DPS: Leaving children in vehicles can be deadly

Special to the Herald

AUSTIN – The Texas Department of Public Safety (DPS) is warning residents that warmer weather places children at greater risk of injury or death if left unattended in a vehicle. Every year children die from heatstroke after being left in a vehicle or entering a vehicle unnoticed. Such negligence could lead to criminal charges. A child should never be left unattended in a vehicle.

"Tragically, children needlessly die every year because they are left unattended in vehicles," said DPS Director Steven McCraw. "Members of the public can do their part to keep kids safe by notifying emergency personnel if they witness a child alone or in distress inside a vehicle – regardless of the weather. Parents and caregivers should be aware of the dangers."

According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, temperatures inside a car can rise more than 20 degrees in only 10 minutes; and even with an outside temperature of 60 degrees, the temperature inside a car can reach 110 degrees. Leaving windows partially rolled down does not help. In addition, young children are particularly at risk since their bodies heat up faster than an adult.

DPS offers the following tips for preventing

Spring Creek youth sell fireworks for fundraising

Students from Spring Creek Fellowship's youth group take a break before the rush of last minute firework enthusiasts come in to stock up for the 4th of July. The group has been running Mr. W Firework store on Hwy 87 for the last five summers to help raise money for their summer camp and facilities.

By ROBERT BARLOW
Staff Writer

Spring Creek Fellowship's youth group is manning the Mr.W Firework store this summer to help raise money for the groups activities.

"This is our fifth summer to run the Mr W's Firework store," said Lloyd Wells, associate pastor for Spring Creek Fellowship. "From day one we come in and they help us move all that stuff into the storage building and with setting up pricing labels and tags. So they're involved in the process beginning to end, opening inventory to closing inventory."

The firework stand is open June 24 to July 4 every summer as lng as there isn't a fire ban. The youth group has been helping run the stand for the last five summers. The group receives funds from the commission made from selling the fireworks and the money they raise heavily depends on how the firework business is doing that year.

The money that gets raised goes to help fund activities and facilities for the youth group and makes up a significant percentage of their budget.

"The aim of running the stand is, all the commission that Mr. W gives to the church funds our student ministries," said Wells. "That helps students go to camp that we go to every year. It helps fund mission trips to the metroplex to go work on houses and things of that nature. It really just helps relieve pressure off the church budget."

Portugal nixes claim Monty Python star's film harmed convent

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Portuguese authorities have rejected a television program's claims that one of the country's most cherished historic monuments was damaged during the shooting of a film by director and former Monty Python star Terry Gilliam.

The General-Directorate for Heritage says an investigation has found that the 12th-century Convent of Christ suffered only "insignificant" damage during a recent location shoot for "The Man Who Killed Don Quixote." The report published Monday said a program by public broadcaster RTP alleging wider damage "lacked rigor and revealed a lack of scientific knowledge."

Gilliam has previously called the allegations "ignorant nonsense."

The convent was a stronghold of the Knights Templar, a Christian military order founded in 1119, and is classified as a World Heritage site by UNESCO.

Ice Age art, Bauhaus buildings highlight German UNESCO hopes

By MICHAEL FAULHABER and DAVID RISING
Associated Press

BLAUBEUREN, Germany (AP) — Two sites with cultural treasures separated by more than 40,000 years — caves with art dating to the Ice Age and buildings designed by a Bauhaus master less than 100 years ago — highlight Germany's submissions for the prestigious World Heritage Site designation by the U.N.'s cultural agency, UNESCO.

The six caves are in the western state of Baden-Wuerttemberg, where archeologists have discovered flutes made from mammoth ivory along with other ancient instruments and carvings. The Bauhaus buildings in northeastern Germany were designed by the school's second director, Hannes Meyer.

A World Heritage designation brings sites some protection from development, pollution, and other threats. It can also raise a region's profile and draw more visitors.

UNESCO's World Heritage Committee is meeting in Poland in early July. This year's nominations for World Heritage sites include seven natural sites, one both natural and cultural and 27 cultural sites. Other cultural sites being considered include the Valongo Wharf in Rio, the Sambor Prei Kuk archaeological sites in Cambodia, the Kujataa subarctic farming landscape in Greenland, and the landscapes of Dauria in Mongolia.

The caves in Baden-Wuerttemberg in the valleys of the Ach and Lone rivers have been excavated since the 19th century and have yielded hundreds of personal ornaments, at least eight musical instruments and more than 40 small figurines carved from mammoth ivory.

Archaeology professor Nicholas Conard, whose team discovered a 40,000-year-old mammoth ivory figure known as the Venus of Hohle Fels after the cave in which it was found, said the site fulfills the outstanding universal cultural value that UNESCO is looking for.

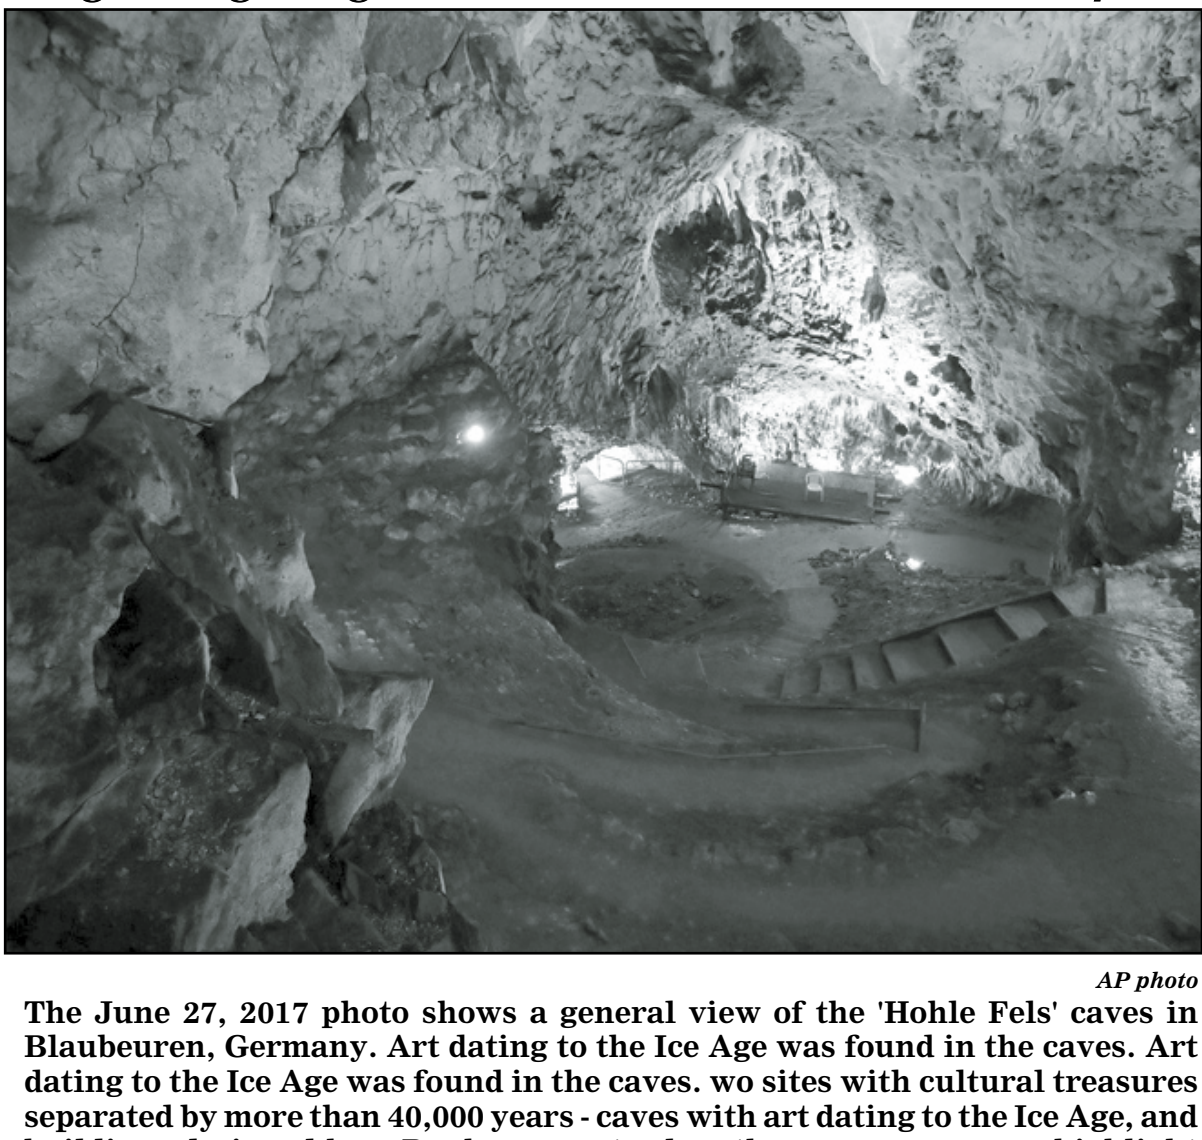

"They have produced the most abundant, richest and oldest record of early art works and also musical instruments, along with a whole range of other innovations, that are part of the cultural development at the time when modern humans spread across Europe and the Neanderthals went extinct," said the University of Tuebingen professor.

Stefanie Koelbl, the executive director of the area's Museum of Prehistory in Blaubeuren, said the Venus of Hohle Fels is the oldest known image of a human.

"This figure has a very special charisma also carved from ivory — she has this typical pattern for artworks from the younger Paleolithic Age here in southern Germany, these notch lines and cross lines," Koelbl said. "She has no head but a loop to carry her and probably was carried as an amulet. It belonged to one special person."

Other finds in the caves include a 20-centimeter (8-inch) phallus carved from siltstone, believed to be 32,000 years old, a water bird figure, unique in early Ice Age art, that is about 40,000 years old and a broken figure of a half man-half lion carved from mammoth ivory.

"This was an exceptional area," Conard said. "Each year we find new examples of Paleolithic artworks that can be up to 40,000 years old or even a little bit older. And they are typically beautifully formed objects cut with stone tools and made from mammoth ivory."

The June 27, 2017 photo shows a general view of the 'Hohle Fels' caves in Blaubeuren, Germany. Art dating to the Ice Age was found in the caves. Art dating to the Ice Age was found in the caves. wo sites with cultural treasures separated by more than 40,000 years - caves with art dating to the Ice Age, and buildings designed by a Bauhaus master less than 100 years ago - highlight submissions from Germany being considered as World Heritage Sites by the UN's cultural agency, UNESCO.

Fast forward from the Baden-Wuerttemberg caves to the 20th century, when the Bauhaus school of architecture revolutionized design and aesthetic concepts between 1919 and 1933. Some Bauhaus buildings were already inscribed on the UNESCO World Heritage list in 1996.

Under consideration this year are buildings designed by Meyer known as Laubenganghaeuser — literally "housing with balcony access" — in the housing estate in Dessau, southwest of Berlin, as well as a trade union school he designed in Bernau, north of Berlin.

The yellow-brick school, built for the ADGB union in 1930, was designed by Meyer and colleague Hans Wittwer and is "today still a paragon of functional architectural design, which is freely and thoughtfully integrated into its natural surroundings," according to the foundation that looks after it.

The five Laubenganghaeuser buildings, first occupied in 1930, have 90 apartments arranged in rows on three levels, each only 48 square meters (517 square feet), reflecting Meyer's focus on making Bauhaus designs affordable yet still comfortable and with the same aesthetic, said Monika Markgraf of the Bauhaus Dessau Foundation.

"They are very small, precisely laid-out apartments," she said. "They are oriented so the living rooms facing south will get a lot of sunlight, and the side rooms like the kitchen, hallway and bathroom are to the north, so it's very functional."

YOUTH

Wells said in addition to helping raise money for the group, it also helps build relationships between the kids who volunteer to help out.

"One of the cool things, a by-product of being here, especially in the first five days is the kids do a lot of hanging out because there isn't a lot of work," said Wells. "They're making money but they're also building relationships."

Wells went on to say he has about fifteen students up there every day helping run the store. The group has students from Coahoma, Forsan, and Big Spring school districts and Wells stated he enjoys seeing them "come together and build some comradery and friendships."

Spring Creek Fellowship also uses the funds to host their own camp, Wells stated. The church partners up with a couple of other churches in Howard County and organizes a week in Colorado.

The youth group also holds some other fundraisers during the year, however the majority of the funds, around ninety percent, that the group uses are raised through the commissions made at the firework stand.

"Of course the church still adds to the budget, but the majority of it comes from this store right here," said Wells.

The youth group at Spring Creek Fellowship has around 30 students total and is currently being headed by Wells and Klint Bratcher, worship leader. However they hope to have the budget in the future to hire on a permanent person to run the program.

The firework stand will be open from 9 a.m to 12 a.m on July 4 and Wells encourages people to stop by to pick up some fireworks and support the program.

vehicular heatstroke deaths and injuries:

- Teach children not to play in vehicles and make sure to place the keys out of reach when not being used.
- Always check the back seats or cargo areas of your vehicle before walking away.
- Establish reminders that help ensure you remove children from the vehicle. For example: leave your bag, lunch or cell phone in the back seat with the child's car seat.
- Call 9-1-1 if you see a child alone in a car, and emergency personnel will provide guidance.
- If a child goes missing, open the doors and trunks to every vehicle in the area. Many heatstroke deaths occur when a child accesses a parked car unnoticed.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — As many in the United States celebrate the Fourth of July holiday, some minorities have mixed feelings about the revelry of fireworks and parades in an atmosphere of tension on several fronts.

How do you celebrate during what some people of color consider troubling times?

Blacks, Latinos and immigrant rights advocates say the aftermath of the 2016 presidential election, recent non-convictions of police officers charged in the shootings of black men, and the stepped-up detentions of immigrants and refugees for deportation have them questioning equality and the promise of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness in the United States.

Filmmaker Chris Phillips of Ferguson, Missouri, says he likely will attend a family barbecue just like every Fourth of July. But the 36-year-old black man says he can't help but feel perplexed about honoring the birth of the nation after three officers were recently cleared in police shootings.

POLICE SHOOTINGS

Since the 2014 police shooting of unarmed 18-year-old Michael Brown in Ferguson, Missouri, officer shootings — of black males in particular — have drawn scrutiny, sparking protests nationwide. Few officers ever face charges, and convictions are rare. Despite video, suburban St. Paul, Minnesota, police officer Jeronimo Yanez was acquitted last month in the shooting of Philando Castile, a black man. The 32-year-old school cafeteria worker was killed during a traffic stop July 6, almost a year ago.

"Justice apparently doesn't apply to all people," said Phillips, who saw the protests that roiled his town for weeks following Brown's death. His yet-unreleased documentary "Ferguson 365" focuses on the Brown shooting and its aftermath. "A lot of people have lost hope."

Unlike Phillips, Janette McClelland, 55, a black musician in Albuquerque, New Mexico, said she has no intention of celebrating July Fourth.

"It's a white man's holiday to me. It's just another day," McClelland said. "I'm not going to even watch the fireworks. Not feeling it."

McClelland, who grew up in Los Angeles before the urban unrest of the 1960s, said she fears cities may see more violence amid a feeling of helplessness. "I'm praying and trying to keep positive," she said.

IMMIGRATION

Immigration was a key issue during the presidential campaign for both parties. Since then, President Donald Trump's administration has stepped up enforcement and instituted a scaled-back partial travel ban that places new limits on entry to the U.S. for citizens of six Muslim-majority countries. The temporary ban requires people to prove a close family relationship in the U.S. or an existing relationship with an entity like a school or business. On Friday, the administration announced that Immigration and Customs Enforcement would arrest people — including relatives — who hire smugglers to bring children into the U.S. illegally.

Patricia Montes, a Boston resident and immigrant from Honduras, said she's grateful for the opportunities and security the United States has given her. Yet this year, she doesn't know how to approach the Fourth of July holiday.

"I fell very conflicted," said Montes, an immigrant advocate. "I mean, what are we

Doctor has no idea why he'd be hospital shooter's target

AP photo

Police officers with the Forensics Unit leave Bronx Lebanon Hospital after a gunman opened fire and then took his own life there, Friday, June 30, 2017, in New York. The gunman, identified as Dr. Henry Bello who used to work at the hospital, returned with a rifle hidden under his white lab coat, law enforcement officials said.

By COLLEEN LONG
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — A doctor who appears to have been the target of a former physician who started shooting at a hospital, killing one person and injuring six, said he has no idea why he would have been singled out.

Dr. Kamran Ahmed told the New York Post he wasn't the only one Dr. Henry Bello had a problem with.

However, "he never argued with me," Ahmed said. "I don't know why he put my name."

A law enforcement official told The Associated Press that Bello arrived at Bronx Lebanon Hospital in the Bronx on Friday with an assault rifle, which was bought in upstate New York about a week earlier, hidden under his lab coat and asked for a doctor he blamed for his having to resign, but the doctor wasn't there at the time. The law enforcement official wasn't authorized to discuss an ongoing investigation and spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Ahmed, who specializes in the early detection and treatment of dementia, said Bello "had a problem with almost everybody, so I'm not the only one. That's why they fired him, because so many people complained."

Authorities said Bello went to the 16th and 17th floors and started shooting anyway, killing Dr. Tracy Sin-Yee Tam, who, like him, was a family medicine doctor. Hospital officials said that Tam normally worked in one of the hospital's satellite clinics and was covering a shift in the main hospital as a favor to someone else.

"It makes you think that anything can happen to anybody," said Tam's neighbor Alena Khaim, who saw Tam's sister outside the home Friday night overcome with grief, shaking and unable to walk. "She was such a sweet girl. You would never think something like that would happen, but it happened."

Before the shooting, Bello sent an email to the Daily News, blaming colleagues he said forced him to resign two years earlier.

"This hospital terminated my road to a licensure to practice medicine," the email said. "First, I was told it was because I always kept to myself. Then it was because of an altercation with a nurse."

Bello's former co-workers described a man who was aggressive, loud and threatening. Bello had warned his former colleagues when he was forced out in 2015 that he would return someday to kill them.

Looters strip Greek mountains of wild tea, rare plants

By COSTAS KANTOURIS
Associated Press

THESSALONIKI, Greece (AP) — In the rugged, herb-scented mountains of northwestern Greece, where the border with Albania is a snaking invisible line, trouble is brewing over tea — the wild herbal variety.

Greek authorities and conservationists say bands of impoverished Albanians are making regular cross-border forays, illegally harvesting donkey-loads of herbs and medicinal plants. They mostly pick mountain tea — also called ironwort — hawthorn and even primrose, but they are also destroying rare and endangered species in the process.

The looters then sell the herbs for export to pharmaceutical or cosmetics companies, a business that nets Albanian wholesalers tens of millions annually.

It's illegal in Greece to pick more than a tiny quantity of wild herbs for personal use in traditional infusions. That ban doesn't exist in Albania, one of Europe's poorest nations. But, more significantly, the plants are usually uprooted in the looters' haste to pick as much as possible and be off undetected. This stops natural regeneration, threatens delicate ecosystems and leaves entire mountainsides denuded.

Albanians contend the herbs are there and the Greeks don't pick them, so why shouldn't somebody profit?

Christos Toskos, an environmentalist in Greece's Kastoria border area, says the depredations have increased over the past five years, with incursions now coming on a daily basis.

"There is very large destruction in areas covering thousands of acres," he said.

Vassilis Filiadis, who grows his own herbs in Kastoria, lamented the fate of an old wild ironwort patch in the Grammos mountains.

"It covers about 3 square kilometers (740 acres). In past years, the mountain tea grew there like a sea. The plants formed waves," he told The Associated Press. "I went this year and was shocked, it's all been uprooted."

Greece's flora is among the richest in Europe, with about 6,500 native plant species.

In targeted operations over the last few months, Greek police have arrested at least ten Albanians and seized dozens of kilograms of herbs. In one case in late June, three people were caught with 136 kilograms (300 pounds) of ironwort loaded on two horses and a donkey.

Albanian exporters pay illegal gatherers up to 6 euros ($6.80) a kilogram (2.2 pounds) for ironwort and 7 euros a kilogram for hawthorn, Greek officials say.

"They illegally enter Greece and quickly gather the plants to avoid being seen," said Brigadier-General Panagiotis Ntziovaras, head of police for the border region of western Macedonia.

Those caught have been given suspended prison sentences of one or two months and been deported.

Bunches of mountain tea are on sale in a shop in Athens, on Saturday, July 1, 2017. Greek authorities and conservationists say bands of impoverished Albanians make regular forays over the border, illegally harvesting donkey loads of wild herbs and medicinal plants such as mountain tea, also called ironwort, hawthorn and primrose, but also eradicating rare or endangered species.

Many poor Albanians are crossing the mountains into Greece this year because of an herb shortage in Albania due to freezing temperatures last winter, said Filip Gjoka, president of Albania's Association of Medicinal & Aromatic Plants and owner of an herb and spice trading company.

He said they sometimes take whole families and camp in the mountains with their horses or mules.

"There are a lot of herbs in Greece, where they are not collected due to labor force shortages or lack of interest," Gjoka told the AP. "We here collect those herbs, and these people take the risks to support their families. They can bear a few months of jail since there are no other jobs."

In 2016, 24 Albanian companies exported some 17,000 tons of medicinal and aromatic plants and herbs — 186 varieties — worth a total of $40 million. They process only about 30 percent of that amount in five factories and export the rest raw.

The U.S. is a main importer, while others include France, Germany, Spain and even Australia.

celebrating? Are we celebrating democracy?"

Montes said it pains her to see children fleeing violence get turned away and deported back to Central America without due process. She also is disturbed by recent immigration raids in Latino and Muslim communities that spark more fear and uncertainty.

In Texas, Latino activists have been protesting a state law that forces cities and towns to cooperate with federal immigration authorities. In New Mexico and Michigan, immigrant advocates have been rallying on behalf of Iraqi refugees facing deportation.

"There's a lot not to be proud about when celebrating the Fourth of July," said Janelle Astorga Ramos, a University of New Mexico student and daughter of a Mexican immigrant. "Even though it's a time to celebrate as a country and (for) our unity, it's definitely going to be on the back of our minds."

Despite those problems and concerns, Ramos said her family will recognize the holiday and visit Elephant Butte, New Mexico, a popular summer destination. "This is our home," Ramos said.

Isabella Baker, a 17-year-old Latina from Bosque Farms, New Mexico, said she'll celebrate the holiday based on her own views of patriotism.

"More people are standing up because of the political climate," Baker said. "That makes me proud."

PROTEST AGAINST PIPELINE

For months, members of the Standing Rock Sioux were at the center of a protest against an oil pipeline in North Dakota. A protest camp was set up. The tribe said the Dakota Access oil pipeline plan could pose a threat to water sources if there was a leak and cause cultural harm. Police made more than 700 arrests between August 2016 and February 2017. The Trump administration approved the final permit for the $3.8 billion pipeline, which began operating June 1. The pipeline moves oil from western North Dakota to a distribution point in Illinois. Four Sioux tribes are still fighting in federal court to get the line shut down.

Ruth Hopkins, a member of South Dakota's Sisseton Wahpeton Oyate tribe, said Native Americans have always viewed the Fourth of July with ambivalence, and this year will be no different.

However, there will be celebrations.

Her Lake Traverse Indian Reservation holds an annual powwow on July 4 to honor veterans as a way to take the holiday back, she said.

"Also, a lot of people up here use fireworks and the holiday to celebrate victory over Custer for Victory Day," said Hopkins, referring to Sitting Bull and Crazy Horse defeating George Custer and his 7th Cavalry at the Battle of the Little Big Horn.

Still, the holiday comes after tribes and others gathered in North Dakota to support the Standing Rock Sioux tribe and its fight against the pipeline, Hopkins said. Because of that, water and land rights remain on peoples' mind, Hopkins said.

Gyasi Ross, a member of Montana's Blackfeet Nation and a writer who lives on the Port Madison Indian Reservation near Seattle, said all the tensions this Fourth of July are a blessing because it has awakened a consciousness among people of color.

"The gloves are off," Ross said. "We can't ignore these things anymore."

However, Ross said he wants his young son to be hopeful about the future. They will likely go fishing on the Fourth of July.

"I still worry about getting shot or something like that," Ross said. "All this stuff is so heavy to be carrying around."

Soy 'milk'? Even federal agencies can't agree on terminology

This Thursday, Feb. 16, 2017, file photo shows the ingredients label for soy milk at a grocery store in New York. The dairy industry says terms like "soy milk" violate the federal standard for milk, but even government agencies have internally clashed over the proper term.

By CANDICE CHOI
AP Food Industry Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Dairy farmers want U.S. regulators to banish the term "soy milk," but documents show even government agencies haven't always agreed on what to call such drinks.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture "fervently" wanted to use the term "soy milk" in educational materials for the public, according to emails recently released in response to a lawsuit. That irked the Food and Drug Administration, the agency that oversees the rule defining milk as coming from healthy cows.

It's "not a trivial decision," the FDA warned in one of the 2011 emails about the USDA's desire to use the term.

The sour history over who gets to use "milk" reaches back to at least 1997, when a soy foods group petitioned the FDA to recognize the term "soymilk." A couple of years later, the group pointed out that the FDA itself had used the term. Even now, the National Milk Producers Federation says it's working to build support for legislation directing the FDA to enforce the federal standard. The dairy group says both "soy milk" and "soymilk" are inappropriate ways to describe non-dairy drinks made from soybeans, and that the one-word version is just an attempt to get around the definition.

There are plenty of other food names at issue. A European Union court recently ruled that a company named TofuTown can't describe its products as "cheese." U.S. rice producers have railed against "pretenders " like diced cauliflower and said they may take the issue to the FDA.

But the FDA hasn't even always been able to get other agencies to go along, as illustrated in the emails obtained by the Good Food Institute, which advocates alternatives to industrial animal agriculture. The GFI sued the FDA for public records relating to soy milk.

The email exchange started when a nutrition adviser at the Department of Health and Human Services alerted the FDA that the USDA planned to use "soy milk" in educational materials about dietary guidelines.

"USDA staff are preparing consumer publications and fervently want to use the term 'soy milk' because beverages are widely marketed this way," the adviser wrote.

The FDA bristled and provided the federal definition of milk as a "lacteal secretion" from cows. Therefore, the FDA declared that referring to soy, almond and rice drinks as "milk" would be incorrect. It suggested the other agency say "beverage" or "fortified beverage."

When that didn't put the matter to rest, the FDA warned that the USDA's use of the term could undermine the FDA's regulatory authority.

That apparently didn't stop the USDA, either.

"They are adamant about using the term in consumer publications," the nutrition adviser wrote. The USDA had indicated that it would use "soy beverage" in official policy documents, but it wanted to use "plain language" in materials for the public.

Despite the federal regulation, others may also consider "soy milk" an acceptable term. The Merriam-Webster dictionary doesn't limit milk's definition to cows, saying it is "a fluid secreted by the mammary glands of females for the nourishment of their young."

It also allows for a "food product produced from seeds or fruit that resembles and is used similarly to cow's milk."

Asked how the spat was resolved, the USDA provided materials from 2011 that use both terms by referring to "soymilk (soy beverage)." The agency also uses the term elsewhere, including on its "Choose My Plate" website, which currently says "calcium-fortified soymilk (soy beverage)" is part of the dairy group.

The National Milk Producers Federation says the USDA's usage of the term shows even other government agencies are confused about how to describe soy beverages in the absence of consistent enforcement by the FDA.

Teen musicians to take soulful Memphis Sound anew to Europe

By ADRIAN SAINZ
Associated Press

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The roster of American musicians was impressive: Otis Redding, Sam & Dave, Eddie Floyd, Booker T. and the MGs. They arrived in Europe in 1967, bringing with them the powerful, soulful Memphis Sound. Ahead was a tour with stops in London, Paris and elsewhere.

These artists from the Stax Records music studio captivated audiences with their music born from blues and gospel — a mesmerizing sound created from the black experience in the U.S. last century.

Fifty years later, a group of young musicians educated at Stax Music Academy are newly bringing the music of Memphis back to Europe. They are set to perform at festivals and music halls in England, France and Ireland from July 9 until July 22, joining Stax legends Mavis Staples and William Bell for a couple of shows.

The teenage musicians are eager to follow in the footsteps of their influential predecessors. Created in 2000, their academy is an after-school program for youngsters from some of Memphis' poorest neighborhoods who learn how to dance, sing and play instruments. They pay nothing to attend.

"Just to be able to say that I was part of this upcoming overseas tour, being able to sing songs by Otis Redding and William Bell, it's monumental not only for Memphis, but for Stax," said Johnathon Lee, a 17-year-old academy vocalist. "To know that Stax music is still relevant today, and to know that was done in 1967, that's monumental as well."

Before it went bankrupt, Stax Records in Memphis generated some of America's most memorable soul music of the 1960s and 1970s, including songs like Redding's "Dock of the Bay," Sam & Dave's "Soul Man," Floyd's "Knock on Wood," and Booker T. and the MGs' "Green Onions." Driven by tight horn and rhythm sections and strong-voiced singers, the Memphis Sound had a raw, emotional quality to it. Some Stax songs were energetic and raucous, others smooth and sexy.

Stax had a sister record label called Volt, so when they put together the 1967 trip, it was called the Stax/Volt European Tour.

The tour came at a time when Stax was having trouble getting its music aired on larger U.S. radio stations because of racial issues during the civil rights era, said Al Bell, who at the time was the music label's national promotions director. So, when the Stax musicians hopped off a plane in London, they were surprised by the welcome they received.

"It stunned us. We didn't know how to act," Bell said. "All these white people in the airport and everywhere, hollering about Stax, calling the artists' names."

In Paris, fans "were going crazy" over the Stax musicians, especially Redding, Bell said.

"If there was ever a question in my mind about our music being acceptable to the masses and to whites, Paris, France, removed that completely from my mind," he said.

Bell said Europeans told him that they viewed the music as an art form that comes from the African-American culture.

"And I'm saying, what?" Bell said, laughing. "We hadn't even thought about having a 'culture,' let alone our music being considered an art form because it came out of slavery."

When they returned to Memphis, the Stax artists used the momentum from the successful tour to churn out hits.

"When we came out of Europe, you couldn't tell us nothing," Bell said.

Mormon Tabernacle Choir director mentors inmate music group

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The newest students of the director of the famed Mormon Tabernacle Choir have the talent you would expect to be honed under the guidance of an experienced music teacher. But they come from an unlikely source — Utah State Prison.

Director Mack Wilberg spent months helping members of the prison's Wasatch Music School prepare for a spring recital in June. The inmates performed with instruments donated by the community and sang gospel, county and rock songs. Many audience members said the recital exceeded their expectations.

The Wasatch Music School began in 2006 with volunteers dedicated to providing resources to inmates so they could learn to play guitar or piano or sing.

The group is co-directed by inmate Roland Pitt, who competed with Wilberg in college, and decided to teach music at the prison to atone for his mistakes.

Seeing the potential of the school's choir, the school's director, David Aguirre, asked Wilberg if someone from the Tabernacle Choir could oversee a master class. To his surprise, Wilberg himself offered to teach the class regularly.

Wilberg admits he was nervous when he held his first workshop with the inmates in February.

"I didn't know what to expect, but that first time I ... looked at all these inmates — I know they have had challenges in their lives — and to see them come together (to sing), I was moved by that," he said.

The group has also responded well to Wilberg's presence, even though he pushes them harder than they have been used to, Aguirre said.

He worked with program about once week after Easter. Pitt would take over during weeks Wilberg could not make it.

"It's just been phenomenal, the results he has," Aguirre said. "The men just respond to him.

He has such a humble greatness about him. . And that's good for the men to see."

Inmate Ron Kelly considers the program a life saver. He has been at Utah State Prison for almost 35 years and calls himself the program's main recruiter.

"For lack of better terms, I'm kind of the pimp of the music school," he said. "I'm out there asking people, 'Hey, have you ever played an instrument?' . We want this to be a place where people can escape and have peace."

Wilberg said he was impressed by the inmates' passion and dedication for music and plans to continue working with the group.

Utah Summer League begins with high expectations for Exum

By KAREEM COPELAND
AP Sports Writer

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — NBA Summer League rosters are typically composed of rookies getting their first taste of the league or players trying to catch the eye of an organization.

Utah's Dante Exum doesn't quite fit either category.

The Jazz guard was the No. 5 overall pick in the 2014 draft and will be running a summer league team — again. No other lottery pick from 2014 or 2015 currently is on an Orlando or Utah summer league roster. But Exum finds himself in the unusual position of trying to attain a more secure place in the 2017-18 Utah rotation.

"He's not the young guy anymore," Jazz summer league coach Alex Jensen said. "It's time. You've got to stand out.

"I don't think it's any one thing. When you watch the game, he can't blend in. You're too talented and too good to blend in, because a lot of guys are in their first and second year."

San Antonio, Boston, Philadelphia and Utah begin play in Salt Lake City on Monday; Play started Saturday in the eight-team Orlando summer league.

Exum said he wasn't planning to play summer league after the season ended, but the team would like to see more from him going into his fourth year. Time could be running out for the 21-year-old as the Jazz continue to try to upgrade their roster and build on last season's return to the playoffs. One area of particular focus is point guard. Utah traded into the lottery to draft guard Donovan Mitchell and took Nigel Williams-Goss in the second round. The Jazz also traded for Ricky Rubio over the weekend.

Exum was moved to off guard down the stretch of the season and averaged 6.2 points, 1.7 assists and 2.0 rebounds and shot 42.7 percent from the field. His career progression stalled when he missed all of 2015-16 with a torn ACL. He said he's focused on working on his jumper, his mid-range game, 3-point shot, driving to the basket and facilitating the offense.

The Jazz are hoping to resign Gordon Hayward, add depth to the roster and become even more of a threat in the Western Conference after earning the No. 5 playoff seed in 2017. That means the clock is ticking for Exum, who needs to show he's more than just athletically gifted in a 6-foot-6 frame.

"One of the biggest things for me is I just want to play," Exum said. "It was an emphasis this summer just to get out and play."

Some other things to look for during play in Utah:

SPURS' MURRAY

Second-year guard Dejounte Murray is preparing for an increased role with San Antonio next season. Murray was considered a steal at No.

After shock win over Pacquiao, Horn ignoring the criticism

By JOHN PYE
AP Sports Writer

BRISBANE, Australia (AP) — Manny Pacquiao had already left town without saying much, even as criticism of the referee in the WBO welterweight world title fight and the judges who awarded a unanimous points decision to a previously almost anonymous Jeff Horn was still pouring in on social media.

The 29-year-old Horn, a former schoolteacher who was given almost no hope of beating the 11-time world champion, was feted by fans and politicians in his hometown on Monday and didn't care too much about criticism — which started in a TV interview as soon as he left the ring on Sunday after the Battle of Brisbane.

"There will always be a backlash where people say I got lucky, or whatever. There will always be the naysayers saying I didn't win the fight, but I felt like I won the fight," Horn, now unbeaten in his 18 fights since turning professional in 2013, said as he basked in the victory on Monday. "Everyone has a right to their opinion. I'm sure I've (gained) a lot more fans over there than I've lost."

Pacquiao skipped the formal post-fight news conference, his camp saying he needed to get seven stitches in each of the cuts on the top of his head, and also declined other interviews in the dressing room.

Some critics described the result as a robbery and questioned the integrity of the sport.

Immediately after the fight, Pacquiao said he had to respect the decision and noted that he had a clause for a rematch, but he later told a Philippines news channel that he'd been confident he'd won the fight.

His trainers were critical of the referee for not doing more to stop or penalize head clashes and neck holds. And they highlighted statistics that showed Pacquiao threw twice as many punches.

AP Source: Nuggets get Paul Millsap for 3 years, $90 million

By JON KRAWCZYNSKI
AP Basketball Writer

The Denver Nuggets have been chasing starry veterans the last two years, determined to add experience and firepower to a promising young core.

They finally landed a big one Sunday, agreeing to terms with four-time All-Star Paul Millsap on a three-year deal worth $90 million, a person with knowledge of the situation told The Associated Press. The person spoke on condition of anonymity because the contract cannot be signed until Thursday.

The former Atlanta forward was one of the strongest free agents remaining on the board two days into the new business year, not counting Warriors superstar Kevin Durant, who is expected to re-sign with Golden State. The Nuggets engaged with Millsap early in the process, outlasting several other teams, including the Phoenix Suns and Atlanta Hawks, whose new GM Travis Schlenk acknowledged could get outbid for the 32-year-old's services before free agency started.

Millsap gives the young Nuggets a proven veteran who should fit perfectly with coach Michael Malone and budding star Nikola Jokic. Millsap averaged a career-high 18.1 points last season to go with 7.7 rebounds and 3.1 assists. He is versatile offensively and is one of the NBA's most underrated defenders.

Yahoo! Sports first reported the agreement.

Newly elevated president of basketball operations Tim Connelly and GM Arturas Karnisovas have chased big-name veterans like Dwyane Wade, Blake Griffin and Kevin Love in trade talks or free agency over the past couple of seasons, determined to vault a rebuilding team back into contention in the powerful Western Conference.

With Paul George going from Indiana to Oklahoma City, Jimmy Butler from Chicago to Minnesota and Chris Paul from the Clippers to Houston among other significant moves in the last two weeks, it became more important than ever for the Nuggets to break through themselves.

Millsap will slide in at power forward next to Jokic, the 6-foot-10 Serb who averaged

Russia upbeat as Confederations Cup goes off smoothly

By JAMES ELLINGWORTH
AP Sports Writer

When FIFA's Gianni Infantino sat with Russian President Vladimir Putin at the opening game on June 17, the host nation was under a cloud — facing pressure over widespread doping in multiple, fan racism and a reported 17 deaths during construction of World Cup stadiums.

But by Sunday's final, Germany's champion team was giving glowing reviews. Captain Julian Draxler wrote an open letter to Russian fans saying: "Russia passed the test with flying colors," while coach Joachim Loew was also full of praise.

"Thanks very much to Russia, I think they were great hosts," Loew said after his team beat Chile 1-0 in Sunday's final. "In the different cities where we played, and in the stadiums, we saw excellent conditions. This tournament has been brilliantly organized, and we have met outstanding people, which is very important too."

It wasn't hard for Russia's host cities — Moscow, St. Petersburg, Sochi and Kazan — to outdo the last Confederations Cup, given that in 2013 Brazilian police were teargassing protesters outside the stadiums.

Next year will be tougher, though, with seven more cities and many more foreign fans. Russia's predicting a million visitors during the World Cup, compared to 27,000 foreigners who FIFA says bought tickets for the Confederations Cup.

Russia is keen to show the world smiling, well behaved fans, not the muscle-bound thugs who rampaged through the French city of Marseille at last year's European championship.

Cheering is practically a matter of government policy.

"We have proved Russia is a football country," Deputy Prime Minister Vitaly Mutko told Russian state news agency Tass on Sunday. "The final was staged at a high level, the tournament was staged at a high level, the fans cheered at a high level."

With government-issue Fan IDs required to attend a game, Russia was able to control the atmosphere at stadiums. The authorities barred not only fans with convictions for stadium disorder, but also those with looser links to "ultras" groups from Russian clubs, including many who insisted they were not troublemakers.

Russia's Confederations Cup crowds were good-natured, even if they rarely engaged much with the action when Russia wasn't playing. Many were local families on days out, keener to join in Mexican waves than cheer the players or rage at the referee.

Communication and Independence

On the birthday of the United States of America, Venus begins a cycle in Gemini, and Mercury and Uranus square off. The discussion of country will continue to trend in a lively direction. Seek understanding before trying to influence others. "Liberty is always dangerous, but it is the safest thing we have." -- Harry Emerson Fosdick

ARIES (March 21-April 19). The moment you decide to impress yourself, the adventure will be on! (But if you are hung up on impressing anyone other than yourself, it will cause a delay in your journey to greatness.)

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). There is some heaven here on earth, and you want to experience it. Also, heaven on earth wants to experience you. When you approach the moments with this in mind, the portholes open.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Those with many opinions may have few facts. As for the ones who have plenty of both, they're worth listening to today. You may not agree, but you'll come to a resolution faster for learning what they know.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Orphans and strays will be attracted to your generosity and compassion. Your posse will get bigger and bigger. The growth won't be the least bit draining to you. In fact, you'll get back more than you give.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Counting the cost isn't the same as paying the price. In fact, often those who paid didn't count. The bottom line is that you don't have to know the bottom line to do the right thing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Living well is spending your life in your own way. You realize exactly what way that is by being forced to live by other people's rules and figuring out, "This just isn't me."

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Don't be in too much of a rush. If you want everything yesterday, you miss the opportunity to learn how it's made, earned and delivered. There is wisdom and creativity hiding away in the origin story.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You have taken a child into your heart even though you probably already knew that children have a way of bruising the hearts they live inside with their naive will. When that part comes, you'll handle it and be stronger for it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). It will take a great deal of personal restraint not to say the thing on your mind, but if the idea seems the least bit unhelpful or has the slightest chance of causing offense, it won't be worth the breath it takes to utter it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Enduring love isn't always so visible in the action of your daily life. There are those you communicate with in thought only who continue to influence you in ways both minute and remarkable.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). The luckiest thing you can do today will be to teach others born in another time. It doesn't matter if they are older or younger than you; there's much of value to impart about the experience of your own particular slice of time.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Usually, you can see quite well with your heart, and its vision extends as far as needed or becomes microscopic for things that are very small or extremely close. It can even see what's invisible. Your heart will never need glasses.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (July 4). You're so often asked to be creative, look for the opportunity inside of a problem, rise above the situation. You do an excellent job of that, but you deserve a break from it, too. The next 10 weeks hands you good luck you don't have to work for. You had this coming. Invest in August. Domestic transformation comes in December. Leo and Scorpio adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 9, 30, 2, 26 and 4.

ASTROLOGICAL QUESTION: "What is a T-square? I have one in my natal chart, which I read many years ago. It doesn't look like a T or a square. It actually looks like a triangle, so I wonder whether there's some kind of mistake. I know that squares can be negative and stressful, so I'm hoping that it's a mistake."

You are very observant. Much depends on how you connect the dots. A T-square, sometimes called a T-cross, can look neither squarish nor crossish if you connect the planets in a certain way. It is essentially an isosceles triangle. The T-square configuration occurs when two planets are in opposition and a third planet is 90 degrees from both.

Do not fear your T-square. It's a gift -- albeit one like a college education or a vacuum cleaner. It implies that there is work to be done and you'll be the one doing it. Sure, you were hoping for jewelry. But jewelry isn't going to get you a job or clean your house. There are many famous people, past and present, with T-squares in their charts -- Oprah Winfrey, Martha Stewart, Marilyn Monroe, Martin Luther King Jr., Clint Eastwood, to name just a few. It signifies that there will be something to overcome. You can and you will.

CELEBRITY PROFILES: What better gift to a patriotic American family than a daughter born on the Fourth of July? Malia Obama is a loyal Cancer with Venus and Mars in communicative Gemini. These aspects indicate one who is fast on her feet, a quick thinker and an excellent debater. Her moon's being in Scorpio indicates a need for privacy, yet Mercury in Leo suggests a strong public persona.

Annie's Mailbox ®

Absentee Grandparents

Dear Annie: I am distraught by my mother-in-law and father-in-law. My husband and I have been happily married for more than 20 years, and we have three great boys. My in-laws make no effort to see our family. My kids' sporting events and accomplishments go unrecognized. What makes it harder to deal with is that they are involved with all their other grandchildren. My husband is an absolutely amazing father. Any mother would be proud of him. I try so hard to be a good wife and mother.

How do I continue to have a relationship with my in-laws when they show no interest in having a relationship with me or my kids? I call my mother-in-law; she doesn't return the calls. We hand-deliver the boys' game schedules; she says she never gets them. We give gifts, and she doesn't even acknowledge them. And she will "forget" to invite us to family events.

I know that my husband is hurt and wonders why he isn't good enough for their attention. I'm afraid to talk to my mother-in-law because, knowing her personality, it would make waves with the other siblings. The other daughters-in-law love her.

To my mother- and father-in-law, I'd like to say: Our boys see all their teammates' grandparents at their sporting events and know that you choose not to come to cheer them on. And when we go to their cousins' games and see you there, it hurts them.

To all you parents and grandparents out there: Don't play favorites. -- A Family Left Out

Dear Left Out: It's not so much that you are being left out as they are missing out. Your sons and husband sound wonderful.

You might encourage your husband to stand up to his parents and express how hurt he and his family are by their indifference. Perhaps there is some long-held grudge they're holding that would come to light if he confronted them. In any case, don't worry too much about what they think. Any parents who intentionally play favorites with their children or grandchildren are not worth trying to curry favor with.

Dear Annie: I'm 81 years old and still fairly active. I'm in fine enough health.

My problem is that I wake up at night and worry about what to do with all the stuff in my large house. My daughter used to help me, but she is busy with her own life. I need to talk with a senior counselor who can help me work out a plan and direct me to resources that can help me dispose of my items. Any advice you could give me would be greatly appreciated.

By the way, I think many seniors are struggling with different issues that aren't dire but cause sleepless nights. It would be a great service to encourage seniors to send questions that are about their lives, because there are more and more people who are moving into the senior years and don't know what to do. -- Tossing and Turning

Dear Tossing and Turning: The National Association of Senior Move Managers helps seniors downsize their possessions, whether they're actually moving to a new location or they're staying at home. Contact the NASMM at 877-606-2766.

I'd like to echo your sentiment. I would love to hear from more seniors about the issues they're facing. Please write.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♥	Pass	2 ♦	Pass
2 ♥	Pass	4 ♥

Opening lead — ten of clubs.

In duplicate bridge, where the same randomly dealt hand may be played at 10, 20 or even 100 different tables, the various approaches taken by players holding exactly the same cards can often be astonishing.

Consider this seemingly run-of-the-mill deal from a large duplicate game. After South's opening heart bid, some North players immediately leaped to four notrump, while others bid just three notrump. Some tried an initial two diamonds, and others bid three diamonds. A few started at a slow pace, but gathered steam as the bidding progressed until sheer impetus drove them into a slam.

Some stopped in four hearts and made five, while others got to six hearts and made three! Those who played three notrump scored from nine to 11 tricks.

On the bidding shown, after South bids two hearts — identifying a minimum opening — the chance of making a slam is largely dissipated, and North should simply raise to four hearts. That will prove to be the winning bid in the long run.

Point count strongly suggests that there is no slam. North's 16 points and 4-3-3-3 distribution would require a 17-point hand from South, which is not possible after his minimum rebid.

A direct three-diamond response would have the merit of signaling a potential slam, but most players these days guarantee at least 17 points when they jump-shift.

The play at four hearts centers entirely on the first trick. If declarer finesses the club lead, he goes down after a spade shift by East. Instead, South should put up the ace, draw trumps and cash four diamonds, discarding two spades to ensure 11 tricks. That's all there is to it.

Tomorrow: A logical inference.

This Date In History

Today is Tuesday, July 4, the 185th day of 2017. There are 180 days left in the year. This is Independence Day.

Today's Highlight in History:

On July 4, 1776, the Declaration of Independence was adopted by delegates to the Second Continental Congress in Philadelphia.

On this date:

In 1802, the United States Military Academy officially opened at West Point, New York.

In 1817, ground was broken for the Erie Canal in Rome, New York. The middle section of the waterway took three years to complete; the entire canal was finished in 1825.

In 1826, 50 years to the day after the Declaration of Independence was adopted, former presidents John Adams and Thomas Jefferson both died.

In 1831, the fifth president of the United States, James Monroe, died in New York City at age 73.

In 1872, the 30th president of the United States, Calvin Coolidge, was born in Plymouth, Vermont.

In 1917, during a ceremony in Paris honoring the French hero of the American Revolution, U.S. Army Lt. Col. Charles E. Stanton, an aide to Maj. Gen. John J. Pershing, declared: "Lafayette, we are here!"

In 1939, Lou Gehrig of the New York Yankees delivered his famous farewell speech in which he called himself "the luckiest man on the face of the earth."

In 1942, Irving Berlin's musical revue "This Is the Army" opened at the Broadway Theater in New York.

In 1947, the small central California town of Hollister was overrun by thousands of motorcycling enthusiasts, dozens of whom ended up being arrested, most for drunkenness, in what came to be called the "Hollister Riot."

In 1966, President Lyndon B. Johnson signed the Freedom of Information Act, which went into effect the following year.

In 1987, Klaus Barbie, the former Gestapo chief known as the "Butcher of Lyon (lee-OHN')," was convicted by a French court of crimes against humanity and sentenced to life in prison (he died in Sept. 1991).

In 1997, NASA's Pathfinder spacecraft landed on Mars, inaugurating a new era in the search for life on the red planet. CBS newsman Charles Kuralt died in New York at age 62.

Ten years ago: BBC reporter Alan Johnston, seized by the Army of Islam in the Gaza Strip the previous March, was released after 114 days in captivity. The head of the radical-held Red Mosque (Maulana Abdul Aziz) in Islamabad, Pakistan, was caught by security forces. (He was eventually released.) The Black Sea resort of Sochi was elected the host city of the 2014 Winter Olympics, taking the Winter Games to Russia for the first time.

Five years ago: Scientists at the European Center for Nuclear Research in Geneva, where the world's biggest atom smasher is located, cheered the apparent end of a decades-long quest for a new subatomic particle called the Higgs boson, or "God particle." Three children drowned when a yacht carrying 27 people capsized in Long Island Sound off Oyster Bay.

Pacquiao thanked some high-profile supporters for letting their feelings be known.

"Thank you for the support and for also believing that I won the fight," he said in the TV interview. "I'm praying that it will not affect or ruin the boxing industry."

Reports emerged that a government department in the Philippines wanted the WBO to launch an inquiry into the outcome. The WBO had released the judge's scores on Sunday night.

All three judges awarded it to Horn, with American Waleska Roldan's 117-111 score attracting most of the criticism. U.S. judge Chris Flores and Ramon Cerdan of Argentina each scored it much closer at 115-113.

Top Rank promotor Bob Arum said it was a "close fight. It could have gone either way."

"A couple of close rounds, but you can't argue with the result," he said after the fight. "I scored a lot of the early rounds for Jeff. Then I had Manny coming back in the middle. The 12th round, Jeff really won. If you give Manny the 11th, you have it a draw. You give Jeff the 11th, it's 7-5." The 38-year-old Pacquiao had a chance to knock Horn out in the 9th, with the Aussie on the ropes and in big trouble in front of the 51,052 fans at Suncorp Stadium, but couldn't complete the job. His own handlers agreed that had a bearing on the fight — saying Pacquiao shouldn't have left it up to the judges.

As he mingled with fans on Monday, his right eye still closed, Horn said he hadn't paid a lot of attention to the criticism "but I've seen my Facebook and that's gone gangbusters at the moment."

"Manny Pacquiao is an absolute warrior, a legend of the sport. He might have come underdone in this fight, I don't know," Horn said. "I guess if we have a rematch and he put his all in, he might come in better, I don't know."

One thing the fight has done is ensure Horn will have a bigger profile before his next fight, whether that be a rematch with Pacquiao — now 59-7-2 and with three losses in his last eight fights — or not.

Pacquiao was back in the Philippines later Monday, and had a military guard of honor to welcome him back to General Santos. A unanimous points decision wasn't what anyone had been expecting.

"It was, I guess, the Manny Show. I can remember watching programs saying the Manny Pacquiao fight in Brisbane — my name wasn't normally mentioned," Horn said. "But now hopefully I'm a bit more recognized and I've established myself in the boxing community a bit more."

In this April 28, 2017, photo, Atlanta Hawks forward Paul Millsap (4) shoots against Washington Wizards forward Jason Smith (14) in the first half of an NBA playoff basketball game in Atlanta. A person with knowledge of the situation told The Associated Press on Sunday, July 2, that Paul Millsap has agreed to terms with the Denver Nuggets on a three-year deal worth $90 million. The person spoke on condition of anonymity because the contract cannot be signed until Thursday.

NUGGETS

16.7 points, 9.8 rebounds and 4.9 assists last season. The Nuggets also have dynamic young wings Jamal Murray and Gary Harris.

The Nuggets (40-42) improved by seven games, but still missed the playoffs for a fourth straight season. They lost out to Portland for the eighth and final spot in the West. The string of futility has ramped up the urgency even more now that the Western Conference figures to be as stacked as it has ever been.

Millsap was a second-round draft pick of the Utah Jazz in 2006. He spent his first seven seasons with the Jazz, developing into a rugged, two-way player, then signed with the Hawks in 2013. He has career averages of 14.2 points and 7.5 rebounds and made $20 million last season.

After stripping coach Mike Budenholzer of his president's title, saying goodbye to GM Wes Wilcox and bringing in Schlenk, the Hawks are in the middle of a retooling process. They traded Dwight Howard to Charlotte and wouldn't get into a bidding war with the Nuggets to retain Millsap as they shift gears after seeing their win total drop from 60 in 2014-15 to 48 in 2015-16 and 43 last season.

In the last two years, Millsap, Jeff Teague, Kyle Korver, DeMarre Carroll and Al Horford have all left from that 60-win team, an exodus that has thrust the franchise into an uncertain position.

EXUM

29 in the 2016 draft, but he still just played 38 games and averaged 8.5 minutes.

Tony Parker is 35 years old, and Patty Mills recently re-signed. But Murray's minutes should see a significant uptick.

"I get to come out here and show the coaching staff that I can lead a group of guys," Murray said, "and I'm ready to accept a new role — whether it's coming off the bench or starting. Whatever coach (Gregg Popovich) needs me to do."

Murray has plans to work out with MVP finalist Kawhi Leonard in San Diego after summer league.

FULTZ vs. TATUM

The first matchup in Utah on Monday will be the most anticipated game of the three-day session. The 76ers and No. 1 pick Markelle Fultz face the Celtics and No. 3 pick Jayson Tatum .

The teams swapped picks before the draft, and the two are likely to be compared throughout their careers.

BODY PRESENT, MIND ELSEWHERE

The Jazz will be playing summer league games on Monday, but many thoughts will be in San Diego, where general manager Dennis Lindsey, coach Quin Snyder and others are scheduled to meet with Hayward. He met with the Heat on Saturday and the Celtics on Sunday.

Hayward just concluded the most productive season of his career that included his first All-Star selection, career highs in points and rebounds per game. He was one of four players to average at least 21.5 points, five rebounds, 3.5 assists, one steal and two 3-pointers per game this season. The others were the three MVP finalists: Russell Westbrook, James Harden and Leonard.

JAZZ HOSTING, KIND OF

Utah is hosting a four-team summer league in Salt Lake City, but not at its facilities. Vivint SmartHome Arena is in the midst of a $125 million renovation, so summer league games are being played at the University of Utah. Teams are preparing at Utah's new practice facility that opened last year because the Jazz practice facility is also being remodeled.
