Cheney expects Gorbachev to fail

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said in an interview Friday he expects Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's reforms to "ultimately fail" and that Gorbachev will be replaced by anti-Western leader.

"My personal view is that the task he set for himself to trying to fundamentally reform the Soviet system is incapable of occuring," Cheney said in the interview taped for broadcast Saturday on CNN's "Evans & Novak" program.

"If I had to guess today, I would guess that he would ultimately fail," Cheney said.

Cheney suggested in the interview that the Soviet leader's political survival hinges on the success of the economic and political reforms he has instigated.

"...(T)o fundamentally reform the Soviet system is incapable of occuring."
— Defense Secretary Dick Cheney

"That is to say, that he will not be able to reform the Soviet economy...And when that happens, he's likely to be replaced by somebody who will be far more hostile than he's been in terms of his attitude towards the West," Cheney said.

His comments followed closely the answers he gave a congressional committee earlier this week when asked about the Bush administration's proposed reductions in the Pentagon budget. Cheney told the House Armed Services Committee on Tuesday there is "a very real likelihood" Gorbachev's reforms would fail and that he would either have to change course or hand over power.

He said in the interview that the Pentagon cutbacks announced Tuesday, which included delays in several weapons programs, are not part of an overall plan to scale back Western defenses because of Gorbachev's peaceful overtures.

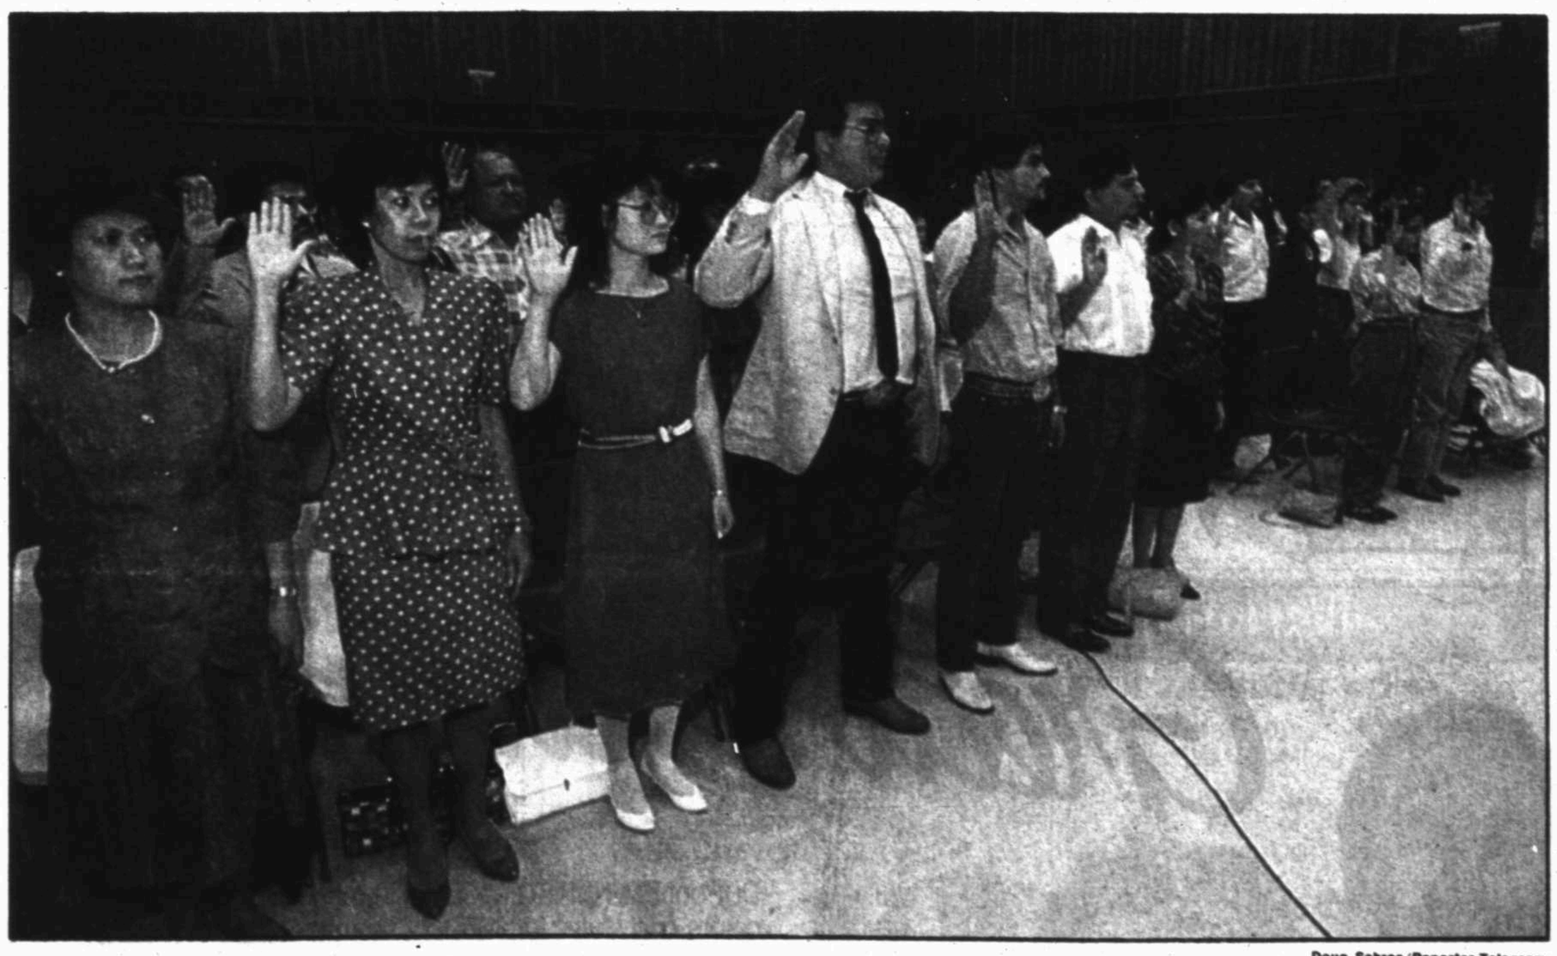

"He could modify his policies and have to accommodate a more conservative line," he said of Gorbachev. "He could conceivably be replaced. The point is, we don't know."

Shuttle won't be launched this weekend

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The launch of Atlantis was scrubbed Friday less than a minute before its planned liftoff when controllers detected an electrical surge in a main engine fuel pump. Five astronauts were on board, along with a robot probe that NASA is sending to Venus.

Launch director Bob Sieck said it will be at least Monday before a second launch attempt can be made, and he termed that timetable "optimistic" after revealing that NASA was also checking on an unexpected "vapor cloud" that emerged around a hydrogen fuel line.

Among tens of thousands who gathered for the rare afternoon liftoff were some of the country's most renowned planetary scientists. They have been waiting to resume solar system exploration since 1978, when Pioneer-Venus was launched on the last U.S. planetary expedition.

"That's just the way it is," shrugged James Head, a geologist from Brown University following the postponement. "We've got a nice long launch window," he said, noting NASA has until May 28 to get Magellan on its way.

■ Related story — 9C

"We have waited a number of years for this flight, and a few extra days won't matter," said Lennard Fisk, NASA's chief scientist. "The window is a month long. Having the shuttle ready on the first day is ample time to solve the problem and get us on our way to Venus."

Sieck said NASA probably would not understand the precise cause of the problem until inspecting the spacecraft over the weekend. He also said technicians, reviewing film, discovered that a troubling vapor cloud appeared around a fuel line towards the end of the countdown.

He said it could be "well into next week," if NASA has to replace the pump or the fuel line. For a Monday launch, "Both of them would have to fall into a quick fix, and it would be optimistic to expect that."

The postponement set back NASA's plan to eject its robot Magellan spacecraft out of the shuttle, toward Venus.

Nicotine patches helping some smokers kick the habit

ROCHESTER, Minn. (AP) — More than three-quarters of people trying to quit smoking were able to do so for six weeks with the help of nicotine patches, researchers at the Mayo Clinic reported Friday.

In a preliminary study that started last fall, 24 of 31 people who wore nicotine patches had stopped smoking, said Dr. Richard Hurt, director of Mayo's Smoking Cessation Center and one of the investigators.

The silver-dollar-sized patches release nicotine slowly through the skin into the bloodstream. A control group in the study wore patches not treated with nicotine, and only 12 of 31 participants quit smoking.

Hurt cautioned that a long-term follow-up study is needed, but said the patch could be a tool to help people stop smoking.

Dr. John Pinney, executive director of the Institute for the Study of Smoking Behavior and Policy at Harvard University, said the results are consistent with other research on the patches.

But he agreed with Hurt that a follow-up is important to assess whether the quitters remain nonsmokers after a year. "The relapse rate begins to accelerate from three to six months," Pinney said.

The patch, similar to those used for dispensing medicine, contains 30 milligrams of nicotine. About 1 milligram of nicotine is absorbed through the skin every hour so smokers are better able to handle the withdrawal symptoms associated with quitting smoking.

The Mayo Clinic is one of four centers studying the patch for possible Food and Drug Administration approval. The others are in Maryland, New Jersey and Georgia.

The 62 people who participated in Mayo's nicotine study were randomly divided into two groups.

Wright's downfall predicted

LAFAYETTE, La. (AP) — Rep. Jim Wright, D-Texas, will be deposed as Speaker of the House within a year, Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., predicted Friday.

"I really think Jim Wright will probably not be speaker a year from now," Johnson speculated in a weekend visit to his home state.

"I'm not privy to what's going on with the House leadership, but I've been around Washington long enough to feel the breezes, and my feeling is that they are not blowing in Jim Wright's direction," said Johnston, a senator since 1972.

Johnston, in Lafayette to break ground for improvements to Acadiana Regional Airport, was careful not to speculate whether Wright might be guilty of the 69 ethics violations he's been accused of by a House Ethics Committee. Johnston said ethics rules often are unclear.

Johnston covered an array of other topics, including his annual bill to impose an import fee on foreign oil.

"I have no misgivings about its chances," Johnston said of his proposed $5 per barrel tariff, which President Bush has promised to veto.

"The president has said 'No more taxes' but, if he changes his mind, I think the oil import fee would be the most productive kind of tax," Johnston said.

A fee such as the one he proposes would promote conservation, help the domestic oil industry and shrink the national debt, Johnston said.

Jackson denies he wants to be mayor of Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jesse Jackson is "strongly considering" running for mayor of the District of Columbia and has told embattled incumbent Mayor Marion S. Barry Jr. of his interest in the job, a source close to Jackson said Friday.

Jackson, however, denied Friday night that he is seeking to replace Barry, who has been dogged by reports about the city's skyrocketing murder rate and friendship with a former city official convicted of cocaine trafficking.

When asked by a reporter at a hotel banquet here Friday night if he was considering a race for mayor in 1990, Jackson said "No." He also said he has not talked to Barry about the mayor stepping aside to allow him to run.

"I've always supported the mayor," said Jackson, who last year lost the Democratic presidential nomination to Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis. Asked if that meant he would support a re-election bid by Barry in 1990, Jackson said, "Of course it does."

The two men, however, have talked about Jackson running for the job if Barry does not seek a fourth four-year term, said the source close to Jackson.

Included in the discussion, according to the source, were possible strategies if Barry chose not to run.

Lucille Ball's family has no plans for formal funeral or service

Ball

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Lucille Ball's family will gather to remember her, but there will be no funeral, a spokesman said Friday.

"It isn't going to be a formal service, as such. What is going on is totally private, with the family, and I don't know when or where," said Tom Watson at Lucille Ball Enterprises.

Miss Ball died unexpectedly of a burst aorta Wednesday, eight days after emergency heart surgery at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center. She was 77.

Her family said afterward through a spokesman there would be no funeral for the red-haired comic actress, who starred with her then-husband Desi Arnaz in the 1951-1957 "I Love Lucy" series that revolutionized TV.

Reports later said there would be a private funeral. But when asked if such a service would take place, Watson said, "Not in the usual sense of the term, no."

"It's carrying out Lucy's own wishes in this regard, and she just wanted everything to be very quiet, with her own immediate loved ones," Watson said. "There's not going to be that kind of formal service."

He had no information on burial plans.

Miss Ball was being memorialized by fans who continued Friday to call her offices to express their condolences.

"We have been inundated, as has almost every agency she has been involved with. People who were only mildly connected to her, along with fans from all over the world have been calling here," said Watson.

Oil spill may have saved Alaska's 'golden triangle'

By TAD BARTIMUS

DILLINGHAM, Alaska (AP) — A vast arctic bay dubbed the "golden triangle" for its unparalleled treasure of fish and wildlife may be spared oil exploration because of the catastrophic effects nearby of the nation's worst oil spill.

Three Alaska governors and the stubborn fishermen of Bristol Bay have appealed to three presidents to ban oil and gas drilling in the bay, the richest red salmon grounds in the world.

For 10 years the powerful of Washington brushed aside the pleas of complainers living far, far away. Last year, nine oil companies paid $95.4 million to the federal government to search for oil and gas in Bristol Bay.

This year, everything's different. Now the 4,500 people of Bristol Bay, a 44,000-square-mile marine paradise even richer than devastated Prince William Sound, are pleading their case again, hoping that the wreck of the tanker Exxon Valdez will prompt President Bush to hand back the money.

With millions of fish threatened, thousands of birds dying, and hundreds of sea otters dead in Prince William Sound, the despairing fishermen of western Alaska suddenly have environmental clout and renewed attention to their cause.

"I hate to say it, but without a doubt the spill may help us save Bristol Bay," said Sue Flensburg, executive director of the Bristol Bay Coastal Resource Service Area.

Until the huge tanker split open last month, the faint, outraged voices in Bristol Bay, 450 miles southwest of Prince William Sound, on the very edge of the continent, were literally crying in the wilderness.

Oil-company assurances of environmental integrity and safety had consistently won out.

"They always dangled their success in front of us," said Deborah Tennyson, executive director of the Bristol Bay Native Association.

"The oil companies and the feds said, 'You're psychotic, you're paranoid, we've shipped millions of gallons of oil out of Valdez, we've got caribou grazing under the pipeline, little chicks are being born at Prudhoe Bay, and the whales come back year after year to Prince William Sound.'

"Well, a massive oil spill is like nuclear war," said Mrs. Tennyson, who fishes along with her whole family during salmon season.

"If it happens once it would be so horrible that saying, 'Sorry, we'll never do it again,' doesn't mean a damned thing. If something like this happened in Bristol Bay it would be a cultural, economic, and social holocaust."

Bristol Bay supports the world's largest red salmon fishery and the largest herring fishery in U.S. waters, as well as a majority of the world's northern fur seal population, the Pacific gray whale population, and millions of seabirds, geese and ducks.

To most Alaskans, the arguments for Bristol Bay boil down to pure economics. A barrel of oil is worth about $20; most of the year, a nine-pound Bristol Bay red salmon retails in Anchorage for $74.25. Salmon is more plentiful than oil here, they say, and it is a resource that renews itself.

Alaska Gov. Steve Cowper claims Bristol Bay's wholesale fishery value exceeds $1 billion and employs 10,000 people in a good year.

"It's always been obvious to us that our annual, renewable resources far outweigh any potential oil and gas gains," said Ms. Flensburg. "Once oil is gone, it's gone forever, but our fish come back every year. Why can't the federal government understand that?"

The oil companies have pressed ahead with Bristol Bay plans despite surveys that show limited oil deposits at best, and a warning from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service dating back to 1978 that no adequate safeguards could protect Bristol Bay because of strong tidal currents, severe winds, earthquakes, and heavy ice.

Ten patches in the Bering, Chukchi and Beaufort seas totaling 480 million acres of ocean bottom have been identified by geologists as potential Outer Continental Shelf oil and gas fields.

The Interior Department pegs Bristol Bay's hydrocarbon potential in the Bering Sea among the lowest in that OCS area, with perhaps as little as 2 percent of the nation's undiscovered offshore resources.

Experts estimate the area contains anywhere between 63 million and 615 million barrels of oil. By contrast, the Prudhoe Bay fields which feed the trans-Alaska pipeline are estimated at 10 billion barrels.

At the most, Bristol Bay could amount to only about a month's worth of oil consumption for the nation.

Alaska officials, acutely aware that oil royalties now account for more than 80 percent of the state's revenue, long ago learned to coexist with the multinational energy companies and federal regulators.

Although state coffers don't gain a cent from drilling outside Alaska's three-mile limit, former Governors Jay Hammond and Bill Sheffield, as well as Cowper, all supported OCS leasing — except in Bristol Bay.

But Alaska's decade-old effort to exclude Bristol Bay from OCS sales was stymied by the reluctance of its own congressional delegation to fight exploration, and the adamant refusal of Presidents Carter and Reagan to exclude the bay from Interior Department leasing.

With nearly unanimous support from environmentalists and fishermen, Alaska turned to the courts for help.

"This region is commonly referred to as the 'golden triangle,'" wrote Lance Trasky of the Alaska Department of Fish and Game, during the lengthy litigation. "These fish and wildlife resources have great social and economic value ... to the world."

Last October, U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor rejected the state's appeal. Immediately thereafter, bids were opened and 23 tracts were leased by nine oil companies at an average price of $783.87 an acre.

Shell Western E&P and Chevron USA, the two big winners, announced plans to begin surveying as early as this summer, with drilling to follow as soon as permits were obtained.

In a last-ditch letter to Bush 24 days before the Prince William Sound disaster, Cowper urged him to defer leasing long enough to study environmental impacts of an oil spill in Bristol Bay.

So far Cowper has had no reply from the White House.

Alaska's Senate added its plea last week, unanimously passing a resolution urging the federal government to hold up Bristol Bay exploration.

Hammond, the former governor and a Bristol Bay resident, agrees that the politicians and oil companies have been listening to Alaskans for years, but not hearing them.

Like many, he feels the Prince William Sound disaster "may be the death knell to Bristol Bay leasing" because of the nightmarish potential if a spill happened here.

But as a battle-scarred veteran of two decades of Alaskan political infighting, the man who was governor throughout the building of the trans-Alaska pipeline is also a realist.

"I am optimistic there's a substantially greater impediment to Bristol Bay leasing today," said Hammond, "but I am not optimistic it will never be done. After all, this is Alaska."

Unhappily, Dillingham Mayor Joe McGill agreed.

"I liked living here so much better before electricity, taxes, and lawyers," sighed McGill.

"When the oil companies are really ready to do it, they'll do it. Hell, they're a lot bigger than a bunch of fishermen — and money in Alaska always talks."

Small villages spring to life as salmon season begins

By TAD BARTIMUS

DILLINGHAM, Alaska (AP) — Today the small villages clinging to the edge of the Bering Sea are springing to life with anticipation: it's almost salmon season again, the high point of the year.

Everything in Ekuk and Chignik, Aleknagik and Igiugig, and the other 26 tiny settlements scattered around Bristol Bay takes on a sense of urgency as Aleuts, Indians, Eskimos, and whites prepare for the commercial fishing season.

Mending nets, checking engines, painting hulls — men, women, and children whose entire annual income depends on their success on the sea are now scrambling to be ready for that momentous day when the salmon run.

"You forget everything else until after fishing season," said Dillingham Mayor Joe McGill, a commercial fisherman in Bristol Bay since 1947. "That's all that matters. Dillingham goes from a sleepy little town to a crazy metropolis."

The blazing summer Arctic sun now rises higher in the sky, melting the bay's icepack and hundreds of inches of snow on boats in the storage yard. This town of 1,570 becomes a hub for boat repair, transportation, and speculation about the season ahead.

Will it be a good one, like the last five, and yield enough to make boat payments, cancel the winter's grub bill at the grocery store, leave enough left over for a new refrigerator or even a trip "outside" to the lower 48 when the thermometer dips to 50-below zero next January?

The entire region, totaling 44,000 square miles, has a permanent population of about 4,500.

"In the summer there's a big influx of people from 'outside' who come up just to fish and hope they make a 'killing in a month," said McGill. "Forget flying out of here, this becomes the third busiest airport in the state because of fishing — fishermen coming in, fish being flown out."

The year's cycle along Bristol Bay depends on the world's richest red salmon run, which usually begins in mid-June and continues at a fever pitch through mid-July before tapering off in late summer.

More than 3,500 fishing permits, involving about 10,000 fishermen, are issued by the state for Bristol Bay.

Robert Heyano holds a permit, now worth more than $250,000. So does his wife Marie, and his mother Rose, and two of his brothers. His parents are the only year-round residents of Ekuk, 14 miles south of Dillingham, where his father Peter is the cannery caretaker. In the summer that tiny settlement swells to dozens who camp out for three months' fishing.

Road projects OK'd

Two projects to improve traffic flow on both sides of Interstate 20 in the Midland-Odessa area got the green light from the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation at its April meeting.

One project will extend Faudree Road one-half mile to connect Texas 191 with U.S. Highway 80, with plans calling for a four-lane passageway with curbs and gutters, and a continuous left-turn lane.

Under the proposal, Midland County and the city of Odessa will pay the total cost of right-of-way. The state will provide for utility adjustments and designate it a state spur road.

The commission also approved upgrading a series of county roads, commonly known as "Pool Road," to Farm-to-Market Road. The route stretches 14.1 miles from Grandview Avenue in Odessa to FM 1788, midway between Odessa and Midland.

Local governments have agreed to provide all right-of-way and pay for utility adjustments.

Once the work is completed, the highway department will maintain the road.

JACKSON

Jackson has repeatedly said that "under no condition" would he run against Barry. The two men have been close friends and political allies since their civil rights activities together in the early 1960s.

Barry, who has not said whether he will seek re-election, could not be reached Friday night. The mayor's spokesman also was unreachable.

An effort to organize a mayoral campaign on behalf of Jackson was launched two months ago by a member of the city school board and a leader of the district's Statehood Party.

Ann Lewis, a Democratic political strategist and an adviser to Jackson in his presidential campaign, said Friday that comments Jackson has made to political confidants indicate "he does not immediately reject" running for mayor.

"I know he's been under a lot of pressure about this," Ms. Lewis said. "It's clear that they have reached him," she said, referring to the draft-Jackson effort organized by school board member R. Calvin Lockridge and Statehood Party leader Tom Chorlton.

The two men had hoped to signatures from 100,000 of the city's 300,000 registered voters on a petition supporting Jackson for mayor, but Chorlton said the effort has been slowed by a lack of volunteers.

Democratic National Chairman Ron Brown, who was Jackson's campaign manager last year, said Friday night he was unaware of Jackson's plans. Brown declined further comment.

Jackson, who has never held elective office, could qualify for the 1990 mayor's race by switching his voter registration from Chicago to the district by November of this year.

SMOKING

Thirty-one people received nicotine patches and 31 received placebo patches that looked identical but contained no nicotine, Hurt said.

All were monitored weekly by a nurse who checked carbon monoxide levelsto confirm whether they had been smoking. After the six weeks, 24 people with nicotine patches had quit smoking and 12 with placebo patches had quit, Hurt said.

Of those who still smoked, all who had nicotine patches and 15 of the 19 on placebo patches had reduced their smoking by more than half.

The people who wore the nicotine patches were, by chance, significantly heavier smokers before the study, Hurt said. They smoked a median of 30 cigarettes daily, compared with 25 smoked daily by the placebo group.

Both groups had smoked for about 20 years.

Researchers will track the participants at three-month intervals for a year to determine whether they continue without cigarettes.

Hurt said research at the three other centers may show that fewer people quit in both groups but there is still likely to be a 2 to 1 ratio of nicotine patch quitters to placebo patch quitters.

The American Cancer Socley estimates that cigarette smoking is responsible for 83 percent of the cases of lung cancer. Smoking accounts for 30 percent of all cancer deaths.

SHUTTLE

The $550-million Magellan mission would revitalize NASA's unmanned space science program.

Atlantis' astronauts were strapped in and the countdown was advancing toward a launch, less than a minute to go, when a controller detected something wrong on a monitor and informed Sieck: "Possible problem with an engine 1 recirculation pump ...recommend hold at T-31 seconds."

Launch commentator Hugh Harris quickly reported, "There is not enough time to recycle and launch today."

The pump circulates liquid hydrogen to keep fuel lines cool before engine ignition.

Keith Hodkins, director of NASA's Orbiter Division, said that 50 seconds before the planned launch, monitors detected a sudden power surge reading of 21 amps on the pump's electrical circuitry. Normal, he said, is 2 to 3 amps.

"The spike tripped the circuitry," forcing a shutown, Hodkins said.

Harris had said, "The problem may not be in the pump at all. It might be in ground support equipment or somewhere in the orbiter."

"If the fixes are simple, we can maintain the possibility of a Monday afternoon launch," he said. "If we have to replace the pump or the (fuel) line, we could go well into next week."

Harris said the first goal of the launch team was to "get the crew safely out of there" by making certain all systems were stable. The astronauts reset switches in the cabin before taking the elevator to the base of the pad for a trip back to their crew quarters.

The astronauts — commander David Walker, pilot Ronald Grabe and mission specialists Mary Cleave, Mark Lee and Norman Thagard — returned to crew quarters.

NASA had set Atlantis' liftoff between 2:24 p.m. and 2:47 p.m., a narrow window dictated by the need to deploy the Magellan payload from a precise location above the Earth and a requirement that the shuttle go before darkness fell at emergency landing sites in Spain and Morocco.

The space agency must send Magellan on its way between April 28 and May 28 because that is when Earth and Venus are in proper alignment. If the spacecraft cannot be launched by the end of May, officials would have to wait two years before the two planets again are in the desired position.

The countdown had been almost flawless until the last minute. The only snag was a problem with a range-safety tracking computer that set back the count six minutes.

"All systems were ready to support a launch until we hit that unexpected problem," Harris said.

When Atlantis is launched, the astronauts are to release Magellan from the cargo bay and start it on a 450-day, 806-million-mile journey to Venus. It will be the first U.S. planetary flight in 11 years.

Television stations around the country also planned or had already offered "I Love Lucy" weekend marathons.

An 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. commercial-free Lucy marathon is planned for Saturday on KTTV, Channel 11 in Los Angeles.

"It's very much appreciated," said Watson. "It's nice enough to do it, but to do that and give up their advertising revenue for 10 hours, that's a wonderful, wonderful tribute on their part."

In New York, WNYW, Channel 5, ran two hours of classic "I Love Lucy" episodes Wednesday. The Museum of Broadcasting has 60 hours of Lucille Ball programming, and announced it will run a mini-retrospective next week.

On cable, the TNT network planned to run five Lucille Ball theatrical films, while the Arts and Entertainment Network scheduled a Friday broadcast of "A Woman's Lot," a documentary about the formation of Desilu studios overseen by Miss Ball.

KRIV in Houston will broadcast a five-hour "We'll Always Love Lucy" Sunday special.

MHS senior wins arts contest

From Staff Reports

A Midland High School senior took "Best of Show" honors at "An Artistic Discovery," the second annual art competition for 21st Congressional District students held April 22 in San Angelo.

John Lance's winning effort produced two roundtrip airline tickets to the nation's capital, courtesy of American Airlines. In addition, Lance's work will be put on display in the Capitol Gallery.

The competition, sponsored by Rep. Lamar Smith, R-Texas, is part of a nationwide program to promote artistic talent among students.

In announcing the awards, Smith urged the competitors to settle for nothing but the best in life. "When you are satisfied you cannot improve. When you do not want the best you settle for mediocrity," he said.

Launched nationwide in 1982 by the Congressional Arts Caucus, "An Artistic Discovery" contests are hosted annually by each congressional district. The caucus is a bipartisan organization comprised of U.S. senators and representatives who are interested in supporting the arts.

Other Midland area winners included:

- Lily Hoh, Lee High School, second place, print division.
- Jennifer Grave, Greenwood High School, third place, painting division.
- Brent Arnett, Greenwood High School, first place, collage division.
- Vanessa Hobson, Greenwood High School, third place, print division.
- Rob Underwood, Greenwood High School, honorable mention, painting division.
- Amy Hester, Greenwood High School, honorable mention, collage division.

Football to be played in Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — A football game between Illinois and Southern California universities will take place Sept. 2 in Moscow in the first such match in the Soviet Union, Tass said Friday.

A contract was signed Thursday between the U.S. sponsor and the Soviet economic group Sovintersport to pave the way for the historic match dubbed "Glasnost Cup," the official news agency said.

The game, from Moscow's Dynamo Stadium, will be televised live in the United States by ABC-TV.

About 3,000 American fans are expected to fly to Moscow for the game, Tass said.

"Undoubtedly, such activity will be good publicity for our company," Tass quoted Kenneth Haines, a representative of the sponsoring firm Raycom, as saying. "To bring so many Americans and to present their favorite sport, is it not a step toward mutual understanding?"

Raycom, which arranges telecasts of sports events in the United States, will provide Soviet TV with videotapes of American football games to help Soviets understand the game, Haines told Tass.

Germans split over Dachau youth center

By KEVIN COSTELLOE

DACHAU, West Germany (AP) — After eight years of sometimes bitter controversy, Bavarian leaders are planning a youth center in Dachau to help teach younger generations of the Nazi horrors that occurred in its notorious concentration camp.

But deep philosophical differences remain over just how the center will pass on its bitter lessons.

Politicians here in highly conservative Bavaria want the youth center to be under governmental control. They envision it as a youth hostel that would combine instruction about the Nazis with a chance to learn about the modern-day city of Dachau.

On the other side, an association that has members in several countries argues that the leadership of the center should reflect more diverse views and be more international in scope.

The Association for a Dachau International Youth Meeting Center says the guest house should serve almost exclusively as a forum to analyze the Nazi past and its implications today.

Juergen Zarusky, a leader of the association, said he sees dangers in government control.

"That means everything must be under government protection, so that the past will be presented as a formal history lesson," Zarusky said in an interview.

"Both the personal impact and the search for meaning for today won't be presented as strongly."

Zarusky, a 30-year-old doctoral candidate in modern history who's lived in Dachau for three years, said his group feels unfairly excluded from the project because local conservatives fear "this could go in a leftist direction."

The concentration camp site, including a museum and memorials to the dead, already attracts about a million visitors a year, two-thirds of them foreigners. The site also contains watch towers, barbed wire fences, a reconstructed barracks and the crematorium where the dead were once burned.

Dachau, which is about five miles north of Munich, was the first of a string of Nazi concentration camps that became centers mainly for the extermination of Jews, mostly in gas chambers, in World War II.

Official Nazi records say that 208,000 prisoners were kept at Dachau, although the actual number is believed to be much higher.

Nazi records say that nearly 32,000 prisoners died there, but thousands of other deaths were not registered.

The Nazis set up the concentration camp at Dachau two months after seizing power Jan. 30, 1933. Its prisoners included Jews, Communists, Social Democrats, clergymen and other opponents of the Nazi regime.

Bavarian officials opened the camp as a memorial in 1965, after agreeing to cooperate with the Brussels-based International Dachau Committee in supervising the site. The committee, made up of former Dachau prisoners, has representatives on the board of trustees of the association that wants an international youth center.

The association was formed in 1984, after three years of efforts by a local committee to establish a place where young people could meet and spend the night.

The plans ran into vehement opposition from the conservative Christian Social Union officials at Dachau's city hall. They repeatedly have maintained that such a center would unfairly a create "an extra burden" on a city already saddled with a notorious past.

In 1987, members of the state parliament in Munich filed several motions, seeking to take the matter out of local hands as a way to find a solution.

As a result, the Bavarian Education Ministry this past September approved a plan for creating the youth center with sleeping accommodations for about 100 people, as well as meeting rooms, for both West Germans and foreigners.

"The youth guest house should contribute to enabling and promoting a discussion of the past that is linked to the spirit of democratic responsibility," the Education Ministry said.

In its proposal for Dachau, however, the Education Ministry called for the exclusion of events focusing on "day-to-day politics."

The ministry's Manfred Heger, who is handling the project, said the guest house is supposed to be "multifunctional."

"It isn't supposed to be set up exclusively for instruction about the camp memorial, the concentration camp site, Nazism and fascism."

The Association for a Dachau International Youth Meeting Center has rejected the government plan and continues to push for its own ideas.

Gabi Hendl, another leading member of the association, brushes aside objections that the center could damage the city's reputation.

The concentration camp site, including a museum and memorials to the dead, already attracts about a million visitors a year, two-thirds of them foreigners. The site also contains watch towers, barbed wire fences, a reconstructed barracks and the crematorium.

Eleven-year-old survives night spent lost in the woods

By PAUL McKAY

CONROE (AP) — So tell us, Terry Bruce, you who spent an entire night alone, in the woods and creek bottoms of west Montgomery County, among the many snakes and other creepy crawlers — what was it like being lost out there?

"There were lots of noises," reports the 11-year-old.

And what kinds of noises did you hear?

"Things."

What kinds of things?

"Night things."

Yes, well, adults do ask silly questions sometimes, don't they?

"I guess," says Terry, the cheerful lad who Sunday chased a swarm of his grandfather's honeybees and ended up lost more than 30 hours in the snake country that surrounds the granddad's home.

Tuesday, Terry slept late, staying home from his fifth-grade classes at Montgomery Intermediate School and resting up from the adventure.

Dozens of volunteers, sheriff's officers and Texas Forest Service officials conducted an intensive search for Terry, whose home is a mile from his granddad's house, before he wandered to a stranger's residence about 8 p.m. Monday and asked to use the phone to call home.

The boy, whose only previous experience in the woods had been an overnight camping trip with Cub Scouts, may have zigzagged as many as 15 miles looking for trails that would lead him home, authorities said.

The house where he ended up using the phone is a little more than two miles, in straight-line distance, from where he wandered into the woods about 1:30 p.m. Sunday.

He was alert and smiling Monday night when he was reunited with his parents, Richard Bruce, 29, and Ronda Bruce, 33, as a throng of friends, searchers and reporters looked on.

Terry said Tuesday that during the time he was lost in the desolate acreage some 15 miles southwest of Conroe, he waved "about 20 times" at Houston television station helicopters that had joined in the search. He grew frustrated when he couldn't get their attention, he said.

"I tried to keep moving on logging trails, but they kept ending or leading to other trails," he said. "Sometimes there'd be a trail here and a trail there."

But never was he scared, he said, claiming to have killed three poisonous snakes with the "snake sticks" that he picked up for protection.

Of course, the nighttime did get a trifle spooky, he admitted.

"I slept on a log," he said, "and kept hearing a noise in the bushes. I saw a bush that looked like my mama.

Terry said he sustained himself with berries but knew better than to drink the dirty waters in the creeks and gullies.

He'll continue to help his grandfather raise bees, he said, but never again will he chase them.

Mother testifies in suit against Beam

Woman says during pregnancy she often drank until passing out

NATION

SEATTLE (AP) — A woman who sued a liquor company over her son's birth defects testified Friday that she drank herself unconscious several times during her pregnancy, but never was warned that alcohol would hurt her baby.

Candance Thorp, 39, an admitted alcoholic, said under cross examination that she drank heavily during the 1984 pregnancy, even though she had previously been in alcohol treatment programs.

David Strauber, an attorney for defendant Jim Beam Brands Co., asked Mrs. Thorp whether she drank herself into unconsciousness every night of the pregnancy.

"At times I did," she said. "A lot of times I did not."

Mrs. Thorp and her husband, Harold, of Seattle are seeking to force Jim Beam to pay for lifetime care of their 4-year-old son Michael, who is mentally retarded and has other birth defects in a pattern known as fetal alcohol syndrome.

They have maintained they would have stopped drinking if they had known if could harm the unborn baby. They claim Jim Beam knew of a link between alcohol consumption and birth defects, and was negligent by failing to put warning labels on its products.

Attorneys have said the trial is apparently the first in which damages are sought from an alcohol company for FAS.

The company has denied a link between alcohol and birth defects, but also says any problems that may have been caused by alcohol in Michael Thorp's case were due to Mrs. Thorp's own negligence.

Mrs. Thorp testified that no doctor ever told her about the dangers of drinking while pregnant, even though she had been in several alcohol treatment programs and had two previous children.

Under prodding from her attorney, Kandice Tezak, Mrs. Thorp also noted Michael's birth defects on a large color picture displayed to the jury. She noted the child's small nose, thin lips and lack of indentation above the lip, and also said he had a short attention span, poor coordination and was not toilet-trained.

"If I knew it would cause the birth defects it has I wouldn't have drunk," Mrs. Thorp said, adding that she occasionally read the label on bottles of Jim Beam liquor and that there were no warnings against consumption by pregnant women.

If there had been such a warning she would have stopped drinking while pregnant, she said.

Under cross-examination before the packed courtroom of U.S. District Judge Carolyn Dimmick, a pattern emerged of continuous drinking in the Thorp household before, during and after the pregnancy.

Mrs. Thorp admitted that while pregnant she sometimes drank liquor with her husband in the morning before he went to work, during the day while she did housework, and in the evenings.

Mrs. Thorp testified that in all her pregnancies she was advised to rest, exercise and eat well, but never was specifically told that drinking could harm a fetus.

She admitted drinking up to half a fifth of whiskey per day before giving birth on Dec. 28, 1984.

FAS was first identified in this country in the early 1970s by a team of University of Washington researchers. An estimated 30,000 children are born in this country each year with FAS, according to a 1982 study.

"If I knew it would cause the birth defects it has I wouldn't have drunk."

Bush agrees Japan can help with FSX

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush announced Friday he agreed to proceed with a hotly debated deal with Japan for production of the new FSX fighter jet after assurances that U.S. jobs and technology would be protected.

Bush

He said the deal was "in the strategic and commercial interests of the United States."

"And we weighed this matter from the standpoint of trade, of our industrial growth and technology transfer, as well as strategic and foreign policy considerations," Bush told reporters at the White House.

Bush said the agreement, originally worked out by the Reagan administration, calls for the United States to have a 40 percent share of the early developmnt work for the advanced version of the U.S.-built F-16 by General Dynamics and Japan's Mitsubishi Heavy Industries.

He said the United States would produce "a similar share" in the later production stages.

"There will be no cost to the American taxpayer and at the same time the Japanese will improve their ability to carry their share of the defense burden.

"I want to assure you that sensitive source codes for the aircraft's computer will be strictly controlled," Bush said addressing a major concern of many on Capitol Hill.

Safeguarding U.S. technology and jobs were the two major sticking points of the deal. In addition to controls to safeguard sensitive computer technology, the Japanese government agreed to ensure that 40 percent of the estimated $5 billion production run on the plane will be handled in the United States. The Japanese had already agreed to give U.S. companies a 40 percent share of the FSX's estimated $1.2 billion development work.

Congress will have a 30-day review period before the agreement is finalized.

The Reagan administration negotiated the arrangement initially after Japan refused to buy any U.S. F-16 fighters and indicated it would build its own fighter plane.

The proposal immediately became controversial because of fears that it would result in the United State giving technology to Japan that would hurt America's competitive advantage in aviation.

But supporters of the idea said the project is a way to add fighters to Japan's inventory at Tokyo's expense. It also would provide jobs for the United States, and give Washington access to sophisticated radar technology developed by Japan.

Reports from Tokyo earlier Friday said the agreement was near on the project as the Defense Agency decided to retract its demand that more than 50 percent of engine production work be given to Japan and that Japan receive all computer software for flight control of the U.S. F-16, which is the basis for the FSX jet.

Under the FSX arrangement, St. Louis-based General Dynamics is to join forces with Japan's Mitsubishi Heavy Industries to develop and manufacture the next-generation fighter for deployment by Japan in the late 1990s.

Drought aggravates plight of Bangladesh's poor

By FARID HOSSAIN

PALASHTALA, Bangladesh (AP) — Two weeks ago, Zarina Khatoon sold her aluminum cooking pot to buy food for her four hungry children.

"The cooking pot was the last asset I could sell. My children were going without food for two days. They had nothing but water," Zarina said, wearing a ragged sari and sitting on the ground in front of her mud-and-straw house.

Her plight is common among the families of 65 million landless day laborers in this poverty-stricken nation of 110 million people. When there are no fields to tend, there is no money to earn.

Two months of drought have aggravated the situation. The rain that brought a measure of relief on Wednesday may not be enough to save the crops in the ground.

In yet another of the deadly caprices nature so often unleashes on Bangladesh, the rains were accompanied by tornadoes that killed at least 600 people. It was the latest in a series of natural calamities that have struck the nation.

Floods last summer killed more than 1,400 people, submerged four-fifths of the country and left 25 million people homeless. Barely two months after the water receded, cyclones struck in late November, claiming another 1,100 lives.

The Jamalpur district, 90 miles north of Dhaka, was ravaged by last summer's monsoon-spawned floods. Now it suffers from drought. But so far the main problem is not availability of food, relief workers say. It's the shortage of work.

The sowing season is over. For landless day laborers, there will be no more work until the rice crop now in the ground is harvested in early June — if the paddies survive the drought.

Zarina Khatoon's husband, Mokbul Ahmad, left home two weeks ago to look for work. He has not yet returned to Palashtala, 12 miles south of Jamalpur.

Shortly after he left, Zarina sold her cooking pot for 15 takas, about 46 cents. She promptly spent 31 cents on 2.2 pounds of flour, which saw her family through two meals.

The 25-year-old woman said her situation had improved slightly since she found work digging a pond for 15 takas a day.

"Still, I cannot buy rice for my family," she said. "Rice is out of my reach."

WORLD

Two weeks ago, low-quality rice, the staple of the Bangladeshi diet, sold for 28 cents a pound. The government pumped some reserve stocks into the area, and the price fell a little — to 25 cents a pound.

"It's not the question of availability of rice. The problem is the poor people have no money to buy food. They have no jobs," said Fakhrul Ahsan, a local worker for the privately run Bangladesh Rural Development Committee.

He said the committee is working with 56,000 people living in 47 villages in the Jamalpur region, doing post-flood rehabilitation work and trying to provide jobs such as building roads and making handicrafts.

"Almost 30 percent of the people we cover are living in extreme conditions," Ahsan said. "They take flour and boil it with water. They can't make bread from wheat as that fails to feed all the members of the family.

"This is a lean period for agriculture workers. There is no work in the fields until the next harvest comes. The poor, landless people eat on days they can work. On workless days they go without food," he added.

"We have no report of anyone dying for lack of food, but the situation is pretty bad," said Debabrata Das, another worker from the Bangladesh Rural Development Committee.

Abdul Hamid, who lives in Narayanpur near Palashtala, said he earned 15 takas a day working for wealthy farmers.

"The money I earn cannot buy rice for me and my family," the 35-year-old father of three said. "Rice has become a luxury item for us."

Bangladesh, where the per capita annual income is $160, needs 18.5 million tons of rice and wheat a year to feed its people. In good years, it produces 17 million tons. It tries to import an additional 2 million tons to cover the shortfall and provide an emergency reserve.

Last year, the floods wiped out 2.5 million tons that were in the fields and paddies when the deluge struck.

The spring rice crop now in the ground was expected to produce about 3.6 million tons, but agriculture officials in Dhaka fear at least half will be lost to the drought.

Tornado death toll up to 660

SATURIA, Bangladesh (AP) — Rescuers pulled 48 bodies from the twisted wreckage of tornado-battered villages on Friday and a dozen people died in hospitals, raising the death toll to 660, officials said.

Hundreds more remained missing and officials said deaths from the storm may would exceed 1,000.

Relatives of the dead wailed and recited holy chants as rescuers labored in the debris in Saturia, one of more than 20 small villages in central Bangladesh hit hard by the storm.

The toll jumped sharply on Friday when rescuers recovered 40 bodies in Saturia and and nearby Harganj, according Relief Ministry officials speaking on the condition they not be identified.

Another eight bodies were found in the village of Dhamrai Upazila, and 12 people injured in the storm died in hospitals, they said.

About 400 people have been listed as missing, including 200 fisherman whose boats were capsized.

An army officer supervising the rescue, speakng on condition of anoymity, said the final death toll may exceed 1,000. At least 12,000 people have been injured.

The tornado swept into the Manikganj area, 25 miles northwest of Dhaka, on Wednesday night, blowing away people, animals and houses. Another tornado reportedly hit the Narsingdi district, 25 miles east of the capital, killing five people and injuring 500.

Saturia was perhaps the hardest hit.

"The tornado swooped on the area like an elephant trunk and within minutes nothing except the dead and injured was left," said Faruk Ahmed, a district official.

The storm came during two months of draught that has wiped out half of this impoverished nation's rice crop. Late last year, torrential rains flooded more than two-thirds of the country, and a cyclone killed hundreds of people.

Nature's latest blow left Saturia, a village of 10,000 people, a chaotic mass of twisted trees, utility poles and corrugated iron sheets.

A group of wailing and sobbing people carried a body to a burial spot behind a crumbled building.

"I was here during the devastating flood last year in which more than 20 persons had died. But I have not seen anything so devastating as the tornado," Ahmed said.

In the nearby village of Tilli Char, at least 80 people, some seriously hurt, waited for medical attention outside a tin school shed being used as a hospital.

Yellow River supports farmers for 7,000 years

The Yellow River watershed, cradle of Chinese civilization, has supported an agricultural society for more than 7,000 years, longer perhaps than any other place on Earth, says National Geographic.

East Texans string along together in Nacogdoches

By RICHARD STEWART

NACOGDOCHES, Texas (AP) — On Saturday afternoons, Steve Hartz's corner shop next to the firehouse on town square looks like a scene from a Norman Rockwell magazine cover.

An English literature professor on guitar, an art teacher picking the banjo, a historian beating on a bull fiddle and a geography professor picking a mandolin.

In the middle, there's a ditch digger for a lawn sprinkler company strumming guitar, belting out a gospel song that would have a Pentecostal preacher shouting "Amen!"

A big red dog named Maedell slumbers in peace behind a row of stools at what once was a cafe lunch counter.

The brass spittoon is operational. So is the fishing rod propped beside the door, just in case the fever suddenly strikes.

This is the Old Time String Shop, an oasis for practitioners of non-amplified stringed music in this part of East Texas.

It's where folks can come to buy new, used and vintage instruments, picks, kazoos, sheet music, records and all sorts of other stuff. It's also where people from all over the country send their sick instruments for Hartz to lovingly repair.

Saturday afternoon, the shop turns into a concert hall and musicians turn the action into one of the best free shows available in the region.

Somebody might start off a Gershwin tune, or some bluegrass.

A few of those old "You-done-smashed-up-my-heart-and-now-I'm-drinkin'-to-forget-you, darlin'" honkytonk tunes are shuffled with gospel songs about crossing Jordan and gold in heavenly crowns; songs so blue it's hard to believe the sun will ever shine again.

And, of course, there's a little honey-sweet jazz.

"Why, I've paid $10 to see some concerts that weren't half as good as this," said Randy Clary, a 35-year-old sprinkler company employee, guitar picker, singer and songwriter.

He moved to Nacogdoches from Kermit a few years ago when things got tough in the oil patch and he wanted to see some parts of Texas that get a little rain.

"Whenever I get to a new town I always go to a barber shop to see where the musicians hang out," he said. "Sure enough, the first barber I ran into here is a guitar picker and he told me about this place."

Stephen F. Austin University brought most of the shop's regular musicians to town.

Stan Alexander, an English literature instructor, is a member of the East Texas String Ensemble, a faculty group that made it big in Texas bluegrass and folk circles in the 1970s.

Art teacher Charlie Jones is in another group that he puckishly calls the "Second East Texas String Ensemble." It's really an Irish folk music group called Barish Misfortune.

"Hey, we're professionals," history professor Tom Nall said. "Sure, we got well paid that time we played that gig at the Lower Alazan Road Cemetery cleaning."

The others laugh.

"Well, they had dinner on the grounds and we got well fed anyway," Nall said.

Many, like geography professor Charles Gardner, grew up around music. His father played live on radio in Phoenix in the 1930s and '40s. Others picked up music in the 1960s when they were students and folk music was popular.

Students nowadays are more interested in heavy metal or amplified, electronic country-western, the professors say.

Not that some youngsters haven't found their way to the String Shop. Kelly Lancaster was 10 or 11 when he started coming into the shop shortly after Hartz opened it in 1978.

"I'd cry if my mother wouldn't drive me down here on Saturdays," he said.

Already a piano player, he picked up guitar at the String Shop. Now, the others stop to watch as his fingers blur over the silver strings.

Atop the store's piano is a trophy proclaiming Lancaster the country's second-best flat pick-style guitar picker. Lancaster plays a $2,000 Martin J-40 guitar he won in the contest in Kansas last November.

For him music isn't just a pastime. He's a member of a Houston-based group called The Gypsies and plans to make music his life's work.

Hartz, 38, grew up in Tennessee and Baytown. After graduating from Ross Sterling High School in 1969, he majored in agriculture at SFA, taking up guitar, banjo and mandolin on the side. He went to a lot of area bluegrass gatherings and still plays in a band called The Mystery Ridge Radio Rangers.

He also got interested in working on wood instruments and decided to try to make them by hand. When he opened his shop in 1978, he said, "I thought I could make a living making banjos."

He did make a few banjos, mandolins, dulcimers and other instruments. People quickly discovered his skills and now much of his business is in repairs.

Hartz's real love is vintage instruments.

"If I had my choice, I would just deal in those," he said, "but there's not enough of a market here."

A vintage instrument is a good-sounding instrument made in the 1950s or earlier in the United States, Hartz said. Most instruments made after that or that come from Japan are merely used, he said.

He has several 19th-century banjos in the shop, but most of the guitars date to the 1920s or later. Before that, he said, most guitars were cheaply made. Good ones made after that "just keep getting better."

Hartz uses a mixture of ancient luthier art and skill and modern materials. He might use a modern epoxy to glue in a bit of wood to patch the front or back of an instrument. Then he'll use an old-fashioned white glue to put the main pieces together.

"You have to make it possible to take an instrument apart if you need to," he said.

Hartz said he could probably increase business in a larger city, but he likes the slow lifestyle of Nacogdoches.

In a bigger city, he might not be able to spend Saturday afternoons sitting in with the customers playing a continuing free-style folk-bluegrass-blues music festival.

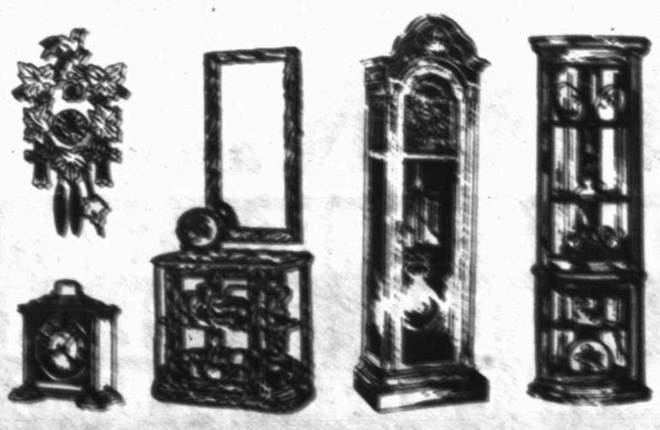

And when the shop is closed on Sunday and Monday, it might not be so easy to grab the fishing pole and head for a favorite fishing hole.

Agribusiness, regulators struggle over pesticide use

By R.G. RATCLIFFE
Hearst News Service

AUSTIN — As Tom Oatman worked in the back yard of his general store in the Panhandle farming community of Quail on a bright, warm November day in 1987, he heard the roar of a propeller-driven airplane pass overhead.

Oatman knew immediately it was a crop duster that had been spraying a potent defoliant on a cotton field 50 yards east of Quail, a town of about 40 people. Then he felt a mist.

The airplane passed over repeatedly, spraying the town with poison.

"The pilot told us it was just an accident," Oatman recalled. "I told him, 'You sprayed me, so it's something for me to worry about.' "

Neither Oatman nor anyone else sprayed that day suffered immediate health effects, but gardens around town had to be tilled under, trees turned brown and shrubbery died.

Oatman, 36, who studied chemistry in college, noted years could pass before anyone in town shows ill health effects from the chemical.

The Texas Department of Agriculture found traces of the arsenic-based defoliant Desiccant L-10 scattered on plants around Quail and on the gasoline pump in front of Oatman's store.

The chemical's label declares it to be a cancer hazard and a corrosive material that will cause irreversible eye and skin damage, or death if swallowed, inhaled or absorbed through the skin. The aerial applicator agreed to a $2,250 fine.

Incidents such as the one in Quail have taken on a greater emphasis as this year's legislative review of the Texas Department of Agriculture has turned away from whether controversial Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower's post should remain elective to how much power he should have to regulate pesticides in the state.

Behind the scenes moves in the House Government Organizations Committee — where action was expected this week on an agriculture department bill — could strip Hightower of much of his power by curtailing pesticide fines, turning the development of pesticide rules over to a board appointed by the governor and putting the agency up for another legislative review in 1993.

Those back-door movements also could result in limiting Hightower's ability to seek future re-election by setting qualifications for agriculture commissioner that would eliminate candidates who do not have a financial interest in an operating farm or ranch.

"This is really an effort by the chemical lobby to upset the obvious fact that this agency is doing its job of protecting the public from pesticide poisoning," Hightower said last week.

But Hightower opponents say the commissioner, consumer advocates and environmentalists are only trying to get political mileage out of some isolated instances of pesticide misuse in a state where $198 million in agricultural chemicals are used every year.

"What they're trying to do is create an issue, a dragon to slay," said John Fisher of the Texas Agricultural Chemical Association. "And I'm sorry, we're not that dragon."

The battle is focused on a bill to re-establish the agriculture department, which will cease to exist Sept. 1 if not re-created by the Legislature.

The Senate already has approved a version of the bill that would extend Hightower's regulatory power by allowing him to level up to $5,000 a day in administrative penalties against pesticide violators, or obtain up to $10,000 a day in court fines. That maximum fine now is $1,000 for each violation.

"The public needs strong penalties so we don't have a situation where it is cheaper for someone to violate the law and endanger the health and safety of Texans than it is to comply with the law," said Rebecca Lightsey of the Texas Consumer Association.

But Deborah Gillan, a Llano County rancher, said many farmers and ranchers around the state are fearful they could be put out of business by a major mistake or a punitive agriculture commissioner.

"There are very, very few people in agriculture, if any, who could stand that kind of financial penalty," Gillan said.

Some key House members working on the agriculture bill also would extend Hightower's authority by giving him control of the Structural Pest Control Board, the agency that regulates home and commercial building pesticide applications.

While the agriculture agency has little control over structural pesticide applications, it does handle complaints about the misuse of pesticides involving the exposure of humans, animals and plants.

In the past three years, there have been 393 complaints filed with the agriculture department over potentially illegal human exposure to pesticides, with total fines of $74,000 resulting in 82 cases, with 16 cases still pending.

In one pending case, the attorney general's office is pursuing possible civil penalties on behalf of 50 farm workers who may have been sprayed by an aerial applicator in an onion field near Ft. Stockton in 1987.

"Unfortunately, the stories that get printed are of the maverick operators who abuse chemicals or when there is an accident," said Vernie Glasson, executive director of the Texas Farm Bureau. "But most farmers are very, very careful with chemicals."

Glasson, whose group has called for replacing Hightower's elective post with an appointed board, said farmers and ranchers want regulations to protect the public and the environment.

But he said those regulations should not be so strict as to discourage farmers from the use of chemicals or to put aerial applicators out of business.

"There's a degree of being reasonable and unreasonable in regulation, and that's where the rubber meets the road," Glasson said.

The battle between Hightower and agricultural and chemical groups began shortly after he took office in 1983 as he tried to force the Texas Department of Health to ban food contaminated with the carcinogenic pesticide ethylene dibromide, EDB.

The health department refused to act for several months until the federal Environmental Protection Agency declared a health emergency against EDB.

Then in 1984, Hightower pressed forward with his fight by proposing regulations primarily designed to protect farm workers from aerial spraying. Opposition spilled over into the 1985 Legislature, where an attempt to take pesticide regulation away from Hightower and give it to a three-member board failed on a 77-60 House vote.

The pesticide board issue appeared dead for this legislative session until Hightower announced last December that he would not oppose Republican Phil Gramm for a U.S. Senate seat in 1990, but would instead seek re-election as agriculture commissioner.

Agriculture groups such as the Texas Farm Bureau and the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association started a campaign to have Hightower's job turned into an appointed board.

But Hightower quashed that move in the Legislature with the high profile help of country singer Willie Nelson and former Congresswoman Barbara Jordan. So legislative opponents are now aiming at Hightower's role as chief pesticide regulator, with the design of giving much of his authority to an appointed pesticide board.

Rep. Lena Guerrero, D-Austin, sponsor of the agriculture department bill, opposes the creation of anything other than a pesticide advisory board.

"If you talked about a scientific board with regulatory power, you're talking about an elected commissioner with no power," Guerrero said.

Ken Kramer of the Texas Sierra Club said an appointed pesticide board would "probably weaken pesticide regulation."

Morrow, Essex qualify for state

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

LUBBOCK - Midland High's doubles duo of Luke Morrow and Harper Essex found the road to Austin and the state meet here Friday during the first day of action in the Region I tennis tournament at the Lubbock Municipal Tennis Center while teammate Elizabeth Ameel fell just one upset away from another Austin berth.

Morrow and Essex waltzed through three match victories to earn the state tennis berth in two weeks in Austin. They will play in the finals today, but since the top two from each region get to advance to Austin, it doesn't really matter if they win or lose.

However, Ameel, a junior, lost in the semifinals to No. 1 seed Leigh Ann Smith of Arlington Martin to just miss a singles state berth. Still, Ameel entered the tournament unseeded and carried Smith to the limit before losing 3-6, 7-5, 6-1.

Morrow and Essex combined to defeat Irving MacArthur's B.W. Chang and Brian Hooten, 6-4, 6-4, in the first round before notching a 7-6, 6-0 win over the Wichita Falls Rider team of Jamie Moss and Drew Carnes in the second round.

The state berth came with a 6-4, 6-4 semifinal victory over El Paso Coronado's Brian Kelly and John Sullivan.

The Midland pair now own a 20-2 record for the year and 12 straight victories.

"They were just super. Even though some of the matches seem close, they were never in jeopardy of losing a set during the day," said MHS tennis coach Steve Hoover. "They just took total control."

But the state berth and no worse than a Region I runnerup label doesn't seem to be good enough.

"We really want to go out Saturday and win the title. We're seeded No. 1 and we want to prove we deserve it. The title is important to us," said Morrow, the senior.

Essex, the junior, said, "This is a chance of a lifetime for us. Now we have a chance to win state. If we can win the title, it will probably help our seeding in Austin and that can be important."

Morrow and Essex have only played together eight months and might be seeded as high as No. 2 at the state with a win today.

"It's almost unbelievable that these two are 20-2 with only eight months together. Most of these doubles teams have two or more years together," said Hoover.

Ameel beat L.D. Bell's Sarah Bartlett, 6-0, 6-2 in the first round and then pulled off a big second round upset over No. 4 seed Wynne Staley of Wichita Falls, 7-6, 6-0.

Thurman surfaces at Cowboy camp

From Staff Reports

IRVING — Former Midland Lee standout Tyrone Thurman is attending a rookie mini-camp this weekend in hopes of improving his chances of sticking with the Dallas Cowboys, a Cowboys spokesman said.

Thurman, who set several Southwest Conference records at Texas Tech, signed a free-agent contract with the Cowboys earlier this week after being passed over in last weekend's National Football League draft.

Team spokesman Greg Aiello said Thurman joined 33 other rookies at the mini-camp, where they are undergoing physical examinations and practicing through the weekend.

The Cowboys drafted no wide receivers, though rookie free agents Reggie Davis of Texas Christian and Richard Crosby of Grambling will also be trying to stick at wideout.

Local athletes left out in Region I track meet

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

LUBBOCK - Midland athletes were still casting longing eyes in the direction of Austin after the first day of competition in the Region I track meet on the campus of Texas Tech University.

The lofty goal is hard to find here where the top two individuals in each event become Austin bound to join the state's elite thinclads.

That Austin road was not found Saturday. In fact, Midlanders lost four opportunities. But they still have a shot in four events.

Midland Lee high jumper David Arehart lost his bid for a state berth with a fifth place 6-6 in the high jump while Lee's Mary Ann Isom qualified for the finals in the discus, but didn't place. Midland High's Annette Glover failed to qualify for today's final in the 200, but did roll to qualification in the 100. Lee's Jamelia Lott also failed to qualify in the 200.

Arehart, who had a career best 6-8 going into this meet, didn't quite get the 6-10 he wanted. If he had, he would be headed for Austin. El Paso Irvin's Howard Williams won with a 6-10.

"This is really tough competition," said Arehart. "I wanted 6-8 real bad, but the apron is harder here than in Midland. I'm coming to college here next year, so I guess I'll have a long time to get used to it.

"I'm not disappointed. My real goal was just to get here. It was a good season for me."

Isom, who had only a toss of 104-feet after a 123 in the district discus, said, "I made the finals, but that's about it. I didn't throw as well as I did in district."

If she had equaled her career best, she would have finished third. San Angelo's Amy Wilder placed second with a 125-4 and won a state berth with Trinity's Eileen Vanesi, who had a 128-0.

Glover led her heat through the curve in the 200, but appeared to slow badly down the stretch. She ended up out of the money and out of today's finals. Lott had much the same trouble, finishing last in her heat.

"I almost fell on the stretch and couldn't keep my stride. There was loose stuff all over the track," said Glover of her 200 experience.

After Lott's heat, she refused to comment, saying, "Don't come near me."

Glover, however, finished second in her 100 heat, but still had only the eighth best qualifying time with a 12.51.

"I got behind out of the blocks, but that really pushed me and makes me excited about tomorrow and the finals," said Glover.

Midland High sprinter Albert Ray also qualified in the 100, but he was disappointed with his 10.89, sixth best.

"I couldn't set may blocks right because they are different than what we usually use. I'll get that corrected, but I had a terrible start and that's the best part of my race. It has to be because all the other runners are bigger than I am," said Ray.

Midland High Tracy Parker, seeking a return trip to the state meet in the shot put, will compete at 10 a.m. today and Lee's James Brown will vie for long jump honors at the same time. Brown qualified for this meet as a sophomore when at Odessa Permian, but that was in the high jump where he placed third. Now a try for state in another event.

Odessa High's Dallas Cowan led all qualifiers in both the 100 and 200. The sophomore blazed to a 10.54 in the 100 and won both heats by at least three yards.

Still, Cowan appeared to come up lame in the 200 at the finish line, grabbing the back of his leg with pain showing in his face.

"I know I felt something bad in the back of my leg. I'm hoping it's just a cramp," said Cowan, who was one of the stars of the day.

San Angelo's Joey Bonds qualified for the finals in both hurdle events, but it took some scrambling. His blocks slipped at the start of the 110 high hurdles and was dead last going over the first hurdle. He eventually finished second in the head. He took the worry out of being close in the 300 hurdles with an easy win.

Trudeau, Cron lead hot Haloes

By TED BATTLES
Sports Writer

They—3,323 of 'em—came to see The Famous Chicken and they were delighted, but they went away talking about Kevin Trudeau and, perhaps, Chris Cron and most definitely the Midland Angels who made it nine wins in the last 11 games by beating the Wichita Wranglers 8-1 at Angels Stadium Friday night.

The win gave Midland a five-game lead in the Texas League West and Trudeau's 11-strikeout, six-hitter was the first route-going performance by a Midland pitcher this season.

In the process, the Livermore, Calif., native lowered his earned-run-average to 0.99, which means Andy Benes, Wichita's starter against the Angels 7 p.m. tonight, better pitch another shutout to remain the TL ERA leader.

Don't bet he won't. In his last two starts, Benes pitched three-hit shutouts against Midland and then San Antonio for a 3-0 record, an 0.56 ERA and 44 strikeouts in 32 innings, 28 whiffs coming in the last two games.

Young Scott Lewis, 1-2, will oppose for the Angels and will have to return to his opening night form to keep it close.

AND WHILE Trudeau, acquired by the Angels in the Bert Blyleven trade during the winter, kept the Wranglers at bay until Midland came up with six runs in the eighth to ease the tension, Cron continued on his bat rampage.

The one-time Atlanta Braves' farm hand collected two doubles and a single and is seven for his last nine at bats. But this isn't something new. He is on a binge that has seen him hit safely in 11 straight games at a 21 for 45 (.467) clip.

DH Otto Gonzales had two doubles and Jeff Barns had a double and three rbi for the Angels.

But Trudeau, the way he was pitching, really didn't need that kind of plate support.

"Sure, they told me about this park. So I try not to walk people so that someone can follow it with a cheap home run," Trudeau said, "I try not to give up freebies."

AND SO far, it has paid off in a 3-0 record and if he keeps it up, someone up above may take notice.

Trudeau, who like his brother, Jack, once played quarterback in football, last year pitched at Orlando, AA, and Portland, AAA.

WHILE MIDLAND won 10-1, it was 1-1 going into the fifth, anybody's game as Trudeau and lefty Rich Holsman hooked up in taut hill duel. Reed Peters' double and Cron's single gave Midland a first inning run. Wichita matched it on Kevin Garner's two out single and Brian Brooks' triple in the second.

That's the way it was for Trudeau all night, troubles in twos. Back-to-back walks in the sixth and in the seventh two-out singles by Terry McDevitt and Brian Cisarik. But he never let things get out of hand.

In the fifth, Gary DiSarcina bounced a single to left, Barns lined a hit to left, scoring DiSarcina, and Cron doubled Barns to third from where he scored on Hedi Vargas sac fly. Gonzales' double and Peters fly made it 4-1 in the sixth, still close in this park.

In the eighth, Midland sent 10 batters to the plate in raking Rafael Chavez, the Wranglers' third pitcher for six runs and six hits.

Midland's Gary DiSarcina reaches second on a wild pitch in Friday's game, despite the presence of Wichita's Terry McDevitt.

Rose to claim friend blackmailed him

CINCINNATI (AP) — Pete Rose will tell investigators that a former friend accused him of betting on baseball, including Reds games, after the Cincinnati manager refused to loan him $40,000, the Cincinnati Post said Friday.

The Post quoted unidentified sources as saying Rose will name Paul Janszen as the person who made the accusations following the alleged blackmail attempt.

Rose will say he loaned Janszen $10,000 late last summer, but turned him down when Janszen asked to borrow another $40,000 in late September or early October, the Post quoted sources as saying.

At the time, Janszen told Rose's lawyer Reuven Katz that Rose owed him the $40,000, but he wouldn't say for what, according to the Post's sources.

The sources also said Janszen told Katz late last year that unless he got more money from Rose, Janszen would tell baseball officials that Rose bet on games.

Janszen pleaded guilty to federal charges of tax evasion and is being held at a halfway house. Court documents indicate that Janszen allegedly placed bets on baseball, including Reds' games, on behalf of an unidentified Cincinnati resident. Published reports have named Rose as that resident.

Meantime, The Boston Globe on Friday quoted Joseph Cambra, another convicted bookmaker linked to Rose, as saying he never took baseball bets from Rose. Cambra declined to say whether Rose ever placed bets with him on other sports.

"Pete Rose never bet on baseball games with me. Never, you hear? Never," Cambra was quoted as saying.

Cambra, who said he met Rose during spring training in 1984, also told the Globe he received two checks totaling $19,300 from Rose that year and had copies made.

Davis nixes beer promotion

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros slugger Glenn Davis, who doesn't drink beer and is active in anti-drug campaigns, has told management he doesn't want to be associated with home-run production sponsored by a beer company.

Davis leads the National League with seven home runs.

Budweiser is the major sponsor of the Astros' local television broadcasts and part of the commercial package calls for the team announcers to say the player's name and proclaim, "This Bud's For You," whenever an Astro hits a home run.

Davis said he was concerned Budweiser's home-run promotion was sending mixed signals to his fans, some of whom might think he condones drinking.

"Personally, I don't drink and I don't want to be associated with it," he said. "I try to set a standard and be a role model for a lot of other people."

Saturday's Question: Which position yielded the least players during the NFL draft?

Friday's Answer: Sixty-two defensive backs were drafted by NFL teams earlier this month.

On This Date..

Carlesimo wavering on UK job?

SOUTH ORANGE, N.J. (AP) — P.J. Carlesimo is not expected to decide about the Kentucky basketball coaching job until at least next week, Seton Hall athletic director Larry Keating said Friday.

"When he comes to a definite, final decision, he'll think about it for another week," Keating joked.

Carlesimo, who guided the Pirates to a 31-7 season that ended a point short of a national title, has refused to comment on reports that the Kentucky job is his for the asking.

"If I knew you guys were waiting out here for me I would have come out and talked to you," Carlesimo said with a smile to reporters as he left his office for a banquet in Connecticut on Friday night. "I can't now or else I'll be late for my plane."

The Associated Press reported Tuesday that Carlesimo would accept the Kentucky job, but not until he talked to Seton Hall officials.

After Keating's statement Friday, a source at Kentucky said Carlesimo seemed to be having second thoughts.

"Maybe he isn't going to do it now," the source said. "It's up to Carlesimo now, but they sure thought they had him locked up."

The source said Carlesimo never definitely accepted the job and it was never even formally offered to him.

While Carlesimo considered the Kentucky job that would pay him about $600,000 annually, two of his assistant coaches were thinking about other jobs.

Assistant Tom Sullivan spent Friday interviewing at Bryant College in Rhode Island. Sullivan, who has spent two years on the Pirates staff, has talked about returning to New England even before Carlesimo was considered for the Kentucky job.

Bruce Hamburger, who has spent three seasons here, is considering whether to apply for the head coach job at Trenton State, the runner-up in Division III this past season. Hamburger was an assistant coach at the Ewing Township school for two years before joining Seton Hall.

Trenton State coach Kevin Bannon was named head coach at Rider, a Division I school, on Friday.

"I've lived my whole life in New Jersey and when I was there I did a lot of the recruiting and I know a lot of the people," Hamburger said. "I've now had experience with a big-time program here. It's something I want to consider."

Bulls sneak past favored Cavaliers

RICHFIELD, Ohio (AP) — So much for a Cleveland sweep. Now the Chicago Bulls can turn their attention to winning the whole series.

"Everybody thought they were going to sweep us. We proved them wrong," said Scottie Pippen, who shook off the effects of a sore shoulder to score 13 third-quarter points as the Bulls upset the Cavaliers 95-88 in their playoff opener Friday night.

Pippen was 4-for-4 and Craig Hodges was 3-for-4 on 3-point shots. Michael Jordan led the Bulls with 31 points.

"We knew Cleveland has a lot of shot-blockers," Pippen said. "When Michael penetrated or someone else penetrated and got us the ball, we had to knock down the outside shots."

Cleveland won all six of its regular-season meetings with the Bulls, including a 90-84 season-ending victory Sunday in which three Cavalier starters were rested because of injuries.

Only one of those, Mark Price, was unable to play Friday, but the absence of Price's outside shooting proved to be Cleveland's undoing on offense.

"Brad (Daugherty) didn't stutter any," Cleveland coach Lenny Wilkens said. "If you have two or three people doubling you, there's nothing you can do. We've got to make some outside shots so they can't do that."

The victory swung homecourt advantage to Chicago for the five-game series, with two games remaining in each city.

"There was no pressure on us, and all the pressure was on them," said Jordan, who also had 11 assists. "We just stayed inside with our defense, kept the pressure on down there and helped out as much as possible."

The Bulls eliminated the Cavaliers 3-2 in the first round last year, with each team winning all its home games.

Chicago led by as many as 15 in the first half but saw the lead dwindle to 47-40 at halftime.

Pippen, however, made three 3-point shots and Craig Hodges added another during a 30-11 Chicago run that built the advantage to 77-53 late in the third quarter.

The Cavaliers made a frantic charge early in the fourth quarter, when Larry Nance sank an 18-footer to start a 15-3 flurry that cut the deficit to 83-74. Two free throws by Jordan, however, stopped the comeback, and Cleveland's Ron Harper fouled out during the rally to weaken the Cavaliers' offense.

Pippen, who did not practice this week until Thursday because of the sore shoulder, had 22 points. Hodges, who missed 13 of the final 14 regular-season games with a sprained ankle, scored 15.

Craig Ehlo led Cleveland with 19 points and Nance had 18. Price did not dress because he has a pulled groin.

Cleveland started cold, missing its first four shots while Pippen sandwiched two long jumpers around a 15-footer by Jordan, giving the Bulls a 6-0 lead.

SuperSonics 111, Rockets 107

SEATTLE (AP) — Derrick McKey and Xavier McDaniel each made two free throws in the final 20 seconds Friday night as the Seattle SuperSonics defeated Houston 111-107 in the opening game of their first-round playoff series.

The Rockets led 105-104 with 1:20 left after a three-point play by Akeem Olajuwon and a pair of baskets by Buck Johnson brought Houston back from a 104-98 deficit.

But Sedale Threatt, who came off the Seattle bench to score 22 points, made an 18-foot fallaway jumper with 1:01 remaining to put Seattle in front to stay at 106-105.

With 44 seconds left, Olajuwon was called for traveling as he went to the basket.

Two free throws by McKey with 20 seconds to go put Seattle in front 108-105. Sleepy Floyd dunked for Houston with 16 seconds left and immediately fouled McDaniel, who made both free throws with 15 seconds to go for a 110-107 Sonics lead.

Purvis Short missed a 3-point shot with 12 seconds to go and Derrick Chievous rebounded for the Rockets, but had his shot blocked by Alton Lister, his eighth block for the Sonics.

Lister made a free throw with two seconds to go for the final point of the game.

Pistons 101, Celtics 91

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — Joe Dumars scored 12 of his 25 points and John Salley blocked five shots as the Detroit Pistons held the Boston Celtics to a record-tying 10 points in the second quarter en route to a 101-91 victory Friday night in the opener of their first-round playoff series.

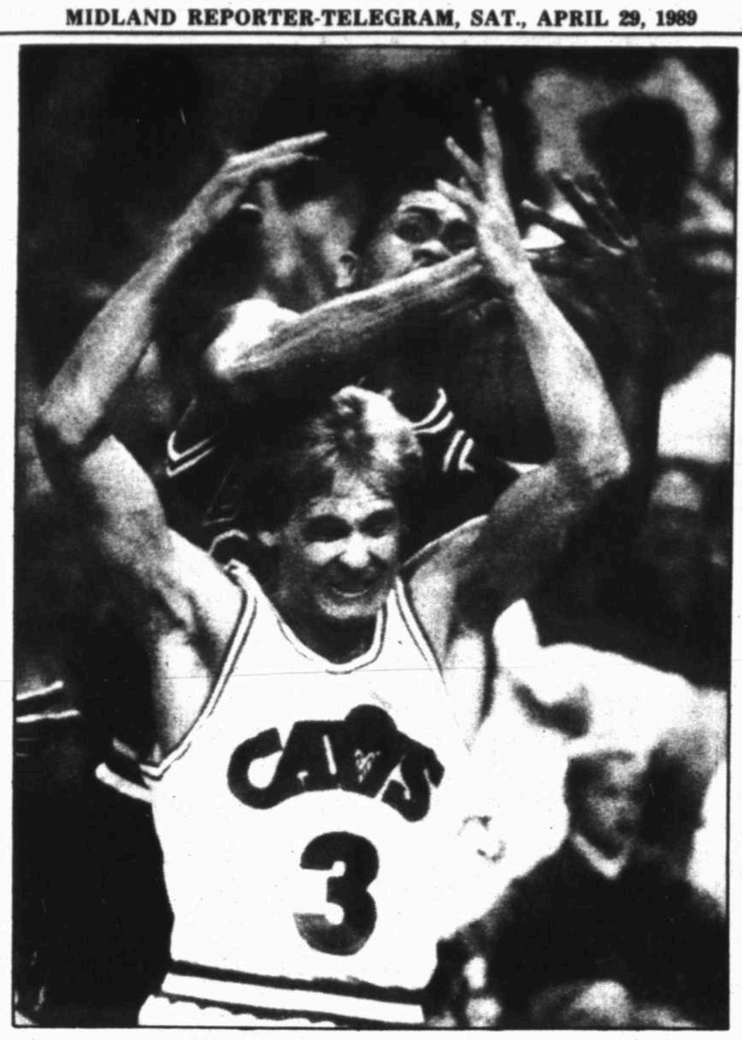

The Pistons, who won three of four games between the two teams during the regular season, outscored Boston 21-10 in the second period — tying a playoff record set April 25, 1982, at Seattle when the SuperSonics held Houston to 10 points.

Salley tied a club record with his five blocked shots during the quarter as the Pistons, who led 27-25 after one period, surged to a 15-point lead on a jumper by Dennis Rodman with 2:29 remaining in the half. It was 48-35 at halftime.

Rodman, whose five-foot baseline jumper gave Detroit the lead for good with five seconds remaining in the first quarter, had six of his 15 points during the second period.

Mark Aguirre and Bill Laimbeer each scored seven points in the third quarter as the Pistons surged to their biggest lead, 71-53, with 3:52 remaining in the period. Detroit took a 75-63 lead into the final 12 minutes.

Boston, which got only two points from its bench the entire game, got no closer than nine in the fourth quarter.

Hawks and Knicks seek second wins

ATLANTA (AP) — Recent history isn't on his side, but Coach Del Harris insists his Milwaukee Bucks will win a first-round NBA playoff game on the Atlanta Hawks' home floor.

The Hawks took a 1-0 lead in the best-of-5 series at The Omni on Thursday night with a 100-92 triumph and will be seeking their 10th home-court triumph in a row over the Bucks in Game Two Saturday night.

Meanwhile, despite a loss in the opener of their best-of-5 playoff series against the New York Knicks, Charles Barkley says the Philadelphia 76ers don't have to win at Madison Square Garden on Saturday.

"You've got to remember, they're supposed to win the first two games and we're supposed to win the next two at home," Barkley said. "Then the fifth one will be up for grabs."

The Knicks won the first game 102-96 Thursday night, and Barkley had 22 points and 12 rebounds. While winning four of six regular-season games against the Knicks, Barkley averaged 30.8 points.

THE BUCKS haven't won in The Omni since posting a 104-101 triumph March 5, 1989. Atlanta has strung together nine victories in a row since then, including three in last year's first-round playoffs.

The Hawks have won eight in a row over the Bucks since losing Game Four of last year's playoffs at Milwaukee.

"Our philosophy is not what happens to you, it's how you respond to it," Harris said.

The Bucks forced the Hawks, who love to run, into a slow tempo game in the opener, a style that had Milwaukee lodged in a deadlock midway through the final quarter.

The undoing of the Bucks came in unexpected fashion — inability to make free throws.

Milwaukee led the NBA in free-throw shooting at 82 percent, but the Bucks missed five of them in the final 3:30 of Thursday night's game.

The team hit only 20 of 29 free throws in the game. The Hawks won the game at the line, hitting 29 of 34.

"We shoot only 69 percent from the line, which is unheard for us," Jay Humphries said. "We do better there, and the results may have been different."

Humphries led Milwaukee with 20 points in the opener and Dominique Wilkins paced the Hawks with 29, with Moses Malone adding 23 points and 13 rebounds.

"The first game is always tough in any series," Wilkins said.

"Sure we had beaten them in the season, but the defense was what kept us alive," Wilkins added. "The trap they showed tells us we have to go back and do more preparation in order to execute."

"We have to keep up the intensity," Malone said. "It was a slowed down game, and they made us work hard. They can surprise you. We cannot take anything for granted. We must play hard. It won't be easy."

In the New York-Philadelphia game, the Knicks said stopping Barkley was the key.

Barkley shirt pulled out of shape

By IRA BERKOW
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Charles Barkley is a combination of Hulk Hogan, Charlie Chaplin, Fat Albert, Curly of the Three Stooges and a Boeing 747.

He postures, he struts, he fumes, he pouts, he exults, he carps, he writhes, he glowers and, when the occasion demands, he flies through the air.

His hair is shorn, his eyebrows generally knit, his pants baggy, and his physique still has the characteristics that once gave rise to his being called the Round Mound of Rebound.

"Hey Barkley!!" read a handmade sign thrust up behind the basket as he was about to shoot a free throw Thursday night at Madison Square Garden, "Wanna Hamburger?"

He is an improbable physical specimen with remarkable basketball gifts and a pleasure and a pain to watch, depending on the team you're rooting for.

He is the Philadelphia 76ers' power forward or small forward, point guard or shooting guard, or center, depending on where he finds himself at a given moment.

This is not to say Barkley is the whole team; he is not. There are few better point guards — fulltime, that is — than Mo Cheeks, and few possess a sweeter jumper than Ron Anderson.

Barkley, meanwhile, is listed in the Sixers' media guide as 6 feet 6, 263 pounds, though that may be in dispute. Some believe him to be no taller than 6-5. As for his weight, well, he might be a bit vain. "I," he said, "am 248."

Big enough to protect himself, one would think. But after the first game of the playoff, in which the 76ers lost to the Knicks, 102-96, Barkley said in the locker room that he was "mugged" on the court, and the primary suspect was the Knick forward assigned to him, Charles Oakley.

Something, he said, was going to change for this afternoon's second game in the Garden. He would continue to call the referees's attention to it, or he'd call 911. If all else failed, he might have to call for more picks and screens from teammates.

Charles Barkley and Charles Oakley sounds like either a tag-team or a vaudeville act. To Barkley, it is neither. He says he wants no part of his counterpart, at least under present circumstances. Too feely, too grabby.

"He's holding my shirt all night," said Barkley of Oakley. "And when he wasn't doing that, he or someone else was throwing me to the ground."

Said Oakley of Barkley: "They didn't call a foul; I didn't foul. Point blank."

Barkley said he tried to explain Oakley to the officials, who, until the very end, turned a deaf ear.

"It was assault and battery," said Barkley of Oakley. "The guy weighs 250 pounds, and he's hanging all over me. It takes away the most important part of my game, my quickness."

Peters eclipses prep win mark

BRENHAM (AP) — Brenham's Jon Peters pitched the fifth no-hitter of his career and remained unbeaten as a high school pitcher Friday night, winning his 51st game and setting a national record for consecutive victories.

Peters struck out 11 and ended the game on a dramatic note by driving in the final run in a 10-0 victory over A&M Consolidated. Peters' fifth-inning single ended the game on the 10-run rule.

Peters broke the record of 50 consecutive victories by Timmy Moore of McColl, S.C., who attended the record-breaking game and threw out the first pitch.

"I never thought we'd come this far to break this record," Peters said after being mobbed by his teammates at first base. "I'm just glad it's over. Now maybe we can relax and just play baseball."

Brenham coach Earl Hathaway beamed with pride for his star pitcher.

"I think it's fantastic the way he came out here and pitched with all this pressure," Hathaway said. "He had the media and all this crowd to contend with and it never bothered him a bit. I bet there were 5,000 people here."

Brenham's Fireman's Park was jammed to capacity, and overflow fans crowded the slope of a railroad track beside the park.

Peters benefited from a five-run third inning that gave Brenham an 8-0 lead. Then in the fifth, pinch-hitter Joel Wilmon drove in a run, and with two outs Peters drilled a first-pitch single into left field to score the game-ending run.

"This is not the greatest thrill," Peters said. "We still have a chance at another state championship and that's what we're aiming for now."

The Cubs have won an unprecedented three consecutive Class 4A titles.

Moore set the record in 1977-80, pitching for McColl, but he didn't know he had a national record until last year when Peters' streak was publicized nationally.

Peters tied Moore's record April 21 when he pitched a 2-hitter against Katy Taylor, striking out 12 batters and retiring the last 15 in a row.

Peters, who has signed a scholarship agreement with Texas A&M, has not lost a game since the final game of his Little League career when Brenham lost to Taiwan in the semi-finals of the 1985 Little League World Series.

Peters had a 13-0 record as a freshman, 15-0 as a sophomore and 14-0 last season.

He is 9-0 this season, having pitched back-to-back no-hitters.

Peters has started 53 games for the Cubs. He has had three no decisions and got one victory in relief.

Peters insured Brenham's 1986 state title as a freshman by pitching a seven-inning victory one day and retiring nine straight batters in relief the next day.

Indians power past Twins

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Jerry Browne and Oddibe McDowell hit three-run homers Friday night, leading the Cleveland Indians past Minnesota 9-7, the Twins' sixth consecutive loss.

Brown hit the third homer of his major-league career in the third inning off Shane Rawley, 1-3, and McDowell homered in the seventh off Juan Berenguer. It was the first homer of the season for both.

Tom Candiotti, 2-1, allowed six runs and nine hits in six innings and Doug Jones pitched 1 1-3 innings for his fourth save. Cleveland snapped a four-game losing streak, winning despite 14 hits by the Twins.

Gary Gaetti hit a three-run homer, his fifth homer of the season, giving the Twins the lead in the first.

Gaetti made two errors in the third, leading to five Cleveland runs. Singles by Brook Jacoby and Andy Allanson and a walk to Felix Fermin loaded the bases.

Gaetti let McDowell's infield fly drop at third in an attempt for a double play, but the ball squirted through Gaetti's legs, allowing Jacoby to score. Browne homered for a 4-3 lead and Joe Carter doubled and scored when Gaetti misplayed Cory Snyder's grounder.

Minnesota came back with three runs in the fifth on Wally Backman's RBI groundout, Kirby Puckett's third homer and Gaetti's RBI single.

In the seventh, Jacoby doubled and Allanson singled off Rawley and Felix Fermin hit an RBI single off Berenguer to tie the score at 6. McDowell then homered into the upper deck in right.

Minnesota pulled to 9-7 in the seventh on consecutive doubles by Puckett and Kent Hrbek.

Royals 8, Brewers 1

Charlie Leibrandt pitched five-hit ball for eight innings and Bo Jackson had three hits to lead Kansas City as the Royals matched the most April victories in club history.

Leibrandt, 2-2, struck out two and walked one as the Royals improved to 14-8 with their sixth victory in seven games. Jeff Montgomery pitched a hitless ninth for Kansas City, which was 14-8 in April 1978.

Bill Wegman, 1-3, took a 1-0 lead into the fifth but Kurt Stillwell singled and Jim Eisenreich walked to ignite a five-run inning. After Stillwell was forced at third on Kevin Seitzer's grounder, George Brett's single scored Eisenreich.

Seitzer took third on the play, and Danny Tartabull hit a hard grounder to Paul Molitor. The third baseman bobbled the ball, then threw wildly to first and was charged with a double error as Seitzer and Brett both scored.

One out later, Jackson tripled to score Tartabull. Chuck Crim relieved and gave up an RBI single to Bob Boone.

Glenn Braggs singled with one out in the second, stole second and scored on Joey Meyer's single.

Bill Buckner hit a two-run double in the seventh after Seitzer singled and Tartabull walked with two outs. Jackson's run-scoring single made it 8-1.

Yankees 3, White Sox 1

Roberto Kelly's disputed two-run double snapped a seventh-inning tie and Andy Hawkins won his third straight game for the Yankees.

Hawkins, 3-2, allowed five hits, walked five and struck out two in 7 2-3 innings. In his first nine innings this season, Hawkins allowed 15 earned runs but in his last 24 1-3 innings he has allowed three.

Lee Guetterman followed Hawkins and Dave Righetti finished the combined seven-hitter for his fourth save, getting Ozzie Guillen to line into a game-ending double play with the bases loaded.

With the score tied at 1, Bob Brower led off the seventh with a single off Shawn Hillegas, 0-3, and took third on Alvaro Espinoza's hit-and-run single.

Hernandez leads Mets past Astros

HOUSTON (AP) — Keith Hernandez hit a three-run homer and drove in four runs to power the New York Mets to their fifth straight victory, 7-3 Friday night over the Houston Astros.

The home run was only Hernandez's third in 282 career at-bats in the Astrodome.

Sid Fernandez, 3-0, went six innings, giving up three runs on four hits while walking four and striking out two.

Rick Rhoden, 0-2, went four innings, giving up four runs on six hits.

New York took a 4-0 lead in the third after Dave Magadan singled and moved to second on Fernandez's sacrifice bunt. After Lenny Dykstra was hit by a Rhoden pitch, Gregg Jefferies singled in Magadan. Hernandez then hit his third homer of the season.

The Mets increased the lead to 6-0 in the fifth when Hernandez and Darryl Strawberry walked off reliever Dan Schatzeder, and Kevin McReynolds doubled them in.

Houston had runners on first and second in the fifth, but Dykstra made a diving catch of Billy Hatcher's sinking line drive to center to end the threat.

Houston cut the deficit to 6-3 in the seventh. Ken Caminiti led off with a double before walks to Rafael Ramirez and Craig Biggio loaded the bases. Caminiti scored on pinch hitter Craig Reynolds' grounder and Hatcher doubled in Ramirez and Biggio.

The Mets added a run in the eighth on an RBI single by Hernandez.

Cardinals 6, Dodgers 3

Tom Brunansky hit a two-run triple to key a four-run fourth inning and Ozzie Smith hit his second career homer while batting left-handed to pace the Cardinals.

Don Heinkel, 1-1, pitched a seven-hitter for 5 2-3 innings to pick up his first major league victory with relief help from Frank DiPino and two others. St. Louis' decisive rally, erasing Los Angeles' 2-0 lead, came at the expense of Tim Leary, 2-2.

Terry Pendleton ignited the Cardinals, who won their third straight game, with a single to start the fourth. He went to third base when Pedro Guerrero doubled down the left-field line.

Milt Thompson dumped a run-scoring single into left field on which the Dodgers' Mike Davis trapped the ball. With Guerrero still at second base and Thompson at first, Brunansky drove the ball into the gap in right-center for only his 18th career triple. He scored on Jose Oquendo's fly to left.

Expos 10, Braves 4

Tim Raines hit a bases-loaded triple in the fifth inning, Andres Galarraga drove in four runs and Kevin Gross limited Atlanta to two runs in eight innings.

The Braves held a 2-1 lead until the fifth, when the Expos, who had lost five of their previous six games, rallied against John Smoltz, 3-2. The outburst began with Nelson Santovenia's one-out double and a walk to Spike Owen.

Smoltz then fielded a sacrifice bunt attempt by Gross, but made a wide throw to third baseman Ron Gant for an error that filled the bases.

Raines, with only three hits in 29 previous at-bats at Olympic Stadium this season, hit a 3-2 pitch to right-center field to clear the bases.

Reds 3, Phillies 0

Kal Daniels, Paul O'Neill and Eric Davis hit solo homers in the first three innings, and Jose Rijo pitched six shutout innings as the Reds picked up their third straight victory.

Rijo, 1-0, gave up three hits, struck out four, walked two and did not allow a runner past second base. Rob Dibble pitched two hitless innings in relief and John Franco pitched the ninth to gain his seventh save in as many opportunities.

Don Carman, 1-3, allowed all three homers, and has given up a league-leading nine this season.

Daniels led off the game with his first homer of the season, and O'Neill hit his third in the second. In the third, Davis connected for his fifth.

Pirates 1, Giants 0

John Smiley pitched six hitless innings en route to a four-hitter for his first shutout of the season as the Pirates ended a three-game losing streak.

The only run of the game scored when San Francisco's Rick Reuschel, 3-2, walked Glenn Wilson with the bases loaded in the sixth.

Cubs 3, Padres 1

Paul Kilgus allowed three-hits over 8 2-3 innings and Ryne Sandberg hit a two-run homer in a three-run first as the Cubs snapped the Padres' four-game winning streak.

Kilgus, 2-2, walked three and struck out three and allowed just a sixth-inning single by Randy Ready and a ninth-inning hits by Jack Clark and Luis Salazar.

Veteran pair opens big lead

Harold Henning lines up a putt during Friday's second round in The Legends of Golf tourney at Austin.

AUSTIN (AP) — Al Geiberger and Harold Henning fired their second consecutive 61 Friday to take a 3-stroke lead in the $650,000 Legends of Golf.

The twin 61s put Geiberger and Henning at a record-tying 18-under 122 total halfway through the Senior PGA Tour two-man, better-ball event.

First-round co-leaders Bob Charles and Bruce Devlin were alone in second at 125 after a second-day 64 over the 6,387-yard, par-70 Onion Creek Club course.

Three teams shared third another shot back: Gardner Dickinson-Dave Hill, Tommy Jacobs-Ken Still and defending champions Bruce Crampton-Orville Moody.

Although thunderstorms surrounded Austin for much of the afternoon, only scattered rain fell on the course late in the round as the leaders birdied four of the last five holes, including the last three.

"I don't like to talk about who makes the birdies here or there because we use a lot of strategy out there," Henning said.

"We sometimes let one player make the birdie to build up his confidence," Geiberger added.

Their 36-hole score tied the tournament record set by Don January and Sam Snead en route to their victory in 1982.

But Henning said he and his partner weren't counting their money just yet.

"A 3-stroke lead is not much. It's not a course you can be complacent on with a 62 or 63," Henning said. "Everybody's saying out there, 'Wow, you've got such a big lead.' But (several teams) are hanging around us like vultures."

It's the first year that Geiberger, winner of 11 regular PGA Tour victories and four on the Senior Tour, has been paired with Henning, a native of South Africa who joined the Senior Tour in 1984 and has two victories.

Devlin said Henning and Geiberger, third and seventh respectively on the Senior Tour money list this year, are formidable.

"They're a tough team. I think they were the favorites. They have both played very well all year," Devlin said.

In the Legendary Champions division, an option for players over age 60, Doug Ford and Jerry Barber fired a 7-under-par 63 Friday for a two-round total of 130.

"It's a real fun tournament. There's not a lot of pressure on you," said Barber, who turned 73 earlier this week.

Lopez vaults into share of lead

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Nancy Lopez shot a 6-under-par 66 Friday to move into a five-way tie for the lead after the first round of the $425,000 Sara Lee Classic.

Lopez, looking for her first LPGA victory of the year, had three birdies and an eagle on par-5 holes at the 6,282-yard Hermitage Golf Course. She also made a 12-foot birdie putt at the par-3 third hole.

"I hit the ball real well and I hit my driver very well," said Lopez, who has 39 career victories. "It also felt good to make some of the putts I've been missing the last few weeks."

Sharing the lead at the 54-hole tournament were Missie Berteotti, Colleen Walker, Cindy Figg-Currier and Patty Sheehan. Beth Daniel and Betsy King were one shot back at 67.

Lopez, who started her round on No. 10, pulled into a tie for the lead on the 485-yard eighth hole when she hit a 4-wood to the green and made a 15-foot putt for an eagle 3.

"It is important to have a really good start in a 54-hole tournament and to stay close to the leader. You really don't have the chance to falter and then recover," Lopez said.

Walker, Berteotti and Figg-Currier each had six birdies and no bogeys.

"The course played real well, the greens were smooth and the wind didn't pick up until we were on the back nine," said Walker, a two-time tour winner who is looking for her first 1989 victory.

Walker made birdie putts of 18 feet on the par-4 first hole and 25 feet on the par-4 10th to keep pace with the leaders.

"This is the type of course that if you keep it on the right side of the green you can score well," Walker said. "The greens are so good you can hit it straight at the hole."

All of Berteotti's birdies came on putts of less than 10 feet, except for a 26-footer on the par-4 12th that came after a difficult wedge from the edge of the fairway.

"I just went out and teed off and things started going pretty well," said Berteotti, a member of the 1984 NCAA women's championship team at the University of Miami. "When I was 3-under at the turn, I knew things were going to be pretty good."

After making the turn at 2-under, Sheehan made consecutive birdies at No. 2 and No. 3 and then duplicated the feat at the seventh and eighth holes.

Evert falters, still makes Houston semis

HOUSTON (AP) — Top-seeded Chris Evert advanced to the semifinals of the Virginia Slims of Houston on Friday with a straight-set victory over No. 8 seed Gretchen Magers.

Evert, admittedly not playing her best tennis, struggled throughout the hot, windy afternoon but came away with a 7-6 (7-3), 6-3 victory.

Evert, the defending champion, fell behind 3-0 in the first set as Magers regularly altered her approach. Evert held on behind her serve and, after pulling even in the eighth game, forced the tie-breaker.

"I was up and down the whole day. It was one of those matches you just got out and try to get through," said Evert. "She (Magers) doesn't allow you to get in a rhythm. She is always changing and that makes it tough, especially on a windy day."

After dropping the tie-breaker, Magers rebounded, winning the first game of the second set. But swirling winds affected her service game, and she fell behind 4-1 in the second set.

Magers held service only once in five tries in the second set.

"My serve really let me down. She had a better answer to whatever I had," said Magers, now 0-4 lifetime against Evert.

Evert will play the winner of Friday's later quarterfinal between Lori McNeil and Susan Sloan in the semifinals.

In other quarterfinals action, Carrie Cunningham of Livonia, Mich., celebrated her 17th birthday with a 6-3, 6-1 victory over Kim Kessaris of Hendersonville, N.C.

Cunningham, who knocked out No. 3 seed Katerina Maleeva in the first round, will meet Monica Seles of Bradenton, Fla., in the other semifinal. Seles advanced with a 6-2, 7-5 victory over Andrea Temesvari of Hungary.

Flyers, Pens offer mix in Patrick final

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia Flyers are counting upon experience and the Pittsburgh Penguins on the resilience of youth and the home-ice advantage.

The teams, tied 3-3, meet Saturday night at Pittsburgh in the deciding game game of their NHL Patrick Division Championship series.

The winner goes on to the Stanley Cup semifinals against the Montreal Canadiens starting Monday night in Montreal.

The Flyers have 10 players age 29 or older; the Penguins have one.

The Flyers have 16 players with 40 or more playoff games; the Penguins have one.

The Flyers have eight with 60 or more playoff games; the Penguins one.

The Flyers have nine who have been in the Cup final twice in the last five years; the Penguins haven't been in the playoffs since 1982.

It's no wonder Penguins coach Gene Ubriaco says, "I think home-ice offsets the inexperience factor." It had better.

"We're going to join hands and pull like hell," said Ubriaco after the Flyers tied the series Thursday night with a 6-2 victory in Philadelphia.

"I still think we can turn it around and do it at home," Ubriaco said.

Flyers coach Paul Holmgren is concerned with his defense containing Mario Lemieux, the NHL scoring leader.

Holmgren can't forget the fifth game in Pittsburgh Tuesday when Lemieux, sore neck and all, scored five goals and three assists in a 10-7 Penguins victory.

The Flyers blanked Lemieux Thursday, holding him to just two shots. They also contained Paul Coffey with two shots. The line is, stop Lemieux and Coffey and you beat the Pens.

"On Tuesday we didn't execute our game plan to stop him (Lemieux) very well. When he gets on a roll like he did Tuesday, he's nearly impossible to stop. Hopefully we'll do Saturday what we did tonight (Thursday), " Holmgren said.

The Flyers' offense is triggered by Tim Kerr, who has 14 goals in the playoffs, 10 in this series. Kerr has devastated Pittsburgh from the slot.

On defense, Philadelphia relies on a tight circle around goaltender Ron Hextall. The Penguins got only 22 shots in the sixth game, three in the final period.

Hextall came back strong after his nine-goal nightmare in game five.

He set the tone for the Flyers at the start Thursday night when he stopped Lemieux early on a breakaway.

Later in the opening period he kicked away a drive by Zarley Zalapski. In the second, after the Pittsburgh had cut their deficit to 3-2, he made a key save on Dave Hannan.

"Let's face it, if you can't bounce back from something like that, you're not going to be there when the chips are down," said Hextall.

GLENN

Davis makes as many as 250 public appearances a year, many of them speaking in local schools about drug abuse. And he said he doesn't want kids watching the games to think he's living a double standard.

"I don't have anything against the beer companies, but we have a problem in society and a message needs to be sent out to the public," Davis told The Houston Post. "We need heroes, we need role models, we need guys who can stand up and say you don't need to follow the crowd. You can get high on other things."

Davis does not take the subject of alcohol abuse lightly. When he was 17, he was nearly killed in an alcohol-related car accident.

"That scared me sober," Davis said. "I don't want other kids to have to go through that."

Technically, the advertising issue is beyond the Astros' control since they sold the broadcast rights for 82 games to Houston television station KTXH. The station, in turn, sold commercial time to Budweiser.

Julio Bermudez, the station's general manager, said Thursday he had not been contacted by Astros General Manager Bill Wood but would be happy to comply with Davis' wishes.

PETE

The newspaper said Cambra showed the copies to Richard Slowe, a Newton, Mass., private detective who is working with baseball.

Cambra said the checks were for a proposed real estate purchase in Massachusetts. He was quoted as saying the deal did not go through, and the money was returned to Rose.

Rose is being investigated by baseball for alleged gambling and by a federal grand jury in Cincinnati for tax matters. He would be suspended for one year if it is determined he bet on baseball; if he bet on the Reds, he would be suspended for life.

Rose, in Philadelphia for a game with the Phillies, declined comment.

"If it's an anonymous source, I don't want to see it," Rose said. "If no one signs their name to it, I don't want to read it."

TRACK

"I had my brother hold my blocks in the second race," said Bonds. "Shoot, in the first race, I was so late out of the blocks that I didn't know if I was going to beat the start of the second heat."

Wichita Falls' Jason Lavender soared 17-feet in the pole vault to beat his own mark of 16-1 set last year. He's just a junior.

But in the semifinals, Ameel suffered a tough setback to Smith, the No. 1 seed. Ameel won the first set 6-3 and led 5-4 in the second set, one point away from Austin advancement.

"Elizabeth had a really great tournament," said Hoover. "What more could you ask of a junior in her first year of region competition.

"Experience showed a little in the semifinals because she just couldn't close it out and Smith showed what she can do on the court.

"Elizabeth was drained from the first two sets, but she created an opportunity to win. That will be a great experience factor for her in the future. She came to this tournament with a great attitude. She just let her hair down and went for it in that final match."

Pohl pulls into lead

LAS VEGAS (AP) - Dan Pohl overcame a bogey on the first hole and shot a 64 Friday to take a two-stroke lead after the third round of the Las Vegas Invitational.

"It started out like it was going to be a tough day, but after the first hole it was a flawless round," Pohl said.

Pohl has a total of 199, 17-under par, in the five-day, 90-hole tournament. He has played one round over each of three desert resort courses.

"I just wish there was one round to go instead of two," Pohl said. "With 36 holes to go, there's a ton of guys up there who can shoot some numbers, so it's still anybody's ball game.

Pohl went in front alone with birdies on two of his last three holes at Spanish Trail.

Robert Wrenn, Craig Stadler and Scott Hoch — all of whom played at the Las Vegas Country Club — shared second at 201, 15 under par.

Wrenn, who opened his round with an eagle and two birdies, shot a 66.

"I had a little hot streak going there," he said. "But with the scores everybody is shooting, you just about have to have a 66 or 67 to keep pace."

Stadler had a 65 and Hoch shot 67. And each could have been better.

"It was nice and easy early, and then it got ugly," said Hoch, who bogeyed two of his last five holes.

Stadler, who hasn't won a tournament in five years, was at 16-under par going to the par-five finishing hole and had a chance to tie for the lead. But a three-putt bogey dropped him back into a tie for second.

"I putted extremely well," Stadler said. "It's coming around now. I'm pretty much back where I was when I had a lot of success in the early '80s."

Steve Pate, Jim Carter and Billy Glasson were tied at 202, three back of the leader.

Pate had a 67 at the Desert Inn. Carter birdied four holes in a row in his 65 at Las Vegas.

Iowa State's John Nuttall exults upon anchoring the Cyclones; winning 4-1,600 meter relay team at the Drake Relays Friday.

Iowa St., LSU shine at Drake

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Iowa State won the 6,400-meter relay for the third straight year and Louisiana State's Tananjalyn Stanley bettered the meet record in the women's 100 hurdles with a wind-aided effort Friday at the 80th Drake Relays.

Getting a superb performance on the third carry from sophomore Brett Carney in his first-ever 1,600, Iowa State beat Louisiana State handily despite not running its regular team. Two runners who usually are on that unit are ailing and, because of that, the Cyclones almost didn't enter the race.

Hog foursome wins

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Joe Falcon ran an intelligent race. Kip Cheruiyot did not.

That was the difference Friday in Arkansas beating Mount St. Mary's in the men's distance medley relay at the Penn Relays.

"Joe ran a smart race," Arkansas coach John McDonnell said after Falcon outkicked an angry Cheruiyot on the anchor leg and led the Razorbacks to a world-best clocking of 9 minutes, 20.10 seconds.

"He (Cheruiyot) made a mistake," Mount St. Mary's coach Jim Deegan said. "He got excited in the first 400 meters (of the closing 1,600-meter leg) and ran a split of 53 seconds."

Cheruiyot didn't agree with his coach.

After throwing the baton to the track after his second-place finish, he criticized Falcon's tactics.

"He needs somebody to pace him," the Kenyan said of the Arkansas distance runner, a seven-time NCAA champion and unbeaten in five races at the Penn Relays.

"If he's a good athlete, he needs to run man-to-man. ... He just wants to use you."

Falcon's strategy is not uncommon, and Cheruiyot knew what to expect because he had watched tapes of the Razorbacks' runner. Still, he was mad.

Falcon was unperturbed.

"If I got the stick (baton) ahead, I was going to run hard for one lap to take the sting out of the field a little, then sit in and let someone else do the work and that's what Cheruiyot did," he said. "I was going to go with 200 meters left."

The plan worked perfectly. When Falcon made his move, Cheruiyot couldn't cope and finished about 10 meters behind the winner.

Thompson admits talk with dealer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Georgetown basketball coach John Thompson said Friday that he warned an alleged drug kingpin to stay away from his players in an attempt to avoid a repeat of the Len Bias tragedy.

Thompson called 24-year-old Rayful Edmond III into his office last winter after learning that many of his players were hanging out at a Washington nightclub popular both with college students and suspected drug dealers.

"Anyone who has experienced the Len Bias situation can't isolate himself from a problem," Thompson said. "When we look at things that way, then we are going to find that these things sneak up on us. I didn't want any surprises."

Bias, the top selection of the Boston Celtics in the 1986 NBA draft, died of cocaine intoxication the night after being picked. Several teammates and friends later told authorities that they had used cocaine with Bias on numerous occasions before his fatal seizure.

Thompson said he warned Edmond to leave his players alone after learning they were hanging out at the nightclub.

"I never asked him if he was in violation of the law — that's not my role," Thompson said. "I wanted to make sure that none of my kids got involved in anything, and he was considerate of that."

Thompson declined to provide further details on the conversation.

On April 15, Edmond and 15 others were arrested and charged with running a massive transcontinental cocaine ring.

Jay Stephens, U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia, has estimated that Edmond's group may be responsible for up to 20 percent of the cocaine trafficking in the nation's capital. District police also believe Edmond's ring may be responsible for up to 30 drug-related murders in the nation's capital during the past year.

Several Georgetown players were contacted by law enforcement officials investigating Edmond, but Thompson stressed that none of his players had been charged with any wrongdoing.

Edmond, who regularly attended Georgetown's home games, was a childhood companion of Hoya forward John Turner.

John Wilder, a special agent with the Drug Enforcement Administration, said the players were among dozens of youths he spoke to while attempting to build a case against the drug suspect.

"You don't have to go anywhere to meet someone who is involved in drugs in this city," Thompson said. "It doesn't matter whether it's in Georgetown or the inner city.

Thompson said his team was stunned when they learned of the charges against Edmond.

"We've gotten together and discussed it," Thompson said. "I think everyone was surprised to hear about the extent of these charges."

Thompson said he felt he had to contact the suspected drug dealer as a preventive measure.

"I have to take the initiative," Thompson said. "I can't wait and speculate later on and have a body bag or some of the kids have a problem."

The Chapter III nightclub has long been off limits to Thompson's players.

"I told them that in strong language," Thompson said. "You can't print the words I used in the paper."

Wallace wins IROC opener

NAZARETH, Pa. (AP) — Rusty Wallace came from the back of the field to win the opening round of the International Race of Champions series at Daytona Beach in February.

Now, heading into the second of four rounds, Saturday on the one-mile oval at Pennsylvania International Raceway, the NASCAR stock car star will try to do for the second straight time what nobody ever did before in IROC.

"Well, it ain't gonna be easy," Wallace said with a smile. "My one experience at (this) track was in last year's Busch Grand National race. I started in the back and had a chance to win, so I don't see why I can't do it again."

Indian supertanker runs aground

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — An Indian supertanker ran aground off the Saudi Arabian coast, and officials at Lloyd's in London said Friday that about 1.5 million gallons of oil leaked into the Red Sea.

The 276,744-ton Kanchenjunga had taken on 42 million gallons of Saudi crude oil from the Yanbu terminal near Jiddah and was on its way to Bombay when it ran aground Wednesday night.

The vessel, owned by the state-run Shipping Corporation of India, sustained some holes when it lodged on a reef about six miles from Yanbu.

In London, Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence Unit said about 1.5 million gallons of oil had leaked into the Red Sea from the Kanchenjunga's three damaged tanks, one on the port side and two on the starboard side. It said those tanks contained close to 8.4 million gallons of light crude.

An oil slick was drifting out to sea, and pollution experts, who arrived on Thursday, were assessing the situation and had asked for salvage crews, Lloyd's said.

Lloyd's said the grounding occurred at 3:30 p.m. on Wednesday. Authorities in the port of Jiddah were also investigating the situation, it said.

Shipping executives here said most of the oil would have to be pumped out before the ship can be refloated.

They said another tanker would have to come alongside the Kanchenjunga and the oil pumped into it with the help of salvage tugboats.

Earlier Wednesday, a Liberian-flag oil tanker was slightly damaged in the Persian Gulf off Abu Dhabi by an explosion caused by a drifting mine. The mines are left over from the Iran-Iraq war, which came to a halt in August with a U.N.-sponsored cease-fire.

Churches And Crop-Dusting

Our churches are into crop-dusting!

It's not only the staples we grow that will determine our nation's future and that of the world. The youth we raise are our most vital resource. They must be protected from the blights that often threaten society.

Using the truths committed to them by God, the churches of our land have been helping young people GROW despite dangerous influences that have threatened a whole generation. Their efforts may not seem as dramatic as crop-dusting, but their results are even more important to your tomorrow and the world's.

Your family belongs in the church of its choice. Your children will find new incentives and encouragements at church. Your church will be better able to serve the Lord and the community with your earnest support.

Anglican leaders urge compromise on women bishops

LONDON (AP) — A church commission Friday urged that the world's 70 million Anglicans concentrate on what unites them and avoid further divisions over the issue of women bishops.

"Bishops should take every opportunity to emphasize their fundamental agreement on matters of faith," it said.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, Robert Runcie, assigned the commission to report on how the unity of the 27 self-governing Anglican churches in 164 countries can be preserved in the face of the disagreement.

The dispute deepened in February when U.S. Episcopalians consecrated Barbara Harris as the first Anglican female bishop, in their Boston diocese.

The 18,000-word document, "Report of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Commission on Communion and Women in the Episcopate," was published simultaneously in London and Larnaca, Cyprus, where the Anglican primates met to consider that and other issues.

Pope John Paul II said in a letter to Runcie that the insistence of some Anglican churches on having women priests and bishops appeared to block progress toward Catholic-Anglican reconciliation. The Roman Catholic Church retains an all-male priesthood, and it split with the Anglican Church in the 16th century Reformation.

Runcie, spiritual head of the Church of England and world Anglican leader, will meet with the pope in Rome Sept. 29-Oct. 2, primarily to discuss unity of their churches, a consultation their predecessors began in 1966.

The commission's report dismissed suggestions that a diocese divided on women bishops might have two bishops catering to opposing views.

"The bishop is an embodiment and agent of unity and continuity in the church," the report said. It stressed that bishops must take care not to become focal points of dissent in dioceses that are split on the issue.

The report recommended that in dioceses with strong views for and against women priests and bishops, a compromise first worked out by the U.S. Episcopalians should be adopted.

The compromise allows any congregation rejecting a woman bishop to petition for a male "Episcopal visitor" bishop to administer confirmations.

"Provision for Episcopal visitors is a way of exercising pastoral care," said the unanimous report written by six ordained men and an English woman theologian.

It proposed that women bishops ordaining priests should do so collegially with a male bishop to meet the objections of church members who feel they could not recognize the ordinations of a woman.

"That would protect the interests of the person ordained and the communities in which he or she may minister in the future," the report said.

Runcie set up the commission at the request of the Lambeth Conference of Anglican bishops in August, when they knew that the U.S. Episcopalians, who have ordained more than 1,200 women to the priesthood, were preparing to approve the first woman bishop.

The conference declared that practical pastoral arrangements would have to be made in all Anglican churches and dioceses for those unable to accept women bishops.

The majority of Anglican churches, including the Church of England, still rejects women priests.

A number of Anglican bishops have said they might reluctantly accept women priests, but could never accept a woman bishop because it is against belief and tradition. They say it was no accident that Jesus Christ chose only men as disciples.

Archbishop of Armagh Robert Eames, who chaired the commission, said the different views on women bishops were reflected by its members, who met for nine days of talks in London in November and in New York in March.

The other commission members were Bishop Joseph A. Adetiloye, Primate of All Nigeria; Archbishop Peter F. Carnley of Perth, Australia; Bishop Mark Dyer of Bethlehem, Pa., Bishop David Hope of Wakefield, England; the Rev. Dr. E. James Reed, director of the Toronto School of Theology, Canada, and Dr. Mary Tanner, theological secretary of the Church of England's board of mission and unity.

Community, First Baptist choirs to present 'Elijah'

Felix Mendelssohn's great oratorio "Elijah" will be presented by the 100-voice Sanctuary Choir and Community Chorus at 7 p.m. May 7 at the First Baptist Church, 2104 W. Louisiana.

Nance

James Nance, minister of music at the church, will conduct the performance which includes members of the Midland-Odessa Symphony.

Soloists include Joe Whitten singing the role of Elijah, Janice Archer, Viola Campbell, Roy Carley, Linda Flynt, Phyllis Hilburn, Rob Hunt, Martha Lewis, Mike Smith and Charlotte Whitaker.

"The story of "Elijah" is based on the account from the Bible of this great man of God who served as a prophet to Israel during the time that King Ahab ruled over the Northern Kingdom of Israel," says a release from the church. "Ahab was a very wicked king establishing Baal worshop throughout all the land. God condemned this through Elijah by sending the curse of a drought with no rain for a period of three years."

"Elijah" includes such arias as "If with All Your Hearts," "Draw Near All Ye People" and "Is Not His Word Like a Fire?"

"In one of the most exciting choruses — 'Behold God the Lord Passeth By' — the sounds of a tempest, an earthquake and a fire are performed musically to represent what Elijah thought was the presence of God," the release says. "But according to the Biblical account, God came in a 'still small voice.'"

The last account of Elijah in the Bible is when he is taken to Heaven in a fiery chariot and a whirlwind climaxing this great oratorio.

The public is invited to attend this free performance.

'Greatest Star of All'

"The Greatest Star of All" will be presented by the National Touring Company of New Life Ministries from Raleigh, N.C. The performance will be at Word of Life, West Highway 191 near Highway 1788, at 6:30 p.m. today. The church's pastor, Russ Austin, invites the public to attend. A love offering will be taken.

National Day of Prayer to be observed May 4

May 4 marks the 37th consecutive observance of the National Day of Prayer.

Days of prayer are found throughout U.S. history and the National Day of Prayer has been in existance since 1952, but this year marks the National Day of Prayer's first year as a specific calendar date.

Following the unanimous action of both houses of Congress, former President Reagan signed the Bill on May 5, 1988, making the National Day of Prayer the first Thursday of every May.

The National Day of Prayer Task Force and its parent, the National Prayer Committee, urge all Americans to become personally involved in the observance.

"Now that the National Day of Prayer is a specific day that can be anticipated and found on our calendars, we trust that many more Americans will join in thanking God for his many blessings upon this land and in praying for the future of our nation," says Vonette Bright, co-chairman with entertainer/author Pat Boone, of the NDP Task Force.

Senator Mervyn Dymally is quoted in the Congressional Record on the day of the senate vote as having said, "The National Day of Prayer is a celebration of the 'free exercise' clause of the first amendment. Let us join in spirit with the Founding Fathers to acknowledge God's role in our lives and to turn to Him for personal and national guidance."

S. Tubbs

The couples first album, "His Way," features their new release, "A Road in the Night."

Their three daughters — Evie, 10, Marcie, 6½, and Jamie, 4 — travel with them, the two older daughters often singing with them.

Evangelist Dave Roever will be the guest speaker at First Assembly of God, 100 W. Wadley Ave., at 7 p.m. Thursday.

Roever

"Dave Roever was burned beyond recognition or hope of survival in the Vietnam War," says a release from the church.

While serving with the River Patrol Division of the U.S. Navy in South Vietnam, a phosphorous grenade, hit by a sniper's bullet, exploded in Roever's hand six inches from his face as he was poised to throw it into an enemy bunker. The explosion sunk his boat, and he was pinned, still burning, beneath it.

"His story of survival and life is a miraculous account of divine help," the release says. "Hospitalized for 14 months and undergoing 15 major operations, during one of which he was thought to have died, he says his ordeal has served to heighten his love for America. Although his hands were badly mangled and charred, Roever learned to play the piano and is an exceptionally gifted musician."

He has preached and lectured in 36 nations, including Vietnam.

The public is invited to attend.

Cambodian refugee finds top spot in Bush admnistration

WASHINGTON (AP) — As he fled, wounded, through the jungles of Cambodia, Sichan Siv never could have imagined that in 13 years he would be a top aide to an American president.

Siv

For Siv, 41, deputy assistant to President Bush for public liaison, the term American dream is not a cliche. His almost unbelievable story is the stuff of movies.

In a symbolic gesture, Siv opted to start his job Feb. 13, the 13th anniversary of his escape from Cambodia. But he said, with a smile, the highlight of his job at the White House came when he met Bush, and the president "pronounced my name right."

In his new job, one of two deputies in the office, Siv is Bush's contact with ethnic and minority groups. He deals with issues like civil rights, education, the homeless and refugees.

Siv's tortuous path from wounded refugee to presidential aide began after the Khmer Rouge, a brutal communist insurgency, defeated the U.S.-backed government of Lon Nol in April 1975.

Before his escape, Siv rode a bicycle across Cambodia for 20 days, survived in a Khmer Rouge labor camp eating a bowl of rice a day and worked myriad jobs from dawn to dusk.

"I dug irrigation canals. I plowed land. I planted rice. I harvested rice," he said.

He fled Cambodia 10 months after the Khmer Rouge takeover by jumping off a timber truck and running through the jungle without food for three days until he reached Thailand. En route, he stepped on a land mine.

About 15 family members, including his mother, were among the hundreds of thousands of people killed by the Pol Pot regime.

It was his mother, a Buddhist, whose philosophy helped him survive, Siv said.

"The two things she told me are, 'As long as you live you must always have hope,' and, 'Happiness is something you can't keep unless you give it away.' Those are the basic values of life that I have always kept with me," he said in an interview.

Siv's new life, working in an ornate, high-ceilinged office at the White House complex, seems light years away from the Cambodian bush.

But Siv, who dresses in pin-striped suits with suspenders and speaks English with an accent, keeps mementos nearby: native musical instruments, silver ornaments and books about his native land.

The son of a policeman, Siv received his high school and college education in Phnom Penh, Cambodia's capital. Before the capital fell, he worked with the airline, as a high school teacher and as an administrator with CARE, the relief organization.

He was supposed to be evacuated from the U.S. Embassy by helicopter, but missed the last flight out on April 12, 1975, by 30 minutes. It took him until the following February to make his break.

During that time, Siv was forced to conceal his education from the Khmer Rouge, who were determined to stamp out the intelligensia. And his decision to get to the Thai-Cambodian border meant a traumatic separation from his family.

Arriving in Thailand, Siv was jailed as an illegal entrant, but was later released and placed in a refugee camp. There, a Catholic relief group found a couple in Wallingford, Conn., willing to sponsor Siv. He arrived in the United States with $2 in his pocket.

"He's a person with a great deal of charisma," said Bob Charles, the Wallingford man who brought Siv to this country. Charles is a housing consultant.

With nothing to his name, Siv picked apples and worked in an ice cream parlor before New York City beckoned. There he drove a taxi cab for six months, and, later got a job with the Lutheran Immigration and Refugee Service.

Eager to improve his lot, Siv won a scholarship from Columbia University where he obtained a master's degree in international affairs. Degree in hand, Siv worked at the United Nations and for the Institute for International Education.

Siv also a Texas connection through his wife, Martha, a United Nations librarian from Pampa, Texas. "I'm the honorary mayor of Pampa," Siv said, proudly displaying a key to the city. Married in 1983, the couple has no children.

In 1987, Siv went to work for Bush as, he says, "one of the many faceless volunteers" in New York. He raised money and made contacts with the Asian community.

Once Bush was elected, Chase Untermeyer, a Texan who heads the White House personnel office, recommended Siv for his present job. John Sununu, the White House chief of staff, and David Demarest, the communications director, approved the hiring.

"I was impressed not only with the substance and drama of his background, but also his political acumen, his character and his obvious knowledge of how to get things done, and a drive and stick-to-it-iveness that you need in the job he's got," Demarest said.

Court Robinson, an analyst with the U.S. Committee for Refugees who knows Siv, said the new White House aide has focused heavily on Cambodian issues. But refugees like Siv often have a keen interest in the domestic issues of their adopted country, he said. "He's always struck me as bright and articulate," Robinson said.

Siv attributes his rise to his adaptability. "I have been fortunate to get myself adjusted into new situations very quickly," he said.

Hard work is another must for the upwardly mobile. Siv said he has promised himself he won't work more than 13 hours on weekdays and 10 hours on the weekend.

"It doesn't matter how many hours I put in...there is no single minute that is boring or dull," he said.

In the late 1800's, Richard W. Sears had a pretty good business going selling watches and needed someone to handle his watch repairs. He placed a classified ad in the newspaper and Alvah C. Roebuck got the job. That's how the nation's biggest retailer got started... through a classified ad!

Teen substitutes for Perlman

LONDON (AP) — Gil Shaham was at his New York City high school reciting Chaucer when he received a summons that seemed straight out of the storybooks.

Israeli violin virtuoso Itzhak Perlman had an ear infection and couldn't perform at two London concerts, and Shaham was asked to stand in on two days' notice.

The first of the concerts ended Thursday night with cheers and flowers for the 18-year-old violinist after his performance of the difficult Violin Concerto No. 1 by Max Bruch.

Shaham, from the Bronx, was reciting the prologue from Chaucer's "The Canterbury Tales" in an English examination at Horace Mann High School on Tuesday when he was called out and asked to fly to London next day.

Shaham promptly took three days off school.

Eleanor Hope, his London agent, said telephone consultations with Shaham's general manager in New York and conductor Michael Tilson-Thomas of the London Symphony Orchestra decided on the Bruch concerto, followed by Jean Sibelius' Violin Concerto on Friday.

Asked how well he knew the works, the tall, chubby-faced musician grinned and said: "I was nervous because I felt I could not fill in for Perlman. I last played the Bruch in December and the Sibelius in the summer."

"But the funny thing is," he added, "I had some bizarre premonition about this. On Monday, I changed the strings on my Guadagnini (violin), which I always do before a concert, although I wasn't booked for any concert this week."

"I'm always nervous when he plays but I wasn't tonight," said his astrophysicist father, Jacob Shaham. "I knew that nothing could go wrong."

"I didn't know that," his son chimed in. "But with an orchestra like that and Tilson-Thomas I felt completely comfortable."

Shaham said he began playing violin when he was seven and wants to be a professional. He said he had never been so rushed before.

"I once had to stand in for Yehudi Menuhin who had flu in Norfolk, Va.," he said. "But I had a week's notice of that."

Shaham is practically unknown in London although he was here once before in debut with the London Symphony in May 1987 and again in March 1988.

Concertgoers Nicola Constable and Helen Munro of The Strad, a London music magazine, praised Shaham's performance.

"I thought he was brilliant. It must have been dreadful for him to know he was replacing Perlman but nobody could have been disappointed and it's difficult to play Bruch well," Miss Constable said.

"I thought he was incredibly mature for 18," said Miss Munro. "I wonder where he can go now if he can play like this after only 10 years. That's not long for any instrument but the violin in particular is so technically difficult."

LEETON, Mo. (AP) — Former Teamsters president Roy Lee Williams, who served three years in prison for bribery, died today at his farm home after a lengthy bout with emphysema and heart problems. He was 74.

Williams, a protege of former Teamsters president Jimmy Hoffa, served as international president of the Teamsters union from 1981-83.

He was forced to resign after he and four co-defendants were convicted in December 1982 of trying to bribe former U.S. Sen. Howard Cannon of Nevada to influence trucking deregulation. Cannon was not charged in the case.

Williams served three years of a 10-year sentence before he was released from federal prison in September.

A family spokesman said a doctor was called to the Williams house about 70 miles southeast of Kansas City about 5 a.m. when Williams experienced trouble breathing. The spokesman said Williams did not want to go to the hospital at that time and went back to sleep.

Dr. Mark Vogt said he returned to the house with paramedics after Williams became acutely ill but he could not be revived. Williams died of complications of emphysema, Vogt said.

Teamsters headquarters in Washington had no immediate comment on Williams' death.

Williams is survived by two daughters and a grandson.

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — A judge permitted soul singer James Brown, who is serving a six-year prison term, to leave jail to sign autographs at a courthouse, much to the dismay of corrections officials.

"Somebody asked me if I could get him up here to get his autograph and I said I would try," Circuit Judge Frank Eppes said after Thursday's signing session.

"I was flabbergasted," said Parker Evatt, commissioner of the Department of Corrections. "What happened is totally irregular."

If prison officials had known Brown was to sign autographs, they would not have allowed him to leave the prison, Evatt said. They assumed the sheriff's department's request to release Brown briefly was connected to court business.

Brown, 55, was sentenced in December to six years in jail for leading police on a two-state car chase from Augusta, Ga., to North Augusta, S.C. He was convicted of aggravated assault and failure to stop for an officer.

Brown signed autographs at the courthouse for more than 40 people, including Eppes, and then returned to prison.

Eppes said he saw no harm in the autograph session.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — All but two of crime writer Elmore Leonard's 27 books have been made into movies, but until now he has never written about the nation's movie capital, Hollywood.

But all that is soon to change, says the master of the suspense novel.

Leonard, who is promoting his current novel, "Killshot," said this week he is about 150 pages into a new book about a film producer, and the setting will be Tinseltown, instead of his most often used Detroit.

"I'm going to bring in my kind of guys, drop them into the picture and see what happens," says the author of "Glitz," "Freaky Deaky," "Stick," "Hombre" and other best sellers.

Leonard fans know that the guys in his hair-raising thrillers are usually tough and violent Midwesterners on both sides of the law.

The story-in-progress involves a man with a dark background who comes to Hollywood "just to help a guy trying to get a picture made," said Leonard.

PHOENIX (AP) — Country-western star Waylon Jennings, who got his start as a club singer in Phoenix in the 1960s also remembers kicking his cocaine habit here five years ago.

Jennings said he no idea of "the dangers" when he first started taking the drug. Now, he wants to keep others, particulary kids, from taking the same path.

"I think education is the only hope," said Jennings. "The war on drugs is the biggest bunch of bull in the world. But they are teaching them now as they go through school and that's good."

Despite his triple-bypass heart surgery late last year, Jennings is on the road again and headlines a "Country Jam '89" festival here this weekend with Willie Nelson.

Parker wants workplaces to be safer

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Sen. Carl Parker told a rally commemorating Friday as the first Workers Memorial Day that he'll fight against any workers compenstion bill that fails to provide for better workplace safety.

"If I'm the last man on the floor of the Senate, they'll pass that when I drop," the Port Arthur Democrat told the rally of about 100 people. "I'm ready. Tell them to come on."

Parker's own workman's compensation package includes a "right to work safely" bill that mandates no penalty for employees who refuse to enter work areas they deem unsafe.

The senator, who in 1967 authored the state's first industrial safety act, called for legislation that rewards employers who provide "decent" workplaces "free from industrial disease."

Prior to the rally, intended to promote the day's theme of "mourn for the dead, fight for the living," the AFL-CIO sponsored a press conference to give state and local leaders their say on the issue.

Parker said then that even with federal occupational safety regulations, "you can still kill a workman...and be fined as little as $50."

"It's time that we got a grip on wasted money for insurance," he said. "And you know the best way to do it? Stop the deaths and stop the injuries."

Parker was among participants who condemned the Ronald Reagan presidency for eight years of workers safety neglect.

U.S. Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas, accused the administration of a "studied attempt' too make OSHA — the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration — a "dirty word."

OSHA had suffered a one-quarter loss in full-time employees and reduced the number of factory inspections by 45 percent under the popular president, Bryant said.

Worse, Texas receives the second fewest OSHA resources — manpower and money — of any state, he said, but leads the nation in workplace-related deaths over the past five years.

"Far too few people know the toll of death, of maiming, of horrible diseases...that come to workers who do nothing but go to their jobs," said Bert Seidman, national AFL-CIO director for occupational safety.

The union is endorsing legislative measures on the national level that would strenthen OSHA enforcement — which is currently "a joke," Seidman said — and more stricly regulate the construction industry.

The AFL-CIO also wants creation of worker and union on-the-job safety committees that would have the right to investigate accidents and shut down dangerous job sites.

Travis County attorney Ron Oden thought the only real solution is criminal sanctions "for the kind of behavior that under state law would get you prosecuted for homicide in every other walk of life.

"We have for years relied on the federal government for that kind of enforcement, and they have failed us," he said.

Ex-teacher posts bond on sex charges

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A former high school teacher indicted on charges of having sex with a student who later committed suicide returned to post bond on the charges Friday.

Lou Ann Hogan, 25, her husband, Mike, and other relatives were in the Bexar County jail for about an hour Friday morning during which Mrs. Hogan was fingerprinted and allowed to post $1,000 on bail totaling $10,000.

A grand jury earlier this week returned two sexual assault indictments against Mrs. Hogan, charging her with having sex with 16-year-old Chad Cadenhead, who committed suicide in January 1988.

The Hogans and their attorney, Mark Stevens, refused to comment as they pushed their way through a crowd of reporters and photographers, sending some of them to the ground on the steps outside the jail.

Mrs. Hogan, who taught English and Spanish at Clark High School, is accused of having sex with Cadenhead on two occasions in December 1987.

Three Clark students and a former student said in statements last spring that they witnessed the sexual encounters at Cadenhead's home after the teen-ager bragged about the alleged relationship and dared them to watch.

Mrs. Hogan was suspended from her job, then fired after school officials took the statements from the students. She is appealing a $400,000 libel suit against the teen-agers which was dismissed by a state district judge.

She has been living in Schenectady, N.Y., since last spring. The trial is expected to begin this summer.

Bill would allow PUC to regulate long-distance telephone service

AUSTIN (AP) — A senator who said he got stuck $150 for two long-distance phone calls won passage Friday of a bill to give the Public Utility Commission authority to regulate long-distance services criticized by hospital patients, tourists and others.

Sen. Chet Edwards' bill to regulate alternate operator service companies, or AOS's, was sent to the House without opposition.

Edwards, D-Duncanville, said he thought in making two calls that he was using his AT&T credit card, which would cost about $30. Instead, he said, he was billed five times that much.

He said some hotels and hospitals use the special long-distance service, because they receive a commission based on each call placed through the AOS.

"It's hard when you're lying in a hospital bed to get up and walk across the street to use a different phone company," Edwards said. "I think they're legalized kickbacks, as far as I'm concerned."

Edwards' bill would require that before an AOS operator places a call, the operator must provide, upon request, the rate and fees for the call. The bill requires that pay phones with access to AOS service must be marked with a sticker.

The bill also requires that callers must be told how to use the local exchange carrier, upon request, and no charge may be assessed for providing that information.

The Senate also voted Friday to allow school districts to issue bonds to pay for removing asbestos from school buildings, to protect certain insurance policyholders, and to allow a lone Texas Supreme Court justice to take advantage of various retirement benefits.

Asbestos removal, which is required by a state law that went into effect in October 1988, was sent to the House 27-0.

The proposed amendment to the Insurance Code, which was forwarded to the House on voice vote, would require policies and contracts not covered by an insurance guaranty fund to disclose that information to policyholders.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, was criticized for carrying "special interest" legislation with a bill to allow a Supreme Court justice to purchase retirement credit for previous service as a legislator, state district judge and member of the military.

"It's nice to take care of your friends like that," Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas, said in opposition to the bill. Leedom said the bill illustrates a form of government in which "it's not what you know, it's who you know."

Sen. Cyndi Krier, R-San Antonio, said the bill would allow one person to come up with an additional $200,000 in retirement.

"I guess it would give him an opportunity to collect that much if he lives to be 104-years-old but I doubt that he will," Parker said.

The justice's name was not mentioned in debate, but Parker confirmed that the bill applied to Franklin Spears, former state senator from San Antonio.

A telephone call failed to reach Spears, who was out of the office.

The measure was sent to the House on a 19-5 vote.

"You're Invited To Learn Something Important About Yourself"

Eddie Albert
Beltone Hearing Aid Wearer

Not long ago, Beltone invited me to re-examine a hearing problem I'd been struggling with for quite some time. That was a turning point in my life, because at Beltone's free hearing evaluation I learned that two tiny Beltone hearing instruments could help me hear better and enjoy life more.

Jurors in North trial continue deliberations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Oliver North trial jury began its second week of deliberations Friday, yielding no signal on its progress.

After working for five hours — for a total 37½ since deliberations started — the jurors told a U.S. marshal they intended to come in Saturday for a half-day session, the same as last week.

The jurors' weekday schedule has not varied. It begins with their arrival from a downtown hotel at 8:20 a.m., then juice and pastry and a 9 a.m. start. At noon a caterer arrives with lunches ordered by each juror.

North took advantage of the jury's 9-to-4 pace on Thursday with a quick trip to deliver a speech to the Bankers Club of Cincinnati, presumably for the same $20,000-$25,000 fee he has received for other recent appearances.

The former National Security Council aide spoke about traditional values and received a standing ovation, according to Bankers Club members who heard his speech.

Steven Doherty, an Ohio State University sophomore from Cincinnati, said North spoke highly of former President Reagan, who will address the club in September.

Protesters picketed outside the club before the speech.

"We don't care whether North sees us or not," said Roy Silver, organizer for the Central American Task Force. "We're demonstrating against the Bankers (Club) for giving him $25,000 while there are homeless people in this city sleeping on the streets."

The Bankers Club did not disclose North's fee.

"You're all a bunch of pro-communists" shouted a well-dressed businessman at the demonstrators.

The North jury has before it 12 criminal charges, most of which accuse North of lying or withholding information about his and the NSC's support for the guerrillas fighting the leftist Nicaraguan government.

North is accused of lying to Congress to cover up his role in secretly assisting the Contras and lying to the attorney general about aspects of the diversion of funds to the Contras from the Iran arms sales. He also faces charges that he accepted a $13,800 home security system and converted $4,300 in traveler's checks from a Contra leader to his own use.

Meanwhile, a two-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals rejected a petition by 10 news organizations for access to a stipulation presented to the jury at the end of the trial, but not made available to the public.

Magellan may unearth clues about Earth

By LEE SIEGEL

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — A runaway "greenhouse effect" has eliminated any trace of water. Volcanoes in number not in the hundreds or thousands, but the hundreds of thousands. Its crushing atmospheric pressure, suffice it to say, could never support anything resembling human life.

Venus is not exactly Kansas.

For eight months beginning in August 1990, the space probe Magellan will circle the second planet from the Sun, using computer-enhanced radar images to study a planet so inhospitable that its 900-degree surface temperature would melt lead.

Yet, for all its alien qualities, scientists think the Magellan mission will yield valuable information about the formation of Earth.

"The most likely scenario is that we'll find something that will completely astound and baffle us," said Steve Saunders, Magellan's chief scientist at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena. The craft was being ferried into space aboard the shuttle Atlantis, to be launched from Earth orbit on its 15-month trajectory to Venus.

Pictures from Magellan should help scientists deduce "the probability you're going to find Earth-like planets — and life — somewhere else," said geologist Laurence Soderblom, a scientist working on the Magellan project.

PEERING THROUGH acid-laden clouds, Magellan should give scientists their best look yet at a planet so outwardly different from the garden of Earth yet apparently shaped by the same geologic processes.

"Of all the planets in the solar system, Venus is most like our own Earth in size, mass and distance from the sun," NASA says.

Among the common forces, scientists say, are volcanic eruptions, meteorite impacts and, perhaps, continental drift, the evolutionary movement of huge land masses. Magellan will also look for evidence of wind and water erosion and test the bounds of Venus' gravity.

The image of Venus formed by pictures taken from earlier U.S. and Soviet space probes is of a planet where molten rock lies so close to the solid crust surface that impacting meteorites might produce volcanic eruptions, where hundreds of thousands of volcanoes stretch for thousands of miles across lowland plains, where continent-sized highlands sprout mountains dwarfing Everest.

Magellan, once it begins orbiting Venus on Aug. 10, 1990, will look for ancient stream channels, shorelines and other evidence the planet once may have had oceans. Scientists believe an unchecked "greenhouse effect" — in which the carbon dioxide atmosphere acted like greenhouse glass and trapped solar heat — raised the temperature until water disappeared.

It's a $550-million project with the scientific world watching.

"PART OF the answer is knowing whether Earth is a fluke or just one of the natural consequences of the evolution of a generic solar system," said Soderblom, who works for the U.S. Geological Survey in Flagstaff, Ariz.

Scientists will probe the gravity forces of Venus by plotting the path of Magellan as it swoops to within 155 miles of the planet's surface and then sweeps out to a high orbit point of 4,977 miles.

In looking for similarities between Venus and Earth, scientists begin by noting that they are roughly the same size, weight and distance from the Sun, and are both bigger than Earth's moon, Mercury and Mars.

Heavenly bodies "are a lot like potatoes. The big ones stay hot for a long time, and the little ones cool off quickly," said Saunders, himself a geologist.

The moon, Mercury and Mars have cold surfaces free of continental drift. Because a planet's internal heat "drives the geological machinery," however, scientists believe Venus and Earth both give off heat through volcanic activity and movements of gargantuan pieces of rock along the planetary crust, Saunders said.

Magellan should help scientists learn if any of the Venusian volcanoes are still erupting and how crustal rock movements differs from that on Earth.

ROCK IN Earth's crust is created and recycled in a conveyor-belt manner. Hot crustal rock is born along midocean ridges — undersea mountain chains thousands of miles long. New crust is pushed away from these ridges as more rock emerges. The crust eventually collides with lighter continental rock, such as at the "subduction zone" where Pacific seafloor rock sinks beneath Alaska, Washington and Oregon.

Heat is released as sinking rock melts, creating volcanoes.

Earth releases most of its heat at midocean ridges and subduction zones. Saunders and Gerald Schaber, another USGS geologist, believe Venus loses its internal heat mostly through "hot spot" volcanoes.

On Earth, such volcanoes form where molten rock rises through thin parts of the crust, such as in Hawaii. But there's evidence that Venus has crustal movement similar to Earth and that the volcanic ranges may be the Venusian equivalent of Earth's midocean ridges.

No one yet has found conclusive evidence of subduction zones on Venus. In places, however, folded mountains and valleys are squeezed up against Venus' continent-like highlands, Aphrodite and Ishtar, the latter of which has mountains taller than Everest.

These regions look something like Earth's Himalayas, mountains formed when India smashed into China. So crustal movements on Venus may be "thin-skinned," forming folded mountains without large chunks of crustal rock diving deep into the planet, Schaber said.

If large plates of Venus' crustal rock are in motion, "you can bet there's Venusquakes," he added.

"The most likely scenario is that we'll find something that will completely astound and baffle us."

Consulting firm teaches politicians to meet the media

DALLAS (AP) — "What I usually tell people is, 'The chances of Mike Wallace calling you are very slim,'" media maestro David Margulies is saying. "Mike Wallace does 20 stories a year. The person most likely to call you is a local reporter."

Ten minutes later, Mike Wallace calls David Margulies Media Relations and asks for the boss. The "60 Minutes" correspondent wants an interview with one of Margulies' clients, and has to go through the former WFAA-TV reporter to get it.

Across town, Wallace remains a prime selling point for Fairchild/LeMaster Inc., a larger, more established media training company. A 1983 advertisement from the Adolph Coors Brewing Co. is framed and displayed in the reception area. "The Four Most Dreaded Words in the English Language," it says in bold print: "Mike Wallace Is Here."

Fairchild/LeMaster, owned by the husband-and-wife team of Ken Fairchild and Lisa LeMaster, takes credit for neutralizing Wallace by schooling Coors executives in the art of media diplomacy. Ms. LeMaster, a former KRLD-AM radio reporter during the time her husband-to-be was station news director, played the role of Wallace in readying Joe and Bill Coors for a confrontation they handled with aplomb in a 1982 "60 Minutes" story on accusations that the beer company had mistreated its employees. The resulting ad was the Coors brothers' way of touting their performance.

"Mike Wallace has been great for our business," Ms. LeMaster later was quoted as saying. "An awful lot of executives suffer from Mike-fright."

Generically speaking, that's microphone fright. Fear of the unknown, of the media, has landed both firms a national roster of clients who pay big money in return for quick courses in "spokesmanship training" and "crisis management."

"It starts at $850 (per person) to spend the afternoon with us," Ms. LeMaster says. Margulies does his training outside the office, charging between $2,00 and $4,000 for a group seminar.

Fairchild/LeMaster's clients have included Gov. Bill Clements, Texas Rangers lame-duck owner Eddie Chiles, Dallas Congressman Steve Bartlett, seven Olympic champions, SMU coaches Forrest Gregg and John Shumate, the National Association of Homebuilders and companies ranging from Coors to McDonald's.

Fairchild/LeMaster has "guided me through some storms," Chiles says from his vacation home in Scottsdale, Ariz. "I'm not that quick a learner. I don't know anybody who is when it comes to dealing with the press. I had envisioned them as our enemies...Lisa finally convinced me that they were our friends, and that we'd go a lot farther if we worked together rather than otherwise. After that I considered the press as part of baseball, and my responsibility as an owner was to help them in any way I could."

Sondra Dunn, director of media relations for Southern Methodist University, says Fairchild/LeMaster helped the school weather the recruiting scandal that resulted in a two-year death penalty for the football team. The company prepared a briefing book for Dr. A. Kenneth Pye when he was appointed SMU president, and Forrest Gregg was coached by Fairchild/Lemaster before holding his first press conference as SMU football coach. The resultant media coverage was uniformly flattering, Ms. Dunn says. "When Forrest Gregg came back, the words you saw were 'integrity,' 'values' and 'he's coming home.'

"It's what I call charm school, she adds. "It's a growing business, and I think it's a very necessary business. It's not a means of manipulating or managing the press, but it's a visual world, and we have precious little time to get our message out. It's not magic, is it? It's just good, common sense, and knowing what to do when you open your mouth."

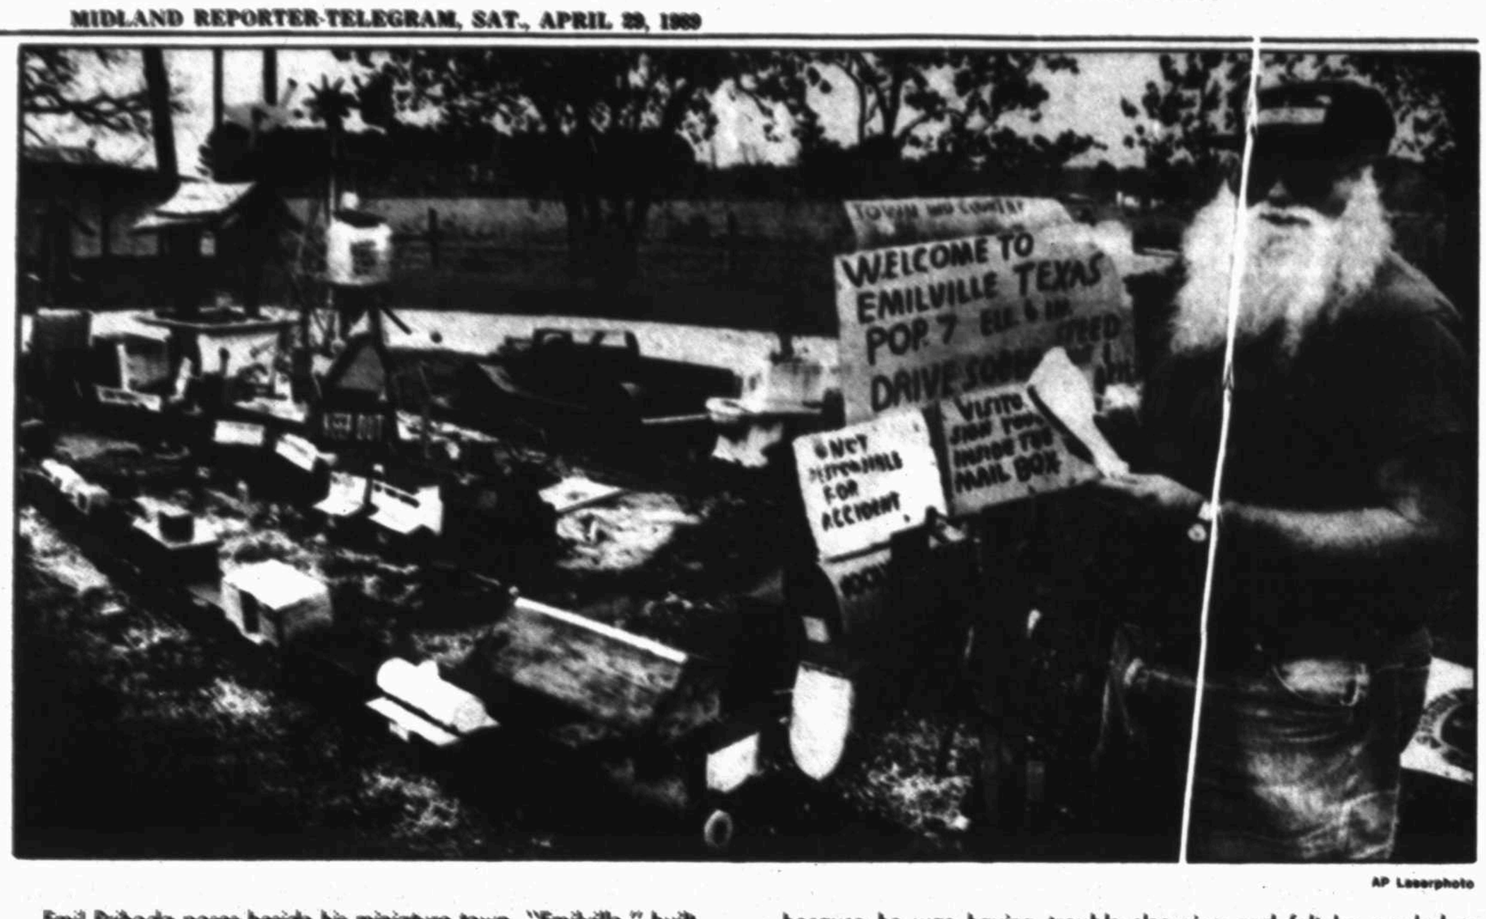

Rhonda Dunn, manager of marketing communications for Sunbelt, says that Margulies has persuaded company executives that "talking to the media doesn't have to be a scary thing. They learn to be more relaxed and to get their points across in a non-adversarial manner."

"Over the years, I've watched people being interviewed, and I'd think to myself 'You don't really want to say that,'" Margulies says. "Many people don't make their best points."

Margulies and Fairchild/Lemaster also are in the business of trouble-shooting. Company representatives jet to hot spots on a moment's notice to help clients handle outbreaks of media curiosity. Margulies helped smooth over food-poisoning charges against a Denver-based restaurant chain. Fairchild/LeMaster sent one of its staffers to the East Coast to handle another food-poisoning situation.

Margulies started his company in 1985 after nine years at Channel 8 as a reporter and weekend anchor. Fairchild/LeMaster, founded in 1980, is one of the oldest companies in th evolving field of media image-making. Margulies moonlighted as a reporter in the company's instructional course during the early years.

Representatives from "60 Minutes," "20/20" and "Nightline" have no criticisms of the coaching that may in some cases thwart their reporters. They profess to know little and care less about the image-making industry.

Emil Prihoda poses beside his miniature town, "Emilville," built with scraps of wood and metal at his Danbury, Texas, home. Prihoda, 70, built the replica of a 1928 town from his memories because he was having trouble slee ping and felt he needed a hobby.

Man builds dream town in miniature

By RHONDA MORAN

DANBURY, Texas (AP) — The wind picks up speed in the wide open pastures surrounding Emil Prihoda's frame house, whistling through the trees and carrying the sound of loneliness.

Prihoda, 70, has lived in the house more than 40 years, the last five of them alone except for his dog. At first, the tall, bearded man found it difficult to sleep in the too-quiet house, but he soon realized sleeping pills were no answer.

"I said, 'Old man, you're gonna have to wake up and do something for pastime,'" Prihoda says, his Czech ancestry evident in his speech.

He got to thinking about days gone by, remembering how he loved the sound of a steam locomotive blowing its whistle. He remembered how towns used to be the main street and all a town's businesses within walking distance of the railroad tracks and Prihoda decided to build his own replica of a 1928 town.

When he couldn't sleep, he would go out to his workshop to rebuild his memories with scraps of wood and metal.

The result is a miniature town Prihoda calls "Emilville," built in the grassy area in the middle of his circular, shell-paved driveway.

Signs advise those entering Emilville that the population is seven, the elevation is 6 inches and the speed limit is 1 mph. Another sign says, "Not responsible for accident," and still another urges guests to sign a tablet Prihoda keeps in the Emilville mailbox.

Emil Prihoda

"I've got over 300 people been here, from all over the world even Canada," he says, his thick fingers turning the tablet's weathered pages. "Some people sign their names when I'm not at home."

The tablet is a source of both entertainment and worry for Prihoda.

"A man from New Mexico came up here, and he asked me could his dog sign his name in the book," Prihoda says. "I say, 'Sure, I never seen that before.'

"Then the man said, 'Oh no, he has a sore foot, and he can't write today.' So the man wrote the dog's name, and it was 'Bear.'"

A visiting couple took the tablet to the hood of their car to write their names, then drove off with the tablet still on the hood.

"It took me four days to get my book back," Prihoda says. "You know, it don't mean nothing to nobody but me."

Emilville was a well-kept secret until Prihoda had a garage sale, he says.

"People were more interested in Emilville than they were in my garage sale," he says. "I only sold one thing at the whole sale."

Prihoda, a former county employee who retired in 1982, can play the accordion "a little," used to be a clown and sometimes works as Santa Claus during the season. "I'm the only Santa who comes with his own beard and belly," he laughs.

Emilville is a town with a story as colorful as its namesake, and Prihoda will share the tale with anyone who visits. Here's how it goes:

"Emil he built an oil well and struck it rich, so he build a town with seven people. They elected him the mayor and from then on they call him Wooly Bugger. That's where old Wooly Bugger lives, right in that house," says Prihoda, whose own nickname happens to be Wooly Bugger.

The town's physician, Dr. Wooly Bugger, advertises a cure for hangovers. The Lone Star Service Station has a hand pump for gasoline, and the motel rents rooms for $1 a night.

Emil's Cafe features beer, domiroes, whiskey and happy hour 24 hours a day, but a competitor, Wooly Bugger's Diner, specializes in horse meat. The diner's slogan? "The Best Horse House in Texas."

The town has a bank and a general merchandise store, and at the "Real Pit BBQ" stand, Prihoda says an old woman used to be inside asking, "Where is the beef? Where is the beef?"

Next door is the barber shop, "one place old Wooly Bugger don't go," Prihoda says, stroking his long white beard.

The post office stands near the funeral home, where two bodies are lying in state. At one end of town is a pond where a man is fishing not far from an alligator. A sign says "No swimming," and it's easy to see why.

Inventor works on rear window indicator

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — They say necessity is the mother of invention. A story from Donald Davis illustrates the point.

He was in a hurry to come home from school and play with his new toy, a battery-operated miniature traffic light. But frustration grew when young Donald found the light would not fit into the rear windshield of the family car.

After 30 years of sustained effort, his father, Jesse Davis of Port Arthur, responded by creating a product he says might revolutionize driving.

His invention, dubbed as the Vehicle Motion Indicator, is a traffic signal light mounted on the rear windshield of cars that activates when the driver touches the brakes or the gas pedal. When the gas pedal is pressed, a green light illuminates denoting the car is in forward motion. Lifting the foot from the gas pedal will change the green to yellow, alerting the car behind to slow. When the brakes are engaged, a red light illuminates to signal the car is about to stop.

Davis, 70, said his product is already patented and he is looking for prospective automobile manufacturers who may be interested in the product.

"If Ford, Chrysler or General Motors turn away from my invention, I'll sell it to Japan. It's a very good consumer product and will make driving safer on roads," Davis said.

AP Laserphoto

Jesse Davis of Port Arthur poses with the device he invented to tell other drivers whether the vehicle ahead is stopped, slowing or accelerating.

But success of inventions in consumer markets is an exception rather than a rule. Statistics released by the U.S. Trademark and Patent Office say only about one in 20 products invented by an individual has the potential to be marketed nationally.

"It is extremely tough for an inventor to break into the market," said Joanne Mordus, communications director of Affiliated Inventors Foundation based in Colorado Springs, Colo. She said unless the item is revolutionary and likely to change the outlook of consumers, the inventor is likely to lose money.

Statistics show, even before the marketing phase, an inventor on average spends $8,000 getting the product patented. This usually includes the patent search and fees for filing amendments through patent attorneys in case of an application rejection, Ms. Mordus said. Then there is a cost of producing a prototype and readying it for display.

"The invention marketing companies are not licensed to service patent applicants, but they make believe that they know the procedure," said John Dodge of Dodge, Bush and Moseley, a Houston patent law firm.

A marketing company can only apply for patent if the company can prove it has a part of the ownership of the invention, he said. According to the patent laws, if a marketing company is made a co-inventor of an invention, the company is not required to give any part of the revenue generated out of selling or franchising the invention.

"Original inventors know their product is in the market but they receive no money for it they have no protection against the use of their invention," Dodge said. However, Dodge said that an increasing number of inventors are inventing products with help from companies. That way, they can sell the product directly to the company and not worry about marketing.

"I am looking for an outright buyer that's my first preference," Davis said. "If I don't get a buyer, I will be looking for a marketing firm that will promote my Vehicle Motion Indicator."

Texan building, testing own performance plane

FREEPORT, Texas (AP) — In the next couple of years, a unique new airplane may be seen in the skies over southern Brazoria County.

The plane, called the "Do Wat Diddy," is designed to be a high-performance aerobatic plane. Its 20-foot wings are thick to provide the lift needed in aerobatic maneuvers and its 7-foot ailerons will give the pilot greater control. A 180-horsepower engine will give the plane speed and power to perform rolls, stalls and other tricks you'd expect during an airshow.

The "Do Wat Diddy" has only one seat. Its builder, who also will be the test pilot, said that's because "no one wants to go."

Larry Cissna is as unique as the plane he's building. Although he lost his left leg in a motorcycle wreck in 1968, he has not let his handicap keep him off of motorcycles or from working. He owns and operates Industrial Automotive Services in Freeport.

Cissna's handicap hasn't kept him from flying either, even though he had to adapt his first plane to fit his handicap. He received his pilot's license in 1981 and bought the plane he trained in. He has been flying aerobatics in airshows for the past several years and audiences are often stunned by his daredevil maneuvers and his finale stunt in which he takes off his artificial leg and throws it out of the plane.

"I know I'm a handicapped man," Cissna said. "In the past 20 years that I've been handicapped, I've experienced a lot of discrimination. I think that's why I've been successful at being self-employed and with my flying. My biggest thrill is when I take my leg off and throw it at the audience."

Most of his persistence, he added, comes from a drive to "prove to the white-collar world that this old blue-collar boy could do it."

The "Do Wat Diddy" sits in Cissna's hanger behind his home near Brazoria. It's nothing more than a skeleton of steel, spruce wood and wires, waiting to be covered with nylon and fiberglass. The Federal Aviation Administration also will have to take a long, hard look at the plane before it leaves the hangar.

The plane was designed by Mike Frey, a mechanical engineer with Intermedics. Paul "Speedy" Spehr, another Intermedics employee, did computer tests on the aerodynamics of the design.

"I've always thought I've accomplished something when I got my license," Cissna said. "But I've found the real accomplishment is to sit down and have the foresight to have built one of these things. This plane is going to fly but we don't know how it's going to fly. That's the puzzle. I've always wondered how old Orville Wright felt."

Cissna has been working on the plane for the past 18 months and has put in about 400 hours of sweat into the construction. He said it should be completed within two years and will be ready for its maiden flight.

"If I crash it, I'll build it again," Cissna said. "You don't just quit something like this."

Friend's suicide haunts, inspires Texas artist

TEXARKANA, Texas (AP) — The 1980s suicide of a 16-year-old Egyptian Cobras blood brother still haunts Chuck Curry.

He has resolved his friend's death in art. "Not So Jolly Roger," a poignant picture recently shown in area high school art exhibits of Curry's work.

"He didn't know mom and dad except by check," Curry said of the boy who took his own life.

The boy was the only member of the Cobras with affluent parents and he never quite fit in with the gang.

"He was accepted but he was always out of sync," the artist said. "The rest of us did not have Brooks Brothers shirts or Stacy Adams shoes."

Curry, in his teens, did not recognize the signs of despondency in his friend until the suicide.

This is only one issue Curry addresses in his 18-inch-by-24-inch pastels and pencils that he relates to students.

He has been a practicing artist 38 years, living the past five years in the Atlanta-Queen City area.

Curry believes art defines people and concepts developed in artwork can be scaled up or down according to a person's age.

While primary students do not understand continuity, detail and design in art, he says it is very important to expose them to art and prefers working with that age group.

"Unfortunately, people (in this area) do not place as much value on the intangible as the tangible," Curry said.

Curry showed 20 pieces in recent exhibits at Queen City, Atlanta and Texarkana high schools. The subject matter is diverse and includes several series of pictures.

Because Curry has a teen-ager of his own, Charles, he says he believes he relates well to the day-to-day situations and emotions they feel.

Some of his lighthearted pictorials are related to sports.

One shows bear paws (a Chicago Bears player) cradling a football and another a tiger making an open-field tackle of a football player.

Chinese students prepare for talks with government

BEIJING (AP) — Students jubilant over the success of their defiant march through Beijing prepared Friday for talks with the government and rejected a demand that they negotiate only through official student groups.

Beijing universities were quiet Friday after a 15-hour march the day before by tens of thousands of students, the latest and biggest of a series of pro-democracy protests that have been held almost daily since April 15.

During the 20-mile march, students pushed through police lines to carry their pro-democracy message to cheering bystanders. Many workers and other students joined the march to Beijing's Tiananmen Square.

On Friday, leaders of the student uprising vowed to continue their 5-day-old boycott of classes at least until May 4, the 70th anniversary of China's first student demontrations for democracy.

"People are very tired but their resolve has not been weakened," said a young woman activist at Beijing University. Student protest leaders there were writing wall posters announcing their decision to continue the boycott and "not waver until victory."

Many students were elated over the success of the march. "Victory belongs to the people," declared one poster at Beijing University.

The official Xinhua News Agency, meanwhile, carried a new Communist Party message urging students to resume classes and preserve stability.

"Stability and democracy are two sides of the same coin," Xinhua said, quoting an editorial in the People's Daily party newspaper.

"Spreading rumors about state leaders, staging strikes and instigating turmoil can only plunge China into chaos," it said. "All young people should realize that those with ulterior motives are waiting to make use of their emotional impulses...To 'fish in troubled waters.' "

The editorial was milder than one published Wednesday that accused the students of plotting to "destroy the peaceful, united political system." The earlier editorial angered students and prompted them to hold the Thursday march as a means of bypassing the state-controlled media and taking their message directly to the people.

The State Council, China's cabinet, offered before the march ended to hold talks "at any time" with the students.

However, it said the talks should be sponsored by the All-China Student Federation and Beijing Student Federation, made up of students selected by their schools.

Since the protests began, students at 41 Beijing colleges have ousted the official federations and set up their own student committees. Each of the committees has in turn chosen representatives to a new city-wide federation.

Student leaders said any talks would have to be conducted through the new committees, which the government has declared illegal. However, most seemed to believe the government would accept the committees.

Wang Dan, a member of Beijing University's committee, said the federation met Friday "so everyone could express their views" about the prospective negotiations. He said no decisions were made.

He said the students had not been contacted directly by the government and had learned of the offer only from the official media.

At the White House, Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater reacted cautiously to the demonstrations.

"The president believes in the principles of free speech and the right to assembly and so forth that are being demonstrated there," he said. "I know the president hopes the demonstrations will remain peaceful and that the Chinese authorities will use restraint in dealing with them."

Asked why the Bush administration was not stronger in its support, Fitzwater said the president always "supports any people's choice of movement toward democracy. On the other hand, democracy is defined a lot of different ways. I don't know what all the demands of this group are."

The students are calling for sweeping democratic reforms in China's tightly controlled political system, including a free press and requiring that leaders reveal their income and be accountable to the masses.

The protests broke out on April 15 with the death of Hu Yaobang, a former Communist Party chief considered a reformist who was sympathetic to student demands.

Student leader loses voice, weight, says he has no intention of giving up

BEIJING (AP) — In his fight for political change in China, student leader Wu'er Kaixi has lost his voice and 10 pounds, but the 21-year-old from remote Xinjiang province shows no sign of giving up.

The freshman has been at the forefront of demonstrations for democracy and a free press since April 20 when he singlehandedly organized a spontaneous sit-in near the gates of the Communist Party headquarters.

With no microphone, Wu'er shouted down about 1,000 unruly students, making them sit quietly for several hours in protest. Hundreds of security forces then massed and charged the protesters, beating some and sending others fleeing.

"There's nothing I can do about it, I've always wanted to do what other people were afraid of," said the cocky young man from Beijing Normal University, cracking a dimpled smile.

Last week, after he appointed himself president of Beijing Normal's student association, the students approved his decision in one of the first student elections in a country that has always appointed its student representatives.

He also is a member of the independent all-city student association which has organized the protests. The communist government has called the organizations illegal. Wu'er said they represent the will of the students.

"I've been leading students since I started school," he said in a recent interview in a cramped student dormitory room at his school. "In high school I didn't think twice about standing up on the table and shouting if we needed more light bulbs or an official hit a student,"

But now instead of light bulbs, Wu'er is calling for democracy.

"People are beginning to discover that I'm a dangerous man," he said with obvious relish. "That is a good thing."

Early in the protest, his school recognized that fact and had his father sent thousands of miles from Xinjiang to Beijing to urge him to stop his work.

"Putting pressure on my father was sick and disgusting," he said. "It won't work."

The demonstrations have taken their toll on his health.

"I haven't been eating much. When we spent the night at Tiananmen Square on Friday I didn't eat at all. My throat hurts from screaming but my spirit is good."

Wu'er hails from China's remote northwest. Both his parents are of Turkish descent, belonging to the Uigur people, who dominated Central Asia between the 8th and the 12th centuries.

"I look at my status as a minority in this country of Han people as a bonus," he said. "We have an expression in Chinese: 'The onlooker sees the game best.' I think I see the problems of the Han better because my blood is different."

Wu'er said he is little impressed with political thinkers from the West or China.

"I've always thought I had to go my own way," he said. "Some of my classmates worship America's system but I think it's like the story about the king who asked his subjects to blow on their gold horns if they supported democracy. None of them had gold horns."

Prosecutors urge Hamadi's conviction in hijacking, murder

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Prosecutors on Friday urged a court to convict Mohammed Ali Hamadi in the hijacking of a TWA jet and slaying of a U.S. sailor, and they demanded the harshest sentence possible: life in prison.

The prosecutors' closing statement, coming nearly 10 months after the trial began, said Hamadi's actions "violated the foundations of civilization."

Hamadi, a Lebanese Shiite Moslem, is charged with murder and air piracy in the June 14, 1985, hijacking of the Athens-to-Rome flight. Navy diver Robert Stethem was killed and 39 Americans were held hostage 17 days.

Hamadi admitted participating in the hijacking but denied killing Stethem.

Chief prosecutor Achim Thiel said although it could not be proved Hamadi pulled the trigger of the gun that killed Stethem, "it was a clear case, at a minimum, of felony murder."

Under West German law, an accomplice can be convicted of murder even if he did not actually commit the murder.

A verdict is expected in late May.

Thiel said Hamadi was the leader of two hijackers that commandeered TWA Flight 847 because, as many witnesses testified, he was the first to rush to the cockpit with a pistol.

"That he led at this critical point clearly shows that he was the leader," Thiel said.

Hamadi sat quietly listening to his court-appointed translator, glancing occasionally back toward the bulletproof glass partition separating the courtroom from the public viewing section.

Several dozen police, some with submachine guns, roamed the Preungesheim prison compound where the high-security court is located.

Hamadi blamed his fugitive accomplice, Hassan Ezzeddine, for Stethem's murder. Dozens of former hostages and crew members of the hijacked plane testified they did not see the actual slaying.

Also giving a summary statement Friday was Rainer Hamm, a co-prosecutor representing Stethem's family and American passengers and crew of the hijacked airliner.

Hamm likened Hamadi to "the Nazis who justified killings with their religious and political beliefs. He is a fanatical follower of a totally intolerant view of the world."

Hamadi said the hijacking was intended to gain freedom for hundreds of Shiite Moslems held prisoner by Israel.

Stethem's parents, Richard and Patricia Stethem, of Waldorf, Md., and their two other sons, Kenneth and Patrick, attended the proceedings.

"Hamadi beat Robert Stethem and Clinton Suggs (another U.S. Navy diver) when they were totally defenseless," Thiel said. "They were beaten without reason. He did it out of hate."

"The sadistic beating of Kurt Carlson (another U.S. passenger) until he was unconscious was verified by other witnesses. They believed that Carlson was dead," he added.

Assistant prosecutor Peter Korneck said, "We demand life imprisonment for murder and three cases of grave bodily harm. The murder, the brutal beatings of Stethem, Suggs and Carlson call for a life sentence."

The prosecutors said Hamadi should be treated and sentenced as an adult. According to prosecution evidence, Hamadi turned 21 the day before the hijacking began on June 14, 1985.

Hamadi claimed he was one or two years younger but has not been able to prove it.

Hamadi was arrested in January 1987 at Frankfurt's airport after customs officials found explosives in his luggage. The trial began July 5.

"Hamadi beat Robert Stethem and Clinton Suggs (another U.S. Navy diver) when they were totally defenseless. They were beaten without reason. He did it out of hate. The sadistic beating of Kurt Carlson (another U.S. passenger) until he was unconscious was verified by other witnesses. They believed that Carlson was dead."

— Achim Thiel, chief prosecutor

Redesigning America for an aging populace

Even without doing a study, I can confidently assert that our generation is the most studied generation of all.

Rosenthal

The statistics available are staggering, by any measure you choose. Many of the studies look toward the next century, when the impact of an ever-aging population will be felt full-force.

It's all interesting in its own way, but the message is predictable. A lot of people who were born later than we were are worried about what they'll find when they are our age.

"How strange that while we have spent the past 10,000 years trying to live long and grow old, now that we are having some success we don't know what to make of it," writes gerontologist Ken Dychtwald in "Age Wave," a new book. "Our nation has yet to figure out a positive and hopeful way to think about itself growing up."

Dychtwald isn't simply a university researcher traveling a well-rutted road. His ideas are hard-nosed enough to be bought by some of the country's largest firms, whose interest in making a buck coincides with knowing what's coming and how to cater to it.

We can skip over the scary statistics of what faces America–although I like the one that says "we are no longer a nation of youths," because in 1983 the number of those over 65 surpassed the number of teenagers. We can also pass the myths of aging in order to spend the time more profitably on the tennis court.

One chapter includes "Elder-heroes," who "did something unexpected: they grew, they changed directions, and they blossomed in their old age." No couch potatoes on that list: Mother Teresa, Albert Schweitzer, Mahatma Gandhi, Claude Pepper, Gray Panthers leader Maggie Kuhn and painter Henri Matisse.

Most interesting are Dychtwald's recommendations for redesigning America to match the changing needs caused by its aging.

"Next time you're at a traffic light, ask yourself how we decided on the length of time needed for people to walk across the street," he writes. "Next time you read a newspaper, look at the size of typeface, and ask yourself how it was determined that this was the right size...We have woven a physical world for ourselves that has been as suited to our needs and activities as a beehive is for its bees. And it has been woven on the form and physiology of youth."

To accommodate changes in vision, Dychtwald suggests that automakers install front window that automatically adjust tint to eliminate glare, larger side mirrors and dashboard display numerals, controls in the center of the steering wheel, and warning systems that sound when any object comes close to the car. The latter would be useful in parking lots.

For countering increasing loss of dexterity in fingers, the possibilities are endless, Dychtwald says. Among his suggestions: comb-and brush-extenders; long-handled sponges and dusters for hard-to-reach spots, and long-handled easy-grip zipper pulls; "foot-mops"--sponges that slip over a shoe to clean up spills without bending over; electric teapots that turn off when the water has boiled away; and light switches activated by sound.

Dychtwald thinks that "all of our foods will have to be, in a sense, redesigned" to reflect the lessened sensitivity of older taste buds and dietary changes. And, for loss of general mobility, he has such suggestions as water-heater regulators to keep tap water from getting too hot, crank-operated windows, ramps instead of stairs, pedestrian street lights that change more slowly, and mid-street traffic islands so slower walkers can pause and rest.

The bottom line of Dychtwald's philosophy is that "if we evaluate the worth and value of age through the criteria of youth...we will always be yearning for what we used to be."

Instead, he says, the mature years should be for giving back to society the lessons, resources and experiences of a lifetime and become not social outcasts but "a living bridge between yesterday, today and tomorrow."

Forget for a moment all the controversy surrounding billboards, about how they mar the countryside and clutter the inner-city.

The question is, are you willing to put your ad dollars in a medium that's restricted to 10 to 12 words that you have to read at 55 miles an hour?

A better solution would be to advertise in a medium that people have time to read. One that lets you tell your story, no matter how long that story may be.

Newspaper advertising can do this and more. So give us a call at 682-5311. After all, doesn't your ad budget deserve a bigger audience than just speed readers?
