County approves extra magistrate's office

By PAUL PINKHAM
Senior Staff Writer

Despite strong opposition from a delegation of Lefors citizens, including Commissioner O.L. Presley, Gray County commissioners voted 3-1 Monday to open a Precinct 1 justice of the peace office in Pampa.

The decision came at the request of newly elected Precinct 1 Justice of the Peace Bob Muns, 1920 Lynn.

Presley

Muns is scheduled to assume his duties Jan. 1.

The Precinct 1 office has been vacant since March.

Commissioners said allowing Muns to work in Pampa part-time would take some of the burden off the Precinct 2 office, currently occupied by Wayne Roberts.

The Precinct 2 office has been buried under a blizzard of paperwork because it is the only county magistrate's office located in Pampa. That courthouse office has handled most of the county's business.

Commissioners agreed to open the Precinct 1 Pampa office for a one-year trial. Commissioners said they will re-evaluate the decision after the trial to see whether the extra Pampa office actually reduces the workload of the Precinct 2 office.

Muns didn't attend Monday's meeting, but about six Lefors citizens were present to protest opening the Pampa office. The protesters said the move would cost too much, and they accused the commissioners of ignoring the wishes of Lefors voters.

Dick Sierman, unofficial spokesman for the group, said more residents would have shown up Monday but were stopped by the weather.

Sierman said Gray County cannot afford two justice of the peace offices. He said the workload problem at the Precinct 2 office in Pampa could be solved if citizens were ordered to take their business to the proper office.

"The people need to be educated to the fact that that's where the office is, and it's in Lefors, Texas," Sierman said.

Sierman and other residents said they were concerned about not having a full-time justice of the peace in Lefors for emergencies. Sierman also said commissioners are giving the impression that Lefors is a dying town "and there's no sense worrying about it because there's not enough to elect, period.

"That's the way people are feeling," he said.

Precinct 1 Commissioner Presley, the lone dissenter, argued in vain for maintaining a single office, in Lefors. He said commissioners created the workload problem when they abolished the Precinct 2, Place 1 office.

"We've done it to ourselves," Presley said. "We eliminated the second JP up here."

The commissioner also said Muns knew the office was located in Lefors when he ran for it.

Commissioner Ronnie Rice warned Presley to consider that the majority of voters in his precinct reside in Pampa.

"You'll be running for office in a few years, and you may want some of these votes up here," Rice said.

Presley's motion to maintain the single Lefors office, died for lack of a second.

County Judge Carl Kennedy said the precinct's primary office will remain in Lefors. Kennedy said opening Muns' part-time office in Pampa will save money because commissioners won't be forced to hire a secretary to ease Roberts' workload.

Kennedy claimed that Muns' predecessor, Margie Prestidge, was not willing to help ease the Precinct 2 workload.

In early 1985, Prestidge asked commissioners for a Pampa office but her request was denied.

Today, Prestidge angrily denied that she wouldn't have been willing to take on some of the load from Precinct 2.

"That's simply not true," she said of Kennedy's claim. "That's why I wanted the office up here."

Said Kennedy: "The court understands that we're planning to keep both offices in the interest of trying to balance the workload that takes place here in the city limits of Pampa. In our minds, the primary office is still in Lefors."

He also said that keeping a solitary office located in Lefors would not represent the majority of precinct voters in Pampa. He said the workload was not balanced even when Precinct 2 had two justices of the peace.

The two sites Kennedy said are under consideration for locating the office are the Utelus Inc. build-

Reagan supports naming prosecutor in Iran deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said today an administration investigation has turned up "reasonable grounds" for appointment of an independent counsel to probe the diversion of Iranian arms sale profits to the Contras forces fighting the government of Nicaragua.

An administration source, who declined to be named publicly, also said the president was to announce his choice for a new national security adviser to replace Vice Adm. John Poindexter, who resigned last week.

This came as Sen Richard Lugar, R-Ind., outgoing chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, demanded the resignations of White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan and CIA Director William Casey, to revive a foreign policy "crippled" by covert U.S. arms sales to Iran.

"Clearly the president has not been lying," Lugar said on NBC-TV's "Today" show. "He has not been involved personally in difficulties, but he does have an administration situation that he must remedy and he has to get to the heart of it soon."

The administration source said Reagan's choice for the new national security council adviser would be either Frank Carlucci, a former Reagan administration deputy secretary of defense, or David M. Abshire, the former U.S. representative to NATO.

CBS, NBC and Cable News Network reported that Carlucci had been selected to succeed Poindexter, who left last week as Reagan disclosed "serious flaws" in the previously secret administration program of selling arms to Iran.

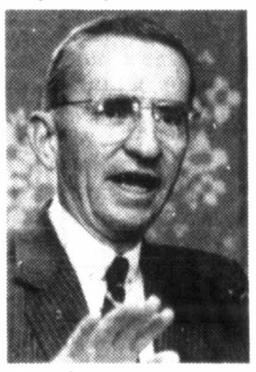

Lugar said the president should review his entire staff and Cabinet, accepting the resignations of those who were involved in the arms sale and di-

Perot still battling GM

DETROIT (AP) — Billionaire H. Ross Perot, bought out by General Motors Corp. for $700 million, may be off the GM board of directors, but his feud with GM and its chairman, Roger Smith, is probably not over, an industry analyst said.

Perot resigned Monday as chairman and chief executive officer of Electronic Data Systems Corp., which he founded with $1,000 in 1962 and sold to GM in 1984 for $2.5 billion. Three of his top executives also agreed to leave for a total of $50 million.

Perot

"Ross Perot is not the type of person who limps away weakly with a whimper. His character is just the opposite. I think he will launch a massive retaliatory fight on EDS' behalf," said computer industry analyst Steve McClellan of Merrill Lynch in New York.

"I suspect we haven't heard the last," he said.

Perot was GM's largest individual shareholder until an hourlong GM board meeting Monday in New York, where directors voted to buy out the 12 million GM Class E shares held by Perot and the three EDS exectives at $33 a share.

But including contingencies money paid under an agreement reached when GM bought EDS, Perot and EDS executives Morton H. Meyerson, J.

Perot and hostages, Page 5

Thomas Walter and William K. Gayden were paid about $60 a share, more than twice the stock's market value.

Perot said that although he had accepted the offer, he wasn't going anywhere.

"I will be here as the founder of the company and will be doing exactly what I have been doing," he said. "I don't need any kind of fancy title to stay here at EDS.

"I feel a tremendous obligation to our people to

Authorities grab more weed

WHEELER — Authorities are conducting tests in connection with 35 - 40 pounds of suspected "homegrown" marijuana found last week in a house six miles east of Wheeler, Sheriff Lonnie Miller said today.

Miller said deputies raided the home of Joe Bob Jones, 32, apparently a former Canadian resident, about 4 p.m. Friday. Jones was arrested and taken to the Wheeler County Jail.

Jones was released on $2,500 bond, the sheriff said.

The suspected marijuana was taken to the Texas Department of Public Safety narcotics laboratory in Amarillo for examination, he said.

"We had information that the man had it in his house, so we went in and got it," Miller said.

The sheriff said the suspected drug was boxed and packaged in "in extra-large sandwich bags, ready for a sale."

"We feel like it was homegrown," Miller said, adding that pot grows wild in low lying draws and creekbeds throughout the county.

In October, Wheeler County deputies and DPS officers confiscated about 17,000 marijuana plants from six patches on Wheeler County farmland, shortly after authorities confiscated about 100,000 marijuana plants in Gray County near Lefors.

Miller has said most of the marijuana found in Wheeler County in October was of low quality and "more junk than anything else."

Miller could not speculate whether Friday's haul was related to October's seizure.

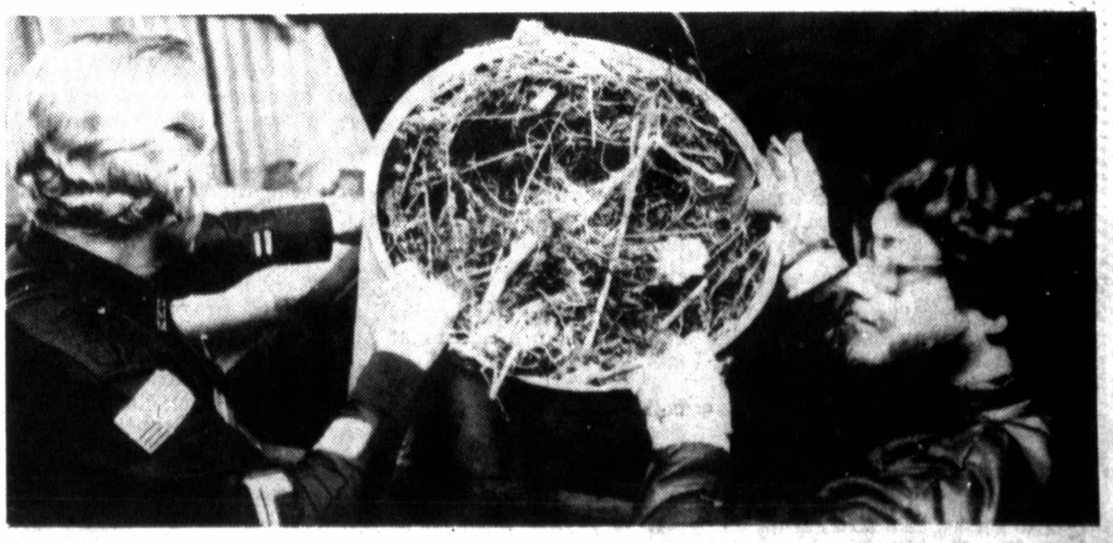

"We don't know if it came from there or if it's from someone's garden," Miller said. "The DPS is testing it for its strength."

"But it will give you a buzz, that's what the people who bought it said," he said.

In a separate incident, the DPS narcotics lab has confirmed that the white powder seized by Wheeler County sheriff's deputies in a Nov. 18 bust in Wheeler was the drug "crank."

Deputies raided a room at Wheeler's Honey Inn and confiscated 12 small bags of white powder. Arrested was Danny Carr, 24, of Tempe, Ariz. De-

Tulsa man injured in accident on Interstate 40 near McLean

AMARILLO — A 44-year-old Tulsa man was in serious condition this morning at Northwest Texas Hospital after he sustained broken ribs and a broken collar bone in a Monday morning truck roll-over near McLean.

Chalen Bedford, 44, was injured when his truck carrying a heat exchanger struck a parked Roadway moving van and rolled into a ditch about 12:15 a.m. Monday in the westbound lane of Interstate 40 about 12 miles west of McLean.

Texas Department of Public Safety trooper John Holland of McLean said today that Bedford apparently fell asleep while driving and struck the truck.

"Some witnesses stopped at the scene, pulled the man from his truck and took him to Groom," Holland said, adding that the emergency medical technicians with the Groom Ambulance Service transported Bedford to Coronado Community Hospital in Pampa.

Bedford was then transported to Northwest Texas Hospital where he remained in the Intensive Care Unit.

puties field tested the substance and determined that it was some sort of amphetamine.

Miller said Monday that DPS lab testers confirmed the powder was a methamphetamine, with the street name, "crank."

Carr was charged with unlawful sale of a controlled substance and released on $5,000 bond.

In Canadian, Hemphill County Sheriff Bill Bowen said he is still waiting for autopsy results and DPS lab results in connection with the Nov. 18 death of a Connecticut man in a Canadian convenience store.

Thomas J. Rawza, 33, of Connecticut, was found dead in the bathroom of the Taylor Food Mart convenience store.

A substance believed to be heroin and a suspected drug kit found on Rawza were sent to the lab for testing, Bowen has said.

- approved changing the courthouse's long-distance telephone system from AT&T to Hi Plains NTS Telecommunications, an estimated savings of at least $230 per month.

provide them security in case anything goes wrong."

Perot also said he was putting the $750 million in escrow until Dec. 15 to give GM directors time to rethink their decision, saying "I cannot accept this money without giving GM a chance to change its mind."

Smith also questioned whether a $750 million payoff to get rid of a critic was the best use of the money.

His remarks evoked a swift response from GM, which said in a statement that the directors' decision was unanimous and would not be rescinded. It also said the decision had been thoroughly researched and was in GM's best interest.

After the Monday morning meeting, Smith said: "The strength of our relationship has been that we approached our common business problems in different ways, using the perspectives of different backgrounds."

But Smith's recent public comments had centered on the relationship's weakness as he responded to Perot's criticism of GM, which had escalated in recent months.

Perot had blasted GM as top-heavy and slow-moving and said GM's management was out of touch with its workers. He had recommended eliminating executive parking and dining rooms and moving executives from their suites on the 14th floor of the GM building in Detroit.

"We've got to nuke the GM system," Perot said recently.

version of profits to Nicaraguan guerrillas and retaining those who were not. Responding to questions, Lugar said Regan and Casey should resign.

At the White House, deputy press secretary Dan Howard said Lugar's suggestion was "noted." He did not elaborate.

But Lugar stopped short of calling for the resignation of Secretary of State George Shultz, saying he may be needed to preserve "the continuity of foreign policy."

"I think we're badly crippled," Lugar said of U.S. foreign policy. "I think in basic areas, the Mideast, in Central America, for example, we're dead in the water until we get this resolved, but we could do so in a very few days."

Meanwhile, the Senate Intelligence Committee is questioning key administration officials under oath in an investigation that could show who in the White House knew about the covert U.S. arms sales to Iran and their use to finance Nicaragua's Contra rebels.

At the same time, other congressional leaders urged Reagan to put a quick end to the crisis enveloping his administration before it does further damage to the presidency and to the GOP.

"We'd certainly like to be helpful to the president," said Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan. "But the party has an interest in this also, and we'd like to get moving on it."

The intelligence panel, in a closed-door, grand jury-style proceeding aimed at finding out whether intelligence laws were broken in the Iran episode, heard sworn testimony Monday from former National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane and also brought in fired National Security Council aide Lt. Col. Oliver North.

Desi Arnaz dies of cancer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Desi Arnaz, the Cuban-born entertainer who teamed with a red-headed comedian named Lucille Ball to become one of the giants of an infant television industry, died early today of cancer. He was 69.

Publicist Charlie Pomerantz said Arnaz died in Del Mar in San Diego County.

Reports that Arnaz was seriously ill had circulated since 1981, when he was hospitalized for what his wife, Edie, said was a flareup of diverticulitis, an inflammation of the intenstinal tract for which he had received four operations in 1969 and 1970. The reports had intensified in recent months, but Arnaz refused comment.

Arnaz was best known to hundreds of millions of TV viewers worldwide as the long-suffering Ricky Ricardo, husband of the wacky Lucy on "I Love Lucy," one of television's most beloved and longest-running shows.

Off-screen, the couple married within six months of their meeting in 1940. They had two children, Lucie and Desi Jr., both of whom became actors. But the marriage foundered, and the couple divorced in 1960.

"He was a great showman, a great business executive," Miss Ball told Ladies Home Journal in 1983. "I was very proud of him. ... I still am. He built an empire. It was unfortunate that he also liked to let things fall apart. But there are a lot of people like that. They build and they destroy."

and Columbia Scholastic Press Association.

In 1964 Miss Hurley was named Best Journalism Teacher in Texas by the Texas High School Press Association and received a national award of merit from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association in New York.

She had been a guest lecturer and contest judge at various secondary school press association meetings throughout the nation during and after her high school teaching career.

Miss Hurley was born Nov. 20, 1912, at Fort Worth.

She was a member of the First Presbyterian Church.

Miss Hurley earned her bachelor's degree at Texas Women's University in Denton in 1934 and then started her journalism career as city editor on The Lufkin Daily News. While there she also served as a stringer for the Dallas Morning News and the Houston Post.

In December 1941 she went to work for the Marshall News-Messenger, where she was later promoted to managing editor.

Miss Hurley served as managing editor of the Denton Record-Chronicle from July 1945 to July 1949. She received her master's degree from TWU in 1949 and was on the university's staff until coming to Pampa in 1953 to teach at Pampa High School.

During her teaching career she was an executive officer for a number of years on the Texas High School Press Association, headquartered at TWU. She also helped write the state journalism curriculum in meetings at Austin.

At PHS Miss Hurley expanded both the facilities of the publications department and the courses available to students, including an advertising class to help raise funds for the publications.

In July former PHS journalism students gathered for a reunion in Pampa to pay tribute to Miss Hurley. Her former students have established a fund for the Elizabeth Hurley Journalism Scholarship. Contributions to the fund may be made through Estelle Malone at the First National Bank.

The PHS journalism department also annually awards the Elizabeth Hurley Award of Journalistic Excellence to a journalism student in the school. The scholarship will be given for the first time this year with the award.

Survivors include a sister, Sarah Jane Pampell of Fort Worth; two nieces, Martha Pampell Smith of Carrollton and Frances Ryan; and three nephews, Charles Hurley of Fort Worth, Frank Hurley of Twain, Calif., and Robert Pampell of Albuquerque, N.M.

The family requests memorials be made to the Friends of the Library, the Pampa Fine Arts Association, the Book of Remembrance at First Presbyterian Church or the Pampa Community Concert Association.

More car troubles

Remember last week, when I wrote that I had my car checked before going on vacation?

I lied. I had everything checked except the wheel bearings. They gave out when I was near Laketon on my way to Oklahoma City last Sunday night. Wayne and Caron Coleman, friends from near Miami, drove me 20 miles back to Pampa, where I called Frank Skidmore to tow the heap to get it fixed. One day and $200 later, I was on the road again.

Many thanks to Wayne and Caron and Frank, and Kelton speech teacher Phyllis MacMillan who also helped me. Such kindness was just about the highlight of my whole Thanksgiving vacation.

Another highlight came when we were packing kitchen and clothing boxes for the big move to Mom's "new" house. Heidi, now a junior in high school, is now larger than I am, and there I was in the nick of time to save her clothes from the charity box. Then I got a boxful of surplus pans and food containers that there was no room for at the new house.

Say, Mom, surely you don't have room for that big microwave oven or that VCR or your new Buick..

Tuesday, I drove around town to see what was new. Deer Creek, my alma mater, has a new gym. The varnish is still fresh and there's no parking lot for it yet. I watched a six-on-six girls' scrimmage and visited with Mr. Stutte, my junior English teacher. He told me that Oklahoma is the only state in the union where the girls do not play five-on-five basketball.

"Progress" he wondered.

Progress indeed. Now that the district has a new high school, the original school building now houses the middle school and the 10-year-old middle school building now houses the speech and drama department. Oh, to be 11 years younger. New wealthy housing developments provide oodles of tax revenue for the district, which has now been annexed by greedy Oklahoma City 10 miles to the south. But the Deer Creek roads are still familiar — as always, unfit for safe traffic.

A whole neighborhood of houses (about 12 blocks worth) across from where I spent my early childhood has been torn down and replaced with a snitzy condominium complex complete with a high brick security gate and cobblestone streets. Mom says the builder went bankrupt and the place is vacant.

"Progress" I wondered.

In the midst of the moving, Thanksgiving was just about overlooked. Scott, my California brother, wasn't due in Oklahoma City until Saturday and Craig, my dentist brother, had other plans, so it looked like Mom, Heidi and I would have Thanksgiving dinner at a restaurant. But on Thanksgiving morning, Heidi discovered that Mom had packed a box of pictures she wanted to look at. She got upset and Mom told her she had better not ruin the holiday with her attitude.

"I don't even want to go to Thanksgiving dinner," Heidi cried. "I don't feel like all this being happy and being together and being thankful sh--."

Mom tried to calm her down: "Just tell me what you want for Thanksgiving dinner, and I'll go to the store and get it."

Thinking of how I passed up two offers for real Thanksgiving dinners here in Pampa, I remarked "Why don't we just get a pizza from the freezer and have that."

After 30 minutes of tension, Mom and I went to the Marriott Hotel's Thanksgiving buffet, where we were serenaded by a soft violin-accordion duet. I resisted the temptation to request a rousing polka and The Orange Blossom Special. Mom got a doggie bag for Heidi, who apparently had a minor ear infection.

What was it I said last week about holidays and I not getting along?

Bentsen: trade top priority

McALLEN, Texas (AP) — Sanctions are needed against countries that export freely to the United States but erect trade barriers against U.S. farm products and other goods, says U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

"I'm not a protectionist, I'm a a pragmatist," the Texas Democrat said Monday in his first policy speech since becoming next in line for chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

Bentsen told members of the Texas Farm Bureau he would fight for legislation that would penalize countries that put up trade barriers to U.S. goods while dumping their products in the United States at below cost.

"If our doors are open to ve[illegible]u must open your doors to us," Bentsen said. "We should be telling Japan and Germany to open up those markets. We produce the world's best grapefruit but try to buy it in Japan or Europe."

Bentsen said foreign trade would be the No. 1 concern of the Senate Finance Committee when he takes over as chairman in January, saying to open foreign markets "is critical to agriculture but should also be a high national priority."

"Right now, a Texas farmer may be driving a Toyota pickup, using a Honda generator and watching a Sony TV, only he's not being able to sell his beef or his rice or his citrus in Japan and we know that's not right," Bentsen told TFB members at their 53rd annual meeting.

"It's appropriate that in my first major policy speech (since becoming next in line for Finance Committee chairman), I've chosen to appear before a group representing agriculture, the nation's largest and most troubled industry. Texas farmers and ranchers are on the firing line," said the state's senior senator.

He said agriculture was more dependent on foreign trade than any other industry in the country, yet farm exports continue to slide.

Bentsen said trade had too long been the handmaiden of other national objectives, and promised to work for the first coordinated trade policy.

Brenda L. Jennings, employee of Minco Technology Labs Inc., and Jim Harrington, director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union, outline the suit against the firm challenging private employer's mandatory urinalysis test

Chip company worker challenges urine test

AUSTIN (AP) — An Austin woman is asking a state judge to bar her employer from testing her urine for drugs.

The suit, billed by the Texas Civil Liberties Union as the first of its type in Texas, challenges Minco Technology Lab Inc.'s plan to test its 160 employees.

State District Judge Joe Hart of Austin scheduled a hearing today on the lawsuit filed Monday by the TCLU on behalf of Brenda Jennings, a quality control supervisor for Minco at its North Austin plant.

"I feel that I'm an American citizen, and I deserve my privacy. I think this is an invasion of my privacy," Ms. Jennings said Monday.

But Liz Coker, Minco's chief executive officer, said the tests are needed because microchips produced by the company go to the military and because a former employee with drug problems stole parts from the company.

"We feel very strongly from a business standpoint that it had to be done," Ms. Coker said.

Employees who fail the drug test would be allowed to keep their jobs if they enter a drug treatment program and submit to periodic tests, she said.

Minco customizes microchips and sell them to firms that use them in products sold to the military, but none of the work at Minco is classified.

The drug tests were to begin Monday, but Ms. Coker said they would be postponed pending action on Ms. Jennings' suit.

James Harrington, TCLU's legal director, said urine tests "violate every concept of human dignity and offends any reasonable person." He said he would base his case on a 1903 Texas Supreme Court decision that barred a railroad from forcing an employee to submit to a urine test. The case involved an employee who sued after being injured on the job.

In a Sept. 29 memo to employees, Ms. Coker said, "Drug abuse and employment with Minco Technology Labs Inc. are simply incompatible. Further, the sensitive nature of our mission and product, and, in particular, our status as subcontractor to many Department of Defense projects, makes it necessary and proper to implement additional policies and procedures for the handling of drug abuse."

About 20 people in Minco management have taken, and passed, the test, Ms. Coker told reporters.

She said the tests were implemented "partially in support of the president making his stand on it, partially because of some problems that we've had in the past, and partially for the people and fellow team members that are working here and the sensitivity of our work."

Minco has 160 employees.

Earlier this year, a Minco inventory clerk was arrested for stealing materials from the company. Minard said the worker was sentenced to 10 years in prison.

"That one individual alone cost our company $250,000," he said, adding that the worker stole to get money for drugs.

Ms. Coker said the test does not invade workers' privacy.

Urban leaders say drugs main problem

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The drug problem is "ripping the heart out of the quality of life" in most American cities, say urban leaders who are moving the war on drugs to the top of their agenda.

Following a call to arms Sunday by New York Mayor Edward I. Koch, a key panel of the National League of Cities agreed Monday to a resolution making the crackdown on drugs a top priority, along with maintaining federal aid programs and fighting adverse changes in the tax laws.

The 6,670 delegates from nearly 1,000 cities will vote Wednesday on the resolution, but its approval in committee was its biggest hurdle.

"There is nothing in my city that is more important than solving the problem of illegal drug use and sales," Philadelphia Mayor Wilson Goode said Monday. "It is simply ripping the heart out of the quality of life in most cities. It's going to destroy the quality of life in America as we know it."

Several city leaders at the Congress of Cities meeting opposed adding the drug problem to the top of their urban agenda. Pamela Plumb, a Portland, Maine, council member in line to become president of the league in two years, said the cities could be "sidetracked" away from other urban issues, and others warned they were being swept into an anti-drug frenzy.

"I know in the past year, led by the president and Congress, it's become popular to take on drug use as a new national priority," said Minneapolis Mayor Donald Fraser. "And it is important, but this represents throwing everything including the kitchen sink into a resolution on drugs."

The proposed policy statement asks Congress to go beyond the $1.7 billion anti-drug bill enacted last month by providing more than $3 billion in aid to local law enforcement agencies. The new law provides $225 million in such aid for three years, and Koch said Sunday that the federal government should provide at least $4 billion for the total anti-drug effort.

The cities would also ask for Congress to order the military to help stop the flow of drugs into the country, authorize deportation of aliens convicted of drug offenses, and withold aid to nations that don't cooperate.

It makes many other requests without listing a pricetag, such as establishment of a new level of federal courts with jurisdiction over federal drug offenses and the authority to try state and local drug cases as needed to unclog those courts.

District of Columbia Mayor Marion Barry backed the resolution, saying officials of smaller cities will feel the effects of drugs, too.

"For those of you who don't have it as a problem, it's just a matter of time before it comes," he said. "This menace ... is not going to stop."

Although no high-level administration official is appearing before the mayors, council members and city managers here, President Reagan sent a written message praising local government officials and acknowledging their differences over spending issues.

"In the years ahead we will continue to be challenged as we work to reduce the federal budget deficit and to define priorities," Reagan wrote. "We have not always agreed on the role of the federal government, but I hope that we can maintain our working relationship and seek progress in those areas where we do agree."

San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros, outgoing president of the group, presented the league with a list of top urban priorities for the coming year that didn't list a renewal of revenue sharing. That $4 billion program of direct aid to cities, highly popular among mayors, expired this year even though the league made the fight to win its renewal its top priority last year.

Teller sentenced to halfway house for embezzlement

LAREDO (AP) — A Laredo man admitted embezzling more than $42,000 from a bank, but got off with a 135-day sentence in a halfway house after testimony that he had been an exemplory employee except for that violation.

U.S. District Judge George P. Kazen on Monday suspended all but 135 days of a prison sentence and ordered a five-year probation term during which Toribio Ruben Rios will be required to make $42,500 in restitution.

Toribio Ruben Rios pleaded guilty Oct. 17 in U.S. District Court here to embezzling the money from the International Bank of Commerce between May 1985 and June 1986.

Court records show the $42,710 discrepancy was discovered last June 25 after Rios was unexpectedly switched from his cash and food stamp teller duties to cover a supervisory position at an IBOC motor bank.

Rios said he is now working seven days a week in an effort to support his family and repay the bank.

Theater greets trekkies at 6:30 a.m.

AUSTIN (AP) — By scheduling a pre-dawn showing of the latest "Star Trek" film on weekends, an Austin theater hoped to lure moviegoers to a place no man has gone before — before 10 a.m., when the projectors normally start running.

It appears to have worked.

While most of Austin was sleeping at 6:30 a.m. Sunday, 71 people showed up at the Arboretum Cimema 4 to see "Star Trek IV — The Voyage Home," the latest adventures of Captain Kirk, Mr. Spock and the rest of the starship Enterprise crew.

The theater began the pre-dawn showings on Saturdays and Sundays in a bet that hard-core "Trekkies" would want to indulge themselves around the clock.

Among those who made the early, early show were Orville and Mary Orr.

"We've seen all the episodes from from the (television) series many, many times, and we saw the first three movies. We didn't want to fight the crowds, and this seemed to be a good time to go," said Orr, 31.

Mary Orr, 36, admitted that she questioned the logic of their decision when the alarm clock sounded at 5:15 a.m.

"I wondered if we really wanted to do this. We stood in line for two or three hours in the cold in Omaha for the last ("Star Trek") movie," she said.

Red River bridge will be replaced

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Cooperation between Oklahoma and Texas in providing part of the funding to replace a narrow bridge over the Red River constrasts sharply with the armed dispute between the two states when the bridge opened more than 50 years ago.

The Oklahoma Transportation Commission was told Monday that the bridge is structurally deficient and functionally obsolete. It has a roadway only 23 feet wide.

The estimated cost to replace the structure, which carries U.S. 69 and U.S. 75 traffic, is $3.25 million. Federal funds will finance 80 percent of the costs, and the two states will divide the remaining 20 percent.

The bridge was constructed a half-century ago parallel to a privately operated toll bridge between Durant and Denison, Texas, and allowed the first free crossing of the Red River by motorists traveling between the states.

But the owners of the toll bridge went to federal court in Texas and obtained an injunction forbidding the opening of the free bridge.

Oklahoma Gov. William H. Murray said that the south bank of the river was the border between Oklahoma and Texas and that the state was within the law in closing the toll bridge.

On July 16, 1931, he ordered state highway crews to open the free bridge. One crew crossed into Texas and ripped down a barricade erected in response to the federal court order.

Texas Gov. Ross Sterling, saying Texas had to obey the federal order, sent the Texas Rangers to close the south end of the bridge.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Bureaucrats seldom create developments

The concern expressed by some scientists and other academics that the effort to eradicate or control the spread of AIDS has not been financed with sufficient generosity or controlled with sufficient zeal by the federal government indicates how thoroughly many scientists have become accustomed to being lackeys of the government.

We can't do anything, these scientific bureaucrats seem to be saying, until the president of the United States gives us clear marching orders — and a big bundle of money.

It is not difficult to detect the odor of special pleading in such statements. We and our friends in the medical research community can handle the problem, but we'll need lots of money, and soon.

More troubling than the understandable desire to acquire a greater share than the $244 million in taxpayers' money spent last year on AIDS research, is the understanding inherent in the demand for government financing and direction about how progress is made in scientific endeavors. The centrally controlled and financed model of the Manhattan Project that gave us the atomic bomb is implicitly considered the only way to achieve scientific progress. Such an attitude indicates a seriously flawed understanding of how scientific breakthroughs have been achieved in the past and how the explosion of information in our information age can best be absorbed in such a way as to yield practical results or applications to specific problems.

A centrally directed research program may be useful in putting current knowledge to practical use when you're reasonably sure the thing can be done — as in building an atomic weapon. It is probably the worst way to explore the unknown, since grantmakers either have or quickly develop a bias in favor the the "safe" proposal that will predictably, reliably make a small incremental addition to the body of knowledge in a given field. The intuitive leap and the follow-up on an inspired guess are not welcome.

Yet intuitive leaps, and even fortuitous accidents, have played a major role in the history of scientific inquiry. The scientific method of testing hypotheses is painstaking and requires highly organized methods. Developing hypotheses, or deciding which hypotheses to test, is often more apparently haphazard.

Most of the breakthroughs in the application of scientific knowledge to our everyday lives — from the use of electricity to transistors to the development of microchips — have occurred without the benefit of a system of central direction.

One of the major "contributions" of government to AIDS research has been Food and Drug Administration controls that have prevented the testing of certain new drugs on willing AIDS victims, or made such testing so expensive as to be prohibitive.

Those who want more government spending are often people who are more comfortable in the corridors of power than in the laboratory. The less influence such people have over the direction of research, the better.

Catastrophic spending plan

WASHINGTON — The telephone rings in a thousand households every day, and it brings bad news: Grandfather has suffered a stroke, or Grandmother has fallen and broken her hip. The news might be news of long-term cancer, or of a paralyzing accident. It is news that could mean catastrophic medical expense.

The Department of Health and Human Services recently released a report on the subject. Two major recommendations for legislative action accompanied the report. Subject to one apprehensive reservation, the proposals strike me as fiscally sound and socially wise.

The authors of the departmental report struggled at the threshold to find a definition of "catastrophic illness." The expense cannot be defined as a simple percentage of family income; 20 percent of gross income is a bearable thing to the Rockefellers, but an intolerable burden to the famly earning a modest income.

"The most appropriate definition of catastrophic expenses," the authors concluded, "sets a dollar amount below which no expense level is considered catastrophic, however low the family's income. A percentage of income figure is then added to that amount to yield the threshold above which expenditures are considered catastrophic."

That is not the most lucid definition ever drafted, but it makes sense. Imagine a family with $30,000 in annual income. Let us suppose that $2,000 is fixed as a bearable expense for health care, and that a factor of 10 percent of the remaining income is fixed for defining a catastrophic expense. Ten percent of $28,000 is $2,800. When costs pass $4,800 in a given year, under this approach, the family faces financial catastrophe.

About 6.4 million families a year, by the authors' reckoning, find themselves in this plight. Most of them are low- to middle-income families, in which the principal wage earner works only part-time. They are chiefly the poor and the "near-poor." They lack health insurance altogether, or they are inadequately insured.

The problem of catastrophic medical expense exists largely among the elderly. About 90 percent of those over 65 are covered by Medicare, but as oldsters swiftly discover, Medicare pays only a part of certain medical expenses. Every year, it is estimated, 500,000 elderly persons who suffer long-term illness must exhaust their assets and "spend down" to the poverty level at which Medicaid cuts in. Their savings have been wiped out.

The departmental report offers this preferred recommendation: Let Medicare be restructured to provide catastrophic insurance after a beneficiary has paid $2,000 a year in out-of-pocket expenses. This coverage would be financed through an additional monthly premium of $4.92 on Part B of the existing Medicare program. Because disbursements would be handled through the existing bureaucracy, there would be only a modest increase in costs to the Social Security system. Virtually every family now on Medicare would willingly accept the added $4.92 a month.

A second major recommendation calls for the establishment of tax-exempt Individual Medical Accounts established six years ago. If a family deposited $1,000 a year in an IMA over a period of 25 years, the fund at age 65 would cover nearly two years in a nursing home, though it could be drawn upon for other catastrophic medical expenses also.

In discussing ways of financing a remedial program, the authors make a blunt but inescapable point: "All costs must be borne by someone." In the public sector, Social Security taxes on employer and employee are the primary source. Hospitals, through paying patients and local taxpayers, pick up the cost for charity patients. In the private sector, employers meet costs of health insurance as a business expense to be borne by customers and employees. Millions of persons on Medicare buy private "medigap" coverage.

The proposed voluntary payment by the elderly of $4.92 a month has much appeal. This would cover catastrophic costs after a family had paid out $2,000 a year in out-of-pocket expenses. My one reservation is that the $2,000 factor would be marvelously attractive to spend-happy politicians. By reducing the figure to $1,500, then to $1,000, and so on, Congress could back us into a budget-busting, tax-laden plan of national health insurance.

One more entitlement program is one more program the country positively does not need.

Dentists can extract secrets

I spent an afternoon in my dentist's office last week. My dentist is a nice man, and I feel he is sincere when he says, "Gee, I'm sorry," after he goes for one of my bicuspids with his drill and misses and nearly takes off one of my ears.

"Never did have very good aim," he further apologizes as I make my way back to the chair from the ceiling.

I don't have anything personal against dentists, unlike author Robert L. Steed, who once asked, "Why are dentists free men?"

Dentists mean well, I am certain, and without them many of us would be down to nothing more than our gums by now.

It's just that the dental profession, were it to stop and think for a moment, could do a great deal to ease the discomfort and fear many of its patients feel.

Let's start at the very beginning. I go to my dentist's office, and while in the waiting room, if I can stop trembling long enough, I attempt to read one of the magazines my dentist provides his patients.

Last week I picked up a copy of Sports Illustrated. It was an issue from 1979. This caused me to think: If this guy is too cheap to pop for any new magazines in his waiting room, he's probably not going to waste any money on modern dental equipment either.

Let's say he is going to extract one of my wisdom teeth on this particular visit. I expect one of two things:

Either he's going to tie one end of a string around my tooth and the other around the doorknob of his office door, and wait for his insurance salesman to walk in. Or, he's going to put one hand in my mouth and reach the other toward his assistant and say the dreaded word, "Pliers."

Speaking of dreaded words, people wouldn't be nearly as afraid of the dentists if dentists would change the names of some of the terms they use.

Let's take the word "drill," for instance. That's not a happy word. That's a scary word. It should be used in the context of oil wells and military exercises and not in relation to my mouth.

Pulp is another dental term I don't like, as in "Sorry, but I just drilled all the way down into your pulp."

Pulp is where your teeth keep all their nerves and other innards. When I hear the word pulp it reminds me of a movie I saw once where Sir Laurence Olivier played a former Nazi dentist, and he drilled into the pulp of Dustin Hoffman on purpose in order to get him to talk.

The very thought of that makes me want to give away military secrets right and left even if I have to make them up.

The worst dental phrase of them all is "root canal." Who thought of such a horrid, frightening term? Probably a Nazi. But dentists, including my own, still use it.

"Looks like you're going to need a root canal here," my dentist said last week.

"The attack is coming in early June on the Normandy coast," I replied.

"I beg you pardon?" said my dentist.
You can't blame me for trying.

Did allies encourage Syrian bomb plot?

By Robert J. Wagman

LONDON (NEA) — Could the United States, Britain and Israel have blocked — weeks or even months before the attempt was finally made — the Syrian-inspired plot to blow up an El Al flight from London to Tel Aviv? By not doing so, did they actually encourage the attempt last April in order to embarrass Syria?

These questions have emerged in European capitals following publication of an interview with French premier Jacques Chirac that appeared in the Washington Times. The interview was conducted by Washington Times editor Arnaud de Borchgrave.

Chirac was quoted as saying he had been told by Chancellor Helmut Kohl that West Germany believed the whole plan had been staged and monitored by Mossad, the Israeli intelligence agency, working with dissidents within the Syrian government in an effort to embarrass the Assad regime. Chirac was also quoted as saying he himself believed the theory to be true.

While the report has not received wide coverage in the United States, it has been front-page news in Europe, causing a storm of denials and outraged comments. Chirac first denied the report, but de Borchgrave produced a tape of the interview. The French premier eventually conceded the accuracy of the quotes, but said the remarks were supposed to have been kept "off the record." He also told the French parliament that the idea that the Mossad may have been involved in a phony bomb scheme was an "absurd hypothesis."

For his part, Kohl had denied ever saying such a thing to Chirac. He insisted that the West German government did not believe the bomb attempt was a Mossad plot.

Israel called the whole theory "outrageous rubbish," an invention by Chirac, who was trying to curry favor with Syria.

Britain denied, in the strongest terms, that "manufactured" evidence was produced at the trial of Nezar Hindawi, the Jordanian convicted of giving a suitcase containing a bomb to his pregnant Irish girlfriend and putting her aboard the flight.

Chirac had said the West Germans also believed the evidence was manufactured.

This furor occurred on the eve of a major gathering of European Economic Community foreign ministers here in London, a meeting Britain demanded to consider tough, unified sanctions against Syrian terrorism. Amid much bickering the ministers agreed to watered-down sanctions, which allowed Britain to save face.

But the Chirac interview was the number-one topic behind the scenes, especially among intelligence experts at the gathering. Sources privy to those meetings report that German intelligence agents believe Chirac either purposely misstated or simply misunderstood the information.

Basically put, the Germans believe several intelligence services — including those of Britain, the United States and Israel — had learned of the plot so far in advance that they could easily have nipped it in the bud.

Armed with this information the plot could have been stopped early on.

Perot assumes ransom deals arranged at high levels

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas billionaire H. Ross Perot said today he assumed higher officials had approved Lt. Col. Oliver L. North's request that he offer $2 million in a failed attempt to ransom U.S. hostages in Lebanon.

Perot, interviewed on ABC-TV's "Nightline," confirmed an account published today in The Washington Post, which said the billionaire — at North's request — sent $2 million via courier to Cyprus earlier this year to win the release of five Americans in Lebanon.

North, an aide to the White House National Security Council, was fired Nov. 25 for what the administration said was his role in funneling Iranian weapons payments to Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

Asked if North was acting with higher authority in the ransom attempt, Perot said, "My sense is always that people who do these types of things in the government are very meticulous in getting approval for their activities."

But, he added, "Maybe by the time I started dealing with Colonel North specifically, I had been pretty well programmed in that direction because that's always been the case."

Contacted Monday night, Daniel Howard, a White House spokesman said: "If it happened, according to the National Security Council, no one knew of it and it certainly was not authorized."

According to the Post's account, which it said was based on "informed sources, including people with firsthand knowledge of the transactions described," North asked Perot on May 23 to deposit $2 million in a Swiss bank account.

Perot was on the point of telexing the money when North called and asked him to send it by courier to Cyprus for an exchange in "a ship-to-ship transfer," the Post said.

The courier waited five days on Cyprus, but the deal fell through for reasons that could not be determined, the newspaper said.

Perot said he did not ask North why the deal fizzled but said, "It's my understanding that the people that were supposed to produce, didn't. It's that simple."

The five hostages at the time of the ransom attempt were: Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press; David Jacobsen, administrator of the American University Hospital in Beirut; Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco, director of Catholic Relief Services in Lebanon; Thomas Sutherland, acting dean of agriculture at American University; and Rev. Benjamin Weir, a Presbyterian missionary.

Jacobsen, Jenco and Weir have since been released. Anderson and Sutherland are still captives.

Three other Americans have since been kidnapped.

The ransom attempt directly contradicted President Reagan's stated policy of refusing to negotiate with terrorists.

But, Perot explained, "As I understand the government's policy, it is they don't want to use U.S. money, but if and when they can find a willing citizen to help him in matters like this, then they can go to great efforts to save the person's life."

About the same time as the ransom attempt, former national security adviser Robert C. McFarlane and North flew to Iran on May 28 with a planeload of arms in an attempt to secure release of the Beirut hostages, the Post said.

The Post's sources said they could not explain why North was working simultaneously on at least two tracks or how the two incidents might be related.

North's attorney, Brendan V. Sullivan Jr., did not return telephone messages left at his home Monday night.

Reagan's job rating plummets in wake of Iran-Contra deal

NEW YORK (AP) — Ronald Reagan's once-high rating as president is plummetting as the public suspects an administration cover-up of the facts surrounding U.S. arms sales to Iran and compares the new scandal to Watergate, a poll shows.

A major factor in the crumbling of public approval for Reagan is that many Americans don't believe the president's denials that he knew profits from the arms sales were going to Contra rebels in Central America. And the public also is deeply skeptical of similar denials from other administration officials, including White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan and Vice President George Bush.

The CBS News-New York Times poll, released Monday, questioned 687 adults on Sunday following revelations about the complex scandal at the White House that has unleashed investigations by the Justice Department and probes by congressional committees.

For the first six years of his presidency, Reagan enjoyed the most consistently high job rating from the American public of any president since Dwight Eisenhower. But the Iranian arms-Contras scandal has taken a dramatic toll on this standing with the public:

—Reagan's overall rating is down 21 percentage points in less than a month, to the lowest point in three years.

—His foreign affairs job rating is down 22 points in the same period, with the negative marks in that area reaching the highest point of the Reagan presidency.

The latest survey gave Reagan an even split among Americans on his work overall. Forty-six percent approved his efforts, while 45 disapproved. As recently as late October, 67 percent approved his work and 25 disapproved.

On foreign affairs, the latest poll shows 35 percent approved of Reagan's work in international affairs, while 54 percent disapproved. That is the first time in his presidency that a majority of the public has registered disapproval of his work in this area.

In the last pre-election poll by CBS and the Times, Reagan's foreign policy rating stood at 57 percent approval, 31 percent disapproval.

The source for this decline is clear: public disapproval of the arms sales to Iran, which some have linked to efforts to free American hostages in the Middle East, and the diversion of money from those sales to aid the Contras fighting the government of Nicaragua. This disapproval is fed by the judgment that the adminstration is not telling the truth about the complex affair.

When asked: "Do you think the administration is trying to cover up all the facts about the Iranian arms deal?" most suspected a cover-up. Sixty-nine percent said the Reagan administration is not telling all it knows, while 20 percent disagreed.

The poll also asked: "Is this situation as serious for the country as Watergate was?" Forty-seven percent agreed the scandal was as serious as Watergate and 10 percent volunteered that the current situation was more serious than Watergate. Thirty-six percent said the scandal was not that serious and 7 percent were not sure or did not give an answer.

When asked: "Do you think that Ronald Reagan knew that money from Iranian arms sales was going to help the Contras in Nicaragua or not?" 53 percent said Reagan knew of the funneling of money to the Contras, while 26 percent said he did not. The remainder were undecided.

Even more of those questioned in the poll do not believe White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan's denials of knowledge of the sending of money to the Contras. Sixty-five percent said he knew about the money diversion, while only 7 percent said he did not. The remainder were not decided.

Despite the questions about the Reagan's answers on the Contra money issue, the poll said Americans' judgment of Reagan's honesty remains high.

Cheering crowd of feminists hails NOW's 20th anniversary

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A cheering crowd of 2,800 feminists hailed the 20th anniversary of the National Organization For Women in a Hollywood extravaganza designed to fund future crusades for women's equality.

With NOW President Eleanor Smeal vowing to "keep the flame of feminism alive and growing," stars of stage and screen declared their dedication to a free and equal future.

A founding mother of the movement, Betty Friedan, received a wild ovation. And a former first lady, Betty Ford, declared herself a feminist forever.

The participants Monday night pledged to win a new bid for passage of the Equal Rights Amendment. And on a lighter note, they spoofed pre-feminist days with a medley of songs: "There Is Nothing Like A Dame," "As Long As He Needs Me," "The Man That Got Away," and other tunes from less liberated times.

The crowd roared approval as Helen Reddy sang her anthem of the women's movement, "I Am Woman."

They booed as actor Alan Alda joined Mrs. Ford in speaking of President Reagan's opposition to the ERA.

Celebrities donated their performances in the song-and-dance tribute which was expected to raise at least $500,000 for future NOW crusades.

Syndication rights for the show were up for bids, and Ms. Smeal said a high price was anticipated.

Lily Tomlin reminisced in a humorous way about her childhood crush on a female teacher. Backstage, she credited the women's movement with "allowing me to do my own work and do it with more and more freedom and appreciation ... to think I could do what I want to do in any medium."

The evening included subtle and not-so-subtle political overtones.

"This shows to me that it doesn't matter who's in the White House or whether we're in fashion," said Ms. Smeal. "The country is with us,"

Much of the show was a recitation of achievements for women in the past 20 years.

"We've broken down barriers in every field," said Ms. Smeal. "Our greatest accomplishments have been in education, but they've been in every field."

States, D.C. face $70.6 million loss in Supreme Court case

By The Associated Press

Federal highway aid worth $70.6 million to eight states and the District of Columbia is at stake when the Supreme Court rules on a federal law requiring the money to be withheld from states with a minimum drinking age below 21.

Nine states have taken part in portions of the appeal, which resulted in the Supreme Court's decision Monday to decide a challenge led by South Dakota, where officials say such a law unconstitutionally weakens state powers.

"We should be able to decide the kind of state we want and not ... Washington," South Dakota Attorney General Mark Meierhenry said. "We'll take care of whether our young people will drink in South Dakota."

Some of the states, however, already are trying to raise their minimum drinking ages to comply with the 1984 law that Congress passed in an attempt to reduce highway fatalities among teenagers.

The law requires the secretary of transportation to withhold 5 percent of the federal money for highway construction this year if a state permits anyone under 21 to buy or possess alcoholic beverages.

According to estimates by state and district officials, Ohio would lose the most at $16.5 million; Louisiana, $15 million; Colorado, $9.1 million; Tennessee, $9 million; Montana, $5.6 million; Idaho, $4.3 million; Wyoming, $4.5 million; South Dakota, $4 million; the District of Columbia, $2.6 million.

Those amounts would double in the next fiscal year unless the states have met the guidelines, the law says. States that subsequently adopt a minimum drinking age of 21 would recoup withheld funds.

Robert Tenenbaum, spokesman for Ohio Attorney General Anthony Celebrezze Jr., welcomed the court's decision to hear the case.

"Potentially if (South Dakota) wins it means the federal government in this particular case can't blackmail the states into changing their drinking age by withholding highway funds," Tenenbaum said.

Idaho Attorney General Jim Jones said he hopes South Dakota wins, but he expressed little optimism that would happen.

"I don't like to be pushed around by the federal government any more than anyone else but it seems to me the questions have been fairly well decided against the states in other areas," Jones said.

Thousands return to work at GM

DETROIT (AP) — More than 30,000 General Motors Corp. workers at nine assembly plants, laid off by a strike-spawned parts shortage, have returned to work this week as production at the giant automaker begins to return to normal.

But 10,900 other workers at three plants began weeklong layoffs Monday that had been scheduled last week, and 28,570 others remained on layoff from last month. They were scheduled to begin returning to work in the next two weeks.

"We don't expect it to change. From here on in, it's getting better," said GM spokesman John Mueller.

About 80,000 GM non-striking GM workers across the country were laid off at one time or another when their plants ran out of essential parts made at a Delco Electronics Corp. plant in Kokomo, Ind.

The 7,700 workers at the GM subsidiary walked off their jobs Nov. 17 in a dispute over subcontracting of some jobs and a plan to transfer some radio production to Mexico.

The strike was settled six days later when the workers agreed to accept Japanese-style management and GM agreed to keep the radio production at the plant for the next few years.

As part of GM's just-in-time system of inventory management, designed to eliminate costly inventories, parts were made and shipped at the Kokomo plant as they were needed at other GM plants.

Without a stock of spare parts, GM assembly plants began shutting down within a day of the walkout. Once the strike was settled, workers began slowly refilling the parts pipeline.

Analysts called the strike a test of the just-in-time system, which GM said it would continue despite the vulnerability it causes.

But UAW Vice President Donald Ephlin said the Local 292 strike was just that: a local strike.

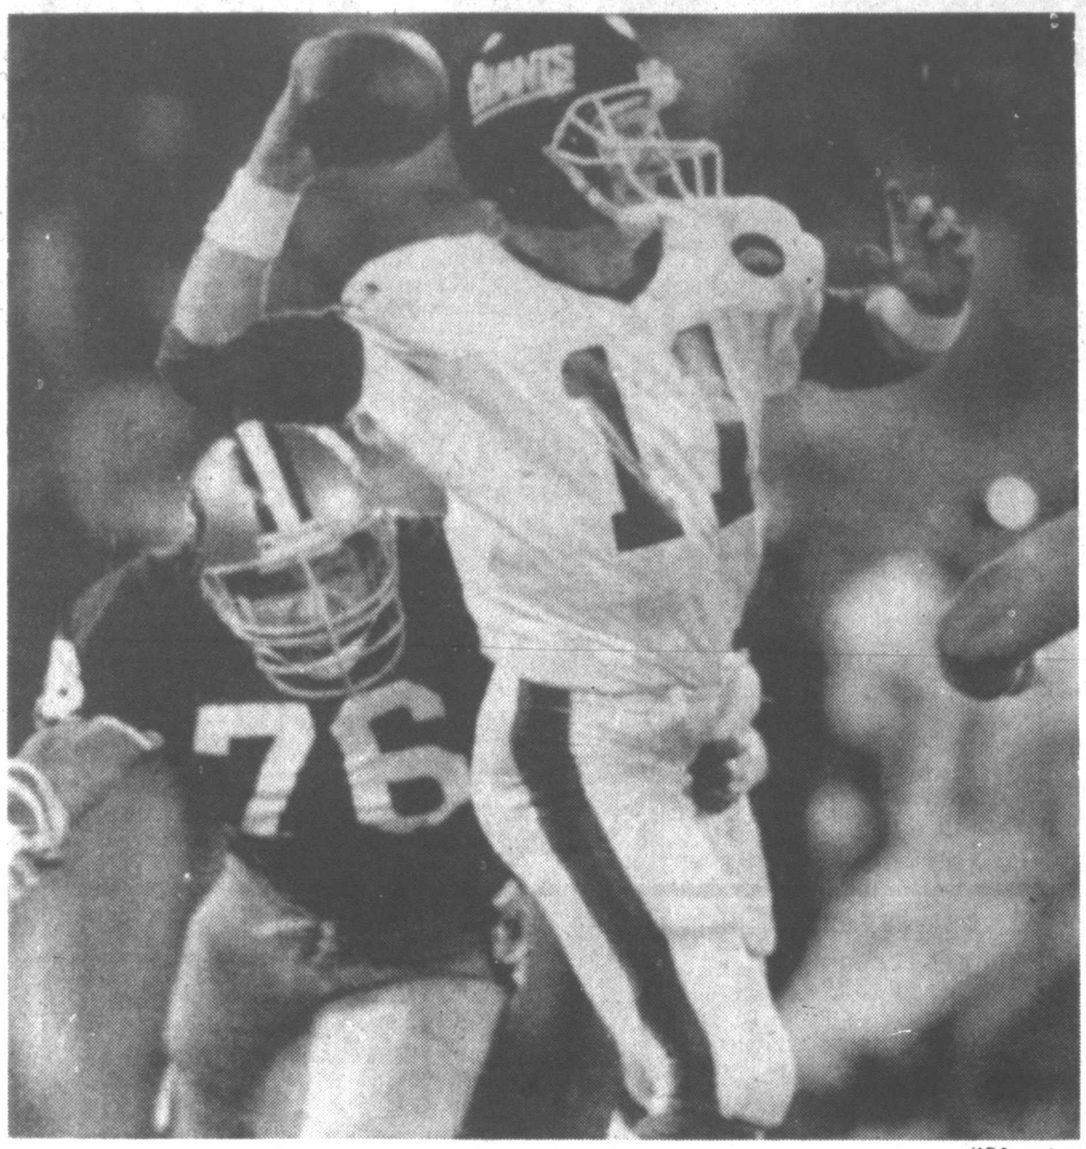

Returning to work Monday were 1,000 workers in Windsor, Ontario; 5,000 in Kansas City, Kan.; 1,000 in Bowling Green, Ky.; 5,500 at the Fleetwood-Clark Street plants in Detroit; 4,200 in Ypsilanti; 5,000 in Wentzville, Mo.; 1,960 in Pontiac; and 6,257 in Flint.

Giants' quarterback Phil Simms gets set to pass as the 49ers Dwaine Board closes in.

Giants claim playoff spot with victory over 49ers

By ERIC PREWITT
AP Sports Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The San Francisco 49ers were out to stop Joe Morris, the New York Giants' ace running back, and they did it — all but once.

"If that play doesn't work, we'd probably lose the game," Giants Coach Bill Parcells said, looking back at a successful fourth-down gamble during a third-period rally which helped his team rally for a 21-17 victory Monday night.

"We haven't been out of any games since 1984, although we almost were out of this one," Parcells added after the victory, which assured his team, now 11-2, of at least a wild-card playoff berth.

The Giants, with a six-game winning streak, will be in Washington next Sunday to face the Redskins, tied with them for first place in the NFC East.

The Giants, down 17-0 at halftime, drove 49 yards on their first possession of the second half and scored on Phil Simms' 17-yard touchdown pass to Morris. A few minutes later, the Giants faced a fourth-and-2 situation at their 49-yard line and Parcells called on Morris, who had zero net yards rushing on nine carries up to that point.

Morris ran to the right, spotted a big hole, and gained 17 yards to keep the drive alive.

"We knew they were going to pass on the fourth-and-two," San Francisco linebacker Riki Ellison said.

After outguessing the 49ers on the fourth-down call, New York got its second touchdown on the next play, on Simms' 34-yard pass to wide receiver Stacy Robinson, and went ahead late in the third period when a 49-yard bomb to Robinson set up Ottis Anderson's 1-yard dive into the end zone.

"They beat us with a couple of big plays that really hurt us," said 49ers Coach Bill Walsh, calling the loss "the toughest we've had since I've been with the team."

The 49ers, 7-5-1, fell 1½ games behind the Los Angeles Rams in the NFC West race with three games.

Simms had 202 of his 388 yards passing during the 21-point third quarter.

Morris, who had 1,146 yards rushing and six 100-yard games before Monday night, wound up with 14 yards on 13 carries, while the Giants finished with only 13 net yards on 19 carries.

San Francisco's rushing attack, boosted by the return of recently re-signed Wendell Tyler, totaled 116 yards to go with the 251 yards passing by Joe Montana.

Simms completed 13 of 15 passes in the third period.

The 49ers built their lead on a field goal by Ray Wersching and two second-quarter touchdowns by Jerry Rice. The second-year receiver caught an 11-yard scoring pass from Montana and also reached the end zone on a 1-yard, end-around play. Rice now has 15 touchdowns, which ties the 49ers' season record. His 1,367 yards receiving this year is a league-high and also a team record.

University of Texas starts search for new coach

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — With the University of Texas search committee already at work in the hunt for a new football coach, UT President William Cunningham says he wants the panel to move as rapidly as possible.

The university fired Coach Fred Akers on Saturday, two days after his team lost to Texas A&M and finished the season at 5-6, the Longhorns' first losing season in 30 years.

"We are doing everything possible to expedite the process of selection of a new head football coach," Cunningham said Monday as the search committee held its first meeting.

"I am confident that the committee will be able to work quickly and that it will be a great help to Mr. (Athletic Director DeLoss) Dodds as he prepares his recommendation for the new head football coach," he added.

Dodds is chairman of the search committee, which includes former Longhorn coach Darrell Royal, current players, former athletes, faculty members and alumni.

Monday was the first day that high school football players were allowed to make official recruiting visits to college campuses. But Akers' assistant coaches, who have contracts running through Feb. 28, 1987, weren't recruiting. Akers told a news conference that the school had ordered them not to recruit.

"They are not recruiting. They were told not to ... by the administration," Akers said.

Speculation has been widespread over who might be Akers' replacement.

Texas Tech Athletic Director T Jones said Dodds had permission to talk with Texas Tech Coach David McWilliams, who spent 20 years at UT as a player and assistant coach.

McWilliams, who guided the Red Raiders to a 7-4 season, is in the first year of a contract that runs through 1989.

Akers described McWilliams as a personal friend and said he would wish him well.

"If David wants it, he's got my blessing, of course. I think David's a good man," Akers said. "If David were to get it and he wanted it, I'd be happy for him..."

As for other possibilities, Akers said, "The rest of them, I don't care. I'm not going to get involved in selecting — of course, no one's asked, either."

Among those being suggested as possibilities for the Longhorn job are John Cooper of Arizona State, Larry Smith of Arizona, Fisher De Berry of Air Force and Mike Shanahan, an assistant with the Denver Broncos. Miami of Florida Coach Jimmy Johnson also has been touted as a possibility, but said he plans to remain with the Hurricanes next year.

UT officials said that following the search, Dodds would recommend his choice to Cunningham for final approval.

Besides Royal, the search committee includes Longhorn quarterback Bret Stafford and senior captain Eric Jeffries. Former player Doug English also is on the panel.

The committee's other members include:

Tom Morgan, chairman of the UT Men's Athletic Council and UT's faculty representative to the Southwest Conference; James Vick, UT mathematics professor; Waneen Spirduso, chairman of the Department of Health and Physical Education; John Butler, associate professor of sociology; Beverly Hadaway, associate professor of finance and chair of the Women's Athletic Council; former men's athletic council member Ray Sommerfield, an accounting professor;

Former Texas Secretary of State John Fainter; Jere Thompson, president of the Southland Corp.; Wales Madden, an Amarillo lawyer; Mike Myers, a Dallas investor and president of the Texas Longhorn Education Foundation; Louis Pearce, Houston industrialist; John Stuart, president of the RepublicBank, Dallas; Weldon Smith, board chairman of Big 6 Drilling of Houston;

Donna Lopiano, UT women's athletic director, and two student members, Mitch Kreindler of Dallas, student representative to the men's athletic council, and John Smith of Houston, an officer in the UT student's association.

Amarillo Tascosa returns for encore tonight against Harvesters

By JOHN GERDEL Jr.
Sports Writer

Just when you thought it was safe to go back on the basketball court, ...

After a slow start on the season the Harvester varsity boys evened their record at 3-3 during the Pampa Chamber of Commerce Invitational this weekend.

So who do they invite over for the next game?

That's right, the team that won the tournament, the Amarillo Tascosa Rebels. With four games in five days on the same court, the Rebels may be wondering who has the home court edge tonight.

Three games are on tap tonight as sophomore and junior varsity contests precede the varsity tilt. The action tarts at 4:30 p.m. in McNeely Field House.

Robert Hale, Harvester boys varsity coach, got a chance to look over the Rebels during the tournament and noted a couple of things about Tacosa.

"They shoot the ball real well and the have excellent guard play," Hale said.

"Both guards play extremely well," he continued, referring to Mike Mitchell and Darrin Cunningham. Mitchell was named to the all-tournament team this weekend, but Hale said that Cunningham was equally deserving of recognition.

Hale also noted the Rebels "have good experience and a lot of kids back from last year."

The Harvesters' play during the tournament was pleasing to Hale. "They performed extremely well and got two fine wins," he said.

And the coach feels that his squad is coming together. "Our competition has just been excellent and our kids have been equal to the challenge," Hale said. "We've beaten three fine ball clubs."

The Pampa girls have the evening off, preparing for weekend tournaments. The varsity Lady Harvesters are scheduled to play in the Abilene tournament Friday and Saturday and the junior varsity is slated for a tournament at Hartley on Thursday.

Services set Wednesday for football great

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Services are tentatively scheduled Wednesday in Lubbock for Bobby Layne, the former University of Texas and Detroit Lions football great.

Layne, 59, a Hall of Fame quarterback, died Monday of cardiac arrest.

He had been hospitalized for more than two weeks in critical condition, said Methodist Hospital spokesman Doug Hodel. He had entered the hospital Nov. 15 suffering from internal bleeding.

Layne starred in an era when athletes played hard on and off the field.

"I want to run out of money and breath at the same time," he once said.

A longtime Lubbock resident, Layne returned to the city Nov. 12 after being hospitalized at St. Joseph Mercy Hospital in Pontiac, Mich., for a similar ailment.

He was visiting Michigan to present a Hall of Fame ring and certificate to longtime friend Doak Walker, who was inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame this year.

"He was a fun-loving person that lived hard and played hard," Walker said Monday night in a telephone interview from his Denver home. "He was a fighter all the way."

"Bobby never lost a game. Time just ran out. And I guess time ran out," Walker said.

Layne led Detroit to NFL championships in 1952 and 1953, and also played for the Chicago Bears, the New York Bulldogs and the Pittsburgh Steelers in a 15-year professional career. He retired in 1962.

"He had more best friends than anybody I've ever known. That's indicative of the type of person he was. He was a great guy and he was the greatest competitor I've ever seen," said Dallas Cowboys defensive coordinator Ernie Stautner, who roomed with Layne when they played for the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Cowboys Coach Tom Landry said his former UT teammate "was one of the greatest athletes that Texas football has ever produced. All of us who shared in his outstanding career are saddened to learn of his passing today."

Wherever he played since his high school days in the Dallas suburb of Highland Park,

"I want to run out of money and breath at the same time."

——Bobby Layne

Layne was the star and the center of attention, on and off the field.

Once when he quarterbacked the Steelers against the New York Giants, he was discovered still in New York on Tuesday. He told reporters he hadn't got the city out of his system yet.

Another time, playing for the Steelers against the Dallas Cowboys in the Cotton Bowl, Layne kicked a fullback in the rear after a play near the 50-yard line. He later explained the fullback hadn't run the play right.

When he joined the Steelers, according to one account, he took over a poker game in progress and answered a challenge from a disgruntled tackle by snarling, "I deal. I'm the quarterback."

During his 15-year career, Layne completed 1,814 of 3,700 passes for 26,769 yards and 196 touchdowns. He was elected to the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1967.

Someone figured out once that Layne had passed the football for more than 13 miles in his career, but such statistics didn't interest him. He was interested only in winning.

Layne began his pro career with the Chicago Bears in 1948, playing for the New York Bulldogs in 1949 and the Lions from 1950-57 and finishing out his career with the Steelers.

After his playing days were finished, Layne went on to work as a quarterback coach with the Steelers from 1963-65, then with the St. Louis Cardinals in 1965. During 1966-67, he was a scout for the Dallas Cowboys.

In later years, Layne's interests included oil and business, but he expressed the following philosophy: "If a man works after noon, the job is too big for him in the first place."

Layne enrolled at the University of Texas in 1944 and carried fabled coach Dana X. Bible's team to within a point of winning the Southwest Conference championship.

He spent part of the 1945 season in the Merchant Marines with his friend Walker. They got out one weekend and played against each other the next, when Layne's Texas team beat Walker's Southern Methodist team 12-7 enroute to the conference championship.

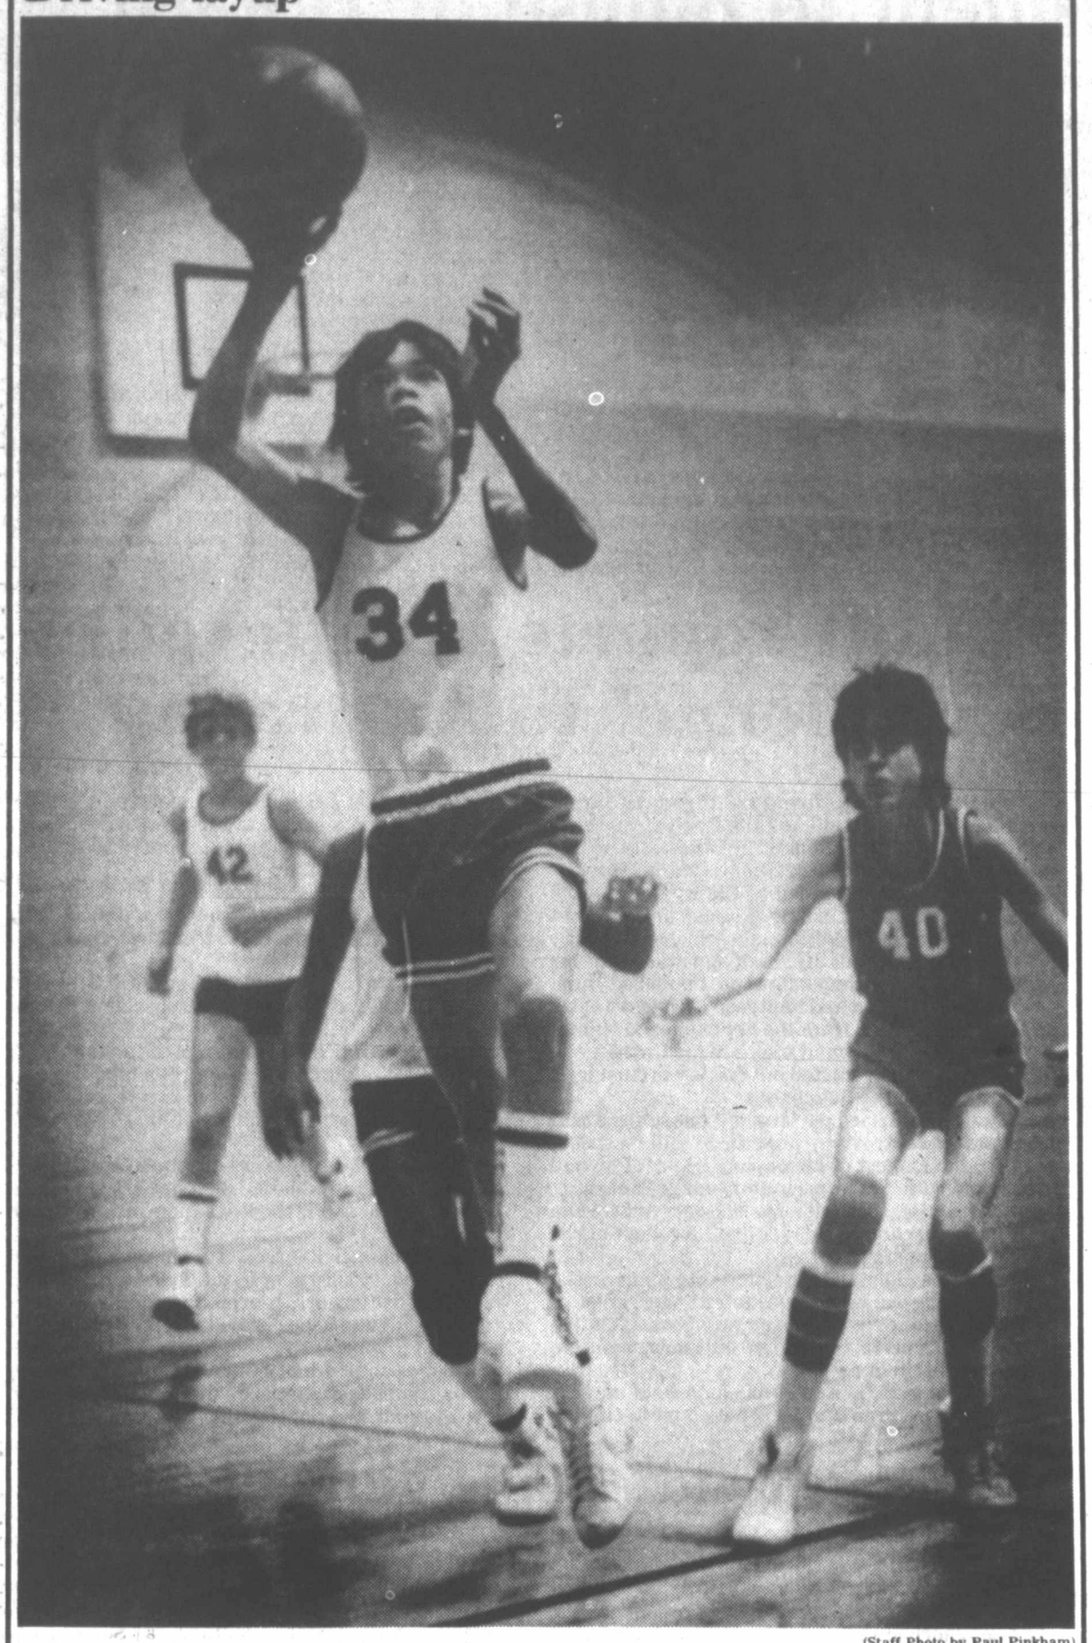

"I think Bobby was most thrilled when Doak was inducted into the Hall of Fame," said former Lubbock Mayor Dirk West, a close friend of Layne's. "He was as happy when Doak was inducted as when he was inducted. They were very close."

During a halftime ceremony honoring Layne in 1963, Richard McCann, who served as director of the NFL Hall of Fame, called the quarterback "one of the greatest of all time."

Alborto Camillo of the Pampa seventh-grade basketball team drives for a layup against Borger Tuesday night. The Patriots won the game, 46-30.

Optimist girls basketball signups continue

Five head coaches and an assistant coach for the Optimist Girls Basketball League were named today by Mike Frye, the commissioner of the league. The league consists of fourth, fifth and sixth grade girls who will not reach their 13th birthday before Sept. 1.

New coaches include Ron Wood for the Mustangs, David Bowers for the Cougars and Ted Laurie, an assistant coach for the Red Raiders. Returning will be Stacy Hamilton of the Longhorns, Calvin King of the Owls and Rick Massick of the Bears.

Tryouts will continue today and Wednesday from 5 to 6:30 p.m. at Optimist Gym.

"We had 17 girls sign up Monday," Frye said. "We are expecting about 80 to play this year. We will practice this month with league play beginning in January."

"Every girl will be assigned to a team Wednesday night," explained Harley Knutson, Optimist President. "We plan to have an A and B division on each team so that every girl will have an opportunity to play on game nights and be able to be competitive."

Borger frosh defeats Pampa basketball teams

BORGER — Borger defeated both Pampa teams in ninth-grade boys district basketball action Tuesday night.

Borger Red defeated Pampa Blue 55-39. Antione Wallace led Pampa in scoring with 23 points while Heath Parker and Junior Busby added 4 points each.

Thompson scored 24 points to lead Borger.

Pampa Blue is now 0-2 in district play and 1-1 overall.

Borger White won over Pampa Red 59-41.

Cale Fleming was top scorer for Pampa with 15 points, followed by Kyle Gaugher with 11.

Jarrett topped Borger with 26.

It was the first game for the Pampa Red team.

The Pampa tournament starts Thursday and continues through Saturday. Pampa Blue meets Dumas Orange in first round play at 6 p.m. Thursday.

The Pampa Red team is scheduled to play at 7:30 p.m. against an unnamed opponent. They were scheduled to play McLean, but they pulled out of the tournament.

White Deer girls place third in tournament

The White Deer girls finished third in a four-team tournament held at Highland Park High School during the holidays.

In the opening game, Vega defeated the Does 51-33. The second round saw White Deer winning over host Highland Park, 42-36. In the final round, Dimmitt stopped the Does 65-22.

Tonight both varsity teams and both junior varsity teams are scheduled to play in Canadian.

College football poll

Hurricanes finish on top in poll

By The Associated Press

Their status certified on paper, Miami and Penn State have nothing left now but to settle things on the field.

Their impending battle for the national college football championship was assured Monday with the final regular-season Associated Press poll that listed Miami and Penn State 1-2.

They'll meet on Jan. 2 in the Fiesta Bowl, the 21st time that the No. 1 and No. 2 teams have met since the AP poll began in 1936 and the eighth time that it's happened in a bowl game.

The other 1-2 bowl pairings were the Rose Bowl of Jan. 1, 1963 (No. 1 Southern Cal 42, Wisconsin 37), the Cotton Bowl of Jan. 1, 1964 (No. 1 Texas 28, Navy 7), the Rose Bowl of Jan. 1, 1969 (No. 1 Ohio State 27, Southern Cal 16), the Orange Bowl of Jan. 1, 1972 (No. 1 Nebraska 38, Alabama 6), the Sugar Bowl of Jan. 1, 1979 (No. 2 Alabama 14, Penn State 7) and the Sugar Bowl of Jan. 1, 1983, (No. 2 Penn State 27, Georgia 23).

Miami completed an 11-0 season last Thursday night by beating East Carolina 36-10. The Hurricanes received 53 of 58 first-place votes and 1,155 of a possible 1,160 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters. Miami has been No. 1 since defeating Oklahoma 28-16 on Sept. 27. Penn State, also 11-0, received the other five first-place votes and 1,092 points. The Lions are No. 2 for the third consecutive week.

Oklahoma, Michigan, Louisiana State and Nebraska remained third through sixth. Oklahoma, 10-1, received 1,053 points; Michigan, 10-1 with a regular-season windup on Saturday at Hawaii, received 984 points; LSU, 9-2 after whipping Tulane 37-17, received 877 points and Nebraska, 9-2, received 861 points.

Alabama's 21-17 loss to Auburn dropped the Crimson Tide from seventh to 13th and Arizona State, 9-1-1, advanced one place to seventh with 777 points.

Texas A&M completed a 9-2 regular season by defeating Texas 16-3 to win the Southwest Conference championship and a berth in the Cotton Bowl and jumped from 10th to eighth with 710 points.

Arkansas, 9-2, remained No. 9 with 692 points while Auburn, 9-2, jumped from 14th to 10th with 631 points.

Southern Cal's last-second 38-37 loss to Notre Dame dropped the Trojans out of the Top Twenty. Stanford moved in for the fifth time this season by defeating Arizona 29-24.

Indoor soccer results

After three weeks of indoor soccer in Amarillo, Pampa teams share first-place honors in all three age divisions.

The Under 8 Thundercats grabbed a share of first place after zapping the Amarillo Steamers.

The U-10 Bulls fell just short after losing to the Jammers Two 5-4. But the U-10 Cougars stayed undefeated with a win over the Pampa Tigers 15-5 in a game which was much closer than the score shows.

The U-12 Panthers fell to the Stingers 8-4. The U-12 Warhawks bit the Amarillo Dawgs 10-2 to retain their share of first place with the Pampa Rowdies, who were idle this week. The U-10 Renegades, also idle this week, share first place with the Pampa Cougars and the Amarillo Steamers One.

Nixon aides maneuvered president to punish or reward

WASHINGTON (AP) — When he was president, Richard Nixon's aides constantly maneuvered to have him use his prestige to punish or reward, in one case rejecting a proposal to have the Japanese ambassador join the president at the opening game of the baseball season, newly released documents show.

An aide quashed the idea because Japan was not being cooperative on a trade issue.

Another time, Nixon was urged not to meet with the widow of Martin Luther King Jr. on the first anniversary of the civil rights leader's assassination because "it would outrage many, many people who believe Dr. King was a fraud and a demagogue, and perhaps worse."

And he was asked by a White House aide to consider appointing a senator's choice of an unqualified candidate for a judgeship — just to gain a vote for for a Supreme Court nomination.

These insights into the Nixon White House were contained in 1.5 million pages of documents seized by the government when Nixon resigned in disgrace in August 1974. The papers were made public for the first time Monday by the National Archives, which had tried for years to release them.

Missing from the newly released documents are the most sensitive of the Nixon files — another 1.5 million pages that relate to the Watergate scandal that drove him from office. The National Archives once before tried to release those but was stopped by 29 lawsuits filed by former Nixon associates.

The Archives, which has custody of the Nixon materials, is expected to try again next month to open the papers to public scrutiny by publishing a notice in the Federal Register of its intention to do so. That opens a 60-day period in which objections can be made.

The rest of the 40 million pages were characterized by an archivist as "junk mail" and government documents that flowed to the White House in the 5½ years of Nixon's tenure.

Speechwriter Patrick J. Buchanan was concerned about the public impact of a courtesy call to Coretta Scott King on the first anniversary of her husband's death in 1969.

"It would outrage many, many people who believe Dr. King was a fraud and a demagogue and perhaps worse," Buchanan wrote on April 1, 1969. "Dr. King is one of the most divisive men in contemporary history — some believe him a Messiah, others consider him the devil incarnate."

Buchanan is the director of communications for President Reagan. He did not respond to a request for a comment Monday night.

Nixon sent Robert Finch, then secretary of health, education and welfare, to deliver a personal message to Mrs. King.

The president had made an all-out effort to gain confirmation of G. Harrold Carswell as an associate justice of the Supreme Court.

Two days before the vote, an aide wrote Nixon that he should offer a deal to then Sen. Marlow Cook, R-Ky., who was wavering about his vote. The note said Cook was interested in nominating a particular candidate for a federal appellate court, although the Justice Department considered the man "too old and very poorly qualified."

"Cook has mentioned this enough times that a promise to give him the judgeship, if he brings this up, might secure his vote for Carswell," the memo said. It was not learned if the candidate was nominated. Carswell's nomination was defeated 51-45.

The documents also revealed:

■ Nixon astonished some aides by meeting with Elvis Presley on Dec. 21, 1970. Presley had written to Nixon saying he wanted to be named a federal drug agent. He got an honorary badge.

■ Many celebrities, including movie stars Mickey Rooney, Zsa Gabor and Dale Evans, wife of Roy Rogers, wrote the president during Watergate offering their support.

To Miss Gabor, and to hundreds of others, went this typed note:

"It has always been my experience in my political career that you learn who your real friends are — not when the road is smooth, but when it is sometimes rocky."

Former Prime Minister Harold MacMillan got this reply to his note of suppport: "Only in adversity do you find out who your real friends are. ... We shall see this through."

Moslem cleric accuses Reagan of sabotaging hostages' release

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Lebanon's most influential Shiite Moslem cleric today accused President Reagan's administration of sabotaging the release of 17 prisoners in Kuwait that he said would have led to the freeing of U.S. hostages in Lebanon.

Sheikh Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah said he personally made efforts to secure the release of one of the Americans, Terry Anderson, Chief Middle East Correspondent of The Associated Press.

Anderson was kidnapped in Moslem west Beirut March 16, 1985, a day after he interviewed Fadlallah.

The cleric, 54, is spiritual guide of pro-Iranian Shiite militants of Hezbollah, or Party of God, and Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, which holds Anderson, another American and several Frenchmen.

Fadlallah spoke to reporters during a meeting at his west Beirut home with two American Moslem envoys seeking the release of 17 foreigners missing in Lebanon.

"We had accurate information that Kuwait was in the process of releasing the prisoners it holds, but the United States pressured it not to do so," Fadlallah said. He did not elaborate.

Kuwait has repeately declared it would not free the 17 prisoners, who were convicted of bombing the U.S. and French embassies in Kuwait in December, 1983.

Islamic Jihad has said it will free the U.S. hostages it holds if the 17 prisoners are freed.

The undergound group claims it holds Anderson, 39; Thomas Sutherland, 55, acting Dean of Agriculture at the American University of Beirut and three French hostages.

Fadlallah was flanked as he spoke by Mohammad Mehdi, Secretary-General of the New York-based National Council for Islamic Affairs, and his deputy, Dale Shaheen.

Pontiff reports he offered a 'challenge' to Australia

ROME (AP) — Pope John Paul II returned from a six-nation tour of Asia and the Pacific, and said he had posed a "challenge" in Australia to the steadily eroding Roman Catholic Church there.

John Paul's plane landed at Ciampino military airport in Rome at 11:20 p.m. Monday and was met by a group of church officials.

The 66-year-old pontiff, high-spirited after his two-week, 31,000-mile pilgrimage, appeared satisfied with his mission and bantered with journalists on the nine-hour leg from the Seychelles to Rome.

"I should be tired, but it seems to me I'm not," he said. The pope had started out his day in Australia before flying to the Seychelles.

The pope dismissed as "stupid" questions about the reported controversy over the $3 million cost of his trip, the longest of his papacy. He said he had embarked with "an important message to carry."

In particular, he said, his six-day Australian visit had presented a "challenge" for the church there to renew itself.

Australia's church is considered to be in crisis. Mass attendance has plummeted, the ranks of priests are thinning and large numbers of Catholics ignore church teachings on contraception, abortion and divorce.

In his final Mass in Australia, John Paul made it clear one more time that he is not about to change his opposition to artificial birth control.

The pope had a short stay in the Seychelles, an Indian Ocean archipelago with about 66,000 people, 90 percent of whom are Catholic.

After arriving there, John Paul gave an open-air, rain-drenched Mass where he called close family ties "an irreplaceable treasure" that keeps society together.

After the sermon, John Paul had a private meeting with the Seychelles socialist president, Albert Rene.

In homily after homily in Australia, John Paul presented a picture of an increasingly secular country in which Catholics have to relearn what it means to be a Catholic and the obligations that go with it.

At one point, heeding a suggestion by Australia's Roman Catholics bishops, the pope issued a passionate appeal to "lapsed" Catholics to return to the church.

That address, delivered before his largest crowd in Australia, 250,000 people at a Sydney racetrack, was the most powerful sermon of the tour.

"Come back," he beseeched. "The church opens her arms to you."

Catholics are a minority in Australia, as they are in Bangladesh, Singapore, the Fiji Islands and New Zealand, the pope's other stops on the tour.

Anti-apartheid couple gunned down

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A prominent black doctor and his wife, both active in the anti-apartheid movement, were gunned down by two assailants outside their home, the government said today.

The government's Bureau for Information said Dr. Fabian Ribeiro and his wife Florence were killed Monday night in Mamelodi township outside Pretoria.

Police said the assailants were black, but neighbors told reporters that the killers were two masked white men.

Ribeiro had been detained by the government several times, most recently following the declaration of a state of emergency in June.

Last year his two-story home in Mamelodi was badly damaged by firebombs, an attack he blamed on government agents.

He was known in Mamelodi as "the people's doctor" and frequently treated victims of political violence in the township.

Mrs. Ribeiro was the sister of Robert Sobukwe, a leader of the Pan African Congress who died in 1978. The PAC, along with the African National Congress, is one of the two main guerrilla organizations fighting to overthrow the white-led government.

Lifestyles

Hard to believe this Eurostyle-decorated suite occupies the core of a conventional split-level house. The color scheme is an ultra-sophisticated white, black and yellow throughout the kitchen, dining and living areas.

The suite's living area is principally black and white with yellow accents. Note the checkred rug on the gleaming white no-wax floor which flows throughout the entire suite to unify the decor.

Eurostyle crosses Atlantic, reaches U.S.

What comes to mind when you heard the words "split-level house?" Are the words like "boring," "dull" and "dated?"

It doesn't have to be that way. Witness the dramatic renovation of the core of a conventional split-level by a flooring company's interior designers.

They turned a separate kitchen, living room and formal dining room into a large "suite" in which spaces flow together. No more cramped, small rooms. And they decorated the suite in the European style (Eurostyle), giving it a startling sophisticated color scheme of white, black and yellow.

The only doors separating the spaces now are sliding pocket doors between the kitchen and living area. A large pass-through goes from the kitchen to a pantry and wet bar, added to the dining area.

Kitchen cabinet surfaces are white plastic laminate and the countertops are the same material in yellow. New appliances have black glass fronts and the wallpaper is glossy black with a tiny print pattern.

Two white parson's tables and curved chairs with white seats and lacquered black wood frames provide a casual dining area. When not in use, the two tables tuck under a custom-made yellow work counter with lucite drawers where utensils, napkins and the like are kept.

A free booklet is available on the Eurostyle suite, containing more information, color photographs, floor plans and instructions for making the kitchen work counter and parson's tables.

For a copy, write Armstrong World Industries, Attn: Free Eurostyle Suite Booklet, P.O. Box 3001, Lancaster, Pa., 17604. Or call (800)233-3823 toll-free and ask for your complimentary copy

Small chance of AIDS persists in transfusions

DEAR ABBY: I'm always impressed by the advice you give. Particularly concerning medical matters, you are rarely, if ever, off the mark.

In today's Greenville, S.C., News you said, "The risk of getting AIDS from a blood transfusion is no longer a threat since all blood is tested for the AIDS virus before it is used in a transfusion."

Unfortunately, Abby, when a person gets the AIDS virus in his (or her) system, there may be a delay of several weeks or even longer before he tests positive, so there's a "window period" that may result in a person contracting AIDS from contaminated blood in a transfusion. That is if the donor has the AIDS virus but hasn't had it long enough for the blood test to become positive.

There is certainly much less of a threat with present testing, but, unfortunately, a small threat still persists.

WILLIAM H. HUNTER, M.D.,
CLEMSON, S.C.

DEAR DR. HUNTER: Thank you for setting the record straight. I received many letters containing the information you put forth in your letter, but yours was the first.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I live in one state and the girl I'm writing about lives in another. We've spent a lot of time talking, and I think I'm falling in love with her. We write to each other nearly every day and we talk on the phone a lot. By the way, we're not kids — we're both over 25.

Is it possible to have a successful love relationship with someone who lives in another state?

LONELY ON LINWOOD

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR LONELY: Yes. Distance lends enchantment. Each separation makes the reunion all the sweeter. Tearful goodbyes and ecstatic hellos keep the romance from becoming stale or boring, and time apart will enable you both to view each other more objectively. Letters and phone calls add to the excitement and keep the flame burning.

I speak from experience. I married the handsome Minnesota college boy who courted me for three long years and overcame a 300-mile handicap. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: Your recent column about abandoned accounts struck a nerve down here in Texas, but I am concerned that some people might think that if their money is transferred to the state, it can never be redeemed.

Please assure your readers that dormant bank accounts are not lost if they are turned over to the state. In Texas, as in other states, we make every effort to locate the owners of these accounts through the statewide publication of a list of owners with $50 or more and through an active search for persons with very large accounts.

Last year we returned $50 million to owners of abandoned accounts. Even those we have not yet located are protected. Under state law, we maintain these accounts in perpetuity.

If your readers believe they — or a relative — have an account that has been turned over to the state, they should write to their state treasurer or comptroller, the officials who are generally responsible for holding unclaimed property.

Personally, I just love to give people's money back to them for a change!

ANN W. RICHARDS,
TREASURER,
STATE OF TEXAS

* * *

CONFIDENTIAL TO SAMMY IN KISSIMMEE, FLA.: Don't expect too much and you'll not be disappointed. As my sainted father used to say, "When a poor man rubs elbows with a rich man, all he gets is a hole in his sleeve."

DEAR ABBY: A bleeding-heart liberal vegetarian wrote to you and complained about the expression "Killing two birds with one stone." ("Why would anyone want to kill even one bird with a stone?" the bird-lover asked.) Do as the Finnish people do; say, "Kill two flies with one swat." I am a third-generation Finn, and I've taught this to many as a healthy alternative to "killing birds."

DONALD R. LEHTI,
LOS ANGELES

DEAR DONALD: You and I may value a bird's life far above the life of the lowly insect. But killing two flies with one swat wouldn't fly in India among the Jainists, whose religion teaches a reverence for all life.

This bear spends the night, too

By BETH COTTEN

It's one of life's little jokes on parents: you've spent hundreds on clothing for your kids, but their closets contain only a fraction of that amount.

To corral all the missing clothes, you'd have to search the lost-and-found boxes at a thousand places, in addition to the closet of every child who attends the same school.

In a final attempt to salvage at least some of my sanity and bank account, I have given up nagging and searching. When they run out completely, my kids will have to rough it in the buff! Maybe then they'll learn.

Meanwhile, I'm trying to make it easier for them to remember to bring home what they leave with. For some of them, a stuffed animal called Take-Me-Along Bear seems to be helping.

This whimsical, furry character is not only lovable and cute, but he serves as an overnight bag as well. Pajamas and robe can be stuffed inside, and his vest pockets carry a comb, toothbrush and other small items.

To make the take-along bear you'll need about a yard of fur fabric for the body, ½ yard of fabric for the vest, ⅛ yard of coordinating fabric or a two-yard length of extra-wide bias tape for the contrasting vest parts, and a pink pompon for the nose.

Cut from fur fabric two heads, two torsos (one slightly longer than the other), two muzzles, two ears, four arms and four legs. Each arm and leg should include a rounded paw. Cut two additional ears from vest fabric.

To assemble one ear, stitch a fur and a fabric ear piece right sides together and turn right side out. Assemble the second ear. Sandwich the ears between the two head pieces and stitch the heads together, leaving the neck edge open.

Clip the curves and turn the head right side out - the ears should now be on the outside. Stuff the head firmly with fiberfill and baste across the bottom of the neck to secure.

Sew the two muzzle pieces right sides together, clip the curves and turn right side out. Stuff the muzzle and whipstitch the opening. Whipstitch the muzzle to the bear's face. Glue and whipstitch the pompon nose to the muzzle.

To finish the face, cut eye shapes from white and black felt and glue in place. Cut a tongue from pink felt and glue to the face underneath the muzzle.

To assemble one arm, sew two arm pieces right sides together, leaving the shoulder end open. Leave a three-inch opening in the seam, for later use in stuffing the arm. Clip the curves and turn right side out.

Assemble the second arm and both legs in the same manner. Baste them to the shorter torso piece, with paws facing center and the open upper ends aligned along their proper positions around the edge of the torso.

The back torso is cut in half, so you'll be able to stuff pajamas inside the bear. To prepare the back torso, first cut it in half widthwise. Encase the cut edge of each half in bias tape or fabric strips.

Work two buttonholes in the bound portion of one back torso piece, and sew two buttons to the other one. Place the two back torsos right side up and with the bound edges overlapping by about one inch. Baste them together near the ends of the binding strips.

Now place the front and back torsos right sides together, with the arms and legs sandwiched between. Stitch the seam around the outer edge, leaving an opening at the neck. Clip the curves and turn right side out.

Take-me-along bear

The arms and legs should now be on the outside. Stuff them through the openings in the seams, and whipstitch the openings.

Insert the neck portion of the head into the neck opening of the torso and whipstitch around it several times to secure.

Make a vest to fit, with pockets for comb and toothbrush, and add a ribbon or fabric neck scarf for style.

You can stitch up a take-along bear for the forgetful kids in your family. It takes only a few hours, with the help of our detailed plans. They include a materials list, full-size patterns and illustrated step-by-step instructions.

To order plans for the take-along bear, specify Project No. 1360 and include $4.95 for the plan. Mail to Makin' Things, Dept. 79065, P.O. Box 1000, Bixby, Okla., 74008-1000.

Computer bulletin board provides software library

By RAY WESTBROOK
Lubbock Avalanche-Journal

LUBBOCK (AP) — In the high tech business world of the 1980's, Lee Stafford and Terry Duke of Lubbock are frontiersmen.

A century and a half ago, their attire might have been a coonskin hat and a long rifle; today, it's a business suit and a gold Cross pen — and enough computer hardware to make the IRS envious.

Stafford and Duke are carving order out of the chaotic wilderness of computer technology through an electronic bulletin board entity they call The Windmill Co.

It is a kind of software library, and provides a medium for the free exchange of information.

The board, nurtured through midnight hours and exhausting weekends for the past three years, has grown to a collection of more than 3,000 software programs that are available to businesses and individuals who have the capability of accessing the system.

Although the Lubbock men have a personal investment in the system that reaches well into five figures, they are continuing to make it available at no charge to business people or to those who just have a similarly consuming interest in computers.

They are "players," they explain, in the information and technological revolution which is occurring throughout the world.

The software available through the system spans the spectrum from accounting programs to games for the family.

Because the programs are "in the public domain," a user may copy the material into his own system at no charge, and without infringement of copyrights.

The Windmill Co. is one of two of the largest free boards in the United States. Donations are welcomed; some of the software programs have cost a significant amount to add to the collection.

The Windmill Co. has fixed Lubbock in the minds of many throughout the United States, and has made the city known in a number of foreign nations. Users who have accessed the Lubbock-based board are from such countries as Malaysia, Germany, and Canada.

In the United States, virtually all major cities have computer enthusiasts who recognize The Windmill Co. name. In scanning the list of members, one can see that a number of users listed New Jersey addresses, along with Michigan, Alaska and other distant states.

The Lubbock board is recognized in the industry as ranking among the top 75 boards of all types, whether free to the public or by subscription.

Stafford and Duke have resisted suggestions that they charge an annual membership fee, in order to maintain the purity and freedom of the system.

Duke explained the technical requirements for accessing the board:

"To access the Windmill Co. you need a computer modem and a communication program that supports the X-modem file transfer protocol.

"There are many free communication programs available," he said.

"When you set up your program you should set your communication parameters to No Parity, 8 Data Bits, 1 Stop Bit, and 1,200 or 2,400 Baud." He said that 300 Baud is not supported.

"You should read the manual for your communication program to find how to set your parameters and use X-modems.

"Once you gain access to the system there is on line help that you can use to learn more about how to get around in the system. You should read the bulletins and the 'help screens'. The system menus list the commands available," he said.

"If you still have problems you can leave a comment to the SYSOP (system operator) and ask questions. The questions will be answered usually within a day via the message system," Duke said.

"When you log on you will be notified that you have a message and the number of the message. You can use the 'read' command to see your message," he said.

The data phone number for the board is 792-6116. Duke's voice number is 765-7009.

Duke, a former technician at Southwestern Public Service, is currently a senior computer science student at Texas Tech University. He has personally written software programs which he has donated to the public domain. One of his software creations, a kind of auditing and maintenance program for boards, is the only one of its kind in the United States.

Stafford is executive vice president of the Lubbock Board of City Development.

According to Duke, one doesn't have to have a math background to be a computer programmer, but notes that it helps to have a logical mind. "A computer is very stupid — you have to tell it exactly what to do," he said.

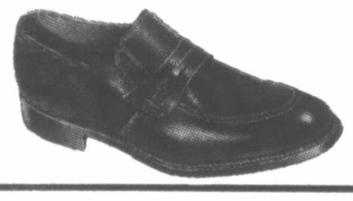

Stafford and Duke welcome new members to the system. Computer stores, they said, often give their customers the board's number. A new user is instructed to log on for a maximum of 20 minutes, leaving name, address, and telephone number.

An initial security level of four is assigned to the new member. He can be upgraded to a five level "permanent" user at a later time. A top level of six "preferred" status is assigned to some. All other users are automatically deleted if they have not used the system within the past three months. The Windmill Co. currently has about 1,000 users.

Man says finding water is a gift

(AP Laserphoto)

Howard Collier demonstates dousing or "water-witching" as it is often called.

By BOB LITTON
Pecos Enterprise

PECOS, Texas (AP) — Some people search for a scientific basis for dousing — or "water-witching," as it is often called.

But not Howard Collier of Pecos. He just accepts it as a gift.

Still, he is aware of the explanations others have come up with. "It has something to do wih the magnetism in that stick and in your body and in that water vein down there that causes the stick to come down," he said.

The 66-year-old rancher recalled that he first learned about water-witching and that had the gift when he was 20 years old.

He was working that summer on his father's Screwbean Ranch in northeast Culberson County. Early one fall morning he and the foreman rode horseback to a site on the ranch where his father had constructed a dirt tank.

"It was the tail-end of a terrible drought," he recalled. "The soil scientists had concluded we needed to conserve soil moisture better than we had.

"So the government had come in with the the Triple A program — what's now called the ASCS — and part of that program was the 'dirt works' program. There were thousands of miles of terraces in West Texas. And they built spreader dams and dirt tanks.

"Just two weeks before, my father and I had ridden out to see it. The thing was about 200 feet square and about 10 feet deep with sloping sides.

"There had been some good rains, and it was full. The water had backed up a quarter mile past this dirt dam.

"But two weeks later, when Cahrlie Greer, the foreman, and I rode out there, there was not a drop of water. Instead, there was a hole in the middle of it where the water had slumped."

The young Collier was shocked by the sight. "My goodness," he said to Greer, "with all this trouble, all this expense, it might be just as cheap to dig a water well."

"Yeah," said Greer, "but it might help if you water-witch for it first."

"What do you mean?" said Collier, who had never heard the phrase before.

"Well, get down off your horse and let's find us a greasewood forked limb," Greer replied.

After cutting two forked limbs, Greer showed the young man how to hold the witching stick. And together they walked over a part of the ranch where the terrain showed promise of good water.

Suddenly Collier's stick started pulling toward the ground, so much so that he had to use force to hold it straight in front of him. The experience frightened him.

"I could see it in your face," said Greer. "Consider yourself lucky. that forked stick doesn't work for everybody."

Collier did not make much of the occasion at the time, he says now. "I was just an event in my life."

What was more important to him was the experience of the Dust Bowl, the creation of the terraces, windmills and dirt tanks. "As a teenager in the Dustbowl days I learned how precious water is to a rancher in West Texas," he said. "Since that time, there's been a lot of water wells drilled and water storage tanks and water troughs built."

In the 1960s, however he decided he wanted to locate some windmills on the home ranch in south Reeves County and some irrigation wells at the ranch headquarters on Toyah Creek.

A brother-in-law, Fred Armstrong, did the engineering work, while Collier did the water-witching.

"By 1970 I'd water-witched about 10 wells for us and other people," said Collier. "Of course, that's not many, but they all turned out to be good wells."

Compared with some dousers he has known, most of whom are dead now, Collier considers himself an amateur. "These oid water well drillers, they had that science!" he said. "After you told one of them about where you wanted the well and had staked it off, he'd say, 'I'd better get a water witch' — and he might move it over a hundred feet or more from where you had indicated."

Every water witcher has his own preference when it comes to types of wood used for the forked stick. Hackberry is a common source, Collier noted, as is the peach tree. "I like greasewood," he said.

Still others forego wood altogether, preferring metal rods. "Some people swear by brass welding rods," said Collier.

Although most scientists dismiss any physical reality in dousing, a few do not discount it so readily. Retired University of Missouri physicist Zaboj V. Harvalik believes that it is a real phenomenon.

Harvalik's experiments haveshown that a person holding a dousing stick can detect buried electric wires, apparently because the human body is sensitive to small changes in Earth's magnetic field caused by the current flowing through wires. Since water, ores, and other buried substances also affect the magnetic field, Harvalik suggests, dousing has a physical explanation.

Large python kept at transmission shop gets gasps and glances from customers

By MARY DOCLAR
Gainesville Daily Register

GAINESVILLE, Texas (AP) — Daisy, a Burmese python, reclines lazily on the dark floor of a makeshift snakehouse, her 14-foot length swollen after a recent feast of freshly-killed rabbits.

It's after mealtime that the 130-pound smake becomes most lethargic, says owner Tommy Nottingham.

"She's in the state of digestion, her rib cage is expanding," he explains, poking Daisy's smooth skin of mottled green, black and yellow.

The coiled reptile barely moves.

"She sleeps during the daytime and prowls around the shop at night," Nottingham said.

Nottingham said that when Daisy is confronted with food in her home at North Texas Automatic Transmission, the reptile's energy comes flooding back. Her tongue begins to flicker to and fro. Her head quivers. She readies herself to strike.

"I render her victims unconscious before I give then to her," Nottingham said. "I just hit 'em in the head and knock 'em out."

During one recent feeding, however, one of the domestic rabbits Nottingham buys to feed Daisy survived his knock-out punch.

Daisy completed the killing.

"She just wrapped herself around it real fast — I started to hear bone crunching," Nottingham said. "She's just one big muscle. It's unbelievable.

"If she was hanging from a tree she could reach down and grab a person," he said.

But Nottingham said the 8-year-old snake, a native of Southeast Asia, is really tame, despite her vicious feeding habits. According to Daisy's owner, most people just don't realize that a python who has spent all her life among humans generally is well-accustomed to the race.

"She's a good-natured snake, she doesn't shy away from the lights," he said.

He says her antics are often interesting — and unbelievable.

One day when Daisy was at home with Nottingham he discovered the huge snake stretched up to the ceiling fan getting a breath of fresh air.

"She looked just like a pole," he said. "But pretty soom I had to get her down so she wouldn't hurt herself."

When customers pull up to North Texas Automatic Transmission where Nottingham works, and see Daisy coiled up in a corner of her shed, "Most act amazed. They get one glimpse and they jump back in their cars and drive off. One guy, he like to have hurt himself getting out of here."

School children, however, were awed by the 8-inch thick snake when Nottingham and Daisy made an appearance at their school earlier this fall.

"The little ones in the front, they were scrambling over their chairs to get away. They asked a lot of questions though. The kids in high school wanted to know how snakes breed. I told them they breed just like we do," he said.

The serpent's huge size is one of the biggest problems Nottingham has. "It's hard to hold something that long and that big," he said. "I just hold what I can and drag the rest of her."

Caring for Daisy isn't too taxing, said Nottingham. Daisy can live on one feeding for weeks at a time and doesn't need frequent baths.

But, "When we get her in the bathtub, she just wants to stay there all day," he said. "Once you start handling her, she likes it."

Because she is a cold-blooded reptile, the python must reside in a warm place. Nottingham is in the process of building Daisy her very own home — complete with a heater.

"If it gets below 40 or 50 degrees, these snakes die," he said.

Snake owners also have to be on the alert for signs of serpent illness, Nottingham said. "When they get sick, they get a runny nose, just like humans."

The snake owner said he doesn't know how he came to be such an authority on snakes. "My mother says when I was real small, after a big rain, I came back in the house with a water moccasin in one hand and a garden snake in the other."

Nottingham hasn't stopped picking up reptiles since.

"I've always had a fascination for them," he said. "I just handle them and play with them."

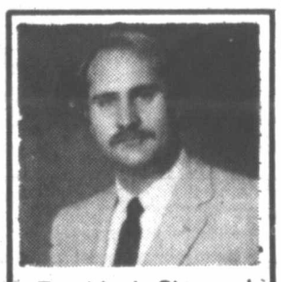

TENSION HEADACHE

If you're bothered by headache that seems to have its origin at the base of your skull, you may be suffering from tension headache.

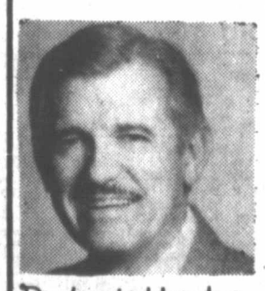

Tension headaches can be caused by an irritation of the nerves in the area of the spine immediately under the skull. These are called the suboccipital nerves. They pass through small openings in the spinal column to muscles in the surrounding area. Any abnormal pressure or dysfunction of neck and muscles can irritate the nerves, causing tension.

The tension doesn't cause the headache. To treat this form of headache, attention should be paid to the bone and muscle structures. They should be returned to normal balance so they can function properly again.

Medication is not the answer to tension headaches. Aspirin and other painkillers may give you temporary relief - but they won't solve the problem. Once the source of the problem is found and treated, THEN you can get the relief you need.

Toy industry criticizes worst toy list

BOSTON (AP) — A cuddly dragon that spews talcum powder tops a list of 10 dangerous toys that manufacturing officials say is just a product-liability lawyer's gimmick to attract new clients.

Attorney Edward Swartz's 15th annual list of "10 worst toys" also includes plastic scooters, toy guns and crib toys.

"If these toys are really that dangerous, why does he only seek all this publicity at Christmastime?" asked Jodi Levin, a spokeswoman for the Toy Manufacturers of America. "The guy prosecutes product liability cases and I just think it's an excellent way to get new clients."

"He's been hardly an objective critic of the toy industry," said Fisher-Price spokeswoman Carol Blackley. "He makes his living as a personal injury lawyer."

Swartz, who has written two books on toy safety and has prosecuted negligence lawsuits against toy manufacturers, said Monday he releases his list now because it is when most toys are bought.

David Schmeltzer, the federal Consumer Product Safety Commission's director of compliance, said Swartz "does a public service by bringing these matters to public attention. We would appreciate it if he could bring it to our attention earlier rather than this late in the season."

The commission said 123,000 children were treated in emergency rooms last year for toy-related injuries, mostly minor cuts and bruises, and some deaths.

The industry group said toymakers follow federal and voluntary safety standards and that many accidents happen because children aren't properly supervised.

Heading Swartz's list, released Monday, is Puff the Magic Dragon by Avon Products, which he said can be dangerous to children who inhale the powder that spews from the dragon's nostrils when squeezed.

Avon spokeswoman Bernadette Mansur said the product has been phased out of production as part of annual product changes and the powder it used "is a high-quality mixture of asbestos-free, cosmetic-quality talc and corn starch, and presents no health risks from incidental inhalation."

Also on Swartz's list:

■ PlaySkool's Tyke Bike, a low plastic scooter for toddlers. Swartz said its height makes it hard for motorists to see it.

PlaySkool spokeswoman Emma Carrasco said the bike has been made for 22 years without a single safety complaint and was not intended to be used on streets or sidewalks.

■ Dakin's Circus Clowns Tie-Up, an infant toy that can be stretched across a crib. It carries a warning to remove the cord when the child is able to sit up, but parents don't know when that will happen for the first time, and a child could strangle himself on the cord, Swartz said.

Dakin spokeswoman Cathy Sotir said the strings comply with regulations. "I think he's basically against all crib toys in general," she said.

■ Pieces of Body, soft rubber eyeballs and other body parts that Swartz said could be easily swallowed. A spokeswoman for Swartz said the toy package did not list a manufacturer.

■ America Ninja Weapon Set by HG Industries, which includes a rigid plastic sword that Swartz said could stab a child's abdomen or injure an eye.

"We don't feel that it's an unsafe toy," said Manny Begleiter, an HG Toys vice president.

■ Aladdin's No. 300 Child Guidance System, a set of plastic snap-together bricks without any warnings. Swartz said the parts could be swallowed and choke a child. The package listed Sam-A Toys as the manufacturer but gave no address and the company could not be located.

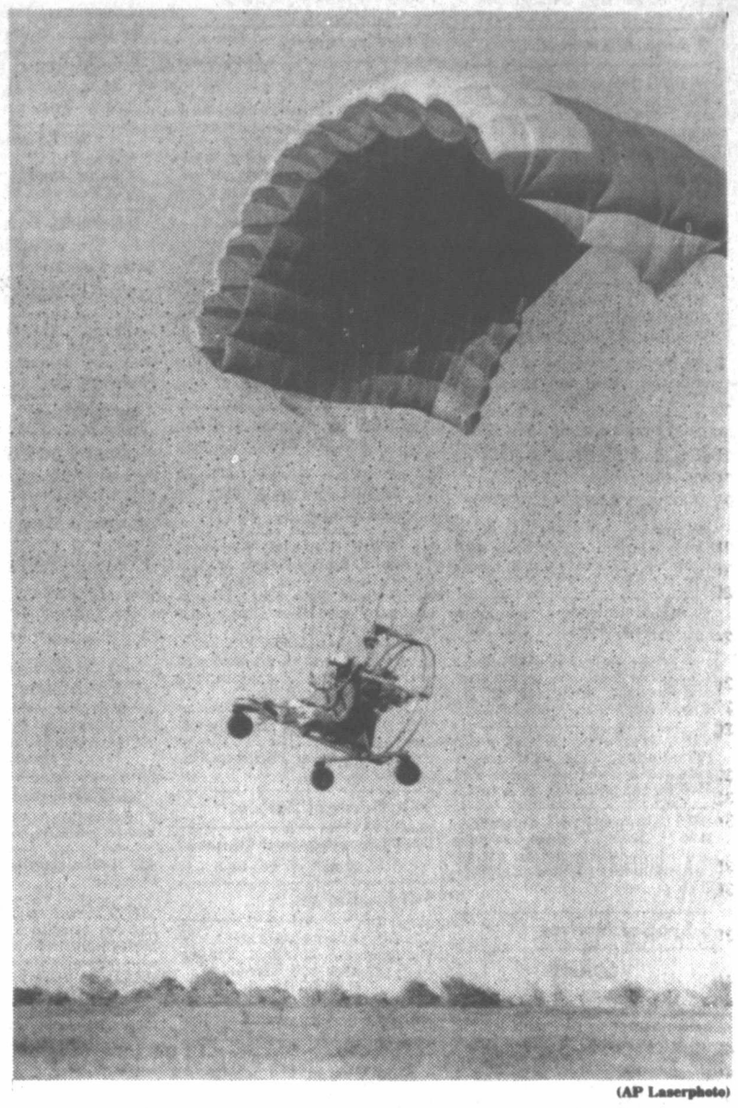

■ Upright Manufacturers' America's Newest Hero Bazooka, which fires a plastic rocket that Swartz said could cause eye injuries. Neither the toy nor its package listed a company address and the company could not be located.

■ Fisher-Price's Tag-Along Turtle and Pull-Along Plane, which have 36-inch long cords that Swartz said could strangle a child.

Ms. Blackley, the Fisher-Price spokeswoman, said the company has made such pull toys for years and never received a report of an injury.

■ G.M.G. Corp.'s Lovely Baby Doll, which Swartz said has a flammable dress and a small pacifier a child could swallow. No company address was on the doll's label or packaging.

■ Edison Giocattoli's Sharkmatic 13 Shot Cap Gun, which weighs nearly one pound and, Swartz said, could be mistaken for a real weapon.

Officer who defended pregnant Marines wins Supreme Court hearing

WASHINGTON (AP) — A decorated Vietnam veteran who says he was ousted from military service for defending the rights of pregnant Marines is getting a hearing before the Supreme Court in an important test of military authority.

The court agreed Monday to hear the appeal of ex-Marine Captain John Van Drasek, setting the stage for a ruling next year that could help those in the armed services challenge decisions by superior officers.

The justices usually have been loathe to allow challenges in civilian courts to military decisions.

A long-standing doctrine prohibits lawsuits against the government for injuries sustained as a result of military service.

And as recently as 1983 the high court ruled that servicemen may not sue superior officers for damages in cases involving alleged violations of their constitutional rights.

Van Drasek's appeal raises similar issues. If he wins ultimately, he could be reinstated in the military with back pay.

The ex-Marine, 41, is living in Woodbridge, Va., and studying respiratory therapy at Northern Virginia Community College.

He said despite an excellent 18-year record in the military, including a Bronze Star for distinguished combat service in Vietnam, he got in trouble with a superior officer for defending the rights of pregnant women to take officer training courses.

Van Drasek was a captain at the Marines officer candidate school in Quantico, Va., when he said he ran afoul of Col. M.T. Cooper, the school's commanding officer.

Cooper excluded pregnant women from the officer training program and Van Drasek opposed the policy.

Van Drasek also said Cooper removed him from a disciplinary review board for recommending that a Marine accused of drug abuse be retained.

In 1983, Van Drasek was denied promotion to major and automatically was discharged from the Marines as a result.

Navy Secretary John Lehman upheld his dismissal when Van Drasek appealed.

Van Drasek then filed a federal court suit, charging he was denied promotion in retaliation for challenging Cooper and exercising his right of free speech.

U.S. District Judge Charles R. Richey in Washington ruled against Van Drasek and a federal appeals court upheld the ruling.

Richey said the federal courts must honor internal military decisions unless "they are arbitrary, capricious or not based on substantial evidence."

In other action Monday, the high court:

■ Agreed to decide whether states may be denied some federal highway money if they fail to adopt a minimum drinking age of 21. The justices, in a multimillion dollar dispute, will hear South Dakota's challenge to a federal law applying financial pressure for a national drinking age.

■ Cleared the way for deportation to the Soviet Union of Karl Linnas, who is under a death sentence there for running a Nazi concentration camp at which some 2,000 people were killed during World War II.

■ Allowed New Jersey to require drug testing for people involved in the thoroughbred horseracing industry.

■ Agreed to use a child-custody battle from California and Louisiana to spell out the power of state courts to refuse to extradite people accused of crimes in other states.

ParaPlane business takes off for Texan

By VINCE SCOLARO
Plano Star-Courier

PLANO, Texas (AP) — Dave English has high hopes for the future of the ParaPlane.

Along with his brother, Rich, and Joe Harker, English owns and operates Future Flight Inc. The company trains, sells and services the ParaPlane, a one-seat aircraft developed about four years ago. The ParaPlane, which weighs about 180 pounds, is a member of the ultralight family of aircraft.

ParaPlanes consist of three basic elements: the air frame, in which the pilot sits and on which steering and engine controls are located; the power plant, which consists of two 15-horsepower engines and twin propellers; and a 400-square-foot gliding parachute, which operates on the same principle as a conventional wing while serving as an operational recovery system. It is this "flexible wing" which distinguished the ParaPlane from other "fixed wing" aircraft.

English and his wife, Bonnie, who serves as secretary-treasure of Future Flight Inc., operate out of a mobile unit that serves as the company's base. They moved to Plano in 1984 after a short stay in Denton. The two, who originally hail from New York and New Hampshire, respectively, had moved to Denton after purchasing the ParaPlane dealership in Orlando, Fla.

English, 25, says that after being certified as a flight instructor, he wanted to start his own business. An article in Popular Mechanics magazine about the ParaPlane sparked his interest, and English bought a dealership.

"I thought the ParaPlane had a promising future. It's simple, it's safe, and it's fun," English said.

Operating the ParaPlane involves adjusting the engines' power and "steering" the aircraft with two "steering arms" operated by the feet. Simply put: to go up, throttle up, to go down, throttle down; to go left, push left, to go right, push right.

According to English, since the ParaPlanes introduction four years ago, about 10,000 students nationwide have flown the ParaPlane. English says that no fatalities or injuries have resulted. "It's hard to be injured in a ParaPlane. Even in the worst instance, like if both engines should somehow quit, the parachute-wing still floats you safely to the ground."

English said that ParaPlane enthusiasts are a bit reluctant to be included in the broad "ultralight" classification of aircraft because of the fatalities and injuries which have been recorded with fixed wing ultralights.

English estimates that he has trained about 400 students. The instruction of prospective ParaPlane pilots includes attending Future Flight's "ground school," a thorough training session consisting of two videotapes, a brief study booklet and test and a demonstration by the instructor. The ground school lasts about one and a half hours.

"I really get a kick out of seeing grown men and women get so excited after they've finished their first flight. It's something fun to do. In my opinion, it's the most exciting thing to do in the Dallas area."

The ParaPlane, though growing in popularity, is still in its infancy. English estimates that there are about 40 ParaPlane dealerships in the U.S. today but says that number includes inactive and part-time dealers.

English said that he chose to move his business to the North Texas area and its open spaces after "spending two months driving around looking for open fields" in the Orlando area. After about one year in Denton, the Englishes decided to move to Plano.

"In Denton, I had heard a lot about Plano and its reputation for hot-air balloons. After studying the demographics of the Plano and North Dallas area, I decided this was the place to move my business," English said.

It was here that Rich English and Joe Harker joined Dave as partners in Future Flight. Rich English specializes in engineering and service of the planes, while Harker is responsible for marketing the young company.

Names in the News

NEW YORK (AP) — Metropolitan Opera star Kiri Te Kanawa sang "Silver Bells" for the lighting of a Christmas tree at Rockefeller Center, joining Helen Hayes for the crowd-packed annual event.

Pianist and songwriter Peter Allen was the guest star Monday night, and of course there was Santa Claus, with a sleigh full of elves.

The precision skating team The Haydenettes and the Rockefeller Center Christmas Chorale helped entertain the estimated 70,000 people who were in view of the 68-foot-tall spruce tree.

David Rockefeller, chairman of The Rockefeller Group, accompanied by a half-dozen children from the Association to Benefit Children, lighted the tree, which has 18,000 multi-colored lights on more than five miles of wire.

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Former first lady Betty Ford says she's comfortable with a TV movie to be shown next year about her alcoholism, and that she's planning another book.

"It's not really painful to look at this story. The main thing is that it is presented as close to reality as possible," Mrs. Ford said Monday during a news conference at the Warner Bros. soundstage.

"The Betty Ford Story," based on her best-selling autobiography, "The Times of My Life," will air in February or March on ABC-TV.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Patti LaBelle is the first pop singer to be presented with the Philadelphia Art Alliance's Award of Merit.

"This is so special because I think I'm breaking the law," she said at a ceremony Monday night. "They don't usually honor rock 'n' roll girls."
