Iran claims right to avenge deaths

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — President Ali Khamenei of Iran said today his country has the right to avenge the victims of the Iran Air jetliner shot down by the U.S. Navy, Tehran Radio reported.

He did not say if, how or when Tehran would seek revenge. Iran said all 290 people aboard the aircraft were killed in Sunday's missile attack by the USS Vincennes.

The radio, monitored in Nicosia, quoted Khamenei as saying: "Iran considers it to be its definite right to avenge the blood of innocent children, men and women."

Iran's military commander-in-chief, Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani, declared in another report on Tehran Radio: "We cannot allow ourselves to refrain from taking revenge. The choice of timing is up to us, and not to America."

The radio said Rafsanjani called the downing of the plane "an unprecedented disaster."

Hostages 'should not suffer' because jetliner downed

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The spiritual guide for Iranian-backed guerrillas holding foreign captives in Lebanon was quoted as saying today that the hostages should not suffer because the U.S. Navy shot down an Iranian jetliner.

But an anonymous caller purporting to speak for Islamic Jihad, which holds Americans Terry Anderson and Thomas Sutherland, threatened to kill one of them in revenge for Sunday's attack.

The caller did not elaborate and it was not possible to authenticate the call. Islamic Jihad has said it would authenticate its written statement. Fadhallah was quoted as saying in Beirut that Western hostages in Lebanon should not suffer because of the missile attack on the Iran Air jet.

ments with photographs of hostages.

"I find no justification for making the hostages account for a matter with which they have no link," Sheikh Mohammed Hussein Fadhallah said in an interview with the Sobofiya News Agency, a Lebanese newsletter based in Moslem west Beirut.

"There's no link between this subject (the hostages) and the shooting down of the plane."

Fadhallah is spiritual leader of Hezbollah, or Party of God, which is believed to be the umbrella for pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem factions holding most of the 18 foreigners, including nine Americans, missing in Lebanon.

The United States said the USS Vincennes shot down the Iran Air jetliner on Sunday after mistaking it for a jet fighter. Iran said all 290 people aboard were killed.

Iranian leaders called for war with the United States and vowed to seek revenge.

Iran's revolutionary patriarch, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, 87, vowed Monday to dedicate his "worthless life" to fighting the United States. His designated heir, Ayatollah Hussein Ali Montazeri, called for total war.

Foreign Minister Ali-Akbar Velayati said Iran's revenge would extend to countries that have helped the United States in the Persian Gulf. He did not elaborate.

Iranian divers searched for more bodies from the Iran Air Airbus A300, which was destroyed on a 150-mile flight from the Iranian city of Bandar Abbas to Dubai, across the Strait of Hormuz in the United Arab Emirates.

In another Iranian report, an unidentified commander of the search and rescue operation was quoted as saying the bodies had been recovered up to five miles from the area where most of the jetliner's debris fell. It was hit at 7,500 feet by at least one of two missiles.

Prayers, picnics mark holiday around Texas

Associated Press

Members of the Rainbow family prayed for peace under a rainbow while Texans celebrated the Fourth of July in more traditional ways with cookouts, baseball games and swimming pool parties.

It was a special holiday in Houston for 85 people who became citizens of the United States on the country's 212th birthday. The ceremony at Sam Houston Park was part of the opening ceremonies for the daylong Houston Freedom Festival.

Two natives of Chile, Carmen and Hernan Vera, were among those taking the oath.

"We can participate in the destiny of the country," said Mrs. Vera, who has lived in the country for 20 years. "We're anxious to vote. People in this country take it for granted. People have to realize they can change things if they have to."

"This is a very special day for me and for all of my family because we become citizens of the United States — a free land where there are opportunities for everybody," said Pedro Romney, another new citizen.

"There are equal rights that you can't find in another place and that's why we're grateful today."

The Freedom Festival was the biggest event scheduled during the weekend in the state's largest city. More than 300,000 people converged in Sam Houston and Buffalo Bayou parks downtown to celebrate with games, crafts, food and a fireworks finale.

The Rainbow Family held a prayer vigil for peace and harmony in the Angelina National Forest as their 17th annual "gathering of the tribes" culminated.

Midland 'survivor' leads capital parade

From Staff Reports

Midland's most famous toddler led the U.S. capital parade Monday in celebration of the nation's 212th birthday.

Jessica McClure, now more than 2-years-old, served as honorary grand marshal of the National Independence Day Festival and Parade in Washington, D.C.

The child was chosen for the honor last November, just weeks after she was rescued from entrapment in a local abandoned water well for more than two days.

Jessica was chosen for the honor because of her "symbolism of being a survivor just as our nation has survived," said Pete Snelson, her family's publicist.

Work on Wadley must be repeated

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

A two-block concrete section of Wadley Avenue is expected to be torn up this week following an inspection by city engineers who determined that the contractor failed to meet certain specifications.

"The contract calls for deficient work to be removed and that's what will happen," said City Engineer Harvey Hansen today.

Last week, engineers took about 10 core samples of a center turning lane between Ward Street and Whitney Drive.

Those samples indicated the contractor — South Texas Construction Co. of Midland — had not poured enough concrete along certain portions of the stretch, Hansen said.

City specs called for eight-inch-thick concrete along the 600-foot section in question. Samples indicated that in certain areas, six inches had been poured.

Hansen said the contractor also mislaid some reinforced steel mesh that was required for shrink control purposes to prevent cracking. Mesh that was to be set two inches from the bottom, in some cases, was sitting on the bottom, he added.

Gas producers, users seeking sales alliance

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

BOSTON — The first steps toward forging an alliance between Texas natural gas producers and New England gas users were taken at a conference here today.

Co-hosts U.S. Rep. Joseph P. Kennedy II, D-Mass., and Texas Railroad Commissioner John Sharp met at the Parker House hotel with natural gas industry and regulatory leaders to discuss ways in which southwestern gas producers and northeastern gas users can alter the energy mix available to East Coast users to contain more natural gas.

"New England needs additional sources of clean, efficient, cost-effective energy," Kennedy said. "And our guests from the southwest have a fuel that fits that bill: natural gas." Calling natural gas a clean-burning fuel, Kennedy said no dying forests or dead fish had ever been attributed to natural gas. He added that fuel was needed to meet the growth of New England, and that Texas had that fuel.

"At the same time," said Kennedy, "Texas needs new markets to spur demand and expand its economy. New England has that market."

Trial begins for Shiite Moslem man suspected in 1985 TWA hijacking FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — A Lebanese Shiite Moslem accused of murder and air piracy in the 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner to Beirut went on trial today under heavy security.

A clean-shaven Mohammed Ali Hamadi entered the courtroom in a Frankfurt state prison wearing a light blue shirt, no tie and dark blue trousers. He had previously worn a beard.

Almost as soon as the trial began, Chief Judge Heiner Mueckenberger called a brief recess in a dispute over Hamadi's interpreter.

The trial was later adjourned until Thursday.

Hamadi, in his only statements on the first day of the trial, gave his name and asked for a new interpreter and the replacement of one of his defense lawyers. Hamadi said the interpreter was not qualified in his Arabic dialect.

Texas' holiday highway death toll reaches 28

Associated Press

At least 28 people have died in traffic accidents on Texas roads during the holiday weekend, authorities said.

The final total may exceed the Texas Department of Public Safety's prediction of 36 deaths, said DPS spokesman Tom Mobley. The counting period began at 6 p.m. Friday and ended at midnight today.

"If nothing happens to change the course, it looks like we'll go over,"

DPS spokesman Tom Mobley said. "With everybody going home Monday night, they're trying to get there in a hurry so they can get some sleep before going back to work Tuesday."

The number of traffic fatalities in Texas over the Independence Day weekend includes at least five pedestrians, Mobley said.

Charles Beasley, 57, of Rt. 6 in Abilene, was killed late Sunday night when his motorcycle collided with a car on U.S. Highway 80 in Abilene, Mobley said. The car dragged the motorcycle more than 350 feet, where both vehicles caught fire, he said.

David Garcia Perez, 23, died after being struck by a car as he walked down a service road along Katy Freeway in Houston early Saturday. Houston police reported the incident to the DPS Monday, Mobley said.

Lloyd D. Nichols of Baytown was killed early Monday in a head-on crash on Texas 146 near La Porte in Harris County.

Marcus H. Hooks, 73, of Mansfield was killed when his car ran off the road in Port Mansfield early Monday.

And Marlon J. Roy Sr., 62, died late Monday morning when the vehicle he was in veered off Hasmea Road about two miles south of Sugar Valley in Matagorda County, Mobley said.

At least 23 others died in accidents over the weekend, including five members of a Dallas family killed in a head-on collision near Westbrook.

Reagan vows to keep American fleet in Persian Gulf

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan vowed to keep U.S. forces in the war-torn Persian Gulf despite Iran's threat that America "will suffer the consequences" following the destruction of an Iranian passenger jet carrying 290 people.

"We want peace in the gulf, but we also want the right of navigation of international waters," Reagan said Monday amid an escalating war-like talk by Iran's leaders.

"We must all be prepared for a real war and go to the war fronts and fight against America and its lackeys," revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini said in a radio broadcast.

Both Reagan and Vice President George Bush made new expressions of regret Monday for the destruction of Iran Air flight 655, but defended the decision by the captain of the U.S. Navy cruiser Vincennes to fire on the airliner.

"We're talking about an incident in which a plane on radar was observed coming in the direction of a ship in combat and the plane began lowering its altitude," Reagan said. "So I think it was an understandable accident to shoot and think that they were under attack from that plane."

Reagan, who was to be fully briefed today, told reporters on his return from Camp David, Md., that "I won't minimize the tragedy."

Iran accused the United States of knowingly shooting down the unarmed plane and requested an investigation by the Montreal-based International Civil Aviation Organization.

Khomeini, rumored to be suffering from terminal cancer, proclaimed: "I donate my worthless life for the sake of our victory."

Iranian President Ali Khamenei vowed to fight "American aggression."

"The American government will have to suffer the consequences of its recent crime in the Persian Gulf," he said on Tehran Radio.

Asked what he thought about that, Reagan replied, "You have to think about that, knowing who they are."

But when asked about the Iranian accusation that the Navy knew it was firing on a passenger jet, the president replied: "Well, I don't go much by what the Iranians say — ever."

While Iran went about the grim task of recovering the bodies of victims, a U.S. Naval investigative team left for the Persian Gulf. Reagan has directed it to compile a full report on the incident.

Pentagon sources, who spoke on condition they not be further identified, said the commander of the Vincennes, Capt. Will C. Rogers III, had sent a message to his superiors stressing that he had followed procedures and would make the same decisions again if faced with the same situation.

CBS and NBC reported excerpts of Rogers' message, including: "This is a burden I will carry for the rest of my life ... but I took this action to defend my ship and crew." He added that "I, and I alone, am responsible."

Reagan, who did not alter his weekend holiday plans because of the tragedy, took exception with comparisons to the Soviet Union's downing of a Korean Air Lines jet in 1983.

"Our shot was fired as the result of a radar screen of a plane approaching it at quite a distance," he said. "Remember the KAL, a group of Soviet fighter planes went up, identified the plane for what it was and then proceeded to shoot it down."

Reagan later hosted friends for a July 4th dinner and viewed the capital's annual fireworks display from the south balcony of the White House.

Jesse Jackson urged Reagan to offer reparations to the families of victims of the downed Iranian airliner, saying an immediate goodwill gesture is needed to save the lives of American hostages held in Lebanon.

Both Reagan and Bush said that question needs more study. Jackson responded that the administration was using "the same arguments the Russians were making" after they shot down a KAL flight 007, killing all 290 people on board.

"We did not accept those arguments as being valid, and most people in the world will not accept our arguments to this point as being valid," Jackson said.

Democratic presidential nominee-to-be Michael Dukakis departed from the prepared text of a July 4th speech to appeal to Iran not to try to seek revenge through terrorism.

"While we all deeply regret the tragedy, this is no time for acts of terror or revenge in response to the incident," he said. "So I urge the government of Iran to reconsider its threats and to join us and the entire international community to ending a war that already has taken the lives of more than 1 million people."

With the House and Senate returning Wednesday from their holiday recess, Reagan's policy of deploying U.S. forces in the Persian Gulf is certain to get fresh scrutiny there as well.

There was no lack of suggestions on how the administration should proceed.

House Majority Leader Tom Foley, D-Wash., said all information about the accident should be released publicly "to demonstrate that the United States does not make war on innocents, that this was a terrible accident, that we deeply regret it."

Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., said administration policy in the gulf "was never a very good one to begin with and this incident, this sort of thing, was very predictable."

Aegis among subjects of defense probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Investigators in the Pentagon bribery probe are looking closely at how the Navy awarded contracts for its Aegis ship-defense system — the type used by the USS Vincennes to shoot down an Iranian passenger jet.

Pentagon officials now find themselves defending the system's capabilities, in addition to facing questions about the role of private consultants in determining which defense contractors won the multi-billion-dollar Aegis production contracts.

The Vincennes relied on its Aegis nerve system to track and destroy an incoming aircraft on Sunday during hostilities with Iran. The aircraft, mistaken for an Iranian F-14 attack plane, turned out to be an Iranian jetliner with 290 people aboard.

Aegis, named for the shield of the Greek god Zeus, combines computers, radar and weapons in a protective net around Navy ships like the Vincennes.

Reps. Jim Florio, D-N.J., and H. James Saxton, R-N.J., have called on the Defense Department to determine whether the Aegis contracts are tainted by disclosures in the ongoing Pentagon purchasing investigation.

A chief target of the bribery probe is Melvyn Paisley, a former assistant Navy secretary who oversaw division of the Aegis work. Paisley left the Navy in 1987 to become a consultant to, among others, a company that got Aegis work. Paisley, though his attorney, has denied any wrongdoing.

Aegis systems had been built for 15 years at RCA's Moorestown, N.J., division when, in 1985, the Navy sought production changes despite the system's then-stellar reputation.

Unisys Corp. of Detroit eventually was awarded a contract to begin work on a key radar component.

Unisys spokesman William Beckham confirmed that Paisley was hired by the company as a consultant after he left the Navy, but said he did not offer advice directly on Aegis.

Beckham said another Unisys consultant, William Galvin, "monitored" the Aegis proposals.

Investigators reportedly are looking at links between Paisley and Galvin, and federal records show that Paisley's wife had a $50,000 ownership share in a company associated with Galvin.

Then-Navy Secretary John Lehman had a simple explanation for his order to "second-source" some of the work: Congress had told him to do so. Congress had required second sources on military work in an effort to spark competition.

"I have yet to meet a second source I didn't like," Lehman scribbled at the bottom of a May 1985 letter defending the shift.

But despite the goal of increasing competition, the Navy announced that it would transfer the radar work without competitive bidding — to the Sperry Corp. of Great Neck, N.Y., now part of Unisys.

New Jersey legislators rallied to protect some 600 jobs at RCA and as many as 5,000 related positions. Saxton wrote to colleagues at the time that "RCA has been on time, below cost and has exceeded all performance goals."

The New Jersey group suspected that Rep. Joseph Addabbo, D-N.Y., chairman of the House defense appropriations subcommittee, was behind the plans — trying to get the Aegis work for his home state. Addabbo died in 1986.

As originally proposed, the Aegis competition was to include dividing both the work on developing and making the systems' nearly 900 major components, as well as the delicate task of putting the parts together.

Aegis' 6 million parts and 4,900 cables are weaved together at RCA's $141 million "cruiser of the cornfields," a mock warship in a rural area along the New Jersey Turnpike.

The New Jersey delegation eventually collected enough congressional muscle to fend off part of the Navy's plans. Lehman's successor, James Webb, announced the Aegis assembly work would remain at RCA.

But plans to split work on Aegis components continued. Paisley in June 1986 ordered subordinates to implement the changes within four months.

The trade journal Defense News reported Monday that RCA executives complained bitterly to Paisley, and that he told them they could expect a quid-pro-quo share of a separate $2.4 billion submarine electronics system.

Placard-carrying demonstrators stand outside the American Embassy in London Monday, protesting the shooting of an Iran Air 1300 Airbus with 290 people aboard. On Sunday, the craft was accidentally downed near the Strait of Hormuz in the Persian Gulf by the USS Vincennes.

Los Angeles protest over downing of Iranian jet erupts in violence

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A protest against the U.S. downing of a civilian airliner in the Persian Gulf turned violent when 10 demonstrators from the mostly Iranian crowd attacked an anti-Khomeini television commentator.

Rafi Khachatur of Channel 18, a local station featuring ethnic programs, suffered cuts and bruises to the face Monday from protesters wielding placards and a cane taken from an elderly woman, police and witnesses said.

"They were all over him. It was terrible," said a woman who identified herself only as Khachatur's friend.

Police arrested two men in front of the Federal Building in West Los Angeles after the attack on Khachatur, widely known in the Iranian community for his strong views against Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's government.

Police booked Ali Sinaki, 34, and Seyeo Hashemi, 35, both of Los Angeles, for investigation of assault with a deadly weapon in the attack on Khachatur, said Sgt. Rick Walker.

Demonstrators left shortly after the beating as about a dozen police cars arrived. Protest organizers took no responsibility for the beating and many denied knowing about it.

Khachatur was listed in stable condition at UCLA Medical Center, said a nursing supervisor who declined to give her name.

The protesters, most Iranian nationals, marched and chanted in English and Farsi in front of the Federal Building, located near the University of California at Los Angeles and a popular spot for anti-government demonstrations.

Demonstrators chanted, "U.S. Out of Persian Gulf," and carried signs reading, "We Condemn The U.S. Massacre of Civilian Passengers,"

"Iraqi Invasion, U.S. Aggression," and "U.S. Out of Muslim Land."

About half the women protesters wore chadors, the traditional veiled body-length black gown worn in their homeland.

"Why were you there to begin with to get scared by that jetliner?" asked protester Soheil Mohases of Garden Grove. "I don't think the U.S. should even be there."

Motorists expressed disapproval by shouting obscenities and gesturing at the protesters. At least two arguments nearly developed into fistfights between protesters and angry passers-by.

According to the Defense Department, the guided missile cruiser USS Vincennes mistook the Iran Air Airbus for an Iranian F-14 fighter and the plane did not respond to radio warnings. The plane was brought down Sunday by one of two missiles fired from the Vincennes.

Wright calls for apology, compensation

LONDON (AP) — House Speaker Jim Wright said today that President Reagan should be more apologetic for the U.S. Navy's shooting down of an Iranian passenger jet over the Persian Gulf.

Wright also said Congress would favor compensating Iran for the tragedy.

He said Americans are "deeply grateful" to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher for saying she understood the Navy's reason for shooting at the plane.

Iran said all 290 people aboard the Iran Air jetliner were killed when the USS Vincennes shot the plane out of the sky on Sunday. The United States said the ship's crew thought the plane was a fighter and warned it seven times.

Asked in a British Broadcasting Corp. radio interview if the United States should offer monetary compensation to Iran, Wright said, "Yes, if that would assuage the grief of the other aggrieved party, surely we could do that ... Congress would support that if it were requested."

But the Texas Democrat said he doubted whether "the offer of money would be just retribution for the loss of human life."

Wright said Reagan had expressed regret for the loss of innocent lives but "is not given to profuse apologies in any event." Asked if he ought to be, Wright replied, "Yes, he should be."

"We close ranks, so please don't ask me to try to correct the language of the president," Wright said. "I'm just stating as a matter of fact that Mr. Reagan is not given to acknowledging error. It's a personal trait, he's gone as far as I've ever heard him go and he has expressed his deep regret as president of the United States."

Wright called the attack "a tragic error."

"We have not been able to invent with all our genius a machine or a radar screen that can detect the intentions of the pilot flying an aircraft," he said.

WORLD in brief

Soviet newspapers publish resolutions

MOSCOW (AP) — The Communist Party conference approved Mikhail S. Gorbachev's call for an overhaul of the legislature but did not endorse his proposal for a strong presidency, according to a resolution published today.

In his speech last week opening the national conference he had called, Gorbachev said, "The president of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet should be granted sufficiently broad state authority powers."

"Specifically, the president could exercise overall guidance in the drafting of legislation and of major socio-economic programs, decide on the key issues of foreign policy, defense and national security, chair the Defense Council" and name the prime minister, he said.

That would have made the presidency, now a largely ceremonial post, the locus of Soviet power. Most authority now rests with the party general secretary — Gorbachev — and the party's ruling Politburo.

The resolutions adopted by the 5,000 delegates, as published today by Soviet newspapers, were silent on the question of presidential authority.

Mexican election nears

MEXICO CITY (AP) — President Miguel de la Madrid promised Wednesday's general elections will be fraud-free, while the leading opposition presidential candidate said politics were behind the weekend killings of two of his aides.

"We Mexicans are committed to have a clean, legal and peaceful election" on Wednesday, de la Madrid said.

"Today I confirm to you it is a commitment of the government of the republic to comply strictly with the law. There will be respect for the will expressed in the ballot boxes," he said during a brief televised address to the nation Monday night.

Irish hearing ordered

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — The chief of this British province's mostly Protestant police force has ordered an internal disciplinary hearing for 20 officers in the 1982 killings of six unarmed Roman Catholics.

Chief Constable Sir John Hermon of the Royal Ulster Constabulary ordered the hearing on Monday. Critics have charged that police had a "shoot-to-kill" policy and that a subsequent cover-up undermined efforts to persuade the Catholic minority to accept police authority.

Prime Minister Charles Haughey's government across the border in the Irish Republic said that substituting an internal police hearing for prosecutions in the courts will not allay public concern.

The officers at the closed-door internal hearing could face penalties ranging from cautions and reprimands to fines, loss of pension rights, demotions and dismissal from the police force.

China awards 'Roosters'

BEIJING (AP) — Two controversial movies about poor peasants that won prizes abroad tied for best picture in the 1988 Golden Rooster competition, China's Academy Awards, officials reports said today.

"The Old Well" and "Red Sorghum" also shared best picture honors with a third movie, "Prairie," in an annual public opinion contest called the Hundred Flowers Awards, the official Xinhua News Agency said.

The Golden Rooster prizes are awarded by a panel of experts from the movie industry. Controversy has become a staple of the Golden Rooster Awards in the past few years as China's filmmakers become increasingly sophisticated in their styles and themes.

Crucial Taiwan congress to debate liberalization

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — The governing Nationalist Party convenes a crucial congress Thursday that is expected to elevate a new generation of leaders and determine the pace for more social and political liberalization.

The 13th party congress is seen as a watershed in Taiwan's political development. Government initiative has virtually halted pending its outcome.

"Everything has stopped except the pollution and the traffic," leading political journalist Antonio Chiang joked in a recent interview.

The congress will differ greatly from past gatherings dominated by strongmen from the Chiang Kai-shek family, whose unquestioned supremacy in the Nationalist Party dates back six decades.

The last congress, seven years ago, was run by the late President Chiang Ching-kuo, eldest son of the World War II leader.

Though Chiang Ching-kuo died in January, his legacy will be very much alive at the congress as delegates consider how fast and how far to go with the political and social change he began.

In his final years, Chiang ended 38 years of martial law, allowed the formation of opposition parties and opened the door to unofficial contact with arch-enemy China. Many media taboos that prevented critical reporting of government leaders and policies also have disappeared.

Taiwanese have staged more than 1,500 demonstrations in the past year, most of them peaceful, to protest a wide variety of government policies. The number of protests has declined, however, since police cracked down on a May 20 riot and detained nearly 100 people.

Some observers believe the protests indicate that expectations for change have increased and social unrest could result if the Nationalists do not maintain a quick pace of liberalization.

The opposition Democratic Progressive Party wants to scrap the political system that ensures the Legislature and electoral college remain controlled by aging Nationalists who do not face elections. The government has promised to open more seats to elections, but has yet to announce details.

Many Taiwanese also want changes in economic and financial policies they claim favor big business.

The congress is expected to retire some old-guard party conservatives from the Nationalist leadership clique that fled to Taiwan in 1949 with Chiang Kai-shek after losing a civil war to the Communists on the Chinese mainland.

"The whole power structure will be much younger," predicted Chang Chung-tung, professor of history at the National Taiwan University.

Elderly Nationalists from the Chinese mainland still dominate the party's 31-member policy-making Central Standing Committee, but as many as half are expected to step down.

Native Taiwanese, who comprise about 85 percent of the island's nearly 20 million people, hold about one-third of committee seats, but that proportion should increase.

The new committee could determine how much leeway President Lee Teng-hui, the first Taiwan-born leader of the Nationalist government, will have to push forward his own programs for change.

Lee, 65, who was named acting party chairman two weeks after Chiang's death, is expected to be confirmed chairman at the congress.

The 24 million-member Nationalist Party, or Kuomintang, was founded on mainland China in 1904 by Sun Yat-sen, regarded as the father of modern China for his role in toppling the Manchu Qing dynasty in 1911.

Power in the Kuomintang, which in structure resembles the Chinese Communist Party, traditionally has flowed from the top down.

Seven U.S. Marines carry the coffin of U.S. Navy Captain William E. Nordeen to a plane at the U.S. Air Force base in Athens.

Body of attache slain in Greece flown to United States for burial ATHENS, Greece (AP) — The body of U.S. Navy Capt. William E. Nordeen, the military attache killed in a terrorist bomb attack, was flown to the United States today for burial at Arlington National Cemetery.

After a brief ceremony on the tarmac at the U.S. Air Force base at Athens Airport, six bearers carried the flag-draped coffin into a U.S. Air Force C-141 transport plane for the flight to Dover, Del.

The coffin was accompanied by Nordeen's British-born wife Patricia and 12-year-old daughter Annabel. Base officials said the plane was due to arrive at 5:05 p.m. EDT. The burial will take place on Wednesday.

Nordeen, 51, died one week ago when a car bomb exploded next to his armor-plated car as he was driving to work from his home in a northern Athens suburb.

A local leftist terrorist group called November 17 said it had killed Nordeen. The group has taken responsibility for the 13 political assassinations in Athens since 1975.

Collision of Indian trains kills two, injures 100

BOMBAY, India (AP) — A fast-moving express train slammed into another passenger train that had halted in central Bombay, killing at least two people and injuring more than 100, rescuers and hospital officials said today.

Press Trust of India put the death toll at five in the Monday night crash.

The Minar Express stopped shortly after leaving Bombay's Victoria Terminal when someone pulled an emergency brake cord, staffers at a railroad control room said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Engine test will be next step in preparing Discovery for flight

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — For the first time in 2 1/2 years a space shuttle is on a launch pad here, and engineers and technicians are grooming it for an engine test crucial to the ship's return to space in early September.

Preparations for the engine firing began shortly after Discovery reached the launch pad Monday and workers had hooked up electrical, environmental control and other connections.

The July 24 test is to subject the three main liquid fuel engines to a 19.4-second ignition while Discovery is bolted firmly on its launch mounts. The exercise will check scores of engine modifications and provide the launch team with count-down practice.

Discovery rolled to Launch Pad 39B on a Fourth of July filled with emotional outpourings from officials, thousands of space workers and one of the astronauts who will fly on the first shuttle mission since the Challenger disaster in January 1986.

"America, the dream is still alive," astronaut Dave Hilmers told about 2,000 Kennedy Space Center workers who cheered as the spaceship moved out of an assembly hangar to start the 4.2-mile trip to the pad.

"It's been a long 2 1/2 years since Challenger, and I'm very pleased with the progress we've made during that time," center director Forrest S. McCartney told the crowd. "It's been a team effort...This is a proud day."

McCartney presented Hilmers with a book containing the signatures of more than 15,000 center personnel who have labored to return the shuttle to flight. The book will be carried into space aboard Discovery.

Shortly after the shuttle reached the launch pad, center gates were opened to permit space workers to bring their families out on the holiday for a drive by the launch pad and a close look.

More than 4,000 cars, with an average of four people in each, passed through, creating a huge traffic jam, with lines stretching to 18 miles at times. For some, the drive to the pad took nearly two hours, but no one seemed to mind once they saw the shuttle standing majestically in the sunlight.

"Wonderful!" "It's great!" "We're back in business," were among the comments as drivers slowed to allow their passengers to take photographs.

The launch-pad firing of Discovery's engines is the next major milestone along the route to orbit.

The next day, July 25, the shuttle's other propulsion system, the redesigned solid fuel booster rocket, will undergo its final pre-flight test at the Morton Thiokol plant in Utah.

Both tests are considered essential to the shuttle's return to space.

A faulty booster rocket joint led to the explosion of Challenger and loss of its seven crew members on Jan. 28, 1986.

The move to the launch pad ends several months of frustration for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's shuttle program. Four launch dates, starting with last February, have been set and then postponed, with the space agency announcing the latest delay last week, a slip from late August to early September.

Astronaut Rick Hauck will command an all-veteran crew of shuttle fliers on the four-day Discovery mission, whose main tasks will be deployment of a communications satellite and checking more than 200 orbiter modifications. The other crew members are pilot Dick Covey and mission specialists Mike Lounge, George Nelson and Hilmers.

Drought slows river's barge traffic

Associated Press

Barge operators struggled to keep traffic flowing steadily on the drought-lowered Mississippi River as two states wrangled over a proposal to divert water there from the Great Lakes.

But there was good news from Ohio: low water levels are killing off mosquitoes.

Independence Day traffic on the Mississippi was steady, with two groundings reported in the Memphis, Tenn., area, Coast Guard spokesman Dave Schuster said Monday.

"They're losing hundreds of thousands of dollars each day, I guess they figure they've got to go no matter what," he said of towboat operators who can move fewer barges because of shallow spots caused by the drought.

Dredging closed the river near Greenville, Miss., and north of Memphis, Schuster said.

In Wisconsin, Gov. Tommy G. Thompson has threatened to ask the U.S. Supreme Court to halt proposals for increased diversion of Lake Michigan water to replenish the shrinking Mississippi.

An aide said the governor fears temporary diversion through Chicago and down the Illinois River in response to the current drought might become a permanent practice. He said the move is also a feint to get more water to disperse river waste in the Chicago area.

Thompson had received reports the Army Corps of Engineers might quadruple the diversion at Chicago in the next few days to fight the low-water conditions troubling Mississippi River barge tows, said James Klausner, secretary of the Department of Administration.

"The navigation of (sewage) down the Chicago River is the only navigation issue here," he said. "It's solely a matter of flushing Chicago."

In Louisiana, environmental officials said they would monitor the Mississippi more closely for salt and toxic substances as the drought continues to decrease the freshwater flow.

"We're concerned about the toxics going down the river and are seriously taking a look at it now," said Maureen O'Neill of the Department of Environmental Quality said in Baton Rouge. "We're not seeing the same dilution factor" normally present.

Levels of toxic substances still are low, but the environmental agency will increase monthly sampling to weekly, O'Neill said.

Communities that get their drinking water from the lower part of the Mississippi are seeing chloride concentrations rise as salt water moves rapidly up the river, she said.

In Ohio, an agricultural agent said mosquitoes are having a tough time breeding.

"There's definitely not as many mosquitoes around," said Randy E. James. "There's just no place for them to breed, no moisture."

Mosquitoes hatch from eggs left standing in pools of water, said Margaret Parsons, chief of the Ohio Department of Health's insect-borne disease unit.

"There's been a dramatic decrease in mosquitoes all over the state," she said. "Usually we have complaints from everywhere, but now it's pretty much quiet."

In St. Louis, the low level of the Mississippi helped the Delta Queen recapture the glory it had lost in recent years by churning to victory in an annual riverboat race.

The Mississippi Queen trailed the Delta Queen in the half-mile race to the Gateway Arch.

"The record (river) low worked to our advantage, because the Mississippi Queen is heavier," Delta Queen captain Garland Shewmaker said.

Episcopal convention debates resolutions on abortion

DETROIT (AP) — Episcopal delegates to the church's 69th General Convention urged in hearings that abortions be discouraged but that women should retain the right to have them.

Witnesses at a hearing Monday of the Committee on Social and Urban Affairs debated two resolutions that would discourage abortion but keep it legal. They said laws outlawing abortion would only force women to seek out unsafe, unsanitary means of ending pregnancies.

"Many people have forgotten what it was like before legal abortions," said Diane Pollard, a church deputy from New York.

One resolution discourages abortion except in "extreme cases," such as problem pregnancies or in cases of rape. The other would discourage any legislative or other governmental effort to remove women's right to consider abortion.

The legislative resolution "basically restates the position of the General Convention of 1976," said the Rev. Neil G. Lebar of Jacksonville, Fla.

The resolutions were the result of a study ordered in the 1985 general convention.

The committee adjourned for the day without acting on the resolutions. If approved in committee, the resolutions would be sent to the convention's 3,000 delegates for action. The General Convention meets every three years to set policy for the 2.6 million-member church. The convention runs through July 11.

Louisa Rucker, executive director of the National Organization of Episcopalians for Life, opposed the resolution addressing existing law on the right to abortion, saying it violated principles of separation of church and state for the church to take a stand.

But she backed the resolution supporting women who decide on abortion in some cases.

"It encourages and calls on the church to provide help and support for women caught in untimely and unwanted pregnancies," Rucker said. "We acknowledge a legal right for women to have an abortion, but we call on Christians to a higher standard."

White FBI agent admits 'revenge' against black agent

NEW YORK (AP) — A white FBI agent has admitted planning with white colleagues a retribution campaign "as personal revenge" against a black agent in the Chicago office, according to a report published today.

The disclosures came in internal FBI documents filed in a Washington court on Friday and made available to the lawyer for Donald Rochon, the black agent.

The documents are the FBI's first public acknowledgment that white agents may have taken part in harassing Rochon, The New York Times reported.

Rochon has said that while living in Chicago, where he was assigned from 1984 to 1986, his family's safety was repeatedly threatened in anonymous telephone calls and obscene, racist letters from white FBI agents.

He has filed a civil lawsuit in U.S. District Court in Washington which charges the FBI and several white FBI officials in Chicago and Omaha, Neb. — where Rochon was based previously — with violating federal civil rights laws.

The documents also show that the white agent, Gary W. Miller, conceded that in 1985 he forged Rochon's signature on an application for death and dismemberment insurance for Rochon's family, the Times reported. Rochon has called the unsolicited insurance policy a death threat.

Miller, who was suspended without pay for two weeks, has denied he was trying to harass Rochon, the Times said.

The Justice Department and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission have already found that Rochon was the victim of "blatant racial harassment" in the FBI's Omaha office in 1983 and 1984. A federal grand jury is investigating the later incidents in Chicago, which Rochon has contended were more serious.

FBI Director William Sessions has described Rochon's charges as "very serious" but has declined to discuss details of the case.

The white agents have called Rochon a troublemaker who brought unfounded charges of racism against other agents in an effort to get transferred to his hometown of Los Angeles.

In a sworn statement included among the FBI documents, Miller said he embarked on his campaign against Rochon "as personal revenge" for making allegations against Miller's friend, Tom Dillon, who worked with Rochon in Omaha and later in Chicago.

NATION IN BRIEF

Shultz on Asian trip

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George Shultz is leaving on a two-week trip that will take him to nine Pacific and East Asian nations, with defense and trade issues at the top of his agenda.

Shultz was leaving today for a series of meetings beginning with a three-day ministerial summit of ASEAN, the Association of Asian Nations, in Bangkok, Thailand. The session convenes Thursday.

Shultz plans to discuss issues including American military bases in the region, U.S. trade deficits with the area's emerging industrial powers and the future of Cambodia as it moves toward independence following a 10-year Vietnamese occupation. Shultz' trip will be his last and longest to the Pacific rim as secretary of state. After Thailand, he plans to visit Malaysia, Indonesia, the Philippines, Hong Kong, China, South Korea, Japan and the new Marshall Islands Republic.

While in China, Shultz hopes to win assurances that the Chinese will not support any attempt by the Khmer Rouge to regain control of Cambodia. The communist group was blamed for the deaths of millions of Cambodians in purges and forced relocations in the 1970s.

The Khmer Rouge government was dismantled by Vietnamese occupation forces, which have now begun to withdraw from Cambodia.

Mother charged in deaths

WEST MEMPHIS, Ark. (AP) — Two children whose burned bodies were found near a dump were killed by their mother and another woman, authorities charged Monday.

Barbara McCoy, 40, the mother of the two children, and Mary Delois Williams, 32, were in jail without bond Monday pending a hearing Wednesday morning, Crittenden County Sheriff's investigator Charles Walker said.

Ms. McCoy, who is unemployed, and Ms. Williams, a teacher's assistant, were arrested Monday at the Motel 6 in West Memphis, where the two had apparently been staying for several days, investigators said. Both were charged with first-degree murder.

Walker and investigator R.D. Clay said authorities were alerted by a man who found the bodies of Bianca Tirado, 7, and Maximillion E. McCoy, 2, in plastic garbage bags just off a gravel road leading to a dump between West Memphis and the Mississippi River.

The children had been burned over 75 percent of their bodies, Walker and Clay said.

Walker said he suspects that the bodies were dumped Saturday night or early Sunday morning.

The children were slain elsewhere and dumped and set afire, Clay said.

Explosions destroy market

CHICAGO (AP) — A supermarket was destroyed by two explosions that erupted minutes after about 40 customers were evacuated because of the smell of gas.

Nine people injured in the explosions Monday were treated and released from area hospitals, said Scott LaGrecia, a fire department spokesman.

"We could smell gas real strong," said Jack Hewitt, a cashier at the Super Buy Grocery on the city's west side. "We were opening the doors to get some air when it blew up. I was knocked into the street."

The force from the first explosion blew out one wall of the two-story building, crushing three cars in the parking lot. Another explosion followed seconds later, arson investigators said.

"At this point, it looks like it could be a natural-gas explosion," said Detective Joe Campbell.

Derailment feast for birds

LA GRANGE, Ill. (AP) — A freight train derailment in this west Chicago suburb was for the birds, police said.

An Indiana Harbor Belt Railroad train heading for Blue Island derailed Monday morning, spewing tons of corn across the tracks, Lt. Loren Clark said.

"There's corn all over," Clark said. "The pigeons are having a field day."

Two cranes and two bulldozers were working to upright the six railroad cars that tipped over following the derailment, police Lt. Fred Goss said. Each car carried about 40 tons of grain.

There were no injuries in the accident.

By afternoon, four of the cars had been uprighted, but Goss said crews today would continue to clean up the mess and fix about 300 to 400 feet of damaged track.

Ambassador house burned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fire officials are investigating the cause of a fire that did extensive damage to the official residence of West Germany's ambassador to the United States.

The two-alarm fire broke out Monday in the attic of the home, but the ambassador, Gurjen Ruhfus, was in West Germany at the time and no one was injured.

Embassy spokesman Peter Mende said several embassy staff members arrived as the fire engulfed the roof of the building and they saved valuable paintings from the home.

Mende and fire officials said fire damage was confined to the attic and roof, but that smoke and water damage spread to the rest of the building.

Fire officials said they were not sure how the blaze started,

Teen back from Moscow

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — "I learned that my freedom was really something to value," says Carliana Stone, 19, back home after more than a month in a Moscow hospital.

She said Monday, a day after her return to Shreveport, that she "never appreciated my country until I came back."

Miss Stone and her parents went to Moscow hoping that a technique used by doctors there might repair the spinal injury that left her paralyzed from the waist down after a car wreck three years ago.

Court ruling puts smoking on run

The tobacco industry suffered a major setback recently when a federal court found a cigarette company liable for the death in 1984 of a New Jersey woman who had smoked for 42 years. Although the $400,000 awarded to the husband of Rose Cipollone was considerably less than what was being sought, it will almost surely invite countless lawsuits against the lucrative industry.

Lawyers representing Liggett Group Inc., Lorillard Inc., and Philip Morris Inc. were quick to insist that the landmark judgment was actually a victory of sorts because the court exonerated the companies of the conspiracy and fraud charges brought against them. Such contentions have a hollow ring for no other reason than that the jury has found, for the first time, that a plaintiff's death was due, at least in part, to smoking.

Apart from leaving the door ajar for mushrooming litigation, the award is a psychological blow to the tobacco industry, which has been increasingly on the defensive during the last 20 years.

The Cipollone verdict turned on Liggett's failure, prior to 1966, to warn the public about the dangers of cigarettes and the violation of its promise to produce a safe product. Particularly damning were the advertisements proclaiming L&M Filters to be "Just What the Doctor Ordered!" and ads that said "Nose, Throat, and Accessory Organs Not Adversely Affected By Smoking Chesterfields."

Still, the jury concluded that Mrs. Cipollone was 80 percent responsible for the lung cancer that killed her, inasmuch as she smoked heavily despite repeated warnings from the U.S. Surgeon General that smoking is hazardous to one's health. In doing so, the jurors underscored the reasonable principle that individuals are ultimately responsible for the consequences of their actions. That could make many lawyers hesitate before taking on the tobacco industry's formidable legal forces.

Although most people would sympathize with Mrs. Cipollone's medical ordeal, it should be remembered that she made a conscious decision to smoke cigarettes and did so long after tobacco-cancer statistics prompted Congress to mandate health warnings on cigarette packs. She chose, in fact, to smoke a pack or so per day until two years before her death.

The tobacco industry has yet to pay a dollar in damages, despite approximately 300 smoker lawsuits since the 1950s. Whatever damage suits may be brought against it in the future, it's doubtful that the $35 billion business will be undermined by the kind of product-liability losses that have driven companies, for example, involved in asbestos products and birth-control devices to the bankruptcy court.

Heckler's 1986 departure welcomed

DASHINGTON — During much of 1985, the White House staff struggled to rid the Cabinet of Margaret Heckler.

The secretary of health and human services was appointed in 1983 and quickly became an embarrassment to the administration — a token woman appointee who sources say was in over her head managing the nation's most expensive department.

The solution, arrived at in 1986, not only pushed Heckler out of the Cabinet, it pushed her out of the country. Today, Heckler is in political exile as the U.S. ambassador to Ireland.

U.S. affairs are relatively quiet on the Irish front, but HHS staffers still shake their heads over Heckler's track record at home. "When I heard she was going to be the ambassador, I predicted we'd be at war with Ireland within 18 months," recalled a top HHS official.

Donald Regan, former White House chief of staff, told us that Heckler was strictly a political appointee in the first place. "We did need a woman in the Cabinet at that point," Regan said, "and she was very frankly pushing for the job."

In 1983, Heckler had just lost her Massachusetts seat in the House of Representatives, and she wanted to remain in government.

"She tried, but she wasn't up to it," Regan said. "It became more and more embarrassing," as Heckler tried to manage a $280 billion budget and 130,000 employees.

In his book, "For the Record," Regan said Nancy Reagan was the force behind the ouster of Heckler. He claimed the first lady was uneasy about the appearance of Heckler's ongoing divorce.

Our associate, Jim Lynch, interviewed a dozen HHS staffers who worked with Heckler. Most of them speculated it was Regan who didn't want Heckler around.

In early 1985, while he was treasury secretary, Regan appeared on the NBC "Today" show and mentioned the Social Security Trust Fund, which is part of Heckler's department. Forever absorbed with her public image, Heckler was incensed that Regan had strayed into her spotlight. She reportedly chewed him out after the show. Later, a Regan aide called Heckler's chief of staff with instructions: Keep Heckler under control.

If the administration was looking for a reason to ease Heckler out, it didn't need a messy divorce or a spat with Don Regan.

In a recent interview with our associate, Dale Van Atta, Regan said it became clear that Heckler could not handle her job and was a potential liability to the White House. "I was getting outside advice from people who had to deal with the HHS (that) she just wasn't cutting the mustard and the whole thing was going down the tubes and we were going to have major scandals, so how to get rid of her? I tried to do it nicely."

Regan said that before Heckler could be pried from her Cabinet seat, she "really hacked up my reputation on the Hill." Regan took the brunt of Heckler's wrath, because President Reagan can't fire people. "I had to wear the black hat, because Ronald Reagan, so help me, cannot call a person in and say, 'Look, I'm sorry, but this thing just isn't working. We're going to have to part company.'"

Heckler's problems with managing a massive budget were compounded by personal quirks. She allegedly exasperated Regan with her inability to be on time. On one occasion, when she showed up late to a meeting at the White House, Regan was in the midst of telling a joke. He was allegedly miffed when President Reagan interrupted to acknowledge Heckler's arrival.

C. McClain Haddow, Heckler's former chief of staff, recalls her late entrance at the 1984 State of the Union Address. Haddow said Heckler was waiting for her driver to arrive with the right blouse.

Heckler's stint in the Cabinet was also plagued by her notorious indecisiveness. "When things went to (Heckler's) desk, they went into a black hole," said one HHS employee. "The staff would often just go ahead and move things without her."

One former top HHS official said Heckler ran HHS like a "second rate" congressional office. The source said he spent much of his time trying to find replacements that Heckler would approve for open jobs in the department. "It was always 'acting this' and 'acting that.' She couldn't make up her mind," he said.

We asked Heckler what she believes was the reason that she was removed from office. She "respectfully" declined to comment.

EARTHBOUND — The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has an earthly problem with the potential for grounding the space shuttle. There is only one Boeing 747 equipped to carry the shuttle from its landing strip in California to its launch pad in Florida. If that plane is grounded for mechanical problems, it could take 18 months to fix. But if NASA is thinking about buying another airplane, it had better start saving money — specifically on airline tickets.

Another View:

Drug company's objection lauded

While Congress is having overdue second thoughts about the wisdom of enlisting the military in the war on drugs, Eli Lilly & Co. is being vilified by the Reagan administration for having first thoughts about being conscripted into the drug war. It should be congratulated, instead.

The company is refusing to sell the government a herbicide, tebuturion, that the State Department wants to spray on coca fields in Peru. It says the poison, sold under the trade name Spike and used in this country to destroy woody plants in rangeland and alongside railroad tracks, has not been tested for use on cropland, as the State Department proposes.

State Department officials ridicule Lilly's concern and imply that the company is spinelessly worrying that Colombian drug lords will take reprisals against it. But independent environmental experts say the aerial spraying of the persistent herbicide over wide areas on which other crops are grown could have major and potentially devastating effects on Peruvian peasants and their environment. Those concerns are shared by Walter Gentner, former head of the government's coca eradication research project, who quit his job in protest over the State Department's failure to study the environmental impacts of its proposed program.

In bullying tones, the State Department accuses Lilly & Co. of being "conscientious objectors" in the war on drugs. When a government refuses to be conscientious, it is nice that there are people who still are.

Best gamblers know when to play or pass

NEW YORK — There stood Mikhail Gorbachev, delivering a three-hour harangue to the first emergency confabulation of the Communist party in a half century, pretending not to be in any way responsible for the economic mess the Soviet Union is in.

Growth is stagnant, inflation looms, food lines grow, but he fixes the attention of his nation and the world on the shifting of power; he pins the blame for the mess on long-dead dictators and the party that put him in place. The Soviet leader adopted the desperate strategy of Marshal Foch in World War I: "My center is giving way, my right is pushed back — situation excellent, I shall attack."

The unremarked fact, amidst all the wonderment at the new freedom to blame everybody but the boss, is that Gorbachev has been in power for three and a half years. The increased spending on armaments and the cost of empire is now his; the failure to make urgently needed changes in agriculture in 1985 did not happen under somebody else.

Westerners tend to think of his breathtaking reform "theses" as new, and we stand agog at his enlistment of the glasnost-hungry intelligentsia against his party rivals. But a resentful apparition at an old-line party newspaper says, in unintended biblical paraphrase, "For three years we hear 'Perestroika, perestroika' — but there is no perestroika."

How long the Soviet peoples will accept talk about the prospect of change in lieu of the results of real change in the one-party system is up to them. What concerns the other superpower is this: Can we help guide the Soviet Union toward more freedom at home and no more aggression outside its borders? Or would we, in the longer run, be subsidizing a system wholly inimical to freedom?

When asked if we were adopting a policy to encourage the Gorbachev reforms, CIA chief William Webster properly answered with the big question: "Should we be helping him?"

Poking around for guidance on that, I looked up my old boss, with whom I spent some interesting days in Moscow in 1959 and 1972. The last time I had a long talk with Richard Nixon was on the momentous day Saigon fell, and the occasion of the big Communist Party conference seemed appropriate for another visit. No interview; he has his own forums, from his London Times column to books like his latest "1999: Victory Without War". But the impressions I come away with are these:

1. A top Chinese leader was right when he said that if Gorbachev did not take the Deng road of economic enterprise, the Soviet Union would disappear as a great power.

2. Gorbachev's needs in arms control and trade should be closely tied to our interest in making his foreign policy less aggressive; linkage lives, and cooperation should be conditional on behavior.

3. The Soviet leadership has not given up its long-term goal of world domination. (Nixon differs with Mr. Reagan on that assessment.) Gorbachev wants to change the system only enough to make it work.

4. Therefore, we would run a risk of subsidizing our own destruction. It's vital that both George Bush and Michael Dukakis know we're gambling.

5. "I'd gamble on it." Gee, I dunno. Richard Nixon, as Ted Sorensen wrote last week, is the last president we have had with a sophisticated strategic view of the world. If he were doing the linkage-dealing — knowing what he now does about being burned by phony d'etente — I might go along, on an iffy basis, for a small piece of the action.

But Ronald Reagan, with his arm around Mr. Gorbachev and his smooth assurances that the evil empire was a thing of the past, has produced a sense of euphoria that is bad for gambling.

Bush has been swept along in this administration's second-term rush toward agreements, and Dukakis would probably be the most addicted of all to the Great Crash.

So now is the time for some big second thinking in the West. We do not want to miss the train as it leaves the station, but we do not want to finance a breathing space that enables adversaries to avoid genuine change.

It's a puzzle; nobody should be 100 percent certain, and the sharpest strategic minds allow for the possibility of entering quicksand. Let us wish Gorbachev well; let us see what he does to save money on aggression abroad and how he handles the coming convulsions in eastern Europe.

Distrust has been earned over four decades; now come the years for trust to be earned. The best gamblers — and Mikhail Gorbachev is evidently one — know when to play and when to pass.

Trip to 'Evil Empire' fails fond expectations

LENINGRAD — These are more notes of a man who only spent a week in Russia because he would rather trust than verify what the Soviets are doing.

Traveling first class in the Soviet Union is like traveling fourth class in the Soviet Union. My tourist bus drew up alongside a jammed city bus in Leningrad, and I saw a man with his nose pressed against the window talking to himself. I asked my guide what the man was saying. The guide shrugged his shoulders and said, "He is probably saying that he hopes his wife stood in line and got some sugar today so he could make vodka in the bathtub when he got home. That way he could forget that he didn't have a bathtub. But knowing his wife, she'll probably buy cucumbers instead, and if you had to eat cucumbers for 345 nights in a row, you would be talking to yourself on a bus, too."

There are certain scenes that stick in your mind when you are traveling. The one that remains most vivid to me took place at Peter the Great's Summer Palace outside of Leningrad, which had been almost completely destroyed during World War II and then rebuilt by the Russians. I was walking through one of the great halls talking to Jim Berry, the cartoonist, and Jim Boren, the professional bureaucrat, and his wife Alice, when a group of tourists angrily went, "Shahshahh." It turned out that they were German and became furious about the noise we were making because it prevented them from hearing their guide relate how the German army had destroyed Peter's palace.

Food still presents a problem for tourists as well as residents in the Soviet Union. There is a suspicion that all menus are decided by a Food Car in the Kremlin, and that the exact same meal is served to everyone, four hours after the waiter takes the order. There are no chefs left in Russia. There are just disinterested cooking bad meals while waiting to get their exit visas for Brooklyn.

The only tourists I observed who were able to handle the bad food, the heat, the long waits and abuse from hotel employees were little old American ladies in Nike tennis shoes. No matter how many times they were knocked down, they came up off the mat for another round, thus convincing Gorbachev once and for all that America was not a paper tiger.

Why are such large numbers of tourists fighting to get into the Soviet Union? It's part of glamor. The Evil Empire has opened its doors and all nationalities are dying to see what they have been missing. It turns out it is everything they thought it would be — and less. Because automobile production is down, the Soviet Union now has more alternate parking places than any country in the non-Free World. And the good news is that if you are a tourist, you don't have to worry about spending any money in Russia because there is nothing to buy.

But there are some disappointments. In the old days, the KGB followed all foreign visitors. If you were important enough, they would compromise you with a Russian bimbo, and then take pictures of the two of you with a hidden camera which were later shown in the first-run movie houses in Samarkand.

Now, however, because there are so many tourists in the country, the KGB has thrown in the towel, and the bimbo who picks you up in a bar is just that, and not a sexy agent provocateur of the second greatest secret service in the world.

Each person in our group was allowed to make one request of Soviet officials. "Please," I begged, "don't send America any more Russian taxi drivers — at least not until the ones you sent us already learn how to get from Kennedy Airport to Manhattan."

It was a short visit, but very pleasant. The one question we were constantly asked was, why did Americans like Gorbachev? Our answer was simple: "Because he doesn't look like a Communist."

My last act before leaving Mother Russia was to present a carton of cigarettes to one of my Soviet hosts.

"Thank you," he said. "Don't mention it," I replied. "My government has ordered me to bump off one Russian on every trip."

Poles face dilemma in deciding whether to leave country

By JOHN DANISZEWSKI

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Włodzisław Ruciewicz, 28, university graduate, husband and father of one, has a decision to make.

Should he leave Poland for good and seek a better life in the West, living among strangers and perhaps never being accepted as anything but an alien?

Or should he remain in the land of his birth and face a future of paralyzing bureaucracy, consumer shortages and struggle for a decent living?

He's not alone in his pondering. The same questions loom to a greater or lesser degree for virtually all of the 12 million Poles under 30 who must decide, after 43 years of communism and nearly a decade of economic crisis, whether there is any real reason to stay in Poland.

Polish-born Pope John Paul II has advised them that their place is in Poland.

The government angrily has accused Western countries of deliberately trying to draw away Poland's best and brightest.

But public opinion polls and sociologists indicate that young people are less and less hopeful for their future at home and that more and more of them want to live abroad for at least two years.

Ruciewicz, who earns his living as a free-lance English translator, says he looks in his address book and sees most of his friends already are in the United States, Britain or Australia.

"Not too many people are starving here, like in Ethiopia or are homeless in the sense that they have nowhere to go," he said. "But it doesn't have to be that drastic to make your life a living hell, right?"

He cites low wages and the lack of housing as two of the main problems.

"You've got something like 30 years to wait before you get an apartment (in a housing cooperative).

"If you want to work honestly — that is, come to work in your office, do your job and go back home — there is no way that you could ever in your life earn enough money to buy your own place. There are no jobs in Poland that could give you that much money."

Buying a modest house in the Warsaw outskirts costs at least 10 million zlotys ($23,000), while a couple working at decent jobs may earn 1.2 million zlotys ($2,800) a year. With no mortgage system for buying houses, a couple has save the entire sum before making the purchase.

Sociologist Jerzy Wertenstein-Zulawski mentions a welter of other factors contributing to a sense of hopelessness among Polish youth, including feelings of alienation and lack of control, a "hostile" school environment, oppressive laws and poor environmental and health conditions in Poland.

Citing an officially published study last year of Polish youth, he said only 10 percent feel they have a degree of control in their workplace, and the number of youths who believe the world will turn to communism is falling.

Young people also see their career prospects blocked by politics, Wertenstein-Zulawski said. In a country where 75 percent of managerial jobs belong to members of the Polish United Workers Party, as the communist party is called, only 1 percent of people under 35 have party membership cards.

Emigration is one option for the young, especially since Poland's liberalized passport policy allows large numbers to go abroad.

In the period 1980-87, about 365,000 Poles emigrated or legally extended their stays abroad, while 370,000 illegally failed to return from foreign trips, according to a recently published article in the Polish weekly

In a common scene outside the U.S. Embassy in Warsaw, Poland, Poles line up to apply for visas to travel to the United States. Polish authorities have expressed concern about the large numbers of young people leaving to escape the country's economic problems.

Odrodzenia. The number includes an estimated 22,000 engineers, 3,000 economists, 3,000 doctors and 4,000 scientists.

Wertenstein-Zulawski, who works for the Ministry of Culture, said some young people have turned to drugs, alcohol, hard-rock music, or cult groups practicing parapsychology or Buddhism.

He added that Poles now are seeing in their midst growing numbers of leather-jacketed Polish "punks," a movement brought back to Poland by young intelligentsia who traveled abroad and which now is rooted in to "making money" — for instance in boutiques, restaurants, shoe-sole manufacturing or tailoring services.

The problem is that running a business in Poland is almost impossible within the law, because of stranglehold taxes, regulations and inability to obtain materials through legal channels, Ruciewicz said.

"If you don't cheat here and there, you're ruined immediately... That makes you practically a criminal."

As part of its economic reform program, the government is starting to address the issue, promising to remove obstacles to entering businesses and do away with many regulations.

"If I were the government I would do everything possible to increase the private sector because this is the only thing for these energetic people, the people with initiative," said Wertenstein-Zulawski.

A statement in February by government spokesman Jerzy Urban assailing those who emigrate for better salaries has brought an angry and anguished response from many young people.

Piotr Stepniak, a junior faculty member at Poznan University who says he and his wife hold down six jobs, wrote in the weekly newspaper Prawo i Zycie (Law and Life) recently that the complaints about greedy young people show "the authorities do not want to notice the real reasons for emigration."

"The Polish crisis already has a chronic character," he said.

"Everything is provisional, relative and subject to reform. The highest ideals in this perspective lose their sense for the young generation. Today white is black, tomorrow red, the next day blue..."

Mexican show focuses on Mexican-Americans

By SERGIO CARRASCO

MEXICO CITY (AP) — "Chicanos," a 30-week series of government television programs, is showing Mexican-Americans in a new light in Mexico.

The intent is to ease resentments in Mexico toward Chicanos, as Mexican-Americans are called, and demonstrate their growing power in the United States, according to program directors.

"This ethnic minority in the United States is irreversibly destined to play a very important cultural and political role inside the great world power during our lifetimes," narrator Virgilio Caballero says in the first episode.

Chicanos often are criticized here for having left Mexico and, often, for not being able to speak Spanish, or speaking the language with an American accent.

Ricardo Ocampo, the "Chicanos" producer, said, "It's time to say on this side of the Rio Grande that Chicanos aren't what people have said of them. It's time to give them their just due."

"They love their country, the United States, but they don't forget their roots and we have to respect that," he added in an interview.

The Mexican government has tried intermittently for at least two decades to develop stronger ties with Chicanos, and some leaders on both sides of the border have favored promoting a pro-Mexico voting bloc.

But sensitive U.S.-Mexican relations — the U.S. government usually balks at what its sees as Mexican meddling in its internal affairs — and the failure by the many Hispanic organizations to resolve differences has impeded movement in that direction.

Many Chicanos struggling to be accepted in the United States want little to do with the land of their ancestors, although Mexican cultural values do remain strong among them.

"In many ways the Mexican culture is reproduced in the Chicano experience in the heart of the United States," Caballero said.

In the most recent acknowledgment of Chicanos by the Mexican government, Carlos Salinas de Gortari, the front-running candidate in this year's presidential election in Mexico, met with Chicano leaders in Tijuana, over the border from California.

"As Mexicans, we observe with pride the dynamism and vitality of your community within the United States," he told the leaders.

Armando Navarro, director of Impacto 88, an umbrella organization of Chicano groups from several U.S. states, said Chicanos should turn their numbers into political power.

"We think Mexico should study how to design its own politics in this area according to its own principles," Navarro said at the Tijuana meeting.

He said Chicanos could play an important role "in the job of explaining the Mexican reality to other North Americans."

Hispanics will represent 10 percent of the U.S. population by the year 2000 and 65 percent will be of Mexican descent, the majority of them Chicanos, according to Caballero.

He said the growing number of Latinos represents "a strong political, economic and cultural force."

Yet Latinos don't make up a "homogeneous block," he added, noting that Puerto Ricans and Cubans have their own interests in the United States.

Jorge Bustamante, director of the Northern Border College and columnist for the Mexico City newspaper Excelsior, said Chicanos have not taken advantage of their political power.

"Although still very far from achieving the political maturity to 'bloc vote' — as black and other ethnic minorities in that country do — the electoral importance of Chicanos is growing, above all in California and Texas," he wrote in a recent column.

Bustamante, however, expressed a widely held opinion in Mexico that many Chicanos "think like gringos."

He criticized a Chicano group in California for proposing that the U.S. government intervene to assure upcoming presidential elections in Mexico are clean.

"Being of Mexican descent or having the last name Sanchez, Chavez or Garcia, in the United States, isn't sufficient to understand what goes on in Mexico, and much less to feel solidarity with the majority of Mexicans."

According to Bustamante, "Many Chicanos love Mexico but, in wanting to help resolve the problems of our country, they think like any other gringo, which shouldn't surprise us."

However, Producer Ocampo said "Chicanos," a half-hour program produced by the federal Borders Cultural Program, has "strictly cultural objectives."

Environmental issues have low priority in Latin America

By CARRIE FIGDOR

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — After 15 years of breakneck population and industrial growth, Latin America is taking stock of its progress in environmental protection — and it is not happy with what it sees.

Following a landmark international conference in Stockholm, Sweden, in 1972 on the environment, Latin Americans set out with high hopes of promoting growth while protecting its largely untouched resources.

Throughout the area, special government ministries and departments were created, pollution standards were approved, and millions of dollars were spent on campaigns to protect the environment.

But the results "have not been what we would have desired," conceded Jose Lizarraga, director of the United Nations Environmental Program for Latin America and the Caribbean.

"In practice, environmental management lost the priority status it had been given, and in some cases was simply forgotten," he said in an interview. "Even while there has been a big advance in terms of consciousness-raising, there has not been such improvement in actual management."

Lizarraga met with Latin American officials involved with environmental issues for a conference here in April to assess the region's progress in protecting its environment.

The officials blamed the deterioration on burgeoning urban populations and industrial growth, which Lizarraga called "predatory and short-sighted."

In Mexico City, now one of the largest cities in the world, too many vehicles using leaded gasoline have led to air pollution so bad that people often can't wear contact lenses.

In just two generations, Brazil's population has changed from 70 percent rural to 73 percent urban, with sewerless shantytowns ringing major cities and an 8-million-unit housing deficit.

Most large Latin American cities have seen immigrants swarm in from the countryside to live in substandard housing without running water, sewage facilities, garbage disposal or paved roads.

But even widespread urban housing and health problems are surpassed by industrial pollution in terms of long-range damage, the environmental experts said.

While pollution standards and procedures for dealing with wastes are often on the books, enforcement is lax and penalties are often painless. In Venezuela the worst penalty for violating an environmental law is a 50,000-bolivar fine (about $3,400 at the official exchange rate) and three days in jail, according to Environment Vice Minister Carlos Barrios.

Treatment of industrial effluents often is inadequate or non-existent, and wastes are being dumped into rivers or lakes used for recreation and drinking, in violation of laws on the books.

Fertilizers, including some that are limited or banned in industrialized countries, also are being used to gain more production faster from poor land, the environmental experts said.

In Venezuela, before a clean-up effort began in 1984, Lake Maracaibo was nearly dead from the dumping of untreated waste from industries on its shores and from Maracaibo, a city of 1 million, which until recently had no sewage treatment plant.

According to Lizarraga and others, Latin America's poor record in environmental protection is mainly a political problem.

"Environmental repair is more costly than prevention, even though prevention can cost more in the short-term. The problem is that politicians have a short-term view," Lizarraga said.

Officials also note that Latin America's debt crises have made the situation worse.

Government spending for environmental concerns has been cut to pay huge foreign debts.

At the same time, the need to produce and export more, so that debts can be paid, has aggravated the region's tendency to exploit its natural resources as intensively as possible.

"Sometimes you lose hope," Lizarraga said. "But over the last 15 years there has been a process of maturity and consciousness-raising. What we have to do now is transform this consciousness into action."

Chinese lawyers rise to women's defense

BEIJING (AP) — A group of lawyers working out of a two-room office behind gray brick walls in central Beijing has come to the defense of the rising number of Chinese women who seek legal means to redress wrongs.

According to the law, women in China have equal status with men, but in reality women traditionally are often looked down upon. They increasingly face discrimination at work, particularly in hiring and promotions. Supervisors frequently reject women applicants on the grounds they are not as efficient or skillful as men.

Accounts of wife beatings appear regularly in the Chinese press, and cases of arranged marriages and girls being sold into marriage have resurfaced in the countryside.

The 18 lawyers at the Beijing 8th Lawyer Office — 17 of whom are women — exclusively help women facing such problems. In the past three years, they have counseled more than 3,000 women and handled nearly 400 cases in court.

On the walls of their small office near Tiananmen Square are reminders of some of their victories.

A set of calligraphy scrolls, commissioned by a grateful client who won her case against a bigamist husband, hangs just inside the door.

"Upright for life, your spirit lives as long as heaven and earth," it says in praise of the lawyers.

Established in 1985 by the All-China Women's Federation, the legal center is the first and largest of its kind in China.

Similar legal aid offices for women have opened in the southern city of Canton (Guangzhou) and in Sichuan province, but none has as big a staff or case load as the Beijing office.

"Everyone has the same goal," the deputy chief lawyer, Zhang Xiaoping, said of her colleagues. "We want to use our legal knowledge for the benefit of women and children."

In the cramped and badly lit office, Yu Lin, in her 60s, conducted an interview one recent day with a 47-year-old divorced woman who was fighting for custody of her 6-year-old son.

Nearby, Tian Hui, a 24-year-old lawyer, sat at a narrow, wooden desk carefully taking notes as a 39-year-old factory worker from the countryside talked about her dissatisfaction with a recent divorce settlement.

The client fought back tears as she related how her second husband asked for a divorce because his two children by a previous marriage were grown and he no longer needed her.

The district court had already granted the divorce, but she was unhappy with the financial settlement, which awarded her husband their six joint bank accounts, their apartment and furnishings and bicycle.

Women like these have a hard time getting legal aid, because China has a shortage of lawyers — only 20,000 to 30,000 for a country of more than 1 billion people, Zhang said.

Fees start at 50 fen (13 cents) for consultations and are never more than 2 yuan (54 cents). The basic fee is 1 yuan (27 cents), but about one-third of the women are too poor to pay even that.

Vietnamese sending children out to sea

By PETER ENG

PHANAT NIKHOM, Thailand (AP) — In March 1986, Nguyen Thi Xuan-Sac sent her 15-year-old daughter on a boat to Thailand. Four months later, she sent another daughter, then 11 years old, on the same journey.

Mrs. Xuan-Sac knew it was risky. Thousands of other Vietnamese boat people, including her own sister in 1981, have been lost at sea or attacked by pirates.

But she sent the girls off anyway in the hope they would eventually find new homes in the United States. The girls reached Thailand safely and now live outside Washington, D.C., in Lanham, Md.

"I felt that if I died, there would be no one to take care of my daughters," said Mrs. Xuan-Sac, whose husband fled Vietnam in 1978. "And Vietnam is very poor and my daughters could not study...I want them to be happy."

Mrs. Xuan-Sac now is a refugee herself in Thailand and wants to join her daughters in Maryland.

Her situation is similar to that of many other Vietnamese and Indochinese parents who have sent their children on the risky voyages across the Gulf of Thailand in hopes they will find new lives in the West.

Except for the United States, however, Western nations are reluctant to take the children.

International aid officials are at odds among themselves over the practice of parents sending their children away.

Some see it as cruel, but others say what must be taken into account is the Vietnamese value system that the future of offspring is extremely important.

Since the 1975 communist victories in their homelands, more than 10,000 Vietnamese, Laotian and Cambodian children under 18 years old have made their way to United Nations-aided camps in Thailand without parents or adult guardians. More than 1,000 of these "unaccompanied minors" remain in this camp near Bangkok, Thailand's capital. An unknown number are among about 400,000 Indochinese in other Thai camps.

Resettlement nations that refuse to accept the unaccompanied children do so partly in the belief the parents send them off as a precursor to their own expatriation and resettlement.

International refugee officials call the practice an abuse of international humanitarianism.

Australia, for example, maintains that resettling minors only encourages separation of families and countries should try to end the exodus.

Mrs. Xuan-Sac said in an interview life had been difficult since the communists in 1975 closed the company where she worked and ordered her family to toil on the land. She said she lost contact with her husband after he fled in 1976 and knows only that he is living somewhere in the United States.

She said she never intended to follow her daughters, but then couldn't bear the separation and made her way to Phanat Nikhom and now wants to join them in Maryland.

The United States, which has taken two-thirds of minors resettled from Thailand, said in a recent policy statement it considers the children of "profound humanitarian concern" because of their vulnerability during flight and in refugee camps.

It said the practice of purposely sending children off with the intent of following them is "abhorrent" but that if families are persecuted, the U.S. government is not concerned with whether parents used children in this way.

The United States attempts to resettle all minors with U.S. ties and whose families were persecuted. It also will take half of all other minors who demonstrate persecution in their homelands but have no U.S. links. It also will consider "parole" into the country those with U.S. links who don't qualify as refugees.

Some minors at a special center in Phanat Nikhom give accounts of enduring harsh ordeals after being sent off by their parents.

Danh Van Ha, about 7 years old, said he was on a 13-day, storm-tossed boat journey during which pirates robbed and raped passengers, including a woman who was taking care of him.

Another Vietnamese boy suffered severe asthma on his journey and was hospitalized for a long time at the camp.

Yet the children interviewed didn't question that their parents loved them, but instead worried about not being able to fulfill what they see as their filial duty of getting resettled abroad.

Bridget Messana, an American who runs the center for Thailand's Catholic Office of Emergency Relief and Refugees, said some children receive letters from parents angrily scolding them for "misbehaving and taking so long" to get resettled.

The children here play happily, nevertheless, but Ms. Messana said some possibly won't be able to get along with foster parents in the United States or deal with problems likely to arise when they're no longer in the protected environment of Phanat Nikhom.

Smelly fruit banned from subway system

SINGAPORE (AP) — Long banned from most hotels, hospitals and commercial airliners in Southeast Asia, the redoubtable durian is now barred from Singapore's new subway, the Mass Rapid Transport system.

The fabled, smelly fruit is back in season and signs at each subway station warn: "No durians are allowed on the MRT."

Eating and drinking on trains has been a no-no since the subway opened in November, but shoppers were allowed to carry foodstuffs.

So pungent is the durian, however, that extra precautions are deemed necessary to keep it at bay. Violators face the equivalent of a $250 fine.

"We all know that durians leave a lingering odor long after they are taken away, especially in an air-conditioned place, and the trains are air-conditioned," said an MRT spokesman.

"The smell is even offensive to those who love the fruit. They might like eating the fruit, but I don't think they like the smell too much."

Calling the spiky green fruit smelly does it an injustice.

It stinks.

Most descriptions of the durian's smell are unprintable, but one that is printable describes the fruit this way: "Rich brimstone musk, whispering of depravity and month-old eggs...Durian is to fruit what limburger is to cheese and pornography is to literature."

A British governor of Singapore in colonial days likened it to "carrion in custard."

The fragrance allows no indifference: You love it or you leave the room.

The telltale stench permeates sections of Singapore, Malaysia, Thailand, Indonesia and the Philippines now that the main season for the durian has started. Durians ripen twice a year, in December and January and in June and July.

The powerful aroma is the perfume of prosperity for growers and others in the trade. Prices vary widely according to freshness, weight, shape and where they are grown, a market that seems as delicately balanced as Wall St.

Three average durians sold for the equivalent of $5 as the season opened. Individual prime quality fruits fetched more than five times as much.

Thailand is the biggest commercial grower and old Asia hands usually rate Thai durians as tops in consistency and flavor. The most malodorous seem to be grown in the Philippines.

Malaysian devotees regard it as passion fruit capable of stirring deep emotions, and there are tales of patient Indonesians waiting days for durians to fall from trees, only to have to battle Sumatran tigers for possession of the fruit.

Folklore warns that durian is "heady" and should not be eaten with alcohol. Those who do so are said to risk exploding.

Related botanically to hibiscus, hollyhock, cotton and kapok, the durian is native to Malaysia and has been cultivated for centuries. Unlike the shorter Thai plantation version, trees in Malaysia and elsewhere are too lofty to harvest and the fruit crashes to the ground when it is ripe.

Fermentation that starts the moment it drops can change the flavor perceptibly within hours. The fruit spoils within a week and few will eat durian more than three days after they fall.

No junk food, the much-loved, much-hated durian is high in protein, carbohydrates and vitamins B and C. Experts say it thrives in soil with a high sulfur content, which doubtless contributes to the pungent odor.

FOURTH OF JULY FESTIVITIES

Midland ranch cowboys saddled up, came to town, and put on a working show — a ranch rodeo — Monday in celebrating the America's Independence Day and their ranch heritage.

Ten teams of ranchers and cowboys put on a competitive show of five events: wild-cow milking, calf branding, penning, roping and ranch-horse cutting.

"What we did here today is what we do everyday" on the ranch, said Windham Ranch cowboy Kirby Kaul.

Kaul, who rides for Midland rancher J. Kennard Windham, turned out to be on the overall winning team, headed up by Windham, in the first annual Midland Ranch Rodeo and Chuck Wagon Cooking Contest sponsored by the Midland County Livestock Association and other co-sponsors.

"Next year, we'll make it bigger and better," promised rodeo announcer Don Braly in his Western twang. "So, figure on coming back," he told the rodeo fans.

Braly, who is a field inspector for the Texas & Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association, plans to be on a ranch rodeo team next year and to carry out some of those cowboying skills he learned while cowboying for the Pitchfork Land & Cattle Co., 6666 Ranches and Waggoner Ranch.

Gathering smaller than expected

Rainbow Family members share prayers for peace at the annual "gathering of the tribes" at Angelina National Forest near Zavalla Monday. More than 4,000 people attended the ceremony.

ZAVALLA (AP) — Members of the back-to-nature Rainbow Family, holding one of their smallest gatherings in years, began leaving an East Texas national forest after their 17th annual "gathering of the tribes" culminated with prayers for peace and harmony.

The loosely knit group, which had predicted as many as 20,000 people would attend, drew 4,302 participants, according to federal marshals stationed in the Angelina National Forest, about 125 miles northeast of Houston.

The presence of officials wearing official clothing made it intimidating, said one Rainbow member who called herself Alita.

Participants had been dogged by repeated court challenges from the U.S. Forest Service, which has been insisting the Rainbow Family comply with regulations covering use of the forest area.

U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice finally ruled that up to 5,000 people could gather at each of three designated campgrounds, although most of the people selected one site known as Mud Flats.

The judge also ordered that the group each day buy 15,000 gallons of fresh water to be trucked to the campground.

Forest Service and health officials sought to prevent a recurrence of dysentery that struck some 6,000 people from 29 states after they attended last year's Rainbow gathering in North Carolina. Nearly 13,000 attended there.

On Monday, a rainbow appeared in the sky overhead and thunder and lightning crackled as the family's meeting culminated with a prayer vigil on the shores of Lake Sam Rayburn.

Family member charged in auto theft

ZAVALLA (AP) — At least one of the Rainbow Family members came to the 17th annual "gathering of the tribes" in a stolen car from Bossier City, La., authorities said.

Texas state police arrested Randall Harris, 26, in the Angelina National Forest in connection with the theft of a Cadillac from Bossier City, said Department of Public Safety Trooper Jimmy Kirksey.

Police locked up Harris in the Lufkin County Jail, but when the owner of the car arrived to pick it up the next day, he refused to press charges against Harris.

arriving in the forest since last week, reached the prayer site at dawn Monday and sat in silence, meditating around two banners as temperatures climbed to near 100 degrees.

One of the banners, emblazoned with a rainbow, read: "Silent Vigil For World Peace."

Many of the participants sat Indian-style, back-to-back, in various states of dress and undress. Some wore only mud.

"Back to front, yin to yang, a chain is built — a chain that binds in love and peace," said a Rainbow member who identified himself as Wu Qi. He continuously circled the gathering, wearing only a coat of mud that hardened on him as the sun baked him.

Other members who clothed themselves only in mud said it was meant to cleanse their skin.

"Women in Beverly Hills pay $300 for this and we get it for free," said a woman who identified herself only as Marcia from Arizona.

Just after noon, the group began humming a monotone while some members spread incense over the site.

The sky darkened as a thunderstorm approached and a rainbow appeared around the sun, known as a "Sun Dog," appeared and drew exclamations of joy.

"It felt so good," said Diana, who said she came from Cleveland, Ohio, to attend with a brother. "It made me cry. It's wonderful."

Then rains came to the parched area, which had seen little rain in weeks. The group broke out in a continuous chorus of the John Lennon song, "Give Peace A Chance."

Forest Service officials said this year's gathering was significant in that legal questions were addressed that will affect future such gatherings.

"Public health and safety, for example," Carl Gidlund, a Forest Service spokesman, said. "Now we have the Public Health Service in to ensure it's clean. It's a technical point, but now people have some protection. And for the first time, it's a controlled gathering."

Texas state police made about 100 arrests in the past two weeks, most for drunk and disorderly.

The most serious incident occurred Sunday night when a Rainbow Family member was struck by a four-wheel-drive vehicle being driven on the beach by a Zavalla man. The woman, Antoinette Radice, of Santa Cruz, Calif., who went by the Rainbow name of "No Guns," remained hospitalized. The driver of the vehicle was free on bond and charged with failure to stop and render aid, Department of Public Safety spokesman Jimmy Kirksey said.

Also Monday, a television crew from nearby Beaumont complained that family members doused their gear with water as they tried to take pictures. Damage was put at $50,000, Forest Service spokesman Gidlund said.

According to a court order, family members must be out of the forest by July 10 except for those assigned to clean the area.

Cisneros 'will be sorely missed,' Hispanic leader says

By SCOTT MCCARTNEY

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — For a decade Henry Cisneros has been the pre-eminent Hispanic leader — a successful mayor, an articulate speaker, a thoughtful politician, a powerful role model.

At the height of his prestige, Cisneros is moving to the sidelines, maybe even getting out of politics.

He's turned down an offer to speak at the Democratic National Convention, quashed any talk of the vice presidency and ruled out trying to spread his "San Antonio Miracle" with a statewide race in Texas in 1990.

Even as national attention turns to the power of Hispanic political clout this year, Cisneros says he may not seek re-election as mayor.

Cisneros said of his move out of the national arena, "It's a decision that I've made."

"For the moment my total and exclusive focus is on San Antonio issues," he said. "We're in a period of tremendous resurgence in San Antonio after the Texas slump and we have many, many initiatives here that are setting this city in position for the long run."

His attention is also focused on a year-old son with a congenital heart defect who will require extensive surgery at about the same time as the 1990 campaigning season.

Cisneros also talks regularly with two businessmen about joining them in a corporate venture.

To other Hispanic leaders across the country, not having Cisneros out front carrying the torch will be a setback.

"He leaves a huge vacuum," said Los Angeles City Councilwoman Gloria Molina. "His soft-spoken yet direct way is what we need and I don't know if anyone else can sit down with presidential candidates, labor leaders, or whoever and look them in the eye and not give in."

"As he steps to the sidelines, he'll be sorely missed," Molina said.

"Everyone thinks it's a shame but they respect his priorities," said Harry Pachon, director of the National Association of Latino Elected and Appointed Officials.

Cisneros, interviewed four years ago by Walter Mondale as a possible running mate, says he'll campaign for Democrat Michael Dukakis this fall, and he'll announce Sept. 15 his decision on a possible fifth term as mayor.

He often points out he's never put himself forward as any sort of official Hispanic spokesman or leader, and says he turned down a chance to address the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta because he just didn't have the time.

"To take weeks off to prepare a quality major speech and then deliver it just adds to the weight of what I need to do here on things I have promised to do," including projects on water, education, drugs and a domed stadium, he said.

University chancellor dies

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Guy D. Newman, 81, chancellor of Howard Payne University died in San Angelo Monday after a long illness, university officials said.

Newman served as president of the Southern Baptist university in Brownwood for 18 years before retiring in 1972, said current President Don Newbury. Newman had been chancellor since his retirement from the presidency.

Newman was born in Dorchester on Dec. 9, 1906. He is credited with founding the Douglas MacArthur Academy of Freedom there, an honors program for social sciences which has received national acclaim. A building on the Howard Payne campus was named in his honor.

Newman also had been a vice president at Baylor University in Waco and more recently has worked as a consultant to the administration there.

Funeral services are scheduled for 2 p.m. Wednesday at the First Baptist Church of Brownwood. Burial will be at Eastlawn Memorial Park in Brownwood.

Newman is survived by his wife of 50 years, Estelle Newman of San Angelo; a son, Guy Newman Jr. of Euless; three daughters, Pat Garner of Arlington, Charlotte Harris of Charles Town, W.Va. and Bobbie Kaye Strickland of Glen Rose; a brother, Wes Newman of Lewisville; three sisters, Mary Womack of Brownwood, Juanita Dance and Susie Murphrey, both of Dallas; 14 grandchildren and 14 great grandchildren.

Mother abandons children

HOUSTON (AP) — A 5-year-old boy found along a busy road with his two younger sisters told authorities that their mother abandoned them because she "was just tired of them," police said.

Houston police searched for the mother of Sonny Reyes and his sisters, Crystal, 3, and Anna, 2, Monday before she called and said she was only leaving them for her ex-husband to pick up, authorities said.

An off-duty Harris County constable retrieved the children on a service road alongside Hardy Toll Road in north Houston.

"The youngest kid was standing in the middle of one lane, as cars were whizzing by at about 55 miles per hour on the feeder," said Deputy Constable Sam Gentry, who said he saw the woman drive away after pushing the children and jumping into her car.

"They seem to be well nourished and emotionally well-adjusted," said Houston juvenile division Sgt. Cliff Barber.

"We saw no signs of physical abuse. It just seems like the mother had some emotional crisis she couldn't deal with," he said.

Fire ruled accidental

HOUSTON (AP) — A three-alarm blaze that forced about 120 people out of their apartments and sent nine firefighters to the hospital was ruled accidental by Houston Fire Department officials.

Investigator R.L. Parrish said an occupant of the apartment where the fire originated apparently was intoxicated and was smoking in bed when the mattress caught fire.

The Sunday afternoon blaze in northwest Houston started in a first-floor apartment at the two-story Tiffany Oak complex, District Fire Chief W.F. Steward said.

Nine firefighters were taken to Houston Northwest Memorial Hospital, where they were treated for heat exhaustion and released, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Dobie's home up for sale

AUSTIN (AP) — Twenty-four years after his death, and two years after a plan was proposed to turn it into a writer's center, author J. Frank Dobie's house is on the market again.

"It's enough to make a lover of Texas letters nervous," said Mike Cox of Austin, a Dobie admirer and author of a newspaper column on Texana.

The home near the University of Texas is owned by a longtime secretary to the Dobies. She inherited it. Real estate agent Chris McGregor said the owner is sensitive to the home's legacy and has put it on the market cautiously.

HOUSTON (AP) — The brother of a

Galveston executive kidnapped by guerrillas in Colombia last month says he remains optimistic about his brother's release and safety.

Charles Gambini said he has heard no word of his brother's whereabouts, saying, "The only thing we've heard is what's in the newspapers."

His brother, Giacomo "Jake" Gambini, 42, chief of operations for General Pipe Services Inc., was kidnapped June 24 by the pro-Cuban National Liberation Army, known by its Spanish acronym ELN, who are demanding a $2 million ransom, Colombian and U.S. authorities said.

"We're optimistic at this point,"

Father allegedly disposes of son's body

MOUNT VERNON, Mo. (AP) — The body of an 18-month-old boy was discovered along a rural road Monday after officials from Texas, the FBI and Lawrence County were told the child's father had dropped the body down an embankment after the child had died, authorities said.

Lawrence County Sheriff David Tatum said the body of Richard S. Mitchell was discovered clad in a blue sleeper outfit over an embankment along Route H, southwest of Gambini said. "Usually they don't hurt people. They just want the money."

General Pipe Services, which rents exploration equipment to some of the 20 foreign oil companies working in Colombia, refused to comment on conflicting news accounts of the kidnapping of Gambini and possibly of another General Pipe executive.

Houston private investigator Clyde A. Wilson said his firm "had a call from a relative of Mr. Gambini in Galveston, and we told him we'd be glad to help him on it." Wilson reported that the caller said he was going "to talk to the rest of the family and to Texaco," the oil firm for which General Pipe Services is a subcontractor.

"I would sure hope they'd let me have a shot at this one," Wilson said.

A Texaco spokesman said General Pipe Services had been contracted to the company's Colombian subsidiary — Texas Petroleum Corp. — at times during the last several years, but was not sure if Gambini was working for the company at the time he was kidnapped.

In 1974, Wilson flew to East Africa on behalf of Tenneco Inc., and obtained the release of three Tenneco employees and a Texaco employee taken captive by Eritrean rebels seeking independence from Ethiopia after their helicopter went down in a sandstorm.

INTERSTATE 44 IN LAWRENCE COUNTY.

The child's father, David R. Mitchell, 23, of Charleston, W. Va., has been charged in Texas with injuring a child, which is a felony, Tatum said.

A friend of the father's, Kelli D. Edison, 20, of Tunas, was also charged with injuring a child, Tatum said. He said Ms. Edison had told police she was with Mitchell when he disposed of the child's body.

Italian shoemakers facing slump

By KAREN BACK
Copley News Service

Italians are justly proud of this year's Olympic ski champion Alberto Tomba, and some are perhaps prouder still of Italy's well-earned reputation as home to some of the finest shoe manufacturers in the world. But despite their tradition of quality craftsmanship, these manufacturers are experiencing an economic tailspin that is a blow to their pride and their pocketbook.

Exports are down, imports are up. The United States garnered a 58 percent increase in sales last year while there was a 7 percent drop in exports out of Italy.

The loss of sales, plus the decline of the U.S. dollar, has stunned a lot of Italian manufacturers. Sitting at a table near a pair of the smart forest-green marbled suede pumps he manufactures, the well-dressed but depressed Nicola Salato, owner of Raphael (who sells to Bloomingdale's, Neiman-Marcus, Bonwit Teller), described the situation. "The customer doesn't want to spend a lot of money for shoes."

What tourists there are in Rome these days are spending their money on hotels and food. Salato's shops in prestigious areas of Rome used to do 50 percent of their business with foreigners. Now it's down to 25 percent. Like many of his peers, Salato tried to adapt by producing a less expensive line. "For this reason," he said, "for two years, we made plain pumps. The only difference was the material."

CNS Graphic

Still others, like Valentino and Armani, had their exhibits by invitation only at hotel sites far away from the convention site. Bruno Magli was safely ensconced in his office. There was a definite lack of communication at the convention. A formal press conference on trends was in Italian, and no one bothered to tell the several English-speaking journalists that a translation was available. Trends were, however, discernible on the convention floor. Hot colors for the fall will be black, brown, moss green and shades ranging from burgundy to plum. Those who want a romantic look can still totter on high heels, but in general, heels are small. Small curved heels, small cone heels and square '60s heels are in, as are very round, square or snip toes.

British influence is dominant in the new flat shoes. You'll have a choice of English tailored shoes, jodhpur boots, lace-up oxfords, Beattie boots and monk straps.

There are pinked edges on some men's shoes, ruffling on the edge of some women's and elastic insets on both.

A SPOKESMAN for Mario Giordano, a small operation that makes just 40 pairs of shoes a day, says "leather is out for evening, black grosgrain is in."

While that statement is up for debate, classic looks updated with ornaments like faux jewelry or fur are definitely in for fall.

The hot casual shoe in Italy today, especially for men, is the U.S.-made Timberland shoe. The hottest designer in Italy today is J.P. Tod, who has simply recycled American designs. Because he competes with Timberland, he has become something of a national shoe hero. However, there is little news in his line except for the rubber bumps on the soles of his driving shoes.

Perhaps the most innovative and colorful Italian shoe designer — in persona and product — is the impish Andrea Pfister, who opts for the glamor look. His fall line includes red leopard print ankle boots, red and black tromp l'oeil Mary Janes, red suede pumps with mink pom-poms and sexy red Carmen Miranda-type pumps with floral ornaments.

In his green suede pants, hot pink sweater and three gold necklaces with a single-carat diamond each hanging from his neck, Pfister points to his exquisite flowered tapestry slippers, hand embroidered by his partner in business and life, Jean Pierre, and says, "After making these, he gave up needlepoint."

Pfister, however, has never given up designing in the 20 years since he won first prize in a shoe competition, threw up his hands and declared, "This is my life."

Fashion houses singing praises of 'louis' heel

By FAITH KEENAN
Hearst News Service

Ready-to-wear fashion houses may not know whether their hemlines should be up or down this fall, but shoe designers are ready for fashion ambivalence and diversity with a heel that goes with anything — the lous.

That's "louis," as in XIV, since the heel made its fashion debut during the 17th century reign of that French monarch. In today's fashion circles, it's less elegantly known as the toilet bowl heel due to its resemblance to that plumbing convenience. Variations on that theme include the more refined "commode heel" or the French-influenced "bidet heel."

The time and the name have changed, but the lous' basic shape remains the same after three centuries. It flares toward the toe of the shoe as it descends, curving in at the middle, then out at the base.

Variations on the heel occur in height and thickness. But whether high, low, thick or thin, the always curvaceous lous works with hemlines above the knee, below the knee, and with pants, making it the preferred heel of many designers for fall 1988.

"Everyone is loving it," says Mike Thompson, vice president of Tolar, Inc., a Santa Barbara, Calif.-based shoe manufacturer. "Designers are looking for a new trend in shoes to stimulate sales."

Perry Ellis has already introduced the lous for spring collections.

"It's retelling very well," said Wilma Falkenstein, New York sales manager for the Perry Ellis shoe collection.

The lous not only works well with diverse clothing styles, say its promoters, but anyone can wear it. Although many designers and retailers believe the lous belongs on a lower heel height, the heel still adapts well to different heights and thicknesses.

The low, thick lous is sturdy and practical. A thin lous, or one with a drastic curve, can be delicate and sophisticated on a low-to-moderate heel, while a thick or thin, high lous can be fast and sexy.

"An older woman would wear a thick, chunky lous because they feel more secure in the sturdier heel," says Thompson. Many theatrical dance shoes have lous heels for this same reason.

The thinner lous is more typical of 1950s styles, while the thicker heel repeats the look of the 30s and 40s.

The lous of 17th century France was worn by the Emperor or himself and copied by his subjects, according to shoe historians. Since the king was a short man who favored high heels, a lous heel as high as 5 inches became the fad for aristocratic men. The heels were always red during the 1600s.

Running shoe designers seek 'energy return' of bare feet

Associated Press

The running shoe of the future will make the foot bounce off the ground as if it were strapped to a pogo stick.

The idea is to give shoes "energy return," according to an article in the current issue of Esquire, so as to make them every bit as efficient for running as bare feet.

The makers of running shoes still have nightmares about Ethiopian long-distance runner Abebe Bikila, who won a gold medal in the marathon at the 1960 Rome Olympics in his bare feet.

It is bare feet, not fancy shoes, that provide the ultimate in running efficiency.

The problem with even the best of today's running shoes is that in cushioning the impact of running, they absorb energy from the foot as it hits the ground. Energy absorbed is energy lost; the rebound is sluggish. Today's running shoes provide a comfortable run but it's a run on mush. Still, running shoes have come a long way and the industry is highly competitive.

At Adidas, they claim their founder, Adolf "Adi" Dassler, was the father of the modern running shoe. Dassler made Jesse Owens's shoes for the 1936 Olympics.

The Asics Tiger people in Japan, on the other hand, claim with some justification that their Tiger Cortez, introduced in the early 1960s, was the first contemporary running shoe.

As far back as the beginning of the century, Spalding was selling running shoes.

The first running shoes go back much further. The first pair was worn in 1865 by the fifth Earl of Spencer, great grand uncle of Diana, Princess of Wales. His runners had spikes that gripped the ground like claws.

In more modern times, until the early 1970s, the casual jogger had a simple choice between sneakers or track shoes. But as the jogging population grew to an estimated 20 million, shoemakers became more attractive.

They began to produce lighter, softer, more resilient materials.

In place of the old gum-rubber soles with herringbone pattern, they used stronger carbon rubber with elaborately sculpted treads.

They inserted shock-absorbing midsoles made of foamy plastics and surrounded the back of the shoe with hard, cuplike "heel counters" to provide stability.

Fine millinery enjoying renaissance

By WOODY HOCHSWENDER
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Reports of the comeback of the hat may be greatly exaggerated. But fine millinery — the art of making women's hats — is enjoying a renaissance in New York.

In an age of femininity and fear of the sun, a small group of young milliners is using old-fashioned technology to meet a growing demand.

Not yet a fad or a wave, hats are making a steady reappearance, especially at formal occasions and at the beach.

Eric Javits, a soft-spoken 32-year-old who takes classic millinery shapes and gives them updated twists, turns out more than 30,000 hats a year in his factory on West 38th Street in Manhattan.

"This past year has been a big jump over previous years," he said. Javits studied art at the Rhode Island School of Design, and his hats reflect his sculptural interests. The luxurious headpieces make a statement, one that has generally vanished from the language of clothes.

Among his exotic and romantic shapes are sequin-dot or turkey-feather "platters," a black velvet stovepipe with plaid bows and a velvet and taffeta "lampshade."

Anne Moore's elegant toppers have appeared in all the major fashion magazines. Madonna wears them. So does the Duchess of York.

MOORE RECENTLY made hats for the film version of "Slaves of New York," a Merchant-Ivory production of the Tama Janowitz novel. In the movie, Bernadette Peters plays a hat maker who is eventually famous.

Moore, 28, a graduate of Miss Porter's School and a former secretary in Vogue's Paris office, talks at a fast clip and could easily be a character in a Janowitz story herself. Her atelier at 132 East 61st Street (212-755-0048) is jammed with bird hats, bear hats, miniature hats, Mad Hatters and vegetable platters.

"People talk to you when you have a hat on," she said. "It's a conversation piece."

Especially if it's one of her strawberry-and-banana boaters or her broad black straw trimmed with a pearl branch and a swan swathed in white organza.

She makes custom hats that she said she sells to "society women, women who dress well and go to Ascot." Her hats are at stores including Bergdorf Goodman and Charivari, and she expects to sell about 2,000 this year, at from $150 to $600. Her dream is to open her own store.

Down a couple of steps from street level, at 156 East 64th Street, in a little shop with an arched wrought-iron window, Suzanne Dache follows in the tradition of her mother, Lilly Dache, the great milliner from the heyday of the hat, who made headgear for Marlene Dietrich and Greta Garbo.

Business at the Suzanne Dache shop has been good. She sold about 2,000 hats last year, from a little straw sailor hat at $55 to wide, off-the-face felt cloches, from $225.

"I can remember six years ago begging the stores to sell my hats," said Dache, who opened here a year and a half ago. "There's been a big change."

HER MOTHER has real hat perspective. Speaking from her home on the outskirts of Paris, Lilly Dache, now in her 90's, said: "Hats are back because feminine fashion is back. Skirt lengths no longer matter, so what's important is from the waist up."

As recently as 30 years ago, a hatless man or woman amid the hurrying human tides of New York would have been considered odd.

"Businesswomen in the 30's, 40's and 50's were always photographed wearing hats," said Caroline Renolds Milbank, former head of the costume department at Sotheby's and the author of "Couture" (Stewart, Tabori & Chang).

At one time the blocks from 34th Street to 40th Street between Fifth Avenue and the Avenue of the Americas were full of hat makers. Then Jacqueline Kennedy's hats, those little pillboxes, got smaller and smaller. Beehive hairdos got bigger and bigger. Hat makers began to disappear.

Retail hat sales went from about $300 million in 1986 to $350 million in 1987, said Casey Bush, director of the Millinery Institute of America.

A key figure in the millinery revival is Ann Albrizio, a hat designer for 35 years and an adjunct professor at the Fashion Institute of Technology.

She has introduced many of today's young milliners, including Kohn, to the craft. Albrizio has about 120 students in her courses; 12 years ago she taught a handful.

One of her most accomplished former students is Victoria DiNardo. In a tiny shop in SoHo, amid beautiful black-striped hatboxes, DiNardo strives for a level of craftsmanship and wearability that is rare. "The way things are put together is extremely important to me," she said.

AN OLD-FASHIONED kind of milliner who likes working with her hands, DiNardo, 31, designs and hand-blocks her hats in a loft workroom separate from her store. Custom orders, especially bridal hats, are the heart of her business. "I'm not a big-time person," she said.

Recently she produced a collection of 200 hats for the designer Donna Karan, which are sold at Bergdorf's and Saks. Otherwise, she sells exclusively through her retail store, at 68 Thompson Street, between Spring and Grand streets, 212-334-9615, which carries straw open-visors, and little cocktail hats, from $75 to $475.

Patricia Underwood, who calls herself an old-timer after 10 years in business, is less sanguine than other milliners about the prospects of the hat. "If anybody says hats are back, I say no," she said. "Life is not that formal anymore."

Nevertheless, she reported having "a banner bonnet year" and cited sun protection as an important factor in recent sales. Bergdorf Goodman, which began with 10 of her hats 5 years ago, ordered 500 this spring.

Men-only 'dress code' prevails, even in summer

By MARIAN BURROS
New York Times News Service

One well-known newspaper gossip columnist was famous for the line she used after she exposed a particularly juicy morsel in her syndicated column, "Ear." "Where," she would intone, tongue firmly planted in cheek, "are standards?"

That columnist, Diana McLellan, will be happy to know that standards are alive and well and living in America's toniest restaurants — at least where the clothing of male customers is concerned.

Whether it's 100 degrees in the shade or in the sun, as it was in many places last week, some restaurants still refuse to relax their dress codes. From Ambria in Chicago to the Ritz-Carlton Buckhead in Atlanta, from L'Orangerie in Los Angeles to Le Bernardin in New York, the word is out: for men it's jacket and tie, no exceptions. Well, almost none. For women, however, almost anything goes.

Some restaurant managers aren't happy with these regulations, but rules are rules. "I hate dress codes," said James Hutton, manager of the Willard Hotel in Washington. "It's 100 degrees down here today, and it doesn't make sense in Washington, but Washington is quite conservative."

Hutton blamed the British influence for this formality. "In a three-star restaurant in France, if you are casually dressed without a tie, but nicely dressed, there is no problem," he said.

MAYBE BACK in France, but when the French come to the United States, it's do as the natives do.

"If we do not require a jacket and tie, everyone will come with the shirt open to the stomach," said Maguy Le Coze, who owns Le Bernardin with her brother, Gilbert. "That is why we have to be so strict."

It is also why their restaurant, and others with similar dress codes, often provide jackets and ties to men who arrive without.

If you think that wearing a pullover sweater excuses you from wearing a tie, think again. Le Bernardin will provide shirts "clean and in several sizes," Ms. Le Coze said.

The Mansion on Turtle Creek in Dallas, a hot restaurant in a sizzling town, won't seat men without ties. "We cannot downgrade the restaurant by letting someone in, even if they have a jacket on, if their shirt doesn't have a collar," said Alex Jurek, the restaurant's maitre d'hotel.

"Other customers come into the dining room and see that someone isn't dressed properly and the next time ... " Jurek said. "We didn't finish his thought, but the implication was clear: If the restaurant makes an exception, before long everyone will arrive in cutoffs and sneakers."

A 'dress code' for men requires them to wear jackets and ties in many restaurants, no matter how hot the weather.

Not all restaurants are so strict or inflexible. "Without a jacket, definitely a man cannot come in," said Alfonso DeLucia, the maitre d'hotel at Le Marguise in the Lafayette Hotel in Boston. "Without a tie, it's marginal. If a man is not wearing a tie but is very well dressed, if he doesn't look that bad, sometimes I'll let him in and maybe put him in the corner of the room."

DeLucia's AMBIVALENCE about tielessness is easily explained: "We work in tuxedos and we can keep cool," he said. He admitted, however, that getting to the restaurant in city heat is a trial.

As a group, restaurateurs seem to have considerable faith in modern technology. Of nine restaurants surveyed, only the Lafayette in the Drake Hotel in New York admitted that when it's 95 degrees outside and a restaurant is packed, there is only so much that air-conditioning can do. The Lafayette's manager, Nicholas Deeppen, has been known to make exceptions under such circumstances because, he said, the dining room has a very low ceiling and the temperature in some areas is less than comfortable.

"The men have to come with a jacket and tie," he said, "but if they complain, I tell them it's O.K. to take off the jacket."

DEAR ABBY

Posting of students' grades cruel, illegal

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You recently published a letter from a parent who had attended an open house at her daughter's school where an English teacher had posted all the students' names and their grades for public viewing.

Van Buren

You were correct to say that it was improper as well as cruel, but did you know that it also violates federal law?

The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act, commonly known as the Buckley Amendment (giving credit to its author), forbids educational institutions at any level from releasing any information about any student without written permission. (The exception is for the release of certain "directory" information. Most states have similar laws in addition.)

I find that most teachers and many administrators are not aware of the provisions of this important statute, and do not realize that they should not discuss students with anyone who does not have a right to information according to the law, or without written permission of the parent (or the student if he or she is old enough). — NANCY HABLUTZEL, Ph.D., J.D., CHICAGO

DEAR DR. HABLUTZEL: Add my name to the list of those who were not aware of the above-mentioned statute. Thank you for educating me and countless others. Teachers, take a lesson.

DEAR ABBY: Can you stand one more letter about original works of art given by the artist to friends who stick them away in a closet never to be seen again?

I happen to be an artist, and a fairly good one. I've given some of my paintings as gifts, and if I go to the home of someone to whom I've given a painting and I don't see it displayed anywhere, here's how I handle it: I ask if I may "borrow" my painting for an "art show." (I even offer to pick it up.)

Then I keep it "indefinitely." Of course, should I be asked to return it,

I would, but so far, nobody has asked. — PRIDEFUL ARTIST IN NEW MEXICO

DEAR ARTIST: My mail has been running 24-7 in favor of artists saying they would not be offended if the recipient asked if the painting could be exchanged for one that would be more appropriate for their decor.

Almost all artists said that rather than have their work hidden in a closet, they would prefer to have it returned.

Few people realize that an original painting — valuable or not — is part of the artist's divine inspiration and represents time and talent (be it ever so modest), and should be respected as such.

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from the lady who didn't want her apartment sprayed for bugs because clearing the shelves was too big a job for her. (She was an older woman who also worked.)

Friends of mine just moved into the apartment of a woman who had never had her place sprayed for the same reason. They said they had seen roaches hiding in the cupboards, behind the wallpaper and in every nook and cranny, and those bugs were so used to people they were almost domesticated.

Isn't there a volunteer organization in her city that could send someone to help her clean out and restock her shelves? — JOE HOLM, LINCOLN

DEAR JOE: She didn't disclose her location, but any volunteer organization that provides that kind of service deserves to be thanked publicly. Who and where are they?

DEAR ABBY: Thanks for telling "J.M.B." that there was nothing weird or abnormal about eating only one thing at a time. I've always eaten that way and I'm 59 years old. I like to savor the flavor of everything I eat. If I wanted to combine all the flavors of baked ham, sweet corn, potato salad and stewed tomatoes, I'd put them all in a blender, liquify the whole mess, and drink it! — ME TOO IN HORNELL, N.Y.

Advice helps keep black-and-white shoes shining

By CARRIE DONOVAN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Nothing is quite as spiffy in summer as a pair of black and white shoes. Any style that combines sharp black with matte white — spectator pumps or Chanel sandals, perhaps — gives a certain snap to an outfit.

The problem is that this combination can be devilish to keep clean. Here are some tips to make the upkeep easy; a shoemaker might not approve, but never mind: they work. To remove smudges from the white sections, spray a light dab of Fantastik cleanser on a piece of cloth and gently rub it over the surface.

For scuffed spots on black heels or toe tips, take a black felt-tipped pen and ink in the small areas of exposed leather. If rain washes the ink away, redo the spots when the shoes are dry.

Black patent leather can be wiped clean with a dampened paper towel. In fact, it's a good idea to "shine" the patent leather parts this way before each wearing. It takes about a second.

A good way to remove gum or other gooey stuff stuck on soles or heels is to scrub it with a cloth lightly soaked in nail-polish remover. But do this in an airy space, as you don't want to asphyxiate yourself.

Hat's appellation derived from play

Copley News Service

The fedora, a soft felt hat with a brim that can be turned up or down, and a rather low crown creased lengthwise, derives its name from that style of hat worn in an 1882 play, "Fedora," by French playwright Victorien Sardou (1831-1908).

Can Number Five and Ben make it in the big, bad city? Keep your wires crossed.

Edberg outlasts rain, Becker to win Wimbledon

Stefan Edberg...takes title from Becker.

By PETER ALFANO
N.Y. Times News Service

WIMBLEDON, England — Maybe it was the rain that doused Boris Becker's flame, the starting and stopping these past two days, giving him and Stefan Edberg the look of volunteer firemen answering a series of Wimbledon false alarms. Maybe, as Becker suggested, he expended too much energy and emotion when he beat the defending champion and then the No. 1 player in the world in the quarterfinals and semifinals, matches that were like finals for him.

But as Becker stood dejectedly with his arms folded on Centre Court Monday, watching the postmatch ceremony for the first time in a supporting role, it must have crossed his mind that the better player was Edberg, whose game and low-key manner were more suited to the grass courts on an otherwise chilly, dreary day.

Edberg finally lived up to expectations, fulfilling his primary goal this year. At 22, the blond Swede with the pleasant disposition (which some have mistaken for a lack of resolve) is the Wimbledon champion, having defeated Becker, 4-6, 7-6, 6-4, 6-2, in the first men's final to be played over two days.

Edberg is the first Swede to win Wimbledon since Bjorn Borg captured the last of his five singles titles in 1980. In a rendition of Borg's famous postmatch ritual, Edberg celebrated by dropping to his knees, with his arms outstretched, tipping over on his back. When he stood, he was greeted by Becker, who had climbed over the net to extend his congratulations.

"It's hard to believe I really won it," Edberg said. "This is something I've worked a long time for. It was my target this year. It's a fantastic feeling that hasn't sunk into my system yet."

During the ceremony, Edberg walked around the court holding the Challenge Cup, grinning, shaking his head in disbelief. When he walked to the side where Becker stood, the 20-year-old West German made a request.

"I asked him if I could touch the trophy, to know what it feels like," Becker said.

Becker had his chance to raise the trophy in 1985 and '86. He dedicated this year to reclaiming it after being eliminated in a traumatic second-round loss in 1987. Before the final, he said that he felt he was psychologically stronger than Edberg, whom he had beaten in 9 of 14 matches.

His road in the top half of the draw, however, was not easy. He defeated Pat Cash of Australia, the defending champion, then Ivan Lendl, No. 1 in the world, in a match also lasting two days because of rain. Edberg was one hurdle too many, a superb serve-and-volleyer who is at his best on grass.

"I'm a human being," Becker said, "and when you beat the defending champion and the No. 1 player, you say: 'What am I doing out here? I've done everything I had to do to win the tournament.'"

The match had progressed only five games Sunday when a halt was called.

Play resumed at 1:05 p.m. Monday, 2 hours 5 minutes after the scheduled start. The rain held off long enough for Becker to break Edberg and lead, 5-4. Following another lengthy delay, the players trudged back onto the court.

This was one instance where Edberg's dispassionate manner worked in his favor. During the first delay Monday, Edberg was eating ravioli with his coach, Tony Pickard, and his agent, Tom Ross, when he noticed that the sun was shining. "I better stop," he said, then calmly prepared to play.

Although Becker held serve to win the first set, Edberg's play began to improve. He does not have a big booming serve like Becker's, but he places it well. What makes Edberg so effective is his net play. He was like a wall Monday, gradually frustrating Becker.

Becker began stomping in the backcourt, pleading to himself, gesturing, even throwing his racquet, drawing a warning from the chair umpire, Jerry Armstrong.

There were two key points in the match, both in the second set. At 3-3, Becker had a break point when Edberg double-faulted for the fifth time. But Edberg held, winning the game with an overhead winner.

In the tie breaker, Edberg took the first 5 points, and eventually won, 7 points to 2, closing out the set with a service winner. There was a dramatic mood swing in the match, with Becker struggling to hold serve and Edberg sailing along, hitting volley winners.

"I just felt that I could hardly miss the ball," Edberg said.

As the end drew near and his serve became shaky, Edberg fought off his anxiety at the net, never losing his touch. He was relieved, though, when Becker charged in for a short forehand and smacked the ball into the net on match point.

In the men's doubles, Ken Flach and Robert Seguso repeated as champions, defeating John Fitzgerald of Australia and Anders Jarryd of Sweden, 6-4, 2-6, 6-4, 7-6.

In the women's doubles, Steffi Graf of West Germany, the singles champion, and Gabriela Sabatini of Argentina, defeated Larisa Savchenko and Natalya Zvereva of the Soviet Union, 6-3, 1-6, 12-10.

No fireworks for Angels

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Revitalization, reassessment and a little bit of luck helped Wichita Pilot pitcher Terry Gilmore win his first game in more than a month Monday at Angels Stadium.

Gilmore, 7-5, won his first game since June 3 with a complete game six-hitter in Wichita's 15-1 romp over the division-leading Angels.

While the lopsided win may have been good for Pilot egos, the Kansas still trail Midland by five games in the Texas League West standings, as does San Antonio. Meanwhile, second-place El Paso moved to within four games of Midland with a Monday win over San Antonio.

The Angels pounded Gilmore for 14 earned runs in his last two games, much as they have been inflating earned run average statistics for the rest of the Pilot staff during a red-hot batting streak. But Gilmore put an end to the Angels fun by allowing only one baserunner as far as third base after the second inning.

MONDAY'S game was the first since last Thursday that the Angels were unable to pick up at least 10 hits.

"We hit the ball hard at people sometimes," Midland skipper Max Oliveras said. "He hit the right spots most of the time."

"When you get good pitching, the bats look bad."

Gilmore said he found his stride after experimenting with his mechanics for the past several weeks.

"I wasn't pitching, I was throwing," he said. "Midland is an incredible hitting team, so you have to get the ball where you want it instead of throwing it by them."

That he was doing Monday night.

"I was locating my fastball, and my curve was working real well."

Midland's Jeff Manto and Tom Alfredson stroked back-to-back doubles in the second inning for the only Angel run. But that second-inning outburst wasn't even enough to make up for a five-run first inning by the Pilots, much less provide insurance for what Wichita batters did in the middle and late innings.

THE PILOTS scored two in the fourth, three in the fifth, two in the sixth and three in the ninth.

Collins, 5-7, allowed hits to five of the first six batters he faced in the first inning. Included in the Pilot rally was a RBI double by Jeff Yurtin, a two-run single by Chris Knabenshue, a run-scoring single by Carlos Baerga and a sacrifice fly by Jim Tatum.

Eight of the nine Wichita batters drove in at least one run, led by Knabenshue with five RBI. All nine Wichita batters hit safely, as the Pilots finished with 20 hits.

Not even "stopper" Norm Carrasco could deal with the Pilots in his second relief stint in three days. The Angels' regular second baseman retired the first four batters he faced to run his streak of batters retired to 13 straight, but the Pilots then rapped six straight hits in the ninth inning, including a three-run homer by Knabenshue.

One thing's for certain, the Angels are sick and tired of seeing Wichita uniforms, despite their tremendous success against the Pilots over the 10 games before Monday.

"I don't know who made the schedule, but we get bored playing these guys over and over," Oliveras said.

It's almost over, though. After Midland's Steve McGuire, 4-9, goes against Wichita's Mike Costello, 8-4, in tonight's 7 p.m. start, the Angels start on a 10-day road trip to Tulsa and Shreveport. They won't return to Angels Stadium until after the T.L. All-Star Game on July 18.

ANGEL NOTES: Midland catcher-first baseman Erik Pappas received TL Batter of the Week honors for hitting .538 with two homers and five RBI during the week ending Saturday. Jackson's Blaine Beatty was named Pitcher of the Week.

Pappas had raised his batting average to .325 going into Monday's game, but he has not yet accumulated enough at-bats to qualify among the official league leaders.

Manto continued his torrid pace with a two-for-four night Monday. The Midland third baseman has put himself in line for a possible Triple Crown, should league-leading batter Mario Monico go into a deep slump or Manto get even hotter.

Monico led the league with a .359 mark, while Manto was tied for fourth at .315. Second-place Jim Thomas is playing for Edmonton now, however, while third-place Angelo Cuevas of Jackson has been plagued by injuries.

Manto enjoys a sizable league RBI lead, and is tied for the TL homer lead with El Paso's Greg Vaughn.

Darkhorse contender Chicago has strange Achilles Heel

Quickies from here and there and whatever happened to Steve Alford?

Guard Sammy Simpson won't return to UT-Arlington. He'll go to South Plains College.

An investigation, please. The Cleveland Cavs of the NBA posted their first winning year in 11 seasons and won't raise ticket prices?

Strange, isn't it, the Chicago Cubs emerging as a darkhorse pennant contender and the team's big question mark is its relief pitching. This from the team that has had Bruce Sutter, Lee Smith and Donnie Moore.

The Chicago Bears are in line for a privately-owned 75,000-seat stadium on the west side, the Chicago White Sox are in line for a new home and all the Chicago Cubs get are lights...well, let's hope that's all they get.

The 1989 Army-Navy game will be played at East Rutherford, N.J., marking only the second time in 44 years the game has been played outside Philadelphia.

Quickly now, where was it played in that other time and, just for kicks, where was it played prior to that 44-year stretch, and a hint, why?

In 1989 Notre Dame and UCLA will probably meet in the Kickoff Classic at Giants Stadium (East Rutherford). And did you know that when Texas A&M faces Nebraska in the Kickoff Classic this year, A&M will not have to share its $500,000 payment with the rest of the SWC. With an opening game run of Nebraska, Alabama, LSU and Oklahoma State, that's little enough compensation.

Stephanie Givens, says her sister's husband is abusive...that second is from Michael Spinks.

Stan Holmes, one of the tri-Texas League home run leading trio from Midland last year, couldn't buy a homer at Edmonton for two months, then, POW, seven in eight games.

The incentive clause that rewards Pitt Coach Mike Gottfried for the number of football players graduated doesn't impress UT-El Paso Coach Bob Stull. "Unfortunately, the bottom line still is that if you don't win, you're fired."

Buffalo, ambitious for major league baseball and playing in spanking new Pilot Field, built with major league expansion in mind, already had broken last year's record attendance (497,750) with 507,834 fans.

Audrey Bruce, the No. 1 draft pick of the Atlanta Falcons, isn't letting his $4.1 million contract go to his head. "I did treat myself to a new BMW, but I traded in the one I had and into the Campbell Conference finals against the Boston Bruins.

There had been speculation McMullen might be considering a similar change, despite the fact Lanier's contract runs through the 1989 season. But McMullen says much of the responsibility for improving the Astros' fortunes rests with the players themselves.

"For a long time I had a dead hockey team and this year it caught on fire," McMullen said. "The difference in this year's hockey team is that the players wanted it more than anyone — and that's really what the Astros have to do right now. The players have got to be the ones who want to win."

In a telephone interview from his New Jersey home, McMullen told the Houston newspaper it is important for the Astros to develop a positive attitude.

Quickie Quiz: Last time Army-Navy played outside Philadelphia was a few years back when the service classic was played in the Rose Bowl, Pasadena, Calif. And in World War II to restrict travel, the game was played home-and-home at West Point and Annapolis.

Clemens notches 12th hill victory

From Wire Reports

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Dwight Evans had a single, triple and inside-the-park home run and Wade Boggs had four hits, enabling the Boston Red Sox to survive a triple play and beat the Kansas City Royals 9-2 Monday night.

Roger Clemens, 12-5, scattered nine hits and struck out eight in eight innings as the Red Sox avoided a four-game series sweep. Clemens is 9-0 on the road and George Brett's two-run single in the third produced Kansas City's first runs off him in 31 2-3 innings. Bob Stanley pitched the ninth.

Loser Ted Power, 4-2, who came off the disabled list earlier in the day, yielded five runs and seven hits in two innings.

Boggs raised his major-league-leading batting average to .359 with two singles and two doubles in five at-bats. He and Evans each drove in three runs and scored three before a crowd of 40,804, Kansas City's largest since 1985.

Boggs doubled leading off the game and Evans hit the first inside-the-park homer of his 16-year career, a high drive which fell behind right fielder Danny Tartabull.

In the fourth, Evans walked and came around on singles by Mike Greenwell and Ellis Burks just before the triple play.

Jim Rice hit a sinking line drive to center field. With the runners moving, Willie Wilson made a shoestring catch and flipped the ball to second baseman Frank White for the second out. White's relay to first baseman Brett completed the first triple play against the Red Sox since Sept. 4, 1965 and the Royals' first since May 3, 1985.

Astros' Hal Lanier could be next casualty

HOUSTON (AP) — Manager Hal Lanier's job is not in jeopardy as the result of the recent tailspin that dropped the Houston Astros into third place in the National League West, Astros board chairman John McMullen says.

"There's been no consideration at all that (changing managers)," McMullen told The Houston Post Monday. "It hasn't even crossed our minds."

"Lots of people fire managers in order to get a new attitude going, but I don't think it's that effective. Hell, he's not the one who's not hitting the ball."

McMullen faced a similar situation last winter when his New Jersey Devils were mired in last place in the Patrick Division of the National Hockey League. He fired Doug Carpenter as the Devils' head coach and replaced him with Jim Schoenfeld, who guided the team out of the cellar and into the Campbell Conference finals against the Boston Bruins.

There had been speculation McMullen might be considering a similar change, despite the fact Lanier's contract runs through the 1989 season. But McMullen says much of the responsibility for improving the Astros' fortunes rests with the players themselves.

"For a long time I had a dead

hockey team and this year it caught on fire," McMullen said. "The difference in this year's hockey team is that the players wanted it more than anyone — and that's really what the Astros have to do right now. The players have got to be the ones who want to win."

In a telephone interview from his New Jersey home, McMullen told the Houston newspaper it is important for the Astros to develop a positive attitude.

Oakland's Glenn Hubbard collides with Cleveland catcher Andy Allanson at home plate. Hubbard scored when Allanson dropped the ball during Monday's 16-inning game.

JIM MURRAY

Baseball's 'Say Hey' kid tells how he played game

The man sitting across the table from me was the greatest ballplayer many of us will ever see. There were guys who got more hits, guys who got more homers, guys who stole more bases, batted in more runs.

Murray

But nobody ever put it all together the way Willie Mays did.

Nobody who ever put on a glove did the things with it he did. He made center field the Bermuda Triangle of baseball. He caught and hit more home runs than any other man who ever played the game.

You look at Willie Mays and you know he couldn't be anything else but a ballplayer. God anticipated him. The body is hard and muscled and compact, a man's body. But the face is a little boy's. You want to buy him a balloon.

Ty Cobb played out of hate. Jackie Robinson wanted to get even. Willie Mays played out of love. He could light up a ballpark.

NOT MANY people know it but Willie was almost a loner off the field. He led the league in dining alone — in his room. But Willie came alive when the stands were full, the game was on and he stood in center field, about to give some of the greatest solo performances any show business has ever seen.

What center stage was to Caruso, center field was to Willie Mays. It wasn't a game, it was a symphony. If it stayed in the air, Willie caught it or hit it. Energy just rippled off him.

Don Drysdale used to say of Henry Aaron that trying to smuggle a fast-ball past him was like trying to smuggle sunrise past a rooster. Well, smuggling a curveball by Willie was like trying to sneak a steak past a lion.

He once got four home runs in one game and narrowly missed a fifth. He stole five bases in one game and once threw a runner out at every base, including first and home, in one game. He didn't play baseball, he re-defined it.

"There are three leagues," Herman Franks used to say, "the American, the National, and Willie Mays."

I NEVER saw Willie Mays make the third out in the last inning of an important game.

In the 1962 playoffs against the Dodgers, Willie came to bat against the Dodgers, who were leading 4-2, with two out in the ninth. Willie smashed the key single that kept the rally going and, eventually, the Giants won the pennant.

In the World Series that year, Willie came up in the bottom of the ninth in Game 7 with two out and Matty Alou on base and smashed a double to right that I — and Willie — always thought should have tied the score. But Alou wouldn't chance it, with Willy McCovey and Orlando Cepeda due up, and stopped on third.

Willie's numbers were Ruthian — 660 homers, 3,283 hits, 1,903 runs batted in, 2,082 runs scored, 523 doubles, 140 triples. The most Mays ever got for those kinds of aggregates was $180,000 a year. Willie never held out. He was afraid they wouldn't let him play.

Willie didn't play with the loping grace of DiMaggio or the effortless glide of Henry Aaron. Willie went after the ball like a kitten after yarn. Willie gave them a show for their money.

"I like to feel I played for the fans," he says. "I loved the fans."

He purposely let his cap fly off, he circled under a ball to get leverage for a throw, he was like a juggler who pretends to drop plates to get your attention. His basket catch was just part of the repertoire. Willie could have caught the ball with his feet if they wanted him to.

WILLIE HAS a new book out, "Say Hey, the Autobiography of Willie Mays," written with Lou Sahadi. It's as much fun as watching Willie pull down Vic Wertz's line drive with his back to home plate 450 feet away, or seeing Willie pulling Sandy Koufax's fastball up in the Candlestick wind.

There is a tendency in sports literature — if (ital) that's (unital) not an oxymoron to end all — today to do what White House memoirists are prone to do — scarily the great industry they're leaving.

Willie Mays will have none of that. It's not that he won't chronicle the disagreements he had with fellow players, managers like Clyde King, or even owners. It's just that Willie loves baseball and feels he owes it something besides the back of his hand.

Willie's book is about the joy of baseball, not the wars. It's like being 20 years younger and you're facing Sal Maglie again and the ball is coming right at your head and you scramble and fall down to escape it and the umpire, Tom Gorman, goes out to have a talk with Sal the Barber.

When he comes back, you say to the ump, "What did he say?" and Gorman replies, "He says to tell you he's sorry."

On the next pitch, Mays hits a home run and, as he runs past Maglie on his way around the bases, he looks over. "I'm sorry, too," he says.

The game belongs on the financial pages now. But nobody talked of money when Willie played. He played it for the same reason kids used to hunt frogs or shoot marbles. They invented baseball for people like Willie Mays.

We were lucky to have him. He's what the game is all about. He's what we're all about. His book is as pure Mays as running down, and catching, a three-base hit in the gap — and doubling a runner off third.

Wallach's bat bloodies Astros

From Staff Reports

HOUSTON — Tim Wallach drove in three runs with a pair of doubles to lead the Montreal Expos to a 7-4 victory over the slumping Houston Astros Monday night.

Montreal's Andres Galarraga extended his hitting streak to eight games by going 4-for-5 as the Astros lost for the sixth time in seven games. Galarraga has 13 hits in his last four games.

Expos starter Dennis Martinez, 8-7, won for the fifth time in his last six decisions, allowing six hits and three runs in six innings. Jeff Parrett pitched the final three innings for his sixth save, allowing a ninth-inning run on Rafael Ramirez' double and Gerald Young's two-out triple.

Wallach's two-run double keyed a three-run fifth inning against Danny Darwin, 3-8, who lost his fourth straight decision.

Houston's Glenn Davis, who had four hits, made it 6-3 in the sixth with a two-run homer.

Nixon singled in an insurance run in the eighth and Nelson Santovenia added a bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the ninth.

Ramirez' double in the ninth was his 1,000th major league hit.

Dodgers 5, Cardinals 3 — John Shelby lined a two-out, two-run single in the eighth inning to give the Dodgers victory.

Pinch-hitter Jose Gonzalez led off the bottom of the eighth with a double and went to third on Steve Sax's bunt single. After a forceout and a popout, John Tudor, 4-3, intentionally walked Mike Marshall to load the bases.

But Shelby spoiled the strategy when he lined an 0-1 pitch into center field for his sixth game-winning RBI.

The Cardinals stole six bases in the first three innings against left-hander Bill Krueger, who was recalled from the minors over the weekend and was making his National League debut after spending five seasons with Oakland.

Cubs 2, Giants 2 — SAN FRANCISCO — Manny Trillo singled home the tie-breaking run in the ninth and Greg Maddux, 14-3, became the major leagues' first 14-game winner by pitching a four-hitter for his eighth consecutive victory.

Shawon Dunston opened the Chicago ninth with a single off reliever Atlee Hammaker, 4-3. Dunston stole second, continued to third when Reds 5, Mets 1 — NEW YORK — Jose Rijo, 9-3, and John Franco combined for a six-hitter and Nick Esasky drove in three runs as Cincinnati beat New York for the first time in seven games this season.

Eddie Milner, who took over when center fielder Eric Davis was injured in a third-inning collision, scored two runs and singled in another.

Esasky had RBI singles in the fourth and ninth innings and a sacrifice fly in the sixth as the Reds beat David Cone, 9-2.

Braves 7, Phillies 0 — ATLANTA — Pete Smith pitched a three-hitter for his first major league shutout and Jim Morrison and Dale Murphy hit three-run homers for Atlanta.

Smith struck out seven and walked four in pitching the first complete-game shutout by an Atlanta pitcher this year and the first complete game of his career.

Padres 4, Pirates 3 — SAN DIEGO — Chris Brown's bases-loaded single in the 10th gave San Diego victory after the Padres blew a 3-1 lead in the ninth. Roberto Alomar and Tony Gwynn started the 10th with singles off Jim Gott, 4-3, the fifth Pittsburgh pitcher. After Shane Mack sacrificed the runners to second and third, Gott intentionally walked pinch hitter Tim Flannery.

Chicago's Shawon Dunston slides into third as San Francisco's Ernest Riles waits for throw during action at Candlestick Park Monday.

Ryan, Carter stuck in muddy rut

All-Star battery needs charge

By BEN WALKER

NEW YORK (AP) — Gary Carter and Nolan Ryan are stuck. On their charge to more milestones, this All-Star battery went dead.

Carter needs one more home run to reach 300. He's been stranded there since May 16 for a span of 140 at-bats, the longest homerless drought of his career.

Ryan needs one more victory to get No. 100 with Houston, a feat he accomplished for California. Ryan is trying to become the seventh pitcher to win 100 with two teams, but has gone seven starts without a victory since May 29.

"I'm sure Nolan knows what I'm feeling," Carter said. "I've probably been pressing and trying too hard. It's a thing that wears you down."

Carter is taking extra batting practice under the watch of New York Mets hitting coach Bill Robinson and met with manager Davey Johnson on Saturday to talk about the trouble.

Nothing has worked. Not that he hasn't gotten suggestions.

"I've been getting a lot of letters," Carter said, pointing toward a box full of mail in his locker. "Psychologists, hypnotists, everyone seems to have an idea."

Carter got another day off — something Johnson is doing more of this year after night games — on Sunday as the Mets beat Ryan and the Astros 5-0. In their career matchup, Carter is 13-for-49 (.265) with two homers and seven strikeouts against Ryan.

Carter is in a 2-for-24 slump that has dropped him to .246. He hit eight home runs early in the season, but none since connecting in San Diego seven weeks ago.

"It's mental," Johnson said. "But he's also not looking for his pitch."

Ryan's problem recently is poor pitching. He has lost five straight games and, including two no-decisions, Ryan has a 6.50 earned run average in his last seven starts.

"I didn't even know about the 100 mark until someone mentioned it to me," Ryan said. "It doesn't matter to me. I'm not really concerned about it."

Carter and Ryan realize their milestone misery will end. The question is when.

"It's inevitable we'll get there," Carter said. "I'm not going to go two years without hitting a home run and Nolan isn't going the rest of his career without another win. But you'd like to get it out of the way."

Carter, 34, is trying to become the 50th player to reach the 300 mark. He has hit 275 home runs while playing catcher; Johnny Bench leads all catchers with 327.

Ryan, 41, is the all-time strikeout leader with 4,672. His 266-240 record is not so spectacular, even though his career 3.13 ERA is impressive.

"In Nolan's case, he has always been measured by strikeouts," Carter said. "I'm sure he'd like to be known for winning those 100."

Ryan, 5-7, will make his next start this weekend against the Mets. Ryan, who began his career with the Mets in 1966, has lost seven consecutive decisions to New York since May 6, 1984.

Carter will return to the lineup this week for a series against Cincinnati. Then it's on to Houston before the All-Star Game.

Neither Carter, a 10-time All-Star, or Ryan, a six-time member, have the credentials to be there this time.

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. — Mollie B. Kelly and Lorann M. Mattox' Si A Bit continued to climb the class ladder with a stellar performance in the $26,350 Governor's Handicap, winning the July 4th feature by a neck.

Still, one more home run and one more victory would make the break a lot more enjoyable.

"It affects everything when you go through a period like this," Ryan said of the struggle. "But with the way things are going for our team, every game is important."

While the Astros try to stay close to Los Angeles in the National League West, the Mets are comfortably ahead in the NL East. That's given Carter too much time to dwell on that elusive home run.

"Everywhere you go, people bring it up. You can't get away from it," Carter said.

"But I'm sure once I hit the 300th, I'll get 301 and 302 and 303 right after that. It always works out that way."

4,405 hit the Twin-Trifecta, causing the exotic wagers' pool to swell to $58,586 for Thursday's racing program. First post is 1:00 p.m. Gates open at 11:00 a.m.

Arkansas, El Paso triumph

Associated Press

Bien Figueroa singled home Jesus Mendez with the winning run as the Arkansas Travelers took a 3-2 Texas League baseball victory over the Tulsa Drillers.

In other action, Shreveport defeated Jackson, 5-1, and El Paso whipped San Antonio, 11-4.

Mendez led off the seventh inning with a single and moved to third on a single by Brett Harrison. Todd Zeile walked just before Figueroa's base hit drove home Mendez.

The winning pitcher was Benito Malave, 4-1. The loser was Steve Lankard, 4-2.

Righthander Paul McClellan allowed five hits and struck out six batters in seven innings to lead the Shreveport Captains to a 5-1 win over the Jackson Mets.

The Captains put the game away with three runs in the third inning. T.J. McDonald started the rally with a two-out single. Harry Davis singled and Greg Litton bounced a double down the left field line to score McDonald.

Dan Scarpetta became the Texas League's first 10-game winner as he pitched the El Paso Diablos to an 11-4 victory over the San Antonio Missions.

The Diablos exploded for seven runs in the third inning, highlighted by a two-run homer by Gary Sheffield.

Scarpetta, 10-5, struck out 10 and only gave up two walks. The losing pitcher was Mike Schweighoffer, 5-3.

straight game-winning homer in the 16th, and Stan Javier homered two outs later as Oakland won its fifth straight.

McGwire's homer, his 15th, easily cleared the 377-foot sign in left center, sending the Indians to their eighth loss in nine games.

Greg Cadaret, 2-1, the third of four Oakland pitchers, worked 3 1-3 hitless innings and worked out of a bases-loaded jam in the 14th by striking out Dave Clark and Willie Upshaw. Dennis Eckersley pitched the 16th and earned his major-league leading 25th in 28 opportunities.

Cleveland relief pitcher Doug Jones had his major-league record string of 15 saves in 15 consecutive appearances snapped when he started the 10th inning.

White Sox 5, Orioles 1 — CHICAGO — Rookie Melido Perez, aided by Mark Salas' solo homer and Dan Pasqua's run-scoring infield hit, came within four outs of his first major-league shutout and snapped a personal three-game losing streak.

Salas, with three hits, and Pasqua, who also had a double, helped break the game open with a three-run sixth inning, highlighted by Gary Redus' two-run single.

Tigers 3, Mariners 3

DETROIT — Matt Nokes (10th) and Pat Sheridan (11th) hit back-to-back homers in the eighth and Darrell Evans and Chet Lemon connected in the seventh. Mike Henneman, 3-2, was the winner.

The Tigers trailed 2-1 when Evans started the seventh with his 10th homer. With two outs, Lemon hit his fifth home run.

Angels 11, Blue Jays 6 — TORONTO — Johnny Ray drove in three runs and reliever Stew Criburn, 3-0, pitched 3 2-3 strong innings. Loser Jim Clancy, 4-11, lasted only 40 pitches and yielded six runs and seven hits. He was lifted after facing two batters in the third inning — although the Angels' lineup came into the game with a combined .119 career average against him.

Ray and Brian Downing singled in the first inning, advanced on Clancy's two-out wild pitch and scored on Chili Davis' single. Clancy has surrendered 20 first-inning runs in his 18 starts.

After Jack Howell led off the California second with a double, Bob Boone hit an RBI single and scored on Ray's triple for a 4-0 lead.

Two outs later, Brian Harper hit his second home run.

Anderson yielded four hits and an unearned run while striking out six over eight innings. Reardon pitched the ninth for his 22nd save.

Yankees 13, Rangers 2

ARLINGTON — Don Mattingly hit a three-run homer, Jack Clark hit a two-run shot as New York took advantage of 15 hits, seven walks, two wild pitches, four passed balls and a hit batsman.

Charlie Hough, 8-8, was the loser. Hough yielded three hits in 2 2-3 innings but threw 102 pitches. Winner Charles Hudson, 6-3, allowed two runs and three hits in eight innings before giving way to Tim Lincecum.

The victory enabled the Yankees to remain 2 1/2 games behind first-place Detroit in the AL East.

PEACHTREE ROAD RACE—Belgium's J.P. Ndayisenga won the Peachtree Road Race Monday, covering the 10,000-meter course over Atlanta streets in 28 minutes, 17 seconds. Mark Curp of Lee's Summit, Mo., at 28:20, and John Tuttle of nearby Douglasville, Ga., at 28:31, were next to finish.

The top female finisher was Grete Waitz of Norway, who won her fourth Peachtree 10K 32:00.

NO MORE MISTAKES—Yves Filion has no intention of making a second mistake when it comes to Runnymede Lobell, winner of the $533,700 Cane Pace, opening leg of the Triple Crown Sunday at Yonkers Raceway. Filion and Normand Mondoux, partners in the ownership of Runnymede Lobell, are declining all offers to sell the 3-year-old bay colt.

Runnymede Lobell, who has won his last 15 starts—eight this year—has a career record of 18-2-0, with earnings of $1,064,557, but Filion neglected to enter the horse in the Little Brown Jug, second leg of the triple crown Sept. 22.

MAYFLOWER DRAWS BEST—With the addition of Jan Stephenson, this week's $400,000 Mayflower Classic will have seven of the year's top 10 money winners on the PGA tour. The field is missing only three of the leading money winners—Nancy Lopez, Patty Sheehan and Rosie Jones, but will include six past Mayflower champions and the winners of the last four LPGA major championships.

RENFRO HORSE SHOWS FOOT—Dr.

Death, a colt co-owned by Dallas Cowboys wide receiver Mike Renfro, finished with a rush to score a 34-length victory Monday in the $79,000 Old Capitol Handicap at Hawthorne. The winner, shipped in from Louisiana Downs at Shreveport, has now won five of his last six starts, including four stakes, and Monday's purse of $47,400 increased his earnings for the year to $182,205.

MOSES NOT READY—Washington Bullets center Moses Malone is not close to a decision about where he'll play next season, claiming reports he could sign this week with the Atlanta Hawks were premature. Malone, 33, is a 10-time NBA all-star selection. The Hawks would fulfill part of Malone's criteria for a new team and he wants to play for a warm weather team.

U.S. hosts '94 World Cup in historic first ZURICH, Switzerland (AP)—The United States will host the 1994 World Cup, to become the first nation outside Europe or South America to stage the month-long, 52-match tournament. The U.S. has not advanced past World Cup qualifying rounds since 1950.

"The World Cup will give us a clearly defined goal," said Werner Fricker, president of the United States Soccer Federation. "It will give us the opportunity to develop a major, national professional league system."

The U.S. presentation included a brief, videotaped message from President Reagan in which he said the United States would be honored to stage the world's biggest soccer event.

The U.S. proposal includes 18 possible stadiums, of which 12 would be used. Stadiums proposed in the East are John F. Kennedy Stadium and Franklin Field in Philadelphia; Robert F. Kennedy Stadium in Washington; Palmer Stadium in Princeton, N.J., and Memorial Stadium in Annapolis, Md.

The facilities in the South are Joe Robbie Stadium in Dade County, Fla.; the Orange Bowl in Miami; Tampa Stadium and the Citrus Bowl in Orlando, Fla.

Midwest sites proposed are Soldier Field in Chicago; Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City, Mo.; the Cotton Bowl in Dallas and a stadium under construction in Blaine, Minn.

Western facilities submitted include the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, Calif.; the Coliseum in Los Angeles; Husky Stadium in Seattle; Parker Stadium in Corvallis, Ore., and the Silver Bowl in Las Vegas, Nev.

 One way to neutralize a long suit is to remove the entries to it. But what if there are no entries in the outside suits? This hand is an object lesson.

Let's suppose that North-South reach five spades on an auction such as the one shown. South should have taken a sure profit by doubling five hearts, but then there would have been no tale to tell.

Let's see what would happen with routine defense. Suppose that West leads the king of hearts and continues the suit for declarer to ruff. He leads a low spade and West ducks. Now the contract can no longer be defeated!

Declarer returns to hand with a club and forces out the ace of trumps. Thanks to the doubleton king of diamonds outside and the fact that West is now out of trumps, declarer has no difficulty collecting the rest of the tricks.

When Dr. George Rosenkranz of Mexico City held the West hand, the play to the first two tricks went as above. On declarer's lead of a low spade, however, Rosenkranz flew up with the ace and shifted to a low diamond!

Declarer had no way to counter this lethal defense. Since he did not have a second diamond, his line of communication with dummy was shattered. He finessed the ten and cashed the ace of diamonds for a club discard, felling the king in the process, but it did him no good. If he continued with a high diamond, West would ruff for the setting trick. If he did anything else, he would, in the fullness of time, have to surrender a club trick for down one.

Paul, Linda McCartney to play themselves on BBC comedy series

LIVERPOOL, England (AP) — Pop star Paul McCartney and his wife, Linda, returned to their childhood home in northern England to film guest roles for a TV comedy series.

The British Broadcasting Corp. series is being shot on Elswick Street near the Mersey River, where one of the former Beatle's childhood friends used to live. "I used to come here and go sunbathing in the back yard at number 46 because my mate Ian James used to live there," McCartney said Monday.

The McCartneys, in Liverpool for the first time in four years, will play themselves in the comedy series about an unemployed Liverpool family.

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Academy award-winning actor Dr. Hsing S. Ngor is seeking support to establish a hospital for refugees at the Thai-Cambodian border.

Ngor, who was a physician before he fled Cambodia in 1979, said Monday that he already had the money and the medical staff for the project, and that the only thing delaying the hospital was approval from the Thai government.

He told a news conference that after his visit here he would spend two weeks in Thailand meeting officials.

Ngor is here on a week's visit at the invitation of the Institute of Strategic and International Studies Malaysia. The organization's two-day forum on Southeast Asia begins today.

Ngor won his Oscar for his work in "The Killing Fields," which was about the fall of Cambodia to the Khmer Rouge and the subsequent slaughter of millions. War continues to ravage the Southeast Asian nation.

Ngor, who is now a U.S. citizen, said that once Cambodia was free and safe to return to, he would go back to help rebuild it, but would not stay because of "too many painful memories."

NEW YORK (AP) — President Reagan says there's one question he didn't get to ask Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev during their recent Moscow summit: whether he believes in God.

"I had that curiosity for a time because I was so surprised at his use of the name God," Reagan said in the August issue of Life magazine. "And I couldn't figure how I could really get into a one-on-one conversation with him, knowing where atheism stands in their country."

The president said he never got the chance to ask, but a Soviet interpreter said that Gorbachev's usage of God was "commonplace. It was just a form of expression: god with a small g."

Reagan said that, unlike other Soviet leaders he's met, with Gorbachev "you don't get any feeling of cunning."

"He is himself — no imitation of anyone that I've ever known," he said. "He's straightforward."

NEW YORK (AP) — Singer, talk show host and game show producer Merv Griffin says he could have retired after Coca-Cola bought Merv Griffin Productions for $250 million, but decided on another career: real estate mogul.

"To me, retirement is the choice after death," the Reagan

63-year-old businessman said in the August issue of Life magazine.

"What I am doing now is fun," said Griffin, who recently won control of Donald Trump's Resorts International in a hostile takeover and bought the Beverly Hilton Hotel.

"I love the gamesmanship," Griffin said. "This may sound strange, but it parallels the game shows I've been involved in." Griffin helped create television's popular "Wheel of Fortune" and "Jeopardy!"

His real-life conquests apparently have inspired him. Griffin says he is working on a new show based on the game Monopoly.

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Actor Ron Perlman says playing the beast Vincent on television's "Beauty and the Beast" is "so romantic and heroic and poetic, it's like playing Hamlet every week."

"This may just be the greatest role of my life," Perlman, 37, said in the July 9 issue of TV Guide magazine.

Perlman said he was amazed when he learned the role has made him a sex symbol.

"More than 95 percent of the people who write to me are women," he said. "Their letters are filled with sexual fantasies."

The actor whose half-man, half-beast character's love affair with Catherine Chandler (Linda Hamilton) is unconsummated in the show has received up to nine letters from one viewer.

"Women say that Vincent is the ultimate fantasy lover, someone who asks nothing in return but gives 110 percent," Perlman said. "He evokes deep unconscious feelings of longing for a connection to someone who understands things on a very emotional level."

Perlman is married to fashion designer Opal Stone and has a 4-year-old daughter, Blake Amanda.

JAMESTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — Gov. Mario Cuomo finally gets his chance to see journalism from the other side of the reporter's notebook.

Cuomo was scheduled today to follow through on a 1986 promise to become a cub reporter for a day for the Jamestown Post Journal.

Cuomo will cover ceremonies at a new addition to the Blackstone Corp. in western New York, said Cristie Herbst, editor of the afternoon paper.

Fortunately for Cuomo, he will not be filing his story on deadline. The governor, who has published two diaries he's kept since entering public life, does not know how to type.

Also, Cuomo shouldn't have any problems getting his questions answered: his lieutenant governor, Stan Lundine, is a main participant in the news conference Cuomo will cover.

Cuomo will be writing for Wednesday afternoon editions, Herbst said last week. She said she would edit the copy as "I would any rookie reporter's."

Cuomo originally promised in December 1986 to try being a reporter at the paper after a former Post Journal columnist, Tim O'Brien, challenged the governor to work one morning on deadline.

The challenge came at a time when Cuomo criticized reporters over what he thought was their negative coverage of his 1986 re-election campaign against Republican Andrew O'Rourke.

Oil prices briefly move after attack

LONDON (AP) — Oil prices spurted briefly Monday and then settled back down on news that the U.S. Navy shot down an Iranian civilian jetliner in the Persian Gulf.

The spot price of Brent Blend, the most widely traded international crude oil, jumped to $14.35 a barrel in Far Eastern trading, up 20 cents from the close of trading in New York on Friday.

But later in London, the price had retreated to $14.15 a barrel.

"That's the usual knee-jerk reaction to anything happening in the gulf," said Fergus MacLeod, an oil expert at the London investment firm Barclays de Zoete Wedd Ltd.

The market is still weak because of oversupply and high stock levels, the experts said.

Study expects continued recovery for Texas cities

Associated Press

The unemployment rate of major Texas cities is expected to decline in the next three months as they continue on the road to recovery following the oil bust of the early 1980s, a recent report from Southern Methodist University says.

The state as a whole also will show a 0.4 percent growth in wage and salary employment during the next quarter, with mining producing a 1.1 percent increase, manufacturing a 0.6 percent and services a 0.5 percent growth, said Harold Gross, an economist with the Center for Enterprise at the Edwin L. Cox School of Business at Southern Methodist.

The Dallas-Fort Worth area will continue the steady economic recovery that began there 12 months ago, he said. Employment in Dallas should rise by 0.5 percent, led by 1 percent growth in transportation and utilities and 0.7 percent growth in services, he said.

San Antonio is expected to have 1.2 percent job growth because of seasonal gains in tourism services.

The city's employment rate should fall to 6.6 percent by the end of the third quarter, Gross said.

Austin's continued fast population growth will produce strong job gains in transportation and utilities, with an expected 1.6 percent increase. The city's unemployment should drop to 5.2 percent.

Manufacturing and mining should lead the job growth as Houston's wage and salary employment expands by 0.6 percent in the third quarter, he said.

More jobs also are expected to be added in other industries. Gross predicted construction should increase 0.6 percent, services of 0.5 percent and trade of 0.3 percent. Financial services will continue to remain flat, and Gross expects few jobs will be added in that sector.

Unemployment should continue to decline in the city due to the predicted job growth and because there continues to be a modest out-migration of the population, Gross said. He predicted the city's unemployment rate will fall to 6 percent by the end of September.

Dollar lower before traders' return

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against all major currencies in light European trading early today as the market awaited the return of New York dealers after the Fourth of July holiday weekend.

Gold prices were mixed.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 0.55 Japanese yen to a closing 134.30 yen. Later, in London, it was unchanged at 134.30 yen.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Fed group voted to tighten credit in May

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top policy-makers at the Federal Reserve voted in mid-May to push interest rates higher as a way of fighting inflationary pressures, according to minutes of the discussions.

The Federal Open Market Committee, which sets monetary policy for the central bank, voted 9-2 at a meeting on May 17 to tighten credit conditions slightly in the weeks following the meeting.

The minutes were released Friday.

Asian population zooming toward 3 billion

TOKYO (AP) — Seven babies are born every second in Asia and the continent may be only days away from reaching 3 billion inhabitants, an occasion causing some concern in the world's most crowded corner, experts said.

China, faced with a motherload of maternity, marked the occasion with a ceremony and speeches that urged its citizens to keep practicing birth control. In Tokyo, a group of experts gathered Friday to debate the significance of the approaching milestone, its effects on the family and the growing problem of feeding all those people.

GM announces leaner rebate incentives

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp.'s Chevrolet, Buick and Oldsmobile divisions extended through Sept. 28 buyer incentive campaigns that were to expire today.

Many of the Chevrolet rebates, announced Friday, will be leaner, but Buick rebates will continue unchanged except for the LeSabre, which was dropped from the program, a spokeswoman said. Chevrolet also dropped its double rebate on the Nova and Spectrum subcompacts.

Soviet polluters 'should be punished'

MOSCOW (AP) — Polluters should be punished for allowing rampant industrial waste to push the Soviet Union to the brink of an ecological disaster, the head of the country's new environmental protection committee said.

Fyodor Morgun, chief of the committee, on Friday told a Communist Party conference that the natural fertility of soils is declining, forests are "in an unsatisfactory condition," and the air in all industrial centers is polluted "above the hygienic standards."

Mexican bread basket suffering drought

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — A severe drought in Mexico's northwestern grainbelt is rapidly depleting wells and irrigation dams, leaving farmers with little more to do than "stare at the sky."

Vital cropland sits idle, cattle are dying and the government is wondering how it will pay for all the food it will have to import.

Recent rains in other important agricultural areas prevented a national catastrophe, although wheat yields are down about 15 percent and other crops are expected to be off due to late planting and low soil moisture.

Experts await government crop report

By H.J. MAIDENBERG
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The U.S. Department of Agriculture's special crop report, due July 12, is expected to show that the drought damage to the nation's crop is at least as bad as the commodity markets have anticipated, a leading agribusiness consultant says.

After the recent upward surge in prices of the nation's major crops, the department decided to issue a special crop report based on current conditions in the Grain Belt. The government normally waits until early August before forecasting crop yields but is reacting to the uncommon volatility in the commodity markets.

The markets have experienced several sharp swings in the prices of corn, wheat and soybeans with each turn in the weather because of conflicting estimates of the damage caused by the worst drought since the dust bowl days of the early 1930s.

John A. Schnitker, a leading agribusiness consultant, expects that the government report will show that unless there is a dramatic return to normal weather this week — which few forecasters consider likely — the estimated season's output of corn will shrink to 3.4 billion bushels from 7.25 billion last year. At that forecast level, the market's current price of $3.42 per bushel largely discounts the damage already done.

AP Wirephoto

Trader Rolf Quantins yells an order in the corn futures pit at the Chicago Board of Trade. Grain prices at the various exchanges have been volatile recently in light of the current drought.

Schnitker, a former Agriculture Department official, said he bases his estimate on research by his Washington-based organization, John A. Schnitker Associates, which polls farmers as the Agriculture Department does.

The government's estimate of wheat and soybean production this year is also eagerly awaited. Schnitker believes the agency will forecast that the total wheat crop will come in at 1.8 billion bushels, compared with last year's normal crop of 2.15 billion bushels.

As for soybeans, Schnitker figures the agency will confirm the market's expectation that the crop will be 1.6 billion bushels, down from 1.9 billion bushels last year.

Schnitker's corn and wheat crop estimates are in line with those of Richard J. Feltes, research director of Refco, Inc., a leading commodities trading firm. Feltes last week also estimated that the soybean crop would be 1.52 billion bushels, somewhat less than Schnitker's estimate.

Another organization that polls farmers, Conrad Leslie Analytical Organization in Chicago, said its results from a poll of 500 farmers in the grain belt are not yet complete.

While the present prices in the commodities markets largely reflect Schnitker's estimate of the damage, the volatility is likely to continue in anticipation of and reaction to the government estimate.

Traders will also attempt to fine tune their positions to such variables as export sales and changes in domestic consumption brought about by the higher prices.

House report criticizes federal aid to women-owned businesses

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most federal efforts to halt discrimination against female business owners have been "superficial, unimaginative and lacking in long-term commitment," said a bipartisan House report released Saturday.

The report by the Small Business Committee also concluded that "the federal government has been seriously delinquent" in helping female entrepreneurs gain access to government contracts and subcontracts.

Furthermore, the report said, women face gender-related barriers that severely limit their access to business credit. It also said that statistics on female entrepreneurs are insufficient to help policy makers deal with these problems.

Women owned 25 percent of U.S. businesses in 1982 but received only 10 percent of business receipts, according to the Census Bureau. Business size and type account for some but not all of the discrepancy, the report said.

"There are other, less defensible reasons — namely sex stereotyping and continued discrimination," the report said. "Women have had to work harder, wait longer, manage with fewer dollars, and be content with smaller operations just to maintain their present levels of independence and business success."

The chairman of the Small Business Committee, John J. LaFalce, D-N.Y., plans to introduce an Omnibus Women's Business Ownership bill later this month along with Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., head of the Congressional Caucus on Women's Issues.

In a statement accompanying his committee's report, LaFalce said that the bill will address the four principal barriers blocking equal economic status for female entrepreneurs — lack of management training and technical assistance, lack of access to capital, "the virtual exclusion" of women from government contracts, and lack of accurate and timely data on female-owned businesses.

According to the report, women owned less than 5 percent of American businesses 15 years ago compared with 28 percent today. They are starting firms at twice the rate of men and are expected to own 50 percent of U.S. businesses by the year 2000.

"These women are part of the most educated generation of women that has ever existed. They are a gold mine of human capital," the report said. "It is essential that remaining barriers to women entrepreneurship be eliminated."

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — An increase in production and new orders, fueled by a growth in exports, helped the economy expand in June at the largest rate since December, the National Association of Purchasing Management said in its monthly report released Monday.

Although the growth was healthy, vendor deliveries posted declines in the rate of growth, partly as the result of scarce commodities, according to the report. Higher employment and prices were reported.

The report surveys managers at more than 250 companies representing 21 industries. Economists consider its findings to be a preliminary indicator of the previous month's economic performance.

The association's composite index increased significantly, to 59.3 percent, from 55.1 percent in May. An index above 50 percent indicates the economy is expanding, while a reading below 50 percent implies a contraction.

June was the 23rd consecutive month that the index, which is seasonally adjusted, exceeded 50 percent.

Robert J. Bretz, chairman of the association's business survey committee, said the June figures signaled that the economy was in a strong position for the rest of the year.

"The economy continues to expand at a vigorous rate, completing a second quarter somewhat stronger than the first," Bretz said. "The brisk increase in new orders, unquestionably spurred by the increase in export orders, suggests the second half of the year will at least begin with strong economic growth."

Corporate name consultants battle over poll

By RANDALL ROTHENBERG
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — A battle for recognition has broken out in the small world of consulting firms that help companies find new names. Two established firms that created such names as Navistar, Unisys and Primavera are defending their skills against a competitor's claims that, at least to consumers, such names are jargon.

One source of the dispute is a study released last week by Landor Associates, a corporate design consultant in San Francisco. The firm

Oklahoma Safeways seek new name

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The owners of the Safeway grocery chain in Oklahoma say an informal survey of store managers has shown that the name "Homeland" is favored for the new name for the 106 stores.

The name change is required as part of the deal that led to SWO Acquisition Corp. acquiring the 106 stores in 1987 from the former owners, the Oklahoma Division of Safeway Stores Inc.

Prentiss Alletag, SWO's vice president of public affairs, said the informal survey was taken over the past two months.

Alletag said the company will be announcing the new name by the first of 1989. He said the process of selecting a new name and changing signs must also be completed by early 1989.

surveyed 1,000 consumers in an effort to determine the recognition of, and attitude toward, 672 brand and corporate names, from Budweiser to Kleenex, and from IBM to USX. The survey's conclusions did not bode well for several corporations that have changed their names in recent years, especially those whose new monikers might seem to have no meaning.

The dispute has become the talk of a business that has taken on far greater importance in recent years. A record number of American corporations — 1,753 — changed their names in 1987, up 27 percent from the year before, according to a study by Anspach Grossman Portugal Inc., a leading corporate identity consulting firm based in New York and San Francisco.

References key in job hunt success

Homework doesn't stop for graduate applicants

NEW YORK (AP) — According to the U.S. Department of Education, some 989,000 students are graduating from college with a bachelor's degree this year.

Although there are growing signs of a labor shortage for entry-level jobs, there is still fierce competition for choice positions, notes Paul R. Ray & Co., a major U.S. executive search firm, which offers recent graduates advice on achieving a competitive edge.

First, suggests Orin Davis, vice president of the company's New York office, obtain information on the company before the interview.

"Nothing flatters a prospective employer more than when candidates show they have researched the company," he says. "It shows initiative, enthusiasm and interest."

Davis advises calling the prospective company's public relations department to obtain an annual report or company brochure. Most college libraries have access to computerized on-line data bases to research articles published about the company and its activities, he points out, adding that particular attention should be paid to trade journals.

If you're just starting out, you won't have much to put in a resume, he says, so a creative, well-written cover letter is often the best way to obtain that elusive first interview.

"Remember, an interviewer's job is to 'weed out' applicants," says Ray's Davis, listing some key cover letter points to keep in mind:

- Present a clear, concise summary emphasizing career objectives and goals.
- Give a brief review of your college academic credits and extracurricular activities showing you to be a team player and well-rounded individual.
- Highlight some specific activities of the company that are of interest to you.
- List qualities and work principles which you can offer to an employer.
- Write your letter with personality and style so people will want to meet you.

■ If you use colored paper, stick to businesslike shades such as buff, gray or off-white.

At the interview, Davis cautions, be punctual. Dress appropriately, with special attention to the fine points of grooming such as nails, shoes and hair, which shows attention to detail. While style is important, don't be overly fashionable.

Be poised and alert. Give some thought beforehand to potential "tough" questions such as "Why would you recommend you for this position?" and "What can you offer us?"

"Intelligence, sincerity and calm in the face of pressure tell the interviewer as much as the specifics of your answer," Davis explains.

Stress the skills and goals you feel would be of use.

"Remember," says Davis, "an employer wants to know what you can do for him or her, not what they can do for you."

Have some questions ready which demonstrate your interest in the company or the position available, and take notes on the answers.

Wait for the interviewer to bring up the issue of money or benefits. If you're asked to name a figure, make sure it is in line with industry standards for the position and your level of experience.

Before you leave, try to get a sense of your prospects for the position, Davis advises. Ask how and when you may follow up. Always send the interviewer a note of thanks for his or her time and express interest in the position by addressing a point that was raised about the job or industry.

If you are turned down but still interested in the company, send along another letter expressing this interest and your hope that they will consider you for future openings. Very often they will, Davis says.

Above all, he emphasizes, don't take rejection personally; there could be dozens of reasons why you didn't get the position.

By MICHAEL KINSMAN
Copley News Service

The most important name on your resume probably is not even your own. Every resume is loaded with a list of professional achievements but as resume exaggeration and fraud grow more widespread, employers look less at what you claim to have done.

What they really are looking for are signs of what you can and will do once you have joined their payroll. A better way than evaluating claims of job applicants is sometimes to talk to the people whose names have been supplied by you as references.

So now, you have people who you have worked for or with in the past who are going to play an instrumental role in your obtaining what may be your dream job. I hope you've done well and made some friends along the way.

Ideally, job references should give an objective evaluation of your performance or talents. But they also should know your past intimately and know what your goals are.

Unfortunately, most of us don't have ideal job references. But, then, are any of us perfect workers?

What we are left with is an imperfect system. One that leaves part of your fate in the hands of someone who may or may not care whether you find what you are looking for in a job.

Since there's no real way of knowing how references are going to react when they get an inquiry from a potential employer, you need to pay attention to those things under your control.

You might start by carefully selecting individuals who will serve as job references. Pick out a couple of former supervisors and co-workers who have been by your side. It's probably best to pick individuals who are happy and successful in their jobs and that like you as well.

Do not select friends who have not worked with you. Companies tend to get annoyed with you if they sense you have sent them on a wild goose chase.

Include your current supervisor if that is at all possible. Today's boss is your best possible job reference, but it's one that you need to handle delicately.

Most supervisors don't like it when employees leave, particularly if they are good employees. If you are comfortable with your boss, you should sit down and discuss your career goals and objectives and tell him why you think you would be better off in another position.

It's a tough call whether you ought to risk this. Most people do not. Those that do sometimes accelerate their careers substantially.

Whomever you choose for job references, make sure that you get their permission. Tell them what type of job you are looking for and who they might get a call from.

Remember, however, that very few people will tell you to your face that they don't want to be used as a reference. You must be comfortable with the people you select.

Do not choose as a reference someone who couldn't sell heat to the Eskimos. Remember, your references are selling you and there is no place for dull, inarticulate references.

Some companies have a name-rank-and-serial-number philosophy when it comes to job reference calls. This stems from company attorneys and personnel departments and has been molded only in the best interests of the company. You have a right to your past and your company should not be able to hide that.

A problem looms, however, in that you cannot tell the company what to say about you. You, as a worker, have very little leverage over this issue.

If you've had problems in the past, it's probably best that you disclose those up front. If the company that is going to hire you does its homework, it likely will uncover at least traces of those problems. Beat the company to the punch, explaining succinctly what occurred and why. Also tell your references how you have dealt with this. It will make them more at ease when the phone rings for your job recommendation.

There is no doubt, however, the best thing you can do is be a good employee today. The problems that are with you today can haunt you far longer than you hold this job.

Compaq nears completion of expansion plan

HOUSTON (AP) — Compaq Computer Corp. is close to completing plans for a major expansion of its plant in northwest Harris County that may add thousands of jobs to the payroll, sources say.

State and local officials offered generous inducements to convince the firm to expand its Houston facilities, including property tax abatements, road improvements and acceleration of a $253 million plan to upgrade Farm-to-Market Road 149 to an eight-lane freeway.

Harris County Judge Jon Lindsay and Houston Economic Development Council President Lee Hogan led the effort to keep the firm from expanding elsewhere, the Houston Chronicle reported Thursday.

Lindsay and Hogan started putting together the incentive package, and Metropolitan Transit Authority board Chairman Robert C. Lanier and Mayor Kathy Whitmire were brought in to help make the pitch to Compaq executives.

Compaq executives reportedly were concerned about the mobility of their employees working in an unincorporated area of northwest Harris County.

One move to keep Compaq involved accelerating plans to upgrade FM 149 to a freeway between Beltway 8 to FM 1774 in Montgomery County. The plans were approved last week by the Texas Highway Commission.

Compaq officials, meanwhile, were withholding a formal announcement of their plans until they acquired the needed land, sources said.

Compaq spokesman Lynn Parsons said the council and groups from other cities had made proposals regarding "additional facilities" the computer company might want to build.

"We have received a number of proposals. No decision has been made yet," Parsons said.

Sources familiar with the negotiations told the Chronicle that the planned expansion may add as many as 8,000 new jobs to the company's payroll over the next seven years, including as many as 4,000 jobs in the next two to four years.

Compaq, one of the fastest-growing start-up companies in the nation's history, was founded in February 1982 and started shipping its products in January 1983.

For starters, why not rid yourself of exterior painting by installing steel siding to the exposed wood on your house? The professionals at Mid-West can show you how they can cover all the wood, not just part of it.

They start with your wood overhangs and install steel fascia with aluminum soffit around the perimeter with a ventilated soffit panel periodically to help insure proper ventilation.

Then they go to work on your gable ends. Installing steel siding from bottom to top and making gable vents, again to ensure proper ventilation, in the siding itself.

Then it's on to your wood window, and door frames. Using a matching steel coil they can break and bend. Mid-West can cap all window and door facings including your garage door facings.

ing the same aluminum soffit used underneath overhangs, this can also be used to cover carport ceilings, giving your home a complete, clean look that is easily maintained by an occasional watering down to keep clean.

If your home has wood windows, chances are they are either deteriorating with age or they have been painted shut. No you can replace them with insulating windows that feature paint free frames and minimum labor expense.

Replacement windows are custom made so that they fit your existing opening and thus eliminate a lot of unnecessary expense in labor.

"People Come Into Our Store With the Ad In Hand!"

Here's what Ron Morgan of R. Jackson Morgan Interiors had to say about the benefits of newspaper advertising:

"There's no doubt that newspaper advertising works for us! We have found that our type of print ads bring in phenomenal results. We run regular advertising which features itemized merchandise listings. When people come into the store with the ad in hand and the items they want circled, we know the ad is a hit! On occasions when we do not run a weekly ad, we see a noticeable drop in traffic. The Midland Reporter-Telegram really gives us the best value for our advertising dollars!"

Try Foods Fantastic! soon for an unusual, sensory experience

"How good it smells!" is usually the first comment heard from customers entering Foods Fantastic! The aroma of coffees and teas mingled with that of freshly baked breads and desserts signals that an unusual experience awaits all who enter Foods Fantastic!

Foods Fantastic!, at #14 Imperial Shopping Center, corner of Midkiff and Wadley, is the specialty foods store of the Permian Basin. It offers quality foods usually available only in much larger cities. The tiny store is filled to overflowing with attractively displayed packaged foods and related items.

Charlene Bunnell, owner of Foods Fantastic!, opened the store three years ago, envisioning a simple business with a few homemade frozen entrees and a small selection of pre-packaged foods available to complement the catering business.

Today, three years later, 19 homemade frozen entrees are always available, ranging from a breakfast sausage and egg casserole, to the gourmet dishes of Chicken Lombardy (the best seller) and Chicken Cordon Bleu. Fresh salads, outstanding french breads and croissants, soups, hors d'oeuvres, dessert bars and mouth-watering cookies are prepared daily in the gleaming red and white kitchen, which is highly visible at the rear of the store.

In addition, today the store features 38 whole bean coffees from the rare and expensive Jamaican Blue Mountain to the universally liked Columbia Supreme to the current best seller Golden Pecan. Almost every coffee is available, both regular and decaffeinated. And, of course, Foods Fantastic! will grind your coffee to order in the old fashioned coffee grinder sitting in the midst of the sea of coffees. All of the coffees at Foods Fantastic! are Arabica beans, full of that rich, enjoyable flavor you used to love in your coffee but so seldom find today.

Teas are displayed next to coffees and include bulk teas as well as tea bags and both regular and decaffeinated teas. Teas are also available in attractive tins suitable for gifts and gift baskets. For summertime pleasure, try iced teas made with peach, apricot, or raspberry tea. You'll be back for more.

Packaged foods run the gamut from store brand jellies, jams and fruit butter (yes, apricot, peach, plum, prune and apple butter are very popular) to pastas. Imported jellies, jams and marmalades are stacked on shelves beside blackberry walnut salad dressing from Oregon and apple cider salad dressing from Vermont. Pastas with great taste and eye appeal abound. Cajun, wild mushroom, squid ink, and beet are among the 11 flavors from Gaston Dupre. The Al Dente pasta line features tarragon, basil and curry among its flavors. And fine semolina pasta flours in five flavors are available for those who make their own pasta.

Imported cookies and crackers mingle with the best of domestic brands. Caprice cookies from Greece and the top of the Bahlsen line from Germany help round out the collection of nine homemade cookies offered at Foods Fantastic! Pita chips and bagel chips baked in New York are displayed beside the Dutch Roka cheese Crispies and the Carr's English Whole Wheat Wafers.

From Peloponnese, importer of high quality Greek products, a wide selection of both black and green olives is available, as well as cold pressed extra virgin olive oil, stuffed grape leaves and stuffed baby egg plant. Avocado oil, great for salad dressings and sauteed vegetables, is also available.

It must be pointed out too that Foods Fantastic! carries attractive lines of party paper ware—plates, napkins, gift bags—and a selection of acrylic ware that ranges from trays to punch bowls. Unusual accessories for the table range from salt and pepper shakers and napkin rings to spreaders and place card holders.

Candidates spend holiday together

Associated Press

Democrats Michael Dukakis and Jesse Jackson shared a holiday meal — and a reluctance to discuss their dinner conversation with reporters and both Vice President George Bush and Dukakis made campaign-style appearances on the Fourth of July.

The vice president made a one-day swing through three Midwestern states, while the Massachusetts governor stayed in his home state.

Dukakis was tending to gubernatorial business today at the Statehouse.

Bush made campaign stops outside Detroit and Chicago, and in St. Louis before heading home to Washington Monday night. He had spent the weekend at his summer home in Kennebunkport, Maine.

The vice president was in Kennebunkport when word of the shooting down of an Iran Air Airbus on Sunday over the Persian Gulf was relayed to Washington Sunday. He spoke with Reagan in a conference call that afternoon, spokeswoman Sheila Tate said, and was meeting with the president today at the White House.

Dukakis, in a Fourth of July speech at the Navy's oldest commissioned warship — the USS Constitution, berthed near Boston — called for an end to the Iran-Iraq war.

"I believe that the United States must take the lead to stop this war permanently," he said. Dukakis also warned Iran that "this is no time for acts of terror or revenge in response to the incident."

Jackson reacted to the incident by criticizing Reagan administration policy in the Persian Gulf, calling it "failed and vague." He urged the president to promptly offer reparations to the families of the victims.

Jackson and his wife Jacqueline joined Dukakis and his wife Kitty for dinner at the Dukakis home in Brookline, Mass. The two couples then attended a Boston Pops concert and watched a fireworks display over the Charles River.

There were no verbal pyrotechnics to match, however — at least, not within earshot of waiting reporters.

"We were talking about lots of things," Dukakis told reporters after the dinner.

Jackson told reporters when he arrived at the Boston airport, "It's a private meeting. He's the host and we are the guests." He had no comment after the dinner on what the two talked about.

Earlier Monday, as he was preparing to leave Chicago, Jackson said "matters of great substance" remain to be resolved with Dukakis, including the party's platform and who the Democrats will put on the ticket with Dukakis.

Jackson has openly sought an invitation to be on the ticket with Dukakis, but has not said publicly whether he would accept such an offer if it were made.

Paper says Dukakis limits choice of running mate to Bentsen, Glenn HOUSTON (AP) — Michael Dukakis is leaning toward the selection of Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen or Ohio Sen. John Glenn as his Democratic running mate, the Houston Chronicle reported today.

The newspaper quoted two sources close to the Dukakis campaign, who spoke on the condition of anonymity. The sources cautioned that the decision has not been made, but said that Dukakis indicates he will choose one of the two senators, both from critical states.

Dukakis and Bentsen have scheduled a Friday campaign appearance in Texas.

Bentsen has said he is not interested in the vice presidency and doesn't want to be offered the position, but his name has consistently been mentioned among those getting serious consideration.

One source said Dukakis is considering that the Democrats have never won the White House without carrying Texas, but also that Bentsen might not clinch the state which George Bush, the certain Republican nominee, calls home.

Polls indicate Bush is leading in Texas, but that putting Bentsen on the ticket would boost Dukakis' chances.

Dukakis also is reportedly considering that the Republicans have never won the White House without carrying Ohio, and that Glenn likely could clinch that state.

Speculation about Dukakis' chances in Texas was high, as a plane load of Texas natural gas producers arrived in Boston for a meeting today with New England utility companies and other natural gas consumers. Though organizers insist the meeting was not designed to promote Dukakis, it highlighted his energy policy for Texas — to open New England markets for Texas natural gas.

Texas Railroad Commissioner John Sharp, Dukakis' Texas campaign chairman, and a conference organizer, said all Texas statewide elected officials were invited, but only Democrats went.

The Democrats have agreed on a platform, but Jackson has indicated his forces may bring several issues to the convention floor when the Democrats meet later this month in Atlanta.

Poll ranks education top election issue

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The public ranks the quality of education as the No. 1 issue in this year's presidential campaign, according to a Gallup Poll being released today.

Asked to rate 13 foreign and domestic policy issues on a scale of 1-5, with 5 representing a "most important issue," 77 percent rated public education at least a 4.

Sixty-six percent of the 2,113 Americans surveyed by telephone between March 31 and April 20 said they would be more likely to support a candidate who favored increased federal aid to public schools.

Those were among the findings of an annual survey of public attitudes about school issues commissioned by the National Education Association, the 1.9 million-member teacher union holding its annual convention here this week.

"The American people understand the need for change. And they clearly indicate, in this poll, that they want to make education a national priority," said NEA executive director Don Cameron.

In San Francisco on Monday, delegates to the American Federation of Teachers' annual convention re-elected Albert Shanker unopposed to his eighth two-year term as president of the 677,000-member union.

The 3,000 delegates were to end their four-day meeting today after listening to a talk via satellite from Boston by Michael Dukakis, Democratic presidential candidate.

In the poll, drugs ranked second in importance behind education, with 75 percent rating drugs 4 or 5. Sixty-nine percent rated U.S. ability to compete economically and technologically as a critical issue.

The federal deficit and homelessness each were cited as most important by 67 percent, and AIDS by 66 percent.

Twenty-nine percent said "politicians and public officials not doing enough to provide necessary funding" is the chief obstacle to school reform. School administrators who "can't decide on the right way to achieve the goals of reform" were blamed by 25 percent. Only 16 percent blamed teachers or teacher unions.

Seventy-one percent felt schools are having trouble attracting new teachers. But 68 percent opposed lowering standards by allowing college graduates with no formal teacher training to work in public schools.

The poll had a sampling margin of error of plus or minus 2 percentage points.

It was released a day after 8,227 NEA delegates overwhelmingly endorsed NEA President Mary Hatwood Futrell's pet proposal that urged the naming of at least one school district per state as "learning laboratories" where teachers or anyone else with good ideas could freely experiment and take the lead in creating better schools.

AFT delegates ratified a similar program of school experimentation, calling for establishment of thousands of "schools within schools" where groups of six or more teachers could try innovative ideas free of bureaucratic meddling.

Both proposals drew immediate criticism from Assistant U.S. Secretary of Education Chester Finn.

"That they are willing to admit that things aren't hunky-dory in schools, that much is good," he said in a telephone interview. "But the bad part is that they seem to suggest that we need to have a vast experiment, as if we didn't know or have the faintest idea of what works in schools."

Even some teachers expressed doubts about the NEA reform proposal.

"I'm a little afraid that it may be just another experiment. It could be limited to districts that are already innovating," said Kathleen Conklin, who teaches English at Malcolm X. Shabazz High School in Madison, Wis.

The NEA gathering hit an emotional peak with an appearance by 16-year-old Ryan White, the boy with AIDS who gained national attention with his fight to have a normal public school education.

"Teachers can play an important role in helping an AIDS student be accepted and treated as normal as possible by teaching the facts, not the myths," he said. "By proper education, AIDS can be a disease, not a dirty word."

Couple to help police buy guns

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — City officials say there isn't enough money to replace police pistols with semiautomatic weapons, but a retired couple has cooked up a plan to raise the dough.

John and Virginia Sica, both retired schoolteachers, plan to organize bake sales and car washes to help buy new weapons.

"It just isn't right to send a man out in a car with six rounds when he might face a man with 15 rounds," Sica said.

The couple got the idea for the bake sales after hearing two police groups, the Police Patrolmen's Association and the Black Law Enforcement Officers, were launching a petition drive to encourage officials to approve the purchase of semiautomatic weapons.

Police say the service revolvers they carry are no match for the weapons carried by some criminals, especially drug dealers. Those guns fire 14 to 17 rounds before they must be reloaded.

City officials say it would cost about $250,000 to buy semiautomatic guns and ammunition for the more than 400 officers on the force.

So they plan to phase in the guns, first arming special units such as the SWAT team.

But Sica, who served for several years as a part-time sheriff's deputy in Summit County, is concerned about officers' safety now.

"The odds are too much against the policeman," he said. Car washes and bake sales "are used constantly as a means to obtain money for worthy causes, and this cause is certainly in that category," Mrs. Sica said.

Missing sub may have been found

PEARL HARBOR, Hawaii (AP) — An object in about 800 feet of water outside the mouth of Pearl Harbor might be a Japanese submarine believed sunk hours before the attack on Dec. 7, 1941, authorities said.

"It could be anything," said Bill Dickinson, superintendent of the USS Arizona Memorial Park. "Even a bunch of old drums in a line. But it looks promising."

Sonar pings produced a shape that matches what is known about midget submarines involved in the Japanese attack, Dickinson said, adding that it was in a "high probability area for the midget sub."

"It's going to take a lot more to confirm what's down there," he said. "First, we have to locate the resources to pay for a search and then convince the University of Hawaii or National Geographic or somebody else with deep-diving equipment to go down and take a look."

"That's the only way the mystery will be solved," he said. In the predawn hours before the Japanese launched their surprise air assault on Pearl Harbor and other military bases on the island of Oahu, the destroyer USS Ward spotted something odd in the water leading to the harbor entrance.

It was one of five midget subs involved in the attack and was trying to slip into the harbor. Each sub had a two-man crew and two torpedoes.

The Ward fired shells at the intruder, apparently hitting the conning tower, and then blanketed the area with depth charges.

Nothing more was seen of the sub and it remains the only one of the five unaccounted for.

The underwater object was detected Friday during a survey of Pearl Harbor and surrounding waters as a cooperative effort of the Navy and the National Parks Service with funds from the Arizona Memorial Museum.

It is being done to fulfill a federal requirement that historic artifacts in a national historic landmark be catalogued.
