Al Unser Jr. celebrates with his family after winning the 76th running of the Indy 500.

Unser Jr. wins Indy

INDIANAPOLIS — Al Unser Jr. survived the weather, a series of crashes and a charge at the finish by Scott Goodyear on Sunday to become the first second-generation winner of the Indianapolis 500. "It's a dream come true. I don't know what to say. It was awesome," said Unser, son of four-time winner Al Unser, who finished third. Michael Andretti had led 163 laps but coasted to a stop on the backstretch with 10 laps to go, giving the lead to Unser. Goodyear, turning a lap over 224 mph on the final lap, could not overtake Unser./ 1C

Mouthed threat

CLEVELAND — A woman's killer who mouthed an apparent death threat against a homicide detective in court is a coward who wouldn't dare confront a man, the officer said. "He is in no position to make any threat like that," said Cleveland Detective Leo Allen. He was the target of the apparent threat mouthed Friday by Wiley Davis, 32, of Cleveland Heights. A judge had just read the jury's verdict convicting Davis in the Nov. 26 downtown abduction and slaying of Amy Perkins, 32, of Parma. She was the wife of former WGAR radio personality David Perkins. She was killed her last day at work in Cleveland. She had planned to move back to Texas, where her husband and others had bought a radio station in the Odessa-Midland area./ 2B

South's plan earns high marks

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

After hundreds of Midland second-graders arrived home from school on a recent afternoon, Miguel Gonzalez' extended school day was just beginning.

To the delight of his peers, Miguel donned a dozen caps and strutted across the auditorium stage at South Elementary School. He feigned sleeping beneath a paper tree and was set upon by mischievous monkeys — fellow actors — in the drama "Caps for Sale."

The audience — bolstered by an afternoon snack — applauded and cheered for their classmates on stage.

In another section of the school building, third-grader Joey Villa set up pins for a bowling game. And in yet another room, students were involved in

U.S. pauses for prayers, parades, fun

■ Elsewhere, holiday's meaning is lost among more immediate worries, quest for a good time.

By Arlene Levinson
Associated Press writer

Last year, New York City poured on the ticker tape for Desert Storm veterans. This time around, it is sitting out Memorial Day with no parade at all.

In Medina, Ohio, firefighters planned to boycott today's parade, angry over their pay. Children in a West Virginia town enlisted to keep a tradition started after the Civil War to honor perished soldiers, but only a thin crowd was expected.

This is how America was marking Memorial Day Weekend in 1992, with parades and prayers but also laughter and forgetting in a lot of places.

Cardinal John O'Connor used his Memorial Day sermon Sunday at New York's St. Patrick's Cathedral to condemn war and indifference to suffering.

The head of the Roman Catholic archdiocese of New York told worshippers that war brings no peace, "including the recent war in the (Persian) Gulf with tremendous loss of life and no indication whatsoever that the world is better."

But the Memorial Day parade tradi-tional in Manhattan since 1919 was called off for heartbreaking lack of interest. Instead the New York County American Legion planned a small ceremony today at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument by the Hudson River.

"I've watched the parade diminish to a point where it was almost an insult to the memory of those who fought. And that hurt," Frank D'Amico, a 66-year-old World War II Army Air Corps veteran who helped organize the parades, told The New York Times.

Last year's parade turnout was sparse — marchers and spectators both — though millions rallied only two weeks later to honor Gulf War veterans.

Has someone been doing a rain dance on Midland?

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

In the arid regions of Arizona, the Papago Indians, before planting crops, would have a rain dance, according to the World Book Encyclopedia.

The women would gather containers of cactus juice that was then allowed to ferment for two nights. During that time, men and women would dance around a fire singing about rain.

The next morning, the cactus juice would be consumed. The Indians believed that as they filled on the drink, the earth would fill with rain.

In light of this weekend's storm — that began in Arizona — some Midlanders might feel that someone's been doing a rain dance, especially since more rain is expected.

"We are basically looking at the same thing," said a spokesman for the National Weather Service in Midland.

Between Friday and Sunday, 3.65 inches of rain have been

Mystery of missing Exxon executive sounds alarms

By Robert Dvorchak
Associated Press writer

MORRISTOWN, N.J. — Alarms reverberated in corporate boardrooms when Sidney J. Reso, president of Exxon Co. International, vanished April 29, his car left idling 250 feet from home in his secluded driveway.

The mystery has corporations taking extra care to protect their top people.

"We're concerned about copycat cases. We're advising executives to be a little more careful than normal," said E.C. "Mike" Ackerman, a Miami-based former CIA agent who consults for about 50 of the top multinational corporations. "This is a very puzzling case."

Clinton camp grapples with unexpected Perot challenge

By Gwen Ifill
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — For Bill Clinton, these days have been deeply frustrating. He had planned to use the coasting period between the time that his nomination became inevitable and the Democratic National Convention in New York to hone his message and raise his national profile for the fall election campaign.

But he and his strategists have been blind-sided by evidence of Ross Perot's early popularity. And if their panic has been less visible than that in the White House, they seem just as baffled.

"One of the most frustrating things to me about the nature of modern politics today is how easily we are all diverted from those big things that will affect our lives in common and our lives individually," Clinton told supporters at a women's rally in Livingston, N.J., on Friday. "And how often we willingly participate in a process by giving our vote away through the process of diversion."

The scarcely veiled reference to Perot as a destructive diversion was another example of the cautious steps the Arkansas governor is taking toward a full-throated attack on the Texan, who enjoyed a remarkable string of good fortune last week as a series of polls showed him beating or strongly challenging the two major-party candidates in California, Texas and nationwide.

Clinton's initial plans to ignore Perot have fallen by the wayside. But his advisers fear that taking Perot on directly will give him more strength as an outsider, so Clinton has stuck doggedly to his schedule of policy speeches and fund-raising dinners and receptions.

The best way to counter Perot, this reasoning goes, is to prove that Clinton is better and more serious presidential material.

Along the way, Clinton's speeches have become focused and more emotional. And when he strolls back in T-shirt and jeans to talk with reporters on his campaign plane, if the talk turns to his current predicament, he demurs and heads back to his seat.

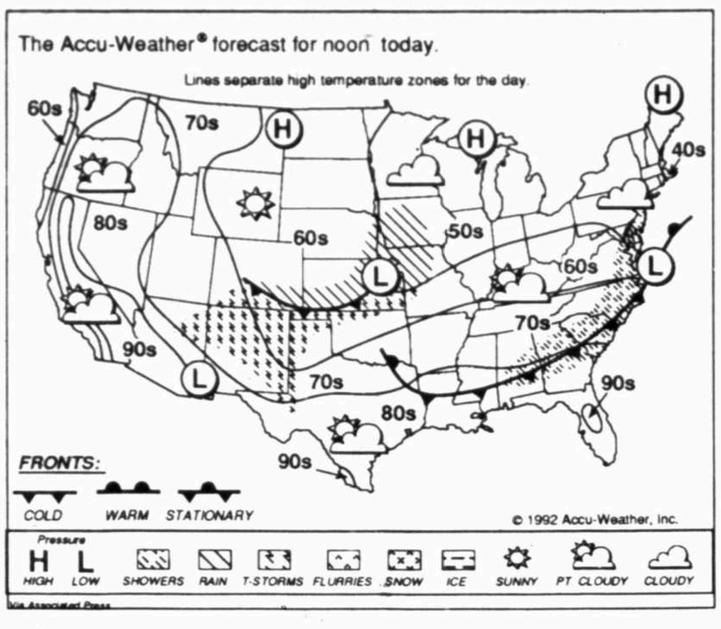

"From the first moments of the campaign — and it's reflected in Bill Clinton's career as governor — he's talked about change, opportunity and responsibility," said Mickey Kantor, the campaign chairman. "Right now, Perot is the idea of change." He emphasized the word "idea."

But some Democrats fear that Clinton is playing by an old script that has been rendered obsolete by satellite technology, voter anger and Perot's own skill

WEATHER SUMMARY

HOLIDAY: Memorial Day gets wide interpretation

(From 1A)

Boy Scouts placed flags at soldiers' graves at the Veterans Cemetery there. "We wouldn't be free without them," Scout Dennis Irwin said.

Hundreds of youngsters in Grafton, W.Va., laid out their best white outfits for today's 125-year old Memorial Day tradition, when the streets stream with a river of schoolchildren.

An estimated 1,200 youngsters, mainly ages 5 through 10, all dressed in white were to carry tiny American flags and bouquets to lay at soldiers' graves at Grafton National Cemetery.

"People come back here for this parade every year," said Jim Fawcett, 68. "It's the biggest event that Grafton has except when they have the high school reunion every four years."

Even so, crowds are shrinking, said parade organizer Norman Deakins, who anticipated only 3,000 spectators this year.

"Memorial Day used to be something people were more proud of," Deakins said.

The holiday has developed new traditions in some quarters. For example, tens of thousands of people spent the weekend at the 21st annual Northwest Folklife Festival at Seattle Center. Elsewhere, old traditions are being revived: Detroit held its first Memorial Day parade in 20 years on Saturday.

A Western Michigan University student saved the parade today in Kalamazoo, Mich. Tyrone Bynum, who is running for County Commission, pledged to organize a parade that the United Veterans Council had canceled when city officials demanded a $2,000 fee for parade security.

The City Council helped Bynum Sunday by agreeing in a special session to waive the fee.

War veterans seemed beside the point in Medina, Ohio, where the 31 firefighters decided to not drive trucks and cars in today's parade. They're still waiting for a 10 percent raise on their $8.85 hourly wage due them in January, said fire Chief Leland Codding.

There was no shortage of drivers at the Indianapolis 500, where some spectators had to wrap themselves in blankets and sleeping bags in 50-degree weather.

"I don't think any of us were expecting this," said Tom Schlink of Peoria, Ill., clutching a beer in one hand and the quilt hugging his shoulders with the other. "But that's OK. This is the Indy 500. This will keep us warm. This is the greatest race in the world."

Fair weather Saturday turned foul and rainy Sunday in Maine, but the stream of vacationers from the south kept coming.In New Jersey, temperatures in the 70s and 80s drew long weekenders to parks and shores.

"You can't avoid it," said beachgoer Dave Ciocca of Philadelphia. "It's part of the deal. It doesn't matter as long as there's sun, water and music."

STORMS: More rain's on tap dumped on Midland. The normal rainfall for the entire month of May is just 2.78 inches.

The storm has remained stationary causing the seemingly endless rain.

Today "the low pressure system in southern Arizona will start to move toward us . . . increasing the threat of thunderstorms," an NWS spokesman said.

And it may be a few days until the skies clear up.

On Sunday, the storm caused various weather warnings and watches to be issued throughout the day for parts of the Permian Basin, West Texas and southeast New Mexico.

A severe thunderstorm watch extended from El Paso to San Angelo. Severe thunderstorm warnings were issued for several counties including Midland.

A flash flood watch went out for the entire Permian Basin and southeast New Mexico.

A tornado warning was issued in Pecos County, where two short-lived tornadoes were reported about 25 miles southwest of Fort Stockton. In addition, two-inch diameter hail was reported in that area.

With a prediction of more of the same, Midlanders might want to plan to spend the day indoors.

Today's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms possibly severe in the afternoon. The high will be near 80 with southeast winds 10 to 20 mph.

Tonight will be mostly cloudy with a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms and a low in the mid-50s.

Tuesday is expected to be mostly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and a high in the mid-70s.

The extended outlook for Wednesday to Friday calls for a slight chance of showers and thunderstorms with highs in the low to mid-80s and lows in the mid- to upper 50s.

After an overnight low of 57, Sunday's high was 71 compared with the record high for that date of 108 set in 1989. The record low for today's date was 50 set in 1954.

STATE

West Texas bore the brunt Sunday of thunderstorms spawning walnut-sized hail and region-wide tornado and flash flood watches.

Tropical moisture and unstable air produced the widespread showers and thunderstorms.

Temperatures were mostly in the 60s and 70s. Winds were strong and gusty near the storms.

Around the rest of the state, warm and humid weather brought cloudy skies and some scattered showers. An area of light rain and a few thunderstorms developed from near Austin to College Station, mainly because of afternoon heating.

A weak cold front lingered across North Texas. Late Sunday afternoon, thunderstorms were scattered from Lufkin to south of Waco to near Abilene.

Temperatures had risen into the 70s and 80s.

The West Texas forecast calls for scattered showers and thunderstorms through tonight. Locally heavy rain remains possible with the thunderstorms. Lows will be from the mid-40s to near 60.

In South Texas, skies will remain partly to mostly cloudy skies with scattered showers and thunderstorms through Memorial Day. Lows will be in the 60s and 70s, with highs near 90.

North Texans will see a good chance for thunderstorms, as the temperatures drop by Tuesday into highs in the 80s.

NATION

Strong thunderstorms brought severe weather to the southern High Plains on Sunday, while the West Coast enjoyed sunny skies and temperatures varied widely in the East.

Afternoon showers and thunderstorms were scattered over southern New Mexico and western Texas. Flash flood warnings were posted for both states.

Earlier Sunday, thunderstorms over central Texas produced hail 1½ inches in diameter at Water Valley, dime-size hail at Crane, and nickel-size hail north of Rankin.

A thunderstorm over southwest Texas around daybreak spun a tornado near McMamey. Wink, Texas, was drenched in about in 1½ inches of rain in six hours before dawn.

Showers and a occassional thunderstorms extended from Mississippi to New England. Showers and a few thunderstorms also were over southeast Texas and southwest Louisiana.

Showers were scattered over the Dakotas and western Minnesota.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

CLINTON: Governor moves toward attack on Perot

(From 1A)

with the snappy phrase.

"He's talking in sound bites," one veteran strategist said. "They're talking in policy speeches."

The governor's anti-Perot strategy has hovered somewhere between attack and retreat as he tries to persuade voters that he, too, is a Washington outsider. But he adds that he has plans to implement the changes that he promises.

"Whether you vote for me or not, vote for something big, and vote for something real." Clinton told his New Jersey audience on Friday. "And come to grips with these issues."

Among Clinton's top advisers, the hope is that Perot is, as Kantor said in an interview, "the flavor of the month."

But they also have come to realize that merely looking the other way from someone who has shown such strength will not work.

"A billionaire with a couple hundred million dollars to spend changes the political map and the media map, and it changes all equations," said George Stephanopoulos, the campaign's communications director. "You have to take seriously the sentiment that's propelling Perot."

And appropriate it, if necessary.

Clinton has long been deft at absorbing and regurgitating the best ideas of his political foes.

When Sen. Tom Harkin challenged his political legitimacy as a Democrat, he immediately began telling audiences of his grandfather's affection for Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

And shortly after Paul E. Tsongas, the former Massachusetts senator who preached on fiscal scarifice, dropped out of the race, Clinton, too, began polishing his campaign message into its current theme of balancing opportunity with responsibility.

"People have to be able to say, 'If Bill Clinton's president, I believe strongly things will change,'" said John Sasso, who helped run Michael S. Dukakis's 1988 campaign and is now advising Clinton as well. "I believe they're gettng there, but they're not there yet."

Clinton's advisers hope that his staying on the sidelines will be justified by Perot's hurting President Bush substantially, luring away Republican supporters who would never have voted for Clinton but might grudgingly have cast a vote for the incumbent President.

The polls do not yet support that notion, but there is another part of the Clinton sidelines strategy. Perot, they believe, will suffer under the harsh light of scrutiny of the same type that Clinton has received on the national stage.

"I always viewed presidential politics as a kind of pole vaulting exercise, in that each time you clear the bar, the bar gets raised," said David Axelrod, the Chicago political consultant who worked for Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois in 1988 and is now informally advising the Clinton campaign. "It's going to become increasingly difficult for Perot as the standards become more exacting."

MISSING: Corporations cautioned by mystery

(From 1A)

Exxon's explorations and production outside North America.

A group called the Rainbow Warriors contacted the company and told it to "have a lot of money ready," but it offered no proof it had Reso. No one had ever heard of the group before.

So where is Reso? Was it an abduction by eco-terrorists? Or was it a voluntary disappearance? Amnesia? Illness?

Foul play is more likely in such places as Colombia, Peru, Brazil, Pakistan, India or the Philippines — not the exclusive, manicured suburbs of northern New Jersey.

A 10-year-old study done for the Conference Board, a New York-based research group, noted that 55 percent of the 567 Americans kidnapped overseas between 1970 and 1978 were business executives.

But in this country, Ackerman said domestic nabbings are "almost negligible." Patrick McGuire, who did the study for the Conference Board, estimates there are less than a dozen per year.

"The number of times a high profile executive is actually kidnapped for ransom in the United States is extremely low. Kidnapping is one of least successful crimes you can commit," McGuire said. "Executives have more to fear from dissident stockholders."

Alan Bell, a former commando in the British Royal Marines and manager of Intercon Security Ltd. in Toronto, warns executives to take extra care driving to work, parking their cars and booking airline tickets and hotels.

Even if the incidence is low, corporate bigwigs remain targets for crusaders, criminals or crazies looking to making a fast buck or broadcast a statement.

"It's a subject no one wants to talk about," Bell said. "You won't find any facts or figures. No one will produce statistics. No one is going to admit if it happens because they don't want bad publicity and they don't want to give people ideas on how to make big money very quickly.

"It happens more frequently than it surfaces in the media, though. A lot of this work is done behind the scenes," Bell added.

Most corporations have insurance policies that pay ransom if an executive is kidnapped, or security policies to prevent kidnapping, said Terry Van Gilder, executive vice president of the insurance provider Chubb & Son Inc.

"It is certainly safe to say those corporations have security directors who pay a lot of attention to incidents like (Reso's)," Van Gilder said.

Nothing has solved the Reso mystery.

Not a nationwide manhunt for what authorities officially classify as a missing person case.

Not three appeals from his wife, Patricia, through the media, including a spot on TV's "Unsolved Mysteries."

Not a reward offered by Exxon, where employees are wearing blue ribbons for Reso.

Not the prayers said at Reso's Resurrection Roman Catholic Church.

On April 29, Reso awoke at 6:30 a.m., showered, dressed and had breakfast. His wife of 37 years accompanied him to the door and said good-bye at 7:30 for what should have been a 15-minute drive to his office in Florham Park.

A neighbor whose husband also works at Exxon noticed Reso's car, still on the three acres of ground at the end of a bucolic cul de sac where his $680,000 French colonial home is located.

Mrs. Reso told The Star-Ledger of Newark, N.J., that she found the car with the engine running, the doors closed, and his overcoat and briefcase inside. There was no sign of a struggle.

Police in helicopters, on horseback and on foot searched the area, aided by a police dog named Buffy.

A missing person bulletin was circulated with a picture and description of a man 5-foot-10, 180 pounds, with blue eyes and gray hair with red highlights.

"Nobody's amply demonstrated they have him in captivity — no picture, no tape, no proof," said W. Michael Murphy Jr., the Morris County prosecutor who is leading a 50-member task force augmented by the FBI.

"It's important for us to know he's in someone's hands and he's well," Murphy said. "That's if he indeed was abducted. Voluntarily absenting oneself from home home, family and job is something we have to consider."

Mrs. Reso's last public appeal was May 15 after a one-page note was found taped to a light pole in the parking lot of the Rockaway Townsquare Mall.

"I am willing to do whatever is necessary to have him reunited with us," she said on television.

In the meantime, the case revolves on speculation and unanswered questions.

"At this point, it's almost as if it's suspended in mid-air," said Robert Kobetz, a crisis management consultant in Berryville, Va.

California: First in race tension, political indifference

By Jill Lawrence
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — Upstairs at the I. Magnin tea room, a model showed off a little black dress she said was "nicely priced" at $460. Downstairs, workers repaired damage inflicted by looters and rioters on the plush department store.

Los Angeles' nightmare of racial violence pointed up some of California's many profound problems. Yet it's still the kind of place where a restaurant describes its dress code as "upscale casual" and a Payless drug store in Beverly Hills boasts an espresso bar.

California is no New Hampshire. The presidential primary season has left that snowy, serious little state far behind for this oversized, beach-rimmed testing ground for national problems and political trends.

Everything seems to start sooner and loom larger in California.

It was a leader in the 1980s tax-cutting craze that some hold responsible for the country's plague of budget deficits. Its transportation gridlock is unmatched; air quality officials say idling vehicles use up one of every four gallons of gas in the Los Angeles area.

The state is polluted, recession-battered and strapped for cash, yet remains a magnet for immigrants. With its droughts, agribusiness and water-subsidy conflicts, it's a harbinger of resource struggles to come.

And now, after the Los Angeles riots, its biggest city is viewed as a cautionary cauldron of crime, street gangs and roiling racial tensions.

Politics here can be extreme. The gamut runs from the religious right in Orange County to environmentalist "greens" and the active gay community in San Francisco.

Even statistics here can be extreme. California has 30 million people, more than 22 other states combined. Its economy is the eighth-largest in the world.

Beyond the auto-choked sun culture of Los Angeles are the vegetable farms of the San Joaquin Valley, the deserts and Mexican border towns of southeastern California, and the lush forests and windy seasides of the north, all areas where concerns are less about style and more about land.

"California is like a nation of its own," says James Dignan, chairman of the state Republican party. "People outside the state look at California as if it's part of the national climate. But California has its own climate."

Despite the pockets of political activism, and presidential and two Senate seat primaries June 2, that climate is relatively apolitical.

Baker moves to bring world pressure on Serbia

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Secretary of State James Baker III moved on Sunday to orchestrate world pressure on Serbia to halt its aggression against neighbors in the Balkans. He left the door open to military force if other means failed.

"I think" the use of force "is obviously a very hypothetical question at this point," Baker said as he and other U.S. officials sketched out a strategy reminiscent of the pressure that led to war against Iraq when economic and political sanctions failed to liberate Kuwait.

At two news conferences, Baker said "there will be no unilateral use of U.S. force." But he dodged three questions on whether the United States would be willing, as a last resort, to take part in a U.N. or other multinational military campaign to end the bloodshed in Bosnia-Herzegovina, open Sarajevo airport to relief shipments and rescue the besieged mostly Muslim community from Serbian militia.

"The ethnic purification of certain portions of Bosnia-Herzegovina are all too reminiscent of something we sat back and witnessed a number of years ago," Baker said in apparent reference to American and European passivity at the onset of Naziism over a half-century ago. Baker said 35,000 diabetics have no insulin, 6,000 women and babies are without infant formula or milk, and there were now reports of deaths from starvation.

According to the Bosnia government, he said, 2,225 people have been killed and more than 2,500 are missing.

"The message to the world community should be that anyone who is looking for reasons not to act or arguing somehow that action in the face of this kind of a nightmare is not warranted at this time . . . are on the wrong wavelength," Baker said.

The Bush administration is moving on two fronts, prodding the 12-nation European Community to impose economic, diplomatic and political penalties on the Serbia-Montenegro federation that claims to succeed Yugoslavia and also lobbying at the United Nations.

Baker said the United States was discussing with other nations in New York the possibility of action aginst Serbia under Chapter 7 of the U.N. charter.

It empowers the Security Council to maintain peace and security and to take a variety of actions to that end.

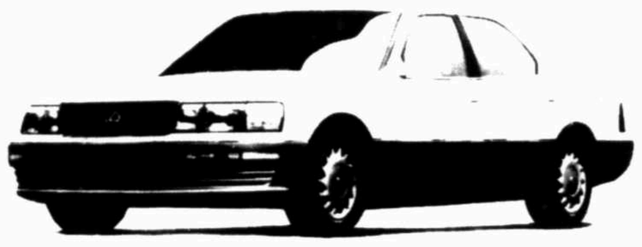

Chapter 7 was invoked two years ago as a basis for using force against Iraq to reverse its invasion of Kuwait. A senior U.S. official, in a telephone interview, said the United States had approached other members of the 15-nation Council about a range of political, diplomatic and economic steps against Serbia.

He said American diplomats were not proposing military force at this stage. He said their focus was on such measures as a trade embargo of Serbia, including a suspension of oil deliveries, and a withdrawal of diplomats from Belgrade.

The new German foreign minister, Klaus Kinkel, emphatically endorsed Baker's campaign.

Thais object to clemency for ousted prime minister

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Embattled Prime Minister Suchinda Kraprayoon resigned Sunday, and there were immediate demands that he be punished for crushing pro-democracy protests last week.

Opposition lawmakers promised to challenge a clemency decree absolving Suchinda and his military backers, and demonstrations in front of Parliament were planned.

After weeks of protests spread to all levels of society, Suchinda announced on state-run television Sunday that he was resigning.

But popular satisfaction was tempered with bitterness in a country that has seen a humbled military rise once again to oust civilian leaders.

"If he can just get away after the massacre ... other military leaders will repeat such bloody events," said Chianthana Techathanaphong, 26, a university student.

At least 48 people died and hundreds were injured in four days of street clashes between troops and protesters in downtown Bangkok.

The bloody upheaval was a grim reminder of a 1973 student-led revolution that toppled three strongmen. Less than two years after that uprising, however, the military was back in power following a coup against a liberal, civilian government.

The 58-year-old Suchinda, a former army chief, led the February 1991 military coup that toppled an elected government. He was named prime minister on April 7 by a coalition of pro-military parties that had won a parliamentary majority in March.

The appointment of a non-elected official outraged civilians who resented the military's 60-year dominance of Thai politics.

It was unclear who would replace Suchinda, although it was almost certain to be someone from the ruling government coalition. One likely candidate was Somboon Rahong, leader of the Chat Thai Party, the second-largest coalition member.

Like Suchinda, the 60-year-old former air force pilot is from the military, but he is an elected member of Parliament.

Suchinda's resignation became almost inevitable when his support from the goverment and military began eroding and backers began distancing themselves from a man widely reviled as an "animal" and a "dog."

One day before he stepped down, Suchinda issued a decree granting clemency to everyone involved in the demonstrations.

Bush orders U.S. ships to pick up refugees, return them to Haiti

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (AP) — Citing "a dangerous and unmanageable situation," President Bush on Sunday authorized the Coast Guard to return directly home all Haitians picked up at sea as they flee their beleaguered country.

The action, contained in an executive order, reflects an intensifying effort to grapple with the Haitian refugee problem since the September ouster of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide by a military coup.

Bush's executive order authorized the Coast Guard to stop and board refugee ships and to return the ship and its passengers to the country from which it came, or to another country.

Refugee centers at the Guantanamo Bay Naval Base in Cuba are filled to capacity with more than 12,000 Haitians. The White House said Bush's action would allow "continued orderly processing of more than 12,000 Haitians presently at Guantanamo.

Last week, the administration announced the Coast Guard would no longer pick up all the Haitians fleeing their country by sea.

The White House said the latest move "follows a large surge in Haitian boat people seeking to enter the United States and is necessary to protect the lives of the Haitians, whose boats are not equipped for the 600-mile journey.

Since last September's coup, the Coast Guard has picked up over 34,000 Haitian refugees. About 8,000 have been found to have grounds for asylum. An additional 14,000 have been repatriated.

"The large number of Haitian migrants has led to a dangerous and unmanageable situation," the statement said. It was released here as Bush was wrapping up a four-day stay at his oceanfront home.

Advocates for the Haitians were outraged.

"I think it's horrendous," said Cheryl Little, an attorney and Haitian advocate. "It's going to be impossible for the Haitians now to be fairly processed."

Little and Ira Kurzban, a veteran Miami attorney and Haitian advocate, said the executive order appears to violate international rules on refugees.

Kurzban said a 1967 international protocol signed by the United States prohibits returning refugees to a nation where it's known they will be persecuted. Kurzban said Haitians who go to the U.S. embassy in Port-au-Prince, as suggested in the statement, expose themselves to danger.

Kurzban said he will be researching possible legal challenges to the Bush order.

The executive order "shows the failure of the Bush administration to deal with the underlying problem, which is restoration of democracy," Kurzban said.

White House spokeswoman Judy Smith said the Coast Guard would either escort the boats back to Haiti or would carry people from the ones deemed unseaworthy to make the journey.

She said, however, that U.S. immigration officers on the Coast Guard boats would still have flexibility to determine if any refugees had legitimate asylum claims and would be in danger of returning to Haiti.

Except for those cases, Haitians will have to press their asylum cases at the U.S. Embassy in Haiti, she said.

U.S. officials believed that picking up the Haitians at sea and bringing them to Guantanamo Bay was encouraging more of them to flee their poverty-wracked homeland.

Under the policy announced last week, the Coast Guard was to urge the boats to return to Haiti and to leave those with food supplies and seaworthiness to try to make it to Florida.

Food crises grow worse for Africa

By Greg Myre
Associated Press writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — In Somalia, ravaged by war, skeletal children fight for grains of rice spilling from a truck. Women dig for ants with sticks in the parched soil of Zimbabwe.

From the arid, sun-baked mesas of Ethiopia to teeming refugee centers in Malawi and Mozambique, millions of people are totally dependent on donated food.

Why can't Africa feed itself? When most of its nations gained independence in the early 1960s, the continent was self-sufficient in food. Three decades later, war, drought, overpopulation, a collapsing environment and disastrous policies have created a permanent crisis.

"African governments have neglected agriculture for years and one sees the results now," said Erich Leistner, director of the Africa Institute, a private research group in South Africa. "I really think it's going to get even worse."

The Ethiopian famine of the mid-1980s claimed a million lives. Today, an estimated 20 million people are at risk of starvation in Ethiopia, Somalia and Sudan in the Horn of Africa, the most famine-plagued part of the globe.

Even the strongest agricultural nations live from crop to crop. When the rains did not come to southern Africa this year, all 11 countries had to import grain — including South Africa and Zimbabwe, fertile lands that traditionally have surpluses.

Thirty million people are at risk of starvation in southern Africa, according to the U.S. Agency for International Development.

The region is far more developed than the Horn of Africa and is expected to escape widespread famine, but hunger-related deaths have been reported in Zimbabwe and Mozambique.

Civil wars have caused the greatest privations and no country has suffered more than Somalia, where an estimated 100 people, most of them children, die of starvation every day.

Many African conflicts have lasted a decade or more, destroying farms and roads. Peasants flee to cities for safety, where they depend on aid.

War dead didn't give lives in vain

Ernest Hemingway, who gained a degree of fame covering World War I and the Spanish Civil War during the first half of the 20th century, wrote of that cataclysmic state, "Never think that war, no matter how necessary, nor how justified, is not a crime."

Hemingway knew his subject well. He had witnessed its glory and its horrors. And in every instance he judged it a crime.

War is a crime, but it also can be necessary and justifiable. And it is at those times that the only redeeming value of battle comes forth, that being in how it brings forth the best qualities of man.

John Foster Dulles, an American diplomat who is remembered as the primary author of the Japanese peace treaty following World War II, once noted, "The world will never have lasting peace so long as men reserve for war the finest human qualities."

War calls forth man's best qualities because it engulfs him in a situation in which he is no longer in control of his own destiny, and in so doing it throws him back on his own best basic instincts. So in time of war we witness man giving his life for his fellow man, his country, his people.

A nation that calls its people forth to fight for its glory must honor its war dead as is being done today in solemn ceremonies around the country. Even that act does not make war "right" — war is a plague on mankind. But those who died on the fields of battle must be honored because they made the ultimate sacrifice in the name of their flag, their nation, their people. To not honor them would be to disavow the importance of this nation and its people.

We must continue to say in today's Memorial Day observance that those who have fallen in this country's wars did not die in vain and will not be forgotten.

JACK ANDERSON

Customs boss eats well as others gag

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Customs Service has paid more than $70,000 over the last year for the care and feeding of its commissioner, Carol Hallett. It includes a new executive kitchen and dining room, two cooks, "daily menu planning," and "nutrition and sanitation standards."

Anderson

While Hallett defends these and other benefits as "a thousand percent legitimate," some officials question the expenditures at a time when the agency's aviation office in Houston was cited by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration for raw sewage pools, hazardous chemical leaks and rodent sightings.

Internal agency documents we have reviewed detail the tale of two offices through 1991. Ten months of service provided by two cooks for Hallett's Washington office ran more than $38,000, and the final tally for Hallett's remodeled kitchen and 30-seat executive dining room totaled $35,648.

Then there is the Customs Houston aviation branch. Conditions that employees there had been forced to undergo for seven months were spelled out in an April 1991 Customs memo seen by our associate Dean Boyd. The memo reads:

"... Rainy conditions (have) intensified the problem by causing the septic tanks to back up, causing raw sewage to surface ... as these tanks are located next to the air conditioning and heating equipment, every time the sewage backs up, the smell is sent throughout the hangar. ... On Feb. 21, 1991, the sewage smell was so bad that all Branch employees had to sit in the conference room while all doors and windows were opened in an attempt to air out the facility."

On April 1, 1991, OSHA cited numerous violations at the Houston air branch, including sewage backup in shower stalls and exposure to "vermin such as, but not limited to, mice."

Hallett's kitchen remodeling isn't the first time she has rankled the rank-and-file in Customs. During her tenure as ambassador to the Bahamas from 1986-89, internal documents show that the Customs office in Miami loaned Hallett a 27-foot boat, a Cessna 206 aircraft and a 1988 Chrysler Fifth Avenue, each for use at her own discretion.

Hallett maintains that such an arrangement was warranted by her prominent role in assisting Customs officials in cracking down on Bahamian drug trafficking. The plane, boat and car were all removed from the Bahamas upon her departure. A subsequent investigation by the State Department confirmed the situation but made no determination as to whether there was any misuse of government property. The results were passed on to the Treasury Department, which, according to Hallett, found the arrangement to be perfectly legitimate.

An October 1990, State Department investigation found that the operational and maintenance cost of the boat and the plane had been picked up by Customs and that the State Department footed the bill for the car. Although no records exist for Hallett's use of the car, the few flight records we were provided indicate that Hallett, a certified pilot, flew the plane at least 17 hours at a cost of some $150 per hour. Hallett says it was for official business.

Recognition earned

President Bush's recognition of Bobby J. Trimble of Midland as the 755th Daily Point of Light for the nation on April 24 illuminates the work of a dedicated individual committed to making sure that everyone in his community has a decent place to live.

When Trimble founded "Christmas in April," he mobilized a Sunday School class to help elderly widows maintain their homes. Under Trimble's guidance, "Christmas in April" has grown to include 3,000 volunteers who repair over 250 homes each year. His commitment led to a nationwide expansion of "Christmas in April" chapters at 210 cities in 28 states.

The phenomenal success of "Christmas in April" in Midland and throughout the country is a dramatic reminder of the power that each individual citizen has to make a difference.

The commitment of the volunteers of "Christmas in April" translates to a better nation for all of us and embodies the president's call that "from now on in America, any definition of a successful life must include serving others."

I am pleased to join your proud community in saluting Bobby J. Trimble, Midland's own dazzling "point of light."

Program is great

As an advocate for healthy sexuality education for children, I must say that the recent PBS program, "What Kids Want to Know About Sex and Growing Up," was wonderful! This kind of information is vital if we want to help our children and teens grow up as healthy, responsible adults.

I would like to see such information available to all children in our public schools, churches, and most importantly, our families. I am disgusted with attitudes of those who would rather deny this information to our children, thinking if we don't talk about it, it will go away. On the contrary; our refusal to be open and honest with our children about sexuality is to blame for the epidemic of adolescent pregnancy, sexually-transmitted disease and HIV infection among our young population today.

We must stop the ignorance.

Criminals caused riot

The word from the White House is that the what-ever-it-was in L.A. was the result of the failure of the welfare programs of the 1960's and 1970's. Baloney.

What it was in L.A. was not caused by hate, revenge or racial conflict. It was caused by criminals — active and latent criminals.

The streets of L.A. had been made unsafe by armed criminal gangs whose members numbered in the thousands long before the King verdict. These gangs are the active criminals. Every ethnic group has a few bad apples, be they white, black, Asian or Hispanic, etc. These bad apples are the latent criminals whose evil character is unmasked when an incident occurs that sparks a riot. They follow the instigators and are the looters, the trashers, the ones who assualt and maim and kill their own kind and join in the "fun."

Criminal activity is growing, thanks in part to certain defense lawyers, some judges and the "ban the death penalty" activists.

The police are the only bulwark the people have against these criminal enemies. And the only mediator is a sick criminal justice system. Now George Bush wants to spend millions for welfare programs to help these miscreants. Oh yeah! Remember the multimillion dollar housing project for the poor and the homeless the government built in St. Louis. Well, they moved in and trashed the joint.

George likes to spend money. Well, he best spend some of it on our municipal soldiers — the police — to fight the criminal enemy. And the people, especially in large cities had better begin supporting our police, the minorities in particular who suffer more from their own kind than from others, lest the criminal population overrun us.

CHARLEY REESE

Anti-pornographers ignore real censorship

What people do in their private affairs, as long as they don't use force or molest children, is none of our business. People enjoy pretending to be what they are not.

Reese

Personally, I don't see much difference in men who are not women wearing women's clothes, or vice versa, and men who aren't cowboys wearing cowboy clothes. I've never been tempted to buy a dress but I have come close to buying a cowboy hat. But I always remind myself that it is absurd to buy a hat designed to keep sun and rain off your head when I spend all day in an office. So I don't buy one. But if other people want to wear sombreros, what business is it of ours?

One of the absurdities of our society is that so many people expend so much energy worrying about other people's private business they don't have energy left to worry about public business.

Pornographers, for example, exploit sex for commercial purposes — but then so do a lot of advertising agencies, clothing and cosmetic manufacturers, TV and movie producers, book publishers, and magazine and newspaper editors, including some feminists. When it comes to making a buck with a body you need a lot of fingers if you're into pointing them. We're talking degrees of sleaze.

But if we mobilized a strike force of 10,000 law enforcement officers and prosecutors, spent $5 billion, and drove pornography underground (that's the choice — above or below the counter), what tangible public good would we accomplish? Would more people find jobs? Would the banking business suddenly become sound? Would the federal deficit disappear? Would the infrastructure of our cities be suddenly resurrected? No. We'd probably be stuck with a permanent anti-pornography bureaucracy that would pursue an endless war against pictures of naked people. Would those who ordinarily buy pornography be changed? I doubt it. In today's America, the pornographer faces fierce competition for the titillation and prurient interest dollar.

But people who want to stamp out pornography are not the only ones who have a problem with perspective. There are free speech fanatics who want to protect pornography — but have no interest at all in the government's massive censorship of information about public affairs.

The U.S. government is increasingly saying to the American people, including their elected representatives in Congress: you go to hell; this information is classified. You can't see it. How can one constitutional office, the presidency, tell another coequal constitutional office, the Congress, that it has no right to information about affairs the Congress funded? Whatever is done is done by people in jobs authorized by Congress with monies appropriated by Congress.

Government files hidden behind security classifications may be duller than even an R-rated video but it is far more important, from the standpoint of human liberty, to keep government open and accountable to the people.

Murder and theft and war by deception, committed by public officials with public means in secrecy, constitute true obscenity and represent a real threat to people. Pornography is a marginal issue, a private affair. Better to concentrate on helping children develop in social, physical and psychological good health than to send cops chasing after lonely old men in seedy stores and movie houses. Or worse, play the silly game of paste the pasty on the nipple of some dancer.

In the meantime, true freedom envisioned by our forefathers goes down the drain, the public is ripped off, and the government, which is supposed to be our servant, becomes our master.

Let's mind, for a change, our public business and leave people's private lives to themselves.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Young, unmarried mothers are major urban woe

Somebody who watches a lot more network television than I do was telling me about what was going on in a network sitcom, "Murphy Brown."

Grizzard

Candace Bergen, I learned, plays the title role in the show, which involves a television news staff.

Wasn't there a popular program several years ago about a television news staff as well?

I seemed to recall Mrs. Dick Van Dyke played in it, but I could be wrong. I gave up most network TV when I first got cable and could watch World War II documentaries on A&E. The good guys always win in those.

Anyway, my friend said to me, "Murphy Brown is pregnant on the show."

"Oh yeah. Who's her husband?" I asked.

"She doesn't have one."

"Wait a minute," I said. "You mean a clean-cut lady like Candace Bergen is going to have an illegitimate child on network television?"

"Today's modern woman," my friend went on, "doesn't always need a husband if she wants to have a baby. Murphy Brown is an independent woman of the '90s. If she wants to have an illegitimate child that's her business."

I guess I got told.

I was just under the impression that no matter how liberated women had become, no matter how many of yesterday's taboos have been forgotten, it was still considered unacceptable behavior to have an out of wedlock child.

Wrong again.

"It happens in the entertainment business all the time," my friend explained.

A long time ago, the worst possible thing that could happen to a female was to become pregnant and not have a husband.

You young people out there will get a kick out of this:

There was something called a "shotgun wedding" in those days.

That was when an unmarried girl became pregnant and pointed a finger at whom she contended was the father.

Her father would then explain to the young man so fingered he was, indeed, going to marry his daughter. If he balked in any way; the father of the bride would hold a shotgun upon his future son-in-law, if necessary, during the ensuing ceremony.

A lot of men in those days who impregnated women, believe it or not, didn't have to be threatened to marry the mother of their baby.

It was considered the right and manly thing to do. I guess that's how backwards we were in those days.

We had this stupid thing around "honor."

I suppose it really would be an inconvenience to some of today's women to have a husband around along with the baby.

Murphy Brown is a very busy person with her career. She can put her baby in day care, or hire a full-time nanny on her salary, but the father of the child would just get in the way and might even ask her to do something wifely occasionally — like cook a meal, the Lord forbid.

Sociologists say one reason there are so many problems in poor, urban areas is that a lot of poor, young girls are having illegitimate children and the family structure has gone to hell.

What has any of that got to do with the fact that the fictional character Murphy Brown got knocked up on network television with no ring on her finger?

You tell me.

TARGET: Extended-day proposal sparks districtwide discussion

(From 1A)

tend the school day about 30 minutes — about five minutes per class period at the high-school level.

The extended schedule was presented to school-board trustees at a recent meeting.

Joseph Baressi Jr., superintendent of MISD, proposed giving teachers a 5 percent raise to teach an additional 30 minutes per day.

"We need a 5 percent raise whether we extend the day or not," said Steve Buck, Lee High School coach and teacher, and president of the Midland Federation of Teachers.

Buck and several other teachers said extending the day would tire students, which could result in discipline problems.

"I'm amazed at how many teachers are really concerned that this is going to hamper learning. This proposal just isn't ready," Buck said.

Sherrilyn Blase, another teacher at Lee High, placed a form in the school office for teachers to sign several weeks ago.

"It was for them to say whether or not they would be in favor of an extended school day. They were overwhelmingly not in favor," Ms. Blase said. The teacher said she was surprised when a student handed her a petition after school recently.

"He had collected more than 150 student names on the petition, all against the extended day," she said.

Ms. Blase said she brought the student petition and teachers' signatures to the board meeting to ask that options to improve student performance — other than the extended day — be considered.

"We want to consider things which will get us better results than putting a burden on those involved in extracurricular activities," she said. "We should also look at attendance averages. There is a direct correlation to class attendance and test scores. We are averaging something like 92 percent attendance at the high-school level."

"If we don't have students in school, we can't teach them," she said.

At a recent school-board meeting, junior high school teacher Jo Hayes said that students get restless right before lunch and at the end of the day.

Betty Forbes, a third-grade teacher at Travis Elementary School, said that speaking as a parent, the logistics of an extended day weren't worked out.

"Day cares open at 7:30 a.m.," she said. "With the proposed schedule, I would have to get my child at a day care at 7:30 and be in my classroom at 7:40. How am I going to do that? I'm a teacher, but I'm a mom, too."

School-board trustees said the proposal to extend the day needs further study, but so far has resulted in being an ice breaker to discussing student performance.

"Now, I am just listening to options," said school-board trustee Gary Willis. "While extending the day sounds great at first brush, it essentially tacks on 30 minutes when kids are most tired.

"I am more concerned with the quality of instruction time between teachers and students during the school day we already have. I am listening to campus administrators and teachers — the ones who are out there every day — tell me what they think we need to do to increase quality time."

Buck suggested teachers be given incentives to further their education during the summer.

"Teacher preparation and class size are a couple of the things we should look at," the educator said. "There is no incentive right now for teachers to improve their skills during the summer. Most teachers flat cannot afford to not work another job during the summer. There is no incentive to go back and get a master's (degree) when you are living from check to check and trying to raise a family."

Buck said the extended-day proposal, which was tabled by board trustees, "opened up a whole window of discussion."

"The board did the exact thing they should do. They tabled this. It wasn't ready," he said. "If 30 minutes is so vital to learning, maybe we ought to look at time spent on the buses."

Ms. Blase said a recent report from Harvard University directly related class size and teacher experience to test scores.

Trustee Willis said, "Just adding minutes to the end of the day is chasing the wind. Now, if those minutes are going to improve the quality of instruction, that is fine with me."

Assistant superintendent Denton designed the extended-day proposal with the aid of school principals.

"It was presented as a no-cost administrative plan," he said. "We are mandated to come up with a district improvement plan. Look how far we are behind state standards. A lot of kids are not performing where we want them to perform, and we're about kids."

Denton said the administration is continuing to study the proposals and teachers are now being included in committee meetings.

"We have to have more quality time between the teachers and the kids," he said. "If more time doesn't make any difference. Then does no time make any difference?"

MARKS: School rewrites its 'vision' science experiments.

The students switched from one activity to another from 3:30-5 p.m. in Midland Independent School District's first experiment with extending the school day to accelerate learning.

"We knew that the program had to be fun, exciting and stimulating to keep children here longer. So we have putt-putt (golf), horseshoes and dancing included in the physical education component," said South principal Retha Rae Wright.

South's program — which serves pupils in first through third grade — was designed as a Chapter One improvement plan to bring up students' test scores.

South has a very high percentage of pupils considered "at risk." More than 70 percent of the students are considered economically disadvantaged and have qualified to receive free or reduced lunches.

The extended day begins with a 15-minute snack time, followed by three 45-minute academic sessions. Class components include theater arts, science, computers and emphasis on reading and critical thinking skills.

"We have noted significant improvement — about an average 30 percent gain in post tests," said South Principal Retha Rae Wright. She said that pre-tests and post-tests — from the Houghton-Mifflin Reading Program — were given to all pupils in first, second and third grades to measure the effectiveness of the program.

"We also mixed the children from all grades together to promote vocabulary and language development," Ms. Wright said.

Teachers in the program said they were "tickled" to see some of the youngsters on stage hamming it up in "Caps for Sale."

"Some of these students were pretty passive at the beginning of the semester. Now they are a lot more vocal and they have matured. They are not pulling back," said Adelita Carrasco, South administrative intern.

Although teachers and parents can see the gains in the students, almost half of pupils have dropped out of the program.

The program began with about 100 students and peaked at 160 in January. Now, there are about 95 enrolled.

"Last month students began dropping out for baseball, t-ball and soccer," Ms. Wright said. "We didn't think of after-school sports as an issue when we started. We had no road map."

About 20 students in the program moved out of the school area. Parents of the other students pulled from extended day activities cited after-school sports as a reason for quitting the program. Others complained that staying in school until 5 p.m. was too long for first graders.

Nonetheless, other parents surveyed said they want to keep the program as it is.

"We have considered moving the physical education component to the last period for students who need to leave early," Ms. Wright said. "We considered offering the extended day for only a few days a week, but parents have indicated that they don't want a shorter day or a shorter week."

Ms. Wright said the school's "vision" is being rewritten. "Our teachers are committed to this. They helped develop the curriculum. And our students are doing well. They will be ready for the next grade. We have seen very positive results and it's been a good experience."

The principal said the program will be considered for next year. "So many of our kids come to us with so few experiences that other kids get," she said, noting that pupils in the theater arts program not only wrote the script for "Caps for Sale," they made costumes and props, and toured local theaters.

"We supply experiences," Ms. Wright said. "The whole point is to help the students understand what they are reading. It develops their critical thinking skills. Research shows these children at risk don't come with experiences or readiness. They need more time. And in this program — we provide it for them."

Linda Ortiz, who had a daughter in South's extended-day program, (the program ended Friday) said she initially was concerned that her daughter would get tired before 5 p.m. "It was great for me since I am a working mother and don't have time to expose her to all of the things she did — like going bowling or on field trips. My daughter was adamant about not missing a single day because of the activities planned."

Ms. Ortiz said the program broke the daily monotony of being in school. "It broke out of the monotony of 'Let's get out the books and get out the pencils.' It wasn't like that at all. It made learning fun," she said.

The mother said she knew some parents "pulled their kids from the program for sports."

"I won't say the program will work for everyone, but it has increased my daughter's awareness about a lot of things and it gave her experiences she wouldn't have gotten. She is surprising me with things she says on a daily basis," she said.

"The school really went out on a limb with this program and the teachers really put a lot into it. We liked it real well."

Correction

In Sunday's edition, several paragraphs of the story entitled, "TAAS scores test schools" were rearranged causing the meaning to be confused.

It should have read:

The first year TAAS was administered, the passing standard required answering 60 percent of the objectives correctly. This year, the passing standard was raised to 70 percent. In both years the test was given to students in odd-numbered grades — third, fifth, seventh, ninth and 11th. In 1992-'93, the test will be given to students in fourth, eighth, 10th, 11th and 12th grades.

"I'm very critical of changing the test every year and changing the kids who take it," said Bill Denton, MISD assistant superintendent.

"The idea is to make it difficult for us to teach the test," Denton said. "It's like being at a carnival shooting gallery and blindfolded. Then you are told: 'Take your best shot. Oh, sorry you missed. It was too low and to the left. Don't worry, you are going to get another shot, but you are still going to be blindfolded and we are going to move the target.' "

"This is a tougher test," Cummins said. "And students are waiting until the last minute and not preparing themselves for it."

Cummins said students other than seniors who failed the test this year will be offered opportunities next year to sign up for tutorials or remediation before or after school, during school time in certain classes, and at lunch.

"The test is a substantial challenge and everyone appears to be making a commitment to pass it," he said. "For students at the exit level, their high-school diplomas are at stake."

As the 1991-'92 school year draws to an close, teachers and administrators are scrambling to come up with plans to tackle the TAAS next year.

One of those plans is to extend the school day by about 30 minutes, or five minutes per classtime at the high-school level.

Teachers and students alike decried the logistics of implementing that plan and sent administrators back to the drawing board.

Other options that have been put on the table to improve test scores include encouraging after-school study time, parental involvement and bolstering self-esteem of students who are experiencing failure.

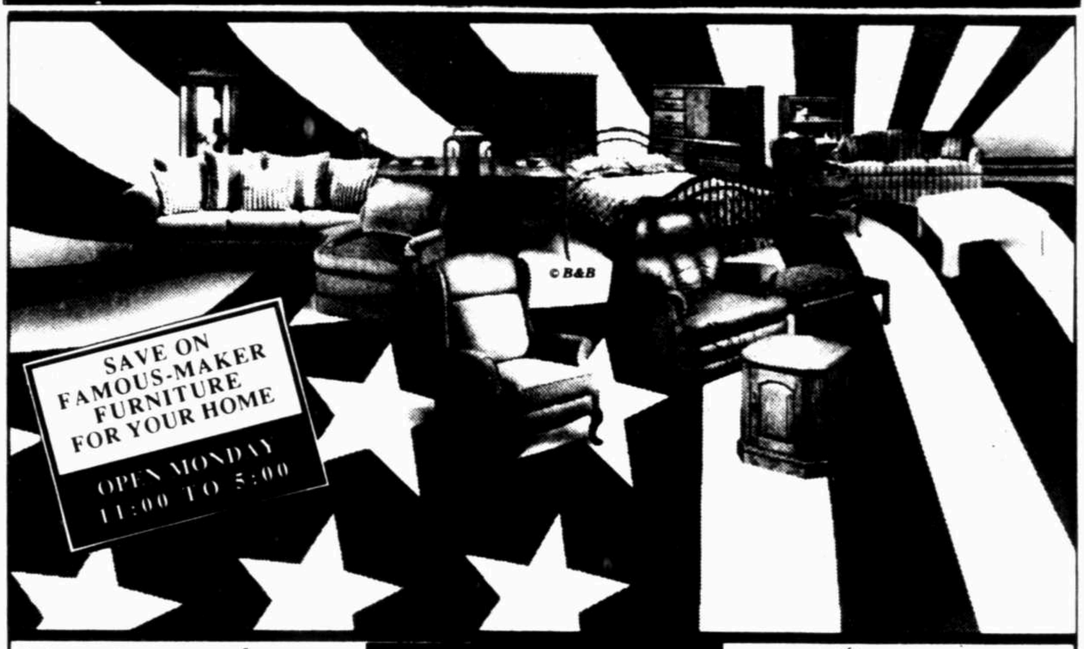

While educators and administrators say there is no clear answer to improving test scores, everyone agrees that scores need to be raised.

"Only one of three students passed this test at the seventh-grade level. If what we've been doing has evidenced these scores, then we can't keep doing business as usual," Cummins said.

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the confusion.

Man sues Saudis for compensation in alleged torture

WASHINGTON (AP) — American Scott Nelson says he was jailed, tortured and permanently disabled by Saudi authorities because he complained about safety and health hazards at the Saudi hospital where he worked.

He's now suing the Saudis for compensation. But the U.S. government is siding with Riyadh.

Nelson's case could open a Pandora's box, the U.S. Justice Department said in papers filed last month in a federal appeals court.

"If police activities of foreign states are ... questioned and punished in United States courts, it is likely that the law enforcement conduct of the United States will also be called into account in foreign courts," the government said.

The Saudi embassy in Washington said Nelson's claims of mistreatment and torture during 39 days of incarceration in 1984 are groundless.

NELSON IS invoking the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, the only means by which foreign governments may be sued in American courts. The act requires that the case be based on a foreign government's commercial activity in the United States.

Nelson was recruited by an American firm under contract with the Saudi government — The Hospital Corporation of America — as a monitoring systems engineer at the King Faisal Specialist Hospital.

A federal judge dismissed Nelson's complaint, saying the law didn't apply. But an appeals court panel reversed that, saying Nelson's detention and torture by Saudi government agents were "intertwined with the engineer's employment."

The U.S. government said the appeals court ruling was incorrect and asked the Supreme Court last week to review the matter.

"The U.S. government seems more interested in the Saudis than in protecting their own citizens," Leonard Garment, one of Nelson's lawyers, said Friday. "The shabby way our own government dealt with Mr. Nelson is in a sense even more difficult to accept than his torture at the hands of the Saudis."

■ More nation news/5,6B

The Saudi embassy said "hundreds of American citizens and companies" routinely seek redress through Saudi courts. However, "none of the individuals charging mistreatment" over the years "has chosen to take advantage of the Saudi legal system," the embassy said in a statement.

WHILE NELSON did file a claim in Saudi Arabia, he "failed to appear for his scheduled hearings on three occasions, in spite of receiving written assurances for safe passage" for himself and his legal counsel, the embassy added.

Nelson said he tried for four years to hire a Saudi lawyer from a list supplied by the U.S. State Department, but found no one willing to take the case.

To substantiate a charge of torture under Saudi law, at least two male Muslims must provide eyewitness testimony or the perpetrator must confess, Paul Schott Stevens, another of Nelson's lawyers, told a House subcommittee this month.

The maximum compensation for a fatal injury under Saudi law is the equivalent of 100 camels or $32,000, according to Stevens. Non-Muslims are entitled to only half the recovery of a Muslim, and women to only half that smaller amount, Stevens added.

Now 38, Nelson cannot walk without the aid of a cane because of injuries he says his Saudi jailers inflicted. He was forced repeatedly to do deep knee bends with a rod strapped behind his knees and then beaten for half an hour until he passed out, he alleges. He has had four operations on his knees.

When U.S. Embassy officers met with him while he was in captivity, he says they warned him that if he protested his alleged mistreatment, it could make matters worse for him. He was freed after the intervention of Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Rep. Larry Smith, D-Fla., who protested to the Saudi government.

NELSON WAS a construction engineer for Bechtel Construction in Prudhoe Bay, Alaska, and Indonesia before working at the Saudi hospital.

Nelson's superiors at the hospital praised him for his good work until he began complaining about hospital lines that provide oxygen and nitrous oxide to patients. He says he found evidence that the lines were connected to greased valves. The valves are supposed to be sterilized to avoid fire and contamination of patients.

After he took his complaints to a government commission investigating the hospital, Nelson's bosses pointed out to him that he had presented a false diploma from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology with his employment application, something they had known for some time. Each time he raised health and safety problems, hospital brass asked him about his phony MIT diploma, says Nelson, who spent only two years in college at Northeastern University.

WET WEEKEND

More than three and one-half inches of rain this since Friday washed out many holiday weekend plans for West Texas residents.

As of Sunday evening, the official rainfall total at the National Weather Service station at Midland International Airport since the storm began late Friday was 3.65 inches, bringing the total for the year to 9.90 inches – more than double the usual total through the end of May.

In addition, the deluge on Saturday established a new rainfall record for the date of 2.72 inches, eclipsing the record of 2.21 inches set five years ago on May 23, 1987.

The washout prompted the Midland Angels to set a pair of doubleheaders at the stadium today and tomorrow, with the first pitch each day set for 6 p.m.

Memorial Day services by Woods Lynch American Legion Post at Fairview Cemetery are scheduled to begin at 6:30 p.m. today.

Officer scoffs at convicted killer's threat

CLEVELAND (AP) — A woman's killer who mouthed an apparent death threat against a homicide detective in court is a coward who wouldn't dare confront a man, the officer said.

"He is in no position to make any threat like that," said Cleveland Detective Leo Allen. He was the target of the apparent threat mouthed Friday by Wiley Davis, 32, of Cleveland Heights.

A judge had just read the jury's verdict convicting Davis in the Nov. 26 downtown abduction and slaying of Amy Perkins, 32, of Parma. She was the wife of former WGAR radio personality David Perkins.

She was killed her last day at work in Cleveland. She had planned to move back to her native Texas, where her husband and others had bought a radio station in the Odessa-Midland area.

The jury on Friday is to decide whether to recommend the death penalty.

Working on homicide cases can bother an officer, Allen said. "These things work on you," he told The Plain Dealer in an interview published Sunday.

"Years and years of seeing these families destroyed by these animals, it works on you. I really think they ought to pull the switch on the electric chair every day."

Allen scoffed at the threat. "He was a big, tough guy with a little woman from Parma, but I've never known him to stand up to a man. He's a coward," Allen said.

Allen said he would testify at the sentencing phase of Davis' trial to call for the death penalty.

"Man, do I have something in store for him," Allen said, declining to elaborate. "We're only halfway home."

Davis was upset with a tongue-lashing he got from Allen last fall while being questioned by police. Davis called it disrespectful and asked for an apology from Allen, who promised to offer one in court.

Allen offered a sarcastic apology to the defendant before defense lawyers could object.

Davis responded after the verdict, mouthing a message to Allen that locked like "I'm going to kill you" to everyone who saw it.

"We're not intimidated by these punk criminals and all their idle threats," Allen said.

Harris County juries send 51 black murderers to death row

HOUSTON (AP) — Harris County juries have sent nearly twice the number of black inmates to death row as whites, accounting for 40 percent of all Texas black prisoners facing death by injection, the Houston Chronicle reported Sunday.

Harris County has sent 51 black murderers to death row, nearly four times as many as Dallas County, the Chronicle said.

Dallas County, has the second highest number of black inmates sent to death row, with a total of 14.

Since December 1982, Texas has executed 50 condemned inmates. That is more convicts sentenced to death than all of the 34 other states that impose capital punishment. Thirteen of the 50 men put to death in Texas were black.

Leigh Dingerson, executive director of the National Coalition to Abolish the Death Penalty, said the large percentage of blacks sent from Harris County is "not out of line with what we see across the country."

But she said she found the figures disturbing.

Diann Rust-Tierny, executive director of the American Civil Liberty Union's Capital Punishment Project, said it's difficult to analyze what might be happening in Harris County without having all the data, "but there is certainly enough there to raise some questions and take a closer look."

Tilton unveils plans for new church center

DALLAS (AP) — Television evangelist Robert Tilton unveiled plans Sunday for a new Word of Faith World Outreach Center to be built on a 56-acre tract across Interstate 35 from the ministry's existing facilities.

Giant screens were lowered behind Tilton at the end of his Sunday morning televised sermon. Video footage of the tract was shown as Tilton exulted over facilities proposed for the tract at the intersection of Interstate Highway 35 and LBJ Freeway in northwest Dallas.

The property, known now as the Columbia Center project, will be dominated by a 10-story office building, Tilton said.

A church-operated school, with full athletic facilities including a swimming pool and football field, will be built on one side of the office tower, Tilton said.

The other side will include a state-of-the-art garden mall complex with an auditorium and educational facilities, he said.

"We wanted to find a place we could put a steeple on the top of our church and paint it any color we want to, to light it if we want to. . . ."

The 56-acre tract, he said, "is all bought and paid for."

"People are going to ask what we're going to do with all this (where the church now is). We're going to sell it, and make a big profit on it," he said.

Tilton said the church began looking for a new location out of frustration. He said the city of Farmers Branch refused to give the church the few extra feet it needed to construct a new gymnasium or to build a track around the football stadium.

Father organ donor for his daughter

■ Doctors transplant part of Texas man's liver into his 10-month-old child.

Associated Press

HOUSTON — A 22-year-old Texas man was in good condition Sunday after donating part of his liver to his 10-month-old daughter in the city's first living donor liver transplant, officials from Hermann Hospital said.

In a 15-hour, two-step operation Friday, a medical team led by Dr. R. Patrick Wood, removed part of Victor Carranza's liver and transplanted it into his daughter, Brittny.

Eric Fritz, operations administrator at Hermann, said Sunday both Carranza and the baby were doing "as well as can be expected." The baby remained in pediatric intensive care unit, he said.

Wood, chief of liver transplantation at the University of Texas Medical School at Houston, said Saturday there is a 72-hour critical period to gauge the success of the surgery.

"I don't want to get my hopes too high," said Sylvia Carranza, 18, the child's mother. "I've seen other children undergo the transplants and seem fine. Then they have problems.

"I'll wait until I take her home."

The transplant done by Wood was not the first of its kind in the nation.

The groundwork for the surgery was laid at the University of Chicago where a 21-month-old Texas child, Alyssa Smith, received part of her mother Teresa's liver on Nov. 27, 1989.

Since then, surgeons there have performed about 40 such transplants with about an 85 percent survival rate, spokesman John Easton said.

Most children who need livers are "2 years old and 20 pounds," Woods said. "There are not many donors in that age group."

Until recently, he said he has solved that problem by using a small part of a liver taken from an adult or older child donor. About two-thirds of the 25 liver transplants Wood has performed have been this type. He said the living-donor procedure takes the technique one step further.

One advantage of the technique is that it "allows children to be transplanted before they get critically ill," Wood said.

The Carranzas discovered that their baby had a potentially fatal liver ailment less than month after her birth in Corpus Christi.

"I went home from the hospital thinking I had a perfect baby," Mrs. Carranza recalled.

But when she took the baby to the hospital with cold symptoms and congestion, physicians noticed Brittny's yellow color and performed several tests. They confirmed that the baby had biliary atresia, a condition in which the infant lacks ducts to drain bile and toxins from the liver.

Since then, the couple has provided much of the baby's medical care when she is home, including tube feedings and administering antibiotics in a tube inserted into a blood vessel.

Both parents were willing to donate a portion of their liver for the infant, but Victor had fewer health problems and was "a perfect match," Mrs. Carranza said.

During the operation, the surgeon removes a third to a fourth of the donor's liver. That portion of the liver contains all the blood vessels needed to ensure that the organ functions properly after transplant.

Once in the patient, the transplanted liver regenerates and grows until it can accomplish all the necessary functions. The donor's liver also quickly regenerates to normal size, physicians said.

Mrs. Carranza expects her husband to be out of the hospital in about a week, although he will not be completely recovered for six to 10 weeks. Brittny will be hospitalized for four to six weeks.

Father held in killing of man he believes molested his children

DALLAS (AP) — A 21-year-old Dallas father of four has been charged with murder in the shooting death of a relative the man believed molested his children, authorities said.

Rufus Lee Smith, 32, was fatally shot Friday night after the father accused Smith of molesting his children, ages 4 to 7. The name of the shooting suspect has been released by police. However, to protect the anonymity of the children, the father's name has been withheld by The Associated Press.

The father, charged with Smith's murder Saturday, was still being held Sunday morning at Lew Sterrett Justice Center on $75,000 bail.

Smith was shot during an argument at the suspect's home. Smith had been living with the family for about four months.

The children's mother called police at 11:10 p.m. Friday to report the shooting.

"I just wanted to scare him," the suspect told The Dallas Morning News in a telephone interview. "I didn't try to kill him. I was just worried about the kids."

Smith, the cousin of the children's mother, was transported to RHD Memorial Medical Center, where he later died.

DEAR ABBY

Sons and daughters of servicemen killed in Vietnam to meet

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: U.S. Navy Lt. John Calvin Crawford, stationed in Saigon with the Coastal Surveillance Force, was killed on March 10, 1967. Although there were conflicting reports of the circumstances surrounding his death, officially he was one of 24 passengers killed in a plane crash over Ninh Thuan, five miles north of Phan Rang. Lt. Crawford was my father — he died two days after my third birthday.

Van Buren

Like thousands of other sons and daughters of the more than 58,000 Americans lost in the Vietnam War, I never really knew my father, but I was always proud of him and, as a young child, I thought of my dad as a hero.

But when I was old enough to be exposed to society's attitudes about Vietnam, I began to feel isolated and rejected. In fourth grade, the teacher asked each of us to describe our parents. When I said my father was killed in Vietnam, I was slapped in the face with silence — it was as if I had a disease or something. I felt an immediate distance between myself and everyone else.

Through Sons and Daughters In Touch, a program of the Friends of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial, I have met others who understand the pain because they, too, have experienced a similar rejection. This Father's Day weekend, June 19-21, we are planning the first national gathering in Washington, D.C., for the sons and daughters of Americans killed in the Vietnam War.

Abby, thousands of your readers have lost their loved ones in the Vietnam War. Please help us reach out to these people and let them know of our organization and our "Proud to Remember" event in Washington, D.C., this Father's Day. — PATTY CRAWFORD, SONS AND DAUGHTERS IN TOUCH, WASHINGTON, D.C., COORDINATOR

DEAR PATTY AND DEAR READERS: I'm glad to help. Those seeking more information about attending the weekend's events should contact: Mrs. Wanda Ruffin, Sons and Daughters In Touch, 2030 Clarendon Blvd., Suite 412, Arlington, Va. 22201. Include a business-size, self-addressed stamped envelope (52 cents) with your inquiry, please.

DEAR ABBY: I ordered your booklet "How to Have a Lovely Wedding," and I am sure it will be very helpful to my daughter in her upcoming wedding. However, it didn't answer the one question I had: What are the financial responsibilities of the bride's parents if this is their daughter's second marriage? We went all out for her first wedding.

I would appreciate a prompt response to this question, since I couldn't find it in your booklet — or anywhere else. I even asked the bridal consultant at our large department store, and she didn't know either. Our daughter's first marriage ended in divorce after six years. — MOTHER OF THE BRIDE

DEAR MOTHER: I would say that after having gone "all out" for your daughter's first wedding, you have no responsibility for financing her second wedding.

DEAR ABBY: How would you define middle age? — FRANK IN FARIBAULT, MINN.

DEAR FRANK: I'm with Ogden Nash, who said: "Middle age is when you're sitting home on a Saturday night and the telephone rings, and you hope it isn't for you."

POWs: love, hate were motivations for survival

Hearst News Service

BURLINGAME, Calif. — Love and hate were the motivations for surviving the horrors of Japanese prison and labor camps, say American veterans who recently gathered here to mark the 50th anniversary of the fall of the Philippines.

"It was our love for the folks at home and the flag, and our hate for the ... who were starving and beating us (that kept us going)," explained 78-year-old Bill Wells, a Navy gunner who was captured on Caballo Island in Manila Bay.

Wells, a resident of Virginia Beach, Va., says his hatred for his captors is unchanged, adding, "Even today, if I ran across any of my guards, I'd kill them."

The former career Navy man is among 600 members of the American Defenders of Bataan and Corregidor.

The gatherings are really "gigantic therapy sessions for many of us," says Andy Miller, 72, the group's historian. "It was 25 years after gaining our freedom (before) I'd talk to anyone about my experiences. But there's hardly a day that passes that I don't remember some incident in the war."

But most of the talk at the annual conventions is about "comical things that happened to us," says the retired mechanical engineer. "There's no need to talk about the bad things. We all remember those."

Miller says the gatherings also serve to "remind people what happened there (in the Philippines). It's a shame, but there are kids who never heard of Bataan or Corregidor."

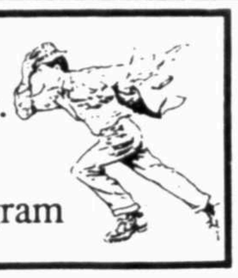

Miller, like most of his comrades, still suffers from the effects of beatings and the almost constant starvation he was subjected to in the prisoner of war camps. "The nerves in my legs and feet were damaged, and I've got other ailments related to my days as a slave laborer" in a Japanese coal mine, says Miller, who lives in Albuquerque, N.M.

Joe Matheny, 70, the group's national commander, recalls the infamous death march on Bataan, an 87-mile march in tropical heat without food or water. "Beatings and beheading of the sick who couldn't keep up were commonplace," he said.

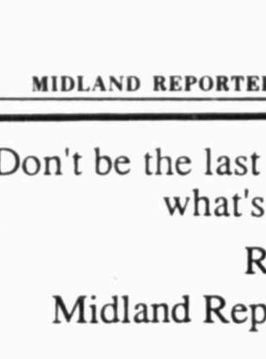

The Ohio native says the conventions, where rank and branch of service are forgotten, "are the best form of mental well-being."

He says he holds no animosity toward the Japanese people, explaining, "You can't go through life harboring a hatred. It'll eat you up. ... But there are a few camp guards I'd still like to get hold of."

Don't be the last to find out what's happening.

INVISIBLE DECAY

Irregularities, such as pits and grooves, in the chewing surfaces of molar teeth tend to trap sticky foods as well as the bacterial plaque that grows on teeth. Since these grooves in teeth are so narrow that a single bristle of a toothbrush is often too large to clean them, decay can start in these locations in spite of daily brushing. In the early stages, this decay spreads beneath the enamel to soften the underlying dentin so that it is invisible to the unaided eye.

If decay is found at an early stage by the dentist's probe or x-ray, only a small filling may be needed. If it is left untreated until the cavity is large enough for the unaided eye to see, it may have destroyed a large part of the tooth beneath the enamel surface, severely weakening the crown of the tooth. This is one reason why it is important to have your oral health routinely examined. Those who do not practice regular continuing care visits with their dentist often find that the first indication of a cavity is a toothache.

Lee Johnson of Manhattan, Kan., notes the absence of an end date on the Persian Gulf War Memorial in the Missouri War Memorial Park in Jefferson City.

Gulf war is not over, according to Pentagon

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — Eight black marble monoliths near the Missouri Statehouse recall wars in which Missouri sons and daughters died. But the memorial's soothing symmetry is broken by a blank space on the last one.

What's missing is the date the Persian Gulf War ended.

Hostilities with Iraq officially stopped Feb. 28, 1991. A formal cease-fire took effect April 11, 1991. The Pentagon doesn't consider the Gulf War officially over, however. Until it does, state officials and veterans groups say, the slab won't be inscribed.

"We are currently in a cease-fire, but until the Iraqis comply with all of the United Nations resolutions that were agreed to under that cease-fire, the conflict is not officially over," said Air Force Lt. Col. Rick Oborn, a Pentagon spokesman.

Until this month, the allied contingent included 28 members of the Missouri National Guard who re-enlisted and returned to Saudi Arabia in December, said Col. Bob Morgan, the guard's chief of staff.

"The Gulf War is now over, as far as the Missouri National Guard is concerned, but not so far as Washington is concerned," Morgan said.

Most people probably figure the war ended when it no longer dominated the news, or when they threw welcoming parades for troops deployed from their hometowns and cities.

Those who see the blank on the Missouri memorial learn otherwise, said Jim Whitfield, chairman of the Missouri Veterans Commission. "If they get anything from visiting the gulf war memorial and seeing the lack of an end date," he said, "it should be that things aren't always wrapped up so nicely."

The $1.2 million Missouri Veterans Memorial dedicated last November sprawls along a hillside overlooking the Missouri River. It's in a composition of columns, landscaping and a fountain with stair step reflecting pools.

The largest reflecting pool contains a black granite slab cut in the shape of the state and inscribed: "Missouri Veterans, Guardians of Liberty."

A walkway winds up a hill from that pool. The monoliths, five-sided and 6½-feet tall, line one side of the path.

They're inscribed: Vietnam War, 1964-1975; Korean War, 1950-1953; World War II, 1941-1945; World War I, 1917-1918; Spanish-American War, 1898; Civil War, 1861-1865; and Mexican-American War, 1846-1848.

Brad Votaw and Stephanie Clark of Springfield toured the memorial for the first time the other day. They were startled to see the gulf war stone carved only with "1990-...."

"I assumed the war was over when the troops came home," Ms. Clark said.

Votaw, in an Operation Desert Storm T-shirt, shrugged.

"Unless something's happening to hold our attention, we just don't think about some things very much," he said. "We don't think about the gulf war much. Around Memorial Day, maybe we should."

Students dream up whimsical, practical inventions

BOSTON (AP) — Brittaney Cormier was so upset with the bugs that bit her every summer that she came up with the idea of washing her clothes in a mixture of bug repellent and laundry detergent.

"When a bug tries to bite into your clothes, it's going to die because there's poison inside the clothes," said the 6-year-old, who admitted she's never actually tried her "Bug-Away Laundry Detergent."

The invention was one of dozens on display Sunday at the Boston's Museum of Science, part of a regional convention of a non-profit group called INVENT AMERICA!

Among the other wares: A drip-free ice cream cone, a combination thermometer and pacifier, a squirrel-proof bird-feeder, crutches with attachable carrying baskets and a pet bowl that sounds an alarm when the water level dips too low.

Top inventors in the Northeast will head to the national finals in July in Washington. Each year the organization gives out more than $600,000 in awards to students, ranging from kindergarten to eighth-grade, teachers and schools.

Some inventions, such as a glow-in-the-dark football, were whimsical. Others were hardly frivolous.

Glenn Old, 11, of East Greenwich, R.I., said he designed "Instant Needle Armor" for syringes to protect medical workers from needle pricks that can transmit the deadly AIDS virus. A spring flips the armor — a glass cylinder — over the needle after blood is drawn, Old said.

"It would solve one of the major problems in the medical profession," he said.

Sally McAndrew, 12, said she got the idea for her "Personal IV," as in intravenous, after her mother complained about being hooked up to a cumbersome apparatus during a hospital stay.

The device, which she said she tested on her sister, supports tubes and bags of fluids such as glucose on a short pole attached to a bulky vest, enabling a patient to walk around.

As camera rolls, police raid wrong address

KENT, Wash. (AP) — Lights, camera, action: Police kick in the door of a suspected crack dealer. Guns drawn, they charge upstairs. They find a terrified couple and four sleeping children. All are ordered to hit the floor.

The officers find ... no drugs. Oops. Wrong address.

While cameras from the television show "Cops" rolled late Wednesday, King County officers realized they had hit the wrong side of a duplex. It was too late for the half-naked, handcuffed woman whose posterior was recorded for posterity.

"They pulled me out of bed and put a gun on me," Theresa Glover said.

It wasn't the first time King County police raided the wrong address. A year ago, officers mistakenly charged into the home of Terry Krussel. Five months later, police came knocking again, this time with an arrest warrant meant for someone else.

In each case, police had written the wrong address on an affidavit used to obtain a search warrant.

"I understand the police were just trying to do their job," Glover said. "But what they did was wrong. They should be more careful."

The commander of the Maple Valley Precinct, Maj. Larry Mayes, agreed. He said two things went wrong.

First, the sergeant leading the raid failed to verify where he was going.

Second, two officers who had been watching the Glovers' neighbor for months and knew the correct address weren't in the front line of the raid.

Mayes said there was a possibility "Cops" could broadcast the mishap across the country.

As a result of what happened, Mayes said, he is revising precinct policy on search warrants.

Officers involved in surveillance must be among those leading the raid and no search warrant will be served until police have presented a photo or video of the residence at a briefing for officers going on the raid.

Ex-CIA agent to serve time for his role in arms scandal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Arms middleman and retired CIA officer Thomas Clines on Monday will become the first participant in the Iran-Contra scandal to go to prison.

Clines is scheduled to serve a 16-month term at a minimum-security federal correctional facility in Schuylkill County, Pa., his lawyer, Tom Spencer, said Sunday. Federal prison officials may make a last-minute change on where Clines serves his sentence, Spencer added.

A federal appeals court refused to let Clines remain free pending appeal of his convictions for failing to disclose to the U.S. government some of the profits he made from arms deals for the Nicaraguan Contras.

Clines is seeking Supreme Court review of his case.

In 1985 and 1986, Clines assisted the secret Contra aid network run by White House aide Oliver North who was assigned by Reagan administration higher-ups to help the rebel force when Congress cut off military aid.

Clines used his contacts in the Communist East Bloc and western Europe to arrange the purchase and delivery of rifles, machine guns, grenades and explosives to the Contras fighting Nicaragua's then-leftist government.

A federal court jury in Baltimore found Clines guilty on Sept. 18, 1990 of four felonies, including failing to report to the Internal Revenue Service more than $260,000 in profits from the arms shipments.

He also was convicted of failing to tell the IRS about overseas financial accounts.

A federal appeals court in Richmond, Va., upheld Clines' convictions in February.

Spencer said he expected his client to serve about half of the 16-month term.

Clines is an executive for Panex Corp., of McLean, Va., an international security consulting firm.

He retired from the CIA in 1978 after a 29-year career. He was a CIA agent in Southeast Asia and was involved in the Bay of Pigs invasion in Cuba. He was director of training in the CIA's directorate of operations.

Seven people have pleaded guilty to various crimes in the Iran-Contra scandal, but none of them received any jail time. North was convicted of three felonies, but an appeals court set the convictions aside and the case was ultimately dismissed. Former national security adviser John Poindexter was convicted of five felonies, but all were reversed on appeal.

Bee cargo hampers rescue of trucker involved in wreck

WILLISTON, Fla. (AP) — A truck driver who survived an accident that killed another man was trapped in his truck for three hours because rescuers had to fight millions of angry bees to get him out.

"It was a nightmare," said John Paul Shane, 43.

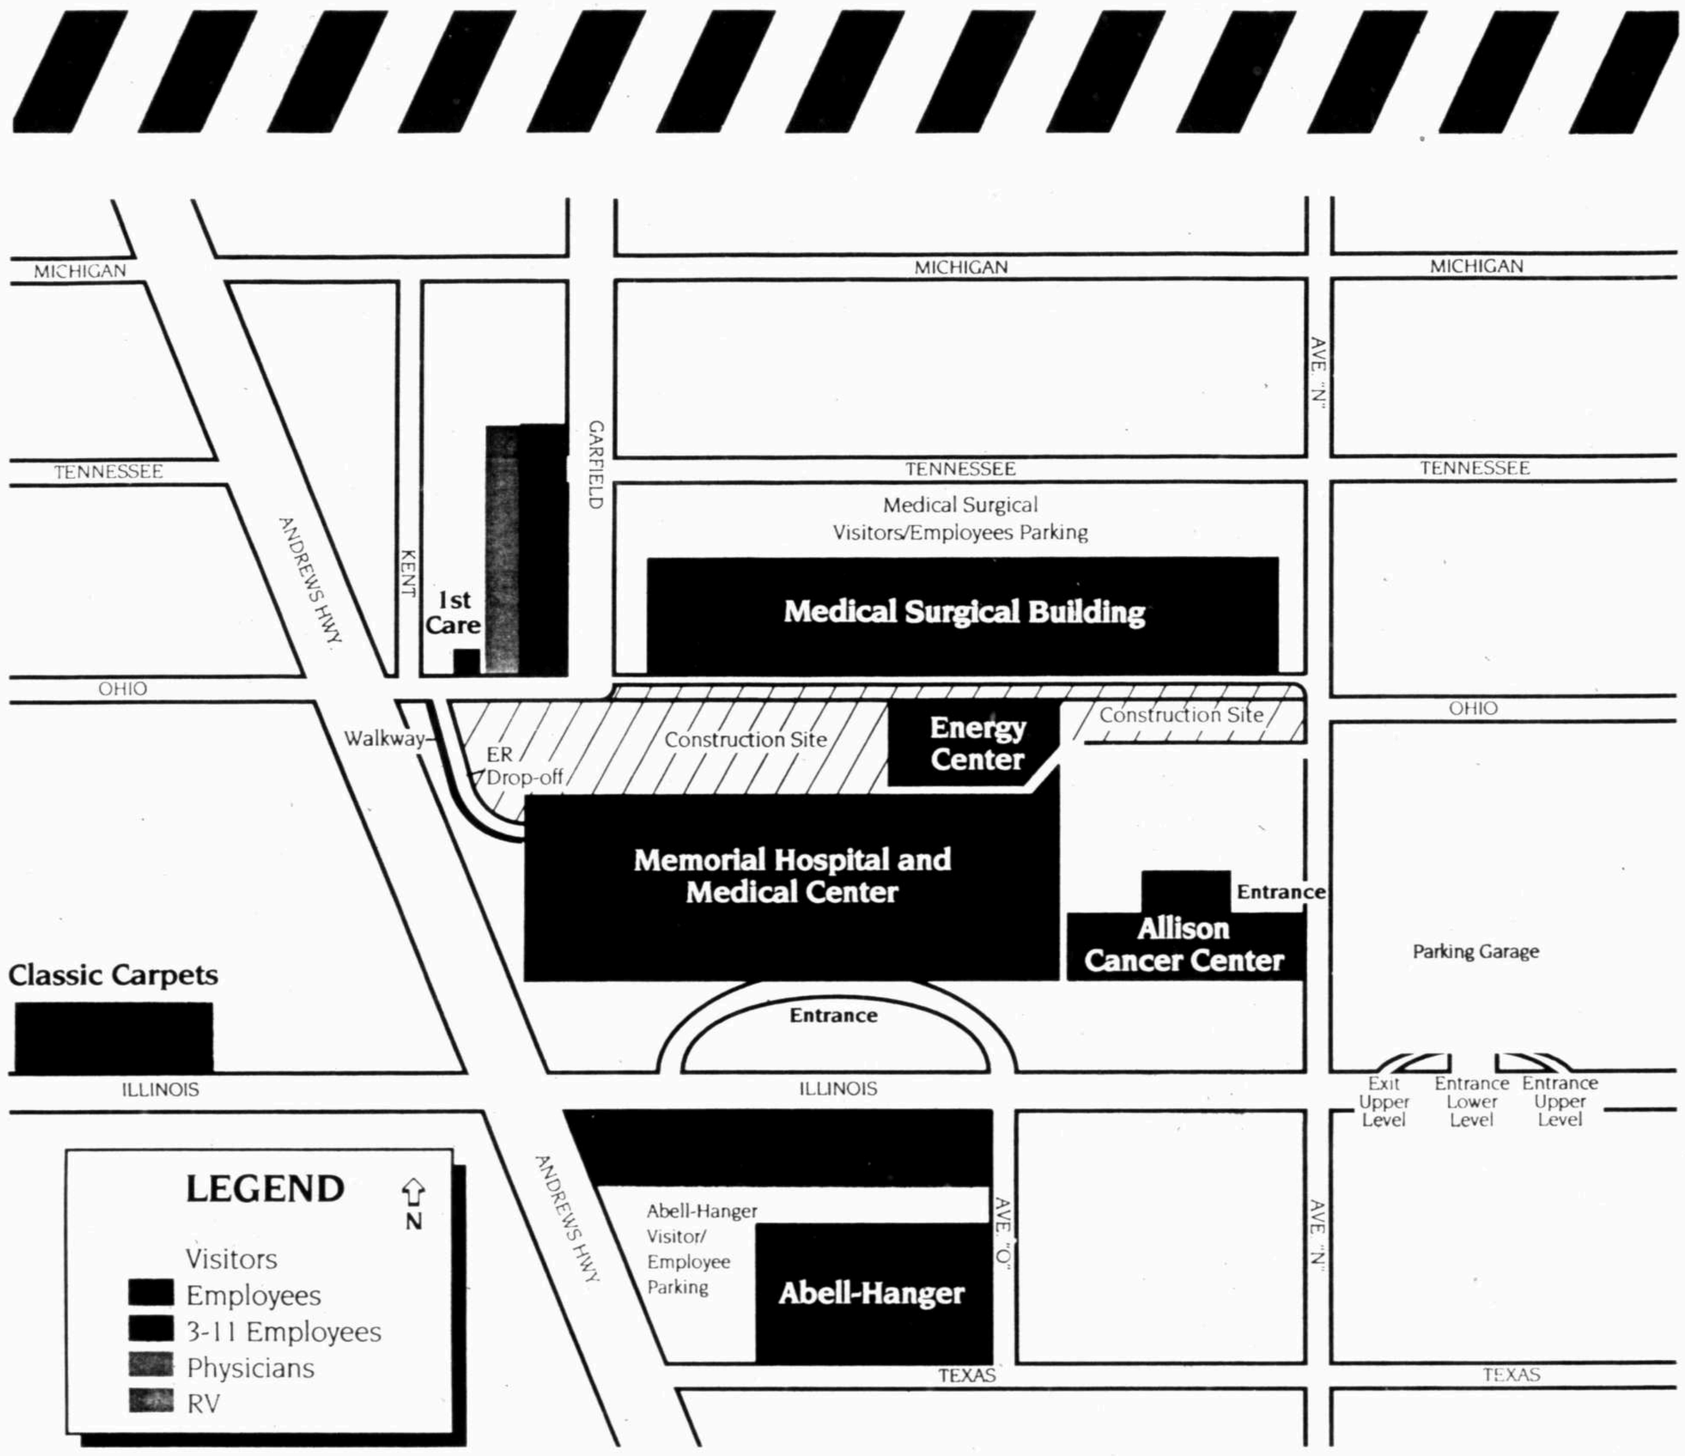

Shane was transporting 250 beehives, each containing between 20,000 and 30,000 bees, when his flatbed truck collided head-on early Saturday with a Geo Metro driven by John Lewis Griffin, 41, police said. Griffin was killed.

Shane said he was stung numerous times while rescuers worked to free him from the twisted wreckage.

"That was a mental trip, surviving the wreck and then thinking I might get stung to death," he said.

Lt. Mauro Porcelli of the Marion County Fire Department and three other rescuers were treated at a local hospital for multiple bee stings.

Cal Byrd, assistant chief of the Williston Fire Department, said most of the bees were killed by firefighters who used insecticide foam and spray.

UNDER CONSTRUCTION

This week, at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, we're starting an exciting, two-year expansion project that will expand our emergency and diagnostic services to better meet your health care needs.

It will also improve the availability of visitor parking. We have dedicated the entire parking garage, located at the corner of Illinois and Avenue "N" as visitor parking, in addition to the parking lot directly north of the Allison Cancer Center (see map above). No longer will there be any visitor parking north of the Hospital.

The only other change is the Illinois entrance to the Hospital—the one with the circular, tree-lined drive—will become the main entrance for all patients and guests. If you take the old exit on the north side of the hospital, you will find yourself right in the middle of our construction project.

We're excited about growing to serve our community and we appreciate your patience as we work through this process.

The five-game series between the Midland Angels and the Arkansas Travelers is now a four-game series thanks to the third straight rain-out between the two clubs.

Sunday's scheduled doubleheader was postponed due to wet grounds, marking the third day that Midland and Arkansas have been unable to conduct play at Angels Stadium.

The two teams are scheduled for doubleheaders today and Tuesday, both at 6 p.m., in hopes of salvaging four of their five-game set in the final time they are slated to meet this year.

Other Unser wins 500

■ Al Unser Jr. becomes first second-generation winner of the Indianapolis 500, but it was a razor thin victory.

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — In family tradition at the Indianapolis 500, Al Unser Jr. won a heartstopper in the closest finish ever Sunday and Michael Andretti lost a heartbreaker.

Unser beat Canadian Scott Goodyear by 43-thousandths of a second, barely half a car length, after Andretti's engine quit with a half-lap lead and 10 laps to go.

The 30-year-old Unser thus became Indy's first second-generation champion. Dad Al Sr., who finished third Sunday, is a four-time winner and uncle Bobby won three times.

An Unser winning and an Andretti losing was about the only thing normal on this day, though, with temperatures in the 50s, wind-chills in the 30s, a near-record number of crashes and at 134.479 mph the slowest average speed in 34 years despite the fastest field ever.

Danny Sullivan was fourth, followed by Bobby Rahal, Eddie Cheever, Raul Boesel, John Andretti (driving the Midland-based Pennzoil entry of Hall/VDS Racing), John Paul Jr., A.J. Foyt, St. James and Dominic Dobson.

The bizarre, 200-lap race was marred by 13 caution periods that included 10 crashes involving 13 cars, all but one of which hit the Indianapolis Motor Speedway's concrete walls.

It was the last of the yellow flags that told this story as Andretti, whose father, Mario, and younger brother, Jeff, wound up in the hospital with serious foot and ankle injuries, suddenly stopped on the backstretch.

The 29-year-old Andretti had led 163 of the first 190 laps and clocked the fastest race speeds ever — up to 229 mph, when the family frustration caught up with him.

"I can't believe it — the engine quit," Andretti radioed to his crew.

It almost had to happen, though. He is, after all, an Andretti, and since Mario's victory in 1969, the family has seemed to have nothing but bad luck at Indy.

Last year, Michael took the lead with a daring pass of Rick Mears on lap 187, only to have Mears pass him back a lap later.

In 1987, Mario led 170 of the first 177 laps only to be knocked out by an ignition problem. Al Unser Sr. went on to his fourth win.

This year, Al Jr. would be the beneficiary.

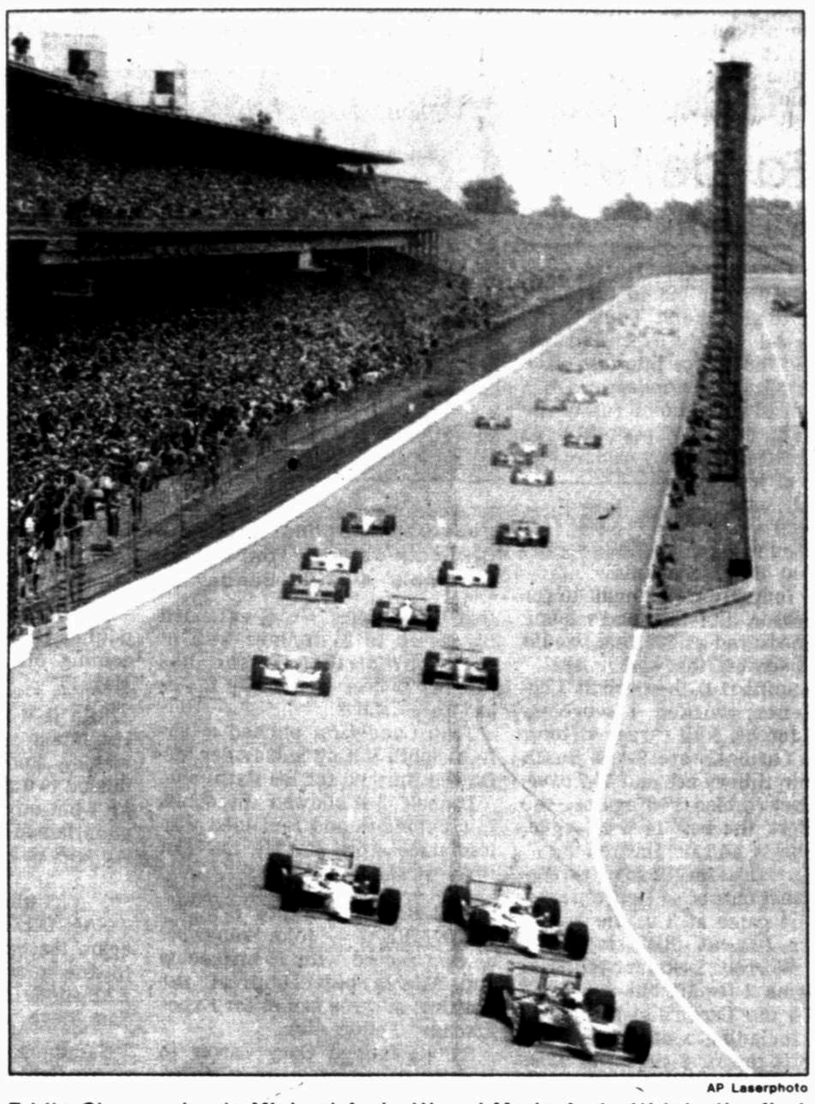

He passed Goodyear to take second on lap 188 and inherited the lead when Andretti stopped.

The green flag came out for the final time seven laps from the end and Unser, who came so close in 1989 when he bumped wheels with eventual winner Emerson Fittipaldi and crashed on the fourth turn of the next-to-last lap, wasn't going to let this one get away.

Somehow, he kept the tenacious Goodyear, who started last in the 33-car lineup, behind him until the final straightaway.

Goodyear dove to the inside and nearly made the world's biggest race his first Indy-car victory.

"I almost took it a little too easy off Turn 4," Unser said in Victory Lane. "I lifted a little bit and, man, he got a run on me like you wouldn't believe. I thought, 'Oh, no! I'm gonna blow it!'

Andrettis have woes in weird Indy 500 race

By Hank Lowenkron
AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — Michael Andretti had Victory Lane in his sights. He was dominating Sunday's crash-filled Indianapolis 500, running the fastest laps in the race's history. Then, with just 10 laps to go, the Andretti hex struck again.

Seconds after lapping four-time champion Al Unser, Andretti's car slowed suddenly on the backstretch. The engine that had kept him ahead of trouble all day was dead.

He led Scott Goodyear by more than 20 seconds and eventual winner Al Unser Jr. was racing third when heartbreak struck.

"It can't get much worse than this," Andretti said before rushing to the hospital to check on his father Mario and brother Jeff, both injured in crashes. "Everything was so perfect. It was to a point where I almost could have walked it in and it just shut off.

"This place is cruel, so cruel. First dad and then Jeff."

Somehow, Michael kept his emotions in check as he raced his Ford Cosworth around at speeds in excess of 225 mph, knowing his father and brother were in the hospital with injuries.

But then his bid for an Indy victory

Jazz pull even with Blazers

■ Karl and Jeff Malone combine for 61 points to bring Utah back from the playoff dead.

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — The celebration had hardly begun to die down when Utah coach Jerry Sloan started to worry.

The Utah Jazz, who ran their NBA-best home record to 45-4 with the 121-112 victory over Portland on Sunday, now must return to Oregon, where two routs by the Trail Blazers opened the best-of-7 Western Conference playoff series.

"I'm getting sick and tired of people asking about how we play at home and on the road," Sloan snapped, then allowed that Utah has won just one of six playoff games away from home.

"We play well here, we've got great fans," he added. "But in order to win this series, we have to win one on the road. That's a huge thing to say because we're playing a good team."

Karl Malone with 33 points and Jeff Malone with 28 helped Utah even the series 2-2.

"We know we have to win up there. We just need to keep our composure like we did these last two games," he said.

Terry Porter, who led Portland with 34 points, insisted the Trail Blazers are "still in the driver's seat."

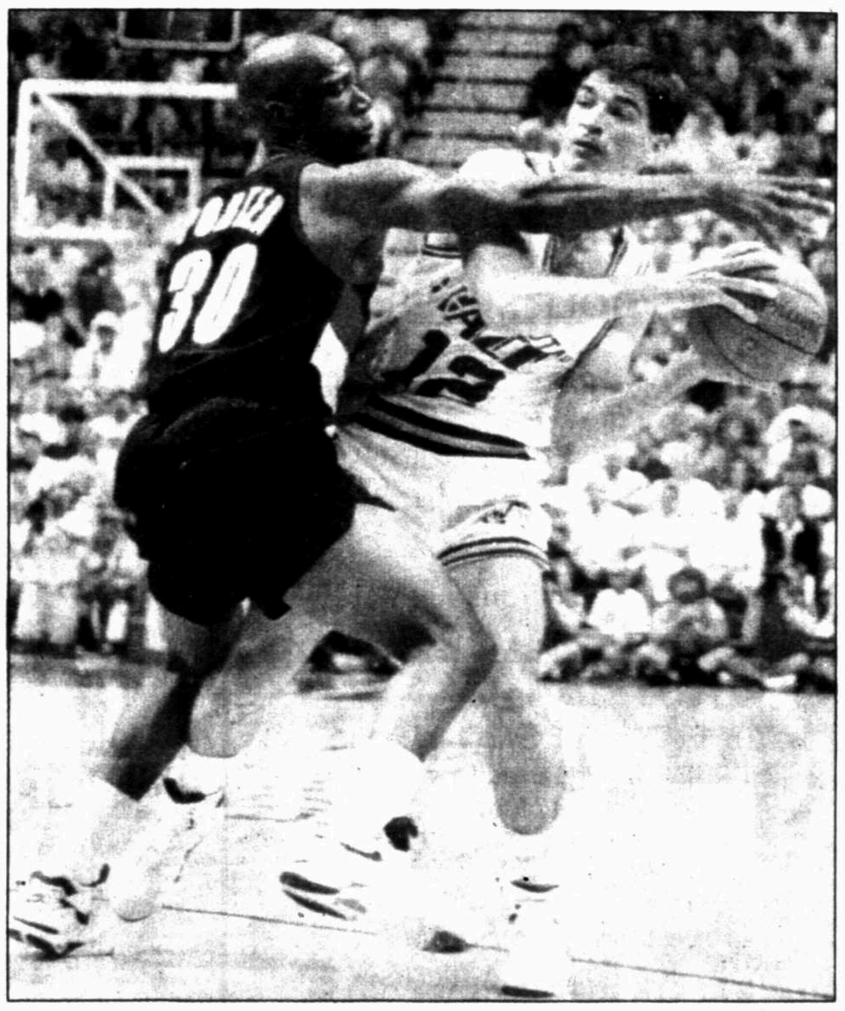

"They took care of their job holding the two games in their place," he said. "Now it's a three-game series and we need to go home and take care of business."

"We're home for two of those games, but the homecourt advantage doesn't guarantee anything," coach Rick Adelman said. "We have to regroup and play a much better game."

Portland had pulled to 106-105 on Porter's 3-pointer with 3:45 to play, but the Trail Blazers were plagued by turnovers and cold shooting down the stretch.

Portland lost despite 34 points from Porter, who recovered strongly from a 13-point Game 3 performance.

The Trail Blazers also had to play the last 90 seconds without Clyde Drexler.

Deceptively untouched

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. (AP) — The 2-year-old quarter horse filly Deceptively apparently can't get enough of a good thing.

With a perfect trip and speed to spare, the Texas filly scored a gate-to-wire victory Sunday in the $215,428 Kansas Futurity, the first leg of quarter horse racing's triple crown.

And she did it in smashing style.

Oblivous to the sloppy Ruidoso Downs track — the result of two days of heavy rain — Deceptively set a track record by romping over the 350-yard sprint in 17.22 seconds. The time eclipsed the record of 17.24 by Van Too Too in 1973.

Deceptively, making only the second start of her career, took the lead right out of the starting gate and hit the finish line 1¾ lengths in front of Loose Lips, the only other filly in the 10-horse field.

Mr Eye Opener, who went into the race with three straight wins, ran third, 2½ lengths back of the winner.

Trainer Jack Brooks, who saddled Mr Eye Opener and six other horses in the race, said Deceptively was simply too tough for his stable of contenders.

"No excuses," said Brooks, who has won the All American Futurity — the world's richest quarter horse race — five times but has only one Kansas Futurity win.

"I have always known that no matter how many horses you have in a race, it only takes one to outrun you and that's what happened today," Brooks said.

Deceptively earned $88,914 for owner Roger Knight Jr. of Madisonville, Texas, and paid $8.80, $5.60 and $3.80.

Loose Lips is owned by Charles Patterson of Wimberly, Texas.

Earnhardt breaks 600-mile domination by Ford

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Dale Earnhardt inherited the lead with 52 laps to go and held off Ernie Irvan in a battle of Chevrolets to win the Coca Cola 600 on Sunday and break Ford's domination of Winston Cup racing.

Earnhardt, the 1991 points champion, was the last non-Ford driver to win, taking last fall's race at North Wilkesboro. His victory enabled General Motors break Ford's string of winning the first nine races this season and the final four last fall.

It looked like Kyle Petty would run away with NASCAR's longest race when he took command on lap 291 to mark the 27th lead change. But on lap 345, Petty and his closest challenger, Irvan, went into the pits for a final change of tires and some gasoline. Earnhardt, who started 13th, went into the pits three laps later and emerged as the leader.

Petty struggled to keep pace after that, leaving Irvan to track down Earnhardt's black car. The two engaged in a showdown in which Irvan, who started 11th, continuously chased Earnhardt in single-file formation but couldn't overtake him. With his last chance on the final lap, Irvan swung high into turn four, giving Earnhardt sufficient cushion to take the race by .39 seconds.

Earnhardt earned $125,100 for the victory.

Midland's Bobby Hillin Jr. started 24th and finished 13th to win $11,800.

Petty finished third in a Pontiac, followed by Davey Allison in a Ford and Harry Gant in an Oldsmobile. Allison, the Daytona 500 and Winston 500 winner, missed a chance to collect a $1 million bonus going to any driver winning three of NASCAR's top four races.

He remains alive for the bonus, but must win ther Southern 500 at Darlington on Labor Day weekend to to collect it.

Irvan started the race in trouble as his engine failed to respond and his pit crew had to replace the carburetor to get him running again. When the carburetor was installed, Irvan was two laps down, but it was early enough to allow him to get back into the chase.

Petty also lost a chance for a $1 million bonus. He was challenged by car owner Felix Sabates to win both the Coca Cola 600 and the Mello Yello 500, the fall race at Charlotte.

Allison spent the afternoon fighting off the effects of injuries sustained last Saturday night in The Winston, and was trying to get the handle on a replacement car pressed into service when his favorite was banged up eight days ago. He stayed in contention and held the lead on several occasions

Petty continually ran him down, however, and took over with 109 of 400 laps remaining at the 1.5-mile Charlotte Motor Speedway. Then came the series of pit stops that turned the order upside down.

NASCAR's longest race went 4½ hours, a time that resulted from 12 caution flags, two short of the race record.

Astros fall into cellar

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Tom Pagnozzi homered with one out in the ninth inning to give the St. Louis Cardinals a 4-3 victory over Houston, sending the Astros into last place in the NL West Sunday.

Pagnozzi's first home run of the season came on a 3-2 pitch from Al Osuna (3-2) and barely cleared the fence in left-center. All seven of Pagnozzi's career home runs have come at Busch Stadium.

NL

The fences were brought in for this season and Pagnozzi's home run, measured at 382 feet, would have been off the wall in 1991.

Lee Smith (1-1), the third St. Louis pitcher, worked a scoreless ninth for his 50th career victory.

The Cardinals are 9-3 at Busch Stadium this month and 14-7 overall. They're also 17-8 against the NL West, the best in the league. Houston is 4-13 on the road.

Benny Distefano had a career-high four hits for Houston and tied the game at 3 in the eighth with a two-out, RBI single off Todd Worrell. Distefano entered the game 2 for 15, but is 5 for 7 against the Cardinals with three RBIs, including a game-winner.

It was the first time Distefano had as many as three hits in a game since Oct 1, 1988, when he was playing for Pittsburgh. He raised his average 183 points to .316 before leaving for a pinch runner after the game-tying hit.

Ray Lankford's run-scoring single off Rob Mallicoat in the seventh had given St. Louis the lead.

Cardinals starter Bob Tewksbury gave up two runs in seven innings, but his ERA rose seven points to 1.88, second-best in the league. He walked one, giving him only six walks in 67 innings.

Astros starter Jimmy Jones worked six innings, giving up two runs on seven hits.

Dodgers 4, Pirates 2

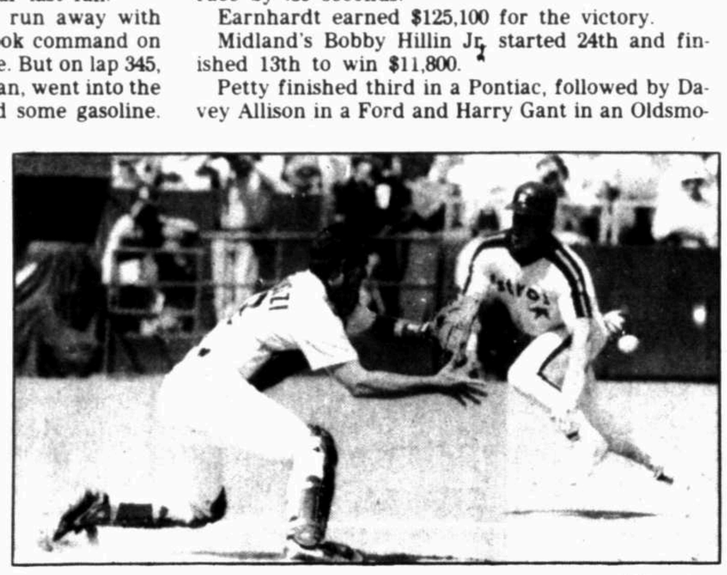

LOS ANGELES — Todd Benzinger hit his first home run for Los Angeles and the Dodgers extended Doug Drabek's winless streak to six starts with a victory over Pittsburgh.

The Pirates fell out of first place in the NL East for the first time since April 13. They dropped one-half game behind St. Louis.

Kevin Gross (2-4) allowed six hits and three walks in seven innings and struck out nine, including Jay Bell three times. Gross extended his streak to 21 innings with at least one strikeout, and has fanned 34 over 23 innings in his last three starts.

John Candelaria pitched a perfect eighth inning and Roger McDowell finished for his sixth save.

Drabek (3-4) allowed three hits in six innings, and remained winless since April 22. He has lost three straight decisions.

Braves 2, Expos 1

MONTREAL — John Smoltz set a team record with 15 strikeouts and Atlanta beat Montreal, the first loss in three games for Expos manager Felipe Alou.

Smoltz fanned Gary Carter to end the game for his only strikeout in the ninth inning. He broke the Atlanta mark of 14 set by Denny Lemaster on Aug. 14, 1966, against Philadelphia. Smoltz's previous career high for strikeouts was 11, accomplished on June 11, 1990, against San Francisco.

Smoltz (4-4) pitched a six-hitter and walked two in his second complete game. He won for the first time since May 4, a span of two losses and one no-decision.

Greg Olson's broken-bat, two-run single in the first inning provided Smoltz with all the support he needed. Terry Pendleton doubled with one out, David Justice walked with two outs and Sid Bream was hit by a pitch from Mark Gardner (3-3), loading the bases.

Olson followed with a flare into left field, just beyond the reach of jumping shortstop Tom Foley.

Reds 8, Phillies 3

PHILADELPHIA — Hal Morris began a seven-run rally in the seventh inning with a triple and capped the burst with a three-run double, leading Jose Rijo and Cincinnati past Philadelphia.

Morris also had an earlier RBI double. He is 12 for 29 (.414) since coming off the disabled list on May 16.

Rijo (1-3) allowed two runs on two hits in six innings for his first victory since last Sept. 26. He missed two starts this season when he went on the disabled list with an inflamed elbow. Rijo struck out six and walked two.

Cubs 6, Padres 4

SAN DIEGO — Ryne Sandberg again feasted on Padres pitching, hitting a two-run homer and an RBI single to help Chicago beat San Diego.

Sandberg broke out of a 0-for-17 slump Saturday night, going 3 for 4 with three RBIs against Bruce Hurst, including his first homer since May 6, as the Cubs won 7-2.

Just as he had done on Saturday, Sandberg hit an RBI single in the first. Then in the fifth, with two outs and Jose Vizcaino on first after a single, Sandberg worked the count from 0-and-2 to 3-and-2, then hit Jose Melendez's next pitch into the left-center field seats for his sixth homer and a 5-0 lead.

Mets 6, Giants 0

SAN FRANCISCO — David Cone pitched a four-hitter for his second straight shutout and fourth this year as New York beat San Francisco.

Masterfully mixing a fastball with offspeed pitches, Cone walked none and struck out 10. Cone (5-2) shut out San Diego on seven hits last Tuesday.

Cone pitched consecutive shutouts earlier this season when he two-hit Houston on April 28 and blanked Atlanta on five hits five days later.

Cone leads the majors in shutouts and in strikeouts, with 79.

Texas wins, 4-3, in 13

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Ivan Rodriguez's single with one out in the 13th inning scored Kevin Reimer from second base as the Texas Rangers defeated the Kansas City Royals 4-3 Sunday.

Tom Gordon (0-6) lost for the first time since being demoted to the bullpen by Royals manager Hal McRae.

The Rangers, winners of three straight games, have won seven of their last eight.

Gerald Alexander (1-0), the fifth Texas pitcher, won in his first appearance since being recalled from Triple-A Oklahoma City last week. He pitched one inning.

Rodriguez helped the Rangers beat the Royals, 4-2, Saturday night with a two-run homer in the first inning.

Twins 15, Tigers 0

DETROIT — Shane Mack continued to pound Detroit pitching with a grand slam in a six-run fourth inning and Bill Krueger pitched seven shutout innings as Minnesota routed the Tigers.

Mack went 2-for-5 and now has a .417 career average against Detroit (30 for 72) with four homers and 14 RBIs.

Brian Harper also had four RBIs for the Twins, who scored more than 10 runs for the first time this season and had a season-high 18 hits. Harper went 8 for 10 in the three-game series with seven RBIs.

Athletics 4, Red Sox 0

BOSTON — Ron Darling pitched a two-hitter for his first shutout since 1988 as Oakland beat Boston for its fifth victory in six games.

Darling, making his first Boston appearance since the 1986 World Series, tossed his first complete game since July 26, 1990, while pitching for the New York Mets. It was the right-hander's 11th career shutout and only his 26th complete game in 265 starts since 1983.

Darling (4-2), who pitched seven shutout innings when the Mets evened the Series in Game 4 at Fenway Park en route to the championship six years ago, struck out two and walked two as the Athletics took two of three games from Boston. The A's ended their road trip 6-5 after starting with three straight losses.

The two-hitter was the best effort of Darling's career. He pitched a three-hitter against Cincinnati on May 8, 1988. His last shutout was on Sept. 22, 1988.

Orioles 6, Angels 4

BALTIMORE — Brady Anderson and Cal Ripken each homered and drove in two runs as Baltimore ended California's star-crossed roadtrip by beating the Angels.

California lost seven of nine games — and its manager — during the East Coast swing. Manager Buck Rodgers was among 12 people injured Thursday when the team bus veered off the New Jersey Turnpike into a grove of trees.

Rodgers underwent surgery on his fractured elbow and knee Sunday in California and is expected to be out for at least two months. In addition, the Angels had to play the entire series without Bobby Rose and Alvin Davis, who were also hurt in the crash.

Yankees 8, Brewers 7

NEW YORK — New York, who did not need extra innings this time, rallied from a six-run deficit and beat Milwaukee Matt Nokes' RBI single with one out in the ninth.

New York had played four consecutive extra-inning games, one short of the major league record set by Detroit in 1908, and appeared headed for another until Don Mattingly opened the ninth with an opposite-field double to left off Bruce Ruffin (1-2), giving Mattingly his first three-double game since April 11, 1987.

Mariners 5, Indians 4

SEATTLE — Kevin Mitchell's pinch-hit two-run single with two outs in the bottom of the ninth capped a three-run rally and gave Seattle a victory over Cleveland.

Mitchell, who was scratched from the starting lineup with lower back spasms, pinch-hit for Omar Vizquel and grounded a single into left field, scoring Jay Buhner and Pete O'Brien.

White Sox 8, Blue Jays 1

CHICAGO — Tim Raines had two hits, drove in two runs and scored twice, leading Kirk McCaskill and Chicago to a victory against Toronto.

The loss was Toronto's second straight and ninth in the last 15 games, knocking the Blue Jays out of first place in the American League East. Baltimore went on top by one-half game with a victory against California.

Raines singled and scored in a two-run first, drove in a run in a two-run second with a sacrifice fly, tripled to drive in a run in a two-run third and walked, stole second and scored on Joey Cora's single in the sixth.

Longhorns gain Central finals

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Sophomore All-American Brooks Kieschnick struck out a career-high 10 batters Sunday as top-seeded Texas whipped Long Beach State 9-1 in the NCAA Central Regional tournament.

The Longhorns (45-14) need one victory Monday to advance to the College World Series in Omaha, Neb. They will play whoever emerges from the remaining field of Long Beach State, Creighton and Virginia Commonwealth in the double-elimination tourney.

Kieschnick (10-1) gave up six hits and three walks to the 49ers, who eliminated Texas last year on their way to the national championship.

Calvin Murray went 5 for 5 against Long Beach (36-20), and has reached base 17 times in 18 plate appearances in the tournament.

California 11, Texas A&M 4

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Matt Hansen's two-run single triggered a nine-run eighth inning as California beat Texas A&M for the NCAA East Regional title.

California (35-26) eliminated Georgia Tech earlier Sunday and will advance for the fifth time to the College World Series.

Matt Toomey went the distance for California against Texas A&M, striking out six and allowing nine hits.

The game was tied 2-2 entering the eighth before A&M starter Jeff Granger walked regional MVP Jon Zuber and gave up a single to Troy Penix before allowing the two-run single to Hansen, who entered the game in the seventh primarily as a defensive replacement.

Lietzke defeats Pavin

Colonial Open

FORT WORTH (AP) — Bruce Lietzke, a playoff loser a week ago, overcame some nagging fear and a spike mark Sunday to become a playoff winner Sunday in the Colonial golf tournament.

Lietzke, 40, broke a 4-year non-winning string when he used his elongated, 48-inch putter to rap in a 12-foot birdie on the first extra hole and beat Corey Pavin.

"With three holes to play there was still the terrible fear I was going to lose this tournament — even though I had not made a bogey, had done everything I wanted to do,"

"Even with that, there was the terrible fear I could lose the tournament that is so dear to my heart," Lietzke said.

And the fear was there on the playoff putt, he said.

"There was a spike mark in my way. I couldn't get around it. I had to go over it. The putt hit the spike mark and jumped — but it didn't jump off line. It stayed on line and went in the heart of the hole."

Moments later Pavin, a former winner of this title, missed from shorter range — about 8 feet — and Lietzke had the 12th victory of his 18-year PGA Tour career.

The playoff was set up when the Lietzke and Pavin completed regulation play in 267, 13 under par on the Colonial Country Club course.

Lietzke, who played the final 18 in 66, shot 130 over the last two rounds and did not make a bogey. Pavin played the last round in 5-under-par 65 that included a 15-footer for the catch-up birdie on the 17th hole.

Both drove the fairway on the first playoff hole, the 17th, and both hit the green, Lietzke about 15 feet from the pin and Pavin inside him.

"I figured I had to make it, because I expected Corey to make his," Lietzke said.

But he was wrong. Pavin couldn't match Lietzke's effort, missing on the low side.

"I'll see you in January," quipped Lietzke, who plays a restricted schedule and has only a handful of tournaments remaining this season.

The victory was worth $234,000 from the purse of $1.3 million and lifted Lietzke's season earnings to $440,259. And it added a couple of more tournaments to his schedule — the World Series of Golf and the Tour championship.

Colleen Walker walks away with five-stroke LPGA Corning win

CORNING, N.Y. (AP) — Colleen Walker fended off challengers and frigid weather Sunday to turn the lead she held throughout the LPGA Corning Classic into a five-shot victory.

Walker put together rounds of 65, 70, 69 and 72 to finish 12-under-par at 276. She took home a check for $67,500.

Beth Daniel and Alice Miller tied for second at 281. Rosie Jones was at 282.

Pat Bradley skins off $200,000

FRISCO, Texas (AP) — Hall of Fame golfer Pat Bradley sank a 15-foot birdie putt on the 13th hole Sunday to win $200,000 and the championship of the made-for-TV LPGA Skins Game.

The 41-year-old Bradley, women's golf's all-time leading money winner with more than $4 million, won the biggest paycheck of her 18-year pro career, all on one hole. Her previous best payday was $165,000 at the 1991 Centel Classic.

She bested the event's three other contestants — Nancy Lopez, who won $115,000; Jan Stephenson, who $70,000; and Meg Mallon, who won $65,000.

"I never dreamed I'd see a million-dollar tournament," Bradley said, "let alone to win 200 (thousand) for 18 holes. It's mind-boggling."

Bradley's birdie on No. 13 Sunday came with eight skins up for grabs — one worth $15,000, six worth $25,000 each and one worth $35,000.

Lopez captured two skins with a tap-in birdie on the par-four 15th. They were worth $70,000 to go with the $45,000 she won on the front nine Saturday.

Stephenson, the winner of the inaugural LPGA Skins Game in 1990, avoided a shutout with a birdie on the same 17th hole that earned her $200,000 two years ago. This time it was worth two skins, or $70,000.

Meg Mallon won the final $35,000 skin on 18 with a 30-foot putt to total $65,000 in the event. On Saturday, she won the second hole, worth two skins, or $30,000.

ANDRETTI: Mistake key for Hall/VDS

(From 1C)

ended suddenly, like it did last year. He led the 1991 race with 13 laps to go when Rick Mears passed him and Michael wound up second.

The disappointment was the latest is a series of Andretti misfortunes at Indy. Mario, who won in 1969, led for 170 laps in 1987 before his engine quit and he finished ninth.

Andretti, who finished 13th, got a chance to view the wreckage of both cars while going around the oval under the yellow caution light.

"I knew Jeff's was bad. I knew I still had a job to do, but it was hard to concentrate," said Michael, who earned $72,450 by leading 161 of the 200 laps before his car coasted to a stop.

"The car was perfect. I've never had a car so perfect. It looks like a fuel pump, but we're not sure yet. Man, losing after seeing what happened to dad and Jeff, is really hard to take."

Mario crashed after 78 laps and finished 23rd in his 27th Indy. He was undergoing surgery for broken toes. Jeff Andretti, who was driving his second Indy 500 for owner-driver A.J. Foyt, finished 18th after crashing on his 110th lap.

Jeff, 28, sustained a concussion and was having surgery to both ankles and feet. He was the most seriously injured driver in a race that saw only 12 cars finish.

John Andretti, Michael's cousin who is driving for the Midland-based Pennzoil entry, had the best finish in the family by placing eighth after narrowly avoiding three of the crashes that had most of the race run under caution lights.

John was right behind Jeff Andretti when his cousin crashed.

"The tire came right off his car like the rear end blew up. I was right behind him and saw it happen," said John, who was in the race for the fifth consecutive year.

John also had problems. Making his second pit stop, he missed his marks and slid into two new tires slated to be put on the left side wheels. Two crewmen scrambled over the wall to keep from being hit. Gary Buckner, the fueler, was injured slightly as he fell over the wall onto the pavement on the other side.

Ted Bittner, the air jack man, landed on top of Bucknew and injured his left ankle.

The mishap cost John Andretti six laps and he finished the race five laps behind winner Al Unser Jr.

"I can't believe I did that," Andretti said after the incident on his 46th lap.

Lee Trevino captures fifth Senior's crown

Gilbert had a 71 to finish at 206.

Prices hold

NEW YORK — Oil futures rallied back from a loss Friday after OPEC said it would raise production only slightly this summer.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in July settled at $20.94 per barrel, up 4 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Oil fell early Friday, as low as $20.69 per barrel for July delivery, amid reports that Saudi Arabia, OPEC's biggest producer and most influential member, would not abide by any production quotas this summer.

But when the cartel concluded its meeting in Vienna, Austria with an announcement it would roll over the spring production ceiling of nearly 23 million barrels a day, plus whatever extra output Kuwait can bring on line, oil prices shot up on futures markets.

Even though the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will be pumping more oil, demand is expected to increase sharply during the peak summer driving season. The cartel is banking on demand rising faster than supply, and if OPEC sticks to the new quotas, prices might rise, analysts said.

Natural gas prices were mostly higher on Friday, with contracts for delivery in July settling at $1.545 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 1.5 cents. For the week, natural gas for next-month delivery fell 11.2 cents.

New energy war brews in Congress

■ Northeastern lawmakers assail Texas, Oklahoma for purportedly manipulating gas prices.

By Z. Jack Smith
N.Y. Times News Service

There's a new energy war brewing in Congress — the natural gas-consuming states of the Northeast vs. the "Redneck OPEC."

That's the Potomac moniker for major gas-producing states such as Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and New Mexico, also dubbed the "Bubba Cartel."

As the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries was meeting in Austria last week to contemplate world oil production and prices, Northeastern congressmen in the nation's capital were assailing Texas and Oklahoma for purportedly manipulating U.S. gas prices upward.

The two states have passed new gas "prorationing" rules that regulate production of the fuel. Critics say the prorationing measures represent a blatant attempt to raise gas prices by scaling back production.

Louisiana and New Mexico also are considering new prorationing rules.

The U.S. House of Representatives voted 238-169 Wednesday in favor of an amendment sponsored by U.S. Reps. Edward Markey, D-Mass., and James Scheuer, D-N.Y., that would expressly ban any action by states to affect gas prices. The amendment is attached to a major energy bill to be voted on by the House next week.

The gas fight is particularly relevant to Texas. It's not only the No. 1 gas-producing state, but also the leading gas-consuming state.

Texas Railroad Commission Chairwoman Lena Guerrero labels the Markey amendment an unwarranted attempt to usurp states' authority to regulate production.

"We have said over and over again that the recent changes we've made to our gas production rules are not an attempt to raise prices," she said.

The commission adopted new prorationing rules on April 27. Supporters say the rules will protect producers who withhold their gas from the market from having their properties drained by adjoining producers.

The prior regulatory system failed to offer adequate protection and encouraged overproduction, backers of the new rules say.

The push for new prorationing rules gained momentum this year after exceptionally warm winter weather sent gas prices plunging to $1 per 1,000 cubic feet on the large spot market, the lowest level in more than a decade.

Spot-market prices have since rebounded to about $1.50 — a price producers say is still too low to encourage substantial drilling for new gas reserves.

Markey said the new state prorationing rules could result in U.S. gas consumers being "socked with a $6 billion annual increase in their energy bills."

He said his legislation shows Congress "is not willing to accept an OPEC- style price-support system," but does not prevent states from protecting gas producers from having their properties drained by competitors.

Low fuels cost blunts global warming limits

■ Science, energy market are completely out of step.

By Matthew L. Wald
N.Y. Times News Service

The scientists who will gather at the United Nations Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro next month say that action is needed now to limit global warming. Their science may be right, but their timing could not be worse.

Taking the most important step in slowing climate warming — burning less fuel to cut heat-retaining carbon emissions into the atmosphere — will be extremely difficult because fuel prices are now so low.

Ten years ago, planners were predicting oil at $75 or $100 a barrel in the '90s. Now, said Lee J. Schipper, senior scientist at the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory International Energy Studies Group, the price is so stable that "there's nothing to predict."

"It isn't interesting any more," he added.

The price of oil — now around $20 a barrel — has proved in the last 18 months to be more stable than almost anyone had believed; even a war in the Persian Gulf did not move it higher for long.

In addition, the price of coal is low and has remained stable, and the price of natural gas is declining in some areas, most notably in North America.

None of this makes it impossible to cut fuel use; it just means that science and the energy market are completely out of step. And unlike a decade ago, when the world believed oil should be conserved because the supply was running out, any action today to limit fuel use runs against the economics of cheap energy.

Conservation also goes against the mood in the White House, which would have to lend its support for any global conservation action — like a consumption tax — to take hold.

In fact, in the last 10 years, the amount of oil that has been found and is waiting to be pumped has doubled, to about 1 trillion barrels; natural gas projects are proliferating, and in most parts of the world engineers have long since given up looking for coal.

Another Keating case defendant pleads guilty

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — Another defendant in the federal criminal case against the former managers of the Lincoln Savings & Loan Assocation pleaded guilty Friday, leaving only Charles H. Keating Jr. and his son, Charles H. Keating III, to face trial on the charges this summer.

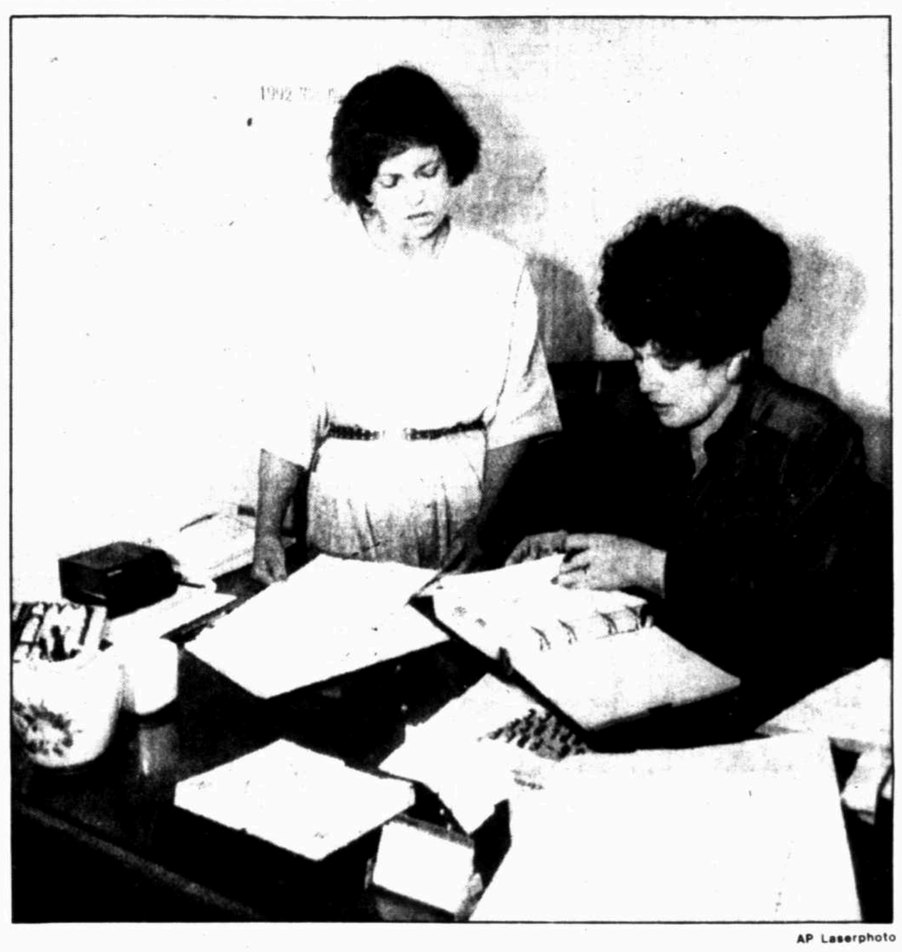

The defendant, Andrew F. Ligget, a former chief financial officer of Lincoln's parent company, American Continental Corp., pleaded guilty to three felony counts relating to money improperly transferred from Lincoln to American Continental. He was the eighth person to plead guilty to Federal criminal charges in the case, and the third in the last week.

Ligget also agreed to cooperate with prosecutors in the case against Keating and his son, said Alice C. Hill, an assistant U.S. attorney.

Ligget, 34, faces a maximum penalty of 15 years in prison and a fine of $750,000. But he is not likely to be sentenced until after the trial.

In his guilty plea, Ligget, who was also a director of Lincoln Savings, admitted to a role in transferring from Lincoln to American Continental $28.7 million during 1986 and 1987 under a tax-sharing agreement earlier than was called for by the agreement.

The effect of the transfer, prosecutors said, was to provide American Continental with illegal, interest-free loans.

Women seek more than money

By Steve Stein
Associated Press writer

BEAUMONT — Women in Southeast Texas say they want to make more than money when they start their own businesses — they also want to make a difference.

Lyn McFadden and Rebecca Patterson, two registered nurses who recently started a specialty medical service in Beaumont, and Inez Morgan, who is developing markets for her hand-painted clothing, say being the prime decision-maker helps promote personal satisfaction.

But because running a business is hard work, it is important not only to research the project but believe in it before starting, they say.

Some people still snicker at the mention of a woman going into business, Patterson said, so confidence helps overcome inexperience, fear and prejudice.

Few people in the white, male-dominated business community have given the women much encouragement about starting a business, they said.

But Patterson feels confident in the business plan she and McFadden have developed with the help of people like Sharon Eaves, project coordinator of the Center for Women's Business Enterprise in Beaumont.

Patterson and McFadden, both in their 40s, said not until recently did they want to give up the security of working for someone else. "I probably wouldn't have done this in my 30s," said McFadden, who met Patterson through her nursing career.

In fact, to supplement their new business, which only has been in operation a few months, the two women still work as relief nurses at a Mobil Corp. medical unit. But as their medical consulting and service business builds, they envision a future without supplemental work.

Transfer agents 'whipping boys' for brokers

By Bill Doyle

Q: During a six-month period, I bought five different stocks from a full-service brokerage firm. Despite repeated requests, I never received a single stock certificate. The broker blamed the transfer agent.

Doyle

Finally, after I became angry with the office manager, he suggested I take my business elsewhere.

I got in touch with a discount broker, who forwarded a request for transfer of the securities to my account at his firm. The five certificates were mailed to me within 10 days.

Can you explain the original delay?

A: While it's impossible to pinpoint the exact cause, apparently somebody at the full-service brokerage goofed.

When you "order out" securities by asking for delivery of certificates, they should reach you in reasonably short order. Because of the record-keeping paperwork involved, you won't get them immediately. But any delay of more than four weeks is unreasonable.

The transfer agent for each stock keeps a record of the name and address of each registered shareowner, and the number of shares owned. The transfer agent also cancels certificates presented for transfer and issues new certificates registered in the names of the new owners.

A delay can happen if a certificate presented for transfer is not in "good delivery" form to comply with the sale. But that is supposed to be squared away by the broker for the person who sold the stock.

Transfer agents are handy whipping boys for brokers when delays run long. Under Securities and Exchange Commission rules, 90 percent of "routine items" presented to transfer agents must be turned around in three business days. There is no indication from the SEC that transfer agents are falling down on their job.

Q: What is the difference between a discount brokerage firm and a full-service brokerage firm?

A: As the terms indicate, the basic difference is discount brokerages charge lower commissions than full service firms. Most full-service brokerages also provide research reports, purchase and sale recommendations and other services, while discounters do not.

However, the line of demarcation between the two types sometimes gets blurred. While some discount brokerages do nothing except handle buy and sell orders, a number of them offer many of the personalized services found at full-service firms.

It stands to reason that the more services a brokerage offers the higher commissions it charges. Investors who want to spend time talking to brokers generally use full-service firms, while commission-conscious people go the discount route.

Q: My uncle, who is both aged and wealthy, became very upset when he learned I have been buying stocks through a brokerage firm other than the one with which he was affiliated all his working life.

I'm afraid he's going to cut me out of his will. I tried to explain that, being newly married, my husband and I have to budget carefully and use a brokerage that charges low commissions.

Uncle really blew up at that. The only printable word he used was: "Impossible." He said all (expletive deleted) brokerages are required to levy the same (expletive deleted) commissions.

Is he right?

A: Your uncle must have retired before May 1, 1975, the date on which fixed commissions -- set by the stock exchanges – were abolished by SEC order and so-called negotiated commissions were introduced.

Nowadays each brokerage posts its own commission schedule. In theory, all customers can haggle with brokers over commissions. In practice, only big or active customers can get those charges down.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ98763 ♡106 ◇85 ♣K8
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You know where you want to play, but not at what level. A bid of four spades would show no interest in slam and that's the action you would take without the king of clubs. With so many distributional assets, this hand is too strong to sign off. Bid three spades, intending to correct to four if partner perseveres with no trump.

Q.2—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q85 ♡107632 ◇A5 ♣J94
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What action do you take?
A.—Had our hand been more unbalanced or our hearts better, we would take out into our five-card suit. But with this balanced holding and an honor in each of our short suits, we see no reason to disturb the contract. Pass.

Q.3—North-South vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K ♡A102 ◇AK10752 ♣J98
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Make the king of spades the queen of diamonds, and we would jump rebid three diamonds even though the hand is a point weaker. Here, however, the suit doesn't quite measure up for a jump rebid, so we would simply rebid two diamonds.

Q.4—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠9762 ♡K9763 ◇5 ♣Q83
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What do you respond?
A.—It is tempting to bid two clubs, probing for a four-card major with the opening bidder. The trouble is that, if opener denies a major by bidding two diamonds, two hearts by you is invitational and you certainly don't want partner to act again. Bid two hearts or, if you play transfers, two diamonds.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠QJ83 ♡AKJ1054 ◇A62 ♣Void
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—Does partner have the right cards for a grand slam? We doubt that even the most ardent scientist would be able to find out. However, we certainly want to be in one should partner hold the ace and king of spades. To find out, use the Grand Slam Force. Bid five no trump, asking partner to bid seven spades holding two of the three top honors.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A6542 ♡QJ9763 ◇Void ♣65
The bidding has proceeded:

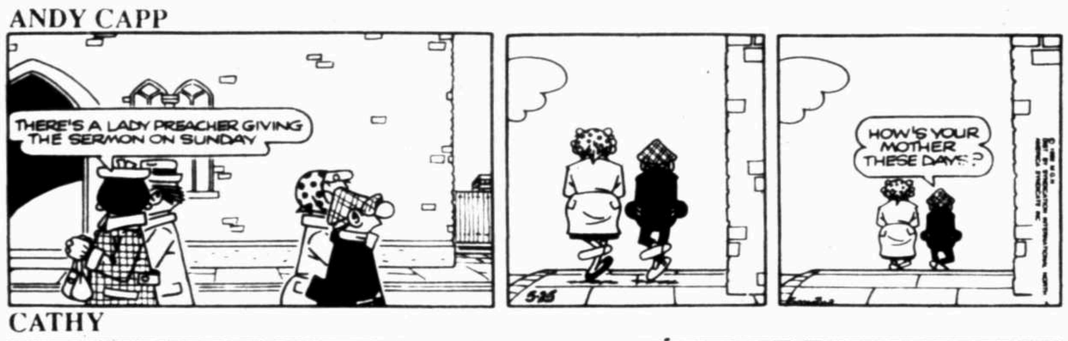

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—We can construct hands where North-South are cold for slam opposite a minimum opening bid by North, but there are many many more where North will have too many values in diamonds to make anything above game safe. Therefore, we would jump to four spades.

CBS's Charles Kuralt lists some favorite summer getaway spots

RADNOR, Pa. — Charles Kuralt, who has taken television viewers on the road with him for 25 years, has some favorite summer getaways.

TV Guide asked the CBS correspondent to name them for its May 30 issue.

Kuralt lists Ely, Minn., at the edge of the Boundary Waters Wilderness Area, "a lovely getaway" for canoeing on countless lakes, and Rockport, Maine, "the most perfect small harbor in America," for watching lobster boats.

He also lists:

San Francisco, "our most beautiful city," for shops, views and food; Glacier National Park in Montana, "America's most breathtaking corner"; and Sitka, Alaska, a fishing town typical of southeast Alaska towns that "remind us of the independent, rugged folk we were, once upon a time."

Kuralt's favorite spots for the rest of the year: autumn in Vermont, winter in New Orleans and spring in the Blue Ridge Mountains of North Carolina.

"I come from the experience more convinced than ever that my vocation takes me onward into those fields" of working for reconciliation and justice, Waite told graduates Saturday at Samford University.

Waite's Shiite Muslim captors released him last November. He is at Cambridge University working on a book about his experiences and is completing a 13-year stint as adviser and envoy of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Waite helped negotiate the release of hostages from Iran and Libya in the early 1980s. He had gone to Beirut in January 1987 to negotiate the release of Thomas Sutherland when he was kidnapped.

PHILADELPHIA — Actor Danny Aiello said he once cracked safes and vending machines to pay the rent before breaking into acting.

"I did some stupid things that I feel ashamed of," Aiello said in the June issue of Applause magazine, published by Philadelphia's public radio and television station.

"I hate to even talk about them because it sends out mixed signals," he said. "It's like the celebrity former dope addict who says 'Look, you kids, don't start dope.' But the fact is, that was my life."

Aiello, who plays Jack Ruby in the movie "Ruby," dropped out of high school in New York City, joined the Army and married at 16. He got a job with Greyhound announcing buses and became his union's president.

In 1967, Aiello lost his job and had to find other ways to support his wife, Sandy, and their four children.

Sweethearts reunited after 50 years

By Lucy Soto
Associated Prss writer

SOUTH CONGAREE, S.C. — Love is sweeter the second time around, says Ray Vasby, who 10 days ago met his wartime sweetheart, Patsy Holmes, after 50 years of separation and misunderstanding.

Vasby, a retired yacht builder from Baltimore, got off a bus in Columbia about midnight o see the British woman he says he should have married when he was a young soldier.

"I looked over and saw this gorgeous little redhead in a dress. It hit all at once. It was like a shock. Something went into my brain and all the memories came pouring out," said Vasby, nestled on a couch with Ms. Holmes.

"It takes a long time to make up 50 years, and if things work out I'll go to Baltimore, sell my property and come down here," he said.

Vasby, now 68, was 19 when he met 16-year-old Olga Patricia Dulcibul Sewell in the town near London where he was stationed with the Army. They fell in love.

Then Vasby was sent away to France to help prepare for the Allies' invasion.

"He said he was going to come back and marry me, but I didn't think he'd do that," Ms. Holmes recalled.

"I thought the proper thing to do was to get married and have a baby," she said. "I knew a lot of English guys were getting killed like crazy. And I knew the Americans were going to leave. At 17, I panicked."

Ms. Holmes, now 65, married, moved to the United States and had four children. Vasby also married. He moved to Baltimore and had five children.

"When I came to America I was still thinking about him although I was married to someone else," she said.

She worked for Kmart in Virginia during the mid-1960s and was offered a choice of transferring to Baltimore or to Columbia. She chose South Carolina. Later, she learned from Vasby's mother in Iowa that he lived in Baltimore.

"It's so ironic. If I'd gone to Baltimore the temptation would have been too great and I would have gone to see him," Ms. Holmes said. "And that might have been disastrous for everybody."

After outliving two husbands, Ms. Holmes tracked Vasby down. She called at Easter and learned that his wife died last year.

"I said what I've been wanting to say all these years. 'Ray Vasby, I've loved you all my life,'" she said.

Vasby paused, then said "Oh Gingerhead," using the name he called her while they were courting, she said.

Hours before Vasby was to arrive in Columbia, Ms. Holmes received the letter that probably would have changed her life in 1944, when Vasby was too embroiled in the war to write.

The envelope, addressed to "Darling Olga Patricia Dulcibul Sewell," asked "will you marry me? I waited 50 years."

She hasn't answered yet.

"The feelings aren't weaker or stronger," Ms. Holmes said in explanation. "You think things through now."

KENT OIL, INC.

KENT KWIK CONVENIENCE STORES

WHY KENT OIL COMPANY?

Kent Oil (operating Kent Kwik convenience stores) is a West Texas-based company, thirty five years old and still growing. We offer many benefits to our employees. These benefits include:

- Company-assisted medical, dental and life insurance
- Paid vacations
- Sick pay program
- Tuition reimbursement program
- Special incentive programs for all employees
- Profit-sharing and retirement plan
- Intensive new hire training
- Structured continual management training
- Flexible scheduling
- Full and part time hours available
- Work close to home
- Affiliation with Odessa 66 credit union

We attempt whenever possible to promote from within. All of our current store managers, middle and upper management started with the company at the entry level. It is possible to move up quickly based on your experience and level of education.

Working in a convenience store is both exciting and challenging. You have to be outgoing and enjoy serving the public, while at the same time be a self-starter, as you receive very little on the job supervision.

If you are considering a career in the retail industry, give Kent Oil your consideration. Apply at your nearest Kent Kwik.
