New non-profit housing organization works to revitalize neighborhoods

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Homeowner Janie Dunson stood in her front yard on Clay Street Friday afternoon, accompanied by one of her seven great-grandchildren and showed off her freshly painted white house, the first house to be repaired by the Midland Neighborhood Housing Services.

Asked what needed repairing, she replied, "everything." While work is not quite complete, there is a new roof, new flooring in some of the rooms, storm windows, a new heating unit and ventilation system as well as the fresh coat of paint.

She explained that she heard about the program through neighborhood meetings and, because she is currently unable to work and is also caring for a disabled brother, she wouldn't be able to make repairs on the house.

The program, according to president Don Kasch, is a non-profit corporation comprised of Midland residents, seven area banks and city representatives.

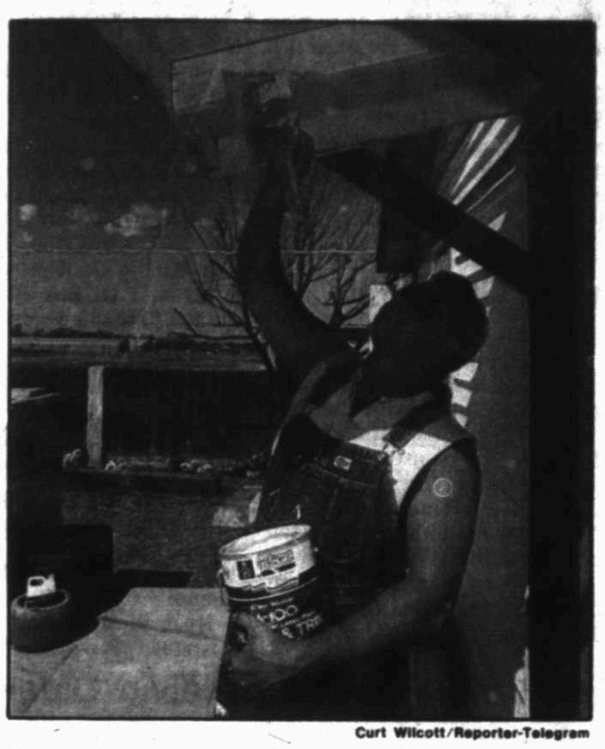

"Our main goal is to revitalize poor neighborhoods," he said, adding that target areas include Crockett, De Zavala, Washington Park and Southside Park neighborhoods.

MNHS is financed with federal Community Development Block Grant funds, funds from the Midland Housing Finance Corp. and funding from the participating banks.

There are various loan programs that enable participants unable to qualify for conventional loans to get interest-free or low interest loans for home repair or purchase. Currently MNHS has three programs: Home Rehabilitation Program, Homeownership Incentive Program and Home Emergency Repair. Kasch added that he hoped to implement programs soon for construction financing and home purchase.

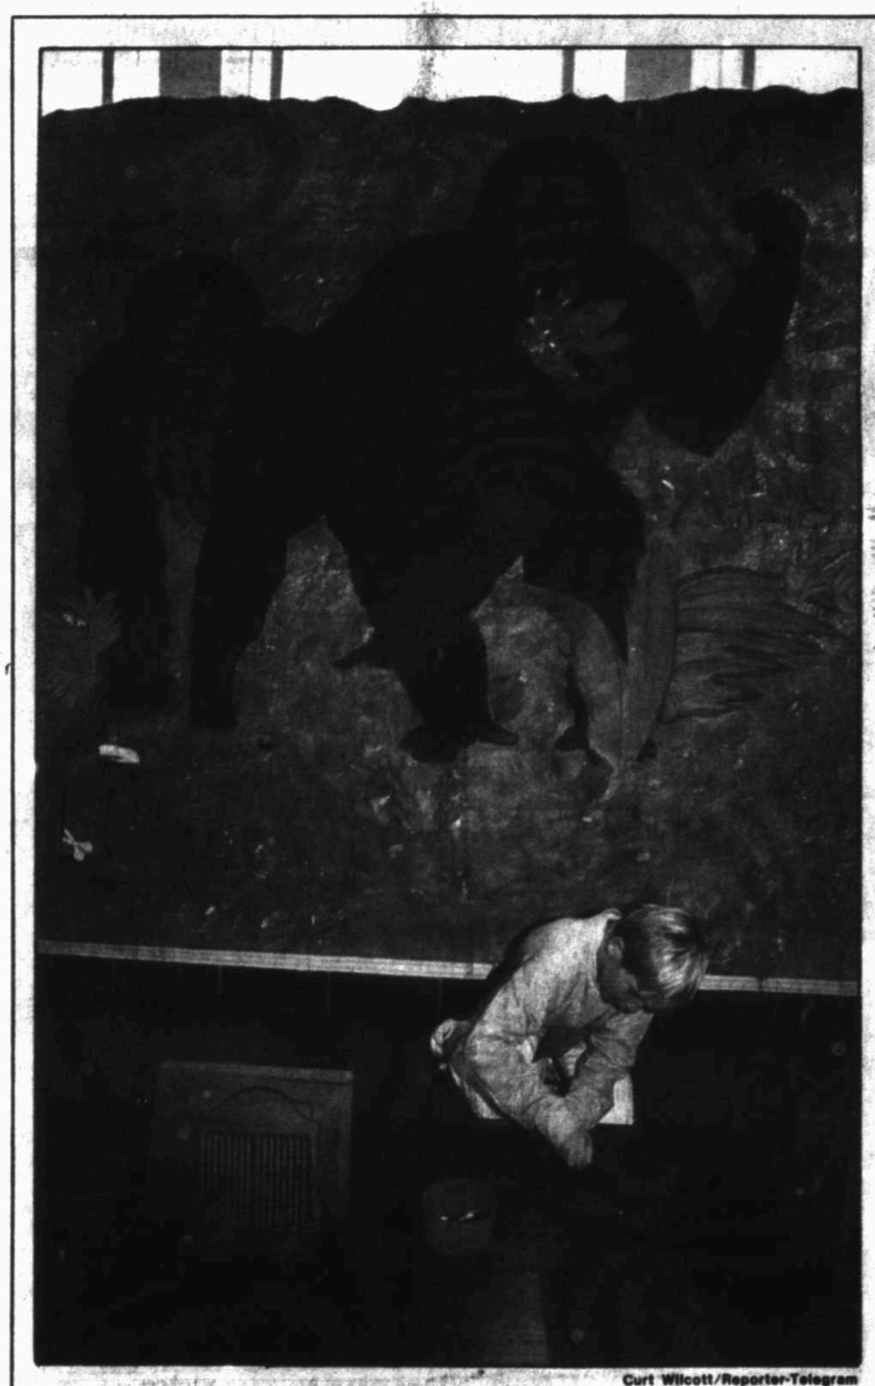

Angelina Davis, executive director of MNHS, said that to qualify, applicants have to be classified as low or very-low income and show that they are unable to obtain conventional loans because they are considered unbankable due to low income or credit problems.

MNHS also works with referrals from Casa de Amigos and Southeast Senior Citizens Center. The housing service's office is at 401 E. Illinois, Suite 201.

Mayor lands airport post with Midland

■ Carroll Thomas will become economic development officer when his term as mayor ends.

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

When Carroll Thomas steps down as mayor June 1, he will take another position with the city of Midland — as a salaried employee, officials confirmed Friday.

Thomas announced last month he won't seek another term as mayor, but was named Friday as economic development officer at Midland International Airport, a job created only a few weeks ago.

Thomas

The mayor was one of four applicants, and Airports Director Ken Day said he was chosen because of his qualifications and experience. The job was created after the departure of assistant director Marcy Blauvelt, and incorporates some of her duties, Day said.

"We need someone who knows the inside of Washington (D.C.)," said Day, explaining that the economic development officer will focus on the foreign trade zone, airline recruitment and promotion of Midland International as a "wayport"

Airport foresees wayport in future

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

At Midland International Airport, a lot of issues are currently hanging in the balance.

The facility's future, in terms of economic development, will be tackled from at least three sides — recruitment of airlines, promotion of the foreign trade zone and attempts to establish the facility as a "wayport."

The wayport concept is still being developed and hasn't been approved by U.S. Congress yet, but Airports Director Ken Day thinks Midland has a chance at becoming one of the select facilities. Wayports would be remote transfer operations or connection points for travelers, designed to reduce congestion at larger urban airports.

Day wrote a thesis on the subject in May 1990, promoting the idea that underused airports, like Midland International, could become the first wayports. Since promoted to director of airports he has secured the trademark on a slogan for Midland International: "Wayport to the World."

Arco Oil & Gas spellers capture Corporate Bee

By Allen E. Howland
Assistant City Editor

The third time was the charm for spellers from Arco Oil & Gas on Friday.

The company's representatives in the 3rd Annual Corporate Bee for Literacy outlasted the team from Chevron to take home the top prize after coming close the last two years.

District vice president Ken Thompson and geologist Karen Burchfield completed their trophy collections, adding this year's championship cup to last year's runner-up trophy and the third-place award from the inaugural contest in 1990.

The third member of the team, safety and training technician Laura Smith, returned to the team after a year's absence to help secure the victory.

The trio waged a see-saw battle with Ed Wolf, Mike Koster and Dick Bain of Chevron, as each team narrowly averted elimination at least twice.

In the end it was a paupiette (a meat or fish fillet wrapped around a filling) that proved the Chevron team's

Clinton leads in poll, but Tsongas shows substantial gains

By R.W. Apple Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

Former Sen. Paul E. Tsongas of Massachusetts made a substantial gain in national recognition as a result of his victory in the New Hampshire primary, but he still trails Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas among Democrats who have chosen a favorite in the race for their party's nomination, according to the latest New York Times/CBS News poll.

All five main Democratic candidates remain virtually unknown to half or more of the likely primary voters in their own party, the poll found.

Clinton has the support of 29 percent of his party's likely voters, despite increased negative views about him that were detected in the poll, conducted Wednesday and Thursday.

Tsongas is second with 24 percent backing, and has made the greater gain of the two since the last Times/CBS News poll, in January. He moved up 14 percentage points while Clinton is seven percentage points ahead of his showing in that earlier poll.

Former Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California was backed by 10 percent in the new poll, Sen. Bob Kerrey of Nebraska by 4 percent and Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa by 3 percent.

Among Republican primary voters nationally, President Bush leads his conservative challenger, Patrick J. Buchanan, by a four-to-one margin, the survey showed.

And while 80 percent of Republican primary voters agree that Buchanan is "saying some things George Bush needs to hear," 73 percent of those same voters say they want Bush eventually to win his party's nomination.

But among all registered voters in the nation, regardless of party, more than half, or 53 percent, lack any clear idea of what Bush "wants to accomplish in a second term as president," even though he has been campaigning for re-election for at least six weeks.

This finding coincides with the judgment of Republican strategists who have criticized the president's murky "I care" message in the New Hampshire primary campaign.

With 13 primaries scheduled for the next three weeks and Buchanan pressing his insurgent campaign, it also suggests that the White House needs to retool its strategy quickly.

It had been theorized by many politicians that neither of the top finishers in the Democratic voting in New Hampshire, Tsongas and Clinton, would get much benefit nationally from their accomplishments because so much attention was focused on Buchanan's strong showing against the President. But the Times/CBS poll showed they have become much the best-known of active Democratic candidates.

The current survey, which has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points, suggests that the president retains ample room to change voters' minds and retake the initiative, and, like all incumbents, he has many tools with which to do so.

Still, the poll indicates that Bush has national difficulties, not just a local problem brought on by New Hampshire's severe recession. His approval rating is hovering at 42 percent, about the same as it was just before the State of the Union Message on Jan. 28, which had been widely heralded as the key to turning around the economy and halting the president's slide.

Clearly, the speech did not accomplish its political purpose, and polls indicate there was not even a brief lift for Bush.

The Times/CBS News poll showed only 18 percent approval of Bush's handling of the economy, the worst level for a president since Jimmy Carter, who was at 15 percent in July 1979. In the current survey of 1,044 adults, 75 percent said they disapproved of Bush's economic stewardship.

Hard economic times and a belief that the Bush administration is responsible for them are evidently hurting the president, despite his effort in his speeches and his primary-state advertising to lay much of the blame on the Democratic-controlled Congress.

Asked whether Bush "cares about the needs and problems" of people like themselves, only 49 percent of registered voters said yes, a dangerous level for an incumbent who has had three years to connect with the electorate and especially for one who has been saying "I care" again and again. More directly, 46 percent said they placed "a lot of the blame" for the recession on the White House.

On another question in the same area, 52 percent of all those interviewed and 37 percent of Republicans, a significant minority, said Bush could have avoided raising taxes in 1990, a violation of his "no new taxes" pledge that Buchanan hammered home in New Hampshire television commercials.

Not suprisingly, given his blunt style of speaking and writing, Buchanan evokes contrasting reactions among Republicans. Of primary voters, 24 percent hold a favorable view and 26 percent an unfavorable view of the television commentator, newspaper columnist and former White House speech writer.

Nevertheless, 44 percent said Buchanan, who has never held any elective office, "has the ability to be an effective president," while 34 percent disagreed with that.

Republican primary voters preferred Bush as the party's eventual nominee, with 73 percent backing him, 17 percent supporting Buchanan, and 2 percent choosing David Duke of Louisiana, a former Ku Klux Klan leader.

Wall Street Bar agrees to fine

Staff Report

Mike McMahan, the owner of the Wall Street Bar and Grill restaurant announced Friday that he has agreed to pay a $9,000 civil penalty for past violations that occurred at the restaurant.

On Dec. 14, 1991, undercover officers claimed to have bought cocaine from former Wall Street employee Sharon Beverly Scott. She was arrested and charged with three counts of delivery of cocaine and charged with one count of possession for drugs allegedly found in her purse during the arrest.

McMahan said that neither he, nor his manager Lisa Johnson, condoned the incident. However, the owner said, "We do accept responsibility for the actions of our employees."

"We have instituted a strict drug policy to ensure a drug-free workplace, and plan on working closely with the local office of the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission and other enforcement agencies to ensure nothing of this nature occurs again," McMahan said. "We look forward to putting this all behind us."

MAYOR: Thomas to join airport staff in June

(From 1A)

if such a program is approved by Congress.

"With his assistance, we have a chance to compete," said Day. "It's a competition, on an international level."

"I've always said the airport is one of the greatest assets the Permian Basin has," Thomas said Friday. "Midland and Odessa depend on it, as does the surrounding area."

He said the airport and airport-related industry has been identified as the best potential for the diversification of the local economy.

Thomas will draw an annual salary of $43,128, Day said. That's the amount Blauvelt was making when she left city employment Oct. 31, according to city records. Thomas will not have the use of a city car, as Blauvelt did, Day said.

In November, Day restructured the airport staff to effectively eliminate Blauvelt's position, dividing most of her duties among three other workers. According to city personnel records, he also implemented $8,000 in annual salary increases at that time.

This week, Day said the workload at the airport had become too much and the increasing need for an intense marketing campaign had made another staff member necessary. He said funding Thomas' salary will be no problem, however, because the airport is budgeted for 42 staff members and will be operating with 39.

The job opening was advertised only to current employees of the city, a common practice when city jobs are vacated — current employees are usually guaranteed the first opportunity to apply. Normally, interviews with interested city employees are conducted before the job is advertised externally, if no viable internal candidates are found.

Members of the city's airport advisory board — a group of volunteer citizens — said earlier this week they weren't aware Day was seeking a new employee until they read it in the newspaper. At present, the city is in a hiring freeze, slated to save money during a budget crunch.

When questioned by airport board members Wednesday about the issue, Day said he had not decided to fill the job, but was weighing budgetary concerns and seeking the right individual. He said he didn't want to tell the advisory board his decision until he had the facts available.

"Carroll will do a good job," said Ed Vogler, chair of the advisory board. But he said he had understood the position would not be filled after Blauvelt left.

"The airport board is doing everything possible to gain the support of the people of Midland," said Vogler, adding that he feared any additional expenditures would be unpopular in present economic circumstances, even though the airport operates independently of the city's general fund.

Another member of the board also was supportive of Thomas' capabilities, but was dismayed by the process which resulted in the hiring.

"I'm sure he'll do a great job, but I object to the way it was done," said Pat Schneider, a member of the Airport Planning and Development Board for six years.

"We are supposed advise — not be suprised by these things. Why have a board if you're going to go ahead an appoint people?" she asked.

Thomas said the job offers him the chance to complete much of the work he was very interested in, but was not able to focus on, as mayor.

"Something people don't probably know is that as mayor, I can spend less than 10 percent of my time on economic development," he said. "I just haven't had the time to give it. With this job, I'm going to be able to give it 10 times as much of my effort."

Thomas is currently employed as a stockbroker with Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. Trained as a geologist, the mayor said his experiences with both jobs will aid him in the new position.

"Right now I'm about half the time the mayor, half the time an employee of Shearson," Thomas said. He said his switch from elected official to employee would not be difficult.

"The mayor's job is the position, not so much the person," Thomas said. "The recognition fades."

AIRPORT: Director seeks wayport

(From 1A)

"We need to be sure we have the ability to be selected," said Day Friday, after announcing his selection of current mayor, Carroll Thomas, as economic development officer.

Beginning in June, when his term as mayor ends, Thomas will join the airport staff to focus on marketing the facility, its surrounding property and its interests on a national level. Day said Thomas' connections and experience make him uniquely qualified.

Because a recent report commissioned by the Federal Aviation Administration recommends wayports be implemented across the country, Day said now is the time to act on the concept.

"We're looking into the future," he said. "I'm planning for the year 2000 and beyond. I have to look at the big picture, and I think this is part of it."

Thomas said he wants to focus time on the development of the airport's foreign trade zone, an area that offers incentives to businesses that manufacture goods with imported products.

Although it was approved in July 1990 by the U.S. Department of Commerce, the zone has yet to be activated. A boundary change or the interest of an industry will be needed to get the zone working. Also, current negotiations surrounding trade with Mexico and Canada are likely to alter the zone's use or effectiveness, officials have said.

"One of the things I want to do is produce a slide presentation to promote the trade zone, the advantages of it, to businesses, and the local community," Thomas said. "I'd also like to have a seminar on the zone for the whole surrounding area, and possible a trade show."

Among his other duties, Thomas said he'll focus on recruiting new airlines to Midland International, where the only commercial operators are Southwest and American. His reponsibilities will also extend into the surrounding region, to continue recent efforts at promoting the airport.

SPELL: Arco Oil & Gas takes first in Corporate Bee

(From 1A)

downfall. The Arco team correctly spelled that and sealed the victory with shuba (a Russian fur-lined coat).

The top finishers had two of the loudest cheering sections among the crowd of about 300 that filled Midland Center for the lunchtime event.

"Everyone enjoyed themselves and knew they were benefitting literacy by attending," said Patty Groce, executive director of Midland Need to Read Inc.

The group, which provides tutors for one-on-one learning to combat adult illeracy received more than $6,500 from Friday's event, which was fully underwritten by the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

The defending bee champions, Penny-Quick Printing, and the 1990 championship team from Midland College each fell during the sixth round of competition. Teams from Team Bank-Midland, First City Texas amd COV Inc. lasted until the seventh round.

Earlier casualties were the teams from Texas Instruments, Texaco and Exxon, which also provided the emcee for the contest.

Geologist Bill Dingus entertained the contestants and audience. County Judge Al Walvoord and County Librarian Sandra Wegner officiated, and Midland College department head Larry Griffin served as the pronouncer.

None were immune from Dingus' irreverent wit. When Griffin asked the judges how the contest would proceed, "Will the teams just rotate?"

Without missing a beat, Dingus replied, "No, they will remain facing forward throughout the competetion."

VEHICLES: Sheriff's deputies offer to pay for fuel

(From 1A)

Court, the "deputies wish to show our support to Sheriff (Gary) Painter by personally paying the fuel expense" of the vehicles.

McKinney, who said the deputies "share our sheriff's deep obligation to serve the public," had requested that the proposal be placed on the Commissioners' Court agenda.

The sheriff viewed the deputies' gesture as certainly generous and as displaying more than dedication.

That proposal, however, was rejected, Painter said. The sheriff said that County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer noted in a written reply that the deputies' proposal does not require action of the Commissioners' Court.

"If they are 'seized' vehicles," said Commissioner Durward Wright, "I don't know why they (the deputies) couldn't pay for the fuel. I don't see anything wrong with it. It gets publicity."

Sheriff's Lt. Tim Rogers, who heads up criminal investigations unit in the operations' division which McKinney commands, said that the deputies have got to fuel up their assigned cars.

"It's either buy gas or take the taxi cab when we are out to work cases," Rogers said.

In October 1991, the Commissioners' Court issued a vehicle policy which stated, in part, that Due to budgetary considerations, the county cannot afford to pay for or otherwise fund the operation of any seized, donated, or grant vehicles assigned to or operated by the Sheriff's Office.

Cost of operating those vehicles was to be paid through the sheriff's narcotics seizure account, otherwise known as the drug forfeiture fund.

The sheriff, however, reasoned that the vehicles should be maintained though the county's general fund. He viewed the policy as infringing on his authority to operate the sheriff's department and disregarded it.

Until recently, however, the sheriff had been allowing his deputies to fuel up those seized vehicles through a credit-card system linked to his fuel account. But after the sheriff had spent, in four month's time, 45 percent of his year's allotment of $110,000 for operating the vehicles, the Commissioners' Court canceled credit cards on 21 of the sheriff's fleet of about 65 vehicles.

Now, as a result of the Texas Attorney General's intervention in the sheriff's lawsuit against the Commissioners' Court, the Attorney General is contending that much of the money, now about $225,000, in the forfeiture fund may belong to the state treasury.

The funds, now frozen until a district-court judge rules on their ownership, cannot be spent by the sheriff.

Since the sheriff started his reverse-sting operations, Painter has brought in about $1 million into the drug forfeiture fund. Most of that money has been spent to buy law-enforcement equipment, including cars, firearms, computers, and a laser-controlled firearms firing range.

Deputies, other than Rogers and McKinney, who volunteered to buy fuel for their assigned work vehicles include Rusty Hill, Phillip Buys, Paul Hallmark, Jerry Cowin, Capt. Richard Sexton, Sgt. Butch Brazell, Sgt. Ed Krevit, Jim McFadden, Sgt. Jose Primera, Chief Deputy Jim Chancellor, and Rory McKinney. Reserve Deputy Bill Strickland also agreed to buy fuel for two vehicles.

Russian predicts republics will recover from civil strife

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Russian economist Yuri Stepanov said he feels confident the republics which made up the Soviet Union will resolve their economic problems as they've done in the past following other revolutions and civil strife.

Stepanov

Stepanov, the guest of Jack Kitzmiller, an associate professor of social science, addressed a small group Friday at Odessa College.

The Russian visitor is currently in the U.S. taking courses from the International Monetary Fund in Washington D.C.

The IMF is a companion institution to nations with foreign exchanges which meet the temporary needs of international payments for countries like Russia as well as assist them in curtailing currency depreciation.

Stepanov said the IMF has asked a lot of his country in exchange for assistance, including stabilization, a reduction in its deficit, as well as continued cuts in subsidies and defense spending.

But they should consider that we're not Peru. We're not Bolivia or a country in Africa . . . our situation is very different," he said.

Stepanov admitted that Russia and the other republics are ill-prepared to handle on their own what amounts to massive economic decay, caused by years of centralized rule.

"Russia has never had a balance of payments," he said, adding the country doesn't know a whole lot about various world exchange rates and how they function in an international circle.

However, the 40-year-old chief of economic analysis and forecasting for Gosplan — the economic planning agency for the former Soviet Union — said the country is taking measures to meet IMF demands, including a 30 percent cut in defense spending that occurred in 1991.

Stepanov said Russia also faces another challenge — that being the breakaway republics — Republics like the Ukraine, which presents an entirely different set of problems.

"It is very difficult to explain all our developments and problems," Stepanov said.

Topping a laundry list of questions is just how Russia and the others will jump start their dead economies.

For example, while those living in Moscow favor privatization, other outlying areas of Russia appear less willing to make the move. However, Stepanov said there's no question that the situation continues to remain fluid.

Stepanov said he believes it will take two to three years for the country to stabilize, and that in the interim, the country will need a great deal of technical advice and monetary assistance.

Bush, Congress continue quarrel over military cuts

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Cold War is over and the Soviet threat is all but gone, but the Bush administration is still battling with Congress over how low the military budget can safely go.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney says his proposed $281 billion budget for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 — $10 billion less than this year — is as low as safely possible.

Indeed, Pentagon planners, looking to the post-Cold-War world, have seven outlines for foreign conflicts that could draw the United States into combat in the next decade.

But Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., who heads the House Armed Services Committee, and other lawmakers say the Pentagon's budget reflects only the collapse of the Warsaw Pact, not of the Soviet Union.

Amid all the shouting, what has gone largely unnoted is the Persian Gulf war's influence on the proposed budget. But those lessons permeate the current debate.

The effect is more subtle than the dramatic Soviet collapse and the headline-grabbing plans to stop modernizing America's nuclear arsenal and cancel two large weapon systems designed to counter Soviet threats — the Stealth bomber and the Seawolf attack submarine.

As Congress pressures for deeper cuts, Pentagon policy makers are relying on their gulf war experiences to chart a course in a new world of regional conflicts.

Midland High joins Partnership Schools

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

Next fall, it won't be business as usual at Midland High School.

But that's the way educational leaders want it. As one of 83 schools across the state participating in the Partnership Schools Initiative, Midland High will be responsible for creating its own programs and curriculum — with fewer restraints than most Texas schools.

Bivins

"I'm very pleased to be able to tell you something good about education in Texas," said Texas Sen. Teel Bivins, who represents Midland, announcing the program to educators, parents and the media Friday.

"We've been fighting over the system we use to pay for public education for 20 years," said Bivins. "In that time, there have been some pretty exciting things that have gone pretty much unheralded."

He said the Partnership Schools program would give control of learning "back to the local schools, the parents and the students." Midland High was chosen to participate in the program from 2,000 applicant schools from all over Texas.

Primary responsibility for developing the school's program falls to Jane Carrens, currently in her first year as MHS principal. She said she's ready to meet the challenge.

"I don't have any problem saying to the teachers, 'Let your imagination go,' " said Carrens. She said innovative ideas will be welcome under the program, which is set to extend for the next three to five years.

"It's really what the teachers do that makes the difference," said Carrens.

Vernon Stokes, executive director of the Region 18 Educational Service Center, said the only restrictions put on participating schools will be "no pass, no play," health and safety standards, and federal law. They will also be required to fund programs mainly with existing resources.

But funds for new programs could also come from businesses and educational institutions invited to become partners with the schools. Agencies and private companies may be asked to assist in learning by donating programs, funds, educational materials or the services of their personnel.

Carrens said school staffers have completed a needs assessment, and identified six major goals to meet during the program. Among those is the challenge of meeting the needs of struggling students while continuing to provide resources for high achievers, she said.

"One thing's for sure," she said. "Business as usual hasn't cut it and won't cut it."

Innovations may begin appearing at MHS in the fall, but educators said the goal is a long-term change in the way students are educated.

"It's a long process," said Stokes. "We're not going to see any dynamic changes in the first few months, but this is for the long haul.

"What's going to make a difference here is the creativity and energy of the people involved," he said. "We're going to take some of the shackles off and see what we can do."

Partnership Schools is one of Education Commissioner Lionel "Skip" Meno's plans for innovation in education, Bivins said. Stokes said other pilot programs are beginning throughout the state as well.

Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon prompts renewed shelling

JERUSALEM (NYT) — Israeli forces withdrew from two villages in southern Lebanon Friday, ending a 24-hour thrust against Shiite Muslim guerrillas who had fired salvos of rockets into northern Israel.

Hours after the withdrawal, the villages were again filled with gunmen from the pro-Iranian Party of God, and fresh barrages of rockets were fired at Israeli border villages, killing a five-year-old girl. She was the first Israeli civilian killed since the rocket attacks began early this week.

The renewed rocket attacks provoked heavy Israeli shelling and underscored the continued volatility of the situation along the Lebanese border.

Israel's commander in the north, Brig. Gen. Yitzhak Mordechai, warned that the army would "find the time and the place" to strike back, the Israeli radio reported.

Shiite guerrillas and Israeli troops have been dueling across the Lebanese border with rockets and artillery since an attack by Israeli helicopters on Sunday killed Sheik Abbas Musawi, leader of the Party of God in Lebanon.

The clashes climaxed with an Israeli armored push on Thursday into the villages of Kafra and Yater, about a mile north of what Israel calls its security zone in southern Lebanon.

A column of tanks and armored personnel carriers plowed through a barricade set up by United Nations peacekeeping troops and seized strategic hills overlooking the villages. Soldiers fought guerrillas at close range and blew up buildings before withdrawing early Friday.

Two Israeli soldiers died in the fighting, seven guerillas and two Lebanese civilians were reported killed, and eight U.N. peacekeeping soldiers were wounded.

The officer who commanded the Israeli force, but who cannot be identified under army regulations, pronounced the operation a success.

"The objectives were to hit terrorists and rocket-launching sites," he said. "All the objectives were achieved, and the force performed very well, according to plan."

The incursion drew a sharp protest from the U.N. Secretary General, Boutros Ghali, who demanded an immediate Israeli pullout. The U.S. State Department said it had urged Israel, Syria and Lebanon to exercise "maximum restraint."

After the Israeli troops left, hundreds of Party of God guerrillas converged on the battle-scarred villages, waving rifles, hoisting flags and plastering walls with pictures of their slain leader, Reuters reported. Thirty houses were reported to have been destroyed in Kafra, and other buildings and roads were badly damaged in the fighting.

Guerrillas fired rockets throughout the day at Israel and the "security zone," and several missiles landed near Israeli border communities. One rocket crashed into the village of Granot Hagalil, killing the five-year-old girl, Avia Elizade, and slightly wounding at least two other residents, including her father, Yossi, according to reports from the scene.

The girl was running to greet her father, who was returning home from work, when the rocket struck, according to reports by The Associated Press. "The little daughter shouted 'Daddy, Daddy!' " and ran toward him, said Mayor Yossi Goldberg of nearby Metulla, who translated the account by witnesses. "Exactly at that moment, the katyusha fell." The girl died in a hospital shortly afterward.

The heightened tension in Israel was further aggravated by the fatal stabbing of an immigrant woman from Russia.

Decision to kill Musawi made months ago, officials say

JERUSALEM (NYT) — The decision to kill the Lebanese Party of God leader, Sheik Abbas Musawi, slain on Sunday in an Israeli helicopter attack, was made months ago, Israeli officials say.

But they say it was postponed during U.N. negotiations to trade Israeli-held Arab prisoners from Lebanon for information about missing Israeli servicemen and the Western hostages.

With the release of the last American hostage, Terry Anderson, in December, the subsequent breakdown of the talks mediated by the United Nations and a sharp increase in the number of clashes in the "security zone" set up by Israel in southern Lebanon, Israeli officials decided it was time to target the Shiite cleric.

"It has been evident for quite some time that we had to do something about this," said Yossi Olmert, the director of the Government Press Office.

The killing marks one of the lowest points in the relations between the Israelis and the Lebanese Shiites and their Iranian sponsors.

Before the Iranian revolution in 1979, Israeli and Iranian officials, under Shah Mohammed Riza Pahlevi, shared many things from intelligence reports to weapons' technology.

The Lebanese Shiites, who did not even have a militia, were little more than a repressed and backward minority who few would have predicted would one day dominate whole enclaves in the country.

The current clash comes as the Mideast peace talks, scheduled to resume on Monday in Washington, appear to be faltering.

It has led to rocket attacks on Israeli Army positions and villages, artillery duels between Israeli forces and Shiite guerrillas and a a 24-hour incursion by Israeli troops, past U.N. barracades, to smash guerrilla positions.

The Party of God, backed by the Lebanese, the Syrians and the Iranians, has taken over southern Lebanon in the last few months. While Syrian and Lebanese forces have disarmed other militias, like Amal, they have equipped and aided the radical Shiites, Israeli officials said.

The Party of God was organized after Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

U.N. approves deployment of peacekeepers in Yugoslavia

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The U.N. Security Council on Friday unanimously approved the deployment of 14,000 peacekeepers to enforce a cease-fire in Yugoslavia and protect the population until a political settlement can be reached.

Advance teams are to be sent at once, and the first U.N. soldiers are expected to arrive in about two weeks. The force initially will be deployed for one year, although the Security Council has the option of extending or reducing its term.

The soldiers will be deployed primarily in three Serbian-dominated enclaves within Croatia, which will be designated U.N. protected areas. Both Croatia and the Serbs claim these areas, and it is likely their future will be the key subject of future negotiations.

"We are very happy," said Yugoslav Ambassador Darko Silovic. "The cease-fire was holding only because everybody was expecting the peacekepeing trops to come in. It was very fragile and thin ice we were treading.

"Either this cease-fire holds or we will have another war," he said.

The resolution emphasized that the peacekeeping plan "is in no way intended to prejudge the terms of a political settlement" — a reference to disputes over the sovereignty of the Serb-dominated enclaves.

"We hope the resolution adopted today will facilitate attainment of a peaceful political settlement," said Thomas R. Pickering, the U.S. ambassador, who heads the Security Council this month.

The force will be the largest U.N. peacekeeping mission since the 20,000-man Congo operation in the 1960s, although an even larger force, of 22,000 to 26,000 peacekeepers, was proposed for Cambodia on Thursday.

The vote had been postponed earlier because the United States and other Western members of the 15-nation Security Council considered the proposed $634 million cost of the U.N. Protective Force to be far too high.

The initial estimate had been $400 million to $450 million. Peacekeeping operations are financed by special assessments of U.N. members according to their ability to pay, and the United States usually pays about 30 percent of the total.

World in brief

■ Peace prize nominations hit record

OSLO, Norway — The Nobel Institute received a record 115 nominations for the 1992 Peace Prize, and the prize sum in each of the six Nobels was raised to about $1.09 million, spokesmen said Friday.

Peace Prize candidates include German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, former U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, South African President F. W. de Klerk and the Salvation Army.

The Nobel Peace Prize Committee does not reveal its list of candidates, but sometimes those making nominations announce their choices. Usually there are about 100 candidates.

Geir Lundestad, secretary of the committee, said the Nobel Institute had received about 1,000 letters with proposals from all over the world before the Jan. 31 deadline. Many suggested the same persons or organizations, but not since the Peace Prize was first awarded in 1901 have there been so many different nominees, Lundestad said.

■ Armed bandits attack tourists in Kenya

NAIROBI, Kenya — Armed bandits have terrorized and robbed tourists and in one case raped a German woman in a series of attacks recently in a popular game reserve, sources said Friday.

The attacks in the vast Masai Mara reserve in Kenya's southwest have worried foreign diplomatic missions, particularly the Americans and Germans.

American and German diplomats and tourism officials spoke about the attacks on condition of anonymity.

German officials have protested to the Kenyan government about inadequate security in the reserve, which is owned and maintained by the local Narok County Council and is not part of the Kenya Wildlife Service. They received no reply, the sources said.

The U.S. Embassy has expressed concern to Kenya's government and has urged the U.S. State Department to issue an advisory warning to American tourists, the sources said.

■ Spice consumption continues growth

LONDON — The growing popularity of spicy foods, especially in the United States, is steadily boosting world trade in spices, according to a market study released Friday.

The study by the Commonwealth Secretariat, which oversees the commonwealth of Britain and its former colonies, said world trade in spices now amounts to about 400,000 tons a year, worth $1.5 billion.

American imports of all spices — especially pepper, chili, cloves and ginger — rose again in 1990, the report said. The Commonwealth Secretariat estimated that U.S. spice consumption rose from 245,500 tons in 1980 to 381,000 tons in 1990.

■ Bolivia helps coca turn over new leaf

SEVILLE, Spain — Visitors to Expo '92 will get a taste of some of Bolivia's best coca — the plant used to produce cocaine, a Bolivian official said.

"Everyone knows it is used for cocaine. We want to show the good side of the coca," Fernando Cajias de la Vega, Bolivia's ambassador to Spain, said earlier this week during a visit to the Expo site.

The six-month exposition opens on April 20. A portion of Bolivia's exhibit will focus on the spiritual and medicinal uses of the coca plant. Visitors will be able to sip tea made from the plant and chew a coca leaf.

South American Indians chew the leaves as a cure for pain and headaches, said the exhibit's architect, Juan Carlos Calderon. He said the tea produced from coca has a soothing effect.

"The cocaine culture has corrupted the intention of the leaf itself," he said.

The Bolivian exhibit also will feature pre-Columbian artifacts.

■ 37 barely survive smuggling attempt

SOLTAU, Germany — Thirty-seven Indian men barely escaped with their lives after being packed in a shipping container in an attempt to smuggle them from Germany to New York, police said Friday.

The human cargo, aged 20 to 30, luckily found a hammer as oxygen was running out and broke free of the steel container Thursday, a police spokesman said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

A man witnessed their escape and notified police.

The would-be migrants were to have sailed Thursday night from Bremerhaven on a Polish-registered freighter.

The container — 40 feet long, 8½ feet wide and 8 feet high — contained bunks and food supplies, though port officials doubted there was enough for the 10-day sea voyage.

Police were considering a charge of attempted manslaughter against a German suspected of making the arrangements. They said he was deported recently from Canada after being arrested in another smuggling attempt.

Ireland court to hear abortion case

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — The Supreme Court will hear arguments next week in the case of a 14-year-old girl who has been forbidden to leave the country for an abortion, court officials said Friday.

The girl said she became pregnant after being raped in December by the father of a friend, after more than a year of sexual abuse by the man. She reportedly has threatened suicide rather than continue the pregnancy.

The case has not only revived the debate about abortion in predominantly Roman Catholic Ireland, it also has drawn worldwide media attention.

The Irish government is paying the legal costs for the appeal, which will be heard on Monday and Tuesday. The hearing, like a previous appearance before a High Court judge, is expected to be in private.

Prime Minister Albert Reynolds said Thursday that he hoped the issue could be resolved without a repetition of the bitter 1983 referendum that put an anti-abortion clause in Ireland's constitution.

Ireland has the most restrictive abortion law in Europe, permitting only a "morning-after" pill that terminates pregnancies in the first 72 hours.

"I have asked the attorney general's office and indeed independent outside advisers to look at various aspects of this as soon as possible to find a resolution without going to a referendum," Reynolds said in an interview with RTE television.

About 4,000 Irish women had abortions in England and Wales in 1990, according to British records.

NATO, Ex-Soviet nations agree on treaty

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Former Soviet republics joined the NATO allies on Friday in setting a July deadline for putting into effect a landmark treaty slashing tanks, artillery and other non-nuclear weapons in Europe.

Officials from 30 nations met at NATO headquarters for a second round of talks aimed at saving the Conventional Forces in Europe agreement signed in November 1990 by the Soviet Union.

Demise of the Soviet Union raised concern about whether the former Soviet republics would carry out treaty provisions.

But a statement issued by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization said the nations agreed on a "road map" for bringing the accord into force by a summit of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The gathering, tentatively set for July 9 in Helsinki, Finland, will draw together leaders of the United States, Canada and Europe.

The NATO statement said the former Soviet republics will try to decide before June how they will share the weapons cuts set out in the accord for the Soviet Union. A special meeting will then be held to formally approve the decisions. Minor treaty changes may be made to reflect those decisions.

The final step is ratification by all nations.

Bush lifts sanctions against China's transfer of high technology

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The Bush administration lifted sanctions against China's transfer of high technology Friday after accepting its promise to abide by restrictions on the sale of missiles and missile technology to the Middle East.

The decision was pushed by the White House and the State Department despite recent intelligence reports that China is continuing to sell missile technology to Syria, Iran and Pakistan and nuclear technology to Iran, according to some senior administration officials and lawmakers.

Lifting the sanctions, which prevented the sale of American satellite parts and high-speed computers to China, is important because it removes the obstacle to China's signing of the Missile Technology Control Regime, a 1987 international agreement restricting the export of missiles and missile technology.

It also reflects Bush's firm belief that the way to moderate China's behavior is through contact and trust as well as the administration's willingness to give China the benefit of the doubt that it will cancel its pending missile sales and will not ship missile components or technology that can be used to produce missiles.

When the sanctions were announced, the Commerce Department had 20 pending license applications to allow the sale to China of about $30 million worth of high-speed computers, administration officials said.

Despite the announcement, there appears to be a division within the administration amd among lawmakers about China's intentions and the wisdom of lifting the sanctions.

In explaining the reasons for lifting the sanctions, Undersecretary of State Lawrence S. Eagleburger and other administration officials argued that adherence to the missile control regime was an important gesture and could signify the first step toward achieving similar concessions in other contentious areas, such as the transfer of nuclear technology and intellectual property rights.

But these officials stopped short of stating categorically that China had ceased the sale or delivery of missile technology that would violate the missile control regime.

Instead, one official explained, they said only that the administration "has thus far not determined that the Chinese have engaged in activities that would bring about sanctions."

They also argue that there is no evidence to support the claim that China shipped technology after it made its pledge to Baker last November.

Other government analysts, on the other hand, cite intelligence reports indicating that Chinese exports continue, including, for example, the recent shipment of chemicals needed to make missiles to Syria and Iran.

Black South Africans oppose whites-only vote

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Black groups on Friday condemned President F.W. de Klerk's plan to hold a whites-only vote on ending apartheid, saying it will delay a transition to democracy.

Meanwhile, the pro-apartheid Conservative Party said the question posed to white voters must be "clear and honest" before it would agree to take part in the referendum.

"We will not be stampeded into a gimmick referendum," Conservative leader Andries Treurnicht said of the ballot, which is expected to be held next month.

De Klerk shocked the country Thursday by announcing a snap referendum on whether whites support his reforms to scrap apartheid and usher in power-sharing with the black majority. He said he would resign and hold a whites-only general election if he lost.

Government officials said the date and the exact wording of the referendum would be announced next week. De Klerk wants the vote as early as possible, and late March is considered most likely.

A government defeat could plunge the racially tense country into chaos, and imperil the progress of De Klerk's reforms. De Klerk has eliminated all major apartheid laws and his National Party government recently began negotiating a new constitution with 18 black and white groups.

White voters have been abandoning de Klerk in favor of the Conservatives, whose support has risen steadily since they won more than 30 percent of the vote in a 1989 general election for whites.

The 30 million blacks have no national voting rights.

De Klerk called the referendum after the Conservatives easily captured a special election Wednesday for a parliamentary seat held by the National Party for more than four decades.

The African National Congress, black trade unions and black civic groups all attacked de Klerk's move as giving whites a veto over the rights of all South Africans.

"We are of the firm view that this reflects the crisis of the apartheid establishment and underlines the need to move as speedily as possible to a democratic society," said ANC spokesman Saki Macozoma.

Some activists have called for protests, but the government is in firm control of the country and black groups would find it difficult to block the referendum.

The Inkatha Freedom Party, the relatively conservative Zulu movement headed by Mangosuthu Buthelezi, was the only prominent black group that did not object.

Haitian lawmakers, politicians revive meetings with Aristide

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide will have to make more concessions in weekend talks in Washington if there is to be hope of his returning to power, a supporter said Friday.

Port-au-Prince Mayor Evans Paul made the statement before he and other Haitian politicians departed for Washington, where they are to meet with Aristide at the Organization of American States headquarters.

Aristide met Friday with Rene Theodore, who has been selected in political negotiations to head a government that would eventually enable Aristide's return.

After the meeting, Aristide said in French, "I am the only one who is making concessions to put the country back on track."

The military-backed interim government, in a statement on state radio, distanced itself from the negotiations and said it would not accept any OAS peacekeeping mission. The government was installed after Aristide was ousted in a Sept. 30 military coup.

The OAS is supporting a plan under which Theodore, leader of Haiti's Communist Party, would be appointed prime minister and would work for the return of Aristide, Haiti's first freely elected president.

The OAS also supports a hemispheric trade embargo against Haiti. The legislature says the embargo must end before Theodore could be appointed prime minister, while Aristide is calling for the embargo to be tightened.

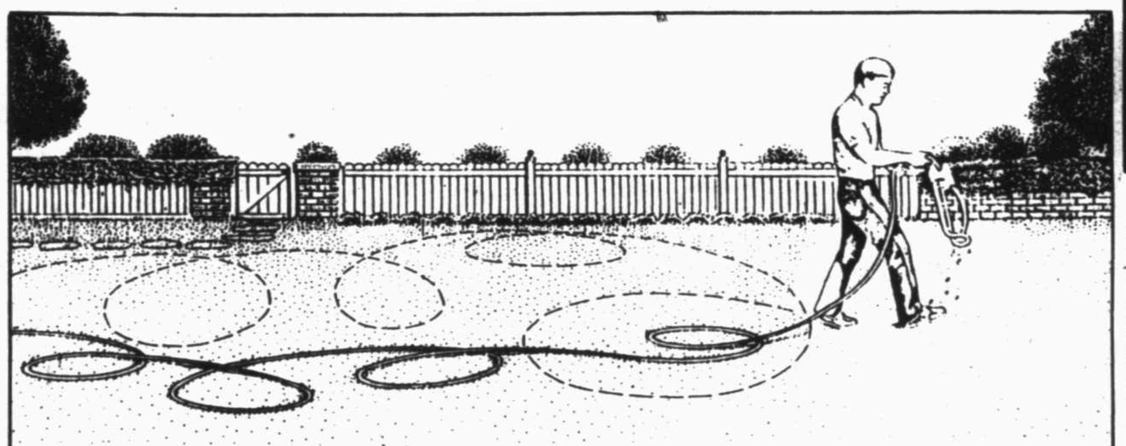

The participants in the weekend meetings include three members from each house of the legislature.

Bush and Buchanan duel for advantage in the South

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — President Bush and conservative challenger Patrick Buchanan dueled for advantage Friday in the South, with Bush winning loud cheers from a mainstream Republican gathering and Buchanan showing up "to crash the party."

Buchanan got no closer than a hotel across the street from where Bush spoke. Claiming he was frozen out of the GOP meeting by Bush's partisans, Buchanan complained, "This idea of dismissing Pat Buchanan is not legitimate."

Bush made no direct mention of Buchanan in a speech to the Southern Republican Leadership Conference but took veiled swipes at his opponent, who scored a strong second-place finish in this week's New Hampshire primary.

"The next five years of American history are just too important to entrust to the inexperienced," Bush told GOP officials and lawmakers.

In a clear reference to Buchanan's protectionist theme "America First," Bush said, "Some people wish the rest of the world would just go away. That is naive and that is defeatist."

The conference brought out the elite of Republicans in the South, with a blaring band and abundant hoopla. A number of women wore pre-printed stickers similar to name tags but saying: "Smile if you've had an affair with Bill Clinton."

Buchanan claimed he was shut out of the GOP meeting. "This is about as close as we can get," he told a news conference in a hotel across the street from where Bush was speaking.

"We decided we would just come anyway and crash the party," said Buchanan.

The conservative commentator claimed he had been frozen out of the event by South Carolina Gov. Carroll Campbell, the host and Bush's state chairman. Carroll angrily denied the charge, saying he had offered Buchanan 30 minutes on Sunday morning.

Dismissing Buchanan's guerrilla tactics, Campbell said, "What's a circus without a sideshow?" Charles Black, a senior adviser to Bush's campaign, said it appeared that Buchanan believed "terrorism is a better opportunity than a Sunday morning appearance."

Bush underlined the importance of the South to his political future.

"Four years ago the South led our party to a great victory across the entire country and this year the South will lead us to victory in November 1992," he said.

Although Bush's advisers had promised he would be more aggressive with Buchanan after New Hampshire, the president did not make a frontal attack.

Instead, the president trained most of his fire on congressional Democrats and the tax-cut plan they are fashioning as an alternative to the administration's version.

"If the Democrats send me this nonsense they're talking about now I will send it right back," Bush said to strong applause. "I will veto it the minute it hits my desk.

"I sent them a plan, a good one, and that's what they ought to work on — not some phony partisan maneuver that they know won't fly," Bush said.

At the hotel across the street, Buchanan angrily attacked Bush.

"This is about as close as we can get," he said.

"We decided we would just come anyway and crash the party," said Buchanan, who scored a strong second-place finish in this week's New Hampshire primary.

Buchanan claimed his campaign organization repeatedly attempted to get him a spot before the group after hearing last December that it was looking for speakers but kept getting a cold shoulder.

He denounced Bush at his news conference.

"This idea of dismissing Pat Buchanan is not legitimate," Buchanan said.

Buchanan, in fact, got stuck on his way into town by a traffic jam caused by Bush's motorcade. "They made us pull off to the right and there was a big open lane to our left," said Buchanan.

"We're going to surprise folks down here as we surprised people all over the world in New Hampshire," Buchanan said.

As to a last-minute offer from Campbell to allow Buchanan to address the group on Sunday, Buchanan said sarcastically: "I appreciate the time at this late date, but I'm not going to be able to make it."

"They won't let us near the place," where Bush was speaking, said Buchanan spokesman Greg Mueller.

Bush and Buchanan both began airing television ads in Georgia on Friday. Bush called on voters to "send a message" to Congress to pass his economic plan by his March 20 deadline.

Expert's breast-implant plan upsets plastic surgeons

By Felicity Barringer
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Confused and angered by an expert panel's recommendation of tight restrictions on the use of silicone-gel breast implants, plastic surgeons interviewed Friday said they would either use a different kind of implant or accept the new recommendations under which the gel implants would be treated as experimental devices.

None of the doctors interviewed said they would stop giving implants to patients who seek them, although some said they had postponed all implant operations pending a final ruling by the commissioner of food and drugs, Dr. David A. Kessler.

The panel made its recommendations after three days of hearings ordered by Kessler after a review of evidence suggested that the silicone implants might pose a health risk.

Kessler said on Thursday that he would decide within 60 days whether to adopt the panel's recommendation, which would effectively make all future silicone-gel implant patients part of a giant medical experiment, conducted with strict protocols by doctors who qualify as clinical investigators.

Full details of how these clinical trials would be organized have not been determined, FDA officials said.

The agency effectively banned the use of silicone gel implants on Jan. 6 pending the final decision.

Some of the doctors interviewed Friday said they would use saline-filled implants instead, but many experts say silicone implants feel more natural.

It is not known exactly how widespread implants are, but experts estimate that one million American women have them. Even critics agree that most are happy with them.

"I have refused to use that implant because I presumed gel would win out," said Dr. Samuel G. Rosenthal, a plastic surgeon in Jacksonville, Fla., who said he had implanted more than 2,500 gel-filled devices in more than two decades. "I've had all my patients deferred until March. Now they'll be deferred until June."

Rosenthal and other doctors added that they believed that the combined effect of lawsuits, the panel's recommendations and negative publicity about the silicone-gel implants would limit the availability of the devices or drive them off the market entirely.

It is not known exactly how widespread implants are, but experts estimate that one million American women have them. Even critics agree that most are happy with them.

The number of women who in recent years have received implants has been variously estimated at 100,000 to 150,000 a year. About 20 percent were for reconstruction after breast cancer surgery. The rest were simply to enlarge the breasts.

Under the panel's recommendations, all women seeking implants for reconstruction would be eligible to participate in the implant trials, but the others would have to apply for admission.

Dr. Paul Striker, a Manhattan physician who has never used a silicone-gel implant, nonetheless reacted with anger at the proposed restrictions.

"I think the commissioner has effectively killed the implant," he said. "The restrictions on it in terms of the experimental studies that are going to be required will force the manufacturers to bow out. I don't think it'll ever come back on the market.

"It's a shame," Striker added. "This was done without rational basis. Science was taken out of it."

Over the last decade, a series of medical papers have been published suggesting a possible link between silicone gel that has leaked from the implant and autoimmune disorders like as scleroderma and lupus. The expert panel found on Thursday that existing evidence did not conclusively establish such a link.

Doctors interviewed Friday repeatedly objected to the distinction the panel drew between women who want implants for reconstruction and those who simply want to enlarge their breasts.

"I think there's a very paternalistic attitude on the part of the panel toward women," said Dr. James H. Wells, a plastic surgeon in Long Beach, Calif. "Are we of the opinion now that women are not capable of making a decision about their own health needs?"

He added: "What about the individual that elects surgery to address self-esteem issues? Do we hold hostage a group of women who want this for cosmetic reasons?"

Carol Scheman, deputy commissioner of food and drugs for external affairs, said a plastic surgeon would have a variety of options if Kessler adopted the panel's recommendation.

CIA willing to release JFK files if given OK, Gates says

WASHINGTON (AP) — CIA Director Robert Gates promised Friday to open secret agency files on the assassination of President John F. Kennedy if Congress and the administration decide to declassify such documents.

Gates

"CIA will not be found lagging in any broader government effort to review and declassify these documents," he said, giving no indication there might be national security grounds for resisting such an effort.

Gates' comments could make it easier for Congress to respond to growing calls for the release of thousands of sealed documents relating to the 1963 assassination. Debate about the killing was stirred by last December's release of a film by director Oliver Stone contending Kennedy was the victim of a shadowy government conspiracy, primarily by the Pentagon and CIA.

Gates, in remarks prepared for delivery to the Oklahoma Press Association in Tulsa, said the CIA has been kept from any action on its own to open the Kennedy files by privacy regulations and the fact that many of the documents it holds belong to other agencies.

In tandem with other government moves toward releasing such documents, he said, all agency documents about the Kennedy assassination would be transferred to a reinvigorated review unit with a "bias toward declassification."

Rep. Louis Stokes, who was chairman of a House panel that investigated the assassination, has said he would like to see files made public, but the FBI has indicated more reluctance.

More broadly, Gates said he was trying to make the activities of the Central Intelligence Agency more public "to help people understand better what CIA does and how we do it."

There is concern within the CIA that with the demise of the Soviet Union the agency's mission and estimated $30 billion budget could be called into question.

Gates outlined a range of steps toward more openness — not just disclosure of whatever secret Kennedy documents the agency has — following recommendations by a task force he established after assuming office last November.

Besides declassifying old documents, the plan calls for giving more speeches and briefings, publishing more information about the agency's history and mission and sponsoring university seminars.

Gates said he would expand the unit responsible for reviewing historic documents, creating 15 new positions to staff it despite the personnel cuts in all intelligence agencies.

He conceded that until now the unit's work has been "quite meager," the result of rigid policies and few resources.

The unit is expected to review files in the CIA's possession and those among the 750,000 documents under seal by the House Select Committee on Assassinations until the year 2009 or in some cases 2029. The House panel concluded in 1979 that Kennedy was probably the victim of a conspiracy.

The CIA has over the years made public about 11,000 documents related to the assassination.

The historic unit will review all documents more than 30 years old, Gates said, including several events of particular interest to historians — such as the 1954 coup in Guatemala which the United States was widely believed to have sponsored, the Bay of Pigs and the 1962 Cuban missile crisis.

Likely to be of additional interest is the proposed declassification of National Intelligence Estimates about the former Soviet Union conducted 10 years ago or more. This could provide valuable insight into U.S. thinking about the Soviet military threat — in light of what has emerged about its strength since the empire crumbled last year.

But Gates also made clear the openness would be limited.

"We still must be able to keep secrets in order to do our work," he said.

Quayle pushes conservatives to back Bush

WASHINGTON (NYT) — In one of its most direct efforts to undermine Patrick J. Buchanan's insurgency, the White House on Friday dispatched Vice President Dan Quayle to warn Republican conservatives that if they work against President Bush they "risk being out of power for a generation."

Quayle argued that while the president was not "100 percent" conservative, to repudiate him would risk turning the Cabinet over to liberals and advocates of abortion. The vice president, who has long suffered ridicule, used the same weapon to paint a Republican nightmare of a "national condom-distribution campaign for grades 7 and up."

As the 1992 campaign shapes up not only as a test of Bush, but also of who will lead the conservatives in 1996, Quayle put in a pitch for himself. In a speech prepared for delivery to the Conservative Political Action Conference on Friday night, he said re-electing the president would be preparation for another conservative victory in 1996, presumably with Quayle at the head of the ticket.

The vice president, the White House's primary link to the Republican right since the dismissal of John H. Sununu as White House chief of staff in December, sought to shelter Bush with the legacy of conservatives like Ronald Reagan and Barry Goldwater.

But Quayle did not promise any changes in what conservatives believe are Bush's moderate policies, and instead offered this pragmatic appeal: Buchanan cannot win, and backing him would hurt the party.

"The only real question facing us today is whether our president will enter the general election campaign from a position of strength or from a position of weakness," Quayle said.

He added: "Anyone has the right to wage a symbolic campaign. But it would be irresponsible to endanger all that we have achieved."

The vice president did not mention Buchanan by name; the only "Pat" cited in the speech was Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo.

The speech clearly represented a move by the White House and the Bush campaign to stanch the bleeding in the Republican Party as they try to find a way to put the President back on the offensive politically.

Its tone of alarm ran counter to the official White House line that Buchanan is a minor annoyance, that Bush does not have to cater to the right to win re-election and that his candidacy was untouched by a weak showing in the New Hampshire primary.

"One of our supporters suggested to me that the New Hampshire vote might actually be a blessing in disguise," Quayle said. "And I could only think of Churchill: 'At the moment, it seems quite effectively disguised.'"

Republican conservatives said Bush needs to court conservatives, but sending Quayle to do it was not enough. "I think ultimately the argument won't carry the day," said Gary Bauer, president of the Family Research Council, an anti-abortion group.

He said, "They have it within their power to derail the Buchanan candidacy by doing a half-dozen or so conservative things. I'd make the budget director head of the campaign in American Samoa, for starters."

AP Laserphoto

Vice President Dan Quayle Friday uses both hands as he shakes outstretched hands in the crush of the crowd at Lockheed-Georgia Company in Marietta, Ga.

The budget director, Richard G. Darman, is widely disliked by conservatives for having kept a $500 increase in the income tax exemption for children off Bush's list of the seven most urgent economic measures. Bauer said that had hurt the president badly.

Quayle belittled conservatives who argue that a Democratic victory this year "would give the movement a chance to renew and revitalize itself."

Conservatives, he said, face "a choice: of continuing what we started — of building on 12 years of conservative governance — or going back to the old bickering over who is 90 percent or who is 100 percent pure."

He added: "Meanwhile, the liberals are coming together, hellbent on capturing the White House by whatever means possible. If we lose to them now we will risk being out of power for a generation."

Conoco to consolidate gulf divisions

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Conoco announced Friday it will consolidate its Gulf of Mexico oil and gas production and exploration divisions by June 1 and run the new operation out of Lafayette, La.

Officials said the company's division based in Midland would not be affected by the consolidation. Other onshore divisions are located in Anchorage, Alaska, Casper, Wyo., Corpus Christi, and Oklahoma City.

Currently, Conoco's offshore exploration and production operations in the Gulf are handled by separate divisions in Lafayette and New Orleans and a unit at Conoco's headquarters in Houston, where Friday's announcement was made.

How the consolidation would effect employment in Louisiana and Texas wasn't clear. In a news release, however, Conoco official Ted E. Davis said reduction in the workforce would be a part of the company's efforts to cut cost and run more efficiently.

Davis said the company's U.S. offshore exploration and production efforts will emphasize the Gulf of Mexico off the Louisiana coast where Conoco is already a major producer. Conoco's activities off the east, west and Alaskan coasts will be reduced significantly, the news release said.

Davis said Conoco's onshore exploration and production in the United States primarily will focus on Texas and the southern and northern Rocky Mountain area states.

"During the coming months, there will be organizational restructuring and realignment of responsibilities for assets among these divisions," Davis said in the news release.

■ Chief of National Endowment for Arts resigns

John E. Frohnmayer, the chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, submitted his resignation Friday, a casualty of the political wars. President Bush's decision to force Frohnmayer out of his job came amid reports that Patrick J. Buchanan, the president's conservative challenger, would make an issue of Bush's support of the arts endowment as he campaigned in the South.

On Thursday, Buchanan scathingly attacked Bush for having increased the government's support for the endowment, which he called "the upholstered playpen of the arts and crafts auxiliary of the Eastern liberal establishment." The same day, Frohnmayer said in a statement released Friday, he met with the White House staff and "determined that May 1, 1992 should be my departure date."

During his two-and-a-half-year tenure as chairman, Frohnmayer has been caught between two warring camps, assailed by the right for his permissiveness in endowment grants and by the left for seeming to bend to conservative inhibitions.

■ Scientists date prehistoric man to Stone Age

Carbon dating tests show that the well-preserved body of a prehistoric human hunter found in an Alpine glacier last year is 5,000 to 5,500 years old, scientists reported Friday.

The first scientifically established age for the frozen corpse is more than 1,000 years older than original estimates. It means the man lived and presumably froze to death well before the Bronze Age replaced the late Stone Age in Europe.

"Now we know he's not from the Bronze Age, but much older," said Dr. Werner Platzer, head of the anatomy department at Innsbruck University in Austria, who is directing research on the mummified corpse. "That's very important. It means, I believe, that this is the only corpse we have from the Stone Age."

The tests on bones and skin tissue were conducted by scientists at Oxford University in England and a Swiss physics institute in Zurich. The results were announced by Innsbruck University, which is keeping the body in cold storage and supervising one of the most unusual post-mortems in history.

■ Israel fails to secure U.S. help in housing

WASHINGTON — Israel failed on Friday to reach an agreement with the Bush administration for help in absorbing tens of thousands of refugees, and a key member of Congress warned that the $14 billion worldwide foreign aid bill could be sidetracked by the smoldering dispute.

"We really have reached the moment of truth," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., whose subcommittee controls spending on foreign aid. Leahy has taken the lead in Congress in trying to stop Israel from expanding the Jewish population on the West Bank and in Gaza.

"It is my judgment that if this matter does not come before my committee and get voted on in the next few days then my committee will not act on the foreign aid bill this year," Leahy told reporters after a meeting with Secretary of State James A. Baker III.

Israel is asking the administration to guarantee $10 billion in commercial bank loans over the next five years to help absorb tens of thousands of refugees from the Soviet Union and Ethiopia. Washington has linked the guarantees to cessation of Israeli settlements in the West Bank and Gaza, which the United States opposes as an obstacle to Mideast peace.

Leahy was followed into Baker's State Department office by Israeli Ambassador Zalman Shoval, who resumed negotiations they held two weeks ago.

Accuser says Tyson is sick, needs help

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The woman Mike Tyson was convicted of raping says she pursued charges against Tyson because he needs help.

In her first television interview, Desiree Washington told ABC News' "20-20" she thinks Tyson is sick and should be sentenced to prison "for as long as it takes for him to be rehabilitated." The interview was to air Friday night.

Asked what she would say if she could talk with Tyson, Miss Washington said, "I would tell him, 'You need help, you know — I didn't do this to hurt you. I didn't do this to take your career away.

"I did it because you need help, and if your so-called friends weren't big enough to tell you, at least I was,'" she said.

A jury convicted Tyson on Feb. 10 of rape and criminal deviate conduct against Miss Washington, who was a contestant in the Miss Black America pageant when she met the former heavyweight champion last July. Tyson could face up to 60 years in prison, but sentencing patterns indicate he'll likely get a dozen years or less.

He is to be sentenced March 27.

Miss Washington, 19, told "20-20" she was offered $1 million to recant her allegations against Tyson. However, she said she wasn't at liberty to say who made the offer.

"I reported it to my lawyer, who took it to a higher authority, and it's being taken care of," said Miss Washington, of Coventry, R.I.

New York Newsday, citing a source close to an FBI investigation into Miss Washington's allegation, reported Friday the offer was made by the Rev. Virgil A. Wood, pastor of Pond Street Baptist Church in Providence, R.I.

Wood denied making the offer. He said he wouldn't provide detailed comment until he watched the interview and had time to reflect on it.

"I categorically deny the Newsday story. That's as much statement as I can make this morning," Wood said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press.

Wood said he knew some members of Washington's family, including her father.

"Mr. Washington filmed my daughter's wedding about two years ago," Wood said. "I would say I've had a casual acquaintance in a pastoral context setting with Miss Washington."

Meanwhile, Rob Smith, a spokesman for the prosecutor, said Friday that attorneys were continuing to investigate reports that a juror said the verdict in Tyson's trial was fixed.

Indianapolis attorney Robert Prather told the prosecutor on Monday that he overheard a juror make the comment last Saturday at a gymnasium.

The juror's attorney, Joseph C. Lewis Jr., declined comment Friday pending an investigation into the claim.

Also Friday, an official from the Marion County auditor's office said preliminary accounting reports indicate the Tyson case will cost about $150,000.

Bills received from the agencies involved in the trial so far have totaled $118,927, said Kathleen Fluke, executive deputy auditor.

Costs include jury fees, sheriff's department overtime, travel expenses, and office fees for the auditor's, clerk's and prosecutor's offices.

Smith said the prosecutor's office was researching whether expenses could be recouped.

Shakeup strengthens Time Warner chairman's control

NEW YORK (AP) — The surprise departure of Time Warner Inc.'s second in command seems to signal that Chairman Steven J. Ross is firmly in charge of the media-entertainment giant, despite concerns about his health, analysts said.

It also dramatizes the difficulties of sharing executive power and reflects lingering clashes stemming from the 1990 merger of Time Inc. and Warner Communications Inc.

Late Thursday, Time Warner announced that N.J. Nicholas Jr. had resigned as co-chief executive and president. He was replaced by Vice Chairman Gerald M. Levin, the company's chief business strategist.

It was a bittersweet victory for Levin, who lost to Nicholas in the mid-1980s in their rivalry for the Time presidency.

Securities analysts praised the selection of Levin, saying it had become clear that the plans laid out at the time of the merger to make Nicholas sole chief executive in 1994 worried some investors.

They said Levin is seen as a better long-range planner who worked hard to establish a rapport with the company's film and music constituencies, which were added to Time's publishing and cable TV interests in the merger.

The choice also appeared to signal that the company endorsed Ross' view of that strategic direction.

Berbick guilty

MIAMI (AP) — A jury found former world heavyweight boxing champion Trevor Berbick guilty Friday of raping a woman who worked as a baby-sitter for his family.
Berbick was the world champ in 1986 when Mike Tyson knocked him out to take the crown. Tyson was convicted of rape earlier this month in Indianapolis.
Now 39, Berbick is no longer a contender.
His accuser, a 26-year-old woman who worked for 2½ weeks as a baby sitter for Berbick's family, gave 90 minutes of emotional testimony Wednesday. She said the 6-foot-3, 230-pound Berbick pulled off her clothing, hit her, held her down and forcibly had sex with her in the bedroom of her Miami apartment on Oct. 31, 1990.

Lee girls face tough bi-district challenge

■ The Lady Rebels take on Plainview as the girl's state basketball playoffs begin.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

It's been years (six) since District 4-5A has managed a bi-district basketball win against a team from powerful District 3-5A in girls basketball.

It's a jinx that Midland Lee's 14-11 Lady Rebels will have to face head-on at 8 p.m. today in Brownfield when they take on the 23-7 Plainview Lady Bulldogs at the Brownfield High School gymnasium.

Abilene High will face Amarillo High at 6 p.m. as part of the Class 5A bi-district doubleheader.

And there is no getting around the hard facts that this is a major hurdle for both 4-5A teams. After all, District 3-5A is a league where the defending state champion (Amarillo Tascosa) didn't even get out of district even though it lost only two starters off that state championship team.

"There is no question that district has the basketball background and tradition," said Lee first-year head girls coach Elise Kail. "We're just starting to work on that background now.

"We have nothing to lose, and you just hope you go up there

Kristi Yamaguchi skates to gold at the Winter Olympics.

Yamaguchi takes gold

By Barry Wilner

ALBERTVILLE, France — Forget about the triple axels and quads. Elegance and artistry still count for plenty in figure skating, and they added up to an Olympic gold medal for Kristi Yamaguchi.

Yamaguchi doesn't bother with those ultra-difficult maneuvers. She can do her share of jumps, and she completed nearly all of them Friday night, enough to win the free skate and the Olympic title — the first for an American woman since 1976.

Midori Ito of Japan moved up from fourth place to take the silver medal, and American Nancy Kerrigan got the bronze. The other American, Tonya Harding, was fourth.

All of the medal winners took spills during their routines, as did the fourth and fifth place finishers.

Yamaguchi of Fremont, Calif., skated beautifully and, despite falling on a triple loop and cutting a triple sal-

MERIBEL, France — Ray LeBlanc had the Russians exactly where everyone always expected them to be — everywhere. And even he couldn't stop them from being where they always are — the Olympic gold medal game.

The guys from the ex-Soviet Union were lurking to his left. Ready at his right. Always, always in front of him. Occasionally, even behind him, anxious to pounce in case a rebound got through.

Slap shots. Quick wristers. Deflections. Fifty-five shots in all.

"We got the same effort out of him today that we got everyday," Jim Johannson said after Friday's 5-2 semifinal loss to the Unified Team quashed the U.S. hockey team's dream of a third Olympic gold medal. "We didn't expect anything different."

Lee drops finale in OT

Wayne Wilson just misses 1,000 points for career

Staff Report

SAN ANGELO — Midland Lee closed its 1991-92 boys basketball season with an overtime loss here Friday, as San Angelo came from behind in regulation and took an 83-81 victory over Rebels.

The loss drops the Rebels into a three-way tie for third place in the District 4-5A, as Lee, Midland High and San Angelo all finished 6-6 in league play. The Rebs ended their season with an 18-15 overall record.

In other 4-5A games, Abilene Cooper laid claim to the district championship with a 97-63 throttling of Odessa Permian, and Abilene High took an 87-52 win over Odessa High into the playoffs.

For the Rebels Friday, senior post Wayne Wilson scored 26 points, leaving him four shy of 1,000 in his two-year career. David Wilson scored 20 points for Lee and Martin Lattibeaudiere added 12.

The Rebs owned a 75-69 lead with 28 seconds remaining in regulation, but the Bobcats tied the game on three-pointers by Orlando Alfaro and Greg Metz.

In overtime, David Wilson gave Lee a 79-78 lead on a basket with 1:37 to play, but San Angelo went on a 5-0 run to jump ahead to 83-79 for the victory.

Second half begins

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

The Midland Lee Rebels and the Midland High Bulldogs have traveled separate roads since meeting in the Distrct 3 soccer opener at the MHS field.

Now, with half of the league season under their respective belts, the two teams meet again, at 2 p.m. on the Lee field, with the stakes twice what they were before.

That first game, won 3-0 by Lee, marked the beginning of a 6-0 first half surge by the Rebels. Lee (9-0 overall) is all alone in first place — two games in front of San Angleo and Abilene High.

The Bulldogs (5-5 for the season) wrapped up the first half with a 2-1 loss to Abilene Cooper and sit at 3-3 in the loop. The 'Dogs must have wins if they intend to catch either of the two second place clubs and reach the playoffs.

"This is a very important game for us," MHS coach Tom Esikhati said. "The momentum was building for us, but it went down when we started taking it easy against Cooper.

"Now the game with Lee is going to decide whether we're going to stay among the frontrunners or go downhill."

And it will decide whether or not the Rebels can continue down an undefeated path to the playoffs.

"Right now the kids are a little leg weary, and I don't anticipate having the same kind of control (over MHS) that we had last time," Lee coach Eddie Bull said. "But the kids are ready to get out and start the second half.

"They know they still have a mountain to climb if they're going to wind up where they want to be."

AHS meets Cooper and Odessa Permian and Odessa High collide in today's other second-half openers. San Angelo is idle.

Watson retains share of Buick Invitational lead

SAN DIEGO — Tom Watson retained a share of the lead Friday, despite what he called "a below-average round" in the Buick Invitational of California.

The 5-time British Open champion compiled a bogey-free, 4-under-par 68 in the second round, but said the score was a bit deceptive.

"It was a lot more of a struggle than yesterday, and was peppered with five or six pretty bad shots," he said.

"I guess it kind of averaged out — a terrific round yesterday and a below-average round today.

"Average those two together and I'm still tied for the lead."

And Watson, 41, attempting to break a five-year victory drought, was delighted with the position.

"I'm very satisfied," he said, obviously relieved after a birdie-birdie finish enabled him to share the 36-hole lead with Brad Faxon and Mike Springer at 131, 13 under par.

Springer, who missed the cut in his last four starts, moved up with a 65 in cool, damp weather, and Faxon had a 68

PLAYOFFS: Lee underdog against 23-7 Lady Bulldogs

(From 1B)

and play your best. We're enjoying the success of the moment.

"It's going to be tough. I know Coach (Sam) Nichols of Abilene High is playing their number two team, and he's scared to death. Plainview is fast, very quick and very talented. The only good thing is their tallest player is 5-9, so we are equal with them size-wise. I know one thing. We aren't favored to win."

Plainview coach Danny Wren is also aware of the history between the two leagues.

"The way we have dominated the past few years is much like 4-5A dominates us in the football playoffs," Wren says. "I know it's a plus for us because it can be a mental thing. Every team in this district feels it can go to Austin if they can just get into the playoffs. We won the district championship last year and Tascosa, our second place team, won the state championship."

"This district was a war this year. We lost to defending state champion Tascosa twice, but Amarillo High beat them like four times. We play Lubbock Monterey on the last night of the season, and if we lose, we have a four-way tie for first place. This kind of race prepares you for the playoffs."

Look at Plainview's seven losses? Levelland twice, Lamesa, Canyon Randall, Abernathy and Tascosa twice. All were state-ranked in one class or another during the season. Lamesa fell Tuesday to Canyon Randall by 10 points in a 4A bi-district game.

And Plainview is on a history making express. This is the first time in school history that the Lady Bulldogs have won back-to-back district titles and the first time to be in the playoffs in two consecutive years.

This is also the Class 5A playoff finale for Plainview since the school drops to Class 4A next year.

"I can't say that dropping in classification is going to make much difference," Wren said. "Up here, we fall to Class 4A and into Levelland's district. Levelland is always one of the best teams in the state, regardless of classification. Lamesa is also in that district. Even if you fall further, you have Tulia, Nazareth and teams like that. The Panhandle won all five state championships last year. Only in girls basketball can you say that there isn't really a drop-off from one class to the next."

But if you have the impression that Wren isn't concerned about Lee, forget it.

"We had an open date during the season and I drove down to watch Lee and Permian play. It turned out to be a good thing because it let me see Lee play," Wren said. "I think they are an extremely aggressive team and rebound really well. (Debbie) Kuntz is a good shooter and (Tekeira) Strambler is a good looking athlete. She can really hurt you."

Kail is impressed with the quickness of Plainview.

"They run a 2-3 zone and they can trap out of the zone along the baseline and at the top, but they can also get back and cover the pass," Kail said.

Plainview has three starters back from the team that lost in the Region I semifinals to Lewisville by one point in overtime at Chaparral Center last year.

Guard/forward Cindy Chapman, the tallest player at 5-9, is averaging 15 points per game. Forward Jennifer Jeffress, at 5-7, averages 13 points per game while 5-8 forward/post Jennifer Roberson averages seven points a game. Senior 5-8 post Amy Lane is scoring at a 10-point per game clip. The other starter is sophomore guard Rosalyn Dunn, hitting at six points per game.

Lee can't get into a scoring duel with the Bulldogs. Lee is averaging 49.5 points per game while Plainview is averaging over 60 points per outing.

Lee also has only one player scoring in double figures with Strambler at 10.4 per contest. Guard Lachette Crisp is averaging 8.6, forward Tiffany Grafa, 6.6; guard Kuntz, 6.5; and forward Monica Myers, 4.1.

However, Kuntz, Crisp, Strambler and Grafa all have had games of 18 points or better as has Ranee Franklin (5.8 overall) off the bench.

Myers, a transfer from Greenwood this year, is the only Lady Rebel to have playoff experience. Plainview has six players with playoff identity.

Von Erich family member charged

RICHARDSON (AP) — Police have filed charges of passing forged prescriptions against Kerry Adkisson, a member of the beleaguered Von Erich professional wrestling family, officials said.

Police Sgt. Ray Pennington said the two charges were filed Thursday and carry penalties of up to 10 years in prison and a $5,000 in fines.

Richardson police arrested Adkisson, 30, who wrestled under the name Kerry Von Erich, Feb. 10 at an Eckerd Drug store in the Dallas suburb. He was released several hours later on bond.

Adkisson is accused of fraudulently obtaining the pain-killer Vicodin and the tranquilizer Valium, Pennington said.

Adkisson — one of six sons of wrestler Fritz Von Erich — has missed scheduled appearances in several cities the past two weeks, according to Dallas television station KDFW. Four of the six Von Erich sons have died.

The incident is the latest in a series of disturbing and often tragic events that have plagued the Von Erich family.

In June 1986, Adkisson smashed his right foot in a motorcycle accident. The injury required doctors to insert pins into bone in his foot.

Smart hitters rare, Williams says

By Bert Rosenthal
AP Track Writer

NEW YORK — Ted Williams was recalling when Joe Cronin, his former teammate and manager on the Boston Red Sox, said he would regret not being a fast runner.

Dick Allen, sitting a few feet from Williams, whispered to Rollie Fingers, a new member of Baseball's Hall of Fame: "If he could have run, he would have hit .600."

As it was, Williams was one of the most remarkable hitters in baseball history, finishing his brilliant 19-year career with the Red Sox with a .344 batting average, including .406 in 1941 — the last major leaguer to hit .400.

Now, there are few, if any, major leaguers who hit .344 in one season, no less for a career average.

Williams doesn't think today's hitters will hit that high often, because they are not as intelligent as the hitters of his era, from the late 1930s to 1960 (he missed three seasons when he served in the military).

"The average hitter of today doesn't know the little game between the pitcher and the hitter," Williams said Thursday at a news conference announcing the 1992 Upper Deck Heroes of Baseball schedule.

The once-irascible and feisty but now amiable Williams, 73, said the hitters don't study such factors as what they did the last time against a pitcher, the tendencies of a pitcher, the weather, the ballpark and opposing defenses.

"There are not as many smart hitters now," he said. "I don't see any hitter who can hit .340 or .350 and hit 40 home runs. A guy hits 35 or 40 home runs, he hits .238.

"I always thought someone could hit .400, but I don't think so now."

Williams, known for having one of the sharpest pair of batting eyes in the game, said today's hitters also are hindered because of the lack of proper instruction.

"You've got guys in baseball trying to teach batters to hit who have never hit," Williams said. "They (batting instructors) have set back hitters 20 years."

That, in spite, of today's players being "stronger, bigger and faster" than they were in the past. "Their bodies are better than ours were 30, 40 and 50 years ago," Williams said.

Williams and Carl Yastrzemski, another Red Sox great, are listed as instructors for the team, but Williams said he wasn't planning to be at spring training with Boston "because I haven't been invited."

Williams still is recuperating from neck surgery a month ago and a stroke. He underwent the operation at Shands Hospital in Gainesville, Fla., after doctors found an artery in his neck "was clogged about 95 percent." The mild stroke, sustained in November, left no permanent damage, but he said his peripheral vision was affected.

"I'm feeling pretty good," he said in his first public appearance since the surgery. "I wish I could say I was feeling better. I'm getting better all the time, but I had a serious operation."

Williams, an 18-time All-Star, six-time American League batting champion and two-time Triple Crown champion, doesn't begrudge today's players the enormous salaries they are getting.

"Maybe I was unlucky not being able to play today when guys are making four-and-a-half or five million dollars," said Williams, whose biggest annual salary was about $130,000.

"As for today's players, it's not their fault that they're in this circumstance. They should be grateful. It would be easy to criticize them, but if the market will bear it ... it's great for them if ownership's got the dough. I'm for the players ... even if you could say I am envious of them and the prices they are commanding and getting."

But the old Williams re-emerged for a moment and he quickly criticized the players — not for accepting the money.

"I don't see how they could be out there with all those fans and not bear down hard," he said.

Williams never lacked enthusiasm.

"I was always enthusiastic," he said. "I always wanted to play."

Montana mends

STOCKTON, Calif. (AP) — Joe Montana says his injured elbow is doing "real well" and he's been throwing passes every day in recent weeks.

The San Francisco quarterback said Thursday that he began throwing 2½ weeks ago. He said he's throwing 15 to 25 passes every morning.

Rangers release Sierra contract offer

ARLINGTON (AP) — The Texas Rangers on Friday released their contract proposal to Ruben Sierra, a guaranteed three-year deal worth between $14.5 million and $15.5 million in current dollars.

The Rangers evaluated the deal at between $29,607,059 and $34,129,794 over five years. But the proposal was guaranteed for just three years, it contained deferred money at below-market rates and the Rangers proposed keeping part of the interest on the deferred money.

Rangers president Tom Schieffer said in a letter to Sierra that the offer was "as generous as we can afford."

"We want you in Arlington," Schieffer wrote. "You have said you want to be in Arlington. We ask that you sign this contract so we can all concentrate on winning the American League pennant."

Sierra, who is eligible for free agency following this season, won a record $5 million this week in arbitration after Texas rejected his $27.5 million, five-year proposal.

"This kind of grandstanding won't get anything, especially the spectacular skills of Ruben Sierra," said Tom Reich, who represents the outfielder jointly with Chuck Berry. "Their proposal isn't close and the situation appears to be dead in spite of the fact that all of us — Berry, Reich and Sierra — were inclined to stay in Texas."

The offer called for a $1.5 million signing bonus, $4 million in each of the 1992 and 1993 seasons and $4.5 million in 1994. The Rangers would have an option for 1995 at $5 million with a $2 million buyout and an option for 1996 at $6 million with a $1 million buyout.

However, $1 million of the signing bonus would be deferred without interest until 1994 and $1 million of each year's salary would be deferred at an interest rate of between 3 percent and 5 percent. That devalues the proposal considerably.

NBA

DALLAS — Derek Harper keyed a decisive third-quarter run with eight of his 18 points Friday night, and the Dallas Mavericks went on to a 109-94 victory over the Minnesota Timberwolves.

In the meeting between the teams with the worst records in the Western Conference, the Mavericks held a 53-52 lead before Harper's two baskets and four free throws fueled a 27-14 spurt in the final 7½ minutes of the period, expanding the margin to 80-66.

Rookie Donald Hodge and Rolando Blackman scored six points each during the quarter as Dallas outscored Minnesota 36-27.

Tracy Moore scored a career-high 19 points and Hodge also established a career best with 15 points for Dallas, now 16-37 for the season.

Pooh Richardson had 17 points for the Timberwolves, 10-42.

Dallas opened the 27-14 run with a pair of free throws from Harper and consecutive baskets from Randy White and Blackman for a 59-52 lead.

Spurs 100, 76ers 90

SAN ANTONIO — David Robinson scored 33 points and the San Antonio Spurs limited Philadelphia to 32 second-half points.

Hersey Hawkins scored 28 points, but just seven in the second half for the 76ers, who have lost six consecutive games in San Antonio. Charles Shackleford had a season-high 17 points for Philadelphia, but Charles Barkley was held eight points under his average with 15, only three after halftime.

Jazz 124, Rockets 97

SALT LAKE CITY — Jeff Malone scored 28 points on 12-for-16 shooting and Karl Malone had 22 points as the Utah Jazz won their ninth consecutive home game.

Jeff Malone hit eight of 11 shots in the first half as the Jazz turned a 37-24 lead at the end of the first quarter into a 62-43 halftime advantage. Utah shot 63 percent from the field in the first half and 57 percent for the game.

The Rockets shot just 37 percent in the first half and 40 percent for the game in losing for the first time in two games under interim coach Rudy Tomjanovich.

Nets 105, Pacers 101

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Drazen Petrovic scored 19 points, including a tiebreaking 18-footer with 30.6 seconds remaining Friday night, helping the New Jersey Nets to a 105-101 victory over Indiana.

The Nets, who won for the ninth time in 10 home games, led 95-78 with 8:25 remaining after consecutrive three-point plays by Chris Dudley and Terry Mills.

But the Pacers, who had won four straight, came to life with a 23-6 spurt in the next 7:43, tying the score 101-101.

Cavaliers 119, Kings 102

RICHFIELD, Ohio — Brad Daugherty had 30 points and 15 rebounds in less than three quarters as Cleveland routed Sacramento.

Daugherty, matched against smaller or less experienced players all night, scored 13 points in the first quarter when Cleveland took a 37-14 lead that included a 25-4 run at the start of the game. Daugherty went 6-for-6 from the floor during the period and 13-for-14 in the game, and whenever the Kings collapsed their defense on him, he passed to Mark Price for easy jumpers.

Nuggets 106, Bullets 99

LANDOVER, Md. — Dikembe Mutombo marked his return to the Capital Centre with 17 points, 11 rebounds and four blocks as the Denver Nuggets snapped a seven-game road losing streak.

Mutombo, Denver's top draft pick out of Georgetown, had 10 points in the fourth quarter as the Nuggets fought back from an eight-point deficit to win their first road game since Jan. 16. Denver is 4-21 on the road this season.

Reggie Williams, also a Georgetown graduate, led the Nuggets with 20 points and Mark Macon had 18.

Bulls 103, Hawks 88

ATLANTA — Michael Jordan had 33 points, 10 rebounds and a season-high 14 assists in leading Chicago over Atlanta.

Chris Mullin, the Warriors' leading scorer, was scratched prior to the game because of back spasms. But they had six players score in double figures, including Sarunas Marciulionis with 21 points and Billy Owens and Victor Alexander with 16 each.

Sampras advances indoors

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Second-seeded Pete Sampras, trying for his second U.S. Indoor Tennis championship in three years, beat Aaron Krickstein in a third-set tiebreaker Friday night to advance to the semifinals.

Sampras beat Krickstein 3-6, 7-6 (7-5), 7-6 (9-7), and meets sixth-seeded Brad Gilbert in a Saturday afternoon semifinal.

Sampras won the event in 1990 and eight months later captured the U.S. Open championship. Last year, Sampras lost in a five-set final to Ivan Lendl.

Gilbert, a top 20 player in six of the last seven years, defeated Paul Haarkuis of The Netherlands 6-3, 3-6, 6-1, and Francisco Clavet of Spain rallied for a 2-6, 7-5, 6-3 victory over Jim Grabb on Friday.

The 11th-seeded Clavet, 23, a five-year tour pro who has won once, meets the winner of the late Friday night quarterfinal match between Amos Mansdorf of Israel and Jeff Tarango.

The 10-seeded Krickstein won the first set of the 2-hour, 37-minute match when he broke Sampras in the eighth game for a 5-3 lead with a whistling return of service down the line. He then served a love game to end the set.

In the second set, the two held service to 6-6 and Sampras after falling behind 4-1 and 5-2 in the tie-breaker won the last five points, closing out the set with an ace.

Krickstein, 24, built a 5-2 lead in the third set, but Sampras won four straight games and had four match points in the sixth before Krickstein rallied for a tie-breaker.

Sampras went ahead 4-2 in the tie-breaker only to have Krickstein tie at 5-5. They traded points to 7-7, when Sampras won the final two points, the last with his 20th ace of the match. The final point came when Krickstein hit a backhand low volley into the net.

Gilbert took the first set from the 14th-seeded Haarhuis with a service break in the eighth game. He then held service and won the set point on a hard backhand volley that Haarhuis couldn't reach.

Haarhuis came back in the second set, breaking Gilbert in a 4-1 game. He held service to even the match.

In the final set, each broke service in the first two games . Gilbert held in the third game and broke Haarhuis with a volley shot in the fourth. He broke again to make it 5-1, and closed out the match with a service ace.

Gilbert, who threw his racquet and railed at the umpire, said the arguments motivated him.

"Even though I was questioning the calls I was able to concentrate on the next point, more so than I would have 10 years ago," he said.

Clavet, the 11th-seed, defeated unseeded Grabb of Arizona 2-6, 7-5, 6-3, in the 2-hour, 15-minute match.

Grabb took only 30 minutes to win the first set.

McGann ties for Hawaiian top spot

LPGA

Associated Press

HONOLULU — Michelle McGann doesn't have to go far to get advice from her father when she's playing on the LPGA Tour. She just looks over her shoulder.

Bucky McGann has been his daughter's caddy most of the time since she joined the tour in 1988. Dad helped his daughter Friday, as she shot a 5-under 67 to tie with Missie Berteotti for the lead after two rounds of the Hawaiian Ladies Open.

Berteotti also shot 67, while first round co-leader Kris Tschetter and Nancy Scranton were two strokes back. Kristi Albers and Brandi Burton were three back.

Defending champ Patty Sheehan shot even-par 72 and was at 144.

Nancy Ramsbottom hit a hole-in-one with a 5-iron on the par-3, 144-yard No. 8, and barely made the cut at 4-over 148.

McGann made five birdies without a bogey to move to 6-under 138 in the 54-hole event.

"I was feeling pretty comfortable. My dad kept me pretty relaxed," McGann said. "He knows my game, he's real positive and keeps me going."

Berteotti started the day at 1-under after making a double bogey on her final hole of the first round. She played bogey-free Friday to tie early leader McGann.

"I made some sloppy shots the last two days, but I've played a lot of tournaments where I've shot high scores and played great, so I'll take it," Berteotti said.

Starting on the back nine, McGann made par on the first three holes before hitting a sand wedge to five feet of the pin, then sinking the putt for birdie.

She followed with a birdie on the par-5 14th after chipping to two feet of the cup, then went 4-under on No. 15 with a 15-foot birdie. She made a 12-footer for birdie on No. 17 to make the turn at 5-under.

On the par-5 first hole she chipped from a sand bunker to four inches of the cup, then made birdie.

She stayed at 6-under the rest of the round, making a nice save for par on the par-4 No. 6.

She hit her drive left off the fairway behind four palm trees. Her second shot was slowed by the palm leaves and landed in a bunker about 35 yards short of the pin.

Both Springer and Faxon played the longer, more difficult South course at Torrey Pines while Watson was unable to capitalize on his round at the easier, 6,592-yard North course.

Robert Wrenn, one of three tied for the first-round lead, had a 69 at the South and was tied at 132 with rookie Chris Tucker.

Tucker, who made 13 tries at the PGA Tour Qualifying School before gaining his playing rights late last year, scored two eagles in a round of 68, also at the South.

Steve Pate, a former winner of this event, and Australian Steve Elkington followed at 133. Pate had a 69 on the South course and Elkington shot 67 on the North.

John Huston, who had a 68 on the South, was next at 134, 10 under par at the tournament halfway point.

Rice stomps Horned Frogs, 14-9

SWC Baseball

Associated Press

FORT WORTH — Donald Allen was 3-for-4 and scored four runs Friday as Rice trounced Texas Christian 14-9 in the Southwest Conference.

Allen singled in both the first and sixth innings, doubled in the ninth, walked once and laid down a sacrifice bunt.

The Horned Frogs (6-5, 2-2) took a 3-1 lead in the third inning as Mike Macko sacrificed home a run with the bases loaded and Rick Hinojosa singled home two more.

The Owls (8-4, 4-3) then collected four runs in the fourth, followed by three runs each in the sixth, eighth and ninth innings.

TCU's Scott Malone doubled in the seventh to extend his hitting streak to 11 games extending back into last season.

Darrell Richardson (3-1) took the victory, while Tim Grieve (0-1) was the loser.

Texas Tech 3, Baylor 1

WACO — Mark Brandenburg held Baylor to seven hits as Texas Tech beat the Bears.

Brandenburg (4-1), allowed no walks and struck out nine.

The Bears jumped up 1-0 on Sean Severide's RBI double following Brian Black's triple in the second.

Kent Blasingame tied the score in the third with an RBI single and George Kilford put the Red Raiders (6-8, 2-5 in the SWC) ahead in the seventh.

Brian Carpenter (2-1) took the loss for Baylor (7-4, 2-2). He allowed eight hits and two walks in nine innings while striking out six.

Two of Tech's runs off Carpenter were unearned as Baylor rightfielder Jack Stubbs made a critical error in Tech's two-run seventh.

No. 5 Texas 11, No. 13 Arizona State 10 (14 innings)

AUSTIN — Brent Smith balked in Tim Harkrider with the winning run in the bottom of the 14th inning, giving Texas a victory over Arizona State.

With the score tied 10, Clay King opened the 14th with a single before Harkrider was intentionally walked and Chris Abbe was hit by a pitch.

After pinch hitter Stephen Larkin grounded into a fielder's choice that caught King at the plate, Smith balked in Harkrider with Robert DeLeon up.

HOCKEY: U.S. vs. Czechoslovakia in battle for bronze medal Saturday

(From 1B)

LeBlanc didn't disappoint. Almost 51 minutes into the game, the career minor-league goalie who bottles soft drinks in the off-season kept Soviet shooters ice cold. It was still a 2-2 game.

But in the end, the best goalie in the Games simply couldn't beat the best team in the Olympics all by himself.

The Unified Team (6-1) advanced to Sunday's gold-medal game against Canada (6-1), which defeated Czechoslovakia 4-2 in Friday's other semifinal. The United States (5-1-1), which had been the last undefeated team in the Olympics, meets Czechoslovakia (5-2) in Saturday night's bronze-medal game.

"I did all right," LeBlanc said. "I did my best and I gave an honest effort and that is all I can ask."

Except, perhaps, for a little help from his friends.

"I liked the way the United States goalie performed in this game," Unified Team assistant coach Igor Dmitriev said. "But the outcome of the game is based on a whole team, not just the goalie."

Several American players cried foul, saying Swedish referee Sven Erik Sold got back at them for tying Sweden in an intense, bloody game last Monday.

The Unified Team spent 6 minutes, 52 seconds on the power play in the third period. It would have spent more but scored early on two power plays, including Andrei Khomoutov's go-ahead goal with 9:05 to play.

"The Swedes bad-mouthed us the whole tournament and then we get a Swedish referee," U.S. captain Clark Donatelli said. "It's an absolute shame when an official can determine the whole third period. Hey, the Swedes got the best of us this time. Their team couldn't beat us, but their referee did. It's just a shame that the game had to end like that."

Coach Dave Peterson didn't immediately criticize the penalty calls that killed the Americans' chances but said, "I'm not sure it was coincidental that we wound up with a Swedish referee."

Actually, the whole game looked like one big Unified Team power play.

"This is the best team that we played yet, and we didn't have the puck that much," U.S. forward C.J. Young said. "They're devastating."

Added Peterson: "We played with a lot of emotion and when you do that, you get some penalties. I think we lost to a very good team ... a team today that was better than we were."

It seemed like old times for the team without a country and without a name.

But these were the Russians, the ones who won seven Olympic gold medals in their nine tries and, yes, the ones who were stunned by the Miracle on Ice Americans in 1980.

Except — dare one say? — this team might be even better. A blend of old and young, tradition and youthful enthusiasm.

"The Soviet team that performed in 1980 had more experience and more well-known players. They overestimated their abilities," Dmitriev said. "In this team, we have quite a lot of young players who lack experience. That is why they were a little frightened to play against the United States team and that's why they were well-prepared."

The Unified Team is 59-6-2 in Olympic play and has never failed to win a medal. Either it or the United States has won every gold since 1956. The Soviets have won six of the last seven Olympic meetings between the teams and seven of nine overall.

"They've got a hockey factory there," Young said.

And not even LeBlanc could shut the factory down.

Fittingly, Khomoutov's winning goal came after LeBlanc had stopped not one, but two excellent shots.

Yuri Khmylev and Evgeni Davydov added goals in the last 6 minutes, officially ending the U.S. dream of a third gold medal in hockey.

Khmylev's goal, with 5:52 to go, came on a brilliant exhibition of passing: Khomoutov to Viacheslav Bykov to Khmylev alone to the left of the net for an easy put-in. All three passes came within a few feet of LeBlanc.

Surrounded.

"They were on top of us a lot," Johannson said.

Meanwhile, Unified Team goalie Mikhail Shtalnekov was the lonliest man on the ice. Eighteen shots, mostly from long range. He could hardly be faulted for the two goals he allowed: Sean Hill's pass that banked off Bykov's skate; Keith Tkachuk's controversial goal off a scramble in front.

"I don't think we expected ourselves to get that few offensive chances. They took us out of our game," Young said. "In other games, Ray's really stood on his head and we've been able to carry through and get some big goals. But it just seemed tonight ... we didn't get many offensive chances."

Bykov and Alexei Kovalev had the Unified Team's other goals.

GOLD: Yamaguchi wins despite fall

(From 1B)

chow to a double, she clearly deserved the gold. Her footwork, spins, arm movements and presence were more artistic and expressive than anybody else.

"I still can't believe what's happening to me," Yamaguchi said. "After I fell on the loop, I decided to play it safe on the next jump and go for it in the end. I was just happy to go out there and do a good performance."

The American skater said she was surprised to go home with the gold: "I really didn't expect to be in this position. We'll see (about the future)."

She also revealed that part of the inspiration for her winning performance came from a meeting with Dorothy Hamill before she stepped on the Albertville ice. Yomaguchi was the first American to win the women's figure skating gold since Hamill in 1976.

"She's one of the reasons I'm in the sport right now. And it was just a thrill to meet with her," said Yamaguchi. "She wanted to wish me all the best. She reminded me how hard I worked to get here and ... told me just to go out and have fun."

Ito fell on a triple axel early in her program. She hit one 3:12 into the routine, however. But she also was hurt by doing only a double lutz-triple toe loop to open the free skate, worth two-thirds of the total score.

Needing to beat Yamaguchi by two places in the free skate, Ito couldn't even beat her by one. Ito got first-place marks from the Japanese and Czechoslovakian judges, but Yamaguchi got the rest, with eight 5.9s for artistry. Only the Japanese judge gave her a 5.8.

Harding also fell on her triple axel, the fourth straight time she has failed to complete it. And France's Surya Bonaly, who was third after the original program, just missed a quadruple toe loop, then bombed to wind up sixth in the free skate and fifth overall.

The 20-year-old Yamaguchi led off the final group. To "Malaguena," Yamaguchi started well, easily hitting her triple lutz-triple toe combination. Her spins were also precise and she moved gracefully to the music.

But she fell on a triple loop and cut a triple salchow — a move she often struggles with — to a double.

With Yamaguchi watching, Kerrigan came on the ice and missed several elements. She cut a triple toe loop-triple toe loop to a triple-single and also did a single lutz when she planned a triple. When Kerrigan fell on a triple toe loop, her gold chances were gone.

But the problems of Bonaly and Laetitia Hubert of France, plus Kerrigan's second place in the original program, were enough to ensure bronze.

Yamaguchi skated out to receive her medal from IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch to dozens of waving American flags. She and Ito shook hands as the Japanese woman got her silver medal.

Lu Chen of China soared all the way to sixth with a fifth-place showing in the free skate.

Fans line up for Cub tickets

CHICAGO (AP) — One would never know by the long ticket-window lines at Wrigley Field that the Chicago Cubs finished 20 games out of first place last season and haven't won a World Series since 1908.

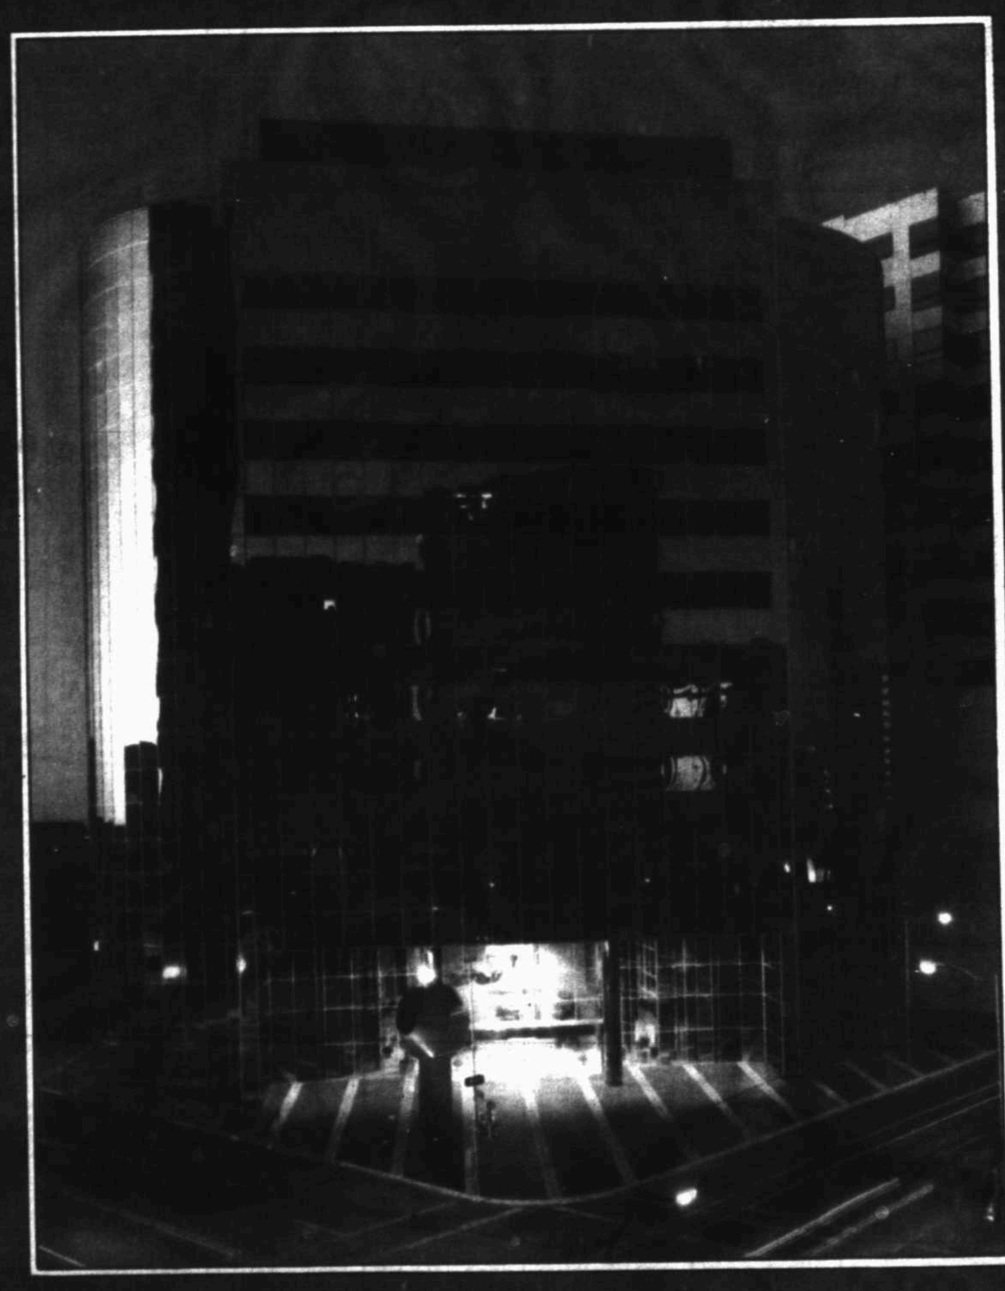

An estimated 800 fans had queued up Friday when individual game tickets for the 1992 home season — a limit of 80 to each customer — went on sale at 10 a.m.

Some people had been in line for days, braving freezing temperatures and rain.

Texas asks federal judge panel in Washington to OK Senate map

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawyers for the state of Texas Friday asked a three-judge federal panel to approve a state Senate redistricting plan that has not found favor with the Justice Department.

The Washington judges' panel and the Justice Department are the only entities that can approve redistricting maps for states, including Texas, that require preclearance under the federal Voting Rights Act for protection of minority rights.

The Justice Department last November approved an earlier incarnation of the state Senate plan — which is identical to the map passed last month by the Legislature. But Justice officials later changed course and threw their support behind a rival state Senate map drawn by a three-judge federal panel in Austin.

The Texas Attorney General's Office is fighting the court-ordered plan on several fronts, claiming that map was tainted by partisan politics and discriminates against minorities.

From the judges' line of questioning Friday, it appeared they may be reluctant to grant Texas' request and issue a ruling that could place them on a "collision course" with the U.S. Supreme Court.

Attorney General Dan Morales has a motion pending before the Supreme Court to vacate the court-ordered plan and remove one of the Austin judges from the case.

"It's like a race to the courthouse," said federal appellate judge Patricia Wald.

Ms. Wald, who sits on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, questioned the necessity of pre-clearance by the panel.

"It would definitely be useful and it could be critical," replied Assistant Attorney General Renea Hicks.

The state is asking the Washington judges to do one of two things — either pre-clear the state-approved plan or force the Justice Department to rule on that same plan, which was presented to them Jan. 9.

The Justice Department has until March 9 — the day before the Texas primaries — to rule on the plan, and has rebuffed requests by state officials for a rapid ruling.

Justice attorney Steven Rosenbaum argued against action by the Washington panel.

"We don't think it makes sense for this court to jump into the frenzy and decide an issue the state is already asking the Supreme Court to decide," he said.

U.S. District Judge Stanley Sporkin seemed to agree, questioning whether the panel shouldn't let the case "play out" at the Supreme Court.

"There's nothing we can do to accelerate ... that train that's on that track going to the Supreme Court," he said.

Hicks noted that the court-ordered plan is only an interim measure, and at some point a permanent plan will require preclearance.

Sporkin also questioned whether the Washington judges should intervene in a case being considered by their Austin counterparts.

"This is surreal that here you have two federal courts dealing with the same problem," he said.

"This is not some magistrate's court down there. I don't want to impugn magistrates, but this is a real court."

In addition to the legal filings in the nation's capital, Texas has challenges pending in the Texas Supreme Court and Austin federal court.

Women drop from political spotlight

HOUSTON (AP) — Just months ago, Houston drew national attention for its preponderance of women at the top.

Now, with the defeat of former Mayor Kathy Whitmire, the ouster of Police Chief Elizabeth Watson and other changes, it looks like the boys are back in town.

"There's an absolute loss to the city in not having as many women in these jobs as before," said Stephen Klineberg, a Rice University sociologist. "But the absence of women in these positions doesn't indicate that Houston is a Neanderthal, sexist city."

He said the door to women has been opened, and likely will stay that way.

"Ground has been broken. And these women have left a legacy of leadership style that men are equally capable of using and exerting," Klineberg said.

Mrs. Whitmire, the city's first female mayor, was turned out of the office she had held for a decade when she lost a three-way race in November. Bob Lanier, a millionaire developer, later beat state Rep. Sylvester Turner in the runoff. Mrs. Whitmire now works as a professor at Rice and as a political analyst.

Mrs. Watson, who became the first female to lead a police department in a major American city in February 1990, was ousted from that job Monday. Lanier, who has been in office about six weeks, nominated Assistant U.S. Attorney Sam Nuchia as her successor.

"There's no question we made history in Houston at that point in time," Mrs. Watson said. "We had a lot of enthusiasm and energy at that time. Things have changed and there's a different kind of energy that we hope is as positive as what preceded it."

Lanier said Thursday that he will recommend the department's command staff be enlarged to 12 to include an assistant police chief post for Mrs. Watson. But that decision would have to come from Nuchia.

In other changes:

■ Joan Raymond, superintendent of the Houston Independent School District, was asked to resigned last June when she got caught in a political crossfire with board members. She is now an interim superintendent in River Forest, Ill., and is a finalist for a similar post in San Francisco. She was succeeded by former Miami school superintendent Frank Petruzielo.

■ Eileen Crowley, who once headed the Chamber of Commerce division of the Greater Houston Partnership, resigned in December. The partnership has yet to name a successor.

Suspense builds in Texas, Michigan over GM announcement

By Mede Nix
N.Y. Times News Service

ARLINGTON — Bob Barbour is so tired of waiting for news of the fate of the Arlington General Motors plant that he almost doesn't care about the outcome.

"I would just love to hear something, bad or good," said Barbour, of Springtown, a second-generation GM worker. "Rumors are a dime a dozen, but I've been here 14 years, so I really don't rely on rumors."

Workers at the plant Friday were hopeful that the wait may soon be over. News could come as early as Monday, when GM is expected to release its 1991 earnings.

The anxiety over the 3,756 jobs at Texas' only auto assembly plant has been constant since Dec. 18, when GM announced, as part of its cost-cutting measures, that it will consolidate operations at Arlington and its Willow Run plant near Ypsilanti, Mich. — meaning that one plant or the other will close.

"It gets to be that everybody knows where you work, and when you come in, they ask you what you know," said Joe Schmalz, another 14-year plant veteran. "It's about the only thing we talk about at break, and sometimes I'm cranky at home. It's wearing thin. It's getting to where it doesn't matter if they close it. You just want to know."

Schmalz and other workers said the assembly lines have been humming not only with the production of cars, but also with the sound of rumors.

"Rumors are running rampant, but I think everybody knows you can only do so much. After a while it's hard to be optimistic," he said. "But our quality during this time has just been unreal. We always did produce a good car, but I've never seen the quality so high."

Bill Glover, a 16-year plant veteran, said he remains optimistic.

"We keep getting rumors, and they're getting better all the time," Glover said. "The only thing is that everybody is really closemouthed. I've never seen a secret so well-kept."

Arlington Mayor Richard Greene said he also hears rumors.

"You hear something all the time, but these rumors are being spawned when GM calls down here to ask questions about our proposal," Greene said. "I started getting calls from the news media last Thursday, but it doesn't mean anything."

Tarrant County Judge Tom Vandergriff, the man most responsible for bringing GM to Arlington when he was mayor 40 years ago, said the future of the plant consumes his thoughts.

"I think about it every day, every night, almost every waking moment," Vandergriff said. "The thought of it not remaining on the scene is almost unbearable in my mind."

State in brief

■ Agents investigate Harris County clinics

HOUSTON — Federal agents are investigating complaints that Hispanics are being neglected in Houston and Harris County health clinics because too few clinic workers speak Spanish.

Dave Sanders, regional manager of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Office for Civil Rights in Dallas, said Thursday that the investigation began last summer.

"We believe we have enough Spanish-speaking people to adequately take care of those who do not speak English," said Dr. Thomas Hyslop, county health director. "Our clinics have 20 to 50 percent (of their staffs) who are Spanish-speaking."

Dr. Mary Kendrick, interim city health director, said the city tries to attract employees fluent in Spanish and other languages. "We have bilingual staff at every single clinic," she said.

If the department finds Hispanics being treated differently, officials would try to correct the problem, Sanders said. Federal funding could be deferred or withdrawn if those efforts failed.

Last year the eight city clinics received about $2.7 million in federal funds, and five county preventive clinics received about $2.6 million.

■ Police charge woman with sexual assault

HOUSTON — A 19-year-old Conroe woman has been accused of impersonating a man in the sexual assault of a 14-year-old girl who was convinced she was dating a teen-age boy.

Montgomery County authorities said farm hand LaJeane Sue Thompson assumed the name "Gene" when she initiated a relationship with the unsuspecting girl in February 1991.

Ms. Thompson was appointed an attorney in arraignment Thursday before state District Judge Olen Underwood. She has pleaded innocent to the charges. She is free on $1,500 bond.

Authorities say Ms. Thompson and the girl had a nine-month relationship and were planning to get married in October when they headed to Mexico. The minor was reported as a runaway. Two days later, she and Ms. Thompson were found by police in Eagle Pass and were returned to Montgomery County.

Ms. Thompson was charged with sexual assault, but only after authorities convinced the minor that "Gene" was in fact female.

"She wavered between anger and disbelief when we told her LaJeane is a female," sheriff's Lt. Wayne Clark told the Houston Chronicle. "She was devastated when she realized she'd been duped for nine months."

■ Controller questions check deductions

HOUSTON — Houston's city controller wants to know how a bail bond company got authority to deduct fees from city employees' paychecks for discounted bail costs.

In a letter to Mayor Bob Lanier, Controller George Greanias said he wondered how the Harris County Comprehensive Criminal Discount Plan could become an employees' benefit option when charities have been denied the same access.

At least 400 city employees are on the plan, which offers cheap bail bonds and legal advice for $10 a month.

Alfred Jackson, the lawyer who represents the bond program, said the process that got his firm on the payroll was straightforward.

"We hired a salesman who sold for a company that knew how to get on the list," he said. "He went in, proposed the idea and they (city officials) gave him the requirements."

To become eligible for the payroll deduction, Jackson said the firm was told it had to sell the program to 150 employees within 60 days. He and his wife, who runs the program in conjunction with Aber Bonding Co., did that.

The plan has collected $86,000 from city employees in the past three years. Jackson said he gets "between 20 and 30" cases a month from the program.

■ Man charged in alleged bomb conspiracy

SULPHUR SPRINGS — The manager of a Chinese restaurant has been arrested by federal agents after allegedly hiring an undercover Texas Ranger to blow up a competing restaurant, officials said Friday.

Hao Liu, 22, was arrested Thursday by special agents of the Treasury Department's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. They were assisted by Texas Rangers and local police, the ATF said.

Liu, who manages the Summer Palace restaurant owned by his parents, paid an undercover agent $1,500 to blow up the Royal China Restaurant, which had been the recent target of vandalism, authorities alleged.

"It's a very serious situation," said Sulphur Springs Police Chief Donnie Lewis.

The defendant was arrested Thursday after the payment was made, officials said.

Liu was charged with violating the federal code against attempting to destroy by fire or explosive any building used in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce, the ATF said.

Conviction carries a maximum prison sentence of 10 years and a fine up to $10,000. U.S. Magistrate Harry W. McKee denied bond, pending a detention hearing Feb. 25.

Liu, from China, holds a student visa, officials said.

Judge orders Tilton to submit to questioning

AUSTIN (AP) — A federal judge has ordered televangelist Robert Tilton and his wife to appear today at the attorney general's office in Dallas for questioning about finances at their Word of Faith ministry.

Tilton failed to appear for a scheduled deposition Thursday, said attorney general's office spokesman Gray McBride.

The evangelist was scheduled to answer questions regarding his lawsuit claiming that the ministry has been harmed by a state investigation into its finances.

Also Thursday, Tilton's lawyers amended the lawsuit filed two weeks ago, abandoning a demand for $2 million in damages and dropping as defendants several assistants to Attorney General Dan Morales.

Morales remains named in the suit, which claims more than 1,000 members have left his Word of Faith Outreach Center Church in the Dallas suburb of Farmers Branch since the attorney general began investigating the ministry.

Tilton asked U.S. District Judge Sam Sparks of Austin for protection from questioning in the amended lawsuit. But Sparks ordered Tilton and his wife to submit to questioning today.

Tilton's attorney, J.C. Joyce of Tulsa, Okla., hasn't returned several calls from The Associated Press.

Sparks has set a March 4 hearing to determine if the evangelist must release records sought by the attorney general.

Morales has been investigating whether Word of Faith has engaged in deceptive trade practices.

Church officials have said they neither sell nor trade anything and have refused to turn over financial records and other documents.

RELIGION IN BRIEF

■ Two-day seminar to begin

The "Understanding Genesis Seminar" set for Friday and Feb. 29 will uncover what the Ice Age, dinosaurs, ape-men and Mount Saint Helens have in common.

Gish

The two-day seminar will feature Gish, who is the author of "Evolution: Challenge of the Fossil Record," and Steven Austin, a researcher at the Grand Canyon and Mount Saint Helens who earned a doctorate in geology from Pennsylvania State University in 1979.

Both are members of the Institute for Creation Research, El Cajon, Calif.

"The 12 resident ICR faculty — who hold doctoral degrees in science from prestigious institutions, such as Harvard and the University of California — are convinced that the evidence from science overwhelmingly supports the concept of creation," Gish said. "In all, there are thousands of scientists worldwide who have recognized that evolution theory is not only unprovable but poor science, and consider creation as a valid scientific alternative."

In addition, members from the California-based institute will host a luncheon for earth scientists and engineers from noon to 1:30 p.m. Friday at Midland Center, Main Street at Wall Avenue. The speaker will be Austin. For reservations and more information on this luncheon call 684-9996.

Austin

On Friday, Gish will be speaking at a pastor's lunch from 11:45 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. at Midland Christian Fellowship, 200 Baldwon. Cost is $3.To make reservations for this lunch call Betty, 685-1981.

Gish, who has a doctorate in biochemistry from the University of California at Berkeley, is well known as a debater for the creationist view.

A member of Phi Beta Kappa at UCLA and Phi Sigma Upsilon, Gish is also is a member of the American Chemical Society and a fellow in the American Institute of Chemists.

The "Understanding Genesis Seminar" will be held from 7 to 9:30 p.m. Friday, which is called "Family Night," and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Feb. 29 at First Baptist Church, 2104 W. Louisiana Ave. The seminar is free.

Hosts for the seminar are the Ad Hoc "Understanding Genesis" Committee, Midland Bible Church, Midland Christian Fellowship and Mid-Cities Community Church. Only groups of 25 or more who are attending the two-day seminar need make reservations.

The "Family Night" sessions, designed for those 12 years old and up, Friday will feature Gish speaking from 7 to 8 p.m. on "Dinosaurs: Those Terrible Lizards," and Austin speaking from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m. on "Mount Saint Helens: Explosive Evidence for Creation."

A film, "The World That Perished," will be shown from 9 to 9:35 a.m. Feb. 29. Topics on Feb. 29 include "Origin of Man," Gish, 9:40-10:30 a.m.; "Is the Earth Really Billions of Years Old?" Austin, 10:45-11:30 a.m.; "Creation, Evolution and the Fossil Record," Gish, 2:15-3 p.m.; "The Flood, Fossils and The Big Breeze," Austin, 2:15-3 p.m.; and "Design and the Master Designer," Gish, 3:15-4 p.m.

A school assembly is planned for 9:30 to 11 a.m. Friday. Student groups of 25 or more need to make reservations no later than Monday. To make reservations or for more information call 697-0557.

■ Church to present program

The Unitarian Universalist Church of Midland, 3301 Neely at Midkiff, will present a program at 9:45 a.m. Sunday entitled "Healing Our Relations: A Shamanic Approach."

The program will be presented by Charles W. Conatser, a shaman of the Native American tradition and the founder of the Circle of the Sacred Earth Healing Center, Lubbock. Conatser is a former math professor at Texas Tech University.

The shamanic tradition is humanity's earliest attempt to understand spirituality. In her book, "Sex in History," Reay Tannahill states that, despite competing claims to priority, "shamanism is the world's oldest profession."

The shamanic tradition helps unify the desparate realities of existance: physical, emotional, symbolic and holistic, said a release from the church.

The public is invited to attend this and the religious education series entitled "The Transformation of Myth through Time" on Mondays. This series began in early February.

The series, which runs from 7 to 8:30 p.m. Mondays for six weeks, presents the first volume in the video series of the same name by Joseph Campbell. This volume explores the mythology of such ancient peoples as the American Indian, Greeks and Egyptians.

Out of the urn

Iowan sends hunters away

By Roger Munns
Associated Press writer

DES MOINES, Iowa — The way Jay Knudsen sees it, the ashes of dead hunters don't belong in urns on the mantle.

So, for about the cost of a funeral and sometimes a lot less, he'll take the ashes to the sportsman's favorite marsh or bear country and blast them to smithereens.

"We can't get you to heaven," he advertises. "But we promise to land you in the happy hunting ground."

A landscaper by trade, Knudsen has an off-season service for the survivors of dedicated hunters. He loads ashes into shotgun shells, performs whatever ritual the family wishes and then blasts away.

"This is not a morbid thing, to shoot ol' Joe down the barrel of a shotgun in an area he loved to hunt," said Knudsen, 50.

"We've had people think it was strange, but when they realize that we've been dropping ashes from airplanes for ages, they say, 'Wait a minute, it's just another form of that.'"

Shotgun funerals aren't the only ceremonies he performs.

"We just had a lady send us her father's ashes from Missouri to put in golf clubs," he said.

"There's no end to this. You could put ashes in bowling balls, in baseball bats, lots of things.

"We're putting ashes into lures for fishermen, duck decoys for hunters, that sort of thing. One of the things that has been popular is to do this with ashes of the hunter's gun dog. A hunter gets pretty close to his gun dog."

Knudsen said he has had about a dozen and a half customers since his first ad ran in the Sept.-Oct. issue of the magazine Sporting Classics. He said he has received hundreds of calls and letters.

"One lady said she can't stand the sight of an urn sitting on the mantle and that her husband would like nothing better than being in a duck decoy," he said.

Another family paid to put remains in five decoys to be used by his buddies on the next hunt.

Although business is thriving, "this is strictly a sideline" to the family's main business, landscaping.

Knudsen says he expects some people will sniff at his business. "But it's fun to be interesting. A lot of people get bored with their work. There's a lot of ideas that go to waste because people are afraid to be laughed at."

Day care center mixes healthy, disabled tots

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Sam and Laura are best friends. They go to the same day care center. On this day, they busy themselves with a play dinner party.

Sam sits on a stool before a meal of plastic cauliflower while Laura reaches around her walker to answer the pretend doorbell.

Laura Carroll, 4½, has cerebral palsy. Five-year-old Sam Charlick doesn't. And that's what Best Friends Day Care Center is about.

The school looks like any other, with toys strewn about and Sesame Street characters on the wall, but classrooms also have walkers, motorized wheelchairs and wooden "floor-sitters" for disabled students.

Four of six classrooms at the center, which is affiliated with the United Cerebral Palsy Association, have a mix of disabled and non-disabled children.

"We try to teach them to acknowledge that people are different and not to make a judgment about that," said center director Pat Benvenuto. "They're kids first. That's what we try to get across."

Benvenuto said she got the idea for integrated classes when she read of research showing children have preconceived ideas about disabilities by age 6.

She started a monthly exchange between disabled students and her son's day care center. The idea soon became a weekly gathering and culminated in Best Friends' integrated classrooms in 1988.

The center's teachers develop activities that overcome students' occasional segregation based on mobility. Pretend meals, where students gather around a table or a play kitchen, are popular.

"It's fun," said Sam. "I like playing with Laura."

Laura decides dinner is over and walks on her knees to the play sink. She pulls herself up on her feet and starts washing dishes.

Some of the other disabled children also have cerebral palsy. Others have hearing impairments, spina bifida, head trauma or Down syndrome.

The center has 25 non-disabled and 47 disabled children enrolled. Most are part-time students. The youngsters, ranging from 15 months to 5 years, are grouped by developmental age.

Speech, occupational and physical therapists move from room to room, leading children in activities designed to promote specific skills. Teachers weave therapy into the day.

At snack time, students pour their own milk or practice licking peanut butter off their lips to sharpen motor skills. To work on using both sides of the body, students raise both arms above their heads, a feat for those with cerebral palsy.

A computer that sings "Old MacDonald" helps children learn to recognize shapes and mimic sounds.

When students ask why Laura doesn't stomp her feet, teachers explain differences, Benvenuto said. Sometimes questions are prompted by a classmate's absence or hospital stay, or by a child's fear of contracting a disability.

United Cerebral Palsy Association affiliates in Dallas, Denver, Little Rock, Ark., Panama City, Fla., and several other cities also have day care centers with integrated classes.

Usually, students accept disabilities as they do the color of their best friend's hair. Knee braces and helmets become toys coveted by disabled and non-disabled students during recess.

But even students at Best Friends, like children anywhere, will taunt each other about their differences, Benvenuto said. Anything is fair game, from a new haircut to a new leg brace.

Black Texan speakers reject history talks

By Valerie Fields
N.Y. Times News Service

Three prominent Texas university professors and a popular talk show host have stood up and asked not to be counted on to speak at Black History Month programs.

Southern Methodist University Professor Ken Hamilton said the celebrations are "belittling."

Talk show host Bob Ray Sanders said the programs have become "perfunctory."

This month, Hamilton, Sanders, SMU Professor Clarence Glover and University of Texas Professor Marvin Delaney — among the most popular African-Americans to address Dallas-Fort Worth groups, chambers, schools and churches during Black History Month — independently announced that they will decline future requests to speak.

Their purpose, they said, is to bring black history programs into the mainstream, so the subject will be integrated into the year-round curriculum.

Other speakers, including Hurst writer and lecturer Steve Washington, have followed suit.

Critics say Black History Month lecture series and speaking programs often are hastily thrown together, have no focus and sometimes are done to compensate for the slights in the past.

"It's belittling; it's trivializing a serious subject," said Hamilton, a professor of African-American studies. "People think that you can come out on a limited time and speak on blacks and the history of America."

Worse still, critics say, many schools repetitiously recap biographies of leaders of the anti-slavery and civil-rights movements. They say the programs also recap biographies of black athletes who were the "first this or that."

"You just can't teach (about) the tough people," controversial historic figures such as Malcolm X, Washington said. "You've got to teach about the engineers, the scientists."

Washington said he is writing an educational guide to help churches, teachers and others offer a more comprehensive black history program because children can't get black history in just an hour, or a month.

"First of all, you've got a 28-day month and you're dealing with a people that started when Adam was born," he said.

Because of the speakers' decisions, some school administrators say they must regroup their programs. But many Texas districts said they are already moving toward a year-round, multicultural curriculum.

"In Fort Worth, we may or may not have speakers," said Joyce Howard Johnson, social studies curriculum specialist for Fort Worth schools. "Our program does not depend on whether or not people come to speak."

Imagination Celebration brings ethnic arts — symphony, dance and theater — to schoolchildren year-round, and A World of Difference celebrates cultural differences, Johnson said. At annual symposiums, teachers learn to incorporate multiculturalism in their classrooms, she said.

In Arlington, speakers are used only occasionally, so the district will not suffer if more African-Americans decline to take part in Black History Month, one administrator said.

"I don't think it's going to throw everything out of whack," said Janie Hargis, Arlington social studies coordinator. "I think what will happen is we will more aggressively look for a curriculum on African-American culture."

The district hopes to integrate black history throughout the year.

They love water sports and cannot wait to visit the beach each summer.

'Life Goes On' character dies in collision, Tommy Puett says

LOS ANGELES — "Life Goes On" might not. Certainly not for the character played by actor Tommy Puett.

Puett said the ABC series' future is in doubt, and that his character, Tyler Benchfield, will meet his end in a car crash at this season's end.

Puett revealed Benchfield's date with destiny during Thursday's taping of "Attitudes," a talk show on cable's Lifetime channel. The episode will air March 4.

"Life Goes On" stars an actor with Down syndrome playing a young man afflicted with the same handicap. Its biggest handicap is its time slot, however. It airs Sundays at 7 p.m. against CBS' "60 Minutes," the No. 1 show on television.

DETROIT — Michael Jackson's trademark white, crystal-beaded glove is back in a display case at the Motown Museum, where it was stolen by a fan last fall.

The glove, which the pop star donated to the museum, went back on display Thursday for the first time since the theft Sept. 30, museum Director Esther Edwards said.

The theft generated calls of concern from Jackson fans as far away as Belgium, she said.

The glove was recovered four days later when the thief surrendered to police. But its display was delayed "until we could guarantee the kind of security that would deter future incidents," Edwards said.

Bruce Hays, 23, was sentenced to two years' probation earlier this month after being convicted of larceny. He told police he removed hinges from a glass case containing the glove in a museum room devoted to Jackson memorabilia.

DES MOINES, Iowa — Comedian Tom Arnold says he feels great after confronting the man he claims abused him sexually as a child.

The confrontation was part of the therapy to overcome the abuse he says he suffered more than 25 years ago.

Arnold

"You're doing it totally for yourself," Arnold told The Des Moines Register. "When I gave him back his shame and the pain he caused me, I meant it. He's got it from now on, and I don't have it any more. I gave it right back to him and that was great."

Arnold said he confronted the man, now a 43-year-old executive, at his Des Moines area office last month.

Asked about Arnold's allegations, the businessman said, "The only thing we'll say at this time is the things Tom is saying are a fabrication and we categorically deny them." The newspaper did not identify him.

Arnold is married to actress Roseanne Arnold, who also has gone public with her accounts of sexual abuse.

MADERA, Calif. — Actor Richard Kiel suffered minor injuries when his car hit a pickup and crashed into a ditch on a rural road Thursday, the California Highway Patrol reported.

Kiel, who played the giant "Jaws" in two James Bond movies, was northbound on Yosemite Lake Parkway when he veered into the opposite lane, Officer Tom Isler said.

The 7-foot-2-inch actor, who lives in the Sierra Nevada foothills near here, was treated at St. Agnes Medical Center in Fresno for head cuts and released.

DUBBO, Australia (AP) — Forget the pomp and ceremony. What young royalty fans want to know is what Queen Elizabeth II is really like.

They had their chance to ask during the queen's tour of Australia when she took the microphone on their schools' two-way radio system. The radio keeps students in contact from their distant, isolated homes.

Elizabeth II

"What's it like to live in Buckingham Palace? What do you do in your spare time? What's your favorite food?"

The queen answered with aplomb, occasionally smiling as she mused the queries.

The palace "is a very big house to live in," reading and walking fill her vacant hours, and she's "quite easy to please with food."

The youngsters were thrilled with the royal hot line. The queen particularly struck a chord when she said she likes to vacation at her country homes because they have horses.

SAN ANTONIO — Country music star George Strait was named George-of-the-Year in Friday's annual balloting by the now nationally-known George Club.

Comprised of people named George, the club holds a good-natured meeting each year about the time of George Washington's birthday.

The Georges started their tongue-in-cheek club four years ago on President George Bush's inauguration day.

Strait, a San Antonio resident, trounced other George-of-the-Year contenders. The voting, done in person and by telephone, took place at Olmos Pharmacy, which happens to be run by a guy named George.

A long range radar antenna inside a protective dome at the new North Warning System radar site in Cambridge Bay, in the Northwest Territories, searches the sky for possible attacking missiles or bombers over the Canadian Artic.

Cold War end fails to ebb vigilance in defense site

By Jeffrey Ulbrich
Associated Press writer

CAMBRIDGE BAY, Northwest Territories — Long-range radar at this newly modernized central Arctic facility searches the sky for missiles and bombers that are no longer supposed to come.

At Inuvik, 700 miles to the west on the Beaufort Sea, is the new Forward Operating Location built for Canadian CF-18 and American F-15 interceptors that would challenge an enemy now viewed more like a friend.

The spectacular crumbling of the Soviet Union, planned reductions in forces on both sides, the stand-down of the Strategic Air Command, trimming of defense budgets — all have led to a new era of optimism. But they have not led to a lessening of vigilance.

"I'd really like to see the threat diminished," said Brig. Gen. Victor Pergat, commander of Canada's Northern Region. "I'm a human like anybody else. The money would be better spent elsewhere."

Military officials feel the threat remains as long as elements of what used to be the Soviet Union still have the capacity to destroy North America.

"I think we must make the distinction between capability and intention," said Col. Hubert Leduc, Canada's assistant deputy minister of defense for policy. "In the military, we don't deal with intention, we deal with the reality as we see it."

For that reason, Canada and the United States have gone ahead with their $2 billion modernization of North American early warning radar systems and airfields in the Arctic.

The old Distant Early Warning line of the 1950s will disappear next year, replaced by the more sophisticated North Warning System. The mission is the same: Watch out for Russians.

Fifteen long-range radars manned by eight to 10 people each and 39 unmanned short-range radars make up the North Warning System. Satellite communications link the radars with the North American Aerospace Defense regional center in North Bay, Ontario, which in turn feeds information to North American Air Defense Command in Colorado Springs, Colo.

Of the $1.78 billion being spent on the North Warning system itself, the United States pays 60 percent. The $222 million cost of airfields at Inuvik, Yellowknife, Rankin Inlet, Iqaluit and Kuujjuaq is being shared equally.

When over-the-horizon radars and AWACS planes based in the United States are included, the total cost of the modernization program is $6.8 billion to $8.5 billion.

"The Strategic Air Command was allowed to drop down off its alert state, but they couldn't have done that without the North Warning System," said Col. Larry Saunders.

He manages the North American Air Defense Modernization Project, which comes at a time when both countries are slashing defense spending.

Canada is closing its European bases and some at home, reducing military personnel from 84,000 to 76,000 and seeking other ways to cut the $10.9 billion defense budget. In the United States, President Bush has announced defense cuts of $50 billion.

"We're spending quite a bit of money to modernize the system, but we are not militarizing the north," said Saunders, a Canadian. "In fact, we are reducing the number of people."

The sites are being built and operated by Frontec, a Canadian civilian company.

"It's kind of like a burglar alarm," said Jack Ivany, Frontec's deputy manager for site operations. "Just because the crime wave has eased, you don't turn it off."

Canada has no ground forces in the far north, except 1,000 volunteer Arctic Rangers. The Eskimo Rangers receive training from the military and in turn train soldiers in Arctic survival. They also act as scouts and guides for regular army forces and sometimes participate in search and rescue.

Each northern airfield has six hangars, maintenance buildings and facilities for up to 200 men. They are used 30 to 35 days a year for temporary deployments of air and ground forces from bases in southern Canada.

Arctic and maritime surveillance aircraft based in the south patrol the vast northern area regularly.

Life on artic radar site turns into a world of its own

By Jeffrey Ulbrich
Associated Press writer

CAMBRIDGE BAY, Northwest Territories — Outside on this February day, it's 8 a.m. and 40 below. Inside, it's 10 a.m. and a comfortable 72.

This is the land of the midnight sun, sometimes the noonday night — Victoria Island in the Canadian Arctic.

The Eskimo hamlet of Cambridge Bay runs on Mountain Standard time. A little over a mile down the road, Frontec, the civilian company that built and operates the North Warning System radar sites, insists on using Eastern Standard.

So 8 a.m. in the village is 10 at Frontec headquarters. That gets tricky when inviting someone from the village to lunch at 10 o'clock his time, or when trying to remember when a flight leaves.

Life can be surreal in such a place.

"Sometimes it's hard to keep people focused on their mission," said Fred Camsell, site manager of what the crew calls "Cam Main."

Life also can be very pleasant.

Chef Frans Borsboom provides wonderful food, even turkey and dressing when it's not a holiday.

Joan Crawford, the nurse, sees to everybody's health.

Movies, VCRs, satellite television, books, video games, exercise rooms and pool tables keep the personnel content inside modular accommodations strung together like a train.

It's a big change from the old days where two movies a month were a big deal.

Drinkers beware. The site is dry and bringing in alcohol is a firing offense.

Out on the tundra, wildlife abounds: caribou, musk ox, Arctic fox, wolverine. In the short summer, fishing is great.

Men no longer peer into green radar scopes. All data is transmitted automatically to the regional center in North Bay, Ontario.

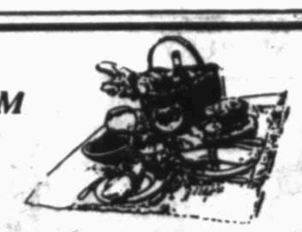

Nonetheless, doing the job needs care.

"I love this stuff; it's my life," said Jim Baggs, who keeps all the electronic equipment running.

Baggs, an ex-military man who got a college degree by correspondence, is passionate about the radar. He never touches the exterior cabinets with his fingers, so as not to leave prints.

The self-contained community is supplied by ship just once a year when the ice breaks up, so you'd better not forget to order the peanut butter.

Camels race down a track after the opening recently of the Janadriya Cultural Festival near Riyadh, an annual event sponsored by the Saudi National Guard to keep alive the desert heritage of Saudi Arabia.

Camels got fat during war; racing isn't the same

By Neil MacFarquhar
Associated Press writer

JANADRIYA, Saudi Arabia — The Gulf War left behind a lot of fat camels, and those one-time ships of the desert now are either working out at the racetrack, or ending up on the barbecue.

The racetracks were closed during the war, and noble dromedaries turned into desert dumplings. Nearly a year later, some are still sand-dune potatoes.

"They got fat, happy and lazy. Some can't even race anymore," said camel jockey Breig Mubarak, 25.

A good racing hump should be about as wide as a man's hand is long. By war's end, some camels had humps as broad as a man's forearm is long.

The day the war ended, the races resumed. And through the hot summer months the camel owners came up with a solution for getting rid of the flab — workouts at midnight, when the desert temperatures are cool.

Jockeys and owners say the camel elite were up to par for the recent three days of races that open the annual Janadriya Cultural Festival, organized by the country's National Guard.

But they notice a lot more galumphing toward the end of the 12½-mile races — they're running 50 minutes instead of the ideal 30.

A camel that gets out of shape risks more than losing some races. These onetime ships of the desert can wind up on a barbeque spit if they don't prove useful.

But a young camel that wins races three years in a row can fetch up to $530,000 at auction.

The races attract notables from Saudi Arabia's royal family, which includes about 3,000 princes. King Fahd was on hand for the season's first race.

Some princes are content to watch from deep couches in the stands. Others clamber aboard buses fitted with padded armchairs to chase around the track keeping pace with the runners so they can watch their prize beasts.

Some resent the royal privileges, and camel-racing is not immune to griping.

"Some princes might not like me saying this, but they keep many people from getting visas for jockeys from Sudan. They shouldn't be able to control this," said Saad Al-Jafar, an accountant who spends about $3,000 a month on his racing hobby.

There's also concern that some princes are dabbling with steroids, a new phenomenon in the desert, to enhance their camels' speed and strength.

Washington's wallet returned without cash in colonial caper

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — A wallet that belonged to George Washington, stolen last month from a state museum, was returned for his birthday Monday but the cash it contained was missing.

Eric Davis, a Doylestown, Pa., attorney who said he was acting on behalf of a "good samaritan who requests anonymity," turned the wallet over to state police. Two bills issued by the Continental Congress — a two-thirds dollar bill from 1776 and a dollar bill from 1779 — were still missing.

Davis and state police spokesman John Hagerty refused to give details about how Davis' client got the wallet because an investigation was continuing. Davis said his client didn't steal it.

The 10-inch long, 6-inch wide wallet, with "GW 1775" printed on a brass clasp, was on loan to the Old Barracks Museum from a private collection. It was taken Jan. 28 from a plexiglass display case.

"We were very distressed when we discovered it was gone," said museum director Cynthia Koch. "We're delighted it's back."

South Pole gives researchers unique platform for their studies

By Walter Sullivan
N.Y. Times News Service

McMURDO SOUND, Antarctica — The South Pole, goal of heroic treks in the early years of the century, is emerging as the site for a multitude of scientific observations.

For the 20 or so researchers who winter over at the pole, conditions are harsh, especially during the long winter night. Temperatures can drop to more than 100 degrees below zero Fahrenheit and the sun never rises above the horizon. But the rewards are rich, for the work done there cannot be done anywhere else on earth.

No other observatory is directly on the earth's rotational axis. As a result, the sun, stars and other sources of celestial radiation rotate overhead in a circle; all but the sun remain at the same height above the horizon throughout the year.

At other observatories much of the sky is only visible part time and, furthermore, as light from a rising and setting star passes through different thicknesses of atmosphere, researchers must constantly correct for atmospheric distortion.

This year a complex of new observing systems has been built.

Several are measuring radiation from space. In one project, directed by Dr. Douglas M. Lowder of the University of California at Berkeley, a hot water jet has drilled two holes 2,600 feet deep in the ice to test the possibility of detecting the elusive particles called neutrinos that after traveling through space, traverse the entire earth to emerge at the pole.

Scientists hope scanners in a series of such holes will be able to identify the sources of neutrinos in the Arctic sky, on the opposite side of the earth. Observing them after they pass through the earth eliminates confusion from other radiation coming from the heavens.

The scanners will detect flashes created by subatomic particles called muons set off at high velocity by neutrino collisions. Because such collisions are extremely rare, a large volume of material is needed.

Earlier attempts used large tanks of water, cleaning fluid and other substances, but never detectors whose volume approached that of the polar ice.

Initial observations in the 2,600-foot holes, said Lowder, seem to show that at such depth the ice is free of bubbles and thus transparent enough to make a large volume of ice observable.

As Dr. John Lynch, scientific leader at the pole earlier this season, said in an interview, it looks as though the ice covering Antarctica, miles deep and hundreds of miles in extent, is like a giant crystal of quartz or other transparent material.

Explorers to retrace Roosevelt's rain forest trip

MIAMI (AP) — A team of explorers, including a great-grandson of Theodore Roosevelt, left Sunday for Brazil to retrace the president's 1914 river trek through the rain forest.

Armed with Roosevelt's book, "Through the Brazilian Wilderness" and notes and photographs from his journey, the team will travel by raft down the treacherous Rio Roosevelt to assess environmental damage in the past 78 years.

Like the conservationist president, the explorers have to contend with rapids, diseases and wild animals such as piranhas, alligators and jaguars. The river runs from western Brazil to rivers that feed into the Amazon.

"We could have essentially the same experiences he had," said Roosevelt's great-grandson Tweed Roosevelt, an investment analyst in Boston. "I feel that I can forward some of the principles that he believed in."

The group also includes experienced river and jungle explorers, a doctor, three Brazilian naturalists, two photographers, a journalist and two Indians, said team coleader Charles Haskell.

The mission, expected to last between six and eight weeks, will survey the aquatic and plant species in the Amazon basin and compare the findings with those of the late president.

The team will present its report to the United Nations Conference on the Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro this June.

The leader of the Rough Riders had a very rough ride when he navigated what was then called the "River of Doubt" with Brazil's Col. Candido Rondon and 22 others.

Roosevelt nearly starved to death, became delirious from malaria and had a bone infection on his thigh that had to be operated on during the trip.

"Rondon had given him up for dead," Tweed Roosevelt said. "That whole episode significantly weakened him."

Roosevelt died in 1919, a year before the 1920 election in which he was favored to win.
