Man dies in 2-vehicle accident

Staff Report

A Fort Worth man was pronounced dead at the scene after his Winnebago motor home overturned near the intersection of Business Interstate 20 and County Road 1290.

According to Department of Public Safety Trooper Bob Bullock, the man — identified as Troy Lefoy Lee, 67 — was driving eastbound on Business 20 when he apparently swerved to avoid striking a small pickup truck waiting at the traffic signal.

The motor home struck a glancing blow to the right rear portion of the truck and continued on through the intersection and off the south side of the road, Bullock said.

The vehicle overturned in the banked ditch alongside the road.

Bullock and others present at the scene said Lee's neck was turned at an unusual angle and may have been broken.

OPEC freezes oil production for rest of year

■ Analysts predict prices will skid at least a dollar or two more a barrel because of cartel's inability to act.

Associated Press

GENEVA — OPEC agreed to freeze oil production for the rest of the year Saturday after failing to find a formula to cut output and push prices up.

Iranian Oil Minister Gholamreza Aqazadeh called the accord "unfortunate" and criticized rival Saudi Arabia, the world's largest oil producer, for refusing to accept proposals for sizable production cuts to prop up prices.

"This is the best we could have done under the circumstances," Saudi Oil Minister Hisham Nazer said.

Analysts predicted prices would skid at least a dollar or two more a barrel because of the cartel's inability to act.

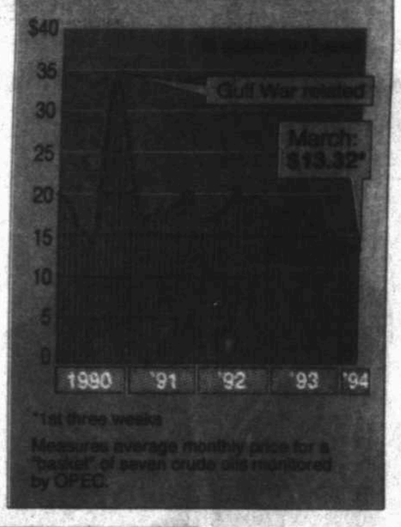

"This is certainly not the best solution to the problem," acknowledged OPEC Secretary-General Subroto at the end of two days of bargaining at a luxury hotel in Geneva.

With the markets awash with oil, prices are hovering near their lowest levels in five years. OPEC oil is selling for more than $7 a barrel below the cartel's $21 target.

OPEC oil, cheaper and cheaper

Overproduction has cut the price of oil produced by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. Latest prices are well below OPEC's target price of $21 for each 42-gallon barrel. Ministers of the 12-nation group met Friday to set production levels for the spring.

Flames fueled by wind destroy area home

Staff Report

Firefighters from the city of Midland, the community of Greenwood and Midland County joined to battle a blaze south of Business Interstate 20 east of County Road 1210.

Flames spread across many acres and destroyed a home in the area before firefighters were able to contain the fire, officials said.

Firefighters were able to keep the flames from spreading across CR 1210. High winds drove the fire eastward, but it was under control by 6 p.m.

Although the fire's progress was checked, firefighters remained in the area deep into the night fighting hot spots.

One nearby resident, Mary Adams, learned about the fire from a phone call.

"(A neighbor) called up and said, 'There's a fire behind your house,'" Mrs. Adams said.

Although her home was adjacent to the house that burned, Mrs. Adams' house was spared. A privacy fence bordering her property was destroyed, however.

The cause of the blaze was not immediately known. But at one point, exploding propane, oxygen and acetylene bottles that were near the home that was destroyed kept firefighters at bay, according to officials at the scene.

Although the house was totally razed by the advancing flames, the residents own other property and housing, according to neighbors.

Firefighters from the city of Midland, Greenwood and Midland County joined forces to combat this brushfire that claimed a home on County Road 1210.

New radar gives forecasters edge during tornado season

Official: Midland has plan for emergencies

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

If a tornado hits Midland, the city's emergency plan would go into effect, city officials said.

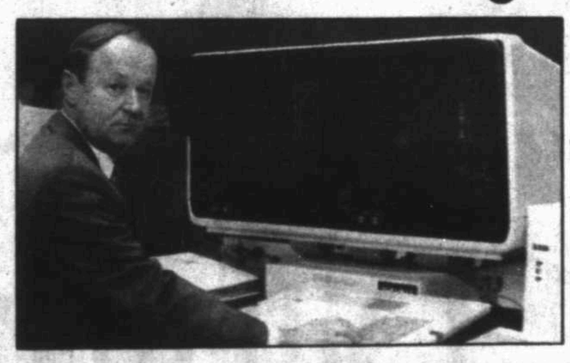

"I wish I could tell you the city of Midland has a state-of-the-art siren system to alert everyone, but we don't," said Bill Shipman, emergency management coordinator.

That's because of the high costs and no major disaster has warranted the investment, he said.

But that doesn't mean the city isn't prepared for a tornado or other disasters, Shipman said.

If there is a threat of a tornado, the ci-

Tips for tornado survival

■ Seek shelter in a basement, closet or room protected by as many interior walls as possible.
■ Never waste time opening windows to counteract pressure differentials.
■ Move from a large open building, such as a gym or auditorium, into a hallway or small room.
■ Get out of your vehicle or mobile home.
■ If you're outdoors, get in a culvert. Avoid drainage ditches that might flood.

LUBBOCK — Meteorologists on the South Plains armed themselves with new technology just in time for the springtime storms that can brew into black masses of fury.

The sophisticated radar package WSR-88D serves as an eye in the sky to watch rotating winds that might form tornados.

At the National Weather Service in Lubbock, where the $2.5 million radar was installed in March, forecasters say they've gained an edge tracking when and where tornados touch down in a 150-mile radius.

Many Somalis optimistic about peace agreement

By Donatella Lorch
N.Y. Times News Service

MOGADISHU, Somalia — When the U.S. troops arrived in Somalia 15 months ago, Hassan Tahlil Kahie joined the welcoming crowds, convinced that the fighting would finally end. But as the troops left on Friday, the 28-year-old militia commander shrugged in disinterest.

He was more concerned about the chances of success of a newly signed peace agreement among warring Somali factions. In the last year, his hopes had been repeatedly dashed as more than five peace conferences and many more cease-fires broke down. Now, like many other Mogadishu residents, he is optimistic, though skeptical, believing that this is Somalia's last chance at survival.

"Deep inside me, I wish it would work," said Kahie, who turned guerrilla fighter at age 17 and then joined Gen. Mohammed Farah Aidid's militia in Mogadishu four years ago. "The Somalis have seen that no clan can win by force. Sometimes you are forced to fight, but I am so tired of fighting. This agreement is all we have. There is no other chance."

The U.S. troop departure symbolically represented not only the end of a military-focused mission but also the beginning of a new phase in Somalia's politics. On Thursday, after protracted discussions and repeated deadlocks, Aidid and his chief rival, Mohammed Ali Mahdi, signed an accord in which they agreed to a cease-fire, repudiated violence and set a date for a conference in April that will prepare for presidential elections.

The 11-point understanding is little more than a broadly worded bare-bones pact that critics say the clan leaders signed under pressure from Western aid donors and the United Nations.

But in the complex world of Somali politics, where image and reality often fuse, it may set the stage for new political debate, reshuffling of alliances and the weakening of powerful clan-based militias. It is the first step on what, even in the most positive scenarios, will be an extremely difficult path at reconstruction.

"No matter how successful the political process, there are some bedrock socio-economic problems that will remain," a senior U.S. official said. "There are those who say the agreement is Western window dressing. Two fellows signed it. It's true it's not much more than that. But they could have walked away from this, and they didn't. At least its moving in the right direction."

■ Analysis

The decision to sign also shows a recognition that increasing chaos may destroy the power bases of the faction leaders and that if Somalia is to rebuild it desperately needs Western aid.

The political stalemate has contributed to a marked decrease in interest among Western aid donors. In 1993, the United Nations said the country needed $148 million in relief, but donors contributed only $37 million. Because of security concerns, relief agencies either have moved out of certain towns or completely out of Somalia. In early 1993, Mogadishu had 46 aid agencies; now there are fewer than a dozen.

The biggest problem in the capital is a growing unemployment, which is feeding an increase in armed banditry. The United Nations and the United States were the main employers in Somalia, providing employment to more than 20,000 Somalis. An additional 600 Somalis working at the airport are being laid off this week.

Both the United States and the United Nations have poured millions of dollars into rebuilding an 8,000-member Somali police force. But it is difficult for the police to work without a legal system in place.

"The police are not very effective," said Mohammed Jirdeh, a wealthy and respected Somali businessman. "If this peace accord works, then the police will have some sort of central authority."

The accord, no matter how shaky, is being greeted by the Somalis as an agreement molded by the Somalis themselves. In that fact alone, it is very different from the last major peace accord, signed last March by all the factions in Ethiopia's capital, Addis Ababa. Immediately afterward, one of the main clauses calling for a cease-fire was broken, and Aidid pulled out, saying he could not comply with any of the decisions because the United Nations had dictated them.

The U.S. troop departure symbolically represented not only the end of a military-focused mission but also the beginning of a new phase in Somalia's politics.

In this political round in the Kenyan capital, Nairobi, the Somali talks were again sponsored by the United Nations, whose representative acted only as a go-between, and Aidid willingly took part.

"The Nairobi agreement is more important than any of the others so far because it was Somalis that made it," Kahie said. "That is what gives me some hope."

Clerics beat man who teaches illiterate women

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Fundamentalist Islamic clerics beat a man with shoes and ordered his head shaved because he ignored their orders to stop educating illiterate women.

Abdur Rashid's father complained to police about the beating but no one was arrested, the Banglabazar Patrika newspaper reported.

The clerics accuse most of the 800 volunteer groups operating in the predominantly Muslim nation with bribing peasants to convert to Christianity and adopt western ways.

The clerics have forced at least 10 men to divorce their wives for meeting with the groups, which promote education, self-employment, health care and family planning among women.

Most of Bangladesh's 120 million people are illiterate.

Rashid, a field worker for Friends of Village Development, was beaten publicly last week by at least five clerics at Haripur village, 120 miles northeast of Dhaka. He collapsed as the blows rained on him.

His father broke down in tears as he shaved Rashid's head. The clerics then fined the father $625 — two years salary for a farm worker.

The government of Prime Minister Khaleda Zia has made no move against the clerics.

Religious zealots have vandalized 1,400 girls' schools and torched 55 of them in the last four months.

Israeli soldiers detain five Jewish settlers in Hebron

HEBRON, Occupied West Bank (AP) — In an unusual show of force, Israeli soldiers disarmed and detained several Jewish settlers after a confrontation Saturday at the Tomb of the Patriarchs, where a settler killed 30 Palestinian worshipers last month.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, meanwhile, said he would not move settlers out of the tense city of Hebron "at this stage."

In several neighborhoods in Hebron, soldiers clashed with Palestinian stone-throwers Saturday after the army lifted a monthlong curfew imposed to quell protests after the Feb. 25 massacre.

Scores of youths pelted troops from behind barricades made from scrap metal and burning tires. Three Palestinians were wounded by army gunfire.

Soldiers also fired tear gas to disperse several hundred Palestinians gathered at the ruins of an apartment house leveled this week in an army raid in which three gunmen from the Muslim militant group Hamas were killed.

At least 21 people were hospitalized after inhaling tear gas, including 15 children.

Despite the lifting of the curfew, most of Hebron remained shuttered in mourning for the slain Hamas gunmen. Masked Hamas activists, carrying Palestinian flags, marched to a wake, chanting: "Oh, martyrs, your blood shall not be wasted."

In clashes elsewhere in the occupied lands, some 30 Palestinians were hurt Saturday, including eight wounded in the Gaza Strip refugee camp of Jebaliya.

At the Tomb of the Patriarchs, which has been closed to Muslim and Jewish worshipers since the massacre, angry Hebron settlers confronted soldiers after being barred from praying at the site, the army said. The site is revered by both Muslims and Jews.

Police disarmed and detained five settlers, Israel radio said. Troops wrote down the names of other settlers involved in the scuffle.

The action against the settlers was unusual, particularly in light of past complaints by Palestinians that soldiers have ignored settler vigilantes.

Israeli troops stationed at the Tomb of the Patriarchs have told a commission of inquiry into the massacre that out of dozens of complaints filed against settlers for damaging mosque property, police rarely pressed charges. Troops also said they were ordered not to open fire on settlers, even when the settlers were shooting to kill unarmed Palestinians.

The PLO has demanded that Israel move the more than 400 settlers out of Hebron to reduce friction. Rabin said Saturday they would stay put for now, but hinted he might act against the six Jewish enclaves in Hebron later.

"I don't think that as this stage we are intending, or at least I, don't intend to move out the Jews who live in Hebron. All the rest is not something that should be said or discussed publicly," Rabin told Israel army radio.

The PLO has won Israeli concessions to improve security for Palestinians in the city, including the deployment of several hundred Palestinian policemen and a contingent of international observers.

Israeli negotiator Uri Savir said Saturday the observers, most likely Norwegians, would be armed with pistols.

He said he was hopeful that the details could be finalized by Tuesday, and that Israel and the PLO would then resume talks about implementing the agreement for Palestinian autonomy in Jericho and the Gaza Strip.

Savir said the original April 13 target date for implementing autonomy apparently would not be met.

WEATHER WATCH

Today cloudy skies, chance of rain

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies, a 30-percent chance of rain or showers and not as warm with a high in the upper 40s and north winds 10-20 mph and gusty. Tonight should be cloudy with a 40-percent chance of light rain in the evening and possible light snow after midnight with a low in the lower 30s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Monday should be cloudy with a 40-percent chance of light snow in the morning with no accumulation expected and a high in the upper 40s.

After an overnight low of 62, Saturday's high reached 81, compared to the record high for that date of 90 set in 1956. The record low was 14 set in 1931.

STATE

A dreary weekend began Saturday with clouds, high winds and rain blanketing much of the state. Much of the same conditions are forecast for today.

Clouds that covered South Texas early Saturday began wearing off because of a warm front that passed through the area, allowing some sun to peak through and bumping temperatures into the 90s in the lower Rio Grande Valley.

Other parts of the region recorded highs in the 70s and 80s.

The break from the clouds was to be short-lived, though, as they were expected to be back in the region today, with showers and thunderstorms possible.

Overnight lows in the 50s and 60s were to give way to 60s in the Hill Country and 80s in the lower Valley.

The South Plains part of West Texas spent the afternoon under a high-wind warning and a blowing dust advisory. Westerly winds as fast as 60 mph caused reduced visibility below one mile at times.

Other parts of the region were swept by high winds blowing from the central Rocky Mountains.

The rest of West Texas was under partly to mostly cloudy skies, with some showers across the extreme eastern sections.

West Texas should be under partly cloudy to cloudy skies and a chance for showers through today. Some of the rain could turn to snow overnight and early today, although little or no accumulation is expected.

Overnight lows were to be between the 20s in the north to the 40s south. Highs today should range from the 30s in the Panhandle to near 70 along the Rio Grande.

NATION

Severe thunderstorms and hail hit parts of the Midwest on Saturday. Clouds hung over most of the East and sunny skies prevailed in the West.

The storms spawned a tornado near Mineral Wells in northern Texas and pelted Tulsa and other areas of Oklahoma with dime-sized hail.

Light rain and snow fell on the upper half of the Mississippi Valley. Snow also fell on parts of the northern Plains, and it was accompanied by strong winds. A winter storm watch was posted for parts of Minnesota and Wisconsin, where heavy snow was expected. A storm watch was posted through today for parts of Wisconsin.

The storm front was also forecast to drop up to 6 inches of snow on north-central Pennsylvania before turning to rain today.

Elsewhere, skies were generally overcast east of the Mississippi Valley while sunny skies stretched from the northern and central Pacific coast to the northern and central plateau. Snow fell in parts of Arizona and was moving toward New Mexico.

FATALITY: Accident claims life

(From 1A)

A woman and two small children in the pickup truck were not injured Bullock said.

"They were all strapped in. The little one was secured in a restraining seat — I was sure glad to see that," he said.

An autopsy has been ordered.

Investigators are uncertain about what may have caused the crash. It is unknown whether the traffic light was red or green at the time of the accident.

No charges have been filed in the incident.

RADAR: New technology gives forecasters edge with tornados

(From 1A)

"We have tornados every year, but it's just a matter of bad luck if they hit anything," said Andy Anderson, NWS meteorologist in charge. "We've seen time after time where if people have just a few minutes of warning, it saves lives."

Each year in Texas — most often from April to June — thunderstorms spawn about 120 tornados that on average kill 15 people and hurt 200 others.

The NWS in Amarillo received the state's first WSR-88D last spring; others operate in Houston and the Dallas area.

Amarillo weather watchers credit the new technology with helping detect 17 of the Texas Panhandle's 20 tornados last year. The three that slipped by the radar were weak, said meteorologist Douglas Crowley.

"It's been a tremendous help to us," Crowley said.

The Doppler works like this: Scanning radar beams bounce off atmospheric conditions like hail or raindrops. The Doppler's screens reflect a rainbow color scheme — from powder blue to dark purple and reds — measuring the energy intensity in a thunderstorm.

Meteorologists can "watch" the speed and direction of a rotating air column by monitoring the colors on their computer screen.

Crowley said the radar allowed the Amarillo NWS to issue warnings four to 25 minutes before the tornados touched down. No one was hurt or killed in Panhandle tornados last year, he said.

"It's finally knowing that you're moving into modern science and technology, giving you information to make proper decisions to protect the public with," he said.

Anderson called West Texas a tornado breeding ground, where upper-atmosphere systems tap into warm moisture from the Gulf of Mexico.

Seventy percent of Texas' tornados are classified as weak: They travel less than three miles and last only a few minutes.

Less than 2 percent of the tornados in Texas are classified as violent: These 200-mph monsters can grow more than one mile wide and stay on the ground for more than one hour.

Such "violent" tornados hit Waco on May 11, 1953, killing 114 people; Wichita Falls on April 10, 1979, killing 45 people; and Saragosa on May 23, 1987, killing 30 people.

"We just frankly don't know enough about them," Anderson said. "What initiates that rotation? What gets them started?"

At NWS stations around the country, Doppler technology is gradually replacing World War II-era radar that can't trace moving air currents.

Anderson was pleased but cautious about the new tool in Lubbock.

"I don't want to give the impression that we're going to find every tornado and give adequate warning, because that's not the case," he said.

"As good as that new radar is, there's just no substitute to having a trained spotter in the right place."

PLAN: Midland has emergency plan for storms

(From 1A)

ty's emergency 911 communication center would be notified via a wire service from the National Weather Service.

"As soon as we get those in the communication center, even if it's a warning, it's put out on cable (television). We have a cable override," Shipman said.

The city can also notify radio stations and the three television networks' local affiliates, which also receive the information from the NWS.

In addition, the city government, schools and hospitals generally have a NOAA — National Oceanic Atmospheric Administration — weather radio, which broadcasts continuous weather information and has an alarm system that goes off in case of a severe weather warning or watch.

Shipman recommends a NOAA radio, available at electronic stores for under $40, for organizations and individuals that might not otherwise be readily notified of a weather emergency.

"It can do what a siren system does. And it does better because you can press a button and it tells you what it's for," he said.

When officials receive a warning and notify the public, those involved in the emergency management plan are put on alert.

If an emergency does occur, key personnel — such as the police and fire chiefs, the sheriff and mayor — are called to a central location in the basement of the Police Department.

"The people out in the field would relate back to us with their radios," Shipman said. Decisions would be made from the center and action taken as needed, he said.

In the case of a tornado emergency, those involved would include: the city and county, the Midland County Red Cross, NWS and severe weather spotters, and representatives from the school district, the electric, gas and telephone companies, and the Department of Public Safety.

The high schools would be used as shelters if needed.

If the disaster was more than the city could handle, Odessa and Ector County, through a joint agreement, would be called for help. And if large enough, state and federal agencies would be contacted.

The plan isn't carried out blindly.

"We exercise it every year" with mock emergency drills, Shipman said. "That's the only way we can find out — if something doesn't actually happen — if we can handle it," he said.

And from now to the end of summer — especially to June — that's especially important because it's tornado season, he said.

"Midland's been real lucky and I hope it will continue to be, but you never know. Just because it hasn't happened doesn't mean it won't," Shipman said.

For information on disaster safety, Shipman can be reached at 685-7440.

CARTEL: OPEC agrees to freeze oil production

(From 1A)

The OPEC nations said they would freeze production at 24.5 million barrels a day, the current output ceiling, for the rest of the year. The group currently pumps about 300,000 barrels a day above that.

Iraq, barred from selling oil since its invasion of Kuwait in 1990, refused to endorse the agreement.

In deciding to freeze pumping, the ministers were counting on demand rising later in the year when the weather turns cold in the United States and other oil-consuming nations.

Most analysts had predicted the cartel would not be able to muster enough support for an output cut in order to drive up prices.

Saudi Arabia was unwilling to cut its pumping below its current rate of 8 million barrels a day, delegates said.

A report from the cartel's executive staff warned that prices could drop into the single digits if the ministers failed to act. Prices would improve only if production was slashed by more than a million barrels a day, it said.

Venezuelan Oil Minister Erwin Arrieta said the officials decided against a cutback because they didn't want "to lose our place in the market" to non-OPEC producers.

The cartel called on non-OPEC producers also to freeze production for the rest of the year. Some non-OPEC countries, including Oman, Russia, Egypt and Malaysia, had offered to make small cuts if OPEC would do the same. Britain and Norway, blamed for much of the surplus oil on the market, did not offer to cut their pumping.

The OPEC members are: Algeria, Gabon, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Libya, Nigeria, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and Venezuela.

Residents in housing project stand up to gang

By Dennis Hevesi

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — What struck the detectives, beyond the apparent viciousness of a group of youngsters, was that residents of the Glenwood Houses in Canarsie, including some of the older folks, were not going to take it, were willing to come forward and bear witness.

From their windows, or across the greens of the 20-building housing project off Ralph Avenue and Farragut Road, they saw the gang members — none older than 16 and one only 12 — stalking and mugging their victims, growing more violent each time.

More than half a dozen residents called 911, said Detective Lt. Joseph Cardinale of the housing police. "We didn't have to wait for them to tell us they were terrified," he said. "The tenants, lots of the tenants, got involved, calling up and saying this kid did this. We had several eyeballs who said they knew the guys."

"People weren't just sitting back and letting it happen," the lieutenant said. "They were telling us, 'Look, you do your part, we're doing our part.' It's what community policing is all about."

Last Tuesday, the housing police announced that five boys — who had named themselves Bebe's Gang after an animated movie called "Bebe's Kids" — had been arrested and charged with attacking 12 elderly women over a three-week period, including, on March 15, a 70-year-old whose skull and hip were fractured. That woman remains in critical condition at Brookdale Hospital.

Because of their ages, the police would identify only one of the boys, Arthur Roberts, 16, of 349 St. John's Place, Crown Heights. Only two of the boys, Cardinale said, actually lived in the Glenwood Houses.

The lieutenant would not, of course, identify any of the witnesses. But the resolve of those who came forward was reflected among some of the elderly this week at the Glenwood Senior Citizens Center.

Dwain Bredwood, 17, offered a succinct view of the muggers: "They're crazy."

Mexico's military denies claims it is preparing to attack rebels

SAN CRISTOBAL DE LAS CASAS, Mexico (AP) — As Mexico's political crisis deepened Saturday, the military denied rebel claims that it is building up troops in preparation for an attack.

The Zapatista National Liberation Army accused the government of planning to use the assassination of presidential candidate Luis Donaldo Colosio as a pretext for a new offensive. They said the military conducted aerial attacks and built up troops since Colosio was killed Wednesday.

The military denied the accusations, saying in a statement that "the troops of the army and the air force have not fired a single shot since the Jan. 12 cease-fire."

Recent troop movements were just to replace exhausted soldiers with fresh ones, and no buildup was under way, the statement said.

About 20 light armored vehicles and 400 troops guarded a military checkpoint on the highway leading to rebel strongholds near the Guatemalan border on Saturday, far more than are usually seen there.

The rebels said Friday they were suspending consideration of a draft peace accord reached with the government earlier this month and were preparing to defend themselves.

Roman Catholic Bishop Samuel Ruiz, who mediated the peace talks between government and rebel negotiators, on Saturday called on all sides "not to close the channels of access that will help effectively build peace."

Ruiz said the rebels had suspended meetings with Indian communities on the draft proposal, but had not cut off all dialogue with the government.

The government is now faced with trying to restart the peace process and finding a replacement for Colosio, who was the candidate of the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party.

Government ministers met with President Carlos Salinas de Gortari at his home Saturday. Party president Fernando Ortiz Arana said the party was in a time of "mourning and reflection" and would not immediately choose a new candidate.

The suspect charged in the assassination, Mario Aburto Martinez, suggested to investigators that he did not act alone, but did not say who else was involved, his lawyer said Friday.

A respected Mexico City newspaper, La Jornada, said Saturday that Aburto told authorities of contacts with "armed groups," but did not identify them.

The rebels said they would observe the cease-fire and fight only if attacked.

Germans rally against synagogue firebombing

BERLIN (AP) — Germans shamed and enraged by the Passover-eve synagogue firebombing that recalled Nazi pogroms poured into Luebeck's streets on Saturday and political leaders urged mass protests.

The attack early Friday, in which neo-Nazis are suspected, charred a room where the city's small Jewish community was to sit down today for the synagogue's first seder since the Holocaust.

There were no injuries. But the attack wounded the sensibilities of Germans frustrated by a violent minority of Nazi revivalists.

Foreign Minister Klaus Kinkel called on Germans to show their disgust with the religious and racial intolerance of rightist militants with demonstrations and candlelight vigils.

"The Germans must make it clear abroad that these attacks are serious isolated incidents ... of which we are ashamed," Kinkel told the Bild newspaper. Authorities offered a $30,000 reward.

Friday's attack was widely reported as the first synagogue firebombing in Germany since the Nazi era, although a firebomb was thrown onto the steps of an Essen synagogue on Feb. 28. It burned itself out without doing damage.

More than 2,500 people rallied before noon on Luebeck's market square on Saturday, observing five minutes of silence during which police halted all traffic on the bridges over the city's canals.

"38/94 Synagogues Are Burning Again — Finally Ban All Nazi Organizations," said one banner brought to the rally. In Berlin, about 1,000 people held a 15-minute vigil then marched to the Brandenburg Gate.

On Nov. 9, 1938, Nazi thugs burned Jewish homes, businesses and synagogues across the country. Luebeck's synagogue was among those.

A commentary in the Berlin Morgenpost newspaper said it had "appeared unimaginable until yesterday that here in Germany, two generations after the pogrom night of 1938, fire could again be thrown into a synagogue."

Hundreds of people gathered spontaneously at the 114-year-old Luebeck synagogue on Friday. Some lit candles. One laid a white carnation, others brought roses. It was important for these people just to be present.

On Saturday, people organized a round-the-clock vigil for the damaged synagogue, which was attacked at 2:20 a.m., shortly after police guards left for the night.

The Luebeck synagogue's cantor, 78-year-old Bertold Katz, was in shock Friday, his hands shaking as he spoke to reporters.

Katz is one of just two Luebeck Jews to survive the Holocaust and return to the city, which now has just 27 Jews.

Americans seek houses in Hanoi

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — Americans are looking for housing in Hanoi as part of preparations by the United States to open a diplomatic mission in the Vietnamese capital, a senior Vietnamese minister said Saturday.

The establishment of the mission, announced at the same time President Clinton lifted the 19-year-old embargo against Vietnam, represents the first step toward the normalization of relations between the two countries.

Hanoi will open a similar mission in Washington.

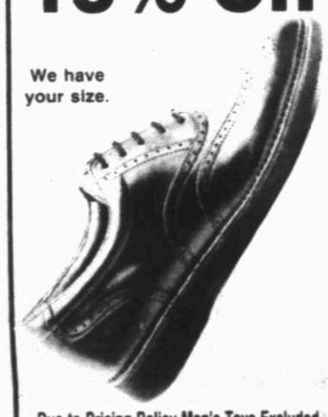

"The Americans are coming here looking for housing," Deputy Foreign Minister Le Mai said in an interview before the opening of an international conference on politics and economics in Hanoi.

"We don't have any agreement about the time frame but we have a gentleman's understanding that liaison offices will be established as soon as possible," Le Mai said.

Two days of talks on the opening of liaison offices and on U.S. financial claims against Vietnam from the war were recessed in Hanoi on March 1.

Asked if relations might be normalized by the end of this year with an upgrading of the missions to embassies, Le Mai said:

"It depends. ... The question of Vietnam has a lot of emotional factors in the United States. So I cannot say anything for sure about the timing."

Hiring of former GOP prosecutor angers Clinton's top aides

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two top White House officials challenged a government agency's hiring of a former Republican prosecutor to probe a failed Arkansas savings and loan now at the center of the Whitewater investigation, according to government sources.

Senior White House officials George Stephanopoulos and Harold Ickes placed a conference call Feb. 25 to a ranking Treasury Department official to express outrage over the decision of the Resolution Trust Corp. to retain former GOP prosecutor Jay B. Stephens, RTC sources said. They spoke on condition of anonymity.

Stephens, who sharply criticized the Clinton administration after being fired as U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia last March, was hired to handle possible civil lawsuits growing out of the failure of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan.

Stephanopoulos, in an interview with CNN, said he was "just trying to get information" and that he had expressed anger at the hiring of Stephens.

"Do I wish now that I hadn't have gotten angry, that I hadn't blown off steam? Of course I do," he said. "I wish I hadn't gotten angry."

He said he would not resign. White House spokesman Jeff Eller said the president and Chief of Staff Mack McLarty both had confidence in Stephanopoulos.

Eller described Clinton's reaction to the latest reports of contacts between the White House and federal regulators as "matter of fact."

Clinton administration aides have long regarded Stephens as a zealous political opponent of President Clinton and the two officials are said to have described his appointment in the Whitewater affair as "an outrageous choice."

The Washington Post and Time Magazine reported that Stephanopoulos and Ickes asked Deputy Treasury Secretary Roger Altman, the acting head of the RTC, "Can anything be done about it? Is it final?"

Time also said it learned that special counsel Robert Fiske has asked a grand jury in Washington to explore the question of whether the two officials used their influence to try to have Stephens fired.

The magazine quoted an unidentified administration official as speculating that the grand jury investigation could lead to one or more indictments for obstruction of justice.

It quoted Stephanopoulos as saying he merely asked Altman how Stephens came to be hired, adding that he "blew off steam over the unfairness of that decision."

Stephanopoulos did not return a message left on his answering machine Saturday.

Stephens was one of 93 Republican U.S. attorneys, all hired by former President Bush, who were fired by Clinton in February 1993. Stephens maintained the action was aimed at undercutting an investigation he was conducting.

Time reported that Joshua Steiner, the Treasury Department chief of staff, will be questioned by the grand jury this week about his own notes, contained in a personal diary, of a phone call with Stephanopoulos similar to the one Altman received.

But sources at the Treasury Department, speaking on condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press that Steiner kept no such notes on that phone call.

Stephanopoulos, speaking to CNN of his conversation with Steiner, said, "I was very puzzled by this decision (to hire Stephens) and I blew off steam because I thought it was unfair. . . . But once I got the facts from Josh about the retention, that ended the matter as far as I was concerned."

He said his only recollection of the conversation with Altman was that he asked him "to explain his decision to recuse himself from all of the matters, and I suggested that as a courtesy to the president he write a note explaining the decision."

White House Counsel Lloyd Cutler issued a statement saying he did not know all the facts because Fiske had asked White House officials not to interview the participants in the phone conversation.

"What I do know is that Mr. Stephens was an outspoken political opponent of the president and it was perfectly natural that White House officials would be surprised by his appointment to look into the Madison Guaranty matter," Cutler said in a statement delivered to reporters.

Cutler said he is confident such conversations won't be repeated because of recent orders directing White House officials to maintain a "firewall" between themselves and the Whitewater probe.

"At the same time, these conversations should not be blown out of proportion," Cutler said. "No one has suggested that any action was taken to remove Mr. Stephens. And of course he is still conducting the RTC's civil inquiry at this time."

Senate GOP leader Bob Dole said Saturday that news of the phone call "underscores the need for congressional hearings into the Whitewater-Madison affair and this administration's handling of it."

As U.S. attorney, Stephens won the conviction of former Washington Mayor Marion Barry on drug charges. He also served as a deputy White House counsel under President Reagan.

Senators approve Clinton's education reform bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — They had to stay past midnight to do it, but the Senate passed President Clinton's education reform bill in time to save states and schools $105 million this year.

The Goals 2000 bill, passed 63-22, authorizes $647 million for school reforms nationwide, including $400 million in grants to states and local school agencies.

The vote early Saturday came after Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., organized a filibuster over the rewording of a school prayer provision. One by one, Helms' Republican supporters took to the nearly empty Senate floor to talk about education and subjects ranging from Whitewater to Somalia.

Helms' tactic, which delayed the start of a two-week Easter recess, ended after Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, threatened to bring Senators back on Monday if necessary to vote on the bill.

Helms didn't show up for the final hours of talk or the vote.

The urgency to pass the bill was the result of a provision that would have subtracted $105 million in funding for states and local school districts this year if the measure did not become law by April 1. Congress doesn't return from vacation until April 11.

The House had already approved the bill, 306-121, after five days of debate.

Helms lost his bid to deny federal funds to schools that bar voluntary prayer. The compromise worked out by a House-Senate conference committee prevents federal money from being used to help school districts adopt policies preventing voluntary prayer and meditation.

The approved version could allow schools already restricting prayer or using their own money to restrict prayer to continue the practice.

The bill contains the education Goals 2000 agreed to in 1989 by then-President Bush and the nation's governors. Two new goals were added encouraging parental involvement in education and professional development for teachers.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said the bill will change the way the federal government supports local schools.

"Now we begin the process of giving real support and encouragement to teachers, parents and school administrators who are willing to roll up their sleeves and get down to the hard work of using these funds to improve their schools," Kennedy said in a statement after the final vote.

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., who voted against the bill, said it precludes state reform and could lead to a national curriculum.

Menendez's lawyer seeks donations

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Erik Menendez's lawyer has sent letters asking supporters to help raise money for the Menendez brothers' murder retrial.

"If I were rich I would gladly represent Erik again for free," Leslie Abramson's letter says. "But the harsh reality is that I support a family and am already seriously in debt because of the inadequacy of the fee I received to represent Erik in the first trial."

The letter adds: "We need to raise over $1 million to finance the case solely with contributions."

Court records show Ms. Abramson was paid $790,000 for the first trial, which ended in a mistrial after separate juries couldn't reach a verdict.

Erik, 23, and Lyle, 26, admitted shooting their parents, but said they killed out of fear because of years of abuse. Prosecutors said the motive was greed for the parents' $14 million estate.

The letter, dated March 11, is part of a money-raising campaign Ms. Abramson started after the first trial.

A judge denied her (Erik Menendez's lawywer) request to have taxpayers pay her $100 an hour, up to $250,000, for the second trial.

Ms. Abramson says she she needs more money to stay on the case. A judge denied her request to have taxpayers pay her $100 an hour, up to $250,000, for the second trial.

Two public defenders will represent Lyle at the second trial. His private lawyer from the first trial bowed out, citing family commitments.

An April 15 hearing has been set to determine a new trial date.

Clinton: Providing health care is 'expression of faith, ideals'

DALLAS (AP) — President Clinton promoted his embattled health-care reform plan Saturday at a high-tech children's hospital after a poignant meeting with several young patients.

"Providing health care and the peace of mind that comes with it is ... a practical expression of our deepest faith and ideals," Clinton said in a radio address that tied his call for universal health insurance to the Easter and Passover holidays.

"Health-care reform is about doing what's right, about having compassion and bestowing dignity on each of us as God's children," he said.

Clinton spoke from Scottish Rite Hospital For Children, whose doctors and nurses, he said "take all children in need."

"That's what we want for all America," he said.

The hospital stop was a first in a busy day that also included a reception with local business and political leaders, a game of golf and the wedding of Clinton's half brother, Roger, to Molly Martin.

Clinton and his wife Hillary met with five children ages 4 to 12 in a brightly lit physical therapy room filled with colorful toys and huge stuffed animals.

Two of the children demonstrated their progress by rising from their wheelchairs and — in halting steps and using walkers — making the few steps to the Clintons.

"Isn't he great," a beaming Clinton said after shaking Nicholas Navarro's hand.

The 12-year old with cerebral palsy was operated on only three days ago; his left arm and leg were in a cast.

Another child, 6-year old Geoffrey Martin, was unable to walk or play ball due to rheumatoid arthritis when he was admitted four weeks ago. Saturday, he got to play ball with the president.

Clinton pitched and his wife was the catcher in an impromptu nerf baseball game.

"Once more you've got a bad pitcher," Clinton said after Geoffrey missed a few. His face, and everyone else's, lit up when the child connected and hit the fourth pitch back to Clinton's chest.

Clinton, after hearing critics assail his health plan as too complicated, described it Saturday as straightforward, fair and compassionate.

In particular, he defended its requirement that employers offer insurance and pay for much of it. He called the mandate "simply building on what works in the current system."

The president praised a House Ways and Means subcommittee, headed by Rep. Pete Stark, D-Calif., which became the first Capitol Hill panel to act favorably on a health reform bill, even though it differs substantially from his own.

Meanwhile, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D -Ill., chairman of the full Ways and Means Committee, served notice Saturday that the full committee will write the financing provisions of any universal health-insurance plan.

Commenting on the CNN television program "Evans and Novak," Rostenkowski said:

"I cannot allow subcommittee chairmen to finance things that the whole committee has jurisdiction over, because by that time, I'd be losing control of my own members."

TV ad shows teen that he was adopted

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Fourteen-year-old Charles Walker was watching television when he recognized a young boy in a commercial for an adoption agency. The boy's face was his own.

The Virginia teen-ager didn't know until seeing the Pearl S. Buck Foundation commercial that he had been adopted by Charles and Jeraldine Walker.

He and his adoptive parents filed a U.S. District Court lawsuit this week against the Philadelphia-based foundation, saying the commercial invaded their privacy and caused them emotional distress.

"We really have no comment on the matter," John M. DeFeo, the foundation's attorney, said Friday. "My preference is that we try things through the court system, not the press."

The commercial, which Walker saw on March 16, 1993, showed the boy among a group of American-Asian children. Walker recognized himself from pictures he had seen when he was younger.

A voiceover said the youngsters are "Amerasian, the children of American men and Asian women, and they're living in Asian countries where racial purity is prized and children like them are scorned."

The lawsuit seeks at least $200,000 in damages. The lawsuit lists the Walkers address as Langley Air Force Base.

10 years after his exoneration, Lenell Geter starts new career

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Like a modern-day Job, Lenell Geter's life went from middle-class prosperity to nearly unimaginable despair when he was wrongly convicted of a restaurant robbery in a Texas town 12 years ago.

Now, a decade after his exoneration, the former engineer is beginning a career as a motivational speaker, hoping to profit from an experience that brought him 16 months in prison, as well as a measure of fame.

The Denmark, S.C., native, who is black, walked out of prison March 26, 1984, cleared of an armed robbery that had earned him a life sentence.

In the Bible, Job loses everything — children, livestock, even his health — in a test of his faith. Job passes the test and God doubles Job's wealth.

For Geter there's been no great wealth in return for his suffering, although he was awarded $50,000 in a settlement with the town of Greenville, Texas. He also sold the movie rights for about the same amount.

The people who helped established Geter's innocence, including co-workers, a private detective and the NAACP, blame his conviction on sloppy police work, racism and overly zealous Dallas County prosecutors.

Geter says he does not hold any hate in his heart for those who put him behind bars.

"I'm not saying I love them, but it's between love and hate," Geter said. It's not the people he dislikes. It's their actions and their racist attitudes, he said.

With his wire-rimmed glasses and receding hairline, Geter could pass for a middle manager climbing the corporate ladder.

The South Carolina State College engineering graduate had started to climb the ladder when he moved to Greenville with five other college friends to work at an aerospace company.

Friends say Geter's efforts to stay true to his girlfriend in South Carolina got him in trouble. While his roommate entertained female friends in their apartment, Geter would go to a park to feed the ducks.

His frequent trips to the pond raised the suspicions of a woman who lived nearby.

Former co-worker Wendell Crom, who helped fight for Geter's freedom, said the woman read of a nearby restaurant holdup and told police that she had seen a man and his car with out-of-state license plates frequenting the park.

In August 1982, Geter was arrested for the robbery of a Kentucky Fried Chicken in Balch Springs, about 50 miles from Greenville. His co-workers testified that Geter was working at the time of the robbery, but four eyewitnesses said he was the culprit and he was convicted.

His 16 months behind bars ended in part because of a story by CBS' "60 Minutes" that revealed troubling inconsistencies in the police investigation.

Lt. Jim Fortenberry, who originally implicated Geter in the robbery, refused to discuss the matter Friday.

Geter, 36, married his college sweetheart and stayed in Greenville for six years after his release, continuing his engineering career. Along with their two daughters, the Geters moved back to South Carolina four years ago. He has supported himself as an insurance and real estate salesman since leaving Texas.

In his new efforts as a motivational speaker, Geter hopes to earn as much as $2,500 per appearance, delivering a message of "self-supporting attitudes" to those who think their lives are hopeless.

"Your circumstance only tell where you came from. They don't tell you where you're going," Geter said. "My story is that you can change your circumstances."

Part of Geter's recipe for success is faith — not just religious but from personal convictions.

"It's like the song says, you've got to stand for something or you're going to fall for anything," he said.

DALLAS — The bride was serene in traditional white and the groom anything but on Saturday as first brother Roger Clinton and Molly Martin recited their marital vows, just weeks before they are to become parents.

President and best man Bill Clinton gave his half-brother a reassuring squeeze of the hand when Roger reached out for a little encouragement as his very-pregnant bride marched up the aisle in a flower-filled tent at the Dallas arboretum.

Taking deep breaths and bouncing on his toes, Roger clearly was nervous. But he also appeared to be playing to the crowd of about 400 during the 20-minute ceremony by exercising his flair for the dramatic.

Minster John P. Miles, who came down from Arkansas for the occasion, drew a chuckle from the crowd when he announced, "Roger didn't ask for a sermon, but he's getting one anyway. If he'd come to church more regularly, I wouldn't do one."

Miles drew more knowing laughs when he declared that "marrying Roger, there will be bad days. But then, in an equal-time warning, he added, "Marrying Molly, there will be bad days."

When the bride turned sideways for the exchange of vows, several members of the audience could be heard remarking at the advanced stage of her pregnancy.

A 30-minute cloud burst, complete with thunder and lightening, struck just as the wedding guests moved from ceremony to reception mode in the same tent.

"We had already decided to get married," Roger told a local radio interviewer. "The baby sort of sped things up." The couple has been living together in Redondo Beach, Calif., for nearly a year.

In another prenuptial interview, Roger said the couple decided to go slow because "we've never gone through this marriage thing."

"We're trying to sort of, like trial and error, do the right thing at the right time," he told TV's syndicated American Journal.

Unfazed by all the attention that comes with a wedding in the president's family, the groom wore blue jeans to Friday night's rehearsal dinner at a friend's home in north Dallas. About 40 guests — including Bill and Hillary Clinton — munched on fajitas and guacamole and kept an eye on the TV as the Arkansas Razorbacks survived another round of NCAA tournament action.

Best man Bill Clinton sent his younger brother into marriage with "not too much advice" and "lots of love and well-wishing," Roger reported as Friday night's party broke up.

That fits a pattern the two Clinton boys have followed throughout life: Bill, the steady elder sibling, always there for his free-spirited kid brother, the would-be rock star at age 37. The president will always be known as "Big Brother" to Roger Clinton, who spent a year in prison on a drug conviction in the 1980s after then-Gov. Clinton approved the investigation that resulted in his brother's arrest. Roger Clinton says his brother probably saved his life.

The two boys had the same mother — Virginia Kelley — but different fathers.

Self-storage units also make favorite hideaways for crooks

By Ronda Templeton
San Antonio Express-News

SAN ANTONIO — Rented self-storage units have become a favorite place for criminals to stash drugs and stolen loot and for homeless people to find cheap shelter.

Everything imaginable — bottle collections and bodies, Michael Jackson's missing silver glove and a foot fetishist's high-heeled treasures — has been housed in the estimated 25,000 self-storage facilities across the nation.

The padlocked units provide protection for items prized by people short on closet space, as well as for criminals hiding stolen television sets, cars and drug labs.

Lt. Sumner Bowen of the Alamo Area Narcotics Task Force said self-storage facilities often are used by lawbreakers because they provide "security, limited access and there are no neighbors who will flag to what's going on."

He said the criminal who chooses the units over his home is "the more sophisticated type who has made a well-thought-out business decision."

Bowen said the task force made five raids last year at ministorage facilities housing methamphetamine laboratories.

"It's a typical scenario as far as meth labs go," he said of the units. "Several crooks have stored chemicals, lab glassware, pumps, heating elements — all the things that go with the labs."

Bowen said the units are handy for drug manufacturers because noxious odors and possible explosions make home-based labs risky.

Bowen said the talents of trained dogs have been used to sniff out drug labs. In fact, canines often uncover more evidence than expected.

"What's interesting is how many units the dogs will go to — units we have no evidence on," Bowen said, noting large shipments of marijuana and cocaine have been stored at the facilities.

Vernon Parker of the Drug Enforcement Agency said criminals use ministorages because they can be easily rented with a fake drivers' license.

"It's a continuing problem," he said. "They've been used to store marijuana, lab equipment, cocaine — any conceivable drug."

Bowen and Parker agreed criminals using ministorages are difficult to apprehend, in part because operators have no right to enter without consent.

Earline Shamon of Attic Space ministorage said most of the items in her facility's 401 units are innocuous.

"It's usually just junk," she said. "It's the things people don't want to give away, but they don't have room for. Kids' things, camping gear, Christmas decorations."

Shamon said one of the more unusual items stored at Attic Space was a man's beer can collection.

"There were cases and cases and cases of cans," she said. "It surprised me that he would risk storing something so valuable."

She said the units also attract the homeless, who find the cubicles a safe haven from the elements.

"We try to prevent them from hanging around," Shamon said. "We run them off when we catch them."

Troy Bix, publisher of Inside Self-Storage magazine, said homeless people all over the country are attracted to ministorage units.

"It's inexpensive and safe," he said.

Bix said more than 90 percent of the 25,000 ministorage facilities in the United States are mom-and-pop operations. The businesses have minimal overhead expenses — some units don't even have an on-site manager.

Inside Self-Storage has a circulation of about 30,000. Bix predicts the industry will grow "for a lot of reasons — the increased divorce rate, employees moving from place to place, small businesses that can't afford to lease space at a corporate plaza."

Bix conceded there is little ministorage owners can do to block criminal renters, but he believes 99 percent of customers are legitimate.

He said most units are used by normal people storing normal things, but conceded some customers are just plain strange. For example:

One man rented a unit for his recliner and radio. He wanted a quiet place away from his nagging wife to smoke cigars and listen to music.

A man with a foot fetish stored his mammoth collection of ladies' footwear. "There were hundreds, perhaps thousands, of shoes," Bix recalled.

One of Michael Jackson's spangled silver gloves was found in a unit.

One woman stored an urn containing her husband's ashes.

A Seattle man discovered the mutilated bodies of three people after he purchased the contents of a unit at auction.

Capt. Kenneth Bilhartz of the Bexar County Sheriff's Department said ministorage units often are used to hide stolen property.

"Burglars and fences rent them under false names and they can't be charged unless we catch them at the scene," he said. "Most of the time, we recover the stolen property but can't make an arrest."

He said most thieves store small items — televisions, stereos, jewelry and the like — although some sheds are spacious enough to house a large car.

"We found a Crown Victoria in one," he recalled. "A man hid it from his son-in-law when he and his daughter were separated.

Daytrippers: Provide daytime rides between 8 am and 5 pm to medical, dental, and social services.

Freelancers: Provides one-time or short term assistance to a person who has some temporary needs in maintaining their home due to weakness or fatigues often present in people with HIV.

Buddies: Provide companionship and socialization opportunities to those who may have become isolated and alone due to diminishing capabilities.

Helpers : Provide needed assistance to office workers by helping to answer phones, work on computers, do filing, make phone calls, and various other duties associated with the office.

Other: We can always use the services of those who are able to donate specialized skills such as hair cutting, lawn maintenance, auto mechanics or house cleaning services.

All of our volunteers attend our two hour General Orientation session.

Auto safety techs scramble to bag it — on the side

By Julia Prodis
Associated Press

DETROIT — It must inflate in milliseconds to stop shattered metal and glass from skewering flesh and bones, but false alarms caused by slammed doors or errant shopping carts could send it punching into your torso like a "100 mile-an-hour basketball."

Technicians admit the mechanism of the side-impact air bag, the auto industry's latest effort to minimize crash carnage, is a little dicey. The side air bag must overcome problems of physics that don't apply in front-end collisions, where the so-called "crumple zone" is longer.

But Volvo, one of the earliest carmakers to turn safety into a selling point, is ready to install side-impact air bags as part of its passenger-restraint systems in 1995 models. Others are scrambling to offer it as an option. Some predict side bags could be as common as seat belts by 1997.

"There are several technical challenges, but not barriers that can't be overcome," said Brett Smith, researcher at the Office for the Study of Automotive Transportation in Ann Arbor, Mich.

The technological challenges are simple enough to outline.

— How do you get an air bag to deploy fast enough, with just a few inches of door frame separating a passenger from tragedy?

— What stops an air bag from inflating accidentally if the triggering event wasn't caused by an oncoming vehicle?

Precise timing and placement of the air bag are the critical considerations. Unlike front-impact air bags, which have about 40 milliseconds to sense a crash and deploy, side impact bags have about 15-20 milliseconds before shearing metal would reach a passenger. It takes twice as long to blink an eye, according to the American Academy of Ophthalmology.

"There are several technical challenges, but not barriers that can't be overcome."

—Brett Smith
researcher
of Automotive Transportation

Consumer advocates say the effort to devise side air bags comes largely from tougher federal safety rules that in 1997 will require that motorists be protected from side crashes of 33½ mph. Side-impact crashes now cause an average 8,000 fatalities and 24,000 severe injuries each year.

"It's 90 percent driven by regulation and 10 percent driven by what consumers want," said Clarence Ditlow, director of the Center for Auto Safety in Washington. Still, he said the auto industry has shown surprising progress.

"Compared to front seat air bags, which took 20 years, we're moving with lightning speed," he said.

Air bags deploying from the door, seat, roof and head rest are all in test phases, but their potential costs remain unclear.

Front air bags cost $500 to $1,500 each, but those prices have been coming down. When Mercedes-Benz first introduced a driver's side air bag in 1983, for example, it charged customers $850 for the option. Now it's standard equipment.

Volvo's side impact air bags will be available in the driver and front passenger seats in its 1995 850-series sedans and station wagons. The Swedish automaker isn't saying how much, or even whether, the embellishment will add to the sticker price. But these cars already cost $30,000-$35,000.

The Volvo air bag will be placed in the upright seat back about shoulder height. The sensing device, housed in the seat cushion, will trigger when the door panel crashes into a bar protruding about 4 inches from the seat.

The air bag, about the size of a large loaf of bread, is intended to protect a passenger's torso.

"It would be hard to say it would be perfect, but it's the best thing we've come up with," said Michael Guerra, spokesman for Volvo Cars of North America.

Besides, he said, "they're better than what we had before, which was virtually nothing."

Even Ford, which touts itself as the American pioneer of passenger safety systems, says the side bag technology has a long way to go.

Dozens of variables must be considered. What if a child gets in the way of a fast-deploying air bag? What if a passenger is napping against the door when an air bag mounted on the outside of a head rest deploys?

"It might be like being hit with a 100 mile-an-hour basketball," said Sherman Henson, Ford manager of safety planning.

ZNORE NO MORE

Each evening millions of people lay down for a restful night of sleep.
Dreaming, snoring, dreaming and snoring again...keeping themselves and their spouses from getting the good night's rest they need.

NOW, THERE IS A CURE FOR SNORING.

Through a series of three to five 15-minute laser treatments, performed under local anesthesia, snoring is being cured approximately 85% of the time. A laser is used to reshape with precision the back of the throat to allow more room for air passage thus alleviating the cause of snoring.
It sounds easy... and it is.
To find out if you or a loved one is a candidate for this new laser treatment breakthrough, schedule your appointment today.

Missing carving is cultural loss for community

SEATTLE (NYT) — Part of a totem pole — and a piece of the community's fabric — is missing from Wrangell, Alaska. Seattle may play a role in the mystery.

Made by Wrangell master carver William Ukas in 1895, the cedar totem pole is a proud centerpiece for the local Kiks.adi tribe. But torn from its 35-foot length is an eloquent carving of Little Raven, resting below his father Old Raven, creator of all.

"Little Raven gave the people light. He also gave them the stars and the moon. That's what is depicted on the pole," said Dawn Hutchinson, a member of the Wrangell Cultural Heritage Board.

Native leaders in the historic fishing village fear the piece was stolen and put on the art market. In 1978, a similar fragment, a small human face, was removed from another Wrangell totem pole carved by Ukas.

Steve Brown, curator of Native American art at the Seattle Art Museum, said the '78 piece likely passed through Seattle before traveling to New York, Santa Fe and California, where it remains in a private collection. "These things can move around great distances," he said.

The town fears a similar fate for Little Raven. "Someone could sell it to a dealer or a museum, or they could take it home and just have it on display," said Hutchinson.

"Or, they could get scared and dispose of it."

Community leaders have put up posters, written letters and sent out fliers to 30 artifact dealers on the West Coast pleading for information on the piece. Hutchinson plans to take an appeal to the American Association of Museums conference in Seattle next month.

Earlier this month, she published a poem in the Wrangell Sentinel:

Little Raven are you lonely
Since they wrenched you from the arms
Of your father as he lay
Upon those ancestral grounds?

Fliers describe the piece as 26 inches long, 12 inches wide, with traces of black, red and dark blue paint on a carved cedar surface. "This monument is of special value to our community, and we would like very much to recover this piece of our Native heritage," said an appeal sent to a corporate newsletter in Alaska.

Known as the Kiks.adi Pole, it stood in downtown Wrangell, an island community about 175 miles south of Juneau, until 1982, when it was selected to be copied as part of a state/federal project on preserving native culture. The copy was erected and the original stored in a former Bureau of Indian Affairs boarding school. A caretaker noticed in early December that the pole had been vandalized.

"The whole idea was to store that pole and a couple of others that were replicated until such time as a building could be built to display them in," said Steve Brown.

Traveling kitty takes 6,000 mile trip with cargo

MOUNT VERNON, Wash. (AP) — The cargo container that arrived from Taiwan had one import too many.

A scrawny, blue-eyed cat traveled about 6,000 miles and spent more than three weeks at sea in a chilly corner of a container shipped to a Mount Vernon warehouse.

The black cat was christened Hanjin for the name of the Korean shipping line painted in huge white letters on the container's side. The cat was found last Sunday by Steve Wells, who owns Mobile Merchandisers Inc., when he opened the steel box to unload a shipment of display stands.

"All of a sudden, it was up there staring at me," Wells said. "I said, 'What do we have here?' "

Wells fed the frightened animal a bit of dried doughut and water. He closed up the container and returned the next day with cat food. Hanjin grabbed a few bites, then stole farther back into the container. Warehouse manager Bob Stickle carefully emptied the container box by box to expose the cat's hiding place.

Veterinarian Gary Johnson, wearing thick welder's gloves, carefully plucked the cat last Monday from its nest of shredded cardboard at the container's far end.

"Just a baby, aren't you?" Johnson said, cradling it in his arms.

Prison fight

EL PASO (AP) — One inmate was beaten to death and two other prisoners were injured when a fight erupted between prison gangs at the El Paso County Jail, authorities said.

Alfredo Ordonez, 30, died Friday, a day after the fight broke out, Sheriff Leo Samaniego said.

Samaniego said his officers believe Ordonez, who was arrested last October on charges of possession of cocaine and heroin, was a member of Barrio Azteca, a prison gang.

"This has been brewing for a long time. Most of them belong to one gang or another. They are killing themselves out on the streets, and it was just a matter of time before something happened in the jail," Samaniego said.

The fight began Thursday night on the fifth floor of the jail, and involved members of Barrio Azteca and the Texas Syndicate, both prison-born gangs, the sheriff said.

The two inmates injured in the fight were treated at Thomason Hospital and returned to the jail. Their names weren't released.

Exhibit to tell mission's history

■ Confederate Air Force display to be tribute to George H.W. Bush's aviation role in World War II.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The Bush Mission exhibit at the Confederate Air Force's American Airpower Heritage Museum will honor far more than George H.W. Bush and his role in World War II aviation.

Bush, a former Midland oilman who became the 41st president of the United States, was the nation's youngest naval aviator when he earned his wings at age 19 in June 1943.

"The idea is not to do an exhibit about his life, but to do an exhibit about his mission," said Midlander Frank Cahoon, chairman of the American Airpower Heritage Foundation.

"The exhibit is not intended to be a political exhibit at all," Cahoon said. "It is intended to be a historical exhibit."

The Bush Mission exhibit is a $250,000 project that will commemorate the 50th anniversary of Bush's mission when he was shot down by enemy fire over the Pacific Ocean in his TBM Avenger torpedo-bomber and was rescued by the crew of the submarine USS Finback.

So far, $100,000 has been raised. Additional funds are pledged and more donations are needed, said Cahoon, who helps raise funds for the foundation.

Featured with the Bush Mission exhibit will be a "Wall of Honor," in which people may honor those who served in the war effort, whether at home in support roles or in the war zones.

"There are people all across the United States who would like a place to permanently honor members of their family" and others who served in World War II, Cahoon said. "Everyone in the United States in that period of time was affected in one way or another."

The response to the "Wall of Honor" has been excellent, Cahoon said.

"Each family has a story about their family's participation" in World War II, Cahoon said. "It was a war that the whole nation was behind."

Midlander Jack Edwards, a Bush contemporary who flew carrier-based fighters during the war, said Bush "represented a lot of American young men of that era, their patriotism, their devotion to duty, and their unquestioned adherence to their mission."

Bush was still a teen-ager when he was assigned to the USS aircraft carrier San Jacinto in the Pacific Ocean in 1943.

"There were a lot of heroes and heroics, valiant actions by people from all walks of life and all ages, in World War II," Edwards said.

"I guess the remarkable thing about George was

Real 'Rainman' to show talents to Midlanders

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Kim Peek, the man who served as a pattern for Dustin Hoffman's character in the film "Rainman," will be in Midland to show area residents his extraordinary talents and to stress the need for those with disabilities to be included in society.

Unlike his Hollywood counterpart, Peek is a very warm person and enjoys interacting with other people, said Ray Unterbrink, director of the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens (MARC).

Peek is on a tour of various MARC chapters around the country and will appear at a public meeting April 8 from 7 p.m. to 9 at Alamo Junior High School.

Peek, 43, suffered brain damage at birth and lived an isolated life in his family's home.

As he grew, however, his family noticed astounding feats of memory that Peek was able to perform.

"He has absolutely total recall," said Unterbrink, who met Peek three years ago in Florida. The term for those with disabilities who show great abilities in Tarfia Faizullah receives a hug from her English teacher, Doris Watson, after the Trinity School student won the annual regional spelling bee Saturday.

Spelling bee winner defeats 30 participants

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Tarfia Faizullah of Trinity School triumphed over 30 students competing in the seventh annual Reporter-Telegram Regional Spelling Bee Saturday at the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium at Midland College.

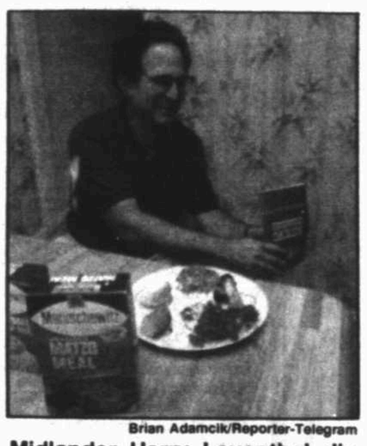

Shortly after 9 a.m. the youth began spelling, starting with less difficult words and working their way up to words that would muddle some adults.

In the end, Tarfia won out in a duel with young Benjamin Meek of Emerson Elementary School. Following the competition, Tarfia said she was dedicating her win to her sister, Tangia, who died last summer in an automobile accident. She is the daughter of Dr. A.M. Faizullah and Fahmida Faizullah of Midland.

After spelling words such as "deteriorable", "co-optation", "adenoidal" and "fomentation," Benjamin tripped up on the word "solvency."

Rules specify the winner must correctly spell two words after the final

Midlander Harry Leventhal displays the book outlining the Haggadah, which is the ritual service for Passover. The holiday commemorates the Jews being freed from captivity in Egypt. The holiday began at sundown Saturday.

Jewish community celebrates Passover holiday

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Just about anyone who has studied the Bible remembers the story of Moses leading the ancient Hebrews from bondage in Egypt and the 10 plagues sent when the Pharaoh wouldn't let the Jews go free.

That story holds a special significance during the Jewish holiday of Passover, which began at sundown Saturday.

For a Midland couple, Harry and Judi Leventhal, the holiday has a special meaning — for they are members of the small congregation of Jewish families in the Midland-Odessa area.

"The holiday has its basis in the Old Testament. It is the story of the exodus of the Jews from Egypt and from slavery under the pharaoh's rule. The holiday commemorates the Jews being freed," Leventhal said.

He said the holiday is usually commemorated in a family or community gathering with a Passover service. The Passover holiday lasts for eight days.

He said there is a ritual and order of events that must take place in the seder, which is the Passover service.

A seder includes a ceremonial dinner held on the first evening of the Passover and is sometimes repeated on the second day. The Haggadah is the ritual for the seder meal.

During the seder meal, certain foods are eaten and the significance of the foods is explained. In addition, the story of Passover is told.

One of the more important foods for Passover is matzo, which is unleavened bread similar to an unsalted soda cracker. No bread can be eaten during Passover.

"The symbolism of the matzo is that the Jews left Egypt in such a hurry there was not enough time for the bread to rise. So it's traditional to eat only unleavened bread for the eight days of Passover," Leventhal said.

To make cooking easier, Leventhal and his wife, on a recent trip to Dallas, purchased pre-packaged foods made with matzo.

During the seder meal, five particular foods are organized on a special seder plate and the significance of each is explained. Among those foods are horseradish, egg, lamb bone, parsley and a special mixture of nuts, apples and wine.

Leventhal explained the horseradish is a bitter herb to symbolize the bitter times; the egg and lamb bone each represent the sacrificial offering of the Jews and sacrifices made; the parsley is dipped in salt water to symbolize the tears shed; and the nuts, apples and wine

GARY OTT

Life of homeless is not colorful, romantic image of fiction

The man's right hand was shaking noticeably as he held it out in my direction and said, "Can you spare a quarter?"

Ott

He was a street person, though much younger-looking than what you normally associate with the group. He seemed about my age, in his early 40s. He was wearing a long-sleeve flannel shirt and dirty jeans. His hair was unkempt and he had one of those faces that just looks worn out.

But it was that shaking hand — the one that seemed almost desperate to have a quarter placed in it — that caught my attention. It was jerking back and forth, as though it had a mind of its own. The man needed something in him bad.

I started to walk away, but before I knew what was happening some words popped out of my mouth.

What I said was, "I'll buy you lunch."

He was as shocked by the invitation as I was. But he accepted.

It was last Friday and we were in Corpus Christi. I was there because of a newspaper convention. He was there because, well, because "Corpus is warmer than Detroit," or at least that's the way he put it.

We chose a tiny rundown diner located a couple of blocks from the bay, not far from the expensive beachfront hotels where rich folks vacation and spend their money. The contrast amused me as I sat across the table from this shabby little person who no doubt would have preferred a shot of cheap booze over whatever food he was about to put in his stomach.

He eyed me warily, as if attempting to figure out why this peculiar individual was buying him lunch and, more importantly, if anything was expected of him in return. I was equally wary, wondering if this person, about whom I knew nothing, had the potential to suddenly turn violent.

He ordered a roast beef sandwich as I attempted to engage him in small talk. Since he had already mentioned Detroit I asked if that was home.

He shrugged and said, "sorta." His hands continued to shake and his voice was raspy and kind of quivered when he spoke. It didn't take a brain surgeon to see that we were dealing with a hard-core alcoholic here. Each time he opened his mouth, the smell of stale liquor would drift aimlessly above our table.

In hindsight, I don't know what I was expecting him to be like, perhaps a colorful and gregarious character full of wise words and funny stories. Maybe deep inside, I wanted him to be a romantic figure who had somehow magically leaped from the pages of a John Steinbeck novel.

But he wasn't.

Instead, he was a sad and lonely drunk. He didn't have any wise words or funny stories to tell, and when I asked him questions he would stare blankly, as though he didn't understand what I was saying.

He ate his food rapidly, cleaning his mouth by periodically rubbing his filthy sleeve across his lips.

I asked him if he ever dreamed he would end up like this, a homeless person living on the streets of a south Texas city, thousands of miles from what little family he still had.

"Naw," he said. "I always thought I'd be a doctor."

I think he was putting me in my place with more than just a little sarcasm. And rightfully so. It was a dumb question. No one in his right mind would dream of becoming a starving, drunk street person. It doesn't take long for that lifestyle to lose its romantic charm. After all, this is not a John Steinbeck novel we're talking about. This is reality, and having the shakes so bad that you can't hold a glass of water without spilling it all over the table is definitely no fun.

But that's exactly what he did after finishing his sandwich. It didn't seem to bother him, though. He just looked away.

"You ready?" I asked, tossing a tip on the table.

He nodded, and we headed for the door. On the sidewalk, I gave him a five dollar bill and told him to buy food, not booze.

He said he would.

Then we said our good-byes and started walking in opposite directions.

I glanced over my left shoulder just in time to see him turning into the first liquor store he found.

I smiled. It was a sad smile, but I smiled.

CAF: Museum exhibit pays tribute to Bush mission

that he was so representative of the youth of his era in their dedication to duty, to patriotism, and their adherence to any mission assigned to them without question."

In expressing his admiration, Edwards said Bush "got into the (naval aviation) program" and "into the thick of the battle just as fast as he could, without any delay, without any hesitation.

"He went right into the cadet program just as soon as he could, got through it just as soon as possible, and asked for carrier assignment, (which was) considered to be the most hazardous" duty among fliers.

Bush "represented a wide range of young Americans, 18-, 19-year-old boys just out of high school, who were used to fill the breach in building up the air force and naval aviation . . . for a massive operation," Edwards said. "And they never looked back. The kids just plowed right on."

On the day of his mission — Sept. 2, 1944 — Bush and other members of his squadron took off from the aircraft carrier USS San Jacinto. Their mission was to destroy a radio-communications facility on the Japanese-held Chichi Jima island south of Japan.

"From this island, they (the Japanese) had nearly worldwide radio communications," Cahoon said. "The Japanese were building huge underground bunkers (on Chichi Jima) . . . to move the emperor to and to better protect him if an invasion took place on the main islands of Japan."

Bush and his crew scored hits on the target. But his Avenger was shot down by ground fire. Bush escaped, but crewmen, John Delaney and William "Ted" White, did not survive the mission.

For his heroic efforts, Bush was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross.

The Bush Mission exhibit will be divided into seven areas: a Call to Arms, the Machines, Military Intelligence, the Briefing Room, Weapons, the Flight and the Rescue.

War-time film footage will depict the mission, Bush's rescue, and Bush's "war horse," the TBM Avenger, which has been hailed as "the best of the last wartime torpedo-bombers."

A TBM Avenger, now assigned to the CAF's Rocky Mountain Wing in Grand Junction, Colo., is to be present during the grand opening of "The Bush Mission" exhibit set for Sept. 2 at the CAF hangar at Midland International Airport.

The computerized audio-visual exhibit will be designed for interaction by exhibit participants and will feature an Avenger theme.

All told, almost 10,000 Avengers were built during World War II. Most were destroyed in combat or in the post-war destruction of warplanes.

More than 130 warplanes from the Allied and Axis forces are part of the CAF's Ghost Squadron.

"Those flying aircraft add a tremendous dimension not just to our AirSho but to airshows they participate in all across the United States," Cahoon said.

"There is just nothing like seeing one of them flying. And that's why we are very different from the Smithsonian (Institution's Air and Space Museum) and other museums where you see airplanes in static display.

"Our niche is, we want to keep them flying," Cahoon said. "As time goes by, that becomes more and more difficult, as parts become more difficult to find and expensive."

other areas is "savantism," Unterbrink said.

Peek is further classified as a "mega-savant" because of his extraordinary powers, he said.

Peek reads books two pages simultaneously — one page with each eye — and has perfect recall of the literature, Unterbrink said. "He absolutely devours novels," he said.

Peek has stored tremendous amounts of factual information and enjoys sharing his knowledge with others. Those he meets with can give their birth date and Peek can tell them what day of the week they were born on, but prefers more personal questions, Unterbrink said. In one interview, he was able to tell a reporter details of the history of her radio station that she herself did not know, he said.

Peek, however, has absolutely no ability to think in the abstract, Unterbrink explained. He can state the date any democracy was founded, but cannot understand any tenet of democracy or how it relates to a society.

Peek interacts heavily with his audience and invites those in attendance to test his knowledge, Unterbrink said.

"Having Kim helps us in our goal of demonstrating that people with disabilities go well beyond their disabilities," Unterbrink said. "Obviously others do not have Kim's ability. Nobody has that — Kim has that," he said.

Unterbrink hopes meeting with Peek will convince others to see those with disabilities in a different way and not be afraid of them, he said. "We want to break down those barriers," he said.

During his stay in Midland April 6 through April 9, Peek is to tour several facilities and meet with various groups and organizations.

CELEBRATE: Jews observe Passover represent the mortar that held the bricks of slavery together.

Four glasses of wine are drunk during the ceremony. For children, grape juice is substituted. Mrs. Leventhal said each glass represents the terms of redemption for the Jews.

"It symbolizes God taking us out of captivity, saving us, redeeming us and taking us to the promised land," Mrs. Leventhal explained.

Leventhal said, depending upon the family or group gathered, the seder can last from 45 minutes to more than three hours.

"There is a lot of tradition involved in the holiday," he said.

During one part of the service, one of the matzo crackers is broken and hidden until the end of the meal, when the children play a game. They search for it and the finder gets a prize, which is a treat for the children, Leventhal said.

After the meal, four questions are asked to help those present delineate the difference between Passover and the rest of the year. Mrs. Leventhal said the ceremony is a "very group-oriented event."

"The event is festive because it recounts the end of a very bad period of time," Leventhal said.

For example, during the evening songs will be sung.

Another aspect of the ceremony is the reading of the Passover story. During the reading, the narrator or narrators tell the story as if he or she were the one leaving captivity in Egypt.

Another part of the ritual is that during the seder, the family will open their door for the prophet Elijah. An extra glass of wine is set aside on the dinner table for him to drink.

Leventhal said the opening of the door is partly to signify the protection of the Jews by God. Elijah's visit symbolizes the Jews' deserving a messiah to be sent.

Although Passover falls a week before the Christian holiday of Easter, Leventhal said there is no correlation between Passover and celebrations by other religious denominations. He said Passover is observed on a lunar calendar and usually falls between March and April.

Part of the Passover ritual is derived from the 10 plagues sent by God to Egypt when the Pharaoh wouldn't free the Hebrews after Moses warned him.

The 10th plague killed the firstborn sons of all the Egyptians except the Hebrews. The Hebrews placed a "sign" over the front entrance to their homes to distinguish them from others when the plague was sent. Following this plague, the Pharaoh freed the Hebrews.

Leventhal explained that a mezuzah, a small parchment scroll inscribed with a prayer, is placed in a case fixed to the doorpost of the home of Jewish families. It is in place today in the Jewish faith as a part of Passover and remembrance for what happened.

Leventhal said remembrance is the focal point of the Passover holiday.

misspell by their opponent. Seizing the opportunity, Tarfia correctly spelled "braggartism" and "autonomously" for the win.

Andrea Fryrear came in third. She dropped out of the competition by misspelling the word "inducible."

In the final rounds, competition can be intense with resultant emotions effecting spellers, parents and judges alike, explained John Deats, who served as pronouncer for the event. "It's tough on us up here," Deats said.

Six prizes were donated by the Reporter-Telegram, which sponsored the regional event. Fourth prize went to Katie Noah of Anson Jones Elementary. Fifth place went to Alison Carroll of Crockett Elementary, and sixth went to Aleem Rakeeb of San Jacinto Junior High.

Judges for the event were Midland College English instructor Sylvia Major, English instructor Pamela Howell and Jann Buttery Pullig, a retired reading specialist for Midland Independent School District.

All three women have served as judges in past years and say they enjoy the experience.

"Every year when I get the letter . . . I send off a reply that day," Ms. Major said.

A Reporter-Telegram representative presented each of the six winners with a trophy and one of six various hard-bound volumes, including encyclopedic dictionaries.

As the winner, Tarfia will be going to Washington, D.C., to compete with students from across the nation in the Scripps Howard National Spelling Bee May 28th through June 4.

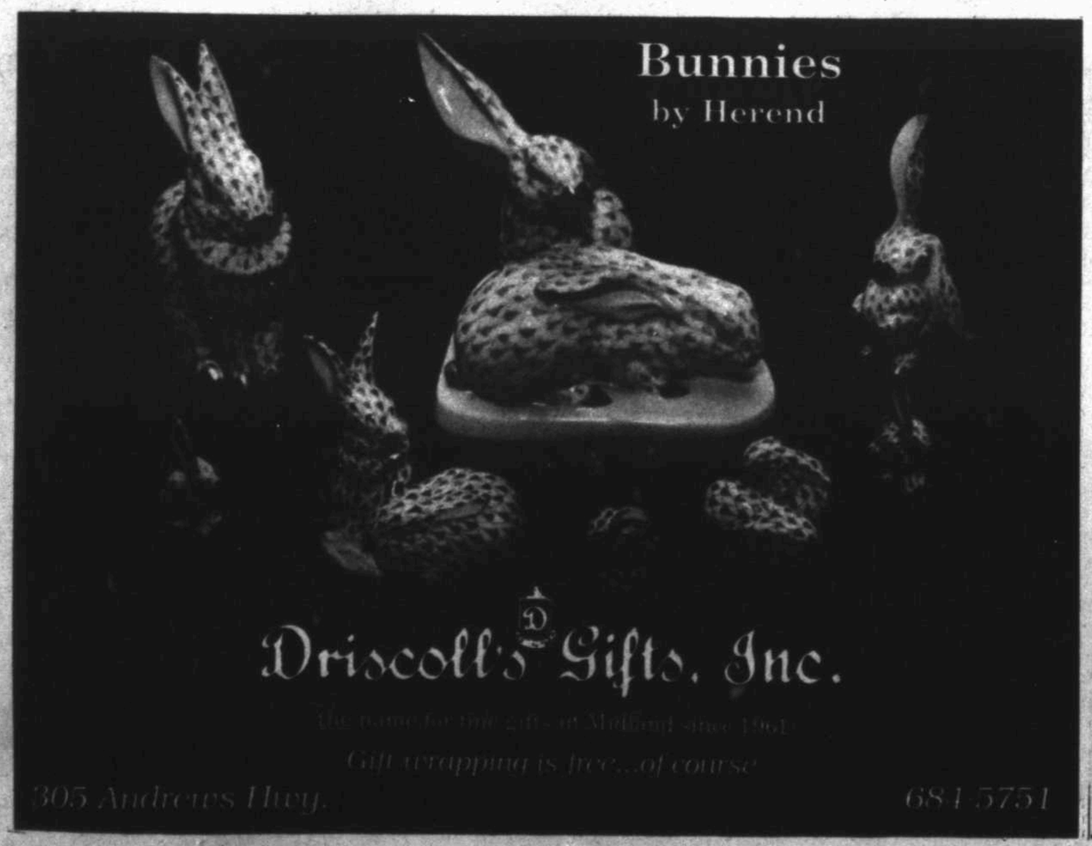

Agency gives city 60 days to clean

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A state agency has given the city 60 days to begin cleaning up 132,000 cubic yards of lead-contaminated Alamodome soil that was used to repair erosion at a closed landfill.

In a certified letter mailed Thursday to Mayor Nelson Wolff, the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission directed the city to implement at least minimal stopgap drainage control. That would consist of placing silt fences and hay bales to prevent rainwater runoff from carrying contamination off the site.

Videotape rekindles criticism of county's police

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press

HONDO — It was like the scab was picked from an old wound when a videotape surfaced showing Medina County and Hondo law officers kicking Hispanic suspects they'd arrested.

Police brutality claims have a long history here.

And a persistent small citizens group, rallying around the recent disclosure of the videotape, is vowing to keep reminding the public of that disturbing legacy.

"We are capitalizing on the incident that was captured on the video because we can show the world that this time we have evidence, that there is police brutality here in Hondo," said Chavel Lopez, spokesman for People Against Police Abuse.

"I think that the people in Hondo, at least the Mexican-American people in Hondo, are outraged and frightened," said James Myart, an attorney whose San Antonio law firm represents two men beaten in the videotaped arrest. They have filed a federal civil rights lawsuit against assorted officers and city and county officials.

Law officers in this rural community west of San Antonio deny there is widespread police abuse.

"There is no ongoing problem of any kind like that ... It's a problem they are trying to make," said Medina County Sheriff Wesley Scott.

Hondo police Lt. Doug Rivers, the acting police chief, agreed, calling Lopez and his group "professional protestors."

Even though the videotaped arrest happened 16 months ago, on Nov. 27, 1992, the Department of Public Safety tape wasn't disclosed until February, after KENS-TV in San Antonio waged a Texas Open Records battle for nearly a year to obtain it.

The tape shows officers kicking and jumping on some of the five Hispanic suspects, who were lying on the ground handcuffed after being apprehended in a car chase. The men originally were charged with evading arrest, but charges were dropped.

Two law officers who were involved have pleaded guilty to criminal charges. Sheriff's deputy Anthony Perales pleaded guilty to a felony civil rights violation and received 10 years' probation. He was fired from his job. Hondo police officer Mark Chadwick, who pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor and received no jail time, was let go in city layoffs.

Lopez's group insists justice hasn't been done in that case or other violent police incidents, some dating back to the 1970s. The group, known as PAPA, points out:

■ Rogelio Lopez, 17, was unarmed when he was shot to death in 1984 by Medina County deputy Richard Wells after a 15-mile chase. Wells was no-billed by a grand jury. PAPA formed as a result of the case.

■ Medina County deputy Scott Tschirhart resigned his deputy post in May 1993 after the FBI investigated two arrests he made in which suspects were struck. Tschirhart, earlier as a Houston police officer, was involved in the shooting deaths of three black men in separate incidents. Grand juries cleared him of wrongdoing.

■ Hondo resident Gerardo Velasquez says he now is wheelchair-bound after a city police officer further injured his ailing back by ramming him into the floor with his foot during a drug sweep in March 1993. Velasquez was not charged. The city declined to comment.

There is one federal lawsuit pending against the city alleging civil rights violations, and there are four against the county sheriff's department, officials said.

Chavel Lopez, Velasquez and five others last week staged a now-familiar protests at the Medina County Courthouse to demand Sheriff Wesley Scott resign because of what they called a "pattern" of employing deputies with shady backgrounds and of allowing police abuse to thrive.

Faculty threatens legal action against Farrakhan speech

HOUSTON (AP) — Some Texas Southern University faculty members have threatened a legal challenge in response to the scheduling of a for-men-only speech by Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan.

Leaders of the TSU chapter of the Texas Faculty Association said Friday they will file a complaint and a lawsuit if women are barred from the planned April 11 event.

"I defend Farrakhan's right to speak at TSU, much as I dislike his intolerant views. What I object to is gender discrimination at a university-sanctioned activity," said Daniel Adams, grievance consultant for the faculty association.

Adams said he will first take his complaint to TSU President Joann Horton. TFA also plans to videotape one of its female members trying to gain entrance to the talk if the university does not back down, he said.

The speech is sponsored by the TSU Muslim Law Student Association and the University Program Council.

Aaron McGilbra, president of the student-run University Program Council, which schedules speakers, said it was Farrakhan's staff who requested the talk be for men only.

A flier touting his appearance at TSU's Health & Physical Education Building clearly is marked "for men only."

However, McGilbra said if a woman pressed the issue, she probably would be allowed in.

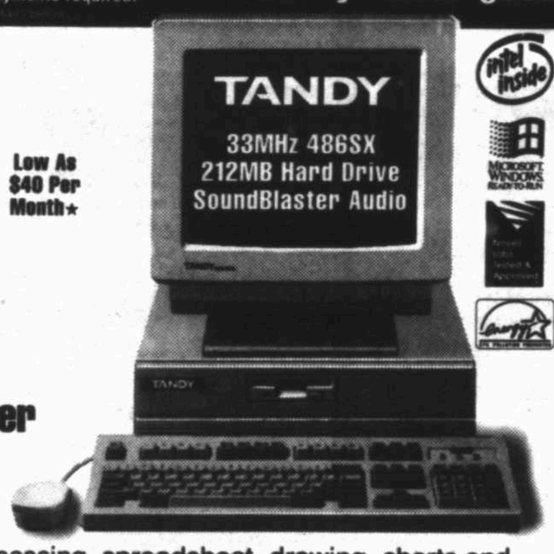

McGilbra said it is his understanding that the reason the Nation of Islam does not want women in attendance is that the faith believes it is disrespectful for men to talk about topics like sex, drugs and violence in front of women.

Grand jury hears testimony in case of kidnapped baby

AUSTIN (AP) — A Travis County grand jury has begun hearing testimony in the capital murder case against baby sitter Cathy Lynn Henderson, who is accused of kidnapping and killing a 3-month-old boy.

Prosecutors said indictments against Ms. Henderson could come as soon as Monday.

Three witnesses testified before the grand jury Friday, including a Travis County sheriff's deputy, medical examiner Robert Bayardo and Ms. Henderson's husband, Warren.

Henderson, who has stood by his wife, and his attorney, Betty Blackwell, declined to comment Friday.

Cathy Henderson is accused of kidnapping Brandon Baugh while he was in her care on Jan. 21.

She initially refused to talk to authorities before releasing a statement that she had buried the child near Temple after accidentally dropping him in her home.

One of Ms. Henderson's attorneys, Nona Byington, was ordered by a court to turn over maps made by Ms. Henderson that indicated where the child was buried.

House fire claims lives of 4 children; 2 others escape with critical injuries

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Trapped by burglar bars that frantic neighbors were unable to open, four children died and two other people were critically injured early Saturday in a fire that swept through a small frame home.

Fire officials say two of the survivors were pulled from the flames only after the illegal burglar bars were dismantled shortly after 2:30 a.m. from the frame house in east Fort Worth.

"When we arrived on the scene ... at the curb is a (12-year-old) boy who has already gotten out of the house. He has burns over approximately 80 percent of his body," said fire Lt. Kent Worley.

"We're told then that victims are still in the house. We try to go in, we're hampered by illegal burglar bars all around the windows. ... These are the old fashioned kind that are drilled to the house. It takes a while to get the burglar bars off the house, we can hear people yelling."

By law, an escape latch is required on any burglar bars that are installed. Smoke detectors also are required. Neither was present, officials said.

Firefighters managed to pull 44-year-old Olivia Davis and two children, Ronnie Keilough, 12, and Lee Keilough, 13, from a bedroom.

But after the fire was extinguished 10 minutes later, they found the bodies of the Keilough boys' three siblings — Allencia, 2; Sammie, 9; and Lorenzo, 17.

The survivors were taken by helicopter to the burn center at Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas. Ronnie Keilough, who suffered burns over more than half of his body, died early Saturday evening.

Administrator Betsy Attel said Lee Keilough was burned on 48 percent of his body, and Olivia Davis was burned on 32 percent of her body. Both remained in critical condition Saturday evening.

Worley said the house was rented by Ms. Davis and her husband, Larry, 38, who escaped unharmed.

The five children and their mother, Laurita Keilough, were staying with the couple. Ms. Keilough was not home when the fire broke out, Worley said.

The fire, he said, apparently started in an electric skillet that was left on.

FORT WORTH (AP) — Forget physics. Think fungus.

A petroleum engineer has his eyes on miles of dark, damp tunnels where scientists once contemplated smashing atoms. Naresh Vashisht wants them to harvest mushrooms instead.

Vashisht, president of a Texas company that owns a mushroom farm, said the underground remnants of the incomplete superconducting super collider are prime turf for mushroom growing. The five-mile tunnel is 200 feet underground and sealed with concrete.

"We can use the lined tunnel. The five miles is exactly what we are looking for," said Vashisht, head of Omimex Energy Inc.

The temperature is a steady 70 degrees, the humidity high, the darkness eternal.

"We would save a lot of energy costs. In Pennsylvania, they grow mushrooms in old limestone mines," Vashisht said.

The tunnels are carved from similar rock called Austin chalk.

Omimex Energy owns a mushroom farm in Alamosa, Colo., near the New Mexico line. There, 20,000 mushrooms a week grow to table-ready maturity inside a concrete block building with a high roof and steep air-conditioning bills.

The mammoth superconducting super collider was mothballed nearly five months ago when Congress halted funds.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Chaparral fans deserve applause for support

By H.A. Tuck

Tuck

Back from Hutchinson, Kan., and the 47th annual National Junior College Athletic Association's men's basketball championship, here are some random thoughts:

First, it takes a lot of skill and some good fortune to get to the Sweet Sixteen of junior college basketball. Second, you must play four consistently good games to have a chance for the championship. Third, the town of Hutchinson really shows great support for the tournament.

Hutchinson did win the title this year, playing on what is their home court for the regular season. But they have a solid team playing in a tough conference and a tough region. When you see a first-round noon game with a couple or three thousand fans in attendance, you realize you are in basketball country. That was Midland's situation in their first game on Wednesday. The previous day had Hutchinson in a first-round game and the arena was packed. The 7,000-seat arena was virtually filled for the Chaparrals' second game on Thursday night and even consolation games drew a thousand or more fans, with more arriving each hour.

It's a long way from Midland to Hutch no matter which route you choose, but this year's weather was the best of any of the four trips for MC.

Midland College is well-received and many fans still recall our previous visits there in 1982, 1985 and 1987.

Special applause for all the Chaparral fans who supported the team this year, especially those who were adopted Chaparral parents for the athletes. A number made the trek to Hutchinson, which was a welcome sight for the players.

When Ernie, Big Bird, Cookie Monster and others appear at Chaparral Center Tuesday evening, we can guarantee squeals of excitement from thousands of youngsters. They'll be appearing for the first of three Sesame Street Live shows in two days at Chap Center.

This year's show is entitled "When I Grow Up" and carries out the same positive themes which characterize Sesame Street's television programs.

There are shows at 7 p.m. Tuesday and at 10:30 a.m. and 7 p.m. on Wednesday. Tickets are $9.50 for adults and $8 for children. They may be purchased at Chaparral Center box office. Phone 685-4584 for more information.

This is always one of the biggest shows of the year for Chaparral Center and one of the most elaborate in staging and special effects.

Midland College will be closed on Friday and April 4 for Easter. There are no classes after 5 p.m. on Thursday, March 31. College Classics classes won't meet those two days either. When students return from this holiday, there are just five more weeks of classes and a week of final exams to wind up the fall semester.

MC art instructor Warren Taylor has been well represented in a number of recent shows, including a exhibition at the Hutchinson, Kan., Art Center. A native of Kansas, his selection for this event was coincidental with the Chaps' visit there.

He was featured at an international invitational show, "Artists of the Pacific Rim," held at Taiwan at the National Taiwan Art Education Institute, which co-sponsored the event with the Taiwan Watercolor Society. Artists from China, Japan, Australia, and the United States were featured.

Taylor was one of four artists who participated in a large-scale watercolor painting exhibition at the Dentin Center for the Arts. He also was in an invitational exhibit at Texas Women's University in Denton by faculty from 24 colleges with watercolor classes.

His other shows have included the 9th annual National Works on Paper exhibition sponsored by the University of Texas at Tyler; a national watercolor invitational, "Watercolor Now," sponsored by the Salt Lake City Art Center; and "Confluence 1994" in Ingram, Texas, sponsored by the Hill Country Arts Foundation.

Please make an effort to see the Susan Schwartz watercolor exhibit at the McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building. You will come away with a smile on your face . . . and probably a new way of looking at the Southwest. Ms. Schwartz uses strong primary colors for her impressions of landscapes, with subtle colors seen on closer inspection. Many of her works are for sale.

The Schwartz show remains on display through April 22. McCormick Gallery is located in the Allison Fine Arts Building and is open daily without charge. Hours are: 1-5 p.m. Sunday, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday, and 9 a.m.-5 p.m Saturday.

Final show of the semester is the traditional Spring Student Show, which opens on April 26 with a reception from 7-9 p.m. and runs through May 8.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director for Midland College.

POLITICS vs. CHRISTIANITY

DEAR CITIZENS OF THE PERMIAN BASIN:

It is with great hesitation and with much heaviness of heart that we feel obligated to write this letter to our extended community during this Easter Season. Our purpose in writing is to, while we can, make use of our Constitutional right to free speech; in order that we may apologize for some, and challenge all, who name the name of Christ.

Our apology is for those who represent themselves as Christians, and who have resorted to un-Christ-like actions in fighting for political causes, both locally and nationally.

We in no way here question the motives of these individuals, but we do challenge their actions as unrepresentative of Jesus Christ and the message of peace and hope He brought to mankind. We are sorry that some among us have seemed so similar to the extreme political radicals that scourge our nation.

Our challenge is to openly plead with these people to recognize how divergent their actions are from those of the Christ they claim to serve. We openly plead with others to not misjudge the value of true Christianity to themselves and this community. At its best, Christianity offers stability, love, and positive contribution to all people; at its worst, it really isn't Christianity at all.

We are thankful, and hope you are too, for the multitude of churches and individuals who not perfectly, but sincerely, seek to honor God and His Word with their actions.

During this Easter Season, and for the remainder of this soon-to-end Age, we appeal to all who have personally embraced the true message of Easter to make the church of your choice a higher priority and to endeavor to live out the words of our Lord:

"...But I say to you, love your enemies, bless those who curse you, do good to those who hate you, and pray for those who spitefully use you and persecute you, that you may be sons of your Father in heaven." (Matthew 5:44 -45a)

Pastoral Team,

Tom Beard, James Bobo, Fred Lybrand, Mark McLane, Alan Meyers & Lee Thompson.

Bulldogs trip up Rider

■ Midland High tops Wichita Falls Rider 3-1 in Class 5A soccer.

By Mike Butts
Staff Writer

ABILENE — This week Ross Hunter day-dreamed about it. Saturday the Midland High Bulldogs turned Hunter's musings into reality with a 3-1 Class 5A sectional round soccer playoff win over Wichita Falls Rider.

The victory means the Bulldogs continue their quest for Midland High's best soccer season ever Tuesday against El Paso Austin, 15-3 and 3-0 winners over El Paso Andress Friday, in a region quarterfinal. A win there would give Midland High its longest foray into the playoffs in school history.

"Every night before the game I think about how I want the game to go, and it went exactly like we wanted it to," said Hunter, the Midland midfielder whose team got two goals in the first 6:03 of Saturday's game for a 2-0 lead. "It's like (assistant coach) Chad (Patterson) said at the half. We sent them halfway back to Wichita Falls in the first seven minutes."

Midland's goals came surprisingly quickly. They accounted for half the game's scoring and turned out to be all the Bulldogs would need for the win.

Rider (15-8) went without top scorer Barrett Beeson and top assist man Matt King, ejected from the Raiders area round win over San Angelo on red cards. But the 7-5A district champs struggled back into the game

■ Arizona's backcourt trio advances to the Final Four with a 92-72 win over Purdue in the West Regional final.

By Steve Wilstein
AP Sports Writer

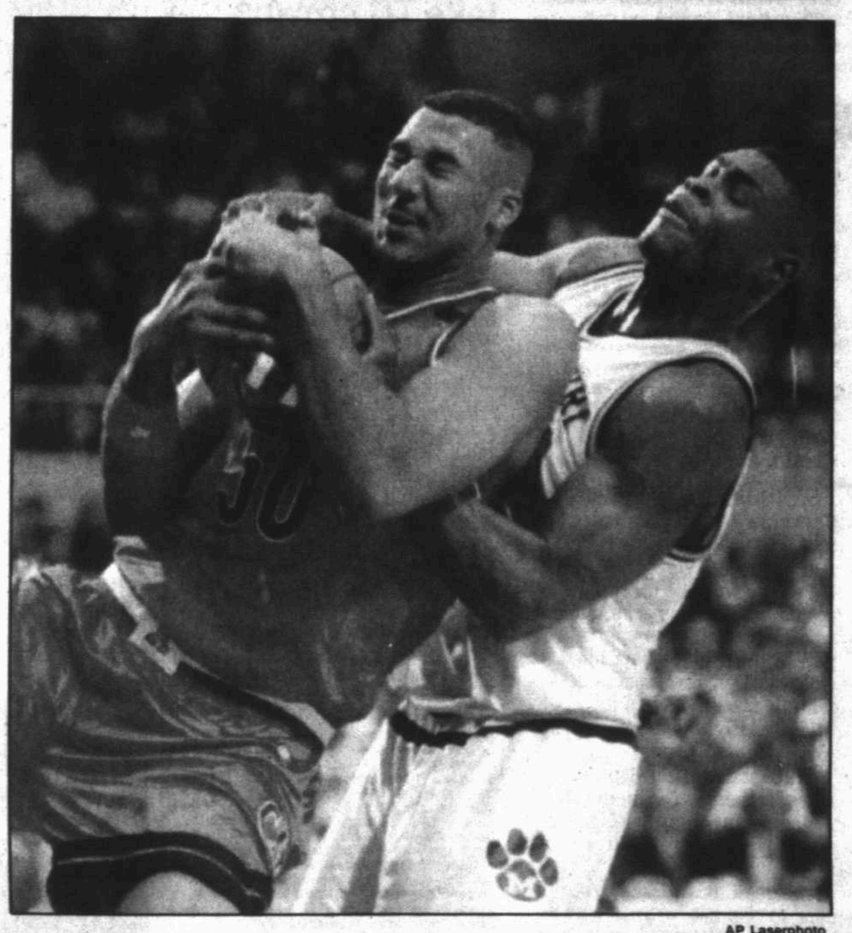

LOS ANGELES — Arizona is taking its claim on the best backcourt in the country to the Final Four.

Three guards who do it all from the outside, inside and on defense — Damon Stoudamire, Khalid Reeves and Reggie Geary — shredded Missouri to lead Arizona to a 92-72 victory Saturday in the NCAA West final.

All of Missouri's size and strength meant nothing when Stoudamire, perhaps the toughest little man in college ball, sank his first four 3-pointers on the way to 27 points. Missouri couldn't stop Reeves from slashing through the middle for most of his 26 points, and it couldn't do anything about the clever passing of Geary, who also scored 14 points.

But more than putting on an offensive show, these three guards pestered No. 5 Missouri to death on defense, swiping

■ Women's Tournament

PISCATAWAY, N.J. — Tonya Sampson scored 30 points and No. 4 North Carolina advanced to the Final Four for the first time by rallying in the second half to defeat No. 3 Connecticut 81-69 in the East Regional final Saturday.

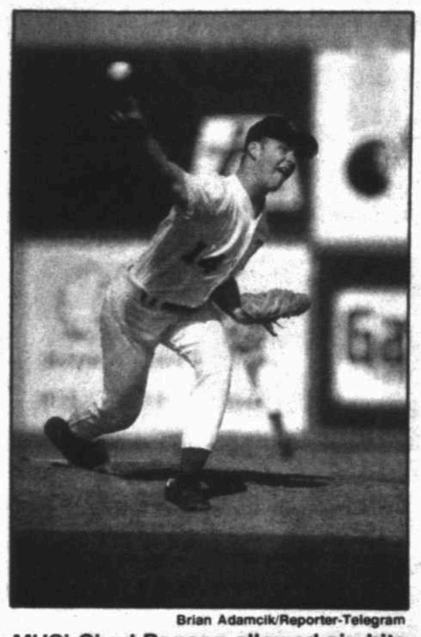

The victory was the 12th straight for the third-seeded Tar Heels (31-2) and it snapped a school-record 21 game winning streak for top-seeded Connecticut (30-3).

North Carolina, which just three years ago went 2-16 in the ACC, ended the streak with defense. It forced 13 of Connecticut's 30 turnovers in the final 17 minutes after the Huskies opened a 49-42 lead.

Sampson, who scored 53 points in the two games at Rutgers Athletic Center, ignited a 14-2 spurt with a three-point basket and a layup.

Midland High wins first league outing

■ Chad Benson shuts down Odessa's while the Bulldogs rack up 12 hits and 11 runs in victory.

By Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

Tuesday, Midland High showed signs of life in a 9-8 loss to Abilene Cooper. The Bulldogs, whose offense had been sputtering all season long, gathered 11 hits and eight runs in the loss.

Saturday, MHS put enough of the pieces together to mount its first win of the district season by overwhelming Odessa High 11-2 at Angel Stadium.

Midland High improves to 1-3 in District 4-5A and 5-11 overall while Odessa drops to 0-5 and 2-13.

For Midland High the win keeps intact the 'Dogs chances of claiming the third spot in the district and a playoff appearance.

"We talked as a team after the Cooper game that we had to win this game to have any kind of a shot at the playoffs," said Wood. "We're realistic first place is not in the cards for us and probably second place. But with three losses, we felt like if went out and battled we had a shot at the third place, and that's what our goal is now."

Midland High, which has been falling behind in the early innings most of the season, used a different batting lineup with designated hitter Kyle Carrasco in the fourth spot for second baseman T. Stewart. The result was 11 runs on 12

CINCINNATI — Pete Rose is a pizza man now.

Pepperoni. Sausage. Three cheese. They're all right there in the frozen foods section. Sometimes, so too is Pete, hawking the 12-inch "Hit King" pizzas wrapped in a picture of a baseball.

"The pizza business seems ready to explode," Rose says.

A few aisles over, you can get a jar of "Charlie Hustle Cheese Dip," "4,256 Picante Sauce," "Batters Box Bar-B-Que Sauce" or "Stadium Style Corn Dog Sauce." All under Pete Rose's label. All

Rebels survive scare from Permian

Staff Report

ODESSA — Midland Lee survived a seventh inning rally from Odessa Permian to defeat the Panthers 8-7 in District 4-5A baseball action here Saturday afternoon.

Lee improves to 5-0 in district play and 12-3 overall while Permian dropped its third straight-game to fall to 8-8 overall and 3-1 in league play.

The Rebels went into the seventh inning with an 8-6 lead. Permian's Chris Roberson opened the inning with a leadoff triple. An Eddie Loehman sacrifice fly scored Roberson to trim the lead to 8-7. Third baseman Jim Vick followed by striking out, but reached first base after the third strike hit home plate and bounced to the backstop, allowing Vick to first. Lee reliever Lance Watters then got Jeremy Delcore to fly out and Chris Howell to ground out to end the game.

"I thought we were snakebit after they got on base after the third strike in the seventh inning," said Lee coach Jesse Benavidez. "The team played well, I thought. We hit the ball, but they did too.

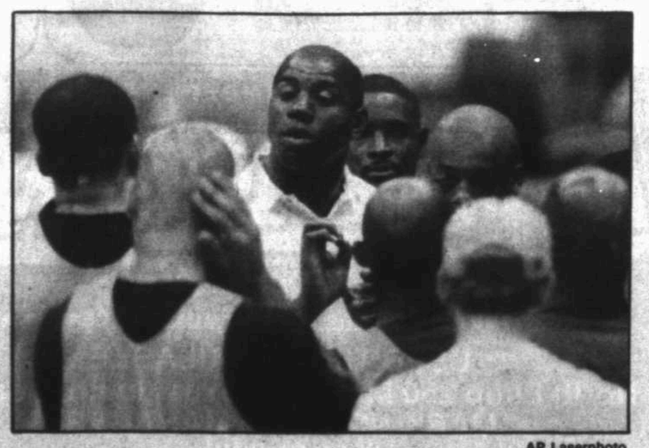

"Permian is competing real well. They've got a young ballclub, but (Permian coach) Steve (Coleman) has done an outstanding job with the kids."

Lee was led offensively by second baseman Kevin Jordan, third baseman Raymond Martinez and left fielder Chris Connally.

Martinez, who was batting .361 entering the game, went 4-for-4 with a single, two doubles and his first home run of the year.

Jordan, who went 0-for-3 against Abilene High on Tuesday,

Lakers get Magic marathon workout

By Sue Manning
Associated Press Writer

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Forget glitz and glamour. It was all work when Magic Johnson held his first practice as coach of the Los Angeles Lakers on Saturday.

The 3-hour, 20-minute practice was the Lakers' longest of the season. The news conference that followed lasted nearly as long.

"It was long and I think it was good," said Johnson, who is replacing Randy Pfund as Lakers' coach for at least the rest of the season.

"We worked on a lot of things we wanted to work on. The players responded with great enthusiasm and that helped. So we got done what we wanted to get done."

The Lakers, who are 28-38 with 16 games remaining, might still be practicing if assistant coach Bill Bertka hadn't advised Johnson that the team did have to play a game on Sunday — against the Milwaukee Bucks.

Johnson went from group to group, often demonstrating, sometimes clapping, always commenting on the performance of his team. He referred often to a piece of blue paper shoved in his waistband. "Those are my drills," he said.

"He was probably more excited about his first practice than he was for his first basketball game," said Lakers general manager Jerry West, who watched the practice from the sidelines.

Johnson, who led the Lakers to five NBA championships as a player, said he spent several days preparing for his first practice.

Jimmy to decide

DALLAS — Is Dallas Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson mad enough at team owner Jerry Jones that he'd be willing to quit? He'll say so this week.

Johnson said Saturday he will hold a news conference in a few days to announce whether he'll be back next season to try for a third-straight Super Bowl title.

His hesitation stems from a clash last week during which Jones threatened to fire Johnson, who has five years left on his $1 million-a-year contract. Jones also said he'd replace Johnson with former University of Oklahoma coach Barry Switzer.

Jones said the only way he would resign would be if certain conditions were not met. Earlier this year he hinted at being interested in coaching the expansion Jacksonville Jaguars, but Jones said he wouldn't let Johnson out of his contract.

Rockets blast new Jazz tune

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Hakeem Olajuwon finished with a flourish for the second straight game, scoring 20 of his 37 points in the fourth quarter and leading Houston to a 98-83 victory over Utah on Saturday night.

Olajuwon, who had 15 fourth-quarter points in Thursday night's victory over the Los Angeles Lakers, enabled the Rockets to snap a three-game losing streak against the Jazz.

■ NBA Roundup

Houston took advantage of two Utah scoring droughts in the third quarter to win for the seventh time in eight games.

The Rockets outscored Utah 10-0 during a 3:05 span of the third quarter, and the Jazz had a 4:26 scoreless skid before the period ended.

Karl Malone led Utah with 19 points and 10 rebounds and John Stockton scored 14 points. Vernon Maxwell returned after missing two games with a sprained knee to score 18 points, and rookie Sam Cassell scored a season-high 18 points.

Hawks 100, Heat 100

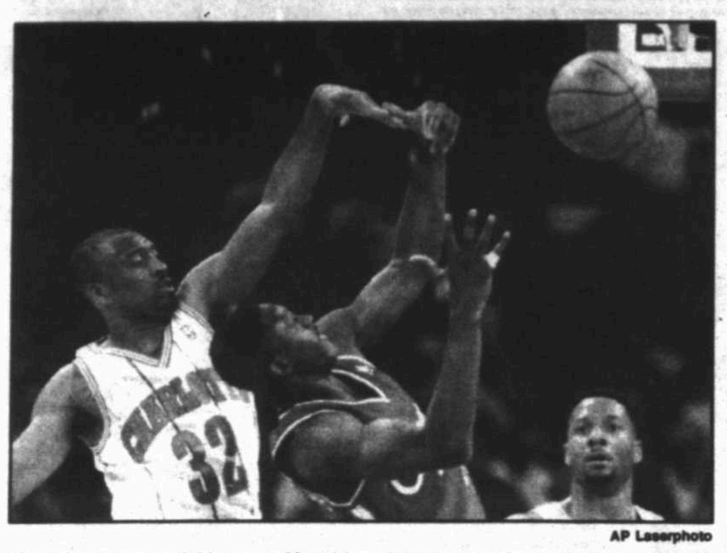

ATLANTA — Mookie Blaylock had 17 points, 14 assists and 11 rebounds and Stacey Augmon scored seven of his 25 points in the final 3:31 as the Atlanta Hawks beat the Miami Heat 100-90 Saturday night.

The Hawks, winning for the fifth time in six games to move one-half game behind idle New York for the best record in the Eastern Conference, held their opponent under 100 points for the 10th consecutive game.

Steve Smith scored 17 points to lead the Heat, who completed a four-game road trip with their fourth straight loss.

Hornets 121, Clippers 109

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Alonzo Mourning scored 26 points and led Charlotte's 60 percent shooting with 10-for-16 accuracy against Los Angeles.

Los Angeles trailed just 90-83 with 9:49 left in the game, but Charlotte answered with an 11-2 run for a 101-85 lead with 6:34 remaining. The Clippers could get no closer than eight down the stretch as the Hornets shot 79 percent from the field in the fourth quarter.

Charlotte has now won seven of 10 games since the return of Mourning and Larry Johnson, who were both out at the same time because of injuries.

Nets 103, Bullets 100

LANDOVER, Md. — Armon Gilliam scored 21 points, including the go-ahead basket with 16 seconds left in the game, as New Jersey erased a 17-point deficit to beat Washington.

CHICAGO — Scottie Pippen scored 20 points and Scott Williams blocked Derrick McKey's layup attempt at the buzzer as Chicago withstood a second-half comeback to beat Indiana 90-88.

Pippen also had 11 rebounds and seven steals for the Bulls, who led by 16 points in the second quarter and by 12 at the half before the Pacers rallied.

Rik Smits led Indiana with 14 points, while leading scorer Reggie Miller was held to 11. Horace Grant and Pete Myers scored 13 points each for the Bulls, who have beaten Indiana 18 times in 22 meetings.

With the clock running down and the Bulls ahead by one, B.J. Armstrong missed a jumper, but Grant got the offensive rebound and flipped the ball over his head to Steve Kerr, who was fouled and made one free throw with 16 seconds left, making the score 90-88.

After a timeout, Pippen nearly made a steal with nine seconds to go, but knocked the ball out of bounds. Then McKey drove for the basket, but Williams blocked the shot, and McKey ended up on the floor as the buzzer sounded.

Indiana, which trailed 58-46 at the half, got within seven after three quarters. The Pacers pulled within one after Dale Davis converted a three-point play with 2:59 left and Smits dropped in two free throws with 1:02 remaining.

PIZZA: Rose rebounds from baseball banning for $2.99 a jar.

Coming soon: "Hit King" apparel and a second Pete Rose Ballpark Cafe in Florida. That's in addition to his sports talk show, carried by 100 stations in 30 states.

"A lot of good things are happening," Rose said.

Baseball? That's not one of them. Rose has made big inroads in the frozen foods case, but not in major league baseball or the Hall of Fame.

Five years after he inexplicably accepted a lifetime ban while denying he bet on baseball, the sport's all-time leader with 4,256 hits is still on the outside looking in. Rose can put his image on pizzas, but he can't get it on a plaque in Cooperstown.

That's one of his next marketing projects.

For the first time since his exile from baseball, Rose, 52, is planning his return. He's trying to figure out the best way to approach major league baseball and executive council chairman Bud Selig about reinstatement.

"I've started to think about it," he said, in a telephone interview from his restaurant in Boca Raton. "I'm just trying to approach it in the right way so it's easy for everybody. I don't want to cause any lightning rod with the press. I don't want to cause anything with Mr. Selig — he has a lot of things on his mind.

"When we get ready to do that, we don't want a letter to be sent to somebody and it sits on the backburner for six months."

Surely, he won't have to worry about that. His attempt to get back into baseball's good graces — the prerequisite for getting into the Hall of Fame — will stir up a lot of the questions that were put on hold when Rose left the game:

Did he bet on baseball? Rose says no; Bart Giamatti, the commissioner who banned him, said yes.

Does he have his gambling problem under control? Rose now says he never had a gambling problem.

Does any of what happened five years ago matter now? Giamatti said Rose would have to reconfigure his life before getting back into baseball. Rose believes he's done that.

"I imagine that means no more illegal gambling and watch your associations," Rose said. "Based on what I was told to do, you do it with flying colors. That's all you can do. As far as I know, I don't think it ever came out of the commissioner's mouth why I was suspended."

On the day Rose agreed to the lifetime ban — the penalty for betting on baseball — Giamatti told reporters he thought Rose had bet on baseball. Rose said he bet on other sports, but not baseball. Their agreement made no finding.

Then there's another touchy matter: Rose's gambling.

When he left the game, Rose insisted he had no gambling problem. A few months later, he said he was getting counseling from Dr. J. Randolph Hillard, chairman of psychiatry at the University of Cincinnati College of Medicine.

At the time, Hillard said Rose had "a clinically significant gambling disorder."

"He has concluded that he is powerless before gambling, that he will begin an ongoing treatment program, and that he can never again gamble on anything," Hillard said.

Five years later, Rose has changed his mind. He says he occasionally places bets at race tracks and sees no problem with gambling once in a while as long as it's legal.

"The worst thing I ever did was admit I had a gambling problem," Rose said. "You think you do because so many things happen to you. Then you go to a couple of Gamblers Anonymous meetings — I went to six or so — and you start to hear the stories and you say, 'What do I have in common with these people?' You say, 'Nothing.' "

Hillard declined to talk about Rose's change of heart. But John Dowd, who investigated Rose for major league baseball, was saddened to hear it.

"It means he hasn't licked his problem," Dowd said. "It's very sad. I think it's got a hold of him, did have a hold of him."

Dowd also bristled at Rose sidestepping the reasons he got banned from baseball.

"It troubles me," Dowd said. "I don't like it when people try to revise history. As long as I'm breathing, I'm not going to stand silent and let it happen. The facts are very, very strong."

Rose has never had to confront everything in the Dowd report — the depositions, telephone records and betting sheets that reportedly contain his fingerprints and handwriting.

Rose has made amends for his tax problems — he served five months in jail, three months in a halfway house and did 1,000 hours of community service for failing to report income. Making amends with baseball might not be so easy.

Giamatti is dead. His successor, Fay Vincent, was forced out in 1992. There's no indication when baseball will have another commissioner.

The uncertainty doesn't seem to bother Rose, who goes about his new businesses, raises his family and polishes his legacy.

His image — in baseball uniform swinging a bat — adorns his products. When callers to his restaurant get put on hold, they hear a tape of Cincinnati Reds broadcasters Marty Brennaman and Joe Nuxhall describing hit No. 4,192, which made him the game's all-time leader.

And he holds court on his nightly radio show.

"Being on radio here is sort of my way of going to the ballpark," he said. "Here I talk to people every night — not just about baseball, but sports in general.

"It's not like I'm not in the game. I'm just not on the field."

BULLDOGS: Midland belts OHS pitching

hits, including seven hits in the one through four spot in the order.

"Last week after the Cooper ballgame I felt like we were finally putting the ball in play, not with just base hits, but by keeping the ball in play," said Wood. "We have finally come around at the plate, I think."

Lead-off hitter Abel Sanchez went 2-for-4 with two runs and three RBIs and shortstop Scott Riley overcame three fielding errors to go 4-for-4 with two runs and two RBIs.

"We've been working on our hitting a lot in practice," said Sanchez. "(Hitting the ball at the top of the lineup) puts a lot of pressure on them because they think we are fast."

The Bulldogs dodged two errors in the top of the first inning without giving up a run. With runners on first and second and one out, third baseman Keith Lant had a sharp ground ball hit to him for an apparent double play, but did not tag third base for the force out and then threw late to first to load the bases. Odessa centerfielder A.J. Madero followed by hitting into a double play to end the inning.

"I felt in the first inning, when we kicked the ball around and allowed runners on, that Chad wasn't going to allow them to score," said Wood. "I was real pleased with the way he reacted to the situation."

Benson limited the Bronchos to just one hit in the first four innings. He was in control on the mound, throwing 30 pitches in the first two innings, 23 which were strikes.

"I was trying to throw strikes and let the defense take over," said Benson, who also hit two doubles and drove in two runs. "I felt like I had good control. I'm not a strikeout pitcher so I try to keep the ball on the ground or in the air and let the defense do its job."

Tuesday, Midland will travel to San Angelo, a 16-2 winner over Abilene High Saturday for a 4 p.m contest.

MAGIC: Coach runs Lakers hard

(From 1C)

"Every day I would be sitting around and think of something else and write it down," he said. He watched films and asked his coaches for lists. "And I knew what I had to work on then," he said with his trademark chuckle.

So for 200 minutes Saturday — no breaks — Johnson asked the Lakers to run, shoot, pass, dribble, defend, pick, roll, screen, fake and fly.

"I'm still breathing so I guess I'm still alive," center James Edwards quipped after the workout.

"I didn't have a heart attack so I guess I'm alright," added veteran forward Kurt Rambis.

"There's a lot more running than in the past," said injured center Sam Bowie.

Center Vlade Divac said he enjoyed the practice.

"I like this way. I know results are going to come," he said.

Johnson retired as a player in 1991 after learning he was infected with the virus that causes AIDS. He made a brief comeback in 1992, winning an Olympic gold medal and playing in some preseason games. But shortly before the season started, he retired again.

Veteran forward James Worthy said Johnson started Saturday's practice with the fundamentals — "straight up, solid, just the way he played it." Worthy said Johnson can pass on a lot of "inside stuff that even the coaches don't know."

Rookie point guard Nick Van Exel said the workout was "more like training camp, very physical, guys going at each other."

Van Exel holds out hope the Lakers can make the playoffs, even though they are six games behind the Denver Nuggets for the eighth playoff berth.

"It's a shot," he said. "We're not totally out of it."

Johnson said he expects his team to be "different, but I don't know how different. I can't change the offense. We've got to keep the same plays. I put in one because we need some early offense stuff. It's too late for me to change it a lot. I hope to see us run more and pressure the ball more."

with a first-half score. And their coach refused to blame his missing stars on the loss.

"That's an excuse they'll use when they get to be 40 years old and in a bar," Rider boss Kenny Catney said. "But it's still 11 on 11."

It looked more like 11 on seven or eight in the opening minutes. The Bulldogs made ball meet net on their first two shots.

"We came out with a few players testing the waters but they didn't give us a chance to test it," Catney said.

Said Bulldog coach Tom Esikhati, "We were extremely lucky to get two goals at the beginning. We always wait to the second half to score."

But after goals by Sean Parnell and Tyler Krueger, the Bulldogs (18-1) seemed to slack off a bit. The Raiders Robbie Wilson assisted Paul Bicoy with 7:48 to go in the half to get Rider back in the game, 2-1.

"I think we probably got those two goals a little too soon, gave up early and thought we had the game won," said Bulldog senior midfielder Paul Rounding, who assisted Parnell when Parnell turned in the box and shot left to right for the first goal. "Rider is a good team and came back hard."

Hunter played a nifty ball to Krueger from the left side for Midland's second score. The tally stood at 2-1 at the half.

The Bulldogs got some cushion 13 minutes into the second half. Emmanuel Sannon found Hunter in front of goal with a perfect pass and Hunter drove the ball for a 3-1 Midland advantage. It was Hunter's 19th goal of the season and second in the playoffs. He has been the most impressive player on the field in both playoff games.

"They're going to give you a good game whether you have your best players or not," Catney said.

Neither Rider nor Burkburnett, who Midland beat 2-0 in the area round, have severely tested Midland. The Bulldogs dominated Burkburnett in a 2-0 win. They outshot Rider 10-3. They led both games throughout and demonstrated far superior ball handling and speed in both contests.

Midland will sooner or later meet a team that matches its speed and ball handling ability. At least until then, Hunter's daydreams are destined to come true.

5-5A Notes: Midland and Abilene

High's boys are now the only District 5-5A teams left in the playoffs. Abilene High beat Wichita Falls High Friday 3-0. Abilene Cooper's girls lost to Wichita Falls 2-0 Saturday and San Angelo's girls lost to Rider 2-1.

went 3-for-3 with three runs scored and an RBI while Connally went 4-for-4 with two runs and two RBIs. Connally, who leads the team with 18 RBIs on the season, had a triple and a double.

Starting pitcher Britt Harper was hit for five runs, four earned, in three innings of work before Lance Watters came on in relief to hold Permian to just two runs on four hits and five strikeouts.

"After Permian had seen Britt twice and were about to face them a third time, I thought it was a good time to make a change," said Benavidez. "Lance usually starts, but he's a quality pitcher and I needed him in there because of the way they were hitting the ball."

Permian racked up nine hits, including a 2-for-4 effort by leadoff hitter Lane Brannon. Vick went 2-for-4 with two RBIs.

Lee will take a break from district play Tuesday as the Rebels face Lubbock Coronado in a doubleheader beginning at 4 p.m. at O'Bannion Field in Lubbock.

Martin claims round two of IROC champions series

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — Mark Martin shrugged off a late challenge from Rusty Wallace at Darlington Raceway on Saturday to win the second round of the 1994 International Race of Champions series.

Martin led the final 38 laps on the 1.366-mile oval as the race, scheduled for 60 laps, was cut to 46 by time constraints after three long caution periods, including a mandatory stop for a tire change.

It was only the second time the all-star series has run at Darlington, NASCAR's oldest superspeedway, and it was not a very competitive race for the identically prepared Dodge Avengers. Winston Cup star Martin easily earned his first IROC victory.

"I made it look easy?" Martin asked with a grin. "No, I think it was just our day. It's not because I'm good. I was lucky. The passing moves I chose to take worked. Some days it does and some days it doesn't."

Martin, participating in IROC for the third time, started ninth in the 12-car field. He was fifth after the first lap, up to third by lap three, second on lap seven, and took the lead from former SCCA Trans-Am champion Jack Baldwin on the ninth trip around the narrow track.

Wallace, another NASCAR star, finished 0.25-seconds (about four car-lengths) behind the winner.

"There wasn't much chance I was going to catch Mark," Wallace said. "I was working the high line down there trying to get around him, but he was just real strong all day. We got my car cooled down real good during that (tire) stop, but I still didn't have quite enough for Mark."

Wallace was followed by Baldwin, defending Winston Cup champion Dale Earnhardt, NASCAR star Kyle Petty and defending Trans-Am champion and Indy-car rookie Scott Sharp, the only other drivers on the lead lap at the conclusion.

NASCAR's Dale Jarrett and sprint car star Steve Kinser were eliminated from the race after nine laps in the only accident, with Kinser getting turned sideways coming off turn two with the help of Wallace. Jarrett, slowing fast to avoid the sliding Kinser, was himself hit in the rear by Earnhardt and propelled into the wall at the bottom of the banking. There were no injuries.

Indy-car stars Al Unser Jr., second to Earnhardt in the series-opening race last month at Daytona, and Danny Sullivan went out of the event early with overheating problems, which also hampered Earnhardt's performance.

"That was an IROC mess-up," series president Jay Signore said of the overheating problems. "We were concerned about the stones and the pebbles, so we put a coarse screen out front (in the grilles). We should have known better.

"We had a fine screen on the backside (of the grille), so ... the rubber went through the coarse screen and couldn't go through the fine screen. The rubber got trapped between the two screens, blocking up the whole grille."

Martin said he was fortunate to avoid the problem that bothered so many of the others.

"I didn't have the overheating problem and Jack Baldwin said he didn't either. My car never got very hot."

Caution periods do not count in IROC and Martin's average speed was listed as 144.083 mph.

The four-race series pays out a total of $735,000, with the point winner receiving $200,000 plus one of the new Dodge Avenger production cars.

The series is sponsored by True Value Hardware Stores, Dodge and Goodyear.

Irvan hopes for second straight win

■ TranSouth 400

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — It took Ernie Irvan a long time to learn how to be patient.

His lack of that virtue earned him the nickname "Swervin' Irvan," a driver fast enough and talented enough to win some races, including a Daytona 500, but so headstrong that crashes became a regular part of his repertoire.

Those days appear gone now, with the 35-year-old Irvan not only winning races — two in a row going into today's TranSouth Financial 400 at Darlington Raceway — but also finishing the ones he doesn't win.

In his first full season with Robert Yates Racing, Irvan has added second- and fifth-place finishes to his 10th and 11th career victories. He heads into the 400-mile race — cut down from 500 in recent years — leading Mark Martin in the Winston Cup standings by 101 points.

A lot of the credit for his early success this season goes to crew chief Larry McReynolds, who is helping Irvan learn to cool his aggressive urges when they start to overheat.

"It took me a long time to understand that you have to take care of a race car and not just go fast," Irvan said. "I always thought you just got in the car and drove it as fast as you could for as long as you could. But, with Larry's help, I'm learning to be more patient.

"He keeps telling me, 'Look at the big picture.' What he means is remember we've got a championship to try to win, so don't put the car in a dangerous spot just to try to win a race.

"If the car is capable of winning, then you try to win. If it isn't, you try to finish as high as you can. The big thing, though, is to finish."

Irvan's new attitude is not very good news for the rest of the Winston Cup competitors, because he has always had the ability to drive a race car fast. Irvan will start 11th in today's 41-car field, ironically the first time he has qualified outside the top 10 since joining the Yates team at the Darlington race last September.

Both of his victories this season have come on tracks where Irvan had not won before. Darlington's 1.366-mile oval is another where he has yet to win.

"I'd never won two in a row before now," Irvan said, his newfound attitude shining through. "Obviously, we want to win, but we've got to have a top-five (finish) and keep our momentum."

Bill Elliott, looking for his first victory since the season-ending event in 1992, will start from the pole after leading a record-setting assault on NASCAR's oldest superspeedway.

Elliott and fellow front-row starter Sterling Marlin were among 26 drivers to break the previous track qualifying record, thanks in great measure to some fast, new tires provided by Goodyear and Hoosier, whose heated radial war continues this week.

Goodyear had the best of it in qualifying, with only one of the top 20 on Hoosiers, but the situation could be different in the race.

"The track is so course, it really eats up the tires," said Daytona 500 winner Marlin.

Ken Schrader, who will start sixth, said, "The tires are a lot quicker than they've ever been here before, but they're still going to fall off the same amount. We'll just be going faster when they fall off.

"I don't think Hoosier will be a factor, from what I'm hearing, but you never know what's going to happen until the race starts."

NFL's odd couple may file for divorce

■ Analysis

It's inevitable. Sooner or later, Jimmy Johnson or Jerry Jones will file for a Dallas divorce. They're incompatible. And after the latest spat between the Cowboy coach and the Cowboy owner-general manager, it might be sooner instead of later.

For all the rule changes adopted at the National Football League meetings in Orlando, Fla., the Jimmy and Jerry Show eventually will affect competitive balance much more than the new two-point conversion.

It's not economics, it's egonomics. Jimmy and Jerry simply don't get along. The morning after the Cowboys celebrated their second straight Super Bowl victory two months ago, Jimmy was sniping at Jerry for all the news media to hear. And now Jimmy and Jerry are sniping at each other.

It's a sitcom without much com.

The plot thickened at a NFL reception in Orlando when Jerry walked over to where Jimmy was sitting with two of his former assistants who are now head coaches, Dave Wannstedt of the Bears and Norv Turner of the Redskins, as well as with Bob Ackles, a former Cowboys scouting director.

Jerry toasted the Cowboys' first Super Bowl triumph, in which all the men had shared a part, but Jerry was not invited to join Jimmy's group. Annoyed at the chill, Jerry returned to the bar where he soon was growling about firing Jimmy and hiring Barry Switzer, once the professor of pigskin at Oklahoma and now at large.

The next day Jimmy left Orlando and later acknowledged having been "deeply hurt" by Jerry's remarks.

But how deep is deeply? Deep enough to walk away from his annual $1 million salary for the next five seasons rather than coexist with the Cowboy owner? Deep enough to ignore the opportunity to be the first coach to "three-peat" in the Super Bowl?

Considering the egonomics involved, you never know.

But when Jimmy and Jerry eventually split, Jerry will be the loser. Jimmy will get the first coaching job that appeals to him. Jerry will be lucky to get another coach anywhere near as good.

As long as Jimmy is on the sideline, the Cowboys, with Emmitt Smith and Troy Aikman, could dominate the NFL for another five seasons. But with a lesser coach, the Cowboys wouldn't be the same team.

Even after the Cowboys' first Super Bowl triumph, Jimmy wondered about his endurance in the job.

"When it gets to the point where I don't enjoy it, that's when I'll stop and head on out to the beach for good," Jimmy told Ed Hinton for his autobiography, "Turning the Thing Around" (Hyperion). "That may be 10 years from now. Or it may be next year. It could happen when we're winning, if I get to the point where I don't enjoy putting in the hours."

Especially when some of Jimmy's hours involve working with Jerry in the Cowboy offices.

Don't mistake this as another George Steinbrenner-Billy Martin re-run. George always fired and rehired Billy not because Billy was "a Yankee" but because Billy had nowhere else to go.

When Jimmy and Jerry split, Jimmy will quickly surface, preferably somewhere in the vicinity of Miami, where he coached the University of Miami to two national college championships.

One theory is that Jimmy wants to coach the Miami Dolphins after Don Shula, now 64, decides to stop coaching.

Compared to the inevitable cancellation of the Jimmy and Jerry Show, the two-point conversion will be a mere footnote in history.

But what's significant is that the club owners voted for the run-pass option from the 2-yard line on the competition committee's recommendation over the objection of several coaches, including Dan Reeves of the Giants.

One of the coaches' arguments is that, with overtime, the NFL doesn't need the 2-point conversion.

But if coaches don't like it because it creates another second-guess, fans will like it for the same reason.

WAC looks to expand, add SWC member

FORT WORTH (AP) — The Western Athletic Conference, which has been eyeing some Texas schools, does not favor expansion beyond 12 teams, league officials said in a published report today.

The conference was nearing an agreement on a five-year television contract for football rights, according to the Fort Worth Star-Telegram's copyright report.

"In my judgment, we should add two and no more," San Diego State athletic director Fred Miller told the newspaper. "It makes no sense to go to 14."

Administrators at Rice, Southern Methodist, Texas Christian and Houston said WAC officials have in the past week requested information on the number of sports sponsored, attendance and recent television appearances.

One WAC athletic director told the Star-Telegram that ABC-TV and ESPN have offered the conference about $19 million to televise 12 to 15 regular-season games per year.

The league could also make at least $1 million per year for a playoff game, the director said.

But the 10-member WAC needs to expand by two to reach the 12-team minimum necessary to conduct a playoff game. Several sources inside and outside the WAC told the newspaper TCU and Nevada-Las Vegas have been mentioned as prime WAC expansion targets.

The Horned Frogs, Owls, Mustangs and Cougars are interested in realigning with another conference because the four other Southwest Conference members have accepted offers to join the Big Eight Conference in 1996.

"We are interested in joining the Western Athletic Conference," SMU athletic director Forrest Gregg said Thursday.

But the offer from ABC and ESPN would remain the same whether or not the WAC expands.

"My understanding is that the numbers don't change," WAC associate commissioner Jeff Hurd told the newspaper. "It doesn't matter if it's 10, 12, 14 or 16 teams."

The newspaper said the WAC office sent inquiries to more than 10 universities this past week to gather information for league presidents, who are in charge of making the final call on WAC expansion.

Another WAC source said if the league went beyond 12 teams, Memphis State and Tulsa would be the next two universities extended invitations.

Hurd said the league is close to finalizing negotiations with the two networks but added, "I think it's really premature to say we have an agreement."

Current WAC members are Air Force, Brigham Young, Colorado State, Fresno State, Hawaii, New Mexico, San Diego State, Texas-El Paso, Utah and Wyoming.

Morrison continues ascent back to pinnacle

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — The "three-strikes-and-you're-out" rule could be in effect regarding Tommy Morrison.

Morrison, known for a strong right hand in the ring and a fondness for the nightlife outside of it, has twice seen his heavyweight career sidetracked by staggering losses.

He recognizes one more slip could be the end of him.

"I can't afford to lose again," he said. "This is a very unforgiving sport. When you do good, people are easy to jump on the bandwagon. As soon as you stumble, they hide under the shade tree."

Morrison, 39-2 with 34 knockouts, resumes his comeback tonight at the Tulsa Fairgrounds Pavilion against Bryan "Bam Bam" Scott of Kansas City, Mo., who is undefeated in 13 fights.

Morrison, 25, won his first 27 professional fights and came out strong against Ray Mercer before he tired and was knocked out in the fifth round. His career was revived with a victory over George Foreman in June that gave him the World Boxing Organization title.

But then he passed up a $7.5 million payday against Lennox Lewis for what was supposed to be a tuneup before the home crowd in Tulsa. Instead, he was floored three times in the first round in losing by a technical knockout to unheralded Michael Bentt in October.

"Each time, I've learned from my mistakes," Morrison said.

He admits his gravest errors occur outside the ring. He was charged in Iowa with slugging someone in a restaurant, and has been criticized at times by his own camp for not giving boxing the devotion it requires.

"My dedication is 100 percent now," Morrison said. "I wish that would have hit me a long time ago. This is a good stepping stone to shoot ourselves into title contention. I look to be a little more patient in this fight. Everyone knows I can knock people out; very few people know I have some boxing skills."

About the only time Morrison has opted to fight instead of brawl was against Foreman, when he stayed on the move for a 12-round decision.

Morrison said he plans to move his camp to Oklahoma from Kansas City, Mo., where he said the media was overly critical. Despite the loss to Bentt, who earlier this month lost the WBO title in a seventh-round knockout by Herbie Hide, Morrison believes he'll get another title shot before long.

Canadian grabs U.S. giant slalom championship

WINTER PARK, Colo. (AP) — Canadian Thomas Grandi's come-from-behind victory in the men's giant slalom on Saturday was doubly sweet.

He not only won the GS in the U.S. Alpine Championships for the second straight year, he also avenged a loss last month to the Americans in the Canadian nationals.

"This is sweet revenge for us," Grandi said. "Our Canadian championships were right before the Olympics, and Chris Puckett came up there and won. I was fifth, three seconds out.

"You'd think an American skier would win the U.S. nationals, just like a Canadian should win up there. But somehow it seems to get mixed up."

It's one of the qualities that gives these championships a special flavor. Canada now has won two of the six events here. The nationals conclude today with the men's and women's slaloms.

Grandi, 21, of Banff, Alberta, powered from sixth place after the first run to successfully defend his title.

Grandi, 65-hundredths of a second behind first-run leader Puckett, had a blistering second run of 1 minute, 10.08 seconds that was more than a second faster than any other skier. That gave him a combined time of 2:17.71.

Jeremy Nobis of Park City, Utah, finished second in 2:18.46, and Puckett, of Crested Butte, Colo., faded to third in 2:19.18.

Chad Mullen of Canada was fourth in 2:19.68, followed by Casey Snyder of Dillon, Colo., in 2:19.89 and Rob Crossan of Canada in 2:20.00.

Olympic double medalist Tommy Moe of Palmer, Alaska, finished 13th in 2:21.01, but he continues to lead the combined standings.

"I knew I skied this morning a little bit too conservatively," Grandi said. "I knew if I was going to win, I really had to let it go, especially on the pitch, which is where I lost a lot of time this morning.

"This afternoon, I just pointed my skis down the hill. I felt I had a couple of slips on the top section, so I needed to attack that pitch even more so. If I went out, I'd go out. But if I finished, I knew I'd have a good run."

CITYLINE — The Talk of the Town

balls, denying shots, getting in the way of drives and sneaking in for rebounds. Stoudamire slipped away with 10 rebounds, to go with his four assists.

The Wildcats also had a huge 26-point advantage from the free throw line, largely because Missouri couldn't help but foul Arizona's quick, hard-driving guards.

Arizona, ranked No. 9 and coming off two straight years of first-round losses in the NCAA tournament, now goes to Charlotte, N.C., to face the winner of Sunday's Arkansas-Michigan game.

Arizona (29-5) has gotten little respect this season, but that will all change if Stoudamire, Reeves and Geary keep playing the way they did against Missouri (28-4), the Big Eight champion.

"We knew we had that burden," Stoudamire said about Arizona's past failures in early rounds of the tournament. "But we knew if we got past that first game we'd be dangerous."

Stoudamire, the smallest man on the court at 5-10, scored 18 points in the first half to take Arizona to a 48-34 lead. The Wildcats broke it open with a 15-5 run in just over three minutes that put them ahead 40-27.

Missouri got as close as eight points twice in the second half, the second time at 58-50, but Arizona blew the Tigers away with a 13-3 run that made it 71-53 with 7:25 left. At that juncture, Missouri's 6-9 center Jevon Crudup, fouled out after scoring 14 points, and the game was all but over. Guard Melvin Booker, Big Eight player of the year, was also held to 14.

Stoudamire is dubbed the "Iron Man" by his teammates, as much for his playing style as for his habit of taking an iron everywhere he goes to keep his clothes neatly pressed. He wears a fancy tattoo of his first name on his upper arm, just in case his opponents don't know who he is.

As many times as his name rang out on loudspeakers after shots against Missouri, Stoudamire's identity was known to everyone. And fans couldn't help but be impressed the way he mixed it up in the middle to grab rebounds.

"I just wanted to help out the big guys as best I could. Coach really stresses that," said Stoudamire, whose rebound total matched 6-9 forward Ray Owes for the game high. "I do have a little hop in my legs.

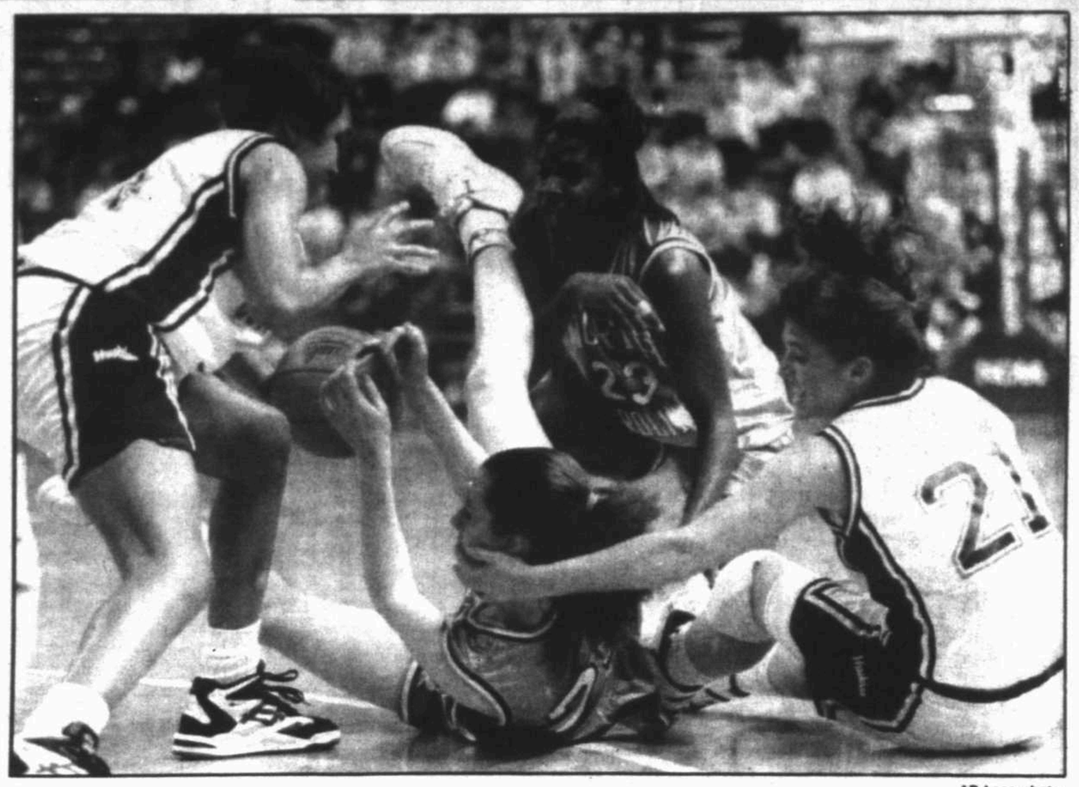

"All our skeptics are put to rest right now."

Arizona beat Missouri from the field (54 percent to 36 percent) and, more important, the free throw line (33-for-41 to 7-for-15). That 26-point difference on free throws was greater than the margin of victory.

This was Arizona coach Lute Olson's 14th trip to the NCAA tournament in 15 years. Arizona reached the Final Four in 1988, losing to the semifinal Oklahoma. Olson took Iowa to the Final Four twice, losing the semifinal games both times.

Missouri, embarrassed and shaken by a 52-point loss to Arkansas in the second game of the season, shrugged that off to sweep 14-0 through the Big Eight and become the conference's first undefeated champion since Kansas in 1971.

After 33 seasons coaching, after 14 trips to the NCAA tournament, after surviving colon cancer and an NCAA-mandated probation, Stewart had hoped to reach the Final Four at least. But it wasn't to be. He had taken Missouri to a regional final only once before, in 1976, and since then had become perhaps the most-successful college coach never to get to the Final Four.

Duke dogs Robinson

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Duke muzzled the Big Dog and is back in the Final Four.

■ Southeast

The second-seeded Blue Devils shackled Glenn Robinson like no one else had all season and beat top-seeded Purdue 69-60 Saturday night in the Southeast Regional championship game to advance to the Final Four for the seventh time in nine years.

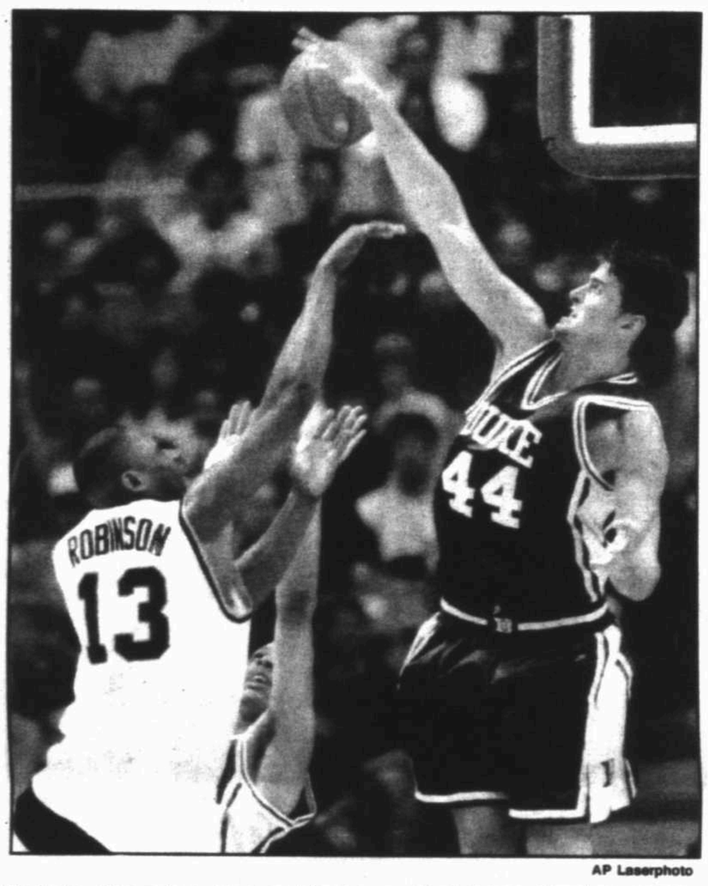

They are unbeaten in seven regional final games under coach Mike Krzyzewski and this one comes after a second-round exit last year as two-time defending champions.

Robinson, the nation's leading scorer at 30.8 points per game and who had averaged 36 points in his three NCAA tournament games, finished with a season-low 13 points and for just the third time this season he didn't lead the Boilermakers (29-5) in scoring.

Duke, meanwhile, got a big game from freshman Jeff Capel, who stepped up to score 19 points.

The Blue Devils (27-5) will play the winner of Sunday's East Regional championship between Florida and Boston College next Saturday in Charlotte, N.C.

The Duke-Purdue game was hyped as the matchup of All-Americans Robinson and Grant Hill. It was, except neither came near his scoring average and Hill dominated where he usually does, on the defensive end. He guarded Robinson througout the first half and until foul trouble sent him to the bench with 9:54 to play.

Robinson's exit from the tournament means the last time a national scoring champion reached the Final Four was 1960 when Oscar Robertson of Cincinnati did.

La. Tech stops Miller's USC

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Debra Williams scored 26 points and tireless Pam Thomas ran Southern California ragged as Louisiana Tech earned a trip Saturday to the NCAA Final Four with a 75-66 victory in the final of the Mideast Regional.

Fourth-seeded Tech (30-3) will be making its first Final Four appearance since 1990. The Lady Techsters have won 24 in a row since a 34-point loss to Tennessee in December.

Southern Cal (26-4), which hasn't been to the Final Four since 1986, twice led by seven points early in the second half. But Tech's pressure defense produced several turnovers and the Lady Techsters pulled even at 45 on consecutive baskets by LaShawn Brown.

■ Women's Tournament

Amy Brown's three-point play put Tech ahead to stay, 55-54, with 12:21 to play. Williams' rebound basket and 3-pointer gave Tech some breathing room, 64-58.

Nicky McCrimmon's driving layup cut it to 64-61, but Williams responded from the outside. Racquel Spurlock came up with a steal that resulted in a seven-point lead, and Southern Cal never got closer than five points the rest of the way.

Southern Cal appeared tired down the stretch. Lisa Leslie, the Pac-10's all-time leading scorer and rebounder, was short on a free throw, short from in close and missed badly on two 3-pointer attempts in the final minutes.

Alabama 96, Penn St. 82

AUSTIN (AP) — Betsy Harris scored 25 points as No. 16 Alabama attacked second-ranked Penn State from the start and then held off a late charge, earning its first trip to the women's Final Four with a victory in the Midwest Regional finals.

The Crimson Tide (26-6) refused to buckle down the stretch, hitting key 3-pointers and nailing free throws as the Lady Lions (28-3), rocked by a late technical on coach Rene Portland, could never catch up.

in the lineup after a one-game suspension for punching an Old Dominion player last weekend, hit a driving layup.

Sampson, a rugged senior point guard, hit a layup after a steal to tie the game at 51 with 14:44 to go. Smith then hit a 10-foot jumper to put the Tar Heels ahead for good and Sampson nailed a 3-pointer to make it 56-51.

Connecticut twice drew within a point, the last time at 58-57 on a basket inside by center Recebba Lobo, who was limited to 11 points, 8 below her average.

Sampson banked in a 10-footer and fellow senior Sylvia Crawley scored inside and the Huskies never got closer than four points the rest of the way.

Smith added 17 for North Carolina, Crawley had 13 and Marion Jones 12. Kara Wolters had 23 points for Connecticut, which shot 54.3 percent from the field on 31 of 58.

The Huskies, who did not start a senior, failed in a bid to return to the Final Four for the first time since 1991.

North Carolina forced seven turnovers in the opening 10 minutes and built a 26-17 lead with a 9-0 run that Sampson capped with a steal and layup.

However, Crawley picked up her third foul with 9:36 to play and things suddenly opened up inside for Connecticut. Trailing 30-23, the Huskies scored the next 10 points and finished the half with a 16-6 spurt for a 39-36 lead. Five of the six baskets in the run came from play in the pivot area.

Razorbacks, Wolverines meet great expectations

DALLAS (AP) — The championship game in the NCAA Midwest Regional involves two teams that, like it or not, have grown accustomed to great expectations.

One one side is Arkansas. The top-seeded Razorbacks (28-3) spent nine weeks ranked No. 1 in the Associated Press poll on their way to the Southeastern Conference regular season title, and they're seeking their second Final Four trip in the past five years.

Arkansas also counts among its ardent fans President Clinton, who may be in attendance Sunday.

Arkansas' opponent is No. 3 seed Michigan (24-7). This is the Wolverines' third straight visit to the final eight; they have reached the NCAA title game in each of the past two years.

"A lot of people would say the season is a failure if we lose," Michigan guard Jalen Rose said Saturday. "Some would say it was a great season. We can't get caught up in that. I'm not ready to hear it yet, frankly."

Michigan coach Steve Fisher put it this way:

"It'll be a disappointment if we don't get there, just as it will for Arkansas and just as it has been for all of those who had that goal realistically coming into the field of 64 who are no longer there.

"We've had a good season. We can make it better than good for every step we continue to make."

Making that next step figures to be a chore. Arkansas has played a little better in each of its three tournament games, and enters Sunday's game after a 19-point victory over Tulsa in the regional semifinals.

The Razorbacks are known as a team that loves to press and play a frenetic style. But particularly in their past two games, they have shown the ability to dominate opponents with solid halfcourt defense.

■ Midwest Regional

"If you're a good team — a really, really good team like Arkansas is — then you have some flexibility," Fisher said. "They're a team that has proven they can play halfcourt, full court, whatever it takes to win."

Coach Nolan Richardson said Arkansas' zone defense, which it used with great success against Georgetown and Tulsa, is more formidable now because of the development of 6-foot-11 freshmen Darnell Robinson and Lee Wilson. Both missed stretches of games during the regular season due to injuries.

"In the last month I could see the improvement in those kids," he said. "I felt they would be the difference in us going all the way or staying home. Those two kids alone have added a real punch to our game."

But Arkansas' biggest punch inside belongs to 6-7, 245-pound Corliss Williamson. He is the Razorbacks' leading scorer and rebounder. Said Richardson: "Pound for pound, he may be the strongest basketball player in the world."

Michigan has strength in the frontcourt in the person of Juwan Howard. The 6-9, 250-pound junior scored 24 points in a 78-71 victory over Maryland and has averaged 28 points in the Wolverines' three tournament games.

Howard fouled out late in the game against Maryland. Fisher said it would be crucial that Howard stay out of foul trouble against Arkansas, especially early in the game.

The Wolverines will also need strong play off the bench. Rose and Dugan Fife played all 40 minutes against Maryland, and Howard likely would have if he hadn't fouled out. Fisher said his top three bench players made solid contributions, although they combined to score just 2 points, and that they would need to do the same Sunday.

"Arkansas has a lot of players. They can roll 'em in 10 or 11 strong, and they're productive," Fisher said. "They've got a nice core group in (Scotty) Thurman, Williamson and (Corey) Beck. Those are the steady Eddies. Then they find two or three more to go with them every game, and it's never always the same."

While Arkansas has seemed to improve in each tournament game, Michigan has been up and down. The Wolverines needed overtime to beat Pepperdine in the first round, had a tough second-round victory over Texas, then let a 21-point second-half lead dwindle to six in the final minute against Maryland.

Some would say the Wolverines play to the level of their opponent. Richardson agrees, but said it takes an outstanding team to be able to raise its level of play when needed.

"They make the big shot, the big free throw, the great pass. They do a lot of the little things and before you know it they sneak away with a victory," he said. "Their teams always play up to whatever level they need to. Not many teams can do that."

"We're winners," Rose said. "You don't get to this point only playing down to your opponent. You get to this point because you put in the effort and you get to this point because you know how to win. We know how to win. That's why we're here."

First fan Clinton will be in Dallas for title game

DALLAS (AP) — It's official. The first fan will be at Sunday's NCAA Midwest Regional championship, prompting a plea for the rest of the sellout crowd to show up early.

NCAA officials are asking ticketholders and the media to get to the Arkansas-Michigan game at least an hour earlier.

Tournament official Richard Kilwien said the gates at Reunion Arena for the 3 p.m. game will open at 12:30 p.m. so fans and the media can walk through metal detectors.

Tournament officials said they have been informed that President Clinton will arrive about game time and will likely stay throughout the contest and visit the Arkansas locker room.

Clinton is from Arkansas and has attended games in the past. He is also known to wear Razorback attire occasionally.

Earlier this year, he attended a Razorback game in Fayetteville. In that game, Arkansas beat Texas Southern by 66 points.

Sato wins world title

CHIBA, Japan (AP) — Torn between Yuka Sato's artistry and dynamic footwork and Surya Bonaly's gymnastic jumping, the judges gave the women's world figure skating championship to Sato. Bonaly gave them a temper tantrum.

The French skater first refused to join Japan's Sato and bronze medalist Tanja Szewczenko of Germany on the awards podium Saturday night. Then she quickly took off her silver medal.

Asked later what message she meant to convey, she declared: "It's not right."

When she tried to succeed with technique, she said, she had been told she wasn't artistic enough.

"When I change to just normal skating, that's not good, too. I don't know what I have to do. It's crazy," she said.

The vote was close. Sato, a stylist with dizzying footwork, received higher artistic marks — six 5.9s of a possible 6.0 and three 5.8s — and the first-place votes of five of the nine judges.

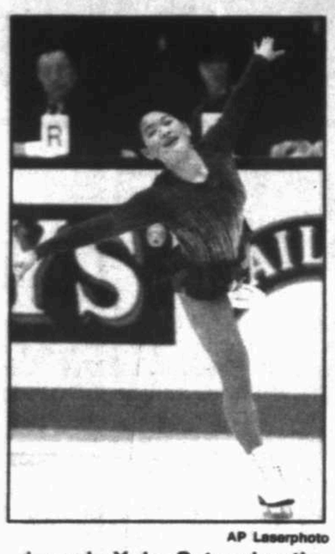

The Japanese university student also received a standing ovation, and a barrage of bouquets. Teddy bears were thrown on the ice.

Her technique was rated 5.7 and 5.8.

Bonaly won mostly 5.8s and 5.9s for her technique in an ambitious program that included a triple toe loop-half loop-triple salchow-double toe loop sequence and back-to-back triple jumps. She touched her hand to the ice, however, on one later triple loop, and had landed on the ice before completing the last turn of her triple-triple combination.

Her artistic marks ranged from 5.5 to 5.9, and four judges ranked her first. But one rated her third, behind Szewczenko.

She arrived late at the medalists' news conference and said she was "fed up."

Norman flawless, takes TPC lead

Associated Press

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. — Greg Norman has the best players in the world talking about asking for strokes.

Playing flawless golf — no bogeys in 54 holes — Norman finished three rounds at the Players Championship 19-under par, four strokes ahead of his nearest competitor, Fuzzy Zoeller.

"Give me a 10-shot handicap and I'll have a shot at him," Zoeller said. Virtually no one else in the strongest field of the year has a shot.

Norman, who was among 72 players stranded on the course by darkness after a lengthy rain delay Friday, came back at 7:30 a.m. Saturday and birdied 3 of 8 holes to finish off a round of 67 and a course-record 130 for 36 holes.

At that point, he held a 3-shot lead over Zoeller. But there was more to come.

After a brief lunch break, Norman returned to carve another 67 out of the pines and lakes and sand of Sawgrass, finishing up at 6 p.m.

"I just hope it goes another 18," Norman said of his brilliant play.

The British Open champion completed three rounds at 197, 19 under par and a record on the home course for the PGA Tour, the TPC at Sawgrass.

In fact, he only needs a final round of par 72 to break the 72-hole scoring record of 18-under par set last year by Nick Price.

Norman opened the annual championship of golf's touring pros with a 9-under-par 63 and has made virtually no mistakes. And when he has erred, he has recovered. Norman's bogey-free streak now stretches back through 80 holes.

Only Zoeller, who had a third round 68 and a 201 total, remained within reach going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $450,000 first prize.

Jeff Maggert, with a 69, was a distant third at 203. England's Nick Faldo, with a 68, and Davis Love III, with a 70, were tied at 204 and were the only others within 9 shot of the run-away leader.

On three occasions during the long day Norman was in danger of losing the bogey-free string.

The first came in the morning on the 18th hole of the second round. Norman got into a greenside bunker but got up and down with a 5-foot putt.

In the afternoon, in the third round, his 5-iron approach to the par 4 fifth missed the green to the right, coming to rest on the downslope of a mound 20 yards right of the green.

From an awkward stance, with the ball near chest height, he played a baseball swing up to 30 inches and made the par putt.

Seniors PGA-Sanders

KINGWOOD, Texas — Isao Aoki shot his second consecutive 4-under 68 for a one-stroke lead over charging Tom Wargo after Saturday's second round of the Senior PGA Doug Sanders Celebrity Classic.

Wargo moved into contention with a string of three birdies and then followed them with a hole-in-one en route to a 66 and a two-day total of 137, seven under par.

Chi Chi Rodriguez, who played Saturday in a celebrity group that included former presidents George Bush and Gerald Ford, had his second straight 69 for a 6-under 138, two shots behind the leader.

Defending champion Bob Charles was another shot back at 139 after a 69 Saturday. Homero Blancos was at 141, Tommy Aaron and Jimmy Powell at 142, and Dale Douglass and Walt Zembriski at 143.

Blustery winds and a few sprinkles over the 6,767-yard Deerwood Club course northeast of Houston pushed up scores of many players. Forecasts for Sunday's final round called for rain and colder temperatures.

LPGA Dinah Shore

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. — Donna Andrews, who's already won one tournament this month, used a birdie binge on the front nine Saturday to take a one-shot lead after three rounds of the Dinah Shore.

Andrews, who appears to be an emerging star on the LPGA tour, shot a 4-under-par 67 for a total of 10-under 206.

Laura Davies of England shot a 69 for a 207 total.

Michelle McGann, looking for her first win in six years on the tour, shot a third-round 70 that put her two strokes behind the leader. She and Davies shared the lead after two rounds.

Jan Stephenson, who hasn't won a tournament since 1987, also was in contention with a 70 that left her three shots behind Andrews.

Nancy Lopez, who held a share of the first-round lead, continued to fall farther behind with a 73 that dropped her back into a group seven shots off the lead.

Defending champion Helen Alfredsson of Sweden, whose 76 on the first day virtually ended her chances of repeating, had a third-round 71 and was 3-over-par for the tournament.

Andrews, 26, began the day one shot back of Davies and McGann and moved in front with five consecutive birdies beginning on the sixth hole.

U.S. slips by India in Davis Cup

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The United States moved into the second round of the Davis Cup on Saturday with its third victory over India. But it was India that was delighted with the results.

Patrick McEnroe and Richey Reneberg won a hard-fought four-set victory over Leander Paes and Gaurav Natekar 7-6 (7-0), 6-4, 2-6, 7-6 (7-4).

"It's a relief," said the U.S. captain, Tom Gullikson. "I was expecting a tough match today."

The United States meets the Netherlands, which took a 3-0 lead over Belgium, in the World Group's next round on July 15-17.

On Friday, Jim Courier and Todd Martin gave the U.S. team a 2-0 head start, beating respectively Zeeshan Ali and Paes.

The veteran McEnroe-Reneberg partnership played solid, unspectacular tennis but outplayed the low-ranking Indians when it counted most.

"I thought the boys came through under pressure in the tiebreaks. They showed a little more experience and took the play to the Indian team a little bit more," said Gullikson, in his first match as Davis Cup captain.

McEnroe is ranked 18th in doubles, and Reneberg is ranked 30th.

Paes and Natekar, after watching their serves returned for cross-court winners, moved to an I-formation serve, with both offensive players on one side of the court, prompting errors from the Americans.

"It was a good strategy by them," McEnroe said. "It makes you hit the ball somewhere else and makes you think a little bit more."

Nerves had the better of the Indian team. After two service breaks each in the first set, the Indians failed to win a single point in the tiebreak.

In the second set, India dropped a 4-1 advantage and lost five games in a row. Then in the fourth set, each side held serve to set up the tiebreak, when Reneberg's volleys gave the Americans the match.

"It's the big points. They play them very well. That's why they came out on top," Paes said. "I'll be thinking about those big points tonight."

Though his team hasn't won a match, Indian captain Jaideep Mukherjea said he saw the makings of a strong team for the future.

"We were the underdog from the start. I'm very happy the boys did very well," he said. "A little bit of luck and we could have won."

Natekar, making only his second Davis Cup appearance, played with unexpected confidence and had the best first-serve percentage on the court with 70 percent.

Paes, 20, has been on the Davis Cup team for four years and is an Indian sports hero, even though he is ranked 350th in singles and is little known outside India.

Now India may have a new hero in Natekar, a 21-year-old satellite circuit player who had to fight his way onto the team.

Even after the match, the Americans referred to him as "the other guy," and "Leander's partner."

Reneberg asked: "How do you say his first name again?"

But Paes, playing his first Davis Cup without veteran Ramesh Krishnan, had another name for Natekar: "My new doubles mate."

On the hard court at Besancon, France, Arnaud Boetsch teamed with replacement Olivier Delaitre to beat Lazslo Markovits and Viktor Nagy 6-3, 6-3, 6-3. France leads Hungary 2-1.

On the hard court at Ramat Hasharon, Israel, the Czech doubles team Petr Korda and Cyril Suk struggled for three sets against Amos Mansdorf and 17-year-old Davis Cup newcomer Eyal Erlich before winning 3-6, 7-6 (7-3), 7-6 (7-3), 6-1. The Czech Republic leads 2-1.

On carpet before a noisy crowd at St. Petersburg, Yevgeny Kafelnikov and Andrei Olhovskiy of Russia upset Wimbledon doubles champions Todd Woodbridge and Mark Woodforde 6-4, 6-0, 3-6, 4-6, 6-3. Russia leads 2-1. The winner meets the Czech Republic-Israel winner in the next round.

Houston Slims

HOUSTON — Sabine Hack of Germany avenged last year's loss to Conchita Martinez in the final of last year's Virginia Slims of Houston by beating her 2-6, 6-4, 6-4 in a semifinal.

Hack, the seventh seed, advanced to play No. 4 Mary Pierce in Sunday's final match of the $400,000 tournament. Earlier Saturday, Pierce overpowered wild-card entry Asa Carlsson 6-2, 6-2.

Top-seeded Martinez, who beat Hack the first four times they met, led 4-2 in the second set when she began to tire.

"I was controlling the match perfectly," Martinez said. "Then I started getting tired. Playing against the wind with her high balls was really tiring."

It was Martinez's first-ever loss in Houston in six matches.

"In the beginning I was playing so defensive she didn't have to move," Hack said. "She kept moving me around with her forehand."

Hack turned the tables on her in the final two sets of the two-hour, 17-minute match.

Pierce won the first seven points of the match, breaking Carlsson in the second game. Carlsson broke back in the third game, but it was her only service break of the match.

"I had to work hard for every point," Pierce said.

Pierce won on her first match point with a cross-court passing shot after chasing down a drop shot by Carlsson, who was blanked in the final game.

Pierce wasn't as lucky in doubles, as she and Andrea Tenesvari lost a semifinal to Manon Bollegraf and Martina Navratilova 7-6 (7-4) 4-6 6-3.

Runoff choices merit your vote

Early voting for the April 12th runoff elections opens April 4 and, with two county offices and seven state or district positions still to be determined, it's extremely important that Midland voters cast ballots.

At the local level, Midland voters must elect a new county judge and nominate a judge for Midland County Court At Law No. 2. Both positions are on the Republican Party ballot. Also on the GOP ballot are races for the positions of attorney general and Place 2 judge on the Court of Criminal Appeals.

Meanwhile, statewide offices to appear on the Democratic Party ballots will be U.S. Senator, Place 1 Justice on the Supreme Court, Place 2 Judge on the Court of Criminal Appeals, Place 1 Justice on the 8th Court of Appeals and Place 2 Justice on the 8th Court of Appeals.

Listed below, by parties, are the Reporter-Telegram's recommendations in each of these races.

Republican Party

Midland County Judge — Teresa Clingman. While the issue of whether a county judge in Texas should be a lawyer has been fully debated in this election campaign, it's not the only issue in this race. We believe that Ms. Clingman's experience as a lawyer is an important advantage for the position, but her experiences in the district attorney and county attorney's offices here also likely will prove beneficial, as well as her other work experience as an administrator.

In an era of expanding government, we find refreshing her intent to "move Midland toward the future with fiscal restraint and keeping government to a minimum."

Judge, County Court At Law No. 2 — Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer. A longtime Midlander who obviously is seeking to serve Midland County with skills he has gleaned over several years, Seltzer — presently serving as county judge — says he is going back to what he knows best, the law. While he experienced difficulties as county judge, we believe Seltzer has the necessary background in law to serve as a fine judge in County Court At Law No. 2.

Attorney General — Patricia "Pat" Lykos. By serving as a Houston police officer while working her way through law school, as a criminal justice planner, a trial lawyer and now sitting on the bench in a state district court, Lykos brings a wide view of the law into the race for the Republican nomination for Attorney General. We also like her pledge to lead the crusade to take back our streets from the criminals. That is needed today.

Judg , Court of Criminal Appeals, Place 2 — Sharon Keller. We endorsed Cathy Cochran Her asimchuk during the earlier election, but noted that Ms. Keller's legal experience made her a close contender. Now our endorsement goes to Ms. Keller. She is obviously the best choice, having served in Dallas as a prosecutor and appellate law specialist, and she should get the nomination.

Democratic Primary

U.S. Senator — Richard Fisher. Fisher's contention that the "arrogance of power" now in evidence in government needs to be countered and is, we think, a posture that needs to be adopted by both major parties. Fisher knows government, having served as executive assistant to the secretary of the Treasury during the Carter administration. He represents the new, refreshing philosophy in the Democratic Party that seeks to return ethics and responsiveness to government.

Justice, Supreme Court, Place 1 — Raul A. Gonzalez. The campaign to get Justice Gonzalez off the Supreme Court should not succeed. He has served well and should be nominated for another term.

Judge, Court of Criminal Appeals, Place 2 — Betty Marshall. Ms. Marshall is an outstanding choice for this position on the appellate court bench and should get the support of voters. She was previously a Tarrant County prosecutor for eight years.

Judge, 8th Court of Appeals, Place 1 — No recommendation.

Judge, 8th Court of Appeals, Place 2 — Ann McClure. We endorsed Odessan Pat McCollum for this position in the first primary, but Ms. McClure — one of the two candidates to make the runoff — also received high recommendations from the legal community. She gets our endorsement for this election and we encourage voters to cast their ballots for her.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Palm Sunday, March 27, the 86th day of 1994. There are 279 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Two hundred years ago, on March 27, 1794, President Washington and Congress authorized creation of the U.S. Navy.

On this date:

In 1512, Spanish explorer Juan Ponce de Leon sighted Florida.

In 1625, Charles I ascended the English throne upon the death of James I.

In 1836, the first Mormon temple was dedicated, in Kirtland, Ohio.

In 1884, the first long-distance telephone call was made, between Boston and New York.

In 1917, the Seattle Metropolitans became the first U.S. team to win the Stanley Cup when they defeated the Montreal Canadiens.

Russian intelligence chief makes mark

WASHINGTON — Shortly after the arrest of Aldrich Ames for allegedly passing CIA intelligence to Russia, U.S. politicians from both parties used the incident as an excuse to question the future of U.S.-Russian relations. Many analysts hailed it as the official end of the post-Cold War thaw.

Anderson

Behind closed doors in Moscow, the man who handles foreign intelligence for the Russians was taking a far more subtle public approach. Yevgeny M. Primakov told a group of Russian reporters of his surprise at the strong American reaction, especially since his ministry had been cooperating with American intelligence officials on issues of common concern, like international terrorism and organized crime. At the same time, he was issuing orders to have a top U.S. Embassy official deported, in retaliation for America's forced expulsion of a top Russian intelligence official from Washington.

Primakov's message was clear: America and Russia both spy on each other, so let's stop making a big fuss over it.

As head of the reconstituted Russian foreign intelligence service, now called the SVR, Primakov has emerged as a powerful yet mysterious figure in the unpredictable days of post-communist Russia. Though the Ames case has been a disaster for the CIA, it has been a big bonus for Primakov, suggesting that this new lord of the spies will be around for awhile.

The ambitious Primakov, who is the only former crony of Mikhail Gorbachev left in Boris Yeltsin's inner circle, is a man of many contrasts. A former journalist and academician, Primakov's public record is lengthy, yet his private nature has left many unanswered questions. A longtime friend of Saddam Hussein, Primakov nonetheless once suggested to American intelligence officials that Russia would open up its spy operations if America would do the same. A skilled PR man with a flair for winning friends, he presides over a "reformed" Russian intelligence community that many insiders claim hasn't really changed at all from the days of the Soviet Union.

Primakov has rarely given interviews, and when he faces Russian reporters in "briefings," he doesn't answer personal questions. But our associate Dale Van Atta, during a visit to Moscow, talked with a dozen Primakov friends and confidants, as well as SVR contacts, to put together a picture of one of Russia's fastest-rising and most powerful officials.

Born in Kiev, Ukraine, and raised on the streets of Tbilisi, Georgia, Primakov studied the Orient in college and graduate school before becoming an editor with the Moscow Committee on Television and Radio. He then spent almost a decade as a journalist and deputy editor of Pravda, the leading Communist newspaper.

According to several knowledgeable sources, it was at Pravda that he was recruited by the KGB. Sources disagree, however, on whether he was a part timer, or a full-time career officer in the KGB. Primakov told one confidant that he was never "on the staff' of the KGB, and didn't have "any military rank." To another source he said that he had worked for the KGB since 1959.

After Pravda, Primakov launched his prestigious academic career, rising to be the head of the Institute of Oriental Studies and, from 1985 to 1989, was director of the Institute of World Economy and International Relations. It was a period in which he was clearly cozy with KGB officials.

GEORGE WILL

Goldwater is content with life as he knows it

PHOENIX — Looking down on his valley and back on his career, Barry Goldwater, who 30 years ago was en route to a creative defeat in the presidential election, has no regrets. Nor should he. He lost 44 states but won the future.

Will

Today his walk is slower, his emotions are mellower and his features, after 85 years of squinting into Southwest sunsets, are more than ever a craggy map of Arizona. But he is content. He should be. He catalyzed conservatism's breakthrough.

The protests of the 1960s did not begin at Berkeley. The most consequential protest came from the right, beginning at the podium of the 1960 Republican Convention in Chicago when Arizona's junior senator said, "Let's grow up, conservatives! If we want to take this party back, and I think we can some day, let's get to work."

In 1912 civil war erupted among Republicans when a former Republican president, Teddy Roosevelt, challenged an incumbent Republican president, the conservative William Howard Taft. Having failed to win the nomination, Roosevelt ran a third-party campaign, finishing second to Woodrow Wilson, ahead of Taft. The two factions, conservatives and "moderates," fought until 1964, when Goldwater's nomination sealed the conservatives' ascendancy. No one strongly opposed by them has been nominated since then.

As is usually the case, cultural ferment preceded political transformation. In 1953 Russell Kirk published "The Conservative Mind," which introduced a generation raised on Rooseveltian liberalism to the disturbing thought that Kirk's title did not constitute an oxymoron. William Buckley's National Review was launched in 1955. His "Up from Liberalism" was published in 1961. Three years later conservatism made the transition from a cultural critique to a political force on a national rather than merely local scale.

Just as William Jennings Bryan lost three presidential elections but brought invigorating new elements into the Democratic Party, Goldwater precipitated the Republican reorientation that would produce victories in five of the next six elections. Furthermore, in one of history's odd caroms, Goldwater inadvertently hastened the crisis of liberalism by giving it an opportunity for overreaching.

LBJ's landslide broke the rough balance in Congress between liberals and a coalition of conservative Republicans and Southern Democrats, a balance that had existed since 1938. For two years liberalism was unconstrained. It is still trying to rehabilitate its reputation.

Goldwater remembers receiving, while campaigning, a draft of a speech to be delivered on a nationally televised campaign broadcast. He said to aides: It's good but doesn't sound like me. Get Ronald Reagan to deliver it.

And the torch was passed. Goldwater cared more about carrying the torch of conviction than about capturing power. Asked today if he ever really burned to be president, he says, "Not exactly." Besides, after Nov. 22, 1963, he felt that the Republicans' 1964 campaign was bound to be futile. But he felt impelled to make the race because of the support of young people. He could not then know that they included Hillary Rodham and Sam Donaldson, both of them then at the apogee of their political wisdom.

Theodore White wrote that Goldwater offered "a contagious concern. . . . He introduced the condition and quality of American morality and life as a subject of political debate." Actually, that subject recurs regularly in American history.

RUSSELL BAKER

High-tech communications can be dangerous

As you know, the world is speeding toward a total communications breakdown even as the communications industry foolishly thumps its chest about the coming glories of the information superhighway.

Russell Baker

Evidence amassed by our researchers leaves no doubt the cataclysm will occur sooner than original projections indicated. Those were based on the number of telephone callers who required police attention after encountering phone-answering machines, voice-mail systems and robotic phone instructions.

In 63 percent of these incidents property damage resulted from loss of self-control by persons unable to overcome these popular devices for rendering the telephone system almost totally useless. The damage usually involved destroying phones with which callers had failed to communicate with living human beings.

In 21 percent of these destruction-of-communications-equipment cases, handguns were used on phones that had driven their users berserk. Nine percent involved rifles, shotguns or hand grenades, and 2 percent involved mortar assaults.

Twenty-seven percent of all incidents involved physical violence, including suicide by callers unable to get around answering machines or voice mail or maddened by instructions to press buttons endlessly if they wanted a mechanical voice to tell them to drop dead.

We have asked the telephone industry for statistics on the percentage of incoming calls answered on an average day by a human being. The industry continues to stonewall, insisting it doesn't have such figures.

"Our sole obligation is to make sure that any given telephone can ring every other telephone in the world at any time of the day or night, but especially in the middle of dinner," according to an artificial voice that we reached by pressing buttons 2, 7, 9, 3, 8, 2 again, and the pound sign.

Identifying itself as a spokesmachine for the miracle-of-communications octopus, the voice said its employer had no interest in whether the ringing phone was answered by a human, a machine or, for that matter, by gunfire.

In short, we got no statistics to confirm what is obvious to every collector of anecdotal evidence; to wit, that anyone hoping to reach a fellow human on the telephone nowadays must be prepared to accept humiliation and, possibly, great suffering.

Recently, however, our teams in the field have begun collecting stories that show the end is closer than we suspected. Here is a typical story from a man we shall call Pearson:

After the customary series of failures associated with airline travel, Pearson's scheduled night flight from Cleveland to the Hartford area deposited him at New York's La Guardia Airport shortly after 1 a.m.

The airline chose to motor its wretched Hartford customers by bus to Bradley Field, arriving at approximately 3:30 a.m. Since Pearson would still face a 20-mile trip to get home after being deposited at Bradley, he thanked Heaven for the communications miracle.

"I shall simply phone my daughter Alma and ask her to drive over to Bradley, meet the four-wheel surrogate airliner at 3:30 a.m., and drive me home," Pearson said to himself.

Fitting deed to the thought at a La Guardia public phone, Pearson used his calling card to dial his home, where Alma — the hour being past 1 a.m. — was sound asleep. Very sound, as it turned out.

Pearson had his own answering machine and had programmed it to stop the phone's ringing after the fourth ring and make itself available for messages. Obedient to Pearson's command, it now did so. Alma obviously hadn't heard it.

Worse: Pearson had programmed the device so that after taking its first four-ring call, it would thereafter ring only twice before falling silent again.

Stranded at La Guardia at 1:30 a.m., Pearson realized with horror that it would be impossible to get the incessant, insistent ringing out of his phone that would be necessary to rouse Alma. His devotion to the communications miracle had made him an agent of his own destruction.

Pearson was found by the Connecticut roadside, severely frostbitten, at 5 that morning, having set out to walk home from the jitney-busport, and a number of toes had to be removed. Upon release from surgery, Pearson took an ax to his answering machine and severely damaged his thigh.

Midlanders' prayers bring miracle, restore child's life

On Dec. 20, 1993, just four days before Christmas, our daughter, her husband, their children and her husband's family were involved in a head-on collision 40 miles outside of San Antonio. The jaws of life were used, and they were airlifted to San Antonio Medical Center.

The evening of Dec. 22, our little granddaughter made a turn for the worse, and the doctors gave her less than a 5 percent chance to live. Her brain was swelling with the tremendous pressure caused by the fracture she received in the accident. We made phone calls home to Midland to ask for prayers. In the next few days, we experienced one miracle after another as Carley regained her life and began speaking to us as she always had. She still had to have a surgery to put plates in her skull the next week, but the doctors assured us she had come through the worst part and they, including the nurses, were amazed. It was the first time in the history of the hospital that a child had been so critical in that particular situation and lived.

We want to thank those in Midland and West Texas who were praying for our granddaughter. We are eternally grateful to all of you that knew us and prayed and for those that didn't know us, but cared and prayed anyway.

Multiculturalism creates, encourages division in U.S.

Concerning multiculturalism, we live in the United States of America, not the Multi-States of America. United we stand, divided we fall. One nation under God, indivisible with liberty and justice for all. This is the standard and goal for America. Multiculturalism in America creates and encourages divisiveness. As a nation sheds its unity as one nation under God, we will become a nation not of diversity but of divisions. We will no longer have liberty and justice for all but a totalitarian police state, unifying us at the point of a government gun.

In the Bible, Titus 3:9 states "... avoid foolish controversies and genealogies and arguments and quarrels about the law because these are unprofitable and useless." We are racing away from unity and racing toward nothingness. No opinions, no morals, no beliefs, no standards, no laws, no right, no wrong — as the list goes on you can see we are pursuing lifelessness. When we live by the skin, the heart dies. The skin-and-sex people are out to divide, conquer and dissolve the United States of America. Can we please drop the color thing? What counts is what you do. Do you steal from one another? Murder one another? Lie to one another? Or do you love one another? God will not look at you in color, He sees only the heart. We need to unite as Americans, building each other and this country up, not tearing it down by labels, excuses and divisions.

Airport needs some repair while we wait for new one

For some time now, like other people flying out of the Midland International Airport, I have been paying a $3 airport surcharge for building a new airport. To me, this seems unnecessary as the airport seems adequate. However, at times I notice that the roof leaks, and the air-conditioning is very cool in one area while in another section it is warm. Too, I inquired why Southwest Airlines was not installing new furniture as they have in other airports. I was told that the furniture belongs to the airport authority.

While waiting to build a new building, how about fixing the roof, replacing the carpet, repairing the air-conditioning, and installing new furniture? In doing this, I will feel that my surcharge of $3, with the other patrons', is going to good use. Seeing how slowly the airport authorities moved on the road to improvements, I am sure that the new building is far, far, away.

Children do not learn respect for others' property

Those individuals or group of individuals that display their crafty art on walls and fences remind me of liberals. Liberals enjoy spending money, other people's, not their own. I would say with all certainty that none of the graffiti appears on property belonging to those performing the defacement. It is obvious they never considered how they would feel if someone did the same for their property. But then, they are probably not old enough to own property so how could they know?.

Since the time when prayer was erroneously removed from schools, most homes and churches have failed to take up where the schools left off in their duty to train their children in having respect for other people's property.

When does graffiti stop? It stops when doing graffiti becomes more dangerous and painful than the pain they were suffering doing whatever they were supposed to rightfully be doing before they decided to do graffiti.

This is revised from the precept on page 10 of "The Law" written in 1850 by Frederic Bastiat on the subject of "Property and Plunder."

Schools should teach both evolution, creationism

The article in the March 16 Reporter-Telegram covering the Midland Independent School District (MISD) board meeting concerning the adoption of the biology textbook leaves a bitter taste in my mouth.

Jim Gillespie is quoted as saying, "That evolution has occurred is a fact, how it has occurred is theory . . .," and it makes me want to vomit. Nowhere have I read or heard that the "missing link" in the fossil records has been found. So where does he come off saying evolution is fact?!

Richard Case compares the AIDS virus with evolution, saying it did not exist 50 years ago. Maybe not but venereal disease has been around for ages, and through the ages, one strain becomes a little more potent than the one from which it is derived. AIDS happens to be the latest, extremely high-bred strain of these communicable diseases, yet each of these still exist — none have "died" out.

I am concerned with the side of evolution that tries to teach that I came from a monkey. This is theory, not a fact. If it were a fact, wouldn't man now be evolving into some other form?

If our schools are going to allow this to be taught, it is also necessary to teach the flip-side of the coin — creationism. Why be biased in the teaching? Present both sides and let the children decide which concept they want to believe. Why teach something that is so biased and so open for debate? Shouldn't our children have a well-rounded education and be introduced to all aspects of an issue?

Scholarship program recognizes Trinity students

I read with interest the March 18 article by Reporter-Telegram staff writer Gary Shanks concerning Midland's merit scholars. The 11 students who have been named finalists in the 1994 National Merit Scholarship Corp. competition certainly are to be commended for having attained such a distinction.

It is worth noting that Justin Houk and Premila Singh, the two finalists from Trinity School, are members of a class of only nine, and that a third member of the class, Kristyn Stone of Kermit, has been recognized by the National Merit Scholarship Corp. as a commended student. (Commended students are those who score among the upper 35,000 of more than 1 million students who take the Preliminary SAT/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test (NMSQT), the initial screen of program entrants.) In other words, one-third of the current senior class, the school's fourth, have been recognized in some way by the National Merit Scholarship Corp.

Each of Trinity's previous three graduating classes has had a Merit Scholarship finalist. Of the 29 students who have made up the school's four senior classes, eight have been recognized by the National Merit Scholarship Corp. as either a semifinalist (one who scores among the upper 15,000 on the SAT/NMSQT), a finalist, a recipient, or a commended student.

As Shanks mentioned, Trinity is not associated with the Midland Independent School District. As an independent school, it is an accredited, nonprofit, and nondiscriminatory institution that operates with money derived from tuition, charitable giving, and endowment income rather than from church or tax support.

Children shouldn't have to see dying pigeons

I hope everyone who lives in the vicinity of the old Town and Country Shopping Center will keep a close watch over your yards to protect your children and domestic pets. It appears that the shopping center's management company is poisoning the pigeons, and they are falling on the parking lots and surrounding areas. The first pigeon I encountered thrashing around on the ground in its death throes was less than 50 feet outside the fence enclosing the playground for Penney's Early Learning Center. What a wonderful sight for the children to observe when they come out to play!

A call to the Health Department told me that the city of Midland no longer poisons birds (could public outcry have had something to do with that?), but individuals can arrange it. All you need is an exterminator with the right license and a permit from that same city government that used to do the poisoning. It's cheap and expedient!

The center's management company told me this action was necessitated by tenants' complaints that customers were getting bird droppings on their cars and clothes. (Unpleasant and inconvenient, to be sure!) But this is a family-oriented shopping center with stores to which children regularly accompany their parents, and it is no less inconvenient to try to explain to children why pigeons are dying in great pain at their feet. Some customers and employees of the stores tried to help the birds, but realized it was too late. When death MUST be dealt, it should always be quick and humane. There is NEVER an excuse for causing that kind of agony to a living creature.

Mrs. Shirley L. Hodges
Midland

EDITOR'S NOTE: Don Davis, owner of The Davis Company which manages Town and Country Shopping Center, acknowledged that a program is under way to poison pigeons, which he said had created a health hazard at the center by congregating in the facility's attic. He said he regretted that the action became necessary.

Midlanders should urge MISD to hire city's own

I sincerely hope that before Midland Independent School District (MISD) goes to recruit teachers on college campuses, they will place the certified, qualified men and women who are living in Midland, paying taxes, and trying to get a job. Some of these people have had their application in for a year or more. I think we should all urge our school administrators to HIRE MIDLAND!

Council decision sends message to volunteers

This letter is in reference to the recent decision made by our City Council concerning the Eos wildlife rehab center.

Let's set aside the deception employed by council members in failing to publicize their real agenda. Let's also set aside the failure of the council members to rely on the knowledge of independent consultants the council itself hired. Let's just focus on the message this decision sent to volunteers in our community.

I doubt the Erskines could ever count how many of their dollars, and more importantly, their hours, went into Eos. And of course, generosity of spirit cannot be measured by any yardstick.

What if Keep Midland Beautiful had decided that the rose garden was not worth replanting? What if the volunteers at the SPCA decided it was all just too much trouble? What if the Need to Read volunteers decided to go to a movie instead? What if the volunteers for the Crisis Intervention Unit decided they had better things to do than help a stranger? Or worse, what if our City Council decided these efforts were not worth defending and protecting? By my count, we are now down to 998 points of light, and we can't afford it.

Basketball team benefits from coaches' dedication

I would like to personally thank my assistant coaches who spent countless hours helping our basketball team ready itself for a trip to Austin and participation in the "final four." Rarely do assistant coaches receive the credit they deserve, and I want to go on record as saying I had the best assistant coaches in the state of Texas. They were always ready to do what was necessary to give us that "extra" edge during our practices or games. The contributions they made on the sidelines during the games gave our team additional thoughts that helped propel us into one of the most successful athletic seasons in Midland High School history.

I also want to thank the families of these three men for sharing them with us during the season. I have been an assistant coach, and I know how many hours have to be spent away from your loved ones. If it had not been for the work of Craig Raughton, James T. Johnson, and James M. Johnson, Midland High School could not have had the basketball experience it had. I feel tremendous pride and admiration for these three young coaches who worked so hard to give our basketball team the opportunities it had.

MISD choice plan doesn't sound like best option

After reading the article in the Tuesday, March 17, Reporter-Telegram concerning "controlled choice," I could not help but feel that this is another form of rhetoric being thrown at the general public. It sounds like controlled choice is synonymous with "limited freedom."

Who will get the first controlled choice of which school their children will attend? What, in reality, will happen to the other choices?

I think that as a school district, the public should try to instill in our students the willingness to learn instead of making it appear that the cluster system is the problem.

After all, I am sure that the public wants their children to get every opportunity to get a good education, minorities included.

Hopefully the Midland Independent School District (MISD) school board and administrators will do all they can to clarify this important issue.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The shorter the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis.
- We do not publish 'open' letters or copies of letters sent to others.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702.

Whitewater affair may lead us into new era of political discourse

"All of us got hired here to work for the American people," President Clinton told reporters who were badgering him about charges by Republican leaders in regard to the Whitewater affair, "not to throw off on each other."

Safire

Lexicographic Javerts have homed in on the South Midland regionalism. The Oxford English Dictionary doesn't have throw off in the Clintonian sense, but the English Dialect Dictionary, by Joseph Wright, published in 1905, has this Dorsetshire usage from before the turn of the century: "Volks be throwen off 'bout it. Vather made vun 'bout it at tea-time." The contextual meaning: "to make fun of."

Mark Twain used it in his 1876 novel, "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer," when Tom tells Huckleberry Finn in Chapter 25: "But I bet you I ain't going to throw off on di'monds."

The phrase is in steady current use; Joan Hall at the Dictionary of American Regional English notes that DARE defines it as "to say uncomplimentary things about somebody," as in a tape of a Georgian: "Some of 'em thought I was throwin' off on the bus driver, but I didn't mean that."

The standard English synonyms are "disparage, denigrate, belittle"; a slang variation is "dump on." Clinton's usage was colorful, appropriate, and timely; he can expect political partisans, as well as those goo-goos hung up on ethical standards, to be throwin' off on him for years.

To lovers of political discourse, the Watergate era was the Golden Age of Political Coinage. Never have so many memorable phrases been enshrined in our language in such a short period: The Big Enchilada at CREEP led the cover-up, as the hardball and dirty tricks played on those on the enemies list created a firestorm after the Saturday Night Massacre; the trail of the plumbers led to a smoking gun that no stonewalling or limited modified hangout or claim of executive privilege or deep-sixing of evidence could contain, and the administration was left twisting slowly, slowly in the wind.

Cover-up: Clinton bridles at that word. (I bridle, too, at its hyphenation; can't we gin up some hysteria to drop the hyphen?) To dissociate himself from Watergate memories, Clinton said: "We're not covering up or anything; we are opening up." Used loosely, the noun cover-up means "an action to conceal a mistake"; used with more intensity, the word means "obstruction of justice," a federal crime. The word appeared in a Raymond Chandler story in a 1935 Black Mask mystery magazine; it entered the lexicon of political scandal in a 1968 recording made by the financier Louis Wolfson of a conversation with Abe Fortas, in which the Supreme Court justice said: "Your giving me, and my accepting, the foundation post was nothing but a cover-up."

When the president heard cover-up in a question, he cautioned: "Be careful how you use language." In this matter, close listeners can tell how careful he is being. He uses credible as a modifier in protestations of no wrongdoing: "There is no credible evidence and no credible charge that I violated any criminal or civil federal law eight or nine years ago when most of these facts that are being bandied around are discussed." Note, also, the use of federal in that sentence.

Firewall: in his New York Times column, Frank Rich wryly asked: "Firestorm meets stonewall?" No. "We have literally erected a firewall," the president said after the firestorm about tip-offs to White House aides from regulatory officials caused initial stonewalling at the White House, "between the White House and other regulatory agencies." The "wall of separation" has long been a trope to describe the American relationship between church and state, and the metaphor gains emphasis by being able to resist fire. (The Clinton use of literally in this case was mistaken, unless carpenters and plasterers have been brought in; he meant figuratively.)

Modernity in language was displayed by the White House deputy counsel, Joel I. Klein, in his memo to White House staff about gathering subpoenaed documents: "memoranda, records, reports, notes, books, files, summaries or records of conversations, meetings or interviews, summaries or records of telephone conversations, diaries, calendars, date books, telegrams, (now here we boldly go where no White House counsel has gone before) facsimiles, telexes, telefaxes, electronic mail . . . Bernoulli boxes . . . WORM disks . . . floptical disks." Can you imagine the metaphoric uproar if credible evidence of federal (not state) wrongdoing were found on a WORM disk? (It stands for "Write Once, Read Many." You can write on a WORM, unlike a CD-ROM; you cannot erase, the way you can a hard disk.) A floptical disk, I presume, is your ordinary optical disk in the shape of a floppy.

And what of whitewater itself? The unsuccessful real-estate company adopted as its name a term first used in 1586 by William Harrison, an English topographer, in describing the swollen torrents of a river denied its direct course: "The water must of necessitie swell with the white waters which run downe from the land."

The picture of a couple in a raft or canoe that runs perilously through breakers and rapids, nearing precipitous falls, has been seized on by cartoonists and illustrators of magazine covers. "White Water is also the name of a man's cologne and after-shave from Revlon," James Conroy, a senior vice president at Revlon, points out. "Its name, crafted more than a year ago, had nothing to do with the political situation, but reflects its refreshing, casual, outdoor scent." Perfect Father's Day gift for a sweating White House aide.

Whitewatergate, a natural coinage, is too long to fit in a headline; the Whitewater scandal seems excessively critical, at least for now. That leaves us with a neutral borrowing from the French, who last century dealt with l'affaire Dreyfus, and most reporters are now calling the Clintons' latest time of troubles the Whitewater affair.

Winfield blasts homers; Canseco struggles

■ Texas teams fall as final week of spring training nears.

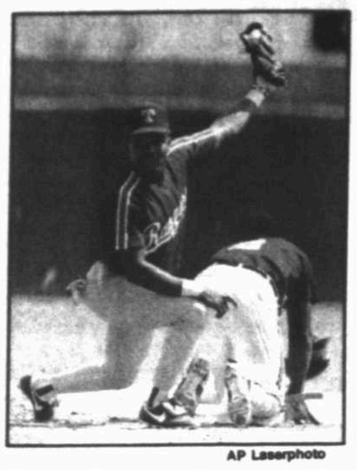

Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. — Dave Winfield had two homers and five RBIs, and the Minnesota Twins broke a 9-9 tie with two runs in the eighth inning to beat the Boston Red Sox 12-9 Saturday.

Winfield's three-run homer capped a five-run fourth that put the Twins ahead 9-4. Boston tied the game with two runs in the sixth and three in the seventh.

Scott Leius, who went 3-for-3, started the eighth with a single off Cory Bailey (1-1). Chito Martinez singled him to third and took second when right fielder Greg Blosser bobbled the ball for an error.

Jeff Carter's single broke the tie, and Mike Durant drove in the 11th run on a forceout. Winfield hit his fourth spring homer leading off the ninth.

Texas Ranger shortstop Manuel Lee tags Baltimore's Mark McLemore out at second in an exhibition game Saturday. The Orioles won the game 3-1.

Orioles 3, Rangers 1

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Kevin Brown pitched five strong innings, but the Baltimore Orioles frustrated Jose Canseco and won with two unearned runs.

Brown allowed a run on five hits, struck out three and walked none.

Texas got nine hits but left 12 runners on base. Canseco went 0-for-4 and stranded six runners, including four in scoring position.

Loser Rick Reed came in the eighth with the score tied at 1. Rene Gonzales drew a walk, Damon Buford singled, and the decisive run scored when shortstop Manuel Lee let a grounder by Mike Devereaux go through his legs.

Royals 5, Dodgers 3

HAINES CITY, Fla. — Mike Macfarlane hit a three-run homer in the first inning, and Billy Brewer logged his third save for Kansas City.

After Vince Coleman singled and Wally Joyner walked, Macfarlane hit his fifth home run of spring training, off loser Pedro Astacio.

Left-hander Chris Haney allowed two runs in six innings to pick up his second straight victory, while Brewer struck out two in the ninth for the save.

Braves 5, Expos 4

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — Ryan Klesko was 3-for-3, and Tony Tarasco capped a four-run sixth inning with a pinch-hit RBI single for Atlanta.

Tarasco, battling Ryan Klesko for the left-field job, lifted his average to .333 and leads the club with 15 RBIs. Klesko raised his average to .364.

He scored a run, drove in another and made a diving catch of a liner off the bat of Mike Lansing in the seventh.

Reds 8, Tigers 5

PLANT CITY, Fla. — Adam Hyzdu's bases-loaded single broke an eighth-inning tie and gave Cincinnati the victory.

Hyzdu delivered his third game-winning hit of the spring, off Joe Boever, who gave up four runs and six hits in the last two innings.

Thomas Howard drove in three runs for Cincinnati. He had an RBI single in the first off Bill Gullickson and a solo homer in the seventh off Boever that tied it 5-5.

Yankees 4, Marlins 3 (10)

MELBOURNE, Fla. — Chris Hammond lowered his ERA below double digits with five scoreless innings but Florida lost anyway, falling 4-3 to New York in 10 innings.

Hammond, projected to be the Marlins' second or third starter, has struggled throughout the spring but was solid Saturday. He allowed only three singles and retired 11 straight during one stretch. His ERA fell from 10.80 to 7.56.

Mets 3, Astros 1

KISSIMMEE, Fla. — Pete Smith threw six shutout innings and received offensive support from rookie catcher Kelly Stinnett as New York defeated Houston.

Cardinals 7, Phillies 3

CLEARWATER, Fla. — Brian Jordan hit a three-run homer and the St. Louis Cardinals rallied for five runs in the sixth inning to defeat the Philadelphia.

Padres 4, Athletics 1

PHOENIX — Dave Staton and Brad Ausmus hit back-to-back seventh-inning home runs off Oakland's Ed Vosberg to help San Diego to a 4-1 victory over Oakland.

Pirates 6, White Sox 5

SARASOTA, Fla. — Andy Van Slyke went 3-for-3 and drove in two runs Saturday and minor leaguer Jay Cranford hit a tie-breaking, two-out RBI single in the eighth inning for Pittsburgh.

Blue Jays 2, Indians 1

DUNEDIN, Fla. — Carlos Delgado hit a solo home run in the second inning for the winning run in Toronto's victory.

Palmiero, Clark meet on field for first time since verbal war

By Michael Ventre
N.Y. Times News Service

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — For bloodthirsty curiosity seekers, it wasn't the ideal arrangement.

There was Rafael Palmiero, in a Baltimore Orioles uniform. Because of an odd and most inconvenient setup by the club, he and his new comrades are bused to Al Lang Stadium for games from a training complex about 10 minutes away.

The visitors arrive by bus as well. On Saturday it was Will Clark and the Texas Rangers.

So there was no commingling at the batting cage. No exchanging off-season fish stories. No catching up on lost time. The two parties were kept apart by the constraints of their respective itineraries.

Maybe it was just as well. Since Palmiero popped off last winter about being snubbed by the Rangers — spewing long-suppressed venom about his old college chum Clark in the process — the eyes of baseball have been kept peeled for the first meeting of the two.

It occurred Saturday. This was actually the second game this spring between the clubs. But in the first, on Tuesday in Port Charlotte, Palmiero didn't make the trip.

Palmiero was asked prior to the game if he realized he would be sharing the same ballpark with Clark later that day. "I haven't even thought about that," he said. "I have other things to worry about."

Clark was asked if he knew the team he was playing was Rafael Palmiero's new team. "Yes," he said. Did he want to talk about his feelings on the subject. "No," he said.

So there wasn't much opportunity for a pre-game spitting contest.

But shortly before the anthem, while Palmiero was standing in the outfield chatting with Rangers Ivan Rodriguez, Juan Gonzalez and Jose Canseco, Clark trotted by. He stopped. He extended his hand through the group toward Palmiero, who shook it. Clark moseyed onward.

Then in the first inning, Clark lined a single to left. He stood on first, inches away from where Palmiero was manning the bag. No fistfight broke out.

Only in the bizarre, money-mad world of major-league baseball can you find a guy like Palmiero who loves Arlington, Texas, so much he makes it his off-season home; adored playing for the Rangers; hit 37 homers, drove in 105 runs and scored an American League-high 124 runs in 1993 — and yet can't get them to fork over his market value ($30 million over five years).

Yet that same club — which would go only as high as $26.5 million over five for Palmiero — goes out and signs Will Clark, a terrific leader whose production has dropped significantly in the last two years, for almost as much money as Palmiero wanted.

"I got what my goal was," Palmiero said Saturday. "I set a goal and that was what I got. It's not exactly with the team that I wanted, but it may be the best thing for me."

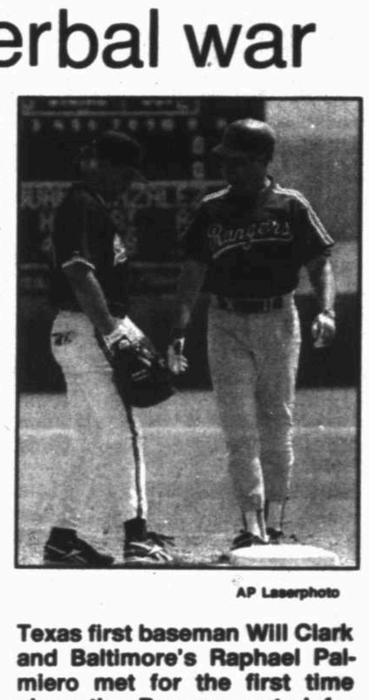

Palmiero and Clark both were drafted in 1985, among a constellation of future stars that included Barry Bonds, Barry Larkin, Pete Incaviglia, Tommy Greene and Gregg Jefferies.

Much of the rancor between the two dates back to their days together at Mississippi State. Palmiero, a Cuban, had once made reference to the fact that while he was a collegian, he hung out with the ballplayers while Clark — a clean-cut country boy from New Orleans — favored the fraternity crowd. It is said by many who know both that one of Palmiero's prime motivations in baseball was and still is to outdo Will Clark.

A day after Clark signed a five-year, $30 million deal with Texas on Nov. 22 (with some of the money deferred), Palmiero told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram:

"That's Will. That's the way he is. He's got no class. Friendship doesn't matter to him. He was looking out for himself. I don't think much of Will. He's a lowlife." For good measure, he called Rangers president J. Thomas Schieffer "a back-stabbing liar."

Has Palmiero put those comments behind him? "I have, but the media hasn't," he said Saturday. "They keep bringing it up. All the time."

AP Laserphoto

Texas first baseman Will Clark and Baltimore's Raphael Palmiero met for the first time since the Rangers opted for Clark instead of Palmiero.

Raffy has emerged from this experience with two critical nuggets of wisdom: 1. baseball is a tough business, and 2. when you call people "a low life" and "a back-stabbing liar," the media may later ask you for an update.

Clark seems to be unfazed. He has fit right in as a Ranger, to the point where he has influenced the club to impose stricter rules on media access in the clubhouse, like he did as a Giant. He has taken charge on the field as well, batting .373 this spring entering Saturday's contest, with two homers and 14 RBI. Palmiero has hit .200, with three home runs and five RBI.

The Giants weren't willing to give Clark what he wanted to keep him in uniform; now they have journeyman Todd Benzinger in his place.

"I'll miss the guys quite a bit. I'll miss the fans," Clark said. "I had eight great years there; I'm not gonna hide that from you. Those were special years of my life."

Cardinal swims to third straight championship

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Arizona's Chad Carvin set his second American record in three days while Stanford earned its third consecutive team title Saturday at the NCAA Men's Swimming and Diving Championships.

The Texas 400-yard freestyle relay team of Jason Fink, Josh Davis, Chris Eckerman and Gary Hall Jr. set an American record with a time of 2:51.07.

Stanford cruised to its third consecutive team title with 566.5 points. Texas finished second with 445 points.

NOTICE TO PUBLIC
OF FINDING OF NO SIGNIFICANT IMPACT ON THE ENVIRONMENT and NOTICE TO PUBLIC OF REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF FUNDS
March 27, 1994

On or about April 15, 1994, the City of Midland (City), Midland County, Texas will request the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) to release Federal funds under Title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (P.L. 93-383) for the 1993 CDBG street paving projects on Cuthbert 1600 to 2200 blk ($138,000); Kansas 500 to 600 blk ($60,000); Dallas 500 to 600 blk, Pennsylvania 500 blk and Washington 500 blk ($95,000); Benton 300 to 700 blk, Washington 1200 blk, Washington 1800 blk, Washington 800 to 900 blk, Washington 2100 to 2400 blk ($226,000).

FINDING OF NO SIGNIFICANT IMPACT

It has been determined that such a request of release of funds will not constitute an action significantly affecting the quality of the human environment and accordingly the City has decided not to prepare an Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (P.L. 91-190). The reason for such decision not to prepare such a Statement is based upon the fact that all environmental concerns could either be minimized or mitigated.

The City has prepared an Environmental Review Record (ERR) on the above projects which document the environmental review of the projects and set forth the reasons why an EIS is not required. The ERR is on file in the Planning Division Office Room 220, City Hall, at the address below and is available during regular business hours for public examination and copying upon request.

No further environmental review of the projects is proposed to be conducted prior to the request for release of Federal funds.

PUBLIC COMMENTS ON FINDINGS

All interested agencies, groups and persons disagreeing with this decision are invited to submit written comments for consideration to the City at the address set forth below. Written comments should be received at the addressed specified on or before April 11, 1994. All comments received will be considered and the City will not request the release of funds or take administrative action on the project prior to the date specified above.

RELEASE OF FUNDS

The City will undertake the projects described above with Community Development Block Grant funds under Title I from its fiscal 1993 program under grant numbered B-93-MC-48-0023 from the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974. The City is certifying to HUD that the City and Mr. J.D. Faircloth, in his official capacity as Mayor, consent to accept the jurisdiction of the Federal Courts if an action is brought to enforce responsibilities in relation to environmental reviews, decision-making and action; and that these responsibilities have been satisfied. The legal effect of the certifications is that upon its approval the City may use the Block Grant funds and HUD will have satisfied its responsibilities under the National Environmental Policy Act. HUD will accept an objection to its approval only on one of the following bases: (a) that the certifications were not in fact executed by the certifying officer or other officer of the City approved by HUD; or (b) that the ERR for this project indicates omission of a required decision, finding or step applicable to the projects in the environmental review process. Objections must be prepared and submitted in accordance with the required procedure (24 CFR Part 58) and should be addressed to HUD, P.O. Box 2905, Fort Worth, Texas 76113-2905. Objections to the release of funds on bases other than those stated above will not be considered by HUD. No objections received after May 2, 1994, will be considered by HUD.

J.D. Faircloth, Mayor

HOMES & CLASSIFIED

Blue Ribbon

There is a wonderful opportunity to view this fantastic four bedroom house, during the open house this afternoon, between 2 p.m. and 4 p.m.

Located at 5404 Drexel Court in the modern Grasslands Estates, this is a large executive style two-story home which is virtually bursting with stunning features.

As soon as one drives up to the house, it is apparent that this is a very special house indeed. Set in landscaped grounds, the 100 percent brick exterior, evergreen shrubs and Red Oak trees add a touch of classics elegance to the property.

This effect is compounded as soon as one walk through the leaded crystal front-door; the two-story-high ceilings, huge windows,and white, ceramic floor-tiles have turned the entry-way and living areas into a bright spacious place in which to receive visitors and relax.

Not only does the family room have very high ceilings indeed, but it also boasts an enormous ceiling-high, brick fireplace and chimney which is flanked by two built-in Ash bookcases. Arched transoms above the bookcases let even more light flood through the suite of rooms.

The formal dining room is obliquely set so that it forms the actual center of the house, off from this room is the sumptuous kitchen, the T.V./children's play room and the living room.

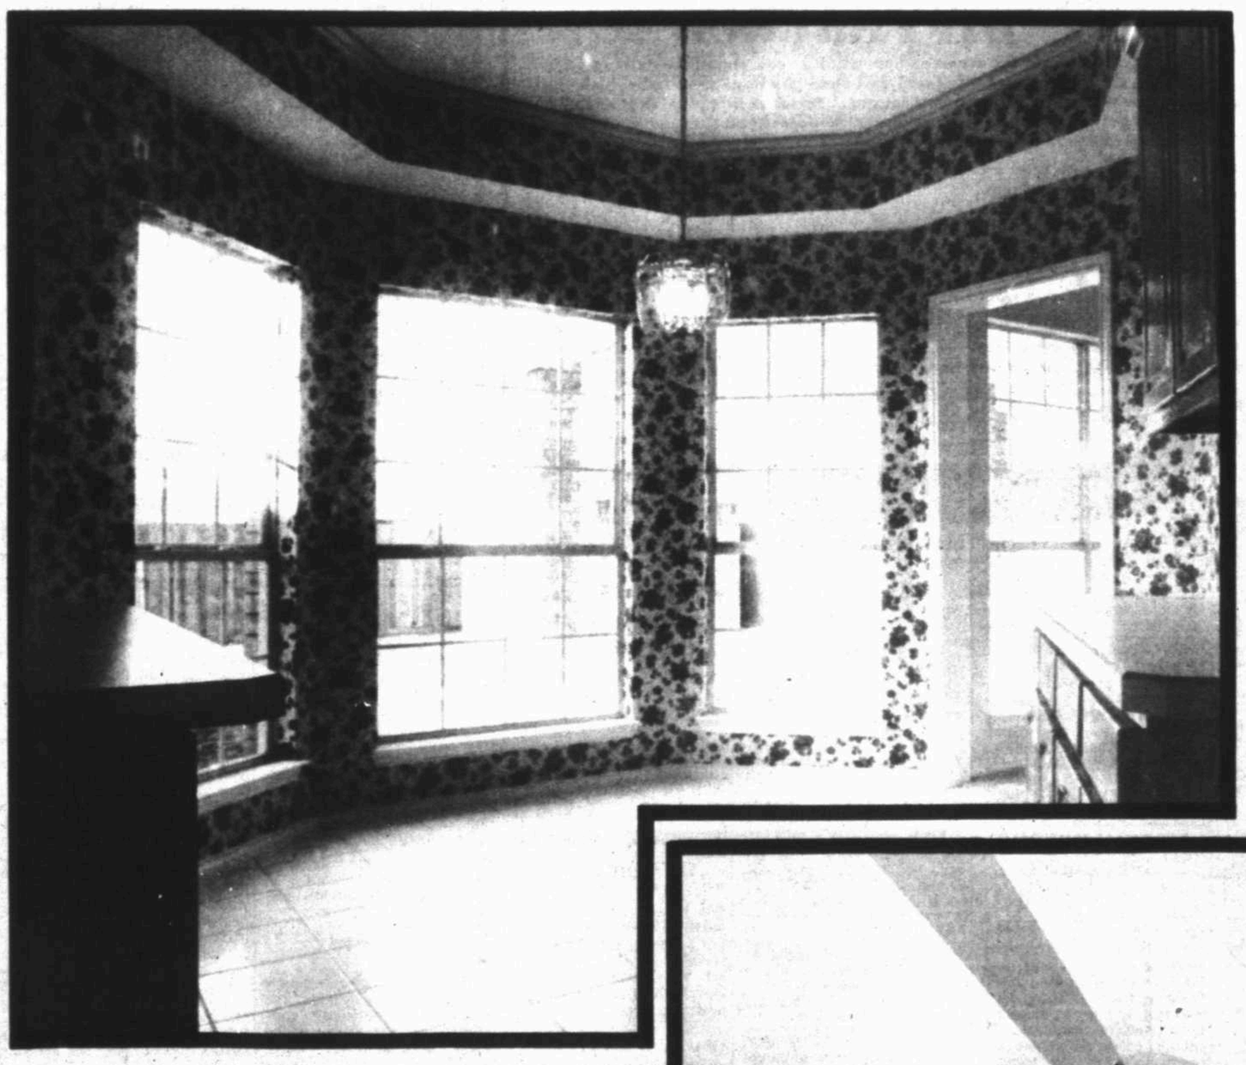

The light hued decor perfectly complements the light Oak and Ash trim which abounds in the staircase, kitchen cabinets and in the built-in furniture such as the glass-front display cabinet for china.

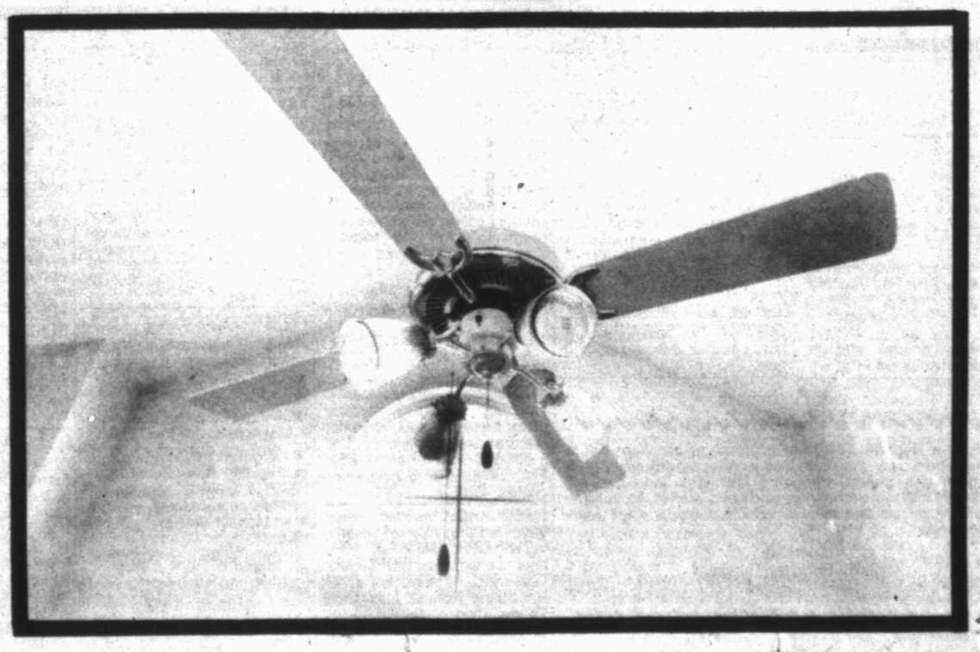

This is a very practical home, in that there are two bedroom suites, of which either could be used as the master. The suite downstairs is very large and has it's own bathroom and closets, en suite. If it was not used as the master it would be perfect for long term visitors or teenagers.

The master bedroom proper is upstairs, this is an impressive suite complete with a high vaulted ceiling that features an round, inset window at the ceiling's apex.

The suite includes walk-in, his and hers closets and a huge mirrored bathroom which boasts a sky light, built-in linen hampers and a whirlpool tub and separate shower.

For more information on this fantastic property and to arrange a private viewing, call Wanda Lippert of Coldwell Banker, at 689-7700 or stop by the open house today.

Fair housing opens doors for all

Pat Orseth
President/Midland
Association of Realtors

The recognition of Fair Housing Month in April is an excellent time to reflect on what members of the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS are doing to wipe out housing discrimination.

Fair Housing is a fundamental right of all our nation's citizens - a right REALTORS are legally and ethically bound to protect.

What is Fair Housing? To NAR, Fair Housing means that all people have the right to choose to live wherever they want to live.

The Federal Housing law covers race, color, religion, sex, familial status, handicap and national origin. Some sellers, buyers and landlords feel these factors are relevant to the sale of the property. However, REALTORS have neither the right nor the responsibility to offer information about any of this during the home buying/selling/renting process. The only pertinent criteria is whether the buyers, sellers or renters can fulfill the terms of the sales or lease contract.

Great studies have been made in efforts to achieve equal opportunity in housing. Discriminatory practices were outlawed with the enactment of the Fair Housing law in 1968.

Soon after the law passed, NAR added an article to its Code of Ethics that mirrored the terms of the law. Then, in 1975, NAR entered into a Voluntary Affirmative Marketing Agreement (VAMA) with the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, which is the agency responsible for implementing Federal Fair Housing laws. This agreement was based on the concept of using a voluntary compliance commitment as a supplement tot he Fair Housing law to achieve equal housing opportunity. Now, the majority of NAR's 1,800 local Board of REALTORS have signed a VAMA with HUD.

For more than 20 years, REALTORS have been working diligently to eliminate housing discrimination. The Fair Housing law passed in 1988 expanded coverage to the disabled and to families with children. The provisions of the law presenting the most difficult compliance problems are these new areas of protection.

For instance, one result of the coverage extended to families with children is the end of adults-only communities designed to appeal mainly to young, childless professionals. The law does exempt certain types of elderly housing projects from requiring access to families with children. But, confusion persists over exactly what a project must offer to qualify for the elderly housing exemption.

Another area of concern has resulted from a lack of occupancy standards at the federal level. As yet, there are no federal guidelines that establish limits on the number of people who can occupy a single unit. Unless a local ordinance exists that sets such limits, landlords and building owners have no guidance on such circumstances. This places them at a considerable disadvantage. NAR believes clear occupancy standards would provide a reasonable, balanced approach - one that considers the safety of the occupants, but is not so restrictive as to shut out families.

The Midland Association of REALTORS, Inc. is one of more than 1,800 boards and associations that comprise the National Association of REALTORS, the nation's largest trade association and the Voice for Real Estate.

Realtors provide wealth of knowledge

Marilyn Jo Smith
ReMax of Midland

You see the signs and classified listings for "FSBOs" -- For Sale By Owner. As an intelligent, capable individual, why shouldn't you sell your own home?

Statistics show that the majority of thsoe signs and ads will be converted to those of a Realtor before the property is sold.

The home-selling process is the classic example of something that looks much simpler on paper.

A good Realtor knows what properties are selling for, which areas are strong or getting hot, and what buyers are looking for right now. They have the perspective of what has happened in your area and are good prognosticators of what will be coming.

A Realtor will give you an objective view of your home's market value and what you can do to increase the price you'll eventually get.

Your listing Realtor may or may not be the Realtor that actually sells your home. But both the buying and lisitng agent may work for you. In the absence of a written agreement to the contrary, both agents have a legal obligation to represent your interests first.

A good Realtor depends on referrals and repeat business. He or she understands that to just make a deal is not enough, it has to be the right deal, the right peoperty, the right people. Only experience can structure that combination for you.

Selling your home can be an emotional experience. A Realtor will not only "run interference" between you and a potential buyer, but keep decisions on a professional and objective level.

Suggesting financing sources, writing contracts, providing comparable prices for your neighborhood, these are just a few of the areas where it pays to have a professional.

A Realtor understands which problems are serious sales busters and which are easily remedied glitches. Having a professional on your team can keep you from pressing the panic button.

If you've been through a closing, you know the moutains of paperwork involved, Your Realtor will make sure everything is in order and handle all the last minute cross-town sprints and questions that arise.

The simplest of sales can quickly become complicated without a licensed professional involved. Conversely, you may not feel the bumps of a rough sale with a good Realtor on your team.

Like most worthwhile services, you don't miss your Realtor until you try working without him or her.

TAR announces Texas Realtor of the Year

Franklin Jeffers of Amarillo has been named Texas Realtor of the Year by the Texas Association of Realtors (TAR). Announcement of his selection to receive TAR's highest honor came at the association's Spring Meeting in Austin Sunday.

Jeffers is a long-time real estate practitioner, having been a member of TAR since 1960. He currently serves on the organization's board of directors, political action committee and is a lifetime member of the Realtors political action committee.

He served as president of TAR in 1974 and traveled to local boards throughout the state during his tenures. He has served continuously as a board member since 1968. He also contributed greatly to TAR as chairman of the financial law, legislative and education committees.

At the national level, Jeffers has served on the association's board of directors, several committees and regional vice president.

Jeffers was named Amarillo Realtor of the Year in 1969 and served as president in 1972. He also served in several offices, including political action committee chairs and on the board of directors and as Multiple Listing Service chair.

Jeffers also has been extremely active in civic and business activities. He has held leadership posts in the Amarillo Downtown Rotary Club, Chamber of Commerce, American Red Cross, Polk Street United Methodist Church, Texas Ex-Students Association, Tri-State Fair Association and Amarillo Credit Bureau.

As one Realtor commented: "Franklin believes in giving back more than he takes to make the organizations he's involved in stronger. Franklin is truly dedicated to the Realtor profession."

Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?

YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:
★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?
Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?
Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?
An initial $100 refundable deposit is required.

Natural Gas Update

PERMIAN BASIN
OIL REPORT

SUNDAY, MARCH 27, 1994 SERVING 54 COUNTIES IN WEST TEXAS AND NEW MEXICO

BRIEFING

Wayne Graves with Lewis Casing Crews running big pipe.

Rig count

Drilling activity posted an increase for the week ended March 18, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

In the Permian Basin, the rig count rose three to 99 during the week but remains below the year-ago count of 108.

Eddy County, N.M. was the most active in the Basin with 15 rigs, followed by Lea County, N.M. with 13 rigs and Midland County with seven rigs.

Nationally, the rig count rose 10 to 743, well above last year's tally fo 614.

Natural gas drilling continues to outpace crude drilling, with 404 rigs drilling for gas and 330 for oil.

Please see RIG COUNT GRAPH/9E

Well servicing up

The servicing of existing oil and gas wells increased by 13 percent in 1993, as the well-service industry showed an average rig count of 3,160 active rigs. According to AOSC, natural gas drilling was a prime reason for the increase. Despite being ahead of 1992, last year's increase was still below 1991 levels.

ODI employees pose with a cable spool truck at the Midland facility.

Oil prices

Oil prices improved early this week in anticipation of OPEC's friday meeting.

The market had climbed early in the week amid rumors OPEC would cut production, but prices then weakened amid technical factors when contracts for April delivery and an increase in the nation's crude supply reported by the API when a decrease had been anticipated.

However, price weakness, however, was mitigated by anticipation of the OPEC meeting.

While few expect OPEC members to take any action, some analysts said there's always the possibility OPEC will make some unexpected moves to shore up oil prices. While cutting production would improve prices, experts say OPEG members fear non-OPEC members would step into the vold and increase market share at OPEC expense.

Late in the week, prices closed at $15.08 on the New York Mercantile Exchange, with the posted price at $13.50 a barrel.

Natural gas prices were weaker, slipping to $1.98 per Mcf on the Merc.

Please see PRICE GRAPH/9E

Production slides

Domestic crude oil production fell 115,000 b/d or 1.7 percent for February, according to API.

Alaskan output declined 2.1 percent, or about 35,000 b/d.

The decrease follows a modest increase in January, which had been the first year-to-year rise in a little over two years.

In the lower 48 states, crude oil production slipped by 80,000 b/d or 1.5 percent.

Gas price continues to improve

■ Top and bottom forces create narrow price sandwich

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

What's impacting current natural gas prices? One analyst calls it a "natural gas price sandwich."

"It's a force on the top and a force on the bottom with prices in the middle," says David A Garcia, a research analyst with Eppler, Guerin & Turner, who is the author of a research paper on the natural gas sandwich. "It is a sandwich that could lead to natural gas prices above $3 per mcf over the next three years and put a smile on the face of a lot of producers."

While not as forceful as it once was, Garcia says the top of the natural gas price sandwich is still being determined by the crossover from natural gas to fuel oil while the bottom is being set by the summer price trough. He said the bottom of natural gas prices had moved upward because the deep seasonal price troughs in natural gas have disappeared.

On the top boundary, Garcia notes that fuel switching could affect as much as 15 percent of overall natural gas demand. However, one study done by a large independent natural gas producer, Burlington Resources, says about 8 percent could or would make the crossover to fuel oil.

"That's been one of the problems in trying to predict price," says Garcia, who follows 25 natural gas companies, "nobody knows for sure how many companies there are out there that can switch or would switch."

Mitigating factors for crossover include Federal and local Clean Air ordinances, and associated capital expenses that would be required (in many instances) to burn fuel oil and comply with the ordinances. A hidden cost in burning fuel oil is higher maintenance cost.

Lower oil prices have not put gas potential on hold

■ Natural gas industry responding positively to gas potential

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Natural gas appears to be on the move and not even low oil prices can stop an era whose time has come.

The signs are crystal clear: Baker Hughes' tally of rigs drilling for natural gas is outpacing that of rigs drilling for crude oil. A record drawdown of gas storage supplies during the severe winter suffered by much of the nation is expected to support gas prices as those supplies are replaced this spring and summer. Natural gas use is up and President Clinton and his administration have pledged efforts to increase use of the environmentally-friendly fuel.

A recent survey by the Permian Basin Oil Report found a number of local producers turning their focus to natural gas, and even industry giant Exxon announced that it expects much of its growth in the future to come from natural gas.

But just what do those involved with natural gas see for the future and what are they doing to take advantage of the fuel's bright future? The Oil Report contacted some experts to find out.

Midland gas consultant Robert K. Anderson of ROBERT K. ANDERSON & ASSOCIATES sees a bright future, despite low oil prices which tend to prompt users to switch to less expensive fuel oils rather than natural gas.

Said Anderson: "Those producers that follow a strategy of replacing oil reserves with gas reserves, if they drill gas wells or buy gas reserves, they have an optimistic future ahead of them. It's important for companies to consider a corporate strategy of natu-

Compression industry ready for expansion

■ Increased demand and volumes will spell increased compression

By Ellen Hopkins

If the natural gas industry looks good these days, it is equally good for a companion industry — natural gas compression.

Midland-based Compressor Systems Inc. (CSI) is one of the industry's largest fabricators of compressor packages, and maintains one of the largest rental fleets in the nation. CSI Senior Vice President Richard Folger, in discussing compression and marketing, says his company is ready

Exxon speech may mark gas turning point

Bearing a New Orleans dateline, it came across the news wire as a small insignificant five-inch story from the Associated Press.

The lead on the story reads like this: "Exxon Corp.'s growth in coming years will come from natural gas production, not oil, the chairman of the nation's largest oil company said Monday."

I doubt if more than a handful of newspapers in Texas or the nation picked up the story, or realized the significance of those remarks. Only those in the industry who are familiar with what has not been said previously would have recognized that statement as a major turning point in the oil and gas industry.

My co-worker Mella McEwen was the first to spot the story on the wire service. "Whoa!" she called, "we have never heard these words before. Not from any major oil company!"

In reviewing thousands of wire stories and press releases over the past few years, neither of us recalled ever reading such a phrase.

It hit me in the face like a bucket of cold water. My first thought was: "Exxon is coming out." They have acknowledged the natural gas era and assigned it a new value.

Majors, of course, talk about natural gas all the time, but only with very measured and less than enthusiastic words.

For the most part major oil companies have tried to keep the focus on oil. Remarks about the future of the oil and gas industry have usually been hedged in favor of oil, "as the very long bridge" into the natural gas age.

While majors are quick to join a good gas drilling venture, they have been very slow to pay public tribute to natural gas. Calling it an attitude of resistance to natural gas may be out of line, but calling it a non-supportive attitude would not be far off.

It is an attitude that has been characterized by the fact that major oil companies have shown almost no interest in CNG and LNG as a transportation fuel, even though that event is for all practical purposes inevitable.

With the exception of Amoco, which has more natural gas reserves than any other oil company in the U.S. and has opened CNG refueling stations from coast to coast, most integrated oil companies have been dragged kicking and screaming into the simple admission that natural gas has a place as a transporation fuel.

However, that attitude may be changing now.

The Exxon statement gives hope that big oil company perceptions about their future and natural gas may be changing. If so, it is an attitude shift that could have profound implications upon domestic E&P. It could also have a profound impact on natural gas marketing, because a major factor in the slow growth of the natural gas fuel industry has been foot-dragging by major oil companies.

The attitude shift has already been made by most independent oil companies. In the 1994 Oil Report Survey of Permian Basin producers it was more than evident that there had been a radical shift in focus from oil to gas, as operator after operator expressed for the natural gas era which experts continue to predict is just around the corner. He notes that the demand for natural gas is increasing and demand is what drives the compression industry.

"The gas compression industry is very mature these days and competitive. It's driven by the volume of gas being transported, rather than the market price," said Folger. "We've seen a marginal increase in the number of gas wells drilled and in the volume of gas. So we're looking for continued steady growth in the demand for gas compression."

Other factors contributing to a steady growth in the compression industry are a decline in reservoir pressures and realignment of reserves.

He said reservoir pressures continue to decline over time and more horsepower (HP) is needed to move gas through the resulting increased pressure differential.

Also, FERC Rule 636 has caused the pipeline business to restructure, and centralizing compression in the field is one result. Locally, property divestiture from the majors to independents has caused realignment of compression needs.

"We've been following the consolidation trends as companies buy properties," said Folger. "Additional properties in one area can result in the need for reanalyzing compression requirements."

The need of producers for a wide variety of compression has also been a good incentive for compressor rentals, said Folger. He said that CSI's rental fleet of 900 compressors exceeds 98 percent average on-line run time, which maximizes gas production and revenue, and noted that flexibility was a key ingredient in building compressor packages today.

"When we design a compressor package for a customer, we build in flexibility because production volumes vary day-to-day," Folger said. "We try to develop the ideal solution for the customer. We look at the nature of the application, whether the gas is sour, has liquids, whatever the composition.

"We look at the environment -- whether it's arid, high altitude, wet or freezing temperatures -- and what the customer is trying to accomplish. We consider what volume of gas needs to be moved and at what pressure. Conditions change over the life of a well; as pressure depletes and line pressures change, horsepower requirements increase."

Because of these ever-changing conditions, and the need for flexibility Folger said many operators are opting to lease compression packages rather than buy. But flexibility is needed, even for those who buy. For those who purchase compressor packages, CSI offers financing and a buy-back opportunity. The units that are repurchased can then be relocated to other customers.

Because compressors are no small package to ship and because reliability is a must CSI is able to simulate field conditions, CSI is able to simulate full field conditions at its test facility in Midland.

From the 42-acre fabrication plant and test loop facility, the company ships packages ranging 20 hp, single stage to 5700 hp four stage. The company's compression packages for sale or rental feature Caterpillar (CAT) and Waukesha low emission engines with Ariel compressors.

Technology has not left the compressor industry behind. Folger said technology changes over the years have produced turbocharged engines with greater horsepower, better designs and quality control.

"Our job is to combine the best available technology by integrating the engine and compressor that meet the customers' specifications and location, whether it's an offshore platform, a cold region of China, or a remote part of West Texas."

Due to the remoteness of some regions, integrity of the compressor unit is essential. Service is integral to CSI's business, and the company maintains 10 major service facilities, each with its own parts inventory. Over 100 service technicians with 24-hour on-call capability readily respond to customers' needs.

Folger said customers' need for quick response is one reason CSI adopted the advanced management philosophy of "decentralized authority" nearly five years ago. By empowering its veteran field employees with the authority to make decisions without waiting for headquarters' approval, responsiveness increased and downtime decreased.

This is the direction a lot of corporations are moving now, and Folger said the time invested to train employees in decision making pays off. Another trend common to many industries is consolidation, and he said it's been noticeable in the compression industry as well.

"Many industries have seen buyouts and mergers of smaller companies," Folger said. "The compression industry is very competitive and the companies that succeed will be those that understand the market and how to partner."

Partnering, or forming alliances with other companies, is becoming a popular and necessary way to do business in the oil industry. Companies rely on one another in long-term business arrangements. In the gas compression industry, partnering is closely tied to service.

"Through these alliances we agree to provide equipment and a certain level of service," Folger said. "We build a relationship that optimizes what we do best: design, build, sell, lease and service compressor packages."

He added that servicing its own units has influenced CSI's compressor designs. Unlike many automobile engines today in which a number of parts have to be removed just to change an oil filter, CSI's engineering, fabricating and service departments work as a team to design sensible compressor packages that fit every need -- including the need for environmental responsibility.

CSI incorporates clean-burn/lean-burn engines into its compressor units. Folger said these CAT engines, from its sister company West Texas CAT, are the best technology available. Not only do they reduce emissions, these engines burn fuel more efficiently which reduces operating costs as the price of gas increases.

Concern for soil contamination has caused CSI to focus on environmentally sensitive designs which capture and store fluids. The incorporation of eco-rails into all compressor skids prevent engine and compressor oils from being washed off the unit during a rain.

CSI's wholly owned subsidiary, Ignition Systems and Controls, Inc. (ISC), specializes in catalytic converters, air/fuel ratio controls and ignition systems. ISC retrofits older compressor units so CSI's rental fleet incorporates the latest technology.

Advancements in communications, such as microwave repeater station hookups, allow 24-hour links with remote compressors.

"This real-time telemetry has eliminated the need to man compressor stations around the clock," said Folger. "Readouts on compressor functions and operating ranges are just a phone call away."

As CSI looks to the future, it continues to expand to meet industry demands. Added to CSI's history of providing compression for field gathering, pipeline transmission and gas processing plant use, the company continues to diversify its product line.

PRICE: Stable range

The fact that crossover from one commodity to the other would occur in a staged progression and not all at once will have a softening effect on price changes, reducing radical swings. "Utilitiy companies may not be driven by price, but they are driven by whip lash," says Garcia.

If the 8 percent "total crossover" possibility is accepted, this effectively means an "overheard bubble" of a like quantity of natural gas based on the relative price of crude oil, noted the research study by Garcia. When crude oil was at $18 per barrel in mid-1993, the apparent heart of the crossover occurred as natural gas hit $2.70 per Mcf.

Using simplistic assumptions, the study equates $15 oil to $2.25 per Mcf of natural gas, implying that the intermediate-term price cap on natural gas will be at this level, with short-term variations above and below the center value.

Garcia says decoupling is another step that happens when all the users that will cut over to fuel oil have cut over? At this point, an important new market dynamic takes hold: the price of natural gas is decoupled from fuel oil (and its feedstock, crude oil). The crossover ceiling effect has evaporated.

"A significant increase in demand could effectively wipe out the crossover factor," said Garcia. He said that in his interviews of leading natural gas producers he had not found a single company that had produced less than 90 percent of all it could produce, excluding proration and shut-ins. "That tells me supplys and demand are in pretty close balance. Also, there is no more gas-on-gas competition. That ended in 1992."

Other than economic and regulative constraints on crossover and demand. The only other factor that slow upward movement of the top of the natural gas sandwich is competition from natural gas liquids, which account for only a small portion of the heating market.

Another encouraging factor in pricing is that the bottom of the natural gas price sandwich is the summer price trough, but it is no longer as deep as it once was. And thanks to storage pull down will probably keep prices higher through the year.

The Principal/ Eppler, Guerin & Turner report notes that in the years prior to 1993, the cash price for natural gas during the summer months fell sharply as a function of demand. Very predictably, the winter heating season brought high demand, and high prices, for natural gas. The summer months, with lower demand, predicably brought lower prices. These distinct peaks and valleys are evident in a chart of cash price.

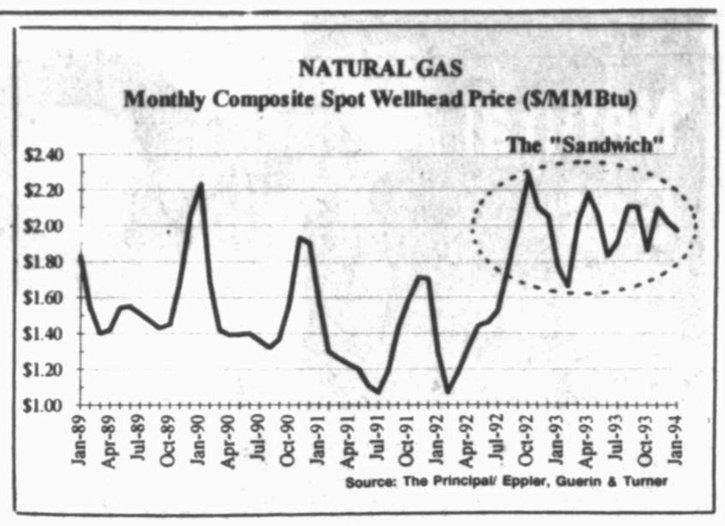

Current storage at the start of the heating season in November 1993 was normal at approximately 3,200 Bcf. But, due to winter weather, drawdowns were heavy during December and January, and usually about 800 Bcf of natural gas are pulled out of storage during the February-March time frame. If this pattern holds, arithmetic shows the storage will be below 1,000 Bcf as the heating season ends in April 1994.

When the heating season concluded last year, on April 15, 1993, natural gas in storage was at a very low level relative to historical norms. Looking at the preceding five years (1988-1992), the average amount of natural gas in storage was 1,180 billion cubic feet.

In 1993, working storage was only 1,233 billion cubic feet, and, as shown graphically, natural gas price was resilient throughout the ensuing summer months. A storage level of 1,233 Bcf on April 15, 1993, was a driving force in keeping cash natural gas price from dropping into a seasonal trough.

But as implied by the 1994 weekly data, natural gas storage this year looks to be lower than last year. Storage levels may dip below 1,000 Bcf, lower than last year and the lowest in over a decade. Using the preceeding year as a guage, the implication for natural gas is positive.

Natural gas prices will probably be higher next year and may hit $3 within the next three years. That should provide the incentive to drill more wells.

This graph of natural gas cash price in 1993 shows natural gas trading in a tighter range, called the sandwich.

PITTS: Gas switch

the view that stable and improving gas prices and depressed oil prices were major factors in the shift.

Speaking to oil industry analysts and executives in New Orleans, Exxon Chairman Lee R. Raymond says Exxon is considering 70 exploration and production projects worldwide.

"Clearly more of these projects will be gas over time, because that's where the real upstream growth is for Exxon." Raymond said that by the end of the decade, Exxon expects its gas production to increase 25 percent.

Since 1990, the company's production of oil and other liquids has fallen more than 2 percent and gas production has risen nearly 10 percent. Over the same time frame, oil prices have fallen about 25 percent while gas has risen nearly 20 percent.

Refining and marketing growth will depend on cost control and selling more profitable products, he said. The company also plans to expand its refining and marketing network into eastern Europe.

With the industry looking at another beating with $13 oil, there is an understandably high level of frustration among oil producers and a strong urge to find a safe and stable harbor in which to work and make a profit. The industry may have found it in the gas and oil industry.

Wheeling and dealing reflected in oil industry tax relief proposals

By Bill Mintz
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — During negotiations to craft a proposal to help oil producers cope with low oil prices, one independent producer reminded his colleagues what they do for a living.

"I told them to go make a deal," said George Alcorn, chairman of the Independent Petroleum Association of America.

His comment resulted in a promise to protect the jobs of 400 U.S. merchant marines, who feared they would be thrown out of work if Congress lifts a ban on exporting oil produced in Alaska's North Slope as the oil producers want.

The merchant marines have fought similar proposals in the past, because the federal law requiring oil companies to ship oil on U.S. tankers with U.S. crews doesn't apply to shipments overseas.

The Alaska provision is a key element in the oil and gas industry relief package that will be presented to President Clinton next month. Other provisions include tax relief for marginal wells and new production as well as some changes in federal regulations.

Breaking down the opposition of the maritime unions is an example of the strategy being pursued by the lawmakers and lobbyists who are leading the long-shot effort to win congressional approval of relief for the oil and gas industry.

Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, recently testified that the export ban depresses the price of Alaskan crude by at least $3 per barrel. The North Slope provides about 1.6 million barrels of oil per day, about one-fourth of domestic production.

The ban on the sale of North Shore crude overseas has flooded the California oil markets with crude.

"Our posted price is about $9 (per barrel) right now," said Albert G. Boyce V, who works for Tannehill Oil, a family-owned producer in California's Kern County.

The Alaska issue was extremely important to Stevens and other Republicans from Alaska and California.

But the proposal could have been a nonstarter, because the Clinton administration did not want to take on the unions after the tough fight over the North American Free Trade Agreement. So BP America, a big Alaska producer, and Sen. John Breaux, D-La., came up with the proposal to protect merchant marine jobs by requiring the oil to be exported on U.S. ships with U.S. crews.

The backers of the oil-patch tax relief proposal hope the compromise will unlock support among Democratic lawmakers who have sided with labor in the fight.

The lawmakers and industry representatives met for more than a month to bring together a package on which all sectors of the industry could agree.

The heart of the legislative package is a tax credit for the production of oil and gas from marginal wells.

The incentive would provide credits of $3 per barrel for the first three barrels per day of oil pumped from marginal wells and 50 cents per 1,000 cubic feet of natural gas for the first 18,000 cubic feet of daily production from marginal wells.

The credits would be phased out when the average price of oil ranges between $14 and $20 per barrel and when gas prices average $2.49 to $3.55 per 1,000 cubic feet.

The credits also would apply to the first 15 barrels per day of oil or 300,000 cubic feet per day of gas produced from new wells.

ral gas instead of crude oil."

He said he expected to see increases in the electrical generation sector and the transportation sector — compressed natural gas. Price trends are still up, although he anticipates some reductions in spot market prices in April and May due to the warmer weather.

Anderson observed that, though primary fuels for electrical generation have been coal and nuclear power, there's been conversions to natural gas.

He added that natural gas as a transportation fuel is still in its infancy, "but with government assistance, is a viable market. We are seeing assistance on federal and state levels. As the larger cities convert their utility vehicles, like buses, the smaller communities will catch on. It's a promising market and it's growing faster than anyone expected and will continue to do so."

While Anderson sees a lack of drilling, he said that if spot prices remain in the $1.80 to $2.20 per Mcf range, drilling will increase enough to meet the nation's needs.

ENRON CORP., whose subsidiaries include production and pipelines, is looking not only to expand natural gas production but markets. According to Margaret Carson, Enron's director of corporate strategy and competitive analysis, the company is looking to expand underdeveloped markets.

"Florida is one example of a new consuming area that needs to be developed. Enron and Sonat are joint owners of the Florida Gas Transmission line and we're increasing by 60 to 65 percent the amount of capacity that will serve the area. Markets such as that, with population growth and a heavy air conditioning load in the summer season are a nice counterpoint to the appetite in the Northeast in the winter months."

Enron's Transwestern Pipeline, which runs from the Permian Basin to the California border, recently announced some interconnections in the Permian Basin that would permit New Mexico gas production to move eastward after it supplied western markets, she said, allowing both New Mexico Permian and San Juan Basin gas to move east or west.

The company is also considering expansion or a geographic extension of the Northern Border pipeline that it operates. The pipeline is a conduit for Canadian gas to move to markets in the Midwest and Northeast.

In terms of market growth for natural gas, Carson said she sees two positive trends that have surfaced in the last two to three years.

The first is the fact that deregulation of wellhead gas prices in the early 1980s, coupled with deregulation of gas pipeline transmission beginning in the mid-1980s has permitted natural gas to be market responsive.

Secondly, she said, is a combination of an increase in wellhead prices from an average of $1.74 per Mcf in 1992 to a preliminary average of 42.05 per Mcf in 1993, coupled with a 3 percent increase in demand.

"That's very good news because it tells me the point of price resistance has not been reached in the natural gas market," she said.

Another sign of health in the industry, she said, is the fact that producers are increasing gas production again. In Texas, she said, gas production was up 5 percent in 1993 over 1992, and in Louisiana the rise was 3 percent.

Also of significance, she said, is a report from the U.S. Energy Information Administration that the U.S. pipeline grid has grown from 270,000 pipeline miles in 1985 when FERC Order 436 to 280,000 miles in 1992 with the additional 10,000 pipeline miles enough to cross the country twice.

"While the industry was restructuring, it was still expanding its transmission lines," she noted.

At the same time production grew from 16.4 trillion cubic feet in 1985 to 17.8 trillion cubic feet in 1992.

FERC's latest changes, Order 636, will impact storage, she said, "because for the first time it removes the pipeline merchant as a sales molecule of last resort. Order 636 has taken the pipelines out of the gas merchant business, therefore gas distributors and end users are assured of supplies at peak demand, available either under contract or in their own storage facilities.

"Recontracting of storage so those who value it most highly will pay for the use of that storage is one area I think 636 is impacting. Another area is a look at gathering assets. I think they'll be variously affected as far as the gathering assets of some interstate pipelines under 636 direction. Some won't change, and some pipelines will move to try to unbundle and create stand-alone companies for their gathering assets. All this depends on how the final light-handed regulation versus continued regulation of interstate pipeline gathering assets plays out."

Carson also foresees, on the regulation side, changes in the character of new pipeline construction projects. In the last five years, she noted, new projects were done to catch new sources of supply to give pipeline shippers supply diversity. Now, she said, projects will be smaller projects targeting specific end consumer markets.

GPM GAS CORP. has become very proactive in expanding its volumes, making several acquisitions in the Permian Basin towards that end.

Paul Appel, vice president, West Texas region, noted that among the company's more significant acquisitions in the last year are the purchase of the East Goldsmith Plant equipment and gathering system from affiliates of American Oil and Gas Corp. and the acquisition of two Martin County processing plants and gathering systems in Martin, Andrews and Midland counties and the Imperial gathering system in Crane, Pecos and Ward counties from Enron Corp.

GPM, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Phillips Gas Co., also is active in the Austin Chalk and Giddings fields, operating two plants in that area and Appel said he expects activity to remain high in that area for at least a couple of years.

He said company officials feel the natural gas industry is moving ahead, and he believes the industry's good job supplying markets this winter will establish the industry's ability to reliably deliver gas "so we'll have have a continually growing demand for gas as a potential heating and industrial fuel."

Deliverability, he said, was aided by storage and he observed that buying gas for storage can help flatten price peaks and valleys, help producers develop a consistent drilling program and allow the industry to look further down the road than a few weeks for a price forecast.

In West Texas, GPM gathers and processes low-pressure casinghead gas, explained Dave Scharf, gas acquisition manager for the West Texas region.

Appel added that the company processes the gas by removing H_2S, heavier liquids, water and CO_2 so it becomes a residue fuel usable by residences and industry.

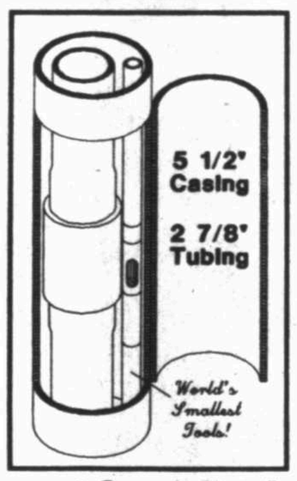

Scharf said he sees overall growth in this niche of the market, with perhaps some consolidation of assets in mature areas such as the Permian Basin where smaller processing plants will be closed and consolidated into larger, more efficient systems.

The company also makes natural gas liquids used in either gasoline or the plastics industries. A small part of the business is making sulphur from the H_2 removed from the gas, sulphur that's moved to the Texas energy companies head to former Soviet Union

By Susan Hightower
AP Business Writer

DALLAS (AP) — The flat plain of Western Siberia where Petro-Hunt Corp. is embarking on an oilfield project is frozen solid about seven months of the year. And that's when it's easily accessible; the rest of the time, it's a swamp.

"The area is very much like Canada in that the drainage is north to the Arctic, and the mouth of the river is the last thing to thaw" in the spring, says Petro-Hunt adviser Herbert Hunt.

That sends water backing up across the region. "The rest of the year it's very much like south Louisiana. And the mosquitoes are big," Hunt said.

Geography is just one of the many challenges facing petroleum companies seeking to tap the treasure of oil and gas under the former Soviet Union.

"It's one of the great, if not the greatest, future sources for oil and gas in the world," said Robert Strauss, former ambassador to Moscow and U.S. trade representative.

"Regardless of the fact that they are in such shambles right now economically — and it's a cliche to say — the resources are absolutely untapped," said Dr. Frida Alperovich, president of the Texas-Kazakhstan Alliance.

In a $20 billion joint venture in one of the former Soviet republics, Chevron Corp. and Kazakhstan's national oil company are working to expand oil production near the Caspian Sea.

Several Texas companies also have seen positive developments in initiatives in the former Soviet Union within the past year.

They include Exxon Corp., which has projects at Sakhalin Island offshore Russia's far east coast and west of the Ural Mountains; and two other Texas projects in Russia that received support from the Overseas Private Investment Corp. during President Clinton's trip to Russia in January.

OPIC entered a protocol offering Snyder Oil Corp. up to $138 million in financing and political risk insurance. And Petro-Hunt Corp. and Dresser Industries Inc. have reached an agreement in principle for a $50 million loan from the U.S. government corporation.

Snyder plans to restart existing wells, then drill just more than 400 wells over 10 years, in the Volga-Urals Basin of the Perm region 800 miles east of Moscow. The Fort Worth company expects to see some production by this summer.

Snyder does low-risk drillin in the United States, particularly the Rockies, spokeswoman Diana Ten Eyck said. The Russian project is "more of a potential for a home run kind of thing than we would see in our reserves here," she said.

"The potential impact is that it could represent a significant portion of our production and our companywide reserves, if things go according to schedule. ... It could be a significant part of what we do," Ms. Ten Eyck said.

"Of course, what we're up against is some political uncertainty, which is clearly the largest risk we're taking," she said.

In Petro-Hunt's project, which also involves two Russian government enterprises, the company plans to put in a 27½-mile, 12-inch pipeline this winter and hopes to begin production May 1, 1995, Herbert Hunt said. So far, Petro-Hunt has drilled one well.

The company has invested more than $10 million in the project, slated to include some 1,180 wells and two pipelines. Cost of the initiative is estimated at $1.4 billion over 13 years.

"It's our major effort at this point overseas," Hunt said.

But there are problems with doing business in the former Soviet republics.

"The oil being there is not the question; it's the question of being able to work within the Russian system. They are a country that's evolving, never having really had a tax system before or private enterprise as we know it," Hunt said.

"They are creating all this kind of as they go."

Strauss said the lack of a legal structure is making it difficult to invest in Russia. The government must pass laws dealing with taxes and bankruptcy, real property and intellectual property, he said.

"Western companies need that before they'll get more heavily involved than they are now," Strauss said.

Strauss, who was in Russia in December and plans to return in a few weeks, said despite pressure, prospects don't look good now for establishing the legal structure.

"There's nothing encouraging right now for anything in the immediate future, and I would add that there's no groundswell of public opinion that wants it," he said.

"They have sort of a mindset and an approach that the West is coming in to steal their assets and take them home," he said.

The current lure of launching petroleum ventures in places such as South America and Vietnam makes some of the problems seem less worthwhile, others in the industry said.

"The risk they run, frankly, is that Western capital finally will turn its back and go elsewhere," Strauss said.

Other Texas companies are talking now with former Soviet republics. Dallas-based Oryx Energy Corp., which is trying to negotiate a concession in Kazakhstan.

"Really, the attraction is very simple. The area over there seems to be highly productive in terms of potential discoveries. It's extremely underdeveloped, so that makes it very immature. And at that stage of the life cycle you're liable to find very large reserve deposits. It's quite the opposite of the U.S., where 95 percent of the world's wells have been drilled," Oryx spokesman John O'Keefe said.

Houston-based Marathon Oil Co. is part of a consortium hoping to develop a long-delayed, $10 billion project off Sakhalin Island. The project also involves Royal Dutch-Shell Group and two Japanese firms.

The company is still in negotiations, although an agreement was hoped by the end of 1993, Marathon spokesman Bill Ryder said.

Said Hunt: "I enjoy the people, I like the people very much. They are very much like us in a one-on-one situation. But they don't understand our system, and frankly, we don't understand theirs."

"Really, where we try and go is where there's a need — they want us and we have something to offer, and Russia sure fills that bill. And I'd say that's true in all kinds of lines, whether it be the oil and gas business, merchandising, manufacturing, whatever.

"The bottom line is, if they're going to join the market economy, they've got a total rebuilding to do," he said.

Alliance paves way for oil firms

PLANO, Texas (AP) — Q. What's a Russian doctor doing in a place like this?

A. Helping pave the way for American oil companies who want to drill in the former Soviet republic of Kazakhstan.

Frida Alperovich is president of the Texas-Kazakhstan Alliance, a 1½-year-old nonprofit organization dedicated to forging links of black gold between East and West.

"Basically, we are a business partnership. We are trying to find common ground," she said. "The major focus is to reach in-depth understanding as to how our companies can function in this oil-rich country that is so different."

Through the volunteer alliance, Dr. Alperovich organizes conferences and works with federal authorities in Kazakhstan and the 22 companies involved in the group.

"What we're trying to do is be extremely practical," she said. "As companies go deeper in this process, we're trying to address the issues that they're facing."

Due to different time zones, Dr. Alperovich sometimes talks to Kazhaks on the telephone through the night from her office in her family's new suburban home. But she says the personal touch works with a society reared to despise business.

"I myself, I can stop too to be surprised how effective it is," she said. "It's like Japan. You have to know how to deal with this country."

Dr. Alperovich came to the Dallas area in 1982, a surgeon and Jewish refusenik who emigrated from the city of Perm in the Ural Mountains, in the middle of Russia. She since has studied business at Southern Methodist University and formed a consulting firm of her own, Accord International.

Although Dr. Alperovich is not from Kazakhstan, she focuses on that region because she believes it offers tremendous opportunity and relative stability.

"I think that Kazakhstan today is the best place for our oil companies among the former Soviet republics," she said.

But the region still has difficulties. For instance, the government must establish laws for taxation and oil and gas and come up to an international standard of environmental protection, she said.

In addition, oil piped from the landlocked region must cross politically tricky borders. Kazakhstan, about four times the size of Texas and home to 17 million people, is isolated south of Russia and west of China.

Texas firms pursue various projects

DALLAS (AP) — Some of the projects Texas energy companies are pursuing in the former Soviet Union:

■ Petro-Hunt and Dresser Industries Inc., both of Dallas, in January entered into a protocol, agreeing in principle for a $50 million federal loan to start developing two large oil fields in eastern Russia. Petro-Hunt is teamed with two Russian government enterprises in the $1.4 billion, 13-year project, organized in early 1992.

■ Houston-based Enron Corp. and R.A.O. Gazprom, Russia's major natural gas company, have a framework agreement to develop new markets for Russian gas in Europe.

■ Exxon Corp. has established an operating affiliate, Exxon Ventures (CIS) Inc., in Moscow and an office in Kazhakstan. Exxon has projects offshore Russia's Sakhalin Island on the east coast and in Russia's Timan-Pechora Basin west of the Ural Mountains.

■ Snyder Oil Corp. of Fort Worth said in January it had reached an accord to receive up to $138 million from the U.S. government's Overseas Private Investment Corp. Snyder will work with a Russian state-owned company on the joint venture in the Volga-Urals Basin of the Perm region 800 miles east of Moscow.

■ Dallas-based Oryx Energy Corp. is negotiating to obtain a concession to the Arman Field in Kazhakstan.

Road to Kazakhstan oilfields was long journey for Chevron

N.Y. Times News Service

There is a sea of oil below the flat windswept desert of Kazakhstan, about 25 billion barrels, making it one of the largest oilfields in the world.

But Chevron is getting just a trickle out of the ground. And the oil it is getting is laden with poison and has a stench, making it difficult to handle and transport.

What could turn out to be a bonanza for Chevron remains as elusive as the nomadic horsemen who occasionally appear outside the barracks of the 3,500 workers who are helping Kazakhstan restore its shattered oil industry.

It may be many years before oil flows in large enough quantities to make a joint venture between Tengizchevroil, the state oil company, and Chevron pay off.

Chevron figures the partnership will spend about $20 billion over 40 years. By 2010, the partnership hopes to be pumping 700,000 barrels a day, bringing in about $4 billion in revenue a year at today's oil prices.

Chevron has shifted its exploration from areas abroad where oil reserves are promising but unproven, and from mature fields in the United States to known fields, such as Tengiz in Kazakhstan.

The challenge is not whether oil will be found, but how to get large quantities out of existing wells and ship the oil to world markets. After seven years, and after spending more than $300 million, Chevron is producing just about 30,000 barrels a day, although that is expected to grow to about 130,000 barrels soon.

Tengiz is a paradox. Its crude oil, the color of light honey, is perfect for gasoline. But it is also full of poisonous hydrogen sulfide, which must be removed at a special plant. Workers undergo safety training and carry gas masks.

The oil is also full of mercaptans, sulfur compounds that can cause a stench in the countryside if they leak from the pipeline. To be commercially viable, the crude must be transported through Russia, but the Russians limit shipments of the Kazakh oil in their pipelines because they don't have a recovery system to contain the vapors.

The partners want to build their own pipeline, at a huge cost, but there is a problem with where to build it. If it is connected to the existing Russian system, Chevron and its partner will remain hostage to expensive transport fees. Other routes would take it through risky areas, like Iran and Iraq.

While production has been restored at about 20 of the 85 wells originally drilled when Kazakhstan was part of the Soviet Union, oil from just 10 can be shipped because of the transport restrictions.

The multinational work force is made up mostly of Kazakhs, but there are many Russians, Hungarians and Americans.

The 250 workers from the United States are learning to live with the harsh conditions, where temperatures can reach 130 in summer and 40 below zero in winter. The wind blows powdery sand, making mouths gritty and contact lenses uncomfortable.

Abraxas Petroleum reports sharp increase in revenues

SAN ANTONIO — At a scheduled presentation at Southcoast Capital Corp.'s "Texas Growth Stock Conference" in Austin, Robert L.G. Watson, chairman of Abraxas Petroleum Corp., announced preliminary results for fiscal 1993.

The company reported revenues of $7.6 million, an increase of 181 percent over revenues for 1992. Operating income increased to $3.5 million, up from a loss of $81,000 in the prior year, and earnings before interest, taxes and depreciation climbed to $5.1 million, up 555 percent over 1992 levels.

Net cash flow was estimated at $2.6 million versus a loss of $46,000 for 1992.

For the year, Abraxas had net production of approximately 266,000 barrels of oil, an increase of 134 percent over 1992. The company also produced approximately 948,000 Mcf of gas, compared to 326,500 Mcf in the prior year, an increase of 190 percent. Watson noted that the increased revenue and production rates were primarily attributable to the April 1993 acquisition of producing properties located near Corpus Christi, the largest acquisition in the company's history.

Year-end reserve data was incomplete: however, Watson indicated that despite the dramatic drop in crude oil prices, overall reserve levels should improve due to aggressive exploitation and development activity and higher prices for natural gas.

As previously disclosed, reportable net income for fiscal 1993 was adversely affected by non-recurring, non-cash accounting revisions concerning the treatment of overriding royalty interests previously assigned to the company's lenders.

To implement the accounting revision, Abraxas recorded the estimated fair value of the overriding royalty interests (approximately $3,900,000) as deferred financing fees with a corresponding reduction to its full cost pool. For the year, the amortization of these deferred financing fees reduced net income by $2,360,000.

Reportable income was also affected by debt extinguishment charges of $1,325,000 which were incurred in connection with the $14 million reduction in long-term debt from proceeds of the company's common stock offering.

Together these two non-cash charges reduced income by $3,685,000. A portion of the non-cash charges were offset by non-recurring debt forgiveness income of $2,229,964 which was booked in the 1993 first quarter

How many light bulbs does it take to change a company?

The answer is one. Even one idea, one request, one challenge is enough to start new developments at GPM.

That's because GPM is open to change and responsive to the diverse needs of natural gas producers.

We've incorporated bright new ideas into our company's organizational structure, such as decentralizing to move our people nearer to the producers they serve. That means more face-to-face time and closer, more effective working relationships.

Take the recent construction of the highly Btu efficient Zia Plant in southeastern New Mexico. It was built in response to developing sweet gas volumes, and it has been so successful that we are now expanding the processing capacity.

Or consider our response to the challenge of a sour well in a sweet system. Instead of turning the producer away, we worked with him to develop an off-site treatment program and then moved the treated gas to the GPM plant for processing.

And those are just a few examples of how GPM turns ideas into advantages. For us and for our producers.

If you'd like to know more, call GPM at 915-368-1018 or 915-368-1059. You'll discover that while natural gas can't turn on light bulbs, light bulbs can turn on natural gas.

Kerr-McGee to explore offshore Ireland

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Ireland awarded Kerr-McGee Corp. a license to explore for oil and natural gas off its coast, the energy company said.

The frontier exploration license awarded by the Department of Transport, Energy and Communications covers more than 182,000 acres and includes three offshore blocks 60 miles of Ireland's west coast. The water depths are 540 to 920 feet.

Paula Davis, a spokeswoman for the Oklahoma City based company, said Kerr-McGee has done some seismic work. Any drilling would the company's first in Ireland.

Marathon replaces reserves

Staff Report

HOUSTON — Marathon Group announced that it replaced 90 percent of its worldwide oil and gas production in 1993 on a barrel-of-oil-equivalent basis, excluding sales of reserves.

Over the past five years, 1989 through 1993, Marathon has replaced 119 percent of its worldwide production with new reserves, excluding sales of reserves and the effect of TXO prior to its merger with Marathon Oil Co.

In 1993, Marathon's domestic operations replaced 103 percent of production on a BOE basis, and its international operations replaced 63 percent of production.

Total proved reserves at the end of 1993 were 1.5 billion BOE, which was comprised of 842 million barrels of liquid hydrocarbons and 3,748 billion cubic feet of natural gas. Domestic reserves comprise 62 percent of total reserves, with the worldwide mix being about 57 percent liquids, 43 percent natural gas.

Gas declared best buy

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The U.S. Department of Energy has again declared natural gas the "best buy" for residential energy customers, according to American Gas Association President Michael Baly.

"DOE's 1994 Representative Average Unit Costs of Energy for Five Residential Energy Sources clearly shows the price advantage for natural gas," Baly said. "For an equivalent amount of energy, 1 million Btu, the cost for natural gas is $6.04, compared with $24.65 for electricity, $7.60 for fuel oil, $10.76 for propane and $8.39 for kerosene."

The DOE price numbers, published in the Feb. 8, 1994 Federal Register, were effective on that date for use in the federal government's appliance labeling program "EnergyGuide" and for any representation or advertising done for covered equipment, which includes heat pumps, furnaces, water heaters, clothes dryers and kitchen ranges and ovens.

"Consumers should use this DOE information when making purchase decisions that could result in major savings over the life of the equipment," Baly said. "For example, AGA estimates that a homeowner with a 2,100 square-foot house in a moderately cold climate, like St. Louis, could save over $5,400 in heating bills over the life of the equipment by buying a high-efficiency natural gas furnace instead of an electric heat pump. Similarly, the homeowner could save $4,200 on fuel costs with the natural gas furnace rather than a high-efficiency oil furnace."

Baly said greater savings would occur in colder climates or when replacing older furnaces, whose efficiencies can be as low as 60 percent. Natural gas heating systems sold today have efficiencies ranging from 78 percent to over 96 percent, Baly said, which means that 78 to 96 percent of the energy going into the furnace is turned into usable heat for the customer — and major fuel savings.

"Choosing natural gas equipment will not only save customers money, but they also can be assured that natural gas is better for the environment than the other fuels and even electricity," Baly said. "Although electricity is very clean at its end-use, electric generating plants can be major contributors to air pollution. IF you track an energy form from its source all the way to the home, what we call the full energy cycle, natural gas is almost always cleaner.

Exxon tops state natural gas list

AUSTIN — Railroad Commission statistics show Amoco and Exxon to be the top oil and gas producers, respectively, in Texas for 1993, Commission Chairman James E. (Jim) Nugent, and Commissioners Mary Scott Nabers and Barry Williamson announced today.

Amoco led all oil producers for the year with an average daily production of 128,887 barrels, some 6.18 percent of all oil produced in the state. Exxon Company, took second place with an average daily production rate of 103,087 barrels, some 6.54 percent of total state production. Other companies in the top ten included Shell Western E&P Inc., 74,017 bpd (barrels per day), third; Texaco E&P Inc., 72,607 bpd, fourth; Chevron U.S.A. Inc., 59,170 bpd, fifth; Marathon Oil Company, 56,818 bpd, sixth; Mobil Producing TX & N.M. Inc., 54,686 bpd, seventh; Amerada Hess Corp., 49,073 bpd, eighth; Union Pacific Resources Company, 43,555 bpd, ninth; and Arco Oil & Gas Company, 32,940 bpd, tenth.

Exxon Corp. was the top Texas gas producer for the year, averaging 635,138 Mcf (thousand cubic feet) per day which represented 5.38 percent of total state production Mobil Producing TX & N.M. Inc., was second, averaging 619,072 Mcf per day, or 5.25 percent of all gas produced in the state.

Other companies included Shell Western E&P Inc., 514,627 Mcf, third; Enron Oil & Gas COmpany, 443,267 Mcf, fourth; Texaco E&P Inc., 432,930 Mcf, fifth; TransTexas Gas Corp., 422,039 Mcf, sixth; Chevron U.S.A. Inc., 375,043 Mcf, seventh; Phillips Petroleum Company, 321,139 Mcf, eighth; Union Pacific Resources Company, 320,099 Mcf, ninth; and Amoco Production Company, 254,121 Mcf, tenth.

Texas gas leads nation

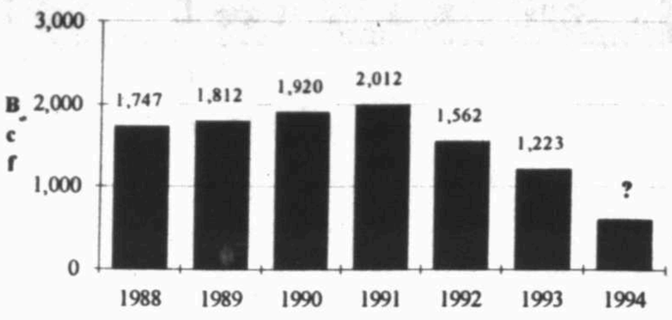

AUSTIN — "Texas not only led the nation in gas production in 1993, the state produced more gas than any year since 1988," Railroad Commissioner Mary Scott Nabers said today as she released natural gas production statistics. "We are at a five-year high and that is good economic news," Nabers said.

"We improved the 1993 volume of gas 3 percent over last year and that total may even increase as late production reports are filed," Nabers said.

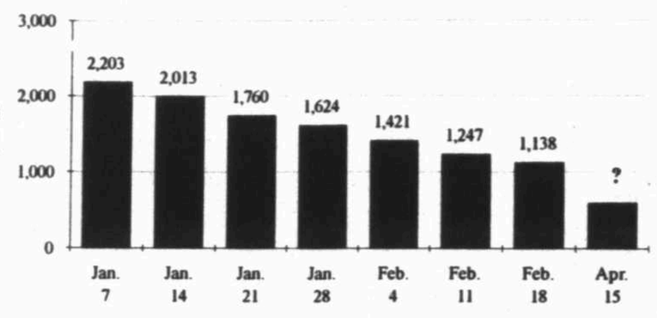

"At $2 for each MCF (thousand cubic feet) of gas, the 158 million additional MCF in 1993 is worth $316 million dollars more for Texas.

NATURAL GAS STORAGE

Historial Storage

Current Storage

At the start of heating season, in November 1993, gas storage was normal at 3,200 bcf. If normal winter pull downs in December, January, February and March continue storage could be under 1,000 bcf at the end of the heating season in April. Storage levels have dececreased since 1991 and could be very short in 1994.

Environmental laws close right-of-ways

■ Liability and endangered species laws put a damper on cooperation by pipelines

Staff Report

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Despite a willingness to open pipeline rights-of-way to recreational and ecological uses, natural gas companies are often prevented from doing so by liability and endangered species laws and a lack of incentives for small landowners to cooperate in special land-use programs says American Gas Association President Michael Baly.

These barriers are among the 62 findings in a comprehensive news report, "Greenways, Wildlife and Natural Gas Pipeline Corridors: New Partnerships for Multiple Use," by the Arlington, Va. - based Conservation Fund. The 150-page study was sponsored by the American Gas Foundation, the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation and several natural gas companies.

"The American Gas Foundation commissioned this study because our members are eager to find ways to put their rights-of-way to maximum public and environmental benefit," Baly said. "Rights-of-way have the potential to serve as a nation-wide network of recreational trails and a wildlife habitats that can connect distant ecological systems. This study is a first step toward reaching that goal."

Barriers identified include:

* the Endangers Species Act contains clear disincentives to those who might otherwise be encouraged to enhance habitat and increase the populations of endangered species;
* 97 percent of ground surface usage is controlled by private landowners, not by utility companies that lease the underground rights;
* federal and state agencies lack coordinated right-of-way usage policies; and
* state recreational land-use laws are inconsistent and outdated. The laws fail to protect landowners from lawsuits from individuals injured on their property.

"The study demonstrates how companies, despite these legal disincentives, are working in partnership with local communities and landowners to develop recreational greenways and wildlife enhancement projects," said Keith Hay, the author of the study.

These activities include:

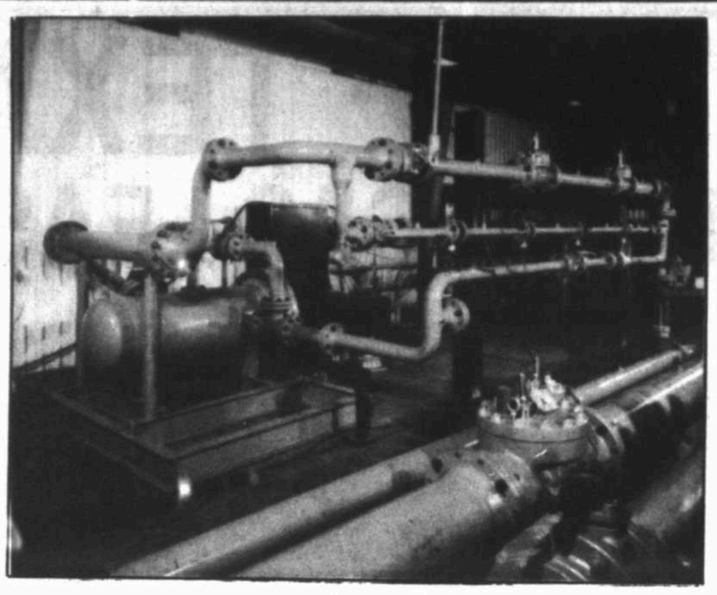

* 61 percent of the companies surveyed saved money by developing and using environmental guidelines in the siting of pipeline corridors;
* 25 percent of the companies surveyed are involved in cooperative wildlife or recreational projects on their rights-of-way;
* employees of 23 percent of the companies surveyed have volunteered for recreational or conservative projects on rights-of-way; and
* 53 percent of companies surveyed have ecologist on staff or regularly use consultants in these fields.

Valero closes sale of 3 million stock shares

SAN ANTONIO — Valero Energy Corp. announced the closing of the public sale of 3 million shares of convertible preferred stock at a price of $50 per share, or a total of $150 million.

The new stock will be entitled to receive dividends at tan annual rate of 6.25 percent, payable quarterly beginning June 1, 1994. Shares of the new stock are convertible to Valero common stock at a conversion price of $27.03.

Approximately $117.5 million of the net proceeds from the sale of the new preferred stock are expected to be utilized to fund the proposed acquisition ergy of the outstanding publicly traded common units of Valero Natural Gas Partners L.P. The remaining proceeds will be used for general corporate purposes.

HOUSTON — Daniel Flow Products has announced purchase by El Paso Natural Gas Co. of a complete prover loop to check and calibrate gas turbine meters.

The loop, designed in conjunction with El Paso Natural Gas and built by Daniel, allows El Paso Natural Gas to provide customers the most accurate flow-volume information possible as well as faster turnaround to maintenance of meters in service.

The complete system, using dual Daniel master meters, has completed factory acceptance testing and has been installed in El Paso.

FERC urged to control gathering

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Natural Gas Supply Association has told the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission that it should exercise its legally mandated authority over gathering performed by interstate pipeline affiliates. Such authority, NGSA pointed out, supports national policy goals to recover the maximum amount of domestic energy resources that can be used to meet the nation's economic and human needs.

Presenting producers' arguments were Richard Sharples, vice president of marketing, Anadarko Petroleum; Bruce Connell, senior counsel, Conoco; and William Benham, vice president, regulatory affairs, Amoco Production Co. They spoke at FERC's conference on gathering, which was precipitated when FERC last year chose to apply different standards to pipeline-affiliated gathering than to gathering performed by the pipeline itself.

Sharples disagreed with the contention of some pipelines that competition exist for gathering services and that therefore gathering should be deregulated. He pointed out several reasons why the existence of a a gathering system on a map may not indicate a producer's ability to connect a well to it:

* Producers need to hook wells to systems that operate at appropriated pressures. "The ability of a well to attract a competitive gatherer declines daily as the well declines," he said. "A well may be economically viable hooked to a system operating at a 60-pound pressure but not if the gathering system operates at 100 pounds."
* Once wells are connected, it is rare that they can be reconnected because of the shortened time over which a potential new gatherer could amortize an investment.
* A pipeline has the potential to make gas aggregated by its affiliate simpler to buy than gas aggregated by others, thus frustrating the competitive directions of Order 636.

Sharples noted that NGSA supports reduced regulation in response to competition. "But producers have never advocated that the Commission reduce its regulations when competition does not exist," he said, pointing out that producers often find themselves in the same position as residential natural gas consumers, who are able to connect to only one local distribution company even though, nationwide, hundreds exist.

Connell noted that the law does not permit FERC to refuse to exercise full jurisdiction over pipeline-affiliated gathering. "Jurisdiction is crucial," he said, "because pipeline affiliates may have incentives to sacrifice throughput - and thus thwart producer and consumer interest - if they can maximize revenues through higher rates."

Benham pointed to the problems producers would experience if FERC reduced regulation on gathering systems over which it now exercises jurisdiction. "Many gathering agreements reference or pre-suppose FERC-established rates; permitting pipeline affiliates to change rates without the existence of competitive forces would be completely unreasonable," he said.

Benham also pointed to the large number of methods available for pipeline affiliates to meet competition, both by discounting rates and creating upgraded services. "Often, prior FERC approval in these situations is unnecessary," Benham said, while noting that FERC oversight is needed to ensure that affiliates don't use their relationships with interstate pipelines to freeze out competitive proposals unfairly.

"Let's face it," Benham concluded. "This conference is really about the ability of pipeline to spin down their gathering systems and charge higher rates. If that happens, consumers will pay - either directly, through higher prices, or indirectly-through a supply reduction - if producer net-backs are undetermined."

The Natural Gas Supply Association represents companies that produce and market over 90 percent of the domestic natural gas consumed annually. Established in 1965, NGSA encourages expanded use of natural gas and a regulatory climate that fosters competitive markets.

U.S., Canada join in gas marketing

The American Gas Association and the Canadian Gas Association are linking up this year to present a first-of-its-kind AGA/CGA joint marketing conference in Philadelphia, focusing on potential innovations for hundreds of natural gas industry marketing executives.

"Independence From Traditional Marketing" will be the theme of the conference, to be held April 6-8 at the Philadelphia Doubletree Hotel in lieu of AGA's "traditional" marketing conference.

Among the program highlights are a choice of four possible tours of different natural gas applications in the Philadelphia area, presentations by a variety of natural gas industry and marketing experts and a natural gas customer panel featuring Thomas Bathgate, president, Pennel Wiltberger; Robert Curgenven, engineering manager, Nestle Canada Inc.; and Jackson Mueller Jr., director of energy, Simpson Paper.

The tours are scheduled for April 7 at 1 p.m. The scheduled options are visits to the Philadelphia Convention Center's cooling facility, to the Simpson Paper Co., to the Eddystone electric generating station and to the natural gas vehicle fueling facility in Plymouth Meeting, Pa.

The featured speakers will include Timothy Gardner, principal, Venture Associates/Arthur Andersen; R. Quin Gardner, CEO, Senergy; Angus Reid, chairman and CEO, Angus Reid Group Inc.; John Wittenbraker, vice president, Arbor Inc.; and an encore presenter from last year's AGA marketing conference, Loretta Malandro, a university professor and president of Malandro Communcations.

There will also be a variety of break-out sessions focusing on such topics as the upcoming commercial introduction of a residential natural gas heating and cooling system.

Oryx cuts workforce

DALLAS (AP) — Hit by slumping oil prices, Oryx Energy Co. plans to cut 300 jobs — one-fifth of its work force — and sell some assets to reduce its expenses at least $61 million per year.

The independent oil and gas company said Thursday it will slash its onshore fields from 300 in 19 states to 150 fields in six states.

The company expects to take a charge for the downsizing of about $103 million, $71 million of which will come from estimated losses on the sale of assets.

"We are determined to have our cost structure be more in line with current product prices. Therefore, we will, and must continue to find ways to lower our cost of doing business," Robert Hauptfuhrer, Oryx chairman and chief executive officer, said in a statement.

Oryx expects to save $61 million in 1995 from the moves, nearly half in operating costs. Production for 1995 is expected to drop by about 2 percent of the 1994 level.

Oryx cut its work force by 40 percent during a major restructuring in 1991. Since then, the company said it has cut costs by $420 million, or 27 percent. Oryx also has reduced its debt over the past few years by $1.4 billion, or nearly half.

Maxus Energy Corp. said it would eliminate the jobs of five senior executives as it seeks to cope with low oil prices and a $900 million debt. More jobs could be lost as Maxus works to reduce operating expenses and corporate overhead by $35 million this year.

Heating oil sales soar in Janurary

WASHINGTON — Deliveries of distillate fuel (home heating oil and diesel fuel) — a key measure of demand — increased 30.2 percent in January compared to the same month of 1993, the American Petroleum Institute reported.

According to API's "Monthly Statistical Report", "extremely cold weather in many parts of the Northeast and Midwest helped to push deliveries to over 4 million barrels a day." However, "even after accounting for the direct and indirect effects of the cold, the year-to-year increase still appears larger than might have been expected."

Demand for other petroleum products also rose in January, API said. For the month, demand for all petroleum products averaged 18,227,000 barrels a day, an increase of 11.7 percent over the same moth a year ago.

Meanwhile, domestic crude oil production, which had been declining steadily for many months, stabilized in January. For the month, domestic crude oil production averaged 6,940,000 barrels a day, compared to 6,937,000 barrels a day in January 1993.

Despite the rise in domestic demand for petroleum products and sharp increases in imports in November and December, total imports — crude oil plus petroleum products — declined in January compared to a year ago. For the month, total imports averaged 7,831,000 barrels a day. This was 1.7 percent less than the 7,964,000 barrels a day imported in January 1993.

Among other highlights of the report:

- Demand for gasoline in January averaged 6,985,000 barrels a day, a rise of 3.5 percent over the 6,746,000 barrels a day demand of January 1993.
- Demand for kerosine jet fuel averaged 1,486,000 barrels a day.

Arco safety manual available in Spanish

Arco Permian, a unit of Atlantic Richfield Co. based in Midland, has announced the completion of a Spanish language version of its Safety Manual.

Arco Permian President A.J. Best said, "This project is in keeping with our goal to improve and enhance workplace safety for both our employees and contractors."

Plans to develop a Spanish language version of the Safety Manual were laid in late 1992, and the need was reinforced by input from a contractor's survey conducted in the Hobbs, N.M. area in mid-1993.

Project Manager was Joaquin Martines, former Western District Safety Director. Translation services were provided by Marjorie Ulmo.

"The task was more difficult than we first envisioned. There are oil field items and terminology that have no direct translation; and Marjorie and I had to search and really be innovative to find the best match that the field personnel would understand," said Martines.

The Spanish language Safety Manuals will be distributed to employees and contractors through Arco Permian's area production offices in Odessa, Denver City and Longview, Texas, Sheep Mountain, Co. and Hobbs, N.M.

SPE section presents annual improved recovery symposium

Staff Report

TULSA — The Ninth Symposium on Improved Oil Recovery cosponsored by the Mid-Continent section of the Society of Petroleum Engineers and the U.S. Department of Energy is set for April 17-20 at the Tulsa Convention Center.

The symposium, with a history of providing a thorough and provocative venue for technology transfer, will bring together the viewpoints of governments, major and independent oil producers and domestic and international operators. The potential for improved oil recovery is key to revitalizing the U.S. oil industry.

The 100-paper program covers technical and economic aspects of improved oil recovery efforts during the three days of sessions.

An opening plenary session Monday morning, April 18, features an international panel of experts from government and industry who will address the meeting's theme "IOR: Near-term Action and Long-term Strategy."

Invitations to speak have been extended to Secretary Hazel O'Leary of the U.S. Department of Energy and Denise Bode, president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America.

Joining them will be Leif Hinderaker, the RUTH program manager for the Norwegian Petroleum Directorate and Cecil M. Morgan, vice-president of Texaco E&P Technology. Also, there will be an independent producers forum Tuesday covering improved oil recovery technology, tax incentives, and environmental concerns.

The symposium will have an exhibition featuring companies displaying an outstanding array of products and services relating to exchanged oil recovery processes.

Monday's recognition luncheon will honor two pioneers who have dedicated a large part of their lives to the advancement of enhanced recovery processes. Luncheon keynote speaker will be Scott Sheffield, president and CEO of Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. He will discuss the development and growth of the company through acquisitions and exploitation of producing properties.

Four short courses will precede the symposium Saturday and Sunday, April 16 and 17, in the Doubletree Hotel Downtown. Course topics are EOR Fundamentals Pitfalls to Avoid in Designing Basic and EOR Facilities, Risk Analysis for the Petroleum Industry, and Miscible Flooding.

SPE is the largest international technical and professional association for engineers and managers involved in petroleum drilling, exploration and production.

AGA presents gas-powered van to Washington non-profit group

WASHINGTON, D.C. — To commemorate its 75th anniversary, the American Gas Association has presented a natural gas-powered Chrysler van to Bread for the City, a non-profit organization in Washington that provides low income residents with food, clothing and social services. The van also contained food donated by the AGA staff for the agency.

"The AGA staff felt very strongly that, because community service is the cornerstone of the gas industry, we should celebrate our 75 anniversary with a contribution to our community," said AGA President Michael Baly. "Our search for a deserving organization led us to Bread for the City and the outstanding work it does. Our gift of a clean natural gas van will ensure that the organization, while adding so much to people's lives, will add as little as possible to the air they breathe."

Baly said the Chrysler van produces fewer tailpipe emissions than any mass-produced vehicle ever certified in California under the most stringent standards in the country. Its carbon monoxide and other emissions are as much as 90 percent lower than conventional gasoline vehicles, he said.

"Because this natural gas van is believed to be the first one permanently based in the District of Columbia, it may be the cleanest vehicle in America's capital city," Baly said. "That's appropriate because Bread for the City's special work deserves a special means of getting it done."

Rev. Charlie Parker, executive director of Break for the City accepted the keys to the van and thanked AGA for its gift.

"Bread for the City, our sister organization, the Zacchaeus Free Clnic, and our 350 volunteers provide food, clothing, social work and medical care to 50,000 low-income D.C. residents every year. This van will enable us to pick up and deliver food and clothing throughout the city, while also making a contribution to cleaner air in our community. We are very grateful to the AGA employees, who selected Bread for the City as the van recipient, and we are excited about the potential for our new partnership."

Parker said the van will augment Bread for the City's current fleet of two vans that are six and 18 years old. The new van will refuel at a natural gas pump at an Amoco station on Capitol Hill, through arrangements with Washington Gas.

AGA is a trade association composed of 275 natural gas utilities and pipeline companies in the U.S., Mexico and Canada.

Arch Petroleum participates in 3-D project

Staff Report

FORT WORTH — Arch Petroleum Inc. announces its involvement in a 3-D exploration project in Stonewall County, Texas.

Arch owns a 60 percent working interest (48 percent net revenue interest) and is operator of the project, which covers approximately 47 square miles, or 30,800 acres.

Stonewall County is located in the Permian Basin, which is Arch's primary area of oil and gas operations.

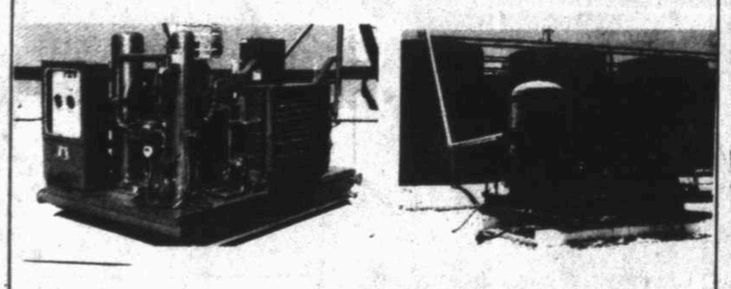

Other working interest owners include L. Frank Pitts, an independent operator located in Dallas, and Output Exploration Company, Inc., a subsidiary of Input/Output, Inc., a manufacturer of seismic equipment.

The primary objective is the Pennsylvanian age Canyon Reef at an average depth of 5,600 feet, from which two adjacent fields have produced over 3 million barrels of oil. However, twelve different zones are productive in the area of the prospective acreage.

The initial phase of the exploration program will consist of a 3-D seismic survey to help delineate the various potential productive horizons on the acreage. This exploration technique has been successfully utilized in the area to identify several Pennsylvania age reef reservoirs which are currently producing.

Following data acquisition, scheduled to commence during March, the data will be analyzed and interpreted. Drilling prospects will then be developed, and drilling is expected to commence in the fourth quarter of 1994.

Rig activity

Rotary rig activity continued to slump during the week ended March 18, according to Smith International Inc.'s Smith Tool Activity Tracking System. According to the STATS, there was a total of 778 rigs active during the week, down 18 from the previous week but up 14.7 percent from 678 a year ago. There were 702 rigs drilling, down two from last week but up 17.8 percent from 596 drilling last year. There were 76 rigs rigging up, down 16 from the previous week and 7.3 percent below the 82 rigging up last year.

Ethanol proposal draws criticism

EPA's proposed mandate that 10 percent of reformulated gasoline starting in 1995 must contain ethanol, a corn derivative, draws strong criticism:

■ The mandate is opposed by the Sierra Club, Environmental Defense Fund (EDF), the California Energy Commission, the California Air Resources Board (CARB), the American Recreation Coalition as well as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers just to name a few organizations. The EDF says the mandate would "exacerbate the very problems it seeks to solve." The Sierra Club says the EPA "fails to establish any air quality benefit from the renewable oxygenate mandate."

■ The mandate could increase the cost of producing reformulated gasoline.

POTENTIAL: New markets sought

(From 3E)

Gulf Coast or Florida for use in fertilizer.

While Appel and Scharf are not involved in the marketing end of the company's operations, they said they see use of natural gas and perhaps propane as a transportation fuel increasing, particularly in cities with high levels of air pollution.

"They're always coming out with new things in the press," noted Scharf. "Now they're looking at liquified natural gas in locomotives. We think there will continue to be uses for natural gas and natural gas liquids developed primarily as a result of pressure for clean air, and also as we continue to provide or put in place new pipelines, we can get the product into new markets."

HANOVER COMPRESSORS, a Houston-based company that opened a Midland office two and a half years ago, judges growth in the industry through its work with producers needing compressor systems.

And Joe Bradford, Hanover vice president, said he has seen a definite swing towards natural gas.

"The industry will be good for the next 10 years, maybe more. I don't see any great incline all at once, but I see a gradual incline," he said.

This he attributes to stable prices and the ability of natural gas to help improve air quality and displace coal plants. And he said he sees growth in demand for natural gas, as a transportation fuel, with more and more CNG stations being installed, and for use by manufacturing plants.

Bradford said he has observed extensive gas drilling in Wyoming and Utah as well as in the Permian Basin.

Hanover deals in rental, production equipment, sales and leasebacks, with its main focus on natural gas compressors used in gathering systems and wellhead compression. Bradford said his territory covers Texas and New Mexico and he is working to establish a market in Farmington, N.M. with Midland as the hub.

Other facilities are in Broussard, La., Fort Smith, Ark., Oklahoma City and Victoria, Texas as well as Houston and Longview.

While he has had little involvement, Bradford said the company is looking to develop an international market.

To HANS HANSEN, a Midland gas consultant, natural gas's principal market has to be power generation.

"Power generation is the big thing where we can displace coal in particular and maybe fuel oil in some instances. A lot of plants already have dual fuel capability and right now some are burning fuel oil in preference to natural gas because fuel oil is cheaper."

A question mark for the industry, he said, is the way gathering systems will be treated under FERC Order 636.

"That could hurt the producer somehow if it reduces net back to the producer markedly because of whatever rules they come out with on gathering systems. We have people in this area who have bought gathering systems that have become a profit center for them. To the producer, every charge he has to pay extra over what he would ordinarily pay for gathering, that will reduce his payouts and the number of wells he can drill."

Growth is slow, he concluded, but the natural gas industry is seeing favorable things happening for it.

Shawn Smith demonstrates that windy, wide-open West Texas is a natural for stunt kites.

Shawn Smith uses dual handles to control the stunt kite.

A stunt kite of durable nylon can be bought for a little as $50.

Go Fly a Kite

Some parts of the world look for the first robin or the first daffodil as sure signs that spring is on the way, but here in West Texas the first sign of spring is the sky blossoming with kites.

One thing you can count on in this area is that in spring, the winds are going to blow. And in true "if you can't beat 'em, join 'em" fashion, area residents like to put windy weather to good use by flying kites.

Shawn Smith of Midland has been flying stunt kites "off and on for about 10 years," he said. "I was in a park in Lubbock and I saw some people flying a kite similar to the one I was flying the other day (shown in photos), and I found out where they could be purchased."

Flying his kite is something he does for fun, Smith said. "Springtime is the best time because you get a lot of wind."

Smith said the major difference between stunt kites and most other kites that can be purchased at stores is that stunt kites have two lines and the more common kites have only one.

"That allows you to control it," he said. "They are a little more expensive."

Flying kites can be an adventure, Smith said. "I personally like to really put things to the test. When it really gets windy is when I like to do it.

"Winds over 30 (miles per hour) make it pretty much impossible to control it (the kite). ... It (the kite) moves fast and keeps you on your toes. I get an adrenalin rush out of it.

"A lot of it for me is pushing it to the limit — see what I can do with it. And I get some release out of it (kite flying). It's a stress reliever" and "just really enjoyable."

Human beings have always been fascinated with flight — who hasn't dreamed of flying with the birds? But since independent

HAVE YOU HEARD?

Concert features country music

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

Subscribers to Midland Community Concerts Association's 1993-94 series were delightfully entertained last Sunday afternoon at Midland High School with a country music revue, entitled "The Tennessee Waltz."

McKnight-Harrison

An exuberant troupe of eight young singers and dancers, backed by a six-piece band, presented a fast-paced, high energy show that mesmerized the audience for over two hours.

The production featured lively music, gentle ballads, comedy and country dancing. There were songs made famous by many of the founding stars of country music, as well as the hits of today's hottest performers.

"Country music began on porches and in front yards of homes in early, rural America," performer and technical coordinator Ross Horn related in a pre-curtain speech. "It tells of good times, bad times and all the times in between. Feel free to clap your hands, stomp your feet and dance in the aisles if you wish." And with that, the curtains parted and the show was off and running.

The performers gathered in the lobby afterwards to mingle with the audience and sign autographs.

Among those spotted in the packed auditorium were Frances Walker with guests, former Midlander Ada Marie Frederking and her husband, Albert, of Nashville, Ill.; Mary Elizabeth (Mrs. Frank) Ittner, Teddy (Mrs. William) Moisio, Mary and Joe Antonelli and Mary Jo (Mrs. Tom) Sawyer.

A MOTHER-DAUGHTER shower recently honored two-month-old Sarah Jane Kisner, the daughter of Jane and Brad Kisner and sister of two-year-old Evan Kisner.

Guests were asked to bring ribbons and hair bows to help start a collection for the infant, who was born on Jan. 13.

The party was held in the home of Susan (Mrs. Russell) Hall and was co-hosted by her daughter, Jennifer, along with Laurie (Mrs. Bart) Wolf and her daughter, Hannah.

Among the guests were Linda (Mrs. Jim) Hicks and Sarah; Mrs. Maggie Artley, her daughter, Susan (Mrs. Rick) Moore, and granddaughter, Lindsay; Candace (Mrs. Dale) Wilson and Sarah, Jill (Mrs. Dave) Roberson and Julie, and Mrs. Hall's mother, Maxine (Mrs. Wilson) Good.

A special guest was Mrs. Kisner's sister, Nancy (Mrs. Mike) Farrington of St. Joseph, Mich., who was visiting here with her son, Alex.

VIRGINIA KEATON of Stanton was honored on her 95th birthday recently with a party at the home of Mary Belle Keaton. Thirty-one family members and friends attended from Stanton, Midland and San Angelo.

Virginia was born in Almyra, Ark., on March 17, 1899, to Mollie and Sam Byers. She married Lee Keaton on Sept. 25, 1915, in DeWitt, Ark. The couple had five children, Sibyl North of Stanton, Bernie Keaton and Imogene Weatherby, both of Midland, and Wayne Keaton and Donald Keaton, both deceased. In addition, there are two grandsons, one granddaughter, two great-grandsons and one great-great grandson.

Virginia lived in Arkansas County until 1953 when she moved to Stanton.

The birthday celebrant, who has been a homemaker all her life, continues to do her own cooking, housework, yard work and gardening. She is a member of the First Baptist Church of Stanton.

THAT INDEFATIGABLE GROUP of women, who are members of the Midland A&M Mothers' Club, recently met for their final work session before Parents' Weekend at Texas A&M University next month.

The well-known Aggie spirit prevailed as the moms gathered with scissors and Elmer's Glue in the Activities Building of First Baptist Church to make ornaments. They will be for sale at the Federation of Texas A&M University Mothers' Clubs Boutique, which will be open both April 15 and 16 as part of the weekend's activities.

Under the supervision of projects chairman Nancy (Mrs. Richard) Barnes of Odessa, a number of items had been previously completed for the event. Night shirts, lap desks, blankets, wooden angels, costumed teddy bears and the infamous Aggie gavels are among the items that the local group will have for sale. Additional monies will be raised through raffle ticket donations for a ladies Aggie sweater vest.

Proceeds will be returned to A&M to benefit many of the organizations to which our Aggies belong.

Among those taking part in the work evening were Mary Ann (Mrs. Steve) Blaylock, Allene (Mrs. James) Mashburn, Linda (Mrs. David) Whitaker, Jennifer (Mrs. Dan) Colwell and Rita (Mrs. Kent) Hanlan.

And those of us who don't think of ourselves as "crafty" were issued a special invitation to attend to offer moral support!

KITES: Spring great time for kites flight is impossible for people, flying with kites may be the next best thing.

In their book, "Kit Craft," Lee Scott Newman and Jay Hartley Newman write that "How the kite was discovered is a matter for conjecture. Perhaps a farmer lost his hat on a windy day, or a mariner's sail escaped in the breeze. ... In any case, we sense that the kite resulted from the random observation of objects acted upon by a natural phenomenon, and because the phenomenon is the wind — uncontrollable, perhaps unfathomable — early observers and kitemakers felt a very special, spiritual relationship with this toy or tool which allowed them to become a part of such a distant and powerful force."

Clive Hart, writing in his book, "Kites: An Historical Survey," agrees: "However it originated, the kite rapidly acquired religious, magical and ceremonial significance in many of those parts of the world to which it spread. In at least some civilizations, including the Polynesian, kites seem to have had some function as symbols of an external soul. They were closely associated with deities and heroes, and were a means of contact with heavenly regions."

HART BELIEVES that kites actually originated in China, and spread to other parts of the world. "Because of the uncertain boundary between kites and other flying machines, it is not easy to decide what may be the earliest reference to kites in China. Kites made of wood or cloth may have existed there over 2,000 years ago, but the term 'paper kite' which is sometimes used of them in the literature is anachronistic, since rag-paper was not invented until A.D. 105."

Kites have been used for such practical purposes as fishing, transporting firework displays, hauling vehicles, spying and other military purposes, making music, and conducting scientific experiments — including the one done by Benjamin Franklin in which he used a kite, a key and a thunderstorm to discover the electricity in lightning.

Today, most kite-flying is done just for fun. Nearly every weekend in the spring — and at nearly every park or open field in town — you can find children and adults alike putting the West Texas wind to good use with kites.

"I myself don't particularly care for windy days, but I found a way I can enjoy it," Smith said.

Kite-making kits can be purchased at many stores and hobby shops, but many people prefer to make their own. Kites come in all shapes, sizes and colors, and can be created from unique designs.

THE SIMPLEST to make is the classic and familiar diamond-shaped kite. Eve Barwell and Conrad Bailey, in their book, "How to Make and Fly Kites," gave these instructions on the best materials for building a kite:

"Most kite-making materials can be found around the house. Make kites out of the lightest covers and sticks possible, since kites fly better when they are lighter.

Kites can be made with cloth or paper covers, but some other materials might be suitable, including brown paper, crepe paper, wrapping paper, newspaper, shelf paper, tissue paper, wallpaper, silk or artificial silk, tightly-woven cotton, lining material, plastic sacks and plastic wrap (preferably in colors).

Evo-stik glue can be used on most of these kite-making materials; however, when using plastics, polythene and plastic wrap, some kind of tape might be easier.

Sticks must be balanced and light. Test their balance by marking the center of each stick and balancing it across a hand-held pencil. If one end dips lower than the other, trim a little off with a knife. Sticks can be made of balsa wood, batons or dowelling, bamboo canes, garden sticks, old umbrella spokes or just ordinary sticks from trees or bushes.

Any thin, light string or cord can be used to make kites."

IN "THE COMPLETE Book of Kites and Kite Flying," Will Yolen gives instructions on building the common diamond-shaped kite:

"This is the classic kite design, the anonymously created shape that has been flown for generations and has withstood the test of time. It really needs no introduction."

The equipment needed, he wrote, is one flat stick, ½x⅜x36 inches; one flat stick, ½x¾x30-inches; one 30x36-inches sheet of light paper or light plastic; about 20 feet of string; and glue.

Notch each end of both sticks, deep enough for a width of string to fit in firmly. Wrap the string firmly around the sticks a few times, just below the notches, and cover with glue to prevent splitting. Place the shorter stick horizontally across the longer stick at about seven inches below the top (the shorter stick should be about 15 inches long on either side of the longer one) and tie the two sticks together at that point with a piece of string; cover the tie with glue. This makes the kite's frame.

Run string around the frame, beginning at the top. This string should run through each of the four notched ends of the sticks to form the kite's outline. Make sure the string is taut without being so tight that it warps the frame. Tie a piece of string around the outside of each stick end once the framing string is in place.

PLACE THE KITE frame on a piece of kite surface material (cloth, paper or plastic) and cut the material with a margin of ½- to ¾-inch around the framing string, keeping the notched ends exposed. Spread glue or paste on the flaps and fold them over the framing string. Let the glue dry.

Make a bridle to keep the kite steady. Attach a string to the two notched ends of the short stick (horizontal stick), and run it across the kite at the place where the sticks cross, leaving about six inches of slack. Attach a second string along the length of the kite and tie it to the notched ends of the long stick so it has about six inches of slack where the sticks cross and can be tied to the cross string length of string at that point. These two strings make the bridle. Attach the kite line to the bridle at the point where the strings cross and are tied together.

Use scraps of cloth or similar light material to make a tail at the bottom of the kite. More scraps of cloth can be added to lengthen the tail if needed, depending on how much length and weight are needed to give the kite performance and stability in the available wind.

Smith, the stunt kite flyer, suggested that persons interested learning more about how to "go fly a kite" can contact "Into the Wind" catalog company of Boulder, Colo., 1-800-541-0314.

AT WIT'S END

Automation takes everyone for a ride

By Erma Bombeck

I climbed into a rental car recently, and as my husband turned on the motor a seat belt came from the door and automatically crushed my windpipe.

This is just another near-death experience supporting the theory that automation may not kill you, but it sure can slow you down.

Bombeck

How many stories have we heard of people who frequent the ugly teller for money and end up with the machine devouring their card, or a crook relieves them of their withdrawal at gunpoint?

We have an electric garage door that has two switches, one inside the garage and the other a remote that we carry in our car. When we forget to put the remote in the car, my husband plays a dangerous game of flipping the switch in the garage and running in a crouched position to beat the door. It's like something out of James Bond.

I could tell you horror stories of driving into a bank to make a deposit from my car only to discover I do not have the arms of an orangutan. This means I have to open the door, get one foot on the ground, and with my head and shoulders hanging out of the window try to reach the drawer. Watching me is the hottest ticket in town.

Automation is supposed to make us more efficient. Instead of all those employed people standing around, we can operate elevators with recordings. Or if you want a cup of coffee, all you have to do is push a button and watch helplessly as the cup fails to eject and boiling liquid spills onto your feet.

The scariest ride you'll ever take is the tram in Atlanta (or any other airport that has one). A non-human voice that sounds like a C.D. being played on the wrong speed tells you to stay clear of the door. You have two seconds to get your body past the doors or you will die.

Coming home from California last week, I dropped by an airport restroom. In my stall, I wrestled with my jumpsuit, and in doing so the belt fell into the commode. Before I could retrieve it, the automatic flusher sucked it away and into the sewers of San Jose. I held my hands under the automatic water tap and went for a paper towel. I turned in time to see my handbag fall into the sink and activate the water. It proceeded to drown.

When I gave my soggy ticket to the flight attendant, she wrung it out and asked, "What happened?"

I said, "You don't want to know."

Cancer patients should insist on pain relief, nursing expert says

By Ruth SoRelle
Hearst News Service

TUCSON, Ariz. — Teaching cancer patients that they have a right to pain relief might help physicians overcome their reluctance to provide it, a nursing expert says.

Despite at least 10 years of research showing that cancer patients are in pain and do not get the relief they need, doctors are still reluctant to prescribe appropriate medication, said Dr. Sandra Ward, associate director for nursing research at the University of Wisconsin Comprehensive Cancer Center in Madison. Ward spoke Tuesday during the American Cancer Society's science writers seminar here.

"In some instances, we have seen that when patients demand a change, physicians respond," Ward said.

Ward plans a year-long experiment teaching patients what kind of pain control is possible and what they can expect. She hopes this will end a "vicious cycle" of patients who do not ask for pain medication and doctors do not provide it, Ward said.

"We may have made some small dents in the problem, but we are not making very fast progress," she said.

Recently, the federal Agency for Health Care Policy and Research issued cancer pain control guidelines that addressed the medical profession's failure to deal with cancer pain, finding that it occurs most frequently when patients are children, elderly or members of racial or ethnic minority groups.

Ward said patients are hesitant to ask for pain medications because they fear becoming addicted or that the drugs will be less effective if they are used too soon. They are also afraid of side effects and think that cancer and pain are natural twins, she said.

Some want to be good patients and not bother doctors. Others feel that if they distract the doctor by asking for pain relief, the physician cannot concentrate on finding a cure for their disease. Others do not want to admit they suffer, she said, because it means their disease is getting worse. And some do not like the pain of injections.

Most of these objections are either untrue or can be easily overcome, she said.

'White Train' was luxurious

Associated Press

BOSTON — One of the most celebrated trains of the railroads' steam era was the New England Limited, better known as The White Train.

In 1885, this distinctive express train with white and gold luxury coaches covered the 213 miles between Boston and New York in six hours.

On its first run, the engine crews wore white overalls and hats, and even the coal in the tender was whitewashed.

In addition to a dining car, The White Train featured Pullman parlor cars furnished with velvet carpets, mirrors, silk draperies and white silk curtains. The chairs were upholstered in old gold plush.

It was costly to keep The White Train white, and it was taken out of service in 1895.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Iris is favorite of many West Texas gardeners

By Deborah A. Benge

Without a doubt the bearded iris is one of the best flowering perennials to ever grace a West Texas garden. In fact, shame on you if you don't have at least a modest clump somewhere in your landscape.

Benge

Though there are many different types of iris, there's none as tough, tenacious and strikingly beautiful as the bearded. It can take our dry, alkaline soils, summer heat and winter cold, and still give an outstanding display of luscious color in the spring.

Like many perennials the iris' bloom period is just not long enough to suit most greedy gardeners. But with careful planning you can have iris blooms from March through May by selecting varieties from the early-, mid- and late-blooming iris groups.

A really nice characteristic of the iris is its bold fan of leaves, which serve as an excellent vertical accent. So even when it's not in bloom, the foliage stays fresh and attractive to give good form for the entire growing season.

Not only is the iris tough, but it requires very little attention. Tender loving care can mean death for one of these beauties. Too much water, too much fertilizer and planting too deep are the main ways to sabotage a clump of iris.

Iris have no shortage of mouth-watering color. From a jet black to pure white, color is covered. Fantastic pinks, blues, purples, lavenders, golds, yellows, apricots, coppers, reds — fact is, I can't think of a color you'd want that's not available. And there's combinations of colors — plicatas, stripes, bi-colors and more.

Grown from a rhizome root, the bearded iris multiplies fairly rapidly. A rhizome is a modified stem that grows horizontally and gives rise to new shoots. With some care and good growing conditions, irises will require dividing about once every three years. If you've got a bed of iris that bloom less and smaller each year, it's probably crowded and needs dividing.

The bearded iris doesn't need highly fertile or amended soils, so it's not real picky about soils in that respect. It does have some demands — good soil drainage and preferably a sunny location.

Even though it's not a demanding flower, it's a good idea to add organic matter to improve soil structure and drainage prior to planting. At the same time, you could add a pre-plant fertilizer like a 10-10-10 at one to two pounds per 100 square feet of bed rate.

Plant almost any time, but the ideal time is late summer/fall and the second best is early spring. Plant healthy, generous rhizomes and shun any that are rotted or shriveled. Plant at least three of the same type in a triangle-shaped clump with 10 to 12 inches between each. Plant rhizomes with the top just barely covered with soil. Planting too deep will result in rotting or poor blooming. Water in and keep soil moist (not wet) until established. Irises are fairly drought tolerant, but keep soil moist when new growth starts in the spring until after blooming is completed.

If you've got established irises, you may want to fertilize them in the spring when you see daffodils begin to bloom. Without a soil sample use a complete fertilizer like a 10-10-10 followed with a good irrigation. Avoid a high nitrogen fertilizer because it can cause rank vegetative growth and little blooming.

At this time of year be on the lookout for aphids. Aphids (small jelly-belly looking insects) feeding on the newly emerging leaves and flower buds can cause tissue distortion.

If you've got some good-looking irises, plan on showing them at one of the local iris shows. There are two local iris societies and shows. The Permian Basin Iris Show will be April 23 at the Holiday Inn Parkway in Odessa, and the West Texas Iris Show will be April 30 at the Kings Way Center (formerly Dellwood Mall) in Midland. Entry times are 8-10 a.m.; judging is 10 a.m.-12:30 p.m.; and show times are 12:30-5 p.m. For more information call 697-3814.

Learn how to get your irises ready for show (I've learned you don't just go pluck one and stick it in a wet tissue!!) by attending one of these American Iris Society affiliates' April meetings. The WTIS meets 7:30 p.m. the first Thursday of the month at 1704 W. Kentucky in Midland, and the PBIS meets 7 p.m. the first Tuesday of the month at 5014 Johnson Road in Odessa.

This article is a little early for the shows, but not for getting your iris ready for show. Mark your calendar for the show dates, but start getting your irises ready now.

DEAR ABBY

Some holiday newsletters welcomed with joy

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I can't believe you agreed with that woman who complained about those insensitive people who sent bragging mimeographed newsletters every Christmas. She said they told of their teen-agers' sports awards, proms, trips, etc., and all the while she was sitting there with a teen-aged son who was facing neurosurgery.

Van Buren

She cited people who went on and on about their wonderful year sending that newsletter to someone "whose relative is battling a life-threatening illness," or the writer who talks of a job promotion to someone who's unemployed.

This woman's viewpoint is totally self-focused. How is everyone who sent her a Christmas card supposed to know what is going on in her life?

What has happened to her good sense — and yours? In case you think I am writing from a picture-perfect life: I was caring for my terminally ill mother one Christmastime (she died at Easter, weighing 60 pounds). I was diagnosed with breast cancer and had a mastectomy two days before Thanksgiving. My beloved father-in-law died 10 days before yet another Christmas. And one year, I had to write to say that my brother had been brutally murdered.

The Christmas of '94, I will include the news that I buried the fifth and final member of my parental family. Three weeks ago, the last of my three brothers died of cancer. So now, I am the sole survivor. (Eight of my family have died of cancer.)

Do I want to hear from "insensitive" people who might tell me that someone in their family has cancer? Of course I do! If it's terminal, I will commiserate with them. If not, I will rejoice! Do I want to hear about the wonderful family reunion you had last summer because my own family is gone? Yes! Families are what keep this planet going!

Hardly anybody makes it through this life without feeling the sting of splinters from a heavy cross. Hearing others' good news while bearing your own sad news is called "maturity." It is not fair to criticize people who are simply telling what happened to them during the year — good and bad.

Sometimes, "bragging" and "moaning" are not so much in the pen of the writer as in the eye of the reader.

Abby, if you use this, you'll probably have to whittle it down, but I had to write what was in my heart. Sign me ... UNDERSTANDING IN IOWA

DEAR UNDERSTANDING: As you can see, I didn't whittle — even a little. Thank you for a great letter. You have mastered the art of disagreeing without being disagreeable.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the letter writer who found the authors of photocopied holiday brag sheets insensitive. I have a solution to her dilemma:

These brag sheets are not written to you personally; they are self-published advertising brochures. You have no obligation to read or even open them. If you find them irritating or annoying, handle them the same way you do junk mail, because that is what they are. Fill your holiday with peace and joy by following these steps:

(1) Pitch this junk mail — unopened — into the nearest sack of recyclable paper goods.

(2) Cross the sender's name off your holiday greeting list. If you are lucky, the sender will remove your name from her mailing list in a couple of years if she receives no correspondence from you.

If you are a person who prefers more direct action, continue to Step 3.

(3) Write a polite note to sender explaining why you would prefer to receive a short handwritten note instead of the impersonal brag sheet, and include a copy of Dear Abby's column of Feb. 6, 1994.

People who send this type of correspondence crave attention. You are under no obligation to reinforce this trait. If each of us would take action to eliminate just one of these offensive publications, we could stop these people before they progress to graphic-enhanced, four-color, desktop-published extravaganzas.

One final note: Dear Abby, please repeat your Feb. 6 column on Dec. 1, 1994, for those readers who did not save it. Please sign this ... AN ILLINOIS FAN WHO IS RECOVERING FROM THE BAD HABIT OF READING HOLIDAY BRAG SHEETS

To order "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.

Abigail Van Buren's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

The entry table display of a family Bible, gloves, glasses, antique hats and doilies sets the mood for the McClatchy home.

PARADE OF HOMES

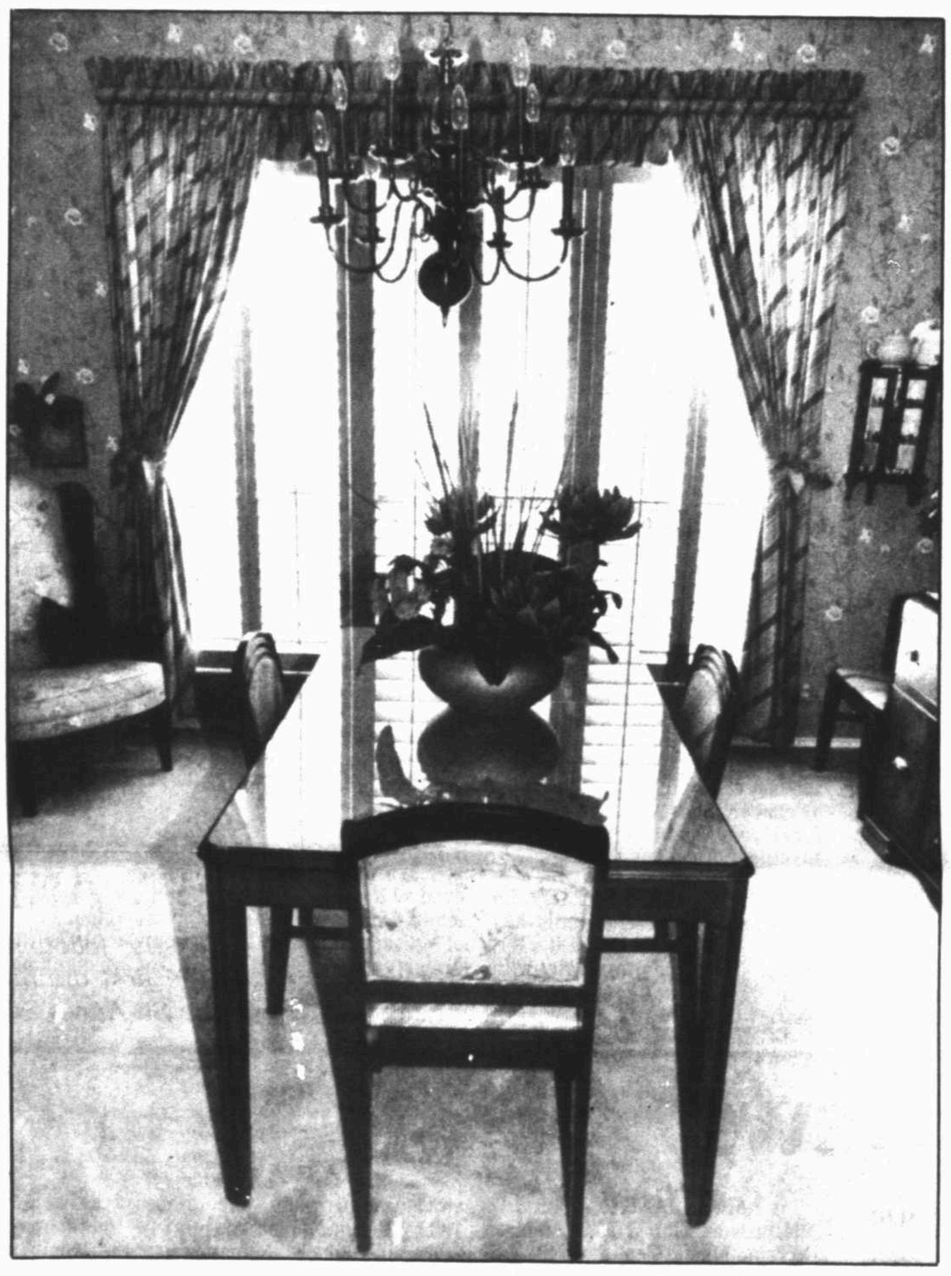

TREASURED ELEGANCE

TEXT AND DESIGN BY ELIZABETH EDWIN

Floral patterns atop dark blue backgrounds in the wall paper and fabrics used in the master bedroom give the feeling of a country garden.

The dining room suite belonged to Beverly McClatchy's grandparents and is over 70 years old.

The front guest bedroom looks like a little girl's dream with walls of blue with a floral border, a brass bed footed by a tapestry cushioned stool.

Sports memorabilia — such as a golf ball collection, signed baseballs, a Texas A&M spirit flag and even a pair of signed Warren Moon Houston Oiler socks — is handsomely display in Kelly McClatchy's bedroom.

The middle guest bedroom features deep apricot walls, a four-poster bed which holds an old sun hat and an antique porcelain water basin stand. Gracing the walls are mementos arranged in frames.

There are items in Jim and Beverly McClatchy's home that make you feel as if you've crawled into grandma's attic and discovered her finest treasures. But viewing the home as a whole is more like walking into a decorator's showroom.

The home, at 3506 Woodhaven, was decorated by Mrs. McClatchy's combining family antiques with updated decorative touches to create a home that is beautiful as well as inviting. From the plantation shutters and wood bench as you enter the home to the sunroom with a country flair, the McClatchy home almost begs to have a story told about each item in every room.

The antique table in the entry way is topped with a Bible that belonged to Mrs. McClatchy's great-grandmother who was born in 1876, a pair of gloves, antique hats and doilies. To the right is the hallway leading to the guest bedrooms.

The guest rooms are host to many pieces of antique furniture, family photos and keepsake memorabilia. The front room is decorated in blues and features a brass bed, a roll-top desk and a tapestry covered "gossip" bench that Mrs. McClatchy and her sister shared as a telephone bench when they were growing up. The middle bedroom is painted a deep apricot. It is furnished with a four-poster bed and a porcelain water basin, and is accented with a quilt wall-hanging and framed knickknack collages. A shared guest bath opens to each of the rooms.

The tub area of the master bath — decorated with silk flower arrangements and candles — is in a secluded nook for privacy.

This antique hutch in the sun room holds everything from grandmother's biscuit cutter and coffee grinder to an old pepper mill.

At the end of the hallway is the son's, Kelly's, bedroom filled with sports memoribilia. A collection of golf balls hangs in shadowboxes, signed baseballs sit in collector boxes on his shelves and a pair of autographed Houston Oiler socks from Warren Moon hang framed on the wall. An adjacent three-quarter bath follows the same navy and maroon color motif as the bedroom.

The sun room is bright and cheery. Windows offer a view of the manicured back yard and allow a glow of sunlight in. Melon colors and greenery dominate this room, which is accented by the white table and chairs Mrs. McClatchy said were used in her grandparents' home. An old hutch is filled with odds and ends, including a coffee grinder, a pepper mill and an old ladle.

The kitchen centers around an island which is directly under a decorative drying rack. Mrs.

Fear of allegations halts show of affection

By David Foster
Associated Press

'I have to be really, really careful. Sometimes the thought goes through my mind, 'I wonder who's watching? Who's taking a picture?' I've never had any problems at all, but I'm not taking any chances.'

— the Rev. Ron Wolf
Roman Catholic priest

When the Rev. Ron Wolf greets parishioners after Mass, sometimes a child will run up and give him a big hug. In more innocent times, it was the kind of loving gesture that made a priest's day.

But these are not innocent times.

Now, a child's hug freezes Wolf with apprehension. Too many priests have been accused of sexual abuse, he says. Too many parents are suspicious of any affection shown to their kids.

"I have to be really, really careful," said Wolf, pastor of St. Thomas Aquinas, a Roman Catholic church near Albuquerque, N.M.

"Sometimes the thought goes through my mind, 'I wonder who's watching? Who's taking a picture?' I've never had any problems at all, but I'm not taking any chances."

He's got company. Priests, teachers, coaches, scoutmasters — people once considered pillars of any community, trusted as role models for children — now often find themselves under a cloud of suspicion.

FEAR OF sexual abuse allegations has prompted some adults to stop working with children altogether. Others try to protect themselves by withholding the physical affection shared freely in more trusting days.

"What you are seeing is sexual abuse hysteria," said Dr. Richard Gardner, professor of child psychiatry at Columbia University. "People are running scared. You can't touch kids anymore."

It's not that young children no longer crave hugs, kisses, cuddles or pats on the back.

"Children need nurturing touch," said Cordelia Anderson of Minneapolis, a lecturer on sexual health and violence prevention.

"But now, if you mention touch, people think about sexual abuse. Many adults are more worried about litigation and protecting themselves than giving children what they really need."

You can hardly blame them. If Americans once buried their heads in the sand about sexual abuse of children, a stream of gruesome headlines in recent years has made it seem as if exploitation is everywhere: Orgies at preschool. Molestations behind the altar. Sex in the scoutmaster's tent.

The rate of reported abuse has risen sharply since the 1970s, but nobody knows for sure whether it's because abuse is increasing or because people are more aware of the problem.

One thing is certain: Nobody is immune from accusation.

Consider the case of Chicago Cardinal Joseph Bernardin, one of America's most visible Roman Catholic prelates and a leader in the church's struggle to rout priestly pedophilia.

In November, 34-year-old Steven Cook filed a $10 million lawsuit accusing Bernardin and another priest of molesting him as a teenager. Last month, the damage to his reputation already done, Bernardin was dropped from the lawsuit. Cook said he no longer trusted his hypnosis-recovered memories.

Bernardin's vindication produced little cheering among Catholic leaders. Scores of sex-abuse cases involving priests are still hanging; one estimate puts the church's cost of settling the scandals at more than $400 million.

IF THE Rev. Wolf is wary of hugs, it's because he headed an investigation of sex-abuse lawsuits that have brought his archdiocese to the brink of bankruptcy.

"What happened to the Archdiocese of Santa Fe is an absolute, unmitigated disgrace," Wolf said. "I think we have to take the necessary precautions to make sure that abuse never again exists."

Wolf says he is never alone with altar boys. If he counsels a young woman at night, she has to bring a parent, and when the session is over, there are no hugs, just a handshake.

His reserved demeanor saddens him.

"I care about children," he said. "But in this day and age, you have to set your limits. And the ones who think they're so secure ... they're the ones that are going to be thrown to the wolves."

Absent specific instructions from Catholic leaders, priests are on their own to develop a personal code of conduct. But many other organizations that work with children have more formal hands-off policies.

The Boy Scouts of America requires that two adults be present during all Scout activities. Many public school districts have unofficial no-touch policies. The YMCA's national office advises local clubs to scale back on touching older kids.

"It's very natural for a preschool child to cuddle up against you while you're reading a story," said Leslie Cohn, YMCA spokeswoman in Chicago. "With a school-age child, you'd say, 'No, sit beside me.'"

Richard Blount knows how easily good intentions can be misread. The retired owner of a Seattle travel agency volunteers as a reading tutor at an elementary school.

One day, he picked up his 9-year-old student for an outing to Mount Rainier National Park. He didn't realize that two women were trailing him, thinking Blount had forced the boy into his pickup truck.

After 20 miles, the women pulled around Blount to cut him off. One jumped from the car and screamed to a bystander, "Call 911! He's kidnapping that boy!" When police arrived, they called the boy's grandfather and straightened things out.

BLOUNT IS remarkably charitable toward his accusers, saying, "My hat's off to somebody who takes that risk." But he does lament the loss of innocence that makes people assume the worst.

"There's nothing sexual about caring for a kid, or there need not be — no matter what we read all the time," he said.

Fear of abuse allegations has made it harder to find qualified volunteers to work with children, said Richard Walker, national spokesman for the Boy Scouts of America. He sees it not only in scouting but in his volunteer work with Little League baseball in Fort Worth, Texas.

"Every year, it's like looking for a needle in the haystack to find enough coaches," Walker said.

Organizations bringing men and boys together come under special scrutiny. That's understandable, since most sex offenders are men.

"But most men are not sex offenders," Cordelia Anderson said. "And God knows we need more men in nurturing positions with children."

Suspicion of adults in organized settings is misplaced because 90 percent of child sex-abuse occurs at home, committed by a relative or friend, said Joyce Johnson of the Child Welfare League of America.

"The media tend to focus on the other 10 percent — someone who's in a position of trust, a priest or day care worker," she said. "You've got people thinking that all priests or child care workers are molesters, and that's not true."

WHILE A no-touch approach may seem the safest recourse, there are costs, said Philip Villaume, a Minneapolis attorney who has defended more than 300 teachers in abuse cases since 1986.

He used to urge teachers not to touch children at all, but now he has changed his advice.

"With all the violence we have in society, with weapons in the schools and all, perhaps it's time we're allowed to reach out and touch somebody, to embrace them in a positive way," Villaume said.

That carries a risk, of course. But Richard Blount, for one, says the payoff is worth it.

"We need to share our parenting," said Blount, whose own children made lifelong friends in Boy Scouts. "I can't be dad and Boy Scout leader and athletic director for my own kids."

So Blount still tutors, and he still takes kids on outings. "But now we go in groups," he says. After all, you have to be careful these days.

Richard Blount, right, tutors Micha Lexing Jr. at Seattle's Latona Elementary School recently. Fears of sexual abuse allegations have prompted some adults to stop working with children, and others try to protect themselves by withholding the physical affection shared freely in more trusting days. Blount laments the loss of innocence that makes people assume the worst and says "there's nothing sexual about caring for a kid."

HOMES: Treasured heirlooms fill home

(From 4F)

McClatchy has decorated it with vintage collectibles and dried flowers. A variety of heirloom kitchen utensils hand above the cabinets. Attention to detail was given in all rooms of the house, even down to the old kitchen stool which was covered to match the kitchen motif and the television on the kitchen counter which matches the counter tops.

The dining room suite belonged to Mrs. McClatchy's grandparents and is more than 70 years old. While the seats have been recovered with fabric that matches the drapes and wallpaper, she said she elected not to refinish the wood. "It was in very good condition, and I didn't want it to look brand new, so I just left it the way it was," she said.

The master bedroom is decorated with a floral design backed by navy blue. A brass bed covered in mauve and adorned with numerous decorative pillows is the focal point of the room. However, a small sitting area with chairs covered to coordinate with the floral design offer a side interests. The master bath offers ample room for two with a double sink vanity, separate shower and tub facilities and a private toilet area complete with a phone.

The main living area is the center of the home and features a brick fireplace and antique parlor chairs. During the day, skylight tunnel the sunlight toward the fireplace, giving the room a pleasant glow.

Shades of blue and mauve are used throughout the house, allowing Mrs. McClatchy the option of moving items from room to room when the urge to rearrange things a bit hit her.

The decor throughout the home pleasantly melds the old with the new, offering visitors a view of the family's past as well as a peek at their present.

Wedding plans helped 'by the book'

Associated Press

Here comes the bride, and here come the guides:

■ Are you planning the wedding you really want, or are you giving in to everyone else's expectations?

Author Carroll Stoner encourages you to break the rules, if necessary, to make the day quintessentially yours, in "Weddings for Grownups" (Chronicle Books). Wedding couples come in all ages and types, she notes, and many who are older and more independent place primary importance on making the big day memorable and emotionally satisfying for themselves.

Stoner offers practical advice for keeping overall control of planning without getting bogged down in details, how to deal with potentially conflicting expectations of relatives and in-laws, and most importantly, how to enjoy the planning process.

■ Individualized weddings also are treated in "I Do: A Guide to Creating Your Own Unique Wedding Ceremony" (Celestial Arts) by Sydney Barbara Metrick. The need for ritual is inherent for most people she says, but couples can create their own ceremony, incorporating old traditions and new ideas that will make it unique and meaningful to them. The author, a psychologist and ordained minister, suggests how the rite can buttress the marriage that follows it.

■ African-Americans often enrich their wedding ceremonies by combining African and western traditions and designs. Harriette Cole has gathered some of the best ideas in "Jumping the Broom: The African-American Wedding Planner" (Henry Holt). The title refers to a wedding custom invented by African slaves who were not allowed to marry legally; the ritual of jumping over a broom signified the couple's commitment to begin life (and housekeeping) together. The ritual has been retained by modern blacks as part of their wedding celebrations, according to Cole. Included in her book are photographs of contemporary black wedding attire — western-style formal wear enlivened with African designs and jewelry.

■ From the mouths of brides comes wisdom from the real wedding experts, contends Suzanne Kresse, who has compiled "Secrets of Successful Brides" (St. Martin's Press). She quotes real-time brides about their experiences, from the proposal to the honeymoon.

■ An updated version of "Planning a Wedding to Remember" (Wilshire Publications) by bridal consultant Beverly Clark is a spiral-bound planner that includes record-keeping forms, checklists and pockets to keep estimates, contracts and receipts — all interspersed with practical advice about each stage of the wedding. There's also a Spanish-language version, "Como Planear una Boda Inolvidable."

■ "Bride's All New Book of Etiquette" (Perigee) by the editors of Bride's magazine celebrates weddings and its own 60th anniversary. This sourcebook includes guidance for all the traditional wedding events as well as advice about second marriages, unexpected situations and even reaffirmation rituals. If you want to include something symbolizing your heritage, a chapter about early American, Indian and international wedding traditions may give you ideas and inspiration.

■ A wedding is, along with everything else, an exercise in diplomacy and problem-solving. In "Modern Bride Guide to Etiquette" (Wiley), Cele Goldsmith Lalli, editor-in-chief of Modern Bride magazine, tackles the questions most asked by her readers.

■ "Dear Abby on Planning Your Wedding" (Andrews and McMeel) by Abigail Van Buren is down-to-earth advice from the columnist, who says she "bent a few rules to suit the tastes and pocketbooks of middle America."

■ "Weddings by Design" (HarperSanFrancisco) by Richard Leviton explores departures from traditional ceremonies, suggesting original variations and reviving less common wedding practices of cultures from around the world.

■ The emergence of same-sex weddings brings with it a new reference, "The Essential Guide to Lesbian and Gay Weddings" (HarperSanFranciso) by Tess Ayers and Paul Brown. How do you word the invitations? What do you tell the relatives? What do you wear? How do you deal with curiosity? These and other concerns are covered and illustrated by anecdotes about the pioneers of this type of wedding.

■ Lisa Lebowitz Cader gives prospective owners of engagement and wedding jewelry some diamond-hard advice in "The Perfect Ring" (Andrews and McMeel).

■ For a break from dealing with worldly wedding problems, why not have a bit of fun solving the one about two left feet? A video, "Wedding Day Dancing" with dance instructors Christopher Reilly and Elaine Bayless, is 90 minutes' worth of instruction about waltz, fox trot, jitterbug and swing. A list of appropriate wedding day songs is included. It's available from Step by Step Dancing for $24.95 including postage. Call 1 (800) 531-1320.

Color use can be practical

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Color can trigger emotions or associations, and humans react more strongly to red than to any other color, according to an expert in the use of color technology.

"Color visual aids — such as overhead transparencies — help increase an audience's attention span and recall," says Richard Lorbach, of Eastman Kodak Co. "What's more, color spurs people to take action."

And whether you're a student, teacher or business executive preparing a presentation, you should know that proper use of color can mean the difference between success or failure, adds Lorbach, general manager of Kodak's desktop imaging division.

"But don't go crazy with colors," he advises. "The fewer the colors, the easier for people to categorize information you're presenting."

Lorbach suggests limiting charts to four or five colors, making sure the hues are consistent with the overall color scheme. He also favors the use of subtle colors for large graphics and bright colors for small ones.

On specific colors, he says dark blue tends to project dignity, "black communicates a certain cool grace, white reflects purity and cleanliness, green has broad connotations, including 'go,' envy, rookie and springtime.

"And contrary to popular belief, gray isn't boring. Because of its neutrality, it blends well with other colors."

Getting married at home is growing trend

Associated Press

"We didn't want a huge church wedding that would take a lot of time to plan and a lot of money to pay for," says Anne Graham.

So Graham and Steve Egyhazi were married on a Saturday morning in March 1993, at the South Bend (Ind.) Courthouse. Later that day and into the wee hours of the morning, they gave an informal buffet party at home for about 90 family members and friends.

Their home wedding was highly individualized. Yet, it's part of an apparent trend towards home weddings. A survey taken in 1990 found that 20 percent of all weddings take place in part or completely at home, says Alan Fields, co-author with his wife, Denise, of the book, "Bridal Bargains" (Windsor Peak Press). The survey also showed that the number of home weddings is on the rise.

This type of wedding is gaining, not only because it can be quite a bit less expensive, but also because it's often warmer and less intimidating than weddings in hired halls.

Graham's and Egyhazi's motives were both financial and a matter of personal taste. Both are busy graduate students (in library and information science) at Indiana University in Bloomington where they now live. They didn't want to lose control of their own wedding.

The couple planned and paid for the wedding, spending about $1,300. Friends and family pitched in, cooking some of the food, lending extra tables and silverware. A family friend made the wedding cake as a gift and Anne's sister, Kate, and Kate's boyfriend handled party logistics and post-party cleanup after the couple left to spend their wedding night in the bridal suite of a local hotel.

Anne and Steve kept some traditional wedding rituals. They wore wedding clothes, including something old and something new for the bride, and had flowers. They cut the tiered wedding cake, took photos, and Anne tossed her bouquet. They dispensed with the customs of toasts and receiving line.

Although doing it yourself takes more planning, control is firmly lodged in your own hands. The downside is that it's a lot of work.

"It's not the most relaxing way to get married, but it was the best choice for us," says Graham.

"People said it was the best wedding because it was a relaxed party rather than a formal event," says Egyhazi. "As it turned out, this was the last time the whole family was together, since my Dad died soon after the wedding. It's nice to be able to look at the photographs. If we had eloped, I would have regretted it."

Graham's words of advice to others contemplating a wedding they plan themselves: "Make your arrangements before you tell people about it. Otherwise, you get too much advice and it's confusing."

Another route to the home wedding is to hire a caterer to take over the details of planning. As the guest list rises, the questions of how to physically set up the home to accommodate guests and how much it will all cost grow more perplexing.

Professional caterers not only can give an estimate of costs. They also can advise if it's feasible to hold the wedding at home. Sometimes, this means limiting the guest list, rearranging the furniture or renting a tent.

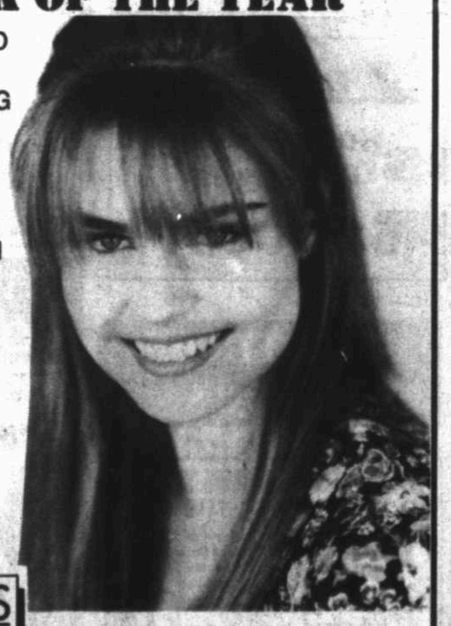

Look for caterers with experience doing home weddings rather than those who specialize in corporate functions, suggests Fields. Caterers knowledgeable about residential entertaining think in terms of traffic flow and logistics.

Many caterers will do a proposal for free. However, it's worth paying a fee of $50 or so to have a caterer come out and spend a few hours to evaluate the site.

Getting a home wedding appraisal early is crucial in setting a budget and deciding whether to hire a professional caterer.

One of the major costs is rental — tents, temporary furniture, dishes, accessories, et al. Rental charges vary, so it pays to take time to do some comparison shopping.

Celebrate Passover with good taste

Associated Press

The following recipes for roasted chicken are suitable as a main dish for Passover. Herb-Roasted Chicken, from Hebrew National, is baked and served with new potatoes. Katja Goldman, chef and recipe developer for Empire Kosher Poultry, developed the recipe for roast chicken with fennel and tomatoes. Goldman also created the recipe for matzo spinach kugel.

AP Laserphoto

For Passover, serve Roasted Chicken with Fennel and Tomatoes. The chicken and vegetables marinate in the refrigerator overnight. Serve with matzo spinach kugel.

HERB-ROASTED CHICKEN

4 ½-pound kosher chicken
2 cloves garlic, crushed
Juice of ½ lemon
2½ tablespoons fresh herbs, finely chopped, or 2½ teaspoons dried herbs (use any combination of basil, marjoram, oregano, parsley, rosemary, sage, tarragon or thyme)
Freshly ground pepper
Kosher salt
2 pounds new potatoes, cut in half if small, or quarters, if medium
1 tablespoon plus 1 teaspoon extra-virgin olive oil
2 cups chicken broth

Heat oven to 400 degrees F. Fill cavity of chicken with garlic, lemon juice and 1 tablespoon of the fresh herbs or 1 teaspoon of the dried herbs. Sprinkle chicken with ¼ teaspoon pepper.

In a bowl, toss potatoes with 1 tablespoon olive oil, 1 tablespoon of the fresh herbs or 1 teaspoon of the dried herbs, ½ teaspoon kosher salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Rub chicken with 1 teaspoon of the olive oil and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Gently rub remaining fresh or dried herbs into the chicken skin.

Truss chicken by tying the legs together and tucking the wing tips under the breast. Place the chicken, breast side down, on a rack in a large roasting pan. Arrange potatoes around the chicken. Baste the chicken occasionally with pan juices and toss potatoes. After 1 hour, turn chicken breast side up and continue roasting another 30 minutes. Chicken is done when juices run clear after pricking thigh area.

Remove chicken and potatoes to a platter; let rest 5 minutes before carving. In the meantime, skim off any fat remaining in the roasting pan. Add chicken broth to pan and over two burners simmer slowly, scraping up brown bits at bottom of pan. When sauce has thickened slightly, pour into a sauceboat and serve with chicken.

Recipe from Hebrew National.

ROAST CHICKEN WITH FENNEL AND TOMATOES

6 cloves garlic, crushed
2 tablespoons full-flavored olive oil
1 teaspoon crushed fennel seeds
½ cup freshly squeezed lemon juice
4 bay leaves
2 fresh fennel bulbs (remove fronds, set aside), cut in eighths
2 large onions, peeled, sliced very thin
16 fresh tomatoes, quartered, or 16 whole canned tomatoes, drained
4 tablespoons fresh chopped parsley
1 cup kosher chicken broth
Salt and pepper to taste
2 chickens, cut into eighths, skin removed

In a large bowl, combine the garlic, olive oil, fennel seeds, lemon juice, bay leaves, fennel bulbs, onions, tomatoes, parsley and the chicken broth. Salt and pepper to taste. Pour over chicken. Marinate in the refrigerator overnight.

One hour before you begin to cook, remove the marinating chicken and vegetables from the refrigerator; bring to room temperature.

Heat oven to 375 degrees F. Place chicken and vegetables in a single layer in a large 2-inch deep roasting pan (an oven-to-table pan works well). Roast in a 375-degree F oven for 45 minutes. Garnish with additional parsley, if desired.

Recipe from Empire Kosher Poultry.

MATZO SPINACH KUGEL

2 10-ounce boxes frozen chopped spinach, thawed
2 cups chopped leeks (white part only) or chopped onions
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
1 tablespoon chopped dill
2 whole eggs
Salt and pepper to taste
Pinch of nutmeg
4 cups kosher for Passover matzo farfel
6 egg whites
Vegetable oil spray for pan
1 tablespoon matzo meal

Preheat oven to 350 degrees F. Drain spinach in colander; squeeze out any extra water and set aside in a large bowl.

In a skillet, saute the leeks and/or onions in oil until soft. Remove from heat and add to drained spinach.

In the work bowl of a food processor fitted with a metal blade, chop the herbs, add the 2 whole eggs, salt, pepper and nutmeg. Process for 2 minutes. Scrape down sides, pulse chop until greens are specks. Pour into the spinach mixture. Mix in matzo farfel.

In separate bowl, using clean bowl and beaters, beat egg whites; fold into spinach mixture.

Spray pan with oil, dust lightly with matzo meal. Pour mixture into 9-inch round pan. Bake in a 350-degree F oven for 45 minutes. Cut into wedges and serve.

Passover rich in traditions

By Steven Kolpan
Associated Press

HYDE PARK, N.Y. (AP) — The Jewish holiday of Passover, commemorating the Jewish exodus from ancient Egypt, is a celebration of liberation and freedom.

Passover, or Pesach as it is called in Hebrew, is observed for eight days, which began this year on Saturday, the 14th day of the month of Nisan, according to the Hebrew calendar.

The Seder, which retells the story of the exodus, is held the first two nights of the holiday, the traditional gathering of family and friends. The Seder, which refers to the strict order of the ritual, tells the moving biblical story with prayer, song, games and, most of all, food and wine.

For many families, the culinary traditions of Passover start well in advance of the holiday with a nearly obsessive ritual cleansing of the home. Traditionally, all dishes, glasses, pots and pans used throughout the year must be removed, and replaced with tableware and cooking utensils reserved for use only during Passover.

Although silverware may be tied with string and dipped in boiling water to make it Pesakdek (suitable for Passover), any tablecloths and napkins that were used for meals in which bread was served must be replaced. Any prepared foods purchased for the holiday must be marked kosher and must also bear a rabbinical seal making them kosher for Passover.

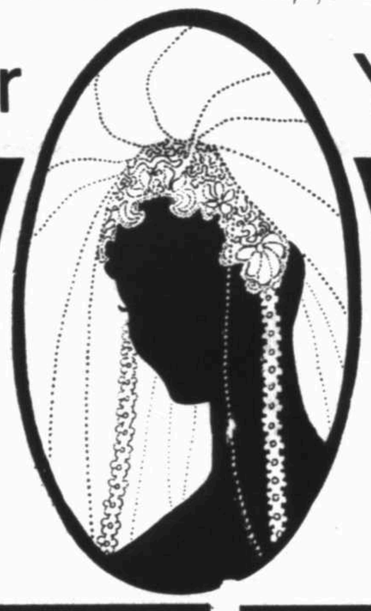

The best-known symbol of Passover is matzo, thin sheets of dough baked to a crackerlike crispness. Like much of the food consumed at the Seder, matzo symbolizes the haste with which the Jews — led by the prophet, Moses — had to leave Egypt, one step ahead of the Egyptian soldiers.

There was no time to let bread rise, so the followers of Moses rolled out a flat dough made from flour and water, but without any leavening, that quickly baked in the desert sun. This flatbread sustained the Jews, who sought refuge in the promised land of Israel. So, for the eight days of Passover, all Jews are expected to eat no bread, cakes or pastries unless they are matzo-based.

In addition to the traditional matzo, the focus of every Seder table is the Passover plate, which contains other symbolic foods, including a hard-boiled egg (symbolizing rebirth), radishes and bitter herbs (the bitterness of oppression), a lamb shank bone (pharoah Ramses III had ordered all first-born Jewish children killed. Moses demanded that lambs be sacrificed and their blood smeared on the houses of the children so that the angel of death would "pass over" these homes. It worked.), a dish of saltwater and parsley for dipping (the tears of oppression and the tears of joy at final liberation) and charoses, a mixture of apples, nuts and honey (the sweetness of freedom).

A wine goblet is also placed on the Passover plate because observant Jews believe the prophet, Elijah, will visit every home and drink a bit of wine with every family. Indeed, the entire family and their guests (who, by the way, do not have to be Jewish to enjoy the Seder), sing a song to Elijah, all the time focusing on the wineglass, which seems to lose a bit of wine during the song.

The Seder dinner usually features variations of traditional dishes: knaidlach soup (matzo balls in a flavorful chicken broth with vegetables), gefilte fish (fish dumplings made from pike and whitefish, served at room temperature with grated horseradish), a roast chicken and chocolate almond macaroons.

Sesame Street stars to light up stage

Sesame Street lights up Midland College's Chaparral Center Tuesday and Wednesday with its "When I Grow Up" musical stage show.

"Every single child's best friend will be there live on stage," said Denise Manzer, director of sales for the VEE Corp.

"To me, it's like a mini-rock show for kids. Here are all their stars. They get to see them live. It's such a thrill as an adult to watch them get so excited."

Ms. Manzer said that children coming to "When I Grow Up" can expect to have "lots of fun. Education (is put) in with the entertainment. It's fun because it's dealing with careers. They all are trying to decide what they want to be when they grow up."

Big Bird seems the most stymied by the question.

"Big Bird can't decide at all what he wants to be," said Ms. Manzer, who joined Sesame Street Live as senior promotions manager in 1984.

She credits Big Bird's appeal to his candor.

"This is my own personal theory. He shows innocence, and I think small children can relate to that. That's how they think, very innocent."

Children may realize through Big Bird "that it's OK to ask questions; it's OK to not know all the answers," she said.

"Elmo wants to be everything. First, he decides he wants to be a cowboy. Then, he wants to be a forest ranger and he goes down the line — ballet dancer, chef."

Many of the production numbers are staged around the concept of choosing a career, including one designed for women and presented by the females in the cast.

In this number, Ms. Manzer said, "Women can be what they want to be — a lion tamer, doctor, astronaut."

Tickets, priced at $9.50 and $6.50 for opening-night are available at Chaparral Center's box office, Endless Horizons record stores and Com-West. Children ages 2-12 receive a $1.50 discount and groups of 20 or more qualify for a $2 a ticket discount. For more information call Chaparral Center's box office, 685-4584.

Celebrating its 25th season on public television, Sesame Street reaches more than 14 million people each week. In the past 13 years, more than 26 million people have seen the Vee Corp.'s live productions.

These stage shows, which feature Jim Henson's Sesame Street Muppets, are presented by VEE Corp. in cooperation with Children's Television Workshop and are an extension of the original television show.

VEE Corp. productions, which have five shows touring in the 1993-94 season, have played in more than 262 markets in the United States, Canada, Europe, Australia, New Zealand, Puerto Rico, the United Kingdom and Southeast Asia. They have played in every state except Delaware and New

ABC wins ratings week

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC landed five of its shows in the Top 10 and 10 in the Top 20 to win last week's prime-time ratings, according to Nielsen Media Research data released Wednesday.

ABC won the week of March 14-20 with an average rating of 12.9 and a 21 audience share. ABC's nightly victories were Wednesday, Friday and Saturday.

CBS claimed second with an 11.4 rating, 19 share.

Third was NBC. Despite landing "Seinfeld" at No. 2 and "Frasier" in fourth place, NBC averaged a 10.7 rating, 18 share.

The Fox Broadcasting Co., which programs only 15 of the 22 prime-time hours, averaged a 7.3 rating, 12 share for the week.

One ratings point equals 942,000 homes among the nation's 94.2 million TV households. Share is the percentage of sets tuned in during a specified time period.

ABC won the evening news ratings, averaging a 10.9 rating, 21 share; "CBS Evening News" and "NBC Nightly News" tied for second place with a 9.2 rating, 18 share, though CBS did not count its Thursday and Friday ratings due to low coverage from NCAA basketball games.

Here are the Top 10 shows, their network and ratings:

"Home Improvement," ABC, 22.9; "Seinfeld," NBC, 20.9; "60 Minutes," CBS, 20.5; "Frasier," NBC, 20.3; "Grace Under Fire," ABC, 19.1; "Turning Point," ABC, 17.2; "Roseanne," ABC, and "Murphy Brown, CBS, 16.8 (tied); "Home Improvement" (special), ABC, 16.2; CBS Sunday Movie: "Ultimate Betrayal," CBS, 15.6.

Art Institute hosts 'Ruckus Rodeo'

ODESSA — The Art Institute for the Permian Basin, 4909 E. University, is hosting Red Grooms' "Ruckus Rodeo" from the collection of the Modern Art Museum of Fort Worth through May 29.

Ruckus Rodeo, commissioned and purchased with funds from the National Endowment for the Arts and the Benjamin J. Tiller Memorial Trust, was created over the course of a year beginning with Grooms' visit to the 1975 Fort Worth rodeo and stock show in the Will Rogers Coliseum.

In conjunction with Ruckus Rodeo, the Institute also is displaying rodeo photographs by Vicky Welch, David Jennings and other rodeo photographers. Also displayed are vintage photos of area rodeos and rodeo champions.

No admission is charged to view exhibitions at the Institute which is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Hampshire.

"They don't have a facility large enough to handle our show," said Ms. Manzer, who was Vee Corp. company manager from 1989-91.

"If a certain city doesn't have a facility that can handle us, obviously we can't play there."

Traveling with one of the live shows as company manager gave Ms. Manzer — who has worked for Ice Follies, Holiday on Ice, Disney on Ice and Knott's Berry Farm — a perspective that management does not experience in the office.

"This group is great," said Ms. Manzer, noting that it takes around eight hours to set up the show and around four to take it down.

"I've been on tour with another show that had a group of 120 people. Sesame Street Live has 35 people and you become much more of a team, much more of a family because it's a smaller group.

"If you can work, live, eat, entertain and do everything together and still get along, you are in really good shape. And that's what I think I had personally as the tour manager . . . We were all just one big team, and I think that's important."

"When I Grow Up" is among Ms. Manzer's personal favorites.

"The production numbers this year are out of this world," she said. "Our directors have gone out of their way. They are absolutely beautiful. There's lots of audience participation where we get everybody in the audience to sing and dance with the character. It's really fun. It's just such a good, clean, fun show for the whole family."

Checking Out the Libraries

Sandra Wegner

The Friends of the Library do not wear out their membership with meetings. In fact, the general membership meets only one time a year. At that meeting, they elect board members and officers, review the past year's activities and have a program.

April 17 is the date for this year's meeting and program. It is open to the public and will feature author Patrick Dearen, who is going to share clips from his new documentary video about the Pecos River, "Graveyard of the West: The Pecos River of Texas." The library also gets to show off its new big screen television in its newly decorated meeting room on the second floor.

Dearen is an author of both fiction and non-fiction. His area of speciality is the Trans-Pecos region.

The Friends of the Library urge you to join them 2 p.m. on April 17 at the library at 301 W. Missouri Ave.

Beginning April 9, a 30-minute tour of the library will be held on Saturday mornings. Starting promptly at 9:15 a.m., the tour will include instruction on the library's computer catalog. A reference librarian will guide visitors up, down, and all around and behind closed doors. Just show up on time and be waiting at the foot of the big stairs.

Spring is in the air and so is the demand for gardening books. The library has a lot of books on the subject. Here's a quick look at some recent additions.

Spare the hose and still get the blooms is the focus of two books: "Water-wise Gardening" by Thomas Christopher and "Water-wise Gardening" by Lauren Springer. Much on the same theme is "Natural Lawns and Alternatives" from Brooklyn Botanic Garden Record. While Brooklyn is not in West Texas, readers may recognize the name of Texas writer Sally Wasowski, who wrote some chapters in this little book. If pruning presents a quandary for you, look at "A Practical Guide To Pruning" by Peter McHoy. Those looking for more results and less work will be interested in "Modern Vegetable Gardening," which promises "light-work techniques for the 1990s." If you prefer your plant beauty indoors, investigate "The Sunroom Gardener," by Anne Switinbank.

All the books listed are at the downtown library. The Centennial Branch Library in Midland Park Mall has gardening books, too.

The new display tables for CDs are a hit with the downtown library patrons.

Before now the CDs were shelved in a cabinet with only the spines showing. Because music lovers cannot flip through the CDs to browse, circulation has increased. With all this easy access came theft. CD cases were being found empty. So the library was forced to go the route of the record stores with security cases on each compact disc.

Our music cassettes remain locked in a case. This collection is not growing at the rate of CDs, which is the choice of most music patrons. However, our books-on-tape collection is growing in size and popularity. These items are now in the general fiction room. With this collection, the question is: abridged or unabridged. Sometimes what is available makes the decision for us. People do want current titles and most of these are abridged.

Many thanks to the Friends of the Library for the new CD display tables.

Have you noticed the used magazine sale area in the foyer? It used to be a bonified mess but Ed Gorence, a member of Friends of the Library, is on top of the situation. He's even got the titles alphabetized. He's tossed out the lost causes — publications that would probably never sell — and now there's room for more. Since the Friends sell your donated magazines for a dime to benefit the library, they need a steady supply. Clean off the shelf and bring your used magazines to the library.

The job is never quite finished. The county has recently installed additional lighting in the building. It's no longer a dark secret as to what books are on the bottom shelf in the mystery section. Keep Midland Beautiful, the Texas Forrest Service and the county have worked together to provide 17 red oak trees on the north and east sides of the building. New directional signs have gone up through out the building. The more signs we put up, the more we realize that we need! And then there's our parking lot! In time, that, too, will get settled.

Job hunter and seekers of company information please check with the Reference Librarian before you begin your search at the library. Two new lists of "where to look" sources have been compiled to assist the patron.

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, MARCH 27, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Defer to those with greater financial expertise and money management problems will become a thing of the past. The business outlook brightens in May.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Sarah Vaughan, football player Randall Cunningham, actress Maria Schneider, actor Michael York.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Walking is great exercise and could lead to some wonderful new friendships. Do not allow yourself to become entangled in other people's problems.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A Sunday sermon is inspiring. Keep your social agenda flexible so that you can take advantage of a sudden invitation. You could meet someone who will alter the course of your life.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Spending money on favorite friends or family members will bring you special joy today. Home-based entertainment could prove more relaxing than going out.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Friends will follow your enthusiastic lead today. A spur-of-the-moment decision could change your life dramatically. If going away, take only what you will need.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A quiet day at home sounds very appealing, but so does a sudden trip. Your mind is filled with plans for the future. News from abroad may require an immediate decision.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be careful what you say and do today. Mate or partner could request a change in plans. Do not lose sight of others' needs and desires. Be more tolerant and less willful.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Contradictory forces could pull you in two different directions. Get a handle on romance. When visiting a parent, maintain your good humor. Having the same arguments over and over again is pointless.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Humor a family member or friend who is down on luck. Realize, too, that much can be gained from letting others make their own choices. Children will learn from their mistakes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): If feeling out of sorts, seek the company of a loving friend. Talk out your troubles. Participating in team sports will help reduce tension. A late-night call brings delightful news!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not give up on your hopes for a friend. You still have a chance to get what you desire. Singles will be bit by the love bug tonight. Be discreet about your relationships.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accept your lot with fortitude if there is little you can do about it at present. Time will bring a wanted change. Take up a childhood hobby again.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Another day when feelings run high. No one will gain if a split occurs. Ask questions in a calm, mature way. Enlightenment comes when a family member opens up.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	1 NT	Pass	4 ♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♡

Don't underestimate the advantage declarer has in being able to see all the North-South assets. Even when declarer knows the contract can be defeated, the opponents, who don't have that information available, are at a disadvantage. This hand illustrates our point.

North's one-no-trump overcall, with only 15 points and one stopper in the enemy suit, does not thrill us. We would have passed to await developments. South would have reopened and North-South would probably have nestled in a safe partscore rather than a climb to an overly aggressive game.

West made the normal lead of the king of hearts and, when dummy appeared, declarer saw four losers—two clubs, a heart and, barring a small miracle, a diamond. The diamond suit could probably be established by ducking a diamond early, but that would tip the hand to the defenders who would certainly make sure they got what tricks were their due.

Instead, declarer tried a dab of guile. South ducked the opening heart lead and won the continuation, then cashed the ace and king of spades. Next, declarer led a club to the queen!

In with the ace of clubs, West saw no future in returning a club and reverted to a heart. Declarer ruffed and the contract could no longer be defeated. Declarer started reeling off spades, bringing about this position:

On the last trump East had to discard a club, as did the other two hands. East was then thrown in with a club and, on the forced diamond return, declarer made the last three tricks by simply playing the defenders for split honors and finessing accordingly.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

■ Singer makes debut

LONDON — American mezzo-soprano Susan Graham made her debut at London's Royal Opera House this February in a work unknown to most of the world since its premiere in Monte Carlo in 1905.

The plot of Jules Massenet's "Cherubin" was absent from the reference books and audience members at the Royal Opera House searched through the printed program before the curtain rose to find anything to guide them.

Yet, the work was no stranger to Miss Graham, who has called it one of her favorites. She sang the balcony scene during programs of French opera extracts while at Manhattan School of Music.

A Texas Tech University alum, Miss Graham was born in New Mexico, grew up in Midland, and now resides in New York City.

While at Tech, Miss Graham studied under Sue Arnold and Mary Gillas and earned a bachelor's degree in music performance in 1983 and a master's in music performance in 1985.

She made her operatic debut while a student at Tech when she performed the role of Hansel in "Hansel and Gretel," a role she later recreated in January of 1986 with the Eugene Opera, Oregon.

Some of the featured performers are the news teams of KMID, KOSA and KWES-TV; well-known figures including Mayor J.T. Faircloth, Bro Seltzer, Julius Brooks and Charlie Spence; seasoned performers including Pam Six, Jami Owen, Patty Loftis, Junanne Mosley, Carol Chidlaw, Sara Spector, the Susie Hitchcock Dancers and many others.

Oscar winners expand movie's screen base

By Yardena Arar
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — "Schindler's List" will be in about 125 more theaters this weekend than last, a slight expansion planned by its distributor before the film's anticipated multiple Oscar wins Monday night.

"We kind of knew what we had," said Nikki Rocco, senior vice president of distribution for Universal Pictures.

Last weekend, before Steven Spielberg's Holocaust drama won seven Academy Awards, Universal had boosted the number of screens running the film to 1,246, more than 50 percent more than the previous weekend. The 125 additional screens therefore represent only a 10 percent increase. The film has grossed $60.3 million domestically since it first opened more than three months ago.

Meanwhile, Universal/MCA Home Video announced that the studio's other multiple Oscar winner, "Jurassic Park," will be available on videocassette Oct. 4 for a suggested retail price of $24.98. Two letterboxed laserdisc packages — a standard one priced at $44.98 and a deluxe boxed edition costing $74.98 — will be released Oct. 12.

"Jurassic Park," which won three technical awards, had already finished its regular theatrical run and has been playing in discount houses since Thanksgiving. The summer blockbuster has grossed $880 million worldwide, including $345.1 million domestically.

Miramax Films will expand "The Piano" from 434 screens to 650 this weekend following its three-Oscar performance. The film, which had grossed $34.5 million through last weekend, won awards for actresses Holly Hunter and Anna Paquin, and for director Jane Campion's screenplay.

TriStar will add 80 screens to the 673 that last weekend were showing "Philadelphia," the AIDS drama that won Best Actor for Tom Hanks and Best Original Song for Bruce Springsteen.

Holocaust memorials speak of unspeakable crimes

"Remember the days of old, consider the years long past; ask your father, and he will inform you; your elders, and they will tell you." — Deuteronomy 32:7.

"Do not forget." — Deuteronomy 25:19.

By Ann Levin
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Remember. Never forget.

For Jews, the act of remembrance is an imperative, the subject of frequent and stern exhortations in the Old Testament. But in the years since World War II, there has been little consensus about how to remember the murder of 6 million Jews by the Nazi German state.

With thousands of monuments, preserved ruins, plaques, museums and study centers around the world now devoted to the Holocaust, a new show at The Jewish Museum attempts to answer the question of how and why society speaks of such unspeakably horrible crimes.

The exhibition, which includes more than 200 photographs, videos, architectural models and designs of memorials in Europe, Israel and the United States, opened March 13 and remains on view until July 31, when it travels to Berlin and Munich.

In the catalog's sometimes brilliant essays, intellectuals and artists outline the problems attached to remembering the Holocaust:

—how some Jews are uncomfortable with the way the Holocaust has overshadowed the rich history of earlier Jewish civilization;

—how concentration camp survivors prefer realistic art and sculpture to depict their suffering, which critics often find too sentimental or kitschy;

—how Jews and non-Jews sometimes feel that the Holocaust has become a cudgel the Jewish community uses to enforce group solidarity, whip up support for Israel, raise money and inflict guilt on the rest of the world.

Divided into six different thematic clusters, the exhibition also focuses on how place affects the quality of a memorial: whether it rises from the ruins of death camps in Germany and Poland, the semiarid hills of Jerusalem or the Mall in Washington, D.C., just 400 yards from the Washington Monument.

Some contemporary artists, especially in Germany, even rebel against the whole notion of institutionalized memory, believing that monuments shamefully relieve the public of its duty to remember.

Thus, when conceptual artists Jochen and Esther Gerz won a competition in Harburg, Germany, to design a public art project against fascism, war and violence, they designed a 39-foot lead column that would tower over, then eventually sink into, the town's bustling center.

The monument was lowered into the ground in eight ceremonies from 1986 to 1993 until it disappeared on Nov. 10, 1993, the 55th anniversary of Kristallnacht, that infamous night when synagogues and Jewish businesses were looted and destroyed by the Nazis.

A sign next to the sculpture explains why the artists built a monument to disappear: "In the end, it is only we ourselves who can rise up against injustice."

The show also explores how the Holocaust has come to command so much attention in the United States, a country that is 97 percent non-Jewish. The timing for such a discussion is perfect, given the opening last year of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington and the huge interest in Steven Spielberg's "Schindler's List."

Curator James E. Young and James Ingo Freed, who designed the Washington museum, argue that Holocaust memorials belong on American soil as a kind of reverse testimonial to what can happen when the ideals on which this country was founded — liberty, refuge, pluralism and democracy — disappear.

In Amsterdam, not far from the Anne Frank House, another type of memorial was built in 1987: a monument to commemorate the gay victims of the Holocaust.

Since then, the Homomonument — a large, marble triangle evoking the pink triangular badges gays were forced to wear by the Nazis — has become a place to mourn AIDS victims, proving, as Young says, "that present life is lived as a constant negotiation with memory of the past."

No exhibition would be complete, of course, without a discussion of the way the Holocaust is woven into the fabric of life in Israel. Initially, some of Israel's founders including David Ben-Gurion wanted to banish the Holocaust from public memory, seeing in its helpless victims the Zionists' worst nightmare of a stateless people.

But within a few years of Israel's independence, the Knesset, prodded by survivors and relatives of victims, ordered the construction of the Yad Vashem memorial complex in the hills of Jerusalem. "The one suitable monument to the memory of European Jewry ... is the state of Israel," the newspaper Davar declared in a 1951 editorial.

Since then, Shoah — the Hebrew word for Holocaust — has been paired in Israeli iconography with redemption, a story that begins with the death of European Jews in the Diaspora and ends with the rebirth of a Jewish homeland in Palestine.

In that scenario, the victims of the Holocaust compel the need for Israeli fighters.

Finally, the exhibition concludes with a replica of a souvenir kiosk that asks what it means to be a tourist at such horrific sites of evil as Buchenwald, Auschwitz, Treblinka and other death camps. It is an unsettling question, for which Young provides at least the beginnings of an answer:

"The art of memory neither begins with a monument's groundbreaking nor ends with the ceremonies conducted at its base. Rather, this art consists in the ongoing activity of memory, in the debates surrounding these memorials, in our own participation in the memorial's performance.

"For, in the end, we must also realize that the art of memory remains incomplete, an empty exercise, until visitors have grasped — and then responded to — current suffering in the world in light of a remembered past."

Singer to perform with George Strait

Recording artist Clay Walker performs at the April 7 sold-out George Strait concert at Ector County Coliseum.

Walker burst onto the country music scene less than a year ago with his No. 1 debut single "What's It To You." He followed with "Live Until I Die," which also hit the top of the country charts. He has generated enough excitement in the industry that "Entertainment Weekly" profiled him after only his second release.

"Where Do I Fit In The Picture" is the third single and the first ballad to be released from his self-titled debut album, which has surpassed the 800,000 sales mark. On the album, Walker wrote or cowrote five of the 11 songs.

A native of Beaumont, Walker says he knew he was going to be a singer from the moment his father gave him his first guitar. He was 9 at the time.

Currently, he is on tour with Diamond Rio and Sawyer Brown.

Public and private schools may schedule a 40-minute tour for fourth-graders on April 15 by calling Enid Davis, 683-2882 or 570-7770.

The tours are planned between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. There is no charge.

The public is invited to come between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. on April 16 to see the demonstrations and dwellings. Reservations are not required.

The archaeological society will construct replicas of a pit house, a wickiup and a shade arbor and will erect a tipi on the grounds of the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum.

The dwellings will remain up through April 17.

Pottery making, weaving and flint knapping will be demonstrated while a storyteller will relate Native American tales.

Groups also may see the "Under Starry Skies" and "Search for Ancient Plainsmen" exhibits currently on display at the museum.

Texas Archaeology Awareness Week is a project of the Texas Historical Commission, office of the state archaeologist. The purpose is to promote public awareness and education to encourage and support the protection of archaeological sites in Texas.

Dinosaur displays

Workmen were busy this week preparing dinosaur exhibits at two California sites. Rich Solis, above, uses a bulldozer to tow a 47-foot Tyrannosaurus rex to its outdoor exhibit at the Marine World Africa USA animal park in Vallejo. T-rex will be included with 19 other creatures in the exhibit "Dinosaurs! A Prehistoric Adventure," which will open at the end of the month and continue through October. Employees at Universal Studios, right, move an 1,800-pound triceratops from Steven Spielberg's Academy Award-winning movie "Jurassic Park" into a sound stage that will be the site of the exhibit "Jurassic Park — Behind the Scenes." The interactive and educational exhibit will be open to visitors on the studio tour through May 30. It will feature several dinosaurs from the film, as well as Spielberg's private collection of dinosaur models.

Tabloids can expect reports of sightings of Elvis's stuff

By Rita Reif
N.Y. Times News Service

It's hip-swiveling time at the auctions. Over the next two months, Elvis Presley's persona will be recalled in music and memorabilia from Los Angeles to London to promote the sale in Las Vegas on June 19 of the largest collection of Presleyana ever auctioned.

Prior to the event, the organizer, Butterfield & Butterfield, will exhibit the 1,000 items at its auction galleries in San Francisco and Los Angeles and will send 100 important objects to previews in London and New York.

"I never idolized Elvis," says Jimmy Velvet, 54, the owner of the collection who was a friend of Presley's and the founder of the Elvis Presley Museums. "But I knew he was the greatest talent, a wonderful man and the most popular person in the world."

When Velvet met Elvis in 1955, both were starting out as rock singers — Elvis at age 20, Velvet at 15. But, says Velvet, he only came to know the King well in 1974, the year Elvis gave him a number of personal belongings — a shirt, a jacket and a suit as well as a silver limousine — none of which is in the forthcoming sale.

The plums of the auction include Elvis's platinum-and-diamond wedding band from his 1967 marriage to Priscilla Beaulieu, which may bring up to $75,000. Equally important is a country doctor's record of Elvis's birth and that of his stillborn twin brother, Jesse, on Jan. 8, 1935, in Tupelo, Miss.

It may realize as much as $80,000. Of the sale's three Elvis cars, a 1969 Mercedes limousine is expected to become the costliest, fetching up to $500,000.

Elvis was a gun lover and crack shot, and his .45-caliber Smith & Wesson revolver has TCB engraved in gold on the handle; the initials stand for his motto "takin' care of business."

The presale estimate is $60,000. The singer's American Express credit card from 1973, on the other hand, may bring far less — as little as $6,000.

In the excessive spirit of Elvis, Butterfield estimates exceed some of the highest prices ever paid at auction for Presleyana, including two records rewritten at Sotheby's last year: a Rolls-Royce limousine brought $170,500, and a jumpsuit was sold for $17,250.

At Christie's an acoustic guitar fetched $151,700, the best price brought at auction for one of Elvis's musical instruments.

Many of the superstar's pendants and bracelets, which jangled when he gyrated, are included in the sale's 75 pieces of jewelry. Among the glittering examples from the 1970s are a gold watch, initialed EP in 27 square diamonds, and a gold pendant in the shape of a lightning bolt and again the letters TCB.

His emblematic clothing ranges from vividly colored jumpsuits awash in sequins to conventional tuxedos and includes a blue coverall studded with silver four-leaf clovers.

How does Velvet's Elvis memorabilia compare with that at Graceland, the Presley shrine in Memphis?

"The things at Graceland were so important that Elvis didn't give them away," says Jack Soden, Graceland's board chairman. "He kept the pink Cadillac he bought for his mother, the guitars, the jewelry and certainly all the gold records."

Velvet is selling his Presleyana in an effort to diversify his holdings, which now include items from other stars. If all 1,000 Elvis pieces are bought, his collection will shrink to 150 items.

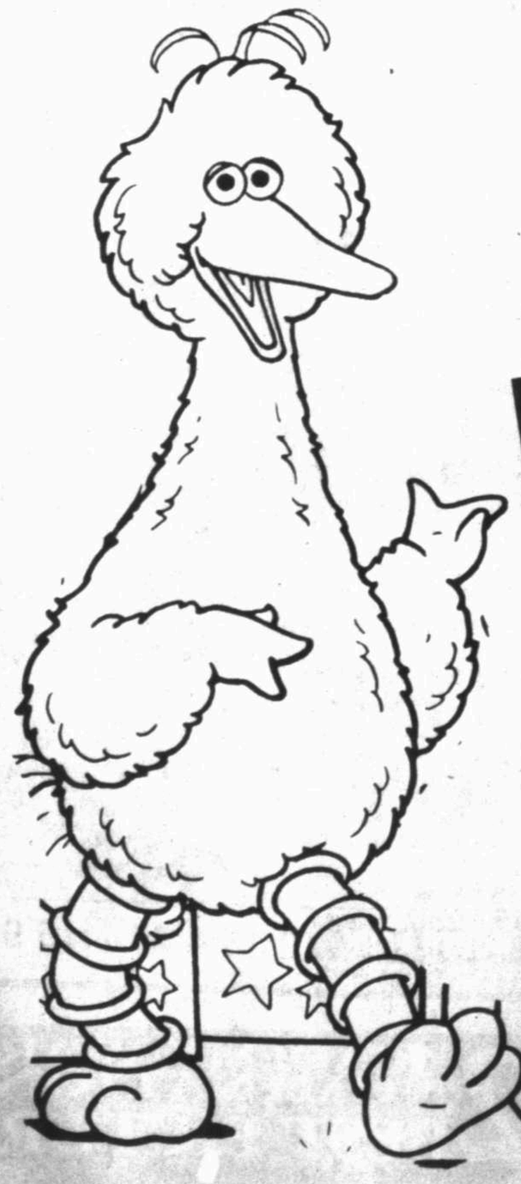

The original 15 or so personal possessions — a library card, some jewelry and Elvis's gifts — formed the core of Velvet's five Elvis Presley Museums. The first was opened in Memphis in 1978, a year after Presley's death, and others followed in Nashville, Orlando and Honolulu.

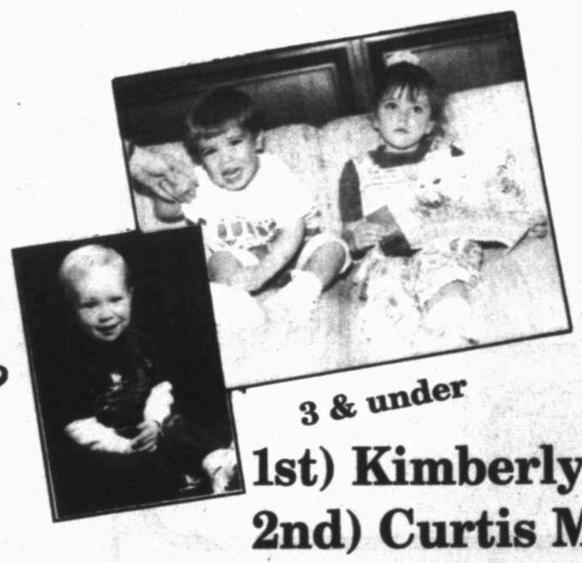

Today, only one museum, a traveling repository based in Branson, Mo., is operating. But Velvet remains active in the memorabilia business, incorporating the possessions of Presley with those of Elton John, Liberace, Elizabeth Taylor, Bing Crosby and Bruce Willis in his new ventures — a Legends and Superstars Hall of Fame in Nashville and a second one, scheduled to open in Branson on April 15.

"In my business," Velvet says, "you have to keep changing things to keep going."

Hanks' Oscars acceptance speech thrills high school teacher

By Edward Guthmann
N.Y. Times News Service

OAKLAND, Calif. — It was one of those great, heartfelt moments that you hope for in an Oscars telecast. There was Tom Hanks, comedian turned serious actor, accepting the Best Actor award for playing an AIDS-stricken gay attorney in the film "Philadelphia."

In an eloquent, emotional-filled speech that included a poetic reference to AIDS casualties ("The streets of heaven are too crowded with angels"), Hanks also saluted "two outstanding gay Americans" — his high-school buddy John Gilkerson and his drama coach at Oakland's Skyline High School, Rawley Farnsworth.

Gilkerson, a costume and set designer who worked with the Lamplighters and Oakland Ballet and also created the Christmas window displays at Gumps, died of complications from AIDS in 1989. But Farnsworth, retired and living in San Francisco, was watching the Oscar broadcast from his condominium.

"I thought Tom's speech was absolutely terrific," said Farnsworth, 69. "He had something he wanted to get off his chest, and he did it in a very beautiful way that inspired people."

Actually, Farnsworth knew beforehand that Hanks was planning to acknowledge him. "He called me last Friday afternoon," Farnsworth said. "He said, 'This is a former student of yours, Tom Hanks. Do you remember me?' Of course he was just pulling my leg. How could I not remember him?

"We talked a little bit and he said, 'The reason I'm calling you is, they've given me a ticket for the Academy Awards, and because of the nature of the film, I'd like to use your name and John Gilkerson's name in my acceptance speech — if you'd give me your permission.'

"I told him, 'I'm thrilled that you want to do that,' and he said, 'That's great.'"

Hanks and Farnsworth reminisced a bit, recalled the last time they saw each other, in the late '70s, and promised to stay in touch.

"I congratulated him on the Oscar nomination," Farnsworth said. "and then he told me, 'When I look at that camera Monday night, I'll be looking right at you.' I thought that was a very kind thing of him to say."

Farnsworth watched the Academy Awards at home with a friend. "We were going to have dinner but it never got on the table. We got a little tiddly instead. That's just this side of being sloshed — a little giggly, you know. We enjoyed every minute of the Awards."

The minute Hanks finished his speech, Farnsworth said, "The phone started ringing, and I was on the phone the rest of the evening. That's the other reason dinner didn't get on the table."

Farnsworth said that Hanks' talent was evident early on — especially in comedy. The future star appeared as Andrew Aguecheek, a self-infatuated fop in Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," played "a high-tempered, very intense stage director" in "The Potboiler" and took the comic role of Luther Billis, a lusty Seabee with a battleship tatooed on his stomach, in "South Pacific."

In the latter, Hanks performed a novelty song in drag, "Honey Bun," wearing a coconut-shell bra.

"He did all these bumps and grinds so the ship looked like it was rocking in the wind," Farnsworth said. "He was perfect. You didn't have to give Tom a lot of direction. He had a lot of natural ability and he could improvise and always be right on the mark."

Did he know that Hanks was bound for stardom? "It crossed my mind," Farnsworth said, "but I had other students, too, who I felt the same way about who haven't been able to do anything. I don't mean to put down Tom at all. He was just smart enough, and did all the homework, and ... must have had a tremendous manager and agent. He's gone right to the top."

Watching that ascent, Farnsworth said, "is certainly one of the biggest thrills in my life. To achieve the success that he's achieved — and to think that somewhere along the line I inspired him. It just really pleases me."

Being cited by Hanks as an "outstanding gay American" didn't make Farnsworth uneasy — although it would have at one time. Reared in conservative Kansas and coming from an earlier generation of gay men, Farnsworth always felt pressure to keep his sexuality a secret.

"I was a so-called closet queen and I would have been afraid of losing my job — especially in the Midwest." Farnsworth taught for 16 years in Kansas and moved to the Bay Area in 1968. But even in the Oakland's liberal school district, where "several on the faculty were also gay," he never declared himself gay. "It just never came up; I don't remember even discussing it with anyone."

Today it's different. "I more or less have told the people I'm still close to," Farnsworth said. "My parents are both gone, I'm an only child and I really don't have that many close relatives — just two cousins in Kansas City and another in Fort Lauderdale, who is also gay.

"In fact I got a call at 4 o'clock this morning from one of my cousins who read about the Oscars in the Kansas City Star. She said they misspelled my name but she knew who it was. I had told her some time ago about my lifestyle. Evidently, she's accepted it, because I hear from her all the time."

Children's theater workshop exercises imagination

By Diane Murray
San Angelo Standard-Times

SAN ANGELO — Thirteen girls and a boy named Brandon stand on the Angelo Civic Theatre stage for a drama exercise reminiscent of the party game Twister.

The fourth- through sixth-graders are participating in a Children's Theatre Workshop at ACT, the oldest continuously operating community theater in Texas.

Back-to-back, hand-to-head, ankle to knee, shoulder-to-elbow instructs workshop leader Maureen McQuade Siegel of the Zachary Scott Theatre Performing Arts School in Austin.

Then tell your partner something about yourself — favorite color, best friend's name — then switch partners and scramble more body parts.

All just a silly exercise with a serious intent:

Relax.

Drop those inhibitions.

Break that ice.

And work cooperatively with another human being.

"What is our equipment?" Siegel asks the young thespian wannabes circled around her.

"Props?" is the first tentative answer.

"Well, yes, we do use props," she answers.

"Lights and stuff?"

"Yes," Siegel nods.

"People?"

"Yes, exactly," she smiles. "People."

Fourteen kids smile back at Siegel.

"We have everything we need right here," she tells them, scanning the circle.

Fourteen kids look at each other. Then erupt with questions.

"What are we going to do?"

"Are we going to do a play?"

"Do we get to act?"

And then: "Umm, do we have to cross-dress," a girl named Jessica asks a bit uneasily. "I mean, am I going to have to act like a boy? Because I don't want to have to act like a boy."

"I've been doing creative drama sessions in elementary schools for about 15 years," Siegel says.

"I've been involved for about 10 years, and it's always interesting," says Matt Buchanan, the second of the two Zachary Scott Theatre instructors conducting the ACT workshops.

Siegel and Buchanan, who have worked with all ages of children, say that different age groups are handled differently.

"Junior high is a scary age range," Siegel says.

"Oh yeah," Buchanan agrees, "they're more worried about what that cute member of the opposite sex is going to think."

"Younger kids are just so willing to jump in," Siegel says.

"Mine are sure a spirited group," Buchanan says of his morning group of second- and third-graders.

"But they need more bathroom breaks," Siegel says.

"Yeah," Buchanan nods.

"Mostly, they just like to play," Siegel says. "We do, too."

"That's why we're in this."

Improvisation takes place in a place called The Where Circle.

One fresh-from-the-rodeo student "rides" into the center of the circle, swinging an imaginary lasso overhead. Recognizing the "where," other students hop to their feet, hang onto bucking broncs, throw down calves and offer play-by-play commentary of the bull-riding.

Other scenarios materialize: a double-dutch jump rope game, skiing (complete with feigned broken bones) and shopping.

Sometimes The Where Circle can be a difficult place to find.

"Help her out," Siegel says as one girl moves around the stage.

A baker's dozen stare back silently. No one moves. No one joins in.

"We're helping her as much as we can," a girl named Rebecca says in a deadpan tone. "What ARE you doing?"

Jenna, Carey and Tamara stand stage right, each portraying anger.

Each different.

"We've got three totally different responses there," Siegel points out.

"That's the really cool thing about drama.

"There's not just one way."

Life in The Fruit Bowl is a mad dash — but not chaotic.

Siegel and the students stand in a circle, and each person becomes a fruit: an apple, banana, cherry or grape.

When Siegel calls out a fruit name, every piece of that fruit must change places with a co-fruit. When she yells, "Fruit bowl," produce of every variety shifts.

"This is a focusing exercise," Siegel says. "Make sure you're helping your other cherries out.

"Learn to move without knocking others down.

"This is what improvisation is about.

"Look for an opening to contribute."

"We're all going to work together to make a giant machine," Siegel says.

Fourteen kids erupt into a beeping, humming, whooshing, swaying, clinking, jerking group machine.

"Everybody has to be part of the machine," Siegel says.

"Whiirrrr." "Beeeeeeep." "Buzzzzzzz."

"Now, let's speed it up," Siegel urges. "Huuummmmmm." "Screeeeee." "Clink-clink. Clink-clink."

"Remember to work together.

"Cooperate."

Exercises are done, limbering is complete and now the play's the thing.

The group decides on a tale of a turncoat boyfriend who alienates two best friends. Oh yeah, and a waitress who gets in a little harmless (well, basically harmless) retribution by "accidentally" dumping water in the guy's lap.

Hands fly up, and a dozen voices call out "I have an idea."

Siegel listens carefully, offers a compromise and gains a consensus from her actors.

"OK, this time more projection and a little more give and take," Siegel says.

"Curtain."

The old girlfriend gives the boyfriend an ultimatum. He leaves with his new girlfriend, who is his old girlfriend's former best friend. Got that? The rejected girl is comforted by another friend.

"And as you comfort her, lead her offstage," Siegel says.

The actors exit.

The cast erupts in self-applause and mock curtain calls.

"That's the end," Siegel says.

"And life goes on."

Then tell your partner something about yourself — favorite color, best friend's name — then switch partners and scramble more body parts.

Post-Oscars partygoers note void of luminaries

By Larry Lipson
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The Spagoless post-Oscar circuit was notoriously bereft of major luminaries following the Academy Awards ceremony Monday night, and many partygoers noted the void in the A list.

The Spago party of years past had earned the No. 1 stop-after spot with the late Irving "Swifty" Lazar as host. But as Holly Irwin of TV's "Home Show" noted after making the circuit in her limo, the stars must have been confused about where to go this year with Spago dark.

Irwin's evening had started off interestingly enough. She had the job of "seat filler," appointed to sit in the vacant seats of presenters, performers and award-winners, and said she luckily snagged Nicolas Cage's seat early in the three-hour-plus show. He never came back, and she viewed the rest of the Oscar show from a fourth-row-center seat.

After the ceremonies, she and others moved on to various night spots.

Morton's restaurant, initially considered the front runner in the Oscar party derby, turned out to be a tight private dinner hosted by Vanity Fair editor Graydon Carter and producer Steve Tisch.

An event at Chasen's, hosted by Hal and Cynthia Gershman as a fund-raiser for the Film Welfare League, drew a strong early crowd, including former movie queens Esther Williams and Ann Miller. One-time hit recording star Trini Lopez was asked how he came to be invited: "I don't know," he replied with a grin.

One of the early arrivals was preening blond comedian Ria Coyne, who wore a skin-tight black gown made of rubber.

Meanwhile, the buzz at Nicky Blair's, scene of last year's extra-hot Oscar wingding attended by "Unforgiven" director winner Clint Eastwood and his pals, was mostly about the sale of the restaurant.

"It's my last Oscar party," said actor-owner Nicky Blair. The restaurant, often described as the ultimate Hollywood hangout, will be turned into a deli in a couple of months, following its purchase by New York interests.

Martin Landau, at the Hotel Sofitel Ma Maison, was honored at an Oscar bash benefiting the Crippled Children's Society. "I go to the Oscars when I'm nominated and go to the parties when I'm not," Landau said. His last nomination was for the movie "Crimes and Misdemeanors" in 1989.

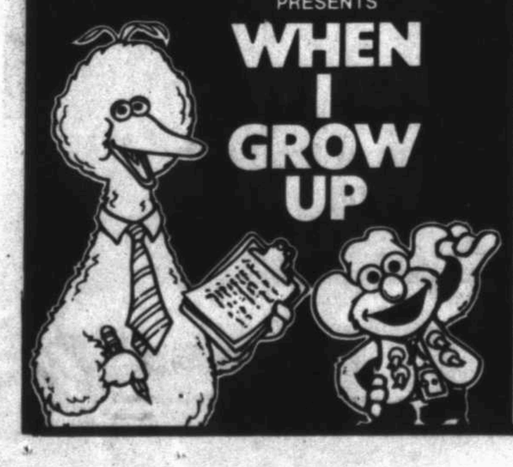

The Roxbury, a Sunset Strip restaurant and nightclub usually frequented by a younger Hollywood crowd, was packed on all three floors with Oscarcast viewing.

THOSE WITH A HEAD FOR FASHION

By Francine Parnes
Associated Press

Christian Dior said that without hats we would have no civilization.

Well, civilization may not be lost, but women certainly would lose some of their mystique.

They might also lose some of the perks that fine millinery, mostly variations of felt and straw, seems to command.

"Women are discovering that with a hat you get a better seat in a restaurant, more compliments and more introductory lines," Casey Bush says. She would say that. She's executive director of the Millinery Information Bureau, a trade association in New York.

She also says that spring hats are blowing out of stores. In fact, Bush says there's a lot of interest in fine millinery for all seasons. She cites industry sales of $663.5 million last year, about four times what they were less than a decade ago.

New York milliner Frank Olive says metallics are doing exceptionally well.

But some of the most charming chapeaux for spring are more traditional, laden with flowers typical of an English country garden. They're perfect with the whisper-soft fabrics and pale hues of the new season's ready-to-wear.

"I'm selling loads of romance," Olive says. "Hats this spring have a flirtiness to them, with jaunty bows, pretty silk poppies and roses, velvet violets, striped and grosgrain ribbons and lovely hints of color."

Brims are big, some 6 or 7 inches wide. The picture hat, Olive says, is flattering. "It frames the face and enhances the eyes," he says.

A real head-turner is what he calls his "convertible salad bowl" with a 6-inch brim. Of pliable straw, it begs to be worked. The brim can be rolled up or turned down to suit your mood.

Apropos culinary millinery, Linda Eastwood, a designer in Monarch Beach, Calif., between Los Angeles and San Diego, serves up a natural straw boater laden with vegetables.

If understated is more your style, consider a cloche.

"With its bell shape, it complements spring's A-line silhouettes of sweet slip dresses, granny dresses and baby dolls," Patricia Underwood, another accomplished New York milliner, says."

Newcomers to millinery might feel comfortable in a cowboy hat, plain or fancy.

"The cowboy hat is a very flattering shape that helps women who have never worn hats to make an easy transition," Eastwood says. "You put it on, you don't have to think about it.

This black beauty is for the sophisticate. From Betmar, the portrait hat is made of horsehair and sewn straw with two cabbage roses and a big bow.

MANUEL CUEVAS

THE BEST IN THE WEST

By Francine Parnes
Associated Press

Chances are you've never heard of Manuel Cuevas, but to Hollywood heavies and Nashville crooners he is the rhinestone cowboy couturier extraordinaire.

Manuel, who likes to be known by his first name, has a client list that reads like a Who's Who of country-western music. He's dressed the best of the West: Dwight Yoakam still wears the same hat that the 56-year-old Mexican designer blocked for him 15 years ago. Country singers Dolly Parton, Wynonna Judd, Hank Williams Jr., Randy Travis and George Jones have all sworn by him.

Manuel's roster also includes rockers such as The Rolling Stones, Neil Young and ZZ Top, and movie stars such as Sharon Stone, k.d. lang, Robert Duvall, Marlon Brando, Burt Reynolds — and Ronald Reagan.

Manuel's love for native costumes inspires him to travel to American Indian reservations in South Dakota and New Mexico for hand-woven Chimayo blankets — a dying art form — that he transforms into blanket jackets and coats in bright yellows, reds and blues. Sylvester Stallone and Bob Dylan have sprung for his jackets at $7,500 a pop.

"I visualize America as a continent, not a country, from Alaska to the southern tip of South America," says Manuel, a burly man who sports a shoulder-length salt and pepper mane, a bandanna around his neck, band collar shirt and cowboy boots.

"America has such a beautiful heritage, and I decided I was going to export it. We have so many ways of being what we are. We're all one family. I use Navajo weaving as well as Mexican and Chilean weaving.

"I try to mix and catch every mood of the American people," says Manuel. "So don't be surprised if you see a Western suit fully piped and embroidered, in a style that's like Calvin Klein."

Born one of 11 children in Coalcoman, Mexico, Cuevas had fashion in his blood from the start. As a 7-year-old he learned to cut and sew from his oldest brother Adolfo, a tailor, who also taught him leather tooling and bootmaking.

"I discovered fashion before I was eight years old, and since then I've never bought anything in a clothing store," says Manuel. "I grew up in a little town where everyone was very traditional and wore white for day or black for night. It was boring to me and I didn't like it. So as a kid I started making my own shirts with multicolored sleeves. The use of colors was like morning light and springtime."

After graduating from the University of Guadalajara, Cuevas, then 21, emigrated to the U.S. One of his earliest jobs was with Hollywood tailor Sy Devore.

But making regular clothes wasn't Manuel's calling, and after a few months he moved on to Nudie Cohen, the glitter-and-glitz Hollywood rodeo tailor.

As head designer for Nudie, Manuel learned his way around fancy embroidery and rhinestones and got his start making movie and stage costumes for James Dean, Frankie Valli and Clayton Moore (the Lone Ranger).

"That was one of the biggest marks of my career, since Clayton was one of the greatest heroes of my time. It was such a thrill for me to start doing clothes for the person I had admired so much as a child," says Cuevas, who remembers when he was seven years old walking five miles to the nearest theater to follow the adventures of the Lone Ranger.

Working at Nudie's reaped more than a job. Cohen became family when he married the boss' daughter, Barbara.

But neither the job nor the marriage was destined to endure, and after 14 years Manuel was divorced and began sewing solo in 1974 in a North Hollywood by-appointment-only showroom.

Manuel was equal to the challenge, positioned as a celebrated image-maker with even more celebrated clients.

He became known as the designer who made Johnny Cash "the man in black," dressed Elvis in second-skin jumps uits, and put the wagon wheels on country western singer Porter Wagoner's suits. He got John Lennon into an embroidered Western suit, dressed Linda Ronstadt in floral dresses for her Mexican tour and conjured up the wild window-wiper sunglasses made famous by Elton John.

"When I start making an image for someone, I never let my clients tell me what to do," says Manuel. "When I met Elvis, his manager said, 'Why don't you get your guitar from the car and show some of your movements?' When I saw him perform, I had the idea to make him a white jumpsuit with multicolored rhinestones and embroidery. But he said, 'A jumpsuit — is that like overalls?' I laughed and said, 'You hillbilly boy, you don't know about these things. It's a dancing suit.'

"Elvis had no idea what a jumpsuit was. But when he put it on, he felt he was in blue heaven, and the rest is history."

Three years ago Manuel closed up shop in L.A. and moved permanently to Nashville, a mecca for Western fashion that displays his designs in its Country Music Hall of Fame. He settled in Nashville with his second wife, Susan.

Though now divorced, they have a 7-year-old daughter, Jesse, who likes to play with pieces of fabric and rhinestones in her father's Nashville store, called Manuel. There's plenty there to capture a youngster's imagination: besides the glittery get-ups, the boutique is chockablock with Indian and Western jewelry and belts, engraved with silver, gold and rubies.

Manuel has an older daughter, Morelia, 25, from his first marriage, who lives with him and works in the shop designing window displays.

The family affair also includes Manuel Jr., 21, from a previous liaison. Based in Nashville, he's following in his father's footsteps, learning production and design.

Manuel still specializes in made-to-order, one-of-a-kind clothing for men and women.

"Everything is handmade," he says. "I have never been able to do duplicates. I tried, but it bored the heck out of me. And I felt I was bastardizing my career."

Remaining true to his career has paid off, says Jane Smith, who sells his clothes in her namesake Aspen and Santa Fe shops.

"At first I questioned the price points," admits Smith, who sells his jackets at $1,500 and up. "But the first weekend we had the line in Santa Fe, we went crazy. So many people were craving Manuel because he's the Armani of western wear. There's nothing better."

INTO THE NIGHT...

At night, women turn to a sophisticated look of soft silhouettes and flowing fabrics. Evening gowns and cocktail dresses will be seen along side long gauzy silk pants with soft robe-like jackets.

Lace is used for dresses and pantsuits, reminiscent of the late Audrey Hepburn in the film "Breakfast at Tiffany's."

Fashions tend to lean to the romantic side with many exciting, yet subtle touches...

This mahogany one-piece gown by Travilla at Robbie Casey's features a faux tunic of aloncon lace and a godet hem-line over a silk chiffon skirt. The skirt is split for a sensuous peek at the leg.
