Two gunmen sought in window incidents

Rick Brown/Reporter-Telegram

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Police continued their search today for two gunmen who may have caused more than $30,000 damage in a shooting spree that smashed 200 windows early Monday.

All 170 complaints recorded through this morning by police occurred in Midland's Lee High School district, and nothing was stolen from vehicles, according to preliminary reports. Because of the nature of the crimes, which apppeared to be done "for the fun of it," police are likely looking for a high school senior or recent graduate from a rival school, perhaps Midland High School or one of the Odessa high schools.

"We have started doing some neighborhood checking, but chances are we aren't going to catch them unless we catch them in the act," said Lt. Lannie Lee, who heads the property crimes section. "We're hoping this is a one time deal, that they aren't going to pull this every two or three days."

Lee said the gunmen "could be anybody," but he said with the scant evidence police may have to rely on "gut feelings."

"I really honestly think it is a senior in high school, or someone who just graduated" from a rival school, Lee said.

At least two persons began the binge shortly after midnight Monday. They likely were in a car or on a motorcycle, and were armed with a pellet rifle or pistol, Lee said.

"They were just driving down the street, shooting," he said. "Almost every car that was hit was parked on the street or very near the street."

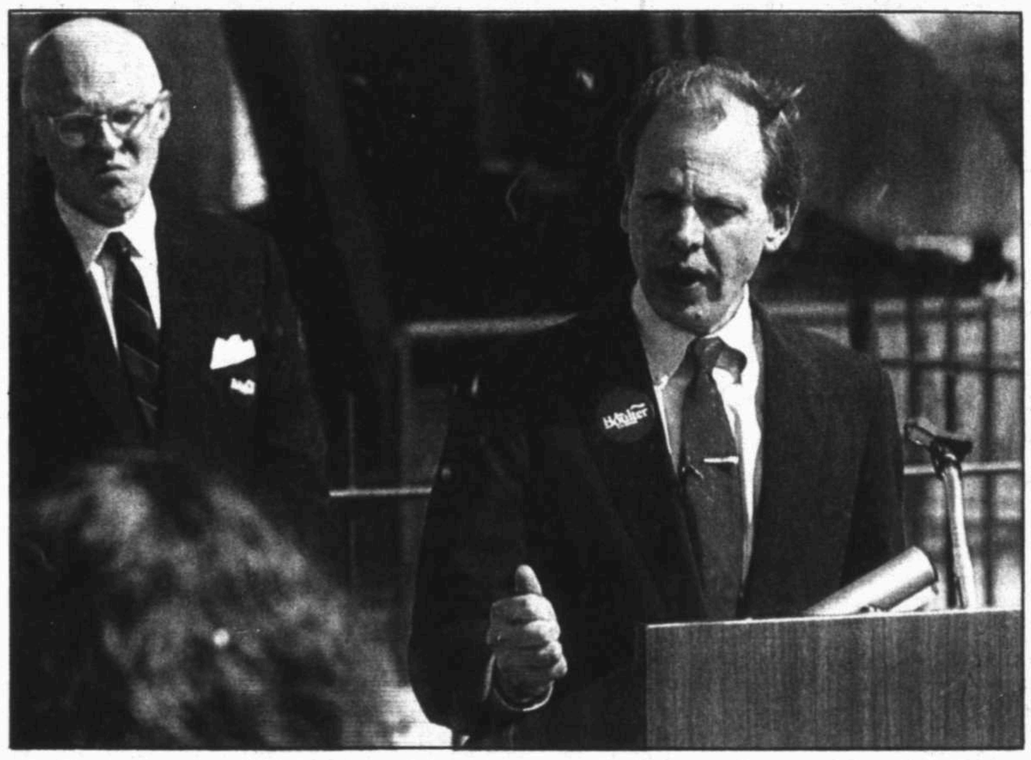

A dark Chevrolet Camaro was spotted near the scene of at least one of the shootings, but police aren't sure if the car was involved, Lee said.

When case reports are delivered to detectives, the work will begin in earnest, he said.

"We will go back through our records, to try and find the people who have a tendency in this area," Lee said.

The investigation likely will involve Officer Dan Walkenshaw, the department's liasion with the Midland school district, Lee said.

Republican senatorial candidate Beau Boulter gathered with Midland supporters such as attorney Nick Taylor, background, Monday to thump his candidacy against incumbent Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, also running for the Democratic vice presidency.

Boulter calls Bentsen's dual races 'hypocritical,' like stand on oil

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Republican candidate for the U.S. Senate, Beau Boulter, says his incumbent opponent is a misleading "hypocrite" plotting to betray the Texas oilman in the name of political ambition.

"There have always been two (U.S. Sen.) Lloyd Bentsens and now they're running for two different offices," Boulter charged Monday at a press conference here.

Boulter maintains that Bentsen, also the Democratic running mate of presidential nominee Michael Dukakis, flip-flops his energy industry philosophies depending on the audience.

When campaigning in Texas for his senatorial race Bentsen expresses sympathy for the energy industry, but then supports the policies of an "anti-oil patch liberal" when thumping nationally for the vice presidency, Boulter charged.

Conversely, Boulter likened his plans for an oil industry renaissance to those of Vice President George Bush's, the Republican presidential nominee.

Boulter claimed that he wrote a majority of the energy policy contained in the 1988 Republican platform, though his name does not appear in the 107-page document that cites Texans Tom Loeffler and Penny Butler as resolution committee members.

The Amarillo congressman added that his legislation, the National Petroleum Act of 1987 drafted bicamerally with Texas Sen. Phil Gramm, would provide the necessary tax incentives to induce production and dissolve governmental regulations.

However, Boulter maintained Monday that Bentsen, as chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, is holding up passage of the act.

The Democratic senator "has made a career baiting the energy industry," but actually "has always opposed everything good for this part of Texas," Boulter said. "I don't know of anything he's favored for the Texas oil and gas industry."

EPA encourages widespread testing for radon seepage

WASHINGTON (AP) — The problem of residential radon contamination appears to be more widespread than previously believed and serious enough to warrant testing for the deadly gas in every home nationwide, the head of the Environmental Protection Agency said today.

New surveys show particularly high levels of the invisible, odorless gas in Minnesota, North Dakota and Pennsylvania. The average home in those states contains radon above the EPA's guidelines, according to figures released Monday at a joint news conference of EPA and the Public Health Service.

Discussing the findings on the ABC-TV's "Good Morning America," EPA Administrator Lee M. Thomas said the agency had believed radon was a major problem for several years, but "what this information shows us is that it is a problem in many states, more states than we had thought. In addition, the estimates (of concentrations) are a little higher than we had thought."

EPA has estimated radon-caused lung cancers could be killing 20,000 people out of the nation's annual toll of 130,000 lung cancer deaths.

And though EPA hasn't changed its estimate that 10 percent of some 80 million homes have radon above the guidelines, the new surveys in seven states and on Indian lands in two more showed more than 29 percent of all homes above the guidelines.

Combined with the results of 10 states surveyed last year, that means one home in four of the 12 million in the two surveys was above the agency's guideline of 4 picocuries per liter, said Rich Guimond, head of EPA's radiation office.

"We think we've documented the problem enough to recommend that every home be tested," Thomas told the news conference.

Will records take bite out of dog bites?

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Dr. Everett Newman has 1,000 dog bites. Painful? Not really, they're just case studies for the Region III veterinarian, who wonders what causes normal, uninhibiting family pets to bite.

Newman doesn't have any answers yet, but he has put together a computerized file for the past year listing a potpourri of data such as the date and time the bite took place and what color the victim was wearing when it occurred.

Texas doesn't keep comprehensive numbers on dog bites. Nor does the rest of the nation. But if there are any common denominators out there, Newman appears intent on finding them.

And that's just fine with Midland Animal Control Director Coy Willis. As of July 31, city residents reported 296 bite cases.

"I think it's a good idea. It's a survey that hasn't been done on a wide scale .... most people don't realize that dog bites are the No. 2 health threat in the United States, second only to gonorrhea."

Willis doesn't know if the number of bites is high or low in Midland, except to say the cases reported are running about 40 behind last year's pace when 378 bites were recorded.

GOP panel probes development of Hispanic talent

By JENNIFER DIXON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republicans today released a set of recommendations to encourage full development of Hispanic talent, including a trade policy with Mexico that benefits businesses on both sides of the border and expanded education initiatives to lower the illiteracy and dropout rates.

The Senate Republican Conference task force on Hispanic affairs said in issuing its recommendations that four advisory committees had examined Hispanic education and literacy, economic development, employment, and health.

"By taking a fresh look at these and additional issues on the threshold of the 1990s, we intend to re-energize and refocus attention on the needs and potential of Hispanic Americans," the report said.

"We do not see this potential as different from other Americans. Rather, we want to ensure that Hispanic Americans have access to the opportunities and support systems already available to most Americans for many generations," said the committee, led by Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah.

Hatch said today many of the recommendations could be accomplished with legislation while the administration would be encouraged to implement some of the findings through executive order.

"I challenge everyone across the country to get a copy and let us know what we can do and what we can do better," Hatch said. "This (report) is a great beginning."

Hatch said he would personally present the report to Republican presidential nominee George Bush, and would have a copy delivered to the Democratic nominee, Michael Dukakis.

"This is a bi-partisan thing. This should not be messed up with politics," Hatch said.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas and a member of the task force, said the report was intended to help the next administration "put together an initiative for the future."

The task force's recommendations include:

- Expanding national and local initiatives to reduce illiteracy and combat a high Hispanic student dropout rate.
- Advocate programs at the federal, state and local levels and in the private sector that provide managerial skills assistance to small minority businesses.
- Pursue an aggressive trade policy with Mexico to benefit businesses on both sides of the border.
- Improve the recruitment of qualified Hispanics into managerial and professional positions in the private and public sector.
- Promote health and disease prevention efforts, with an emphasis on fighting AIDS.

Cisneros, now 41, won't seek fifth term as San Antonio mayor

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Saying the time has come for him to move on, Mayor Henry Cisneros vowed not to seek a fifth term, but declined to rule out the possibility of running for a higher office in the future.

The 41-year-old mayor's fourth 2-year term will expire next spring, and Cisneros said he will go into private life.

Along with handing over the gavel to the nation's ninth-largest city, Cisneros also will pass along some major civic projects he once said were the reasons he wasn't interested in seeking higher office.

When his term ends, the popular mayor and one of the country's leading Hispanic politicians will have served his native city for 14 years.

"It's been work, and it's been fun. Mostly, it's been the most engrossing and fulfilling thing I've ever done," Cisneros said at a news conference Monday.

First lawsuit filed in crash of Delta 1141

DALLAS (AP) — One of 94 people who survived last month's crash of Delta Flight 1141 has filed suit against the airline and the pilot, alleging that she suffered physical injuries, emotional trauma and economic loss.

The suit, filed Monday by Alicia Hayes, 32, seeks unspecified damages for the crash that killed 14 people at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport Aug. 31.

The flight had originated in Jackson, Miss., and was to fly from Dallas to Salt Lake City when it crashed moments after taking off.

■ Related story — 3B

The Dallas woman was not hospitalized, but suffered substantial trauma to her neck and lower back, according to her lawyer, Frank Branson.

"The total horror of the impact is still being felt by Miss Hayes," said Branson, who filed the suit on behalf of Hayes in Judge Adolph Canales' 298th State District Court in Dallas.

Delta "failed to exercise ordinary care that a reasonable aviation common carrier would have exercised," particularly in regard to inspection maintenance and repair of the Boeing 727 aircraft that crashed after takeoff, killing 14 people, the suit alleges.

The suit alleges that pilot Larry Davis of Greenville failed to exercise proper care in inspecting the aircraft before the flight.

The suit does not now name Boeing or Pratt & Whitney, maker of the aircraft engines, as defendants, Branson said, but they could be added.

"Basically, I've been at it for 14 years — eight years as mayor and six as council member. That's a long time to go at full throttle," he said.

"Our country believes that eight years in a high office should be enough to get a job done. Presidents serve eight years. Governors serve eight years. And eight years is a good round number for a mayor, especially this one," he said.

Cisneros, who has served on several international commissions, was interviewed by Walter Mondale as a potential vice presidential running mate in 1984 and frequently mentioned as a possible Cabinet-level appointee.

Last year, Cisneros said he would not be running for statewide office because he wanted to devote time to San Antonio projects and to his son, John Paul Anthony, who was born with a congenital heart defect and stomach abnormalities.

Earlier this year, the former president of the National League of Cities declined an offer to make a keynote address to the Democratic National Convention. He said he wanted to devote time to the city projects, which include a controversial $160 million domed stadium proposal and a regional water plan.

Earlier this year, Cisneros, who has met Pope John Paul II and Soviet leader Mikhal Gorbachev, was approached by several San Antonio businessmen about the prospect of forming a business to handle business investments.

Cisneros said he has since received numerous job offers, but declined to elaborate.

The mayor's salary is less than $5,000. With two daughters nearing college age and an ill infant, Cisneros supplemented that income with columns and speaking engagements, but had to cut back because of the health of his son and the time-consuming city projects.

"Today is a little sad for me. It has to be," Cisneros said. "But I expect to wake up tomorrow morning, ready to make the most of the next eight months, same pace, same energy, same devotion to the city until midnight of the day before the next mayor takes office."

During his tenure, the bilingual, charismatic mayor helped attract numerous conventions and businesses to the city, including Sea World of Texas, the largest marine life theme park in the world.

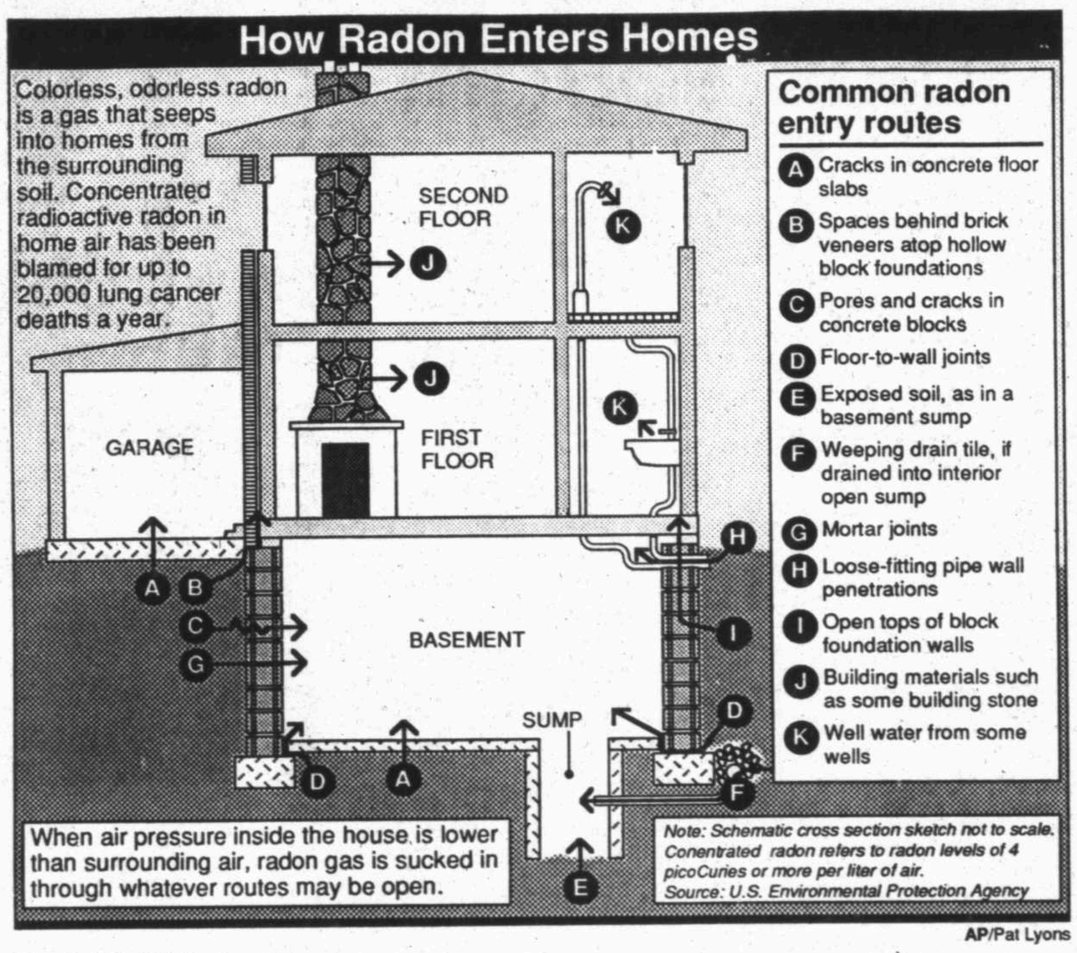

He also helped bridge gaps between the public and private sectors and among Hispanics and Anglos, political analysts said.

"He's got a number of important causes that he wants to complete and he wants those causes accomplished without the specter of re-election and I think any normal person would request the possibility of a vacation after eight years," said George Shipley, Cisneros' Austin-based political consultant.

Cisneros, who won his last two elections overwhelmingly, helped attract numerous Hispanics to the polls, said Bob Brischetto, executive director of the Southwest Voter Research Institute.

"He certainly has the charisma to turn out the Hispanic vote and I think the city contest without him is going to be a different contest," he said.

City Councilman Nelson Wolff has mentioned his intentions to run for mayor and Cisneros' predecessor, Lila Cockrell, said she might consider running for the position again.

RADON

"Even if we are off by (a factor of 10), the problem is severe enough so that we ought to do something about it," said Vernon Houk, assistant surgeon general attending the news conference to announce a formal public health advisory calling for radon testing.

Houk said the health toll from radon "probably exceeds by 10 times outdoor air pollution," and physicians should learn about it to advise their patients.

Radon is a radioactive gas produced in the decay of uranium found in all soil and rock in at least trace amounts, and present in the outdoor atmosphere normally at a concentration about 0.5 percent of EPA's 4 picocurie "action level." Homes tend to concentrate radon indoors.

Radon kills by leaving its own radioactive decay products in the lung, irradiating the tissues for a lifetime. Smoking, itself the major cause of lung cancer, increases the effectiveness of radon by 15 times, Houk said.

"If you have any detectable radon in your home, don't permit smoking indoors," Houk said.

"We have not characterized 4 picocuries as safe," Thomas noted, and the agency is studying the adoption of using outdoor background levels as a goal for indoor programs. At 4 picocuries, EPA believes a lifetime resident increases his or her chance of lung cancer by about 1 percent, a risk level larger than any the agency tolerates in its other programs.

This extra risk is about equivalent to smoking half a pack of cigarettes per day, Guimond said.

EPA has certified that about 1,000 companies are qualified to test for radon, and the test can be done for as little as $10, Thomas said.

The first thing someone confronted with an abnormal result should do is get it confirmed, "not unlike a lot of other things when you go to see your physician," Houk said.

If action is needed, a majority of homes probably can be fixed for less than $1,000, Thomas said.

What can be done depends on the house. Some homes might require a simple sealing of cracks in basement walls. Others might require complicated systems to draw air from beneath basement slabs and discharge it outdoors. Still others might be cured by better ventilation stepping up the exchange of indoor and outdoor air.

Houk noted that most mortgage lenders require homes to be checked for termites, and said, "It is time to certify that our homes are free from radon" when sold.

In Minnesota and North Dakota, the survey identified "an area similar in severity to the Reading Prong," a well-known narrow area of high-uranium soils extending from about Reading, Pa., across northern New Jersey into New York.

Below is a list of the states surveyed. After each state is the percentage of homes above 4 picocuries per liter, and then the average concentration in that state. Surveys were designed to be statistically sound, and the agency said there was a 95 percent chance the true percentages would be within 3 percentage points of the percentages given.

Arizona, 7 percent, 1.6 picocuries per liter; Indiana, 26 percent, 3.6; Massachusetts, 24 percent, 3.4; Minnesota, 46 percent, 4.8; Missouri, 18 percent, 2.6; Pennsylvania, 37 percent, 6.2; North Dakota, 63 percent, 7.0; Indian reservations in Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan, 20 percent, 2.9.

States surveyed last year were Alabama, Colorado, Connecticut, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Wisconsin and Wyoming. Surveys are planned next year in Alaska, Iowa, Maine, New Mexico, Ohio, Vermont, West Virginia and Indian lands in New Mexico, Colorado, North Dakota, South Dakota and Iowa.

VANDALS

Dispatchers received the first complaint at 12:10 a.m. Monday, when a woman reported she heard glass breaking. Two more calls were received in the next hour, and only a few until after 6 a.m. Monday, when most of the damage was discovered, according to police records.

The shootings may have continued until the afternoon, police Cpl. Jim White said.

No homes or apartments were reported damaged, but two windows at the Banc Home Savings building, 1100 Andrews Highway, were reportedly shot, White said.

Damage to the vehicles was at least $25,000, and may have been as much as $30,000, White said.

All of the damaged vehicles were parked west of Midkiff Road and north of U.S. Highway 80, according to police.

Police are not downplaying the weapon involved in the vandalism. Because of the extent of the damage, the ammunition may have been a pellet the size of a .22-caliber bullet.

"It's the same as a .22, only it won't go as far," Lee said. "But up close, it can kill somebody."

Midland Crime Stoppers will be asked to film a "crime of the week" to help generate tips about the shootings, Lee said.

"I'm sure we are going to have to involve them," he said.

"We would be interested in that," said Crime Stoppers Sgt. Milton O'Bryant. "We have done similar things in the past."

A year ago, Crime Stoppers publicized a similar shooting spree which resulted in damage to dozens of cars with what police believed was a BB rifle. No arrests were made in that case, O'Bryant said.

The flood of calls throughout Monday caused a few problems for officers, according to patrol Lt. Jerry Morris.

"We had everybody taking them. Some folks had to wait, because some calls were backed up five or six," Morris said.

By early today the officers were "just about caught up," he said.

While area insurance offices reported only a smattering of claims, some glass companies reported a busy Monday.

"All I know is I've got a lot of glass to put in," said Pete Young of Young's Auto Glass on County Road 114.

Young said he received 30 to 40 calls for estimates and "a bunch" of glass orders.

The owner of one glass business said most of the calls for estimates were for older cars.

"Maybe it is because they were parked toward the street," Joe Carrasco, owner of Alto City Auto Glass, said.

Carrasco said he received 30 to 40 calls Monday, and said the average damage was between $100 and $125.

DELTA

Any further responsibility for the woman's injuries would be determined through court motions for discovery of evidence, he said.

"We do know that (Delta's) pilot was flying it, and they had a duty to get my client safely from Dallas to Salt Lake City — and that didn't happen," Branson said.

Spokesmen for Delta and its insurance carrier, U.S. Aviation Underwriters Inc. of New York, declined to comment on the suit.

BOULTER

Boulter believes the Dukakis-Bentsen platform calls for "an inevitable transition from Texas' most precious resource (oil), which the Democrats call an increasingly scarce and environmentally damaging, non-renewable resource."

Dukakis supports the re-regulation of natural gas and the now-defunct Windfall Profits Tax, Boulter said.

While he maintained that a vice president only can do so much, putting Democrats in the White House will only create an energy industry bogged down by liberal governmental regulation.

BITES

Because no formal reporting system exists, Newman said it's also difficult to pinpoint whether the number of reported dog attacks is anymore out of the ordinary in Midland, than say in San Angelo or Abilene.

"Years ago, we had a volunteer reporting system, but even those numbers were misleading," said Newman, noting some communities of Midland's size would report 14 bites annually per 100,000 population, while others reported 1,000 per 100,000.

Newman is of the belief that more bites are being reported than ever before mainly because families appear to be selecting larger dogs for pets, although he had no hard data to support that claim.

Which is why the state health department in El Paso decided to create a central clearinghouse.

In cooperation with other animal control agencies, Newman said the department is now sifting through 1,000 animal bite reports for possible clues and correlations as to why dogs bite.

While the work is a long way from being completed, Newman says he's found, so far, that "stray dogs" aren't the problem — rather, the family pet. And there seems to be a direct link to biting dogs and children.

"A lot of times they're together on an eye-to-eye level. "They (kids) say Poopsy growls. Big deal, Poopsy always growls, but dogs do bite. We just don't understand why."

Newman says by sorting the information, more answers may become apparent. "We've stopped accumulating (reports) ... at this point, we're just pulling the information apart," he said.

Added Willis: "We're looking at a very serious problem. Maulings are becoming more noticeable, which is why we want to get some data together as an educational tool. Larger dogs are more apparent now. Put that together with poor pet management and you have a hazardous situation."

Gilbert pounds Cayman Islands

KINGSTON, Jamaica (AP) — Hurricane Gilbert, packing winds of up to 130 mph, hit the Cayman Islands today after devastating Jamaica with fierce rains, flash floods and mudslides, weather and radio reports said.

A ham operator in New York City who was monitoring amateur radio communications in Jamaica said, "Kingston is devastated, Montego Bay is hit hard and Ocho Rios is flooded.

"According to them, telephones are down and electricity is down," said the operator, Norm Chwat, an officer with the American Red Cross Radio Club. He said there was an unconfirmed report a tourist hotel on Jamaica's popular north coast had been wrecked by the hurricane.

There were no official reports of casualties. But an unconfirmed report said 30 people were killed in Jamaica, where the storm Monday tore off rooftops, disrupted communications and poured up to 10 inches of rain on the island.

The National Weather Service and radio operators said they received reports of heavy damage in Kingston, the capital of 750,000, on the southeast coast and Montego Bay on the northwest. Twenty-foot waves pounded the northern resort of Ocho Rios and tourists were evacuated from beachside hotels.

WORLD

■ Anatomy of a hurricane Page 3D

At 9 a.m. EDT, the Weather Service said Gilbert was centered near latitude 19 north, longitude 81.5 west, or about 20 miles south of Grand Cayman. It was moving west at about 15 mph.

Herb Schoenbaum, a radio ham operator in the Virgin Islands, said he spoke this morning with Dave Porter, an American staying in the Wyndham Hotel on Montego Bay:

"Porter reported that the hotel 'peeled apart like a banana' when the force of Hurricane Gilbert hit last night," Schoenbaum said. "This morning he says there is just nothing left. Boats that were on the beach, the little rental Sailfishes or Sunfishes, were driven into cars like spears — power lines down, almost every tree in the area is laying on the ground."

Schoenbaum said Porter told him people who were trying to enter the hotel on their hands and knees at the height of the storm were swept into the ocean.

An unidentified ham radio operator from Mandeville, Jamaica, monitored by an Associated Press Radio staffer in Maryland, said, "Thousands of roofs have been blown off. There are no casualties known yet. There are no injured persons reported yet."

The Jamaican consulate in Miami said today it had no immediate information on the extent of damages or casualties.

The island was still out of contact with the rest of the world by telephone.

Overseas callers trying to reach islanders today received this recording: "Due to the hurricane in the area you are calling, your call cannot be completed at this time."

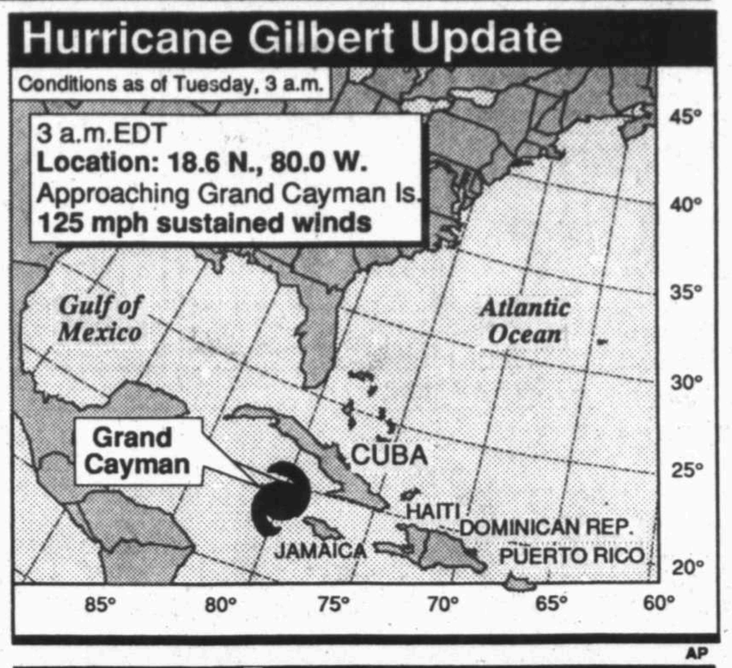

Roger Myers, southern regional spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration in Atlanta, said both international airports in Jamaica are closed. "We've been told the government has asked commercial radio stations to remain silent so Radio Jamaica can broadcast information," Myers said.

Noel Risnychok at the U.S. hurricane center said the strongest part of the storm was now buffeting the Cayman Islands, a British dependency about 300 miles northwest of Jamaica. There are three islands in the chain, all low-lying, and its 23,000 residents depend mostly on tourism for a living.

The Caymans, known most for clear waters and ideal conditions for skin diving, in recent years have become a haven for offshore financial institutions. Columbus discovered the islands in 1503.

All telephone lines into the Caymans also were reported busy today.

"It's safe to assume the Caymans are getting a pounding," Risnychok said. "Right now, they're bearing the brunt of the hurricane and that's probably going to continue for the next five or six hours."

Hijacker joyful to see diver's blood, man says

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — The flight engineer of TWA jet hijacked in 1985 testified today that Mohammed Ali Hamadi "joyfully pointed" to the blood of a murdered U.S. hostage and indicated his death was a great victory for the hijackers' cause.

Flight engineer Benjamin Zimmermann said the hijackers beat him and passengers after the Athens to Rome flight was seized June 14, 1985. He said he was kicked and pistol-whipped.

"I would be hit on the side of the head with the gun butt. When I would bend forward the blows would go down my back," Zimmermann testified.

The Arab hijackers forced the jetliner to fly to Beirut and held 39 Americans hostage for 17 days. U.S. Navy diver Robert Stethem was shot and killed during the ordeal. During the hijacking, the jet first flew to Beirut, then to Algeria, and then back to Beirut.

Hamadi, a Lebanese Shiite Moslem, is on trial on charges of air piracy and murder.

Zimmermann, of Cascade, Idaho, said Hamadi proudly pointed to Stethem's blood on the jet's fuselage as he and Hamadi walked around the plane when it landed in Algiers from Beirut.

"When we went around the front, the nose of the airplane, Mr. Hamadi joyfully pointed to the blood running down the door. And with the pistol he pointed — he indicated — he was very proud of this gun and of him having caused this," Zimmermann testified.

"He seemed to be demonstrating that he was capable of being a worthy soldier of the cause for some revolution," Zimmermann added.

Zimmermann did not describe the cause. However, Hamadi testified earlier in the trial his cause was "the fight against Israel and its allies," including the United States. The hijackers had demanded the release of Shiite Moslems held by Israel.

Freed hostage reunited with wife in Damascus

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Freed West German hostage Rudolf Cordes was reunited with his wife Marlene today after she flew from Bonn with senior government officials to take him home. Cordes said he felt "born again."

Hugging his tearful wife tightly, Cordes was escorted by Syrian security officers to the Foreign Ministry in Damascus at 5 p.m. and turned over to West German government envoys by Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa.

"I'm rejoicing for being a free man again. I feel I'm born again," Cordes said. "It is as if I have been granted a new life. I am feeling perfect, and I'm in a very good shape."

Earlier, Cordes and his wife had an emotional reunion at the government guest house where he spent the night after his release.

"She fell into his arms and they kissed each other for a long time," an official who witnessed the reunion told The Associated Press.

He said Mrs. Cordes turned to Syrian army officers who escorted her from the airport to the guest house and said: "Thank you. Thank you so much."

Cordes, 55, was released late Monday in Beirut by pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem extremists who kidnapped him in January 1987. He was driven to Damascus by Brig. Ali Hammoud, Syria's military intelligence chief in Beirut.

Cordes was the last West German hostage in Lebanon.

Cordes' captors said his release was linked to a Lebanese Shiite on trial in West Germany for the 1985 hijacking of the TWA jet and the shooting death of U.S. Navy diver Robert Stethem.

In a note issued in Beirut, they said if Mohammed Ali Hamadi's release cannot be gained legally, "then we shall be obliged to again resort to violence."

Cordes and his wife were expected to drive from the Foreign Ministry to the airport to take off in the Canadian-built twin-engined jet for the five-hour flight to a military airbase near Bonn.

Seventeen other foreigners, including nine Americans, are still missing in Lebanon and it is believed most are held by pro-Iranian Shiite kidnappers.

Lebanese minister released after army threat

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Christian militiamen kidnapped Defense Minister Adel Osseiran on Beirut's dividing Green Line today, but freed him after the army threatened to move against them, police said.

Osseiran, a Shiite Moslem, was released in Christian east Beirut this afternoon and was on his way to the western Moslem sector of the capital, a police spokesman said. The spokesman cannot be named under standing regulation.

The warning by army commander Gen. Michel Aoun, a Christian, came an hour after gunmen of the Lebanese Forces, the Christians' main militia, seized Osseiran, 83, near Beirut's dividing Green Line and took him to their seaside headquarters, police reported.

The Lebanese Forces command denied it was holding Osseiran. It said in a statement that the militia's security apparatus has been "put on alert with orders to search every corner of east Beirut for Osseiran."

But the police spokesman said the militia command had initially offered to swap Osseiran for Christian parliament member Farid Serhal, who it said had been kidnapped in west Beirut Thursday.

The Lebanese Forces are the Christians' main militia.

The police spokesman said Aoun has long been at odds with the Lebanese Forces over their growing dominance of a "state within the state" in east Beirut and the Christian heartland north of the capital that has eroded the authority of Lebanon's divided government.

"The general simply cannot tolerate the abduction of his own chief, the defense minister, in an area that is supposed to be under direct army control," the spokesman said.

The Lebanese Forces have claimed that Serhal, a Maronite Catholic, was kidnapped by pro-Syrian militiamen of Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt's Progressive Socialist Party at a checkpoint south of Beirut last Thursday as he was driving to Jezzine.

The Christians claimed he was was being kept at the Bristol Hotel in west Beirut "against his will."

The Bristol acknowledged that Serhal has been staying there "incommunicado" since Thursday.

Osseiran's kidnapping heightened tension between Christians and Moslems amid a political deadlock in efforts to elect a new president. The political wrangling has raised fears it could rekindle Lebanon's 13-year-old civil war.

Police said Osseiran's kidnappers made the demand for Serhal's return in a telephone call to the office of acting Prime Minister Salim Hoss, a Sunni Moslem, in west Beirut.

The spokesman said the Christian militiamen stopped Osseiran's black limousine at a Lebanese Forces checkpoint on the east side of the Green Line.

"Two militiamen entered the car and drove with the defense minister to the Lebanese Forces headquarters," the spokesman added.

Iran lets injured Iraqi POWS return to Iraq

GENEVA (AP) — Iran released 72 wounded or sick Iraqi prisoners of war who were flown home under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross, the organization reported.

In another development, the United Nations announced that the Iran and Iraq foreign ministers would resume direct talks today in the stalled peace negotiations.

The Red Cross said the repatriation of the 72 Iraqis Monday was "the result of a unilateral decision by the Iranian authorities and was not connected with the release" of all POWs as called for under the U.N. cease-fire resolution.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said Iran now has released 775 Iraqi war prisoners since the U.N.-sponsored cease-fire went into effect Aug. 20.

Red Cross figures show 613 Iranian prisoners have been repatriated.

The organization has registered 50,182 POWs in Iranian camps and 19,284 in Iraqi camps, but a U.N. report released last week estimated that Iran may be holding up to 70,000 war prisoners and Iraq about 35,000.

Iran and Iraq went to war in September 1980.

U.N. spokeswoman Therese Gastaut said formal talks between the Iraqi and Iranian foreign ministers will be reconvened this afternoon. They were adjourned Saturday.

She said U.N. mediator Jan Eliasson spent Monday preparing for the resumption of ministerial talks — the third round since Aug. 25.

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar presided over the first week of negotiations and then appointed Eliasson as his personal representative.

If there's one thing we regret, it's that we didn't learn to play bridge much earlier than we did. The senior member of your writing team learned while he was at McGill University in Montreal; the junior member while waiting for his scenes to be shot on movie lots. When we see how some teenagers perform today, we are filled with awe. Two of the brightest prospects on the American scene are Doug Hsieh of New York and Richie Pavlicek of Fort Lauderdale. This hand was played at the recent Summer North American Championships, held in Salt Lake City.

South's jump to four spades was, to put it mildly, aggressive. Even a trial bid of three clubs would have been a distinct stretch. He paid dearly for his folly.

Doug, West, led the nine of hearts. Since he had raised his partner's suit, that showed specifically a three-card holding. Rich won the king and found the excellent shift to the jack of clubs. Declarer's queen lost to the king, and the club return allowed East to win two more tricks in the suit as West sluffed a heart.

After cashing the ace of hearts, East led a third round. Declarer guessed wrong when he ruffed with the nine. West overruffed with the ten and still had to score the king of trumps for down four!

The best East-West could do at a heart contract was eight tricks, or nine if the defense erred grievously. Thus, the 200 earned for beating the contract four tricks was a clear top for the teen-age stars. We wish some of our partners could defend that well today!

'Ballad of Green Berets' composer critically injured in robbery attempt

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Author Barry Sadler, who composed the "Ballad of the Green Berets," was listed in critical condition at a veterans hospital today after being shot in the head in Guatemala.

Sadler, who has written 20 adventure books, was flown to the Veterans Administration Medical Center here Monday so he could get proper medical care, said his literary agent, Bob Robison.

He had been hospitalized in Guatemala City after being shot Thursday during an apparent robbery attempt, Robison said.

Sadler has been unconscious since the shooting, Robison said. Hospital officials said today his vital signs were stable.

"From what we know, it was an attempted robbery. He was on his way home in a cab," Robison said.

"He's been living there. He writes down there and lives there temporarily, on a ranch outside of Guatemala," Robison said. "Barry's always traveled. He sort of lived all over the world the last 10 years."

Sadler sometimes stayed in Nashville, according to Robison, who said the author was about 46.

Sadler was a Green Beret when he wrote the "Ballad of the Green Berets," a hit he recorded in 1966 that sold 9 million singles and albums.

He is also known for a series of books on soldiers and mercenaries that draw from his experience serving in the Vietnam War.

"Seppuku" is the title of the most recent book, Robison said.

GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) — Comedian Pat Paulsen, saying his wife of less than two months bilked him, has sued to end the marriage and business relationship with the former Linda D. Chaney.

Paulsen

In a lawsuit filed in Jefferson County District Court, Paulsen, 61, said he filed for divorce from Chaney, 35, in Denver District Court Aug. 31.

The suit contends that Chaney altered her written contract with Paulsen, refused to give him an accounting of finances and bookings, and diverted at least $200,000 from the Lakewood-based Pat Paulsen Enterprises to her private accounts.

The damage suit was filed Friday, the same day the couple had planned to celebrate their marriage with a reception at the Aviation Club in Lakewood. The reception never took place.

Denver District Court officials confirmed Monday that the divorce petition was filed, but said it had been sealed by a judge's order.

Paulsen, now staging his third tongue-in-check campaign for the U.S. presidency, wed Chaney secretly July 20 in Atlanta, where they were attending the Democratic National Convention.

The couple met about five years ago at a Denver comedy club. Chaney has served as Paulsen's personal manager and booking agent for four years. Paulsen said he has obtained a restraining order to prohibit further use of his name by Pat Paulsen Enterprises.

Paulsen contends in his suit that Chaney met secretly with reporters from the National Enquirer "to inspire a story harmful to Paulsen and his former wife in order to advance Chaney's wish to marry Paulsen."

The suit also contends she faked illness to elicit Paulsen's sympathy and deter him from obtaining an accounting of his business affairs.

LONDON (AP) — Pop singer Michael Jackson wrapped up his 43-date European tour with expressions of concern about the thousands of fans injured at his Liverpool concert.

"I'm very sad about it," the 30-year-old rock star said in a husky whisper Monday as he rushed through London's Heathrow Airport to catch a supersonic Concorde flight to New York.

An estimated 3,400 fans were treated for minor injuries during Jackson's open-air concert at Aintree horse racing course in Liverpool on Sunday night, officials said. Organizers said 125,000 people attended the concert, the largest audience ever for a European pop show.

Four of the 40 people taken to Liverpool's Walton Hospital were held but none was in serious condition, police said.

LONDON (AP) — Ex-Beatles drummer Ringo Starr halted the auction of a 1965 bass drum bearing the famous British rock group's logo because of a wrangle over its ownership.

The drum was expected to fetch $50,000 in a rock'n'roll memorabilia sale at Sotheby's auction house Monday.

The auction catalog said the drum was given to George Peckham, who worked in the group's Apple Recording studios.

A spokesman for Starr's lawyers, Frere Cholmeley, said Starr won a court order Friday preventing Peckham or Sotheby's from selling the drum. Auctioneer Hilary Kay said she learned of the court order just minutes before the auction began.

Cholmeley said Starr would agree to the sale going ahead only if the proceeds went to a children's hospital in London.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Amy Irving, who stars in the film "Crossing Delancey," says she gets no kick from the camera and that it's the stage that truly satisfies.

Irving

"I started acting when I was very young and I never gave a thought to films or television. It wasn't part of my dream," she said in a recent interview.

"I don't really feel that film has tapped my potential," said the star of such movies as "Honeysuckle Rose," "Voices," "The Competition" and "The Fury."

"I kind of got swept up in it (making films)," Miss Irving said. "After the fifth film I did, 'The Competition,' I said to myself, 'Something is not being fulfilled here and I went off to think about it all.' And the next move I made was to do 'Amadeus' on Broadway. And suddenly I went, 'Ahh, that's what's been missing.'

"I felt more gratification on stage than in front of a camera," said the actress, wife of moviemaker Steven Spielberg.

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Former Mayor Mike Roark, who resigned last year after pleading guilty to federal drug possession charges, soon will be offering his conservative opinions to radio listeners.

Roark, a Republican, will go on the air once or twice a month on West Virginia Public Radio to comment on current events, said station spokeswoman Beth Vorhees. His first segment will run in the next few weeks, she said.

West Virginia Public Radio has about 12 commentators who receive $5 for offering their two cents, she said.

"This is not a full-time, hired position," Vorhees said Monday.

Time to get tough on poison gas war

How much does the world care that poison gas is being used against civilians? There can be no doubt that the Iraqi government has been gassing Kurdish people in the northern part of that country, but where is the world's vocal outrage?

Oh yes, diplomatic objections have been sounded by some civilized powers, deploring the uses of chemicals to kill people. And Iraq responds predictably, denying the atrocities and decrying intrusions by critical countries into its sovereign affairs.

But we need to hear more than polite diplomacy. We need to hear the thunder crack of condemnation from the powerful centers of the world. We need to see the president of the United States on television, leveling a finger of blame, saying to the dictator of Iraq, Saddam Hussein, that you'd better stop this business right now. Comparable expressions from Margaret Thatcher, Helmut Kohl, Francois Mitterrand and other world leaders are in order

The United States may be starting to lead the way toward such a response. Last week the government issued a statement condemning the use of chemical weapons by Iraq. The State Department spokesman called it "abhorrent." But previously, some observers sensed a hesitation out of fear that a U.S. crackdown on this issue might harm the Iran-Iraq peace talks and Washington-Baghdad relations. And last week a State Department official told Reuters that the issue "will have an effect on relations and it probably will not be good."

But what kind of relations do we want with a country that uses poison gas against civilians? The British Broadcasting Corp. especially has brought the story to us, first-hand from survivors now flooding from Iraq into Turkey, of how villages were gassed. The Kurdish minority in Iraq, in its long fight for autonomy, never would flee its homeland like this except under a threat of annihilation. If the world has to sacrifice a little and start boycotting Iraqi oil, so be it. For if the use of gas becomes a growing habit, this world is in for big — and deadly — trouble.

LETTERS

Reasons for response

I am writing this letter in response to one which appeared in your Sunday, Aug. 28, edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, submitted by a Robert V. Shipley.

In his letter Shipley complained about some local Christians who supposedly put undue pressure on local theater owners with the intention of halting any screening of the movie "The Last Temptation of Christ." He talks about freedom of choice, constitutional rights, freedom of speech, and his own sacrifice in the armed forces in order to insure these rights. And we have heard much about these things from those who would show this movie and those who would support them. But I would submit that these are really not the issue that is involved.

After looking deep into my soul — and closely observing the reasons why a Christian would react in such a radical manner, I would offer to Shipley and any others who would show this movie and those who would ask this one reason. We who feel strongly, and yes, emotionally moved to extreme measures in this case, are so moved because we know the one who is the subject of this film personally, and we know it to be a horrible misrepresentation of Him and an underhanded attack on His character. A Christian is none other than one who personally knows and daily fellowships with Jesus Christ. And knowing Him as I do I know this to be a totally false picture of Him. This is something deeper than a "religious issue" for me; it is very, very personal, and because so much is involved, I, like so many other Christians, am forced into extreme measures.

I would just say that if Shipley or the man who wrote the book, or the ones who made the film really knew my Lord and Savior, my Friend, and Creator then they too would feel as I do. I am not one of those who spoke with the theater owners, but I stand with them.

More on 'dogfight'

As Ms. B.D. Bradley (letters, Aug. 26th) looks forward to her dogfight, she might notice a "Chihuahua" on the other side. On the TOP of the ticket — and the runt of the litter. Head — experience — and stature (including all the original aspirants seeking the nomination from both parties).

Maybe there will be a high-chair available for "Sonny" when he debates Bush and a mirror to pass before the mouth of the "Texas turncoat" to assure breath is still there for the vice presidential debate.

It could be interesting to see how the old "(trained) Doberman Pinscher" fares back and forth over the fence — trying to support his views and voting record on one side over to trying to support the "head" of the ticket on the other side.

Where was Bush?

Many world leaders are saying George Bush is a weak sister on foreign affairs and should not be president of the United States after picking Dan Quayle as his running mate.

I believe the American voters should check out where they got their information and from whom. Or is it asking too much? Could be they may know on the guns-for-money swap with Iran in 1986. George wasn't at the Army-Navy football game after all.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Sept. 13, the 257th day of 1988. There are 109 days left in the year. The two-day observance of the Jewish New Year Rosh Hashanah concludes at sunset.

Today's highlight in history:

Two hundred years ago, on Sept. 13, 1788, the U.S. Constitutional Convention authorized the first national election, and declared New York City the temporary national capital.

On this date:

In 1759, during the final French and Indian War, the British defeated the French on the Plains of Abraham overlooking Quebec City.

In 1803, Commodore John Barry, considered by many the father of the American navy, died in Philadelphia.

In 1851, American medical pioneer Walter Reed was born in Gloucester County, Va.

In 1857, Milton S. Hershey, founder of the candy empire that bears his name, was born in Dauphin County, Pa.

In 1922, the highest temperature in the shade on the Earth's surface was recorded in El Azizia, Libya, which reached 136.4 degrees Fahrenheit.

In 1943, Chiang Kai-shek became president of China.

In 1948, Republican Margaret Chase Smith of Maine was elected to the U.S. Senate, becoming the first woman to serve in both houses of Congress.

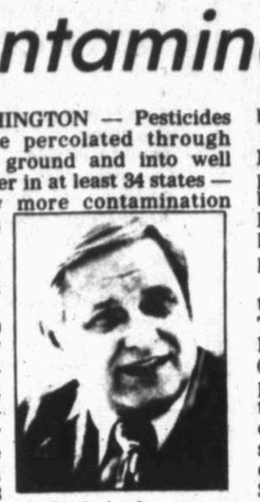

In 1971, a four-day inmates' rebellion at Attica Prison in New York ended as police stormed the facility. The siege and final assault claimed the lives of 32 prisoners and 11 prison workers.

In 1977, Leopold Stokowski, one of the best-known symphonic conductors of all time, died in Hampshire, England, at the age of 95.

Contaminated wells more prevalent

WASHINGTON — Pesticides have percolated through the ground and into well water in at least 34 states — significantly more contamination than was previously reported by the federal government.

Jack Anderson

About 90 percent of rural Americans get their drinking water from the ground. An estimated 13 million wells serve 117 million people nationwide.

The Environmental Protection Agency gathered test data from 45,000 wells and found that 5,500 of them were tainted with harmful levels of at least one pesticide. Another 5,500 wells had traces of 73 different pesticides in amounts that would not be harmful.

The EPA had that information last February, but it issued a written report saying only 19 pesticides had been found in wells in 24 states. However, EPA officials verbally acknowledged that between 50 and 60 pesticides were found in 30 states.

Environmental groups demanded to see the data earlier this summer. The Washington headquarters of Public Interest Research Group (PIRG) assembled the data in a report that is scheduled to be released today. PIRG came up with 73 different pesticides found in wells in 34 states, according to an advance copy of its report given to our associate, Stewart Harris.

An EPA spokesman told us the agency report in February used lower figures because it counted only the cases that had been "confirmed" by the federal government. "We are not trying to hide that issue at all. We are trying to highlight it," the spokesman said. The EPA has promised to release its own updated numbers in October based on continued work to double-check the information. A groundwater contamination survey based on the EPA's own test data will not be completed until 1990.

While the EPA's written data may be conservative, the report from PIRG may lean a little too far in the other direction. Some of the test information is not holding up to scientific scrutiny by the EPA, according to agency scientist, Patrick Holden. Even taking that into consideration, Holden said the final figures, to be released Oct. 1, will exceed the 19 pesticides in 24 states cited in the EPA's February report.

October will be too late to affect congressional debate over the issue. Concern over pesticides contamination of groundwater reached Capitol Hill last spring during debate over the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act. At that time Sen. Dave Durenberger, R-Minn., and Rep. Jim Oberstar, D-Minn., introduced tough proposals to control groundwater pollution. But the chances are slim that the bills will pass before Congress recesses in October.

Durenberger's provision has made it through committee and is waiting for consideration by the full Senate. Oberstar's bill remains bottled up in a House committee with little chance of making it to the floor before the recess.

The data from PIRG does not mean that one out of every four wells in the country is contaminated with a pesticide. The data comes from 101 studies by state officials, chemical companies and research institutions, and they were focusing on problem areas. Nevertheless, the data indicates groundwater contamination is more widespread than previously thought.

Among other things PIRG reported:

■ Of the 73 pesticides, at least 25 can cause cancer, 18 can cause birth defects and 14 can cause genetic damage.

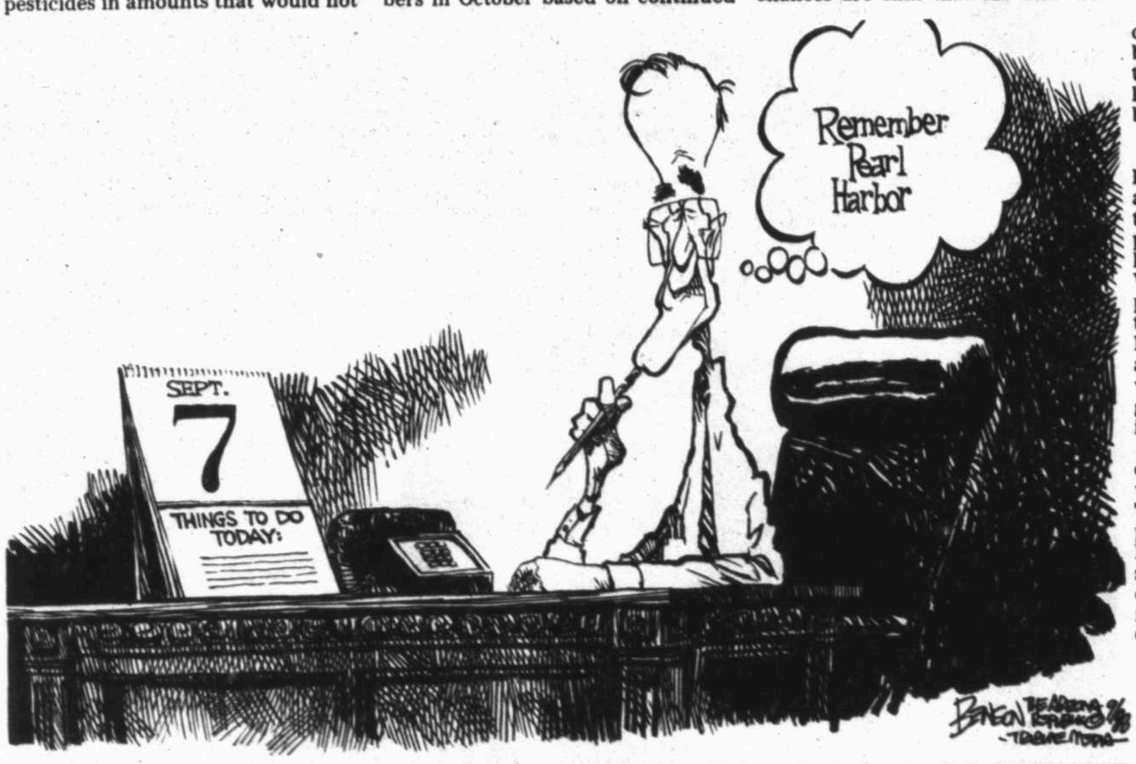

■ California, with 31 different pesticides found in tested wells, led the other states.

■ Aldicarb, a chemical that can cause vomiting, stomach pain and blurred vision, was found in concentrations as high as 200 parts per billion in Wisconsin and 575 parts per billion on Long Island, N.Y.

NEXT MAJORITY LEADER — As long as Michael Dukakis was far ahead in the polls, Democratic senators weren't too concerned about picking a strong Senate majority leader to succeed Robert Byrd of West Virginia. They reasoned that as president, Dukakis might work better with a malleable majority leader. More cynically, individual senators always have more power under a weak majority leader, as Byrd is regarded, than under an overwhelming one, as Lyndon Johnson was.

A victory for George Bush would change that. The Democrats would want a strong leader in the Senate. They may have been willing to support amiable senators such as Daniel Inouye, of Hawaii, or Bennett Johnston, of Louisiana, as long as a Democrat was in the White House. But now many are looking to Sen. George Mitchell of Maine. He is like-

Duke leaves Jerseyites worried about '88

UNION, N.J. — Alan Hantman, a West Caldwell, N.J., travelling shoe salesman, reacted to Michael Dukakis' performance here with the same frustration shown by Democratic politicians worried that their first chance to win New Jersey in a presidential election since 1964 may be slipping away.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

Hantman, no politician, was so excited about Dukakis that he took time off from work to come to Kean College to hear the Democratic nominee. "He puts people to sleep," the disappointed salesman told us after listening to Dukakis unveil his new scheme for guaranteed student loans. He confessed he didn't understand the complicated proposal and doubted many others in the partisan audience did either.

Democratic activists on hand, less willing to talk on the record, agreed. Hoping Dukakis would generate excitement after his dolorous August, they felt the setting and substance of his performance could be summed up in one word: dull.

What makes this so frustrating is the opportunity and necessity this state offers the Democrats. If the South (including Texas) stays Republican, Dukakis surely must corner New Jersey's 16 electoral votes to break the claimed Republican "lock" on the Electoral College. What's more, coming out of the Atlanta convention, he not only had the best chance in a generation to put the state in the Democratic column but was clearly ahead.

The August slide here reflects his nationwide difficulty transforming himself from intraparty to interparty combat. "Dukakis went invisible," a Democratic insider told us. Targeted voter registration pushed by Hudson County Executive Robert Januszewski, an early Dukakis backer, and other political leaders went by the boards. A new state campaign team, totally different from his preconvention operation, started from scratch.

As a result of this pause, coupled with George Bush's new effervescence, the consensus among Democratic insiders here is that Dukakis has fallen slightly behind in New Jersey and could be losing even more ground. Thus, his visit last week — one of many by the presidential candidates to a state neglected in the past — was viewed as an opportunity. But it encountered strategic and tactical problems with broad implications for the national campaign.

Although Dukakis would seem better suited than Bush to a state filled with descendants of immigrants, he confronts a problem in the metamorphosis of New Jersey's image, from impoverished inner city Newark to the affluent Giants Stadium complex. No complaint of economic decline rings true here.

One answer from the state's Democratic politicians — identify more closely with New Jersey's urban ethnics — has been rejected so far. The Hudson County Democratic organization, a rare big city machine, could turn out Italo-Americans or Hispanics for a neighborhood rally.

But the candidate's high command in Boston did not want that. In fact, just where he would go for last week's event was subject to considerable indecision. One party functionary complained he received telephone calls from four separate Dukakis operatives, unknown to him, making arrangements for last week's visit.

On a brilliant autumn afternoon, Dukakis wound up in an indoor auditorium at Kean College (named for a philanthropic great-uncle of Republican Gov. Thomas Kean). He addressed an audience of supporters, with anti-abortion picketeers carefully kept outside. To call the setting austere would be an understatement: no bunting, no balloons, a bare curtain.

The theme was agreed on by New Jersey and Boston operatives: "class warfare" (to use their phrase). Contending Bush and "his administration" have been "denying middle income families the hope for a future of prosperity and success for their children," Dukakis called for a new program of guaranteed student loans. The political premise of this is contained in the campaign's fact sheet accompanying the speech: "Despite Republican claims of prosperity, the economic well-being of working Americans stagnated during the 1980s..."

But the pie was taken out of the oven before it had baked. Dukakis aides admitted details had not been filled in, and the result was confusion. "You think this speech was dry and substantive?" asked a major Democratic political figure. "It sure was. That's all right for running for governor of Massachusetts, but not for president."

The question is not whether the loan program is workable but whether it is politically marketable. The judgment here was that Dukakis was going in the right direction but not in the right way. He botched it, falling short at the very moment his Jerseyite supporters badly needed a lift, with eight weeks left to set things straight here and across the land.

CHARLEY REESE

Simplistic thinking won't solve world's woes

Unfortunately, foreign policy issues in America are generally debated publicly in simplistic fashion, as if we had the marvelous choice of pure good guys or pure bad guys.

Charley Reese

Since we lack such easy, simplistic solutions to our domestic problems and since there are rarely clear-cut good-guy-/bad-guy choices in our political process, I wonder why Americans think foreigners are so different.

South Africa is an easy example. End apartheid and we can stop thinking about it, is the attitude of most Americans. Of course the poor South Africans, both black and white, having already decided that apartheid is going the way of the dodo bird, are struggling painfully with other problems — such as how to avoid a tribal civil war, how to construct a democratic government in a country with disparate populations, and how to build an economy that can sustain a population that has more than doubled in the last 20 years.

In the meantime, simplistic Americans hop-skotch around the globe in their minds, self-righteously convinced of simple solutions. The Philippines? Oh, just get rid of Marcos. El Salvador? Oh, just have an election. Japan? Oh, you guys just buy more American products. Israel? Oh, just give the Palestinians the West Bank and Gaza.

Despite the dismal wreakage such simplistic thinking has put in our postwar wake, it appears that some of us are immune to learning.

Recently in a conversation with an incumbent congressman who has consistently opposed aid to the contras, I was appalled to hear him say that he would approve of U.S. intervention, including a naval blockade, to keep the Soviets from establishing a military base in Nicaragua.

What's wrong with that? Well, here's what's wrong with it. He's willing to risk World War III by putting U.S. warships in the path of Soviet warships to prevent something that could be prevented, without risk of a superpower confrontation, by helping Nicaraguans overthrow the Sandinistas. If ever a man gave, inadvertently, a good argument for covert action, this guy did.

I don't want the Soviets in Nicaragua either but I'm not at all sure I want to fight World War III to keep them out. That's the risk when you impose a naval blockade against Soviet ships. A blockade, remember, is an act of war.

Of course, I think the guy was just rationalizing not funding the contras. He's accepted a Soviet military presence in Cuba and I suspect when they move into Nicaragua in force, he will find an excuse to keep on doing nothing no matter what he says during a campaign.

Somehow, though, we must find a way to deal with foreign affairs more intelligently so that Americans won't be buffeted by communist propaganda, partisan hotair, and isolationist hogwash.

We can't roll up the country at the seashore. We can't expect the luxury of finding a re-incarnated Tom Jefferson to replace every dictator with bad table manners. While we can't be the world's policeman, we can't be the world's hermit either. While we have to recognize we have limited influence and no control over the internal affairs of foreign countries, we must also resist the urge to disengage entirely.

A better education is one obvious answer. In my hired gun days as a professional campaign staffer, I was appalled to learn that a congressional candidate — a college graduate and TV newsman — thought Vietnam was located somewhere off the coast of South America. It is, in one sense, if 12,000 miles is considered off the coast, but I think that's carrying the concept of a shrinking world a bit far.

Fate has put our country in a position of world leadership whether we like it or not. If we are to meet our responsibilities and therefore survive, then we must abandon simplistic, ethnocentric thinking and give up our cherished ignorance of the rest of the world and its people.

Hoodlums burn down Catholic chapel in Haiti

Aristide

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Hoodlums burned down a Roman Catholic chapel in a slum overnight after six self-proclaimed killers boasted on government television that they participated in Sunday's massacre at another church.

The Chapel of Immaculate Conception in the sprawling Cite Soleil slum burst into flames at 11 p.m. Monday and burned to the ground. Reporters who rushed to the scene were chased away by the arsonists, Radio-Soleil reported.

One of the men who appeared on television was recognized by a Radio Metropole reporter at the scene of chapel fire. Empty gasoline cans littered the area around the chapel.

The chapel is served by the Rev. Arthur Volel, a Salesian priest known in Haiti for his work with the poor. The Salesian Fathers specialize in vocational training.

A Salesian vocational school was partially damaged Sunday when St. Jean Bosco, the church of the Rev. Jean-Bertrand Aristide, another Salesian priest, was attacked by thugs armed with handguns, sharpened steel pikes and machetes. The assailants shot, stabbed and slashed at parishioners and then burned down the church and several vehicles parked outside.

Radio Haiti-Inter reported today the casualty toll from Sunday's massacre had reached six dead and 77 wounded.

"The government has committed a genocide on an unarmed people. It is for the international community to put a stop to it," Christian Democratic leader Sylvio Claude declared on Radio Metropole this morning.

Five men and a woman spoke on Radio Metropole and Tele-Haiti Monday afternoon before appearing on Television Nationale, the government network, and declared they had participated in Sunday's massacre at Aristide's church.

The six made no attempt to hide their identity and spoke on the government-controlled network without apparent fear of reprisal.

They claimed the violence was related to an internal conflict within the church and threatened "a heap of corpses" at future Masses.

"We were after Father Aristide; what you saw yesterday (Sunday) was child's play. In whatever parish Father Aristide is accepted, a heap of corpses will attend that Mass," a spokesman for the group said on the Radio Metropole broadcast.

Aristide, one of the most popular figures among the poor masses in this Caribbean nation, regularly has preached against army atrocities and has led his supporters in street demonstrations.

The priest has been the target of several assassination attempts.

During the 9 a.m. Mass on Sunday about 300 people stoned Rev. Jean-Bertrand Aristide's St. Jean Bosco church in the La Saline slum. Then two dozen men with guns and machetes burst into the church began killing people. Soldiers watched from across the street and did nothing, witnesses said.

Blacks seek haven at U.S. consulate

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Three of the most prominent anti-apartheid activists detained under state-of-emergency regulations escaped from a hospital and took refuge today in the U.S. consulate, police said.

The three have requested a meeting with U.S. Ambassdor Edward Perkins.

Two of the three are senior officials of the banned United Democratic Front, publicity secretary Murphy Morobe, a black, and acting general secretary Mohammed Valli Moosa, an Indian. The other is Vusi Khanyile, a black who was chairman of the banned National Education Crisis Committee.

Krish Naidoo, who has represented the front in the past, announced at a press conference that the three had taken refuge at the U.S. consulate, on the 11th floor of an office building in downtown Johannesburg.

Brig. Leon Mellet, a spokesman for the Law and Order Ministry, later confirmed the incident and said the men had escaped from a Johannesburg hospital, which he did not identify.

A friend of Valli Moosa's said she had visted him Monday at Johannesburg General Hospital.

Previously, the three activists had been at Johannesburg's Diepkloof Prison.

Nations support probe of chemical weapons' use

BEIJING (AP) — U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Vernon A. Walters today called for an U.N. investigation of Iraq's alleged use of chemical weapons against ethnic Kurds.

In London, the British Foreign Office joined the U.S. call, asking the United Nations to send a team to Iraq to look into allegations that gas was used against the Kurds, most of whom live in northern Iran and Iraq and eastern Turkey.

Herbert S. Okun, the second-ranking diplomat at the U.S. Mission to the United Nations, met Monday with Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar to make the request, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Mission said today in New York.

Okun acted on behalf of the United States, Britain, Japan and West Germany, said the spokeswoman, who requested anonymity.

Walters said the United States "is extremely concerned about chemical warfare" and backed a recent unanimous resolution by the U.N. Security Council condemning its use.

"We now have a case before us in the use of chemical warfare by the Iraqis against the Kurds and I believe that we will have to...ask the (U.N.) secretary-general to investigate this as he investigated the previous allegations" against Iraq.

"The United States is determined that the use of chemical warfare will not become an accepted part of regional conflicts. It is a danger in its own way as great as nuclear warfare and we intend to stop the proliferation of chemical warfare."

WORLD in brief

Heavy fighting in Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Government troops and leftist guerrillas clashed today in heavy fighting at two northern guerrilla strongholds, and more than 80 rebels were killed or wounded, a military spokesman said.

Col. Galileo Torres, head of the armed forces press office, said in a telephone interview that government forces inflicted 50 casualties on guerrillas in northern Morazan province.

He said the other casualties occurred around Gigante Hill outside Perquin, 125 miles northeast of San Salvador.

Torres said Col. Emilio Ponce, commander of the eastern military zone, told him at mid-morning there was still no breakdown between guerrilla dead and wounded, and that he did not know how many bodies had been recovered.

There was no way to immediately confirm the official casualty figures.

Soviets take gripes to top

MOSCOW (AP) — For the second day in a row, Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev faced complaints today from Siberians angry about housing, food shortages and medical care.

After Gorbachev told workers at a synthetic fiber factory that the ruling Politburo he heads was asked to turn special attention to a shortage of kindergartens, a voice rang out:

"We have kindergartens. We don't have housing, and the medical facilities are bad," the Tass news agency quoted one worker as shouting to Gorbachev at the Khimvolokno plant in the Siberian city of Krasnoyarsk.

Monday, Gorbachev heard similar complaints when he stopped in a tiny village, Yemelyanovo, on his way to Kransoyarsk from the airport to which he had flown from Moscow.

"We have no hot water. You do what you can to wash," one man shouted at the 57-year-old Communist Party chief.

Usually, Soviet citizens politely praise Gorbachev and his policies or ask mild questions when he stops for chats as he tours the vast country.

Ferry crew saved; Beer lost

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — A freighter carrying a cargo of beer sank in the North Sea today off the Dutch coast and all nine crew members were rescued from life rafts, a coast guard spokesman said.

The ship sank at about 12:45 p.m. in high winds, some 28 nautical miles north of the island of Ameland.

It was not immediately clear what had caused the sinking, according to the coast guard spokesman, who was not identified. There were no casualties, he said.

The coast guard official, who spoke in a Dutch radio interview, identified the ship involved as the Finnish-registered freighter Ra and said it had been carrying a cargo of beer. He did not give the ship's origin or destination.

Area retail sales increase

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Retail sales in Midland and Odessa for the first quarter of 1988 showed significant increases over the first quarter of 1987, according to figures released by State Comptroller Bob Bullock's office.

The quarterly sales and use tax analysis report shows Odessa's total retail sales rose 15.8 percent through the first three months of this year compared to the same period in 1987. Midland's total retail sales increased 9.6 percent during the same period.

Midland economist Jim Williams attributes the "stronger increase" in Odessa to the area's sensitivity to fluctuations in the price of crude oil, which directly impacts on manufacturing and exploration activity.

Early in 1987, said Williams, who owns and operates Texas Business Forecasts, "Both Midland and Odessa were still suffering from the effect of lower oil prices in 1986."

Higher oil prices through the first quarter of 1988 are naturally reflected in higher retail sales because people have more money to spend, he said.

In the 10 retail trade categories listed by the comptroller's office, Odessa showed strong to very strong increases in all areas, while Midland recorded moderate to very strong increases in seven of the 10 categories.

Midland saw a decrease of 12.3 percent in general merchandise sales in the first quarter of 1988 compared to the same period in 1987. In the same period, Odessa had an increase of 11 percent.

Odessa's drug store sales during this period rose 10.4 percent, while Midland recorded a decline of 21.7 percent.

Liquor store sales in Midland dropped 4.7 percent in the first quarter of 1988 compared to 1987. Odessa liquor store sales saw an increase of 15.8 percent.

However, while Midland saw decreases in three retail sales categories from last year, the Tall City recorded higher increases in five of the 10 categories than Odessa.

Midland's building material sales were up 20.4 percent in the first quarter of this year compared to the same period in 1987, while Odessa recorded a rise of only 16 percent. Midland restaurant sales during this period were up 12.6 percent compared to Odessa's increase of only 10.6 percent.

In the miscellaneous retail sales area, Midland showed a first quarter 1988 gain of 21.1 percent compared to the same period a year earlier. Odessa retail sales rose 15.8 percent during the same period.

Midland food store sales in this period were up 10.6 percent compared to Odessa's 7.1 percent increase. Clothing store sales in Midland in this period were up 9.0 percent compared to Odessa's 5.7 percent.

Odessa recorded its greatest increase in retail sales in the automotive parts and accessories category with a 1988 first quarter increase of 29 percent compared to the same period in 1987. Midland's parts and accessories sales during this period were 19.4 percent.

In the area of home furnishing, Odessa showed an increase of 18.6 percent compared to Midland's 5.4 percent in first quarter 1988 compared to 1987.

The actual dollar value of total retail trade in Odessa through the first quarter of 1987 was $211,235,019 — 15.8 percent lower than the $244,585,330 recorded at the end of first quarter 1988.

The 1987 first quarter retail sales dollar volume for Midland was $172,005,835 — 9.6 percent lower than that of first quarter 1988 at $188,546,962.

Mining (oil and gas) sales totals for Midland showed a steep decrease in first quarter 1988 from the same period in 1987. These sales dropped from more than $35.4 million to slightly more than $12.3 million, a decrease of 65.2 percent.

In Odessa, sales in the same category rose significantly during the same period, from more than $15.3 million in first quarter 1987 to nearly 21.2 percent in 1988, an increase of 38 percent.

The dollar value of construction sales in Odessa was ahead of Midland, comparing first quarters of 1987 and 1988, although Midland's percentage increase was far greater. Odessa rose 5.8 percent, from more than $19.4 million in 1987 to more than $20.5 million in the 1988 first quarter.

Midland showed more than $10.1 million in construction sales through first quarter 1987 and slightly more than $16.4 million through the end of the first three months of 1988.

Midland manufacturing sales in first quarter 1988 were up 13.8 percent over the same period a year ago, from nearly $29.6 million to slightly more than $33.6 million. Odessa's manufacturing sales during this same period rose only 9.8 percent, from nearly $77.4 million to almost $85 million.

Williams is not overly optimistic about what the economy will do in coming months.

"Given the current price of oil, optimism right now is rather difficult. But, as we've seen before, most of the fluctuations (in the price of crude oil) are of a relatively short term nature," he said.

The Midland economist believes that by November "we will see prices moving up into the $16-to-$18 a barrel range. If not by November," he says, "then by December or January."

Williams believes, however, that "for the foreseeable future," oil prices will not be stable on an annual basis. "We can expect to see fluctuations up and down of about d$2 per barrel, with the per barrel price centered around an average of about $16 a barrel," he stated.

Diabetes is not a disease to 13-year-old Buffy-Marie Knight. It is, instead, a fact of life that the active seventh-graders fits in between the myriad of hobbies in which she partakes.

Young diabetic says disease 'not that big a deal'

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Buffy-Marie Knight called diabetes' bluff six years ago. Today she eats cookies and fried shrimp with the best of them.

The diabetes is still there, but gone is her fear of batting heads with a chronic malady.

"I was scared to death," reflected the bubbly blonde girl now on the threshold of her teen years. "I didn't know what was going to happen."

But actually, not much did.

"She learned to do a one-handed cartwheel because she had an IV in her hand," remembered her mother, Jean Knight.

Bottling up Buffy-Marie's refusal for defeat is impossible.

Groups like the West Texas Juvenile Diabetes Foundation must finance finding a cure for the affliction that has struck 5 percent of the U.S. population.

On Sept. 24, Buffy-Marie, 12, will join others for the Second Annual JDF Walk to be held on the drive surrounding Midland College. Last year, the event raised $33,000, said Eric Thunam, JDF public relations chairman.

Though a member of the honorary walking team, Buffy-Marie will captain the "latrine team" at the JDF walk.

She explains she's aiding her big brother earn a "logistics" Boy Scout badge that day by manning the portable bathrooms.

When Buffy-Marie was 6 her parents took her and her brother for a walk at the duck pond down the street from their home to explain to both siblings what diabetes meant.

The dilemma had begun with a "massive" ear infection that lingered longer than normal, Mrs. Knight remembered.

Late that summer of 1982, Buffy-Marie was exhibiting the classic symptoms of the disease: thirstiness, frequent urination, unexplained weight loss and fatigue, her mother said.

"She looked like a Bangladesh victim," Mrs. Knight recalled. "I'm not scientific. I'm not into medicine...but I knew something was the matter."

For Buffy-Marie it was a time of uncertainty.

"I was just real skinny and didn't feel really good," she recalled.

After spending one week in a Dallas hospital shortly after her August 1982 diagnosis, Buffy-Marie accepted the disease and has put it in her back pocket.

She learned how to give herself the insulin shots when she was 7-years-old and wanted to go to a slumber party, Mrs. Knight said.

Life for Buffy-Marie has changed very little, the mother and daughter agreed. She sticks to a liberal diet that is comprised of exchanges of breads, fats, meats and the like.

But Buffy-Marie will forsake gladly a fat exchange and a bread exchange during the day for a cookie or her favorite fried shrimp.

"They were children before they were diabetics," Mrs. Bright explained. Luckily, lunches provide by the Midland Independent School District mirror the food exchanges Buffy-Marie requires so she can buy lunch like any other teen-ager.

Adds the child gleefully: "They even have low-fat milk!"

Diabetes "is just something I have and I have to live with," Buffy-Marie maintains. "It's not that big a deal. You just fit it into your schedule."

A chore indeed.

With the sun Buffy-Marie rises each day and gives herself the first of two insulin injections.

On any given day the San Jacinto Junior High School seventh-grader may partake in basketball team practice or study Spanish and her beloved favorite subject, science.

Prior to dinner, she gives herself another dose of insulin and ends a day that likely included First United Methodist Church choir practice, gymnastics lessons or thinking about dancing lessons later that night at the Midland Seventh Grade Junior Girls Cotillion.

"She has done exceptionally well," the mother said. "She does take care of herself...she gets up whistling in the morning."

Buffy-Marie would like to catapult her love for science into a medical career, perhaps as a doctor who treats diabetics, she said.

Grade denies girl chance to cheer

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

What's the difference between the girl running for cheerleader and the boy trying out for the football team who had the same grades in the spring semester of their 8th grade?

The girl may not be able to cheer if she failed a course, but the boy is a shoo-in regardless, according to the Lee Freshman High School student handbook.

Carlisa Carlson, 14, made a 65 in her 8th grade computer literacy class in the fourth six weeks grading period last year. Over the course of the next two six-week grading periods she raised the grade to a final average of 75.

Nonetheless, Carlisa, a LFHS student, was denied Monday a chance at that all-important teen-aged-girl's dream of becoming a cheerleader.

Why? A cheerleader candidate must have no grade lower than a 70 in her previous spring semester's (8th grade) grades, the rules state.

However, a 9th grade football player is eligible to play his sport for at least the first six weeks of the year regardless of his previous semester's grades, the handbook states.

LFHS Principal George Cooper explained today that cheerleading is not classified as an extracurricular activity. Sports and band are.

A student is eligible to participate in any extracurricular activity at LFHS for at least the first six weeks and until he or she receives a grade lower than 70, the handbook states. No mention is made of the previous semester's grades.

Cheerleading, like student council and class officers, however, is a "cocurricular" activity and subject to higher standards than those of the sports teams or band, Cooper explained.

Rules for cocurricular activities are drafted by members of the students involved in the specific activities, Cooper said.

But according to the now-defunct Midland Independent School District "24-hour" rule (that prohibited smoking, drinking or using drugs 24 hours a day) there was no distinction between "extra" and "co" curricular activities. All students participating in any outside activity fell under the same umbrella.

Furthermore, a cheerleader, once elected, is subject to extracurricular rules identical to that of a football player. If she makes a failing grade while cheerleader she is only suspended from participation for the ensuing six weeks, the cheerleader application states.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Carlisa Carlson hoped one day to be a cheerleader at Lee Freshman High School. But due to scholastic rules that don't apply to students in sports or the band, she may have to wait until she gets to senior high school.

"They're making it easier for students who excel in organizations that bring public recognition to the school," said Carlisa's mother, Diana Reynolds. "It just seems to me that the schools are so focused on athletics and the band."

Carlisa maintains that her computer literacy teacher promised to change the grade to a 70 last year if she completed some make-up work. She did, but the teacher never changed the grade, Carlisa explained.

The Goddard Junior High School computer literacy teacher, Bonnie Beadles, was in class and could not be reached for comment this morning.

"It made me mad and I was real upset," the 9th-grader recalled Monday. "I thought, 'If I don't make it, fine,' but I at least wanted to try."

The 65 had prevented her from playing in a University Interscholastic League violin competition and Carlisa was determined to raise it, she said.

Carlisa's 14-year-old friend, Leslie Forga, was also denied a chance to run for cheerleader Monday because of a problem with the signature on the application.

Last Tuesday on the first day of school, the girls got the applications to try out for cheerleader. The forms were due last Friday.

Last Wednesday and Thursday, the Forga family was out of town at a family funeral, explained Leslie's mother, Merlyn Forga.

Because her daughter didn't bring the application to the out-of-town funeral, Mrs. Forga gave Leslie permission to sign the mother's name on the application form when she returned to school on Friday, the mother said.

Leslie accidentally signed her mother's signature where the form asked "parents' name," but neglected to sign on another space on the third page of the application. Leslie was denied the chance to run for cheerleader, the mother said.

Sheriff's, constable's offices fees won't change

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midlanders will pay the same amount for services charged by the sheriff and constable's offices next year under a 1989 fee schedule, which County Commissioners approved Monday.

Commissioners voted unanimously for the 1989 fee package, which matches the present cost of producing such documents as subpoenas, court citations, orders of sale and summonses.

By law, commissioners must set fees for the constable and sheriff's offices by Oct. 1 of each year. The fees take effect Jan. 1, 1989.

Fees, fines, licenses and permits make up about 30 percent of the county's annual operating revenue. The county generates its remaining revenue from property and sales taxes.

Midlanders can expect to pay a $40 fee on subpoenas, summons, forceable detainers, small claims court citations, justice court citations and citations for other courts.

A $45 fee was set for writs of sequestration, writs of attachment, writs of restriction, writs of garnishment, writs of execution and orders of sale.

In other action, commissioners voted unanimously to allocate $10,000 to create a regional horticultural position that will serve Midland and Ector Counties through the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Also, Midland Police Chief Richard Czech presented commissioners with the 1989 Enhanced Emergency 911 budget, which city council members were expected to approve today.

The $164,523 annual spending plan compares to last year's budget of $95,000 for six months.

Czech said the Enhanced 911 Emergency phone system, which voters approved last November, costs telephone customers an average of 36 cents per phone each month.

Enhanced 911 is slated to go on line April 1, 1990. When a resident dials 911 their name, address and telephone number will automatically appear on a computer screen at the communications center.

The computerized telephone network is expected to reduce the amount of time it takes for authorities to respond to an emergency.

Ector Commissioners OK budget of nearly $24.7 million

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County Commissioners Monday approved a 1988 budget of nearly $24.7 million that will be funded in part by a two cent tax rate increase and set Nov. 8 as the date voters will decide how much money — if any — will be spent to renovate and expand the Ector County Coliseum Complex.

According to Tom Pace, County Fiscal Services Director, the nearly $24.7 million budget will provide more than $18.1 million for the general fund, slightly more than $4.3 million for the farm-to-market lateral road fund, and more than $2.2 million for debt service. General fund obligations will include about $1.8 million for the county-owned Medical Center Hospital.

As to the tax rate increase of two cents for $100 of accessed value, Pace said one cent of that was needed to adjust the effective tax rate to raise the same revenues as last year from a decreasing taxable property base. The additional one cent, he said, is needed simply to generate the revenue required to fund the county operations in the coming fiscal year.

The two cent increase will mean the "average" taxpayer with a $40,000 home claiming a homestead exemption this year will pay county taxes of nearly $132, compared to nearly $129 last year.

The $21.1 million bond proposal will provide funds to renovate the aging coliseum building, improve parking, utilities and drainage, renovate exhibition buildings, build an exhibition arena and stock pens, build a new auditorium and exhibition building and provide for landscaping, a sprinkler system, benches and lighting, according to County Engineer Don Bonifay.

Bonifay is chairman of the Coliseum Study Committee appointed earlier this year by commissioners.

In other action, Commissioners met in executive session to consider a letter from County Treasurer Susie Rippy Quinn concerning her intent to resign her elected position.

County Clerk Lucille Wolz said this morning commissioners did not actually accept Ms. Quinn's resignation, but did authorize County Judge Jan Fisher to begin accepting applications for the post. The application period will end Sept. 23.

Bonifay was also granted permission to begin seeking a replacement for Ed Gambell, superintendent of vehicle maintenance, who is retiring.

Cotton crop expected to drop

FORT WORTH (AP) — Forecasters say Texas cotton production will drop 7 percent due to one region's lingering dry heat and bumper insect crop and an early cool spell in another area.

However, the predicted 1988 harvest of 4.3 million bales should still be the fourth-largest Texas crop since 1978, the Texas Agricultural Statistics Service in Austin said.

A bale weighs between 480 and 500 pounds.

"Statewide, it's a good crop, vs. an excellent crop last year," Carl Anderson, an economist and cotton specialist for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in College Station, said Monday.

"We'll probably have a good crop at low prices," he said.

The estimated 405-pound yield per acre would be the second-highest since 1978, but a decrease of 20 percent from last year's record 506 pounds per acre.

Early cool weather across the 25 major cotton-growing counties around Lubbock could turn the good crop into a fair one, according to Anderson.

The cotton crop in other areas has suffered severe damage from a late summer drought and heat wave, said Anderson.

He said dry-land yields have been slashed to about one-third of the statewide average or less.

Rucker named as nominee for district judge

From Staff Reports

Dean Rucker, currently serving as judge of the 318th Judicial District Court in Midland, has been named by the Midland County Republican Party as the nominee for the 318th District Court in the Nov. 1988 general election.

In January, Rucker was appointed to the judiciary by Gov. William P. Clements as a result of the governor's appointment of Rucker's predecessor, Texas Supreme Court Justice Barbara G. Culver.

Under the Texas Election Code, the remainder of Culver's unexpired term is to be filled at the next general election. Both the local Republican and Democratic executive committees are allowed to make a nomination for their party's nominee to fill an unexpired term.

The Midland County Democratic Party will not nominate an opponent to Rucker, said Janet Massey, Democratic Party Chairman.

In accepting his party's nomination, Rucker stated that he is anxious to continue serving as a district judge and is pleased with the confidence expressed by the local party.

"This position has already provided me with many new and exciting challenges. I am very proud to be able to serve our community in this fashion," said Rucker.

Prior to his appointment to the bench, Rucker served as chairman of the Midland County Republican Party and as a member of the State Republican Executive Committee. He is a member of the State Bar of Texas, and is admitted to practice before the U.S. Supreme Court and other federal courts including the U.S. District Court, Western District.

Rucker is also a member of the Midland County Bar Association. With his father, Hal Rucker, he practiced law as a partner in the firm of Rucker and Rucker.

He currently serves as president of Community and Senior Services, Inc., and has served on the boards of Alamo YMCA, Midland Apartment Association and the Midland Jaycees.

He is a graduate of Leadership Midland and was recently honored as the outstanding alumnus of Trinity School of Midland.

Rucker received his law degree from St. Mary's University School of Law and his bachelor's degree in business administration from Trinity University.

He is a native of Midland.

Adult survey reveals incidence of teen suicide

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly half of American adults questioned in a recent survey said they personally know a teen-ager who has either tried suicide or contemplated doing so, according to a report released today.

Moreover, the national survey of 1,000 adults questioned by the National Association of Private Psychiatric Hospitals found that 27 percent of the those questioned said they knew a teen-ager who had actually tried to kill themselves.

An additional 17 percent said they knew someone who had contemplated doing so. It was not clear from an advance copy of the survey whether the two figures overlapped.

The association was holding a news conference to discuss the survey, conducted by Riter Research of Annapolis, Md. The advance release did not indicate a margin of error, but such a sampling size normally would elect such a margin of 3 percent to 5 percent.

Entitled "Teen-agers at Risk: an Adult Perspective," the survey also found that 72.4 percent of those interviewed think teen-agers today face far more serious problems than they did at the same age.

The survey commissioned by the Washington-based organization also found that adults focused on three major areas of concern when asked about 10 specific problems facing adolescents: drug abuse, alcohol abuse and peer pressure.

Slightly more than 87 percent said drug abuse was an "overwhelming" concern, alcohol abuse was second and peer pressure third.

Unwanted pregnancy ranked fourth with 70.8 percent.

A cluster appeared around the next five areas: Child abuse, 56 percent; crime among teen-agers, 54 percent; depression 53 percent; conflict with parents 53 percent; and suicide 53 percent.

The 10th greatest concern was runaway behavior at 44.5 percent.

Ex-commissioner hopes he can still be on ballot

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Ector County Commissioner Gerrid Bowen, who lost his bid to seek a second term as the Republican Precinct 3 Commissioner in the primary election earlier this year, announced Monday he will mount a write-in campaign and be on the ballot as an independent candidate in the Nov. 8 general election.

Saying that he belives he had "quite a bit" of Democratic and independent support, Bowen said he thinks the low turnout for the primary election was the reason he lost the Republican party nomination to Ricky Jorgensen.

Bowen said he anticipates a "big turnout" of voters for the November general election and "I expect to do better" he said Monday.

Observing that "we'll be splitting the vote three ways," Bowen said he plans to let his supporters know he is "still a valid candidate." Bowen said he will rely on his supporters to "get the word out" that he is actively seeking to continue as commissioner.

In the April primary election, Bowen lost to Jorgensen, who managed to garner 58 percent of the total ballots cast in the Republican primary.

Rancher Jack Crider, who was a vocal critic of earlier proposals to refurbish the aging coliseum complex, won the Democratic nomination in April to run in November for the precinct three post.

Rural residents may get water by December

EL PASO (AP) — About 28,000 residents of rural east El Paso County could get running water sooner than expected if officials are able to cut the federal government out of the negotiation process, officials say.

Under the plan, some Lower Valley residents — many of whom either pump sewage-contaminated water from the ground or haul clean water from the city — could get water by December, said Dale Jones, president of the Lower Valley Water Authority.

About a year ago, the authority devised a plan to trade Rio Grande irrigation water rights to El Paso's water utility, which would treat the water and sell it back to the authority to distribute.

But earlier this summer, the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation announced the authority would have to submit an environmental impact study because it would be changing the use of the water from agricultural to domestic. Such a study could take six months to two years to complete.

But the water authority's attorney, Darcy Frownfelter, said Monday that the authority will obtain only water not being used to irrigate crops. That would leave the Bureau of Reclamation out of the agreement and shorten any environmental study if needed, he said.

Since they announced the need for an impact study, Bureau of Reclamation officials have repeatedly said they too want Lower Valley residents to get water as soon as possible. Glade Barney, contracts and repayment specialist with the bureau, said the federal agency won't stand in the authority's way if the plan is deemed legal.

Barney said the Interior Secretary Donald Hodel still would have to approve any contract to use Rio Grande water.

Dan Page, the bureau's superintendent in El Paso, said the bureau wants to cooperate with the water authority.

Sunken barge being raised so it can be towed

HOUSTON (AP) — A sunken barge that has hampered traffic in the busy Houston Ship Channel for nearly a week was being raised so it could be towed to a dry dock for repairs, officials said.

Divers Monday night ran lines from a crane to the sunken 197-foot barge to it could be lifted, Coast Guard Petty Officer 1st Class Donald Cain said.

Once it's lifted, temporary repairs will be made to enable it to be taken to a dry dock for a permanent fix.

The barge, owned by Mid-Continent Stone Inc., of Lake Charles, La., sank Wednesday with a load of limestone on the western edge of the ship channel in Galveston Bay, about a mile from Seabrook.

A crane late last week removed the limestone cargo.

Tin buildings coffins for remains of Delta planes

By DAVE PEGO

JUSTIN (AP) — The southwesterly wind not only kicks up dust from a newly plowed field, it also stirs what air crash investigators call the smell of death.

The acrid odor of burned jet fuel, melted aluminum and charred plastic still hangs over a warehouse where the remains of Delta Flight 1141 have come to rest.

And just like the smell lingering over the warehouse, mixed thoughts sometimes hover in the mind of convenience store clerk Charlie Jo McMurry.

She can look out her window, across Farm Road 176 and about four blocks of undeveloped land, and see the large, white tin buildings where Delta 1141 and Delta 191 are stored until the two crashed planes can finally be destroyed.

Fourteen people died at Dallas Fort-Worth International Airport about 30 miles southeast of here as a result of the Aug. 31 crash of Delta 1141. There were 137 fatalities from the August 1985 crash of Delta 191.

Both planes lie in padlocked warehouses, waiting only to be disassembled and melted down into metal ingots whenever Delta officials decide the time is finally right.

Ms. McMurry said she and other residents in town simply don't think about the great tragedies the two planes represent.

Yet, in another way, being able to see the warehouse reminds her how lucky she is that her first cousin is still alive.

Ms. McMurry said she saw her relative, Dr. Dan Walker of Dallas, at a family reunion last weekend. He showed her his still-bandaged ribs and explained how he had helped treat others following the crash.

"It makes you think," Ms. McMurry said, looking out a store window toward the warehouses. "He was some lucky guy. I don't know if I'll ever have opportunity to fly again in my life, but I'll think about it."

A pile of debris from Delta Flight 1141 sits beside the building which houses the wreckage of Delta 191 in Justin. This portion will eventually be taken to a locked storage facility with the rest of the plane.

After Delta 191 was brought here in 1985, hundreds of people came to the corner of Topeka and Fourth streets in Justin, hoping to see the gnarled aluminum wreckage.

Some even tried to break into a 150-foot-long tin warehouse built over the Lockheed L-1011 by Delta officials, looking to lift a macabre souvenir of one of the world's worst air disasters. Officials had to post 24-hour sentries for six weeks to keep the thieves away.

Scores of reporters and photographers also tried to talk their way into the cold, unlit warehouse. Even last summer, a couple of reporters from Europe requested permission to take the last photos of Delta 191.

"It's sort of a tin coffin they built over it," Justin resident Chris Johnston said.

It is possible to slip around to the back and peer in a crack of a courtyard area and see a six-foot-high pile of what used to be some of Delta 1141. But nobody does.

"Nobody knows where it is; that's why they don't come around to see it," said Joel Moore, who works about two blocks away.

Justin residents are accustomed to salvage storage and sales. A truck trailer reminds those driving by that this is the "Salvage Center of the World." And in a town where so many trade on tragedy, the two airplanes are no big deal.

"I guess you just can't dwell on it," said Chris Johnston's wife, Linda, who works next door to the Delta 191 warehouse. "There were a lot of people dead."

"And this town is built around the salvage business," Johnston said. "They salvage all kinds of things and sell them here. It's almost like a flea market. They just brought in some furniture from Chicago."

Just how long the Delta airplanes will lie here, no one knows.

Joe Martinez, who owns the company that leases the storage space to Delta and brought the wreckage here, said he agreed not to discuss the matter.

Delta spokesman Henry Conley says he has no idea when the two planes will be disassembled.

"I'm not sure why we're keeping it," Conley said. "I guess for further investigation. If anybody ever needs to look at them."

A knowledgable source said in addition to the cost of leasing the storage space, it will cost Delta as much as $40,000 to disassemble the 150,000 pounds of wreckage from Delta 1141 and perhaps more than that to tear down the more than 250,000 pounds of Delta 191 debris.

When that will happen could be anybody's guess.

"It may set there another 25 years," the source said. "You never know."

STATE

GTE requesting $81 million rate hike

Agency thinks rates should decrease

AUSTIN (AP) — Ratepayer representatives said GTE Southwest rates should be lowered, but the company stood behind its $81 million rate increase request as a Public Utility Commission hearing began.

"I think the company thinks it (GTE) stands for 'Give Them Everything.' In my perspective, it stands for 'Gee, They're Expensive,'" said Scott McCollough, assistant attorney general representing state agencies, as the hearing opened Monday.

"The commission's job is to get rates at a reasonable level...the commission's notion of what GTE should stand for is 'Go Toward Equity,'" he said.

Rex Timms, GTE Southwest vice president of public affairs, said the company's cost of business has gone up, including labor and the cost of goods and services.

"I don't know of any other business that hasn't had a rate increase or increased their prices since 1983," Timms said.

The company would have preferred a settlement in the case, which first was filed in 1984, he said. GTE Southwest updated the initial case in filing for the $81 million rate increase.

Parties met briefly Monday to try to settle their differences, but they decided to proceed when no compromise was forthcoming. GTE Southwest officials estimated the hearing before Charles Smaistrla, PUC administrative law judge, will take four to six weeks.

The Office of Public Utility Counsel, which represents residential and small business ratepayers before the commission, has filed testimony recommending a $103 million rate reduction and the return of $49 million in what it termed tax overcollections to ratepayers.

The state agency said GTE continued to collect state gross receipts taxes totaling $38.5 million, including interest, even though the tax was repealed in 1986. The public counsel's office said the company also had another $10.5 million in excess deferred federal income tax.

Austin attorney Don Butler, representing 90 cities in the case, has called for a $145 million rate reduction and $40 million refund to customers from tax overcollections. The PUC staff has recommended a $71 million rate decrease.

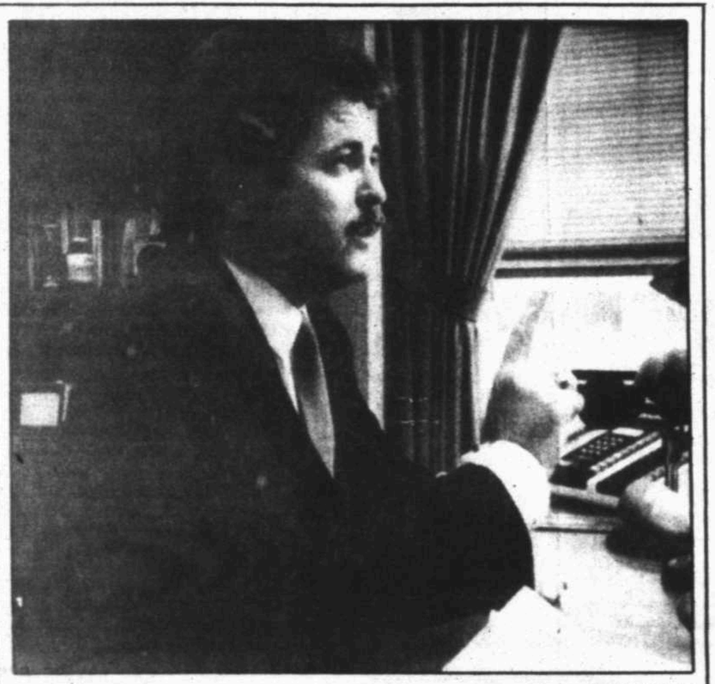

GTE spokesman Clovis McAllister said the $81 million increase would mean a 30 percent to 60 percent increase for customers, except for Dallas-Fort Worth and Houston metropolitan area ratepayers with optional extended access service. Those customers in the Houston metropolitan area would get a rate decrease, and those in the Dallas-Fort Worth metropolitan area would not see a rate change.

GTE serves 1.2 million residential and business customers in suburban and rural comunities.

"We said all along...that with the economy like it is in Texas, this isn't the time to be increasing rates," Timms said.

Timms said the company was forced into filing the 1988 rate case. After a company offer to withdraw the 1984 rate filing failed, and parties did not negotiate a settlement, GTE updated its rate schedules "in accordance with (PUC) directives," according to a company statement.

Some parties in the case opposed the company's 1987 move to withdraw its 1984 rate increase request because of concerns GTE Southwest could be overearning.

McLennan County District Attorney Vic Feazell announces he is resigning to take over as general counsel for a natural gas manufacturing firm in Waco.

Feazell says he's resigning as DA

WACO (AP) — The would-be successors to Vic Feazell are queueing up even before his resignation as McLennan County district attorney is official.

Feazell, acquitted last year in a federal racketeering trial, announced Monday he will soon quit the county job and join a manufacturing corporation as a general counsel.

"My resignation will be effective at 9:23 a.m. this coming Saturday. That is a significant date because that is two years to the minute from the time I was arrested and led from the office in front of my staff in handcuffs," Feazell told the Waco Tribune-Herald.

Feazell stood trial last year on allegations that he accepted bribes from certain attorneys in exchange for dismissing or reducing charges against their clients.

Waco attorneys Paul Gartner and Brad Cates said Monday they are interested in the job and will send resumes to the governor's office.

Gartner, 36, is a Republican who was defeated by Feazell in the past two general elections. Cates, 33, was an assistant under Feazell and former District Attorney Felipe Reyna.

James Huffines, Clements' appointment secretary, said that until his office receives Feazell's resignation, which Feazell said he mailed Monday, "quite frankly we are not going to focus any attention on it."

"Mr. Feazell has a reputation for changing his mind and we are not putting any stock in these rumors until we receive a resignation. We are not going to get excited about it until then," he said.

Feazell, 36, will join ASK Corp., formerly American Solar King Corp., which manufactures natural gas through cogeneration processes.

He said his new job will enable him to practice law with his attorney, Gary Richardson of Tulsa, Okla.; devote more time to his pending $44 million libel suit against WFAA-TV, Channel 8 reporter Charles Duncan and Waco Police Chief Larry Scott; and help with the production of a movie about his life.

The timing of Feazell's resignation means that Republican Gov. Bill Clements will appoint a successor to serve the remaining 27 months of Feazell's term.

If Feazell had resigned 10 days earlier — or 65 days before the Nov. 8 general election — county Democratic and Republican party officials could have named two candidates to compete in a contested race on the general election ballot.

County Democratic Party Chairman Gene Evans told the Tribune-Herald that he and Feazell discussed the deadline several weeks ago, and also that he would have liked to have been able to let the voters choose a replacement in November instead of turning the office over to a Republican.

Huffines said his office will interview applicants for the job and will have a replacement named within two weeks to a month.

ASK sought reorganization under Chapter 11 of federal bankruptcy laws in August 1986.

Feazell's controversial career outlined

Here is a chronology of the controversial career of District Attorney Vic Feazell of Waco, who announced Monday that he is resigning:

— May 1, 1982: Feazell defeats incumbent District Attorney Felipe Reyna in Democratic primary.

— Nov. 7, 1982: Feazell defeats Republican candidate Paul Gartner in general election.

— Sept. 16, 1986: A 12-count federal indictment charging Feazell with bribery, racketeering and mail fraud is returned by an Austin grand jury.

— Sept. 17, 1986: Feazell is arrested and handcuffed by FBI and DPS agents outside his office.

— Nov. 5, 1986: Despite indictment, Feazell again defeats Gartner in general election.

— May 26, 1987: Feazell's trial begins in Austin.

— June 15, 1987: Waco attorney Don Hall, Feazell's former law associate, testifies he paid Feazell money to drop cases against his clients.

— June 25, 1987: Testimony ends. U.S. District Judge James Nowlin dismisses mail fraud charges against Feazell after Supreme Court ruling in another case.

— June 29, 1987: Feazell acquitted of bribery and racketeering.

— Jan. 6, 1988: Feazell agrees to a two-year probational suspension of his law license for "alleged acts of professional misconduct."

— Sept. 12, 1988: Feazell resigns, effective Sept. 17, 1988 — the anniversary of his 1986 arrest — to accept a job as a general counsel for ASK Corp. of Waco.

Veteran dies in shootout with officers

MINERAL WELLS (AP) — A man killed Monday in a shootout with law officers had fired shots from his house a year earlier, a neighbor told officials.

Jack William Upham Jr., 39, of Route 1, Mineral Wells, was fatally shot about 11:45 a.m. when he emerged from a rural home about 6 miles north of Mineral Wells and brandished a .357-magnum revolver at lawmen.

Upham, a Vietnam veteran who had a history of flashbacks, fired shots at officers during a 75-minute standoff, with one hitting a deputy sheriff's patrol car, said Texas Department of Public Safetey spokesman David Wells in Austin.

A neighbor and former boss, L.M. Hamilton, told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram that Upham's wife recently divorced him. Upham also was hospitalized for three months for alcoholism and depression following an incident in which he fired shots from his house about a year ago.

Hamilton described Upham as a "pretty moody fellow" but "an excellent worker, a very intelligent person."

Upham, originally from College Station where he once worked for the state as an agricultural technician, worked for the Mineral Wells water department as both a water and sewer laboratory technician, then was promoted several years ago to waste water superintendent.

After being released from the VA hospital six months ago, Upham was assigned to work as a lab technician under Hamilton who is a water department supervisor.

"When he came to work for me his spirits seemed pretty good," Hamilton said. But Upham recently told his boss that the paper work was getting to be too much and he requested a transfer. Last week, he was given a job repairing sewer and water main breaks.

Upham, whose divorce became final this summer, is believed to be survived by two small children and his father, Hamilton said.

Officials have no idea what triggered Monday's shooting incident.

Upham was fatally shot by DPS trooper Frank Dallas of Mineral Wells, who had ordered him to drop his gun.

Upham was first hit in the upper right thigh by a shot from a .223-caliber weapon. When Upham again aimed at the trooper, Dallas fired another shot that struck him at the upper left chest.

Barbra Streisand wears Donna Karan. So do Cher, Liza Minnelli and Diane Sawyer. But the most important wearer of Donna Karan is Donna Karan. The New York designer has a non-stop schedule, and her collections are for women who know firsthand what that means.

After two years at Parsons School of Design, Karan landed a summer job with Anne Klein and Co. and became an associate designer in 1971. She started her own company in 1985. That company sold $30 million worth of clothing in 1987 — not including accessories.

There are two Coty American Fashion Critic Awards and two Council of Fashion Designers of America Awards under her belt. Though her home is in New York with her husband, sculptor Stephan Weiss, and her daughter, Gabrielle, Karan spends a lot of time flying to her invitation-only fashion shows. Karan squeezed in an interview the morning after her I. Magnin show and just before her personal appearance at the store reaped $400,000 in sales in one day.

Q. Talk about your collection for fall '88.

A. I've met all my goals this season. I wanted to achieve versatility. I wanted color. I wanted jackets that felt like sweaters. And most of all, I wanted the look and feeling of a suit without that power-heavy tailored jacket. The jackets don't feel restrictive. They're comfortable; they're part of the body. I never want the clothes to be all you see. They should have the molds of the body. That's why I like draping.

Also, I've taken suit dressing from day into evening. I've got jackets with skirts in several lengths and pants in every width — and to have every single jacket work with every single bottom — that's luck. (Laughs.) I don't know how it happened, but that makes the collection perfect.

Q. You've surprised people a lot in the past year by adding color to your collections.

A. I needed more possibilities. Everybody started to look alike. The more acceptance I've had, the more I've needed to make the collections more extensive. Now you can choose purple, you can choose gold and there are endless ways you can put things together.

Malachite has been my best-selling color throughout the country. The deep rich colors almost become the new blacks. With the success of my resort collection, I've realized the customer really does love color.

Q. And do you really love color?

A. Actually, I do. Having been in very subdued colors most of my life — basically black and white, some darks and neutrals — I'll now throw on a color, especially on the weekends.

Q. Is there a difference between the West Coast customer and the New York customer?

A. She's a bit more conservative, and, interestingly enough, she's more urban. She doesn't think about the seasons — it's cool in San Francisco all year-round. The New York woman travels a lot more. She thinks about warm-weather dressing. The Bay area is an important market for me, and it's important I keep in tune with what's happening here.

Q. Who is the Donna Karan customer?

A. My customer range is much larger than I anticipated. She goes young; she goes old. She's short or tall, heavy or thin. I don't design for smaller women; I design for myself. But my clothes fit smaller women.

Q. But there is one constant. You design for women with money. Most women think they can't afford your clothes.

A. Oh, but they can. There are two price points in my collection. I present everything as expensive, but some is affordable. All the jerseys are inexpensive, and so are cotton knits and washed silks. There's this sense that I only do "limousine clothes." That's not true, but it is why I'm successful. The limousine wearer says, "Hey, this is a bargain and a good investment" — an everlasting feeling.

Q. Could you talk about why you're going to start DKNY, your second line?

A. I've being knocked off all over the place. What happens is I see people walking around in my clothes, but they're not my clothes. Design-wise my clothes seem to have a much more marketable approach than what I'd conceived. So I have to take a collection and go for a more mass appeal. I can wear a big bulky cashmere sweater for $1,500, but most women can't. I want to be able to put that sweater out in 10 colors and not have it cost $1,500. A la Gap.

Another reason for starting the new line is to give branch stores an opportunity to have a piece of the Donna Karan real estate. My collection has to hold together as a collection, and most stores can't afford the collection. But they would be able to buy pieces from DKNY. So that's the next step.

Q. And after that? Bill Blass has designed everything from cars to chocolate?

A. I've only been in the business three years (laughs). I'll design anything that relates to woman and what she's about, if it has my integrity. If I could put a dietary plan together that she could take to her office, I'd probably do it.

Q. Your schedule gets busier and busier. Is that the downside of the business?

A. It's unbelievable, and it never stops. I find myself wanting to say, "Stop the world, I want to get off for a while." But I can't. There's not time for yourself, no time for your family. The pressure is unrelenting. I can't just say, "Excuse me, but I'm not going to deliver this season." Every collection is important.

Q. Gabrielle is now 14, the same age you were when you started working in the business.

A. I know, and I'm asking her, "Why aren't you working yet?" Probably because her mother gives her a lot more than my mother gave me. Now she's looking for a boyfriend — that's the one thing I can't buy her (laughs).

Q. How did you dress when you were her age?

A. I was not typical. I wore the hottest hot pants, the shortest miniskirt, but it was not in color.

Q. Black?

A. Right. I was more beat. Cafes were my kind of scene. I was more independent than most.

And I grew up in the biz; I saw what cutting rooms were like early. It was part of my being, a-natural evolution. People tell me now, "I remember you used to sketch on the beach." Give me a break. I don't sketch today; I didn't sketch then.

Q. Is there any fashion designer who does for men what you do for women.

A. Armani. What he does for women is quite beautiful, but I like his men's clothes better, adore his men's clothes. His fabrication is just spectacular. I buy them for my husband. I think he makes a man look better than any man. I mean, I put my husband in an Armani suit and hmmmmm.

Q. So you dress your husband?

A. I dress him completely.

Q. How has the American woman you design for changed in the past decade?

A. Women get along better with each other than they ever have. Women like myself used to only communicate with men. Now we have a lot more in common with women than we do with men. That's the biggest shift I've seen over the last 10 years. At first, career women were feeling different from the rest of women. I think men love women and respect them and are afraid of them, but there's a much stronger alliance today between women and women.

A woman's emotional makeup makes her different. She has a feeler, a more gut instinct than men have. They've been trained by the book. I would rather have a lot more women executives. I think they work harder. But women also function better with men around. My office is very female, but it's mixed.

Galanos experiments with new shapes, cuts

By ANNE-MARIE SCHIRO
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — James Galanos is constantly refining his craft. Although his position is secure as one of the world's foremost designers, he continues to experiment with new shapes and cuts.

"I still agonize over a seam," the 63-year-old designer said while showing his fall collection.

He had traveled to New York from his home base in Los Angeles weeks after other designers had shown their new lines. As usual, he had a good reason for showing so late.

"The fabrics didn't arrive from Europe until the end of July," he said.

Also, as usual, the collection was worth waiting for. There was nothing haphazard or unfinished about the 150-plus pieces he showed to store buyers in a suite at the Plaza. His clothes are sophisticated, modern and elegant.

"Elegance is not a dirty word anymore," he said. "It never should have been."

The collection ranged from sleekly tailored suits and blouson dresses for executives (those who can afford clothes starting at $4,000), to slim-lined evening dresses in luxurious fabrics. Like many other designers, Galanos is stressing understatement and eschewing extravagance. But minimalism is not in his lexicon.

For example, a classic fitted jacket has asymmetric lapels or curved seaming or arched pockets that give it an individual look. It is shown over pants that are pleated just in front, for fluidity without bulk.

"There are a lot of pants for day," the designer said, "but of course the store can order a skirt. Some places in the country you just can't sell pants."

All Galanos pants are flat over the hips, with fullness at the front of the legs and high-rise waistlines to elongate the silhouette. They are often shown with fingertip-length coats, slightly shaped at the waist, then flared out over the hips by means of curved godets or welt seams. A recurrent theme is a mock vest or jacket-over-jacket effect achieved by extra lapels or arcs of fabric.

Suits with skirts have slim lines and above-the-knee hems; they come with blouses in rich materials like brocade, satin or pleated chiffon.

"They take you through the whole day, onto cocktails and dinner," Galanos said. Among the dressy suit fabrics are soutache-embroidered tweeds, shown over satin blouses in identical tweed patterns, and fake Persian lamb, which is combined with satin or other fabrics.

"It's wool that looks like Persian lamb," he said. "I fell in love with it and ordered it in black, taupe and gray."

Dresses for day are done in men's wear fabrics like chalk-striped flannel or herringbone tweed with trompe l'oeil blouse or sweater effects. Tops are bloused, waists are belted and skirts are narrow.

"We do a fantastic business with dresses," Galanos said, "but dresses are very hard to do. People think of me as doing evening clothes, but we do just as many day clothes."

Black is the dominant color of the collection, running from day to evening in fabrics from gabardine to fake fur to satin to lace. When color appears, it is usually red, purple, grass green, electric blue or yellow.

A series of black coat dresses and dinner suits fits into the current mood of what the French call "le smoking," but Galanos puts his own stamp on them. One suit has a fake Persian lamb jacket with a horseshoe neckline that exposes the pleated front of a white satin blouse. A coat dress has a trompe l'oeil jacket effect with satin revers and a velvet collar.

To add glamour to simple sheaths, Galanos has put full sleeves of embroidered lace or point d'esprit over matching skintight sleeves. They are dramatic-entrance dresses that will continue to look dramatic across a dinner table.

He describes his evening wear as slick and highly sophisticated, and it is. Dresses are long and slender, with long sleeves and high necks or bare tops held up by delicate slip straps.

"I never went for froufrou," he said. "If I do, it's in a delicate way."

Galanos no longer puts on lavish fashion shows but prefers to show his clothes in the intimate setting of a hotel room, where buyers can see the subtle details, feel the richness of the fabrics and examine the couture-quality workmanship.

"I don't just design the clothes," he said. "I sell them, too."

He also travels to Europe to choose the fabrics and have shoes made to his specifications. He designs hats to go with all the outfits. This season, most of them have wide brims cut into offbeat shapes. If he cannot find the jewelry he wants to show with a certain dress, he will have it made in his factory.

After 37 years of heading his own fashion house and of seeing his clothes worn by such fashionable women as Nancy Reagan and Gayfryd Steinberg, Galanos does not need the applause of the crowd to know he has a winning collection.

Love daily.

Dior designs bridge gap between seasons

By BERNADINE MORRIS
New York Times News Service

PARIS — Sparked by the exuberance of Christian Lacroix, in the last two seasons the 21 other couture houses here have developed fashions with an airy, lighthearted look.

Mid-thigh hemlines, puffy skirts and breezy colors have given couture clothes a buoyant gaiety. Now, the reaction has set in, and the mood is more sober for fall and winter.

Skirts are somewhat longer. While they usually clear the knees, some are calf length. Colors are certainly darker: chestnut and chocolate are everywhere.

Marc Bohan at Christian Dior gets the credit so far for most successfully bridging the distance between last season's sense of abandon and fashion's current serious mood. Perhaps the fact that he keeps his hemlines shorter than most is a factor.

He also makes significant contributions to pants dressing, which is a major trend of the season, and evening dressing. Pants at Dior have legs that flare gracefully toward the ankles, and evening dresses tend to be long and slender, gently draped over the bodice.

They are in soft fabrics, typically chiffon, though shiny panne velvet also turns up.

Bohan has firm control over all the elements of fashion, including suits. Jackets are snug, with gathers at the back, or, occasionally, back belts that tie at the center of the waistline. Jackets are short and skirts are narrow, and together they make a neat suit package.

Cloque blouses come in strong colors like cerise or turquoise, and sable collars provide the obligatory look of luxury. Soft wide mohair coats made with a lot of fullness wrap up the package.

The same kind of snug jacket successfully accompanies wide-leg pants: a jacket in chestnut-colored cashmere, with pants of purple velvet. In metallic brocades, similar jackets turn up for evening with, occasionally, sheer black pants.

Dior's is an elegant collection with a modern look, and it drew the most interesting audience Monday. Liza Minnelli sat next to Princess Caroline of Monaco. Lynn Wyatt, Judith Taubman, Estee Lauder and Joanne Cummings were among Bohan's American fans, and Christian Lacroix turned up in a front-row seat, looking tired after his collection's successful debut Sunday. Both Dior and Lacroix are owned by Financiere Agache.

For his fall winter Haute Couture Collection, Christian Dior presents this short tight-fitting gold flower-embroidered dress with matching jacket, worn with a large oystrich plume puff.

An opulent look is what sets couture or made-to-order clothes apart from ready-to-wear, a fact that biJean-Louis Scherrerei understands quite well. There is nothing throwaway about his evening dresses, embellished this season by masterly metal embroideries by Lesage. Jeweled jackets edged in sable, generously full long velvet skirts and chiffon or crepe pants typify his evening luxury.

But Scherrer manages to give his day clothes a rich look too, even the checked tweeds usually associated with British country clothes. He simply adds what look like embroidered lace collars and cuffs. On closer inspection, they turn out to be intricately cut-out leather appliqu'es. Now that's luxury. It also shows off the work of French artisans.

Cut-out embroidery also decorates leather suits, as in a green suede jacket paired with a brown skirt. Hand-painted flower arrangements mark other leather suits, and capes are painted with landscapes including realistic mountains; these are not as discreet as the embroidered styles, but they are also opulent.

Gerard Pipart of Nina Ricci also has a handle on luxury. One of his inspirations was a new place to put touches of fur: at the ankles of a pants suit. The idea was developed in mink coats with full cape collars, pale wool suits and coat dresses worn with platter-shaped lynx hats and draped jersey dresses with mink bands at the hemline, neckline and wrists.

Changeable taffeta is a favored fabric for the full-skirted dresses that are a Ricci specialty. Sweetheart necklines, tightly wrapped midriffs and loose trousers are other trends.

Pierre Cardinei's collection demonstrates a hazard of slender calf-length skirts: they look dreary. He likes the long lean line in coats, suits and dresses, which illustrate at a glance the seriousness of the season. A tendency to make cape-like wraps fit snugly across the upper part of the body is fairly alarming, because the models wearing them cannot move their arms.

Cardin makes an effort to brighten up. He shows short coats and dresses with wires inserted at the hems so they stand out like hoops. Some skirts have several wired panels that undulate toward one another and apart, like accordions.

Occasionally, in the Cardin collection of 280 styles, a simple dress appeared, like a black crepe dress with a white satin collar. It tended to get lost in the histrionics.

AT WIT'S END

'80's homemaker is a boil-bag gourmet

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

If someone had told me five years ago that I would be running a red light with a pizza sitting beside me wrapped in a beach towel and a seat belt — and calling it "dinner" — I'd have said, "You're crazy. I'm a homemaker. Cooking is my life."

Five years ago I felt guilty "just adding water." Now I want to bang a tube against the counter and have a five-course meal pop out. If it comes with plastic silverware and a plate that self-destructs, all the better.

I am one of the women of the '80s who have adopted with open arms white plastic foam as their dish pattern. Our car has turned into Meals on Wheels.

You have to understand how far I had to come. Remember the mother in the old commercial who sampled jar after jar of peanut butter and said, "I'm fussy about what I feed my children"? I knew her personally.

While those around me cut corners by using pie filling from a package and vegetable soup from a can, I felt compelled to spell b-o-x c-a-k-e in front of my children.

And then I began to cave in. I used spaghetti sauce from a jar and baked beans from a can, but I "doctored" them up to save face. I was so phony I even took the fast-food chicken out of the bucket, arranged it on my best meat platter and surrounded it with parsley.

Women have gone beyond the second coming of the Ice Age, where everything was entombed in little boxes covered with foil. The Plastic Age of eating out and paying for it a month later is wearing thin. Most of them are going through the Nuclear Age, where you pop everything into a microwave.

It has been predicted that the glove compartment in cars will be replaced by microwave ovens, and commuters can eat a hot breakfast on their way to work. Phones will be installed that actually will be able to program kitchen appliances to defrost frozen foods, bake bread, preheat ovens and even make ice cream before you arrive home.

I'm not going to wait around this time and be the last woman in North America to catch the wave of convenience. I'm into dinners that come to me. This week, through the magic of mail order and an 800 number, I have a cajun dinner of jambalaya winging its way to my door, a baked ham en route from Georgia, and for the weekend, a couple of lobsters from Boston.

I have to boil water for the lobsters ... but I'm counting on my old skills to come back.

DEAR ABBY

Woman's family seems wrong for 'Mr. Right'

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am 38, twice divorced and have three kids, ages 20, 16 and 3. I have always supported myself and my children with no help from anybody.

Six months ago, I met "Mr. Right" — I'll call him Mel. He's 31, kind and honest. He's been divorced for a year after a seven-year marriage (no children). He loves my kids and they love him.

There is only one thing wrong. Mel has been hiding my children from his friends and family. We live 70 miles apart and see each other only on weekends. It bothers me that he doesn't want his family to know that I have three children. (He has asked me not to mention them because he doesn't want them to know yet.)

We have had long talks about our future together. He foresees marriage in about three years. So, what do you think of this, Abby? I really love him and he says he loves me. — IN LOVE IN SOUTH DAKOTA

DEAR IN LOVE: There is something wrong with Mr. Right. "Hiding" your children from his friends and family is downright deceitful. Mr. Right is very shortsighted. If there is marriage in your future, your three children will have to come out of the closet. What then? Put this question to him, and draw your own conclusions.

DEAR ABBY: This concerns something that sounds trivial, but it's actually very serious. I heard that while baseball players are waiting in the bullpen, they pass the time by pulling the hair out of each other's noses. A man told me that his aunt actually died after she had pulled some hairs out of her nose. This shocked me into writing to you so you could warn your readers. I hope you will print this and save some lives. — F.S.S.

DEAR F.S.S.: I consulted a medical expert and was told that because the membranes of the nose are very delicate, pulling hair from the nostrils can cause an infection called furuncle of the hair follicle. However, since the advent of antibiotics, the chances of dying are minimal. Bottom line: This baseball team needs a better way to pass the time.

DEAR ABBY: I have no problems, complaints or questions, but I would like to tell you what my husband gave me for my 30th birthday.

Kevin and I have been married for 11 years and have five daughters, ages 10, 8, 5, 4 and 2½. For obvious reasons, I do not work outside my home, and my "outing" is a weekly trip to the grocery store.

Although my birthday is two months in the future, last week Kevin surprised me with a birthday cake and a round-trip airline ticket to visit my best friend in Florida — alone. Yes, all by myself — for eight days!

He had prearranged this trip so it wouldn't interfere with the children's school or the holidays. He lined up a sitter for the kids while he's at work. (I baby-sit weekdays, so he's already informed the children's parents that I will be gone for eight days.) I have nothing to do but pack, and grocery-shop before I leave.

I thought I'd share this with you, so you can pass it along to other husbands who wonder what to give their wives for a birthday present. Just a little vacation with rest and recreation. — LUCKY SALLY HANDLEY, BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the letter from "Rushed to Death," whose husband was always in a hurry. When my husband and I read the letter, we howled with laughter because it accurately described him.

After years of trying to change him, I realized that the only person I could change was me. So I told him that we could go shopping together, but if he was going to rush me, I'd stay home and save myself aggravation. I then used the time I would have spent shopping to do something I enjoyed.

If he wants to eat fast — let him — just make sure that he doesn't eat off your plate.

Since you know he doesn't like to wait in line for anything, find places to go that don't require waiting in line. We often go to 5 o'clock movies and eat only in restaurants where we can make a reservation.

I will admit there are some advantages to being aggressive, pushy and in a hurry. My husband is the guy who gets on an airplane first so he can get all the room he needs to store our carry-on luggage in the overhead bin. We are the people who get the best seats in the house for a movie because he pushes to the front of the line. When I do go with him to the supermarket, he scouts out the fastest checkout counter. If he goes too fast, I just say, "You go ahead, dear — I'll catch up."

I hope this helps. — ROBERTA TAYLOR, NATICK, MASS.

DEAR ABBY: Last March you published a solution to a letter concerning a woman who was asked to return a piano to her friend's daughter 36 years after the friend gave it to her. The reader advised handing the relative a large "storage" bill along with the piano — enough to cover the cost of a new instrument — and insist on cash.

Your response: "What a great idea. Judge Wapner, move over."

Your readers may not know that there are alternatives to going to court to settle minor neighbor or family grievances. One alternative is to use a community volunteer mediation program. Disputes over fences, loud music, barking dogs, or between landlord/tenant or business-/consumer can be settled for free or very inexpensively by the parties involved meeting with neutral, impartial mediators who assist them in coming to a mutually satisfactory agreement. As both parties have negotiated their disputes themselves, the compliance to the agreement is very high.

On "People's Court," Judge Wapner makes the decision for the parties, whereas in mediation, the decision is made by the parties. Mediation can be fast, convenient, confidential and free in many communities. For information on a local program, call the information and referral agency sponsored by the United Way or check the Yellow Pages. — SUE NELSON, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, WEST SUBURBAN MEDIATION CENTER, HOPKINS, MINN.

DEAR SUE: Live and learn! Thank you for a helpful public service. Since the name can vary from community to community, another way to get in touch with your local volunteer mediation program is to telephone the local public defender's office and ask for the legal aid/mediation source in your area.

The facts about drugs, AIDS, and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill., 61054. Postage is included.

Midland store hosts benefit for All Stars

From Staff Reports

Pappagallo and Pappagallo's Teen Board will sponsor a mother-/daughter luncheon and fashion show to benefit the Midland Independent School District All Stars Program noon Saturday.

Members of the Pappagallo Teen Board will be modeling and many Midland and Lee High School football players will be involved.

All Stars is a national program designed to help young people fight the drug problem. Trained All Stars staff members visit individual school systems and work with both students and teachers. The program is designed to teach students self-esteem and to be free of drugs and alcohol, and helps develop the students for leadership in the community.

The program involves ninth grade students participating in a two-day lock-in at the start of the school year. Midland students who have participated in the program are now working with junior high school students teaching them the same ideals.

The program cost a minimum of $30,000 a year. Pappagallo has adopted All Stars as a community project. In addition to the mother/daughter luncheon and style show, there will be an outdoor fiesta in October. The Oak Ridge Square and Plaza Shopping Center Merchants Association and students of Lee High and Midland High will stage the fiesta. Anyone interested in attending the luncheon and style show Saturday can make reservations by calling 683-4255.

Jury selection begins in gang rape trial

SAN DIEGO, Texas (AP) — A judge ruled that only limited discussion will be allowed in the jury's presence about the sexual history of a 19-year-old woman whose complaint of a gang-rape led to the indictment of 10 men on charges ranging from kidnapping to sexual assault.

After lengthy pre-trial motions by defense attorneys, jury selection finally began late Monday in 229th District Court and continued today in the sexual assault trial of Orlando Garza, 23.

The trial is the first of several scheduled as a result of the woman's allegations.

State District Judge Ricardo Garcia granted a prosecution motion to block references to the alleged victim's sexual history in the presence of the jury without first determining whether such discussion would be admissible evidence.

Defense attorney Albert Pena protested that prior sexual behavior "touches on the very basis of the defense of consent."

Pena also cautioned potential jurors to ignore rumors and media reports in deciding Garza's fate.

"He is on trial here today, not anyone else you may have heard of," Pena said.

Pena told the potential jurors they would have to ignore the extensive media coverage the case has attracted since the woman reported that on the night of March 26 she was abducted and gang raped by a total of as many as 20 men over a period of several hours.

Ten men were indicted on various kidnapping or sexual assault charges. A 14-year-old youth also has been charged in the case.

Witnesses will include the alleged victim and a 12-year-old boy, prosecutors said.

Garza, a 23-year-old native of San Diego, a town of 5,000 about 55 miles west of Corpus Christi, also faces a later trial on a charge of aggravated kidnapping.

State District Judge Ricardo Garcia denied motions by the defense to have the sexual assault trials of Garza and 23-year-old Corando Perez Jr. combined.

Pena and attorney Nago Alaniz represent the two along with three other defendants.

Judge Garcia also denied defense motions to quash the jury panel. The defense unsuccessfully tried to make a case that the jury pool somehow had been stacked in favor of the prosecution. Assistant District Attorneys Rodolfo Gutierrez and Rocky Carrillo are the prosecutors in the case.

The defense tried to show that an inordinate number of the potential jurors were relatives of Carrillo and residents of areas of Duval County where Carrillo's family has a "historical political stronghold."

The judge also denied a defense attempt to have the potential jurors interviewed individually, a voir dire process normally used in capital murder cases.

Defense attorneys called several news reporters to testify, in an effort to show that extensive media coverage may have prejudiced the jury.

Charles Bella points out a gunshot his helicopter received in a jail break attempt in July. Bella says he was hijacked into helping three inmates escape from the Penitentiary of New Mexico. Bella says the aircraft needs repairs before he can fly it.

Copter used in prison escape returned to pilot

EL PASO (AP) — Charles "Cheater" Bella says he's glad to be back in possession of the helicopter that was used to pluck three escapees out of a New Mexico prison — but he doesn't know when he'll be able to fly it.

"I don't have the kind of money it takes to fix it," Bella said of the bullet-riddled, five-passenger Aerospatiale Gazelle, which he had to return to El Paso on the back of a trailer.

Bella, a charter pilot, says he was hijacked by a pistol-wielding woman and forced to participate in the July 11 escape from the Penitentiary of New Mexico near Santa Fe. The helicopter was damaged by gunfire in the penitentiary yard and during an air chase over central New Mexico.

The escapees and the woman were all caught and are charged with escape.

Bella faces charges of conspiracy and assisting the escapees; trial is set for Oct. 28. The helicopter had been held by authorities since the escape as part of an agreement to reduce Bella's bail from $100,000 cash to $50,000 with a 10 percent cash surety.

But after New Mexican officials decided Bella would not flee, they turned the chopper over to him last Thursday.

Boys Town to be built

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Boys Town broke ground in San Antonio, Texas, on Monday for five homes on a 25-acre campus that will provide family centered treatment and care for needy children, Boys Town officials said.

The new campus, expected to be completed in June 1989, is part of the Boys Town USA Program to expand services to abused, neglected and at-risk children across the United States, Boys Town Executive Director Father Val J. Peter said.

"Our goal is to heal as many of America's hurting children as possible," Peter said.

"This campus will provide us with a stepping stone to another area of great need in the Rio Grande Valley. We're hoping the people of San Antonio and all of South Texas support us through their prayers and efforts as we go about the task of helping these very special Texas children," he said.

Boys Town operates mini-campuses in Tallahassee and Orlando, Fla., in addition to its main campus near Omaha, which provides care and treatment for more than 500 children who are victims of abuse and neglect.

Peter said each home provides "family centered, treatment-oriented" care "in the least restrictive environment."

Woman gets car back

BAYTOWN (AP) — A woman retrieved her car after it was confiscated last week by U.S. Customs agents who found two 50-cent stone pipes inside and considered them drug parapheralia.

Theresa Miller's car was confiscated after she and a companion declared they had bought the onyx pipes in Mexico, as souvenirs. Customs agents seized the Baytown woman's car operating under the government's "Zero Tolerance" policy.

But after pressure from U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's office and others, Customs officers in Laredo released the vehicle — and the pipes — to Ms. Miller on Sunday.

Ms. Miller put a sign in her back window saying, "I got my car back from U.S. Customs." She said some people waved and honked as she drove home.

Ms. Miller has contacted the American Civil Liberties Union about possible legal action against the federal agency, for possible reimbursement for expenses, and to have Zero Tolerance reviewed.

Ms. Miller said she had to fly to Laredo over the weekend to get her car.

Hightower to 'Fast for Life'

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower said he will be the first elected official to join the national "Fast for Life" by United Farmworkers President Cesar Chavez.

Hightower said in a Monday statement more than 20 groups and individuals have said they will join him in the fast. The fast is to draw attention to "pesticide contamination of people, communities, soil, water and of food itself," he said.

Among those listed as joining Hightower are Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin; Charlotte Flynn, co-convenor of the Gray Panthers; Rebecca Flores Harrington, director of UFW in Texas; Richard Avena of the Texas Civil Liberties Union; Harry Hubbard, president of the Texas AFL-CIO; Richard Daly of the Texas Catholic Conference; and Rabbi Mark Sack of the Agudas Achim Synagogue in Austin.

Hightower said he will fast Wednesday through Friday.

Memorial model unveiled

AUSTIN (AP) — A model of the proposed state memorial for Korean and Vietnam war veterans has been unveiled, with organizers saying the monument will cost an estimated $750,000.

The memorial, approved in a legislative resolution sponsored by Rep. Frank Collazo, D-Port Arthur, would be located on the Capitol grounds.

"We have to have all the money before we can start one bit of construction. We haven't really event touched the tip of fund-raising yet," Collazo said Monday.

So far, about $25,000 has been raised for the project, he said.

Inmate's case reviewed

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals is considering the case of a Texas death row inmate scheduled to die later this week for the 1980 robbery-shooting of a Galveston man.

The Austin-based court received the case after State District Judge Roy Engelke of Galveston refused to grant Warren Bridge a reprieve Monday, Bridge's attorney Anthony Griffin said. Bridge, 28, is scheduled to be executed before dawn Thursday for the Feb. 10, 1980, robbery-shooting of Walter Rose, a 62-year-old Galveston convenience store clerk.

Retiree teaches airmen how to repair aircraft

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Panels of sheet metal are crafted into tough aircraft skin at Randolph Air Force Base under the capable tutelage of Juan M. Lopez.

Lopez has spent the past eight years teaching young airmen to sculpt the thin sheets into the wings and fuselage of T-37 Tweet aircraft.

"Mostly what I teach the airmen is pride in getting the job done," he said.

Lopez learned his trade in the Air Force, from which he retired a technical sergeant.

He has worked with the 12th Field Maintenance Squadron at Randolph — which has 368 military personnel and 125 civilians — the past 15 years.

"It's a hard job, a dirty job," the 54-year-old said of the work. "But the kids are really sincere about learning.

"Kids today need a little more motivation, a pat on the back, but they like to learn. Treat them like adults. Let them do their own thinking and they do a better job."

Lopez said nine of 10 times the young airmen make the right decision.

"But you have to let them do it for themselves. You can't train a man by doing the work for them," he insists.

The airmen not only do structural repair work on the aircraft, but inspect them thoroughly looking for items such as fuel leaks that are outside their field but could adversely affect the pilot.

"They might see something that others miss. Repairing it might save a crash," Lopez said.

It takes about six months of on-the-job training before the student finishes the course.

"We get them motivated. I really take pride in my work and want them to, also. The pilot is putting his life in our hands," Lopez said.

Lopez totally has rebuilt three aircraft that crash-landed with their wheels up.

"It gives you a lot of pride to do that," he said.

"I like to bowl and fish and like all sports, but I guess you'd have to say I spend most of my spare time supporting the Clark (High School) Cougars. I never miss a game," he said.

Lopez and wife Sara have three daughters — Vannessa, 21; Laura, 20; and Veroncia, 17; and son Johnny, 26, all of whom attended Clark High School.

Candidates announce for mayor's race

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Henry Cisneros' announcement that he is stepping down after eight years as mayor of San Antonio triggered almost immediate jockeying for his job by would-be successors.

Just after Cisneros' announcement Monday, City Councilman Nelson Wolff said he plans to seek the job. Former Mayor Lila Cockrell and at least two other members of the City Council said they are considering the race.

The rumor that Cockrell, who served as mayor from 1975 to 1981, might seek another term as mayor had circulated for several days, and she finally confirmed the rumor on Monday, shortly after Cisneros made public his decision.

With tears welling in her eyes and her voice choked with emotion, Ms. Cockrell said she was sad "for our city's sake" that Cisneros' mayoral career would end.

"I will have to say very honestly that there have been a number of persons who have asked me to think about this. Because I have been so single-mindedly hoping that he would see his way clear to being a candidate again for another term, I have not given this my full attention," she said.

"Now that he has made his decision, I will have to review this very carefully," said Ms. Cockrell, the chairwoman of the City Public Service board of trustees.

Her remarks threw a new twist into what had appeared to be stacking up as a mayoral race among several who now are on the City Council.

Wolff, who had suggested in the past that he would like to succeed Cisneros, was the first one out of the starting gate Monday in the effort to take over the reins Cisneros will release.

"I have prepared myself to do this job, I'm capable of doing it and I'm ready to do it," Wolff proclaimed Monday, in confirming his plans to run for mayor.

State officials fighting to gain control of all of Matagorda Island

WASHINGTON (AP) — State officials said they will continue to fight for control of all of Matagorda Island, wintering grounds for the endangered whooping crane, although Congress has put the federal government in charge of part of the barrier island.

At issue is a $5.5 million appropriation that will allow the federal government to buy the last bit of privately held land on the island, 5,017 acres of former Wynne family ranchland now owned by the Texas Nature Conservancy.

But the measure, included in the Interior Department appropriations bill passed by Congress last week, bars the state from managing the former Wynne property. The balance of the 11,502-acre ranch was bought by the federal government in two earlier installments.

The Texas Department of Parks and Wildlife, however, controls the rest of the 55,396-acre island, including 19,000 acres owned by the federal government.

But prevailing sentiment in Congress this year was that the federal government should manage land purchased with federal funds and acquired under the federal Endangered Species Act, said a congressional staff member.

The state contended in a proposed management plan that uniform management of the entire island would be best for the habitat and the animals, including 20 that are endangered or threatened, said Parks and Wildlife spokesman David Cottam.

"We have an excellent record and are recognized nationally for management of wetlands habitat and in particular that area where whooping cranes are on the island," Cottom said.

"We're going to try next year to get control of the Wynne property," said Mark Schnabel, natural resources coordinator for the Texas Office of State-Federal Relations.

Matagorda Island has emerged as important wintering grounds for the world's only flock of cranes that breeds in the wild, as its population expands and outgrows the traditional winter home on nearby Aransas National Wildlife Refuge.

Bruce Thompson, in charge of the state's non-game and endangered species program, said as many as 150 whooping cranes are expected to make the journey this fall from Northwest Territories, Canada, to Texas. Last year, 134 cranes wintered in Texas.

Another flock of about 20 winters in New Mexico and summers in Idaho, but Thompson said those cranes have not yet reproduced in the wild. A flock of about 40 is kept in captivity at the Patuxent Wildlife Refuge in Maryland.

The appropriations bill for the Interior Department also authorizes spending $10 million to purchase land along the Rio Grande to protect the subtropical habitat of dozens of threatend birds and animals.

Congressional officials say the $10 million will be used to buy approximately 7,700 acres for the Lower Rio Grande Valley National Wildlife Refuge, a wildlife corridor between Falcon Dam and the mouth of the river east of Brownsville.

The brushy land along the river is the habitat for such endagered and threatened species as the jaguarundi and ocelot, large species of cats, the bald eagle and the peregrine falcon.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said the area is home to 56 types of birds and animals facing extinction, including nine on the endangered species list. It is the only remaining natural habitat with a subtropical climate in the United States and has the country's only remaining native palm grove.

The appropriation is among the largest single acquisitions for wildlife approved by the federal government in Texas, congressional staffers said.

Since the establishment of the south Texas refuge, the U.S. Department of Fish and Wildlife has been able to protect 25,887 acres of land. The service has identified 107,500 acres it would like to see protected, Bentsen said.

Also in the appropriations bill is $1 million for the Guadalupe Mountains National Park in West Texas, to be used in part to buy 10,023 acres of white gypsum and red quartoze dunes.

Rep. Ron Coleman, an El Paso Democrat, sought the land purchase after park officials warned that all-terrain vehicles were threatening the dunes' unique habitat on the Texas-New Mexico border.

The bill also includes $1.5 million in additional funds for the Chamizal National Memorial in El Paso, to be used to build an addition to the visitor center for housing administrative offices.

The park commemorates the events dating back to the establishment of the first international boundaries commission in 1848.

Slain singers' neighbors say they heard loud noises

HOUSTON (AP) — Neighbors of two Houston Grand Opera singers said they heard loud noises coming from the blood-spattered apartment where the performers were found slain but none reported the ruckus to police.

Forrest G. Henderson, who had just returned from Europe where he was singing in the opera's production of "Nixon in China," and Alan Wrotenberry, both 31, were found dead Monday in the southwest Houston apartment that belonged to one of the victims.

Neighbors said they heard the loud noises about 5 a.m. Sunday.

"My dog woke me up really," said neighbor Terry Richards. "I just heard like fighting upstairs. Last I heard it sounded like someone was throwing someone against a wall and things like that. That's about it. I heard him say, 'Jesus.'"

No arrests have been made in the case.

"We don't know the cause of death or any of those things," said Sgt. Kenneth Vachris with the Houston Police homicide division. "We don't know if they were shot or beaten to death. There's a possibility they may have been stabbed to death."

Wrotenberry, also a Deer Park teacher, had been apartment-sitting for Henderson, who returned to Houston Saturday.

The two singers, were among 118 who worked with the opera's chorus on a part-time basis on different productions. Wrotenberry was scheduled to sing in the opera's upcoming production of "Carmen."

"This has been like a bomb hit us," said David Gockley, general director of the Houston Grand Opera. "I was with Forrest in Edinburgh just 10 days ago and saw him having a ball and enjoying himself. Both of them were such wonderful and productive members of our chorus and to realize that they're gone is devastating."

Added Jim Ireland, director of productions for the opera, "As the word has spread among our chorusters, there has been great shock, great dismay."

Rescue workers remove the body a Greyhound bus driver after an accident on NM 68 about 30 miles south of Taos, N.M. Monday night. Six people were killed in the one vehicle accident.

Five people killed, 14 injured in New Mexico bus accident

NATION

EMBUDO, N.M. (AP) — An Albuquerque-bound Greyhound bus crashed into a rock slide above a rain-swollen river in northern New Mexico, killing the driver and four passengers and injuring 14 including six children, authorities said today.

The bus, which began its southbound trip in Denver, went off the road late Monday less than a mile west of here, just downstream from where the Rio Embudo feeds into the Rio Grande, about 45 miles north of Santa Fe.

State Police spokeswoman Lupita Carrion said in Santa Fe that the initial death toll had been lowered from six to five. Six of the injured were children under 10 years old, Espanola Hospital officials said.

Ms. Carrion said the accident was reported at 10:41 p.m. MDT.

State police officer Harold Zuni said a large rock tumbled from the mountain as the bus approached. In that part of the Rio Grande canyon, about 30 miles southwest of Taos, New Mexico 68 is flanked on the south by a sheer cliff and on the north by a sharp bank that drops off about 40 feet into the tree-lined Rio Grande.

"It sheared the front end of the bus off," Zuni said, describing the boulder as about as big as the front end of a car.

Reports at 5 a.m. today, when tow trucks began moving the bus from the roadside, were still conflicting as to the exact chain of events.

"The bus hit a rock slide," Ms. Carrion said. "It did not go into either river. The front of the bus was torn away and some of the passengers may have been thrown out of the bus and landed in the Rio Embudo."

After the boulder hit the bus, witnesses said, the vehicle veered slightly to the right and collided with several large rocks, coming to rest upright.

The Rev. Andrew McComb, a Dixon Fire Department volunteer, said the rocks probably prevented the bus from careening off the embankment and rolling toward the river. And he said that if the bus had gone off the road 10 feet sooner, it would have tumbled into the Rio Grande.

"There wouldn't have been anything left of this bus," he said.

The boulder struck the bus broadside, smashing directly into the driver's window on the right side, then ripping through the front of the vehicle to the door on the left side of the bus.

O.R. Mascarenas of the Dixon Search and Rescue Team said it was believed that all 21 people on board had been accounted for.

Two who escaped injury, Mormon missionaries Sean K. Jones and David Fuller, were on their way from Colorado to Albuquerque on church business.

Ambulances took the injured to Espanola Hospital, Ms. Carrion said.

Publishing company closes doors to prepare for Rapture today

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A publishing company closed its offices in the belief that millions of the faithful will be called to heaven today in a prelude to the Second Coming. Most religious scholars and ministers doubt it.

All such forecasts in the past have been wrong, noted Malcolm Tolbert, professor of New Testament interpretation at Southeastern Theological Seminary in Wake Forest.

Nonetheless, a woman who answered the telephone at the World Bible Society in Nashville, Tenn., Monday said the office was closed to give employees time to be with their families. The company published the book by Edgar C. Whisenant that contains the prediction, "88 Reasons The Rapture Will Be In 1988."

"If anyone is left here, they'll be here Wednesday morning," said a woman named Lorraine, who refused to give her last name.

"The odds of anybody being right are certainly greater than the odds of winning the recent Florida lottery," Tolbert said Monday.

He noted that such predictions have been made countless times in the past 2,000 years. "Nobody's been right."

Some evangelical and Pentecostal interpreters of biblical prophecy believe "the Rapture" is a sort of prelude to Christ's Second Coming.

But Tolbert said people who believe in the theory support it by plucking various passages from the New Testament.

"People are treating the Bible as sort of a smorgasboard...and come out with a kind of unified approach that is not justified by any single passage in the Bible," he said. "So what you have is interpretations by people" who are not biblical scholars.

Whisenant, a former rocket engineer, predicted the Rapture would come by tonight. He used mathematical calculations and biblical interpretations to predict it.

Mentally ill get poor care, report says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Inadequate care for the seriously mentally ill is "the major failure of American medicine and social services," two private health organizations said today.

"This failure is particularly striking since we now know that the majority of these people can be successfully treated and rehabilitated," said the two advocacy groups, adding that the major responsibility lies with the states.

Expanding on a ranking system first used in 1986, a new survey by the groups concluded that Rhode Island, Wisconsin, New Hampshire, Maine, Vermont and Connecticut are the best at providing services.

Lowest-rated in the survey were Hawaii, Arizona, the District of Columbia, Delaware, Wyoming, Idaho and Mississippi.

"In general, it can be said that hospital care for the seriously mentally ill in state mental hospitals is somewhat worse than it was two years ago while outpatient services are modestly better," the groups reported.

"Rehabilitation services and housing for the seriously mentally ill remain on the best of days seriously deficient and on the worst of days abysmal," they said.

Public Citizen Health Research Group and the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill were holding a news conference today to discuss the results of their joint survey. Public Citizen is affiliated with the Ralph Nader organization, while the latter group is made up primarily of family members of people suffering from serious illness.

"The reasons for the general deterioration of hospital care center primarily on staffing deficiencies, especially in nursing and psychiatry," the report said. "In both cases, the deficiencies are being exacerbated by the mushrooming of private psychiatric hospitals which are taking the best staff from the public sector with the lure of higher wages."

It attributed marginal improvement in outpatient services "to increased public attention to the sorry plight of the homeless mentally ill, an issue which has moved from the back alleys and grates of the city to the front pages of its newspapers."

The report said conservative estimates suggest there are almost 2 million people in the United States who are seriously mentally ill, with 8 percent of them hospitalized.

"Approximately one-third of homeless individuals are seriously mentally ill," the report said. "Their visibility on America's streets is a poignant reminder of the debacle of deinstitutionalization and failure of federally funded community mental health centers."

It said other factors contributing to what it called "the current national crisis" include "the abandonment of the seriously mentally ill by most psychiatric professionals, the rape of public sector psychiatry by private, for-profit hospitals, the incredible funding maze for these services in which local, state and federal governments are most concerned about shifting the costs of the services to each other, and a dearth of low-income housing for the seriously mentally ill, seriously exacerbated by housing policies of the Reagan administration."

There was stark contrast between the opening and closing statements of the 115-page report's summary.

"The lack of adequate services for the seriously mentally ill is the major failure of American medicine and social services," said the opening sentence.

"The single most important finding...is that there are local programs in some states, and a small number of state programs, providing high quality services for the seriously mentally ill."

Ethics Office unfairly attacked Meese's reputation, attorney says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A lawyer for Edwin Meese III says the former attorney general's reputation has been impugned unfairly by a Government Ethics Office memorandum on Meese that declares that "simply avoiding criminal conduct is not the mark of public service."

Ethics office director Frank Nebeker said Monday that Meese failed to meet federal ethics requirements by hanging onto $14,000 in telephone stock and by assisting longtime friend E. Robert Wallach.

Nebeker's based his memo on the results of a criminal investigation completed this summer by independent counsel James McKay. Although McKay declined to prosecute Meese, he concluded that Meese probably broke federal conflict-of-interest laws twice by handling matters affecting the telecommunications industry at the time he held the phone stock.

Meese declared he had been vindicated because he had not been prosecuted.

But Nebeker said: "A major purpose of this memorandum is to remind and inform that simply avoiding criminal conduct is not the mark of public service."

The critique was sent to ethics officers in the federal government.

James Rocap, a lawyer for Meese, said in a statement: "We are dismayed" by Nebeker's memo, that Meese's "integrity and reputation have been unfairly impugned."

Rocap said Nebeker "apparently read the McKay report," but not the rebuttal to it filed by Meese's lawyers. In it, they said Meese's behavior had met the highest ethical standards.

Rocap also said Nebeker had rejected a request to meet with Meese's attorneys.

A letter last Wednesday from Nebeker to Meese's lawyers said the findings would be based on "undisputed facts" and that the request for a meeting was therefore being denied.

Nebeker said Meese also may have violated a presidential executive order on ethics and accompanying regulations, a question under review by the Justice Department's office of public responsibility.

The executive order says federal employees should avoid any action which might create the appearance of, among other things, using public office for private gain, giving preferential treatment or adversely affecting the confidence of the public in the integrity of government.

"There is no more clarion standard...than that which exhorts an employee to avoid any action that adversely affects the confidence of the public in the integrity of the government," Nebeker said. "While Mr. Meese's personal reputation could not but have suffered as a result of this investigation, the public's confidence in the Department of Justice has also suffered. One need only look at the well-publicized personnel resignations in the department to see why this standard is at issue."

Concerned over the impact Meese's continued tenure was having on the Justice Department, former Deputy Attorney General Arnold Burns and criminal division chief William Weld resigned in protest in March.

Nebeker noted that Meese promised in 1985 when he became attorney general to sell the phone stock because it presented a potential conflict of interest. Meese listed the stock on subsequent financial disclosure forms as having been sold.

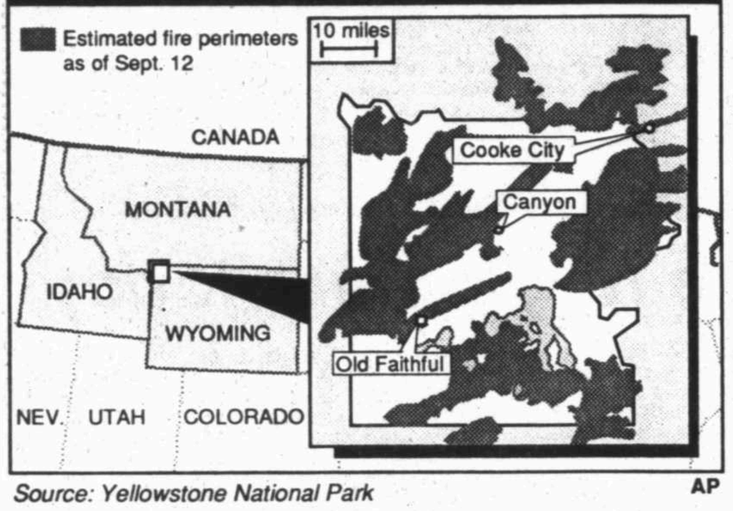

In reality, Meese, without informing the Senate or the ethics office, transferred the stock to his financial manager, W. Franklyn Chinn, who is under indictment along with Wallach, a San Francisco attorney, on charges of racketeering in the Wedtech scandal. Meese finally retrieved the stock and sold it last year after he came under criminal investigation.

In addition, Meese's agreement with the ethics office stipulated that he would remove himself temporarily from any matter involving Wallach, a longtime friend of the attorney general who had represented him in an independent counsel's investigation in 1984. Wallach was owed legal fees as a result.

But during the period Meese had agreed to recuse himself from involvement with matters concerning Wallach, Meese telephoned then-national security adviser Robert McFarlane to arrange a meeting for Wallach in connection with a proposed $1 billion Iraqi oil pipeline.

"This office did not accept Mr. Meese's ethics agreement lightly, does not accept his failure to comply with it lightly and will not accept other nominees' agreements lightly in the future," Nebeker's memo said. "These agreements serve an important purpose not only for the individual involved but for the public. This investigation of Mr. Meese is a stark example of the results of inattention to such an agreement by an official."

Sierra fire still burns after leveling nearly 100 homes

LAKE WILDWOOD, Calif. (AP) — An out-of-control wildfire zeroed in on hundreds of rural dwellings in the rugged Sierra Nevada today after leveling nearly 100 homes and forcing the evacuation of at least 8,000 people.

The warm, dry winds that drove the fire across 35 square miles of terrain covered with timber and brush continued through Monday night as sleep-starved firefighters struggled to hold their own against the 70-foot-high flames.

At least 142 structures, including 92 homes, were destroyed in an area about 60 miles northeast of Sacramento, authorities said. Some of the homes were valued at $1 million.

A preliminary estimate by the U.S. Forest Service put the loss in structures alone at more than $9 million, and the figure was expected to climb much higher.

"I was coming back from the Bahamas, sitting in San Francisco International Airport, and I see my father's house burning on television," said insurance agent Don Sanzone, 41.

Jim Mowner, a state forestry spokesman, said the continued stiff winds and low humidity were hampering firefighting.

"I would say the fire will burn actively overnight," he said Monday.

The blaze began early Sunday when a transient set fire to toilet paper. The unidentified man was cited for burning without a permit and released, authorities said.

About 4,500 residents of the affluent Lake Wildwood area were forced from their homes Sunday and Monday as erratic winds shifted the blaze. At least 3,500 people have been evacuated from the nearby communities of Smartville, Rough and Ready, and Penn Valley since Sunday.

Two firefighters suffered second- and third-degree burns. Their conditions were not immediately available.

The fire jumped Highway 20 and headed southwest on Monday, threatening hundreds of scattered, rural dwellings and forcing the latest round of evacuations.

"There are hundreds here and they are pouring in," said Red Cross worker Elizabeth Quirk at the Nevada Union High School evacuation center. "The school buses are bringing in senior citizens, and there are campers and motor homes in the parking lot."

A burned tree beside a destroyed home in the Lake Wildwood, Calif., area near Grass Valley is a grim reminder of a mountain fire that passed through the region.

Most schools were closed in the region. Thick smoke made it unsafe to operate school buses, and the Red Cross converted at least three schools into temporary evacuation centers.

By early today, the fire had burned more than 20,000 acres, or 35 square miles, of western Nevada County.

Flames threatened the high-technology Grass Valley Group, the county's largest employer with 1,000 workers. The fire reached three sides of the company's sprawling grounds, and destroyed a storage shed. The company produces video equipment used at television stations, and makes special-effects software for national television broadcasts.

The Yuba County Board of Supervisors met late Monday in emergency session to declare the zone a local disaster area, and expressed concern that the fire may threaten Beale Air Force Base near Marysville, 20 miles to the west of the fire and the home base of the SR-71 "Blackbird" spy plane.

The blaze was fueled by drought-dry brush, wood roofs and exploding propane tanks, said state Department of Forestry spokesman Charlie Jakobs.

The greatest concentration of damage was around Lake Wildwood, where at least 15 homes, five boats and a dock were destroyed. Nineteen other structures outside of the Lake Wildwood area were destroyed, including several residential trailers and agricultural buildings.

Another fire about 80 miles west of Lake Wildwood in the coast range of Sonoma County blackened more than 10 square miles, destroyed several structures and temporarily threatened Pacific Gas & Electric Co.'s geothermal plants.

Altogether, almost a dozen fires destroyed nearly 30,000 acres of timber and brush in California Monday. About 5,000 firefighters were on fire lines statewide.

Many park firefighters 'tough nuts', 'green'

POLEBRIDGE, Mont. — Two thousand miles from his wife and baby daughter, Jim Oliver, a 21-year-old unemployed construction worker from Elkins, W.Va., is shivering in the darkness in a tent in the forest here.

At sunrise, he returns to the front lines in the battle against the blazes, a war that has cost seven lives, $300 million and more than four million acres of pristine country, including almost a million in Yellowstone National Park.

More than 30,000 firefighters have been called into action, many of them young men like Oliver, who a month ago had never seen a national forest, let alone such raging fires.

"There's nothing much going in West Virginia," said Oliver, a bearded and burly man who speaks in a booming voice. "But this — this is adventure."

"We've got some pretty tough nuts out here," said Thomas Hope, a district ranger at Glacier National Park here, where 30,000 acres have been ravaged by fire. "But we've also got a lot of people who are pretty green, pretty naiive. They've gotten a 40-hour training session in eight hours."

The firefighting headquarters here, a rambling tableau of tents and trailers on a grassy field in a crook of the Rockies, has the look of a mining camp. Cold, dirty and tired, the firefighters return from the front lines in darkness and trudge into the tent-enclosed mess hall for beef, potatoes and beans, before going to sleep.

The luckier firefighters sleep in tents; the others sleep under the stars. There are no showers here, although some firefighters bathe in the lake.

The temperatures plunge into the 20's or teens here on some nights, and some crews from warmer climes have come unprepared for the cold air. The support team scurried to find enough extra coats and gloves, but there has not been enough to go around, and some of the workers have become sick from by the cold.

Her nose running and her face blackened with soot, 21-year-old Kim Keller crouched over a plate of supper not long before midnight. The Browning, Mont., woman and her husband, Charles, both signed up for action. They left their year-old son, Keith, with his grandparents.

"My in-laws were not too thrilled about me doing this," said Keller. "They said I'm too skinny to fight fires."

With flames advancing voraciously in the distance, Oliver shovels away furiously at the grass and brush to expose bare earth, drawing a line to stop the fire's march.

Others drive bulldozers to clear away the Lodgepole Pine and other trees from the Rocky Mountain terrain, depriving the fire of its fuel. Still others haul water hoses to douse smoldering trees and brush.

Some firefighters, like the parks and forestry workers, have been called by duty. Others, like prison inmates, have been summoned by obligation.

Many among the crews, among them Blackfoot and Kootenai Indians from reservations beset by unemployment, signed on for the $7.40-an-hour wage. Still others saw the fires as a rare chance to display valiance and daring.

U.S. urged to develop new arms control proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States should develop new proposals for U.S.-Soviet conventional arms control talks in case Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev succeeds in cutting back on military spending, says a key congressman.

The plans should be prepared even though there's no indication Gorbachev has yet been successful, said Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee.

"A central element of Gorbachev's 'new thinking' is that the Western threat can be reduced by political means — that is, arms control — which then reduces Soviet defense requirements," the report said.

"For Gorbachev, arms control can cut the size of the Western threat and a revised military doctrine can scale back the military's response to that threat," it said.

The panel's defense policy subcommittee concluded Monday that "to date, there have been no significant, identifiable changes traceable to Gorbachev's drive to scale back defense spending."

The study by the Democratic-run panel was based on a series of hearings, including testimony from the CIA, Defense Intelligence Agency, and other experts in government and private industry.

Republican members of the panel issued a dissent, disputing the majority's implication that the Soviets may be moving away from what the GOP legislators said is a drive to achieve nuclear superiority over the West.

"Gorbachev's reform agenda for the military is driven primarily by domestic concerns, not military or strategic factors. The equation is simple: In order for his economic reforms to succeed, Gorbachev must shift resources from the defense sector to civilian use."

Gorbachev has called for economic and military reforms aimed at shifting more spending into consumer goods and away from the huge Soviet military structure, Aspin noted.

"Gorbachev's reform agenda for the military is driven primarily by domestic concerns, not military or strategic factors," the study said. "The equation is simple: In order for his economic reforms to succeed, Gorbachev must shift resources from the defense sector to civilian use."

The current five-year plan began in 1986 and was developed before Gorbachev took power in March 1985, Aspin said at a news conference. Some changes may be seen in the Soviets' next five-year plan, he said.

"There is a growing consensus among the experts that Gorbachev intends to shift some of the Soviet Union's economic capacity from military to civilian use," said Aspin.

"What the United States ought to be doing is probing...We should move cautiously and carefully, but we should move," he said. "We need some concrete proposals in conventional arms."

He was referring to the long-stalled talks aimed at reducing nonnuclear weapons and troops in Europe.

The upcoming "year we're looking at is a critical year," Aspin said. "It's too bad the United States is in transition."

As the Reagan administration winds down, no new proposals are likely. In addition, a new administration will take six to eight months to prepare its plans, no matter whether Republican George Bush or Democrat Michael Dukakis is elected president, Aspin said.

U.S. officials have a difficult time estimating Soviet military spending, since the Soviets don't publish details about their programs.

The Soviets appear to be spending about 18 percent of their gross national product on defense, compared to about 6 percent for the United States, the study said. But the U.S. GNP is much larger.

Soviet military spending increased about 2 percent annually in the decade before Gorbachev took power, and has increased about 3 percent in each of the past two years.

The study cited the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces (INF) treaty, which includes strict verification procedures and bigger cuts in the Soviet arsenal than in the U.S. stockpile of weapons.

The GOP minority, led by Rep. William Dickinson, R-Ala., the ranking Republican on the committee, criticized part of the report.

"This report accepts, without the slightest qualification, the idea that the Soviet leadership has accepted the implications of nuclear parity — implicitly meaning that the Soviets reject the concepts of superiority, pre-emption, first use and victory," the GOP members said.

Prehistoric artifacts found in Old Barracks Museum

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — Archaeologists sifting through the rubble of a colonial barracks that housed Hessian soldiers defeated by George Washington in the Revolutionary War have found some surprises: prehistoric artifacts almost 4,000 years old.

"It's really turning out to be a very exciting project," project director Ian Burrows said Monday. "It shows there are well-preserved prehistoric remains right underneath Trenton."

The dig by the Hunter Research Associates archaeological firm began about four weeks ago in this state capital as part of the $2.4 million renovation of Old Barracks Museum.

The barracks — a bunkhouse where soldiers lived joined to an officers' house — was built in 1758. It was used at various times through history to house British and American soldiers, smallpox victims and single women and widows. The original no longer stands, and a reconstruction forms the museum.

However, the structure is best known for its significance in the Battle of Trenton in 1776. In December of that year, Gen. Washington's warweary soldiers crossed the Delaware River into New Jersey and defeated Hessian troops stationed at the barracks.

It marked the first time Hessians — West German mercenaries who fought for the British — were defeated by Washington, who went on to win several key victories.

The state hired Burrows' firm to determine the original layout of the building, as well as to find the parade grounds where soldiers performed military drills.

But in the course of their work, the archaeologists discovered artifacts and sites dating back nearly 4,000 years.

For instance, near the southwest section of the building, workers found projectile points — some resembling arrowheads — and other artifacts dating back to 2000 B.C., said Dick Regensburg, a prehistoric specialist working on the project.

Walker rolls over Phoenix

Cowboys ruin Arizona's NFL debut

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — The Cardinals may have moved from St. Louis to Phoenix, but one thing hasn't changed — they still can't stop Dallas Cowboys running back Herschel Walker.

Walker rushed for 149 yards on 29 carries, scored one touchdown and set up the clincher in the fourth quarter as the Cowboys beat the Cardinals 17-14 Monday night in the first NFL regular-season game ever played in Arizona.

"Herschel did it almost all by himself. A lot of times, he didn't have good blocking," Dallas coach Tom Landry said. "I think he's going to run this way every week. If we can get him out in the open more, he'll be devastating."

WALKER TOOK a pitchout and scored on a 3-yard run around left end with 4:35 remaining in the second quarter to put the Cowboys ahead to stay at 10-7.

He knocked over a television cameraman in the end zone on the play, sending the man to a local hospital with a bruised arm and cut under an eye.

"I hope the guy is OK. I know I took a pretty good shot to the back of the head myself," Walker said. "It was just a little sweep play. I got the ball and headed for the end zone, that's all."

The 1982 Heisman Trophy winner from Georgia almost did it all himself on a 13-play, 81-yard drive in the fourth quarter. He gained 58 yards on nine carries and got the ball down to the 1-yard line where Steve Pelluer's quarterback sneak made it 17-7 with 5:23 remaining.

"It was a great drive," said Pelluer, who finished 12-of-24 for 162 yards with one interception. "Phoenix had a tough zone defense, so we kept calling Herschel's number and he got us the yards."

The drive started with 10:22 left and was delayed for several minutes as the near-capacity crowd of 67,139 at Sun Devil Stadium caused such a din that Pelluer couldn't call the signals.

"We weren't trying to encourage the crowd," Phoenix coach Gene Stallings said. "I tried to quiet them a few times, but it wasn't that bad. The problem was we couldn't stop Herschel Walker."

The 6-foot-1, 225-pound Walker had averaged 100.3 yards in four previous games against the Cardinals and scored four touchdowns. He had 137 yards and two touchdowns on 25 carries in the Cowboys' 21-16 victory in the 1987 regular-season finale — denying St. Louis its first playoff berth since 1982.

DALLAS, 1-1 this season, is now 33-18-1 in the all-time series with its NFC East rival and 13-0 against the Cardinals in games where one of its running backs has gained at least 100 yards.

Walker had his first 100-yard game in the NFL against the Cardinals in 1986 and the first 100-yard game of his pro career here in 1983 as a member of the USFL's New Jersey Generals.

The 98-degree Arizona heat didn't bother him.

"I felt good. During training camp, we ran a great deal in the heat in Dallas trying to get ready for games like this," Walker said. "We were in great shape."

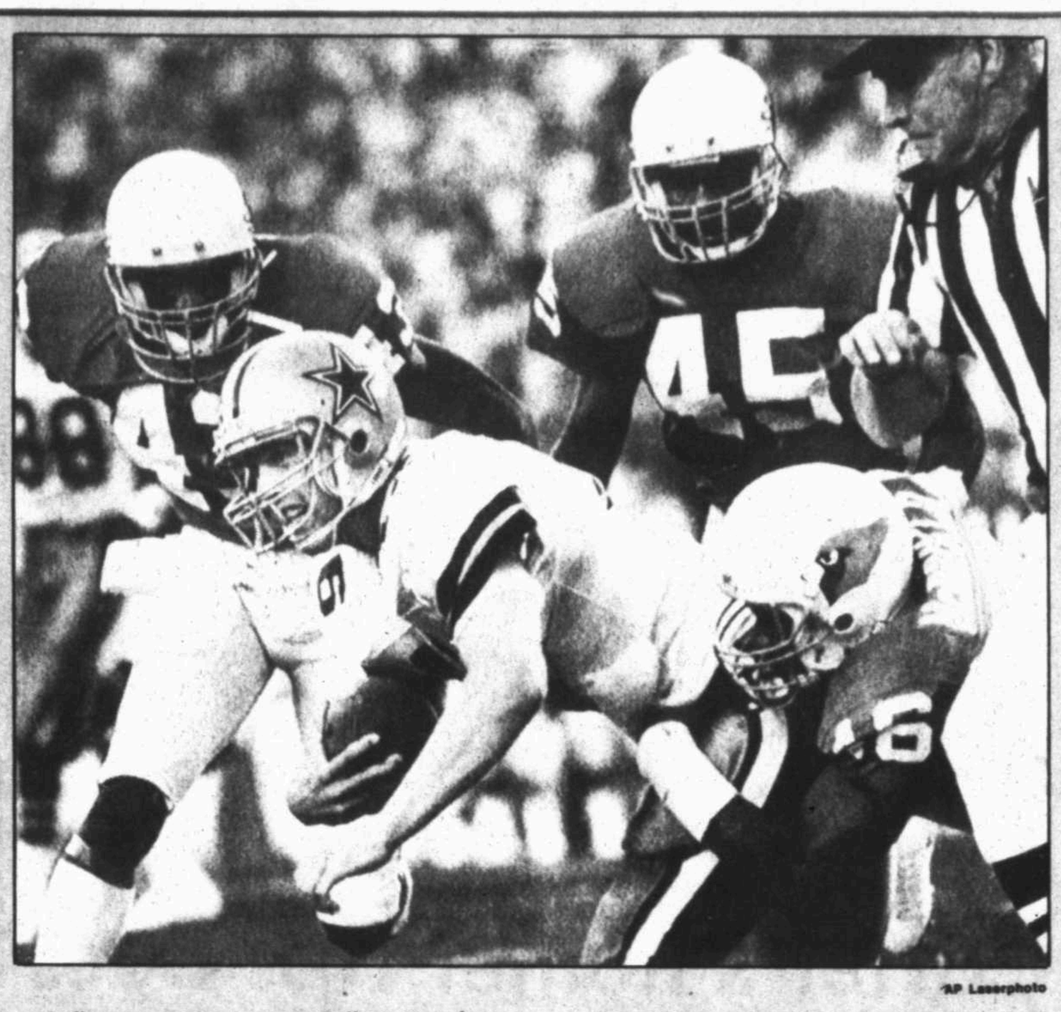

Phoenix, 0-2, seemed to be in position to at least force overtime after closing to 17-14 on Neil Lomax's 23-yard touchdown pass to tight end Jay Novacek with 3:52 to go in the game.

But a pass-interference call on cornerback Reggie Phillips on a third-and-12 play gave the Cowboys a first down with 1:50 remaining and they ran out the clock.

The Cardinals also hurt themselves with four crucial mistakes, two involving placekicker Al Del Greco. He was wide left on a 40-yard attempt with 1:27 left in the first quarter and was tackled at the Dallas 16 after a fake field goal try on the half's final play.

"We weren't sure we could kick it," Stallings said. "Del Greco missed one and he wasn't even kicking that good before the game started."

Foursome joins Skins Game

NEW YORK (AP) — Curtis Strange and Ray Floyd will join Jack Nicklaus and Lee Trevino in golf's Skins Game this year, tournament sponsors announced Tuesday.

The announcement was made jointly by Don Ohlmeyer, president of Ohlmeyer Communications, and Barry Frank of Trans World International.

Strange and Floyd, each making his first appearance in the four-man competition, were selected by the vote of a select panel of golf writers, executives, officials and administrators, according to the announcement.

They replace Arnold Palmer, now plans to compete in the Seniors Skins Game, and Fuzzy Zoeller.

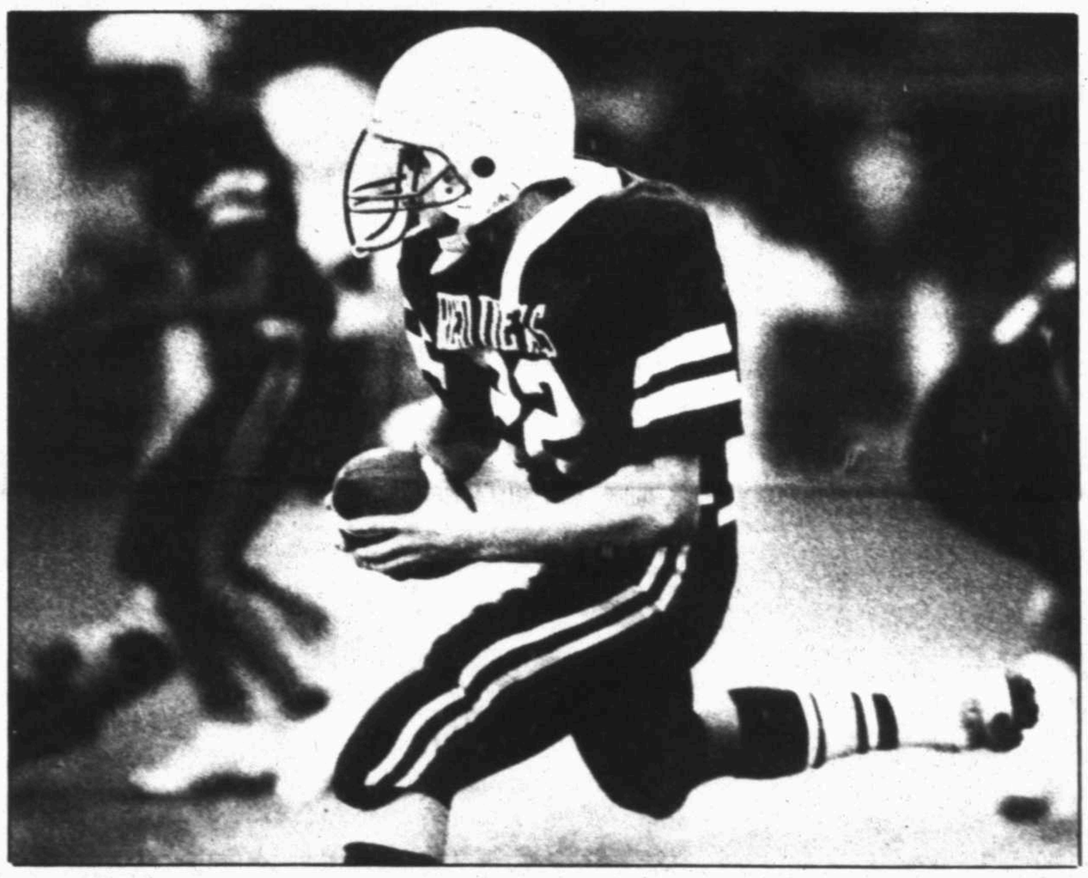

Strange, who set a single-season earnings record last year, has won three titles this season, including the U.S. Open.

Floyd, 46, has been named captain of the 1989 U.S. Ryder Cup team. His 21 career victories include the 1976 Masters, 1986 U.S. Open and 1969 and 1982 PGA national championships.

Trevino returns as the defending champion. He won $285,000 in the Skins Game last year, including $175,000 for a 6-iron shot that found the cup for a hole-in-one on the 17th.

Nicklaus, the sponsors' choice, has competed in all six Skins Games.

The purse remains at $450,000, with each of the first six holes worth $15,000 apiece, the next six $25,000 and the last six $35,000 each.

Olympic organizers avoid ceremony flap

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Olympic organizers said Tuesday that all athletes could march in the showcase parade at the opening ceremonies, after U.S. athletes threatened a boycott if limits were imposed.

"Any athlete who wants to take part in the parade and ceremonies can do so," the Seoul Olympic Organizing Committee said. "It is their right."

The U.S. Olympic Committee and many of its 611 athletes were upset by what one of its officials said were plans to limit the parade to 8,000 marchers.

Athletes from other nations expressed dismay as well, and the Australians said they would have ignored any limits.

That would have meant limits on the number of athletes who took part and may have left more than half of the American delegation out of the parade. About 13,000 athletes are expected to compete in Seoul.

There have been limits placed on the number of marchers in previous Games but never so drastic.

Some athletes were ready to take action.

Robert D. Espeseth, a member of the U.S. rowing team, said: "We're all going in there. Either we all march or none of us do."

An Olympic official said that to deny an athlete a chance to march in the emotional procession would mean taking away "the culmination of the Olympic dream itself."

Later Tuesday, however, SLOOC said it was all a misunderstanding.

While acknowledging that it and the IOC "have been looking at ways to reduce the time it would take to hold the largest ever parade of Olympic athletes and officials," it said that all athletes could march.

"No athlete from any country will be refused the right to participate in the parade," SLOOC said.

It said the maximum 8,000 marchers it expected was based on the number of athletes and officials scheduled to be in Seoul by opening day Saturday. There already are almost 8,500 in the Olympic Village.

SLOOC said it was aiming for a short parade "to ensure the opening ceremonies remain as visually spectacular and exciting as possible."

Earlier, SLOOC officials said no limits would be imposed if the number of athletes in the Olympic Village by Saturday remained under 8,500.

"If the number stays about where it is now, there will be no problem," said Shin Hyon-ung, SLOOC's director general of international press and public relations.

Steer quarterback Rance Thompson still in saddle

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Nine-of-25 may not sound like much of a pass completion percentage, and it isn't. But when three of those nine go for touchdowns, as they did for Big Spring quarterback Rance Thompson on Friday, one tends to overlook the misses.

Consequently, Steer coach David Thompson was glad to hear that his son, the quarterback, should be ready to go against Plainview this coming Friday after taking a fearsome hit in the final seconds against Lubbock Estacado last week.

The younger Thompson went down with a neck injury after being hit by an Estacado defender while passing with 10 seconds left. The junior was taken to a Big Spring hospital, but emerged with a jammed neck.

"We didn't think it was serious, but any time you have a neck injury you want to be careful," coach Thompson said. QB Thompson finished with 222 passing yards, including touchdown strikes of 15 and 58 yards to wingback Tony Lewis and a 65-yard bomb to John Wofford.

Area Football Roundup

Lewis finished with six catches for 137 yards against the highly-regarded Estacado defense. The Steers finished with 367 yards total offense, but Thompson said mistakes killed them in the 30-18 Estacado victory.

"Our mistakes hurt us," he said. "Going in motion and jumping offsides were problems."

Big Spring suffered nine penalties for 60 yards, many in key situations. Thompson said some of the problem could be written off as first-game jitters.

"I don't think they could hear the snap count," Thompson said. "They have to understand that there will be 6,000 people or so at every game and they just have to get used to it."

Young Thompson got plenty of protection from a line that included center Terry Ward, tackles Jesse Rios and Mike Cavi), and guards John Sotelo and Pete Buske. "All of our offensive linemen played better as the game went on," coach Thompson said.

Defensively, Estacado rushed for 382 yards and four touchdowns against the Steers. But Thompson still saw some bright spots.

"We played some hard defense, but they scored on stuff like a 70-yard counter play (by tailback Steven Norris in the fourth period)."

Still, middle linebacker Jason Phillips collected 18 tackles, while outside backer Chris Mason and defensive end Kevin Pirkle had 17 stops each.

So, it's on to Plainview for Friday's game with the Bulldogs, who lost to Estacado in the first week of the season.

"They don't have near as much speed as Estacado, but they're bigger," Thompson said.

Friday's game will be a reunion of sorts for Thompson and Plainview mentor Steve Parr, who coached against each other at Post and Slaton, respectively.

"He's beat the dog out of me three times," Parr said. The Post-Slaton rivalry sparked some hot feelings in the last three years between fans, as a Slaton school bus was vandalized after one game.

AROUND THE AREA: Troy Kennedy doesn't want his Rankin Red Devils to wait on big plays, but that tack hasn't hurt the Devils in a 2-0 start.

After burning Iraan for repeated big plays in the first week, the Devils scored a troika of TD's on plays beginning from their own half of the field in a 22-7 win over Forsan.

Quarterback Doug Braden got Rankin started with a 61-yard scoring play in the first period. The junior then executed the option perfectly to spring halfback Joe Abalos on scoring runs of 66 and 61 yards.

Abalos finished with 228 yards on nine carries. But Kennedy would just as soon the Red Devils got some sustained drives going.

"I don't know if we're setting back and waiting for the big play, but I don't want to get into the habit of it," he said. "The kids need to get more confident in our offense for us to get some sustained drives going."

The Devils face 1-1 Grandfalls on Friday. Grandfalls was whacked by Garden City 30-8 last week, but Kennedy said that score may be misleading.

Pecos girl gains seventh grade football spot

PECOS (AP) — With her short hair and medium stature, Bernadette Tellez tends to blend in with her fellow seventh-graders on the practice football field at Zavala Junior High.

But Bernadette hopes she stands out during games when she becomes the first female football player for the Pecos-Barstow-Toyah school system.

During tryouts, Bernadette said she hasn't had any problems being the lone girl on the squad.

"They all seem to want me to play," she said of her fellow players. "I've played with the boys all the time before. I'm just going to have to do better than the other boys out here."

Bernadette comes from a football-fanatic family. Her older brother, Dominique Tellez, was the top running back last year on the Pecos seventh-grade football team. Her father coached flag football.

Still, it came as a surprise when Bernadette told her parents she wanted to strap on a helmet and shoulder pads, said her mother, Olga Tellez.

"It kind of shocked us when she told us she was going out for football," Mrs. Tellez said. "We told her to go out for volleyball, but my husband had coached flag football for a long time. I guess she was more comfortable playing football than volleyball right now."

Seventh-grade football coach Mike Parent said Bernadette already has agreed to play whatever position the team needs — probably at end or halfback on offense and at defensive halfback on the other side of the line.

Billionaire Gaylord ponders decision to buy Rangers

DALLAS (AP) — The man who can step in and prevent the Texas Rangers from being sold to a group committed to bringing major league baseball to Tampa, Fla., says he won't need much longer to make his decision.

Media and entertainment billionaire Edward L. Gaylord of Oklahoma City is quoted in today's editions of the Dallas Morning News as saying he expects to decide by the middle of this week whether to exercise his right of first refusal to buy Eddie Chiles' 58 percent of the American League baseball club.

Chiles has reached an agreement in principal to sell his share to Bill Mack, a New Jersey real estate investor, and Frank Morsani, a Tampa, Fla., automobile dealer. Gaylord has until Sept. 23 to match the offer.

Owners at that time expressed concern about Gaylord's ownership of KTVT-TV and the possibility that it could become a wide-scaled "superstation."

Gaylord, 69, is a controversial figure in Oklahoma — revered by some and loathed by others.

Catcher Gary Carter is greeted at home plate by New York Mets' teammates after his dramatic ninth inning homer beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 3-2 Monday night.

Carter's homer rips Bucs

Mets' now start counting magic numbers

Associated Press

The New York Mets' countdown to that magic moment is starting.

Gary Carter hit a home run with one out in the ninth inning to give New York a 3-2 victory over visiting Pittsburgh on Monday night, reducing the Mets' magic number for clinching the National League East title to 10.

It was the Mets' fifth straight victory and their 15th in 19 games as they moved 11 games ahead of the second-place Pirates.

"They are the best team in the league. Ask all the other managers, they will tell you the same thing," Pittsburgh manager Jim Leyland said.

"I'm not frustrated because I'm doing what I love. However, I am frustrated about the losses," Leyland added. "Still, we are far from behind the class of New York right now."

Carter used to be in a class by himself among major-league catchers, too. But he had a long homer drought in the middle of the season when he was looking for his 300th homer and has only 46 runs batted in.

Jeff Robinson, 9-5, relieved Doug Drabek to start the ninth, and after Howard Johnson fouled out to third base, Carter hit his 11th homer and 302nd of his career.

"It's nice to start off the (10-game) home stand in dramatic style like this," Carter said. "These are not Gary Carter numbers that I have this season.

"Hopefully, I can finish off strong in the regular season, and carry this into the playoffs and World Series."

Rookie Gregg Jefferies went 4-for-4 for New York and is 24-for-52, .462, since being called up from Class AAA Tidewater.

"I just go out and try to hit the ball hard, and do something to help us win," Jefferies said. "If I went one-for-four and we won, I'd be happy. Gary got the big hit and (Ron) Darling pitched well, they're the real heroes."

Carter and first baseman Keith Hernandez are co-captains on the Mets and have been helping Jefferies adjust to life as a big-league star.

"He's such a good kid," Carter said "He had adversity (a slump in Class AAA Tidewater) and that was probably good for him."

Darling pitched 8 2-3 innings for New York and allowed two runs and seven hits and Randy Myers, 6-3, got the last out in the top of the ninth for the victory.

National League

Dodgers 5, Braves 4

Mickey Hatcher drove in two runs and Tim Leary won his 17th game as Los Angeles beat Atlanta at Dodger Stadium. The victory reduced the Dodgers' magic number for clinching the NL West title to 15.

Leary improved his lifetime record against Atlanta to 5-0 with the help of relievers Ricky Horton and Alejandro Pena. Pena pitched one-hit ball over the final 2 1-3 innings for his 10th save.

Phillies 5, Cubs 1

Bob Dernier's run-scoring single snapped a seventh-inning tie and rookie Ron Jones drove in three runs as Philadelphia sent visiting Chicago to its fifth straight loss.

Don Carman, 10-11, allowed four hits in seven innings to break a personal six-game losing streak and Kent Tekulve finished for his fourth save.

Expos 14, Cardinals 2

Nelson Santovenia drove in five runs and Rex Hudler three more as Montreal snapped St. Louis' seven-game winning streak.

The Expos set a season-high for runs and broke out of a weekend scoring drought that saw them go 22 2-3 innings without a run while being shut out twice in three games by New York at Olympic Stadium.

Bryn Smith, 11-9, went six innings for the victory while Joe Magrane, 4-9 took the loss.

Giants 4, Padres 2

Dennis Cook allowed no runs and two hits over 5 1-3 innings in his major-league debut as visiting San Francisco beat San Diego.

Cook, just recalled from Class AAA Phoenix, combined with Craig Lefferts, Roger Samuels, Scott Garrelts and Joe Price for the victory.

Carmelo Martinez led off the Padres' ninth with his 14th home run to break up the shutout bid, and Keith Moreland followed with another homer off Samuels. Garrelts came on and got one out before Price finished for his third save.

Boston, Detroit win; Brewers lose

Associated Press

This time, not even Claudell Washington could save the New York Yankees.

Washington, whose two game-winning homers during the weekend pulled New York back into the American League East, struck out to end a furious ninth-inning rally Monday night as the Cleveland Indians held off the Yankees 8-6.

The Yankees slipped 4½ games behind division-leading Boston, which beat Baltimore 6-1. Detroit, winning for just the fourth time in 21 tries, defeated Toronto 6-5 and remained 3½ behind the Red Sox.

Trailing 8-1, the Yankees rallied for five runs in the ninth on a three-run homer by Jack Clark and solo homers by Luis Aguayo and Joel Skinner.

Rafael Santana and Rickey Henderson singled with two outs, bringing up Washington.

On Friday night, Washington homered in the ninth to beat Detroit. His two-run homer in the 18th inning Sunday also meant victory and a four-game sweep of the Tigers.

Facing Cleveland relief ace Doug Jones, Washington hit a line drive down the right-field line that landed inches foul.

"I was right on that pitch," Washington said. "I thought it had a chance, but it hooked foul."

Jones, who has allowed only one homer in his last 135 innings, then fanned Washington for his 33rd save.

"I don't think anybody expected to get seven runs in the ninth to tie it or eight to win it," said Don Mattingly, whose one-out single started the Yankees' comeback. "But we weren't going to quit. If you lose that game, you'd rather lose it 8-6 the way we did than lose 8-1 and be dominated all the way through."

Milwaukee, trying to cling close in the AL East, also lost a tough game when Chicago scored twice in the bottom of the ninth for a 2-1 victory. The loss dropped the Brewers 5½ games behind Boston.

Greg Swindell, who six days ago beat New York 1-0 with a three-hitter, improved to 16-13. He had little trouble before the ninth inning when Clark hit his 25th homer and Aguayo hit his second. Skinner homered against Brad Havens.

"I was trying to get it over with sooner than it should have been," Swindell said. "I was rushing. I just have to learn when I'm starting to do that, I have to take a deep breath and relax."

Tommy John, 9-8, took the loss. He gave up seven runs on seven hits in 3 2-3 innings.

Cory Snyder returned after an eight-day layoff because of a broken foot and got three hits and drove in two runs.

Snyder's RBI double highlighted a four-run second inning and rookie Luis Medina hit a two-run homer in the fourth against Charles Hudson.

American League

Red Sox 6, Orioles 1

Bruce Hurst won his 17th game and Ellis Burks got three hits and scored three runs as Boston beat Baltimore.

Hurst, 17-5, is 11-1 in games following Red Sox losses. He allowed one run in 6 2-3 innings and won for the eighth time in nine decisions.

Hurst is 12-1 at home this season and won his 55th career game at Fenway Park. He is tied with Babe Ruth for second place for victories among left-handers at Fenway; Mel Parnell leads with 71.

Curt Schilling, acquired by the Orioles in the trade that sent Mike Boddicker to Boston on July 29, lost his first major league decision. He left in the second inning as Boston took a 5-0 lead.

Baltimore's Eddie Murray got three hits, giving him 2,001 in his career. He is the 18th active player to reach 2,000.

Tigers 6, Blue Jays 5

Chet Lemon hit a three-run homer and scored the tiebreaking run in the eighth inning on Darrell Evans' pinch-single as Detroit won at Toronto.

The Tigers have won only four of their last 21 games. Detroit had lost its last four during the sweep in New York.

Lemon's 12th homer gave the Tigers a 4-1 lead in the sixth. Pat Borders' two-run triple keyed Toronto's three-run rally in the seventh that made it 4-4.

Lemon drew a leadoff walk in the eighth from Tom Henke, 3-4, and advanced on a sacrifice. Evans followed with his single, and Fred Lynn hit his 21st homer in the ninth.

Mark Huismann, 1-0, got the victory. Guillermo Hernandez relieved with runners on second and third and one out in the ninth, leading 6-4. Hernandez escaped trouble, allowing Lloyd Moseby's RBI grounder, for his ninth save.

White Sox 2, Brewers 1

Mike Diaz and pinch hitter Russ Morman singled home runs with two outs in the ninth inning, foiling Milwaukee's strategy as Chicago rallied to win.

With two outs in the ninth, Harold Baines doubled off Dan Plesac, 1-2. The Brewers then intentionally walked Carlton Fisk, but Morman and Diaz followed with RBI singles.

Barry Jones, 1-2, got the victory.

Robin Yount's run-scoring single in the eighth put Milwaukee ahead. Yount robbed Dave Gallagher of a home run with a leaping catch above the center field fence to start the ninth.

Mike Birkbeck shut out the White Sox on four hits in seven innings. Jerry Reuss had retired 18 straight Brewers and allowed only two hits entering the eighth.

Mariners 3, Twins 1

Henry Cotto hit a leadoff home run in the first inning and Mike Moore pitched a five-hitter as Seattle beat Minnesota in the Kingdome.

Cotto's eighth homer marked the first by the Mariners leading off the first inning this season. Cotto connected against Allan Anderson, 13-9, who lost for the second time in nine decisions.

Moore, 8-14, struck out six and walked one in his team-leading eighth complete game.

Meagher hits pool one more time

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — When she was young and carefree, swimming was so much simpler for Mary T. Meagher. Just jump in the pool and go faster than everyone else.

She had buoyant optimism and a firm determination to go with her unmatched skills.

"In the old days," U.S. Olympic swimming coach Richard Quick said, "she swam like hell and said, 'Can anybody beat me?' "

The answer, usually, was no.

Now she is all of 23, and it's time to get on with life, it's time to find a more permanent place in the world than the changing currents of pools in strange cities.

"Besides," the bubbly Meagher said, "I'd love to get married and raise a family."

But her answer to another question keeps her treading water — a normal life will have to wait — while speeding through it in her rush, she hopes, toward more Olympic gold.

"Do I really want to be doing this?" she asked herself.

She agonized over it while enduring the agony of predawn workouts.

The answer, finally, was yes.

So she is in Seoul, defending her 1984 Olympic victories in the 100-meter and 200-meter butterfly with chances of winning gold medals in both, although she was displeased with her performances at the Olympic Trials. She also was part of the victorious U.S. 400-meter medley relay team four years ago.

Meagher has won 22 national titles. She is still the one to beat at 200 meters. She has eight of the world's top 10 times at the shorter distance.

In August 1981, when she was just 16, the Louisville, Ky., native set astounding records in both those individual events at the U.S. long-course championships in Brown Deer, Wis.

Her performances were so exceptional — 57.93 seconds in the 100 and 2:05.96 in the 200 — that no one has done better since. Her 100-meter time was a huge 1.33 seconds faster than her own world record.

"She was just perfect that day," Quick said.

But that was another day.

"When she was young, she did everything 100 percent all the time," he said. "She did it without asking herself any questions."

"My pain threshold isn't as high as it used to be," Meagher said. "I loved to work hard and feel sick after every workout and now I just can't push myself that hard."

Last March Mary T. took a break from training, slept late, and made time for lunch dates with friends. She resumed Olympics workouts last August, often getting up at 4 a.m.

"I took five months off and I had to reprogram myself to get back into that disciplined mode and get thrills out of swimming even though I knew I'd be very happy not swimming," said Meagher, who is interested in doing television or public relations work.

"The beginning wasn't too bad because I only had to swim an hour and I'd be exhausted. It's when I had to start doing double workouts (that she began wondering). It was really back then — December, January, February — when I really had to sit down and re-evaluate once again, 'Do I want to be doing this?'

"I get antsy to move on with my life, especially with all my peers graduating from college, getting jobs, going to Europe, all that. And here I am, doing the same old thing."

Quick said, "There's a little battle going on inside Mary T. about whether she ought to be swimming and how much she should put into it.

COWBOYS

Phoenix's rookie running back Tony Jordan also was stripped of the ball by Ed "Too Tall" Jones, who recovered the fumble at the Cowboys' 27-yard line with 4:46 remaining in the third quarter.

And Pro Bowl offensive tackle Luis Sharpe was called for an illegal formation, nullifying a 34-yard completion from Lomax to J.T. Smith to the Dallas 9 early in the third quarter.

"That's the worst call I've ever experienced, or the second worst," said Lomax, who completed 20 of 34 passes for 266 yards. "I'm in the shotgun and you can't see it. But the offensive linemen always line up a little bit back in that situation.

"Jords' fumble hurt and there was that penalty," Lomax added. "Take away those two and it was a different game."

Dallas had taken a 3-0 lead on Luis Zendejas' 47-yard field goal with 6:55 left in the first quarter.

Zendejas, who kicked here at Arizona State from 1981-84 and set the then all-time NCAA scoring record of 368 points, had a 49-yard field goal attempt blocked with 9:23 remaining in the third quarter.

Lomax's 16-yard touchdown pass to fullback Earl Ferrell 2:42 into the second quarter put Phoenix ahead 7-3.

Walker, with 54 yards on nine carries at halftime, then took over.

"The coaches mentioned that we had to run the ball a little harder in the second half," he said. "We had to put pressure on them and that's what we did."

Oil price roller coaster dips again

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil prices this morning picked up where they left off on Monday, opening 13 cents higher at $14.62 per barrel for October-delivery futures contracts. However, the optimism is proving hard to sustain.

By midday, prices fell back 19 cents to $14.43 at noon (EDT).

After flirting with the $13.75 mark early Monday afternoon, oil futures surged back late in the day after Saudi King Fahd called for joint cooperation between OPEC and non-OPEC producers in establishing production limits.

As prices spent nearly all day below $14, two local crude purchasers dropped the posted price they pay to producers. Sun Marketing & Refining Co. and Koch Oil Co. each lowered their posting 75 cents per barrel to $13.25 effective Monday.

"Purchasers jumped the gun lowering their posted price," said Glenn Brant, president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association. Buyers should be helping to stabilize prices, but such quick reactions tend to have the opposite effect, he said.

"We considered moving but didn't and since the market closed up and opened even higher, we'll stay at $14 for the time being," said another local buyer.

Speculation that Fahd's announcement could signal Saudi Arabia taking the lead in curbing OPEC production is likely to stabilize prices in their current range, traders say.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the October contract for delivery of West Texas Intermediate settled up 31 cents a barrel at $14.49. The contract had dropped to $13.75 earlier in the day, the lowest level since oil traded for $13.73 on Oct. 29, 1986.

George Konikowski, an analyst at Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co., said Fahd's statement could indicate Saudi Arabia — the world's biggest crude exporter — was moving to take a leadership role and lower its own oil production.

Two years ago when oil prices hit similar lows, Saudi production curbs helped reverse the market's decline, traders said.

"If the king says he doesn't want the market to go much lower you would think the Saudis would set some limits," said Peter Beutel, an energy analyst with Elders Futures Inc. "It looks like prices are going to stabilize in this range."

Monday's early selloff was fueled by anxieties about the continuing world oil glut.

Analysts said Fahd's statement came as the market was looking for positive news following a string of negative indicators that had steadily eroded prices.

Fahd's statement, reported by the official Saudi Press Agency following a weekly government Cabinet session, had a strong impact on the market because the king rarely makes public statement related to the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, brokers said.

Gov. Richard F. Celeste of Ohio, center, is flanked by Nissan Motor Co. director Yoshio Arakawa, left, and Yoshio Eguchi, as they announce plans to jointly manufacture minivans with Ford Motor Co. in Ohio. Celeste said he expected that Ohio's contribution to the project, totaling $22.5 million, would be repaid in less than three years through newly generated state and local taxes. He added that the project would create 1,300 jobs.

Oil prices open higher after rally

On the New York Mercantile Exchange this morning, prices for near-term contracts of crude oil opened slightly higher than Monday's closing prices.

Crude futures prices had skidded below $14 a barrel Monday but then surged higher in the final hour of trading after Saudi King Fahd called for joint cooperation between OPEC and non-OPEC producers in establishing production limits.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the October contract for delivery of West Texas Intermediate was trading between $14.50 and $14.58 a barrel in early trading today, compared with Monday's $14.49 closing price. Before the late rally Monday, the contract had dropped to $13.75, the lowest level since oil traded for $13.73 on Oct. 29, 1986.

Contracts for refined oil products also were trading higher this morning.

Dollar moves up before trade report

LONDON (AP) — The dollar edged up slightly against major currencies today in quiet trading before the release of U.S. trade figures Wednesday.

Gold prices firmed following their sharp fall Monday.

Foreign exchange dealers said the U.S. currency would most likely trade in a narrow range before the release of the U.S. July trade figures.

In Tokyo, the dollar dropped 0.35 yen to close at 133.07 and dealers said the market was moving slowly while awaiting the trade figures.

Later, in London, the dollar was quoted at 133.15 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Monday:

—1.8455 West German marks, up from 1.8453

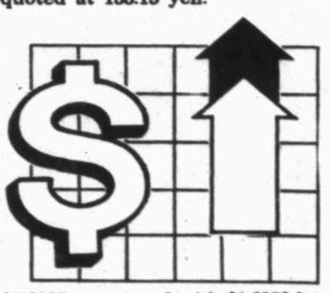

—1.5565 Swiss francs, up from 1.5535

—6.2807 French francs, up from 6.2775

—2.0822 Dutch guilders, up from 2.0817

—1,379.50 Italian lire, up from 1,378.50

—1.2365 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2395

In London, one British pound cost $1.6985, compared with $1.6958 late Monday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $420.50 a troy ounce, up from a $419.25 bid late Monday. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $420.80.

One London dealer said gold appeared hemmed in a tight range for the near future because it found strong support between $417 and $420 an ounce.

In Zurich, the bid price was $420.40, up from $418 late Monday.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $6.43 a troy ounce, up from Monday's $6.41.

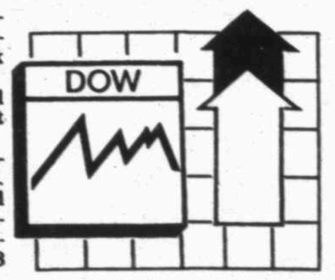

Stocks rise during listless session

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market showed little movement in a listless session Monday, unable to break its recent stalemate.

Some blue chip issues attracted buyers, but the rest of the market sagged.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials edged up 3.56 points to 2,072.37.

But declining issues out-numbered advances by nearly 4 to 3 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 606 up, 788 down and 536 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 114.88 million shares, down from 141.54 million Friday and the lightest total since a 108.72 million-share day on Aug. 30.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market lost $1.99 billion, or 0.07 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped .21 to 150.63.

Standard & Poor's industrial index fell .22 to 305.75, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was down .37 at 266.47.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market gained .47 to 382.07. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 296.67, down .78.

Hefner gives reins of empire to daughter

CHICAGO (AP) — Hugh Hefner, the jet-setting founder of Playboy magazine, says he is giving his daughter, Christie Hefner, full command of the business empire he built from a $600 investment into a symbol of sexual liberation.

Hefner, 62, announced Monday he won't run for re-election as chairman and chief executive officer of Playboy Enterprises Inc. at the board of directors' meeting in November.

The company also revealed it would receive "a substantial seven-figure advance" from Bantam Books Inc., which is publishing Hefner's autobiography.

IBM rivals offer different 'bus' service

NEW YORK (AP) — Rivals of International Business Machines Corp. are bringing out a new "bus" for the flow of communications inside personal computers that differs from IBM's own.

The new standard rivals the Micro Channel used inside IBM's Personal System-2 line and could hamper sales of the PS-2, analysts say.

Details of the new standard were scheduled to be announced today by the PC makers, led by Compaq Computer Corp. of Houston.

Report: FHLBB officials being overpaid

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 500 federal savings institution regulators have been exempted illegally from government salary limits, according to a congressional report.

The General Accounting Office, in a report Monday, said employees of three subsidiaries of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board are, in fact, federal employees and should be subject to civil service pay classifications. The top civil service salary is $75,500 a year.

Salaries have ranged as high as $150,000.

Apple raises personal computer prices

CUPERTINO, Calif. (AP) — Apple Computer Inc. announced price increases ranging up to 29 percent for some of its personal computers, external drives, monitors, printers and expansion kits.

One reason for the increases is that computer memory chips have gone up in price. Because of strong sales, Apple has been forced to buy some chips at premium prices on the spot market, the company said Monday.

The Macintosh II rose 29 percent to $4,869 from $3,769. The price of the Macintosh Plus remains unchanged at $1,799.

Texas American won't make interest payments

FORT WORTH (AP) — Releasing only a 30-word statement, merger-bound Texas American Bancshares Inc. announced that it won't make its scheduled payment of interest on its $40 million, 15 1-2 percent notes due in 1992.

The interest payments were schedled to be made this Thursday.

"The release will stand on its own, with no further comment," said company spokeswoman Erin Bergeron.

The company on July 26 announced losses of $135.3 million for the second quarter of 1988, reducing stockholder equity from $163.5 million to $28.2 million.

"The increase in reserve and the increase in nonperforming assets reflect the decline in real estate values in Texas," said Joseph M. Grant, the chairman of Texas American, in releasing the second-quarter report.

On July 20, Texas American had announced a plan to merge with National Bancshares Corp. of Texas. Under the proposal, Minnesota sports franchise owner and investor Carl R. Pohlad and his companies would provide up to $200 million of capital in exhcnage for up to 85 percent of the new company.

The plan also would call for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to kick in $475 million in exchange for a subordinated non-interest bearing note and an equity participatinon interest equivalent to 10 percent of the new company's equity.

Under the merger, existing shareholders of Texas American and National Bancshares would initially receive 5 percent equity interest in the new company.

"Merger discussions are on schedule and we're optimistic that negotiations will be successful," said spokeswoman Renee Mitcham.

Regulators quicken thrift rescue action

New York Times News Service

Wall

SAN DIEGO — Federal regulators expect to close or merge 50 more ailing savings and loan associations by the end of the month, M. Danny Wall, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, said Monday.

The action shows that the Bank board is moving to deal more quickly with troubled savings institutions. So far this year, 102 institutions have been closed or merged.

"It takes time to get that ocean liner up to speed," said Wall, referring to the magnitude of the bank board's task.

In January, the bank board said it planned to resolve the problems at 259 institutions this year.

The pace of deal-making was far less hectic when the bank board began its Southwest Plan in May to take care of the many troubled savings institutions in Texas and Oklahoma, Wall told savings industry executives at a meeting here.

"Those first deals in Texas were loss leaders," Wall said.

"They were not give-aways," he said later in an interview. "But there were not a lot of bidders and we didn't get as much capital as we'd like. They weren't attractive franchises and didn't have good reputations."

Wall described two early deals to show how the situation has changed. He said the Southwest Savings Association of Dallas acquired four insolvent institutions after it received a promise of up to $2 billion in federal assistance. Southwest, with $1.48 billion in assets, provided $25 million in equity capital.

Drug policy requires advance plan

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Weighing workers' rights against an employer's right and responsibility to operate a safe and drug-free work place is a delicate balancing act, but one that can be accomplished with foresight and planning, according to an expert in the field.

"The first thing I ask a client to do is answer three questions," explained Charles Pendleton, a drug control consultant in Midland. "Why do I want a program? What will the company do if someone is in violation of the policy, or refuses to take the test? And, are we willing to support and stand behind the program if challenged?"

Although safety is the primary reason given by companies implementing a drug control policy, other considerations come into play: health and wellness of workers; efficiency and the employer's "right" to operate as profitably as possible; protection of company assets; and public image and public trust considerations, Pendleton said.

Pendleton will be one of three speakers at "Drugs and Alcohol in the Work Place — What you can do!" seminar Wednesday, sponsored by the Midland and Odessa chapters of the Texas Association of Business.

Noted forensic pathologist Dr. Gary H. Wimbish and Nancy E. Brown, staffing administrator for El Paso Natural Gas Co. will join Pendleton on the half-day program at the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

Estimates of the prevalence of illegal drug use in the work place range from 10 to 15 percent nationwide, to companies where more than 85 percent of workers testing positive for the presence of illegal drugs in their system, prior to an awareness policy being implemented.

Accident reduction of as much as 85 percent and substantial insurance savings after a program is put in place are a strong economic incentive in addition to social motivations.

To combat the problem, Pendleton suggests a single overriding consideration by management as an anti-drug policy and program are being developed: "As an employee, would I go along with the policy? Is it reasonable and does it offer employees fair, accurate and competent testing?"

Legal precedents on drug testing policies by private employers are constantly being refined, he said, but one trend that is clear is that private employer testing falls under the "exclusionary clause" of the Fourth Amendment concerning unreasonable search.

MBCE hopes to work with college students

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Members of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs have repeatedly stated how important they feel working with minority youth is, and they've conducted a number of programs, aimed primarily at junior high and high school students. Now the chamber has a chance to work with college students.

At Monday's meeting, the group welcomed a representative of Midland College's new Black Student Union at Monday's meeting.

Quincy Clay, who is helping organize the union, told members the BSU is intended to bring unity to Midland College's minority students, and then to serve the community. "We're looking for places to volunteer our help, such as Big Brother/Big Sisters or nursing homes," he said.

James Fuller, the MBCE's vice president for education, noted that there hadn't been many college-aged young people involved with the chamber. He said he could see BSU representatives working closely with the young chamber of entrepreneurs and Project Excel Youth. "I see this organization as being a plus to the chamber and the community," he said.

While chamber members were disappointed that the City Council denied Community Development Block Grant funds for the Excel Youth project, they vowed the program would continue.

Trade measure narrows sharply

WASHINGTON (AP) — The deficit in the broadest measure of U.S. foreign trade narrowed sharply from April through June, despite the fact that America suffered the first deficit in 30 years in the category that includes investment income.

The Commerce Department said the deficit in the current account shrank by 9.8 percent in the second quarter, falling to $33.3 billion, compared to a first quarter imbalance of $36.9 billion.

It was the sharpest narrowing of the deficit since a 20.1 percent drop in the fourth quarter of 1987.

The current account is the most important of all the government's trade statistics because it covers not only trade in merchandise but also trade in services, which primarily reflect the flow of investment earnings between countries.

For 16 of the last 17 years, the country has run deficits in the merchandise trade category. But the current account registered a surplus as recently as 1981 because Americans' earnings on overseas investments were enough to offset the merchandise trade deficits.

In this decade, however, Americans have handed over billions of dollars to foreigners in exchange for imported goods, transforming the country from the world's largest creditor nation, a distinction it held in 1982, to the world's largest debtor nation.

That means that foreigners now own more in U.S. investments than Americans hold in foreign investments. At the end of 1987, America's net debt had grown to $368.2 billion.

Reflecting that transfer of wealth, the government reported today that the country suffered a $492 million deficit in the services category, which tracks the flow of investment earnings. It was the first deficit in this category since 1958.

The deficit in services was a small one and could very well be revised away in future reports. In fact, the government three months ago reported that services posted a deficit of $655 million in the first quarter. That was changed in today's report, however, to show a $1.4 billion surplus.

Harken tests Oklahoma producer

DALLAS (SWN) — Harken Oil & Gas, Inc. has completed the Weaver No. 28-2 Well, located in Section 28, T-27-N, R-21-W, Harper County, Oklahoma, from the Viola limestone.

Drilled as a gas producer to a total depth of 7, 814 feet, the Weaver well was completed through perforations from 7, 182 to 7,190 feet. On test, the well flowed 5,091,000 cubic feet of gas per day through a 20/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 2,100 pounds per square inch. The calculated absolute open-flow potential was determined to be 19,500,000 cubic feet of gas per day.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Getting signature guaranteed not always easy

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I intend to give some stock I own to my daughter and her fiance as a wedding present. From reading your column, I know I am supposed to fill out the assignment form on the back of the stock certificate and have my signature there guaranteed by a commercial bank, trust company or brokerage firm. Then, I send the certificate to the stock's transfer agent, which will cancel my certificate and issue a new certificate to my daughter and her husband in their married names.

I asked the savings and loan association, at which I have substantial money in certificates of deposit, savings and checking accounts, to provide the signature guarantee. I was told no one there can do it.

That S&L is the only place I "bank." I have not dealt with a broker since my husband died 13 years ago. What do I do now?

A. Go back to that S&L and ask the people there to send you, with stock certificate in hand, to a commercial bank where your signature can be guaranteed.

Doyle

Every S&L has some working relationship with a commercial bank, even though the two are competitors. It's standard procedure for a bank to guarantee the signatures of S&L customers vouched for by the S&L.

When you send the stock certificate to the transfer agent, for safety sake, do it by registered mail, return receipt requested.

And be sure to tell your daughter and her intended your "basis" — cost for tax purposes. They will need that information to calculate their capital gain or loss, if they ever sell. On gift stock sold at a profit, the recipient's basis is the donor's basis. On gift stock sold at a loss, the recipient's basis is the donor's basis or the market value on the date of the gift — whichever is lower.

Q. If I open an account at a commercial bank, can I have my signature guaranteed right away or will I have to wait? A few years ago, I was told to wait six months.

A. That depends on the policy of the particular bank.

A six-month delay after you open an account by depositing money seems way out of line. Nonetheless, every bank will naturally follow the "know your customer" rule and want to be sure you're an upright citizen who owns the stock certificate on which a signature guarantee is requested.

Q. Why can't savings and loan associations provide signature guarantees?

A. It's partly because of tradition and partly because transfer agents want to be protected against fraud.

Transfer agents accept signature guarantees from brokerage firm members of national stock exchanges, commercial banks and trust companies, all of which have filed signature guarantee cards with transfer agents and also provide financial guarantees. There is no such arrangement between transfer agents and other depository institutions — S&Ls, savings banks and credit unions.

However, some transfer agents do accept signature guarantees from S&Ls, savings banks and CUs with which they have working relationships. And some mutual funds which act as their own transfer agents take signature guarantees from notary publics.

Q. I recall reading about a proposal under which S&Ls, savings banks and CUs would be able to provide signature guarantees on stock certificates. Has that proposal been adopted?

A. No. You're thinking about a program called "Signasure," which has never been put into effect. When and if Signasure is adopted, all depository institutions will be able to participate and provide signature guarantees acceptable to all transfer agents.

The Signasure proposal has been kicking around for a number of years. The long delay results from problems obtaining a blanket fidelity bond to insure all participants against loss.

Sources report IBM, Steve Jobs planning joint venture

By JOHN MARKOFF
New York Times News Service

Two bitter enemies in the computer industry have reportedly called a truce and are about to embark on an extraordinary joint business venture.

Steven P. Jobs, one of the industry's most charismatic and controversial figures, has entered into an agreement in which the International Business Machines Corp. will share part of the technology in Jobs's long-awaited new computer, industry sources say.

The machine will be displayed Oct. 12 in San Francisco.

For years, IBM and Jobs were locked in a struggle for domination of the personal computer industry while Jobs was chairman of Apple Computer Inc.

When he was ousted at Apple three years ago, he set out to invent what he said would be a new personal computer as significant as his earlier triumph at Apple — the popular Macintosh.

Under a $10 million licensing agreement, IBM is said to be buying the right to use the symbols and commands with which the user will interact with Jobs's new computer. The technology is known as a user interface.

An industry executive close to the agreement said IBM plans to use the Jobs technology on computers that run the Unix operating system.

Analysts said the agreement would be a coup for Jobs, whose eminent position in the industry has been in eclipse since his ouster at Apple in a bitter feud with the current chairman, John Sculley.

The alliance with IBM would give both Jobs's new company, Next Inc. of Palo Alto, Calif., and the as-yet-unnamed new computer both credibility and the IBM imprimatur.

Under the arrangement, IBM will adopt the Next computer's user interface for use on models of its IBM PC-RT engineering work station and other IBM computers that run the Unix operating system, according to an industry executive close to Next officials and an engineer knowledgeable about the project.

Next said on Friday that it planned to introduce its new computer on Oct. 12, and the sources said IBM was planning to announce the licensing arrangement at that time.

Monday, a Next spokeswoman refused comment on the arrangement with IBM.

IBM officials would not confirm the agreement. "We're interested in exploiting leading-edge technology for user interfaces, but I won't comment on specific announcements," said William Lowe, an IBM vice president and president of the entry systems division.

The Next computer, which has been the subject of much speculation, was initially designed for college students and academic researchers, Jobs has said.

However, most industry analysts now believe that he envisions a wider market for his computer.

It is expected to have a number of features not available on current personal computers, such as a high-speed facsimile modem, powerful digital sound processing capabilities, an erasable compact disk player for data storage and retrieval and the ability to display television-quality video signals.

The computer is reported to have a sophisticated user interface designed by a team of Next researchers led by a French computer designer. The user interface, which consists of symbols and commands needed to manipulate information on a computer screen, is an increasingly important element in the competitive personal computer and work station markets.

The Macintosh computer, designed between 1981 and 1984 by a team of researchers at Apple led by Jobs, is largely distinguished by its interface, which standardizes the way a computer user interacts with all the programs it will run.

Next has reserved exhibit space at the Educom educational computing conference that begins Oct. 25 in Washington.

H. Ross Perot, who has publicly invested $20 million in Next for a 16 percent stake, is scheduled to speak at the conference.

The sources said that Perot and the original investors had since made further investments and that Next has now raised between $50 million and $60 million.

Stanford University and Carnegie-Mellon University have also put money into the project, according to an industry expert familiar with Jobs.

And Coastal Banc Savings Association of Houston, with assets of $68 million, contributed $3.5 million and received $138.5 million in federal aid to acquire four institutions.

"We're now getting a lot of interest and the amount of capital is going up and up," Wall said, pointing to a five-institution Texas deal announced on Friday in which $45 million in private capital was pledged. In all the previous Texas deals combined, private investors had agreed to put up only $115 million, he said.

The bank board's share of Friday's deal with the Pulte Diversified Companies, a subsidiary of the PHM Corp., is $556.9 million for four of the institutions. The fifth institution in the transaction was not identified Friday and and the amount of additional federal aid was not disclosed.

Wall said Monday that the details will be released this week. "The fifth one is almost as big as the other four combined," he said.

MBCE—

MBCE president Robbyne Fuller said the chamber plans to continue the program while looking for funding.

Her husband James told members that he hopes to recruit 100 students to the program, and currently plans to conduct Excel Youth on Saturdays. Members interested in working with the program or serving on an advisory board are welcome, he said.

According to Mrs. Fuller, representatives in Lubbock and Austin are hoping to set up their own Excel Youth projects, modeled on Midland's, once the local program is underway.

Members were invited to attend the final organizational meeting of the Texas Association of Black Chambers of Commerce in Fort Worth Oct. 21-23. The local chamber hosted a conference last month, and Mrs. Fuller called the meeting a success.

DRUGS—

"There is no 'absolute' right to privacy, and in compromising our right to privacy on a daily basis, it must be balanced against the paramount interest of the times," Pendleton said. In walking through a metal detector before boarding a plane and allowing carry-on bags to be x-rayed or searched, an individual gives up a portion of his or her right to privacy to the paramount interest of preventing hijacking.

"In the same way, drug testing has been upheld as a means of preserving the rights of non-drug users to not be hurt on the job and to work in a drug-free environment," he said.

Establishing and implementing a testing program is a very complicated issue and employers should fully understand the variety of programs which can be used, the types of testing methodology involved, laboratory standards, the benefits of advance notification and Employee Assistance Program, for employees identified with drug and alcohol problems.

PRICES—

Before the statement was released, analysts had focused on the inability of OPEC's 13 members to keep within their production quotas despite the worldwide oversupply of oil.

After predicting prices could drop below $13 a barrel by week's end, some analysts reversed their position by the end of Monday's session, saying such an assessment was now overly pessimistic.

Analysts said statements from OPEC President Rilwanu Lukman and Venezuelan Energy Minister Julio Cesar Gil had little impact on the market.

Lukman warned the cartel's members that prices could fall to $9 a barrel if members continued to ignore production quotas. Meanwhile, Gil reiterated his call of last week for a special meeting of the cartel's five-member price monitoring committee, before the scheduled Nov. 21 gathering of all OPEC members in Vienna, Austria.

Many analysts cited a Middle East Economic Survey report that Saudi Arabian officials opposed a meeting of the pricing committee before the meeting of OPEC ministers that is already scheduled for November.

The article also said that Saudi Arabia had begun offering discounts of 20 cents a barrel to some European and Japanese customers and that similar discounts had already been extended to some American buyers.

As more oil floods the market, refiners have taken advantage of the bargain rates to pad their inventories before winter, analysts said.

Industrial designer had hand in many corporate symbols

EAST HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Industrial designer J. Gordon Lippincott says he and his wife of 51 years, Edith, often play a game when they travel abroad.

On the way in from the airport, they see how quickly they can spot some corporate symbol that Lippincott had a hand in designing.

The game seldom takes very long.

The lanky, 79-year-old Lippincott, who left the consulting firm that still bears his name 20 years ago for an assortment of other pursuits, says he had a hand in developing symbols known the world over for companies such as Coca-Cola Co., American Express Co., General Mills Inc. and Campbell Soup Co.

But these days Lippincott recalls his firm's work on a car that has all but disappeared from the landscape: His company helped with the styling of the Tucker automobile 41 years ago. Only about 50 of the models were ever built.

Lippincott's role in the project surfaced as attention has been drawn to the cars by the recently-released movie, "Tucker: The Man and His Dream."

Lippincott said his firm was about 4 years old when the aspiring automaker Preston Tucker stopped by one morning in 1947. Tucker wanted a professional design firm to help him "style an auto for the future," one that had an engine in the rear and safety features like seat belts and pop-out windows and could travel 120 miles per hour.

"I didn't let on at first but, wow, did we ever," Lippincott recalled recently as visitors pored over the scrapbooks he keeps at the modern, breezy house he built 16 years ago on a 40-acre estate beside the Farm River.

"In those days every designer wanted to design a car," he said.

The movie recounts how Tucker developed the car and his travails with the Securities and Exchange Commission over how he financed it.

The movie makes no reference to outside designers, but Lippincott said he doesn't mind. He liked the movie, adding that actor Jeff Bridges "did a good job of capturing Tucker's spirit" in playing Tucker in the movie.

Lippincott said Tucker already had a good idea of what he wanted to do by the time he came by for help. He said Tucker's chief designer, Alex Tremulis, had drawings and a small scale-model of what the car would look like.

It included a front headlamp that swiveled as the wheels were turned.

Lippincott said Tucker wanted some advice from a design firm on the outer styling of the car. He said he never knew precisely what led Tucker to the firm's midtown New York offices.

Tucker showed up alone. He brought no drawings of the car on which a lot of work had already been done. He had no appointment.

But Lippincott saw him anyway, and liked his brashness, his self-assurance, his energy.

"He was an immensely likable and persuasive person," Lippincott said.

Lippincott's partner, Walter Margulies, insisted on being paid every week in advance, and Tucker agreed. The decision meant the firm was one of the few associated with the automobile that made money from the venture. Tucker lost more than $20 million making the cars.

Lippincott sent half of the office's 10 designers — Hal Bergstrom, Phil Egan, Read Viemeister, Bud Steinhilber and Tucker Madawick — to Chicago to work on the project. They created a full-scale clay model in nine weeks beside another full-scale model Tremulis was working on himself.

Once the models were finished, Lippincott said it was left to Tucker and Tremulis to assemble the prototype and the cars themselves. Lippincott's involvement was over.

There is some disagreement about the extent of the Lippincott contribution to the final version.

Lippincott said his team's contribution is evident in the styling in the both the front and back of the car, but conceded it is hard to pinpoint responsibility when many designers have a hand in a project.

Tremulis, who lives in California, said the design team was good but that the car was 95 percent complete before the outside team began working on it.

Egan, who was part of the Lippincott team and later returned to work for Tremulis on interior design, said from his home in California that Tremulis deserves most of the credit for the car design but said the front and back of the car reflect the Lippincott team's work.

Lippincott's design advice was avidly sought by companies ranging from flashlight producers to steel-making giants. He helped Chrysler Corp. with a corporate logo years later. He sold his interest in Lippincott & Margulies in the late 1960s.

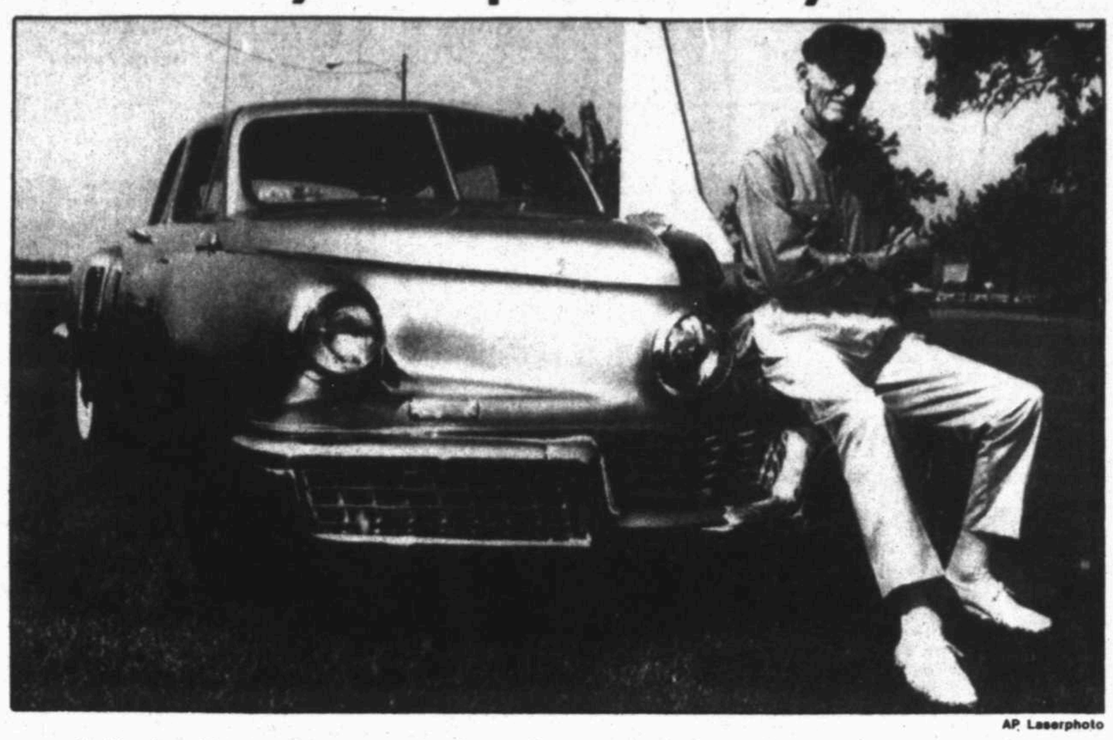

He said he learned his most important design lesson in the mid-40s, when the Bacardi rum makers asked his firm to redesign their label.

The firm proposed a festive approach that used a different color for each letter of the name.

Lippincott said the family politely listened to the presentation, but offered no response. Pressed for a reaction, the head of the family said it had been "most helpful."

"We have gone to the best package designer in the United States, and you have confirmed my belief that we should not change our label," the man said.

Lippincott said the lesson was clear and he never forgot it: "When you have an entrenched brand identity, proceed with great caution."

Former EPA chief to head Browning-Ferris

HOUSTON (AP) — William Ruckelshaus, who served two terms as head of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, has been elected chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Browning-Ferris Industries, Inc., one of the world's largest waste disposal companies.

Ruckelshaus has been on the Browning-Ferris board of directors since June 1987. He succeeds Harry J. Phillips Sr., who will become chairman of the Houston-based company's executive committee.

Besides stints at the EPA, Ruckleshaus has been deputy attorney general and acting director of the FBI. He also has served in the House of Representatives of his home state of Indiana and as chief counsel for the Indiana attorney general's office.

"This country is facing serious environmental problems in the years ahead that will demand innovative, effective and efficient solutions," Ruckelshaus said.

Phillips, who held the top job at the company for 11 years, said Browning-Ferris could benefit from fresh, new leadership and a broader perspective.

"Our company and our industry has become more and more involved in the public, political and regulatory arenas," he said.

"The ideal person to lead BFI in the days ahead should, in addition to administrative and business skills, possess strong talents, experience and comfort in dealing with issues within these other, diverse arenas...an individual with a widely recognized reputation of exceptional integrity.

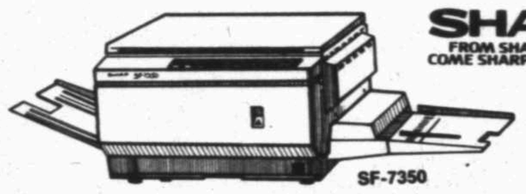

"Given these characteristics, I felt that exactly the right person to fill this position was Bill Ruckelshaus."

Browning Ferris, which has seen its revenues grow from $300 million to $2 billion annually during Phillips' tenure, has subsidiaries that provide collection, transfer, processing, recovery and disposal of solid wastes and chemical wastes for commercial, industrial and governmental customers. It also provides solid waste collection and disposal services for residential customers.

In addition, the company does municipal and commercial street and parking lot sweeping, collection, treatment and disposal services for health-care customes, provides portable rest room services and is active in waste-to-energy operations.

It has more than 18,000 employees who work at affiliates in 225 locations in the United States, Australia, Canada, Kuwait, Puerto Rico, Saudi Arabia, Spain, the United Kingdom and Venezuela.

Look to Shayna Water Systems for all the right reasons

If you are tired of drinking poor tasting tap water, or if dragging bottles to the store for refills of bottled water is inconvenient to you, consider the alternative–a Shayna Water Systems home or office reverse osmosis unit.

It seems that more and more people are finding their tap water unacceptable, either because of the bad taste or concern over potential health hazards.

Shayna Water Systems provides the immediate answer to pure water needs with the most current state-of-the-art reverse osmosis process. Delicious and healthful drinking water is supplied at your fingertips from a private spigot on your sink–fresh as you use it. Best of all, Shayna Water's delicious and healthful purified drinking water is 95% contaminant and sodium free.

Reverse osmosis is the non-electric mechanical process of separating pure water molecules from tap water, which most often contains dissolved salts, chemicals and organics. This separation occurs through a microscopically porous membrane made of a cellulose triacetate material similar to cellophane kitchen wrap.

Under normal water pressure, water molecules penetrate the membrane, enter the purified water side of the system and leave the impurities to be flushed down the drain. The reverse osmosis membrane allows Shayna Water Systems a 95% drinking water purity level.

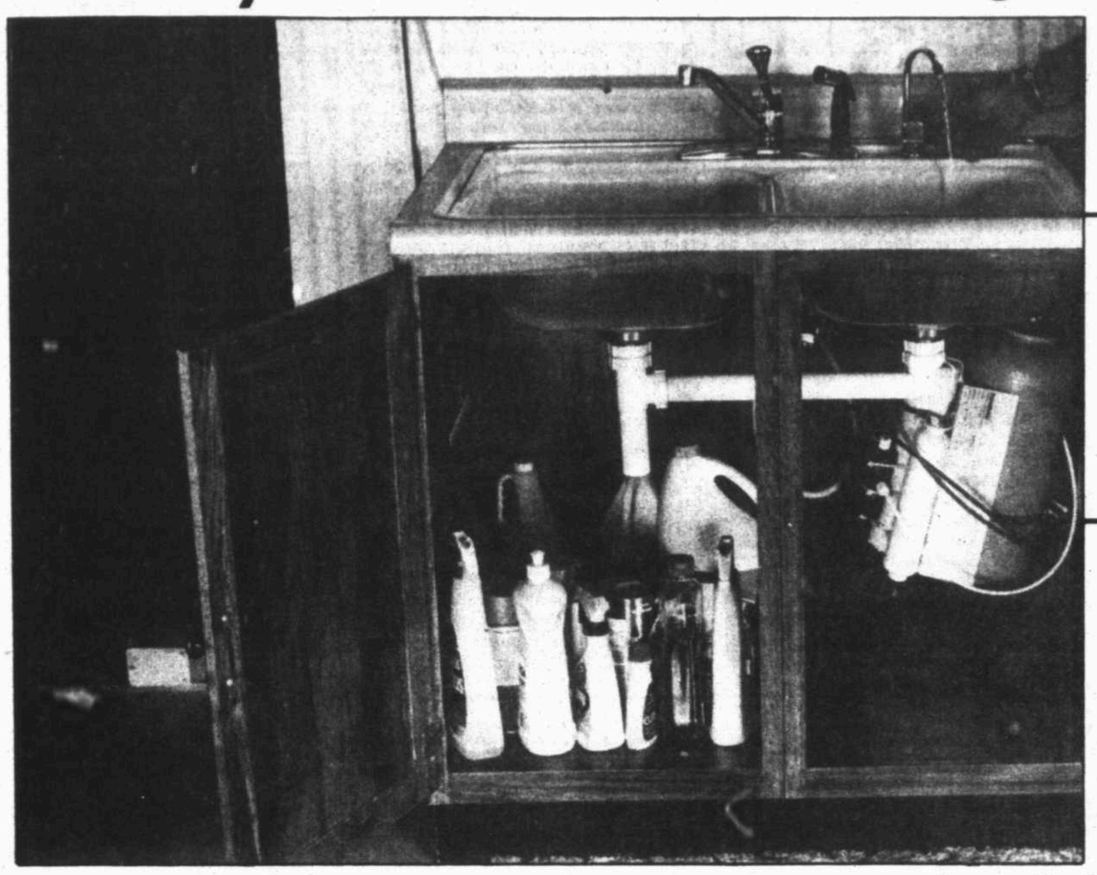

Unlike distilled water, the reverse osmosis process does not remove oxygen; rather, it enhances the oxygen content because of the lighter molecular size. With the oxygen to enrich the taste and five percent minerals still remaining, Shayna Water Systems delicious and healthful purified drinking water is without a doubt the most efficient and cost effective way to combat potentially harmful and poor tasting tap water.

Have you ever stopped to think about bottled water and how clean the bottles are? Have you ever noticed a plastic taste or smell with bottled water? A Shayna Water Systems unit in your home or office sink can eliminate these possiblitites.

If you are interested in something better, Shayna Water Systems offers delicious and healthful purified drinking water, available at your fingertips. Consider the advantages:

- No heavy bottles to lift or store
- No unsightly dispenser
- Water available from private spigot on your sink
- Compact 12"x19" unit fits neatly under sink

Copy Craft: Full service, discount prices, no hidden costs

Do-it-yourself service is often touted as a tremendous way to save money. However, when it comes to office supplies, ribbons, diskettes, computer stock forms, copy paper and toners/developers for your copiers, the savings potential is questionable at the best, says Ken Craft, owner of Copy Craft.

Ken asks you to consider some "hidden costs" you have to pay when you go the self service route. First, you probably have to pay cash. No account can be carried with terms.

Quantity purchase requirements constitute another hidden cost. Buying a case full of diskettes or ribbons when you need less than that is unnecessarily expensive. You lose the advantage of having the cash for a period of time and must provide storage for the product.

In addition to providing storage space, you must provide transportation for the product(s) purchased. This transportation cost includes having your employee leave the office, ride the elevator down, walk to the distant parking lot, travel across town, pick up the office products and pay cash. The employee then gets to drive back across town, locate a parking place to unload the purchases, park the car, carry the products up the elevator to the storage site, etc. This process represents a tremendous amount of "lost payroll" and is a very inefficient process at its best, even for a $5.00 an hour employee. Add to that the cost of insurance needed in case a wreck occurs, and you will rarely see a lower cost than what Copy Craft offers with their full service and discount prices.

If you have a faulty product, you then have to go back and do the whole process over to have it replaced if you can remember where you put the sales register slip when the item was purchased. In addition, you often do not receive a premium product to begin with.

This entire process is eliminated when you call Copy Craft at 561-9118. Not only can you receive quality products with terms, you also receive full service and discount prices. On all office supply products, you will receive 25% off the suggested selling price, which in the majority of cases will reflect a lower price than has been offered to the majority of the customers in the Permian Basin area by other office supply firms.

Regardless of what product line you are ordering (word processing, computer stock forms, copy paper, office supplies, etc.) from Copy Craft's 15,000 square foot warehouse, you can count on fast, professional service on all of the items they carry. Because of the size of Copy Craft's warehouse and extensive inventory selection carried on a daily basis, their customers can count on Copy Craft's commitment to service.

During these days when efficiency and cost savings are a top priority, you can count on Copy Craft to continue to have the highest quality products at the best prices in the area. Thus, you do not have to make a choice between full service or self service to receive discount prices as you will receive both from Copy Craft.

Copy Craft, located between Midland and Odessa, offers full service, discount prices and no hidden costs. The new 15,000 square foot warehouse (above, left) carries an extensive inventory of office supplies. The headquarters (below, left) is the nucleus behind the full service, no hidden costs concept for which Copy Craft is best known.

Call Copy Craft at 561-9118 and check out their truly discounted prices on your traditional office supply needs. You will find that the convenience Copy Craft offers represents their total commitment to you in serving your total supply requirements.

Lewellen Construction to give away trip to Las Vegas

Bill and Joan Lewellen of Lewellen Costruction are gambling that their customers would like a chance to win a trip to Las Vegas. They are also betting that visitors to their booth at the Permian Basin Fair and Exhibition in Odessa this month would like to enter a national contest which has $2,000,000 in prizes at stake.

This exciting news should come as no surprise to those who are familiar with the service and fine products for which Lewellen Construction is famous. One such product is quality Alside steel siding, the sponsor of the $2,000,000 national contest.

You can register for the drawing September 14 through 18 at the Fair, to be held in the Ector County Coliseum. Lewellen Construction's booth will be located in the center aisle.

The grand prize is all new Alside siding, replacement windows, soffit and fascia, gutters, downspouts, shutters and storm doors.

One hundred first prizes will include a choice of new Alside siding or replacement windows.

Five hundred second prizes will include a choice of Alside storm windows or soffit and fascia

One thousand third prizes will include a choice of Alside storm doors or gutters and downspouts.

Even if you don't win a prize in the national giveaway, you'll still be a winner when you hear all the details about the benefits of adding siding to your home. Steel siding from Alside makes your home more attractive, more durable, and less costly to maintain.

You're putting your dollars into the wisest investment possible. More than other home improvements, Alside steel siding gives the investment protection you need–durability, beauty and lower maintenance costs.

In addition to the Alside siding contest, Lewellen Construction has a great deal for its siding customers.

Purchase a complete siding job from September 13 to October 15, and you will be entered for the Las Vegas drawing. The prize will include round trip airfare and hotel accommodations for two, compliments of Lewellen Costruction.

"Definitely, one of our customers will win a trip to Las Vegas, and who knows–someone else may win some of the two million dollar national giveaway," said Bill Lewellen. "We encourage everyone to come out to the Fair and register, and we encourage those considering buying siding to keep the Las Vegas trip included in their decision."

Also going to Las Vegas soon are Bill and Joan, who will be attending the tenth Annual Western Remodeling Conference, October 13-15. "We feel it is essential to attend conferences like this to stay competitive in today's professionally-installed remodeling market," commented Bill.

Joan will also attend the board of directors meeting of the National Association of the Remodeling Industry (NARI), also scheduled during their Las Vegas trip. She was elected to the national board and will represent the Permian Basin chapter of NARI. NARI is a trade association committed exclusively to the remodeling industry. Its members subscribe to a strict Code of Ethics and are dedicated to enhancing the professionalism of the industry.

Let the professionals at Lewellen Construction help you with a variety of home improvements. Call them today at 686-8007 for more details.

Dimension Cable offers sports, concerts, movies and more

The Houston Astros, Bishop Tutu's World Peace Concert, Tina Turner and Tolstoy all share something in common during the month of September. Not available for rental in your neighborhood video store, these events and personalities can be seen on your television screen when you subscribe to Dimension Cable and its premium services.

Doug Smith, Dimension Cable general manager, said Dimension's programming offers many choices for sports fans, including 12 Astros and 7 Texas Rangers games this month. The race in the Western Division is heating up with the Astros closing in on the Dodgers. Whether or not they end up in contention for a pennant, you won't want to miss the coverage offered by Home Sports Entertainment.

"HSE will pick up games that are especially exciting for our viewers, and this month they will get a sneak preview of their favorite teams," Smith explained. "HSE also carries Southwest Conference games that most people in this area follow quite closely."

Upcoming games include UTEP/BYU on September 17th, Boston College/ TCU on September 24th, A&M/Oklahoma State on September 25th and North Texas/Texas on September 26th.

"The addition of HSE to the Dimension Cable package is just one more step that we have made to improve our service to our customers," Smith added. "And if a subscriber already receives two premium channels, HSE costs only $3 a month."

"And for people who missed the weekend games, or for those armchair quarterbacks who want to relive the games, "Inside the NFL" is shown on HBO," Smith continued. "Hosted by Nick Buoniconti and Len Dawson, this is a condensed version of each of the week's football games. It also includes interviews with coaches and players."

Complementing HSE and HBO sports events is the Financial News Network program, "Score". Each evening, in addition to a wrap up of the day's financial and stock exchange news, you can receive updates of daily sports scores.

When you combine these sports features with ESPN, CNN and the network programming, you can see that there's practically no limit on sports coverage right at the touch of your television dial.

Dimension Cable has a special on this week that everyone in your home will enjoy, from the sports enthusiast to the movie fan. As a follow up to the HBO free preview special, Dimension Cable will continue to offer a premium channel connection (your choice) for just a $4.88 processing fee. Call 694-7721 for more information.

Look to Dimension Cable for variety this month. Showtime presents the "Bishop Tutu World Peace Concert," the musical event of the 80's. To raise funds and consciousness to aid oppressed children in South Africa, this concert will feature Jimmy Cliff, Charley Pride, Stevie Wonder, Paul Simon and many other musicians.

HBO original programming will feature concerts by Cyndi Lauper and Tina Turner, "Live from Rio." Also on tap is the "Young Comedians Show," hosted by Paul Rodriquez, and "The Louie Anderson Show." As always, you can count on Dimension Cable's premium services to bring you the best in comedy programming.

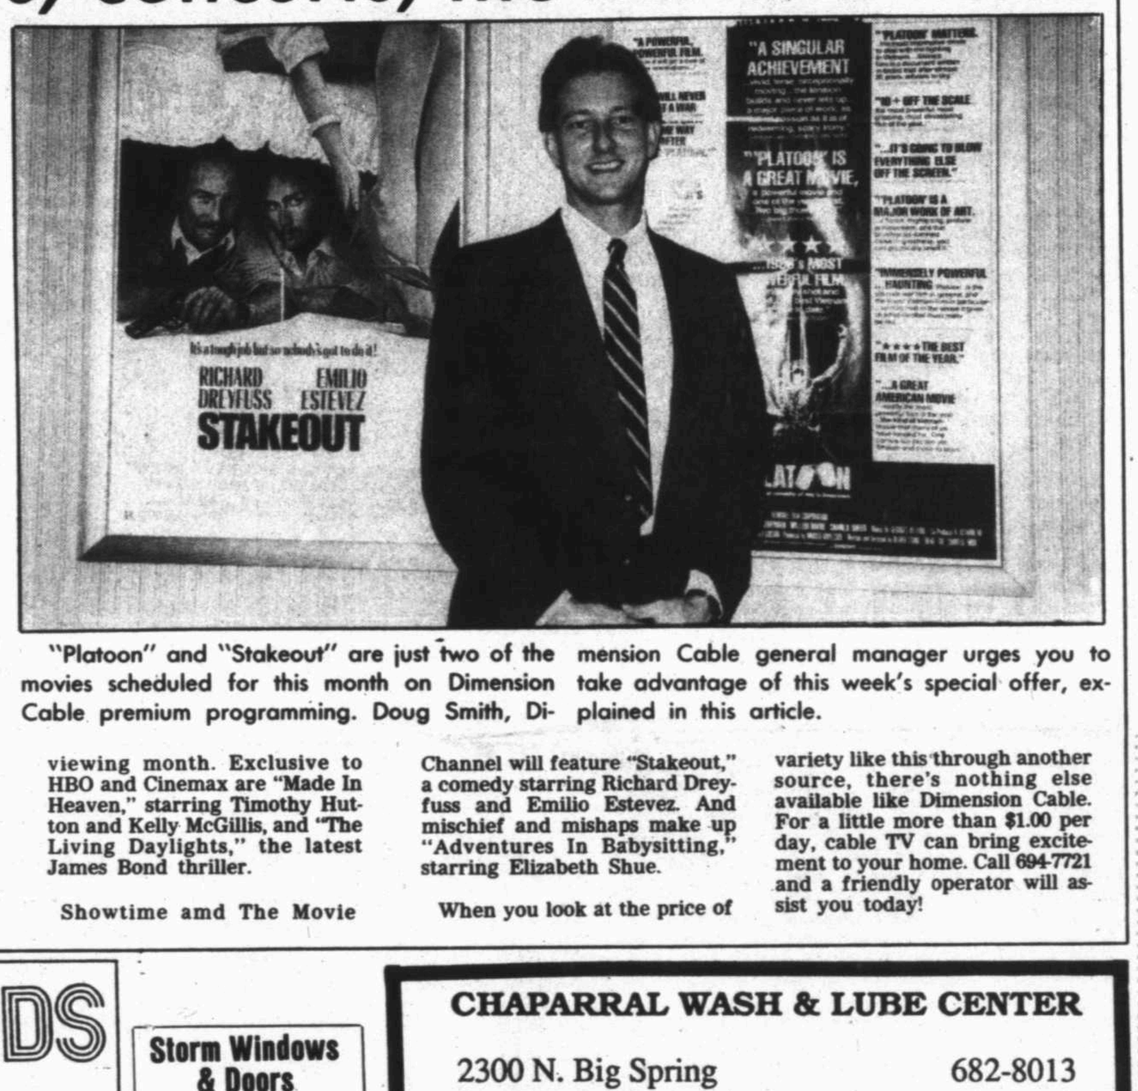

Arts and Entertainment will feature a biography on Tolstoy, a classic rendition of Jane Eyre, and the continuing mini series "Vanity Fair." It's a lavish look at 19th century life in Europe, and something your family will want to see.

Home shopping is just one of the advantages of connecting with Dimension Cable. Three shopping channels are available for the convenience of telephone shopping right from your easy chair.

Movies, of course, are the major emphasis of HBO, Showtime, The Movie Channel, and Cinemax, and September is a great viewing month. Exclusive to HBO and Cinemax are "Made In Heaven," starring Timothy Hutton and Kelly McGillis, and "The Living Daylights," the latest James Bond thriller.

Showtime amd The Movie Channel will feature "Stakeout," a comedy starring Richard Dreyfuss and Emilio Estevez. And mischief and mishaps make up "Adventures In Babysitting," starring Elizabeth Shue.

When you look at the price of variety like this through another source, there's nothing else available like Dimension Cable. For a little more than $1.00 per day, cable TV can bring excitement to your home. Call 694-7721 and a friendly operator will assist you today!

"Platoon" and "Stakeout" are just two of the movies scheduled for this month on Dimension Cable premium programming. Doug Smith, Dimension Cable general manager urges you to take advantage of this week's special offer, explained in this article.

HURRICANE

InfoGraphics Special

The anatomy of a hurricane

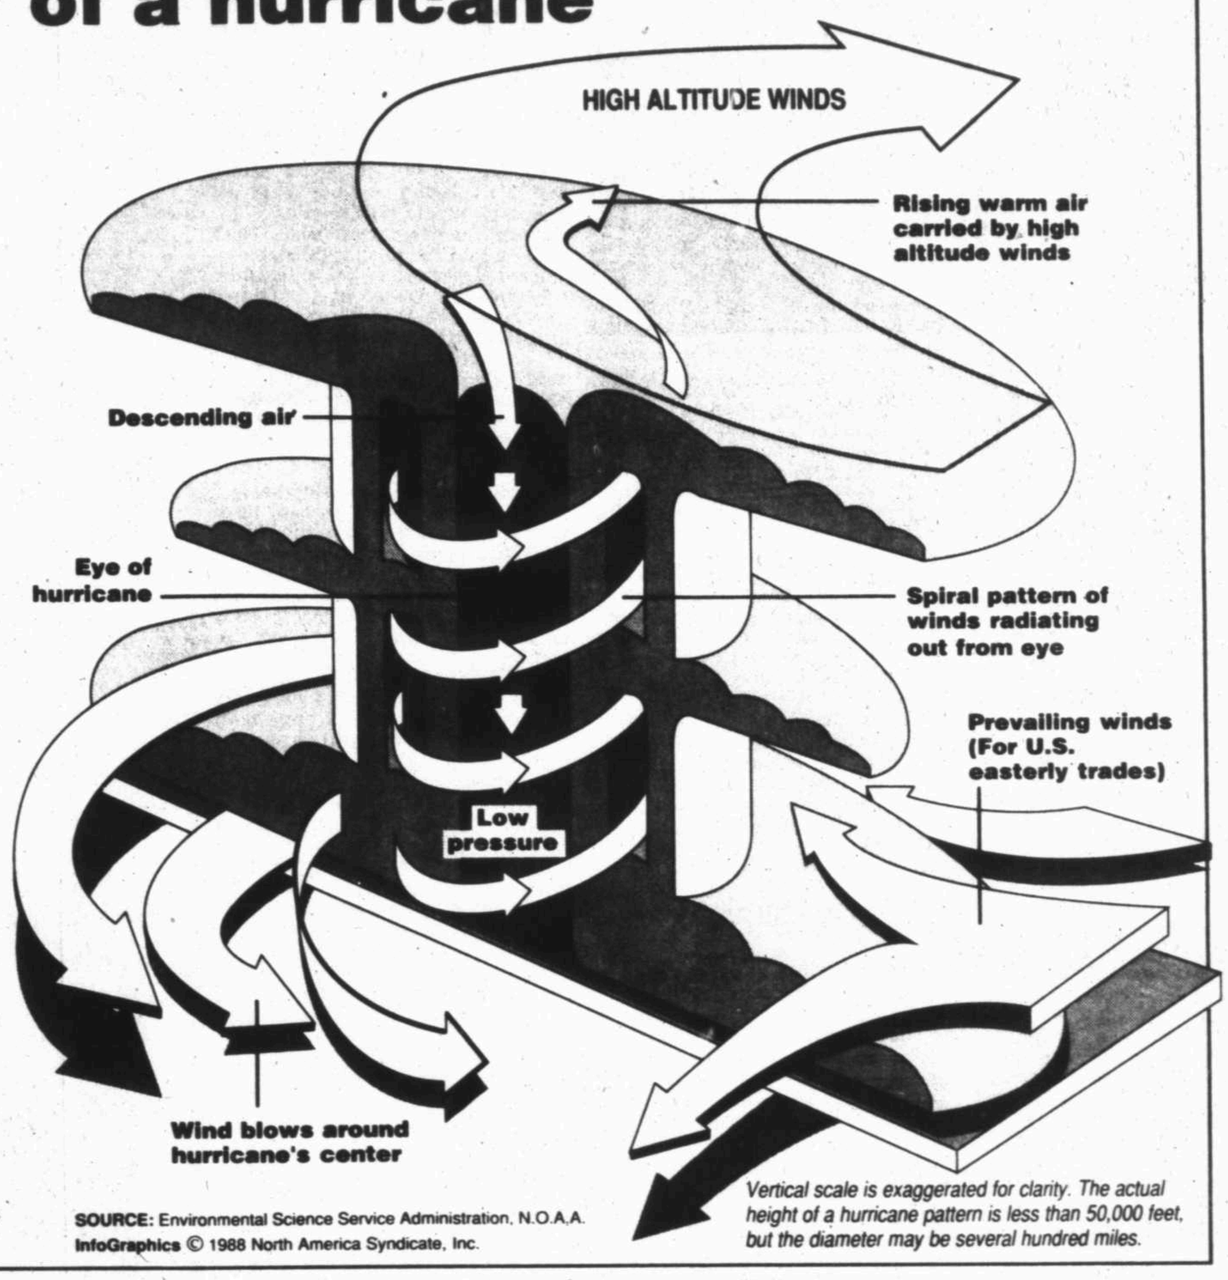

Hurricanes are formed when a number of different weather conditions coincide. Experts are divided as to which conditions preceed hurricanes and which conditions are caused by them.

During the hurricane season, conflicting wind systems from the northern and southern hemispheres, influenced by the position of the sun and the spin of the earth, meet and create a low pressure band near the equator. In this area – known to sailors as the "doldrums" – stray wind currents cause small, swirling patterns. These winds can develop into tropical storms and, eventually, hurricanes. Two of the basic hurricane preconditions are warm equatorial waters and suitable high and low altitude wind patterns

Air from surrounding high pressure areas tends to flow into these swirling low pressure patterns and speed up the rise of air currents heated by the ocean. Next, the rising moist air releases water vapor and heat energy, which serves to accelerate the spin.

A tubular structure is formed, which would soon collapse and dissipate if it were not for other wind currents at higher altitudes. These draw off the warm rising air and cause more air to flow into the system from below. When the winds within the system exceed 74 mph, the storm is officially designated a hurricane.

The end result is a small, calm area of low pressure – the eye – surrounded by swirling winds of up to 200 miles per hour. The spiral storm pattern is sustained by the warm ocean until it runs into cooler waters or hits a land mass. Inland, it quickly becomes starved for heat energy and is pulled apart by the friction of moving across the land.

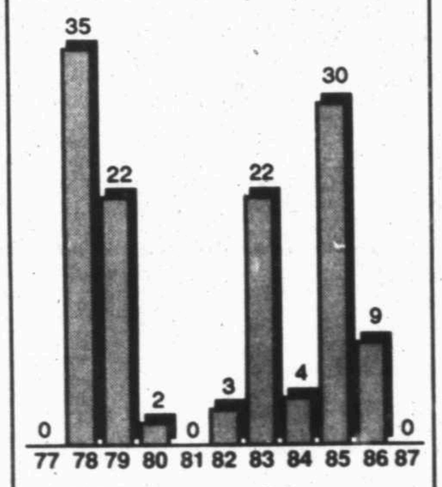

Vertical scale is exaggerated for clarity. The actual height of a hurricane pattern is less than 50,000 feet, but the diameter may be several hundred miles.

Which states have been struck by major hurricanes?

Between 1889 and 1987, 21 of the 59 major hurricanes that have reached the U.S. coast have struck Florida. Texas, with 15, and Louisiana, with 11, are the next most "hurricane-prone" states. In 1987, no hurricanes reached the U.S. coast.

The hurricane season

The hurricane season in the U.S. runs from June through November, peaking in September. The main reason hurricanes occur during this period is due to the seasonal northward movement of the "doldrums" – the region where winds from the northern and southern hemispheres converge at the equator.

September storms no stranger to Texans

By ROBERT G. WIELAND
Associated Press Writer

Although no hurricane with a "G" name has ever visited Texas, September storms have a history of being deadly.

So coastal residents are keeping a wary eye on Hurricane Gilbert, moving westward through the Caribbean toward the Gulf of Mexico.

"We're pulling out all our generators, reviewing our plans and urging everyone else to do the same," Galveston City Manager Doug Matthews said Monday.

There were reports Monday night of at least 30 people killed as the storm flailed Jamaica with 115 mph winds.

"We have to go back to 1980 and Hurricane Allen to see any hurricane that's as large as this one," said director Bob Sheets of the National Hurricane Center in Miami.

Allen, called "the storm of the century," developed winds of 185 mph before storming the South Texas coast on Aug. 9, 1980. Two people were killed in Corpus Christi.

The only two Gulf hurricanes this year were September storms. Debby drenched Mexico, killing at least 39 people and leaving thousands homeless. Florence later flooded parts of Louisiana as it sloshed ashore.

The worst natural disaster in U.S. history took place in September of 1900 when a hurricane pushed a wall of water across Galveston Island. It killed 6,000 to 8,000 residents and caused $30 million to $40 million damage.

One-quarter century earlier, most of the town of Indianola, in the coastal bend between Galveston and Corpus Christi, was swept away by a hurricane that claimed 176 lives.

In more recent times, Hurricane Carla pounded the Port O'Connor area in September of 1961, leaving 34 people dead and causing damage estimated at $300 million. Wind gusts were estimated at 175 mph. Indianola is just 5 miles north of Port O'Connor.

In 1967, Hurricane Beulah claimed the lives of 13 South Texas residents when it hit the Brownsville area in September.

Here is a list of major September hurricanes that have affected the Texas Gulf Coast:

Sept. 3-12, 1971; Hurricane Fern; Middle Coast; 2 dead, $30.2 million damage.

Sept. 18-23, 1967; Hurricane Beulah; Brownsville; extreme intensity; 13 dead, $150 million damage.

Sept. 16-20, 1963; Hurricane Cindy; Port Arthur; no deaths; $11.6 million damage; 24 inches of rain in Jefferson, Orange and Newton counties.

Sept. 11-13, 1961; Hurricane Carla; Port O'Connor; extreme intensity; 34 dead. $300 million damage; wind gusts estimated at 175 mph, storm tide 18.5 feet at Port Lavaca.

Sept. 23, 1941; Texas City; 4 dead, $6.5 million damage.

Sept. 4-5, 1933; Brownsville; 40 dead, $16.9 million damage.

Sept. 14, 1919; south of Corpus Christi; extreme intensity; 284 dead, $20.3 million damage; winds 110 mph, storm tide 16 feet. Aug. 13-14, 1932; Velasco (Freeport); 40 dead; $7.5 million damage.

Sept. 8-10, 1900; Galveston; extreme intensity; 6,000-8,000 dead; damage $30 million - $40 million. Storm surge 15-20 feet, winds estimated at 120 mph. Known as worst natural disaster in U.S. history.

Sept. 15-18, 1875; Indianola; extreme intensity; 176 dead, three-fourths of town swept away by flooding from the bay.

Sept. 19, 1854; Matagorda; deaths and damage unknown, but all buildings in town were destroyed and many ships in harbor were sunk.

Sept. 12, 1818; Galveston; deaths and damage unknown, but destroyed four ships of pirate Jean Lafitte.

Sept. 4, 1776; Galveston; mission destroyed.

Dukakis counters foreign policy attacks

Associated Press

Michael Dukakis countered GOP attacks on his foreign and defense policies, pledging support for the Stealth bomber and assessing U.S.-Soviet relations, while George Bush, bristling at his rival's charge of "McCarthyism," renewed his attack on Dukakis as a liberal Democrat.

The Bush campaign suffered its second setback in as many days on Monday as five members of the vice president's ethnic coalition resigned amid charges of ties to anti-Semitic organizations.

The resignations come on the heels of Frederic V. Malek's decision to leave his Republican National Committee post after a published report said he had compiled a list in 1971 of Jews at the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Bush had appointed Malek to the RNC job.

Democratic nominee Dukakis, stung by GOP suggestions that he is weak on defense issues, was to deliver his evaluation of relations between the two superpowers in an address today in Chicago to the Council on Foreign Relations.

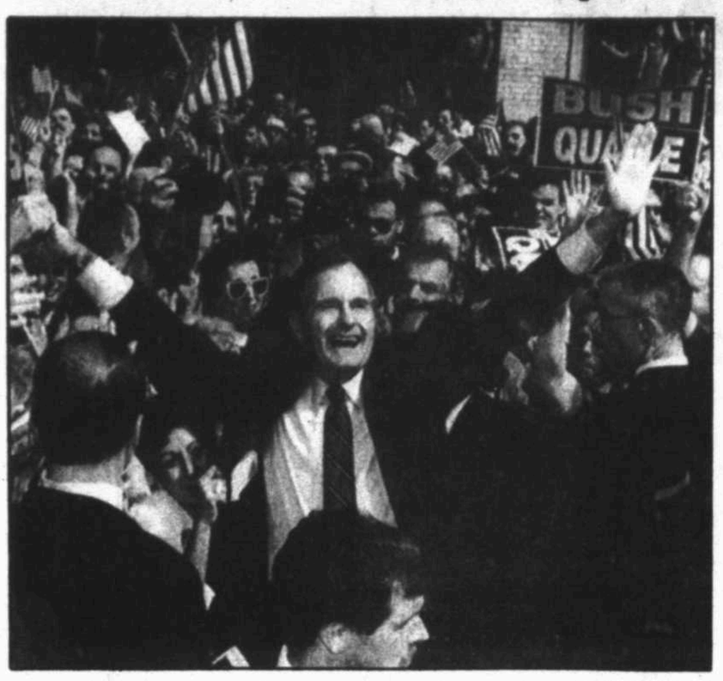

Bush, also in Chicago, was scheduled to give an economics statement to the businessmen's Executive Club before continuing his campaign swing in Jefferson City, Mo., while his running mate, Dan Quayle, campaigned in Bismarck, N.D.

The two presidential candidates were deadlocked in the latest public opinion poll. A Cable News Network-USA Today survey of 1,260 certain voters, conducted last week by the Gordon Black Corp., found 48 percent favored the Republican ticket while 46 percent preferred the Democratic slate.

The margin of error of 3 percentage points makes the race a virtual dead heat.

Stepping up his defense offensive on Monday, Dukakis issued an unusual promise to support the Stealth bomber — a pledge that appeared to go beyond the candidate's previous statements that he supported continued research of the project.

"That bomber was started by a Democratic administration; it was supported by the Democrats in Congress, and it's going to be completed under my administration," Dukakis told workers at a General Electric plant in Ohio.

AP Laserphoto

Republican presidential candidate George Bush acknowledges supporters during a rally in Union City, N.J. on Monday.

Dukakis issues adviser James Steinberg said Dukakis' position on Stealth did not represent a change and said he believed it was no different than Bush's stand.

The Massachusetts governor encountered boos and chants of "Bush, Bush," from the employees at the plant where engines for the radar-evading aircraft are manufactured. Those booing were in the minority and Dukakis' speech was not interrupted.

At a shopping center rally in Illinois, Bush repeated his charge that Dukakis is a liberal Democrat and "card-carrying member" of the American Civil Liberties Union — terms the Democratic nominee used to describe himself, according to the vice president.

"Recently, the governor of Massachusetts accused me of McCarthyism," Bush said. "And it was suggested that when I said he is a card-carrying member of the ACLU that that was McCarthyism; when I say he's a liberal that's...unfair."

Shouting until he was nearly hoarse, Bush said it was Dukakis himself who said in Iowa, "I'm a very strong Democrat, a liberal Democrat...a progressive Democrat...a card-carrying member of the American Civil Liberties Union."

"He says he's that. He's that," Bush said. "I am the vice president of the United States of America, a partner in (the) administration that has turned this economy around, that has put America back to work, that has strengthened our national security and that has enhanced the peace."

At the rally, Bush did not directly respond to Dukakis' criticism that Republicans were attacking his patriotism, using the tactics of the late-Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy.

Earlier in the day, however, in a taped interview with the "USA Today" television program, Bush was asked what question would he pose to Dukakis and responded: "Do you think the vice president's impugned your patriotism? Were you serious when you suggested to this man who's been in public life for 30 years he is guilty of McCarthyism?"

Dukakis, answering Bush in a separate interview, said, "Oh sure he has...You don't run around suggesting to people that a rival for the presidency of the United States is less committed to the Pledge of Allegiance and what it means without impugning his patriotism."

At the rally, Bush made no mention of the resignations from his ethnic coalition but later told reporters, "Nobody's giving in. These people left of their own volition. We're not accusing anybody of anything."

Bush campaign spokesman Mark Goodin said the Bush campaign conducted a review of the allegations which first surfaced in a published report last week and found nothing to substantiate the reports.

In a statement, the five members said they were stepping down from the Coalition of American Nationalities "because we have been attacked unfairly by George Bush's political opponents."

In other political developments:

— House Democrats urged Bush to support a family leave bill, citing the vice president's remark last week that women with newborn babies should not face loss of their jobs if they take a few weeks off. Dukakis is a longtime supporter of the legislation.

— A statewide poll in California found Dukakis and Bush locked in a dead heat, with the Republican nominee leading his rival 44 percent to 42 percent. A margin of error of 3 percentage points negates the lead. Another survey in Wisconsin showed Dukakis' lead diminishing from a 14-point difference in early July to 48 percent to 41 percent over Bush in a poll conducted last week. There was a 4 percentage point margin of error in that poll.

NATION IN BRIEF

Reporters to be limited at shuttle launch site

WASHINGTON (AP) — The viewing area from which reporters and spectators have watched 25 space shuttle launches at the Kennedy Space Center will be off-limits to most onlookers when shuttles start flying again because of safety concerns, officials say.

The Air Force and NASA on Monday announced the new precautions at the Cape Canaveral, Fla., space facility, citing studies that "have shown that the danger to persons on the ground is much greater than was understood should an accident occur."

The restrictions cover the viewing area that overlooks launch complex 39, where space shuttle Discovery is being prepared for space.

A press viewing area 3.5 miles from the launch pads has been used by media representatives since the shuttle program began. Invited guests, including astronauts' families, watched from a nearby VIP area, and Kennedy Space Center workers and their families also were able to watch from certain areas.

Under the new plans, most nearby areas will be cleared just before and during the launch. Details of the plans were to be explained at a briefing today at the Washington headquarters of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The plan drew protests Monday from Rep. Bill Nelson, R-Fla., who said at the Kennedy Space Center that the House Committee on Science, Space and Technology had argued against such a change in a letter sent Friday to President Reagan.

Officials ask for corner

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC officials have asked Olympic advertisers to allow silent live coverage of certain events to continue during commercials in a corner of the television screen, according to a report published today.

NBC Sports executive producer Michael Weisman confirmed that the plan had been presented to certain advertisers and said some have indicated interest, the Daily News reported.

Under the plan, unprecedented in Olympic coverage, NBC would superimpose a silent picture in the lower-righthand corner of the television screen during commercials in sports such as basketball, volleyball, cycling and long-distance track events. The sport would occupy one-quarter of the television screen.

NBC is hoping to avoid the harsh viewer criticism ABC was subjected to during this year's Winter Olympics, when goals were scored during commercial breaks of hockey telecasts. NBC has experimented with the technique during telecasts of major-league baseball games.

"Some of these athletes have worked a lifetime to get to the Olympics," said Weisman, speaking from Seoul, where the Olympics begin later this week. "It would be a shame if a great performance wasn't seen by the home folks because we were in a commercial break."

Aunt ends kidnapping

DENVER (AP) — The kidnapping of a 6-year-old girl ended with the suspect lying in the bottom of ditch and the victim's aunt standing over him with a cocked .38-caliber pistol, authorities said.

The aunt rescued the young victim and captured the assailant Monday when she went looking for them, and, by chance, found them on Lookout Mountain south of Golden near Buffalo Bill's grave, police said.

"I wasn't going to shoot him or anything," Marla, identified only by her first name, told The Denver Post, which described the incident in today's editions. "I was scared as he was.

Donald Dale Lewis, 26, was being held without bail in the Denver City Jail for investigation of first-degree kidnapping, first-degree sexual assault and sexual assault to a child.

Lewis, who police say is on parole for sexually assaulting a 2-year-old, was being held at gunpoint by the victim's 27-year-old aunt when police arrived and took him into custody.

Shuttle meeting begins

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The launch team here is ready to see Discovery off in about two weeks in the first space shuttle mission since the Challenger tragedy, NASA says.

Launch Director Bob Sieck and his team held a launch readiness review Monday, and concluded there were no "show stoppers" that would bar a launch the last week of this month, NASA said.

Space shuttle officials from around the country began a two-day meeting today to assess preparations for the mission and set a firm launch date.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has been considering a date between Sept. 26 and 29. An announcement is expected Wednesday.

The purpose of today's meeting "is to have all project managers, both NASA and contractors, to say if they are ready or not," said Rear Adm. Richard Truly, director of the shuttle at NASA headquarters in Washington.

Convict shot to death

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A convict who threatened Gov. Henry Bellmon before he escaped from a Louisiana jail has been shot to death, authorities confirmed.

Louisiana lawmen went to Texas on Sept. 3 and confirmed Weldon Thomas Fossey was the man shot in the head and killed in a trailer near Kountze, Texas, on Aug. 22, said Oklahoma County sheriff's investigator Rick Johnson said.

No arrests have been made.

Fossey escaped from a St. Martinville, La., jail March 7, and came to Oklahoma and stayed with the help of relatives March 9 until March 15, authorities said.

Security around Bellmon was beefed up after the escape because Louisiana authorities said Fossey had been upset and threatened Bellmon because he thought the governor had blocked his request to go to his father's funeral in Spencer in June 1987.

Lawyer faces jail term

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — A public defender faces a weeklong jail term for wearing green tennis shoes in court.

Superior Court Judge William Scholl ordered Ralph Malanga last month not to wear his green tennis shoes in court. But Malanga showed up in the shoes the next day.

"If you're a member of the Boston Celtics, it's OK," he told Malanga. "But this is Superior Court."

The judge sentenced the lawyer Monday, saying the shoes detracted from the court's dignity. He further prohibited the attorney from seeing other lawyers during his jail term.

Six primary contests settled; Motherhood criticized in two states

Associated Press

Voters settle primary contests in six states today, including a high-stakes Democratic Senate race in Wisconsin, bitter legislative battles in Arizona, and Republican clashes in two states where mothers of small children were criticized for seeking office.

In Wisconsin, Democrat William Proxmire's decision to retire after 31 years in the Senate enticed four members of his party into the race, including former Gov. Anthony S. Earl, who lost a re-election bid two years ago. Earl appeared to be the front-runner until the entry of Milwaukee Bucks basketball team owner Herbert Kohl, who spent $2.1 million, much of it his own money, on TV ads.

A poll published by the Milwaukee Journal on Sunday showed Kohl preferred by 43 percent of the voters, Earl by 40 percent, Edward R. Garvey, an unsuccessful Senate candidate in 1986, by 8 percent, Secretary of State Douglas J. La Follette 5 percent, and 4 percent undecided. The poll had a margin of error of 6 percent.

The heavy spending by Kohl became a major campaign issue, especially since Proxmire spent just $145.10 in his last race.

La Follette, who reported spending $15,536, ran a radio commercial that began with the sound of a toilet flushing, his way of saying that a Wisconsin tradition of personal campaigning was going down the drain.

A Garvey commercial showed a Frankenstein monster with a television on its shoulders and a Kohl ad on the screen. In the background, film clips from horror movies showed citizens fleeing in terror.

The Republican field was smaller but the fighting was just as intense, with Senate Minority Leader Susan Engeleiter pitted against former state party chairman Stephen B. King. Engeleiter labeled King an ultraconservative, while he condemned her as a liberal and also questioned whether she could campaign for and hold an office like the Senate while also taking care of two small children.

In the Journal poll, Engeleiter held a 61 percent to 30 percent lead.

Motherhood also became an issue in New Hampshire, where former state legislator Betty Tamposi and former state Supreme Court Justice Charles Douglas are the front-runners in a six-way GOP race for the nomination to succeed Republican Rep. Judd Gregg.

Last week, Sen. Gordon Humphrey, a Douglas supporter, said Tamposi should stay home and care for her toddler daughter. Humphrey apologized for his "dumb" remark after it was roundly denounced and deplored by virtually everyone.

Gregg gave up his seat to run for governor after Republican incumbent John Sununu announced he was retiring. Gregg is heavily favored in the GOP primary against Robert Shaw, a former Manchester mayor, and political unknown William Lawrence. The winner will face Democratic lawyer Paul McEachern, a staunch opponent of the Seabrook nuclear power plant who narrowly lost Sununu in 1986.

Recount in Delaware senate primary ordered

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — A recount was set for Wednesday in the Democratic Senate primary after election officials discovered they miscounted the returns, giving the wrong man the victory.

Unofficial results Monday showed Lt. Gov. S.B. Woo the winner by a slim 88-vote margin over civic activist Samuel S. Beard for the Democratic nomination to challenge Republican U.S. Sen. William V. Roth Jr. in November's election.

Nearly 48 hours earlier, Beard was declared the victor in Saturday's primary. But on Monday the unofficial statewide tally showed Woo the winner with 20,221 votes to Beard's 20,133.

At Beard's request, the New Castle County Board of Elections voted unanimously for a recount. The second tally was scheduled to begin Wednesday morning, and both candidates expressed anger over the delay.

The delay was due to the need to collect voting machines from around the state, said William Burke, deputy administrative director for the Department of Elections for New Castle County, one of three counties in Delaware.

Woo's win came after Beard lost 2,800 votes when a computer keypunch error was discovered.

Meanwhile, Woo became angry late Monday night when one of his staffers discovered the doors to the Department of Elections for New Castle County were wide open.

Woo was at the election department's office and could not be reached for comment. But his wife, Katy, said they believed the keys to voting machines were kept in the office.

Attorney General Charles M. Oberly III said he was contacted by Woo about the unlocked doors and ordered Wilmington police to guard the door overnight.

Election officials learned early Monday that a computer keypunch operator's error had recorded 2,800 votes too many for Beard, according to Paul T. Hart, administrative director of the county elections department.

The discrepancy came in a district in New Castle County where there are about 280 registered Democrats. In that district, Beard's total was tallied at 2,828 votes when he actually received only 28 votes, officials said.

Woo, a 51-year-old physics professor at the University of Delaware, became the nation's highest ranking Chinese-American in state office after being elected lieutenant governor four years ago in his first bid for elected office.

His opponent in that election, Battle Robinson, requested and received a statewide recount. Woo won by 429 votes.
