Council to hear project protest

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Although the Midland City Council has no involvement in a plan for a rent-subsidized apartment complex by a Houston developer, a vote on April 14 in support of residents against the project could place the council in a position of talking out of both sides of its mouth.

Wearing yellow tags printed with "I Care," more than 100 residents from west Midland, where the project is proposed, took their protests to the City Council on Tuesday, even though the project wasn't on the agenda.

The council listened to the citizens, and took no action as called for under the Texas Open Meetings Act. But the council agreed to hold a public hearing on the matter at 6 p.m. April 14 in the Council Chambers with a representative of the developer present.

The proposed apartment complex came to light during the City Council's March 10 meeting when the city Council — on a 4-to-2 vote with he and Carroll Thomas dissenting — approved applying for federal Community Development funds. That application would include a rental assistance plan for existing housing. But the city's application hasn't made it to Washington yet.

The property on Delmar Street "already is zoned MF-1. There will be apartments there, whether it is this development or something else," he said.

ALTHOUGH THE CITY wasn't involved in the site selection, Akins said that spot is exactly the type HUD chooses — it's near shopping, schools and the main arterial streets of Illinois Avenue and Midland Drive.

One man representing the group said, "All we're asking you (the council) to do is join us in fighting this. Let the government subsidize where they (low-income people) are living now. We've talked to people in other towns and they say HUD projects have hurt the sale of their property. It's a good neighborhood, but we don't want it soiled by this development."

Councilman Gordon Marcum II tried to convince the group that 100 voices are stronger than the six on the City Council. "Your emphasis should be to the developer. We don't have control over him. We can support you, but five or six people can't keep a developer out."

A woman in New Mexico who is involved in the project informed the mayor that if there was too much opposition, the complex wouldn't be constructed, Akins said. He advised the people to contact Mary Rich Adams, and some in the audience responded that they have.

As to a suggestion by several citizens that the council rezone the land so it can't have apartments, Akins replied, "It's not the city's land. The owner would have to apply to have it rezoned."

TO THAT, COUNCILMAN Tom Sloan added, "They have property rights and we can't take them away."

Janice Rabenaldt, in protesting the development, charged that similar developments in other cities "have run down the area. We're concerned about what the complex would look like three to five years from now." She added that several families have started looking for houses in other parts of the city.

In reply to her request that the approved giving its Housing Assistance Plan to the Department of Housing and Urban Development, which will be subsidizing rents for low-income people on some of the apartments.

THE DEVELOPER, Friedman and Associates, has plans to construct an 86-unit brick-veneered complex on Delmar Street, which is behind K-Mart. According to Mayor G. Thane Akins, 40 of the units will be used for rental subsidy, with some of these reserved for elderly and handicapped persons. The rest will be rented on a competitive market basis. Information as to who is getting the subsidy for their rents will be kept confidential, he added.

Those rents, he said Tuesday, should be about $300 for a one-bedroom apartment, up to $500 for a three-bedroom apartment.

In addressing the audience, Akins said, "There's some misunderstanding regarding this development. The city had nothing to do with the application. The city only gave certain demographical data."

Some of the citizens claimed they had been told the city assisted HUD and the developer in choosing the site. That is false, said Akins. "This is not a city project."

Bridging the seasons

An open Amish buggy makes its way from a wintry stretch of road laced with bare-branched trees through a covered bridge and into a new season in eastern Lancaster County, Pa., on a spring morning.

Bush's role upstages Haig

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush is being given a key national security role following a bitter power struggle in which Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., the self-described "general manager of foreign policy," emerged as a clear loser.

Bush's appointment Tuesday night as chairman of a "crisis management team" came several hours after Haig made the unusual admission in testimony on Capitol Hill that he had not been consulted and was unhappy about the prospective decision.

There were rumors — quickly and emphatically denied by the State Department — that Haig had threatened to resign if Bush were appointed.

Asked about that afterward, White House press secretary James S. Brady said, "Haig is on board."

The skirmishing offered fresh evidence that the Reagan administration, at least during its first two months in office, is no more successful than its predecessors in avoiding infighting over control of foreign policy.

In his new role Bush will be responsible for coordinating the government's response to foreign and domestic emergencies.

Brady said Bush will chair the team in President Reagan's absence.

"Of great importance, he will also engage in forward planning for emergency responses, develop options for presidential consideration and take the lead in the implementation of presidential decisions," Brady said.

Hours earlier, Brady had said the announcement concerning the crisis management team would come later in the week. By advancing it, Brady left the impression that the White House was responding to Haig's public criticism.

Haig's criticism evoked memories of the battle for control over foreign policy between former Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and former national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski.

The difference this time is that the two figures, Bush and Haig, have indicated an interest in becoming president.

One administration official, who requested anonymity, said, "What you've got here is a little presidential politics for 1984 or 1988."

Beyond that difference, Vance and Brzezinski kept their disagreements to themselves. Haig, in contrast, appeared to gamble that his cause would be helped by going public.

In his prepared testimony before a House subcommittee on international operations, Haig repeated that Reagan had assigned him the role of "general manager of foreign policy."

Under questioning, Haig said he had read — with a "lack of enthusiasm" — newspaper accounts of Bush's prospective appointment.

Because he had not been consulted beforehand, Haig said he did not believe a decision had been made. Appointing Bush to such a post without the secretary of state's knowledge "would pose another set of problems," Haig said.

At the White House, officials said Haig's public criticism backfired in two ways: Not only was he unable to override a decision already made, but he also called attention to his failure to prevail.

In his statement, Brady said the decision was "guided in large measure by the fact that management of crises has traditionally — and appropriately — been done within the White House."

Mast anticipates 'smooth sailing'

hospital board

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fourth in a 14-part series studying the candidates and issues in the April 4 city, school and hospital election.

By SUE FAHLGREN
Staff Writer

Dr. Henrie Mast, incumbent director of the Midland County Hospital District, said he's "looking forward to some pretty smooth sailing" at Midland Memorial Hospital, if he is elected to another two-year term in the April 4 election.

Mast, a retired physician, is one of four candidates for three at-large seats now open on the district's board of directors. Mast is running for his second term on the board, having previously served six years as a trustee, two terms as chief of staff and several terms as chief of surgery at the hospital.

With the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center to be completed by June, he said, many of the hospital's current worries will be solved. Construction, machinery and additional man power for the center have kept directors busy in decision-making for some months.

Just having the center up, he said "will take a lot off of our worries and concerns."

In addition, changes in the management and management duties, planning, billing and purchasing have or will have added more efficient procedures at the hospital within the next two years, he said.

"CONSIDERABLE changes have been made as a result of the Tribrook study and others are still in the process," Mast explained. A thorough study of the efficiency of each department and governing body, the Tribrook study has led to changes throughout the hospital. Mast said one of the most profitable things about the study was its "outside viewpoint."

"It has helped because some of the sacred cows have been criticized," he said.

The second Tribrook study dealt with the administration and governing bodies. The results of that study have only recently been released. Mast had a favorable opinion of the study — and the administrative bodies at the hospital.

"The board of trustees in the past year between administrators and the Tribrook study have become more active in the operations of the hospital than they would like to be — or think they should be," Mast explained. Since the Tribrook findings, that authority will go "back to the administrator and under administrators."

MAST SAID HE had no ill feelings toward the trustees for taking on those duties, but rather he respected them, as well as the members of the board of directors.

"The present board of trustees is most capable," he said. "The board of directors trust the members of the board of trustees implicitly." There are 16 members of that board "each with certain areas of expertise" commissioned to oversee the day-to-day operations of the hospital. Mast said the trustees provide "unselfish service and hard work by its people."

He said the board of directors represented an equally impressive lot.

"The board of directors is a well-selected cross section of the community, capable of tending to the hospital business without having any axes to grind or special interest groups to represent," he said. "We (the directors) have knowledge and experience in every field, including taxation and finance. We know what's needed or what's wanted by the public."

Mast also is impressed with new administrator Ray Branson. Since the arrival of what he called "the new carefully selected administrator,"

Petroleum Club Wildcat Committee honors bankers

Butler's optimism instrumental in bank, oil business growth

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

The office speaks a silent tribute to Jno. P. Butler's rise in the banking world and of The First National Bank's success over the 53 years he has worked there.

Set in a corner of the bank's newest addition, the smoked glass office looks onto a sunny atrium filled with green plants, the silence interrupted by the soft splashing of a fountain spewing water into its base.

When Butler came to Midland in 1927, he started as a teller at First National. Today, working in navy blue pin-striped suits behind a large desk, the moustached Butler is senior chairman of the board.

In recognition of his assistance to the petroleum industry over the years and the bank's willingness to take chances with independent operators, Butler was honored Tuesday by the Petroleum Club's Wildcat Committee.

Born in Hill County and raised in Mt. Calm, Butler finished high school in 1918 and went to work. "I never went back to school after that," he says.

His jobs have always centered on banking. Cutting his teeth with the bank in Mt. Calm, he moved on to The First National Bank in Waco and then to a new bank in Littlefield.

He was married in Littlefield and on July 4, 1927, the couple came to Midland to celebrate the holiday with friends.

Fasken's financial influence grew with petroleum industry

By SUE FAHLGREN
Staff Writer

Murray Fasken wasn't always a bank board chairman, but one might say he had a vision. Honored Tuesday night at the Petroleum Club by the Wildcat Committee, Midland National Bank's senior chairman of the board was rewarded for his support of the petroleum industry during Midland's growth.

Fasken saw Midland grow first hand. He arrived in Midland as an infant in 1917 when his family moved here from Toronto, Canada, to buy some land and start a ranch.

"It was a great experience for my family," he said. "My mother had never been out of Toronto before we came here. So, it was quite a shock."

Being from Canada, his family found "it was strange" adapting to the dry Midland landscape, "but we got along OK. There wasn't a lot of people to get along with then."

When Fasken was growing up in Midland, he said, "there were probably 1,100 to 1,200 people here. It was just a ranching town 'til the late '20s," he said. "I lived on the ranch until the time I went and started school."

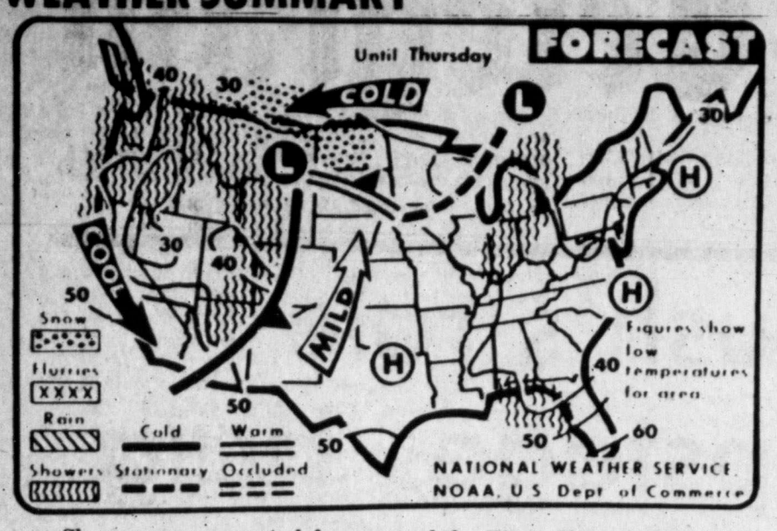

Besides ranching, his family began "a little oil business in the late '20s." And then came the Depression.

"After that, the oil people left for East Texas," he chuckled. "And Midland was pretty quiet until the late '30s."

The Depression chalked up a large toll in Midland. "It was very depressed," Fasken said. "It was terrible. The ranchers were hit hard. A lot of the ranchers nearly lost their ranches. You could buy a ranch just about anywhere around here for $3 or $4 an acre during the Depression."

Fasken's family fared better than most through those bad times. "Dad and another man bought the bank here," he said, after the banks failed and the property went cheap.

It wasn't until after he graduated from Midland High School that he got off the farm and went into the business world at Midland National. During the summers of 1935 and 1936 while a student at Texas A&M University, Fasken worked at the bank as a bookkeeper and a teller.

"They had hand machines (for bookkeeping) then," he said. "So, it was easier."

He left banking for a while, spent "a short time in law school," served a year or two in the Army, married Celeste Morrison of San Antonio and worked on the ranch.

"I enjoyed ranching," he said. "I wasn't the indoor-type."

But, he did sit on the board of the bank his father owned, and he finally "came into town and started working at the bank." That was in 1950, he said, "and I've been working there ever since."

Fasken is now president and senior chairman at the bank, a father of three and grandfather of six.

Midland National opened its oil department during the 1950s, he said. "We've been very active in the oil business since then. We opened the first oil department in a bank in this part of the state in the 1950s. We did some of the financing when Spraberry started," he said.

Abner John Spraberry owned the land where the discovery well was first drilled in this area, opening up the oil boom industry. He was a retired farmer and implement dealer.

"It's a very, very interesting type of banking," he said. "It's turned out very well for us — and a lot of our customers, too."

He discussed the town's prosperity Tuesday night.

"Midland's growth has been comparable to that of — well, I don't want to say Odessa," he said, pausing, then added, "Pecos and Colorado City." He grinned.

"Midland's been very fortunate that it's covered with a lot of hydrocarbon deposits," he said. "There's really nothing other than the climate that would bring anyone here."

However, the climate is one asset that has appealed to Fasken. "I love Midland's climate and people," he said.

"I like people," he explained. "The people you're involved with and associated with — that's really the best part of banking."

School trustees decide against strict 'closed campus' policy enforcement

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Noting the difficulty in trying to control 15,000 students, school board trustees Tuesday decided not to impose strict enforcement of its "closed campus" policy at the city's two high schools.

Instead, they authorized Trustee Ron Britton to meet with administrators and high school principals and report back to the board with possible recommendations for reducing the incidence of drinking and drug use, which is largely confined to cars parked off campus during lunch hours, according to school officials.

At a board meeting earlier this year, Britton prompted a study of the drug and alcohol problem off campus. The study was presented at Tuesday's board meeting and showed it would cost in excess of $173,000 to enclose parking lots at the two high schools, acquire land for necessary additional parking space and hire personnel to monitor the comings and goings of students at lunchtime and between classes.

"The cost would be too much for what we could expect to gain," conceded Britton. Assistant School Superintendent Garland Chapman agreed, saying:

"It might cut down on the number of students leaving campus, but it wouldn't stop all of them — even with fences and attendants. It'd be virtually impossible to stop them if they wanted to leave."

The board fell short of abandoning its nominal, loosely enforced closed campus policy, though, noting that a large number of students do comply with it and don't leave the grounds during school hours.

In a related matter, trustees took note of the March 20 issue of the Lee High School student newspaper, Dixie Dispatch.

The paper published the results of random surveys conducted by the journalism department showing parents about equally divided on the issue of a closed campus, while Lee High teachers favored it 3-1.

Businessmen in the area around the school, however, favor an open campus "because of increased lunchtime profits," said the paper.

In other action Tuesday, trustees accepted a $2,322.38 check from the Midland Jaycees. The money represents 30 percent of the group's profits from their operation of concession stands at Friday night football games this past season.

Last year's proceeds to the school district amounted to $950, and trustees readily approved the Jaycees' request to continue concession operations at the games.

Trustees also accepted the gift of equipment and materials from the Ortloff Corp., which is closing down one of its gas plants near Fort Davis.

The material includes pipes, valves, gauges, switches and iron that will be used by vocational education students in the school system. Value of the gift is in excess of $50,000.

Finally, the board approved inclusion of ninth grade students in the foreign language honors program and extended the district's summer school program for special education students to embrace those between the ages of six and 21.

Previously, the program was for students in grades four through 12 only.

Track coaches not indicted

FORT STOCKTON, Texas (AP) — A grand jury has returned no indictments against two bus drivers in a March 14 accident that resulted in the deaths of three high school students.

District Attorney Aubrey Edwards of Big Lake said Wednesday the grand jury made the determination Tuesday after reviewing the accident and the actions of drivers Shirley Chandler, 22, and Victor Munoz, 24, both of Van Horn.

Mast looking forward to 'some smooth sailing'

Mast said "a good deal of this shifted on to the administration."

MAST SAID HE believed the directors and Branson could "change direction and change policies" at the hospital, as well as "make the hospital's employment situation better so that employees are not so given to criticism and bickerings."

Mast admitted problems still exist at the hospital and there are still things to be done there — such as finding a solution to the nursing shortage.

"There's competition for help of all kinds (in Midland)," Mast said, including orderlies, engineers and X-ray technicians as well as nurses. He said the main reason for that dilemma was "anybody who wants to work in Midland, can work in Midland."

The hospital's problem staffing the nursing pool "isn't really a question of money," Mast said. "If rooms weren't closed, there would be more money to cover increased wages."

Basically, he said, there wasn't a large pool of nurses in the Permian Basin to get to the hospital. "Unless the pay (entices the nurses) or they're married to an oil man, they just aren't going to be here," he said. "There just aren't as many young ladies going into nursing."

THE PROBLEM remains one of attracting nurses to Midland Memorial "without stealing nurses from some other hospital," he said.

One remedy Mast suggested would be to establish a nursing school in Midland. "Several people on the hospital boards have suggested a cooperation with Midland College or Odessa College to establish a school for nursing," he said.

"It's feasible," he said, adding Odessa College already offers a two-year registered nurse program. "It is fairly expensive." He added the instructors of the program would be subject to the rules of the Texas Department of Education, which would limit a student's "hours used for patient care" by maintaining a standard of class-time. "But it would increase the supply of nurses locally," he maintained.

red stone courthouse over there," he says, pointing in the direction of the present courthouse. "They dug trenches in the ground and barbecued."

During the visit, he met someone connected with The First National Bank and was offered a job. Butler took it.

He admits it wasn't one of those offers he couldn't turn down. "I could have," he smiles. "I just felt my future was better here. And I'm glad I didn't turn it down. I've always been pleased I came to Midland."

Midland was only beginning to scratch the surface of the oil and gas business. "It was still a successful cattle ranching area then, and still is."

A small town of 3,000 "good people," Midland since has grown upward and outward to hold about 80,000, according to Butler. "I've always been optimistic about Midland, but I must confess that the city and area have far exceeded my fondest hopes."

When Butler started with the bank, he was one of six employees. Today, First National employs 500.

Over the years, Midland has had its up sides and its down sides, relates Butler. It wasn't long after he came here that the first down side hit — Depression. The two banks in Midland closed for that "banking holiday," recalls Butler. But after a month, they were open and doing business again.

"I was young then; I wasn't managing the bank. But we (employees) sat in on the conversations and knew what was happening. Those who managed the bank weren't ready to give up."

In fact, that never-give-up attitude has been the guiding philosophy of First National and of Butler throughout the years, especially when it comes to the petroleum industry.

First National, and other area banks, "always had confidence in the productivity of this land, even from its early uses for cattle ranching and farming and in the early days of unknown oil and gas prospects," Butler explains.

Looking back at the "down side" during the 1960s and early 1970, Butler says the bank carried the people who couldn't "fulfill their obligations, pay back their loans. You just have confidence in their ability to come back, and we (the bank) kept confidence in these people."

Butler follows the theory that "You gotta believe. Bright minds and hard work have accomplished a lot." But that must be coupled with "the necessity for people to get along."

Midland is winging through one of the best "up" times Butler has seen. "This city and this area haven't reached its zenith yet," he says with a nod of his head. "We've got problems, but we've always had problems. The up side now is exciting; it has many possibilities.

"We've got something the world needs and that's oil and gas — energy," he says.

He doesn't buy those stories about the resources running dry in about 20 years. And if they do, Midland won't dry up and blow away with the wind. "When I came here, there was only a blacksmith shop and a windmill repair shop. Neither one employed many people," he chuckles. But look at the city today, he says. "People begat people," and there will always be a need for services.

Butler expects continued growth and development in the oil and gas business and in light industry here "because of the increase in the real value of oil and gas. Oil, as related to other commodities, has been too cheap.

"It's economical. We have a lot left. People in the oil business will develop it, and I feel our future is bright."

Butler points out that as the bank has helped people, they in turn have helped others in Midland as their situation allowed them. That's one aspect about this city that makes him proud of Midland.

"As time has passed, people have been most generous in helping with their talents and financial support of the many fine things we have in Midland that make it an attractive place to live and raise families.

"People, as they become able," he adds, "have been good in turn to Midland."

Council to hear project protests

council go on record in support of the citizens, Assistant City Attorney Brian Martin explained, "The mayor and council are not trying to put you off. It's illegal for them to act on this. If they did, it could jeopardize your position more and it could be thrown into a lawsuit."

Michael Williams, who said he lives in that area, asked the council not to drop the ball entirely. "Because some in this community are concerned about low-income housing, you could help this developer find another location. Congress recently made site selection more flexible."

Finding a site may not be all that easy, according to the mayor. He claimed that no neighborhood in this country wants a HUD project in it.

After the citizens had left the Council Chambers, Akins turned to councilmen Steve Davidson and Sloan and warned, "This will be an awkward situation for the council. If we vote against this project, we'll be going against what we voted for last fall."

"Granted, I voted for that application, and I don't regret it," answered Davidson. "We do need something like this project. There are a lot of working people in this town who need it; people who make $200 a week and after taxes there's not much left."

Akins said that although he voted against the city's application, "I'm committed to it and I'll work with it."

Police Roundup

Sheriff's deputies today were investigating the reported burglary of the D.M. Williams residence, Rt. 4, Midland. Two stereo speakers valued at $250 were said to be missing. Entry was gained by breaking a window.

Judy confessed to other murders

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Just a few days before he was electrocuted, convicted murderer Steven Judy confessed that he was responsible for at least three unsolved deaths and alluded as well to a "string of bodies" in four states, his foster mother says.

Police said they had suspected Judy of committing one of the murders and are investigating the other deaths.

Mary Carr, Judy's foster mother, said she divulged Judy's confession because she was afraid an innocent person could be wrongfully held in those cases.

"I thought about not saying anything," Mrs. Carr said at a news conference Tuesday at her Indianapolis home. She said she had a "battle of conscience over who to tell and when to tell."

"I'm just hoping some other man hasn't been convicted of something Steve's done," she said. "I've gotten into this death penalty thing so deep."

Judy, 24, was electrocuted March 9 for the rape and murder of Terry Lee Chasteen and the drownings of her three young children. He had refused to appeal his death sentence, saying he would rather be executed than spend his life in prison.

Mrs. Carr said Judy told her March 4 and March 6 that he killed Linda Unverzagt, 28, of Indianapolis, whose body was found Nov. 4, 1978, in an abandoned house. She had been strangled and raped.

Judy also told her about the deaths of two Louisiana women, Mrs. Carr said, although she didn't know details.

Mrs. Carr said Judy also referred to "a string of" bodies in Illinois, Texas, Florida and Louisiana, but didn't go into details because "I started getting a twitch that was driving both of us bananas."

Mrs. Carr met Tuesday afternoon with Marion County chief trial deputy John Tinder, city police Detective Don Patton and the state police to discuss the matter.

Patton said Judy had been suspected in the murder of Mrs. Unverzagt, and that now "I'm 90 percent sure he did it."

As for the Louisiana deaths, Judy's attorney, Steven Harris, said Judy was in New Orleans in 1973.

Bittaker sentenced to death

TORRANCE, Calif. (AP) — Lawrence Sigmund Bittaker, convicted of the 1979 tortures and slayings of five teen-age girls, has been sentenced to the gas chamber by a judge who said the 40-year-old machinist was "beyond rehabilitation."

Superior Court Judge Thomas Fredricks on Tuesday ordered that Bittaker be executed at San Quentin Prison, but said he would set no execution date until the sentence was reviewed by the California Supreme Court.

Death sentences are automatically appealed. Should Bittaker's sentence be commuted by the governor or reduced by the high court, Fredricks said the sentence will automatically become 199 years and four months in prison.

The death penalty had been recommended by the jury which convicted Bittaker on Feb. 17 of first-degree murder, kidnap, rape and torture.

On Tuesday, Deputy District Attorney Stephen Kay said the death penalty would "allow us to hold our heads high and say we did everything possible to bring this monster to death."

"Any killing of a human being is unwise and unjust and degrades society of which we all are a part," Albert Garber, Bittaker's attorney, said after sentencing.

Bittaker's 3½-week trial featured the playing of a tape recording Bittaker and his accomplice, Roy Lewis Norris, made as one of their victims screamed and pleaded for her life.

Norris, 32, earlier pleaded guilty to five counts of murder, two of rape and one of robbery, and agreed to testify against Bittaker to escape the death penalty.

Murder charges to be heard

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Joseph Paul Franklin, sentenced to two life terms on federal charges stemming from the sniper slayings of two black joggers, faces a preliminary hearing next week on state murder charges that could put him before a firing squad if convicted.

The avowed racist, who lunged at prosecutors during his sentencing in federal court Monday, was calm as he stood before 5th Circuit Judge Larry R. Keller for his arraignment Tuesday on the murder charges.

Those charges, like the federal civil rights charges on which he was convicted earlier this month, stem from the Aug. 20 deaths of Ted Fields, 20, and David Martin, 18, who were gunned down as they jogged in a city park.

The prosecutor in the state's case has said he will seek the death penalty.

Although not asked to enter a plea during the arraignment, Franklin has repeatedly said he is innocent. He has said the two deserved to die for "race-mixing," and contends police are framing him because of his racist views.

During Monday's sentencing, the muscular, 30-year-old Alabama man lunged at prosecutors and shouted insults at the judge before being wrestled to the floor by nearly a dozen U.S. marshals.

A half-dozen security guards ringed the 5th Circuit courtroom Tuesday to prevent another outburst. However, Franklin answered Keller's questions in a quiet voice and by nodding his head.

Franklin said he had no attorney to represent him on the state charges and no money with which to hire one.

Attorneys seek stays of execution for four

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Lawyers for four convicted killers scheduled to die in Louisiana's electric chair by April 15 say they have not given up efforts to win stays of execution.

State District Judge Frank Foil on Tuesday rejected Robert Wayne Williams' request for a delay of his execution, set for next Tuesday, in order for a full hearing to be held on his appeal.

Hours later, State District Judge Carl Guidry set an April 8 execution date for Colin Clark.

Richard Shapiro, who represents both men, asked the state Supreme Court to hear Williams' appeal.

He said Clark has further avenues of appeal, though the U.S. Supreme Court refused to block his execution.

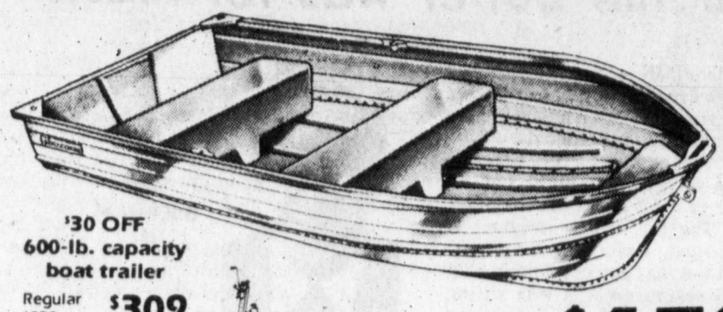

"He can still seek review in state and federal courts, raising new claims that haven't been considered before," said Shapiro, a lawyer for the Southern Prisoners' Defense Committee.

Lawyers for two other condemned killers said they also were filing new reasons why their clients should not be executed.

Timothy George Baldwin is scheduled to die next Tuesday, within minutes of Williams, and Dalton Prejean is scheduled to go to the electric chair April 15.

$44-billion hypocrisy

The Internal Revenue Service is taking its predictable revenge against tax rebels in Michigan who appear to have gone far beyond the permissible limits of the tax code governing the number of exemptions that can be claimed for withholding purposes.

To date, the IRS has filed charges against three persons among the hundreds of Michigan residents who have begun claiming up to 99 exemptions as a way of eliminating any withholding of federal income taxes from their paychecks.

Government lawyers are citing sections of the tax code that prohibit anyone from claiming unwarranted exemptions that enable a taxpayer to end the year owing money to the IRS. Tax collectors note, correctly, that this practice amounts to obtaining illegal, interest-free loans from the federal treasury.

We agree that those suspected of, in effect, cheating their fellow citizens ought to be prosecuted. Still, there is a touch of hypocrisy in the IRS's protests over anyone taking advantage of the withholding system to obtain an interest-free loan.

Last year, 72.3 million Americans who filed personal income tax returns received refunds from the Treasury totalling $44.4 billion. Most of these refunds were the result of excessive withholding by the government.

The refunds, for those who hadn't noticed, didn't include so much as a nickel in interest. The IRS didn't utter a peep in protest over that multi-billion dollar, interest-free loan from the American taxpayers to their government.

Letter precautions added

A letter to the editor that appeared Sunday in the Midland Reporter-Telegram apparently was written by someone other than the person identified by the signature.

The letter, bearing the signature of an "H.C. Davis" and an address for "2800 N. Midland Drive," concerned the upcoming City Council election and, particularly, the candidacies of Giffert Alstrin, a Place 1 candidate, and John Phipps, a candidate for Place 3. It also referred to the business connection between the two men and John B. Billingsley Jr., and cited the possibility for a "conflict of interest" in the event both men were to win election to the respective council seats they are seeking.

The Reporter-Telegram has learned that 2800 N. Midland Drive, the address on the letter, actually is the address of Terrace West Nursing Center. A spokesperson at the nursing center said there are no residents living there now who are named Davis.

The management of The Reporter-Telegram regrets this gross misuse of the letters to the editor column and will take every possible precaution to prevent recurrences in the future. Our apologies to Alstrin, Phipps and Billingsley for any embarrassment the letter may have caused.

In the future, all letters to the editor will be required to bear either the home or office telephone number of the writer and verfication calls will be made. Of course the letters still must contain the writer's address and must be signed.

Further precautions will be added as circumstances dictate.

ART BUCHWALD

And we used to believe peanut butter was for kids!

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — Anyone who has been to the grocery store lately knows what a rare and expensive delicacy peanut butter has become.

Therefore it came as a real surprise when the Brokaws brought out an entire jar of it for cocktails the other evening. The jar, which weighed at least a pound, contained the extra-crunchy kind that you can find in only the finest restaurants. It was sitting in a carved figure of ice surrounded by toast and pats of jelly.

Meredith Brokaw replied, "It isn't, but every once in a while Tom and I get the urge to splurge and we treat ourselves to a luxury."

I whispered to my wife, "There must be money on her side of the family, because I know Brokaw could never afford a jar of peanut butter on what he makes."

She said, "Hush, they'll hear you. Anyway, what difference does it make? You only get to eat peanut butter once in your life. Let's make the most of it."

We all gathered around as Mrs. Brokaw started spreading the golden substance on toast and passing it to her guests.

Some people asked for jelly with theirs, but a few purists like myself wanted it without any condiments.

We all "oohed" and "ahhed" as we tasted it.

"This is the real stuff," I said. "Where on earth did you find it?"

"We have a connection at the United Nations," Brokaw said. "He gets it through the diplomatic pouch."

"Did you know it takes three pounds of peanuts to make one jar of peanut butter?"

"No wonder no one can afford it," I said.

One of the guests said, "I remember when I was a kid, my mother used to keep a jar in the closet and after school we used to spread it on bread like butter."

Another one said, "I recall those days. I didn't know what I had and used to trade my peanut butter and jelly sandwiches at lunch hour for ham on rye."

"Help yourselves," Meredith Brokaw said. "We don't want it to go to waste."

We didn't need to be asked twice. I put two large teaspoonfuls on a piece of toast.

"Don't make a pig of yourself," my wife whispered. "You act as if it's the first time you ever ate peanut butter."

"It's the first time in months," I whispered back. "If they're crazy enough to serve it, why shouldn't we get our share?"

"I was once on the Queen Elizabeth and they gave you all the peanut butter you could eat."

"They always make a big deal of that on luxury liners," someone else said.

We all laughed as we kept digging into the jar.

One of the guests said, "Does anyone here remember when we used to feed peanuts to the elephants at the zoo?"

"I recall when we used to eat them at baseball games."

Mrs. Brokaw brought out more toast and jelly.

"I went to a bar when I was in college and you'll never believe this, but there was a bowl of peanuts on each table," I said. "We used to throw the shells on the floor."

By this time the jar was empty and the toast and jelly were gone.

I tried to lick the inside of the top, but my wife stopped me.

It was an evening I'll never forget. I've been to houses recently where there have been a few canapes of peanut butter mixed in with the smoked salmon sandwiches. But I've never been in a home where someone actually brought out an entire jar of it, and passed it around like it was caviar.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Experts can't name Brezhnev's successor

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — The spook's lot is not a happy one. He is expected to predict what is going to happen, and if he doesn't, his job is on the line.

Of all the government's intelligence analysts, those who try to figure out what the old men in the Kremlin are up to probably have the worst job. They are supposed to give the president reliable information on what's going on in Moscow — when even the Russian leaders don't know which end is up.

So it's understandable that our intelligence people — in the Central Intelligence Agency, the State Department and the Defense Intelligence Agency — tend to take an on-the-one-hand-this, on-the-other-hand-that line with their Kremlinological studies.

That's the way the intelligence community has handled the Reagan administration's question: Who will be Leonid Brezhnev's successor as top dog in the Soviet Union?

Our Kremlin watchers hoped that Brezhnev himself might give them some enlightenment at the recent Communist Party conference. It would have been unprecedented for him to announce his heir apparent — but they had hopes.

Brezhnev, of course, did not lay hands on a successor. In the dog-eat-dog tradition of the Soviet hierarchy, none of the "first among equals" has ever weakened his position of supremacy by naming the man he wants to succeed him. From Lenin on, they have been realistic enough to realize that the succession depends on the political skill of the contenders for power.

So the experts in the CIA, Pentagon and State Department stuck to the safe road. They didn't name a single pre-eminent candidate to fill the 74-year-old Brezhnev's boots — a course that might get them in trouble if they guessed wrong. Instead, they gave President Reagan a choice.

My associate Dale Van Atta has seen the intelligence experts' analyses, and here's what they have told the White House:

— Konstantin Chernenko is the favorite of many Kremlin handicappers — but only as a transitional figure. Chernenko, 69, is an old buddy of Brezhnev's, dating back to the early 1950s when they served together in Moldavia.

Chernenko enjoyed a skyrocket rise in the Kremlin bureaucracy, becoming a full member of the 14-man Politburo in November 1978. At that point, the CIA learned from a well-placed Soviet spy that "the elevation of Chernenko to full Politburo status means he is being groomed by Brezhnev as his successor." But the spy conditioned Chernenko's grab for the brass ring on the ability of his mentor, Brezhnev, to hang on for "several more years."

So Chernenko is the man, right? Wrong. Except for his close association with Brezhnev, he has no independent power base. "We believe Chernenko's addition to the Politburo was designed to enhance Brezhnev's own power position," the CIA reported.

— Andrei Kirilenko is another ranking Politburo member, who has known Brezhnev for 30 years. As the Communist Party's organizational secretary, he presumably has the support of many party professionals whom he has put in positions of power.

So Kirilenko is the man? Not necessarily, according to the Kremlinologists. The abrupt dismissal of his protege, Yakov Ryabov, as party secretary in early 1979 may have been "an attack on Kirilenko's position," according to a DIA cable.

Who, then? "There undoubtedly are many younger men who have become increasingly restive at their inability to advance themselves because of the gerontocracy," a State Department intelligence analysis concludes. "They know that they will rise only in part because of what they know as opposed to whom they know, for some of the most important Soviet-style political battles are fought on the patronage front."

What all this speculation means for the United States is as murky as the predictions of Brezhnev's successor. Some analysts figure it's a choice between hard-liners and soft-liners in the Kremlin. Other analysts say this is horsefeathers.

In the end, it all boils down to Winston Churchill's observation more than 40 years ago: "Russia is a riddle wrapped in a mystery inside an enigma."

POLITICAL POTPOURRI: Democratic Gov. Hugh Carey of New York has high hopes for the Democratic Party. "I need to put together a coalition that will strengthen our hand," Carey told aides at a recent meeting. But his own leadership is in some doubt. He's on the defensive after being accused of running a lousy political organization and has been indulging in a running feud with New York City's popular mayor, Ed Koch.

— Another Democratic governor, Jerry Brown of California, has admitted to supporters that he probably wouldn't succeed in a re-election bid because of his run-ins with state leaders. Instead, the onetime presidential candidate has decided to run for the Senate in 1982.

BYE-BYE, MAPS?: Among the bargains that knowledgeable people can get from Uncle Sam are the maps put out by the U.S. Geological Survey. Some of them are so detailed that residents of rural areas can actually pick out their own homes. But the maps cost about $75 million a year to produce — and sales bring in only about $7 million. The General Accounting Office and the Congressional Budget Office have suggested that the gap between cost and purchase price at least be narrowed. But one Geological Survey official pointed out that to make the map service self-supporting might make the maps unaffordable.

NICK THIMMESCH

Vincent Reed reforming education in metropolitan schools

Nick Thimmesch

WASHINGTON — One of President Reagan's best appointments is Vincent E. Reed, 53, the no-nonsense school administrator slated to fill a top position in the U.S. Department of Education.

Reed, as superintendent of District of Columbia schools, cracked down on malingering staffers and unruly pupils, and insisted on performance testing in the chaotic school system.

But after six years of dealing with the D.C. school board, a collection of half-competent, sniping showboaters, Reed quit last Dec. 31. I had followed his career closely, and judged him to be a rare person in the mad structure of D.C. government — a realistic conservative and perhaps a closet Republican as well.

Some claim that he isn't realistic in accepting the post of assistant secretary for elementary and secondary education, because candidate Reagan pledged to abolish the department. As presently constituted, Reed's position is quite important because he would administer billions in grant money.

"I can't say what will happen at the department," Reed told me, "because the plan isn't firmed up yet. There is much work to be done rewriting regulations. Whatever happens, the services will have to be rendered, and I'll be around. I am solidly committed to work on a national basis on problems of young students, and come up with ideas for urban school systems."

The quality of education in D.C. schools deteriorated fast since the '50s. The noisy school board and the overstaffed administration caused even the most blue-sky folks at foundations to despair. The board reached across the country for a savior superintendent, hired and fired eight in 12 years, and finally, in shell-shocked condition, pulled Reed out of the D.C. system in 1975.

Reed is a big man, a former football player and coach, and was an artillery officer in the Korean war. For years, he taught industrial arts and printing, became a high school principal, and then director of D.C. school security.

As a teacher, he was not afraid to grab hold of youths his own formidable size who had bullied or beaten teachers and students, and throw the louts against the wall, even sbjecting some to humiliating paddlings.

He was scarcely in office as superintendent when he noticed that some administrators absented themselves regularly to go shopping in nearby stores. "They were goofing off," Reed told me once, laughing, "so I went into the stores and brought them back to their desks. I told them I was going to run a professional system."

Without resorting to costly studies or procrastinating, Reed instituted a competency-based curriculum to stop the damaging practice of passing students who couldn't read, write or add. "The system had played with sensational-type programs, and they didn't work," he told me. "So I decided to return the system back to essential skills, to bring back the best of the past."

Despite howling from some teachers and board members, the Reed program showed reasonable progress. Reading levels in several grades improved 10 percent in three years, and math skills improved appreciably — though not to national levels.

"We had to shake some people up," Reed says, sounding like the late Gen. George S. Patton, "but we got the program started." Then, sounding more conciliatory, he adds: "The best way to carry out such a program on basics is to get the teachers to develop it — to get them into it, so they think it is theirs."

Since Reed showed quality and success, it was inevitable that the board ultimately fought him; that's the way it goes in D.C. Nobody believed Reed last December when he said he was going to quit. Suddenly, the Washington Post discovered him, wrung its hands and begged him to stay, as did the rest of the media and most of Washington.

Reed resigned. There was quick speculation that Reagan would make him the caretaker Secretary of Education. Reed received many job offers, including, he says, feelers from school boards in Chicago, Oakland and Seattle.

But Reagan wanted Terrel Bell as secretary. Interestingly, Bell wanted Reed as a right-hand man. When Reed changed his voter registration from Independent to Republican in January, he tipped his hand that he was available to the administration.

"In your life," Reed explained to me, "it's sometimes good to change your work and political registration. Politics is so lopsided in D.C., that I always felt it would be healthy to have a two-party system here."

I suspect that whether or not the Department of Education is dissolved and its function sent back to what was HEW, Vincent Reed will be working hard to make the U.S. government helpful in reforming our school system, particularly in urban areas. He is a hard man to keep down.

Astronomer looking for an 'angel'

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Dr. Harlan Smith of The University of Texas and McDonald Observatory is an astronomer looking for an "angel."

A rather strange project for a scientist, it may seem, though one necessary to satisfy his desires to look "further back into time than ever before," he says.

But Dr. Smith's angel is not one with wings and hands to "bear thee up...lest thou dash thy foot against a stone," but rather one with hands to "bear thy proposed 300-inch telescope up, lest thy scientific hopes be dashed against Mt. Fowlkes."

Dr. Smith is looking for a financial backer, you see, to fund his 10-year dream of building the world's largest telescope on a mountaintop adjacent to Mt. Locke's McDonald Observatory.

"When we build the giant telescope, we'll be able to look not just back in space, but back in time."

— Dr. Harlan Smith

AND HE IS in a hurry. He needs commitments of $2 million a year over the next three years, $33 million in all, to make his target date of 1986.

"What we're looking for now is an angel out there to help us," he explained.

His boyish-like enthusiasm and excitement was evident as he rocketedthrough Midland Tuesday, giving lectures and slide shows and discussing his longtime fantasy to study the origin of the cosmos by looking into the past.

Whenever an astronomer views distant galactic clusters, he explained, the objects are not seen as they are today, but as they were billions of years ago when the light rays were hurled across the universe toward us at 186,000 miles per second. "When we build the giant telescope, we'll be able to look not just back in space, but back in time," he noted. "We'll be able to see things...as they were close to the creation, the Big Bang, and there's a lot of evidence today for that theory."

CURRENTLY THE largest telescopes in the world are Mount Palomar's 200-inch instrument and Russia's 240-inch, but problems are evident with each, he said. Mount Palomar has been plagued by the encroachment of civilization and its lights, and a new development at the base of the California mountain virtually will destroy its light-gathering ability. The Russian scope, meanwhile, was a hybrid construction using both outdated technology and modern technology and has inherent problems in its workmanship.

However, the proposed 300-inch mirror at McDonald — which already has 107-inch and 82-inch telescopes — would be built entirely with engineering capabilities attained in recent years.

The reason such a project has not been undertaken sooner, said Dr. Smith, is because technology necessary for construction of such a mirror at a cost which makes it feasible only recently has been developed. While the U.S.S.R. spent perhaps $1 billion and 25 years on its 240-inch instrument, he said, the 300-inch telescope would cost only $33 million in 1981 dollars.

"OUR PROJECT IS involved in cost-cutting," he stressed. "The mirror will weigh 100 tons — compared to 500 tons for the Russian mirror — because we're going to make ours only four inches thick. That's the innovation, really, and it will cut the cost by a factor of eight times."

Additional innovations will further reduce expense so that it will cost only one-tenth the amount were it designed similarly to Mount Palomar's.

If the 300-inch scope becomes reality, and Dr. Smith says "we are firmly committed and intend to build it," it would be the largest single-mirror telescope ever proposed. He notes that a California group and the National Observatory each have considered multiple-mirror telescopes with greater light-gathering power, "but their projects would take longer and be more expensive."

Dr. Smith said the 300-inch scope would give McDonald Observatory "10 to 20 times as much" light-gathering ability as the present 107-inch scope built in 1968.

"I have been dreaming of a 300-inch scope for 10 years, but it only became possible one and a half years ago when the (University of Texas at Austin) regents gave $120,000 for preliminary designs," said the Harvard graduate who has co-authored a book with noted astronomer Carl Sagan. He added that full approval was given the project by the regents in December.

HOWEVER, FINANCIAL backing must come from private individuals or organizations, as is "traditional for telescopes such as this," he explained.

The University of Texas astronomer said Mt. Fowlkes and the Davis Mountains allow for optimum viewing conditions unmatched anywhere else in the United States. While land developers have recently invaded the area, he admitted, "two things have saved us (from light pollution), the lack of water and the remoteness of the region."

While the 96-inch space telescope planned for launch into orbit in 1985 will have far greater resolving capabilities than any giant earth-based instrument, he noted, it will not have the light-gathering ability a 300-inch mirror would. This means, he explained, it will still be up to telescopes such as that proposed on 6,600-ft. Mt. Fowlkes to study the nature of faint, distant objects through spectroscopy and other means.

While admitting the 1986 target date is "ambitious," Dr. Smith's optimism is evident. "We've established it's entirely feasible...technologically and monetarily," he said. "Given the resources, we will do it."

IN A 40-MINUTE lecture at Trinity School laced with his visions of mankind's future, Dr. Smith discussed the American space program and the "incredible opportunities space offers the human race." He was often critical of the government's slashing of NASA's budget, and said because of it the space shuttle, scheduled for initial flight in April, will have inherent dangers.

"We've never lost an astronaut in space, but I can tragically predict we will lose astronauts in the space shuttle," he said bluntly. "Budget cuts...have done away with...fail-safe systems. But I would go on it if I could."

Dr. Smith noted that the shuttle will mark the world's "first firing of a non-symmetrical rocket" and if any one of thousands of systems fail to operate properly the spacecraft will meet a fiery death.

"The aerodynamic engineers say it flies with the grace of a brick," he noted. "It's going to be an exciting flight, but most of us think it's going to work."

With all the visionary insight of an apocalyptist, Dr. Smith discussed the role of space in mankind's future. "Some pessimists say the human race is destroying itself and has no future," he said. "I think that's basically wrong because (these persons) are looking down. They have medieval views that the earth is the only material body in the universe.

"But the resources out there in space are incredible. The frontier is there — it's upstairs. Space is the place where the human frontier, the human future, lies."

One can tell by the firmness in his voice, the lines at his eyes, that he truly believes what he says, that man will be born again in space to find his destiny among worlds unknown and worlds created by his own design.

But for now, he would settle on finding just one angel out there to help him.

Siljander favored to win Stockman seat

BENTON HARBOR, Mich. (AP) — State Rep. Mark Siljander has won the Republican nomination — and the role of favorite — in the race for the congressional seat given up by federal Budget Director David Stockman.

Michigan's 4th District is conservative and heavily Republican, and Cass County Commissioner Johnie Rodebush, who won the Democratic nomination Tuesday, said he would rely on crossover votes in the April 21 election.

Siljander held a 17,807-to-16,982 edge over St. Joseph tax attorney John Globensky, who had Stockman's endorsement.

Rodebush defeated Jimmie Burke, a General Motors Corp. worker from Mendon, 1,974 votes to 1,040.

Siljander, 29, of Three Rivers, had the support, but not the official endorsement, of Michigan's Moral Majority. But Siljander is "sick of talking about that" and noted that the Moral Majority had not been active in the 4th District, although he admitted it has "an influence in the state."

Globensky said he would support Siljander.

Rodebush said he has a chance to win and will count heavily on Republican crossover votes and votes "from working people."

Maureen didn't see Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's daughter, Maureen, came to Washington for three days this week, but she didn't stay at the White House. She didn't see her father, either.

"I'll see him another time," Ms. Reagan said.

Ms. Reagan, who stayed at the DuPont Plaza Hotel, was in town to give a speech and said she never considered staying at the White House just a few blocks away.

"It never even came up," she said Tuesday night. "I had business meetings, and it's easier to get in and out of a hotel than in and out of the White House."

She said she did, however, talk with her father twice by telephone Tuesday.

Women's role in combat debated

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's defense of a military draft that exempts women is entwined with the related issue of whether women draftees would be sent into combat.

In an hour of Supreme Court debate Tuesday, neither the government nor the challengers to a male-only draft could avoid the overall question of women in combat.

Zeroing in on the issue, Justice John Paul Stevens challenged Solicitor General Wade H. McCree, Jr., who was trying to defend the exclusion of women from draft registration on grounds that Congress barred them from combat roles.

"Your entire argument assumes the constitutionality of that decision," Stevens suggested.

"It does," McCree admitted, "but that statute is not under attack."

And Philadelphia lawyer Donald L. Weinberg, arguing that it was unconstitutional to register and draft men and not women, avoided the question of whether women also should be required to assume combat roles.

"Registering women does not dictate the number of women to be drafted or their roles," Weinberg said.

Robert Goldberg of Oakdale, Calif., one of a group of men who challenged the male-only draft, commented in an interview after the arguments that "there may come a time when women ... will be allowed to fight in combat."

But Goldberg, a physician, said he would not be the one to bring such a lawsuit.

Answering a series of questions, Goldberg said, "If I have to register for the draft, then my wife should also. Again, if we have to draft people into combat situations, then those who are qualified, if that includes my wife, then she might be at jeopardy."

The Supreme Court's decision may well rest on legal questions less emotional than whether women should be shot at along with men.

McCree argued that since the Constitution gives Congress authority to raise an army, the courts must give great deference to Congress' choice of a method to raise that army.

McCree said that means the government only has to show that excluding women from the draft is "rationally related" to the objective of having an effective army.

Weinberg, however, argued that because the all-male draft discriminates against men, the court should not approve it without applying a tougher test: whether it is "substantially related" to the purpose of military defense.

Fisher to be State spokesman

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. is expected to name Time magazine correspondent Dean Fisher the State Department's official spokesman soon, department sources say.

Fisher would replace William Dyess, a career diplomat who has held the job on an acting basis since Haig took office.

The sources said the replacement of Dyess reflects no dissatisfaction with his performance, but rather Haig's intention from the beginning to have his own selection in the post.

A 14½-inch long, 2-pound 6-ounce baby born 14 weeks premature rests on an incubator waterbed at a Chicago hospital. A Chicago waterbed firm Tuesday announced it is donated 200 of the matresses for use with high-risk infants.

Waterbeds help premature babies

CHICAGO (AP) — Infants who emerge prematurely from the womb have fewer problems if placed on tiny waterbeds, doctors say, and 24 area hospitals will be outfitting their incubators accordingly in an effort make such babies more at home in their new environments.

Incubator waterbeds help simulate the floating environment of the womb. High-risk babies placed on the gently rocking mattresses grow faster and have fewer breathing problems than those placed on conventional beds, says Dr. Henry Mangurten, director of the newborn intensive-care unit at Lutheran General Hospital in Park Ridge.

"Waterbeds also keep pressure of critica joints that stick out in infants born eight- to 12-weeks prematurely," he said.

A Chicago company, Peppers Waterbeds, is making 200 of the incubator waterbeds and donating them to the Chicago-area hospitals.

Mangurten said he has been experimenting with a dozen waterbeds in his 30-incubator unit for two months and plans to do a more detailed study.

"We've found that the beds help premature babies with irregular breathing and heartbeats," said Mangurten. "The incidence of these episodes goes down significantly — they are fewer and less severe."

A study at Georgetown University Medical School indicated premature infants gained as much as 25 percent more weight and had greater head growth when cared for on waterbeds.

"They seem to grow as if they were still back in the womb," said Dr. Lloyd I. Kramer, who conducted the study. "We also found they could be handled a lot easier and rolled from side to side. And they often curl up in the fetal position, which was different from those on firm mattresses."

Some doctors say waterbeds are only helpful for premature babies. They say that infants who are mature enough to be taken home need a firm mattress to help them learn their first basic movements.

Transplant recipient remains in high spirits

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Heart-lung transplant recipient Mary Gohlke remains in high spirits despite a setback that forced doctors to place her on a respirator, hospital officials say.

Stanford University Medical Center spokeswoman Mary Campbell said Mrs. Gohlke, 45, was placed on a respirator Monday after her body showed signs of rejecting her new organs for the first time since her March 9 operation. She also is receiving increased levels of two drugs that reduce the body's tendency to attack foreign tissue.

Doctor discusses cancer and sex

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — No one denies that cancer patients need love, but doctors too often ignore the importance of sex during cancer treatment, a specialist says.

Dr. Leonard R. Derogatis, a psychologist at Johns Hopkins University Medical School, said Tuesday that sexual problems among cancer patients are widespread and far from trivial.

"The magnitude of the problem is considerable," Derogatis told the American Cancer Society's annual science writers' seminar. "Myths and convenient rationalizations about illness and sexuality abound."

But "sex is important whether you are sick or not," he said.

Derogatis said doctors, family members and even patients often give the patient's sexual functioning a low priority during cancer treatment. Doctors, he said, frequently are not trained to discuss sex with their patients and concentrate instead on fighting the disease.

But, Derogatis said, sex counseling during the treatment period is essential because patients often are depressed and lose their sex drive.

He said surgical treatments can be mutilating and other therapy can cause loss of weight and hair, giving patients a negative image of their bodies.

"If the patient feels repulsive or unattractive physically, there is little chance he or she will be effectively functional in sexual relations," Derogatis said.

He also said lovers may be wary of "inflicting" sex on the patient, although the patient is interested in sex. In addition, partners sometimes have to contend with the myth that cancer is contagious, which it is not, and fear sex with a "diseased" person, he said.

Derogatis said part of any cancer treatment plan should include an effort to find out the patient's sexual status and explain any sexual changes the patient might encounter. He said a sex counselor should be on the staff of every treatment center.

"The fundamental step we must take is to accept sexuality as an inherent and important aspect of being human," he said.

Two charged with theft of teeth from cadavers

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (AP) — Two young men, one a former dental student, have been indicted on charges of stealing gold teeth and fillings from medical school cadavers.

Thomas F. DeBlasio, 23, of Maywood, and Robert A. Titone, 23, of Burlington, were indicted Tuesday by a Middlesex County grand jury on charges of burglary and theft.

The charges stemmed from a Nov. 12, 1980, incident in which about $500 worth of gold teeth and fillings allegedly were taken from corpses used by the College of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey.

Titone was a dental student at the Newark campus of the college, but has since left the school, said Ron Reisman, spokesman for the state medical school.

The Newspaper BIBLE

OMENS, PORTENTS AND SIGNSWATCH OUT!

"There will be strange events in the skieswarnings, evil omens and portents in the sun, moon and stars; and down here on earth the nations will be in turmoil, perplexed by the roaring seas and strange tides. The courage of many people will falter because of the fearful fate they see coming upon the earth, for the stability of the very heavens will be broken up.

"Then the peoples of the earth shall see Me, the Man from Heaven, coming in a cloud with power and great glory. So when all these things begin to happen, stand straight and look up! For your salvation is near."

Then He gave them this illustration: "Notice the fig tree, or any other tree. When the leaves come out, you know without being told that summer is near. In the same way, when you see the events taking place that I've described you can be just as sure that the Kingdom of God is near.

"I solemnly declare to you that when these things happen, the end of this age has come. And though all heaven and earth shall pass away, yet My words remain forever true.

"Watch out! Don't let My sudden coming catch you unawares; don't let Me find you living in careless ease, carousing and drinking, and occupied with problems of this life, like all the rest of the world. Keep a constant watch. And pray that if possible you may arrive in My presence without having to experience these horrors."

Every day Jesus went to the Temple to teach, and the crowds began gathering early in the morning to hear Him. And each evening He returned to spend the night on the Mount of Olives.

Repeal of Blue Law before House committee

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas Blue Laws were praised for upholding the moral laws of God and blasted for forcing sales clerks to become accidental crooks in testimony before a House committee.

Almost two-dozen witnesses signed up to testify before the House Committee on Business and Industry on a pair of bills to repeal the 20-year-old law that prohibits Saturday and Sunday sales of 46 different kinds of merchandise.

Chairman Chris Semos, D-Dallas, predicted the committee would eventually report at least one of the bills for floor debate.

One of Monday night's witnesses favoring repeal was Elizabeth Moseley of Allen, a small town north of Dallas where she owns four small supermarkets. She said it is difficult for her clerks to keep track of which items may be sold on both days of the weekend.

"I feel like a crook every Monday morning because I know that every Sunday, somebody in one of my supermarkets has sold something she was not supposed to sell," Mrs. Moseley said.

But Kevin Reed of Dallas said the blue laws help uphold the Ten Commandments, particularly the fourth one requiring observance of the Sabbath.

"I would think this would remind the Legislature that the moral law of God is the foundation of all law and order," said Reed, an Orthodox Presbyterian.

"Repeal of the blue law would display a design to rebel against God's word," he said, pointing to California — which has no blue law — as an example.

"I can detect the effect of this on the moral fiber of the community. Do we want a moral climate like that of California?" he asked.

State District Judge Dee Brown Walker of Dallas said courts have found Texas' blue law constitutional but he thinks it should be repealed.

"The law cannot be enforced properly. ... The district attorney doesn't have enough money to go out and keep tabs on all the stores," Walker said.

Rep. Doyle Willis, D-Fort Worth, sponsor of one of the bills, said he was a co-sponsor of the blue law when it was passed in 1961 because he believed it was a religious issue.

"I don't believe that any more," and people in his church "are violently against this law," he said.

Jack Welch, attorney for the Texas Retailers Federation — which includes Sears, J.C. Penney, Sanger-Harris and other major chains, he said — testified the blue law enables department stores and other merchants to give their employees Sundays off to be with their families.

Colorado Senate panel kills bill on creationism

DENVER (AP) — A Colorado Senate committee, saying that curriculum decisions should rest with local school boards, voted Tuesday to kill a bill that would have required "balanced" instruction of evolution and creationism theories.

The vote came after an hour of testimony from supporters and opponents who debated the scientific merits and shortcomings of the bill. However, the committee focused its decision on a clause in Colorado's Constitution which gives school boards the full responsibility for determining course topics and textbooks.

Among those voting against the bill was Sen. John Beno, D-Pueblo, a Catholic priest, who said he did not believe that the theory of evolution was incompatible with the Christian faith.

"I believe the Bible to be the inspired word of God, and I believe God told us he did create," said Beno. "But I do not believe he told us how he created."

The bill was sponsored by conservative Sen. Sam Zakhem, R-Denver, and two of the three witnesses testifying for his bill were affiliated with the California-based Institute for Creation Research. They contended that an evolution-only science curriculum was biased and unconstitutional because it infringed on some students' religious beliefs.

Evolutionary theory holds that the earth is billions of years old and that present life forms evolved gradually. So-called scientific creationism holds that the earth is only several thousand years old and that life came into being suddenly.

Richard Bliss, director of science for the institute, said students would become better decision-makers if taught both concepts of the origin of man, and he said exclusive reliance on evolution was "a pedogogical crime."

Wendell Bird, an attorney affiliated with Bliss' organization, termed the hearing on Zakhem's bill "a Scopes trial in reverse" — referring to the famous Tennessee trial in the 1920s.

Jury still out in Burnett libel trial

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Carol Burnett says the anticipation is "like waiting in the dentist's chair" or "waiting to have my children" as the jury deliberated a verdict in her libel suit against the National Enquirer

The jury of six women and five men spent six hours behind closed doors in their first full day of deliberations Tuesday without reaching a verdict. Deliberations resumed today at 9 a.m. PDT, and as usual the actress was present.

Asked if she thought a verdict would be reached today, she said "I hope it is."

She said the anticipation is "like waiting to have my children."

But Enquirer lawyer William Masterson said, "It's not like having a baby. It's like waiting for my draft notice."

Although she has a room at a nearby hotel, the entertainer said she is spending her time "walking around a lot" in the downtown civic center area and keeping in touch with her attorneys by phone.

"It's about the same as it has been waiting for this case to come to court for five years — anticipation," she said. "It's like waiting in the dentist's chair."

Asked at one point how she was passing the time, she said lightheartedly, "Praying."

The panel was deciding whether Miss Burnett was libeled by a 1976 National Enquirer gossip-column item that accused her of boisterous behavior at a posh Washington, D.C., restaurant.

The article, which ultimately was retracted as false, said Miss Burnett had argued loudly with then-Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and had spilled wine on another diner.

Jurors were asked to determine if the Enquirer acted with a "reckless or knowing disregard for the truth" when it published the story and, if so, whether Miss Burnett is entitled to damages.

Miss Burnett reiterated her contention that win or lose, she already has won a moral victory.

"What we have done is put a very reasonable doubt in the public's mind about what the Enquirer does," she told reporters.

She said one major triumph was an early ruling by the judge that the Enquirer is a magazine and not a newspaper — a decision that removed the tabloid's protection from libel even if it retracted a story.

Miss Burnett's libel suit has become a symbol for a growing roster of Hollywood celebrities who have joined her in suing the Enquirer.

Iran claims territory taken

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran today claimed its forces punched 2½ miles into Iraqi territory and captured an observation post, the first such ground-taking incursion in the seven month slugfest between the two Persian Gulf oil giants.

Pars news agency war bulletins from Tehran said the cross-border thrust at the northern end of the 300-mile war front and another successful push against Iraqi forces midway along the battleline prompted massive retaliatory raids by Iraqi missiles and bombers.

The news agency said the Iraqi strikes were aimed at population centers and killed eight civilians and wounded many others.

According to Pars, revolutionary guardsmen Tuesday hoisted the Iranian flag over over the captured Koukalan observation post about 170 miles northeast of Baghdad.

League of Women Voters plan city candidate forum

All candidates in the April 4 citywide election have been invited to participate in the forum, which should end about 9:30 p.m.

On the ballot are three places for City Council, two for the Midland Independent School District board of trustees and three for the Midland Memorial Hospital board.

Biggs planning fight for return to Brazilian asylum

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (AP) — The man who says he is Great Train Robber Ronald Biggs has begun a legal fight to return to asylum in Brazil as the British government prepares to ask for his extradition.

The 51-year-old Briton arrested on a yacht off Barbados Monday hired two lawyers, American David Neufeld and former Barbados Attorney General Ezra Alleyne, to fight his removal to the country where nearly 29 years of a prison sentence awaits him.

The lawyers filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus late Tuesday. They were granted a hearing Thursday to test the legality of Biggs' detention.

At Scotland Yard, headquarters of the London police force, officials awaited the results of fingerprint tests by the Barbados police to make the identification of Biggs official. The fugitive's prints were flown to the Caribbean Tuesday, and extradition papers were drawn up. They were to be filed as soon as the identification was confirmed.

In the meantime, Barbados authorities were holding the man who claimed to be Biggs only on grounds that he lacked a passport. However, photographs in British newspapers left little or no doubt that the man being held was the man who escaped from prison in 1965. He had served only 15 months of a 30-year sentence for his part in the Great Train Robbery of $7.2 million from the London-Glasgow mail train in 1963.

The Barbados coast guard took Biggs from a drifting yacht with engine trouble where he was guarded by three former British soldiers who worked for a British security firm and kidnapped him from a restaurant in Rio de Janeiro. One of the men said they did the kidnapping to get publicity for their firm; their employer said the firm had been paid for the abduction.

"We have not done it for any reward. ... It is just a publicity thing to promote our company."

Biggs was carried feet first out of Rio restaurant on March 16. The trio said they threw him into a van, drove to an airport, flew 2,000 miles north to Belem and boarding the chartered yacht.

Barbados police said Biggs told them he wants to return to Brazil, where because he is the father of a Brazilian child he is exempt from extradition.

Barbados, a former British colony, has no extradition treaty with Brazil but does have one with Britain.

Police said they released five men found on the yacht, including the three former British soliders and two crew members, after questioning them.

John McKillop, who allegedly masterminded the kidnapping and arrived in Barbados Sunday, was also questioned by police. McKillop, who also uses the name John Miller, told reporters he was the head of a firm named Single Point Security Ltd., which he said provides security to possible targets of terrorists.

McKillop in a British television interview Tuesday night said his firm was hired to take Biggs to a "country which would then be sympathetic to Britain's pleas for extradition." He said he and his men had "already been paid" but refused to say by whom.

Review board says that mental tests are illegal

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — A board that reviews research conducted on human beings claims illegal psychological tests are performed on first-year medical students at Texas Tech Univesity, a Lubbock newspaper reported today.

In a copyright story, the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal said Bill Dommell, with the National Intitute of Health, confirmed the accusations.

Dommell, assistant director of the Office of Protection from Research Risks, told the newspaper an investigation into the claim was prompted by a letter from the Review Board for the Protection of Human Subjects, a division of the university's Health Sciences Center.

The letter, dated March 17, alleges that for the past three years psychological tests were given to freshman medical school students who were not informed that they did not have to take them. The students, the letter claims, were told only that the results would be kept confidential.

Language telling the students that the tests are voluntary have been removed from the test forms, a violation of human research regulations, the letter contends.

Dr. Robert O'Reilly, Director of Educational Research, Evaluation and Development at the medical school, said "we make it very clear that it (taking the tests) is voluntary."

"The way we present the testing program to students each year is both orally and with a consent form. We make it very clear that it's voluntary — there's no mistaking that."

The tests, which school officials say are used to draw up a profile of students who want to enter medical school, also may be used to target students who enter general practice.

Dr. George Tyner, dean of the medical school, says the information gathered from such tests could be "a contribution to medical education because no medical keeps these kinds of data."

He said the information could be helpful to the admissions council and help the school admit students who want to enter general practice.

O'Reilly said the test scores are coded to protect the students' identity, but said students who ask for their test results can receive them.

He said that the tests are not under the jurisdiction of the review board, but are part of the school's normal academic process

Council OKs air park operation

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Competition told the Midland City Council on Tuesday they didn't want to see Al McGuire go into business with his new idea of self-service gas and cheaper hangars for airplanes. But on the second go-around before the council, McGuire got the thumbs-up sign.

The council also heard explanations from fixed base operators at Midland Air Park and Midland Regional Airport as to why they charge up to 20 cents a gallon more for airplane fuel than do surrounding airports.

McGuire had asked the council about a month ago to approve his site at Air Park for constructing T-hangars and operating self-service gas pumps. This would put him in competition with Basin Aviation, which is the only FBO at the Air Park.

The council said they were in favor of his concept, but directed McGuire to find another site at Air Park. On Tuesday he was back with another site and a more complete plan for three hangars and two T-sheds.

THREE ENCLOSED hangars will range from small to large, he explained. The self-service pumps will involve inserting a card into the pump and the holder receiving a bill at the end of each month. Until the cards can be issued, he said, a man will be at the pumps to instruct customers.

Buildings and asphalting will cost about $700,000. The price will be less if the amount of dirt work can be reduced. If so, the proposed rents will be dropped, McGuire said. Plans call for $100 a month rent in the sheds, $195 in the small hangar, $265 in the medium and $550 in the large.

Councilman Carroll Thomas was dubious about the self-service gas pumps, thinking they might harm services offered by other fixed base operators. "More people will use the self-service and the FBOs may have to drop some of their services. That may not be in the best interests of the city."

But Councilman Tom Sloan countered that "some people aren't going to fill up their planes themselves, especially the bigger planes. How often do you see someone filling up their Rolls Royce at a self-service pump? You're suppressing competition if you don't approve it."

Then the council jumped into the reason why McGuire was wanting to begin his FBO service — complaints that gasoline prices charged by Midland FBOs are far higher than can be obtained in other cities.

ONE MAN TOLD the council he keeps his plane parked at Schleymeyer Field in Odessa because there is no hangar space at Midland and "the highest prices I ever paid for gasoline were in Midland."

Carl Beach has hangared his plane at Basin Aviation for three years, he recounted. "Day in, day out, Midland is 20 cents a gallon higher. I know of 50 to 100 pilots who won't fill up here in Midland, including corporate pilots who have instructions not to fill up here."

Councilman Gordon Marcum II added that he also knows of several corporate pilots who are instructed to fill up the planes elsewhere. "Why are we getting such a bad reputation?"

"A lot of things go into the cost of fuel," explained Sid Green with Aquila. These include cost of fuel, cost of freight and location of the city, and costs of handling it," he said. Midland is farther from the distributor than San Angelo, Abilene or Lubbock, and thus a higher freight cost.

And Midland isn't that much out of line in its prices, he contended. Green's recent survey showed Midland to charge $1.86 a gallon while Dallas sold it for $1.80 to $1.86 and Oklahoma City had it for $1.89.

Beach contested those prices. On a day that he checked prices, he was quoted $1.86 at Abilene, $1.70 at Harold Vroman's place south of Midland, $1.90 at Lubbock and $1.83 at San Angelo. At the same time, Midland FBOs were charging from $2.03 to $2.09 a gallon, he claimed.

LOCAL FBOs ALSO cited higher labor costs which must be figured into the cost of gasoline. Some cities have different standards for FBOs, they said. Midland, for instance, gets 5 cents on every gallon sold, while some other cities don't have that extra amount.

After hearing complaints that the FBOs may lose too much business with McGuire's cheaper self-service gas, Mayor G. Thane Akins replied, "And how many people do you force out of flying because they can't afford the services? I admit I have a bias in this — I'm one of those people."

In related airport items, the council approved deferring dates that Jet East and Tiger Charter begin paying ground rent and rejected a request to sell a piece of land in the Airport Industrial Park to State Farm Insurance.

On a request by Erna Hall for a specific use permit to have a day care center in her home at 1609 W. Holloway Ave, the council compromised after hearing she had been running the center for nine years. Two residents had voiced opposition to her request to keep 12 children.

Instead, they gave her a permit to keep the six children she now has during the day and six in the early evening.

Jack Hightower asked the council for a zone change on a tract of property near downtown from O-1, office, to C-1, central area district, and another tract to O-2, office. But the council resisted going all the way to C-1, and handed out O-2 for both tracts. This allows offices up to six stories.

HIGHTOWER TOLD the council that the Planning and Zoning Commission took a straw vote and it showed they were in favor of looking at a zone change to C-1 for land up to the corner of A Street and Louisiana Avenue.

The council decided to start the bid process over on two pieces of land, one involving a 2.5-acre tract at the intersection of A Street and Wadley Avenue. The advertisement this time will list the minimums, the council decided.

The panel also approved a 6 percent across-the-board raise for all city employees. City Manager James Brown explained the last cost-of-living raise was 7 percent given last October. But enough had been set aside for a second raise, and the council decided April 1 would be the best time for it to begin.

Parking meters near the downtown area will need 25 cents to be operated as the council approved upping the price from 10 cents to allow more turnover of cars. And Thomas suggested the council look at making some meters around the County Courthouse 50 cents an hour.

"SOME PEOPLE have said they would be willing to pay that if they could just find a place to park while they do business," he remarked.

The staff was instructed by the council to begin researching the need for one-way streets on Illinois-Texas, Loraine-Colorado and Michigan-Louisiana.

Gordon "Rusty" Arnold was selected as the architect to complete an unfinished meeting room in Midland Center. Cost of the work should be about $36,000.

And the closed section of Garfield Street near Midland College should be open in about two weeks, the council was told. The flooring should be poured this week, and the final paving completed next week.

Rita Jenrette says her career probably would be different

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Rita Jenrette says she probably would be an administration insider these days if she hadn't married former South Carolina Rep. John Jenrette.

At a news conference Monday called to promote her new book, "My Capitol Secrets," Mrs. Jenrette said she "would probably be at the White House now if I had not married him."

She was working for the Republican National Committee when the Jenrette courtship began.

Jenrette was convicted last October of bribery and conspiracy in the Abscam case. He lost his seat in the House of Representatives in November and was served with divorce papers in February.

Mrs. Jenrette has been telling her story since December — in newspapers, in Playboy along with semi-nude photographs and now in her Bantam paperback.

As she autographed copies of her book and her magazine layout after the news conference, police said they stopped one man trying to get in with a lemon pie.

What's breaking up that old mob?

By LEE LINDER
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Bullets and bombs have sent a string of reputed mob bosses and lieutenants to early graves in a violent, year-long reorganization of organized crime here.

The latest target was Philip "Chicken Man" Testa, 56, torn apart when a bomb loaded with inch-long finishing nails and shotgun pellets blew out the four-foot concrete-and-brick front of his South Philadelphia home before dawn on March 15.

"He looked like he went through a giant paper shredder," a police officer said.

Testa, distinguished by a bulbous nose that sat like a fat strawberry on a pock-marked face, was the seventh victim of persons unknown since the local alleged godfather of them all, Angelo Bruno, 69, was blown away by a shotgun blast as he sat in a parked car outside his home March 21, 1980.

THAT FIRST assassination, still unsolved, triggered a year of blood and mob vengeance that still has prosecuting crime-busters puzzling over a new question from an old tune: "What's breaking up that old gang of mine?"

Has war erupted between the New York and Philadelphia crime families for control of the lush casino territory in Atlantic City, N.J.?

Is there a drug connection, with characters from the motorcycle scene demanding a piece of the heroin-speed-cocaine action?

Was the Testa killing, unusually violent for a typical mob hit, a by-product of Irish Republican Army vengeance?

Theories on the vicious executions keep cropping up.

G. Michael Brown, director of the New Jersey Division of Gaming Enforcement, is certain this violent year is just part of the struggle to take over crime-related interests in casino businesses.

"These murders show that the mob considers Atlantic City worth fighting over," Brown said. "But they also demonstrate no faction has control."

"The wonderful thing about organized crime work is you can say almost anything," George Parry, chief of the Philadelphia district attorney's organized crime section, said.

AN FBI source, who earlier this year helped in an investigation that led to Testa's indictment with nine pals on federal racketeering and illegal gambling charges, and who asked not to be identified, was just as candid: "We just don't know what is going on yet."

Except they know, of course, about the executions that followed Bruno's:

—April 18: Two Bruno lieutenants in North Jersey, Antonio "Tony Bananas" Caponigro, 67, and his brother-in-law, Alfred Salerno, 64, were found in the trunks of two abandoned cars, their bodies stabbed and riddled with bullets.

Caponigro allegedly controlled the waterfront rackets for "the family" while Salerno acted as his bodyguard. Shredded $20 bills were stuffed in Caponigro's body openings, a vulgar mob sign that he was too greedy.

—Sept. 19: Bruno's cousin, John "Johnny Keys" Simone, 69, allegedly in charge of the gang's numbers racket, was shot and killed. He wore an expensive suit but no shoes.

—OCT. 30: Frank Sindone, 52, a Bruno associate reportedly in charge of loansharking, was shot twice in the head. His blanket-wrapped body was stuffed in garbage bags and dumped in an alley.

—Dec. 16: Roofers leader John McCullough, 60, boss of the city's toughest construction union and a close Bruno friend, was shot six times in the kitchen of his home by two men who gained easy entrance by carrying Christmas flowers.

And now Testa, Bruno's reported hand-picked heir, whom some investigators say was locked in a power struggle with McCullough and may have ordered the labor leader's assassination to protect the lucrative Atlantic City turf.

One investigator said if IRA sympathizers believed Testa had McCullough wiped out, they would use their own brand of swift justice "by leaving a bomb at Testa's doorstep."

"The pipe bomb is the hallmark in the IRA arsenal," said the source, who was quoted anonymously in the Philadelphia Bulletin. "McCullough supported the IRA ideologically and financially. He was loved and respected by known IRA operatives in this city. This is where the heat of the investigation is centered right now.

"THE MOB traditionally doesn't jeopardize other people if they're hell-bent on murdering somebody. This bomb here could have blown up gas lines and killed anyone passing the house when the thing went off."

There is also a theory that supposedly supports the New York connection. Testa, according to some police sources, reportedly arranged Bruno's death because Bruno was not aggressive enough in peddling drugs and seeking power in Atlantic City. Then one-by-one he eliminated those who might have retaliated.

Leadership award presented

Sophomore Shawn McCarter, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Dale McCarter, has been chosen as the 1980-81 recipient of the Hugh O'Brien Leadership Award at Midland High School. He was chosen for the outstanding leadership potential he has demonstrated in school and community activities.

McCarter will attend the Texas Leadership seminar in Dallas Friday through Sunday with 150 other sophomores from throughout Texas.

Theme of the seminar is "America's Incentive System." Many dynamic leaders from the fields of business, education, government and other professions have volunteered to conduct programs on the many aspects of the changing world and the challenges which will confront future leaders. During this seminar, one boy and one girl will be chosen to represent Texas at the Foundation's International Leadership Seminar to be held this summer.

In the belief that America's greatest resource is its youth, actor Hugh O'Brian established the Foundation in 1958. Its purpose is to seek out, recognize and reward leadership potential among high school sophomores. The foundation conducts annual leadership seminars at the state and international level on the economic system, government, science and business attended by these teenagers and by top leaders in these fields.

The seminar is being presented in cooperation with the Dallas Jaycees.

DEAR ABBY

Mother-in-laws company; she may be a crowd

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: WAITING IN WASHINGTON writes to say that her husband's 80-year-old mother has come to live with them. She's financially secure and draws a nice Social Security check. There are four teenagers at home and they are barely making ends meet. Grandma has been paying $150 a month, but daughter-in-law added up all the housekeeping expenses and divided them by the number of people who live there, which comes to $275 each.

WAITING asks you (and your readers) what Grandma's fair share should be. I say at today's prices $275 is a bargain for room and board. Tell Grandma to pay up or pack up! — OREM, UTAH

DEAR WAITING: The woman who thinks $150 a month is sufficient is living in a dream world. My mother pays a nursing home in Spokane $1,260 for a 30-day month, and $1,301.50 for a 31-day month! Sign this ... REAL WORLD

DEAR WAITING: The mother-in-law should pay $300 a month. She sounds like a selfish old witch who whines, "You'll get it all when I die." Then she leaves everything to a home for stray cats. — TIRED OF FREELOADERS, BOZEMAN, MONT.

DEAR WAITING: In my community, a modest nursing home is $600 a month. Husband's mother should keep her mouth shut, pay the $275 and be thankful her family doesn't just put her in a home and forget about her. — RHODE ISLAND READER

DEAR ABBY: I am 88 and live with my daughter and her family. I give them my entire Social Security check ($370.70 a month), which I think is fair. I have a small additional income for expenses, so I manage. I'm treated with kindness and respect. I'm unable to help with the housework, but I do care for myself. Hope this helps. — ANCHORAGE, ALASKA

DEAR WAITING: You are giving your children a great example to follow by quibbling about how much your mother-in-law OWES you because you have to set the thermostat up a little higher. I pity you when your time comes. Your children will thumb their noses at you and say, "Pay up, Mom. You owe us!"

Both my in-laws, who are 85 and 90, are living with us. One is blind and the other is senile. Caring for them is not a burden. I consider it a privilege. — NOT COMPLAINING

DEAR ABBY: I have a message for WAITING. My 73-year-old aunt checked into an old ladies' home. They told her she could expect to live another 12 years, so they wanted $55,000 in advance. She paid it, moved in and died a year later. No refund. (P.S. All her personal belongings "disappeared.") — G. B. IN WOOSTER, OHIO

DEAR WAITING: There is no way a family can be adequately compensated for the inconvenience of bringing in a third generation, so the mother-in-law should keep only as much as she needs to survive, and the rest should be thrown into the family pot. She should do all she can to show her appreciation for having been rescued from life in a nursing home. — SAN MATEO, CALIF.

DEAR WAITING: Teen-agers surely eat more than a little old lady in her 80s. Do your children pay you $275 a month for their room and board? You say, "But they are my CHILDREN." Well, our parents, when they grow old, become our "children," as we were once theirs. — AGHAST IN ASHVILLE

DEAR WAITING: If you are smart, you will play a waiting game. The less mother spends now, the more she will leave for the loving family who took care of her during her declining years. — ALSO WAITING (IN FLORIDA)

DEAR WAITING: I am almost 80 and hope I never have to live with a relative. However, should that ever happen, whoever looks after me and gives me a home may have my whole darned Social Security check. Mine is $399.50. And where can you buy total care for that amount? — NOT THERE YET

For prostitutes, safe streets?

By ELAINE SMYTH
Copley News Service

She is a vocal advocate for making the world's oldest profession respectable.

She talks like an expert on the subject, and she is.

She is Margo St. James of San Francisco, ex-hooker and co-director with Priscilla Alexander of the National Task Force on Prostitution.

Formerly called COYOTE (Call Off Your Old Tired Ethics), the organization, with an international mailing list of 30,000 persons, is dedicated to seeking the decriminalization of prostitution both in the United States and around the globe. An estimated 3 percent of the members are prostitutes.

And if prostitution hasn't yet gained the desired respectability its proponents desire, St. James' organization has.

The task force has joined hands with the National Organization for Women (NOW) in NOW's mutual efforts to seek decriminalization of prostitution. And St. James, in a telephone interview from her San Francisco home-office, said her group also is working through the United Nations seeking the worldwide elimination of discrimination against women, including those whose income is derived largely from bedroom activities with the opposite sex.

Through the task force's lobbying efforts over the past seven years it has managed, in prostitution cases, to get favorable response to pre-trial diversion — in which first offenders are not jailed but dealt with outside the criminal justice system.

Even so, St. James remains bitter over treatment of prostitutes. "Although prostitution is a misdemeanor, they (authorities) treat it like a felony," she said.

St. James hopes President Reagan, who favors deregulation, will repeal all of the prohibitions on the books — including prostitution, marijuana and drugs.

"I would rather see heroin and coke and all that stuff legalized because about 40 percent of your crime is drug-related. Maybe more than that. We don't know how many people who are using these drugs are going out and killing," St. James said. "And in those countries that have regulated rather than intervened, they don't have the crime problem."

St. James, 43, points with irony to this country where prostitution is illegal and, yet, the pornography market goes virtually unchecked.

By allowing young women 18 or older to work in massage parlors and in peep shows, which she calls "modern-day recruitment centers for prostitution," St. James said America is now seeing younger prostitutes than in the past.

"The average age of prostitutes in legalized countries is 25. In the United States it is 19," she said.

St. James, married at age 17 and divorced at 20, has a grown son and a 2-year-old grandson. She said she worked as a prostitute for a few years in the '60s in the San Francisco area.

"In 1962 I was convicted but I did not serve time. ... The judge found me guilty because I knew the meaning of the word 'trick.' ... They gave me probation and sentenced me to visit a shrink once a week. I went to law shool for two years and won a reversal from the appellate court two years later."

St. James contends that first encounter was a setup and she neither had sex with the police officer nor did she take any money from him.

"I'm one of the few people who appealed a prostitution conviction. In this country it's a very debilitating thing.

"It's like the trauma of being raped ... your privacy is totally violated and you're locked up like an animal and you didn't do anything. And, if you did do something, it should be your own business."

St. James doesn't find it ironic that she eventually did venture into the career of a prostitute for those few years in the '60s.

After that first — and only — arrest, she said she was virtually forced to take to the streets. Because of publicity from the arrest, she couldn't get any jobs as a waitress and she needed to pay for the stint in law school.

Roadside farmstand continues tradition

By DICK BRAUDE
Associated Press Writer

LINCOLN, Mass. (AP) — Pilgrims from throughout New England make trips to Lawson's farm for taffy apples, cider, cheese and fresh produce, but they're seeking more than food and drink.

This roadside farmstand, opened in 1931, is a New England tradition of small-scale agricultural enterprise. It also happens to turn a tidy profit.

"People come in with their kids and say, 'This is where grandpa bought me taffy apples,'" says John Lee, new owner of the stand that for 50 years belonged to Harold and Wanda Lawson.

The Lawsons, now retired, started with chickens and sold eggs, then moved into apples, with their own cider press.

They did nicely too, sending their kids to college, buying a Florida condo, and motoring around this affluent suburb in a Cadillac.

John Lee, 33, and his wife, Lee — yes, Lee Lee — 32, took over last fall and plan to make the business a lifetime proposition.

"This is a class operation," says Lee, whose customers include college professors, part-time farmers, truckers, and day-trippers to historic Concord and Lexington.

'It's habit forming. People stop, buy a piece of fudge, get back in the car, get back out of the car, and get some more fudge," Lee says.

"The farmstand has character, a good reputation. The grounds are nice. There are a lot of intangibles. People have been receptive to us. It's a lively town. Some people come by just to talk."

"The great part," Mrs. Lee says, "is that I can work with John. A couple of years ago I said to myself, 'John's a workaholic; the kids — now 4½ and 6½ — are never going to know their father.' What a relief to find it's all working out. We're incredibly lucky."

Lee runs the cider press; his wife keeps the books.

The Lees will grow only about 5 percent of the apples they sell; the rest are supplied by bigger orchards. Veteran New England entrepreneurs provide the cheeses, jams and jellies, honey, pickles, baked goods, penny candy and other Lawson's products.

In the fall, when the farmstand makes abut 85 percent of its income, the average purchase is $20 to $30.

"It's an eight-day-a-week job," says Lee, although in winter, the stand is closed Mondays.

"Once the strawberries come in, we'll be open every day."

In October, the Lees hire 15 workers just to keep up with the flood of customers craving cider and apples on a stick dipped in warm caramel.

"It's the first serious business we've owned," says Lee. But the native Vermonters do have agricultural backgrounds.

Lee Lee is from Pomfret, where her stepfather owned sheep. John Lee, from nearby Bridgewater, Vt., grew up on a dairy farm that had two small apple orchards. He took graduate courses in soil science at the University of Vermont.

Before buying Lawson's, Lee ran Codman Farm in Lincoln, Mass. — a non-profit, private enterprise. He raised sheep and pigs and harvested crops under the auspices of a membership corporation that conserves agricultural land.

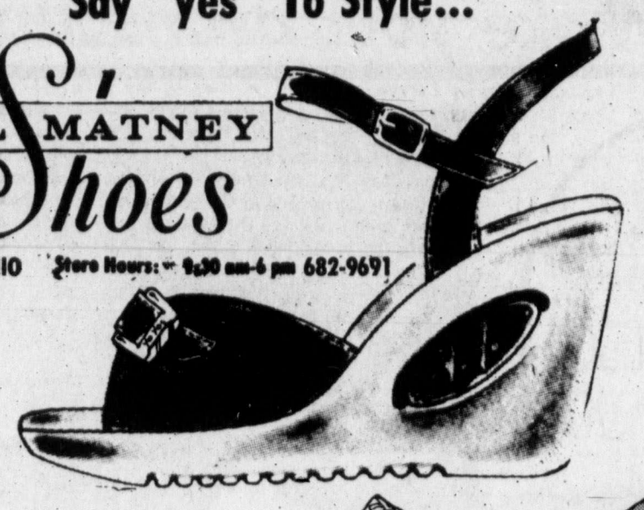

Lee sold pumpkins to Harold Lawson. One day, Lawson asked if he wanted to buy the farmstand.

Besides the stand, the Lees bought the Lawson's house on the same lot, just off the busy Concord Turnpike.

"We like the image of a roadside stand," Lee says. "And we want to keep it from getting too commercial. People who come in here aren't looking for suntan oil. They want food and cider.

"This stand has always had top quality apples and a reputation for the very best cider. People still come in and say they just won't buy anywhere else."

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Make your own soapy soil remover from nylon net and bar soap

DEAR HELOISE:

Recently, you asked for tips from laundry experts. As the mother of eight children who actually enjoys doing laundry, I use the following tip with great success:

Wrap a bar of soap in nylon net — bunch it around the bar so it's rough — then tie a knot in the net or secure it with rubber bands.

Scrub those stains on sock feet, collars, etc., before popping them into the washer. They will come out spick-and-span.

Maybe this hint has been in before, but what's wrong with a refresher course if it helps, as there are always new homemakers starting out. — Dorothy Steeves

Yep, sure are, and even us older homemakers sometimes forget these little tricks.

As for saving money, your hint has to be one of the most inexpensive to use when it comes to concoctions and potions to remove those stubborn stains.

Thanks, expert, for sharing, as well as for turning up another nylon net goodie. — Heloise

LETTER OF THOUGHT

Dear Heloise: A sheet of paper, a pencil, a few quiet moments and a cup of coffee are the start of my work list for the week.

This multi-purpose list saves gasoline, time, wear and tear on the car — and me — and endless small frustrations.

Keeps me from forgetting things and gives me much satisfaction as I complete each job and cross it off, rather than running off in many directions (or trying to) on many jobs.

Those items left on the work list at the end of the week are the seed for the next week's list. As the week progresses, needed grocery items are noted on the list.

I am never at a loss mornings as to what I need to accomplish for the day. — Chandler Smith

PACK IT PROPERLY

Dear Heloise: When traveling, if you pack each garment in your suitcase in a separate, clear plastic bag, you can easily see what is where and will be able to slide that garment out without getting the other items in your suitcase out of place.

The air that is retained in the bag helps to prevent wrinkling too. Serves as sort of an air cushion.

I usually buy jumbo-size food storage bags for this purpose. You also could save the bags in which the clothes you buy are sometimes packaged. — Wilma Weinmann

SEPARATING EGGS

Dear Heloise: Don't panic when you need to separate egg whites from the yolks if you are not adept at using the shells to do this.

Just pour the egg into your cupped hand, using your fingers as a strainer to catch the yolk. Works every time. — Mrs. O. Gonzalez

MAKE A COMFORTER

Dear Heloise: If you have two or three worn-out blankets lying around and hate to throw them away, stitch them together and make a warm comforter. Cover them with a pretty cotton print.

You'll have a warm comforter which will give years of added service to those blankets. — Treba Jensen

DO YOU CROCHET?

Dear Heloise: Make covers for your balls of crochet thread or other needle work yarn out of aluminum foil. Punch a hole in the foil to pull the end of the thread through.

Not only does the foil jacket keep the thread clean in your sewing basket but prevents it from becoming unwound and tangled. — Marcia Howard

LETTER OF THOUGHT

Dear Heloise: One day, while visiting my son, I realized that setting examples early in life can prove amusing later on.

I noticed that with every can of any product he emptied, he would immediately squeeze the top of the can tightly together.

When I asked him why he did this, he replied that he didn't know, but he'd always done it that way.

The amusing part was that I had been taught since childhood to do this in the event a small animal should try to get his head into the can and become helpless.

My son had apparently copied my method without ever realizing where he had learned it, or why. — Bettina Corliss

The old adage, "Do as I say, and not as I do," will never hold water when it comes to kids. They'll pick up what we do so much more readily than what we say, so we really have to keep on our toes! — Heloise

BABY'S DISH 'OVER EASY'

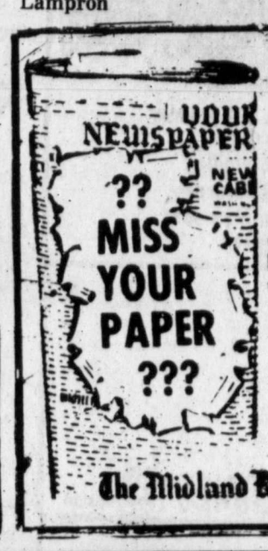

Dear Heloise: Trying to teach a youngster how to eat off a plate or out of a bowl can be a great challenge, as they inevitably tip it over.

My sister had a great idea. She took one of those soap grippers with the little suction cups on both sides, ran it under the water, and stuck the dish to the tray of the highchair.

True version of history hard to find

WASHINGTON (AP) — A study of each other's high school textbooks from the other side:

—U.S. texts teach "insidious fabrications of renegades of all stripes in order to discredit the U.S.S.R" — according to the Russians.

—Russian texts teach "life in the United States is characterized by decadence, alienation, poverty and misery" — according to the Americans.

Analyses by teams from each side were published Tuesday in the April issue of Social Education, the journal of the National Council for the Social Studies. The full study and recommendations from both sides will appear in a book this summer.

The American educators concluded that Soviet history and geography textbooks give a distorted view of American society, and the Russians charged that U.S. textbooks are riddled with political bias and lies about the Soviet Union.

Indiana University professor Howard D. Mehlinger, director of the U.S.-U.S.S.R. Textbook Study Project, said the political climate is very different now from when the project started in 1977, with detente "collapsing from the burden of recent world events and the weight of criticism from those who favor a return to 'Cold War' policies."

While it is prudent to be skeptical about Soviet intentions, Mehlinger said, their participation in the project "is evidence that some people believe that consciously promoting mistrust through textbooks is shortsighted and has dangerous implications."

Soviet textbooks are colored by the "ideological bias" of Marxist-Leninist theory, as shown by a description of the American Revolutionary War as "a bitter class struggle," Mehlinger said.

He said Soviet textbooks are "remarkably free of factual errors," with some notable exceptions. One was an account of the 1962 Cuban missile crisis that said "American imperialists ... pushed the world to the brink of thermonuclear war," but neglected to mention the Soviet missiles in Cuba that precipitated the crisis.

Soviet youth are taught the Korean War was started in June 1950 by "South Korean puppets ... with the aid of American imperialism." Mehliger said Soviet scholars refuse to acknowledge the war started on June 25, 1950, when North Korea invaded the South.

Their textbooks say American blacks, Indians and other minorities "suffer from extreme forms of persecution. Despite the material wealth enjoyed by many Americans, life in the United States is characterized by decadence, alienation, poverty and misery."

On the other hand, A.I. Danilov and I.I. Sharifzhanov contend U.S. textbooks "do everything in their power to discredit the existing political system in the Soviet Union and to undercut the enormous achievements of the first socialist state in the world."

Danilov is minister of education for the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic. Sharifzhanov is a professor at the Kazan State Pedagogical Institute. Their critique first appeared in a Soviet journal in 1979.

They said U.S. texts "single out for calumny and distortion the activities of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union ... They make use of the insidious fabrications of renegades of all stripes in order to discredit the U.S.S.R."

They said that compared with U.S. textbooks in the 1950s and 1960s, current texts "have made marked progress in overcoming primitive anti-Sovietism based on crude fabrications and slander."

But they said their "typical features ... remain as before: political bias, oversimplification and distortion of the truth."

They contended U.S. texts depict the Bolshevik revolution of 1917 "as a chance event," depict Lenin as an autocrat who mistrusted the masses, and "undercut the decisive role of the Soviet Union in defeating fascist Germany."

They also charged the Americans "falsely interpret the Soviet-initiated program for the democratic renovation of postwar Europe."

Korean polls close

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Government officials said 75.6 percent of South Korea's 21 million eligible voters cast ballots today for a new 276-seat National Assembly.

The unicameral assembly, expected to be dominated by President Chun Doo-huan's Democratic Justice Party, was established by a new constitution enacted in October.

Many former politicians were barred from running for assembly seats. They were among more than 500 people purged from politics by Chun's government as undesirables, including former Prime Minister Kim Jong-pil, former opposition leader Kim Young-sam and imprisoned dissident leader Kim Dae-jung.

Preliminary voting figures, apparently affected by rainfall during the day, were lower than the 77.1 percent rate in the last assembly election in 1978.

Election officials said final results were expected to be announced Thursday morning. The new assembly is expected to be called into session early next month.

Chun was among those voting early. Accompanied by his wife, the soldier-turned-politician cast his ballot at a polling station near the presidential mansion minutes after the polls opened.

Chun toured provincial cities south of the capital during the final week of campaigning, stressing the need for a government party majority in the new assembly. He called on voters to give his party a working majority so he could carry out various reforms he had proposed.

The Democratic Korea Party, expected to emerge as the major opposition, contended that too strong a majority for the government party could encourage dictatorial tendencies.

Two assembly members will be elected from each of 92 districts, with another 92 assembly seats to be assigned under a proportional representation system.

More than 600 candidates ran for 184 seats at stake in the popular vote. One district in the port city of Pusan was uncontested and two candidates there — one from the government party and the other from the Democratic Korea Party — were declared elected without voting.

Twelve parties have entered candidates, and about 100 people are running as independents. The old assembly was dissolved when the new constitution was enacted.

The election of a new legislature will complete procedures for the start of South Korea's fifth republic under the new constitution, which replaced the repressive "Yushin" charter enacted by the late President Park Chung-hee in 1972.

Chun, who rose to power following Park's assassination in October 1979, was elected to a seven-year term by an electoral college last month.

Germans reassure U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials say they're not worried any more that West Germany will reduce military spending.

That word, from officials who asked to remain anonymous, followed the second reassurance this month from a top German official to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

Foreign Minister Deitrich Genscher gave similar assurances to Weinberger on March 10, but one U.S. official who asked not to be identified said after Tuesday's visit by Defense Minister Hans Apel that American defense leaders still had been "very worried" after Genscher's visit.

There was no open talk of such worry at the time.

The original concern was sparked by a West German defense ministry announcement March 9 of cancellation or delay of 26 military projects over the next decade because of rising costs.

The joint Weinberger-Apel communique said the U.S. defense secretary "expressed appreciation ... especially of Defense Minister Apel's communication that, contrary to erroneous reports, the level of German defense spending will increase."

U.S. defense officials who briefed reporters said Apel "hasn't worked out the details yet" on how much Germany will increased defense spending this year.

The joint statement also said that Weinberger and Apel agreed that a continuing Soviet buildup of nuclear forces aimed at Western Europe "requires that NATO move ahead promptly with its own long-range theater nuclear force modernization program."

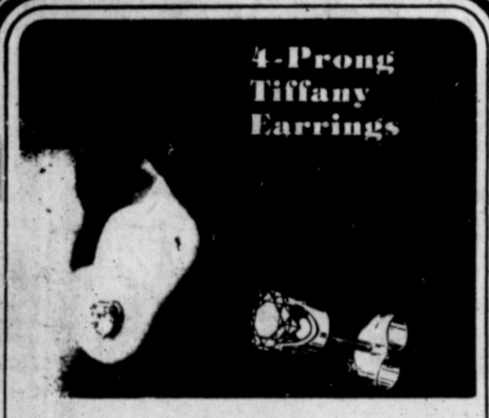

This was a reference to the alliance's agreement to station 572 new U.S. medium-range missiles in Western Europe, an idea resisted by some, particularly the Dutch.

"Gentlemen:

"Our game last night almost ended in an uproar after this hand. Order was restored only after East and West agreed to let you act as arbitrators to determine who was responsible for this debacle.

"North-South reached five diamonds in what can be described as routine fashion. West led the deuce of clubs, and everyone was aware that it was a singleton. Declarer won in dummy as East followed with the three, then led a trump to the king and West's ace. West tried to reach his partner by leading a low heart, but declarer won, drew trumps and made the rest of the tricks, ending up with an overtrick on a hand where he should have been down one.

"We leave it to you to decide who was most to blame — East or West.

"Sincerely,
"A Troubled Reader"

It is not very often that we are asked to adjudicate the blame for allowing declarer to make a contract that should have been defeated, and we can make both defenders happy — or equally unhappy, as the case may be. The fact is that both East and West were guilty for this mishap.

East made his mistake at the first trick — he should have followed with the ten of clubs rather than the three. Since that could not be a signal requesting a club continuation, it would have to be a suit preference signal, asking for the lead of the higher side suit — in this case, spades. When West gained the lead with the diamond ace, he would obediently shift to a spade and get his club ruff for a one-trick set.

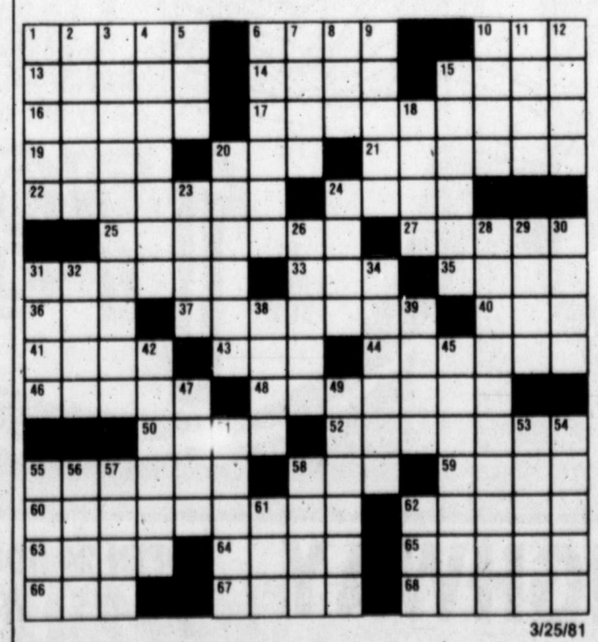

However, West did not wait long to compound his partner's error — his mistake occurred at trick two. There was no hurry to win the ace of diamonds. Had he held up the ace for one round, West would have given his partner the chance to signal for a spade shift on the second trump. West would still have had a trump left for a club ruff.

Brother, sister neighboring mayors

By JUDY McDERMOTT
The Oregonian

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — She wields a gavel; he prefers to set an unyielding tone at the outset of a meeting that says "This is serious business."

She can boast a city dogcatcher; he expresses surprise, saying his community of 5,100, which is twice as large, considers the position a bit of a luxury in these economic times, but he wouldn't mind sharing ...

Repartee and merciless teasing marked the conversation of John Middlemiss, 58, and Margaret Hoffer, 56, as the brother and sister got together for the first time since both were sworn in recently as mayors of neighboring communities.

Middlemiss is beginning his second term as Silverton's top elected official; Mrs. Hoffer defeated an incumbent to become the first woman mayor of Mount Angel.

While the two take their mayoral responsibilities seriously, they will probably leave shop talk to the annual conferences of the myriad organizations in which they automatically hold membership. Each community, they emphasize, has its own set of concerns and problems.

Growing up in Silverton in the late '30s, John and Margaret Middlemiss took more than a passing interest in the mayor's office of that mid-Willamette Valley community. The city's chief magistrate was a woman, Zetta Schlador, whose election predated that of Portland's first woman mayor, Dorothy McCullough Lee, by a decade.

Middlemiss entered the Army infantry and served in World War II following graduation from Silverton High School, returning home to become a clothing merchant.

His sister married Victor Hoffer and moved to Mount Angel, where she became a homemaker — "I had joined everything in high school except Future Homemakers," she says. She later began renovating houses and became the Mount Angel advertising representative for the Silverton-Mount Angel weekly newspaper.

Both dabbled a bit in politics, Middlemiss serving on his high-school board, Mrs. Hoffer on her city's budget committee.

Barnes elected to head board

J.C. Barnes Jr. has been elected chairman of the board of trustees of the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library.

Barnes is a longtime Midland resident and independent oil and gas operator. He has served on the board since its establishment.

He succeeds Evetts Haley Jr. of Sallisaw, Okla., who has resigned after serving as chairman of the board since 1977. Jim Evetts Haley III of Midland was elected to serve as member and vice chairman of the board of trustees of the Library.

Carter draws dignitaries to Plains

PLAINS, Ga. (AP) — Jimmy Carter may no longer be president, but he still has enough clout to draw foreign dignitaries to Plains.

Jihan Sadat, wife of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, and former Japanese Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda were on Carter's guest list today.

Fukuda, still an influential political leader, visited President Reagan last Friday. He was to fly down from Washington for lunch, said Phil Wise, chief of the former president's transition staff.

Fukuda wanted to "express his gratitude, in the name of the Japanese people, for the former president's endeavors in strengthening the friendly relations with Japan," according to a statement by the Japanese consulate.

Mrs. Sadat, en route from Chicago to Columbia, S.C., was to fly to Robins Air Force Base and then travel by helicopter to Plains.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Cyclamates remain banned, still considered unsafe

Dear Dr. Solomon: What's the latest on cyclamates? I had heard there were efforts under way to get them back on the market. What's up? — Don

Dear Don: Cyclamates are down, not up. The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) banned the artificial sweetener in 1970, but a manufacturer petitioned to have the ruling reversed. Now an FDA administrative law judge has determined that the company failed to show that cyclamates are safe and has continued the ban.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've tried switching from whole milk to skim milk, but I don't like the taste. Would you have any suggestions about a possible substitute for whole milk? I'm trying very hard to keep my blood fats down. — Vicki

Dear Vicki: Instead of switching to skim milk immediately, why not try two percent milk first? After becoming accustomed to it, you can then begin using one percent milk. The next step, to skim milk, will not be as drastic as if you tried to make the switch at once.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My local supermarket has established a "natural foods" section. I've tried comparing the labels of the various products to determine which elements are common to these foods, but I must be missing something. Some of the items seem to be no different from similar products found in other parts of the store. Can you explain what is meant by a natural food, and how it differs from other foods? — Val

Dear Val: According to proposed guidelines issued by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), natural food is one that does not contain any artificial ingredients and has not been processed to any greater extent than it would have received if prepared in the average home kitchen. By processing, the FTC includes such preparations as washing and peeling fruits and vegetables, homogenizing milk, baking bread, aging meats, grinding nuts, and canning, bottling or freezing foods.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father is 84 years old and on medication for high blood pressure. He also takes a diuretic. Would there be any harm if he were to take a laxative on occasion? — Mrs. D.N.H.

Dear Mrs. H.: Whether or not a person should take a laxative, "on occasion" or otherwise, should be determined by his or her physician. In general, however, I can say it would be better for your father not to have to rely on over-the-counter preparations as laxatives.

The same results can often be obtained through attention to diet. Whoever oversees his meals should try to make certain that he gets plenty of raw and cooked fruits and vegetables, and whole grain products used as breakfast cereals and in prepared foods. Prunes and other dried fruits also appear to be of value to many elderly persons.

People stand and kneel in front of the tomb of former Archbishop of El Salvador Arnulfo Romero on the anniversary of his death. The archbishop was gunned down a year ago Tuesday while saying mass. An oil painting hangs over the tomb.

Salvadorans remember church leader

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The corpses of 38 victims of terrorism were found alongside El Salvador's streets and roads as the Roman Catholic Church and the leftist guerrillas observed the first anniversary of the assassination of the archbishop of San Salvador.

Authorities said army patrols made more search and destroy sweeps Tuesday in their three-week-old campaign against anti-government rebels in the north and east of this Central American nation.

It was not known if there were any clashes during Tuesday's military operations, which came despite a 24-hour halt in offensive operations declared by a coalition of anti-government guerrilla groups to mourn the death of Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero.

Romero, an outspoken defender of human rights and opponent of U.S. aid to the Salvadoran junta, was killed by a bullet through the heart as he celebrated Mass in a small chapel in San Salvador on March 24, 1980.

A sharpshooter, believed to be a member of one of this nation's rightist death squads, was blamed for the slaying. Police said they were unable to trace him. More than 100 people were killed during eight days of mourning and street demonstrations that followed the assassination.

There were no reports of similar violence as the church observed the anniversary with hourly Masses in the national cathedral, where Romero is buried, and services in other churches throughout the country.

Every Sunday for more than a year before his death Romero condemned the violence that took more than 13,000 lives in 1980 and called for social reforms and better treatment of the poor in a nation controlled for centuries by a handful of conservative landholding families.

Speaking in the chapel where Romero was shot, the Rev. Jesus Delgado said: "This place has been sanctified by the blood of a witness of Christ. Monsignor Romero sought to become a saint by way of charity and God gave him the way to sainthood through martyrdom."

He reported that the Vatican is studying the possibility of canonization for Romero.

In Washington, the Reagan administration asked the U.S. Congress to approve an additional $63.5 million in economic aid to El Salvador this year to strenghten its war-battered economy. The increase would raise to $126.5 million the amount of economic aid promised by the United States this year, almost double that earmarked by former President Carter.

In addition, the administration is sending $34.5 million in military aid and 54 military advisers to support the junta. By a narrow 8-7 vote, a House appropriations subcommittee approved $5 million for patrol boats, helicopters, radar and other military equipment.

The subcommittee by a voice vote rejected an amendment by its chairman, Rep. Clarence Long, D-Md., to prohibit use of any of the $5 million to keep U.S. military advisers in El Salvador. Long visited El Salvador last week.

Agreement is reached

HOUSTON (AP) — First City Bancorporation of Texas announced Tuesday it had reached an agreement in principle to acquire Forest Hill Bancshares, a one-bank holding company that owns Forest Hill State Bank of Fort Worth.

Under the agreement, First City Bancorporation would issue 77,500 common shares in exhange for the 100,000 outstanding shares of capital stock of Forest Hill Bancshares.

The acquisition is subject to negotiation of a definitive agreement and to approval of regulatory authorities and shareholders of Forest Hill Bancshares.

House panel approves El Salvadoran aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has won narrow congressional approval for $5 million in military aid to El Salvador in a vote one opponent compared to the "Tonkin Gulf" resolution that deepened U.S. involvement in Vietnam more than a decade ago.

The House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations approved the $5 million by an 8-7 vote shortly after the administration announced plans to send an additional $63.5 million in economic aid to El Salvador.

That would raise total U.S. economic aid to the war-torn country this year to $126.5 million and military aid to $34.5 million.

The final $5 million segment of a new $25 million military aid package put together since Reagan took office was the only part subject to any sort of congressional action.

UMW leaders have tough job ahead selling proposal

By The Associated Press

With bargaining council approval of a tentative contract in their pockets, United Mine Workers leaders were trying today to sell the proposal to a rank and file that voted down a recommended accord three years ago during a 111-day strike.

Representatives from many of the union's 900 locals were summoned to Washington today to discuss the contract, approved by the bargaining council on a 21-14 vote Tuesday.

In addition, union sources said UMW President Sam Church would go into the coalfields to demonstrate his support for the proposal, which calls for a 36 percent increase in wages and benefits over three years.

With a fight for ratification on the horizon, Church backed away from his suggestion earlier this week that miners forego a strike during the approval process and work beyond Friday's expiration of their present contract. The 160,000-member union has a strong tradition of no contract, no work. The ratification process could take until the middle of next week to complete.

Church predicted the membership would ratify the pact by a 3-2 margin. But even before the council's vote, opposition to the contract was stirring.

"It's a shame they sent a piece of garbage down to us like that," said Larry Vucelich, president of UMW local 1810 in southeastern Ohio.

Vucelich and other local officials criticized a provision that would allow companies to process non-union coal at UMW plants without paying the royalty that now goes to the union's pension funds.

David Vidovich, president of Local 5869 in southern West Virginia, said elimination of the $1.90 a ton royalty "will slowly kill the union."

Church, however, said he was satisfied with the pact.

"It's a good contract," said Church. "We have a real good wage package. It's going to show that the United Mine Workers is a strong and stable union that the nation can depend on."

Negotiator Tom Gaston of Kentucky said he believed opposition to the pact on the bargaining council was based on the pension royalty provision.

"There are some people who won't vote for anything. I'm pleased with the way it went," Gaston said.

Copies of the contract were being printed, and voting was expected to begin early next week. The contract also will be explained in detail at local union meetings.

The proposed contract was cited by a number of miners Tuesday as a reason to stay home beginning Friday.

"You can't go over a technical agreement like that when you're down in the hole," said Willie Vance, president of Local 5813 in West Virginia.

Meanwhile, wildcat strikes over the contract talks were virtually over today. Those strikes and walkouts over local grievances idled more than 12,000 miners in six states last week.

Coal miners in Pennsylvania who struck U.S. Steel Corp.'s Cumberland mine over the weekend, after six men were fired, returned to work today, said company spokesman Mike Koff. However, some 1,000 miners of North American Coal Co. stayed away from their jobs in two Pennsylvania counties, despite a court order, in a dispute over job bidding.

Much of what the rank and file knew of the proposal came from news reports and word of mouth. Since the agreement was announced Monday after a surprise resumption of talks with the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, Church and other union officials have emphasized gains and declined to discuss concessions.

"There wasn't any real problem with the economic package," said Anthony Bumbico, an official of District 6 in Ohio and northern West Virginia. "The main problem, we felt, was that too much was traded away. If members look at the language and are not infatuated by the wage offering, they'll turn it down."

Critics of the settlement cited a proposal to study establishment of company-by-company pension plans to replace the present industry-wide system. Many miners are displeased over company-by-company health plans negotiated in 1978.

"If what happened to our medical insurance happens to our pension plans, we don't want anything to do with it," said Clarence Evans, recording secretary for Local 5869 in southern West Virginia.

Another source of dissatisfaction could be a proposed 45-day probationary period for new employees. Vidovich said he understands the proposal would apply to all new employees of a company, not just apprentice miners.

"That means if I transfer to another mine, and they decide they don't like your union activities at the last place I worked, they can fire me for no other reason," he said.

A group of miners pose outside Consolidation Coal company's Arkwright No. 1 preparation plant recently after getting the news that a tenative agreement had been reached on a new coal contract. Although pleased, many were suspicious of the proposal.

Anthracite coal lies unused in Pennsylvania

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of New Englanders had to burn costly oil to heat their homes again last winter while the world's largest vein of pure, clean-burning anthracite coal lay in the ground a few hundred miles away.

Anthracite coal, a mineral one step removed from diamond in the carbon chain, is caught in an industrial Catch 22.

Mine operators won't risk investing in a depressed industry until demand and transportation facilities improve substantially and utilities and homeowners won't switch to anthracite stoves and furnaces in large numbers until they're sure of a cheap, plentiful supply.

Of 5 million tons taken from Eastern Pennsylvania's anthracite mines during the past year, only 25,000 tons was delivered for New England household use because of rundown rail lines and a reluctance to flood an erratic market.

"There is a desperate need for more production of coal," Henry A. Kinne, president of Kinne Coal Co. in Connecticut told a Senate subcommittee Tuesday. "At the present time, I have a waiting list of more than 500 people who want delivery and we are currently delivering orders that were taken last December."

The reason so many people are clamoring for so little anthracite is simple. Kinne said some of his customers who spend $1,800 a year to heat their homes with oil, now costing more than $1.30 a gallon, can do it for $500 with anthracite.

The problem is certainly not a lack of coal. Geologists say 7.1 billion tons of anthracite, the equivalent of 33 billion barrels of oil, remains buried in the Pennsylvania hills.

Many coal producers and retail suppliers say the solution lies in federal laws and funds to lessen the financial risk for operators willing to reopen abandoned anthracite mines and to help the railroads that would transport the mined coal.

Neither prospect appears bright under the budget-cutting Reagan administration. Most of President Reagan's proposed energy investments are aimed at finding more oil and developing synthetic fuel from the soft bituminous coal of the Midwest. Moreover, the president wants to eliminate federal subsidies for Conrail, the only railroad that carries anthracite coal.

"The federal government, if it is interested in making anthracite coal available to New England and to the nation as a whole, should do whatever is necessary to guarantee that rail lines serving the anthracite field remain in service," said James J. Curran, vice president of the Reading Anthracite Co., New England's leading coal supplier.

"Rail is by far the most efficient mechanism for shipment of coal. Decrease in rail facilities and services must at best result in higher costs of coal. At worst, lack of rail service will prevent the delivery of coal," Curran said.

New England is the natural and traditional market for anthracite because of its nearness to the coal fields and existing rail links that provided adequate transportation in decades past.

Anthracite coal production has steadily declined since 1917, when 100 million tons were produced annually by 180,000 miners. After World War II, the industry collapsed when the United States converted from coal to more convenient oil and cleaner natural gas.

The soft bituminous coal industry, spread over wide sections of the country, survived primarily because of that fuel's low cost and abundant supply. Bituminous is the variety of coal burned in nearly all utility plants.

But the anthracite variety is much more desirable for home use because it burns cleaner, giving off much less soot to smudge the walls of the houses where it is burned in stoves or fireplaces.

About two-thirds of the anthracite now being mined is exported and Pennsylvania is working to expand coal facilities at the ports of Philadelphia and Erie.

Lt. Gov. William Scranton II, head of Pennsylvania's energy council, says he welcomes expanded imports of anthracite even though the coal could be used domestically under the right circumstances.

"Even if these contracts come from abroad, the resulting expansion of the industry would unquestionably create a greater supply for domestic need as well," said Scranton.

Rep. Kubiak says bill hurts gasohol crusade

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gasohol crusader Rep. Dan Kubiak says a bill passed Tuesday by the House sets back his cause, which includes better markets for Texas farm products.

The House passed, 72-66, and sent to the Senate a bill transferring the power to license and regulate industrial alcohol plants from the Alcoholic Beverage Commission to the Railroad Commission.

Kubiak thought he had 80 votes to kill the bill when the House convenes, but there was talk of a blitz by the state's liquor distributors, who favored the measure.

"It's a slap in the face. It's not in the best interest of gasohol to do this," Kubiak said.

Rep. Bill Coody, D-Weatherford, the sponsor, said industrial alcohol poduction should be regulated by the Railroad Commission because gasohol is a fuel.

Gasohol is a mixture of 90 percent unleaded gasoline and 10 percent ethanol alcohol.

Correction of Petroleum Briefs

The Permian Basin Petroleum Briefs in our Sunday's edition announced the retirement of Gulf Oil & Production Co. employees B.L. Crockett and W.W. Randolph after 35 years of service respectively.

The report was in error because the two employees were celebrating their 35 years with the company rather than retiring. We regret the error.

CBS turns over tapes, wants judge to keep copies

By MICHAEL BEZDEK
Associated Press Writer

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — CBS Inc., while questioning whether a judge can require the media to turn over information for criminal cases, has surrendered unaired portions of a "60 Minutes" broadcast dealing with alleged food franchise fraud, its attorneys say.

However, CBS attorney Timothy Dyk said Tuesday he would file an appeal to keep the judge from turning over any material to attorneys for Wild Bill's Inc.

In December 1978, "60 Minutes" aired a program segment entitled "From Burgers to Bankruptcy," with correspondent Mike Wallace describing an alleged scheme to sell worthless franchises in the Wild Bill's chain.

Six people were indicted nine months later, and face trial Monday before U.S. District Judge Herbert Stern.

Attorneys for Wild Bill's have contended that CBS interviews which were not broadcast might help their case. Earlier this month, CBS lost an appeal and turned over the unaired comments of three people who are considered potential government witnesses.

Stern then requested all unused interview material so he could put the comments of those potential witnesses into "an intelligible" context.

CBS had refused to comply, but faced with "a terribly large fine," its attorneys agreed Tuesday to turn over those additional interview materials, which included several tapes and transcripts.

Late Tuesday afternoon, Stern formally signed an order requiring the verbatim transcripts be surrendered to attorneys for Wild Bill's. Stern's order said Wild Bill's right to a fair trial outweighs the network's "qualified First Amendment privileges."

Appeals Judge John J. Gibbons said he would stay Stern's order, provided CBS filed a formal appeal by noon today to have the matter heard by a three-judge panel of the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Stern said he is bound by precedent to turn the material over to defense attorneys if it contains information which could be beneficial to their clients.

CBS has taken no position on whether information in the material is exculpatory. But the network has argued that the material not used in the show is confidential.

"What is at stake is whether the courts can, without limitation in terms of relevance or admissibility, require the press to turn over unpublished materials in criminal cases," CBS said. "Should this view prevail, the independence and integrity of a free press would be seriously threatened."

The statement contended that media investigations would be "impeded" and reporters "chilled" because sources would be reluctant to speak out.

Wallace said later Tuesday he did not think the network's decision would affect the way he approaches interviews but, "if a precedent is thereby established, I could see in the future that I could spend a lot of time in airplanes to go to court trials from here to Omaha and back because a lot of interview pieces I do ... end up in litigation of one form or another.

"By the same token, I do believe a defendant is entitled to a fair trial ... if I was a defendant, I would want every piece of information that would help me get off."

Lufkin publisher to speak at MC

Joe Murray, Pulitzer prize-winning editor and publisher of The Lufkin News, will speak to Midland College journalism students Tuesday.

Murray, 40, and reporter Ken Herman received the prestigious Pulitzer prize for meritorious service in 1977 as the result of a series of articles about the recruitment and death of a U.S. Marine from Lufkin.

Murray was invited to speak at Midland College by Jim Patten, Allison Professor of Journalism. Murray will speak to several MC journalism classes and to invited area high school journalism students. He will speak at 9:30 a.m. in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium, and at 11 a.m. and 1:20 p.m. to other MC classes.

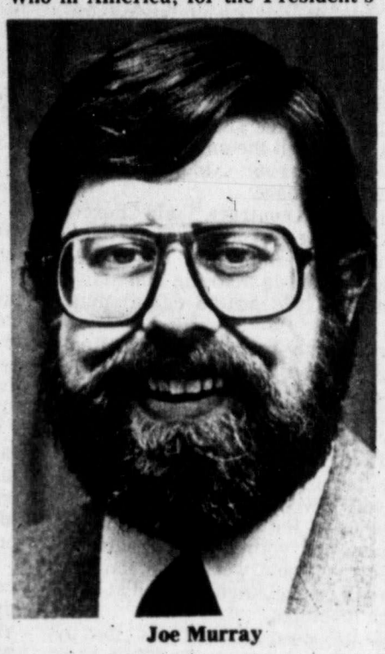

A native of Lufkin, Murray has served as editor since 1969. In September 1978, he was named editor and publisher.

Murray started with the paper in 1960 while he was between semesters at North Texas State University, although he virtually grew up on the paper. His father, the late Joe Ed Murray Sr., was a newspaper printer and was composing room foreman of The News for many years.

Murray joined the paper full-time in 1965, after also attending Stephen F. Austin State University, and became city editor a short time later. He left the paper in 1966 to had the Houston Chronicle's East Texas news bureau and returned three years later as editor.

Another 1977 story by The News received the Associated Press Managing Editors Freedom of Information award for the paper's work in bringing about reform of nursing home laws in Texas. The Marine stories also won a 1977 National Headliners Club Award.

Since the Pulitzer announcement, Murray has been selected for Who's Who in America, for the President's Alumni Citation for 1977 at North Texas State, and as one of 12 individuals in the nation to be featured in a series of one-minute TV vignettes on imaginative Americans.

Joe Murray

Murray is married to the former Sarah Kesinger of Lufkin. They have three daughters, Missy, 14; Erin, 10; and Kate, 6. They are members of the First Baptist Church of Lufkin.

Murray is the latest in a series of guest speakers for Midland College journalism students. Also appearing have been Bill Thomas, president and publisher of The Midland Reporter-Telegram; Fritz Wirt, publisher of the Del Rio News-Herald; and Randy Essex and Ann Judds, staff members of the Abilene Reporter-News.

Movie censors dying

The Senate voted 25-20 on Tuesday to return to committee and kill a House-passed bill that must be enacted by April 13 if the three-member censor board is to survive past July 1.

Even if its supporters round up votes and come to its rescue, the controversial agency appears doomed. Gov. Harry Hughes has promised to veto the requisite bill.

If it dies, the board will be the most visible casualty of the 1978 "sunset" law that requires the General Assembly to review periodically the state's 60-odd regulatory agencies.

Once an agency is reviewed, it dies automatically unless the legislature and the governor agree to save it within a year.

For most of the past 20 years, its longevity was protected chiefly by Mary Avara, a feisty grandmother and board member whose outspoken attacks on pornography brought her headlines and appearances on the TV talk-show circuit.

Doctors want end to nuclear threat

WASHINGTON (AP) — Concluding that their healing powers would be useless after a nuclear war, physicians from the Soviet Union, the United States and eight other countries are pushing the preventive medicine approach.

"If we do not stop it, the nuclear arms race can lead to catastrophe," warned Dr. Evgueni I. Chazov, the personal physician of Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev.

When someone is ill, Chazov said, people ask the physician to save them. "Now we say it is necessary to save mankind. Life and nuclear war are incompatible."

Warning that "mankind can die" in a nuclear war, Chazov commented Tuesday at a news conference concluding a four-day meeting of a new organization called International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War.

The group issued an appeal to world leaders, particularly Brezhnev and President Reagan, to make every effort to avoid nuclear war.

Chazov was asked whether the physicians expect to be more successful in reducing the threat than past anti-nuclear organizations. Noting that he is a cardiologist, he responded that prior anti-nuclear groups "did not have access to people's hearts like we physicians do."

Although Dr. Daniel Ruge, Reagan's physician, was unable to attend the conference, he sent a letter noting that the administraion is aware of the consequences of a nuclear war.

"It is our responsibility to work for the prevention of nuclear war and toward assuring the security of our nation," Ruge wrote.

Dr. Frank Sommers of the University of Toronto commented that the classical concepts of winning and losing would not exist in a nuclear war. "We must find new ways of thinking, new ways of resolving conflicts," he said. "This is the challenge."

Geiger said theories that it is possible to have a tactical nuclear war with limited casualties is about as likely as a medical opinion that death is reversable.

He said chances of a war — through design or error — are increasing as the number of nuclear weapons increases and estimated the number of such weapons worldwide at 50,000.

Dr. Bernard Lown of the Harvard School of Public Health noted that physicians would be of little help in a nuclear war. Many of them would be killed, he said, and the few survivors would be overwhelmed by the number of injured.

Lown said people may not seem as concerned as they should be about this possibility because they find such a war unimaginable. But, he said, physicians don't suffer this "atrophy of the imagination" because they see what can happen through the patients they treat.

Dr. Patricia Lindop of St. Bartholomew's Hosptal in London warned that civil defense measures could merely be a "cruel deception" because the few survivors would find no resources remaining to keep them alive.

In their message to Reagan and Brezhnev, the physicians noted that smallpox has been eradicated during the last decade through international cooperation.

"Nuclear war is a far greater threat to mankind," they added. "It will require even more intense collaboration among the nuclear powers to achieve a early cessation of the race to produce these instruments of mass destruction."

Other physicians attending Tuesday's news conference included Dr. Takeshi Ohkita of Hiroshima University, Dr. Emil Wennen of the Netherlands, Dr. H. Marcovich of the Pasteur Institute in Paris and Dr. Nikolai P. Bochkov of the Soviet Academy of Sciences.

Countries represented at the conference were West Germany, the United States, Canada, Sweden, United Kingdom, Soviet Union, Norway, Japan, France and the Netherlands.

If You Are Interested in Your Gas Bill,
You Might Be Interested in the Corporation

After decades of taking energy for granted, America has awakened to a startling reality . . . energy is a precious commodity, a valuable resource.

Every American has been affected by that reality . . . it has changed our lives as well as the economic conditions of our nation.

Fortunately, West Texas has not been as seriously affected by the energy situation as has most of the country, and we should continue to enjoy an energy advantage for the foreseeable future. Important changes have been taking place at Pioneer Corporation these past several years which will re-enforce that energy advantage.

Pioneer Is Now Many Operations, Through a Number of Companies.

Over the past two decades it became apparent that additional exploration for gas, both by ourselves and by others, was needed tc develop domestic gas reserves needed nationally as well as in the West Texas area served by the gas distribution company. We used our expertise in oil and gas to acquire and develop related businesses.

Our successes made it possible to obtain the capital to start small and grow each of the subsidiaries through self-generated funds and through the total strength of the parent corporation.

Among the corporation's subsidiaries are six major operating companies. These enlarged companies include Pioneer Production Corporation, exploring for gas and other hydrocarbons onshore and offshore; Sharp Drilling Co., Inc., operating a fleet of drilling rigs; Pioneer Gas Products Company, extracting liquid hydrocarbons; and International Tool and Supply Company, Inc., engaged in sales and fabrication of oil field equipment and pipe threading operations; Plains Machinery Company, a heavy equipment distributor for construction, roadbuilding and surface mining; and Pioneer Nuclear, Inc., engaged in mining and milling of uranium oxide. With these operations, Pioneer Corporation is ten times the size it was ten years ago by most measurements.

Pioneer Natural Gas Company is Changing, Too.

Other than the subsidiary companies, the corporation has in its structure two divisions. These two divisions have served the distribution function within the cities and the transmission function from the gas sources to provide gas energy to homes and industry, fostering a stable supply of gas energy which has substantially served the economic development and growth of West Texas.

Through predecessor companies, Pioneer Natural Gas Company has a history dating to 1906 . . . and this year is marking 75 years of change and growth. In today's market conditions, such change will continue in order to position the distribution company to effectively serve the 72 communities in a 50,000-square mile territory covered by Pioneer Natural Gas Company.

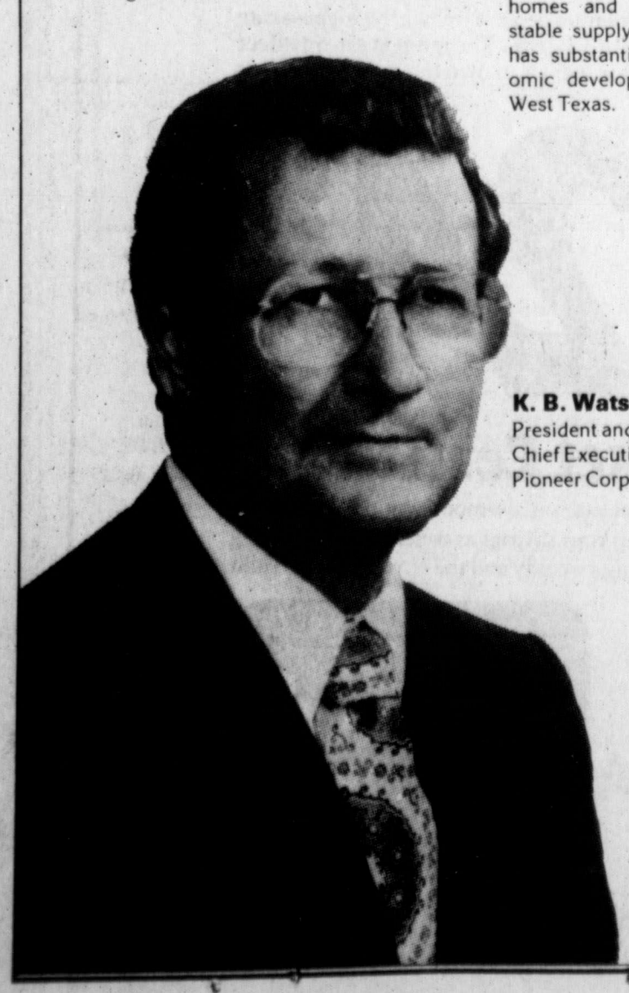

Pioneer Corporation Continues to Grow

In today's competitive energy markets, Pioneer Corporation continues a significant growth pace through subsidiary operations and interests located in 18 states. Consolidated revenues for 1980 increased to $912 million in 1980, a 24.5 percent increase from $732.5 million in 1979. Net income of $90.6 million is a 38 percent increase from 1979.

Earnings per share for 1980 were $2.44, up 36.3 percent from $1.75 in 1979, adjusted for the December 30 two-for-one stock split.

Strong performances by subsidiary activities in exploration and production, gas liquid extraction and in contract drilling have made it possible for the corporation to achieve the record annual earnings for 1980. Planned capital expenditures of above $200 million will provide additional growth opportunities in 1981.

Through the resources managed as well as the resourcefulness of its people, Pioneer will exercise its responsibilities to the thousands of shareholders who have invested in the corporation and to the continued development and growth of the domestic energy industries of which we are a part.

By MELVIN DURSLAG
Hearst Special News Service

It has been obvious over the years that those in authority in baseball haven't appreciated fully the sagacity of Earl Weaver, the field commander of the Baltimore Orioles.

If Earl were better understood, would he have been kicked out of 78 games during his 13 years in the majors?

That averages out to less than six times a year, but it heightens in importance because it is more than anyone else.

Can Earl help it that other managers don't last long enough to get kicked out 78 times?

IN EACH of the foregoing encounters with the umpire, Weaver has been right. It's just that the umps, and the league authorities they serve, have possessed neither the patience nor the depth to search for the wisdom contained in his arguments.

The other day in Fort Myers, Fla., for instance, the game with Kansas City was staggering into the seventh, with the Royals making so many changes that the umpires literally lost track.

It's a long way from Fort Myers to Miami, where the Orioles are based, and, the way things were going, chances were flickering of Earl's getting back in time for dinner at his normal hour. He has a home at the Country Club of Miami, where he indulges grandly in what is known as fairways living.

THEN, TOO, first post at the dog races is 7:30, meaning that if Earl was leveling an eye on a greyhound that could go more than 90 feet without resting, he wasn't anxious to see this opportunity vanish in a traffic welter on the field of Fort Myers.

If still another consideration dictated the reasoning of Weaver, it was the lifestyle of his players. Most of them rent places during the spring on Key Biscayne, where, looking out on the water, they watch the sun set while the butler is serving beverages.

Soon, Weaver was out on the field, asking the umpires to review for him the order of change. Which, of course, was like asking the guy in the subway booth at Grand Central, "Give me a description of everyone who has passed through the turnstiles this afternoon."

When the umps couldn't provide Earl with the information he legally had coming, he pulled his team off the field, which was a break for the locals, too, because people in Fort Myers eat dinner at 4:30.

And for having brought this blessing to everyone, Weaver gets suspended three days.

YOU HAD to conclude that if someone was bringing word of a tidal wave, the American League would nail him for double parking.

In a recent visit with Weaver, we asked him if he was concerned that the Yankees, who wrestle with him in the American League East, had signed Dave Winfield.

"He's no concern of mine," Earl responded. "If he drives in two runs a game, the Yanks have no assurance I don't have a guy who drives in three runs. Or if the Yankees beat Oakland eight times and we beat Boston eight times, I'm not hurt."

Weaver takes the position that a manager should worry only about his own team. Some managers, for instance, impress you with the thought that a successful club must be a running club. So they run like antelopes.

BUT, ON a scale of five in baseball, Weaver rates running fourth. And he points to the fact that Baltimore and the Yankees finished sixth and ninth, respectively, in base running last year, yet won 203 games between them.

Actually, Weaver has won 100 games five times, just one short of the record of Connie Mack, who managed 50 years. Joe McCarthy also won 100 five times, managing 24 years.

He answered cooly, "We'll out-administer them."

With a pitching staff comprising Stone, Palmer, Flanagan and McGregor, it becomes a little easier to out-administer the Yankees, especially now that the merger seems to have failed that would have brought Reggie Jackson into the shipbuilding empire of George Steinbrenner.

Today, Reggie can look forward to nothing more than a lousy couple of million a year.

But baseball one day will come to appreciate Earl Weaver. A guy who pulls his team off the field in the seventh inning of an exhibition game at Fort Myers can't be all bad.

Bobbles costly to Purple Pack

By MIKE CRUVER

ODESSA — Odessa Permian took advantage of six Midland High errors to score four unearned runs as the Panthers upset the Bulldogs, 4-3, Tuesday afternoon on the Permian baseball diamond in the District 5-5A baseball opener for both clubs. The win lifted Permian to 4-7 for the season while the Bulldogs' record tumbled to 5-6.

A very upset Midland coach Tim Whalen said, "When you committ six errors you can't beat anyone. We couldn't make the routine plays and we worked on these things yesterday (Monday). I don't know what's wrong, but right now this team does not have a competitive attitude."

THE SLOPPY ballhandling negated a fine pitching performance by Joel Castaneda. Castandea went the distance; giving up three hits, striking out three and walking four. The loss dropped Castaneda's record to 1-3 for the season.

After surviving a Permian threat in the first inning, Midland struck for two runs in the second inning. Jerry Zachery led off the inning with a walk, stole second and moved to third when Frank Garramone's ground ball was thrown into the dugout by Permian shortstop Jerry Hix. Brad Phillips, winning pitcher, compounded his problems by throwing a pickoff attempt at second into centerfield. Zachery scored on the miscue and Garramone moved to third. On the next pitch, Phillips cut loose with a wild pitch allowing Garramone to trot home.

DISASTER hit the Dogs in the third inning. Without recording a hit, Mojo pushed three runs across the plate. Jerry Hix opened the inning by drawing a walk and Richard Hanfield was safe on Fabian Ramos' throwing error at third. Jimmy Morris then hit a routine grounder to first that Daniel Castaneda bobbled, allowing Hix to score and Hanfield to get to third. Morris immediately set sail for second. Garramone, MHS' catcher, faked a throw to second and throw a perfect peg to third to catch a napping Hanfield for the first out.

Garramone's play seemed to lift the Purple Pack defense as shortstop Teddy Bartley made a fine play to throw out Mike Williams for the second out. Rusty Inger then walked and Castaneda hurt his cause when his pickoff attempt at first was wild; Morris scored and Inger moved to third. Inger scored the final run of the inning when Bartley couldn't find the handle on a grounder hit by Rob Goetz. David Danaway finally ended the inning by striking out.

MIDLAND threatened to get the runs back in the bottom of the third. After two were gone, Tim Davis singled and Michael Feldt followed with a double to put two runners on board, two outs and Zachery comming to the plate. Zachery ended the threat by striking out on three pitches.

Mojo recorded its fourth run in the fourth inning. Gregg McDonald reached on an error by Bartley and Phillips followed by hitting another grounder to short. Bartley could come up with the ball as Permian had runners at first and second none out. Hix knocked in the run with a single into leftfield. Castaneda pitched out of more trouble by retiring the next three hitters.

The Purple Pack threatened again in the fourth. Garramone led off with a solid double into left-center and Joel Castaneda walked. Phillips escaped damage by striking out Daniel Castaneda and getting Bartley and Faustino Granado to hit harmless flies to right.

MIDLAND picked up its final run in the top of the seventh. With one out, Tim Davis singled, moved to second on a passed ball and scored on a single by Garramone.

Lonnie Hobbs, Mojo coach, said, "I sympathize with Tim, he had the type of game that we have played all predistrict. Kicking the ball around, not making the routine play."

Midland will have little time to brood about the loss as they face Dallas T.J. at 4 p.m. today at the Memorial Stadium baseball field.

This is what it looked like to batters as Midland Lee's Alan Koonce whiffed 14 Odessa High batters Tuesday, although, unhappily, he didn't come away with the pitching victory.

Ex-Yankee claims fans turned off

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — The soaring salaries paid to major league baseball players today are turning off some fans, says former New York Yankees star second baseman Bobby Richardson.

"The owners have got to do something. Perhaps they could say, 'let's not bid so extravagantly for the free agent status,'" Richardson, teammate of Mickey Mantle, Roger Maris and other famed Yankee sluggers, said Tuesday night.

"I see both sides of it. I don't knock the players for getting what they can," Richardson said. But he added, "I travel around a lot, and I keep hearing from people about it. The people are getting a little turned off."

Richardson, 45, a seven-time American League All-Star who in 1966 played his last season in Yankee pinstripes, visited Chattanooga to address a prayer breakfast today. He is active in the Fellowship of Christian Athletes and still coaches American Legion baseball in Sumter, S.C., where he lives.

"When I was playing, Mantle was the top salaried at $100,000, $125,000," Richardson said. "I'd like to see what he's worth on today's market."

Richardson, who has started drawing a major league pension, is on the touring circuit as a speaker. He said he decided to get out of the major leagues because the traveling would keep him away from his family. However, former Yankee executive Lee MacPhail once offered Richardson a job as a coach or a broadcaster with the club.

Richardson, after retiring from the Yankees, was baseball coach from 1970 to 1976 at the University of South Carolina. In 1975, he took the Gamecocks to the finals of the College World Series before losing to the University of Texas.

Homer in 8th spoils Koonce's pitching gem

BY TED BATTLES

Midland Lee's Alan Koonce whiffed 14 batters in a taut pitching drama with Odessa High's Tommy Stahl and the game was won in extra innings on a solo home run, which sounds like the kind of game fans drool over. It was all of that, the only thing wrong with the script was that it was Odessa's Hector Sanchez who rode the wind with a 350-foot homer to give the Broncos a 2-1 District 5-5A victory at Lee Field Tuesday.

Sanchez's blast came with one out in the eighth to break up a 1-1 deadlock that had existed since the first inning, giving Stahl, 3-0, who seemed an unlikely winner most of the afternoon despite a six-hit pitching effort, the win.

STAHL still had to survive trouble in the home eighth when Ron Smedley opened the inning with a single to left and Koonce lined a hit between short and third to put runners on first and second. OHS Coach Ron White called for a pitchout on Chris Parker's attempt to move the runners up with a bunt and Koonce was caught off first by catchr Kevin Decker's quick throw. The resulting rundown eventually got Smedley at second, taking the teeth out of the threat.

Parker walked, but then Stahl got the final two outs on a pop up and force out.

"They made all the routine plays and got the key hits," said Lee Coach Ernie Johnson, "and we didn't do those things, so they deserved to win."

THE BRONCOS made the routine plays, as third baseman John Subia gobbled up everything hit his way and started a rally-killing double play in the first, but there was nothing routine about the catch centerfielder Ishmael Tavarez made, robbing the Rebels' of a chance to win it in regulation play. Smedley, who had walked in the third, was on first when Koonce hoisted a fly to deep center that looked like it had a chance...and even if it didn't go out, it would be up against the fence. Tavarez never gave up, making a twisting backhand catch against the fence to rob Koonce of extra bases.

BUT THAT disappointment for Koonce could be no greater than watching a five-hit, 14-strikeout pitching performance slip into the loss column.

It didn't start out like anything special when Koonce whipped two strikes across the plate to Sanchez, the game's leadoff batter only to lose him on four straight balls. Then to make matters worse, his pickoff throw to first got away and Sanchez was on second.

Leroy Alvarado hit a fly ball to short left. Bill Dern had trouble finding it up and broke the wrong way, but it's unlikely he could have reached it anyway. The run gave OHS a 1-0 lead. After that Koonce fanned the side, giving up a two out infield hit to Efrain Gallegos.

LEE TIED it in the first off Stahl without the aid of a hit when Barry Corley and Randy Velarde walked, Smedley was hit by a pitch and the run scored as Subia turned Koonce's grounder into a double play.

Still, things looked good. OHS pitchers had walked 53 in 12 games this year and Stahl seemed to be off to the kind of start that would keep a coach squirming most of the afternoon.

As it turned out, although Stahl did walk four, his support was superb.

Koonce, meanwhile, had seven strikeouts through three innings and the only batter he didn't have a two ball-out count against of the first 12 he faced, was Alvarado, who hit a first pitch double in the first. Junior Cobos finally broke the no-hit string with a two-strike single to open the fourth, but Koonce then added two more whiffs in the four and fifth.

"It's the best veloicty Alan has had all year," said Johnson, "But he wasn't as quick the last couple of innings."

ALVARADO was backing away from a high inside pitch and hit a wood chopper's special to center to open the sixth, but until Sanchez leaned into the eighth inning homer, Koonce pitched like a cinch winner...all it would take was a run.

The win not only gives OHS a running 1-0 start in district, but gives the Hosses a 9-4 record for the year. The loss snapped a five-game win streak for the 6-5 Rebels, who host San Angelo Saturday at 2 p.m.

Smedley and Parker each had two hits for Lee, Parker opening the sixth with a liner over the fence in left, but died on third. Smedley's double in the fifth came with two out.

Rigid UIL adopts Flex defense

Although the University Interscholastic League has come under the fire of some who would replace what they contend is a dictorial policy making organization with a more pliable group of political appointees, Midland Schools Athletic Director Gil Bartosh comes its defense by pointing out its the model governing system for high school athletics, one that is copied elsewhere...the ultimate compliment.

The attack on the UIL by a state legislator comes just after the UIL passed some resolutions that should fall under the category of "winning friends and influencing people."

For example, the UIL did repeal the transfer rule after a legal battle and invited district runnerups to participate in the football, baseball, basketball and volleyball playoffs. Actually, it wasn't the UIL that did these things.

The UIL merely placed the proposals on an agenda that was then voted upon by school administrators in Texas, the real force behind the UIL and the ones who would be relieved of their powers in favore of "Good Ol' Boy" appointments.

Bartosh admits there are some grounds for controversy, "Sometimes the UIL ruling punishes the kids for a coach's mistake.

"But if critics of the UIL could see what others have," says Bartosh, "They wouldn't tamper."

THE REPEAL of the transfer rule, which inflicted a year of involuntary idleness on an athlete removes the injustice of punishing a youngster for a family move over which he, and sometimes his family, have no power. Still, some fear it may be an invitation to resume old abuses, abuses which prompted the adoption of the rule in first place.

"The expanded playoffs are a great thing," enthuses Bartosh. "We thought it had a chance in football, but were surprised it passed in baseball, basketball and volleyball as well."

It also means the athletic directors could recommend elimination of the races by halves as an overlapping duplication and a return to the old single round district races.

Soccer was added to the 5A UIL program for 1982-83, but gymnastics, supported by the Midland schools, was defeated. "Soccer was pushed through by the big city schools, because they've had it already for four or five years, just like we've had gymnastics," Bartosh noted.

Despite the UIL acceptance of soccer, Gil does not see it as a feasible part of the Midland athletic program just yet. "It's a matter of scheduling. In the big cities, they can get all the games they need or want within five or 10 minutes travel time. In West Texas, no one is playing soccer except Lubbock. And if and when it comes, it will be a spring sport."

AS A RESULT of another proposal, anyone dissatisfied with its schedule can request a redraw. "What that means is an end to the season-ending intra-city series," says the Midland AD regretfully.

San Angelo has long protested the 5-5A schedule because it ends the season against Big Spring while other district members are benefiting from intracity rivalries that keep interest high to the season's end. It also has been a schedule that enables one Midland team to play at home each week while the other was on the road.

"In the redrawing," points out Bartosh, "We may wind up with some Thursday and Saturday games as a result of both schools being scheduled at home the same weekend."

Bartosh suggests without a two division race in baseball, "We may look at two games, say in Abilene, to save an extra trip. That is an area that has become an increasing concern...travel and the expenses involved."

NCAA Final Four offers What's Your Pleasure showdown

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

If the national collegiate basketball championship is decided by the big man in the middle, then Virginia has to be favored. If the forwards determine the national champion, look for a battle between North Carolina and Louisiana State.

And if the little guys play the biggest roles, then either Indiana or LSU will hold the advantage.

Big Ten champion Indiana takes a 24-9 record into Saturday's semifinal game with Southeastern Conference regular season titlist LSU. The Hoosiers also take Isiah Thomas, a first-team All America guard, into the game.

The 6-foot-1 Thomas is Indiana's leading scorer with an 18.3 average in the Hoosiers' three tournament games. He's also handing out 11.3 assists a game and has controlled the tempo so effectively that Indiana had little trouble qualifying for the Final Four out of the Mideast Regional.

LSU, 31-3, counters with Ethan Martin, a super quick 5-10 guard who sparks one of the nation's most devastating attacks. The Martin-Thomas confrontation could be one of the more intriguing matchups in Philadelphia.

"I think it's like perfect matchups," said Mike Hanks, an assistant coach at Mississippi who has coached with Hoosiers bench boss Bobby Knight and against LSU's Dale Brown. "Ethan Martin is the best defensive guard in our conference and he'll be going against Thomas, who everybody says is the best guard in the nation."

Knight certainly would prefer to see the semifinal contest decided away from the basket. But he doesn't expect that to happen.

"To be a contender, you have to win inside," said Knight, who relies on 6-9 Ray Tolbert, 6-10 Landon Turner and 6-8 Ted Kitchel. "Landon is a lot like our team. He is in the process of maturing just like this team. I don't think we are anywhere near our peak."

BROWN HAS strength inside with 6-9 Greg Cook, 6-7 Rudy Macklin and 6-5 Howard Carter as starters, with 6-7 freshman Leonard Mitchell in reserve. Macklin, however, might be hampered by a dislocated finger and a three-stitch cut on the little finger of his right hand suffered on Sunday when the Tigers defeated Wichita State for the Midwest Regional crown.

No.4 LSU is the highest ranked team to make it to Philadelphia this year while No.9 Indiana is the lowest. Virginia is ranked fifth and North Carolina is sixth.

The Cavaliers, 28-3, have beaten the Tar Heels, 28-7, twice in regular-season Atlantic Coast Conference play. Virginia, led by 7-4 center Ralph Sampson, like Thomas a first-team All-America, won the East Regional while North Carolina went to the West to qualiy for th Final Four.

North Carolina won the ACC postseason tournament after Virginia had taken the conference crown in the regular season.

"THEY'RE A strong basketball team, one that we know well," said Virginia Coach Terry Holland about the Tar Heels. "You're talking about a professional front line in (sophomore) James Worthy, (freshman) Sam Perkins and (senior, second-team All-America) Al Wood.

"It will be a little more of a chess match than if we were playing somebody from far away."

NORTH CAROLINA has gotten outstanding efforts from its front line throughout the postseason. In victories over Utah and Kansas State in the West Regional last weekend, Carolina's front line — including substitute Matt Doherty, a freshman — combined for 97 points and 59 rebounds.

Steve Kemp feels no pressure from salary

By HARRY ATKINS

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP) — Steve Kemp vows not to put any added pressure on himself just because he has been awarded $600,000, one of the largest arbitrated salaries in major league baseball.

"I definitely feel that I have nothing to prove to anybody," the Detroit Tigers' outfielder says. "I feel I'm being paid for what I've done and not what I'm supposed to do. But I feel that I am supposed to produce and I would be very much disappointed in myself if I didn't."

The 26-year-old former All-American from Southern California is a sensitive man. He has developed a genuine fondness for Detroit, its baseball fans and for Michigan as a whole. He doesn't want to see that ruined, but he's afraid it might be.

"I've already seen it in spring training," he says. "When I do well, people are really on my side and when I do bad I hear a lot of negative comments. And that's going to happen in Detroit, I'm sure."

Kemp isn't looking for any favors. He just wants to be accepted on the merits of his performance on the field — the same as any athlete — and not on the size of his paycheck.

"I would like to stay in Michigan only if I'm accepted there, if people accept the things that have happened," he says. "If I can't be appreciated and accepted by the fans, what good is it for me to stay there? I'd be playing under miserable conditions and I don't want that."

Unlike some high-priced ballplayers, Kemp never has sought controversy. He is much more introverted than a Reggie Jackson and is uncomfortable in his new role.

Syracuse, Tulsa clash in NIT final

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD

NEW YORK (AP) — Syracuse hopes to complete a month-long cycle of disappointment and happiness on a positive note tonight when the Orangemen meet Tulsa in the championship game of the 44th annual National Invitation Tournament.

Syracuse completed the regular season Feb. 28 with a 15-11 record, its worst in 11 years, followed that with a glorious three-game sweep of the Big East tournament and then was crushed when three other conference schools were invited to the NCAA championships and it was ignored.

Instead, the NIT selection committee came calling and the Orangemen responded with four more victories leading to tonight's game with the Golden Hurricane, this year's best rags-to-riches basketball team.

"Our backs were to the wall after the 15-11 season," said high-leaping forward Tony Bruin, a standout in the postseason after a so-so year. "Now the NIT is our reward for winning the Big East tournament."

"IT'S FUNNY how life works out sometimes," said assistant coach Brendan Malone, who represented Syracuse at a news conference Tuesday while head Coach Jim Boeheim kept a speaking engagement in Philadelphia. "We were so disappointed a few weeks ago. Now we're just delighted to be in the NIT. For some reason we've put seven real good games together."

In addition to the three victories in the Big East tournament, the Orangemen have won four in a row in the NIT for a combined 22-11 mark.

To win tonight at Madison Square Garden against Tulsa, 25-7 under new Coach Nolan Richardson after an 8-19 season in 1979-80, Syracuse will probably need a healthy 6-foot-11 center Dan Schayes.

The son of former professional star Dolph Schayes injured his left ankle in a Monday practice and limped noticeably throughout Monday night's 70-63 semifinal victory over Purdue. Schayes had only nine points, well under his average of 15, but he had a basket, a free throw and two rebounds in the final minute after the score was tied 63-63.

"HE'LL BE there Wednesday," said Malone. "He's in his hotelroom with his foot in ice right now."

"When the adrenaline starts flowing, it's amazing what the body will do when the the mind starts talking," said Richardson, expressing no doubt that he will have to contend with Schayes' height and outside shooting touch.

Tulsa, which beat West Virginia 89-87 in Monday night's other semifinal, relies heavily on four transfer players, all of whom were on Richardson's national championship junior college team at Western Texas last season.

"When I heard Coach Richardson was bringing four players with him from junior college, I didn't know what to expect," said senior forward Bob Stevenson, the lone holdover starter from last year. "Then I saw we would have more talent than we had at any time since I've been here, and I realized my role would change."

NFLPA pushes new bill to control agent abuse

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The National Football League Players Association, saying there are "abuses in the agency business," is pushing a bill in the California legislature to regulate sports agents.

The bill, sponsored by Democratic Assemblyman Bill Lockyer of San Leandro, won 9-0 approval Tuesday of the Assembly Labor and Employment Committee.

No one spoke against it. But in order to become law, it must still win approval of the Assembly Ways and Means Committee, the full Assembly, at least one committee of the Senate, the full Senate, and be signed by Democratic Gov. Edmund Brown Jr.

The bill would require professional agents to register with the state Labor Commissioner, and submit their contract forms for approval.

There are similar requirements on talent agents in the entertainment industry. "We want to take that system and have it apply to the sports world," Lockyer said.

Gene Upshaw of the Oakland Raiders, head of the NFLPA, testified: "In the NFL, a contract is not a contract. You need to make the team each year. Only a fraction of 1 percent of the players have a 'guaranteed' contract."

Upshaw, an offensive lineman, added that professional sports agents focus on collegiate athletes and exploit them in their first contracts: "The agent buys him a car, gives him a loan ... They never recover from that."

He said his union represents 1,556 players with an average yearly salary of $74,000.

Lockyer's plan would also force professional sports agents to post $10,000 surety bonds with the state, as well as file copies of their registration with the colleges where prospective recruits are enrolled.

It would also require an agent to give the school a copy of the contract within five days of signing.

Bob Moore, western director for the NFL players group, said agents often pay collegiate athletes "$50,000 to $60,000 in a professional services contract ... which in effect makes them professional athletes playing amateur sports."

Assemblyman Dick Floyd, D-Lawndale, said Lockyer's measure would "eliminate the (agent) going in and buying an option and delivering the guy at an illegal date."

Miracle saves Guy Lafleur

MONTREAL (AP) — Guy Lafleur has been performing near-miracles on the ice for the Montreal Canadiens for close to 10 years. In the early-morning hours of Tuesday, another near-miracle saved his life.

The right wing is recuperating after plastic surgery on his right ear, the lobe of which was partially severed by a signpost in a car accident as he was driving alone to his suburban home from downtown Montreal.

Growing Baseball strife worries Willie Stargell

Elder statesman Willie Stargell of the Pirates admits the labor strife, the growing adversary relationship between the media and the players and the overall reaction of the fans concerns him for the future of the game. "The one good thing about the game is that it's virtually unchanged over the long time it's been played. I'm talking about once you get on the field. Then, it's see the ball, hit it, throw it, catch it, slide, run, all these same basic things have existed."

The 40-year-old first baseman said when he picks up a paper he finds out more about what the players are making than how they're playing. "Basically I think the way things are presented now they ought to be on the financial page. If my kid picks up the newspaper and wants to learn about what's going on in baseball so he can go to a playground and work on the things that maybe came out of interviews with players, he can't find them."...

Danny Ainge played hooky from the Toronto Blue Jays' spring camp to accept the Eastman award as college basketball's Player of the Year. "I wish I could have been to camp earlier," said the BYU forward after the Cougars lost to Virginia in the NCAA regionals. Ainge, who starred in three sports in high school, decided on a baseball career, noting "I enjoy basketball but I prefer the leisurely pace of baseball. There is not all that pounding up and down the floor as in basketball. I have to think my knees will last longer and I will have a longer career."...

Hemorrhoids may keep Cesar Cedeno on the bench, or standing nearby, when Houston opens its season against the Dodgers April 9 after surgery was delayed following the lancing of hemorrhoids Sunday...

Former Michigan quarterback Rick Leach was among seven players Detroit sent to their Evansville, Ind., farm club Tuesday...

says, "You don't play for records, but records are part of the incentive that keeps you going when you're my age. The most important incentive thing should be to try and play in the World Series." If he passes Musial, only Hank Aaron, who got some of his hits as an American League player, and the all-time leader, Ty Cobb, will rank above Rose on the career hit list. Musial has 3,630, Aaron 3,771 and Cobb an incredible 4,191...

Atlanta's Bob Horner is tired of everyone making jokes about his weight. "Everybody had made such a big deal out of my weight that I just decided to lose some," said the 6-foot-1 Horner, who weighed in Monday at 215 pounds, 14 pounds lighter than he weighed eight days earlier, after playing between 225 and 230 for the past three seasons. Horner's diet consists of eggs, tomatoes and grapefruit with very little meat...

The University of Massachusetts replaced Ray Wilson with former Notre Dame assisant Tom McLaughlin as basketbal coach...

The Dallas Cowboys still are Rolen R. Rains' favorite stars, but he has been on the offensive against the club ever since he was punted from his seat at a 1978 exhibition game. Rains, who says he hasn't missed a home game in the team's 21-year history, filed a $1.1 million suit against the Cowboys. He says he hasn't been able to enjoy the games since the exhbition, when he was 'terribly hurt" and embarrassed after security guards forced him from his seat. "Every time I attend a football game — and I attend them all — I wonder if I'm going to be pulled out of my seat," Rains told the jury. Rains said he was not aware that the $10 ticket he purchased for the game had been lost or stolen. Rains said he declined to move from the seat at first, although Texas Stadium employees told him of the mix-up...

Russia's 22-year-old Alexander Zhirov won Tuesday's giant slalom, leaving the World Cup title chase between Swedish ace Ingemar Stenmark and American Phil Mahre wide open. Mahre was in third after the first run, lagging behind Zhirov by 1.7 seconds and .51 behind Stenmark...

Inquiring photog gets man on street's strike reaction

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

To the average guy, generally, the players are overpaid, greedy and selfish. There ought to be a limit, he says, on their salaries. Marvin Miller, executive director of the Players Association, realized that most fans would take such an attitude when he marshalled his clients into a solid bloc resisting any surrender of players' hard-earned bargaining rights.

Marvin is as perplexed as anyone.

WE WERE intrigued by the responses given to the New York Daily News' Inquiring Photographer, who took to the streets to ask the following question:

"Do you agree with Atlanta Braves owner Ted Turner that top salaries for athletes should be $300,000 to $400,000, with the average about $100,000 to $150,000?"

The vote was five-to-one "yes."

"Salaries are outrageous," commented a supervisor. "If the trend continues, some teams will go bankrupt."

A credit controller said: "No one player deserves $1 million a year. In a way, I hope Dave Winfield (the $20 million Yankee) flops to show that he isn't worth that kind of money."

"Turner is right," said a housewife. "While the fans don't resent high salaries, they can't relate to real life."

A high school student said, "It's going to turn sports into a money market ruled by the rich teams." A credit manager, conceding that a superstar should be paid according to his talent, added, "Turner's average salary of $100,000 to $150,000 is too high. The average player isn't worth that much."

ONLY ONE man, a customer field representative, took the players' side, arguing, "The owners have have made millions. The players are entitled to all they can get."

This is a strange social phenomenon. One would think that the average citizen, the bricklayer, truck driver, accountant or mill hand would hoist their cudgels in defense of baseball's working stiffs.

Except in the size of their paychecks, they are brothers in arms. They have certain talents. They sell them to their employers for a price, whatever the market will bear. In turn, the employer, like a retailer, sells these talents to the fans.

Ballplayers, the same as guys who pour hot steel and ladies who sit in cramped attics to sew seams, belong to a union. They negotiate playing conditions, basic pay, pensions and other benefits as any other person not self-employed.

SO WHAT turns the average guy off?

The fan still looks upon baseball as a game played by men in doubleknits — a fun game learned on the corner lot. Work? Hogwash.

He fails to grasp the whole picture — a hard-knuckled business run by corporate executives, dominated by television, infested by commercial wheelers and dealers, all out for the big buck.

For most players, it's a short, hazardous career.

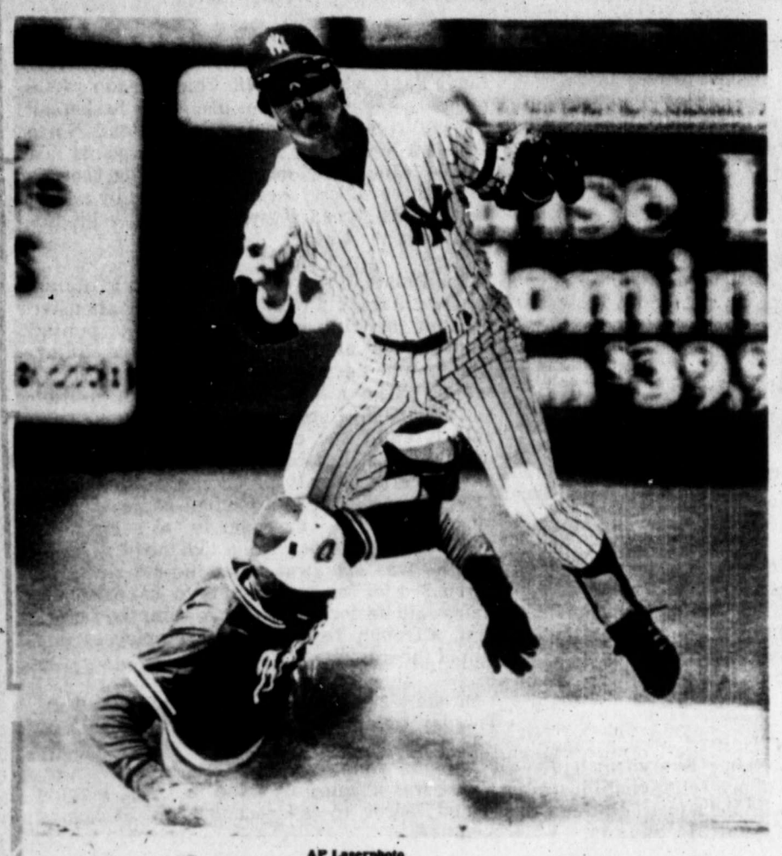

It's a well-worn cliche — but a hard truth — that the ballplayer, while a working man in one sense, is a show business personality in another. He is paid not just for his skills but also for the number of people he can pull through the turnstiles.

IN THE cases of charismatic stars such as Reggie Jackson, Pete Rose and George Brett, they earn their bread. Their roles are not dissimilar from those of movie and TV personalities who wouldn't sneeze for a salary less than six or seven figures.

True, some salaries are ludicrously out of kilter — the $5.89 million paid relief pitcher Al Hrabosky, the $3.2 given Claudell Washington and the $300,000-a-year guaranteed Jeff Burroughs, all at the behest of the Braves' Turner. You can't fault the players. Their strike threat is based not on salaries but on bargaining rights once denied and newly won.

Turner's proposal of a lid on ballplayers' earning power is patently unconstitutional. It is about as logical — and workable — as asking Turner to limit the profits on is communcations enterprises, stripping oil barons of their billions and telling General Motors how much it can pay its vice presidents.

Tigers nudge Pirates; Yanks massacre Braves

By The Associated Press

Despite committing six errors, the Detroit Tigers defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates 5-4 in exhibition baseball Tuesday thanks to two-run homers by Richie Hebner and Lou Whitaker.

Dave Parker homered for the Pirates, who got two runs in the second inning as Stan Papi committed two errors and Duffy Dyer one for the Tigers. But Whitaker homered following a Dyer walk in the fourth and Hebner connected in the fifth with Steve Kemp on base.

Both Tigers home runs came off Pittsburgh ace Jim Bibby. Jack Morris went seven innings for Detroit.

The New York Yankees used a 16-hit explosion for a 15-6 romp over the Atlanta Braves. Bucky Dent, Bob Watson and Rick Cerone each had three hits and the latter pair each drove in three runs. Graig Nettles chipped in with a homer for the Yankees.

A pair of rookies paced the New York Mets to a 1-0 victory over the Boston Red Sox. Mike Howard tripled in the eighth inning and scored on Butch Benton's sacrifice fly for the game's only run.

Boston's Dennis Eckersley pitched hitless ball for the first five innings. Pat Zachry, Ed Lynch and Jeff Reardon combined on the shutout for the Mets.

Alfredo Griffin's two-run, inside-the-park home run in the second inning helped the Toronto Blue Jays top the Montreal Expos 14-10 as each team collected 15 hits. Griffin, who also had a double, drove in three runs, scored three, stole a base and drew a walk as the Blue Jays built an 11-1 lead by the sixth inning and then hung on.

Larry Herndon singled, doubled and homered and Ed Whitson combined with Gary Lavelle on a seven-hitter as the San Francisco Giants beat the Cleveland Indians 8-1. Whitson gave up one run, a homer by Pat Kelly, in six innings. Lavelle held the Indians scoreless on three hits through the final three innings.

The White Sox routed the St. Louis Cardinals 17-2 as Russ Kuntz drove in six runs. He had a three-run homer and a two-run triple.

Cincinnati outslugged Los Angeles 10-6 in a sloppy game in which the teams combined for nine errors, three by Dodger shortstop Pepe Frias.

Terry Bulling collected three hits, including a two-run triple, and Richie Zisk and Gary Grey slammed homers to lead the Seattle Mariners to a 9-2 swamping of the California Angels. The Mariners had 15 hits.

NBC success determines CBS' rates

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC is the lame duck broadcaster of this year's NCAA Basketball Tournament while CBS is waiting in the wings. Although this year's games on NBC will be next year's profit margins on CBS, don't think for one minute that CBS is rooting for its fierce rival.

One determination of the advertising rates networks charge for commerical time is the size of the TV audience watching the event the previous year. So, in effect, CBS' ad sales for next year's games will benefit from NBC picking up higher audience ratings now.

NBC refused to disclose its ad rates for the 1981 tournament.

Jim Harrington, vice president, program administration, for CBS Sports, says it's ironic that CBS could profit from the size of NBC's audience for the three-week tournament. "We think about it but we can't look ahead," he said. "We have to do the best job we can and let next year take care of itself."

LAST SATURDAY, NBC had two regional NCAA Tournament finals. ABC had its usual 90 minutes of bowling starting at 3:30 p.m. EST, while CBS had golf at 3 and women's gymnastics and speedskating at 4:30 on its "Sports Spectacular."

On Sunday, NBC had the two other regional finals, while ABC went with its normal fare of "Superstars" and a championship boxing match between Salvador Sanchez and Roberto Castanon. CBS showed the key National Basketball Association game between Philadelphia and Boston, then figure skating and golf.

"We look at the nature and makeup of the audience at the other networks and go after another audience," said Harrington. "We figure a sizeable audience wants softer programming. The hard core would go for the basketball and boxing, so we went after the people who watch figure skating and gymnastics.

"We're not sitting back and accepting leftovers. We're programming with demographics."

Harrington said CBS' schedule was, in part, a creature of its live events — the NBA and golf. But there is more flexibility for its sports anthology show and it would have been programming suicide to televise a lesser fight or weightlifting, "anything that attracts the same blue collar fans but isn't a blockbuster," he said.

IT WAS no coincidence that CBS had Philadelphia-Boston opposite NBC's college basketball. In an effort to bolster pro basketball ratings, Harrington said CBS and the NBA worked out a Sunday schedule last summer that focused on Philadelphia, Boston, New York, Milwaukee, Phoenix, Los Angeles and Seattle. March 22 also was made a priority date by CBS and the NBA.

"Last year, we did well against college basketball until the All-Star Game, then we had weak matchups," said Harrington. "This year, we were determined to keep a strong schedule through the end of the regular season."

CBS succeeded in doing that by putting Philadelphia on national TV seven out of its nine regular season Sundays. Still, CBS lost the ratings war against NBC's regular season college basketball.

NBC'S SUNDAY regular season games picked up an 8.2 rating and a 22 share, up from last year's 6.0 and a 16. The NBA's 1981 Sunday games, not including the All-Star Game, did a 5.9 and a 17, compared to last year's 5.9 and a 16. (Ratings measure the percentage of the nation's sets watching, while a share measures the percentage of the sets on and watching.

Next year, when CBS does the NCAA Tournament, its ad rates will probably get a boost — regardless of how well NBC does — because CBS won't be splitting the basketball audience since it still will have the NBA.

"We're really not that concerned how NBC does," said Harrington. "The ratings znd ad rates for the tournament have been strong for years. That's one of the reasons why we went after the tournament."

Trio of Astros whitewash Twins

COCOA, Fla. (AP) — Jose Cruz drove in two runs and four Houston Astros pitchers combined to shut out the Minnesota Twins 5-0 Tuesday in exhibition baseball.

Bob Knepper, Joaquin Andujar, Frank LaCorte and Joe Sambito allowed the Twins just two singles during the game.

The Astros took a 2-0 lead in the first inning on a sacrifice fly by Terry Puhl and a single by Cruz. In the sixth, Cruz and Tom Wiedenbauer combined for two hits to raise Houston's margin to 4-0.

Zisk arrested for soliciting

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Seattle Mariners outfielder Richie Zisk is scheduled to be arraigned later this week on a misdemeanor charge of soliciting an act of prostitution from a police officer, police say.

Lt. David Brew said Tuesday Zisk, 32, was arrested last Thursday after he approached a female officer in east Phoenix and allegedly asked her to commit a sex act for money.

"I can't tell you exactly what was said because of the elements we use to put it (the arrest) together," Brew said.

Brew said Zisk was cited on the misdemeanor charge of soliciting an act of prostitution and released on his own recognizance.

Zisk, of Lighthouse Point, Fla., will be arraigned in city court later this week, officials said.

For the past month, Zisk has resided at an eastside motel with the rest of the team. He was not available for comment Tuesday night.

UT's Lee to join Denver staff

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Charlie Lee, assistant football coach for the Texas Longhorns, has quit to coach the Denver Broncos' running backs.

Lee coached wide receivers at Texas and did most of the Longhorns' out-of-state recruiting during the past four seasons.

"I want to make certain I get what I feel is the best man in the U.S." to replace Lee, said Texas Coach Fred Akers.

"This is a fine opportunity for Charlie. I'm pleased for him. He'll do a good job," added Akers.

Royals defeat Rangers

BAYAMON, Puerto Rico (AP) — Cesar Geronimo had a pair of run-scoring singles, one to tie the game and the other to win it, as the Kansas City Royals beat Texas 4-3 in exhibition baseball here Tuesday night.

With the Rangers leading 3-2 in the sixth, Geronimo drove in Willie Wilson to tie the game. Then in the seventh, Onyx Concepcion walked, stole second, moved to third on an infield out and scored when Geronimo cracked another single.

The game capped a two-day exhibition appearance in Puerto Rico by the Rangers and the defending American League champions. Total attendance for the two games was 16,640.

USC gains spot in AIAW Final Four basketball

By Associated Press

"This is a dream come true," said Southern Cal Coach Linda Sharp after the fourth-ranked Women of Troy earned a berth in the Final Four of the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women national tournament at Eugene, Ore. this weekend.

Southern Cal, 26-6, defeated No.5 Cheyney State 67-58 at the Los Angeles Sports Arena Tuesday night behind 17 points apiece by Kathy Hammond and Kathy Doyle. Cheyney State, 26-3, was led by Yolanda Laney's 21 points.

"We want to be the first to beat Louisiana Tech," Sharp said. "We'll have to concentrate on defense and stop their inside game to beat them."

Tech Coach Sonja Hogg had different ideas about her team's third straight Final Four appearance after defeating No.10 UCLA 87-54. "I'm more confident this year going to the Final Four than the last two. We've got experience and depth that will be the difference."

Pam Kelly led the winners with 20 points, while Denise Curry ended her carer with the visiting Bruins, 29-7, by scoring 23 points.

Second-ranked Tennessee, 24-5, and No.3 Old Dominion, 27-6, which played in last year's title game, also earned their third straight trips to the Final Four, where they'll meet in the other semifinal contest. The Vols have beaten Old Dominion twice this season on the road.

Durham paces Cubs win

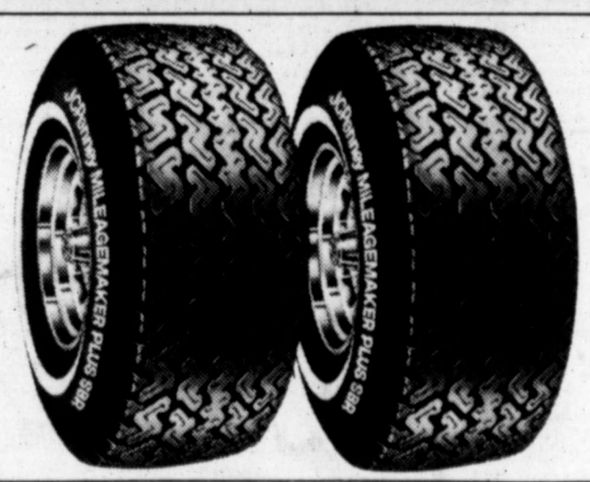

YUMA, Ariz. (AP) — Leon Durham's three-run homer highlighted an eight-run second inning as the Chicago Cubs outlasted the San Diego Padres 12-11 in exhibition baseball Tuesday.

Trailing 4-1 going into the second, the Cubs chased Rick Wise with an RBI double by Barry Foote and RBI singles by Ty Waller and Mike Tyson to tie it. Chicago continued the assault against rookie Eric Show, with four more runs on three hits. Durham's homer, his first of the spring, capped the inning.

San Diego rallied behind the hitting of Mike Phillips, Terry Kennedy and Tim Flannery. Phillips tripled twice and drove in four runs while Kennedy had three hits and three RBI. Flannery had two hits and two RBI to pace the Padres' 19-hit offense.

Infantry fighting vehicles cross a pontoon bridge somewhere in Poland Tuesday as Warsaw Pact maneuvers continue. The war games and the publicity given to them were seen as a threat to the Polish union Solidarity as it called for new strikes.

Critical strike negotiations resume today

BYDGOSZCZ, Poland (AP) — Labor leader Lech Walesa and Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Rakowski resume critical negotiations today under the twin threats of new nationwide strikes and the spring war games in and around Poland by the Soviet army and other Warsaw Pact troops.

Polish Communist Party chief Stanislaw Kania warned Walesa's Solidarity labor federation that its threat of four-hour strikes by 10 million members on Friday and a nationwide general strike Tuesday was an invitation to suicide.

After a two-day recess for meetings of Solidarity leaders, Walesa and Rakowski were making another try at defusing Poland's worst crisis since the nationwide strike wave last summer spawned the independent labor movement.

They were seeking to resolve the union's demand that the government fire three officials Solidarity blames for the police beating of 23 unionists in this northwestern city last Thursday, the first official use of force against Solidarity members.

Walesa told Warsaw Radio he hoped the negotiations would yield "satisfactory" results and end the need for a general strike. But the federation increased its demands on the government.

Solidarity's national commission voted earlier Tuesday to call a four-hour nationwide warning strike on Friday, followed by a general "sit-in" strike next Tuesday if the demands were not met. Before the vote of 35-3 with two abstentions, Walesa overcame a mini-rebellion by militants demanding immediate strike action and the breakoff of negotiations with the government.

Kania warned that the strike threat pushed the debt-ridden communist nation to the brink of explosion.

"Who has the courage to make out of a local incident a national cause threatening catastrophe?" he asked in a speech to agricultural officials broadcast by Warsaw Radio. "How can one call for strikes in this situation?"

He cited Poland's $27 billion debt to the West and said, "We have to undertake more. Export is dropping because of decreasing production. This diminishes possibilities to buy food and increases our debts.

"We are debating at a difficult moment for the country, the most dangerous since the August crisis. The economic crisis has been compounded by a deep political crisis. In such a situation, how should we understand the call to strikes? It cannot be understood otherwise than a call to self-annihilation."

This appeared to renew the threat of military intervention by the Soviet or Polish armies, possibly under the guise of the current maneuvers. Film clips and radio reports of the annual spring war games have become a daily staple on the government TV network.

A summit meeting Tuesday of the European Common Market nations cautioned against Soviet Bloc military intervention, saying Poland "has shown that she is capable of facing her internal problems herself" and "should continue to do so ... without outside interference.

The statement also promised an urgent review by the 10 West European allies of Poland's requests for additional economic aid and food shipments.

In another development, the Soviet weekly newspaper Literary Gazette renewed allegations that the AFL-CIO is interfering in Poland's internal affairs by supporting Solidarity.

Saudi livestock ship said afire

The 8,300-ton Mvkairish radioed it was on fire some 250 miles off Geraldton, the Australian Coastal Surveillance Center reported. The SOS said some of the 70 crew members had taken to lifeboats while others remained aboard fighting the fire.

A plane from Perth was searching for the ship, the air force was standing by, and the 10,000-ton freighter Asia Gold, was heading for the ship's last reported position, the rescue center said.

From hobo to publisher, variety spices life

By GALE TOLLIN
Associated Press Writer

ORTONVILLE, Minn. (AP) — In hobo camps, Lem Kaercher learned more than how to make soup.

"I learned a lot about living from being on the bum," says Kaercher, 89.

Like patience, maybe.

There's been talk for years about renaming the Big Stone Wildlife Refuge the "Lem Kaercher National Wildlife Refuge" in honor of all the work he did getting it established. Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., offered such a resolution in 1979, saying the refuge resulted from Kaercher's initiative and commitment.

The resolution never got out of the Committee on Environment and Public Works. Durenberger says he'll try again this year.

Lemuel Amerman Kaercher has been a fry cook and a hobo, newspaper publisher, radio-station founder and theater operator. In Ortonville, he's known as "Lem," a brassy gatecrasher, a hometown champion, a legislator who blended levity with lawmaking.

Lem, one of 11 children in the Aaron Kaercher family, was born and reared in the Ortonville area. His father started a grain mill, studied law while working in the mill and became an attorney. The elder Kaercher became interested in journalism and founded newspapers in Ortonville and in nearby Wheaton and Brown's Valley.

Lem was "still in short pants" when he ran away from home the first time. His running stemmed from an insatiable desire to see the country.

It was Kaercher's practice for many years to tour the U.S. by boxcar, returning to Ortonville for the winters. He "bummed" for meals and slept in hobo jungles. Sometimes he'd remain in a town for a few weeks. He could usually find work because he made it a point to "look clean." At the Graves Hotel in Lewistown, Mont., he spent three months "cutting grapefruit and making pancakes."

His schooling ended after eight grades. At age 28 he quit "riding the rails" and sank his roots in extreme western Minnesota as editor of the Ortonville Independent. He brought back with him an education acquired as a hobo.

"I've made my living all these years from people, and I learned a lot about people while I was bumming," Kaercher says.

When Ortonville's only theater was about to close, he and some friends rebuilt it in 1948 and Lem operated it for 10 years. When he figured Ortonville should have a radio station, Kaercher and his son, Jim, founded KDIO in 1956. "After we got it going, we sold it," Lem says.

In 1953, Kaercher went to visit hobos camped along an area creek. He was invited to partake of the soup cooking over their fire. Impressed with the smoky flavor, he adapted the recipe to mass production. The product, "a jungle recipe fit for a king," is manufactured in New Jersey and marketed by Hobo Soup Inc.(Lem and Jim Kaercher).

Kaercher served one term in the Minnesota House in the late 1940s. He attended both Republican and Democratic-Farmer-Labor conventions, "generally stayed with the liberals" but "never paid attention to anyone and voted as I darn pleased."

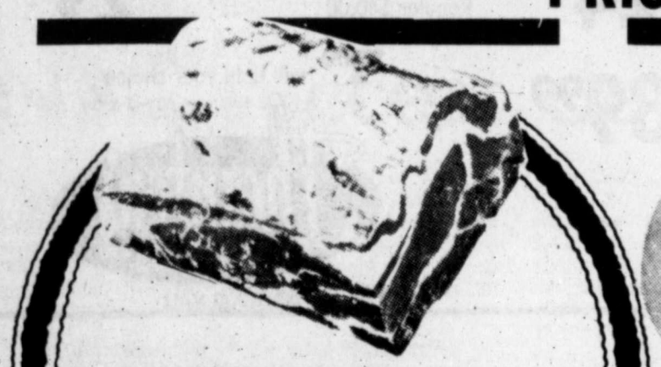

As a newspaperman, Kaercher never recognized geographical limitations or closed doors. Without invitation, he showed up at an Iowa farm for Nikita Khrushchev's visit. When Winston Churchill spoke in Fulton, Mo., Lem Kaercher was there. Another time he was the only white person at a Chicago meeting of Black Muslims.

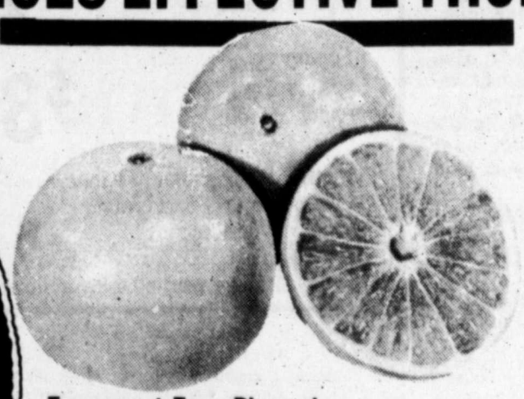

Lem and Jim are now co-publishers of the Independent but the son directs most day-to-day operations. The paper has one of the busiest plants in the area; it does the offset printing of 15 weekly newspapers in western Minnesota and northeastern South Dakota.

MENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Drug use, abuse can cause certain mental symptoms

By KENNETH H. WOLF, MSSW, SP

Question: Does drug abuse ever cause mental illness?

Answer: It is known that the use or abuse of certain drugs does cause mental symptoms. Sometimes the symptoms go away shortly after the use of the drug is discontinued. In other instances, mental symptoms which began during the time the drug was being abused persist for many months or years after discontinuation of the abuse. In such cases, the person usually carries some form of mental illness diagnosis.

When mental symptoms persist after discontinuation of abuse, we are not always certain if the drug abuse itself was the direct cause or if some other intermediate factor, such as some aspect of brain chemistry which may have been on the borderline of abornormality to begin with, was the causeative factor. In other words, the person may have gone on to develop mental symptoms later on without any presence of drug abuse. However, it is fairly certain in such cases that the drug abuse at least hastened the development of mental symptoms.

Drugs such as alcohol, narcotics, sleep preparations, certain pain medications, certain tranquilizers, amphetamines, marijuana and PCP (angel dust) are known as having a high potential for abuse because they do alter a person's mental state. When abused, any of these drugs may produce very apparent mental symptoms including disorientation, acute paranoia or explosive behavior.

The danger in abusing such drugs is that they may indeed produce gross or subtle changes in the brain which are fairly permanent in nature. It is well known, for example, that chronic alcohol abuse can result in permanent brain dysfunction. More studies are needed to determine if this finding applies to other popular drugs of abuse as well. It would certainly be wise to be safe and avoid the abuse of such substances for both physical and psychological reasons.

Question: There seems to be a lot of interest recently in the hospice movement and in ways to help the dying patient live his last days with dignity and warm human contact. Are there any particular mental health problems which a person with terminal illness is more likely to require help with?

Answer: Dr. Elisabeth Kubler-Ross has worked extensively with terminally ill patients and their families. One of the most profound difficulties that such patients face, according to her, is the fact that people tend to withdraw from and even actively avoid the dying patient. The topic of death and getting one's affairs in order is often avoided by family members.

Studies have shown that even doctors and nurses are likely to avoid such a patient if he or she is in the hospital. This avoidance by others comes at a time when the person hs a great ned for human contact in order to accept the reality of death, to say his good-byes, and to prepare his affairs. Deep depression may result if the dying person is avoided by others.

The diagnosis of a terminal illness is usually met first with the reaction of denial. The person believes that it can't be him or that some mistake was made. The next stage is anger and rage at the unfairness of it all. Next comes an attempt to bargain or negotiate for more time. Such attempts to bargain are usually made to God, or someone's conception of the Supreme Being.

The next stage is depression and sadness at the reality of death. Finally, acceptance is the end state in which the person comes to be able to make his final arrangements and say his good-byes. Caring and concern and human contact are needed to help the person through these stages. This is one of the central purposes of the hospice movement.

From hobo to publisher, variety spices life

By GALE TOLLIN
Associated Press Writer

ORTONVILLE, Minn. (AP) — In hobo camps, Lem Kaercher learned more than how to make soup.

"I learned a lot about living from being on the bum," says Kaercher, 89.

Like patience, maybe.

There's been talk for years about renaming the Big Stone Wildlife Refuge the "Lem Kaercher National Wildlife Refuge" in honor of all the work he did getting it established. Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., offered such a resolution in 1979, saying the refuge resulted from Kaercher's initiative and commitment.

The resolution never got out of the Committee on Environment and Public Works. Durenberger says he'll try again this year.

Lemuel Amerman Kaercher has been a fry cook and a hobo, newspaper publisher, radio-station founder and theater operator. In Ortonville, he's known as "Lem," a brassy gatecrasher, a hometown champion, a legislator who blended levity with lawmaking.

Lem, one of 11 children in the Aaron Kaercher family, was born and reared in the Ortonville area. His father started a grain mill, studied law while working in the mill and became an attorney. The elder Kaercher became interested in journalism and founded newspapers in Ortonville and in nearby Wheaton and Brown's Valley.

Lem was "still in short pants" when he ran away from home the first time. His running stemmed from an insatiable desire to see the country.

It was Kaercher's practice for many years to tour the U.S. by boxcar, returning to Ortonville for the winters. He "bummed" for meals and slept in hobo jungles. Sometimes he'd remain in a town for a few weeks. He could usually find work because he made it a point to "look clean." At the Graves Hotel in Lewistown, Mont., he spent three months "cutting grapefruit and making pancakes."

His schooling ended after eight grades. At age 28 he quit "riding the rails" and sank his roots in extreme western Minnesota as editor of the Ortonville Independent. He brought back with him an education acquired as a hobo.

"I've made my living all these years from people, and I learned a lot about people while I was bumming," Kaercher says.

When Ortonville's only theater was about to close, he and some friends rebuilt it in 1948 and Lem operated it for 10 years. When he figured Ortonville should have a radio station, Kaercher and his son, Jim, founded KDIO in 1956. "After we got it going, we sold it," Lem says.

In 1953, Kaercher went to visit hobos camped along an area creek. He was invited to partake of the soup cooking over their fire. Impressed with the smoky flavor, he adapted the recipe to mass production. The product, "a jungle recipe fit for a king," is manufactured in New Jersey and marketed by Hobo Soup Inc.(Lem and Jim Kaercher).

Kaercher served one term in the Minnesota House in the late 1940s. He attended both Republican and Democratic-Farmer-Labor conventions, "generally stayed with the liberals" but "never paid attention to anyone and voted as I darn pleased."

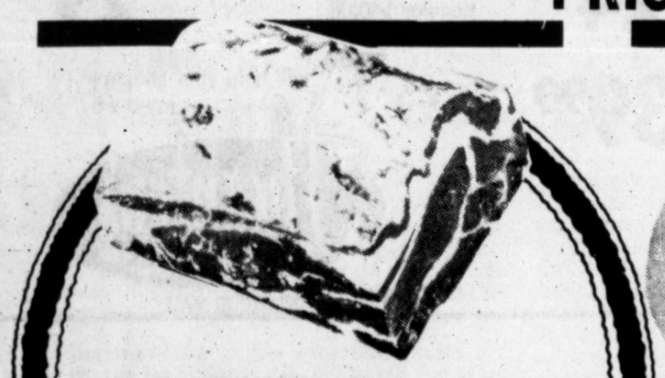

As a newspaperman, Kaercher never recognized geographical limitations or closed doors. Without invitation, he showed up at an Iowa farm for Nikita Khrushchev's visit. When Winston Churchill spoke in Fulton, Mo., Lem Kaercher was there. Another time he was the only white person at a Chicago meeting of Black Muslims.

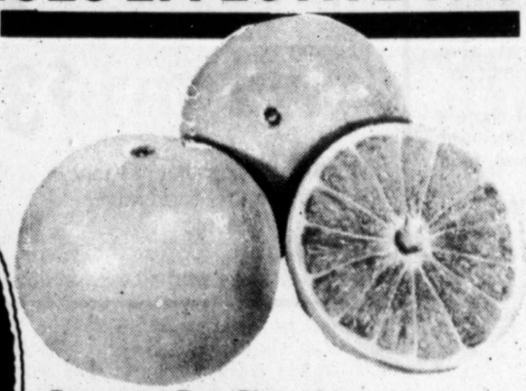

Lem and Jim are now co-publishers of the Independent but the son directs most day-to-day operations. The paper has one of the busiest plants in the area; it does the offset printing of 15 weekly newspapers in western Minnesota and northeastern South Dakota.

MENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Drug use, abuse can cause certain mental symptoms

By KENNETH H. WOLF, MSSW, SP

Question: Does drug abuse ever cause mental illness?

Answer: It is known that the use or abuse of certain drugs does cause mental symptoms. Sometimes the symptoms go away shortly after the use of the drug is discontinued. In other instances, mental symptoms which began during the time the drug was being abused persist for many months or years after discontinuation of the abuse. In such cases, the person usually carries some form of mental illness diagnosis.

When mental symptoms persist after discontinuation of abuse, we are not always certain if the drug abuse itself was the direct cause or if some other intermediate factor, such as some aspect of brain chemistry which may have been on the borderline of abornormality to begin with, was the causeative factor. In other words, the person may have gone on to develop mental symptoms later on without any presence of drug abuse. However, it is fairly certain in such cases that the drug abuse at least hastened the development of mental symptoms.

Drugs such as alcohol, narcotics, sleep preparations, certain pain medications, certain tranquilizers, amphetamines, marijuana and PCP (angel dust) are known as having a high potential for abuse because they do alter a person's mental state. When abused, any of these drugs may produce very apparent mental symptoms including disorientation, acute paranoia or explosive behavior.

The danger in abusing such drugs is that they may indeed produce gross or subtle changes in the brain which are fairly permanent in nature. It is well known, for example, that chronic alcohol abuse can result in permanent brain dysfunction. More studies are needed to determine if this finding applies to other popular drugs of abuse as well. It would certainly be wise to be safe and avoid the abuse of such substances for both physical and psychological reasons.

Question: There seems to be a lot of interest recently in the hospice movement and in ways to help the dying patient live his last days with dignity and warm human contact. Are there any particular mental health problems which a person with terminal illness is more likely to require help with?

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer

MIDDLETOWN, Pa. (AP) — Two years after its spectacular leap to nuclear notoriety, the Three Mile Island reactor complex is a hot potato no one wants to touch.

The operator of the nuclear plant is on the verge of bankruptcy, cleanup insurance funds are running out and the small island in the Susquehanna River is turning into a high-level radioactive nuclear waste dump.

But no one is rushing in to save the day.

"It's a pass-the-buck kind of thing, and nothing is getting done," said John Minnich, chairman of the Dauphin County Commission. "God help us if we have another accident somewhere. Who is going to clean up the problem?"

The Three Mile Island Unit 2 reactor was disabled on March 28, 1979, in what is considered the nation's worst commercial nuclear accident.

DURING THE two-week emergency, the plant overheated, the radioactive reactor core started to melt and 600,000 gallons of contaminated water flooded the basement of the concrete reactor containment building.

Last summer, amid much controversy, some 43,000 curies of radioactive krypton gas were vented from the containment building. Today the plant owners have almost finished an elaborate $9 million system to filter radioactive cesium and strontium from the water. Using a simpler system, they have removed the radioactive isotopes from less contaminated water that flooded an auxiliary building.

But canisters containing the filtered particles are still on the island, and local citizens, both pro- and anti-nuclear, are growing increasingly anxious about the situation.

"If they don't clean it up soon, we are going to have more problems than we had during the crisis," said Anne Trunk, a member of a TMI citizens advisory panel.

She added, "It's starting to bother a lot of people. A lot of my neighbors are worried that it is going to become a dump site."

The consensus appears to be that the projected seven-year, $1 billion cleanup is moving too slowly. The reasons for the snail's pace include intense public scrutiny and opposition, lumbering regulatory procedures and, above all else, tight cash reserves.

"THE WHOLE thing revolves around money. There's really no money moving, and that's the real crisis," said Rep. Allen Ertel, D-Pa., whose congressional district includes TMI.

Cleanup director Bob Arnold says he needs $100 million to $125 million a year to decontaminate the plant as quickly as possible. But General Public Utilities Corp., the TMI owner, cut back spending from $100 million to $50 million last September.

GPU has also used up two-thirds of a $300 million cleanup insurance policy, and Arnold says GPU cannot possibly come up with the remaining $700 million of the projected $1 billion cost because regulatory commissions in New Jersey and Pennsylvania have said customer revenues may not be used for the cleanup.

Earlier this month, Ertel introduced a bill that would create a $750 million insurance fund to help clean up TMI and other nuclear accident sites. The fund would be built with contributions from nuclear utilities across the country.

The bill comes at a time when there appear to be some breaks in the logjam.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission is close to approving a final environmental impact statement on the cleanup. NRC chairman Joseph Hendrie said that would wrap up the study phase and pave the way for action.

PRESIDENT Reagan has recommended a $75 million federal investment in cleanup research and aid over the next two years. But Ertel said one subcommittee has already shaved $12 million from the allocation, and part of the rest won't be available until 1983 — "so far off that it's ridiculous."

Arnold said GPU has deliberately refrained from leading its own survival fight because "there are so many subjective reactions to the company that anything we suggest might inspire resistance."

The company has developed some cleanup technology, but it has been hampered by severe cash flow constraints that show no sign of easing. According to GPU vice president Verner Condon, GPU has not issued dividends for five quarters and the prospect of payments for this quarter is "nil."

He estimated stockholders have lost $170 million in dividends since the accident, and the value of their stock has declined $840 million.

Metropolitan Edison, the GPU subsidiary that operates and owns 50 percent of the plant, has added $165 million to customer bills, entirely to pay for replacement power. It remains marginally solvent and faces another crisis in April, when $23 million in state taxes are due.

A CONSORTIUM of banks has said it will not let Met Ed borrow money to pay its taxes unless the state Public Utility Commission grants most or all of a $76.5 million rate increase by April 15.

The commission has said the decision will be made later this month.

The banks say that is not soon enough.

The state Revenue Department says it cannot give Met Ed an extension on its taxes.

One way to increase GPU and Met Ed revenues — and reduce replacement power costs — would be to restart TMI's Unit 1 reactor, shut down by the NRC after the accident.

BUT MONTHS of NRC safety hearings about the undamaged reactor will not end until April 30. There is tremendous community opposition.

Condon said he is encouraged by the Ertel bill, the Reagan administration's attitude and a General Accounting Office study due in May.

But, he said, "Within the immediate future we cannot rely on any of these things. So the Pennsylvania PUC is going to have to provide for Met Ed's survival until these longer-term things develop. There is just nowhere else to go."
