A.M. BRIEFING

Welfare camp

SMITHVILLE — The children at the rural campsite in this Central Texas community are not your average campers. They chop wood and build their own shelters. They cook over an open flame and do other chores together to learn teamwork. But they never intended to be experts in roughing it. They are abused and neglected children from homes that subjected them to physical and sexual harm, causing most of the youths to become perpetrators of abuse themselves.

Manhunt

Brewster County Sheriff's Office deputies and other West Texas law enforcement officials continued their search Friday for Alvaro Hernandez, 44, of Alpine who held the Brewster Sheriff Jack McDaniel at gunpoint Thursday, officials said. Hernandez's bond for aggravated robbery charges was revoked Thursday and a warrant was issued for his arrest. When McDaniel attempted to arrest him in Alpine, Hernandez took his gun and fled. Hernandez is said to heading for the Mexican border, about 60 to 90 miles south of Marathon.

Crawford guilty

HUNTSVILLE— Jurors swiftly convicted former lawman Hilton Crawford Friday for kidnapping and killing the 12-year-old son of longtime friends. Jurors took just 62 minutes to consider nine days of testimony. As the verdict was read, the 57-year-old Crawford stood silent and emotionless between his two attorneys.

Poll: GOP, Dems in tight fight for control

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fifteen weeks before the November election, voters are evenly divided over whether to support Democrats or Republicans for Congress and over which party they trust more to lead the country, according to an Associated Press poll.

The results illustrate remarkable overall stability in President Clinton's political standing over the past seven months. But they also suggest modest improvement in the Republican party's image and congressional hopes.

The biggest single factor in the improved GOP standing was the attitude among older voters, who moved away from Republicans during the 1995 budget debate as Clinton and congressional Democrats accused the Republicans of trying to slash Medicare spending. In the new survey, Republicans break even among voters over age 65.

Overall, asked how they would vote if elections for Congress were today, 41 percent of registered voters in the survey said Democratic and 40 percent said Republican. Fourteen percent said they were undecided and the rest said they would not vote or refused to answer.

The AP survey results represented the best Republican showing on this question in months; two other recent national surveys showed Democrats with a three-point edge

Agents pursue many theories, ask for any tips

'We have a lot of things that look like accident, a lot of things that look like terrorism.'

—James Kallstrom

Associated Press

NEW YORK — From the bottom of the continental shelf to the highest levels of Washington, Americans searched Friday for evidence that the nation's second deadliest aviation disaster was also its deadliest terrorist attack.

The FBI stopped short of declaring the crash of TWA Flight 800 a crime, although the bureau announced a "massive" investigation to find out what caused the huge explosion that brought down the 747.

"We have a lot of things that look like accident, a lot of things that look like terrorism," said James Kallstrom, head of the FBI's New York office.

He emphasized at a news conference later Friday that it could be days, even weeks, before that kind of determination is made. "We're not prepared to say something till we believe it's absolutely true. We really haven't said that because we just can't reach that level of information yet."

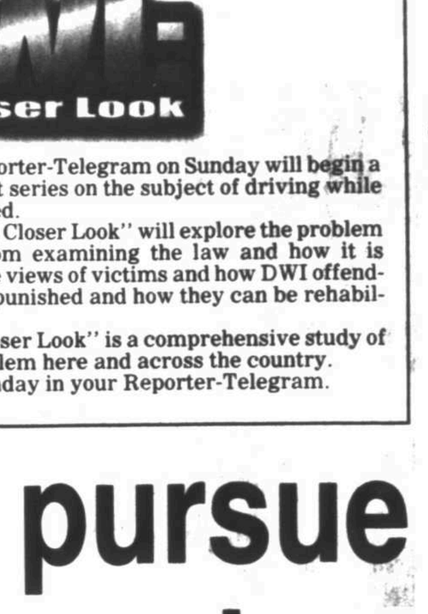

Meanwhile, rough seas in the Atlantic prevented drivers from continuing their search for debris on Friday, but officials said they hoped to resume today. Searchers have recovered but a fraction of the plane so far and have not found its black boxes.

Assuming the disaster may have been deliberate, agents began contacting informants in the terrorist underworld, according to a federal investigator who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

"It would be foolish not to be out there seeking every bit of information we can, from any corner," the source said.

ABC News, citing sources, reported that a federal agency received a claim of responsibility for the TWA explosion from a group tied to Ramzi Yousef.

Yousef, 29, is on trial in New York City, accused of plotting to blow up 12 West Coast-bound airliners in a single day in 1995. Authorities also believe Yousef was the mastermind of the World Trade Center bombing in February 1993.

Joe Lyncher, 38, of Houston, holds pictures of his wife Pam, 37, and two daughters, Katie, 8, and Shannon, 10, in New York Friday, who were believed to be passengers on TWA flight 800.

Meanwhile, CBS reported that a Lebanese man on a list of people with connections to terrorist organizations was supposed to be on board the doomed plane when it left Athens for New York but missed the flight.

In a similar report, The Times of London quoted an unnamed State Department official as saying a "known Arab terrorist" was allowed to board TWA flight 800 at Athens, although he was escorted off the plane before it took off.

State Department spokeswoman Elaine McDevitt said it was "the first we've heard" of any of the reports, and couldn't confirm them.

The FBI's Kallstrom said he too had never heard any report of a known terrorist boarding the plane in Athens and then being taken off.

"I'm going to check on it as soon as I leave this podium," he told a news conference Friday night.

Cancer survivors kick off Relay for Life

By Joe Gaines
Staff Writer

"Never give up" was the motto of the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life, a 24-hour walk around the track at Midland Memorial Stadium that continues until 6 p.m. today.

The first lap of the fund-raiser was kicked off by about 25 cancer survivors and members of their families. Many of the survivors were women who had survived breast cancer.

One survivor, Anne Hover, who discovered she had breast cancer last year, spoke to other survivors and told them how thankful she was to be alive.

"I thank God, volunteers of the American Cancer Society, the cancer victims and survivors who went before me and medical science for all the advancements they have made," Ms. Hover said.

In May 1994, Ms. Hover discovered a lump in her breast, but the lump did not appear in a mammogram performed later.

Mammograms are important, but they are not 100 percent reliable, Ms. Hover said.

A year later, at her next checkup, her doctor thought the mass may have grown and ordered another mammogram. A "suspicious" lump was found and a needle biopsy was done.

Doctors told Ms. Hover she had breast cancer, but it was in its early stages and had not spread. After she was diagnosed, she decided to have a new type of surgery — a double mastectomy with immediate reconstruction using her own abdominal tissues. The procedure is usually performed in two separate surgeries, she said.

"They gave me a zillion options to chose from and I went with having it all done at one time," Ms. Hover said.

Karadzic quits as Serb leader, avoids trial

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Radovan Karadzic, accused of war crimes for leading Serbs in a brutal 3½-year campaign to seize control of Bosnia, yielded Friday to international pressure to give up all political power.

His removal clears the way for elections in September that diplomats consider critical to building peace in Bosnia. It also marks a new triumph for U.S. envoy Richard Holbrooke, who brokered last year's Bosnian peace accord.

But it will not put Karadzic where the world says he belongs — before the U.N. war crimes tribunal. One reason is that Karadzic's testimony could implicate Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic, who has been accused of fomenting the war but has been the linchpin of Holbrooke's efforts to build peace.

After 10 hours of haggling overnight in Belgrade, Holbrooke distributed a statement signed by Karadzic, senior Bosnian Serbs, Milosevic and his foreign minister announcing that Karadzic was out.

In the document, Karadzic "states that he shall withdraw immediately and permanently from all political activities."

"He will not appear in public, or on radio or television or other media or means of communication, or participate in any way in the elections," it said.

Karadzic's functions as president of the Bosnian Serbs' self-declared republic will pass temporarily to his ultranationalist aide, Biljana Plavsic. Another aide, Aleksa Buha, will take the "powers and responsibilities" associated with heading the ruling Serbian Democratic Party, the statement said.

Formally, it is the end for Karadzic, a psychiatrist and amateur poet brought into nationalist politics by Milosevic as the old Yugoslavia disintegrated in 1990.

"He knew he was signing the end of his political career," Holbrooke said.

But a world burned in the past by broken Balkan promises was wary, stressing that the agreement still does not deliver Karadzic to trial before the U.N. court that has indicted him twice for war crimes and genocide.

Holbrooke, whose tough negotiating style clearly has won him some respect from Milosevic, made sure that Plavsic, Buha and another top Bosnian Serb signed the statement at the posh, secluded Belgrade villa where the talks were held.

Karadzic signed it at his Pale stronghold, in the presence of a witness Holbrooke talked to later. The witness was thought to be Milosevic's top security aide, Jovica Stanisic.

"There is no question the signatures are correct," Holbrooke said. "This is an important statement. If it's implemented strictly, it increases significantly chances of successful elections."

But, he stressed, "we are not satisfied ... It falls short of our goals," because Karadzic remains in Bosnia.

Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic said, "Every capitulation of war criminals is good news."

At the tribunal, spokesman Christian Chartier called Karadzic's removal "the first step on a longer road which must lead the accused to The Hague."

Under election rules, refugees may register in areas where they used to or want to live. Bosnia is currently divided between the Bosnian Serbs and the Muslim-Croat federation. A goal of the elections is to select a federal government to bring the two regions closer together, and to permit people on either side of the divide to return to their homes.

Holbrooke, who quit diplomacy in February after negotiating the Dayton peace accord, was called back to salvage the peace process after Karadzic resigned as self-styled Serb president but refused to quit as party leader.

Holbrooke threatened renewed sanctions against Serbia if Karadzic did not step aside. But, because Milosevic remains so powerful on the Serb side, Holbrooke may never achieve the goal of trying Karadzic and his military commander, Gen. Ratko Mladic, for alleged war crimes.

If Karadzic appears in court, he is widely expected to implicate Milosevic in the planning and execution of the brutal Serb land grab that marked the first months of Bosnia's 3½-year civil war.

Holbrooke seemed aware of the contradiction as he noted how long it has taken to end Bosnia's conflict.

"The peace process is a very long and bumpy road," he noted.

"WOW! What a difference we have seen in our son, Wade. He has only been attending Hillcrest for 3 short months, and already we have seen such a turn-a-round in him. No longer do we spend 4 to 5 hours each night trying to get the assignments done.

How well we remember the fights and arguments over that problem. When Wade started in public school I began trying to get him to understand that every learner must take responsibility for his education. Since Hillcrest has entered our lives I actually believe that he may be beginning to understand my statement.

Your school and teaching methods have helped Wade become a happy child again. Thank you from the bottom of a mother's heart."

The high for Friday was 100, compared to the record high for that date of 105, set in 1981.

Friday's low was 73, compared to the record low of 61, set in 1947.

STATE

It was partly cloudy and hot Friday with southerly winds about 10 miles an hour.

Most temperatures peaked in the 90s, but 4 p.m. readings ranged from 85 degrees at Houston's Hobby Airport to 101 degrees in College Station and Wichita Falls.

Showers and an isolated thunderstorms moved inland along the upper coast. Additional activity dampened the Davis Mountains.

The North Texas forecast is for todayx to be mostly sunny in the east and partly cloudy in central and western portions. Highs will range from 94 degrees in the northeast to 101 in the southwest. Tonight is to be partly cloudy with a slight chance of thunderstorms in the north. Lows 74 to 81.

South Texas is to be partly cloudy with scattered showers and thundershowers. Highs will be around 90 along the upper Texas coast to the low to mid 90s from the coastal bend southward. Expect 100 to 104-degree readings in the Rio Grande Valley and plains into the Hill Country and northern sections of Southeast Texas. Lows in the 70s and 80s.

Forecasters said West Texas will have mostly sunny days and fair nights through Sunday. Highs today and Sunday from the 90s to near 110 in the Big Bend valleys. Lows tonight in the 60s and 70s.

NATION

Thunderstorms pounded the Ohio Valley on Friday, while a tornado ripped through a small Wisconsin town and two others touched down in Pennsylvania.

The tornado that struck Oakfield, Wis., tore through a canning factory, a school and dozens of homes, leaving 17 injured.

In Pennsylvania, tornadoes hit two western counties and destroy three homes, a mobile home and barn. Several roofs were ripped off other homes. No deaths were reported.

In Pennsylvania flash floods washed away part of an earthen dam in Jefferson County. A mud slide caved in the front entrance of a medical center in Crawford County in the western part of the state, flooding the parking lot and oozing into the building by tripping the automatic doors.

Thunderstorms swamped the Chicago area, while thousands of homes in southern suburbs appeared as islands among flooded yards and streets. Disaster areas grew to 15 counties.

Northern Indiana farmers who welcomed the rain when it first arrived were cleaning up after thunderstorms that dumped more than the ground could soak up, flooding homes in Fort Wayne and Gary.

Many rivers in northern Illinois and Indiana were expected to crest three to five feet above flood levels in the next couple of days.

Severe storms broke out across southwestern Ohio in the morning and in central Maryland, where two inches poured down in 15 minutes in some areas, downing power lines and ripping off roofs. A state of emergency due to floods was declared in northern West Virginia.

By late afternoon much of the thunderstorm activity stretched from eastern New York to the Mid-Atlantic region and into the upper Tennessee Valley.

The rest of the country was relatively quiet and warm, except for the Pacific Northwest, where pleasant, cool conditions prevailed.

THEORIES: Weather hampers recovery efforts

(From 1A)

Kallstrom told reporters that the FBI would not take control of the TWA investigation from the National Transportation Safety Board until more evidence is found. He urged people to call a toll-free number with tips, and gave the Internet address for the FBI home page.

Kallstrom said the bureau was pursuing many theories. One was the possibility that a surface-to-air missile — perhaps fired from a boat — brought the plane down. Radar detected a blip merging with the jet shortly before the explosion, something that could indicate a missile hit.

But Pentagon officials, speaking Friday on condition of anonymity, said that given the plane's altitude and the range of hand-held missiles, the theory is highly unlikely. Also, they said government analysts have studied several radar reports of the area and found the blip to be false.

The head of the Federal Aviation Administration said the government has been strengthening security at American airports since last summer and is prepared to upgrade it further if needed. "The FAA's security program will be modified as needed to ensure the safety of the traveling public," David Hinson said Friday.

Rain, wind and fog hampered efforts to recover the wreckage that Kallstrom said might contain vital clues to what destroyed the plane Wednesday night and killed all 230 people aboard.

NTSB Vice Chairman Robert Francis said divers did not go into the water Friday. Seas were so choppy that some search vessel crew members were getting sick. "The weather is not cooperating," he said.

Sonar detected a 15-foot spike on the ocean floor — possibly part of the plane, Francis said. But the search had to be suspended for fear the sonar equipment, which trail on cables behind the ship, would be lost in the storm.

There was no sign Friday of the plane's black boxes, which record pilots' conversations and the plane's operations.

But Francis said late Friday an examination of communication between the TWA jet and air traffic controllers indicated there was no distress or mayday calls before the airliner, which reached an altitude of 13,700 feet, disappeared from radar 31 minutes and 20 seconds into the doomed flight.

He also said that a piece of equipment that automatically sends information back to controllers one minute into the flight reported no anomalies. And to show how much more work remains to be done, he said less than 1 percent of the wreckage has been recovered.

At Kennedy Airport, relatives gathered at a hotel for the heartbreaking process of identifying their loved ones and collecting their remains. Some walked from the elevator to the lobby in groups of three or four, holding each other.

They seemed unconcerned for the moment with the question that occupied the rest of the nation.

"Whether it was an act or terrorism or mechanical failure, doesn't make any difference," said Joe Lychner, who lost his wife and two daughters. "What's important is to put a face to the tragedy. ... It wasn't just a plane crash. There were people in there, good people."

Suffolk County Medical Examiner Charles Wetli said that most of the victims suffered fatal injuries in the air and that while some may have been conscious when they hit the water, drowning was an unlikely cause of death.

"It looks like a great many of them died upon impact with the water," he said. "That is not to say that serious injury or death did not occur in the sky itself."

Most suffered blunt injuries "like those in a super high-speed car crash," he said. One or two appeared to have inhaled water, but that was probably a reflex action, he said.

Reflexively, Americans just assume terrorism

By Mark Fritz
Associated Press

■ News analysis

Even as bits of plane and passenger were fished from the sea, even as families of victims clung to faint hopes at an airport hotel, even as people from the president on down urged everyone not to jump to conclusions, many Americans made the leap anyway:

It's got to be a bomb.

If the crash of TWA Flight 800 turns out to have been planned, it will complete a stunning trilogy of terrorism in the United States that began with the World Trade Center bombing in 1993 and was topped by the attack on the Oklahoma City federal building last year.

Those tragedies each spurred new demands for tighter security, quick arrests and prosecutions, and served as reminders that the United States no longer is immune from the sort of maniacs who once stuck to European capitals and Middle Eastern hot spots.

What is unclear is whether Americans will sacrifice some freedoms for more security, or merely resign themselves to the fact that political terrorism is here to join the local landscape of drive-by shootings, armor-piercing bullets, church burnings, serial killings, workplace massacres and crack attacks.

"We just don't feel safe in this country any more," said Bruce Blythe, a psychologist and head of Atlanta-based International Crisis Management Inc., which sells security and psychological services to private companies hit by violence or disasters.

Even though its cause was not immediately clear, the crash electrified the security-conscious Olympic Games in Atlanta and sent shudders through air travelers nationwide. Shares in security firms spiked higher on Wall Street.

Todd Sermershein of Salt Lake City, who was flying from Cleveland to Minneapolis on a business trip, was typical of those who just reflexively assumed the plane was blown out of the sky by a sinister force — and that his jetliner might be next.

"My wife is scared to death," he said.

The mere fact that so many people thought the crash was the latest chapter in the country's recent struggle with international-style terrorism even affected the markets, said Allan Rones, a financial analyst who studies the security market for J.W. Charles Securities in Boca Raton, Fla.

"Any time this happens, Americans accept more security," he said after watching stocks in security firms he follows shoot up after the disaster. "Whether or not it's a terrorist thing, just the thought is enough."

Blythe said his company, which worked with businesses hurt by the Oklahoma blast, immediately got calls from airlines inquiring about his services.

"Why is that so?" he said. "It's because we've had a pattern of terrorism in this country."

Like the Oklahoma City bombing, the TWA crash raised the same queasy fears that nobody is safe anywhere from a nut with a cause.

"Once that message is conveyed through the media with its powerful images, the message becomes very powerful," said John P. Wilson, a Cleveland State University psychologist specializing in post-traumatic stress syndrome who has worked in Oklahoma City, Bosnia and post-war Kuwait.

The crash triggered the usual deluge of claims of responsibility, tips on suspects, missile sightings and other post-disaster confusion that adds to the national anxiety.

"There will be all sorts of leads that will go nowhere," said Henry J. DePippo, a former federal prosecutor who was the senior trial counsel in the World Trade Center case.

The crash already has brought a deluge of demands for tighter airport security in U.S. airports, which is much more lax than those in European capitals where terrorist attacks are as familiar as post office shooting sprees are here.

"We live in a different era than we did 10 years ago," Wilson said. "Surely, people will tolerate much stricter and rigorous procedures."

Not necessarily, said Blythe, noting that in this era of anti-government militia movements there are people opposed to, say, bans on assault weapons.

Still, the terrorist attacks that have most affected American civilians all have led to intensified efforts to toughen security, chase criminals abroad, pass new laws — all part of what politicians say is common sense, but which psychologists call part of a society's necessary bid to wrest control of itself from the terrorists.

"It's important to have this sense that things are being done," said Ann Kaiser Stearns, a psychology professor and author of "Living Through Personal Crisis."

When suspects were found in the Oklahoma City and World Trade Center buildings, there was almost a collective sigh of national relief. But the culprits who bombed a Pan Am flight that crashed in Lockerbie, Scotland, in 1988 remain at large.

Taken together, the data suggest "control of Congress remains up for grabs," said Democratic pollster Peter Hart. "The next 100 days will count a lot more than the previous 100 days."

In a December AP poll, Democrats enjoyed a 48 percent to 37 percent lead over Republicans when registered voters were asked their congressional preference. The survey was taken during a contentious period in which Republicans had forced temporary government shutdowns as part of their budget showdown with Clinton.

In that winter poll, 44 percent picked Democrats and 35 percent Republicans when asked which party they trusted most to lead the country for the next four years. In the new survey, voters were evenly split on the question, with each party getting 39 percent support. Eleven percent said they trusted neither party.

"The polarization that was hurting Republicans at the beginning of the year has leveled off somewhat," said Hart. "Some of the sharp edges have worn away."

Indeed, the biggest shift on this question was among voters over the age of 65. In December, Democrats had a 15-point edge when older voters were asked which party they trusted more to lead the country. In the new survey, Democrats had just a two-point advantage among these voters.

Likewise, the improved GOP standing against Democrats on the question of congressional preference was driven by older voters: voters over age 65 were evenly divided in the new poll when asked which party they would support for Congress; in December, Democrats had a 20-point advantage.

The AP survey of 822 registered voters was conducted July 12-16 by ICR Research Group of Media, Pa., a division of AUS Consultants. The margin of sampling error was plus or minus 4 percentage points.

As for the presidential race, the survey showed Clinton with a comfortable lead in a ballot test against Republican Bob Dole and Ross Perot, who is seeking the nomination of his infant Reform Party. Clinton received 45 percent to 33 percent for Dole and 11 percent for Perot.

Asked whether Clinton should be re-elected, 45 percent said yes and 42 percent said no. Ten percent were undecided and 3 percent refused to answer.

Given the giant television advertising edge Clinton has had over Dole in recent months, Dole campaign pollster Anthony Fabrizio said it was a sign of Clinton weakness that "as many people say no to re-electing him as say yes."

Hart, however, said that 45 percent support for an incumbent's re-election was a "fairly good number."

Clinton's standing was statistically unchanged from December, when 43 percent said he should be re-elected and 42 percent said no.

There have been, however, some regional shifts: Support for Clinton's re-election ticked up to 50 percent in the Midwest, a critical electoral battleground, and fell slightly to 37 percent in the traditionally Republican South. The Northeast remained solid Clinton territory and the Mountain West heavily contested.

MARCH: Survivors kick off 24-hour relay

(From 1A)

She went to M.D. Anderson hospital in Houston for the 13-hour surgery, and later had chemotherapy treatments in Midland. The treatments did not make her sick because of a relatively new drug, Zofran, she said.

Because her cancer was detected in its early stages, she said she had the "best kind" of cancer to have. Her father, who died of cancer, was diagnosed with cancer in its later stages after it had spread to his lungs, she said.

"I considered it good news and was thankful when I found out my cancer was in its early stages," she said.

She has spoken to other women with breast cancer who were excited to hear about her operation and she has volunteered for the American Cancer Society's Roundup.

People who are told they have cancer have to know it isn't a death sentence, she said.

"Advancements and unbelievable surgeries have been made by people like you," she told survivors and volunteers. "This fundraiser is a great event filled with love and the grand desire to eradicate cancer in our lifetime."

Security loopholes still exist at all airports

NEW YORK (NYT) — For almost a year, Kennedy International Airport has been especially conscious of security.

There was the visit last fall of Pope John Paul II; the U.N. anniversary celebrations; two major terrorism trials, and this month, the visit of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu of Israel and the Olympics in Atlanta, which caused heightened security at all the United States' airports.

For all of this time, Kennedy has remained at the federal government's second-highest level of security, taking precautions like removing batteries from tape recorders and other electronic devices in some carry-on baggage, deploying extra undercover officers and making sure that each checked bag's owner had actually boarded the plane.

But even with these measures, experts in aviation safety and a federal study indicate, there are loopholes at Kennedy and other U.S. airports through which a bomb can be planted on a plane.

Between the time a plane lands at an airport and the time it takes off again, maintenance inspections are made and items left on the plane are removed, but no security sweeps are done. During that time, as many as 50 workers have access to the plane.

"As you can imagine, no system's perfect," said David Plavin, president of the Airports Council International, a lobbying group in Washington and a former head of airports for the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey. "There's bound to be a hole somewhere."

Most of those holes open up during the "turnaround," when the aircraft is being prepared for a flight.

When a plane lands at Kennedy or another U.S. States airport, "there is no security sweep," said a former airline executive, who spoke on condition of anonymity. "When the plane lands, the first action is to start removing all the surplus galley equipment."

Ray Garza, president of Counter Technology Inc. an aviation-security consulting company in Maryland, said, "There is a trade-off between security and efficiency." To implement "foolproof" security, he said, would require procedures so lengthy that passengers would protest at the time between flights and airlines would lose money.

Dozens of employees descend on a plane soon after it lands. On a 747 like TWA Flight 800, about 50 workers would have access to it.

TWA and other airlines try to prevent problems by screening both their own staff and the contract workers. Anyone with access to the tarmac must wear a badge at all times and Port Authority security officers patrol the area.

But the patrols are not foolproof. In 1993 the inspector general's office of the Federal Aviation Administration sent agents to five airports to see if they could enter restricted areas. They made 20 attempts and were successful three-quarters of the time, getting into the cockpits of planes and other high-security areas.

A spokesman for the agency said on Friday he did not know if Kennedy was one of the five airports.

Last 2 days have been unsettling for Coast Guard

By Bennett Roth
Hearst News Service

EAST MORICHES, N.Y. — Tom Coonan had been at sea less than two days when his U.S. Coast Guard cutter was forced by rough weather to abandon its search Friday for the remains of TWA Flight 800.

On his way back to port, the 19-year-old seaman kept thinking about the four-foot, stuffed Tweetie Bird he had fished from the water.

"I thought about a little kid sitting near his mom holding that bird," he said. "And then, it's over."

For Coonan and 10 other crew members of the Coast Guard cutter Point Wells, the past two days have been unsettling. Their vessel, once a patrol boat in Vietnam, was one of the first to arrive off eastern Long Island early Thursday, just hours after the Paris-bound Boeing 747 exploded and plunged into the Atlantic.

'I thought about a little kid sitting near his mom holding that bird.'
—Tom Coonan, seaman

"You could smell it in the air. You knew something had happened," said Coonan, a Vermont native.

"It was eerie when you know what's out there," said Chris Biswurm, 23, another Point Wells crewman. "We were just out there steaming through this stuff."

Donald Kreesim, a senior chief petty officer, said he had tried to prepare his young crew for what he knew would be an emotionally difficult task when the Point Wells left port. He even refused to let the crew watch television, fearing it might distract them and make their jobs even harder.

"We had a mission to concentrate on," said Kreesim, 40.

Since late Wednesday, the Point Wells and hundreds of other vessels have scoured the Atlantic off Long Island, looking for bodies, plane debris and any possessions of the 230 people who boarded the plane at New York's John F. Kennedy Airport.

Search and rescue efforts were hampered Friday by rain and heavy seas.

Waves as high as six feet forced the Coast Guard to recall some of its smaller boats. Divers, who had been expected to begin their search for debris on the ocean floor, were unable to get into the water.

Officials feared the turbulent water was spreading the debris and moving some of it into deeper water, which would increase the difficulty of retrieving bodies and wreckage.

"The weather is not playing in our favor," said Blair Thomas, public affairs officer for the Coast Guard.

On Saturday, the Navy is expected to bring in divers and special equipment that can be lowered in the water to pick up the high-pitched signal from the flight data recorders..

Meanwhile, residents have been reporting pieces of the wreckage washing ashore.

Ed O'Connell found a charred tray table, the kind normally attached to the rear of airplane seats, near his home about 15 miles from the crash site.

O'Connell, who showed reporters his find, said he figured it was part of the plane when he noticed the wording "Life Vest under your seat" etched on the tray bottom.

Meanwhile, those who observed the jumbo jet exploding say they still have vivid memories. Captain Chris Baur of the New York International Guard, was flying his helicopter when the plane went down.

"There was an explosion followed by a bigger explosion followed by a bigger explosion," Baur recalled. "It spiraled down like a corkscrew until it hit the ocean."

Baur said he became aware of the magnitude of the loss when he sighted as many as 80 bodies in the water.

Food-poisoning outbreak shocks cleanliness-conscious Japanese

TOKYO (AP) — Takeout manager Kazue Tamura didn't think twice when a customer motioned to some food and asked, "This stuff is OK, isn't it?" The unspoken words were obvious — food poisoning.

"I knew what he was talking about," said Tamura, who runs a shop in Tokyo's ritzy Ginza district. "We've been extra careful."

Japan — famed for fastidiousness, hyper about hygiene — is discomfited to find itself in the grip of its worst food-poisoning outbreak in nearly a decade.

More than 7,400 people, most of them schoolchildren, have been sickened nationwide, many by a virulent strain of bacteria known as E. coli O157. Four have died and hundreds are hospitalized.

Top-level officials are holding emergency meetings. Customers scrupulously check expiration dates and are making a run on household disinfectants. Headlines trumpet the latest infection figures, and public-service pamphlets feature cartoon depictions of dangerous bacteria.

Yoko Mikata, 52, was typical of many shoppers as she browsed rows of boxed lunches at a convenience store in downtown Tokyo. Too busy to cook, she wanted to buy a prepared meal, but was worried about getting sick from it.

She decided to compromise. She bought the "bento," or boxed meal of steamed rice, vegetables and meat, but would take it home and microwave it thoroughly before eating it. And she's taking other precautions as well.

"I'm not eating ground meat, and I wash my hands and clean my cutting board more often," she said.

Health officials were anxious to paint the outbreak as a fluke. Dr. Toshio Shimada, chief of the bacterial division of the National Institute of Health, called it "abnormal."

"The Japanese hygiene standard is very high," he said.

He and others underscored the importance of distinguishing between conventional food poisoning — now blamed for stomach pains and diarrhea that afflicted several hundred students this week in Yokohama, outside Tokyo — and those linked to the far more serious E. coli O157 bacteria, believed to be causing a much larger outbreak in the western city of Sakai.

Highly contagious, spreadable through various foods as well as human contact, E. coli O157 can sicken people in extremely small concentrations. A strain of it caused about 500 people to fall ill in Washington state in 1993 after eating undercooked hamburgers.

"O157 is highly dangerous. It can kill people," said Shimada.

Up until now, only about 100 cases of E. coli O157-linked food poisoning had been reported annually. But the outbreak in Sakai alone has sickened 5,683 people, of whom 47 were in serious condition and five were in critical condition as of Friday.

Schools have been the most common breeding ground, but most have either closed for the summer or are about to do so. Even so, the crowded conditions in most Japanese cities could contribute to the continued spread of infection, public health officials said.

A midsummer heat wave could also be a factor. E. coli O157 flourishes at temperatures above 68 degrees, and temperatures have been running in the mid-80s around Japan.

Prince Andrew prepares to end naval career

LONDON (AP) — It's anchors away for Prince Andrew. The younger son of Queen Elizabeth II will be shoving off from the Royal Navy in 1999 to follow a new career path.

Andrew, whose exploits as a navy pilot included flying helicopters as a decoy for Argentine missiles in the 1982 Falkland Islands war, will take a desk job in London as a final posting, officials said Friday.

Buckingham Palace said it was too early to say what the 36-year-old Duke of York will do after he leaves the navy.

"He's looking at his long-term working future. He feels it's time to make a change," a palace spokeswoman told The Associated Press, speaking on condition of anonymity.

A short spell in military service is traditional for the sons of British monarchs. Andrew's brother, Prince Charles, served in the Royal Navy from 1971-76 and attained the rank of captain.

Andrew, now a Lieutenant Commander, joined the navy as a cadet officer in 1979. Currently he is a pilot with a naval air squadron based in Portland, on the south coast of England.

The Defense Ministry said Andrew will begin his new job in January.

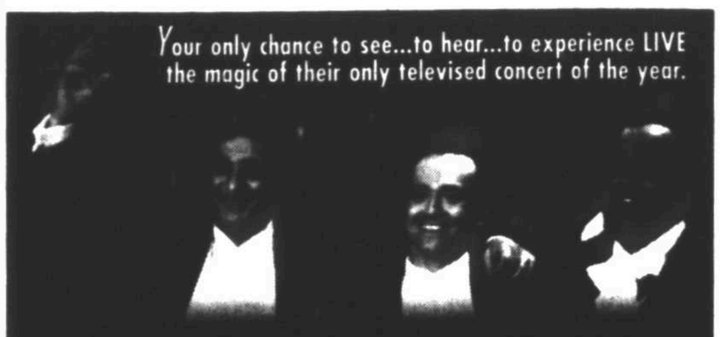

Andrew's career in the navy required him to spend long periods away from home, which reportedly caused problems during his marriage to the former Sarah Ferguson.

The couple, married in 1986, were divorced in May.

Cirque du Soleil gets stage at Disney World

TORONTO (AP) — The Cirque du Soleil, the internationally-acclaimed Montreal-based circus, has signed a 12-year deal with Walt Disney World to perform at the Florida resort.

The Disney World production is scheduled to open in November 1998, and will be staged in a 1,650-seat theater to be built especially for the Cirque du Soleil in an area of the resort called the Disney Village marketplace.

The show, with a cast of more than 70, will be performed twice daily, five days a week. Financial details of the deal, announced this week, were not disclosed.

It will be the second home base for the circus in the United States — a troupe has been performing in Las Vegas since 1993. Another permanent show is expected to open in Berlin in the year 2000.

Last year, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police attracted widespread ridicule and some criticism for signing a deal giving Walt Disney Canada the rights to license and market all products bearing the Mounties' image.

A year into that deal, however, the Mounties say they are pleased with revenues being earned by licensing royalties and with the sharp reduction in tawdry Mountie-related products that were proliferating before the deal was signed.

The circus' vice president for marketing, Jean David, told the Toronto Globe and Mail the deal might lead to joint productions of movies, cartoons, merchandise and TV shows, as well as circus performances.

"Negotiating with Disney wasn't easy," David told the newspaper. "But there are similarities between us. We are both control freaks, and we have insisted that we keep control of the content of the show."

Alleged leader's reappearance alarms Kremlin

MOSCOW (AP) — Kremlin officials warned Friday that a man who surfaced this week claiming to be a Chechen military commander long reported dead could rally rebel fighters for new attacks on Russian troops.

The officials said they believed the person who made a dramatic appearance at a news conference Thursday in Chechnya was indeed Salman Raduyev, a field commander reported dead earlier this year.

But they dismissed as a "publicity stunt" his claims that separatist leader Dzhokhar Dudayev was alive as well. Dudayev had been reported killed in an air raid in late April.

The man claiming to be Raduyev told reporters that Chechen rebels carried out two bus bombings in Moscow last week that wounded 33 people. Rebel leaders have vehemently denied involvement.

Raduyev's apparent reappearance triggered new fears in Russia of separatist attacks. The identity of the man claiming to be Raduyev, however, was in some doubt — he sounded just like the rebel commander but looked different.

Wearing dark glasses and with a deep scar near his eye, he explained he had lost an eye and had plastic surgery after being shot by Russian troops on March 3.

Russian news media, citing military sources, reported in March that Raduyev had died of head wounds suffered in a shootout with fellow rebels. The rebels denied it, but Raduyev had not been seen in public since.

Russian officials said Friday they were convinced the man was Raduyev, and the Federal Security Service, one of the successor agencies to the KGB, denied Friday that it ever had declared him or Dudayev dead.

At the time, Russian officials, rebel commanders and Dudayev's wife all said the separatist leader was killed in an April 21 air raid in Chechnya. Dudayev's burial place, however, has never been disclosed.

Dudayev's wife, Alla, reportedly has vanished from her home near Moscow, fueling speculation that Dudayev is alive and hiding abroad.

Sergei Stepashin, secretary of the Kremlin's committee on Chechnya, said Friday he was absolutely sure that Dudayev is dead.

Nationalities Minister Vyacheslav Mikhailov said Raduyev's reappearance "could result in a stepping up of terrorism."

In Chechnya on Friday, rebels fired on a Russian helicopter, damaging the aircraft and wounding a soldier.

In Moscow, the lower house of Parliament passed a resolution by a vote of 272-4 calling on President Boris Yeltsin to hold televised talks between the rebels and his Security Council.

Doomsday cult member gets year in prison

TOKYO (AP) — A former member of a doomsday cult was sentenced Friday to a year in prison for helping build a facility that produced sarin nerve gas used in last year's subway attack.

Hironobu Hatakeyama, 40, was convicted of preparation for murder by a panel of judges at the Tokyo District Court, said a court official, who requested anonymity. Japan does not have jury trials.

Members of the Aum Shinri Kyo cult have been indicted in several terrorist attacks in which the lethal nerve gas was released.

Sarin made at the plant at the cult's commune near Mount Fuji is thought to have been used in the Tokyo subway gassing, which killed 12 people and sickened thousands.

Hatakeyama said he was innocent because he thought the plant was for nonlethal chemicals.

Twenty followers and former followers of the cult's founder, Shoko Asahara, have been indicted on sarin production-related charges. More than 100 cult members are in custody.

Asahara, 41, is on trial on murder charges in the subway gassing and an earlier sarin attack that killed seven people. He has refused to enter a plea.

Advisers recommend approval of abortion drug

GAITHERSBURG, Md. (AP) — Scientific advisers recommended Friday that the controversial drug RU-486 become American women's first approved alternative to surgical abortion, with some warnings.

The move puts the French drug, which has been taken by 200,000 European women since 1988, a step closer to U.S. doctors' offices — but it came with some caveats.

The scientists insisted that women must understand RU-486 can be painful, cause bleeding and must be used carefully — requiring three separate doctor exams.

Still, the advisers voted 6-0, with two abstentions, that RU-486's benefits outweigh its risks, a recommendation that the FDA should approve the drug.

If final data analysis of a study on 2,100 American women, which is not yet complete, is different from the French data on which the panelists based their decision, the panelist's get a chance to review the research again.

Abortion foes had urged the Food and Drug Administration's advisers to reject the drug, saying it endangered not just fetuses but mothers. But research on thousands of French women showed RU-486 causes an abortion 95.5 percent of the time, with rare complications.

The FDA is not bound by advisory panel decisions but usually follows them, and FDA Commissioner David Kessler had cautioned the scientists to give him objective, not emotional, advice.

One panelist, who abstained from the vote, sided with anti-abortion opposition to RU-486. The drug may benefit women "but it's certainly no benefit tq her baby whatsoever," argued Dr. Mary Jo O'Sullivan of the University of Miami.

"RU-486 is a human pesticide," said Rebecca Lindstedt of the American Life League. Outside the meeting, at a police line 200 yards from the building, four protesters picketed with signs reading "Stop Abortion Now."

Countered Dr. Elizabeth Newhall, who tested RU-486 on 176 Oregon women as part of trials run by the nonprofit Population Council: "Abortion is not on trial here. A drug that offers a safe and effective alternative is."

RU-486, known chemically as mifepristone, is 95.5 percent effective when used in the earliest weeks of pregnancy — 49 days from conception, according to studies of 2,480 French women.

The women must take three tablets of RU-486, which blocks the development of a natural hormone essential for maintaining pregnancy.

Two days later, they take two more pills, this time a hormone called misoprostol already sold here as an ulcer medicine. Misoprostol causes uterine contractions to expel the embryo. Women suffer contractions and bleeding strong enough that they must stay in the clinic for four hours to ensure they're OK. The vast majority will expel the embryo within 24 hours; for 8 percent of women, that could take a few more days.

They require a third doctor visit to ensure the abortion worked. If not, they need a surgical abortion, because continuing the pregnancy could risk bearing a malformed child. Of 200,000 European women who have taken RU-486, 21 children have been born, one who had deformities so bad the baby died and two others with mild limb defects, said Population Council's Dr. Wayne Bardin.

While acknowledging that RU-486 is painful, the Population Council compared it a miscarriage, not the intense pain of labor.

But anti-abortionists say women could bleed to death from RU-486, citing a woman in Iowa who bled for two weeks before seeking hospital help.

That's rare, the Population Council insisted. Of the 2,480 French women tested, only four bled badly enough to need blood transfusions — as did another four in extra safety testing of 2,100 U.S. women. Thirty-two other Americans had minor surgery to stop heavy bleeding.

RU-486 supporters say the drug is important because it is more private than surgical abortion and may be performed sooner than the six weeks many abortion clinics make newly pregnant women wait — as soon, in fact, as the woman knows she's pregnant.

Almost all of the nation's 1.3 million abortions are surgical, although doctors last year began publicizing that a drug already on the market to treat cancer — methotrexate — can be used to induce abortion.

RU-486, however, would be the first FDA-approved abortion drug. It also is being tested as a treatment for cancer and other diseases.

Defense attacks star witness for government in Whitewater trial

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A federal court jury in the Whitewater trial of two Arkansas bankers was told Friday that the government's star witness was prepared to tell prosecutors whatever they wanted to hear.

The defense testimony was aimed at discrediting Neal T. Ainley, former president of Perry County Bank, who testified earlier against presidential aide Bruce Lindsey and bank owners Herby Branscum Jr. and Robert M. Hill. Lindsey is considered an unindicted co-conspirator.

Cooperating with Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr in a plea agreement, Ainley contended the defendants and Lindsey schemed to illegally hide cash withdrawals by President Clinton's 1990 gubernatorial campaign. Lindsey was the campaign treasurer.

Gary Butler, a carpenter from Perryville, Ark., said that after Ainley pleaded guilty to two misdemeanors, the former bank president told him: "When the big boys get hold of you, you'll tell them anything they want to hear."

Billy Fox Jones, a Bigelow, Ark., carpenter who works with Butler, said he heard Ainley comment in a different conversation: "When the big man gets you, you're just about willing to do anything to save yourself."

Pat McElroy Jr., a bank consultant and former examiner for the Federal Reserve Bank in Dallas, told the trial that the defendants' vouchers for miscellaneous expenses were proper. The only issue, he said, is whether the defendants did outside work for their bank to justify the expenses, as they contended.

The testimony came a day after Clinton, on videotape, testified for the defendants.

An 11-count indictment charges that Branscum and Hill misapplied bank funds and conspired to use their bank's money to reimburse themselves, friends and family members for political contributions.

Some of their donations went to Clinton's 1990 gubernatorial campaign and his 1991 presidential exploratory committee.

The bankers also are accused of concealing $52,500 in cash withdrawals by Clinton's campaign in May and November 1990, violating a requirement that banks report cash deposits and withdrawals of more than $10,000 to the Internal Revenue Service.

Branscum, an attorney, and Hill, an accountant, contended they did outside professional work for the Perryville, Ark., bank and were reimbursed for these legitimate expenses.

"There was legitimate documentation," McElroy said. "The only issue to be decided is whether they did the work or not. I don't see any theft."

"Do you think if we paid you more than $30,000 you would see any theft?" prosecutor Jackie Bennett asked, referring to the fee that McElroy said he was earning from the defendants.

"No matter how much you pay me, I'm going to tell the truth," the consultant said.

Senate declines to freeze own pay

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of Congress would get a cost-of-living raise, federal employees would receive insurance coverage for abortions and the IRS would suffer a deep budget cut under spending legislation a Senate panel approved Friday.

Similar legislation cleared by the House on Wednesday would deny a 2.3 percent raise to lawmakers, federal judges and senior Clinton administration officials. With Friday's vote, the Senate Appropriations Treasury subcommittee deleted the pay freeze that GOP freshmen added to the House version.

The Senate bill also omits House provisions denying federal employees insurance coverage for abortions, except in cases of rape or incest or when the life of the woman is endangered. The ban, in effect during the Reagan and Bush administrations, had been reinstated when Republicans took control of Congress.

Like the House version, the Senate bill cuts the Internal Revenue Service's budget, but not so steeply. It provides $6.88 billion in fiscal 1997, a 6 percent cut from this year's $7.35 billion. The House would provide $6.57 billion, subjecting the agency to an 11 percent cut.

However, the Senate bill trims back even more severely than the House the IRS' problem-ridden program to modernize its 1960s-era computers. The House halved the administration's request to $424 million, while the Senate would provide $402 million.

The subcommittee chairman, Sen. Richard Shelby, R-Ala., said the money would enable the IRS to continue to operate existing innovations such as electronic and telephone filing and to deploy new systems already developed. It provides no money to develop new programs, Shelby said.

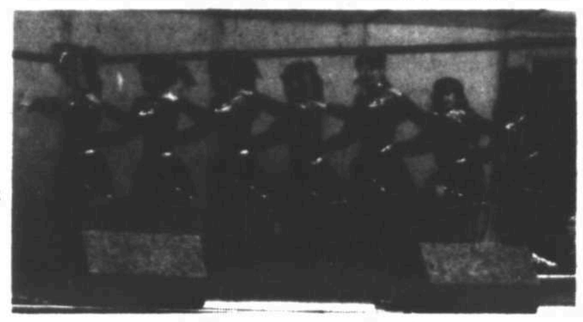

He said new money would not be forthcoming until the administration can show it has the program in hand.

"The program is off track," he said. "To follow the current course ... would be folly."

Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., said she would work to increase funding for the IRS.

The IRS budget represents roughly two-thirds of the $11.2 billion spending bill, one of 13 annual bills moving through Congress. It also finances the White House and other government agencies.

Powell, Bush and Ford to speak at convention

■ For updates on the presidential campaign, call Cityline at 560-2400; enter category 6204

WASHINGTON (AP) — Colin Powell will be bumping elbows with former presidents Bush and Ford on what is shaping up as a crowded opening night for the Republican National Convention. The week will be fast-paced, says Bob Dole, promising most of the speeches "are going to be very short."

Powell's addition to the lineup, which Dole confirmed on Friday, came as convention organizers continued to try to shape a production more viewer-friendly than the party's divisive Houston convention four years ago.

Dole, who will be nominated on the third night of the Aug. 12-15 convention in San Diego and give his acceptance speech on the fourth, says his will be the longest speech — about 25 minutes.

"You know, it's the view of the experts that the other speeches should never exceed 10 minutes or 11, maybe better at five minutes or six" he said in an interview with C-SPAN.

C-SPAN is carrying gavel-to-gavel coverage, but the major broadcast networks are only giving Republicans several prime-time hours a night.

Dole earlier announced Rep. Susan Molinari, R-N.Y., would deliver the keynote address on the second night of the convention.

Both Molinari and Powell support abortion rights, representing an effort by Dole to reach out to moderates.

That caused some grumblings among the religious right, although they remain optimistic Dole will pick an anti-abortion running mate.

Campaigning Friday in Cleveland, Dole said he'd talked to Powell by phone about an opening-night speech and that the retired chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff accepted. "I'm very proud that he is a Republican and proud that he will be participating," Dole said.

Dole courted Powell as a possible running mate, but Powell said that he wasn't interested, nor did he plan to campaign actively this fall for Dole. Getting him to speak the first night was "a big step forward," Dole said.

Dole and his convention planners were trying to avoid a repeat of the 1992 GOP convention in Houston. Then, a succession of conservative speakers — including firebrand commentator Pat Buchanan — came across as strident to many American TV viewers and many tuned out, suggest political analysts of both parties.

"I don't believe the American people want to see ... just one politician following the other speak, speak speak. So we're going to have a different kind of convention," Dole said in his interview with C-SPAN, taped Tuesday and scheduled to be televised on Sunday.

White House employee refuses to answer Senate panel's questions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Judiciary Committee will go to court if needed to get documents held by the White House worker who gathered FBI background files on hundreds of Reagan and Bush employees, the panel's chairman said Thursday.

In addition, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, is likely to rule soon on the validity of Anthony Marceca's Fifth Amendment claims, which also could lead to the Senate going to court to compel his testimony. Hatch said Marceca's constitutional right not to testify may not apply because he already gave evidence on the FBI files to a House panel.

With the Clinton administration and Secret Service at odds over the files debacle, Hatch's committee got no answers from Marceca in private questioning Thursday.

Hatch and others said the former temporary White House employee repeatedly refused to answer by asserted his constitutional privilege against incriminating himself. Marceca and his attorneys also refused to surrender documents the panel subpoenaed.

Marceca "refused to answer any questions or produce any documents, in an unconditional manner," Hatch told reporters after the hour-long session. He said Marceca was asked "literally dozens of questions" about his collection of the FBI files and other matters.

Marceca, a civilian Army investigator, amassed the FBI background files while on temporary assignment at the White House.

Midland Christian Fellowship will present the ministry of Don and Faith Dunlap on Sunday, July 21, at 6:00 p.m. The Dunlaps have been actively involved in a full-time traveling ministry over the past 24 years. From the beginning, they have been instrumental in leading people into a fresh approach to praise and worship, through the singing of Scripture music. The messages in song release people into the power of God's presence.

With their unique presentation of PREACHING, TEACHING, AND SINGING, Don and Faith are truly a powerful combination. They have adopted as their theme, "A Ministry of Life." This couple knows that the singing of Scriptures in ministry to the Lord, prepares the hearts of people for their main emphasis: the preaching and teaching of God's Word. Don's ministry spontaneously mixed with his own natural humor, makes his messages and their practical applications unforgettable!

Faith is a versatile and accomplished vocalist, singing a diversity of styles, giving her the ability to relate to people of various musical preferences. She is actively involved as a guest speaker for women's retreats across the country, as well as Women's Aglow, Flame, and other women's organizations. Her focus is to present practical godly principals, taught in parable form.

The Dunlaps have participated in many church conferences, camp meetings and interdenominational gatherings. They have been guests on TBN, the 700 Club, and other regional TV stations across the States. In addition, they have ministered in such countries as England, Wales, Belgium, Holland, Germany and Belize, Central America.

Midland Christian Fellowship is located next to Dennis the Menace Park, two blocks south of Wall Street and Andrews Highway. Pastor Curt Bezinque invites all to attend. For more information, please call 685-1981.

Drugs may hurt companies that buy AIDS patients' insurance policies

NEW YORK (AP) — A ghoulish business that allows people with AIDS to benefit from their life insurance policies before they're dead faces a severe profit crunch if new drugs can keep patients alive longer.

The companies — known as viatical brokers — collect money from investors and use it to pay terminally ill people a percentage of the value of their life insurance policies.

But advances in AIDS treatments have made it more difficult to assess life expectancy. Now the companies say they may have to pay less and be more choosy about whose policies they buy, favoring sicker people likely to die sooner, in order to keep giving investors 15 percent annual returns.

"The medical and scientific breakthroughs have complicated the issue," said Kenneth Klein, president of National Capital Benefits Corp. in New York, a leading viatical broker.

Stock in National Capital's parent company has dropped 50 percent since a more promising set of anti-AIDS drugs were introduced this winter. Shares of Dignity Partners Inc. in San Francisco have lost 77 percent, prompting Dignity to suspend purchases of new policies of AIDS patients on Tuesday.

AIDS activists are worried, saying viatical settlements are still important because the new drugs are expensive and have severe side effects, and their long-term benefits are unproven. Also, patients need the money to stay well.

The companies, which have been reviled as greedy dealers in death and praised as financial saviors for people with AIDS, get their name from the Latin word Viaticum, which in the Catholic faith is the sacrament of communion given to the dying. In ancient times, viaticum meant provisions given to those making a long journey.

The industry started in the late 1980s and grew rapidly to include at least 50 companies that bought roughly $400 million in policies last year.

Typically, a patient with six months to live or less gets 80 percent to 90 percent. Those with a year get about 70 to 80 percent and those with two years get 60 percent to 70 percent. Investors pay the premiums until the person dies, then collect on the whole policy.

Early on, disreputable viaticals took advantage of desperate patients, paying them less than 40 percent.

Oldest Olympian

ATLANTA — Leon Stukelj, the oldest living Olympic champion, looked in top form Friday night as the 97-year-old strolled down a runway created to honor Olympic greats during the opening ceremony for the Atlanta Games.

Near the close of the extravaganza, with the athletes from 197 nations on the field at the Olympic Stadium, former Olympic champions were called to walk down a path and onto a podium.

Stukelj, the last of the honored Olympians, tipped his cap to the crowd of more than 83,000 and even showed his spriteness with a few dance steps along the way.

Among those also honored were Nadia Comaneci, Carl Lewis, Dawn Fraser, Bob Beamon, Teofilo Stevenson, Greg Louganis and Vitaly Scherbo.

Stukelj, from Slovenia, won five Olympic medals in gymnastics.

ATLANTA '96: THE OLYMPIC GAMES

Let the Gam s begin!

Atlanta opens its arms to the world in stirring open

By Charles J. Hanley
AP Special Correspondent

ATLANTA — America welcomed a brand-new world back to its playing fields Friday night with a throbbing, emotional, high-voltage stadium spectacular opening the 100th-anniversary Summer Olympics, the biggest ever.

"HOW Y'ALL DOIN'?" asked hundreds of young Atlantans, forming huge letters in the infield.

Just fine, thanks. No more Cold War, no more Olympic boycotts. All 197 nations invited to the games accepted. And the waving, smiling hurdlers and gymnasts, wrestlers and marathoners streaming into Olympic Stadium on a sticky, electric night were ready for two weeks of world-class action.

"I declare open the Games of Atlanta celebrating the 26th Olympiad of the modern era," Bill Clinton proclaimed from the presidential box.

For all the light and gaiety, however, a shadow had fallen over the games.

The fear of terrorism — just two nights after the mysterious crash of TWA Flight 800 — put a 30,000-strong security force on ever-higher alert.

On Atlanta's midtown streets, at the airport, on the stadium rooftop, the police and military, bomb-sniffing dogs and hidden cameras guarded against the violence of an ever-troubled world.

Inside that protective web, it was a night for the world to celebrate, to feast on the sights and sounds of the century-old Olympic ritual of competition and peace, the midsummer meeting when it honors athletic prowess and resolves to do better in the years ahead to "just get along."

For 83,000 stadium spectators, and for hundreds of millions of others before TV screens on six continents, Atlanta served up a big Southern helping of fireworks and drums, of dancers and cheerleaders in vast, swirling choreographies of color, and of the joyful noises of American music.

The international crowd loved it all, despite the 92-degree temperature. They waved flags of many nations — from Norway to Brazil — and thundered their approval.

Joining Clinton in the presidential box were such dignitaries as former President Carter, House Speaker Newt Gingrich and Billy Payne, the Atlantan who organized it all. TV cameras also caught figure skater Katarina Witt, media magnate Ted Turner and his wife, Jane Fonda.

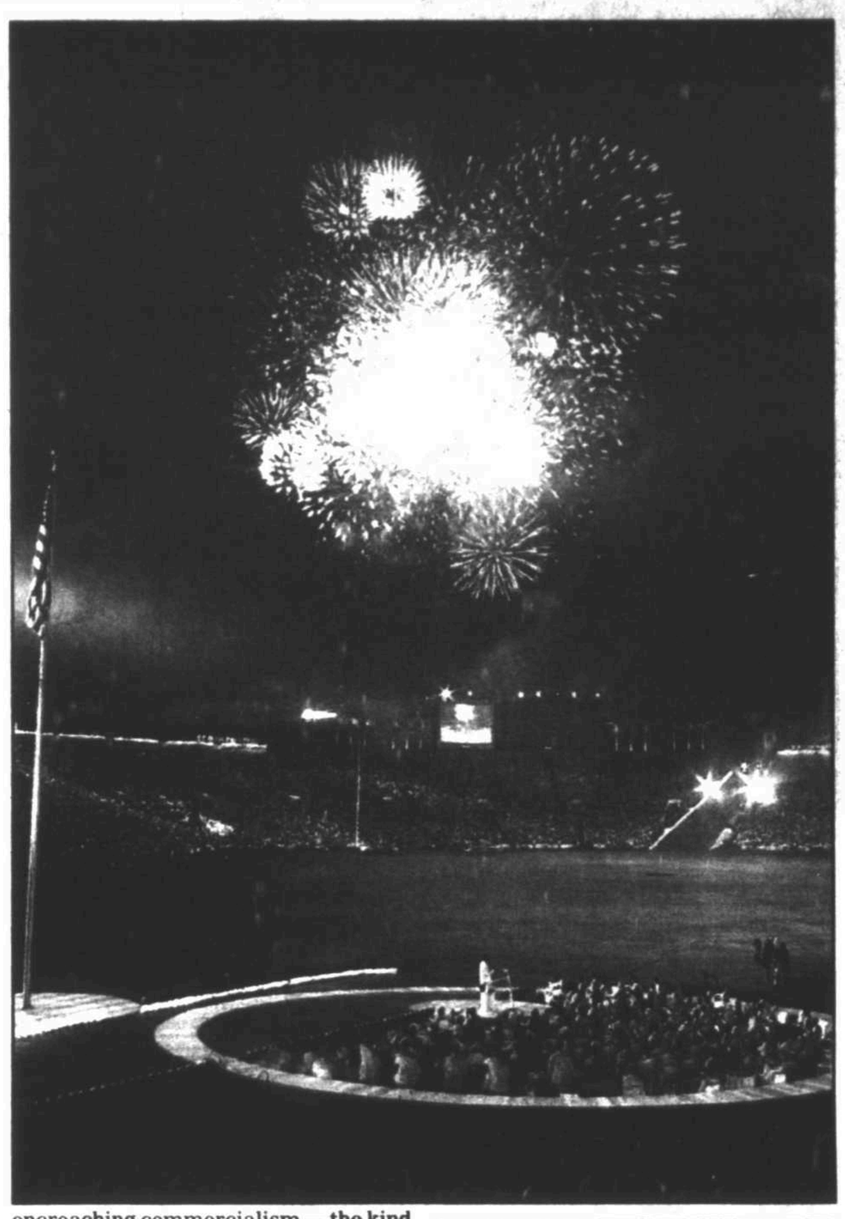

And the audience almost got a taste of encroaching commercialism — the kind that helps the games grow but has blighted this city with a hodge-podge of corporate pavilions.

General Motors almost succeeded in emblazoning 30 pickup trucks used in a prime-time stadium performance with glaring, bright-blue "CHEVROLET" logos. When the automaker prematurely boasted of its marketing "breakthrough," however, the organizers threw coverings over the offending tailgates.

Such product displays are prohibited by international Olympic rules.

The pickups were still in the big production, "Welcome to the World," carrying the spotlights that illuminated 1,174 cheerleaders, precision dancers,

His 7-under-par 135 after 36 holes was one stroke behind U.S. Open runnerup Tom Lehman and Paul McGinley of Ireland in the chase for the 125th British Open title.

"Today doesn't mean anything unless you do it the next two," the 56-year-old Nicklaus said, mindful of some recent teases in major championships.

"I know what playing well feels like," he said. "I know what I am inside. And I am pretty comfortable with those things right now."

It was Nicklaus' lowest score in a major since he closed with a 65 to win the 1986 Masters — his last non-Seniors victory.

Angels break through in 10th

MIDLAND ANGELS

Generals	10
Angels	11

The Midland Angels return home was much like an epic, lasting almost four hours, but unfortunately for baseball fans, even the Cliff's Notes for most of the game proved to be hard to take.

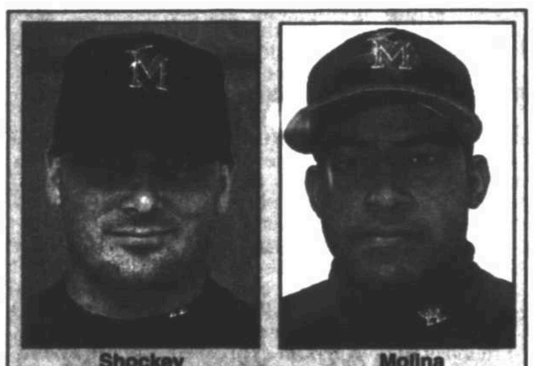

But when the game counted, it was the Angel ball club, which had been on the hard luck side for the past 12 games, that made the plays when it needed them most and defeated the Jackson Generals 11-10 in ten innings Friday night at Christensen Stadium.

The Angels, 12-19 in the Texas League second half, got a 10th-inning hit from Jovino Carvajal, who was making his first Christensen appearance in over a year. The right fielder nailed a two-out single to center off Jackson's fourth reliever, Todd Martin, that drove in Leon Glenn. The ugly part of the inning, especially for Jackson, came earlier in the inning when Glenn had hit into a fielder's choice, but shortstop Russ Johnson, trying to get the double play threw the ball wildly and allowed Glenn to take second. It was Jackson's fifth error of the game and following an intentional walk to Angel shortstop Freddie Diaz, set up the moment for Carvajal.

The win, which improves Midland's record to 12-19 and drops Jackson to 11-19, ended in the tenth but if not for one of the best plays defensive plays of the season in the top of the ninth, the tenth would not have come around.

Nobles named to 5A first team

The Texas sports writers confirmed something tha t a lot of people around West Texas have known for lo ng time.

Adrian Nobles is the best catcher in the state of Tex as.

That was made official when the senior to-be at Mi dland Lee was named to the first team of the Texas S ports Writers Association All-State team on Friday.

"It is great," Nobles said. "I wasn't expecting this a t all. I'm shocked. I worked hard but being a junior I j ust didn't expect it."

Nobles has been a first-team all-district player for both J.C. Gotcher and current coach Perry Young. In that time, she has blistered the ball and taken the Le e record books by storm.

This past season Nobles hit for a .513 average score d 40 runs and drove in 35 runs. Her .840 slugging percentage and seven home runs rank up there with the s tate's best at any classification and were a big reason for Lee's return to the Region I-5A semifinal.

Nobles' season followed what was a stellar 1995 season where she led the team in most offen-

Clearwater blisters course for recoord-tying 61

■ PGA pro records 10 birdies on way to 11-under round and the lead at the PGA Deposit Guaranty Classic.

Associated Press

MADISON, Miss. — Keith Clearwater shot a course-record 11-under-par 61 — matching the PGA Tour's best score of the year — to take a one-stroke lead after the second round of the Deposit Guaranty Classic.

Clearwater, who had a 71 on Thursday, bogeyed No. 1 on the 7,157-yard Annandale course, then played the final 17 holes in 12-under with an eagle on No. 18 and birdies on Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6, 9, 11, 13, 15, 16 and 17.

Clearwater, a two-time winner in 1987 who earned only $34,354 in 28 events last year, finished with a 20-foot birdie putt on No. 9 to break the course record of 10-under 62 set just 30 minutes earlier by Gil Morgan. John Huston also shot a 61 this year in the Memorial Tournament.

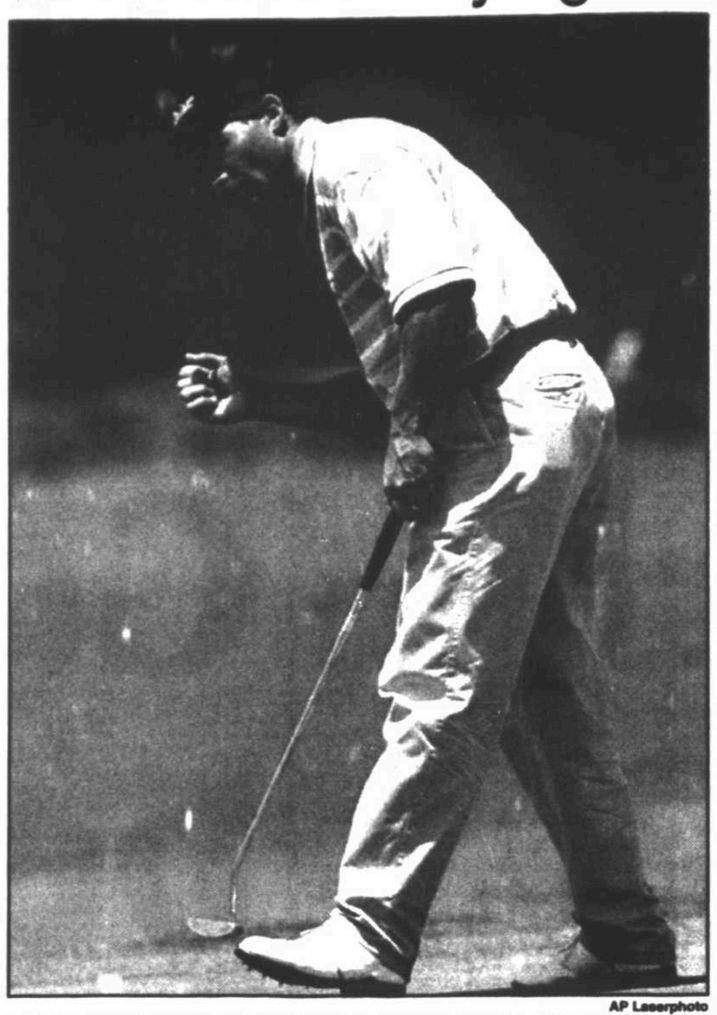

Clearwater hit eight of 14 fairways, but reached 16 of 18 greens in regulation and made six putts from 18 feet or longer.

Bobby Wadkins, winless in 22 years on the PGA Tour despite earning more than $2 million dollars, was one back at 133 after a 65. Morgan was two back along with Greg Kraft (66), Jeff Julian (67), Dudley Hart (68) and Kirk Triplett (68).

Mike Sullivan, the first-round leader after a 65, shot a 70 to join Hal Sutton, David Edwards, Willie Wood, Hisayuki Sasaki and Kevin Sutherland.

Jim Gallagher Jr. of Greenwood, Miss., missed the cut with rounds of 69 and 75. He played the tournament instead of the British Open because his wife, former LPGA player Cissye Meeks Gallagher, is expecting the couple's third child this week.

Eighty-five players made the cut of 2-under. It is the most to make the cut on the PGA Tour this year, excluding the U.S Open, which uses the 10-stroke cut rule.

Lunn does it again in LPGA Friendly's

By Jeff Dunn
Associated Press Writer

AGAWAM, Mass. — Mardi Lunn, who hasn't finished higher than seventh in an LPGA event, put together her second straight day of virtuoso golf Friday to build a one-stroke lead in the Friendly's Classic.

Lunn, an Australian who joined the LPGA tour in 1993, cranked out a 3-under-par 69, putting her just ahead of ailing but still dangerous Dottie Pepper. Lunn, who shot 67 on Thursday, completed 36 holes at 8-under 136. Pepper was at 137 after a 69 over the 6,381-yard Crestview Country Club course.

"I'm playing solid," Lunn said. "I didn't have a three-putt. I haven't had a three-putt in two days."

Brandie Burton, who shot a 72 Friday, and Connie Chillemi (69) were three strokes off the lead.

Lunn, whose best previous finish was a tie for seventh this year in the PING Welch's Championship, professes a laid-back approach that did not waver with the added pressure of leading.

"I very rarely take lessons — just go out and hit it. I very rarely worry about the technical things. It's the only way to take it. Otherwise, you end up in the nut house."

Still, she chain-smoked cigarettes and sipped Coke while surging ahead Friday. She made a 25-foot downhill putt for birdie on No. 11 and a 6-footer after a nice chip on No. 17. She went to 8-under on that putt, then muttered "go away please, not now" at thunderclaps that suspended play for 45 minutes.

Pepper, diagnosed with a virus before the round, tore through the front nine with four birdies, including a 40-footer on No. 6, against one bogey.

She said the virus helped her focus on her game. "You can't waste energy," she said.

The wind picked up on the back nine and she had one birdie and one bogey going home.

Pepper, who has won twice this year to increase her career victory total to 12, said she considered quitting the tournament Friday morning after a sleepless night. But her doctor told her it would not hurt her to play, so she came back.

"For not feeling good, that was pretty darn good," she said. "I am back to bed ASAP."

Chillemi, a tour member since 1977 whose best season was in 1988 when she had eight top-20 finishes, had her best showing of the season last weekend when she made her first cut of the year and finished 49th at Youngstown, Ohio.

'Old guy' Powell shoots 65 to take Burnet lead

By Ron Lesko
AP Sports Writer

COON RAPIDS, Minn. — Even on a tour reserved for older players, Jimmy Powell is considered old.

Powell is over 60, a "Grandmaster" on the Senior PGA Tour. That's regarded as a distinguished way of categorizing players who are beyond their competitive years, but someone forgot to tell that to Powell.

One of only two 60-plus players to win on the tour since 1985, Powell eagled the 18th hole Friday to shoot a 7-under-par 65 and take a one-shot lead over J.C. Snead after the first round of the Burnet Senior Classic.

"I was playing with a guy the other day who's 74, and he said, 'Jimmy, you're going to be playing great when you're 74,' " Powell said. "I said, 'How come?' And he said that you don't change much physically from 60 to 74. I hope he's right."

Powell, 61, lurked just behind Snead throughout the day before sinking a 20-foot putt on No. 18 to steal the lead.

It was one of eight eagles — one of five at the 535-yard 18th — on a breezy afternoon at the 6,909-yard Bunker Hills Golf Course. Snead also had an eagle, adding seven birdies to offset three bogeys on his way to a 66.

Six others were three shots back at 4-under 68, including defending champion Ray Floyd and Lee Trevino.

"I didn't shoot myself in the foot starting out," said Floyd, who won last week's Senior Players Championship. "You can't win a tournament in the first round, but you can lose it. I'm right there in a good position."

Powell won last year's First of America Classic, becoming the first player over 60 to win since Mike Fetchick became the oldest winner when he was 63 in 1985. Dale Douglass was three months past his 60th birthday when he won the Bell Atlantic Classic last month.

Powell, who leads the tour's money list for players 60 and older, made the first of his five birdies when he holed a bunker shot at No. 2 on the well-groomed public course.

"It was an easy trap shot, but it wasn't that easy," Powell said.

He moved to 4-under, one shot behind Snead, with birdies at Nos. 4, 5 and 6. He nearly eagled the par-5 12th when he rolled a chip shot within six inches. That birdie moved him back within a stroke of Snead, who had gone to the clubhouse.

Five straight pars followed before Powell he hit a 2-iron from 229 yards to 20 feet on No. 18. He rolled that putt in to match his best score since a 64 in the 1992 Newport Cup, but he still needed a hand from a reporter to climb down from the interview stand.

"I got to go get iced up now," he said.

Snead overcame a sore left hip and his own inconsistency. Looking for his first win of the season, Snead set the tone for his day on the first two holes. He hit two trees on his way to a bogey at No. 1, then made a 20-footer on No. 2.

He hit nearly as many hazards as he did greens, but he saved himself with several long putts, including a 30-footer for birdie on No. 8, and just a touch with his short irons.

Snead made the turn at 5-under, but slipped back with bogeys on Nos. 10 and 11. He put his tee shot in the water on No. 11, a shot he blamed on the nagging hip injury that has bothered him for several weeks.

Graham resigns as Presidents Cup captain

By Ron Sirak
AP Golf Writer

LYTHAM St. ANNES, England — David Graham resigned Friday as captain of the International Team in the Presidents Cup just days after a team meeting spearheaded by fellow Australian Greg Norman.

A brief statement issued at the 125th British Open at Royal Lytham & St. Annes Golf Club said that Graham quit at the request of Brent Chalmers and Brian Allan, executive directors of the South African and Australian tours respectively.

"Although the members of the International Team recognize the significant contributions David Graham has made to international professional golf and the Presidents Cup in particular, they believe their chances of winning the Presidents Cup in September will be enhanced by the appointment of a new captain," the joint statement said.

The Presidents Cup is a Ryder Cup-style team competition between the United States and foreign players from non-Ryder Cup nations. The first competition was held in 1994 at Manassas, Va., and the second competition will be held there in September.

International Team members had a meeting here Monday after Norman expressed concern about organization of the event,

"I just want to know what the rules are," Norman said before the meeting on Monday. "When do we have to get there? What do we have to do? We haven't gotten together as a team," Norman said.

At the time Norman denied he was unhappy with Graham.

"I am sorry to see David resign as captain of the International Team," PGA Tour commissioner Tim Finchem said in the statement. "On behalf of the PGA Tour, I want to thank David for his tremendous effort with regards to the Presidents Cup."

The United States won the first Presidents Cup when Norman had to drop out because of illness and Nick Price played despite being obviously exhausted from a grueling schedule in which he won both the British Open and the PGA Championship.

The International Team will have a much stronger squad this year, likely including Norman, Price and Ernie Els.

OPEN: Golden Bear one stroke back

(From 1B)

And it was the first time he opened a major with two rounds in the 60s since the 1981 U.S. Open, when he finished sixth.

"Yeah, I think I can win," Nicklaus said. "I've always thought I can win when I play well."

If Nicklaus does win, he would be the oldest British Open champion by far. Old Tom Morris was 46 when he won in 1867. The best finish by a 56-year-old in a major championship was the 16th-place effort by Gene Sarazen in the 1958 British Open at Lytham.

In 1972, Sam Snead tied for fourth in the PGA Championship at age 60.

For Nicklaus to win he would have to turn back a bunch of formidable contenders.

Tied with him at 135 were Ernie Els of South Africa and Peter Hedblom of Sweden.

Lurking at 136 were Nick Faldo, Corey Pavin, Mark O'Meara, Mark McCumber, Loren Roberts, Vijay Singh of Fiji and Padraig Harrington of Ireland.

Fred Couples, Mark Brooks and first-round leader Paul Broadhurst of England were another stroke back at 137.

In all, 31 golfers were within six shots of the leaders.

But even Faldo, probably playing better than anyone right now, had his eye on Nicklaus.

"This suits him," the Masters champion said. "It's a thinking golf course. It's a position golf course where you have to judge the bounce. And his stroke looks good. So this is right up his street."

On another hot, dry day with little wind — just the kind of weather Nicklaus needs for his tender back — players once again had their way with Royal Lytham.

The 29-year-old McGinley, winless in five years on the European tour, had four birdies and a hole-in-one on No. 9 as he shot a 29 on the front nine and finished with a 65.

"To be leading the Open at this stage is something you dream about," McGinley said. "There is still a long way to go, so I shall try to play every shot as it comes."

The 8-under-par 134s of Lehman and McGinley were by a stroke the best midway scores ever in an Open at Royal Lytham.

"I feel very much in control of my game," Lehman said after shooting a 67. "It's kind of a scary course. As firm as it is you can get into trouble in a heartbeat."

Everything about Royal Lytham seemed to suit Nicklaus.

"I need these kind of conditions to have a chance," he said of the unusually mild weather. "When the weather gets cold, my back gets stiff. If the wind blows hard and it gets cold, I think I'll probably have a problem."

It's not supposed to get cold this weekend, making it possible that Nicklaus could become the only American to win in the eight Opens here since Jones won in 1926.

Nicklaus won the first of his three British Open titles in 1966, and the last in 1978.

His five-birdie, no-bogey round was reminiscent of the 66 Ben Hogan shot in the third round of the 1967 Masters at age 54. Hogan faded the next day, and that 66 turned out to be the last great round by one of the greatest players ever.

Nicklaus, however, seemed determined to make this brilliant round a building block for some final monument to his awesome achievements in golf — 20 major titles — and not just another chance for fans to say good-bye.

The massive gallery knew it was seeing pure greatness when Nicklaus walked to the 18th green after hitting his 6-iron to 6 feet from the hole. The crowd picked up his steps about 40 yards from the green and carried him on with a long, deafening ovation.

When he missed the putt that would have left him tied for the lead with McGinley and Lehman, the crowd groaned.

"That was really disappointing," Nicklaus said.

All proceeds to benefit the Boys & Girls Clubs of Midland
Last year this golf marathon raised over $80,000 for the Boys & Girls Club kids. That money went a long way to help our youth "Beat the Streets." This year with the help of people like you, we are shooting to raise $100,000! 100% of the proceeds from the Scorcher '96 will benefit The Baoys & Girls Club of Midland.
Thanks!
The Boys and Girls Club Movement
Boys and Girls Club of America is a natiionwide organization working to help youth of all backgrounds, with special concern for those from disadvantaged circumstances. Emphasis is placed upon the development of the qualities needed to become responsible citizens and leaders. Established in 1860, and chartered by Congress in 1956, Boys and Girls Clubs provide "The Positive Place for Kids".
Our mission is to provide a core program of activities based on the physical, emotional, cultural and social needs of boys and girls in their communities. This in turn gives our youth a sense of belonging, usefulness, competence and influence that enhances self-esteem and encourages them to achieve their full potential.

'96 Games: Day One

Hot-lanta real host of the games

By Marc Rice
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA — Maria Bravo, just a few hours into Atlanta from Madrid, leaned back, shut her eyes and once again plunged her aching, burning feet into a reflecting pool at the city's Centennial Olympic Park.

"I'm not used to this," she groaned. "I have blisters on my feet. It's very, very hot."

Just another scene from a hot Olympic city. Look around and there's a guy crouched in a shaded doorway devouring an ice cream bar, a woman on a ticket line fanning herself with her shopping list, lots of people tugging at their sweat-soaked T-shirts.

Regardless of whether any aspect of the Summer Olympics goes off as planned, one thing is turning out just as expected: Hot-Lanta is living up to its name.

The temperature Friday hit 95 degrees hours before the opening ceremony, when temperatures were expected to linger in the 80s. The heat index, which adds factors such as humidity and the "urban heat effect," was 101.

High temperatures in the 90s are forecast at least through Tuesday.

Not that this should surprise anyone, with the possible exception of the International Olympic Committee members who believed when Atlanta Olympic bidders said the late July temperature averages in the middle 70s.

Hello — this is what it's like in Atlanta.

Extensive preparations to help Olympic visitors cope with the heat include first aid shelters, roving Red Cross volunteers, free water stations and air conditioned tents. They'll certainly be put to the test.

AP Laserphoto

Charles and Dorothy Einholf take a break from a busy day of Olympic sightseeing to rest and get away from a stifling heat which will be present each of the 17 days of the Olympic Games in Atlanta.

"We've had a few with heat exhaustion," said Sherman Day, ACOG's top park official. "We've treated some people."

Volunteers swarm Atlanta offering free water, sunscreen, cardboard fans and linen caps to overheated visitors. Rollerblading representatives of bottled water company Crystal Springs are cruising the streets equipped with water tanks and sprayers.

The Olympic rings fountain at the park is already a local Olympic legend, perhaps the most popular tourist attraction for the games, because people can step inside its cascades of water for a drenching.

And whatever else Atlanta may lack, it does have an awful lot of air conditioned places where folks can duck in.

"We've been spending a lot of time in the Olympic store," said Peter Tarnoviski of Philadelphia. "Actually, we're not buying a lot. Just spending a lot of time walking around it."

Tarnoviski did buy two bottles of water — one for each hand as he lounged in the shade of a tree.

Drink lots of fluid, Olympic organizers urged. And the people listened.

However, many were drinking Coca-Cola or beer — fluids that health officials say are the among the worst things to ingest when it's this hot. They're sold, along with the more sensible choices of water and Powerade, from the Olympic refreshment stands that greet pedestrians every eight steps.

Diana Bennett of Atlanta, leaning against the counter of an unfinished kiosk and wiping her brow with a handkerchief, winked when asked what's her heat-busting remedy of choice. Then she pulled a can of Coke from her purse.

"I brought it from home just in case," she said. "You know, they're selling them for $2."

Told that health officials recommend water instead, she shrugged. "I guess water is best," she said, giving absolutely no indication she planned to make that her next pick.

GAMES: Atlanta extends its welcome

(From 1B)

"steppers," "cloggers," and high-stepping marching band members who let it all out in a stomping pop number that rocked the bleachers.

The welcome led into a show-stopper. Atlanta's own Gladys Knight ascended on a rising platform from beneath the infield floor, singing the "old sweet song" that keeps Georgia on her mind.

Two other divas — pop's Celine Dion and opera's Jessye Norman — also had star turns in the Olympic spotlight, along with the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra and a rousing combined "Centennial Chorus" of 300 voices.

And the late-night spectacular offered the kind of impressionistic production that has become an Olympic standard — this time a glittering, brooding number, "Summertime: The Beauty of the South," based on Gershwin and original compositions.

Olympic producers long mulled how to depict the South's complex story of race and development. "Summertime" dealt with it via the vaguest of symbols. But a later segment featured sound and pictures of Martin Luther King Jr. and his message that "all men are created equal."

As always, however, the high points of the opening ceremony were the "Parade of Nations" and the traditional lighting of the stadium cauldron with the Olympic torch, ending an 84-day, 15,000-mile meandering run of torchbearers across the United States.

Behind their national flags, more than 10,000 athletes marched proudly into the stadium — tiny teen-aged gymnasts, towering basketball players, powerful boxers, all on the eve of their bid to make a little Olympic history.

From Afghanistan to Zimbabwe, the delegations filled the infield at the end of their 90-minute procession, an event whose growing length is leading organizers to consider scrapping it from future games.

Wrestler Bruce Baumgartner carried the Stars and Stripes as the Americans brought up the rear. And, as usual, Greece led the parade, in deference to its role as the birthplace of the ancient Olympics.

Earlier, in the quietest — and perhaps most significant — segment of the night, Atlanta paid homage to Athens, with a artful shadow play of "ancient Olympians" competing in the discus, the marathon, the javelin.

The evening ended with Norman singing a new tribute to the games, "Faster, Higher, Stronger" — the Olympic motto. She could have added "bigger."

The first modern games, organized by Baron Pierre de Coubertin in Athens in 1896, involved 245 athletes from 14 nations. The last time the Summer Games were held in America, in Los Angeles in 1984, less than 7,000 took part in games limited by a Cold War boycott by the Soviet bloc.

In Atlanta, about 11,000 athletes will compete in 271 events in 26 sports.

It all ends with the marathon and a spectacular closing ceremony on Aug. 4. And it all begins Saturday.

Son of MLK carries dream of father with Olympic torch

By Tara Meyer
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA — Calling it the ultimate symbol of his father's dream, the son of Martin Luther King Jr. carried the Olympic torch Friday past a chapel bearing the slain civil rights leader's name.

"My father couldn't be here so, in a real sense, I'm here in his place," said Dexter King, who carried the torch past the Martin Luther King Jr. International Chapel at Morehouse College.

The Olympic torch wound its way to Atlanta City Hall, where Mayor Bill Campbell hoisted it to light a cauldron. The flame rested there before its final journey to the Olympic Stadium, where it will burn for the duration of the Atlanta Games.

The Olympic flame's 84-day journey has taken it 15,000 miles through 43 states.

King took the torch from his mother, Coretta Scott King. Thousands of people along the route yelled and pleaded for him to hold his torch high so they could see.

"When my mother passed the torch to me, it was like his torch was being passed on to the next generation," he said.

"The Olympics have always meant peace and that's what King stood for," said Teresa Dumas, whose daughter Takeisha also ran with the torch Friday. "It's only fitting that they carry it. There's nothing better than that."

King, who runs the Martin Luther King Jr. Center in Atlanta, spent the rest of the day posing for pictures and signing autographs. He plans to display the torch at the center.

"A lot of people would love to carry the torch," said Maddix Moore, a graduate student at Clark Atlanta University, after King passed the torch to him. "But to be associated with the King family and all it represents is an even bigger honor."

Top jumper out of Games

ATLANTA (AP) — Long jumper Heike Drechsler said Friday she definitely will not compete at the Atlanta Olympics because of a leg injury.

"Too bad, but it was to be expected," German team official Armin Baumery said at the Olympic Village.

Drechsler, the 1992 Olympic gold medalist, announced her withdrawal at a track meet in Gladbach, Germany, telling fans, "I'm definitely not going to Atlanta. It's no use — it's over."

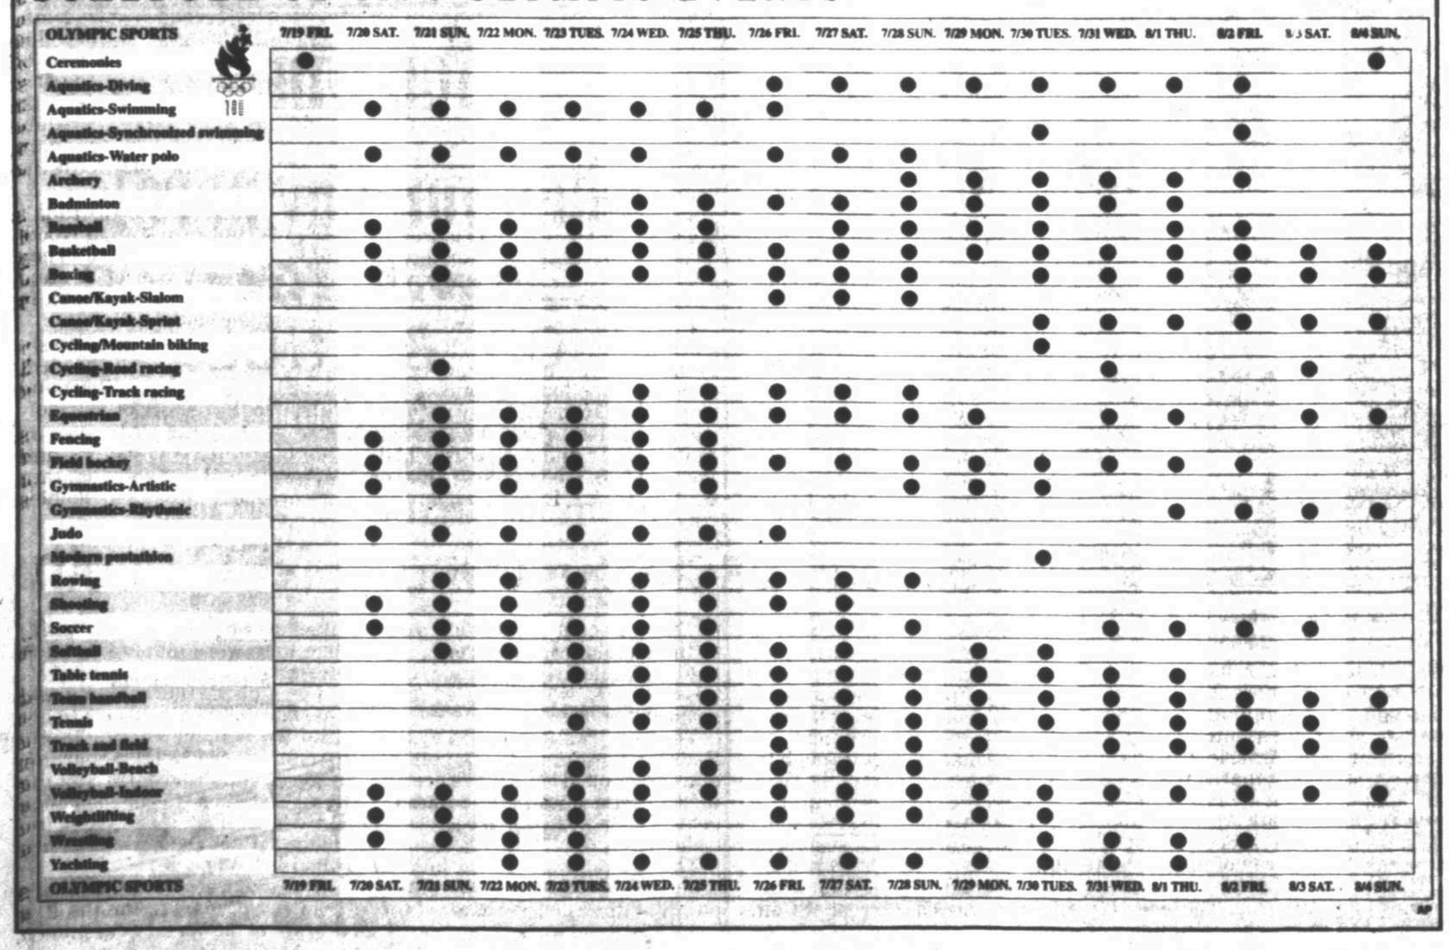

The 31-year-old star injured her right thigh at a meet in May. She hoped to be in shape to compete at the games. Medical tests showed she would not be at full strength.

Earlier this week, Drechsler released a statement through her manager saying she was pulling out of the Olympics. Then she rescinded the announcement in a German radio interview the next day, saying she'd compete in Atlanta if she managed to jump 22 feet, 3 3/4 inches in practice.

"It was obvious to me for a long time that Heike was grasping at straws," said Erich Drechsler, her trainer and father-in-law.

Drechsler said she hoped to resume competitive jumping at a Grand Prix meet Aug. 16.

'96 Games: Day One

'The Greatest' sets off Ceremonies

■ Muhammad Ali, an American Olympian in 1960, was honored with setting the Olympic torch ablaze.

By Paul Newberry
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTA — Muhammad Ali, his left hand twitching from the ravages of Parkinson's syndrome but his right hand steady with the torch, stood bathed in light at the top of Olympic Stadium and dramatically lit the flame to open the games early Saturday.

Ali was a boxing gold medalist at Rome in 1960 as Cassius Clay, but he flung his award in the river upon returning home to Louisville, Ky., after being confronted by a group of racist whites.

In the hometown of Martin Luther King Jr., who dreamed of a day when all races would live together without prejudice, Ali's Olympic odyssey came full circle — a moment that packed all the punch of the archer firing an arrow to light the torch in Barcelona four years ago.

Ali, perhaps the most famous athlete the world has ever known, took the flame from four-time gold medal swimmer Janet Evans at the top of the rampway where some 10,000 athletes had just marched into the stadium.

He held the torch in his right hand, his left hand shaking uncontrollably from the effects of a boxing career that took him to the height of popularity — and three heavyweight championships — but wound up leaving him a shell of his former self.

Lemond not on Games' cycle

By Arne Stapleton
AP Sports Writer

Cycling

ATLANTA — For all his great achievements, Greg LeMond's cycling career was spoiled by bad timing.

The finest cyclist America has ever known never got to represent his country at the Olympics.

An up-and-coming LeMond was on the 1980 squad that boycotted the games in Moscow, and a rare muscular disease forced him to retire before the Olympics welcomed professional riders for the first time in Atlanta.

"Of course I have regrets. I never got to crest what I thought was my true potential," LeMond said. "And to retire the way it happened, it's disappointing. But that's the way my life goes. I've had a lot of ups and downs."

LeMond, who won the Tour de France — the Super Bowl of cycling — in 1986, '89 and '90, said the highlight of his career was winning the race in 1989 after a near-fatal hunting accident.

But there will always be a void in his life because he never got to race at the Olympics, and LeMond's retirement nearly two years ago has forced him to lament anew the boycott in 1980.

"At the time, the pros weren't in it. It was a stepping stone to the professionals, so I can't say it was a regret at the time," he said. "I regret it at the end of my career, though.

"I wish they would have opened it up to the professionals in '88 or '84. Those were my best years," LeMond added.

AP Laserphoto

Greg Lemond, America's greatest cyclist and multiple winner of the Tour de France, never got to represent the United States in the Olympic Games.

LeMond, the only American to win the Tour de France, was still going strong in 1993 and early '94, then began to feel his power oozing away.

He couldn't figure it out. His sinewy body had always been as finely tuned as the precious bicycles he rode. He ate right, trained right, lived right.

He got scared and underwent months of medical tests. Finally, doctors told him he had mitochondria myopathy, a disease that hadn't even been discovered when LeMond first began cycling.

While it didn't affect his daily routine, the disease sapped his ability to perform at a competitive level.

His career was finished, the glory over, his hopes of competing in Atlanta dashed.

On July 31, he'll be rooting for American Lance Armstrong in the men's road race, all the while wishing he, too, were there riding for the flag.

"I'm only 34 years old, so I think I could have raced at a very high level," LeMond said after his induction into U.S. Bicycling Hall of Fame last month in Trexlortown, Pa. "I retired because of health problems, but otherwise there was no reason that I couldn't, if I was 100 percent, go to these Olympics.

"But, regardless, your career has to come to an end someday. It's always going to be a bittersweet moment," he said. "So, it will be fun to watch."

LeMond, who operates his signature line of bicycles and is a partner in a chain of bagel stores, still rides to stay fit. Cycling is still in his blood, so the disease that courses through his veins and muscles must share space in his heart with the sport.

"I hope that I race for fun again," he said. "My goal is to race in a couple of years, get in shape for two or three criteriums, where you don't have to go up a hill.

"A lot of European riders say they will never get on the bike, never race again," LeMond said, shaking his head at so doleful a thought. "I can't say when I'll race. It might be when I'm 50. But I can't imagine never racing again."

Soccer team opens with chance to make a mark

By Ken Berger
AP Sports Writer

Soccer

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Alexi Lalas could be standing on the brink of the next great U.S. soccer moment. For now, he's just playing guitar and posing for pictures, relaxed as could be.

"Got time for one more hug, Alexi?" a fan asked at Friday's practice session.

"Sure," Lalas said, hugging a youngster while cameras clicked all around.

The fans somehow sneaked through the police tape that surrounded the secluded practice field in the wooded Birmingham suburbs. America's opponent in the opening preliminary game on Saturday, Argentina, practiced in secrecy in a town called Cullman, about an hour's drive to the north.

Preliminary men's and women's games also will be played in Miami, Orlando and Washington, D.C. Other games Saturday feature Australia vs. France at Miami; Portugal against Tunisia at Washington; and Spain, the defending champion, against Saudi Arabia at Orlando, Fla.

The medals round will be played in Athens, Ga.

Nerves were calm in the U.S. men's camp, which is nothing new. The day before, Lalas bought a new guitar at a local music store and was seen strumming away on evening news shows. Lalas, a stalwart defender, could easily pass for a rocker with his grunge-style red hair and long, fuzzy goatee. Despite the long odds facing the U.S. team against world power Argentina, Lalas wasn't sweating it.

"Everyone's pretty relaxed," Lalas said after the 45-minute practice. "I think (Saturday) night, reality will kick in that we're starting this thing up."

Reality had better kick in.

A victory over Argentina, one of the favorites for gold, would put the U.S. team well on its way to the second round, where it has never been in an Olympiad. But the game could turn into an ugly reminder that American soccer players still can't match the technical mastery and creativity of players from South America and Europe — where soccer is not a sideshow, but a way of life.

Underdog and soccer are synonymous in America. There have been breakthroughs, and these U.S. Olympians know them well.

Tough road to gold for U.S. in tennis

By Bob Baum
AP Sports Writer

Tennis

ATLANTA — So much for the advantages of being No. 1.

Andre Agassi and Monica Seles, the top seeds in Olympic tennis, face no easy route to the gold medal.

Agassi will open against Swede Jonas Bjorkman, who has given some of the game's best — including Agassi — plenty of trouble.

And Seles' potential opposition through the early rounds seems far more challenging than that of No. 2 seed, Conchita Martinez of Spain.

"It's a tough draw," Seles said Friday. "The upper half is much tougher than the lower half."

Seles might have to play Gabriela Sabatini in the third round, Jana Novotna in the quarterfinals and Arantxa Sanchez Vicario in the semis.

Argentina's Sabatini, seeded 13th, won the 1990 U.S. Open. The Czech Republic's Novotna, ranked sixth in the world and seeded sixth at the Olympics, beat Seles in the quarterfinals of this year's French Open. Spain's Sanchez Vicario, the third seed, was a finalist at both Wimbledon and the French Open this year.

Seles, who was born in Yugoslavia and became a U.S. citizen two years ago, opens against Li Chen of China. Martinez plays Patty Schnyder of Spain in the first round.

Friday's Olympic draw was unusual because the seeds were only part of the equation. Because players from the same country can't meet until the quarterfinals, the matches are adjusted and seeding becomes much less of a factor than it would be in a regular tournament.

That's significant for the United States, with its men seeded first (Agassi), fourth (MaliVai Washington) and 11th (Richey Reneberg), and its women first (Seles), seventh (Chanda Rubin) and ninth (Lindsay Davenport).

Pete Sampras, the world's No. 1 player, withdrew from the U.S. team with an injury. A petition to replace him with Todd Martin was rejected by the International Tennis Federation. So Reneberg, who made the team in doubles, will have to play singles, too.

Bjorkman is ranked 63rd in the world, but he's been as high as No. 21 in his career. And he had Agassi down in the fourth round of the Australian Open in January before Agassi rallied to win the five-set match. Bjorkman also reached the 1994 U.S. Open quarterfinals, beating Stefan Edberg along the way.

"Bjorkman is a strong serve-and-volley player who likes to be aggressive," U.S. coach Tom Gullikson said. "He's definitely going to give Andre a target. It's a tough first-round opponent."

In the men's competition, No. 2 seed Goran Ivanisevic of Croatia plays Marcos Ondruska of South Africa. Thomas Enqvist of Sweden is seeded third. The 1992 Olympic gold medalist, Marc Rosset of Switzerland, is seeded eighth even though he's only 18th in the world rankings.

The withdrawal of Steffi Graf gave the top-seeded doubles team, defending champions Mary Joe Fernandez and Gigi Fernandez of the United States, a bye in the first round. Graf and her German teammate, Anke Huber, were late dropouts and there was no team immediately available to fill the last spot.

In the men's doubles, Australia's Mark Woodforde and Todd Woodbridge are seeded No. 1. They face the French duo of Arnaud Boetsch and Guillaume Raoux in the opening round.

The U.S. doubles team of Washington and Reneberg, unseeded, will open against Oscar Ortiz and Alejandro Hernandez of Mexico.

The first round of singles is scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday at Stone Mountain Park in suburban Atlanta. Doubles play begins Thursday.

Suspicious package found in NBC booth

ATLANTA (AP) — Police evacuated part of the Olympics' International Broadcasting Center on Friday after a suspicious package was found there just hours before the opening ceremony.

Bomb squads swept through the offices, which are part of the Georgia World Congress Center in downtown Atlanta, after a security employee noticed "a suspicious item," said Pamela Swanson, spokeswoman for the special State Olympic Law Enforcement Command.

"As a precaution, a small area of the building was cleared," she said. "Explosive ordnance disposal teams were notified and secured the item."

The item "was examined by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and determined not to have been a threat," she said. The command center declined to release any other information.

The package was found in late afternoon, and the evacuation lasted about three hours. Hundreds of journalists and workers anxiously milled outside until about 7 p.m., when they were allowed to start returning.

"I was sitting there talking and some lady said, 'You've got to get out of the building,'" said Jaime Guerrero, a technology operator for the Atlanta Committee on the Olympic Games. "Then the police said get 300 feet away from the building. It's obvious is was no fire drill or tornado drill."

NBC employees on the building's first floor preparing for the live coverage of the opening ceremony.

Vancouver ends bid for free agent Gretzky

Associated Press

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — So much for The Great One landing in Vancouver.

The Vancouver Canucks say they have ended negotiations with free-agent Wayne Gretzky following reports that the NHL's all-time leading scorer was set to return to Canada.

"There is no outstanding offer from the Vancouver Canucks," general manager Pat Quinn said Friday in a prepared statement.

"Both parties conducted themselves honorably in this matter. In keeping with club policy, no terms (of any offer) are disclosed."

Gretzky is an unrestricted free agent after finishing last season with the St. Louis Blues. The 35-year-old center was traded to St. Louis in March by the Los Angeles Kings.

Gretzky became a free agent on July 1 after rejecting a two-year offer from the Blues worth more than $6 million a year.

There were several published reports this week that Gretzky, who began his NHL career in 1979 with the Edmonton Oilers, would sign a contract with the Canucks.

Reports indicated Gretzky met over dinner with Vancouver owner John McCaw last weekend. Canucks management had earlier refused comment on the Gretzky situation.

Hrudey signs with Sharks

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Free agent goaltender Kelly Hrudey has agreed to contract terms with the San Jose Sharks, the NHL team announced.

Hrudey, 35, played the last eight seasons with the Los Angeles Kings, compiling a 145-135-55 record in 360 games. In 1995-96, he finished with a 7-15-10 record, 3.26 goals-against average and .907 save percentage that placed him 12th among NHL goaltenders.

The Edmonton, Alberta, native has played 601 career games over 13 seasons, posting a 252-225-81 regular season record with a 3.47 goals-against average. He has posted 16 career shutouts.

In post-season appearances, Hrudey has compiled a 36-36 record and a 3.29 goals-against in 84 career playoff games.

Hrudey entered the NHL in 1983 with the New York Islanders after being selected in the second round, 39th overall, in the 1980 entry draft.

He was traded to Los Angeles by the Islanders in exchange for Mark Fitzpatrick, Wayne McBean and future considerations on Feb. 22, 1989.

With the Islanders, Hrudey played in the memorable quadruple-overtime playoff game vs. the Washington Capitals in 1987 won 3-2 by the Islanders.

Ferreira gets a Legg up

Sixth-seeded Reneberg defeated Lionel Roux 2-6, 7-6 (7-2), 6-1 in a third-round match in the afternoon session before losing to No. 4 Wayne Ferreira 6-4, 6-2 in the quarterfinals in the evening.

Reneberg, named to the Olympic singles draw after Pete Sampras withdrew earlier this week with an Achilles tendon injury, expressed regret that his good friend Todd Martin wasn't chosen to replace Sampras.

"I think Todd's done a great job for the U.S. in the Davis Cup, and he deserved the position," Reneberg said. "I'm disappointed for him. I would have liked him to have a shot, but it worked out for me. I've been playing some of the best tennis of my life for the last six months."

Although Martin is ranked higher than Reneberg, International Tennis Federation rules state that any late singles replacements at the Olympics must come from the doubles field. Reneberg is also playing doubles in Atlanta, ironically in place of Martin, who turned down the doubles spot.

AL Roundup

CLEVELAND — Third baseman Jim Thome's error keyed a three-run rally in the seventh inning and the Minnesota Twins beat the Cleveland Indians 3-2 Friday night despite getting just three hits.

Indians starter Charles Nagy was working on a two-hitter and had a 2-0 lead with two outs before the Twins' comeback. They combined four walks, one hit, a wild pitch and Thome's misplay to take the lead.

Nagy (11-3), the AL starter in the All-Star Game, has not won in six starts since June 15. He is 0-2 with four no-decisions.

Angels 9, Mariners 4

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Tim Salmon's two-run homer capped a four-run third inning, and Jason Grimsley won for the first time in six starts as California ended its losing streak at three games.

Randy Velarde, batting in the leadoff spot for the first time since June 11, singled his first three times up and drove in two runs for California.

Salmon and Pat Borders also had three hits as the Angels tied a season high with 18 hits off five Seattle pitchers.

Royals 7, White Sox 4

CHICAGO — Bob Hamelin homered leading off the 10th inning, and Kansas City rallied for three runs off Roberto Hernandez (1-1)

Hamelin hit a 1-2 pitch from Hernandez into the right-field bleachers for his sixth home run of the season. One out later, Craig Paquette doubled and Johnny Damon walked. Joe Randa followed with a grounder that deflected off first baseman Dave Martinez's glove to second baseman Ray Durham.

Jeff Montgomery (2-6) pitched 1 2-3 innings for the Royals' fourth win in five games.

Red Sox 13, Orioles 2

BOSTON — Mo Vaughn hit a three-run homer and drove in five runs, and Jamie Moyer, auditioning for a possible trade, scattered eight hits over eight innings.

Mike Stanley also hit a three-run homer for Boston.

Boston leadoff hitter Jeff Frye scored five runs.

Brewers 7, Yankees 5

MILWAUKEE — Cal Eldred, coming back from elbow trouble, won for the first time since April 1995 and Greg Vaughn, who leads the majors with 92 RBIs, hit a pair of run-scoring singles.

The Brewers took a 6-0 lead after two innings against Andy Pettitte (14-5). The AL East-leading Yankees lost for the fourth time in five games.

Tigers 8, Blue Jays 6

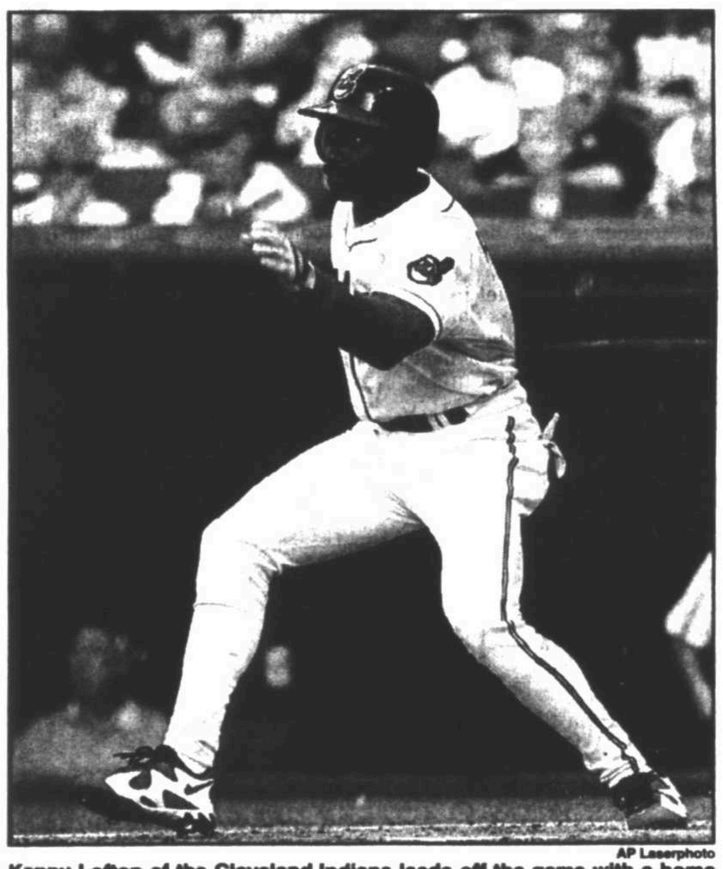

TORONTO — Cecil Fielder and Chad Curtis hit home runs, and Detroit rallied from an early three-run deficit.

Fielder, who played for Toronto from 1985-88, hit his fourth homer of the season at SkyDome. His 15 home runs for the Tigers at the park are the most by a Blue Jays opponent.

Tom Urbani (2-2) pitched 1 1-3 innings of relief for the win. Gregg Olson, Detroit's fifth reliever, loaded the bases with two outs in the ninth, but got Charlie O'Brien to pop out to second for his sixth save.

Fielder hit a three-run homer, his 22nd, that made it 4-all in the third, and Brad Ausmus blooped a single with one out in the fourth before Curtis connected with two outs off Marty Janzen (4-5).

John Olerud, who went 4-for-5, hit an RBI double that cut Detroit's lead to 6-5 in the fifth, but Ausmus scored in the sixth on Scott Brow's wild pitch.

Angels ready for some Christensen cooking

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

MIDLAND ANGELS

Who would ever think that the 100-degree temperatures of West Texas would be normal, but for the Midland Angels it is exactly that.

It was a long road trip for the Midland Angels. Away from their families, apartments and just home in general for 24 of 30 games, the Angels couldn't have been happier to return the friendly confines of the Tall City.

"It was tough being on the road. It seemed like a month," player coach Ty Boykin said. "I thought about a lot about my wife and kids. To arrive in our airport was great. Being on the road was tough."

When on the road, players have to contend with a lot more than what they are missing. There are other factors that the players have to deal with. Staying in hotels, eating at any place they can find and the other inconveniences must be endured but during the last 14 games in Jackson and Shreveport, the humidity made for miserable playing conditions.

"You get a sense of normalcy not living out of a suitcase and eating at cheap restaurants," Basilio Ortiz said. "I never thought I would say I would be glad in the 100-degree heat but it was so humid in Shreveport and Jackson."

The blues of traveling is made worse when the team is not putting any wins on the board. The Angels were 11-19 over their last 30 games and went 4-8 in the last 12 games. That included six games lost by one run and three games that fell on the last bat of the game. It makes it hard to comeback the next day but team leaders like Boykin are just doing their best to do that.

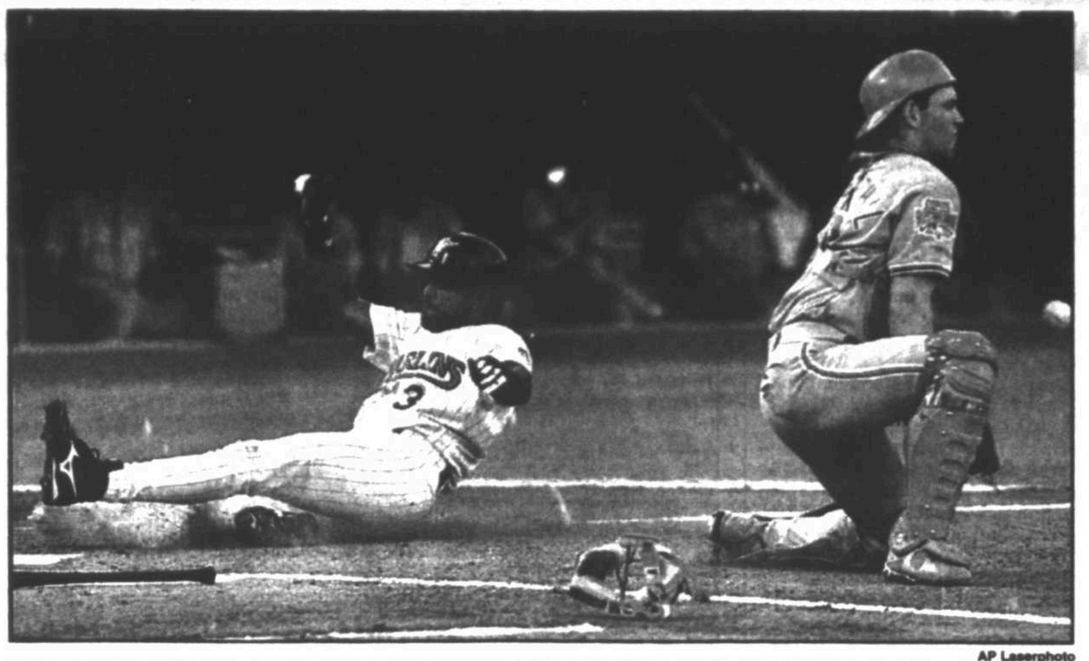

"At times you don't know what to say," Boykin said. "We were in position where we could have won every game. We were in those games. You can't find solutions away from home. Things don't go our way. We have to keep our heads up."

Another part of the road trip that might make things difficult for the team to develop chemistry and could make it hard Angel fans to keep up with their heroes are the number of personnel changes. Since departing July 5, 13 player transactions have been made and names like Pete Janicki, Edgar Alfonzo and Mike Holtz, who is up with the big club (the California Angels), have been replaced with some familiar names like Jovino Carvajal, Freddie Diaz, Carlos Castillo and Mike Freehill. The newcomers to Christensen Stadium are Matt Perisho, and Randy Betten.

Even with the changes, the theory for winning games is simple.

"You have to come out executing and do the little things," Boykin said.

It will be interesting to see if some home cooking and the familiarity of Midland can help the teams do that and bring a few wins in the process.

Astros snap losing skid

Associated Press

NL Roundup

HOUSTON — Darryl Kile pitched eight innings before needing help in the ninth and Derek Bell drove in three runs as Houston snapped its five-game losing streak 7-6 over the Braves.

In front of 39,390, the Astros' largest crowd since Aug. 6, 1994, Kile (9-5) won his third straight decision. He allowed five runs and eight hits, struck out seven and walked two.

Kile allowed Ryan Klesko's 25th homer, a two-run shot that made it 7-4, and Mark Whiten's single with no outs in the ninth, before needing relief help from Billy Wagner.

Wagner allowed sacrifice flies by Mike Mordecai and Eddie Perez, but still earned his fourth save.

The Astros scored four runs in the bottom half off rookie Brad Woodall (0-1), making his first start of the season, to take a 4-2 lead.

Expos 5, Mets 4

NEW YORK — Mike Lansing hit a solo homer in the seventh inning to cap Montreal's rally from a four-run deficit.

The Expos trailed 4-0 after three innings but tied it with one in the fourth and three in the fifth off Jason Isringhausen (4-11).

With one out in the seventh, Lansing, who was 2-for-4 with two RBIs, hit his sixth home run.

Mike Dyer (5-2) pitched two innings of hitless relief and Mel Rojas struck out the side in the ninth for his 14th save.

Isringhausen allowed five runs on nine hits in his second complete game of the season and third of his career. He struck out seven and walked one, and remained winless since June 24 against Colorado. He is 1-4 with two no-decisions in his last seven starts.

Marlins 11, Phillies 2

MIAMI — Chris Hammond won for the first time in more than two months and helped Florida to its fifth straight victory.

Philadelphia lost its sixth straight game, tying its season-long losing streak.

After giving up four hits in the first inning, Hammond (3-5) settled down. He allowed two runs and seven hits overall in five innings to win for the first time since May 7, against the New York Mets.

Hammond was 1-5 with a 12.81 ERA in his six previous starts.

Philadelphia starter Mike Williams (3-8), whose last start against Florida on July 6 was a 2-1 Phillies victory, pitched three innings in his shortest outing of the season. He gave up four runs on four hits with four walks.

Padres 4, Rockies 3

SAN DIEGO — John Flaherty homered and extended his hitting streak to 21 games as the San Diego Padres won their fourth in a row, over the Colorado Rockies.

Flaherty's streak ties for the longest in the NL this season, matching teammate Steve Finley and Gregg Colbrunn of Florida. Ken Caminiti also homered for San Diego.

Fernando Valenzuela (6-7) worked six innings, giving up two runs and five hits. He struck out four and walked three.

Trevor Hoffman pitched the ninth for his 20th save.

Flaherty put the Padres ahead 3-2 in the fifth with a solo home run off Armando Reynoso (5-7). Flaherty connected for the second straight game, and has hit six home runs since being traded by Detroit on June 18.

The Padres made it 4-2 in the sixth when Chris Gomez doubled off Mike Munoz and scored on pinch-hitter Chris Gwynn's single against Steve Reed.

Andres Galarraga hit his 24th home run in the eighth off Padres reliever Doug Bochtler. Galarraga had an RBI single in the first.

Caminiti hit a two-run homer in the first. It was his 17th overall and sixth in his last 14 games.

Cardinals 9, Cubs 1

ST. LOUIS — Alan Benes struck out eight in five innings and the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Chicago Cubs in a game delayed more than three hours by rain.

Brian Jordan had a sacrifice fly and a bases-loaded walk, giving him 18 RBIs in his last eight games. Ozzie Smith and Ray Lankford each had three hits and Danny Sheaffer hit a solo home run for St. Louis.

The Cardinals have won 12 of 15 overall, and 20 of their last 24 against NL Central teams.

Benes (10-5) won his third straight decision. After struggling early, he came back strong following a 90-minute rain delay before the third inning, striking out six of 10 batters.

Jose Hernandez homered with two outs in the fifth for the Cubs. The game was delayed for another 98 minutes by rain before the Cardinals batted in the fifth.

Frank Castillo (3-12) left in the fifth as the Cardinals broke open the game with five runs for an 8-1 lead.

Giants 5, Dodgers 4

SAN FRANCISCO — Barry Bonds hit a two-run double in the fifth inning after Los Angeles shortstop Greg Gagne committed two errors, helping the San Francisco Giants to a 5-4 victory Friday night over the Dodgers.

San Francisco ended a four-game losing streak and won for only the fifth time in 26 games.

William VanLandingham (6-9), who pitched seven no-hit innings against the Dodgers last Sunday night in Los Angeles, allowed three runs and six hits in five innings.

Giants closer Rod Beck loaded the bases with no outs in the ninth. But he got Delino Deshields to ground into a run-scoring double play and Mike Piazza to fly out to center with the tying run at third for his 18th save — just his second since June 18.

Trailing 3-1, the Giants scored four runs off hard-luck Dodgers starter Tom Candiotti (6-8) in the fifth. Jacob Cruz led off with a home run for his first major league hit.

Raul Mondesi's 17th homer in the second and Todd Hollandsworth's sixth home run in the fourth gave the Dodgers a 3-1 lead.

ANGELS: Carvajal gets game-winner reliever Anthony Chavez who worked three and 1.3 innings of solid relief. However, the ball was given to Midland stopper Mike Freehill, 6-2 for the season. Up for Jackson was Buck McNabb and he took a Freehill offering and looped it down the left field line.

That is where Greg Shockey gave the 2,900 plus at Christensen a defensive gem. Shockey slid, caught the ball, and after a 270-degree turn fired a bullet to home plate to gun down Jackson's Mike Groppuso, who tried to tag from third. A score would have given the Generals a one-run lead, but the play kept the Angels alive.

The one-run win was special to the Angels who had lost six, one-run games during their last 12-game road trip. Three games were lost in the final at-bat. The Angels went 4-8 in those 12 games.

The games however, was not all seashells and balloons, for the Angels or Generals. The game had eight errors committed and made for some obscene run totals.

This was exemplified best in the pitching stats Of the six runs that Rob Bonanno gave up, only one was of the earned variety.

There was some good hitting as the teams combined for 32 hits (17 coming for Midland bats), but Midland couldn't get many needed hits at key times as the Angels stranded 13 runners in the first seven innings.

The Angels were led by the three RBI performance from catcher Ben Molina. Shockey also swung a big stick with three hits in five at-bats. Eddie Christian and Carvajal also had three hits each.

For Jackson, Dennis Colon went 4-for-5 with one run scored and an RBI. Tony Ross had three runs and Johnson drive in three with a three-run double in the fourth.

Late-inning Angelic: The win for the Angels improved their home record to 3-8 for the second half...This was the first of 12 games in the current home stand.

ARLINGTON — Mark McGwire hit two home runs, taking over the major league lead with 33, and the Oakland Athletics beat the Texas Rangers 9-6 Friday night for their fourth straight win.

Jason Giambi also homered as Oakland homered in its 15th straight game, extending the team record.

The A's lead the majors with 154 home runs, and are on pace to break the big league record of 240 by the New York Yankees in 1961.

Juan Gonzalez homered for the third straight game. He has 26 home runs and a 21-game hitting streak for Texas.

McGwire hit a two-run shot in the fourth as Oakland took a 5-3 lead. Giambi hit his 17th, a two-run drive, and McGwire followed with a home run in the fifth for an 8-4 edge, finishing Rick Helling (1-2).

Helling was promoted from Triple-A Oklahoma City for the start. He allowed eight runs and nine hits.

Oakland starter Doug Johns also failed to get out of the fifth, loading the bases on two hits and a walk.

Reliever Carlos Reyes (6-10) threw a wild pitch that made it 9-5. After a walk reloaded the bases, Reyes struck out pinch-hitter Warren Newson to end the inning.

Reyes won for the second time in two nights. He left the game in the sixth because of dizziness after diving for Damon Buford's bunt single, and Kevin Elster hit an RBI double off Jim Corsi.

Mike Bordick's two-run triple put the Athletics ahead 5-3 in the fourth.

Ivan Rodriguez hit a three-run homer, his 12th, that gave Texas a 3-1 lead in the third.

Notes: Rangers first baseman Will Clark was placed on the disabled list for the third time since June 8. The move, made because of Clark's strained right calf, was retroactive to July 17. ... McGwire has homered 28 times in his last 51 games (169 at-bats).

Rangers put 1B Clark on disabled list

By Roger B. Brown
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

ARLINGTON — Will Clark's frustrating season ran into another detour yesterday when the Rangers placed the first baseman on the disabled list for the third time this season.

Entering this season, Clark only had been on DL twice in his nine-year career.

Clark, who was placed on the DL retroactive to Wednesday, suffered a strained right calf muscle while running to first base during the sixth inning of Tuesday's game against California. That was only two days after his return from a second stint on the DL when he was suffering from a bruised rib cage.

"He wasn't able to keep up with his conditioning because of the bruised rib cage," Rangers trainer Danny Wheat said. "Every time he tried to do some work, he felt the rib cage injury."

In his two games after returning from the rib cage injury, Clark was 0-for-7. He had been out of the lineup since June 29 when he was hit by a Norm Charlton pitch. Before that, Clark was on the DL from June 8-22 with a pulled left quadriceps muscle.

Since June 7, Clark has played in only eight games.

Heeling powers

Smith says he's ready after achilles injury

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

AUSTIN — He walks well again. He runs fine. He backpedals acceptably. So why isn't Kevin Smith on the field at the Dallas Cowboys' training camp?

"Don't worry," Smith said. "If I had to play a game tomorrow, I could. I'll be there when it counts on Sept. 2."

Smith is recovering from one of the most devastating injuries a cornerback could suffer. He tore his right Achilles' tendon in the Cowboys' 1995 season-opener and earned his Super Bowl ring during rehabilitation.

It happened 24 hours after he signed a long-term contract that will make him a Cowboy for life.

"It was frustrating not being on the field," Smith said. "But I'll take Super Bowl ring No. 3. This year, I want to be out there when we win another one."

Smith, a first-round draft pick from Texas A&M in 1992, had a reputation as one of the best cover corners in the NFL. He thwarted San Francisco's Jerry Rice on several occasions and was on the verge of being a Pro Bowl regular.

Now, Smith tries to overcome what some had called a career-ending injury.

"I'm not as fast as I used to be, but I have football speed and that's all you need," Smith said. "There will be a question whether I can cover until I go out and do it. I think I can do it.

"My torn tendon has healed to the point where it is stronger than the other one. I'm not worried about blowing it again."

Smith is one of the keys to the Dallas defense that lost five starters to free agency and will lose cornerback Deion Sanders part of the time to offense. Aside from last season, Smith has averaged 80 tackles, 15 passes defensed and four interceptions.

Smith is trying to pace himself so he'll peak for the Sept. 2 opener at Chicago. So far he has attended practice in street clothes.

Smith said he hopes the defense doesn't lose Deion Sanders entirely. Sanders is working on his receiving skills, and could play both ways this season.

"I would have to do a lot of flip-flopping around if we lost Deion to offense," Smith said. "I would do it, but it would be tough. We have to have Deion back there some."

Smith said the Cowboys will be a more aggressive defensive team in 1996.

"We plan to have a more attacking defense this year," he said. "You will see more upfield stuff from the Cowboys."

Camp Notes

Associated Press

DISLOCATED DEION: Deion Sanders suffered a dislocated right, ring finger during a scrimmage game. A pass thrown to Sanders hit his hand, dislocating the finger. A trainer put the finger back in place and Sanders continued practicing Friday.

NO MAS: Shane Hannah, the Dallas Cowboys second-round draft pick two years ago, told coach Barry Switzer he was retiring and left training camp.

Hannah, a 329-pounder from Michigan State, has never played a down in the NFL. He sat out 1995 with an injury.

"He told me the game wasn't fun anymore," Switzer said. "He told me his heart and mind weren't in it. I respect his decision."

MONKEY BUSINESS: Wide receiver Oronde Gadsen gets lonely at camp, so he brought a friend: a pet monkey named Malik.

However, Gadsen has been ordered by officials at St. Edward's University, where the Cowboys live and train during camp, to send Malik back to Dallas. Even for the Super Bowl champs, it seems, the policy is no pets in St. Edward's dorm rooms.

PRESS NOT PASSING: The Cowboys are popular with the press. Over 200 media credentials have been issued for camp, even during an Olympic summer when thousands of journalists are busy in Atlanta.

EMMITT DOWN, NOT OUT: New middle linebacker Fred Strickland delivered a blow that knocked running back Emmitt Smith to the ground during a no-tackle drill.

One member of the media joked that "Emmitt was just happy the Cowboys finally found a middle linebacker who would make a tackle."

Hernandez speaks out about upcoming trial

By Melissa Williams
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS — The ex-cop accused of trying to put out a contract on Dallas Cowboys star Michael Irvin said Friday he's looking forward to his trial on a solicitation of capital murder charge.

"I'm looking forward for the truth to come out," Johnnie Hernandez, 28, said. "I believe in the justice system, and I'm prepared to take whatever happens."

Hernandez, who holds a bachelor's degree in criminal justice and criminology, said he's sorry his career as a police officer is behind him. He resigned from the Dallas police force June 27, the day of his arrest.

"I really loved being a police officer before," he said. "Chapters change in people's lives, and this is one I have to be prepared for."

Hernandez and his girlfriend, ex-topless dancer Rachelle Smith, held a series of carefully controlled media interviews Friday about his legal problems and their future together.

"John will have his day in court," Smith, 24, said as she perched near her boyfriend.

Hernandez said little about his trial, which opens Aug. 5 trial, because he's under a gag order imposed by the judge in his case. He was indicted Thursday on the solicitation count and on an unrelated bribery count.

However, Hernandez did allow that he's relieved to be out from behind bars.

"Jail was just terrible," he said.

Smith's lawyer, Frank Perez, who is also part of Hernandez's defense team, said he allowed the couple to be interviewed to head off the numerous calls to their home and to his office.

But the two didn't say much about how their life together crumbled from that of a happy couple in the suburbs to the problematic existence of an accused felon and nationally notorious self-described participant in drug and sex parties.

Hernandez reportedly wanted Irvin killed because Smith said the football star threatened her.

Now that Irvin's trial is over and Hernandez is out on bail, the couple is back in the home they've shared in the Dallas suburb of Cedar Hill since moving from Denver in 1992.

George gets bonus, Oilers get to business

Associated Press

NFL Notes

SAN ANTONIO — Heisman Trophy winner Eddie George met with Houston Oilers owner Bud Adams on the first day of training camp Friday and then left the room $1.195 million richer.

Adams caught up with George in the lobby of the player's dorm on the Trinity University campus.

"You might want this," Adams joked, playing to the cameras as he handed George his signing bonus.

George accepted the check with a beaming smile and examined the first installment on his five-year contract worth $6.09 million.

"That's nice," he said. "It's going in the bank."

And so, what could be the Oilers' final season in Texas before moving to Tennessee began on a positive note with the signing of the Oilers' No. 1 draft pick.

George will compete with second-year running back Rodney Thomas from Texas A&M for the starting position.

The Oilers scrimmage the Dallas Cowboys on Wednesday and open exhibition play Aug. 3 against the New York Jets in Jackson, Miss.

Chicago Bears

Bryan Cox wasted little time showing the Chicago Bears that a change in uniform hasn't curbed his hard-nosed style or irascible personality.

The 242-pound middle linebacker buried halfback Rashaan Salaam on the first play of the first full-speed drill at training camp on Friday.

Philadelphia Eagles

Coach Ray Rhodes has issued a blanket ban on rookie hazing, a longtime tradition which he said fosters division on the team.

That means veterans won't order rookies to take their food trays to the garbage cans. Or command them to make trips to McDonald's 15 minutes before curfew, or stand up on their chairs in the dining hall and sing their school fight song.

Baltimore Ravens

Cornerback DeRon Jenkins, Baltimore's second-round draft choice, signed a contract and is expected to report Saturday after missing four days.

In other player moves, Baltimore signed free agent wide receivers James Bowden and Orlando Parker and released cornerback Johnny Thomas.

Atlanta Falcons

Quarterback Jeff George was not expected for the opening of camp on Friday, but four other quarterbacks were, including Bobby Hebert.

Team president Taylor Smith and George's agent, Leigh Steinberg, declined to discuss specifics, but Steinberg hinted that any deal will be short-term.

Miami Dolphins

Miami signed tight end Kerry Cash, who played with the Oakland Raiders last year, to a one-year contract. Cash played in 16 games with 11 starts last year, catching 25 passes for 254 yards and two touchdowns.

Kansas City Chiefs

Kansas City says it has matched a contract offer from the Minnesota Vikings for cornerback Dale Carter, a two-time Pro Bowl selection who said he wanted out to join his brother, wide receiver Jake Reed, in Minnesota.

Arizona Cardinals

Defensive tackle Eric Swann and nine draft picks missed Friday's first practice in FLagstaff, Ariz., because they are unsigned, largely because the Cardinals didn't have much room to maneuver under the cap until defensive standouts Seth Joyner and Clyde Simmons agreed to pay cuts that freed up almost $2 million.

Rain halts Miller qualifying

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

LONG POND, Pa. — Rain cut short Friday's opening round of qualifying for the Miller 500 at Pocono Speedway.

The time trials were scheduled to resume Saturday morning.

Rain played havoc with Friday's schedule, delaying the start and causing long delays after the action on the 2.5-mile tri-oval did get going about 10 a.m. CDT with an ARCA stock car practice.

NASCAR's Winston Cup cars got started late, but did get in 90 minutes of practice before more rain fell.

Finally, the time trials began 82 minutes after their scheduled 3 p.m. start.

Johnny Benson Jr., who won a pole earlier this season at Atlanta Motor Speedway, was the fastest of six drivers who completed qualifying laps before the rain began again. He turned a lap of 166.741 mph in a Pontiac Grand Prix.

"I noticed on the cool-down lap it was starting to rain a little bit in turn four," Benson said. "Heck, we'll take that.

"That was the best we've been all day. We made a bunch of changes before qualifying. (Crew chief) Doug Hewitt made some good calls."

Lake Speed was next at 166.451, followed by Michael Waltrip at 165.386, Bobby Hamilton at 164.992 and Ernie Irvan, last Sunday's winner at Loudon, N.H., at 164.423.

"The track was kind of slippery, and once you've wadded one of them up in a day and it's slippery, that's not a good combination to deal with," said Waltrip, who crashed his primary car in practice and used a backup for qualifying.

"I don't think the wreck will adversely effect our weekend," Waltrip added. "We were prepared and this is a great car. We won't start that good, but I know we'll race well."

Irvan was just pleased not to have wrecked his Robert Yates Ford.

"I went into the tunnel turn on the get-go lap and just about wrecked," he said. "I said, 'Well, I've got to be able to bring it home.' We had a really good car, and we still do."

Bobby Hillin Jr. turned a lap of 164.423, but will be allowed to requalify because the rain began while he was on his qualifying lap.

Thirty-five others were waiting in the qualifying line when NASCAR finally gave up at 5:35 p.m. with rain still falling and dark clouds stretching to the horizon.

Those cars were impounded by NASCAR and cannot be touched by the crews before qualifying resumes at 9 a.m.

The sanctioning body said there will only be one round of qualifying to determine the 42-car starting field.

The same situation occurred earlier this month at Daytona, where rain suspended qualifying for the Pepsi 400.

The partnership between Winston Cup driver Bill Elliott and Georgia businessman Charles Hardy has been dissolved.

A terse release issued Friday said Elliott is now sole owner of the No. 94 McDonald's Racing Team, which will continued to operate out of the Bill Elliott Racing facilities in Hickory, N.C.

Elliott said his team's ARCA, Busch Grand National and Craftsman Truck programs will also continue to operate out of the Bill Elliott Motorsports complex in his home town of Dawsonville, Ga.

No reason was given for the split between the two longtime friends.

MILLER 500 NOTES

DISSOLVED: The partnership between Winston Cup driver Bill Elliott and Georgia businessman Charles Hardy has been dissolved.

A terse release issued Friday said Elliott is now sole owner of the No. 94 McDonald's Racing Team, which will continued to operate out of the Bill Elliott Racing facilities in Hickory, N.C.

Elliott said his team's ARCA, Busch Grand National and Craftsman Truck programs will also continue to operate out of the Bill Elliott Motorsports complex in his home town of Dawsonville, Ga.

No reason was given for the split between the two longtime friends.

CUTTING DOWN: Tri Star Motorsports and sponsor Healthsource Health Plans have announced their mutual decision to run a limited schedule of races for the remainder of the 1996 Winston Cup season.

The team, which only recently got the services of driver Loy Allen Jr. after his recovery from a serious neck injury sustained earlier this season, said it will reorganize for 1997.

BIG MONEY: The NASCAR Winston Cup Leader Bonus stands at $150,000 going into Sunday's Miller 500 at Pocono Raceway.

The money, which increases by $10,000 per event, goes to any driver who wins an event and is atop the standings at its conclusion.

Dale Earnhardt was the last driver to win the money, taking the second race of the season, at Rockingham, while leading the points.

The current leader is Terry Labonte, who is 18 points ahead of Earnhardt and 116 in front of third-place Jeff Gordon, the defending series and race winner.

Will Magic now team with Shaq?

By Richie Witt
c.1996 Fort Worth Star-Telegram

ATLANTA — A familiar, smiling face showed up talking comeback at Dream Team III's practice yesterday. To almost no one's surprise, Shaquille O'Neal's signing with the Los Angeles Lakers has Magic Johnson again thinking unretirement.

"I'll admit I stayed up late last night thinking about it and then had dreams about it in my sleep," Johnson said of another comeback with his former team. "Playing with Shaq is reason for me to think strongly about it. Of course, some things would have to work out for it to happen. Let's just say it's a possibility for now."

Johnson, a member of the original Dream Team in 1992, will serve as a color commentator on NBC's broadcasts of Dream Team III games.

He retired in 1991 after contracting HIV, which causes AIDS, and again in May after a brief comeback with the Lakers ended in a first-round playoff loss to the Houston Rockets. Since then, he has hinted at playing overseas.

Because the Lakers used Johnson's $3 million salary as part of O'Neal's seven-year, $120 million contract, the future Hall of Famer couldn't return to the NBA team until after Jan.1.

"And (owner) Jerry Buss and (general manager) Jerry West would have to think it's cool, too," Johnson said. "But if it worked out, whew. Shaq gives us the right to immediately start thinking about championships again."

Meanshile, Elden Campbell, a free agent forward-center, re-signed with the Lakers on Friday, a day after Los Angeles landed Shaquille O'Neal.

The 6-foot-11 Campbell, who grew up near the Forum and was a first-round draft pick by Los Angeles in 1989, waited patiently while the Lakers went after O'Neal, who signed a seven-year, $120 million contract on Thursday.

Lakers executive Jerry West said Campbell had signed a long-term contract, but specifics were not announced. Campbell had three-year contracts his first six seasons with the team.

"Getting Shaquille O'Neal allows me to play the position I am cut out for," Campbell said.

NOBLES: Lee catcher back next year

sive categories including home run s (six) and RBI (34). However, because of the depth of state semifinalist, Nobles, then a first baseman, was left off the ballot. Instead, equally deserving players like first-team pitcher Emily Hayes, second-team outfielder Christian Lance and third-team shortstop Susanna Reed took the team's three nominations.

Despite having comparable numbers to the 1995 all-state first baseman Bree Whisenhunt of Keller, she doesn't think much about not being left out. She just talks about keeping the Lady Rebels going strong and making it back to Austin.

"Each year we want to do better than last season," said Nobles, who will have a chance to be Lee's first repeat first-team player in 1997. Next year we want to be at state."

As usual, Nobles was rather quiet when talking about her performance. Despite putting up numbers that most teams, not to mention players, would be proud of, she looks at the what she still has to do.

"I feel there is room for improvement and more to accomplish," Nobles said. "There is room for everything. When there is not, that is when you are famous. I just want to keep it up and work hard."

Other Lee players named to the all-state team included third-teamer Chrystal Smith, the District 5 Most Valuable Defensive Player. Also a soon-to-be senior, the Lady Rebel pitcher had a 24-6 record. She also struck out 145 would-be batters and had a 2.15 earned-run average. She also had two perfect games for Lee.

Nuggets hire Motta, re-sign Ellis

DENVER (AP) — Dick Motta, third among NBA coaches with 918 victories before being fired last season, was hired as an assistant coach by the Denver Nuggets, the team announced Friday.

Motta rejoins Nuggets president and coach Bernie Bickerstaff, who was an assistant when Motta coached the Washington Bullets from 1976-80.

"Dick and I had a tremendous working relationship when we were together with the Bullets, and I look forward to continuing it here in Denver," Bickerstaff said.

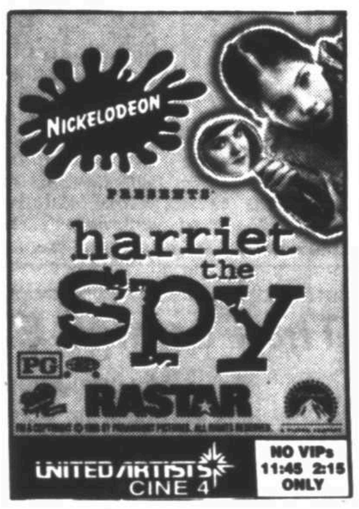

Dale Ellis, the NBA's career leader in 3-pointers, re-signed with the team on Friday.

The 35-year-old guard was a starter for most of the 1995-96 season, averaging 14.9 points a game.

Ellis, with Denver for two seasons, had exercised an opt-out clause in his contract, making him a free agent.

"It was important for us to re-sign Dale Ellis," Nuggets general manager Todd Ely said.

STORM TRACKER FACTS

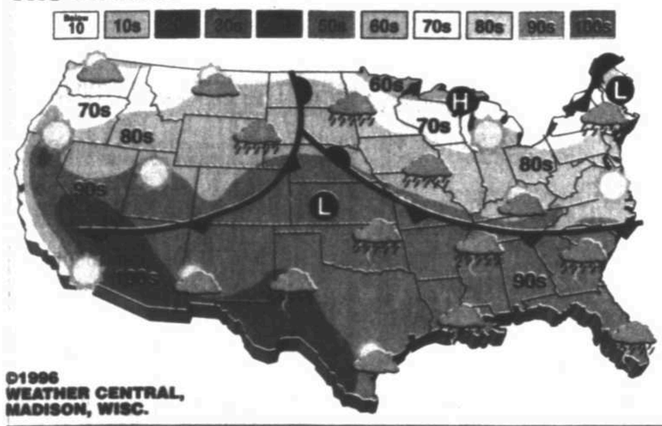

It looks like the hot weather is really beginning to build across the Permian Basin as we saw temperatures rise to triple-digit territory on Friday afternoon. Get ready, because a large ridge of high pressure is beginning to build in from the East and that means more hundred degree heat is in the forecast. The addition of the heat also will decrease afternoon thunderstorms.

CLASH OF THE TITANS

Microsoft, Netscape locked in a battle of the browsers

By Dwight Silverman
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — For the first time in a long time, Microsoft Corp. is an underdog.

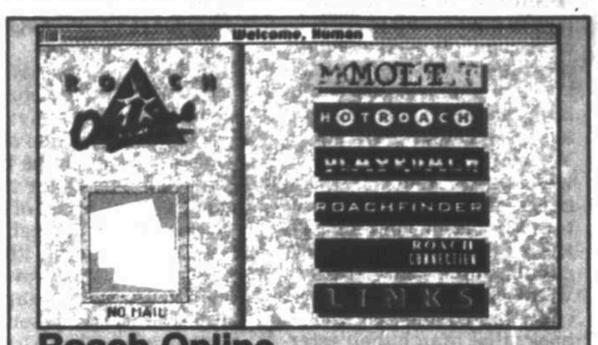

The Redmond, Wash.-based software giant may own the market for operating systems and business software for personal computers. But when it comes to programs designed to navigate the Internet, Microsoft plays second fiddle to Netscape Communications, a two-year-old business that is a fraction of Microsoft's size.

Netscape, maker of the immensely popular Netscape Navigator program used to browse the World Wide Web, is working furiously to maintain its dominance by rapidly releasing new and revised products.

Now Microsoft is bringing all of its considerable resources to bear on the same market, and the competition between the two could end up changing the way many computer users' machines work. That's because Microsoft plans to make Internet Explorer — its answer to Navigator — the new face of the Windows 95 operating system now used by 85 percent of percent of computer owners.

It is being billed as the battle of the browsers — the generic name for software used to view the World Wide Web. The Web — which lets users see graphics, hear sounds and read text — has become the most popular part of the worldwide collection of computers known as the Internet.

Dems open site

A new head-to-head battlefield in the presidential campaign opened Wednesday when the Clinton-Gore re-election campaign went online with a colorful site on the World Wide Web.

President Clinton's certain Republican opponent, former Senator Bob Dole, has been online for many months with his own campaign home page.

The new site, at http://www.cg96.org, features a menu page that shows pictures of the president and vice president together, with a new shot popping up every few seconds.

At the bottom of the page is a crawl message that recites what has become the campaign's mantra: "We have great news to share with you."

There are six areas to click onto, where visitors can learn about the Clinton-Gore record and proposals for a second term, sign up as volunteers, download speeches, audio and video clips and facsimiles of campaign buttons, read flattering biographies of Clinton, Gore and their wives and meet the volunteer of the week.

Nowhere will a visitor find a mention of such things as Whitewater. And under "fighting for quality health care," there is a laundry list of proposals but not one word about the president's failed proposal for a sweeping national health system.

In contrast, Dole's site, at http://www.dole96.com, looks more static. The trivia quiz about Dole (Sample question: "What kind of dog does Dole have?") is unchanged from the primary days. He has a miniature schnauzer, by the way, named Leader.

And when a visitor clicks on California to learn about Dole and the state, the result is a list of Republican politicians who have endorsed Dole and a series of campaign press releases about endorsements and campaign events in the state.

HP discontinues disc drives

Hewlett-Packard Co. said yesterday that it has suffered a significant, widespread decline in the growth of new orders during the current quarter, and that it will abandon its money-losing disk-drive business.

The giant Palo Alto manufacturer of computers, measuring instruments and other high-tech devices said that closing the disk-drive operation — which employs 1,680 people in Boise, Idaho, and Penang, Malaysia — will force it to take a pre-tax charge of $150 million against earnings for the fiscal third quarter ending July 31.

Cox launch

ATLANTA — Cox Enterprises, Inc. — a media pioneer in online services — has formed Cox Interactive Media to build new brands and audiences on the Internet, serving local advertisers in new ways.

The new unit, which currently is comprised of 90 people, also will operate and expand existing online services developed at various Cox local media businesses. Plans are to more than double the staff by the end of next year. The announcement was made by David E. Easterly, president and chief operating officer of Cox Enterprises.

"We believe the Internet represents the early evolving stages of a significant and profitable new medium," Easterly said. "We will apply our expertise in local content, classified advertising, promotion and advertising sales to build new Internet businesses. To mobilize our local resources quickly and efficiently, Cox Interactive Media will assume full responsibility for managing our local Internet brands, with ongoing support and input from local Cox businesses."

Web site leads visitors to a ring of prostitutes

By Dennis Love
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The clue came a few months ago when an Indiana businessman was arrested for soliciting a prostitute along Sherman Way in Canoga Park in the heart of the West San Fernando Valley.

He had cash for bail at his hotel, he said, so the vice cops took him to his well-appointed room at the Marriott in Woodland Hills. Along the way, they got to talking. By the way, asked an officer, what led an out-of-towner looking for illegal sex on his first visit to Los Angeles to that particular street in that particular neighborhood?

"I was surfing the Internet back home," he said. "I read all about Sherman Way there."

Los Angeles police Sgt. Stephen Merrin recalls his exact response: "I said, 'Huh?'"

Welcome to the 1990s.

Once upon a more innocent, less interconnected time, local word-of-mouth was the most prevalent method by which "johns" sought out their clandestine pleasures. But this is the On-line Age, in which the search for sex is increasingly sophisticated and global, and in which a few paragraphs tucked away in a dusky corner of the World Wide Web will bring people from places like Indiana to places like a Macintosh — for dummies?

Apple seems to be going the way of the Model T

By Alex Beam
N.Y. Times News Service

Tom Cruise uses one. So does Jerry Seinfeld. So do I. And yet owning an Apple Computer these days is like being a smoker, in reverse. We did the right thing, and they're trying to exterminate us.

The Macintosh computer ranks alongside the greatest consumer product innovations of the 20th century — the Model T Ford, the safety razor, the transistor radio. Call me sentimental, but it's a fact: Steve Jobs and his pals gave technology a human face. Now, just 12 years after its invention, despite its well-deserved reputation for technical excellence, the Macintosh has become obsolete.

Facts from The Fed:

Federal Reserve Board opens new Internet site

By Scott Woolley
N.Y. Times News Service

The secretive Federal Reserve Board, for decades the arbiter of monetary policy and regulator of banks, has recently undertaken a new and very public sideline: developing sites on the World Wide Web.

The Fed's Web sites are home to some of the government's best on-line economic data and analysis. Unfortunately, as with much of the Internet, the trick for potential users of the Fed sites is to first realize that useful information exists and then hunt through the clutter to find it.

Dear Michael: The "net," also called the Internet, started in the 1970s when a bunch of computer scientists developed ways to link computers through networks and talk a common language. With My Agent, users can discover music, movies, and books that match their interests, and communicate with others who share similar tastes.

By targeting individual users, My Yahoo! is able to provide valuable insight about audiences to advertisers. My Yahoo! can deliver viewers who match an exact profile of an advertiser's target customer, creating a very highly targeted and valuable marketing opportunity. My Yahoo! is launching with prominent advertisers including Lexus, IBM, MCI, New Balance, and Travelocity.

MACS: Company supposedly 'reinventing the airplane'

(From 1C)

Has this happened to you? You read about a great piece of software, and you beetle down to the computer store. The software you want is compatible only with Microsoft's MS-DOS operating system. The droopy-head clerk relays the manufacturer's assurances that a Mac version will be available shortly. But he's lying. It won't be.

Here's another True Mac Adventure. Throughout June, I had been checking the Internet preview page for Microsoft's new on-line magazine, Slate. Everything was cool, until June 24 at 3 p.m., when the full magazine went on line. Then I learned that my Macintosh Performa couldn't support the necessary America Online software to read Slate.

I fired off complaints to Slate editor Michael Kinsley and AOL president Steve Case. Kinsley shrugged, electronically: Sorry. No one from AOL responded, which may be why their company is failing. Case should take time out from his busy schedule to read my friend Paul Brown's books on customer service.

One could argue that in buying my first Mac six years ago, I committed the classic (no pun intended) investment error; I bought the story, not the product. That is not entirely true. Yes, the boxy little Classic included some fetching ideological peripherals: The whiff of the counterculture, the contempt for Big Brother, as represented by IBM and Microsoft.

But when you plug in your first Macintosh, and it greets you with a smile, and point-and-clink start-up instructions — a far cry from the standard MS-DOS salutation, "Abort, Ignore, Retry?" — well, let's just say that Steve Jobs & Co. made about 40 million friends for life.

So what went wrong? A lot of things, all of them well documented. Apple never licensed out its operating system, preventing the growth of the off-price "clone" market that has buoyed MS-DOS sales. Suing Microsoft for stealing the "look and feel" of software that Apple itself stole from Xerox PARC (read Steven Levy's Mac history, "Insanely Great," for an amusing account of Jobs' visit to Xerox) wasn't too smart. Microsoft quickly become the world's most successful software company and — surprise, surprise — they never seem in any hurry to release Macintosh versions of their products.

The latest news from Apple couldn't be worse. The company reported a $740 million loss in its most recent quarter. One of the innovators of the original Mac just defected to Microsoft. When asked what was going on at Apple, he told the Wall Street Journal, "They're re-inventing the airplane."

Striking a note of unintended irony, Apple recently trumpeted the hiring of Ellen Hancock, a successful executive who spent nearly 30 years at IBM. To move to Apple, she asked to be released from the IBM contract that forbade her to work for competing firms. No problem for IBM. At Apple, Hancock won't be competing with anyone.

There are still plenty of Macs around. The Globe's design staff use them; Microsoft's designers use them. They're where Wang word processors were in the mid-1980s. There are millions out there, but no one's buying any new ones. At the computer superstore CompUSA, for instance, Mac sales are off by 50 percent.

The Classic I bought several years ago for $1,000 is now worth $50. When I asked a friend what to do with my far-from-cheap Performa, he cheerfully suggested: "You could use it as a doorstop." It would be the smartest, user-friendliest doorstop in America — but a doorstop all the same.

FEDS: Each bank sets up own site

(From 1C)

The Fed's organizational structure does not help. Each of the Fed's 12 district banks is responsible for setting up its own home page, and there is no standard format. A particular statistic or study available from one bank's site may not exist on its sister sites. And even if it does, it is quite possibly filed under a different section.

The up side of this individualism is the range of features and information available at these sites. Each Fed district has its own economists doing their own research, and much of it is narrowly targeted to issues in its particular region.

For instance, the San Francisco Fed offers opinions on employment in Silicon Valley's computer industry. Meanwhile, the Philadelphia bank's research department surveys that region's manufacturing industries.

The Fed's well-known beige book, which analyzes the overall economic prospects of each of the 12 districts, is now available at the Minneapolis Fed's Web site.

Besides regional economic data, there is a host of national information available. The New York Fed generates its own estimates of foreign-exchange rates and posts them on the Web twice daily. Other information, like recent commercial paper rates, is also on line.

One sign that the Fed has yet to become truly Web-friendly: Some of the most up-to-date interest rates, including commercial paper rates, are available on a telephone recording within a day of being set. That data at times does not make it to the Web for up to a week.

One of FRED's new features, FTP mail, allows users looking for data to have it e-mailed directly to them instead of taking the time to pull it off the Web every time it is updated. This feature can be a time-saver for users who want to download data regularly — chief financial officers, for example, who want the three-month commercial paper rate every week.

Except for the Richmond, Va., district, all the Fed banks now have sites, as does the Fed's board of governors in Washington. All the sites are linked, so it is easy to skip among them.

While the scope of the Fed's economic data is not nearly as comprehensive as some other federal sites, especially the commerce department's Stat USA site, it does offer access to the central bank's unusual research strengths. And unlike the bigger commerce site, which charges a $50 annual subscriber fee, none of the 12 Fed sites costs users a penny.

PROSTITUTES: Internet hook-up 'makes a bad situation that much worse'

(From 1C)

fraying stretch of Sherman Way.

"As if things weren't hard enough," said Merrin, who heads the LAPD's vice squad in the West Valley division. The Internet cachet now attached to what Merrin calls the "Sherman Way corridor" — roughly defined as Topanga Canyon Boulevard to Reseda Boulevard — has exacerbated what already is a pitched battle by police, area residents and business owners against an escalating presence of prostitutes and others cruising for anonymous sex.

Of the some 100 arrests for soliciting prostitution or lewd conduct in that area since January, Merrin estimates that nearly a fifth of the suspects were from outside the Los Angeles area, with many of those mentioning the Internet as their guide.

After their encounter with the Indiana businessman, Merrin said he set out to determine where the Internet posting was and what it said. Not particularly Internet-savvy, he took some information from suspects and got some help from some colleagues with expertise, and — after a four-hour on-line session — hit pay dirt.

"The World Sex Guide" as it turned out, contained not only anonymous postings about where and how to procure sex in the San Fernando Valley, but in large metropolitan areas around the world.

Despite its scope, Merrin said, he was amazed by the detailed precision with which the guide described the illegal sex market in the West Valley.

"It was absolutely incredible," he said. "It just stunned me. I printed out the Los Angeles section of the thing and took it to a meeting of vice squad supervisors from around the city. No one could believe it ... Everyone agreed that it was right on."

In addition to directions to high-prostitution areas, the site contains such information as a summary of what the prostitution laws specify in the city of Los Angeles and tips on how to ferret out undercover cops.

Ross Rubin, a senior analyst with Jupiter Communications, a New York consumer on-line market research firm, said the web site and the law enforcement problems it poses are "a natural extension of a global phenomenon."

"People travel around the world and they talk on line with people about the sights to see, the good hotels," he said. "It follows that certain people also will ask, 'Where are the best brothels?'

"It strikes me as a group of unsavory people talking about the things they've always talked about, except now they have an audience that spans the globe," Rubin said.

The analyst said his perception is that while the FBI, which polices computer-related crime such as theft through illegal hacking, is attuned to the nuances of Internet activity, local police departments — like the LAPD, often understaffed, underfunded and overwhelmed — are just now beginning to grasp how on-line technology is infiltrating their work.

Merrin agreed. "(The vice squad is) responsible for prostitution and bookmaking and pornography. We have 650 liquor store licenses we are responsible for ... and we have five investigators. I'm proud of the job my guys do, but what you can accomplish sometimes is limited. It's frustrating."

Until two months ago, the West Valley Division did not have a computer with Internet capability. A local merchant Merrin would only describe as "an Internet provider who wanted to help" donated the machine and the necessary accouterments to get the vice squad on line.

The primary impact of the sex guide posting, Merrin and others say, is that it has broadened the scope of a pre-existing problem in the area, particularly in the vicinity surrounding Le Sex Shoppe, an adult bookstore that has operated on Sherman Way since 1977.

"In the past, it was essentially a gay cruising area, with men looking to find other men," Merrin said. "Now, with the Internet added to the mix, the female prostitutes have gravitated to the area, because they've figured out that's where the business is."

Los Angeles City Councilwoman Laura Chick calls Le Sex Shoppe "the number one vice problem in the West Valley" and bemoans its widening arc of late-night lewd conduct, noise, littering and other problems. The Internet twist, she said, likely will make a bad situation only worse.

"This sort of thing advertises directly to the dysfunctional behavior of people," Chick said. "The icing on the cake is that we have worked so hard to revitalize the Sherman Way business corridor ... Everyone is aware of the problem. It's not subtle."

The war stories from police, residents and business owners seem to reinforce her claim. They tell of people having sex in cars in front of homes, sometimes on the lawns; the man who was arrested for soliciting from his car with his 3-year-old child asleep in the back seat; the postal carrier who reached into a mailbox on a nearby street to find a spent condom and a discarded hypodermic needle.

Chick, Merrin, City Attorney James Hahn and others have worked over the years to have the bookstore's license revoked. A Superior Court judge in January upheld 20 city regulations imposed on the establishment, including limiting hours, picking up litter, improving lighting, posting armed guards and more.

But last month, the bookstore obtained an injunction that set aside the ruling. Le Sex Shoppe officials could not be reached for comment.

CLASH: Netscape most-used application of all time

(From 1C)

"With the power that Microsoft has got, to accommodate the features and functions of a browser and put them in the operating system, they can neutralize Netscape in many ways," said Jerry Michalski, managing editor for Release 1.0, a New York-based computer industry newsletter.

Although Netscape claims its Navigator now accounts for 75 percent of the Web browser market, Michalski and other industry analysts say Microsoft is the competitor to watch.

"Microsoft has the luxury of having extremely deep pockets," Michalski said. "It can tap its foot on the floor and wait for Netscape to stumble."

But Microsoft is not waiting for anything. Chairman and cofounder William Gates III has told his 20,000 employees that all the company's software products are to be made to work with the Internet — from operating systems to games.

Some already are. Cinemania, Microsoft's CD-ROM-based movie guide, and Encarta, a multimedia encyclopedia, are both capable of pulling monthly updates from the Internet.

Toward the end of this year, a revision of Windows 95 code-named Nashville will try to erase the line between what's on an individual computer and what's on the Internet. But Microsoft got the Internet religion only recently, and that's part of the reason why Netscape is so far ahead.

Netscape, which now has about 1,200 employees working out of a series of unassuming, low-rise office buildings in wooded Mountain View, Calif., started up in April 1994. The company was the idea of Jim Clark, former chairman and founder of Silicon Graphics.

Clark hired Marc Andreesen, a University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign student who headed up the effort to create NCSA Mosaic, the first graphical browser for the World Wide Web. In fact, Netscape's original name was Mosaic Communications. When the University of Illinois' lawyers harumphed loudly, Clark and Andreesen changed the name.

NCSA Mosaic, released in January 1993, was dubbed the original "killer application" for the Internet by industry observers. Indeed, confused newcomers to the Web often mistakenly referred to that subset of the Internet as "Mosaic."

But shortly after the first version of Netscape Navigator was released in September 1994, it quickly took Mosaic's place as king of the browsers, thanks to a strategy that's drawn both praise and criticism.

Netscape initially gave its browser away and made it more attractive than competitors' products by giving it the ability to display graphics and text in new ways. Other browsers — including NCSA Mosaic — adhered to the accepted, standard version of the code used to create Web sites, hypertext markup language, or HTML.

Web authors who wanted to have greater control over the way their sites looked adopted Netscape's enhancements to HTML, though purists complained Netscape was ruining the process by which HTML standards are approved.

In order to see the nifty new designs, users downloaded copies of Netscape Navigator by the millions. Subsequent versions of Navigator had even more enhancements, and competitors began racing to add them to their browsers. Even after Netscape began charging for Navigator as shareware — a try-before-you-buy method of software distribution — it still was snatched up by millions on the Web.

Netscape also wrote software for the computers that display pages on the Web. When a Navigator browser connects to Netscape-designed server software used to store and send Web pages, the connection between them can be made secure, making it safe to conduct electronic commerce by sending credit card and other financial information over the Internet.

The current production version of Netscape Navigator is 2.02, and Netscape's director of marketing for client products, Dave Rothschild, said there are an estimated 38 million copies of Navigator in use.

That makes Netscape the most-used computer application of all time, he said.

Version 3.0 — which adds even more features, including the ability to handle voice communication over the Internet — is in the "beta" test stage, and already is used by millions of early adopters.

Netscape's primary weapon in the battle of the browsers is Java, a software language that lets developers create small software programs that can be sent over the Internet and into a user's machine. Although most uses of Java now are for cosmetics — clocks, scrolling messages, etc. — its proponents say it could replace large, traditional applications that now reside on individual computer hard drives.

In this way, Netscape and its partners are building a computing platform — some might say an operating system — specific to the Internet.

"Netscape presents and delivers by itself, or with partners, some new ways of generating work products and sharing them with the world," Michalski said. "For example, I bet most people now create most of their written works in the message composer on their e-mail program — they don't use something like Microsoft Word, which is designed primarily to generate things on paper. Netscape Navigator 2.0 includes an e-mail client. That was a stroke of genius."

Netscape also hopes its software becomes the standard for use on a coming genre of computers dubbed "information appliances," designed just to access the Internet. Netscape Navigator would be the de facto operating system for these machines, putting Netscape in competition with Microsoft in its core business.

Follow your heart in romance.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: explorer Sir Edmund Hillary, actress Diana Rigg, singer Kim Carnes, guitarist Carlos Santana.

Mike Judge: You can laugh all you want but don't mock country setting

DALLAS — Ha-ha, yes. "Hee Haw," no.

That's Mike Judge's decision.

The creator of "Beavis and Butthead" on MTV says you can laugh all you want at his latest animated series — just don't think he's mocking the country setting.

.Mike Judge's upcoming series focuses on life in the Texas suburbs.

His upcoming Fox series "King of the Hill" focuses on life in the Texas suburbs, revolving around the Hill family and their mostly slow-on-the-draw friends.

"We're not doing a 'Hee Haw' thing here," Judge told The Dallas Morning News on Thursday. "It's very much like one of those towns on the outskirts ... where you go to work at someplace where there's a chain-link fence around a stockpile of pipes and stuff."

"I grew up in neighborhoods like that, so it's not looking down on it or anything," Judge said.

The series reflects Judge's experiences in Dallas, where he lived from 1988 to 1993 before moving to New York and later to Austin.

LOS ANGELES — Salma Hayek can't decide which buss to take.

The actress, whose new movie "Fled" opened Friday, has played opposite many of Hollywood's leading romantic men. Asked on Friday night's syndicated television show "Extra" who kisses best, Hayek says it's a toss between Antonio Banderas ("Desperado") and Laurence Fishburne ("Fled").

"It's very different," she says. "Laurence is very professional and he's a gentleman. ... He's got the greatest lips. ... And Antonio, because of the type of relationship our characters had, it was a lot more passionate."

HAMBURG, Germany — Borrowing a little from his tough Crocodile Dundee persona, Paul Hogan displayed some ruggedness on the European promotion trail for his new movie.

The 55-year-old actor completed a series of interviews, television appearances and photo shoots Friday in spite of a stomach ache that required a doctor's care.

He was in town for the German premiere of "Flipper," in which he plays Uncle Porter, whose nephew Sandy befriends the famous dolphin.

INDIO, Calif. — Although a jury acquitted Trini Lopez of charges he beat his ex-girlfriend, the singer is still worried about the court of public opinion.

Lopez, 59, was charged with beating and choking Rose Mihata, 55, in September 1992 and again that December. He kept his composure after a court clerk read the verdict Thursday, then exulted outside the courtroom.

"I'm not surprised. But you wonder what people are going to think" when they hear differing versions of the same event, said Lopez, who gained fame after recording the 1963 hit song "If I had a Hammer" and starring in the 1967 movie "Dirty Dozen."

"I feel that I have been openly victimized and my reputation tarnished," Mihata said.

The 32-year-old actress joined environmental activists in their two-week-old blockade meant to keep loggers from reaching a stand of old-growth trees. Environmentalists say logging will harm salmon and steelhead spawning beds.

Paul learned about the blockade on the Internet. Her mother joined her Thursday in the southern Oregon woods, sharing a bottle of Evian water.

"Any act of defiance against the timber industry is important," Paul said. "There's not much untouched land left. Why can't we let it be?"

Paul has been arrested several times, once for protesting at a nuclear site in Nevada. She campaigns about recycling and electric cars and speaks to students about population planning.

State lawmakers review special summer camps for children who have been abused or neglected

By Chip Brown
Associated Press

SMITHVILLE — The children at the rural campsite in this Central Texas community are not your average campers.

They chop wood and build their own shelters. They cook over an open flame and do other chores together to learn teamwork. But they never intended to be experts in roughing it.

They are abused and neglected children from homes that subjected them to physical and sexual harm, causing most of the youths to become perpetrators of abuse themselves.

The Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services licenses eight "therapeutic camps" run by private nonprofit companies across the state.

The camps are being reviewed by state lawmakers who were largely unaware of the facilities until public hearings last month and have questioned whether they are being run in the best interest of the children.

The eight tent camps are licensed to care for a total of 304 children for periods of up to two years. The vast majority of residents in the camps are juvenile offenders, officials acknowledge.

"I'm not saying there isn't a place for a camp where it's a short-term basis, but these tents are being used to house kids for long periods of time. We don't even treat prisoners that way," said state Rep. Barry Telford, D-DeKalb, a member of the Texas Sunset Advisory Commission, which reviews state agencies. "I think that's outrageous, and I think it's going to be looked at."

The state child welfare agency or county juvenile probation departments pay tent camp operators between $58 and $100 a day to keep the children. The level of pay depends on the severity of the child's problems.

"It does sound to me that there is money to be made in these kinds of programs, and I am concerned that we have developed an industry that is more focused on profit and less focused on kids and their problems," said state Rep. Patricia Gray, D-Galveston, also a member of the Sunset Advisory Commission.

Child welfare workers say the camps have helped hundreds of children break out of a lifestyle of abuse and disobedience by teaching them to work together to survive in a wilderness setting.

Fred Seale, deputy director for programs at DPRS, said all the children in the camps, whether they are abused and neglected or juvenile offenders, have severe behavioral problems.

"These children are not able to function in a school setting or home environment. They don't respect authority figures," Seale said. "The camps teach them to respect themselves and others. It teaches them the responsibility that they need to get along in society."

Those at the camps range in age from 10 to 17 and are considered "a moderate risk to themselves or others." The youths sleep in shelters that are not airconditioned and have only a roof — no walls — to keep rain out. In the winter, the shelters are insulated by a plastic covering and a space heater.

They attend school, eat two meals in a dining hall — they cook their own dinner — and receive group and individual counseling each day. The school is often the only airconditioned building at the camp, even on summer days when temperatures reach triple digits.

Ross Miller, the program director at Smithville's Woodside Trails, says the children at his facility have typically gone through five to 12 other treatment placements unsuccessfully before reaching the camp.

Miller noted that many state residential centers for abused and neglected children give mood-altering medications to volatile youths or place them in isolation until they calm down.

"What are the alternatives?" Miller said. "You won't find any shots or medication here. They are not locked up. We give the kids support and a structured environment. The outdoors is not an unhealthy place to be."

Children at Woodside Trails also go on fishing trips to the Texas Gulf Coast and on a whitewater rafting expedition in Colorado each year.

Jason, a 12-year-old youth at Woodside Trails, said he didn't like sleeping in his shelter during a thunderstorm, but the camp has helped him overcome a lot of problems.

"I've improved a lot," Jason said. "At my last facility, if you were too out of control, they would give you a shot to calm down. I hated those. Here, the counselors work with you. They're strict, but they're fair."

State Sen. Frank Madla, D-San Antonio, initially expressed concerns about the camps during a Sunset Advisory Commission hearing last month.

He told James R. Hine, executive director of the Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services, that he thought housing children in tents in broiling summer heat "would constitute abuse in itself."

But Madla attended Woodside Trails on Thursday and came away with a new impression.

"To a person, each individual I talked to said the camp made a difference in their lives," Madla said. "Several said if it had not been for this camp, they would have continued in a downward spiral. I was surprised. It wasn't what I expected to hear."

The Salesmanship Club of Dallas has operated one of the camps since 1956. That camp, licensed for 96 children, is located on a 1,300-acre site in East Texas and has served as a model for most of the other therapeutic camps.

"We follow up on the kids up to five years after they finish the program," said Ross Whitney, program director for the Salesmanship Club of Dallas. "Roughly 80 percent continue on in school or graduate and will not have any further problems or need any more treatment.

"I hope once the lawmakers take a good look at these programs, they'll see the children are being helped."

Facts and figures about the eight "therapeutic camps" licensed by the state to house abused and neglected children:

- The camps provide housing, meals, education and counseling to a variety of troubled children ages 10 to 17 — the sexually and physically abused, the abandoned and those who have had run-ins with the law.
- Roughly 50 children receiving state protective services are currently housed in the camps. The state has 11,700 children in custody due to abuse and neglect who are not living with relatives.
- Staff-to-child ratios at the camps range from 1-to-2 to 1-to-5. Key staff positions are filled by counselors with college degrees.
- Youths attend school in an airconditioned building and eat most meals in a dining hall. The permanent buildings have indoor restrooms, but the living quarters of the camp are equipped with open-ditch latrines.
- One of the camps, the Elizabeth C. Lanier Camp in Groveton, is for girls. The other seven are for boys.
- The Bo Person Ranch near Uvalde is operated by Vision Quest, a nonprofit company based in Tucson, Ariz., and houses children from Texas, California and Pennsylvania.
- Those who support the tent-camp concept say the children get quality counseling for their problems, learn teamwork and become responsible for regular chores such as cooking meals and chopping wood.
- State lawmakers are reviewing the operations and funding of the camps "simply to see if there are some problem areas and if we can do a better job," said state Rep. Layton Black, D-Goldthwaite, chairman of the Texas Sunset Advisory Commission, which oversees the performance of state agencies.
- The camps are in the following counties: Wood, Trinity (2), Hays, Caldwell, Bastrop, Kerr and Uvalde.

Former lawman guilty of murder

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Jurors swiftly convicted former lawman Hilton Crawford Friday for kidnapping and killing the 12-year-old son of longtime friends.

Jurors took just 62 minutes to consider nine days of testimony.

As the verdict was read, the 57-year-old Crawford stood silent and emotionless between his two attorneys. In the back of the courtroom, a grim smile surfaced on the face of McKay's mother, Paulette Everett, who stood with her husband, Carl.

After the jury was polled to verify their unanimous verdict, Crawford was placed in handcuffs and taken from the courtroom.

The sentencing phase of his capital murder trial begins Monday. Crawford could receive the death penalty.

Everett family spokesman Mike Mayes stood by McKay's parents as the verdict was read.

"Paulette said she heard McKay's voice in this verdict. She's very thankful," Mayes said.

Prosecutors painted Crawford as a predator driven by selfishness to murder his close friends' only child in a botched ransom scheme to pay mounting debts.

"He was an evil, greedy, heartless man. He knew how to lull those who trusted him," prosecutor Nancy Neff told jurors in her closing argument. "The evidence is undisputed in this case."

Neff and partner Mike Aduddell retraced for jurors the footsteps of Crawford, from his kidnapping of McKay, to the boy's last hours in which he was beaten and eventually shot.

"Common sense and logic scream, just like that young man screamed in the back of that car," said Aduddell.

To emphasize his point, he picked up the .45-caliber weapon used by Crawford to kill the Conroe boy last September.

Aduddell racked the slide of the gun, cocking it, and pulled the trigger before the jury.

"When he (Crawford) beat that baby (McKay) in the back of that car, he didn't know he had ended that life, but he wanted to make sure, so he put two .45-caliber slugs in the back of McKay Everett's head," Aduddell said.

"Thank God we have the manpower or that wolf would still be out there in the grass."

Defense attorney Rick Stover asked jurors to push aside their emotions.

"This is a terrible, terrible crime. Nobody will dispute that," he said. "But sympathy cannot be part of the decision you make."

Lynn Martin, another defense attorney, had asked jurors to approach their decision with prudence.

"Whenever there is a case like this, there is an urgency to convict," she said during her closing argument. "Consider the state's resources were far greater than the defense's."
