Light housekeeping

City employee Frank Rodriguez Hernandez stretches to adorn the Christmas tree at Centennial Plaza with lights. The Jaycees' annual tree lighting ceremony for the tree is set for Friday evening. The Midland Chamber of Commerce will host the "World's Largest Office Party" at Midland Center from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m., just before the tree lighting.

Kohl proposing 'confederation'

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Chancellor Helmut Kohl today announced a plan to draw the two Germanys into an informal confederation that eventually would lead to reunification. West Germany's major opposition party also called for unity.

In East Germany, a Communist newspaper warned that society could collapse unless authorities stem emigration and punish corrupt officials. Hundreds of thousands took to the streets in five cities Monday night in what has become a weekly ritual to maintain pressure on the ruling Communists to enact reforms.

One of the biggest cheers among the 200,000 demonstrators in Leipzig came when a speaker urged a referendum on German unity.

East Germany's leaders oppose reunification, but a proposed confederation is being discussed. The government in East Berlin was expected to issue a statement on Kohl's remarks later today.

Kohl's 30-minute address to Parliament was the most thorough delineation of his vision of eliminating the partition imposed at the end of World War II.

In a 10-point plan, he proposed taking steps to "develop confederative structures between the two states in Germany in order to create a federation, a federal order."

He stressed, however, that such measures could only be undertaken if there are free elections in East Germany that include non-socialist parties. East Germany's new Communist leaders have said such elections could be held as early as next fall.

Kohl also said steps toward German reunification must be linked to improved East-West relations and a new European order based on cooperation, economic integration and greater freedom of movement.

Gold, pipers boost cost of tradition

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Dreams of a white Christmas may be the cheapest gift to give this holiday, but those with fatter wallets might want to consider something more traditional — the 12 Days of Christmas.

The cost of the 12 days as outlined in the carol rose almost $800 this year to $14,598.78, said J. Patrick Bradley, chief economist of Provident National Bank.

The 5.9 percent increase in the bank's seventh annual Christmas Price Index compared with a 4.8 percent increase in another CPI, the Consumer Price Index.

Since the gifts accumulate with each refrain into a shopping nightmare of 364 items, Bradley said a lovestruck swain would have to spend $70,961.21 to buy all 12 verses.

The bank turned to the Philadelphia Zoo for the costs of the fowl.

For the nine ladies dancing, the 10 lords a-leaping, the 11 pipers piping, and the 12 drummers drumming, it consulted the Philadelphia Dance Co. and the musicians union local chapter.

Seven of the 12 items remained at 1988 prices — the partridge and pear tree, turtle doves, French hens, calling birds, geese-a-laying, swans-a-swimming and maids-a-milking, Bradley said Monday.

But St. Nicholas forgot to tell the gold market Christmas was coming. The cost of five gold rings this year, according to a local jewelry store, rose 20 percent over last year's $625.

A local nursery informed Bradley that the cost of a single pear tree held at $24.95, a $5 drop from 1988.

As in other service industries, prices for the leaping lords and ladies dancing waltzed up 16 percent to $2,316 and $2,084.40, respectively.

"This increase in Christmas service industry prices mirrors what's actually happening in parts of the economy in the service sector. As a result, we are seeing an influx of people into service industry jobs," Bradley said.

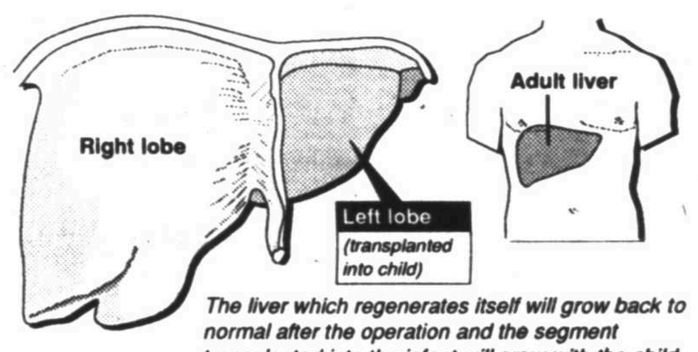

Here are the prices for each of the daily gifts:

- One partridge in a pear tree, $39.95, unchanged from last year.
- Two turtle doves, $50, unchanged.
- Three French hens, $15, unchanged.
- Four calling birds, $280, unchanged.
- Five gold rings, $750, up from $625.

Liver Transplant

A mother who gave a third of her liver to her 21-month-old daughter was the nation's first liver transplant from a living donor.

The liver which regenerates itself will grow back to normal after the operation and the segment transplanted into the infant will grow with the child.

Young recipient of mother's liver has surgery to relieve bleeding

CHICAGO (AP) — A girl who received part of her mother's liver in the nation's first transplant of its kind underwent nearly five more hours of surgery today to stop internal bleeding, hospital officials said.

Meantime, doctors involved in this country's first living-donor liver transplant upgraded the mother's condition to fair, said John Easton, a spokesman for University of Chicago Medical Center.

Despite internal bleeding that sent 21-month-old Alyssa Smith back into surgery, doctors predicted success for Monday's operations on her and her mother, Teresa.

During the night the surface of Alyssa's new liver began to bleed, a complication that occurs in about 30 percent of all liver transplants, Easton said by telephone this morning.

Former deputy police chief dies

From Staff Reports

Retired Midland Deputy Police Chief Jim Colburn, a 28-year veteran of the force, died this morning at Midland Memorial Hospital following an apparent heart attack at his home. He was 51.

Police spokesman Lt. Johnny Thompson said Colburn joined the department July 11, 1960, and served as Deputy Chief of Police from December 1986 until his retirement in March of this year.

Deputy Chief Ron Aaron said the death came as a shock to Colburn's former colleagues at the police department.

"He had many, many friends down here," Aaron said. "He was a good man and we're going to miss him."

Colburn was promoted to sergeant in March 1964 and worked in the Juvenile Division. In 1978, he was promoted to lieutenant and worked briefly as a detective.

In 1985, he was promoted to captain of the communications section and a year later took over as captain of the patrol division.

In December 1986, he was promoted to Deputy Chief of Police. He ran the field operations bureau and the support services bureau until his retirement.

Funeral services are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

County Commissioners vote to return tabulators

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

It's "one, two, three strikes, you're out" for a Dallas-based company's vote tabulating machine.

After three failed performances, Midland County commissioners have elected to return the optical scanning equipment purchased 18 months ago from Business Records Inc. and take advantage of their money-back guarantee.

"Representations have been made and they have not been fullfilled. It's taken a lot more manual input from the election judges than it should have with this technology," said Precinct 2 Commissioner Guy McCrary during discussions Monday with election officials.

"I'm of the opinion that we seek a tabulation system from another vendor," he said.

In a two-part motion, commissioners agreed to return the system and negotiate a lease purchase agreement with Hart Graphics Inc. of Austin, which had submitted a bid to Midland County when commissioners were shopping for new voting machines.

Although it may cost taxpayers more money, Precinct 1 Commissioner Durward Wright said the American Informations System distributed by Hart Graphics "has a proven track record."

Elections administrator Bettye Calvert had been critical of performance of the Business Records system, claiming it took too long to count the ballots.

House to vote on workers' comp compromise

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas House of Representatives Wednesday will vote on a workers' compensation reform bill that would toughen worker safety provisions but keep pro-business stances in key areas of benefits and dispute resolution.

House Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, said he hoped the House and Senate will agree on the version the House Business and Commerce Committee approved Monday.

The House panel accepted a version by Rep. Richard Smith, R-Bryan, which reinstated Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's business-oriented positions that were gutted when the Senate amended Hobby's bill this past week before sending it to the House.

"I have no reason to believe any (Senate) votes have changed," Lewis said later. "Just hopefully they have."

Smith, the main House sponsor, said he tried to include Senate amendments where they did not erode the bill. He expressed the hope that the Senate would accept the revised plan.

"I think there's an excellent chance," Smith said. While at least 17 of the 31 senators voted against Hobby and the House on those sections this past week, Smith hopes some senators will switch when it comes to a vote on the entire bill.

Hobby's bill was a "reasonable approach" to working out differences between the House and Senate over how injured workers should be compensated, Smith said.

The new House plan would keep Hobby's plan of using American Medical Association guidelines in figuring permanent impairments and supplemental benefits for workers who show additional loss due to their injuries.

The bill would allow informal dispute resolution in pre-hearing conferences, followed by an evidentiary hearing with an administrative law judge with review by a three-member administrative appeals panel.

District court juries could hear appeals of issues not resolved at the agency, but only evidence presented at the administrative hearing would be allowed at the trial.

While business groups applauded the House version, opponents such as Emmett Sheppard of the Texas AFL-CIO said it would require claimants to hire attorneys at the early stages of the process to make sure they did not waive any rights.

Czech premier calls for coalition

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — The Communist premier met with opposition leaders today and promised to push for a coalition government and elimination of the Communists' 40-year monopoly on power, a federal minister said.

Ladislav Adamec met for two hours with members of the Civic Forum group, who were fortified by a nationwide demonstration Monday against authoritarian rule that saw millions of people pack city centers.

Today, after 11 straight days of huge pro-democracy rallies, cities were quiet as Civic Forum said it was time to take the fight off the streets and to the negotiating table.

Marian Calfa, a federal government minister who was at the meeting, told reporters Adamec agreed to ask President Gustav Husak to appoint a new government that will include "non-party representatives, representatives of other political parties, and Communists."

Calfa said the new Cabinet would be made up largely of "experts and professionals" and did not say if opposition leaders would have a place in it.

He also said the federal government would propose to Parliament constitutional changes that would eliminate provisions guaranteeing the Communist Party a leading role.

Requirements that education must be on Marxist-Leninist lines also must be dropped, Calfa said, and the government will ask that provisions binding allied political parties to the Communists be dropped from the constitution.

Until now, these parties have been docile allies of the Communists. In recent weeks, however, they have played a much more independent role, with the Socialist Party playing the most prominent part.

Prague city authorities will be instructed to provide Civic Forum, which has been operating out of makeshift headquarters in striking theaters and art galleries around the capital, with premises for their activities, Calfa said.

"Some results have been achieved," said Civic Forum delegate Jan Carnogursky as he left the meeting, but he refused to give details.

Before the talks began, Civic Forum spokesman Vaclav Klaus said the opposition intended to offer Adamec the choice of creating a coalition government or facing opposition calls for his resignation.

Such calls already have led to the ouster of Communist Party chief Milos Jakes and several on the ruling Politburo who had resisted the East bloc reforms introduced by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

In further signs the Communist Party is moving to accommodate opposition demands, Jakes today resigned from his position as head of the national Defense Council, and the head of the federal Parliament, Alois Indra, also stepped down.

Jakes and Indra were among the hard-liners who lost their Politburo seats in a leadership shake-up Friday.

Monday's two-hour nationwide general strike — a festive affair of speeches, song and flag-waving — was the largest public display of opposition to the ruling Communists since they took power in 1948.

Opposition leaders held out the threat of further strikes if the popular will was not heeded. Any doubt that workers backed the pro-democracy movement was erased on Monday as shop floors across the country were idled.

On Monday, huge crowds of workers gathered in Bratislava, the east Slovak industrial center of Kosice, the mining center of Ostrava on the Polish border, and in Usti nad Labem, the heart of industrial north Bohemia.

Wintry weather moving east

Associated Press

Stormy weather blew east today after dumping up to 4 feet of snow in Utah, blowing roofs off buildings in Michigan and Ohio and stranding 200 cars and trucks on a slick highway in Iowa.

The storm threatened heavy snow today from the Great Lakes to northern New England, the National Weather Service said.

State police in Minnesota blamed one highway fatality Monday on snow from the big low-pressure system. Icy roads were blamed for three highway deaths in Montana on Sunday.

The storm system had dropped up to 4 feet of snow in parts of the Sierra Nevada during the Thanksgiving holiday weekend, and, with a boost from Great Salt Lake's moisture, it left just as much at Utah ski areas by Monday.

"Hallelujah is the cry from the ski resorts," weather service meteorologist William Alder said. "The cheers from the ski resorts can be heard in the valley, but the cries from the morning commuters in Salt Lake and Davis counties might drown them out."

Solitude ski resort got 52 inches of snow, Brighton got 47, Alta had 46, and Snowbird 44.

An avalanche warning was in effect for the northern Wasatch range in back-country areas above 7,000 feet and on slopes steeper than 30 degrees, said Bruce Tremper, director of the Utah Avalanche Forecast Center.

"There's good skiing out there (in the back country), but it's dangerous," Tremper said. The Cache County sheriff's office said a cross-country skier has been missing since Saturday in Logan Canyon.

In South Dakota, Galena, high in the Black Hills, got 18 inches of snow Monday. Four inches fell at Mount Rushmore, delaying a scheduled structural analysis of the national monument's granite faces, officials there said.

Up to 6 inches of snow combined with gusty winds caused difficult driving in west-central and southern Minnesota.

"The future structure of Germany must fit into the whole architecture of Europe as a whole," he said.

Kohl suggested the creation of consultative committees with East Germany, including a joint parliamantary panel.

"Such a coming together is in the interest of the continuation of German history," Kohl said.

Earlier, Hans-Jochen Vogel, the leader of the opposition Social Democrats, proposed a confederation between the German states as an interim step toward unity. He also insisted German unity come as part of the process of overall European integration.

Vogel used the word "unity" rather than formal "reunification" in his speech to Parliament.

In the past, the Social Democrats have cautioned against hastening toward reunification, and some in the leftist party have opposed it.

The ZDF television network said Kohl gave no dates for the completion of his plan in an earlier talk with governing party lawmakers. Kohl has previously said he envisions a reunited Germany existing peacefully with its neighbors and other countries.

The newspaper Bild said Kohl's plan includes setting up joint committees to coordinate cooperation in economic matters, crime prevention, ecology and other domestic areas, while "leaving membership to NATO and the Warsaw Pact untouched."

Government spokesman Hans Klein said Kohl may travel to East Germany on Dec. 19 for talks on his proposals. Leaders of both Germanys are under pressure to keep the reunification option open.

At the Leipzig rally, placards said "Germany United — Fatherland," and at one point some demonstrators chanted the slogan. Another banner read, "The Goal — One Germany."

One of the biggest cheers came when a worker, Helmut Neubert, called for a referendum on German reunification.

"The fundamental question of reunification cannot be only a matter for politicans. The people must decide whether they want it," he said.

West Germany's ultra-rightist Republican party issued an election platform Monday calling for a reunited Germany that would include territory lost in World War II.

She returned to the operating room at about 4:40 a.m. CST, and surgery was completed just under five hours later, at 9:23 a.m., said hospital spokeswoman Sue Sheerin.

"It's something they should be able to control," Easton said.

Both mother and daughter had been in critical condition in intensive care following Monday's 14-hour dual operations. But Mrs. Smith improved overnight and her condition was upgraded, Easton said. Alyssa was in critical but stable condition after this morning's operation, Ms. Sheerin said.

Monday's procedure was complicated when Mrs. Smith's spleen was damaged and had to be removed. Doctors, however, predicted a full recovery for her.

They planned to monitor Alyssa closely to see how the transplanted segment was working, said Dr. Christoph Broelsch, who led the surgical team in what he said was the first liver transplant from a living donor in this country.

Broelsch pioneered the technique for using segments of donor livers in 1984 while at the University of Hanover in Germany.

"She's in as good a shape as any child we see" at this stage after a transplant, he said.

Promising faster election returns with fewer mistakes, Business Records Inc. boasted that the system could read as many as 10,000 ballots per hour.

But when election day rolled around Nov. 7, the machine was unable to move at that rate. Election returns started coming in at 7 p.m. and the last of the 14,909 ballots wasn't counted until five hours later.

Bob Paxton, chairman of the elections resolution board, compared the machine to a photocopier that jams when the sheets of paper move through at too fast a rate.

"I think optical scan systems are the way to go, but these people are in the Stone Age," he said.

Paxton said the machine kicked out "perfectly good ballots" which slowed the tabulating process even further.

Under ideal circumstances, voters mark their paper ballots with a special pen and deposit the sheet into a sealed ballot box. Precinct judges then transport the ballots to election headquarters where they are fed into the machine and counted automatically.

Paxton said he was able to overcome problems with the system's audit trail with a manual inspection each of ballot kicked out of the system. But he said, "I'm nervous when a machine can't tell me what it's doing."

Mrs. Calvert had no quarrel with the machine's accuracy.

"It was counting them accurately," she said, "but on election night it kept jamming about every 10 ballots."

Midland County adopted the system in 1988 as a means of retaining the simplicity of a paper ballot for fast and accurate processing.

Although commissioners had several election systems from which to choose, they opted for the Business Records machine because they believed it to be among the most technologically-advanced equipment on the market.

They also thought the machine would reduce the risk of election fraud since the ballots are counted at election headquarters rather than at the polling places.

Costing $65,000, the system replaced dozens of 30-year-old lever machines that had become obsolete.

Hobby's original bill had no provision for arbitration but the House version offered binding arbitration by mutual agreement as a three-year pilot program.

The bill includes Hobby's provisions for worker health and safety, including a division in the new Texas Workers Compensation Commission that would collect statistical information, identify hazardous employers and penalize non-compliance with safety plans.

Jo Ann Howard, a member of the State Board of Insurance, also told the committee some employers with high accident rates may face as much as a 250 percent increase in rates as the board considers shifting the burden in the assigned risk pool.

She proposed a separate pool for small employers who have no accidents but are placed in the assigned risk pool because they cannot find coverage in the voluntary market. High-loss employers should pay a greater share of the $400 million in losses the assigned-risk pool had this past year, she said.

"I would assume if your rates in the pool went up 250 percent it would be extremely hard for an employer to pay that increased premium," she said. "I would hope that would be an incentive to improve safety."

But Rep. Troy Fraser, R-Big Spring, warned that such a rate increase could drive many employers out of business, including those who might be victims of fraudulent claims.

"For someone with a small premium, one claim and your experience modifier can explode," Fraser said. "Small 'ma and pa' businesses are the ones that are going to be forced out of business."

Howard also agreed with Rep. Steve Wolens, D-Dallas, chairman of the Business and Commerce Committee, that business owners should not expect fast rate relief.

Caps on medical costs might justify a rate reduction of 2-3 percent this spring, Howard said, but she agreed with Wolens that it would take three to six years before any reforms reduce costs in the system that could justify substantial rate reductions.

Rep. Jim Parker, D-Comanche, got no support for a bill based on the version that Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, and Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, offered in the Senate.

Rep. Al Price, D-Beaumont, in a personal privilege speech on the House floor, also suggested that many lawmakers have conflicts of interest over the workers compensation issue.

"We do have many conflicts of interest — people who have dug in so deeply in the trenches that we may never be able to accomplish anything," he said.

Lewis agreed to Price's request to seek an attorney general's opinion clarify what constitutes a conflict of interest for legislators.

Price later said he was not referring to any individual. "All I'm asking for is a guide for members. Some members don't know where the line is," he said.

It was boy's 'duty' to save buddy

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — Fourteen-year-old Matt Rimmer doesn't consider himself a hero just because he saved a buddy from electrocution.

"I was right there and I know CPR. Everybody else had run off, so it was kind of my duty," Rimmer said Monday, a day after he saved Clay Sonnier. "He's a good friend and I didn't want to lose him."

Sonnier, 14, was jolted by 480 volts of electricity Sunday after he took the cover from an electrical box mounted about six feet up a telephone pole and stuck in his hand.

Sonnier's body went rigid against the pole.

"I had to pull him off. I was lucky I didn't get shocked too," said Rimmer, a ninth-grader at Southwood High. "His eyes were real big. He was real pale. That scared me. I thought he was dead."

Other youngsters in the field panicked and started to leave.

"My little brother, Patrick, was at the gate, and I told him to go for help," Rimmer said. "I was down on my knees and I started patting Clay's face to get him to wake up. I started crying and praying. I asked God to help me."

Rimmer, who first took cardio-pulmonary resuscitation in a church youth group, said he believes God's help saved Sonnier.

He said he gave Sonnier CPR to start him breathing, listened for a strong heartbeat, then waited for the ambulance.

Sonnier was in a critical care unit at LSU Medical Center. His father, Jim Sonnier, said Clay was 90 percent recovered and might be released from the hospital Wednesday.

Clay Sonnier, a seventh-grader at Ridgewood Middle School, has not said why he removed the cover from the box. But his father said the whole family is thankful Rimmer was close by.

"Matt is a very cool-headed 14-year-old," Jim Sonnier said. "There is no doubt in my mind he saved my son's life."

Rimmer might have been electrocuted had the electrical box been higher voltage, said Southwestern Electric Power Co. communications coordinator Scott McCloud.

He said it's a 480-volt meter base which serves city oxidation ponds in the area. McCloud said the box is on city property and was properly insulated and protected, but someone apparently broke the seal and opened it. It had been repaired and re-sealed by Monday evening, he said.

Rescue workers search the wreckage of a Colombian airliner that exploded in the air before crashing near Bogota on Monday. Parts of the plane were scattered over a six-mile area.

Top Palestinian terrorist now suffering from cancer

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Abu Nidal, among the most feared Palestinian terrorist leaders, is hospitalized in the Libyan capital of Tripoli with what Algerian sources described today as "terminal cancer."

One Algerian medical source who recently returned from Libya denied a published report that Abu Nidal has been placed under house arrest by Libyan police in response to pressure from Egypt and the PLO.

"In reality, Abu Nidal is in a military hospital in Libya suffering from a cancerous metastasis which is probably terminal," the Algerian physician said. He insisted that his name be withheld.

Metastasis is the spread of disease from one part of the body to another.

Other Algerian sources recalled that Abu Nidal, 52, was treated in Bulgaria for cancerous complications several years ago.

The sources attributed the report, in today's New York Times, that he had been arrested by the Libyan authorities to officials in Cairo or Tripoli seeking to conceal the severity of his illness.

The Algerian doctor said he was summoned to Tripoli a week ago for consultations with a Libyan colleague. He denied having seen Abu Nidal himself.

Abu Nidal, whose real name is Sabri al-Banna, is wanted for terrorist acts in countries throughout the world. He has lived in Libya since his 1987 expulsion from Syria.

He allegedly played a leading role in crimes including the bloody attack on the Israeli delegation at the 1972 Olympic games in Munich and the 1985 hijacking of an Egyptian airliner in which 56 passengers were killed in Malta during a rescue attempt.

He is also blamed for the coordinated attacks on airline passengers in Rome and Vienna in December 1985.

In all, nearly 1,000 people have been killed or wounded in 20 countries due to activites by Abu Nidal's 15-year-old group, the Fatah Revolutionary Council.

The group has been at odds with the PLO for many years. Many of its major leaders have defected to the main body of the PLO recently, leaving Abu Nidal increasingly isolated.

In October 1973, a "war tribunal" of the Palestine Liberation Organization sentenced its former representative in Baghdad, Abu Nidal, to death for armed sedition, murder of PLO members, violating the "laws of the revoultion" and provoking conflicts within the organization.

The sentence was never carried out.

The Times quoted unnamed Arab diplomats and PLO officials in Paris as saying Abu Nidal had in recent days been confined to a compound near Tripoli because of pressure from Egypt and the PLO.

In October, President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt asked Libyan leader Col. Moammar Gadhafi to extradite Abu Nidal to Egypt or stop his organization's terrorist acts from Libya, the paper quoted PLO officials in Tunisia and Arab diplomats in Paris as saying.

The request was a condition for restored relations between Libya and Egypt, the Times said.

Pilots' group fears terrorism cause of Colombian crash

By STAN YARBRO

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — A pilots association spokesman blamed terrorists for the explosion and crash of a Colombian jetliner that killed all 107 aboard, and a caller to a radio station claimed drug traffickers bombed the jet.

Investigators early today kept working at the hilly site just south of Bogota where the Avianca Airlines Boeing 727-100 crashed Monday shortly after takeoff. Pieces of the jet were found up to six miles from the main point of impact, police said.

The Civil Air Authority said the pilot of the plane, which was bound for Cali about 190 miles to the southwest, reported no trouble to the tower before the plane fell.

"We definitely believe this was an explosion that pilots did not have time to report," said Col. Jorge Gonzalez, the chief of Colombia's Civil Aviation Authority.

Witnesses said the plane's midsection exploded, and the aircraft fell burning to the ground in three main pieces.

"Given the circumstances of the crash, I would say that it was a terrorist attack," a spokesman for Colombia's Pilots Association said in an interview. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

Hours after the crash, a caller to the Caracol radio network said the Extraditables, a terrorist group linked to the Medellin cocaine cartel, had blown up the plane in order to kill six police informants aboard.

The caller said the informants had told police the location of the jungle hideout of cocaine trafficker Pablo Escobar.

Police on Nov. 22 raided the camp 70 miles east of Medellin, but Escobar and another cartel leader, Jorge Luis Ochoa, narrowly escaped capture.

There was no way to check the authenticity of the call. Col. Gustavo Leal of the national police said a terrorist attack "could not be ruled out."

Colombian officials said they would send the flight recorder to the United States, where investigators from the Seattle-based Boeing Co. and the Federal Aviation Administration would examine it.

Late Monday, authorities finished recovering the bodies of six crew members and 101 passengers, many found strewn along the hillside. Only 16 of the victims had been identified.

At least one U.S. citizen, Andres Escabi, was among the victims, a U.S. Embassy spokesman said. Escabi, born in Puerto Rico, also held Colombian citizenship and lived in Bogota, the spokesman said.

Police at the crash site said 120 people had been arrested for looting the bodies, suitcases, packages, and mail. Several of the looters were caught removing rings and gold chains from the corpses, police said.

The government of President Virgilio Barco declared war on drug traffickers in August, and since then there have been nearly 200 bombings and other attacks that killed 29 people and wounded 236.

None was on as large scale as Monday's plane crash.

The Extraditables takes it name from the U.S. Justice Department's list of 12 Colombian drug suspects most wanted in the United States.

WORLD

Escobar, the reputed head of the Medellin cartel, tops the list.

The last major passenger jet crash in Colombia occurred March 17, 1988, when an Avianca Boeing 727-100 crashed into a mountain near the northern city of Zulia, killing 138 people.

Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer now 50

By MARGARET LILLARD
Associated Press Writer

Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer, who turns 50 this year, saved more than just Christmas when he pulled Santa's sleigh by the light of his famous snout. He saved his creator, Robert May, from financial ruin, May's daughter recalls.

"My father said that Rudolph was the only reindeer in history that kept the wolf from the door," said Virginia Herz, of Novato, Calif. "It was definitely the highlight of his life."

May was an advertising copywriter for Montgomery Ward in Chicago when he invented the little reindeer — originally called Rollo — as a promotional gimmick in 1939.

The store handed out millions of copies of the story annually until the paper shortages of World War II. It reintroduced Rudolph in 1946, but gave up the copyright to May the following January, his daughter said.

It proved a turning point for the May family fortunes.

May had the story commercially published with some success in 1947, and it was released in 1948 as a 9-minute theatrical cartoon.

But it was in 1949 that Rudolph really took flight, when songwriter Johnny Marks, married to May's sister, put Rudolph's story to music and it was recorded by Gene Autry.

"From what I hear, it was Gene Autry's wife who really liked the song a lot and encouraged him to sing it," Herz said.

The song sold millions of copies during the 1949 Christmas season, she said. In 1974, it became the basis for an animated television special.

Rudolph's popularity translated to concrete gains for the Mays, Herz said.

The family was able to move from a small apartment to a four-bedroom house — "the house that Rudolph built," May would joke — and the copyright residuals paid for college for May's six children.

The copyright now is held by a company formed by May's children and managed by Herz.

Before his death in 1976, May donated his original manuscript and the original pencil illustrations to Dartmouth College, which he attended. His children donated their collection of Rudolph memorabilia to the school's Baker Library, where it is displayed annually.

The display features a larger-than-life-size Rudolph statue that once graced the May lawn in suburban Chicago.

"People would drive by and show their kids, 'There's Rudolph,'" Herz said.

For Herz, sharing childhood with the world's most famous reindeer provided an interesting juxtaposition of real life and fantasy.

"Right after the song came out and Rudolph was still in his heyday, I was still believing in Santa Claus," she said. "Rudolph definitely existed for me. I just thought my father wrote a story about him. It was kind of a unique experience."

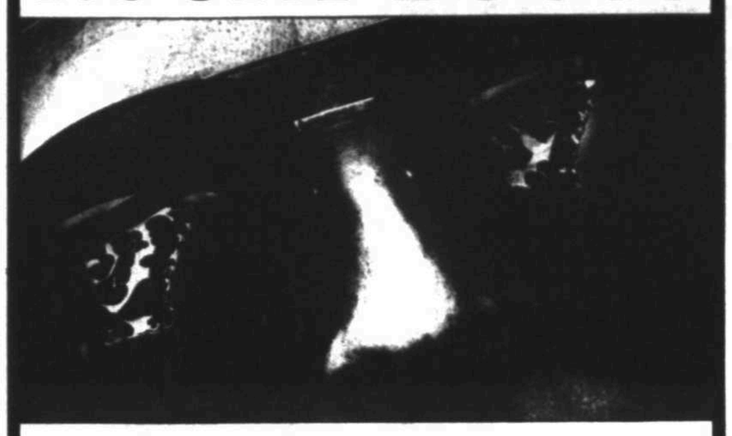

The Rudolph bonanza gave May a feeling of accomplishment he hadn't experienced before, she said.

"Being in the Montgomery Ward ad department all those years wasn't really that exciting," she said. "It was a real gift in the whole way that Wards had given it back to him, so it brought him a lot of joy."

May "was kind of an underdog," Herz said, hence his story of the reindeer that gets called names and refused entry into reindeer games.

"In a way, Rudolph is almost his story," she said.

Sunshine Bowl turns into players' nightmare

CHICAGO (AP) — Two pee-wee football teams set out last week for Florida to play in their league's Sunshine Bowl. Countless delays, a stolen bus and two decisive losses later, the players' dream trip had become a nightmare.

"The experience was like something you read in a horror book," said a parent chaperone Russ Hayes, who broke into tears. "It was very traumatic."

There was one consolation.

"Well, we got to Disney World," Hayes' 12-year-old son, Michael, said of the Thanksgiving trip. "The worst part was we didn't get much sleep."

On Monday — a day later than their scheduled return — 12 of the 116 players, coaches and chaperones returned to Chicago. Others were expected to straggle in by bus.

"It's been one terrible experience after another," Michael's mother, Jacqueline, said as she waited at O'Hare International Airport. "It's been a terrible nightmare for all of them."

"We're totally exhausted. We've had a very, very trying five days," coach Rino Liberatore said after stepping off the plane. "We lost the football game, we lost the bus, we lost our money, but hopefully we didn't lose our spirit."

The 1,100-mile bus trip to Florida got off to a bad start Wednesday night when one of the three rented buses arrived three hours late.

Things went downhill from there.

Once the teams got on the road, two of the buses broke down, filling with exhaust and causing many in the group to fall ill.

Delays for repairs made the players arrive 13 hours late in Orlando, Fla.

The 9- to 14-year-old members of the two Chicago teams had to cut short a visit to Walt Disney World and rest up for the next day's games against two Florida teams.

Then, while they were playing, one of the buses was stolen — along with at least $3,000 in cash donated to help pay for the trip and many wallets belonging to the travelers.

To make matters worse, the teams lost their games — 22-0 and 48-6.

"I wasn't into the game a lot," said Michael Hayes, a running back from Burlington, Wis. "I was still thinking about the trip."

The players, from the Pop Warner League, earned the money for their trip after winning the bowl invitation in local play.

The teams financed the trip by selling candy and collecting contributions. Local corporations, including the Chicago Bears, matched the sum collected by the youngsters.

Team officials blamed the problems on Falcon Motorcoach Co., complaining that the Chicago company rented them buses that were old and poorly serviced.

"We've been put in a situation that I don't think anybody should have to when they're traveling on the road like that with a group of kids," said Liberatore, adding that he hopes to get a refund from the bus company.

Michael Hayes said he was glad to be home. Despite all the problems, he said he'd go on such a trip again — under the right conditions.

Bush to protest behavior of Soviet allies

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush will protest to Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev during their weekend summit against the "outrageous behavior" of Moscow's Central American allies, but also will be prepared to discuss deeper troop cutbacks in Europe, officials say.

The subject of Central America was assured a more prominent place in Bush's talks with Gorbachev on Saturday and Sunday after the discovery of a shipment of surface-to-air missiles reportedly sent by Soviet-backed Nicaragua to leftist guerrillas in El Salvador.

State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler on Monday called the arms shipment a "dangerous escalation of conflict" in El Salvador.

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said Bush "will press the Soviets to take action to ensure that their allies cease this outrageous behavior."

Bush and Gorbachev will meet on warships in the Mediterranean off the coast of Malta primarily to talk about the rapid pace of change in Eastern Europe as hard-line communist regimes are collapsing.

Fitzwater said Bush has been studying "a wide range of military options" involving troop levels in preparation for his meeting with Gorbachev and in planning for a scaled-down defense budget he will submit to Congress next year.

"The president will have in his mind all of the options that are available to him," Fitzwater said. "The president wants to be in a position to discuss the situation with the Soviet leader, to be responsive and to be in a position to then go to our allies and say, 'Here's what our discussion produced, here are his ideas, here are my ideas, now where do we think we might want to go.'"

After two days of talks with Gorbachev, Bush will fly to Brussels, Belgium, to brief NATO allies next Monday.

In May, the allies approved Bush's proposal to reduce U.S. and Soviet troop levels in Europe to 275,000 on each side — requiring a 300,000-person cutback in Soviet forces and a 30,000 reduction in U.S. troops.

Fitzwater said Bush and Gorbachev would talk about arms control and military force structure. "Those discussions will bear on future decisions about changes in our own military posture."

He said reductions in Soviet forces beyond the level proposed by Bush would enhance stability, reduce the risk of war and be welcomed by the United States.

"It is only logical that substantial further reductions in Soviet forces would lead to changes in NATO's military posture," Fitzwater said. However, he said any changes would have to take place within the structure of the Vienna-based talks on reducing conventional forces in Europe.

"Any actions that we would suggest or recommend would only be with the approval of our allies," Fitzwater said.

Meanwhile, the State Department said the United States had lodged a formal protest with the Soviet Union at the embassy in Washington over the missiles that turned up in El Salvador.

There were 24 SA-7 missiles and 21 rounds for a Soviet-designed mortar aboard a Cessna aircraft that crashed in eastern El Salvador, the State Department said.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze had promised Secretary of State James A. Baker III in September that the Soviets had stopped direct weapons shipments to Nicaragua. Baker said at the time he did not challenge that assertion.

But the State Department has said since then that Soviet bloc weaponry continues to pour into Nicaragua, some of it after shipment through Cuba or Nicaragua.

Fitzwater said, "Despite Soviet promises to use their influence for peace in Central America, it is clear the Sandinistas and their Marxist allies continue to destabilize the legitimate democracies of the region."

Privately, U.S. officials said Monday the Soviets may be having trouble restraining Managua and Havana from supporting the leftist rebels.

Both sides plan to have electronic ears open during weekend summit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The meeting between President Bush and Mikhail Gorbachev this weekend will be a summit not only for diplomats but also for electronic spies.

Both will bring their best eavesdroppers, newest electronic equipment, most sophisticated encoding machines and most accomplished countermeasure experts to the Mediterranean shipboard rendezvous, according to knowledgeable officials and observers.

"If anybody wants to study antennas, that's the place to go," said James Bamford, author of a book on U.S. electronic spying.

Experts in and out of the government paint this picture of spying opportunities as the two long-time adversaries grow closer together:

■ It is possible, but unlikely, that the Soviets could eavesdrop on private strategy sessions between Bush and his aides without U.S. knowledge. It would be tougher for U.S. agents to listen in on Gorbachev. Either side would be risking big embarrassment if caught.

■ The meeting aboard U.S. and Soviet missile cruisers in Malta's Marsaxlokk Bay is more secure from such eavesdropping than any site the U.S. side could have picked except Washington.

■ Each president's communications with experts at home will be intercepted by the other side although it appears both are so well encrypted that the other side cannot read them.

■ The signals will be preserved, perhaps for years, by both sides in the hope that a defector or a technological breakthrough may one day unlock the clear text.

The toughest trick would be to monitor either Bush or Gorbachev in strategy sessions before and after their face-to-face meetings.

"You would have to get a device on board," said Harold Lipsett, a San Francisco detective renowned for eavesdropping expertise.

"Maybe you can bug the room," Lipsett said, noting that devices are small enough to be concealed easily on anyone. "But getting the signal out would be extremely difficult, because there's heavy metal surrounding all the rooms on a ship. I would hate the assignment."

Soviet spies may have had more opportunities than U.S. agents to plant a bug since this meeting was proposed last July.

U.S. media reported on Oct. 31 that Bush would stay aboard the U.S.S. Belknap, but both governments probably knew the ship's identity before then.

The Belknap was in the DCAN shipyard in Toulon, France, from August until Nov. 8, being overhauled and getting better communications equipment. The shipyard employs 5,000 civilians, who belong to either a Socialist-led or Communist-led union.

In addition, 12 U.S. sailors have been investigated or prosecuted during the 1980s for espionage-type activities, but only one, Michael Walker, was aboard ship and under Soviet direction. His father, John, and their accomplice, Jerry Whitworth, had been spying for the Soviets from Navy ships earlier but left the Navy before they were caught.

Three shipboard spies in a Navy with more than 650 ships represents fairly long odds for having someone in the right place to plant a bug, the experts said. On the other hand, no one recalls any U.S. spy caught in the Soviet Navy.

Lipsett said, "It's more secure than any land site, where you have many more opportunities to get in or even to build microphones into the walls."

A former government expert, who declined to be identified by name, said the Secret Service's best technical security specialists will sweep the U.S. rooms regularly, perhaps non-stop, with equipment that generates a spectrum of signals to activate hidden transmitters.

He said the service's monitors are fine-tuned to pick up "piggyback signals" — millisecond transmissions a fraction off the frequency of commercial radio or television broadcasts, where they look or sound like a blip of static.

But Bamford said, "I think the Soviets are more advanced in miniaturization of undetectable bugs." They have bugged the U.S. Moscow embassy repeatedly without detection for years.

From 1945 to 1952, a wooden Great Seal of the United States — later displayed by Henry Cabot Lodge at the United Nations — monitored the U.S. ambassador. Microwaves or radio waves were beamed through a window at the seal, which contained a cavity resonator that vibrated to the sounds in the room. The reflected waves allowed the Soviets to hear conversations.

But the government expert said any portholes would be covered by curtains with metal threads to thwart transmissions into or out of the Belknap.

The Soviets also concealed miniature transmitters in embassy typewriters from 1976 until 1984.

And in 1985, work was halted on a new embassy building because U.S. experts were no longer confident they could dismantle all monitoring devices concealed there. "There were hundreds, thousands of real and fake devices in concrete we let the Soviets deliver to the site," one congressional source said. "The steel reinforcing bars were installed to turn the whole building into a transmitter."

Midland students spotlighted in NYC

New York City is a world-class city that is home to thousands of talented artists and singers. But where talent and motivation are concerned, even the Big Apple doesn't hold a patent and recently it received a sampling of a small part of Midland's talented youth community. More is on the way.

Two Midland High School cheerleaders, Kerstin Krall and Jennifer Foster, were among 300 high school "spirit leaders" from throughout the nation who marched in the 63rd annual Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade in New York City last Thursday. The girls were selected on the basis of their performance at National Cheerleaders Association camps held throughout the nation last summer.

It was an honor the girls will long remember and a feather in Midland High School's cap. But it wasn't the only honor Midland High's student body has received in recent weeks or the last visit to the Big Apple by MHS students.

Early in November it was announced that the Midland High School chorale has been invited to participate in a concert scheduled for May 6, 1990, in New York City's Carnegie Hall. The Midland High School chorale will be one of only five choral groups from throughout the United States invited to participate in the special performance, and thus the invitation is a noteworthy honor.

The chorale currently is attempting to raise the $50,000 the New York City trip is expected to cost and any contributions to that cause will be appreciated. Those interested in helping the group reach its monetary goal should contact Kay Miller at Midland High School by calling 689-1129.

It's always pleasing to see Midland's young people achieving success in their endeavors, but it's particularly noteworthy when the students are spotlighted for their excellence. Congratulations certainly are in order for the two cheerleaders and all the students in the Midland High School chorale!

Tolerance is lesson

A diverse and interesting reading list materialized when the nation's governors were asked to name their favorite childhood books. One impression stood out: Mark Twain and his novel,"Huckleberry Finn," occupied a special place in the formative years of today's leadership generation.

Animal tales were frequently mentioned — "Black Beauty," "My Friend Flicka" and "Lassie Come Home." The Bible was mentioned several times. But Mark Twain led with 22 mentions — 10 for "Tom Sawyer" and the rest for the story of the adventurous Huck.

"Huckleberry Finn" has been under fire in recent years by people who claim that today's young people should be shielded from dialect that is now considered racist. In some places, parents or pressure groups have tried to get the book banned from required reading lists or put on a special shelf in the library. But "Huckleberry Finn," besides being a classic and a thoroughly entertaining tale, has a lot going for it, as the governors' responses indicate.

The book is far from being racist. It makes a subtle, enlightened and, for Twain's day, radical argument against racial hatred and misunderstanding. Jim, the runaway slave who accompanies Huck on his travels, is a complex, compassionate character whose humanity helps open Huck's eyes to a more mature understanding of life. The fact that the book uses the vernacular of the day — among other things, calling blacks "niggers" — would be a poor excuse for rejecting what some critics consider one of America's greatest literary works.

Moves to censor "Huckleberry Finn" reflect a narrowness of spirit. Did the governors who now treasure Twain's stories develop into twisted racists who have no understanding of the plight of black Americans? William O'Neill of Connecticut, Bob Martinez of Florida, Robert Casey of Pennsylvania, Henry Bellmon of Oklahoma and 18 more ... are they all wrong about the book?

Mark Twain's adventure stories have withstood the passage of time, though their language may now sound archaic. A book set in modern times that used similar language might be more offensive. But Twain's timeless story of Huckleberry Finn, including the introduction of Jim and their raft trip down the Mississippi River, still offers young readers more than entertainment. It also offers a lesson in tolerance.

Once again, Riegle helps a 'friend'

WASHINGTON — Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich., has accused the Environmental Protection Agency of interfering with the rights of one of his good friends to turn a wetlands into a golf course. The EPA is worried about the environmental impact on wildlife, but Riegle thinks someone in the EPA is "jimmying the process."

Jack Anderson

The senator should know "jimmying" when he sees it.

He has made headlines for his alleged efforts to interfere in the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's regulation of the now-failed Lincoln Savings and Loan. Lincoln's owner, Charles Keating, was a heavy contributor to Riegle's campaign. When the bank board tried to crack down on Lincoln, Riegle and four other senators allegedly pressured the bank board to back off. Now Lincoln's failure is shaping up to be the most expensive single bailout in the savings and loan crisis. The senators are under investigation by the FBI and the Senate Ethics Committee.

Riegle apparently takes the job of constituent services seriously. In September, Riegle's office got a call from Robert Kuras, developer of the Homestead Resort on the Crystal River in northern Michigan. Kuras wants to add a golf course, and that means filling in part of a wetlands. He called to complain that his environmentalist opponents, Friends of Crystal River, had hired an expert witness to testify for them. That witness just happened to be a government employee — a soils specialist for the U.S. Soil Conservation Service.

A Riegle staffer went into action and called the Soil Conservation Service to question whether its employees were allowed to hire themselves out as consultants and expert witnesses.

Not surprisingly, the Soil Conservation Service jumped. The night before the soils expert was to testify, he was called by a Soil Conservation Service official and ordered not to. Department officials had concluded that his testimony would exceed the scope of his permission to do outside work. He complied with that order.

Why did Riegle's office take an interest in the project? A staff member told our reporter Greg Moore that it was simple constituent services — solving problems for the taxpayers back home. But Kuras is no ordinary constituent. Riegle and Kuras admit they are good friends. Kuras and his wife, Susan, gave $2,000 to Riegle's 1988 Senate campaign.

Kuras says he supports Michigan's unusually stringent environmental regulations, and he insists his development will be sensitive to environmental concerns.

But an official at the EPA's regional office in Chicago has gotten that agency involved in the debate on the grounds that the golf course would be next to a national lakeshore, the wetlands are an important wildlife habitat, and the fertilizers on the proposed golf course could pollute the Crystal River.

Riegle has publicly said that the EPA is interfering with the process for political reasons, but a Riegle staffer could supply no evidence to back up that charge.

THE NEXT TREMOR — America's architects are proud that their buildings stood up so well to the California earthquake. Now they're wondering if they can stand up to liability suits.

A survey by the American Institute of Architects shows that insurance is now so costly, half the nation's architects go without.

Last year, 13 percent of all architects were hit by a legal claim. Many were nuisance suits, but even the wildest legal challenge needs to be defended, sometimes at prohibitive costs.

One world-renowned New York architect told us that, in the face of a $100,000 annual insurance premium, he is thinking of quitting design and going into teaching or consulting. "I look on architecture as art, not court pleadings," he said.

The irony is, the safety of his buildings has never been challenged, but he still must pay high premiums. "You lose even when you win," he complained.

The survey showed why this attitude is becoming widespread. The cost of premiums in 1988 accounted for 5.6 percent of architects' gross billings.

The American Institute of Architects has lobbied for bills to reduce liability costs, warning that some of America's best young architects are getting discouraged before they start. But, as with suits against other professions, it is hard to contrive a law that would bar legal recourse.

As it is with medical lawsuits, the costs of suits over building safety eventually are passed on to the consumer — the buyer or the renter. In some cases, that's the taxpayer who pays for government buildings.

Is Berlin experiencing illusion of freedom?

When I watched the network anchors at the Berlin Wall, I was reminded of the television comic Ernie, who used to say, "Deja vu, Vern, you know what I mean?"

Charley Reese

Deja vu is a French phrase for the phenomenon of feeling as if we had experienced the same thing once before. And what I was reminded of was the optimistic blather during the Chinese demonstrations prior to the massacre at Tiananmen Square.

Part of the problem is with the nature of TV. Anchors cost a lot of money. Sending them somewhere costs a lot more. So when they get someplace and the facts can be told in 10 seconds, they feel they have to fill up the air time and they fill it up with speculation.

The brief facts in regard to East Germany are these: the communist government has decided to open a few places in the Berlin Wall and to lift travel restrictions. Some 300,000 first-line Soviet combat troops with tanks and equipment remain in place in East Germany (and more remain in place elsewhere in eastern Europe).

That's about all we know at this point. Freedom has not come to East Germany. A younger set of communist rulers have replaced an older set. The people want freedom, as they always have. Right now, when they demonstrate, no one is shooting them. From that alone we cannot infer that tomorrow someone will not shoot them.

It pays to recall that building the Berlin Wall in the first place was a flagrant violation of the Four Power Agreement, one of about a thousand examples of the Soviet Union unilaterally going back on its word in a treaty. President John F. Kennedy protested and mobilized troops but then backed down. The present East German government, therefore, deserves no credit for allowing a few openings in an illegal wall.

We should also keep in mind that East Germany is a different situation than Hungary and Poland and Czechoslavakia. The Germans on both sides of the Iron Curtain want to be reunited and this desire has nothing to do with socialism or capitalism or the Cold War for that matter. If the choice were leave East Germany and go to France, for example, I don't think you'd see the same numbers.

Nevertheless, as I wrote more than a year ago, the courage of the East Europeans, the Baltic peoples, and others inside the Soviet empire has pushed the limits far beyond those intended by Mikhail Gorbachev. Thus, the Soviet leader has been put on the horns of a dilemma.

Does he let the empire disintegrate in order to deceive the West into disarming or does he show his iron teeth early, thus holding the empire together, but alerting the West not to be as stupid as it appears inclined to be? It also presents us with a serious challenge: how to help the people gain their freedom. We certainly will not do that by repairing communism with loans and trade. For once, we should not buy the people's jailors a new club and a new jail key.

In the meantime, we should remember that what small gains the people have, they have been permitted to have by a totalitarian regime in Moscow which retains in place the power to shut it all down over night anytime it chooses. A freedom which the people themselves do not have the power to defend is only an illusion of freedom.

Gorbachev is setting up the West for some dirty work he has in mind. I do not believe humans being change radically, and Gorbachev is the product of a murderous, treacherous system which has no regard for human life much less other rights. The last time a person really changed it was a guy named Saul and God had to knock him off a donkey with a lightning bolt just to get his attention.

So don't get too euphoric. You know what I mean, Vern?

PEGGY ROBERSON

Red Rock native Pat Choate 'an idea man'

WASHINGTON — Pat Choate, economist and native of Red Rock, Texas, was No. 72 on a list of "the 100 most influential people in private Washington" published last year by Regardie's, a high-powered local business magazine.

Peggy Roberson

If a new list was to be made, Choate's name probably would move up several notches. His proposals for enhancing U.S. competitiveness in the world marketplace have been adopted by nearly every member of Congress.

Choate's main job is vice president for policy analysis at TRW, a multinational corporation specializing in the high-technology side of the defense business as well as information services.

The company, with 73,000 employees, is big enough to hire Choate for a six-figure salary to do nothing but think. But he writes books and articles, makes speeches, is a television show panelist, and gives interviews as well.

At TRW, he said, his task is "to identify issues and trends in national policy and to think about them long in advance — before positions are polarized — so that we can constructively involve ourselves."

Choate is a pragmatist who is happy to share his ideas. The New York Times two years ago described him as a "policy entrepreneur," a person who — like a private-sector entrepreneur — creates the venture, invents the concept of the product and then markets it.

"The difference," according to William A. Galston of the Roosevelt Center for American Policy Studies, is that "Pat Choate's working with political capital, not cash."

Choate's payoff is the gratification from bringing about change. He has a knack for coming up with words and phrases that work their way into the business and political vocabulary —"competitiveness," and "portable pension plan," to name a few.

"Competitiveness" gained currency in 1982 after Choate wrote a paper for the Business-Higher Education Forum, calling for a comprehensive national strategy to preserve a strong U.S. role in the global economy. He had plenty of ideas, including worker retraining and increased investment in high technology.

It was a time when protectionists were fighting with free traders. Choate had allies with both Democrats and Republicans and he helped bridge partisan and philosophical differences. The result was the creation of the Congressional Caucus on Competitiveness, a legislative clearinghouse for ideas about heightening U.S. business vitality in world markets.

Recently Choate has gained increased visibility as a panelist on a new, locally produced television talk show, "Money Politics," that soon may be syndicated nationally.

The genial 48-year-old Texan, who describes himself as "a knee-jerk moderate," often squares off with conservative columnist Robert Novak on the show. To illustrate the show's verbal jousting, Choate described proponents of a capital gains cut, which Novak favors and he opposes, as "hogs fighting to get in the trough ... and President Bush is the chief hog caller."

"In Texas, you stand on your own feet," Choate said in a luncheon interview last week. The great-great-grandson of Texas pioneers, Choate is the offspring of cotton-farming parents whose values were shaped in the 30's.

"Those were good values. You don't have a damn bit of fear of saying what you think. If people like it, fine. And if they don't like it, fine. You stand behind your ideas and your work."

The reason that he clashes with Novak, he said, laughing delightedly, "is only because he's wrong."

The program, which has attracted a dedicated following among policymakers and journalists here, explores the intersection of money and politics. That intersection, he said, fueled the collapse of the Lincoln Savings and Loan Association in California. Five senators who attempted to persuade regulators to hold off on action against the S&L's head, Charles H. Keating Jr., are under investigation by the Senate Ethics Committee for allegedly trading their influence for campaign contributions.

"There's no 'allegedly' to it," Choate said. "It's all influence."

In his opinion, such influence peddling won't cease until voters consent to public financing of House and Senate campaigns.

The public will soon grasp the importance of ending the influence of money in politics, he predicted. "This scandal is going to cost $300 billion," he said. "The cost of cleaning up the Keating case alone would finance all of our congressional elections well into the 21st Century." Congress, which "deregulated" America during the Reagan administration is sure to "regulate" in the years to come, he said.

Choate is writing a book on how the Japanese and Europeans and others lobby in America. The book, "Agents of Influence," documents the politicking, lobbying and propagandizing by thousands of U.S.-based agents of foreign countries.

Choate, a self-effacing, friendly man who has no known enemies, said he is likely to be less popular when the book hits the stores.

Soviets still bombing, claims Afghan resistance leader

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the U.S.-backed Afghan resistance says he wants America to supply high-altitude anti-aircraft weapons for use against Soviet bombers he says are flying against his forces from Soviet territory.

Sibghatullah Mojaddedi, who met with President Bush at the White House on Monday, also said he hopes Bush will tell Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev at their summit next weekend to drop his support for the "puppet regime and the communist government" in the Afghan capital of Kabul.

"Unfortunately, the free world thinks that the Russians have withdrawn completely from Afghanistan," Mojaddedi told The Associated Press in an interview after his meeting with Bush.

"Still, the Russians are bombing our people, the mujahedeen (guerrillas), from their own territory," he said, speaking very formal but very clear English.

"I told President Bush that we must be strong in the military field or no political solution will come," said Mojaddedi, who is the president of the Afghan Interim Government. The government was formed in exile in Peshawar, Pakistan, as the Soviets withdrew the last of their 115,000 troops from Afghanistan last February.

Bush and Mojaddedi did not talk about the summit, the Afghan leader said, adding, "it is up to him whether he discusses it with Gorbachev or not. I think that President Bush probably will speak to Gorbachev about the Afghanistan issue because it is a very important international matter."

The Afghan leader said that during the White House meeting, Bush "promised us his support and assistance."

White House Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater said in a statement that Bush "reaffirmed our support for the Afghan resistance's efforts to achieve self-determination and also expressed U.S. interest in a political settlement."

He said Bush "called upon the Afghan Interim Government to continue and increase its efforts to fashion a stable, broadly based government responsive to the needs of the Afghan people."

Mojaddedi said deliveries of U.S. weapons to the mujahedeen guerrillas of Afghanistan resumed two months ago, after a break of eight months.

"There was a gap. We do not know what the reason was. We suffered from that. We hope that it will not happen next time," he said.

"Two months ago, (deliveries) resumed. The commanders of the mujahedeen have been more effective these two months. They have achieved great progress in many areas, and have captured a number of strategic posts and many weapons, and even tanks from the enemy," said Mojaddedi.

"The biggest need of the mujahedeen now is weapons to use against the air force, which bombs from a very high altitude," he said.

"Up till now, we have not asked" for high-altitude anti-aircraft weapons, he said. Before his delegation leaves on Friday, he said, "we want to ask ... We are asking for all kinds of weapons."

Despite the Red Army withdrawal, the Soviets have greatly increased their military aid to Kabul, sending between $300 million and $400 million a month in arms.

TVA paid $172,700 to fly manager to work

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Tennessee Valley Authority paid $172,700 to fly a manager between his Tennessee office and his Virginia home for a year because officials believed the man would otherwise quit, a congressional report says.

The study, released Monday by the General Accounting Office, a research agency of Congress, said the authority provided the flights for Steven A. White between Oct. 2, 1987, and Sept. 30, 1988, while he was the TVA's nuclear power manager.

White had been hired when the authority's management was being criticized by Congress, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and others.

"TVA's board of directors ... believed that the special transportation services were necessary to retain Mr. White's management services," the GAO wrote.

White lived in Charlottesville, Va., and worked in the TVA office in Chattanooga, Tenn., a distance of more than 400 miles. He left the agency Nov. 18, 1988.

White, a retired admiral who served in the Navy's nuclear submarine program, was hired as a consultant by the TVA in January 1986 when the authority was facing severe problems with its nuclear power program. The previous fall, the TVA shut down its five operating reactors and halted construction on 12 others.

The flights were made primarily on Friday evenings and Monday mornings so White could spend weekends at home, the report said.

"We found no evidence that TVA provided similar commuting services to its employees or to contractors," the investigators wrote.

White's wife accompanied him on three of the flights, using government-paid seats, the report said.

TVA spokesman William Lee in Knoxville, Tenn., said he could not comment on the report because the authority had not seen it. White did not return a telephone message left at his Charlottesville home.

Until October 1987, White flew to work on commercial airlines and was reimbursed by the TVA. The study did not say how much White billed the authority for the trips.

The report stated that from Oct. 2, 1987, to March 18, 1988, the TVA provided air transportation for White through a contract with Bechtel, one of the authority's construction subcontractors.

Small numbers of other TVA and Bechtel workers also flew on some of these flights, but "the flights were geared to meet the needs of Mr. White's schedule," the report said.

Under their contract, the TVA paid for four of the eight seats on each flight.

San Antonio leading in race for 1990 summit

By CRAGG HINES
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The White House has told Houston officials that San Antonio's bid to host next year's international economic summit is a better financial deal for the federal government and asked Houston to sweeten its offer.

The last-minute request delayed announcement of a site, which was tentatively scheduled to be made Monday.

President Bush, who will ultimately make the decision, was reported by administration officials still to favor Houston, his adopted hometown, as the locale for the prestigious gathering of the leaders of the seven major economic democracies.

Senior White House advisers said, however, that Bush would be hard pressed to select Houston if its bid remains substantially more costly. White House aides have long favored San Antonio, believing it to be more picturesque than Houston.

A source familiar with the process said the White House request was an attempt "to give Houston every chance to come back" with a new bid that will enable Bush to pick the city he has called home since the 1950s.

A Houston official doubted, however, that the city would be able "to match San Antonio dollar for dollar" and said Houston would press qualitative considerations on the White House, such as the larger number of four- and five-star hotels available in Houston to house visiting dignitaries.

The improving economy in Houston means businesses such as hotels "are not as willing to give things away as they were" at the worst of the business slump, the source said.

San Antonio officials apparently were not told of the request to Houston and would like equal time.

"I hope they give us the same opportunity," said Shirl Thomas, assistant to Mayor Lila Cockrell of San Antonio.

Neither White House nor Houston officials would cite exact figures in the cities' current bids or what specifically the administration was looking for from Houston.

"We've been asked for additional details on Houston's proposal," said Ray Viator, spokesman for the Greater Houston Partnership. The group is a civic organization that promotes economic development.

A main sticking point appeared to be each city's proposal for hotel rooms and the ultimate cost to the federal government, which pays for a dozen or so rooms for each of the national delegations as well as some 500 for U.S. government personnel who would be in town during the summit.

NATION IN BRIEF

Student found slain in riverbed

ACME, Wash. (AP) — A college student who disappeared while jogging alone was found dead in a riverbed three days later after a search by neighbors and residents of this small Northwest town.

Stavik

An autopsy report was expected today on Amanda Stavik, 18. Whatcom County Sheriff Larry Mount said she was murdered.

"All these terrible things, all you can think is it doesn't happen to you. It doesn't happen on Strand Road. And it did," said Mary Stavik, the girl's mother, before the body was found Monday. "People here aren't even careful about locking their doors."

The body was found about noon Monday in the shallow South Fork of the Nooksack River, a few miles from Ms. Stavik's family home on Strand Road. The woman apparently had been abducted while jogging alone Friday.

As word spread, residents gathered at a supermarket in this farming community of about 350 residents in the Cascade Mountain foothills, 80 miles north of Seattle and 20 miles south of the Canadian border.

Two die in train-bus crash

SOUTH SAN FRANCISCO, Calif. (AP) — A train smashed into a bus that became stuck on the tracks because of a rush-hour traffic jam, killing two ABC-TV executives heading to a National Football League game.

About two dozen other passengers on the chartered bus were injured in the collision Monday night, officials said, but many were treated at the scene. No injuries were reported among people on the commuter train.

The train was moving at 60 mph but did not derail, officials said.

The bus was part of a convoy of four vehicles carrying network employees and their clients to Candlestick Park to watch the San Francisco 49ers play the New York Giants as part of ABC's celebration of the 20th anniversary of Monday Night Football.

The bus had driven across the tracks at a crossing five miles south of San Francisco but came to a stop behind a double tractor-trailer truck, said police Officer Greg Hart.

"The gates came down and the bus was stuck," said Hart. "The driver tried to get around and honked his horn several times to clear traffic.

"It's just a question of getting caught in a situation where you're in between the arms," said Hart.

Abu Nidal under arrest

NEW YORK (AP) — Abu Nidal, whose Palestinian terrorist organization is believed responsible for killing or wounding 900 people in 20 countries, has been placed under house arrest by Libya, a newspaper reported today.

The confinement to a compound near the Libyan capital Tripoli began recently and resulted from pressure by Egypt and the Palestine Liberation Organization, The New York Times reported.

In October, Egypt's President Hosni Mubarak asked Libyan leader Col. Moammar Gadhafi to extradite Abu Nidal to Egypt or stop his organization's terrorist acts from Libya, according to PLO officials in Tunisia and Arab diplomats in Paris.

The request was a condition for restored relations between Libya and Egypt, the Times said.

There is no indication that Gadhafi intends to turn Abu Nidal over to Egypt, the officials told the Times.

Man's ashes scattered

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Navy frigate named after Vietnam War hero Lt. Cmdr. Wilmer Paul Cook performed a solemn mission, scattering its namesake's ashes at sea 22 years after the combat pilot died in battle.

The USS Cook left port Monday morning and paused off the coast for the 20-minute service before resuming maneuvers, said Navy spokesman Cmdr. David Dillon.

It was believed to be the first time a Navy ship was involved in the sea burial of its namesake, Dillon said.

MISD tax collection right on track

By DAVID MORRIS
Staff Writer

School district tax collection rates for October are comparable to last year's and the district should meet its 95 percent collection goal for 1989-90, school and appraisal district officials said Monday.

More than $2.3 million in property taxes was collected for the Midland Independent School District in October, figures released this week show.

That represents 6.89 percent of the original collectible tax balance of $34.7 million. Last year, 7.11 percent of local school taxes had been collected by the end of October.

"The difference between this year and last year is not significant," said Ron Stegall, chief appraiser for the Midland Central Appraisal District.

"Different people pay their taxes at different times. If it was a difference of two or three or four percent, we might have to rethink our position."

He said the main reason for the difference in the figures was that "a large mortgage company paid in October last year and this year they're going to pay in December."

"By July 1, 1990, we will have collected 95 percent of the taxes," he predicted. Last year's collection rate was about 95 percent, he said.

MISD business manager Don Furgeson said the budget is based on a local tax collection rate of 95 percent, and a 20 percent collection rate on delinquent taxes from past years.

Furgeson said local taxes comprise 49 percent of the $70.5 million school budget, with the remainder primarily from state and federal sources. He said the 1989-90 budget assumes local tax revenues of $34,652,251, including current taxes, delinquent taxes, and penalty and interest payments.

Figures show that since Sept. 1, 4.53 percent of about $5 million in delinquent taxes from 1988 and earlier has been collected.

"The majority of that will never be paid," Furgeson said. "But we're prohibited by the state from writing that off the rolls. We budget for 20 percent of the delinquent roll being collected during the budget year."

Stegall said property owners have until Jan. 31, 1990, to pay their taxes. After that, they will incur an initial seven percent penalty followed by penalties of two percent per month until payment is made, he said.

He said property owners have the option of paying half their taxes by the end of November and the rest by June 30.

"The people who take that option generally own a lot of property," he said. "Also, a lot of people who own their home and don't have a mortgage on it will do that. But if you miss that Dec. 1 deadline, you have to pay it all by Jan. 31."

People who do not pay their taxes could face lawsuits and possibly foreclosure, Stegall said.

"If they don't pay their taxes, we have attorneys who will sue them," he said. "We'll start suing people in June and July for non-payment of 1989-90 taxes."

He said the appraisal district forecloses on 25-30 property owners per year as a last resort.

"Most people, faced with losing the property or paying the taxes, will pay the taxes," he said. "Ninety-five percent of the people pay on time and there's no problem. Most people pay on time and voluntarily."

Delinquent taxes collected after June 30 will be applied to next year's school budget, Stegall said.

Former Odessans, friend being tried for plotting arson

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A former Odessa couple and an Arkansas man charged with plotting to commit arson in 1984 to collect money to salvage a trucking business today are into their second day of trial in Midland's federal court.

The three are charged under a 16-count indictment which stemmed from probes by the FBI in Midland and the fire marshal in Odessa.

"If you can understand lying and stealing, you can understand this case," Assistant U.S. Attorney Jim Blankinship of Austin told jurors in the case Monday. Blankinship and Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery of Midland are prosecuting the case in the court of U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

Named in the indictment are Michael Roy Shively, 45, of Henderson and his wife, Kim Renee Shively, 31; and their friend and alleged co-conspirator, George Russell Johnson, 53, of West Memphis, Ark.

Aside from alleged conspiracy, the case involves alleged wire and mail fraud, the use of false Social Security numbers allegedly by Shively to obtain credit and loans, and the alleged intimidation of witnesses — Ronnie Gene Coplen and his wife, Marsha Coplen — by the Shively couple.

The primary issue in the case, Blankinship said, is the intent of the Shively couple and their friend.

"Did they intend to deceive and defraud?" he asked.

The alleged conspiracy was not "typed out with a word processor" to leave a documented trail, Blankinship said. "It doesn't matter if the crime was committed or not," Blankinship said, when conspiracy is alleged.

Shively, if convicted under all counts brought against him, could be sentenced up to 110 years in prison and fined more than $2.5 million.

In his opening statement, Blankinship said Shively, who was in the trucking business in Louisiana, "had trouble down there" since he was "unable to pay his bills," which grew to $150,000. Shively then shifted his trucking operations to Lubbock in West Texas, quit making lease payments and let his truck insurance lapse.

In Louisiana, Shively had "used up his good Social Security number," Blankinship said. And after he relocated to Odessa, Shively set up a "bogus" Social Security number to obtain bank loans.

Shively had made "quite a bit of money" prior to the "slowdown in the economy" in 1983, and bought a house for $150,000 in 1982.

In 1984, the Shively couple and Johnson designed the alleged arson scheme, the attorney argued.

"Arson is not committed in front of a nun, a priest or a Baptist preacher," Blankinship said. "It is committed in the middle of the night when no one is watching."

Blankinship alleged that Shively brought the gasoline used to torch the house at 6412 Mecca St. in Odessa and a luxury sedan in the adjoining garage about 2:20 a.m. on June 22, 1984.

Two days before the explosive fire, the Shively couple had left their home to vacation in Ruidoso and Carlsbad, N.M., and Johnson allegedly had driven to Odessa from Arkansas to help Shivley in his business.

And prior to and following the fire, Shively and Johnson made long-distance telephone calls, including those that originated in New Mexico and Odessa.

Blankinship said pages of a newspaper were strewn in the house, soaked with gasoline, and a timing device attached to a hot plate was set up in the house.

Shively "called his buddy, George Johnson, down to burn the house," Blankinship said. "Mr. Johnson comes to town."

After the fire, Shively, who had claimed that his house had been burglarized just prior to the fire, on June 27, 1984, filed a "false burglary complaint regarding the fire and burglary at his home" and cited a $40,700 loss, the indictment said. Mrs. Shively filed a $3,440 supplemental loss on July 2. And on July 18, the Shively couple signed a "loss inventory sheet" which listed $96,885 in losses.

"Mr. Shively is not having any luck collecting on his insurance," Blankinship said in outlining a version of the alleged scheme.

Shively later faked a "heart attack" in an attempt to get a financial company "off of his back," kept a fifth of whiskey in his hospital room, and disconnected heart-monitoring equipment, the prosecutor said.

Of the alleged scheme, Blankinship said, "It's a complicated kind of mess. It's a mess that George Johnson, Kim Shively and Michael Shively spun."

Johnson's defense attorney, Glen A. Aaron III, submitted opening statements to the jurors, but Shively's defense attorney, Paul Williams, and Mrs. Shively's defense attorney, Ray Moudy did not submit opening comments.

"There are two sides to every story," noted Aaron, who said that his client, Johnson, "is wrapped in a mantle of innocence regardless of the beautiful story Mr. Blankinship has weaved."

Aaron said the prosecution is trying to convict Johnson through "proof by association" and "guilt by association."

Aaron told the jurors that they would be seeing graphic photographs to prove that the Shively house was "torched."

Aaron alluded to the outline of events, including the Shively-Johnson telephone calls, submitted by the prosecution.

"An innocent person doesn't place great importance on the sequence of events," Aaron said in referring to his client.

Johnson was in Odessa, Aaron said, "helping a friend straighten out his (trucking) business ... that was becoming unmanageable."

"This business is bust to boom to problematic," Aaron said. "I guess that's the management style of Mr. Shively."

Aaron said that it was "only natural" that Johnson was out at the Shively house in June of 1984.

"So were a lot other people," including bankers and truckers, Aaron said. The lawyer cautioned the jurors to be aware that the prosecution is using "innuendo" and "guilt by association" to try to convict his client, Johnson.

U.S. senators John D. Rockefeller IV, D-W.Va., and Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, get a shaving cream painting lesson from Eliseo Reyes, 4, at a day care center in San Antonio Monday as part of a tour for the National Commission on Children.

Panel takes on more than child's play

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The National Commission on Children visited a day care program and sat in on bilingual kindergarten classes in anticipation of a public hearing today about pre-school children.

"I think that children are moving to the center of the national stage," said commission chairman U.S. Sen. John D. Rockefeller IV during a break in school tours Monday. "And I think it's long past the time."

Rockefeller, a West Virginia Democrat, and some members of the 36-person commission today were convening a hearing in San Antonio, one of several the group is holding throughout the nation.

Toddlers, or youngsters up to 3 years old, were the subject of a September hearing in Chicago. A hearing Dec. 11 in Kansas City will focus on teen-agers and drugs, Rockefeller said.

The commission is charged with visiting cities throughout the nation and presenting findings to President Bush by March 1991.

Monday commissioners visited Coronado-Escobar Elementary School in the Edgewood Independent School District and La Casa de Ninos Child Development Center.

The commission chose San Antonio for the pre-school public hearing because of "model" programs here and because of the large Hispanic population, Rockefeller said.

Rockefeller said it is wrong that some children do not receive adequate education or health benefits and said it is almost as if children are in "another class."

U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, who sponsored legislation creating the Commission on Children, appeared at a news conference with Rockefeller and said children must get a "serious start" in life.

"In this competitive world of ours it's absolutely critical and essential," he said, as La Casa de Ninos center employees and parents looked on and children played nearby.

Pathologist testifies on autopsy in murder trial

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A 25-year-old woman prosecutors claim was shot to death by her boyfriend following an argument, was legally drunk, had taken cocaine and suffered nearly two dozen blows to her body before she died, a pathologist testified today.

Dr. David Shneidman, the former Midland pathologist who performed the April 17, autopsy on Stephanie Wilson, said the woman had 20 bruises and eight abrasions on her body.

The physician said some of the wounds were "fresh."

Shneidman also found three wounds on the woman's scalp. He agreed with District Attorney Al Schorre that the injuries could have been caused by a blunt instrument.

Ms. Wilson's blood alcohol level at the time she was treated by paramedics was .13, above the 0.10 level that is considered legal intoxication in Texas, the pathologist testified.

The autopsy also revealed Ms. Wilson had taken cocaine shortly before her death, the doctor said.

The testimony came in the second day of the trial of Melvin Burton III, 40, accused of killing his girlfriend, Ms. Wilson, on April 16 following an argument at his home at 1307 E. Maple Ave.

He is being tried before Judge Vann Culp in 238th State District Court.

Monday, the first investigator on the scene was asked by Schorre what the defendant said when the officer arrived at the home about 8:20 a.m.

"He said, 'I shot her, I can't believe I shot her'," Officer Gilbert Villareal told Schorre.

Villareal spotted a revolver lying inside a glass storm door on the floor, and arrested Burton and called detectives, he told the seven-man, five-woman jury. Glass was found on each side of the door, Villareal testified.

On cross-examination, the officer told Burton attorney Tom Hirsch that the barefooted defendant was standing outside the door dressed in a bathrobe and tan pants when he arrived and did not attempt to run.

Burton was "emotionally upset, very nervous," Villareal said.

"I recall him saying he was sorry," the officer noted.

Burton's next-door neighbor, Julius Brooks Jr., told jurors that about six hours before the shooting, Ms. Wilson came to his front door, but left before he reached her.

A few minutes later, Brooks told Schorre he saw Burton chasing Ms. Wilson "around the house," calling her name.

Petition organizers claim victory in tax rollback drive

EL PASO (AP) — Organizers of a petition drive claim they have enough signatures to force an election to roll back school taxes in the El Paso Independent School District.

A leader of the drive said Monday that nearly 1,000 petitions were submitted on deadline Monday and claimed they had more than the 11,044 signatures needed for force an election.

"We have sufficient numbers," tax rollback organizer Lloyd McConnell said. He would not disclose how many signatures the three-month campaign collected.

If the petitions are certified, an election could be conducted as early as mid-January, or as late as mid-March, to let voters decide whether to roll back property taxes, a move that could cost the district up to $20 million in budget cuts.

The campaign needed at least 11,044 valid signatures of eligible voters, 10 percent of those living in the district, to force a tax rollback election in the 64,000-student district.

"It looks at a glance that they have enough signatures, if all the names are verified," school district spokesman Bob Reynolds said after receiving the petitions.

Organizers of a similar petition drive in the neighboring Ysleta Independent School District were optimistic Monday that they also will have enough names to force a rollback election.

"I am confident we're going to reach our goal," Ysleta tax rollback organizer Orlando Fonseca said.

Based on Monday's voter registration tallies, the Ysleta effort needs about 7,330 voter signatures to put the issue on the ballot. The Ysleta district would be forced to trim up to $7 million from next year's budget if it suffers a tax rollback.

Both of El Paso's major school districts adopted tax rates of $1 per $100 of assessed property value, sparking petition drives asking voters to determine at the ballot box whether school taxes should be reduced next year.

Lewis says judicial reform needs special session

AUSTIN (AP) — Lawmakers need more time — and probably another special session — to satisfy a federal judge's demand that they overhaul the election of state judges in urban counties, House Speaker Gib Lewis says.

Federal Judge Lucius D. Bunton in Midland has given the Legislature until early January to change the countywide election of state district judges in nine urban Texas counties, saying the current system violates the federal Voting Rights Act.

Opponents of the current system have urged that the judges be elected from single-member districts.

The Legislature is meeting in special session to deal with overhauling the state's workers' compensation system. But Lewis said Monday he isn't sure there will be enough time before the Dec. 13 adjournment to also deal with the judicial elections issue.

"Judicial reform is not as simple as saying 'judicial reform.' There's three or four different scenarios, and all of them are very controversial," said Lewis, D-Fort Worth.

"I think you're going to have to have a special session dedicated to judicial reform. It's just not that simple," he said.

Lewis said a resolution is being readied to ensure that lawmakers address the issue in a timely fashion. He said he hopes the measure would "maybe give us a little more time than the Jan. 1 deadline."

Judge censured for anti-homosexual remarks

AUSTIN (AP) — A Dallas judge who said he gave a lighter sentence to a convicted killer because the victims were homosexuals was publicly censured today by the State Commission on Judicial Conduct.

The commission said state District Judge Jack Hampton's remarks in news media interviews violated the Code of Judicial Conduct, which prohibits public comment on a pending case and requires judges to promote public confidence in the judiciary.

"The commission finds that Judge Hampton's comments, per se, were destructive of public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary," the commission's order for public censure said.

"The hostility and distrust generated by this judge's irresponsible statements created an additional burden for the entire judiciary," the order said.

Hampton ignited a storm of controversy when he told a newspaper reporter that he sentenced Richard Lee Bednarski to 30 years in prison, instead of life in prison, for the murders of two men in a Dallas park because the victims were gay.

"Those two gays that got killed wouldn't have been killed if they hadn't been cruising the streets picking up teen-age boys," Hampton said.

"The hostility and distrust generated by this judge's irresponsible statements created an additional burden for the entire judiciary."
— Order of State Commission on Judicial Conduct

Hampton's office said today he would not comment on the case.

"He's not speaking with any members of the news media," said a woman at Hampton's office who refused to give her name. One of his lawyers said a statement would be issued later.

Commission executive director Robert Flowers did not immediately return calls.

In its ruling, the judicial conduct commission noted numerous remarks made by Hampton in interviews with both the Dallas Times Herald and The Associated Press. Among those comments, the commission cited:

■ "I don't much care for queers cruising the streets picking up teen-age boys. I've got a teen-age boy."

■ "Some murder victims are less innocent in their deaths than others. In those cases, a defendant is unlikely to deserve a maximum sentence."

■ "Just spell my name right ... if it makes anyone mad they'll forget it by 1990."

■ "The victims were homosexuals. They were out in the homosexual area picking up teen-age boys. Had they not been out there trying to spread AIDS around, they'd still be alive today."

Hampton, a Republican appointed to the bench in 1982 by Gov. Bill Clements, subsequently won re-election and has announced he will run for re-election in 1990.

The commission, which governs the conduct of state judges, said his remarks had placed a burden on all of the Texas judiciary.

"The record of the formal hearing is replete with evidence documenting that the public reacted to the judge's comments with disbelief, abhorrence and indignation," the commission said.

The commission said it concluded that "Judge Hampton's remarks did not promote public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary."

Hampton, 57, has refused to talk with news reporters since the two controversial interviews.

Critics, notably gay and lesbian groups, flooded the judicial commission with letters of protest demanding Hampton's removal from the bench.

Retired San Antonio Appeals Court Judge Robert Murray presided over a fact-finding hearing in October and decided that Hampton's statements hadn't affected his judgment in the case, but Murray criticized Hampton for making statements about a pending case.

William Waybourn, president of the Dallas Gay Alliance, applauded the commission's decision.

"I believe that it's certainly a step in the right direction. But Judge Hampton remains on the bench," said Waybourn.

3 bodies still missing from October blast

PASADENA (AP) — Excavation crews have resumed digging through a plastic plant's polyethylene reactors in search of three bodies that remain missing from the Oct. 23 Phillips Petroleum Co. plant explosion.

Phillips spokesman Bill Wicker said Monday that crews ended an exhaustive search of the plant's devastated finishing building over the weekend and are re-examining the nearby reactors where officials believe the explosions began.

"The reactors aren't virgin territory," Wicker said. "We've already looked in there, but we want to do everything we can to find the missing workers."

Col. Edward Mandell House

Historical marker will honor Wilson's adviser

HOUSTON (AP) — A historical marker goes up this week in the lobby of the Houston federal courthouse in honor of Col. Edward Mandell House, adviser to President Wilson and manager of several Texans' campaigns for governor.

House was the power behind Texas Gov. Jim Hogg's re-election in 1892. Hogg then commissioned him as an honorary lieutenant colonel on his staff. The title stuck, and House gained further stature by guiding the elections of numerous other officials.

Newspapers of the day described him as a political boss who succeeded by quiet persuasion and shrewdness.

"House is one of the most remarkable men in Texas history," said Al Davis, chairman of the Harris County Historical Commission. "His impact was certainly the greatest on the national and international scenes, but he has almost been forgotten in Houston, his hometown."

House died in 1938 at the age of 79 in New York and is buried in Houston.

House was the youngest of eight children of flamboyant entrepreneur and former Houston Mayor Thomas William House. The younger House dropped out of Cornell University in 1879 and returned to Texas when his father suffered a stroke. He eventually married and moved to Austin, where his interest turned to politics.

House's interests shifted to national affairs and at the turn of the century he joined the progressive movement, which favored checks on the power of monopolies and correction of social injustices. By 1912, House was using the political skills he learned in Austin to help elect Democratic presidential candidate Woodrow Wilson.

"Col. House is my second personality," Wilson once said. "He is my independent self. His thoughts and mine are one."

TRIAL

After he got up, dressed and was preparing to leave for work, Brooks said he heard the sound of glass breaking and a gunshot. But he did not call police, he said.

Brooks told Hirsch he never saw the defendant strike the woman.

Detective Sgt. Ken Moten agreed with Hirsch that the autopsy report showed Ms. Wilson had ingested cocaine the night before or the morning of the shooting, but Schorre objected when the attorney described the victim as "filled full with cocaine."

Inside the home, Moten found a coffee table smashed and walls damaged, he testified.

According to police accounts, Burton reported the shooting. The weapon believed used was found inside the residence near the front door. It had been fired twice.

Ms. Wilson, who was described by police as Burton's common-law wife, was been was found lying face up just outside the door, according to police. She was breathing when paramedics arrived, but died of a gunshot wound to the chest during emergency surgery at Midland Memorial Hospital.

The El Paso Teachers Association is organizing volunteers to help the El Paso Independent School District verify petitions.

The association plans to call people to verify whether they did in fact sign petitions, and to help them remove their names from the list if they have changed their minds.

School officials in both districts say that a tax rollback could wreck the budget, cause massive layoffs and destroy the quality of education.

Proponents of the rollback say that budget cuts could be made by trimming the administrative fat at the central office and streamlining operations without severely hurting educational programs.

Nacogdoches man killed in mishap on Interstate 20

From Staff Reports

A 43-year-old Nacogdoches man was thrown from his tractor-trailer and killed early today when a gust of wind blew the vehicle from the interstate near Coahoma in Howard County, the Department of Public Safety reported.

Paul Roy Barfield was pronounced dead at the scene at 2:10 a.m. today by Howard County Justice of the Peace Willie Grant, the DPS reported.

Barfield was driving a Freightliner tractor eastbound on Interstate 20 seven miles east of Coahoma when the gust caused the vehicle to leave the road and travel 300 feet in a ditch before it overturned, reports said.

At the time, Barfield was pulling a flatbed trailer at about 45 mph, the DPS reported.

The accident occurred about 12:40 a.m., according to the DPS.

Barfield was not wearing a safety belt, reports said.

Police probe grocery store robbery

From Staff Reports

Midland police are investigating the robbery of a grocery store Monday afternoon that netted a woman $3,000 cash.

Just before 3 p.m., a woman walked into the M System store at 2200 Rankin Hwy. and went to a service desk, according to police spokesman Cpl. Jim White. She showed an employee a note saying she was armed and had an accomplice and then ordered the employee to place cash in a paper bag. The employee complied, and the woman left the store with the money.

The employees didn't see a weapon, and police aren't sure if the woman had an accomplice, White said.

The robber was described as white with dark hair, 5 feet 8 inches tall, weighing 162 pounds. She was last seen wearing glasses and a green bow in her hair, police said.

She also was wearing a long tweed coat, according to police.

Ironman to speak to diabetes group

From Staff Reports

Bill Carlson, the first person with diabetes to qualify for and finish Hawaii's Ironman Triathlon, will speak at the American Diabetes Association's Midland/Odessa Chapters support group at 7 p.m. Thursday, at the Allison Cancer Center, 2200 W. Illinois.

Like other triathletes, Carlson includes open-ocean swims, grueling bicycle rides and marathon runs in his training routine, but unlike his competitors he also must take time to regularly check his blood-sugar levels.

On Oct. 22, 1983, Carlson made medical history by becoming the first diabetic to complete the Ironman Triathlon, finishing 508th of the 964 competitors. Not content just to finish, he swam, biked and ran his way to 97th place in 1985 and 292nd in 1988.

Carlson plans to tackle the competition again this year, setting his sights on a Top 50 finish.

Texas House honors Leland's work

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas House Monday approved a resolution honoring Mickey Leland, the U.S. representative from Texas who died in an August plane crash while on a mercy mission to Ethiopia.

"A man of rare energy and spirit, Mr. Leland believed that the political process could be used to create a more just society; his philosophy was not a lofty ideal, but a reality he lived each day," says the resolution, which previously won Senate approval.

Rep. Harold Dutton, D-Houston, asked for House passage of the measure, calling Leland "my friend, our friend, and a friend of all the world."

The resolution also extends sympathy to Leland's family.

House members indicated their unanimous support for the measure by standing.

In other action, the House approved a resolution honoring the late Ruben M. Torres Sr. of Brownsville, a former state lawmaker who in the 1970s sponsored legislation to establish Pan American University in Brownsville.

OPPORTUNTIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

The holiday season brings many opportunities for caring hearts eager to help those in need. But many individuals and groups full of "giving" energy don't know where to start. The Volunteer Center has several holiday opportunities. Here are some of the needs:

■ Show your holiday spirit by helping set up refreshments and assisting behind the scenes for a stage production benefiting a local agency. All it takes is a two-hour daytime shift on Dec. 2.

■ Be an elf at Santa's house. Costumes will be provided. Four elves for two-hour shifts at the mall are needed now through Dec. 16. This is an opportunity for junior and senior high school students looking to put a smile on a child's face during the holidays.

■ Get in the holiday spirit by helping senior citizens make Christmas crafts. Volunteers are needed on Wednesdays from 10-11 a.m. for three weeks. Help make someone else's Christmas a little brighter.

■ Like to shop? Here's a perfect opportunity. Lend a hand by assisting mentally disabled citizens with their Christmas shopping. Special transportation will be provided if necessary and a staff person will accompany you.

■ During the holidays we surround ourselves with family and friends. Make a new friend by becoming a friendly visitor and help enhance the life of a senior. The holidays would be an excellent time to start sharing your good cheer.

For more information, call the Volunteer Center at 697-8781.

MISD offers meetings to discuss new schools

From Staff Reports

Citizen input is a key concern of the Midland Independent School District board of trustees, according to a press release from the school administration office.

And with city and district projections pointing to the need for an additional junior high school and one, possibly two, new elementary schools, community interaction is vital, say administrators.

Thus, a series of community meetings have been planned.

"This district is keenly aware of the foresight and expertise available in our community and we want to tap into this resource," said Dr. Joseph Baressi, superintendent.

Each forum will begin at 7 p.m. The remaining meeting schedule is:

■ Nov. 30, District 5, Bonham Elementary, 909 Bonham.

■ Dec. 7, District 6, Fannin Elementary, 2400 Fannin.

■ Dec. 14, District 7, Santa Rita Elementary, 5306 Whitman.

Discovery's crew gets to plumb depths of shuttle toilet

STATE

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Discovery's astronauts returned home under cover of darkness today after ending their secret mission with a sunset landing at a desert air base where gusts twice delayed the return to Earth.

A news blackout imposed by the military prevented the astronauts from talking about what they did during their five-day mission, but Commander Frederick Gregory did comment on one problem — a malfunctioning toilet.

"The crew performed, I think, flawlessly. Discovery's toilet didn't work, but we fixed it," said Gregory, who was wearing a slipper on one foot and shoe on the other. He suffered a foot infection while in orbit, NASA said.

Meanwhile, shuttle Columbia was moved to a launch pad at Cape Canaveral, Fla., today for a 10-day, Christmastime flight during which it will put one satellite in orbit and retrieve another that is falling to Earth.

After staying in space an extra day and then an extra orbit because of high winds, Discovery landed at 4:30 p.m. PST Monday at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif.

"With the sun glinting off the underside of the vehicle, it was really a pretty landing," NASA spokeswoman Nancy Lovato said.

The astronauts, who reportedly released a spy satellite, arrived at their home base here today before dawn, a fitting finale to their hush-hush flight. Despite showers, about 30 people greeted the astronauts at Ellington Field.

Gregory, the first black to command a shuttle flight, called the mission a success.

"We did what we were supposed to do. And we did it right and we even got a day yesterday to relax and take thousands of pictures, literally," he said.

"We had a near perfect vehicle," added mission specialist Story Musgrave.

Space Shuttle Discovery pilot John Blaha says hello to the crowd of friends, relatives and fans that greeted the astronauts on their arrival in Houston this morning. The commander of the secret shuttle mission, Air Force Col. Frederick C. Gregory, is seated at left.

The other crew members were pilot John Blaha and mission specialists Manley Carter Jr. and Kathryn Thornton.

Discovery originally was scheduled to land Sunday, but had to wait a day because of high winds that sent "dust devils" whipping across Edwards.

Mission Control rescheduled the return for Monday afternoon, but winds forced another delay. The winds were not as strong as the 30 mph gusts reported Sunday, but were high enough to make conditions unacceptable for the planned 2:52 p.m. PST landing.

Since conditions looked better for landing late in the afternoon, controllers directed the astronauts to stay aloft another 89 minutes for one more spin around the globe. As predicted, the winds subsided and NASA gave the go-ahead to begin the fiery dash through the atmosphere.

Forty-five minutes before landing, Mission Control directed Gregory, an Air Force colonel, to shift to the concrete runway from a hard clay runway because of more favorable winds. The shuttle landed in light crosswinds of 4 mph and a headwind of about 19 mph.

About four hours after touchdown, the crew addressed some 60 friends and NASA workers at Edwards before boarding jets for Houston. Gregory did not explain why he came out wearing a salmon-colored slipper on his right foot and a brown shoe on the left.

"One of the things that you learn when you go in space is that you don't have to wear the same kind of shoes when you come out," he said.

Johnson Space Center spokesman Kyle Herring said Gregory got a foot infection while in orbit, but it had no effect on the mission. Herring said the infection was being evaluated, and he did not have any other details.

The astronauts have today off but they will report back to work Wednesday at the Johnson Space Center to begin briefings about their flight.

Sources close to the project have said the astronauts achieved their main goal Thursday, a day after liftoff, when they released a 2½-ton, $300 million satellite designed to eavesdrop on communications in the Soviet Union, Europe, Africa and the Middle East.

The crew also reportedly conducted experiments related to the "Star Wars" missile defense system.

"We did what we were supposed to do. And we did it right and we even got a day yesterday to relax and take thousands of pictures, literally."

— Discovery Commander Frederick Gregory

Some hands require declarer to take the percentage line and hope the cards are favorably distributed. Others have a sure-trick solution, which permits declarer to claim the contract early. This hand could have been claimed at trick one.

North's three-heart response and later five-heart bid were transfer bids requesting partner to bid spades. South's initial rebid announced a maximum in support of spades and his five-club response to Blackwood showed either three aces or none. North had no hesitation about bidding the excellent slam. Can you claim your contract?

This hand was played by Venezuelan internationalist and current New York resident David Berah in an invitational event in London. He won the king of diamonds, cashed the king of spades and ace of diamonds, on which he discarded a heart, then drew the last trump ending in dummy. Now he led the queen of clubs, and the contract was cold whether it won or lost.

If the finesse won, declarer would concede a trick to the king of hearts, then sluff one of the table's clubs on the ace of hearts. If the finesse lost, West would be endplayed. A heart return would solve declarer's problem in that suit; a club would run to the A 9 in the closed hand, and declarer would have an extra club set up to take care of one of dummy's hearts. And a diamond would allow declarer to ruff in hand while discarding a heart from the board.

So the best way to play the hand is obvious. Claim the contract at trick one before you have the chance to make a mistake!

Dennis Weaver gets lots of mileage out of tired jokes about his house

RIDGWAY, Colo. (AP) — Actor Dennis Weaver likes his house of old cans, tires and other garbage, despite the zingers it inspired from comedian Jay Leno.

Weaver

Neighbors have taken to calling the home "the Michelin Mansion," in honor of the 2,200 old tires used in the walls. The house features solar heating and cooling and contains 40,000 cans packed into its 3-foot-thick walls.

Leno recently asked Weaver on the "Tonight Show" if neighbors of the Rocky Mountain abode think he is adding on a room when he puts out the trash.

"And when the garbage man comes, how does he know where the garbage begins and the house ends?" Leno asked.

But Weaver, the horseback riding TV detective "McCloud" and the whining deputy of "Gunsmoke," said his vision for the future is embodied in the house.

"If we get into the mind-set of saving rather than wasting and utilize other materials, we can save the Earth," he said.

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A mentally disabled AIDS victim whose adoptive mother successfully challenged a court ruling that the youngster attend classes in a glass cage has died of the disease. She was 8.

Eliana Martinez died Monday evening of the AIDS she contracted as an infant from a tainted blood transfusion. She had been monitored around the clock since a brush with death three weeks ago from a feeding-tube infection.

Rosa and Eliana Martinez

"She never snapped back from that," said Dan McClowry, Eliana's former speech therapist and a friend of the family. "She had been in and out of a coma for the last three days ... running a fever of up to 105 with an accelerated heartbeat."

Eliana's mother, Rosa Martinez, adopted her as an 11-month-old child abandoned in a Puerto Rico hospital.

Mrs. Martinez, a licensed practical nurse, once said of Eliana: "She was deprived of family and we became that. She was deprived of health and we gave her the best medical attention she could." And finally, she saw to it Eliana wouldn't be deprived of an education.

Hillsborough County School Board officials had wanted the child kept home, fearing she posed a health risk. A judge ruled Eliana could attend school if she stayed inside a special glass booth.

But Mrs. Martinez said she wouldn't send her daughter to class under such conditions. Her attorney appealed and won. In April, Eliana went to school for children with special needs, without the enclosure.

Mrs. Martinez, her 20-year-old son, Joseph, and a few family friends and caretakers had been sitting up with the child for the last few days knowing death was near, McClowry said.

Eliana's body was to be taken today to the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md., for an autopsy, said McClowry. The funeral will be next week in Tampa.

Doctors took Eliana off the experimental AIDS-fighting drug DDI on Oct. 4, saying it wasn't protecting her from life-threatening infections. Eliana had been given AZT, the only federally approved AIDS drug, for two years and was switched when it was no longer helping her.

Mrs. Martinez, 37, adopted Eliana in her native Puerto Rico after responding to a radio appeal for the homeless child. Eliana weighed only about 10 pounds when Mrs. Martinez took her home.

At first, doctors thought the baby might have cerebral palsy.

It wasn't until the spring of 1985 that Mrs. Martinez and her husband, Jose, learned Eliana had AIDS-related complex or ARC, a precursor to AIDS.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite a nervous Park Service lift operator, first lady Barbara Bush managed to get close enough to the National Christmas Tree to crown it with a white plastic star.

In front of the press corps and preschool playmates of her 3½-year-old granddaughter, Marshall Bush, Mrs. Bush took a bumpy ride in a hydraulic lift to the top of the 35-foot tree where she used a silver pole to place the star.

When the ride down was briefly halted, Marshall called out cheerfully, but insistently, "Hey, when are we going down? Get me down here!"

Back on the ground, Mrs. Bush took Marshall to pose for a picture with lift operator Kevin Guard.

"I thought she was coming over to chew me out," Guard said later. "She just said thanks."

Guard, 35, was pressed into service when the Park Service found itself with a rented lift but no operator.

"I was scared to death," he said. "I'm in trees — trim them, cut them down, make them safe."

Asked how he wound up with the job of hoisting the first lady, Guard said:

"It just happened. I usually drive a cherry picker. They didn't have an operator, so I did it."

The tree, a Colorado Blue Spruce from a farm in York, Pa., will be adorned with a 1,000 more white stars — representing President Bush's "Thousand Points of Light" — and several thousand red and blue lights during the next two weeks.

Bush will throw the switch to light the tree Dec. 14.

Woman sues dogs' owner after premature birth of son

AUSTIN (AP) — A legal assistant who gave birth to a premature son after being attacked by two dogs is suing the animals' owner.

The lawsuit was filed Monday on behalf of Kathleen MacKenzie by Ron Weddington, an attorney in the firm Friedman, Weddington and Hansen, which employs MacKenzie.

The lawsuit accuses Joseph Chernoff of being negligent by allowing the dogs to run loose, keeping the dogs in a populated area, and failing to notify proper authorities when he found that his dogs had escaped from his Austin home. Police officers killed the dogs, an Akita Japanese husky and a pit bull terrier.

Ms. MacKenzie, 31, went into labor as a result of the attack early Sunday morning in the parking lot of her apartment complex. Her son was born about four hours later, six days before his due date.

She underwent a Caesarean section and surgery on her right arm Sunday and was listed in good condition at Seton Medical Center late Monday, said hospital spokeswoman M.A. Bengtson.

Her son, Andrew Scott, was listed in good condition, Ms. Bengtson said.

Ms. MacKenzie will have additional surgery to repair torn muscles in her arm, Ms. Bengtson said.

Dan Pickens, spokesman for the city Health Department, said Chernoff was issued two citations by animal control officers. Chernoff was accused on two counts of failing to register his dogs with the city and two counts of allowing the dogs to run loose.

Each violation is a Class C misdemeanor carrying a maximum fine of $200.

Both of the dogs' vaccination records were current, Pickens said.

MacKenzie seeks unspecified damages in her suit for current and future medical expenses, the loss of her dead cat, current and future pain and suffering, and replacement of income lost during her recuperation.

The suit also seeks punitive damages "to serve as an example to others who might be disposed to keeping vicious dogs and allowing said dogs to roam at large."

Chernoff said he has received more than 50 life-threatening telephone calls since the attack, according to the Austin American-Statesman.

Ms. MacKenzie said she was trying to save her cat Mew from a 110-pound Akita Japanese husky and a 50-pound pit bull terrier when the larger dog jumped on her back and knocked her on her stomach.

Police shot and killed the dogs when the animals started coming toward the officers, Sgt. John Russell said.

Chernoff said he had owned the Akita, named Kado, for 14 months and the pit bull terrier, Mozart, for eight months. He said the two were worth $5,000.

"I knew I would eventually lose the big dog. He's bitten some friends before. He doesn't like strangers to touch him. If they (police) shot him, I'm not shocked. I've thought about shooting him myself."

STATE IN BRIEF

Police shoot mental patient after standoff

AUSTIN (AP) — A patient at the Austin State Hospital was in serious condition today after he was shot four times when he charged police following a 30-minute standoff at the hospital where the patient allegedly barricaded himself after attempting to hold up a liquor store.

Police said Christopher Scott Gibson, 19, was in serious but stable condition early today at Brackenridge Hospital.

Police records show that Gibson was admitted to the state hospital in September after attempting suicide by taking an overdose of drugs. He was released from the hospital on a pass for Thanksgiving and was to return today.

Hospital officials said Gibson visited his grandfather, S.N. Lanham, at Austin during the furlough. He had lived with Lanham before his voluntary commitment to the state hospital, police said.

Deputy Police Chief Ken Williams said that during the visit with his grandfather, Gibson took a .45-caliber single-shot handgun called a Thompson Contender, a weapon usually used for pistol competitions.

Mauzy to run for top post

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Supreme Court Justice Oscar Mauzy says he plans to run for the state's top judicial post.

Mauzy, a Democrat who favors the continued election of judges, said Monday that he will challenge Republican Chief Justice Tom Phillips next year.

The former state senator from Dallas said he has already appointed himself as campaign treasurer with the secretary of state's office.

But Mauzy told The Dallas Morning News he hasn't decided when he will formally announce his bid to unseat Phillips, who became the first Republican chief justice in modern history in 1988.

Gov. Bill Clements originally appointed Phillips to the post in 1987.

Mauzy said Phillips has failed to provide leadership for the state's judicial system. The legality of the system has been challenged in two recent federal court decisions.

Fund records deposit

AUSTIN (AP) — The state's new "rainy day fund" — a special savings account set aside for budgetary emergencies — has gotten its first deposit.

Comptroller Bob Bullock said Monday that $18.5 million in tax money was placed into the account.

Called the Economic Stabilization Fund, the rainy day account was created by a constitutional amendment approved by voters in 1988 to set aside a surplus for emergencies.

"This is another sign of our state's continuing economic expansion. Growth in natural gas tax collections over the past two years has made it possible to put some money away in the state's savings account," Bullock said.

F-16 production may be cut, company says

FORT WORTH (AP) — Federal budget pressures coupled with recent developments in Eastern Europe may cause significant cuts in production of the F-16 fighter plane built by General Dynamics Corp., the largest defense contractor in the Dallas-Fort Worth area, company officials say.

Company spokesman Joe Stout said Monday that the Air Force could cut its planned purchase of 150 F-16s by 20 percent next year and by as much as 28 percent by 1993.

"It's apparent there will be some reduction," Stout said. "It's just a matter now of finding out exactly how much."

Stout said the company's early production projections for the F-16 are based on discussions with Air Force officials.

It is too early to determine how the cuts would affect employment at General Dynamic's Fort Worth division, Stout said. About 85 percent of the company's 30,000 employees in the Dallas-Fort Worth area work on the F-16 project.

The F-16, considered to be the Air Force's top air fighter plane, has been the flagship program of General Dynamics' Fort Worth operations for more than a decade.

Scientists in Southern California short changed on quake research?

By LEE SIEGEL
AP Science Writer

PASADENA, Calif. — Scientists in Southern California complain they get far less research money than Northern California even though the south faces a bigger seismic threat, including the possibility of a catastrophic jolt beneath downtown Los Angeles.

"There's a very serious imbalance between earthquake science resources — both equipment and personnel," said Tom Heaton, scientist in charge of the U.S. Geological Survey's office in Pasadena, just northeast of downtown Los Angeles.

Such complaints — as well as proposals to monitor more closely the highly dangerous faults in the San Francisco and Los Angeles areas — were voiced Thursday at a hearing of the California Legislature's Joint Committee on Science and Technology on earthquake forecasting research.

Financial figures weren't mentioned, but the USGS has nearly 250 quake scientists at its western headquarters in Menlo Park, near San Francisco, and fewer than 20 in the southern part of the state, said Thomas Henyey, geology chairman at the University of Southern California.

"The earthquake risk for the immediate future is probably greater in Southern California than anywhere in the United States," Henyey said. "The current research effort in dollars expended in Southern California is not commensurate with the region's earthquake risk."

Scientists from Northern California did not discuss the numerical discrepancy at the hearing.

State Sen. John Garamendi, who chairs the committee, warned scientists to "arm-wrestle" among themselves on research priorities before seeking more federal and state funds, or there will be "no money to speak of."

"If there's going to be progress, there must be political union of north and south," said the Democrat from Walnut Grove, 15 miles south of Sacramento.

Garamendi called the hearing in the aftermath of the magnitude-7.1 quake on the San Andreas Fault, about 50 miles south of San Francisco. The Oct. 17 disaster killed 66 people, injured 3,200 others and caused an estimated $7 billion in damage in the San Francisco Bay area.

The Bay area faces a 50 percent chance of another magnitude-7 quake by the year 2018, either on the San Andreas or Hayward faults, according to a 1988 USGS study. Those odds remain unchanged by the recent disaster, the chief author of that study said last month.

The same report said the chance of a "big one" measuring 7.5 to 8 or more on the Richter scale is at least 60 percent likely and perhaps 70 percent likely by 2018 on the San Andreas Fault in Southern California.

That risk doesn't include the hazard posed by recently discovered "buried thrust faults" hidden beneath the Los Angeles Basin.

Such faults include the 60-mile-long Elysian Park Fault Zone, which caused a magnitude-5.9 quake that killed eight people, injured more than 200 and caused about $360 million in damage in Los Angeles on Oct. 1, 1987.

The Elysian Park Fault Zone passes directly under downtown Los Angeles.

"The most likely scenario is there will be a magnitude-7.5 or so directly under the downtown area," Caltech geologist Kerry Sieh said, adding that scientists have no idea how soon such a quake might happen.

"We cannot exclude the possibility of a 7.7 on the Elysian Park," USC scientist Egill Haukkson said.

Yet knowledge of the Elysian Park and similar faults is "10 steps behind our knowledge of the San Andreas and Hayward faults," he said.

Haukkson, Heaton and Henyey urged creation of a Southern California Earthquake Center to better pinpoint the region's seismic hazards. Henyey said $10 million for such a center is being sought.

Egyptians now worried about dam

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Earthquakes in the past disfigured one of Ramses II's colossal faces at Abu Simbel in southern Egypt, toppled Alexandria's Pharos Lighthouse and destroyed some of Cairo's most beautiful mosques.

But they've failed to faze the oldest of the great monuments, the Giza pyramids or, so far, the newest, Gamal Abdul Nasser's Aswan High Dam, which began operating in 1971.

In October, when the killer earthquake struck northern California, followed by another closer to home in Algeria, Egyptians began to worry about the High Dam's safety.

Seventeen times the size of Cheops' Great Pyramid, the Soviet-built Aswan is the world's largest rock-filled dam and it holds back the world's second largest man-made lake, 310-mile-long Lake Nasser.

A serious breach of the dam would send a huge wall of water — an estimated 110 billion gallons — roaring through the Nile River valley, where almost all Egypt's 55 million people live.

Rushing toward the Mediterranean Sea, it would sweep away much of ancient and modern Egypt and reach Cairo in three days.

"When I'm asked if the Aswan High Dam is safe from earthquakes, I can say it is, up to magnitude 7 on the Richter scale, because we've made a mock-up of the dam and tested it," said geophysicist R.M. Kebeasy, Egypt's leading dam expert.

"Even if an earthquake were to occur beneath the dam itself, it would withstand it to this level. Still, we're taking no chances. We monitor seismic activity 24 hours a day."

On Nov. 14, 1981, a 5.6 quake centered 40 miles to the south of the dam and a series of aftershocks startled Aswan's residents.

It was the strongest in living memory at Aswan, and all of Egypt shared Aswan's concern.

"Even though this earthquake was not a major concern for us, we took earthquakes seriously from that time," Kebeasy said. Within months Egypt had its first seismic station at Aswan, equipped with U.S.-supplied equipment and advisers.

Pressure on the dam and the surrounding geology is daunting.

Every year for eons, an estimated 134 million tons of sediment made its way down the Nile to the sea. Now it is captured behind the dam, adding that much more weight to the lakebed.

Water levels and pressure shift constantly, accommodating differences in wind direction, flow northward from Sudan, temperature and other factors.

Kebeasy said geologists weren't at all surprised when earthquakes started occurring as the lake began to fill.

"We thought the largest ones would appear when water is highest," he said. "They don't. The strongest ones coincide with drought."

He predicts that earthquake activity will diminish as the dam area conditions itself to its new geological feature: a huge lake.

But other experts, such as Boston University's Egyptian-born Farouk el-Baz, advise caution.

"You have an immense weight of water, and you have water seeping through faults acting as a lubricant," he said. "People should neither sit around worrying about it nor forget it. You have to be on the alert."

An early critic of the dam was geologist Farkhonda Hassan, a former member of parliament, now a professor at American University in Cairo.

She and others still question whether the Aswan earthquakes are caused by the weight of the lake or, more dangerously, by faults like the San Andreas that caused the California quake that measured 7.1.

The dam was built, she noted, in Nasser's time.

"You couldn't criticize. If you did you were branded a bad Egyptian," she added.

"There were scientists in Egypt willing and able to do in-depth geological surveys of the area, but we weren't included."

Unbeaten Lamar tough cookie for Rebs to crumble

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Editor

The Arlington Lamar Vikings didn't obtain their gaudy 12-0 record without some high powered weapons to work with.

The Vikings will come rolling into Midland's Memorial Stadium Saturday with an offense that can put points on the boards and a defense that is huge and mobile.

The Vikings won the District 7-5A championship in a league that contains Arlington, Arlington Sam Houston, Arlington Martin, Burleson, Mansfield and Weatherford. Arlington was the runnerup in the district, but lost to L.D. Bell, 22-21, in bi-district action.

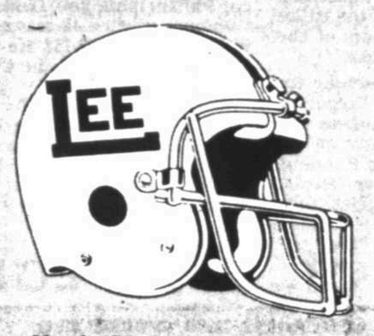

Lamar had an easy 27-7 win over Irving MacArthur in bi-district and then held on for a 17-10 win against equally undefeated Sherman Saturday at Texas Stadium.

The Vikes have an offensive line that averages 232 pounds per man, even with 198-pound tackle Shane Neumann in the lineup. Guards Mike Haney and Jason Comer each stand at 260 pounds.

But it is what is behind Lamar's offensive line that is scary as the Vikings produced two key players that performed the double 1,000 during regular season play.

Quarterback John Chupp passed for 1,010 yards in regular season and threw for five touchdowns while tailback Ryan Lyons had 1,654 yards rushing in regular season.

Chupp has improved his statistics in the playoffs, and now has 1,277 yards passing, completing 88 of 178 attempts. He has thrown only five interceptions and now has thrown for seven touchdowns.

Lyons hasn't been as prolific in the playoffs, but he now stands close to the 2,000-yard rushing mark with 1,911 yards in 12 games. Lyons had 167 yards rushing against MacArthur in bi-district play, but was held to 90 yards against a stiff Sherman defense in the area contest.

Chupp has a bevy of receivers he likes to go to, but wide receiver Chad Cannon has been his main target as of late. Cannon has caught 18 passes this year for nearly 300 yards. Flanker James Tucker is another target as is flanker Mike Robertson. Robertson had 18 catches this season.

Lee's defensive secondary will be severly tested in this game, trying to figure out when to help on the run and when to cover the pass.

Defensively, the Vikings have given up only 94 points this year, an average of only 7.8 points per game. It is a defense that has given up a lot of yardage, allowing close to 250 yards per game, but is stiff when it comes to crossing the goal line.

Cannon, a 5-8, 150-pound cornerback, is one of the mainstays of the Lamar defense. He creates havoc on the field.

Prior to the Sherman contest Saturday, Lamar had two real tests during the season. Lamar escaped district runnerup Arlington High by a 21-13 margin, but its biggest challenge to the perfect record came against Arlington Sam Houston in a game the Texans lost by a 9-7 margin. Sam Houston was known for its stiff defense this year, but had little offense to go with it.

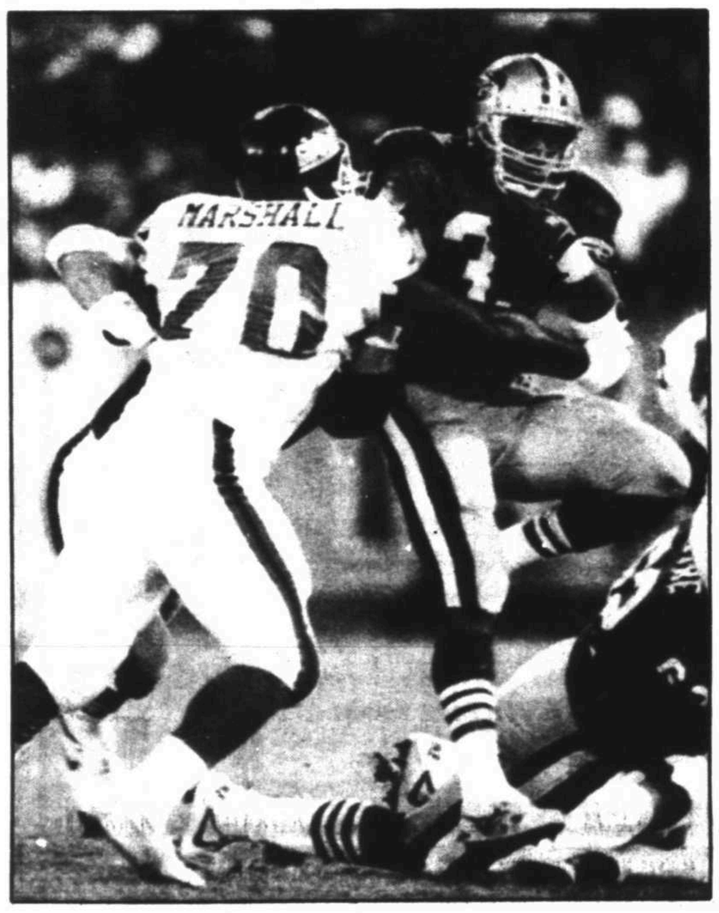

"Lamar will be a big test for our secondary," said Lee coach Earl Miller. "They are a good football team and we will have to play a sound game to beat them."

Lee offensive coordinator Van Tom Whatley said, "They score a lot of points and you hope you don't have to get into a scoring duel with them. They throw the ball a lot, but everybody in that area throws the football. We have film on one game with Keller when Keller used only eight running plays in the entire game."

Lamar's future is also bright since the Vikings start five underclassmen on both offense and defense. That is 10 returning starters back for next year.

Playoff Notes: Lee defensive back Scott Luckie said he didn't care who the Rebels were to meet this week, but after almost returning an interception for a touchdown last week against El Paso Andress, said, "I hope it's a passing team. I'm really warmed up and want to get some more interceptions."

It looks like Luckie is going to get his wish.

Roger Craig of the San Francisco 49ers tries to avoid New York Giant defensive lineman Leonard Marshall Monday night.

49ers receive early Christmas gift

N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Late in the first half Monday night, the Giants trailed the 49ers, 24-7, and their most talented defender, Lawrence Taylor, was out of the game with a sprained right knee and ankle.

But they fought back and tied the score in the fourth quarter, only to make a mistake that allowed Mike Cofer to correct his by kicking a 45-yard field goal that won the game for the 49ers, who added a late touchdown for a 34-24 victory.

The field goal was a gift from the Giants. Cofer had missed from 50 yards, but the officials ruled that Reyna Thompson of the Giants had lined up in the neutral zone. The 5-yard penalty gave Cofer another chance, and he made it.

Two plays after that field goal, Eric Wright intercepted a pass by Phil Simms.

The crowd of 63,461 at Candlestick Park watched the 49ers then score an insurance touchdown on Tom Rathman's 1-yard run with 65 seconds remaining.

And so the 49ers were home free in a passing shootout between Simms and Joe Montana and two of the best teams in the National Football League.

Simms completed 25 of 48 passes for 326 yards and two touchdowns — 53 yards to Dave Meggett and 7 to Odessa Turner. Simms was sacked seven times and was intercepted three times. The Giants also scored on Otis Anderson's 2-yard run and Bjorn Nittmo's 39-yard field goal.

Montana completed 27 of 33 for 292 yards and three touchdowns — 4 yards to John Taylor, 4 to Jerry Rice and 17 to Brent Jones. Cofer also had a 44-yard field goal.

The 49ers were 5-point favorites. They improved their record to 10-2 and lead their division by two games.

The Giants fell to 9-3 and lead the Philadelphia Eagles by a game in the Eastern Division of the National Football Conference. The Giants and the Eagles will meet Sunday in Giants Stadium.

The 49ers wasted little time scoring. They took the opening kickoff and drove 80 yards in nine plays for a touchdown, and the way they did it was impressive. They ran three times and gained only a yard each time.

But Montana threw six passes, all on quick dropbacks, and completed them all. The longest was a 37-yarder to Jerry Rice.

The touchdown came on a 4-yard pass to Taylor, who leaped in the end zone over the defender Mark Collins.

The Giants responded with an 82-yard touchdown drive that took up almost half the first quarter. Simms made two big third-down completions: 15 yards to Odessa Turner on third-and-14 and 11 yards to Lionel Manuel on third-and-10.

When the drive stalled, Bjorn Nittmo kicked a 22-yard field goal. But Darryl Pollard ran into Nittmo, although the contact did not seem severe, and the Giants gave up the field goal and instead accepted a first down on the 49ers' 2-yard line.

On the next play, Anderson battered his way to the end zone behind Maurice Carthon's blocking, and the score was tied at 7-7 after 12 minutes 39 seconds of the first quarter.

The tie lasted for 63 seconds. Spencer Tillman of the 49ers returned the ensuing kickoff 60 yards before Perry Williams drove him out of bounds, and when Williams hit Tillman after they had gone out of bounds, the Giants were penalized 15 yards.

So the 49ers had the ball on the Giants' 16. Three plays later, from the 4-yard line, Montana passed to Rice on the line of scrimmage. Rice slipped out of Terry Kinard's grasp and made it to the right corner of the end zone for a touchdown, and the 49ers led, 14-7.

The next time the 49ers had the ball was in the second quarter. Again, Montana hit big passes to Taylor and Rice, and when the drive stalled, Cofer kicked a 44-yard field goal. That raised the 49ers' lead to 17-7 after 7:59 of the second quarter.

The 49ers were not done. On the first play after the ensuing kickoff, Simms passed for Zeke Mowatt.

Instead, the ball landed in Matt Millen's hands, and he returned it 10 yards to the Giants' 35. Three plays later, Montana zipped a 17-yard pass into Jones's outstretched hands in the end zone, and the 49ers led by 24-7.

Three minutes later, the 49ers were moving again when Montana scrambled.

Greg Cox knocked the ball out of his hands, and Kinard recovered for the Giants on the Giants' 45. Six plays later, Nittmo kicked a 39-yard line-drive field goal, and the half ended with the 49ers leading by 24-10.

By halftime, Montana had completed 17 of 19 for 195 yards, 3 touchdowns and 1 sack. Simms was 9 of 19 for 112 yards, no touchdowns and 4 sacks.

Five plays after the start of the second half, Dave Meggett of the Giants turned a short pass from Simms into a 53-yard touchdown. The conversion cut the 49ers' lead to 24-17 after 1:51 of the third quarter.

The rest of the quarter featured aborted drives by both teams, including fumbles by Meggett, on a tackle by Jim Burt, and Montana.

Lady 'Dogs host LHS

From Staff Reports

Midland High's girls basketball team will be in action at 7:30 p.m. tonight on their home court at the MHS gymnasium to take on Lubbock High.

The Lady Bulldogs are the only local team playing at home tonight, but the MHS boys are on the road at Lubbock Monterey while the Midland Lee boys play across town at Lubbock Dunbar. Both of those games are scheduled for 8 p.m.

The Lady 'Dogs enter the contest sporting a 3-2 record after taking a 60-52 win over Dunbar last Tuesday.

The MHS boys are 4-3 after earning fourth place with two wins and two losses in the Tall City Tournament last weekend at the Chaparral Center. The Lee boys also played in the Tall City tourney, coming away 1-1 in the event for a 3-2 overall record on the season.

Penalties drill Oilers

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — The harder the Houston Oilers try to curb their penalties the more they seem to veer off track.

"I've never been anywhere where we tried harder to curb the penalties," Coach Jerry Glanville said Monday. "I make a training reel of every player and he watches himself (on penalties committed)."

The training reels will be much longer this week after Sunday's 34-0 loss to Kansas City in which the Oilers committed a team record 16 penalties for 115 yards in losses.

The Oilers are the most penalized team in the NFL with 118 penalties for 921 yards.

"That's discouraging and disappointing," Glanville said. "I've never been anywhere a team worked harder on those things. In our team meeting Saturday night, that's all we talked about."

The Oilers drilled all week against the uneven count cadence of Chiefs quarterback Steve DeBerg, designed to pull defenses offsides.

"(Chuck) Hartleib did a great job giving us the three-count and we still had people offsides," Glanville said.

The Oilers had four defensive offsides penalties, one helping to set up a field goal and another nullifying an interception by Richard Johnson.

Houston has won nine of its last 33 road games but Glanville won't concede the Oilers are a bad road team.

"I don't think it's playing on the road and it certainly wasn't the weather," Glanville said. "I believe we just didn't execute and got whipped. We miss our fans but so do all the other teams."

The Oilers now must fall back on another favorite Glanville statistic: the Oilers have not lost two games in a row since the 1986 season, a string that will be tested at Pittsburgh Sunday.

"We've played some great games on the road in bad weather," Glanville said. "We've taken fans out of the game on the road before and we'll have to do it again at Pittsburgh."

The Oilers' injuries have mounted almost as frequently as their penalties.

Notre Dame loss sends Buffs into No. 1 spot

Associated Press

Colorado is No. 1 in college football for the first time in school history. While members of the team said it will be fun to have some "bragging rights," they won't consider their work done until Jan. 1.

That's when the Buffaloes, previously No. 2 behind top-ranked Notre Dame, meet the Fighting Irish in the Orange Bowl for what could be the national championship.

Colorado moved up in The Associated Press poll on Monday after Miami beat Notre Dame 27-10 Saturday. The Fighting Irish, who had been No. 1 since the first week of the season, fell to No. 5, while Miami rose three places to No. 4.

Alabama, the only other major undefeated team, moved up two places to No. 2 while once-beaten Michigan remained third after beating Ohio State 28-18. Alabama, which had the week off, finishes its regular season Saturday at Auburn.

The top five teams all figure to have a shot at the national championship. Colorado can win it by beating Notre Dame in the Orange Bowl, but if the Buffaloes lose it would open the door for the other four teams.

"It is going to be our ultimate challenge," Colorado coach Bill McCartney said. "Anyone who knows anything about Notre Dame and its great traditions knows that they will bounce back from the Miami loss. You can count on that."

Colorado players expressed reserved pleasure on Monday.

"It's really not a big deal, because we've still got one more to play," defensive co-captain Michael Jones said. "If we lose, it all goes out the window."

"It's a great feeling," guard Darrin Muilenburg said, "but we know we have to prove it and finish it off with one last game."

"I feel the same as I did when we were No. 9," linebacker Alfred Williams said. "It feels good, but there's no golden light shining on me. The way everything has fallen, I think we should be in the top two. It's funny how the rankings go, but it'll be fun to have some bragging rights."

University president Gorden Gee was a little more enthused.

"We now have a football team our chemistry department can be proud of," he said, referring to the Nobel Prize for chemistry recently awarded to CU chemist Thomas Cech.

"To remain (No. 1)," McCartney said, "we know that we have to defeat Notre Dame. If we do that, we can lay claim to be the national champions. It is going to be our ultimate challenge."

Hoosier rusher earns Camp award

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Anthony Thompson, who set three NCAA rushing and scoring records this season for Indiana, was named on Monday as the Walter Camp Player of the Year.

Thompson won a plurality of the votes cast by Division I-A coaches and sports information directors. The voting revealed a lack of a consensus about who deserves recognition this year as college football's top player.

"There are a lot of great players out there," Thompson acknowledged in accepting the honor and discussing his prospects for winning the Heisman Trophy, which is voted on by a committee of sportswriters and broadcasters.

Asked if he felt he were the best player in college football, Thompson said: "I don't think so. When I was younger, my mother told me there's always somebody better."

Thompson, who will be the first Indiana athlete in any sport to have his uniform number retired, said his success would not have been possible without the contributions of his teammates and coaches.

The votes cast for "player of the year" by about 190 head football coaches and sports information directors were only a recommendation. The final decision rested with the foundation named after the "father of American football."

The foundation does not usually provide a breakdown of the voting for top player, according to president Ernest C. Williams.

Williams would say only that Thompson was recommended by about 30 percent of those voting, while Houston quarterback Andre Ware was second with about 25 percent. He said three to four players captured most of the votes.

"Our biggest concern was that the award would go to someone we felt strongly about and not someone who would (necessarily) win the Heisman Trophy," Williams said.

Thompson was named to the Walter Camp team last year and again this season, picking up more votes for inclusion on the 1989 team than any other player in the 100-year history of the selections. He was chosen for this year's team by 89 percent of those who voted.

His school records, which include bowl games, are 5,299 career yards, 68 touchdowns, 412 points.

Williams also acknowledged that LSU, UNLV and St. John's were not at full strength.

"We played LSU, their two big kids, it was the second basketball game for them," he said. "They're not sure what college basketball is all about. We did get Vegas when they had the two starters sitting out, and played St. John's without their best player."

In response to a question, Williams did acknowledge that there may be some benefit in national rankings in regard to recruiting and seeding in the NCAA Tournament.

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Jumping from No. Nowhere to No. 4 did nothing to soften Roy Williams' opinion of basketball polls.

"I really don't pay any attention to them," the Kansas coach said Monday. "Needless to say, it's going to get a lot of attention tonight and tomorrow until Thursday. But I really could care less. I know we've got to do it on the court."

The Jayhawks came home to about 300 cheering fans at the airport Sunday after one of the most eye-popping season beginnings they've ever had. After beating Alabama-Birmingham at home in the first round of the preseason NIT, Kansas whipped then-No. 2 LSU, then-No. 1 UNLV and then-No. 25 St. John's to win the tournament and wreck everybody's preseason poll.

Picked anywhere from fifth to eighth in the Big Eight, the Jayhawks were naturally absent from the preseason Top 25. But voters made them No. 4 Monday, trailing only Syracuse, Arizona and Georgetown.

While taking congratulatory messages from fans during his weekly radio show Monday night, Williams continued to downplay polls and his own coaching.

"The reason I don't pay a lot of attention to the polls — let me change that — the reason I don't pay any attention to the polls is because in basketball you do get a chance to play at the end of the year," he said.

"I'm glad you say the players get the credit first," he told one caller. "That's really not any genius sitting over there on the bench. The players have to do it. They believe in what we're trying to do. We have intelligent kids who are doing a good job of carrying it out."

Palmer, Morgan added to ballot

NEW YORK (AP) — Gaylord Perry, a 300-game winner who fell 32 votes short of election to the Baseball Hall of Fame this year, will have added competition in 1990 from three-time Cy Young Award winner Jim Palmer and two-time Most Valuable Player Joe Morgan.

Palmer, who won the American League Cy Young for Baltimore, and Morgan, who won his National League MVP awards for the Cincinnati Reds, head 21 first-time candidates on the ballot distributed Monday to veteran members of the Baseball Writers Association of America.

Perry, who won 314 games while pitching for San Francisco, Cleveland, Texas, San Diego, Atlanta, Kansas City, the New York Yankees and Seattle, is one of 23 holdover candidates on the ballot. Also on the ballot is pitcher Jim Bunning, who won 224 games while pitching for Detroit, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Los Angeles. Bunning was 53 votes short of election in the most recent balloting.

Morgan batted .271 with 268 home runs and 689 stolen bases in 22 seasons, winning consecutive MVP awards in 1975 and 1976 as the Reds won consecutive World Series titles. He holds the NL record for most games played at second base (2,427) as well as a number of fielding records.

Morgan also played for Houston, San Francisco, Philadelphia and Oakland.

Palmer pitched 19 seasons for Baltimore, posting a record of 268-152. He was a 20-game winner eight times and won the Cy Young in 1973, 1975 and 1976.

Other players eligible for the first time are Jim Bibby, Mike Caldwell, Bucky Dent, Roy Howell, Greg Luzinski, Tug McGraw, Rick Monday, Jose Morales, Amos Otis, Lou Piniella, Jerry Remy, Mickey Rivers, Tony Scott, Ken Singleton, John Stearns, Champ Summers, Dick Tidrow, Mike Torrez and Bob Watson.

The other returning candidates are Dick Allen, Bobby Bonds, Ken Boyer, Orlando Cepeda, Elroy Face, Curt Flood, Ferguson Jenkins, Jim Kaat, Harvey Kuenn, Mickey Lolich, Sparky Lyle, Bill Mazeroski, Minnie Minoso, Thurman Munson, Tony Oliva, Vada Pinson, Ron Santo, Paul Splittorff, Luis Tiant, Joe Torre and Maury Wills.

To be elected to the Hall of Fame, a candidate must receive 75 percent of the votes cast by 10-year members of the BBWAA. Players become eligible five years after retirement and can remain on the ballot a maximum of 15 years before being passed along to the Veterans Committee.

There are 204 members in the Hall of Fame, 76 of whom have been elected by the BBWAA, 119 elected by the Veterans Committee and nine by the committee that considered former Negro League stars.

Pena not in St. Louis cards, signs with Boston

BOSTON (AP) — Tony Pena signed a $6.4 million, three-year contract with the Red Sox on Monday as Boston ended its long reluctance to sign high-paid free agents in an attempt to end its catching problems.

Pena, a five-time All-Star who spent the last three seasons with St. Louis, will receive a $600,000 signing bonus and salaries of $1.5 million in 1990, $2.1 million in 1991 and $2.2 million in 1992. He earned $1.1 million last season.

The Cardinals have high hopes for rookie catcher Todd Zeile and had no interest in re-signing Pena, one of baseball's top fielding catchers.

The signing probably means the end of Rich Gedman's nine-year career with the Red Sox. Gedman's performances have declined since he made the American League All-Star team in 1985 and 1986. Last season, Gedman, a left-handed hitter, batted .212, his second-lowest average with the Red Sox. He had four homers and 16 RBIs in 260 at bats.

Rick Cerone, Boston's other catcher last season, hit .243 with four homers and 48 RBIs in 296 at bats. John Marzano joined the team at the end of the season and batted .444 in 18 at bats.

Pena, a right-handed batter, hit .259 last season with four homers and 37 RBIs and made the National League All-Star team for the fifth time. He has a .274 average for his nine-year major league career with a high of .301 in 1983.

"If the Red Sox sign Tony Pena, I'm sure Rich will be out of here," Jack Sands, Gedman's agent, said last week.

The Red Sox said landing Pena was their first major free agent signing since first baseman Tony Perez joined them in 1980.

The club already has lost first baseman Nick Esasky, its home run and RBI leader last season. He became a free agent and signed with Atlanta.

Pena, who led National League catchers in fielding percentage the last two seasons, is a much better fielder than Gedman or Cerone. Pena committed two errors in 141 games last year, while Gedman and Cerone each had 10 errors in much less action.

"Tony is a fine all-around catcher," Red Sox general partner Haywood Sullivan said. "He plays with enthusiasm and should really help our pitching staff. His overall abilities behind the plate will help the team tremendously."

Pena, who spent his first six seasons with Pittsburgh, won't replace Esasky's punch at the plate. But he should do wonders for the Red Sox catching problems and cut down on opponents' willingness to steal against the shaky arms of Gedman and Cerone.

Pena is "one of the premier defensive catchers in baseball," Red Sox general manager Lou Gorman said.

Nolan won't run for office

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Nolan Ryan is putting his political career on hold, but the Texas Rangers pitcher is already displaying a knack for sidestepping the issues.

Ryan has praised a deal that will put Gold Glove outfielder Gary Pettis in his team's outfield, but has refused to say what else he thinks his ballclub needs to do to chase a pennant.

"I don't think it would be fair for me to speculate on what they should do to improve the club," he said at a press conference Monday.

But Ryan believes the acquisition of Pettis will be a real boost. The Rangers signed Pettis, 32, to a three-year contract on Friday. The Rangers took fourth place in the American League West division in 1989.

Pettis, a free agent who played for the Detroit Tigers, will receive a reported $2.7 million for three years, plus incentives. He has won three Gold Gloves for defensive excellence in his first five big league seasons and is expected to pick up a fourth when the awards for 1989 are announced next month.

"I think defensively he's going to help us," said Ryan, who is baseball's all-time leading strikeout pitcher.

"And as a leadoff hitter he can match last year's numbers, we should improve offensively."

Ryan said he does not know how much longer he can pitch, and is taking things on a season-to-season basis.

"Right now, I don't have plans to play in '91, but everything really hinges on what happens in 1990," Ryan said. "As far as my baseball career is concerned, I take one year at a time.

Rice cagers win 91-64

Associated Press

Sharp shooting guard Dana Hardy led a Rice attack that crushed Tulane 91-64 to keep the Green Wave winless since returning to college basketball for the first time in four years.

Other Southwest Conference teams didn't fare as well Monday night.

Hardy hit three 3-pointers in a row midway through the second half as the Owls put the game away with a 19-8 run. Hardy finished with 20 points and teammate Kenneth Rourke added 18 for the Owls in the non-conference game in Houston.

Michael Christian scored a game-high 26 points for Tulane, which fell to 0-2.

Rice was the only victor among SWC teams in action Monday night. At the Great Alaska Shootout in Anchorage, Texas A&M fell to Hawaii 75-71. Southern Methodist lost a home game to Vanderbilt, 65-60, and the University of Texas-San Antonio knocked off Texas Christian University 74-64 in Fort Worth.

TCU coach Moe Iba had a simple explanation for his team's defeat.

"We are an awful ballclub right now," Iba said.

The difference was at the free throw line, he said.

The Horned Frogs (1-1) were 7-of-22, while the Roadrunners (2-0) sealed the victory by hitting eight straight free throws in the final 28 seconds.

Darryl Eaton hit five straight 3-pointers and was 4-of-4 at the free throw line for 19 points to lead UTSA.

Bruce Wheatley added 18 points and 13 rebounds for UTSA, which led 36-34 at the half.

Texas A&M was victimized at the free throw line, too. Hawaii's Chris Gaines hit 19 of 22 free throws to pace Hawaii's 75-71 victory. Gaines had 24 points as Hawaii improved to 2-1.

David Harris led the Aggies (1-2) with 18 points, followed by Freddy Ricks with 16 and Tony Milton with 13.

SMU lost its home opener for the first time in 13 years when sophomore center Todd Milholland sparked Vanderbilt (1-0) with 15 points.

Milholland hit four free throws in the final 19 seconds to drop SMU to 1-1.

Senior forward John Colborne led the Mustangs with 17 points. Guards Rod Hampton and Troy Valentino each scored a career-high 12 points.

SMU coach John Shumate said the Mustangs "played scared."

"That's where inexperience comes in, especially at the point position. I thought we played very poorly," Shumate said. "We cannot have 14 turnovers against a good team."

Mookie stays in Toronto

TORONTO (AP) — Mookie Wilson, who sparked Toronto's drive to the AL East title after being acquired in August, is staying with the Blue Jays for at least two more years.

Wilson, who had spent his entire career with the New York Mets before being sent to Toronto, on Monday signed a two-year contract with an option for a third year for a guaranteed $2.95 million.

"I think Toronto has been very fair," said Richie Bry, Wilson's agent, who met with general manager Pat Gillick and assistant GM Gord Ash at the end of the season. "There were no hitches, we just kept going forward."

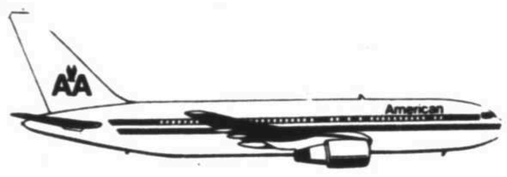

Wilson, 33, filed for free agency after the Jays were beaten by the World Series-champion Oakland Athletics in the AL playoffs. But he told a press conference that his wish was to return to the Blue Jays.

"I'm happy to be back," he said. "There were other clubs interested but my first choice was Toronto."

Wilson will get a $450,000 signing bonus, $900,000 in 1990 and $1.4 million in 1991. The Blue Jays have an option for 1992 at $1.45 million but must pay Wilson a $200,000 buyout if it is not exercised.

OPEC reaches production accord

VIENNA (AP) — OPEC ministers said today they reached a new production agreement that would raise the group's output ceiling to 22 million barrels of oil a day and maintain a target price of $18 a barrel.

All 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries planned to sign the agreement later in the day, ministers said as they broke up a main bargaining session.

It was not immediately known how the increase would be allocated. The cartel likely would issue a communique after the agreement was signed.

OPEC's daily ceiling for the fourth quarter is 20.5 million barrels, but analysts say it is producing more than 23 million barrels, with Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates cheating on their quotas.

Iranian oil minister Gholamreza Aqazadeh confirmed that a deal was reached and that the new ceiling would be 22 million barrels a day.

Venezuelan minister Celestino Armas said all members agreed to the pact.

Hisham Nazer, Saudi Arabia's oil minister nodded yes when asked if the target price would be $18 a barrel, its current level.

The ministers overcame their differences on the fourth day of their regular winter conference to reach an agreement for the first half of 1990.

The ministers had struggled with demands from Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates for bigger portions of the production.

It was doubtful the recalcitrant United Arab Emirates would abide by any quota agreed to today. It and Kuwait have been producing 2 million barrels a day apiece, or double their current quotas.

The oil markets likely will be disappointed in OPEC's solution to the member's disagreements about quota allocations.

North Sea Brent Blend, the most widely traded international crude oil, was trading at a spot price of $18.25 a barrel this morning, down 20 cents from late Monday.

Recently, oil prices have been surprisingly strong in face of overproduction by OPEC, and are trading at levels 50 percent above a year ago.

Karen Drehmer of Detroit checks out the first edition of newly merged Detroit News and Free Press. A strike threatens to dampen the new merger.

Strike could stall newspaper merger

DETROIT (AP) — The Detroit News and Detroit Free Press published their first editions under a partial merger today after a three-year legal battle, but a possible strike may stall the joint operation before it's a week old.

Talks between the newspapers and the unions broke off Sunday over wage and benefit demands.

Detroit's two major daily newspapers began publishing under a joint operating agreement following a vote Nov. 13 by the U.S. Supreme Court, which upheld lower court rulings approving the 100-year agréement.

The Knight-Ridder Inc.-owned Free Press declared it was a financially failing newspaper in April 1986 and applied with the News for the operating agreement.

According to figures released Nov. 13, the daily circulation of the News, the nation's ninth largest newspaper, is 690,422, and 832,383 Sundays. The Free Press, the 10th biggest paper, had circulations of 626,434 and 687,537.

The newspapers merged business operations under the Detroit Newspaper Agency. News and editorial departments remain separate and independent but combined editions will be published on the weekend under the masthead The Detroit News and Free Press. About 500 jobs were to be cut as a result of the arrangement.

While the newspapers prepared the first post-agreement edition of the Free Press for today, workers voted against ratifying a contract offer from the new newspaper agency and in favor of strike authorization.

Teamsters Local 372, which represents 1,100 drivers and other circulation workers, set a strike deadline of 12:01 a.m. Thursday. Newspaper Guild Local 22, representing about 500 editorial workers from both papers, voted unanimously to support a strike.

Detroit loses sales while Japan gains

N.Y. Times News Service

DETROIT — The nation's Big Three automakers suffered serious sales declines in mid-November, while the so-called Japanese transplants posted sharp gains on far fewer sales.

Overall, sales of domestically produced cars slumped 6.1 percent, and light-truck sales dropped 1.7 percent, not quite so dismal a trend as during the early part of the month.

The Big Three and five Japanese automakers operating American plants sold 149,381 cars from Nov. 11 to 20, down from 159,082 a year ago, for a seasonally adjusted annual rate of about 6.2 million.

Analysts said the sales report indicated that the automotive industry remained soft, and they agreed that production cuts were likely, they were not sure how they would be accomplished.

Ron Glantz of Montgomery Securities in San Francisco, said he was looking for scattered shutdowns, a few weeks at a time, during the next couple of months.

Jack Kirnan of Kidder Peabody in New York said he was hearing rumors of an industrywide extension of the traditional Christmas vacation, that starts just before the holiday and ends just after the New Year.

From an investment perspective, Kirnan said an industrywide shutdown was bullish because "it dramatizes to the Fed the need for continued lower interest rates. It dramatizes to the union the need for sanity in the bargaining for the next contract. And it will help improve the resale values of cars and trucks," which is hurt when companies overproduce and then use incentives to clear inventories.

Indeed, the prices of all three stocks rose on the New York Stock Exchange on Monday.

Ford Motor Co. added $1.125, to close at $45.375; General Motor Corp. gained 87.5 cents, to close at $43.875 and Chrysler Corp. rose 75 cents, to close at $20.25.

GM car sales in mid-November were off 13 percent, to 66,338, Ford's sales were off 11.5 percent, to 41,963 and Chrysler's car sales were off 11.9 percent, to 20,187.

Nissan Motor Corp. sales for the period jumped 19.5 percent, to 2,329, Honda Motor Corp.'s car sales rose 29.7 percent, 10,714, Mazda Motor Corp.'s car sales rose 44.9 percent, to 978, and Toyota Motor Corp.'s car sales rose almost threefold to 5,882, compared with a year ago. Mitsubishi Motor Corp., in its first full year of U.S. production, sold 990 cars. The five Japanese automakers producing in North America together sell about as many domestically-built cars as Chrysler.

Light-truck sales declined to 98,878 from 100,643 a year ago, with Ford acccounting for the entire decline; it had a 14.8 percent drop from a year earlier, while GM, Chrysler and Nissan all posted increases.

Tom Houston, a Chrysler spokesman, commenting on increased truck sales, said: "It's about time something turned up." He credited financial incentives for trucks and recent increases in dealers' advertising outlays for the gain.

A Ford spokesman, referring to Chrylser's truck gain, said the number-three automaker "obviously is trying to buy some market share. Chrysler is the only company with incentives on fullsize pick-up trucks."

For the first 20 days of the month, domestic car sales were down 15.3 percent, and domestic truck sales were down 8.8 percent. Sales of minivans and utility vehicles, which are used as personal transportation, are included in truck sales.

"This is progress, but nothing to get excited about," said Harvey Heinbach, an automotive analyst for Merrill Lynch & Co. in New York. "The first 10 days of the month must have been an aberration, but still, these are not good numbers at all."

GM plants in Doraville, Ga., and Fairfax, Kan., and Chrysler plants in Toledo and Detroit will be closed this week to help reduce inventories.

Ford will shut its Dearborn, Mich., plant for a week starting Dec. 4 and keep its Lorain, Ohio, plant shut until Dec. 11, also to reduce inventories.

Charles Brady, auto analyst for Oppenheimer & Co. in New York, said no clear sales trend had emerged. The soft sales of October and November are understandable in light of the strong incentives at the end of the summer and the sharp price increases for 1990 models, he said, but how long the down trend continues depends on the strength of the overall economy and consumer psychology.

"The consumer wants to know where his job is headed," said Brady. "I read the same stuff everyone else does about the economy and that's not what I want to be reading when I'm about to pop for a four-year loan."

Bill would limit employee tax uses

WASHINGTON (AP) — The biggest single revenue-raiser in the new deficit reduction agreement will sharply limit employers' ability to use taxes withheld from workers' checks before turning the money over to the Treasury.

The legislation on President Bush's desk would reduce to one day — from as many as seven days — the grace period allowed before large employers have to deposit withheld taxes.

Congressional economists estimate the change, which takes effect Aug. 1, would save the government $2.45 billion in the last two months of the budget year ending Sept. 30. That's more than twice the size of the next-largest revenue increase in the bill.

Two far smaller parts of the bill also rely on accelerating tax collections. One affects the airline industry, which collects the 8 percent tax on passenger tickets; the other requires gasoline wholesalers to make quicker payments of the 9.1-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax.

The payroll-tax change will affect only those employers that have collected more than $100,000 of Social Security and income taxes in a given period.

"That's not going to hit the Mom-and-Pop operations," Starr said. "Perhaps those with 100 or 200 employees may be affected."

David Burton, a tax specialist with the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, sees the change becoming a burden for medium and larger companies, especially those that have more than one plant or outlet.

"Obviously they will be denied a small float," the temporary use of withheld taxes, Burton said. "But the problem comes because they will be forced to make deposits before they can calculate how much they really owe."

Burton said many companies with multiple outlets will have to make the federal tax deposit a day or two before they can collect records of how many hours were worked during the pay period or exactly how many people were on the payroll.

Under present law, a month is divided into eight deposit periods of three or four days each. In general, an employer has three banking days to make a deposit if at the end of any of those periods the company has undeposited taxes of $3,000 or more.

Chrysler, Soviets look at joint venture on jet

N.Y. Times News Service

In a striking example of commercial glasnost, a Soviet state enterprise that made the planes that bombed Afghanistan has joined an American company to build the ultimate capitalist status symbol: a supersonic jet for business executives.

The project is still in its early stages and faces formidable obstacles, including environmental concerns and worries about exporting sensitive technology. Some skeptics say the proposed plane will never be built.

"The whole idea is preposterous," said Richard N. Perle, a fellow at the American Enterprise Institute in Washington and a former under secretary of defense. "There would be immense licensing problems."

He said export controls were unlikely to be relaxed to allow the free flow of technology between the countries.

But East bloc and aerospace experts say it signifies the Soviet Union's hunger for hard currency, Western technology and new uses for its historically military-oriented aerospace industry, now that the Kremlin is cutting military spending.

Sukhoi, a company best known for building the Su-25, a jet used in the war in Afghanistan, has teamed up with Gulfstream Aerospace Corp., a subsidiary of Chrysler Corp. best known for building high-priced private jets used by top executives who want an edge on the corporate battlefield.

Rolls-Royce PLC, the British aerospace manufacturer, has been signed up to design the engine for the plane with a Soviet company, Lyulka. The plane would tentatively carry 15 to 20 passengers, fly at speeds of about 1,500 miles an hour and cost $50 million — twice the price on the most expensive corporate jet on the market today.

The proposed plane, according to Allen E. Paulson, the president of Gulfstream, would have the range to fly the booming trans-Pacific market for corporate travel, especially from the United States to Japan.

The only civilian supersonic plane flying today is the British-French Concorde, which took more than five years to develop and does not have trans-Pacific range.

After months of meetings between Sukhoi and Gulfstream engineers, the final designs are scheduled to be approved within weeks. It would be the first joint civil aviation project between the countries.

MARKETS

Crude prices see little movement

Oil prices opened four cents off today before the market could react to news accounts of OPEC accord. Monday as the market awaited word on OPEC, energy futures prices fell in light trading Monday on what analysts described as a technical selloff.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the January contract for West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of U.S. crude oil, fell 19 cents to close at $19.63 a barrel.

Contracts between February and June finished between 18 cents and 25 cents lower.

Analysts said the market's weakness did not reflect events in Vienna, Austria, where the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is holding its semi-annual conference.

Refined oil products traded on the exchange also declined.

Wholesale unleaded gasoline for December delivery lost 0.74 cent to 50.89 cents a barrel, while contracts for delivery between January and June ended 0.81 cent to 1.10 cents a gallon lower.

Dollar mostly higher; gold lower

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rose against most major foreign currencies except the Canadian dollar and the British pound in light European trading, dealers said today.

Gold and silver prices were sharply lower as profit taking continued in the wake of last week's steep rise, bullion dealers said.

Currency dealers said the dollar's rise is only a pause in a downward trend. They said the U.S. currency is under pressure from confusion caused by the U.S. Federal Reserve's interest rate policy and the bullish impact of East European reforms on the West German mark.

- 1.6060 Swiss francs
- 6.1310 French francs
- 2.0260 Dutch guilders
- 1,324.75 Italian lire
- 1.1667 Canadian dollars

The pound moved higher after Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher reiterated her determination to remain head of the Conservative Party.

Traders said the markets will be watching Wednesday's scheduled release of preliminary third quarter U.S. gross national product figures. If the figures reflecting economic growth are lower, dealers said the Federal Reserve could drop interest rates which would weaken the dollar.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose 0.30 yen to a closing 143.65 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 143.85 yen.

In London, the dollar fell against the British pound. It cost $1.5633 to buy one pound, more expensive for buyers than $1.5605 late Monday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $408.70 a troy ounce, down from $414.25 bid late Monday. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $410.40.

In Zurich, the bid price was $409.10, down from $414 bid late Monday.

Stocks open lower in early trade

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices were lower in early trading today as the market continued to sort out the prospects for lower interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was down 2.35 points to 2,692.62 after a half-hour of trading at 10 a.m. EST.

Declining issues outpaced advancers by about 3 to 2 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 594 issues down, 392 up and 532 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 21.48 million shares.

Wall Street analysts said market players continued to debate the Federal Reserve's next move after the central bank surprised many observers on Monday by draining reserves from the banking system. The Fed action pushed short-term interest rates higher, dashing widely held beliefs that it was easing credit.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks was down 0.30 to 190.83.

Among actively traded issues on the NYSE, American Express was up ¼ to 35, Exxon had risen ⅛ to 47 and Texaco had advanced ¼ to 54⅛.

Chevron was down 1⅜ to 66⅞, AT&T was off ¼ to 42⅞ and Philip Morris was down ⅛ to 41⅜.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off 0.69 to 373.35.

On Monday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 19.42 to 2,694.97.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 7 to 5 on the NYSE, with 860 up, 596 down and 515 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 149.39 million shares, against 86.29 million in the previous session.

Nevertheless, analysts said investors remained generally optimistic that interest rates are in an overall declining pattern.

"The market could surprise us on the upside today," said Larry Wachtel, analyst with Prudential-Bache Securities Inc.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Existing home sales steady at high levels

WASHINGTON (AP) — Existing-home sales remained steady last month at their highest level since January, a real estate trade group said, and analysts expect single-digit mortgage rates to sustain sales well into 1990.

The National Association of Realtors said Monday that sales of existing single-family homes totaled a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.52 million, the same as September's revised rate and the highest since January's 3.55 million rate.

The September rate was 1.2 percent above August's 3.48 million sales.

U.S., Soviets on verge of trade relations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and the Soviet Union are on the verge of reviving normal trade relations as their leaders meet in this weekend's summit, though it could be years before trading practices catch up with the political changes sweeping the Communist bloc.

Trade between the two superpowers will be a primary topic of discussion at the Mediterranean shipboard summit meeting between President Bush and Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

High Court says no to denying conversions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court refused to allow New York City, and perhaps other communities, to enlist unwilling developers in the fight against homelessness.

The justices left intact Monday a victory for developers who said New York City violated their rights by banning conversion or demolition of hotels that offer a haven for the poor, elderly and ill.

The court let stand a ruling that a law banning conversion or demolition of New York City's single-room-occupancy housing unconstitutionally confiscates private property.

Halliburton names group head

N.Y. Times News Service

Halliburton Co., one of the nation's largest providers of oilfield, engineering and construction services, has promoted Alan A. Baker to head its diversified oilfield services group.

As group president, Baker, 57, will be responsible for 10 manufacturing and service companies, which contributed $2.2 billion, or about 45 percent, of Halliburton's total sales last year.

Brown & Root Inc., a unit that is involved in engineering and construction, produced approximately the same level of revenues.

Baker had been the president of Halliburton's services division, which contributed to oil and gas production.

The oilfield group, which has 30,000 employees in 100 countries, had reported to Dale P. Jones, Halliburton's president since June.

The appointment of Baker, who has worked at the company for 37 years, will allow Jones to concentrate on corporate activities, said Thomas H. Cruikshank, the chairman and chief executive.

Restructured completely in the last five years, the trimmer oilfield services group has started to show gains in profitability, analysts say.

Its operating income rose by 27 percent during the third quarter from last year because of a pickup in American drilling activity and better margins, the company said.

Baker is a career employee of the Houston-based Halliburton, which he joined as a trainee in 1954.

He served in a number of engineering, operations and executive capacities in the United States and served as head of the company's East Asian division in Singapore from 1981 to 1983.

In 1985, Baker was named president of the Vann Systems well-service company unit in Houston, and was elected president of Halliburton Services, a unit that is a part of the oilfield services group, in April 1987.

A native of Duncan Falls, Ohio, Baker is a 1954 graduate of Marietta College in Ohio, where he earned a bachelor's degree in petroleum engineering. He and his wife, Betty Ann, have two adult children.

The Lincoln Savings Bank, which operates in the New York area, said yesterday that its president, Wayne J. Stemmer, had resigned and that Thomas J. Ogletree had been named to succeed him.

Stemmer also resigned as the president of the bank's parent, Unicorp American Corp., which is 75 percent owned by the Unicorp Canada Corp.

George S. Mann, the Canadian investor behind Unicorp Canada, which recently made an unsuccessful bid for the Dunkin' Donuts Inc. chain, will replace Stemmer as the president of Unicorp American.

Ogletree, 45, moves up from his post as Lincoln's chief financial officer to become the bank's No. 2 executive, under Alton G. Marshall, the chairman and chief executive.

Ogletree spent 12 years with Florida banks before joining Lincoln in March 1988.

For Stemmer, 46, the resignation marks the souring of his plans to build Unicorp American beyond its base in real estate. Unicorp American has announced an orderly liquidation of its real estate portfolio, which has lost money this year, and it has also hired Salomon rothers Inc. to find a merger partner or buyer for Lincoln Savings, which remains profitable.

Unicorp said a merger with another healthy bank might make sense to create cost-effectiveness through economies of scale.

Ogletree said Unicorp Canada had decided to focus its business on the energy industry in Canada.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Coupon bonds offer zero insurance

By BILL DOYLE

Q. The lump sum I received upon retirement has been placed in an individual retirement account to achieve compound interest and to keep it deferred from income tax. The largest part has been invested in zero-coupon bonds of savings and loan companies.

I have been told that these bonds are insured by FDIC up to $100,000 in each company. Is this correct? Is this a safe and wise investment?

Doyle

A. Let's hope you are a bit confused and do not have exactly what you say you have. If you do, indeed, have "bonds of savings and loan companies," you have no federal insurance protection.

Bonds issued by individual S&Ls, S&L holding companies and other corporations are not insured by the federal government or any of its agencies. A bond is a debt security. The issuer of a bond promises to pay interest over the life of the bond and redeem the bond on its maturity date. That arrangement is between the bond issuer and the bond owner, with no federal government involvement.

Federal government agencies do insure deposits at S&Ls, banks and credit unions, up to $100,000 per depositor per institution. That coverage is provided by the Savings Association Insurance Fund, the successor to the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp., at thrift institutions, by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. at banks and by the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund at most CUs.

But bonds are not deposits. If you do have bonds, your IRA carries a high degree of risk.

It may be that you have zero-coupon certificates of deposit, which have SAIF coverage. Like a zero-coupon bond, a zero-coupon CD is issued at a price way below its face value and redeemed at face value when it matures. The difference between the two prices is interest.

If you bought new zero-coupon CDs at their issue prices, you're fully insured. However, if you bought previously issued zero-coupon CDs at "premium" prices higher than issue price plus accrued interest to date, the premium is not insured.

The lesson here is to purchase only new CDs and to steer clear of CDs traded in the "secondary" or resale market.

I urge you to go back to the place where you opened your IRA and find out exactly what you have. Otherwise, you won't know if your investments are safe or risky.

Q. I had a CD that matured on the 10th of the month. When I went to the bank that day to renew the CD for another year I was told I could not renew it until the next day, because the bank's computer said it was due the 11th of the month. The bank people asked me to leave my CD book and they would mail it to me.

When the book was returned, it showed the CD was renewed the 10th of the month and at a lower interest rate. Was I dealt with fairly?

A. The CD was renewed on the date the old one matured. That's fair, even though there was some confusion on the day you visited the bank.

Interest rates on newly issued and renewed CDs can change from day to day and from one bank to another. You should have received the rate that bank was offering on the 10th. If you did, you received fair treatment.

TRADE

Sukhoi, which would handle most of the development work, valued at the equivalent of $1 billion, has said in meetings with Gulfstream that it can have a prototype flying in three years and begin production in five.

"What the Soviets have to offer is manufacturing muscle," said Donald Fink, the editor of Aviation Week and Space Technology, a trade magazine. "You have, if not a marriage made in heaven, a logical meld."

While the aerodynamics of Soviet aircraft are nearly on par with that of Western planes, they lag slightly in engine technology and cockpit electronics.

And a previous Soviet attempt at building a supersonic civilian aircraft ended in disaster. The plane, the Tupelov Tu-144, crashed at the Paris Air Show in 1973, killing several crew members. The plane never entered passenger service.

The cuts in Soviet military spending, intended to decline by 14.2 percent through 1991, are behind Moscow's push into civilian aircraft for export.

Other sectors of the Soviet defense industry also diversifying. Missile plants, for example, have begun making outdoor barbecue grills, while aircraft manufacturers are building baby strollers.

"The Soviet defense industry is under enormous pressure to go civilian and equally enormous pressure to come up with hard currencies," said Marshall I. Goldman, the associate director of the Russian Research Center at Harvard University.

The Soviets' aviation export agency, Aviaexport, has already expanded its presence and now has 55 offices worldwide. It hopes to increase its export sales by 50 percent, to nearly $4 billion, by 1995, calculated at the official exchange rate for the ruble. But until now, virtually all of those sales have been to East bloc nations and to some Third World countries.

To stimulate interest and possibly sales in Western markets, the Soviets are now showing their airplanes abroad, making dramatic appearances at air shows last summer in Oshkosh, Wis., and Abbottsford, British Columbia.

STRIKE

"The members of both papers feel the money package and benefits were an insult to them," said Louis Mleczko, a News reporter and president of Local 22. "The publishers are going to have to share some of the new riches from the 100-year monopoly they have been granted from the court."

Robert H. Giles, president and publisher Gannett Co. Inc.'s Detroit News, said he expected issues to be resolved before the strike deadline.

Don Kummer, administrative officer for Local 22, said: "What we're looking at is the company testing the union to see if they'll strike."

Press operators in the Graphics Communications International Local 13-N surprised other unions by ratifying the wage offer from the publishers. But they pledged to honor picket lines if the other unions walked out.

In other ratification votes announced Sunday, the unions representing Detroit News photoengravers; workers who handle special inserts and sort papers; and composing room employees also rejected the new company's contract offers.

Mleczko said the publishers offered a $30-per-week raise during the first year of a 2½-year contract, $30 the second year and $15 for the remaining six months, and a signing bonus equal to two weeks' pay.

The unions wanted a $40-per-week raise the first year, $30 the second and $40 for the next six months, plus a three-week bonus.

The unions also asked the newspaper to pay for increases in health care costs for future retirees. Fifty percent of those costs currently are paid by unions.

Soviets, EEC sign trade pact

N.Y. Times News Service

BRUSSELS, Belgium — The Soviet Union and the 12-nation European Community reached agreement Monday on a 10-year trade pact that would ease European quotas for Soviet goods and increase technical cooperation.

The pact is a far-reaching one for the Soviet Union but it stops short of conferring what is known among trading partners as most-favored-nation status. Instead of being immediately removed, the quotas would be phased out over the life of the agreement, and there would be a re-evalution of the remaining quotas in 1995.

For the usually slow-moving European Community, the agreement was reached in record time. The negotiations began on July 19.

The community last year reached similar agreements with Hungary and Czechoslovakia, but pacts with Poland and Bulgaria, on which negotiations began in February, are not yet complete.

The details of the trade pact with the Soviet Union remain to be worked out by specialists under the framework adopted Monday by the foreign ministers of the 12 community members. Previously, no trade agreement existed between the community and the Soviet Union.

Soviet exports to Europe are mainly natural gas, petroleum and diamonds, while goods sent by Europe to the Soviet Union are primarily chemicals, heavy machinery and vehicles.

Of the community members, West Germany is the largest trading partner with the Soviet Union, followed by France and Italy.

While the community's trade negotiations with the East Europeans have acquired urgency in light of the recent upheavals there, they began before the most dramatic political changes.

In June 1988, the community signed an agreement with Comecon, the Eastern trading bloc more formally called the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance, that permitted the establishment of diplomatic relations between the parties.

The Soviet Union, East Germany, Bulgaria and Hungary established such relations with the community on Aug. 10, 1988, followed by Poland on Sept. 16, 1988, and Cuba on Sept. 28, 1988.

The bilateral trade agreements with individual Eastern European countries vary. The pact with Hungary covers many of the same areas as treaties between the community and non-community countries like Austria.

The community treaty with Czechoslovakia, however, covers only commercial matters, such as the rights of corporations.

The agreement Monday with the Soviet Union is closer to that of Hungary than Czechoslovakia. For the first time, however, nuclear energy and safety are mentioned in the pact.

Among the areas of cooperation mentioned are industrial standards, economic statistics, food processing, environmental protection, tourism, insurance and banking.

That means that in each of those areas there can be agreements that could bring practices closer together — the Soviet Union might adopt the European ban on growth hormones, for example, or an agreement that accident insurance for tourists would apply in the East as well as in the West.

The trade pacts with the Soviet Union and the Eastern European nations are one part of Europe's efforts to ease relations.

The community foreign ministers also discussed Monday at their regular monthly meeting their coordinating role in the aid program for Poland and Hungary mounted by the world's 24 leading industrial countries.

Southwestern Bell fights rate cuts

AUSTIN (AP) — Southwestern Bell is fighting suggestions that the Public Utility Commission cut telephone rates, saying the agency should instead approve a proposal that is being touted as an economic development tool.

The company on Monday filed testimony at the PUC to defend its "Texas First" proposal against consumer representatives and others who say Southwestern Bell's rates should be slashed.

Texas First calls for a five-year freeze in basic local telephone rates, coupled with a multimillion dollar modernization program for the Southwestern Bell system.

Paul Roth, Texas division president for Southwestern Bell, said the PUC has the option of "choosing growth and progress — or choosing stagnation."

"The $400-$700 million in proposed revenue reductions still carry the banner of traditional ratemaking — and they don't consider the competitive nature of telecommunications," Roth said.

The PUC staff has recommended a $392 million annual revenue reduction for the company, saying it has been earning more than the commission authorized in the company's last rate case. Others also have called for rate decreases.

The staff proposal is the largest revenue reduction it ever has recommended for a utility, said PUC General Counsel Bob Rima.

"Southwestern Bell's excessive earnings were based on a number of factors, including changes in the tax laws, growth in customer services, and increased use of the telephone network," Rima said when the staff testimony was filed earlier this month at the PUC.

Roth said in a statement that local phone rates are not "a public issue."

"In fact, our rates are 20 percent below the national average," he said. "The issues on consumers' minds involve building a stronger state and improving the quality of life in Texas."

The Texas First proposal includes a $344 million investment by the telephone company for such changes as installing digital switching equipment in 195 communities, and eliminating four-party service and mileage charges in rural Texas.

Southwestern Bell said it also would reduce — by 16 percent — its charges to long-distance companies in Texas for access to the local telephone networks, with the expectation that savings would be passed on to consumers.

Chevron creates employee stock ownership plan

N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Chevron Corp. said it will borrow $1 billion to create an employee stock-ownership plan. ESOPs, as they are called, have frequently been used by companies seeking to thwart takeover attempts.

The oil giant has been rumored as a takeover target in recent weeks, with most of the rumor mongers pointing the finger at cash-rich Pennzoil Co. There also have been rumors of major restructuring plans.

The company's shares have traded on unusually heavy volume since late September, when the stock stood in the high 50s. It closed Monday on the New York Stock Exchange at 68 1/4, up 3 1/4.

Chevron denied it started the ESOP with takeovers in mind. It said that an ESOP scheme has been under study since April, and that it is designed to reduce the company's taxes.

Last week, the company noted, Congress passed a budget-balancing bill that preserved a tax deduction on dividends that a company pays on shares held by an ESOP.

MOVIES

Mel Brooks seeks to go public

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Mel Brooks, best known for his hits "Blazing Saddles" and "Young Frankenstein," wants to go public.

Brooks' movie production company, Brooksfilm Inc., has filed for an initial public offering, according to Securities and Exchange Commission documents.

The offering is expected to raise $24 million to finance the development and production of new movies and television programming as well as the distribution of those films outside of the U.S., the filing states.

Brooks referred calls about the filing to his attorney, who had no comment.

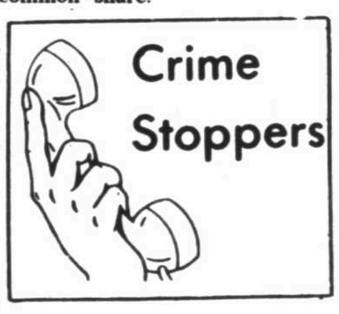

In recent years, Brooks has not been able to repeat his past success at the box office. His most recent major motion picture was "Space Balls," released in June 1986. The science fiction farce produced $37 million in domestic theatrical revenues, according to Exhibitor Relations Co.

Brooks was the producer of the short-lived NBC situation comedy, "Nutt House" premiering this fall. Produced with Walt Disney Television, a unit of the Burbank-based Walt Disney Co., "Nutt House" was canceled in October.

According to the filing, the company's primary markets will be outside the U.S. Not only does it plan to distribute the films it produces in foreign markets, but Brooksfilm would acquire the foreign rights to films produced by others.

Emile Buyse, a former Twentieth Century Fox International president, is to be named president of Brooksfilm's international film division following the completion of the offering.

The company plans to offer 1.5 million units, probably for a price between $9 and $11 each. Each unit includes one common share and one warrant to purchase one-third of a common share.

Now that our numbers have done a little talking, we'd love to chat about your investments in person.

'Pee-wee' inspires tiny togs

By VALLI HERMAN
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — He's a comedian. He's a hero to children. He's a cult figure to adults, and now he's a name on a clothing label and an honorary private in the United States Marine Corps Reserve.

Pee-wee Herman, the puny prince of pre-adolescence, earned his military honors recently, in conjunction with the national launch of Pee-wee's new brand of clothing, linens and accessories, to be sold at JCPenney stores nationwide.

This month, 1,400 JCPenney stores officially unveiled the Pee-wee Herman boutiques and merchandise, designed by Gary Panter, the cartoonist who created the set for "Pee-wee's Playhouse" on CBS.

A celebrity-packed party at Culver Studios, home of the TV production "Pee-wee's Playhouse," provided the scene for the launch. Kids from toddlers to teens modeled the clothing through a series of dance routines, demonstrating that the clothing is truly "active wear."

Pullovers, puffy jackets and pants in pink, turquoise and green are standouts in the line for nearly all ages of children. Cardigans in black, white and red feature the Pee-wee University logo ("PU" for short).

Panter, creator of the underground comic strip "Cola Madness," shows his propensity for cartoon panels in the prints and appliques selected for the clothing. Wacky irreverence is key here. A bright pullover sweat shirt proclaims across its front, "35-year-old battles giant underpants."

The remainder of the line is no less silly and fun. Goofy caricatures of the show's cast, including Chairy the chair, Randy the marionette and Miss Yvonne the buxom buddy, appear throughout the line. For those who prefer not to wear Pee-wee on their backs, linens, lunch boxes, kites and even a scooter are for sale.

The clothes are moderately priced, ranging from $9 for a nightshirt to $49 for a boy's jacket.

JCPenney has exclusive rights to the Pee-wee line through Dec. 24.

The licensing agreement then allows the items to be sold at any retailer. The multimillion-dollar holiday promotion is the second of its type, said Drew Cumming, Penney's vice president of marketing. Last year's merchandising of "The Land Before Time," Steven Spielberg's animated movie, was Penney's most successful promotion yet, Cumming said.

The Pee-wee Herman line was engineered to have an appeal as vast as its namesake, Cumming said.

"The merchandise mix is broad enough that it covers all of our markets," he said. "Also, we have the toys and novelty items. If you want, you can do your whole room in Pee-wee stuff."

The Pee-wee boutiques also will double as the official collection sites for the Marine's Toys for Tots campaign. In appreciation for the program, the Marines gave Pvt. Herman his new title. JCPenney donated $300,000 to another charity, the Child Welfare League of America, and committed the profits from several Pee-wee items for sale in the stores.

Shopping shared experience

Communication between parent, child eases hassles

By NANCY MILLER LEWIS
Copley News Service

You want her to dress like Heidi. She wants to be turned out like Downtown Julie Brown.

You want him to take some interest in clothes. He wants to wear the same shirt for 10 days straight.

You want to go through the roof when you see the price of the sneakers he "needs." He wants to go through some more of your cash for a leather biker jacket. Which, incidentally, he also "needs."

And so it goes in The Wardrobe Wars, yet another battle of wills that pits parent against child, common sense against "social security." Kids plan what they're going to wear so they look like carbon copies of each other.

Parents contemplate how they'll pay for this ever-spiraling sameness.

To successfully maneuver through this sartorial mine field requires planning, according to Linda Albert. Albert is a child psychologist, author and something of a national spokeswoman on the issue, having been featured on several TV talk shows discussing this very topic.

Recently, she completed a project with J.C. Penney, a pamphlet for parents on how clothing and education can go hand in hand.

"Children ... worry about fitting in," Albert said in a phone interview from her Tampa, Fla., office.

So, for a parent, a shopping trip is a propitious time to talk with the child about the things he or she worries about.

And since communication — not altercation — is to be the order of the day, both parent and child have to lay down some ground rules before they hit the mall. Albert refers to this process as "preshopping."

Preshopping involves looking through newspapers and catalogs to see what the child wants, comparing that information to what he or she needs, and — this is important — ascertaining how much it all is going to cost.

These touchy issues "should get solved at home. 'How much' and 'what' are decisions the parent and child should make by looking through the paper. Both should have a clear idea of what is needed when they arrive at the store.

"Having a fight with a child at a store should never happen. It's not good for anybody," Albert insists.

Preshopping also can cool some burning embers regarding the "haute" items, because after talking, both parent and child are aware of how much a desired "designer" piece costs, and the child knows whether or not it's within the realm of possibility — and what he or she may have to sacrifice to gain it.

"I'm not against buying something expensive," Albert says, "but a kid who is old enough to want these things is also old enough to learn about a budget — learn that if he gets this, he may have to settle for something else that is less expensive. If it's their choice, the child often will cooperate. If you keep them involved, they're more liable to cooperate."

Albert stresses that parents should not turn a deaf ear to the wants of a child — even though these desires may be costly.

"Kids don't like to look different (from their peers). It's important for parents to see what other kids are wearing. You don't have to get faddish, but if all the kids are wearing slacks, you don't want to send your daughter to school in a skirt.

"Think about it. A lawyer doesn't go to work in dungarees; he has to wear the clothes that fit his profession," Albert notes.

"School is the kids' profession, so they have to fit in, too."

Albert offers these tips to make shopping with children a pleasant experience:

- Preshop with your child by looking through newspapers, magazines and catalogs before the trip to the mall. Negotiate the shopping list and prices at this time.
- If at all possible, take only one child shopping at a time.
- Morning and after naps are the best times to take young children shopping.
- Parents accompanied by young children will find they can extend the time of a shopping trip if the store's youth department features a play area.
- Remember this rule: "Parents select, children choose." Instead of giving a youngster a dizzying array of choices, parents may select five styles of an item and then ask the child to choose his two favorites from that group.

Trendy clothes that adults can enjoy too are one way to solve the wardrobe war between parents and children.

Batman makes fashion impact

By LAURA BLEIBERG
Hearst News Service

Adults dress for success. That's easy. Kids dress for playground survival.

This season, surviving the fashion wars means only one word: "Batman."

Not having the by-now ubiquitous gold-and-black silhouette from the summer's megahit — okay, the Joker will do in a pinch — on your shirt, pants, shoes, ears or any other available piece of skin is a serious faux pas with the elementary school set.

"Last year, I wore the wrong shoes, and I never heard the end of it," said Eric Stoddard, 11, of Los Angeles, who learned the hard way to always wear the right thing.

He didn't take any chances this year. Along with his Reeboks, Eric made sure he had on his Batman T-shirt when he showed up at elementary school.

Since release of the blockbuster movie in June, Warner Bros. has sold more than 10,000 licenses for Batman products. Retail sales have been estimated at $300 million.

Batmania has caught on hardest with grade-school boys, but even teen-age girls aren't immune to the syndrome.

The well-dressed child can be outfitted from top to bottom in bat threads, from black baseball caps with the familiar insignia to cotton mini-skirts, leggings and high-top sneakers all decorated with swirling bats.

The start of school gave kids the chance to show their new purchases off to their classmates.

"I found them in my drawer," said 14-year-old Christie Simpson of Hollywood, Calif., referring to her yellow-and-black Batman boxer shorts. "I said, 'Whose are these?' My brother said, 'They're mine.' And I said, 'Not anymore.'"

Los Angelese area principal Peggy Selma says youngsters want to wear what everyone else wears.

"They want to be accepted," Selma said. "Most of the children are trying to keep up with what they see on other children."

Younger children "usually try and act out what the characters do in the movie," said Bernice Benjamin, a preschool teacher in downtown Los Angeles. "They act it out. It's usually karate kicks."

Keeping up with the sheer mass of merchandise is not cheap. It can cut into several weeks of allowance, with silver pendant necklaces selling for $30 and Converse sneakers going for $35.

But that's not stopping kids or parents from filling shopping bags with the stuff.

"I've got one Batman T-shirt, two buttons, a comic book..." said Tai Howard, 13, who also dressed as Batman for Halloween.

Howard's friends were shocked at his extravagance, since the costume cost $350, they said.

Howard summed it up: "I like Batman."

Scout wardrobe shows new esprit

By VALLI HERMAN
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — It must be that the Boy Scouts of America have applied their motto, "Always be prepared," to the official wardrobe.

For the first time, the national council has issued a Scout activity uniform for boys to wear on outings. The uniform, a short-sleeved tan cotton polo shirt with a Scout fleur-de-lis crest and a pair of tan shorts presents a more classic and contemporary look for Scouts of the 1990s.

Traditionalists needn't fret that the olive-green standby of generations past will become an asterisk in uniform history.

"This is not a new uniform. It won't replace the current Boy Scout uniform," said Lou Salute, director of field service for the Western Los Angeles County Council. "It's an activity uniform.

"We did a study and found that kids want something different than the standard uniform for their camp-outs and activities," Salute said.

The shorts are purposely a neutral color to blend with the standard activity shirts for each Scout program: red for the Boy Scouts, tan for the sports-oriented Varsity Scouts and burgundy for the high-adventure Venture Scouts.

Wearing a distinct outfit for activities is a common Scout practice, Salute said. Many troops have worn shirts produced especially for the members, as a way of individualizing the group.

"When a troop is small - 15 or 20 boys - the cost of producing your own shirt could be prohibitive. This will help those kinds of groups," he said.

Acceptance of the new uniform, issued this fall, has been slow, as would be expected for an optional outfit. The current uniforms seems to suit most Scouts just fine, said Ted Hull, a Scoutmaster for Troop 2 in Saugus, Calif.

"I really haven't heard any comment about the old uniform at all. We likely won't make any changes until new people come in," Hull said.

Hull discredited reports that the new ensemble was issued to appeal to those who consider the green uniform "geeky."

"Any boy that wants to be in Scouts will come in regardless of the uniform he has to wear," Hull said.

Randy Kiekel, a Scoutmaster with Troop 14 in Los Angeles' San Fernando Valley, has no Scouts wearing the new outfits yet. He's not so sure that they ever will.

"Sometimes it's a hassle to get them to wear a uniform at all," he said.

Shopping styles taught by Mom

CORVALLIS, Ore. (AP) — If you're a "shop 'til you drop" fanatic when it comes to buying clothes, chances are you got it from your mom.

And you're just as likely as your mom to hold a grudge against manufacturers, according to an Oregon State University study.

OSU researchers Sally Francis and Leslie Davis, both in the apparel, interiors, housing and merchandising department, studied the clothes shopping habits of 70 college women and their mothers. The study also looked at how they reacted to a negative shopping experience.

"Research has shown that the person children most often go shopping with is their mother," says Francis, but beyond that, there's little definitive information about the process known technically as "consumer socialization."

Their survey covered three main factors:

- Fashion involvement: Do you have to be first to try a new style? Are you a good source of fashion information?
- Wardrobe management: Do you pay attention to wardrobe care and coordination?
- Comparative shopping: Do you shop several stores? Do you take a lot of time before purchasing clothing?

"For all three factors, there was no significant variation for responses of mothers and daughters," says Francis. "We can assume that daughters, as shoppers, are behaving like their mothers."

The study also uncovered another correlation confirming the "like mother, like daughter" pattern. It showed that high fashion involvement and high wardrobe management scores meant high satisfaction levels with clothing. Those reporting low fashion involvement were less satisfied with their clothing than others, a departure from the current theory on consumer behavior.

DEAR ABBY

Woman trapped in web of gifts

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a 52-year-old working woman and thought I knew what was going on in the world, but I guess I must have missed something.

I had always assumed that bridal showers were given for brides who were just starting out. This year, I was expected to attend several bridal showers and give a wedding gift to a niece who had married three years ago — and was divorced last year. I had already attended three bridal showers and had given her an expensive wedding gift for her FIRST marriage. She wore a white gown again (a different one) and had a big fancy church wedding that topped her first one.

A friend invited me to a baby shower for her daughter who is pregnant with her second child. This mother-to-be has a 2-year-old daughter. The sonogram showed that she was carrying another girl. In my day, we saved our baby's clothes for the next child, so why a shower to get more little girl's clothes? Also, I thought showers were given by friends — not relatives. And certainly not by a mother for her own daughter.

A girl at work is finally marrying the man she's been living with for eight years, and I am invited to a shower for her. Abby, after eight years together, what can they need to get started?

Wait, there's more: My nephew was married four years ago and was divorced 14 months ago. Last week, his ex-wife had a baby boy out of wedlock by someone unknown to us. This baby has our family's last name, but he's not related to anyone in our family.

Either the mother doesn't know who the baby's father is, or the father wants nothing to do with them. She sent me a birth announcement with a list of items the baby could use. How could I refuse?

Is all this commonplace, Abby, or is it just the people I know? — CONFUSED IN SAN DIEGO

DEAR CONFUSED: I regret to say it's not very unusual. When a bride permits shower after shower to be given for her with the same guests invited, one must assume she doesn't mind soaking her friends and family.

As for the baby whose birth announcement you acknowledged with a gift, you showed genuine generosity and sensitivity, for which I commend you.

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter works very hard as a part-time waitress. She's putting herself through college, and we are very proud of her. We were very upset to learn that she bought her boyfriend a matched set of golf clubs for his birthday. She used most of her savings on this expensive gift and now she's practically broke.

How can we get through to this stupid girl? — HER PARENTS IN NEBRASKA

DEAR PARENTS: It's her money and her choice, and if she goes broke, it will be her problem. I know you mean well, but back off, folks.

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend — actually he is no "boy"; he's a 33-year-old man — refuses to buy me a gift for any occasion. That includes my birthday, Christmas, St. Valentine's Day, etc. He says he's afraid I won't like what he buys, so if I want a present, he will give me the money and I can buy what I want.

Abby, if he only knew that I would be thrilled with anything he bought me because HE took the time and effort to buy it. What should I do? I hate to take the money from him and buy myself a gift. — GIFTLESS IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR GIFTLESS: Why not make it easy for him? Offer to go with him to select a gift for you. That way, you will both be sure it's something you can use and will like.

If that idea doesn't appeal to him — or to you — prepare to remain giftless for a very long time, because your boyfriend either has no confidence in his own taste or he has a problem parting with money.

DEAR ABBY: The story about the 33-year-old woman driver applying mascara, missing a turn, hitting a curb and turning over, killing herself, breaking her son's arm and leaving four young children without their mother, reminded me of two incidents I witnessed on a trip to San Francisco.

Driving down Highway 101 near Sausalito, a woman in the car ahead of me was combing her hair, applying lipstick and eye shadow while driving 60 miles an hour!

The next day, on Rodeo Avenue in Sausalito, I came upon a woman in a car parked in the traffic lane of the street. I stopped behind her and saw her take off her bra without removing her blouse, put the car in gear and move down the street! — CALIFORNIA OBSERVER

AT WIT'S END

People sleep through alarming things

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I am always looking for new things to extend my marriage. Take the dual-control electric blanket, for example. It came along just in time. I was on the verge of donating my frozen body to science.

There was a time when I thought peace and harmony in our union was threatened. Then my husband got an exercise bicycle with portable wheels on it. Now I just wheel it out of sight every chance I get and his heart rate accelerates just trying to find it.

You cannot imagine my giddiness when I noted last week that there is a new alarm clock on the market called "Shake Awake." It's touted as being for the "morning-impaired."

Morning-impaired people are not physically impaired in any way. They are just endowed with convenient hearing. They can lie in bed and hear a water faucet drip outside the house. They can't hear the dog tunneling under the door when he wants out. They can hear the score of a ball game when they're fast asleep in front of the TV set. They can't hear a baby crying at 2 a.m. in the next room. They can hear the tires on their car screech when it is being parked in a garage a block away. They cannot hear an alarm clock when it is 2 feet from their face.

Shake Awake is a dream come true. You stick the clock under the pillow of the awakee, and when it's time for the alarm to go off, it pulsates and vibrates as though it's shaking you out of a coma.

I don't want to get my hopes built up, but I think this time I'm on to something. We've had alarm clocks in the past that did everything from play music to begin with a hum and build to a crescendo that threatened to crack the walls. I once got an alarm clock that nagged my husband to death. As soon as he turned it off, it would wait five minutes and then go off again. He became quite hostile and one morning drowned it in the washbowl.

One year, I bought him a clock that looked like a yellow tennis ball. When the alarm went off, the only way you could stop it was by slamming it against a wall. He eventually threw it into the driveway and ran his car over it.

Shake Awake is my last chance. Other than having an alarm clock that grabs a person around the throat and shouts, "Wake up or you're a dead man!" I don't know what to do.

Why am I smiling?

Elegant simplicity lights up '89 holiday fashions

By TRISH DONNALLY
N.Y. Times News Service

Whether your style of celebrating the holidays includes champagne-and-caviar nights or fireside evenings with homemade cookies and warm apple cider, you want to look your best.

Fashionable partygoers this season will don simple silhouettes with extravagant embellishments.

Everything from jackets and evening gowns to handbags and high heels will be encrusted with spectacular golden embroideries, seed pearls, crystals and coins. Credit Romeo Gigli for this opulent craze.

These luxe looks — with their requisite plush black velvet, seductive chiffon and romantic lace — can be affordable.

Surprisingly, many holiday fashions will remind you of lingerie.

The slip dress, a silhouette that looks exactly as it sounds, is a leading look of the season and goes forward into spring fashions. Usually done in short versions, in some cases — specifically that of John Anthony — the slip dress is even created in ankle-length styles.

Bustiers, also straight from the bedroom, will be found in sequins, chiffon and leopard spots.

And lace, in years gone by reserved for trim on petticoats and camisoles, is not only popular for the holidays, but also will blanket fashions come spring.

A word of caution here. Save the plunging necklines, super-short hemlines, leopard spot bustiers and thigh-baring slits for that all-out New Year's Eve bash, not the office party.

Other tips:

■ Golds are burnished and bronzed this holiday season. They have the warmth of antique treasures. This matte patina seems more sophisticated than an all-out gold glitz.

■ The slimmest strapless dress comes alive when made of gold lace. Long, loose black lace skirts look terrific with long tunics.

■ Black velvet is the most prevalent fabric of the season, and it always looks elegant. For something a little different, try velvet in another color, such as royal purple. No one who saw the film "The Fabulous Baker Boys" can forget Michelle Pfeiffer singing in her saucy holly-berry-red velvet cocktail dress.

■ There's a flurry of fringe ahead. Whether it's on a black velvet tank dress — such as those for $196 at Saks Fifth Avenue, or on black velvet jackets, like the one Diana Ross recently bought at Wilkes Bashford for $1,725 — fringe can add a festive feeling to nighttime styles.

■ Chiffon is the seductress of the season, covering bare shoulders and arms, flirting around legs in long, languid skirts, or flowing as Isadora-Duncan-style scarves.

■ Rev up last year's little black dress with this year's latest accessories. Fleur de lys is a popular motif for the holidays, on shoes, hosiery and even black velvet headbands.

You can also change your look by twisting a wired gold lame headband any way you want. Brocade pumps a la Yves Saint Laurent or plush ruby velvet flats can add drama to any outfit.

The right wrap can enhance an ensemble as beautifully as an exquisite piece of jewelry. Velvet, taffeta, brocade, lame and chiffon shawls abound this year. Some are trimmed with tassels. Others are shot with gold thread.

Replacing the buttons on an evening jacket with jet, rhinestone, pearl or rich brocade-covered buttons can add crackle to a look.

Stunning standouts, when money is no object, are Oscar de la Renta's baroque ball gowns. These are actually colorfully embroidered jackets with silk taffeta full skirts that cost close to $10,000.

James Galanos has a gorgeous jacket of matte, sand-colored sequins purring with gold tiger stripes and bordered in amber stones. He pairs it with a simple plaid wool skirt.

You could go wild with a billowing, brown taffeta ball skirt. Judith Leiber's semiprecious jewel-encrusted handbags are the perfect complement to one of these fantasy looks.

Enertech provides cost effective quality accounting systems

The computer industry has been growing by leaps and bounds over the past several years and has provided Enertech Information System's clients with an incredible upward growth pattern.

This information firm is conveniently located downtown in suite 700 of the Century Plaza building at the corner of Wall and Big Spring.

In the Tuesday, November 14 edition of the Wall Street Journal, an announcement was made regarding several new computer systems based around the 80486 micro processor. These new systems are another example of the phenomenal growth capability the industry is providing clients who utilize the newer, easier to implement computer systems.

No longer does the cost of a complete computer system and software prohibit the individual user from purchasing the system and implementing it in-house. Today you can afford the technology to make your business more competitive and productive, allowing you to work with the system and not work to pay the cost of the system.

Enertech Information Systems has been providing oil and gas accounting software to clients for more than seven years. The clients that Enertech helps service include companies that were using a service bureau or third party to process their accounting information.

Other clients have an in-house system that is no longer supported or not performing the required functions and they wish to upgrade to a new system.

Still other clients have been keeping track of their information manually and wish to automate the chore with a computer system.

Approximately 50 percent of Enertech Information Systems' successful installations have gone into offices where no previous computer system existed.

Enertech Information Systems provides software for single machines and networked or multi user systems in several different environments.

Product offerings include a System III Entry Level System — with a price range of $995 per module to $3995 — for complete integrated operator accounting including:

General Ledger/Property Ledger and Financial Reporting
Accounts payable
Oil and Gas Sales Verification
Joint Interest Billing
Revenue Distribution
AFE Budgeting and Tracking
Land Management/Lease Rentals

The Enertech System IV Oil and Gas Accounting System is offered at a price range of $1900 and up for multiple module purchases. Modules include:

- General Ledger and Financial Reporting
- Property Ledger and Lease Management Reporting
- Accounts Payable
- Oil and Gas Sales Verification
- Joint Interest Billing
- Revenue Distribution
- AFE Budgeting and Tracking
- Land Management/Lease Rentals
- Depletion Calculation and Reporting
- Payroll/Personnel Management
- Check Stub Data Exchange — GE CDEX Interface Program
- Production Accounting and Variance Reporting

Enertech will help train your key staff on your operating systems including MS-DOS and XENIX or any Enertech programs. They will focus on specific applications your people need to know, and are available whenever a question should arise.

Enertech personnel's training experience helps take the confusion out of computer operations.

Contact Enertech Information Systems at (915) 685-1753 for a free analysis of your company's needs or for information on any services they provide. Let them provide you with a comparison of a new system's costs versus the costs you are now paying monthly.

WORLD IN BRIEF

France tests nuclear device; New Zealand words protest

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — France today exploded one of its largest underground nuclear devices in the South Pacific, drawing a sharp reaction from New Zealand.

The test, the eighth this year, was measured at 90 kilotons — the equivalent of 90,000 tons of TNT — and New Zealand Prime Minister Geoffrey Palmer vowed to continue his efforts to end the program.

France has detonated 111 nuclear devices in the South Pacific since 1975 despite growing regional opposition. The blast was monitored at Raratonga, Cook Islands, by a New Zealand seismological station.

Palmer condemned the test, saying his labor government would continue to urge a halt of the weapons' testing program in French Polynesia. He dismissed French arguments that the program was needed to maintain a deterrent force and guarantee its national security.

Gunfire awakens San Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Mortars exploded and gunfire resounded in northern San Salvador today, awakening capital residents to renewed fighting between government forces and leftist rebels.

It was the first time this week that the fighting appeared to be anything but brief exchanges between the two sides.

About 10 flares were dropped by circling helicopters over the northern neighborhoods of Mejicanos and Ciudad Delgado, and more than two dozen mortar rounds shattered the pre-dawn silence.

Because of a dusk-to-dawn curfew, the extent of the combat was not immediately clear. Assault-rifle and occasional machine-gun fire was heard, but those exchanges were not heavy or sustained.

Indian oppostion still gaining

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — A centrist opposition alliance today won pledges of support from the right and left and said it was ready to oust Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and form India's first minority government since independence.

Gandhi's Congress Party in turn said it was willing to step aside and become the opposition.

"We have not got a majority. That is the verdict of the people," party spokesman Anand Sharma said.

Gandhi's party won more Parliament seats than the National Front in elections that ended Sunday, but neither group has enough for a majority.

"The mandate in this election is unmistakably a mandate for a change of government," the National Front said in a statement read by its spokesman, Dinesh Goswamy, as the leaders of the five-party alliance met.

"The people of India want a non-Congress government to replace the corrupt and inefficient Congress government. It is therefore the sacred duty of the National Front to respect this mandate and to express its readiness to form a government," the statement said.

Lebanese army commander fired

BAABDA, Lebanon (AP) — The government today fired Christian leader Michel Aoun as army commander, but thousands of his supporters formed a human shield around the presidential palace to defend him from a feared Syrian attack.

Gen. Aoun, who commands 20,000 mainly Christian troops, pledged Monday to "die fighting" rather than surrender to President Elias Hrawi's government or the 40,000 troops that Syria has in Lebanon. Aoun rejected Parliament's election of Hrawi last week and refused his earlier order to step down.

Defense Minister Albert Mansour told reporters in Syrian-occupied eastern Lebanon that Adm. Emile Lahoud, former navy commander, was now armed forces chief. Mansour warned that officers and men who stayed loyal to Aoun would be dismissed.

It was not immediately known how many of Aoun's troops will remain loyal to him as Lebanon was poised on the brink of another round of fighting.

The government move came three days after Hrawi, elected president by parliament Friday, dismissed Aoun as head of an interim military government.

Eleven killed at Bogota party

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Gunmen burst into a home where a house party was in full swing in northern Colombia and killed 11 people, police said Monday.

The intruders shot nine men and two women to death on Sunday in Puerto Bujo, 310 miles north of the capital Bogota, said Col. Felipe Gallardo, police chief in Cordoba province.

The region has been the site of massacres in recent years that have been blamed on paramilitary groups, some of them believed to be working in tandem with drug traffickers.

No claim of responsibility was immediately reported, and Gallardo said the gunmen were not identified.

Honduran devaluation denied

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (CNS) — Honduran President-elect Rafael Leonardo Callejas Monday refused to devalue the Honduran lempira — setting the stage for his first row with the U.S. government, which has long demanded such a currency measure.

"There will be no devaluation" of the lempira, Callejas declared in response to question soon after he claimed victory over Carlos Flores Facusse of the ruling Liberal Party in Sunday's presidential elections.

The U.S. Embassy, in a statement recognizing Callejas' victory Monday, called the peaceful election of the moderate National Party candidate "an inspiring example" for the rest of Latin America.

The offer which best serves the interest of VA will be processed for acceptance. The name of the successful offeror and sales broker will appear in subsequent publications. VA will accept cash offers up to 10 percent below the advertised term sales price. VA also will pay reasonable loan discount points and buyers' closing costs on cash offers when requested on the Cash Sale Addendum to Offer to Purchase. However, the combined loan discount points, buyers' closing costs to be paid by VA and the discount for cash may not exceed 10 percent of the term list price. Offers must be submitted at term listed price when buyers request a new GI loan with $1.00 move-in. Interest rate of available financing is 9.5 percent (APR 9.6 percent).

Purchase offers requesting VA vendee financing (Term Sales) must have VA Form 26-6705B, Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Verification of Employment/Income, as outlined in Sales of VA-Acquired Properties Manual, attached to their VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale. Effective June 8, 1988, all credit underwriting for purchase offers requesting VA vendee financing is being referred to Miller and Davis PC. All brokers are reminded to refer to PM letter #17-88 dated May 25, 1988, outlining these new procedures. Purchase offers not accompanied by the required employment/income verification WILL RESULT IN REJECTION OF THE PURCHASE OFFER.

Prior approval will be required by VA for the transfer of a property secured by a vendee loan if the loan is not paid in full as part of the transfer. Public Law 100-689 also permits VA to charge a one-half of 1 percent funding fee for the transfer as well as a fee for processing the approval of the transfer.

VA has properties for sale statewide. If you desire to purchase properties in other areas, please contact any sales broker located in the area in which you are interested.

FORFEITURE OF EARNEST MONEY DEPOSIT

Prior to signing the offer, broker must deposit in broker's trust account the $500 earnest money deposit. The Earnest Money Agreement (Exhibit "H") must be signed by the purchaser(s) and submitted along with the VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on all offers. The $500 earnest money deposit will be remitted to Miller and Davis PC upon acceptance of the offer. Once a purchase offer has been accepted for processing by VA and subsequently cancelled at the request of the purchaser, the earnest money deposit WILL NOT be refunded and the purchaser will be required to forfeit the earnest money to the VA as liquidation expenses. There will be no exception to this policy. Therefore, the VA suggests that all brokers interview their buyers to assure they want the property prior to submission of an offer to purchase. VA pays 6% sales commission. Offers are subject to the provisions of VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on which all offers must be submitted. VA Form 26-6705 must be submitted in duplicate to:
