in issuing traffic citations. This will certainly help, but the police department will always be severely limited in its ability to deal with this problem without the active support of the community. Clean Midland urges anyone who sees illegal dumping taking place to immediately call the police department which will then make every effort to catch the offender.

Illegal dumping is an even more serious problem outside the city limits. It is unfortunate that the city landfill is so far from town, but the city must comply with many stringent state and federal requirements on where, when and how landfills can be operated and it is very expensive for the city to operate the landfill. These restrictions cause inconvenience to those who must use the landfill, but those who dump in illegal sites cause much more inconvenience and expense to the vast majority of citizens who comply with the law.

Midland police officers thanked for kindness

We wish to publicly express our appreciation to the Midland Police Department for the courteous, efficient manner in which they handled a personal dilemma for us.

We were recently in Midland to attend the funeral of our good friend, J.A. Morris Jr. After the service we discovered that we had locked our keys in our Toyota. We struggled for over an hour trying to recover our keys — to no avail. We then called the Midland Police Department. In a very short time they answered our distress call at the Assembly of God Church parking lot and unlocked our door and had us on our way. The officers who assisted us were so courteous and kind. We do not know their names, but hope they will recognize themselves through this letter.

Combest condemned for voting record

I noticed Congressman Combest passed through this area the other day on the campaign trail. Hopefully, he was sitting down with folks and talking about his voting record.

Did he tell anyone about his vote on HR 2100, which was Congressman Miller's amendment to deny federal assistance to any farmer who failed to provide drinking water and sanitation facilities to his farm workers? Congressmen Gonzales, Ortiz, and de la Garza of Texas voted for it; you guessed it, Combest voted against water and toilets for the men and women (and children) working in the fields of this country.

Perhaps, if our Congressman would spend a few months this summer working ten hours a day in the fields, he would develop a keener understanding of why his colleagues voted for the amendment. It is a shame good common sense and human decency eluded Combest on this vote.

MISD too concerned with state dollars

Once again MISD has shown its total lack of concern about our children. Although this has been their attitude for years, they are simply becoming more obvious.

The two most recent incidents are directly related. At the time of the last big snow, every other school district cancelled school the night before. Not MISD. They waited until the following morning to cancel school. Although this placed a tremendous burden on working parents, MISD did not care. As usual they were far more interested in getting their state money than in the safety of our children.

The second incident involves a make-up day for the day missed. MISD has chosen March 28, Good Friday, and the last day of spring break for this purpose. It is of no concern to MISD that families may have planned trips for Easter or have other plans. Then to add insult to injury, the students will only be attending school for half a day! Once again it becomes all too obvious that their only concern is for their precious state dollars. On top of all this I understand that there are two days at the end of the year that exist for the purpose of making up missed days.

Parents, when are we going to stop allowing MISD to move our children about like pawns on a chess board for the sake of the almighty dollar?

Support for Contras will lead to violence

When will we learn our lesson in Central America? The Reagan administration is again asking Congress to support not only humanitarian aid but also military aid to the Contras who are fighting against the sovereign government of Nicaragua. Our government has a history of military intervention in Central America that stretches back to the turn of the century. Not ony has our government intervened militarily but also has supported the economic intervention of American companies in the Central American nations. I say economic "intervention" because the resultant trade has always provided American markets with cheap fruit, cheap raw materials, and cheap labor while benefitting only a small group of rich oligarchs in each nation.

What have been the results of our frequent interventions in the Central American nations? The majority of their populations have been impoverished. Most of the countries have been run by military dictatorships. The human rights of the majority have been trampled. The most recent result has been the Sandinistas' looking increasingly toward Moscow and Cuba for aid and the loss of some freedoms the Nicaraguans had from the fall of Somoza until recently.

I implore all people of conscience and faith to urge our president to seek the peace, justice, and democracy he desires through diplomacy, beneficial economic development, and the Contadora process. Support for the Contras will only lead to more violence, poverty, loss of more freedom for the common people of Nicaragua, and a further turn of the Nicaraguan government toward Moscow and Cuba.

SPEAKING OUT

Best child safety seat is one used correctly

Carol K. Kendall, a resident of Midland for the past three years, is a volunteer at Midland Memorial Hospital where she works in the Kids 'N' Cars Loan-A-Seat program. She also is a member of the National Passenger Safety Association's Consumer Product Information Committee.

By CAROL K. KENDALL

Buckled into safety seats, young children are secure, comfortable, generally better behaved and can't interfere with the driver. In a sudden stop or swerve, you don't have to worry about children being thrown and can concentrate on defensive driving. These are some of the daily positive benefits of buckling up your kids. Benefits aside, it's also a law.

Texas law requires that:

— Children under the age of 2 years must be secured in a federally approved car safety seat, used according to manufacturer's instructions, while riding in a motor vehicle.

— Children between 2 and 4 years must be secured in a federally approved car safety seat or seat belt while riding in a motor vehicle.

Not just because it's the law but because it's a good idea, infants, toddlers and young kids need to be buckled into child safety seats that meet federal crash test requirements. These seats are designed to spread crash forces safely across the child's body in an accident and to keep the child from striking the interior of the vehicle.

Infant seats always face the rear of the car and are designed for children up to 20 pounds. Facing rearward is the only safe way for an infant to ride. Convertible seats are designed for use from birth to about 43 pounds weight and about 40 inches height. The seat faces rearward in a semi-reclined position for infants and faces forward in an upright position for children who weigh at least 17 pounds and can sit up well unsupported. Toddler seats are designed for children who weigh about 30 to 60 pounds. A booster seat can be used with a vehicle lap and shoulder belt. If no lap and shoulder belt is available, the vehicle lap belt is used in conjunction with a special safety harness or shield (included with booster). It is recommended that all types of safety seats be used to their weight limits due to the additional protection and comfort provided to the child. The safest place for a child to ride in a car is in the back seat.

When shopping for a safety seat, first decide whether you need an infant, convertible, toddler, or auto booster seat and then consider:

— Will you use the seat correctly, following the instructions every time?

— Will the seat hold your child comfortably and securely?

— Is the seat's harness and/or shield easy for you to use?

— Will the seat fit in your car in the position where you want to use it and can you anchor the seat securely with the seat belt in that position?

With an older and/or used safety seat also consider:

— Many seats made before January 1981 (when federal safety standards went into effect) are safe but some are not.

— Are all straps, buckles and other items necessary for proper use of the seat included and in good repair?

— Is the seat padded and free of sharp, hard edges?

— Is the instruction booklet included?

— Many safety seats manufactured a few years ago or more require use of a tether strap. If you do not intend to anchor the tether (bolt it into the car), don't use this type seat.

— Do not use any safety seat that was involved in an auto accident, or that has a metal frame which is loose, metal bars which are abnormally twisted or bent, or a plastic shell which is brittle.

Having considered the above information and given that seat meets federal crash test requirements, the safest seat is the seat that you will use correctly every time.

Misuse of safety seats is a bigger problem than most people realize. A National Highway Traffic Safety Administration study shows that 65% of all child safety seats are incorrectly used. Most often the seat is not properly secured in the safety seat harness. Even though a seat that is not properly used can save a child's life, more lives could be saved and serious injuries avoided if all safety seats were used according to the manufacturers' instructions.

Kids 'N' Cars is a car seat rental program and information service. We rent infant seats (for up to nine months), and convertible, toddler and auto booster seats (short-term rental) for a small fee. We also keep copies of instructions for all crashworthy seats and are happy to help with any questions. For additional information, call 685-1111 and ask for the Information Desk.

Kids 'N' Cars is in need of additional volunteers. If interested, please call 685-1111 and ask for the Volunteer Director.

Approval of aid to Contras imperative for U.S. security

Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — This could be a fateful week for the future security of Central America.

The House of Representatives will vote Wednesday on the president's request for $100 million in military and economic aid for the Freedom Fighters in Nicaragua.

If that request is strongly rejected by the Democratically-controlled House, it could mean there will be little hope of congressional compromise on military aid for the Nicaraguan liberation movement.

Reagan has warned that if the Contras collapse because of lack of weapons and ammunition, it could lead to "a strategic disaster" that would endanger this country's security.

The president said this week he would "not consider" sending American troops to Nicaragua. He has, however, previously warned that if the Sandinista Marxist dictatorship consolidates its power and turns Nicaragua into another Cuban-type Soviet navy and nuclear missile base, American military intervention would eventually become highly likely.

Reagan also said this week that, having given at a critical stage hope and help to the Freedom Fighters, the United States "have a moral obligation to continue that support." I agree with him. We have not only a moral obligation to the Freedom Fighters, but an obligation to safeguard the security of our own country and continent. Can any reasonable person doubt that if we allow Soviet imperialism to control Central America and, as the president said, lap at our own border with Mexico, we will eventually have our own sons fighting in that region?

If we provide the Contras with the military aid that will enable them to resume pressure against the communist regime, it will, I am convinced, greatly improve the chances for the negotiated settlement Reagan is seeking.

In urging Congress to act "not as Republicans, nor as Democrats, but as Americans," the president quoted the late and highly respected Democratic Senator from the State of Washington, "Scoop" Jackson, as having once said: "In matters of national security, the best politics is no politics." It might turn the Congressional tide if between now and Wednesday, those of you who share my concern would call the attention of your representatives in the House to those statements of the president and Senator Jackson. Just mail them a copy of my column.

Those who want us to sacrifice the Freedom Fighters and negotiate a deal with the Sandinistas that would keep that brutal communist regime in power tend to equate supporters of aid to the Contras with reactionary, warmongering conservatism. It may, therefore, interest you to read what the editors of the leading liberal magazine in this country, the New Republic, have written on the subject in the current, March 24, issue, as follows:

"The upcoming vote in Congress on military aid to the Nicaraguan Contras is one of the most important foreign policy votes of the decade. The future of Central America hinges on its outcome.

"It takes willful blindness to imagine that some kind of paper agreement with the Sandinistas that allows them to consolidate their power will ensure stability in Central America.

"Nothing is more likely to force American military intervention than the consolidation of an aggressive, highly militarized, pro-Soviet regime in the area. The Contras want to do their own fighting. Cut them off, and the only body in the hemisphere able to restrain the Sandinistas will be the U.S. Army.

"We believe that preventing the establishment of a Leninist dictatorship in Nicaragua is a goal worthy of American support, and that those willing to fight for that cause are deserving of American assistance.

"A decision to support one side in a civil war is not one to be taken lightly. We come to it in the full realization that, whatever tragedy it brings, the liquidation of the democratic side of the Nicaraguan civil war will bring infinitely more tragedy to Nicaragua, to Central America and ultimately to the rest of the Hemisphere."

That is not Reagan speaking. That is a liberal organ that is frequently a harsh critic of his domestic policies.

The president will explain to all of us on television tonight, Sunday, why it is so important to support the Contras. As citizens who are concerned about the future of our young sons and grandsons, we have an obligation to listen to him.

Western art show to benefit Haley Library

"This significant western art event is in keeping with an expressed purpose of the Library: to promote and preserve southwestern heritage," said Robin McWilliams, administrative assistant at the Haley Library. "Another purpose is to raise funds for the acquisition of fine art and rare books for the library collections, and the show has been successful on both counts throughout its history."

Directed by Jim Clark of Scottsdale, the sale will feature 200 works by 50 of the most well-known western artists.

Among those participating in the 1986 show are J. Chester Armstrong, Wayne Baize, Dan Bodelson, James Boren, Donald Crowley, Joni Falk, Glenna Goodacre, James Kramer, Buck McCain, Dan McCaw, Vel Miller, Gary Niblett, Sandy Scott, and William Whitaker. Those attending will have the opportunity to see, and to buy, the best examples of current western painting and sculpture.

Ticket information is available by going by The Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, 1805 W. Indiana, or by calling 682-5785.

Nature Center organization to meet at Hogan

From Staff Reports

The Friends of the Midland Nature Center will meet at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the new Sibly Learning Center at Hogan Park. Three films will be shown — a short on tumbleweeds, a film on "What good is a warbler" and the second of a triad by the Chihuahua Desert Research Institute film series. There also will be discussion on the new building.

The center plans many activities during the spring including some with the Midland Independent School District. The learning center was designed to further the public's awareness of the need for soil and water conservation and as a resource center for Midland's schools. The Friends will hold seminars on bird and plant identification, how to use native plants in home landscape and give weekly tours of the trail starting beginning Wednesday at 8:30 a.m. Also offered are monthly films series.

From Staff Reports

C. Wallace Craig, candidate for the Republican nomination for Midland County Commissioner, Precinct 2, has announced his campaign committee for the 1986 elections.

Parker Humes will serve as committee chairman and Richard B. Hamm will be treasurer. Other committee members are Payton Anderson, Spencer Blocker, Manuel Carrasco, Decker Dawson, Mrs. Jack Hauke, Bernold Hanson, W.H. Martin, Mr. and Mrs. C.R. Moncrief, E.F. Motter, Byrne O'Neill, Mrs. Joni Porter, Mrs. John Redfern and Keith Somerville.

Humes said the committee "is dedicated to the re-election of Craig" because "Now, more than ever, Midland needs the experience, integrity and real leadership that Wally Craig has demonstrated in his 26 years of community service to Midland."

American Cancer Society will present new program

The American Cancer Society will present its new program "Taking Control" to Singles In Action. "Taking Control" points out the positive suggestions for a healthy lifestyle thus reducing the chance of cancer.

Singles In Action meet this Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the fellowship hall of First United Methodist Church, Main at Illinois. Following the program a fellowship will be held.

Main Street to close

Main Street between Kansas Avenue and Ohio Avenue will be closed to traffic for reconstruction beginning Monday morning. The project will last about six weeks.

Louisiana Avenue and Michigan Avenue will be open through the project most of the time. But they will be closed as necessary for short periods to allow for construction.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Chorales, rock groups to perform in concert

By H. A. TUCK

Two college musical groups are presenting concerts during the coming week. Dr. Michael Jordan and his chorales are singing on Thursday at 8 p.m. in the Allison Fine Arts auditorium. And those who like rock music should enjoy the music scheduled at 3 p.m. March 23 in the Allison Fine Arts auditorium. That's when the Commercial Music Department showcases several of its rock groups. They'll have another concert later to display some of the softer types of groups. Both concerts are free and open to the public.

Second of the four Midland College Free Enterprise Lectures is set for 7:30 p.m. Monday in the Allison auditorium. Speaker will be Lloyd Cline of Lamesa, newly-elected president of the National Cotton Council and president of the First National Bank of Lamesa. Cline's topic is "Credit, Cotton, Oil, International Trade, and Legislation." Each of the lectures lasts about 45 minutes and is followed by a question period. A reception concludes the event. The public is invited to attend all the lectures without charge. Other speakers include: March 26, Dr. Robert L. Rouse, professor of finance and economics at Texas Tech; and Robbyne (Hocker) Fuller and Manuel Carrasco, both of Midland, talking on April 7 about minority enterprise in Midland.

We hope you'll take the opportunity to view the art show currently being displayed in the McCormick Gallery of the Allison Fine Arts Building. Annette Morris of Austin is showing a selection of pencil drawings and delicate stone lithographs of subjects in Texas and Mexico. Bill Wright of Abilene has black-and-white photos from his travels in the Southwest, Mexico, and Central America. Gallery hours are from 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday, 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday. There's no charge for admission. Some of the works are for sale. This show remains at Midland College through March 26.

If you haven't had a chance to see the Home Improvement Show the past couple of days, there are still a few hours left today. The show is open from noon until 6 p.m. today at Chaparral Center. It's a show of the latest in home furnishings, remodeling suggestions, and improvement materials.

U.S. treasurer blasts three proposed coins

When the United States switched from fractional paper money to the small, 2-cent, 3-cent and 5-cent coins, the move was blasted by no less a personage than the U.S. treasurer, F.E. Skinner. In his annual report to the president in 1868, Skinner called the new coins "an almost worthless, irredeemable, poisonous and stinking copper and nickel token currency."

And don't forget to purchase your tickets for one or both of the upcoming concerts at Chap Center. Ronnie Milsap appears March 23 with special guest Reba McIntire. Their concert begins at 7:30 p.m. and tickets are $13.50 with all seats reserved. On March 24, gospel star Amy Grant returns to Midland for an 8 p.m. performance. Her tickets are $12.50 each. Both concerts have drawn heavy advance ticket sales, so don't wait until the last minute to purchase yours. And tickets go on sale at Chap Center Monday for an appearance by comedian "Gallagher." He's coming April 11.

This year's tennis teams are streaking through their competition and you should see them in action. They'll be playing both Friday and Saturday this week. Schreiner College of Kerrville comes to the MC courts at 2 p.m. Friday for both men's and women's matches. And at 9 a.m. Saturday, Midland College hosts men's and women's teams from UT-El Paso. If you don't get to watch them during these matches, you'll not see them until the women's national NJCAA Tournament is held here May 18-24. The teams play all their matches during April and May on the road.

Two faculty members are due applause for their recent honors. Dr. Pamela Howell, instructor of English, presented a paper at a recent meeting of the Philological Association of Louisiana. The paper's topic was "Communitarian Criticism: Knowledge in a New Age." And Dr. Eileen Piwetz, chairman of the Health Studies Division, has been selected for a two-year term on the Medical Advisory Committee of the Visiting Nurse Association.

UTPB will offer regular, ENCORE classes this summer

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The University of Texas of the Permian Basin will offer a complete and regular schedule of over 150 day and evening classes this summer. ENCORE and self-paced programs are available to accommodate every schedule.

There will be six sessions: Two six-week programs, two three-week programs, one nine-week session and one 12-week summer term. Tuition for one of the two six-week or three-week programs is $50 per session, with additional fees at normal cost.

The Education Department will offer over 35 classes, including "Teaching English as a Second Language," "Career Counseling," "Education of the Exceptional Child" and "School Publications."

Business majors will be able to choose from a multitude of courses. A sampling of those available are "Problems in Small Business Management." "Women and Finance," "Investments," "Federal Income Tax," "Profit Planning" and "Oil and Gas Accounting."

Other subjects being offered are "Racial and Cultural Minorities," Minerals and Rocks," "Literary Criticism," "American Parties and Politics," "White Collar Crime" and "Women in Modern America."

Of special interest to those who want to learn without the pressure of tests or grades is the ENCORE program. Shakespeare, drawing, historic preservation, American literature, music, and painting classes will be offered. In addition to regular and ENCORE classes, classes also are available on a self-paced basis. The student progresses at his or her own speed through pre-packaged modules and may take as long as necessary to complete the course.

All UTPB facilities, including recreational facilities — the pool, racquetball and tennis courts, and the gym — will be open this summer for enrolled students. The new student services subsidized child care program will continue at the Permian Mall's Stay N Play Center; applications for the program are available in the Admissions Office.

Summer schedules may be picked up on campus. Registration will be June 2 and classes begin June 3. The financial aid deadline is April 25, including graduate scholarships and many other forms of aid. For information, call the Office of Admissions and Records, MB142, or call 563-2400, extension 2210.

Black schools lose students as result of desegregation plan

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Southern and Prairie View A&M are losing black students as the state's 35 predominantly white universities scramble to recruit more minorities as part of a desegregation plan, the Houston Chronicle reported in today's editions.

Enrollments at the two historically black universities also have been affected by tripled state tuition and lessening federal aid to students, officials said.

"Many students who pursue higher education now wouldn't be going if they didn't have the black schools," said Dr. Kenneth Ashworth, Texas Higher Education Commissioner. "But maybe in another generation, it won't be necessary to have this kind of transitional school in our society."

The state's predominantly white universities are continuing to recruit more black students, said Gerald Wright, director of the Texas College and University System Coordinating Board's equal educational opportunity planning.

Wright oversees the Texas Desegregation Plan, an agreement between the state and U.S. Department of Education's office of civil rights that is designed to enhance the opportunities of minorities in the state's higher education institutions.

WHY OUR PRICES ARE THE CHEAPEST!

Bag & Save has the cheapest prices in the city because everything we do is cheap. There's an old saying that "You gotta spend money to make money." But we don't believe that. We save every penny we can, and that means lower prices for you. First of all, we rent a cheap building. It's not fancy inside or outside. It's not in a prestigious location. It's big and it's clean, and that's all. We don't give trading stamps. We don't play games. We don't have merchandise giveaways. All these things cost money and we'd have to mark up our prices to pay for them. We don't have double coupons. We don't want to mark up our prices a penny here or a penny there to pay for the second discount on a double coupon. And while we're on the subject of pennies, a grocery bag will cost you 2¢ at Bag & Save. We have plenty of free boxes you can use — all our products are shipped in boxes. But if we have to buy grocery bags, and if we "gave" them to you, we'd have to charge more on some of our prices. (How's that for cheap!) We also keep our costs down by letting you sack and carry your own groceries. We don't have to mark up our prices to cover the salaries and benefits for extra personnel, and you save money!

Witty Howard Payne president serves popcorn

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press

BROWNWOOD — When Don Newbury opened the door of his Fort Worth home one Christmas Eve, he was surprised to find a Brownwood undertaker named Groner Pitts and an animal that looked a lot like a fully grown horse.

It was a fully grown horse.

"Merry Christmas," said Pitts, handing over the beast and disappearing into the night.

Then, on a sultry summer's day, Newbury arrived home to find two tons of ice blocking his driveway and a mob of strangers clamoring for the free snowcones promised on signs around the neighborhood.

The zany undertaker had struck again.

So goes the wonderous world of Don Newbury, 48, a silver-haired educator who worked his way through Howard Payne University peddling popcorn and sports stories and who returned to Brownwood last December to head the 97-year-old Southern Baptist institution.

Among his first acts was to install a popcorn machine on his porch with a standing invitation for students and faculty to drop in "when the light's on."

Popcorn diplomacy, perhaps.

Newbury's reputation as a witty, modestly irreverent speaker and a good-natured target of Pitts' pranks reflect an offbeat sense of humor not always found among the leaders of denominational schools.

"There is too little humor in the world today," he says, adding that one of his first goals is to "humanize" the office for faculty members and a student body of 1,000.

Newbury is the 14th educator and first four-year graduate of Howard Payne to assume the presidency, and he brings an unusual perspective to the job.

"I'd seen the university as a student, a teacher, an alumnus and a board member," he smiled one recent morning as a warm winter sun brightened his office and lured hundreds of students from the red brick buildings that dominate the campus.

"Talk about going into a job with your eyes wide open."

While always wide-eyed, Newbury returns to his alma mater at a time when the eternal problem of raising money is compounded by rising costs and declining enrollment.

"It's an enormous challenge, but an exciting one," he said. "It is Howard Payne's rich heritage and its deep roots in my life that make me want to do it."

Newbury came home to a rousing welcome after five years as president of Western Texas College in Snyder and an earlier 14-year stint as director of communications for Tarrant County Junior College in Fort Worth.

"He's a unique president," says newspaper columnist George Dolan, whose humorous accounts of the Groner Pitts-Don Newbury capers have entertained readers of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram for years.

Brownwood is a town of about 20,000 some 125 miles southwest of Fort Worth.

"Newbury's got a heads and a tails to him. He's a walking contradiction," laughs Dolan.

"On one side, he's the serious, dedicated educator. On the other, he's delightful old Don, the wise-cracking after-dinner speaker."

Dolan says Newbury's got "shock value" working for him as a speaker because "nobody expects a college president to be funny."

Speaking once in Fort Worth, when the school busing issue was sharing headlines with a dispute over garbage bags, it was Newbury who quipped:

"They got it all wrong. They should bag the kids and bus the garbage."

Describing Newbury as both a delightful guy and a "perfect foil" for Pitts, Dolan said his presidential pal is known far and wide as an auto accident hurrying to happen.

"He had five wrecks in one year," he chuckled. "An ideal second car for Newbury would be a tow truck."

"It was the only way I felt I could afford to go to college," he said.

While in high school, he did sports "bits and pieces" for local radio stations KBWD and KEAN and by his sophomore year in college was even getting paid — $15 a week.

That same year, 1957, he found himself working as sports publicist at Howard Payne, sports director at KBWD and a sports writer at the daily Brownwood Bulletin.

He later found time not only to "string" regularly for newspapers in Dallas, Fort Worth, San Antonio, Austin, Abilene and elsewhere but also to serve as secretary-treasurer and publicist of the Lone Star Athletic Conference.

"It was disappointing to go to the mailbox and not find a $3 check," he says.

After graduating in 1961 with degrees in journalism, business and education, he taught two years at Howard Payne and says he made less money that first year than he had with his multitude of parttime jobs the year before.

"That's the gospel truth," he grinned.

He picked up his masters degree at the University of Texas in Austin and much later a doctorate in higher education at North Texas State.

In between, while teaching at Sul Ross College in Alpine, he met and married a journalism student and now he and wife Brenda have three daughters, Julie, 15, Jana, 12, and Janice, 10.

Dolan insists Newbury is such a dedicated sports fan that his first date with Brenda was a trip to the West Texas Relays and that he took her to the Astrodome for a baseball game on their honeymoon.

It was on daugther Julie's sixth birthday that an ice truck pulled up at the Newbury's home in Fort Worth and the driver asked Brenda:

"Where you want the ice?"

Newbury said his longtime buddy Pitts not only ordered and paid for the ice but stuck signs around the neighborhood directing people to 1516 La Sierra Road for free snowcones.

"I made snowcones with reckless abandon that evening," recalled Newbury. "Knowing that next day the ice would be gone but the signs wouldn't, I went out late that night and took the signs down."

That stunt paled beside the Christmas Eve caper when Julie was 8 and Pitts showed up in Fort Worth with the horse.

"I don't know anything about horses," Newbury wailed when Pitts appeared at his door, "and a residential area is surely no place to keep one."

"It's yours," he remembered Pitts saying as he bid him a Merry Christmas and sped off.

Julie, of course, was ecstatic.

"Groner put us in the horse business for the next five or six years," said Newbury. "I went out the next day to find a stable and a saddle and some hay and all those other horse things. We kept that wretched horse until Julie discovered boys."

Newbury indicated he'd like to retaliate but that "my pranks are minor league compared to Groner's."

"(Don Newbury's) a unique president. Newbury's got a heads and a tails to him. He's a walking contradiction. On one side, he's the serious, dedicated educator. On the other, he's delightful old Don, the wise-cracking after-dinner speaker."

nger and we have you to thank for it. Thousands of shoppers have been roud to be Odessa's newest warehouse food store. If you haven't been to acts and figures about this incredible new store, read over the rest of this ut to the store and do a little shopping. A picture may be worth a thousand Bag & Save is worth even more!

HOW BAG & SAVE WORKS!

Bag & Save works because you work too! When you sack and carry your own groceries, you help us keep our prices down. Working together, we're a pretty great team! We don't spend money on a fancy interior or a fancy location. Our store is big and clean, and that's about all you can say for it. We don't spend money on extra personnel, or stamps or games. we learned a long time ago that the less we spend, the lower our prices are. We buy our products directly from the manufacturer and we pass those savings along to you. We ship the merchandise straight to our store, to avoid warehousing expenses. We watch our pennies just like you do!

We help you by keeping our prices at rock bottom, and you help us by giving up the supermarket habit and shopping Bag & Save instead!

MARK UPS AND HOW THEY WORK!

So far we've been talking about how Bag & Save doesn't mark up prices to cover extra expenses. That's the key to the difference between Bag & Save and the supermarket. We both buy our merchandise from the same suppliers. We buy wholesale and then we sell retail. That allows us to mark up the price of our merchandise to make a profit and to cover expenses. Naturally, Bag & Save makes a profit. We couldn't stay in business if we didn't. But we rely on volume sales for our profit rather than big mark ups. When a supermarket has a huge overhead due to stamps, games, giveaways, extra help, double coupons, piped-in music and fancy store, it has to charge higher prices just to cover its expenses. We don't have a high overhead so we don't have high prices. It's as simple as that. The cheapest prices are coming to Odessa and you'll find them in the Bag & Save store!

OUR NEW FASTER, MORE ACCURATE SCANNER CHECKOUT SYSTEM!

IN A FRACTION OF A SECOND

Checkers will pass your purchases through our new product scanning system which will read the UPC Symbol, or bar code as some call it, printed on the packaging. Our in-store computer will automatically determine your item's description, size and current price, then display it visually at your checkout register while printing it on your sales receipt. It's amazing how easy & quick it all happens! What an improvement for all Bag & Save shoppers!

ACCURATE PRICES

ESPECIALLY THOSE ITEMS ON SALE

No more confusion. Mo more "price checks" because of unmarked or mismarked merchandise. Your purchases are calculated automatically, resulting in the most accurate transaction possible for you.

A DETAILED CHECKOUT

While you watch, your purchases are displayed visually with abbreviated product descriptions and their prices as each one is checked out. Your register tape will reflect this same information, so you can hold the complete store of your shopping trip in your hand. Not just a price! Taxable and non-taxable totals, refunds, coupons redemptions, tax, and food stamp transactions and cash tendered will be listed at the end of the tape along with the amount of change due you. The date, time, store and check identification complete the ticket to make this register tape the most detailed sales receipt ever!

GREATER EFFICIENCY & LOWER PRICES

The new computer-operated scanner system allows us to eliminate costly item marking. It's speed enables us to take care of more and more customers without adding additional help. And the accuracy of the system stops expensive checkout errors. This all means cheaper food prices for you, cheaper than any supermarket!

Bob Frisby of Jail Planners Inc. stands in front of the old city jail in Corsicana. Frisby moved his offices last November into the jail, which was used to house prisoners from 1908 until 1974.
AP Laserphoto

Jail planner has office, where else, but in former jail

CORSICANA (AP) — If you are in the business of planning jails, Bob Frisby figures, what better place could you have for your office than one that looks like a jail? Better yet, one that served as a jail for more than half a century.

Frisby, head of Jail Planners Inc., has his office in the 200 block of West Fifth Avenue in downtown Corsicana. When he looks out the window he looks through bars. The building is the old city jail, which often housed as many as 80 prisoners at a time in the years it was in service between 1908 and 1974.

Frisby says he had had his eye on the old jail as a place for his office ever since he began his business in Corsicana in 1978. When a travel agency moved out of the old building last year, Frisby jumped at the chance to lease it from InterFirst Bank, which owns the entire block.

Now when you enter what once was an unpleasant place for prisoners, you step in on thick carpet, are greeted with a secretary's smile and hear soothing music from a large stereo.

First door to the right just past the secretarial area is a jail cell, which was once quite similar to one Festus may have used to lock a prisoner in on television's "Gunsmoke."

Now you can find Frisby there, sitting in his big chair behind a big desk. And if anyone wants to check Frisby's record, he has a list of references the proverbial mile long, and enough letters of recommendation to fill a book. In fact, they do, because Frisby has put his letters of recommendation into book form.

In the past eight years he has planned jails in Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana which will serve as temporary homes for thousands of prisoners for many years to come.

Some of the Texas county jails conceived by Jail Planners Inc. in the last eight years include Dallam, Hutchinson, Newton, Hemphill, Moore, Donley, Denton, Gaines, Hunt, Upshur, Kaufman, Hopkins, Rains, Coryell, Bexar, Wood, Lubbock, Hartley, Dalhart and Rockwall. Frisby's group has also done planning for the city jails at Lancaster and Waxahachie.

Frisby said he also has helped plan the new Navarro County Jail to be built here later this year. He says he didn't charge for that job partly because he is concerned there might be a conflict of interest.

When county or city officials notify Frisby they need a new jail, he considers it his job to make a study to be sure the entity does not build a jail which is too large nor one which is too small.

"In the past eight years," Frisby said, "we have designed and are designing or constructing a number of detention facilities for 29 cities and counties ranging in size from 10 to 1,800 inmates. All but one are single-story, manageable with minimal manpower. Inmates are moved to visitation, recreation, religious services, sick call and the like by intercommunications systems, channeling corridors and electrically controlled doors. All the facilities meet or slightly exceed state standards and are of the no-frills variety."

After Frisby makes his study of the needs for a jail for a particular entity, then his consultant architects, John Guyer of San Antonio and Jim Wigginton of Dallas, go to work drawing specific plans of the new jail.

Before getting into the jail planning business, Frisby had more than 30 years experience in law enforcement, corrections and criminal justice management. He served in the Air Force for 25 years, finishing his military career as director of security for the Military Airlift Command at Scott Air Force in Illinois.

Frisby graduated from Baylor University with a degree in public administration, and has a master's degree in police science and administration from Washington State University.

He says he feels he is providing a service to humanity by helping to create better, more humane jails than those of years past.

The old jail where his offices are now located, he says, measures a total of only 1,800 square feet. In the small cell where his desk is, as many as 35 prisoners were sometimes kept at least overnight.

"If someone were to faint, they would not be able to hit the floor," he said.

He says there are still overcrowded jails in Texas and across the country, he said, he and hopes to have a part in relieving those situations.

Methodists will be gathering in Nairobi, Kenya

LAKE JUNALUSKA, N.C. — For the 15th time in 105 years, Christians in the Wesleyan tradition will gather from around the globe this summer to assess both the state of their movement and the needs of the world.

More than 2,500 persons from 64 member bodies of the World Methodist Council are expected to attend the late-July sessions in Nairobi, Kenya. Begun in London in 1881, the meetings have been held at five-year intervals since 1947.

The principal event will be the 15th World Methodist Conference, July 23-29, in the Kenyatta Conference Center. The Kenyatta Center, host to many international conferences, was the site in 1975 of the Fifth Assembly of the World Council of Churches.

In addition to the seven-day World Methodist Conference, Nairobi also will be the location for a half-dozen related meetings, beginning July 13. This year will mark the first major conference sponsored by the World Methodist Council to be held in the Southern hemisphere.

The conference theme, "Christ Jesus: God's Yes for the World," will be explored through a variety of addresses, sermons, Bible studies, "tent meeting" discussion groups and testimony by individuals from many parts of the world. One afternoon will be devoted to an evangelistic service in a Nairobi park, and one evening to an "African Fair" at the University of Nairobi.

Although a World Methodist Conference is not a legislative body, a number of issues are expected to be discussed. These include a call for Methodists throughout the world to "seek to discover and reaffirm the essentials" of the Christian faith, a common "social affirmation" for Christians in the Wesleyan tradition, dialogue with other Christian communions and witness in South Africa and other parts of the world.

Government says it owns movie

TEXARKANA (AP) — The identity of the owner of a movie financed by embezzled bank funds could be determined in federal court in Dallas next week.

The movie, "And They're Off," was financed by fraudulent loans from Guaranty Bond State Bank of Redwater and Bowie County State Bank in Hooks. The banks were declared insolvent and closed July 28, 1982, days after filming was finished.

The federal court is scheduled to decide a bankruptcy petition filed by Summit Films Inc., the company that made the film, which concerns Kentucky's horse racing industry.

The petition lists $5.8 million in debts and the movie as its only asset.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which paid off loans at the banks, is challenging the petition, saying the federal government — not the film company — owns the movie.

Other creditors include the Internal Revenue Service and various Kentucky businesses that sold goods and services during filming.

The FDIC said the trial should determine who owns the film, clearing the way for sale and release of the movie.

Two months after the banks closed, Henry Earl Fagan, president of the Redwater bank and principal shareholder of the Hooks bank, pleaded guilty to embezzling $4.8 million to finance the movie.

Local woman will introduce her new line of 'Share A Hug' gifts

Cathy Heck

From Staff Reports

Cathy Heck will appear in person to introduce her new line of gifts, "Share A Hug" on March 22 from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. at Pages and Prints Bookstore.

Ms. Heck, a native Midlander, grew up in a house with an entepreneurial role model, her mother, Marilyn Culp. After graduating from high school she worked on a newsletter for a bank. She drew the illustrations while another student, Jim Heck, wrote the newsletter.

She had every intention of studying accounting at college, but found she could earn a living with her art and studied art seriously instead. A few years later she married Heck.

Ms. Heck's collection has been hailed as an instant success by markets around the country.

Those characters include Hampton Hare III, Huggabunny, Bowtie, Radish and Rosie. Others in the polar bear line include Bahama Bear, Huggabaloo and Tyler Too, Hugglebeary and Magnolia.

Other products include paper goods, textiles and a book which was written as a joint effort with Joan Baskin.

From Staff Reports

An open forum for Midland's three mayoral candidates is slated for 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in the Midland College Allison Fine Arts auditorium. The program is sponsored by the Midland College Republican Club and will be moderated by economics instructor and club sponsor Chloice Shofner.

Candidates Steve Davidson, Barbara Harris and Carroll Thomas will be given a brief time to state their positions on various issues facing the city. Additional time will be provided for rebuttals and for questions from the audience.

"Since most of the Midland College students are residents of Midland and of voting age, we felt it was appropriate to invite the candidates to speak on campus about the challenges and future of our city," said club president Shafik Tejani. "We also feel it's good experience for the history and government students to meet and hear candidates express their views."

From Staff Reports

The Central YMCA is offering a new class that will emphasize the development of lean body mass through the utilization of Nautilus and universal equipment.

There will be an individual consultation determining the type of program desired. The class will monitor girth, weight, flexibility, percentage of body fat (through underwater weighing) and resting blood pressure and resting heart rate. Tests will be conducted at the beginning and end of class. The course lasts for six weeks, starting Monday and ending April 25. Classes will be held on Mondays and Wednesdays at 6:45 p.m. and Fridays at 5 p.m. The cost is $25 for members and $50 for non-members.

The Midland Metropolitan YMCA Community Services YMCA Day Care Center at 815 S. Carver is taking applications for child care for ages birth through 5 years of age. The center is open from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m., Monday through Friday. Children are served breakfast, lunch and an afternoon snack. Children, ages 4 and 5 are offered a pre-readiness program for kindergarten. For more information, call Alice Hayes, 684-8392.

Applications also are being accepted for spring YMCA Youth Softball. The program is offered to children, grades kindergarten through sixth, both boys and girls. Games are formed by neighborhood schools and all games will be played Tuesday or Thursday, 5:30 to 8:30 p.m. at either Bonham Elementary School or Alamo Junior High School. Registration fee is $15 for YMCA members and $20 for non-members. A YMCA Youth Sports T-shirt is included in the registration fee.

For more information call Margie Mangan at 694-8392. The season lasts from April 14 to May 24.

Community Services will also be holding its annual Easter Egg Hunt, March 27 at 4 p.m. The hunt is an annual tradition sponsored by the Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity and Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority. Easter eggs and prizes will be furnished.

Children ages 2 through 11 may participate. Call Alice Hayes at 684-8392.

The Alamo YMCA will offer an advanced lifesaving class beginning April 25. There is a $25 pool fee. If you are interested in lifeguarding for a summer job, sign up for the class now as there is a limited enrollment.

The Alamo also is taking registration for other swimming classes including Tadpole (ages 3 to 5), Progressive (ages 6 and up) and Parent and Tot (for parents who want to teach their children basic water skills and safety. Party rental of the Alamo indoor and outdoor pools are available. Call 694-2528 for more information.

From Staff Reports

Emilio Garcia, sectional center manager at El Paso announced that applications for employment with the U.S. Postal Service will be accepted for both existing and projected distribution clerk and letter carrier vacancies in Andrews, Big Spring, Midland and Odessa.

Those interested are urged to take the job-related tests that can lead to Postal Service employment. Applications for examination can be obtained beginning Monday and ending April 2 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. at the post offices in the above cities.

Each applicant will be notified of date, time and place of the examination and will be provided with a sample of the type questions that can be expected on the examination. No experience is required.

All applicants must be citizens of or owe allegiance to, the United States of American or must have been granted permanent resident alien status in the U.S. The general age requirement is 18 years or 16 years for high school graduates. There is no maximum age limit, however.

Post office jobs offer attractive pay levels, a good fringe benefit package and the ability to advance on merit. Starting salary for full-time employees ranges from $19,365 to $26,207 and for part-time, $9.48 to $12.90 per hour.

Clerks generally work indoors and must be able to handle sacks of mail weighing as much as 70 pounds. Carriers generally collect and deliver the mail. Some carriers are required to walk whereas others drive, depending on the particular route. Carriers must have a valid Texas State drivers license and a good driving history.

Garcia said the announcement doesn't necessarily mean there are a large amount of job openings.

"An examination of our hiring register has led us to believe many of the names on the register are people who have moved or for some reason are no longer available to take postal jobs," he said. "I do not want to give the impression that we will be hiring great numbers of people in coming months. I anticipate vacancies will occur in the next three years that will be filled by hiring people from our up-dated register."

National Cotton Council president to give lecture

From Staff Reports

Newly elected president of the National Cotton Council Lloyd Cline of Lamesa will present the second of four free enterprise lectures Monday at Midland College.

The lecture, sponsored annually by Midland College, begins at 7:30 p.m. in the Allison Fine Arts auditorium.

Cline, president of the First National Bank of Lamesa, will speak on "Credit, Cotton, Oil, International Trade, and Legislation." A question and answer period and reception will follow the address.

Cline, a Dawson County cotton farmer, was elected president of the NCC in January. The organization represents cotton producers, processors and marketers throughout the United States. Cline also serves on the U.S. Department of Agriculture's agricultural policy advisory committee for trade and is a member of the Agricultural and Small Business Committee of the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas. He is a director of the Plains Cotton Growers Inc., past president of the Texas Association of Cotton Producers, former Lamesa mayor and city councilman of Lamesa, past president of the Dawson County United Way, and past president of the Lamesa Area Chamber of Commerce.

Speaking March 26 will be Dr. Robert L. Rouse, professor of economics and finance at Texas Tech University. His topic will be "The U.S. Economy: Dollars, Deficits, and Disinflation."

The final lecture of the series is scheduled for April 7, with the topic being minority enterprise in the local area. Speakers will be Robbyne (Hocker) Fuller and Manuel Carrasco, local business owners.

Iacocca: Money troubles led to thoughts of suicide

By IRWIN FRANK
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca, riding a wave of personal popularity and corporate prosperity, says he was so troubled at one time by the deep financial problems of his near-bankrupt company that thoughts of suicide came to him.

Iacocca was not speaking lightly when he made the suicide remark at a news conference in Dallas Tuesday. It was the first time the ebullient Iacocca had ever mentioned the subject of suicide in public. A Chrysler public relations staffer in Detroit, when told of the remarks, said that he was shocked. There is no mention of such thoughts in Iacocca's best-selling autobiography.

Later, in a private conversation following the news conference, Iacocca said that while he never actually planned to kill himself, thoughts of suicide came to him late in 1980 because of Chrysler's monstrous financial problems.

The suicide remark occurred at the news conference when Iacocca talked about the need for government policies to prevent wide swings in the price of oil and farm crops to keep businessmen from going bankrupt. He deplored the lack of such policies and discussed the tragic consequences for businessmen.

He said policies are needed to help farmers, many of whom havecommitted suicide, according to newspaper reports.

Lee Iacocca

To show his empathy for businessmen in desperate financial situations, Iacocca added, "I contemplated it myself, I'm not kidding you, a couple of times, when we didn't have any money in the bank."

His remarks are contained in a tape recording of the news conference made available by the Chrysler company.

Iacocca said that Chrysler's financial problems were "oil based" — the rising price of gas and the shortages that kept Americans from buying big cars.

And he added that at the same time "safety regulations were eating us up. We were borrowing money that we didn't have to put on some questionable safety items because some bureaucrat said 'you need them, you need them next year or you stop building cars.'"

He was not questioned about the suicide remark during the news conference, but later in a private conversation, he was asked when thoughts of suicide took place.

"It was Nov. 10, 1980," Iacocca said. "I remember the day because when they (company executives) came in and said we had $1 million in cash and our payroll and supplier bills were $240 million every Friday and I had $1 million. Think of the perspective.

"So what do we do now? We muddled through that winter by selling our tank group for $350 million to tide us over.

"Those were the real dark days."

Iacocca does not have dark days now.

Indeed, to many he is a folk hero whose life story has been turned into 2.6 million copies of his book. He has won battles with major automakers and speaks out against politicians. And he sounds like a presidential candidate when discussing in blunt terms his feelings about U.S. energy policy, the national debt, trade deficits and trade policies.

He thinks that all the federal policies in those ares are wrong, but he denies he's running for president.

And the way things work, he says, the nomination will not be given to him by the Democratic party.

Iacocca was in typical form when speaking about himself or others:

"I know better than to whistle on the way to the bank because you usually get mugged when you do that."

Former Treasury Secretary Donald Regan "was the guy who invented acne economics. Whatever the problem his answer was always the same, 'Don't worry, you'll grow your way out of it.'"

Chrysler has "already made a bundle of money because of America's cheap gas policies...We're going to make a ton more. The biggest seller today by far in our line is our Fifth Avenue V-8, mainly because they're heavy and burn a lot of gas...We make a lot of money per unit."

Texas bankers and oilmen could not have planned for a drop in oil prices from $34 to $12 a barrel. "You have to be an idiot to plan that way."

"Our energy policy, what's left if it, simply stated, is stupid."

He recommends a 25 cent-a-gallon gas tax and a $10 a barrel oil import fee.

"So, what the hell, I can now take all these cheap gas profits (Chrysler makes selling big cars) and at least go to the bank with a clear conscience. At least that's what I keep telling myself."

Selleck says 'Magnum' hasn't been canceled

Tom Selleck

HONOLULU (AP) — Actor Tom Selleck says "Magnum, P.I." the 8th-ranked prime-time series, is likely to be back for another season.

"I'm not renegotiating my contract this year," Selleck said. "And as far as next season goes, there's nothing I can comment on at this point — other than to say we plan to be back."

Selleck denied a People magazine item that said he has cut back on the hours he's been putting in on the show. Selleck said the series will produce 22 episodes this season, rather than the 23 CBS had anticipated, but said that stemmed from several factors, including weather.

"It's not true, what the People article says — that I agreed to work only six months," Selleck said. "I started up on this season's shows Aug. 18, we'll be filming through April. If they had a calculator, it adds up to more than six months."

Selleck said that next year's shows could begin production as early as May or June, which wouldn't leave much time for a movie feature in between.

"I have one movie option in Australia, waiting for me," Selleck said. "The director is Lewis Gilbert, who did 'Educating Rita.' There won't be time this year, but I'm assured they're willing to wait for me till I'm available."

NEW YORK (AP) — An intruder entered the hotel suite of singer Patti LaBelle while she was performing and made off with an estimated $50,000 in cash, jewelry and other items, police said Saturday.

There were no signs of forced entry into the hotel suite, and police had no suspects, said Sgt. Bob Severin, a police spokesman.

The stolen property included about $10,000 in cash, plus an estimated $40,000 in jewelry, luggage and other items, Severin said. Credit cards were also taken.

The burglary apparently occurred early Friday night when Miss LaBelle and her entourage left for her performance at the Bluebird Theater. It was discovered when the group returned early Saturday morning, Severin said.

DALLAS (AP) — Sportscaster Howard Cosell has been accused in a lawsuit of libeling and slandering the World Boxing Council in his book, "I Never Played The Game."

The suit, filed Friday in Dallas federal court, contends that Cosell's book caused the council, one of boxing's major governing bodies, "disastrous, ruinous, ridicule and professional disrepute" by referring to it and other boxing regulators as "instruments of extortion."

Cosell, reached at his New York home, said he was unaware of the lawsuit and had no comment.

The book, published in November 1985, caused controversy even before its release because of Cosell's criticism of former ABC-TV Monday Night Football colleagues Don Meredith, Frank Gifford and O.J. Simpson.

Cosell has been an outspoken critic of boxing. In February 1985, he testified in a "shocked and disgusted" tone calling for federal regulation before a congressional hearing in Washington.

SEATTLE (AP) — The Platters, a musical group that had a string of hits in the 1950s, has sued a restaurant chain that the group says used a film clip without permission to push its seafood.

The Platters' suit, filed in federal court Thursday, seeks to forbid Skipper's Inc. and its advertising agency from using a clip from an old television show in one of the company's commercials.

The group also wants Skipper's to hand over any profits made from the commercial, which aired for three weeks last fall, and has asked for triple damages.

"Our honest reaction is surprise," said Doug Bamford, vice president of marketing for Skipper's. "Skipper's did pay normal advertising residuals through our ad agency, to agents who claimed to represent all the original Platters. We did what we thought we were supposed to do."

The company pulled the commercial after receiving a complaint from the group, Bamford said.

SOMERSET, Ky. (AP) — He once pocketed 76 consecutive pool balls before an opponent got his first shot, but what's even more remarkable is that Shannon Daulton is only 13 years old.

Shannon has been ranked as the seventh best pool player under 21 in the world.

"I play pool because I love it," he said. "I never get tired of pool. I never will." He practices two or three hours a day.

"I have to drag him out to get him to quit," said his mother, Joan Daulton.

"I have broke and run six racks of nine ball," the youngster said. "That's nine balls in a rack or 54 balls, before my opponent got a shot. In straight pool, I've made 74 balls in succession."

When he started playing pool, at age 5, he had to stand on a wooden soft-drink case to reach the table.

Shannon knows where his talent comes from. His father is recognized as one of the top pool players in the area. In fact, Shannon said, he still can't beat his dad at straight pool, though he can beat him at a variant called nine-ball.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An English student who described her vision of an era when computers eliminate office drudgery won a $10,000 writing award, beating science majors from top universities in a contest about the future.

Becky Oliver, 36, a part-time technical writer and student at California State University-Northridge, won Honeywell Corp.'s Futurist Awards Competition, beating a field of 400 contestants nationwide.

"There was one competitor from Yale and another from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology," she said. "Most of them are technologists. I am a writer."

Ms. Oliver wrote the essay, titled "Goodbye Gutenberg," as though it were a series of letters written in 2010 to a friend living in the bygone world of 1980.

"I made up this little story in my mind (and) set up a scene as if someone was living at that time," she said.

She contended that computers will overtake in significance the changes that followed Gutenberg's 15th-century invention of movable type and the mechanized printing that developed afterward.

Secretaries become obsolete and voice-operated machinery has vanquished office drudgery, her essay said.

"Just as the printing press changed the whole world, computers are also going to change people's lives by bringing information instantly to millions," she said.

The entries were judged by a panel of scientists and engineers on the basis of creativity, clarity of expression and feasibility.

She was competing against doctoral candidates," said her English professor, Anthony Arthur, who traveled with her to Minneapolis to receive the award.

"The implications are interesting. I think it shows that you don't have to pay $10,000 for an education."

Ms. Oliver, a technical writer for View Engineering in nearby Simi Valley, said she originally planned to graduate from college in the 1980s, but she dropped out, got married and went to work before returning as a student in the 1980s.

The prize money, she said, will go to pay for the rest of her education. Working with Arthur, she designed a special major for herself called technical communication.

"I need the money," she said of the prize. "Now that I've got it, my financial aid has been cut."

Permian foils Lee repeat bid

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

ODESSA — The Dixie flag, which had flown over the house that Odessa built for three consecutive years, was torn asunder at Ratliff Stadium Saturday afternoon when the final gun of the West Texas Relays sounded.

Midland Lee's Rebels, going for a fourth straight title, saw disaster strike at just about every turn of the oval. Lee head track coach Eddie Weiskid must of felt a bit like General Lee trying to save a lost cause.

The talent rich Odessa Permian Panthers scored 100 points to waltz away with the 6Ind title, but Lee suffered even more injustice when Odessa High won the 1600 relay to place second with 76 points. Lee followed with 71 and was followed by San Angelo, 68, and Midland High, 54.

Permian's girls also romped to victory, scoring 102 points while the Lee girls and El Paso Bowie tied for second at 61. This was a pure matter of numbers as Lee did the best it could with no relays to fall back on. The MHS girls finished behind Odessa High and Abilene High with 43 points.

LEE WAS the favorite in the 5A division after winning two straight meets with Permian in the field, but fate wasn't kind on this day.

The downfall started early when Lee failed to cross the finish line with the baton in the sprint relay while Permian went on to win with Odessa second and MHS third.

Then Quintus Hampton lost in the high hurdles for the second time this year, placing third behind Tascosa's George Jones and San Angelo's Charley Good. Hampton did come back later to post a 38.08 to remain unbeaten in the 300 hurdles.

"I had a bad race in the highs. I pulled something, a slight strain in my leg, but I ran a lot better in the intermediates. I still don't know if I could have beaten Jones and Good. They ran great races," said Hampton, who offered no excuses.

Mike Garza, who stayed unbeaten in the 3200 with a fine 9:51.61, lost for the first time in the 1600 to the record setting pace of El Paso's Gilbert Cantrejna, who had a 4:22.13.

Later Lee's favored 1600 relay team posted a season worst time of 3:24.34 while Odessa High posted a season best 3:20.39 and Midland High a season best 3:22.07.

Permian had the meet sewed up before the end of the day when the Panthers placed 1-3-4 in the 200.

THE MHS relay teams continue to improve almost weekly and now are within competing distance of the 4-5A teams.

"I knew it wasn't going to be a Rebel day after the sprint relay," said Weiskid, who knew that everything had to fall into place for his troops to win the title.

All was not a lost cause for the Tall City troops. MHS got a victory from Anthony Adkison with a 10.62 in the 100, giving the athlete a feeling of vindication.

"I improved over yesterday. There was no way I was going to run another 11-flat. I was looking forward to this race. I could hardly sleep Friday night thinking about it and I came out and got a great start," said Adkison, who won for the second week in a row.

"That was a good race for Anthony, considering it was against the wind. That's the best start he's ever had. Maybe that 10.3 with the wind last week was a legitimate 10.5 or better," said MHS track coach Johnny Williams.

"Lee's Brad Cooper remained unbeaten in the 400 with 49.12. "I wanted the record, but I'll take the win. The wind was tough, but I feel like I'm having a 48-second crisis. I can't get off that 49," said Cooper. MHS' Tyrone Oliver was third at 50.14.

THE LEE girls had few weapons to fight with Saturday, but made the most of what they did have for 61 points. Lee's Tami Woodberry remained unbeaten in the 100 hurdles with a season best 15.32 while Pierie Mayfield was third. Roz Eaden also won the triple jump with a career best 36-11¾.

"We made the most of what we had. A relay or two wouldn't hurt anything," said Lee girls coach Janice Busich.

Abilene muzzles Bulldogs

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Midland High found out what coach Tim Whalen already knew Saturday afternoon at Angelo Stadium. The road to the state baseball playoffs in District 4-6A is not going to be an easy one.

MHS learned its lesson the hard way, dropping a 5-3 decision to an Abilene High team that was not considered a contender this season. A team that MHS had crushed 18-6 in the Pre-District Tournament earlier this month. On the way, the Bulldogs fell from the ranks of the district's unbeaten.

The Bulldogs, now 1-1 in district action, were the victims of sophomore lefty Jeff Reese of the Eagles, 1-1, 4-6. Reese scattered seven hits in going the distance. Hard luck pitcher Ricky Castaneda, 2-2, took the loss for MHS.

"Heck no it ain't going to be easy," Whalen said, looking at the coming week when the 'Dogs travel to Odessa High and San Angelo. "This loss may be good for us, though right now I can't believe how. It might wake us up, though. It's still early, we've still got a chance."

THE BULLDOGS had their chances to get to the young Reese several times in the late innings, as well, but failed to come up with the clutch two-out hit. MHS stranded five baserunners in the final three frames.

"You can sum up a game like this by just saying we didn't perform at the plate," Whalen said. "You won't win in this league with just seven hits unless you have overpowering pitching and major league defense. We don't."

Right now, the Bulldogs don't seem to have the powerful hitting that Whalen is used to either. MHS is mired in a slump. A slump that has seen the MHS team average dip 40 points since the start of last weekend's Tournament of Champions.

Against pitching like Lubbock Monterey and Dallas Thomas Jefferson, that's understandable. But when the competition is Big Spring and an Abilene team that has been allowing more than 10 runs per game... well, you can see why Whalen is perplexed.

Duke, KU win; Spartans top Hoyas

Duke 88, Old Dominion 61

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — All-American guard Johnny Dawkins scored 25 points as top-seeded Duke broke a two-year NCAA jinx and cruised to an 88-61 victory over Old Dominion in the second round of the East Regional Saturday.

The victory raised Duke's record to 34-2 and sent them to the semifinals of the East Regional at East Rutherford, N.J. next week.

It's the first time Duke has advanced beyond the second round of NCAA tournament play in its last three trips.

In 1980, the Blue Devils lost to Purdue in the finals of the Midwest Regional. In its NCAA appearances in 1984 and 1985, the Blue Devils were first-and second-round victims of Washington and Boston College, respectively.

Duke's full-court man-to-man defense forced the Monarchs into 11 turnovers in the first half. That defense also allowed Duke to open a 17-9 lead in the first eight minutes after Dawkins scored on an alley-oop.

Alarie added 13 points, while Silas, Amaker and Ferry scored 10 apiece.

Kenny Gattison scored 17 points to lead Old Dominion, 23-6. Keith Thomas added 13 and Ronnie Wade 10.

Kansas 65, Temple 43

DAYTON, Ohio — Second-ranked Kansas broke open a tight game with a 25-4 spurt in the second half to beat Temple the Midwest Regional second second.

The Jayhawks, 33-3, advance to Kansas City to meet Michigan State in a Midwest Regional semifinal game next week.

Temple, which finished at 25-6, was led by Nate Blackwell with 14 points.

After Temple pulled within 28-24 early in the second half, Kansas ran off 25 of the next 29 points, most of them coming off its fast break, to take command at 53-28.

Manning and Kellogg each had eight points in the first half for the Jayhawks, while Tim Perry and Ed Coe topped Temple with six points apiece in the first 20 minutes.

NCAA Basketball

Michigan State 80, G-town 68

DAYTON, Ohio — Scott Skiles scored, passed and even coached his Michigan State teammates victory in the second round of the NCAA Midwest Regional.

Skiles, a senior guard, finished with 24 points, 16 in the second half as the 18th-ranked Spartans kept the No. 13 Hoyas from a chance at a third straight trip to the NCAA championship game.

The 6-foot-1 senior handed off for five assists and made 10 of 11 free throws which helped turn the tide toward the Spartans in the final 15 minutes of the game.

Michigan State Coach Jud Heathcote said, "There was no question that our director is Scott Skiles. He's been accused of being our coach. I let him take the credit, also the blame."

The Spartans, 23-7, advance to Kansas City.

Skiles, who scored 31 points and hit the deciding free throws with two seconds left in Michigan State's 73-70 first-round victory over Washington Thursday, was limited to just six points in the first half but the Spartans still led 33-30 at halftime.

Louisiana State 83, Memphis State 81

BATON ROUGE, La. — Junior guard Anthony Wilson grabbed a loose rebound and banked it home as the buzzer sounded to lift Louisiana State upset over 12th-ranked Memphis State in the second round of the NCAA Southeast Regional tournament.

Memphis State became the second team from last year's Final Four to lose Saturday as Georgetown lost earlier to Michigan State 80-68.

Down 12 points six minutes into the second half, Louisiana State converted 10 free throws in five minutes to ease back into the game.

It was Louisiana State first lead since a 25-23 advantage midway through the first half.

Redden led Louisiana State with 23 points, followed by Williams with 20 points, Derrick Taylor 18 and Ricky Blanton 11.

Baskerville Holmes paced Memphis State with 20 points, followed by William Bedford with 15, Andre Turner and Dwight Boyd with 12 apiece, and Vincent Askew with 10.

Miracles are his specialty

If Midland Christian School was looking for a miracle worker to address their Tree of Life dinner Friday night, they picked the right man in Grant Teaff.

Last season his Baylor Bears were picked to finish eighth in the AP SWC preseason forecast and seventh in another poll.

Seventh or eighth, the message was clear. Teaff's Bears would be fulfilling schedule obligations and doing their duty to season-ticket holders and reminding their fans to "wait until next year." No more.

Somewhere, somehow, they forgot to tell the Bears.

Baylor finished 9-3 with a Liberty Bowl victory over LSU spicing the season.

Actually, Teaff's miracle-making in the eyes of Baylor fans may have begun when he signed on as coach and brought the Bears their first SWC championship since 1924. And with it the Bears' first invitation to the Cotton Bowl as host team.

Since then, the Bears have been constantly regular visitors to Dallas on New Year's Day.

"If we beat Texas or Arkansas," reflects Teaff, "We are in the Cotton Bowl. And we might have, if both hadn't been road games."

TEAFF LABELs the close opening game loss to highly-regarded Georgia as "the catalyst for us. After that we went to the coast and beat USC and then beat Houston and SMU, both good teams, on the road."

The native West Texan (Snyder) is looking forward to "next year", even though the Bears lost some quality players through graduation.

Teaff labels backup quarterback as one of the areas in which the Bears need help. "Tom Muecke has graduated, but Cody Carlson, the Liberty Bowl's MVP, is back. This will be the first time in four years we won't alternate quarterbacks."

"Other areas of concern are linebacker depth. We have some good personnel athletes, but need people to play behind the starters.

ON THE plus side, Teaff is enthused about Baylor's recruiting coup, particularly his WT signees, Greg Anderson and Danny Severance of Permian and Mike Welch, the all-stater from state champion Sweetwater.

"Anderson is really a natural athlete he can play anywhere," says Teaff. "But as much as we throw the ball, he'll be at wide receiver for us."

With some weight work and added heft, Teaff envisions Severance as an outside linebacker.

Welch will fit in quickly as a back up free safety behind all-America candidate Thomas Everett.

"No, Proposition 48 (requiring incoming freshmen to achieve certain minimal grades in SAT and ACT tests) has had no effect on us. We have long gone after students who qualified academically."

As for the immediate future of the troubled SWC, Teaff sees another year of problems and turmoil. "TCU's penalty will be announced and there are supposed to be another couple of investigations. But I have a positive feeling about the future."

OVERALL, Teaff thinks what has happened is a good thing for the conference and college athletics. "The SWC has become the focal point. People want to do something about the situation. Before, it was something shoveled under the rug. Now it's being exposed."

Drugs, Teaff sees as a constant problem, in a society where drugs are prevalent. "It's something that begins in grade school and is found in colleges. We see professional athletes admitting to dependency."

The NCAA, SWC and Baylor are attacking the problem through education and Teaff says, "At Baylor, we've tested for steroids and recreational drugs for three years now.

"And next year, the players in bowl games will be tested...and that's scary. Say a player goes home for the holidays, comes down with the flu and takes a drug to combat it.

"It may be on the list of forbidden drugs and if it shows up on his test, he's out of the game."

There are all problems coaches must contend with, making the task of producing a winner that much more complex.

"Our schedule is more favorable. For one thing, we will play USC and Wyoming at home and Louisiana Tech replaces Georgia. And SMU, Houston, Texas and Arkansas will be home conference games."

Sounds so promising, Teaff may not need any miracles next fall.

NBA

Associated Press

Mavericks 108, Jazz 98

DALLAS — Rolando Blackman scored 10 of his 23 points in the fourth quarter and Derek Harper added 24 points Saturday as Dallas defeated Utah 109-98.

The Mavericks, who led by as many as 10 points early in the final period, watched the Jazz pull to within 96-91 on a layup by Karl Malone with 4:17 to play.

But a three-point play by Jay Vincent, a 10-food jump shot by Blackman and a free throw by Harper helped Dallas extend the advantage to 102-92.

Dallas, winning its second straight and seventh in nine games, also got 15 points and 16 rebounds from center James Donaldson in improving its record to 36-31.

Rockets 148, Clippers 116

HOUSTON — Akeem Olajuwon returned to the Houston lineup after a 14-game absence and had 19 points and nine rebounds.

Olajuwon, an NBA All-Star center and the Rockets' leading scorer with a 23.4 point per game average, injured his knee Feb. 15 in a game against the Clippers.

Jim Petersen had a career-high 19 points and Ralph Sampson had 18 as the Rockets increased their Midwest Division lead to 1½ games. The Clippers were led by Norm Nixon with 24 points and Benoit Benjamin with 22.

Hawks 106, Knicks 101

NEW YORK — Dominique Wilkins scored 29 points and Randy Wittman hit the go-ahead jumper with 47 seconds left as Atlanta handed New York its seventh consecutive NBA loss.

The victory was Atlanta's 12th in its last 14 games, while New York has lost 11 of 12.

The Hawks, whose seven-game winning streak was snapped Friday night by Boston, trailed by as many as nine points in the first half. But the Hawks hit 27 of 28 free throws in the first half to close the gap to 60-59 at halftime.

Rory Sparrow added 20 points for New York, and Kevin Willis followed Wilkins with 14 for Atlanta.

Pacers 105, Bullets 100

INDIANAPOLIS — Indiana led by as many as 24 points in the second quarter, but the Pacers needed three free throws from Vern Fleming and two by Clint Richardson in the final 23 seconds to hold off Washington.

Herb Williams scored 18 of his team-high 27 points to help the Pacers take a 49-25 lead midway through the second quarter. The Bullets shot only 39 percent from the field in the first half.

Jeff Malone, who finished with a game-high 30 points, then began to penetrate the Indiana defense and the Bullets rallied to trail by 14 at halftime.

Williams, who has scored 114 points in four games against Washington this year, also pulled down 12 rebounds. That gave him a total of 51 in four outings against the Bullets.

The Pacers are 4-0 against Washington this season despite a 24-45 overall record.

Bucks 125, Bulls 116

CHICAGO — Terry Cummings scored 30 points, 11 of them in overtime, as the Milwaukee Bucks downed Chicago 125-116 in an NBA game featuring the return of Michael Jordan to the Bulls' lineup.

Sidney Moncrief added 27 points as the Bucks spoiled the return of Jordan, who played for the first time since breaking a bone in his left foot Oct. 29.

Lloyd reaches finals

DALLAS (AP) — Chris Evert Lloyd set up a finals showdown with longtime foe Martina Navratilova by rolling past 18-year-old Kathy Rinaldi in straight sets 6-4, 6-2 Saturday night in the semifinals of the Virginia Slims of Dallas.

Defending champion Navratilova shook off a serving lapse in the second set to defeat Czechoslavakia's Hana Mandlikova 6-2, 5-7, 6-2 in the other semifinal of the tournament.

Lloyd lost to Navratilova here in the finals last year. Navratilova is 35-32 lifetime against Lloyd.

The 31-year-old Lloyd, who has won three tournaments this year, hasn't met Navratilova since she lost the Australian Open to her in November.

Lloyd's serve gave her some problems early against Rinaldi but the Martin Downs, Fla., teen-ager wore down against her opponent's steady baseline game.

LLoyd is now 5-0 against Rinaldi. She will be seeking her 146th title when she meets Navratilova, who had little problems of disposing of Mandlikova.

Norris wins GG title

FORT WORTH (AP) — Heavyweight Orlin Norris of Wichita Falls stopped Sherwood Robins of Houston in the first round to defend his championship Saturday night in the finals of the State Golden Gloves Tournament.

Norris was one of three defending champions to advance to the national tournament, scheduled May 5-10 in Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Also winning were flyweight John Reyes of Wichita Falls and featherweight Harry Washington of Fort Worth.

Reyes won a decision after three hard rounds against Carlos Valez of San Antonio and Washington, last year's bantamweight champion, won a decision over Teddy Randolf of Houston.

Robert Reyes, John's brother, won the bantamweight title in a rugged battle with Jay Garcia of Fort Worth. It was the first time since 1976 since two brothers won the same year. Bruce Curry and Graylin Curry of Fort Worth won in 1976.

Houston won the team title with 18 points and Wichita Falls was second with 16.

Texas sweeps SWC swimming

AUSTIN (AP) — University of Texas swimmers won every event, including a record-setting performance by freshman Brian Cisna, on their way to their 7th straight Southwest Conference title Saturday night.

Cisna easily broke the SWC and school record in the 1650 yard freestyle in 15:02.46, nearly 11 seconds faster than Longhhorn Dave Swenson's record set in 1984. Cisna set another SWC and school record earlier in the meet when he won the 500 yard freestyle.

Rogers, Longo cycle winners

DALLAS (AP) — Thurlow Rogers and Jeannie Longo were first-day winners as the Beatrice Bicycle Classic, an 11-event race in seven cities, began in Dallas Saturday with closed-road criterium races at White Rock Lake Park.

Rogers, of Van Nuys, Calif., won the men's race, a 36-mile criterium on a 1.2-mile course, with a time of 1:28:45.

The second- and third-place men finishers were Jesper Skibby of Denmark, 1:28:45; and Todd Gogulski of Santa Fe, N.M., 1:29:15.

The top three women races also finished with identical times. In second place was Katrin Tobin of Atlanta; and third was Phyllis Hines of Ketchum, Idaho.

The stage race, sponsored by Beatrice U.S. Foods and Ozarka Drinking Water, boasts entrants from 25 foreign countries, said spokeswoman Louise Talvig. The women's field comprised 60 entrants, and 100 men raced. Ms. Talvig said several Olympic and world champions, including U.S. gold medallist Rebeca Twigg, are competing in the race.

The race continues Sunday in the Fort Worth Stockyards, then moves to Corpus Christi, Houston, San Antonio, Buda and Kingsland. The race ends in Austin April 6.

"It was a tougher race than I expected," said Edwards. "I had to lunge at the end to win it."

It also made Edwards sick. She is a 200-meter specialist and isn't used to running the open quarter. That forced her off the 1600 relay team, but MHS came in second without her.

"Sebrenia Finch agreed to run for Ethel and she helped the team and Amy Cumings brought us from fifth to second on her leg. I thought that was one of the best efforts of the day," said MHS coach Sonja Pittman.

In the 4A division, Lubbock Estacado ran away with the crown with 151½ points while a strong Monahans team was a distant second with 115. Richard Ross led Estacado with a record setting 10.44 in the 100 and Dunbar's Ricky Atkins set a record of 38.92 in the 300 hurdles.

Crane won the 3A division title with 110½ points, a 39½ point margin over Kermit. But it was Kermit's Lanz Boff who may have been the star of the meet, scoring 30 points with victories in both hurdles and setting a division record in the pole vault with a 13-7. Crane's Dwayne Tarpley had a record 50.56 in the 400.

All four Midland teams will head to the Canyon Reef Relays next weekend where it is reported that all District 4-5A teams will be in competition.

Drug problem won't go away

NFL Meetings

By DAVE GOLDBERG

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — It rained in the desert last Sunday and Monday, prompting someone to suggest that the NFL owners go home and wait until next year at Maui.

It probably wouldn't have mattered if they had — this week's NFL meetings were an exercise in suspended animation.

As Commissioner Pete Rozelle kept saying when asked about anything of substance: "We'll do something as soon as these things are resolved."

"These things" included the television and players for which the posturing already has begun and the $1.32-billion antitrust suit against the NFL by the United States Football League. The two contracts expired after last season; the lawsuit is scheduled to come to trial in late April or early May.

THE ONE substantive action the owners took — approving instant replay to oversee some officials' decisions — was for one year only and will have to be renewed at next year's meetings.

That left drugs and what to do about them as the major topic of discussion. Again, nothing was resolved — Rozelle, who wants random testing strongly enough to implement it with or without union approval, hopes to negotiate an agreement with the players union by the opening of training camps in July.

Rozelle acknowledged that he believes each of the 28 teams has at least one player who may smoke marijuana. However, many coaches and general managers said that if there are serious drug problems, they are someone else's.

Mike Ditka, coach of the Super Bowl champion Chicago Bears, caused a stir when he said there was a problem on his team. But Ditka modified that to say there were "less than two" players involved and that player subsequently was identified as James Maness, a rookie wide receiver who wasn't even active for the Super Bowl.

"I don't know of anyone on our team who had a problem last year," said Don Shula of the Miami Dolphins, who conceded that he was shocked when it was disclosed six years ago that three Dolphins were seriously involved with cocaine.

"I think our team is clean," said Al Davis, owner of the Los Angeles Raiders.

ON THE labor negotiations, Jack Donlan, executive director of the NFL Management Council, painted a gloomy financial future. But Donlan alienated at least a couple of general managers by suggesting that one reason salaries are escalating at the rate of 20 percent a year is weak negotiating by the teams.

"How many player contracts has Donlan negotiated?" asked one GM. "One? Has he negotiated one?"

Donlan's gloom was based on the prospect that the NFL will be lucky to get a token increase in television money after two consecutive contracts that more than doubled the amount. The current $2.1-billion, five-year contract currently provides about 63 percent of the league's revenue.

The problem for the NFL is that even while its ratings increased this season — 16 percent on ABC, 10 percent on CBS and 4 percent on NBC — the networks' advertising revenue was down. Moreover, all three networks seem to be taking a new, tighter-fist financial approach.

Brewers' Leary continues to burn up Cactus League

Associated Press

CHANDLER, Ariz. — Right-hander Tim Leary gave up only one hit in five innings. Leary, who struck out four, retired 10 consecutive batters before walking Phil Bradley with one out in the fourth inning. Bradley went to third on Ivan Calderon's double and scored on an infield out.

Leary's Cactus League record improved to 2-0 and the Brewers improved to 6-2. The Mariners pre-season record dropped to 3-4.

Rob Deer drove in the first two runs with a double; Jim Adduci, Charlie Moore and Rick Manning also drove in runs in the first inning.

Rookies Bryan Clutterbuck, Chris Bosio and Bryan Duquette each pitched a hitless inning before the Mariners scored three runs on three hits and two walks off Mark Clear in the ninth.

In a "B" squad game Saturday, veteran Ben Oglivie hit his first homer of the spring as the Brewers defeated the Mariners 5-3.

Mild-mannered McNamara gets tough with Sox

By DAVE O'HARA

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) — Mr. Nice Guy is gone.

Manager John McNamara is now the boss, and he's letting the Boston Red Sox know it.

"If I want to make a point, I'm going to make a point," McNamara says. "I don't dislike any person, but I want to make sure everyone knows where I'm coming from."

McNamara, still smarting from Boston's 81-81 record in his first season as manager last year, began cracking the whip Friday.

"I got out of bed seeing red — and everything kept getting worse," he said after thunderstorms cancelled the day's schedule.

It wound up with the usually soft-spoken manager vowing: "there will be no country club atmosphere" around the Sox training camp.

"I wasn't raised that way," he said. "I really haven't noticed a country club atmosphere around here, but I want to make sure there won't be.

"I want everyone to know who the manager is and what he expects. They're going to understand that you don't get superstar status until you earn it. You don't just throw your glove out there, you have to go out and do the job.

"I want 100 percent (effort) out of 80 percent if that is all a player can give. Even 100 percent out of 40 percent. If a wife is ill or the kids are sick, I expect the player to block it out of his mind and give his best.

"I want everyone to do his job to the best of his ability. That would include taking out the garbage. If you take out the garbage, do it right."

McNamara started the day by having "a couple of meetings, one with Mr. Sam Horn, another with Mr. Steve Lyons and then one with the entire club."

"I told Sam that I was very disappointed in him," the manager said. "He has lost only four pounds (of nearly 25 ordered) and isn't making much progress in recovering from a pulled hamstring.

"I told him I didn't think he was following istructions and not working hard enough to get into shape. He also was advised he would not play again until he is 95 percent."

McNamara called his office meeting with Lyons "very private." However, the manager was disturbed by a couple of comments Lyons reportedly made while trying to work out tendinitis in his right shoulder.

Then, after a heated exchange between veteran right-handers Bob Stanley and Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd over Boyd's agent, Dennis Coleman, McNamara angrily ordered a team meeting behind closed doors in the clubhouse.

McNamara's primary goal was to make sure that personal arguments were not carried into the clubhouse.

"I talked a little about attitudes and the approach to the game," he said. "I asked if anybody had anything to say. I told them to air it all out. I told them my door was always open, that if they want to talk we'll talk and if they want to fight we'll fight. Nobody said a word."

A's 6, Giants 4

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Rookie Jose Canseco hit a pair of solo home runs, one of which traveled approximately 500 feet, to lead Oakland.

Canseco, last year's minor league player of the year, had just three hits in 19 at-bats this spring when he blasted a pitch from loser Juan Berenguer 420 feet over the center field fence to give the A's a 5-1 lead in the third.

Oakland scored three runs in the first inning on its way to making the Giants losers for the first time in eight games this spring.

Giants' rookie first baseman Will Clark hit his fourth home run this spring, and his third against the A's. Chris Brown also homered for the Giants.

Exhibitions

Padres 15, Cubs 8

MESA, Ariz. — Rookie Benito Santiago hit a fifth-inning grand slam to highlight an eight-run in a split-squad game at HoHoKam Park.

The other half of the Cubs and Padres squads played an exhibition game Saturday night in Vancouver, B.C.

The Cubs squandered a 4-1 lead after four innings as the Padres roughed up losing pitcher Carl Hamilton and Warren Brusstar in the fifth inning. Brusstar was also touched for home runs by Carmelo Martinez and Sandy Alomar in the Padres' four-run eighth inning.

Scott Sanderson started for the Cubs, allowing one run on two hits in three innings. He walked three and struck out two.

"I felt no effects of the groin injury," said Sanderson, who missed his last scheduled start.

Rich Gossage, who came on in relief of starter Mark Thurmond in the fourth inning, earned the victory for San Deigo.

The Cubs had rallied to within one point at 9-8 in the bottom of the fifth inning after Leon Durham hit a solo homer and rookiue Tony Woods hit a three-run homer.

California 6, Cleveland 5

TUCSON, Ariz. — Rick Burleson went 3-for-4, including a two-run single in the second inning to lead the California Angels.

With two outs in the second, Burleson singled over shortstop Julio Franco, scoring Bob Boone and Brian Downing to make it 4-0. Downing had doubled in Dick Schofield earlier in the inning.

Rangers rained out

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — The Montreal Expos led the Texas Rangers 4-1 after four and two-thirds innings Saturday, but rain washed out the game one out before it could become official.

Royals 8, Orioles 3

FORT MYERS, Fla. — George Brett crushed a three-run homer and Bret Saberhagen picked up his first victory as the Kansas City Royals pounded a split squad of Baltimore Orioles.

Brett homered in the first inning off losing pitcher Dennis Martinez following singles by Lonnie Smith and Willie Wilson.

Orioles 3, Braves 0

MIAMI — Storm Davis, Rich Bordi and Tippy Martinez combined to pitch a four-hitter and Jim Dwyer accounted for all of the scoring with his first home run of the spring.

Davis, the winner, pitched five innings and allowed two hits. Bordi followed and gave up one in three innings. Martinez worked the ninth inning to get a save, yielding the other hit.

SWC's image tarnished

Analysis

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS (AP) — That elevator ride to the penthouse of the national basketball elite just ended in a plunge down the elevator shaft for the Southwest Conference.

Where have you gone Eddie Sutton, Abe Lemons and Guy V. Lewis?

They've escaped to Kentucky, Oklahoma City and fishing, respectively.

Sutton at Arkansas, Lemons at Texas and freshly retired Lewis at Houston brought SWC basketball out of football's towering oval shadow in the 1970s.

Joining forces with SWC coaching settlers Shelby Metcalf of Texas A&M and Gerald Myers of Texas Tech, the league began making national thump-thumpers take notice.

THERE WAS Arkansas upsetting UCLA and beating Notre Dame for third place in the consolation game of The Final Four after losing narrowly to Kentucky.

There was Texas capturing the National Invitational Tournament with a dazzling victory over North Carolina State.

There was Texas A&M beating North Carolina in double overtime in a second round NCAA playoff game and making the Midwest Regional only to lose to Louisville in overtime.

There was Houston making The Final Four for three consecutive years only to lose emotional championship games to North Carolina State and Georgetown.

There were national television dates with big payoffs and coast-to-coast newspaper publicity.

BEGINNING in 1977, the SWC had at least two teams in the NCAA playoffs and sometimes three. Before 1977, it had never had multiple teams at the NCAA party.

Now, the SWC is back to where its back was in the beginning — up against the NCAA selection committee's wall.

When the SWC failed to get an at-large bid — although it had two teams with 20 victory seasons (A&M and TCU) and TCU Athletic Director Frank Windegger on the committee — it was like not getting a Christmas card from a good buddy.

For eight good years the SWC may not have been the big hit of the NCAA playoff party, but it certainly was an appreciated and honored guest.

THE SWC is now being treated like a mechanic in greasy covered overalls who wandered into the punch line at a debutante's party.

"Turn out the lights, the party's over,

"They say that all good things must end,

"Turn out the lights, the party's over. But tomorrow starts the same old thing again."

Willie Nelson probably wasn't thinking about the SWC when he wrote that little ditty but that states the case for the SWC. It's at ground zero again.

The SWC needs stronger non-conference schedules, better packaging of its product, and better recruiting.

Did you hear the one about the announcing team calling Arkansas Coach Nolan Richardson "Nolan Ryan" and Coach Metcalf "Coach Whitfield" and Aggie star Don Marbury "Don May-Berry"at the recent SWC Post-Season Tournament?

YOU'VE HEARD the excuses for 1986: Young teams, no big men, the NCAA has a bias against the SWC because of all the illegal recruiting problems, etc.

Windegger has a more honest answer: "The league just wasn't very good this year."

It all traces back to the fact the SWC is still considered a football stepchild, nationally. The league played down to that reputation this season.

New product camouflages smelly sportsmen from suspicious prey

By ELLIOTT MINOR

BLACKSHEAR, Ga. (AP) — A fledgling insect repellent company, lured by the sweet smell of success in a relatively new industry that supplies sportsmen with hunting fragrances, is bottling elixirs to repulse bugs and mask the game-spooking odor of humans.

The repellents are among hundreds of new products were introduced in the last decade to help bowhunters, who generally shoot at shorter distances than their rifle-toting counterparts.

The products, ranging from doe and skunk urine to acorn solutions, lure animals within range yet mask the human smells that trigger danger signals in bear, white-tail deer and other wild animals.

While many companies have concentrated on sex lures and products that help mask human odors with acorn, honeysuckle, pine and apple scents, Dan Killian and his partner, Jim Russ, have blended some of the masking aromas into insect repellents.

The two formed a company known as Hunters Dream about six months ago in Charleston, S.C., and moved recently into a metal warehouse near Blackshear, a small town in southeastern Georgia.

Besides their special masking repellents, which are blended with the smells of pine, decaying leaves or sweet corn, the partners sell wiping cloths for firearms that are supposed to mask the aroma of gun oils and regular repellents that repulse gnats, mosquitoes and other insect pests.

"There's been so many times a hunter has missed a shot because just about the time he was going to fire or release an arrow he was bit," observed Killian, 39, a Walker County native who began blending masking scents for friends while hunting deer in the north Georgia mountains. "They can pick up odors a dog can't. The least movement can trigger an alarm."

Only an estimated 36 percent of the nation's hunters have chosen to use such olfactory camouflage, but they are far more successful at bagging deer than their less fragrant colleagues, according to Tink Nathan, president of a McLean, Va., firm that is the leading supplier of scents and related products.

Distance running

Benefits revealed by new research

By BRENDA C. COLEMAN

CHICAGO (AP) — Long-distance running may slow bone deterioration linked to aging and, contrary to popular belief, does not appear to increase tendencies toward arthritis or joint problems, new research indicates.

"You don't have to quit" running, said Dr. James F. Fries, program director for a project studying runners at Stanford University Medical Center.

He and fellow researchers compared 41 distance runners ages 50 to 72 with random members of the community who were of similar ages and backgrounds but had spent little or no time running.

The subjects — 18 matched female pairs and 23 matched male pairs — were questioned about their medical histories, were given examinations of their joints and had X-rays taken of their hands, lower spines and knees.

Forty of them also had computer-enhanced X-rays taken of their lower spines to determine the mineral content of their bones, researchers said.

"RUNNERS HAD significantly higher (40 percent) bone density in both male and female groups," the researchers said in their report in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The finding supports previous research indicating exercise such as walking and running may ward off osteoporosis, an aging-linked condition associated with loss of calcium from bones.

The researchers also found evidence contradicting the belief that the pounding runners' joints take may reduce space in the joints, thus increasing wear and tear and causing or aggravating osteoarthritis, a progressive joint disease also associated with aging.

In fact, they said, "There was increased width of joint space in runners in both the male and female pairs, but the difference was not statistically significant."

RESEARCHERS did find an increased tendency among female runners for the formation of spurs, or small bony growths, in the spine and knees, but the spurs did not create symptoms, Fries said.

In general, the non-runners had more traits associated with joint problems — increased thickening at the ends of bones, increased spur formation and more narrowing of joint space, the researchers said.

Distances covered by the runners totaled 12,547 miles over a mean of 9.2 years, breaking down to a weekly average of 26.2 miles per runner for the entire period.

The comparison group, which included 15 people who had done some running, covered 1,263 miles over 8.3 years, or about one-tenth as much, the researchers said.

"We've wanted to make it clear ... that we don't consider the present cross-sectional tudy as definitive," Fries said. "The things we say add to an encouraging literature. But longitudinal studies are required to settle the question."

LONGITUDINAL studies are those involving subjects selected before the start of the process being studied, rather than in the middle of it. They can avert a bias that might be found in a cross-sectional study when, for example, people who quit running because of injury are not represented.

In related research in the journal, Dr. Richard S. Panush of the University of Florida at Gainesville and colleagues compared the prevalence of degenerative joint disease among 17 male runners who had a mean age of 56 and 18 male non-runners with a mean age of 60.

The runners had covered a mean distance of 28 miles per week, including marathons, for an average of 12 years.

Biologists fighting to save Gila trout

By MATT MYGATT

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Biologists are fighting to save the endangered Gila trout and are trying to prevent Rio Grande cutthroat trout from swimming down the same troubled waters.

The ultimate goal is to ensure the long-term survival of the fish and increase their numbers for anglers. Both species face similar problems.

They're restricted to certain streams, and natural catastrophes, such as a forest fire, can easily wipe out a population.

Habitats of both species can suffer from overgrazing of nearby land, mine tailings and runoff. Overfishing also has been a problem.

And there are other troubles for both the Gila and cutthroats.

"One of the problems we've had is that the Gila trout is not well perceived," said David Propst, a New Mexico Department of Game and Fish biologist studying endangered species.

"People think it's a trash fish," he said. "There are a lot of old wives' tales, a lot of old, deep inbred prejudice.

"Wild native trout make an excellent fish as far as sporting value is concerned," Propst said.

But the Gila trout population — now less than 10,000 — needs to be increased before the fish are ready for the frying pan.

The endangered species designation means Gila trout "cannot be taken by any means by anyone without a scientific collecting permit, which is hard to get," Propst said.

There are 40 different populations of Rio Grande cutthroat, including 20 populations that have been found by biologists since the late 1970s, said Mike Hatch, fisheries research project leader for the Game and Fish Department.

"We've got to try to educate people to our motives," he said. "We're not just doing this to be a thorn in people's sides. We have very legitimate concerns of conservation of the species. The concerns of anglers never leave our minds."

Hatch said special regulations in some areas govern the take of Rio Grande cutthroats.

And Propst said fishing is not allowed in any of the nine streams where the Gila trout live in New Mexico — primarily in the Gila Wilderness.

"Most of the populations are in fairly small streams," he said. "The habitat space is a limit to how large a population can grow within a stream."

The Gila and cutthroats also breed with other trout that compete for the same food or have a head start on life.

He said Rio Grande cutthroats are difficult to raise in fisheries because they won't feed. He also said there are problems with trying to increase the numbers in the wild because scientists run into difficulties when trying to select a stream.

Life not fair, but golf simply ridiculous

It is well established that golf is far and away the most frustrating of games that people play. Life is not fair, but golf is ridiculous.

Its role is anti-history all the way. It is the Dracula of sports. You can hear its mocking laughter echoing over the sand traps and water hazards long after the golfers have slammed their spiked shoes into the lockers and cursed the fate that made them take up the game in the first place.

Golf is totally unsentimental, perverse, no respecter of reputations or even skill. It's as unforgiving as Caligula.

Take the 1939 U.S. Open. Samuel Jackson Snead, the sweetest swinger ever to darken a fairway, stood on the 71st tee needing only two pars to win the Open by three shots. Two bogeys and he would have won it by one shot.

Now, Sam Snead should have been one of the golf gods' favorites. Sam had color, charisma, presence, personality. They should have lavished their favors on him for the good of their game.

Sam went 5-6 on those last two holes. There are parts of Sam Snead scattered about the landscape and sticking to the trees and bushes of that Open course. Sam was never to win a U.S. Open, a historic injustice, an athletic equivalent of the burning of Joan of Arc.

WE DISSOLVE now to two weeks ago, a course at Mesa Verde in Orange County. Laura Baugh has a four-shot lead with four holes left to play in the Uniden women's professional golf tournament. She needs to par in to win.

Now, Laura Baugh is not the best player on the women's tour, she's the prettiest. I mean, we're talking "Charlie's Angels" type looks here, and everything that goes with it. The blonde hair, the blue eyes, the perfect skin, the dimples. You figure Helen of Troy looked like this.

Laura is so darn cute they never let her learn to play golf. I mean, the tour has lots of people who can shoot 68s. But they don't look like Laura. Laura looked like something out of a chorus line, but when Laura came along the rest of the tour looked more like a chorus of prison matrons or tugboat captains. Some of them even wore felt hats and smoked cigars.

Laura never won a pro tournament but that never bothered anybody – excepting possibly Laura. How could she? There were all these fashion layouts, appearances on TV, "The Today Show," "The Tonight Show" and everything in between. The magazine spreads, program covers.

m

BY AND LARGE, the tour didn't mind. The tour actually became frillier and less Amazonian by the year.

But the people who thought Laura Baugh was just another pretty face were startled to look up and see Laura not only on the leader board but on the verge of winning a tournament, her first ever.

All golf held its breath. So did the press, radio, TV and the sponsors.

And so, alas, did Laura Baugh. The ball began to slide sideways, roll into cuppy lies, fly over the greens.

Golf was working against its enlightened self-interest, as usual. The gremlins were busily at work pushing tee shots to the right, riding pitch shots onto air currents, shadowing the breaks on the green.

MEANWHILE, they were stepping aside to let Mary Beth Zimmerman's putts roll into the hole from off the green. They held her tee shots on line, gave her nice straight putts and brought all 6-iron shots safely down before they flew the green. Mary Beth had won one tournament before but Channels 4 and 5 weren't waiting for her, and magazines weren't hungry for an excuse to put her on the cover.

You could almost hear the gnomes of golf chortling, "Well, we did it to Snead at Spring Mill, Hogan and Palmer at Olympic, Nicklaus at Troon and now we got blondie here – what'd you say her name was again?"

Laura had finished second before – nine times. She had even been in a playoff – once. But she had never carried a four-shot lead into the final four holes before. By the time she was through, though, Mary Beth Zimmerman was in the press tent.

And Laura Baugh was in tears.

THE MINNESOTA Vikings will probably never win a Super Bowl, Snead will never win an Open, Rod Carew may never make a World Series.

But nowhere is a sport punished more by an absence from its honor rolls than golf is by lacking Laura Baugh. Still only 30 after 13 years on the tour, she still has the stunning complexion, dimpled cheeks and blue eyes, the 5-foot-4, 100-pound silhouette that remade the image of women's golf a decade ago.

She has such maggazine cover looks and figure that a lot of people were surprised to find Laura still putting for a living and not having long since disappeared into the fashion salons or ad studios or model agencies. Instead, she is still chasing that elusive first win. Playing in the GNA/Glendale Federal Classic this week at Oakmont, Laura has learned to laugh at her misfortune of two tournaments ago. With golf, you might as well.

"I wasn't nervous, just excited," she said. "I hadn't been there in a while. I'm a better player now than I was. People look at me and don't realize how strong I've become. And I love to play golf. Winning that first one is hard. Not as hard as I've made it – but once you've won it who's to say you won't win lots?"

Who, indeed? One thing is sure: We've got the calendars ready. If the gods of golf would just lighten up once.

Ladies Golf

GLENDALE, Calif. (AP) — Jane Geddes and Chris Johnson, playing in a chilly drizzle that finally halted play, shared the lead at 1-under-par Saturday in the rain-plagued GNA-Glendale Federal Classic.

The co-leaders, among the last groups to begin the third round, were able to get in just 12 holes before rain halted play late in the LPGA tournament at Oakmont Country Club.

Geddes began the third round at 1-under-par for the tournament, and Johnson started at 1-over.

The event initially was thrown off schedule Thursday when the first round was stopped because of rain. About half the field didn't finish the second round until noon, so the third round already was behind schedule.

Tournament officials said that, weather permitting, the players would play the final round Sunday, as scheduled, after completing the third round in the morning.

The 26-year-old Geddes and the 27-year-old Johnson, two of the more promising young players on the women's tour, were the only golfers under par when Saturday's competition was stopped.

Geddes, a fourth-year pro who has not won an LPGA event but still collected $108,971 on the tour last year, finished her second round earlier in the day, shooting a 1-under-par 71 to going with a first-round 72.

Johnson, who joined the tour in 1980 and won the two LPGA events in Arizona last year, shot a second-round 70 on Friday after a first-round 75.

Juli Inkster and Laurie Rinker were both at 1-over-par, two strokes back of the leaders, when the third round was halted. Amy Alcott was another shot back.

"It was brutal," Geddes said of the day's conditions, which began with chilly, gusting winds in the morning, then constant rain through much of the afternoon.

Defending champion Jan Stephenson, who began the third round at 4-over-par 148, lost another four shots to par with a 40 on the front nine before play was suspended.

Shelley Hamlin, co-leader after each of the first two rounds, was 3-over-par through 12 holes of the third round, slipping four shots back of the leaders.

The weather and the revised schedule of play in the $250,000 tournament took a tol on some of the top contenders for the $37,500 first prize.

Mary Beth Zimmerman, the LPGA's leading money winner this year and winner of two events within the last month, had cards of 79-76 to miss the cut by one stroke Saturday.

Douglass seizes stroke advantage

Seniors

SUN CITY WEST, Ariz. (AP) — Dale Douglass, a newcomer to the PGA Seniors tour, fired a 5-under-par 67 Saturday to take a one-shot lead after the second round of the $200,000 Senior PGA Roundup here.

Douglass, who turned 50 on March 5 to become eligible for the senior circuit, also had 5-under 67 in Friday's opening round which left him in a five-way tie for second place.

After making par on the first three holes Saturday, Douglass birdied the fourth before carding consecutive birdies on the eighth through 11th holes and adding another on the 13th on the 6,672-yard Hillcrest Golf Course.

"I had a nice time and I played very well," Douglass said. "I still have a ways to go yet. The only thing I can say is it is fun to play and even more fun to be in contention."

Australian Peter Thomson, the first-round leader along with Joe Jimenez, shot a 3-under 69 Saturday and fell into a three-way tie for second place at 9-under 135 along with Doug Sanders and Charlie Owens.

Owens, who started the day in sixth place at 1-under, posted a course record-tying round of 64 Saturday. It equalled the score set last year by both Lionel Hebert and defending champion Don January.

Chi Chi Rodriguez had a second round of 5-under 67 and moved into sole possession of third place at 136.

PGA players mum on meeting

By BOB GREEN

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — About 40 PGA Tour players, including controversial Mac O'Grady, held a 90-minute, closed-door meeting Saturday.

"We met to discuss current problems on the tour, and possible solutions.

"We'd prefer not to say anything further at this time," said Roger Maltbie, a player-director on the PGA Tour Policy Board.

O'Grady, facing a series of possibly severe disciplinary actions as a result of a published comments attributed to him concerning Tour Commissioner Deane Beman, declined comment.

O'Grady's attorney, Steve Novak, waited in the rain outside the locker room at the Bay Hill Club while the meeting was in progress.

"I doubt we'll have any immediate comment," Novak said.

The attorney did say, however, that he is scheduled for a meeting with the PGA Tour Commissioner in New Orleans next week.

The locker room was cleared of all but Tour players and a uniformed guard turned away visitors.

In the last two weeks, O'Grady has received three notices of proposed disciplinary action by the tour. The actions possibly could result in penalties totaling up to 12 weeks in suspension, as much as $12,000 in fines and a one-year probation.

Beman said earlier the actions could be the most severe penalties administered in his 12 years as Commissioner.

O'Grady, 34, now in his fourth season on the tour, has said he would take the matter to court.

36-hole finish scheduled

By BOB GREEN

Bay Hill Golf

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) - A second consecutive rainout in the Hertz Bay Hill Classic Saturday prompted an unusual — perhaps unprecedented — decision by the PGA Tour and a scheduled 36-hole windup.

For the first time in at least 20 years, the field was cut to the low 70 scorers and ties on the basis of only 18 holes of play.

That reduced field, 79 players with scores of 75 or better, now are scheduled to complete the tournament with a double round of 36 holes Sunday.

That will make it a three-round, 54-hole event, the third on the tour this year. The sponsors — who could, by contract, cut the purse to three-quarters — agreed to pay the full $500,000, including $90,000 to the winner.

Normally, the field is trimmed only after 36 holes or two rounds of play. Records were not available as to whether any previous 18-hole cut had been made.

"Not to my knowledge," said Wade Cagle, the veteran tournament supervisor for the PGA Tour and the man in charge of this weather-plagued event.

After play was rained out both Friday and Saturday, tournament officials ruled that that the 114-man field would be reduced in order to play two rounds Sunday.

It would not be possible to play two complete rounds with the full field, officials said.

The only other option, officials said, was to schedule second-round play with a full field for Sunday and extend the tournament until Monday.

"The sponsor did not wish to continue play on Monday," Cagle said in a prepared statement.

The statement said the unusual decision concerning the 18-hole cut "after consultation with the Commissioner" Deane Beman, who is not at the tournament site.

"After consultation with the local people, the tour, and NBC (which is scheduled to provide national coverage of the final round), we all pretty much agreed this was the best we could do under the circumstances."

Writer to sue despite apology

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Despite a public apology, a veteran sports writer who allegedly was attacked by Hartford Whalers Coach Jack Evans, says he plans to return to Buffalo, N.Y., Monday to pursue charges he filed against the coach following a recent NHL game.

"We do regret that the incident occurred and feel that what happened was unfortunate and we are sorry for it," Howard Baldwin, the Whalers' chairman and managing general partner, said in a statement issued Friday.

But the apology was not directed to Randy Smith, sports editor and columnist for the Journal Inquirer of Manchester, and both Smith and Chris Powell, the newspaper's managing editor, said they were unsatisfied.

"We were hoping the apology would be stronger, quicker and more sincere," Smith said.

"I don't find it terribly satisfactory," Powell said. "If it's an apology, I don't see it. I suppose if it was an apology it would have been made to us ... I don't see how this changes anything."

Elliott, Earnhardt both need win

NASCAR

HAMPTON, Ga. (AP) — Dale Earnhardt and Bill Elliott both need a victory Sunday in the Motorcraft 500 NASCAR stock car race at Atlanta International Raceway.

The race, which will be televised live on ABC beginning at 12:30 p.m., is an opportunity for Earnhardt to establish himself as the man to beat in 1986.

For Elliott, who led everyone with 11 victories a year ago, it is perhaps his best opportunity in the first half of the 28-race NASCAR season to re-establish himself as a legitimate contender.

"We have had the opportunity to win two races already this season and come up empty because of circumstances," said Earnhardt, who won the pole position for Sunday's 500-miler with a track qualifying record of 170.713 mph.

"We could have won Daytona (the Daytona 500) and Richmond," he added. "But the team knows how strong we've been and what we can do. We're still third in the (point) standings. If we can keep our heads in the right direction, we can win the (Winston Cup) championship."

Earnhardt, like the rest of the top competitors driving General Motors products this season, has been the beneficiary of some new and improved aerodynamics on his Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS.

The changes in the Chevys, Oldsmobiles, Pontiacs and Buicks appear to have completely erased an edge enjoyed by the Ford Thunderbirds last year, particularly Elliott's Ford.

"This is a very important race for us," said Elliott. "The GM cars have obviously caught the Fords, but this is traditionally a Ford track. We're going to see if we still have any of that edge left.

"It's too soon to get real worried, because there's still 26 races left, but this is the track we consider our home track, and we did win both races here last year. It's the place where we can prove that we're still one of the teams to look out for," Elliott said.

Darrell Waltrip, the defending Winston Cup champion, agreed that Sunday's race — the fourth of the season — is a very important one for Elliott, his chief rival a year ago.

"If he's not competitive Sunday, then it's going to probably be a real long season for that team," Waltrip said.

Waltrip, who starts 15th, currently leads the point standings without benefit of a victory. He has won twice here, but not since the spring of 1983.

"This is an important weekend for us, too," Waltrip noted. "We know we're going to win some races this year and we'd like to get that first victory here. We've got two weeks before the next race (at Bristol, Tenn., April 6), and it would be nice to go into that stretch with a win."

Media blamed for pressure

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Coach Eddie Sutton of third-ranked Kentucky said Saturday that the media is contributing to the intense pressure facing college coaches.

"Basketball is the best it's ever been, but sometimes you people in the media put too much pressure on coaches," Sutton said during a news conference with three other coaches.

"I was saddened last night when Moe Iba resigned," Sutton said.

Iba, who had coached six seasons at Nebraska, turned in his resignation immediately after the Cornhuskers lost their NCAA tournament game to Western Kentucky 67-59 Friday night.

Sutton said pressure was much more severe now at Kentucky than it was 25 years ago.

Chaparral net teams keep perfect marks

From Staff Reports

Halfway through the conference race, the Midland College tennis teams already have control of the action. Both the men's and women's teams remain undefeated in Western Junior College Athletic Conference play.

The men's team won 7-2 while the women continued their perfect string with another 9-0 win against South Plains College last week. For the season, the women's team is 13-0 in team competition and the men are 9-2.

In conference play, the Chaparral men are 3-0 and the women 2-0. But the Chaps have played all their conference dual matches at home this month and now have to go on the road for the second half of the season.

The men close their home season March 21-22 with a pair of home matches. Friday at 2 p.m. MC hosts Schreiner College of Kerrville and at 2 p.m. Saturday, they'll be in action on the MC courts against UT-El Paso.

The women will also host Schreiner and UTEP, on March 21-22, but will return home as the host of the National Junior College national tournament May 18-24.

Coach Joe Williams returned Herve Rousseau to action Thursday for the first time in three weeks. Rousseau had been sidelined with an elbow injury.

"It was a case of desperation," MC coach Joe Williams said. "Emil Bijleveld hurt his foot and couldn't play, so Herve had to go in the lineup. I'd like to have kept him out another week, but it wasn't possible."

An injury to Helen Schildknecht also caused Williams to shuffle his women's team against SPC. Charissa Pruim had been out for two weeks with a sprained ankle, but gradually is working back into top form.

Lou Piniella...Steinbrenner's latest.

Can friendship save Piniella?

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — After the first spring training workout that marked his debut as a major-league manager, Lou Piniella settled into his new office and talked about the insecurity and loneliness of the job.

"It's funny," he said. "I've been in this clubhouse now 13 years, and this is the first time I've been in here.

"I need to get acclimated to the loneliness of the position. I'm much more alone in this job than I ever thought I would be."

Piniella, one of the most popular players in the team's history during his 10½ seasons in New York, is the 14th Yankees manager in the 14th year of George Steinbrenner's ownership. He follows last year's fired tandem of Yogi Berra, who lasted 16 games into the season, and Billy Martin, who came and went for the fourth time.

Piniella, 42, who bargained for a two-year contract but eventually settled for a one-year deal last October, has no previous managerial experience, but he still feels he has found his niche, although no Yankees manager since 1978 has last through two seasons.

"Maybe I'll be different from everybody else," he said. "Maybe I'll be the one who cracks the mold and sticks around for a few years."

m

HIS CONFIDENCE is based on his strong relationship with Steinbrenner, a former Tampa, Fla., neighbor whose active involvement in the team and "must-win" philosophy has led to clashes with previous managers.

"We get along well," said Piniella. "We're both competitive. We both want to win more than anything. It'll be a situation of me saying what's on my mind and him saying what's on his. He's an involved owner. I understand that. I know what he expects."

After a 97-64 second-place finish behind Toronto last year, Steinbrenner expects the Yankees to win the division title for the first time since 1981.

"It's important that we get off to a good start and avoid injuries," said Piniella, a member of four Yankees' World Series teams. "I'm looking to be playing well into October."

So far, the new manager has laid down only three rules: arrive on time, give 100 percent, and don't publicly criticize teammates. He said there is a need for discipline, and he intends on being firm.

"I'm not going to be a softie," he said. "I know that players will take advantage if they can. And I won't let that happen. People are not going to run over me. I'm not far removed from when I was a player. I know how they need to be treated."

MANY OF the present Yankees, in fact, have either played with or were coached by Piniella, who retired on June 17, 1984, but remained with the club as a hitting instructor. He was asked if it would be difficult to govern over a group he's so close to. "Not at all," he said. "If anything, it's a plus. I know their strengths and weaknesses."

Still, he's already noticed a difference in his dealings with the players. "You certainly realize you're on the other side, even when you're small-talking. There's a mutual respect, I think. They know I have a job to do and I know they have a job to do. But I've been friendly my whole career, and I'm going to be friendly as a manager. I plan to be fair, honest and open. I believe in communication."

Lack of communication almost led to Pinella's resignation as a coach last year. Following a five-game series in Cleveland, in which the Yankees lost the last three when Piniella filled in as manager for the ailing Martin, he didn't show up for one game. Piniella was ready to quit and had to be talked out of it.

"CLEVELAND was just the culmination," he said. "The feeling has been building up inside of me the whole year.

"It started in spring training when I read headlines saying that I was the next manager; that made me uncomfortable right away. No one told me anything and I didn't want to hear it unless it was going to happen. How could I sit there by Yogi, first, and then Billy? I'm the guy who's supposed to take their job away from them. I didn't like being the one they had to look over their shoulder at."

At his side, not over his shoulder, for 1986 will be Joe Altobelli, who was hired as a "bench" coach during the winter. Altobelli, a Yankees coach once before and the pilot of the 1983 World Series champion Baltimore Orioles, will act in the same role as Cincinnati coach George Scherger, who guided rookie player-manager Pete Rose last year.

"But the buck will stop where I'm at," maintained Piniella. "I will be the one who makes the ultimate decisions. This is a job that requires a personal feel. You have to be true to yourself."

SMELL

"The scent industry is definitely a growth industry," said Nathan, who estimates annual sales of about $37 million among the 45 to 50 firms that make up the industry.

Among the more than 100 products sold by the company are chlorophyll tablets to purge hunters' of noxious smells and a soap to eliminate body odors. The company's most popular product is "Tink's No. 69 Doe-In-Rut Buck Lure," which is made from the urine of female deer in heat.

"This is how the heifer tells the bull when she is ready to breed," Nathan said, noting that the doe urine contains pheromones, chemical substances excreated externally by some animals that produce specific responses in members of the same species.

In the case of deer, the pheromone of a doe in heat is sensed at great distances by amorous bucks, said Nathan, adding, "It bypasses his thought processes and ... he acts on instinct."

To be most effective, hunters would use a variety of products.

Three days prior to a hunt, they could swallow six chlorophyll tablets per day to help eliminate body odors. Then they could take a bath with a bacteriological soap scented with an odor such as acorn or honeysuckle that is appropriate for the hunting area. They also would apply masking scents to clothing, while daubing boots with skunk or fox urines to cover up odors picked up by footgear.

Dale Forgette, president of Walker's Lures Inc., a major supplier of scents, estimates the masking products are about 95 percent effective in eliminating human odors, but he emphasized they will not compensate for sloppy hunting techniques.

"They will make a good hunter a better hunter," Forgette said in a telephone interview from his Locust Grove office. "If he doesn't have skills and knowledge, nothing is going to make him a better hunter."

Salem wins over Bishop

SALEM, Mass. (AP) — Beth Kapnis popped in 17 points Saturday night as Salem State rallied to down Bishop College 89-85 to win the NCAA Division III national basketball championship.

Capital won the earlier consolation game, beating Rust College 75-62.

Salem State, which finished the season at 29-1, trailed 41-32 at the half but came back to win the school's first national title ever.

Bishop, 28-3, got 19 points each from Crystal Coleman and Batavia Evans.

In the opener, Mary Fuhr topped all scorers with 20 points to lead Capital to third place.

Capital, which finished with a record of 24-4, led only 30-29 at the half, but a 15-2 spurt hiked the lead to 59-44 with 9:48 left. Fuhr hit six free throws and Joyce Brinkley five during that run.

Karen Haban added 16 points for Capital, while Wendy Lawrence had 14 and Nancy Binion 13 for Rust.

NBA on way to new gate mark

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD

NEW YORK (AP) — With huge increases in the Kings franchise that moved from Kansas City to Sacramento and by the Golden State Warriors, the NBA appears certain to set an attendance record for the third consecutive year.

Seven teams — Sacramento, Golden State, Cleveland, New York, Utah, Atlanta and Denver — are showing increases of more than 20 percent to lead an overall jump of 6.53 percent through games of last Sunday. Only one team, the Los Angeles Clippers, has seen its attendance fall by more than 10 percent.

In 1984-85, attendance jumped 4.9 percent to a record 10,506,355. The previous year it was 10,014,543.

Although they are in last place in the Midwest Division, the Kings have sold out every home game at Arco Arena, which seats 10,333. Overall, the team's attendance has jumped 53.6 percent through 32 of 41 games.

Golden State, which hasn't made the playoffs since 1977 and is in last place in the Pacific Division, but the signing of St. John's All-America Chris Mullin and the return of center Joe Barry Carroll from a one-year stay in Italy sparked a 42.6 percent surge in attendance at Oakland.

Overall, 15 NBA teams showed attendance increases, seven showed decreases and Portland stayed the same. The Boston Celtics showed a slight increase in two "home" games they played in Hartford, Conn.

Portland is in its 10th consecutive season with capacity crowds of 12,666 for every game, and Boston Garden has had a sellout of 14,890 for every Celtics game.

Cleveland, which last season made the playoffs for the first time since 1976, saw that improvement reflected in a 34.3 percent leap in 1985-86.

New York's season-ticket sales started overwhelming the Knicks' offices last May on the day the team won the right to draft Patrick Ewing in the NBA lottery. Although the Knicks' season has disintegrated with the loss of Ewing and three other key players, attendance is still up 27.6 percent.

The Knicks follow Sacramento in having the largest gross increase of 3,209 fans per game, compared to 3,606 for the Kings. Golden State had an increase of 3,134.

Utah and Denver, both with tepid attendance near the bottom of the NBA for years, jumped 27.3 and 20.5 percent, respectively, possibly reflecting new ownership and fresher marketing approaches in the last few years.

Atlanta, a non-playoff team last season, saw its fortunes improve as the Hawks clinched a postseason berth with 17 games remaining. With Dominique Wilkins blossoming into a star and 5-foot-7 Spud Webb a crowd favorite, Hawks' attendance is up 25.6 percent, but still ranks 20th in the 23-team NBA.

The Clippers' attendance had the league's biggest percentage drop — 16.6 percent — as the team remained a distant second to the defending champion Lakers in Los Angeles.

Teams with smaller drops were Philadelphia, 9.1 percent; San Antonio, 8.5; Phoenix, 8.2; Detroit, 6.5; Chicago, 4.9; and New Jersey 4.2.

Dallas paces the league in highest average attendance with 16,881 per game, ahead of last year's leader Detroit, which fell from 17,005 to 15,806. However, the Pistons set a single-game record of 44,180 on Feb. 15 against Philadelphia.

Following Dallas in total attendance are the Los Angeles Lakers, 16,068; Detroit; Boston, 14,885; New York, 14,832; and Houston, 14,607.

At the bottom of the league in average attendance are the Clippers, 7,935; Seattle, 7,909; San Antonio, 8,052; and Atlanta, 9,021.

Charlie Hough

Batters' impatience key to success

By HAL BOCK

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Young Mitch Williams, blessed with a 90 mph fastball that makes him a baseball commodity, was enjoying one of the rituals of spring training, sunning himself in the Texas Rangers' bullpen during an intra-squad game.

On the mound, elderly Charlie Hough launched his 65 mph knuckleball. Hough's specialty fluttered tantalizingly up to the plate, taking its sweet time about arriving at its destination, with no particular concern for anxious batter Toby Harrah.

"You're impatient, huh?" the pitch seemed to be saying to Harrah. "Good. That's the whole idea."

Williams shook his head and turned to teammate Greg Harris. "Look at that," he said, "it takes forever to get up there."

Well, not quite. But who's in a hurry, anyway? Certainly not Hough, a pitching dinosaur and living proof of Aesop's fable about the hare and the tortoise that slow and steady can indeed win the race.

AT AGE 38, he is starting his 18th major league season and he again ranks as the ace of the Ranger staff. He won 14 games last season and has been Texas' top winner for four straight years, all the time throwing pitches arriving at three speeds — slow, slower and slowest.

"It's not easy," Hough said. "It looks easy, but I've never had an easy game. Even the lousiest hitter up here had to hit the ball somewhere to get here. It's tough to have confidence throwing 65 mph, looping the ball up to guys like (Dave) Winfield (6-foot-6, 220 pounds)."

The dynamics of the knuckler involve throwing the ball without a spin and letting the wind currents carry it to its destination, hopefully in the strike zone.

"I don't know where it's going to go and I don't care," Hough said. "I throw it down the middle and hope it doesn't end up there.

"The toughest part for me is to throw it up there easy, saying to the guy up there, 'Here, hit it.' The toughest alternative used to be firing it with all I had."

THERE WAS a time when Hough was a flamethrowing hotshot prospect in the Los Angeles Dodgers organization. He was at Albuquerque in 1969 when he hurt his arm.

"I had bursitis," he said. "My arm hurt every time I threw the ball. I was washed up, done after four years of playing ball, at 21."

Hough went to the instructional league in Arizona that winter, looking for a way to salvage a career that really had not started. There he found Goldy Holt, Tommy Lasorda, and the knuckleball.

"Holt showed me how to hold it; Lasorda was the manager. They worked with me and I was lucky. The fact is, when I first threw it I had a good one right away. I was at least capable of throwing a good one. Eventually, I got to the point where I could pitch with it," he said.

Within three years, he was in Los Angeles, making a living by throwing baseballs softly, which was the only way he could throw them.

There are obvious advantages to the pitch. Throw it successfully and you seemingly can pitch forever. There is little wear and tear on the arm.

"It takes time," Hough said. "You've got to be patient. If you get to the big leagues at 30, you still have a 10-year career. Hoyt Wilhelm (the Hall of Fame knuckleball relief ace) came up at 28 and pitched until he was 48."

THERE ARE only three knuckleball practitioners in the majors today and Hough, a baseball graybeard, is the baby of the trio. Phil Niekro of the New York Yankees will be 47 in April and his pitching teammate and brother, Joe, is 41.

Why only three? "If there are three of us who can pitch up here with the knuckleball, there are more out there," Hough said. "They just haven't developed."

The reason for that, he thinks, is the trick pitch image of the knuckler. Most pitchers prefer the macho image of mowing down batters with fastballs. The 65 mph knuckler is a lot less exciting.

"At the Little League level, a kid with a lot of talent isn't going to be taught a trick pitch," Hough said. "If a kid doesn't have talent, there's no one to work with him and he's not going to make the team on his own. No college coach is out there recruiting knuckleball pitchers. No pro team is looking to sign guys trying to throw a pitch that is not always successful right away. So what you have is a vicious cycle."

Knucklers also must combat negative images of the pitch. Managers doubt its long-term effectiveness.

"If you have a bad year, people think you're done when you use a trick pitch," Hough said. "A guy with natural ability gets a look all the way down the line. A guy with less physical talent gets one shot. Blow it and you're gone."

Hough's knuckler can be streaky. He lost six straight decisions last June but then bounced back to go 9-2 in July and August. "I've always been like that," he said, moving his hand up and down.

However, he has won 61 games in the last four seasons for poor teams, providing a shaky Ranger staff with some measure of stability. He is 62 innings short of 2,000 for his career.

"You don't have to be brilliant, a great star, to have a good career. You don't have to win 25 games every year," he said.

ANOTHER problem is catching the pitch. Catchers hate to see it coming, dancing this way and that.

Former catcher-turned-comic Bob Uecker once explained his foolproof technique for catching the knuckler. "I just wait till it stops rolling," he said.

"That's part of the myth," Hough said. " I tell my catchers, 'If I stink, so will you. You can't catch all of them. Nobody has. Don't think you will. You'll drop some. Just take it easy.' If I throw well, it's not as hard as it's made out to be.

Lee wins SA tennis

From Staff Reports

SAN ANGELO—The Midland Lee tennis team came home with its first tournament title in recent memory Saturday, taking the honors in the eight team San Angelo Team Tennis Tournament.

The Rebels compiled 92 points to lead the standings over three teams that had beaten them previously this season. San Angelo Central and San Angelo Lakeview tied for second with 81 points apiece, while Andrews was fourth with 79.

Bringing home first place individul trophies was Jim Walker with a 6-2, 5-7, 6-2, win over Lakeview's Mike Maxwell. Also with a title was the doubles team of Jeff Probandt and Lance Wood who won by default over San Angelo's Justin White and Joey Robert.

For the girls, Lee's Tami Palmer played a strong match but lost to Laura Dickson of San Angelo, 6-2, 6-0, in the final. Palmer defeated the No. 2 seed, Laura Scranton of Lakeview to reach the final.

The Lee 'B' doubles team of Kirk Dunn and Jeff Menden also scored a triumph with a 6-3, 6-7, 6-3, win over a team from Lakeview.

Midland places fourth

From Staff Reports

ODESSA—Jill Bramlett and Laura Legg combined to earn the girls doubles title and lead Midland High to a fourth place finish in the Bob Clark Invitational Tennis Tournament here Saturday.

Bramlett-Legg rallied after dropping the first set to defeat the team of Ann Donnell and Tanya Hamilton of Lubbock Coronado, 6-7, 6-3, 6-3. Coronado didn't feel the loss too badly, however, as it took first in the eight team tournament with 98 points.

Chris Jauz and Kevin Moore finished a fine tournament with a straight set, 6-4, 7-6, defeat of Raja Naidu and Perry Prudhomme of Odessa Permian for third place.

Other MHS results: Stephanie Scott, 5th girls singles; Tammy Morris, 8th, girls singles; James Widener, 6th boy singles; Rodney Allen, 12th boys singles; Kyle Unterbrink-Paul Morrow, 12th boys doubles; Tami Hertel-Donna Hunter, 13th girls doubles.

Cooper pounds Rebels, 10-3

Midland Lee discovered one more time why the Abilene Cooper Cougars are the overwhelming favorites to take the District 4-5A baseball title this spring — and it hurt.

The Rebels took a 10-3 beating at the hands of the Cougars and dug themselves further into a hole in the early district season. Lee is in the basement with an 0-2, 7-6, record, while the Cougars are off and running at 2-0, 11-0.

Cooper's Danny Whitford silenced the Rebel bats with a one-hitter, striking out six on the way to his second win of the season without a loss. Mike Brown, going the first two innings, was saddled with the loss. He is 0-1.

A pair of homers, including a two run shot by David Tollison, paced the 11-hit Cooper attack off a pair of Lee pitchers. It was Tollison's fifth round-tripper of the season.

The Rebels scored a pair of unearned runs in the second inning to take a brief 2-1 lead, but four Cougar runs in the bottom half of the second was all they would need.

In other 4-5A action, Odessa Permian and San Angelo kept pace with front running Cooper by posting big wins Saturday.

Larry Hill struck out 11 in going the distance for the Panthers, 2-0, 8-4, to earn his third win against no defeats. Center fielder Nolan Watson ripped a double and a triple good for three RBI to lead Permian. Big Spring's Aaron Allen, 0-2, took the loss for the Steers, 0-2, 1-7.

In San Angelo, the Bobcats upped their record to 2-0, 6-3, with an 11-8 win over the Bronchos. Jim Childress picked up his fourth win of the season while striking out 10. Paul Englehart cracked a pair of doubles, among his three hits and picked up three runs batted in.

BULLDOGS

"ALL (REESE) did was throw strikes and challenge us to hit it," Whalen complained. "He just said 'If you're going to beat me, you're going to have to hit me to do it.'"

Castaneda, who went the distance, gave up five runs on nine hits, but wasn't helped by some dubious fielding on the part of his teammates.

The Eagles opened the scoring in the very first inning, plating a pair of runs before MHS ever stepped into the batter's box. Todd Johnson led off the game with a single up the middle and one out later, a flyball lost in the sun dropped in for another hit.

That opened the door for a two-run double by designated hitter Mike Keith, his first of three hits on the afternoon. AHS rallied for two more runs in the fourth inning as Reese belted a double off the right field wall for two RBI to take a 4-0 lead.

An RBI single by Chris Priddy made it 5-0 before the Bulldogs ever got on the scoreboard.

MHS did finally nick Reese for two in the bottom half of the fifth. Catcher Tommy Yorkman continued his hot hitting with a run-scoring triple to deep center field. Yorkman came in when right fielder Joe Alcorta booted Jim Werner's flyball. Castaneda ended the inning with a ground out.

In the sixth, MHS again left a pair of runner stranded after two-out singles by Anthony Deande and Kenny De La Garza. And in the final frame, after two were gone, three straight singles by Werner, Castaneda and Jaime Salazar resulted in the final Bulldog run.

"We didn't hit nothing," Whalen said again. "I don't know what to attribute it to, except that we've had so much hitting practice lately. We get up there and the bats go numb on us.

MHS WILL get its next shot to move above the .500 mark in district play when they travel to OHS on Tuesday. In the opening game of the Pre-District Tournament, the Bronchos whipped MHS 14-6.

Stanton easy golf winner

From Staff Reports

McCAMEY — Stanton's powerful golf team rolled out a team score of 314 here Saturday to take a 27-stroke lead over second place Reagan County in the first round of the District 8-2A golf tour.

Reagan County had a 341 while McCamey followed with 350. The Reagan JV had a 379 while Stanton's JV had a 416 and Eldorado posted a 487.

The Stanton boys went to state for the first time in the school's history last year under coach John Stiles, placing sixth overall, and it looks like the Buffs may be headed for even a better finish this year.

Stanton and Reagan County's girls both posted a 434 to finish the first segment in a dead heat while McCamey stands at 436.

As expected, Stanton's boys dominated the medalist chase as Mark Gonzalez, 76, Greg Avery, 78, and Skip Hipkins, 79, placed 1-2-3 in the medalist competition.

The tour moves to Martin County Country Club Saturday and to Big Lake, April 12 to finish up.

Wayland gals beat Saginaw

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Sharla Harrison scored 16 points and grabbed 14 rebounds Saturday to help Wayland Baptist stave off a second-half rally and defeat Saginaw Valley 79-72 in a quarterfinal game of the NAIA women's basketball tournament.

Wayland Baptist, 30-4, led by as many as 21 points in the second half, but Saginaw Valley pulled to within one point, 65-64, at the 4:08 mark.

Georgia Tech 66, Villanova 61

BATON ROUGE, La. — Sixth-ranked Georgia Tech built up an 18-point second-half lead on the scoring of Mark Price and Duane Ferrell, then had to rely on the free-throw shooting of Price and Bruce Dalrymple to beat defending national champion Villanova the Southeast Regional.

Villanova, led by Doug West and Kenny Wilson, then went on a 21-5 scoring spree over the next 11 minutes, cutting Georgia Tech's lead to 57-55 with 3:24 to go.

Ferrell converted two free throws at the 2:46 mark and John Salley canned a field goal and Villanova was forced to foul in an effort to get the ball back.

Georgia Tech now moves to the friendly confines of the Omni in Atlanta, a sometimes homecourt for the Yellow Jackets, to meet Louisiana State in the regional semifinals on Thursday.

DePaul 74, Oklahoma 69

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Dallas Comegys sank consecutive inside jumpers in the closing three minutes to thwart an Oklahoma rally NCAA East Regional.

Top-seeded Duke is the next opponent for DePaul. The Blue Devils climbed to 34-2 with an 89-61 triumph over Old Dominion behind 25 points from All-American guard Johnny Dawkins.

The 15th-ranked Sooners got within one twice, at 50-49 on Tim McCalister's inside move with 14:04 left, and again at 64-63 on Anthony Bowie's layup with 3:58 remaining. Oklahoma never got a shot at the lead, however, and DePaul pulled away to raise its record to 18-12.

The Sooners, 26-9, outscored DePaul 4-1 in the next 20 seconds on baskets by McCalister and David Johnson. Kevin Holmes missed a one-and-one chance, but Oklahoma couldn't make up ground. Johnson missed two free throws with 25 seconds left, while Tony Jackson sank one foul shot with 21 seconds left to cap the scoring.

Embry scored 19 points to lead DePaul. Strickland had 15, while Holmes and Lemone Lampley had 10 each.

Darryl Kennedy led Oklahoma with 21 points. McCalister, who sat out Thursday's first-round action because of an NCAA suspension concerning last year's tournament, added 18, while Bowie and Johnson had 10 each.

Louisville 82, Bradley 68

OGDEN, Utah — Guard Milt Wagner and forward Billy Thompson ignited a late second-half surge which carried seventh-ranked Louisville over No. 14 Bradley in the the NCAA West.

Wagner, who finished with 16 points and Thompson, who added 14, scored 12 of Louisville's 18 points as the Cardinals broke from a 59-59 tie to take a commanding 77-62 lead with 1:23 remaining.

Second-seeded Louisville, in winning its 13th straight game, advanced to the West Regional semifinal Thursday in Houston.

Louisville's freshman center, Pervis Ellison, scored 10 of his 16 points in the second half and guard Jeff Hall added 11 as the Metro Conference champions boosted their record to 28-7.

North Carolina 77, UAB 59

OGDEN, Utah — Junior forward Joe Wolf, who scored 10 points and grabbed a game-high 16 rebounds, hit six straight free throws and had two key assists late in the second half to lead No. 8 North Carolina in an NCAA West Regional.

North Carolina, with center Brad Daugherty and his backup, Warren Martin, saddled with four fouls apiece, led 54-47 with 9:31 to play when Wolf hit converetd three one-and-one situations in a one-minute span.

Hawkeyes claim five mat titles

NCAA Wrestling

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — Iowa set a record with five national champions Saturday as Coach Dan Gable's wrestlers won their ninth consecutive NCAA Wrestling Championships.

The only other teams ever to win nine straight NCAA titles are Southern California in track, 1935-43, and Yale in golf, 1906-13.

Iowa's team total of 158.0 points shattered the old record of 155 points, set by the Hawkeyes in 1983, and also created a new record for margin of victory. Oklahoma finished second, with 84.75 points, 73.25 behind the Hawkeyes.

Oklahoma State finished third with 77.25 points while Iowa State was fourth with 71 points. Penn State was a distant fifth with 47.25 team points.

"Unbelievable," Gable said of the performance of his eight wrestlers.

"It's the best crown, the best title I've won. It's at home and it's record setting. It might never happen again and it probably won't."

Duane Goldman, a three-time runner-up at 190 pounds, electrified the crowd by capturing the crown with a 5-4 win over Oklahoma's Dan Chaid, the defending champion.

"I don't think I wrestled all that well in the match but it felt so good to win. I don't really know how to put it but I've had enough of second places," the senior said.

Kistler, the No. 1 seed at 168, won his early rounds by scores of 14-6, 21-8 and 20-4.

Also taking first for the Hawkeyes on Saturday was 126-pounder Brad Penrith, 142-pounder Kevin Dresser and 150-pounder Jim Heffernan.

Penrith had to battle back from deficits in nearly all his early rounds but never trailed in defeating Army's Dennis Semmel 9-4 in the finals.

Semmel, the first Cadet in 23 years to reach the finals, had knocked off Southern Illinois-Edwardsville's No. 1 seeded Alan Grammer in overtime on Friday.

Dresser won his final bout aginst Lehigh's Peter Yozzo, 11-6.

"It was the hardest thing I ever had to do because I wanted it so bad," Dresser said. "I've been working it seems like forever to get there."

Heffernan decisioned Arizona State's Adam Cohen 10-4 to claim the crown and avenge a loss he suffered at Cohen's hands earlier this year.

Also successfully defending his title was Oklahoma's Melvin Douglas, who decisioned Syracuse's Wayne Catan 9-5 in the 177-pound class.

Arkansas takes two from Rice

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Rod Moore hit a grand slam homer as Arkansas defeated Rice 10-5 in a Southwest Conference baseball double-header Saturday.

In the second game, Ralph Kraus and Dave Patterson drove in four runs each as Arkansas defeated Rice 15-7.

Arkansas pitcher Steve Parker, 3-0, went the full seven innings in the first game, walking nine but striking out seven and allowing three hits.

All five Rice runs were unearned.

NCAA Today

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Although St. Joseph's does not have the depth of upstart Cleveland State, Hawks Coach Jim Boyle says his team may be ready to run with the "run-and-stun" Vikings Sunday.

Today's NCAA second-round basketball doubleheader at the Carrier Dome also includes No. 9 Syracuse vs. No. 17 Navy. The winners advance to the Eastern Regional semifinals at the Meadowlands Arena in East Rutherford next Friday.

Cleveland State, which won little known Association of Mid-Continent Universities title and then the hearts of the Carrier Dome fans with its 83-79 upset over No. 16 Indiana Friday.

St. Joe's, 26-5, has won 12 of its last 13 games, playing deliberately in beating Richmond 60-59 Friday.

Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim, whose team crushed Ivy League champion Brown 101-52 Friday night, said Navy is a much improved team from the one that the Orangemen beat 89-67 for the Carrier Classic title in December.

Syracuse, the Big East co-champion in the regular season, is 26-5, while Navy, the Colonial Athletic Association champion, is 28-4 after making Tulsa its 14th straight victim 87-68 Friday night.

Navy, working the ball inside, got 30 points from 6-11 junior center David Robinson and 25 from burly 6-7 senior forward Vernon Butler against Tulsa.

"They don't play in a so-called power conference," Boeheim said of Navy, "but a lot of those people have gone home. I don't think we gained any points playing at home in this tournament."

Boeheim said he ranks Robinson with St. John's Walter Berry as the best big man in the country and calls the Navy center superior as a shot-blocker.

Flashy guard Dwayne "Pearl" Washington, who got 21 points in only 18 minutes against Brown, leads the Orange offense. He's averaging 17 points.

Southeast

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — It's been 15 years since Western Kentucky got its only shot at the Kentucky Wildcats, and Billy Gordon says he is ready for the second opportunity.

"If you get that chance, you have to make the most of it," Gordon, Western's leading scorer at 14 points per game, said Saturday.

"I think at the beginning of the game we'll be sky high, but once it begins, we'll start thinking about what we have to do to win," Gordon said.

The clash between the two teams from the Bluegrass State will be the finale of Sunday's second round action in the NCAA Southeast Regional basketball tournament, coming about 30 minutes after the conclusion of the opener between No. 19 Illinois and Alabama set to tip off at 11:11 a.m.

The two winners will collide Thursday night in Atlanta in the regional semifinals.

Kentucky never has met Western during the regular season.

The Hilltoppers won the only meeting by a whopping 107-83 margin in the 1971 NCAA regional finals at Athens, Ga. It was Adolph Rupp's next-to-last Kentucky team before being forced into retirement with an all-time record 875 coaching victories.

Kentucky, the top seed in this region, carries a 30-3 record and a 12-game winning streak into the contest. The Wildcats won their 36th Southeastern Conference title this year.

Kentucky advanced with a 75-55 victory over Davidson Friday night and Western downed Nebraska 67-59, with Cornhusker Coach Moe Iba announcing his resignation immediately after the game.

Illinois, 22-9, finished fourth in the Big Ten Conference race and made its advance with a 75-51 triumph over Fairfield.

Alabama, which tied for second in the SEC, beat Xavier of Ohio 97-80 to lift its record to 23-8.

"I just think we're going to have to have an outstanding game to win it," Illinois Coach Lou Henson said.

"They'll be tough to beat," Alabama guard Mark Gottfried said.

Both teams have strong inside games, with Illinois a little larger.

West

LONG BEACH, Calif. — Can a college basketball team win the NCAA tournament with only eight players in uniform? St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca thinks so, and Auburn Coach Sonny Smith agrees with him.

"If they play well, why not?" Carnesecca responded when asked such a question Saturday. "If it was a number of guys thing, we'd bring a regiment."

Said Smith, whose Tigers face the fourth-ranked Redmen on today in a second-round game of the West Regional: "That's all (eight players) most of us use, anyway. We're using seven basically right now."

St. John's, the No. 1 seed in the region, brought only nine players to California. The roster was depleted by one Friday when freshman center Marco Baldi was suspended by the NCAA for having part of his plane fare home to Italy paid for by a professional team.

Baldi, who was suspended for 16 games, had averaged a little more than 10 minutes a game, the most of any St. John's reserve.

When asked how he would tell his players to play, considering their plight, Carnesecca said simply, "To win."

The Redmen, who have a 31-4 record, face Auburn, 20-10 and seeded eighth in the region, at 3:35 p.m. in the first of a second-round tournament doubleheader at the Long Beach Arena.

In the second game, which will begin about 30 minutes after the first one finishes, 11th-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas, 32-4 and seeded fourth in the West, meets Maryland, 19-13 and seeded fifth.

Midwest

MINNEAPOLIS — Arkansas-Little Rock imagined it would advance to the second round of the NCAA Midwest Regionals at the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome.

And because the Trojans let their imaginations run wild, the players ran wild, too, beating Notre Dame to earn the right to play North Carolina State today at 12:15 p.m.

"Your only limitation is your imagination," UALR Coach Mike Newell said after his team's 90-83 victory Friday over 10th-ranked Notre Dame. "When you imagine, big things are going to happen. It's a big moment for us."

Three Trojans — Pete Myers, Michael Clarke and Myron Jackson — had tremendous imaginations against the Fighting Irish. They scored 29, 27 and 22 points, respectively, in combining for 78 of UALR's 90 points.

"When you beat a big school like Notre Dame," Myers said, "it makes a big difference with our school. People have heard of UALR now."

Said Clarke: "We wanted to prove to the people that we can play with everyone."

Auburn's Campbell contradicts Proposition 48 rule

May earn degree despite high-risk status as high school senior

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Collis Campbell, an Auburn University running back, is on the road to getting his degree. If he were a high school senior he probably wouldn't even be on the road to college.

The Collis Campbell story takes place away from the football field — in the classroom, of all places. His story probably is not unique, but it is newsworthy because he has a chance to get his degree. It is a story that may never be written for a bevy of blue-chip high school prospects who will be denied a chance at big-time athletics because of a new NCAA rule.

When Campbell graduated from Coffee High School in Florence, Ala., you could get an athletic scholarship with a predicted a 2.0 grade point average — on a 4.0 scale — in whatever high school courses you happened to take.

OVER THE objections of numerous black educators, the NCAA changed the rule. Beginning this fall, to be eligible to even practice in his first year, an incoming freshman at a Division I institution must have a 2.0 high school GPA in a core curriculum of specified courses, plus a score of either 700 on the SAT test or 15 on the ACT, although there is a sliding scale (higher GPA, lower test score, and vice versa) for two years.

"It's safe to say he'd be ineligible to practice or participate as a freshman," said Dr. Patrick Waters, the Auburn athletic department's academic counselor, "but (now) he has an authentic chance (to graduate)."

"That would be the sad part about it," said football coach Pat Dye. "One of the rewards is to see a youngster everyone wants to put out on the street graduate.

"With some of these (disadvantaged) kids, survival is the most important thing. Most of them are raised without thinking about going to college. Four years ago, you couldn't hardly communicate with Collis. Now, he'll be a fifth-year senior in the fall and he's one of the most popular kids on the team."

Waters also noticed the change. Late last month, Campbell told Waters he was dropping a course in anatomy.

"When Collis first came here, he wouldn't have had the presence of mind to drop the course," Waters said. "He would have just stopped going to class."

And, of course, he would have failed the course rather than get an incomplete grade and another chance. Under those circumstances, he eventually would have flunked out of school.

DURING HIS first two years at Auburn, Campbell was well on the road to flunking out and Waters went so far as to send a memo to Dye saying "in my judgment he'll be suspended from Auburn."

"Coming out of high school, he didn't have the work habits necessary to be a success in anything," said Waters. "His intellectual situation was limited because he was not raised in a situation where books and magazines were a part of life.

"With the educational demands suddenly placed on him, he didn't figure to be a success here" because of "the completely foreign environment from which he came," Waters said.

Campbell's story was, according to Waters, "a formula for failure at a university, or anywhere else."

But with continuous academic supervision and tutorial help, Campbell perservered and became a college survivor.

"We had to love on him every day and it was a struggle to keep him in school" Dye said.

"You could see that he had some ability, some talent, but he was homesick, not adjusting very well to being away from home. He wasn't adjusting too well academically and he had a long, long way to go."

Campbell said he "always wanted a college education, but I wanted to play football more than get a degree.My freshman year I wanted to play so bad I said if I can't play I'm going home. I didn't know there was more to going to college than just playing football.

"In high school, people tell you you're gonna be like (former Georgia All American) Herschel Walker and it makes you feel good. When I got here it wasn't like that. I was one pea in a big pod. When I got here, I didn't want to do anything but play football and my grades were in trouble," he said.

THEN, in the spring of 1984, "The light began to burn a little brighter," Dye said. Waters' memo to Dye two years ago played a major part.

"If he (Campbell) didn't have a 2.0 average the next semester, he'd be gone," Waters said he told Dye. "But since that time, he's reversed his situation. After that he began to respond in a positive way to the tutoring sessions and the reports from the tutors were encouraging.

"I wasn't trying to motivate him by frightening him, but he began to come to my office and report on what he'd done on his examinations instead of my having to find out. He began to do all the little things that authentic students do — taking notes and studying them."

Campbell conceded the memo "shook me up, scared me. It was shape up or ship out. Dr. Waters has brought me a long way education-wise. I can't say it's been easy. At times I just wanted to give it up. Now, the more I work, the better I feel at the end of a quarter. I don't get that quitting sensation."

Auburn recruited Campbell four years ago as one of eight freshman running backs, including All American Bo Jackson and Tommie Agee.

"We knew we were oversigning," said Dye, "but Collis was a big ol' strong youngster (he's 6-foot-2, 225 now) who we knew had some limitations academically when we signed him. But at that point in time we needed some bodies who had a chance to grow and develop and you take chances."

No one is sorry.

"He didn't play much as a freshman (five carries, 41 yards) while Bo became an instant star," Dye said. "He came back the next year (1985, nine carries, 44 yards) but missed most of the year with injuries.

"In '84, the year Bo hurt his shoulder, he was really outstanding (66 carries, 511 yards, Auburn's second leading rusher). He had a lot of big runs."

CAMPBELL, asked to redshirt last year after a great spring practice. Auburn had switched from the Wishbone to the I-formation and Jackson was the No. 1 tailback, backed by Brent Fullwood.

"He was beginning to make progress academically," Dye said, "and if he had an extra year I thought he'd be pretty close to getting his degree when he got through the fifth year. It was ideal for us because we had depth at tailback."

It turned out to be ideal for Campbell, too, although he figures to back up Fullwood at tailback — and possibly Agee at fullback — this fall.

"I want my degree," said Campbell, who is switching his major from physical education to industrial arts. "I'm more mature, more grown up. I thought I could do this, I thought I could do that. Now, I know I have to work for everything I get.

"My No. 1 goal is to play professional football, but I've got another goal — to get my degree."

Nordiques 3, North Stars 2

QUEBEC — Dale Hunter's power-play goal in the second period was the decisive score.

Hunter took a pass from Steve Patrick after the pair broke away on a 2-on-1 and fired a shot into the wide open net past Minnesota goaltender Jon Casey at 10:48.

Whalers 11, Blackhawks 4

HARTFORD, Conn. — Kevin Dineen had two goals and three assists, Dave Tippett had two goals and two assists and John Anderson added a pair of goals to spark the Hartford Whalers.

The five-point night by Dineen tied a Hartford club record for points in a game. Dineen also equalled his career-high for goals with his 24th and 25th scores. Tippett logged his second two-goal game of the season and now has 14 goals.

The victory was only the fourth in the last 13 home games for Hartford.

Rangers 2, Penguins 2

The Penguins, 0-5-1 in the their last six games, earned their 70th point with the tie and maintained a one-point lead over the fifth place Rangers for the final playoff spot in the Patrick Division.

Duguay, playing his third game for the Penguins since he was obtained in a trade with Detroit, scored his 20th goal of the season at 17:13 of the second period. He took Mike Bullard's pass and blasted a shot from the left circle past goalie John Vanbiesbrouck.

Each team had two shots on goal in overtime. The Rangers are 0-6-5 in sudden death, one of three NHL teams that has not won in overtime.

NHL

Canucks 1, Bruins 1, tie, OT

BOSTON — Dave Reid's power-play goal early in the third period lifted the Boston Bruins to a tie with Vancouver as the Canucks equalled their team record of 15 consecutive winless games on the road.

Vancouver rookie goalie Wendell Young made an outstanding pad save on Reed Larson's 30-foot wrist shot 29 seconds into the extra session. Stan Smyl's shot for the Canucks hit the post 16 seconds later.

The Canucks, who moved to within two points of third-place Winnipeg in the Smythe Division, were unable to win for the seventh straight game, having lost four and tied three. The Bruins, 2-0-1 in their last three games, outshot Vancouver 43-25.

Reid tied the game with his eighth goal of the season and first since Dec. 22 on a power play 3:57 into the third period. Rick Lanz had broken the scoreless tie with 16 seconds left in the second period while Vancouver had a two-man advantage.

Capitals 5, Blues 4

ST. LOUIS — Mike Gartner scored three goals to power the Washington Capitals.

Gartner's hat trick was the 11th of his career, a club record. The old record of 10 was held by Dennis Maruk. It also was Gartner's third three-goal game of the season and second against St. Louis. The other one came on Oct. 29 at Washington.

Troubled John Hiller returns to baseball

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP) — John Hiller, who fought back from a heart attack to become one of the baseball's best relief pitchers, thought he was doing the right thing, getting out of the game before he really had to.

He stood in front of the Detroit dugout and applauded the Tiger fans in 1980, the night it was announced he was leaving.

But now, six years, three business ventures and two marriages later, Hiller has quietly returned to baseball as a pitching coach in the Tigers' minor league system.

He can be found every morning in the giant green shed where the minor leaguers dress in Tigertown, across the drive from the modern concrete park where the big club works out.

He pulls the uniform over a still-trim body about 9 a.m., sneaking a couple of smokes, cupping them in his hand so the young players in the other room won't see. At 10 a.m. every player in the Tigers farm system is limbering up, and Hiller is back at what he loves best — baseball.

"When I retired, I probably could have played a little longer," said Hiller, who will be 43 in April. "I guess I missed putting the uniform on."

AT FIRST, Hiller tried selling life insurance, then farming in Michigan's Upper Peninsula and finally running a country store in Florida. But nothing seemed right.

So Hiller wrote a letter to Jim Campbell, the president of the Tigers, and asked for a job. Campbell helped induct Hiller into the Canadian Sports Hall of Fame last autumn and the two talked about it in some detail.

Campbell said okay and Hiller reported for work a few weeks ago.

"It's been fun," Hiller said. "Just being around ballplayers, regardless of ages, that atmosphere around athletes is so much fun.

"Just putting a uniform on again in a professional capacity is as exciting as anything."

Hiller himself was about the most exciting thing the Tigers had going many times during the 1970s.

FOLLOWING his heart attack in 1971, which caused him to miss 1½ seasons, Hiller came back to establish a major league record of 38 saves in 1973. The following year he set a record for victories by a relief pitcher — 17. He finished his career with 125 saves, still a Tiger record.

"You want to know something? All of our doctors warned us not to allow John to come back after that heart attack," Campbell remembered.

"He was working out with our top farm club. I went down there and took him up in the stands. I tried for over an hour to fire him, to tell him he was finished. He said he absolutely wouldn't give it up. So I said nuts to it then, and ordered him up to the big club. He pitched against Chicago the next night."

"That was my biggest thrill, just coming back after the heart attack," Hiller said. "Richie Allen hit a home run off me — the first batter. But I threw three strikes and I was so happy. I got two by him.

"I didn't care. I knew I could do it after all that time. I was happy."

He appears to be happy now. Hiller and his second wife, Linette, own a 40-acre farm in the Upper Peninsula, near Hermansville. She travels with him as he makes the rounds of the Tigers' five minor league clubs.

Hiller said he doesn't aspire to be anything more than what he is. He said he wouldn't want to coach in the big leagues because his wife couldn't travel with him.

"I think I would get more satisfaction working with 40 or 50 kids, seeing them come along the next four or five years," Hiller said.

"Besides, these kids are more disciplined. When I came through this very building 23 years ago, we were more interested in what was going on downtown — the group I came up with. These kids are better listeners."

Sporting News celebrates 100th

By TOM COHEN

ST. LOUIS (AP) — On a wall in the archives of The Sporting News hangs a handwritten message from former Negro League baseball star James "Cool Papa" Bell.

The Sporting News is 100 years old and going strong.

In its time, the weekly tabloid has chronicled major league baseball, and reflected this country's triumphs and tribulations.

"What we did is we mirrored sports and we mirrored life in these here United States," said Paul Mac Farlane, 66, the staff historian for The Sporting News. "You could tell the Depression, you could tell the hard times. We reflect the people and the times."

"It's interesting how baseball and society did go hand-in-hand," said Publisher Richard Waters, who took over five years ago.

In 1903, editor A.J. Flanner and two other men drafted the national agreement that created the modern era of major league baseball. The document was typeset at The Sporting News and sent to a meeting in Buffalo, N.Y., where it was adopted with almost no changes.

During World War I, 150,000 copies of The Sporting News were purchased each week by the American League and sent to U.S. troops in Europe. Readers were urged by the Postmaster General to affix a one-cent stamp to the paper and drop it in a mail box. The Postal Service then forwarded those issues overseas as well.

In 1942, The Sporting News heralded a letter from President Franklin D. Roosevelt to the baseball commissioner that stated his belief "it would be best for the country to keep baseball going" during World War II.

"But for him," former Publisher J.G. Taylor Spink wrote in an editorial following Roosevelt's death three years later, "the game would have been forced out of business for the duration."

Spink once agreed to let Vice President Richard M. Nixon write a column for the paper, only to have President Dwight Eisenhower forbid it. Eisenhower thought it would be inappropriate.

More recently, The Sporting News was one of the few items from home allowed the hostages in Iran by the can embassy was overtaken in Teheran.

The Centennial Issue features cover pictures of Ty Cobb and the man who last season broke his record for career hits — Pete Rose. It has 106 pages.

Quite a change from the first issue, published March 17, 1886. It contained eight pages that emphasized "base ball," but also had articles on boxing, horse racing and the theater.

The publisher was Alfred H. Spink, a 31-year-old sports writer and entrepreneur new to St. Louis in the 1880s.

Spink decided the St. Louis Browns' American Association pennant of 1885 had created enough interest in baseball to sell a sports paper. The initial circulation was 3,000.

The Sporting News, the only name the paper has ever had, grew quickly. Spink eventually talked his brother Charles into helping him run it. Eventually, Charles' son, Taylor, and grandson, C.C Johnson Spink, took over until the paper was sold to Times Mirror Co. for $18 million in 1977.

Under Taylor Spink, the paper was devoted entirely to baseball. Not until the 1960s did other sports get coverage in The Sporting News, and only after Taylor Spink died in 1962 non-baseball figure pictured on the cover.

"Johnson Spink did realize that this publication couldn't survive on baseball alone," said Waters, who was an executive at Readers Digest and associate dean at Harvard Business School before he took over The Sporting News.

Since Waters' arrival in 1981, circulation has doubled to more than 700,000 with most of the copies sold now through subscriptions.

The company is a sports publishing empire, producing statistical yearbooks for baseball, football, basketball and hockey; books that review sports history; and The Sporting Goods Dealer, a monthly trade publication. Annual revenues are $35 million.

BASKETBALL— Gary Williams, coach at Boston College, was named head coach at Ohio State Saturday, replacing Eldon Miller. Miller, who was fired Feb. 3, will continue to coach the Buckeyes in the NIT. Williams, who has spent the past four years coaching at Boston College, said he signed a five-year contract at $75,000 a year, making him the first Ohio State coach to sign a multiyear contract...

Iona College president Brother John Driscoll said he will not stand in the way of coach Pat Kennedy taking the head coaching job at Florida State, and probably will take no legal action to hold Kennedy to his contract. He added, however, that he wants Kennedy to clear up "the untidiness and even the unseemliness of what is taking place."...

LSU planned to boycott its first round NCAA playoff game, it was confirmed, when notified by the NCAA that center Jose Vargas would be ineligible unless the school documented his amateur athletic standing. Vargas' participation in a summer league in the Dominican Republic was the reason. Thursday the NCAA accepted LSU's documentation of Vargas' standing, and he was cleared to play...

SKIING— Just two days ago, retiring Holly Flanders predicted teammate Pam "Slam Bam" Fletcher could be a force in the downhill in years to come. The prediction has already started to come true. Fletcher, who was nearly dropped from the U.S. World Cup squad earlier this season, captured her first World Cup victory Saturday, winning the final women's downhill of the season. Switzerland's Maria Walliser, who finished third, claimed the season downhill title...

BASEBALL— A non-union company is expected to replace the union security guards that have patrolled Yankee Stadium since World War II, according to a spokesman for Yankees owner George Steinbrenner. Mark Balaban, a union spokesman, said, "One of the most generous employers when it comes to putting players on the field, is replacing dedicated guards with inexperienced, underpaid guards. Steinbrenner doesn't hesitate to spend the necessary money to entertain the fans and pay ballplayers, but this is the first time he's cut corners when it comes to compromising the safety of the fans."...

Nordiques edge North Stars, 3-2

Associated Press

Nordiques 3, North Stars 2

QUEBEC — Dale Hunter's power-play goal in the second period was the decisive score.

Hunter took a pass from Steve Patrick after the pair broke away on a 2-on-1 and fired a shot into the wide open net past Minnesota goaltender Jon Casey at 10:48.

Whalers 11, Blackhawks 4

HARTFORD, Conn. — Kevin Dineen had two goals and three assists, Dave Tippett had two goals and two assists and John Anderson added a pair of goals to spark the Hartford Whalers.

The five-point night by Dineen tied a Hartford club record for points in a game. Dineen also equalled his career-high for goals with his 24th and 25th scores. Tippett logged his second two-goal game of the season and now has 14 goals.

The victory was only the fourth in the last 13 home games for Hartford.

Rangers 2, Penguins 2

The Penguins, 0-5-1 in the their last six games, earned their 70th point with the tie and maintained a one-point lead over the fifth place Rangers for the final playoff spot in the Patrick Division.

Duguay, playing his third game for the Penguins since he was obtained in a trade with Detroit, scored his 20th goal of the season at 17:13 of the second period. He took Mike Bullard's pass and blasted a shot from the left circle past goalie John Vanbiesbrouck.

Each team had two shots on goal in overtime. The Rangers are 0-6-5 in sudden death, one of three NHL teams that has not won in overtime.

NHL

Canucks 1, Bruins 1, tie, OT

BOSTON — Dave Reid's power-play goal early in the third period lifted the Boston Bruins to a tie with Vancouver as the Canucks equalled their team record of 15 consecutive winless games on the road.

Vancouver rookie goalie Wendell Young made an outstanding pad save on Reed Larson's 30-foot wrist shot 29 seconds into the extra session. Stan Smyl's shot for the Canucks hit the post 16 seconds later.

The Canucks, who moved to within two points of third-place Winnipeg in the Smythe Division, were unable to win for the seventh straight game, having lost four and tied three. The Bruins, 2-0-1 in their last three games, outshot Vancouver 43-25.

Reid tied the game with his eighth goal of the season and first since Dec. 22 on a power play 3:57 into the third period. Rick Lanz had broken the scoreless tie with 16 seconds left in the second period while Vancouver had a two-man advantage.

Capitals 5, Blues 4

ST. LOUIS — Mike Gartner scored three goals to power the Washington Capitals.

Gartner's hat trick was the 11th of his career, a club record. The old record of 10 was held by Dennis Maruk. It also was Gartner's third three-goal game of the season and second against St. Louis. The other one came on Oct. 29 at Washington.

Troubled John Hiller returns to basesball

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP) — John Hiller, who fought back from a heart attack to become one of the baseball's best relief pitchers, thought he was doing the right thing, getting out of the game before he really had to.

He stood in front of the Detroit dugout and applauded the Tiger fans in 1980, the night it was announced he was leaving.

But now, six years, three business ventures and two marriages later, Hiller has quietly returned to baseball as a pitching coach in the Tigers' minor league system.

He can be found every morning in the giant green shed where the minor leaguers dress in Tigertown, across the drive from the modern concrete park where the big club works out.

He pulls the uniform over a still-trim body about 9 a.m., sneaking a couple of smokes, cupping them in his hand so the young players in the other room won't see. At 10 a.m. every player in the Tigers farm system is limbering up, and Hiller is back at what he loves best — baseball.

"When I retired, I probably could have played a little longer," said Hiller, who will be 43 in April. "I guess I missed putting the uniform on."

AT FIRST, Hiller tried selling life insurance, then farming in Michigan's Upper Peninsula and finally running a country store in Florida. But nothing seemed right.

So Hiller wrote a letter to Jim Campbell, the president of the Tigers, and asked for a job. Campbell helped induct Hiller into the Canadian Sports Hall of Fame last autumn and the two talked about it in some detail.

Campbell said okay and Hiller reported for work a few weeks ago.

"It's been fun," Hiller said. "Just being around ballplayers, regardless of ages, that atmosphere around athletes is so much fun.

"Just putting a uniform on again in a professional capacity is as exciting as anything."

Hiller himself was about the most exciting thing the Tigers had going many times during the 1970s.

FOLLOWING his heart attack in 1971, which caused him to miss 1½ seasons, Hiller came back to establish a major league record of 38 saves in 1973. The following year he set a record for victories by a relief pitcher — 17. He finished his career with 125 saves, still a Tiger record.

"You want to know something? All of our doctors warned us not to allow John to come back after that heart attack," Campbell remembered.

"He was working out with our top farm club. I went down there and took him up in the stands. I tried for over an hour to fire him, to tell him he was finished. He said he absolutely wouldn't give it up. So I said nuts to it then, and ordered him up to the big club. He pitched against Chicago the next night."

"That was my biggest thrill, just coming back after the heart attack," Hiller said. "Richie Allen hit a home run off me — the first batter. But I threw three strikes and I was so happy. I got two by him.

"I didn't care. I knew I could do it after all that time. I was happy."

He appears to be happy now. Hiller and his second wife, Linette, own a 40-acre farm in the Upper Peninsula, near Hermansville. She travels with him as he makes the rounds of the Tigers' five minor league clubs.

Hiller said he doesn't aspire to be anything more than what he is. He said he wouldn't want to coach in the big leagues because his wife couldn't travel with him.

"I think I would get more satisfaction working with 40 or 50 kids, seeing them come along the next four or five years," Hiller said.

"Besides, these kids are more disciplined. When I came through this very building 23 years ago, we were more interested in what was going on downtown — the group I came up with. These kids are better listeners."

Sporting News celebrates 100th

By TOM COHEN

ST. LOUIS (AP) — On a wall in the archives of The Sporting News hangs a handwritten message from former Negro League baseball star James "Cool Papa" Bell.

The Sporting News is 100 years old and going strong.

In its time, the weekly tabloid has chronicled major league baseball, and reflected this country's triumphs and tribulations.

"What we did is we mirrored sports and we mirrored life in these here United States," said Paul Mac Farlane, 66, the staff historian for The Sporting News. "You could tell the Depression, you could tell the hard times. We reflect the people and the times."

"It's interesting how baseball and society did go hand-in-hand," said Publisher Richard Waters, who took over five years ago.

In 1903, editor A.J. Flanner and two other men drafted the national agreement that created the modern era of major league baseball. The document was typeset at The Sporting News and sent to a meeting in Buffalo, N.Y., where it was adopted with almost no changes.

During World War I, 150,000 copies of The Sporting News were purchased each week by the American League and sent to U.S. troops in Europe. Readers were urged by the Postmaster General to affix a one-cent stamp to the paper and drop it in a mail box. The Postal Service then forwarded those issues overseas as well.

In 1942, The Sporting News heralded a letter from President Franklin D. Roosevelt to the baseball commissioner that stated his belief "it would be best for the country to keep baseball going" during World War II.

"But for him," former Publisher J.G. Taylor Spink wrote in an editorial following Roosevelt's death three years later, "the game would have been forced out of business for the duration."

Spink once agreed to let Vice President Richard M. Nixon write a column for the paper, only to have President Dwight Eisenhower forbid it. Eisenhower thought it would be inappropriate.

More recently, The Sporting News was one of the few items from home allowed the hostages in Iran by the can embassy was overtaken in Teheran.

The Centennial Issue features cover pictures of Ty Cobb and the man who last season broke his record for career hits — Pete Rose. It has 106 pages.

Quite a change from the first issue, published March 17, 1886. It contained eight pages that emphasized "base ball," but also had articles on boxing, horse racing and the theater.

The publisher was Alfred H. Spink, a 31-year-old sports writer and entrepreneur new to St. Louis in the 1880s.

Spink decided the St. Louis Browns' American Association pennant of 1885 had created enough interest in baseball to sell a sports paper. The initial circulation was 3,000.

The Sporting News, the only name the paper has ever had, grew quickly. Spink eventually talked his brother Charles into helping him run it. Eventually, Charles' son, Taylor, and grandson, C.C Johnson Spink, took over until the paper was sold to Times Mirror Co. for $18 million in 1977.

Under Taylor Spink, the paper was devoted entirely to baseball. Not until the 1940s did other sports get coverage in The Sporting News, and only after Taylor Spink died in 1962 non-baseball figure pictured on the cover.

"Johnson Spink did realize that this publication couldn't survive on baseball alone," said Waters, who was an executive at Readers Digest and associate dean at Harvard Business School before he took over The Sporting News.

Since Waters' arrival in 1981, circulation has doubled to more than 700,000 with most of the copies sold now through subscriptions.

The company is a sports publishing empire, producing statistical yearbooks for baseball, football, basketball and hockey; books that review sports history; and The Sporting Goods Dealer, a monthly trade publication. Annual revenues are $35 million.

✪ POSTAL JOBS ✪

CLERK & CARRIER POSITIONS
($9.48/hr to start)

Special announcement for all candidates planning to sign up for the Clerk-Carrier Examination at the Odessa Post Office as well as many other Post Offices in the 797 Zip Code Area when it is announced. [Since it won't be offered again for at least 3 years, don't miss out!]

4-HOUR WORKSHOP
Score 95-100% or Your Tuition is Refunded!

NOW is the time to prepare. The pressure is on to score as high as possible to get the job. Career Postal Workers will now earn a starting salary of $18,532 plus benefits — with an accelerated step increase plan; men and women, regardless of age, are eligible. The first step toward a postal service career is getting your name onto the "Register of Eligibles," which is accomplished by passing this Exam. To be one of the first hired, you need to get one of the higher scores! And to be hired at all during the next three years, you will need to score at least 95%.

This workshop is being offered now, prior to the formal announcement of the examination dates, to give you adequate time to prepare for the test. Many post offices begin testing within a week of the announcement which isn't enough time to prepare properly. By starting now, you'll be ready to attain high scores using our methods when the test is given:

Come to the workshop. If you don't feel, at the end of the course, that it will help you achieve a score of 95% or better, don't pay for the workshop! Furthermore, if your score is less than 95% on the official exam after using our techniques, we will immediately refund your tuition in full!

WANT TO RELOCATE? We are the publishers of The Postal Alert, the bi-weekly newsletter giving you postal exam dates nationwide. Only The Achievement Center provides this service. Learn how you can relocate to any area of the country you like.

- You are invited to bring your tape recorder to record the workshop for personal exam review.
- You may attend as many extra sessions of the workshop as you like (on a space available basis) without additional tuition charge.

WORKSHOP TUITION — $40 (includes guaranteed 4-hour Workshop, The Corey Guide to Postal Exams [with 6 complete practice tests], a Sample Exam with Answers, Workshop Workbook, "12 Important Steps for Getting Hired into the U.S. Postal Service" Booklet, Follow-Up Consultation Privileges, Achievement Award to High-Scorers and Practice Kit containing Six Additional Practice Exams with Answers, Memory Test Flash Cards, "Simulated Exam" on cassette tape, and ANNOUNCEMENT WITH SIGN-UP DATES MAILED TO YOUR HOME). Please bring two sharpened No. 2 pencils with you to the Workshop. Seating is limited; pre-registration by phone is advised. Otherwise, you may register by arriving thirty minutes early. Tuition is payable at the door by cash, check, money order, MasterCard, VISA or American Express.

Lease this 1986 Audi 5000S for $279.98* a month.

Most astute people would rather put their money in stocks, bonds or municipal funds than in a car. We can appreciate that. That's why we're offering an exceptional alternative to buying. Consider this 1986 Audi 5000S. Consider too, the impressive list of standard features: cruise control, power windows and door locks, and electronic climate control system, plus the lease price includes a AM/FM stereo cassette and automatic transmission. Come in for lease details, and a test drive, you can lease this 1986 Audi 5000S for $330.18 a month. And feel comfortable about being comfortable.

*This offer is available only from participating Audi Leasing dealer on a 48-month closed end lease through March 31, 1986. No purchase option. No down payment is required, but month $279.98 payment and $350.00 security deposit are required in lieu of down payment. Payments are based on manufacturer's suggested retail price. Insurance, taxes and license are extra. VCI Leasing. Total lease payments $14,798.00 plus title per mile over 75,000. Registration fees, taxes, options additional.

CLOSING DAY

Days of searching for just the right home are over. You've found it and can hardly wait to move your easy chair and stereo equipment in and begin enjoying the large kitchen and comfortable family room that caught your eye the first time you saw the house. But, all that will have to wait until closing day. Most likely, that day will be anxiously awaited while myriads of research and paperwork are completed.

In Midland 'closing' is usually held at a title company, but much preparation has to be made before buyers and sellers can sit down with a closing officer and finalize the transaction.

"The first thing that we want as a title company is a contract... fully executed," said closing officer Becky Watzl of Permian Abstract and Title Company in Midland.

The sales contract must include names and addresses of the buyer and seller, as well as the legal description of the property to be transferred. It should also list which costs the buyer is to assume and which charges the seller will pay. Any items that are being reserved by the seller or repairs being required by the buyer should also be outlined. Any special conditions upon which the sell is dependent should be in writing at this point. All these details should be negotiated before the contract is executed, not at the title company on closing day.

The title company "is not the place to negotiate," said Watzl.

To protect the seller's interest, most contracts require the buyer to put up a deposit or earnest money, which may be held by the title company until closing, at which time it can be applied to the down payment or closing costs.

With the fully executed contract in hand, the title company can begin work. The first task of the title company is to "search the title and make sure that seller has capacity and right to sell," said Watzl.

The title is searched by the property's legal description, not the address (though the street address will be noted). Tax records are secured and public records are searched for any breaks in the title chain or other things such as liens which may cloud the title. Once all public records related to the title have been collected an examiner will sort through the documents to determine whether or not the title is clear.

If the company considers the title insurable, it will draw up a title commitment, which commits the title company to issuing a title policy for the property. This policy is designed to protect the purchaser and lender against loss through defects in the title. Any exclusions will appear on the title commitment. Also the commitment will list any title requirements or clouds that must be removed before the title can be insured.

The title company may also search public records to determine if there is anything which would prevent the buyer from purchasing the property. For instance, if there is an abstractive judgment against the buyer, a lender would not be secure in financing the purchase.

Meanwhile, the buyer should be busy securing any necessary financing. The lender, selected by the buyer, will receive the title commitment, listing any conditions or exceptions, to the lender.

The lender will require a credit report and probably require a current appraisal of the property. For FHA loans an inspection of the property will be necessary.

The seller's responsibilities during this time period include clearing any problems or fulfilling any conditions required to make the title insurable, as well as making any repairs and ordering any inspections required by the sales contract. If an FHA loan is being sought and any deficiencies are noted in the FHA inspection, these must be satisfied. Then, it must be re-inspected.

Finally a closing date can be set. Watzl said the last week of the month is the most popular week for closing, and Friday seems to be the favorite day. Whatever day closing is scheduled, it can go much more smoothly if each party knows what will be expected of them.

The settlement statement will summarize the financial transactions required to transfer the property. Though many people are unaware of it, in Texas individuals are entitled to see the statement 24 hours before closing. To insure that the statement is ready, you need to inform your closing officer if you want to see the statement early.

On the day of closing the title company will do a "down check" to verify that no documents have been filed in the district or county clerk offices which would jeopardize the insurability of title.

Make more of your floor: How to select the right floorcovering

The kitchen, often considered the heart of the house, is the most popular room for remodeling and renovation. An updated kitchen will add value to your home while providing years of family entertaining and dining pleasure.

Selecting a floorcovering, as part of an overall remodeling plan, can overwhelm even the experienced shopper, especially when you consider the wide variety of sheet vinyl and vinyl floor tile colors and patterns available.

But if you shop wisely, and know what to look for, you can find fashionable, functional flooring that suits your specific needs and stays well within your budget.

According to the experts at Tarkett, makers of quality vinyl floorcoverings, to get what you want, you must ask yourself a series of questions.

First, how much time do you and your family spend in the kitchen? What are the traffic patterns? What style cabinets and color of appliances will be used? How much time can you spare for upkeep? How much can you spend? All of these factors affect your buying decision.

Always the most popular choice for kitchens, vinyl floorcovering is available in two forms — sheet goods and tile. Sheet vinyl comes in standard widths — six, nine and 12 feet to provide a seamless, wall-to-wall effect. Vinyl tiles are available in nine and 12-inch squares.

There is a wide range of vinyl floorcovering products from which to choose, each priced according to the specific features and benefits it provides.

As a general rule, say the Tarkett experts, you should buy the best quality floorcovering you can afford. When you compare prices, remember that the cost of a professional installation is generally the same, regardless of the quality of the product you select.

Premium quality sheet vinyl products are more expensive, but offer top-of-the-line benefits. Deeper cushioning adds comfort underfoot, thicker wearlayers increase durability and ease of maintenance, and extended warranty programs like Tarkett's 10-year warranty, the strongest floorcovering warranty available, protect against wear and manufacturing defects.

An investment in a long-lasting, high-quality product with an extra-durable wearlayer is well worth it, especially if you hope to add to the value of your home or spend a great deal of time in the kitchen.

If you simply want to brighten up the kitchen in a rented apartment or a weekend house, economize with a lower-priced product that you can install yourself in an afternoon.

Decide how much time and effort you are willing to devote to maintaining your new floor. Tarkett's exclusive Guardian no-wax wearlayer is virtually maintenance-free and provides exceptional durability to the company's more expensive sheet vinyl products, of key importance in a high-traffic kitchen.

All Tarkett sheet vinyls and vinyl floor tiles feature an easy-care wearlayer, so you need not sacrifice quality or no-wax maintenance when you economize with a lower priced product.

For most vinyl floors, both sheet and tile, an occasional damp-mopping will remove ordinary dust and dirt. New specially formulated wearlayers resist scuffs and stains, and will retain their original beauty and shine without waxing.

Many sheet vinyls, like Tarkett's Delightt product, are designed specifically for do-it-yourself installation using the loose-lay method. They are easy to handle and install. Simply cut and fit the sheet goods around the room. Replace the molding and you have a new, permanent floor.

Vinyl floor tiles may be installed professionally but are also easy for the do-it-yourselfer. Tarkett offers an exclusive Sure-Stik adhesive backing on all tile products so that even the novice can lay a floor in an afternoon.

Tile also offers maximum design flexibility — with a little imagination, you can combine colors and patterns to create a unique, one-of-a-kind floor.

Before you shop, carefully measure the room or area for the project. Be sure that your measurements are precise, especially if you plan to install the new floor yourself.

A sketch of your floor plan that includes windows, doors, major appliances and other obstructions will assist the floorcovering salesperson in estimating your needs.

State-of-the-art technology allows manufacturers to create a wide range of decorative patterns to suit any budget — bold geometrics, delicate prints and natural-looking designs that realistically simulate brick, wood and ceramic.

To ensure a fully-coordinated room, collect swatches of your wallcovering, draperies and other furnishings in the room and take them along when you shop.

Select a floorcovering pattern that will enhance your overall decorating scheme, either as a subtle background for other objects or to make a bold statement on its own.

By evaluating your particular needs and family lifestyle, and by following Tarkett's guidelines, you can confidently choose a suitable floor that is not only good looking but a good value.

For more information about Tarkett's complete collection of sheet vinyl and vinyl floor tile patterns, call toll-free 1-800-FOR-TARKETT.

Much interest in homebuyers about mortgage loans

By MAY ADELAIDE BARBER

Recently there has been much interest among homebuyers in mortgage loans with a payout time of less than the common 30 year loan. Most of the lending institutions have a wide variety of home loans available, including both adjustable rate loans and the familiar fixed rate loans.

Prospective borrowers are being attracted to the shorter term, fixed rate loans for several reasons. A larger portion of their payment each month will apply to the reduction of their loan balance, resulting in a faster build-up of equity in their home. Even if the homeowner does not stay in one house for the entire life of its loan, when the time comes to sell the property he or she will realize substantially more cash if the loan on the house has a 15-year rather than a 30-year life.

A correllary of faster equity build-up is the reduced amount of the monthly payment which goes to pay interest. A $50,000, 30-year loan at 10% interest will cost $107,955.21 in interest over the entire life of the loan; whereas a $50,000, 15-year loan at the same interest rate will cost only $46,715.11 in interest over the life of the loan. This is a substantial difference.

The same $50,000 loan at 12% interest will have an even greater difference in interest paid over a 30-year period of time as opposed to a 15-year period. The higher the interest rate is on any given loan amount, the greater the savings in interest will be for a shorter term loan as contrasted with the same loan amount over a longer period of time.

Of course there is one major drawback to a shorter term loan: it costs more per month than a longer term loan. If the homebuyer is purchasing a home at the upper limit of the amount for which he or she qualifies, a 30-year loan is probably the best idea. It will lock the borrower into a smaller monthly commitment than the same loan with a shorter life. If, however, the borrower is more conservative in the amount of loan he or she applies for, the "enforced savings" of a 15 or 20-year loan may have great appeal. The chart just below will give a sample of the difference in monthly payments of two loan amounts at different interest rates for three different time periods.

CLOSING

The settlement statement which is used most often is the HUD settlement statement. The Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA) of 1974 requires that this statement be used when a "federally related" first mortgage loan is being made on a residence for one-to-four families. This includes FHA and VA loans as well as loans which will be purchased by federally-controlled secondary mortgage market institutions.

The closing officer completes the closing statement according to the instructions provided in the sales contract and by the lender.

Though a variety of settlement statements may be used, the HUD statement is a good one to review as an example.

The HUD statement is divided into 12 sections.

Sections A through H name the title company, the type of loan, the borrower, the seller, the lender, the property location, the settlement agent and place of settlement. It also states whether the form is an estimate to be reviewed prior to settlement or the actual costs.

Section I gives the settlement date and notes the date of prorations if different from settlement.

Section J summarizes the borrower's transaction. Listed here are the sales price, personal property cost and other settlement charges (which will be detailed in Section L) for which the buyer is responsible.

Adjustment for items paid by the seller in advance will be listed. This may include but is not limited to city taxes, county taxes, assessments, maintenance and school taxes. These amounts will be prorated so that the buyer and seller each pay for the portion of time that they own the property. The proration date is generally the same as the closing date. For simplicity, calculations are made as though each month had 30 days.

The sales price, personal property charge, settlement costs and adjustments are totaled to reveal the gross amount due from the buyer.

Deducted from the gross amount is the deposit or earnest money, principal amount of new loan(s) and existing loans being taken by the buyer.

In addition, the buyer will receive credit for items unpaid by the seller. This can include city taxes, county taxes, assessments and school taxes. Once again these are prorated.

Section K summarizes the seller's transaction.

The contract sales price, personal property charges along with adjustments for taxes, assessments and maintenance are totaled to show the gross amount due to the seller. The same proration policy as mentioned above is used to figure the seller's adjustments.

The amount due to the seller is reduced by the amount of payoff on mortgage loans being held and settlement charges (to be detailed in Section L). In addition, if the seller is carrying a loan for the buyer, this is also deducted. Accrued taxes, assessments and maintenance fees which are unpaid are also deducted from what is due to the seller.

Section L, Settlement Charges, is thdsection which sometimes catches first time buyers off guard. By this point in the transaction many services have been provided for by a number of individuals and companies. Payment for these services must be made from some account. If the sales contract was carefully prepared, it will have specified which party is responsible for each charge. Some particular charges are assigned by law to a particular party in the transaction.

The Settlement Charges section will list the charges, to whom the charges are due and who is responsible for the payment.

One column will list what will be paid from the borrower's funds. The second will show what comes from the seller's funds.

Settlement charges are divided into seven categories on the HUD settlement statement.

The first category is sales broker's commission. This is usually figured as a percentage of the sale price. Though negotiable (before a listing agreement is signed), three percent generally goes to the listing office and three percent to the selling office, making a total of six percent. The seller bears this cost, unless otherwise noted.

Items payable in connection with the loan represent the second category of settlement charges. The loan origination fee (usually one percent of the loan amount) and discount points (each point is equivalent to one percent of the loan) are collected for the lender. The appraisal fee, credit report charge and inspection fees are listed here. Other fees which may be included are courier fees, underwriting, tax research, mortgage insurance application and assumption/refinancing fees. Payment of these charges may be negotiated between buyer and seller.

The third category of settlement charges are often referred to as prepaids. These are paid by the buyer. These include interest to cover the period from closing day to the first day of the month and property insurance for one year. A mortgage insurance premium is often required to protect the lender against default. This may be financed with the property. One year's hazard insurance premium is also required because insurance premiums are paid in advance of coverage.

Category four includes an additional two months of hazard insurance to cover the time from closing to the approximate date of the first payment. (Beginning with the first payment, funds will be held in escrow for the next year's insurance premiums.)

Additional amounts for mortgage insurance, property taxes and annual assessments may also be required for reserve deposit with the lender.

Title Charges make up the fifth category of settlement charges. Settlement fees, abstract or title search, title examination, title insurance binder, document preparation, notary and attorney's fees, title insurance for lender's and owner's coverage, escrow fees, restrictions and messenger service are included in this classification of charges. The mortgagor's title policy is paid by the seller.

Government recording and transfer charges comprise the next category of settlement charges. Recording fees for the deed and mortgage are generally paid by the buyer, according to Watzl, while fees to record releases are usually charged to the buyer. Charges for tax certificate and tax/stamps are also listed here. Tax service fees and tax certificates are charged to the seller.

The last category of settlement charges includes items such as the survey and pest inspection. Seller and buyer can negotiate the payment of these items.

This completes the Settlement Statement.

Other documents also likely to be reviewed and signed at closing are a warranty deed, real estate lien note and a deed of trust.

There are four types of warranty deeds. A general warranty deed, whereby the seller (known as the grantor) warrants that he has the right to transfer the property and that the title is free from encumbrances, is most often required by title companies.

A promissory note is completed as evidence of the debt and agreement to pay.

Separate from the promissory note, a deed of trust is generally required in Texas. By the document the borrower executed a deed to a third party (trustee). If the borrower defaults on the loan, the lender can request that the trustee sell the property to satisfy the debt. If the loan is paid in full the title is cleared of the lien by a recorded release of debt.

Though buyers and sellers may be required to sign other documents such as equal credit opportunity notices, name affidavits and hold harmless agreements, the documents already discussed comprise the essence of the transaction.

Payment is then made, generally in the form of a cashier's check.

Watzl explained, however, that even though closing is over and you can move into your new home, the title company still has more to do. "Legally nothing is finalized until it is dispersed of record."

Thus, the title company has the transaction recorded in public records.

In addition, Watzl said, "Our job goes a little bit further after it is closed out...our responsibility is to disperse the funds."

The title company will distribute the funds, as directed in the settlement statement, once the loan has been funded and checks have cleared.

Fascinating Facts

by Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers

Coral producing animals are widely distributed throughout the world, but the majority are found in tropical and subtropical seas. Skeletons of warmwater corals are the chief component of coral reefs and islands. Delicate, precious coral, which has been used for adornment since Roman times occurs chiefly in the Mediterranean and grows like a branching, treelike skeleton. In the same group are a number of other tree corals as well as the massive blue coral, Heliopora. Still another kind is the Millepora which produces an intricate skeleton resembling intertwined branches.

Coral is primarily a warm weather item, which reminds us that warmer weather is coming. If you're still using a swamp cooler in the hot months, consider putting in a new high efficiency, energy saving Coleman air conditioning unit from SANITARY PLUMBING, HEATING & AIR CONDITIONING.

HOME improvement guide

The joys of owning a home are many, but very few homeowners are prepared for the amount of work that presents itself, especially during the first year of ownership.

What's even more shocking to the homeowner is the realization that such jobs as painting, tiling, winterizing and decorating, not to mention remodeling and redesigning, become ongoing projects that constitute a way of life.

Improving the home has become more than just a necessity, it's become an investment and the following merchants can be extremely helpful when persuing your home improvement needs.

Spring is the perfect time to start your home improvement projects. Now that the cold, heavy days of winter have ended, you can begin brightening your home with some fresh ideas. Call any of these experts and brighten your home as well as your spirits.

Improving and keeping up your home provides you with a sense of accomplishment and satisfaction.

LET'S TALK REAL ESTATE

Thank you, ARCO, Marathon, and other Corporate transferees...

for dealing with us many fine complements on our sales associates. You have described Langston Monarch agents as "professional", "relocated", "friendly", "helpful" and most of all, "totally committed" to successfully solving your housing needs, whether rental or purchase.

We are well aware that no transfer is accomplished without a great deal of stress. That is why our services are given with such calmness, empathy and understanding. We ourselves cannot tolerate high pressure salesmanship; therefore have never condoned it among Langston Monarch Associates.

Again, thank you for contributing to our city with your presence and business, and for giving Langston Monarch your trust and compliments.

We promise to continue offering the same easy, effective service that you expect and appreciate and that has earned our reputation as Midland's leading, most respected REALTOR.

Joanne Langston

From Sun to Sun... Fashion Shades are Fun

Text by Elizabeth Edwin Photos by Kent Porter

The "eyes" have it in fashionable outdoor eye wear for the spring. Almost any style of shade under the sun can be found this season, no matter what type might catch one's eye.

Faddish or fashionable, classic or colorful — store racks are stocked with sunglasses of all shapes, sizes, colors and price ranges.

Feasting one's eyes on the Midland area selection of sunglasses shows styles dating from the '50s "Cat's eye" shapes to the upbeat '80s punk or New Wave shapes, from versions of the "Blues Brothers" shades to the classic creations of designer wear.

Shades can be found in all sizes as well, from inch-high wraparounds to bug-eyed round lenses.

The variety of colors for spring shades is certainly an eyeful. Basic black, brown, white and tan frames are still readily available, but sunglasses are following the fashion color trends by sporting hues of green, yellow, orange, red, pink, purple, blue and the list goes on and on. Some lenses are also tinted a variety of colors besides the traditional browns, grays and blues.

Because color is important in spring fashions, you can coordinate shades to match almost every outfit — provided your the budget holds out. With some careful shopping, though, shades need not be a major expense. Some "fun" sunglasses can be purchased for as little as $10, and sometimes less on sale. These sale sunshades are often placed on a table or in a box, so be sure to look for lens scratches before purchasing.)

AT THE other extreme of the price spectrum, designer sunglasses can run as high as $170 for a pair of Porsche shades with 24 karat gold plated frames — complete with a designer case.

There are several factors that seem to determine what kind of sunglasses a person selects. For example, Cindy Hollinger, manager of The Sunglass in Midland Park Mall, said men seem to prefer the metal frames while women usually select plastic frames. She also noted that men are conservative in their choice of sunglasses, whereas women choose more fashionable shades.

"Men usually prefer black or brown frames with very dark tinted lenses. Women are more fashion oriented and are more interested in how the frames look than in the lens," Ms. Hollinger said.

"The teens usually go for the colors — pinks, purples, greens, yellows," said Ms. Hollinger. "The guys go for the wild glasses," she said referring to a pair of sunglasses resembling a stylized version of the black, plastic framed sunglasses worn by John Belushi and Dan Ackroyd in the "Blues Bothers."

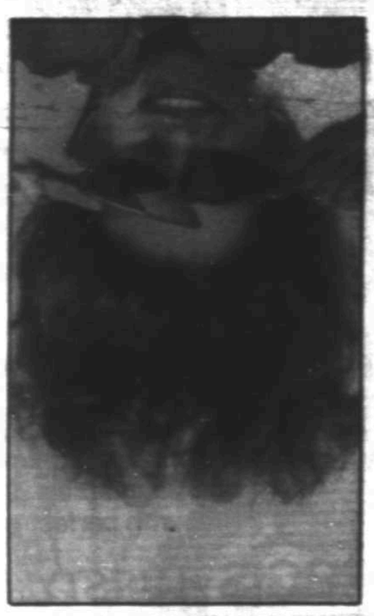
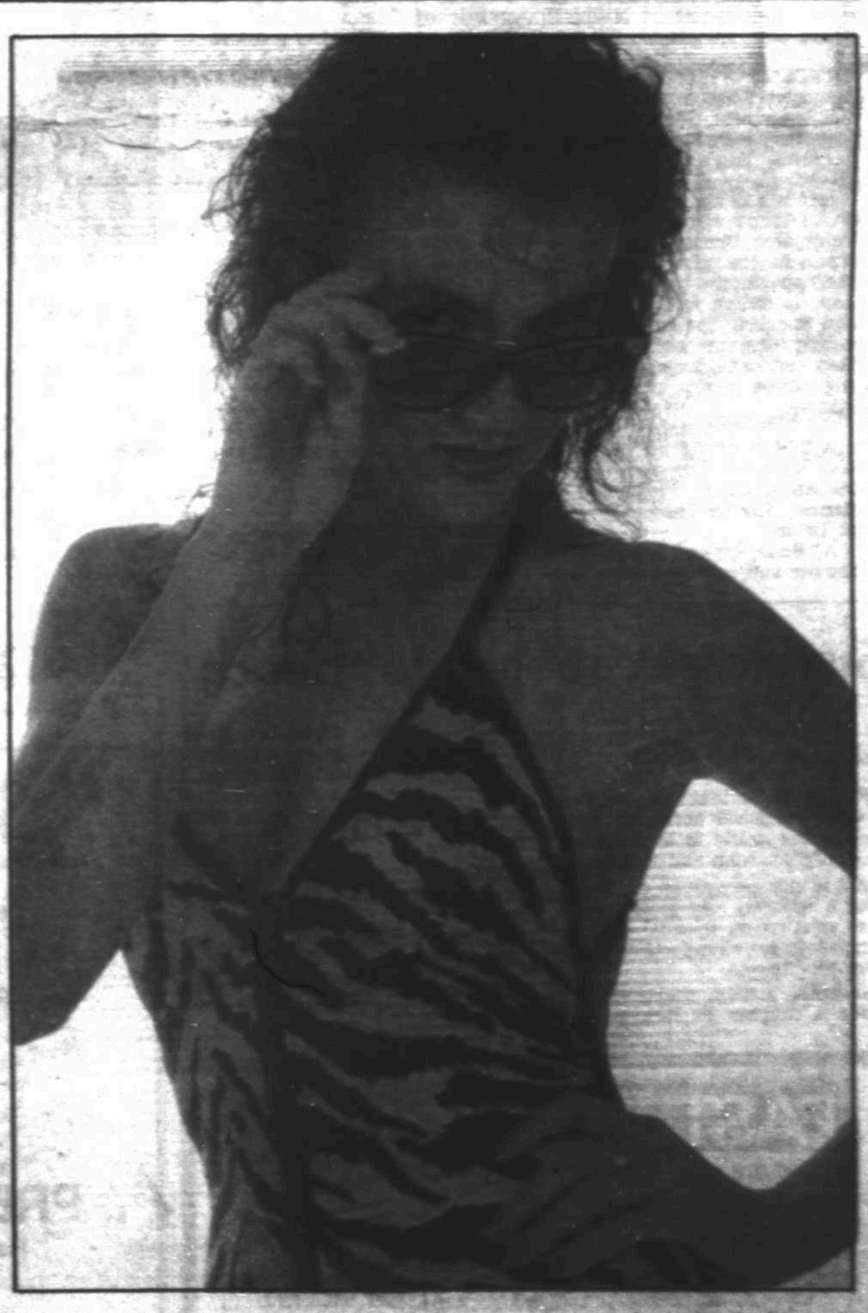
Helen Costilla, manager of Spencer Gifts in Midland Park Mall, said that ages 12-21 are buying the punk rock shapes and colors.

"Put any two loud colors together and they will wear them. Aqua with pink, pink with yellow, you don't miss them coming," Ms. Costilla said. "The kids also like the big ski glasses, and not for skiing. You notice I don't have any left right now. They look like welders but they don't care."





LENSES CAN be made from glass or plastic. Although plastic lenses do scratch easier than glass, most people prefer the plastic lenses because they are lighter, Ms. Hollinger said.

"Sometimes you can tell by the way a person is dressed what kind of sunglasses they will like and about how much they want to spend," Ms. Hollinger said.

Along with adding style and color to a look, protecting your eyes is another good reason for pulling on a pair of shades.

A slightly tinted glass lens will provide partial protection from the sun for your eyes, said Betty McSpadden of Texas State Optical.

"But as a general rule, light tints are for fun and fashion, and deeper tints are for more protection," Ms. McSpadden explained.

"Like these," said Ms. Hollinger, holding a pair of circular wire frame glasses with almost clear lenses, "we have these just because some people like the John Lennon look." Even such lightly tinted glass would help protect eyes, she said.

Just a car windshield will also provide some protection, Ms. Hollinger said.

Spencer Gifts sells a pair of sunglasses designed specifically to block the ultraviolet rays for tanning purposes. The glasses have no actual frame — they consist of see-through plastic, including the earpiece. The sunglasses come in purple, aqua and hot pink.

"The kids don't buy them to protect their eyes though, they just buy them to wear them," Ms. Costilla said.

POLAROID LENSES or ultraviolet protective lenses do not necessarily cost more — they can be purchased for as low as $10 — but you will not be getting optical quality lenses.

"The price of expensive glasses may be based on the way they look or on their quality, so it depends on what you want," Ms. Hollinger said, adding that just because a pair of sunglasses cost more does not mean it is a higher or optical quality lens.

Nita Bedford and Glen Fradenburg were honored at a series of lovely parties prior to their wedding Saturday evening in the First Christian Church.

The member of a pioneer Midland ranching family, Nita is the daughter of Sudy and H.G. Bedford and granddaughter of the late Nita and Hilory Bedford. Glen's parents are Treva and Dr. Glenn Fradenburg of Gulf Breeze, Fla.

The festivities began in February with a kitchen shower in the home of Barbara (Mrs. William H.) Jewell. Co-hostesses were Phyllis (Mrs. John) Grimland, Billie (Mrs. Paul) Karcher, Shirley (Mrs. Budge) McDonnold, Barbara (Mrs. Ralph) Way and Myna (Mrs. Jack) Young.

A "Mesquitas, Fajitas and Margaritas" party was held in the home of Mary and Ted LaCaff. Sharing host duties were the LaCaffs' children, Mary Ann LaCaff of Dallas and Ted LaCaff. Nita was feted with a recipe and ingredient shower in the home of Patricia Wettstein and her daughter, Laura.

Jackie (Mrs. Wesley B.) Perry was a co-hostess.

Wedding week events began with a cocktail party Thursday at the home of Margaret and Courtney Cowden. Other host couples were Nancy and Buddy Anguish, Jody and Jack Blake, Betty and Don Ewan and Carolyn and Bob Winkler.

The groom's parents hosted the rehearsal dinner Friday evening at Claudio's, while a bridesmaids luncheon was given Saturday in the home of Bennie Sue Thomas. Co-hostesses were Iona (Mrs. Victor) Vasicek and Nita's aunts, Elizabeth (Mrs. Harry D.) Wright of San Antonio and Anna Beth (Mrs. Archie P.) Farr.

The wedding reception was held at Midland Country Club, with music by the Jazmine Band of San Angelo. Members of the house party were Diane Winkler, Elizabeth Mashburn, Claire Aldridge, Ann (Mrs. James) Ritchie, Mary Ann LaCaff and Laura Wettstein. The groom's niece, Kristen Kuenn of Gulf Breeze distributed streamers to toss at the newlyweds as they left for a Ruidoso honeymoon. They will make their home in Midland, where both are employed.

RECENT VISITORS to Midland were Trish and Jeff Mathews, who now reside in Singapore. They were here to see Jeff's parents, Dorothy and Bob Mathews.

Jeff is a design engineer with FMC Corporation's Wellhead Equipment Division. His job assignment has given the couple the opportunity to see much of Asia, including Malaysia, Borneo and Bangkok, Thailand. They are anticipating a week in Japan as they return to Singapore following three weeks of stateside visiting.

A ROUND OF PARTIES here last weekend honored former Midlander Bobby Floyd and his fiancee, Sharon Thompson, both of Dallas.

A "Honey-Do and Fishing, Too" shower and barbecue were hosted for the prospective groom by longtime friends, Blake Feldt, Link Grimes, Robert Montgomery, Barry Levin, Clifford Hickey, Patrick Hickey, John and Susan Nichols and Kyle and Holly McDonnold. The party was held at Link's home.

The clever decorations featured fishing nets, duck decoys and other sportsmen's gear, and poster-size pictures of the honored couple as two-year-olds "greeted" guests. Adding to the evening's fun was the appearance of Abra-Kadabra's famous "gorilla" and "chicken," who serenaded the honorees.

Bobby's godparents, Vee and Bill Ross, entertained for the couple with a cocktail buffet at Midland Country Club. Background music was provided by Manhattan Skyline. Decorations featured a pair of heart-shaped ice sculptures, with soft pink lighting.

The home of Barbara and Bill Jowell was the setting for a brunch for the out-of-town guests. Co-hosting were Kaye and Bill Franklin and Beverly and Forrest Muire.

Special guests at the parties were the honored couple's parents, Cissy and Bob Thompson of Dallas and Sharon and Gene Floyd.

DORIS AND DAVE WATSON are among the latest Midlanders to enjoy a vacation at sea. Boarding the Norwegian Caribbean ship, the MS Southward in Miami, they departed on a seven-day cruise of the Bahamas. Ports of call were Puerto Plata, St. Thomas, San Juan and Nassau.

The couple particularly enjoyed two aspects of their sailing. One evening they were invited by the captain to the bridge, where they learned about the ship's navigation process. Another night they received an invitation to the captain's quarters, where they enjoyed visiting with the ship's officers. According to Doris, it doesn't take long to acquire cruise fever, and she and Dave are ready to go on another.

FERN AND MAC McGUIGAN were in San Antonio recently for a special Texas Sesquicentennial memorial service for the heroes of the Alamo. The event, sponsored by the Daughters of the Republic of Texas, which Fern serves as fourth vice president general, was held on March 6, the 150th anniversary of the fall of the Alamo.

Gov. Mark White addressed the group. The moving ceremony also included the Color Guard of the Joint Services, a poetic tribute to the fallen heroes, entitled "Call Out Their Names Again," a roll call of states and nations represented at the Alamo and echo taps by buglers from Fort Sam Houston.

Held in the Alamo chapel, the service was followed by a reception and buffet supper on the grounds. Guests were greeted by Governor White, San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros and Mrs. Grady Rash Jr. of Rockwall, president general of the DRT.

"There is no big difference in a lot of cheap or expensive glasses in the way they look. The big difference is if your eyes are very sensitive to distortion," Ms. Hollinger said, explaining that less expensive lenses may not be perfectly formed. "Also, people who wear contacts may have trouble with a distorted lens," Ms. Hollinger said.

Whether expensive or inexpensive sunglasses are purchased, there are ways to keep shades sparkling and scratch-free. To avoid scratching the lenses, The Sunglass recommends cleaning them with a 100 percent soft, cotton cloth such as a diaper or old T-Shirt.

"You should never use a Kleenex or paper towel to clean glasses because the paper has wood in it and it will scratch the lenses, especially plastic lenses," Ms. Hollinger said. "Also, don't use Windex on plastic lenses." Windex will remove the mirror film from lenses because it has too much ammonia in it.

The Sunglass recommends always wetting glasses to wash away dirt particles before wiping and to use a low-ammonia cleaner such as Glass Plus.

"And, of course, don't ever lay your glasses down with the lenses on a hard surface and keep them in a case when they are not being worn. If you just throw your glasses in your purse with your keys they are going to get scratched."

For a little extra style in shades, many places offer accessories for sunglasses such as decals or monograms on the lenses. Other popular accessories are cords for younger people while their elders usually choose thin chains to keep glasses close at hand.

Sunglasses not just for beach

By MONICA PEREZ
Copley News Service

From poolside to ski chic to ready-to-wear, sunglasses have moved into the fashion arena as a year-round accessory for men and women.

No longer associated exclusively with a leisurely day at the beach, sunglasses are an essential wardrobe component for all aspects of the active '80s lifestyle.

Invented in 1885, sunglasses have made a number of fashion statements throughout the century. Dark sunglasses were worn by Hollywood stars in the '30s and '40s to avoid recognition by their fans.

This trend re-emerged in the 1960s as urban club-goers and the song "I Wear My Sunglasses At Night" sparked a brief and ironic fad with considerably more aesthetic than practical value.

DEAR ABBY

Mother prays for daughter she gave up for adoption

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My daughter just turned 10. On her birthday I shed a few tears. I wish I could have held her and told her all the things a mother should tell her daughter when she turns 10. I wish I could have dressed her up and put ribbons in her hair, and ridden the merry-go-round with her until we both got sick, then laughed ourselves silly rolling down hills in the park! I also said a little prayer of thanks for having made the decision 10 years ago to give her up for adoption. I was barely 16 and wanted my daughter to have a better life than I could provide for her.

I feel confident that the parents who were blessed with her can give her what I could not and will love her as much as I did.

I pray my daughter realizes that it was not for lack of love that I gave her up, but because my love was brave and fierce and mature enough to let her go when I was but a child myself.

I pray that when she is 18 she will decide to look me up through an adoption search group, and we will meet again. The last time I held her tiny hand she was only 10 days old.

Until then, my thoughts and prayers are with her and her parents, and her birthdays will be an especially lonely time for this mom. — HOPEFUL IN L.A.

DEAR HOPEFUL: Are you aware that biological parents can register with International Soundex Reunion Registry, P.O. Box 2312, Carson City, Nev. 89702? Adopted children may also register, and when they become legal age, if both parties are registered and want to find each other, a match is made.

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about sex, drugs and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Men, women differ on sunglasses

NORWALK, Conn. (AP) — The taste of men and women in sunglasses differs, according to an analysis of last year's sunglass sales by the Sunglass Association of America, with headquarters in Norwalk.

The study showed that men prefer metal-framed sunglasses over plastics, while the reverse is true for women.

MISTER ROGERS

Decisions important to child

By FRED ROGERS
with BARRY HEAD

A wise friend of ours once gave us his definition of a good executive: a person who can make decisions — and is sometimes right. What to eat.... What to wear.... Whether to go or stay.... What kind of picture to draw.... What shape block building to build.... Whether to say yes or no....from our earliest years there are always decisions to make.

Later on, our decisions may seem more important: what to buy, where to live, what career to pursue, whom to marry, how to raise our children.

Yet, it's good to keep in mind that whatever age we are, the choices we have seem important to us, and that the feeling we have no choices, no matter how young or old we are, can be a source of sadness and despair.

There's something else that makes the choices of early childhood especially significant: Like everything else about who we become, the choices we make when we're older — and our feelings about choice-making in the first place — grow out of our first experiences with choosing.

Have you ever known someone who just can't seem to make decisions? One acquaintance of ours comes to mind, a woman who finds it easier to live with bare walls than to choose pictures to hang on them. For her, it's as though there's only one right answer, and faced with all the possibilities, she feels sure her choice is likely to be wrong.

We didn't know her when she was little, but choice-making can be particularly hard for very young children when there are too many alternatives to choose from, or when making a choice may result in disapproval or anger from the grownups they love.

Asking a child, "What do you want to wear today?" is so open-ended a question that it may invite a child to make a choice that is clearly inappropriate and has to be overruled.

Instead, it may be more helpful to offer limited choices such as, "Would you like to wear your red sweater or your blue one, your brown pants or your green ones?" That way, a child is presented with realistic alternatives where there is no question of "right" or "wrong."

When parents help their children learn that there are such things as limited, realistic choices, they're giving them an approach to choice-making that will be valuable throughout life.

By avoiding situations that confront a child with right-wrong decision making, they can help their children learn to make choices with confidence and with the knowledge that although some will work out better than others, there will always be new ones to make.

But why not avoid all these problems by making our own, grown-up decisions for our children until they're grown-up enough to make them for themselves?

For some parents, that might seem the easier path to take. But I wonder how likely a child is to become a realistic and optimistic choice-making adult without having grown through manageable choices offered by loving caregivers.

There's something else, too: We all have a deep-seated need to feel we have some control over what happens in our lives. That need was with us as soon as we began feeling our individuality.

Most children are well on their way toward that feeling by the time they're 1 year old, and even then, in some 1-year-olds, they're probably starting to wonder just how much choice they have in this world.

Part of feeling good about ourselves is feeling that we have the chance to do what we want to do and to be what we want to be. As we grow older, we'll find out more about what's realistic for us and what isn't.

But if we grew, from our earlier years, with the sense that there are always choices to be made, we may be able to let go of some of our hopes without despair, accept some of our mistakes with composure and go on choosing new roads to fulfillment.

COL. DEY CHAPTER, DAR

Col. Theunis Dey chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, met in the home of Mrs. James Ormond. Mrs. Edward N. Gideon presided, assisted by Mrs. L.H. Michaelson in the opening ritual. After the pledge of allegiance, Mrs. Walter C. Hubbard III led the group in reciting the American's Creed.

National Defense Report was given by Mrs. John P. Butler. Mrs. C. Wallace Craig read the minutes. Mrs. Richard Henderson gave the treasurer's report and presented the budget for the coming year. Mrs. Robert L. Boothe gave a membership committee report.

Mrs. Ormond gave the program on "Genealogical Research," which was followed by a question and answer period.

Children come in all shapes and sizes.

Some have blond hair, some have black hair, some are tall and some are short.

Some also have disabilities.

Kids on the Block, a Junior League of Midland Inc. project, features almost life-sized puppets of children with various disabilities and handicaps. These fabric-covered "kids" are the star performers in a variety of programs presented to Midland school children by the Junior League.

The purpose of the programs is to teach children, through the use of puppets, what it is like to be handicapped and how people with handicaps can live normal lives.

Kids on the Block was begun in 1977 by Barbara Aiello, a special education teacher in the Washington, D.C., area, said Kathy Grella, chairman of the project. "The Council on Special Education in Midland heard about it and brought it to Junior League for consideration. It was voted on and we got a grant and it became one of our projects."

The national kids' "family" currently has 21 puppets available, both disabled and non-disabled, and Midland's Junior League owns nearly all of them. "We are trouping with seven," Mrs. Grella said.

The puppets are designed to provide children with answers to their questions about handicaps. "The national office makes up the scripts and all the information that we have in order to answer the children's questions," Mrs. Grella said. "We put on a skit with two puppets, then we have a question-and-answer session with the puppets answering the kids' questions."

Each puppet has a name and a history, just like any child. The Junior League's puppets are:

★ Mark Riley, age 12, who has cerebral palsy;

★ Renaldo Rodriguez, 11, who is blind;

★ Mandy Puccini, 12, who is deaf;

★ Ellen Jane Peterson, 21, who is mentally retarded and works as a veterinarian's assistant;

★ Jennifer Hauser, 11, who has learning disabilities;

★ Jimmy Randolph, 12, who is emotionally disturbed;

★ Diane Delaney, 11, who has leukemia and has lost most of her hair;

★ Valerie Perkins, 14, who has spina bifida and walks with crutches and leg braces;

★ Stephen Arthurs, 9, who was physically abused;

★ Nguyen Huy Nam, 11, who is Vietnamese and non-disabled;

★ Brian McDaniel, 12, who has epilsey;

★ Brenda Dubrowski, 11, is non-disabled but thinks she's too fat;

★ Melody James, 11 is non-disabled;

★ Joanne Spinoza, 14, is non-disabled but has a complexion problem.

Each of the Kids on the Block is unique in some way, just like real children. The program uses non-disabled puppets to ask some of the questions to their friends, who happen to be handicapped.

"Kids on the Block are not only disabled, but they emphasize differences," said Mrs. Grella.

Charity Ball planned

Mayan architecture and exotic birds will help carry out the theme of the annual Charity Ball of Junior League of Midland Inc. scheduled for 8 p.m. Friday at Midland Center. Music will be provided by Ed Gerlach's orchestra and Destiny. Don Strange of San Antonio will cater the food.

Funds raised by the ball will help support Junior League-sponsored community projects, including adult basic education, audio-visual screening, Bedside Buddies, Council Against Substance Abuse, Children's Dental Clinic, Director of Community Services, Exploratory Experiences, Haley Library, Hearthstone, Junior League Singers, Kids on the Block, perinatal clinic, STAND TALL, tape lending library, Teen Court, visual projects and Young People's University.

The first Charity Ball, presented in 1951 when the organization was the Midland Service League, netted $2,732.83. Midland Service League became the Junior Welfare League of Midland in 1954, and in 1964 became the 206th Junior League in the United States. Last year the ball brought in approximately $87,000, according to Karen Scharbauer, treasurer of the organization.

Mrs. L.B. Hotchkiss is president of Junior League of Midland Inc. Charity Ball committee members are Mrs. Fred H. Wetendorf Jr., chairman; Mrs. Jon Short, decorations chairman; Mrs. James Van Staveran, assistant decorations chairman; and Mrs. David Clarke, sponsor chairman.

Average price for each puppet is about $600 or $700, she said. Mark, who is in a small wheelchair, is the most expensive. Two puppets the Junior League would like to eventually acquire are Sarah Michaux, 13, who has an artificial arm, and Christine Kontos, 12, who has diabetes.

Puppets come with scripts and props, she added, and there are several more scripts the group would like to have, on such subjects as divorce, aging, gifted and talented, fire safety, asthma and drug abuse.

"We troupe seven times in the fall and seven times in the spring," Mrs. Grella said. This year performances were given for second- and fourth-graders in Midland public schools and next year the Junior League plans to present Kids on the Block for the private schools, too.

"We have had requests to do performances for the Boy Scouts, the Girl Scouts, church groups, the PTA," she said. In fact, there have been so many requests for programs that "we organized a night group to fill in."

"We eventually would like to get all the puppets," Mrs. Grella said. "We have almost all of them. They are coming up with so many new ones — there's a burn victim."

Because the program is designed for school children, Kids on the Block will be "put on hold over the summer," she added.

By RICHARD SULLIVAN
Copley News Service

The pleasant Lee, that like an island fayre, encloseth Corke with his divided flood.
— Edmund Spenser (1552-1599)

CORK, Republic of Ireland — Almost since its chartering 800 years ago, this seaport city in the deep south of Ireland has been known as "Rebel Cork."

To paraphrase the brokerage house slogan, Cork earned it — the hard way.

Except for the last rebellion, the Anglo-Irish War of 1919-1921, Cork has, almost invariably, been on the wrong (i.e., losing) side. Or, as it was once put by Joe Malone, the sage of Limerick City and former (alas and alack) proprietor of a distinguished pub hard by the River Shannon: "the non-prevailin' side."

It shows in the looks of the city, there being very few historic buildings left in the wake of the destruction visited on it over the centuries.

But it doesn't show in the faces of the people in this, the Republic's second largest city (130,000, compared with Dublin's approximately 1 million). And even the closures the past few years of two major manufacturing operations — the Dunlop Tire Co. and Ford Motor Co. plants — are viewed as only temporary setbacks.

SO WHAT DID they decide to do? Pick another fight to pass the time? No, they decided to hold a birthday party under the name Cork 800. The celebration has included a variety of events — athletic contests, street fairs, art exhibits and dance, music and theater performances. These were in addition to such annual events as the Guinness Jazz Festival, Carling Country Music Festival and the Cork Choral Festival.

"Oh, it's been a fine year indeed, a grand year," said John Hanlon, a cab driver often summoned by the porter of the Metropole Hotel to show visitors around the city.

"Was it a real corker, John? Was it top cork?"

"Aww, off with you now for all that," he groaned amiably.

One thing hasn't changed over the centuries. From the commanding view of the countryside afforded by the city's St. Patrick's Hill, you can see — at least in the mind's eye — Blarney Castle some 5 miles to the north and the equally famous Ring of Kerry just beyond that. Or even the Rock of Cashel in neighboring Tipperary and, to the south and west, Kinsale and Bantry Bay.

Which is to say that Cork is an excellent place to stay while you visit some of the most famous tourist attractions Ireland has to offer. You should allow at least a full day for a ride around the Ring of Kerry; the same for a trip to Cashel. There are formal tours out of Cork, or you can have someone like John Hanlon show you around for, as he says, "a price agreeable to both parties."

CORK'S ROOTS GO BACK to the sixth century when a Connacht monk, Finbarr (or St. Finbarr, or Fin Barre or even just St. Barr, take your choice), founded a church and school on the south bank of the River Lee near the spot now occupied by University College. The town itself grew out of a mile-long island formed by two channels of the Lee as it courses its way to the sea just a few miles away. The island was mostly a 'arsh, in Irish a corcach or "marshy place." Hence the city's name.

Things were reasonably peaceful until A.D. 820 when the Vikings hit town (literally), stealing everything that wasn't nailed down and burning just about everything that was. The Norse raids on Cork continued sporadically over the years, as they did over much of coastal Ireland, until the invaders decided to settle down in the country and were, eventually, absorbed into the native population.

And so it was that at the time of the Anglo Norman invasion in 1172, Cork was still a strongly Danish city, although it was then ruled by one Dermot MacCarthy, the Lord of Desmond (South Munster). The Normans broke the power of the Danes, persuaded MacCarthy to marry a Norman lady and eventually induced him to pay homage to Henry II, who, in return, gave Cork its first city charter in 1185.

GRADUALLY, LIKE the Danes before them, the Anglo-Norman settlers were absorbed by the native population (becoming, as the old saying goes, more Irish than the Irish).

The city eventually became so prosperous and so independent that it decided to mint its own coins. Ths didn't sit too well with the English Parliament, which officially proclaimed the coinage "utterly damned."

Travel Ireland in comfort on early-morning trains

By RICHARD SULLIVAN
Copley News Service

CORK, Republic of Ireland — As national showcase trains go, they're not as glamorous as South Africa's Blue Train, nor as fast as Japan's Bullet Train.

But Ireland's crack, early-morning specials between Dublin and Cork (the Breakfast Trains?) do offer something the others can't: a relaxing trip through the lovely countryside this Emerald Isle is so famous for.

The Cork-bound train is a mirror image of a Dublin-bound version, each of which leaves at 7:30 a.m. each business day. There are similar runs in each direction each evening between Dublin's Heuston Station and Cork's Kent Station. Even with three stops for connecting trains, they make the 165-mile, one-way trip in 160 minutes. And best you be on time; it's very rare that the trains are not.

Moreover, these intercity ("Mainline") trains are as comfortable as they are fast — up to 90 mph along some stretches. The coaches are air-conditioned, fully carpeted and have double-glass windows that block out virtually all exterior noise. The cars also provide a much smoother ride than the railway's older equipment, principally because of their modern air-suspension trucks or wheel sets (known here as "bogies").

The Cork-Dublin trains, along with similar runs between Dublin and Waterford and Dublin and Galway, are part of a new era in railroading in the Irish Republic. They were introduced in the summer of 1984 to mark the 150th anniversary of what the Irish Transport Co. (Coras Iompair Eireann, or CIE for short) describes as the debut of the world's first suburban railway.

It was on Dec. 17, 1834, that the steam engine Hibernia left Dublin's Westland Row (now Pearse) Station for the borough of Kingstown (now known as Dun Laoghaire) 7 miles to the south.

Fly-rights updated

WASHINGTON (AP) — There have been lots of changes in air travel in recent years, with new airlines coming into business and lots of competition on prices and schedules. To help consumers get the best deal, the government has updated its booklet "Fly Rights."

The first new edition of the booklet in three years, Fly Rights covers how to avoid being bumped, what to do if that happens, and discusses such areas as baggage liability, smoking rules, what to expect if a flight is delayed or canceled, and what to consider when shopping for an airline ticket.

HELP YOURSELF

TO TASTE TREATS LIKE THESE, WITH WEIGHT WATCHERS Quick Start® PLUS PROGRAM!

Help yourself save money by joining Weight Watchers at this unbelievably low price! Now there's no excuse. Losing weight may never again cost so little or taste so good!

Here's how Quick Start Plus works: Each week you'll be given a number of calories to "spend" any way you choose, little by little or all at once. As you advance through the program, you'll get more calories to spend. Go to your favorite Chinese, Italian or Mexican restaurant and order right from the menu. Go to a cocktail party and help yourself to some hot hors d'oeuvres, or go all out with a dish of delicious ice cream or even a chocolate candy bar, now and then.

Now you have choices, so help yourself to the foods you love most, within limits, and still lose weight faster and easier!

"It's like money in the bank. You get to 'spend' calories on the foods you like best and still lose weight."

Parents stop money if man gets married

By DR. RUTH WESTHEIMER

Westheimer

Q. My fiancee's family is different from mine in every way, and if I marry her, my parents say they will stop putting me through my medical training, which will last two and a half more years. I am so torn up about this I can hardly function.

A. You must function in any case, so look after that first. When you are a practicing physician, you will always urge patients to go for the right kind of help. Begin acting like that now, and get whatever help there is to keep you going as a student in a crisis.

I don't say you can't survive without regular hours with a shrink, but a cool and helpful person to talk to and to help you lay out your problem will save you from losing nights of sleep and days of valuable work time.

Fairly or not, wisely or not, your parents have a gun to your head right now. It is not worth finding out if they would really carry out their threat. Parents holding purse strings have been known to pull them tight.

You have to tell your fiancee that you must go on with your training now, not giving in to your parents but holding to a serious plan that you have so far carried out well. This is the logical thing to do. In your profession you learn to do the logical thing, even under great stress. When you fail to do that, you fail as a doctor.

Q. My sister-in-law wears low-cut tops and really acts sexy. I can't leave the dinner table when I eat there or people will see how she has turned me on. What can I do? How should I approach her?

A. Approach her in reverse! Of course you don't approach your sister-in-law. That would create nothing but trouble. You just sit at that table and think of pouring ice water on your problem. And get rid of the idea that you have to do something because that happens. It is no compass needle, pointing to your destiny.

Researchers study effects of calcium on high blood pressure

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The jury is still out on whether calcium fights high blood pressure, according to a study at the University of Texas Health Science Center.

Of 28 patients treated with various amounts of calcium, one fifth had a 20- to 30-point drop in pressure, while another fifth had an equally large rise in pressure.

"More study may show a way to select those whose blood pressures will be helped by calcium supplements and those who will be harmed," says Dr. Norman Kaplan.

'Unnecessary' meetings frequent

NEW YORK (AP) — One of the more frustrating parts of any businessperson's day is trying to reach an associate on the telephone and to be told "I'm sorry, he's in a meeting," notes MIS Week.

Reporting on a survey of 100 of the nation's top companies, the computer management information systems journal says that executives say they attend 16.5 hours of meetings a week.

This adds up to 825 hours for a 50-week year (with two weeks off for vacation), says the publication.

Of this total, executives told the survey-takers that a full 20 percent were useless or unnecessary.

Your child will gain one full grade level in just 36 hours.

Guaranteed.

The Sylvan Guarantee

Your child will improve at least one full grade equivalent score in math or reading skills after 36 hours of instruction, or we will continue up to 12 additional hours of instruction, at no further cost.

In just a short time, your child will be reading at a full grade level better than he or she does now. Or solving math problems that right now seem incomprehensible. And, best of all, discovering how it feels to succeed.

Such striking progress involves no secret formula. Just patience, some hard work—and two hours a week for 18 weeks, at a Sylvan Learning Center.

How Sylvan can guarantee success.

Remove the competition, the stress, and the fear of failure from education, and what happens? Children learn.

This simple approach has been tested and proven at Sylvan, where thousands of children have learned how to do better in school. Which is why we offer this unique promise: your child's math or reading skills will improve by at least one full grade level after just 36 instruction hours. Or we will provide up to 12 additional hours of instruction, at no further cost. Improvement will be measured by a nationally-recognized achievement test, given before and after instruction at Sylvan.

A program designed specially for your child.

At Sylvan we concentrate on helping your child master the vital basic skills he's missing—and conquer the problems holding him back. Your child will learn at his own pace in his own program. With the personal attention and positive encouragement that the classroom simply can't provide.

Your child can begin to do better—today.

There's a Sylvan Learning Center near you. Why not call today for a free consultation? The sooner your child begins, the sooner he'll gain a full grade level in reading or math. We guarantee it.

Measurement will be based on a nationally-recognized achievement test for improvement in either reading (comprehension or vocabulary) or math (computation or application)

Former bank president Bob Gribble, in his new domain, says changing careers was scary, but owning a business was something he always wanted.

LENDING TO MENDING

Bank president changes careers, buys garage

Business/Oil Writer

It's not every day that one finds a bank president willing to give up all the social status and prestige that goes with that job to take over a small business, but that's exactly what Bob Gribble did earlier this year.

Gribble, 41, who says he has no regrets about the transition, gave up his job as president of Community National Bank to run Mid-Tex Auto, an automobile service business he purchased on February 1.

"I have always wanted to be my own boss and own a business. I saw that opportunity when I heard this business might be for sale," Gribble explained.

Gribble, who was not looking for any particular type of business, said he has always been a little interested in working on cars and even held a job at a service station when he was a teenager. "When this opportunity presented itself, I couldn't pass it up."

The banker-turned-shop-owner said that one of the main reasons he made the decision to purchase Mid-Tex was because it was a well-run business and former owner Don Hollums agreed to stay on and manage the shop for him.

"There has been no change in employees and the average daily customer will see no difference in the business since I bought it. Don's willingness to stay and work with me was a major factor in my decision to purchase this business."

A born optimist who sees good times ahead for Midland, he acknowledged that most people would not consider giving up the security of a career to purchase a business in today's economical uncertainty. "I just really feel that this is the right thing for me to do. The business is an established one in a great location."

The location, on Missouri and "A", has been an auto repair shop for more than 25 years. Some of the employees at Mid-Tex have been there for more than 20 years and Hollums has been running things for more than five years.

Gribble admits it is a little scary to get out of a profession that he knows and understands and has been working at for all of his adult life. "But because the same employees are going to remain with me, it is not as scary. I feel less pressure now and I'm certainly having a lot of fun with this. And there are fewer government regulations to worry about," Gribble said.

FDIC feeling strain of the times

Inundated by $11 billion in bad loans

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — To help American savers sleep at night and to give more stability to the American banking system, the Congress, more than 50 years ago, created a federal agency that insures deposits at the nation's commercial banks.

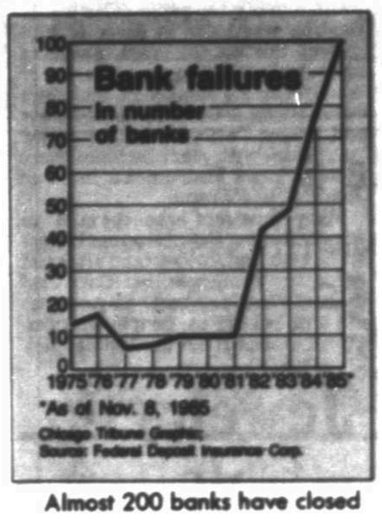
In the early 1930s, banks were failing by the hundreds and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. was chartered to restore depositors' confidence. Though it did not have the explicit backing of the full faith and credit of the United States government, it carried the implicit governmental backing, which seemed to suffice.

Today, banks are failing at rates unheard of since the Depression, and although confidence in the system remains intact, the government's insurance line of defense is struggling under a huge workload, an administrative nightmare. "Never in its 52-year history has the FDIC been under such strains," says William M. Isaac, chairman from 1981 to 1985.

In the last two years, almost 200 banks have failed. Consequently, the FDIC finds itself inundated with $11 billion in bad loans and other assets that have to be sold for whatever cash they will bring. Its legal department is involved in more than 20,000 lawsuits and is bringing six times the number of enforcement actions against banks that it brought five years ago. Its list of banks whose financial health is impaired now exceeds 1,100, and the agency anticipates 120 bank failures this year, possibly many more.

IN ADDITION, the agency reported Friday that it was setting aside $2.3 billion to protect against losses on loans it assumed from the failures of the Continental Illinois National Bank and other banks. The total was more than twice the loan losses the agency has taken at any one time, and it said it planned to spread those losses over 1984 and 1985.

If that was not enough, the agency's chairman, L. William Seidman, is battling the Office of Management and Budget over staff cuts. Although the FDIC is self-financing through insurance premiums, and neither takes from nor gives to the Treasury, the budget office insists that a large portion of the insurance agency must come under the provisions of the new budget-balancing law sponsored by Sens. Phil Gramm, Warren B. Rudman and Ernest F. Hollings.



Almost 200 banks have closed in past two years

"Gramm-Rudman has hit us at the worst possible time," said one top staff official at the agency. "Our bank supervisory staff is already a little depleted."

The cuts have not touched the agency's portfolio of Treasury securities and other assets — the reserves that back up its insurance of deposits of up to $100,000 per account. Those reserves rose last year, despite the loan losses, because the income from premiums and investments exceeded the payouts. At the end of 1985 the agency's fund stood at $17.9 billion — still financially solid, according to banking experts.

WHAT DOES worry Seidman, his senior staff and banking experts are the strains on management, personnel and data processing systems, strains they fear could cause managerial gridlock. "The personnel have been overworked for five years, and they face two or three more years of the same," Isaac said.

The size of the problem is illustrated by these figures: In the FDIC's first 47 years, it closed banks with assets totaling $9 billion, at a cost to the agency of $500 million. Since 1981, the agency has shut down banks with more than $75 billion in assets, at a cost to the agency of almost $6 billion.

Seidman says the budget office wants to place the agency's bank examiners under Gramm-Rudman budget restrictions. He says that reducing the number of examiners invite bank fraud, more failures and a greater cost to the insurance fund.

Already this year, the agency has scrapped plans to add 600 examiners to deal with the growing number of problems among its banks.

"Just when we need more bank examiners, we are going to have to pull banking supervisors from the field, and that's going to end in a certain amount of disturbance," Seidman said. "Some people at OMB think deregulation means leave the industry alone. I say it means you need more policemen out there."

EVEN WITHOUT budget cuts, the agency would be in a managerial and personnel crisis. It takes two to three years of training and experience to make a new bank examiner effective, and, according to officials, almost a quarter of the agency's bank supervision force of 2,123 are new hires.

The need for more examiners seems likely to increase. Not only has the number of problem banks risen to 1,141 from 850 a year ago, but also the agency recently told Congress that unless the farm economy improves, the trouble and failure rates could skyrocket.

Inevitably, a high failure rate leads to a swollen legal backlog. The FDIC's legal staff grew by 60 percent last year, but still the paperwork, filing and supervision of more than 20,000 lawsuits is staggering, officials say.

The biggest burden is liquidating failed banks. The agency has increased its liquidation staff to 3,300, from 2,156 in 1984 and 460 in 1980, and it is still hiring. "You can't imagine what it's like to close 120 banks," said Isaac. "You have to go out and set up 120 different receiverships, 120 sets of books, 120 inventories."

Disposing of some bank assets can require special expertise. Among $11 billion in assets the agency is trying to turn into cash are a coal mine, a fleet of tuna boats, a racquetball club, a golf course, race horses, X-rated movies and a Chicago building once used as a brothel.

"And our midwest division has Sitting Bull's war shirt for sale," said Steve Katsanos, an agency spokesman. "It comes adorned with human scalps."

Texas city still trying to cash in on attention from Saturn interest

SHERMAN, Texas (AP) — The fizzled hoopla over General Motors' Saturn plant is like being engaged to Prince Charles — "Even if you don't marry him, everybody knows who you are."

That's the observation of Rick Jones, vice president of RSR Properties Inc. in Sherman, a North Texas city of 31,000 that didn't win the national race to lure GM's $3.5 billion plant and the 6,000 jobs it promised.

Eight months after GM announced it was putting its much-publicized plant in Tennessee, officials here and in the contiguous city of Denison are still trying to cash in on the attention their top-five finish garnered in the multi-city competition.

More companies and people are interested in the area 75 miles north of Dallas than ever before because of all the attention over the plant, officials said, but the road to riches isn't yet built.

"Some companies are taking a look at our area who otherwise wouldn't have known we existed," said Grayson County Judge Horace Groff. "But land prices shot up so much that it may be keeping some people away."

That land inflation may have been the most direct result of all the publicity — no companies have moved to Sherman-Denison solely because of it — as prices shot up as much as 100 percent in some areas.

"Land was going for $2,500 to $3,000 per acre pre-Saturn," Jones said. "At the height of speculation last spring, we sold one parcel at $25,000 per acre cash."

Speculators snapped up options on land that had no utilities or even roads, agreed Jerdy Gary, president of Sooner Oil Corp. and a past Denison mayor.

But since GM said last July 29 it would build its plant near Spring Hill, a city of 1,110 people about 30 miles south of Nashville, land fever in this North Texas area has almost completely subsided, Jones said.

Land prices have begun to slide to an average of $18,000 to $20,000 per acre, and Sherman's record year for building permits — $55.3 million worth in 1985, compared to $31.3 million in 1984 — surely won't be repeated this year, said city Chamber of Commerce spokesman Charlie Dromgoole.

So instead, officials are trying to capitalize on the publicity Saturn brought them. It was certainly long-lived: The speculation began last January and was fed by so many rumors that Dromgoole keeps his records filed under "GM Rumors-1985."

GM, which repeatedly delayed its site announcement, never issued any interim statement or encouraged the hundreds of U.S. cities who put in bids for the plant. That didn't stem the flow of gossip.

At first, about 100 Texas cities were running the Saturn race, so any tidbit of "news" about GM's inclinations spread like wildfire.

"But we felt like we were in a no-lose situation," Dromgoole said. "We couldn't begin to afford all the national exposure Saturn brought us. We will be feeling the effects from that for the next few years."

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Who is really responsible for this devastation?

At the risk of sounding out another doom and gloom song, let me paint an unpleasant picture so that I may make a point (or point a finger, as the case may be.)

"It's as if the Lisbon earthquake, the hurricane of 1938, the sinking of the Titanic, the Watts riot, the Chicago fire and the eruption of Vesuvius all happened in the space of two months."

That's how financial columnist Robert Reno describes the $9 trillion devastation of assets caused by oil price drops in the past two months.

Where did the assets go? Consider this: Two months ago there are 700 billion barrels of oil in the world, worth about $27 per barrel or $19 trillion. Today, calculates Reno, they are worth approximately $10 trillion, meaning $9 trillion has been wiped out, or $15 trillion, if one cares to measure the devastation of wealth from the peak high of almost $40 per barrel in 1981. To put it in more concrete terms, the loss of assets is equivalent to the total valuation of all the property and buildings in New York City.

It is a massacre of assets without historical precedent, akin to an economic nuclear attack, not even the stock market crash of 1929 compares. Perhaps, because of its unparalleled dimensions, it has gone unnoticed locally. After all, it's hard to be concerned about statistics when you are one of them.

It is a situation that has translated into serious concern for the survival of many oil operators, drilling companies, and service companies. There are even serious concerns about the possible collapse of oil producing nations like Mexico, and 370 oil-belt banks in the U.S. have been put on the Comptroller of the Currency watch list.

But oil assets are not the only thing at stake. Falling oil prices will also be translated into falling prices for all forms of energy, including coal and natural gas. This year alone the owners of world energy are expected to lose $700 billion in annual income as a result of oil price declines in the past two months.

Get the picture? Want to know who is really responsible for this economic blood bath? A lot of us do.

All fingers point to the Saudis, who have not been reluctant to accept blame, except for the past few weeks, during which they have attempted to shift to others, namely oil exporters outside OPEC. No doubt the Saudis can turn the spigot on and off to affect market prices, but there is no conclusive proof that they have actually flooded the world with oil. Some experts, in fact, suggest that there is little, if any, supply-demand factor that is causing the crash of the crude oil market. We would, of course, be foolish to dismiss the idea that a "flooded" market is responsible for the collapse of the oil market, but still we are not entirely sure that is the case.

Who or what else, then, might be responsible for the collapse of world oil prices?

Other fingers have been pointed toward the New York Mercantile Exchange. Except for the fact that the world was better off when they were dealing in sow bellies and soy beans, we know very little about this institution which has come to play such a major role in our lives. Here is what we do know:

- The New York Mercantile Exchange, where crude oil is bought speculatively on the futures market, effectively creates the spot price for crude oil.
- The spot market in turn drives the posted prices, the actual price received for oil up or down. The price received today by Midland oil producers is the result of spot market prices.
- Crude oil contracts are bought on margins on the Exchange, using very little money, and the up and down limits for the commodity are very wide.
- For the most part these contracts are for "paper barrels". That is, the buyer has no intention of taking delivery and the seller has no intention of delivering. Less than five percent of the contracts on the Exchange are actually delivered.
- In some instances the number of barrels bought on the Exchange exceed the barrels available for sale. In one instance 11 times the monthly production of West Texas Intermediate was sold on the Exchange.

What this tells us is that some people are making millions buying oil that doesn't exist with money they don't have, while devastating the real assets of people with real dollars invested in real production.

All of this brings us to wonder: Is this process fair, ethical, moral or legal? All, some or none of the mentioned, and should it be challenged?

Secondly, who are the players in this speculation game — major oil companies? Saudis? international banks? kids in tennis shoes earning money for college? Midland oil operators with deep pockets? Russians? Libyans?

Isn't it ironic that world assets have been devastated, hundreds of U.S. banks and businesses stand on the brink of disaster and we don't even know who is doing this to us. Think about it.

Denison Chamber of Commerce spokesman Duane O'Neill said the Saturn project "helped us focus on the need to get ready for companies like that. We have started a 115-acre industrial park since then, too."

Texarkana, which straddles the Texas-Arkansas border and put in a Saturn proposal of its own, echoed that sentiment.

"Saturn helped us consolidate a package of what the city could provide, so next time we'll know exactly what we can do without going through all those meetings again," said city spokeswoman Linda Crawford.

"We've had people come in since then saying, 'I didn't know where Texarkana was, but my boss heard about Saturn and told me to check it out'," she added.

Saturn, which is scheduled to begin production on GM's new subcompact car in 1989, also piqued Dallas-area businesses' interest in Sherman-Denison, Dromgoole said.

"I see our area continuing to be a real bright spot as the Metroplex moves in our direction," Gary said.

Yet whether Saturn was welcome in the first place is still a sore spot for many area residents.

"Some felt it would drain the workforce and make local companies drastically change their benefits, facilities and pay scales," said Denison Mayor Ronnie Cole. "It would also have completely changed the way of life for our city of 24,000."

Dromgoole estimates that perhaps 70 percent of Sherman's residents didn't like the idea of such a massive plant moving in, while O'Neill said Denison was more in favor of it.

Over the last 10 years, Sherman has corralled an impressive string of manufacturing employers, including Oscar Mayer & Co. Inc., Libbey Glass and Folger Coffee Co. Other major companies with plant facilities there include Texas Instruments Inc. and Johnson & Johnson.

Many investors who counted on the addition of Saturn to that list got stuck with high-priced land after GM opted for Tennessee, but Gary said most of them are "real players who are still behind us, people who can afford to stick it out until things pick up again."

LENDING

Losing the prestige of a bank presidency to become owner of an auto repair shop has not phased Gribble. "Prestige has never been a very big deal with me. The main thing I liked about banking was the people contact and I still have that here. Now I am free to move around and am not tied behind a desk all day long."

"I haven't been getting as many invites to the country club for lunch, though," he joked. "And no more banker's hours. I'm usually here by six or six-thirty and don't leave until six or six-thirty in the evening. That is one big change. I hung up my suits and got out my levis."

The change hasn't seemed to bother his family either. "My wife, Linda, has been very supportive of my decision. I was a little concerned about what my two teen-aged daughters would think of the change, though. At that age kids are very conscious of images and those kinds of things. But it hasn't seemed to effect them at all."

Gribble thinks it all boils down to finding something you're happy doing. "People shouldn't be tied down by what someone else's image of them is. I am still Bob Gribble, whether I am sitting behind a desk at the bank or leaning over the engine of a car."

Economist: Oil prices now depend on producers

Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

ANALYSIS

Falling oil prices are the big economic news of early 1986. Prices on the spot market have declined to $12 from $30 a barrel at the end of the summer. Why has this happened? Where will prices end up? And what difference will it make to consumers and to the economy?

In recent years, as energy conservation gradually held down the growth in world demand for oil and as oil supplies expanded from non-OPEC sources such as the North Sea and Mexico, the OPEC oil cartel has had to produce less and less oil in order to maintain its price. The burden of adjusting output fell mostly on Saudi Arabia, the dominant producer and leader of the cartel, whose output declined from around 10 million barrels a day in the first half of 1981 to near 2 million barrels a day last year.

In an attempt to get other producers to share part of the needed production cutbacks, the Saudis threatened to increase production and then delivered on the threat, expanding their output to an estimated 4 million or 5 million barrels a day in recent months. This change in strategy by Saudi Arabia left the price free to seek a market clearing level for the first time since 1973.

Where oil prices will go from here depends largely on whether the Saudis and other producers can once again collude successfully in restraining production so as to maintain an agreed-upon price.

IF PRODUCERS DO not agree on a way to limit oil production, and Saudi Arabia maintains recent output levels so as to keep up its own oil revenues, the price is likely to be very low, perhaps $10 to $12 per barrel. On the other hand, the Saudis have the best chance of convincing others to cooperate in limiting production if they can promise that a relatively high price — perhaps $20 to $25 per barrel — will come from such cooperation. Either of these outcomes seems more likely than a price stabilizing halfway in between.

Even at $20 per barrel, there will be major effects on the U.S. economy. It will directly reduce the nation's oil import bill by about $15 billion. It will cut the price of gasoline by about 20 cents a gallon, and it will cut about 1.5 percentage points from the year's increase in the consumer price index. In coming months, as the decline in oil prices has its greatest effect, the CPI could even decline. Wages will slow down by only a small fraction of this cut in the CPI. So the 1.5 percentage-point cut in the CPI will translate into an almost corresponding increase in real personal incomes and add perhaps $30 billion to consumer demand for other goods and services. A decline to $12 a barrel would double all these effects.

Although it helps consumers, the oil price drop raises problems for producers and for their creditors. Investment in oil drilling and exploration will decline. Exports to oil producing nations will fall as their oil revenues fall, eventually offsetting a good part of the effects of lower oil prices on the U.S. nominal trade balance. Banks with loans to Mexico, Venezuela, and other nations heavily dependent on oil exports for foreign exchange will confront growing losses on those loans. So will financial institutions with loans tied to domestic drilling and exploration and to related real estate. The severity of these financial problems will grow disproportionately with the size of the oil price decline.

BECAUSE THE two major increases in oil prices, in 1973-74 and 1979-80, both led to massive worldwide recessions, it may be tempting to infer that the present break in oil prices will generate a world-wide boom. However, the symmetry is far from perfect because the response of economies both then and now depends on what policy is implemented in response to the shock as well as on the size of the oil price shock itself.

In the earlier episodes, the recessions that followed the ratcheting up of oil prices were caused by the reactions of monetary authorities even more than by the direct effects of higher oil prices themselves. In both the mid and late 1970s, inflation was already a prominent concern of governments in most industrial nations. Accommodating the oil price increases so as to maintain real output growth threatened to escalate the inflation rate substantially further. Rather than risk that, authorities in various countries turned to tight monetary policies that brought on and deepened their recessions.

In 1986, the commitments to promote a stronger expansion are not nearly as forceful as the anti-inflation commitments were in the earlier episodes. The fall in oil prices will push decision-makers in the direction of more expansion. But how vigorously is not yet clear and the answers will probably be different in different countries. In industrial economies other than the United States, falling oil prices may be the occasion for policymakers to provide more stimulus to their economies. Especially in Europe, recovery from the deep recessions brought on by OPEC II have been inadequate and unemployment is still very high. In addition, rising currency values will help hold down inflation while expansions quicken. Faster growth in these other economies will, in turn, provide some stimulus to the United States through its effect in the U.S. trade balance.

BUT IN THE United States, by contrast, the favorable price effects stemming from oil prices will be offsetting unfavorable price effects from dollar devaluation. The unemployment rate early in the year is already near a level at which the Federal Reserve is likely to take a cautious approach rather than an expansionary policy that might be expected during a recession. And the economy was already expanding adequately before the oil price break. In this situation, the Federal Reserve is unlikely to alter course until the budgetary outlook or economic outlook demands it. On balance, in the United States, lower oil prices are fortuitously timed to help offset the effects on prices of a weakening dollar and the restrictive impact that a tightening budget has on output. But they do not signal an economic boom even if the oil price falls very far. And they do raise the likelihood of financial problems as oil-related debts become harder to service and repay.

Harte-Hanks to sell seven papers and acquire 19 suburban papers

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Harte-Hanks Communications Inc. announced agreements Thursday to sell seven daily newspapers in Texas, Michigan, Ohio and Washington and to acquire 19 newspapers, most of them weeklies.

Harte-Hanks plans to acquire the newspapers — most of which are in suburban Boston and Dallas — in agreements with Garden State Newspapers Inc. of Woodbury, N.J., and Taylor Communications Inc. of Carrollton, Texas.

The daily newspapers to be acquired are the Lewisville Daily Leader and Plano Daily Star-Courier in Texas and the Dedham Daily Transcript and Waltham News-Tribune in Massachusetts.

"We are particularly pleased with these moves, because they help us to implement key elements of our corporate strategy — the opportunity to be in areas with faster growth potential than we have experienced in the markets we are leaving ...," said Bob Marbut, Harte-Hanks' president and chief executive officer.

"For our kinds of businesses, the Dallas and Boston areas are two of the most attractive markets in the United States," he said.

Garden State will obtain four Texas dailies from Harte-Hanks — the Big Spring Herald, Del Rio News-Herald, Huntsville Item and Marshall New Messenger, as well as dailies in Hamilton, Ohio; Yakima, Wash.; and Ypsilanti, Mich.; and a direct mail company in Salt Lake City.

Harte-Hanks plans to sell those newspapers for an undisclosed amount of cash, which will be used by the San Antonio-based company for "general corporate purposes," a statement said. The statement also said the transactions are expected to be closed in April.

Garden State, an affiliate of MediaNews Group, is owned by Richard B. Scudder of Navesink, N.J., William Dean Singleton of Woodbury, N.J., and Media General Inc. of Richmond, Va.

Harte-Hanks Communications currently owns and operates 26 daily newspapers and 90 non-daily publications, including weekly newspapers, advertising publications produced by newspapers, city and tourism magazines and a trade publication for the radio industry. It also owns and operates four network-affiliated television stations.

The acquisitions mean Harte-Hanks Newspapers will hold 23 daily newspapers, more than 100 non-dailies, six magazines and three commercial printing companies.

John T. Williams, publisher of the Bryan-College Station Eagle, is president of the Southern group, to which the Dallas-area newspapers will be added.

Decision in computer chip dispute could lead to tariffs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Commerce Department, in a preliminary ruling on a major U.S.-Japan trade dispute, says Japan has been dumping computer memory chips in this country at below-production costs in violation of U.S. trade laws.

The decision could lead to stiff tariffs on imports of the Japanese semiconductor products — a sophisticated circuit with a memory that can be programmed, erased and reprogrammed.

The preliminary ruling triggers a requirement that the Japanese firms cited in the complaint begin paying a bond on all future shipments.

The ruling came on a complaint filed last September by U.S. semiconductor manufacturers, who claimed that Japanese manufacturers were deliberately flooding U.S. markets with the low-cost chips to try to squeeze out American firms.

Reagan administration sources, who spoke only on the condition of anonymity, said a similar decision was expected by the agency later this week on a companion complaint initiated by the administration itself.

In Tokyo, four Japanese semiconductor makers denied the allegation. Fujitsu Ltd., Hitachi Ltd, Toshiba Corp. and NEC Corp. said they believe their semiconductors are not sold at unfair prices on the U.S. market.

The ruling, and the follow-up one seemed sure to have wide-ranging implications for U.S.-Japan trade relations.

"We are confident that the government will affirm its preliminary decisions in its final ruling," said Tom Dunlop, general counsel for Intel Corp. of Santa Clara, Calif., one of three American firms that initiated the complaint.

"It is clear that employing predatory pricing practices to gain market control is a well-established strategy of certain Japanese companies," Dunlap added in a statement.

A final ruling is expected by May 27, the department said.

At issue were memory chips that are a major component in computers and telecommunications equipment — called erasable programmable read-only memories (EPROMs).

The department found that these Japanese firms had violated U.S. anti-dumping laws the most frequently: NEC Corp., Hitachi Ltd., Toshiba Corp. and Fujitsu Limited.

The administration-initiated case involves a different type of computer chip, a so-called 256-kilobyte dynamic random access memory chip (D-RAMs).

That one is generally viewed as the more significant of the computer-chip complaints because it was the first one initiated by the administration under President Reagan's plan, announced last September, to ease the U.S. trade deficit.

Risk Factors

Researchers have identified a number of characteristics or habits (called risk factors) which increase the chance that an individual will develop coronary heart disease. While not all risk factors can be controlled, such as age, sex, race and heredity, many can be controlled or corrected by the individual. The risk factors which can be controlled or corrected are: dietary habits (especially those leading to high levels of blood cholesterol and overweight or obesity), high blood pressure and cigarette smoking.

Permian Basin sees twelve rig decline

The Permian Basin area continued to experience decreasing rig activity with an additional twelve rig decline posted for the week, according to figure released by Reed Rock Bit, Midland.

Lea County managed to gain a rig to maintain its position as the most active county in the Basin with 21 rigs. Andrews fell two rigs to 18. Midland County also added to its total, gaining two rigs for a total of nine rigs working there. Ector County lost a rig to record a weekly figure of eight.

Nationally, the rig count also continues its downturn, falling 36 rigs to 1,212. The U.S. count was 1,248 rigs last week.

Texas dropped eight rigs while Louisiana lost ten and Oklahoma slipped six. California made a good showing, increasing its rig count by 13 for a total of 73 rigs. New Mexico also faltered, posting a nine rig drop.

Year ago totals in the Basin and U.S. were 307 and 1,934, respectively.

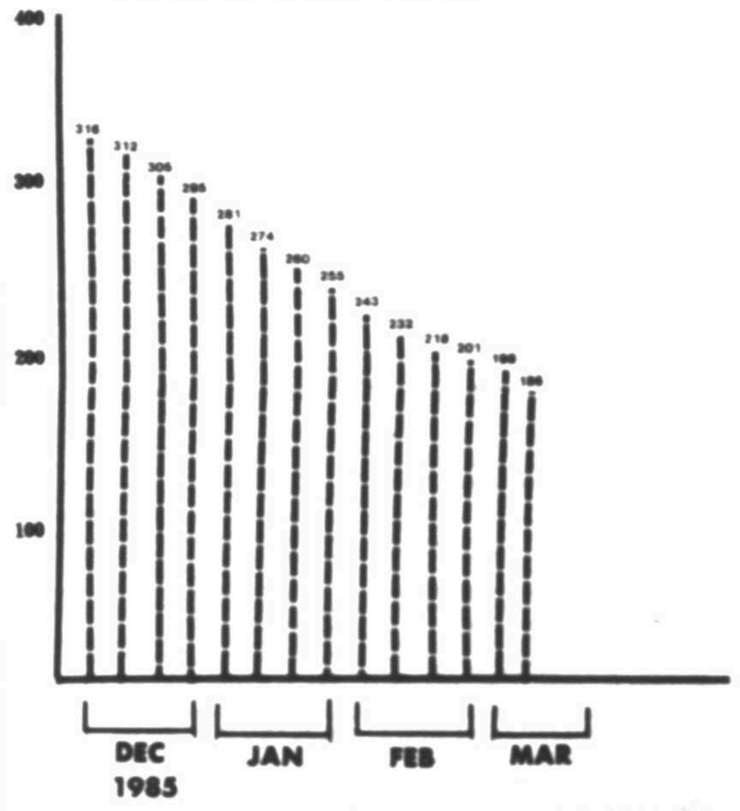
PERMIAN BASIN RIG COUNT FOR 1986



The Permian Basin rig count failed to track the slight recovery in oil prices, as it fell an additional 12 rigs this week. Down to 186, the count has fallen by 30 rigs since the industry downturn began.

In December 1985, crude oil production in the state averaged 2,255,000 barrels per day, down from the November volume of 2,280,667 barrels per day.

State offshore leases produce more in '85

AUSTIN — State offshore leases produced 1,779,269 barrels of crude oil during 1985, according to the Texas Railroad Commission's Oil & Gas Division. In 1984, offshore leases produced 1,758,154 barrels of crude.

Gas well gas production from offshore state leases amounted to 104,620,123 Mcf of gas in 1985. In 1984, a total of 108,680,874 Mcf of gas was produced.

Casinghead gas production totaled 3,510,572 Mcf in 1985, in contrast to 3,400,761 Mcf in 1984.

EMPLOYEE LEASING

An idea whose time has come....

- to save money by reducing cost
- to increase cash flow
- to improve employee morale
- to reduce manpower requirements
- to give you time to concentrate on producing more business.

Employee Leasing--building on the advantages of specialization, economies of size, & favorable tax legislation--has become a solution for many business problems. Employee leasing arrangements offer many advantages to both the employer and the employee.

But, will it work for you? Employee leasing does not necessarily work for every company.

The first step is to compare its cost with the cost of the traditional employee/employer relationship. Rononco International, Inc., a human resources management company, assists you in making the cost analysis to help you know how much you are now spending on employment. Then, YOU can determine if employee leasing fits your company.

To find out and to arrange an appointment for a FREE labor cost analysis by one of our professional consultants, call: (919) 699-2175. All information is held in strict confidence.

Nugent elected RRC chairman

AUSTIN — Railroad Commissioner James E. Nugent was elected chairman of the agency recently and he immediately pledged the Commission to be innovative in tackling problems faced by the state's oil industry.

Nugent assumed the chairmanship after nomination by Commissioner Mack Wallace and an affirmative vote by Wallace and newly-appointed Commissioner, Clark Jobe. Buddy Temple, who preceeded Nugent as chairman, resigned his Commission position effective yesterday. Nugent will serve as chairman until the end of the year.

The new chairman said the Commission would explore all possible avenues for maintaining Texas oil production and alleviating problems in the already hard-pressed industry.

"As the industry struggles with ever-lower crude prices and the painful management decisions they bring, we in the regulatory business should be looking for ways to lighten, not increase the load," he said.

Nugent noted the Commission is facing belt-tightening measures itself as lower oil prices take their toll on state tax revenues. "We will do our part, reducing our expenditures every way we prudently can," he said. "but it's obvious we have a long difficult task ahead. We have obligations to prevent waste of valuable resources, protect the environment, and guard public safety that can't be ignored."

Nugent, who has served on the Commission for more than seven years, was chairman previously in 1981 and 1982. Before coming to the Commission in January 1979, he served 18 years in the Texas House of Representatives, the last two years as House Speaker Pro-Tem.

Oil analyst to speak to Accountants

Edward F. Dellamonte, Prudential-Bache Securities' chief crude oil analyst, will speak to the Petroleum Accountants Society of the Permian Basin at their regular monthly dinner meeting at 7:00 pm. on Wednesday, March 19. The meeting will be held at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

Dellamonte will also speak to any interested parties at a 4:00 pm. meeting at the Petroleum Club to be concluded by a 5:00 pm. question and answer session.

The Technical Session for the Accountants Society meeting is scheduled for 5:30 pm. on March 19 at Ranchland Hills. Featured speaker at this session will be David Hall, CPA for Price-Waterhouse. He will be speaking about "The Application of Micro-Computers in the Oil and Gas Industry."

San Antonio oilman stays optimistic

DALLAS (AP) — Energy investors who wonder whether a San Antonio oil company will be in business next week phoned the company's owner about collapsing oil prices and a gutted market, but the businessman said he can't understand their apprehension.

Kent Gerstner, who owns Minerals of Texas, said he reassures "pretty nervous" investors and can't understand skittishness over petroleum investments. But his optimism is not universally shared.

"It is a temporary situation — and it is a foolish one," Gerstner told the Dallas Morning News last week as crude oil prices on the New York Mercantile Exchange slipped below $12 per barrel.

"This is probably the best time in the history of (the) world to invest in oil," said Gerstner.

Some investors and advisors remained skeptical amid a widespread energy industry rally Tuesday and speculation that action might be taken to stabilize the market during next week's meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

"I don't think anybody has a real comfort level that we are at the bottom yet," said Peter Keller, vice president of Resource Programs, Inc., which specializes in institutional investing.

"No one can read the mind of the Saudis," said Keller.

But officials said investor interest in the limited partnerships that help fuel drilling in the United States was declining even when oil values were rising.

Robert A. Stanger & Co., a New Jersey research company that tracks energy investments, said amounts reached a peak of $1.976 billion in 1981, but totaled only $371 million last year.

"The historical fund-raising areas for drilling... have declined severely from the peak in 1981," said Furhman Nettles, Stanger & Co. vice president. "It means outside funds for limited partnerships are drying up."

Some experts said investing in oil was still a wise idea. Analyst William Randol of First Boston Corp. said he advised his clients that "oil prices may have bottomed out," and the value of energy stocks rose.

Keller said that leases are cheaper during the current energy slump.

"...There is still a spread there for an efficient producer," he said.

Texas American's

EASY-WAY IRAs

earn 15% through April 15* and fixed to at least 1% over 6-month T-Bill rate as of April 16, compounded daily, for remainder of 18-month period.

With Texas American's new EASY-WAY approach to IRAs, you have a special reason for investing today, plus an opportunity to make the most of your investment, year-in and year-out:

- When you open your Texas American IRA, you'll earn 15% through April 15 on deposits of $1,000 or more.
- If you qualify, you can borrow up to the maximum annual contribution and save even more, because the interest on the loan is tax-deductible, too.
- And at Texas American, there are no set-up fees.

If you are unable to take advantage of the 15% offer, there are other reasons to have an EASY-WAY IRA:

- You can make payments to your IRA at your convenience anytime during the year. (For a $2,000 IRA, you contribute only $166.66 a month, or $38.46 a week.)
- You can have your IRA contributions deducted automatically from your Texas American Bank checking or savings account.
- And, if you'd like to open your IRA for less than $1,000, there's an EASY WAY to do that, too.

Take advantage of the IRA bonanza today, the EASY WAY, at any Texas American Bank. For more information, or to open your IRA, visit your local Texas American Bank, or call 1-800-822-7472 (that's 1-800-TABS-IRA), 7AM-9PM, Monday through Friday.

MEETINGS

Paleontologists to host Michigan professor

The Permian Basin Section of the Society of Economic Paleontologists and Mineralogists will host a noon luncheon speaker March 18 at the Midland Center. The luncheon will start at 11:30 a.m.

Dr. James Lee Wilson of the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor will address the society, giving a presentation on "Tentative Framework of the Continental Margin Controls, Late Paleozoic Carbonate Platform Development in New Mexico and Chihuahua."

He received a bachelor's degree from Rice University in 1942, and a master's degree from the University of Texas in 1944. After serving two years in the army, Wilson received his doctorate from Yale University in 1949.

He has been a field geologist in the Rocky Mountains, an associate professor at the University of Texas and spent 11 years as a research geologist for Shell Development Co. During this period he spent three years in the Netherlands working on the Mesozoic geology of the Middle East.

He was appointed Chairman of the Rice University Geology Department in 1974, and left Rice to join the Geology faculty at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor in 1979.

Basin builders schedule Thursday dinner

The monthly membership meeting of Associated Builders & Contractors, Permian Basin Chapter, will be held on Thursday, March 20 at the Holiday Inn-Centre in Odessa, beginning at 6:30 p.m.

Mayorial candidates from both Midland and Odessa will be presented, and a question and answer period for the candidates will follow the guest speaker. Guest speaker for the meeting will be Mr. Royce Rhea, of Morrison, Herm, Prucka, Rhea & Co., P.C. He will speak on "Taxes and the New Laws Which Affect Them."

Drillers to discuss present, future prospects

The Drilling Supervisors Association will hold a meeting on Thursday, March 20, at the Holiday T-Dome, Midland. The meeting, which begins at 7:00 pm. is open to the public.

Guest speaker at the meet will be Don Evans, president, TMBR Drilling, Inc. He will speak about current market conditions in the oil industry and future prospects for the industry.

Also at the meeting, Ronnie Price, chairman of the first annual Permian Basin Driller's Reunion and West Texas Grilling Rig Cookoff will give details concerning that event, scheduled for May 24.

EPA challenges reports assumptions

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — A coal industry report published recently contends that sulfur dioxide in the air, a source of acid rain and other pollution, is diminishing and will continue to do so despite increased use of coal by power plants.

But the Environmental Protection Agency and environmentalists challenged the study's projections, saying they were based on incorrect assumptions.

Industry officials said their findings would have a bearing on policy toward acid rain and other sulfur dioxide pollution that is based on the assumption that the amount of sulfur dioxide in the air is rising.

Environmentalists contend that acid precipitation is destroying life in lakes and may also be causing other environmental and health problems.

The report, prepared by the National Coal Association, an industry trade group, said that sulfur dioxide from the burning of coal in electric power plants went down by 2.2 percent from 1980 to 1984, even though there was a 17.7 percent increase in the amount of coal burned by those plants.

This reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions, the report said, is partly a result of the introduction of new power plants, which are required by the Clean Air Act to keep their emissions at low levels through the use of scrubbers or other techniques.

But the report also said that much of the reduction came from the use of coal with a lower sulfur content or from increased use of scrubbers by older power plants. Still another factor, it said, was a shift in demand for electricity away from the Northeast and upper Middle West, which tend to have older, dirtier power plants, to the West and Southwest, where newer, cleaner plants are in use.

Extrapolating from these trends for the first part of the 1990's, the association said, sulfur dioxide emissions from power plants, the major source of such pollution, would be 19 percent lower in 1990 than they were in 1980.

But Milton Russell, the Environmental Protection Agency's assistant administrator for policy and planning, said that while the agency agreed with the industry findings for the 1980-84 period it had a "real disagreement" with the projections for 1990.

Russell said the agency's forecast was based on projected changes in the economy and other factors, rather than an extrapolation based on the current situation. He said projections indicated that emissions of sulfur dioxide from coal-fired power plants would increase by 1.9 million tons over the 1980 levels and would rise by another 4.4 million tons from 1990 to 2010. Nearly 16 million tons of sulfur dioxide was emitted by the coal-fired plants in 1984, officials agree.

David Hawkins, chairman of the policy committee of the National Clean Air Coalition, an association of environmental, public health, consumer and labor groups, said, "These predictions are a figment of the Coal Association's imagination." Industry cannot "simply dream the coal pollution problem away," he said. "Congress must act to solve this problem."

In a related issue Tuesday, the Western Energy Supply and Transmission Associates, a group of Western utilities and electric cooperatives, published a study that it cited as proof that "no acid rain crisis" exists in the West.

The study said that acidity in Western rain and snow was generally within the range of natural levels and only "transient" increases had been found in bodies of water in the region.

Mohamed el-Ashry said it was flatly untrue that acid precipitation was at natural levels in the West.

American expects fist quarter loss

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — American Airlines has told the Securities and Exchange Commission it expects to report an operating loss for the first quarter of 1986 because of slashed fares that have proliferated in the industry recently.

The carrier made the disclosure in a statement filed in Washington.

"The negative impact on yield of substantial fare discounting has continued in the first quarter of 1986," the SEC filing said. "Although such impact has been partially offset by traffic increases, American expects that it may have an operating loss in the first quarter of 1986."

The common stock of AMR Corp., American's parent firm, dropped $2 a share on the news Tuesday, but recovered in heavy trading and closed for the day at $50 a share, down ⅝.

American has cut its fares to match those of low-cost Continental Airlines Corp., People Express Airlines Inc., and Braniff Inc.

American's fourth-quarter 1985 yield — or average fare sold per seat-mile flown — was 11.26 cents. Analysts said it may have dropped as low as 10.5 cents per seat-mile this year.

American led the industry last year with a reported $506.5 million operating profit.

What's your IRA I.Q.?

Howard Weil cordially invites you to a seminar on Individual Retirement Accounts. The "course" of action to be discussed will be mutual funds and how they can benefit your IRA.

When it's over, perhaps you won't be an IRA genius, but you'll know enough to make a smart decision. And that's a high I.Q. for IRAs.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Deneuve

Q. Could you please tell me everything about the French actress Catherine Deneuve: where was she born, what films has she made, what is she doing now?

Nicole Bonet
Dowagiac, Mich.

A. She was born October 22, 1943 in Paris, the third of four daughters of Maurice Dorleac and Renee Deneuve, both successful actors. She was frail and shy as a child — she still considers herself somewhat reserved — and spent most of her time with her sister, actress Francois Dorleac. She attended a strict Catholic school and the exclusive Lycee La Fontaine and was shielded from the theater world by her parents.

She did, however, make a few brief film appearances while in her teens, most notably with sister Francoise in "Les Portes Claquent" and "Ce Soir Ou Jamais." When she was 17, she met director Roger Vadim, the man credited with the "creation" of Brigitte Bardot, and he cast her in his film "Vice and Virtue."

Two years later, in 1962, she gave birth to his son, Christian (who is also now pursuing a career as an actor), but refused to marry him, not believing particularly in the institution of marriage. A certain amount of controversy, not surprisingly, followed.

Meanwhile, in 1964 her career took a sharp upward turn with her appearance in the film "The Umbrellas of Cherbourg." For the first time, as she explained it, she felt that she could act, a finding confirmed when she was awarded the Best Actress prize at the Cannes Film Festival.

A number of films followed in quick succession, among them "Male Companion," Roman Polanski's "Repulsion" (he cast her because, as he said, he needed an "angelic girl who could kill a man with a razor") and "The Young Girls of Rochefort" with sister Francois.

The following year, 1967, Francois was killed in a car accident, an event that devastated Ms. Deneuve and put strain on her two-year marriage (she made an exception to her belief just once) to British photographer David Bailey.

They split up in 1968 and were divorced in 1970. After the tragedy, she threw herself into her work and turned in what many consider some of her finest performances in the films "Belle de Jour," "Mayerling" and "Tristana."

Her American film debut occurred in 1969 in "The April Fools" with Jack Lemmon, followed by "Hustle" with Burt Reynolds. Most of her recent films, with the exception of "The Hunger," have been done in France, however, including her most recent: "Love Songs" with Christopher Lambert and "The Scene of the Crime" currently filming.

Her appearances on commercials have been pretty constant in America, and she now has her own product to plug: her perfume, Deneuve.

She lives in Paris with her daughter, Chiara, 14, the daughter of actor Marcello Mastroianni, and has recently been chosen to be the physical embodiment of Marianne, the French symbol of the Republic. (She replaces Brigitte Bardot, the previous Marianne.) The Marianne likeness is displayed in town halls over France.

Curry

Q. Please tell me about Tim Curry. I think he's sensational.

Julia Penn
Midland, Texas

A. He's 39, the son of a naval Methodist chaplain and his wife, was born in Cheshire, England, but because of his father's profession, the family moved to Hong Kong when he was 6 months old. They returned when he was 3, but he left home again at 12 to go to boarding school after his father died.

He graduated from Birmingham University with honors in English and drama in 1968, and within a few months he had bluffed his way into the original London cast of the musical "Hair." He decided to do some serious theater following that, so he spent six months with the Glasgow Citizens Theater before returning to London.

He was performing at London's Royal Court Theater in 1973 when he was offered the role of Frank N. Furter in the stage version of "The Rocky Horror Show." He took it, played it onstage in London, New York and Los Angeles and, as the world knows, on film.

Later, he appeared as Bill Sikes in CBS's remake of "Oliver Twist," as Mozart in the Broadway production of "Amadeus" and the Pirate King in the London version of "The Pirates of Penzance."

In between stints onstage, he also appeared in the films "Annie," "Times Square," "The Ploughman's Lunch" and the recent "Clue." He also recorded three albums. Currently, according to his agent, he's onstage at London's National Theater and plans to be there for the rest of the year.

Stossel

Q. Could you tell me a little bit about John Stossel from "20/20." I think he's gorgeous.

Marilyn Neal
Modesto, Calif.

A. He's 38, from Chicago and a Princeton graduate with a B.A. in psychology. He was heading to business school after Princeton when he was offered a job as a general assignment reporter at the Portland, Ore., NBC affiliate; he took it and later, at his boss's suggestion, he became a consumer reporter.

He did so well at it that he never went on to business school, and in 1973 was hired as a consumer reporter by the CBS station in New York. ABC noticed, and since 1980 he's been with that network.

Q. Could you please settle an argument between my wife and me? I say the O.J. in O.J. Simpson stands for O Jesus. My wife says that they're just letters. Who's right?

Les Farley
Kahului, Maui, Hawaii

A. You're both wrong, although your version is pretty colorful. The O.J. stands for Orenthal James.

Q. I would like to know whether Phoebe Snow is still singing

Debbie Eend
Paterson, N.J.

A. Indeed she is. She just finished the western leg of "The Brand New Me" tour — Seattle through California — and is currently recording a new album, which should be out later this year.

Her father sang her praises

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features

Interviewing an actress for the first time, you are often searching for the line of demarcation: Where does the actress end and the woman begin? I met Kate Burton on the set of "Big Trouble in Little China," her first feature film (soon to be released), and she had spent the morning in an underwater scene in warm water, with all her clothes on. When she welcomed me to her dressing room, there was no thin line for which to search. This was pure Kate.

She was wearing jeans and sneakers, her auburn hair was still damp, she was rubbing it with a towel and her face was glowing, not from makeup but from joy of living.

"This picture is really, really fun," she told me. "Besides it being my first feature, I've thoroughly enjoyed working with Kim Cattrall and Kurt Russell and with the Chinese cast. These people have opened up a whole new world for me."

Besides, she was expecting husband Michael Ritchie, production manager of New York's Circle in the Square, to arrive in time for dinner. They have been married nine months, and she says he and their lifestyle are her saving grace.

"I never was a stage-struck kid," Ms. Burton says, looking you straight in the eye with the blue-gray look so like her dad's. My father (Richard Burton) thought I was, and in the beginning, he didn't encourage me at all.

"I remember talking to him when I was just entering my senior year at Brown. He was aware that I was doing a lot things. I was an athlete. I played music. I was a history major. And he'd never seen me act although I'd been in a number of school plays. But I just thought this was the way I expressed myself best and I'd better give it a shot.

"I explained to him that far from being stage-struck, I was planning to go to drama school for three years because I didn't have the confidence to just go out and try right then and there."

She applied to a number of schools, was accepted everywhere, chose Yale and has never regretted that decision. Her mother, Sybil, who had been an actress before her marriage, always had faith in her daughter. So did her father when, after graduation, he came to see virtually everything she did in New York.

"I remember after he saw me in an off-off-Broadway play, 'Winners,' he said, 'Kate, that's the most amazing thing you've done. What a good actress you are!' That was very nice. I played an Irish schoolgirl in that one, a real fun, lovely part, directed by an Irishman who runs this Irish art center.

"My father obviously felt I was OK or he'd never have wanted me to work with him in the miniseries 'Ellis Island' and the PBS 'Alice in Wonderland.'

"He also knew that I've always had a bead on how to keep your sanity in the theater. He knew I wanted to lead a very private life. I was never the big lips type. I wasn't out making the rounds of the clubs, I wasn't going out to be a personality but truly an actress.

"I certainly didn't have this 'Oh-God-the-theater!' point of view. I've always enjoyed the theater (it never occurred to me I'd be in films). It's wonderfully interesting, 'the best club in the world' you might say. But it's hard and frustrating. The rejection is enormous, but the elation is enormous too. For me, the important thing is my life and I'd never want to plan it around my career. Just being an actress is a horrifying thought."

Luckily, when she was working with George C. Scott in "Present Laughter," her first show on Broadway, 3½ years ago, Michael Ritchie was stage manager. They dated and then had an enormous wedding, moved into a modern East Side apartment and spend every moment they can in the house they bought on the Connecticut border just an hour north of New York.

They bought the house just before their June wedding, but then there was the honeymoon — first in Switzerland where she was born, then in the Soviet Union, then in London, where she has a house bequeathed her by her aunt. (Ms. Burton came to America with her mother when she was 6, but has always vacationed in England).

Parents continuing battle against rock 'n' roll 'porn'

By SUSAN CRAIN BAKOS
King Features

September 19, 1985: It was the first time anyone could remember young rock 'n' roll fans attending a Senate subcommitte hearing en masse. Dressed in everything from outrageous to ordinary, boys in punk, girls in leather and lace, their black bras showing through the white shirts, and many who looked like archetypal cheerleaders and football stars, they seized the few available seats and lined the sober Senate halls.

Those who testified included Twisted Sister and Frank Zappa, conservative Republican wives Tipper Gore and Susan Baker and the president of the National P.T.A. The subject: rock 'n' roll lyrics.

The basic issue is always the same: creative freedom vs. parents' rights to protect children from influences they do not like. In this battle, like the others, there was and is no clear-cut victor.

Most of us past the age of consent probably don't listen closely enough to the new songs' lyrics to decipher every word. Even we who still like rock and keep the top 40 stations on the car radio seldom know exactly what they're saying.

I WAS surprised to read the lyrics of some of the popular songs as printed on the insides of album jackets. And in some cases I was even more surprised to read how The Parents Music Resource Center (PMRC), a group formed by conservative Washington wives, interpreted those lyrics.

When Cyndi Lauper sings about "messing with the danger zone" is she really talking about masturbation — and urging kids to try it?

Sexual and sexist lyrics are disturbing some parents. And even more repellent than the sexual messages, say some rock critics, are those song lyrics which they believe promote suicide, occult practices, rape, bondage, murder.

Following the arrest of the Night Stalker, Richard Ramirez, California's serial murderer, on August 31, the press exploited his fascination with the heavy metal band AC/DC. He marked his palm with their logo and left behind a baseball cap embroidered AC/DC at one of the murders.

But does that really prove he was influenced — even to the point of "having his brain reprogrammed by the lyrics" — as some critics have said as they connected his crimes to the album "Highway to Hell"?

Concerned parents want to know what to make of this brouhaha. The Senate hearing produced nothing but a slap on rock's wrist. However, the Recording Industry Association of America responded to the hearing by announcing that American Record companies would include warnings on albums which contain possibly offensive lyrics. The warning will read: "Explicit Lyrics - Parental Advisory." Many albums released this year should begin to carry this warning.

Should the slap have been harder — or delivered not at all? Has rock "gone too far," as People magazine asked on a recent cover — or have "the wives of Big Brother" gone too far, as Frank Zappa contends?

THE PMRC, organized last February by Mrs. Gore, Mrs. Baker and Pam Howar, who put together an exclusive 2,000-name mailing list from their combined Christmas card lists, has been the rock music industry's most formidable critic.

They have been joined by the National P.T.A. The PMRC and the P.T.A. have been listening, really listening, to the words of those 25,000 songs released annually. Their conclusion: Those lyrics are dangerous to America's children.

Jeff B., a Philadelphia area child psychologist, says, "I wouldn't want to go on record with an opinion about this issue. No one is qualified to do that. We have no irrefutable research data which correlates crime, even antisocial behavior, with listening to rock. In my practice I don't think I've ever seen a child who was influenced to commit a crime by music."

What Jeff has seen is "plenty of kids" who retreated into rock as a place to escape parents, school, problems. The syndrome is a familiar one: A teen plugged into headphones sits in his room behind a closed door for hours.

Jeff says, "Parents come into my office all upset by this behavior and blaming it on rock 'n' roll. But rock was the effect, not the cause.

"Kids, even normal healthy kids, do use rock as a place to get away from the world sometimes. So did we."

Jeff's partner in practice adds, "Yes, we did use rock to get away from adult authority. That's part of its purpose for kids. In the '60s, rock was an integral part of the total experience, a part of the sexual revolution, of the anti-war movement. It was a unifying force. You can't deny how important music was to us. Maybe we're kidding ourselves if we think it isn't equally important to these kids. Maybe the music's messages are getting through."

ADULTS, EVEN professionals, can't agree today on exactly how much impact rock has on the minds of the young. They never could.

The history of popular music is replete with parental objections: to the beat, the noise, the words, the performers. In 1940 NBC radio network banned 147 songs, including some by Cole Porter.

A few years later Duke Ellington's music was blamed for the national rise in rapes. Ed Sullivan's camera couldn't focus on Elvis Presley's gyrating pelvis. And sporadic record burnings have surely been around as long as records have.

Not coincidentally, however, such protests receive more grassroots support and newspaper coverage during times when conservatism is the mood of the nation.

Jeff believes the political climate now makes it all the harder for a "middle-of-the-road, reasonable parent" to reach some sane conclusions about rock lyrics. Are they potentially harmful — and if they are, what can we really do about it?

Perhaps the empirical data doesn't make a case against rock lyrics. Strong opinions still exist on either side of the controversy.

The PMRC told the Senate subcommittee they want the record industry to rate records — or failing that, to label them with a generic warning about content; make lyrics available to the consumer before purchase; and set up a panel which would create policy guidelines for a rating or labeling process.

Having No 1. show gives Cosby anything he wants

By SUSAN PAYNTER
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — Bill Cosby wants to eat at Ennio and Michael's, his favorite Greenwich Village Italian restaurant, a place with great nine-minute pasta and seating for 80.

Will NBC please get about 85 TV critics, the entire cast of "The Cosby Show" and their families into the place for dinner and an interview with Cosby before his stand-up comedy show at Radio City Music Hall?

Sure, Bill, anything you want.

And then, will NBC take those 85 critics over to the Music Hall and get them good seats for a sold-out show?

Noooo problem!

Twenty years ago, according to Cosby, the same network seriously doubted the American public could stand to look at his black face every week on "I Spy." Today, Cosby is the icon of TV fatherhood, the standard-bearer of American family values. His show is not only No. 1 among every age group of TV's closely-watched demographics, it grabs 50 percent of all American TV sets turned on at Thursdays (7 p.m. CST). And it's a huge hit in Denmark, England, Argentina, even South Africa.

Bill Cosby

His Radio City concerts sell out nightly to 6,000 at $30 to $35 a pop. And any ideas he might have for future TV shows are heard with reverence at NBC's Rockefeller Plaza offices.

In other words, Cosby can now do anything he wants. But maybe the fact that he doesn't do just anything is one reason the name Cosby has become a mantra among converts to quality television.

"The Cosby Show" must be the first and only TV sitcom to have every line of every script scrutinized weekly by a Harvard behaviorial scientist, Dr. Alvin Poussaint.

"When a script is done, it's sent to Dr. Poussaint, notes are made, mimeographed, and handed to our writers, who make changes, heavily, because of Dr. Poussaint's suggestions," Cosby said. "Many times I have pitched stories and Dr. Poussaint has written that this is not fair toward women or the elderly, and we've said he's absolutely correct. Therefore, there's no joke and the story is changed."

Ninety-nine percent of the time Poussaint is on the button, Cosby said. And although Poussaint is black, his sensitivity isn't confined to matters of race, any more than is Cosby's appeal.

"You can make a joke without crushing someone else's feelings," Cosby said. "Many times we forget who we may hurt in making a joke."

Poussaint's script-combing can come down to splitting hairs, literally. In a recent show, he objected to the family's youngest daughter, Rudy, saying, "Ouch! Ouch!" as her mother combed her hair. The image of this tangle being tamed by a mother's comb needed the special reinforcement of the line, "If you let me do this, your hair will be pretty," since there's a negative stereotype regarding black people's hair, Poussaint said.

Cosby said Poussaint also called the shots when it came to the case of the $200 shirt and the price of the $11,000 painting. In one episode, son Theo was in trouble for spending $200 on a Gordon Gartrell shirt. Poussaint said people watching wouldn't identify positively with this kid coming back with a $200 shirt, and the price dropped to $35. In another show, Cosby's TV wife bid $11,000 to buy a painting at an auction. Cosby had originally chosen a painting by Henry O. Tanner priced about $80,000, but Poussaint said that was too high.

No one, including Cosby, expected the show to be the huge hit it's become; to be the show credited with starting NBC's turnaround and influencing other networks to search for family shows with solid values.

"All I was looking for was the show to stay alive long enough so I could get my ideas across about what I thought should be on television," Cosby said.

What Cosby likes best about the love affair the Huxtables are having with America is that people tell him their family members understand each other better after watching.

"Single fathers say they're more involved with their kids without feeling they're sissies," Cosby said. The idea that the show is shaping values is presumptuous and frightening, he said.

"We're just trying to add little things that give people an idea of where they can go instead of a negative response to something. Start a spark for a mother or father that makes them think of a different approach. One mother told me she used to yell and scream and get angry. Then she saw Claire (Cosby's TV wife) laugh one time when a child did something stupid and it registered with her that, well, it is funny sometimes. So now, maybe there's a 40-60 shot she's laughing."

Cosby said he learned acting on the job, with "I Spy" co-star Robert Culp as a teacher. He was awful at first. But even after he improved, networks in general were convinced blacks would only be accepted by the audience performing in a particular way.

"Now, here the Huxtables are, walking around acting like real Americans, and a lot of people find that unusual," he said. But some whites may watch the show, identify with the problems, the love and respect shared by the Huxtables and afterwards ask themselves why they still feel funny about the black people they know in their own lives.

Cosby said the chance to change those unexamined attitudes, along with greed, is why he keeps working, although he swears he'll only do the series for five years, no matter what.

"What I do is thinking, and there are times when I think and it's funny to me and I'd like to give it to somebody else," he said. "I'm sure there are millions of people who are like that, who have a funny thought and think it's great, but the only person they can tell is their wife."

So they really moved into their country house in August. "We're still fixing up the house, painting and cleaning. I do a lot of cleaning. Once while I was in college I wanted to get a job part-time as a cleaning lady. My mother said, 'Forget it, over my dead body.' But I do have a yen for it, and Michael and I find it much easier to do our own work rather than trying to find the right people to do it.

"We both cook. He is a great cook. And we both love our lifestyle and the fact that we're together. We knew almost from the beginning that we were going to get married, so why wait? We both want to have children and we'd like to have them within the next few years so that we can still be young while they're young."

Now her face is positively beautiful. You ask how this will affect her career and she candidly says, "I really have no idea. I don't understand actresses who talk about marriage and having children in terms of 'I want to wait until my career is really set.'

"That's just dumb," she emphasizes. "In three months my life could change completely in terms of profession. You just can't plan around your career. To me, family and children are the most important thing. You let your career happen around that..

"Acting isn't frivolous and it's an important and wonderful thing to do. I'm lucky, lucky, lucky to be able to do it so much of the time. Acting is just one way of utilizing your life. But life comes first. I am so glad that I went on to Yale after graduating from Brown. I shudder to think of, at 20, suddenly to have appeared in the streets of New York tap-dancing my way, so to speak."

You can't have lived through Ms. Burton's childhood and youth, being aware of the traumas that tore their family apart and of the publicity that made their name front-page news, without having serious thoughts about family and its meaning.

"My mother is an amazing woman. What can I tell you? She's had terribly distressing things happen in her life, and she's handled it all so well. When you grow up with an influence like that, your own problems don't seem so bad. My mother's temperament is the most incredible in the world; she always manages to find the positive in the face of of any adversity."

She continues, "She's living in Los Angeles, and now that my sister Amy (born after my mother remarried) is off to Bennington College, Mother is looking about for some new venture. She has worked as a literary agent. She has some ideas for producing for both films and television. She is a natural organizer, a natural at getting people together. It's going to be interesting to see where she goes from here. Obviously, she's been a major influence on my life.

"But so was my father. When I was growing up, he was filming all over the world. We saw each other like two or three times a year. It wasn't what you'd call quantity time, but it was quality time. We went through all the classic stages. When I was little, I was the apple of his eye. Little girl on a pedestal. As I became older and more aware of things myself and had a mind of my own, it was much more interesting.

"Of course, my father was an alcoholic. That's always a touch-and-go situation. I spent a lot of my childhood and teens dealing with that. He was a deeply charming man. We became close friends. In the final years, he was pretty much my grateful friend.

"Let me tell you what happened," Ms. Burton continues. "When he was doing 'Private Lives,' he was in New York for a long while. It was wonderful. There was a good year where we saw a lot of each other, that's when we did 'Alice in Wonderland,' and the next year we did 'Ellis Island,' shooting in London. It was a real thrill working with him. I learned so much.

Kate Burton

"I learned how much we're alike in some ways, both professionally and personally. We're both real pros. We go out, do our job, get it done. It's a very British attitude. You do what you are paid to do. It's not cancer research, but it's your job.

"Many of his priorities rubbed off on me. Language, for example. What he emphasized was language, that's where he started. When you're brought up doing classical plays — Shakespeare, Ibsen, Shaw — the words come first. Dad's voice and his way of speaking were his greatest attributes. The voice was amazing.

"It's funny. After his death, so many things were written about the few poor plays, but he did such wonderful things. Most actors would give their eye teeth to do 'Beckett' and 'Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?,' 'The Taming of the Shrew,' 'Equus,' 'Night of the Iguana,' 'Hamlet,' 'Anne of the Thousand Days,' 'The Robe,' 'My Cousin Rachel.' He had a wonderful repertoire. Oh, and I left out 'The Spy Who Came in from the Cold.'

"In a way I envy him. Most actors tend to be pigeon-holed into certain types of parts, especially here in America. They're not given the type of freedom they have in England. So, until you become a Jessica Lange, a Meryl Streep, a Sally Field or a Sissy Spacek, you are likely to be typecast. What I so admire about these ladies is that they have a strong personal life, each one of them.

"That's what I want for myself. That's why I was so delighted with my part as Margo Litzenberger in 'Big Trouble in Little China.' It's totally different for me. I'm drawn into the action by Kim Cattrall, the lawyer who is helping Kurt Russell help his Chinese friend to find his kidnapped bride-to-be. You might call it a mystical-adventure-comedy-kung-fu-monster-ghost story. It's all of those things, and I'm the eager but inexperienced reporter.

"I was a little freaked out the first week, but John Carpenter is such a nice director. He makes you feel like 'Look, here we are making a movie; this is fun.' And you know where you are with him. Obviously, making my first feature I was a little nervous.

"He told me some things which were really useful." Ms. Burton explains, "For example, I was always asking for more takes. So I'd ask, and he'd say, 'OK, let's do another take.' Then one day he said, 'By the way, Kate, your first take is often your best.' That really surprised me. I always feel like I don't know what I'm doing on the first take. 'That's just it,' he explained. 'The more takes you do, the more self-conscious you get.'

"I've learned that he is so right. Film-making at its best is spontaneous. I still have a great deal to learn, but I've learned a great deal on this film. From John and from Kurt Russell."

The only thing that was difficult for Ms. Burton has been being away from her husband, who could only stay several days. They were doing "The Caretaker" at The Circle in the Square at the time. It will be much more fun when she essays her next project — as Irina in Chekhov's "Three Sisters" on stage in Stamford, Conn., not too far from their country home.

"It's important to do theater, and every real honest-to-God actor should accept the challenge whenever he can. It's so totally different from film work. You're dealing with a much larger frame of reference, it's a much more sustained perfomance.

"In fact, to me, acting is what you do in the theater, where in front of a camera what is happening is much more behavioral. Film is much more difficult because a scene has to be done in 20 or 30 seconds. It's really important to do both, to alternate between the two.

"And incidentally, although I've seen a great deal of theater in London, I don't regard it as the second coming. I think some of it is good and some bad, just like in America; and in both countries, regional theater is prospering. Face it, theater should be for everyone. A family of four going to a big hit musical in New York is facing a $300 evening. Who can afford that?"

During Ms. Burton's run at Stamford, if it is at all possible, Elizabeth Taylor will be coming to see her. "Elizabeth has always been supportive of me," she says. She's terrific and we've always had a wonderful relationship. I've gotten along with all my stepmothers: Elizabeth, Susan Hunt, Sally Hay.

"Sally has just done some kind of new magazine show for the BBC. She shot it in L.A. and it's all about L.A. women. We've always been close and I'm so glad she's getting back to work."

While we've talked, she has finished toweling her hair and is blowing it dry. "Would you believe my hair is white?" she asks, laughing at my amazement. "I was prematurely gray at 19, turned snow white just like my mom. But redheads run in our family. You should see us when we have family reunions in England. I have 51 cousins all told and a good percentage of them are auburn-headed like me."

ROCK

IN HER testimony, Mrs. Baker tried to set up the connection between rock lyrics and teen traumas. Teen pregnancy and teen suicide are at epidemic proportions, she said. Rape is up.

"There are many causes for society's ills, but it is our contention that pervasive messages aimed at children which promote and glorify suicide, rape and sadomasochism have to be numbered among the contributing factors."

Sen. Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., brought enlarged pictures of album covers and rock video tapes to graphically illustrate her objections.

Rock videos are a hot spot in the overall controversy. Ms. Hawkins showed two which have been attacked on several fronts: Van Halen's "Hot For Teacher," in which a shapely teacher strips down to a bikini in front of her class; and Twisted Sister's "We're Not Going To Take It," starring a teen-ager who throws his father out the window.

Pop singer John Denver, who argued for the opposition, says, "I'm opposed to any kind of censorship, voluntary or mandatory. The number of records containing objectionable lyrics is so small that it's not going to affect our children to any degree."

Denver and others caution that record labeling is another form of censorship. They say there is no acceptable means of rating records. Denver asks, "If records are rated like movies, who will do the rating?" A few performers, including Zappa, are willing to have lyrics printed on the outside covers. But this also presents a problem: Often the copyrighted words aren't owned by the artist recording the song and can't be reprinted without approval.

Some artists have already objected to the PRMC's reading of their lyrics. Dee Snider of Twisted Sister insists the song "Under the Blade" is about fear of surgery — not sadomasochism. Snider says, "I don't want my lyrics rated by the P.T.A."

IN FACT, do P.T.A. members on the local level even share their national leaders' concern?

Angela K., a working mother of two who lives in the Northeast, says, "With some reservations, I do. I think — I hope — the main reason they are undertaking this crusade is to bring the lyrics to the attention of parents who have never listened closely to words. Certainly it's made me pay attention. And I don't want my 7- and 9-year-olds exposed to this."

On the other hand, Jennie Baker, a housewife and mother of three from Missouri, says, "I've been an officer of the local P.T.A. for five years. We are concerned strictly with our own school with raising money for the extras the school board can't provide. And we help teachers by serving as playground monitors or aides for the primary grades.

"That is the business of the P.T.A."

Ms. Baker doesn't believe her own small group could "ever reach accord about the issue. A lot of young parents still go to concerts. My husband and I saw (Bruce) Springsteen when he was in St. Louis. We don't like some of the videos, but we think it's up to the parents to allow those things on their home sets or not.

"Besides what good would ratings really do? We have movie ratings. And who attends those horrible slasher and sex films? Kids! The kids we're worried about protecting keep those movies in business."

This is a frequent argument offered up against a record rating system. If ratings haven't kept the kids out of movies pushing sex and violence, why should ratings keep them away from records with offensive lyrics?

Elaine Allen, a high-school teacher, thinks a G through X rating system would, if anything, encourage kids to buy those X records.

"IF WE come up with a system which labels some record X, you can't tell me kids won't want the X records first. We will be helping those performers sell their records. Some of the most offensive groups are the least talented. They will probably die if we leave them alone. If we build this 'rock porn' issue to cause celebre proportions, we make those groups."

But Ms. Allen's colleague Rodney Prince says, "Ratings would work, if parents really paid attention to the ratings and wouldn't let X records in their homes. It all comes down to individual parents, you know. One group of people can't legislate for everyone's kids."

The Senate hearings were not expected to, and of course did not, lead to any concrete action. While some extremists — most notably South Carolina republican Sen. Ernest Hollings who labels all rock "outrageous filth" and "would like to do away with it constitutionally" — wanted that action, most participants in the Capital Hill rock show were more realistic about what could or should be accomplished.

The PMRC is pleased by the Recording Industry Association's decision. However, Mrs. Baker said PMRC would continue to monitor album lyrics.

RIAA leader Stanley Gortikov has repeatedly said the industry will not establish a panel to rate songs and will not bow to "the demands of people who make endless laundry lists of unacceptable words or values." He says anything more than a generic warning label would be "censorship — abhorrent and fundamentally inconsistent with creative freedom and American values."

Again and again while the two sides argue, those same catch phrases are repeated: freedom of speech vs. a parent's right to protect the children. Both sides say they are defending "American values." Can we really balance the two perfectly? And if so, how?

JOHN WALSH, a family therapist who has also specialized in adolescent therapy, says, "It is really only possible to achieve that delicate balance on the individual basis, in your own home. It is not possible for groups to provide guidelines which would not eventually become sensorial. In the long run, censorship would do as much harm to our kids as lyrics."

And Walsh thinks parents are overlooking a crucial point when they worry about young children listening to rock lyrics: "Young children don't understand the sexual innuendoes. They only understand as much about sex as they are ready to know."

Teens, of course, are taking in the messages. But the important question is: What other messages are they getting? Where does rock fit into the context of their lives? What are the home values they are learning from parents. Certainly the California Night Stalker was influenced by something other than "Highway to Hell."

Walsh says, "The Ku Klux Klan scares me more than Twisted Sister. But I have yet to see a conservative political action group take on the extreme rights, the Klan or the neo-Nazi groups which have sprung up in recent years."

Perhaps most ironically, this newest blast against rock comes at a time when many rock stars have cleaned up their personal acts. The days when Janis Joplin and Jimmy Hendrix died from excesses of drugs and alcohol are gone. Bands do not routinely trash hotel rooms in drunken orgies anymore. Today's rock stars are less apt to be caught in a drug scandal than pro athletes. Michael Jackson leads a exemplary life — yet even one of his lyrics was attacked by the PMRC.

Michele Anderson, a 15-year-old Madonna fan, says, "My mom thinks rock stars are better role models than they were when she was young. When I was real little and liked Kiss, my grandmother thought they were devil worshippers because of the way they dressed. They were like Halloween every day, a little scary but fun.

"Now I like Madonna because of her clothes. Everybody wears lace, even my mother. It's a fad. It's not going to change my life. Rock stars aren't going to make me do something I wouldn't do anyway."

'Rendezvous Houston' to mark sesquicentennial, NASA anniversary

HOUSTON — If you can imagine the city's downtown skyline being transformed into a massive stage, with the skyscrapers performing as "actors," amid a backdrop of computer-controlled lasers, pyrotechniques and mega-projection systems that will create visual effects as high as 1200 feet, then you can begin to fathom the magnitude of "Rendezvous Houston: A City in Concert," scheduled for April 5 and presented by the Houston Festival Foundation, Inc. and produced by Dreyfus Productions.

Recently a host of Houston officials unveiled plans for the unprecedented multi-media event starring recording artist Jean-Michel Jarre. Jarre is a French composer and innovator in contemporary music who has sold more than 25 million records. In a telegram to Houston mayor Kathy Whitmire, Jarre said, " 'Rendezvous Houston: A City in Concert' is an event close to my heart and one of the greatest challenges of my life. For the people of Houston, the city is the show and the show is the city. I hope it will be the most memorable celebration of music and life you will ever see."

Ms. Whitmire remarked, " 'Rendezvous Houston', in addition to showcasing our city's outstanding skyline features, will be a major highlight of the Houston sesquicentennial celebration. The combination of the outstanding talents of Jean-Michel Jarre and the excitement of this very colorful event will make lasting memories for us all."

The event, which will be free to the public, was conceived by Jarre for Houston and developed over the past year, to honor the city's and Texas' sesquicentennial celebration. It is also the highlight of this year's Houston Festival and the city's first commemorative event saluting the 25th anniversary of NASA's Johnson Space Center.

In addition to starring in the event, Jarre will direct the spectacular lighting and pyrotechnique effects. Dreyfus, Jarre's personal manager and Houston-based Micheal Woolcock, will serve as executive producers. Dreyfus will produce the Houston Festival presentation.

Houston's unanimous support of the event was evident as Ms. Whitmire; Harry Goleman, president of the Houston Festival Foundation, Inc.; Gerry Griffin, president of the chamber of commerce; and Dr. Carolyn Huntoon, associate director of the Johnson Space Center, all spoke on its significance and importance to the city.

This event will also mark the first performance of "Last Rendezvous (Ron's Piece)," a composition Jarre wrote for shuttle astronaut Ron McNair through a series of long-distance phone conversations with him. NASA astronaut Bruce McCandless II said McNair would have realised a personal dream by performing with Jarre at the event and playing saxophone on the recorded composition. Jarre has titled his forthcoming album, "Rendezvous," which will be released later this spring.

"Rendezvous Houston: A City in Concert" is designed in a way that millions of people can experience the event from almost any point in the city; throughout a radius spanning from a 45-foot tall reproduction of the downtown skyline serving as the stage (which will be erected in front of the Meridien Hotel), to points tens-of-miles away. Virtually the entire city will be able to view the spectacle.

'Highlander' eternally stupid

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

What would a race of men with physical immortality do with their endless lives? Devote themselves to a study of all history? Work to alleviate the eternal struggles of their fellow men? Plumb the limits of science? Try to find the ultimate answer to life, the universe and everything?

Nope.

They'd grab broadswords and spend their time trying to find other immortals so that they can hack their heads off.

At least that's what happens in "Highlander," a new action film that is staggeringly nonsensical.

The movie has the most bizarre casting seen since John Wayne played Genghis Khan with a drawl in 1956's "The Conqueror."

Sean Connery, who was actually born in Scotland, plays a 2,437-year-old Egyptian named "Juan Sanchez Villalobos Ramirez," while Christopher Lambert, a native of France, is supposed to be a Scottish Highlander. At least you can't say the two actors were typecast.

Lambert plays one of the immortals living in 16th century Scotland. Immortality is apparently a genetic mutation and Lambert doesn't realize he's eternal until Connery conveniently drops by one day to explain it all to him.

The explanation Connery gives is that immortals — all of whom are apparently male — can only die if they are decapitated. Being stabbed, hit or shot seems to sting real bad, but isn't fatal for them.

However, for some reason, all the immortals will one day be drawn to some faraway place where they will duel to the death until only one is left, who will then inherit "the ultimate knowledge."

The faraway place, of course, isn't the ancient pyramids, mystical Stonehenge or the Roman Coliseum. It's Manhattan in 1986.

When we first see Lambert, he's at a professional wrestling match in Madison Square Garden. If eternal life is so dull that one ends up spending it watching pro wrestlers, I'd probably be about ready for someone to hack my head off.

Lambert, however, is one of the better immortal swordsmen and, so, is one of the last two immortals left. The other is a thoroughly disagreeable fellow named Kurgan, who originally came from the Russian steppes. Now that he's in New York, far from old Mother Russia, he dresses like a punk extra from "The Road Warrior."

All the immortals get a cheap thrill from hacking the heads off their fellow immortals — when one dies there's a big lightning display which seems to give the survivor an almost sexual high — but Kurgan, played by Clancy Brown, really, really enjoys it.

While he's in hot pursuit of Lambert, Lambert is pursuing of a pretty young police department employee, played by Roxanne Hart.

In the big love scene, Lambert hands Ms. Hart a dagger and forces her to stab him. The knife goes into his gut, he drops to the floor in pain and then they kiss passionately. Director Russell Mulcahy must have thought this was terribly romantic, but it's not a technique I'd recommend using to impress a young lady in Garfields.

The scenes set in 16th century Scotland with Sean Connery are sometimes good enough that they look as though they might have come from another — much better — movie.

Mulcahy's background is in music videos and he must have used every single piece of visual pyrotechnics he ever learned in this movie. It's stupid but sleekly stylish.

Oddly, Mulcahy — who, as a music video director, ought to know his music — uses a soundtrack by the rock group Queen that is, at best, banal, and, at worse, downright annoying.

"Highlander" is such a frustratingly dumb movie that watching it can begin to seem a little like having physical immortality — you might think it will never end.

'Aurora Encounter' OK for kiddies

Once upon a time, so the story goes, around the turn of the century, a strange "airship" is supposed to have drifted over the small Texas town of Aurora and crashed into a windmill.

When the local people examined the curious wreckage, they found the corpse of an odd little man in it. Being decent people, the citizens gave him a decent funeral.

This supposedly true story — which sounds suspiciously like a tall tale to most people — was actually a staple of UFO magazines just a few years ago.

Regardless of how true it may be, it's certainly a great story — Old West meets super-high-tech — just dying to be made into a strange and interesting film.

It becomes clear right at the opening of "Aurora" that historical accuracy is not going to be one of its big concerns. It's raining at the beginning of the movie and a careful observer will note that the turn-of-the century characters appear to be carrying nylon umbrellas.

The spaceship is a real low-budget affair, too, crafted from canvas and studded with automobile headlights. At one point, when it's hovering close to the ground, a large dog puts his front paws on the UFO's bow and you can see the cloth bend.

At least the ship is always carefully shot so that the audience can't see the crane lifting it and swinging it around.

As annoying as this might be to an adult, these flaws won't matter much to the young children the film is aimed at.

The sluggish plot — a considerably embellished version of the original yarn — has the cute little space visitor buzzing the area for quite some time and making friends with some children before crashing into a water tower. There's also a cute, feminist schoolmarm and her boyfriend, the likeable sheriff.

The small kids in the audience basically seemed to like this innocent little film, laughing at times and even sniffling a little during the one sad part, but "The Aurora Encounter" may be too slow-paced even for some of the them.

'Better Off Dead' gets bum rap

"Better Off Dead" has received something of a bum rap from many film critics, earning an impressive array of awesomely negative reviews.

Among the adjectives from other reviews you won't be seeing in advertisements for the film are "infantile and puerile," "unrelievedly dreadful," "paltry" and "trash."

Of course, there have also been quite a few comments that the title is appropriate because the movie itself should have been left "Better Off Dead." That's too obvious a pun to miss out on, one supposes.

It's poorly organized and often dumb, but in a year packed with painfully bad teen films, it's always a relief to encounter one that isn't just viciously cruel or mind-numbingly boring.

The actual plot of "Better Off Dead" is minimal, to put it kindly. John Cusack — who was very good in "The Sure Thing" — plays a high school student who loses his self-centered girlfriend to the obnoxious Big Man On Campus, mopes around for a good while, then proves himself a better man than the BMOC and wins a better girlfriend in the process.

This type of story has been beaten to death before and the director — a person with the unlikely name of Savage Steve Holland — can't do much to bring it back to life.

So, rather cleverly, Savage Steve doesn't even try. Instead, he tosses the story in the back seat so that it's just along for the ride, and puts fast, funny, throwaway gags in the driver's seat.

He also exaggerates almost everything, to the point that Cusack's life seems almost like a humorous teen-aged nightmare. For example, when Cusack's mom, played in an appropriately daffy manner by Kim Darby (probably best remembered for her own teen role in "True Grit"), cooks a slimy dish, it's so bad that it can slither off the dish by itself.

This twisted humor seems a lot like what Franz Kafka would have written if he had ever done the screenplay for a teen comedy.

Not all of the jokes work, to be sure. A teen drug fiend resorting to snorting Jello is not amusing, to say the least, and neither are heavy-handed fat jokes. Newspaper delivery boys also take an unfair rap in the movie — a funny one but unfair.

But Savage Steve apparently believes in the "Airplane" school of film humor and keeps so many gags flying around up in the air at any given moment it doesn't seem to matter that almost 20 percent of them aren't too great.

During a single scene, set in a "Pig-Burger" restaurant, Savage Steve makes fun of fast food and part-time jobs, takes a sly jab at the "Porky's" series of movies, pays homage to "Bride of Frankenstein" and throws in a bizarre animated music video number.

It's terrible that all of this anarchy has absolutely nothing to do with the rest of "Better Off Dead," but it's pretty funny stuff all by itself.

The main character, a French cultural anthropologist played by Pierce Brosnan, dies very early in the movie, but remains prominent throughout the film in a long, involved series of flashbacks.

After years of living in rugged, isolated locales studying exotic cultures, he and his wife, played by Anna Maria Montecelli, end up in Los Angeles, where he is supposed to spend a year lecturing at UCLA.

One gang member, in fact, was convicted of committing a brutal murder in the house the French couple is renting.

"What kind of people would do something like that?" the alarmed wife exclaims.

You can almost see a light bulb go on over the anthropologist's head when he hears that question. He starts studying this Los Angeles sub-culture to discover what kind of people would do something like that, just as he would study African Bushmen or Arctic Eskimos.

Inconspicuously following his urban tribe around, he discovers that they're rock-and-roll nomads, roaming through the concrete jungle just like other nomadic people wander frozen tundra or desert sands.

Then, abruptly, his investigation takes a very weird turn into the supernatural. It seems that the gang members are not at all what they look like.

To further complicate matters, writer-director John McTiernan throws in Lesley-Anne Down as a doctor who becomes spiritually possessed. She blindly weaves in and out of the movie, cluttering up an already confusing plot.

Someone like Peter Weir — who made such fascinating but bizarre thrillers as "The Last Wave" and "Picnic at Hanging Rock" — might have been able to fashion a leaner version of "Nomads" into a great film.

Unfortunately, the movie is so convoluted that it often looks as though McTiernan was puzzled by his own story.

Actress plays bunco artist in mini-series

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Madolyn Smith, a star of the new CBS mini-series "If Tomorrow Comes," recalls that when she was 15 she flew from Thailand into Laos to perform with a singing group at a local high school.

"It was right in the middle of the war," she says. "My parents were terrified that we'd be shot down. We performed within walking distance of the Mekong River."

At the time she was attending school in Bangkok, where her father was an American military adviser.

The itinerant life of an Army brat, plus a few harrowing experiences, undoubtedly helped prepare Miss Smith for her role as the clever bunco artist in "If Tomorrow Comes."

She stars as Tracy Whitney, a workaday bank clerk transformed by a series of misfortunes into the sophisticated, world-traveling confidence woman. The seven-hour series, adapted from the best-selling book by Sidney Sheldon, will be telecast by CBS in three parts tonight, Monday and Tuesday.

It also stars Tom Berenger as her romantic interest and partner in bilking the public, David Keith as a sinister insurance investigator on her trail, Richard Kiley as her mentor, Liam Neeson as a policeman trying to keep Keith in rein, and Jack Weston as a carnival huckster who imparts the tricks of the trade to his nephew, Berenger.

The series was shot on location over 3½ months in London, Nice, Amsterdam, New Orleans and the Louisiana State Penitentiary at Angola. The men's maximum-security prison was used, Miss Smith says, because the women's prison looked like a college dormitory and didn't appear too threatening.

Miss Smith's role requires 16 disguises. In one, she is a bleached-blonde Southern belle who always has the vapors. In another, she is Rusty Storm, a brassy Texas heiress with a tendency to drink too much.

"I was surprised and delighted when David Keith was cast in the offbeat role," she says. "He was signed before me and that bit of imaginative casting was one of the factors that made me accept. That made me think it might be an unusual production. I felt the same about my casting, since I'm not your typical TV beauty."

"I had some reservations about it," she admits. "On the first read I thought it was like a melodramatic soap opera. I didn't want to do a soap opera. I wanted to know who else was going to be in it. I was hoping they'd get some stylish people to give it a 1930s caper movie look. And I wanted to be sure they were going to pursue the humor of the book.

"What I didn't take into account was what I could lend to it. Or what the other cast members would lend to it. Of course, it's still a soap opera, but a very classy soap opera. It's fun and adventuresome."

Miss Smith also spent some time studying her character and the motivation that turned her from a lonely bank clerk into a clever, competitive con artist.

Miss Smith was born at Sandia Army Base, N.M., the third of five children. But she grew up in such places as Honolulu, Washington, Leavenworth, Kans., and Bangkok. She didn't return to New Mexico until her father retired ifrom the Army in 1974 as a colonel and settled in Albuquerque.

"Army bases are like self-contained cities," she says. "There was very little you had to leave for. Military life can be great for children. I was lonely about being separated from my friends, but I enjoyed it, too. As an adult I appreciate all the advantages I had, all the places I lived in. And I had four brothers and sisters, so I had a lot of company."

It was in Thailand that she joined a performing group designed to promote the good image of American youth in Southeast Asia.

"That's why they sent us places," she says. "We were like the Up With People group. The school I went to in Bangkok had the worst drug problem in the world at the time.

"Acting was always something I could do. The first time I performed in public I was six. I did all kinds of things. It never occurred to me I could actually be an actress."

'Voices of Appalachia' to perform

Singing hymns and folk songs of southern Appalachia, the "Voices of Appalachia", a 40-voice choir from Kentucky, will present a program at the Fannin Terrace Baptist Church today at 7 p.m.

The choir members are students at Alice Lloyd College in Pippa Passes, Ky. The college is located in the heart of southern Appalachia — about 150 miles east of Lexington, Ky. and 120 miles southwest of Huntington, W. Va.

"Its graduates, devoted to leadership education and service to mankind, are working hard to solve the many problems of the mountains — to improve educational, economic and health opportunities — and at the same time to strengthen the Appalachian values and traditions that enrich the quality of life," said a spokesman for the college. "Their music conveys the deep feelings and rich musical heritage of the mountain people."

Richard Kennedy is the director of the Voices of Appalachia. He received his bachelor's degree in music from William Carey College, Hattiesburg, Miss. Kennedy earned his master's degree in music at Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth.

Ton of pennies buys car

REIDSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — For six years, Calvin Welch has saved his pennies for a new car.

When he decided to buy one, he got his money together...from under his bed, the tops of appliances, between sofa cushions, the bottom of his gun case, behind doors and closets and the trunk of his 1971 car.

And when he had finished, Welch, 35, had more than a ton of pennies, enough for a $3,000 downpayment.

"It's legal tender, and we had to take it," said Nelson Cole, president of the Nelson Cole Inc. dealership who handed Welch the keys to a $15,130 1986 Pontiac Grand Prix.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—We had a terrible result the other night when I held the following hand:

♠6 ♡KQ52 ◇Q87642 ♣95

My partner opened the bidding with one spade and I responded two diamonds. Partner drove to game, we were doubled and it cost a packet. Partner said I did not have the values for a two-over-one response and should have bid one no trump. I am sure that, somewhere in one of your books, I read that all no trump bids show balanced hands. Not so? — R.F.N., Washington, D.C.

A.—I don't know where you came across that statement, but it is certainly not in anything I wrote. By and large, it is true, all no trump bids do tend to show balanced hands. That is especially true of opening bids and opener's rebids. However, that is not the case with one-level responses.

Any jump response in no trump by responder does promise a balanced hand. But consider the hand you submit. You have seven points in high cards and a distributional point in clubs. However, you should not add 2 points for your singleton spade, since that can hardly be considered an asset.

Thus, you have enough to respond, but not enough to go to the two-level. Should you elect to pass, you could easily miss a sound partscore, or even game, in hearts. To give yourself the opportunity to reach such a spot, it is essential that you give opener a chance to rebid. Since you cannot progress to the two-level, the only response available to you is one no trump.

There is one case where you can bend the values for a two-over-one response slightly. That is when you have a good, long suit and little else. You intend responding in that suit at the two-level, and then rebidding it at the three-level. However, on the hand you submit your suit quality is not good enough for such action. At the very least it should be something like AQJ9xx.

Q.—I have read about systems where a pass actually shows the values for an opening bid. Does that mean that you can double one of those passes for takeout? —J.R., New York City.

A.—That is only one of the problems that these new, artificial systems are posing for lawmakers, and it will be a while before this mess gets sorted out.

Some years ago there was a brouhaha in France when a player using a pass to show a normal one club opening bid, passed and his opponent bid one club. Third seat asked for a review, and the bidder said: "Your partner passed and I opened one club." The passer called for the tournament director, insisting that his opponent had conveyed illegal information about his one club bid. He maintained that since his pass actually showed a one club opening, the one club bid was an overcall and not an opening bid! It's a strange world we live in.

To answer your question: you cannot double a pass.

'Frank & Maisie' loving book about author's parents

"Frank & Maisie," by Wilfrid Sheed. Simon & Schuster. 296 Pages. $17.95.

A Review

By CAROL DEEGAN
Associated Press

Wilfrid Sheed is a novelist and essayist who has been twice nominated for the National Book Award for fiction. His latest book, "Frank & Maisie," is about his parents, Maisie Ward and Frank Sheed, who were authors, publishers, and street-corner orators for their church.

At the beginning of the book, the author states that by temperament and intellect, "religion as such strikes me as a desperate attempt on the part of mankind to bore itself to death in expiation of some forgotten excitement." But he does go on to say that what the Sheed-Ward family had was never quite religion. "It was a whole life and merry one," he writes, "and it never occurred to me not to live it. It was simply the thing we did."

Frank Sheed was born in Sydney, Australia, in 1897. Maisie Ward was born on the Isle of Wight, England, in 1889. Maisie's family was Catholic. Frank's father sent him to Methodist Sunday school, to madden his Presbyterian family and his Catholic wife both at the same time. But Frank secretly became a Catholic.

After a fairly slow start in school, Frank did exceptionally well, winning scholarship after scholarship. He studied at Sydney University and went on to law school, but he had met Maisie while on a trip abroad. Maisie and England were more tempting than Australia and the law, so he shipped out for England.

Frank and Maisie were married in 1925. The publishing company, Sheed and Ward, soon followed. The American branch of Sheed and Ward followed in 1933, financed by Frank's lectures, which he transferred from London's Hyde Park to platforms across the United States.

Obviously, Wilfrid Sheed has an insider's advantage when it comes to Frank Sheed and Maisie Ward, which makes "Frank & Maisie" both wonderful and difficult to read. There are so many Wards and Sheeds described in the early pages of the book that is is sometimes difficult to keep them all sorted out. And for those not familiar with the history of the Catholic Church during the 20th century, there may be an uneasy sense that perhaps the reader is missing some vital point.

Book heroic try at explaining arms control

"American-Soviet Relations From Nixon to Reagan," by Raymond L. Garthoff; Brookings Institution; $16.95; 1,147 pp.) "Sovieticus," by Stephen F. Cohen; Norton; $12.95; 160 pp.

A Review

By JACK BURBY
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

There are two ways to look back at the Geneva summit. One is to assume that someone, somewhere, knows what really happened during the two days of meetings between President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev and what it all meant. Another is to read the largest of these two volumes and realize that, if history is any guide, there is a good chance that nobody really knows.

That is just one contribution that Raymond L. Garthoff makes, drawing from years of government service, some of it at the eye of the arms control hurricane, years on which he now looks back from his desk at the Brookings Institution in Washington, where he is a senior fellow specializing in Soviet foreign and defense policy.

The smaller of the two volumes is a collection of columns written over a period of three years for Nation magazine by Stephen F. Cohen, a professor of Soviet affairs at Princeton University.

Cohen is another first-rate analyst of the way Americans and Soviets look to one another. His Nation pieces distill views drawn from far more detailed writings of his own and, in fact, one valuable part of the book is a recommended reading list.

Cohen's slim book is like Los Angeles freeway signs that are designed not to show people how to get somewhere but to remind people who already know where they are going that their offramp is approaching. That makes the book no less valuable. For example, he describes Soviet government officials as a collection of conservative elitists, proud and defensive of the Soviet brand of communism, worried that change will make things worse, not better. Most Russians would agree, he writes. That is so profoundly Russian and so contrary to the way the Soviet Union is portrayed most often that this one passage alone is worth not only reading but also committing to memory.

Garthoff's special contribution is his talent for looking at the same event through first American, then Soviet eyes to make it clear how differently they see things. For example, one product of the 1972 Nixon-Brezhnev summit was a document called "Basic Principles of Mutual Relations," in which the two countries agreed, among other things, that there is no alternative to "peaceful coexistence" and that both would do their utmost to "avoid military confrontation." According to Garthoff, the document was drafted by Henry A. Kissinger and his aides in Moscow without consultation with anybody in Washington. President Nixon scarcely mentions it in his reminiscences about the summit and, Garthoff says, may indeed never have read it.

On the other side, the Soviets established an entire new department to implement the agreement and conferred heroes' medals on those who helped write it. For our side, a throwaway; for theirs, something profound and significant.

After the first blush of detente, he writes, Americans worried that getting too cozy with the Soviet Union would be like inviting it to take over the Third World, one country at a time. Some think that is exactly how it has worked out.

And what did the Soviets worry about during those early days of de tente? They thought the new relationship would invite an "ideological penetration" of Eastern Europe by the decadent West that would pry Poland and Hungary and the rest loose from socialism.

At one point in fairly recent memory, Washington officials panicked over the inroads of communists in Europe — the Eurocommunists of Italy and other Western nations. If Washington was against Eurocommunism, Moscow must be in favor of it, right? Wrong, says Garthoff. Moscow panicked over the possibility that the Eastern bloc would learn bad habits from Eurocommunists who seemed relatively snug in their bourgeois surroundings. Moscow attacked them as "enemies of Marxism."

And so it goes for 1,147 pages, crammed with footnotes as addictive as peanuts, while Garthoff peers like a referee along the line of scrimmage between East and West, over a period stretching from Richard Nixon to Ronald Reagan. He roots for the home team, but he sees the offsides and fumbles on both sides.

One of Garthoff's important themes is that arms control has not failed political leaders in this country, political leaders have failed arms control. In 1972, he writes, Nixon and Brezhnev agreed in private at the summit that led to the arms control agreement known as SALT I that both sides would be free to push ahead with military preparations, including nuclear weapons, that were not explicitly covered by the agreement. But because Nixon did not say much, if anything, about that agreement in the United States, opponents of arms control could use every new piece of Soviet military hardware as evidence that Moscow was reneging on arms control.

In negotiations leading up to the next arms control agreement, SALT II, U.S. negotiators were less than candid with the American public about a Soviet bomber known in this country as the Backfire. The negotiators agreed with the Soviets that it did not have the range to reach U.S. targets and therefore would not be counted in the ceilings on strategic weapons. But they did not stand up for that position publicly against opponents who just kept saying again and again that Backfire was an intercontinental bomber. It was one of the arguments that made it impossible for the Senate to ratify SALT II.

It probably is impossible to write a single book containing everything worth knowing about arms control and what it all means for the future But Garthoff has made a heroic effort.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Monday, March 17, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Take time out in the year ahead to think about new ways to put your money to better use. Make sure long-range financial goals have a strong basis on which to build. A fresh start where romance is concerned lifts your spirits and sets you on a happier course. Those in their early 30s find that many dreams will be within reach. A change in lifestyle helps you to view the world more clearly.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Ex-"Dallas" star Patrick Duffy, musician John Sebastian, British actress Lesley-Anne Down, actor Kurt Russell, singer Nat King Cole, Boston Red Sox pitcher Tim Lollar.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Control the tendency to act hastily, especially if your reputation is involved. Avoid taking unnecessary risks today. Get involved in a community project.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Moving ahead in business and romance will depend on your ability to be more sociable. Better management procedures improve your financial picture. Seek expert advice before making changes.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Important decisions will need to be made at the office; postpone business trips. Your leadership ability is in demand. A romance undertaken at this time will prove extremely glamorous.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A domestic problem may lead to your feeling a bit resentful. A younger member of the family may help to alleviate the tension. Diplomacy on the job encourages team work.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Avoid commitments and signing contracts until all the facts have been presented. Resist the temptation to expand your business. Even though your judgment is right on target take your time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Attend to business during the morning hours so you are prepared to answer questions proposed by your superiors later in the day. Before making accusations look carefully for a missing article.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Plans may be changed at the last minute due to unexpected developments at home. Business and career matters enjoy favorable influences. Helping someone with a personal problem proves very rewarding; just avoid financial commitments.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Erratic behavior from a normally calm person may prove aggravating this morning. Avoid personal questions as you will receive the answers you need from another source.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A personal relationship seems a bit on edge today. Past efforts to recycle an old project result in increased profits. An old flame may re-enter the picture, causing some embarrassment.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Someone may be trying to influence your judgment. Your first impressions are usually accurate. Make sure subordinates are following instructions to the letter; otherwise the quality of the product will suffer.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be alert to flattery; someone may have ulterior motives. Real estate deals are unusually lucrative. A long-distance call brings unexpected good news.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your business and financial success results in favorable references. A new source of money requires careful inspection. Review all steps before taking any actions.

Rogers' watercolors displayed at bank

Ernestine Rogers is exhibiting a selection of watercolors in the lobby of RepublicBank First National Midland through March 31. The public is invited to view the exhibit during business hours.

Ms. Rogers attended art classes at Midland College and during two summer terms the School of Fine Arts in Banff, Canada. She also studied with a number of well known artists, including Bud Biggs, Robert E. Wood, Frank Webb and Larry Weston.

An extensive foreign traveler, she sketches subjects to paint later. Ms. Rogers stated, "Painting is my hobby, and I believe in creative art. Persons should use creative ability to express themselves, but most of all to me painting is fun."
