Republican candidates take two top seats

District voters pick Smith over Snelson

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Mr. Smith is going to Washington.

Just 15 days short of his 39th birthday, the near $1 million investment Lamar Smith, a Republican from San Antonio, made in his 15-month congressional campaign paid off and won him a seat in the U.S. House of Representatives.

"I am most pleased with our win in Midland. It was key in our race and we felt to win we had to carry Midland," Smith, U.S. 21st District Representative-elect, said late Tuesday night from his campaign headquarters in San Antonio.

Smith, a fifth-generation Texan born in San Antonio, beat Democratic candidate and Midlander Pete Snelson and Libertarian candidate Jim Robinson to carry on the Republican representation of the 21st District in Washington D.C.

Though Smith said he wasn't sure he'd take Midland County, he said he had remained hopeful and added that was a part of the reason he spent 64 different days campaigning in the Tall City.

"I could have only done it with the help of my old and new friends in Midland. It was the key to the victory up there. We had a great organization in Midland," Smith added.

At 9 a.m. this morning, Associated Press statistics showed Smith won the race with 100,072 votes or 60.67 percent, while Snelson chalked up 63,421 votes or 38.45 percent.

Libertarian candidate Jim Robinson got only 1,427 votes or .86 percent.

He took the majority of Midland County votes away from the hometown candidate, winning 55.4 percent (13,289 votes) of the vote to Snelson's 44 percent (10,552 votes). Robinson garnered less than 1 percent of the vote in Midland County.

"We were certainly disappointed we didn't carry Midland County," Snelson said. "The basic premise going into the race was that we would carry Midland County."

"We felt we needed Midland and Tom Green counties as well as the rural counties to offset Bexar County (Smith's San Antonio stronghold)," Snelson said.

Snelson chalked his loss to the "party identification" element. "It appears it was a party matter. Obviously we misgauged that, but there's nothing to be ashamed of. We ran a good race," Snelson said.

Clements returned to governorship

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — For the third time in a row, Texans have ousted their incumbent governor, sending former Gov. William P. Clements back into office over his old nemesis, incumbent Democratic Gov. Mark W. White, by a small but stable margin.

Clements claimed victory at 10 p.m. Tuesday, poised to return to the Governors Mansion after a four-year absence. With 99 percent of the vote in, Clements led with 1,799,428 votes — 53 percent — to White's 1,569,407 votes — 46 percent. Libertarian Theresa Doyle slightly more than 1 percent of the vote.

"This is an historic election," said a beeming Clements, flanked by his wife, Rita. "This is a night to rejoice."

He said Texans must "literally plan for the future" by continuing progress in education reforms, and "holding the line on state spending." Clements pledged to sell the controversial jet airplane White purchased in 1983 "when my hand comes off that (swearing-in) Bible."

Close to tears, White conceded the first defeat in his political career shortly after 11 p.m., giving up hope that late returns from South Texas would help him overcome Clements' all-night lead.

"Tonight the election did not go with us," said White, surrounded by his family. "I want to thank the people of Texas for giving me the opportunity to serve as their governor these last four years.

"God bless you."

Clements' win marked the third straight loss by an incumbent Texas governor seeking re-election. The first came in 1978 when Democrat Dolph Briscoe lost his party's nomination to John Hill; the second was White's upset victory over Clements in 1982.

The bitter rematch of the two men's 1982 race boiled down to a final skirmish over voter turnout, with each side battling the rain to get their voters to the polls. While warm, dry weather reigned in South Texas — a key Democratic stronghold for White — heavy rains moved across the state, hitting Houston and East Texas by late afternoon.

White campaign aides said the weather depressed turnout in traditionally Democratic areas.

Exit polls conducted by the Southwest Voter Research Institute showed White maintaining the substantial margin among Hispanics that helped propel him to victory in 1982. William Velasquez, president of the institute, said his survey of 50 polling sites showed White ahead 87-13 in those precincts.

Three of four local contested races claimed by GOP

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

With the exception of one office, Republicans garnered all the local contested races Tuesday.

The Republican winners were Guy McCrary, Keith Jobe and Winfree Brown. Dee Thompson was the only local Democrat to win a contested race.

Midland voters elected a new face to the County Commissioner's court by an overwhelming majority in making McCrary County Commissioner for Precinct 2.

Unofficial reports show McCrary getting 60.8 percent of the vote with 5,627 votes, while his opponent, Don Boydstun got 39.2 percent with 3,623 votes.

McCrary said a tough primary and primary runoff in the spring helped strengthen his support on Tuesday.

"The tough contest in the spring offered us a good base on which to build for the general election. I think the momentum of the primary and primary runoff carried us into a strong position for the election," McCrary said.

McCrary, a 33-year-old marketing consultant, campaigned on the promise that he would bring "new blood" to the County Commissioner's court.

His Democratic opponent Boydstun, a 40-year-old design technician, campaigned on the promise to be a full-time commissioner.

Getting familiar with the county will be one of McCrary's first goals as an officeholder, he said.

"I think the first thing on my agenda is to get a complete orientation to the county operations and procedures.

"I hope to do that by visiting extensively with each department and learning about their purpose, mission and problems.

"These discussions will probably yield a better understanding of what the obligations ought to be for my first year in office," McCrary said.

McCrary will fill Commissioner's Wally Craig's seat on Jan. 1. Craig, elected to the County Commission in 1983, was narrowly beat by McCrary in a June runoff race.

On June 7, McCrary captured 53 percent of the vote while Craig got 47 percent of the vote.

In other local races, voters selected Jobe, 38, a sheriff's criminal investigator to fill the vacant Justice of the Peace, Precinct 1, Place 1, left by Charles Sprayberry.

Jobe, a Republican, unofficially got 72.7 percent with 16,270 votes. His opponent, Midland businesswoman Aquilla Watson received 27.3 percent with 6,117 votes.

MIDLAND UNITED WAY

Can you do your share? This year it's more important than ever!

County balloting follows GOP line at 3-to-1 ratio

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland County voters towed the Republican Party line in Tuesday's general election, casting ballots by a 3-to-1 margin for GOP candidates in national, state and local races.

In the battle for the 21st Congressional District seat currently occupied by Rep. Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt, Lamar Smith, a Republican from San Antonio, defeated Democratic opponent Pete Snelson of Midland by 13,289 votes to 10,552 in Midland County. Libertarian candidate Jim Robinson received 165 Midland County votes.

Clements earned 10,269 votes to White's 6,382 and Libertarian Theresa Doyle's 353 votes.

GOP candidate David Davidson defeated incumbent Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Libertarian Bill Howell in Midland County. Davidson received 12,435 votes to Hobby's 10,626 and Howell's 373.

In the race for attorney general, Republican Roy Barrera Jr. won easily in Midland County, defeating Democratic opponent Jim Mattox and Libertarian Mike Stephens by 16,686 to 7,109 and 249 votes respectively.

In the battle for land commissioner, GOP candidate Marion Dudley Anderson defeated incumbent Democrat Garry Mauro by 12,163 to 10,049 in Midland County. Libertarian Honey Sue Lanham received 555 votes.

In the agriculture commissioner's race, Midlanders chose Republican Bill Powers over incumbent Democrat Jim Hightower.

Powers earned 12,391 votes to Hightower's 10,100 and Libertarian Rebecca Reed's 332 votes.

GOP candidate Milton Fox defeated his Democratic opponent John Sharp among Midland County voters in the race for railroad commissioner. Fox received 14,601 votes to Sharp's 7,946 and Chloe Daniel's 342 votes.

In the race for Texas Supreme Court, Place 1, Republican Charles Howell defeated Democrat Oscar Mauzy in Midland County by 14,799 to 6,558 votes.

Republican Nathan White led Democratic opponent Robert Campbell for the Texas Supreme Court, Place 2 here. The Midland County votes were 13,448 for White and 7,736 for Campbell.

State Rep. Tom Craddick, a Republican from Midland, ran unopposed for a another two-year term. Craddick received 8,352 votes.

Midland County voters favored a constitutional amendment to allow the State Legislature to provide apportionment of the value of railroad rolling stock among counties for the purpose of taxation. The vote was 8,673 to 5,858.

Voters here opposed a constitutional amendment requiring each House to include in its rule of procedure a rule that each bill contain a title expressing the bill's subject and providing for the continuing revision of state laws. The vote was 891 to 4,102.

Democratic show of strength tilts Senate's scales of power

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Democratic surge ended Republican rule of the Senate's levers of power, forcing President Reagan to choose between compromise or stalemate in the last two years of his White House term.

In a dramatic show of strength in Tuesday's elections, Democrats captured Republican seats in seven states: Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, South Dakota, Alabama, Maryland and Nevada. They turned back strong challenges to Democratic seats in Colorado and Louisiana and yielded a Democratic seat only in Missouri.

While all the races weren't settled early today, the Democrats were leading in two other states now held by Republicans. If that trend holds, Democrats would control the Senate by a 56-44 majority.

The Democratic triumph ended the Republicans' 53-47 grip on the Senate. It came at the end of the costliest campaign in history — and one that had no national theme but was characterized by negative television advertising — "mudslinging" in popular parlance.

Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia — now in line to become majority leader — predicted that a Democratic-controlled Senate will "pull the administration back toward the center in its extremes in foreign policy and its extremes in domestic policy."

"The Democrats are all set to go to work," he said. "We don't want confrontation."

"I would hope we would not see a fortresss White House that feels it is under siege," Byrd said. "We Democrats feel that for the good of the country we want to all cooperate. I would hope the president would not be confrontational."

Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas now will become floor leader of a minority, freed to pursue presidential ambitions without having to defend Reagan's agenda on the Senate floor. Dole said the Democratic victory would "make it more difficult for Ronald Reagan."

He also said the White House will be forced to be very careful in selecting judicial nominations.

The Democrats, while taking over the Senate for the first time since the Reagan landslide in 1980, marginally strengthened their numbers in the House.

That meant Reagan would have a more difficult time selling the most controversial of his programs, from his Strategic Defense Initiative to his American-financed war against the leftist regime in Nicaragua. Democrats were likely to press for new taxes to combat the deficit and for legislation to stem the tide of imports from abroad.

Texans choose oilman Clements to fight oil-fueled recession

AUSTIN (AP) — The man Texans put back into office to guide the state through an oil-fueled recession is a man who made his millions in the oil field.

Gov.-elect William Perry Clements, who was governor from 1979 through 1982, was born April 13, 1917, in Dallas, where he graduated from Highland Park High School and Southern Methodist University.

In 1937, he went to South Texas to work as an oilfield roughneck. On New Year's Day 1947, he took borrowed money and two used drilling rigs to form SEDCO Inc. A day before Christmas 1984, SEDCO merged with Schlumberger Ltd.

Clements, who defeated Gov. Mark White on Tuesday, had built SEDCO into a powerful, multimillion-dollar firm that operated wherever there was oil to be found around the globe.

Though active in various civic and professional organizations, he resisted early Republican efforts to interest him in elected office. He served on the board of governors at SMU and, an Eagle Scout himself, on the national executive board of the Boy Scouts of America.

In 1972, Clements was the top man in Texas for President Nixon's reelection campaign. In 1973, he became the No. 2 man in the Department of Defense, a post he held until 1977 when he came home and prepared for his first ballot appearance.

Clements said his wife Rita, a former national GOP committeewoman, urged him to run for governor. It was a longshot Republican candidacy in a state that had picked only Democrats for statewide office for 100 years.

After sweeping aside Ray Hutchison of Dallas in the primary, Clements shocked Democratic Attorney General John Hill in the November 1978 general election.

He came to Austin with a reputation as a tough-talking businessman who saw no reason to change just because he had become a politician.

Clements proved successful with his legislative programs, despite working with a Democrat-dominated Legislature. After his first legislative session in 1979, he claimed a 76 percent success rate for bills he backed, including several in a "War on Drugs" package.

It didn't take long for Clements and then-Attorney General White to develop a mutually antagonistic relationship that soon became a clear foreshadowing of a head-to-head race, or two, to come.

In 1982, White defeated Democrats Buddy Temple and Bob Armstrong in the Democratic gubernatorial primary to set up a November meeting with Clements. White won, pulling 1.7 million votes to Clements' 1.47 million.

After the loss, Clements said his biggest regret was leaving office before his Texas 2000 commission, assembled to assess Texas' long-range future, completed its work.

Campaign comments recorded

Associated Press

Here is what some of the Texas candidates had to say on election night:

"What a night, what a night, what a night" — Bill Clements, when it became clear he would defeat Democratic incumbent Mark White in the governor's race.

"I'm very proud of the work we've done and the accomplishments we've made. I hadn't really planned on having to make this speech tonight," White, conceding defeat in his bid for a second gubernatorial term.

"I think it shows we as a state have matured in that we judge individuals as individuals and not by how we spell last names," — Raul Gonzalez on being elected to the Texas Supreme Court, the first Hispanic elected to statewide office.

"It would not be unlike the days when Lyndon Johnson and Sam Rayburn were the two principal people in Congress," U.S. Rep. Jim Wright, D-Texas, in line to be the next speaker of the House, on his possible ascendancy and that of U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen to chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

"A campaign of hate or pity is resented by the voters," — Bill Aleshire, a conscientious objector who beat an ex-Green Beret war hero for Travis County judge, commenting on the Vietnam issue.

"We never mentioned my opponent's name," — U.S. Rep. John Bryant, who beat Tom Carter in the 21st Congressional district.

"I'm going to wait until the last vote comes in out of respect for my supporters." — Roy Barrera, the Republican candidate defeated in the attorney general's race.

"There's no substitute for a lot of friends," — Lamar Smith, the Republican elected to Congress in the 21st district.

"They add up the votes, and the one who has the most wins," — B.D. Griffin, who lost his race for county judge in Tarrant County.

"...I give all the credit and all the glory to God," — indicted McLennan County District Attorney Vic Feazell on his re-election.

"We're getting pretty tired," Jackie Griffin, assistant clerk helping count votes by hand in Ellis County, as the count dragged on through 7 a.m. Wednesday.

CLEMENTS

"It's remarkably similar," Velazquez said. "In 1982, he (White) got 86.1 percent of the Hispanic vote."

But top Clements advisor Karl Rove said exit polls showed Clements overcoming some of 1982's strong pro-White vote in South Texas. Rove attributed that to GOP attorney general candidate Roy Barrera Jr., saying Barrera "helped energize some of our middle-class Hispanic vote."

Republican U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm said White's use of heavily negative advertising after "his support among minorities went soft" in the last several weeks backfired, mobilizing both Anglos and minorities to vote for Clements.

Various pre-election polls showed Clements leading by 5 to 7 points one week before Election Day. The former governor cautioned his troops against complacency, reminding them that the polls showed him ahead of White by 11 points the day before White turned him out of office in 1982 with a 56-43 margin of victory.

While the candidates occasionally veered to discuss utility regulation and prison overcrowding, the campaign focused most closely on financial issues: management of the burgeoning state budget and revitalization of the slumping state economy.

White, 46, a Houston lawyer and former Texas secretary of state and attorney general, stressed his administration's accomplishments in public education reform, highway funding and water management as the keys for economic diversification. White asked voters to accept the school changes and highway programs as important enough to justify the record state tax increases he signed to pay for them.

Siezing upon Clements' so-called "secret plan" to balance the state budget, the Democratic incumbent spent millions on television advertising trying to portray his opponent as a man who would dismantle programs for the poor, the elderly and the handicapped. "We must not retreat," he said.

A 69-year-old retired president of the oil drilling company he founded, Clements spent his millions reminding Texans of the bounding economy they enjoyed during his 1979-1983 term in office. He offered a six-point jobs plan, stressing his close relationship with the Republican administration in office, as evidence that he could rejuvinate the state's devastated energy, finance, agriculture and real estate industries.

"State revenues are at an all-time high," Clements said over and over, painting White as a "tax-and-spend" politician who lacked the necessary businessman's savvy. He listed two tax increases and the tripling of college tuition among White's "litany of broken promises" to the voters.

The day after he lost to White in 1982, Clements vowed to never again seek elected office. He changed his mind in July 1985, entering the GOP primary and trouncing U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler of Hunt and former Congressman Kent Hance of Lubbock, a recent Republican convert.

Battered by teachers upset over the reading-and-writing test he supported, White slid through the Democratic primary, barely defeating five lesser-known challengers on May 3. Late spring polls showed him trailing Clements by as many as 18 percentage points.

White sweated through the early summer, finally calling back-to-back special legislative sessions to address the state's record $3.5 billion deficit. His popularity zoomed after lawmakers approved his temporary sales tax increase. One late-September poll showed he and Clements tied with 46 percent of the vote each.

As he did during his first term, Clements will once again find himself the lone Republican in state leadership.

SMITH

"The rural counties came through for us. We weren't strong in the Hill country," he added. One Snelson campaign staffer attributed Smith's victory to "Just a bunch of (straight-ticket Republican) lever pullers."

"My hope was that people would cross over (party lines) so that Midland County would become the domicile of a congressman. It's important to the Permian Basin," Snelson said.

In carrying Midland, Smith said he felt the voters were giving him their vote of confidence. "I will work as hard in office as I have during the campaign. The bigger journey lies ahead," Smith said.

"I can't say what the determining factor was in the race," Smith said, though throughout his campaign he warned voters Snelson would get to Washington D.C. and "have to tow the liberal Democratic party line."

"I think it was helpful that early on I took a stand and addressed the issues of the oil and gas industry, drugs and excessive government spending. I think those issues cut across party lines," Smith said.

"The fact remains, San Antonio now has three (federal) congressmen. Time will tell about the quality of the work Smith does for the Permian Basin," Snelson added.

"We ran stronger than any other Democrat on the ticket in Midland County," Snelson said.

Smith graduated from Yale University in 1969 and received his law degree from Southern Methodist University in 1975. Before going into politics, Smith was a business and financial writer for The Christian Science Monitor.

He is co-owner and partner of the Lamar Seeligson Ranch located near Corpus Christi. He served as an official with the Small Business Administration in Washington D.C. from 1969-1970, as Bexar County Commissioner from 1982-1985 and as a state representative from 1981-1982. In addition, he was active in Bexar County campaigns for U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm and President Ronald Reagan and Vice President George Bush.

Smith is married to Jane Shoults Smith and they have two children; a daughter Nell, 9, and a son Tobin, 7.

At the small gathering at Snelson's headquarters, he thanked all for coming and helping during his campaign.

"Failing to carry Midland County sort of set the course for the evening. I just felt Midland would want to have its own congressman," Snelson said.

Jobe said his qualifications helped him win the justice seat.

"People looked at the qualifications of both candidates," he said.

Jobe said he will work to establish a "working relationship" with Justice of Peace Robert Pine and he said he will work to computerize the justice office.

Jobe campaigned on the promise to bring back integrity and respect to the justice office. Ms. Watson promised to run the office smoothly and efficiently.

Ms. Thompson will serve her eighth four-year term as County Treasurer since taking office in 1958.

On Tuesday she faced her first challenger in 16 years, winning a close race with Republican Tom Miller.

Ms. Thompson unofficially received 53.2 percent with 11,985 votes and Miller got 46.8 percent with 10,564 of the votes.

In the other contested race, incumbent Republican Winfree Brown easily won over write-in candidate Scott Smith.

Brown, 59, will serve his fifth four-year term as County Commissioner Precinct 4 after getting 95.1 percent with 5,455 votes.

Smith received 4.9 percent with 280 votes.

SENATE

Reagan had campaigned for continued Republican control of the Senate with the fervor of a personal crusade, saying a Democratic victory Tuesday would confine him to a six-year presidency.

But while his own popularity remains at near-record levels, it did not transfer to the GOP candidates — most of them freshman swept into office with narrow victories in the 1980 election.

"There's no question that the president is going to have a much more difficult time getting his programs through," said Frank Fahrenkopf, Republican national chairman. "But the president is a master of building coalitions...and he always has that ability to carry his message directly to the American people."

Paul Kirk, the Democratic chairman, said the reversal of political fortunes means Reagan will "have to be in a position of either accepting what the Senate and House send to him, compromising with them to get a result, or putting himself in sort of a Captain Veto position."

Said retiring House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr.: "If there was a Reagan revolution, it's over.... "It will be the art of government by compromise. It has happened many times in the past and it's not that bad."

"It's going to be contentious, no doubt about it," said Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., a possible 1988 presidential contender.

But he insisted that the election was not a referendum on Reagan.

"Democrats across the country were not campaigning against Ronald Reagan," Kemp said. "In fact a lot of them sounded like Ronald Reagan."

In the South, Democratic Gov. Bob Graham defeated Sen. Paula Hawkins in Florida.

In Louisiana, Rep. John Breaux kept the Senate seat of retiring veteran Russell Long in the Democratic column by defeating GOP Rep. Henson Moore.

Georgia Democratic Rep. Wyche Fowler ousted one-term GOP Sen. Mack Mattingly.

Former North Carolina Gov. Terry Sanford put an end to the brief Senate career of GOP Sen. James T. Broyhill, who was appointed to the position earlier this year to replace Sen. John East, also a Republican, who committed suicide.

In Maryland, Rep. Barbara Mikulski swept conservative Republican Linda Chavez, a former Reagan aide, out of the race for the seat being vacated by retiring GOP Sen. Charles McC. Mathias.

South Dakota Republican Sen. James Abnor went down to defeat at the hands of Democratic Rep. Thomas A. Dashcle.

And in a close race in Nevada, Democratic Rep. Harry Reid defeated GOP Rep. James Santini to take the Republican seat being vacated by Sen. Paul Laxalt.

One of the few bright spots in an otherwise gloomy night for the GOP was the victory in Missouri of former Republican Gov. Christopher S. "Kit" Bond over Lt. Gov. Harriet Woods for the Democratic seat vacated by retiring Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton.

Democrats fought back a strong Republican challenge in Colorado for the seat of Democratic Sen. Gary Hart, who is retiring to concentrate on his expected bid for the presidency in 1988. Democratic Rep. Tim Wirth defeated GOP Rep. Kenneth B. Kramer.

By numbers and history, the Democrats always had an edge in the struggle for control of the Senate.

As a result of the Reagan landslide six years ago, Republicans had 22 seats to defend, Democrats only 12. And six of those generally were viewed as safe Democratic.

Voter turnout about 47 percent

AUSTIN (AP) — Almost 47 percent of Texas' registered voters showed up at the polls on election day, slightly higher than state officials' predictions.

With 99 percent of the state's precincts reporting, 3,413,029 of 7,287,173 registered voters had cast ballots in the governor's race Tuesday.

Secretary of State Myra McDaniel had predicted a 44 percent turnout. Gov. Mark White, defeated by Republican former Gov. Bill Clements, had talked about the possibility of a 50 percent turnout.

In 1982, when White ousted Clements, 3.2 million votes were cast in the gubernatorial race on a rainy Election Day across the state. That represented a 50 percent turnout.

In 1984, when President Reagan carried Texas over Democrat Walter Mondale, 5.3 million ballots were cast in a 68 percent turnout.

Regional reports from Tuesday's election showed varied turnout around the state.

Midland County voters favored a constitutional amendment allowing political subdivisions the opportunity to engage in business with authorized mutual insurance companies. The vote was 10,077 to 4,006.

Voters here also favored a constitutional amendment to allow branch banking in a city or county where its principal facility is located. The vote was 12,763 to 3,316.

Statewide, all four amendments passed.

Governorship goes to Republican; Few other state races follow suit

DALLAS (AP) — Texas voters said yes to Republican Bill Clements' proposal to reclaim the governor's office, but no to most other GOP candidates running around the state.

Except for tossing out incumbent Gov. Mark White, voters showed little dissatisfaction Tuesday with other Democrats, choosing one who became the first Hispanic elected to statewide office in Texas.

They also re-elected longtime U.S. Rep. Jim Wright, D-Fort Worth, in line to be the next speaker of the House, and maintained the traditional majority of Democrats in the Texas House delegation.

Four state constitutional amendments passed, including one that allows branch banking.

As Clements appeared before his supporters to claim victory Tuesday night, he recalled the pain of conceding defeat in 1982, when White, then-attorney general, ousted him in an upset.

"I remember another walk four years ago," said the man whose election in 1978 made him the first GOP governor since Reconstruction. "I want us to think in terms of humbleness and the fact that we are really honored. This is a historic occasion for all of us."

With 99.3 percent of the vote counted by the secretary of state's office, Clements had 1,795,464 votes, or 52.75 percent, to 1,565,872 votes, or 46 percent, for White. A third candidate, Libertarian Theresa Doyle of San Antonio, polled only 42,205 votes, or 1.24 percent.

Their campaign was dominated by the sour economy, caused by low oil prices, and by negative advertising, sharp rhetoric and the discovery of an electronic bugging device in a Clements adviser's office.

In congressional races, Democrats won 17 seats in the state's 27-member delegation, returning seven unopposed U.S. House members and 10 incumbents in contested races.

The Republicans won 10 contests, holding on to several of the seats gained on the coattails of Ronald Reagan's 1984 victory.

In easily winning re-election to the 12th Congressional District, Wright declared that his likely ascendancy to House speaker, combined with Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's takeover of the Senate Finance Committee, gives Texas new clout in Washington.

"It would not be unlike the days when Lyndon Johnson and Sam Rayburn were the two principal people in Congress," Wright said.

At the state level, Texas found itself with two top office-holders from different political parties, as it did in 1978 when Clements first was elected.

Fourteen-year veteran Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, a Democrat, easily defeated GOP business consultant David Davidson of Austin and Libertarian candidate Bill Howell of Dallas.

Incumbent Attorney General Jim Mattox dashed Republican San Antonio district judge Roy Barrera Jr.'s hopes, even though Mattox's victory of less than 52 percent was far smaller than he had expected.

In the land commissioner's race, incumbent Democrat Garry Mauro, with more than 61 percent of the vote, beat Republican M.D. Anderson and Libertarian Honey Sue Lanham of Austin.

One-term agriculture commissioner Jim Hightower sailed to victory with more than 60 percent of the vote, as he defeated Republican Bill Powers of Austin and Libertarian Rebecca Reed, a university student in San Antonio.

Democratic state Sen. John Sharp of Victoria was elected to the Texas Railroad Commission, besting Republican state Rep. Milton Fox of Houston and Libertarian candidate Chloe "Jack" Daniels of Farmers Branch.

State treasurer Ann Richards and comptroller Bob Bullock, both Democrats who faced token opposition from Libertarian candidates, won easy victories.

All three challenged Texas Supreme Court justices were re-elected to the Democratic-controlled court, including Raul Gonzalez, who was appointed to the bench two years ago and now becomes the first Hispanic elected to statewide office. Gonzalez and James Wallace defeated Republican challengers, and Robert Campbell handily beat his Libertarian opponent.

Democratic state Sen. Oscar Mauzy won election to a vacant seat on the court, beating challenger Charles Ben Howell, an appeals court justice.

Unopposed for seats on the Court of Criminal Appeals were Rusty Duncan and Justices Marvin O. Teague and Mike McCormick, all Democrats.

In the only congressional district without an incumbent running, the 21st, Republican former Bexar County Commissioner Lamar Smith beat former state Sen. Pete Snelson, D-Midland. The post was vacated when Tom Loeffler made his unsuccessful run for the GOP gubernatorial nomination.

Republican 'class of '84' no fluke, balloting shows

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Preliminary results from Tuesday's election indicate at least four of the six Texas freshman Republicans swept into office by the Reagan landslide two years ago were re-elected.

The Republican "class of '84" proved their election was no fluke. Their showing, combined with William Clements' wresting the governor's office from Gov. Mark White, lends credibility to the theory that the state is in the midst of a genuine "realignment" away from the Democratic Party.

The one open seat, the 21st District spot resigned by Republican Rep. Tom Loeffler to make an unsuccessful run for his party's nomination for governor, remains in Republican hands.

Republican Lamar Smith, 38, a wealthy lawyer-rancher from San Antonio had a decisive lead over W. A. "Pete" Snelson at midnight, according to state Republican Party headquarters.

Smith won in the district's population centers of San Antonio and Midland.

Snelson, a conservative Democrat from Midland who had represented much of the district in the state Senate for nearly two decades, was trailing in his hometown.

He chalked his defeat up to straight-ticket Republican voting.

It was a good day for Democrats, too, as eight veterans ran with no opposition. Two of them — Albert G. Bustamante of San Antonio, representing the 23rd District, and Jim Chapman of Sulphur Springs representing the 1st District — were freshmen.

Rep. Jim Wright, D-Ft. Worth, heir apparent to the position of Speaker of the House in the next Congress, defeated Republican Don R. McNiel by 70 percent to 30 percent.

No Republican took a seat from a Democrat this year, while two years ago the GOP captured four. The state's lineup in the House of Representatives now is 17 Democrats and 10 Republicans.

As late returns trickled in, it appeared the Democrats could take one of those Republican seats — held now by freshman Rep. Mac Sweeney — back again. The Texas congressman considered by political analysts to be most vulnerable, Sweeney, 31, of Wharton, was losing to Democrat Greg Laughlin, 43, a trial lawyer from West Columbia making his first race, with more than half the vote counted.

Sweeney alienated some voters by relying less on old style politicking — shaking hands at rural feed stores and county fairs — and depending more on expensive, high-tech computer mailings and telephone networks. He tried to mend fences with constituents who complained he didn't pay enough attention to the district in his first term, and spent approximately twice as much money as Laughlin.

The other freshman Republican considered to be vulnerable from the "class of '84," Rep. Joe Barton of Ennis, was deadlocked with his opponent, Preston M. "Pete" Geren, 33, a Ft. Worth lawyer who offered himself as a conservative Democrat in the "Bentsen mold."

With approximately half the vote counted, Barton and Geren were 50-50. Geren was for two years director of Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's Texas offices.

The dean of the Texas delegation, Democratic Rep. Jack Brooks of Beaumont, handily turned back a challenge from Lisa Duperier, a former Reagan administration official. Brooks, 64, has represented the 9th District since 1953.

Rep. J.J. "Jake" Pickle, 73, a Democrat who has represented the Austin area since 1964, had a big lead — 70 percent to 30 percent — over former Austin Mayor Carole Rylander, who switched parties to run as a Republican.

Some observers speculated that Pickle would resign after another term and that Rylander was "running to run again."

"He beat the daylights out of that woman," reported a worker at Democratic Party headquarters at Austin.

Pickle reported spending $1,020,000, the fifth largest amount in the 435 House races.

The Republican Party headquarters in Austin reported that Freshman GOP Congressmen Beau Boulter of Amarillo, Richard Armey of Denton and Larry Combest of Lebbock were well ahead of their opponents — Doug Seal, George Richardson and Gerald McCathern.

Neither Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, a Democrat, nor Sen. Phil Gramm, a Republican, were up for re-election. But because Democrats took control of the Senate, Bentsen will chair the powerful, tax-writing Finance Committee now chaired by Republican Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon.

Amendment passage overwhelming

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Near complete returns early Wednesday showed voters overwhelmingly favored four proposed changes to the Texas Constitution, including a controversial amendment that permits limited branch banking.

With 6,718, or 99.3 percent, of the 6,764 precincts reporting, 73.4 percent of the voters favored removing the constitutional prohibition against branch banking. Opposing votes totaled 697,526, with 1,922,671 voting in favor of branch banking.

Voters have approved 287 changes to the Constitution since 1879.

"The benefits will all go to the consumer," said Senate sponsor O.H. "Ike" Harris, R-Dallas.

"It goes back to the sophistication of voters in realizing it's time to modernize the banking industry and break down these false geographical barriers," Harris said.

The amendment allows a bank to operate up to three branches in the same city or county, a practice that will give customers more convenience and better service at less cost, Harris said. Each branch can operate two drive-up windows.

Don Adams, a lobbyist for the Independent Bankers Association of Texas, said branch banking will help bankers compete with savings and loan associations and other "nonbank banks" like Sears that already offer branch services.

"This shows that people want convenience," Adams said. "This will do away with archaic laws that prevented people from banking with convenience."

The association, plus the state's two other main banking groups, pushed hard in getting the banking package through the recent special legislative sessions. Part of that package includes a bill that will open the state's borders to interstate banking Jan. 1.

But an opposition group of about 100 mostly rural bankers said branch banking will prove more costly to consumers in the long run and that services will be directed by large, big-city banks that have no regard for local concerns.

"We will have to learn to live with it," said Gary Tongate, spokesman for Independent Bankers for Texas and president of City National Bank in Whitehouse, near Tyler.

"Our problem is we were underfinanced," Tongate said. "Had we had the finances to get the word out to the people, I feel it would have been defeated hands down."

Tongate said branch banking will drive smaller, independent bankers out of business, reducing competition, driving up service charges and lowering returns on deposits for consumers.

Had voters not approved the amendment, dozens of branches operating today under a 1985 change in the state banking codes might have had to close. Attorney General Jim Mattox ruled in June that that change in the banking laws effectively allows branch banking and contradicts the constitutional prohibition.

Returns also showed wide victory margins for three other proposed amendments to the state's Constitution.

Amendment No. 2 on the ballot, which voters were favoring 73.4 percent to 26.6 percent, repeals the one-subject requirement of the caption or title of a bill.

Under that rule, the subject of a bill must be specifically expressed in its title or caption to give the public and lawmakers notice of its contents. Otherwise, the bill could be open to a court challenge on technical grounds if it strays from the caption or is too broad.

Instead of the constitutional provision, the amendment gives each house of the Legislature the authority to enforce the caption rule.

But opponents, which include Common Cause of Texas and a group called Texans for Fair Notice, complained the amendment strips the courts of their power to review legislative acts and makes it easier for legislators to tack on to a bill unrelated amendments.

Near complete returns on amendment No. 3 showed 64.4 percent of the voters in favor of the change in state law verses 35.6 percent opposed. It allows local governments to do business with mutual insurance companies as long as they charge flat rate premiums instead of premiums that fluctuate to cover costs. Voters defeated a similar amendment in 1984.

Fifty-nine percent of the voters favored a fourth amendment, which changes an innocuous law that gave the state comptroller the duty of apportioning the appraised value of a railroad company's rolling stock — boxcars, tank cars and engines — among counties where the rail line travels. The State Property Tax Board already does most of that work, and the amendment formally removes the comptroller from the picture.

'Extra baggage' helped drag White down

By MICHAEL HOLMES

AUSTIN (AP) — Mark White carried a lot of baggage to be running a race. In the end, that extra weight helped drag the Democrat down.

Republican former Gov. Bill Clements had plenty of things going his way, including some key issues and even the weather.

Working against White were tax increases, the controversial teacher tests and no-pass, no-play rule, and a faltering Texas economy that has seen unemployment soar to record levels.

Some of those things worked in Clements' favor, combined with a personal pitches from popular President Reagan and Clements' repeated promises to get Texans working again.

And a big part of the outcome was determined by a mechanical detail of politics, the turnout. Clements got his voters to the polls; White fell short.

In an interview aboard his campaign jet Saturday night, White genuinely seemed to believe he would win. But he acknowledged then that he needed a big South Texas turnout. He didn't get it.

According to an ABC-TV exit poll of voters, White's percentage of the South Texas vote was 56.9 percent. He needed more. White also showed strength in Austin, East Texas and his hometown of Houston.

The exit poll found Clements very strong in his hometown of Dallas, where he got 58.6 percent. He also ran well in West Texas, plus the San Antonio, El Paso, Fort Worth, Waco and Wichita Falls areas.

Conventional political wisdom says the Democratic turnout dwindles in bad weather. Rain that swept much of the state Tuesday seemed to dampen White's chances.

But more than anything, it may have been that baggage, the negatives, which hurt White. Among the heavier items:

An Analysis

— White twice signed his name to massive tax increases. He approved $4.8 billion in sales and gasoline tax hikes in 1984 to fund school reforms and highway construction. He approved $860 million in temporary sales and gas taxes in September to help balance a state budget wracked by falling oil prices.

— White endorsed and defended the no-pass, no-play rule that barred students from extra-curricular activities if failing any course. Coaches were angered, and many put red dots on their wristwatches to remind them to "say something bad about Mark White" each day. Many parents, particularly in rural areas, also were unhappy with the rule.

— White angered teachers, some of his most loyal backers in 1982, by advocating the teacher competency test. Although most of the state's 210,000 teachers passed, they failed to work for White as they did four years ago.

Unemployment, which topped 9 percent this year, probably worked against the governor. Clements insisted that as a businessman and ally of President Reagan, he could find jobs for those people.

Clements ran a strong campaign, hammering White on what he called the "integrity" issue.

The Republican reminded voters that White in 1982 had promised lower utility bills, no increases in college tuition and no increases in taxes, them broke at least two of the three promises.

One strong Clements' television commercial accused White of being a prevaricator who "strayed from the truth."

Despite Clements' victory, 1986 still didn't prove to be the year of the Texas Republican. The party failed to field a complete slate and no other GOP candidate won statewide office.

Statehouse wins could help Republican party-building in West, South

Associated Press

Republicans, stripped of their majority in the Senate, found solace in the nation's statehouses where they netted at least eight new governorships, including coveted Texas and Florida.

GOP strategists said their band of governors in the West and the South, a traditionally Democratic enclave, will help party-building efforts before presidential elections in 1988 and congressional redistricting in 1990.

With all but one of 36 gubernatorial elections decided, the count early today was 25-24 in favor of the Democrats.

"Our Democrats had a pretty rough time yesterday, but after all, we had 27 governorships up which were Democratic and only nine Republican governorships up, and it was tough for us because most of our incumbents were not running," Democratic Gov. Bill Clinton, re-elected in Arkansas, said today on NBC's "Today" show.

Gov. Terry Branstad, re-elected in Iowa, said on the same show that he thought the outcome "was a decision by the voters that they want common sense and hard work. They don't want to go in debt, they don't want higher taxes....I think the Republicans gained because we had good candidates and they addressed the concerns of the people."

Republicans actually took previously Democratic governors' offices in 11 states, but lost three previously held by Republicans.

The 11 were: Wisconsin, South Carolina, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Kansas, Texas, Nebraska, Maine, Florida, Alabama, Arizona. The three were Pennsylvania, Tennessee and Oregon.

GOP candidate Arliss Sturgulewski, one of nine women gubernatorial candidates across the nation, lost to Democrat Stephen C. Cowper in a three-way Alaska race complicated by the write-in candidacy of former GOP Gov. Wally Hickel. The Democratic incumbent there was defeated in the primary.

Democratic incumbent Madeleine Kunin seemed destined to prevail in Vermont although the question there won't be settled formally until the Legislature meets in January.

Republicans last held a majority of statehouses in 1969.

Even though they seemed certain to fall just short of reaching that benchmark, Michele Davis, executive director of the Republican Governors Association proclaimed the gains that were made "an amazing, amazing accomplishment."

"This is something we can all stand on the roof-tops and cheer about," she said.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the outcome of the governor's races "speaks well for the permanent realignment of the Republican Party."

Davis said GOP successes reflect the emphasis that President Reagan and his administration have put on promoting "can-do, hands-on" managers at the state level.

Charles Dolan, executive director of the Democratic Governors Association, said the elections — for governors, senators and congressmen — should be considered together.

"Overall, you can say this was a Democratic day," he said. "No one ever said we were going to win governors."

Among the Democratic victories Tuesday were nine in which popular incumbents like New York's Mario Cuomo and Massachusetts' Mike Dukakis swept to victory.

Fifteen of the open posts belonged to the Democrats, while Republicans had only four vacancies.

The GOP won in 17 states, grabbing control of eight vacant Democratic posts and defeating incumbents in Texas and Wisconsin, two states where economic issues were a factor.

In Texas, former GOP Gov. Bill Clements ousted Gov. Mark White, reversing the 1982 election between the same two men, and in Wisconsin, legislator Tommy Thompson, a Republican, bested Democratic Gov. Anthony Earl in a close contest.

But the GOP made impressive inroads in the West and the South, electing Guy Hunt as the first Republican governor of Alabama since Reconstruction; Rep. Carroll Campbell in South Carolina; Bob Martinez in Florida; Harry Bellmon in Oklahoma; Garrey Carruthers in New Mexico; Evan Mecham in Arizona, and Mike Hayden in Kansas. All were open posts previously held by Democrats.

Martinez, Democrat-turned-Republican and a former mayor of Tampa, is Florida's first Hispanic governor and only its second GOP chief executive. He defeated Steve Pajcic.

Hunt, viewed as an also-ran when he got the historically worthless GOP nomination in Alabama, was helped by a bitter primary feud among Democrats in which Lt. Gov Bill Baxley was awarded the party nomination even though he failed to win a majority in a runoff with a popular attorney general who maintained an aggressive write-in campaign until just days before Election Day.

Shultz: U.S. should not end embargo against Tehran

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz, heading into arms control talks amid reports the United States made overtures to Iran over the American hostages in Lebanon, says the United States should not end its arms embargo against Tehran.

In an airborne news conference Tuesday on his way to see Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze in Vienna, a determined Shultz turned aside questions about Iran and reports that former National Security Adviser Robert C. McFarlane was recently in Iran to discuss the American hostages in Lebanon.

"I'm not going into all of that," Shultz said on the flight carrying him, six U.S. arms control experts and the State Department's top counterterrorism expert to Vienna. "The story is one that is being handled by the White House."

But Shultz lowered his no-comment shield twice to say the United States should not abandon its eight-year-old embargo against weapons sales to Iran.

"That's what I believe," he said.

"I still believe it," Shultz said at another point as he fenced with reporters seeking confirmation or denial of reports that hostage David Jacobsen was freed in Lebanon on Sunday as a result of negotiations between the United States and Iran.

Jacobsen was held in Lebanon by Islamic Jihad, a guerrilla group believed to have links to Iran. Syria, however, remains the dominant military and political force in Lebanon.

Jacobsen's release left two other Americans — Associated Press reporter Terry Anderson and educator Thomas Sutherland — apparently still in Hezbollah hands.

In Tehran, the Iranian speaker, Hashemi Rafsanjani, said McFarlane came with a message from the United States calling for improved U.S.-Iranian relations.

Shultz also dismissed the idea that Syria played a role in freeing Jacobsen, a hospital director, after 17 months in captivity.

"From all that I can see," Shultz said, "Syria had very little to do with it."

Iran claims deal made, Americans expelled

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran says it expelled a former White House national security adviser and four other Americans sent on a futile mission to mend U.S.-Iranian relations. The envoys reportedly arrived on a plane carrying military equipment and brought a Bible and a cake.

The speaker of Iran's parliament, Hashemi Rafsanjani, made the claim Tuesday in a speech marking the seventh anniversary of the takeover of U.S. Embassy in Tehran, according to the official Islamic Republic News Agency.

Rafsanjani's statements followed published reports in the Middle East that David Jacobsen, an American held captive for more than 17 months in Lebanon, was freed Sunday as a result of negotiations between Iran and the United States.

The United States broke diplomatic relations with Iran in 1979 when the U.S. Embassy was seized and dozens of Americans were taken hostage.

Reagan, McFarlane and U.S. government officials had no comment on the Iranian report.

Rafsanjani said that upon arrival at Tehran's Mehrabad Airport, the uninvited guests told immigration officials they were Americans "with a special message for Iranian officials from the U.S. president."

The five Americans were confined to a hotel for five days and then deported after Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini advised officials not to meet with them or receive their message, Rafsanjani said.

Tehran Radio, in a report monitored in London, quoted Rafsanjani as saying McFarlane and the others "were terrified and informed us later that the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force had been put on alert. Of course, we do not know whether this was so or not."

Rafsanjani said they arrived aboard a plane carrying military supplies Iran had bought from international dealers, and brought a Bible signed by Reagan and a cake to be presented as "a key to open Iran-U.S. relations."

Tehran Radio quoted Rafsanjani as saying he was not "100 percent certain" that the man who claimed to be McFarlane was who he said he was.

Rafsanjani did not mention any negotiations and the news agency did not say when the alleged visit occurred. But the Beirut magazine Al-Shiraa reported that McFarlane went to Tehran in September.

Al-Shiraa, which is pro-Syrian, said McFarlane's mission in Tehran was to discuss an end to Iran's support for terrorist groups and that U.S. military spare parts were provided as encouragement.

WORLD in brief

Two more may be freed

New York Times News Service

WIESBADEN, West Germany — The Anglican go-between in the Lebanon hostage affair said Tuesday that there were "reasonably strong" expectations that the release of two more Americans held there might be imminent.

The envoy, Terry Waite, said he expected his Middle Eastern contacts to give him information about a possible release of Terry A. Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press, and Thomas M. Sutherland, dean of agriculture at the American University, "in the next 24 hours."

Waite, a special emissary of the archbishop of Canterbury, came to Wiesbaden on Monday accompanying David P. Jacobsen, 55, the former director of the American University Hospital in Beirut.

Reagan to blame for losses

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet commentator today said the Republicans lost control of the U.S. Senate in part because of the Reagan administration's handling of superpower relations and the failure of the Reykjavik summit.

Vladimir Alexeyev, a frequent commentator on U.S.-Soviet affairs for the news agency Novosti, said the election results showed "that the Reagan era is on the wane."

In a commentary telexed to Western news agencies, Alexeyev attributed the Republicans' showing to what he called failure to keep promises to boost economic prosperity, cuts in welfare programs and the "negative approach" in foreign policy under President Reagan.

"It is the only administration in many years which has not concluded treaties with the Soviet Union on limiting and reducing arms," Alexeyev said, adding that Reagan was in fact trying to undermine existing arms control accords.

Hasenfus: I needed job

Associated Press

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — An American charged with terrorism and other crimes against the state told a Nicaraguan political court he signed on for rebel supply flights because he needed a job, and said he would ask for mercy if convicted.

Eugene Hasenfus, 45, of Marinette, Wis., made a lengthy statement to the People's Court on Tuesday about his childhood, military service in the Marines, his wife and three children and his final flight into Nicaragua.

He then was questioned by the prosecution and his Nicaraguan lawyer, Enrique Sotelo Borgen.

"If at the end of this trial you are to be found guilty and sentenced to prison, would you ask the Nicaragua government to be generous and show you compassion so you could return to your home and to your wife and small children?" Sotelo Borgen asked.

"Yes, I would," Hasenfus replied.

Compromise, competition likely in upcoming sessions of Congress

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

An Analysis

The twilight of Ronald Reagan's presidency, with Democrats back in full command of Congress, will be a season of compromise, tempered conservatism and intensifying competition to succeed the Republican president whose popularity weathers even his defeats.

Lines and loyalties will be drawn swiftly for that 1988 presidential contest. But neither the prospect of that race nor the Democrats' recapture of the Senate after six Republican years won on Reagan's coattails is likely to draw battle lines between the White House and the Capitol.

In a divided government, it takes conciliation and compromise to make things happen. Departing House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., a proudly partisan Democrat, made that point — and added, "It's not that bad."

Actually, the government has had to run that way, or stall, throughout the Reagan years, because the House has been solidly Democratic.

Sometimes the government stalled. More often, given Reagan's persuasive powers, Congress and the administration have worked around their differences.

Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas, majority leader no more, said he had managed a Senate that often operated on a bipartisan basis, and hoped it would stay that way.

Dole, readying his own campaign for the presidency, now unencumbered by the responsibility of governance, said that while the new Senate majority is Democratic, many of its members take "rather conservative positions."

That is a likely Reagan legacy. The frame of political reference is more conservative now than before he came to power. Because the president pulled both his party and his opposition toward the right, the Democratic takeover may mean less in real than in party terms.

Six years ago, when Reagan and Senate Republicans wrested control from the Democrats, it was a time of upheaval. The new president meant to undo a generation of Democratic programs, and he had a new Senate majority to help him try.

This change will be more modest. Democrats who have White House candidacy in mind are capable of counting. The voters haven't sided with an old-fashioned Democratic liberal in the past five presidential elections.

So they will establish their distance, from one another and, with ever-increasing volume, from the Republican in the White House. But they will do so carefully, because there is no evidence that the electorate wants to erase the Reagan years. Indeed, the polls point in the other direction. Reagan's rivals will advocate a change in course, not a reversal.

The political change ahead also will be tempered for the fact that the Reagan of 1986 is not the Reagan of 1980. Some of the doctrines he brought to office have yielded to the realities of governing. No Democrat would have dared forecast the record federal deficits of the Reagan administration, but they persist through the administration of a man who came to power promising to balance the budget within a term or less.

The cast of likely contestants for the White House didn't change in Tuesday's elections, but some of its Democratic parts may have been strengthened by the outcome.

For example, Gov. Mario Cuomo strengthened his credentials by winning two-thirds of the New York vote.

Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado didn't run for re-election, but his seat remained Democratic with the election of Rep. Timothy Wirth, and that is a plus for the 1984 candidate who quit the Senate to spend full time campaigning for 1988.

Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware will have a new forum for his embryo campaign, possibly the chairmanship of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia will become chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, and that could be a very visible spot in the next two years, with space defenses and arms control high on the agenda. Rep. Wyche Fowler won the other Georgia Senate seat for the Democrats, and that also is scores a political point for Nunn.

GOP's 'Victory '86' party spoiled by loss of Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican national headquarters had planned a "Victory '86" celebration, but as election returns poured in indicating a Democratic takeover of the Senate, the mood turned glum and the party became a wake.

"Why do you want to take a picture of us? We're going down," one young GOP worker told a television cameraman.

Republican National Chairman Frank Fahrenkopf stopped just short of conceding the loss of the Senate, although Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., earlier had acknowledged the GOP loss.

But Fahrenkopf still remained optimistic about President Reagan's chances of getting his policies passed by a Democrat-controlled Congress.

In 'Speakes-speak', GOP's loss of Senate actually win for Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan "won" in his determined personal fight for Republican Senate candidates, even though many of those candidates lost and the Democrats won control of the Senate, Reagan's spokesman says.

And he predicted Tuesday night that the president will not change his agenda in the face of a Democratic Senate — though he may have to adjust his tactics.

"The goals themselves will not change," spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters. "It could be tougher, but it won't alter the agenda."

Faced now with Democractic majorities in both the Senate and the House, "the tactics are simply coalition-building," Speakes said.

Reagan was scheduled today to present his own analysis of the elections and a look ahead to his last two years in office during an afternoon meeting with senior White House aides, Speakes said.

The president had made GOP control of the Senate his personal quest for the past 17 months, traveling nearly 25,000 miles and telling voters at the end that a vote for Republican candidates would really be a last vote for him.

At stake, he said, was nothing less than the future of his presidency — a choice between "two more years of progress or two years of paralysis." Over and over he said, "I didn't seek re-election to be a six-year president."

But Speakes denied that any GOP losses reflected poorly on the president.

"Some people say Reagan lost. We believe he won," said Speakes, arguing that the fact that some contest margins were razor-thin translated into a GOP success story.

"We made many of these races...We turned them into horse races," he said.

The president, who spent the evening at the White House with his wife, Nancy, watching election returns on television, probably went to bed not knowing the final outcome of many of the political slugfests. Speakes said the president had not planned "a terribly late night."

Democratic majority increases in House

WASHINGTON (AP) — Strong showings by Democratic House candidates in the Old Confederacy and farming areas ensured that the party's already commanding majority will grow in the 100th Congress.

By early today, the Democrats, who held 253 House seats in the 99th Congress, had won that many again and were leading in seven more; the Republicans had won 169 and were ahead in six.

Women lost four House members to retirement but appeared to have gained an equal number to hold their total at 23 for the new Congress. Blacks will reach a record high voting membership of 22.

The Democrats won seven open seats that had been held by Republicans — including two in Indiana and Iowa — and knocked off GOP incumbents in Indiana, North Carolina, Colorado and the poverty-plagued Mississippi Delta.

Democrats also were holding narrow leads in a number of races too close to call, including ones involving two Republican incumbents in North Carolina and one in New York.

The Republicans held down Democratic gains by picking up seven open Democratic seats and upsetting one incumbent — Democrat Robert Young, defeated by Republican Jack Buechner in his second try for a suburban St. Louis seat.

Democratic attorney Thomas Ward rose from virtual obscurity to defeat Rep. John Hiler in north central Indiana. And in upstate New York, Democrat Louise Slaughter claimed a narrow victory in her race against freshman Rep. Fred Eckert, R-N.Y., of Rochester. Eckert did not immediately concede.

In the South, the region both parties considered critical, Democrats picked up open seats formerly held by the GOP in Virginia and South Carolina as well as ousting incumbents in North Carolina and Mississippi.

Going into the election, the Democrats held 253 seats to the Republicans' 180; both parties had expected that the GOP would lose six to 12 seats Tuesday.

"Every sign we see indicates we are going to hold our losses down to single digits," said Rep. Guy Vander Jagt, R-Mich., chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee. He said that would be "turning history on its head" in light of huge midterm election losses often suffered by parties in their sixth year of controlling the White House.

Norman Ornstein, a political analyst with the American Enterprise Institute, took a dimmer view. "The bottom line is that after eight years of Ronald Reagan, Republicans will end up very little better off than when he came in," he said.

Democratic strategists, noting the lack of an overriding national issue to spur voters, celebrated their net gain in the South and said they would be satisfied with an extra six or seven seats.

"Instead of erosion in the South, like we had in 1984, we not only held our own — we turned it around," said Mark Johnson, spokesman for the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee.

The key battlegrounds were in the South and in contests for 43 seats left vacant through retirements and other departures. Twenty-one of them had been held by Democrats, the other 22 by Republicans. Both parties predicted net gains, but the returns indicated there would be little change in the numbers.

Republicans won their seven open Democratic seats in Louisiana, Maryland, New York, Iowa, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania and Hawaii. The Democrats picked up their seven in Maine, New York, South Carolina, Virginia, Utah and rural parts of Iowa and Indiana.

Democrat Tom McMillen, a former Washington Bullets basketball player and Rhodes scholar, was leading state House Republican Leader Robert Neall for a GOP seat in Maryland — the only open seat too close to call.

The Democrats managed to keep a threatened Farm Belt seat in South Dakota and successfully resisted presidential efforts brought to bear for Indiana Republican Richard McIntyre, defeated by Democrat Frank McCloskey by four votes in 1984. Republicans remained bitter about the election and the rematch attracted President Reagan's only appearance on behalf of a House candidate.

Southern upsets were scored by attorney Michael Espy, who defeated Rep. Webb Franklin, R-Miss., to become Mississippi's first black congressman in this century, and by Duke University political science professor David Price, who beat Rep. William Cobey, R-N.C., in a race marked by religious debate.

Espy will represent a sprawling rural district that had twice elected Franklin — a white Republican — over a black state legislator despite having been redrawn twice to give blacks a majority voting-age population.

Cobey, one of three vulnerable GOP freshmen in North Carolina, made religion an issue in his campaign with a letter saying he would take a stronger stand "for the principles outlined in the word of God."

Anti-abortion ballot measures fare badly

Associated Press

Anti-abortion ballot issues fared badly in three states and lotteries were approved in five others, while Californians made English their official state language and rejected quarantining people with AIDS.

Among the more than 200 state and local ballot issues decided across the country on Tuesday, voters also:

— rejected by nearly a 3-to-1 margin a bid by the poor, predominantly black neighborhood of Roxbury to secede from Boston;

— turned down by a similar overwhelming margin an Oregon initiative allowing residents to grow marijuana for their personal use;

— gave strong approval to a $1.2 billion toxic waste cleanup bond in New York, a $200 million bond in New Jersey, and a resolution in Massachusetts calling for a timetable for cleaning up that state's waste sites;

— favored a freeze on most property taxes in Montana and a state revenue cap in Massachusetts, but turned down a Colorado measure requiring a popular vote on any new taxes or increases.

Anti-abortion measures were trailing in Rhode Island, Oregon and Massachusetts. But in Arkansas, Amendment 65, which would prohibit spending state funds for abortions unless the mother's life was in danger, was a virtual dead heat, with proponents holding a sliver-thin lead.

With 99 percent of precincts reporting, 314,161 votes were cast in favor, and 314,018 were against.

Lotteries, on the other hand, swept to victory in five of six states: Montana, Kansas, South Dakota, Idaho and Florida, which also soundly rejected county-option casino gambling. North Dakota voters rejected a lottery.

And after more than a century of tight liquor controls, including a prohibition period that lasted 68 years, Kansas voters overwhelmingly approved a constitutional amendment to legalize county-option liquor by the drink.

In California, the English language measure, Proposition 63, won 73 percent of the vote, with 27 percent opposing it.

Proposition 63, which would amend the state Constitution to recognize English as the state's official language, won wide support from voters alarmed over an influx of non-English speaking immigrants.

"It's clearly aimed at Hispanics and Asians, but it doesn't help people learn English," said state Sen. Art Torres, who opposed the measure.

California citizens rejected the AIDS initiative, Proposition 64, by more than a 70 percent margin.

The AIDS initiative, backed by supporters of Lyndon Larouche, called for identification of AIDS victims and possible quarantine measures. It would have barred them from education and restaurant employment. Virtually all major candidates, the gay community and the California medical establishment opposed it.

Blacks hold record number of House seats

WASHINGTON (AP) — Blacks in the 100th Congress will hold 22 House seats, the highest number in history.

On a day when Yazoo City, Miss., lawyer Mike Espy became the first black to win election to Congress from that state since Reconstruction, voters across the nation Tuesday pushed the number of black representatives in the 435-member House from 20 to the new record number.

Most are from the North and all are Democrats, a sharp contrast to the post-Civil War Reconstruction era when the 20 blacks who served were Southern Republicans.

Meanwhile on Tuesday, Florida elected Robert Martinez, the former mayor of Tampa, as its first Hispanic governor, and Democrat Ben Nighthorse Campbell, an American Indian, beat incumbent Republican Michael Strang in a House race in Colorado.

Martinez, a Democrat-turned-Republican whose grandparents emigrated to Tampa from Spain at the turn of the century, defeated Democrat Steve Pajcic in the race to become the Sunshine State's governor.

The only two black gubernatorial candidates this year, Republican William Lucas in Michigan and Democratic Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley in California, lost.

In House races, 18 black Democratic incumbents experienced little trouble in their re-election bids.

Joining Espy as first-time black winners were Maryland's Kweisi Mfume, a former Baltimore city councilman who will succeed retiring Rep. Parren Mitchell; the Rev. Floyd Flake, who won the Democratic primary in Queens, N.Y., against incumbent Rep. Alton Waldon; and John Lewis, who won the Atlanta seat being vacated by successful Senate candidate Wyche Fowler.

Of the 38 black candidates in House races, 25 were Democrats and 13 were Republicans.

Precious freedom

David Jacobsen was simultaneously relieved and irritated this week after being released from 17 months of captivity in Lebanon. He was relieved to be home and free of his captors; he was irritated that the United States did not do more to secure his release or the release of others still held.

"Those guys are in hell," Jacobsen was quoted as saying of Thomas Sutherland and Terry Anderson, the two Americans still held, "and we've got to get them home."

Not long ago Jacobsen, in a videotape released by Islamic Jihad, criticized the Reagan administration for what he said was inaction on the hostages. He has a point in noting that this country should never fall victim to the tendency to merely forget. He and all the others who either are still held or have been released are pawns in a tremendous international struggle — a struggle between peoples with different values, different morality, different religions.

Jacobsen also is correct in reminding us that while it may be preferable to simply forget those held against their will in foreign lands, those held can never forget and for them minutes become years and years become eternities. It's for their sake that the people of this nation must not give in to the easy comfort of forgetting.

Yet for all his concern and his impassioned plea to help those still held, Jacobsen appears to be ignoring the way in which the United States government has grappled with the intricacies of hostage situations over the past few years. There appears to be no simple solution for resolving any hostage crisis. Rescue attempts don't offer guaranteed freedom and actually can further endanger the lives of the hostages, not to mention the difficulties of pinpointing locations of the hostages and getting a rescue force to the site.

Negotiations with the captors have proven far more successful. In fact three American hostages have been released by Islamic Jihad. But waiting on the generosity or plottings of the captors can be tedious and aggravating, particularly for the captured.

Jacobsen's statement that "the best things in life are free, and by God they are" is one that all Americans appreciate. That comment should be on the mind of any American traveling outside the borders of this country because once captured, the ability of this country to help is vastly reduced.

Jacobsen is correct. The best in life is free. No American should forget we still have countrymen held in a foreign land. This government should seek in every possible way to gain their release.

LETTERS

Stop animal deaths!

This letter is to make the public aware of a sad situation that not only affects Midland, but is a common problem throughout the country.

This year, through September, the City Animal Control has euthanized 2,967 dogs and 2,160 cats. This is an unpleasant part of the work at Animal Control.

The reason for this large number of deaths is because these animals were brought into a world where they had no home. We must all become aware of the necessity of responsible pet ownership. I cannot stress enough the need to spay and neuter our pets.

We have reorganized the Humane Society of the Permian Basin. It is an open society pledged to support existing shelters, reduce animal abuse and offer assistance to pet owners in need.

Please feel free to contact us at 3917 W. Wall if you have a need or if you would like to help the animals. There are animals dying every day because someone couldn't or wouldn't care for them. We need your support and will appreciate all inquiries.

Let's begin today to change the numbers of deaths at Animal Control. It will make their job easier if the number of animals they must put down can be reduced. Neutered animals is our answer to the over-population we deal with today. Please care enough to help.

Running the barricades

Don't you agree, it's bad enough that Midland is caught in the middle of the "monsoon season" and our streets stay flooded for such a long time, but what takes even longer is the so-called "repair" of these streets?

I live on north Midland Drive and have friends who live in the 2400 block of Haynes Street and in the 2800 block of Auburn Street.

A year ago traffic was blocked from using Whitney Street from Wadley. Several months ago, use of Maxwell Street from Midkiff was blocked. About three weeks ago, Haynes, west of Midkiff, was blocked. That was my last alternative.

Now, I ask you, how am I to visit my friends? It's certainly not any easier for them to get to my house — it's like an obstacle course out there!

Of course, I realize that it's no concern of yours whether I see my friends or not, but my point is: it seems to me we could finish fixing up one street before we tear up more in the same neighborhood. I use the term "fixing" loosely, because I've seen no sign of fixing at all, just blockades.

Not that it will do one iota of good, but thanks for listening. Maybe getting this off my chest will make it easier to snake through the neighborhood.

Arab-American singled out in Israel

WASHINGTON — Israeli border officials strip-searched a distinguished American businessman two weeks ago, interrogated him for more than three hours and confiscated some of his personal property — because he is of Arab descent and looks it. Despite his U.S. passport, which showed him to be a native-born American, the Israeli officials refused to accept his repeated insistence that he is a U.S. citizen.

Jack Anderson

Dr. Omar Kader is no terrorist. In fact, he was entering Israel as part of a six-country tour to organize an international conference on terrorism. He was coming from Jordan, where he had discussed the plan with King Hussein.

The 43-year-old Kader is a professorial type born and raised in Provo, Utah, where his parents had immigrated from what was then Palestine — and is now Israel. He recognizes Israel's need to take anti-terrorist precautions at its border crossings, but he was particularly upset at being singled out for harsh treatment when other, non-Arab Americans were passed through without a hassle.

"I feel like a Jew and you're the German," Kader protested to one Israeli official — a reference to the initial segregation of Jews before the Nazis shipped them off to the death camps during World War II.

Kader is softspoken and usually amiable. He looks unmistakably Arabic; in fact, his Caucasian American wife says she was partly attracted to him by his resemblance to actor Omar Sharif.

As executive director of the Arab-American Anti-Discrimination Committee until last December, he spearheaded efforts to erase the stereotype of Arabs as trigger-happy fanatics lurking around every corner to kill the first American who happens along. Because of his position, he received threatening telephone calls following every terrorist bombing attributed to Arabs; the committee's West Coast director, Alex Odeh, was assassinated, and the committee's Boston office was bombed.

Here is what happened in Israel, based in part on an affidavit Dr. Kader filed with the U.S. consular office in Jerusalem to protest his treatment:

Kader was optimistic when he boarded a bus to cross the Jordanian-Israeli border on Oct. 22 with eight Western Europeans and other Americans. He had been told of rough treatment given to other Arab-Americans, and he overheard one of the European passengers offer to carry a young Arab-American's camera across the border to prevent its confiscation.

But Kader believed he would be treated properly because he is an American — "American first, Arab second," as he puts it. He was going to Israel to meet with government officials, and, as a U.S. taxpayer, he had helped subsidize the Israeli economy to the tune of billions of dollars. He felt he was entitled to a modicum of courtesy.

Kader's optimism was abruptly shattered. While the Europeans and Caucasian Americans were whisked through Israeli customs, he and the two other Arab-Americans were directed into a separate room — and ordered to take off their shoes.

At one point a lower-level official started to apologize to Kader for the discriminatory treatment, but a senior military officer came over and told them, "Shut up!" Then Kader was ordered into another room and made to strip down to his underwear.

The Israeli officials examined all the cards in his wallet, Kader said; they opened all the private correspondence in his luggage and read it closely, questioning him about the contents. They grilled him about notes in his notebook and asked him why he had underlined certain passages in the books he was carrying, particularly one autographed by King Hussein.

All of Kader's belongings were opened — even candy bars — and dumped into a box. A computer disk, containing six months' research material for articles he was preparing, was confiscated on grounds that "information on it may be sensitive."

The Israelis even expropriated a souvenir letter-opener because it was "too sharp" and could be used as a weapon. Kader later found an identical one just five miles down the road in Jericho in the Israeli-occupied West Bank.

Leaving Israel two days later, Kader was again singled out at the airport. This time, he decided not to be so cooperative. He insisted that the Israelis acknowledge him as an American; when they refused, he raised his voice and demanded to be treated like other Americans boarding the plane. He was quickly passed through.

Footnote: An Israeli embassy spokesman in Washington said he "strongly disagreed" and "resented" any suggestion that Arab-Americans were treated differently from other Americans by Israeli border officials.

CORRECTING CARTER: Ex-president Jimmy Carter, still trying to get a new highway built to his presidential library outside Atlanta, told a radio audience recently he had met with the road's opponents on "several occasions." The opponents maintain that Carter has refused to meet with them. Carter also referred to the road as a "modest two-lane" affair. Actually, it would be four lanes.

At best, the Soviet capacity to "blind" a satellite in synchronous (stationary) orbit 23,000 miles in space raises an elemental question of sincerity about Mikhail Gorbachev's claim that President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) is bellicose and provocative. Trying to choke the U.S. program, the Soviets are doing well maintaining their own.

At worst, this space-war success combined with the U.S. space shuttle tragedy and the failure of other attempts to launch satellites endangers the U.S. at a time of maximum Soviet pressure against SDI. The danger was foreseen in a top-secret 1980 report to Reagan warning that the U.S. could be "completely blinded" by the mid-1980s.

The successful Soviet effort to disable American satellites has been accomplished by "propagating" high-powered microwaves fired from a ground station located near Dushanbe, close to the Afghan border in the Soviet Socialist Republic of Tadzhikistan. When the beam of the short-wave electromagnetic pulse strikes, the satellite is unable either to receive orders from the U.S. or to transmit the all-important pictures that are the heart of U.S. intelligence-gathering.

In addition to this microwave bombardment, the Soviets have also had some success attacking American satellites with ground-based lasers. Intelligence specialists told us these laser transmitters are located in Moscow, at the big Soviet nuclear station in Saryshagan and at one other unidentified place.

The intelligence community believes laser attack has damaged several satellites. If so, that may mean as of today U.S. satellite reconnaissance of the Soviet Union is limited to little more than one or two undamaged "cameras-in-the-sky," with the future uncertain.

The importance of now imperilled existing satellites to report on offensive and defensive Soviet space and ground-based military operations is paramount. There is no apparent means available for months to launch another spy satellite. The old satellite-launching Titan missiles became obsolete with development of the shuttle. Some Titans kept in reserve have exploded this year on their pads or in early flight.

The irony of the successful Soviet assaults on American satellites is their convergence with Gorbachev's unprecedented nuclear arms-reduction "offer" to induce the president to give up SDI. Gorbachev's goal, in the view of administration strategic analysts, has now become clear. He is pressing full speed ahead to develop the Soviets' own war-in-space program, and doing so under cover of an attempted U.S. satellite blackout. He also is building worldwide fear of "Star Wars" to force the president to kill SDI.

The secret transition report to Reagan immediately following the 1980 election warned with gloomy precision about the dangers of the space-warfare race — particularly the importance and vulnerability of satellites in keeping tabs on Soviet gains.

"The failure of a single launch in the early to mid-1980s could negate all our capabilities (for satellite reconnaissance) for a protracted period of time," the report warned. Such a failure, it went on, "could be disastrous for the entire technical collection effort" leading to the U.S. being "completely blinded." That could eliminate photo-reconnaissance capability by mid or late 1980s.

That is not far from what has now happened, but not even the prophetic authors of the transition report knew six years ago how rapid would be Soviet anti-satellite technology.

It is this pessimistic backdrop that has caused some of the president's strongest admirers to question his willingness to make any concessions at all to Gorbachev on developing anti-missile defenses or space-warfare technology. They say privately that he is not informed about Soviet advances and that he does not understand the double-edged Gorbachev game: stall U.S. technological progress and move full-speed on his own.

An incident just before Reagan went to Reykjavik enforced this critical view. A report from the CIA representing the entire intelligence community was sent to the Oval Office with this unequivocal warning: The sole reason for Gorbachev wanting the Iceland summit was to offer unprecedented inducements for Reagan to drop SDI. The warning was ignored. There was no White House response at all.

Meese crooning 'I deserve a break today!'

What Attorney General Ed Meese did two weeks ago was declare that the Supreme Court does not make the supreme law of the land. He urged his Justice Department lawyers to ignore the court's rulings if they don't agree with them.

Art Buchwald

In fairness to Meese, his quarrel with the Supreme Court is not personal. There are many rulings he has no problem with, as long as the court agrees with him.

Quincy Wheelbright, an avid Meesewatcher said, "What I like about Ed Meese is that he doesn't look like a person who upholds the Constitution as much as someone who just ate it."

I protested, "That's a terrible thing to say about the highest law enforcement officer in the land. Why would he eat the Constitution?"

"When you're hungry for power you'll eat anything."

"Have you personally seen Meese eat the Constitution?" I asked Quincy.

"Yup, I saw him do it one day in the Justice Department cafeteria."

"You're kidding me."

"I'm sure it was him. The reason I remember it is that he was putting catsup on it — and Meese is the only guy I know who puts catsup on the Constitution."

"Did he eat it with a knife and fork, or with his hands?"

"With his hands. He just ripped the first amendment into shreds and then stuffed it in his mouth."

"Are you sure it was the first amendment?"

"I'm positive. Meese had a helluva time swallowing it. One of his deputies — I think it was William Bradford Reynolds — kept handing him water to wash it down. I thought he was going to upchuck all over the table."

"Did he stomp out of the cafeteria?"

Quincy said, "He was about to when someone urged him to taste the second amendment. He liked that because it had to do with the right to bear arms. Then he tried to eat the sixth but he couldn't do it even when he dipped it in tabasco sauce."

"Why didn't he relish the sixth?"

"He said it was cooked up by bleeding hearts.

"Did he put anything besides catsup and tabasco sauce on the Constitution?"

"Yes," Quincy said. "He sliced off the part which prevents the police from conducting an illegal search and smeared it with Goulden's. After tasting it he said to Reynolds, 'This one doesn't cut the mustard.' Then he spat it out."

"Meese hates anything with too many rights in it," I said.

Quincy said, "Did I tell you Meese choked on the recent Supreme Court rulings on separation of church and state?"

"No you didn't. What happened?"

"He was digging in with both hands and suddenly his face got red and he gagged. Bradford jumped up and gave him the Heimlich maneuver."

"Thank God for that."

"It came at an interesting time. Meese was just about to launch a lawsuit to get the Heimlich maneuver declared unconstitutional."

"Why?"

"Because he got word it was invented by a secular humanist."

Researcher: Infant features linked to AIDS

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Newborns infected with the AIDS virus have characteristic facial features that can be used to predict how soon they will develop the disease, a researcher says.

Quickly identifying which infants will develop AIDS could help doctors treat those children — when treatment becomes possible.

The fetal AIDS syndrome, as the pattern of facial features is called, includes a small head, prominent forehead, flattened nose and very prominent eyes with a bluish tint in the whites of the eyes, said Dr. Robert Marion of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York City.

These features and a few others are coupled with a growth deficiency, Marion said.

"The children who are most severely stigmatized develop AIDS in the first six months of life," said Marion, who reported his findings Tuesday at the annual meeting of the American Society of Human Genetics.

Those who are less severely marked develop AIDS after one year of age, he said. "We think this is going to be very helpful in predicting which children will develop AIDS early in life. We're looking to the future when any kind of treatment is available."

Knowing how soon after birth an AIDS-infected child was likely to develop the disease could enable doctors to start treatment at the most appropriate time. They could balance the need to attack the disease early against the potential side-effects of whatever treatment was available.

Government scientists recently announced with considerable fanfare that a drug called azidothymidine, or AZT, was of some benefit in slowing the progression of AIDS.

It is the first drug to show substantial benefits against AIDS, but it is not available for children, Marion said.

AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is a disease in which a virus attacks the body's immune system, leaving victims susceptible to a wide variety of infections and cancers.

Not everyone agrees with Marion's contention that the fetal AIDS syndrome occurs in 50 percent to 75 percent of children infected with the virus. A research team in New York says it has been unable to find the same features in newborns exposed to AIDS, he said.

But Marion said two other groups have found the same features, but that he could not identify them because they have not made their findings public.

Marion and his colleagues — Andrew Wiznia, R. Gordon Hutcheon and Arye Rubinstein, all of Einstein — first reported the fetal AIDS syndrome in July in the American Journal of Diseases of Children, Marion said.

Their most recent work, described Tuesday, involves the development of a rating system to classify infants as either mildly, moderately or severely afflicted with the syndrome.

They found that those who are most severely afflicted contracted AIDS from their mothers during the early stages of pregnancy, while those children who are less severely affected contracted the disease later in the mother's pregnancy.

The appearance of AIDS symptoms in the infants follows by about a year their exposure to the virus, Marion said, so the most severely affected infants — who contracted the disease earlier — will begin to show symptoms earlier.

Puritans not so pure, research indicates

BOSTON (AP) — Unwed mothers in 17th century Massachusetts had the law on their side in getting their children's fathers to provide support.

The women of Puritan society were given potent legal recourse against men who tried to shirk responsibility for their offspring, says Roger Thompson in his study "Sex in Middlesex: Popular Mores in a Massachusetts County, 1649-1699."

Under a law written in 1668, the mother's word was often enough to convict a man of fornication and sentence him to a lifetime of payments and possibly a public whipping and fines.

Despite the strait-laced reputation of Puritan society, the law was invoked more frequently than modern Americans might suppose.

"The unmarried, far from being erotically repressed, were fascinated by sexuality. They read and talked about it; they seem to have relieved sexual tensions by various means short of, or including, intercourse," writes Thompson of the University of East Anglia in Norwich, England.

His observations are based on a study of 50 years of court and town records for Middlesex County, an area north and west of Boston that originally included Cambridge, home of Harvard University, and Concord, where the American Revolution later began.

During the period, there were 161 cases of pre- and extramarital fornication as well as cases of youths caught acting immodestly at parties.

Puritan society, wishing to ensure that the community would not have to pay for an illegitimate child's upbringing and that the sinful parents repented, was anxious to identify the father as well as the expectant mother.

Under the law, midwives became inquisitors who would refuse to help a woman in labor unless she named the father.

The law did not always work as intended, Thompson writes.

Susannah Coburn told her midwife in 1696 that "I must perish for I do not know" who the father is. She later testified that she was afraid to name the baby's father, who was the son of her midwife.

NATION IN BRIEF

Lottery winner kills himself

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A man who apparently killed himself and his five dogs was debt-ridden despite receiving $50,000 a year from the state lottery, according to a neighbor and police.

Earl C. Thompson had won $1 million in the lottery and was guaranteed $50,000 a year at least through 1999, when he would be 75. The former security guard told reporters when he won that the first thing he would do was buy three dogs.

Thompson and five dogs were found dead Sunday of carbon monoxide poisoning. Lt. Gerald Lee said Tuesday. Medical examiner Robert Brown ruled the death a suicide.

Thompson left no note and investigators had no motive for his death, but police said he was on probation for shooting at a man during an argument last summer and had been ordered to have psychiatric counseling.

A neighbor said Thompson was debt-ridden and alone when he died. A friend had moved out of the house a few weeks before and Thompson's car had been repossessed, said the neighbor, Joseph Delphi, and police.

Pope to visit South, West

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pope John Paul II will visit eight Southern and Western U.S. cities next year, celebrating a series of outdoor Masses like the ones that drew millions of Americans on his 1979 trip to Eastern and Midwestern cities, the nation's bishops announced today.

The cities he will visit in September 1987, announced officially for the first time, are Miami; Columbia, S.C.; New Orleans; San Antonio, Texas; Phoenix, Ariz.; Los Angeles; Monterey, Calif., and San Francisco.

Besides the open-air Roman Catholic Masses and meetings with Catholic groups, he is also to meet with Jewish leaders in Miami and take part in a prayer service with representatives of various faiths at a stadium in Columbia, S.C., according to details of his trip released by the National Conference of Catholic Bishops.

Official's ex-wife kills herself

MIAMI (AP) — The former wife of the Florida attorney general-designate made a hysterical telephone call to police between fatally shooting their only son and killing herself beside a downtown telephone booth, authorities said Tuesday.

Saundra Butterworth, 43, who was divorced in 1976 from Bob Butterworth, shot their 16-year-old son Robert III four times in the chest and neck Monday then shot herself in the head, police said.

Butterworth, 43, easily defeated Republican opponent Jim Watt in Tuesday's election. All victory celebrations were canceled, however, at Butterworth's request.

A .38-caliber pistol was found beside Mrs. Butterworth's body, police said.

"Right now it appears that she wanted to end her life and take him along," said homicide investigator Lt. Mike Gonzalez. "She didn't want to leave him behind."

A note Mrs. Butterworth left in her car showed she was emotionally distraught, said police spokeswoman Cori Zywotow.

EPA ozone report released

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency, in a draft assessment, predicts a doubling in cases of skin cancer in the next 88 years if the destruction of the earth's protective ozone layer continues to go unchecked, an agency spokesman said Tuesday night.

One of the last "window pane" areas of Midland county will be hooked up with water and sewer lines with a $233,200 grant from the state.

'Window pane' homes to get sewer, water lines

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

About 36 Midland County families will be getting sewer and water lines attached to their homes in a southeast "window pane" area of the city.

Midland County will receive $233,200 from the state to bring city water and sewer service to an area of the county surrounded by city land.

The county will add to the Texas Community Development grant with $12,300.

This neighborhood is the last window pane area that does not receive city water and sewage service, said Jerrie Westmoreland, with Midland County Housing.

About 70 families live in the area bounded by Gist Avenue on the north, Terrell Street on the east, Baird Street on the west and Longview on the south.

"It was not annexed into the city, because the area was not taxable. Most of the houses are substandard," Ms. Westmoreland said.

The average income in the area is about $5,000 a year and many homeowners' wells have been contaminated by open cesspools, Ms. Westmoreland said.

The area has been cleaned up, but up to two years ago many people did not have their own water and they were having to use a neighbor's well, she said.

The money will be used this year to help about 36 of 70 families get city water and sewer service.

The county will re-apply for a grant next year to help the remaining families, Ms. Westmoreland said.

"We'll just keep applying for grants until we're sure the area is safe. If it continues to go the way it is, there will be no clean drinking water," she said.

In addition to Midland County, four other Permian Basin cities will get Community Development Block grant money from the Texas Community Development Program.

Cities getting money include:

— Big Spring will receive a $300,000 grant they will match with $150,000 for street and drainage improvements.

— Lamesa will receive a $300,000 grant they will match with $77,877 for drainage improvements.

— Kermit will receive a $250,366 grant they will match with $37,556 for sewer improvements.

— Fort Stockton will receive a partial grant of $15,000 to use for housing rehabilitation.

Most area county election races uncontested

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

In Tuesday's elections in area counties, there were several contested races at the local level, most of which were in Dawson and Andrews counties.

In most other counties in the Permian Basin area, the majority of the candidates were unopposed.

In Dawson County, the incumbent Treasurer Barbara Stone, a Democrat, defeated Richard Leonard, 2,140 to 1,361.

Ector picks Clements, Jan Fisher

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Slightly more than 50 percent of Ector County's registered voters went to the polls Tuesday, and the trend there was much the same as it was throughout the state — Republican challenger Bill Clements rolled past incumbent Gov. Mark White in the hotly contested gubernatorial race.

Only 22.5 percent of 28,858 voters voted straight party ballots, with 20,035 "split all to pieces. They were just jumping back and forth," said Ector County Democratic Chairman K.T. McLeaish. "I really, at this point, have no idea what happened," she said after the final count was in just before 10 p.m.

According to complete but unofficial results, with 70 percent of the total vote going to former Republican Gov. Clements. Incumbent White received only 25 percent.

"I cannot believe that the voters of this state put football ahead of education," said Ms. McLeaish. "I think the central issue was no pass-no play and they were mad at Mark White over that and they didn't forgive him," she said.

Voters spoke loudly in what had been described as the hottest race in Ector County, that for county judge between incumbent Judge Jan Fisher and former County Engineer Murrell Howell.

Ms. Fisher received 15,546 votes (62 percent) to Howell's 9,483 (37 percent). As to the campaign Howell conducted against her, Ms. Fisher said, "I think people, in general, are really tired of negative campaigning. They really want to hear more qualifications and more about the issues to see if there's some differences, rather than personal attacks," she stated.

Former Ector County Judge Gary Watkins, a Democrat running for the District 75 State Representative seat vacated by Republican Kelly Godwin, defeated Republican Carolyn Powers by the same margin Ms. Fisher defeated her challenger, 62 to 37 percent.

Asked about the ballot-splitting that occurred, Watkins said, "I think it shows the independence of voters in Ector County. They looked pretty much at each race and voted for the person they think is going to do them the best job," he stated.

Asked if he felt going to Austin as a Democrat would be a problem since Texas will now have a Republican governor, Watkins said "no" because the Texas Senate and House of Representatives have Democratic majorities and are controlled by Democratic leaders.

"The Lieutenant Governor and House Speaker are Democrats and those are the two houses that pass legislation and that's what we need, legislation that's going to help West Texas," stated Watkins.

One of the few upsets in Ector County Tuesday night was in the race for Precinct 2 Justice of the Peace. Republican E.H. "Chunky" Hendrick, in his first political race, defeated longtime Democratic Peace Justice Virgil Lumpee by a margin of 58 to 41 percent.

Former Precinct 3 County Commissioner J.E. "Coach" Pressly, a Democrat, defeated Republican Bill Bowen by a margin of 51 to 48 percent.

Incumbent Republican Precinct 2 County Commissioner Bryan Henderson successfully turned back Democratic challenger Tony Chavez, a former Ector County assistant district attorney now in private practice, by an overwhelming margin of 78 to 21 percent.

Precinct 4 Democratic Peace Justice Manuel Valles defeated Republican Judy Burkes by a margin of 59 to 40 percent.

First Hispanic elected to state office

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The politicians courted it and some of them, like Texas Supreme Court Justice Raul Gonzalez, got it in a big way and became the first Hispanic elected to statewide office.

With more than one million registered Hispanic voters in Texas, their vote was considered crucial in many races, particularly in the contests for governor and attorney general.

In the governor's race Tuesday, Democratic incumbent Mark White drew 87 percent of the Hispanic vote, compared to Clements' 13 percent, according to the Southwest Voter Registration Education Project's exit poll. Clements had predicted garnering 35 to 40 percent of the Hispanic vote.

But despite the solid support for White, it was not enough to offset Clements' support elsewhere in the state.

Victorious Gonzalez, a 46-year-old Democrat, said "I think it shows we as a state have matured in that we judge individuals as individuals and not by how we spell last names."

According to exit polls for the southwest voter project, the appointed Supreme Court justice got 91 percent of the Hispanic vote.

The exit polls were conducted in 50 precincts in 21 counties scattered across Texas, said Willie C. Velasquez, director of the southwest voter project.

Tuesday's poll showed that despite White's defeat, Hispanic voters, who make up about 14 percent of Texas' registered voters, also continue to support Democrats by an overwhelming margin.

"The Hispanic vote has done its part in this election," said Ruben Bonilla Jr., chairman of the Mexican American Democrats of Texas. "We have mobilized our community and we have overwhelmingly come to the support of the Democratic Party."

In the race for attorney general, incumbent Democrat Jim Mattox received 68 percent of the Hispanic vote and won re-election. Roy Barrera Jr., the GOP candidate, received 32 percent of the vote, according to the poll.

Barrera's showing among Hispanics was the best ever by a Republican. President Ronald Reagan got 27 percent of the Hispanic vote in 1984.

Barrera had predicted he would entice many Hispanic Democrats into voting for him and other Republicans.

"I think it's a sign in the change of the times, the change in the attitudes," Barrera said. "The prejudice Hispanic Democrats once had for the Republican Party is subsiding and the key is education. The younger, more educated Hispanics are independent and they'll continue to split their ticket."

Barrera, who campaigned for Clements, contended his candidacy may have helped Clements oust White.

White, meanwhile, enlisted the help of San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros as he stumped for votes across South Texas where the incumbent governor did well. An ABC-TV exit poll showed White got about 56.9 percent. But he needed more.

Some Hispanics vowed to fight Clements after he takes office. "We're going to deny him the opportunity to dismantle and destroy and to undermine our state's economy," Bonilla said.

"His only strategy will be to cut and to slash and to destroy programs and services that have benefitted our state," he said.

In the U.S. House, Texas' Hispanic congressmen easily were re-elected.

Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio, turned back a Libertarian candidate. Kika de la Garza, D-Mission, Henry G. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio, and Solomon Ortiz, D-Corpus Christi, were unopposed in their races.

Barrera, who said his political career isn't over, said Hispanics today are more politically astute.

"I think this was the case where many Democrats for the first time ever split their tickets because we gave them a reason," Barrera said. "The times are changing and I think if the political officeholders don't recognize that then it's just to their own detriment."

Authorities finding more dead animals on streets

Increased number dead animals attributed to hard times

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

More animals are being found dead on the streets of Midland and experts say it could be related to the sour economic conditions.

Coy Willis, director of Midland Animal Control, said there has been a marked increase in the number of dead cats and dogs found on streets and highways in Midland.

"Last year, we picked up 1,725 dead animals. This year we've already picked up 2,052 dead animals," Willis said.

He added that the higher count could be because people in economically hard times, may not be able to afford their pets and simply drop them off on the streets.

The count of dead animals found is a better indicator of how many animals are being dumped by their owners, Willis said, because many animals picked up alive are returned to their owners or adopted.

Willis said in 1985 animal control authorities picked up 4,306 dogs and 2,579 cats. So far in 1986, they've picked up 4,269 dogs and 2,378 cats, he added.

If an unlicensed pet is picked up, it's owner may retrieve him from animal control for $35 the first time and $70 thereafter, Willis said. If the pet is licensed, the fee drops to $15 for the first incident and $30 after.

"We show that we're $11,000 behind what we raised last year on dogs," Wills said.

"We are picking up more dogs, cats and horses this year. The horse always seem to be reclaimed," Willis added.

If an unlicensed pet is not claimed or adopted in 72 hours, animal control has the authority and usually euthanizes the pet.

If the animal is licensed but is not claimed or adopted within six days, the law permits euthanasia to be performed on it as well, Willis said.

At the Midland Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Diane Fisher said the SPCA won't pick up stray animals.

Ms. Fisher did say they've seen an increase in the number of animals dropped off on the doorstep of the SPCA as well as brought in for various reasons.

"The other night someone left six or seven kittens on the doorstep during the night and someone else left three black puppies," Ms. Fisher said.

"This morning (Friday) a man brought a 4-year-old bulldog in and said he'd lost his job and was in the process of traveling while looking for a job. He couldn't keep a dog," Ms. Fisher said.

She said she thought the increase in animals being dropped off could be attributed to an increase in the number of people moving out or perhaps cutting corners financially.

"The sad thing is they don't realize we don't take strays when they drop off the animals. You don't know what you might be getting.

"All we can do is turn them over to animal control," Ms. Fisher said.

Baptist Convention urges delegates to support AIDS victims

EL PASO (AP) — The Baptist General Convention of Texas, which last year reaffirmed its condemnation of homosexuality, urged group delgates to provide counseling, emotional support and friendship to AIDS victims and their families.

The social action arm of the convention made the request in a report on acquired immune deficiency syndrome and presented it Tuesday at the opening session of the 101st annual meeting the convention.

Earlier in the the meeting, 2,000 delegates attending the meeting unanimously re-elected Paul Powell of Tyler as president of the 3.2 million-member group to a second one-year term.

Last year, the Texas convention condemned homosexuality as a lifestyle and opposed establishing homosexuals as a minority with attendant benefits or disadvantages.

Homosexuals are a primary risk group for contracting acquired immune deficiency syndrome, an incurable disease that diables the body's immune system and is usually fatal.

The report asks Texas Southern Baptists to "openly" minister with children of AIDS victims, oppose general quarantines and pray for a vaccine and a cure "as we pray for the victims."

The report, presented by the Christian Life Commission, further asks the Texas Legislature to avoid balancing the budget "on the backs of the poor" and outlines plans for joining other groups to fight gambling legislation.

In his presidential address, Powell, pastor of Green Acres Baptist Church in Tyler, asked Texas Baptists to "get off the battlefield" of controversy and "back to the harvest field."

"Brethren our quibbling and our politicking have gone far enough," Powell said. Disagreement over biblical interpretation has deeply divided the Southern Baptist Convention for eight years.

Delegates also elected Elis Benitz, pastor of Hispana Baptist Church in El Paso Tuesday as first vice president. Benitz defeated Joe Briscoe of Devine, Texas.

Benitz succeeds Gerold R. McBride of the First Baptist Church of San Angelo.

The more than 2,000 delegates to the convention which will continue through Thursday also unanimously approved a $65.5 million budget. Orville Scott, a convention spokesman, said two-thirds of the money will be used to support 23 Texas institutions and to help start new churches and strengthen existing ones. He said one-third of the money will be used to support 7,200 missionaries in 108 countries.

Powell said the convention hopes to start 2,000 churches by 1990.

Texas baptists are "going somewhere," Powell said. "We've got something to do. It's a tremendous challenge to establish 2,000 new churches in five years."

White doesn't offer explanation to his supporters for loss

By MIKE COCHRAN

AUSTIN (AP) — A somber Gov. Mark White, surrounded by his wife and three children, offered no explanation to his supporters for his loss, although he hinted obliquely at the state's economic downturn and his battle for education reform.

White's campaign press secretary, Mark McKinnon, was less reticent, but not much more specific about why White fell to former Gov. Bill Clements whom he ousted four years earlier.

"I think it was a combination of things, but, primarily, I don't think we'd have done anything different," McKinnon said. "I think we ran a good, tough campaign."

The problem really lies with an incumbent running on an economy wrecked by factors beyond his control and a Republican administration unwilling to do anything about it, McKinnon said.

"But the bottom line is the electorate," he said. "When they go to vote, they have a tendency to just blame the guy at the top of the ticket, although the governor bore no responsibility for this economy."

At the end of his concession speech, White hugged his daughter, Elizabeth, who had started crying.

"Tonight the election did not go with us, and I congratulate Bill Clements on his success," White said. "I want to thank the people of Texas for giving me the opportunity to serve as their governor for the past four years. God bless you."

He answered no questions.

Tuesday night was quiet at the governor's election headquarters on the mezzanine of the historic old Driskill Hotel, one of President Lyndon Johnson's old stomping grounds.

The early arrivals were not in a reveling mood. It appeared they sensed that White would, as the polls insisted, surrender the governor's mansion to Clements.

They were right.

McLennan County DA Feazell, who faces charges, defeats challenger

WACO (AP) — McLennan County District Attorney Vic Feazell, indicted on charges alleging he accepted bribes to dismiss cases, defeated his GOP challenger Tuesday to win reelection.

Feazell had 23,838 votes, or 53.3 percent, to Republican Paul Gartner's 20,863 votes, or 46.7 percent.

"I give all the credit and all the glory to God," Feazell said. "A lot of good praying, Christian people have prayed this thing through for me. And the next battle will turn out the same way."

Feazell was referring to his trial early next year on the bribery charges.

Returns were slowed Tuesday by mismarked or smudged ballots, election officials said.

Gartner declined to use the 12-count racketeering and mail fraud indictment against Feazell as a campaign issue. He was defeated in 1982 by Feazell, who garnered more than 63 percent of the vote then.

But Feazell used the charges as a forum to gain additional support, claiming the indictment came in retaliation for his "stepping on the wrong toes" during a 1985 grand jury investigation into homicide cases once attributed to Henry Lee Lucas.

Flashing his patented campaign symbol — thumbs up with hands together as if handcuffed — Feazell often compared himself to Jesus Christ, the biblical characters David and Daniel, and the fictional movie hero Rocky Balboa to thrust himself into the underdog's role.

Federal agents handcuffed Feazell when he was arrested Sept. 17, and Feazell turned the incident into a bumper sticker and fodder for his campaign advertisements.

Four days before the election, a 38-page affidavit used to seize items from Feazell after his arrest was released by court order, adding fuel to Feazell's claim that his arrest was political.

"They know they can't win in court, so they're trying to beat me at the polls," Feazell said last week.

The affidavit, while not identifying those called "confidential and reliable informants," charges that Feazell accepted bribes to dismiss cases, violated federal election codes, threatened potential witnesses against him and illegally taped conversations in his office.

ECTOR

Democrat Joe Hernandez, seeking the Precinct 4 County Commissioner seat held by Willie Hammond Jr., defeated Republican Roy Gentry by a margin of 59 to 40 percent also.

Ector County voters rejected Democrat Gerald McCathern's bid to unseat 19th Congressional District Republican Rep. Larry Combest by a margin of 69 to 30 percent.

Voters in Ector County approved three of four proposed Constitutional amendments. The Ector County vote rejected the proposed amendment that would have allowed the state legislature "to provide general law for the apportionment of the value of railroad rolling stock among cointies for purposes of property taxation."

Mattox re-elected in close race

AUSTIN (AP) — Democratic Attorney General Jim Mattox, who boldly talked of a 25-point lead only a week ago, was re-elected in a race so close that GOP challenger Roy Barrera Jr. went to bed early today without conceding.

With Tuesday's votes counted in 98.5 percent of the state's precincts, Mattox had 1,698,751 votes, or 51.48 percent, to Barrera's 1,559,283 votes, or 47.26 percent. Libertarian Mike Stephens of Dallas had 41,301 votes, or 1.25 percent.

Mattox was satisfied with his win, but acknowledged Barrera, a San Antonio state district judge, did surprisingly well.

"I think the Republicans were stronger in the state than what we expected," Mattox said, referring to Republican Bill Clements' win over incumbent Democratic Gov. Mark White.

"I think he was primarily a coattail situation," Mattox said of Barrera.

As Tuesday drew to a close, Barrera told supporters in San Antonio the returns were close enough to go to sleep without conceding.

"I'm going to wait until the last vote comes in out of respect for my supporters. We came from 20 points behind to within five. The race is not over yet," he said.

"He was supposed to blow us out of the saddle," Barrera said of Mattox. "All I can say is we gave it our best shot."

"We gave it a tremendous shot and I don't think anyone of us should have a reason to walk out of here with our chin down, certainly not me because I am extremely proud," Barrera told supporters about midnight.

Mattox and many political observers had predicted something close to a landslide. The incumbent reported a campaign warchest of $2.26 million through Oct. 25, to his challenger's $888,450.

Barrera hammered on Mattox's style, reminding voters the Democrat had been indicted on a criminal charge accusing him of using his office to threaten a Houston law firm. Mattox was acquitted and he said he did not think the trial would cost him votes.

Barrera, who wanted to be the first Texas Hispanic elected to statewide office, hoped to dip into the Democrats' traditional ties with Hispanic voters. Mattox said the strategy did not work. He claimed a 2-to-1 edge over Barrera among Hispanic voters.

Regional vote totals reported by the secretary of state showed Barrera ran well in several areas, but Mattox built big leads in East and Central Texas and the Upper Gulf Coast.

Roy Barrera Jr., candidate for attorney general, thanks his campaign staff and friends Tuesday night. He was defeated by incumbent Jim Mattox. At Barrera's side is his wife, Sally. Mattox and political experts had predicted something close to a landslide, but the race was so close that Barrera went to bed early this morning without conceding "out of respect" for his supporters.

With 76 percent of the precincts reporting from South Texas, which has the state's highest concentration of Hispanic voters, Barrera had 49.86 percent of the vote, compared to Mattox's 49.18 percent.

But while Barrera edged Mattox in several regions, Mattox blasted Barrera in others. In traditionally Democratic East Texas, with 90 percent of the precincts reporting, Mattox had 66.7 percent to 31.96 percent for Barrera.

His victory assured, Mattox looked to the next four years and beyond. He noted that he and Clements might make an interesting pair. Mattox promised to try to form a relationship based on a "spirit of cooperation," and he said he hoped Clements would do the same.

"We're both what you might call 'tough guys.' We are either going to fight each other every day or we can get along. Mark's defeat will place a greater responsibility on my shoulders from the Democratic Party point of view and leadership role in state government," Mattox said.

He acknowledged his re-election puts him in position to be a contender for governor in 1990.

Wright predicts return to time when Johnson, Rayburn ran Congress

Wright

FORT WORTH (AP) — A victorious Jim Wright declared that his re-election combined with Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's takeover of a key Senate committee means a return to the days not unlike those when Lyndon Johnson and Sam Rayburn helped run Congress.

Wright, D-Fort Worth, easily fended off his Republican challenger Tuesday, making him the likely successor for Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill as speaker of the House.

In addition, the new Democratic majority in the Senate after Tuesday's elections will mean Bentsen's ascendancy to chairman of the powerful Senate Finance Committee.

"It would not be unlike the days when Lyndon Johnson and Sam Rayburn were the two principal people in Congress," Wright said.

Before becoming president, Johnson was majority leader in the Senate and Rayburn ran the House during the 1950s, considered Texas' golden political era.

Wright handily defeated Republican challenger Don McNiel with almost 70 per cent of the vote in one of the strongest political finishes of Wright's 31-year congressional career. McNiel, an Alvarado businessman, indicated he plans a future challenge, vowing, "There will be another day."

The outcome sets the stage for Wright's nomination to speaker by House Democrats on Dec. 8, followed by election by the full House on Jan. 6. The Democratic nomination is considered tantamount to election since Democrats control the House.

Wright said the combined Senate and House leadership will mean a "team effort" for confronting President Reagan during the final two years of his presidency, with power to initiate national policy.

The congressman vowed to revive trade legislation vetoed by Reagan during the last Congress and to do the same with a clean water bill the president has also threatened to kill.

"It would let us put legislation on the president's desk instead of the House initiating ideas and seeing them die in the Senate without any vote," Wright said.

Although generally liberal on social issues, Wright also has been at odds with liberal Democrats on defense spending and foreign policy questions.

Jury selection starts in teen's murder trial

EL PASO (AP) — Jesus Soltero and his 15-year-old friend Fabian Castorena were very good friends and often walked home together from school, say friends of the slain Castorena family.

Soltero now is being held in the El Paso County Jail on a $400,000 bond and is facing capital murder charges in the deaths of Fabian Castorena; his 11-year-old sister, Ruby Castorena; and the children's parents, Luz Castorena, 34, and her husband Jose, 36.

Jury selection, which began Monday was expected to continue today and last four days, said assistant district attorney Tom Bernstein. The trial is before state District Judge Sam Paxson.

Authorities were contacted by relatives of the Castorenas, who were worried after not hearing from the family for days.

The four bodies were found scattered through the family apartment March 8. Authorities have said the shootings occurred two days before.

Soltero at first was questioned simply as a friend of the family, police said. He became a suspect when stains on his sneakers proved to be blood. Bloody footprints found in the Castorena apartment also matched the pattern on the boy's sneaker soles.

Police said Soltero gave them several conflicting statements, including that members of the Mexican Mafia were involved. According to police detectives, the boy also said that Fabian killed his own family then asked Soltero to shoot him.

Soltero gave a signed statement to police after his arrest. A judge rejected a defense motion in June to suppress that statement.

New vaccines could fight against AIDS

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — A family of vaccines that manipulate the natural immune system of the body could be used to fight many diseases that plague the United States and Third World countries, including AIDS, a researcher says.

The anti-idiotype vaccines are based on the body's responses to its own infection fighters, said Dr. Ronald Kennedy, an immunologist with the Southwest Foundation for Biomedical Research in San Antonio.

Kennedy said the vaccines may be the best hope for developing a vaccine to fight the acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Other diseases anti-idiotype vaccines might work against are hepatitis B virus, encephalitis, pneumonia, polio, infantile diarrhea, meningitis, African sleeping sickness, snail fever and rabies, Kennedy said.

Anti-idiotype antibodies are produced to curb the body's ability to launch germ-fighters and are an essential part of the immune response, he said.

Since these antibodies have the same shape and structure as the antigens that start the first wave of attacks on an infection, they react with the first group of antibodies produced to fight the foreign substance.

Kennedy said that because anti-idiotype vaccines are made from protein, they are safer than conventional vaccines. Made from viruses, traditional vaccines can be contaminated and tend to revert to the more potent form of virus.

Anti-idiotype vaccines also could act to enhance traditional vaccines, he said.

Ex-conscientious objector beats ex-Green Beret

AUSTIN (AP) — A former conscientious objector who refused to serve in Vietnam defeated an ex-Green Beret war hero Tuesday in the race for Travis County judge.

With 85 of 176 precincts reporting, Democrat Bill Aleshire had about 82 percent of the vote to defeat Republican Allen Clark for the top administrative post in county government.

The race was conceded at about 11 p.m. by Clark, who Aleshire said tried to make Vietnam an issue.

"That is a war we all regret, and nobody can politically exploit it," Aleshire said.

Clark, 43, is a West Point graduate who lost both legs after he was hit by mortar fire in South Vietnam in June 1967. He said Vietnam was not a factor in the race.

Aleshire, 36, whose father is a retired career Army major who won a Purple Heart in World War II, said he became a conscientious objector because of a "strong upbringing that the way to settle fights in school was not to fight."

In lieu of military service, Aleshire worked two years in community action programs and as a legislative researcher.

The 10th European Junior Championship, limited to players under 25, was won by the Netherlands. It was a fitting reward for a country most active in promoting bridge for young players.

The competitors might have been young in years and experience, but they left no doubts about their skill. On this board from the Sweden-Great Britain match, North-South bid well to reach a small slam in spades. In their methods, South's rebid of two hearts was forcing, and a cue-bidding sequence followed.

West led a club and declarer ran it to the jack. His problem was his fourth heart. One way to handle that would be to duck a heart, draw two rounds of trumps and then cash the ace-king of hearts. That would succeed if the hearts were 3-3 or if the player with four hearts held three trumps. But it could be fatal since it exposes you to a defensive ruff.

The Swedish declarer found a superior line. He drew three rounds of trumps, cashed the ace of clubs and ruffed a club back to hand. With East marked with nothing but red cards left, declarer simply led a heart and, when West followed with a low card, he inserted the eight. East won a cheap heart trick, but he was end played. No matter which suit he returned, it would be into a tenance and would present declarer with the extra trick he needed to fulfill his slam.

Last week's ratings return to routine after World Series 'sacked' football

NEW YORK (AP) — Football was sacked by the World Series, but otherwise last week's prime-time ratings pretty much returned to routine.

CBS' "Dallas" beat NBC's "Miami Vice" on Friday, but NBC's "L.A. Law" tied CBS' "Falcon Crest." ABC's "Moonlighting" was the network's only top-10 show. NBC's only bottom-10 entry was "1986."

NBC won the week with an average prime-time rating of 19.5, according to A.C. Nielsen Co. figures released Tuesday. CBS was second with 15.8. ABC had a 12.6. Each rating point equals 874,000 homes with television.

The seventh game of the World Series, Monday on NBC, attracted the biggest television audience ever for a baseball game, according to the Nielsen ratings, and helped boost NBC's numbers, though the network needed no help, having won all five previous weeks of the new season.

The World Series rated a 38.9, replacing "The Cosby Show" in the No. 1 spot for the first time since June when the family-style situation comedy was up against the "Liberty Weekend" celebration on ABC.

"Cosby" was No. 2 last week with a rating of 34.9.

ABC's "Monday Night Football" between the Washington Redskins and the New York Giants went up against the rain-delayed series between the Boston Red Sox and the New York Mets and dropped to 67th out of 74 with a rating of 8.8.

Seven of the top 10 shows last week were on NBC: "Family Ties," a family sit-com that follows "Cosby," was No. 3; "Cheers," a sit-com set in a Boston bar that follows "Family Ties," was No. 4; "Night Court," a sit-com set in a New York courtroom that follows "Cheers," was No. 7.

NBC's Saturday sit-com, "Golden Girls," was No. 8, and the World Series pre-game show was 10th.

CBS' highest-rated show was "Murder She Wrote" at No. 4. Its other top-10 entry was "60 Minutes" at No. 6.

ABC's "Moonlighting," the screwball-comedy detective series, was ninth.

"Except for baseball giving it some spark, otherwise the week was pretty much true to form," said Gerald Jaffe, NBC's vice president for research projects.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Conductor Lorin Maazel in 1988 will become the first Pittsburgh Symphony music director to be paid under a $3 million fund established by the daughter-in-law of the H.J. Heinz Co. founder.

Maazel, 56, former music director of the Cleveland Orchestra, is the Pittsburgh Symphony's principal guest conductor this season and next.

The gift from the Vira L. Heinz Endowment "helps assure a future filled with the very highest level of leadership for the Pittsburgh Symphony," Marshall Turkin, managing director of the orchestra, said Tuesday.

ROME (AP) — Actor Malcolm McDowell pressed his hands and feet into wet cement at the inauguration of Empire Studios, former headquarters of Dino De Laurentiis' film studios.

The 125-acre studio on the outskirts of Rome, which De Laurentiis abandoned in 1972, remained deserted until December 1985, when it was bought for $20 million by Empire, a Los Angeles-based company owned by Charles Band.

"Hollywood is pricing itself out of the market," McDowell said Tuesday. Known for his roles in "Clockwork Orange" and "Caligula," McDowell is starring in the psychological drama "The Caller," being filmed here.

Empire, known for fantasy-horror films such as "Eliminator" and "Troll," plans to produce 20 films here by the end of 1987.

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Science fiction writer Ursula Le Guin has been awarded the University of Rochester's 1986 Janet Heidinger Kafka Prize for fiction, officials said.

Le Guin, of Portland, Ore., won for her 15th novel, "Always Coming Home," about a people called The Kesh, who live in the distant future, officials said Tuesday.

Le Guin's other honors for her writing including a National Book Award, a Newberry Silver Medal Award and a Fulbright fellowship, in addition to science fiction's Hugo and Nebula awards.

The Kafka Prize is believed to be the only literary award exclusively for American women writers. The award, established in 1976, is named for Janet Kafka, a Doubleday and Co. Inc., editor who died in an auto accident in 1975.

Kenny Rogers

CLARKSVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Filming singer Kenny Rogers' latest music video shut down three streets in the town's historic district, chamber of commerce officials said.

The video "Twenty Years Ago," to be released in January, will depict Rogers' life 20 years ago, said Barbara Ratchford, a chamber spokeswoman.

Ms. Ratchford said the filmmakers chose Clarksville, about 40 miles northwest of Nashville, because "they were looking for something that could be Anywhere, USA."

The filmmakers used a cafe, a barber shop and a foundry building, which was dressed up to look like an old-fashioned hardware store, she said.

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Adolf Busemann, who discovered the "swept-wing" design that made supersonic aircraft flight possible, died Monday. He was 85.

Busemann presented his discovery at the Volta Congress in Rome in 1935. After World War II, a group of American scientists invited him to the United States to carry on his research. The swept-wing design was used in the United States' F-86 and Soviet MiG-15 jet fighters during the Korean War.

Busemann helped design many aircraft for the forerunner of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration before retiring from government work in 1970. His wind-tunnel research led him to advise NASA on the use of ceramic tiles, which could withstand high temperatures better than aluminum, on the space shuttle. Busemann also invented a rotating space station and a plasma accelerator for NASA.

WASHINGTON (AP) — J. Lawrence Angel, a Smithsonian Institution anthropologist and forensic expert, died Monday of complications resulting from hepatitis. He was 71.

Angel's study of the skeletal remains of ancient Greeks and Turks led him to become one of the country's leading forensic experts. He taught at the University of California at Berkeley, the University of Minnesota and Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia. Angel had been senior curator of physical anthropology at the Smithsonian's National Museum of Natural History since 1962. He wrote pioneering demographic studies of the health of peoples of the eastern Mediterranean region dating back 10,000 years.

Dollar retreats

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar staged a broad retreat in Europe early today in what dealers said was a reaction to the Democratic takeover of the Senate.

Gold bullion rose to around $410.

European traders said the dollar came under pressure after the Democrats won a Senate majority in Tuesday's elections.

They said the prospect of a stalemate between a Democratic-controlled Senate and a Republican administration was thought likely to weaken the U.S. economy and put pressure and the dollar.

—2.0427 West German marks, down from 2.0570

—1.7055 Swiss francs, down from 1.7135

—6.6755 French francs, down from 6.7115

—1,411.25 Italian lire, down from 1,420.50

—1.38855 Canadian dollars, down from 1.39025

The British pound rose to $1.4255 from $1.4155.

Gold bullion see-sawed around $410 in trading described as nervous and thin. A London trader said gold's rise in New York Tuesday indicated a short-term reversal in the metal's recent decline. But she said market participants in London appeared wary of touching off a sharp upswing.

On Tuesday, gold for current delivery closed at $409.30 a troy ounce, up $4.30, on the New York Commodity Exchange.

The metal opened in London today at $411.50, up from $408 late Tuesday. Later, the city's five biggest bullion houses later fixed a recommended price of $410.25.

In Zurich, gold was bid at $409.75, up from $408.50.

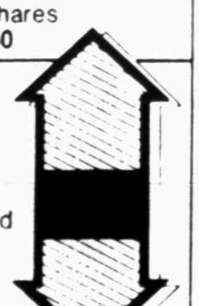

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold closed at a bid of $409.59, up from $405.33.

Silver bullion was quoted in London at a bid of $5.74 an ounce, down 1 cent.

Fed won't act on interest rates

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interest rates, which in some cases have fallen to the lowest levels in a decade, are likely to show little change over the next several months, economists are predicting.

These analysts believe that the Federal Reserve Board, which has played a key role in pushing rates down, is content to sit back now and see if its efforts bear fruit in a rebound in economic growth.

The board's chief policymaking group, the Federal Open Market Committee, gathered for one of its periodic meetings today to assess the state of the economy.

The 12-member group, composed of seven members of the Fed board and the presidents of five Federal Reserve regional banks, meets in secret with minutes of its deliberations released six weeks later.

However, analysts said they would be surprised if the Fed decided to do anything dramatic given the current uncertainty over whether the economy is indeed rebounding after a two-year period of sluggish activity.

"I think the Federal Reserve will adopt a stance of vigilance," said Allen Sinai, chief economist for Shearson Lehman Brothers of New York. "Recent economic data suggest additional strength, but the economy is still on the borderline of needing further stimulus."

The Federal Reserve has cut the discount rate, the interest it charges to make loans to member banks, four times already this year in an effort to revive sluggish economic growth. The last reduction, on Aug. 20, put the rate at 5.5 percent.

The Federal Reserve's effort has succeeded in moving a variety of interest rates to their lowest levels of this decade.

Mortgage rates are currently at 9.89 percent for fixed-rate loans, the lowest they have been since 1978. The low rates have spurred a boom in sales of new and existing homes and a rush by homeowners to refinance mortgages taken out earlier this decade when rates climbed above 18 percent.

Overall economic growth, as measured by the gross national product, climbed to an annual rate of 2.4 percent from July through September. While this was essentially unchanged from the sluggish pace of the past two years, recent gains in factory orders, trade statistics and retail suggests growth will strengthen further this quarter.

Drilco sale pending

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

Smith International Inc. has received the needed bankruptcy court approval to sell its Drilco Industrial subsidiary in Midland. However, vice president and treasurer of the company Bob Gubrud, at the firm's Newport Beach, Calif. headquarters, said he expects at least another couple weeks of negotiations before the sale is closed.

Smith has reached an agreement in principle with R.B. Capital Inc. of St. Louis for acquisition of the mining tool manufacturing business, Gubrud says.

R.B. Capital official Ronald Gregory said his company is reserving comment on the transaction until the deal is closed.

Gubrud says that he expects the deal to be a combined cash and stock transaction, with the final negotiated price to be based on an evaluation of assets as of Oct. 31.

Pickens applauds firing of Saudi oil minister

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Texas oilman T. Boone Pickens, Jr. says he is delighted the Saudi Arabian royal family finally ousted oil minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani last week because the move clears the way for oil to rise to $20 per barrel in the next six months.

"Yamani is analogous to Paul Volcker," Pickens told the Tulane

Business Forum, referring to the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

"There was a time for Volcker and for Yamani, and that time has passed for both of them," he said Tuesday.

Pickens, chairman of the Amarillo-based Mesa Petroleum Co., said Saudi Arabia will once again resort to being the swing oil producer, cutting back its production to keep the supply under control.

As production falls, he said, prices will rise.

However he said even $20 per barrel oil will not be enough to reverse the downturn in U.S. drilling, nor will $28 per barrel oil, which he thinks will be achieved in two years.

He said the U.S. oil industry will not recover until oil reaches $35 per barrel, with the anticipation of the price being $50 per barrel.

At $20 per barrel, Pickens said he thinks the U.S rig count will flirt with its 1986 low of 663 rigs next summer.

Even more important than the oil price, Pickens said, is the price of natural gas which will be the barom eter to watch because the bulk of the reserves will be gas.

When natural gas prices rise to $5 per thousand cubic feet, with the anticipation of reaching $10 per mcf, Pickens predicted the recovery will be under way. He says this will not occur before 1990 and possibly as late as 1995.

Louisiana gas for the interstate market was selling for $1.39 per mcf at the wellhead, Natural Gas Week, a Washington, D.C.-based industry newsletter said this week.

Louisiana's best crude oil closed Tuesday at $14.70 per barrel on the spot market.

Santa Fe still bullish on Basin

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Keeping a Midland oil office almost unscarred by massive layoffs in the midst of today's historic downturn is a rare feat, but Santa Fe Energy Co. has managed to do just that.

"The Permian Basin is our second biggest office, and while we have had to make some cuts elsewhere, the Permian budget has not been hit that badly this year," said Santa Fe President James L. Payne, in Midland for a Wildcatter's Reception at the Midland Petroleum Club.

Santa Fe Energy, which is the energy subsidary of the merged Santa Fe and Southern Pacific railroads, has a long history in the Permian Basin dating back to the discovery of oil in the Wasson field area and the efforts of Oil Development Corp. for which the prolific O.D.C. unit was named. As a result of the long time present and continuing interest in the Permian Basin about 8,100 barrels daily of the firm's 55,000 barrels are produced here.

Payne said Santa Fe employed 60 people in the Permian Basin with most of them working in the Midland office, and that it intended to maintain a high level of activity in the Permian Basin.

"With a capital budget of $20 million, we plan to drill 30 gross wells next year of which 15 will be net wells," said Payne. Most of that drilling will probably be in the Morrow sands of New Mexico, where the firm has enjoyed continuing success with the prospect of multiple completions in the Bone Springs and Atoka.

Payne said with the lack of drilling and reserve additions it was only a matter of time before the natural gas market turns around. "We feel it will be sooner than later," added the former Chevron executive, who was division manager of Chevron's Mid Continent Division before going to Santa Fe in 1982 as vice president of exploration and land and becoming president in January of this year.

While the downturn has affected Santa Fe as much as other oil firms it has nonetheless remained in a position to make acquisitions thanks to a debt free position made possible by the placing of 50 percent of the firm's assets into a limited master partnership. The partnership, which went on the market at $20 in January is still selling at $20 and was responsible for bringing $106 million into the company.

"We feel this is a good time to buy reserves. We are looking for long life reserves in areas where we already operate," said Payne, "but to date we have not had too much success in making acquisitions in the Basin."

Basically optimistic about the state of the industry, Payne feels the domestic oil industry has seen the bottom and now faces a long, hard climb back.

Wagner & Brown target explores options

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (UPI) — Lear Siegler Inc., target of a $1.5 billion takeover bid from AFG Partners, said Tuesday it will continue to explore its alternatives, including talks with other parties interested in buying the company.

The letter was the first response since last week's announcement that Midland-based Wagner & Brown and AFG Industries Inc. of Irvine, Calif. had offered $85 a share for the diversified automotive, aerospace and electronics company.

In an interview last weekend, Joel Reed, chief financial officer for Wagner & Brown, and R.D. Hubbard, chairman of AFG, said the partnership would sell Lear Siegler's aerospace, glass-making and ailing Piper Aircraft units and operate the remaining divisions that manufacture a variety of consumer products, automotive parts and high-tech equipment.

AFG Industries is a glass-products manufacturer and Wagner & Brown is a closely-held oil concern.

In a letter to AFG Partners, Lear Siegler's chairman and chief executive officer Norman Barkeley said:

"The board has asked me to confirm to you that it has authorized management to continue to explore and evaluate restructuring and other alternatives open to the company with Drexel Burnham Lambert in seeking to optimize shareholder values.

"These alternatives include engaging in discussions with third parties who have expressed interest in acquiring the company, including AFG Partners and others," the letter said.

Jack Cressman, a Lear Siegler spokesman, declined to identify the other companies that have expressed interest in a possible acquisition.

Barkeley also said Lear Siegler also might consider the redemption of its shareholder purchase rights.

Crude imports shrink as oil inventories swell

NEW YORK (UPI) — The nation's crude oil stocks swelled by almost 10 million barrels in the week ended Oct. 31 even though imports declined and refineries stepped up production, the American Petroleum Institute reported.

Crude oil inventories shot up to 348.5 million barrels last week from 339.5 million barrels in the previous week and 315.7 million barrels in the same week last year, the group said.

Despite the bulge in crude supplies, crude oil imports fell to 3.9 million barrels a day from 4.5 million barrels a day in the preceding week but remained above the 3 million barrel-a-day rate of last year.

Imports of petroleum products decreased to 1.8 million barrels a day from 2.2 a week ago but outpaced the 1.6 million barrels a day reaching U.S. shores in the same 1985 week.

U.S. refineries operated at 83.4 percent of capacity, up from 82.8 percent a week earlier and 79.2 percent in the year-ago week.

Union Texas revenues tumble in third quarter

Revenues for the third quarter of 1985 were $506 million, which was negatively affected by approximately $18 million in special items.

Automakers report lackluster sales

New York Times News Service

DETROIT — The big American auto makers Tuesday reported lackluster sales for the final 10 days of October, a reversal from record-breaking sales in September and early October.

Car sales for the period slipped 6 percent from a year ago, to 219,575, while light-truck sales fell 29.3 percent, to 91,200.

Incentives, in the form of 2.9 percent or lower financing, were available during the early part of the month, bringing car sales for all of October to 633,643, or 5.9 percent above a weak month last year, when the companies were also suffering from sales pulled ahead by incentive programs. Light-truck sales in the month were off 7.6 percent, to 272,680.

The seasonally adjusted annual selling rate for domestic autos fell from 12.3 million last month to 7 million this month.

Sales of imported cars improved 2.9 percent from last October, to 273,039, including estimates for some of the smaller companies. The seasonally adjusted annual selling rate was 3.3 million for the month, down from 3.8 million in September and a bit weaker than some analysts had expected.

"September was a spectacular month for imports and domestics," said Harvey Heinbach, an auto industry analyst with Merrill Lynch. "I guess the incentives rubbed off on imported car sales; everyone was out buying cars. Maybe it's just natural that imports would fall back to a more sustainable rate.

"We think domestic sales are going to remain weak in November. Inventories will be a problem again by the end of November, necessitating production cuts or other incentives. Right now it looks as though it's going to be production cuts."

In the Oct. 21-31 period, which had 10 selling days both this year and last, the General Motors Corp. said it sold 110,141 new cars, a 15.3 percent decline from last year. GM's light-truck sales dropped 33.2 percent, to 34,641.

The Ford Motor Co. said its dealers delivered 52,844 cars in the period, 3.4 percent fewer than in 1985, while sales of light trucks fell 34 percent, to 30,398.

New-car sales by the Chrysler Corp. were also off, by 8.4 percent, to 31,121, and sales of domestically built light trucks stumbled 9.7 percent, to 14,257.

(Eds. Optional trim material follows.)

The American Motors Corp. reported a 33.5 percent drop in car sales, to 3,039, despite zero percent financing offered throughout the period. Sales of the company's Jeep products fell 16.3 percent, to 9,630, from late October 1985.

Volkswagen of America Inc. said it was experiencing problems with its reporting system and estimated sales for the period of 2,636, a 22.8 pecent drop from last year.

The American Honda Motor Co., alone among the domestic manufacturers to report increased sales, said deliveries of 15,916 cars surged three-fold percent above last year.

The Nissan Motor Corp. reported a 1.6 percent decline in car sales, to 3,051. Sales of light trucks plunged 41 percent, to 2,274, the company reported.

In the middle of October, Toyota Motor Manufacturing began selling cars built at its new Kentucky assembly plant. The company reported deliveries of 827 new cars by the end of the month.

For all of October, GM car sales were 1 percent ahead of last year while light-truck sales fell 12.1 percent. Ford said its car sales rose 10.6 percent but light trucks slipped 4 percent. Chrysler reported car sales up 3.7 percent and trucks off 4.1 percent from last October.

Also in the month, AMC car sales dropped 23.5 percent, but Jeep sales were 9.2 percent ahead of last year. Volkswagen car sales were down 15.7 percent. Nissan reported car sales off 5 percent and trucks down 41.5 percent, while Honda enjoyed a 153.5 percent gain from a year ago in its car sales.

GM's share of the market in October, including cars and trucks, both domestically produced and imported, was 36 percent. Ford's market share was 20.3 percent, while Chrysler's was 12.9 percent. AMC had 2.3 percent of the market; Toyota 6.5 percent; Honda 5.5 percent; Nissan 4.6 percent.

Texas oilmen say Yamani ouster adds uncertainty

DALLAS (AP) — Texas oilmen say that the dismissal of Ahmed Zaki Yamani as Saudi Arabia's oil minister adds another element of uncertainty to the already troubled state economy.

"Sheik Yamani's departure poses a serious danger to this nation," said George Mitchell, chairman of Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. of Houston.

Mitchell said the departure of Yamani could strengthen the more radical members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. Such a move could "prove threatening to our military and economic security," Mitchell said.

Yamani was fired Thursday by King Fahd. Named acting oil minister in his place was Planning Minister Hisham Nazer.

The announcement sent shock waves through financial and oil communities around the globe, leaving analysts wondering what his departure would mean to the financial world.

Yamani has orchestrated Saudi oil policy since 1962. He was the dominant figure at OPEC meetings and was considered the architect of the 1973 Arab oil embargo that triggered the first major oil price rise and reshaped the world economy.

"There is no question that it (Yamani's ouster) adds yet another volatile factor," said Ray Hunt, chairman of Hunt Consolidated of Dallas.

Hunt said he expected Nazer, Yamani's replacement, to push for a higher oil price and reducted production. The alternative would be to increase output and attempt to force prices downward.

Hunt is especially interested in the developments in the Middle East. A Hunt company made a major wildcat discovery in North Yemen in 1984 and is building a 200,000-barrel-a-day pipeline to transport the oil to Red Sea loading area.

Some observers said the change in leadership may help the United States oil industry by calling attention to its problems.

Members of the Independent Petroleum Association of America called on President Reagan last week to impose a fee on imported oil if dominant OPEC countries continue to hold oil prices below levels needed for the United States to maintain adequate reserves.

The Reagan Administration had welcomed the decline in oil prices when the decline began a year ago because it was seen as a way to control inflation. But the administration recently launched a major study of the industry's problems.

One of the reasons given for the study was the downturn in the economies of Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and other oil producing states.

DRILCO

He added that Smith anticipates retaining at least a portion of the real estate and some other assets at the Drilco plant on Garden City Highway, which will likely be leased back to R.B. Capital.

R.B.'s Gregory also declined comment on what effect the change in ownership might have on Drilco operations.

Drilco was initially placed on the open market by Smith International in January 1985.

The company was founded by Midlanders Stanley Moore, Don Morris and Bill Bachman in 1949 as an oil tool manufacturer. Drilco Industrial, the mining tool division, was founded in 1964, and in the mid-1970s Smith acquired the company and moved the oil field manufacturing division to Houston.

The parent company filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection earlier this year after losing a patent infringement case brought against it by Hughes Tool Co., Houston. Smith was ordered to pay between $207 and $228 million in royalties and interest to Hughes in February of this year at the close of the 14-year-old suit.

FED

David Wyss, an economist with Data Resources Inc. of Lexington, Mass., said that strength this quarter was likely to be followed by weaker growth in early 1987 because of adverse effects from the new tax law. He predicted the weakness next year would prompt the Fed to lower the discount rate one more time.

"The Fed doesn't want to risk firing its ammunition before the enemy of slower growth reappears," he said. "But I think there will be another discount rate cut and it is likely to come in the first quarter next year."

Before that occurs, however, analysts said they did not look for much of a change from the current low level of interest rates.

As an example of those low rates, the Treasury Department reported that three-year notes were sold on Tuesday at an average yield of just 6.42 percent, the lowest level in 10 years.

Analysts said mortgage rates were likely to stay below 10 percent for the rest of this year and perhaps through all of 1987 as well, helped by strong demand by investors for mortgage-backed securities.

Other lending rates such as the prime rate, the benchmark business interest rate, are likely to remain steady until the Federal Reserve cuts the discount rate again, analysts said.

Workshop on bidding opportunities scheduled

A workshop for small businesses entitled "Bidding Opportunities" is scheduled for Nov. 11 from 5:30 p.m. to 6:45 p.m. at Casa de Amigos, 1101 E. Garden Lane.

The workshop is free and if an area business would like further information, they can contact the Task Force office. Also, beginning in mid-November, the Commerce Business Daily will be available at the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce office at 1301 Keith.

Union Carbide recapitalizing

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The Union Carbide Corp., culminating a year of restructuring, outlined a sweeping recapitalization plan Tuesday to slash debt, strengthen its financial profile and increase its freedom to buy and sell assets.

The Carbide plan centers on three points. First, the company this week will offer to acquire at a premium $2.5 billion principal in high-yield debt securities. The securities were issued to help buy 38.8 million common shares in Carbide's successful takeover defense against the GAF Corp. last January.

Second, to finance most of that purchase, Carbide said it would arrange medium-term bank borrowings at about 10 percent, lower than the average 14.2 percent yield the notes pay.

Finally, once the tender offer is completed, Carbide expects to raise $500 million from the sale of 25 million new commmon shares. The company would use the proceeds, along with $1.1 billion from several previously announced asset sales and the sale of its Danbury, Conn., headquarters, to start paying off the new bank loans.

Carbide said that buying the notes would result in a one-time $480 million pretax charge in the fourth quarter, which would probably mean a loss for the year. But the action would save $200 million a year in pretax interest costs and would not dilute earnings over the long term, analysts and sources close to the company said.

"Individually, none of the pieces are terribly surprising," said Paul T. Leming, an analyst at Kidder, Peabody & Co. "But roll the whole package together and it's a fairly impressive recapitalization plan."

Carbide's actions come at a time when many companies are restructuring their finances in the belief that interest rates have reached bottom and might be on their way up again. In addition, more companies are using the reinvigorated stock market to sell equity, raise capital and retire debt.

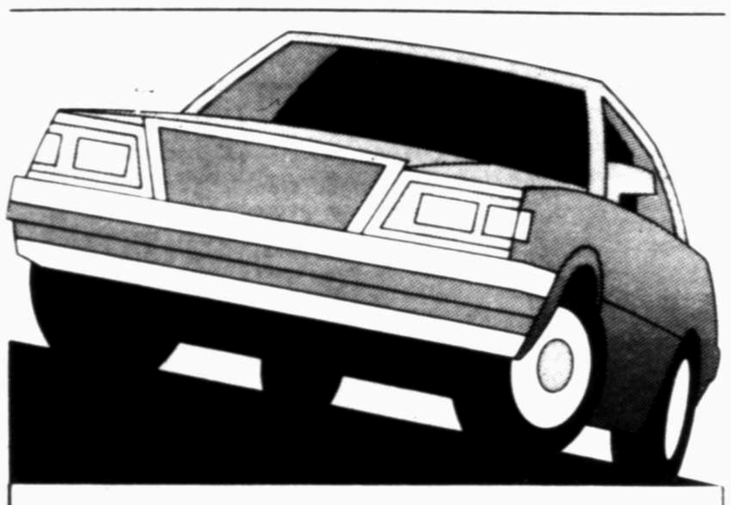

The tale at Carbide, however, takes an additional twist: Tuesday's action represents a restructuring of a restructuring. Carbide spent $3.3 billion to repurchase 56 percent of the its common shares in January, pushing its debt ratio above 80 percent and forcing the besieged company to shed many of its divisions to help pay the debt.

Now the leaner Carbide has come full circle, attempting with its latest maneuver to put the company back on a firm financial footing.

"We'd like to get the job done and have a clean slate to work from in 1987," said J. Clayton Stephenson, Carbide's chief financial officer and a principal architect of the recapitalization.

Stephenson said that once the recapitalization was complete, Carbide's debt ratio would drop to 69 percent.

"We're comfortable with that level," said Stephenson, who declined to discuss details of plan because of restrictions by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

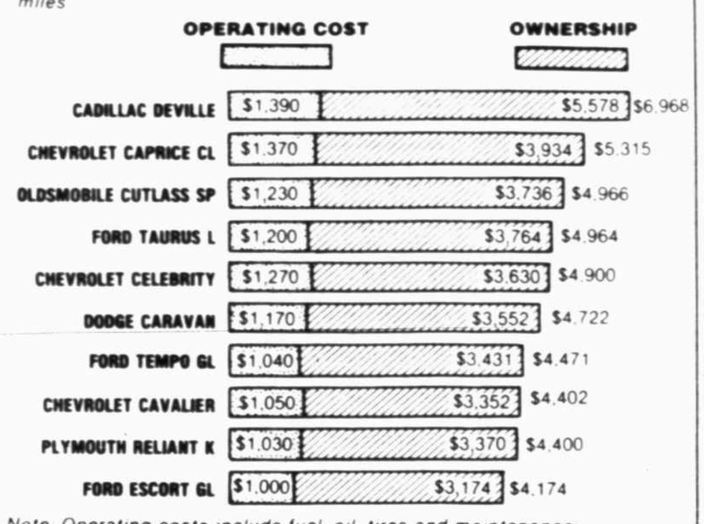

Domestic car costs

An American luxury car, such as a 1987 Cadillac DeVille, costs $6,968 per year to own and operate, compared to $4,174 for a 1987 Ford Escort economy car -- a difference of $2,794. Other cars that are relatively inexpensive to own and operate -- costing less than $4,500 annually -- include the Ford Tempo GL, the Chevrolet Cavalier, and the Plymouth Reliant K.

Cave-in closes channel that carries oil products

BOSTON (AP) — The narrow, 3-mile-long riverway through which most of New England's petroleum products are shipped has been closed because of a cave-in, and storage tanks were emptied to prevent any spills, authorities said.

About 150 to 175 feet of pier and retaining wall adjacent to the Chelsea Street Bridge collapsed Monday evening into Chelsea Creek, said Richard L. Anderson, the Coast Guard's captain of the port.

Anderson ordered the channel closed to marine traffic, shutting off all movement of home heating oil, jet fuel, chemicals, gasoline, lubricating oil and industrial oil to tank farms that are among the largest in New England.

The collapse occurred at the 37-year-old former Jenney Fuel Dock, a tank farm that is operated by Northeast Petroleum Co., officials said. The tank farm holds an estimated 395,000 barrels of oil products, but a company official told The Boston Globe that only two tanks were affected, and they were being unloaded. It was feared the tanks might leak if further undermined.

Anderson said the channel was closed because the extent of the spill was not known and it was feared that continued use by large ships and barges would suck more soil from the banks and make the erosion worse.

It also was closed "to determine whether there was possible pollution from the fuel tanks within the facility," he said. None had been found by Tuesday evening, but a precautionary boom had been placed around the area.

KICK OFF FOOTBALL SEASON WITH A FESTIVE BASH

Is your living room overtaken each Sunday afternoon by hordes of rabid football fans? Here's a festive menu that will garner raves from your favorite cheering squad.

When it comes to satisfying hearty appetites stoked by the brisk air and excitement of the game, Apple Glazed Ham is a top scorer. Guests will forget about their usual sloppy joes when they take their first bite of juicy ham with its surprising sauce, laced with cinnamon, golden raisins, and Apple Barrel Schnapps, a crisp, refreshing blend of nine varieties of apples that lends a spirited new dimension to many fall recipes.

To accompany the ham, guests will want several heaping helpings of two unusual and colorful side dishes. Creamy Cucumber Salad is a flavorful blend of cucumbers, yogurt, vinegar, mint and cumin; while Calico Corn Relish is an appealing medley of whole kernel corn, bits of red and green peppers, and spices. Try serving the salads in rounded cabbage leaves for a change-of-pace presentation.

You'll have as much fun making Big Apple Cookies as guests will have munching them. After cutting out and baking basic cookies in the shape of apples (if you can't locate apple-shaped cookie cutters, try making your own pattern out of cardboard), you'll add a colorful glaze, revved up with the addition of the apple schnapps.

And to toast your favorite team, a steaming mug of Spiced Apple Warmer is just the thing. This inviting drink teams up Apple Barrel Schnapps, white wine and spices. Float thin wedges of apple on top for extra eye appeal.

Put together this winning spread and it's a sure bet that the "Monday Morning Quarterbacks" will be asking for an instant replay.

APPLE GLAZED HAM

- 2 tablespoons cornstarch
- 1 tablespoon firmly-packed, light brown sugar
- 1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 2 cups apple juice
- 3/4 cup Apple Barrel Schnapps
- 4 to 5 pound boneless pre-cooked ham
- 1/3 cup golden raisins
- Watercress, apple slices for garnish, optional

In medium saucepan combine cornstarch, sugar, cinnamon and salt; stir in apple juice. Cook, stirring constantly, until mixture boils and thickens. Cook 1 minute longer. Remove from heat; stir in schnapps. Place ham in a shallow roasting pan; roast 20 minutes. With a sharp knife, score meat in a diamond pattern; brush with schnapps sauce. Continue roasting, allowing about 22 minutes per pound of meat. Baste with sauce every 15 minutes. Remove from oven; let ham rest 10 minutes before slicing. Garnish with watercress and apple slices, if desired. Stir raisins into remaining sauce; heat and serve with ham. Yield: 12 to 16 servings.

CALICO CORN RELISH

- 3/4 cup cider vinegar
- 2 tablespoons sugar
- 1/2 teaspoon celery seed
- 1/2 teaspoon dry mustard
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1/8 teaspoon hot pepper sauce
- 1 can (16 ounces) whole kernel corn, drained
- 1/2 cup coarsely chopped green bell pepper
- 1/2 cup coarsely chopped red bell pepper
- 1 medium onion, coarsely chopped (1/2 cup)

In medium saucepan combine vinegar, sugar, celery seed, mustard, salt and hot pepper sauce; simmer 5 minutes. Add corn, peppers and onion; simmer 5 minutes longer. Remove to bowl; cover. Chill several hours or overnight. Yield: 6 servings.*
*NOTE: For 12 servings, recipe may be doubled.

BIG APPLE COOKIES

- 4 cups all-purpose flour
- 3 teaspoons baking powder
- 1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1-1/4 cups (2-1/2 sticks) butter or margarine softened at room temperature
- 3/4 cup firmly-packed, light brown sugar
- 1 large egg
- 6 tablespoons Apple Barrel Schnapps

In a large bowl stir together flour, baking powder, cinnamon and salt. In another large bowl cream butter and sugar until light and fluffy. Beat in egg. Alternately add dry ingredients with schnapps until combined. Wrap dough. Chill 2 hours or overnight. With a floured rolling pin on a lightly floured board, roll out one-fourth of the dough 1/8-inch thick. Cut out cookies in the shape of apples.* Repeat with remaining dough. Using a wide spatula, place cookies on lightly greased baking sheets, about 1-inch apart. Bake in a preheated 350°F. oven 8 to 10 minutes or until lightly browned. Remove and cool on wire racks. Spread all but stems with Apple Glaze.*

*APPLE GLAZE

- 2 cups confectioners' sugar
- 5 to 6 tablespoons Apple Barrel Schnapps
- Red and/or green food coloring (optional)

In a small bowl, beat confectioners' sugar with schnapps until smooth and of spreading consistency. Add food coloring, if desired. Yield: About 3 dozen cookies (3-inch).
NOTE: Use a large apple shaped cookie cutter, or make an apple pattern out of light weight cardboard measuring 5-inches stem to bottom and 3-1/2 inches across. Trace apple shape on rolled dough with tip of a sharp knife.

CREAMY CUCUMBER SALAD

- 3 medium cucumbers, scored with zester, seeded, thinly sliced
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1 cup plain yogurt
- 2 tablespoons distilled or cider vinegar
- 1 tablespoon chopped fresh mint
- or 1 teaspoon dried crushed mint
- 1 medium onion, thinly sliced (1/2 cup)

Place cucumbers in colander; sprinkle with salt. Let stand 30 minutes. Rinse with cold water. In large bowl combine yogurt, vinegar and mint; mix well. Add cucumbers and onion; mix well. Chill several hours or overnight; stir occasionally. Yield: 6 servings.*
*NOTE: For 12 servings, recipe may be doubled.

SPICED APPLE WARMER

- 1/2 cup sugar
- 3/4 teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 1/2 teaspoon ground nutmeg
- 2 apples, cored, thinly sliced
- 3 cups apple juice
- 1-1/2 cups dry white wine (Chablis)
- 1-1/2 cups Apple Barrel Schnapps

In medium bowl combine sugar, cinnamon, and nutmeg; mix well. Coat apple wedges with sugar mixture; arrange in a single layer in a baking pan. Bake in a preheated 400°F. oven 15 minutes. Meanwhile in large saucepan combine apple juice, white wine, and any remaining sugar mixture; heat 5 minutes. Pour into serving pitcher or bowl; add schnapps, apple wedges, and liquid that has accumulated in baking pan. Serve warm in mugs. Yield: About 2 quarts; 12 servings.

Guide reveals vital statistics of nation's favorite fast foods

By TOM SIETSEMA
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The nation's fast-food chains certainly attempt to simplify the process of dining out: They are convenient and predictable — doesn't a Big Mac in Minneapolis taste like a Big Mac in Munich? — not to mention well known for their efficiency.

Most of them now offer breakfast in addition to lunch and dinner, and many have expanded their menus over the years to offer the consumer more than the ubiquitous meal of hamburger, french fries and soft drink.

If there's any doubt about our fondness for the stuff, consider the statistics: 46 million of us eat in one of 55,000 fast-food outlets each day, to the tune of $50 billion a year.

Despite what most of us have come to believe, however, there are a lot of differences between the french fries served by Arby's (211 calories, 30 milligrams of sodium, 2 teaspoons of fat) and those served by Hardee's (406 calories, 306 milligrams of sodium, 5 teaspoons of fat), and the 10-ounce chocolate shakes served by McDonald's (383 calories, 11 teaspoons of sugar, 2 teaspoons of fat) and Dairy Queen (520 calories, 12 teaspoons of sugar, 3 teaspoons of fat).

Those are just a few of the findings published in "The Fast-Food Guide" (Workman Publishing, $4.95), written by Michael Jacobson, executive director of the Center for Science in the Public Interest, and food writer Sarah Fritschner.

The book attempts to make distinctions among the products served by 17 major fast-food chains and, in the words of the subtitle, tell consumers "what's good, what's bad, and how to tell the difference."

Salad bars (featuring beans and fresh vegetables) and plain baked potatoes are the fast-food patron's best source of fiber, though it's important to keep in mind that salad dressings and spud toppings are usually loaded with fat and sodium. (Try drizzling your next salad with a bit of vinegar and oil, and replacing a dollop of sour cream or butter with a bit of cottage cheese.)

Concerned about salt? The authors point out that french fries, despite their reputation, tend to have the least amount of sodium among fast-food products. (Be sure to ask clerks to skip the final sprinkling when possible.) At least one chain, Long John Silver's, now offers salt-free "Fryes."

Finally, take advantage of the drive-in window: A fast-food meal eaten at home, say the authors, can be supplemented with fresh fruits and vegetables, and beverages such as lowfat milk.

Alternately, satiate that fast-food hankering at home, with the following healthful recipe for peppered beef patties.

Express-lane list: ground round, onion, marjoram, beef-flavored bouillon granules, cornstarch, shallots, wine, worcestershire sauce

PEPPERED BEEF PATTIES
(6 servings)

1½ pounds lean ground round
3 tablespoons grated onion
½ to ¾ teaspoon dried whole marjoram
Dash salt (optional)
1 tablespoon plus 1½ teaspoons cracked black pepper
Vegetable cooking spray (optional)
⅓ cup boiling water
½ teaspoon beef-flavored bouillon granules
2 teaspoons cornstarch
2 shallots, minced
1 teaspoon unsalted butter, melted
¼ cup dry white wine
¼ teaspoon worcestershire sauce
Fresh parsley sprigs (optional)

Combine ground round, onion, marjoram and salt in medium bowl, mixing well. Shape mixture into 6 oval patties, 1½-inches thick. Sprinkle with pepper.

Place medium skillet coated with vegetable spray (or use a nonstick pan) over medium heat until hot. Add patties and cook 4 minutes on each side for rare meat, or to desired degree of doneness. Drain and transfer to warm platter. Keep warm.

Combine water and bouillon granules in small bowl; add cornstarch, stirring well. Set mixture aside.

Saute shallots in butter in medium skillet 1 minute or until tender. Add wine and cook 1 minute, stirring frequently. Add reserved bouillon mixture and worcestershire sauce. Cook, stirring constantly, until mixture is thickened and bubbly. Spoon sauce over patties. Garnish with parsley (and serve with a whole-wheat bun) if desired.

Cholesterol level checks group's aim

Los Angeles Time-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Squeezed between the commercials for fast foods, ice cream and luncheon meat soon will be a new message for television viewers and radio listeners — a plea to have their blood cholesterol checked.

The public service announcements kick off the National Cholesterol Education Program — a public health effort launched by the National Heart, Lung and Blood Insitute to reduce blood cholesterol levels for Americans of all ages. People with high blood cholesterol levels are at high risk for heart disease, the leading killer of Americans.

Patterned after a similar 14-year-old program that has been teaching Americans about the perils of high blood pressure, the cholesterol program is designed "to urge the public to have their blood cholesterol levels checked, to know their blood cholesterol levels and to understand the implications of their cholesterol reading," says NHLBI directior Dr. Claude Lenfant.

High blood pressure, cigarette smoking and elevated blood cholesterol levels are the three major contributors to developing heart disease, and the three risk factors that can be controlled by changes in diet and other habits. Approximately one in four adults in the United States have blood cholesterol levels that put them at high or moderate risk of heart disease, according to the National Cholesterol Education Program.

A 10 percent reduction in blood cholesterol levels for all Americans would save about 100,000 lives a year in the United States, where the average blood cholesterol level runs about 215 milligrams, say NHLBI researchers. The National Institutes of Health recommends that Americans 30 years and older keep their blood cholesterol below 200 milligrams. Those under 30 should aim for blood cholesterol levels of 180 milligrams or below.

At a recent meeting of the National Cholesterol Education Program, committee members previewed the public service announcements and discussed the results of consumer surveys of cholesterol knowledge.

Among the group's findings:

■ More than half of Americans — 61 percent — are not especially concerned abou their blood cholesterol levels. Yet a proximately one quarter of women and about one third of men have cholesterol levels above 240 milligrams, placing them at moderate to high risk for having a heart attack or stroke.

■ Most people found the difference between dietary cholesterol and blood cholesterol confusing. Yet despite their confusion, more than half of those surveyed did know that "diet changes will help to control blood cholesterol," reported Beth Schucker, project officer of NHLBI's physician and public opinion surveys.

Dietary cholesterol is what someone eats. People who eat a lot of eggs, consume whole milk and other whole milk dairy products such as cheese, or eat fatty meats are likely to have high blood cholesterol levels. Blood cholesterol is a reflection both of what a person eats and what the body naturally produces. Each cell in the body makes cholesterol — which is an important part of the cell's protective covering, called the cell wall. Cholesterol also circulates in the blood. Too much cholesterol in the blood can damage blood vessel walls and cause the buildup of substances called plaque which gradually clogs blood flow. When a vessel supplying the heart is blocked, the result is a heart attack. Most people surveyed underestimated the role that blood cholesterol plays in the development of heart disease, compared with other contributors such as high blood pressure and cigarette smoking.

The National Cholesterol Education Program hopes to improve the public awareness and knowledge of cholesterol. "We have tried to emphasize as with the high blood pressure program that everyone should know what their blood cholesterol is," says Dr. Robert Levy, former director of NHLBI and now senior associate vice-president for health sciences at Columbia University's College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York. "Our hope is that within the next year or two, folks will have a better understanding of what normal blood cholesterol is. If you have a normal blood cholesterol, you probably should be remeasured every five years or so."

The other message of the program is that high blood cholesterol "can be treated, often just with diet," says Levy. And "the final messge is that if one treats it, one can live longer."

Italian-style ice cream pleases American palates

By MAUREEN CLANCY
Copley News Service

It's tough to judge what Italy's greatest artistic contribution has been. But with all due respect to the "Mona Lisa" and the Sistine Chapel, my vote goes to gelato.

With its velvety smooth texture, bright, extroverted flavors and intoxicating aromas, Italian-style ice cream is the hottest scoop in America today.

Generally speaking, gelato is not as sweet as American ice cream. Its flavor lingers on the palate longer. And it is lighter and softer, and less easily sculpted into a neat "scoop."

"Good, pure, fresh ingredients made in relatively small batches is the secret," Marcella Hazan is fond of saying in interviews. Hazan is the author of the best-selling "Classic Italian Cookbook."

Some experts say that gelato's higher proportion of flavoring agents (such as fruit purees) to the base ingredients results in an ice cream that feels lighter in the mouth.

According to Lester Greenberg, manager and ice cream maker at Il Dolce Momento in San Diego, the biggest difference between gelato and other ice creams is the amount of air that is incorporated into the frozen dessert.

"Italian ice cream is much denser," says Greenberg. "Because it is chilled very quickly in very sophisticated machines, it doesn't get moved around much and doesn't get a lot of air."

IN CONTRAST, many American ice creams consist of up to 50 percent air.

Though denser, gelato boasts a lighter, silkier texture than other types of ice cream because it is almost always freshly made and not frozen for long periods.

Another important characteristic of gelato is the absence of additives and stabilizers. In this country, artificial flavors and colorings are allowed in the manufacture of ice cream. According to Cook's Magazine, an upscale gourmet's monthly, there are more than 1,200 chemical stabilizers and emulsifiers that can be legally added to U.S. ice cream.

There are several types of Italian ice cream, distinguished from one another by the basic mixture.

Cremolatti is made from a base of milk, cream, sugar, egg yolks and vanilla. To that base are added such flavorings as chocolate, hazelnuts, amaretto and rum.

Gelati di crema bianca is made with milk, cream and sugar but without egg yolks. Greenberg explains that this base is preferable for the more subtle flavors of gelato: "The egg yolks would overpower delicate vanilla and fine fruit essences."

Sorbetti are made with only fresh fruits, sugar and egg whites.

Semi-freddi, which have a softer consistency than other types of gelati, are made by hand from cooked meringue, whipped cream and flavorings. "It's the richest thing I make," says Greenberg, adding that his chocolate, zabaione and torrone semi-freddi are "mousselike."

IN ITALY, another popular type of gelato starts with an egg yolk-thickened sugar syrup. Whipped cream is added along with flavorings or fruits. Spumoni, studded with candied fruits, is a well-known example of this type.

Mantecati, the richest type of gelati, is made with an egg custard base and enhanced by the addition of either half and half or milk.

Though crema, a rich mixture of egg yolks and milk with a teasing tingle of lemon peel, is the most popular flavor in Italy, there is a dizzying variety of gelati to wow the ice cream lover.

A typical roster at a gelateria in Italy might include nocciola (hazelnut), amaretto, macaroon, crema, zabaione (made with Marsala wine), pesche (peach), pera (pear), fragola (strawberry), gianduia (chocolate hazelnut), torrone (nougat), noce (walnut), stracciatella (chocolate chip) and moka, a strong, unsweetened coffee flavor that is the world's nicest wake-up.

Reproducing the famed Italian ice creams at home is getting easier all the time.

Modern machines for pureeing and freezing ingredients are efficient, simple to operate, and in many cases, reasonably priced.

Exceptionally good natural ingredients are at hand. Greenberg insists that "the fruits in California are much better than those in Italy."

And the inventiveness and exuberance of modern American chefs has yielded dozens of unusual recipes.

Concocting the custard from which most gelati are created is the chore that scares off many home cooks. The job is somewhat tedious and time-consuming, but it is not difficult. (And many of the newest ice cream machines perform this step for the cook.)

MOST RECIPES call for warming the milk without letting it boil; beating the egg yolks until pale and creamy and forming ribbons from the beater to the bowl; and adding the milk to the egg yolk mixture slowly. After that, just two or three minutes of constant stirring over medium heat results in a rich custard, ready for flavorings. After sufficient chilling, the custard is ready to be processed in an ice cream maker.

Homemade gelati is not a cheap thrill. Only the best ingredients should be used — real heavy cream (not ultrapasteurized), fresh milk and eggs, and the finest natural flavorings. If the recipe calls for Armagnac, use VSOP. Chocolate? The experts insist on fine Dutch cocoa. Vanilla beans create a more subtle flavor and a prettier ice cream than vanilla extract. Espresso gelato should be made from richly brewed espresso; not a jar of powdered coffee.

When choosing a machine, consider the texture of the ice cream produced, the ease of set-up and operation, and the noise level. The White Mountain electric oak tub that is made in Vermont has won dozens of comparison tastings. However, the noise level is excrutiatingly high.

In a recent issue of Consumer Reports, a panel selected the Simac II Gelataio, an Italian-made mini-freezer, as the best machine for cranking out homemade gelati. However, it retails for a none-too-cool $450 and takes up significant counter space.

The Waring Ice Cream Parlor and the Oster Quick Freeze also earned high marks and retail for about $45 each.

The smart, low-tech Donvier, a small Japanese-made machine that requires only a couple of turns of the crank every three minutes, also was recommended. The machine requires no salt and ice (it relies on an aluminum tub filled with a substance called "Chillfast") and sells for about $45 for the quart size; about $35 for the pint size.

Some debate whether the Mona Lisa — or gelato — is Italy's greatest artistic contribution.

(CREAM ICE CREAM)

2 cups milk
4 egg yolks
⅓ cup granulated sugar
1 tablespoon water
¼ teaspoon salt
Double boiler (not aluminum)
1 lemon (zest only) grated
Ice cream freezer

Warm up milk in small saucepan over medium heat until edge is ringed with tiny bubbles. Turn off heat at once. Do not let milk boil. Cover pan and let rest for 10 minutes.

While milk is resting, put egg yolks, sugar, water and salt into mixing bowl. Beat yolks until creamy and pale and form ribbons. Add milk to bowl, little at a time, stirring in well with wooden spoon.

Pour contents of bowl into upper half of double boiler. Place double boiler over burner with heat on medium. Stir custard cream continuously from the moment water in lower half of the pan begins to boil. Within 2 to 3 minutes after water has started to boil, custard is done. Do not let custard itself come to a boil.

Transfer custard cream to bowl, and stir in lemon peel. Let cool completely, then place in refreigerator.

When custard has chilled for at least an hour, place in ice cream freezer, and proceed according to manufacturer's instructions.

When ice cream is done, place in plastic container with airtight lid, and freeze. It will be ready to eat when it firms up a bit, within 1½ to 2 hours, depending on how cold freezer is. It should not be extremely hard. If making it several hours or a day or two ahead, place in refrigerator for at least 30 minutes before serving. It should be soft enough to offer little resistance to the spoon.

Makes 4 servings.

GELATO DI PRUGNA
(PRUNE ICE CREAM)

14 to 18 dried prunes
2 tablespoons granulated sugar
1½ cups cold water
½ cup cold whipping cream
Ice cream freezer

Put prunes, sugar and water into saucepan and bring to simmer. Cover and cook 10 to 15 minutes, depending on size of prunes.

Let prunes cool; remove pits.

Put prunes and all liquid from pan into blender bowl and puree. If using food processor, put prunes in first, run steel blades for a few moments, then add liquid and finish pureeing.

Whip cream briefly until thickens slightly.

Mix cream and prune puree in bowl and place in refrigerator for at least 1 hour.

Put mixture in ice cream freezer and proceed according to the manufacturer's instructions. Ice cream is ready to eat when done, or if you like it firmer, put in freezer in tightly sealed container for 1 to 2 hours. If preparing far in advance, let soften in refrigerator for 30 to 45 minutes before serving.

Makes 4 servings.

Taken from "More Classic Italian Cooking."

CINNFUL CHOCOLATE

1½ cups sugar
1½ cups cocoa
¼ teaspoon cinnamon
Pinch of salt
8 egg yolks
1½ cups half-and-half
2 cups cream
Ice cream freezer

Sift together sugar and cocoa into metal mixing bowl. With wire whisk, beat together sugar, cocoa, cinnamon and salt. Add yolks to cocoa mixture one at a time while whisking ingredients. After all yolks are incorporated, thick chocolate paste will result.

To this, slowly mix in ½ cup half-and-half. This will soften the paste to a stirrable consistency. Place cream with remaining cup of half-and-half and heat to near boil. While cream is heating, place bowl containing chocolate mixture over a pot of hot water; whisk mixture immediately and continue until mixture is quite warm to the touch. At this time the cream should have heated to a near boil. Do not boil.

Slowly add hot cream to the warm chocolate mixture, whisking over heat. Cook this mixture for a few minutes or until it leaves a thin coating on the back of a spoon. Remove bowl from heater and place over bowl of ice. The hot bowl should rest in ice. Whisk mixture until cool. Place this cream into container of ice cream maker. Follow manufacturer's directions for freezing ice cream.

HONEY ICE CREAM

4 egg yolks
1¼ cups creme fraiche
1¼ cups milk
1 cup, plus 2 tablespoons honey
Ice cream maker

Beat egg yolks with creme fraiche. Set aside.

Bring milk to boil, whisk in honey and bring mixture back to boil. Slowly whisk into the egg yolk mixture. Strain and refrigerate until cold.

Freeze in ice cream freezer according to manufacturer's directions. Store in freezer compartment of refrigerator.

CREPE SUZETTE ICE CREAM

1½ cups sugar
Pinch salt
4 egg yolks
1 teaspoon orange rind
1¼ cups half-and-half
2 cups cream
1 ounce Grand Marnier
4 crepes, chopped into 1-inch squares
Ice cream freezer

Combine sugar, salt, egg yolks and orange rind. Whisk together until paste is formed. Heat 1½ cups half-and-half. While heating, place previously formed paste in metal mixing bowl and whisk over boiling water until warm. When half-and-half is hot, stir into warm paste over boiling water. Cook until mixture has thickened slightly or thinly coats back of a spoon.

Place bowl of hot mixture on bed of ice and whisk until cool. Finally, add cream and Grand Marnier. Place orange cream into container of ice cream maker and proceed as manufacturer suggests. Add chopped crepes at the last moment.

Caterer adds personal touch to traditional holiday menu

Hearst News Service

Holiday menus are intimidating by their very narrowness: How does a creative cook put his or her stamp on a meal that's been ordained for generations?

To get some ideas, turn to an expert who has to cook to other people's specifications all the time: veteran caterer Randy L. Fuhrman of Beverly Hills, Calif.

Fuhrman is an imposing presence. He favors loose, comfortable daytime pajamas with the top buttons left open to expose his barrel chest and a pendant in the form of his business logo nestling in the chest hair. And he loves talking food.

Though he graduated from the catering program at Los Angeles Trade-Technical College, Fuhrman considers himself self-trained. He catered his first event at age 18, underpricing it so badly that the waiters made more than he did.

Fuhrman prefers consulting his palate to consulting cookbooks.

"I might not be able to pronounce it, but I can cook it," he says. "I bill myself as an ignorant gourmet."

Fuhrman loves to present unusual theme parties and create new recipes when he entertains at home. But when it comes to holiday dinners, he says, "I keep things very, very traditional."

Sort of. As he describes his "traditional" menu, it's apparent that his creative genius won't let him leave well enough alone, even when he's serving turkey with gravy, cranberry sauce, mashed potatoes and peas.

First of all, he roasts the turkey the day before Thanksgiving, thus clearing the oven for action on the big day and bypassing the hassle of carving the bird in the midst of chaos. The bird is roasted whole, its cavity stuffed with peeled, cleaned pieces of carrot, celery, onion and garlic.

When it's still slightly pink, he removes the turkey from the pan while he deglazes the juices with sherry and chicken stock. This broth is added to the vegetables from inside the bird, and the mixture is whirred smooth in the food processor to make a flavorful, relatively low-fat gravy base.

Then he carefully carves the bird, returns the pieces to the pan, covers them with a damp dish towel, plastic wrap and foil, and refrigerates them. The next day, he brings the turkey pieces to finishing temperature in the oven and heats the gravy mixture on top of the stove, correcting the seasonings.

For side dishes, he uses macadamia nuts, apricots (dried or fresh), orange marmalade and Haitian rum to add flavor to his candied yams. He makes an uncooked cranberry relish with chopped fresh cranberries, oranges and fresh or frozen raspberries and just a touch of Southern Comfort.

He makes what he calls "cholesterol death" mashed potatoes, adding butter, sour cream, cream cheese and egg yolks to the potatoes and even sometimes folding peas in.

"Everybody ends up mixing them up anyway, and it's great for the kids. They love it," he said.

For dessert, he usually lets his mother make her special chocolate cake, but sometimes he makes an apple pie with his favorite do-everything pastry recipe:

PIE PASTRY

½ pound butter
½ pound cream cheese
2 cups flour

Just mix the ingredients; pat it into loaves with your fingers and refrigerate at least one hour before rolling out.

With the addition of a bit of sugar and other ingredients, he uses this recipe for everything from strudel to empenadas.

Cookies flavorful

After years of looking at starchy foods as one of the dietary bad guys, we now know that foods made with whole grains are healthful because they are high in fiber and B vitamins. Whole grains give these cookies a nutty flavor and chewy texture.

FOUR-GRAIN COOKIES

½ cup whole bran cereal
½ cup milk
½ cup whole wheat flour
½ cup all-purpose flour
½ cup quick-cooking rolled oats
½ cup Grape Nuts cereal
1 teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon baking soda
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup packed brown sugar
½ cup cooking oil
2 tablespoons molasses
½ teaspoon vanilla
1 egg
¼ cup peanut butter
½ cup raisins

In a small bowl combine bran cereal and milk; let stand 5 minutes. Stir together flours, oats, Grape Nuts cereal, baking powder, soda and salt. In a large mixer bowl combine sugar, oil, molasses and vanilla; beat well to mix. Add egg, peanut butter and bran mixture; beat until smooth. Stir in dry ingredients and raisins. Drop from a level tablespoon onto ungreased cookie sheet. Bake in a 350-degree oven 10 minutes or until done. Remove to wire rack to cool. Makes 42 cookies.

Family's collections include recipes from the ranch

EDITORS NOTE: Families who previously have been named Family of the Year will be featured in "What's Cooking" prior to the announcement of this year's family, Nov. 18. This is the third of a six part series.

Just a glimpse of the Dodson's home is a walk down memory lane. Everything from the couple's freshmen beanies at Texas Christian University, before they met, to the latest memorabilia for the Texas Sesquicentennial is framed, encased or placed around their home in a wonderful array of events gone by.

"I just keep everything," said Gayle Dodson. "I guess I was just born that way."

The potpourri of memories is beyond description. It includes sentimental items such as a stain glass window from the original First Methodist Church to the front door of the house Mrs. Dodson's father was born in to the coming home outfit and christening gown both of the Dodson's daughters wore. And from the the busy schedule each family member maintains, they are apt to only add more goodies to the present collection.

The Dodson's have two daughters, Kelly, a senior at Midland High School, and Jamie, a freshman at Midland Freshman School.

Kelly is recording secretary for the MHS Student Council, football secretary, a member of National Honor Society and attends Midland College two nights a week. She is planning to attend Texas Tech University majoring in accounting.

Jamie is secretary for Midland Freshman Student Council, plays volleyball and has taken dance for 12 years. She also enjoys being artistic.

James "Doc" Dodson is the athletic trainer for Midland High School and is in his 28th year there. For the past 22 years, Dodson also has served as the ninth grade class Sunday school teacher at First United Methodist Church, of which the family attends.

Mrs. Dodson taught school for eight years at Bernet, but says she enjoys volunteer work more.

"One year I was publicity chairman for five organizations. I had trouble keeping up with what was happening," she said.

Mrs. Dodson also teaches Sunday school at First Methodist. For the last 12 years she has taught the 4-year-old class and this year has been receiving help from Kelly.

In 1982, the Dodsons were the second family to be honored as Family of the Year. "It was one of the most wonderful experiences. We have been to every Family of the Year and the girls and 'Doc' are going this year. This is the first time I won't be able to go because I'm going to be at a PTA convention," Mrs. Dodson said.

With the hectic schedules of volunteer work, athletic training, and two teenagers, Mrs. Dodson said the rest of their lives basically "revolves around Midland High."

Needless to say, eating dinner together is seldom possible. "We often eat in relays," Mrs. Dodson said. "Cooking really isn't my thing, but what I do cook is good. I'm a 'jiffy cook.' We just have to eat on the run a lot.

"My mother is the best cook in the world. I grew up on a ranch, and she cooked for a lot of ranch hands, so I just never learned to cook, but I learned to clean a lot of dishes. I always helped clean up, not my favorite either," Mrs. Dodson said.

And mom still does the cooking occasionally. Mrs. D.K. McMullan, who is better known as "Nanie," now lives in Midland and often brings over some of the family's favorites.

"When I left home to go to college, mother gave me my little black book," she said looking down at a small black spiral notebook, "and I've had it ever since. She put all of my favorite recipes in it — in her hand-writing. I still have them all," she said.

Although Mrs. Dodson is not a gourmet cook, she does know what her family likes. As for the rest of the family: Kelly doesn't like to cook at all and her mother adds that she really doesn't have time anyway; Jamie likes to bake particularly when she can be creative such as a flag cake for the Fourth of July or watermelon shaped cookies for a neighborhood picnic; and dad takes over the kitchen as a short order chef for Saturday breakfast and makes cinnamon rolls on Sunday mornings.

Mrs. Dodson does have one hard and fast rule about using the kitchen though: "Anyone who goes into the kitchen must clean up. We have so much in this house that if it isn't clean you just can't stand it."

Because Kelly is a picky eater, the Dodsons selected some of her favorites to share. The first four recipes come from Mrs. Dodson's little black book of Nanie's recipes. The last three were given to her by close friends.

Cheesecake with pecan-praline considered irresistible

Associated Press

This splendiferous cheesecake recipe first appeared on our cover of Better Homes and Gardens in 1978. Since then readers have requested it again and again. The pecan-praline flavor combined with rich creamy cheesecake is irresistible. As you mix the cheesecake, beat the cream cheese and eggs just until blended. Overbeating causes the cheesecake to rise high, then fall, making a less attractive top.

PRALINE CHEESECAKE
1¼ cups crushed graham crackers (about 17 crackers)
¼ cup granulated sugar
¼ cup finely chopped pecans, toasted
¼ cup butter or margarine, melted
3 8-ounce packages cream cheese, softened
1 cup brown sugar
1 3-ounce can (⅔ cup) evaporated milk
2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
1½ teaspoons vanilla
3 eggs
½ cup pecan halves, toasted
1 cup dark corn syrup
¼ cup cornstarch
2 tablespoons brown sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla

Combine cracker crumbs, granulated sugar and chopped pecans. Stir in butter; press mixture over the bottom and 1½ inches up the sides of a 9-inch spring-form pan. Bake in a 350 degree oven for 10 minutes.

Meanwhile, in a large mixer bowl beat together cream cheese and the 1 cup brown sugar until well combined. Add milk, flour and the 1½ teaspoon vanilla; beat well. Add eggs; beat just until blended. Pour into baked crust. Bake in 350 degree oven 50 minutes or until set. Cool in pan 30 minutes; loosen sides and remove rim from pan. Cool completely. Arrange nut halves.

To serve, combine corn syrup, cornstarch and remaining brown sugar in saucepan. Cook and stir until thickened and bubbly. Cook and stir 2 minutes more. Remove from heat; stir in remaining vanilla. Cool slightly. Stir sauce before serving. Spoon some warm sauce over nuts on cheesecake; pass remaining sauce. Makes 16 servings.

Fruit tarts: Lovely to look at, simple to prepare

By MAUREEN CLANCY
Copley News Service

Some culinary efforts rely on their complexity and sophistication for applause. Others, like the fruit tart, are appreciated for their glorious simplicity.

There is no exact formula for the perfect fruit tart.

It may consist of a free-form pastry shell or be baked in a low, fluted pan. The crust may be rich like shortbread, or flaky and cookie-crisp.

Underpinnings may include a thin layer of genoise cake or a glossy pastry cream.

The arrangement of fruit can be neat and precise, or an enthusiastic show of artistic virtuosity.

Even the size and shape depend on the cook's whim. Individual pastry shells hold a dollop of pastry cream and four or five bite-sized bits of fruit. Ten-inch shells hold a kaleidoscopic arrangement of fruits. And Martha Stewart, author of "Pies and Tarts," is fond of creating pastry "stars," "blossoms" and heart-shaped crusts filled with valentine-red berries.

SUCCESS STARTS with the best fruit. Apples should be tart, apricots should be underripe and free of bruises and brown spots. Bananas should be firm but yellow, not green. Berries and cherries should be slightly underripe.

Nectarines, peaches and pears should be slightly underripe and peeled. Plums should be firm and tart.

Because of their sun-ripened flavor, fruits rarely need any embellishment. However, citrus juices and spices such as nutmeg and ginger enhance a fruit's natural flavors; liqueurs such as cassis and kirsch add a complementary tang. A simple glaze gives tarts the look of polished perfection.

Personal taste dictates the pastry to be used. It may be a simple dough of flour, butter and a few drops of water. A grating of orange rind adds interest, and granulated sugar turns it into the murbeteig from which most German and French fruit tarts are made.

Hazelnut-enriched shells and those made of pure chocolate give some dessert tarts an extra measure of style and elegance.

The stunning presentation of a fresh fruit tart belies its ease of preparation. The pie crust can be prepared a day ahead; fruits can be arranged on the crust just before sitting down to dinner. Tarts that require no baking can sit at room temperature until dessert time.

The perfect fruit tart can be a simple creation of sugar crust and sliced fruits or a glossy, cream-based kaleidoscope of a half-dozen fruits. The following recipes are guidelines. The availability of fresh fruits and the cook's imagination make each tart unique.

MARTHA STEWART'S PATE BRISEE
(Basic pie crust)

2⅛ cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon granulated sugar (optional)
1 cup (2 sticks) cold unsalted butter, cut into small pieces
¼ to ⅓ cup ice water

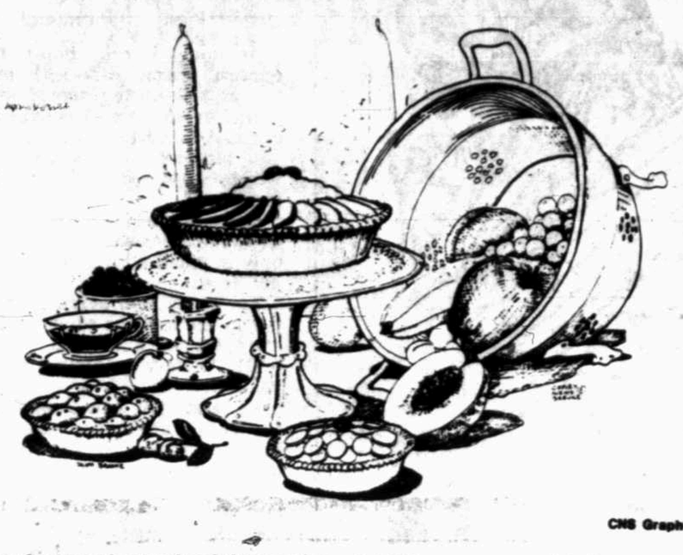

Put flour, salt and sugar in bowl of food processor. All ingredients should be cold. Add pieces of butter and process for about 10 seconds, or just until mixture resembles coarse meal. (To mix by hand, combine dry ingredients in large mixing bowl. Using pastry blender or two table knives, cut in butter until the mixture resembles coarse meal.)

Add ice water, drop by drop through feed tube with machine running, just until dough holds together without being wet or sticky; do not process more than 30 seconds. Test dough at this point by squeezing small amount together. If crumbly, add a bit more water.

Turn dough out onto large piece of plastic wrap. Grasping ends of the plastic wrap with hands, press dough into flat circle with fists. This makes rolling easier than if pastry is chilled as a ball. Wrap dough in plastic and chill for at least an hour.

Lightly butter or spray with vegetable cooking spray pie plate(s) or tart pan(s) to be used. On lightly floured board, roll out pastry to thickness of ⅛-inch. Place pastry in tart pan, pie plate or pastry ring which has been set on parchment-lined baking sheet, and press it into bottom edges and along sides. Trim pastry using scissors or sharp paring knife, or by rolling with rolling pin across top of pan. (I often cut the pastry an inch or so higher than the edge of the tart pan and tuck this overhang to the inside of the pan for extra height and reinforcement.) Crimp or decorate edges of the pastry, if desired. Chill pastry-lined pan until ready to use. Unbaked pastry shells can be refrigerated, well-wrapped in plastic, for up to one day; for longer storage, they can be frozen.

Makes two 8- to 10-inch tarts or single-crust pies, one 8- to 10-inch double-crust pie, or 12 2½- to 3-inch tartlets.

CNS Graphic

PRE-BAKED PASTRY SHELLS: To partially or completely bake unfilled pastry, preheat oven to 400 degrees F. Carefully line pastry with aluminum foil, pressing into the corners and edges, and weight with beans, rice, or aluminum or ceramic weights. Bake for 15 to 18 minutes (10 to 12 minutes for a partially baked shell). When pastry begins to color around edges, remove foil and weights and continue to bake just until pastry dries out and turns light golden color for a partially baked shell, and deeper amber for a fully baked shell. Let cool completely on a wire rack before filling. Baked shells can be stored in tightly covered plastic containers, or well-wrapped in freezer.

MARTHA STEWART'S PATE SUCREE
(Basic sweet crust)

2⅛ cups all-purpose flour
3 tablespoons granulated sugar
1 cup (2 sticks) cold unsalted butter, cut into small pieces
4 tablespoons ice water
2 egg yolks, lightly beaten

Follow the instructions for making pate brisee, but slowly add egg yolk at same time as ice water. Roll out and bake as directed. Makes two 8- to 10-inch tarts or single-crust pies, or 12 2½- to 3-inch tartlets.

MARTHA STEWART'S NON-BUTTER CRUST

2½ cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon salt
⅓ teaspoon granulated sugar
1 cup cold vegetable shortening, lard or margarine, cut into small pieces
⅓ cup ice water

Follow instructions for making pate brisee, rolling out and baking as directed. Makes two 8- to 10-inch single-crust pies or tarts, one 8- to 10-inch double-crust pie, or 12 2½- to 3-inch tartlets.

MARTHA STEWART'S NUT CRUST

10 ounces finely chopped almonds, walnuts, pecans, filberts or macadamia nuts
1 cup (2 sticks) unsalted butter, at room temperature
⅓ cup granulated sugar
3 cups all-purpose flour
1 egg, lightly beaten
1 teaspoon almond or vanilla extract

Preheat oven to 350 degrees F. Butter tart or tartlet pans to be used.

Put all ingredients in large mixing bowl and mix until well blended, using electric mixer or wooden spoon. Divide mixture and press into prepared pans. Chill for at least 30 minutes.

Bake crust for 20 to 25 minutes or until shells are golden brown. Let cool on racks before filling. Makes two 8- to 10-inch tart shells or 12 2½- to 3-inch tartlets.

RED RASPBERRY TARTLETS

4 (4-inch) pate brisee tartlet shells, baked and cooled
½ cup red currant jelly
1½ cups heavy cream
1 tablespoon framboise (optional)
1 pint fresh red raspberries

Melt jelly in small saucepan and strain. Brush inside bottom and edges of baked tartlet shells with small amount.

Whip cream (with framboise, if desired) to soft peaks and divide evenly among tartlet shells. Carefully arrange raspberries on top. Brush with remaining jelly and chill until ready to serve.

GLAZED FRUIT TART

2 (3-ounce) packages cream cheese, softened
¼ cup milk
Tart shell
Fresh strawberries, peach slices, blueberries or plums
Currant jelly, melted

Mix cream cheese and milk until smooth and blended. Spread on bottom of tart shell. Arrange fruit over cheese mixture in attractive pattern. Top with glaze of melted jelly. Makes one 9-inch tart.

TART SHELL

2 cups flour, sifted
½ cup sugar
Dash salt
½ cup butter or margarine, softened
1 egg

Sift together flour, sugar and salt. Work in butter and egg with fingertips to make smooth dough. Roll out on floured board. Fit into greased and floured 9-inch fluted tart pan, pressing dough against sides and bottom of pan. Run rolling pin over rim of pan to remove excess dough. Pierce bottom of pastry with fork. Cut circle of foil to fit shell. Place on bottom of pan and weight with rice or beans to keep pastry from puffing while baking. Bake at 425 degrees F 10 to 15 minutes or until shell is lightly browned. Remove beans and foil and cool shell.

APPLE TART

2 cups flour
3 tablespoons sugar
4 tablespoons butter, softened
Salt
1 egg
4 medium-sized apples
Sugar
Pureed apricot jam

Combine first five dough ingredients in bowl, stirring and mashing with a fork until dough is fairly smooth; then work it with fingertips until it forms a coherent mass. Transfer dough to floured pastry marble or board, and knead for a couple of minutes. Gather dough together in ball and begin again — it will, at this point, be soft and sticky; wrap it in plastic wrap or wax paper and refrigerate for at least a couple of hours.

Lightly butter large baking sheet. Roll out dough as rapidly as possible, being certain it is always lightly coated with flour. Turn over dough two or three times while rolling into a circular sheet approximately 14 inches in diameter.

Fold sheet and transfer to baking sheet; unfold sheet. (The dough is extremely fragile; if it should tear, don't worry — patch it up.) Roll up edges to form border, pressing all around with tines of a fork.

Halve apples; core and peel. Slice each half crosswise into ⅛- to ¼-inch thicknesses and arrange slices, starting just inside border of pastry, in concentric overlapping rings. Sprinkle with sugar and bake in reheated 350-degree oven for about 1 hour, checking progress regularly after 45 minutes.

Using pastry brush, paint surface of apple slices with pureed jam, or simply dribble on jam with teaspoon, then smear it with back of the spoon over surface of each apple slice. Slip tart onto large flat, round platter. Serve hot, tepid or cold. Makes one 12-inch tart.

'Tempting' fruit dessert made with apples, pears

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Good cooks continue to stir up new ways to make tempting apple desserts. This one is made in the French tradition — without a top crust — and uses both apples and pears.

APPLE-PEAR TART
Pastry

5 very ripe medium cooking apples, peeled, cored and chopped (5 cups)
⅓ cup sugar
⅓ cup dry white wine
¼ cup butter or margarine
⅛ teaspoon ground cinnamon
1 tablespoon quick-cooking farina
¼ cup cherry liqueur
½ teaspoon vanilla
¼ cup dry white wine
¼ teaspoon apricot preserves
1 teaspoon sugar
¼ teaspoon apricot preserves
1 teaspoon sugar
⅛ teaspoon ground cinnamon
2 medium cooking apples, cored and sliced
2 medium pears, peeled, cored and sliced
1 tablespoon brandy

On lightly floured surface roll pastry into 12-inch circle. Fit into 10- or 11-inch flan pan with removable bottom or 10-inch pie plate. Turn overlapping dough edges to inside; press against sides of pan. Prick sides with fork. (If dough is quite soft, freeze dough in flan pan 30 minutes.) Line bottom and sides of pan with heavy-duty foil; fill with dry beans (the weight will prevent the crust from bubbling). Bake in 400-degree oven for 20 minutes. Remove foil and beans. Bake 10 to 15 minutes more or until golden.

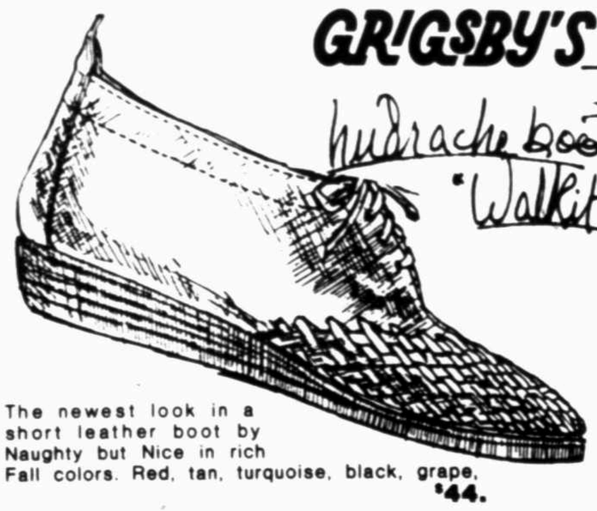

In saucepan combine chopped apples, ⅓ cup sugar, ⅓ cup wine, butter and ⅛ teaspoon cinnamon. Cook, covered, 10 minutes or until apples are tender. Sprinkle farina over apples; stir constantly. Bring to boiling; reduce heat. Simmer 5 minutes or until mixture is thickened; stir frequently. Remove from heat; stir in liqueur and vanilla. Cool slightly. Spread in bottom of baked tart shell.

In saucepan combine ¼ cup wine, apricot preserves, 1 teaspoon sugar and ⅛ teaspoon cinnamon. Bring to boiling; add sliced apples and pears. Cook 7 minutes or until apples are translucent. Drain, reserving liquid. Arrange apple slices in circle around edge of pastry and pear slices in rows in center. Cook reserved liquid until reduced to 2 tablespoons; stir in brandy. Spoon over fruit. Makes 10 servings.

Pastry: In a bowl combine 1 cup all-purpose flour and ¼ teaspoon salt. Cut in ¼ cup cold butter and 1 tablespoon shortening with fork or pastry cutter until mixture resembles coarse crumbs. Make well in center. Beat together 1 egg yolk and 2 tablespoons cold water. Add to flour mixture. Using fork, stir just until dough forms ball. Turn onto lightly floured surface; knead 3 or 4 times. Wrap in clear plastic wrap and chill 20 minutes in freezer or 1½ hours in refrigerator before rolling.

From cob to skillet, corn a plus

By BETTY WILSON

Throughout the year corn is a hidden part of daily diets. It is used to make cooking oil, margarine, starch, meal, flour and high fructose syrup, an economical sweetener for processed foods and carbonated beverages. It's much more visible, though, at this time of year when the vegetable on a cob is plentiful.

When purchasing corn on the cob, it's best to keep time from field to table to a minimum. If cooking must be delayed, husk and refrigerate the ears in a plastic bag for up to two days.

If you've purchased more corn on the cob than will be eaten immediately, you can use it in soups, chowder, souffles, salads, casseroles and fritters. Add raw or cooked corn to your favorite pancake, waffle or corn bread recipe.

Avoid overcooking to keep the crunch in corn. Allow three to seven minutes for boiling or five to 10 minutes when steaming. Plan on three to 10 minutes to stir-fry corn. To grill foil-wrapped corn, roast 15 minutes. Soak corn in the husk 30 minutes, drain and roast 25 minutes.

If you're counting calories, keep in mind it's the grass-fed cattle that are lean while the corn-fed become well-marbled with fat. Keep portions under control. A ½-cup serving of cooked corn cut from the cob provides 85 calories before seasoning with margarine. That is just about as much corn as you'll find on the average 5½-inch cob.

Freezing corn is easy. Blanch the ears in a generous amount of boiling water, counting four minutes after the water returns to a boil. Drain and chill promptly in ice water. Cut kernels from the cob. Package, date and freeze. Plan on 14 to 17 pints frozen vegetable from a bushel of corn.

SKILLET CORN

(serves 4)
4 strips bacon, cut into squares
6 ears corn
¼ cup cider or apple juice
4 green onions, chopped
2 large mushrooms, sliced
Salt and pepper to taste
1 tablespoon finely chopped (or 1 teaspoon dried) tarragon

Cook the bacon over low heat in a skillet. Add the kernels of corn, cut from the ears, plus any corn milk pressed out. Stir in the cider and the remaining ingredients, cover the skillet and cook over medium heat for five minutes.

MEXICAN MEDLEY

1 clove garlic, minced
2 tablespoons oil
1 pound zucchini, sliced
2 cups cooked tomatoes
1½ cups cooked corn
½ teaspoon oregano
Salt and pepper to taste

Saute the onion and garlic in oil in a large skillet until the onion is tender, about three minutes. Add the zucchini; cover and cook four minutes. Add the remaining ingredients and heat to serving temperature.

SPICY CORN ON THE COB

1 teaspoon chili powder
¼ teaspoon garlic salt
6 ears corn
1 to 2 quarts water
1 teaspoon sugar

Combine the first three ingredients and set aside. Combine the water and sugar in a large kettle and bring to a boil. Add the corn, cover, reduce the heat and simmer five minutes. Drain and brush the corn with the margarine mixture.

GRILLED DILLY CORN

(salt-free; serves 6)
6 ears corn, in husks
2 tablespoons margarine, softened
1 tablespoon fresh (or 1 teaspoon dried) dill weed

Loosen the husks enough to remove the silk. Soak the corn in water 30 minutes. Drain well. Combine the margarine and dill. Spread each ear with about 1 teaspoon of the mixture. Rewrap husks and tie the ends.

Grill about 5 inches from coals. Roast 25 minutes, turning several times. Remove the husks to serve.

CORN DUMPLINGS

1 cup flour
½ cup cornmeal
2½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 egg
½ cup milk
1 tablespoon minced fresh parsley
1 cup corn, fresh or leftover

Sift together the flour, cornmeal, baking powder and salt. Beat together the egg and milk. Stir the wet ingredients into the dry ingredients until just blended. Add the remaining ingredients and stir to mix.

Drop the dumpling dough by the tablespoon on top of the simmering chicken mixture. Cover and steam dumplings for 15 minutes without lifting the cover.

Cooking with exotic produce trendy

By JOHN DeMERS
United Press International

CNS Graphic

As though in reflection of the harvest season, America's publishers are hitting the shelves with a fresh crop of cookbooks devoted to defining, describing and ultimately demystifying a whole new world of exotic produce.

Many of these colorful fruits and vegetables were once found only in small ethnic markets or not at all.

Yet today, the average shopper in the average supermarket can pick at and prod things while barely knowing their names.

At least five new cookbooks supply the unfamiliar names of this new bounty, along with the history, lore, growing cycles and best uses. The books are generous as well in supplying innovative recipes, many nearly as bizarre as the products they seek to use.

One of the finest is "Uncommon Fruits and Vegetables: A Commonsense Guide" by Elizabeth Schneider (Harper and Row, $25), which more than lives up to its subtitle. In addition to a lively writing style, Schneider's prose is rich in original information and observation. And the recipes are quite innovative.

"The New Harvest" by Lou Seibert Pappas and Jane Horn (101 Productions, $9.95) is a clearly put-together guide, one that matches interesting factual background on each fruit or vegetable with a helpful line drawing. The volume features several color photographs as well.

To produce "The New American Vegetable Cookbook" (Aris Books, $14.94), writer Isaac Cronin called on the expertise of proprietors of a specialty seed company, Georgeanne Brennan and Charlotte Glenn. As this resource would imply, it is perhaps the best book of the bunch for sheer volume and variety of information.

Jack Murdich draws on 50 years as a greengrocer in "Buying Produce" (Morrow, $13.95). With no pretensions of being a chef, Murdich sidesteps the recipe temptation and concentrates on stripping as much nonsense as possible from his chosen field. This is a delightful dose of anti-chic.

"Judy Gorman's Vegetable Cookbook" (Yankee Books, $19.95) is a nice addition to the kitchen library, both for its information on vegetables plain and fancy and its often-interesting recipes.

Here are recipes for Enokidake Salad from "Uncommon Fruits and Vegetables" and for Curried Jicama and Carrot Souffle from "The New Harvest."

ENOKIDAKE SALAD

1 medium, thick, smooth-sided red bell pepper
1 medium Belgian endive
1 radicchio di Treviso (narrow spears)
2 packages (each 3.5 ounces) enokidake
3 tablespoon olive oil
2 ounces firm ham (see Note below), finely julienned
1½-2 tablespoons lemon juice
Salt and pepper to taste

Note: For the ham, choose a Smithfield, Westphalian, Black Forest or prosciutto.

Place the pepper directly in a gas flame, or set in a broiler pan as close to the heat as possible. Turn until blacked all over. Let stand for 1 minute, then enclose in damp toweling or plastic bag and leave for 10 minutes.

Halve the pepper, then remove the stem, seeds and ribs. Scrape off all the skin, rinse and dry. Cut in fine julienne strips, cover and refrigerate.

Rinse and dry the endive and the radicchio. Cut out core at base and slice into thin julienne strips. Cut off heavy base of enokidake and as much stem as necessary. Rinse for a second, then roll gently in toweling. Cover and refrigerate endive, radicchio and enokidake.

At serving time, combine the red pepper with the endive and radicchio in a large bowl. Heat 1 tablespoon of oil in a skillet, add the ham and toss over high heat to heat through. Add the ham to the bowl.

Heat the remaining oil and toss enokidake for 15 seconds over high heat, until it just begins to wilt. Add with the oil to the bowl. Toss with lemon juice and season to taste with salt and pepper. Divide among 4 serving plates and serve at once.

CURRIED JICAMA AND CARROT SOUFFLE

½ cup grated jicama or golden zucchini, pressed of moisture
2 tablespoons butter
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon ground cumin
2 tablespoon all-purpose flour
⅔ cup milk
3 eggs, separated
¼ cup shredded Swiss cheese
Lemon or lime wedges

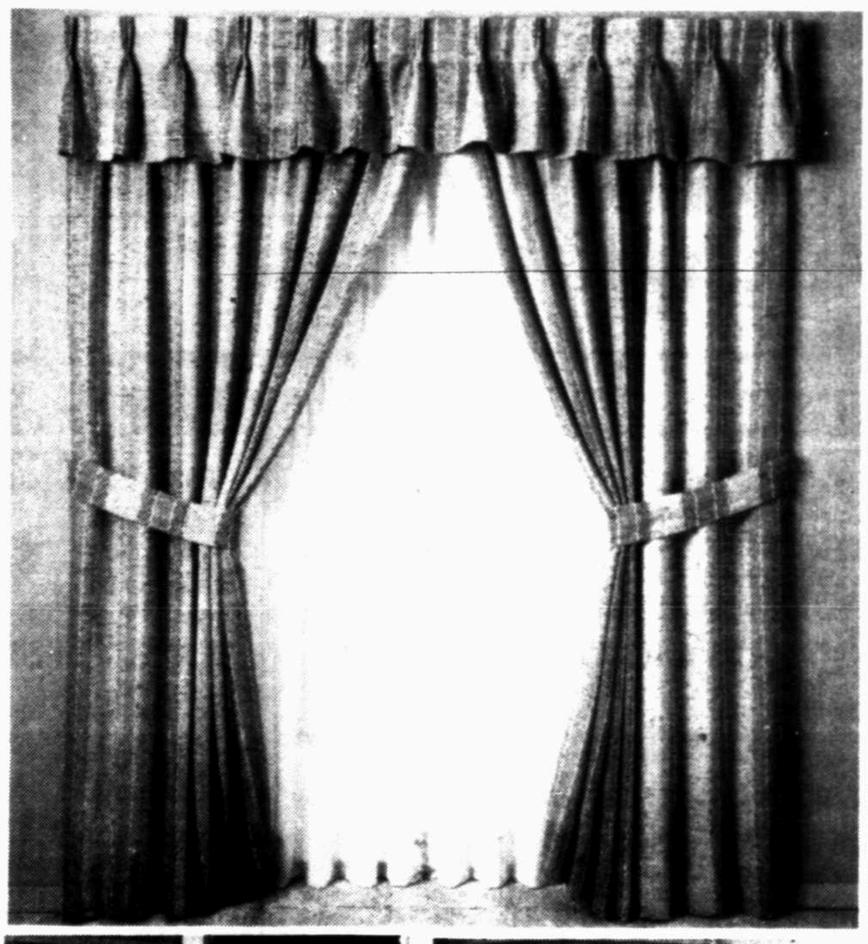

In a lare skillet, saute the carrots and jicama in butter until glazed, about 5 minutes. Add the salt, cumin and flour, cooking for 2 minutes more. Add milk and cook until thickened, about 5 minutes. Remove from heat and mix in the egg yolks.

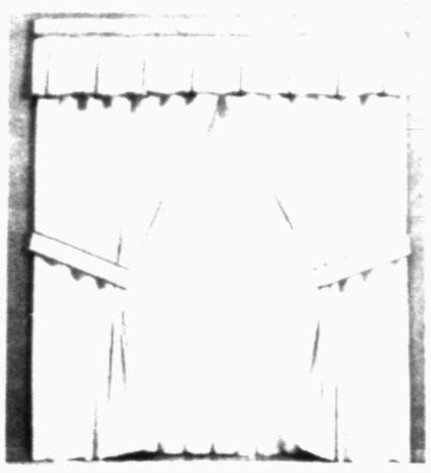

In a medium bowl, beat the egg whites until soft peaks form and fold into the vegetable mixture with cheese. Turn into a 1-quart soffle dish and bake in a 375-degree oven for 20 minutes, or unt puffed and golden brown. Serve immediately with wedges of lemon or lime.

DEAR ABBY

Man obsessed

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am hopelessly in love with a married woman. The problem is she will not leave her husband. I have been in love with her for 13 years — ever since I met her. The last 13 years I've lived in misery.

Until last year I had never even kissed her. Then last month, my dream came true and she finally gave herself to me. I was so high I swear I could fly. Abby, I could never have another woman again. If only she would leave her husband, I would give anything to marry her.

I am losing my sanity. I can't eat. I can't sleep. Sometimes I am so hungry for her I just want to die. I am obsessed by her smile, her looks, her voice, her mind. She is everything I have ever wanted in a woman and I can't have her. Help me! — JOHN

DEAR JOHN: I wish it were that easy. You need professional help to deal with your obsession. You have already taken two steps in the right direction. One: You wrote to me, which is an admission that you need help. Two: You have accepted the fact that you can't have her. Now, all you need is a therapist to help you accept emotionally what you have already accepted intellectually.

DEAR ABBY: My name is Tammy Snipes. I'm 19 years old, and this might sound weird, but I seldom read your column. However, I'm now living with my grandparents, and my grandfather showed me some clippings he had saved from your column. Some are really good. One that really interested me was the poem "If God Should Go On Strike."

As a new reader who missed it the first time, I think you should run it again for others who might have missed it. I am enclosing a copy to save you the trouble of searching through your files. — TAMMY IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR TAMMY: Request granted:

IF GOD SHOULD GO ON STRIKE
How good it is that God above has never gone on strike,
Because he was not treated fair in things he didn't like,
If only once he'd given up and said,
"That's it, I'm through!
"I've had enough of those on earth, so this is what I'll do.
"I'll give my orders to the sun — cut off the heat supply!
"And to the moon — give no more light, and run the oceans dry.
"Then just to make things really tough and put the pressure on,
"Turn off the vital oxygen till every breath is gone!"
You know he would be justified, if fairness was the game,
For no one has been more abused or met with more disdain
Than God, and yet he carries on, supplying you and me
With all the favors of his grace, and everything for free.
Men say they want a better deal, and so on strike they go,
But what a deal we've given God to whom all things we owe.
We don't care whom we hurt to gain the things we like;
But what a mess we'd all be in, if God should go on strike.
— WALT HUNTLEY, ONTARIO, CANADA

P.S. The above was copyrighted in 1972. The author generously gave me permission to run it in my column gratis as often as I wish. This is the third printing. Thank you, thank you, thank you, Mr. Huntley.

DEAR ABBY: The letter from "Quiet, Please," who hated "background music" while dining, has prompted me to write.

Years ago I played the organ in a popular restaurant in the Midwest. I often was asked to play special numbers, and with those requests was usually sent a dollar or two.

The waiter once brought me a note with a $10 bill, which was a lot of money in those days. The note read: "Will you please take a 10-minute break so we can hear each other talk?" — LIVING WELL IN LA JOLLA

THE BUTCHER

Beef no longer sold with bones

By MERLE ELLIS

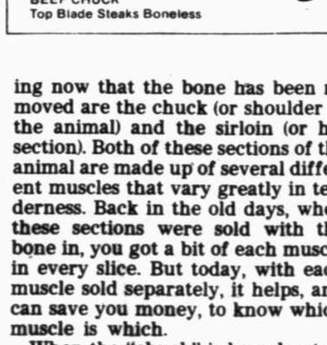

Beef used to come to market in carcass form, with the bones still in. Yeah, it did. I know it's hard to believe. You seldom see a bone these days but that's the way beef used to come. All of the cutting was done on the premises by the butcher or butchers on duty and the cuts of beef were pretty basic, most often identified by the shape of the bone that was in them. You had, for example, your basic T-bone steak, then there was the sirloin steak which was either "round bone sirloin," or "flat bone sirloin" or "wedge bone sirloin," depending on the shape of the bone. It was possible, back then, to tell where each and every chuck roast in the meatcase came from on the carcass by the shape of the bone in the cut. Knowing where a cut came from was a good clue to how tender the cut would be and how to cook it. There was the "7 bone chuck," for example, lean but tough, that needed moist heat cooking, while the "first cut blade chuck," which came off the carcass literally the thickness of a knife blade from the tender rib section, made a pretty good and usually very inexpensive steak.

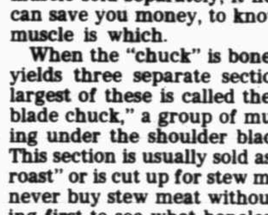

Yes, there was a lot to be learned from the bones back then, but not now. You hardly ever see meat with bones. Almost every cut comes to market these days boneless. All of the bones and most of the fat from a carcass of beef are now left at the packing plant.

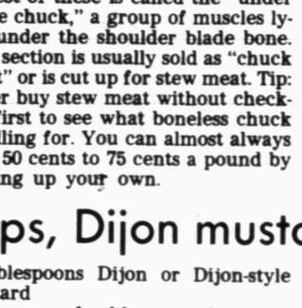

The cuts that come to the retail market today are what the industry terms "muscle boned sub-primals." The individual boneless muscles or, in some cases, muscle groups, are separated one from the other, vacuum-packaged in plastic wrap, shipped to market in boxes and sold separately. Today, we have boneless "boxed beef" rather than "carcass beef" with the bones left in and, as a result, we have some somewhat exotic cuts of beef in the meatcases of America. Things are not as simple as they were back in the days when a steer had a couple of front legs, a couple of hind legs and a few T-bones in between. And in some cases, consumers are paying premium prices for less than the best.

The two basic cuts of the carcass that have become the most confusing now that the bone has been removed are the chuck (or shoulder of the animal) and the sirloin (or hip section). Both of these sections of the animal are made up of several different muscles that vary greatly in tenderness. Back in the old days, when these sections were sold with the bone in, you got a bit of each muscle in every slice. But today, with each muscle sold separately, it helps, and can save you money, to know which muscle is which.

BEEF CHUCK
Whole

BEEF CHUCK—Under Blade Roast Boneless

BEEF CHUCK
Mock Tender

BEEF CHUCK
Top Blade Steaks Boneless

When the "chuck" is boned out, it yields three separate sections. The largest of these is called the "under blade chuck," a group of muscles lying under the shoulder blade bone. This section is usually sold as "chuck roast" or is cut up for stew meat. Tip: never buy stew meat without checking first to see what boneless chuck is selling for. You can almost always save 50 cents to 75 cents a pound by butting up your own.

On top of the blade bone, there are two small muscles, one on either side of the ridge of the shoulder blade bone. One of these, a small (about 2 lb.) conical-shaped muscle that looks a little like a small tenderloin, is called "chuck tender." It's usually sold at something of a premium, but be careful, it's (ital) not (unital) a tender cut, it just looks like it should be, so they often charge a premium for it.

The most tender cut of the chuck is the small triangular-shaped muscle on the other side of the ridge of the shoulder blade. It used to be called the "flat iron" because its shape is reminiscent of the old flat iron grandma used to use to iron grandad's overalls. Today, it is more often labeled "top blade chuck," and it is usually a fairly good buy. It's far more tender than the "chuck tender," you can even grill it, if you then slice it thin as you would a "London broil."

The sirloin section of the beef, when boned out like the chuck, yields three separate muscle groups - the top sirloin, tenderloin and bottom sirloin. The top sirloin and tenderloin are usually sold labeled as such, but the bottom sirloin receives some exotic names. It contains three different muscles, the "flap" (which is really no more than part of the tough flank and is usually tenderized to make "cube steaks" or ground) and the "tri-tip" (a small 1-1/2 to 2 lb. triangular-shaped muscle) which is by far the most tender of the muscles of the bottom sirloin and yet is often sold at a bargain price. It is marvelous grilled or broiled whole and then sliced again as you would a "London broil." Or it can be sliced before grilling into 1-inch-thick steaks that the French would call "culottes."

What it comes down to, if I can leave you with one thought on the subject of boneless beef cuts from the chuck and sirloin, is look for the triangular-shaped muscles; the "flat iron" from the chuck and the "tri-tip" from the sirloin. Those are most apt to be the best buys from their respective sections of the beef carcass.

Tips help reduce health risks by cutting fat while cooking

Associated Press

It was bad enough knowing that too much fat on the plate often results in too much fat on the hips. Now, heart disease, high blood pressure and adult-onset diabetes are all linked to obesity.

The good news: you can help reduce these health risks for yourself and your family just by cutting back on fat in your cooking. Start with these ideas:

- The best cooking ploy is to avoid deep-fat and shallow-fat frying. Instead, stir-fry or oven-fry such foods as chicken and fish. Better yet, broil, bake, steam, poach or stew these foods.
- Saute foods in only a small amount of oil, margarine or butter. Whenever you can, eliminate fat altogether by using non-stick pans or a non-stick spray coating.
- Trim as much fat as possible from meats before cooking, then drain or spoon off fat during cooking.
- When preparing poultry, remove the skin and any excess fat.

Thurman's mistake turns to gold

Associated Press

Tyrone Thurman isn't afraid of the pounding a 5-foot-3, 130-pound person takes in major college football.

After all, the wee lad played halfback in a Wishbone T offense when he was in high school at Midland Lee.

Thurman, who disregards life and limb on the Texas Tech Red Raiders' specialty teams when he's not lining up at wide receiver, displayed in a 23-21 victory over Texas on Saturday why size shouldn't be a barrier in playing college football.

The sophomore sprinted 96 yards for a touchdown with a punt against Texas to earn The Associated Press Southwest Conference Offensive Player of the Week award. It was the second longest punt return in SWC history.

Texas Christian linebacker Scott Harris, a 6-1, 213-pound junior from Carrollton, was named the AP's Defensive Player of the Week with 15 tackles, 11 of them unassisted, in a 30-14 victory over Houston.

Harris recovered two Houston fumbles and made three tackles behind the line of scrimmage, including a quarterback sack. The TCU coaches gave him a score of 100.

THURMAN'S PUNT return was a mistake turned into solid gold.

"When I caught the ball, I saw I was right by our goal and I said 'Oh, man, I need to get as much as I can,'" Thurman said.

The reason for his concern was an unwritten rule that punts aren't supposed to be fielded inside the 10-yard line.

"I knew if I didn't do anything, I'd get griped out when I got back to the bench," Thurman said.

He was right.

Coach David McWilliams said, "When he caught the ball, I was thinking when he got to the sidelines I was going to wring his neck. But a mistake is not a mistake until the play is over. Obviously, that wasn't a mistake."

TEXAS TECH was the only major college school to offer Thurman a scholarship.

Spike Dykes, now the Tech defensive coordinator, knew about Thurman. Dykes coached Thurman at Midland Lee.

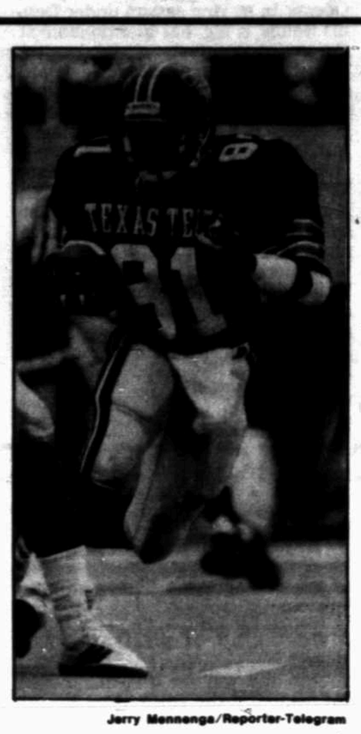

Thurman was on a team that reached the state Class 5A finals.

In his freshman year at Tech, Thurman was sixth in the nation in punt returns. He leads the SWC this year with a 12.82 yard average, good for 11th nationally.

He's only 59 yards away from becoming Tech's all-time punt return leader, and Thurman still has two more seasons of eligibility.

Thurman is the leader of Tech's "Smurfs," a gritty band of wide receivers all 5-foot-7 or under.

Thurman is the second member of the 1983 Lee Rebels to be so honored. In September, former Reb Michael Johnson was named SWC Defensive Player of the Week for his efforts against New Mexico.

Landry has faith in Pelluer at QB

From Wire Reports

IRVING — The Dallas Cowboys don't feel they have to lower their Super Bowl sights just because they are now led by a quarterback who has started three NFL games in three years.

Asked if he thought Dallas could get to the Super Bowl with young Steve Pelluer at the helm, Coach Tom Landry said flat out, "Sure."

Landry said the Cowboys will miss the experience of injured starting quarterback Danny White "tremendously," but added there is no "wait until next year" posture on the team.

"We think Steve has that (Super Bowl) type of ability," Landry said. "He has the ability to get out of trouble, has a tremendous arm and is smart. The team feels very confident with him."

However, Landry's not sure the Cowboys have a shot at the Super Bowl with Phil Pozderac at right offensive tackle, and changes loom for Sunday's 3 p.m. meeting with the Los Angeles Raiders in Texas Stadium.

"We might have to make a change," Landry said. "It's a tough business, and you have to produce."

Pozderac was flagged with three holding penalties and was in illegal motion on a 30-yard pass completion that could have set up Dallas for a winning touchdown or tying field goal in a 17-14 NFL loss to the New York Giants on Sunday.

Asked if Pozderac's reputation as a holder had influenced the officials, Landry said, "There's always that possibility. You hate to think that's true, but it's very possible. You can become a marked man in this league easily."

Playoff 'Dogs meet Sandies

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The Midland High volleyball team will be making its first trip to the state playoffs under head coach Sonja Pittman Thursday when the Bulldogs travel to Amarillo High for a 6 p.m. meeting with the 30-1 Golden Sandies.

Midland High will carry an 18-11 season mark into this bi-district contest and this one will be a tough first playoff step.

Amarillo High won the District 3-5A title with a perfect 11-0 mark and the Sandies haven't lost since September when they fell for the only time this year to Arlington High in the Arlington Invitational tournament finals.

MIDLAND HIGH posted an 8-2 District 4-5A record, finishing second in the league to earn the playoff berth. MHS lost only on the road to San Angelo, the 4-5A champions, and to cross-town rival Midland Lee in district play.

San Angelo will also travel to Amarillo Thursday for an 8 p.m. date with Amarillo Tascosa, the second place finisher of 3-5A behind Amarillo High.

"Amarillo High is very good and their record indicates that," said Pittman. "But they are very much like us in a lot of respects. They don't rely on any big guns, but have great team play. I saw them play once against Lubbock Coronado last week and they pass the ball well and serve well. I expect a hard, tough battle."

THE BULLDOGS will have a starting lineup of Amy Cumings, Drusilla Wyatt, Theresa Brown, Melinda Carrasco, LaShauna Bradley and Erin Allen with Mollie Nelson and Jacqueline Schultz to come off the bench.

"We've never played Amarillo High or even seen them, but we're really excited about being in the playoffs," said Wyatt. "This is the first time for Coach Sonja to be in the playoffs and we're all tickled to be a part of that."

Brown noted, "I'm so excited I can't wait. Right from the beginning of the year, I thought we could be in the playoffs because we had the district champion junior varsity team last year.

"The game against Amarillo is going to be like playing against a mirror because they are a lot like us. They use the same offense and defense that we use."

Hawks soar past Bucks, 107-98

Associated Press

The Atlanta Hawks, seeking to end Milwaukee's six-year hold on the Central Division championship, have sent the Bucks a double message.

Not only did the 3-0 Hawks hand Milwaukee a 107-98 loss Tuesday night, but they did it with NBA scoring champ Dominique Wilkins on the bench for most of the game with an injured ankle. Randy Wittman and Kevin Willis scored 28 and 23 points, respectively, to make up for Wilkins' absence.

"When you lose a guy like Dominique, whether by an off night offensively or to an injury, someone has to step forward and pick up the slack," Wittman said. "I just try to be more aggressive offensively and help out with the scoring. We don't need just one person to do the scoring, I think we showed that. Our goal is to win the division, and to do that we have to beat the Bucks."

Wilkins, the NBA's scoring champion last year with a 30.3 per game average, left with an ankle injury late in the first quarter after scoring one point and missing all seven of his field-goal attempts. He had scored 36 and 39 points in Atlanta's first two games, but the injury left him on a "day-to-day" status.

"We are a little older and a little more experienced," Wittman said. "This game should give us a lot of confidence."

Glenn Rivers had 17 points and Jon Koncak added 12 for Atlanta, while Cliff Levingston added 17 rebounds for the Hawks. Sidney Moncrief led the Bucks with 23 points.

Mavericks 118, Clippers 86

Rolando Blackman and Mark Aguirre scored 20 points each and Dallas forced 23 Los Angeles turnovers in an easy victory.

The Clippers trailed 51-33 at halftime before cutting the deficit to 12 midway through the third quarter. But Aguirre scored eight points during 13-0 run that put the game away for the Mavericks.

Marques Johnson led the Clippers with 21 points.

Bulls 111, Spurs 104

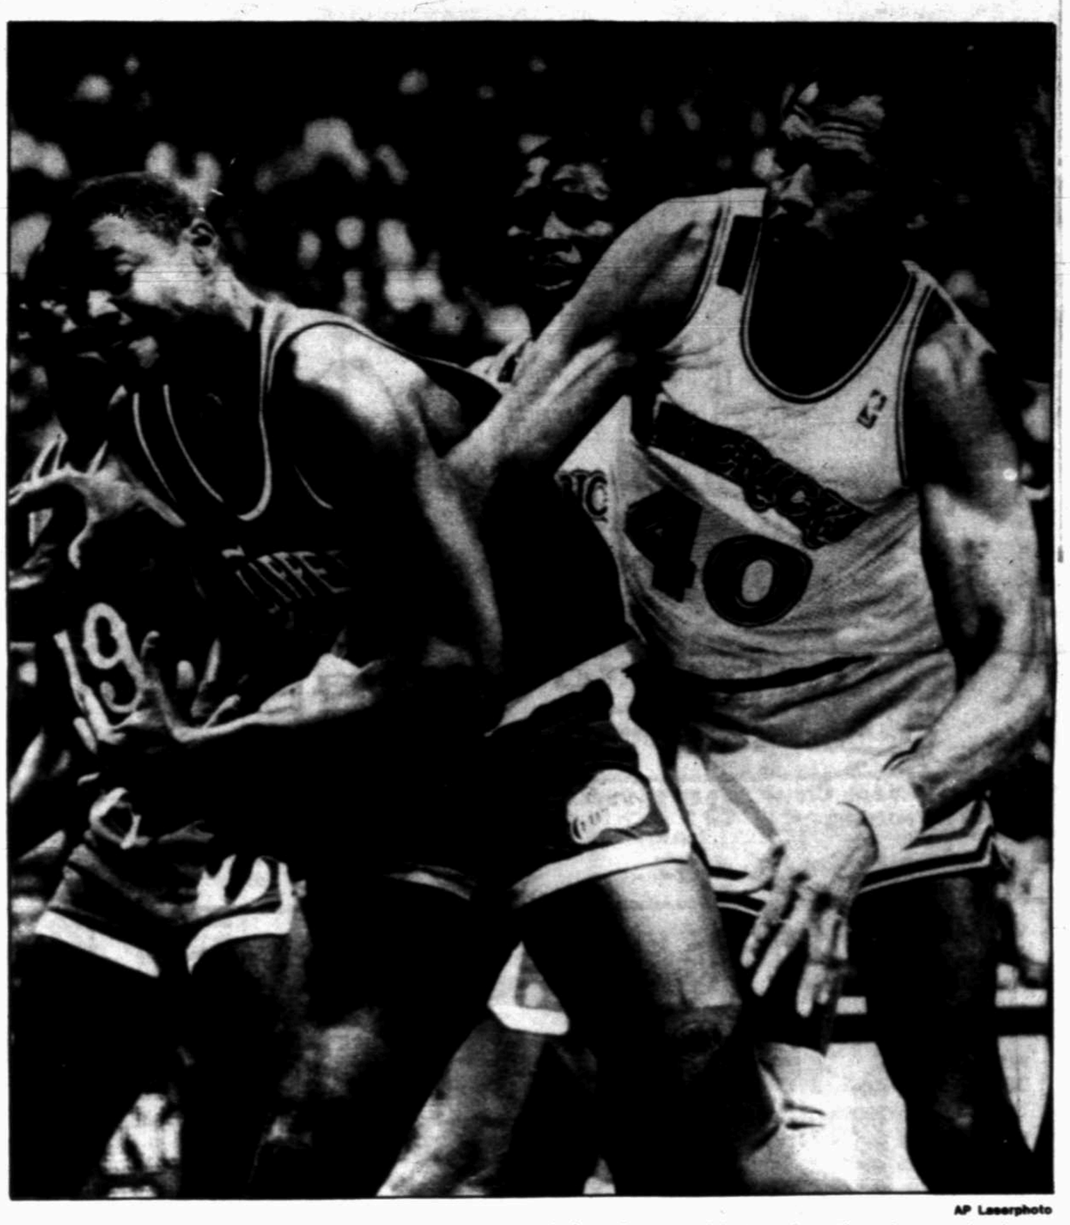

Michael Jordan scored 34 points, 26 of them in the second half, as Chicago stayed unbeaten with a victory over San Antonio.

Jordan, who has 125 points in three games, rallied the Bullets from a 19-point deficit in the second quarter. His basket with 5:32 left in the game broke a 100-100 tie and gave the Bulls the lead for good.

Charles Oakley added 28 points for Chicago, while Mike Mitchell's 34 points topped the Spurs.

Rockets 100, Kings 84

Akeem Olajuwon scored 26 points and Jim Petersen had 15 rebounds as Houston won at Sacramento.

Dallas center James Donaldson (40) tries to gain control of the ball from Los Angeles center Beboit Benjain (00) Tuesday. The play resulted in a jump ball.

Mitchell Wiggins, who scored 21 points, scored four consecutive baskets in the final three minutes of the third period, giving the Rockets a 74-60 lead going into the final 12 minutes.

Derek Smith led the Kings with 22 points.

Pacers 125, 76ers 121

John Long, acquired just before the season started, scored a career-high 44 points, including all of Indiana's 11 points in the second overtime, as the Pacers beat Philadelphia for the first time in the last nine games.

The Pacers never trailed again after Long scored the first five points of the second overtime, giving Indiana a 119-114 lead.

Charles Barkley led the 76ers with 34 points, 10 rebounds and 14 assists.

NBA Roundup

Lakers 110, SuperSonics 96

James Worthy scored 26 points and Byron Scott added 23 and they led a 32-22 Los Angeles run in the third period against Seattle.

Scott hit a three-point goal early in the third quarter to break a 54-54 tie and then added 10 more points to lead the Lakers to an 86-74 lead. Worthy scored 10 points in the period.

Rebels' 'Unclean 30' get last laugh

At the beginning of this football season, Midland Lee's "Unclean 30" couldn't get a free ticket to see a Rodney Dangerfield routine.

You talk about no respect. This year's crop of Lee seniors couldn't even wrangle an invitation to the annual North Dakota Hog Slopping contest.

Worst class to come through Robert E. Lee High School since Nero burned the playing field. Great moniker to live with, huh.

When talent was passed out to the babies of 1968-69, it all went to the likes of San Angelo and Odessa Permian — or so the story goes. And the story was told often over the years. Like:

— Slowest kids on the block.

— When the term "lack of talent" was born, they had this year's Lee seniors in mind.

— If Midland had a colony for lepers, the "Unclean 30" would be members. No one will touch them.

— The Lee seniors are an April Fool's joke.

— Lee could win a district championship in 1987 — after they get rid of the 30 seniors in front of them.

Well, the "Unclean 30" isn't taking this lying down any longer. They want to have the last laugh and you can't blame them for a chuckle or two that was released this past week.

With the "Unclean 30," Lee has beaten two of the state's top 10 teams on back-to-back weekends, vaulting themselves into the No. 5 spot in the state rankings. They own a perfect 8-0 record and are within one victory of becoming Lee's first football team to finish regular season play undefeated. They are also within one victory of being the first Lee team in a decade to win an outright District 4-5A championship. And they own the district's traveling bell that goes to the district winner. A maroon painting of the bell will be a special project. And you can bet the "Unclean 30" will own the paint brushes.

"I wonder what those people who said that we were the worst class in Lee history are saying now," said Lee line stalwart John Bradley. "I think some people ought to be eating some words by now. Everyone said this class couldn't win, but I bet we don't hear that talk anymore."

Offensive guard Mark Barnes added, "I guess we're not very strong as a class, but we play as a unit, as one team. That has made a big difference for us. It's been great to be part of the first Lee team in history to go 8-0."

Another "Unclean 30" member, center Chris Jones, said, "This has been a dream for me. A lot of people said this senior class wasn't very strong, but we're changing a few minds now."

Senior tight end Jack Chase had heard the derogatory statements also.

"Small, no speed. I've heard it all before," said Chase. "But no one knew about what was in our hearts. The coaches told us over and over all season that the team with physical ability isn't always the winner. That's something I've tried to remember every play I'm on the field."

EVEN COACH Earl Miller has heard the stories, but even to this day he thinks his "Unclean 30" are overachievers.

"If you had told me at the beginning of the season that this team would be 8-0, I would have laughed. I might have believed 5-4," said Miller. "This group doesn't have a lot of talent, which says a lot about how these kids have worked and how hard my coaches have worked. I've played a small role in all this.

"Winning starts on the practice field. You win games on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and not on Friday. That's been the strong point for these seniors. They've taken care of their business during practice. They've given us everything they had and they don't have a lot to give in the area of talent. But look at their record. You're not going to take that away from them."

But the "Unclean 30" is in the high rent district now. They might even be allowed to attend the annual Lee football banquet in a couple of months.

For Chaps, winning JUCO title may be easier than 33-1

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Last year Midland College went 33-1 and even Coach Jerry Stone admits a repeat isn't likely.

"It probably would be easier to win the National Junior College Championship than it would be to go 33-1," said Stone.

MC opens its 1985-86 season with the three-day Chaparral Classic starting Thursday at the Chap Center. MC will tip off against Grayson County in Thursday's 7 p.m. game.

Other first round contests send Odessa College against Cisco at 3 p.m.; Howard College against Garden City, Kan., at 5 p.m. and Barton County, Kan., against South Plains College at 9 p.m.

Friday's consolation games are 3 and 5 p.m. while the semifinals pit the HC-GC and MC-Grayson winners at 7 p.m. and the OC-Cisco and Barton-SPC winners at 9 p.m.

The championship game Saturday is at 7 p.m. and the consolation games are 1, 3 and 5 p.m.

MIDLAND beat Odessa, 88-61, in last year's finals and Stone just hopes the Chaps can reach the finals again. With one game under its belt and a veteran team back, SPC is the favorite to advance to the finals in the other bracket.

This year there are a lot of unknown factors. Howard County, under a new coach, is little but quick, Odessa, in its first season under Dennis Helms, is big, but questionable at the guard position.

As for the Chaps, Stone feels MC will have more depth this year, "especially inside. We have four or five post men, whereas, usually we have just two or 2½."

Also it's a different type postman. "We don't have the brawn or bulk that Eddie Frazier and Tony Wright gave us last year. We will have a lot more finesse and skill. We'll be able to do more things," Stone elaborates. "Still, there is no substitute for that raw rebounding ability. There is nothing like Eddie Frazier coming down with a rebound when you need it.,"

OF COURSE, the big question most folks are asking is "Who and how are you ever going to replace an All-America point guard like Ricky Grace?"

"At this point in the season, we aren't going to miss Ricky because at the beginning of his sophomore year he was not a polished player. He had not developed. It took a long time for Grace to develop into the guard he was at the end of last year...almost two years, so it's usually some four-year college that profits when a player like Grace approaches his potential," Stone says.

"Right now we don't have a guy who can really run the team. Point guards are not a dime a dozen like a lot of people think. Guards, yes, but point guards have to understand the entire concept and it's hard to find someone who is willing to subordinate himself for the overall good of the team's success.

"When you mention 'Point guard' to most, the reaction is 'Good, the coach is going to let me dribble.'"

Stone explains, "Point guards are like good referees. You never notice them. A good one sets up every one else and makes other people look good. I told Ricky he didn't have to score to be a good guard...and he believed me. On this team we don't have any one that has accepted that philosophy yet. But, of course, last year at this time we were in the same spot."

"We'll get someone like that but as he yet he hasn't emerged. Mookie Blaylock will start at point, but in the long run may be more effective on the wing. Todd Duncan can play point and Stewart Barnett can play the position. Like a good quarterback, the point guard has to be calm and cool. He can't get excited and shook up under the heat of the game."

BLAYLOCK AND Duncan are sophomores and Barnett is a freshman.

So going into the season, there are a lot of questions to be answered for a team that returns only five players.

And Thursday night, the Chaparral fans can begin making judgements for themselves.

McWilliams finds coaching answers from Darrell Royal

HOUSTON (AP) — When Texas Tech football coach David McWilliams came here to speak before the Touchdown Club of Houston, he warmed when he was asked about the influence Darrell Royal had on him.

McWilliams was a 6-foot, 195-pound starting center and tri-captain on Royal's University of Texas team that won the national championship and later became an assistant coach under Royal.

"The first thing was the fact of having discipline. You have to be a disciplined individual in order to be successful. He (Royal) stressed academics, and that was important to me," said McWilliams, who earned all-SWC academic honors.

"From a coaching standpoint, I learned from Coach Royal that you take the personnel you've got and then you do whatever you think it takes to win. He was able to do it by running the ball. We (Texas) were able to control the ball and run it," McWilliams said.

"I talked to him before I went to Lubbock, and I said it looks like we are more of a personnel-wise, throwing-type team. He (Royal) said, 'Look, you take that personnel and you do whatever it takes.'"

McWilliams said Royal also stressed the kicking game.

"He never got on me for missing a block or tackle, but now, if I loafed in the kicking game, he would wear you out."

What kind of motivator was Royal?

"Just the way he treated me, the fairness, and the things that he expected of me — and I knew he expected of me — I wanted to play for him," McWilliams said.

"I wasn't going out and playing for David McWilliams. I wanted to play — and I wanted to win — for Darrell Royal because I was so proud of the things he had done for me. I didn't want to let him down. I mean, really, it was just a feeling of pride. He treated us as first-class people, and then he demanded and expected us to be first-class players.

"I just got a feeling where I never wanted to give up because I had so much pride and believed in him. When you get pride in someone, it's hard to make them quit."

McWilliams was a sophomore in 1961 when Royal's Longhorns put together a 10-1 record. In 1962, Texas finished 9-1-1, and in McWilliams' senior year, the No. 1 'Horns went 11-0.

An athlete has his own memories of each game. In one of the Longhorns' greatest victories, their Jan. 1, 1963 Cotton Bowl 28-6 win over No. 2 Navy and Heisman Trophy winner Roger Staubach, McWilliams recalls: "In that game, I have to be personal.

"My mother died four days before that game. She had never been sick a day in her life. She had a stroke that morning, and Coach Royal got me up there in time before she died but she never regained consciousness.

"It was really an emotional type game for me, more so than the game itself. All I can remember was wanting to play well because of her.

"She loved football so much and was such an influence on my life — football-wise and academically — that's really all I remember about it."

McWilliams, before taking the head coach's job at Tech last winter, was defensive coordinator for Longhorns head coach Fred Akers.

He has been gaining experience as a SWC head coach with each game.

"I think our team has progressed some because I'm kind of learning and doing a better job. I made a lot of mistakes early. I didn't mean to make them, but I did because of the lack of experience as a head coach."

McWilliams, 44, smiled and said, "The biggest thing I found out is that I always knew there were a lot of things that got done. Now I know who does them."

Judge rules media has right to some violation information

AUSTIN (AP) — A federal judge has ruled that certain information on Southwest Conference recruiting violations sought by the news media is of "substantial public concern" and should be made public.

U.S. District Judge James Nowlin's ruling Tuesday would protect the privacy of students and their families but would open up NCAA and SWC files on completed investigations of coaches, "boosters" and "informers."

Acting on a suit filed by The Dallas Morning News, Dallas Times Herald and A.H. Belo Corp., Nowlin said the Texas Open Records Act requires the deletion of the "names of students, student-athletes, prospective student athletes and their family members, as well as all transcripts, phone numbers, bank account numbers, social security numbers, and geographical and biographical information about these individuals."

Nowlin said the name and location of the student's school also would be exempt from public disclosure.

The SWC and NCAA had produced the information for the judge's private inspection, and he has been holding it.

"The court can perceive no legitimate public interest in disclosure of the identity or personal data of students or their families," Nowlin said.

However, he said in granting the media's request in part, "There is no question that the public has a legitimate and vital concern about education, the role of athletics in education, and specifically the nationwide scandal involving recruiting violations."

Nowlin said the public's "legitimate interest" in information about others' "involvement in recruiting violations is much more apparent." He again mentioned high school and college coaches, alumni, "boosters" and "informers."

"The public has a legitimate interest in knowing who recruits illegally, how these unscrupulous individuals operate, which institutions tolerate or encourage such activity, and what, if any, sanctions are imposed upon these individuals or institutions when discovered," Nowlin said.

In his conclusion, Nowlin said certain documents, which were identified by number, would be exempt from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege.

Also, SWC documents pertaining to ongoing investigations, as designated by the SWC, shall not be disclosed, Nowlin said.

The judge ordered the SWC and NCAA to edit out the personal information about students involved in investigations and make it available to Belo and the Dallas newspapers within 60 days. Nowlin said the unedited information would remain under seal until further order of this court.

"The court cannot, and will not, attempt to control the news media's use of public information," Nowlin said. "The court will, however, encourage studied and responsible use of such information."

Payton may miss Tampa Bay game

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Walter Payton of the Chicago Bears is suffering from a sore big toe on his right foot and could miss Sunday's game at Tampa Bay, although a doctor treating the running back would rule nothing out.

"X-rays were negative and it is not a turf toe," Dr. Clarence Fossier said Tuesday at the Bears' practice site. "It is a dislocation which went back into place. We will put in a metal insert for support. It will be sore, but we will know more about it tomorrow."

Fossier said, however, he would not expect anyone to play on such an injury, "but I wouldn't rule anything out with Walter."

Payton suffered the injury in the Bears' 20-17 loss to the Los Angeles Rams Monday night when he gained 61 yards on 19 carries.

Cooper grad paces 'Horns to Penick win

AUSTIN (AP) — Former Abilene Cooper star Bob Estes finished eight-under-par 172 total to lead the Longhorns to an upset victory over No. 1-ranked Oklahoma State in the rain-shortened 17th annual Harvey Penick Intercollegiate Golf Tournament.

The No. 7-ranked Longhorns compiled a 881 total, 19 under par and 13 strokes ahead of Oklahoma State's 894. No.3 Oklahoma finished third at 898.

The tournament, played on the Morris Williams Course, was shortened from 54 to 45 holes because of heavy rain Tuesday morning. Players completed the scheduled 27 holes Monday, but only 18 could be played Tuesday.

Estes, who captured medalist honors, started the final day with a nine-hole score of 3-under par 33 to complete a second round of 66.

Tim Fleming of Oklahoma State and Doug Martin finished Tuesday a stroke back at 173.

Texas had five players who shot par or better and finished in the top 16.

Kyte helps spoil Nordiques' rally

QUEBEC (AP) — Winnipeg defenseman Jim Kyte's first goal of the season at 6:11 of the third period spoiled a comeback by the Quebec Nordiques and lifted the Jets to a 6-3 victory in NHL action Tuesday night.

Kyte took a pass from teammate Andrew McBain just inside the Quebec blue line and blasted a 35-foot slapshot under Nordiques goalie Clint Malarchuk's glove to break a 3-3 tie.

It was Quebec's first loss of the season on home ice.

Dale Hawerchuk had two goals and Gilles Hamel added a pair 13 seconds apart late in the final period to clinch the game for the Jets. Paul MacLean and Doug Smail had Winnipeg's other goals.

Rookie Daniel Berthiaume, who was playing for Sherbrooke of the American Hockey League last Friday, was superb in goal for Winnipeg.

Risto Siltanen, Michel Goulet and Anton Stastny scored for Quebec.

Flyers 7, Devils 1

PHILADELPHIA — Tim Kerr scored two second-period power-play goals to lead the Philadelphia Flyers to a victory over the New Jersey Devils.

Kerr, who led the league in power-play goals last year with 34, has five this season and 10 overall.

The Flyers have won three straight games and their 10-2 record is the league's best. The Flyers are 8-0 at home.

Canucks 2, Penguins 2

PITTSBURGH — Mario Lemieux scored his 17th NHL goal midway through the third period to give the Pittsburgh Penguins a tie with the Vancouver Canucks.

Lemieux took a pass from Dan Frawley, fought off a check from defenseman Dave Richter and pumped the shot into the upper right corner to take the league lead in goals. Dino Ciccarelli of Minnesota is second with 16. Lemieux has at least one point in each of Pittsburgh's 13 games and has scored goals in seven consecutive games.

Vancouver took a 1-0 lead 44 seconds into the game when Jim Sandlak beat goalie Gilles Meloche from a sharp angle. Pittsburgh tied it on power play goal by Terry Ruskowski, but Tony Tanti put Vancouver ahead 2-1.

Islanders 7, Capitals 1

UNIONDALE, N.Y. — Pat LaFontaine and Mike Bossy scored two goals apiece, leading the New York Islanders to a victory over the struggling Washington Capitals.

LaFontaine's first goal of the night, on a power play, triggered a three-goal first period for the Islanders and the New York center capped a two-goal second period with his seventh goal of the season.

Bossy scored in the second period and finished New York's scoring in the third with one of three Islanders' power-play goals.

The Capitals, ranked 20th in the 21-team league in power-play effectiveness, went 0-for-4 with a man-power advantage en route to their third straight loss.
