County given 60 days to cure jail ills

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

AUSTIN — The Texas Commission on Jail Standards today placed the Midland County Jail under a remedial order, limited the inmate population to 85 and ordered the County Commissioners to correct jail deficiencies within 60 days.

However, El Paso County Judge Pat O'Rourke, a jail commissioner, suggested the Midland County jail was still under severe scrutiny by the commission.

"You bet," O'Rourke said in response to a question about shutting down the jail if the deficiencies were not corrected.

Wayne Merritt, chairman of the Midland County Jail Task Force; County Commissioners Durward Wright and C. Wallace "Wally" Craig; and Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter submitted recommendations to rectify the jail's deficiencies, renovate the existing jail and possibly build a new jail and courthouse complex.

"Of course, we are going to have to raise taxes anyway," County Judge Bill Ahders said, whether the county elects to renovate or build a new jail or to house the inmates elsewhere should the jail commission shut down the county jail.

Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman said he thought the jail commission's mandate was "rather light" as opposed "to what could have happened. They could have limited it (population) to 60 inmates if they had wanted to."

Painter said he wants to "educate the public as to what we need. If we don't, it's going to cost the taxpayers more."

"All they told us was to go forth and get our act together and quickly," said Wright. He said the county commissioners would meet at 9 a.m. Monday to start taking action on resolving the jail-courthouse problems.

"We want to do what is right for the people of Midland County," said Ahders.

Near the end of the jail commission's session with Midland County officials, Painter presented a promotional-type videotape of his touring the Midland County Jail.

"Midland County is doing exactly what it was created to do." He said the jail is keeping inmates "locked behind bars and keeping them off the street."

Initially O'Rourke had recommended the jail population be limited to 80, but Joe Slater, the jail commission's supervising inspector, said the jail can accommodate "85 as long as they are properly-classed and segregated." Slater noted the jail has 101 bunks.

Merritt said the task force recognized that "a minor renovation of our jail is not going to be satisfactory." Indications reflect that jail population is on the increase due in part to more stringently enforced driving while intoxicated and theft laws.

Merritt, questioned by jail commission Chairman Amber Cree of Abilene, said he did not know the cost of renovation but some proposed figures have been "ridiculously low." He said he would estimate $1 million, more or less.

Merritt said he surmises the community would want the county to take a business-like approach to renovate or fund a new jail or courthouse. However, he said, the Midland area economy is "struggling a lot right now."

"Midland is a can-do city and a will-do city if the facts are known," Merritt said.

No injuries noted in refinery fire

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — Billowing black clouds of smoke hundreds of feet high filled the sky east of town Tuesday after a fire erupted in an oil and chemical refinery.

"It looked like the whole county was on fire," said one observer of the fire at the Cosden Oil and Chemical Refinery on Interstate 20 five miles east of Big Spring. No injuries were reported as a result of the fire, which broke out at 12:51 p.m.

"It was probably about 4:30 p.m. when they really felt they had it under control," said Lt. Jerry Edwards of the Big Spring Police Department. According to Edwards, the fire was started "by a rupture in a hose being used by an outside contractor."

Police evacuated "15 or 20" families from a nearby mobile home park and closed off the area, shutting down a three-mile stretch of Interstate 20 for most of the afternoon.

Although police initially were concerned about the danger of toxic gas, the fire was confined to the plant's crude oil area, according to Ross Westbrook, manager of industrial relations for Cosden.

"An outside contractor's equipment failed, exposing a bunch of crude oil to the atmosphere," Westbrook said. "They contained it real well."

Area fire departments set up a semicircular battery of hoses to battle the fire and built a dirt bank to funnel the water out the main gate, under a sign which said, "This Plant Has Worked a Million Man Hours Without a Loss Time Accident."

Employees of the Caldwell Electric Supply Co. across the Interstate from the refinery said the fire was small at first.

"It was just like a small fire. (A fellow employee) said, 'Look, y'all — it looks like it'll blow.' We turned around, and boom!" said Joe Rodriguez. "It looked like the whole county was on fire."

Westbrook said it was too early to tell how seriously the plant was damaged by the fire.

"We've got a management team here now," he said. "But it'll be some time before an estimate can be made."

With one vote to go, O'Neill still hoping to stall missile

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — With three votes down and one to go, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill says the last hope of stopping spending for the MX missile is to convince conservative Democrats it bears too high a cost.

"That's the only argument we've got out there," O'Neill said in the aftermath of the slender 219-213 vote by which the House on Tuesday voted to authorize $1.5 billion to build a second installment of 21 MX missiles.

"Certainly, we're going to try and switch it around," the speaker said. "It comes down to the fact that a lot of conservatives in my party will have to look at the price tag."

Other Democrats called the vo. "the high-water mark" for the missile system.

They predicted that even if the House votes to appropriate the money, future administration requests for the MX will be slashed and President Reagan will never get the fleet of 100 MX missiles he seeks.

The second vote, to actually appropriate the MX money, was expected today or Thursday.

■ Lobbyists see strength of MX victory. — Page 2A

Reagan hailed the House action as "a vote for peace, for a safer future, and for success" at the arms control talks with the Soviet Union in Geneva.

Republicans applauded but many Democratic liberals booed and hissed as Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., defied the majority opinion in his party to defend MX as a potent bargaining lever that can be used to pry an acceptable arms reduction agreement from the Soviet Union at the Geneva talks.

"To vote no on these mssiles would be in effect giving help to the Soviet Union," said Aspin, who is chairman of the House Armed Services Committee.

"Ladies and gentlemen of the Congress, I beg of you the negotiators are at the table, let's give them the tools so they can do the job," Aspin said.

A total 158 Republicans and 61 Democrats voted for the MX spending. Voting against it were 189 Democrats and 24 Republicans. By tradition, O'Neill as speaker did not vote and there are two vacancies among the 435 House seats.

Many House vote counters had expected a larger victory margin for MX, mostly because of the lobbying blitz staged by Reagan, who ordered home chief U.S. arms negotiator Max Kampelman home from Geneva to help make the case among fence sitters.

"Even though there was enormous pressure a lot of people broke against the president because of budget problems," said Rep. Norman Dicks, D-Wash.

"What made it so close was the budget argument," said Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass.

U.S. negotiators open session with NATO support, MX approval

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — U.S. negotiators, armed with congressional approval for more MX nuclear missiles and the backing of NATO defense ministers for research into space-based defenses, opened talks with Soviet officials today on the possible reduction of long-range rockets.

The U.S. delegation, headed by Ambassador John G. Tower, and the Soviet team, led by Victor P. Karpov, met at the offices of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Their meeting, as part of a three-tiered program of arms talks in Geneva, effectively revived the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks that were suspended in December 1983 in a Soviet protest against NATO's deployment of medium-range missiles.

The talks began hours after the House of Representatives, voting 219-213, approved $1.5 billion for a second installment of 21 of the long-range, nuclear-tipped MX missiles.

Asked whether the Tuesday night vote in favor of the controversial MX would affect the talks, Karpov told reporters: "We'll talk here."

In Luxembourg, 12 NATO defense ministers unanimously urged the United States to continue research into a space weapons program, declaring it to be "in NATO's security interests."

Reagan administration officials had said support for the MX and the anti-missile research program, popularly known as "Star Wars," would strengthen the hand of U.S. negotiators in Geneva.

MX missiles are designed with 10 nuclear warheads and can travel distances of more than 8,000 miles.

Max M. Kampelman, leader of the U.S. negotiating team, had been recalled from the arms talks to try to sway Congress members who were reluctant to vote for the MX money.

House panel ready to withdraw its 'death threat' against UTPB

From Staff and Wire Reports

AUSTIN — House budget writers are prepared to withdraw the death threat they voted on state universities in Odessa and Galveston.

A procedural vote Tuesday cleared the way for the House Appropriations Committee to go back and undo its Monday votes to yank funding from the University of Texas of the Permian Basin and Texas A&M at Galveston.

"We'll work it out some way," said Chairman Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield. "If it's not here, it will be done somewhere else."

Locally, reactions to the latest developments in the Appropriation Committee's battle over UTPB's fate were mixed.

"It's still sort of up in the air," said Anne Sherburn, a UTPB spokeswoman. "But we feel very confident that we do have the votes and that the decision will be overturned. We have a lot of support from the legislature, campus and community."

Students were both angry and encouraged about the fate of UTPB's future.

$7,500 fine, 10 years probation assessed nurse in burglary case

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

A Midland registered nurse suspected in the burglaries of about 20 buildings was sentenced Tuesday night to 10 years probation and a $7,500 fine in connection with the admitted burglary of a doctor's office.

A nine-man, three-woman jury deliberated five hours on the punishment stage in the trial of James Louis Tester, who pleaded guilty to the Jan. 19 burglary of Dr. Herman Cirkovic's office, 2114 W. Michigan Ave.

On a motion made by Odessa defense attorney Roy Bell to 142nd State District Court Judge Pat Baskin, the state dropped the burglaries of a floral shop and a cleaners from the indictment.

According to Bell, the second and third paragraphs of the indictment alleging the two burglaries were faulty.

Even lobbyists know its big victory

By JIM KLURFELD
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

An Analysis

WASHINGTON — The anti-MX lobbyist knew Tuesday's cause in the House was lost. He walked up to the pro-MX lobbyist from the White House and posed a question:

"Well, you've pulled out all the stops on this one. You've used all your chips. Now, tell me, what have you got left to use for Nicaragua, when the aid for the contras comes up?"

The White House lobbyist smiled and replied: "Use credit cards."

Make no mistake about it, President Reagan has won a major victory in gaining congressional approval for 21 more MX missiles from a doubting and reluctant Congress. The administration now has a go-ahead to produce and deploy 42 of these intercontinental missiles. But the key question now is: at what cost has the president won?

Political capital is not in limitless supply, not even for this high-riding president. The closeness of Tuesday's vote means that it will be far more difficult for Reagan when it comes to the last 48 MX missiles he has requested in the fiscal year 1986 budget. Some Democratic opponents and backers predicted last night that the 48 are all but dead. And that is not to mention the tough votes that Reagan faces on his desire to give the Nicaraguan rebels (called contras) $14 million in covert aid, or the upcoming battle over his admittedly draconian budget or eventually the political donnybrook that tax reform promises to be.

Two key Democrats, Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia and Rep. Les Aspin of Wisconsin, gave strong indications that while they supported Reagan this time, they will not do it again on future MX requests. Both are acknowledged experts on defense and both can sway other votes. In this round both went with the president, not because they believe the missile is going to bolster U.S. security, but because the president tied the vote to his own prestige and to the need to establish a bargaining chip with the Soviets.

Nunn, for instance, asked chief arms negotiator Max Kampelman, who was called back from Geneva to lobby Monday, how many more times he planned to fly back to help the president. It is unlikely that ploy will be used again.

The most disturbing aspect of the MX to House members, even those who usually support defense requests, is that the MX tends to destabilize the nuclear balance of terror.

The administration proposal to place the MX in the existing Minuteman silos means the missile is vulnerable to Soviet attack. The original proposal was to keep the MX moving on trucks or trains so it could not be targeted by increasingly accurate Soviet missiles. But over a 12-year period no acceptable mobile scheme could be found.

Now both sides will have big multi-warhead missiles in vulnerable silos. The side that strikes first might gain an advantage. In a sense it puts a "hair-trigger" on a nuclear war.

On the MX, the point that many understand is that there is nothing sacred about the 100 missiles that Reagan proposed. He based his proposal on the recommendation of a commission headed by Gen. Brent Scowcroft, the former national security adviser.

Shortly after the report came out Scowcroft said in an interview that he chose 100 because it was a "nice, round number." In terms of bargaining chips and demonstrations of resolve to the Soviet Union — the real justifications for this MX missile proposal — 50 or 42 is probably as good as 100.

But there is another way to look at all this and some veteran lawmakers understand it only too well. Defense programs, once begun, are not easy to stop. The Pentagon makes certain that subcontracts on big projects are spread throughout the country.

Seven-year-old Josie Aaronson-Gelb of Oakland, Calif., talks to reporters about her family's suit over charges "rung up" during 45 calls to Santa Claus.

California families decide to reach out, sue someone

By LISA LEVITT RYCKMAN
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — Randy Grimm didn't know it cost 55 cents every time he called a sports trivia game, so the 15-year-old dialed it 330 times last month hoping to answer the quiz correctly and win a prize.

On Monday, his mother, Judith Grimm, received her telephone bill: 18 pages long, with more than $190 worth of "976" calls.

"I don't know who was more shocked, him or me," she said Tuesday. "I about had a heart attack. I just couldn't believe it."

Believe it, said Pacific Bell. And pay it.

But Ms. Grimm doesn't want to pay, and neither do the parents of Josie Aaronson-Gelb and Rachel Kreps-Falk, who repeatedly called a Santa Claus message last December, not knowing it was costing 50 cents a shot.

Josie and Rachel, both 7, are plaintiffs of record in a $10 million lawsuit filed Tuesday in San Francisco Superior Court against Pacific Bell and the company that operates the Santa Claus line.

Public Advocates Inc. attorney Robert Gnaizda, who filed the class action suit, said Pacific Bell would not reveal the company's name, so he refers to it in the suit as "Santa Fraud Company."

The suit accuses Bell and "Santa Fraud" of deceptive advertising "designed to falsely mislead children into believing the calls are free" and inducing them to call repeatedly.

UTPB

"We are still very upset that they keep considering this," said Clark Brown, a UTPB student and chairman of intramurals. "It's hurting our attendance and reputation by bringing this up each year."

Another student was optimistic.

"PERSONALLY, I wouldn't start looking elsewhere until I get the word that the school is closing," said Alice Ashmore, a Midland resident who plans to graduate in December. "I like the quality of education here — it's very good.

"It would be a tremendous loss to the community if they shut it down," she said.

Ms. Ashmore stated she had not heard of any plans by UTPB students to transfer to another school.

"The students all seem very supportive of the school," she said. "There was a petition yesterday that was signed by 'around 500 people.'"

Chuck Bernhard, with the Odessa Economic Development Office, agreed the loss of UTPB would be detrimental.

"The university is a crucial element for attracting new businesses into the area," he said. "We are in an age of information and technology and that knowledge is much in demand."

Bernhard was confident the university would remain open.

"WE'VE BEEN activating all of our concerned members and there have been a lot of key people down in Austin and on the phone. I don't think it will be closed," he said.

A possible UTPB closure could have some effect on Midland College students who go on the state university from the two-year junior college.

"We did a survey some time back that showed that roughly 5 percent of our graduating class goes on to UTPB," said Dee Windsor, associate dean of students and registrar. "Out of a class of 120, it would effect 40 or so students."

The apparent game plan on the two colleges is to reconsider the votes after the rest of the budget is written by the committee, possibly Friday.

Houston Rep. Paul Colbert, who made the motions to phase out the two schools, conceded the votes are there to reverse the decision. He said the state could save $61 million by closing the campuses.

Backers of both schools spoke up Tuesday, and Texas City Rep. Lloyd Criss said he was "really upset" with Colbert.

"I doubt if he knows anything about that school," Criss said. "It provides a service. It educates people.

"He said all it does is teach people to steer ships and that's not true at all," Criss said about the school, which has about 500 students and specializes in training harbor pilots.

UTPB is an upper division school that opened in 1973 and now has about 1,800 students. Colbert says UTPB never attracted enough students, but Rep. Kelly Godwin, R-Odessa, counters that UTPB is not a "luxury."

"IT'S VERY MUCH a necessity in West Texas," Godwin said. "The long-range answer is to elevate it to a four-year school."

UTPB officials have tried to win legislative approval to add freshman and sophomore classes.

Former Rep. Jay Gibson, who lost to Godwin last November, was in Austin to lobby on another matter but was also working in the Capitol Tuesday to reverse the vote.

"I never really dreamed something like this would happen. Bang. It happened," Gibson said. "It was kind of a mob mentality — let's cut everything. This is a tough session. With the idea of making cuts you just get overzealous sometimes."

Also Tuesday, Rep. Bill Ceverha, R-Richardson, led the fight to slash funds for the state's Washington lobbyist.

He also had been vocal in the criticism that caused Sarah Weddington to resign from the lobbyist job last week. Ms. Weddington, whom Ceverha accused of wasting state time and money on travel, will leave as soon as Gov. Mark White names a replacement.

Rep. Bill Hollowell, D-Grand Saline and a long-time critic of the Office of State-Federal Relations, said he did some checking and was persuaded the office helps Texas get federal money.

The House Appropriations Committee approved Hollowell's motion to spend about $780,000 a year on the office, which now gets $1 million. Ceverha asked the committee to cut the funding to $300,000 a year.

"If anyone wonders how state government grows out of bounds, this is a great example," he said.

JAIL

He said the task force in its study "did not seek an overall business game-plan" for the county courthouse, library and jail. He said the general consensus of Midlanders is "yes, let's do this in a business-like approach."

The task force committee, sponsored by the Midland Chamber of Commerce at the request of the Midland County Commissioners' Court, had recommended the county "begin immediate renovations" of the jail in the "most cost-efficient manner" to eliminate deficiencies cited by the jail commission.

The task force, which asserted that Midland County needs a new jail, recommended a major feasibility study to develop master plans for new courthouse and jail facilities.

Wright told the jail commission, "Most of you are familiar with the rigors we (county commissioners) have been going through in seeking the way."

He said the county's financial resources are "extremely low. We do not have the funds" to renovate the jail.

Painter said he is correcting most of the deficiencies cited by the jail commission. Those deficiencies included lack of adequate cell lighting, lack of a exercise area, inadequate sunlight throughout the jail, lack of sound-and-sight separation of male and female prisoners. Painter said he has now turned the jail's bull-pen into a sunlit exercise area and is working on correcting the lighting conditions.

Ms. Cree agreed with Merritt that Midland is a "can-do city" but there has been some "foot-dragging" in apparent reference to the jail issue.

NURSE

The paragraphs in question stated the defendant on those dates did, "without the effective consent of Sadru Pirani, the owner of Zenith Laundry & Cleaners, enter a building" and "without the effective consent of Joe Garcia, the owner of Peppertree Flower & Gift Shop, enter a building" and did attempt to commit and did commit theft.

Bell said the indictment did not specifically state the buildings entered were those owned by the two men.

"The effective consent is the integral part of any burglary of a building. You can't have effective consent without ownership," Bell said.

First Assistant District Attorney David Rosado said the state voluntarily would strike the last paragraphs and only try the nurse on the Cirkovic burglary, but gave formal notice the defendant would be re-indicted on the other two charges.

Bell, however, claims it would be double-jeopardy if his client is tried on the two counts contained in the original indictment.

Tester, a critical care unit nurse at Midland Memorial Hospital at the time of his arrest Jan. 23, testified Tuesday he had committed the burglary and led police to an attic in his home at 1201 W. Michigan Ave., where "hundreds" of Valium tablets, a prescription pain killer, were found.

The defendant has been living in the Clover House in Odessa, a residential drug and alcohol abuse rehabilitation program, since his arrest.

Referring to him as having a Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde personality, Rosado said the defendant had "fooled" persons with whom he worked. He contended Tester had only admitted he had a drug and alcohol dependency and entered the rehabilitation program after he was arrested.

Tester, who had a prior misdemeanor conviction of possession of a dangerous drug in Lubbock in 1974, testified he used Valium "on and off" during the 10 years after he had completed his one year probation in Lubbock and was arrested in Midland. He said he did "think" he has "a drinking problem."

Tester said he only abused substances after work or on his days off, thereby allowing him to continue his career without problems.

Testifying to his competency on the job, as a nursing student at Midland College and to his character were Ellen Dyer, his best friend; Mrs. Benton Riddle, a neighbor; Dr. Brian Mohr, Midland cardiologist; Jack Richardson, district manager for Republic Supply Co., and brother-in-law of the defendant; Dr. Eileen Piwetz, chair and director of the Associate Degree Nursing Program at Midland College; Robyn Hair, MMH critical care unit head nurse and the defendant's immediate supervisor; Dr. Dorothy Lowery, MMH anesthesiologist; Midland attorney Jack Ladd, a patient of the defendant's; and Gary Young, director of the Clover House.

Tester's parents and other family members were present during the trial. Also watching from the gallery were members of Neighbors Against Burglary' Drugs, Inc., and the Midland Crime Commission, who have formed a court watch to monitor local trials.

During punishment arguments, Rosado reminded the jury Young had testified that "he's been using highly-protective screening techniques to produce a 75 percent failure rate." Young had testified only 25 percent of the residents at the Clover House become rehabilitated.

"We think it's pretty good," Young said, explaining the counselors are "working in matters of time. A resident in 1984 might bear fruit in 1987."

"But your 75 percent failure rate bears fruit immediately, doesn't it?" Rosado asked.

Tester, who testified he made $1,700-$1,900 per month as a nurse in the CCU unit at MMH, had been employed with the hospital since 1976. Details of the incident at Cirkovic's office were hazy he said, "because I'd been drinking that night."

Money and injectible Valium were reported stolen in the burglary, reports said.

In the terms of probation, the defendant will pay restitution to the victim, receive drug and alcohol abuse counseling and serve 30 days in the Midland County Jail, Baskin said. Details of the jail sentence and payment schedule were to be worked out by attorneys at a later date.

Correction

In a March 8 story concerning the trial to settle a dispute involving sale of the former First National Bank building to Eagle Properties, Ltd., it was stated that in his testimony former FNB director John Hendrix made the comment, "Goodbye and God help us" before leaving a meeting of the bank's executive committee.

That was incorrect. Hendrix actually said "Goodbye and try helping us."

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

Dicks, who voted in favor of the current MX money request largely because of the Geneva factor, said MX foes now hope to cap total numbers of the missiles at 40 to 50 rather than at the 100 Reagan seeks.

The White House is asking Congress to approve later in the year a $4 billion appropriation to build an additional 48 MX missiles, a request Dicks and other Democrats said is likely to be denied.

"I think there's no question that the '86 request is in serious, serious trouble," said Rep. Thomas Foley, D-Wash., the House Democratic whip.

Reagan's successful linking of the weapons system with hopes for success at Geneva was a constant factor in the House debate and carried the day last week in the Republican-controlled Senate, where MX supporters prevailed in twin 55-45 votes.

Critics argued that MX, which stands for Missile Experimental but which Reagan calls "the Peacekeeper," is too expensive, too vulnerable to Soviet attack, and too likely to destabilize the U.S.-Soviet nuclear balance.

The assigned mission of each highly accurate MX is to hurl 10 nuclear war heads at separate targets over ranges of more than 8,000 miles.

Bones conceal interesting evidence, experts say

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Using the bullet-pierced bones of suspected victims of political repression, U.S. forensic experts are teaching Argentine colleagues how to extract evidence from unearthed remains.

"Skeletons are the best witnesses," said Clyde Snow, a forensic anthropologist, from Norman, Okla. "The stories you can reconstruct using them are often more reliable than live witnesses."

Snow directed the removal of the bones from nameless graves in Buenos Aires province — remains of those who are suspected to be among the estimated 9,000 or more people who disappeared during a brutal campaign waged by security forces against leftist subversion in the late 1970s, when the country was under military rule.

The numbered bones of seven men and three women were carefully arranged on gleaming white examining tables in two autopsy rooms of the medical school of the University of Buenos Aires, where the U.S. experts began teaching a two-week course on Monday. About 20 Argentine government officials and students are attending the course.

Eight of the 10 sets of remains included skulls shattered by gunshots, Snow said. One skeleton was pierced by at least seven bullets, he said, and in most cases the shots came from behind the victim at close range.

The Americans were invited to teach the course by the human rights office of the civilian government of President Raul Alfonsin, whose 1983 inauguration after his democratic election ended nearly eight years of military rule.

Alfonsin has ordered nine former military leaders to be tried in civilian courts on charges in connection with the suspected abduction, torture and murder of thousands of Argentines.

"Divide my work into two epochs — before Snow and after Snow," said Guillermo Berman, federal court forensics chief for the Buenos Aires suburb of Moron. "Before, the techniques of archeology were not used in forensic science in Argentina."

All that glitters and glows is gold.

Researcher says state must face waste problem

SOCORRO, N.M. (AP) — New Mexico Tech researcher John Hawley says the biggest problem with toxic waste in New Mexico is making people face the fact there is a problem.

The question of where to put toxic waste has to be solved now because it's too late once waste gets into the water system of an arid, moisture-starved region like New Mexico, he said.

Hawley is head of a project to find sites for possible toxic waste repositories or management facilities in the state. He says the state needs a central facility for handling the wastes to prevent them from polluting New Mexico's countryside and water.

Tons of hazardous wastes are produced in New Mexico.

Companies, both large and small, generate waste ranging from used motor oil and solvents to pesticides and herbicides. The average home garage is filled with motor oil, cans of paint and aerosols for killing various garden pests.

Hawley said the common definition of hazardous waste doesn't even include one common source of ground water pollution — septic tanks.

And, he said, some people assume that because a piece of land is desert and perhaps not good for much anyway, it's all right to dump wastes on it.

"The biggest problem is that people tend to think we don't have a problem," Hawley said. "There's big open spaces, not a lot of people ... they can go out and dump anything."

Large companies have staffs that deal solely with waste management and a big cost of operation for such firms is shipping deadly waste out of state, he said.

But citizens — and some companies — feel free to dump trash on the mesas.

"And not just wood and trees — old cans of paint, used oil, pesticides, poisons, solvents," he said. "... Someone dumps a car body. There's oil, grease, acids, lead in the car battery."

Hawley also said the effect of various wastes on arid climates has not been given much study. For example, scientists don't know what happens to organic chemicals in a dry climate, where chemical reactions differ from those in a humid climate.

"There's a dilution factor in humid climates," he said. "Say there's a bad spill in the Columbia River; it's diluted. That doesn't mean it isn't a terrible thing, but a big river has maybe 100 times the discharge of a Rio Grande.

"When we dump something in the Rio, there's a concern. When we dump something in the arroyo, it just sits there; it isn't diluted," he said.

The main problem in arid climates such as New Mexico's is keeping any pollutants out of the ground water, Hawley said.

"Just about any major city in the state gets a lot of its water from the ground. Water is scarce and we want to keep anything out of it," he said.

Hawley said legislation signed by President Reagan in late 1984 only increases the problem of where to put hazardous waste because it lowers the amount of hazardous waste a business, university or hospital can store before the waste has to be shipped to a facility designed to handle it.

The law creates problems for universities, which often try to save money by ordering toxic materials, such as chemicals for laboratories, in bulk. The schools contend they are not generating hazardous waste, but merely storing it.

Hawley said the legislation has spurred renewed efforts to find a central place to store wastes in New Mexico prior to shipment — what is known as a hazardous materials management facility — or a permanent site to bury it.

"I'm not sure anyone is excited about finding a dump site," he said. "But a management facility for processing or bulk shipping (of wastes) to save money — there might even be some processing and recycling — might be good economics."

Hawley has identified five possible sites for hazardous wastes in the state — part of the Llano de Albuquerque, a tract on the mesa summit between the Rio Grande and Rio Puerco valleys; near a dry well hole in the Mesa Prieta-Cabezon area in Sandoval County; an area of the San Juan Basin south of Bloomfield; a broad slope in the Jornada del Muerto area of Sierra County, and a site southwest of Raton near Koehler, a former coal-mining center.

The criteria in the search included the climate, landforms, geology and hydrology of the area, but Hawley said the site suggestions are only preliminary.

An Israeli armored personnel carrier with soldier at ready rumbles through a nearly deserted street in a small village on the Lebanese coast north of Tyre Monday. The combination of a fuel shortage and frequent Israeli anti-guerrilla raids has kept most traffic off the roads in the area.

Network official satisfied crew's shooting accidental

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel's prime minister has turned down a CBS request for an inquiry into the killing of two newsmen by an Israeli tank crew, but a network vice president says he is satisfied the shooting was not deliberate.

"I now believe, even without complete information, that it was certainly not a deliberate attempt to fire tank guns against our camera crew," Ernest Leiser, vice president of CBS, told reporters Tuesday after meeting with Prime Minister Shimon Peres.

"Knowing what I now know, we might have qualified our language somewhat," Leiser said, referring to the original CBS charges that the attack was deliberate.

But he indicated that criticism still seemed in order. "I don't know yet if the action is not susceptible to criticism...I am not persuaded it was not an excessive use of force," Leiser said.

Peres' spokesman, Uri Savir, said the prime minister "expressed his sorrow about this tragic event," and said there "was no intention to fire at and harm any journalist."

But he turned down Leiser's request for a special inquiry into the events of last Thursday.

CBS President Edward M. Joyce sent a message to Peres last Thursday citing witnesses as saying the two Lebanese crewmen were killed in "an unprovoked and deliberate attack."

Israel's 'preventive fire' policy angers Lebanese

By NICOLAS B. TATRO

BOURGHLIYE, Lebanon (AP) — Jumaa Saeed and a crew of five were working recently in a citrus grove near the Mediterranean coastal road in south Lebanon when an Israeli patrol came by on an anti-guerrilla sweep.

"We were picking lemons when bullets came flying through the trees. We all hit the ground," Saeed told a reporter accompanying the Israeli patrol moments after the incident.

During a nearly three-hour patrol aboard an armored personnel carrier and on foot in the thick plantations of bananas and citrus, Israeli soldiers fired their automatic weapons frequently, often blindly and in one case at the direction of houses only a few hundred meters away.

A week before, an Israeli patrol from another unit fired along the roadside within 10 yards of Irish soldiers of the United Nations peacekeeping force, prompting an angered Irish captain to briefly close the road to the Israelis in protest.

The Israeli army calls the shooting "preventive fire," designed to keep Shiite Moslem guerrillas from using groves or roadside ravines as hiding places to attack Israeli patrols.

"Our lines of transport are one of the main targets of the terrorists. To try and prevent this, we shoot preventive fire but it is controlled fire," said an Israeli lieutenant colonel, who briefed reporters at a base in Tyre before the patrol.

"We shoot only in open areas, not at houses or buildings, and usually in places that control the road and which are known to be places that terrorists can use to shoot or to detonate roadside bombs," said the officer who, in keeping with army regulations, was not identified.

Increased firing by Israeli soldiers has coincided with an escalation of guerrilla attacks on Israel's army since mid-February, when the first stage of a planned troop withdrawal from Lebanon was completed.

What has made Israeli soldiers particularly edgy was a suicide car bomb that plunged into an Israeli convoy March 10, killing 12 soldiers and wounding 14.

Sitting on an armored personnel carrier traveling the coastal road north of Tyre, it is easy to understand how vulnerable Israeli soldiers feel. Every cluster of houses, clump of trees or rocky hilltop could conceal a guerrilla with an anti-tank rocket or a detonator.

Lt. Yehuda, commander of the patrol, pointed to a shattered concrete fence and a 1½-foot deep hole along the road, both sites of recent roadside explosions.

When a Mercedes weighed down with packages and baggage on the roof approached about 200 yards down the road, Lt. Yehuda raised his hand high in th : air.

The car edged off the two-lane road but was still moving when the lieutenant fired a burst of machine-gun fire about 30 yards in front of the car. The driver quickly backed into a side road.

"I fired because the car was carrying a lot of stuff on the roof which could have been explosives and he ran away when I signaled him to stop," said Yehuda, 23. Israeli soldiers dismounted from the armored vehicle and questioned the driver, Ahmed Assam Salman.

Salman was carrying nine relatives, including an infant, in the car and said he had come from Beirut to visit his family. "I wasn't afraid of the bullets, but there was no reason to shoot at me," he told a reporter.

Gunfire, random or otherwise, is not a new experience for the Lebanese. After a decade of civil warfare and the presence of trigger-happy Palestinian guerrillas, the Lebanese are not easily frightened by the sound of bullets and explosions.

But the practice of firing into plantations, which damages trees and keeps many farmers from their fields, or shooting on the roads in front of cars carrying children and old people, deepens the hostility of the population.

Some critics say such tactics may help create a permanent new enemy along Israel's border that will continue to attack even after Israeli troops leave Lebanon. Others warn of a negative impact on the army itself.

Powerful blast rocks Baghdad; Iran claims responsibility

By MOHAMMED SALAM

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — A powerful blast rocked Baghdad today and sent up a mushroom-like cloud of white smoke on the city's western edge, shortly after Iran said it fired a ground-to-ground missile at the Iraqi capital.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency IRNA, monitored in Cyprus, said the attack was in retaliation for Iraqi raids on Tehran today and Tuesday that killed 12 people and wounded 18, as well as raids on other Iranian cities.

From the roof of The Associated Press office in Baghdad, this reporter watched the billowing cloud. Ambulances with wailing sirens, fire engines and police vehicles raced across the city. There were no immediate reports of casualties.

The blast was the sixth heard in the Iraqi capital in 13 days, each blast accompanied by an Iranian claim that it had lobbed a long-range missile into Baghdad.

An Iraqi military spokesman said in a Baghdad radio statement today that "a chain of daring raids were mounted at dawn against selected targets in the heart of Tehran and hit the cities of Qazvin and Kashan."

Institute helps Africa's farmers by raising crop yields, hardiness

By ROBERT WELLER

IBADAN, Nigeria (AP) — Scientists from 45 nations are at work here helping Africa's small farmers grow more and better food for the continent's hungry millions.

They already have developed faster growing and higher yielding varieties of African staples — cassava, yams, cowpeas (blackeyed peas), sweet potatoes and corn — that also are more pest and disease-resistant, require less rainfall and are more suitable to African tastes.

"It's like designing a new plant," said Jibade O. Oyekan, spokesman for the International Institute for Tropical Agriculture. "We know the prejudices of local consumers, which resistances are needed, the right height for the convenience of farmers and that it must be high yielding."

Since its creation in 1967 by the Rockefeller and Ford foundations, the institute also has developed ways of cultivating fragile tropical soils to preserve nutrients.

"Research on this continent on food crops basically started with this institute," said its director general, Ermond Hartmans, a Dutch-born American and former University of Minnesota professor.

Agricultural research in Africa previously focused on expanding cash crops for export, and researchers in the United States and other developed nations had little interest in cassava or other African food crops.

Institute scientists, working on 2,469 acres donated by Nigeria, have worked to bridge the technology gap that has resulted in imported food being cheaper than local food even after transport charges.

Many of Africa's food problems are beyond the range of scientists: low prices that discourage production, the collapse of road systems and the lack of agricultural extension services to spread new technology.

Hartmans said researchers, using the latest genetic engineering, can grow plants in a test tube, fusing cells from different plants to produce new strains.

"We have changed the nature of the cowpea plant. We made it erect — it was bushlike — and shortened the growing period from 110 days to 60," Hartmans said in an interview. The plant survived Botswana's drought last year.

Hartmans said discoveries at the institute outside this university city 60 miles north of Lagos, the capital, could ultimately benefit farmers in developed countries because diseases know no boundaries.

The institute-developed cassava illustrates the range of its work on the chief source of calories for 200 million people in tropical Africa.

In recent years, the cassava mealiebug and green spider mite have caused damage estimated at $2 billion in Africa, cutting harvests from 30 percent to 80 percent in 30 nations.

Institute scientists assigned to combat the pests decided they wanted to avoid expensive pesticides because of their residual effects and because both pests were highly resistant to pesticides.

Hartmans noted both the cassava plant and its pest had originated in South America "so we decided since we have exotic pests from South America who have no enemies here, we would find their enemies and bring them here."

The institute brought in a species of wasp that kills the mealiebug with no bad environmental side effects. The wasp has wiped out the mealiebug in most of Nigeria and is being used in 25 other African nations. Work is continuing on a predator for the mite.

Police break up rioting in township

UITENHAGE, South Africa (AP) — Police used birdshot and tear gas to disperse rioting that flared up overnight in black townships following the arrests of 239 marchers protesting the white-led government's racial policies.

There were no reports of casualties in the renewed reports of unrest, which broke out around the country, police in the capital Pretoria said.

But a police spokesman said two more charred bodies were found Tuesday in Kwanobuhle, a black township near the white industrial center of Uitenhage, bringing the death toll since last Thursday to 33 in the eastern Cape region.

Meanwhile, Supreme Court Judge Donald Kannemeyer, under heavy police guard, toured Langa township today near Uitenhage, where police shot and killed 19 blacks marching through a white area last Thursday.

Later, Kannemayer was to start taking testimony from police and witnesses involved in the shooting incident. Kannemeyer said the probe is expected to last two or three weeks and would be open to the public and the press.

Tuesday's 239 arrests came after some 200 to 300 protesters left a Methodist church in Cape Town, where a memorial service for the 19 black victims was held. Among those detained were four leading anti-apartheid clerics who are white.

Witnesses said the protesters dropped to their knees, prayed and began to sing "Onward Christian Soldiers" when they were ordered to break up the march against apartheid, South Africa's policy of social segregation.

Businessmen say disinvestment 'useful tool'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several black South African businessmen say the American disinvestment campaign is a useful tool in pressuring their country's white government to ease its apartheid restrictions.

"The fact of the matter is that this disinvestment campaign is bringing results," Habakuk Shikwane, owner of a large cane furniture factory, said of anti-apartheid groups trying to persuade American companies to stop investing in South Africa.

"The best method should be used to try to force South Africa to bring about change. I know changes are coming. I have seen them coming. But if you stop, then they (the white government) stop."

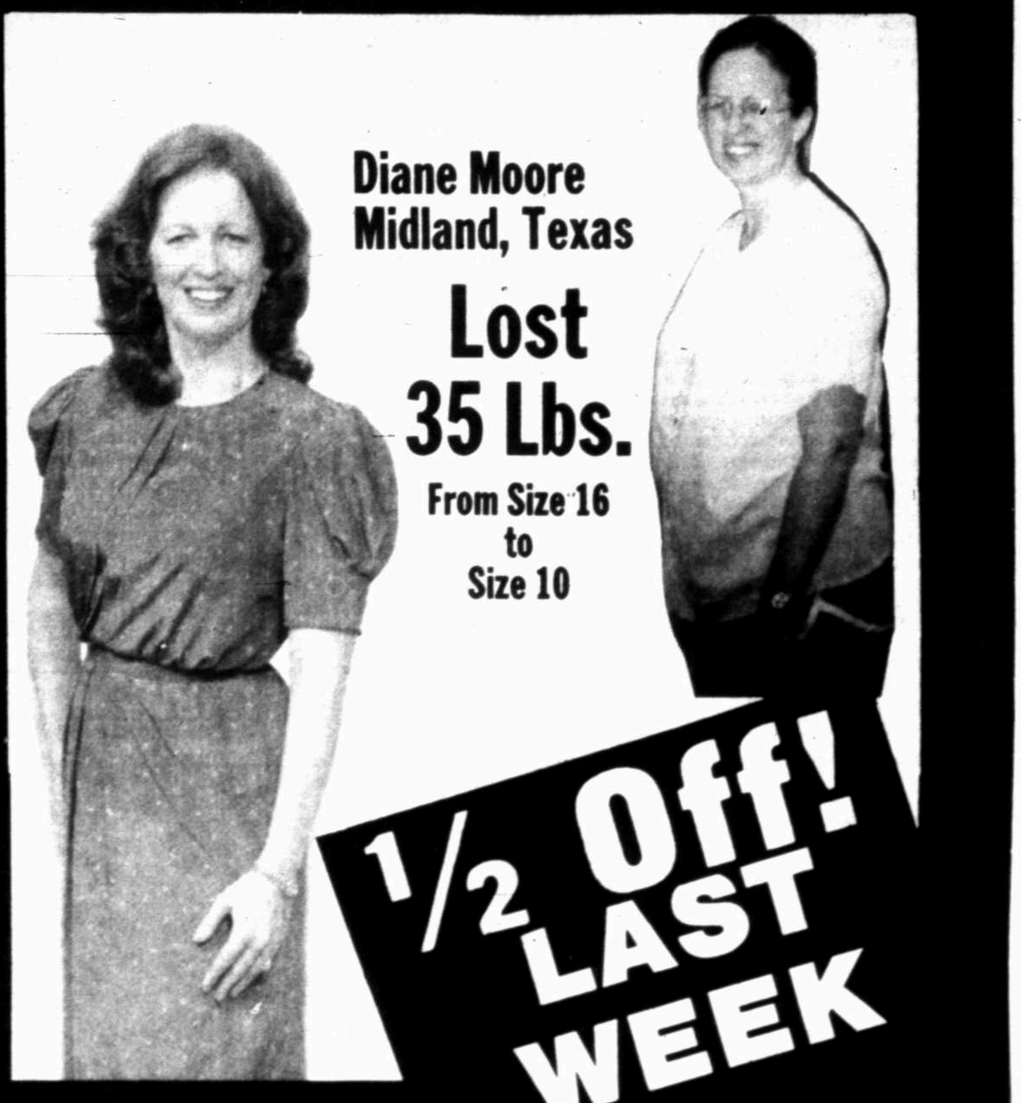

Shikwane, four other blacks and a businessman of Indian descent arrived in the United States earlier in the week, their trip paid for by white-run South African businesses.

At a luncheon Tuesday, several blacks spoke about conditions in their country where 5 million whites deny equal political and social rights to 22 million blacks.

The lively discussion prompted Ernest W. Lefever, president of the Ethics and Public Policy Center that sponsored the lunch, to remark on the "signficant differences around this table" on the disinvestment issue.

The center, a conservative think tank dealing with human rights issues, recently published a book arguing disinvestment is not the best way to prompt constructive, peaceful change in South Africa.

Soviet media: Death of officer 'regrettable'

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet newspapers and radios today carried a report by the official news agency Tass that said the shooting of a U.S. officer by a Soviet sentry in East Germany was "regrettable," but charged the officer was spying and blamed America for his death.

The Tuesday Tass report claimed the U.S. government was spreading "a deliberately false" version of what happened.

The United States says Maj. Arthur D. Nicholson was on a legitimate mission, in an unrestricted area, and the shooting was tantamount to murder. A U.S. Embassy spokesman in Moscow called the report by the official Tass news agency an attempt "to justify an action that just cannot be justified."

Michael Burch, a U.S. assistant defense secretary, said Tuesday in Luxembourg, "When we find the Soviets, even in restricted areas, we simply take their cameras away and send them home. We don't shoot them."

In Washington, State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb commented, "We can only say that our reaction is one of disgust that the Soviets would compound their inexcusable killing of Maj. Nicholson with such an obviously tendentious account of the events."

A Soviet sentry shot Nicholson on Sunday near the East German town of Ludwigslust about 30 miles from the West Germany border. U.S. officials said Nicholson's driver was prevented from going to the wounded man with his first aid kit, and the major was left to die without medical attention.

The Americans say Nicholson and Sgt. Jessie G. Schatz were on a routine surveillance tour permitted under the 1947 agreement that provides for liaison missions on both sides. Since the end of occupation, the main function of the missions has been intelligence gathering.

Tass said in its report that Nicholson "secretly approached" a military equipment storage facility in a camouflage uniform, opened a window and was taking pictures. It said the sentry shouted a warning in Russian and German, fired a warning shot, then shot to kill when the American tried to flee.

Nicholson spoke fluent Russian.

In Frankfurt, West Germany, a U.S. diplomatic source said the facility was a tank storage shed and that Nicholson was standing outside it, "near, but not on, restricted ground." The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said he could not say exactly how far the American was from the shed.

ABC News reported Tuesday night that it learned the officer must have passed through a restricted area to get to where he was shot. It did not identify the sources of the report.

Tass said the incident was "regrettable, but the entire responsibility for it lies with the American side, which is now circulating a deliberately false version of what happened."

Salvadoran guerrillas try to disrupt elections

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — In a campaign to disrupt Sunday's national elections, leftist rebels blew up four more municipal buildings and telecommunications offices in rural towns, military officials say.

The leftists are boycotting the vote, which they call a "farce," because they say any leftist candidates would be slain by right-wing death squads. They demand negotiations to end the 5½-year-old civil war before any voting.

In the past five weeks, guerrillas have burned 17 municipal buildings and 11 telecommunications offices, mainly in northeastern El Salvador.

Early Tuesday, they attacked San Matias, 21 miles northwest of San Salvador, and dynamited the city hall and three other key buildings, officials said. No casualties were reported.

Similar raids were reported Monday at Tejutla, 40 miles north of the capital, and at El Sauce and Concepcion de Oriente, about 110 miles east of San Salvador.

The guerrillas said the raid Tuesday was "a protest against the new electoral farce," according to a San Matias commander, who asked not to be identified for security reasons. He said army reinforcements arrived eight hours after the attack.

The civil defense commander in San Matias said he and four other guardsmen on duty fled Tuesday when rebels attacked the military post. He told reporters the rebels took five rifles and then dynamited city hall, the municipal, court and telecommunications buildings.

The rebels target telecommunications offices in many small towns because they are the only places where telephone calls can be placed and received and where voting results are sent to the council headquarters in the capital.

The recent rebel attacks have destroyed civil records, including voter lists. But the Central Electoral Council said it has microfilm records of those lists and that elections should not be affected by the sabotage.

Voters will cast ballots for the 60-member National Assembly and 262 mayors. The last assembly elections were in 1982, as El Salvador began the process of restoring democracy. The assembly then drafted a new constitution that provided for last year's presidential election.

Kidnapped Briton released unharmed in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — British metallurgist Geoffrey Nash, kidnapped nearly two weeks ago from the streets of mostly Moslem west Beirut, has been released unharmed, British diplomats said today.

In London, a British Foreign Office spokeman said Nash "was released about midnight last night. He is safe and well.'

Ambassador David Miers in Beirut confirmed Nash's release, but said he could not provide details.

The radical Jihad Islami organization, believed composed of fundamentalist Shiite Moslems with ties to Iran, claimed responsibility for abducting the 60-year-old Nash on March 14 as he was leaving his home in west Beirut.

Nash, who works for the Lebanese government, was one of at least nine Westerners who have recently been abducted or who have disappeared in Lebanon, mostly in the western sector of the capital.

Contra aid at 'dead end'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A key Republican senator is urging President Reagan to drop his request for renewed CIA aid to Nicaraguan rebels and to seek instead regional support for diplomatic, economic and possibly military action against Nicaragua's leftist government.

Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., Senate Intelligence Committee chairman, declared that "the previous formula for covert assistance is simply at a dead end."

In a speech Tuesday at the National Press Club, Durenberger recommended that U.S. allies in Central America ask the Organization of American States to approve joint action by the nations of the hemisphere against Nicaragua.

Durenberger said that action, under the OAS's Rio Treaty permitting collective self-defense, could range from diplomatic pressure to economic isolation to military steps that could involve U.S. troops as part of an OAS force.

Tigers blamed in 22 deaths

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Tigers in the forests of West Bengal have killed 22 people in the past three months, despite the use of electrified human dummies to deter attacks, officials say.

"The problem is growing," said Priyothosh Roy, a forest ranger, in an interview with the United News of India published today. "It's insoluble. All efforts to prevent the killings have proved futile."

He says tigers killed 56 people in the Sunderbans Reserve Forest, along the Bangladesh border, last year, and 22 in the past three months.

Museum to go on block

LONDON (AP) — The London War Museum, a private collection of World War II planes, tanks, guns, uniforms, relics, and treasure from the Third Reich, will be auctioned off this summer, its owner says.

More than 5,000 items, said to be worth $2.34 million, will go under the hammer June 5 less than two years after the museum opened in the 56-year-old Whitehall Theater near London's Trafalgar Square.

The museum is owned by Paul Raymond, Britain's nude show pioneer and leading erotic magazine publisher.

Goetz 'speechless' over inability to testify

DA said Goetz tried to limit questions posed by jury

NEW YORK (AP) — "Speechless" after his terms for testifying before a grand jury were rejected, Bernhard Goetz blamed prosecutors for taking away his chance to tell the panel why he shot four youths on a subway train Dec. 22.

But District Attorney Robert Morgenthau said that when it was time for Goetz to testify Tuesday, he tried to "unreasonably and unfairly limit the grand jury's inquiry" by insisting questions be limited to the events of two days last December.

Goetz's case took another twist later Tuesday, when police accused James Ramseur, who told the grand jury Goetz shot him and his three companions without provocation, of falsely reporting his own abduction.

"I begged to testify before the grand jury," Goetz told The New York Post after leaving Morgenthau's office. "The DA's office wouldn't let me...All the DA wanted to do was to push and probe in another effort to stack up some more charges against me."

Goetz's attorney, Barry Slotnick, complained that prosecutors "wanted to question him about anything and everything," including reports Goetz bought guns in Florida and brought them illegally into New York.

With the end of its term two days away, the grand jury was thought to be near a decision on Goetz, who was indicted on firearms charges by another grand jury two months ago but not indicted on attempted murder charges. Morgenthau, citing a new witness, resubmitted the case to a new grand jury March 13.

When Goetz arrived at Morgenthau's office to testify on Tuesday, he was presented with what the district attorney called "the standard waiver of immunity" required of grand jury witnesses not specifically granted immunity in return for testimony.

That meant any of Goetz's testimony before the grand jury could later have been used against him at trial.

Slotnick said Goetz was willing to waive immunity from prosecution for anything he said about events of Dec. 22 and Dec. 30, the day before he surrendered.

Goetz, who never stepped into the grand jury room, was "distraught" over his inability to testify, Slotnick said. "He was ready. It was painful for him...He was very, very distressed. He was speechless."

In a letter to the grand jury foreman, Goetz wrote, "I beg of you to allow me to come into the grand jury room so that you will hear the whole truth about the horrors that I faced at the hands of other of your witnesses who have received the benefit of full immunity."

Bernhard Goetz, center, leaves Criminal Court in New York Tuesday. Although he was scheduled to testify before the grand jury, he did not do so.

Ramseur and Troy Canty, two of the youths Goetz shot, testified last week before the grand jury under immunity. Ramseur, who recently served two months in jail on a shoplifting conviction, was charged Tuesday night with falsely reporting an incident, a misdemeanor which carries up to a year in jail.

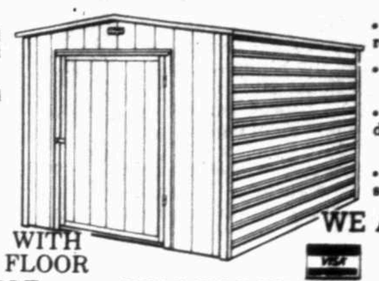

Police said Ramseur falsely reported his own abduction Monday night to an emergency telephone operator and detectives "to get the reaction of the police department." He "admitted that he was the caller and the call was a hoax," said police Sgt. Ron Severin.

Goetz also had asked Morgenthau to show the grand jury "a videotape which depicts Mr. Ramseur in a setting other than the grand jury room." Slotnick said the tape showed Ramseur attacking a television cameraman.

Goetz would face up to seven years in prison if convicted on the felony gun possession indictment handed up by the first grand jury.

The shootings occurred on a subway train just north of the World Trade Center on which Goetz, the four youths and about 20 other people were riding. Goetz shot the youths — two of them in the back — with an illegal .38-caliber handgun.

Retired general will accept U.N. post

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Lt. Gen. Vernon A. Walters, recently nominated as the American delegate to the United Nations, told the White House on Tuesday that he would accept the post even though it did not include a regular seat on the National Security Council.

The announcement by the White House ended speculation that Walters might not take the high-level position because of opposition by Secretary of State George P. Shultz to making him a regular member of the council. The nomination was sent to the Senate on Monday, the White House said.

The 68-year-old retired general, a longtime diplomatic trouble-shooter and former deputy Director of Central Intelligence, was nominated on Feb. 8 to replace Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, who is to leave the post at the end of the week. At that time, he indicated that the job would be of Cabinet rank and that he would serve on the National Security Council.

But administration officials had said in recent days that Shultz, who met with the general on Monday, had opposed seating him on the council and that the secretary had been supported by Reagan.

The White House spokesman, Larry Speakes, suggested on Tuesday that confusion had developed over whether the U.N. position carried with it a formal position on the security council, a key arm of the administration in determining foreign policy. He said that previous American delegates, including Mrs. Kirkpatrick, had not actually served on the council but had attended meetings at the invitation of Reagan, which Walters would also do.

Speakes said that "it remains to be seen" if Walters would be invited to attend meetings as frequently as Mrs. Kirkpatrick. But he said that Reagan had the "highest regard" for the general and valued his counsel.

At the United Nations, Mrs. Kirkpatrick told reporters that during her four years as chief delegate she had found it of value to have been "a member of the National Security Council," and a spokesman, responding to Speakes' statement that she had not held a regular seat, said Mrs. Kirkpatrick "was a member" of the council.

Speakes said that Walters had informed Robert C. McFarlane, Reagan's national security adviser, that he would take the job and that McFarlane had conveyed his intention to the president.

Seeking to dispel an impression that Walters would have less of a voice in foreign policy matters than Mrs. Kirkpatrick, Speakes said that she had not been invited to attend all council meetings and that she would at times miss meetings she was asked to attend.

"Very often she would be expected here and ended up being in New York, because something came up," he said.

A spokesman for Walters had said before Speakes' remarks that the general would have no comment on his status.

The National Security Council was created in 1947 to advise the president on national security matters. Its statutory members are the president, the vice president, the secretaries of state and defense, the Director of the Central Intelligence and the chairman of the Joint Chief of Staffs.

Reagan has also designated the white house chief of staff, Donald T. Regan, and Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III to attend the meetings.

Investigators to comb Home States' records

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Five separate federal and state investigations are probing the remains of Home State Savings Bank and its ties to a Florida securities firm in bankruptcy proceedings with $320 million in debts.

The FBI has ordered the Ohio Department of Commerce to hand over records on Home State, whose collapse lead to the temporary closing of 69 other savings and loan institutions, by April 4, state Savings and Loan Superintendent Robert McAlister said Tuesday.

The records the FBI is seeking were not specified, but McAlister said, "I understand they are investigating everything."

McAlister said the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission and at least one congressional committee also want information about the March 8 closing of Home State, which had $1.4 billion in assets. In addition, a special prosecutor and state-appointed conservator are in the process of trying to untangle Home State's web of financial dealings with ESM Government Securities Inc.

In Florida on Tuesday, the court-appointed receiver of ESM, whose collapse on March 4 led to Home State's closing, put the company in federal bankruptcy proceedings. Receiver Thomas Tew says he has seized about $30 million in ESM assets against about $320 million the firm owes Home State, other S&Ls and municipal investors.

Tew filed a Chapter 7 petition in West Palm Beach enabling ESM's assets to be liquidated and divided among its creditors.

When Home State closed amid runs by depositors, a private insurance fund that backed its deposits and those of the other 69 S&Ls was jeopardized. Gov. Richard Celeste ordered a bank holiday for those S&Ls until the Legislature passed a measure allowing them to reopen for limited business pending their receipt of federal deposit insurance.

Most of the 69 S&Ls have reopened under legislation allowing withdrawals of $750 per month per depositor, and 23 have been authorized to conduct full-scale business.

While some institutions have reported heavier-than-normal transactions, the increased demand has been attributed to customers' needs for cash — not panic about the safety of their deposits.

McAlister declined to comment on talks in which state officials are trying to help locate a buyer for Home State except to say "the negotiations are critical at this time."

Lisa Neidich, one of the locked-out Home State depositors, said she and a half-dozen others have formed committees planning letter-writing and petition campaigns to pressure Celeste and other state officials to get it quickly sold and reopened.

"I got a call the other day from a woman who said she's got to pay funeral expenses," said Ms. Neidich, an unemployed nurse. "It's not bad enough to bury one of your loved ones — you don't have money to pay your funeral expenses."

Meanwhile, a spokesman for Miami, Fla., lawyer Stephen Arky said Arky denies allegations contained in a $432 million lawsuit filed Monday in Cincinnati against him, Home State owner Marvin L. Warner and others connected with the thrift.

The lawsuit, filed by lawyers representing the state Commerce Department for state-appointed Home State conservator Arlo Smith, alleges that Warner, former Home State chairman Burton M. Bongard and Arky each profited from secret financial transactions with ESM.

It also alleges that Warner and Home State's officers and directors failed to take steps to prevent its collapse.

"The statements are totally false. Moreover, we believe the lawyers that made them knew they were false," a partner in Arky's law firm, Eugene Stearns, said Tuesday.

Robert Trafford said that he and the other lawyers who filed the suit "stand behind our allegations."

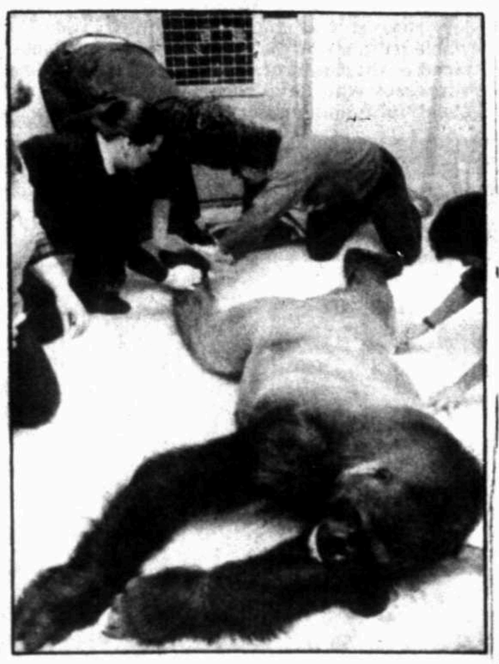

Home State's former president, David Schiebel, who also is a defendant in the suit, said Tuesday that "a gut feeling that I wasn't being given the proper answers" led him to help uncover a "gigantic fraud" by ESM.

"There were signals that disturbed me in February," Schiebel told Dayton Newspapers Inc. "Prior to mid-February, I had no knowledge that anything was wrong. We could have hid it for many months more. We didn't."

Schiebel said he didn't personally have money invested in ESM, but his family's savings were in Home State. Like other Home State depositors, he said he is in the dark about what will happen to that investment.

Warner, the U.S. ambassador to Switzerland during the Carter administration, has said he did nothing wrong.

Telephone messages seeking comment were left at Bongard's New York City home, but he did not immediately return the calls.

Flag lady wears fur

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The state Department of Transportation says it made a mistake when it told Santina DeSantis to leave her fur coat at home when on the job as a construction site flaglady.

"As far as the department is concerned, it's OK," DOT spokesman Paul A. Kelly said Tuesday. Her high-heels, however, are unsafe and she won't be permitted to wear them while working, Kelly said.

Gordon Cerow of the DOT's Public Works Division told the 42-year-old North Providence woman that her knee-length muskrat coat and high-heels distracted motorists.

Anthony Ciacciarelli, the divison's chief of construction, agreed with Cerow. But Kelly said William Carcieri Jr., the divison's deputy director, Tuesday overruled the two.

"Carcieri says the coat does not violate the rules," Kelly said.

Kyle's lawyer attacks theories of prosecution

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Superior Court jury was asked "not to follow the rabbit trail put out by the prosecution" and to find Henry Harrison "Ricky" Kyle Jr. innocent of killing his multimillionaire father.

Delivering a blistering attack on witnesses, defense attorney Michael P. Gibson ended his defense arguments Tuesday by ridiculing prosecution theories about the July, 1983, shooting death of Henry Harrison Kyle. He repeatedly claimed that prosecutors had failed to prove that Ricky Kyle planned and carried out his father's murder.

Gibson told the jury that Ricky Kyle shot his father in self-defense after the elder Kyle turned and fired in his son's direction while they were searching for prowlers in Henry Kyle's Bel-Air mansion. Ricky Kyle, his attorney said, interpreted that as a "death attack."

"The only thing this young man could think was, 'My God, my father's trying to kill me!'" Gibson said.

Prosecutors allege that Ricky Kyle awakened his father before dawn July 22, 1983, and told him he heard intruders. After the search proved unsuccessful, Henry Kyle let down his guard and was preparing to return to his bedroom when Ricky Kyle shot him in the heart at point-blank range, prosecutors charge. The prosecution contends Ricky Kyle killed his father to gain part of his father's vast estate.

Gibson reminded jurors that the alleged confessions occurred while Ricky Kyle and the three witnesses were smoking free-based cocaine, and he called the prosecution witnesses "liars" and "drug addicts."

One witness, Kyle's half-sister Jackie Phillips, saw her share of the estate jump from $10,000 to $1 million after Ricky Kyle was charged with murder, Gibson said. Originally, Henry Kyle's will split the estate between Ricky and his brother, Scott Kyle.

NATION IN BRIEF

Study: Most states don't require child care training

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Only 10 states require day-care center directors to have had course work in child development, and only eight require people caring for infants and toddlers to have training in child care, a study says.

"The thought of placing a newborn infant in the care of a novice is shocking," Edward F. Zigler, director of Yale University's Bush Center in Child Development and Social Policy, said in a report that examined state standards for the group care of infants and toddlers.

The report cited high ratios of infants to adults, minimal qualifications for staff and little if any training for workers as detrimental to the development of youngsters.

Man files suit against FBI

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — A 29-year-old man who says he was drummed out of the FBI for being able to do only 24 push-ups instead of the required 25 was a victim of "illegal, arbitrary and capricious" action, his lawsuit says.

Curtis Bruce Fairburn Jr. said in a suit filed in U.S. District Court on Monday that an FBI counselor had told him that because he was one push-up short he would be fired if he did not resign.

Attorneys Dennis Horn and Shirley Payne said Fairburn, now a criminal investigator in Pike County, had met all other requirements for employment with the FBI.

Arrest made in murder

Armstrong Sr.

CHICAGO (AP) — A man ordered to stay away from the daughter of a newspaper publisher has been charged with murder in the fatal shooting of her father.

Roscoe Evans, 22, used a .22-caliber rifle to slay Charles Armstrong Sr., 62, in the offices of Chicago Metro News, a weekly, Monday and wound his son, Charles Armstrong Jr., 23, who was not seriously hurt, police said Tuesday.

Evans, also charged with attempted murder, was hospitalized after he swallowed a lye-based drain cleaner in an apparent suicide attempt after the shooting, police said.

Clean bandit caught

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — A man known as the Wash 'n' Wear Bandit was clean but he wasn't neat, and that proved to be his downfall, police said.

The unusual burglar had a habit of showering and changing into fresh clothes before leaving the scene of his crime, but he left the dirty clothes behind.

At one of the homes, he apparently forgot to check the pockets of his dirty pants, where investigators found a rent receipt with his name and address, said Fort Lauderdale police officer William Cutler.

David Smith, 18, confessed to nine break-ins when police confronted him with the evidence Tuesday, Cutler said. "He said he got dirty knocking over plants and stuff," Cutler said. "He said he didn't actually take showers in the homes, he just cleaned up a little."

Firefighters embarrassed

FRANKLIN, N.H. (AP) — Firefighters saw red — embarrassment — when a controlled practice fire at the Veteran's Memorial got out of hand.

Firefighters from neighboring Tilton and Sanbornton had to be called in to help extinguish the brush fire, which burned out of control about 30 minutes Tuesday.

"We intended to burn about a half-acre around the base of the monument but it got away from us," said Fire Chief Norman Beauchemin.

Union to OK contract

NEW YORK (AP) — Union members indicated that they would approve a tentative contract with Pan American World Airways, ending a 26-day strike, an official said as employees voted in five cities.

About 2,000 Transport Workers Union members began voting Tuesday at Local 504 headquarters, said John Kerrigan, director of TWU's airline division. Others voted in Los Angeles, Miami, Honolulu and San Francisco, he said.

Pan American World Airways has threatened to dismiss thousands of the 5,800 striking ground workers if they reject a tentative contract settlement reached Saturday. Kerrigan said results would be known tonight.

Salvadoran sentenced

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — A judge ordered a Salvadoran woman to stay away from the Mexican-U.S. border as a condition of two years' probation ordered after she pleaded guilty to helping refugees enter the United States illegally.

Cecelia del Carmen Juarez de Emery, who is married to a U.S. citizen, told U.S. Magistrate Morton Sitver Tuesday at sentencing that she took part in the so-called sanctuary movement becaugate.

Attorneys want dismissal

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Federal attorneys have asked a judge to dismiss a lawsuit filed by a Las Vegas, N.M., woman on behalf of all living beings, including her dog Nanki-Poo.

Frances Tyson, 72, sued President Reagan, Vice President Bush and several Cabinet members in January, calling for a halt to the buildup of nuclear weapons.

Nanki-poo's paw print was affixed to the lawsuit.

The government said in its response to the lawsuit that Ms. Tyson showed only a potential injury to herself and others.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Ronald Ross said the lawsuit is moot because the courts have no jurisdiction over matters of U.S. security.

Bird causes power outage

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A utility pole damaged by woodpeckers crashed to the ground, leaving an estimated 170,000 Florida Power Corp. customers without electricity for up to 90 minutes, company spokesmen said.

Brock Lucas of Florida Power Corp. said the failure occurred at about 4:30 a.m. Tuesday and power was restored to customers in Pinellas and Pasco counties by 6 a.m.

"Woodpecker damage is unusual but not unheard of," said Larry Shriner of Tampa Electric Co., which owns the pole.

Salvager hopes to raise British ship

NEW YORK (AP) — A Massachusetts salvage expert says he will locate and raise a sunken British ship and its 18th century treasure of "up to $500 million" in gold and silver from the swirling waters of the East River off the Bronx.

"This is not just for the treasure," said Barry Clifford, president of the Martha's Vineyard-based Maritime Underwater Surveys Inc. "It's of incredible historic value. It's an educational project for the city."

The ship, named the Hussar, was on its way to Newport, R.I., in 1780 with a payroll for British soldiers during the Revolutionary War when it struck a reef in the East River and went down. Only its anchor was recovered.

But Clifford, who estimated the value of the ship's cargo at "up to $500 million," said he was confident he could locate and raise the ship when he begins his efforts next month. The Hussar is believed to be sitting somewhere between what is now East 138th Street and East 149th Street in the Bronx.

Clifford, 38, believes its hull is still intact and plans to bring in sophisticated underwater equipment to create "a computerized picture of the whole area." If successful, underwater blowers would be brought in to clear the layers of silt two centuries have deposited on the ship and it would be raised.

The state would receive a portion of any money he recovers, Clifford said; the city would receive the hull for its South Street Seaport Museum.

The veteran salvager said he has already received a permit from the state Education Department, which supervises archeological projects.

Clifford is hoping the search is as successful as his last effort — a five-year search off the coast of Wellfleet, Mass., which produced the pirate galleon Whidah and a $4 million treasure of gold and silver. The Whidah sank in 1717.

Team to watch

The National Junior College Athletic Association championship in Hutchinson, Kan., last week brought the end to a dream for this year's Midland College Chaparral basketball team. The Chaps finished fourth in the tournament, which was a disappointment for all the players, fans and coaches.

But to write-off the season as a loss simply because the team didn't bring home the national title would be grossly incorrect. It wasn't. Through the prestigious NJCAA tournament, the Chaps posted a season record of 31 heart-stopping wins and only 6 losses. It was a season of thrills and excitement, and the kind that insures Chap Center will be packed with boisterous, cheering MC fans next season.

Is that a loss? Not hardly because as any coach will confess — MC's Jerry Stone included — hometown attendance at games can make all the difference in the world. Attendance can carry over from one season to the next just as team experience does. And in that department, the Chaps promise a banner season next fall. A number of players will bring NJCAA experience back to Chap Center next season.

That experience is important in several regards. First, obviously, it's important because players are seasoned by the playoff experience. Secondly, it offers a significant psychological advantage to the team the next season. Third, it helps generate excitement about the team which, in turn, can result in additional on-court victories.

This year marked the Chaps' second trip to the NJCAA tournament, an accomplishment only very few teams can boast. Already the team is establishing itself as one likely to be in Hutchinson, Kan., any particular March. That means the Chaps are a team to watch.

This season a disappointment? Hardly.

More featherbedding

The caboose has outlived its day. It's about as useful as a buggy whip.

The caboose is the railroad car pulled at the end of freight trains. It serves as an observation post and sleeping quarters for the brakemen and conductor. Now all the functions of a caboose can be done cheaper by electronic equipment, and the whole crew can ride up front in the engine.

Three years ago, railroad unions and management agreed to phase out the caboose on all local freights and about 25 percent of the cross-country hauls. The replacement is a 35-pound electronic box hooked to the last freight car. It costs $4,000, compared to $80,000 for a typical caboose, which weighs 25 tons and eats up fuel and maintenance money.

Now the United Transportation Union is having second thoughts. Looking down the line, the union can see that electronics might be cutting out a lot of rail jobs. It is lobbying state legislatures for laws to make it mandatory to pull cabooses.

So far four states have enacted such laws and nine others are considering them. That foolishness.

The whole matter smacks of more featherbedding on the part of the rail unions, which insist on holding onto jobs long obsolete.

Networks on block

Your program fare may not show it, but sweeping changes are coming to network television land. Big corporate mergers, so often a topic of the nightly news, are in the works for communications conglomerates.

Within the last few days, executives from television-giant ABC announced the sale, pending FCC approval, of their network to the smaller Capital Cities Communications, Inc. (owners of the Kansas City Star newspaper and several TV stations) for $3.5 billion.

Because ABC's deal is, to quote ABC sports producer Roone Arledge, "like the canary eating the cat," the network's executives are suspected of a panic sale to avoid a hostile takeover. But Leonard Goldenson, the 79-year-old chairman, chief executive and founder of ABC, claims he sought Capital Cities Chairman Thomas S. Murphy, 59, as a successor. Industry analysts so far agree.

Meanwhile, CBS no longer is laughing off possible takeover bids by Atlanta cable TV network broadcaster Ted Turner or conservative North Carolina Sen. Jesse Helms. The network has sued Mr. Turner to force him into the open. Mr. Turner concedes that he and Sen. Helms have talked about CBS with each other.

Such takeovers never have happened before to a major American television network. So any viewer may be foregiven for his or her uneasiness.

But regardless of the machinations of Ted Turner and Jesse Helms, all three networks are in transition because of the growing popularity of the cable-television networks and the VCR industry.

As the operators of a struggling, yet often praised, cable news network, Mr. Turner never was considered a "conservative threat." Now that there is the possibility of his acquiring a more profitable medium, false alarms have been sounded, it seems to us.

TV networks have certain public responsibilities to enlighten, entertain and be fair in return for their profitable use of public airwaves. But they remain businesses. If audiences don't like the product, they will switch the dial. It's hard to imagine Ted Turner selling his political views before he sells the soap.

EPA fireship favoritism charged

WASHINGTON — Poisonous chemical wastes are piling up by the ton every day in the United States, and burning the toxic stuff at sea in giant incinerator ships is thought by many experts to be the best solution to the growing problem.

Jack Anderson

But officials of the Maritime Administration complain that the Environmental Protection Agency has deliberately discouraged competition in the potentially lucrative incineration industry by favoring one company over all others.

Maritime's immediate concern is a $55 million loan guarantee it gave to a rival firm, which will need EPA approval to operate its ships — and to repay the loan.

In its zeal to protect the interests of its anointed company — and others that might want to enter the field — Maritime has wrapped itself in the flag. EPA's chosen firm, Chemical Waste Management, uses foreign-registry incineration ships for its EPA-approved waste burning research in the Gulf of Mexico.

"The terms of the proposed special permit to Chemical Waste Management, Inc." for the Gulf of Mexico incineration "were very prejudicial to one company controling ocean-incineration technology in the United States with foreign flag ships," states a Maritime memo obtained by my associates Corky Johnson and Donald Goldberg.

The company that Maritime backs, At Sea Mnc., is building two incinerator ships in this country, and will operate them under the U.S. flag.

Maritime officials also savaged EPA for allegedly writing its draft incineration guidelines with special focus on the chemical PCB — of which Chemical Waste Management has a huge stockpile in an Alabama waste dump.

The EPA's "subject strategy," a Maritime memo charged, "proposes an extensively time-consuming, redundent, burdensome, inefficient and expensive research maze into which only the most well-heeled ocean incineration firm with particular interest in burning PCBs would dare venture."

The memo left little doubt that Chemical Waste Management was the well-heeled firm it had in mind.

The suspicious Maritime officials also claimed that EPA set out to sabotage the inter-agency board that favored a speeded-up program to build U.S. incinerator ships. And at least one EPA scientist supported this view.

Noting that EPA replaced one consulting firm that had been working on regulations with another that was "not familiar with the incineration-at-sea process," the EPA official wrote: "It appears to have been another effort to discredit the board."

The official added that EPA researchers familiar with the program had been taken off the task force. This prompted an outraged response from Maritime, saying: "It is ludicrous that the EPA work group is not utilizing the combined experience and talents of (these representatives)."

Footnote: An EPA spokesman said Maritime officials were no louder than "anyone else" in their expressions of concern over EPA permits issued to Chemical Waste Management.

WHO TRIED FOR ARGENTINA?: A couple of minor mysteries in the British-Argentine war over the Falkland Islands three years ago were cleared up the other day when my associate Jon Lee Anderson spoke with some Argentine air force pilots in Bolivia.

They told him which country was secretly supplying planes and missiles to Argentina during the war, and how the Argentines disguised their enormous aircraft losses, which one of the fliers said may have been as high as 50 percent.

Peru was the secret source of the French Exocet missiles that proved to be Argentina's most effective weapon, destroying a British warship with heavy loss of life.

Peruvian pilots flew replacement Mirages and other jet fighters across Bolivia to the Argentine border town of San Salvador de Jujuy, high in the Andes. There the aircraft were turned over to Argentine crews.

To hide Argentina's staggering aircraft losses, the replacement planes were painted exactly like the ones that had been shot down, even to the identical numbers and other markings. This bizarre ruse must have puzzled British fighter pilots who encountered what looked like the same planes they had shot down a few days before.

ROCKET RACE: Although Brazil and Argentina have been cooperating in recent years on nuclear development, my intelligence sources aren't sure the sweet reasonableness will last. With that possibility always present, they're worried about Brazil's successful test last fall of its Sonda IV rocket.

The Brazilians say they'll launch their first satellite by the end of this decade. They plan to use satellites for meteorology, communications and surveys of Brazil's enormous land resources. But a rocket that launches satellites can easily be converted into a nuclear delivery system. And across the border, Argentina is also building its own rocket — for satellites, of course.

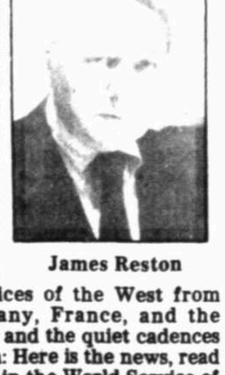

Intelligence sources fear that when the two Latin American giants possess the know-how to make and deliver nuclear bombs, the world will be that much closer to a conflagration.

JAMES RESTON

Other 'star war' needs funds

MARRAKESH, Morocco — The Voice of America is heard every morning in Morocco as clearly and regularly as the crowing of the roosters at sunrise. "This is the news from Washington," it says, as if the Atlas Mountains outside your window were as close as the Blue Ridge of Virginia.

James Reston

With a careful touch on the radio dial, you hear the conflicting babble of the world: the Moscow radio on more channels than anybody else, loud and accusative; the less frequent voices of the West from West Germany, France, and the Netherlands; and the quiet cadences from London: Here is the news, read by so and so, in the World Service of the BBC.

• These government shortwave stations are indeed a "world service," neglected because they are not heard in their own countries, but they are bringing the news here to Africa as never before, and reminding at least a remnant of leaders and listeners of what's going on beyond their borders.

Charles Z. Wick, director of the U.S. Information Agency, was here the other day to note the beginning of a new Voice of America shortwave relay station in Morocco. Others are in the process of negotiation in Israel, and under construction in Sri Lanka and Thailand. Agreements have been reached for new medium-wave transmitters in Costa Rica and Belize to extend the reach of the VOA into Central America.

For while the Voice of America's signal comes clear into Morocco, it is weak in many parts of the Middle East and the eastern provinces of the Soviet Union, where shortwave radio is the main source of information.

What is going on now is not only an argument about "Star Wars" but a different star war, not about missiles but about news and ideas, carried by radio into the remotest valleys of the world.

The balance of radio power between the United States and the Soviet Union is much more favorable to Moscow than the balance of military power. But the Voice of America and its partners, Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty, still do fairly well.

Broadcasting in 42 languages, they estimate that they reach 110 million listeners, many of whom never hear the news in any other way.

But in this other star war, as in the military war, technology changes the balance, and money makes a difference. For example:

— More than 80 percent of the VOA's 108 transmitters are 15 years old, and more than 35 percent of them are 30 years old.

— The VOA broadcasts 989 hours a week in 42 languages, while the Moscow radio broadcasts 2,175 hours a week in 81 languages.

— Among the other nations in this other star war game, the United States ranks fifth in hours of broadcasting here in Africa, fifth in hours to Latin America and the Caribbean, and sixth in hours to Eastern Europe and East Asia.

This need not be a worrying thing, for if you listen to the broadcasts in Morocco from the Moscow radio and also from the VOA, the BBC, and from West Germany, France, and the Netherlands, the contrast between Moscow's vicious propaganda and the West's objective reporting of the news — even news the Western countries don't like — is startling.

Nevertheless, there are many areas of Africa, Asia, and even Latin America where the reach of the Moscow radio is longer than the reach of the VOA or the BBC. Hence Wick's travels around the world trying to negotiate new shortwave facilities; in addition, he will be spending the next few months appealing to Congress for money to extend his reach.

His main problem is that the modernization of the VOA cannot be done effectively on a yearly basis but requires at least a five-year building program, which he estimates at a cost of $1.3 to $1.6 billion.

On Capitol Hill, where lawmakers are trying to cut the federal budget deficit and are even rejecting President Reagan's military budget, getting appropriations for this other propaganda star war won't be easy. But fortunately it's the main war we have these days, and deserves more attention from Congress than it's getting.

The Senate has approved the president's MX missile program by a 55-45 vote at a cost of $1.5 billion, which is about the suggested cost of the VOA over the next five years.

Maybe this will have a more powerful influence on the Russians than five years of effective broadcasting by the Voice of America. But in Morocco and in Geneva, the power of the word and the daily sound of America's voice may be more important.

ART BUCHWALD

Leveraged buyouts no fairy tale!

Once upon a time there was a sweet thing called Red Riding Hood, who owned Little Red Riding Hood Inc., a small company that made children's dresses. One day she was walking down Wall Street when she met a great big wolf (Amalgamated Wolf).

Art Buchwald

"Where are you going, Red Riding Hood?" the wolf asked.

"To Grandmother Pizza's office with this new issue of stock which I hope will make her well."

The wolf thought to himself, "What a tasty morsel. I could eat Grandmother Pizza for breakfast and Red Riding Hood Inc. for lunch."

The wolf then said, "Where are your Grandmother's offices?"

And Red Riding Hood replied, "In the World Trade Center building."

The wolf then said, "Would you like to have a hot pretzel from the stand over there?"

"Why not? They are not expecting me at Grandmother's board meeting for a half-hour."

Whilst Red Riding Hood was eating her pretzel and drinking her soda the wolf sped off to the World Trade Center. He dashed into Grandmother Pizza's office and ate poor Grandmother up.

Then he pulled the curtains and sat in her leather chair.

Red Riding Hood was ushered in by the secretary.

"Good morning, Grandmother."

The wolf did not reply.

"Oh Grandmother, what big ears you have."

"The better to hear all the merger rumors on the street," the wolf replied.

"Oh, Grandmother, what big eyes you have."

"The better to read everyone's latest financial report."

"What big hands you've got."

"The better to grab all your assets with, my dear."

"Grandmother, what big teeth you have."

"The better to eat you with!" And with that the wolf sprang out of his chair and made a lunge for Red Riding Hood, who easily sidestepped him and knocked him to the floor.

"What are you doing?" the stunned wolf asked.

Red Riding Hood sat on the wolf's stomach and said, "I'm taking you over."

"You can't take me over," the wolf cried. "I'm five times bigger than you are."

"Size means nothing," Red Riding Hood said. "The only thing that counts is how much money I can raise to get control."

"Where could you find enough dough to buy a great big wolf?"

"I'll make a leveraged buyout. I'll cut off your head and sell it to a museum, your coat to a furrier and your teeth to a key chain company. It's all here in the prospectus."

"The SEC will never let you do it."

"They haven't stopped anyone from swallowing anybody else up yet," Red Riding Hood retorted.

"Wait," the wolf said. "Why can't we make this a friendly takeover? Give me a golden parachute and I'll never try to eat you again."

"Sorry, but it's too late," and with that Red Riding Hood cut open the wolf's stomach and out popped her grandmother, who had a grin on her face.

The grandmother said, "It worked. I knew we could get control once he got fat and cocky."

Red Riding Hood said, "Where do you get that 'we' stuff, Grandma? I'm spinning you off to Standard Oil of New Jersey."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, March 27, the 86th day of 1985. There are 279 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On March 27, 1977, the worst disaster in aviation history occurred when a KLM Boeing 747 crashed into a Pan Am 747 on a runway on the Canary Island of Tenerife. The resulting explosion and fire killed at least 580 people.

On this date:

In 1512, Spanish explorer Juan Ponce de Leon sighted Florida.

In 1625, Charles I, King of England, Scotland and Ireland, ascended to the throne upon the death of James I.

In 1794, President George Washington and Congress authorized creation of the U.S. Navy.

In 1836, the first Mormon temple was dedicated in Kirtland, Ohio.

In 1860, M.L. Byrn of New York City patented a corkscrew.

In 1884, the first long-distance telephone call was made, between Boston and New York.

In 1917, the Seattle Metropolitans became the first U.S. team to win the Stanley Cup, defeating the Montreal Canadiens.

Judge bars woman from having abortion

STATE

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Keith Hayes may be estranged from his wife of only a few months, but he still wants a say in whether she has an abortion.

The San Antonio man has won the first round in his battle. He convinced State District Judge James Onion to impose a temporary restraining order barring Kim Kyla Hayes from getting an abortion until a hearing can be held.

The second round is Wednesday when that hearing is scheduled in Onion's courtroom.

The case promises to be a classic confrontation between pro- and anti-abortionists, whose representatives have promised to show up. But the case also should provide a legal forum on the issue of a father's rights on abortion, attorneys say.

"A father — especially during the stage of pregnancy this lady is in — should have some say-so in whether his child is aborted," said Dave Rogers, Hayes' attorney. "Once the child is dead, the issue is dead with it."

But Gerry Goldstein, a Texas Civil Liberties Union attorney representing Mrs. Hayes, said the courts already have addressed the issue.

"The Supreme Court on more than one occasion has said since it is the wife that must bear the burden of the pregnancy, the final decision should be with the wife," he said.

In this case, the final decision will rest with Onion, who said several constitutional issues likely will be aired during the hearing.

"This is something new," he said last week after issuing the temporary restraining order. "I've never seen or heard of this kind of thing happening before."

Onion said he could issue a temporary injunction halting an abortion indefinitely. Or he could refuse to do so, clearing the way for Mrs. Hayes to terminate the pregnancy.

Hayes and his estranged wife, according to a petition filed last week, married Oct. 16, 1984. The document claims the woman became pregnant shortly thereafter.

The couple separated Jan. 28 and the woman told her husband of her plans to abort the pregnancy, the petition says.

"What Mr. Hayes is saying is he should be considered also. She didn't make that baby by herself," Rogers said.

In the landmark 1973 case in which the Supreme Court ruled abortions are legal, the high court "was careful not to weigh the father's rights. We're asking someone to do that," Rogers said.

But Goldstein said the Supreme Court, a few years after the abortion ruling, struck down a state law requiring a husband's consent before an abortion could be performed.

"The ACLU is very concerned about the constitutional issues that arise when a husband seeks to interfere with a woman's right to decide to terminate her pregnancy," he said.

Committee approves TDC funding increase

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Corrections would get $220 million more than previously recommended for 1986-87 spending if a Senate Finance Committee proposal is approved.

Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, stressed the increase was needed to help the state reach a settlement in a 12-year-old law suit filed by unhappy convicts.

"What it does is allow us to go to the bargaining table and try to resolve this case so that we can regain control over our own prisons," Farabee said after his proposal was approved Tuesday.

Another $100 million was authorized for long-range planning and construction.

The action approved appropriations totaling $936.7 million in 1986-87 for TDC in the Senate spending bill, which will be debated about May 1.

Similar efforts to increase TDC appropriations are pending in the House.

The TDC board had requested a two-year budget of $1.09 billion.

The board met in executive session Monday and approved a proposed settlement of the federal court suit brought by a group of prisoners who claimed there was overcrowding and mistreatment of prisoners in the 27 state prison units. Following an adverse decision against the state, the prison system has been under supervision of a special master appointed by federal courts.

Farabee said in presenting his proposal that most of the issues in the case have been resolved "and much of my proposal is aimed at resolving the others."

Farabee's proposal was chosen by the committee instead of a plan presented by the Legislative Budget Board staff, which would have added $96 million to its initial budget recommendation.

"Basically, this program adds $120 million additional dollars in general revenue of which $20 million is for commencement of a new prison during the next biennium," Farabee said.

"Another $100 million is to address the problems that exist in the TDC and some are related to the court case," he said.

Farabee said still another $100 million was authorized over the next four to six years by allowing the TDC to sell prison-owned land and to use the money for "for long-range construction and rehabilitation work."

Farabee's plan would provide $2 million immediately to buy more clothes, blankets and towels for prisoners. There have been recent reports of some prisoners who had to wait naked in shower rooms while their only clothes were washed.

Farabee said his proposal also would provide $4 million more to improve kitchen facilities at prison units.

"I think this food services item is important in this suit," he said.

An additional $3.7 million would be provided for psychiatric services, as demanded in federal court orders.

Legislature considers beverage deposit bill

AUSTIN (AP) — Legislation that would outlaw pull tabs and require a 5-cent deposit on all beverage cans and bottles would alleviate some of the state's litter problem, several legislators say.

Industry officials, however, told the House Liquor Regulation Committee on Tuesday such a law wouldn't reduce littering but would only create lost jobs.

Reps. Ralph Wallace, D-Houston, Lena Guerrero, D-Austin, and Terral Smith, R-Austin, all are pushing bills concerning beverage can deposits and pull tabs. All three bills were sent to subcommittee.

"We don't want Texas to be the dumping grounds for pull tab cans," Wallace said. He said 5 million pounds of aluminium cans were gathered in Texas last year.

Smith said his bill would make it illegal for cans under one gallon to have pull tabs. He said pull tabs are polluting Texas beaches and lakes and have killed wildlife.

He said bottles once all were returnable, but no longer.

"Stores managed them before and they can manage them now," Smith told the committee. "If you put the deposit on there, it'll make people quit throwing out paper and other things."

Toby Summers, vice president and general manager of the Victoria Coca-Cola Bottling Co., said the proposed legislation is perceived to bring back the era of the refillable bottles but won't. He said the law will simply force bottlers to set up an inefficient and expensive reverse distribution system.

"What this does is to turn the bottlers, the beer distributors and the retail stores into garbage collectors," Summers said. "In Texas alone, the additional cost to the bottler system would be $75 million per year."

Smith said the state spent $20 million on picking up litter in 1984 and only $7 million on narcotics investigations.

Ms. Guerrero said her proposed legislation, which has been adopted in nine other states, would serve as an incentive to stop littering.

Summers said Ms. Guerrero's bill is an inefficient way to address the state's litter problem.

"The experiences in the nine states which have such a law demonstrate conclusively that the economic and social costs of the so-called bottle bill far outweight any benefits," Summers said.

County forecast

Midland, Ector, Crane, Upton, Reagan, Glasscock, Andrews, Gaines, Howard, Martin, Borden and Dawson: Tonight...mostly fair and a little cooler..with lows near 50. Wind southwest 10 to 15 mph. Thursday...partly cloudy with highs near 80 and west wind 15 to 25 mph with lake wind advisories.

Clear skies anticipated for Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

Skies are expected to clear tonight, making way for more springtime weather as forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport are calling for fair skies with a low near 50 tonight. Skies should become partly cloudy Thursday with a high near 80. Winds will be from the southwest tonight at 10 to 15 mph shifting to the west Thursday at less than 25 mph and gusty.

Tuesday's high of 79 was 11 degrees below the record set in 1956. This morning's low was 41 degrees above the 1931 record of 14.

STATE

Heavy thunderstorms rumbled across North Texas late Tuesday, creating high winds that uprooted trees and damaged buildings in Dallas.

The National Weather service issued a tornado warning in Dallas County late Tuesday but there were no immediate reports of injuries.

There were police reports of funnel clouds sighted, including one near White Rock Lake.

But a spokesman for the weather service said, "There definitely were no tornadoes, just high winds."

Trained spotters on the scene reported that the sky was composed of "low-hanging clouds, with no rotation," said the spokesman, who asked not to be identified by name.

All debris was dispersed in a straight line to the east, he said, noting that a tornado spreads damage in all directions.

The weather service issued severe thunderstorm warnings in Northeast Texas until 3 a.m. as the storm system moved east.

Storm sirens blared in the northern Dallas suburb of Richardson and 12 miles away south of downtown between 10:30 p.m. and 11:30 p.m. as authorities mobilized for possible disaster.

The winds caused an undetermined amount of damage and there were reports of roofs blown off houses, windows smashed and fallen trees and signs across Northeast Dallas.

NATION

Snow piled up more than two feet deep and pushed through the far West while high winds today churned desert sand and battered coastlines as thunderstorms and rain dampened much of the nation.

Midland Lee's Keith McDonald stretches an extra base out of Tuey Rankin's single in the fifth inning, diving into third base past Abilene High David Gonzales Tuesday at Lee Field.

Cougars lash Bulldogs, 16-2

From Staff Reports

The Midland High Bulldogs had problems with baseball's three basics Tuesday: No hitting, no pitching, no fielding. The result wasn't surprising: No Contest.

Abilene Cooper took advantage of the Bulldog problems, posting a 16-2 District 4-5A victory to remain in sole possession of second place at 4-1, 14-1 overall. Midland Lee is in first place at 5-0.

Elsewhere, San Angelo used a one-hit shutout to gain a 1-0 victory over Odessa Permian. Big Spring was holding a 10-6 lead in the bottom of the eighth inning when the game was called because of darkness.

FOR THE Bulldogs, pitchers Michael Gonzalez and Mike Stanton were shelled for the 16 runs on 13 hits and nine walks. The Cougars didn't even need the help from Midland High's defense as 13 of the runs were earned despite five errors.

Gonzalez, 4-4, suffered the loss while Cooper pitcher Terry Suggs went four one-hit innings while Mike McKellop got the win with three innings of relief duty, allowing both Bulldog runs (unearned). The two pitchers allowed only six hits.

Cooper scored enough runs in the second inning (four) to claim the victory, but added three more in the third, five in the fourth, three in the fifth and one in the sixth.

Midland High's runs were came in the top of the sixth inning. Designated hitter Mark Torres led the way with a 2-for-3 performance.

Lee beats Abilene, curfew in ninth, 7-6

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Umpires Steve Marcum and Puddy Zachery had already decided that the ninth inning would be the final one Tuesday at Midland Lee Field. Darkness was fast approaching and there wasn't enough time left to go 10.

"If we hadn't scored, the game would have gone down as a tie, a half win and half loss for both teams," said Rebel coach Ernie Johnson. "We wouldn't have finished it unless the outcome would effect first or second place in the standings."

Well, thanks to crucial errors by Abilene High second baseman Mack Dennis and shortstop Victor Rodriquez, and singles by Rebels Cary Brown and Paul Colwell, Lee has the victory, 7-6. The Rebels also retained undisputed control of 4-5A's first place at 5-0.

With one out in the bottom of the ninth, Rebel left fielder Mike Small hit a shot that Dennis couldn't handle and made it safely to first base. Brown followed with an infield single, sending Small to second and to third when Rodriquez' throw went to the fence behind first.

With the winning run standing on third, the AHS outfielders moved in close for a play at the plate. Colwell beat the strategy with a hard-hit shot to deep left. Nobody bothered to chase it. Small jogged home easily with the winning run, his arms above his head in celebration.

"I had a good chance to bring Mike home and then he (AHS reliever Mike Keith) threw me a fastball. We hung in their and competed with them and it paid off."

COMING UP with the crucial hit was common-place for the Rebels against Eagle pitching. Trailing most of the way, Lee outscored AHS 4-1 in the sixth and seventh to knot the score at six.

Brown, who was 4-for-5 , led off the sixth inning rally with a one-out single up the middle and stole second. One out later, Donny Rivas brought Brown home with a single to right. Chad Jordan, pinch running, swiped second and went to third on Keith McDonald's single to right. Jordan eventually scored on a throwing error by Eagle first baseman Mickey Russell.

Trailing 6-4 after surrendering a run in the seventh, Lee found a surplus of power hitting. Greg Shaw led off with a double to right-center and was replaced by pinch runner

Tulane bribery

Wave center says he's innocent

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Tulane University's all-star center John "Hot Rod" Williams, one of two students arrested in an alleged point-shaving scheme involving the Green Wave basketball team, says he is innocent of any wrongdoing.

"I have nothing to do with this," the All-Metro Conference selection said Tuesday as he arrived at the Orleans Parish District Attorney's office."I have too much at stake," the 6-foot-10 senior said.

The 23-year-old Williams and 21-year-old Gray Kranz were arrested Tuesday and accused of involvement in point shaving in at least two games — against Final Four participant Memphis State and Southern Mississippi. Warrants were issued for two other Tulane basketball players, authorities said.

Orleans Parish District Attorney Harry Connick said at a surprise news conference that Williams, a senior from Sorrento, La., and Kranz, of New York, as well as 6-7 sophomore swingman David Dominique, 19, of New Iberia, La., and 6-0 senior guard Bobby Thompson, 21, of New Orleans, will be booked for violations of Louisiana sports bribery laws. Dominique and Thompson were still at large late Tuesday, authorities said.

Kranz also will be booked on multiple violations of controlled dangerous substance laws relative to possession of cocaine and distribution of the drug, Connick said. Authorities have not said what role Kranz, a non-player, had in the alleged scheme.

When rumors of point-shaving surfaced on the Tulane campus a month ago, basketball coach Ned Fowler said he and Athletic Director Hindman Wall began their own in-house investigation. "I didn't feel there was any substance to the rumors at the time," Fowler said when reached at his home late Tuesday.

"I'm very upset — flabbergasted. This is the last thing I ever thought would happen to any of my players or my team," Fowler said. ". . . I'm very confused. I want to see what evidence they have."

Williams, who averaged 18 points and 7.9 rebounds per game this season for the Green Wave, has been a standout in the conference since he was named Freshman of the Year. Williams, who according to several National Basketball Association scouts, was considered to be a certain first-round draft choice, was the conference's Player of the Year in 1984.

Tulane finished the 1984-85 season a disappointing 15-13 and a 6-8 mark in the conference. The Green Wave was eliminated by Cincinnati in the first round of the conference tournament.

The games involved in the alleged scheme were against Southern Mississippi on Feb. 2 and Memphis State on Feb. 20, Connick said. Both games were played at Tulane.

When polls don't mean a thing

During the regular season, the weekly polls are pounced upon and devoured by attention-starved fans, eager for any scrap of notice.

A No. 14 ranking can bring squeals of ecstacy from the supporters of a basketball team that has been laboring in annonymity. You can imagine the reaction to a top 10 ranking.

Still, it's all hypothetical. Rankings are little more than the figament of some voters' hyper-active imagination. Most of the teams he votes upon he has never seen.

Strangely enough, at the National Junior College Athletic Association tournament in Hutchinson, Kan., where such matters are settled on the court, by the combatants and not some faraway correspondent, the lack of interest in No. 3, No. 4, No. 8 is almost sacrilegious.

At Hutchinson, if it isn't No. 1, it doesn't count.

Midland College came home ranked No. 4 in the nation, yet in the eyes of some, the expedition to nationals was a failure.

Give the Chaps a few days when things will assume a proper perspective, but don't try to tell them immediately after a tournament loss that it "really wasn't that bad a season."

Never mind that MC couldn't be found among the top 20 in the land going into the tournament.

NO MATTER how you finish Hutchinson is an experience to be savored, if for no other reason than the whole-hearted enthusiasm with which the town of 40,000 supports an event made up of a bunch of strangers. Hutchinson Community College hasn't qualified a team since 1975, but whereever you go—restaurants, stores—folks are talking basketball or listening to it on the radio.

Until a more sophisticated procedure for dispensing tournament tickets—season tickets are for 27 games—was adopted a couple of years back tent cities sprang up in the Sports Arena parking lot several days before tickets were to go on sale.

The Arena seats only 7,600 fans and most of those go to season ticket holders, fans who have been coming to the tournament for years. Rooting contingents for the competing teams are limited to the bleacher seats behind the baskets at each end of the court.

That's where most of the noise comes from. After their team has finished playing, the fans must vacate to make room for the rooters of the teams in the next game.

The home folks, the tournament regulars, sit back and watch, waiting for a sentimental favorite to emerge, such as the 1982 Spud Webb-led Chaparrals. They appalaud good play and boo poor sportsmanship, but until that crowd-favorite emerges, it's a sedate audience.

DESPITE THE community support, Hutchinson fears it may lose its annual tournament. Other places have arenas with larger seating capacities. Too, Hutchinson is a tough place to reach. Wichita, some 40 miles or so down the road, is the closest airport. Those in favor of shifting locale would like something with better access to transportation.

Perhaps they could hold it in Madison Square Garden or Chicago Stadium. Both are New York and Chicago are located on main transportation arteries. No one could complain about inconvenience in reaching such population centers. And they'd never have to worry about filling up the arena. New York and Chicago could handle the crowds. As a matter of fact, the blase natives probably wouldn't even know a tournament was going on. There would be plenty of room for everybody.

It would be a mistake to take the tournament away from grass-roots, midwest America, the heart of the wheat and alfalfa belt. Presumably that's what they put in those half-mile long grain elevators that circle the city.

BUT DON'T get the idea that because shop radios are blaring play-by-play of the current game and strangers are greeted with "How'd you're team come out today?" that that's all these folks talk about.

If you want to eve's drop a little, you can find out what really goes on in rural America.

The reaction was shock and indignation as a shop customer mentioned that one of the local women had left her husband, "and is living with some man in California. They aren't even married."

The shop proprietor was appropriately aghast. And later, casually mentioned, "I guess you heard my Ex is getting married again."

The customer inquired, "Is that ex No. 2, No. 3 or No. 4?"

Mattingly's bat bellows return

Associated Press

Exhibition Baseball

They used to say that New York Yankees Manager Yogi Berra could roll out of bed on Christmas morning and get a base hit. Don Mattingly appears to be another one of those players.

And even though Tuesday was a long way from Christmas, Mattingly must have felt as though Santa Claus had filled his stocking to overflowing.

The 1984 American League batting champion, who underwent arthroscopic surgery on his right knee Feb. 22, made his first appearance of the spring. He hit the second pitch he saw for a home run and doubled in his other at-bat as the Yankees edged the Montreal Expos 2-1.

The Yankees also got some good news from Joe Cowley, who had been hit hard all spring in relief. Cowley made his first start and checked the Expos on three hits and one run in five innings.

ATLANTA THIRD baseman Bob Horner also made his spring debut and grounded out as a pinch hitter. Meanwhile, Chris Chambliss had two hits and two runs batted in as the Braves beat the Baltimore Orioles 6-2.

Horner, who underwent surgery in December to repair his twice-broken right wrist, batted in a game for the first time in 10 months in the sixth inning. He grounded out to third base on the second pitch from Baltimore's Nate Snell and will make a few more pinch-hitting appearances before getting a start.

Fireballer Dwight Gooden, the National League 1984 Rookie of the Year, allowed just three hits and struck out nine in five innings as the Mets edged the Boston Red Sox 1-0 on Rafael Santana's RBI single in the second inning.Gooden, who struck out 276 batters last year, most ever by a rookie, fanned the first five batters he faced.

Tom Seaver pitched five strong innings and Harold Baines, Greg Walker and Carlton Fisk homered, leading the Chicago White Sox to an 8-3 victory over the Detroit Tigers.Seaver, who has been named Chicago's opening day pitcher, allowed three hits and one run and owns a 1.57 ERA in 23 innings this spring.

SORE-SHOULDERED Milt Wilcox made his spring debut for Detroit and came away pleased even though Baines and Walker tagged him for successive homers in the second inning. Wilcox, who underwent off-season shoulder surgery, threw 42 pitches in three innings, allowing four hits and two runs.

Art Howe's two-run single gave St. Louis a 4-3 lead in the sixth inning and the Cardinals went on to beat the Philadelphia Phillies 10-5.

Pedro Guerrero tripled and doubled and Ken Landreaux doubled and singled to lead the Los Angeles Dodgers' 16-hit attack in an 11-5 rout of the Toronto Blue Jays.Jerry Reuss, who won only five games all last season, earned his fourth exhibition victory by yielding three runs and six hits over six innings.

Pittsburgh pitcher Larry McWilliams hit a two-run single during a three-run second inning and three relievers blanked Minnesota over the final four innings as the Pirates edged the Twins 4-3.The Pirates snapped a 3-3 tie in the sixth when Bill Almon scored on Doug Frobel's double play grounder.

Lynn Jones drove in two runs with a homer and a double and Jorge Orta drove in a pair with a double and a single as the Kansas City Royals bombed the Texas Rangers 11-5.

Dickie Thon and Harry Spilman drove in the tying and winning runs in the ninth inning to rally the Houston Astros over the Cincinnati Reds 6-5.

DAVE COLLINS had a single, triple and home run and Jim Essian hit a two-run homer in a 19-hit Oakland attack that powered the A's past the San Diego Padres 12-6.San Diego starter LaMarr Hoyt allowed seven runs and eight hits in three innings.

Carmen Castillo's two-out, two-run single off Vida Blue in the eighth inning broke a tie and lifted the Cleveland Indians to a 4-2 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

Bill Schroeder's two-run homer with two out in the ninth inning gave the Milwaukee Brewers an 8-7 victory over the Chicago Cubs, their first over the Cubs in seven attempts. Doug Loman and Mark Brouhard homered for Milwaukee in the seventh inning. It was Loman's sixth of the spring.

Mike Morgan and two relievers teamed to limit California to five hits as the Seattle Mariners blanked the Angels 4-0.

Decision time near

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — An agreement between major league baseball owners and players must be reached this week if the American and National League playoffs are to be expanded to a best-of-seven series in 1985, the owners' chief negotiator says.

"It probably is too late if we don't do it this week," Lee MacPhail, the former American League president

NBC, the network that will carry the playoffs this year, needs to know "almost immediately" if the series will be expanded from the best-of-five format it has followed since 1969, MacPhail said.

LEE

Jay McCarty who scored on Small's triple to left. Brown followed with a double to tie the game and a shot at winning in regulation.

Colwell moved Brown to third with a popup to center field, bringing Rivas to the plate. Johnson called for the suicide squeeze and Rivas squared around to bunt. The plan was foiled when Rivas tipped a low-flying shot back to the mound that AHS starter Jay Gravens fielded for the first out and then walked to third base to double up Brown, who had no chance of getting back to the bag.

Even though Rivas missed his opportunity for a game-winning RBI, his bat was instrumental in keeping the Rebels' hopes alive. In the fourth, the Lee first baseman missed a two-run homer when his towering fly hit a 15-foot fence in left field for a double. The extra height on the fence is to protect houses behind it.

Rivas ended up 2-for-4 with two RBI. "He did hit the ball hard once and drove in a couple of runs," said Johnson.

FOR AHS, the extra inning defeat was "a tough loss," said Eagle coach David Ashby. "What else can you say. We made a couple of mistakes in the last inning. Mike got them to hit the ball on the ground but we just couldn't come up with the plays. You've got to give Lee a lot of credit. They hit the ball when they needed to.

"This was a game between two evenly matched ball clubs," continued Ashby. "Nine innings shows we can play with them. We were competitive."

The loss drops Abilene into a tie with San Angelo for fourth place at 2-3 and gives the Eagles a 6-7 overall record. Lee is 13-4 on the year.

On Saturday, the Rebels host Odessa High at 2 p.m. while AHS is at Big Spring.

Islanders' Anders Kallur fights off Oilers' Billy Carroll to keep puck on his stick in NHL action at Uniondale, N.Y.

Canadiens keep share of first

Associated Press

NHL

The wild scramble for position in the Adams Division continued on the northern front, with the French Connection remaining ahead of the field.

Both the Montreal Canadiens and Quebec Nordiques, two of the hottest rivals in the NHL, won Tuesday night to stay deadlocked in first place. Montreal downed Boston 5-3 and Quebec edged Boston 4-3.

With those defeats, the Sabres fell three points out of first place and the Bruins dropped eight points behind.

Nordiques 4, Sabres 3

At Quebec, the action was more impressive. Michel Goulet scored his 50th goal — the third straight year he has reached that plateau — and Brent Ashton got his 30th as the Nordiques built a 4-1 lead and held on. The Sabres actually put the puck past goalie Mario Gosselin with only 49 seconds remaining but referee Bryan Lewis disallowed the goal.

Rangers 5, Penguins 4

Host New York grabbed a four-goal lead and survived a Pittsburgh comeback, leaving the Penguins seven points in arrears with seven games remaining for Pittsburgh, six for New York. Mark Pavelich had two goals and two assists for the Rangers.

"It's two points, but we didn't win anything," said Pavelich. "The way we're getting there is better than not making the playoffs, that's all you can say.

Oilers 7, Islanders 5

Visiting Edmonton fell behind 4-1 in the first period, then roared back, outshooting the Islanders 12-4 and outscoring them 4-1 in the second period. Mark Messier and Paul Coffey had two goals each and Jari Kurri tied the NHL record for goals by a right wing with his 69th of the season, into an empty net with one second to go.

Red Wings 5, North Stars 1

At Detroit, John Ogrodnick set a team record with his 53rd and 54th goals in a span of 1:43 in the third period as the Red Wings jumped past Minnesota and into third place in the Norris Division. Detroit's checking limited the North Stars to 15 shots.

Ferragamo out in cold as Rams sign Brock

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — The Los Angeles Rams have a new quarterback who came to them from out of the cold. And that appears to have left Vince Ferragamo out in the cold.

Dieter Brock, a free agent from the Canadian Football League, has signed a four-year contract, reportedly worth $2.1 million, with the National Football League team.

At a news conference called Tuesday to announce Brock's signing, Coach John Robinson pulled no punches when asked about Ferragamo's future with the Rams.

"We've talked to Vince and told him we would seek an opportunity to trade him where he will have every chance to succeed," Robinson said. "I think that's probably the right thing for both of us."

Ferragamo, 30, signed a four-year contract extension with the Rams last season. He opened the year as the club's starting quarterback but was sidelined with a hand injury in the third game of the campaign and didn't play again.

Brock, 34, played 11 seasons in the CFL, the first 9½ with Winnipeg and the last 1½ with Hamilton. He became a free agent when his contract with the Tiger-Cats expired March 1.

Auburn coach changes mind

From Wire Reports

BASKETBALL—Auburn Coach Sonny Smith, who complained about lackluster support when he abruptly resigned last month, says the growing enthusiasm of players and fans during the Tigers' Cinderella postseason was one reason he changed his mind. "The reasons (for leaving) were overshadowed by the players," Smith said after withdrawing his resignation Tuesday. "They've all been in to see me. It's been a campaign. That was sort of the turning point." Smith also cited "the overwhelming support I got from Auburn alumni and fans in the form of letters and telephone calls," which he said have kept two secretaries busy since Auburn was knocked out of the NCAA Southeast Regional playoffs by North Carolina last Friday...

But he found in an ambulance to Newton-Wellesley Hospital on Saturday that he couldn't move his left side. "Then when I got to the hospital I couldn't move my right side. I could feel myself going. Usher said he is committed to a switch to a fall schedule in 1986, assuming an appropriate network television contract can be signed. "My personal feeling is we should gear ourselves to be a fall league, going head-to-head with the NFL.The owners have voted to switch to the fall, but that is predicated on the expectation of a TV agreement which I'm not sure will materialize. I won't let us commit economic suicide."...

Tamburo quits as ASU AD

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Arizona State Athletic Director Dick Tamburo has resigned effective Wednesday, university President J. Russell Nelson said Tuesday night.

No immediate reason was given for Tamburo's move, but it came in the wake of newspaper reports that several of the school's baseball players had been taking a mood-altering drug prescribed by a campus psychiatrist.

Nelson, in a statement released through a university spokeswoman, said Tamburo's resignation "requires immediate reorganization" of the athletic department. Nelson said he had named Deputy Athletic Director Frank Sackton as interim athletic director.

Tamburo, 54, was hired by Arizona State in 1980. He had served as an assistant football coach at the school from 1958-66.

He could not be immediately reached for comment on his resignation.

Nelson said Sackton will report directly to him and his goal is "to maintain the credibility and winning tradition of ASU's athletic department."

Hoyas' Ewing like marked man

By HAL BOCK

Patrick Ewing ....Eastman winner

NEW YORK (AP) — Patrick Ewing, who won the Eastman Award as the nation's top college basketball player on Tuesday, said he can't remember a time when other teams weren't gunning for him and his Georgetown teammates.

"It's been that way right from the start," the 7-foot All-America center said. "I love it. It's a challenge when you know they're coming after you. It makes you know you're doing something good. It draws the team closer together, makes you play harder, I think."

THE DEFENDING champion Hoyas are in the Final Four for the third time in Ewing's varsity career. They lost to North Carolina in 1982 before beating Houston for the 1984 title, and hope to make it two in a row in Lexington, Ky., starting with the semifinals against St. John's on Saturday.

Ewing at first refused to discuss the tournament but relented later.

"It's harder to get to the Final Four than it is to win it," he said, echoing comments made last weekend by Georgetown Coach John Thompson. "There's so much stress. The Final Four is the easiest part of the season. Experience doesn't matter much. It's the team that's playing best at the time. We're playing very well right now.

"We haven't proven anything yet. We came into the season wanting the championship again. That was one of the goals I set. I can't say I've accomplished everything I set out to do. I've still got to graduate. There's one more championship to win."

EWING SAID he will leave Georgetown with some sadness. "I wish I had one more year, but I think it's time to move on to the next level. College was a great experience. I've learned a great deal. Since coming to Georgetown, I've grown, not just as a player but as a person.

"It's good memories. I'll miss my coach, my friends, the school, the college life. If life in the real world is rough, I've had good preparation for it," he said.

Ewing spent three summers working on Capitol Hill, two of them on the staff of Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., and the third on the budget committee. That third summer also comprised the Olympic experience, winning the gold medal as a teammate of Michael Jordan, Chris Mullin and Wayman Tisdale among others. It was Ewing's warmup for his senior season and one more shot at the national title.

"IT'S HARD to compare this year's team with last year's," Ewing said. "We're a different team with different players and different abilities. I've never questioned our ability to win another national championship, though. I guess I want to win it a little more this time because it's my senior year. I want to finish the best way I possibly could."

If the Hoyas win that title, they would become the first team since UCLA in 1972-73 to repeat as national champions. Would that accomplishment satisfy Ewing?

He smiled, a little devilishly, said: "I was hoping I could win four. I came here with that in mind."

'No lights' ruling dooms Chicago's Wrigley Field

BY GENE SEYMOUR
Copley News Service

CHICAGO — Joy in Wrigleyville. Misdirected mirth and merriment — the same variety history recorded at the Titanic's christening.

Residents near Wrigley Field celebrated their court victory Monday over the Chicago Cubs. Now the Cubs can't play night baseball at Clark and Addison.

Hurrah.

True fans of baseball at Wrigley Field with a smidgeon of foresight, however, fear this apparent milestone victory.

The Tribune Company wants lights, in Wrigley Field or elsewhere. You can bet the Tribune Company has been denied for the last time.

For better or worse, the aesthetics of ivy and sunshine don't cut it one-for-one with the economic reality of today's game.

We can't say where or when, but, believe it: Since they can't have lights in Wrigley Field, the Cubs will have them elsewhere. Look for such an announcement no later than the turn of the decade, probably sooner.

DID YOU enjoy the Cubs' division title in1984? Do you like the Cubs spending megadollars for free agents to maintain their competitive edge? Do you like the sound of "Cubs win!" better than "Wait till next year?"

The price for this progress is the alleged charming Wrigley way of life. In terms of winning baseball, it's hard to argue with the price of such progress.

When the Tribune Company bought the Cubs and hired Dallas Green to execute its plan, both parties promised the building of a new tradition. The tradition has taken root.

The new tradition calls for money; the kind of money generated by a larger stadium that will accommodate larger night crowds. The kind of money generated by advance bleacher seat sales.

IF CHARM is absolutely vital, maybe the Cubs should plant ivy on the walls of their new stadium. Nothing says a new stadium would have to be Astro-Turfed or be a clone of the sterile environmnents found in stadiums around the N.L. East.

No structural miracle is required to duplicate the shape of Wrigley Field's outfield wall. Bring that Wall Street Journal of scoreboard, too. And while they're at it, expand the bleacher so twice as many people can be bums for a night or day. Run a subway line past the place, and make the parking and access realistic.

But what about the charm? Keith Moreland once told a reporter "I'd like to see them blow this place up and start over."

Charm isn't leaving three hours before the game to deposit your car in a hamburger store parking lot for $10. Nor is it charming to sit for hours in side-street traffic after the day game in the quaint neighborhood ends, just as the rush hour is peaking.

Packing in like sardines for standing-room only "seats" along the wall next to a nacho vendor (with the inevitable pillar to further block your sight) isn't particularly charming.

Charm isn't waiting 39 years for a title only to to be subjected to a post-season ticket lottery because of the restrictions implicit in a charmingly archaic 37,000-seat arena.

At least the near-sighted, self-serving Citizens United for Baseball in Sunshine, those CUBS, have had their point of view upheld once more.

It's just too bad that someday soon the only baseball in sunshine gracing their neighborhoods will be played by beer-bellied amateurs at Lincoln Park.

SOAPBOX II: Hoya Paranoia. Catchy saying. Classic media overreaction.

Georgetown basketball coach John Thompson is huge — about 6-foot-9, 270 pounds. If he so chose, he could manhandle 10 out of every 10 media employes. He's no one's fool, but not the ogre many writers would like you to believe.

Thompson runs a program his way. It didn't always include the utmost of two-way cooperation with the media. But this is Thompson's prerogative.

He is getting the job done on the floor and in the classroom. Not counting this year's seniors, 44 of 46 Hoyas who have played for Thompson have earned their degrees.

By comparison, the smoothe-talking, always accommodating Jim Valvano of North Carolina State has yet to graduate a Wolfpack player.

As for that intimidation business: "Georgetown being an intimidator is a media creation," Thompson said. Maybe not. All-America center Pat Ewing marks and defends with elbows his territory the way a Rotweiller would patrol his favorite fire hydrant.

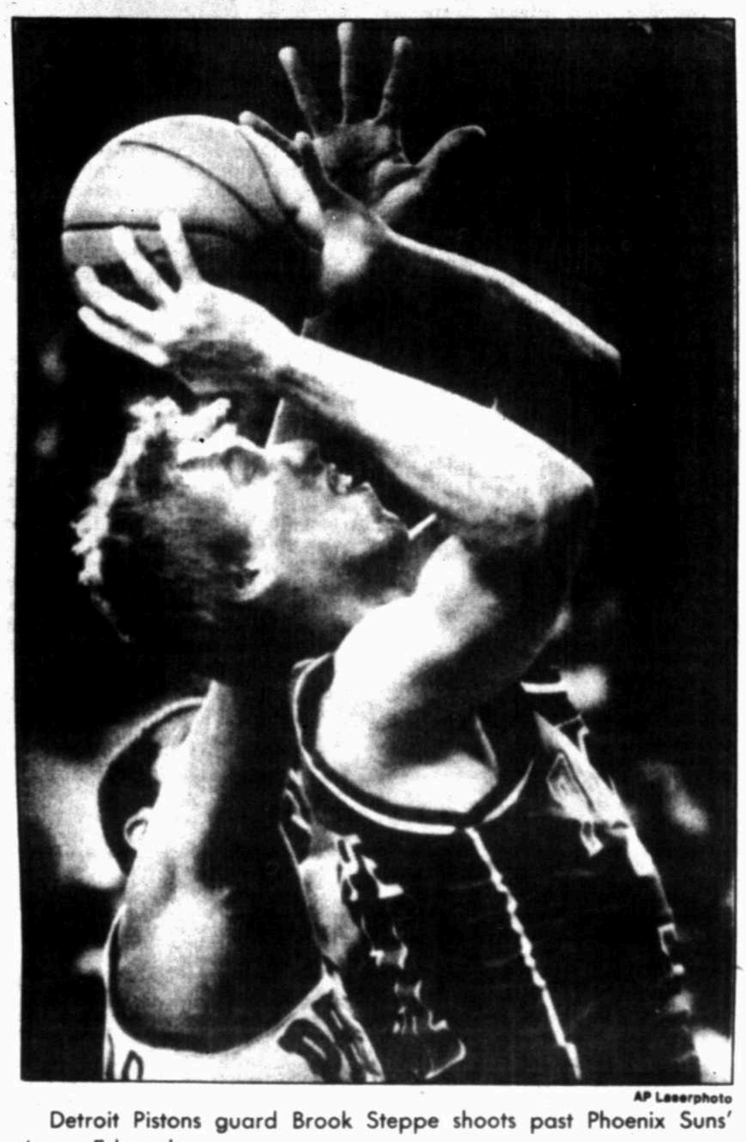

"I can't understand how anyone thinks a college player can intimidate another college player," Thompson said. "It makes good copy. Who's intimidated? Not a college basketball player. Maybe you guys (reporters). Maybe a junior high team would be intimidated by us."

"No one who's played us has been intimidated," said Georgetown guard Michael Jackson. "If anything, they play extra hard against us."

WORD OUT of Atlanta is that Georgia's David Dunn, the last white player to wear a Georgetown uniform, left that school because he was made to feel he wasn't wanted. Dunn told an Atlanta newspaper he felt there were racial implications in how he was treated.

ONE WONDERS how the Big Ten's dismal showing in the NCAA tournament will affect the number of its future bids. The Big Ten, like the Big East, had six tourney entries. Only Illinois got as far as the top 16 teams. Three Big East teams — Georgetown, St. John's and Vilanova — will battle this weekend in Lexington, Ky.

The Big East is 15-3 in the tourney; the Big Ten 4-6; the Atlantic Coast Conference is 12-5, the Southeastern Conference 7-5, the Metro 4-1 and the Big Eight 4-3.

Trailblazers light up Pacific chase

Associated Press

The Portland Trail Blazers are finally dishing out some grief instead of taking it.

Great things were expected of the team in 1984-85, but the team was criticized for making an off-season trade with Denver and for drafting Sam Bowie ahead of Michael Jordan. Last month, the Blazers languished in the middle of the Pacific Division standings.

With Tuesday night's 116-113 overtime victory over the division champion Los Angeles Lakers, however, Portland has won six out of its last seven outings and is solidly in second place.

"The Lakers are playing the best basketball in the league right now," Portland Coach Jack Ramsay said after his team broke Los Angeles' 10-game winning streak. "We got it done tonight with sticky defense, strong rebounding and hustle."

"Portland is really coming," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "Jack has them playing very well at just the right time. All the criticism they took early you can wipe away. This club is putting it together and will be a factor in the playoffs."

The Trail Blazers, after getting a crucial three-point play from Kiki Vandeweghe to tie the score late in regulation, outscored the Lakers 10-7 in overtime, with five players getting two points each.

The Lakers, who already have clinched their division, lead the Trail Blazers by 17 games with 11 games left.

NBA

Nuggets 104, Jazz 89

Lafayette Lever scored eight points during a 17-2 third-quarter run that put Denver in control against Utah.

Rockets 115, Kings 93

Houston broke Kansas City's five-game winning streak but stayed four games behind Denver in the Midwest Division.

Ralph Sampson had 22 points and 14 rebounds and Akeem Olajuwon 22 points for the Rockets, who opened a 56-46 halftime lead and then put together a 28-14 streak for an 84-60 advantage.

Bucks 107, Bullets 96

Ricky Pierce scored 10 of his 14 points in the final 12:01 to lift Central Division champion Milwaukee past Washington.

Pierce hit a basket with one second left in the third period to give the Bucks an 80-78 lead, then added four points during a 10-0 run that put Milwaukee ahead 99-87 with 5:36 left in the game.

Bulls 120, Pacers 119

Rookie Michael Jordan scored 38 points and Orlando Woolridge 31 to carry Chicago over Indiana.

The Bulls didn't take the lead for good until there were 57 seconds remaining, when center Dave Corzine's tip-in of a missed Jordan shot made it 118-116. Jordan had two free throws and Indiana's Jim Thomas hit a three-point goal in the final five seconds to account for the final margin.

Pistons 119, Suns 93

Kelly Tripucka scored 13 of his 25 points in the third quarter and Detroit rolled to victory by outscoring Phoenix 32-12 in the final period.

The game was tied 53-53 at halftime before Dan Roundfield put the Pistons ahead to stay at 62-61 with 9:07 left in the third period.

Nets 109, Hawks 108

Micheal Ray Richardson scored 34 points and Albert King, limited to 13, had six of them in overtime to lead New Jersey over Atlanta in New Orleans.

Mavericks 124, Warriors 107

Rolando Blackman scored 15 of his 24 points as Dallas outscored Golden State 43-26 in the third period to turn a close game into a rout.

The Mavericks trailed 56-55 at halftime, but hit 16 of 22 field goal attempts and all 11 free throws in the third quarter to pull ahead 98-82.

Cavaliers 112, Knicks 98

Cleveland scored 18 points in a row in the third quarter turn a 64-56 deficit into a 74-64 lead over New York.

Lonnie Smith 'licks' drug problem, again

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Lonnie Smith says he no longer relies on drugs and alcohol to survive the pressures of major league baseball.

His problems, however, as the 29-year-old St. Louis Cardinals outfielder learned last season, did not end with the completion of a month-long rehabilitation in 1983.

Now, with the aid of a therapist and a hypnotist, he is hoping to recapture the spark that once made him among the best in the National League.

"There were just so many things going on," said Smith, talking about the trials he encountered a year ago, when his batting average dipped to a career-low .250.

"Some things were worth talking about, some weren't (until) the proper time," he said. "It was kind of hard to concentrate on just playing baseball."

The ravages of a roller-coaster, chaotic existence that had been created by his drug and alcohol abuse until two summers ago, said Smith, were not confined to his job.

"It was just hard for me to talk to my wife, because there were things that she really didn't understand and vice versa," he said. "When you're both going in opposite directions and never meeting at the same point, sometimes it gets rough."

Smith said counseling helped him confront unsettling influences within his personal life that included his father's bout with cancer.

"It turned out that it was better for me that way, at least I wasn't in the streets with the wrong crowd," he said. "It's just that at times I felt like I was locked in or it was boring."

Also present, said Smith, was frequent fear that he might revert to the habits that forced him to miss part of the 1983 season for treatment.

"Any time you think about it, it's close. You don't want to think about it," he said. "But there were times when I wished I was going back, because there was still too much on my mind."

Smith, confronted by the problems he had caused, saw his batting average plunged 66 points below the career batting average he carried into last season.

Accordingly, the leadoff role he had traditionally enjoyed was yielded often to his teammates. And, although his mechanical problems were not difficult to define, they were not easy to overcome.

"I was constantly pulling my (left) shoulder and dipping my head. I was fouling off what were good pitches for me," said Smith.

"In practice, I had it perfectly. I was hitting the ball to right field and up the middle. But when it got to the game, everything went back because of the pitches they were throwing me."

This spring, Smith hopes a two-year contract he signed during the winter and the ordeals he survived last year will provide him the serenity to concentrate on the tasks at hand.

"As long as I stay clean, I think it's some kind of progress. I had lost the ability to relax in a destructive (drugs and alcohol) situation," he said.

"It may not be as fast as I would like it to be, but I have to take it a day at a time."

Weaver just too busy

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Earl Weaver hasn't attended a Baltimore Orioles ballgame yet this spring, but he intends to. He's been too busy, he says, "doing whatever I want to do, when I want to do it."

Mostly, that's playing golf, puttering in his garden and going to dinner with his wife, Marianna.

"I was going to go to the stadium tonight," Weaver said Monday, "but I played in a golf tournament over the weekend. I played 27 holes Saturday, 27 holes Sunday and, today, I played 18 more with a friend of mine.

"I'm beat. There just aren't enough hours in the day."

Weaver spent 14½ seasons managing the Orioles. He won an average of 96.5 games each year until retiring after the 1982 season, making Baltimore the most successful franchise in baseball during that span. Last year, he worked as a color commentator in 23 games for ABC-TV before being released.

Indiana's Bobby Knight won't admit to burnout

An AP Sports Analysis
By BARRY WILNER

If Bob Knight is suffering from burnout, the Indiana University coach says he doesn't know about it.

Knight has been on a virtual nonstop coaching merry-go-round for the past two years, going from leading the 1983-84 Hoosiers into the NCAA Tournament to guiding the United States Olympic basketball team to a runaway gold medal and back to this season's Hoosiers.

But Knight's team has been a major disappointment this year, going just 15-13, and his behavior on the sidelines has been, at times, even more volatile and unpredictable than ever before. Given Knight's previous histrionics and temper tantrums, that's saying a lot.

ABOUT BLAMING it on a case of burnout, however, Knight said Monday that it just isn't so.

"People that have said that have said it without really talking to me or when talking to me, haven't believed what I've said," Knight said at a news conference at Madison Square Garden where his Hoosiers will play tonight in the semifinals of the National Invitation Tournament.

"I left Los Angeles the day after the final game (of the Olympics) and I went up into Montana and spent about three weeks fishing and relaxing. And I went back home and did a little work at home with recruiting and so forth, and then went back out to Montana for another three weeks on a hunting and fishing trip. I did absolutely nothing but that."

Not too taxing. And Knight didn't get down into the trenches too soon after that, either.

"Then, as practice started, I was probably less involved with actual practice," he continued. "I kind of let the assistant coaches take it and relaxed, and when we'd get into 5-on-5, I'd get involved."

NO ONE has accused Knight of being especially aloof or detached this year, though. Instead, people have wondered if he has been too intense — witness his throwing a chair onto the court during a game last month with Purdue, which earned him a one-game suspension.

Knight claims this season hasn't been rougher or easier than any other in his 20-year coaching career.

"I've never been any more worn or less worn — no season has been more difficult or less difficult," he says. "It was a routine season in terms of the drain on me, I think."

It wasn't even the most frustrating for the man who has led Indiana to two NCAA crowns and an NIT championship.

"Frustrations can come at any time and I've been frustrated when we were undefeated, let alone seasons when we've lost games," said Knight. "The frustration to me comes from how we play.

"We started out not very good, lost to Louisville and we had Louisville down 20-9 and ended up getting beat by 12. We had Notre Dame down by six and within a matter of that same half we were down by 13 or 14.

"We got off to a 1-2 start and then played pretty well for the next 10 or 12 games, and then teams played well against us. They did the things against us they should have done, and teams in our league haven't always done that.

"SOMETIMES I've sat there in amazement of what's being played against us because, if I could dictate what they were going to do, many times I would have picked exactly what they were doing.

"They did a much better job playing against us this year than I think they normally have. We just couldn't get the thing going."

Which delighted people at every other school in the Big Ten, where they love to hate Bob Knight.

"I would think that if our record while I've been at Indiana had been mediocre over 14 years, there would be very few people hollering and screaming at me when I went into somebody else's arena," he said in answer to those critics. "I've been there longer than anybody else in the Big Ten and we've won much more often."

Bobby Hillin points for Valleydale 500

From Staff Reports

BRISTOL, Tenn. — When Midland's Bobby Hillin Jr. starts his first race at Bristol International Raceway in the Valleydale 500 Sunday, he begins an effort to become the third driver in three decades to win Bristol in a car prepared by veteran crew J.C. "Jake" Elder.

Elder is the only crew chief whose cars have scored back-to-back Valleydale 500 wins against Junior Johnson's teams, whose drivers have captured 19 of the 28 races at Bristol since 1971.

Driving an Elder-prepared car for Osterlund Racing, Dale Earnhardt swept both the 1979 and 1980 Valleydale 500s. Earnhardt's 1979 win was the first of his Grand National career and one of only five victories by a rookie driver in NASCAR history.

Elder's triumphs with Earnhardt weren't his first at Bristol. Ten years before, Elder paired with David Pearson at the Holman and Moody racing team to win both the Bristol races in 1968 as well as the track's fall event in 1969. The Bristol victory string was part of the best two seasons of Pearson's illustrious Grand National career.

In 1968 and 1969, the Pearson-Elder combination won 27 races enroute to consecutive Winston Cup titles. In 99 races spanning the two seasons, they also compiled an incredible record of 78 top-five finishes and 82 top-10 finishes.

Even though Hillin has never raced at Bristol, Elder is enthusiastic about his driver's chances. "We ran real strong," said Elder after seeing the results of Stavola Bros. Racing's first testing session at the .533-mile Bristol track. "I mean we ran real good. Bobby's best laps were only three one-hundredths (of a second) off (Neil) Bonnett's best time on the same day.

"Bobby likes the high banked tracks like Bristol," says Elder. "I think he'll be pretty quick right off, but it might take him a while to learn how to work traffic. Once he gets that down — and he's gettin' better all the time — watch out."

Entering the valleydale 500, Hillin and Stavola Bros. Racing are ninth in the Winston Cup standings with 486 points. The team has finished ninth at the daytona 500, 11th at Richmond's Miller High Life 400 and 12th at Atlanta's Coca-Cola 500.

A broken flywheel with less than 100 miles to go resulted in a 24th-place finish at Rockingham's Carolina 500.

Scott Anderson paced the Cougars with 3-for-3 while Chris Cromley added 3-for-4 and Doug Hadley 2-for-4.

Thursday, the Bulldogs replay a rainout game against Odessa High at Zachery Field at 4 p.m. Saturday, the 'Dogs travel to Odessa for a 2 p.m. contest with Permian. Cooper hosts San Angelo on Saturday.

San Angelo pitcher Greg Lisewsky needed his seven-inning, no-hit shutout Tuesday to give the Bobcats the victory and a 2-3 4-5A record as Permian hurler Donnie Wright took a hard loss, allowing only one run and five hits.

The Bobcats punched across the winning run in the bottom of the fifth inning. Randy Hunt led off with a bloop double into left field and was bunted to third by John Stachura. Frankie Hill then took a 2-0 pitch and hit it just beyond the reach of Panther shortstop Rich Fletcher to bring home Hunt.

Lisewsky allowed only one base runner from a walk while his defense put on the only other with an error.

BIG SPRING and Odessa High were tied 6-6 after seven innings in Odessa but the Steers don't get a victory despite outscoring the Bronchos 4-0 in the eighth frame.

Darkness snuck up on the two teams, interrupting an OHS rally in the bottom of the frame. The game was called with Big Spring facing a one-out, bases loaded situation. The game will be resumed on April 20 in Big Spring with the same situation. Immediately following, the Steers and Bronchos will play a regularly scheduled game.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, March 28, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Stick to the straight and narrow if you want to reach the top. Your every action will be scrutinized by those in a position to help or hinder your climb. Deeds, not words, convince others that you have the right idea. Students have a banner year. Choose courses that will really challenge you. An improvement in your appearance could result in an intriguing offer. Romantic partner returns your feelings. Family members feel more comfortable. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: the artist Raphael, beer magnate August Anheuser Busch Jr., music man Paul Whiteman, former Secretary of State Edmund Muskie, basketball great Rick Barry, actor Ken Howard.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Several surprises are featured today. A co-worker could try to involve you in a power play. Declare your neutrality. New developments give you second thoughts about a friendship or romance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Not a good day to inaugurate something new. Keep an important project to yourself for a while longer. Loved one's needs deserve top priority. Keep business expenses to a minimum.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You could feel drawn in two directions today. Give your work top priority. Greater savings are possible as the overall financial picture improves. Plan a special treat for family members.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An excellent day for moving ahead with a pet project. Authority figure is on your side. Negotiations with people overseas reach a conclusion. Play a waiting game where romance is concerned.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not count on others to bail you out of a ticklish situation. Promises of support may not be honored. Late afternoon brings welcome news. The future looks brighter than ever!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your loyalty is put to the supreme test today. You pass with flying colors! A recurrent problem is finally solved, thanks to partner's intervention. Show your heartfelt appreciation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be prepared to work on your own today. Your business associates are wrapped up in their own concerns. Long journeys are best postponed. Family members are highly supportive. A friend shares joyful news.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Something you thought to be a minor success turns into a big hit! Real estate and stock investments do well. Work at developing better public relations; combine business with socializing.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Avoid all forms of gambling now; a financial adviser's information may not be up-to-date. Someone influential offers valuable help in a crisis. Stick to a new budget or diet.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A great day to conclude real estate transactions. Romance is more exciting than usual but could be very expensive. Keep early hours tonight if you want to be ready for work tomorrow.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You bounce back after a recent disappointment. A family member or authority figure is delighted. Work must come before romance now. A good day for buying or selling.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be careful not to take on too much work today. You could be asked to take over a special project. Your take-home pay increases thanks to your extra efforts.

Opening lead: Five of ♠.

If it seems that we too often stress the need to plan your campaign before you play to the first trick, it is only because we have seen so many sound contracts put on the floor by failure to pay due care. Here's another example.

The auction was quite straightforward. Against three no trump, West led his fourth-best spade. Since there was a slight chance that West was leading from the queen-jack of spades, declarer opted to play low from dummy. That proved fatal. He captured East's jack with the ace, cashed his three heart honors and led a club to the jack, which won.

Declarer took advantage of the entry to the table to cash the king of hearts before reverting to clubs. West held up the ace of clubs one more round, then shifted to a diamond. East won the ace and returned a spade, which forced out dummy's king. Declarer had taken only eight tricks, and he had no way to get to his hand to score the good club. The defenders got two spade tricks, two diamonds and a club.

There were nine tricks there for the taking as long as declarer made sure that he could get from hand to hand. Had he studied the problem before playing to the first trick, he would have found a simple solution to his problem. All he had to do was to win the first trick on the board with the king.

Now declarer cashes his top three hearts, and leads a low club to the table's ten. (Should that lose to the ace, the jack will serve as an entry to dummy.) After cashing the fourth heart, declarer continues clubs to set up his ninth trick. He still has the ace of spades in hand as an entry to the club.

CBS gives list of shareholders to Fairness in Media group

By MARTHA WAGGONER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. — Despite CBS Inc.'s decision to hand over a list of its 24,000 shareholders to the conservative group Fairness in Media, a North Carolina newspaper publisher says he won't drop his suit against the network.

"My feeling is they should give us the list without any restrictions," Hoover Adams, publisher and editor of the Dunn Daily Record, said Tuesday. "At this time, I do not intend to withdraw my suit."

Adams, who sued in New York state court to get a copy of the list, said he didn't know if it had arrived in time to allow FIM to launch a proxy fight, but he believed such a fight would occur eventually.

"It's going to be awfully difficult to stage a proxy fight between now and April 17," the date of CBS annual shareholder meeting, said Adams, who is a CBS shareholder. Adams has said he is not a FIM member, but sued on the group's behalf to get the list.

Adams said a list of stockholders was delivered to the offices of his New York lawyers, Olwine, Connelly, Chase, O'Donnell and Weyher, about noon Tuesday.

He said he thought some of CBS's restrictions were "unfair and illegal" and his suit would have the network turn over the list with no limitations.

CBS announced that it would deliver the shareholder list Tuesday to FIM. CBS said FIM, which is associated with Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., had agreed to certain conditions on the list's use and disclosure.

Helms, who has said he is not an FIM member, wrote to more than 1 million conservatives asking them to buy CBS stock to end the network's "liberal bias" and "become Dan Rather's boss."

In a news release Tuesday, Jim Cain, a Raleigh attorney who represents FIM, said the conservative group "will use the list to contact CBS stockholders in support of our campaign and to end the bias and bring fairness to CBS news reporting."

Adams said he planned to attend the shareholders' meeting in Chicago but said "I don't know yet exactly what we'll do ... Eventually, I certainly think we'll try to stage a proxy fight, but that remains to be seen."

He said he was "pretty sure there'll be a mailing going to stockholders shortly."

CBS said the group agreed to use the list only for soliciting shareholder proxies, a tender offer, a special meeting or other shareholder action that would bring a change in CBS management or policy.

Cain said the group may call a special stockholders meeting after the April 17 meeting.

While FIM agreed to return the list to CBS after the April 17 meeting, CBS agreed to make it available to FIM at any time on five days notice for any of the agreed-upon purposes, Cain said in the release.

The group also agreed to return all copies of the list after CBS's annual shareholder meeting.

The list will not be made available to other groups linked to Helms, and it will be shown only to certain members of the group and to a professional proxy solicitation firm, CBS said.

Fairness in Media has said it is considering a proxy fight.

Jackson searched on arrival at Heathrow

LONDON (AP) — Michael Jackson's smash hit album "Thriller" helped make the one-gloved rock star a figure recognized around the world, but it didn't help him get through customs at London's Heathrow Airport.

Jackson was subjected to a 35-minute body search when he arrived in London to unveil a wax statue of himself at Madame Tussaud's.

Jackson

Customs officers at London's Heathrow Airport searched Jackson's clothes and baggage after the singer walked through the "nothing to declare" gate.

He left customs looking shaken, then hid behind bodyguards as a crush of photographers, television crews and several dozen fans pushed forward.

"I didn't mind being searched," said Jackson, 26, wearing sunglasses and a military-style gold-braided jacket. "Why should I? There was nothing to find." He left in a limousine.

The singer said he planned to unveil the statue on Thursday and to see the sights of London before returning home Monday.

NCAA tournament no what it's cracked up to be

By MICHAEL KATZ
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Thank goodness that's over. There's no reason to watch any more of the incessant march to the foul line in the national collegiate basketball tournament. For just as hoops were developing under a nation's eyes, no less an authority than Brent Musburger of CBS gave us dispensation Saturday before the Georgetown-Georgia Tech game. No voice is more authoritative than Musburger's.

"An entire season has come down to this one game," he intoned before what was listed as merely the final of the Eastern Regional from Providence, R.I.

Couldn't miss that, although over on another channel Humphrey Bogart and Kate Hepburn were floating along in "The African Queen." Unfortunately, Musburger's hyperbole was for a game that came down to a 6-foot-11-inch reserve center, Ralph Dalton, making foul shots. And while Georgia Tech played tough against the champion Georgetown team, the level of the game never lived up to its importance.

NONE OF the regional finals did, not even the 63-61 Memphis State victory over Oklahoma in what proved to be the closest of the four contests. Coach John Thompson of Georgetown suggested Saturday that because of the tournament pressure, teams are "thinking rather than reacting." Whatever the reason, the natural drama of this national carnival has not been heightened by the natural grace and rhythm of the game. Perhaps the hype itself is preventing the kids from living up to the hype, in the same manner that Super Bowls never turn out to be Super.

Those fools, and St. John's fans, who didn't take Musburger's advice Saturday and watched again on Sunday (thereby missing the Jets vs. the Sharks in "West Side Story"), were treated to two more sloppily played games that wound up, inevitably, on the foul line.

Musburger, who when not intoning is indeed an authoritative and capable voice on basketball, should have taken his own advice and stayed in Providence, but instead winged down to Birmingham, Ala., for Sunday's Southeast Regional final. After 17 minutes of watching Villanova and North Carolina miss shots, throw bad passes and commit other assorted ineptitudes, Musburger could only wonder late in the first half:

"Would you believe it, a regional final is 18-12 with three minutes to go?"

VILLANOVA, which had the 12, got better; the game did not. The second game Sunday, which Gary Bender promised would be "a classic matchup" between St. John's and North Carolina State, may have pleased local fans, but for neutral observers uninterested in Lou Carnesecca's sweaters this was neither drama nor even the best showcase of the great talents of Chris Mullin or Walter Berry.

Part of the problem is the rules of the game, which winds up on what Bender called "the pressure-packed free-throw line." Musburger and his wise sidekick, Billy Packer, do the best they can under the circumstances, but perhaps the National Collegiate Athletic Association should take their advice and institute a 45-second shot clock. Something must be done to stop the game from becoming a foul-shooting contest at the end. Continual fouling, by teams hoping to catch up, should be penalized by more than just a one-and-one free-throw situation. It is suggested here that, perhaps after the third team foul in the final three minutes, the wronged team gets not only the free throws, but possession of the ball afterward.

Tulane

Williams scored 14 points in the 60-49 loss to Memphis State, a game in which Tulane was a four-point underdog. He was 5-for-12 from the field and made 4 of 6 free throws.

In the Southern Mississippi game, won by Tulane 64-63, Williams played erratically in the first half, making just one of eight shots. He wound up with 15 points for the game. Tulane was a 10½-point favorite to defeat Southern Mississippi.

The last point-shaving scheme involved six Boston College games during the 1978-1979 season, with a member of the team, Rick Kuhn, among those convicted of conspiracy to commit sports bribery and jailed.

College basketball was rocked by gambling-related fixes in the 1950s, with many top teams and players involved, including the City College of New York team of 1949-50, which won both the NCAA and National Invitation Tournaments.

Connick said the maximum penalty for violation of Louisiana's sports bribery law is a maximum five-year jail sentence and a $10,000 fine.

The district attorney said he felt the situation was "fairly widespread. It involves gambling in the state of Louisiana and, in all probability, gambling in other states."

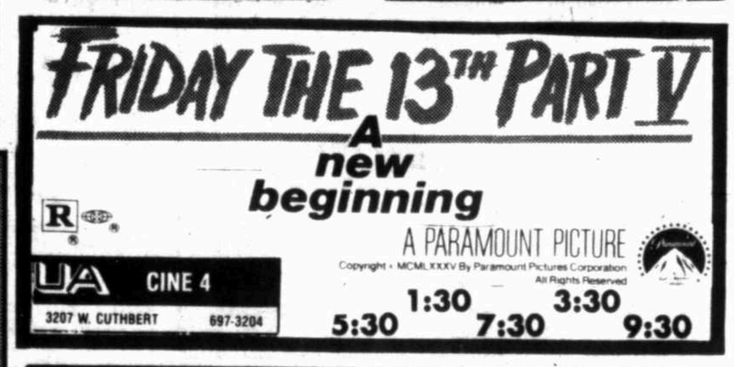

Arthur Triche, Tulane's associate sports information director, said, "We will have no comment until we have a chance to see the evidence involved. Since the facts are not known, we will just have to wait and see until we hear from the district attorney's office and the university administration."

A Tulane spokesman said that Tulane president Eamon Kelly would issue a statement on the matter today.

Mother gets probation in alleged beating

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

On a request made Tuesday by the Midland County District Attorney's Office, a 24-year-old mother of four was placed on eight years probation in connection with the alleged beating of her 8-year-old son.

"This was not an easy decision to make," said Administrative Assistant District Attorney Tom Morgan. "But the job of the District Attorney's Office is not to prosecute for the sake of prosecution, but to see justice done. We feel this is justice after weighing all of the factors."

When shown a photograph of the bleeding buttocks of her eldest son during a sentencing hearing in 238th State District Judge Vann Culp's courtroom, the teary-eyed woman testified that she had inflicted the wounds in an incident March 4.

"Do you understand how serious this is?" Morgan asked her.

"Yes, sir," the woman replied.

"Do you know there is a huge difference in disciplining a child and beating him?" Morgan asked.

"Yes, sir," she replied.

The woman, who was in the process of divorcing her husband of nine years, was arrested March 14 after officers with the Midland County Sheriff's Office Youth Services Division were given a report made by the Department of Human Resources.

The woman's other children, two boys, ages 5 and 4, and a 9-month-old girl, have been placed in the custody of DHR, according to Morgan.

The woman was going to school part time at Aladdin Beauty School and was working full time at Red Lobster restaurant when the incident took place, reports said.

"You were in the process of tying up your private life and getting a divorce from your husband, is that correct?" asked court-appointed defense attorney Vernon Reichle.

"Yes," she said, crying.

The woman's estranged husband, who works for a drilling company, has not helped with the support of the four children, according to reports.

Under questioning Monday, the woman testified she planned to continue with her schooling and get a second job. The 13 days spent in Midland County Jail have given her time to reflect on her actions, she said.

Although the arrest affidavit charged the woman with striking the boy 40 times with a thick wooden board which contained splinters, the defendant testified she struck the child "I don't know, it must've been 15 licks" with a board "almost an inch thick. It wasn't real heavy."

If the defendant violates any of the terms of probation, which include psychological counseling, she will be transported to the Texas Department of Corrections to begin serving an eight-year term.

Morgan said the district attorneys' office decided to give the woman probation because she had no prior criminal record and her employment and education schedule was difficult with an estranged husband, who had left her three months before, providing minimal financial assistance in supporting the children.

Other reasons were "she had confessed to the crime and expressed extreme remorse and has been fully cooperative," Morgan said. "We believe the loss of freedom for nearly two weeks and losing her children to the child welfare authorities got her attention."

He also pointed out the child had suffered no permanent injuries and that her children had said they didn't want their mother to go to the penitentiary.

Midland council grants saleswoman reprieve

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Midland City Council granted a 60-day reprieve Tuesday to a woman who wants to continue selling produce from a trailer at the Village Shopping Center, Andrews Highway and Illinois Avenue.

Elizabeth Stinson has run afoul of an anti-peddling city ordinance which limits street vendors to selling their wares only three days out of every 30. Exceptions are made for firewood and ice-cream trucks, according to Ms. Stinson's daughter-in-law, LuAnn Wyatt, and she thinks produce sellers deserve a similar break.

"They say produce isn't seasonal — I'd like to see you get a Texas cantaloupe in January," Ms. Stinson said after Ms. Wyatt returned from council chambers with news of the extension. "In 60 days, it's over. I can either quit or find a job, and you tell me how many jobs are open for a woman in her 50s?"

Ms. Wyatt claims the council is making "an example" of her mother-in-law to intimidate other street vendors. She complained to the council that the ordinance is not being enforced: "Your ordinance is not working."

"You ought to look at what it was before we had the ordinance," Mayor G. Thane Akins replied. "We can't expect perfect compliance, but it's our intention that if we have an ordinance, we're going to enforce it."

The council allowed Ms. Stinson a 60-day temporary land-use permit to give her time to find a legal location. According to City Manager Jim Brown, Ms. Stinson and her family have evaded the ordinance for years, and will now be required to conform to the law. "In 60 days, they're out," he said.

In other action, the council approved the allocation of $174,000 in excess Community Development funds, with most of the money going for street improvements. Public Works Director Fred Baker supplied the council with a list of 17 streets due for paving or curb-and-gutter work, and the council voted $104,000 to be added to estimated $300,000 already in the budget for street improvements.

Another $35,000 went to park improvements, $20,000 was set aside for contingencies, and $15,000 was awarded to the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce for a study on development of the east side. This last grant was made contingent upon narrowing the study's scope and enlisting the support of the Midland County Commissioners for the project.

"In the past, there has not been a concentrated effort from the Hispanic community to the develop the east side," said Roger Robles of the Hispanic Chamber. "We can't do it without your support. The squeaking wheel gets the grease, and we've been quiet for some time, but now we're squeaking."

Responsive crowd attends Odessa candidate forum

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A small but responsive crowd turned out Tuesday night for the Ector County League of Women Voters city council candidate forum to hear six candidates state their positions on issues and respond to questions.

Odessa voters April 6 will elect three City Council members and consider 11 charter revision proposals.

Absentee voting for the election ends Tuesday, but deputy city secretary Cindy Weir said hours for absentee voting have been changed to allow voting on Saturday, from 2 to 6 p.m., and Monday and Tuesday until 7 p.m.

Incumbent District 3 Councilman L. Vern Foreman is running unopposed for a second two-year term.

Councilman Sherman Cox, seeking a second term also as the at-large representative, has drawn Gary W. Rowe as an opponent. Rowe was Mayor John Minor's campaign manager when Minor unseated two-term Mayor Bob Bryant in April 1984. Most recently, Rowe headed up Minor's controversial Task Force on Crime and Law Enforcement.

Incumbent Councilwoman Melissa Hirsch, seeking a second term as District 4 representative, has drawn two opponents, Dan Jamierson, a construction equipment salesman, and Cathlene Martell, a criminal justice student at UTPB.

BILL ELMS, chairman of the Charter Revision Commission, briefly explained the 11 charter amendments that will be on the April 6 ballot, noting that several were merely "housekeeping" proposals, aimed at bringing the charter in line with certain state statutes.

Proposition 5, if approved by voters, would establish a procedure for recalling the mayor and council members.

Elms pointed out the existing recall procedure was found unworkable last year when citizens attempted to initiate a recall.

The proposed revision, while making the recall of elected officials possible, is still a difficult procedure because recalling an elected public official is a serious matter not to be taken lightly, he said.

Proposition 6 proposes to bind the mayor and council members to certain attendance requirements, which Elms noted was brought about by the protracted absence of a council member last year.

Under the proposed charter amendment, if the mayor or any council member misses 50 percent of all council meetings during a six month period, he or she would be subject to removal from office.

Proposition 7 would change the City Planning and Zoning body from a board to a commission, in accordance with state law, and strips the body of the power to approve changes in plats and zones. Proposed changes in plats and zones would be approved at the discretion of the council.

Proposition 11, which would establish a runoff procedure in a municipal election requiring a successful candidate to receive a majority of all votes cast or face a runoff election, drew criticism from candidates Rowe and Jamierson.

ROWE CONTENDED the requirement to get a majority of all votes cast would tend to discourage candidates, while Jamierson said he opposed the proposition because it would cost about $13,000 to conduct a runoff election at a time when the city can ill afford to be spending money.

Foreman said he favored some, not all, of theled by a person who will accept responsibility and have the courage to make decisions he or she feels need to be made, even when opposed by the rest of the council.

"It's difficult to hold up your hand and say 'no' when the Girl Scouts want a building," said Foreman.

Foreman said he welcomes citizen input, not just from his district but from all districts in the city.

Jamierson, noting he has lived in Odessa 20 years, said he is seeking the District 4 seat now occupied by Ms. Hirsch because council members, present and past, don't listen to citizen input.

Trying to talk to this council, he said, is "like trying to talk to a brick wall."

He also attended meetings of the Charter Revision Commission, he said, and found his suggestions fell largely on deaf ears.

Ms. Martell, saying she would work for the best interests of Odessa, voiced her opposition to pari-mutuel betting because it brings in the Mafia "and we don't need anymore than we already have."

Ms. Hirsch cited several achievements during her first term on the council.

AMONG THOSE were the new police facility, which has helped reduce crime, improved fire protection, better relations between county and city governments, implementation of a cable television board and the Monahans Draw Park project.

The head of Odessans for Decency, Joe Seay, asked Ms. Hirsch why she voted against an ordinance aimed at curbing prostitution.

She explained that she believed, as an attorney, there were a sufficient number of laws on the books to deal with the problem without adding more.

MISD trustees renew contracts for faculty, administrative staff

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The Midland Independent School District Tuesday completed its annual process of renewing administrative and faculty contracts following a five-hour executive session. Trustees approved as recommended the hiring of all its professional staff with contracts varying in length from one to three years.

The annual employee supervision and evaluation process begins in September and concludes in February, according to Superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi.

By law, school districts in Texas are required to evaluate professional staff three times per year. Two appraisers also are required in determining performance levels of faculty.

In other action, trustees:

— Approved a plan to implement the faculty career ladder as required by House Bill 72.

According to Ronald W. Whitmore, director of Human Resource Services, a committee will be established to implement the career ladder and determine which faculty members are eligible for Level II positions and collect the $2,000 each

Many Midlanders think MX program unnecessary

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Although President Reagan successfully lobbied Congress to spend another $1.5 billion on the MX program, some of the missile's congressional critics claimed the weapon is expensive and unnecessary and many Midlanders apparently agree.

Of the 13 randomly selected area residents polled Tuesday on the MX by the Reporter-Telegram, eight were against the program, four supported it and one was sitting on the fence, though she said she was "more pro than con." Those opposed to the MX seemed motivated less by their horror of nuclear weapons than by their feeling that this particular nuclear weapon isn't worth the money.

"I think it's expensive, and right now we can get along without it," said Pauline Hobbs, 1003 Neely Ave., a secretary.

"I just don't think we need it," said Phyllis Vicker, 2300 N. A St., a bank manager. "We spend enough on defense as it is."

Barney McCasland, 4402 Leddy Drive, said the country "ought to build what we can afford — and I don't think we can afford (the MX) this year."

The engineering technician said he wasn't against defense per se, but thought the MX could be safely deleted from the budget. But for Mike Kelly, 4110 Amistad Drive, the missile is necessary as a deterrent.

Pauline Hobbs

Mike Kelly

Ann Ellis

Ethel Duson

"I feel like we need to be well fortified," said the businessman. "The only way we can deter the Russians is to be stronger than they are."

Ann Ellis, 3907 Pleasant, agreed the MX is needed:

"We have to have a show of force," the secretary said, so the Soviets will fear a reprisal "if they try anything. Each will be afraid the other will do it."

For Jud Walton, 3101 Gulf Ave., Reagan's plea to Congress not to undercut the Geneva arms-control talks by unilaterally scrapping the MX is especially persuasive.

"I think we should build it," said the lawyer. "It's a bargaining chip. I don't think it's useless."

And Victor Rubalcava, 4700 Boulder Dr., agrees the MX is a necessary part of a strong defense program, "if they're going to use it the right way."

"If Russia uses theirs, we'd have to use ours," said the service-department employee.

But Leslie Carman, a librarian from Stanton, feared that with the MX, "We're increasing the risk that we may eventually go to war." And Ethel Duson, 713 S. Clay St., was unconvinced of the need for more MX missiles, and suggested another use for the $1.5 billion they would cost:

"They should take some of that money and put some jobs in," said Ms. Duson, who is unemployed. "We need jobs more than we need missiles."

Marrow not suitable for leukemia victim

HOUSTON (AP) — Blood tests show that the bone marrow from the newly found brother and sister of leukemia patient Steven Akin is "not suitable" for a transplant that could save the life of the 24-year-old Victoria man.

Doctors at M. D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute said on Tuesday that tests of the blood of John Davis of Chicago and Barbara Davis of Green Bay, Wis., show that their bone marrow is a mismatch with that of Akin, a brother they met for the first time last week.

Akin learned of the typing mismatch while on a fishing trip with his 2-year-old son and his newly found brother, John Davis.

"I was kind of shocked by it all," said Akin. "I had to tell John. He cried. But I got him to believe in me, finally."

Akin said he would follow the therapy planned by his doctors.

"I've got two kids and now I've got another brother and sister," he said."If chemotherapy is what they want that's what they'll get."

Dustin Akin, 2, nestled in his father's arms and the leukemia patient noted, "I have to be around for this guy."

He said he dreaded the side effects of the chemicals, which includes nausea and hair loss.

"If I had any hair, I'd probably pull it out," joked Akin, who already has lost most of his hair.

The physicians said that although the bone marrow transplant represented Akin's best chance of survival, there was a slim chance that traditional chemotherapy would give him a remission.

Akin, Davis, 21, Ms. Davis, 28, and two other living sisters were among seven siblings separated as children and raised apart. Two sisters raised in Texas had bone marrow incompatible with Akin so he asked a court to open his adoption records. The records showed that his parents had placed other children for adoption in Chicago.

News stories of Akin's search for his siblings resulted in the discovery of John and Barbara Davis. The brothers and sisters were united at an emotional meeting in Houston last week. Akin said that he found that two other sisters had died.

Akin was diagnosed in 1983 as having acute myelogenous leukemia. He achieved a remission after one chemotherapy series, but suffered a relapse last January. Doctors said that a transplant of compatible bone marrow, usually from a sibling, represented his best chance of survival. When his known sisters proved incompatible, Akin started searching for his missing siblings.

Dr. Harald E. Fischer said blood tests showed Akin was not compatible at all with Ms. Davis and only "partially identical" with Davis. The doctor said that, ironically, Davis was compatible with the two Texas sisters who are well and not in need of a transplant.

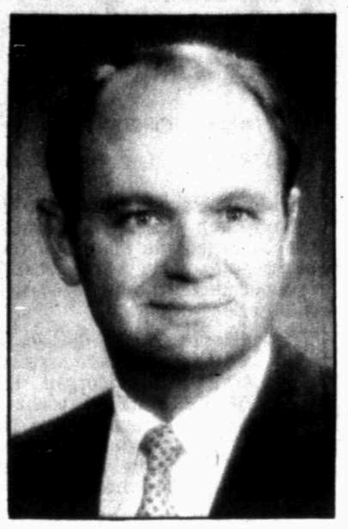

Dr. Miloslav Beran said he informed Akin of the mismatch and that he was "very calm."

"I was not happy to make such a call," said Beran. "I (had been) optimistic."

The doctor said that Akin's chances of survival with the matched bone marrow transplant was about 40 percent. Without the transplant, the odds, said Beran, drop to about "one in 20," or five percent.

Ex-MRT chief named to management post

From Staff Reports

George B. Irish

George B. Irish, publisher of the Beaumont Enterprise and former publisher of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, has been named to one of two new senior management positions within the newspaper division of the Hearst Corp. The announcement was made by Frank A. Bennack Jr., president and chief executive officer of Hearst, and Robert J. Danzig, vice president and general manager of Hearst newspapers.

As group publisher, Irish will have supervisory responsibility over the Texas community newspapers, which include the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Plainview Daily Herald, Laredo Times and Jasper News-Boy. He will retain his position as publisher of the Beaumont Enterprise, a recent Hearst acquisition.

At the same time it was announced that Jospeh T. Lyons, publisher of Hearst's Times Union and Knickerbocker News in Albany, N.Y., will serve as group publisher for the Midwest community group, which includes the Edwardsville, (Ill.) Intelligencer, Bad Axe (Mich.) Daily Tribune and Midland (Mich.) Daily News as well as Hearst's Herald Community Newspapers, headquartered in South Gate, Calif. He will remain as publisher of the Albany newspapers.

In announcing the moves, Danzig said, "In the past half dozen years, we have added eight dailies and 40 weeklies to the Hearst newspaper group. Since we intend to continue this expansion through both new acquisitions and internal growth, we need a management structure that can accomodate substantial expansion. The new positions of group publisher will give us the increased management capability we need to continue our growth."

Prior to serving as publisher of the Reporter-Telegram, Irish was publisher of the Midland Daily News. Before joining that newspaper, he served in a number of executive positions with Lindsay-Schaub Newspapers.

More than $2,400 in goods reported stolen

From Staff Reports

More than $2,400 worth of television sets, stereo systems and jewelry were reported stolen from a southside residence Tuesday.

Mario Torres, 1501 S. Atlanta, told police he had been out of town since 11 a.m. Sunday and returned home at 9 p.m. Tuesday to discover the burglary. Entry was gained by breaking into a southeast bedroom window, which was taped with masking tape to minimize the breakage sound, reports said.

In addition to items taken from the house, about half a tank of unleaded gasoline was siphoned out of Torres' 1983 Ford pickup, which was parked inside the carport, reports said.

Almost $500 worth of equipment was reported missing Tuesday from a garage at 210 S. Fort Worth. According to reports, Floyd Hall reported Hall's Garage was burglarized between 5:30 p.m. Monday and 8:30 a.m. Tuesday. Entry was through a southside restroom window.

A 1979 Ford Pinto owned by Donnie Kemp of 4623 Laura, reportedly was burglarized between 7 p.m. Monday and 8 a.m. Tuesday while it was parked in front of the residence. According to Cheri Kemp, cassette tapes and a carrying case valued at a total of $284.70, were taken. Attempts were made to remove an in-dash stereo, reports said. There were no signs of forced entry.

A 1974 Buick Limited owned by Preston Brockinton, 1317 E. Cuthbert, was burglarized while it was parked in the driveway between midnight Monday and 6:40 a.m. Tuesday, reports said. The trunk was entered by removing the back seat of the car and a .22-caliber rifle and a .38-caliber snub-nosed revolver, valued at a total of $500, were taken.

Man dies in mishap after apparently falling asleep

From Staff Reports

A 46-year-old Carson, Calif., man was killed Tuesday night and three passengers were injured after he apparently fell asleep at the wheel of his car and overturned the vehicle at 11:50 p.m. at Pyote in Ward County.

Talmadge Ross Jr., 46, was pronounced dead at the scene at 12:54 a.m. today by Ward County Justice of the Peace L.A. Wester, according to the Department of Public Safety. His body was taken to Wilson-Miller Funeral Home in Monahans.

Ross was westbound on Interstate 20 in a 1984 Buick when he fell asleep and ran off the road at the 66 Exit, DPS reports said. The car struck a culvert, became airborne and landed upside down in the roadway, blocking both westbound lanes.

Injured were Eliza Johnson, 32, and Paul Johnson, 2, both of Los Angeles, and Henry Yates, 53, address unknown. The Johnsons were taken to Ward County Memorial Hospital in Monahans where Ms. Johnson was listed in critical condition with neck and back injuries. The child was in good condition with bruises and abrasions, DPS reports said.

Yates was listed in critical condition at Odessa Medical Center Hospital with a broken leg and back injuries, reports said.

Odessan confesses to robbery of Chap center

From Staff Reports

A 29-year-old Odessa man confessed Tuesday to the robbery of the ticket office at Chaparral Center Thursday, but continued to deny he used a pistol in the incident, police said today.

Eddie Wayne Roberson, charged with aggravated robbery, remained in Midland County Jail this morning on a $40,000 bond set Tuesday afternoon by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine.

According to reports, Roberson told officers he had used a piece of pipe when he held up Midland College student Shannon Bernard, who was selling tickets to the Tom Jones concert at the Chaparral Center.

However, an air-gun identified by the victim Tuesday as the object used in the robbery was found in his Odessa apartment.

According to police, no money from the robbery was recovered. The victim said she surrendered $707, but Roberson said he robbed her of $500, police said.

Midland police detectives, with two Ector County sheriff's deputies, executed a search warrant at 9:10 a.m. Tuesday at the suspect's Odessa residence at 2407 W. 3rd St., reports said.

Damage discovered on the right side of his car, a blue, Chevrolet Camaro Z-28, is believed to have occurred in a hit-and-run accident that happened near The Hillander School after the robbery, police said. Paint samples of his car and those from the car that was hit have been sent to the Texas Department of Public Safety lab in Austin.

Roberson's car, which had a T-top, fits a description of a car that had been spotted the day before the robbery parked near The Hillander School. Reports said witnesses saw a man in the car watching the Chaparral Center through binoculars. The car was again sighted parked under a clump of trees on the Midland College campus prior to the robbery.

According to police, the victim said the man who robbed her had purchased two tickets to the Tom Jones concert.

Ms. Martell and Jamierson said they would have voted for the ordinance on prostitution.

Ms. Martell said she would explore the possibility of civil service for city employees because she had seen it work in other places.

Jamierson said he would look into water problems regarding wastewater sales to generate revenue but he would oppose recycling treated wastewater for home use.

Cox took exception to Rowe's contention that, from 1980 to 1985, the city's budget had increased 94 percent. Cox contended the increase was 76 percent.

Rowe said lack of council responsiveness to citizen input and fiscal responsibility were some of the reasons he decided to seek a council seat.

Rowe reiterated his opposition to spending taxpayers' monies for outside consultants and cited the recently completed employee compensation study, which he said cost $58,000 and could have been done locally.

RESPONDING TO a question from Seay on pari-mutuel betting, Rowe said he "has trouble with any kind of gambling" and the ties it usually has to organized crime. Cox said he personally favors pari-mutuel betting.

Seay questioned Ms. Hirsch, Ms. Martell and Jamierson about, what he termed, pornographic magazines available at family-type stores and whether they would support boycotts of such establishments.

Ms. Hirsch said she would not support a censorship ordinance, Ms. Martell said she did not believe such material should be out where children could be exposed to it, that parents needed to monitor their children more closely, and Jamierson said he would support Seay's efforts to the point that such material was kept from his children.

Mute twin adapting to life without brother

HURST (AP) — Only one other person really understood Roscoe Conklin, and he died just before Christmas.

Cancer claimed the life of Roscoe's twin brother, Robert, ending their life-long bond of love and warm friendship. The painful death left 67-year-old Roscoe without his best friend and roommate for the first time in his life.

A special closeness bound Roscoe and Robert, because no one really knew what they said to each other. Unable to speak since birth, they developed a special form of communication that only they understood.

A wordless vocabulary of gestures, facial expressions and eye contacts allowed them to share their thoughts and feelings.

Together, they filled their lives with an idyllic happiness that most people only know during their childhoods. It seemed that they knew what each other was thinking all of the time.

Only close relatives and other daily companions could recognize one twin from the other. The bald twins were distinguished by name bracelets.

Smiling and almost constantly cheerful, the gray-fringed duo kept a steady vigil on the front porch of the Autumn Leaf Lodge nursing home for 10 years. Alert and engaging, they charmed nearly everyone who entered the door.

"They were the spokesmen for the facility as far as greeting family members," said Renee Ellis, director of nursing. "There was not a family member here who did not know them well."

The identical twins spent their days unhindered by their muteness. Active and outgoing, they busied themselves with self-appointed tasks. Turning lights on and off, closing drapes and picking up glasses helped give order and usefulness to their lives.

Their niece, Marion Carlisle, of Colleyville, said the family loved them, knew them well and could communicate with them slightly. As a youngster, she even taught them to read and write a few words.

"A lot of people say they were retarded, but I don't think so," Ms. Carlisle said. "They were just untrained. They never forgot anything."

The twins lost their chance to live a normal life and learn like other children when their mother fell ill with uremic poisoning during her pregnacy. Born Feb. 3, 1918, in Houston, the twins faced an uncertain life.

Thanks to their mother's love and determination, life held more in store for the twins than seemed possible at first. Since the twins only suffered speech and minor visual impediments, she refused to place them in an institution.

Unable to find a special school that would teach the twins to lead productive lives, she decided to rear them at home.

That happy life changed in 1970 when their mother died. Their sister took charge and placed them in a Glenrose nursing home near her.

Later, the sister moved to Colleyville. The twins followed her to the Mid-Cities to live in the Hurst nursing home.

She died recently, and Ms. Carlisle assumed the protective role, continuing a family tradition of more than a half a century.

Occasionally, Ms. Carlisle took them home for a visit. Gardening became a favorite pastime for them on those trips.

"They liked to garden," Ms. Carlisle said. "We only had trouble once. They couldn't tell the difference between the weeds and the vegetables."

Although the family and the nursing home staff expected Roscoe to suffer an inconsolable grief after Robert's death, he surprised them. A solitary figure for the first time in his life, he maintained his cheerful disposition.

"We all thought it would be hard on him," Ms. Ellis said. "He had already gone through the grieving before his death. He handled it quite well."

Now, Roscoe greets the guests, helps around the nursing home and smiles often.

GISD renews contracts for all but two faculty

From Staff Reports

The Greenwood Independent School District Board of Trustees Tuesday renewed contracts for all but two of its faculty members for the 1985-86 school year.

Following a three-hour executive session, trustees approved the one-year contract extensions. The board refused to release the names of the two teachers whose contracts were not renewed.

According to Superintendent Sam Martin, "If the two teachers want to come out in public and explain why they were not re-employed, it's up to them to do so."

Martin said an estimated 15 teacher contracts were renewed on a probationary basis. State law requires teachers be signed to probationary contracts during their first two years of employment with a school district.

In other business, trustees:

— Heard results of a community-wide telephone survey of the GISD band program. According to Gail Watson, a member of the GISD band boosters, 90 percent of those surveyed indicated appreciation and support of the program. Currently, 220 students participate in instrumental music. The figure represents an increase of 35 students above the 1983-84 membership.

— Approved payment of bills, including a $17,000 bill from Energas Corp.

in merit pay. The committee will consist of two central office administrators; a senior high school and freshman high school principal; senior high school and freshman high school teacher; junior high school principal; junior high school teacher; two elementary school principals; and two elementary school teachers.

Baressi said MISD must distribute a minimum of $30 per teacher in average daily attendance; or a total of $482,640 in 1984-85.

To date, 497 MISD faculty have applied for a place on the career ladder. Of those, 242 will be eligible, he said.

In addition, Baressi suggested to trustees that the district phase out its Performance Based Salary Supplement — a locally supported merit pay program — as faculty become eligible for the state supported career ladder. In time, non-faculty employees (librarians, counselors, etc.) would replace positions currently held by teachers on PBSS and become eligible for merit pay on a local basis.

— Accepted an official Midland Centennial Poster from Texas American Bank in honor of the city's 100th anniversary.

— Accepted a gift of $540 from the Travis Elementary School to purchase 12-inch Readiness Globes for the school primary grades.

— Authorized the district to seek bids to purchase Lee High School Band uniforms.

— Approved a proposal to enclose and air condition the district's print shop. Cost of the project must not exceed $20,000.

— Approved a request by Midland Alamo YMCA to use school facilities for its summer program.

— Approved a request by Mount Calvary Missionary Baptist Church to rent facilities at Milam Elementary School.

Camera reduces smoking

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The presence of a video camera outside the restrooms at Huntsville High School apparently is helping to reduce the use of marijuana on campus, officials say.

While marijuana smoking in the girls' and boys' restrooms has ceased, it will move to other areas, probably off school grounds, said Gary Collins, superintendent of the Huntsville Independent School District.

"It won't eliminate it, but at least we're moving it to another location and making it less accessible," Collins said. "Before, anytime anyone wanted to smoke they would slip into the restroom."

The camera was installed March 4 after officials at the 1,500-student school smelled what they believed was marijuana odor coming from the restrooms, which are next to an assistant principal's office.

Taped evidence to air in murder-for-hire case

From Staff Reports

Videos and tape recordings in the case of a 28-year-old Midland man charged in the attempted murder-for-hire of his brother's ex-wife were expected to be given today to members of the Midland County Grand Jury.

Muhammed M. Majid, 3601 Andrews Highway, Apt. 706, has been charged with soliciting an undercover agent to kill the ex-wife of Khalid Majid, 30. The brothers, who lived together, work at the Kent Kwik Convenience Store on east U.S. Highway 80 and Fairgrounds Road.

Majid was arrested Saturday after the second alleged meeting to discuss the payoff for the murder of the Abilene woman, according to officers with the Midland County Sheriff's Office.

Reports said Majid was hedging on paying the undercover sheriff's department officer an undisclosed amount of money although the officer had shown him a staged photo of the 24-year-old Abilene woman's body, "bloodied" with ketchup and lying in a field.

Officials said the undercover officer was wired for sound during the meeting Saturday. A Department of Public Safety criminal investigation van was parked nearby, filming the two men as they stood in front of a grocery-laundry store on Fairgrounds Road and Pecan Avenue, reports said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Junior high class gives state $16.75 for budget

AUSTIN (AP) — A junior high class that wanted to help the state out of its budget crunch has pitched in $16.75.

Realizing that state lawmakers are short of money, a seventh-grade history class at Bedichek Junior High in Austin decided to take up a collection.

"The class wanted to take on a worthwhile project and read in the newspapers about the state's financial problems. They decided that they should do whatever they could to help out, so they have been collecting money for the past week for the state's treasury," said Bill Cryer, spokesman for state Treasurer Ann Richards.

The 29-member class collected money in their neighborhood and presented the $16.75 to Ms. Richards on Tuesday.

Residency constitutional

AUSTIN (AP) — It is constitutional to require a person to live in Texas for the 12 months preceding enrollment if he wants to pay resident tuition at a state-supported college, an attorney general's opinion says.

But a requirement of longer than one year could cause problems, the opinion said.

"In all 50 states, a distinction is made between residents and nonresidents of the state regarding the tuition payable by students at state-supported colleges and universities," said the opinion signed by Attorney General Jim Mattox.

State law says a student may pay the lower resident tuition rate only if he has lived in Texas for the 12 months before he enrolls in college. It also says that after living in Texas for at least 12 months, a nonresident student may be reclassified as a resident.

"Residency requirements of one year have been held to be reasonable and constitutional," said the opinion released Tuesday.

However, it said, a residency requirement of longer than one year "would probably raise constitutional questions which have not yet been considered or determined by the courts."

And a flat requirement denying students the opportunity to establish Texas residency during their college careers "probably would not be upheld by the courts."

Heart disease No. 1 killer

AUSTIN (AP) — More Americans have died of coronary heart disease during each of the past 25 years than died in all the nation's 20th century wars, says a University of Texas professor who is writing a history of the illness.

Professor Clarence Lasby has been awarded a $3,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities to do the work, the university announced Tuesday.

Lasby, a former chairman of the UT history department, said he will concentrate on coronary heart disease since the 1890s, with attention to changes in diagnosis and treatment, cultural forces affecting the disease and efforts to control it.

"At the beginning of the 20th century, the medical profession had not recognized coronary heart disease as a clinical entity," Lasby said.

"Neither public nor private efforts have succeeded in establishing an effective, long-term national policy. The high number of fatalities constitute, in part, a failure in public policy and public education," he said.

Judge blocks blue laws

HOUSTON (AP) — Brazos County Attorney Jim Kuboviak is being blocked from enforcing the Texas blue law by a district judge in Houston.

State District Judge Frank O. White's temporary restraining order bars Kuboviak from prosecuting employees of Academy Sporting Goods for selling prohibited items on Sundays. Kuboviak had threatened to arrest employees.

Academy successfully has fought the blue law in Harris County district courts.

The blue law, which bans sale of certain items on consecutive Saturdays and Sundays, currently is undergoing scrutiny in the Texas Legislature.

White is scheduled on April 2 to consider a request from the sporting goods store to expand the restraining order to an injunction.

U..S., Mexico to meet

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. members of Congress and their Mexican counterparts will meet in Mexico in May for talks on drug trafficking, immigration and border trade, a spokesman for U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm said Tuesday.

Gramm, R-Texas, is Senate chairman of the U.S.-Mexico Interparliamentary Council. His House of Representatives counterpart is Texas Congressman and House Agriculture Committee Chairman Eligio "Kika" de la Garza.

Gramm spokesman Larry Neal said the meeting will take place May 10-12 at Queretaro, a small town north of Mexico City. He said Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid will speak at the opening ceremony.

Neal said Gramm, de la Garza and Mexican Chamber of Deputies Majority Leader Humberto Lugo Gil agreed on the meeting time, location and agenda Tuesday.

Senator backs legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said Tuesday he is backing legislation to increase the cost of "Duck Stamps" and create wildlife refuge entrance fees for nature-lovers so more coastal marshlands can be protected from encroaching development.

Bentsen said Texas has lost over 600,000 acres of "wetlands" — marshy coastal land that many fish, shellfish and other wildlife rely upon at some point during their life cycles.

He said the nation is losing an estimated 458,000 acres of wetlands a year to dredging and filling.

Bentsen said hunters would support and increase in the cost of Migratory Bird Hunting and Conservation Stamps ("Duck Stamps") over a four-year period if non-hunters such as birdwatchers and wildlife photographers also pay a "fair share" through refuge entrance fees.

The bill is also sponsored by Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I.

Officers take witness stand in kidnapping case

CLEBURNE, Texas (AP) — Four Texas Rangers, an FBI agent and a deputy sheriff recalled in court testimony the high-speed chase and shootout that led to the daring rescue under fire of a kidnapped Alvarado girl.

The officers took the witness stand Tuesday afternoon in the aggravated kidnapping trial of Michael Lynn Mills, 27, of Dallas, and James Wesley Foote, 34, of Arlington and Alvarado.

Mills, Foote and three others are accused of kidnapping Amy McNiel, the 13-year-old daughter of a prominent businessman, on Jan. 11.

Also testifying Tuesday was Don McNiel, who described the 2½-day ordeal that began when his daughter was abducted at gunpoint from her brother's Jeep on the way to school.

McNiel told of series of threats, phone calls and frantic drives to phone booths in Dallas, near Tyler and near Mount Pleasant and of his despair when the kidnappers failed to pick up the ransom.

"It looked pretty bleak," he told the jury. "I think I was crying."

As the discouraged father headed home with two FBI agents, he said he passed a Ranger car with its windows shot out and its radiator smoking.

Then, he said, "a voice came over the radio. It said, 'I've got Amy and she's alright.' "

The officers told of spotting a suspicious vehicle during a stakeout at the deserted rural service station where McNiel was to drop off $100,000 in ransom money in the predawn hours of Jan. 13.

They described pursuing the car at speeds of more than 100 miles an hour across three East Texas counties during which they were fired on with shotguns.

"What did you do when the shooting started?" asked Assistant District Attorney Bill Mason.

"We ducked," replied Ranger Joe Frank Wilie, whose burning car McNiel had seen by the side of the road.

The chase ended when the suspects pulled into in the yard of a residence near Saltillo. The officers said Mills and Foote jumped out of the car, took cover and resumed shooting.

"They no sooner stopped the car when they opened fire on our vehicle with shotguns," said FBI Agent Gladden Nesmith.

"When we arrived, the only thing I saw and heard was guns flashing and gunfire," said Ranger Howard "Slick" Alfred.

The officers said they returned the fire.

Deputy Sheriff D.J. Moulder and Ranger John Dendy said they made their way to the suspect's car, where Miss McNiel was crouched on the rear floor.

A sheriff's deputy leads alleged kinappers James Wesley Foote, center, and Michael Lynn Mills to a waiting squad car at the Johnson County Courthouse in Cleburn Monday afternoon

"She turned around and asked if I was the police," Moulder said. "I said I was. She jumped out of the car and got in my arms and we took off."

Using his body as a shield, Moulder delivered the girl to the waiting arms of Alfred.

"I took Amy and went to my car to get her out of the way," Alfred said.

After the five suspects surrendered, Ranger John Aycock said he walked up to Mills, who was lying wounded on the driveway.

Bill would protect eyesight

AUSTIN (AP) — Bills to help problem drinkers and exempt some farm and ranch equipment from property taxes have been approved in the state Senate.

Those lawmakers also on Tuesday approved a measure that would allow solutions other than silver nitrate to be placed in children's eyes within two hours of birth.

Silver nitrate has been required for newborns to prevent blindness resulting from venereal diseases, but the state health department asked for a change in the law because other solutions have been found to be effective.

Bill sponsor Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, said silver nitrate had caused "injuries in some cases."

A Senate bill from Sen. Chet Brooks would authorize peace officers or magistrates to release a person picked up for public intoxication if another adult takes responsibility for him or if the person agrees to participate in an alcohol treatment program.

Brooks, D-Pasadena, said releasing problem drinkers would stop "the revolving door" into city jails. The Texas Commission on Alcoholism has said 29 percent of arrests in 1983 were for public intoxication.

The measure was sent to the House on voice vote.

Senate debate centered on a Glasgow bill to exempt from property taxes seed processing equipment and dairy equipment, including milking machines.

Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Canyon, offered an amendment that opponents said also would exempt grain storage elevators. Sarpalius withdrew that amendment and proposed another which he said would exempt only grain storage enclosures on the farm. The amendment failed 26-5.

Glasgow's bill was approved on voice vote.

Also Tuesday, the House tentatively approved a Senate bill that would set up state regulation of health spas.

Bright quits A&M board after voted out as chairman

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Dallas businessman H.R. "Bum" Bright says he quit the Texas A&M University System board of regents because he didn't want to be part of a board "where votes are pulled like puppets on a string" by Gov. Mark White.

Bright, an oilman and principal owner of the Dallas Cowboys professional football team, had served as chairman of the nine-member board since 1981 when he was appointed by former Gov. Bill Clements, a Republican.

He was removed as chairman Tuesday, then quit the board completely after complaining that White insisted on his support in a possible re-election bid.

White issued a three-paragraph statement, saying he was surprised at Bright's decision but refused comment on the allegations.

"I had told him in recent weeks that I appreciated his efforts as chairman of the Board of Regents," the governor said. "He has demonstrated strong leadership in holding down university costs during a difficult period in state budgeting history."

By a 7-0 vote, agribusinessman David Eller of Houston was named to succeed Bright as chairman. Eller, along with new vice chairman Joe Reynolds, a Houston attorney, are both White appointees to the board.

Eller and Bright abstained from voting.

After the balloting, Bright said he had a statement to make. He told of meeting White a few weeks ago when he was reminded by the governor that "you have served the last two years at my pleasure because I control the votes on the board," according to Bright.

Bright said the governor told him he had done an excellent job, but he quoted the governor as saying: "However, if I run for re-election I've got to know the chairman of the board of Texas A&M University is behind me."

Lawmakers seek compromise on state water plan

AUSTIN (AP) — State lawmakers attempting to compromise on two proposed comprehensive water plans fell short on coming to terms over the differences.

A 10-member water conference committee decided Tuesday to look things over carefully before adopting or agreeing to any legislation.

"We want it to read just right," said Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, sponsor of the $1.2 billion Senate water plan.

The five representatives and five senators are attempting to agree upon a state water plan suitable to both houses, as well as one that will be approved by voters.

The House approved an $800 million proposal by Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Amarillo, earlier in the session.

The committee took a stab at streamlining differences involving ground water rights. Montford's bill allows the state to regulate ground water pumping if local voters fail to do so.

Craddick's bill calls for local voters to reject controls on ground water pumping.

"Water is private property by law," Craddick reminded the Senate side. He said water under the ground belongs to the property owner.

The Senate side urged for state control of underground water in critical areas of the state.

The group agreed on an in-between resolution in which the Texas Water Development Board or a not yet established board would study why critical areas voted not to establish water districts.

If the board decides the area should be regulated then a recommendation would be made to the Legislature so it could establish such a district in that area.

The committee tentatively agreeded on setting a permit fee for water wells to not exceed $100.

The Senate version had set fees depending on the size of the pipe, production capacity and amount of water produced by the water well.

"If you put a fix on production we'll put agriculture out of business," said Rep. J.W. "Buck" Buchanan, D-Dumas.

Another unresolved difference concerns the amount of property tax set for maintaining a water district.

Panel approves grades review

AUSTIN (AP) — A Senate subcommittee has approved a proposal that would soften the new no-pass, no-play rule by requiring a weekly review of grades to qualify Texas students for extracurricular activities.

The proposal by Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Amarillo, also would require students to maintain passing averages only in classes required for graduation and not in elective courses.

A subcommittee of the Senate Education Committee added the amendment Tuesday to an omnibus education bill by Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, and forwarded the proposal to the full committee.

The proposal is similar to House Bill 1152 by Rep. Bill Haley, D-Center, chairman of the House Public Education Committee. The House bill is pending before a subcommittee.

Sarpalius said he was surprised by the subcommittee's quick approval of his proposal.

Obviously, this is not something that the governor is excited about," Sarpalius told the Houston Chronicle.

He said the amendment, which will be added to Senate Bill 525 by Parker, would not discourage students from taking more difficult electives.

Last year, the Legislature last year approved HB 72, which requires students to maintain at least a 70 percent average in all courses in order to participate in extracurricular activities.

The law, which has been interpreted by the State Board of Education to mean that a student failing one course is disqualified for six weeks, has been criticized as being too punitive.

Gov. Mark White has reiterated his support for a no-pass, no-play rule and has been resistant to changing the rule to a weekly review process, saying it could create additional paperwork for teachers.

Students, under a law approved by the 1981 Legislature, are required to accumulate 21 credits in order to graduate. Of that total, seven of those credits can be in elective courses.

BAG YOUR LUNCH

If you packed a lunch today, you're not alone. Brown bagging has become a "hot" trend. In fact, statistics show that approximately nine million brown bag lunches are consumed in this country each year!

Given the current interest in nutrition and fitness, not to mention time and money, it's not hard to figure out why so many people — of all ages and lifestyles — are carrying brown bags. By packing their own lunches, people have much greater control over what they eat at the midday meal.

Nutrition experts recommend that we eat a wide variety of foods from each of the six major food groups each day. Adults need four servings each day from the CEREAL/BREAD group; two servings from the MEAT/POULTRY/FISH/EGGS/LEGUMES/NUTS group; two servings from the DAIRY PRODUCTS group; two servings from the VEGETABLES group; two servings from the FRUITS group; and one serving (one tablespoon) from the OILS/FATS/MARGARINES group. Keep in mind, however, that the recommended number of servings differs with age, lifestyle and physical activity.

Children, because they are growing, need more basic nutrients in relation to body weight than adults. The adolescent years often bring the demands of increased activity and rapidly-accelerated growth. Thus, sound eating habits are especially important during the teen years. Teenage girls, often preoccupied with weight control, may be deficient in iron, calcium and other nutrients. For the sake of future health, it is important that they consume a diet that meets their individual dietary needs.

Dieters need to choose wisely from the various food groups to be sure that the fewer calories they're eating still provide a wide assortment of essential nutrients in their diets. Busy working folk and active homemakers alike, pressured by demanding schedules, should pay particular heed to well-balanced diets to ensure the stamina they need to match their fast-paced lifestyles.

Since nutritionists recommend that lunch make up one-third of the daily nutritional quota, what goes into that brown bag is very important. It's easy to see why the time-honored sandwich is the basis of most carried lunches. It combines good-for-you, mixed-grain bread with meats or other protein foods, vegetables, fruits and cheeses or other dairy products needed for a well-balanced diet.

And the bread is more than just packaging. Mixed-grain bread contributes important nutrients to the diet, including complex carbohydrates, B-vitamins, protein, iron, phosphorous and calcium, as well as dietary fiber.

Each of the sandwich recipes and menus included here is unique, designed to meet the nutritional requirements and taste preferences of a specific age or lifestyle group. School kids, teenagers, dieters and busy execs — there's something here for almost everyone.

SANDWICH KABOBS TO GO

Here's a sandwich "packaged" a little differently — just for small fry. That old favorite, the peanut butter and jelly sandwich is cut into bite-size sections and threaded onto skewers, along with fruit and vegetable pieces. Pack kabobs into a plastic container before putting into lunch bag — or wrap in plastic wrap or foil.

- 2 slices Bread
- 3 tablespoons peanut butter
- 1 tablespoon jelly or jam
- 1/2 apple, cut into chunks*
- Lemon juice
- 1 to 2 stalks celery, cut into six 1-inch pieces

Spread bread slices with peanut butter. Top with jelly and spread to edges. Close sandwich. Using sharp knife, cut sandwich into 6 or 9 pieces. Brush apple chunks with lemon juice. On three 6 or 8-inch wood or bamboo skewers, thread sandwich pieces alternately with apple and celery pieces. Makes 1 serving.

*If desired, seedless grapes may be substituted.

NOTE: Sandwich sections, fruit and celery may be wrapped separately, then threaded onto skewers at lunchtime.

TEEN'S DELI SPECIAL

Here's a sandwich for teenage appetites. Use the ingredients below — or add and subtract to suit individual tastes. We've included a few suggestions for starters. It's a good idea to pack the tomato slices separately, adding them to the sandwich at lunchtime.

- 2 slices Bread
- 1/2 teaspoon corn oil margarine
- 1 tablespoon cream cheese, softened
- 2 teaspoons Italian dressing*
- 2 thin slices (1-1/2 oz.) cooked turkey, ham or roast beef
- 1 slice (1 oz.) creamy havarti, Swiss or Monterey Jack cheese
- 2 to 3 thin slices Bermuda onion (optional)
- 2 to 3 thin slices tomato
- Lettuce leaves

Spread one bread slice with margarine. Spread cream cheese on remaining bread slice; drizzle with dressing. Layer with remaining ingredients. Close sandwich. Makes 1 sandwich.

*If desired, mayonnaise or creamy blue cheese dressing may be substituted.

TIP: Vary filling by adding sliced cucumber, mustard, sprouts, thinly-sliced lunch meat, crisp-cooked bacon strips, green pepper rings, sliced avocado, chopped celery or sliced radishes.

Roast leg of lamb prepared with anchovy mixture

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

ANCHOVY LAMB

4-pound (about) leg of lamb (sirloin half)
2-ounce can rolled anchovies with capers, drained
1 tablespoon drained capers
4 cloves garlic, crushed

Cut off any excess fat from top of lamb. With a small sharp knife make 6 equidistant ½-inch wide deep slits in top surface of lamb. On a plate, with a fork, mash together caper-stuffed anchovies, drained capers and garlic until paste-like. Stuff mixture into slits in lamb.

Roast on a flat rack in a 350-degree oven; for rare lamb 20 to 25 minutes per pound or 140 degrees on meat thermometer; for medium 25 to 30 minutes per pound or 160 degrees on meat thermometer; for well-done 30 to 35 minutes per pound or 170 degrees on meat thermometer. Remove lamb to a hot serving platter and keep hot.

Skim fat from drippings; add 1 cup dry white wine; stir over low heat with a wooden spoon to get up drippings. Serve as a thin sauce with the lamb. Makes 6 servings.

Popular Scandinavian spice can be 'dill-icious'

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

The word dill is said to have come from the old Saxon word "dillan," meaning "to lull." It seems that the reeds of the plant were once played as pipes to soothe restless children to sleep.

Whether or not this is the true origin of the word, you're not likely to be lulled to sleep by these recipes. And you'll have a "dilly" of a time preparing them, since they're all microwave quick and easy.

The bright green, fernlike dill plant is easily grown at home, and ensures a good supply of fresh dill (which can be difficult to find in the market).

Instead, you'll find the dried leaves (dill weed) and the seeds of the plant — both of which are used in cooking.

Dill seeds are best known as the main flavoring agent in dill pickles. The flavor of the seeds is more pungent than that of the leaves, which tend to enhance rather than dominate a dish.

A favorite seasoning of Scandinavian cuisines, sprigs of fresh dill often are used to garnish open-face sandwiches, vegetable dishes and casseroles.

The delicate bouquet and subtle flavor of dill can wake up so many foods: sprinkle on cottage cheese, into soups and sauces, over grilled fish.

It's particularly tasty in dishes containing sour cream, eggs, cucumbers, potatoes or fresh green beans. Dill-icious!

DILLED CABBAGE IN SOUR CREAM

1 medium-size head cabbage
¼ cup water
1 cup sour cream
1 tbsp. dill seed
⅛ tsp. each salt and pepper
2 tsps. fresh chopped parsley

Wash cabbage and discard any limp or damaged outer leaves. Shred finely.

Place cabbage in glass casserole, add water, and cover. Microwave 7 to 8 minutes, stirring every 3 to 4 minutes, until cabbage is crisp-tender.

In small bowl combine sour cream, dill seed, salt and pepper, stirring to blend. Pour mixture over cabbage, tossing gently to cover.

Return casserole to microwave and cook, covered, 1 minute longer. Let stand 1 minute before serving. Garnish with chopped parsley.

Makes 6 servings.

Recipes 'spill the beans'

Copley News Service

Beans have been in the limelight ever since the dull-witted Jack planted his magical stash and out sprang the giant beanstalk.

Golden geese aside, the bean's magic can go twice as far within the confines of the kitchen. They are versatile, economical and they are nutritious, ranking as an excellent source of protein.

Before cooking, dry beans should be soaked. One method is the overnight salt-soak: Wash and sort beans and place in a large saucepan with 6 cups of water and 1 teaspoon salt per pound of beans. Cover and let stand overnight. Beans soaked overnight keep their shape and have more uniform texture than quick-soaked beans.

If you don't have time to soak beans overnight, however, try the quick soak method. Follow the above procedure but instead of soaking overnight, bring beans to a boil and cook for 2 minutes. Remove from heat, cover and let stand 1 hour.

PASTA FAGIOLI

1¼ cups dry navy beans
7 cups water
1 tsp. salt
1½ tsps. salt
⅓ cup oil
1 bay leaf
2-3 cloves garlic
3 tbsps. oil
3 carrots, diced
2 stalks celery, sliced
1 large onion, chopped
1-2 cloves garlic, crushed
1 tsp. dry oregano
½ tsp. dry basil
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
6-7 tomatoes, peeled and chunked
½ lb. shell macaroni
Chopped fresh parsley for garnish
Parmesan cheese for garnish

Combine beans, water and 1 teaspoon salt. Let stand overnight in cool place Add salt, two-thirds cup oil, bay leaf and whole garlic cloves. Simmer gently until beans are tender, 2 to 3 hours. Drain, reserve liquid, discard bay leaf and garlic.

Heat 3 tablespoons oil in large frypan; add carrots, celery and onion and cook until onion is soft. Add crushed garlic and seasonings and simmer 30 minutes. Add tomatoes and cook another 10 minutes. Cook macaroni in boiling salted water until just tender.

Combine beans, vegetables and drained pasta, along with 1½ cups bean liquid. Cover and simmer another 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Garnish with chopped parsley and serve with grated Parmesan cheese.

Serves 6 to 8.

BAKED BEANS

1 lb. dry navy beans
6 cups water
1 tsp. salt
1 medium onion studded with 2-3 cloves
2 garlic cloves
½ tsp. thyme
1 bay leaf
¼ cup butter or margarine
1 small onion, chopped
1 cup tomato paste
2 tbsps. dry parsley
¼ cup cognac
½ cup dry red wine
Salt and pepper to taste
1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
2 tomatoes (optional)
1 eggplant (optional)
Oil (optional)

Soak beans overnight in 6 cups water and 1 teaspoon salt. Drain.

Place bean in large kettle with onion, garlic cloves, thyme, bay leaf and water to cover. Simmer gently 1½ to 2 hours or until beans are tender. Drain; reserve 1 cup liquid; discard onion, bay leaf and garlic.

Melt butter or margarine in skillet and saute onion until tender. Add tomato paste, parsley, cognac, red wine, pepper and Worcestershire sauce. Drain beans and add to sauce; mix well.

Lightly grease large casserole and pour in beans. If desired, peel and slice tomatoes and eggplant thickly. Brush tomato and eggplant slices with oil and place under broiler a few minutes until browned on both sides. Overlap tomato and eggplant slices in a circle on top of beans.

Cover and bake at 325 F for 1 to 1½ hours.

Serves 6 to 8.

NAVY BEAN SOUP

1 lb. (2 cups) dry navy beans
6 cups water
1 tsp. salt
1 lb. ham hocks
2 cups water
1 bay leaf
4 peppercorns
3 whole cloves
1 cup fresh spinach, coarsely chopped
½ cup onion
⅔ cup mashed potato flakes
1 (28 oz.) can whole tomatoes
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 tsp. basil
1 tsp. oregano
1 tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. pepper

Place navy beans in large soup pot with 6 cups water and 1 teaspoon salt. Bing to boil. Boil 2 minutes; remove from heat. Allow to stand, covered, for 1 hour.

Add ham hocks, 2 cups water and bouquet garni made from bay leaf, peppercorns and cloves. Simmer over medium heat 1 to 1½ hours or until beans are tender.

Stir in spinach, onion, potato flakes, tomatoes, garlic, basil oregano, salt and pepper. Continue to simmmer 20 to 30 minutes. Remove ham hocks and bouquet garni.

Trim meat from ham hocks, dice and return to soup.

Makes 3½ quarts.

Today's pampered chickens fatter

By MERLE ELLIS

It's time for the first of our 1985 "Mail bag days." Keep those cards and letters coming — we'll answer them all, eventually.

One particular question seems to be of growing concern to many. I've received several letters with questions similar to this one:

Q.:"I have tried, unsuccessfully, to find out why today's chickens contain so much fat. Recently I wrote to Foster Farms to ask them this question. The people at Foster Farms ignored my question and, instead, sent me two coupons for free chickens. I sent them back! I did not want free chickens — I wanted an answer to my question: Why there is so much fat in today's chickens. Can you tell me? And can you tell me what can be done about it?"

A.: Basically, chickens are lazy. They don't do much but eat.

They're catered to, pampered, cared for and coddled in a heated, air-conditioned, cross-ventilated environment that would be the envy of more than a few folks I know. Under circumstances like that, anybody would get fat. I don't mean to be flip, but that, I believe is the basic bottom-line answer to your question.

A generation or so ago, the chickens that provided Sunday dinner for most families were raised in small flocks on small farms where they had to literally scratch for their food. Grandma may have scattered some grain once a day, but basically birds back then were what we call "free ranging." They wandered the barnyrd, scratched the ground and ate what they could find to eat. Today's chickens, by comparison, are pampered.

I have not been through the Foster Farms facilities in California, but I did have the opportunity last year to tour the Holly Farm facilities in and around Wilksboro, North Carolina. I assume they are similar, and what I saw would, I think, help explain the excess fat in today's chickens.

Most chickens are raised by independent farms working under contract with the major poultry processors like Holly Farms, Foster Farms, Perdue Poultry, Tyson Farms, etc. The chicken farmers, and there are an estimated 40,000 of them in the country, provide the "grow-out" or "broiler houses" as they are called, along with the tender loving care necessary to raise 21,000 baby chicks per broiler house to the tender (if somewhat fat and sassy) age of eight weeks.

The processor provides the chicks and the feed, along with instructions and specifications. The "grow-out" houses must be of a certain size, they must have fans and heaters to maintain proper temperatures. They must have canvas walls that can be raised and lowered to provide for proper ventilation. Food and water must be dispensed automatically and continuously.

Now stop and think about it. If you lived your life in a perfect climate, had nothing to do all day but eat, drink and chatter with your friends; if you didn't have to scratch out a living in this world; if everything you needed and wanted (well almost everything) was available on call — what would you do? You probably would gain weight.

As you will begin to notice when you reach my age, fat deposits have a tendency to sort of settle in certain spots. So it is with chickens. Most of the fat can be found in clumps at the vent, right where you take out the little package of giblets.

"What can be done about it?" Not much. I suppose we could encourage chicken farmers to get those critters on some sort of exercise program — take them jogging once or twice a day or something. Can you see it? Some 21,000 chickens running down a country road, led by a farmer in Adidas! Not likely.

You could just throw the fat away. Chickens are one of the best buys in the meat case, even with the excess of fat that you find on birds today. Or, you can do what I do, add the clumps of chicken fat to the stock pot when you make your own chicken stock from the necks, wing tips, boney back pieces, etc. (You do do that don't you?) The fat adds flavor to the stock and in the process renders out to yield the finest of fat for sauteing or frying the chicken or potatoes, or chicken fried steak or ...

DEAR ABBY

X-rays give best rib count

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: "Al C. in Newberg, Ore." wrote: "My wife and I have a disagreement we think you can settle. Do women have one more rib than men?"

Your answer was: "Dear Al: Men and women have the same number of ribs. (Who is ribbing whom?)"

Abby, you quote Scripture from time to time, so I would have thought that you would remember Genesis 2:21-22: "And the Lord caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept; and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead there of. And the rib, which the Lord God had taken from man, he made a woman, and brought her unto the man."

Women have one more rib than men. — FUNDAMENTALIST

DEAR FUNDAMENTALIST: With all due respect to the Old Testament, he who seeks the knowledge of the number of ribs hath man and woman had best look upon the X-rays of both. Then let him go forth and compareth.

CONFIDENTIAL TO S.G.J., TRENTON, N.J.: The Trenton Times is no more immune to typographical errors than any other newspaper, but sometimes it's wise to leave bad enough alone.

I submit an amusing exchange that appeared in this space five years ago to illustrate that point:

DEAR ABBY: My mother recently passed away after a brief illness. In the obituary published in our local newspaper, her age was given as 89.

Abby, my mother was only 80, so it was apparently a typographical error.

Now this may not seem very important to some people, but Mother was a very vain and prideful woman who would never tell her age.

Because of this typographical error in her obituary, everyone will think she was nine years older than she actually was.

Should we ask the newspaper editor to publish a correction? I say we should. The rest of the family says to skip it. — OUTVOTED IN OHIO

DEAR OUTVOTED: Sometimes it's better to leave bad enough alone. In support of my advice, I offer the following from the California Newspaper Publishers Association. It is an example of a typographical error in the classified section of a small-town newspaper, and the subsequent disastrous attempts to correct it:

(Monday) "FOR SALE — R.D. Jones has one sewing machine for sale. Phone 948-0707 after 7 p.m. and ask for Mrs. Kelly who lives with him cheap."

(Tuesday) "NOTICE — We regret having erred in R.D. Jones' ad yesterday. It should have read: 'One sewing machine for sale. Cheap. Phone 948-0707 and ask for Mrs. Kelly who lives with him after 7 p.m."

(Wednesday) "NOTICE — R.D. Jones has informed us that he has received several annoying telephone calls because of the error we made in his classified ad yesterday. His ad stands correct as follows: FOR SALE — R.D. Jones has one sewing machine for sale. Cheap. Phone 948-0707 p.m. and ask for Mrs. Kelly who loves with him."

(Thursday) "NOTICE — I, R.D. Jones, have NO sewing machine for sale. I SMASHED IT. Don't call 948-0707, as the telephone has been out. I have NOT been carrying on with Mrs. Kelly. Until yesterday she was my housekeeper, but she quit."

Americans consuming more chicken

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans consumed a record amount of meat and poultry last year but may ease back a bit in 1985, the Agriculture Department says.

In any case, the department's statistics show that the historic domination of beef in the American diet is being challenged.

According to the most recent figures, the average person ate 210.6 pounds of red meat and poultry in 1984. About 143.5 pounds of that was red meat, mainly beef, and 67.1 pounds poultry, mainly broilers.

This year, says the department's Economic Research Service, Americans are expected to cut back slightly to around 209.4 pounds each, on the average.

Meat eaters will consume an average of 138.5 pounds, five pounds less than in 1984. That would mean a jump in poultry consumption to 70.9 pounds, an increase of 3.8 pounds.

Those are equivalent retail weights of meat and poultry, the packaged cuts ordinarily found in supermarkets. The figures are based on federally inspected slaughter reports.

"Since 1980, beef and turkey consumption have remained relatively stable," the agency said in a recent report. "However, beef consumption is expected to decrease slightly in 1985 to its lowest level since 1980, and perhaps the lowest since the mid-1960s."

The determining factors have been cutbacks in cattle and hog inventories in recent years, reflecting many of the problems in the agricultural economy and the tight profit margins faced by producers.

On the other hand, poultry supplies are expected to be plentiful, buoyed by larger corn and soybean harvests last fall that helped ease high prices for feed.

"Almost all the signals to broiler producers are for increased production in 1985 — lower feed costs, less pork and relatively strong broiler prices given supply levels," the report said. "With the expanding general economy, demand for broilers will likely remain strong."

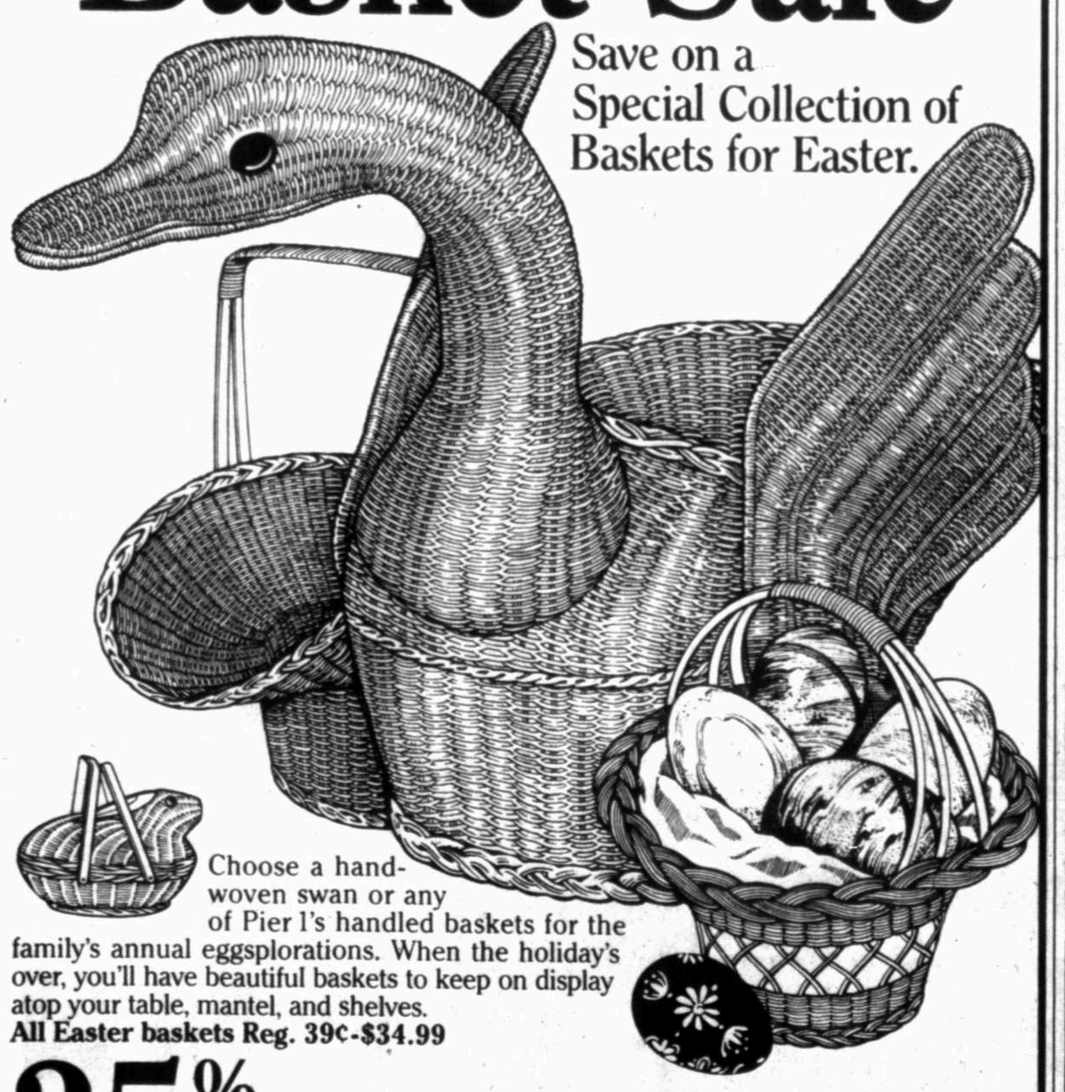

Looking at last year's per capita consumption figures, the average of 67.1 pounds rated poultry at No. 2, below beef consumption at about 78.5 pounds. If, as projected, poultry consumption in 1985 rises to 70.9 pounds, it would be within flapping distance of beef — which is expected to drop to 76.2 pounds.

The per capita pork consumption in 1984 averaged about 61.6 pounds, the third straight year that total poultry exceeded pork.

Other red meats are not even close. Lamb and mutton, at a per capita level of 1.52 pounds last year, is expected to drop to 1.3 pounds in 1985.

Chocolates cover wide range of tastes

By MINNIE BERNARDINO
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

All forms of chocolate come from the chocolate liquor extracted from cocoa butter, which in turn comes from the nib of dried, roasted and winnowed cocoa bean shells.

Unsweetened chocolate, also known as bitter, baker's (or baking) or cooking chocolate, is considered pure chocolate with about 45 percent cocoa butter. It is intended for all kinds of baking.

Bittersweet chocolate is slightly sweetened with additional cocoa butter added. It is not exactly the same as semisweet chocolate, which is sweeter and less chocolatey, although the two may be used interchangeably.

Semisweet chocolate also has flavoring added, usually vanilla or vanillin. This type of chocolate is made like semisweet chocolate with more sugar and cocoa butter added.

Milk chocolate has milk solids added and may be semisweet or sweet.

Professional chefs use "couverture," or coating chocolate, that usually comes in bulk. This type contains extra cocoa butter, which produces shinier, smoother and softer results. "Couverture" also comes in varying degrees of sweetness.

European-style vegetables refreshing flavor change

By JIM WOOD
Hearst News Service

European vegetables, fresh from the nation's gardens, are the secret behind the palate-pleasing menus in many fine restaurants. For the home cook, however, demand for these extraordinary vegetables exceeds supply; only rarely are any left for private buyers. And at too many stores, specialty vegetables are expensive and often haven't traveled well.

The solution? Do what the restaurants do: grow your own specialty vegetables with European vegetable seeds.

"Most seeds you get in packets were not developed for home gardens," says Renee Shepherd, whose catalog of chemically untreated seeds is considered to be of high quality by many gardeners. "Most commercial American suppliers have to breed for vegetables that will travel 2,000 miles or that are easier to pick or ship. In Europe, they breed for flavor. Consumers expect it."

Shepherd, who did her graduate work at the London School of Economics before taking her doctorate in history at the University of California-Santa Cruz, saw the increased awareness of just-picked fresh vegetables as a business opportunity to sell sell seeds for serious cooks. She teamed up with Ceez Boonman, who worked for a Dutch seed company whose inventory included European seeds unsuited for American commercial growers.

THE VEGETABLES those seeds produced weren't cosmetically perfect, able to travel well over distances and to ripen all at once to facilitate machine harvesting. But they did produce vegetables bursting with flavor.

Shepherd, who believed that most American seed catalogs are confusing, contradictory and filled with hyperbole, sought to tell people about the great vegetables she had been raising, how to grow them and equally important, how to use them in their cooking. She spent two years establishing her business. For advice, she turned to two already existing seed companies: Territorial Seeds in Oregon and Johnny's Selected Seeds in Maine. ("When people are successful, they don't mind helping.")

Here's a typical entry from last year's catalog, a description of kale:

"Unlike the bitter, heavy leaves for sale in super markets, our Westlandse kale is a tasty, sweet, cool-weather vegetable. Traditionally, the Dutch cook it combined with rich mashed potatoes. This fine green is also excellent stir-fried and its very young leaves are good as salad ingredients. Kale is exceptionally high in calcium."

THIS YEAR'S CATALOG continued the emphasis on flavor. Shepherd offers recipes for a California cabbage supper ("Serves two fillingly with a hot, crusty French bread and a good, full-bodied red wine"), fresh carrots with apricots, bountiful lasagne and others. She's also put together collections of seeds for hard-to-find herbs, scented basil and collections for an Italian garden, a French garden and a Mexican garden.

Here are a few of Shepherd's favorite recipes:

LEMON-BUTTERED CABBAGE
¼ cup butter or margarine
½ teaspoon caraway or celery seed
1 medium head cabbage, coarsely chopped
Juice and peel of ½ lemon
Pepper

Melt the butter with the seeds in a large frying pan. Add the cabbage and cook, stirring constantly, over high heat, 3 to 4 minutes. Reduce the heat and cover. Simmer 3 minutes until it's just tender. Stir in the lemon peel and juice and add pepper to taste. Serve right away.

HABIT-FORMING GAZPACHO
1 large tomato, peeled, and 1 for garnish
1 large or 2 medium cucumbers, peeled, and 1 for garnish
½ medium onion, chopped
½ green pepper and ½ for garnish
2 12-ounce cans of tomato juice
¼ cup red wine vinegar
½ clove garlic
¼ teaspoon Tabasco sauce
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon fresh pepper

Reserving the vegetable garnishes, put all the other ingredients in the blender with half of the tomato juice. Puree thoroughly and then add and blend the other half of the juice. Chill for several hours to blend flavors. Serve cold and pass bowls of the chopped garnishes.

BROILED EGGPLANT

Slice an eggplant thin and spread each slice sparingly with mayonnaise. Then dip each slice in freshly grated Parmesan cheese, covering both sides. Arrange the slices on a no-stick or slightly oiled cookie sheet and broil them on each side just until they are golden brown and crunchy outside and soft and tender inside.

AUSTRIAN KALE
2 bunches kale (washed)
4 medium-size potatoes (peeled and quartered)
1 clove garlic
½ medium onion (chopped)
1 tablespoon salad oil
1 rib celery (chopped)
1½ cups chicken stock or bouillon

Cut the kale leaves into ½-inch wide strips. Blanch them in boiling, lightly salted water for 1 minute. Set aside. Saute the onions and garlic in the salad oil until they're lightly browned. Add the chicken stock, potatoes, celery and blanched kale. Simmer together until the potatoes fall apart and lose their shape. Stir; season with salt and pepper and serve.

GREEN BEANS WITH MUSHROOMS
1 pound green beans (washed and cut into 2-inch lengths)
½ pound mushrooms
1 cup chicken stock or bouillon
½ teaspoon paprika
¼ teaspoon dill
½ cup sour cream
½ onion (chopped fine)

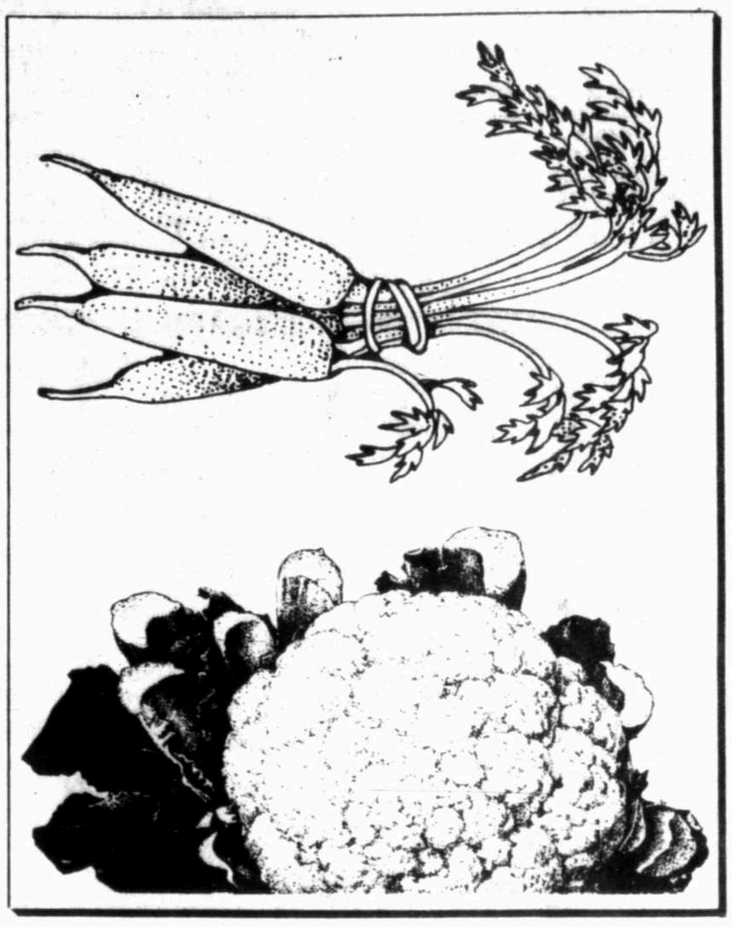

Brown the onion in a little butter or margarine. Add the mushrooms and dry for about 2 minutes, stirring occasionally. Remove them from the heat. Blanch the beans in salted water for about 30 seconds. Drain. Add the chicken stock to the mushrooms and onions. Bring to a boil. Add the dill and paprika, and salt and pepper to taste. Boil for 5 minutes. Add the green beans and sour cream. Simmer for 10 minutes and serve.

GREEN BEAN AND RED BELL PEPPER VINAIGRETTE
2 cups fresh green beans (cut and blanched)
2 red bell peppers (sliced thinly)
½ teaspoon chopped green onions
½ cup sherry wine vinegar
Pinch sugar
2 tablespoons water
Salt and pepper
½ cup salad oil

Toss all the above ingredients together and chill one hour before serving to blend the flavors.

DUTCH BEET SALAD
6 large beets (peeled)
1 bunch green onions (chopped)
½ cup apple cider vinegar
2 tablespoons water
½ cup salad oil
Pinch of sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon black pepper

Grate the fresh beets on the finest grater you have — preferably one used to grate lemon peel. If you are using a food processor, use the blade with the smallest holes. Place the grated beets in a bowl. Mix the remaining ingredients until they're blended and pour the mixture over the beets. Toss and marinate in the refrigerator for several hours before serving. For an interesting variation, substitute one-third of the beets with grated carrots and/or daikon radishes.

Canned fish inexpensive way to feed family

By BETTY WILSON
Hearst News Service

Processed tuna and salmon are good catches from the grocer's shelf, but since there are several kinds of canned tuna and salmon, smart shoppers read labels to know what they're getting.

Tuna is a light fish, mild in flavor. It is packed in either vegetable oil or water; some manufacturers add broth and seasonings. Albacore is the only tuna labeled "white-meat."

The word "solid' on the label means that the contents are cut from a solid section of tuna — a wise choice for party salads. A can labeled 'chunk-tuna' contains relatively large pieces of fish and is good for family salads and casseroles. Grated tuna is smaller pieces, well suited to sandwich fillings and appetizers.

Water-pack tuna is a favorite with dieters. A three-ounce serving contains 100 calories with 22 grams of protein, compared with a three-ounce serving of broiled hamburger with 245 calories and 21 grams of protein.

SELECT CANNED salmon by color. Red, or sockeye salmon, is the most costly. It has a rich color and firm, large flakes. Use it in salads and party casseroles. A 3-ounce serving provides 161 calories with 20 grams of protein.

King, or chinook salmon, is less expensive and more popular. Although its texture is softer than that of the sockeye, its increased oil content and large flakes make chinook a wise choice for salads. A 3-ounce serving provides 188 calories with 20 grams of protein.

Medium red, silver and coho also are popular. Large flakes make the fish well-suited to any recipe. Count 150 calories for each 3-ounce serving and 21 grams of protein.

Pink, chum and keta salmon are lighter in color, large-flaked and coarsely textured. Use in casseroles and cooked dishes. A 3-ounce serving contains 130 calories with 21 grams of protein.

Canned fish is seasoned with salt. The sodium content ranges from 350 to 600 milligrams per serving, a large percentage of the recommended daily ration. If you're cutting down on sodium, rinse canned fish with cold water and drain well before using.

FISH PATTIES
1 can salmon (7-ounce) or tuna (6¾-ounce)
½ cup soft bread crumbs
¼ cup chopped onion
¼ teaspoon celery salt (optional)
1 tablespoon minced parsley or 1 teaspoon flakes
1 egg, beaten
2 tablespoons oil

Drain and flake fish, reserving two tablespoons liquid. Combine fish with bread crumbs, onion, celery salt and parsley. Add egg and reserved liquid. Shape into three patties. Saute in oil until lightly browned on both sides. Serves three.

APPLESAUCE TUNA BAKE
2 cans (6¾-ounce) tuna
1 can (10½-ounce) cream of celery soup
1 cup applesauce
2 teaspoons pimiento, diced
2 teaspoons onion, diced
4 cups fresh bread crumbs or croutons
¼ cups margarine

Saute crumbs in margarine. Combine the first five ingredients and mix well. Spoon half of this mixture into a 1-quart casserole. Add half of the sauteed crumbs. Repeat with remaining ingredients. Bake at 375 degrees for 30 minutes. Serves six.

WIKI WIKI TUNA SALAD
1 can (20-ounce) pineapple chunks, drained
2 cans (6¾-ounce) tuna, drained
1 cup green pepper chunks
½ cup salad dressing
2 bananas, sliced
Lettuce

Combine pineapple, tuna, green pepper and salad dressing. Chill. Before serving, add bananas and toss lightly. Serve on lettuce. Makes six servings.

BUFFET SALMON SUPREME
1 can (15½-ounce) salmon
½ pounds fresh mushrooms, sliced
¼ cup margarine, divided
½ cup chopped green onion
2 medium cloves garlic, minced
¼ cup flour
1 cup chicken broth
1 cup half and half
½ teaspoon pepper
8 ounces spaghetti, cooked and drained
Grated Parmesan cheese
1 package (10-ounce) frozen broccoli, cooked and cut in bite-size pieces

Drain salmon, reserving liquid. Break into chunks. In large saucepan, saute mushrooms until just tender in two tablespoons margarine; remove. In remaining margarine, saute green onion and garlic. Blend in flour. Gradually stir in chicken broth, half and half, reserved salmon liquid and pepper. Cook and stir over medium heat until thickened. Add cooked spaghetti and one-quarter cup Parmesan cheese. Heat thoroughly. Gently stir in mushrooms, broccoli and salmon. Heat thoroughly. Serves six.

Icebox cookies still enjoyed

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Iceboxes were often made of oak and had two compartments, one above the other, and the compartment doors had handsome brass hinges. The upper compartment held a big block of ice, the lower one received food perishables.

Later, in one of the first recipe booklets issued by one of the first electric refrigerator companies, there's a secton called "Icebox Cookies." Under that title, notice is given that a certain sort of cookie dough could be shaped into a loaf or a roll and chilled in the electric refrigerator until firm enough to slice and bake.

Today the term Icebox Cookies is rarely used. Thank goodness, however, that this type of cookie is still esteemed by many good cooks. Here is a most satisfying recipe for one of the sort.

BROWN SUGAR WALNUT COOKIES
¼ pound stick butter, cut into 8 pats
½ cup firmly packed light brown sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 cup all purpose flour (scoop and level)
1 cup (about 4 ounces) walnuts, finely chopped

In a medium bowl with an electric beater cream butter, sugar and vanilla. On low speed, gradually beat in flour; add ½ cup of the walnuts and beat just enough to distribute them. With lightly floured hands shape dough into an 8-inch-long and 2-inch-wide roll. Roll in remaining ½ cup walnuts, pressing lightly to coat. Wrap in plastic wrap and chill until firm — several hours or overnight.

With a sharp knife slice roll crosswise into rounds about ¼-inch thick. Place 2 inches apart on ungreased cookie sheets. Bake in a preheated 400-degree oven until lightly browned — 8 to 10 minutes. With a wide metal spatula, remove to a wire rack to cool completely. Store in an airtight container.

Jamaican dishes have Caribbean spice

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

The Caribbean islands are known for their native dishes, and the island of Jamaica provides a cornucopia of delicacies.

Fresh fruit and seafood abound on this picturesque little island, which I visited for the first time recently.

There is a wide variety of fruit and fish specialties, served by themselves or mixed together in hot dishes, that are superb.

"The most popular shellfish is lobster, which we serve in many ways, including boiled, broiled, newburg and thermidor," said Karl Williams, a banquet manager in the resort of Ocho Rios. "A dish I like is grilled lobster served with melted butter and sprinkled with the tiny limes that grow on the island," he added.

A national favorite is codfish and achee, a yellowish fruit with a pink pod. This is served with butter, onions, scallions and black pepper.

Also popular is curried chicken, which Williams made for me and served at brunch. Some of the islanders prefer curried goat, also a popular local meat. The island curries are delicious and somewhat less hot than those of India.

"However, many of our dishes are very spicy, more so than those served on neighboring islands which tend toward Creole cookery," said Williams.

Conch soup is served frequently. It is similar to clam chowder, with the conch replacing the clams.

"We substitute ingredients a lot, because ours is a small island and our types of food are limited," said Heinz Simonitsch, manager of a hotel in Montego Bay. "Good veal is hard to get here, so we use boneless chicken breast."

Apples are not available either, so chefs make a strudel from mangoes, papaya and pineapple.

Here is a recipe for conch chowder:

CONCH CHOWDER

1 quart conch meat, in pieces
1 carrot, sliced
1 green pepper, diced
2 large onions, diced
2 stalks celery, sliced
⅛ cup bacon, diced
1 (19-ounce) can tomatoes, coarsely chopped
1 can (6 ounces) tomato paste
2 cups potato, diced
4 cups water
Salt and pepper to taste
Paprika to taste
Powdered thyme, 1 generous pinch
¼ cup sherry

Force conch, carrot, green pepper, onions and celery through food chopper, using medium blade. Cook bacon until crisp. Blend with conch mixture, tomatoes, tomato paste, potatoes and water. Season with salt, pepper, thyme and paprika. Bring to boil, cover and simmer 2 hours. Add sherry, and more water if needed. Makes about 3 quarts or 6 to 8 servings.

German Rieslings wine bargains

By DAN BERGER
Copley New Service

Recently I attended a tasting of 21 German Rieslings from the 1983 vintage, sponsored by Les Amis du Vin, the international wine society.

One of the classics was unquestionably the Saarburger Rausch Auslese Long Goldkapsule from Geltz Zilliken, a wine that I would have guessed should sell for $20 or more.

But the weakness of the German mark has held prices down, and this amazing wine sells for just $12. It has a clean, fresh, floral aroma with a hint of earthiness and a delicate sweetness balanced by plenty of acid.

The Erdner Trepchen Auslese from Robert Eymael's Weingut Moenchhof is laden with floral scents, as if you stuck your head inside a refrigerator at a florist that stocks carnations and sweet peas. (Many of Eymael's wines remind me of this floral character.) At $12 it is a good value.

Likewise I found the Graacher Himmelreich Auslese from S.A. Pruem ($12) to be fully scented and very complex.

Probably the best Auslese in the bunch for the money, however, was Oberemmeler Huette from Weingut von Hovel. It was more intensely floral and honeyed, and thus not as delicate. At $8 it's a good value.

The above wines are all slightly sweet and may be served with fresh fruit or lighter desserts.

But the real power of this vintage, to my way of thinking, is not in these wines, and it is not in the upper-end, expensive, sweet-dessert wines. I argue that the greatness in the 1983s is in the drier Kabinett and Spaetlese wines.

I realize this is a contentious view, since others who have praised this vintage have gone ga-ga over the ultra-sweet Trockenbeerenauslesen, which sell for very high prices and are supposed to age for 20 years or more.

To be sure, Trockenbeerenauslese wines are enjoyable to evaluate, but other than the academic exercise of pontificating over them to determine some grand cosmic view, many of them are so intense they are overpowering in their honey and peaches character.

And I feel that if Riesling is great, it has a definitive "Rieslingness" in both aroma and taste.

Along that line, I suggest you try the Spaetlese wines of 1983, which are not as sweet as the Auslese, but are cheaper and offer a glimpse of what the vintage has to offer.

Try, for example, the amazing Brauneberger Juffer Spaetlese from Willi Haag. It has that classic honeysuckle florality at $6.75 a bottle. And the Graacher Domprobst Spaetlese from Dr. Weins-Pruem ($7.50) offers a spice similar to juniper.

One standout Spaetlese that verged on a sweeter wine designation was the Trittenheimer Felsenkopf from Weingut Milz Laurentiushof. The scents of pineapple and steel combined in a sweet, luscious package. The wine is $8.75.

Long names are common in Germany and one of the longest in this tasting was the Eitelsbacher Sang Spaetlese from Weingut Karthauserhof ($8), which had an amazing pine scent and a very crisp finish, a wine that would match with dozens of foods.

This tasting was staged by Rudy Wiest, an importer with Cellars International. He has been around German wines most of his life, and Wiest believes the 1983 German wines are greater than the acclaimed 1976s.

"The '76s were so ripe, so full of honey and concentration, that it wasn't a typical vintage," he said. "Some of the aromas were untypical."

He said he felt that a better comparison was 1971 — and to show what 1971 wines do with time in the bottle, he brought along a 1971 Ockfener Bockstein Auslese from Zilliken, a wine of incomparable balance and finesse. It had a scent of slate and chalk, but also the richness of honey and the intensity of a wine much younger.

The 1983 version of the same wine with a Long Goldkapsule designation ($21) is a fresh, intensely flavored, flowery wine that reminded me of chamomile tea with a dab of honey mixed in. Quite a heady experience.

Wiest's imports are considered one of the best collections around since he deals with the group known as Der Grosse Ring, a consortium of 24 quality houses in the Mosel-Saar-Ruwer regions.

Product labels confusing

By CAROLE SUGARMAN
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Labels cover a multitude of sins when it comes to the packaging and marketing of national brands, store brands and generics. If food manufacturers were asked to "bare all," there'd be a lot of embarrassed advertisers — and a lot of surprised consumers.

Product swapping, label switching and recipe imitating are common among manufacturers and packers. The result is a marketplace of products that may be more alike — or depending on your viewpoint, more different — than one might think. Sometimes you get what you pay for. Sometimes you don't. For example:

— Some of Safeway's Town House brand canned fruits are packed by Del Monte. Same product, according to Safeway. The only difference is the label and the price.

— On the other hand, Del Monte only packs the center portion, or fillet, of the green bean under its own name. The company then packs the end cuts of the beans for house brands with specifications that aren't as high as Del Monte's.

— THERE ARE ONLY three manufacturers in the instant breakfast business in this country — Carnation, Pillsbury and a company called Dean Foods. If an instant breakfast label says anything but Carnation or Pillsbury, it was manufactured by Dean, the only private-label packager of the product in the country. Different labels, all the same product.

— H.J. Heinz Co., which no longer sells soup under its own name, manufactures 95 percent of this country's store-brand soups. Safeway brand soups are made by Heinz.

— Land O'Lakes manufactures an instant nonfat dry milk under the label Flash. Since there is not much variation in how nonfat dry milk is processed, the company takes the same product and packages it in a plain black-and-white generic box. Cost to the consumer: about 15 cents less per box.

— The quality of generics may vary according to whose odds and ends are being used. Maybe Campbell's had leftovers one time, maybe next time it's Van de Kamp's, says Richard Goldsmith, manager at a Silver Spring, Md., Foodtown store that sells generics.

THERE ARE NO stringent rules covering national versus store versus generic brands. Who packs what and what label ends up on it is highly variable. Many national-brand manufacturers pack a line of store brands, so in fact the two products may be identical; some national brands pack a generic line that is in fact a lower grade product; some store brands are packed by private label packers, others may be made right at a store plant. You just don't know.

Confusing the issue even more is the fact that government standards — while they may be painstakingly detailed about what constitutes a "fancy," "standard" or "extra-standard" peach, for example — require that packers conform to those grades only if they choose to label them as such. That means that a store brand's canned peaches could potentially contain a higher grade peach than a national manufacturer although you might not be able to tell from the label.

AND THEN THERE'S the commodities market, which fluctuates from year to year. If it's a terrific year for a particular crop, the price will be low, and "everyone can afford the good stuff," says Mina Williams, consumer affairs advisor for the Private Label Manufacturers Association, a trade group that represents manufacturers of store brands. For example, since there is a raisin glut this year, those raisins with the "proper shrivel" and the sweetest tastes should be available to national brand, store brand and generic packers alike. The steak sauce companies and the chutney manufacturers may be getting the residual, Williams said.

What most industry experts will agree upon, however, is that store brands and national brands are more similar to each other than generics, which are generally a lower grade.

In the past few years, however, there has been a shift in the generic trend. The generic heydey that started in the late '70s, bringing an influx of nonadvertised, no-frills black-and-white-packaged products to the supermarket, is experiencing a steady decline.

According to Alan Miller of Sales Area Marketing Inc. (SAMI), a company that tracks buying trends, generics are "gradually phasing out," now accounting for 2.2 percent of dollar sales of all food products, down from its peak of 2.6 in March of 1983. Miller attributes the decline to the decrease in the inflation rate, although he added that there will always be generics in certain product categories, such as paper towels, sugar or salt.

SOME NEW PRODUCT categories or "sub-product" categories have entered the market as well, creating confusion as to just what a store brand or generic is. For instance, several chains now stock products that industry experts have coined "neogenerics," "second-generation generics" or "second-tier store brands." These are products aimed to compete with generics, although not packaged as such. A&P, for instance, sells a "P&Q" line, which is comparable to a generic product, as is Safeway's Scotch Buy brand.

Everyone knows the national brands; obviously that is the purpose of advertising. And while many chains have their own store brands that are readily recognizeable, some are not. Safeway, for instance, has a total of 40 store brands, although some are not in frequent use.

Although many national brands also turn out private labels (house brands), they don't publicize the fact, according to Miller of SAMI, for obvious reasons: it would make advertising moot, plus it would pit a major manufacturer against itself.

But private label manufacturing can be a big business for big manufacturers. In fact, some national brand companies have separate divisions that deal exclusively with private label sales. Heinz, for instance, has a private label division that besides manufacturing soups, puts private labels on its peppers, pickles and relish. For Heinz, the soup arrangement was ideal; the company used to manfacture soups under its own label, but "the market is pretty much saturated by another brand," said Heinz spokesperson Beth Adams. Heinz was able to take advantage of its facilities.

FOR OTHER MANUFACTURERS, filling up plant capacity with a store brand or having an outlet for byproducts makes a lot of economic sense.

Although Williams of PLMA will not divulge specific examples of major manufacturers doing private labels, she said that in some product areas there just aren't a lot of manufacturers. A few companies may be doing a lot of labels. "How many aluminum foil companies do you think are out there? How many frozen-food packing plants could there be?" she said.

National-brand manufacturers counter the store brand issue by saying that consumers are assured consistent products under higher national-brand standards, that they don't have to worry that the canned pears will be overripe or underripe or in pieces instead of uniform halves.

A spokesperson for Del Monte said the company provides growers with seeds and during the entire growing process is constantly monitoring the crop to see "if it's Del Monte material." If it's not, the label might read Grand Union or Kroger, two of the company's private label accounts. Yet depending on the criteria set by the chain, its standards — and resulting product — could be the same as Del Monte's.

Because of all the factors involved, unfortunately the only way to really tell the difference between name brand, store brand and generics is to rotate brands, says Stephen Brobeck, executive director of the Consumer Federation of America. But, said Brobeck, "we urge consumers to give store brands and generics a try." Because national brands are advertised so heavily, consumers may buy them for the wrong reasons. They may think they're superior to store brands, which they aren't always, said Brobeck, or they may feel that it's socially unacceptable to buy a product that doesn't have national advertising recognition.

MICHAEL JACOBSON, director of the Center for Science in the Public Interest, calculated that consumers could save $7 a week if they stuck with store brands.

Almond paste can be made at home

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

It's possible to make your own almond paste. Remove skins from whole shelled almonds by covering the nuts with water in saucepan. Heat to boiling. Drain and slip the skins off by pressing the almonds between thumb and forefinger.

Here are two almond paste recipes, a regular uncooked mixture and a cooked version from "The Cook's Handbook" by Prue Leith (A&W Publishers: $14.95).

COOKED ALMOND PASTE
2 eggs
¾ cup superfine sugar
Powdered sugar, sifted
3 cups ground almonds
½ teaspoon vanilla
1 teaspoon lemon juice

Beat eggs until smooth in top of double boiler. Stir in superfine sugar and 1¼ cups powdered sugar. Heat over simmering water, beating until light, thick and creamy. Remove from heat. Add almonds, vanilla and lemon juice. Mix to paste. Knead until smooth on board lightly dusted with more sifted powdered sugar.

ALMOND PASTE
1½ cups whole blanched almonds
1½ cups sifted powdered sugar
1 egg white
1 teaspoon almond flavoring
¼ teaspoon salt

Grind almonds in food processor, or portion at a time in electric blender. Combine with powdered sugar, egg white, almond flavoring and salt. Knead to stiff paste. Makes about 1½ cups. Will keep months in refrigerator if wrapped tightly in plastic wrap or stored in airtight container.

BAKED SANDWICHES

For each sandwich, spread two slices of bread with prepared mustard, then chutney. Place slice of cooked ham and one of cheddar cheese between bread slices. Spread top and bottom of sandwich with mayonnaise. Bake on foil in an oven-toaster until cheese has melted and bread is lightly browned, turning once with a wide spatula if necessary. Cut in half and serve at once.

A Capuchin monkey named Henrietta turns the pages of a magazine under the direction of her quadriplegic owner Sue Strong. Ms. Strong, who spent seven years in a hospital after a traffic accident, has new freedom thanks to "Henri," one of eight monkeys trained to aid the disabled.

Henri places a wooden baton in Ms. Strong's mouth, which she uses for tasks such as typing and playing a tape deck.

Helping hands

It's hard to find a nurse's aide as dedicated as Henrietta. No task is too small if it will help her quadraplegic employer.

She works day and night without complaint. She even does windows — unless she's in heat.

Henrietta is a monkey.

A former house pet, "Henri" has found a second career as one of eight small monkeys in the United States who have been trained to be the hands and feet of paraplegics.

The project, developed by Mary Willard of Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York, has been restricted by the scarcity of Capuchin monkeys from Central and South America.

Now, with the establishment of a breeding center in Homestead, Fla., Ms. Willard hopes to train up to 40 female monkeys a year as "helping hands" to the severely disabled. Males are not used, because they are not easily housebroken.

An estimated 1.5 million Americans suffer partial or complete paralysis, so the program has the potential to become as widespread as guide dogs for the blind.

The program is funded by a $125,000 annual grant by the Veterans Administration. It costs about $8,000 to produce one Helping Hands monkey, Ms. Willard said. With the help of private contributions, she hopes to offer them to patients for as little as $150, the current price of a Seeing Eye dog.

Guided by a pinpoint laser beam, Ms. Willard's monkeys can retrieve or replace objects, open and close doors, pick up telephone receivers, turn lights on and off, perform simple feeding tasks, even vacuum and wash windows.

For Sue Strong, who spent seven years confined to a hospital room after a 1971 traffic accident, Henri has opened a new world of freedom and companionship.

Ms. Strong had been completely dependent on paid attendants who provided round-the-clock nursing in her two-room Manhattan apartment.

But since Henri joined her two years ago, she says, human help is only needed for cooking, feeding the monkey and some cleaning. "If someone can get me out of bed and into my wheelchair, Henri can handle the rest of the day," she says.

Henri places a straw into a bottle of orange juice and will then tuck the other end of the straw into Ms. Strong's mouth.

Ms. Strong, 36, operates the laser flashlight with her teeth from a chinrest on her wheelchair, and rewards Henri for each task completed.

When Ms. Strong is thirsty, she calls Henri's name, pointing the laser beam at a bottle of juice. The monkey carries the jar to the wheelchair, places it on a tray, unscrews the cap, places a straw in the bottle, and tucks one end of the straw into Ms. Strong's mouth.

If Ms. Strong points the beam at a tape cassette, Henri loads it into a tape deck. Henri's fingers aren't strong enough to punch the "play" button, so she picks up a wooden pointer and puts it between Ms. Strong's teeth, so she can start the music.

For writing, Henri puts paper in the typewriter and places the stick in Ms. Strong's mouth to hit the keys. She can retrieve a magazine, prop it up on a plastic bookstand, and either turn the pages on command or place the pointer in her patient's teeth so Ms. Strong can do it herself.

One of Henri's favorite rewards is an onion, which acts on monkeys as catnip does on cats. There are no peanuts for Henri, because the monkeys in Ms. Willard's project have had their teeth removed for safety.

"But she doesn't just do it for the reward; she really loves to work," Ms. Strong said. "When I go away on vacation every summer she gets very bored."

Henri is also an affectionate companion, and will spend hours cuddling up or playing with her human roommate. But at times, Ms. Strong concedes, she feels more like the parent of a toddler than a patient.

It was decided that Henri was too old to spay, and the monkey becomes wild and willful when she goes into heat for a few days each month.

Capuchins are highly intelligent and get along well with people, but they can be hyperactive and acrobatic.

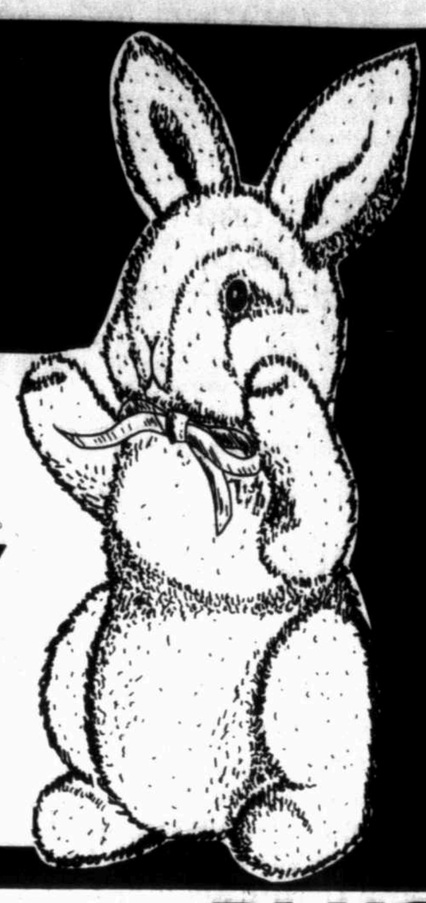

At best, Henri may burn her extra energy by cleaning her own cage. At worst, she may rattle that cage and chirp through the night, or sneak into the bathroom to open all the bottles in the medicine chest.

"You have to let her know who's boss at all times," said Ms. Strong. "Monkeys have a very rigid social structure, and if she classifies you as beneath her in stature, she'll terrorize you."

Dollar tumbles

LONDON (AP) — The dollar, reeling under the impact of lower interest rates and new fears about the U.S. banking system, tumbled to its lowest levels of the year early today against the British pound and French franc. Gold prices moved higher.

Currency markets were described as extremely nervous following reports that some banks in Texas faced lower profits because of energy and real estate loans.

The reports followed the closure of savings and loans in the state of Ohio after a run on the thrift institutions — a development that last week triggered the biggest one-day fall for the dollar in 14 years.

"The news comes at a bad time," said a trader in Frankfurt.

Said another Frankfurt dealer: "Volatility is the key to the market."

Analysts said the dollar's weakness, which follows a nearly month-long spree setting new highs in February, was also the result of lower short-term interest rates.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar plunged nearly three yen to close at 254.00 yen, compared with Tuesday's 256.97. Later, in European trading, the dollar shed another yen to stand at 252.70.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Tuesday:

–2.6765 Swiss francs, down from 2.7215.

–9.6720 French francs, down from 9.8075, the lowest since New Year's Eve.

–3.5765 Dutch guilders, down from 3.6300.

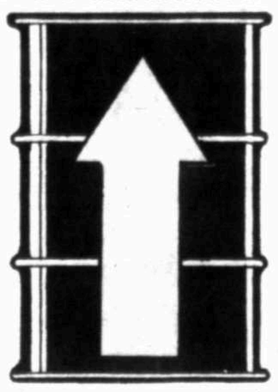

–2,014.00 Italian lire, down from 2,042.50.

–1.3695 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3760.

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.2075, compared with $1.1807 Tuesday. The last time the dollar was that expensive was in mid-November.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $329.50 an ounce, compared with late Tuesday's $324.00. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $329.90.

Chambers fight for $3 billion research lab

By MELLA McEWEN
Business-Oil Writer

The Department of Energy is trying to decide where to build a $3 billion research laboratory that would become the most important science laboratory in the world, and local Chamber of Commerce officials hope to convince them the Permian Basin is the ideal spot.

Two Texas A&M scientists, heavily involved in the project are Louis Thompson, Phd. and Peter McIntyre, Phd., who were in Big Spring Tuesday to provide a seminar for area officals on the scope of the project and the possibility of its location in West Texas.

The Superconducting Super Collider or SSC, will allow scientists to study the inner structures of matter, and to better understand the forces of nature that hold matter together, according to McIntyre.

McIntyre's colleague, Louis Thompson, PhD., feels that a site near Garden City "is the best spot in the whole state." However, he said, conventional wisdom is that a site near Waxahachie is the best site. Other Texas sites being considered are in Pecos County, near Fort Stockton; a site in Conroe, north of Houston; another site south of Houston; one near Texas A&M; and another north of Austin.

According to McIntyre, Texas and Illinois are the prime contenders for the site. Illinois has an advantage, he said, because a similar laboratory, on a much smaller scale, was set in the state about 20 years ago. However, Texas has better terrain.

The project will create about 2,000 to 2,500 jobs. Construction is estimated at $2 to $3 billion. Equipment is estimated at another $1 billion, and annual upkeep at about $250 million.

Many satellite industries, involving steel fittings, magnets, construction, computers, electrok walls. The tunnels will be lined with 4,000 10' long magnets. Protons injected into the tunnels will travel at basically the speed of light. Basically, the project will collide protons and see what happens. According to McIntyre, the higher the energy, the smaller the structure that can be studied.

The project was suggested about two and a half years ago, McIntyre said, and there are currently 50 people working on it full-time. General Dynamics has been contracted to build three magnets of the commission's design.

Four universities are working together on the project: Texas A&M, the University of Texas at Austin, the University of Houston and Rice University.

Not only will the project be substantial from a scientific point of view, it could have a great impact on industry. One offshoot of great interest to the oil industry is ion implantation, whereby the surface properties of metal can be altered, to reduce abrasiveness and friction. The facility also would not stand in the way of pipelines, McIntyre said, as long as the tunnels were not pierced.

"New technology is good to the extent that it is transferred to industry, where people can use it," McIntyre said.

Unlike the Saturn plant, this laboratory would not use much water "other than to flush the toilets," Thompson said. However, the project will use 100 mw of electricity continuously.

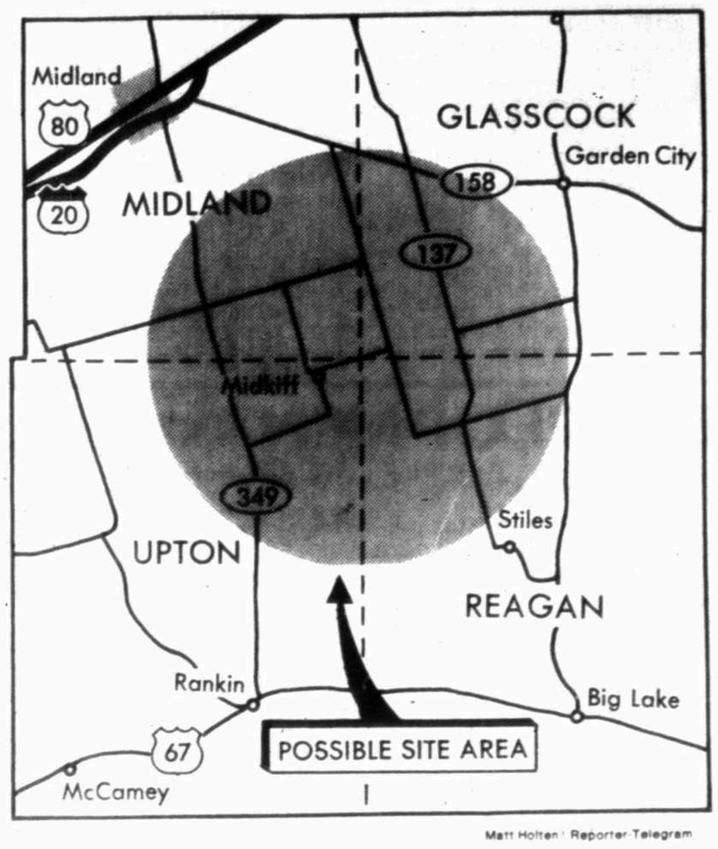

The proposal is expected to go before Congress in 1986. Construction should start in 1987, with completion in 1992.

Dr. McIntyre advised interested communities to set up a task force to drill bore holes and obtain soil samples for a geological study, to write an engineering study and a socio-ecoomic impact study, and then hire an advertising agency to work with the chamber of commerce to put together a persuasive package. He said proposals should be in this fall. A decision is not expected for about a year.

McIntyre says it would be a mistake to single out one Texas site. "What would seem perfect to a Texan might not seem perfect to Washington," he noted.

Thompson said the perception is, "and it's wrong, but it's real," that West Texas is not the place to put the SSC.

McIntyre said the best chance Texas has for winning the site is to put together a comprehensive proposal that lists any and all possible sites for the SSC. He added that incentives such as donating the land, assisting with constructing the tunnel and help with overhead such as the electrical needs, are important.

Marvin Runyon, president and chief executive officer of Nissan Motor Manufacturing Corp., U.S.A., gets out of the first U.S. manufactured Nissan Sentra after driving it off the assembly line Tuesday at Nissan's Tennessee facility.

First Nissan made in U.S. rolls off line

SMYRNA, Tenn. (AP) — Production of Nissan cars in the United States means "new dollars" in America and "new friendships" between East and West, Gov. Lamar Alexander said as the first U.S.-built Sentra rolled off the line.

Sentra 1 was driven off the assembly line Tuesday by Marvin Runyon, president and chief operating officer of Nissan Motor Manufacturing Corp. USA. The blue, two-door coupe was driven, followed by hundreds of blue-uniformed workers, through the 78-acre, $745-million plant.

"The production of Nissan's first passenger car in America is a special event for all of us," said Kaichi Kanao, executive vice president of Japan's Nissan Motor Co. Ltd."Back in 1980 when we announced plans for this new company, we hoped that cars would be built here some day."

Although Japan is about to end four years of voluntary restraints on U.S. imports, analysts expect Japanese automakers to maintain self-imposed limits so they don't take too big a share of the U.S. market, triggering mandated quotas.

The Japanese companies instead will use American operations to make less expensive cars and import higher-priced models, analysts say.

The Sentra, which had been built only in Zama, Japan, is the company's cheapest model, going for between $5,499 and $7,299.

"The reason for building the Sentra here is because Nissan has a policy of building products where they are sold," Runyon said at a news conference. "That's why we're doing it, pure and simple."

More than 500,000 Sentras have been sold in the United States since its debut in the country in 1982. About 200,000 were sold last year.

"American buyers can't get enough of it," Runyon said. "We're proud to build a product that has so much popularity and stability."

The plant, equipped with 228 robots, opened in June 1983 to build light pickup trucks.

Commodities broker convicted in oil swindle

HOUSTON (AP) — A commodities broker faces up to 88 years in prison and an $88,000 fine for his conviction in a multi-million-dollar oil swindle.

A federal court jury deliberated nine hours before convicting Frederick Soudan of 17 counts involving wire fraud, perjury, interstate transportation of stolen property, conspiracy to defraud the United States and conspiracy to obstruct justice.

U.S. District Judge Carl Bue said he will sentence Soudan on April 22.

Soudan, 41, said he was not surprised by the jury's decision on Tuesday.

"Nothing surprises me anymore. For every injustice, there will always be a final justice," said Soudan as he was chained and led from the courthouse.

Soudan was accused of stealing 200,000 tons of oil from its Italian owner and ordering it delivered to South Africa on the tanker Salem. According to the 22-count indictment, he and four other men arranged for the tanker to be sunk off the coast of Senegal on Jan. 17, 1980, to cover the theft.

Prosecutors said Soudan made $4.25 million from the $56 million scheme, which they claim was part of a conspiracy to steal 1.4 million barrels of oil from European firms and secretly deliver the crude to South Africa.

Winans reads apology for using column for profit

NEW YORK (AP) — In an emotional conclusion to six days of testimony, former Wall Street Journal reporter R. Foster Winans broke down in tears as he read an apology to former colleagues for using his column to make stock profits.

During four days of questioning by his own lawyer and two days of cross-examination by Assistant U.S. Attorney Peter J. Romatowski, Winans admitted his complicity in a get-rich-quick scheme which sought to capitalize on his position at the newspaper.

He then wept on Tuesday as he read aloud the letter to Journal editors in which he wrote, "I deeply regret the anguish which I have caused."

Throughout his testimony Winans heaped the biggest share of the blame on the government's star witness, former stockbroker Peter N. Brant, and sought to shield his longtime companion and homosexual lover, David Carpenter, from any responsibility.

Just before Romatowski concluded his cross-examination, Winans charged that prosecutors had tried to coerce him into pleading guilty by threatening to indict Carpenter if he did not.

"We cooperated up to the point that the U.S. attorney's office threatened to indict David unless I pleaded guilty within 24 hours," Winans said.

U.S. District Judge Charles E. Stewart Jr., who is hearing the case against Winans, Carpenter and former stockbroker Kenneth P. Felis without a jury, granted Romatowski's request to have the remark stricken from the record. Romatowski later declined to comment on Winans' charge.

Winans, 38, was one of two writers of the "Heard on the Street" column, a daily feature in the Journal which offers tips to investors. Analysts often credit the column with producing sharp changes in the price of stocks it describes.

The 59-count indictment charges Winans, Carpenter and Felis conspired with Brant to defraud the Journal by using Winans' position in an effort to enrich themselves.

Winans has conceded he agreed to tip Brant about the contents of forthcoming columns. Brant would trade on the information and share the profits with Winans.

U-Haul moves location, expands service

By SUSAN LINDSAY

Buck Wilcox, commander for the Midland U-Haul office, has announced that U-HAUL has moved from its 2803 W. Wall location to 5702 W. Industrial.

The company bought the new property eight to nine months ago and will be able to expand its service in its new location.

Besides truck and trailer rentals, the company offers packing and loading services for the do-it-yourself movers and Movers World Van Lines, a complete moving service.

The company also has pickup truck and recreational vehicle accessories and a repair service. In addition, it offers a complete line of rental items, such as video tapes, recorders and garden equipment.

TEXAS UTILITIES ELECTRIC CO. recently honored power plant employees at the Monticello Steam Electric Station near Mount Pleasant for having set a national record of working five million safe manhours without a lost-time injury.

The Monticello lignite coal plant is the first coal-fired power plant in the United States to have worked five million safe man-hours. The record was set on Nov. 2, 1984.

For setting this national record, plant employees have received achievement awards from Edison Electric Institute, National Safety Council and Southwest Electric Safety Exchange.

Gary M. Brophy, president of the ADVERTISING NETWORK, INC. has announced that the corporation has opened up a branch office in Midland.

The new office will be located on the Andrews Highway and will be managed by Karen Wald, a Texas Tech University graduate and a lifetime resident of Midland, and an assistant.

Wald has been with the company since September 1984 and presently serves the major accounts in the area.

The Advertising Network, Inc. is a full service advertising and marketing company, which was established in 1980 and has grown into a medium size advertising agency in West Texas with billings exceeding 2 million dollars a year and a staff of 10 employees.

TACO VILLA, INC. announced record earnings for its 1984 fiscal year.

Results for the 52 weeks ended Dec. 26, 1984, were $1,172,445 in net income or 30 cents per share on revenues of $28.7 million as compared to $1,142,705 in net income or 31 cents per share on revenues of $25.6 million for 1983.

The increase of $3.1 million in 1984 revenues is 12 percent higher than the previous record revenues of 1983.

Sales have grown every year since Taco Villa's inception in 1968. The slight decline in earnings per share was due, in part, to the increased number of outstanding shares as a result of Taco Villa's public offering.

Franklin Morris of Midland has won an all-expense paid trip for two to Kauai, Hawaii, for outstanding performance as a professional mover for the Relocation Services Division of NORTHAMERICAN VAN LINES.

He ranked among the top 15 haulers in a fleet of more than 1,200. He has also earned the company's prestigious "Vanguard" hauler award for distinguished service during the year.

Morris has hauled under contract for NorthAmerican since June 1982.

PRINCETON INDUSTRIES has cited Ron Burtis of Odessa for having helped non-profit organizations in this area earn over $104,000 during the past year.

The award was presented at a special meeting in Evansville, Ind. for the company's top-ranked promotional consultants.

Princeton Industries, a subsidiary of the Carnation Co., has full time consultants in each of the continental United States who work with schools, athletic leagues and other non-profit groups to earn funds for their activities.

RON'S FLORAL DESIGN has moved from No. 11 Oak Ridge Square to No. 3 Oak Ridge Square in Midland, said Ron Huse, owner and manager.

Reporters and company officials leave the Wilberg Mine Tuesday. It was the first time reporters had been allowed in the mine since the December 19 fire that claimed 27 lives.

General Electric indicted on fraud charges, will 'work out' matters

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — General Electric Co., faced with $800,000 in cost overruns on nuclear-warhead contracts, charged the amount to other government projects, according to an indictment against the nation's fourth-largest defense contractor.

GE on Tuesday denied any criminal wrongdoing and said it would "work out all the issues arising out of this matter."

The company "mischarged" the government for the $800,000 in overruns on a contract for refitting components for the Minuteman Mark-12A intercontinental ballistic missile re-entry system, said U.S. Attorney Edward Dennis.

The 112-count indictment resulted from a four-year investigation arising from irregularities uncovered by a routine Defense Contract Audit Agency probe of GE's internal accounting, Dennis said.

GE is charged with four counts of "making and presenting false claims to the United States" and 104 counts of making false statements to a U.S. agency by falsifying employee time cards.

GE employee Joseph Calabria and former employee Roy Baessler are charged with two counts each of "making false declarations" to a grand jury.

GE spokesman John Terino, reading from a statement after the indictment was announced, said the company denies any wrongdoing but is willing to cooperate in resolving the matter.

"It is alleged that incorrect charges were entered on employee time cards submitted five years ago," said Terino. "Involved are 100 time cards out of approximately 100,000 time cards.

"GE has indicated its willingness to reimburse the government for any improper charges that might have been made. ... We are confident we can work out all the issues arising out of this matter and continue our role as a responsible supplier of the nation's defense needs."

GE's Re-entry Systems Division — now part of its Space Systems Division based here — had a series of contracts to refurbish missile re-entry vehicles, which carry warheads and arming and aiming systems, the indictment said.

One agreement for test equipment was a fixed-price incentive contract, meaning the Air Force would pay all costs up to a ceiling and GE would absorb any overruns, it said. "As alleged in the indictment, by approximately March 1980, GE had exceeded the price ceiling on the contract," Dennis said.

From about Jan. 1, 1980, until April 1983, GE made up the $800,000 on other government contracts by altering employee time cards, having employees submit blank cards which were filled in by managers, and transferring costs to other contracts that didn't have ceilings, Dennis said.

Calabria, 50, of King of Prussia, chief engineer at the Re-entry Systems Division, and Baessler, 40, of Topsfield, Mass, each face up to 10 years in prison and a 20,000 fine.

"Pure and simple, neither Roy Baessler nor Joseph Calabria made a false declaration to the grand jury, and there is no question that they will be fully vindicated after a trial in this case," said their attorney, Walter M. Phillips of Philadelphia, in a statement.

GE faces a $1.08 million fine and possible loss of all or part of its defense contracts. The company and its subsidiaries received more than $4.5 billion in military contracts in fiscal 1983, fourth among defense contractors, according to the most recent statistics available from the Pentagon.

The only other top defense contractor to face criminal charges was the Sperry Corp., said a Pentagon official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Sperry, the No. 20 defense contractor, pleaded guilty Dec. 9, 1983, to making false statements about Minuteman and MX missile contracts. It was fined $30,000 and ordered to pay damages of $650,000 and interest of $167,740.

Soot and smell of mine fire still remain

ORANGEVILLE, Utah (AP) — Less than 1,000 feet away the fire that claimed 27 lives still smolders. But deep in the cool, totally black Third East tunnel, only the soot and smell remain from the days the blaze raged out of control through a mile of the Wilberg Mine's tunnels.

For the first time since the Dec. 19 blaze trapped the 26 men and one woman, a group of reporters was allowed into the mine Tuesday.

The 15 reporters and photographers donned overalls, high boots and hard hats and were given a crash course in safety before touring the adjacent Deer Creek Mine and penetrating 1,000 feet into Wilberg.

The smell of burned coal fills the air and soot covers the walls and ceiling in the reclaimed area.

During the tour, an oak staff tipped with brass was used to rap ceilings to check their stability. Blue reflector disks, shining in the bobbing lights of the headlamps — the only light in the mine — pointed the way out.

Officials still are bewildered as to why the fire broke out so quickly and spread so rapidly.

"There's no reason that fire should have erupted in such an intense and volatile way," said Bob Henrie, spokesman for Emery Mining Corp., which operates the mines in central Utah's East Mountain for Utah Power & Light Co.

The fire erupted as crews and supervisors attempted to set a 24-hour coal-production record. Twenty-two miners and five Emery officers died. All but two of the bodies were located before rescuers were driven out by a flare-up and the federal Mine Safety and Health Administration ordered the mine sealed, limiting air to the blaze.

With federal approval, Emery crews breached seals and re-entered the mine Feb. 13. Since then they've probed 6,000 to 7,000 feet into the mine, erecting new seals, flushing gas and smoke from the reclaimed tunnels.

It still will take four to seven months for crews to go around the fire and reach the victims' remains, Bill Zeller, Emery general manager and executive vice president, told the reporters.

The path of the fire as it rushed along the ceiling is clearly visible. Roof bolts protrude 6 to 12 inches from the ceiling, where the intense heat and flame caused the seam of coal to fall, leaving bare rock.

Outside, Zeller said, "We still have something to learn. We don't know what caused this fire. MSHA still hasn't nailed it down. Until we get in there, we won't know.

Falcon reports record oil, gas sales

ODESSA (SWN) — Falcon Oil & Gas Company Inc. reported record oil and gas sales and a significant increase in oil reserves for the fiscal year ended Jan. 31.

Oil and gas sales rose to $1,199,012 for the year ended Jan. 31, resulting in net income before taxes of $454,114. After provisions for taxes, Falcon showed a net profit of $330,824, or 3 cents per share.

A comparison with the previous year shows that at Jan. 31, 1984, Falcon's oil and gas sales totalled $1,049,972, which resulted in net income before taxes of $459,451. After-tax income for the fiscal year ended Jan. 31, 1984, was $354,128, or 4 cents per share.

At Jan. 31 Falcon's total assets were $5,034,249 with shareholders equity totalling $3,062,440. This compares with total assets of $4,534,824 and equity of $2,475,116 for the year ended Jan. 31, 1984.

Edward V. Ryan, Falcon chairman, said the increased oil and gas sales were a result of successful drilling during the year in Louisiana and Oklahoma.

"Net profit dipped slightly due to higher operating expenses as the number of producing wells increased," Ryan said, adding that the company participated in the drilling of seven wells during the fiscal year, with four completed as producing wells.

Falcon's oil reserves rose during the year to 91,420 barrels of oil from 35,580 barrels at the end of he previous fiscal year. Gas reserves increased to 14,135,210 MCF compared to 13,653,413 MCF at Jan. 31, 1984.

Ryan said that at Jan. 31 the company was participating in six more wells. Of these, four have been successfully completed and a fifth is still in progress. These wells are also located in Oklahoma and Louisiana.

Falcon recently announced a plan to merge with Cox Resources Corp. of Dallas, pending Cox shareholders' approval at a meeting next month.

Falcon Oil & Gas Company Inc., which was formed 10 years ago, has offices in Odessa, Houston and Denver. Its shares have been traded in the over-the-counter market since 1977.

Teamsters and trucking managers reach agreement, source says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Trucking industry and Teamster union negotiators have reached agreement on a new contract to replace one that expires next Monday, a union source says.

Teamster President Jackie Presser "sent a message" Tuesday notifying leaders of the various freight locals around the country of "the recent tentative contract settlement," said the source.

According to the source, the message advised officials of a meeting scheduled in Chicago next Wednesday to discuss provisions of the new National Master Freight Agreement.

Asked about this, Duke Zeller, chief spokesman for Presser, said, "I think it's premature."

Union bargainers and freight industry management representatives were to meet today, Zeller said. Any settlement announcement, he said, would be made jointly.

"I know that Jackie was hopeful that there would be a settlement by the end of the week," Zeller said.

According to the source, Presser sent another message to union officials on Monday directing that "there be no strikes by any locals."

Unlike unions such as the United Mine Workers of America, the Teamsters have no language in their constitution that specifies that members must strike whenever no contract is in force. The current pact expires at 12:01 a.m. EST Monday, and the Chicago meeting would come two days after that.

The only strike ever authorized by the Teamster leadership in bargaining over a national freight agreement was a walkout of several days in 1976.

The current 37-month pact was an austerity package that froze wages for some 200,000 drivers, warehouse, office and maintenance shop employees.

The source said he was not familiar with details of the proposed pact — or its duration.

But he said he'd been told the proposal contains language setting up a two-tier pay system in which newly hired personnel would start at pay rates below those given to experienced workers.

Under the existing pact, signed early in 1982 in a climate of rapid deregulation, emergence of non-union competitors and heavy layoffs, Teamster member wages average $13.26 an hour.

Two cost-of-living increases under the current pact totaled 68 cents, but this money was allocated to union health, welfare and pension funds instead of to workers' paychecks.

Since Jan. 15, the Teamsters have been negotiating with Trucking Management Inc., the umbrella bargaining group for 35 major companies, along with the Motor Carrier Labor Advisory Council and Regional Carriers Inc., representing some 200 firms.

More than 900 small trucking parties are negotiating individual contracts with the union, and these could be expected to follow the pattern set in the national pact.

Figures distributed by the Teamsters show that since 1979, 55 major trucking companies with annual revenues of more than $3 million each and employing some 70,500 union and non-union workers, have ceased operations.

"We know that what the workers need is not out of line, and has never been out of line, with what the industry can afford," Presser has said.

Arthur H. Bunte Jr., president of TMI, said the industry wanted a pact which will recognize today's competitive realities in the marketplace for trucking services.

Newspapers report Japan to limit auto exports to U.S. by 25 percent

TOKYO (AP) — Two major newspapers reported today that the government will limit Japan's auto exports to the United States during the year beginning in April to 2.2 million-2.3 million vehicles, an increase of about 25 percent.

President Reagan announced March 1 that he would not ask Japan to continue restraints for a fifth year, sparking fears in Japan that Japanese automakers would release a "torrential" export offensive.

The Ministry of International Trade and Industry has decided that a continuation of export restraints is unavoidable in light of Japan's large trade surplus with the United States, the economic daily Nihon Keizai Shimbun and the nationwide Asahi Shimbun said.

The two newspapers, quoting unidentified ministry sources, said Keijiro Murata, the international trade and industry minister, will announce the government's plan to restrict exports at a Cabinet meeting Friday.

Ministry officials declined to comment, saying a final decision had not been reached.

Murata urged Toyota Motor Corp., Nissan Motor Co. and other major exporters to exercise restraint so trade friction and the threat of protectionist legislation against Japanese goods would not be exacerbated.

Japan's auto exports to the United States account for an estimated $16 billion, or more than 40 percent of the $36.8 billion trade deficit with Japan.

Asahi said the ministry initially had planned to let the auto industry police its own exports, under the premise that shipments would not go above 2.4 million vehicles in fiscal 1985 starting April 1.

However, further investigation showed that Japan's eight major exporters planned to increase exports to a total of about 2.7 million units, almost 50 percent above fiscal 1984.

"Voluntary restraints" on exports were first imposed in 1981 to give the struggling U.S. auto industry a chance to revive. Shipments were held to 1.68 million vehicles annually for three years, with an increase to 1.85 million vehicles, about 18 percent of the market, last year as American automakers began to show spectacular profits.

The daily newspapers said the ministry has yet to work out quotas for individual companies, a major problem in enforcing restraints.

In the past, the three big exporters — Toyota, Nissan and Honda — have been given more than three-fourths of the quota, and smaller exporters like Mazda and Mitsubishi Motors are clamoring for a larger share.

The ministry will also have to resolve how to handle "captive imports," Japanese cars shipped to General Motors Corp. and Chrysler Corp. for sale under U.S. brand names.

Gearhart reports net operating results

FORT WORTH (SWN) — Gearhart Industries Inc. Monday announced net operating results for the year and fourth quarter ended Jan. 31.

Operating results for the year ended Jan. 31 improved significantly from the prior year. Included are the operating results of Geosource Inc. since July 14, 1984, the date of acquisition by the company.

As compared to last year, well evaluation net revenue increased 22 percent to $387.1 million and operating income increased significantly from $16.2 million to $44.3 million. Performance in the North America wireline operations was very strong given the unstable market conditions.

Net revenue increased 38 percent with operating income increasing over 400 percent. Operating results were lower in South America due to depressed drilling activity and lower pricing. Other foreign operations improved over last year, but operating income was lowered by additional start-up costs and foreign currency losses.

A negative factor on operating income was anti-takeover expenses of $5.5 million. The operations of GeoSource and related acquisition expenses reduced net income by $11.4 million. Net income increased $5.6 million, or 26 cents per share, due to a reversal of the tax provisions previously recorded against income earned by the company's Domestic International Sales Corporations (DISC). This reversal was in compliance with the Tax Reform Act of 1984 exempting from tax all accumulated income of such DISCs.

Well evaluation net revenue and net income for the fourth quarter increased eight percent and 46 percent, respectively, from last year's fourth quarter. The strongest performances were achieved by the North America operations and the Southeast Asia operations.

Their operating income increased at a greater rate than net revenue because of increased market penetration and effective cost controls.

Foreign operations were hurt by foreign currency losses and some are still experiencing start-up costs. Geosource also had a negative impact on net income.

GM offering 8.8% financing on autos

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp., which has failed to gain back the market share it lost during last year's strikes, says it will offer 8.8 percent financing on two lines of small autos.

The other U.S. carmakers, particularly Chrysler Corp., have been gaining market share at GM's expense this year and analysts attribute much of it to aggressive marketing.

GM traditionally shuns sales gimmicks. But in the last auto sales reporting period, its share of the U.S. market was 53.4 percent compared with 60 percent a year earlier.

GM said Wednesday the cut-rate loans, available through April 30 under company financing, would be offered on the Pontiac Fiero and the Chevrolet Cavalier, Pontiac Sunbird, Oldsmobile Firenza, Buick Skyhawk and Cadillac Cimarron subcompact cars.

Big Balloon Theory hits economy hard

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — The Big Balloon Theory, which posits the thesis that the world economy is going to blow up in our faces, is getting quite a workout these days.

You see and hear about it everywhere of late, in part because of the plentitude of events that might be construed as evidence that the economic world is about to burst into smithereens.

There is, for instance, the evidence of failures among banks and savings and loan associations, and the inability of Third World nations to repay their debts, and the rising level of home mortgage delinquencies.

The economic balloon is too full of air, say the Big Balloon theorists. They do not see the beauty that others admire in the big balloon because, they say, it has been filled to a size beyond its elastic strength.

Just one little pin prick or one tiny defect in the balloon's thin membrane, they point out, can blow us back to poverty.

You should know, say the Big Balloon folks, that everything economic is interconnected: The stock market, consumer debt, the foreign trade imbalance, the budget deficits, interest rates, consumer confidence, inflation.

Add real estate to the list, and Federal Reserve policy, and the high valuation of the dollar in international trade and the sluggish performance of European economies and the U.S. inability to penetrate Japanese markets.

All are potential weak spots in the balloon, or so the theory says.

Those who propogate the Big Balloon theory — many of them writers of investment letters — cannot believe that good news is anything but bad news seeking to deceive a gullible public. It makes them flinch.

A rise in the stock market, for example, is more worrisome to them than a decline, the assumption being that a higher stock market is just more evidence that corporate earnings are overvalued and destined to collapse.

Economic growth might seem to be good news to most people, but not to those who believe the economic world will end with a bang. As they see it, the economy already has grown beyond a sustainable point.

The Big Balloon theorists cannot admire the size and steady growth of the balloon even when it is denominated in terms of rising gross national product or greater employment or improved productivity.

How could they, when they "know" it is going to happen? When they believe that all that goes into the balloon is more pressure, and that the added pressure brings closer the day of the big bang?

Many of the Big Balloon theorists believe in cycles, particularly 50-year cycles, and inevitably that means they see in today's events something of a replay of the disillusioning 1930s.

If it seems that the 50-year cycle is overdue — 1929 having been the year of the big collapse — it only makes things worse. The longer the big bang is delayed, the more powerful and destructive it will be.

Other Big Balloon theorists maintain that the 1930s are already with us again. They say we just don't know how bad things really are — that many Americans live an illusion; that they don't know how badly off they are.

Some Big Ballonists have been saying it for three years or so, and the longer they hold the view the more convinced they are that the bursting will be all the more mighty and ruinous.

Nobody knows if the ballooning economy will burst, but what they do know is that it hasn't burst during all the long months the Big Balloon theorists have been waiting.

Meanwhile, one of the most powerful economic expansions of the century has been lifting millions of Americans to a level of prosperity never achieved by man before.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Firm's bankruptcy can result in capital losses

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Several years ago, I bought 400 shares of a speculative stock at $2.50 a share. That stock now is selling for about 50 cents and there is a possibility the company might file for bankruptcy.

If I sell the stock now, will I be able to claim a loss on my 1985 income tax return? If the company does go bankrupt, can I claim a total loss on my 1985 return? Also, how would I report the loss?

Doyle

A. If you sell for 50 cents a share, you'll have an $800 loss — the difference between the $1,000 you paid and the $200 you get from the sale.

You then would report the $800 as a long-term capital loss on Schedule D of your 1985 return. That's basic.

If the company goes bankrupt, things get more complicated. You might or might not be able to take a $1,000 capital loss on your 1985 return.

Sometimes, after a company goes into bankruptcy, its stock still has some value and is traded in the market. If that happens, you will have to sell your stock in order to report a capital loss.

If the stock loses all its value, you will be able to take a capital loss for the total amount you paid. You must report a capital loss for a wothless security on the income tax return you file for the year in which it actually lost all its value.

You do that by listing the stock as having a "zero" value as of December 31 on the Schedule D you file with your Form 1040 that year. If the stock becomes worthless in 1985, you are required to report your capital loss on your 1985 return. You can't report it on the return you file for 1986 or some later year.

However, if you don't report the loss when you file your return for the proper year, you can file an amended return later. In the case of the worthless securities, you can file an amended return back for seven years.

The seven years, set by Section 6511(d) of the Internal Revenue Code, is longer than is allowed for most amended returns. This recognizes the unhappy fact that it often is difficult to learn exactly when a stock becomes worthless.

Thursday turns tide on ratings

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — What a difference a night makes.

A hugely successful Thursday night, led by "The Cosby Show," has been credited with turning long-suffering NBC into the second-place network this season. Last week, NBC series did well again on Thursday, but so did ABC's, for the first time this season.

ABC and NBC tied for first place, with a 15.8 rating, for the week of March 18-24, while CBS, which normally does well on Thursday, plummeted to third, with a 15.0, according to figures released Tuesday by the A.C. Nielsen Co.

CBS' problems were attributed to the failure of NCAA basketball tournament, which pre-empted the popular "Simon & Simon" and "Knots Landing," to draw large enough audiences.

ABC scored on Thursday with a "20-20" broadcast devoted entirely to the Bernhard Goetz subway shooting case and two new series.

According to ABC, "Wildside" achieved ABC's best rating for a series in the 8 p.m. timeslot on Thursdays in two years; "Eye to Eye" had the highest ABC series rating at 9 p.m. since October 1982, and "20-20" scored its best rating in nearly four years.

"20-20," the No. 47 show this season, ranked 12th last week. "Eye to Eye" was 15th, and "Wildside" was 28th.

Still, NBC won the night because of the No. 1-ranked "Cosby Show," which had a 25.9 rating, second-rated "Family Ties" and No. 5 "Cheers" — all repeat episodes. The NCAA regional game (Boston College-Memphis State or Georgetown-Loyola) ranked 58th with a 12.0 rating.

"The ABC shows did better because they debuted against college basketball," said Gerald Jaffe, NBC's vice president for research projects. "'Simon & Simon' will be back next week against 'Eye to Eye,' and they're the same show."

With a few exceptions, prime-time sports do not have broad appeal. CBS also was hurt Friday night by the St. John's-Kentucky NCAA tournament game, which ranked 70th and last for the week, and by not having "Dallas."

"It was an atypical week," said Mike Eisenberg, CBS' director of audience measurement. "ABC's new shows got off to a good start, but let's see if they can sustain it next week."

Comedy again dominated the Top 10. Besides "Cosby," "Family Ties" and "Cheers," CBS' Monday night duo performed well: "Newhart" was sixth and "Kate & Allie" was seventh.

Other Top 10 shows were ABC's "Dynasty," third; CBS' "60 Minutes," fourth; NBC's "The A-Team," eighth; "California Girls" on the "ABC Sunday Night Movie," ninth; and NBC's "Riptide," 10th.

The bottom five included the final episode of CBS' "Alice," when the diner was closed, in 67th place, followed by NBC's "Silver Spoons," ABC's "Ripley's Believe It or Not," NBC's revamped "Under One Roof" and the St. John's-Kentucky game.

With four weeks left in the prime-time season, CBS has averaged a 17.1 rating to NBC's 16.3 and ABC's 15.6.

A rating measures the percentage, on average, of the nation's 84.9 million TV homes tuned to a network during a given minute of prime time.

The evening news competition has not varied much from a year ago, despite all the promotion this month for anchor Tom Brokaw on the "NBC Nightly News."

Last week's figures showed the "CBS Evening News" leading, with a 12.8 rating to 11.3 for "Nightly News" and the 10.6 for ABC's "World News Tonight."

During the same week in 1984 "CBS Evening News" rated 12.9, "Nightly News" 11.2, and "World News Tonight" 10.6.

The class meets twice a week under assistant professors Alan Bloom, a film and video maker, and Robert Vianello, author of books on television. They will look at the video from five aspects: history, economics, aesthetics, the production process and societal impact.

Texans pleased by Oscar role

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN — The blossoming Texas film industry got more good news from this year's Academy Awards, with the movie "Places in the Heart" showing the importance of Texas writers, says the director of the state Film Commission.

Although Texas-made movies didn't take as many awards this year as last — when "Terms of Endearment" swept several honors including best picture — commission head Joel Smith said the industry is doing just fine.

"Places in the Heart," the story of a Depression-era Texas widow determined to save her farm, won Oscars for best actress and best original screenplay. The movie was made at Waxahachie.

The only other Texas-made film nominated for an Oscar was "Songwriter," which was filmed in Austin.

"I think it was especially gratifying for 'Places in the Heart' to win some important awards," Smith said Tuesday.

Robert Benton, who wrote the screenplay, is a Texas native. Smith said that points out another dimension to filmmaking in the state.

"I think his Oscar for best original screenplay points up an important resource that the state has. The people who are from Texas, who grew up here, are writing about their experiences growing up. That serves as an important way for movies to get made here," Smith said.

Because of the way filmmakers like to work today, Smith said directors will try to shoot a movie in the area where the story is based.

"The filmmaker is more than likely going to try to shoot that in the locale where the story takes place," he said, noting that Texas author Larry McMurtry penned "Terms of Endearment," which was shot in Houston.

"Most people think in terms of the things the film commission talks about — the climate, technicians, crews and acting talent," Smith said.

"Certainly all of that is very, very important. But there's another element. We have some great, talented writers who keep the state in the minds of the reading and viewing public."
