Years of service

Outgoing City Council members Katie Heck, left, and Oralia Corrales, both of whom have left the City Hall Chambers for other pursuits, reflect on their years at City Hall.

Outgoing councilwomen recall exciting roles

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Sometimes their unrelated political leanings — like their seating assignment at the huge City Council meeting table — were at opposing ends.

But in retrospect, outgoing City Councilwomen Oralia Corrales and Katie Heck are united in wanting what's best for Midland.

The duo's decision against serving a third term gave way to an all-male Council during the May 6 municipal elections.

Both women, two of only three to ever serve on the council, looked to their roles at City Hall as those of idea-generators.

"It was very exciting work. You could dream and visualize ... put the ideas in a package and sell them to the other council members," Mrs. Corrales noted.

Mrs. Heck, pointing out she felt like a "city grandmother" or "resident devil's advocate" at times, thought in terms of "what if or what then."

"I will tend to question things sharply. Somebody has to. The best advice I could give a new city council member is to not get tangled up in detail. They need a farther perspective and some long-term vision.

"Think through the ultimate goals and hire people to carry them out," Mrs. Heck advised.

It was Mrs. Heck who proved to be a strong ally in "articulating" Mrs. Corrales' goals to other city council members, the latter said.

"I would not have been as successful for eastside programs if it weren't for Katie's support," Mrs. Corrales said. "Katie is a woman who is very successful. She knows who she is and she doesn't feel threatened. She meets the other person head-on."

Mrs. Heck says she was was touched by Mrs. Corrales' "emotion" while on Council.

"I think they're going to miss Lillie's empathy for people. She is a remarkable woman.

"She's got both energy and vision ... and is one of the smartest, shrewdest and well-educated women with whom I've worked," Mrs. Heck said.

Mrs. Heck and Mrs. Corrales concur the most challenging decision faced by newcomer councilmen John Castro, Jose Cuevas Jr., and J.D. Faircloth concerns the 1989-90 tax rate.

The stinging defeat last September of three-fourths of the city's $15 million bond referendum foreshadowed a probable tax hike come August.

"It was a personal kick in the stomach because it so firmly illustrated the lack of confidence in Council," Mrs. Heck recalled.

"It was so disappointing working on those issues ... and then we absolutely fell down on the explanation to the public. The city is not attuned to public relations," she added.

Voters voted down the city's bond request to beef up streets, drainage and parks items, but allowed passage of a public safety communications package.

Mrs. Corrales, who represented Midland's southeastern quadrant, says the thumbs-down voters gave last September didn't erase the need from which the bond package evolved.

"There's so much of the infrastructure that needs to be replaced. Streets need to be paved ... parks need improving.

"We need new senior citizen centers and drainage is a tremendous problem," Mrs. Corrales said.

Mrs. Heck believes a tax hike also should be in order next August — the first one Council would have authorized in several years — "if for no other reason than to get our employees out of the hole we put them in."

China storms square; 500 may be dead

BEIJING (AP) — Soldiers stormed Tiananmen Square early Sunday and crushed a three-week student sit-in for democracy, shooting and beating demonstrators in clashes. A hospital doctor estimated at least 500 people died.

Later Sunday, about 100 troops fired machine guns at a group of people on the main street leading to the square at 10:30 a.m. (9:30 p.m. EDT Saturday), leaving 30 bodies in the road. One witness saw the troops fire into the backs of the people.

The helmeted troops violently cut a swath through the heart of Beijing to get to the the central square, rolling through barricades and surging masses on surrounding streets.

The crackdown came two weeks after the government declared martial law in an effort to end the student occupation of the square that began May 13 for a freer China with less corruption.

By 3:30 a.m. (2:30 p.m. EDT Saturday), soldiers and riot police surrounded Tiananmen, boxing off several thousand students and supporters inside.

A half hour later, lights were turned out. The square was in darkness.

"You have to give up all hope," students said over their loudspeaker at the monument. "You have to give your life to the movement."

But two hours later, weeping students holding each other's hands began filing out.

"There is no more time. We can't let any more blood flow," a student announced over their loudspeaker.

"We must leave."

Some sang the "Internationale," the communist anthem. Others gave a V-for-victory sign as they marched past troops.

About eight tanks then moved onto the square, and soldiers, their rifles raised, moved onto a monument to revolutionary heroes in the center. A complete armored division, with some 20,000 troops, headed into Beijing from the east.

A Beijing Youdian Hospital doctor, who spoke on condition of anonymity, estimated at least 500 people died in the clashes. He based the conclusion on reports from 10 hospitals.

"This is vicious behavior," the furious doctor said. "My government has gone insane."

"There are people who have been shot in the head, chest, stomach, legs and eyes," said a nurse at Beijing Union Medical College, which reported 24 dead and hundreds injured.

CBS said eight hospitals reported a total 150 dead and 325 wounded. CBS correspondent Richard Roth and a cameraman were taken away by soldiers, the network reported.

Ruhollah Khomeini

Ayatollah Khomeini dies at 86

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini died Sunday, 12 days after he underwent surgery for bleeding in his digestive system, the official Iranian news agency reported. He was 86.

"The leader of the Islamic revolution and founder of the Islamic Republic, Imam Khomeini, passed away at a Tehran Hospital," the Islamic Republic News Agency reported in an urgent dispatch.

IRNA said Khomeini's death "took place after a surgical operation to stop bleeding in his digestive system on Tuesday, 23rd May."

Tehran Radio, the state-run radio, also reported the ayatollah's death in its early morning broadcast, reported the British Broadcasting Corp., monitored in London.

Iran on Saturday had said Khomeini's health was deteriorating and urged the nation to pray for the country's spiritual leader, who underwent surgery last month for bleeding in his digestive system.

Iran's state-run radio and television, monitored in Nicosia, had said Khomeini's condition was declining but it gave no details.

Both carried a brief statement from Khomeini's office that said: "At 3:00 p.m. (7:30 a.m. EDT) on Saturday a complication arose in the imam's condition, which the doctors are trying to control. We urge the nation to pray for the imam's health, and hope that their prayers will be answered."

Khomeini is referred to by Iranians as the imam, or spiritual leader.

Earlier in the week, the television said a "slight cardiac complication" had arisen May 27, but that it was relieved the next day.

Iran's main opposition group, the Mujahedeen Khalq, or People's Holy Warriors, said last week that Khomeini suffered a heart attack May 27.

Tornadoes threaten area; Some hail damage noted

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Tornadoes made a seasonal West Texas appearance Saturday, as funnel clouds bowed from dark clouds and streaked across portion of Ward, Crane and possibly Midland, Ector and Upton counties.

No tornado damage was reported, but hail damage in Pecos and other parts of Reeves County was reported.

Crane County Chief Deputy Sheriff Wendell Taylor sighted a funnel cloud passing 200 to 300 feet over Crane, dipped, and "leaped back" into clouds.

"It came right over town," he said. "In fact, they had sirens going and warning people to get in their houses or take cover."

Another possible tornado hit the ground about 16 miles west of town and "very little hail" accompanied the clouds, Taylor said.

In the West Texas area, a "regular thunderstorm" in the Pecos area about 100 miles west of Midland Saturday afternoon evolved into a severe thunderstorm and then into isolated tornadic winds, as it moved eastwardly.

A "considerable amount" of golf-ball-size hail bombarded Pecos and damages homes, according to meteorologist Pat Tyra of the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Later, the Weather Service issued tornado warnings, as the thunderstorm moved eastwardly.

A tornado was reported in Ward and Upton County late Saturday afternoon.

Weather observers at Eagle's Nest Airport south of Midland International Airport report a tornado about 10 miles to the south.

At Midland International Airport, the lighting system switched over to an emergency-power generator following a power surge, apparently induced by lightning, at about 7 p.m., according to Ken Day, airport operations manager.

"Everything is operating normally," he said shortly after 7 p.m.

Legislative session 'temperate'

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Except for a few brief days of excitement this past week, the 71st Legislature was a temperate one, according to Midland's representative to the Texas House, Tom Craddick.

Craddick

Lawmakers managed to end their work at midnight Monday without approving any new taxes, and "what little cutting we needed to do, we could do without chopping up things in people's districts," said Craddick.

With a veto of higher education legislation, Gov. Bill Clements this past Wednesday ended suspense on whether the University of Texas of the Permian Basin should offer four years of classes.

The bill in question started as a proposal to expand classes at the University of Texas at Dallas, a move to create an "MIT of Texas" in anticipation of federal approval of Super-conducting Super Collider construction near Waxahachie.

But Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, attached an amendment calling for UT-Permian Basin expansion, provided that members of the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board and University of Texas Board of Regents agreed.

Another amendment would have allowed degree-granting status to Pan American University in Brownsville.

But the governor, a Dallas resident, said repeatedly he wanted a "clean" bill.

Clements would like the measure introduced again — without UTPB and Pan American University provisions — during a special session scheduled to begin June 20.

The governor has called lawmakers back to Austin to hammer out a compromise on worker's compensation reform. Failure to come to an agreement on that issue was Texas lawmakers' "major downfall," Craddick said.

Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa, has said he will attempt to have the UT-Permian Basin proposal re-attached to a new UT-Dallas bill.

But Clements has assured Craddick that won't happen, the Midland Republican said.

Craddick opposed the amendment out of concern for its effects on Midland College.

Perot development threatens warbler

AUSTIN (AP) — A development to be built in the Lake Austin watershed could result in an 80 percent to 100 percent loss of the threatened golden-cheeked warbler, a city environmentalist said.

Perot

The 333-acre tract that was approved this week by the City Council is planned by Hillwood Development Corp. of Irvine, a holding company of the Perot Group, headed by Dallas billionaire H. Ross Perot.

Plans call for a 3.49 million-square-foot mixed-use development that will include hotel, retail, office and research and development space as well as 670 apartment units.

The development was approved Thursday by a 4-2 vote.

Attorney John Joseph, lobbyist for the Perot Group, said the developer tried to be sensitive to environmental concerns about the development.

"We've set aside almost a third of the tract" as a preserve for the warblers, Joseph said. "We've agreed to do something that I don't think anyone else has done. That's water quality monitoring — monitoring predevelopment and postdevelopment to try to demonstrate the effect the development will have and the mitigation techniques we employ will have."

The developer also has agreed to limit the use of pesticides and herbicides in the area.

About 90 percent of the tract is believed to be suitable and occupied warbler habitat, according to a city report. The golden-cheeked warbler is not on the federal endangered species list, which would require federal approval of any development or construction near its habitat. The warbler, which nests only in Central Texas, is listed as a threatened species and is being considered for the endangered species list.

The development tract is surrounded by most of Travis County's warbler habitat, but encompasses probably less than 1 percent of the total warbler habitat in Central Texas, said Austan Librach, city environmental director.

The developer has set aside 90 acres for the preserve for the birds. But according to a May 23 report from city environmental specialist Charles Sexton, only about 40 to 60 acres of that land is suitable warbler habitat.

Because of the anticipated development adjacent to the preserve area, "it is questionable if the remaining 40 to 60 acres will harbor any warbler territories after final buildout," Sexton said in his report.

"I therefore estimate that the conceptual site plan most recently submitted by the applicant will result in an 80 to 100 percent loss of the warbler population on the tract."

City Councilman Max Nofziger voted against the project.

Justice: Rulings made schools like prisons

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Federal Judge William Wayne Justice, whose landmark rulings have changed the state's prisons and schools, said Saturday that recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions have made public schools more like prisons.

Justice, chief U.S. Judge of the Eastern District of Texas, said high court decisions have stripped public school students of many of their constitutional rights.

'High schools are now almost the functional equivalent of prisons, insofar as protections set forth in the Bill of Rights are concerned," Justice said during a conference of the Freedom of Information Foundation of Texas.

Beginning with a 1985 case from New Jersey, decisions by the Supreme Court have removed students' rights, Justice said. The New Jersey ruling held that students could be searched without probable cause. In subsequent cases, the high court has cut away at rights of free speech by allowing for censorship, Justice said.

In a 1988 case, the Supreme Court ruled in favor of a high school principal who censored, before publication, two student-written articles in the high school newspaper. The articles dealt with teen-age pregnancy and children of divorced parents.

The court said the principal's personal fear that a controversy might occur as a result of the articles, was enough to censor the articles, Justice said.

"What future do we have a right to expect for our society, when students are treated, during the most critical years of their lives, virtually as inmates?" Justice asked.

Justice said such "authoritarian" oppression kills the mission of education.

"Without effective education — as opposed to imposed homogeneity, vacuous conformity, or fatuous trust in the wisdom of the powers that be — our republic becomes undistinguishable from dreary toltalitarian societies that our high school students are warned of in in their civics class," he said.

Justice has served on the Eastern District bench in Tyler for more than 20 years and has handed down opinions that have led to prison reforms and desgregation. He said that removing students' rights will come back to haunt the nation.

"I predict that the law's application of prison-derived ground rules to free world schools will have palpable and immediate effects, because it severely limits the student's right to explore new ideas, and to discuss and debate issues," Juntice said.

Bell lays off 150 employees

FORT WORTH (AP) — Bell Helicopter Textron Inc. described its layoff of 150 employees as "general belt tightening" Saturday, but some workers say the cuts come too soon after funding cuts for the V-22 Osprey program were announced.

"They've never really informed us (of reasons for the cuts) except through euphemisms — downsizing the workforce and this that and the other," said J.J. Birchard, president of UAW Local 28. "I don't know if that's true or not. It seems to me that's all very coincidental that all this has taken place since the V-22 announcement."

The employees spent their last day at work Friday becoming the second group of workers laid off in the past three weeks. On May 19, Bell announced it had cut 180 people from its work force.

During the first cuts, Bell officials said the layoffs were "not tied to the elimination of the V-22 Osprey from the Department of Defense...budget. Bell's action was necessary as part of the usual cyclical workforce downsizing that routinely occurs in the aerospace industry."

The V-22 Osprey is an aircraft that takes off like a helicopter and can fly like a plane. Funding for the project was axed in the 1990-91 defense department budget prompting Bell to announce it would be forced to make massive layoffs.

But the company later said it would wait to see if efforts by Texas Congressmen could restore funding to the project.

Bell spokesman Carl Harris said this week's layoffs also were not linked to the tilt-rotor project.

Work of 71st Legislature affects all Texans' lives

Hearst News Service

AUSTIN — From a tank of gas to a plate of oysters, from speed traps to steroids, the work of the Texas Legislature will affect every citizen's daily life.

Even a casual observer of the 71st Legislature knows the representatives of the people went to Austin to wrestle with the monster topics of public life: AIDS, education finance and taxes.

Some people also may have paid attention to bills requiring motorcyclists to wear helmets, boat operators to refrain from becoming intoxicated and pickup drivers from carrying children under age 12 in the truck bed when traveling more than 35 miles per hour.

But largely unnoted among the hundreds of bills that passed both houses — and are waiting the governor's signature — are the bread-and-butter of government work, the bills that solve problems, redistribute costs, make some people happy and others miserable.

One of the least controversial and most expensive actions the Legislature took was to charge a new fee on petroleum products stored in underground tanks, which is to say most all the gasoline and diesel fuel sold in the state.

Gov. Bill Clements signed the bill Wednesday.

Just how much money the law will raise for the state is unclear. It initially kicks in to generate $125 million for a special fund, then coasts for a while until the government spends all but $25 million. Then it kicks in again.

Scott Fisher, of the Texas Oil Marketers Association, said he expects the fee to raise $75 million the first year. The money is to pay for the cleanup of soil contaminated by leaky underground storage tanks such as those used at filling stations.

If you hear your local representatives saying they came back from Austin without raising taxes, they're not fibbing. Well, at least not technically.

The cleanup money comes from a fee collected when a tank truck pulls up to the refinery or to a pipe rack to fill up. If the driver paid a half-cent per gallon, that would be a tax.

The way the law is written, the driver will pay $25 for 2,501 to 5,000 gallons, $37.50 for 5,001 to 8,000 gallons and so on. Because it's based on the capacity of the truck, not on the gallons sold, it's a fee, the Legislature's lawyers say.

Utilities and railroads don't have to pay it. They asked to be exempted and are not eligible for the cleanup fund.

Think fees the next time you shell out a few bucks for a plate of oysters. The Legislature passed a $1 per barrel fee on oysters that will raise $411,000. One-half the money will go to the Department of Health to research organisms that kill oysters.

The other half will flow to the Parks and Wildlife Department to enforce oystering laws. A barrel of oysters is three bushels.

Nightcaps in some hotel rooms will no longer require a call to room service. The Legislature voted to legalize "mini-bars" in rooms in hotels that have a liquor license. A mini-bar is a locked cabinet or refrigerator stocked with one- or two-ounce bottles of liquor or 12-ounce bottles of wine.

The government, of course, gets its cut, expecting to net $171,000 from new permit fees.

The big money for new fees will be generated by a requirement for new commercial drivers. The state adopted the new requirements because the federal government said it would stop getting federal highway funds if it didn't.

The State Comptroller estimates the new license fees will pump $20 million into the general fund.

New license or not, better slow down in towns like Patton Village that have a reputation of operating speed traps.

The Legislature didn't outlaw local crackdowns, but it did limit the amount of revenue a municipality could generate from such action to 30 percent of its budget. After that, all but $1 would flow to the state.

Young drivers may have to pay more for drivers training courses. Legislation was passed that would allow a school district to collect its full costs of providing drivers training courses.

Three residents win verdict in toxic waste dumping case

BAYTOWN (AP) — Three area residents' long battle with the Exxon Corp. ended when a jury awarded them $934,500 in damages after deciding that the company was negligent in dumping toxic wastes at a landfill near their homes.

The verdict Friday against Exxon, a butane products company and the operators of a waste disposal site ended a month-long trial in State District Judge Shearn Smith's court. Most of the damages went against Exxon and the operators of Liberty Waste Disposal Site.

Gloria Chaplin, Fannie Cook and Eva Fontenot, residents of Highlands, an unincorporated community northwest of Baytown, filed their lawsuit in 1984. They complained that Exxon, Liberty Waste Disposal Site's largest client, failed to disclose to the state the hazardous nature of wastes dumped at the landfill near Baytown in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

Jurors ruled that Exxon concealed or misrepresented the wastes' contents and that conditions at the dump created a nuisance, causing physical problems, anxiety for neighbors and a decline in the value of real estate.

Punitive damages amounted to $500,000 against Exxon, and $300,000 against Liberty and its operators.

Half of the $134,500 in actual damages were attributed to Exxon; 40 percent to the dump and its operator C.J. Joiner and C.J. Joiner Enterprises Inc.; and 10 percent to Neches Butane Products Co., a landfill client.

Lubrizol Co., another landfill client, was assessed no liability.

Ms. Chaplin and Ms. Fontenot each were awarded $379,000 in damages, while Ms. Cook was awarded $176,500.

Exxon's lawyers released a statement expressing "disappointment" with the verdict. They noted that Smith must still make a ruling to determine whether the verdict supports a judgment against the company.

In 1987, a federal court said the homeowners' claims were more suited to a state court and dismissed numerous other chemical companies as defendants. About 200 people have similar claims pending against Exxon and the dump's owners.

Conservation urged as Edwards Aquifer level continues to drop

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Heavily dependent on water for agriculture, industry and tourism, the area is stepping up conservation efforts as concern mounts about the rapidly declining level of the Edwards Aquifer.

Steve Shultz, vice president of urban affairs for the San Antonio Chamber of Commerce, said businessmen are saying: "We're in trouble. Here it is the beginning of summer; what can I do to reduce water consumption?"

The Edwards Aquifer, a major underground reservoir supporting 1.3 million Texans from Austin west through San Antonio, has dropped four consecutive weeks.

Poor rainfall and increasing demand from additional development has resulted in a one-foot-per-day drain on the water supply since mid-May.

On Friday, the Edwards Underground Water District recorded a water level of 632.2 feet above sea level.

At the current rate of decline, the aquifer is expected to hit the 1956 historic low of 612 feet, the Austin American-Statesman reported.

Although the Austin area has received higher than normal rainfalls this spring, low precipitation to the south and west has not provided enough water to regenerate the southern branch of the aquifer.

The declining level of the aquifer, which is the main water supply for metropolitan San Antonio and feeds major springs in New Braunfels and San Marcos, has prompted pleas for water conservation.

San Marcos Mayor Kathy Morris urged residents Friday to reduce water consumption by 15 percent of their average daily use.

New Braunfels Mayor Doug Miller said Friday he would ask his City Council to adopt a water conservation law similar to those already in place in San Antonio and San Marcos.

Earlier in the week, on his last day in office, San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros stressed conservation. Mayor Lila Cockrell mentioned it her first day in office and at a meeting Friday of the Greater Austin-San Antonio Corridor Council.

The Edwards district is developing conservation rules that would apply to all large water users in Bexar, Comal and Hays counties. But those rules won't be enforced until next year, according to Ken Ikels of New Braunfels, Edwards district board chairman.

As drought conditions loom, San Antonio City Hall is experiencing a flood of callers reporting water waste by businesses or neighbors.

City officials say they are glad for the concern but are politely reminding the public that a 24-hour hotline was set up to help promote conservation at city facilities.

STATE IN BRIEF

Four teens killed on last day of school

LANCASTER (AP) — Four high school students celebrating the end of classes were killed Friday when their car skidded into a concrete wall on a notorious hairpin turn on a country road just south of this Dallas suburb.

Among the victims was a senior who was to have graduated Saturday, a tennis star and two freshmen cheerleaders. All attended Lancaster High School.

The deaths cast a pall on the eve of graduation as classmates mourned the four, including Mark McClellan, 18, the driver of the 1989 Mustang GT, which friends said he'd received a couple of months ago as a graduation present.

Also killed in the accident were Clint Lynch, 17, a junior district champion tennis player, and freshman cheerleaders Roxanna K. McBride and Andrea D. McBrannon, both 15.

McClellan and Lynch, who was riding in the front seat, were dead at the scene about 3:30 p.m. Miss McBride died at 4:25 p.m. at Methodist Medical Center in Dallas, and Miss McBrannon died at 5:30 p.m. at Midway Park Hospital in Lancaster.

Woman rescued from boat

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — A 56-year-old woman whose husband died while the two drifted for two days on their overturned boat in the Gulf of Mexico says her urge to survive was fueled by the need for somebody to tell her kids what happened.

"I decided I was going to live because I couldn't stand having my kids without any parents, someone had to tell them what happened," Minnie Chaisson said Friday from her hospital bed.

The Coast Guard rescued Mrs. Chaisson, 56, Thursday evening after boaters spotted the capsized craft and radioed authorities.

Mrs. Chaisson was listed in stable condition early Saturday with exposure-related ailments at Valley Regional Medical Center in Brownsville, hospital administrator Joe Lacher said.

The Coast Guard has been unable to find the body of her husband, 58-year-old Albert Chaisson, a longtime shrimper.

The couple started out on a fishing expedition in the Gulf of Mexico Tuesday, their first extended trip on their new 28-foot boat, "Super Coon."

"We were trying to see if the boat was seaworthy," Mrs. Chaisson said from her hospital bed, her body swollen, sunburned and covered with fish bites.

Airlines agree to plan

AUSTIN (AP) — Five airlines at Robert Mueller Municipal Airport say they will help fund a new airport through increased landing and terminal rental fees if needed.

City and airline officials agreed May 13 to a plan backing the first phase of the airport at Manor with higher fees at the existing airport if it becomes necessary to help pay off the initial bond sale of the $555 million project.

Southwest, American, Delta, USAir and Northwest airlines told Mayor Lee Cooke Friday they intend to sign the agreement. Officials at TWA have also indicated that they likely will sign as well, Cooke said.

The six represent more than 75 percent of the passenger traffic at Mueller.

The city needed commitments from only four of the largest carriers to move ahead with its plans to sell $30 million in revenue bonds this fall to buy a 3,460-acre site for the new airport. The agreement stipulates that the sale take place no later than August or September.

The notifications provided an indication for the first time of how much support the city would get from airlines the airport project moves ahead.

MCI may move to Texas

PLANO (AP) — The north Dallas suburbs may soon benefit from another large corporate relocation if a reported move by MCI Communications Corp. is carried out.

The Plano Star-Courier reported Saturday that the Washington, D.C.-based firm may move up to 4,000 employees from a Virginia division to Richardson.

Jerry Hogan, vice president of MCI Telecommunications Corp. in Richardson, said a news conference concerning MCI and the north Dallas suburb would take place Thursday at Richardson City Hall.

"That's all I can say until Thursday," Hogan said, declining further comment.

"I'll say that I'm smiling, but announcements on the business expansion or relocation...are going to come from the company source," Richardson Mayor Charles Spann told the Star-Courier.

Three reindicted in case

HOUSTON (AP) — Three of four people originally charged in April with taking part in an alleged bribery scheme in the North Forest Independent School District have been reindicted by a Harris County grand jury.

Earlier this week, a state district judge dismissed the original indictments in the case, saying the grand jury that returned those charges was not legally in session.

But new indictments were returned Friday against former North Forest trustee Emma L. Horn; her husband, Ambus Horn; and Curtis McKelvey, the district's former insurance agent.

STORMS

As lighting still was flashing across the sky, the air-field lights went out briefly about 10 p.m.

"We lost the air-field lights for about 30 seconds," Day said, "and everything kicked back in."

At the time of the brief blackout, a Southwest Airlines flight was about 25 miles from the airport but experienced no problems in landing.

The air-field lighting system is being equipped with an emergency-power generating system, Day said.

KMID-TV and KTPX-TV stations, which are midway between Midland and Odessa, temporarily were off the air Saturday night.

Throughout the evening, the National Weather Service had multi-reports of tornado-like sightings and wall clouds — possible preludes to tornados.

Late Saturday night, the thunderstorm had moved to Martin and Glasscock counties.

"It's been an active evening," said Tyra.

In Stanton, Martin County Sheriff's Dispatcher Tommy Dill reported "lots of rain and a whole lot of lightning but so far no hail."

Dill also reported an oil-field tank-battery fire south of Lenorah and several grass fires, including on the Sale Ranch, apparently set off by lighting. The Lenorah and Martin County Volunteer Fire Department dispatched fire engines to extinguish the fires, he said.

Upton County Sheriff's Dispatcher Grace Harris said Upton County experienced some thunder and lightning.

"In town, we got absolutely nothing, not even a sprinkle," she said.

But hail hit about 18 miles north of Rankin, Mrs. Harris said. And a range fire, possibly ignited by lightning, midway between Midland and Rankin, was extinguished by rainfall before fire-fighting units arrived at the grass-fire, she said.

"We think the rain put it out," she said.

A possible tornado was reported east of Goldsmith in Ector County.

Hail struck Odessa, as it did Midland.

Golf-ball-size hail was reported briefly in the Green Tree Country Club area northwest of downtown Midland.

10-year-old girl killed in one-car accident

From Staff Reports

A 10-year-old Midland girl, Amanda Leigh "Mandy" Foster, was killed and her mother and three brothers were injured Friday night in a one-car mishap midway between Midland and Garden City about 8:55 p.m. Friday night.

The girl was fatally injured after the four-door 1984 Toyota wagon her mother was driving went into a broadside skid on Texas Highway 158, overturned 2½ times and landed upside down, according to a spokesman for the Texas Department of Public Safety in Midland.

The injured, who were treated at Midland Memorial Hospital and released, were:

- The 32-year-old mother, Lisa Foster, who suffered neck and back injuries.
- Joshua "Seth" Foster, 11, who suffered abrasions.
- Isaiah Foster, 2, who suffered minor lacerations.
- Jacob "Jake" Foster, 5, who suffered abrasions and lacerations.

Midland County Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe pronounced the Foster girl dead.

HOUSE

He plans to introduce a resolution during the special session calling for a coordinating board study of the expansion, but even should that come to pass, Craddick was unsure if he could offer support in the final analysis.

One fear is its effects on the bonded indebtedness that Permian Basin community colleges already have incurred, he said. If a four-year UTPB hurts junior college enrollment, college district taxpayers could be left holding the bag.

"At this point, the community colleges are so strong and doing such a good job that I hate to see them damaged," said Craddick.

Should the expansion happen at all, "I want it done right," he said.

Surveying the session as a whole, Craddick thought major victories came in "bringing up to a higher standard" funding areas that had lost ground in the past.

Legislators approved an increase from $715 to $1,104 in the Medicaid cap for people that are ineligible for nursing home care.

In addition, higher education faculty salaries will increase 8 percent over the next two years, and state employees will see salary increases and additional state help in paying their insurance premiums.

Sports-minded Midlanders may be interested in one Craddick bill that helps local governments like the city and school district work together to construct a new sport facility, possibly including a new stadium.

"None of the entities by themselves can afford to finance it ... but if they pool their resources, maybe they can get it done without using tax revenues," he said.

Craddick's bill allows creation of a sports facility district that has the power to issue revenue bonds, an idea that larger cities have found useful, he said.

Payment for construction would come from rent money charged for use of the facility, he said.

Craddick during the session served as chairman of the new House Republican Caucus which ushered two positions proposals on worker's compensation and prison reform before the public. Starting the session with 57 members, the Caucus ended with 59 after two Houston special elections turned two districts from Democratic to Republican hands.

Oil and gas-related legislation took a low profile during the session, as the industry "wasn't a target, pro or con," said Craddick.

The one major piece of legislation that emerged on the energy front would offer tax breaks to stimulate tertiary recovery efforts, he said.

Midland's other representative to the Legislature, Sen. Bill Sims, a San Angelo Democrat, attempted to present another measure that would have offered $14 million in tax breaks over the next two years to stimulate discovery wells.

But the measure, which had the endorsement of Texas Railroad Commission Chairman Kent Hance, died in committee, Sims said.

Local bills Sims sponsored will create underground water districts in Reagan and Crockett counties.

Citing "so much oil production" in the two counties, the senator said "they do have good underground water, and we want to make sure we keep it pure."

Other Sims bills took a rural and agricultural bent. One measure reauthorized existence of the Texas Animal Health Commission, while another would create a Texas Rural Economic Development Fund.

The senator also sponsored legislation that called for a feasibility study into creation of a Rural Economic Development Commission within the Texas Department of Commerce.

Both Sims and Craddick cited a compromise that reathorizes existence of the Texas Department of Agriculture as a major achievement.

While the legislation keeps the TDA commissioner an elected official, it calls for creation of a new board to oversee pesticide regulation.

Pesticide regulations imposed by TDA Commissioner Jim Hightower were the source of much criticism from farm and ranch interests.

Students here angered, not surprised

HOUSTON (AP) — Chinese students who gathered outside the Chinese consulate's office Saturday said they were angered but not surprised by reports that troops had opened fire on crowds in Beijing, killing scores and injuring hundreds more.

About 30 Chinese nationals — most of them students living in Houston — assembled outside the consulate's office to denounce violence that erupted in Beijing's Tiananmen Square and show support for the protesting students there.

About 5 p.m., a sign was posted at the consulate entrance that announced the cancellation of concert there Saturday night. The students lingering outside applauded. Earlier, students expressed frustration the consulate might be entertaining guests while their nation's capital was in turmoil.

Some laid signs on the sidewalk in front of the office's doors that said "Punish the killers," and "Don't kill." Another sign said: "The blood will not be shed for nothing."

A few people knocked on the building's locked doors, but there was no answer. Chinese Consulate Yao Xian Ni and other Chinese officials live in the building.

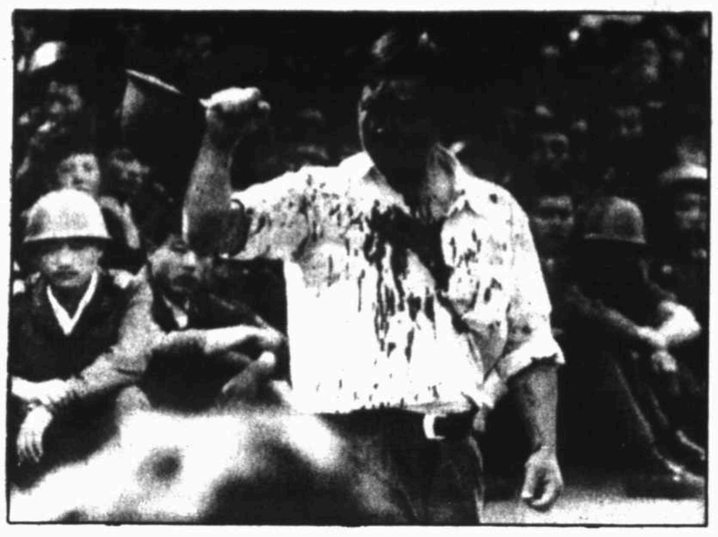

"We're very angry about the things that have happened," said 24-year-old Ping Wei, a student at Rice University. "We're hoping we can do something to help them, but it is so far away."

Ms. Wei and other Chinese students said they were not necessarily surprised by the government's actions.

"I don't think this will end," she said. "The students will become angrier. I hope it will have a good end, that the students will win."

The students who gathered outside the consulate's office were peaceful, and many had come to exchange information gleaned from news reports.

"The only thing they (Chinese officials) know how to do it to oppress people," said one student who did not want to give his name because he wanted to protect relatives still living in China.

A man smeared with blood carries a helmet as he continues to lead anti-government protests among the crowds at Beijing's Tiananmen Square. Troopers, who clashed with student demonstrators Saturday near the Great Hall of the People, sit in the background.

CHINA

State-run radio and television acknowledged some deaths without giving numbers. It said: "It was necessary to undertake that action to save lives and property."

Government-run television said more than 1,000 soldiers were injured.

Armored personnel carriers had first entered the square at 4:30 a.m., and troops then began moving slowly toward several thousand students clustered around the monument.

At the same time, troops shot into crowds on the outskirts of the square. One man was shot in the back in Tiananmen, another in the head.

Ambulances and bicycle pedicabs hauled away the wounded.

An official loudspeaker on the square announced troops were moving in to clear the area.

At that point, Ho Te-chien, a Taiwanese singer who defected to China in 1983 and has been active in the student movement, urged the students to leave. "We're not afraid to die, but we've already lost too much blood," he said over a student loudspeaker.

After a verbal vote, the students agreed to depart. "If we don't leave now, they're going to fire on us. They just don't care," said one 22-year-old protester.

NBC News reported that a 33-foot-high replica of the Statue of Liberty, set up by students last week, was torn down.

The main streets leading to the Tiananmen, China's symbolic political center, were sealed. Thousands fled from the square, where hundreds of thousands of people had gathered to support students in the third week of a sit-in.

The assault came two weeks after Premier Li Peng declared martial law in Beijing and sent troops to the city. Hundreds of thousands of residents responded by blocking roads with trucks and their bodies.

In Kennebenkport, Me., President Bush said he deplored the action of Chinese troops.

"We have been urging and continue to urge nonviolence, restraint and dialogue. Tragically, another course has been chosen. Again, I urge a return to non-violent means for dealing with the current situation," he said.

The standoff between troops and protesters had been tense but largely peaceful for weeks, with soldiers seemingly reluctant or unable to move against the crowds until the first widespread violence broke out Saturday afternoon.

A doctor from the Fuxing Hospital in western Beijing, where troops began firing on people in the street, said the hospital had taken in 15 dead and so many wounded they had to be put in garages.

WOMEN

The city's 900-person work force has not had a raise in five years and only last year had earning levels reinstated to the point at which they were prior to a pay cut three years ago, city officials have said.

"None of the other taxing entities have ever asked their employees to take a cut," Mrs. Heck added.

Perhaps the women — like their male counterparts on the council — weren't pleased with decisions that negatively affected the citizens of Midland.

There were, however, some proud moments for the women while they served.

Helping create the Midland Centennial Plan and implementing the Adopt-a-Park program are two items of endearment to Mrs. Heck, she said.

Her experience on the city's Planning and Zoning Commission prior to her election to an at-large seat four years ago was an asset to the creation of the sweeping master plan which outlines and suggests the direction of growth to which Midland should adhere in the coming years.

"That was a massive effort. We felt the need so drastically during the boom," she recalled of the "nightmare" planning sessions in the early 1980s.

"There were 40 to 60 planning and zoning items at each meeting."

Allowing "there is not the staff nor interest" in her Adopt-a-Park volunteer landscaping project, Mrs. Heck said, "I would love to see Midland more blooming."

But calling her the "Lady Bird Johnson of Midland" will only make Mrs. Heck — a staunch Republican member of the late 1940s Ivy League exodus to the South and Rep. Tom Craddick's veteran campaign treasurer — roll her eyes and grimace.

Vitalizing the southeastern side of Midland has been one of Mrs. Corrales' successful campaigns since her election four years ago.

It was she who traveled to Washington D.C. to plead with U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith and Sen. Phil Gramm for the continuation of federal highway funding needed to complete the sweeping renovation of Lamesa Road.

She also was instrumental in cementing plans for the Neighborhood Reinvestment Program which offers low-income families reasonably priced loans with which homes are refurbished.

"From the very beginning, we knew we needed to make a difference in the eastside. I wanted to improve our area of the community," the native Midlander said.

There are some facets of serving on the council Mrs. Corrales and Mrs. Heck won't miss, they said.

The "regularness and restrictions" of serving on the council were two things that led to Mrs. Heck's decision against running for a third term.

Husband Bill Heck is slowly retiring and Mrs. Heck found it hard to juggle family commitments with those of municipal government, she explained.

"Most of the time though it was completely satsifying. I liked being a part of the real world.

"I'll miss the comraderie. It was interesting and inspiring to work with the people who work for the city. They have that kind of spirit and dedication you usually only see in a volunteer."

Mrs. Corrales' won't miss the stress inflicted upon her or her family.

"There was a tremendous amount of pressure fron many groups in the community. The fact of the matter is you have only so much money to work with.

Controversial votes prompted members of the community to confront her husband when they saw him in public, she recalls.

"That's not fair. He would have to listen whether he wanted to or not," she said and attributes a 50 percent decline in business at her insurance firm to public disagreement with some of her actions while on the council.

Taxpayers in her district, Mrs. Corrales' said, sometimes had a hard time understanding the city didn't have unlimited funds from which to draw to improve certain conditions.

The former District 2 City Councilwoman was the first single member district representative elected to serve that quadrant after minority rights' groups were successful in slashing Council's total at-large system.

"Our area of the community has not had the experience of having a fulltime representative," Mrs. Corrales pointed out.

"The people who live in the area are frustrated and they don't understand the red tape of it all.

"You're only one vote."

While Mrs. Heck no longer is a "vote," Mrs. Corrales is once again after a "surprising" write-in campaign May 6 landed her the District 2 seat on the Midland County Hospital District Board of Directors.

The severe back and knee problems and corresponding surgeries she's undergone probably were the catalyst for her new office in the hospital district, she mused.

"Voters probably thought I was there (in the hospital) so much, they might as well give me an office there," she said after the May 6 election.

Mrs. Corrales' ideas on health care are already starting to flow.

She talks of potential solutions to indigent care problems such as more satellite clinics for the needy and subsidized substance abuse treatment for high prison-risks in Midland County.

Although Mrs. Corrales' is wearing out her Midland County Library card these days — five books read a week — and the road to her medical recovery may be three years long, she believes she will remain politically involved.

"Even laying down, you still have a phone. That's a tremendous tool," she claimed chuckling.

Meanwhile at the Heck home, Mrs. Heck continues tracing her Prussian-Irish roots, plans on some extra gardening duty and hopes to improve that 51 she has shot on nine holes of golf. And when the new City Council convenes June 13, Mrs. Heck will be basking in some Florida sunshine.

There's a chance she'll return to City Hall in some capacity, but for now the flora in her front yard will receive key attention.

KHOMEINI

The statement by the Iraq-based group said the heart attack came five days after he underwent surgery on the duodenum, a part of the small intestine close to the stomach. The Mujahedeen's claim could not be independently confirmed.

Khomeini had been reported ailing since he suffered a heart attack in 1986. Since then he was rarely seen outside his home in the north Tehran suburb of Jamaran.

But his hospitalization heightened already intense speculation about who will succeed Khomeini as leader of the theocratic state.

Political turmoil has gripped the country since Khomeini launched a radical resurgence in February with his death decree against British author Salman Rushdie for allegedly blaspheming against Islam in his novel, "The Satanic Verses."

A purge of so-called moderates who apparently favored rebuilding ties with the West followed as the 10-year-old Islamic regime withdrew into its traditional isolationist stance.

Khomeini in March ousted his designated successor, Ayatollah Hussein Ali Montazeri, 64, who had openly criticized the regime's shortcomings, and then appointed a 20-member committee to review the succession.

But in the absence of a single personality who could match the patriarch's political and revolutionary authority, there was widespread speculation that Iran may be ruled by a collective leadership in the post-Khomeini era.

Khomeini was born Sept. 23, 1902, the son of a religious leader from a village southwest of Tehran. After a formal Islamic education he taught for years at Qom, the center of Shiite learning in Iran.

His stern morality made him a focus for opposition to the monarchy in Iran. He spent years in exile after he was banished in November 1964, first in Turkey, then in Iraq, where he settled in the Shiite shrine city of Najaf. He later moved on to France.

Khomeini emerged in 1978 as the spiritual leader of a burgeoning revolution against the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi that was organized through Iran's Shiite clergymen and their followers.

He returned to Tehran in February 1979 after the Shah had fled the country and Khomeini became the supreme head of Iran's Islamic revolution for life.

Khomeini often spoke out against the "world-devouring" governments — the United States and the Soviet Union.

Bush asked to clarify church school stand

NEW YORK (AP) — Chieftains of Roman Catholic education are pressing President Bush to clear up — publicly — whether he wants parents allowed to put some of their taxes into schooling they choose for their children.

Bush

That, essentially, would be the effect of tuition tax credits for parents of pupils in church and other non-public schools.

It's a longtime explosive political issue on which the "education president," as Bush says he aspires to be, has become subtly enmeshed and on which Catholic educators want straight answers.

"We assume a meeting with him is going to come through," says Sister Catherine McNamee, president of the National Catholic Educational Association. "We're still waiting."

She and other Catholic educational leaders, plus 11 archbishops who co-signed a letter from Cardinal Joseph Bernardin of Chicago, have asked Bush for a meeting June 9 to clarify his position.

He indicated support for tuition tax credits in his campaign. But a comment last March 29 "gave the impression he's no longer interested in it," Sister McNamee said in a telephone interview.

"We're still willing to give him the benefit of the doubt," she said, but want him to set the record straight, in a public way.

Bernardin, in his letter signed by other prelates, suggested Bush had a debt to Catholics since, because of his campaign commitments, "Catholics played a significant role in your successful election bid."

"The question of parental choice in education is a vital and crucial issue in our nation today," he told Bush, and church educators want him to "clarify misconceptions and to address questions or misgivings you might have."

In his March comments, Bush said he was "intrigued with the concept of tuition tax credits" but that it is "the obligation of all taxpayers to support a public education system."

He said parents of non-public school students have a right "to shell out, in addition to the tax money, tuition money but that they should not get a break for that."

Bush's press secretary subsequently qualified the comments, saying Bush has not shifted his commitments, but current budget constraints prevent considering tuition tax credits.

Despite the elaborations, Bush's comments have "cast a shadow of confusion on our previous perceptions," says Sister Anne Leonard, vice president of educational administrators of the NEA.

In her letter to Bush, jointly signed by other Catholic education officials and school superintendents in major cities, she said the meeting is needed to dispel confusion.

"We are not asking you or the federal government to subsidize our religion," she said. "We do not want that.

"We do believe firmly that parents have a constitutional right to choose the educational milieu for their children without penalty" and "to benefit directly from their educational tax dollars."

Catholicism's vast educational enterprise, serving 7.6 million students at all levels, includes 9,000 elementary and secondary schools.

Most of them, especially in urban areas, enroll both Catholics and children of varied religions. Many are too poor to pay, but tuitions of those who can and supplementary contributions pay the multibillion dollar costs.

"Parents should be able to choose the kind of education and schools they want for their children," Sister McNamee said in a telephone interview, but many now can't because it "means paying double" — school taxes and tuition.

"Many families now do not have a real choice in schools for their children because they can't afford that double burden."

Episcopalians upset over woman bishop

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Conservative Episcopalians reacting to the election of the first woman bishop have created a new association to "transform" their denomination.

Nearly 2,000 people attended the founding meeting of the Episcopal Synod of America Friday. The delegates adopted a constitution Friday and planned to end their meeting Saturday.

The dissident church members said they were displeased with loosening strictures on marriage, tolerance of homosexuality, feminist theology, revisions of liturgical language to be gender-inclusive and slackening standards of personal morality in the Episcopal Church.

"If we remain a church within the church, our goal isn't to be a small cell, but to be a witness to hopefully transform our religion," said Bishop David Schofield of the Episcopal Diocese of San Joaquin in Fresno, Calif.

But members of the new church said they do not intend to break with the nearly 2.5 million-member Episcopal Church, which has lost about a quarter of its members since doctrinal controversies reached their peak in the mid-1970s. The church is one of 27 branches of the 70 million-member Anglican Communion worldwide.

Bishop Clarence Pope of Fort Worth was elected president of the new association. He said the Episcopal Church's laws do not prevent the traditionalists from forming a voluntary association, and he called for the acceptance of the new organization as a way for traditionalists to stay within the church.

"If we remain a church within the church, our goal isn't to be a small cell, but to be a witness to hopefully transform our religion."

— Bishop David Schofield

Twenty-one other Episcopal bishops, 16 of them retired, have endorsed the synod.

Leaders of the Fort Worth-based Evangelical and Catholic Mission, a traditionalist group, called the synod after the Rev. Barbara Harris was consecrated as the first female Episcopal bishop last year in Massachusetts.

"This year we will have women bishops, next year they'll delete a book or two from the New Testament," said Oswald Clark, a lay member of the General Synod Church of the Church of England. "The substance of the question remains the same: On what ground do you stand?"

The new synod passed a resolution recommending usage of the 1928 Book of Common Prayer, which is discouraged by the church, alongside the 1979 revision.

Church council president calls for united church

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The president of the National Council of Churches told Presbyterians at a bicentennial symposium that a major goal is to create one Christian church that cares about the whole world.

"Our highest allegiance is not to one denomination or one nation," the Rev. Patricia McClurg said Friday at a symposium on the future preceding Tuesday's start of the 201st General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). "When we are doing our work we see ourselves as part of one church. The pledge is to one God and savior."

She acknowledged that U.S. Presbyterian leaders are worried today that they are still losing members and influence in the United States, "and we do need to work on it with all due seriousness and vigor."

But worldwide, she added, "the Presbyterian Church is on fire with church growth in Korea and Africa, on fire with its spiritual and public witness in Taiwan. Our church daily is the difference between life and death to millions of people across this planet Earth."

The church, which has seen its membership decline from 4 million to nearly 3 million since 1970, held its first General Assembly in Philadelphia in 1789.

The assembly starting Tuesday will involve 622 voting delegates and an estimated 10,000 participants and observers.

Among the items on the agenda for the voting delegates is the selection of a new church moderator, or head.

Catholic high school recalls its yearbooks

CLEVELAND (AP) — The student yearbook at a Catholic high school was recalled after officials discovered the books contained sexual innuendo and insults directed at faculty members.

Seniors at St. Ignatius High School were told unless they returned their yearbooks, they could not go to graduation ceremonies Sunday, while underclassmen were told they could not advance to the next grade if they failed to return the books, the Rev. Robert Welsh, school president, said Friday.

Thirty-eight of the 800 books printed remained unaccounted for Friday night, Welsh said.

"There were unacceptable captions and unacceptable stories," Welsh said. "There were sexual references and there was also bad taste and rather insulting remarks to the faculty."

Welsh said six of eight seniors who worked on the yearbooks apologized to faculty and staff Friday afternoon. Some parents accompanied the students, he said.

"I would say the faculty accepted the apology. As a Catholic school we feel we are called to forgive those who ask for forgiveness," Welsh said.

He said no disciplinary action would be taken against the six students.

The Plain Dealer reported today the captions were apparently written after the yearbook's adviser had been injured in a car accident.

The yearbook staffers later showed the adviser phony page proofs, which the teacher approved, then the students sent the real pages to the publisher, the newspaper said.

Abortion protesters sentenced to six months in jail

AUSTIN (AP) — A juror on a Travis County panel that sentenced six of seven protesters each to six months in jail and a $1,000 fine says the jury felt the demonstrators "were trying to deprive people of making a legal choice."

The jury assessed the penalties Friday after finding the seven protesters guilty of criminal trespassing. The sentences were the stiffest a Travis County jury has assessed in trials stemming from a recent series of sit-ins outside Austin abortion clinics.

The seventh defendant, Edith Werchan, 50, of Austin, was fined $1,000, but got 120 days in jail.

Two jurors said they suggested a lighter sentence to Werchan in part because she seemed more "up front" about her affiliation with Austin Rescue, the anti-abortion group that staged the protest.

Others "were just not being open" about the organization, Kirk Speary said. He said the jury agreed seeking abortions is a legal choice.

The defendants were arrested during a Feb. 18 sit-in at The Ladies Center.

Jurors recommended the sentences for Rodney Berry, 36, of Kyle; Linda Cascarello, 46, of Austin; Russell Crocker, 28, of Wickett, Texas; Jimmie Duvall, 43, of San Marcos; Julie Hertenberger, 37, of Austin; and Craig Mooney, 32, of Austin.

The protesters said they would not pay the fine.

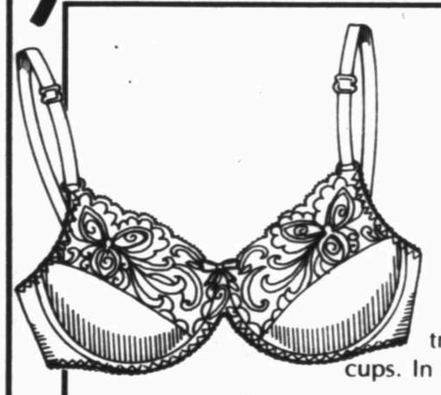

Their attorney, Bob Phillips of Georgetown, had asked jurors to consider a sentence of 24 hours in jail or a weekend at most. Assistant County Attorneys Mark Lane and Cynthia Bell urged a $1,000 fine, but made no recommendation on jail time.

Austin Rescue leaders said the stiff sentences would not discourage future sit-ins.

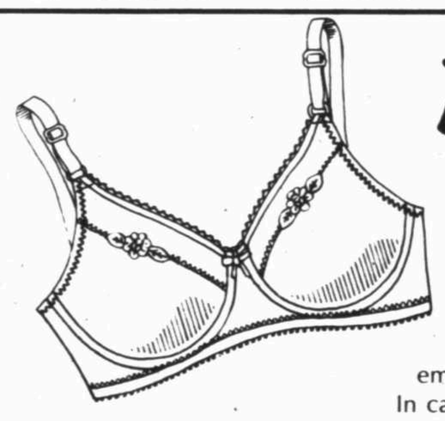

"I think it's a reminder of the fact that when you defend little children in our culture you go to jail," said Austin Rescue spokesman Rex Moses.

Democrats fearful of next move in House 'ethics war'

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — One congressman compares the atmosphere in the House these days to the bloody battlefields of World War I "where sticking your head out of the trench might get it shot at." Another calls up the memory of dirty tricks used by the Nixon White House to wage political warfare.

An "evil wind" is blowing, says a Democratic chairman, Jack Brooks of Texas. A Republican, Vin Weber of Minnesota, talks of the outbreak of "ethics war." Jim Wright, in shedding the speakership, said "mindless cannibalism" had been let loose.

Last week, House members found that the political ground rules seemed to be shifting. The underlying habits of accommodation and accord were giving way to a cut-throat partisanship so intense it worried some.

Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, a former ethics committee chairman, said if the new mood persists "the end result will be to destroy this institution as we know it today."

Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., said the Republicans should "stop the war, if it's that, because the major concern we ought all to have at this point is the institution."

What was new was the prospect of a siege of retribution in the House: the use of ethics charges as a political tool.

That's not the tradition. In the past, when the House censured members for violating the rules, it did so as an institution acting as a whole against the transgressions of an individual.

Democrats say they see the hand of newly installed Republican Whip Newt Gingrich of Georgia, Wright's tormentor, behind the events which put them in disarray last week. Some suspected they were witness to, and victims of, a campaign that had its inspiration outside the House.

"The fear is that it is in the hands of the Lee Atwaters of the world," said Leon Panetta, D-Calif. "That's the concern."

Atwater, an aggressive political infighter, was a key strategist in President Bush's campaign last year. Bush installed him as Republican national chairman and Atwater has set out to end 35 years of Democratic domination of the House.

Republicans scoff at the cries of foul play. Mickey Edwards of Oklahoma said in an interview that if there is poison in the air its source was the heavy-handed tactics by Wright as speaker — stacking committees, restricting debate, maneuvering the minority into defeats.

"Wright would use the rules in any way he could to manipulate the outcome of a vote," Edwards said. "Republicans, and many Democrats, felt that it wasn't just a matter of getting outvoted, it was a matter of not even having a fair shot."

When Wright said last week he was sorry if he had contributed to the House's bitterness, "that was ludicrous," said Edwards. "He was responsible for it more than any human being."

But Edwards added that his fellow Republicans may be off on a dangerous game: "Republicans have not cornered the market on morality."

And Republican Weber said his party has no appetite for escalation. "There is a strong sense that we don't want to start ethics wars," he told The Washington Post. "I don't expect any Republicans to file charges against Democrats."

On the other hand, Republican Bill Green, N.Y., said ethics is a legitimate political issue. After all, he said, "You've had two of the top three Democrats here resign."

"If the Democrats want to stop what Jim Wright called the 'mindless cannibalism,' the place to begin is to call off their vendetta against Newt Gingrich," said Guy Vander Jagt of Michigan, chairman of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee.

"The Democrats believe this is a concerted, planned, coordinated effort," said Steny Hoyer, D-Md., of the Republican hardball. "It is a continuation of the 1988 campaign."

The reference, of course, was to events which caused Wright to renounce the speakership and his seat after a long ethics investigation, led the ambitious Rep. Tony Coelho of California, the No. 3 Democrat, to resign from Congress rather than face an ethics investigation and led FBI agents to question William H. Gray, D-Pa., during the Memorial Day weekend about allegations of financial impropriety.

The FBI's visit occurred at an awkward time for Gray; seeking to move up in the Democratic hierarchy, he is a candidate for Coelho's old job of whip.

Hoyer said it all brought to mind tactics of the Nixon era: "The Nixon years showed us the ability to use executive apparatus in political campaigns."

Panetta called up the image of World War I trench warfare. He said he saw "a World War I mentality" at play in the use of ethics charges to savage the Democrats.

If the get-even mood prevails, Gingrich stands out as the Democrats' tempting target. A Democratic irritant in the best of times, Gingrich is facing an investigation by the ethics committee on complaints much like those that brought Wright down.

Members of both sides who want a truce look to the sure-to-be next speaker, Democrat Thomas Foley of Washington. He was universally praised as a conciliator, an intellectual, fair-minded and evenhanded.

Town relieved after List's arrest

WESTFIELD, N.J. (AP) — Eighteen years after authorities say John E. List methodically shot his family to death, people here see an end to the tale that has haunted this quiet, wealthy suburb.

The former Sunday school teacher was arrested in Richmond, Va., last Thursday, where he had been living with a second wife of four years and working as an accountant.

Nearly two decades of lead-chasing in every state, Europe and South America were terminated by a simple anonymous tip following a broadcast of the case on the television show "America's Most Wanted."

Police Chief Anthony Scutti said the murders left a black mark on the town of 32,000, 25 miles from New York City. The arrest helped fade that mark.

"If they had a giant microphone in town, you would have heard a giant sigh of relief," Scutti said. When the chief went to an awards dinner the night of the arrest, he was greeted with a spontaneous standing ovation.

John E. List

"I think that reflected the feeling of all of us," he said.

On Dec. 7, 1971, police who had been alerted by worried neighbors found the bodies of List's wife and three children lying on sleeping bags on the ballroom floor of the family's 18-room mansion. Cloths covered the faces of Helen, 45; Patricia, 16; John Jr. 15; and Frederick, 13. The body of List's 85-year-old mother, Alma, was found in an upstairs closet.

All five had been shot in the head. They apparently had been dead nearly a month. List, who had held jobs as an accountant and insurance salesman and was apparently beset by financial and family problems, had vanished.

In many ways, the List case worked its way into the town's consciousness. Teen-agers seeking excitement would cruise by the house, until it mysteriously burned down a year after the deaths. Almost every year, nwspapers would run articles on the crime's anniversary.

And people remembered.

Scutti, then a sergeant, recalled bringing Patricia List to the stationhouse late one night several months before her death.

Bush urges return to non-violence in China

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (AP) — President Bush said Saturday he deeply deplored the military crackdown in China that resulted in the deaths of peaceful demonstrators and he urged Beijing's government to return to non-violent tactics in dealing with pro-democracy protestors.

"We have been urging and continue to urge non-violence, restraint," Bush said. "Tragically another course has been chosen."

"Again, I urge a return to non-violent means for dealing with the current situation," the president said. Bush made his remarks in a written statement issued from his vacation home here.

Bush, who arrived here Friday from a week-long European trip, did not make any public appearance but was kept abreast of developments in China by Robert Gates, his deputy national security adviser.

He also consulted by telephone with Secretary of State James A. Baker III in Washington.

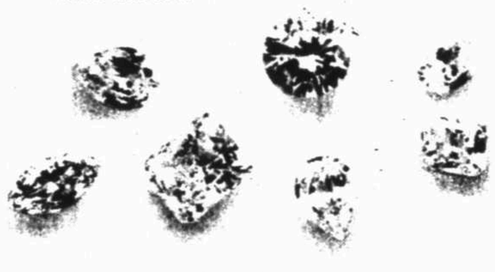

"It is clear that the Chinese government has chosen to use force against Chinese citizens who were making a peaceful statement in favor of democracy. I deeply deplore the decision to use force against peaceful demonstrators and the consequent loss of life," Bush said.

The president said the United States and China had built a "constructive relationship" during the past 20 years through "great efforts by both sides."

The president added that the relationship had been beneficial to both nations. "I hope that China will rapidly return to the path of political and economic reform and conditions of stability so that this relationship, so important to both our peoples can continue its growth."

$1.6 trillion in private pension funds may be at risk, official says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government watchdog says $1.6 trillion in private pension funds are subject to potential fraud and abuse because of loose regulations and lax enforcement of federal pension laws.

Labor Department Inspector General J. Brian Hyland said in a report to Congress on Friday that the problems that leave the pension system open to abuse are much like those that triggered the savings and loan crisis.

Unless Congress acts quickly to strengthen the laws and require the government to improve oversight of pension funds the potential exists for a "nightmare" that would dwarf the S&L crisis, Hyland said in the report.

"As, unfortunately, has been demonstrated by the recent savings and loan crisis, government regulation of an industry does not ensure that invested assets are protected," he said.

The report drew immediate criticism, however, from a research group that follows employee benefit programs and from the Labor Department itself, which said the pension laws have been strengthened in recent years and are under constant review.

"I think he is very dramatically overstating any problems," said Dallas L. Salisbury, president of the Employee Benefit Research Institute. He said that as a result of the 1974 law governing pensions, "the funded status of the private pension system has improved dramatically in each of the last 15 years."

Also, a spokeswoman for the federal agency that insures private pension funds said Hyland appeared to be exaggerating the government's — and taxpayer's — potential liability in the event of a major pension funding crisis, the likelihood of which she said was "remoter than remote."

But Hyland, while not alleging any specific abuses, said existing laws and regulations allow employers and pension fund managers to hide abuses from the government. He said understaffing at the Labor Department leaves the government little chance to catch offenders.

The department, Hyland said, has just 300 people to monitor and enforce the nation's central pension law and lacks a system to detect when reports pension funds are required to file are delinquent.

Permissive regulations allow fund administrators and their accountants to omit from reports information that could alert the government to fraud, abuse and mismanagement, said the inspector general.

Hyland said his and other reviews of enforcement of the 1974 Employee Retirement Income Security Act have found "a striking number of parallels" to the current savings and loan crisis, particularly in the failure of managers and private accountants to pinpoint and report significant management and operations problems.

The Labor Department attacked that assertion, saying: "The analogy between the S&L crisis and ERISA is a faulty one. On the one hand over recent years S&Ls were largely deregulated while pension rules have become more stringent."

But Hyland said the $100 billion the Congressional Budget Office estimates it will cost American taxpayers to rescue savings and loans would appear a bargain should a similar crisis wrack a significant number of the nation's 870,350 private pension funds and a sizable portion of their $1.6 trillion in assets — $7,000 for every man, woman and child in the United States.

"The burden of insuring and protecting failed benefit plans will fall upon all taxpayers, not just plan beneficiaries and parties, since the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corp. is the final insurer of these plan assets," Hyland said. "Unless steps are taken now, today's S&L bailout may become tomorrow's ERISA nightmare."

Jane Hoden, a spokeswoman for the pension guaranty corporation, said the agency believed the protections of ERISA, while not abuse-free, were strong enough to prevent a crisis in the private pension system.

"Most pension plans are well managed and well funded," Ms. Hoden said. "The likelihood of something like that happening is remoter than remote."

Sixth-grader dies after bus overturns

LYONS, Colo. (AP) — Brake failure may have caused a school bus to plunge off a mountain road, killing a sixth-grader and injuring 36 other schoolchildren, officials said.

Forty-one people, including four adults and 37 schoolchildren from Whittier Elementary School in Boulder, were aboard the bus Friday as it went off the road, plunged about 20 feet down an embankment and overturned onto rocks three miles southwest of Lyons in central Colorado.

"Everyone was screaming, the bus was tipping...we were going too fast," said Marc Tedesco, a sixth-grader on the bus. "We were heading towards the rock and she turned to miss it and we did a 360."

Kevin Swenby, 11, was reported dead at the scene. Kristopher Sieger, 12, was listed in serious condition at St. Anthony's Central Hospital in Denver Friday night, according to a hospital spokeswoman. Marissa Burns, 11, was admitted to Longmont United Hospital, where she was in stable condition.

The rest of the passengers were treated at area hospitals and released, officials said.

Officials said the brakes may have failed as the driver, 41-year-old Mireya Van Amee, tried to turn on a curve on the steep mountain canyon road.

Skid marks left along the canyon road by the bus indicate that it slid out of control for at least 1,000 feet before it went over the embankment, said Mark Anello, a Colorado State Patrol spokesman. "It looks like a brake problem," he said.

Naturalists hold tight to philosophy

With a clenched fist as its logo, Earth First! mounted letter-writing efforts, staged protests, filed suits, made threats and used theatrical and guerrilla tactics in a variety of battles against developers and the lumber and oil industries.

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — In 1980, five ardent U.S. environmentalists went on a hiking and camping trip into the Pinacate mountains of Sonora, Mexico.

When they returned, they had founded a radical activist movement — Earth First! — epitomized by a no-holds-barred slogan: "No compromise in the defense of Mother Earth!"

With a clenched fist as its logo, Earth First! mounted letter-writing efforts, staged protests, filed suits, made threats and used theatrical and guerrilla tactics in a variety of battles against developers and the lumber and oil industries.

The group has no formal structure, no official leaders, no officeholders, no dues, no bureaucracy. Just committed supporters.

It has about 50 chapters worldwide, including the Korago Tribe in the Solomon Islands of the southwest Pacific where tribesmen burned a logging camp to the ground several years ago.

Members adhere to the uncompromising philosophy espoused by the most highly profiled of its founders, David Foreman of Tucson, who was arraigned Friday before a federal magistrate and charged with conspiracy to sabotage nuclear facilities in Arizona, California and Colorado. He was freed on a $50,000 bond.

Three other Earth First! activists, Mark Leslie Davis, 39, Marc Baker, 37, and Margaret Millett, 35, were ordered held without bail. Foreman is charged with conspiracy; the other three face a count each of conspiracy and three types of property destruction.

Baker, Davis and Millett were committed to attacks on the Palo Verde and Diablo Canyon nuclear complexes of Wintersburg, Ariz., and San Luis Obispo, Calif., respectively, and the Rocky Flats nuclear weapons center near Denver, according to FBI testimony based on tape-recorded conversations.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Roger Dokken told the federal magistrate that Foreman was the ringleader.

"Mr. Foreman is the worst of the group," Dokken said. "He sneaks around in the background. He was the financier, the leader, sort of the guru to get all of this going. I don't like to use the analogy of a Mafia boss, but they never do anything either. They just send their munchkins out to do it."

If convicted, Foreman faces five years in prison and a $10,000 fine; the others each could be sentenced to 35 years and fined $80,000, the FBI said.

Earth First! adheres to a concept called deep ecology, which maintains wilderness, endangered species and wild plants and creatures should be preserved for their own sake.

In a December interview, Foreman said the group's job is to challenge people to live up to higher standards.

"I think we redefined the debate," he told The Arizona Daily Star. "The media had stopped covering the environment because it was boring. We made it interesting again."

Demonstrations led by Earth First! included one at the Grand Canyon where members performed a skit in anti-radiation suits to protest against a proposed uranium mine.

Members dressed as birds, squirrels and coyotes dropped dollar bills on federal Park Service officials' heads during a Phoenix hearing on flights over Grand Canyon.

They also staged a "die-in" at the Phelps Dodge Corp.'s now closed smelter in Douglas, where members wearing gas masks climbed the smokestacks in opposition to the air pollution it caused.

Koop calls for changes in health care

BOSTON (AP) — Retiring Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said Saturday the U.S. health care system is unfair to millions of Americans, and he called for the appointment of a presidential commission to draft a plan for change.

In a commencement address to 2,200 graduates of the University of Massachusetts at Boston, Koop catalogued the ills of the medical delivery and insurance system, laying particular emphasis on inequities.

"Our current system of health care is not fair, it's not just, and it's not the morally strong system this country deserves," he said.

The 72-year-old Koop, who is retiring this year after eight years as surgeon general, cited estimates that 37 million Americans — about 15 percent of the population — have no health insurance, while millions of others have only partial coverage.

He said health care costs have been rising at two to three times the rate of inflation as a whole, and public expectations of medical care are "fast outracing our ability to pay for them."

HOW THEY VOTED

Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending June 2, 1989.

KEY SENATE VOTES

Senate issues warning to Panama. The Senate June 1 told Panamanian strongman Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega that it might be willing to slow the process for transfer of the Panama Canal to Panama should he remain in power. The vehicle for the message was a non-binding amendment to the 1989 supplemental appropriations bill. The Senate refused to kill the amendment by a 31-63 vote.

The amendment expressed the sense of the Senate that a democratically elected government be in place in Panama before the Senate confirms the 1990 appointment of a Panamanian national to head the Panama Canal Commission — one of the steps necessary for the transfer of the canal in 1999.

The action resurrected debate over the Panama Canal treaties, a hotly contested issue and political litmus test during the Carter administration. Conservative opponents to the treaties narrowly lost the crucial 1978 Senate decision to agree to ratification by two votes.

Senators who wanted to kill the non-binding amendment said it plays into Noriega's hands, strengthening his rule. Noriega has contended that U.S. opposition to him is rooted in a desire to abrogate the treaties, which are popular among Panamanians. The senators also said the democratic opposition in Panama would oppose the amendment. "(M)y concern is that we are giving Gen. Noriega a tool here...that all the United States is interested in is to abrogate the treaties," said Christopher J. Dodd, D-Conn.

Senators who favored the amendment and opposed killing it said it was a needed warning to Noriega, who has been indicted for drug trafficking and who recently oversaw an election that observers said was marred by electoral fraud. "The message does not mince words: the United States Senate does not intend to turn over the Panama Canal to Panamanian control until Noriega is given the 'boot' he deserves," said Bob Dole, R-Kan.

Voting to kill the anti-Noriega amendment: None.

Voting against: Bentsen (D), Gramm (R).

Senate rejects new funding for drug programs. The Senate June 1 defeated, 71-20, an amendment to the $3.3 billion 1989 supplemental spending bill that would have increased so-called "sin taxes" and used the resulting revenues to fund drug-control efforts.

The defeated amendment would have raise taxes on alcoholic beverages and cigarettes in order to generate $1.2 billion to fund provisions of anti-drug legislation that was passed in 1988. While supporters asserted that more money is needed immediately to support federal anti-drug efforts, opponents argued that increased funding would unnecessarily violate spending limits established under the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

Voting to kill the anti-drug funding amendment: Bentsen (D), Gramm (R).

Voting against: None.

KEY HOUSE VOTE

House approves oil shale bill. The House June 1 moved overwhelmingly to block the sale of more than a quarter of a million acres of federal land for $2.50 an acre. By a 301-80 tally, members approved a bill that would block the conversion of the land, originally claimed for production of oil-shale, from federal to private hands, where it could then be re-sold for enormous profits.

The House-passed legislation sprung from a controversial Interior Department decision in 1986 to give title on federal oil-shale land in Wyoming, Colorado and Utah to oil companies for $2.50 an acre, which many decried as a "giveaway." The current measure, the third attempt by the House since 1986 to block the sale, would allow only those with land claims who completed applications before Jan. 24, 1989, to take ownership at $2.50 an acre.

Voting for the bill blocking the sale: Gonzalez (D), Stenholm (D), Sarpalius (D).

Voting against: Smith (R), Combest (R).

Surprise testimony halts 'Cotton Club' hearing

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The prosecution's star witness in "The Cotton Club" murder case testified that two bodyguards bragged about killing producer Roy Radin.

The surprise testimony Friday prompted the judge to halt a preliminary hearing under way to determine if enough evidence exists for trial.

William Rider said two defendants bragged to him about the Radin murder and one of them said "he enjoyed shooting the big fat Jew."

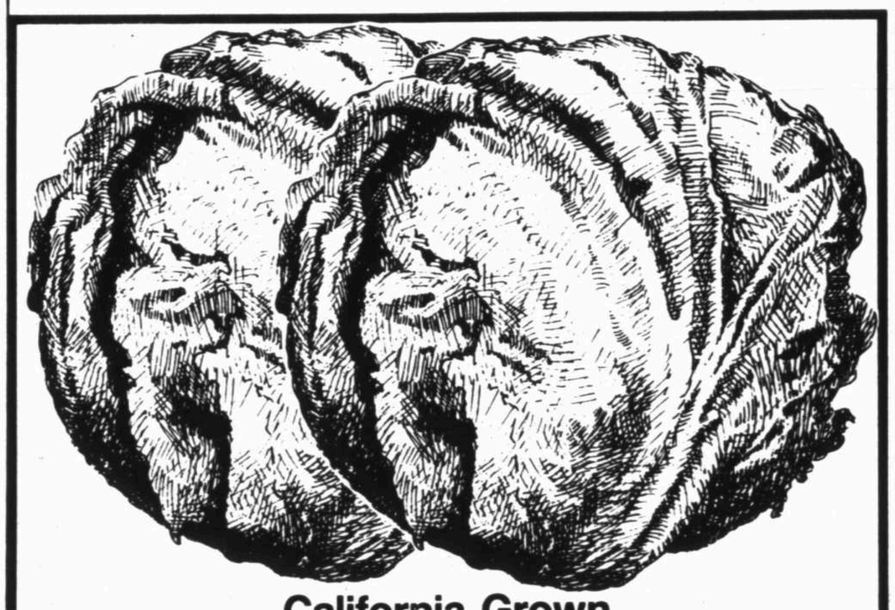

Angry defense lawyers interrupted Rider's testimony, objecting that they had not been told about at least 10 statements he had made in less than an hour on the stand Friday.

The lawyers accused prosecutors of hiding incriminating information, which is prohibited under California laws. Deputy District Attorney David Conn insisted he had disclosed "the gist of the statements," but Municipal Court Judge Patti Jo McKay said that was insufficient.

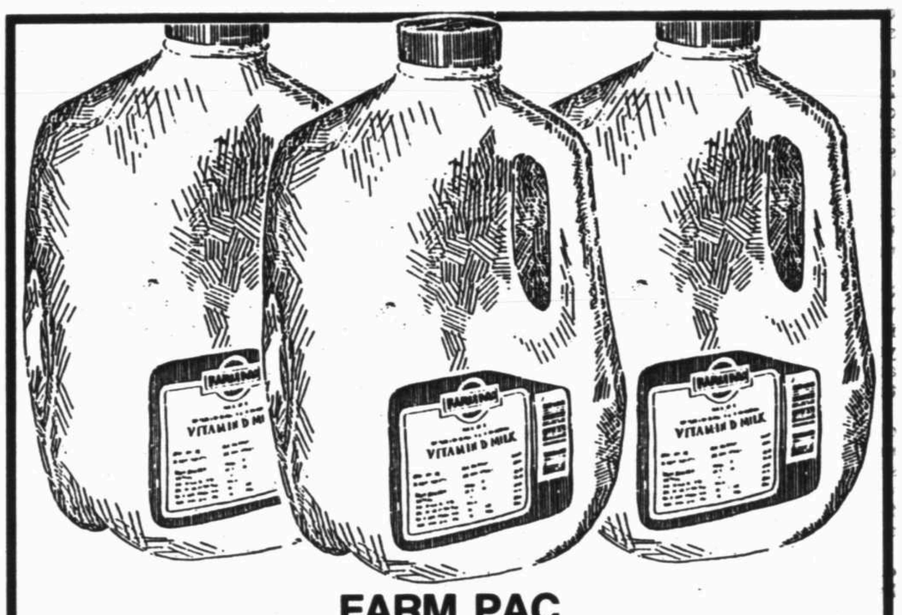

She stopped the hearing and ordered prosecution investigators to appear in court Monday to disclose everything they know about Rider's planned testimony.

Rider, Hustler magazine Publisher Larry Flynt's brother-in-law and former chief of security, implicated two of Flynt's former bodyguards, William Molony Mentzer and Alex Lamota Marti, who are charged in the May 1983 Radin murder.

Despite generous rains, food prices expected to head higher

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — May rains have eased farmers' worries about another drought and have lowered grain prices, but consumers can probably still expect the biggest rise in food prices in eight years, economists say.

"It's 200 percent better. Last year was grim," says Doug Miller, who farms 350 acres in St. Joseph County in north-central Indiana.

Generous spring rains provided a breather from drought in the Midwest and sent grain prices tumbling on commodity markets, but they haven't come close to replenishing parched soil deep down or washing out predictions for a food price increase of up to 7 percent.

The drought of '88 reduced corn yields 30 percent nationwide and soybean production 20 percent. Then, a dry winter, coupled with dust storms and sub-arctic freezes, devastated winter wheat production, with 39 percent of that crop now deemed either in poor or very poor shape as the harvest approaches.

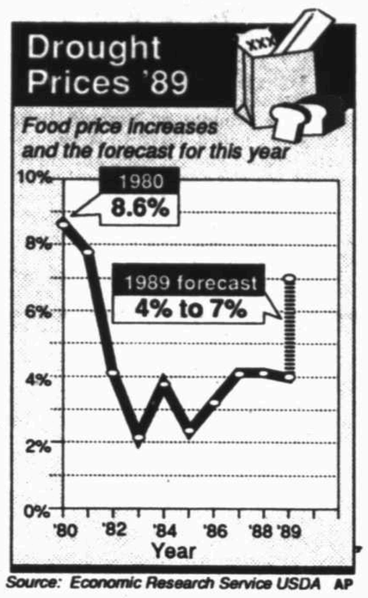

Then came the rainy spring. Conditions have been so wet that planting has been delayed in such 1988 drought battlegrounds as Indiana and Ohio. And the rain ensured that seeds that had been planted got the chance to germinate.

"We're not desperate," says agronomist Garren Benson at Iowa State University. "The pressure is off for the time being."

Drought still plagues some parts of the country, "but with the rain we've had in the Corn Belt, we know it certainly isn't going to be like last year," says economist Ralph Parlett at the Economic Research Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The rains also have taken the edge off a drought-inspired rally in grain markets, where prices rise when a scarce supply is forecast and fall with each bit of good news from the fields. The rising dollar also has been a factor in depressing grain prices.

On the Chicago Board of Trade, contracts calling for September delivery of this summer's crop fell 9 percent for corn and almost 12 percent for soybeans between May 5 and Friday.

Source: Economic Research Service USDA AP

■ Many acres too dry to plant — 1B

At the height of the 1988 drought, corn for September 1988 delivery reached $3.64 a bushel. On Friday, the September 1989 contract closed at $2.42¾. Soybeans peaked at $10.70 a bushel nearly a year ago, but wound up last week at $6.50¼.

But while the drought scare has diminished and commodity prices are retreating, economists are not rushing to rein in forecasts of rising prices at supermarkets and restaurants.

The USDA's Economic Research Service recently revised upward its forecast for the consumer price index for food to a climb of 4 percent to 7 percent in 1989. In November, it had predicted a 3 percent to 5 percent increase in 1989 food prices.

If inflation for food surpasses the 4.1 percent level of each of the past two years, it will hit the highest mark since the 7.8 percent level of 1981.

Parlett says drought aftereffects from 1988 are partly to blame. With rising costs for feed grain, egg production was cut back, pushing prices higher. Processed vegetable supplies also are tight because of the drought.

The drought's lingering effects on pastures in cattle country also are taking their toll on food prices, by boosting feed costs and forcing ranchers and farmers to reduce herds. The 99.5 million head of cattle in the United States as the year began was the lowest since 1961.

To help beef producers, the Agriculture Department on Friday announced steps to make some erosion-prone land available for grazing and hay cutting.

Factors unrelated to the drought that are contributing to higher food prices include strong consumer demand and rising energy costs, which increase processing and transportation expenses.

Sung Won Song, chief economist at the Norwest Corp. in Minneapolis, said May rains have not changed his inflation outlook.

"The drought outlook for this year is yet to be seen," Song said.

Many regions are still powder dry below the top inches of soil, he noted. Subsoil moisture is rated inadequate in at least 80 percent of Kansas and the Dakotas, more than 90 percent of northern Missouri, and virtually all of Iowa and Nebraska.

For corn and soybeans, June is a crucial month because it normally is one of the wettest times of the growing season. A dry June spells trouble in July and August, when such row crops are developing quickly and need plenty of moisture.

Global telecast aims to motivate an environment consciousness

NEW YORK (AP) — Combining pep rally spirit and a serious message, a global telecast aimed at more than 1 billion people brought celebrities and world leaders together Saturday to push for a new age of environmental consciousness.

Called "Our Common Future," the five-hour telecast originated from New York and picked up satellite feeds from London, Moscow, Australia, Brazil, Tokyo, Poland and elsewhere.

Organizers said it was beamed to 100 countries, making it potentially available to 90 percent of the world's television sets.

Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland was host of the collage of music and messages calling for the world to adopt "sustainable development," to reach a happy medium between improving living standards and protecting resources and the environment for the future. Mrs. Brundtland chaired a United Nations commission that developed a report, also called "Our Common Future," on the same topic.

"We need more people to be aware," Mrs. Brundtland said as she opened the broadcast.

In London, rock musician Bob Geldof quoted Albert Einstein as he urged viewers to adopt the program's message.

"Everything has changed but the way we think," Geldof said. "The first thing we have to change is the way we think."

Organizers say the spectacle was not a fund-raiser but a consciousness-raiser, designed to take advantage of growing concern over ozone depletion, global warming, tropical rain forest destruction and other issues.

"It's a kind of wake-up call," said singer John Denver, one of the participants.

Among the other musicians scheduled to perform were Stevie Wonder, Elton John, Sting, Diana Ross, Bob Geldof and Herbie Hancock. Film stars Richard Gere, Christopher Reeve and Sigourney Weaver and former Brazilian soccer great Pele were to appear.

Taped messages were planned from President Bush and a number of other leaders, including U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, Chinese Premier Li Peng and Zimbabwean Prime Minister Robert Mugabe.

Hal Uplinger and Tony Verna, who produced and directed the Live Aid benefit for African relief in 1985, teamed up again for the telecast. The Swiss-based Centre for Our Common Future and Washington-based Uplinger Enterprises put it together.

"To hold this kind of event lays the foundation of public awareness," said Warren H. Lindner, executive director of the center. "You know and I know that political change comes not in and of itself but is greatly facilitated by an informed and motivated public."

The budget was just under $2 million, which is being covered by corporate sponsors, Lindner said. All the entertainers donated their talents, as did many other professionals and technicians involved.

Setting up the satellite links and other organizational tasks were similar to the Live Aid program, which was held in two outdoor sports stadiums in the United States and Britain, he said.

The difference is in the participants. Live Aid was virtually all music and had Irish rock musician Geldof as its host.

"It's been a very, very difficult situation," Uplinger said. "You have heads of state involved. You can't do the same things with Mrs. Brundtland as you can do with Bob Geldof."

Mrs. Brundtland chaired a U.N.-appointed commission that spent three years gathering testimony and information to compile a report on the world's environment and development. The report was also called "Our Common Future."

She received the 1988 Third World Prize from the London-based Third World Foundation for her work of the commission.

Tower hoping to revive reputation

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Former Sen. John Tower, the feisty Texan turned Washington insider, is hoping to stage a comeback within the Bush administration to revive his reputation after stinging Senate rejection of his nomination as defense secretary.

Tower

The 63-year-old Republican is ready for new White House assignments to burnish an illustrious government career that was besmirched by a penetrating Senate investigation into his personal and professional affairs.

"Up until this, I was regarded as being something of a statesman-like figure in this town," Tower said in an interview with Hearst Newspapers.

"Obviously I'm not happy about what happened to me because I had, I think, a distinguished career in public service. To have it end that way is not a terribly comforting thought for a man. But you know, life goes on, and you can't dissolve into anger and rancor or let it eat you up."

Tower, who served 24 years in the Senate and 14 months as a U.S. arms negotiator in Geneva, said President Bush offered him the post of U.S. ambassador to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in Brussels following the Senate's 53-47 rejection of his nomination on March 9.

But the former chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, who favors Saville Row suits and cigarettes from a silver pocket case, said he faced the prospect of "an austere standard of living" as the $99,500-a-year defense secretary and was "not inclined to make that kind of sacrifice for a lesser job, quite frankly."

Tower said he would welcome the opportunity to serve on presidential commissions or as a special diplomatic envoy on short-term assignments — "not full time but giving full time for a short period of time." He won kudos for leading the even-handed Tower Commission investigation into the Iran-contra affair during the Reagan administration.

Appearing relaxed and expansive during a 75-minute interview in a roomy office subleased from a prestigious downtown law firm, Tower said he retains close ties with administration officials. He lavished praise on the president for a "diplomatic coup" at last week's western summit and carefully avoided criticism of Dick Cheney, the Wyoming congressman named to the defense post after the rejection of Tower's nomination.

A former political science professor at Midwestern State University in Wichita Falls, Tex., he won his Senate seat vacated when Lyndon Johnson became vice president in 1961. Now Tower derives his livelihood from a variety of sources while shuttling between his home in the Turtle Creek section of Dallas and a suite at the Jefferson Hotel in Washington, D.C.

He holds three positions with subsidiaries of London-based Maxwell Communication Corp., serving as chairman of Pergamon-Brassey's International Defense Publishers and Armed Forces Journal International, as well as on the board of the New York publishing firm, Macmillan Inc.

Tower also has rejoined his Dallas-based financial consulting company, Tower, Eggers & Greene, and says he may consult for defense contractors on assignments unrelated to weapons acquisition.

A book in progress about the "struggle" between Congress and the White House is due out next year, co-authored with Kathleen Maxa, a writer who co-authored a recent book with Roxanne Pulitzer, ex-wife of newspaper-fortune heir Herbert "Pete" Pulitzer. Asked if bombshells lurked in his manuscript, Tower exchanged knowing glances with Maxa, but said nothing.

Tower said the book is drawing heavily, however, on the nomination battle in which he encountered an unprecedented Senate inquiry into allegations of womanizing, alcoholism and conflicts of interest as a $25,000-a-month defense consultant. He remains single after two divorces and said he drinks "moderately," having wine with dinner.

As Tower sees it, Democratic senators led by Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga., used allegations of ethical misconduct to scuttle the nomination of a prominent Republican because they were unable to challenge his qualifications.

Senators "made up the standards as they went along," Tower said, not "because of any great, deep-seated conviction about ethical standards" but because "they didn't want me to be secretary of defense."

18 people injured in gunpowder plant explosion

ROXBURY TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Explosions leveled three buildings at a gunpowder plant Saturday, injuring at least 18 people, blowing out windows in nearby towns and shaking houses up to 13 miles away.

The 5 a.m. explosions at the Hercules Powder Inc. plant knocked down trees, tore off doors and damaged many homes and about 80 percent of the businesses in this north-central New Jersey township, about 40 miles west of New York City, officials said. The plant makes gunpowder for military and commercial uses.

"There's absolutely nothing there but dirt and it doesn't even look that there was a building there," said Val Mazzucca, a witness who flew over the site in a helicopter several hours after the blast. "All of the trees are blown over on the sides. It looks like Mount St. Helens."

Three of about 40 buildings at the 6-square-mile complex were destroyed, four others had fire damage and several others were partly damaged, plant manager Dick Best said. He said he did not know the cause of the blast.

"It was a chain reaction," he said. "I don't know how and why."

About 30,000 Jersey Central Power & Light customers in a 10-mile radius of the blast site lost power for two minutes after the blast, said Eunice Mackie, a company spokesman.

Salvatore Rappa said he was working inside the finishing area of the plant when he heard an explosion.

"All I know is that the lights flickered on and off throughout the whole building and in about 15 seconds there was the first explosion," Rappa said. "Everyone hit the deck and there was a major panic."

About 50 employees were working on the overnight shift, Best said. There apparently were no life-threatening injuries.

A supervisor for Dover General Hospital said 12 Hercules employees had been brought in. Nine of them and about half a dozen townspeople were treated and released and three employees were admitted, with injuries ranging from back pains to a concussion. All were in stable condition, said supervisor Barbara Treverrow.

An explosion on Feb. 22, 1985, at the company's Sayerville plant, about 20 miles to the southwest, killed an employee and injured four other people.

Best said the material that exploded Sunday was a smokeless propellant used in shotgun shells.

He said that to limit damage, the plant is divided into compartments that each contain no more than 1,000 pounds of gunpowder. The gunpowder plant is located in a somewhat isolated area near several small towns.

"There are windows blown out throughout the area," said Sgt. Mike Hass, of the Randolph Police Department, about three miles from Roxbury Township. Police said they received about 200 damage reports.

NATION IN BRIEF

Li says prospects for people 'bright'

NEW YORK (AP) — Chinese Premier Li Peng, in a statement taped before Sunday's bloody crackdown in Beijing, pledged China to work to improve the world environment and concluded that the prospects for people are "bright."

Li, dressed in a Western-style suit, recorded the statement for a global television broadcast from New York called "Our Common Future," which was intended to raise environmental consciousness.

"Human beings are now facing challenges from the gradual warming of the climate on the global scale," Li said in Chinese. "To curb the development of the tendency requires common efforts by many countries and the whole world as well."

"China, as a member of the international community, will steadfastly honor its commitments," he said. "I believe that advanced countries should take more responsibility for environmental problems and should make a higher commitment."

"The prospects for human beings is bright," he concluded in the recorded translation.

The celebrity-filled broadcast Saturday, aimed at more than 1 billion people, was picked up satellite feeds from London, Moscow, Australia, Brazil, Tokyo, Poland and elsewhere.

Testimony reconsidered

WASHINGTON (AP) — A State Department official is backtracking from his denial that a plan was carried out to link aid to Honduras with help to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels, and a House subcommittee chairman says he will ask more questions about the plan.

Michael G. Kozak, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, testified on April 25 that the "plan was disapproved, at the objection of the State Department, on the grounds that conditionality — linkage between U.S. assistance and any (Honduran) assistance to the (Contra) resistance — was contrary to U.S. policy."

"The whole proposed linkage that was included in (the) plan was disapproved, was not made, there was no 'discreet emissary,'" Kozak told the House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations chaired by Rep. David Obey, D-Wis.

But in a letter to Obey this week, Kozak said, "I certainly did not intend to imply by these statements, however, that decisions to provide assistance to Honduras on an expedited basis were not thereafter made or carried out."

Book aims at U.S. audience

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet people have long thrived on so-called black humor, biting satire that make light of some of the more onerous aspects of a life characterized by shortages and corruption.

Now the editors of the leading Soviet humor magazine, "Krokodil," have published an English-language collection of satirical cartoons the magazine's editor, Aleksey Pyanov says he hopes will help "destroy the myth that Soviet people are gloomy, withdrawn and stern."

The weekly "Krokodil" reaches an enormous audience in the Soviet Union, with a circulation of 5.3 million. By comparison, Time has a circulation in the United Sates of 4.7 million and Newsweek 3.3 million.

The wide-ranging collection of 185 cartoons from "Krokodil" — covering topics from marital humor to environmental problems — is being made available to American readers in the book, "Soviet Humor."

Oil spills into river

CRAIG, Colo. (AP) — A ruptured pipeline spilled about 13,200 gallons of crude oil into the Yampa River, home to two endangered species of fish, officials said.

The Amoco Pipeline Co. line near here broke open early Friday, said Moffat County Sheriff Jeff Corriveau. It was discovered when an oil slick was spotted on the Yampa three miles below the point where the pipe crosses the northwestern Colorado river.

Amoco officials immediately turned off the pumps to the 6-inch diameter line, stopping the flow of oil within a few hours, said Jerry White, the company's area manager in Casper, Wyo.

Amoco officials estimated that about 300 barrels, or about 13,200 gallons, spilled into the river. Crews were immediately dispatched to throw oil-collection booms across the river.

"The spill is in the No. 1 area for the Colorado squawfish," which is endangered, said state Fish and Wildlife Service biologist Harold Tyus. "In the next few weeks, the squawfish will be in the peak of their spawning season."

Seattle freeway opens

SEATTLE (AP) — With much fanfare, authorities Sunday are opening a seven-mile stretch of Interstate 90 that has the dubious distinction of being the most expensive segment of freeway ever built.

It is part of a $1.46 billion highway project for the mushrooming Seattle metropolis to build roads that probably will be badly congested by the time they are completed in 1994.

For the time being, the new link between Seattle and Bellevue across Lake Washington brings welcome relief from the twice-daily creep across the lake's two existing four-lane spans that become jammed by fender-benders.

The freeway, proposed in 1957, drew the wrath of residents, who wanted to protect neighborhoods, and of environmentalists.

Solidarity appears confident in freest elections in 42 years

WORLD

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Solidarity was confident Saturday on the eve of the freest elections in the East bloc in 42 years, while the Communist Party braced for a feared poor showing.

Poles, living under the communist system since the end of World War II, will have their first chance to choose opposition candidates on Sunday when they elect a Senate in which Solidarity candidates are running for all 100 seats.

Opposition and independent candidates also were allowed to run for 161 of the 460 seats in the Sejm, or parliament.

Surveys projected that 80 percent of the nation's 27 million eligible voters would cast ballots. The national election commission said final results might not be available until Wednesday or Thursday.

Thousands of Polish immigrants filed asbentee ballots Saturday at Polish consulates in New York, Chicago and Washington.

"This is pure satisfaction," said Jack Piotrowski, 38, of Butler, N.J., who came to America six years ago and cast his ballot in New York City.

"I'm a bit surprised," said Tomasz Zalewski, 41, of Brooklyn, an official poll watcher for Solidarity. "I didn't expect such a turnout."

A consular official in New York said 5,000 people had registered to vote and by 3 p.m. 3,500 people had cast ballots. In Chicago thousands of Poles braved thunderstorms and hourlong waits to vote.

Solidarity leader Lech Walesa was cheered Saturday night at a tumultuous rally outside his modest home in the port city of Gdansk. "We showed the world we can fight, now let's show we can do things peacefully," he said.

More than 500 cars drove by, filled with Solidarity supporters who flashed the V-for-victory sign.

Walesa held a private party at his home before the rally and the house was filled with well-wishers. President George Bush is scheduled to have lunch there with Walesa and his family when the U.S. leader visits Gdansk in July.

"This is a rehearsal for Bush's visit," Walesa told The Associated Press with a hearty laugh.

Surveys projected that 80 percent of the nation's 27 million eligible voters would cast ballots. The national election commission said final results might not be available until Wednesday or Thursday.

If 80 percent of the voters cast ballots it will be one of the highest turnouts in years. A national referendum in 1987 on political and economic reform drew 67.3 percent of the voters. In elections in June 1988 for local and provincial councils the government reported a 56 percent turnout.

Relatively free elections occurred in Poland in 1947 with some opposition, but the Communist Party won the balloting and established complete political control.

Solidarity has taken numerous steps to try to ensure Sunday's election is honest.

Biggest AIDS conference begins today

MONTREAL (AP) — When 12,000 people gather Sunday for the biggest AIDS conference ever, they will hear grim reports on the social and economic toll of the epidemic but little encouragement about the medical race to stop it.

The Fifth International Conference on AIDS is a gathering of all of the big-name researchers and physicians, as well as their supporting casts, who this decade have made AIDS a profession and livelihood as well as a tragedy.

The obvious and easy discoveries have been made, so the product of the conference will be thousands of updates on the painstakingly tiny steps necessary for science to learn to thwart the AIDS virus and repair its destruction.

No clearly superior successor to AZT, the only approved AIDS drug, is expected to emerge from the 4,500 planned presentations, nor is there likely to be an effective vaccine to protect people from catching HIV, the AIDS virus.

"I am not expecting any big announcements out of this conference, unfortunately, in terms of new drugs capable of making a real difference over the next two years," said Dr. Mark Wainberg of McGill University. "I think we will see a lot of leads for the future, but I don't think it likely we will have major cures or vaccines announced."

In 1985, 3,200 people gathered in Atlanta for the first big AIDS meeting. At the time, 9,000 cases of AIDS had been reported in the United States. Expected at the Montreal meeting, which runs through Friday, are 10,000 AIDS experts, 1,000 reporters and 1,000 exhibitors. The total of U.S. AIDS cases is nearing 100,000.

With the growing numbers has come a realization that acquired immune deficiency syndrome is far more than a medical problem. Although 65 percent of the presentations will concern the biological and medical intricacies of AIDS, this year's conference is the first to put a major emphasis on other aspects of the epidemic, including its psychological impact, costs, ethical dilemmas, education and legal questions.

"We encourage this marrying of disciplines," said Dr. Alastair J. Clayton, director general of the federal center for AIDS in Ottawa. "We are trying in this conference to keep the behavioral and biomedical sciences working together. We all want to control the spread of HIV infection in our society and use every means we can."

Among other things, the meeting will hold sessions on AIDS legislation around the world, the hospital costs of the disease, the role of churches, how companies deal with the disease, whether HIV-infected people should be allowed to adopt children, and whether such people's infections should be kept confidential if they are sexually irresponsible.

Ivan Head, the conference chairman, said the decision to open the gathering to non-medical subjects was made even before last year's annual meeting in Stockholm, Sweden, at the urging of its co-sponsor, the World Health Organization.

"There was a recognition that at the present pace of scientific research, there is likely to be considerable delay until we can come to terms with the virus in a scientific fashion," said Head, who is chairman of Canada's International Development Research Center. "In the interim, we have to recognize these societal concerns."

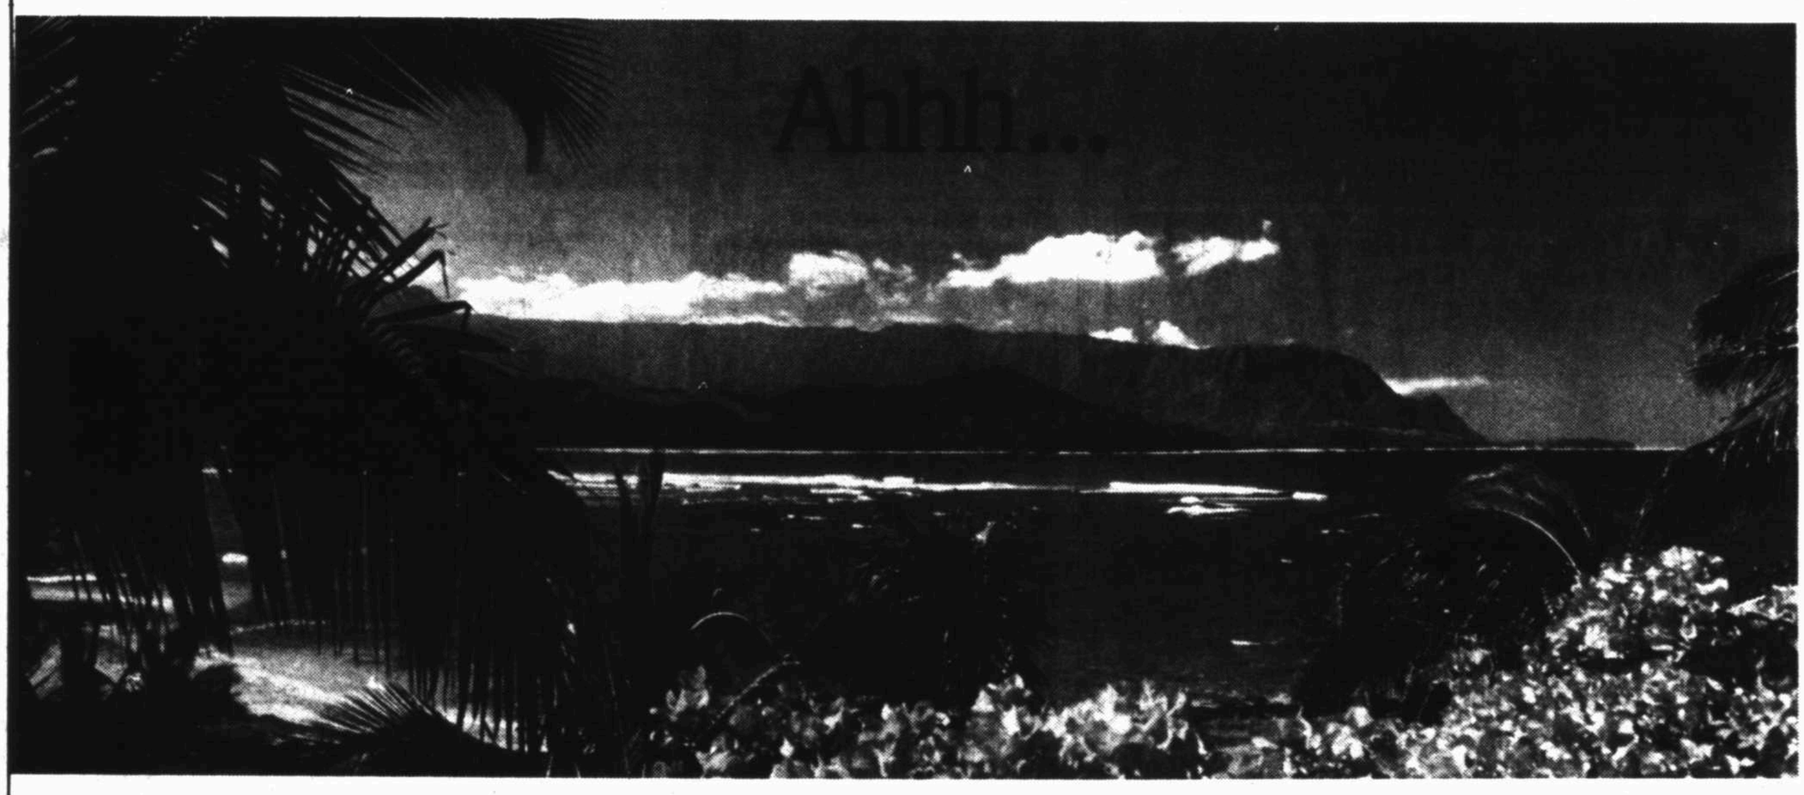

However, some researchers are uneasy about the vast scope of the meeting and the blurring of its focus on science.

Analysts say Bush conventional arms agreement too optimistic

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — President Bush's breakneck timetable for wrapping up a conventional arms agreement with the Soviet Union may be too optimistic given the complexity of the negotiations, analysts say.

But they say the president's sweeping proposals for slashing troops and weapons in Europe will broaden East-West bargaining at the Vienna arms talks and ensure that an eventual accord will be wide-ranging.

"It will be a more comprehensive set of negotiations and a more comprehensive agreement," said Richard Fieldhouse, a research fellow at the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute in Sweden.

"That also means," he said, "it will be more difficult."

Bush wants the talks brought to "an early and satisfactory conclusion" within six to 12 months and their results implemented no later than 1993.

John Cross, deputy director of the London-based International Institute for Strategic Studies, said the Bush initiative "produces better prospects than hitherto for striking an arms control bargain."

But he cautioned it will be "impossibly hard without an enormous amount of good will" between the East and West negotiators to bring the talks to an end a year from now.

Bush's unveiling of the plan at a summit of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization was an attempt by the West to seize the arms control initiative from Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

It also let the leaders of the 16 NATO nations emerge from their 40th anniversary celebration united.

"They got their act together and confirmed they have very much more in common on what really matters," said Cross.

The president's bargaining offer calls for sharp cuts in Soviet and American troops stationed in Europe and in tanks, artillery and other conventional, or non-nuclear, arms.

Moreover, Bush said the United States, in a turnabout, would be willing to negotiate reductions in combat aircraft and helicopters.

The inclusion of aircraft, analysts say, will expand the discussions to an important area of concern. But it also will make the talks tougher because of the difficulty in defining attack planes.

Bush also urged that the two sides agree to destroy all weapons that are singled out for reductions and that the troops be disbanded.

His proposal was unanimously adopted by the other 15 delegates at the meeting at NATO headquarters in Brussels.

They agreed to let experts take a look at the plan and draw up a detailed offer to put on the bargaining table when talks resume in September. The Conventional Forces in Europe negotiations began last March between the NATO nations and the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact. They cover the region spanning the Atlantic Ocean to the Ural Mountains in the Soviet Union.

Analysts had predicted the discussions would last several years at least. Previous negotiations dragged on 15 years with no agreement.

Mexican narcotics officer charged with drug trafficking

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Authorities say the corrupting power of drugs and a belief in witchcraft led to the downfall of a federal narcotics agent involved with a cult of ritual killers.

Salvador Vidal Garcia Alarcon, 39, was indicted Friday on drug trafficking charges. The nine-year veteran of the federal judicial police pleaded innocent.

In a lengthy statement given earlier to police, Vidal Garcia had said his contact with the sect was limited to religious matters.

He explained he had been possessed by spirits all his life and sought relief from their disrupting powers from the leader of the cult, Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo.

Vidal Garcia described the spirits as useful in helping the victims of black magic, but said they were also potent and troublesome. He said he could only get relief from someone with magical powers greater than his own.

He said Constanzo would perform spiritual "cleansings" involving animal sacrifice.

Constanzo had a lucrative practice as a clairvoyant and "cleanser" in Mexico City. "Cleansing" is designed to remove a hex or evil spell and is widely practiced in Mexico.

Vidal Garcia also said he attended black masses and cult initiations.

Deputy Federal Attorney General Javier Coello Trejo said Vidal Garcia, a member of the federal drug task force, had been an "excellent" officer who was wounded several times in the line of duty.

His belief in witchcraft and the corrupting influence of drug money brought about his downfall, Coello said.

"We don't believe he was responsible for any of the homicides," Coello said.

One cult member told authorities Vidal Garcia knew that Constanzo followers had murdered and dismembered a transvestite in Mexico City in 1988.

Another, Sara Aldrete Villareal, the sect's alleged high priestess, said Constanzo told her he killed two men as a favor to Vidal Garcia. Their bodies were among the 15 discovered in Matamoros in April.

Vidal Garcia, who was arrested earlier this week, is being held in the Eastern Penitentiary in Mexico City. He was arraigned there in the 7th Federal Criminal Court. Conviction can bring a penalty of seven to 25 years in prison.

He was not charged in connection with the murders in Matamoros or Mexico City or with other crimes alleged against the sect. Authorities would not say if he will remain on the federal police force until his case is resolved.

The indictment accuses Vidal Garcia of stealing 4.4 pounds of cocaine from a dentist in the western city of Guadalajara last year along with Constanzo and Constanzo's right-hand man, who posed as U.S. drug agents.

Constanzo, a 26-year-old Cuban-American, and his lieutenant died May 6 in a shootout when police raided their hideout in Mexico City.

Cult members told police that Vidal Garcia used his position as a federal agent to protect the smugglers. He was one of several police officers mentioned by the suspects but Coello insisted Vidal Garcia is the only federal agent linked to the cult.

He refused to discuss Aldrete's assertion that the late Mexican head of Interpol, the international police agency, was a cult initiate.

Violence at Tiananmen Square may leave lasting scar on China

BEIJING (AP) — Smoke from burning vehicles cast a pall over Tiananmen Square Sunday morning after violence that will leave a permanent scar on China.

The numbers of dead and wounded from military attacks on demonstrators were estimated in the hundreds. Massive arrests are inevitable along with purges in the Communist Party leadership.

The military action made it clear the government was willing to use brutal force against mainly unarmed and peaceful demonstrators to ensure the privileges and power of an aging leadership and to perpetuate the political system.

Deng Xiaoping, China's 84-year-old senior leader, may have forfeited his place as one of the 20th century's great statesmen — his 10 years of economic reforms tarnished by his willingness to have blood shed rather than relinquish political power.

Premier Li Peng, who refused to meet with students and discuss their pleas for greater democracy and instead declared martial law in Beijing on May 20, has won the odium of millions.

Other elder leaders who dredged up their hard-line ideologies rather than listen to the pulse of the nation also will be known as men who sanctioned the killings of young idealists.

The People's Liberation Army betrayed the chants of the students that "the people's army loves the people" — reflecting the respect many Chinese had for the army until Sunday morning.

The crushing of the protests reaffirmed Deng's philosophy that political stability is crucial for economic modernization and social unrest is intolerable.

But his quest for stability may be in jeopardy. Military force will not quiet the resentment of official corruption expressed by the students at Tiananmen.

Troops in the streets may drive anti-government and anti-party expressions underground for a while but they cannot eradicate them.

Student leaders, referring to government suppression, spoke of a "long winter" coming that will affect the nation's faltering economic plans.

With the government divided and weakened by strife, problems of inflation, unemployment and labor unrest will be unattended.

If the conservatives push through their purge of Communist Party chief Zhao Ziyang and other moderates who opposed the crackdown, China could be deprived of a generation of creative and progressive thinkers.

The flow of desperately needed foreign investments will suffer because of the political crisis. Tourism will decline.

China and the United States, long at odds over human rights issues, could be heading for cooler relations that will involve U.S. willingness to provide technology and economic assistance.

President Bush said Saturday he deeply deplored the decision to use force "against peaceful demonstrators and the consequent loss of life."

Chinese leaders often note China's 4,000-year history and say the Chinese have the wisdom and patience to outlast crises of the moment.

But Chinese observing the rapid changes in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe will not be satisfied with reciting catechisms of communism and the evils of bourgeois liberalization.

Chinese need only look back at the last Tiananmen Incident on April 5, 1976, to note that violence can destroy those who initiate it.

On that date a radical clique seeking to cement its power ordered out military units that killed about 100 people who had gone to the square to mourn the late Premier Chou En-lai. Horror and anger at the killings led to events that brought about the downfall of the radicals six months later and the emergence of Deng Xiaoping.

'Ed's Party' reminds Lockerbie of disaster

LOCKERBIE, Scotland (AP) — "Ed's Party," planned as a step toward getting on with life, brought some unwelcome notoriety Saturday to the town where Pan Am Flight 103 crashed.

"Let's party!" said Ed Blaus, 14, of Sicklerville, N.J., for whom the event was named.

To some relatives of the 270 people killed by the terrorist bomb that felled the Boeing 747 on Dec. 21, a party seemed inappropriate, especially because of Pan Am's involvement.

London's Daily Telegraph called it "a bizarre attempt to make up for the airliner disaster," leaving the town's leaders defensive Saturday.

"Given the circumstances of this town, the party is unusual, but it is being supported by the vast majority of the local people, not to cause distress or anguish but to prove to themselves and the world that whereas we mourn those who died, they are determined to repair their town, rebuild shattered lives and ensure a special and sacred place in their hearts for 270 people from 24 nations," said Alex McElroy, chairman the local Community Support agency.

Response was enthusiastic, with families and groups of children heading toward the football ground as early as 9 a.m. for a day of hamburgers, hot dogs, bagpipes and rock bands in the sun. All wore red "Ed's Party" badges to distinguish townspeople from reporters.

OPEC meetings continue in Vienna

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — OPEC ministers say discussions have barely begun on whether to produce more oil at a time when prices of a barrel have surged 40 percent since November.

Nigerian Oil Minister Rilwanu Lukman, the president of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, said officials discussed "the whole agenda" during private talks Friday. He would not elaborate.

The ministers of the 13-nation group were meeting privately today to try to work out a production agreement for the last half of the year. Their formal strategy session begins Monday.

Most ministers appear unwilling to adopt tactics that could upset what has been a surprisingly strong market so far this year.

Indeed, some officials say the ministers may decide to roll over the current agreement for another six months.

In November, the ministers agreed to curb their production and set a cap of 18.5 million barrels a day. They settled on a benchmark price of $18 a barrel.

Since then, the average price of a basket of crudes monitored by OPEC has shot up, rising more than 40 percent to nearly $17.70 a barrel.

West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude, has been trading around $20 a barrel.

Israelis protest raids

TEL AVIV (AP) — Tens of thousands of Israelis, some carrying signs saying "Thou shalt not kill!" on Saturday protested attacks by Jewish settlers on Arab communities in the occupied territories.

Also Saturday, Israeli troops wounded 13 Palestinians in clashes in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, Arab hospital officials said.

In Tel Aviv's Kings of Israel Square, about 30,000 supporters of a leftist peace coalition held the protest rally against violence by Jewish settlers.

Israel television said rally organizers were distributing petitions, already signed by 32 of Parliament's 120 members, calling on police and the army to arrest settler vigilantes.

"If Israel does not get up and stop them now, maybe some day not far from now, they (the settlers) will arrest us," said Israeli author Amos Oz.

The Israeli news media said Saturday the army is considering restricting the movement of settlers suspected of involvement in vigilante acts against Palestinians.

About 70,000 Jews live in 131 settlements in the West Bank and Gaza Strip that have an Arab population of 1.7 million.

In the Gaza Strip Israeli soldiers shot and wounded eight Palestinians, including an 11-year-old boy who was hit in the leg, Arab hospital officials reported.

Rebels spurn bid for talks

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist rebels on Saturday spurned the new rightist president's proposal for dialogue, dismissing it as a call to capitulate.

The rejection came in a communique from the rebels' Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front broadcast on local radio stations. There was no immediate reaction from the government.

Despite their rejection of the offer to talk, the guerrillas also said Saturday that they lifted a ban on road travel called to protest the inauguration Thursday of the President Alfredo Cristiani.

Cristiani on Friday called for more regional efforts to end El Salvador's civil war. He said bringing peace to this country was just as important as dismantling the U.S.-supported Nicaraguan rebels.

He has pledged not to negotiate changes in the political system with the rebels but has offered talks instead on integrating them into civilian life.

In their statement, the rebels said they stood ready to negotiate a political solution to their nine-year war against the U.S.-backed government. But they said Cristiani's proposal did not offer them a chance to do so and that it was an "invitation to surrender."

The rebel communique instead invited El Salvador's political parties to sponsor a peace dialogue.

29 injured in shootout

VALLETTA, Malta (AP) — Socialists pelted the daughter of a conservative leader with garbage and rabbit skins as she arrived for her wedding, setting off gun battles that injured at least 29 people, officials said Saturday.

The wedding was attended by Prime Minister Edward Fenech Adami and Deputy Prime Minister Guido de Marco, both of the conservative Nationalist Party. They were not injured.

The clashes occurred Friday night in the village of Zejtun, a Socialist stronghold seven miles from Valletta on this Mediterranean island off Sicily.

When Rose Abdilla, daughter of the local Nationalist Party president, arrived at the church in a two-horse open carriage, Socialist Party backers threw garbage and rabbit skins at her.

She rushed into the church, protected by police, while the onlookers insulted her and her father, Paul Abdilla.

Police called in reinforcements when the prime minister and deputy prime minister arrived.

At one point, the crowd tried to surge into the church, and police fired tear gas to disperse hundreds of Socialists who had massed by then.

15 killed in accident

SUKKUR, Pakistan (AP) — A speeding bus full of wedding celebrants overturned on a curve near this southern Pakistani city, killing 15 people and injuring 25, officials said today.

Police, speaking on the usual condition of anonymity, said the accident occurred early Friday when the driver apparently attempted to make the turn while traveling too fast.

The driver fled the scene and was being sought for questioning, officers added.

Thirteen people were instantly killed and two others died later, hospital officials said. All the victims, who reportedly belonged to the Panhwar tribe of Pakistan's southern Sindh province, were celebrating a wedding.

India tries test-tube potato

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — India scientists are experimenting with the test-tube potato in an effort to speed up production and develop virus-free seeds, United News of India reported today.

The Central Potato Research Institute in the Himalayan hill town of Simla has collected 500 potato genotypes to produce plants in vitro, the news agency said.

It quoted an unnamed institute spokesman as saying potato germ plasm had been collected from plants in India and eight other countries since 1984.

Beirut's Christian area deserted after barrages

JOUNIEH, Lebanon (AP) — The once-bustling Christian enclave north of Beirut is a ghost town. Daily shelling by Syrian forces has driven most residents underground and sapped the life from the region once known as the Monte Carlo of the Middle East.

The barrages have eased since the Arab League called for a cease-fire May 11, but a gas shortage has paralyzed the region, adding to the problems of a Christian population outnumbered and outgunned by Syria and its allies.

"If it's not shelling, it's gas, and if it's not gas it's something else," said Samira Khater, a secretary.

An air of stupor hangs over the 310-square-mile enclave, home to about 1 million Christians.

There is hardly any traffic. Business is slow. Factories that survived 11 weeks of ferocious shelling limp along with skeleton staffs and whatever fuel they can scrounge.

Restaurants are lucky if they get 10 customers a day. Half the shops, hidden behind sandbags and earth-filled oildrums, are shuttered.

The night life that once throbbed in the clubs, bars and restaurants along the Mediterranean coastline is dead.

The famous Casino du Liban, where oil-rich sheiks and high rollers from around the world gambled, is closed.

It was a regular target for Syrian gunners who have battled the forces of Christian leader Gen. Michel Aoun since March 8 in some of the most savage battles of Lebanon's 14-year-old civil war.

Some 360 people have been killed and nearly 1,400 wounded, mostly civilians.

The Christians are tired and dispirited, struggling to cope with a grim fatalism.

The Syrians maintain their blockade of the Christian enclave, ringed on its landward sides by hostile Moslem forces.

Small cargo ships run the gauntlet of shellfire to bring in food and ammunition for the Christians, so there is no shortage of those items. But the blockade runners don't try bringing in gas.

"It only takes one hit to blow up a ship loaded with fuel," a police spokesman said.

Supermarkets bulge with imported goods — pink chamapagne, passion fruit tea, 10 brands of whisky, cookies, chocolates, hams, cheeses.

Fruit and vegetables are in short supply, but available for a price. Before the fighting, most produce came from Syrian-controlled areas. Now they are smuggled in at night by mule train from the north.

The enclave's fuel reserves went up in flames when a Syrian barrage blew up the seaside Dora depot in east Beirut two months ago.

The French, Lebanon's colonial rulers until 1943 and the Christians' traditional protector, shipped in 4,000 tons of fuel to reactivate closed power plants a few weeks ago.

But there's precious little gasoline around. Only about one-fifth of filling stations bother to open.

Police said two people have been killed and 10 wounded in gunfights over gas.

A worker at one filling station, who did not want to be identified, said it opens "only when the army can send a tank to maintain order."

"That's why people have to wait for days in front of the stations, and all they get in the end is 10 liters," a little more than two gallons, he said.

Backyard takes on Monet air

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Ross and Martha Moore's backyard has been used for just about every purpose imaginable. But until recently they hadn't considered planting the acreage in wildflowers.

"They started blooming around the first part of March and should last until August at the very latest," Moore, an independent geologist, said of the 20-25 different varieties of petals now blanketing 3,000 square feet of his corner lot.

The collection contains poppies, Indian blankets, Tahoka daisies, coreopsis and bluebonnets — just to name a few select plants which have roots in Texas, the Southwest or the North Central United States.

The Moores, who moved into the brick, ranch-style home at 3119 W. Louisiana Ave. back in 1953, have transformed the lot once covered with bee hives from a peach orchard to a baseball field for their four children to a garden of wildflowers in their 36 years in residence.

"I think Martha gets more enjoyment out this," Moore said, referring to the field of flowers his wife compares to a Monet painting.

Scarcity of rain delays planting

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Rain clouds ripe enough to burst over dry farmland soothes a farmer's heart at planting time.

But in West Texas, planting time is about over. Many fields are too dry to plant. And the rain clouds, when they did pass over, just went on by with not much more than a trace of moisture.

"I'd say we've got a pretty good start on a drought," said Midland County farmer-rancher Hoot Leonard, prior to Saturday night's potentially stormy weather. "But it could change over night. If we could get a gentle, two-inch rain, it could change the picture."

In the past week, it looked as if that picture would change for much of the Midland area, where cotton is the prime farm commodity. But it didn't.

Rains are still in want.

"A lot of farmers just don't have the moisture to plant," Leonard said. Nevertheless, many who haven't planted are going to plant on their dry-land farms and "hoping to get rain.

"If they do," Leonard said, "they can scratch that cotton out and have a good start." A rainfall on newly-planted cotton will form a crust, and sprouting cotton "just can't push though that crust" without a little help from the farmer and farm machinery.

If the underground moisture is there, cotton often is planted in late April and in May. Most irrigated cotton in the Midland area was planted then.

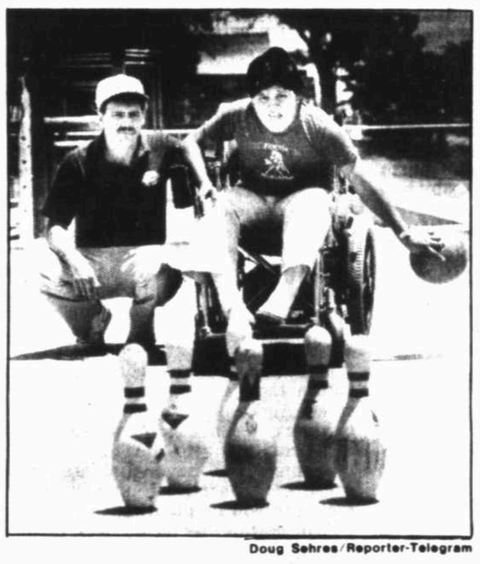

But dry-land cotton depends exclusively on rainfall, which has been in rare supply on Midland-area farms.

And the coming week is about the latest Midland farmers can plant cotton to beat out the killing-fall frost. And cotton planted after June likely would not have matured sufficiently when the frost lays on its deadly nip.

And for many farmers, around June 10 is the cut-off date for planting if they are to cash in on any crop insurance they might have bought early on and for any federal disaster payments.

And it was hail — not rain — that blanketed much of Dawson County farmland Thursday and Friday evenings and which late Saturday was threatening to strip more cotton or to drive more young cotton plants into the soil.

School ends on energetic note

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Sixth-grader Chris Stephens kept eyeing the clock Friday as he sat behind the main counter at South Elementary School and anxiously twisted and mangled the picture identification card in his hand. Four minutes until summer break.

"It's the most fun, greatest time of the year," said Chris, 12, who said he looks forward to swimming, a trip to Dallas and summer camp near Colorado City.

Meanwhile, down the hall in Christi Terrell's classroom, the second-graders lined up to give their teacher a last hug before shuffling beyond the door and out of the 200 W. Dakota St. school.

The academic floodgates all over Midland Independent School District opened as students completed the last school day.

"I'm about to cry," Miss Terrell, a first-year teacher, told her pupils before they left. "Ya'll have been a wonderful class. Have a real good summer. Read 'all you can."

Paula Seales, mother of a South second-grader and three other children, said her job as full-time mother now will have to shift from emphasizing education to "finding something to keep them busy."

New teachers find year delightful, frustrating

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Oh boy, what a day Lee High School journalism teacher Kim Masey had on the first day of school last September.

The yearbooks hadn't been delivered as promised, parents and students were demanding to know their arrival date and only three students had joined the school newspaper staff. It was the 22-year-old Ms. Masey's first day of teaching.

"It was horrible," Ms. Masey recalled Thursday, the second to last day before summer break. "It was problem after problem after problem with the yearbook. It turned into an interesting first few months."

But the yearbooks finally arrived in early November, and Ms. Masey recruited first-time young journalists for the newspaper staff.

"I taught them Journalism 1 in about three weeks," she said.

Fresh from college with dreams of teacherhood and the power to mold young minds into learning machines, about 75 new teachers each year in Midland Independent School District take over a class for the first time.

The experience for the first-year teacher can be as frustrating as it can be rewarding.

Christi Terrell, 23, who teaches second grade at South Elementary School, laughs about her first day of teaching last September, when she wore two different shoes two work, same color but different styles.

"I was afraid the parents would come and say, 'This is my child's teacher?' " said Miss Terrell, who later that day went home to change shoes.

At first, Miss Terrell said she was almost as unsure about her new career as she was about her choice of footwear that first morning.

"My first six weeks I was wondering whether I was doing anything right," she said. "I was expecting everything in the world to go wrong. Sometimes it was frustrating."

But she said it eventually turned into a rewarding school year. She almost broke into tears Friday as she hugged her pupils who had lined up to file out the door and leave for the summer.

"The kids are really my highlight," she said.

Thomas Holland, MISD executive personnel director, said it's not unusual for a first-year teacher to feel a little uncomfortable with that first class.

"I think the hardest thing a beginning teacher has to do is getting into the routine of teaching," Holland said. "But after their first year they have that down pat."

Of the new teachers MISD hires each year, about half are fresh out of college, he said. Whether a beginner gets hired over an experienced educator depends on the person, he said.

"It's a matter of trying to fill a need," Holland said, adding that the district doesn't hire inexperienced teachers to keep salary costs low. "The principal wants people who are experienced and people who are just coming out. We just want to hire the best person."

> "I was afraid the parents would say, 'This is my child's teacher?' "
> — Christi Terrell, South Elementary School

Before hitting their first class day, beginning instructors must go through orientation sessions, while coordinators explain various aspects of MISD, such as the appraisal process and curriculums.

"We try to make them as prepared as possible before they come in and start their class," Holland said.

Although most of the beginners are hired from Texas colleges and universities, MISD recruiters also make visits to institutions in New Mexico, Louisiana and Oklahoma.

Miss Terrell, a native of Stamford, a small town north of Abilene, received her teaching certificate from Angelo State University in San Angelo.

"It just seemed like Midland wasn't too big and wasn't too small," Miss Terrell said of her reasons for coming here. "The school district had a lot to offer."

Ms. Masey, a graduate of Permian High School in Odessa who received her teaching degree in 1987 from Texas Tech University, said at first she was unsure whether to go into teaching or journalism.

"I really didn't think I was going to be a teacher," she said. "This job just kind of came open."

Ms. Masey's students do much more than write fluff stories for the self-supportive newspaper. Sometimes when a school organization goes out of town to compete or perform, Ms. Masey will take some of her students to cover the event.

She and five students traveled to Washington, D.C., in January to cover President Bush's inauguration, when the Lee High School band marched in the inauguration parade.

Jeff Stoll, 25, a native of New Ulm, Minn., who received his teaching certificate from Southwest State University in his home state, worked for a food company here before deciding to enter teaching this year.

When his job as a physical education teacher at Bonham Elementary School was shifted to physical education teacher of special education children in nine MISD elementary school, Stoll said it was like changing to a completely different boat in mid-stream.

"It's totally different from regular classrooms," he said. "The more you understand, the easier it is to work with special education kids."

The key, he said, is creatively adapting regular sports games such as volleyball and bowling. The pupils had trouble handling a regular volleyball, so he threw them a rubber beach ball and the game was on.

"I don't regret it at all," Stoll said of his decision to enter teaching. "It's been fun — the best job I've ever had."

Semple scholarship endowed by family of accident victim

From Staff Reports

The Permian Basin Area Foundation announces the establishment of the Brian A. Semple Memorial Scholarship Fund.

The scholarship fund is created to provide financial assistance to high school graduates of Midland County high schools. The fund is endowed by gifts from family and friends of Semple, who was killed in an automobile accident in April of this year.

Scholarships and expenses will be administered by the Permian Basin Area Foundation board of governors and will be awarded on an annual basis beginning in the fall of 1990.

Recipients of the scholarships may use the financial assistance program to attend Midland College, a four-year college within the state of Texas, or a Texas law enforcement educational institution. The scholarships may be renewed through the maintenance of a satisfactory scholastic standing.

"Midland is indeed fortunate to have people like Charles and Margaret Semple, who can take an untimely event such as the death of their son and turn it into something which gives hope and promise to the future youth of this community," said Deane Stoltz, chairman of the foundation's board of governor's said while accepting the gifts for the scholarship fund. "This scholarship program will go a long way in assuring that financial hardship is not a stumbling block to a student who wishes to further his or her education."

Are those early morning walks really worth the effort?

A friend of mine, an elderly sort of fellow, has taken up the habit of rising early each morning and taking a brisk 45-minute walk around his neighborhood.

When he first mentioned this peculiar development to me the other night, my reaction was simple and to the point.

I said, "Why?"

"Because it makes me feel good," he responded. "Besides, the beauty at that hour can be most stimulating. The sun is just beginning to rise in the east and there's a certain stillness in the air. This may sound corny, but the morning just flat-out smells good."

Ott

I was amused by his remarks.

"I knew when you gave up smoking something like this would follow," I teased.

"Don't knock it 'til you try it," he said.

"Yeah, right," I responded while reaching for my 38th Marlboro of the day.

Still, the thought kept nagging at me. After all, I have heard other people — my parents for example — say the same thing. There must be something to the early morning hours that I have been missing all this time. From Day One, I thought the point was to stay in bed until the last possible minute and then slowly drag yourself to your feet and into the shower before finally accepting the dreadful fact that you have to get to the office before the boss arrives.

But being a daring sort of individual I decided to give it a whirl. I did it twice; once in my neighborhood, the second time downtown.

Here are my findings:

1) Walking in the downtown area is more fun. There's lots of activity, despite the ungodly hour. Cars and trucks are buzzing by, occasionally honking at a wayward pedestrian, the sun is peeking around office buildings, other people are rushing about, newspaper racks, crammed full of current events and last night's box scores, are at every intersection and the coffee shops, those great centers of gossip and other forms of vital information, are crowded with other early risers. You almost get the feeling you are in a big city. There is something truly exciting about that.

2) Dogs who have the audacity to bark at me should be flogged. That's one of the problems with walking in a neighborhood instead of downtown. Everyone has a dog and all dogs by their very nature love to bark at strangers who walk by their master's home. I understand that. Still, I don't like it. Give me a well-mannered cat who minds his own business any day.

3) Like my friend had suggested, there is a certain smell to the early morning — whether you are downtown or in a residential area. I can't quite describe it, but it's there. And it does smell good. I rate it right up there with bacon frying and coffee brewing. And believe me, that puts it in the high rent district of my personal favorites.

4) When a person rises early for walking purposes, he tends to tire earlier than normal once nighttime rolls around. It appears to be a trade-off of sorts and frankly I'm not sure I'm willing to go along with it. David Letterman would never forgive me. Neither would my poker-playing buddies who rely on my losses to help supplement their incomes.

5) Walking is currently the "in" thing, especially among suburbanites. It is part of the new health kick everyone seems to be into these days. You know, eat sensibly and get plenty of exercise. That sort of thing. Come to think of it, that might be the best reason of all for halting my involvement in this thing before it gets totally out of hand.

And with that thought in mind, I'll have another Marlboro. Thank you every much.

Gary Ott is city editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

Martha, a retired Alamo Junior High School math teacher, concurred with her husband's assertion that the adventure lies in trying to identify each new variety when it sprouts and blooms.

"It's like an Easter egg hunt," she said, observing that the Indian blanket, whose yellow-tipped, crimson petals, are among her favorites.

The Moores have a book on wildflowers which they frequently use to assist them in identifying the varieties growing in the back yard, but Martha asserted that it's "too scientific" for her liking.

Two aluminum lawn chairs and a rusted metal table rest about 20 feet from the garden where the Moores and an oversized black Labrador whom they affectionately called "Bronk," spend most of their leisure time admiring the creation.

A cluster of five bird houses are erected adjacent to the garden to invite purple martins, the largest of the sparrow family, on the migration north from their winter haven in Brazil.

Moore set out a tub of mud and a pile of grass clippings, mixed with lint from the clothes dryer, so the birds had materials in which to build their nests.

The nestlings should emerge from the bird houses for their first flying lesson later this month, he said.

While some city-slickers think wildflowers are an endangered species, the Moores — who describe themselves as amateur biologists and gardeners — know better.

"I broke every rule in the book and just look at it," Moore said, referring to the garden which was planted in November — much later than the experts recommend.

The impetus for planting the garden costing a total of $300 came from Moore's distaste for people who pick wildflowers despite laws that prohibit such actions on state lands.

"I see people yanking them out all the time and it just infuriates me," he said, adding that he has yet to catch someone pilfering petals from this garden.

Perhaps the Moores' message comes through loud and clear.

It's a simple cardboard sign that reads, "P-L-E-A-S-E, D-O-N'T!"

Midland County farmer Roy Graham has seen dry years in times past. The farmer watches his 20-year-old son, Mark, drive an eight-row John Deere tractor in Graham's dry-land field in Greenwood. The tractor is outfitted for planting cottonseed late in the spring planting season. Graham and many other farmers have held off planting in dry-land fields as long as possible in hopes that ground-soaking rains will come to prepare their fields for planting. Irrigated fields were planted in April and May.

DROUGHT

"I DON'T THINK there's any cotton left," said Dawson County Deputy Sheriff Kent Smith. "We h golf ball-size hail and a lot of it."

The Cotton King community west of Lamesa was among the areas blasted by hail Thursday. And on Friday, hail struck east and southeast of Lamesa in the Key and Midway areas and bombarded the northern part of Lamesa and farmland northward toward Lubbock.

"We are going to have a lot people moaning the blues" over damaged roofs, hail-hit cars and trucks, broken glass, damaged trees, shrubs and gardens, and ruined cotton crops.

"We had a lot of cotton up," Smith said. "It just beat it plumb down in the ground."

The hail "worked on us about an hour or hour and a half," he said.

South of Lamesa toward Midland, farmland mostly stayed dry last week. And if it was damaged, it was from wind-blown sand and static electricity, which burned the tender cotton.

"If we could just get rain to go with the wind, we'd be doing a lot better," said Newell Tate, who farms northwest of Stanton.

In spotted areas south and north of Midland, enough rain already had fallen to allow crops to get started.

"Surprisingly enough, the little old cotton is looking pretty — still hanging on," observed Leonard. "It's amazing."

South of town, land farmed by farmers such as Lee Bell, George Anderson, Mike Denny and James Walraven is faring well from earlier rains.

"J.D. Crawford has a good stand," noted Leonard.

North of town, land operated by Norman Koonce and Louis Koonce is supporting young cotton.

Otherwise, most dry-land fields, if already seeded, are only supporting dry topsoil and dust.

In the fertile Greenwood area east of Midland, "We haven't had enough rain to think about planting," said Leonard.

But because of the lateness and dryness of the season, "farmers just don't have the moisture to plant" but are "going to plant dry" on the chance that rain will soon follow.

CHARLIE WRIGHT, general manager of the Midland Farmers Cooperative, noted that farmers who have taken out multi-peril insurance coverage must plant by June 10 — rain or shine — to benefit from the limited coverage in case of crop failure.

"You can't wait 'til you get into the middle of a drought and take the insurance out," Wright said. Most bankers who loan money to farmers require that they take out multi-peril insurance, Wright said.

And under a federal disaster program, a farmer beset by drought "might get three-fourths" of his farming expenses. "You've got to get past the expenses to get any groceries," he said.

"It doesn't make any difference if it's as dry as a bone, you've got to plant the cotton by the 10th (of June)," he said.

But if farmers "get moisture anytime this month, the farmers will plant cotton. It's late," Wright said, "You have to have so much hot weather," which the plant scientists call "heat units," for cotton to mature and yield lint.

"At lot of times, we have cool weather in September, but not every year," Wright said. "If they plant late in June, that only leaves July and August to have a cotton crop make."

"All of the irrigated cotton is in," Wright said. "There is some dry-land cotton that is planted and up to a stand. And unless we get a rain pretty quick, it's not going to do anything. It's going to die."

Farmers who haven't planted because of a dearth of underground moisture will be planting this week.

"The cotton that hasn't been planted will be planted rain or shine," Wright said. "They will plant anytime up to July."

The most recent severe drought here was in 1983, Wright noted. That year, the gin processed 2,700 bales of cotton. Since then, production has been on the increase. The gin turned out 21,000 bales last year, which was close to 1979's high yield of 22,000 bales for the Midland co-op.

Marc Twaweek, co-op gin superintendent, noted that a rain in the coming week would give farmers a chance to "make a fair crop" if they plant early-maturing cotton varieties.

BUT IF "THERE is any kind of moisture in the ground," Traweek said, "it's going to rot that seed" if the moisture is insufficient to get the cotton up.

An advantage of planting early, such as in late April or in May, is in "getting ahead" of bollworms and the flea-hoppers.

"The flea-hopper starts when the plant is young — when it is most vulnerable ... and sucks all of juice out of them (young plants)," Traweek said.

"The objective in this part of the country is to get the cotton in early, so that the plant will be mature enough to be able to withstand that kind of (insect) pressure."

In deciding whether or not to use insecticides, farmers must weigh those costs against projected production with and without insecticides and the harm done to beneficial insects.

"It's a personal preference," Traweek said. "That insecticide isn't cheap."

Roy Graham, who farms in the Greenwood community, right now is more concerned about the impending drought that he is with a future insect problem.

"We will cross that bridge when we get to it," he said.

Graham is concerned about dry-land cotton.

"It won't do a thing 'til it gets some moisture," Graham said. Due to the lateness of the season, dry-land farmers "already are planting it dry, so they will get a jump-start" if the rains do come soon.

"We are running out of time for cotton in this part of the world," said Graham, who does have stands of irrigated cotton, which nevertheless are in need of rainfall. Some of his irrigated cotton on north-south rows sustained wind-burn damage from strong southerly winds last week.

"THAT RAIN THE Lord gives us is much better than what is pumped out of the ground," Graham said.

And for those times when it does rain, Graham has in place conservation measures, such as deep plowing and water-furrow dikes to hold water and to keep it in the field and from running down into ditches.

Graham and his son, Mark, will be planting dry-land cotton this week in banking on soaking June rains and on early-maturing cotton for a fall harvest.

"No one can say what the fall will hold for us until it gets here," Graham said.

And if the cotton doesn't make, he will plant grain sorghum (milo) or a hay-grazer.

"With the unsettled weather, you have to be prepared for everything," said Graham, who farms because he likes to farm and accepts the wiles of weather, insects, and the market as just parts of the territory that come with farming.

The last two years, 1987 and 1988, have been "good cotton-producing years," noted Graham.

Rainfall and sunshine were in harmony with cotton crops.

"It is probably a lot for us to ask for three good years in a row," Graham said.

SCHOOL

"You have to keep them occupied with something worthwhile," Ms. Seales said. "School is worthwhile and now you have to find something to fill all that time."

Already on the agenda for her children are trips to the pool, museums and yardwork, she said.

The last day for Midland and Lee high schools, which saw about 885 seniors graduate Friday night, went without incident, the schools' principals said.

"It went very, very smooth and I'm very proud of that," MHS Principal Jimmie Kelly said. "It has really been a great year. We've had an outstanding performance from our students in every area."

LHS Principal Jack Fryar was equally enthusiastic about the successes of his school during the 1988-89 school year.

"It couldn't have been better," Fryar said. "We had a phenominal year at Lee High School."

But while students and teachers are free to pursue their personal endeavors until school resumes in September, administrators have three months to hammer out the 1989-90 school year budget among other duties.

"It's not as busy in the sense of parent contacts and student problems," Superintendent Joe Baressi said of summer responsibilities. "But it's always a relief when you're responsible for 20,000 students and 2,000 teachers and you've had a productive school year and everybody is safe. It's a load off your shoulders."

Administrators, including campus principals, will be busy developing the budget, holding in-service training sessions, hiring teachers and planning curriculums, Baressi said.

Little girl's condition still critical Saturday

From Staff Reports

Haley Harvey, the 2-year-old Midland child who was injured in a swimming-pool accident in northwest Midland on Wednesday afternoon, remained in critical condition Saturday in Lubbock General Hospital.

The child reportedly had been swimming with her two older brothers, who went inside the house. Later, according to Midland police, the mother found her daughter floating in the pool.

The child was flown to the Lubbock hospital.

Traffic detectors adjust some lights

By LYN MILLER

Cooperating with traffic detectors while driving in Midland helps to ensure more efficient traffic sensing by the devices installed to keep traffic moving at a reasonable pace.

The operational efficiency of any traffic-responsive control system depends on its ability to sense the presence of traffic. Should a driver desiring to make a left-hand turn pull his car into an intersection on a green light and not the left-turn indicator, the vehicle would be out of the range of the sensing area and would, therefore, not receive the left-turn light.

Instead, communication was received by the traffic signal that there was no need to indicate a left turn since no traffic was available to utilize it.

Traffic sensing is accomplished by a device commonly referred to as a detector, of which there are several types. The Inductive Loop Detector, utilized by the City of Midland Traffic Engineering Division, allows for input from a buried cable in either a 6-foot by 20-foot area or a 6-foot by 40-foot area of the left turn zone into the local intersection controller assembly.

Detectors operate on the principal of detecting a change in energy caused by the motion or presence of a vehicle. Therefore, when a vehicle enters the left turn lane, driving over the buried cable, the magnetic field which communicates to the traffic signal control equipment is changed.

These detectors are also located at intersections of minor streets with major streets. The traffic light remains green on the major street until a vehicle approaches on the minor street and activates the detector.

In the past, pressure plate detectors were used in downtown Midland. Although not in use today, some still remain buried under the city's streets because removal would be too costly.

The use of detectors using pressure proved to be unreliable because rocks would work their way around the plate, situated two feet into the pavement, and cause it to become inoperable.

Installation of that type of system was expensive, required closing a traffic lane for an extended period of time and resulted in a dip when the roadway was resurfaced.

At various intersections in Midland, the approach streets contain loop detectors. The traffic light at the intersection will remain red in all four directions until an approaching vehicle passes over the detector.

A message is thereby sent, causing the light to change to green allowing the vehicle to pass through the intersection.

Also, located at various traffic signals throughout the city are emergency vehicle detectors which provide traffic signal control giving priority to emergency vehicles over other traffic.

As a result, use of this system promotes increased safety at intersections, improved traffic flow and faster response time for emergency vehicles.

The Traffic Engineering Division urges motorists to drive with caution and to follow these suggestions to receive maximum benefits from traffic detectors:

- When stopping at a red light in the left turn lane, remain in that lane until the left turn arrow appears.
- When coming to a red light, stop at the stop bar (the line painted across the street).
- Be mindful of emergency vehicles and pull to the side of the street and stop.

For additional information or answers to questions regarding traffic detectors and their use in the city of Midland, telephone Gary Saunders, traffic coordinator with the Traffic Engineering Division, at 685-7280.

Mauro's fuels plan could help state

An alternative fuels bill which Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro proposed and the legislature enacted in the hectic final hours Monday prior to adjournment should benefit the Lone Star State in a number of ways — not the least of which will be giving the natural gas industry a much-needed shot in the arm.

If signed by Gov. Bill Clements, the bill will mandate the conversion to compressed natural gas (CNG) of all state-owned or operated fleets with more than 15 vehicles, school districts with more than 50 vehicles (including Midland Independent School District) and all local transit authorities.

Although the conversion to CNG undoubtedly will create some problems for various communities around the state and potentially some additional expense for taxpayers — even though Mauro contends the conversion will pay for itself in future savings — it's a step that needs to be taken for several reasons.

■ Compressed natural gas is a clean-burning fuel, and figures from Mauro's office assert that burning CNG cuts carbon monoxide emissions in half, nitrogen oxide by 30 percent, and hydrocarbon emissions by 40 percent, while virtually eliminating emissions of particulates and exhaust hydrocarbons. It is primarily those and industrial emissions that have been scientifically cited as the reasons for an increase in acid rain in recent years, and the resulting federal standards issued to control their release.

■ For all its wide-open spaces and clean environment, some Texas cities have begun to show signs of deteriorating air quality in recent years. The time to do something about protecting the state's air quality is not after the air is dirtied but before. Mauro says his proposal will push Texas to No. 2 in the nation, behind California, in terms of its Clean Air Act and give the state the strongest alternative fuels program in the U.S.

■ The program could be the stimulus needed to start the natural gas industry on the way to new importance in the future of the state. A Railroad Commission estimate says that natural gas revenues will bring an additional $93 million to Texas in 1990-91.

The program appears difficult to fault. If it means an expanded energy industry for the state, protects the environment, creates new jobs and costs as little as Mauro predicts, it will be well worth trying on this limited scale.

Another View:

Tinkerer's economy

For the past eight years, most economists have been mostly wrong about the American economy. The Reagan-era tax cuts didn't achieve what the supply-siders said they would, and neither has the recession so often predicted by traditional economists yet materialized. Inflation seems always to be threatening but never quite happens. Yet the "continuing expansion" that administration economists keep calling this state of affairs is far from robust and isn't quite the correct analysis either.

It's not that economists on all sides don't know what they are talking about. It's just that the Federal Reserve — and, to a lesser extent, the central banks of other countries — have so far been unusually successful at tinkering. When worried about recession — as when the stock market crashed — the Fed tinkers American interest rates down. When that produces inflationary fears, it tinkers interest rates up again enough to discourage a self-fulfilling spiral of price rises. When that starts sending the dollar climbing too fast, the Fed starts backing off and the other central banks step in to try to tamp down dollar prices just enough to undercut any stampede psychology on that front. (That's what's happening now.) And then they start all over again.

In part, it's skill that makes all this work. Probably in larger part, it's sheer luck — a luck that usually looks like it's just about to run out and which looks that way again now, with central banks in the past few days having noticeable trouble keeping down the price of the dollar in the face of high American interest rates and nervousness among Hong Kong money interests about events in China. Economists have been caught too often crying wolf to predict failure this time. But no one thinks this reign of tinkering can be counted on to work forever.

Without denying the money regulators their due — and the nation's thanks — tinkering by itself is no substitute for efforts to achieve the kind of economic stability that would make their job less breathtakingly risky. And those efforts require action from Congress and the president. Until American budget deficits are brought under control and American growth and productivity are ensured by programs to produce internationally competitive investments and an internationally superior work force, we will remain on the tinkerer's roller coaster, which we have watched dipping and curving again so perilously recently.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, June 4, the 155th day of 1989. There are 210 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 4, 1940, the Allied military evacuation at Dunkirk, France, ended. British Prime Minister Winston S. Churchill told the House of Commons, "We shall fight on the beaches, we shall fight on the landing grounds, we shall fight in the fields and in the streets, we shall fight in the hills; we shall never surrender."

On this date:

In 1647, the English army seized King Charles I as a hostage.

In 1812, the Louisiana Territory was renamed the Missouri Territory.

In 1878, Turkey turned Cyprus over to the British.

In 1896, Henry Ford made a successful test run with his car in a nighttime drive through the streets of Detroit.

In 1942, the Battle of Midway began, resulting in America's first significant victory over the Japanese in World War II.

In 1944, Allied forces liberated Rome.

In 1947, the House of Representatives overwhelmingly approved the Taft-Hartley Act. The law was later enacted over President Harry S. Truman's veto.

In 1956, the State Department published a partial text of a closed-door speech given the previous February by Nikita Khrushchev, in which the Soviet leader denounced his predecessor, Josef Stalin.

In 1985, the U.S. Supreme Court struck down an Alabama law allowing daily moments of silence in public schools for "meditation or voluntary prayer" by students.

In 1986, Jonathan Jay Pollard, a former Navy intelligence analyst, pleaded guilty in Washington to spying for Israel.

In 1987, the congressional Iran-Contra committees voted to grant limited immunity to former National Security Council aide Oliver North, following an appeal by independent counsel Lawrence Walsh to reject immunity.

Ten years ago: President John Vorster of South Africa resigned in the wake of a report charging him with covering up irregularities in a government agency.

Congress may tackle insurance rates

WASHINGTON — Public outrage over auto insurance rates has shifted to congressional outrage, and the insurance industry, unaccustomed to the hot breath of government, is in a sweat.

Jack Anderson

The insurance lobby recently hired two big-gun political operatives to clean up its greedy image. But big names alone aren't going to stop the regulatory movement sparked last year by Proposition 103 in California. Many states are now looking at similar rate regulation. Congress is doing the same, led by Rep. James Florio, D-N.J. He chairs the House Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Commerce, Consumer Protection and Competitiveness.

In five subcommittee hearings, insurance industry officials have cried poverty. They say that rising legal fees, car repair costs, hospital bills and other expenses have forced them to raise premiums. The cost of insuring yourself against any number of calamities has soared at four times the rate of inflation in the past three years. And the industry says it is still just squeaking by.

In insurance parlance, this is what it means to squeak by. The insurance industry has an estimated $1.7 trillion in assets. In the past 11 years, its stock values have jumped by almost 400 percent, twice the average industrial stock increase. Yet in states such as New Jersey, where rates are the highest in the country, many insurance companies are whining that they will go bankrupt if they have to lower their rates.

Just how tough is life on the brink of bankruptcy? Our associate Jim Lynch went through the Securities and Exchange Commission and other sources to find the annual compensation for the industry's top executives. Here are some members of the million dollar club:

— The chairman of Hartford Insurance Co., $1.7 million.

— The chairman of Cigna Corp., $1.5 million.

— The chairman of Prudential Insurance Company of America, $1.4 million.

— The president of Continental Insurance Co., $1.3 million.

— The chairman and president of Aetna Life and Casualty Co., $1.1 million.

A spokesman for the Insurance Information Institute says what you would expect him to — the big salaries are not out of line when compared to "multi-national corporations." He also said insurance companies are clearing a profit margin of only 2 or 3 cents on every premium dollar. Consumer advocates laugh at that estimate. The ordinary people who spend more on premiums than they ever collect in claims aren't laughing. Florio has asked the General Accounting Office to study the industry's confusing balance sheets and find the botton line.

Even in these "hard times,' the insurance industry is not st. gy when it comes to promoting itse. It spent an estimated $70 million in a futile campaign to kill Proposition 103 in California. More recently, the Insurance Information Institute hired an advertising firm and a public relations outfit that boast two of the big names in the business — John Sasso, who ran Michael Dukakis' campaign, and Craig Fuller who ran George Bush's campaign.

The growing swarm of auto insurance critics is buzzing around trying to prove that the industry wastes money. About 35 cents from each premium dollar goes to industry expenses. A joint report from the Consumer Federation of America and the National Insurance Consumers Organization concludes that auto insurance premiums could be reduced by as much as 30 percent if the industry were only more efficient.

Three bills in Congress would bring the insurance business under federal oversight instead of leaving the job to the states, and would force insurance companies to abide by anti-trust laws. Similar bills have bounced around for years, but the muscle-bound insurance lobby was strong enough to fight them.

But this year, the public is building its own muscle on this issue.

Political words can change goals of Soviets

WASHINGTON — Watching a new thought pass through a Marxist gathering is, said H.G. Wells, like watching a breeze blow across a field of ripe corn: The breeze passes and the seried ranks of minds return to their original position. Wells never saw the likes of Aleksandr Obolensky and Leonid Sukhov.

George F. Will

Obolensky will someday be the answer to a trivia question, but today he is not trivial: He is the first person publicly to challenge a supreme Soviet leader in an election. At the new Congress of People's Deputies, he offered himself as an alternative candidate to Gorbachev for president.

"I understand," he said with nice understatement, "that I have a very slim chance. I want in our history an example of something resembling alternative elections. This is what my voters wanted and what I promised them."

He does not yet quite have the hang of it. In a democracy, making promises is enough; keeping them is foolhardy. Anyway, only one-third of the delegates would vote even to include his name with Gorbachev's on the ballot (which Gorbachev won 2,123 to 87).

However, Obolensky's antic spiritedness was dazzling in light of this: The debate occurred in the shadow of one of those huge, overbearing Soviet statues designed to diminish individuals — a monstrous gleaming likeness of Lenin, glaring into The Future.

The statue represents an intractable problem. All the symbols and icons are antithetical to pluralism. None is more so than Lenin, the mummified corpse at the center of the state.

The referents of American political argument are Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln — all of them embodiments of democratic consensus. The omnipresent visual and ideological referent in the Soviet Union is the father of totalitarianism.

Lenin lived in the clean, well-lit prison of one idea: "scientific socialism." His remorseless savagery flowed from it and from the lesson he chose to learn from the European left's greatest trauma, the suppression of the Paris Commune in 1871. The communards were, Lenin said, guilty of "excessive magnanimity....(The Commune) should have exterminated its enemies."

By exterminate, Lenin meant exterminate. Having supplanted the idea of individual guilt with class guilt, he set about killing categories of people, and thus became a Founding Father of genocide.

Soviet political vocabulary, including symbols and heroes, is utterly anti-democratic. There are few indigenous cultural resources for democrats to draw upon. Thus it is breathtaking to read the words of Leonid Sukhov, a deputy identified as "a driver from Kharkov." His words were spoken beneath Lenin's glare and to Gorbachev:

"I compare you not to Lenin or Stalin, but to the great Napoleon, who, fearing neither bullets nor death, led the nation to victory, but owing to his sycophants and his wife, transformed the republic into an empire. You can put me to death, but I fear this path."

Dwell upon that last sentence. Democracy is trying to sprout in stony soil indeed. Death-on-a-whim has been so central to the political culture that it is part of the syntax of public discourse. But once such discourse is public in the sense of political, everything changes, or perhaps has changed.

Note that Sukhov's statement is movingly European, making its point with reference to one of the continent's great shared experiences, Napoleon. The reference says: History did not begin in 1917. Then, we seceded from European civilization; what was done can be undone.

The Congress, although as yet a Potemkin Congress, is more important than the Oriental Woodstock in Beijing.

Twenty years ago this summer, Woodstock, a wallow in the mud of rural New York, appealed to Western worship of youth. That sentimentality is based on the frivolous equation of "spontaneity" with "authenticity," and of both with seriousness. Granted, the protesters in Tiananmen Square, unlike the self-absorbed wallowers at Woodstock, are brave and morally serious. But like Woodstock, the Tiananmen happening is more telegenic than powerful.

Student effusions can destabilize societies and can be bent to serve the purposes of others. But student uprisings rarely institutionalize any impulse, as the Soviet Congress can do, if allowed to.

Obolensky's and, even more, Sukhov's words are more momentous than Gorbachev's arms proposals. Those proposals are consistent with modernization and rationalization of Soviet armed forces, irrespective of any changes in Soviet global goals. Besides, policy changes can be changed back.

But dramatic political words cannot be called back. They reverberate. Doing so, they change the public's most important sense, the sense of the possible. And that change can in time change the goals of the state.

Let's not lose our heads over scoundrels!

The newspaper columnist's many duties include an obligation to inflate the inconsequentialities of daily events by noting their parallels with great historical moments.

Russell Baker

It is in this spirit that I call attention to the 200th anniversary of the French Revolution, now being observed in countries where many still know some history and even in parts of America that have commercial stakes in keeping the French happy.

The parallel between the overthrow of French royalty and the imminent overthrow of the Democratic Party's leaders in our own House of Representatives surely tells us something, if only that we are 200 years behind the French.

The French, of course, have been telling us this ever since Simone de Beauvoir visited Chicago and reported back to Jean-Paul Sartre that the gangsters were highly overrated.

This freed Sartre to pronounce Jerry Lewis the supreme flower of American culture, after which General de Gaulle spent most of his time devising new ways to get President Kennedy's goat.

Things reached bottom when the usual troublemaking poll showed that 87 percent of American high-school students thought Diderot was the name of Elvis Presley's cat. But enough of this dreary tale of the falling out of ancient friends.

If Speaker Jim Wright is our own Louis XVI, he must go to the guillotine, speaking figuratively of course. The modern American equivalent of going to the guillotine is being sentenced to 50 hours of community service, which brings us to one of the ironies so enriching to stories like this.

Because, look: Speaker Wright has been in the community-service sector for 40 years at least, and the whole aim of the present revolution is to put him out, out, out of community service.

This leads to what NASA people call an anomaly, in this case meaning something that doesn't make sense.

To wit, in a country that punishes its rogues with sentences to community service, people who work in the community-service business can only be punished by forbidding them to do community service.

This, as the famously logical French would be the first to say, makes no sense. It was to avoid this very anomaly that they contrived the guillotine after Jean-Paul Sartre pointed out that the revolution would become the laughingstock of Europe if they sentenced Louis XVI to stop doing community service, since all Europe knew Louis had never done much community service anyhow, and the little he had done had been done so incompetently that they had to take it back to the shop and have it done all over again.

A good parallel to the French Revolution requires a modern Robespierre. "The Incorruptible," Thomas Carlyle called Robespierre. Americans call him "The Indispensable."

This is because Robespierre is one of the few French names Americans can pronounce. That's why he and Beaujolais are such big favorites among American speakers.

The Robespierre to Speaker Wright's Louis is Representative Newt Gingrich. Imagine the French trying to pronounce Newt Gingrich. It would be as bad as an American trying to pronounce Abbe Sieyes.

Representative Gingrich is a Republican who, like Robespierre, is dedicated to destroying the ancient regime (Wright XVI et al.) and creating perfect purity in community service.

In this sublime state, he says, Americans will replace ancient regimers (Democrats) with Republicans.

There is another anomaly here: whereas the first Robespierre wanted to give power to the sans-culottes ("men without fancy breeches"), Robespierre-Gingrich hopes to empower the beaucoup-de-culottes ("the fancy-pants crowd").

Citizen Gingrich has been derided by Simone de Beauvoir for "anomalous thinking," and no wonder. He says once Americans realize that ethical rot has infested the House of Representatives, they will rise up and replace a tyranny of rotten-ethic Democrats with a reign of pure-living beaucoup-de-culottes.

As Danton pointed out in his brilliant twice-a-week column, Americans have always perceived the House of Representatives as infested with rot, yet they go to the polls every two years and monotonously reelect the same people, each voter apparently convinced that his own congressman is doing splendid work.

Yves Montand asks me to advise Gingrich that Robespierre ended just like Louis XVI, except that his jaw was so painfully shattered that he probably welcomed the guillotining. Yves is right, too. You could look it up.

Bush's NATO triumphs should quiet critics

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.

NEW YORK — President Bush returned from Europe to his home in Kennebunkport, Maine, this weekend with one of the greatest foreign policy triumphs in American history.

Hearst

What he achieved at the NATO summit meeting in Brussels not only shamed his critics, but his far-reaching conventional force proposals, which won the support of the Western allies and Moscow's welcome, could, if implemented, put an end to the massive East-West military confrontation that has existed in Europe for 40 years.

It would limit the number of Soviet and American troops based on foreign soil in Europe, or anywhere else, to 275,000 each. This would involve a reduction of 30,000 U.S. troops and 325,000 Soviet troops.

In an important concession to Soviet leader Gorbachev, the president offered to negotiate a 15 percent reduction in NATO's combat aircraft and helicopters in return for a much larger reduction in similar type Soviet aircraft. He also decided to lift the special U.S. sanction against high technology sales to the Soviet Union imposed by the Carter administration in 1980 after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

The Congressional Budget Office estimated the president's proposed reduction in U.S. troops in Europe would alone save American taxpayers $2.2 billion by 1994. Reducing by 15 percent America's combat aircraft and helicopters in Europe, with all their logistic support, could save more billions of dollars over the next decade.

While western experts said negotiating details of President Bush's plan would involve "enormous problems," including verification, the president expressed confidence that if Gorbachev wants it, the agreement could be completed in six months to one year.

If we are lucky enough to have that happen, both President Bush and President Gorbachev should get the Nobel Peace Prize.

Our president's momentous arms reduction proposals, and the compromise he and Secretary of State James Baker engineered on the crisis with West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl over short-range nuclear missiles, were sweet vindication for the remorseless criticism to which the president was subjected at home and abroad by politicians and ignorant pundits.

He was assailed for failing to respond "positively" to Gorbachev's initiatives, for being "out-maneuvered" by the Soviet leader, for "lack of imagination," "indecisiveness," for being a "wimp," and a "mere administrator with no sense of the joy of politics." Anyone who watched President Bush on television at the NATO summit meeting in Brussels and with Chancellor Kohl in Germany could see how he was relishing the joy of world politics.

At the very time the critical heat was most intense, the president and Baker were involved in secret contacts with Gorbachev over conventional arms force reductions. The president was not going to respond to the Soviet leader's propaganda maneuvers until he knew whether Gorbachev was really prepared to negotiate a conventional force parity agreement.

The breakthrough came around May 10 when Secretary Baker was meeting with the Soviet leader in Moscow. Requesting secrecy, Gorbachev told Baker he was prepared to negotiate a conventional force parity agreement on the basis of the western position.

When President Bush received this exhilarating information, he decided to move quickly. He ordered Defense Secretary Dick Cheney and the Joint Chiefs of Staff to shape a conventional force reduction proposal that would go beyond what had already been envisaged by the NATO allies.

When the bureaucratic experts in the Defense and State Departments raised strong objections to the president's willingness to meet Gorbachev's insistence that U.S. combat aircraft and helicopters should be included in the arms reduction negotiations, Bush lost his patience. He gathered a small group of his top arms control advisers, including Cheney, Baker, and Admiral William J. Crowe, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, at his Kennebunkport home. He told them he wanted to take "a bold step," outlined what he had in mind and ordered speedy drafting of the plan in time for him to take it to the NATO summit meeting.

When the draft was completed and approved by President Bush, Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence S. Eagleburger was sent on a secret mission to the Western European leaders to inform them in advance of what the president intended to propose. Restoration of NATO unity and encouraging prospects for an historic East-West conventional force parity agreement in Europe were the results.

If that's not great leadership, I'll eat my Panama hat.

BILL MODISETT

Bush should outshine Gorbachev

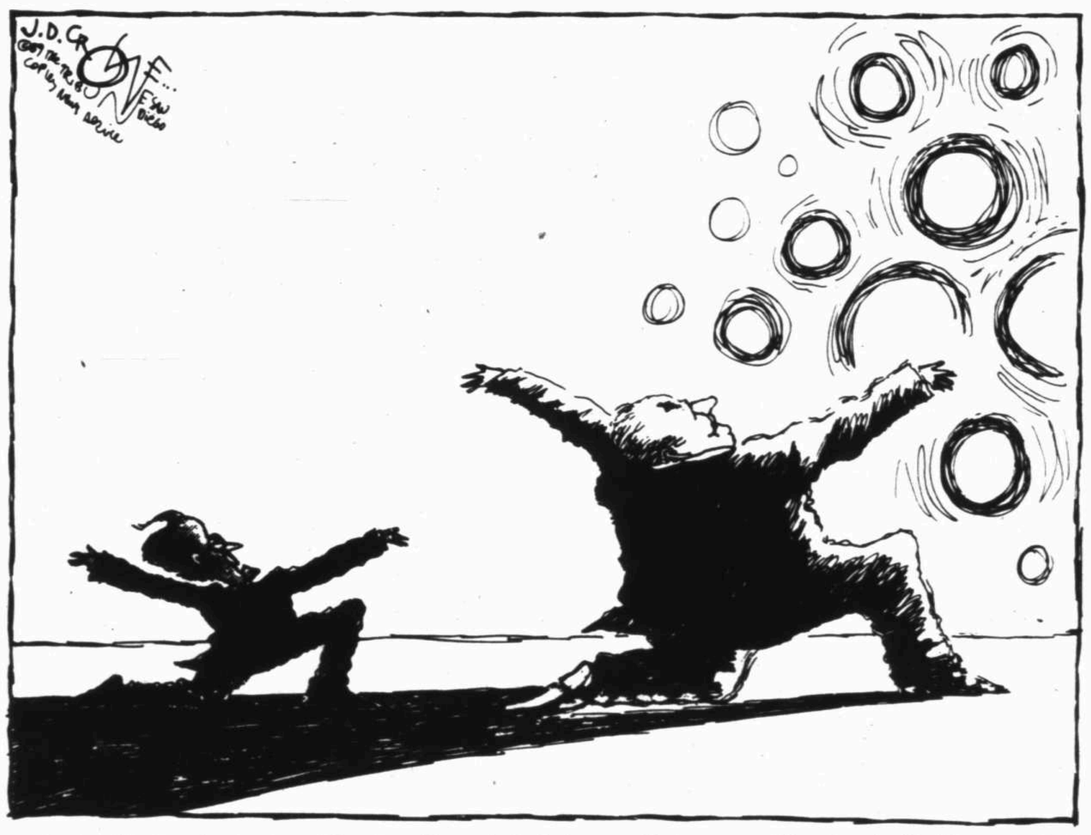

It's extremely easy to criticize a president if you don't have to step into his shoes to prove that you can do a better job. The media, in general, like to criticize because that's the easy thing to do. It takes much less mental effort than actually formulating alternative courses of action or looking for reasons to praise someone.

Bill Modisett

I haven't criticized President Bush much in the early months of his presidency — for what I believe are good reasons. He played second fiddle to the most popular president of recent times for eight years and that's a tough yoke to throw off, regardless of what anyone says. He's taken his time putting his staff together — too much time, some have claimed, with razors in their words. In their opinion, a president should be Superman, Hercules and God all rolled into one and on the first day in office to boot.

My largest complaint of Bush so far is that he waited so long before responding to Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's public relations stampede. Gorbachev has been selling the free world a bill of goods with his assertion that "Good Guy Gorby" has changed the Communist Party or eliminated the ultimate goal of world domination. That's horse manure.

What Gorbachev is doing he's doing out of necessity because the Soviet economy is on the skids — and has been for years — and he is at least intelligent enough to recognize that if he doesn't do something drastic, he'll experience the same popular uprisings in Russia that China is now seeing. If that happens, I don't believe the world will see "Good Guy Gorby" smiling and saying, "That's OK, fellows. We understand that you're displeased."

No, I think he'll bring in the troops and that's a move that from the public relations standpoint is difficult to put a good spin on.

I can understand Bush giving Gorbachev a little rope. Let's get what good we can out of his alleged softening of restrictions and make it last as long as possible. But Bush has played the line out almost too far and now Gorbachev may be hard to control. The president needs to start telling everyone who will listen that what Gorbachev is doing in the Soviet Union nowadays is what should have been done decades ago. He needs to start reasserting that it is the United States — not the Soviet Union — that is the leader in the world for human rights and dignity and if the Soviet Union wants to join us in working toward that end, fine. But we were here first.

Bush has begun in recent weeks to broadcast that message. True, in Ronald Reagan he's following the past master of promoting the Red, White and Blue, and freedom, but I have confidence that Bush can turn the Gorbachev public relations push around.

He made good headway in the past few days in West Germany, on a trip in which he attended the NATO summit, by calling on Gorbachev to bury the Cold War by ending the division of Europe and tearing down the Berlin Wall. He should point out at every opportunity how the Soviet Union's policies are not on a par with the United States.

Bush has been agonizingly slow getting started, but he is the spokesman for the free world. He has an important message that needs to be told time and time again.

Bill Modisett is editor of the Reporter-Telegram's opinion pages.

FLORA LEWIS

NATO obviously able to respond

BRUSSELS — A senior Pravda commentator here for the NATO summit meeting was asked by an American newspaperman, "Has Gorbachev lost the initiative?" He chuckled. "Well," he said, "let's have a competition of initiatives now. Then we'll all be pacifists."

Flora Lewis

Obviously, that was a key point that President Bush and allied leaders were trying to make — that NATO is able to pull itself together and respond to Soviet overtures with significant proposals of its own. Secretary General Manfred Woerner, a hawk at heart, stressed that alliance plans now were "clearly intended to overcome the status quo" in Europe.

The voices of peoples, and politicians, are being heard. The summit meeting's decisions were a recognition that it isn't possible any longer just to sit back and tell Mikhail Gorbachev to prove he is trying to change Soviet policy and make friends. The West has to show that it, too, is willing and eager for change.

It's a pity Bush wasn't ready for that conclusion a few months ago. He reached his decision only the weekend before last at Kennebunkport, where he met with top U.S. military and civilian officials and then with President Francois Mitterrand of France.

If he had moved a little earlier, there might never have been the demeaning clash with West Germany over negotiations on short-range nuclear missiles. A feeling had built up that after the 1987 medium-range-missile treaty, the United States intended to let things ride and wait for Moscow. Bonn felt there had to be some movement, and took up the issue that stirs West Germans most at this point.

Still, when he got around to it, Bush produced a NATO euphoria that went beyond the usual attempt to claim a summit success. After all, it had become clear that without a U.S. initiative, the allies still tend to drift off in their national directions and to bog down in bickering. There was noticeable relief that the United States was taking the lead again and that it was signaling a will to move forward.

What the Europeans appreciated most, beyond the content of the proposal to expand conventional arms cuts, was the format and the pace. The United States did not act unilaterally, as some Americans had been urging. Bush brought his plan to NATO, to chew over and fill out, and then to take as an alliance offer for negotiations with the Warsaw Pact in Vienna. And Bush suggested, with a straight face, that agreement be achieved in six months to a year so reductions could start by 1992 or 1993.

The dates are titillating. They imply that the whole military outlook might be drastically changed by 1992, when the question of whether new missiles should be bought to replace the aging Lance missiles in West Germany is now set for consideration. That gave Chancellor Helmut Kohl the breathing space he urgently wanted. He faces tough elections in late 1990.

But as Margaret Thatcher of Britain gleefully noted, there is some sleight-of-hand involved. The United States promised to start negotiations on removing some of the missiles when certain conditions are fulfilled. These include completion and ratification of a conventional arms treaty with complex provisions for verifying and destroying weapons withdrawn, and a solid start on putting it into effect. Bush claimed his timetable for all that was "realistic," but Mrs. Thatcher much more reasonably called it "very optimistic."

Further, there was a bit of hocus-pocus on whether the United States might ever agree with the Soviets to get rid of all short-range missiles, the "triple zero." The NATO document doesn't actually say that's excluded, but it has all kinds of language committing the Germans to keeping nuclear arms on their territory, including land-based missiles. The West German Foreign Minister, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, insists the zero option remains open. But Mrs. Thatcher, Bush and Woerner, a former German defense minister, say it's been closed. Kohl got only a fig leaf on the missile issue.

But that is not the main point, and need never have been made so critical. What Kohl did get was a broad alliance commitment to work on all fronts, including arms control, for new agreements with the Soviets. The summit declaration says clearly that "prospects are now brighter than ever before for lasting, qualitative improvements in the East-West relationship."

For the United States, at least, there is a new, formal acknowledgment that the East is changing and the opportunity to pin down cooperative agreements on security, stability and general civil intercourse must be grasped.

Moscow is called upon to make vast concessions. But NATO is not counting on Gorbachev to say "nyet" any longer. It has responded at last with hopes he will say yes. Europe and the world could look very different by the middle of the 1990s. Western engagement in the post-cold war era is about to begin.

Parker Elementary needs some changes

I'm writing in regards to problems being faced at Parker Elementary School. The fourth grade at Parker is compartmentalized, which means that students are instructed on specific subjects by different teachers much the same as high school. My daughter has five different teachers and carries 40 pounds of books in a backpack from class to class all day because there is not enough time between classes to go to her locker.

Compartmentalization is expected to be changed next year by the school board, but the issue which was to be submitted to the board has been postponed until June. The postponement leaves teachers and parents in the dark on what system will be used next year.

Another problem occurring at Parker is with the two classes of emotionally disturbed children. Disruptions affecting other classes besides the emotionally disturbed classes are occurring almost constantly. Either more help is needed with these classes or special classrooms are needed to contain the noise which is hindering the educational process in the other classrooms. While the emotionally disturbed kids are entitled to an education, this entitlement should not deny the right for other children to receive an education in an environment conducive to learning.

Meetings have been held with Messrs. Marks, Baressi, Marlow, Cummings and Stewart regarding the problems being experienced at Parker. All claim they understand the problems and admit they exist; however, the school administration and school district are delaying taking any action to correct the problems. Their strategy appears to be to continue postponing any decision until the next school year when a new set of Parker parents are introduced to the problems and must start the process all over again. The cluster system makes this situation ideal for the school administrators.

As a parent, I feel my child is not getting the kind of education our tax dollars are paying for. Public school systems in other parts of the country seem to be handling these types of problems rather than simply avoiding them. It appears that it is time for Midland parents to start demanding accountability from public education administrators. If public school officials are not held accountable for their action or in this case inaction, the Midland school system will continue to fall further and further behind other educational systems, and the children will be the ultimate losers.

Thanks for seeing us through family crisis

It's natural, when tragedy strikes, people tend to stick together to help see it through. But the fact is I had never experienced it personally until Friday, May 19. That night was the most terrifying of my life. Our 7-year-old daughter, Talina, and her two friends, Linda and Mary Ellen Duran, got lost at the Greenwood School area, where they attend.

Thanks to our Almighty God, our daughter and her friends were safely recovered from the elementary school gymnasium, where they had accidentally been locked in.

The response from this small community was overwhelming, for which we'd like to express our appreciation and our gratitude to everyone who helped us look for our little girl. Special thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Evans Etheredge, Talina's T-ball coaches; to Mr. and Mrs. Keith Grant, for having a daughter like Kelly; and Kelly, I love you, too.

Mrs. Long, thanks a lot. To the ladies that drove all the way to Stanton to look for my daughter, thank you so much. Sara and Mary, I don't know what I would have done without you. And everyone in general — the students, teammates, parents, faculty, principals and the law enforcements officers who responded so quickly — thank you so much for your support and concern, but especially for your prayers, which got us all through that evening.

SHHH commends several local firms

Members of the local group of Self Help for Hard of Hearing People thank and commend the Midland Reporter-Telegram and writer Myra Lee Salcedo for the recent excellent coverage of the various aspects of hearing loss, truly an issue of national concern!

Because certain businesses and individuals were mentioned in the article, I would like to take the opportunity to recognize another local businessman who has made a substantial impact on our group. Although neither the local group nor the national organization, Self Help for Hard of Hearing People, Inc. (SHHH), endorses particular products, brand names, etcetera, we do like to express appreciation and recognition for people who contribute to the welfare of hearing-impaired people.

One of those special people is Orland Purcell, a certified audiologist and partner in a local firm specializing in hearing-related technology. From the inception of the local SHHH group, Purcell has voluntarily served as a technical adviser and has devoted much time and effort to helping guide the group through a successful beginning to ongoing functioning.

As evidenced by his instrumental role in securing the infrared system for the Midland Community Theatre, Purcell's knowledge about and interest in hearing loss cannot be praised too highly, and he is truly appreciated by our group.

'Wonderful' woman returned $100 bill

Midland has some wonderful people living here and I was made more aware of this on May 6 while having a garage sale. One of the sale items was an old billfold of mine. It was purchased early that morning for 10 cents by a lady for her young son. Later in the day she came back with the billfold and asked if it had belonged to me. I assured her it had and she said her son found something in it she thought I would like to have. Then she placed $100 in my hand!

Although the billfold had been checked before the garage sale, I neglected to look in the "hidden compartment."

A big thank you to Sue Martinez for returning the $100 she found in the billfold bought for 10 cents. She really made my day!

Think about safety of our schoolchildren

Another school year is almost ended in Midland, and miraculously it seems that the year has ended without a child being hit by one of the many speeding cars driven by people who refuse to obey school zone speed limits. Depending on my route to work, I pass through four to six school zones each morning. Virtually every day, I watch cars pass by with total disregard for the law and for the safety of the children the law is designed to protect.

Midland is known now as a city of cooperative spirit and concern for others. Surely that spirit should encompass the basic safety of the children of Midland.

Chaparral golfers are in Norfolk, Neb., this week for the annual National Junior College Athletic Association's championship tournament. Midland College won the Region V tournament to gain an automatic berth in the event.

Hosted by Northeast Community College and played on the Norfolk Country Club course, the event lasts four days and 72 holes. After the first two days, the field is trimmed to the top 15 teams.

The Chaps last year got a special invitation to the tournament and finished a very respectable 13th. MC golf coach Delnor Poss is relying on five freshmen to represent the college. Mike Stevens, director of the Chaparral Center, will go along as a volunteer assistant coach, van driver, and general helper.

Congratulations to the Chaparral men's and women's tennis teams for another great season! The men captured their second NJCAA title, while the women were third. Coach Joe Williams now is busy signing the last of several recruits to keep the programs strong again for 1989-90.

The women have compiled a rather remarkable record. They have played in every NJCAA tennis tournament, winning five titles and neve finishing lower than fifth in those 15 years.

A number of MC employees, along with some other folks, went to Costa Rica recently for a week-long visit. Dr. Pamela Howell, an instructor in English, was in the group. She carries postcards which she writes to all sorts of folks...and one of those postcards resulted in a direct meeting with the President of Costa Rica, Oscar Arias.

Seems while some of the group was walking past the Presidental Palace, Pamela whipped out a postcard, addressed it to President Arias, made several favorable comments about the country and asked a guard to give it to the President. A few days later several of the Midland tourists were nearby when a dedication ceremony was being held. President Arias noted at the end of his remarks that there were some American tourists in the crowd and he would like to meet them. When he came to Dr. Howell, she said "Mr. President, I'm Pamela Howell from Midland. Did you get my postcard?"

He replied that he had, then quoted her remarks back to her!

On the flight back, she wrote another card to the flight captain and complimented him on a particularly smooth landing during an intermediate stop. She was invited to the cockpit for the last leg of the flight. Dr. Howell knows how to communicate effectively!

The time for Texas is now.

Here in Texas, what's good for business is good for us all.

Now that profits are rising, the whole economy is moving.

Jobs are up. And we're #2 in the country in new business startups.

Personal income is up. And projected to rise 7.2% each year for the next three years.

Population is up. By 1995, we should pass New York to become the second most populous state.

And unemployment is down. Recently hitting its lowest point in 4½ years.

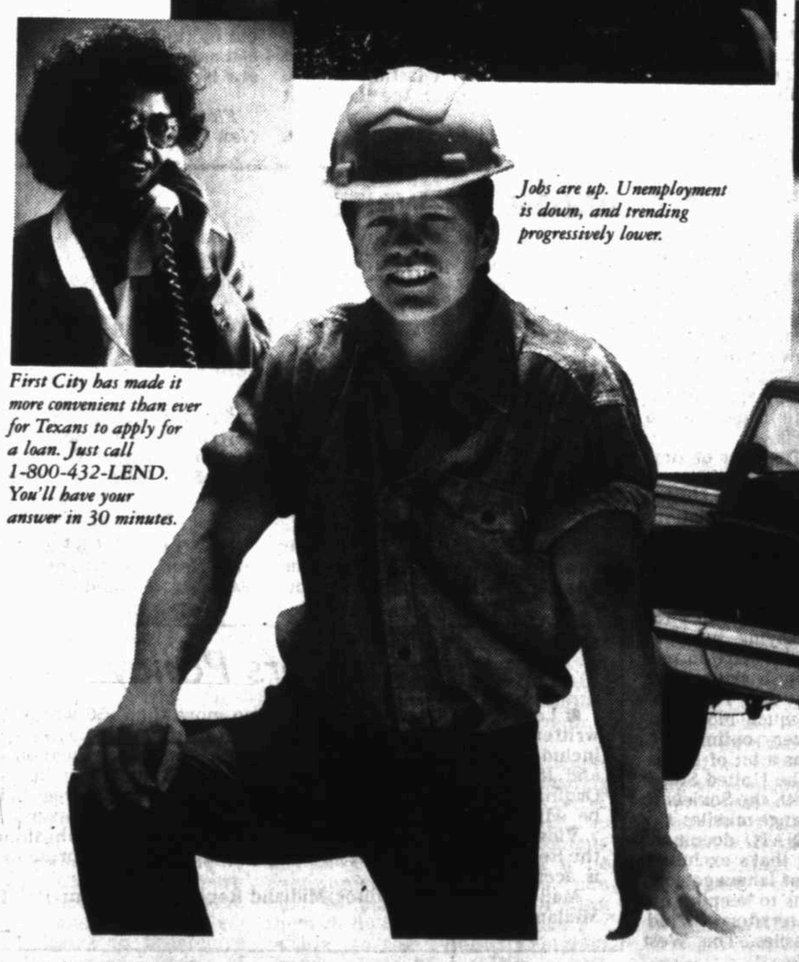

Clearly, this is a time of great opportunity for those of us who live and work in Texas.

The resurgence of the state's economy, and a steady rise in personal income, are good news for Texas families.

Texas is now the #2 state in new business startups—yet another indication of a growing economy.

Jobs are up. Unemployment is down, and trending progressively lower.

Student art to appear on poster

From Staff Reports

Marilyn Bassinger, education director for the Durham Children's Museum noted, "Forrest Windecker, a kindergarten student was the grand prize winner for the Children's Museum opening poster, but the judges were so impressed with Jessica's poster that our volunteer group, Las Manos, chose her poster entry to be the poster design for the fall Septemberfest celebration."

Crisis Brewing For Adjustable-Rate-Mortgage Home Buyers.

NOT SO FOR CUSTOMERS OF JIM WALTER HOMES

10% APR Fixed-Rate Financing

VICTORIAN
3 bedrooms — 2½ baths
1583 sq. ft. living area

According to the nationally circulated newspaper, USA TODAY, a crisis is brewing for home buyers with adjustable-rate mortgages. Monthly payments are going up DRASTICALLY. This news comes as quite a shock to 12 million families because, according to USA TODAY, "ARMs (adjustable-rate mortgages) have artificially low 'teaser rates' the first year, practically guaranteeing a hike (in the rate and in payments) the next year." In many cases, the "hike" will undoubtedly result in families losing their homes.

Now for the good news

Jim Walter Homes continues to offer 10% a.p.r. FIXED-RATE FINANCING. This means that, when Jim Walter builds and finances for you, your payment remains exactly the same throughout the entire term of the mortgage. Jim Walter GUARANTEES it! Even if you sell your home, the new owner will have the same payment.

NO DOWN PAYMENT to qualified property owners

What's more, with Jim Walter there are NO "points" and NO closing costs to inflate the cost to you. Neither is there "third party" red tape to delay construction. Credit approval is usually a matter of 24 to 48 hours, not days and days.

Over 20 Homes & Cottages. 2 to 4 Bedrooms. 1, 2 & 2½ Baths. 1 & 2 Story Models

We'll build on your property to almost any stage, from the "shell" (unfinished inside) to 90% complete, including central heat and air. You tell us where to stop then finish the rest yourself to save money. The more you do, the more money you'll save. In addition to our low 10% a.p.r. FIXED-RATE FINANCING, we offer an additional credit of 15% of any cash payment made at the time of purchase, either down payment or total price. Our representatives have complete details for you. For complete information, costs, and what the monthly payment will be on your choice of homes, call...or visit the nearest display park.

Duke University honors 17 Midland students

Seventeen Midland junior high school students have been named as honorees in Duke University's annual Talent Identification Program. These top seventh-graders were selected for their outstanding academic achievements.

Two students, Anurag Agrawal of Goddard Junior High School and Taresa Hawkins of San Jacinto Junior High School, were recognized in the program's Grand Recognition Program on May 28 at the Duke University chapel in Durham, N.C.

Hawkins and Agrawal are among a select group of 1190 young people from 16 states qualifying for this award. The North Carolina event salutes the highest scoring seventh-grade students participating in Duke's TIP. Honorees garnered scores on the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) or the American College Testing (ACT) program higher than 50% of the nation's college-bound seniors.

Fifteen Midland ISD students have been named for inclusion in state ceremonies. To receive this recognition, participants must score a minimum of 500 for males and 450 for females on the math portion of the SAT and 430 on the verbal portion of this test. These state winners are: Celeste Hoggan, Brandon Johnson, Sean O'Hara, Rebecca Ruda, Michael Sipes, Melissa Snyder, Ya Yu Tang, Joseph Ting, Erica Traxel, Christy Voskamp, Jamie Washam from Goddard Junior High School. James Crose, Jacob Lyons, Christopher Scott, and David Van Houten from San Jacinto Junior High School.

In order to gain admittance in TIP, a student must have scored at the 97 percentile or higher in a nationally normed test.

Over 50,000 gifted seventh-graders are identified by this program annually. Participants and state and national honorees receive information concerning a wide array of academic enrichment opportunities.

TIP is a non-profit educational organization established in 1980 with a grant from the Duke Endowment.

Center to offer alternative certification

From Staff Reports

Region 18 Education Service Center, a support structure for area public school districts, is entering into a new arena of service, that of alternative teacher certification.

The Texas State Board of Education (SBOE) approved such a program recommended by the Commission on Standards for the Teaching Profession In 1987.

The program is primarily designed for persons who have a college degree but are not certified to teach.

Following a region-wide needs assessment, Region 18 ESC developed a proposal to the SBOE to request approval to conduct programs in bilingual/ESL and special education.

Additionally, Region 18 asked for permission to conduct a pilot program to allow certified teachers to acquire certification in these areas by participating in the program.

The proposal received unanimous support from the SBOE in the April meeting.

A summary of the requirements for entry into the program are as follows:

Non-Certified Personnel:
- degree from accredited university;
- GPA of 2.5 on 4.0 scale;
- bilingual/ESL only — demonstrate oral and written proficiency in Spanish;
- completion of 20 hours of observation/partcipation in a classroom setting (day care, public school, substitute teaching, etc.).

Certified Personnel:
- present evidence of certification;
- present evidence of passing the TECAT;
- bilingual/ESL only — demonstrate oral and written proficiency in Spanish.

The program will consist of:
- three-week training, August 7-25, 1989;
- Friday & Saturday training once a month at the ESC;
- supervision by a mentor (experienced teacher) in the building;
- passing the ExCET test in February, 1990;
- satisfactory ratings on the TTAS;
- 45-hour course in remedial reading;
- $2,000 of first-year salary to ESC to fund the program.

All persons participating in the program will function as classroom teachers, beginning the first day of school, and will receive credit for a year's experience at the end of the school year.

Cigars not what they used to be

Eighty percent of the cigars sold in the United States today are no longer rolled with actual tobacco leaves but with a cheaper man-made homogenized wrapper. That's why many cigars no longer have the taste and flavor they once had.

For the Pistons, only an NBA title will do

By CLIFTON BROWN
New York Times News Service

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — When the Detroit Pistons won the Eastern Conference championship Friday night in Chicago, they celebrated in a subdued manner. There was no champagne. There were few embraces.

Whatever satisfaction they felt was tempered because their ultimate goal was not yet accomplished. For the Pistons, winning the National Basketball Association championship is the only accomplishment that will make this season special.

"Just getting to the finals isn't enough for us this time," said Joe Dumars, the versatile Detroit guard. "We've done that already. We're not even that excited yet.

"Last year when we got to the finals, we were so excited, basketball was almost secondary. We were walking around with smiles on our faces saying, 'Hey, we're in the finals.'

"This year, we're more prepared. We don't want to be runner-up again. I say, let's win four games and be the champions."

The Pistons and the Los Angeles Lakers will open the four-of-seven-game championship series Tuesday night at the Palace in Auburn Hills. It is a rematch of last year's title series, which the Lakers won, 4 games to 3, to capture their second consecutive championship.

Detroit, by virtue of finishing the regular season with the league's best record (63-19), will have the home-court advantage. But the Lakers have won all 11 of their playoff games and appear to have more momentum.

Los Angeles can become the first NBA team to win three consecutive championships since the Boston Celtics of 1964-66.

On paper, it is hard to choose a favorite.

"I understand the Lakers as a basketball team, but more importantly, I understand the Lakers as people," said Isiah Thomas, the Pistons' point guard and team leader, who scored a game-high 34 points Friday night in Chicago as the Pistons eliminated the Bulls, 103-94, in six games.

"What beats you in the playoffs is individual people digging deep inside themselves and deciding that they're going to win the basketball game," Thomas added. "That's the kind of character the Lakers have. That's the kind of character we have.

"It's easy to be a Laker, or a Celtic, because they have a winning philosophy of basketball, and people on those teams are used to doing the things it takes to win. Now, it's easy to be a Piston, too. But when I first came here, it wasn't.

"People don't realize how hard it is to establish a winning tradition in the NBA, because you have so many variables you have to deal with.

"The biggest problem you have is money. In this league, you have to make a decision: do I want to win, or do I want to amass statistics and make a lot of money? You have to be able to ask yourself that question.

"On this team, what we care most about is winning. That's why we're here."

Certainly, the Pistons' character has been tested. In February, Detroit made the most talked-about trade of the season, sending Adrian Dantley and a draft choice to Dallas in exchange for Mark Aguirre.

Dantley was extremely popular in Detroit, and Aguirre came to the Pistons with a reputation as being talented but moody.

Some thought the trade would ruin the chemistry in Detroit's locker room. Instead, the Pistons hit their stride after the trade and overtook Cleveland to win the Central Division.

In the series with Chicago, the heavily favored Pistons trailed by 2 games to 1, but responded by winning the last three games.

And the victory Friday was particularly impressive.

The Bulls jumped to a 26-14 lead, and the noise in sold-out Chicago Stadium, perhaps the league's noisiest arena, shook the building. But the Pistons calmly came back and eventually took control.

Even Michael Jordan's heroics, which had been enough to propel the Bulls past the Cavaliers and the Knicks, were not enough to rattle the Pistons.

"I have a lot of confidence in this team, because we were down 2-1, we lost the home-court advantage in the first game, but we didn't panic," said Vinnie Johnson, another Detroit guard.

Sabatini stumbles in Paris

By STEPHEN R. WILSON

PARIS (AP) — Steffi Graf watched with interest as Gabriela Sabatini, her biggest rival, came with three points of tumbling out of the French Open Saturday.

But the second-seeded Sabatini rallied to beat Nicole Provis 4-6, 7-5, 6-3 and moved into the round of 16.

On the second consecutive day of rain delays at Roland Garros, top men's seeds had an easier time as No. 2 Stefan Edberg and No. 4 Mats Wilander of Sweden advanced with straight-set victories.

Edberg, the defending Wimbledon champion who is playing his best clay court tennis, beat Jimmy Arias of the United States 6-4, 6-4, 6-4. Wilander, the defending champion seeking to break an eight-month drought without a tournament victory, outplayed Italy's Omar Camporese 6-4, 6-3, 7-6 (7-2).

In late matches, top-seeded Ivan Lendl played Darren Cahill of Australia and No. 5 Andre Agassi faced fellow American Jim Courier.

Jakob Hlasek of Switzerland, the sixth seed, rallied to win his second five-set match, beating Leonardo Lavalle of Mexico 4-6, 6-1, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4. His next opponent will be No. 11 Alberto Mancini of Argentina, who rolled past Paul Haarhuis of the Netherlands 6-4, 6-4, 6-2.

Unseeded Lawson Duncan became the second American to reach the fourth round, beating Jerome Potier of France 6-4, 6-0, 6-4.

'Horns win in opener

By SCOTT SONNER

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Louisiana State pitching phenom Ben McDonald was supposed to be the main attraction at Saturday's College World Series. It would be hard to convince Long Beach State of that after facing Texas sophomore Kirk Dressendorfer.

CWS

"Gosh, he's awful good," Long Beach State coach Dave Snow said after Dressendorfer held the 49ers to six singles en route to the Longhorns' 7-1 victory.

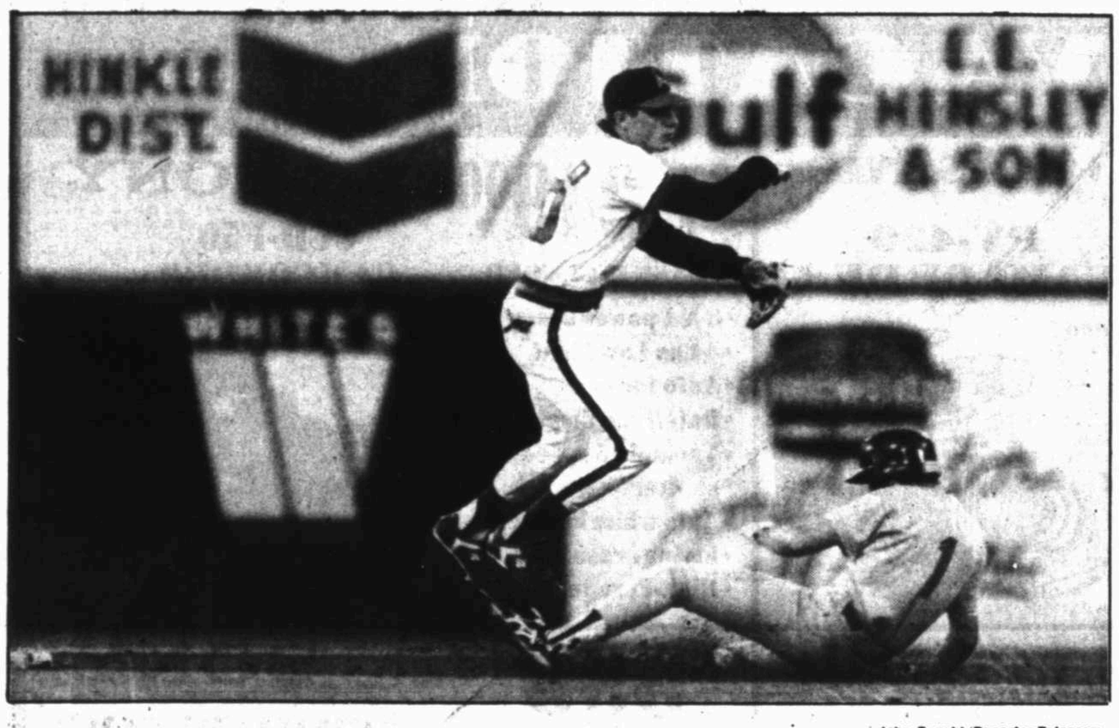

"He took our game away from us. He's a power pitcher. He got a little steam as the game went on. He pitches inside very well for a college pitcher." Craig Newkirk drove in three runs on a double and a pair of singles for second-seeded Texas, which is making a record 25th appearance in the College World Series.

Scott Bryant, the NCAA RBI leader with a school-record 109, knocked in two runs with three singles and David Lowery added an RBI on three hits for the Longhorns, 52-17.

Dressendorfer, a sophomore now 17-2, struck out six in his 15th complete game. He took the victory in stride.

"It wasn't pretty but it was a win," he said. "I let my fielders do the work... In the seventh inning I loosened up enough that I wanted to stay in the game."

Baseball futures begin on Monday

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

On June 5, 1982, the Minnesota Twins' future looked bright. They had the fourth pick in the baseball draft that morning and when it came their time to select, the player they wanted was still available.

"It was an obvious choice," recalled George Brophy, then the Twins' vice president for scouting. "Bryan Oelkers had been the college pitcher of the year. He was exactly what we needed. So we took him."

The New York Mets had the next pick. They took Dwight Gooden.

"Sure, now everybody asks why we didn't get Gooden," said Brophy, currently a scout for Houston. "But he was still in high school, and I'll bet there haven't been 10 high-school pitchers to make it big. The Mets caught lightning in a bottle that day."

On Monday, all 26 major league teams will try to do the same when the three-day draft begins. The Baltimore Orioles hold the No. 1 pick for the first time and are expected to take Ben McDonald, a pitcher from Louisiana State.

Midland High pitcher Kevin Rychel, an All-District 4-5A hurler who has signed with the University of Texas, has been told by several scouts he has high value and may be selected in the upper rounds.

Unlike the highly publicized NFL and NBA drafts, where first-round picks almost automatically make the team and it is easy to project at least a dozen future stars, nothing is certain in baseball's more obscure picking process. Only half of the players taken in the first round will ever be successful because too many things can happen on the way to the big leagues.

The Seattle Mariners thought they had a sure thing when they made Al "Choo Choo" Chambers the top pick in the 1979 draft. Chambers, a big hitter in high school, eventually made it to the majors for a few games but soon disappeared.

That same year, the Los Angeles Dodgers gambled in the 17th round on the third-best starter on the Bowling Green University staff. That was Orel Hershiser.

"He wasn't overpowering, but he had a good arm. Also, there was his makeup and continual pursuit of improvement," Dodgers general manager Fred Claire said.

"You've got to give credit to our scouting staff. He didn't come by accident," he said. "After all, the 17th round is a long way down, but at the same time, that is the 17th-best player you've put into your system in that given year. And that's not a throw-away draft."

Angels darkened by light show

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

In the celebrated words of Ernie Banks, "Let's play two", although Ernie's enthusiasm might bring a frown of disapproval from Midland Manager Max Oliveras.

The Midland Angels and San Antonio Missions conclude their seven-game series with two games at 6 p.m. today after Saturday night's washout following an 85 minute rain delay.

Oliveras' lack of enthusiasm stems from a weary pitching staff. He will start Robert Hernandez, 2-6, in one game and the other game "will be by committee."

Greg Mayberry, 4-5, will start for San Antonio in one game, but Manager John Shoemaker did not announce his "other" game choice.

When the rains hit Saturday with San Antonio leading 4-0 in the bottom of the second, it meant Midland starter Dave Martinez was through for the night and the Angels were down to lefthander Frank DeMichele, if play had been resumed. Chris Nichting was on the hill for San Antonio.

Actually, only a few drops had fallen when the umpires and players of both teams dashed for cover. The lightning on all sides of the stadium was that close ... and continued to picket the stadium the rest of the night.

An attempt was made to remove the tarp covering the infield after an hour's delay, but devious winds made an uncontrollable roller coaster of the covering.

The grounds' crew barely got the infield covered again, when the storm to the south of Midland, which was supposed to pass without harm to the east, struck in full, slanting fury from the east.

HALO HOOPS: San Antonio first baseman Brian Traxler doubled home one run in the first and Carlos Hernandez doubled home two more in the first ... Traxler was 12 for 21 going into the game ... When Oliveras was tossed from Friday's second game, it marked the first time this season he had gotten the thumb.

Rangers' ownership list unveiled

Associated Press

ARLINGTON, Texas — A list of George W. Bush's partners in his purchase of the Texas Rangers includes the name of a black entrepreneur, one of the few blacks to own part of a major league baseball franchise.

Bush revealed the complete ownership group Friday that he and Edward "Rusty" Rose put together to buy the Rangers from former owner Eddie Chiles.

The list included the name of Dallas millionaire Comer Cottrell.

A spokesman for Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti said the office wasn't aware of any other black owners on the major league level, but that there could be some among the many limited partners and minority owners.

Tom Landry told a Little Rock, Ark. audience that he and his wife are studying "all the options" concerning his future, or lack thereof, as a coach.

Landry speaks in Jones' hometown

By SCOTT CHARTON

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Former Dallas Cowboys coach Tom Landry joked about his dismissal during a speech Saturday in the home state of the man who fired him.

"In my family, Arkansas isn't the most favorite state," the usually stoic Landry said with a smile. "Maybe Little Rock might be worse."

The audience at a rally sponsored by the Arkansas Billy Graham Crusade laughed with Landry.

Later, Landry said in an interview that he felt welcome in Arkansas and liked the state. "I was joking about it. It (the joke) was nothing. You know, it's over and done with and we just wish them (the Cowboys) the best," Landry said.

Landry was fired by North Little Rock native Jerry Jones on Feb. 25, after the oil millionaire bought the Cowboys from H.R. "Bum" Bright. Jones hired his buddy Jimmy Johnson, then head coach at the University of Miami, to replace Landry. Jones and Johnson played football together for the University of Arkansas in the 1960s.

The dismissal of Landry, the only coach in the team's 29-year history, prompted widespread criticism of Jones, who has said he didn't mean to hurt anyone's feelings. Jones has said he tried to get to Landry as soon after the sale was completed as possible so the coach could learn of his dismissal directly from the new owner. Sports columnists and fans complained that was shabby treatment for Landry.

After his Saturday speech, Landry told The Associated Press, "I have no hard feelings. I haven't even from the start. It could have been handled a lot better but it wasn't, and so there's nothing I can do about it." Landry said he has not talked to Jones since his dismissal.

"I have a philosophy. If you can't control something don't worry about it," Landry said.

Landry led the Cowboys to 20 consecutive winning seasons, but the team was 3-13 in his final season.

He declined to speculate about the Cowboys' fortunes under Jones and Johnson. "They're going to have a tough row, but that's what it's all about," Landry said.

Landry spun stories about sports and spiritual growth during his speech at Barton Coliseum, and he praised Arkansas Athletic Director Frank Broyles and Ken Hatfield, the Razorback football coach. Landry and Broyles have served on the national board of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, and Hatfield is active in the organization, Landry said.

The rally was for church leaders and volunteers for Graham's crusade, which is to be held at War Memorial Stadium in Little Rock Sept. 17-24. "I think you'll find that the Billy Graham crusade will turn this city around, with enough help," said Landry, who receives a fee for appearances on behalf of Graham's ministry.

Landry told the rally that many of the Cowboys' come-from-behind wins, including 23 comebacks that were led by star quarterback Roger Staubach, were pulled off because his team kept a positive attitude. Referring to the team's losing record last season, Landry said, "We didn't have quite the positive attitude that it took."

Landry, who didn't wear his familiar hat at the coliseum, said he was fulfilling speaking engagements that were scheduled before he was fired. "My wife and I are kind of relaxing right now and studying all the options. I don't see myself coaching again — I've been doing that for 35 years — but you never know," he said.

Byrum's 65 leads PGA Kemper Open

By DAVID GINSBURG

POTOMAC, Md. (AP) — Tom Byrum, seeking his first victory in four years on the PGA Tour, shot a 6-under-par 65 Saturday to take a two-shot lead over Tommy Armour III after three rounds of the Kemper Open.

Byrum, who had missed the cut in nine of his 16 previous tournaments this year, took the lead with a birdie on No. 12. He parred the next five holes before sinking a 37-foot birdie putt on No. 18 to finish at 13-under-par 200 after 54 holes.

"This is the kind of course where you have to be patient and just play it smart," Byrum said. "There are a lot of bogeys out there, but fortunately, I didn't get many of them."

Byrum had seven birdies and a bogey.

Armour, who has won less than $250,000 in his three years on the Tour, matched the course record with a 7-under 64 to close at 202 after three trips over the 6,917-yard TPC at Avenel. Armour gained momentum with three straight birdies beginning on No. 5 and ended up with nine birdies.

Jeff Hart, Don Pooley and Mark McCumber were next at 204. Hart shot a 65, McCumber a 66 and Pooley, who started the day in second place, had four bogeys and four birdies in a round of 71.

Of the top five contenders, only McCumber and Pooley have won a PGA event. Byrum ranks No. 84 on this year's money list, one spot behind Armour. Hart, who has made the cut only twice since January, is No. 155.

Jim Thorpe, Bill Buttner, Lon Hinkle, first-round leader D.A. Weibring and Billy Ray Brown were at 206. Howard Twitty and second-round leader Jay Don Blake were among a group of seven players at 207.

Blake started the day 10-under, but his bogey on the first hole set the tone for a round of 75.

Byrum opened the day three strokes behind Blake, but he shaved three strokes off par on the front nine and birdied Nos. 11, 12 and 18.

"If my putting continues to be good, everything should turn out OK," he said. "If I can be the same person on the course as I was today, I'll do just fine."

Hart, meanwhile, was just glad to see his name among the leaders.

Hammond, Wilson Triathlon's quickest

From Staff Reports

Scott Hammond and Deborah Wilson came away with top honors in the Tall City Triathlon Saturday, an event that included a 1,000 meter swim, 30K bike leg and a 10K run.

Hammond, a former Midlander and Tall City winner, came back home to take another title, winning in 1:38.55. Hammond was ahead of second place winner Markland Headley (1:42.15) by just under four minutes. Paul Patterson edged out Gary Covington for third by just 13 hundreths of a second.

For Midland's Wilson, it was her first triathlon title in seven tries. She has been a national qualifier twice, but second place overall finish in Amarillo was her previous best showing. She qualified for nationals last year, only three months after having a baby and recently placed sixth in an Austin triathlon. She won her second national qualifying berth in Phoenix, Ariz.

Wilson posted a time of 1:58.17 to beat Jennifer Winegarner by one minute and 34 seconds while Karen Hagner took third with 2:21.50.

"I was really surprised by Winegarner, especially her swimming. She pushed me all the way," said Wilson. "We had a nice wind and I felt good in the running event. Everyone would like to have a better time, but I was pleased, considering the wind we had."

Sam Perry, Emmanuel Perez and Dave Felice wiped away the field in the men's team competition, winning with a 1:34.04. The team competition had each team member competing in one event and scores were combined for the total time.

Shannon Klonick, Debra Ann Borgen and Deb Irons posted a 1:54.57 to take the women's team event while Donald Davis, Robert Fuller and Sherill Easterling won the mixed team crown with a 1:51.49.

Maybe there is hope for catchers

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Maybe there's hope for the catching profession after all. The major leagues, suffering from a paucity of quality catchers, will just have to wait a few years.

In a nationwide awards program established by Scholastic Coach magazine and Gatorade, nine of 46 players named as state high school players of the year were catchers.

If you get a new air conditioner this summer ...

DON'T LET 'EM MESS WITH YOUR FURNACE!

Here's why you may need to think about winter during the hottest part of the summer.

If you need a new air conditioner this summer, chances are someone will try to sell you a gadget called a heat pump instead. You've probably seen heat pumps advertised, because they're being promoted heavily by the electric company.

The electric company wants you to believe that a heat pump will cool your home in the summer, and heat your home in the winter. Here's a fact that they haven't told you:

A heat pump will not cool your home as well as a high-efficiency air conditioner.

Here's why you should think about winter when you hear a sales pitch for a heat pump:

A heat pump will not work well enough by itself to keep you warm all winter long.

If all you had was a heat pump this winter, you and your family would get uncomfortably cold when the outside temperature drops. So they'll either attach the thing to your present gas furnace. Or they'll try to sell you a whole new gas furnace that you probably don't even need!

Think about it. Why does the electric company want you to have an electric heat pump, something that will not keep you warm all winter long, and will not cool you as well as an air conditioner? Who will really benefit?

It takes more electricity for a heat pump to do the same job in the summer as a modern high efficiency air conditioner. And it takes a lot more electricity to run a heat pump in winter than it takes to run an efficient natural gas furnace. And it still won't get the job done!

After all, the more electricity you use, the higher your electric bills. And with a heat pump, you'll be paying those high electric bills all year round.

If your air conditioner goes out this summer, by all means replace it with a new high-efficiency air conditioner. The latest models work better and are more efficient than ever.

But if you get hit with a sales pitch for a heat pump, here are three simple things to keep in mind this summer that may have everything to do with keeping your family comfortable next winter.

1. Use the Right Appliance for the Right Job.

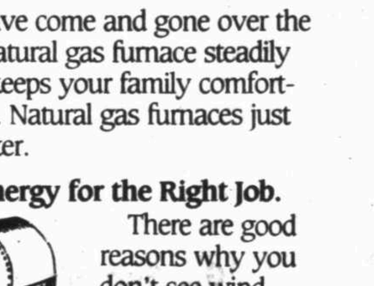

When you need to keep your home cool, a modern high-efficiency air conditioner is without a doubt the best way to do it.

When it comes to heating your home, the best way to do it is a natural gas furnace. Period.

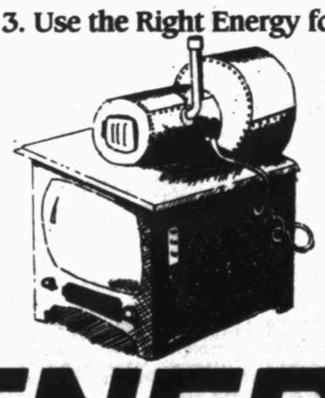

2. "It seemed like a good idea at the time."

How much money has been spent on gadgets and doo-dads that seemed to be the hottest things going at the time? 8-track tapes. CB radios.

A lot of fads have come and gone over the years, but your natural gas furnace steadily and dependably keeps your family comfortable every winter. Natural gas furnaces just get better and better.

3. Use the Right Energy for the Right Job.

There are good reasons why you don't see wind-powered lawn mowers, steam television sets, and electric airplanes. They would be a terrible misuse of energy.

Electricity is exactly right for lights, air conditioning, and some appliances in your home. But not for heating.

Natural gas is the most efficient energy on the planet when it comes to the major job of heating your home.

It's environmentally sound. Natural gas is the safest cleanest-burning fuel we have. It doesn't contribute to the acid rain problem. Plus there's plenty of it to last well into the 21st century ... and beyond.

So if your air conditioner goes out in the middle of our hot West Texas summer, replace it with a new modern high-efficiency air conditioner. And give some thought to winter.

Don't let 'em mess with your furnace!

New scholarship legislation presented by CFA

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

DALLAS (AP) — Coaches attending the College Football Association's annual meeting Saturday proposed a formula that would allow all Division I-A schools to reach the allowable number of 95 scholarship athletes in two years.

The proposal will be presented to the CFA's general business session Sunday. If also approved by the athletic directors and faculty representatives, the CFA could draw up legislation for next January's NCAA convention.

"It's the most compassionate, understanding, equality piece of legislation that's had a chance to pass since I've been in the NCAA," said Iowa State coach Jim Walden, who has been pushing such action for three years.

The plan would work like this: Iowa State will have 78 scholarship players this fall, 20 of whom will be in their final season of eligibility.

That would leave Walden with 58 players for 1990 but he can only recruit 25 under current NCAA rules. If he recruits the permissible maximum, he would have 83 scholarship players. If the NCAA approves his appeal, to get to 95 he would be allowed to recruit 31 this year (six over the limit) and 31 next year.

The difference must be made up equally over the two-year period. If it's an odd number, the larger number must be recruited the first year.

After the initial two-year chance for everyone to reach the limit, the right of appeal would apply to a coach who inherits a program that has dropped below 95.

It would not apply to schools on probation. In addition, coaches whose teams are on probation would not have the right to appeal.

"In other words, if Barry Switzer and Pat Jones get down in numbers and they stay at Oklahoma and Oklahoma State, they don't get an appeal," Walden explained. "If some other coach takes their place and they're down — new coach, new place — he gets an appeal."

While some schools have fewer than 95 scholarship players by choice, Walden said "probably about 10 (who are) under (don't have) the ability to get to 85. As hard as they try, they're having a tough time getting above 85.

"That's what this is all about — a way to allow 10 schools to get up to 95 at no cost to the 95 other schools. And there's no cost involved with extra money since we're all budgeted for 95. It's just a matter to make life easier and equitable for everyone.

"Every other sport has the right to go the maximum every year. Basketball coaches have the right idea and football coaches don't. It doesn't matter to a basketball coach if he loses eight guys; he recruits eight guys, as long as he doesn't exceed 15.

"It's taken me three years to get people to understand the injustice of having 10 Division I-A schools out there playing with less people because next year, you're gonna have SMU, TCU, me, Kansas State, Kansas, New Mexico, Akron, and it's really an injustice."

Walden said he had 58 scholarship players in 1987 and 70 last year. He suffers under current NCAA rules.

"The better job I do of hanging onto my players — which is what everybody wants me to do — it cuts off my nose. Because if I keep graduating 20 and I'm stuck at 78 and I lose five, which is the natural attrition rate, I'm going to be there forever while everybody else is playing with 95."

The coaches, athletic directors and faculty representatives met in closed meetings Saturday to decide what proposal to bring before Sunday's windup session.

The CFA's proposed 16-team playoff plan has been a major topic all weekend but it's not expected to come up for a vote.

"You don't plant the seed and harvest it tomorrow," CFA executive director Chuck Neinas said. "You need to plant it, water it, cultivate it and let it grow."

Cottrell owns Pro-Line Corp., the nation's third-largest retailer of ethnic hair products and the 18th largest black-owned business in the United States, Cottrell said.

Cottrell said his privately held Dallas company had sales of $33.2 million last year and earned about $3 million in net income.

Four years ago, Cottrell turned down a $14 million offer for his firm, after his wife, Isabell, argued against selling it.

"My wife told me that we'd done all this work to build an institution," Cottrell said in an interview. "She wanted to see a black-owned business move into the second generation."

Of the 17 investors, eight limited partners are from Dallas, four from Cincinnati and three from Fort Worth. Bush declined to specify the percentage of the partners' ownership, saying only that the split is about 70 percent local.

Seven of the 11 limited partners from the previous ownership remain. Four were bought out.

Other investors include the Arlie Group of Dallas whose general partner is Morton H. Meyerson; Robert Castellini of Cincinnati, owner of the Castellini Company, a wholesale food firm; William O. Ryan flirts with perfection again

Associated Press

Nolan Ryan pitched his 11th career one-hitter and struck out 11 as the Texas Rangers beat the Seattle Mariners 6-1 Saturday night.

The only hit off the 42-year-old Ryan was Harold Reynolds' leadoff single to right field in the first inning. Ryan also pitched a one-hitter on April 23 in Toronto, a triple by Nelson Liriano with one out in the ninth. He has also participated in two combined one-hitters in his career.

Ryan, who has pitched a record five no-hitters, increased his major league-leading strikeout total to 100 and now has 4,875 in his 22-year career.

It's the 21st time Ryan has struck out 100 or more batters in a season, tying him with Don Sutton for the major league record. Ryan has struck out 10 or more batters 188 times during his career, also a major-league record.

In addition to the five no-hitters and 11 one-hitters, Ryan has pitched 19 two-hitters and 27 three-hitters.

It was Ryan's 16th low-hit game (no-hitter or one-hitter) breaking Bob Feller's record of 15.

Ryan walked two en route to his third complete game of the season while improving his lifetime record against the Mariners to 7-3. He retired the last 22 Mariners in the game.

It was Ryan's seventh double-figure strikeout game of the season, tying him with former Rangers Jim Bibby and Ferguson Jenkins for the club single-season record.

Rookie starter Clint Zavaras held Texas to four runs on three hits in his major-league debut, going eight-plus innings. The 22-year-old right-hander checked the Rangers to one hit through five innings and retired 10 consecutive batters before Ruben Sierra hit his seventh homer in the sixth to give the Rangers a 3-1 lead.

Angels 4, Royals 3

Brian Downing homered in the sixth inning to snap a tie and Kirk McCaskill won his seventh game.

With two outs in the sixth and the score 3-3, Downing hit his fifth homer on a pitch from Charlie Leibrandt, 3-6. It was Downing's first home run since May 2.

McCaskill, 7-1, let an early 3-0 lead slip away, but regrouped to pitch seven innings while allowing five hits. Greg Minton pitched 1 1-3 and Bob McClure finished for his second save.

Blue Jays 10, Red Sox 2

Junior Felix drove in four runs and, along with Nelson Liriano, fueled a four-run fourth inning that ignited the Toronto Blue Jays over the Boston Red Sox and their 11th straight victory at Fenway Park.

Felix and Liriano each had two-run, two-out singles in the fourth for a 5-2 lead. They had three hits apiece, and Liriano had three RBIs for the Blue Jays, who have not lost at Fenway since 1987.

Fred McGriff and Lloyd Moseby also homered for Toronto. McGriff's homer, his 12th, led off the sixth inning, and Moseby hit No. 6 with two out and none on in the ninth.

Dave Stieb, 4-3, allowed seven hits and two runs in five innings for the victory. He was replaced at the start of the sixth by David Wells, who pitched three scoreless innings, and Tom Henke worked the ninth for Toronto.

Athletics 7, Indians 0

Bob Welch pitched eight strong innings and the Oakland Athletics beat the Cleveland Indians.

The Athletics had lost their previous two games. They have not lost three in a row all season.

Welch, 7-4, gave up seven hits without a walk and struck out six. Eric Plunk worked the ninth.

Oakland finished with 14 hits and Cleveland had eight, and every hit was a single.

The Athletics got 11 hits in 5 1-3 innings against Tom Candiotti, 6-3. Candiotti made his shortest start of the season and had his three-game winning streak end.

Twins 5, White Sox 4
White Sox 2, Twins 1

Carlton Fisk's sacrifice fly snapped an eighth-inning tie and the Chicago White Sox ended an 11-game losing streak at home with a victory over the Minnesota Twins in the second game of a doubleheader.

In the first game, Frank Viola allowed six hits in eight innings and Randy Bush homered for the game-winning run as the Twins won 5-4.

Before winning the nightcap, Chicago had not won at home since May 7 and had dropped 13 of 14 overall, including six straight. In going 7-21 at home this season, Chicago has been outscored 160-83.

With one out in the eighth, Ozzie Guillen got a triple when right fielder Carmen Castillo's diving attempt to catch the liner failed.

In the opener, Bush broke a 4-4 tie in the fifth inning with his seventh homer on a pitch from Eric King, 4-7. The White Sox have been outhomered 32-13 at Comiskey Park this season.

Viola, 4-7 after winning the AL Cy Young Award last season, led the Twins to their fourth straight victory. He walked one, struck out six and retired the last 15 batters he faced. Jeff Reardon got the last three outs for his eighth save.

Orioles 4, Tigers 2

Jim Traber singled home the tie-breaking run in the eighth inning and the streaking Baltimore Orioles beat the Detroit Tigers for their sixth straight victory.

The Orioles, who have won 16 of their last 21, lead the American League East by three games at 29-22. Last year, Baltimore did not win its 29th game until two days after the All-Star break.

Kevin Hickey, 1-0, the third Orioles pitcher, pitched two innings for his first victory since 1983. Gregg Olson worked the ninth for his sixth save in the combined five-hitter.

Doyle Alexander, 4-5, lost for the second time in 11 decisions against Baltimore this decade.

With the score tied at 2, Mickey Tettleton started the Baltimore eighth with a single and Guillermo Hernandez relieved. Joe Orsulak singled and Traber's single put the Orioles ahead.

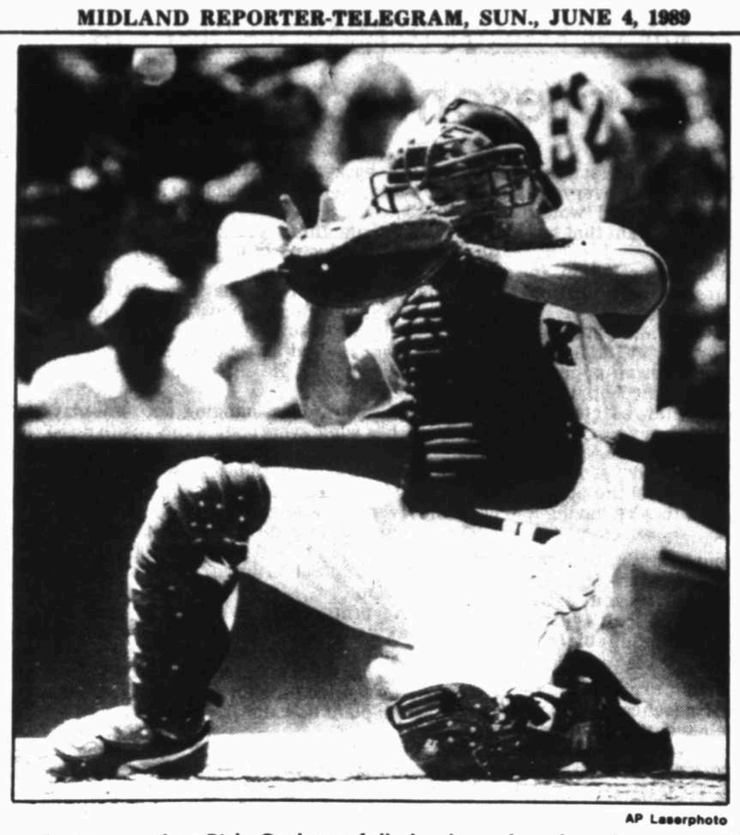

Brewers 2, Yankees 0

Bill Krueger and two relievers combined on a five-hitter and the Milwaukee Brewers beat the New York Yankees.

Krueger, 2-0, went the first five innings, allowing four hits and two walks in his first American League start since September 1986. The outing was his longest of the season after 11 relief appearances.

The Yankees had two runners on in the third, fourth and fifth innings but could not push across a run against Krueger.

Mark Knudson pitched one-hit relief for 3 1-3 innings and Dan Plesac got two outs for his 12th save.

LSU runs away with NCAA track titles

By BERT ROSENTHAL

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Dawn Sowell, the new queen of the sprints, set her second collegiate record in two days, leading Louisiana State to its third consecutive title in the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships Saturday night.

LSU's men also won the team title, its first since 1933, marking the first sweep of both championships in the same year.

The sweep was as historic as Hollis Conway's performance in the men's high jump. The Olympic silver medalist from Southwestern Louisiana set an American record of 7 feet, 9¾ inches, breaking the mark of 7-9¼ he had shared with Tom McCants and Jerome Carter.

The title for the men was the first in any sport for an LSU men's team since 1958, when the Tigers' football team was No. 1.

The men finished the four-day meet at Brigham Young with 53 points, while the women collected 86 points, the most snce 1984 when Florida State amassed 145. That was the last year the meet used 12-place scoring, with 15 points for first place. Since then, only the top eight score, with 10 points for first.

The women's victory had to be rewarding for Loren Seagrave, the team's sprint and hurdles coach who was fired last month but continued to help the athletes.

It was the sprinters and hurdlers who accounted for most of LSU's points.

And it was the scintillating Sowell who led the way.

After winning the 200-meter dash Friday night in a collegiate record 22.04 seconds and running on the 400-meter relay team that set another collegiate record of 42.50, she came back Saturday and became the third-fastest women's 100-meter sprinter in history, clocking 10.78.

The electrifying performance by the LSU senior put her behind only Florence Griffith Joyner, the world record-holder with 10.49, and Evelyn Ashford, on the all-time performers' list.

It also was the sixth-fastest time ever, with Griffith Joyner owning the top four clockings and Ashford at No. 5.

And it smashed the collegiate record of 10.97 that Sowell had set this year.

Sowell also won a sprint double in the NCAA Indoor Championships in March, leading LSU to its second consecutive title.

Despite the sensational victory Saturday, Sowell was not completely satisfied.

"It was technically all right," she said, "but I didn't feel explosive. I was trying for 10.6, but I knew I wasn't going to get it."

Nevertheless, the performance was remarkable, as Sowell led a 1-2 LSU finish, with Esther Jones second in 11.12.

LSU also got a 1-2 finish in the women's 100-meter high hurdles, with Tananajalyn Stanley winning in a world-leading 12.70 and Cinnamon Sheffield the runner-up in 12.95.

Stanley's time made her the third-fastest American, behind only Jackie Joyner-Kersee and Gail Devers-Roberts, who share the U.S. record at 12.61. Sheffield's time matched the American junior record set by Candy Young in 1979.

Stanley and Sheffield also ran on the winning relay team Friday night, along with Sowell and Jones. And Jones also finished fourth in the 200.

While the women romped to victory with a series of brilliant performances, the LSU men got only one victory — from John Nichols in the discus Friday night.

Otherwise, their key performer was Slip Watkins. He finished fourth in the 100 Saturday night, and was fifth in the 200 and ran on the fourth-place 400-meter relay team Friday night.

Conway, meanwhile, made an attempt to become history's first 8-foot jumper, but missed on his only attempt at that height. Prior to that, he missed twice at 7-10½.

Meanwhile, Kenyans Kip Cheruiyot and Olympic champion Peter Rono of Mount St. Mary's finished 1-2 in the men's 1,500 meters in a race marred by a spill by Arkansas' Joe Falcon, a seven-time NCAA champion.

Falcon, seeking his second straight 1,500 title, went sprawling to the track about 300 meters into the race, when he was running just behind the pacesetting Rono.

He was accidentally tripped by Brian Radle of Southeast Missouri State, then, as he was stumbling, he was pushed in self-defense by Brad Schlapek of Dartmouth.

Twelve-footer gives Geiberger lead

PGA Seniors

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Al Geiberger rolled in a 12-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole Saturday to tie Gary Player for the lead after two rounds of the $300,000 Doug Sanders Classic.

Player, the first-round leader, shot a 2-under-par 70, including birdies on the 16th and 17th holes, while Geiberger shot a bogey-free 69. They were tied at 7-under 137 after 36 holes.

"I felt that I hit the ball pretty good today, especially in the middle of the round," said Geiberger, "and making a birdie put on the last hole is always nice."

"I played a lot better today than I scored. I was really frustrated, but it's one of those days when you have to battle on," said Player, who left six or seven puts within one or two inches of the hole, "my patience was pretty good though and this tournament is wide open for tomorrow."

The best round of the day was turned in by second-year Seniors' player Homero Blancas who shot a course-record 65 in a round that featured eight birdies and one bogey. Blancas trails the co-leaders by one stroke with a two-round total of 138.

"I played well the last couple of weeks. Today my irons were crisp and I only had 28 putts," Blancas said.

Lou Graham shot the second-lowest round of the day, a 67, and trailed the leaders by two strokes while Tom Shaw birdied the last three holes to finish at 70 and was three strokes behind.

Woman Discovers Shopping Mall in Her Front Yard

Finds hundreds of businesses on doorstep

Local resident Gladys Whirlee revealed on Monday that the city's largest shopping mall is right at her front door. "Every business in town, every bargain in town is right here," she proudly proclaimed while holding a copy of the local newspaper. "I don't have to get in the car to go shopping anymore!" Mrs. Whirlee remarked. "I read the newspaper, so I don't waste gas and my time driving all over town looking for the best bargains or finding what I need." She said all her neighbors did the same, and considered the newspaper the best shopping mall in town. The Newspaper Advertising Bureau indicates most people agree with Mrs. Whirlee, confirming 8 out of 10 shoppers find it easier to compare prices in the newspaper.

Mrs. Whirlee was later heard to comment "Without the paper, I wouldn't know where to get the best buy. I can't imagine shopping anywhere else." A recent Consumer Data Service report disclosed that the Whirlee woman was typical, with 10 times more people choosing the newspaper over radio or television for "Best Buy" shopping information. The report also revealed that almost 60% of shoppers decide where to shop from the newspaper, and 82% say newspapers allow them the best comparison of goods and prices.

"It's the smart thing to do," Whirlee said. "Why even my boss shops the paper. And he's wealthy," Mrs. Whirlee was unavailable for comment.

Woman confesses she would rather shop close to home with newspaper

"I found I could save time, and even more money, by making my shopping decisions at home with my newspaper."

Whirlee is employed by Clyde Perkins, a noted local philanthropist and businessman. When confronted with the fact that newspaper readership increases as income increases, Mrs. Whirlee replied, "About all Perkins does is read the paper. That must be why the rich get richer." Perkins was unavailable for comment.

San Francisco remains red-hot with win over Atlanta

Associated Press

Kevin Mitchell hit his 18th home run of the season, a two-run shot that sent the San Francisco Giants past the Atlanta Braves, 4-0, for their seventh victory in eight games.

Mitchell homered for the fourth time in three games and raised his run batted in total to 53. He leads the majors in homers and RBI.

Three San Francisco pitchers combined on a five-hitter. Don Robinson allowed one hit in three innings before being forced to leave with a pulled muscle in his left hip.

Atlee Hammaker, 5-3, gave up three hits in five innings without a walk. Mike LaCoss pitched the ninth and yielded one hit.

Mitchell connected in the fourth against Zane Smith, 1-8, who lost his fourth decision in a row. Will Clark led off with a single and Mitchell followed with his home run over the center-field fence.

Candy Maldonado hit a two-run homer, his third, in the ninth.

Cardinals 6, Cubs 5

Pinch hitter Tom Pagnozzi's bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the 10th inning sent St. Louis over the Chicago Cubs, ending the Cardinals' five-game losing streak.

The Cubs tied it 5 on Mitch Webster's solo home run with two outs in the ninth inning. But the Cardinals came back and won for just the second time in nine games.

Ozzie Smith drew a leadoff walk from Calvin Schiraldi, 1-3, and advanced on a sacrifice. Terry Pendleton was intentionally walked and Tom Brunansky blooped a single to center field, loading the bases.

Mitch Williams relieved and Pagnozzi hit a fly ball to deep right that easily scored Smith.

Dan Quisenberry, 2-1, the fifth St. Louis pitcher, got one out in the 10th for the victory. Webster hit his first home run of the season, connecting against Ken Dayley and tying the score.

Pendleton went 3-for-4 with a two-run homer as the Cardinals beat Chicago for the first time in four tries this season. The Cubs have lost only five of their last 17.

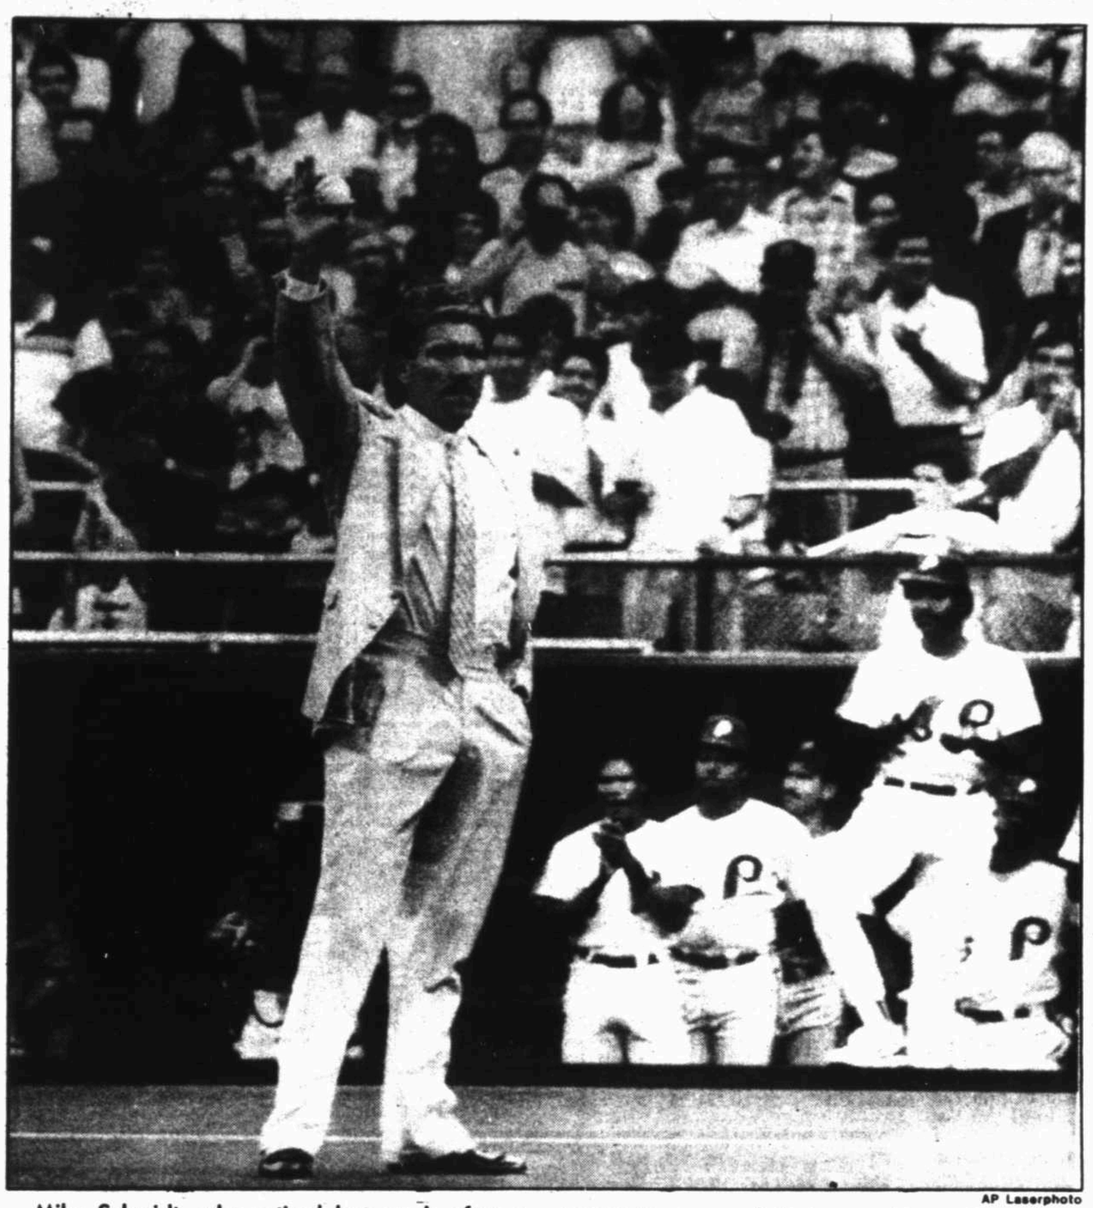

Mets 9, Pirates 3

Howard Johnson hit a home run and drove in three runs and Darryl Strawberry hit his 12th homer as the New York Mets beat the Pittsburgh Pirates for their third straight victory.

Ron Darling, 4-4, allowed eight hits, struck out four and walked two for his first complete game of the season.

Strawberry, who did not play Friday because of back spasms, singled in a run in the first inning off Bob Walk, 5-4, and homered leading off the fourth to give the Mets a 2-1 lead. Of Strawberry's 12 homers, 10 have been with the bases empty and his homers have produced only 14 RBIs.

The Mets, who have troubled scoring runs this season, pulled away with five runs in the fifth off Walk.

Mike Schmidt, who retired last week after a career spent solely with the Philadelphia Phillies, waves to a crowd that gave him a two-minute standing ovation at Veteran's Stadium Saturday.

With one out in the fifth, Darling singled and scored on Dave Magadan's RBI double. Johnson scored Magadan with a single and moved to second when Strawberry walked.

Kevin McReynolds then doubled home two runs and scored when shortstop Rey Quinones' relay throw to the plate got away for an error.

Reds 6, Padres 2

Eric Davis hit a three-run homer for the second straight game, powering the Cincinnati Reds over the San Diego Padres in a rain-delayed game.

Davis, who hit for cycle and drove in six runs Friday night, broke a 1-all tie in the sixth inning with his ninth home run. Rolando Roomes hit a two-run homer later in the inning as the Reds won their third consecutive win.

Davis is 11-for-18 in his last five games with two homers, three doubles, a triple and 10 RBI.

Rick Mahler, 7-5, allowed nine hits in his fourth complete game. He also started the Reds' sixth with a single.

Eric Show, 6-6, has lost his last two starts while trying for career victory No. 93, which would be the most wins in Padres' history. He is tied with Randy Jones.

Mahler singled and Barry Larkin singled with two outs in the sixth before Davis hit the first pitch from Show over the left-field wall. After Paul O'Neill doubled, Roomes hit his third home run of the season.

Expos 7, Phillies 5

Andres Galarraga hit a two-run homer and the Montreal Expos sent the Philadelphia Phillies to their 10th straight loss.

The Phillies' losing streak is their longest since 1985, when they dropped their final 11 games of the season. Philadelphia rallied for four runs in the ninth, but fell short.

Kevin Gross, 6-3, went 8 1-3 innings and left with the bases loaded and Montreal ahead 7-1. Von Hayes hit a two-run double off Joe Hesketh, and Tim Burke got his 12th save despite allowing Juan Samuel's RBI single and a sacrifice fly by John Kruk.

Gross is 1-1 this season against Philadelphia, which traded him to the Expos last December. Larry McWilliams, 2-6, gave up two runs in six innings.

Prior to the game, Mike Schmidt received a two-minute standing ovation Saturday night in his first appearance at Veterans Stadium since announcing his retirement from baseball.

The crowd of approximately 37,000 rose to their feet as he walked to the mound prior to throwing out the first pitch for a game between the Montreal Expos and his former team, the Philadelphia Phillies.

Schmidt, 39, announced his retirement Monday after a 17-year career with the Phillies.

"As you know, we have no control over our lives, all we can do is dream and hope your dreams are fulfilled," Schmidt told the crowd. "I thank God for letting me fulfill my dreams. I also thank you fans for being a large part of that dream. I heard the great sounds of approval and the ugly sounds of disapproval, and I want to thank you for pushing me to the limit."

SERIES

Texas coach Cliff Gustafson, who got career win No. 1,101, said he was pleased with his team's overall performance.

"Dressendorfer is an overpowering pitcher," he said. "The pivotal part of the ballgame was in the third. We had a great piece of hitting from Newkirk after that double play."

Texas took a 3-1 lead in the third inning on Newkirk's two-run double, followed by Lowery's RBI single off previously unbeaten freshman Andy Croghan, 12-1.

Croghan allowed three earned runs and 10 of Texas' 15 hits while striking out three in 6 2-3 innings. Long Beach State, the third best defensive team in the nation with a fielding average of .970, commited three errors, but none figured in the scoring.

The seventh-seeded 49ers, 50-14, jumped to a 1-0 lead when Don Barbara opened the second inning with a single and scored on Todd Lloyd's hit. They had a runner on base in all but the first and eighth innings.

Texas added four runs in the eighth.

The Longhorns advance to Monday night's second-round, while the 49ers will play in the loser's bracket Tuesday night.

Gustafson said there is a chance Bryant, the designated hitter, will pitch Monday. He has a 5.25 ERA in 12 innings this year, including a four-inning stint in Texas' 11-8 regional victory over Southern California.

Miami 5, Louisiana St. 2

Will Vespe and F.P. Santangelo each hit two-run homers off Louisiana State ace Ben McDonald to lead third-seeded Miami to a 5-2 victory Saturday in the first round of the College World Series.

Joe Grahe, 15-4, held the Tigers to five hits and one earned run to help the Hurricanes, 49-16, advance to Monday night's second-round against second-seeded Texas.

The Longhorns beat No. 7 Long Beach State Saturday, 7-1. The sixth-seeded Tigers, 53-16, will play Long Beach State in the loser's bracket Monday night.

Grahe struck out seven while yielding five singles before a crowd of 17,407 at Rosenblatt Stadium. It marked the fifth straight win and fourth straight complete game for the senior, who has allowed just six earned runs in his last 42 innings.

LSU threatened in the ninth when Keith Ostick opened with a single and Wes Grisham walked. But Craig Cala hit into a double play and Grahe struck out Mike Bianco to end the game.

McDonald, 14-3, is expected to be selected by the Baltimore Orioles as the first pick in Monday's major league draft. The hard-throwing 6-foot-7 pitcher entered the game with a 2.82 ERA but gave up home runs to Vespe in the first inning and Santangelo in the third to put LSU in a 4-0 hole.

LSU scored its runs in the fifth inning, including one on a controversial call at second base. After Matt Gruver opened with a single, Bianco walked and Phil Espinosa singled to load the bases. Ron Lim drove in Gruver with a fielder's choice.

Pete Bush followed with what appeared to be a routine double play, 4-6-3, but the umpire ruled shortstop Santangelo missed the bag, allowing Bianco to score and Lim to move to third. But first baseman Henry Hernandez made a diving catch of a foul pop to end the inning.

Jose Trujillo singled to open the first for Miami, moved to second on Santangelo's sacrifice bunt and scored on Vespe's 380-foot home run to right, his seventh of the year. Trujillo also singled with one out in the third before scoring on Santangelo's team-leading 22nd homer to the same spot.

In the men's team race, LSU edged Texas A&M by two points. Florida was third with 40, followed by Oregon with 36 and Texas with 33.

The victory for the LSU women was far easier, as the Lady Tigers beat runner-up UCLA by 39 points, the biggest winning margin in the meet's history.

UCLA wound up with 47 points. Then came Nebraska with 37, Texas Southern with 34 and Arizona with 25.

Other men's winners were: Southern California's Robert Reading in the 110 hurdles in a wind-aided 13.19; Arkansas' Edrick Floreal, triple jump, 56-8¾; Texas A&M's Mike Stulce, shot put, 68-11¾; Arizona's Marc Davis, 5,000 meters, 14:07.88; Texas A&M, 1,600 relay, 3:00.91; Northeast Louisiana's Christoph Koch, hammer throw, 233-2, and Arizona's Derek Huff, decathlon, 8,020 points.

The remaining women's winners were: Wisconsin's Suzy Favor, 1,500, 4:15.83; Arizona's Carla Garrett, shot put, 54-8; Alabama's Pauline Davis, 400, 50.18; Kentucky's Valerie McGovern, 5,000, 16:17.20; Nebraska's Renita Robinson, triple jump, 44-7½; Georgia's Kim Engel, javelin, 196-8, and Texas, 1,600 relay, 3:31.18.

DRAFT

In the 19th round the same year, the New York Yankees drafted a high school player from Indiana who had a pretty swing. He was Don Mattingly.

"At the time, I thought I should've been taken higher," Mattingly said. "But when I look back on it, I can see why I wasn't. I couldn't run and I couldn't throw. All I could do was hit, and no one knows if a good high school hitter will ever make it to the majors."

Last year, only eight of the 26 picks in the first round were high school players. But this year, nine of the first 15 picks are expected to come from high school, with Atlanta projected to make outfielder Earl Cunningham the second choice.

In recent years, more teams have selected college players, hoping to get immediate help without so much risk. The California Angels made Jim Abbott the eighth choice last year and Baltimore took Gregg Olson with the fourth pick. The No. 1 player was pitcher Andy Benes, selected by San Diego.

Many times, though, good players develop from late-round picks.

In 1982, Oakland waited until the 15th round to draft a still-developing high school star from Florida — Jose Canseco. Kansas City held off until the 19th round the same year before taking a high school pitcher from Los Angeles who had arm trouble — Bret Saberhagen.

Wade Boggs went in the seventh round to Boston in 1976, Kent Hrbek was Minnesota's 17th-round choice in 1978 and Eric Davis signed after being taken by Cincinnati in the eighth round in 1980.

One of the greatest picks of all time turned out to be St. Louis' selection in the 41st round in 1971 — Keith Hernandez.

Philadelphia found a gem in the 20th round of the 1978 draft, taking Ryne Sandberg.

"I had already signed a letter-of-intent to go to Washington State to play shortstop and quarterback. Some teams didn't want to waste a pick," Sandberg said. "The Phillies took me at the end there and I ended up changing my mind a week later."

"In the draft, you never can tell," he said. "When you're drafting high school kids, I think it's a kind of luck thing. It's a gamble and you never know how players are going to adjust to pro baseball."

TENNIS

In women's action, No. 6 Manuela Maleeva of Bulgaria cruised to a 6-1, 6-2 win over Laura Savchenko of the Soviet Union. No. 15 Mary-Joe Fernandez of the United States came from behind to beat Niege Dias of Brazil 6-7, 6-1, 6-1 and advance to a meeting against Sabatini, whom she has beaten three straight times.

Only one woman's seed was eliminated. No. 16 Susan Sloane, was a 6-3, 6-1 loser to Jo-Anne Faull of Australia.

In the day's opening match on Center Court, Sabatini fell behind 5-4 in the second set. At that point, Graf, the top seed and heavy favorite, came out to see what would happen to the only woman given a chance of challenging her for the title.

Sabatini doubled faulted to make it 15-all in the 10th game. But the prospect of a Graf-Sabatini final was saved as the Argentine won 12 of the next 14 points to take the set. Graf headed back inside, and Sabatini went on to capture the third set.

"Somebody told me Steffi was watching but I didn't know about it, I didn't see her," said Sabatini, who teamed up with Graf a few hours later to play a doubles match.

Provis, a 19-year-old Australian who reached the semifinals here last year, kept Sabatini at bay for most of the first two sets by mixing deep groundstrokes with sharp volleys.

She ended the first set in dazzling fashion with four clean winners, then broke serve at love and moved out to a 2-0 lead in the second set.

But Provis suddenly lapsed into unforced errors and Sabatini regained control in the second set by slowing the pace with spins, lobs and drop shots. After battling out of the 5-4 hole, she ended the set with a superb backhand cross-court drop volley.

Provis had two chances to break Sabatini's serve in the final set, but failed to convert the big points. The Argentine broke serve to end the match, charging to net behind a forehand service return and banging an overhead winner.

"For a moment at 5-4 in the second set, I thought I could lose the match," Sabatini said. "But I decided to concentrate and keep fighting."

"I played very badly today," she said. "Because of the rain I didn't practice much yesterday or today so I couldn't get into the match. Even in the third set, I wasnt' playing well."

Provis said Sabatini's experience paid off in the crunch.

"She's been in many situations like that before and she played a litle better," Provis said. "She started looping the ball higher. Maybe I got a little tense and overanxious. I never thought I had the match won. With players in the top 10, you can never think that way until the last point is played."

Play was suspended in mid-afternoon when a steady rain drenched the red clay courts. But the downpour was brief and the matches resumed 50- minutes later.

Wilander, who was leading Camporese 5-4 before the interruption, came out after the suspension and broke for the set, whipping a forehand passing shot down the line.

The Swede took the second set handily, but found himself in difficulty again in the third. He saved three set points to get into the tiebreaker, which he won 7-2, finishing with a backhand passing shot down the line.

The third set was played in a steady drizzle and gusty winds. At one point, a let was called when a white plastic fastfood tray floated onto the court.

"It was hard to play for awhile at the beginning and also at the end," Wilander said. "If I hadn't won the third set, the match might have been stopped and it's hard to play not knowing whether or not your are going to be able to continue."

Wilander, who won three Grand Slam tournaments last year but has suffered a series of early-round losses this year, said he feels like a new man.

"Feeling as good as I did today, it's hard to understand how I could have been playing so badly in the last couple of months," he said.

A Glass Act

The design of this Trinity Estates home allows for the West Texas sunlight to stream through the windows in the bright and airy sunroom.

Conducive to family life, the floor plan of this week's featured home is designed around many common areas — a formal living and dining room, a large kitchen with an adjoining breakfast area, a den and sunroom. Although togetherness is emphasized in all of these rooms, parents and children can retreat to the home's four bedrooms when desiring a few moments of peace and quiet.

A leaded glass front door is highlighted by side glass panels that provide a visitor a glimpse of the front entry of this Trinity Estates home. The extra-wide entrance hall has a brick floor that flows into the formal living room. A rock fireplace is situated on the left wall with cabinets and bookshelves inset on both sides. This spacious room also has a vaulted plank ceiling and a brick floor. A game table is situated in the corner, to the right. Doors in the right wall open to reveal a wet bar that features mirrored walls and glass shelves. The bar also has an ice maker and a wine rack.

TWO SETS of French doors open onto the sunroom. These doors can remain opened when entertaining in the summer to allow guests to mingle through the sunroon and into the backyard. The sunroom has rough cedar walls, brick flooring and ceiling fans. Sunshine pours into this room through many skylights and a wall of windows which frame the beautiful backyard. The yard is lined with raised brick flower beds that have been professionally landscaped.

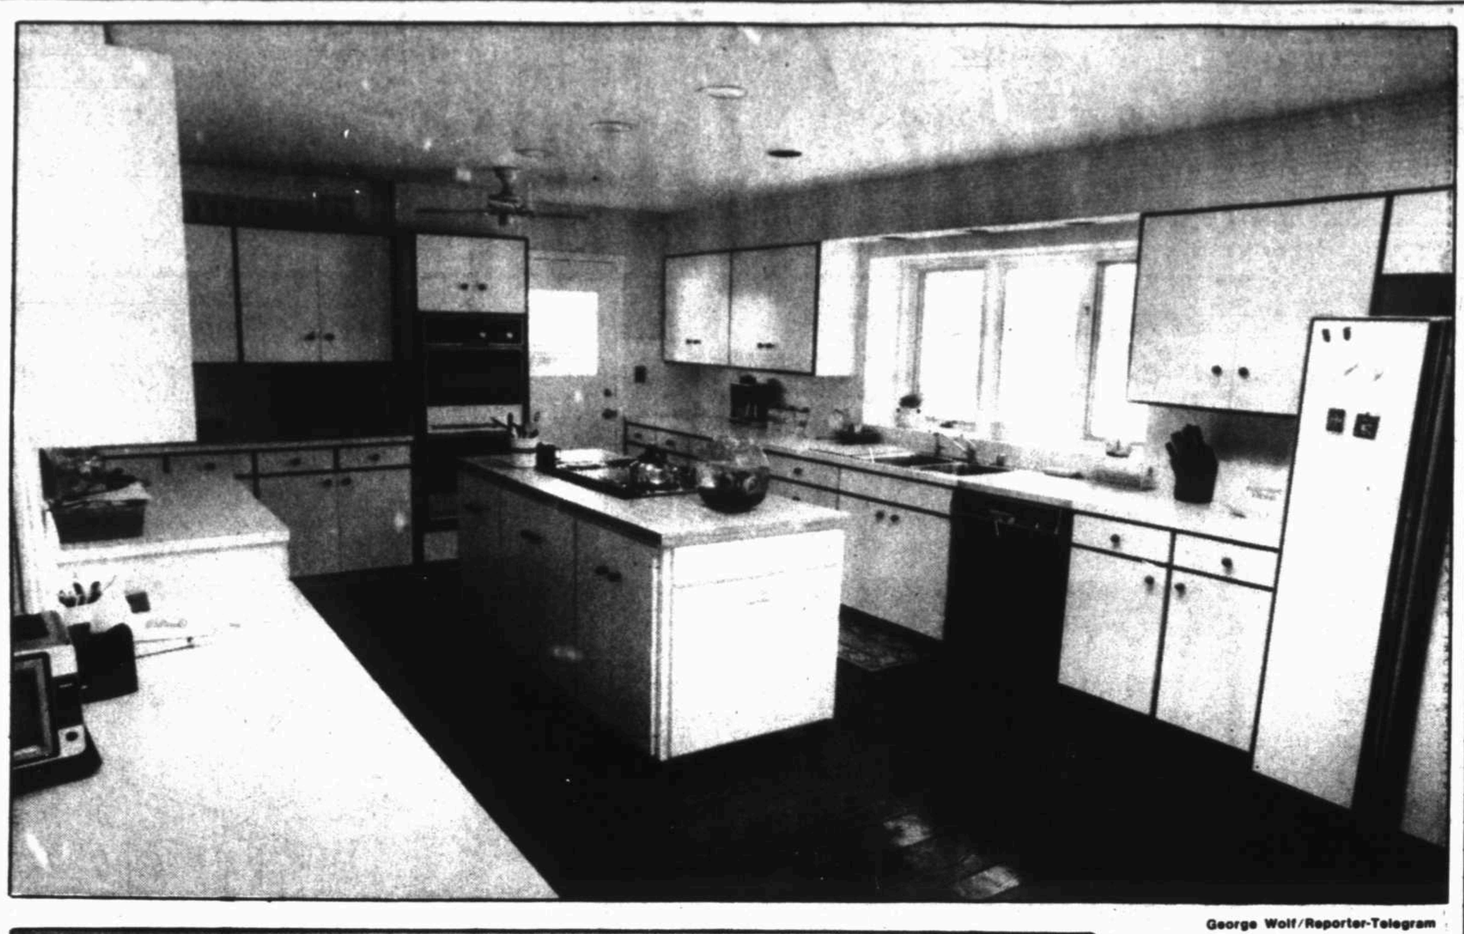

The spacious formal living room focuses on a rock fireplace. Russell L. Freeman Interior Design decorated the interior of the home.

The master suite, above, offers a wonderful retreat for couples due to a private study. A door from the study leads to a side courtyard that has a hot tub and patio area.

A central work island, above, in the kitchen provides ample space when preparing meals. The decor features white cabinets with blue accents and a hardwood floor.

The dining room, left, is painted a pale peach and has a large window which provides a lovely view of the professionally landscaped front yard.

GLASS

The brick hallway, to the right of the entrance hall, provides a pathway to the formal dining room and into the kitchen. Pale peach walls decorate the walls of the dining room. Crown moulding frames the cathedral ceiling and a floor-to-ceiling window provides a view of the front yard. This extra large room can easily accommodate a china cabinet and two servers.

The kitchen was planned for the convenience of a busy, active family. A central work island features a Thermador cooktop with griddle. A double self-cleaning oven is located by the work island and the Kitchen Aid dishwasher is situated next to the kitchen sink. A big window above the sink enables a mother to keep an eye on her children or watch neighbors jog by as she works indoors. The kitchen also has a built-in desk with shelves above for cookbooks and family photos.

A door from the kitchen leads to the side porte-cochere where groceries can be easily unloaded from the car into the kitchen.

A well-designed utility room is adjacent to the kitchen. The amenities include a large pantry, space for a freezer and an L-shaped desk for a computer.

A breakfast bar separates the kitchen and breakfast room. A built-in china cabinet lines one wall of the breakfast room. Both of these rooms have white painted cabinets with royal blue accents and hardwood floors. A petite print wall covering in green and blue compliment the kitchen decor.

The den is located next to the breakfast room. This area serves as the hub of all family activity — whether it is viewing a favorite movie together or working on a jigsaw puzzle. An Austin stone fireplace serves as the focal point. Next to the fireplace are specially designed cabinets for a television, VCR and video games. A door in the den opens onto the sunroom. A tan and navy half-bath and a rear entry three car garage with automatic door openers are also situated by the den.

A corridor to the left of the entrance leads to the children's bedrooms. Access into the first bedroom can be made through the guest bath or from an adjoining hallway. The bath has a marble vanity, teal carpeting and a blue, teal and cream wallpaper. The first bedroom, which is also ideal as a guest room, has a window that overlooks the front yard and a walk-in closet.

At the left end of the hall, the second bedroom is highlighted by lots of built-ins — a bookcase on one wall and a desk with shelves and cabinets on another wall.

This room has a private bath that includes a separate bathing area and a walk-in closet with built-in drawers and shelves.

A bright yellow and red wallpaper in a small flowered motif adorns the walls of the third bedroom. This room also has a built-in desk and a private bath.

A large window views a side yard that has a sandbox and play area for younger children.

The private bath has a marble vanity, complete with a make-up space. A walk-in closet with built-in shelves and drawers are also an amenity in this bedroom.

Down the hall from these bedrooms, the master suite provides a wonderful haven for any couple. The bedroom has a French door that leads onto the sunroom and is decorated in a pale mauve hue.

Access into the master bath can be made through two doorways. The bath has a marble vanity with two sinks that line one wall. Two separate bathing areas are situated in the center of the bath across from the vanity. One side has a sunken marble tub and the other has a marble shower. A walk-in closet that measures 6 X 10 feet is located at both ends of the bath with an adjacent wall of built-in drawers.

What may be the most appealing room, especially for parents, in this family home is a private study off the master bedroom. This room is the perfect place for parents to retreat and a door leads outside onto a private courtyard. A hot tub and a deck area highlight this secluded patio.

The other amenities of this seven-year-old home are a security system, 11 ceiling fans, storage closets, eight skylights and a sprinkler system.

First Realty of Midland/Better Homes and Gardens is offering this approximately 4,400 square foot home for $418,000.

For three years, RE/MAX of Midland has been soaring above the clouds

RE/MAX is different! This is what many families involved in buying or selling properties in the Midland real estate market agree on. Small but mighty describes the RE/MAX office of full-time professional agents.

Although the Midland office averaged only 12 agents during 1988, these agents were involved in 282 real estate transactions through the Midland Multiple Listing Service. This translates to 9 percent of all transactions handled through the MLS, or 23.5 transactions per RE/MAX agent for the year, substantially higher than the 8.13 transactions per agent for the MLS membership as a whole.

What makes the difference? The RE/MAX concept of how a real estate company should function and the quality of the agents. Founded in Denver, Colorado, in 1973, RE/MAX has spred throughout the United States and Canada. Presently there are over 1600 real estate offices franchised to handle real estate the RE/MAX way. With the RE/MAX International Relocation Services, the recently added RE/MAX Insurance International, and the excellent RE/MAX referral network, RE/MAX agents in both countries are able to offer a wide variety of services to their clients and customers.

With an average of 10 years in the real estate business, RE/MAX agents in Midland bring to the profession a broad background of experience and training. One half of the Midland agents have their Broker's license, five are Graduates of the Real Estate Institute (GRI) and two agents also have the Certified Residential Specialist (CRS) designation. There are no part-time agents in the Midland RE/MAX office and no rank beginners. Since each agent is essentially in business for herself or himself, the agents are motivated to provide the highest quality of service to the public. This means that each transaction is handled in a careful, business-like manner with the highest degree of integrity and honesty. The results speak for themselves: greater efficiency and competence on the part of the agents and increased satisfaction on the part of clients and customers.

For your next move, whether it is in town or across the continent, contact RE/MAX, the proven professionals, and relax!

Couple buys home second time around

Coming back to Midland was a dose of good medicine, according to Charlie and Margaret Moore. And they should know, since Charlie is a pharmacist and Margaret is a medical technologist.

Charlie and Margert, who were both born and raised in Abilene, recently returned to Midland. They met while in high school and their first date was on the very day of Charlie's graduation. Charlie went on to Abilene Christian University where he obtained his bachelor of science degree in psychology. Margaret attended Hardin Simmons in Abilene and Hendrick Memorial Medical Hospital's Medical Technologist School.

The Moores married and Charlie enrolled in pharmacy school at Southwestern University in Weatherford, Okla. To pay for their expenses while in school, Charlie serves as an infantry officer in the Army and was on active duty status during the summers in Clinton, Okla. Margaret worked for Dr. Bill Tisdale in Clinton as a lab technician.

In his last two years of pharmacy school, Charlie had to complete 1,000 hours of practical experience. To accomplish this, Charlie served as a pharmacist in the middle of the Cheyenne/Arapaho Indian Reservation.

Once Charlie had finished school, the Moores moved to Olney, Texas and later back to Abilene where Charlie managed a store for Gibsons. In 1976, they were drawn to Midland and purchased Tall City Pharmacy in the Courtney and Coleman Medical Center. That same year, they also bought their first home in Midland.

During his career, Charlie has attained several levels of distinction within his profession. He is the past director of the West Texas Pharmaceutical Association and is now serving as second vice president. He is also the past chairman of the Board of Counselors of the Texas Pharmaceutical Association and he has been chairman of the committee of Impaired Pharmacists of the Texas Pharmaceutical Association for eight years. He received the NARD award from Parke-Davis for his outstanding contribution in the area of drug abuse education and prevention. Charlie has also received the A.H. Robins Bowl of Hygeia Award which is given to only one pharmacist in each state each year and is the most widely recognized international symbol of pharmacy with its origin founded in Greek mythology.

The first home that the Moores had in Midland was not even for sale when a person wanted their location for a commercial venture. An offer was made that they could not refuse and unfortunately they had only two weeks to vacate their home. Karen Foster of Don Harvey, Realtors was contacted and she began helping the Moores look for a new home.

Margaret fell in loved with a new home on Sparks street but opted for another home that could be easily and quickly assumed at an interest rate far below present market rates. And as time would tell, Margaret would never forget the house on Sparks street.

In 1984, the pharmacy was sold here and Charlie and Margaret moved to Wichita Falls where they remained for three years. After a call from Dr. W.C. Watson, Charlie was informed about a new clinic that was being opened in Midland by a group of doctors and was asked if he would be interested in opening a pharmacy in the clinic. Charlie agreed and plans were laid for his pharmacy to become part of the new clinic, Midland Medical Plaza at 2409 W. Illinois.

Once again, Margaret contacted Karen Foster and, at first, told her to find a home similar to the last home they lived in here. As they began to look, Margaret remembered the house she had liked before, but did not buy. Unfortunately, she could not remember the address. Karen selected several homes for the Moores to preview and as fate would have it — the house on Sparks street ended up on the list without any of them realizing it.

This time around, the Moores did buy it. "In a way it was kind of spooky that we came back to the same house. I due think we were in some way destined to have this house," explained Margaret.

Charlie and Margaret are very pleased to be back in Midland. So pleased, in fact, that if they ever show signs of the urge to roam again, we'll probably find Charlie seriously investigating his inventory for a medication to cure it.

Karen Foster, left, of Don Harvey Realtors, helped Charlie and Margaret Moore with a purchase of a home that Margaret had remembered seeing a few years ago.

Muffy, left, and Oreo participate in that age-old activity for kittens — playing with a string.

Fine furry friends

Ancient Egyptians honored them with jeweled statues; during the Middle Ages they were accused of being symbols of witchcraft. But today, they are no longer worshiped or feared. Cats are simply considered a household pet which many people feel "all or nothing" toward. The furry felines are either loved or hated, and there doesn't seem to be much feeling in between.

But for cat lovers, there can be no better pet. Clean, affectionate and quiet, cats can be ideal companions for apartment dwellers, retirees and anyone who wants a pet with a mind of its own.

To honor this species, June has been named National Adopt-A-Cat month, according to the 1989 Chase's Annual Events, which states the purpose of the observation is "To help promote the adoption of homeless cats and kittens."

And according to Karen Hoffman, assistant director of Animal Control for the City of Midland, June is an excellent month to adopt a cat or kitten because "kitten season is in June."

"The first part of April to the middle of September is when the majority of litters are born," said Coy Willis, director of Animal Control. "Cats seem like very prolific breeders anyway."

Cats can be adopted from the animal shelter, which usually houses an average of 17 cats, Willis said.

"These are tame cats — you know they belonged to somebody, but nobody comes to pick them up," Ms. Hoffman said. The shelter keeps the animals for three days and the workers there "hope somebody comes to adopt them, but usually they don't."

Cats also can be adopted from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals humane society. Dalton Byerly, director of the SPCA in Midland, said all the animals housed at the SPCA are "previously-owned animals, not strays. We don't have the same program as animal control; if we did, we would let them do it."

Because the animals coming into the SPCA have already been owned, "we have some history on the animals people are adopting. We try to find an animal to suit that family." For example, he said, "Some cats brought in here have never been outside in their lives, and I don't want to put them out," so the SPCA tries to match these cats with families who want an house pet.

One difference in the two shelters is that animal control has a euthanasia program that involves "putting animals to sleep" if after a three-day stay at the shelter, no homes have been found for them. "Over 14½ million dogs and cats were put to sleep last year in the United States," Willis said. "They are not sick or injured for the most part — they are happy, healthy, wagging their tails. We can't find homes for them."

At the SPCA, "we don't have a euthanasia program, but we do euthanize," Byerly said.

"Our euthanasia is run two or three different ways," he said. "If we have an animal coming in (who is an) unpleasant animal, in all probability we would not adopt that animal, we would put it down. If an animal has been extremely sick, rather than spend money on huge veterinary bills, we don't keep them. If an animal has been here more than 30 days, we start talking about what we're going to do but that doesn't mean we're going to put it to sleep. When kittens start coming in here by the truckload, they are automatically put to sleep. When you can (only) keep 'X' number, it gets to where you can't keep them anymore."

Both shelters, however, are always ready to adopt animals out to good, loving homes. Specific adoption procedures are required by both shelters, including neutering or spaying all pets adopted.

At animal control, "the city has a regulation, any animals we adopt out have to be neutered," Willis said. "A deposit has to be put up for that. The cost is $45 to adopt a dog or cat."

"The adoption fee is $25, and surgery deposit is $20," Ms. Hoffman said. The shelter gives each adoptive family a certificate good for $20 at any of the local veterinary clinics.

"Anything above $20, the owner has to pay the vet," Willis said. This requirement to neuter the animals insures each animal "goes into the home as a pet. We don't sell to breeders."

At the SPCA, the neutering program is just as important, but conducted differently. "We don't have certification for neutering," Byerly said. "We have a veterinarian who comes here and does our neutering. Anyone adopting an animal from here has the animal brought back for neutering.

"We schedule surgery at the time of adoption. The surgery fee is included in the adoption fee, and varies by the weight of the animal," he said, adding that the SPCA can work with adoptive families on paying the fee. "Part of the surgery fee is collected at the time of adoption, but we can tell people exactly the surgery is going to cost."

If an animal is already neutered, then the adoption fee is much less at both shelters. "Quite often they come in already neutered," Byerly said. "The cost for that (adoption) is just $35 because they don't have (to pay) the neutering fee."

Ms. Hoffman at animal control said, "If we know they (the animals) are spayed or neutered, we hold them longer because people don't have to pay the full $45 and they have a better chance to go to a good home."

Finding good homes for these animals is the goal of both shelters. Putting potential pets "to sleep" is always difficult, Willis and Ms. Hoffman said. "The reason we have to destroy the animals is because there are not enough homes," Willis said.

If people would practice responsible pet ownership and have their pets spayed or neutered, Ms. Hoffman added, "it would eliminate the need for this (euthanasia program)."

Have you heard...?

The party was a takeoff on "The Today Show." The honoree interviewed the guests on videotape, as they arrived dressed in the image of the profession they hope to be part of in the year 2001 at age "thirty-something." Our future is in good hands if they attain their ambitions, which include becoming doctors, teachers, minister, tax attorney and orthodonist, among others.

Plans are to have a reunion in 2001 and rerun the videotape.

The guests were Cassandra Riggs, Carmela Salvador, Brian Thomas, Peter Zimmerman, Kyle Rush, Amy Avery, Mike Pollard, Carren Newsom, Jennifer Hodges, Cyndi Froning, Shannon Patrick and D'Ann Nichols.

MIDLAND HIGH SCHOOL Graduate Mary Kallus, daughter of Martha and Dan Kallus, has been honored at a series of parties.

Most recently, an after-school swimming party was held at the home of Lucy and Peter Link and hosted by Lucy's mother, Peggy (Mrs. Jim, Sr.) Leeton. The girls were served chocolate mousse parfaits on the patio. Soft drinks, dips and chips were also available for the hungry swimmers.

Submarien sandwiches and all the trimmings were served tailgate style.

MHS GRADS Smyth Swanson and Adam Pollard were honored with a picnic supper at the home of Pat and Dan Black. Co-hosts were Shirley and Budge McDonnold.

The guests enjoyed a fried chicken dinner served from picnic baskets under trees in the Black's spacious back yard. Watermelon and cookies rounded out the meal. Entertainment included swimming, volleyball, croquet, tennis, horseshoes and the trampoline.

Smyth, the daughter of Marsha Swanson and the late Robert Swanson, plans to attend the University of Texas-Austin. Adam, son of Janet and Bob Pollard, will attend New Mexico Military Institute.

Among other parties to honor Smyth, who is valedictorian of her class, was an after-school snack party held at the home of Sara (Mrs. Norman) Fry and co-hosted by Peggy (Mrs. Gene) Schafer.

"The key is sterilization," Willis said. "The national statistic is that every hour over 400 people are born, and every hour over 3,000 dogs and cats are born. ... The public has to take care of the problem and become responsible pet owners and see the whole picture."

Byerly agreed. In seven years, one female cat and her offspring can produce 420,000 kittens, he said, and in six years one female dog and her offspring can produce 62,000 puppies. "Midland does not have a stray animal problem. We have an 'owned' dog problem."

"What we need in this town is a (city and county) subsidized ... low-cost (pet) neutering program. That would help solve the over-population problem," Byerly concluded.

Ms. Hoffman said that when pets have unwanted litters and the owners give the kittens or puppies away. Unfortunately, these free litters often are picked up by pit bull dog owners who "use free kittens and puppies in 'blooding' the dog — teaching it to kill," Ms. Hoffman said.

"It's a method of training," Willis added. Training pit bull dogs to kill is illegal, he said, "but it's still done."

Anyone interested in adopting a cat or dog can contact Animal Control, 1601 Orchard Lane, Midland, 685-7420; or the SPCA, 15 Kerry Road, Midland, 684-7582.

Dogs, cats seriously overweight

Copley News Service

While you are fighting your own diet battles, consider the following: Obesity in dogs and cats is nearing crisis proportion, according to a survey of 400 veterinarians.

Three out of every five dogs considered by the survey were overweight. And while there aren't any statistics on cats, there are "a lot of fat cats out there," according to Dr. Robert J. Keough of the Cook County Department of Animal Control in Chicago.

Keough said that obesity is one of the most common nutritional diseases in pets. Unfortunately, few owners recognize the problem.

If a dog's ribs cannot be felt, or the abdomen hangs, or the stomach protrudes, a dog is overweight, Keough said.

Student builds better mousetrap

Copley News Service

A Chicago medical student has built a better mousetrap that should appeal to squeamish mouse-catchers.

Cliff Feldman has modified a traditional mousetrap by adding a bar attached to a plastic bag — when the baited trap crushes the furry varmint's neck, the other bar drops a plastic bag over its lifeless body.

Feldman says his recently-acquired patent can be sold as a supplement to mousetraps for as little as 50 cents.

And mouse-hunters employing the gadget can toss away both the bagged mouse and the trap or they can flip over the trap and release dead mouse into a garbage bag.

Feldman already has a sales pitch in mind: "One spring, two bars, no mice."

Pauses, risks are measured

Copley News Service

You've heard of the pause that refreshes.

But a pause isn't refreshing when it indicates your risk of heart disease.

According to an Ohio physician, the more frequently you pause between spoken sentences, the higher your risk of having a heart attack.

And the longer you pause, the more likely you are to suffer from depression.

Dr. Ernest Friednman says he knows this to be true because the gadget he has spent 35 years developing told him so.

It's called "Voxaflex," and it analyzes how well the left and right brain work together to form speech patterns.

According to Friedman, folks are six times more likely than others to suffer coronary diseases if they pause for over one second two or more times per minute.

However, the gizmo also can be used to measure human performance and potential.

That includes student-teacher relationships, accounting vs. creative skills, nuclear plant operators, overnight workers and even criminals eligible for early release programs.

Car engine sounds no music to women's ears

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

No matter how close we come to egalitarianism, men will always bring up the strained relationship between a woman and her car. The old stereotype of a woman putting her hand out of the car window to dry her nails instead of making a signal to turn will haunt us to our graves.

A group of men were talking recently when one told the story about his wife, Anna, who duly reported to him that her brakes were "mushy." He drove her car around the block and pronounced the brakes to be perfectly normal. Anna still was not convinced. She told her friend Ethel that her brakes were "mushy," and Ethel said she had the same experience with mushy brakes until she put high-test ethyl in the gas tank. The men got hernias from laughing.

I find that story perfectly reasonable. In fact, it all sounds too familiar. I had a "ping" in my engine a while back and told my husband about it. He gave me that look — you know the one I mean, like he's standing over a puppy who just missed the paper. Then he said, "I'll check it out."

When he came in, he said, "The ping is not under your hood. It's your seat belt flapping against the seat."

"You weren't listening," I said. "A ping is never IN the car. A ping is always UNDER THE HOOD! I know a seat belt when I hear one, and it's not a ping. A flapping seat belt is a blump."

"Just drive it around for a while," he said tiredly.

"Oh sure, and just let the ping turn into a major gekump?"

"Do I have to remind you," he asked, "what happened when you took the car in for a ... what was it you called the noise in the trunk?"

"A boompt."

"Whatever. We paid $102 to find out that a can of creamed corn was banging against your spare tire."

I guess what really ticks me off is the superiority men exude about cars. Don't tell me the male species is born knowing about transmissions and brake fluids. Anyone who believes a man has an affinity for things mechanical has never ridden down a highway in a rental car with a husband who turns on the windshield wipers when he has to turn left and releases the hood when he thinks he's turning on the lights.

I'll concede that women may not have the right terminology, but we recognize a boompt or a mushy when we hear one. And let's face it, men still come running to women when the only way they can get the sticker price off the window is to break the glass.

About the ping under the hood? All I know is it went away right after I had my car washed and waxed.

Planning ahead can help avoid many problems

Associated Press

Here, five wedding day dilemmas — and how, with smart planning, to keep them from happening.

■ Aunt Mary phones from the airport on wedding day, frantic, because her luggage has been lost.

SOLUTION: Before the wedding, ask a friend or relative who lives close by, and is easy to reach, to be a troubleshooter. In this case, he or she could pick up Aunt Mary at the airport, help her fill out lost baggage forms; take her shopping for weekend essentials and drive her to her hotel.

■ The photographer calls to tell you he or she will not be able to take any candid shots during the wedding because an assistant is ill.

SOLUTION: Ask guests to take candids for you. Provide them with disposable cameras, rolls of film in a help-yourself basket in the ceremony site vestibule. Guests can drop used film in another basket by the exit. Ask a friend to collect film at the end of the reception and have it developed. Before wedding day, you might provide ushers and bridesmaids with cameras as thank-you gifts.

■ Your dress rips or your headpiece falls off as you're about to walk down the aisle.

SOLUTION: Ask your honor attendant ahead of time to bring a small sewing kit with needles, white thread and plenty of hat, safety and bobby pins along to church and reception.

■ You get very emotional and can't remember your vows, or say them without crying.

SOLUTION: Practice vows ahead of time; memorize them, if possible. Make sure your clergyperson has a copy of vows ready to prompt you. Eat before the wedding. Finally, speak with your fiance about fears beforehand and ask him to support you with a squeeze of the hand and whispered words of encouragement during the ceremony.

■ The night before the wedding, an usher or bridesmaid gets sick or announces he or she can't be in the wedding party.

SOLUTION: The number of bridesmaids and ushers does not have to be equal. Your clergyperson will arrange a procession that flows beautifully, no matter what the ratio. If your one honor attendant can't be there, ask a friend who is the same dress or tuxedo size as the attendant to fill in. Chances are, he or she will view it as an honor, and be glad to help out.

Flowers provide crowning glory to elegant ceremony

Associated Press

A wedding without flowers would be like a wedding cake without icing. Flowers are the crowning glory to an ultra-elegant ceremony and reception.

Their color, fragrance, beauty and fragility are essential to the overall atmosphere of this wonderful day.

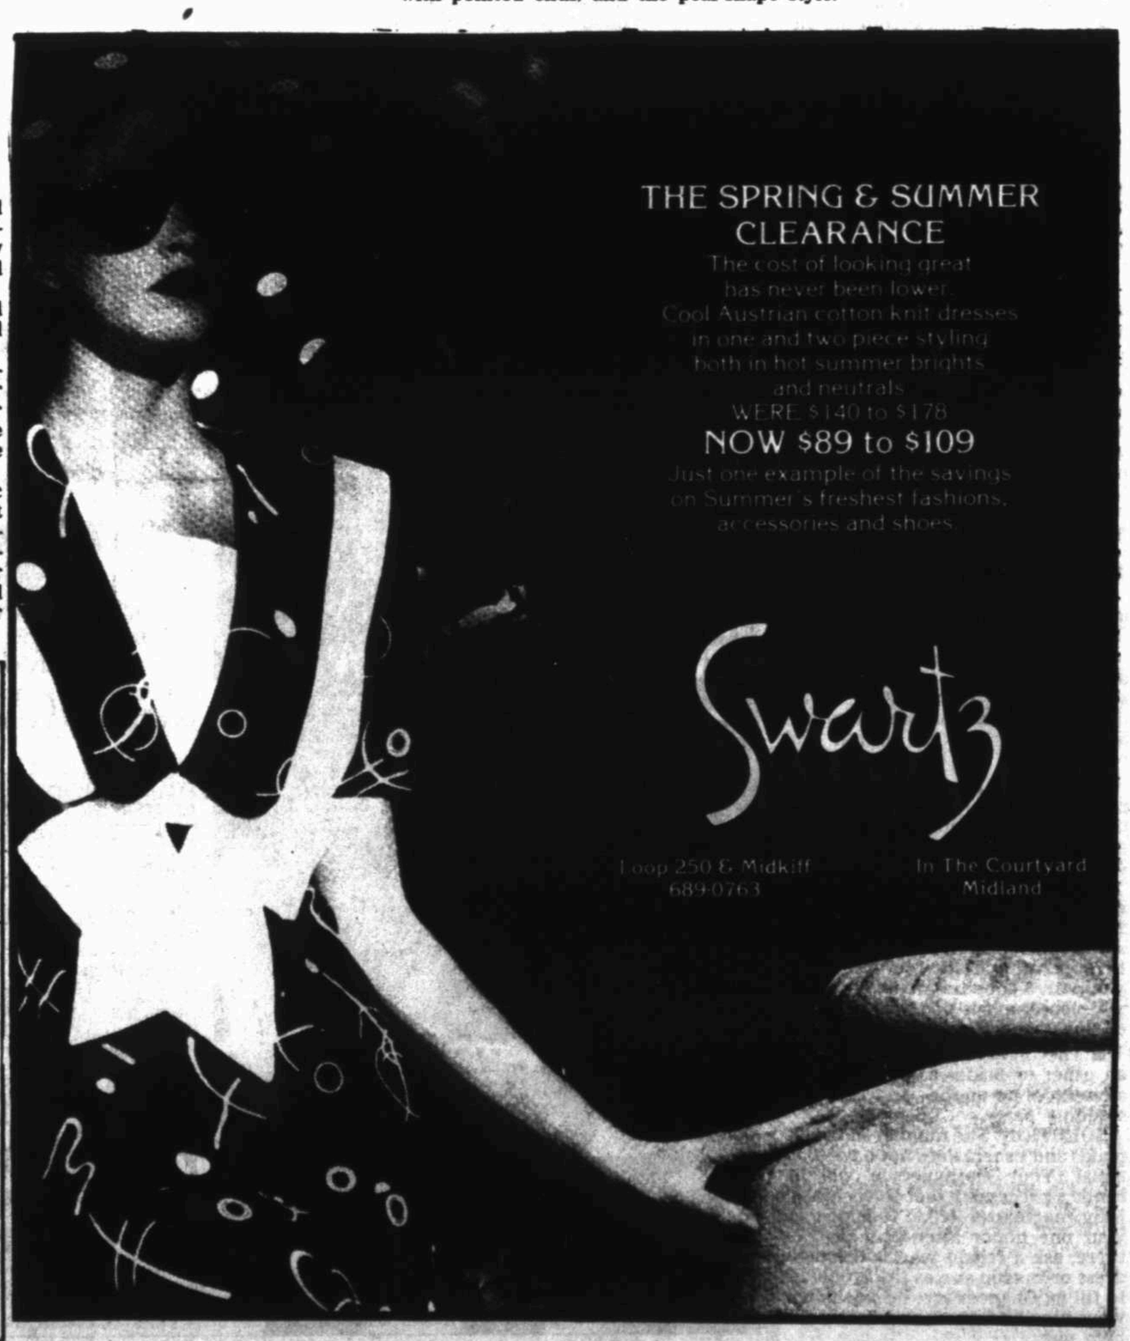

When you're speaking to an experienced professional florist, he or she will show you photos of their works so you can choose the type and style of flowers you would like for your wedding day.

Knowing the names of specific flowers is not very important, but making sure that your flowers coordinate with the dresses you have selected is extremely important. Your florist will personally create a bridal bouquet that is compatible with your gown.

Brides-to-be prefer traditional solitaire

Copley News Service

More than 75 percent of American brides choose for their engagement ring the diamond solitaire, a round stone set in six prongs of white gold on a gold band. Why? Because it refracts light better than other shapes and thus is more brilliant. Next in popularity are the marquise diamond (elliptical with pointed ends) and the pear-shape style.

Quiz offers insight to bride's reactions

By ANTONIA VAN der MEER
Associated Press

The following quiz will give you insight to wedding etiquette and how you should react in order to insure the wedding of your dreams.

1. You give your hand, but no one's footing the bill. You:
A. sulk and hope parents will pay.
B. forget a dream wedding and elope.
C. talk to all parents about ways of financing a wedding you want.

2. You two want to pay for the wedding; so do your parents. You:
A. secretly pay for it yourselves.
B. give in and let your parents pay.
C. offer to split costs; assure them they'll still be hosts.

3. Costs have been split between families; to avoid money changing hands between you and in-laws, you:
A. ask for a suitcase of unmarked bills.
B. say nothing — it's too awkward.
C. assign each family specific expenses (florist, liquor, etc.) and have bills sent directly to them.

4. His parents helped pay and want their names on invitations. You only want your parents' names. You:
A. leave their names off; blame printer.
B. give in; they are financing some things.
C. put his parents' names on just the reception cards.

5. His parents want the wedding done their way — since they're contributing financially. But their ideas differ from yours. You:
A. fight out every detail. Food matters more than family.
B. relent — you need financial help.
C. get your fiance's help in politely sticking to your original plans.

6. Your parents are divorced. Your father is paying wedding expenses, but planning without consulting your mother. You:
A. let them each plan their own reception; stop in at both.
B. tell Dad you'll plan and pay for it all if they continue fighting.
C. assure both parents they will have separate, important roles.

Answers:
If you answered "A" to many of the above questions, you're reacting too emotionally. Be objective. If you chose "B" most often, you're giving in too easily to everyone else's demands and allowing finances to spoil your day. The most constructive approach is "C." These answers show a spirit of compromise that should please everyone.

Miniature animals make big impact

By VICKI HADDOCK
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — A horse riding an elevator?

Cattle checked as excess baggage at California airports?

A full-grown pig curling up in his owner's lap to watch TV sit-coms?

Yes, and even if the barnyards they hail from sound more reminiscent of "Alice in Wonderland" than "Old MacDonald," the trend is unmistakable.

Americans are discovering miniaturized animals in a very big way.

A ranch like Winners' Circle in Petaluma, Calif., helps explain why the number of miniature horses in the world has soared to 30,000, a three-fold increase in just four years.

Barbara Norman, a third-generation member of the family that operates the ranch, walks to the edge of a fence and points to a whinnying horse that looks like a small-scale Appaloosa. He is a champion example of a miniature: horses that stop growing at or less than 34 inches.

"This is Illusion," Norman says, "and his (breeding) dance card is already full through 1990 and 1991."

The diminutive horses of Winners' Circle visit nursing homes, delight school children, and greet visitors when the ranch opens to the public in summer. Soon they may join an animal-therapy program for patients through the University of California at San Francisco.

"Animals have real therapeutic value," says Norman, a nurse. "And for children or older people who are uneasy around the large animals, miniatures are perfect."

The miniatures market isn't just for toy poodles anymore – it offers a veritable Noah's Arkette of zoological options. The recently formed Pygmy Goat Association's pedigrees have grown to 10,000. The miniature donkey registry has about doubled in 10 years. A society is in the works for owners of Zebus, which resemble small-scale Brahman bulls. And someone in Oregon is pursuing a breeding program to develop a miniature llama.

"What turned me on to miniatures was when some friends gave our 2-year-old daughter an adorable 1-pound baby pig as a joke," says Cindi Winship, who named him Arnold as in Ziffel, swine star of "Green Acres."

"I didn't know anything about pigs except the version Oscar Meyer distributes in cellophane, yet I managed to even housebreak him – picking him up, swatting his bottom and telling him, 'No, no.'

"But in six months Arnold weighed 375 pounds and was smashing down doors. All of a sudden, miniature animals sounded like a great idea." Winship's family now raises miniature and exotic animals in the Missouri Ozarks.

Ideal miniatures tend to be identical in features and proportion to their full-size counterparts.

The horses were bred down from Shetland ponies to amuse royal children during the Renaissance, and later were imported to haul carts out of American coal mines. Pot-bellied pigs, about 16 inches tall, used to roam Asian fields.

But many miniatures were vanishing until they caught the eye of urban and suburban Americans in the 1980s.

Now pet-seekers, nouveau ranchers or investors can purchase a miniature horse, donkey or pig for about $1,500. The animal eats comparatively little and thrives in small yards.

"When I saw my first miniature horse, I had to have one," says Mary Culbertson of the American Miniature Horse Association in Fort Worth, Texas. "I felt like a kid in Toyland at Christmastime."

Some animal advocates welcome the surge of miniatures, but others complain the animals are being turned into spectacles.

The dichotomy was evident when veterinarian Michael W. Fox, the American Humane Society's vice president for bioethics, defended an embattled woman's right to keep her miniature horse for companionship. But he also told her to stop the animal from ever reproducing.

"I realize many people mean well and are using the animals to reconnect with nature," he says. "But we have seen in dogs, for example, that they become more susceptible to health problems due to miniaturization. I don't believe these people are doing creation any favors."

Most city ordinances ban or restrict livestock.

"I have a real problem with these animals being treated like the hottest new toys on the block," says Kathie Flood, Berkeley city supervisor of animal-care services. "Considering that 200,000 dogs and cats have to be killed a year in California, we're not doing real well with the pets we already have."

Breeders and owners of miniatures insist that through attention and careful breeding, their animals stay healthy and happy.

Noting that regular-size horses are raised for racing, and pigs and cows are raised for slaughter, they ask how anyone could object to miniatures becoming show animals or pets.

Author wags tales in new book

Volume gives canines tips on living with humans

By ARTHUR SALM

Nice going. You missed it. Forgot about it entirely, didn't you? And now it's too late: Feelings are hurt.

No, not Mother's Day. If you slipped up on that one, just call her this evening and tell her about how those deregulated phone lines were tied up all last month. She'll believe you and she'll forgive you.

But you also overlooked Be Kind to Animals Week, and don't for a minute think that you'll get off the hook with Sasha the sheep dog as deftly as you did with Mom.

Fortunately, the perfect gift is now in the bookstores: David Comfort's "For Dogs Only: How to Live with Human Beings" (Pocket; $5.95), the world's first canine self-help book.

COVERING SUCH sadly neglected topics as Getting Adopted, Territory, Bad Habits, Privileges and Mating, it's an indispensable guide to co-existing with that most unpredictable and irrational of species — Homo sapiens.

You have to admit we're kind of nuts when it comes to something like, say, oh, I don't know ... housebreaking. David Comfort has a few things to say on that very subject.

"What a perplexing thing for a dog to be housebroken," he mused.

"The difference between a human perspective and a dog's perspective is enormous. To a dog, waste is a source of pride. But the first thing we humans do to a puppy is punish him for going in the house.

"Even on a lesser level you have to figure that everybody else is allowed to go to the bathroom in the house except the dog. Including the cat!"

Getting into a dog's mindset was easy, he explained, because, as a (so far) failed novelist, "I lived like a dog for years — kind of a life of umbrage. Actually, thinking like a dog was the most inspiring part of the whole project. I think that's the basis of (Far Side' cartoonist) Gary Larson's humor, for instance. It makes for interesting twists that really come out of common sense."

TAKE FOR example the chapter on Bad Habits. Under the section on "Going AWOL" Comfort gives advice through Boomer, as Everydog, and Frank, his Everymaster.

You, Boomer, have snuck over to the Stansburys' to check out a cutie named Fanny. Frank is calling you.

"You hear Frank, but ignore him. It's a game he and you play based on a quirk of yours Frank has observed: You come when you are called, but only if you think — judging by the tone of his voice — he sees you. So Frank has gotten into the habit — especially at night when it's raining and you have just slipped around the far side of the elm during an NBA play-off — of calling you with a voice out of the Old Testament, like God's. You have learned this is a bluff. So now, over at the Stansburys', you continue about your business with Fanny."

Frank's wife, Sheila, eventually forces him into driving around in the station wagon to look for you.

"Of course, Frank isn't a fool. He doesn't expect you to come ... That's not the point of the station wagon ride. The point is to catch you trying to take cover; to flush you from it; or, a dream come true, to spot you in the rear-view attempting to double back and get to the house before him. So that when he arrives, you are on the front porch, tail wagging, ears down, like a huge misunderstanding is in progress."

ALSO EXTREMELY useful is the step-by-step guide that will deliver you, in time, from sleeping chained to a post outside to a place with Frank and Sheila on the pillowtop mattress.

The last move is sheer tactical brilliance: During a storm, you sneak into the bedroom and wait. Then,

"KaBloooOOOM Ha HAAA!

"Now, suddenly, everything happens very fast.

"Airborne, you touch down, on all fours, right between Frank and Sheila! The Thunder roars down the chimney and through the living room! ...

"Your head recoils against Sheila. She throws her arm around you ...

"'Good God, Frank. The poor baby is absolutely petrified ...What do you think? Let him stay — please?'...

"Now, falling into a deep, warm sleep, you listen to the thunder fly out the chimney and away searching for another house where the people might not love their dog enough to give them their pillow.

"And from this day on, you have bedroom privileges."

COMFORT HAS also observed (although he didn't include this insight in the book) that the dog world is filled with psychedelics.

"Dogs will ingest anything from a gym sock to soap," he says. "Everything is sort of a drug for them; they get a buzz. There's an amplification of the senses that's staggering to speculate about. We have about 2 million olfactory cells, for example, and they have, conservatively, 250 million."

So, with this amplification in mind, what does Comfort imagine a walk around the block is like for your average dog?

"I was walking with my dog (a German shepherd) the other day, and I was completely obsessed, as usual — and as most people are — with interior dialogue, my own thoughts. Dogs do not have interior dialogue; they don't have language, as we know language, and of course language is what feeds abstraction of time that pulls us into the past or the future.

"Dogs are completely immersed in the present, and you can see that as the dog walks along he's completely keyed in to sights and sounds and smells of the present. I mean, a dog is a walking mystic; most animals are...

"They do have their anxieties, but they're certainly not the same as ours. There are no 'Type A' dogs."

Comfort clearly admires the dog's view of life. In "For Dogs Only" there's a chart of Human-Dog Differences, in which he notes, "Our life expectancy is 72 years, and we say, 'Heaven help us.'

"Your life expectancy is 12 years, and you say, 'What the hell.'"

Pet names important to relationships

By JULIE NOBLE
Hearst News Service

BEAUMONT — In bygone eras, the world's most famous lovers had lyrical, romantic sounding names — Romeo and Juliet, Anthony and Cleopatra.

Terms of endearment were equally melodious. Theodore Roosevelt called his first wife "my bewitching moonbeam." Ludwig Van Beethoven addressed love letters to his sweetheart, "My angel, my all, my very self."

Today's couples often choose pet names that sound more cartoonish than romantic — Pinky and Binky, Gnootz and Wootz, Poop and Boop. Some are saccharine sweet — Bubu and Kissikins, Googsie and Snookie; while others are just plain weird — Mechanical Fish and The Card Lady.

But those with original monikers like My Little Candied Yam and The Old Lady may well have a passionate edge on the rest of us.

Bestowing silly, smarmy or fanciful nicknames on each other is a wonderful way for couples to bring out the child in themselves — and create a mature, loving relationship, psychologists say.

"It's as if couples are trying to become emotional twins, their nicknames an umbilical cord that joins their inner worlds," writes psychologist William Betcher in his book, "Intimate Play...Creating Romance in Everyday Life."

"Intimate play is one of the ways that couples bring into the relationship the deepest parts of themselves," Betcher says.

Texas psychologist Carmen Kaimann couldn't agree more.

"If you can work at playing, then you're working on improving your relationship or keeping it healthy." she says. "People get bored with each other, they need to throw some spice in there," Kaimann says.

Both genders tend to "start assuming we know what the other person is thinking," she says. "The woman, especially assumes he should know what she's thinking after a certain period of time."

This is asking for trouble, Kaimann says. "You need to ask openly for it. Don't assume your husband is going to know what you're thinking."

Kaimann counseled one married couple who exhibited many of the classic symptoms.

The wife felt neglected and claimed real communication between her and her husband had broken down long ago. The husband wasn't motivated to change because he couldn't understand what his wife was complaining about. He only started taking her seriously when she refused to make love.

Counseling had dragged on for months and Kaimann was beginning to think her efforts might be futile when she came up with a plan to bring a spark of life into the couple's long established routine.

The husband was to be the catalyst, but first she had to "build him up," she says. Kaimann tried talking to the auto mechanic in his own language.

"To fix cars like you do, you have to be a creative individual," she told him. "But you're not willing to invest your creative potential to help improve your relationship."

The pep talk worked. The husband surprised his wife by proposing something totally out of the ordinary. But he had been spurred along by her improved communication, Kaimann says.

"It starts a good cycle. They're shaking up that old negativity. They begin looking at each other in a different light, which is where play comes in," she says.

Play can be as simple as pretending you're dating again, dropping by to take your spouse out for lunch unexpectedly, or sending flowers for no reason.

Keeping the child alive and in balance adds something special to a relationship, Kaimann says. Many couples fall in love and get married for the right reasons, but never create the kind of intimacy that will help them want to be with each other long after the initial spark has faded.

"One of these days you're going to be an old doddering gray-haired woman and so is he. What's going to be there to keep you together? Familiarity, inertia?" Kaimann says.

Maybe not, if she's his Honeydew and he's her Melonhead.

Vending machines in Virginia are 'matter of life, breath'

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR READERS: I read the following item in ASH, a publication printed and distributed by Action on Smoking and Health, a national nonprofit organization concerned with the problems of smoking and the rights of non-smokers:

"Condom vending machines will replace cigarette vending machines at the University of Virginia, thanks to Dr. Richard Keeling, the university's student health director."

I telephoned Dr. Keeling in Charlottesville to ask when the replacement is scheduled to begin.

"It's already begun," he replied.

I asked what prompted the switch.

"I had a very important double message to deliver by replacing a product that is known to be damaging to one's health with a product that will protect the health — and possibly the lives — of sexually active adults," Dr. Keeling stated matter-of-factly.

"Congratulations, Doctor," I said. "That was very courageous — particularly coming from a Virginian in tobacco country. May I quote you in my column?"

"I hope you do," was his reply.

Integrity lives! End of item.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 17-year-old virgin. I've been going with this one guy for two and a half years, and he's always trying to push me into having sex.

The problem is, I'm not ready for that yet. He keeps saying that if I don't have sex with him, there are plenty of other fish in the sea.

I really like him, and I enjoy hugging, kissing and holding hands. I'm not a tease. I want to wait until I get married to have that special night. And since it can happen only once (the first night), I want it to be special.

He doesn't want to wait. What should I do? — HURTING IN SUNNYSIDE, WASH.

DEAR HURTING: I wish all the letters were as easy to answer as this one. The tide flows both ways. There ARE plenty of other fish in the sea. Dump him.

DEAR ARBY: My 27-year-old stepdaughter, "Julia," is having a large, lavish wedding, which my husband, Julia's father, is hosting and paying for. Although I have been married to "James" for 12 years, Julia still feels a great deal of resentment and bitterness toward me because I was the "other woman" in her father's life while she was growing up, which caused her mother much pain and unhappiness. (Her mother died a few years ago; otherwise, obviously, she would be co-hosting the wedding with James.)

I was not mentioned on the invitations (i.e., "Mr. and Mrs. — request," etc.), nor am I to stand in the receiving line following the ceremony. Julia is in charge of all the plans, and James says it's her day and whatever she says goes. I feel that out of loyalty to me, James should insist that we be treated as a couple, but he is bowing to all of her demands.

It has occurred to me to skip the wedding, but James thinks I should be bigger than that, and "rise above it all."

I do not want to spoil a joyous occasion by making demands, but I am finding these put-downs very hard to handle. What should I do? — JAMES'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: Since Julia still feels a great deal of resentment and bitterness toward you, an appropriate wedding gift for you to give the bride would be your absence. This would be a good time to leave town.

DEAR ABBY: Your advice about washing hands after going to the bathroom was all wrong. It's more important to scrub them BEFORE. Better yet, both before and after, but especially before.

Your genitals may be the cleanest part of your body bacteriologically; your hands are the dirtiest. — MILLER SWANEY, SPRING HILL, FLA.

Most teen-agers do not know the facts about drugs, AIDS, how to prevent unwanted pregnancy and how to handle the pain of growing up. It's all in Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." Not to be macabre, but did you know that a dog howling at an open door for no apparent reason signifies death?

Or that a man will go blind if he looks into the eyes of his mother-in-law?

They're both true — if you believe in omens and superstitions.

All this according to a spiritualist called Zolar.

His book, "Zolar's Encyclopedia of Omens, Signs & Superstitions," contains hundreds of folklore items.

Here are several more:

You can cure a sick person by washing him or her and throwing the bathwater over a cat.

WESTERN HISTORY

A collection of western art masterpieces by Charles M. Russell, Fredric S. Remington and William R. Leigh are on exhibit at Ruidoso Downs Race Track in New Mexico.

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

More than 60 years have past since Montana artist Charles Marion Russell painted the largest project of his career; "The History of the West" murals. Until recently, these murals, along with several other pieces of Western art, have been in the possession of a small Catholic seminary outside Camarillo, Calif., where few people have had the opportunity to view them.

Now they are on display for public view in the Turf Club at Ruidoso Downs Race Track in Ruidoso, N.M.

Originally painted on commission for California collectors Estelle and Edward Doheny in 1925, the works have been acquired by R.D. Hubbard, co-owner of Ruidoso Downs, and his wife, Joan Dale Hubbard. During the same acquisition from the Doheny collection, the couple also purchased three other paintings — Russell's "The Snow Trail," William R. Leigh's "The Happy Hunting Ground" and Frederic Remington's "The Navajo Trail" — and a bronze by Russell entitled "Meat for Wild Men."

The collection was purchased from a private collector in Oklahoma, although Mrs. Doheny had donated it to the Catholic seminary following her husband's death.

The Hubbards were originally approached about purchasing the collection by Walt Wiggins, a Santa Fe art dealer, in 1985.

"At that time, we were in California moving from this place to that and we had no place to put something," Mrs. Hubbard said in a recent telephone interview from Ruidoso. "We were not involved in something like that on that level so we didn't do anything."

The Hubbards, who now live in Fort Worth, are natives of Kansas. They were in the windshield replacement business in Wichita, when, in 1977, they purchased a bankrupt glass manufacturing company in West Virginia. They merged this company with another company in Tennessee to create their current company, AFG Industries, a major manufacturer of float glass in Kingsport, Tenn.

In August 1988, the Hubbards purchased Ruidoso Downs, a decision that was 20 years in the making.

"We've been coming up here 20 years," Mrs. Hubbard said. "We've raced here and been here. It wasn't like we walked in here cold turkey and bought it. We were very much a part of it for a long time."

The race track had "lots of problems" and the Hubbards were among those who said, "Somebody needs to do something. Finally, it dawned upon us, 'Why not us?' You can't pass the bill to someone else when it's your turn to stand up and be counted."

When they became the new owners, Mrs. Hubbard recalled being "scared to death." Very quickly, they moved into the next phase where they examined how they were going to address the problems at the track and get them resolved.

"It's exciting. Now was our chance to do the things everyone had said all along," Mrs. Hubbard said. The purchase offered the couple the opportunity to address the "I wish somebody would do this" statements they and others had made through the years.

"The History of the West II" mural by Charles M. Russell measures 30 inches by about 24 feet. Its story begins in the late afternoon with a pack train whose lead rider lifts his rifle to take aim at a white-tail deer and two does (not shown) while a bear peers over a rocky outcropping.

The story of the West, as paunted by Charles M. Russell in 1926, begins with a group of cowboys rounding-up and roping cattle in this section of "The History of the West I" mural. The entire mural is an oil and canvas painting measuring 30 inches by approximately 20 feet.

New Mexico's Taos Pueblo, at least 900 years old, is the nation's oldest continuously occupied structure.

New Mexico: State of mind

By JOHN SINOR
Copley News Service

If you have a bit of New Mexico in your heart, however small, you have a touch of wealth in your spiritual bank account to draw on for the rest of your days.

The truth is, the state is a poor place. The wonder is, it gives so much to all who find a way to go there.

I first started flying into Albuquerque about 19 years ago. In those days, the little airport there was a traveler's dream. It was compact and warm with earth colors tossed together in a decor of Zuni, Navaho, Hopi and other Indian themes. The main men's room even had a little electric razor hanging from the walls above the sinks, so a fellow could freshen up after arriving on an only partially filled airplane.

The little bar in the main waiting room was filled with a few real cowboys, some oilmen in pearl-gray Stetsons and ladies wearing tight jeans and turquoise fortunes.

Today the airport is nearing completion of a long remodeling job. It has crazy cartoon signs directing you to baggage, ticket counters and rest rooms and apologizing for a job that has taken years to near completion.

The place will be bigger when it is finished, but it will still be uniquely Albuquerque. You will still be able to get copper and Mexican silver in the gift shop, chili powders to take home and sopaipillas with your tamales in the restaurant.

AND THE place is still a million mental miles away from where you left or are headed — the airports of Los Angeles, San Diego, Houston, Denver, New York or New Orleans.

Breathe deeply when you arrive in Albuquerque. It's a mile above sea level, although you won't find one sign bragging about that fact in the whole place. Hell, the state capital, Santa Fe, up the road an hour, is about a mile and a half high, and that's only in the foothills of the Sangre de Cristo Mountains.

High doesn't have anything to do with the land around here. The moon is high. The incredible and almost fictional sky above Taos is high. The hawk and eagle gliding on the wind are high. (The kids who lived in communes way up in Angel Fire in the '60s were high. Almost all the time.)

On some of my trips to the state, I have just lounged around Albuquerque or made short trips to the nearby Sandias — the watermelon mountains — by car and, once, by cable lift. On other trips, I have rented a car and slowly explored the state in various directions.

It's a marvelous place to drive, especially if you come from freeway country as I do. The highways are pretty good considering the state's budget, and you can drive on some of the bigger ones for a hour before you'll see another vehicle.

One drive found me headed south of Albuquerque to Ruidoso Downs and the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation. My companion on that trip was Max Evans, the writer and a New Mexico resident since he started cowboying there at the age of 11.

ON THE way we drove Highway 380 over the frozen fire of a river of lava that long ago created the reason for the Valley of Fires State Park.

At the reservation we stayed for a few days at the Inn of the Mountain Gods, one of the most magnificent and emptiest vacation lodges I have ever seen. We were between seasons, and we practically had the place to ourselves, including a two-story-high copper fireplace that should be listed if there is a book of hotel wonders of the world.

The lodge, which provides employment for tribe members during its high winter and summer seasons, is an economic lesson for impoverished Indian tribes, taught with vigor by its founder, Chief Wendell Chino.

On the way back to Albuquerque we stopped at the west end of 380, where it joins Highway 25, in the little town of San Antonio, something of a tourist attraction.

San Antonio, which is small enough for all of it to be captured in one snapshot, is the home of the Owl Cafe.

People travel for hundreds of miles in New Mexico to visit the Owl Cafe and buy its hamburgers.

Naturally we bought a couple each, and they were good. I noticed their special taste came from the fact they had a couple of green chilies in each burger. Later I found that the taste could be duplicated with a couple of chilies and any reasonably cooked hamburger. However, making the home variety isn't an excuse to get in a pickup or family sedan and take a long drive through a beautiful state.

San Antonio has one other claim to some distinction. It is the birthplace of Conrad Hilton, the late hotel giant. However, he left the town with nothing over one story high in it.

ON OTHER trips Max and I have traveled to Taos, Santa Fe and other high spots in the Carson and Santa Fe National Forests area.

This is the land that attracted such literary figures and artists as Willa Cather, D.H. Lawrence, Mable Dodge Luhan, Georgia O'Keeffe, Woody Crumbo, Frank Waters, Jack Schaeffer, and, yes, Max Evans.

Billy the Kid and other various outlaws also rode around this area, making fools and, at the same time, legends out of themselves.

New Mexico proudly proclaims itself "The Land of Enchantment" but this is only partly credited to the weather and the scenery. The rest of it has to go to the tales of the supernatural, the ghosts and the midnight yarns that can be woven around the customs of the Indians, gringos and Mexicans who live on this land.

It is almost incredible that the New Mexico Magazine features a monthly column at the back of each issue called "One of Our 50 Is Missing."

This recounts tales in each issue of the ignorance of people throughout the world who do not realize New Mexico is one of the United States, where people speak English, do not need passports and spend American currency.

Admittedly the three basic necessities of life, food, shelter and clothing, are pretty much different there. But it's on our map.

Historical hotel reopens on shootout's anniversary

By RICHARD BENKE

LINCOLN, N.M. (AP) — Sheriff Pat Garrett had ridden up to White Oaks to buy lumber for a gallows, and Billy the Kid was left in the custody of deputies J. W. Bell and Bob Olinger.

But Lincoln, for all its violence, had (and still has) no jail, and William Bonney, alias Billy the Kid, was kept in leg irons and handcuffs in an upstairs room at the courthouse, awaiting his hanging.

Around lunchtime on April 28, 1881, Olinger took six other inmates across the street to the Wortley Hotel for a lunch, by one account, of roast beef and potatoes.

It was Olinger's last lunch. Bonney somehow got his hands on a gun, shot Bell, then pointed a shotgun out the upstairs window in time to catch Olinger, who had heard the shooting and was running back across the street.

"Hello, Bob," Bonney said, firing both barrels.

On April 28, 1989, the Wortley opened for another lively season in Lincoln.

"Nobody got shot," state monument Ranger Sharon Daughtry said at the Tunstall Store Museum down the street.

But a tour of fourth graders did come through town from Floyd, N.M., and they saw the markers outside the courthouse where Bell and Olinger fell dead.

"When we went out to Bell's marker and I asked them to read the (April 28) date on the marker, they just thought that was the neatest thing," Ms. Daughtry said.

The drama of Billy the Kid's escape and Olinger's last lunch will be reenacted, as it is every year, during Lincoln's annual pageant in August. It's set for Aug. 4-6 this year.

Ralph Dunlap, head of the pageant, says it follows a storyline familiar to millions of Wild West aficionados, filmgoers and TV watchers.

The story begins as British rancher John Tunstall drives his horses to Lincoln, where they will be impounded to cover a debt allegedly incurred by attorney Alex McSween in settling the estate of Emil Fritz. McSween, a business associate of Tunstall, had been retained to collect Fritz's $10,000 life insurance benefit, but the money hadn't trickled down to the heirs.

However, nothing about the Lincoln County War is as simple as that. The Englishman was an interloper in the commerce of the county, competing with a band of transplanted Irishmen led by Lawrence G. Murphy and James J. Dolan.

Tunstall is ambushed, his cowhand Bonney swears revenge on the killers — Murphy men who were part of a posse organized by Sheriff William Brady — and law becomes blurred.

For example, the pageant depicts the subsequent shooting of Andrew L. "Buckshot" Roberts at nearby Blazer's Mill. Was Roberts trying to arrest Bonney or were Bonney and his pals trying to arrest Roberts — or both?

"This is neither black nor white but gray on both sides," Dunlap says.

Then McSween finds himself under siege. He is killed as he leaves his burning house, carrying a Bible, not a gun. The Kid makes one of his many escapes.

Gen. Lew Wallace, territorial governor and author of the epic novel "Ben Hur," meets Bonney and promises amnesty if he surrenders and testifies against Dolan and others.

But when Bonney does surrender, that promise is broken; he is tried in Mesilla, sentenced to hang for the murder of Sheriff Brady and brought back to Lincoln's courthouse-jail, which used to be Murphy's store. There he stays until the April 28 escape. He was shot to death by Garrett at Fort Sumner on July 14, 1881.

Renovations began, but they were concerned the race track might not finish by the official opening May 13. Most of the work was contracted in Ruidoso and Mrs. Hubbard credits the "people in Ruidoso" with making the on-time opening possible. Contractors were "here till four in the morning sometimes and at daylight they started again." She paused and added, "I really made a lot of friends with these people."

The Hubbards' interest in the Doheny collection resurfaced when Hubbard was looking for an anniversary present.

"Dee was going to buy a Remington for our anniversary," Mrs. Hubbard said, recalling the events leading up to their acquisition of the collection and its subsequent placement at Ruidoso Downs.

"He contacted Walt Wiggins to see if he could find something. Walt got back with him and said he had some pieces to show us. He also mentioned this Doheney collection might be on the market," Mrs. Hubbard said.

Wiggins came to Ruidoso and went with the Hubbards to view the collection.

"After we did that, Dee said, 'Well, what do you think?' And, I said, 'Well, I would love to do this.' And he started to put the plans together."

After meeting with the "powers that be" in Ruidoso, the Hubbards thought, "Why not show it here?"

"So we did," Mrs. Hubbard said.

Prior to the Memorial Day opening of the collection, the Hubbards, who plan to add one or two pieces a year to the collection, acquired a second Leigh — "Centinel of the Plains" — through Wiggins.

Recently appraised at over $15 million by Mongerson-Wunderlich Galleries of Chicago, the collection now ranks among the most significant acquisitions of western American art in recent history. Prior to their purchases, the Hubbards had not collected much art.

"We were in a position where we had some money to do it," she said. "That always makes it nice, when you can afford it."

IN LOOKING back over the decisions they have made, Mrs. Hubbard said, "I think it's really worked out well. There's certainly a lot of excitement about it." She laughed and added, "Besides, I'm going to be here everyday, and this way I get to see it."

Mrs. Hubbard finds little unusual in the fact that they have acquired a race track and an art collection in less than a year's time.

"When a good idea comes along, Dee doesn't understand why it can't be done," she said. "He does it."

Thus, when John Hall, who has been hired as director of the Hubbard Collection at Ruidoso Downs, and Mrs. Hubbard talked with Hubbard about establishing an art competition, he agreed.

Plans for the "Hubbard Award for Excellence," were announced at a preview party durinf the Memorial Day opening. The award will be given for the first time June 1, 1990. The $250,000 award is being hailed as "the world's richest art competition."

"We believe excellence in American art should be recognized," Mrs. Hubbard said. "We believe there are Audubons, Whistlers, Remingtons, Russells and Leighs in the art world today, and we want to provide incentive for them to paint or cast their best work."

The first stage of the competition will be the nomination of qualified artists by seven to nine key directors from across the United States. Nominated artists will be screened, and the top 35 or 40 nominees will be invited to submit two original works for the competition. The entries will be paintings or sculpture, in the realistic genre with no limitations on subject matter.

"R. Dee and Joan Dale Hubbard will select the winner from the original works entered, and a $250,000 cashier's check will be presented to the winning artist as a purchase award," Hall explains.

"The remaining art entered in the competition will be displayed and offered for sale at Ruidoso Downs until August 1990, and then will go on a brief tour of Europe and the Far East."

Those planning to visit Ruidoso, N.M., may view the Hubbard Collection free of charge 8:30-10 a.m. race days.

The Russell murals dominate the second floor walls of the Turf Club. Painted during the last year of the artist's life, the two 30-inch tall murals, one of which is approximately 20-feet long and the other is almost 24 feet long, took 14 months to complete. The $30,000 he was paid represented the largest commission Russell had received.

Southwest Art credits historian Ginger Renner as saying Nancy Russell, the artist's wife and agent, negotiated the deal with Doheny. Mrs. Russell and Doheny contributed to the content of the murals.

"Doheny wanted an oil well in one of the murals," Ms. Renner says. "Russell raised hell about it but Nancy conned him into it, and he put three in the corner...but they are damned tiny."

HE PAINTED the murals in a rock-walled cabin on the California ranch of silent-screen star Harry Carey, Ms. Renner says. "The whole aura of the murals is replete with a longing for the past."

As a child, Russell loved to sketch and model animals, cowboys and Indians, so it is surprising to most people that neither of the murals contains Indians.

"In the late 1970s, I spoke with a priest at the seminary about the fact that there were no Indian or buffalo scenes," Southwest Art credited Dean Krakel, former director of the National Cowboy Hall of Fame and now director of the High Plains Heritage Center in Spearfish, S.D., as saying. "He (the priest) said that Doheny did not like aborigine peoples. It was probably a bitter pill for Russell who had lived with the Indians and loved them."

Russell's interest in the West accounted for the reason his parents let him visit the Montana Territory when he was 16. He soon made Montana his home, moving there from St. Louis, and earned his living as a hunter for two years, then worked as a cowboy for about 10 years. Russell lived with the Blood Indians in Canada one winter.

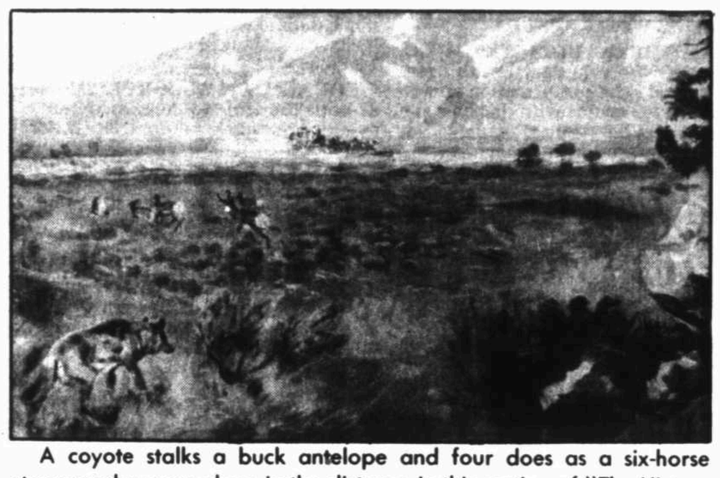

Russell included a self-portrait in the mountainscape on the left side of one of the murals.

"One cannot help but realize that the backdrop for the murals epitomizes the settings used in Russell's more than 2,000 compositions," Krakel said. "In a sense the murals mirror his whole artistic life. There are at least 13 individual paintings in them addressing his favorite Belt Mountains, the man on the horse, the pioneer, the roundup, the desert, the miner...

"Russell was terminally ill, and he knew it. He wanted to pump all the great love of the West he had into these paintings."

Joan Dale and R. Dee Hubbard show off their new acquisition "Meat for Wild Men," a fourth edition Roman Broze Works by Charles M. Russell. It measures 11½x22½x36 inches.

A coyote stalks a buck antelope and four does as a six-horse stagecoach moves along in the distance in this section of "The History of the West I" by Charles M. Russell.

"The Navajo Raid," painted in oils by Fredric Remington circa 1908, measures 27x40 inches.

Desert city offers full day of sightseeing activities

By CAROL MARTINEZ
New York Times News Service

TUCSON, Ariz. — The small desert city of Tucson offers plenty to entertain and amuse a visitor willing to spend a fun-filled day in the desert. The best place to begin a Tucson adventure is at the Arizona/Sonora Desert Museum. Arrive early since it gets very hot here, very fast.

Start your desert exploration outside by visiting with the animals. This place is a great zoo, but the animals are more active in the cooler early-morning hours.

After watching the hummingbirds buzz around their cage, you can explore the museum's limestone caves or walk among the cactuses and other desert plant life.

The Arizona/Sonora Desert Museum is open 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily; 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. Memorial Day to Labor Day. Admission is $6 for adults, $1 for children 6 to 12.

Your next stop during this day in the desert is the Mission San Xavier del Bac (The White Dove of the Desert). This is not a traditional California-style mission, but a bleached-white building that contrasts sharply with the deep blue Tucson sky. Sit quietly inside the mission, which was founded by Father Eusebio Kino in the early 1700s, and study the unique designs. Masses are still scheduled at the mission on Sundays and special days.

Outside the mission, local Indians have set up shop and sell a variety of jewelry and handicrafts. A variety of silver jewelry is for sale, but shop with care — during a recent visit, some of the items were labeled "made in Korea."

Before shopping, you can have a soda and eat some Indian fry bread, a treat that is deep-fried and served with a topping of sugar, honey or salsa.

After experiencing the desert and some local history, it's time to head back to Tucson to see the city's recently opened Children's Museum.

Exhibits ask: "What makes an airplane fly?" "How does my heart pump blood?" and "How do I say hello in Chinese?"

For more information on Tucson, contact the Tucson Convention and Visitors Bureau at (602) 624-1889.

Salt Lake City is dream fulfilled

By ROBERT DIETRICH

CNS Photo

The frontier town in Heber City, Utah.

Like the Arc de Triomphe in Paris and the Capitol in Washington, D.C., Temple Square is the center of Salt Lake City.

This is a city of 700,000 that has pioneer written all over it.

It represents a dream fulfilled, or a miracle perhaps, for the Christian sect known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints — more commonly known as the Mormons — which was ostracized in the Northeast in the early 19th century for its belief that Christ ministered in the Western Hemisphere during the years of his life on Earth not covered in the New Testament, and for its practice of polygamy.

While multiple wives are no longer condoned, the Mormons' other fierce belief — the ethic of hard work — has made for a wealthy community, evidenced by the widespread use of gilding in the holy structures of Temple Square.

Quig Nielsen, a retired engineer who volunteers his time to conduct tours, talked about how Brigham Young led the first party of Mormon pioneers over the Wasatch Mountains to the east in 1847 and decided that the barren, arid valley on the shores of the Great Salt Lake would be their first city.

"Brigham Young stuck his staff in the ground here and said, 'This is where we build the temple,'" Nielsen said. "It took 40 years to complete."

Near the internationally famous Mormon Tabernacle, with its 12,000 organ pipes, is the mansion Brigham Young built for his multiwife family.

The first wife, the matriarch, generally lived in the main part of the residence. Subsequent wives had adjacent private quarters.

Salt Lake City has an international array of dining spots. There are English-style pubs, German bierstuben and French, Italian and Mexican restaurants. But arrangements for acquiring a cocktail at a public establishment are rather awkward. Under Mormon-inspired state liquor law, you buy spirits and mix ingredients separately. (The waiter or waitress can do the mixing.)

The city is virtually surrounded by mountains. With skiing less than an hour away in winter and rock-climbing and gentle-to-tough hiking in summer, the city can be a mecca for the Renaissance person.

The physical outdoor challenges blend with Salt Lake cultural and intellectual atmospheres.

You don't, for instance, have to don black tie to hear the Salt Lake Symphony. It regularly schedules outdoor concerts in the surrounding resorts and public recreation areas where brown-bag lunching is encouraged. Ballet companies and little-theater groups do the same.

On the sprawling University of Utah campus, the Utah Museum of Fine Arts features exchange exhibits from museums throughout the world.

Or you can get a glimpse of the Old West and take a day-trip to Heber City, site of a late 19th century railroad fleet with accompanying frontier town. This is where miners once flocked to steam off dirt in hot springs.

But culture and heritage are the attractions that draw throngs of visitors from all over the world to what must be Salt Lake City's most visited building, the Family History Center. The center is a genealogical research laboratory with copies of records dating from near-antiquity in Europe, the Middle East, Asia, Africa and the Western Hemisphere.

Rock Springs bubbles with history

It's easy to understand Wyoming's official tourist slogan, "This is the way America was," once you have spent five minutes driving Wyoming roads. They haven't resurfaced them since Butch Cassidy got his nickname.

"Butch Cassidy got that name from working here in Rock Springs as a butcher. His real name was George Leroy Parker," explained Ray Lovato, curator of the former combination city hall, firehouse and jail of Rock Springs, Wyo., which is now a regional historical museum.

The jail part was built in 1895. What used to be the upper deck of the firehouse section is now an ethnic museum.

"We have 58 nationalities (represented) here," Lovato said, looking up at a ceiling obscured by flags — some from nations that no longer exist.

One display case contains the Highland bagpipes and Scottish regalia of a Mr. MacAuliffe who was pipemajor of the Rock Springs Kiltie Band in 1906. Another has an early Ch'ing dynasty vase surrounded by opium paraphernalia Chinese laborers brought with them. Other cases contain artifacts from Italy, Spain, Mexico and virtually every nation in Central Europe.

While the lure of Rock Springs to travelers is its proximity to the outdoor recreation sites, there is the added attraction of an almost-monthly calendar of festivals.

August features the Rocky Mountain Polka Festival, with professional and amateur bands from throughout the nation and Europe. Then, there's the grape festival (California grapes, by the way) with the stomping done by bare feet. There's an Oktoberfest and a Hispanic Heritage Festival and rodeos and Anglo-style horse shows and pari-mutuel racing and three kinds of motor racing.

North of Rock Springs on U.S. 191, across the Oregon Trail, is Pinedale, the site of the U.S. Mountain Man Museum. The 1833 and 1835 Mountain Man Rendezvous — to which flintlock-rifle-toting trappers brought their pelts to trade for supplies — were held nearby.

The museum is dedicated to the estimated 1,000 men — most with Indian wives — who made up virtually the entire European population in the Rockies in the early 19th century.

In the mountains of the 3 million-acre Bridger-Teton National Forest to the east of Pinedale, Ranger Dave Hohl pointed out places that have not changed since mountain men trudged through in moccasins or on snowshoes. Today these sites are still only accessible on foot, on horseback or, in the cold months, by snowmobile.

Hohl is pioneering a snowmobile safari route that will meander over the entire area, allowing for stops at lodges or, for the hardy, tent-camp sites. That seems a likely expedition — if you like snow.

Utah natural history museum offers research, adventure

Copley News Service

Millions of years ago, the deserts of Utah were swamplands where prehistoric animals roamed.

The Utah Field House of Natural History in Vernal, Utah, is uncovering evidence of dinosaurs and of a mysterious human ancestor known as "Fremont Man," who co-existed with the great pre-Ice Age mammals.

It is a part of ongoing research that offers a new element of adventure for vacationers.

"We hope to be offering interested people a chance to work at digs under supervision," said geologist Sue Ann Bilbey.

Next to the field house is Dinosaur Gardens, where life-size re-creations of fellows such as tyrannosaurus rex and diplodocus giganticus are posed munching on the swampy vegetation that abounded there 140 million years ago while a bat-winged pterodactyl soars overhead.

Vernal is the western gateway to Dinosaur National Monument, which straddles the northern borders of eastern Utah and western Colorado.

Fremont Man was one of the newcomers here, staying until at least until A.D. 1000, the date of rock art, known as petroglyphs, found on cliffs. This primitive art was carved on stratified tombs bearing fossils of some of the first animals on Earth.

Inside a massive, air-conditioned movable shed covering the side of a cliff that is stratified in stone time as a tree's trunk is ringed, paleontologists, using delicate implements, chip and brush away at the intact skeleton of a 5,000-pound brontosaurus who died in an avalanche of muck about 140 million B.C.

Escorted by red-bearded ranger Herm Hoops, we trekked down to where the Green River continues to saw a mountain in half — Split Mountain, where many of the Fremont petroglyphs are being discovered.

Hoops expressed concern about the future of the park, which he characterized as "a combination of Mount Rushmore and the Statue of Liberty."

Water barons want to dam one of the least-explored areas of the park, he said. "If people don't come to explore here," he said, the park could be lost to water interests.

Less than three hours and worlds away is Park City, Utah, the chic ski resort that has a salty past.

Assistant Police Chief Lloyd Evans pointed to the restored 19th century railroad station and explained how the terms "other side of the tracks" and "red-light district" originated.

"We used the tracks as kind of a barrier between the respectable citizens and the, uh, fun houses," he said. "Mother Urban's place was all white while her main competitor, Bessie, painted hers purple. The railway workers would put their red lanterns in the windows so they could be located in an emergency."

Chic boutiques and restaurants are now housed in Park City's sturdy frontier-Victorian structures. In its earlier life, the town boasted 60 bars, a dance hall with a spring-loaded floor to cut vibration, five ordinary dance halls and three opera houses.

But Park City has another claim to fame. This may be the place where skiing originated in the United States. Norwegians who came to the area to work in the silver mines brought their skis, Evans said.

And skiing is still the main attraction of the town, whose permanent population of 5,000 swells to 20,000 in winter. The main street is even intersected by a public ski lift.

Main Street runs uphill to ski-lodge communities on the slopes of 9,400-foot Bald Mountain, where bunking in splendor ranges from $90 to $900 a night.

Women travel lighter when packing shirtwaist dresses, accessories

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Traveling light is a dream of many women, and one way to do it is to pack a few basic clothes and a lot of accent pieces.

"Taking the right accessories along is easier when you plan your wardrobe and then work your plan," says Terrymayer, a New York fashion consultant and jewelry designer.

Basics, she says, can be made to fit the occasion with the proper shoes, belt, handbag and jewelry, scarf or hat.

"A diary of what you have worn with your favorite separates or suits makes sense," she says.

"If you know what you have, you can plan what you need," Terrymaker said.

One basic that is coming around again is the shirtwaist dress.

"Someone once said it has a thousand and one ways of looking," Terrymayer says. "It is like adding the dressing to a salad to give it its name."

The shirtwaist, of course, can be of any one of a multitude of fabrics. It can be straight from the shoulder to the shirttail hem, to be cinched by a belt or tie or left loose. Or it can have a defined waistline with one of several skirt styles — pleated, gathered, flared, straight.

As for accessories, says Terrymayer, "this is the year of the bangle bracelet. For fashion impact, wear several at once, perhaps even six. It is the time of the charm bracelet, which gives you the chance to show your major interests, on your arm. In the summer, the sea and its charms look so with-it.

"It is wise to know that it is not the value of the accessory that counts, but the way you feel about it, for you to give it its display.

"What you wear takes on your personality."

When traveling this summer, says Terrymayer, take along some lightweight colorful earrings, some bangles and perhaps some chains for your neck.

"Take jewelry you won't have to worry about," the fashion consultant said. "Pack it in a small silk square and tie it hobo fashion."

And remember that whatever you choose to take, "its beauty is in the eye of the beholder, and its role is to accent you."

AT YOUR LEISURE
By Sue Snelson

One of my travel agents has recently returned from Cancun, Mexico, where she checked out the hotel properties available. Mexico is always a bargain for Midlanders, and additionally, Cancun has done a marvelous job of rebuilding after the recent hurricane.

As a matter of fact, you see very little of the damage--aside from the construction, the only other reminder is in the condition of the trees.

Hotels, according to my agent, are in tip top shape and better than ever--meeting the needs of a variety of travelers' budgets. Almost all of the hotels in Cancun give ocean, lagoon or bay views. These views are breathtaking because the water there is so pretty.

Cancun has a number of large properties which would be good for groups and conventions. These include the Oasis, the Condesa and the Fiesta Americana. The Fiesta Americana is a beautiful hotel which has been recently remodeled to include an antique-looking appearance.

A number of hotels are reasonably priced and well suited for families and college students. These would include the Viva, the Caribe International, Dos Playas, Fiesta Inn and the Calinda.

A top-of-the-line choice is the Camino Real. This deluxe hotel is perfect for honeymooners. Great decor and surroundings that include one of the most beautiful lagoons make this a memorable hotel.

Other good choices are the Club Med resort, and the Krystal Hotel. All of the hotels include restaurants and most include discos and health clubs.

When in Cancun, sightseeing is a must. Be sure to visit the ancient ruins of Tulum and Chichen Itza, snorkel and marvel at the underwater beauty of Xel Ha, take a day trip to Cozumel or Isla Mujeres.

Another good vacation spot in Mexico is Ixtapan. Just two hours out of Mexico City, Ixtapan is the home for an internationally popular, cosmopolitan health spa. The beauty is that it costs one-fourth of its American counterparts.

On the west coast of Mexico is Puerto Vallarta, where I'm taking my family in June. We will take advantage of a package plan which includes three nights, four days, air, transfers, hotel, meals and drinks for $300 per person.

Midland Travel has reserved this package for many of our clients and have had good reports. However, since I hadn't been to Puerto Vallarta in more than two years, I wanted to see for myself the quality of the arrangements.

If you are looking for a bargain getaway, talk to one of the Midland Travel professionals about the wonderful destinations of Mexico. Numerous packages in a variety of price ranges await your selection. Come by our office at 319 N. Colorado or call 684-7428 or 1-800-356-9435.

Long-term care services not limited solely to nursing institutions

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

By the year 2000, more than 133,000 Texans are expected to be in private nursing homes. If annual inflation does not exceed 4 percent, the cost of care for these individuals will be more than $4 billion. Almost a million others are expected to receive long-term care outside these facilities at an annual cost of almost $5 billion.

Long-term care covers a wide range of services and conditions and is not limited to those confined in nursing homes.

Currently available insurance policies usually cover limited services and conditions. Insurers feel that some of these conditions are uninsurable or would require such high premiums that the policies would not be sellable.

Consumers must match the level of coverage with their ability to pay. Careful shopping is required.

Here are some of the most frequently asked questions about insurance:

■ What nursing home benefits are provided by Medicare? Medicare does not pay on most nursing home confinements, because many nursing homes are not Medicare certified.

To qualify for Medicare benefits, you must receive skilled care on a daily basis in a Medicare certified, skilled nursing care facility.

Medicare does not pay for custodial care. In 1989, under Medicare Part A, you will pay a co-payment of $25.50 per day for the first eight days in a skilled nursing facility. The next 150 days of skilled care are paid at full cost by Medicare. Beyond the 150th day, there is no Medicare coverage. Prior hospitalization is not required.

■ What is skilled care? Check your long-term insurance policy for the definition.

In most policies, skilled care may be provided only by, or under, the supervision of licensed nursing personnel, it must be available on a 24-hour a day basis, and it must be provided under the general direction of a physician. Skilled rehabilitation services such as physical, occupational and speech therapy are usually considered skilled nursing care.

■ What is intermediate care? Intermediate care ordinarily does not require licensed nursing personnel to be on duty 24-hours a day, but does require such attention on a daily basis. Most policies provide the same level of benefits for both intermediate and skilled care. Be sure to check the definition in the policy you are considering.

■ What is custodial care? Once again, check the policy for the definition.

Custodial care, also referred to as personal care, helps a person meet basic needs of daily living, such as walking, getting in and out of bed, bathing, dressing, eating and taking medication. Custodial care may be provided by persons without specific professional skills or training. When consumers speak of long-term care, they usually are referring to custodial care.

Remember, when you receive a long-term care insurance policy, you are entitled to a 10-day free look. If you find the policy unacceptable during this 10-day examination, you are entitled to return it for a premium refund. Read the policy carefully during this period and before making a final decision.

Mexico evaluates light oil

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Experts are evaluating an extra-light type of crude oil recently discovered in at least three fields in southeastern Mexico to determine if it is profitable for marketing, a source at the state petroleum monopoly Pemex said Tuesday.

The new Toltec crude is at least 40 degrees on the American Petroleum Institute's gravity scale — the lightest found so far in Mexico, said the source, who insisted on anonymity.

It was discovered at the beginning of the year at "great depth" in the Juju, Tecominuacan, Paredon and other onshore fields that lie between the Gulf of Mexico port of Coatzacoalcos and Villahermosa, the capital of Tabasco state.

The area contains some long-worked fields dating back to the Cretaceous and the Jurassic periods in the Mesozoic era, but the source refused to disclose the geologic details of the find.

"We are still n aking studies of the characteristics of this crude. We are taking a series of samples and analyzing them to see what characteristics they have, their yield and what (production) problems are involved," the source added, and refused to say more.

The Toltec is even lighter than the Olmec variety, measuring 38-39 degrees API discovered by Pemex last year in Mesozoic era field in the state of Tabasco and Chiapas states and now being exported in small quantities.

One of Mexico's two other traditional varieties, the Isthmus measures 33 API and the heavy Maya 22. The Olmec has been found to contain very little sulphur and metals, making it very easy to refine.

Petroleos Mexicanos S.A., as Pemex is formally known, also announced it has set up a subsidiary wholly owned by Mexican government agencies to handle, "diversify" and "make more flexible" its international operations.

The subsidiary, to be known as Petroleos Mexicanos Internacional S.A. de C.V. is jointly owned by Pemex, the Mexican Export-Import Bank and Nacional Financiera, the government financial underwriting agency.

Raul Robles Segura, Pemex's deputy director for marketing, will be the president and Pedro Haas Garcia, Pemex's deputy director for coordination, the general manager of the subsidiary, which will begin operating June 1.

"The purpose of the new subsidiary is mainly to promote sales abroad, improve collections and make payments more flexible," the source said.

Mexico agreed with other independent producing nations at a meeting at the Mexican Embassy in London last week to continue its policy of propping up prices on the world market by restricting sales.

The independents will be closely watching the next meeting of the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries in Vienna, Austria, to see what OPEC does before deciding on any further moves — if any, said another industry source who also insisted on anonymity.

Mexico cut its exports by 5 percent on April 1 for a period of six months to help buttress prices after OPEC members pledged to respect their production guidelines and keep them low.

But a statement by the Department of Energy and Mines at the time said the deadline was not rigid and the period could be extended if marketing conditions warranted it.

Mexico, the world's fifth biggest exporter, sold an average of 1,326,900 barrels daily abroad during the first quarter of 1989 — 778,000 barrels of Maya, 397,200 barrels of Isthmus and 151,700 barrels of Olmec — for a total of $1.73 billion, or an average of almost $14.50 a barrel.

A Pemex quarterly report said the monopoly also exported 23,141 barrels of butane and liquid gas daily, 39,709 barrels of diesel, 9,709 barrels of jet fuel, 6,464 barrels of pentane and 54 barrels of asphalt for a total of $84.16 million.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Julie Williams and a group of friends are building their company on cards and posters that carry messages of support to people in 12-step recovery programs.

Playing the right cards...

Midlander's cards target special group

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

There are birthday cards, Christmas cards, anniversary cards, sympathy cards, Mother's Day cards and Father's Day cards.

There are also cards to announce divorces or new babies or to better express feelings for that special someone.

Now a Midland company is finding its own niche in the booming greeting card industry by designing cards not for a special occasion or to express a special feeling but for special people — those going through 12-step recovery programs such as Alcoholics Anonymous, Narcotics Anonymous or Overeaters Anonymous.

"These cards carry the message that we're loved and that we're all just doing the best we can," says Julie Williams, founder of Synergy and designer of the cards. "Part of the recovery program is spreading that message, and for me this is a way of carrying the message."

The line of cards — there are 32 designs — and posters feature friendly animal designs and offer messages of encouragement, ranging from 'Hang in there' to 'Let go and let God.'

The cards are printed locally by Starline Printing; the first printing of 2,000 copies each of 16 designs was in March and the second — also 2,000 copies each of 16 designs — was in April.

Locally the cards are available at Pages and Prints in Plaza Shopping Center and at Bob's Designs. In fact, Pages and Prints is on its fourth reorder since early April, Williams says.

Williams — who is herself in a 12-step program and has worked through a divorce and other personal difficulties — got the idea for the cards about a year ago. "I was working for a credit union at the time and trying to decide what I needed to do with my life," she recalls. "And this idea came to me at work one day. I scoffed at it, but it kept persisting."

Eventually, she discussed the idea with some friends, who gathered with her to make the cards a reality. After an artist hired to design the cards decided not to continue the project, Williams sat down with index cards and marking pens and began drawing the covers.

"I was real insecure about it, because I'd never done any artwork except for doodling with my kids," she smiles.

Four friends have since joined her in running Synergy; she designs the cards with some help from Donna King, who writes most of the messages; Sue Johnson handles the inventory and accounting; Mark Clark markets the cards; and Steve Dunstan is in charge of keeping the company financed.

In fact the company's name came from the bond the five have formed to produce and market the cards. "The name is based on 'synergism,' parts coming together to make a whole. We feel that's what God did when He brought the five of us together," Williams explains.

She finally left her job at the credit union earlier this year to concentrate on the greeting cards. After having some samples nade, the five travelled to San Francisco to test market the cards. Recovery groups in the area led them to Fremont, Calif.-based Creative Arts Unlimited, a national card wholesaler.

Creative Arts now distributes Synergy cards to different recovery hospitals such as Rocky Mountain Treatment Center in Montana and The Meadows in Arizona, which is about to start carrying them, as well as bookstores and shops that specialize in recovery items. They're also being considered by several well-known foundations for inclusion in their catalogs.

Metropolitan newspapers eye weeklies

New York Times News Service

After 12 years as a big-city newspaper reporter and two years at Harvard Business School, Christopher E. Bogan set out last June to build a chain of weekly newspapers.

He arranged financial backing after convincing venture capitalists that well-managed weeklies could produce the 25 percent profit margins of small dailies and that weeklies were cheaper to buy.

But, after a year, Bogan ruefully concedes, the days of bargain prices are over.

"I looked at about 75 weeklies on paper, made a pass at five or six, and was outbid every time," he said.

Some of the nation's largest communications conglomerates, which a few years ago barely acknowledged that they owned weeklies, are now pursuing such newspapers with the appetite they once had for dailies, industry experts say.

Although there are no statistics on weekly acquisitions, James E. Elsener, executive director of Suburban Newspapers of America, a trade association, says that about half of the nation's estimated 7,600 weeklies are now owned by chains, either large or small.

About 10 years ago, 90 percent were independent, he said.

OIL RESERVES

Study sees 25-40 more years for oil

Price expected to determine oil resources

From Staff Reports

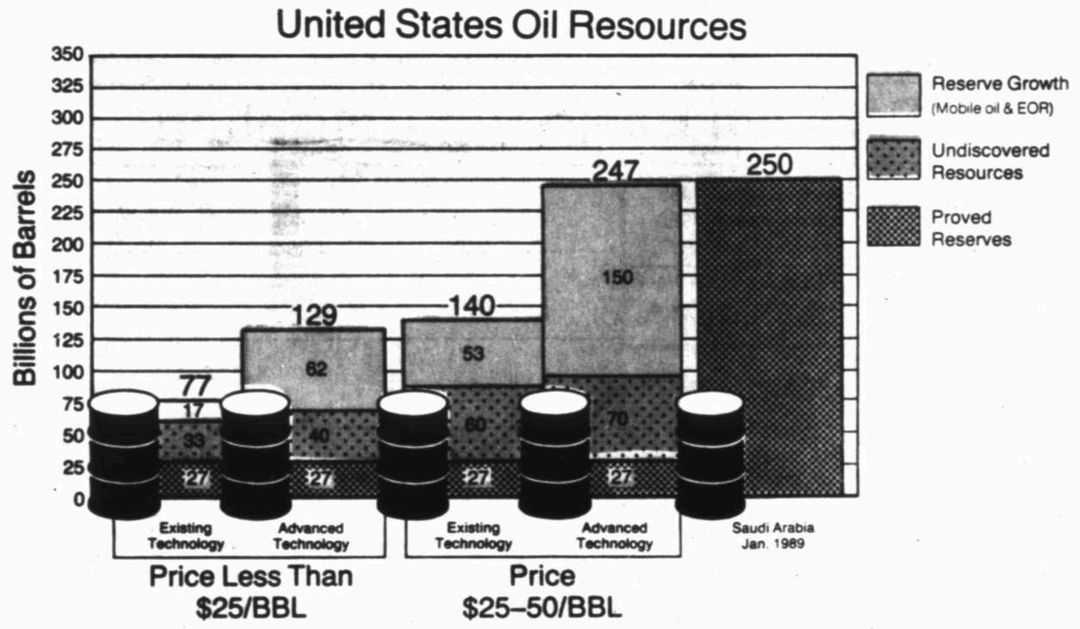

The U.S. has a substantial oil resource base capable of sustaining it well into the next century and this fact should be central to long term energy planning, says a report recently released by the American Association of Petroleum Geologists.

The report offers four scenarios which show reserves of 77 billion to 247 billion barrels of oil recoverable under a variety of pricing and technological factors.

The worse case scenario projects only a 25-year supply of domestic petroleum (77 billion barrels) with a price under $25 and current technology, but a 40-year supply of 247 billion barrels with advanced technology and a crude oil price of $25 to $50.

While the size of future discoveries will be sizably smaller than the past, the study concludes that significant reserves can be added by increased drilling activity. It points out that during the boom of the 70s and early 80s reserve additions were directly proportional to the number of rigs running.

Most of the drilling increase will come in already proven fields with infill and step-out drilling says the report, which also points out that technology as well as drilling will be price driven.

The AAPG says it is more beneficial to the U.S. economy and national security to find and develop this resource rather than depending more and more on crude oil imports.

AAPG says it prepared the report because the existence of a substantial resource base is fundamental to any request for tax relief, tax incentives, land access, research assistance or other government cooperation.

"We don't want to represent that we have an infinite oil resource base," states C.B. Wheeler, AAPG spokesman, "we will run out of oil someday, but not for a long while." Until the America makes a transition from petroleum to another fuel, Wheeler says the domestic petroleum industry and U.S. petroleum reserves were worthy of saving.

While AAPG is not advocating a $50 per barrel oil price, it does believe higher prices can forestall decline and permit greater recovery of oil. "The $50 per barrel represents a kind of national insurance policy, not an argument for a price increase," says Wheeler, who goes on to note that a national insurance policy would be worthless without an in-place oil industry to implement it.

Wheeler said legislators should take reasonable steps to assure that America has a viable energy indus-

Texas-style politics: We can live without them

Pitts

Another prominent Texas politician has tasted the bitter grapes of scandal. Haven't we been here before?

Midland oil deals can get complicated with front-end money and back-end participants, but few operators here have been able to understand the mechanics of a Sabine Lake drilling venture that allowed Speaker of the House Jim Wright's investment company, Mallightco, to buy an interest in a dry hole for $9,120 and sell it the same day for $440,000.

Not even special investigator and outside counsel to the House Ethics Committee Richard Phelan could understand the complexity of the deal, and the Ethics Committee issued a statement saying that more study would be needed to "draw a conclusion."

Nor could anyone understand why the buyer of the Orange County drilling venture, Union Rheinische Petroleum Inc., has not expressed so much as a whimper of displeasure at buying the venture.

The dry hole venture was sold by Jaffe Energy Co., run by M.D. (Doug) Jaffe son of wealthy San Antonio investor Morris Jaffe. Jaffe Energy apparently made no money on the deal, but by the time the Germans were done shelling out the dollars, Mallightco had made a $350,000 profit.

Some like Phelan may see the mechanics of the deal as a mystery. Others see it as Texas-style political business as usual.

Ironically, the last time a major business-political scandal hit Texas and a powerful Texas politician was threatened, the name Jaffe played a central role as well. For a pair of Midlanders, the most recent probe of Wright was a case of deja vu.

Midlander J. Evetts Haley remembers Morris Jaffe well. He writes about him in his book A Texan Looks At Lyndon, as the "warm friend" of Lyndon B. Johnson, who through political influence was able to walk away with the entire assets of the Billie Sol Estes empire for $100,000 — an empire that included ranches and irrigated farms.

"I was outraged to read that Jaffe was the man that 'salvaged' the Billie Sol empire," said Haley.

In his book Haley wrote: "The conclusion is inescapable that the Johnson-controlled political machine in Texas designedly set the stage for Jaffe's takeover..."

Midland oilman J.C. Williamson also went up against Jaffe and lost.

"He was out to get all he could get and he wanted a grain elevator I owned in Plainview," said Williamson.

Williamson had built the elevator and sold it to Billie Sol Estes, who had a certificate to store government grain at 13 cents a bushel annually. It was a source of millions in income for Estes before the empire began to come apart.

But when hit with bankruptcy, Estes defaulted on the elevators, which were financed by then Midland National Bank.

The bankruptcy court seized monthly rentals on the facility, and the government later removed the grain, leaving Williamson high and dry. He was told by then Agriculture Commissioner John White that he would never get a certificate to store federal grain and should just "give" the elevator to Jaffe.

"I didn't give it to him," said Williamson, "but I took a beating on the price, and finally had to sell some production to pay off the bank. Jaffe dealt with me harshly," said Williamson.

The Wall Street Journal this week called the Wright downfall an example of "Texas-style" politics.

"It (political scandal) happens often enough in Texas so that no one here seems particularly concerned," noted Journal Writer James Perry, who lists Wright with a long list of other Texans who committed felonies or suffered ethical lapses.

Included on the list were Billie Sol Estes, Bobby Baker, Ben Barnes, Gus Mutcher and John Tower. Not included was Lyndon Johnson, who has probably been treated too kindly by the history books.

Basin count continues fall

From Staff Reports

While the U.S. rig count recovered from last week's drop, the Permian Basin count fell for a third week.

According to Baker Hughes Inc., the U.S. count rose 12 to 749 after falling 34 to 737 the week before.

The gain this week came despite a 19-rig drop in Oklahoma.

At the same time the Permian Basin count fell five, from 93 to 88.

Lea County, N.M. continues to be the most active in the Basin with nine rigs, followed by Eddy County, N.M. and Gaines County with seven each.

Runnels County saw renewed activity while Concho County was left without drilling activity.

Besides Oklahoma's 19-rig decline, Pennsylvania and Wyoming were among the major oil producing states to show a rig loss, each down one in the latest count.

Louisiana and Michigan each gained six, while Ohio was up three, New Mexico was up two and Kansas, North Dakota and Texas gained one each.

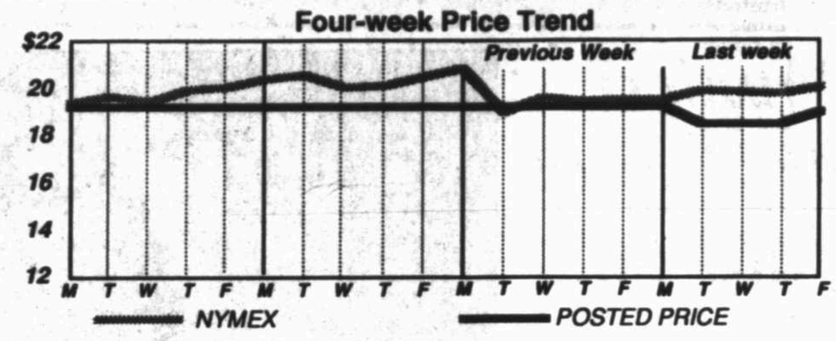

California and Colorado were unchanged.

Survey: Office workers losing job satisfaction

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — American office workers are becoming more frustrated with their jobs and less trusting of management, according to a survey by Louis Harris.

The 1989 Office Environment Index, a survey of office worker attitudes, found 87 percent of office workers believe honesty and ethical behavior of company management are the most important job characteristics.

Only 39 percent think their organization's management met those standards when dealing with employees, according to the survey released Wednesday.

"Office workers plain just don't trust management to deal fairly with employees," said Harris, who conducted the survey for furniture manufacturer Steelcase Inc. of Grand Rapids.

The telephone survey of 1,041 office workers selected at random was released in New York.

When unprompted, two-thirds of those surveyed said salary was the most important job characteristic. But when presented with a list, 10 items — the first being ethical management — were rated as "very important" more often than salary.

"Our research indicates that the climate of organizational restructuring, mergers and acquisitions may be contributing to workers' mistrust of top management," Harris said.

After honesty, workers said the most important job characteristics were the opportunity to develop skills, the desire for management to recognize workers' contributions and job security.

The survey, which also polled 150 top executives of U.S. corporations, also found many bosses are out of touch with how their employees perceive their jobs.

While 49 percent of the workers surveyed said "they are being pushed to the wall" on productivity and are doing as much work as they reasonably can, only 21 percent of the top executives shared that view.

Last year, the survey found worker satisfaction up a bit and saw signs of a thaw in employee-management relations. The latest survey showed the proportion of office workers who said they were "very satisfied" had declined 5 percentage points to 41 percent.

"This year the mood has begun to sour," Harris said.

Other findings include:

—The proportion of office workers who see a "great deal" of connection between doing their job well and getting what they most want out of life was 56 percent, down 3 points from 59 percent.

—Fifty-eight percent said it's "very important" that an organization have a participatory management style, but only 24 percent said that's "very true" on their current job.

—Of health concerns, 44 percent of the workers said eye strain was the most serious problem, followed by air quality, radiation from video display terminals and exposure to hazardous materials.

The survey found that bosses "don't really expect the mere mortals of the office rank-and-file to find their work fulfilling — and in turn that leaves the bosses without a clue that workers' productivity might be related to workers' job satisfaction and a sense of connection between their work and the rest of their lives," Harris said.

The margin of error was 3 percentage points for the survey, conducted from Nov. 30 through Jan. 8.

Pocket-size office machines aid travelers

By CHRIS BARNETT
Copley News Service

The technology wizards who gave the world the VCR and the CD player are now zeroing in on the business traveler who can't afford to be unproductive and out of touch.

Can't find a telephone on the road and you don't want to lug around a phone in a briefcase? Motorola just introduced what it calls the "personal cellular," which weighs less than a pound and fits easily in a pocket or purse.

The device, called the Micro Tac Personal Telephone, has some shortcomings, though — short battery life. A 10.7-ounce version has a 30-minute rechargeable battery. If you can tote an extra 2 ounces, you get a 75-minute battery. Price — are you strapped into your seat? — $2,995 or four times more than a regular cellular phone.

Still, don't be surprised if pocket phones become standard equipment for traveling execs in the next few years.

Says Rosenfield: "I can't afford to be out of touch."

Fax machines are so popular today that virtually every hotel trumpets their availability to their road warrior clientele. But at $7 per page — incoming and outgoing — plus phone charges, businesspeople and their employers are howling over the high prices of hotel faxes.

What's more, top executives, lawyers and other mergers-and-acquisition types, who often use hotels as "neutral turf" for negotiating, don't want outside eyes scanning their documents during faxing. And, of course, the hotel fax is usually down by the front desk and that means an elevator trip — or a room service request — to get something transmitted.

Solution: The portable fax.

Murata Business Systems in Dallas makes a hot seller, the M900. Simply plug it into the hotel room telephone jack and fax away. It weighs less than 9 pounds, serves as a standard telephone and a copier and retails for $899. The only drawback is that the hotel must have unpluggable phone jacks in their rooms. Make sure you or your travel agent asks about that when the reservation is booked.

An end to "telephone tag" is the promise offered by Call Control Inc., an Atlanta company offering 24-hour, 7-day-a-week voice mail. There are no directories to carry and no long-distance central number to call. Simply telephone a local or a toll-free WATS 800, give a password, leave a message, and classify it as confidential, urgent, personal or standard.

Says Steve Taylor, Call Control president: "A sales manager can make one call to the voice mailbox and all of his field salespeople will get the message. Saves a lot of memos and individual long-distance calls."

A voice mailbox averages $20 a month.

Laptop computers are getting smaller and more productive.

David Hirschberg, associate research oceanographer at the State University of New York in Stony Brook, Long Island, took his Toshiba 1100 on the German research ice-breaking vessel, Polarstern, last year. "It was the most northerly oceanographic expedition in history, within 200 miles of the North Pole, and I used the computer for data management and computations."

Richard Greene, a Princeton, N.J., international development consultant, cranks out 60- to 100-page "analytic documents" in remote places like Lusekele, a village of 200 people in Zaire in the heart of Africa, using his 5-pound laptop.

"I can produce a draft and get comments on the spot," he says.

Saves time and hassles getting revisions approved halfway around the world.

Now, though, the geniuses in Silicon Valley are giving us a full-featured laptop that weighs in at a mere 1 pound. Poget (rhymes with "pocket") Computer Corp. of Sunnyvale has packed a full-size screen, 77-key keyboard and 640K of internal memory into a computer that runs on two AA batteries for two to three months, according to Stav Trodmorov.

And no longer do you have to modem your reports, data and other documents back to your office for a printout. Toshiba has just debuted a 4-pound letter-quality printer with a rechargeable battery that is said to work with any portable computer. Price: about $400. Now any hotel or motel room can become an office.

Even calculators are getting smarter and becoming coat-pocket computers.

Hewlett Packard's Business Consultant II lets you write notes, produce graphics, figure bond prices and yields, plus perform 450 other functions electronically for around $175.

For $100, Casio's SF-4000 is a digital diary and Rolodex-for-the-road, holding up to 1,500 names and phone numbers.

Finally, there is the office-in-a-briefcase for the business traveler who has to create and sell in every city he or she visits. Ricoh just unveiled what it calls a "personal productivity" unit that includes a fax, copier and overhead projector, all in one. Throw in a laptop PC and you can now make every minute — flight delays, traffic jams, late appointments — count and pay.

Six electric power suppliers announce co-op

DENVER (AP) — Tri-State Generation and Transmission Association of Denver, along with five other generation and transmission cooperatives serving customers in 10 states, have united to form Western Power Producers Inc.

The six wholesale electric power suppliers, which will retain their individual organizational structures, have been drawn together to coordinate resources, share services and plan solutions to various regional power supply problems and issues.

The other organizing members of WPPI, which was incorporated as a nonprofit corporation in the state of Colorado, are Colorado-Ute Electric Association of Montrose, Colo.; Deseret Generation and Transmission Cooperative of Sandy, Utah; Golden Spread Electric Cooperative of Amarillo, Texas; Plains Electric Generation and Transmission Cooperative of Albuquerque, N.M., and Sunflower Electric Power Cooperative of Hays, Kan.

WPPI members' objectives include the coordination of electric load and resource studies, regional power pool information and activities, and regional economic studies. Another goal, officials announced, is that of possible integration of generation and transmission resources among the members.

WPPI members also will coordinate responses to legislative, utility, political and environmental issues that may affect their operations.

The board of directors of WPPI will consist of two representatives from each member.

Sunflower executive L. Christian Hauck has been elected president of WPPI for the next year. Harold "Hub" Thompson of Tri-State will be vice president, Robert Bryant of Golden Spread will be secretary and Stanley Bazant of Plains will be treasurer.

The six WPPI members serve a total of 77 rural electric cooperatives and public power districts, which in turn serve about 1.9 million consumers.

Their service territories equal about 337,000 square miles in 10 states — Arizona, Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Texas, Utah and Wyoming.

Upper Deck scores with new baseball cards

PLANO, Texas (AP) — Three men in business suits waited in the predawn darkness for the tractor-trailer truck to arrive at a convenience store in this suburb north of Dallas. Two more men shadowed the truck in separate cars, stopping to check each delivery.

Their mission: baseball cards.

Not just any cards, but this season's elusive newcomer: the Upper Deck brand, foil-packaged, four-color cards with a hologram and a holographic team emblem in every pack.

Upper Deck currently is the brand most sought-after by boys or adult sports paraphernalia collectors, dealers say.

"The response has been phenomenal. I've never seen anything like it," said card dealer Dave Marshall, owner of Baseball Fever in Plano.

Managers of 7-Eleven stores agree, saying they can't keep the cards in stock. Upper Deck attributes part of its success to the widespread marketing through outlets such as the ubiquitous 7-Elevens and Toys 'R' Us toy stores.

"It's partly because of the quality and partly because they have fewer of them," said Don Cowan, spokesman for Dallas-based Southland Corp., the parent of 7-Eleven.

"That means that if customers haven't found them at 7-Eleven yet, they may not unless we get more from the manufacturer," Cowan said.

A Grand Prairie company, and competitor, also claims credit for paving the way for Upper Deck's success this year.

Privately held Score Inc., based in the Dallas suburb, introduced Sportsflics "magic motion" baseball cards in 1986 and Score brand cards in 1988.

"We set a new standard in the industry with a four-color photo on the back, player profiles and better card stock," said Score spokesman George Martin.

Upper Deck's similar emphasis on quality proves "we were on the right track," Martin said. "We look on our cards as an art form," he added.

The rookie Upper Deck, based in Yorba Linda, Calif., has done a lot right, dealer Marshall said, including limiting supply — thus increasing demand.

Upper Deck is printing 1 million cards of each player, with 800 cards in a complete 1989 set, said Don Bodow, vice president of marketing.

"The basic thrust of this company has been since day one to give the collector what he or she is looking for ... something that is collectable and appreciable," Bodow said. "One of the things is to be in relatively lesser supply" than competitors such as Topps, Score, Fleer and Donruss, he added.

Bodow said the privately held company uses its own photographers and printing facilities to maintain the quality befitting a suggested retail price of 89 cents to 99 cents per pack of 15 cards, compared to 45 cents to 65 cents for other brands.

On the back of each card is a diamond-shaped hologram that says "Upper Deck" to prevent counterfeiting of popular cards, Bodow said.

Also included in each pack is at least one holographic team logo disk.

Upper Deck is the only card company licensed by Major League Baseball and the Major League Players Association to distribute holograms, Bodow said.

"This is the largest retail holographic effort ever in the world," Bodow said.

The strategy apparently has succeeded: Bodow said this year's run is sold out.

However, not all customers are impressed by the high-tech look of the holograms.

"I don't really care about that," said Eric Steffel, 13, of Plano.

"I felt it was an excuse to charge more money," said Brandon Marshall, 12, who was helping his dad behind the store counter.

Upper Deck also plans to distribute the final 100 cards in the '89 set in July, making it the first company to have its updated or "traded" set — cards incorporating player trades and shifts — as part of current year's series, Bodow said. The decision is significant to both traders and youngsters, who now will be able to find individual cards of their favorite players in the right uniform instead of having to shell out bucks for an entire set.

But is there demand for all those cards? Do the Yankees wear pinstripes?

The largest cardmaker, Topps, Inc., introduced slightly larger size cards in its Big Baseball set last year.

This year, Topps plans a nostalgic surprise for card collectors. In July, a 484-card set will be issued under the Bowman name that Topps bought in 1955, said Topps spokesman Kenneth Liss in Brooklyn, N.Y.

Bowman issued baseball cards from 1948 through 1955. The new cards will be in the style of the '53 Bowmans, Liss said.

Each pack of a dozen current player cards would sell for about 45 cents, Liss said, and would also include a reproduction of a star player's card from 1953.

Liss wouldn't say whether the Bowman line will be continued next year. But sales were expected to be good, he said.

"There's plenty of business out there," he said. "Cards are doing better than ever."

Topps, founded in 1938 as a gum company, had annual card product sales of $151 million as of Feb. 1989, Liss said.

Other card companies include Fleer of Philadelphia and Donruss in Memphis, Tenn.

United to fly between D.C., Mexico City

MEXICO CITY (AP) — United Airlines plans a new Washington-Mexico City route this year that will be the first daily non-stop service connecting the two capitals, United Chairman Stephen Wolf announced.

Chicago-based United Airlines is the second-largest U.S. carrier behind American Airlines.

Wolf spoke to reporters after a private talk with President Carlos Salinas de Gortari about the "future of United Airlines in Mexico."

That future appears bright, he said, praising Salinas' program to modernize the Mexican economy.

"We have been very encouraged with President Salinas' administration's direction in Mexico," Wolf said.

The modernization plans include privatizing state-owned companies, opening up Mexico to more foreign investment, controlling inflation, renegotiating the $107.4 billion foreign debt and developing tourism.

Wolf dashed speculation that United would buy part of Mexicana, the government airline.

"It is our intention to grow United Airlines without equity participation in other airlines," he said. "We want to continue our close working relationship with Mexicana Airlines, but only as a marketing partner, not as a buyer."

Mexicana's director, Manuel Sosa de la Vega, was quoted in Wednesday's financial daily El Financiero as saying that if the carrier were sold, it would be because of political rather than financial reasons.

"There are politicial reasons for all that," he said.

The Mexican government owns a majority share in Mexicana.

Sosa said that under Mexico's new foreign investment regulations, a foreign investor would be able to purchase up to 49 percent of Mexicana, which he described as economically healthy.

Wolf called the liberalization of foreign investment as "a very progressive step" and said that "in the case of United Airlines, it is a very positive background which will encourage us to put more flights into Mexico."

WEEKLIES—

"What was once merely discussed as, 'Well, they're out there,' is now a part of boardroom strategy," said Charles J. Carey, assistant vice president for Henry Ansbacher Inc., an investment banking firm that specializes in newspapers.

For instance, Thomson Newspapers Ltd., the Toronto-based chain, is seeking to acquire weeklies after focusing for a decade mostly on small dailies, Carey said.

Thomson now owns more small dailies in this country than anyone else.

Hollinger Inc., another acquisitive Toronto-based chain, is also aggressively buying weeklies.

Prices are rising in such a climate.

The number of weeklies sold for more than $1 million rose to 13 last year from nine the year before and is expected to increase again this year, Ansbacher reports.

Capital Cities-ABC Inc. last month acquired Mariner Newspapers, a group of 18 weeklies along the South Shore outside Boston, for about twice Mariner's annual advertising and circulation revenues, according to executives at Ansbacher, which represented Mariner.

Two years ago, it was not uncommon for a good weekly to sell for an amount only equal to a year's advertising and circulation sales.

Now, a strong weekly could sell for three times sales or more, Carey said.

Small dailies in growth markets typically sell for four times sales or more. They carry that premium because dailies have much higher revenues and are likely to be the only paper of their kind in a community.

But the number of independent dailies has dwindled, leaving fewer acquisition targets.

Simultaneously, newspaper companies have begun to value the close ties with readers and intense local focus that weeklies typically offer.

A survey commissioned by American Newspaper Representatives Inc., which solicits national advertising for weekly newspapers, found that about 62 percent of the weekly readers polled keep the paper in the house for seven days and look at it several times.

Increasingly, weeklies are reaching every household in their coverage area through some sort of free-distribution arrangement that supplements paid circulation.

And by assembling clusters of weeklies in an area, chains can offer advertisers either narrow or broad coverage and often at prices lower than dailies can afford.

Though there are no statistics, industry experts estimate that weeklies now generate $3 billion to $5 billion in annual advertising revenues.

Daily newspapers attracted more than $31 billion in advertising expenditures in 1988, according to the Newspaper Advertising Bureau.

While there are about 1,640 dailies, there are about 7,600 weeklies to divide their much smaller advertising pie, according to the National Newspaper Association, the major trade group for weeklies.

Industry experts say the bulk of the business goes to the roughly 40 percent of weeklies that have annual advertising and circulation revenues of $500,000 or more.

Of these, competition is especially fierce for the 1,300 or so weeklies with advertising and circulation sales of at least $1 million, Carey said.

The weekly newspaper business still beckons independent souls whose principal satisfaction is having an editorial voice. Such people can buy tiny weeklies in remote places for $200,000 or so, but they are less profitable than larger papers.

try, that stripper wells are maintained within reasonable cost and that petroleum technology research should be encouraged.

"If the nation has a viable petroleum industry which can raise production or at least sustain it under rsing prices, it will work toward contaiing future price escalations," he said.

Wheeler stated that there was a perception among some legislators that the industry is doomed to shrink so fast that it is hardly worth helping. But he added that the revelation of a 25-40 year resource supply makes both the reservesa and the industry worth saving.

Financial problems ground Air Kentucky

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Air Kentucky, which operates under the name Allegheny Commuter, suspended all operations Friday and is going out of business because of financial problems, company officials said.

"This is a shutdown, and management here is under orders to start a liquidation process," Mickey J. Bowman, president of the Indianapolis-based commuter airline, said Friday.

Bowman said the airline had just about broken even in May but had lost as much as $500,000 a month late last year. However, he said early termination of a contract under which Air Kentucky fed passengers to the giant USAir group played a big part in the company's decision to shut down.

"That was the capper," he said.

The airline, founded 14 years ago in Kentucky and moved to Indianapolis in 1981, was sold in January to GMF Investments of Los Angeles. USAir told the airline that same month that it would terminate its contract as of July 15. The contract was supposed to run until 1995.

"Under the contract with USAir, we have the right to terminate the agreement with 180 days notice," USAir spokesman David Shipley said by telephone from his Arlington, Va., office.

Shipley said the contract was canceled because the airline breached a portion of the agreement specifying that "ownership of Air Kentucky can't change hands without pre-approval of USAir."

Shipley declined to elaborate on reasons for the termination.

"We regret this because they were our customers and we believe we do all we can to support our customers," said Bob Kennison, spokesman for Fairchild Aircraft Corp., of San Antonio, Texas. Fairchild is owned by GMF, which referred questions about the Air Kentucky situation to Kennison.

"We regret the totality of the action, the shutting down of the airline, the loss of jobs for those people, the loss of commuter service for our passengers," he said.

Jean Silsby, also of Fairchild Aircraft, said GMF tried to sell Air Kentucky "because of USAir's unhappiness" with its ownership. It had three buyers, "but USAir wouldn't accept any of those buyers," she said.

Air Kentucky's shutdown means 125 people will be out of jobs, Silsby said, adding that Fairchild is trying to help those workers find jobs with some of its other customers.

Air Kentucky officials decided Wednesday night to halt service, and on Thursday the airline's nine leased propeller-driven planes were in the process of being returned to their owners.

CARDS — PITTS

CARDS

She says the cards are useful as tools in treating recovering patients, and as expressions of encouragement and support. She was surprised, she says, to discover the cards have great cross-over appeal to buyers who aren't in 12-step programs. "I'm told people are buying bunches of them at a time," Williams says. "I guess it's the messages — everyone needs some encouragement."

Right now the group is searching for the best way to market and distribute the cards — through a national distributor like Creative Arts or through direct marketing at recovery conferences.

They are also planning a calendar and special occasion cards such as Christmas or Mother's Day or Father's Day. "It's hard sometimes for a person in a 12-step program to find a Mother's Day card," Williams notes. "All they can find are cards that say 'To the best Mom in the world;' well, a lot of these people came from disfunctional homes and that's not what they feel, but they still love their Mom and want to tell her so."

From designing to printing to distribution, developing Synergy has been a learning experience for Williams. "I've learned a lot; these cards have really changed my life," she says. "And it's all been positive."

PITTS

Perry's observations are correct. Texas has a well-documented legacy of Chicago-style political patronage and cronyism involving a tight circle of prominent democratic politicians, judges and millionaires that goes a long way back. If it can be called "Texas-style" it is only because of the good ole boy element that has been brought to it.

This Texas-style machine politics first raised its ugly head when Lyndon Johnson was elected to Congress by a narrow vote recount in Duval County.

The good ole boy dark side was brought kicking into the light of day with the Billie Sol Estes affair that saw five key witnesses die untimely deaths by "accidents and suicides." One suicide victim shot himself four times in the chest with a bolt action rifle.

There were also not-so-veiled charges of machine politics involving wealthy lawyers and judges during the Texaco-Pennzoil trial. And now, with the political demise of Jim Wright the label of "Texas-style politics" has again been pulled out of the bag.

Legacies are what makes Texas Texas, but this is probably one we can live without.

Treat (Matthew Taylor), left, fears Philip (Scott Lunsford) is gaining independence through educating himself and accuses him of underlining the words in the newspaper in this scene from Midland Community Theatre's production of "Orphans," set to open Friday at Theatre Midland.

Although a prisoner in the home of Treat and Philip, left, Harold (Bill Bundy), frees himself from the chair to which he's bound and comforts Philip in this scene from "Orphans." Harold then pulls a gun on Treat, who has just threatened him with a knife. Philip watches from across the room.

'Orphans' both graphic, gripping

From the asylum of their run-down house in north Philadelphia, the orphaned boys, alone in the world since their parents died, have learned to survive.

Treat supports both by muggings. Philip, the younger of the two, stays indoors. Treat won't let him outside because of possible danger.

Then, Treat, now in his early 20s, does the unexpected, and their lives are forever changed. He brings Harold, one of his victims, home with him.

The three will be awaiting audiences in Mabee Theatre II when Lyle Kessler's "Orphans" opens Friday at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

"I think it's a very moving play," says Mike Kase, Midland Community Theatre's educational director and director for this production.

"It examines the family relationships from a very different perspective. If it wasn't for the street language and the sort of seedy situation, this play could almost be Chip and Robbie and 'My Three Sons.' But putting it in this particular situation, I think, shows us very clearly the cruelty that can exist in those relationships as well as the love."

"Orphans," first produced in Chicago and New York by the Steppenwolf Theatre Co., was made into a movie in 1987 starring Albert Finney, Matthew Modine and Kevin Anderson.

"The movie is very powerful, very moving," Kase says. "There are a lot of similarities to this work and the work of Sam Shepherd and possibly also the work of Harold Pinter."

"I think this is going to be a challenging play," says Linda Bond, MCT's director of development and marketing. "It is a show that is violent with graphic language, and we rate it adult."

"I think it should be rated R," says Pamela Allen, the production's stage manager. "In addition to the bad language, it has some emotionally violent scenes."

Reservations to the production, which runs through June 24, may be made by calling Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111. Due to the unique set, seating is more limited than usual in Theatre II. Those attending opening night are included in the pre-show party, which begins at 7 p.m.

The June 11 performance will be at 2:30 p.m. All other performances are at 8 p.m., including the one Sunday, June 18.

"Thanks to a grant from the Abell-Hanger Foundation, the Sunday, June 11, matinee will be free to people who are handicapped or disadvantaged and a person who brings them to the theater," Ms. Bond says. "Since the show is also open to the public, reservations are necessary."

Kase feels "very comfortable with realism," and "Orphans" is "an intensely realistic play."

"I found the language very poetic," Kase says. "If one can find street language poetic, I think this is definitely the text. The characterization is revealed through the language in all three of the characters."

Kase has particularly enjoyed working with the challenging script.

"It's a challenge in that the playwright points you in the right direction, but then it's really up to the cast and the director to come up with the specifics to fill in the blanks."

Those blanks include, Kase says, "What does Harold really mean to these kids? What is his background? Have they met before? What is their past relationship? All those things we have been exploring.

"While the playwright can keep his opinion, his knowledge of the characters, somewhat open and not completely answer the questions, the actors and the director have to. An actor cannot play something that's open. An actor has to have a specific to play on, whether it be a visual image, some personal knowledge, whatever. That's been the challenge of Kessler's script — to answer those questions, come up with some specifics."

Kase is quite pleased with the three members of the cast.

"I think they're wonderful people," Kase says. "Scott Lunsford, a student of mine, he's playing Philip. He's just going to be marvelous. Matt Taylor from Odessa, Odessa College, is also developing a Treat that's very exciting, and Bill Bundy (as Harold) is going to, I think, be very powerful in his performance. He is marvelously subtle."

He finds "Orphans" to carry a "strong message" about "dependence, control, isolation, self reliance and survival."

For Dave Layman, MCT set designer, "Orphans" is "one of those shows in the season that really shines."

Layman is "very excited" about the design concept in this production.

"We're bringing the audience into the environment itself," Layman says. "It's called environmental setting. The audience will be walking into the living room where the action takes place. The actors will act in and around the audience. All four walls will have scenery so the action actually takes place pretty much in their laps."

Audience members will have "a very immediate sense of being there," Layman says. "I think it's going to be an exciting experience and one that is very unique.

"I haven't done a show like this since I've been here, and I don't think anybody else did one like it before I came here. It's a very tender and griping show, too, which I think lends itself very well to this sort of treatment. The audience is able to get caught up immediately without feeling separated from what's happening on stage."

Pickwick Players working on musical

Midland Community Theatre's summer school and Pickwick Players program, set for June 12-July 21, will focus on the most American of productions — musical theater.

Mike Kase

The study of the American musical theater will deal with where this form of theater began and where it is today. Students will have the opportunity to learn what makes musicals unique and try their hand at some indigenous art forms such as vaudeville and classic American musicals. The Pickwick Players will have intensive classes in music, dance and acting, culminating in the production of the musical "Sneakers."

"We attempt to not only acquaint students with the demands of theater, but also try to spark the creative imagination," says Mike Kase, MCT's educational theater director.

Grades one through three will study "Creative Dramatics," learning to express themselves through theater games and imaginative play. Their classes will be from 9 to 9:50 a.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Grades four through six will study "Introduction to Acting" to "gain confidence and experience through drama." Their classes will be held from 9:30 to 10:50 a.m. Tuesday and Thursday.

Rene Brister Chambers will teach the summer theater classes.

Auditions for Pickwick Players, MCT's youth performing troupe, will be held at 10 a.m. Monday and Tuesday in the Blakemore Room, downstairs at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave. Pickwicks range in age from those entering the 7th grade to those becomming high school seniors.

To audition, students are encouraged to prepare a one-minute memorized monologue or poem and be prepared to participate in a variety of acting exercises. Pickwicks will attend music, dance and acting classes Monday through Frieay from 10 a.m. to noon. Rehearsal and or work call will be from 1 to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Kase will direct the summer Pickwick program.

Cost for any of the summer sessions is $55 for MCT members and $60 fo non-members. For more information call 682-2544.

Show juxtaposes world art forms

By MICHAEL BRENSON
New York Times News Service

PARIS — "Magicians of the Earth," which opened recently at the Pompidou Center and La Villette, brings together contemporary art from all over the world, juxtaposing artists from New Guinea and Italy, Australia and England, Tibet and the United States.

Every culture and countless artistic approaches have been appropriated in a spectacular post-Modern bazaar in which everything seems equally valid and available.

With 100 artists, half from Europe and the United States and half from the rest of the world, this is the largest art exhibition in Paris in recent memory. At a cost of roughly $5 million, it is also one of the most expensive.

The aim was an artistic event that would be truly international and less submissive to nationalism and newness than the most prominent international art extravaganzas, Documenta in Kassel, West Germany, and the Venice Biennale.

The exhibition promised to consider some pressing questions: Is there such a thing as world art? How should art from one culture be approached by another?

Are there basic similarities as well as differences in the work of an American Conceptual artist, an African coffin maker and an Eskimo carver of whale bone?

Installed in two very distinct spaces, "Magicians of the Earth" seems like two different shows.

About one-third of the artists are on the fifth-floor galleries of the Pompidou Center. There are strong works by artists like Jeff Wall and Nam June Paik, whose high-speed video installation, most of it in the shape of a beat-up truck, produces a collision between different worlds and times.

But the gallery spaces are often tight, the juxtapositions jarring and the weakness of some work immediately apparent.

At the glass and steel hall of the former slaughterhouse at La Villette, on the outskirts of Paris, the space is grand, the feeling more open and the forgettable work less conspicuous.

Each work has the air it needs, from the two big chunks of granite, just inside the entrance, in which Giovanni Anselmo has almost buried a compass, to the immense mud drawing by Richard Long at the other end, looming like a rose window or a red sun.

The exhibition was conceived by Jean-Hubert Martin, the director of the Pompidou Center. During four years of planning, curators traveled the world and arranged for some Western artists, including Lawrence Weiner, the American Conceptual artist who builds murals with words, to travel as well.

The selection of Western artists is questionable. While the exhibition is presented as open and fresh, many of the Americans and Europeans — including Sigmar Polke, Enzo Cucchi, Anselm Kiefer, John Baldessari, Tony Cragg, Daniel Buren, Rebecca Horn, Christian Boltanski and Francesco Clemente — are veterans of the international art wars.

While the catchy, sweet-sounding title of the show may sell tickets, Conceptual artists like Dennis Adams, Hans Haacke and Barbara Kruger — whose installation at the entrance to the show at the Pompidou Center asks, "Who are the magicians of the earth?" — definitely do not see their work as magic, and they are not interested in a mystique of the earth.

With few exceptions, including the French-born Louise Bourgeois, whose presence in this show is the most recognition she has ever received from her native city, the exhibition overlooks those American painters and sculptors whose study of African and Asian art and culture has helped make the present openness to non-Western cultures possible.

Perhaps most disturbing, there are no black American artists in the show, even though many have long been concerned with African art and even though in recent years world art has almost been their issue. The absence of Betye Saar, whose installations brew voodoo, offbeat materials and political commentary, is particularly distressing.

The exhibition has its moments. The photographic installation by Alfredo Jaar, a Chilean living in New York, treats the Western dumping of toxic wastes in Africa with the pointed understatement that has made him one of the best political artists around.

The sculptural tombs of Yongping Huang, from Xiamen in China, were assembled with the gray muck of newspapers from throughout the world ground up in washing machines.

In his free-spirited pictorial narratives, Cheri Samba from Zaire approaches himself, his culture and the West with a bemused, committed eye.

The exhibition attacks several stereotypes. One is that non-Western artists, particularly in Africa, are nameless.

Another is that many cultures outside the West are static. Although only an expert could tell what distinguishes the bark paintings from New Guinea or the tantric paintings from Nepal from the works of their ancestors, every work in the show does reflect a changing relationship to the past.

To look at the contorted ebony masks by John Fundi from Mozambique is to sense how many cultures are struggling with change.

The exhibition moves in so many directions, however, that it will satisfy no one.

Not political artists who want Western attitudes toward the rest of the world confronted. Not theorists who believe everything from other cultures must be seen in context. Not those who believe in a need for the kind of formal resolution that is always a sign of a mature artistic sensibility and imagination.

In some ways, the exhibition is painful. You simply cannot juxtapose highly marketable Western artists who know all the curves and angles of the international art circuit with artists from Africa, Southeast Asia, Oceania and Australia, who know nothing of its strategies and traps and for whom every work is a life-and-death matter.

For example, while a few Western artists wandered about the show the day of the opening, a number of artists from outside the West not only stood by their work but also seemed to guard it. Esther Mahlangu, an artist from South Africa, remained in front of her replica of a ceremonial house, wearing a dress bearing patterns and colors similar to those she painted on the walls and fence.

Joe Ben Jr., a Navajo living in Arizona, is keenly aware of the cultural differences. He spoke with eloquence about his sharply delineated floor painting, made by scattering sand like seeds.

The exhibit features West Texas artists and is sponsored by the San Angelo Art Club, Inc. About 200 works are anticipated in this competition. Santa Fe artist Paul Milosevich, a former Texas Tech University art professor, will do the judging.

The awards ceremony and opening reception is set for 1 to 4 p.m. today. The winners will receive $5,000 in prize money from the estate of C. Russell Myers, a San Angelo art patron.

The public is invited to view the works through June 25 at 119 W. 1st St. The gallery is open 1 to 4 p.m. weekends and 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Wednesdays.

Planetarium show slated

A planetarium production of "Exploring the Skies of Summer" will be presented at 7:30 and 9 p.m. on Tuesday and Wednesday, June 13 and 14.

Science and mythology, blended in this planetarium star show, are used to describe "what's up" in the summer sky.

The Museum of the Southwest's Marian West Blakemore Planetarium, located southwest of the Indiana and "K" street corner of Haley Park, is open to the public without charge.

Jewish history explored

NEW YORK (AP) — The history of Asian Jews, a story spanning 25 centuries and covering 13 lands, is told in a new, colorful and imaginative permanent exhibit in the Hall of Asian Peoples at the American Museum of Natural History here.

The exhibit centers around a spacious wall grid that indicates diagrammatically the diversity of Asian Jewish life through history in many different lands. On the grid are placed appropriate examples of ceremonial and folk art objects, portraits and quotations to bring the history to life.

At the same time, two screens make available interactive video programs by means of which museum visitors can explore individual areas that interest them.

NBC scores prime time sweep; CBS breaks in with 'Kojak' film

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — NBC has become so dominant in prime time, it's mostly busy these days breaking its own records in increasingly rapid fashion.

Last week, NBC had the top 10 shows in the A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings, landing both parts of the critically acclaimed two-part movie "I Know My First Name is Steven" in the top two spots.

The last time a network swept the top 10 was three weeks ago, when NBC had the top 11 shows.

This time, CBS broke into the list at 11th with its Sunday movie, "Kojak: The Price of Justice."

NBC won the week, a record 49th in a row, with a 14.1 rating to CBS' 10.1 and ABC's 9.1.

"I Know My First Name Is Steven," the fact-based story of teen-ager who returned to his family after seven years in the captivity of the pedophile who kidnapped him, had a two-part average rating of 24.5 and a 39 share and was the highest-rated multi-part movie of the 1988-89 season, second only to CBS' four-part "Lonesome Dove."

The rest of the top 10 were "Cheers," "The Cosby Show," "A Different World," "Golden Girls," "Dear John," "Empty Nest," "Hunter" and "L.A. Law."

The NBC movie and "60 Minutes" were the only non-repeat programs among the top 20 last week.

The "CBS Evening News" led the news ratings, when student protests in China continued to be the big story. CBS had an average rating of 9.2 and a 21 share, "ABC World News Tonight" had an 8.8 and 19 share, and "NBC Nightly News" had an 8.4 and 19.

Each rating point equals 904,000 households with television. The share is a percentage of sets in use.

REVIEWS

Too bad it's the 'Last Crusade'

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

"Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" is packed with action, adventure and a little something extra. The "something extra" is the father-son relationship between Indiana (Harrison Ford) and Dr. Henry Jones (Sean Connery).

Salcedo

The third — and by all accounts, last — film produced by George Lucas, directed by Steven Spielberg, and starring Ford is a rousing crowd pleaser. "Crusade" is far better than the second film "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom." "Doom," the most violently gruesome film of the trio, also was accused of being racist (against the one-dimensional Arabs).

Much of the success of "Crusade" goes to the film makers, who attempt to go beyond a merely successful cliffhanger by adding depth to their characters. "Crusade" is also the ultimate quest film, involving the quest for a father's love, the quest for the Holy Grail and a quest for faith.

It opens with a quest for Indiana's past, to introduce us to his relationship with his academic father. The scene allows the young Indiana (River Phoenix) to acquire his hat, his bullwhip and his penchant for saying "I'll think of something" in the heat of a crisis.

There is a rather abrupt switch from Indiana's tender years to the mature adventurer. Indiana is forced to search for the Holy Grail (the chalice Christ drank from at the Last Supper) because his father has disappeared while following the grail's trail. Indiana soon meets up with his father's attractive assistant (Alison Doody). Ms. Doody's ambiguous role in the film is nearly a throw-away. She is the only woman featured, and only serves to better define the relationship between Ford and Connery.

But this is an adventure film with escapes from rats, snakes, Nazis, good guy Arabs (penance for "Doom?"), a zeppelin, propellers and deadly booby traps. Fortunately there is wit along the way, and Connery and Ford, who both have mischievous eyes and stubborn demeanors, play off of each other superbly.

"Crusade" is shot throughout with religious and mystical imagery, right down to the final scene of four horsemen (The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse?) riding off into a glorious sunset (a glorious Texas-size sunset, to be exact, since that scene was shot in Amarillo). The scenic and vivid photography makes "Crusade" a visual delight, which is a Spielberg trademark.

But it is the interplay between Ford and Connery that makes "Crusade" a winner. The big question is: Will this really be the end of Indy? Or will impressive box office records — $46.9 million in six days — be too big of a draw for Lucas and Spielberg to give it up? There's even a potential goldmine in filming Indiana's maturing years with Phoenix as the lead. Let's face it, all of the Indiana films have been "Raiders of the Box Office." It's hard to conceive of Indiana hanging up his fedora after this film.

"Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" rates three rigs.

"Indiana Jones," rated PG-13, has some violence, but no gore. It is playing at the UA Cine 4 on Cuthbert.

'Pink Cadillac' not right vehicle

Clint Eastwood is back, playing his usual weathered toughguy self, in "Pink Cadillac." Eastwood is Tommy Nowak, a "skip-tracer" who rounds up criminals after they jump bail. His methods are somewhat unorthodox and he dons several disguises to avoid direct confrontations with the dangerous element he pursues.

Nowak pretends to be a country disc-jockey ("You've just won a night with Dolly Parton!"), casino huckster (Our one-millionth customer — you deserve a prize!"), or even rodeo clown to get his man. As one attorney tells him, "It's a pretty thin line between what you do and what some outlaws do."

Although Nowak gets his man, when he sets out to get a woman his luck changes. Nowak pursues Lou Ann McGuinn (Bernadette Peters), a young woman mixed up with counterfeiters, and (get this) a group of white supremacists called Birthright (sounds like an anti-abortion organization).

Despite all her problems, Lou Ann's biggest mistake is "borrowing" her ex-con husband's 1959 Cadillac convertible and driving it to Reno. "It's dangerous to mess with a man's vehicle," she is told more than once. In fact, the line becomes a running joke in the film, uttered by many lowlife characters. "Don't mess with my vehicle" proves to be a poor substitute for "Make My Day," however. But the line seems to carry such import with the characters one wonders why they didn't just name the film "Pink Vehicle."

"Cadillac" starts out cleverly enough, and Eastwood is comfortable with his character, but it seems to go steadily downhill once he meets up with the woefully miscast Ms. Peters. The chemistry never ignites. It's like watching Betty Boop trying to seduce Rambo. Even worse is the lack of warmth between Ms. Peters and an eight-month-old baby (played by twin sisters Tiffany Gail and Angela Louise Robinson), who is supposed to be her daughter. Their scenes together are awkward, and Ms. Peters acts like she is holding a baby for the first time.

MOVIE RIG COUNT

- DRY HOLE — a complete and total loss
- STRIPPER — barely worth the time
- PRODUCER — a good investment
- GUSHER — not to be missed

In fact, the only actors who have fun with their roles are Michael Des Barres, suitably despicable as the ringleader of Birthright, and Geoffrey Lewis as the spaced-out hippie Ricky Z. Lewis overacts shamelessly, but he provides the only comic relief in several lagging spots.

For the most part "Cadillac" evolves into a chase film, a man-and-his-vehicle film or a man-and-his-weapon film. It has some laughs, some thrills and some inane moments. It should be a great contender for the video market. That way you can watch the good parts, including one zany moment with a stand-up comedian performing his "Post-Nuclear Elvis" lounge act, and you can fast-forward past the allegedly sentimental scenes.

"Cadillac" rates 2 rigs.

"Pink Cadillac," rated PG-13, has some discreet sex scenes, and plenty of violence, but no gore. It is playing at North Park Mall Cinemas.

'Cinderella' performance to benefit epilepsy group

American Family Theatre's musical production of "Cinderella" will be staged at 7 p.m. June 16 at Midland Center.

The performance is a benefit for the West Texas Epilepsy Association.

"We look forward to everyone coming to see this favorite children's story," says Joanne Mundy, executive director of WTEA.

"'Cinderella' is a great escape for children and adults. For people with epilepsy, it is often hard to remember there are ways to escape the realities of something that is so unpredictable as seizures. Many of our families experience daily crises."

Proceeds from the show will benefit the programs of the association. WTEA serves 17 counties of the Permian Basin. An estimated 400 people directly will benefitfrom services in 1989, with another 4,000 people learning about epilepsy through public education programs and in-service training. Calls have increased dramatically in 1989, so several days are required to provide assistance.

Persons having seizures must take medication daily. The costs of medication vary from $4 to $100 per month. Initial diagnosis costs run as high as $1,500 in the first month. WTEA is able to assist one time for medication when budgeting permits.

WTEA also offers counseling, advocacy, referral, support services and some transportation for epilepsy-related needs. Services are provided without charge. Because people with epilepsy usually are unable to drive, the staff makes home visits.

The Epilepsy Association is funded by contributions, fund raising evcents, Andrews United Way, a grant from the Midland United Way and local foundations.

For more inofrmation or assistance, call 697-7901.

Tickets to "Cinderella" are $7 in advance and $9 at the door. Each ticket will admit two children or one adult. To order tickets call 697-7901 or send checks to WTEA, 3610 W. Wall Ave., Midland, Texas 79701.

Wynette still country's 'queen of hurts'

By MARY CAMPBELL

NEW YORK (AP) — Tammy Wynette's life has had as many turmoils as a country music song lyric.

She's had five marriages; her daughter, Tina, had meningitis as an infant; she's had medical and painkiller-dependency problems; her house burned; 256 hours of tapes for her autobiography burned in another fire; and she filed for bankruptcy last fall.

A settlement was made in March, the bankruptcy is withdrawn and she's able now to explain about protecting herself with chapter 11.

But Wynette isn't trying to change her image as the country queen of hurt and lonely. "It's often said I spoke for the wronged woman," she says.

Her current single, "Thank the Cowboy for the Ride," is cheerful. She is healthy and has been happily married, since 1978, to George Richey, who manages her career. They met 22 years ago, when he was writing songs for her with record producer Billy Sherrill, who gave her the stage name Tammy to go with her middle name Wynette. She was born Virginia Wynette Pugh.

"I think that's one reason our marriage has been good and lasted," Wynette says. "We were buddies first. We worked well together. We could talk.

"When Richey and I got married, Billy Sherrill said, 'There will be no more sad songs written.' He was right."

But she can still sing sad songs. "I remember how I felt when I wrote the song or what was happening in my life when I first heard it and recorded it. I couldn't get the feeling across to them (the audience) if I didn't go back and put myself in that position."

She and Richey wrote only one song on her new album, "When a Girl Becomes a Wife," for her youngest daughter, Georgette, who was married in March in Red Bay, Ala. Her older daughters are Gwen, Jackie and Tina, who was married last year.

Wynette's new album, "Next to You," her 51st for CBS, does contain some heartbroken and wronged-woman songs, such as "You Left Memories Layin' (All Over the Place)" and "Liar's Roses."

"A sad song makes you reflect back on something in your life that has happened. You can feel part of that song," she said.

She was interviewed while in New York for her first appearance at the Bottom Line. Wynette is on a national tour these days. She tours 11 months a year in the United States and Europe, and takes off three weeks in December. "I've got a beautiful house in Nashville and I live on a bus."

The blond singer seems to glow with health. "It feels good to feel good," she said. "I haven't had any problems since surgery 2½ years ago. I had one operation and formed adhesions, which caused the rest of the operations. I'm one of those people who form scar tissue."

About filing for Chapter 11 bankruptcy, protection against creditors, Wynette said she and her husband had money in the development of two Florida shopping centers. The first sold and all went well. When the second sold, she said, the money was dispersed to the other partners and her bank credit wasn't paid off.

"They sent a federal marshal to our house. They were going to take everything we had and we didn't owe the money," she said.

"I think they thought we wouldn't want my name dragged through fighting that. Whether they dragged my name through mud or not, we had to do it. They wanted $1.2 million. If you don't owe it, why pay it? We'd worked too hard to have what we had to let somebody take it. We made a settlement of $450,000 in November and didn't get the paperwork done until March 9. We paid them and they're out of our life now."

Richey said three bankers were indicted in the case.

"We couldn't explain this while we were in litigation," Wynette said. "I had to just say, yes, I'd filed for bankruptcy. It was horrible to have to go through it. You don't think people will do that to you. It's over with. That's all that matters now."

Paul Richey, her husband's brother, and Ed Bruce, who wrote "Mamas, Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up to Be Cowboys," wrote the current single, "Thank the Cowboy for the Ride."

"It's a cute little song," Wynette said. "It starts, 'He was pushing 7 and I was barely 5, when he rode up on his broomstick horse and said, "You want a ride?" It goes on, 'He's almost 67; I admit to 39.' When I've done it on stage, old and young people love it."

Her favorite song written with her husband is "Till I Can Make It on My Own."

"George Jones and I had just divorced. The song said exactly what I was living." She and Jones worked together after the divorce but stopped that several years ago.

"He's happy. I'm happy. Our daughter is happy. We had magic years ago. To try and go back and recapture that would probably be a mistake. It's probably best we leave it like it is."

Treat Williams takes on more leading roles

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES — Treat Williams, who made a name for himself playing offbeat characters in often obscure films earlier in his career, has been on a mainstream roll lately.

Williams played a hippie in the film version of the musical "Hair," a cop tugged by divided loyalties in "Prince of the City," a charming airliner hijacker in "The Pursuit of D.B. Cooper," and a seedy Casanova in "Smooth Talk."

In "Third Degree Burn," premiering Sunday on HBO, he plays a more accessible character, a hard-luck private detective. He also plays a Drug Enforcement Agent in next season's NBC miniseries, "Desperados: The 'Kiki' Camarena Story" and a reporter in the theatrical film "The Heart of Dixie."

"I've had a tendency in the past to play characters more on the edge of normalcy," he said. "In my younger years I was more into character work and not leading men. As I've gotten into my late 30s, I'm playing characters in the mainstream of life, not on the edge of life like my character in 'Smooth Talk.'

"The screenplays that writers are writing for men in their late 30s are more interesting. The characters are more interesting, life is more complex, and they are more complex. They've lived longer and had more experiences. The simple fact of the mechanics of the business is that you try to find the best role in the best story directed by the best director that you can among all the options available to you."

The movie "The Heart of Dixie" also stars Ally Sheedy, Virginia Madsen and Phoebe Cates. It takes place in Alabama but was filmed in Oxford, Miss.

"I spent two months on the picture but I didn't work that much on it," Williams said. "I got to travel and see a lot of the South."

Williams is now preparing for a Broadway musical version of "Elmer Gantry," Sinclair Lewis' story of a 1930s evangelist who turned out to be a charlatan. It will be his first musical since "The Pirates of Penzance."

Meanwhile, he is completing his role as DEA Agent Ray Carson in "Desperadoes." Steven Bauer and Craig T. Nelson also star in the miniseries, which is being filmed in Los Angeles and Spain. Since it deals with political corruption in Mexico it could not be filmed there.

In "Third Degree Burn," Williams plays Scott Weston, a former policeman who supports himself by investigating small-time divorce cases. He's hired to check up on Anne Scholes, played by Virginia Madsen.

"Scott has an Achilles heel which sets the plot in motion," said Williams. "He has a tendency to sleep with other men's wives.

"It's a film noir," said Williams.

Has it really been 20 years?

AFTER THE MIRACLE. By Maury Allen. Franklin Watts. 260 Pages. $17.95.

Sobering thought for the day: Babies born during the New York Mets' miraculous first World Series appearance are today old enough to be college sophomores.

Where has the time gone?

Maury Allen, long-time sportswriter for the New York Post, has part of the answer in "After the Miracle," a where-are-they-now book about a team of miracle-makers — innocent, eager young men and last-gasp veterans whose youthful enthusiasm and experienced savvy blended perfectly and enabled the 1969 Mets to metamorphose from perennial losers into champions of the baseball world.

Allen, who saw the Mets' 1969 season first-hand, has interviewed every coach and player — except one, who declined because he has his own book in the works — from that championship team to get their recollections of that season and to catch up on what has been happening to them since.

Ironically, the book's lineup begins with a relief pitcher, Tug McGraw, and ends with starting pitcher Nolan Ryan. Some of those "Miracle Mets," including McGraw, Tom Seaver, Jerry Koosman and Bud Harrelson, went on to have long, distinguished playing careers; and, remarkably, one, Ryan, is still an active big-leaguer. But many of those heroes of '69 soon faded into baseball oblivion or went on to have only mediocre careers. For most, it seems, that remarkable championship season remains far and away the brightest light in their baseball lives.

There are some happy retirees, settled down in their post-baseball businesses and enjoying tranquil domestic lives. Others, though, have had difficulty adjusting to the reality that their playing careers are over. There have been brushes with the law, business failures and unhappy marriages. "With all the garbage we all go through, it's a miracle any player stays married," says outfielder Ron Swoboda, one of the lucky ones whose marriage has been a success.

Art Shamsky, who admits to having had "some good years and some bad ones" as a post-baseball broadcaster and restaurateur, sums up the difficulty of readjustment: "You put on that uniform and people are yelling at you and you are a big hero. ... Then your career is over and the yelling stops and you are just another guy. ... There is just nothing that prepares you for it."

It's easy to envy baseball players — they work only half a year and earn fabulous salaries playing a game that looks more like fun than it looks like work — but we seldom, if ever, consider the toll that being celebrities can take on their private lives, before, during and after their major league careers.

'YOUNG READER' REVIEW

Ever wonder "How the Rhinoceros Got His Skin"?

One day, a smooth-skinned rhinoceros stole a cake from the Parsee ("from whose hat the rays of the sun were reflected in more-than-oriental splendor"). But, he got is just desserts when the cake crumbs deposited themselves inside his skin!

The itch caused him to rub and rub himself against a tree until he was as wrinkled as we know him today.

This "Just So Story" from Rudyard Kipling is well-suited to a picturebook format and the simple illustrations created by Jonathan Langley fairly glow with sunshine, adding a sense of atmosphere.

Langly's choice of desert-baked and primary colors creates a bright, wide-open look young children from kindergarten through third grade will enjoy.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, MAY 29, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You gain new power, building a better financial future for yourself and your family. The balancing act you perform in September puts you in line for a promotion or coveted transfer.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: superstar Bob Hope, author G.K. Chesterton, American Revolutionary leader Patrick Henry, 35th President John F. Kennedy, actor Tony Geary, director-producer-writer Stacy Keach Sr., actress-entertainer Beatrice Lillie, auto racing champion Al Unser.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Indications are you seek too much advice from too many people. Look to mate for the support you need. Good timing is essential in closing a major business deal. Show greater patience.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You may be unaware of the influence you have over others. Certain people have unlimited confidence in you, while others are intimidated by almost everything you say. Avoid coming on too strong.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An unanticipated visit from associates who work at a distance could disrupt your week. Legal affairs and publishing matters strongly influence your outlook. Ask for assistance if you feel swamped at work.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Look long and deeply into your heart and you will find some important answers. Dispel any dark thoughts; your faith in an old friend is justified. Travel for pleasure. Adventure beckons.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Focus on your partner's and co-workers' activities and you will get the insight you need to make crucial decisions. Money belonging to others could be made available to you. Keep careful records.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A good time to reshape certain relationships. Purposeful activities help you survive a challenge. Other people's emotions affect the amount of progress you can make today. Do not attempt to issue ultimatums.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Minor disappointments may have a positive effect if they help you develop a more realistic attitude. A direct approach will improve a sensitive relationship. Admit past mistakes and vow to do better.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Independent projects succeed. You may be ready for greater authority and heavier responsibilities. A secret benefactor helps you make a smart choice. Show your gratitude in a tangible way.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Success may come more swiftly than you anticipated. Think about adding another room to your house or redesigning your apartment. Comfort should be a priority.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): Workplace conditions are improving rapidly. You could end up romancing or marrying one of your colleagues. Success with the public comes easily now. Travel is best postponed. Conduct more business by phone.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Think bold and you can meet any challenge. Your love life improves when you let go of the past. Postpone signing legal documents until another day. Better terms can be arranged.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): World events may impact on your career. Now is the time to talk with your landlord and win some concessions. Seize an opportunity to further your education. Investigate special seminars and workshops.

Opening lead: Two of ◇

Preemptive bidding is a two-edged sword. Sometimes it will force the opponents to misguess at a high level; on other occasions, it will draw a blueprint of the distribution for declarer.

This hand is from a weekly club game at New York's renowned Cavendish Club which attracts most of the city's best players. Sitting South was Edith Sacks. When she jumped in response to her partner's takeout double, he checked to make sure his side was not off two aces before putting her in a spade slam.

West led a diamond, and it might seem declarer would need either an even trump distribution, to allow her to ruff two hearts in dummy after discarding a club on the fourth diamond, or a successful club finesse to get home. However, the opening preempt made both those possibilities remote, but provided an elegant riposte.

Declarer won the opening lead in dummy and drew three rounds of trumps. The rest of the diamonds were cashed, allowing declarer to discard her club loser. Next, declarer cashed the ace of clubs and ruffed a club in hand.

Since West had followed to three rounds of diamonds, two clubs and a trump, and presumably had started with seven hearts, he had now been stripped of all his exit cards. Declarer delivered the coup de grace. She exited with the king of hearts!

West was well and truly endplayed. If he led the queen of hearts, declarer would ruff and claim the rest of the tricks; if he exited with a low heart, declarer would run it to her jack, ruff her last heart and then claim.

Almost anything goes on German stage — but can you make it new?

By TERRENCE PETTY

BERLIN (AP) — Shakespearean characters zoom around on skateboards on one stage, a wooden pillar speaks to a troubled woman on another and neo-Nazis unleash a bloodbath during yet a third German theatrical production.

From high-living West Berlin to the shabby steel city of Bochum, the artistic heirs of the great 18th-century playwright Friedrich Schiller have given modern German theater an international reputation for intensity and daring.

But critics are not completely satisfied with today's West German theater, and some even charge the stage hasn't actually progressed past styles of a decade ago.

"There are really not that many innovations since the 1970s. Directors even seem to imitate each other these days," said Georg Hensel, drama critic for the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung newspaper.

Theater officials, on the other hand, say West German critics are a hard-bitten crew who aren't willing to give fair appraisals of the contemporary theater scene.

"Many times critics will generally like a play but then tear it apart over just a few small points," said Sieglinde Tuschy, spokeswoman for the world-famous Schiller Theater in West Berlin. "I think this has something to do with the serious German mentality. German theater is really some of the best in the world."

Germans have long been known for their love of music, but they also have a special passion for drama. There are more than 300 theaters scattered across West Germany, and about one-tenth of the population of 62 million goes to see a play at least once a year.

Some of the major theaters are in relatively unknown places such as the rundown Ruhr Valley city of Bochum, staging premieres by such internationally renowned directors as Peter Zadek and Hans Neuenfels.

West German theaters get hefty government subsidies to help keep the price of tickets down. About 2 billion marks ($1.1 billion) was shelled out in 1988.

Schiller helped launch German drama into the international limelight 200 years ago with such plays as "The Robbers," a vicious attack on political tyranny. German theater flowered through the beginning of the 20th century, creating greats such as Bertolt Brecht, but it was harshly repressed by the Nazis.

The West German stage burst into a renaissance after the war, marked by boldness and innovation. Even theater in East Germany is marked by an experimentation and intensity that some might find surprising for the communist country. The '60s and '70s launched the careers of a group of directors who today are among West Germany's most prominent — Neuenfels, Zadek, Peter Stein and Heiner Mueller.

Critics say this new breed, teaming up with native authors such as Rolf Hochhuth and Botho Strauss, brought West German theater to new heights of innovation.

Attacks on the Third Reich were among the targets of the new generation, as exemplified by Hochhuth's 1963 play "The Deputy," a critical look at the alleged failure of the Vatican to do enough to stop the extermination of European Jews during the Nazi era.

Mainstream West German theater of the late '80s is still marked by good doses of experimentation, and often downright outrageousness.

A production of "The Robbers" premiered in Munich this year with a considerably revised story and neo-Nazis replacing 18th-century characters. The robbers knock off victims in staged violence far more realistic than anything Schiller would have intended. Some theatergoers have walked out because of the brutality.

Another brand-new production, Strauss' "Time and the Room," probes the elusivness of time and the isolation of humans in the modern world. Strauss' characters themselves seem as elusive as spirits, as peculiar things happen in a non-descript room. At one point, a pillar inside the room begins talking to a lonely young woman.

The production premiered in April at West Berlin's Schaubuehne Theater.
