NBC intern winds up on 'Donahue'

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

One Midland High graduate's four-month New York adventure wound up on national TV Tuesday as D'Lane Runkles took a prominent seat on Phil Donahue's talk show panel. Ms. Runkles, a junior at Southwestern University in Georgetown, Texas, has spent the last four months in "the Big Apple," working as an intern at NBC Television and "taking advantage of all the TV opportunities there were."

That included sitting in as a member of the studio audiences of several shows taped live at NBC headquarters in 30 Rockefeller Center in Manhattan. Saturday Night Live, which was "so active — tearing down and setting up sets all the time," was Ms. Runkles' favorite, but she also attended tapings of Late Night with David Letterman and several Donahue shows. Donahue audiences at one show are often tapped as potential panelists for future shows. "At the end of taping last Monday's program, the executive producer came out in the audience and bounced around a few topics for future shows," she recalled. One of the topics brought up was "rival friendships."

"I thought of my new friend Lynda Berge from Michigan and how much fun it would be to be on the show and I filled out the card," Ms. Runkles remembered.

The next day — last Tuesday — was Ms. Runkles' last day on the set of the Today show where she had worked as an intern since January. But she stopped back in on Wednesday to "say good-bye" and found a message from Marty Ryan, Donahue's executive producer.

"She wanted to 'pre-interview' us to see if we would make good guests for the show," titled "Best Friends...Worst Enemies."

Protesters arrested outside of court

WASHINGTON (AP) — The politically charged battle over abortion reached a Supreme Court showdown today with demonstrators arrested outside the court as the justices heard arguments in a Missouri dispute that has seized the nation's attention.

Twenty-four people were arrested, a court spokesman said. All were charged with unlawful entry for crossing police lines, a misdemeanor carrying a maximum 60 days in jail and $100 fine.

Hundreds of demonstrators, "pro-life" and "pro-choice" activists and would-be courtroom spectators gathered outside the court's Capitol Hill building this morning, enlivening the normally tranquil scene.

"I'm here to see history," said Jordy Green of South Stafford, Vt., a sophomore at Dartmouth College who arrived at 6 p.m. Tuesday to assure himself a courtroom seat.

"I've been rather uneducated on this issue. I guess I'm neutral and trying to learn more about it," Green said.

Classmate Clay Fong, from Alameda, Calif., said he was attending as a strong supporter of abortion rights.

"If the constitutional right to abortion were taken away it would have a devastating impact on the country," Fong said. "American individual rights are at a crossroads."

First in line was Brad Schranke of Seattle, a University of Washington engineering student who arrived at the court at 3 p.m. Tuesday.

"I believe that God is the creator and man has no right to take a life God has created," Schranke said. "The baby has to have the choice."

By 8 a.m., court police had given numbers to 175 people hoping to witness the argument session.

Nearby, demonstrators peaceably displayed competing banners and placards while standing on the steps leading to the court plaza, kept off court property by a police barricade.

"Keep Abortion Legal," "Women Must Have the Right to Choose" and "Abortion is Murder" some of the signs said.

Missouri officials and the Bush administration are urging that today's case be used to overturn or curtail the court's landmark 1973 decision that women have a constitutional right to abortion.

Even if the court rules on the Missouri abortion regulations narrowly, the decision will be viewed as a barometer of the current justices' commitment to the 16-year-old ruling in Roe vs. Wade.

Justices appointed under former President Reagan have strengthened the court's conservative wing, which is skeptical of the wisdom and continued vitality of the landmark decision.

The justices will take their initial vote in the Missouri case Friday, discussing their views and beginning the process of drafting and redrafting opinions to accompany the announcement of the court's decision, expected by July.

In an attempt to sway the justices, Americans in record numbers have been writing and telephoning the court to express their views. Tens of thousands of letters arrive each day, and the court's two switchboards were so flooded with calls that a rarely used third board had to be activated.

Investors may be cited for contempt

WASHINGTON (AP) — The senior Republican on the House ethics committee, angered at being snubbed by key witnesses in the case of House Speaker Jim Wright, suggested today that the panel might cite the witnesses for contempt.

"There are a lot of options. A contempt citation is one," said Rep. John Myers, R-Ind., who returned to Washington from a fruitless trip to San Antonio, Texas, with ethics committee Chairman Julian Dixon, D-Calif.

"We're in good faith trying to do what has to be done," Myers said, relating how he and Dixon had waited Tuesday to interview a group of five investors in a Texas gas well that yielded little gas but did produce large profits for Wright's blind trust.

A half-hour after the group failed to appear, a hotel employee came to inform the investigators that the witnesses weren't coming.

Lucille Ball dies

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Lucille Ball, the zany, wide-mouthed redhead who reigned for more than 20 years as the queen of television comedy, died today, a week after undergoing emergency heart surgery. She was 77.

The excitable star of "I Love Lucy" and similar situation comedies that continue in syndication around the world died of cardiac arrest at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, said hospital spokesman Ronald Wise.

Miss Ball, who had a heart attack and had throat surgery in 1988, underwent surgery at Cedars-Sinai to replace her aorta and aortic valve April 18 and had been getting out of bed, eating and even walking around the room in recent days.

"Lucille Ball is the greatest woman clown in the world," fellow comedian Milton Berle once said. "In fact, she is one of the great clowns of all time, male or female."

Miss Ball's singularity as a comedian was matched by her talent as a show-business entrepreneur. She and her former husband, the late Desi Arnaz, established one of TV's first major independent studios.

Desilu, as their production company was called, made some of the top comedy shows of the 1950s and '60s, including "December Bride," "Our Miss Brooks" and "Make Room for Daddy."

Council will remain intervenor in PUC investigation of SW Bell

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

City Council members Tuesday delayed supporting Southwestern Bell's proposed alternative to a Public Utility Commission inquiry into possible rate overcharges.

No official action was taken during the morning briefing session, but council members told a local Bell representative it would remain an intervenor in the PUC's four-month-old investigation.

The city of Midland has pooled its interests and resources with other Texas cities supporting the PUC inquiry.

Bell Area Manager Darlene Gifford asked the council Tuesday morning to withdraw its support of the investigation and pledge allegiance to "Texas First," a program the phone company suggested in response to the PUC charge.

For the last two months, Bell has approached chambers of commerce, economic development groups, cities and counties in an effort to gain grassroots support for Texas First.

The PUC is investigating the possibility Bell may have earned $90 million more than its mandated earnings-ceiling as a result of corporate tax breaks contained in the sweeping federal reforms of 1986.

The phone company is allowed a 12 percent clear profit from its estimated 6.2 million Texas customers.

Bell's figures reflect an above-ceiling profit of only $24 million or .37 percent, Ms. Gifford said.

In response to the PUC investigation which began Jan. 4, Bell suggested the matter be resolved by allow it to fund Texas First with its possible over-earnings.

Texas voters could limit attorney general's term

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — In a dramatic legislative turnabout, the House Tuesday approved letting Texas voters decide whether the attorney general should be limited to a single six-year term.

On April 12, the 150-member House approved the measure to final consideration on an 81-63 vote, a tally far short of the two-thirds majority necessary for final passage.

But Tuesday's final vote was 116-29 in favor, prompting sponsor Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen and chairman of the powerful House Calendars Committee, to declare that a "miracle" had occurred.

Texasans voting in favor of the proposed constitutional amendment also would endorse prohibiting the attorney general from seeking another elected office during his term or for two years thereafter.

In addition, Schlueter originally had sought a prohibition on the officeholder from collecting campaign contributions.

But Tuesday he allowed an amendment whereby money could be accepted during the attorney general's first year to help pay for his race. Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, voted in favor of the amendment because of the attorney general's power to write opinions that have the force of law and because of the "stepping stone" nature of the office.

Schlueter later denied pressuring members for a favorable vote in return for passing their bills out of the Calendars Committee, a necessary step before consideration by the full House.

However, at least one member, Rep. Henry Cuellar, D-Laredo, acknowledged the Calendars Committee connection was a "consideration" as he cast his favorable vote.

Former Midland City Councilman Gordon Marcum II was sworn in today as the city's new Associate Municipal Judge.

Marcum takes oath as associate municipal judge

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

During the 12 years he served as a city councilman, Gordon Marcum II helped author a study on ways to make Midland's Municipal Court better.

After being sworn in today as the city's new Associate Municipal Judge, he chuckled at the remembrance.

Marcum resigned his at-large council seat Tuesday and today took the oath of judicial office.

"It's unbelievable gang. Sometime come down and watch me," Marcum exclaimed today amid many well-wishers and city officials in City Secretary Bill Clanton's office.

The new judge had been in line for a federal post with either the U.S. Department of Energy or Interior, he'd announced earlier this year.

However, after receiving many confident-sounding "hurry up and wait" replies from federal officials, the new judge opted to remain in Midland, he explained this morning. "It most certainly is the high point of my career to serve the community as a judge," Marcum said today.

Mayor Carroll Thomas had mixed emotions today regarding Marcum's change of positions.

"This is a traumatic experience for the City Council. He's been a valuable member of the council and will be very much missed," the mayor lamented.

"But if he has to leave the council, I couldn't think of a better way to do it."

"I'm delighted on behalf of the city," the mayor said.

Prior to the swearing-in, 318th State District Judge Dean Rucker spoke about judicial responsibilities and claimed Marcum, an "outstanding citizen of this community," should have no trouble in his new role.

Presiding Municipal Judge Robin Smith echoed Rucker's sentiments.

"I don't think that's proper treatment for anyone," Myers told reporters. "We thought we'd get this behind us. But if they don't want to cooperate, they can slow us down, and they have."

Myers said the ethics committee would meet Thursday to discuss the status of the case, which has left Wright's position as speaker in jeopardy. He said failure of the Texas witnesses to appear raised questions about why they did not want to testify.

"Maybe there's something more to that," Myers said. "I think we have to look at this (with) even more scrutiny. Why didn't they want to appear?"

In the capital, Wright's colleagues continued to focus on charges that he sold bulk quantities of his book, "Reflections of a Public Man," to evade House limits on outside income. The speaker said he might consider giving the profits to charity if the ethics panel suggests it.

The ethics panel issued its findings in the 10-month investigation last week, formally charging Wright with 69 instances of violating House rules. The panel said he had improverly received $145,000 in gifts from a Fort Worth business partner with a direct interest in legislation, and had used bulk sales of a book he wrote to evade limits on outside income.

The panel is considering whether there is "clear and convincing" proof of the 69 alleged violations and, if so, whether to recommend disciplinary action to the House.

The committee left open one area of inquiry — how Wright's blind trust profited heavily from a one-day investment last May in the drilling venture at Sabine Lake, near the Texas-Louisiana line. Wright's investment partnership with developer George Mallick invested $9,120 cash in the well on May 10, then sold the interest later that day for a $340,000 profit even though oil and gas flows at the time had dwindled. The well later was abandoned.

The committee is studying "the amount of profit over a few hours' time," Myers said. "It doesn't look good."

In a letter to the committee, Washington attorney Stanley M. Brand argued that the panel was "overreaching" in commanding the testimony of five people he represents: San Antonio financier Morris Jaffe; his son, M.D. (Doug) Jaffe; investors Jeff Prestridge and Dave Myers; and Marilyn Cherry, Jaffe's bookkeeper.

The ethics committee said it wanted to determine whether Wright knew about the well deal, which involved the Jaffes, a West German-owned firm and the blind trust established for Wright in 1987, said Richard Phelan, the ethics committee's special outside counsel.

Wright contends he was ignorant of the deal because it occurred within his blind trust.

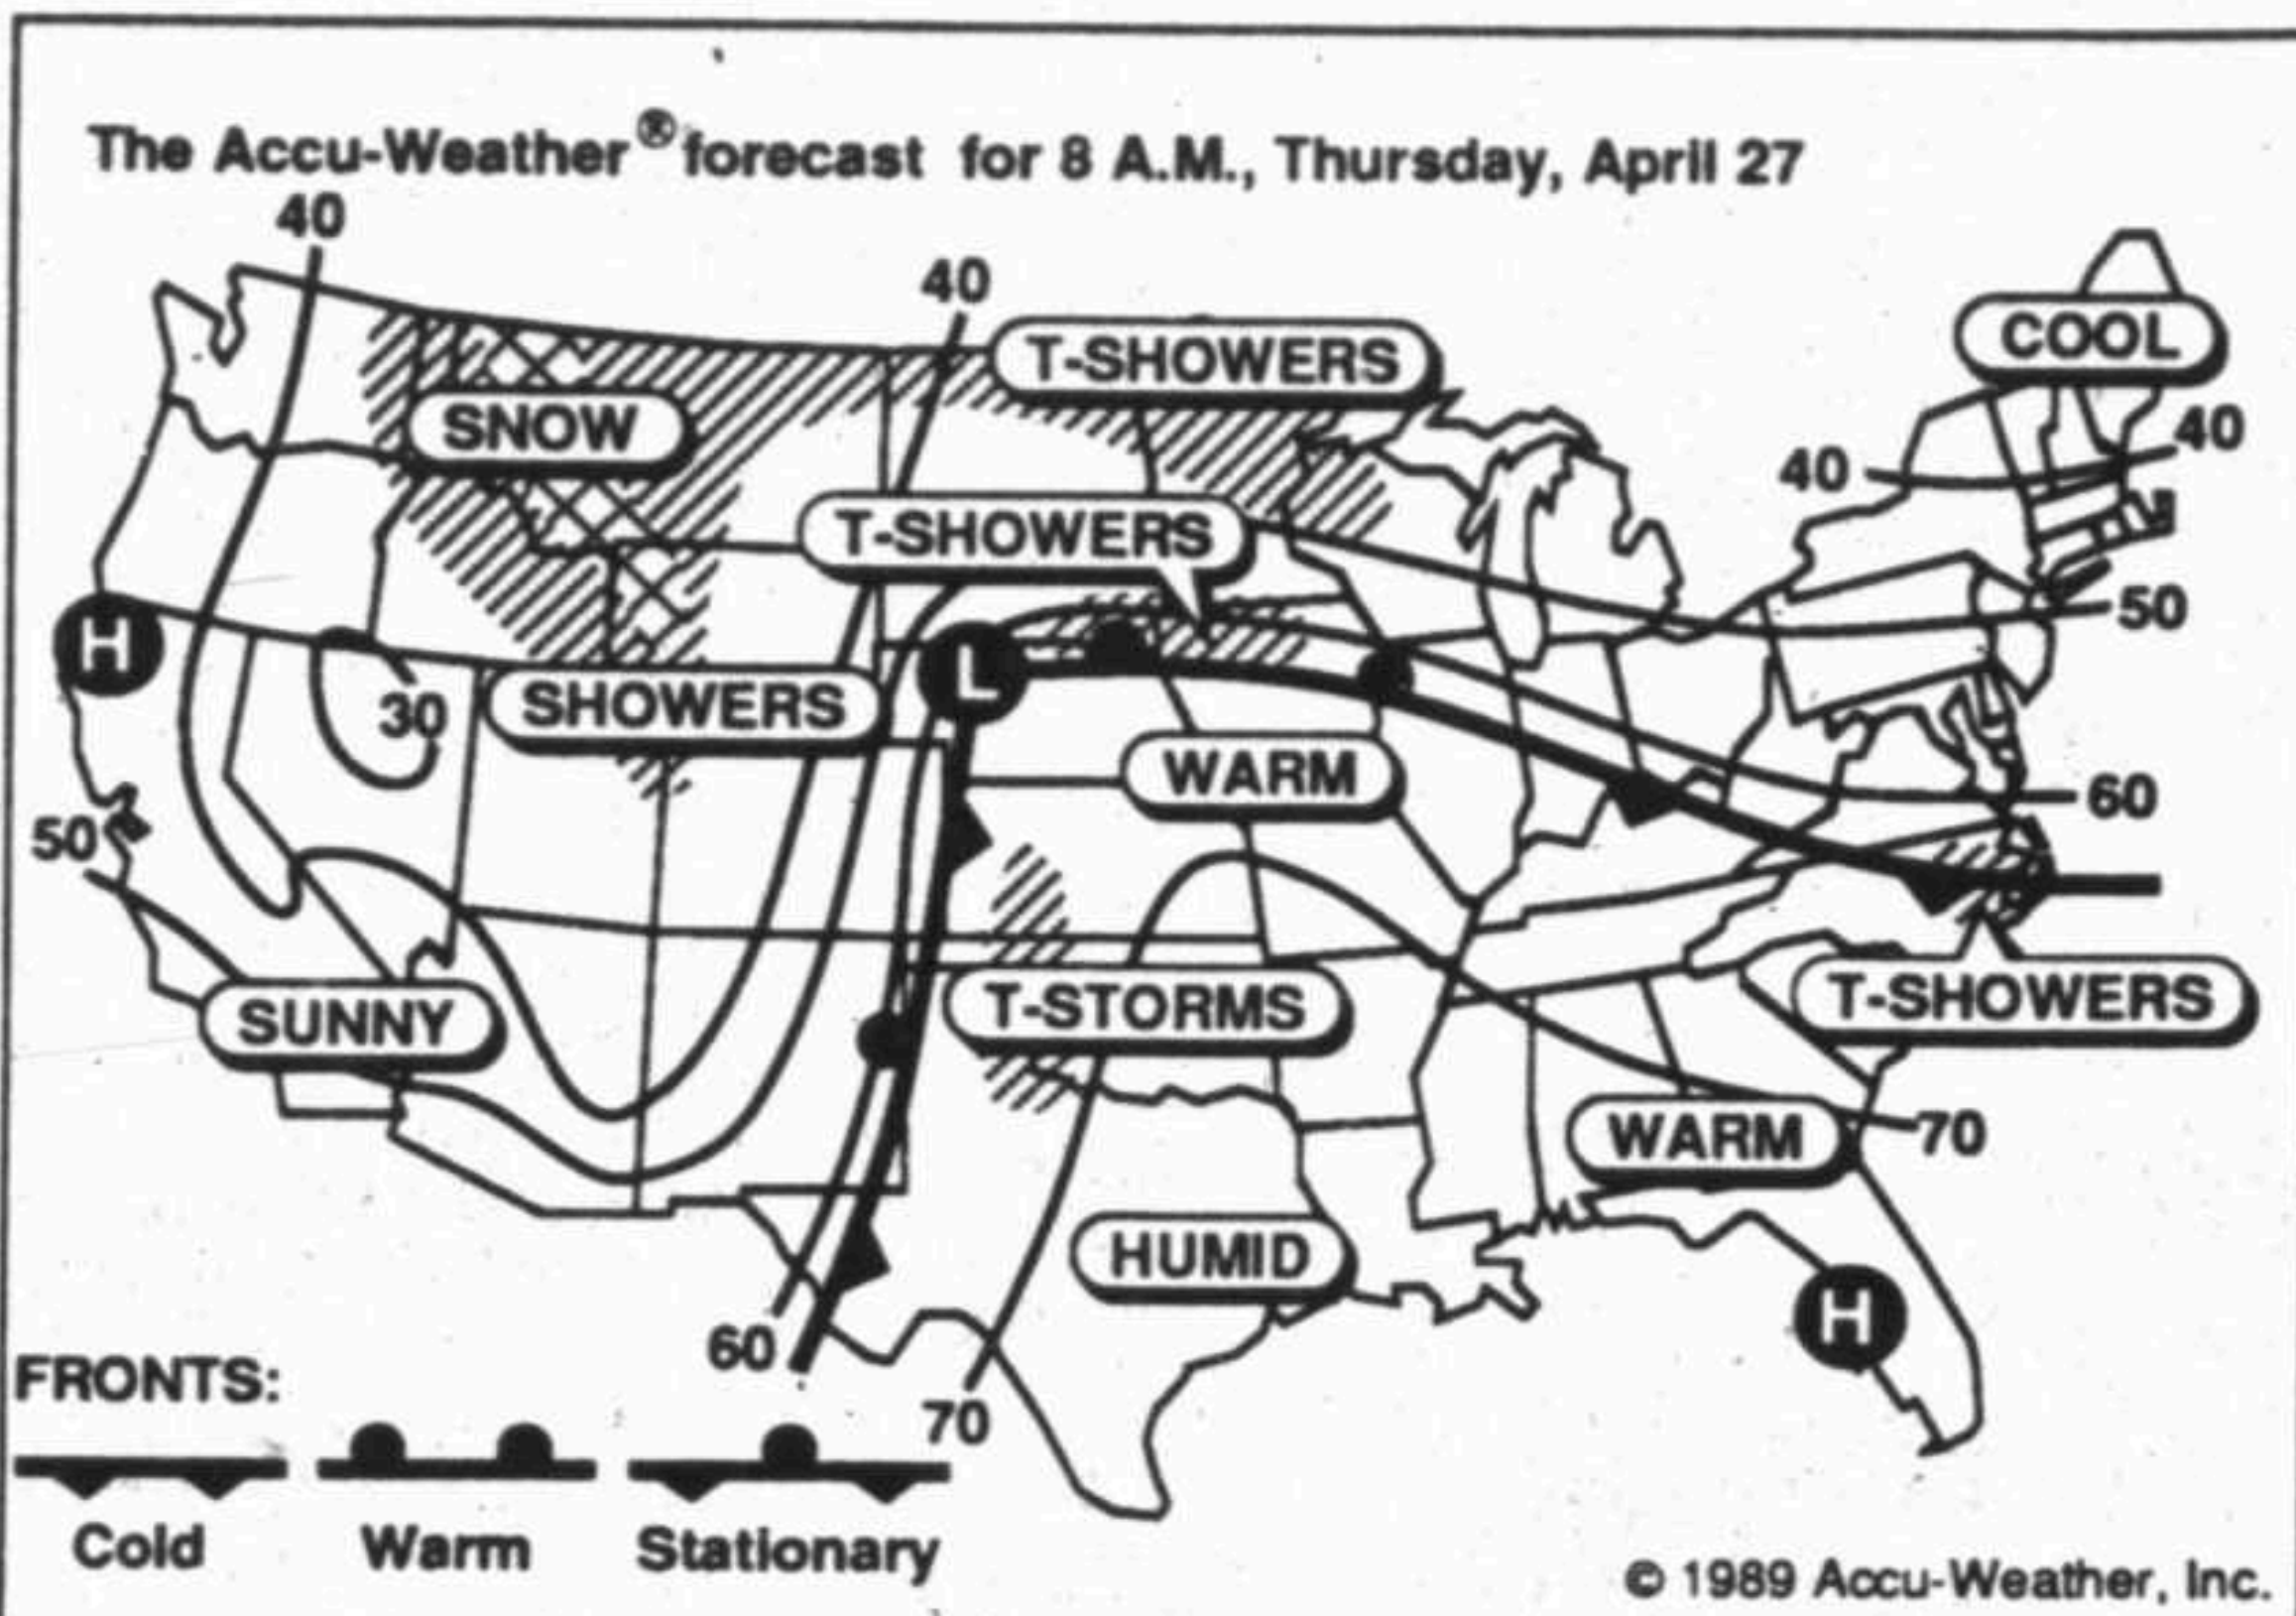

Brand, in the letter he released, argued that the drilling venture was outside the scope of the ethics committee's original resolution of inquiry voted last June 9.

"Serious legal questions are raised by the sheer overbreadth of these subpoenas," Brand wrote, adding that his clients were given just a week to prepare for their testimony.

The development threw another procedural roadblock in the way of the case, which already was bogged down in negotiations between Wright's lawyer, William Oldaker, and committee counsel Phelan over conditions for Wright to appear before the panel for a personal defense.

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Skies will be partly cloudy tonight with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms in the forecast, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be near 60 and winds will be out of the southwest at 10-20 mph.

Thursday will be mostly sunny and windy with westerly winds blowing from 15-25 mph. The high will be in the upper 80s.

Tuesday's high of 93 was five degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 98 set for that date in 1943. The overnight low of 60 was 23 degrees warmer than the record low temperature of 37 set for that date in 1946.

STATE

Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms are forecast across a vast area of Texas tonight and across all of the state except West Texas on Thursday.

Forecasters warn that some thunderstorms may reach severe levels in Northwest Texas tonight. There will also be showers and thunderstorms over western portions of North Texas and western areas of South Texas tonight.

Some fog was reported during the pre-dawn hours today in South Central Texas and along the coast. Low level clouds were reported over the eastern two-thirds of the state while the rest of the state had clear skies.

NATION

Thunderstorms from Indiana to North Carolina caused flooding that closed schools and forced residents from a nursing home today in West Virginia.

The storms, which also ripped off roofs and produced hail that dented trucks, dumped 4 inches in West Virginia, and an undetermined number of residents along the Elk River were evacuated, the National Weather Service said.

A bridge was closed at Bergamo, where the river level was a record 16 feet, about six feet above flood stage, and rising. Bergamo is 70 miles east of Charleston.

Further east, in mountainous Pocahontas County near the Virginia line, schools were closed and more than 60 people were evacuated this morning from a nursing home in Marlinton to a hospital after the Greenbrier River overflowed. Some areas of the state were hit Tuesday by half a dozen severe thunderstorms. A 75 mph wind caused the collapse of a house under construction in Lewisburg, killing a construction worker and injuring two.

In North Carolina, a thunderstorm near Durham toppled trees and ripped off roofs. Several homes were severely damaged.

High winds blew part of the roof off a Princeton, N.C., grocery store and damaged mobile homes. Selma, N.C., police said they had reports of a tornado that touched down on highways in Selma and Princeton.

A late-evening thunderstorm at Richlands, N.C., produced half-inch hail and high winds.

A night thunderstorm in Ohio blew the roofs of two houses in Xenia and damaged at least six other homes. Fewer than 20 people were treated at Greene Memorial Hospital for minor injuries, a nursing supervisor said.

Skies were fair early today over Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico, New England, much of the Mississippi Valley and much of the Southeast.

The fellow scholarship winners made fast friends, despite completely disparate backgrounds. "She's liberal, grew up in the suburbs and has volunteered to do missionary work in South America. I grew up conservative, in Midland and want to be a success in business."

"If we had met at college, I don't think we ever would have become friends, but as two 'outsiders' in New York, we just 'hit it off.' And despite our backgrounds, we're very much alike: strong-minded, competitive and outspoken."

The rest, as they say, is history — and videotape.

"It's fun, and it's funny," she said, immediately after watching herself during the local broadcast late Tuesday afternoon on KMDI-TV.

"My greatest concern was that, because all my friends in New York teased me about my accent, that I would come off as the biggest hick...but I don't think I did," she said with a soft drawl and a winning smile.

Neither did her proud parents — Wayne and Linda Runkles — beaming from the couch across the room. "It's just a continuation of the track she's long been on," said her father.

As testament to their value as prime-time stars, Miss Ball and Arnaz signed an $8 million, no-cancellation, two-year contract with CBS in 1953 — the largest in television history at the time and a figure scarcely any TV star can touch 36 years later.

The actress was last seen introducing the "Young Hollywood" production number with Bob Hope at the 61st Academy Awards ceremony March 29, receiving a standing ovation. Looking svelte for her years in a fashionable silk skirt, she seemed to be in good health and laughed freely throughout a brief routine with Hope.

Her last series — "Life with Lucy," co-starring frequent sidekick Gale Gordon — was carried by ABC at the start of the 1966 season. But the show, Miss Ball's first series in 12 years, was canceled after less than two months when it drew spectacularly low ratings. The actress "felt terrible. It really devastated her," daughter Lucie Arnaz said at the time.

Miss Ball also played a bag lady in the 1985 TV movie "Stone Pillow," considered one of the most challenging roles of her career. She was hospitalized for dehydration when it was over, but the movie was a minor critical and ratings success.

Despite her remarkable popularity, Miss Ball was one of the few stars in television's golden age who did not go on to have an extensive theatrical film career.

Her timing, wails and pratfalls made the "I Love Lucy" show one of the most popular in television history.

Bridge clubs and bowling teams changed their meeting nights to watch Lucy Ricardo and her sidekick, Ethel Mertz (the late Vivian Vance), come up with another hare-brained scheme to drive their long-suffering husbands, Ricky and Fred, to desperation.

A Chicago department store changed the night it stayed open because shoppers were staying home in front of the television.

Miss Ball's real, onscreen pregnancy marked a milestone in television, and an estimated 44 million viewers tuned in on Jan. 19, 1953, the night Lucy Ricardo delivered Little Ricky.

Her real son was born just four hours before the previously filmed show was broadcast.

Miss Ball remained a worldwide favorite through the breakup of her 20-year marriage to Arnaz, who played husband Ricky Ricardo in "I Love Lucy."

Miss Ball was born on Aug. 6, 1911, in Celeron, N.Y., the daughter of an electrician and a concert pianist.

Young Lucy, a brunette, was dazzled by the stage, but her ambitions were discouraged by an acting school — "They sent my mother a letter saying she was wasting her money" — and she turned to modeling under the name Diane Belmont.

Her ads for Chesterfield cigarettes caught the attention of Hollywood, and in 1933 she was off to California. As a blonde, she appeared with the Marx Brothers in "Room Service," with Fred Astaire in "Follow the Fleet" and with Katharine Hepburn and Ginger Rogers in "Stage Door."

In 1940, her tresses now the fiery trademark red, Miss Ball met Arnaz, a rumba star. They married within six months.

In 1951, when CBS decided to move her radio series, "My Favorite Husband," to television, Miss Ball insisted that Arnaz be her co-star. But the network wasn't sure Arnaz would be a hit with the American public.

Under the terms of the campaign, certain phone rates would be frozen or decreased over the next five years and communication technology would be improved in rural areas.

In addition the PUC would allow Bell a yearly profit margin between 11 and 13 percent which would allow more flexibility in the company's promotions and investment endeavors.

"There may well be merit in some of the Texas First plan," noted Bill Dunn, a PUC spokesman in Austin. "But the key element is that we've got to establish whether the Southwestern Bell rates are reasonable."

The PUC will continue its investigation of the possible overcharges.

D'Lane served as student council president at Midland High before she graduated in 1986.

D'Lane and Lynda shared the Donahue stage with two other pairs of friends — two sisters, whose friendship had to overcome intense sibling rivalry, and childhood buddies who later became business partners, rivals and friends and a professor who has recently written a book on the topic.

"She said, 'Sorry, I'm not in it more,'" Linda Runkles recounted. "I said, 'You didn't expect it to be just you and Phil?'"

"I sure would have liked it better that way," said the theater and communication major, whose participation in the Great Lakes College Association liberal arts program got her to New York in the first place.

Her fourth-month stint behind the scenes at Today was "a total dream internship," a chance to meet her idol — Jane Pauley. It was also a combination of bubbly personality, persistence with interviewers and a stroke of luck that landed her the job.

She recalls being "in awe at first" of all the show's "talent," but gradually got used to rubbing shoulders with some of the best-known personalities on TV today.

Having her arm in a cast made

D'Lane stand out among the sizeable staff and worked as an ice-breaker. "The first time Bryant Gumbel spoke to me, he came up and knocked on the cast and asked how I did it," she said.

Of the other Today regulars she said: "Weatherman" Willard (Scott) was wonderful...he's just like he is on the air, friendly and light-hearted.

"Movie critic" Gene Shalit is just a nut, always kidding around."

Her internship overlapped with a most "interesting time to be on the set," when Gumbel's critical internal memo was being banded about in the press.

The staff was inundated with viewer mail, much of it "Willard fan mail and a few very critical of Bryant," she said. The producers answered all the letters, "so I got to be an expert at envelope stuffing."

As for her hero, Ms. Pauley, in the early weeks of the internship, Ms. Runkles saw little of her. "She goes straight into the studio, directly to her office to do any writing she has to do and then home. All of her home work is messaged to her to review for the next day's show," D'Lane explained.

But near the end of her network tenure, she got to know her broadcasting role model better, and it was all she had hoped. "She's so profes-

"Many people have indicated they've been asked to call by televangelists," court spokeswoman Toni House said. "These people believe we are conducting a public opinion survey. We are not."

Between 150 and 200 members of the public usually can be seated in the imposing courtroom on a first-come, first-served basis.

But because the justices and other court officials have reserved an unusually high number of seats for friends and family members, only 40 to 50 seats were available for the general public, Ms. House said.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist refused to allow radio and television coverage of the proceedings.

Man convicted on DNA evidence, prosecutor says

CLEBURNE (AP) — A prosecutor says an Arlington man didn't count on genetic fingerprinting being used to convict him for the butchering of two Arlington sisters and a teen-age boy who was staying with their family.

Prosecutors used evidence from a DNA test the defendant believed would prove he was innocent to obtain a conviction of Ronald Trimboli, 44, in the June 17, 1985, stabbing deaths of Danielle Lemieux, 14; her sister, Renee, 12; and John Bradley, 17, who moved into the girls' home the day before the slayings.

A Johnson County jury was the third to hear evidence against the former pizza cook. His first trial in Tarrant County ended in mistrial when it was learned a relative of one of the victims had talked to a juror, and a second trial, also in Johnson County, ended as a mistrial when jurors could not reach a verdict.

The jury of nine men and three women return to court today to decide punishment for Trimboli, who faces a maximum of life in prison on each of the three murder charges.

Defense lawyer Bill Lane said the conviction would be appealed.

"We're not through yet," Lane said.

Trimboli had sought the DNA testing, even demanding it, saying it would prove he was innocent.

When the results of the test showed Trimboli matched the DNA or "genetic fingerprinting" of semen found beneath the body of Danielle Lemieux, defense lawyers sought to prevent testimony about the tests.

State District Judge John MacLean allowed the testimony from 12 experts who testified for the prosecution and from a number of experts who testified for the defense and attempted to discredit the type of test used in the case.

Lane said he will appeal the verdict on numerous grounds, including the inclusion of the genetic tests that prosecution experts said conclusively linked Trimboli to Danielle's rape.

Lane was brought into the Trimboli case after the defense received the results of the test.

"I still believe that the test conclusively showed that he (Trimboli) was not the semen donor," Lane said.

"Sure, we'll appeal. There are a lot of issues that need to be reviewed by a higher court."

Prosecutor Bob Gill said the DNA test, explained by a dozen renowned scientists, is "a reliable and valid test that I think will be accepted by the appeals courts."

Gill said he believed jurors understood and accepted the highly technical DNA testimony.

"I'd say that's the thing that got this case off dead-center," Gill said.

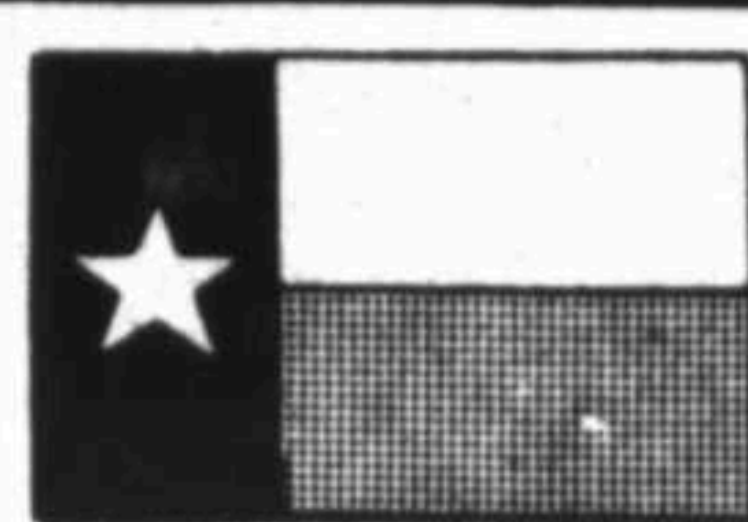

"The DNA was very powerful and very damaging evidence. It linked him (Trimboli) directly to one of the slaying victims."

During closing arguments Tuesday morning, defense attorneys tried to discredit the DNA evidence along with other circumstantial evidence linking Trimboli to the slayings.

Prosecutor Alan Levy ridiculed the defense effort to attempt to show that the expert prosecution witnesses conspired to help find Trimboli guilty.

Trimboli displayed little emotion at the verdict.

"I am not guilty," Trimboli said as he was escorted from the courtroom to his jail cell.

Book dealer's death ruled homicide

BASTROP (AP) — A ruling of homicide has been made in the death of rare-book dealer John Jenkins, but Bastrop County Sheriff Con Keirse says he is convinced that Jenkins waded into the Colorado River and shot himself in the back of the head.

Bastrop County Justice of the Peace Bill Henderson ruled Tuesday that Jenkins' death was a homicide. He said he based his ruling on his analysis of the path of the bullet that killed Jenkins and the fact that authorities have not found the weapon.

Jenkins, 40, was found floating in the river west of Bastrop on April 16. His Rolex watch, hundreds of dollars in cash and his credit cards were missing, and his gold Mercedes Benz had been abandoned near the water's edge.

Law enforcement officers, including Keirse, still stand by the suicide theory, saying Jenkins had discussed several possible scenarios in which a person could kill himself and make it appear like murder.

They also reiterated that Jenkins had numerous debts and faced additional questioning about a 1987 arson that destroyed his book warehouse. "I am not convinced that the path of the bullet could have been done by the man (Jenkins)," Henderson said.

"I wanted to conduct a very thorough investigation before I ruled anything, and I did," Henderson said. "I wanted to check out all the angles. I believe we are looking for a killer, and I am very comfortable in that ruling."

But Keirse said Tuesday night he still has no doubt that Jenkins took his own life. He said Jenkins died of a gunshot that was fired into the right side of his head and exited through the left side. He said the gun was placed against Jenkins' head before the trigger was pulled.

"I don't think he (Henderson) studied the facts," Keirse said.

Bill to renew animal panel 'pig in Senate's poke'

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A bill to renew the Animal Health Commission became a potential pawn in the fight to keep the Texas Department of Agriculture under an elected commissioner.

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, who sponsored the bill to reauthorize the relatively innocuous Animal Health Commission, was surprised Tuesday when the 19-11 vote fell short of the two-thirds needed under Senate rules to bring up the bill for debate.

The blockade came after Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, suggested the commission, which is responsible for control of diseases that affect livestock and poultry, might more appropriately be made a part of the embattled Department of Agriculture.

Sims, who supports making the agriculture commissioner an appointed office, said he would rather have the Department of Agriculture placed under the 12-member Animal Health Commission, which is named by the governor.

A separate bill to reauthorize the Department of Agriculture under controversial elected Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower has passed the Senate and is awaiting action by the House of Representatives, but Hightower's supporters are concerned Gov. Bill Clements will veto the bill, taking away Hightower's power base.

After Tuesday's vote, Sims said he was confident the Senate would end up approving the Animal Health Commission as a separate agency.

"They're using me as a sacrificial pig," he said of the delay. "We'll just wait until something gets taken care of."

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, said senators who blocked the Animal Health Commission "just want to get a signal from the governor what he wants to do."

Parker added, "If we want an appointed commission, maybe we ought to put all the agriculture functions under one (commission) in the interests of good government."

A Senate minority also blocked one of Parker's bills that would have required school boards to consult with teacher organizations on policy matters.

Parker doubted he would bring up Senate Bill 478 again after the 18-11 vote. "The members of the Senate were pretty adamant about it," he said.

Sen. Bill Haley, D-Center, opposed the bill, saying one group should not speak for all teachers.

Parker said the fact that teacher groups were split over the bill hurt its chances for passage.

Also, some critics objected that the bill would amount to recognition of a teacher's union and lead to collective bargaining.

"It does not require negotiations and it does not require collective bargaining," Parker said. "It just requires that (school officials) meet with them and hear their grievances."

Suicide of Takeshita's aide possibly linked to scandal

TOKYO (AP) — An aide who served Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita for 31 years and handled scandal-tainted donations that helped sink Takeshita's career committed suicide today.

Police said Ihei Aoki, 58, who had served Takeshita since 1958, was found dead at his apartment in Tokyo. He had slashed a wrist and an ankle with a razor and hanged himself, they said, and he left notes to his wife and several other people, including the prime minister.

Takeshita appeared shocked by the death. He told reporters he had not seen Aoki's note but thought it was possible the suicide was linked to the long-running Recruit scandal. "I strongly regret (his action). We walked side by side for over 30 years," said Takeshita, who announced Tuesday he would resign soon to take responsibility for his and his party's involvement in the scandal.

Aoki's name, rather than Takeshita's, appeared on loans and share dealings with the Recruit Co. that now are under suspicion both for political ethics and bribery. The company, an information services conglomerate, is accused of trying to buy influence with politicians, bureaucrats, business leaders and media executives.

Prosecutors had questioned Aoki several times. So far, 14 people face charges in the Recruit scandal but none of them is a politician or political aide like Aoki.

Last weekend, news reports said Aoki had accepted a $394,000 loan from the Recruit Co. in 1987, when Takeshita was campaigning to succeed Yasuhiro Nakasone as prime minister. The money, which was paid back, was said to have been used in the campaign.

The revelation of the loan embarrassed Takeshita because he did not include it in a report to Parliament on April 11, when he said he had received more than $1 million in legal political donations from Recruit. The loan forced him to change his account of his involvement with the controversial company, and two days later Takeshita announced his decision to resign.

Takeshita did not blame Aoki in his departure statement, but news reports Monday said he had not known of the loan at the time he spoke to Parliament because his aide had not informed him of it until Saturday.

In 1976, a driver who had carried bribery cash committed suicide after the emergence of the Lockheed scandal that led to former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka's conviction of bribery.

Meanwhile, political factions in the governing Liberal Democratic Party were consulting about a successor to Takeshita, who said he would not leave office until Parliament passes the 1989 budget, likely some time next month.

The most frequently mentioned candidate was Masayoshi Ito, 75, a former foreign minister, who has appeared reluctant to take up the post at a time of political crisis. He said Tuesday the post should go to a younger person.

The Yomiuri Shimbun newspaper reported today that Ito was the choice agreed upon at meetings late Tuesday between Takeshita and other party leaders.

The daily Asahi Shimbun said a majority of governing party members judged Ito as the only appropriate candidate because he is untainted by the scandal.

The Recruit Co. is accused of seeking influence and favors by selling prelisted shares in a subsidiary at bargain prices to politicians, bureaucrats, business leaders and media executives.

Takeshita, through Aoki and a relative, was a recipient of such shares, which skyrocketed in value after they went on sale to the public in late 1986.

Profits from selling the shares reportedly went into political funds — not only Takeshita's, but Nakasone's and those of other top leaders of the Liberal Democrats.

Aoki received 2,000 of the shares, which yielded a profit of about $30,000.

The wide swath of Recruit's donations, loans and share transactions cut through the political leadership have made it difficult for the Liberal Democrats to find a replacement for Takeshita.

Lottery jackpot reaches $100 million

SNOW SHOE, Pa. (AP) — Hundreds of truckers and other travelers got off Interstate 80 looking for Easy Street. Even the winners of a $46 million prize took a chance on tonight's North American record $100 million lottery jackpot.

"You got to dream," said Daniel Moelling, of Clayton, Ill., a trucker who bought five Super 7 tickets in this central Pennsylvania town Tuesday.

Dreams abounded in Pennsylvania as $24.35 million in lottery sales Tuesday topped the state's single-day record and brought the total sales since Thursday to $67.26 million. Sales of the dollar tickets end about two minutes before the 6:59 p.m. drawing.

Because of the huge crush of sales, lottery official Michael Keyser said the number of winning tickets, if any, would not be known until Friday.

But Kenny Kelly, a trucker hauling commercial carpets, had no doubts at a truck-stop restaurant on the Allegheny Plateau.

"I've got the winning ticket. I've been praying," he joked.

Even Donald Woomer and Linda Despot, a Hollidaysburg couple who won a $46 million jackpot in 1987, got caught up. Woomer said he bought 100 tickets for this week's Super 7, but he's not crossing his fingers he'll win.

"Nobody would want to play anymore if we won again," he said by telephone from his home near Altoona.

numbers between 1 and 80. If all seven of those numbers are among the 11 selected, the ticket wins the jackpot. Lottery officials put the chances of having the only winning ticket at one in 9.6 million.

Super 7 reached its staggering nine-figure jackpot because no one picked the winning numbers for six consecutive weekly drawings. The jackpot starts at a minimum of $2 million and rolls over to the next drawing.

A single winner of the $100 million would receive almost $3.85 million a year for 26 years before taxes, lottery officials said.

The world's largest lottery jackpot, Spain's El Gordo, or "the fat one," was recorded in December when hundreds of players split $150 million. The previous North American record was $69.9 million in Illinois for the April 15th drawing. That prize was shared by the owners of four tickets.

Some out-of-state players drove into Pennsylvania and some even flew commercial flights into Pittsburgh and Philadelphia for a chance to win the gigantic jackpot.

In south-central Pennsylvania's Adams County, an elderly man passed out after waiting four hours at the Snyder's Market in Littlestown to buy a single ticket. Gerri Foster, a clerk at the store, said the unidentified man was treated by an ambulance crew called to the scene and left the store on a stretcher, clutching his ticket.

"We gave him his ticket and saw that he got it before the ambulance arrived," she said.

Transcript describes Hawaiian flight

SEATTLE (AP) — The crew of United Flight 811 struggled with their crippled jetliner for eight minutes before they realized passengers had been swept to their deaths through a giant hole in the plane, a transcript shows.

The transcript from the cockpit recorder was released Tuesday as the National Transportation Safety Board opened a three-day hearing into why the forward cargo door and part of the fuselage tore off shortly after the plane left Honolulu on Feb. 24. Nine passengers were killed.

Eight minutes after the trouble began, flight engineer Mark Thomas returned to the cockpit after inspecting the damage.

"The right side is gone...it's just open. You're just lookin' outside," Thomas told pilot David Cronin and co-pilot Al Slader.

"Looks like a bomb," he said.

"Fuselage?" Slader asked.

"Yes, fuselage, it's just open," Thomas said. "Some people are probably gone. I don't know."

Six seconds of silence followed, then the crew frantically discussed flying the plane.

At the hearing, Boeing engineer James Fitzgerald testified that the 747's 800-pound cargo doors are safe.

More than a dozen times during the past six years Boeing 747s turned back in flight because of indications that a cargo bay door was open, federal investigators said.

Administration agrees to charge Exxon for oil spill damage

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration has agreed to assess Exxon Corp. for oil spill damage to Alaska's natural resources according to guidelines that already are under court challenge for allegedly being too easy on polluters.

The decision comes despite administration promises to seek "complete restoration" of losses from the Exxon Valdez tanker spill that has fouled Alaska's wildlife-rich Prince William Sound.

Interior Department officials acknowledged in interviews Tuesday that the government has agreed to use guidelines giving polluters the option of paying only the "market value" of resources they destroy, rather than the cost of replacing them.

Under the rules, for example, a seabird with little potential for commercial exploitation might be declared to be worth just a few dollars.

Several environmental groups were expected to send a letter today to Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan Jr., saying the rules could severely undervalue natural resources destroyed by the Exxon spill.

The procedures in question stem from the 1980 Superfund law which required Interior to establish guidelines on assessing damage resulting from an oil spill or discharge of toxic chemicals.

The regulations were supposed to make it easier for states and federal trustees of public lands to recover damages, but Interior took nearly six years to draw them up and, according to critics, did so in 1986 substantially along the lines sought by the oil industry.

The massive spill of more than 10 million gallons of oil March 24 will be the most far-reaching test of the regulations to date, government officials and environmental activists agree.

Interior officials involved in coordinating the activities of various agencies and the state of Alaska in negotiating with Exxon said all the parties, although some reluctantly, have agreed to use the Superfund regulations as a framework.

"The rules are there, they make sense and we're going to start to use them," said Cecil Hoffman, a senior Interior official involved with the damage assessment effort. "The intent is that we're going to set a dollar value" on the damages.

But three environmental groups and 10 states have filed suit in federal court accusing Interior of violating the Superfund law by making the regulations so lax that they let polluters off too easily.

In February, six weeks before the Exxon spill, the Justice Department vigorously defended the regulations at a hearing before the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington. No decision has yet been made by the court.

"The rules create a myriad of economic, scientific and administrative obstacles to the recovery of funds needed to restore damaged resources," maintains Eric Glitzenstein, an attorney for the group Public Citizen.

Erik Olson, an attorney for the National Wildlife Federation, another plaintiff in the suit, said if the damage assessments are determined under Interior's regulatory guidelines Exxon could well escape substantial liability.

"It's something we're very concerned about," he said.

Others plaintiffs in the suit are the Environmental Defense Fund and the states of New York, New Jersey, Ohio, California, Connecticut, Colorado, Massachusetts, Maine, Rhode Island, and Vermont.

According to the regulations being used by Interior, damage may be either the cost of restoring a natural resource to its state prior to the spill or establishing simply a monetary "market value" on a particular resource and paying that amount. But under the regulations, the polluter may choose whichever method is cheaper.

During the recent court hearing, Justice Department attorneys defended the "lesser of the two" approach and the "use value" standard in determining liability. Attorneys for the environmental groups and states argued that total cost of "restoration and replacement" should be required.

Under some guidelines the value of a seal might be $15 because that has been determined as the value of its pelt, while a seabird such as the puffin might be merely $7.88, the environmental lawyer said.

Ms. Hoffmann of the Interior Department acknowledged that some resources might be undervalued under the rigid "use value" approach required by the regulations. But she said the decision to use the regulations as "an organizing device" will not preclude other actions against Exxon as the process moves along.

But environmental lawyers are not as certain.

"What will happen down the road when Exxon comes in and says, 'Look, the Interior Department already has come up with dollar figures on these resources. Let's use those.' That's what we fear," Olson said.

With Interior turning to these regulations in the preliminary discussions, "the camel's nose is under the tent," he said.

Honduran aid not linked to Contras, official says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A State Department official disputes evidence in the Oliver North trial, saying the U.S. government backed away from a plan approved by President Reagan to give Honduras extra U.S. aid in return for supporting the Nicaraguan rebels.

The comments Tuesday by Michael G. Kozak to a House subcommittee came in response to disclosure of the plan at North's trial. The jury in the trial returned to the courthouse this morning for its fifth day of deliberations.

Reagan initiated a Feb. 19, 1985, memo prepared by North and introduced at his trial approving a plan to link more than $110 million in extra aid to Honduras' support for the Contra rebels. The maneuver was intended to get around a congressional ban on U.S. aid to the rebels at the time.

The month after Reagan approved the plan, then-Vice President George Bush visited Honduras and told President Robert Suazo Cordova that Reagan had directed expedited delivery of U.S. military items and other aid to the country, according to a 42-page admission introduced at North's trial. Honduras did receive the additional assistance and continued to support the Contras.

But Kozak, acting assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, maintains that the extra aid wasn't conditioned on Contra support.

"The...plan was disapproved, at the objection of the State Department, on the grounds that conditionality — linkage between U.S. assistance and any assistance to the resistance — was contrary to U.S. policy," Kozak told the House appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations.

Kozak offered no details on how the plan came to be scrapped. He wasn't asked by the subcommittee about the fact that Reagan had approved it.

Kozak at one point mischaracterized the 42-page admission, saying that North, whose lawyers prepared the document, "has linked a trip of the vice president...to a secret plan that was never approved." In fact, the admission does not address whether Bush, during his visit to Honduras, told Suazo the extra aid was contingent on Contra support.

Bush has repeatedly refused to discuss the contingent aid plan or his actions during the Honduran trip, saying it could prejudice North's trial.

The court admission was prepared by North's lawyers and the prosecution, in concert with U.S. intelligence agencies.

Kozak referred to the admission as "a fiction" and said it was primarily the product of North and his lawyers. Some changes were made by the independent counsel prosecuting the North case. But administration officials were permitted only to screen it to excise classified information, he said. Kozak said he was among the officials who screened it.

The plan which Reagan approved included an emissary who would carry a signed copy of a letter by Reagan urging support for the Contras, according to the Feb. 19, 1985, memo initiated by the president. The emissary was then to "very privately explain our criteria for the expedited economic support, security assistance deliveries and enhanced CIA support," said the memo from national security adviser Robert McFarlane.

The document, marked "memorandum for the president," was prepared by North and an NSC colleague, Raymond F. Burghardt, according to a notation at the bottom of the document.

Reagan put his initials in two locations, including the line marked "OK" for the recommendation saying that "you authorize us to proceed as outlined above."

Wolf good choice for UW position

When the United Way of Midland's board of directors chose Jane Meredith Wolf as the new executive director, they selected an individual who during the past decade has proven to be a tireless and committed supporter of the United Way.

In fact, the office of executive director is one of the few Ms. Wolf has not held with the agency over the years. Already she has served as president of the board of directors, chairman of the nominating committee and on the campaign committee since 1981. Her service in all those areas has helped the United Way of Midland to achieve the remarkable level of support it now enjoys from both corporations, companies and individuals.

In addition to her diligent work in the interest of the United Way of Midland, Ms. Wolf also has been actively involved as chairman of the Advisory Council of Midland Convention and Visitors Bureau, as a member of the board of directors of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, as a member of the Junior League of Midland and the Midland Rotary Club, and on the board of Casa de Amigos.

She is the recipient of enormous respect in this community. During her years in Midland working with the United Way, Ms. Wolf has experienced both the good times and those not so good. Yet she continues to have a strongly positive outlook about future United Way drives in Midland, noting that "...the Midland community always rises to meet its challenges."

No doubt with someone of Ms. Wolf's expertise and diligence as executive director, the United Way of Midland will achieve even greater successes in coming years.

Granger's Ghost won't be forgotten

Although most Midlanders probably know Gil Bartosh as a former high school and college football coach and most recently as Midland's athletic director, the noteworthy honor bestowed on him in Waco last week will be more lasting. It was for his ability as a player. Bartosh was inducted into the Texas High School Football Hall of Fame last Friday.

Bartosh, who became known as "the Granger Ghost" in a championship game against Rockdale, rolled up quite an impressive record on the high school gridiron, boosting the Lions to championship seasons in his sophomore through senior years. In fact, the Lions were undefeated in Bartosh's junior and senior seasons and were tied only once in his sophomore year. His ability was remarkable, no doubt, evidenced by the staggering 306 points — 80 of them passing — he accounted for in his senior year.

Before leaving for Waco to receive his honor, Bartosh told the Reporter-Telegram, "It's a special honor to me since this recognizes what I did as a player in high school."

It obviously is an honor that Bartosh earned through his exceptional ability while a player. His induction into the Texas High School Football Hall of Fame was appropriate because it means Bartosh's ability won't be forgotten in the competitive arena that is high school football.

Bush nominee deserves close scrutiny

WASHINGTON — George Bush, like the president before him, is loyal to his friends. Time will tell whether Bush, like his predecessor, is loyal to a fault. John Tower was the first test. Fred Zeder is the next.

Bush has picked his close pal Zeder, the former ambassador to Micronesia, to head the Overseas Private Investment Corp. The nomination, which will be considered soon by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, comes at a time when Zeder has come under scrutiny in a congressional investigation into alleged corruption in Palau, a U.S. Trust Territory in the South Pacific.

After embarrassing Bush on the Tower nomination, the Senate may feel obliged to rubber stamp the rest. But Zeder deserves a second look.

As president of the Overseas Private Investment Corp., Zeder would help American businesses invest in developing countries. The agency is supposed to steer Americans to safe foreign harbors — countries where coups, embargoes and the whimsy of dictators won't bankrupt a business. The agency insures investors against those political risks.

Zeder's most notorious investment advice concerning Micronesia is a disturbing example of his business acumen and international savvy.

From 1982 to 1987, he was President Reagan's negotiator in self-government talks for the Micronesian trust territories. In May 1983, he sent a State Department cable to the U.S. Embassy in London advising British banks that Palau should be able to repay a $32 million loan to finance a power plant. The banks loaned the money based on Zeder's advice and are now suing Palau to get their money back. Zeder now says his cable was misinterpreted.

Zeder's work in the South Pacific helped him gain a reputation as a businessman in ambassador's clothing. At least, that is the conclusion of some members of Congress, Interior Department officials who oversee the trust territories, and even the environmental group Greenpeace. Former Rep. John Seiberling, D-Ohio, told us that Congress enacted strict ethics laws in 1985 for U.S. officials in Micronesia, in part because of uneasiness over the way Zeder operated.

The General Accounting Office has spent 15 months investigating a tangle of problems surrounding the conduct of U.S. officials in Micronesia, the negotiations for self-government in Palau and the power plant deal.

We reported last summer that the now-bankrupt power company that sold Palau the plant it can't afford treated Zeder to a flight to the British Open golf tournament in Scotland in 1984. The company's bankruptcy records show plane tickets for Zeder and his wife. Zeder later repaid the company.

Zeder also refutes allegations that he introduced Palau to a New York investment firm which has since been indicted on 52 counts of fraud, bribery and obstruction of justice in the South Pacific and the United States.

Zeder quit the Micronesia post in 1987 to raise money for Bush's presidential campaign.

He told our associate Jim Lynch that he knows he has critics, but that comes with the turf. "If you don't want to create any controversy, you don't get very far." He called himself "a respected businessman."

A former top Reagan administration official credits Zeder's success to his friendship with Bush. "He has one godfather, and that godfather is George Bush," according to the source. Zeder's "forte is the cocktail circuit." He gave Zeder credit for never clearly breaking the rules. "He never did anything illegal. Unethical? Maybe. Eyebrow raising? Hell, yes."

Our source insisted on anonymity. He feared that criticizing the president's fishing buddy would kill his chances for future employment in the Bush administration.

SANDINISTA AID — U.S. aid to the Nicaraguan contras has been reduced to strictly non-military uses after a highly public congressional debate. The Soviet Union isn't bound by the same free exchange of opinions. Last year, the Soviets shipped $515 million worth of military supplies to the Sandinista government. A grateful Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega has made it clear that he has no intention of renouncing Marxism.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Even before the polls open, the May 7 election in Panama has already been dismissed as a joke. Manuel Noriega has rigged the voter lists, threatened his opponents and made it easy for his friends to vote early and often. Yet the spirit of the opposition is undaunted. Their numbers, no matter how Noriega counts them, will add to the mounting pressure to oust him. The United States can't do that alone without the will of the Panamanian people.

It's easier to name building than raze it!

I live in a beautiful, but not very forgiving, neighborhood. When Adnan Khashoggi was arrested and detained in Switzerland for extradition to the United States, the residents of Wesley Heights were in an uproar.

The reason for this is that, just up the street from us, at American University, there is a large building named "The Adnan Khashoggi Sports and Convocation Center." It was donated by the billionaire arms dealer who is wanted by the U.S. for racketeering, fraud and obstruction of justice, and the people in my area are afraid that real estate values will fall if his name stays on this building.

Art Buchwald

Feelings are so strong that, as I was coming home the other night, I saw Jim Lawson backing his bulldozer out of the garage.

"Where are you going?" I asked.

"I'm driving up to American U. to knock down that Khashoggi monument before Wesley Heights becomes the laughingstock of the Western world," Lawson told me.

"You're jumping to conclusions. It's true that the man has been arrested, but people don't knock down a brand-new building just because the person who paid for it is accused of a crime. If we destroyed every edifice donated to a university by a white-collar criminal, the college campuses of America would look like the Arctic Circle. American U. accepted Khashoggi's money in good faith, and you can't expect the school to turn its back on him just because he has allegedly been playing 'spin the bottle' with Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand Marcos."

"Even though the guy was in on every arms deal in the world," Lawson yelled. "How does a school know where to draw the line when it comes to deciding which money is clean and which is dirty?"

"The line is so fine that only presidents of universities can see it. Their problem is not the fact that they accept the money, it's having to explain to faculty and students why they put the scoundrel's name on the building."

"Well, I am going to pulverize the Khashoggi Center anyway. If he turns out to be innocent, I'll apologize to him. Why would American U. take money from a notorious arms dealer in the first place?"

"The kids had to have a place to play basketball. Long after Khashoggi does time, and I'm not saying he will, the cheers of students will be resounding from the rafters of the AU Sports Center. We should not concern ourselves with Khashoggi's guilt or innocence, but rather be happy about the Olympic-sized pool he left behind."

"Can we at least tape over his name on the building while the jury is still out?"

"No, it would suggest that AU is making a judgment on the case, which the university never does to one of its white-collar givers."

"Until Khashoggi is judged by 12 of his peers, is there any action we can take?"

"We must strike while he's reeling, and ask him to provide the funds for another building on campus to match the first one. People in trouble with the law are always anxious to perform good deeds to make amends for their bad ones. I know of one white-collar criminal who beat a million-dollar embezzlement rap because the sentencing judge found out that the man had given his Jaguar to a women's volleyball team."

"If you won't let me bulldoze the building, will you allow me to rename it the 'Michael Milken School of Business'?" Lawson pleaded.

"It's too risky. The way things are right now, today's financial heroes could easily wind up as tomorrow's license plate makers."

New siege of Alamo

A Texas House bill introduced by Rep. Wilson of Houston would seize custody and control of the Alamo in San Antonio from the Daughters of the Republic of Texas and ostensibly transfer it to the State Wildlife Department.

Eighty-four years ago the Daughters saved the Alamo from destruction and with loving care have preserved and maintained this important origin of our state. Throughout these years this Texas historic place has been open to the public at no charge with the operational costs being met from profits from the sale of Alamo memorabilia and public donations. No state taxes are used in the upkeep.

It is in an excellent condition at this time and it is difficult to determine what improvements would be effected if it were operated by the state. Somehow things seem to change for the worse when politicians become involved even in the simplest of things.

For both native and adopted Texans, the Alamo represents the very essence of our Texas heritage. An occasional visit to the Alamo will rekindle the special feeling of being a Texan.

If you feel the Alamo is presently being operated satisfactorily (and also the past 84 years) by the Daughters of the Republic of Texas, why not let our state representative, the Hon. Tom Craddick, P.O. Box 2910, Austin 78768-2910, be so informed.

Diploma 'worthless'

Recently I received in the mail an impressive diploma from The Nutrition Institute at Maryland. Medifast is a liquid diet that several patients use.

This diploma states that I have completed a study of their program. In fact, I was sent three large notebooks on the diet; I have reviewed thoroughly the interesting material on the pathophysiology of "fasting diets." The pharmaceutical company which distributes the material, product, and diploma has no knowledge of my study of this subject. They, however, want the diploma proudly displayed for their advertising. Of course, physicians can also use the diploma to promote their "business."

The public should be well aware of the business that weight reduction has become. Just read the ads in the newspaper! The distribution of a diploma — unearned, worthless, and potentially misleading — should be condemned by the Better Business Bureau and the public.

Duncanville's gain

Many sports fans in Midland will be saddened by Doug McCutcheon's leaving. His five years here have affected the record books and, even more significantly, the athletes and many lucky people that have come to know this fine man.

For four years his wife, Kathy McCutcheon, has been a teacher at San Jacinto Junior High School. In those years she has endeared herself to students and parents alike. Her positive outlook, her sense of humor, her enthusiasm for teaching and her genuine concern for each and every student will be truly missed.

Good luck Doug, Kathy, Chad and Shae. Our loss is certainly Duncanville's gain.

Cheney plan strikes blow for good sense

Dick Cheney, the new secretary of Defense, has struck a blow for good sense in his recommendation to President Bush that no more 10-warhead

MX missiles be built, and that the existing 50 MX's be shifted from fixed silos to mobile deployment on railroad flatcars.

Cheney's recommendation — that development of the mobile, single-warhead Midgetman missile be abandoned — is more open to question and has been greeted with dismay in Congress. Still, by rejecting additional MX procurement in line with Cheney's proposal, the president could advance both the national security and his administration's arms control position.

The MX, with its 10 independently targetable warheads, is both a threat to the Soviet Union and a tempting target for a Soviet pre-emptive attack. Deploying more of them would have increased both the threat and the temptation: shifting those already deployed from fixed silos to rail cars does not increase the threat but makes the missiles somewhat less vulnerable to attack, hence somewhat less tempting as a target.

Rail-car deployment, moreover, would make the 50 MX's a rough counterpart to the force of SS-24 mobile missiles the Soviets have deployed. The SS-24 also has 10 warheads and is mounted on railroad cars. Thus at least the possibility can be seen of an arms control deal: the MX for the SS-24, taking these mobile, multiple-warhead missiles off the board on both sides.

Cheney's further proposal to abandon the Midgetman — a missile first envisioned by a commission headed by Brent Scowcroft, now the president's national security adviser — apparently was driven at least partly by budgetary restraints. Some estimates have put the cost of 500 Midgetmen, which would carry the same number of warheads as 50 MX's, as high as $35 billion.

Congressional supporters of the single-warhead missile, including the Democratic chairman and the senior Republican of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Sam Nunn of Georgia and John Warner of Virginia, say they still want the Midgetman included in the nation's nuclear arsenal.

One way budgetary arguments against the Midgetman might be surmounted would be to deploy fewer than 500 of them, and in fixed silos rather than in the proposed mobile mode. Some arms control experts estimate that silo rather than mobile deployment would cut up to half the cost of the missiles, not only in their original development but in later costs of maintaining mobility.

That mobility, giving it a high degree of invulnerability from attack, is one of the major assets of the Midgetman. But deploying this missile in silos, while that would reduce its technical invulnerability, might not in fact reduce its relative invulnerability by all that much.

That's because a single-warhead missile in a fixed silo is an uninviting target, particularly if — as expected — forthcoming strategic arms control negotiations cut the number of warheads available to each superpower to relatively low equal numbers. To be sure of "taking out" a missile in a silo, two warheads must be expended on it; thus the Soviets would have to expend twice as many of their own warheads to destroy the one U.S. warhead mounted on a Midgetman — a poor and perhaps unacceptable cost-gain ratio if as many as 200 or 300 Midgetmen had to be attacked.

Deploying that many Midgetmen in silos would be preferable to leaving the same number of single-warhead Minuteman IIs in their present silos because the Minuteman II is an older system that may be nearing obsolescence and would be more expensive to maintain than new Midgetmen. If, moreover, a downturn in relations with the Soviet Union made it prudent, the Midgetmen could be shifted from their silos to the originally planned mobile basing.

This combination — converting the existing 50 MX's to less vulnerable rail mobility (and possibly bargaining them away) and deploying 200 to 300 Midgetmen in silos, where they would be too costly in Soviet warheads to attack — would greatly reduce the fear that U.S. land-based missiles are vulnerable to a Soviet first strike. Bargaining away the MX in a deal to eliminate the SS-24 would further limit the Soviet offensive capability.

Thus answering the fear of vulnerability would remove one of the Bush administration's problems in entering a new round of strategic arms limitation talks. That round, which cannot be delayed much longer, merits discussion in another article.

Students resolved to make leaders embrace democracy

BELJING (AP) — Students said today that government threats to suppress the largest student movement in Communist China's history have only increased their resolve to make the country's leaders embrace democratic reforms.

Student leaders said a class boycott that began Monday has spread to 41 universities and colleges around Beijing, involving more than 70,000 students. At least four more schools joined the protest today, they said.

Two protest leaders said students were ready to stage street demonstrations again as they did when they began their campaign 10 days ago.

Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping on Tuesday ordered authorities to crack down on the protest, said a journalist at the People's Daily, the voice of the ruling Communist Party.

"The peasants support us, the workers support us, the army supports us, so why should we be bothered by students," the journalist quoted the 84-year-old Deng as saying.

His remarks prompted the People's Daily to publish a harsh editorial that called the student movement "a planned conspiracy" aimed at overthrowing the government. The editorial said further protests would be forbidden.

The country's major newspapers and radio stations carried the editorial, and millions of Communist Party members met to discuss it and to prepare for the crackdown.

More than 1,000 party members met in Beijing and "resolutely condemned the illegal student activities," said the Beijing city television news.

The Beijing Daily, meanwhile, published an order from the city government telling students to disband their "illegal" unions. Most of the unions were formed last week after students in Beijing voted down the official student organizations, which are set up by university officials.

About 10,000 troops from the 38th Army, a special force for suppressing civic disturbances, have taken up positions in buildings near university campuses, students and Chinese sources said.

Student leaders pledged to defy the government and said they were ready to go back to the streets to protest if the government does not heed their demands for negotiations.

"If the government does not agree to a dialogue we will march in the streets," said Beijing University student leader Wang Dan at a meeting attended by 2,000 students at the Political Science and Law College. "That is our right. We will take the movement to the people."

Since early last week, tens of thousands of students have been agitating for fundamental changes in China's political system, including a free press and publication of the financial records of China's leaders.

They have also called for the resignations of Deng and of Premier Li Peng.

"We will only develop into a strong country when we respect human rights and allow the people more freedom," said one student at Qinghua University. "We've had an emperor for too long, what we need is a president."

Students at several universities said they were outraged by the editorial and accused the state-run press of distorting facts.

"The editorial is rubbish, it is filled with lies and it insults the students," Wu'er Kaixi, a student leader from Beijing Normal University, told the crowd at the Political Science and Law College.

The editorial accused the students of trying to overthrow the government and insinuated their movement in Beijing was connected to violence last week in Xian and Changsha, two provincial capitals.

One man dies, two women jump from window in Mexico quake

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Just one death was reported in the strongest earthquake to strike Mexico since a 1985 tremor that killed thousands of people, but panic was widespread among residents haunted by memories of the last big quake.

Two women leapt from the second-story window of a swaying building during Tuesday morning's quake, seriously injuring themselves, police said. Another 240 were treated for shock, said Mayor Manuel Camacho Solis.

Two little girls hit by falling debris were briefly hospitalized, 13 buildings were damaged seriously enough to be closed for repairs and parts of the city of 19 million were without water because an aqueduct cracked.

The tremor, which measured 6.8 on the Richter scale, felled a power line just north of the city center that electrocuted a man of about 30, said Maria Cortina Benitez, a city police spokeswoman.

Port facilities in the Pacific resort of Acapulco and city hall in the Guerrero state capital, Chilpancingo, sustained minor damage.

"This earthquake reactivated the terror that remains engraved in the minds of people since '85 and that hasn't been able to be resolved," psychoanalyst Antonio Santamaria said in a telephone interview. At least 9,500 died in that quake, which registered 8.1 on the Richter scale.

The epicenter of Tuesday's quake was 40 miles east of Acapulco, about 200 miles south of Mexico City, said

"This earthquake reactivated the terror that remains engraved in the minds of people since '85 and that hasn't been able to be resolved."

the U.S. National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo.

"I was hysterical because I thought the same thing was going to happen that happened in '85 because it felt quite strong and because my husband, my daughter and my grandchildren were all in different places," said Sara Torres de Zamorano, 59.

She lives in Tlatelolco, where 472 people died when two buildings collapsed in 1985.

Children in some schools panicked, people refused to return to offices in tall buildings for as long as several hours. Men ran into street in their undershorts and women in their nightclothes. Some screamed.

Schools were among the buildings destroyed or damaged in 1985 and students in class were among those who died.

Psychologists said the 1985 disaster had a wide range of effects, depending on what an individual's experiences in the quake had been. Some people lost loved ones and homes, others saw buildings crumbled or helped rescue victims.

The effects included insomnia or other sleep disruptions; loss of appetite and sex drive, or an increase; and sensations of vertigo and shortness of breath. Children regressed to bedwetting, had nightmares, refused to leave their mothers' sides and didn't want to go to school.

The Richter scale is a gauge of the energy released by an earthquake, as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph. Every increase of one number means that the ground motion is 10 times greater.

A quake of magnitude 6 can cause severe damage in populated areas. A quake of magnitude 7 is considered a major earthquake, capable of widespread, heavy damage in populated areas.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Baby food found spiked with glass, razor blades

LONDON (AP) — Police say they are investigating at least eight incidents this month in which baby food bought in British stores has been found spiked with glass shards, pieces of razor blades, thumbtacks and caustic soda.

Scotland Yard says it is coordinating a nationwide police inquiry but has refused to give any further details.

The London newspaper the Daily

Mail reported today that blackmailers trying to extort money from supermarkets and food companies were believed responsible. It said several major supermarket chains and food manufacturers have received threats.

In the latest incidents, reported Tuesday, pieces of glass were found in baby food bought in Bradford-on-Avon in southwest England, in the south coast resort of Fratton, and in Newport on the Isle of Wight off the south coast.

In Bradford-on-Avon, Diana Tyn-dall said she cut her lip on a piece of glass as she tasted a jar of fruit dessert she was about to feed her 6-month-old daughter Roxanne.

No one else was reported hurt in Tuesday's incidents. But in similar incidents reported from April 7 to April 15, a nine-month-old girl in the university town of Oxford cut her mouth on a piece of razor blade in yogurt.

The other incidents were at Rayleigh, east of London; at the southern port of Southampton, where two incidents were reported; and at the south coast resort of Worthing.

Elephants kill squatters

GWERU, Zimbabwe (AP) — Hungry elephants broke out of a game reserve in search of food and killed four peasant squatters who were tending crops, news reports said Tuesday.

Families from the minority Tonga tribe recently settled and planted crops on the edges of the Chirisa game reserve in the Midlands, said Claudius Hove, the Department of National Parks and Wildlife's chief warden in the province.

In past weeks, they beat tribal drums to keep stray elephants from their plots. Instead, the drumbeats attracted the animals, Hove told the Zimbabwe Inter-African News Agency.

"These people have been settling in and around the game park and the elephants have been increasingly attracted by crops in their fields," Hove said.

The settlers will be moved from the reserve and game rangers will try to drive the stray elephants back into the park, he said. If the animals don't budge, they will be shot, he added.

Pyramid open for day

ROME (AP) — About 20,000 people lined up Tuesday to visit the ancient pyramid of Gaius Cestius in Rome, which was opened to the public for the first time in three centuries.

Many people stood on line for three hours to get a glimpse of the interior of the 88-foot-tall tomb of Roman official Gaius Cestius.

Italy's Culture Ministry opened the monument for only one day to mark the holiday commemorating the country's liberation by the Allies in World War II.

Iran expells Britons

LONDON (AP) — The Foreign Office said today that Iran has expelled or refused to re-admit 18 Britons in apparent retaliation for Britain's expulsion of 18 Iranians in the dispute over Salman Rushdie's "The Satanic Verses."

A Foreign Office spokesman said Britain has formally protested the Iranian move through the Swedish Embassy in Tehran.

Sweden began looking after British interests in Iran when Iran broke diplomatic ties with London on March 7 after Britain refused to ban Rushdie's novel. Moslem clerics say the book blasphemes Islam.

The Foreign Office spokesman said Iran's deadline for the Britons to leave expired Tuesday and some were already back in Britain.

"As we understand it, some (of the 18) were people who were in Britain at the time they were expelled and are simply not being allowed to return."

"They appear to have been a pretty random cross-section of the Britons who are there. Some of them were long-term residents, some were businessmen, some were academics — a whole cross-section."

"We have told Iran through the Swedish Embassy that the action is completely unjustified."

He could not say what official reason Iran had given for its action over the 18 Britons.

Chaps win Region V golf crown

From Staff Reports

DENISON — A gutty performance by Midland College's all-freshman golf team handed the Chaparrals their first ever Region V golf championship here Tuesday.

For the often-frustrated Chaps, it gives them their initial automatic bid to the National Junior College Athletic Association's championship tournament in Norfolk, Nebraska, June 6-10.

The Chaps had a nine-stroke lead over conference foe New Mexico Junior College going into the final 18 holes of play here Tuesday afternoon. But the Chaps also were without a reserve score as Sean Duffy injured his back and had to withdraw after struggling through three holes of the last round.

The two days of 27-hole play each day are a physical test, with teams counting four of their five scores for each 18-holes. Without Duffy, who had shot par 72s for both the first two rounds, every score would count.

Brad Wells, whose 76 in the first round was thrown out, came back to play the last 36 holes at six-under par with rounds of 67 and 71. Wells finished as medalist runner-up and an All-Region designation.

Also earning All-Region honors were Mark Kochan, who had a consistent tournament with 73, 72, and 72, and Andrew Coltart, who had 72-79-70. Just one stroke behind Coltart was Dean Robertson, who had 72-73-77.

The tournament was played on the Grayson County Country Club course, which was hosted by Grayson Community College.

Odessa College, which won the overall conference championship this year, may receive an at-large bid to the tournament. This was what allowed Midland College to play in the 1988 NJCAA tournament after it finished third in the Region V tourney.

"I just can't say enough about the character these young men showed this week," bubbled Delnor Poss, MC athletic director and golf coach since 1977. "We've waited a long time for this. Because the competition is so tough in this conference and this region, it's hard to even get to the national tournament."

The Chaps have captured only one conference golf title, won in 1979, and two split-season conference titles.

MIDLAND COLLEGE INDIVIDUAL SCORES
Brad Wells 78 67 71 214, Mark Kochan 73 72 72 217, Andrew Coltart 72 73 70 221, Dean Robertson 73 73 77 222, Sean Duffy 72 72 withdrew.

Midland Lee's Beau Brown
...taking a swing for Austin

Lee's Brown enters Region I golf field

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee's Beau Brown was scheduled to leave Midland today for Lubbock's Class 5A Region I golf tournament with eyes set on the opportunity to earn a state qualifying berth for the state meet in Austin.

The Region I tournament will be held Thursday and Friday at Lubbock's Elm Grove Golf Club, a two-day event that will house both the 5A girls and boys.

The top two teams in the tournament will earn state passage in two weeks to Austin. Also, the top two individuals from the tournament will advance to Austin and that's where Brown comes in.

Lee failed to qualify as a team for the Region I tournament since San Angelo and Odessa Permian won District 4-5A's team berths, but Brown finished as a runnerup to Permian's Ben Bangert to qualify as an individual and will be able to compete in Lubbock in the medalist race.

"I've never played the course we will be playing, but I plan to have a practice round Wednesday (today)," said Brown.

LEE GOLF coach Ronnie Stephens added, "It's not exactly a course you would seek out to play. In fact, the only way you would play this course is to be invited for something like this. It isn't in the greatest course in the world."

This is the first time that Region I golf has had the boys and girls on the same course, so it will make for a long two days of golf. The boys are supposed to tee-off early Thursday morning and the girls will have the early tee time Saturday.

"I don't know how this will work out. It's not an ideal situation," said Stephens. "That's a lot of golf for one course."

Still, Brown is looking forward to his chance at earning a state qualifying berth.

"I'm really excited about the opportunity, but I know it will be tough up there. The best golfers (from our region) will be there and district play was hard enough," said Brown.

And tough it was. Permian's Bangert is known as one of the top junior golfers in West Texas. And Brown battled Bangert in one of the district's most competitive medalist races the loop has ever seen.

Through the first three rounds of the 4-5A tour, Bangert and Brown were tied, heading into the last tour match at Midland Country Club. Naturally, they were tied at the end of regulation play.

Region I Golf

During that final round, Brown rallied from seven shots down to force overtime with a key shot coming at No. 17. After a poor drive, Brown looked to have no shot at the green, but pulled off a shot down the cart path that eventually saved par. If Brown had won in sudden death, his cart path shot would have become a part of 4-5A golf lore.

Bangert won the 4-5A medalist title on the first hole of sudden death with his, by now, famous Mojo birdie putt. That putt went past the cup and then rolled back in.

"Bangert is a really good player and you don't mind losing to a birdie," said Brown at the time. "I know Ben will be one of the players at the top of the list at the region tournament."

CONSIDERING the 4-5A battle between Bangert and Brown, the two have to be considered as having a shot at the medalist title in Lubbock, but those won't be the only factors.

El Paso Hanks, for instance, has two fine golfers in Luis DaGadillo and Kyle Oliver. San Angelo's J.C. Hernandez came on strong in the 4-5A race before finishing third and he has to be a factor.

"We don't know a lot about all the competition that will be in Lubbock," said Stephens, "but we know enough that it will be a tough chore. It's going to be a tournament where someone will have to get hot and stay hot with just two rounds to decide the top two."

"Beau did beat DaGadillo in our tournament in March, but it took a playoff to do that."

Region I consists of golfers from El Paso to Fort Worth, basically taking in all of West Texas. The top two teams and top two individuals from the state's four regions will advance to Austin in two weeks. Only the elite of Texas high school golf will be survivors after this weekend.

Beau Brown hopes to be one of them, but it is a rocky road on the way to Austin.

Midland Lee shortstop B.J. Parrish cuts in front of second baseman Ty Chambers to field a grounder during 4-5A baseball action against Odessa Permian Tuesday at the Lee field.

Permian nails down playoff berth

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

While the Odessa Permian baseball team continued to exceed the expectations of all but Mojo coach Bob Highly, the Midland Lee diamondmen continued to play out the proverbial string in a 14-4 Permian win Tuesday at Rebel Stadium.

Permian eliminated Midland High from the playoff picture by clinching at least sole possession of second place. Permian pulled into a tie with idle Abilene Cooper in the race for the 4-5A championship, and play weak San Angelo Saturday.

But even with a win over San Angelo, the Panthers would be blocked from any more than a share of the district crown unless slumping Midland Lee can knock off two-time defending state champion Cooper Saturday at Abilene — something Lee coach Ernie Johnson doesn't think is going to happen after Tuesday's sloppy performance.

"I don't think we can offer Cooper more than token resistance," Johnson said. "The way some of my seniors acted today, I might just play all my Juniors Saturday."

"The way we played today is hard for me to take."

The junior-laden Rebels played only three or four seniors for most of the season, anyway.

Rebel pitcher Mike Pearson got next to no help from his teammates, who committed five errors and drove in no runs off undefeated Permian hurler Ryan Prince, 5-0, who threw a complete-game, four-hitter. Pearson drove in all four Rebels on a fielder's choice and a three-run homer, but allowed 12 hits and seven earned runs in six-plus innings.

'Dogs win, but playoff hopes die

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The Midland High baseball team pulled out a nine-inning, 5-3 win over hard-luck Odessa High here Tuesday, but still dropped out of the playoff picture on the strength of Odessa Permian's 14-4 win over Midland Lee.

The Bulldogs, 7-4 in District 4-5A play, remain two games behind Permian with only one game to play. In other 4-5A action Tuesday, Abilene High remained a game behind third-place Midland High with its 9-6 win over San Angelo. The Eagles hope to gain a share of third-place when they visit Angel Stadium Saturday for a battle with Midland High.

Midland High 5, Odessa High 3
OHS belied its winless district record by coming within three outs of a win Tuesday behind some gutsy pitching by staff ace Jesse Paz, but it wasn't good enough to overcome a 14-strikeout performance by Midland High ace Kevin Rychel.

Paz almost always put runners on base in the first five innings, but allowed nary a run until pinch-hitter Gabe Salazar slammed a 420-foot home run to lead off the sixth.

Paz continued on through most of the seventh despite a bad break that helped MHS get back into the game.

Cron collects seven RBI in Angel win

From Staff and Wire Reports

EL PASO — Chris Cron drove in seven runs with two homers and a single to power the Midland Angels to a 12-4 Texas League baseball victory Tuesday over the El Paso Diablos in a game marred by a bench clearing brawl.

The brawl erupted in the sixth inning after El Paso pitcher Keith Fleming hit Midland batter Tom Alfredson in the batting helmet with a fastball.

Fleming, on the disabled list since the second game of the season, appeared in complete control of his pitches until he hit Alfredson. Back-to-back home runs off Fleming by Cron and Heidi Vargas appeared to spark the wild pitch by Fleming, which hit Alfredson.

Alfredson then threw his bat and then charged the mound, causing both benches to empty.

Five players were ejected from the game including Fleming, Alfredson and El Paso's Shon Ashley. Alfredson was taken to R.E. Thomason General Hospital in El Paso for preliminary x-rays. Results of those x-rays were not known at press time.

It was the second time this season that the Diablos have been involved in a bench clearing brawl at Dudley Field.

Cron had a two-run homer in the first, a two-run single in the fourth and a three-run homer in the sixth.

The winning pitcher was Vinicio Cedeno, 1-1. The loser was Narciso Elvira, 2-2.

In other Texas League action Tuesday night, Wichita defeated San Antonio, 5-0. Tulsa edged Shreveport, 4-3 in 10 innings and Jackson slipped past Arkansas, 7-5.

Andy Benes allowed only three hits and struck out 12 batters to lead the Wichita Wranglers to a 5-0 victory over the San Antonio Missions.

Benes, who leads the Texas League in strikeouts with 44, walked only one batter. He is 3-0.

Smashed dream in year of hope

Prior to the start of the District 4-5A track season last February, the humming in the background was centered around the 300-meter intermediate hurdles. Boy, was this ever going to be a great year for the hurdles.

It was to be our own little state-class event. The names were certainly there. San Angelo had two fine prospects in Joey Bonds and Gary Owens. Odessa Permian owned Jeff Edwards. Midland Lee had an up and coming stepper in Troy Oliver.

But the light above them all was Lee's Marcus Strambler, who finished fifth in Austin's state meet as a junior after owning the state's best time going in. He was back to set the pace for a talented and crowded 300 field, and supposedly, was back for another crack at wrecking Austin and the state.

But Strambler will not be headed back for Austin. In fact, it is his legs that are conspicuously absent from this weekend's Region I meet, which is set for Friday and Saturday at Texas Tech University in Lubbock.

Strambler developed a hamstring problem early in the track season. He ran the hurdles only twice and finally had to give up the dream by scratching from the hurdles in the 4-5A meet in Odessa two weeks ago.

"His leg just never responded. We tried everything we could, but nothing worked," said Lee track coach Mike Quimby. "I really feel for Marcus because we thought he had an excellent chance at getting back to Austin. It was just that kind of year for us. Four of our top five runners came up lame during the season."

Bonds, a junior, lived up to the billing, producing state-ranked runs of under 38 seconds and winning the 4-5A title without Strambler in the field. Edwards, too, responded, winning the other Region I berth. Oliver became the surprise with a third place finish. Owens, like Strambler, had injury problems and managed only fourth at the district meet, perhaps one week away from the healing process.

In short, the 300 hurdles was not a total bust, but the gloss was rubbed a little thin. Bonds has now established himself as the pace maker with another year to improve.

It would be easy to say that Bonds, a former Midlander, saw the glory days come early because Strambler was out of the field for most of the season. But he has earned his place in the sun with a class act of his own.

In fact, Bonds admits that his undefeated act on region road would have been much tougher if Strambler had been at his best this year. He also says he would have welcomed a healthy Strambler scrambling in the lane next to him.

"What happened to Strambler is a real shame," says Bonds. "After all, there is no question that he set the standard for all of us last year. We all knew that we were going to have to be fast to compete with him this year. He helped make all of us better runners."

"I wish he had been healthy because he would have pushed me to the limit every week. He would have made me an even better hurdler, even if I was never able to beat him. I don't think it's good anytime you lose a runner of his ability."

That shows a lot of class for a high school kid, who has seen the bright lights of early fame. That's probably why he has been so successful. He has no illusions and knows that only hard work makes an athlete great.

And as far as Strambler is concerned, he is a victim of circumstance beyond his control. It wasn't the lack of hard work. He will still leave Lee as a great hurdler — one who deserved one more good shot.

SPEAKING
"First I'm told I'm pitching Friday. Then I'm told I'm bumped. Who's to say I won't keep on getting bumped? It's not fair. I don't think two bad starts out of four warrants my being bumped. Incaviglia, Buechele spark Rangers

Associated Press

What would a manager take from his No. 7 and No. 9 hitter. How about seven hits, six RBIs and four runs scored?

Bobby Valentine got that Tuesday night from Pete Incaviglia and Steve Buechele as the Texas Rangers extended their best start ever with an 11-7 victory over the Cleveland Indians. Texas, 14-4, had 19 hits.

Incaviglia was batting .203 and has not been much of a factor as the Rangers compiled the best record in the majors. Valentine dropped him to seventh in the batting order. Buechele hit ninth.

"My job is to play hard and do the job, whether I'm hitting fourth, seventh or ninth," Incaviglia said. "Bobby (Valentine) is the manager and I'm not going to cause problems. He respects everybody in this clubhouse."

Incaviglia was having trouble respecting himself before the first four-hit game of his career — two singles, a double and a triple.

"Four hits brings my confidence back," Incaviglia said. "I was fighting myself through spring training and up until now. But mentally, I've been believing in myself, and everybody on the club believes in what I can do."

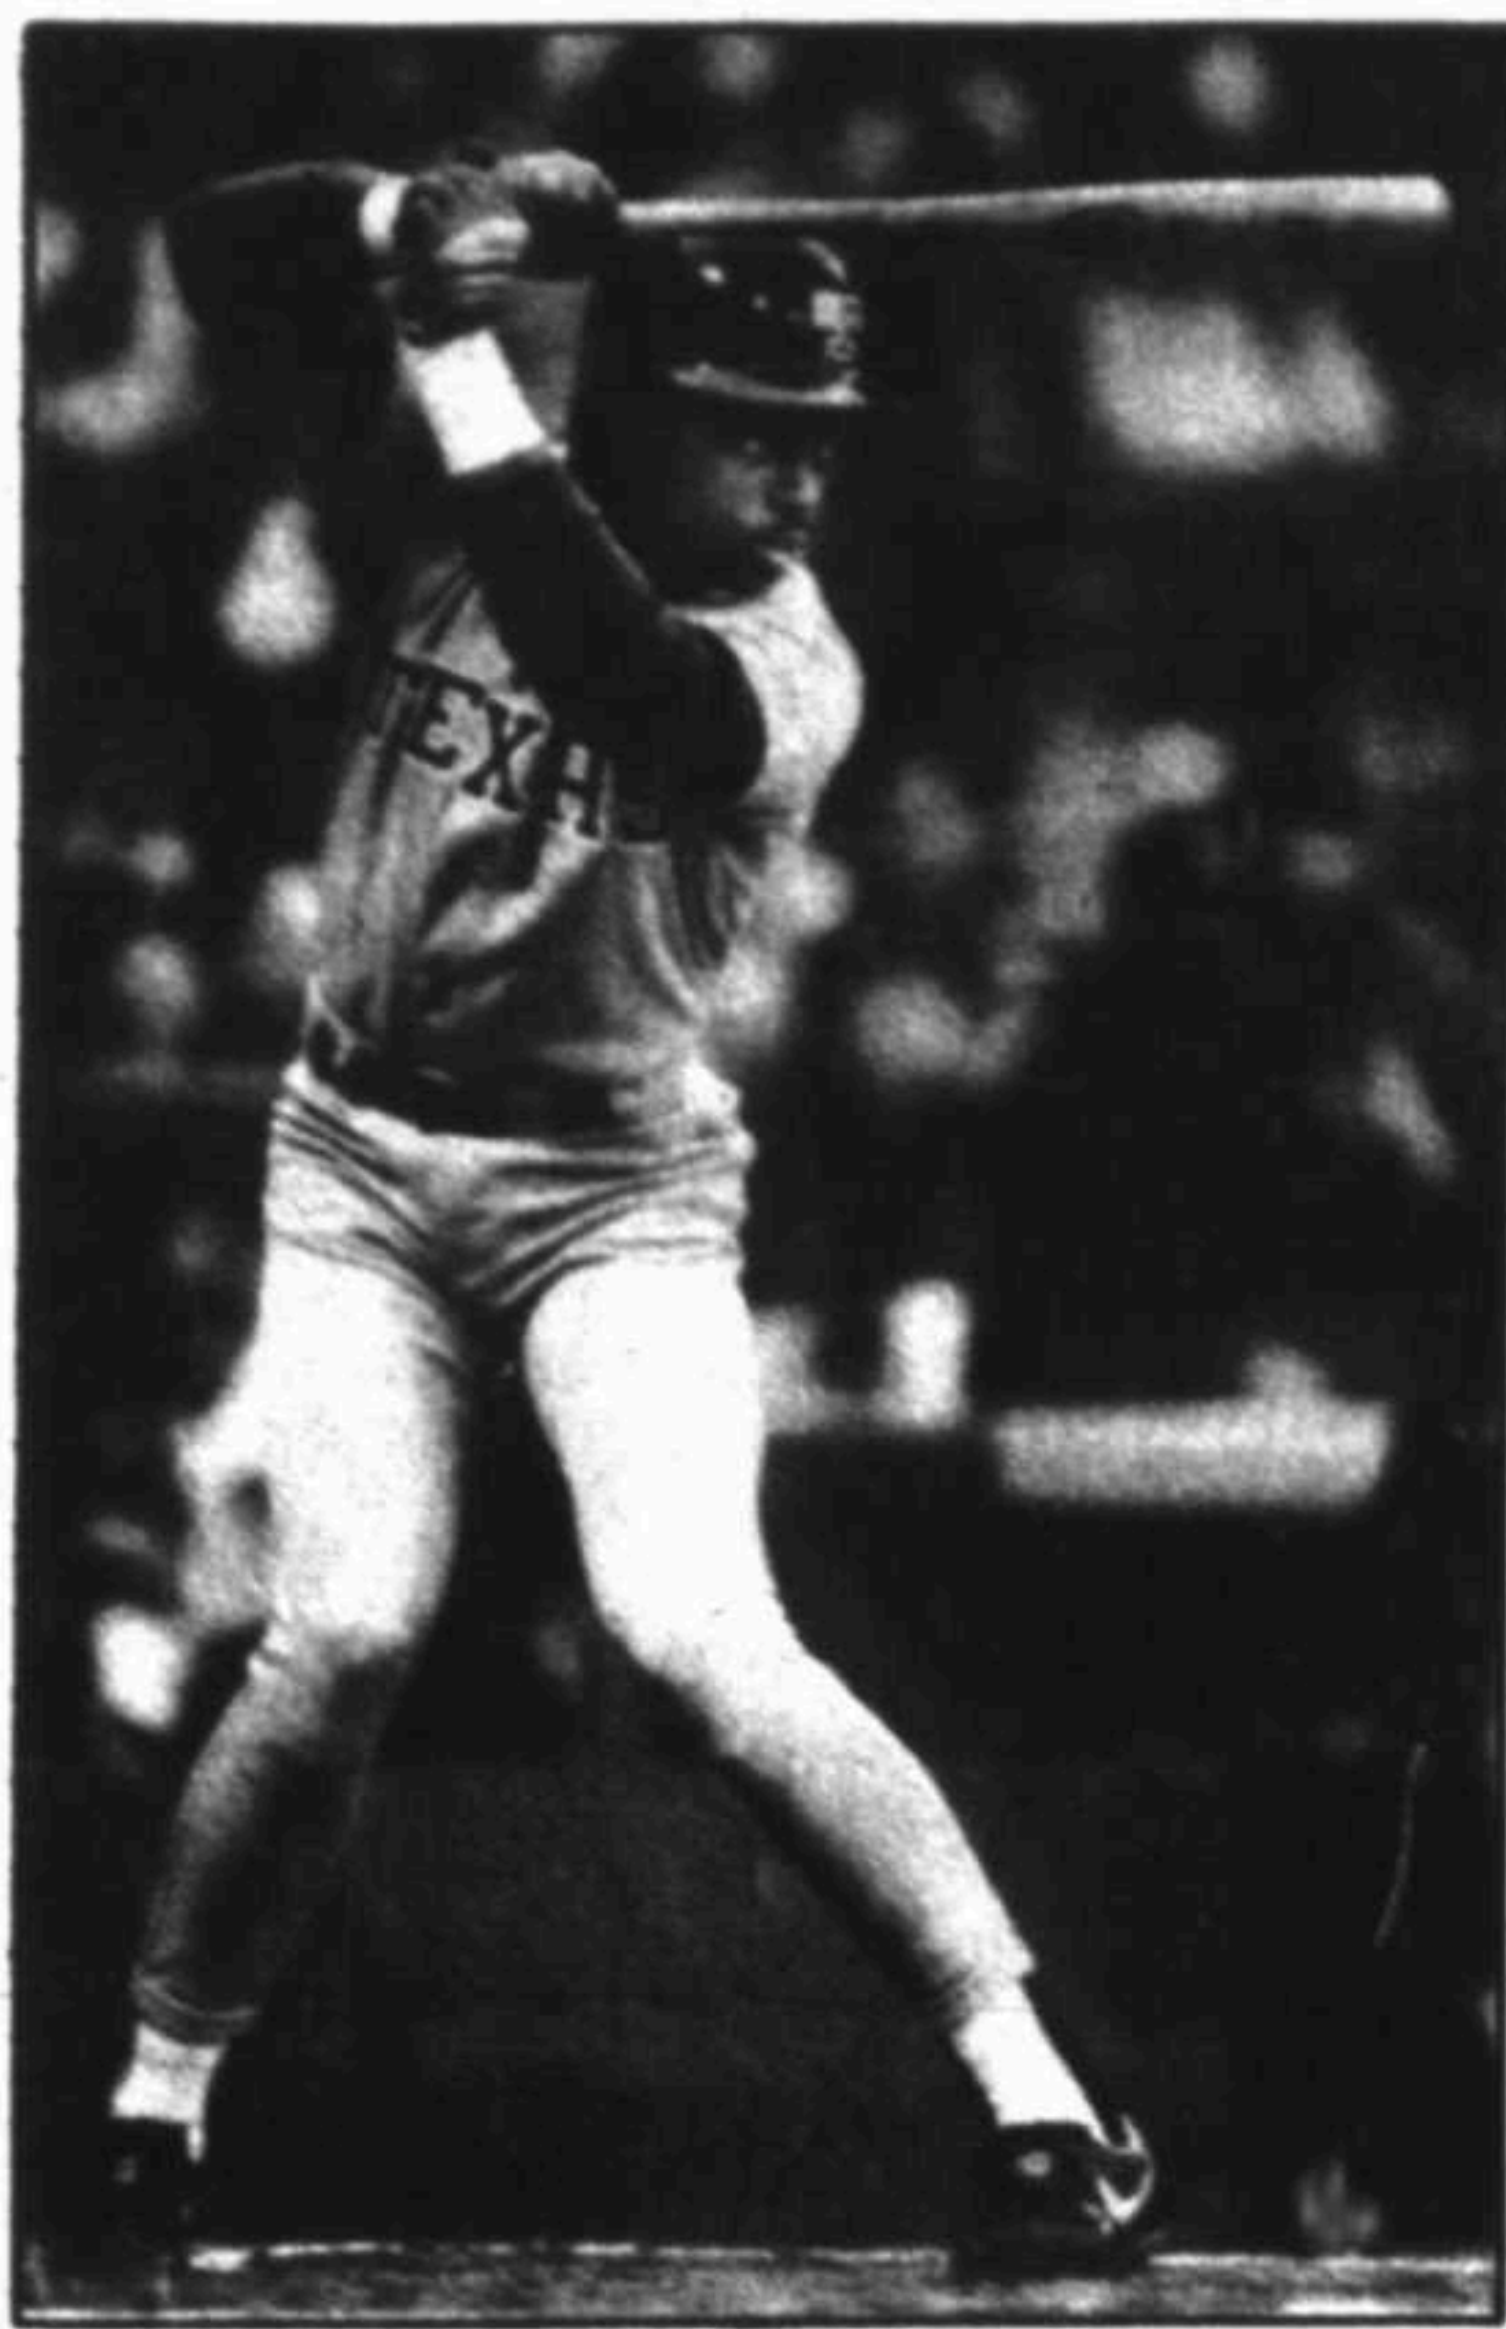

He scored three runs and drove in two in boosting his average to .246. Buechele had four RBIs from a single, double and triple. Buechele and Incaviglia each knocked in two runs during the Rangers' five-run fifth inning, which snapped a 5-5 tie.

Bobby Witt, 30, allowed seven runs on seven hits in five innings. Reliever Brad Arnsberg pitched four scoreless innings for his first career save, yielding two hits.

Cleveland lost for the ninth time in the last 11 games. The Indians' starting pitchers haven't won in 11 games since April 12, 0-6 during that span.

Red Sox 11, White Sox 0
At Boston, Roger Clemens beat his nemesis, pitching a three-hitter to break his five-game losing streak against Chicago. Jim Rice, Ellis Burks and Rich Gedman homered as Boston ended a three-game losing streak and improved Clemens' career record after Red Sox' losses to 36-6.

"I just made good pitches all the way through," said Clemens, 30, who struck out 11 and allowed singles to Harold Baines in the first and to Ivan Calderon in the fourth and seventh. "You hear everybody saying, 'you're struggling against a particular team (Chicago),' and the team (Boston) itself is struggling a little bit. It makes my job a little tougher, but I like those situations."

Texas Ranger Julio Franco
...two hits against former teammates

Brewers 10, Twins 4
At Milwaukee, Bryan Clutterbuck's first major league victory was easy thanks to two homers apiece from Glenn Braggs and Paul Molitor and one by Gary Sheffield.
Clutterbuck, who pitched a seven-hitter in his first decision since 1986, did not pitch in a major league game the last two years after undergoing elbow surgery in 1987.

American League

Braggs drove in five runs. He hit a two-run homer in the fourth, tripled in a run in the sixth and had a two-run homer in the seventh. Braggs' five RBIs were a career high.

Royals 5, Yankees 3
At Kansas City, Bo Jackson hit his fourth home run in six games and major-league-high seventh. Kevin Seitzer also homered and singled in a run. Frank White had an RBI double and Bob Boone added a run-scoring single.

Royals second baseman White was assessed his first fielding error in 171 games on a questionable scoring decision in the eighth. Rickey Henderson hit a ground ball that White lunged to his right to stop. But he didn't come up with the ball in time to get Henderson and was given the error.

Tigers 5, Mariners 2
At Detroit, Frank Tanana pitched six-hit ball for eight innings to snap his 11-game winless streak and Matt Nokes broke a tie in the sixth with a three-run homer.

Tanana, 1-3, struck out five and walked one. He had been 0-7 with four no-decisions since beating the Chicago White Sox 5-4 last Aug. 19.

Orioles 8, Angels 1
Jeff Ballard became the first Baltimore pitcher in 25 years to win his first four starts of the season. Ballard gave up six hits in seven innings but left the game with a slight hip strain and Kevin Hickey and Mark Williamson finished.

The last Baltimore pitcher to win his first four starts was Wally Bunker in 1964.

The visiting Orioles, losers of their first 21 games last season, remained atop the American League East.

Athletics 3, Blue Jays 1
At Oakland, Storm Davis equalled his career high with nine strikeouts and Carney Lansford drove in two runs as the Athletics extended their winning streak to seven games.

Davis, 2-1, pitched seven innings, gave up six hits and walked two before being replaced by Rick Honeycutt to start the eighth. Dennis Eckersley pitched the final 1 1/2 innings, striking out the side in the ninth, and got his American League-leading seventh save.

Belcher records second shutout

Associated Press

Move over Orel, Tim Belcher is starting a streak of his own.

Belcher pitched his second straight shutout Tuesday night as Los Angeles beat Chicago 4-0, spoiling the party to celebrate the 75th anniversary of Wrigley Field.

Belcher has a ways to go, though. Last season, Orel Hershiser had 59 consecutive scoreless innings to break Don Drysdale's major league record by one inning.

"He pitched a helluva game," Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda said. "We had a chance to get some more runs, but as it turned out he pitched some kind of a game."

Belcher, 2-1, allowed five hits, walked one and struck out seven. He also shut out Cincinnati 6-0 on four hits in his previous start on April 18.

"They got themselves out a couple of times," Belcher said. "Obviously, I'm in a good groove, but I did not pitch as well tonight as I did against Cincinnati."

Belcher, 12-6 as a rookie in 1988, had one shutout last season, a 6-0 victory over Houston on Sept. 20. "He pitched a good game, he's got a good arm and a good fastball," Cubs manager Don Zimmer said. "But you can't give the pitcher all the credit. We're just not hitting."

While the Cubs weren't hitting, Belcher was.

He provided all the runs he needed with a two-run double to cap a three-run second inning against Scott Sanderson, 1-2.

Belcher also singled in the sixth while Eddie Murray had three hits, including a pair of doubles. Murray also had a sacrifice fly in the ninth.

"They left a couple of pitches up and when they leave them up, I can hit them," said Belcher, who had only four hits in 55 at-bats (.073) last season.

Astros 4, Phillies 1
Mike Scott pitched a four-hitter and Glenn Davis hit a two-run homer as Houston beat Philadelphia in the Astrodome. Davis has homered in three straight games and has six for the season.

Scott, 3-1, had a shutout until the seventh inning when Darren Daulton hit his fifth homer of the season.

NL Roundup

Daulton had one homer last season in 144 at-bats.

Davis hit a two-run homer off Ken Howell, 2-1, in the first and scored from first in the sixth on Kevin Bass' double.

Howell allowed four hits in seven innings and struck out a career-high 10.

Padres 1, Pirates 0
Eric Show allowed six hits in eight-plus innings and Mark Davis got the last three outs for his 10th save in 10 opportunities as San Diego edged Pittsburgh at Three Rivers Stadium.

With one out in the fifth, Garry Templeton doubled off Bob Walk, 1-2, and scored on Roberto Alomar's single.

Walk lost to the Padres for the first time since July 21, 1984. He had been 5-0 against San Diego since then.

Mets 2, Braves 1
David Cone allowed five hits in 8 2/3 innings and Len Dykstra drove in a run and scored another, leading New York past Atlanta at Shea Stadium. It was the Mets' sixth victory in their last eight games and moved them to the .500 mark at 9-9.

Cone, 2-1, struck out 10 and walked four before needing last out relief help from Randy Myers.

Cone lost his shutout bid when Ron Gant homered on a 1-2 pitch with one out in the eighth inning.

Reds 6, Expos 1
Paul O'Neill snapped a sixth-inning tie with a three-run homer as Cincinnati beat Montreal at Riverfront Stadium and snapped out of a batting slump.

The Reds had scored only 10 runs in their previous six games, including three straight shutouts. The Expos have lost four of their last five games.

O'Neill's second homer of the season came off Dennis Martinez, 1-1, and put the Reds ahead 4-1 in the sixth.

Tom Browning, 3-1, allowed seven hits, including Tim Wallach's homer.

Giants 4, Cardinals 0
Don Robinson allowed four hits in seven innings and singled to key a three-run third inning, leading visiting San Francisco past St. Louis.

Robinson, 1-1, walked four and struck out none. He also singled in the fifth inning in improving his lifetime batting average to .268, best in the majors among pitchers with at least 150 at-bats.

Craig Lefferts pitched two innings of two-hit relief for his third save.

Incaviglia, Buechele spark Rangers

Associated Press

What would a manager take from his No. 7 and No. 9 hitter. How about seven hits, six RBIs and four runs scored?

Bobby Valentine got that Tuesday night from Pete Incaviglia and Steve Buechele as the Texas Rangers extended their best start ever with an 11-7 victory over the Cleveland Indians. Texas, 14-4, had 19 hits.

Incaviglia was batting .203 and has not been much of a factor as the Rangers compiled the best record in the majors. Valentine dropped him to seventh in the batting order. Buechele hit ninth.

"My job is to play hard and do the job, whether I'm hitting fourth, seventh or ninth," Incaviglia said. "Bobby (Valentine) is the manager and I'm not going to cause problems. He respects everybody in this clubhouse."

Incaviglia was having trouble respecting himself before the first four-hit game of his career — two singles, a double and a triple.

"Four hits brings my confidence back," Incaviglia said. "I was fighting myself through spring training and up until now. But mentally, I've been believing in myself, and everybody on the club believes in what I can do."

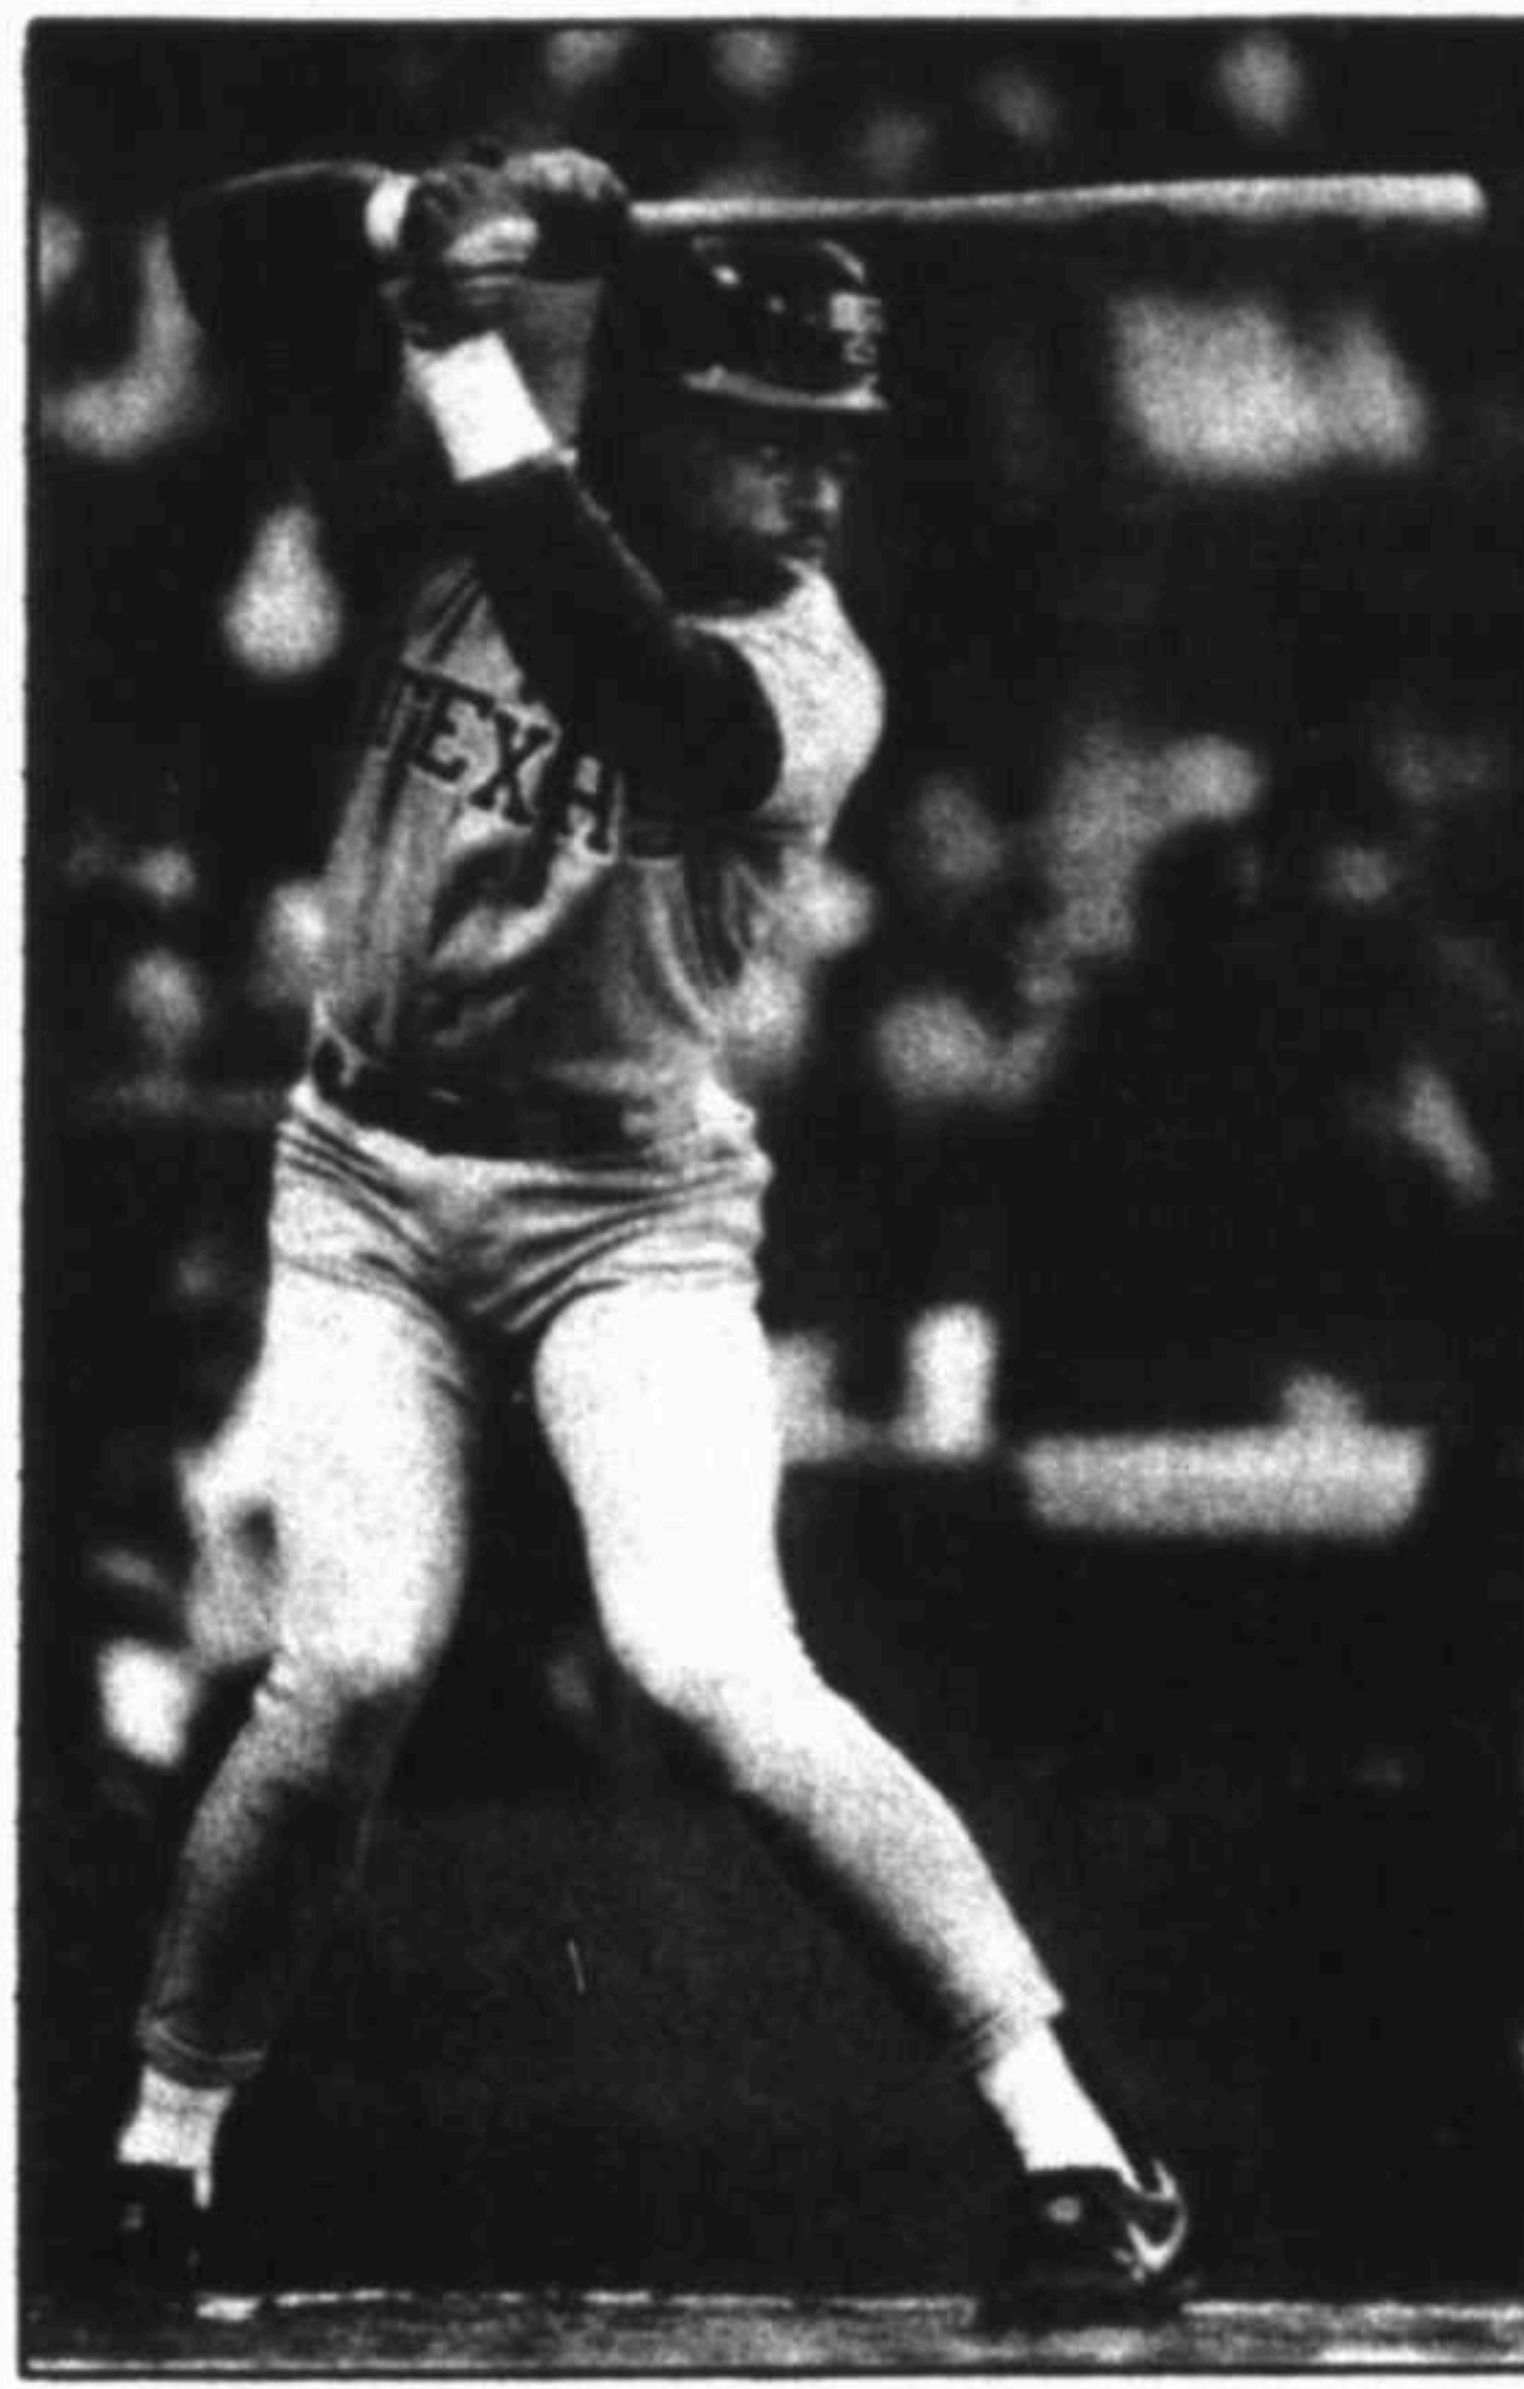

He scored three runs and drove in two in boosting his average to .246. Buechele had four RBIs from a single, double and triple. Buechele and Incaviglia each knocked in two runs during the Rangers' five-run fifth inning, which snapped a 5-5 tie.

Bobby Witt, 30, allowed seven runs on seven hits in five innings. Reliever Brad Arnsberg pitched four scoreless innings for his first career save, yielding two hits.

Cleveland lost for the ninth time in the last 11 games. The Indians' starting pitchers haven't won in 11 games since April 12, 0-6 during that span.

Red Sox 11, White Sox 0
At Boston, Roger Clemens beat his nemesis, pitching a three-hitter to break his five-game losing streak against Chicago. Jim Rice, Ellis Burks and Rich Gedman homered as Boston ended a three-game losing streak and improved Clemens' career record after Red Sox' losses to 3-6.

"I just made good pitches all the way through," said Clemens, 30, who struck out 11 and allowed singles to Harold Baines in the first and to Ivan Calderon in the fourth and seventh. "You hear everybody saying, 'you're struggling against a particular team (Chicago),' and the team (Boston) itself is struggling a little bit. It makes my job a little tougher, but I like those situations."

Texas Ranger Julio Franco

...two hits against former teammates

Brewers 10, Twins 4
At Milwaukee, Bryan Clutterbuck's first major league victory was easy thanks to two homers apiece from Glenn Braggs and Paul Molitor and one by Gary Sheffield.

Clutterbuck, who pitched a seven-hitter in his first decision since 1986, did not pitch in a major league game the last two years after undergoing elbow surgery in 1987.

Braggs drove in five runs. He hit a two-run homer in the fourth, tripled in a run in the sixth and had a two-run homer in the seventh. Braggs' five RBIs were a career high.

Royals 5, Yankees 3
At Kansas City, Bo Jackson hit his fourth home run in six games and major-league-high seventh. Kevin Seitzer also homered and singled in a run, Frank White had an RBI double and Bob Boone added a run-scoring single.

Royals second baseman White was assessed his first fielding error in 171 games on a questionable scoring decision in the eighth. Rickey Henderson hit a ground ball that White lunged to his right to stop. But he didn't come up with the ball in time to get Henderson and was given the error.

Tigers 5, Mariners 2
At Detroit, Frank Tanana pitched six-hit ball for eight innings to snap his 11-game winless streak and Matt Nokes broke a tie in the sixth with a three-run homer.

Tanana, 1-3, struck out five and walked one. He had been 0-7 with four no-decisions since beating the Chicago White Sox 5-4 last Aug. 19.

Orioles 8, Angels 1
Jeff Ballard became the first Baltimore pitcher in 25 years to win his first four starts of the season. Ballard gave up six hits in seven innings but left the game with a slight hip strain and Kevin Hickey and Mark Williamson finished.

The last Baltimore pitcher to win his first four starts was Wally Bunker in 1964.

The visiting Orioles, losers of their first 21 games last season, remained atop the American League East.

Athletics 3, Blue Jays 1
At Oakland, Storm Davis equalled his career high with nine strikeouts and Carney Lansford drove in two runs as the Athletics extended their winning streak to seven games.

Davis, 2-1, pitched seven innings, gave up six hits and walked two before being replaced by Rick Honeycutt to start the eighth. Dennis Eckersley pitched the final 1 1/2 innings, striking out the side in the ninth, and got his American League-leading seventh save.

Belcher records second shutout

Associated Press

Move over Orel, Tim Belcher is starting a streak of his own.

Belcher pitched his second straight shutout Tuesday night as Los Angeles beat Chicago 4-0, spoiling the party to celebrate the 75th anniversary of Wrigley Field.

Belcher has a ways to go, though. Last season, Orel Hershiser had 50 consecutive scoreless innings to break Don Drysdale's major league record by one inning.

"He pitched a helluva game," Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda said. "We had a chance to get some more runs, but as it turned out he pitched some kind of a game."

Belcher, 2-1, allowed five hits, walked one and struck out seven. He also shut out Cincinnati 6-0 on four hits in his previous start on April 18.

"They got themselves out a couple of times," Belcher said. "Obviously, I'm in a good groove, but I did not pitch as well tonight as I did against Cincinnati."

Belcher, 12-6 as a rookie in 1988, had one shutout last season, a 6-0 victory over Houston on Sept. 20. "He pitched a good game, he's got a good arm and a good fastball," Cubs manager Don Zimmer said. "But you can't give the pitcher all the credit. We're just not hitting."

While the Cubs weren't hitting, Belcher was.

He provided all the runs he needed with a two-run double to cap a three-run second inning against Scott Sanderson, 1-2.

Belcher also singled in the sixth while Eddie Murray had three hits, including a pair of doubles. Murray also had a sacrifice fly in the ninth.

"They left a couple of pitches up and when they leave them up, I can hit them," said Belcher, who had only four hits in 55 at-bats (.073) last season.

Scott, 3-1, had a shutout until the seventh inning when Darren Daulton hit his fifth homer of the season.

NL Roundup

Daulton had one homer last season in 144 at-bats.

Davis hit a two-run homer off Ken Howell, 2-1, in the first and scored from first in the sixth on Kevin Bass' double.

Howell allowed four hits in seven innings and struck out a career-high 10.

Padres 1, Pirates 0
Eric Show allowed six hits in eight innings and Mark Davis got the last three outs for his 10th save in 10 opportunities as San Diego edged Pittsburgh at Three Rivers Stadium.

With one out in the fifth, Garry Templeton doubled off Bob Walk, 1-2, and scored on Roberto Alomar's single.

Walk lost to the Padres for the first time since July 21, 1984. He had been 5-0 against San Diego since then.

Mets 2, Braves 1
David Cone allowed five hits in 8 2/3 innings and Len Dykstra drove in a run and scored another, leading New York past Atlanta at Shea Stadium. It was the Mets' sixth victory in their last eight games and moved them to the .500 mark at 9-9.

Cone, 2-1, struck out 10 and walked four before needing last out relief help from Randy Myers.

Cone lost his shutout bid when Ron Gant homered on a 1-2 pitch with one out in the eighth inning.

Reds 6, Expos 1
Paul O'Neill snapped a sixth-inning tie with a three-run homer as Cincinnati beat Montreal at Riverfront Stadium and snapped out of a batting slump.

The Reds had scored only 10 runs in their previous six games, including three straight shutouts. The Expos have lost four of their last five games.

O'Neill's second homer of the season came off Dennis Martinez, 1-1, and put the Reds ahead 4-1 in the sixth.

Tom Browning, 3-1, allowed seven hits, including Tim Wallach's homer.

Giants 4, Cardinals 0
Don Robinson allowed four hits in seven innings and singled to key a three-run third inning, leading visiting San Francisco past St. Louis.

Robinson, 1-1, walked four and struck out none. He also singled in the fifth inning in improving his lifetime batting average to .268, best in the majors among pitchers with at least 150 at-bats.

Craig Lefferts pitched two innings of two-hit relief for his third save.

Odessa Permian runner Mike Winchell is tagged out at second base by Midland Lee shortstop B.J. Parrish, but Permian won the game 14-4 Tuesday at the Lee field to eliminate Midland High from state playoff hopes.

Meanwhile, Permian kept doing what it does best — winning. After a last-place finish in district play last year, the Panthers have pretty much had their way with district foes this season.

Tuesday was no exception. Mojo got on the board right away with a leadoff single and stolen base by Arvey Villa and an RBI single by Stony Case.

Lee loaded the bases in the bottom of the third on a walk to Blaine McAnally, B.J. Parrish's single and hit batsman Vince Henderson. Pearson hit into a fielder's choice to score McAnally, but Henderson was charged with an illegal slide at second base — putting Pearson out and all but killing the rally.

Pearson provided the other three runs with a homer down the left field line in the fifth inning. Though Prince was brilliant in spots, the senior didn't think much of his performance.

"It was the worst outing I've had all season," he said. "I've usually been able to get out of innings without giving up this many runs."

Prince walked three and hit a pair of batters. But his trouble was nothing like that faced by Pearson and Lee reliever Brad Sanders in the later innings.

Permian took the lead for good with two runs in the fourth, keyed by a ground-rule RBI double by Shawn Almond. Mojo then clawed for five runs in the fourth, two in the sixth and four in the seventh.

Almond was four-for-four with four RBI, one each in his last four at-bats. Case also drove in four runs, three of them on a three-run homer off Sanders.

Permian has exceeded everyone's expectations — except for those of Coach Highly.

"We're not in first yet," he said. "That's where I expected us to be."

Highly admitted that Mojo pitching, especially seniors Mike Morgan and Prince, was an unknown quantity going into the season.

"No one knew what kind of pitching we had," Highly said.

They know now. The Panthers have led the district in earned run average most of the season with a team ERA of well under two runs per nine innings.

Only Morgan had varsity hill experience going into the season, but both Prince and No. 3 man Arturo Ontiveros have come on strong, while juniors Blake Tucker and Breech Nolan wait in the wings.

First baseman Almond said his pitching teammates may hold the key to how far the Panthers go in the playoffs.

"We have a lot of confidence. As long as our pitching holds up, we should go far in the playoffs."

BULLDOGS

Ironically, Trees had saved a couple of runs with a diving catch in the fourth inning.

Paz pitched himself out of the game later in the seventh with consecutive walks to Dorey Thompson and Brian Conaway, but Broncho reliever Shannon Snyder, 0-3, put out the fire.

Only problem was, Rychel was almost unstoppable by that time. The University of Texas-bound fireballer struck out four batters in the seventh inning, one of whom reached on a throwing error by catcher Mowles, and two of the last three batters he faced in the bottom of the ninth to preserve a 5-3 lead.

Jason Stone led off by working Snyder for a walk and Thompson sacrificed him to second. Clark Crawford then singled home the lead run, and Tony Perez drove in an insurance run with a check-swing infield hit.

Ablene High 9, San Angelo 6. AHS had to cash in an insurance policy to stay in the running for third-place in district play.

The Eagles scored three runs in the top of the sixth on RBI singles by Trey Forkerway and Michael Romero, and Cory Gonzalez's sacrifice fly. Little did they suspect that San Angelo would explode for five in its half of the inning to pull within three runs.

Forkerway, who signed a baseball letter-of-intent with the University of Oklahoma Tuesday, drove in three runs, while Romero was four-for-four.

Pelluer to skip camp during contract battle

IRVING (AP) — Quarterback Steve Pelluer says he will skip the Dallas Cowboys mini-camp scheduled to begin today because his contract expired in February and he does not want to risk an injury while he is negotiating for a new contract.

Pelluer also hinted that he believes his future may be with some other team since the Cowboys selected UCLA quarterback Troy Aikman as the No. 1 selection in the National Football League.

Aikman already has signed a six-year contract valued at $11.037 million.

Pelluer, last year's starter, earned $302,500 in 1988 and has not been under contract since February, when his agreement with the Cowboys expired.

"I've always thought I'd like to finish my career here. But I need to start. I still consider myself the starting quarterback," said Pelluer, who will spend the next three days visiting his brother in Idaho.

"I just cannot see myself being a backup and being content to be a backup for the rest of my career," he said. "I'm not conceding the job, but if they aren't going to treat me like a starter, there are others out there that will."

Joe Courge, Pelluer's agent, said he spoke Tuesday with Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson and made "zero progress" toward reaching an agreement.

Courge said he advised Pelluer to skip the minicamp.

Pelluer notified Johnson of his decision Tuesday, reiterating that he is skipping the minicamp because he does not want to risk an injury and jeopardize his bargaining power, not because he is angry that the Cowboys selected Aikman.

"There's not much to do with Aikman, other than I want them to tell me where I stand," Pelluer said. "They need to make a decision about me. If they're not going to sign me, I've got to take care of myself."

Wilson promises to name Bengal drug users in story

CINCINNATI (AP) — Cincinnati Bengals players have little sympathy for running back Stanley Wilson, who was suspended for substance abuse at the Super Bowl, especially now that he's trying to sell his story to a national magazine. Wilson's agent, Reggie Turner, has said there were other players involved with drug use with Wilson on the eve of Super Bowl XXIII. Wilson was expected to name them in a story Turner says the former Bengals' player sold to a national magazine.

The Bengals' drug story, coupled with publicity over another Cincinnati sports figure, Reds manager Pete Rose, is having a depressing effect on the rest of the football team.

"It would be nice to get this behind us eventually," said wide receiver Cris Collinsworth said. "Cincinnati's kind of the king of the negative sports headlines for 1989, with this and all the other things in town."

James Kidney, one of Wilson's lawyers, said he had advised the former Bengals player against making any public admissions because he might be arrested. Kidney said he advised Turner against it, too.

"I think this is stepping beyond making a buck for him," Kidney told Cincinnati radio station WLW. "I just see no legitimate purpose whatsoever. It's a tragedy for the youth."

But Bengals running back Stanford Jennings was sarcastic about the forthcoming Wilson story.

"Does that mean Stanley would pose nude, too? Anything for money, you know."

Other players said they were disappointed in Wilson.

Committee against Valvano being AD

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina State basketball coach Jim Valvano should not also be the school's athletic director because there is a conflict of interest when he creates policies for himself, a committee has concluded.

It's recommendation was unanimously endorsed by the faculty senate after it was issued in a report by the group's Select Committee on Academic Integrity, which was formed to examine N.C. State's handling of student grades in the wake of allegations of improper grade changing on the basketball team.

"The singular nature of the varsity basketball challenge at N.C. State University has prompted the committee to further suggest that the two roles of director of athletics and basketball coach of the men's team may not be compatible," the committee said.

The panel added that it was impressed with the improvement in academics in athletes in non-revenue sports as well as the football team.

In an interview after the senate meeting, Dr. Edward P. Stahl II, a professor of chemical engineering who chaired the committee, said the committee had found that basketball players were not encouraged to achieve beyond a minimal level to keep them eligible to play.

"We were concerned about the basketball players' lack of progress toward a degree and the quality of the academic programs," he said.

Valvano, reached at his office for comment, hung up on a reporter asking for his reaction to the senate vote and the committee's report.

In the first four pages of the five-page report, the committee said it had found nothing amiss in the university's handling of student grades. On the final page, however, the committee wrote that it had found serious academic problems with the basketball team.

"While examining selected basketball players' academic records, the committee was struck by the lack of academic progress in case after case," the report said.

"While TV 'color' personnel talk of 'seniors' on the team, they are often referring to athletes in their fourth year of eligibility and the students' academic standing may place him years short of achieving a degree," the report says.

The committee wrote that it was encouraged that a report by the director of the academic skills program said that "essentially all our athletes were capable of successful academic work at N.C. State."

"It is the consensus of the committee that an extremely strong statement needs to be made by the academic community, indeed by the whole university family, that athletes are first and foremost students and scholars," the report said.

Seton Hall's Carlesimo heads for troubled Kentucky

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — P.J. Carlesimo, who guided an unheralded Seton Hall team to the runner-up spot in the NCAA tournament, will accept the head basketball coaching job at Kentucky, sources have told The Associated Press.

"Kentucky has a new coach," one source said Tuesday night.

Two sources told the AP that Carlesimo would accept the position, and that an announcement could come as soon as today.

The sources said Carlesimo wanted to talk with Seton Hall officials, specifically those who supported him during attempts to oust him two seasons ago, before making the official announcement.

UK President David Roselle told The Courier-Journal, however, that any reports Carlesimo had been hired are "not true." A source close to Seton Hall also said "it is not a done deal."

"He's a good candidate (and) we're clearly interested in one another," Roselle said. He added that he was sure UK Athletics Director C.M. Newton had "not made any offer" to Carlesimo.

Roselle said Carlesimo's hiring would have to be approved by the school's athletics board, of which he is chairman. He said no such board meeting has been scheduled.

Carlesimo, in Lexington after his interview Tuesday with the school's screening committee and Newton, could not be reached for comment Tuesday night. A person who answered the phone at his Lexington hotel room said he was resting.

Chris Cameron, UK sports information director, and Bernie Vonderheide, a school spokesman, said they knew nothing about a decision on a new coach, and both added no news conference had been scheduled for today.

Carlesimo just finished the first year of a five-year contract reportedly worth a total of $1.2 million. That average salary of $240,000 could probably be doubled by UK's overall package.

Carlesimo, a 39-year-old bachelor whose coaching record is under .500 despite last season's 31-7 mark, is the first candidate Newton had wanted who has been interested enough to visit the campus.

Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski and Los Angeles Lakers coach Pat Riley immediately said they were not interested. Arizona coach Lute Olson flirted with UK briefly but canceled a visit to the campus.

Newton had declined earlier Tuesday night to characterize Carlesimo as the top candidate.

"Not really. I'm not going to get into numbers," Newton said. "But obviously he's a young coach we're very, very interested in and obviously he's interested in us or he wouldn't be on campus."

"So we just have to see what happens."

Calls to Newton's Lexington home later Tuesday night went unanswered.

Kentucky is seeking a replacement for Eddie Sutton, who resigned under pressure in March after directing the program for four years.

School officials went before the NCAA Committee on Infractions last weekend in Charleston, S.C., responding to 18 allegations of wrongdoing in the basketball program.

Any sanctions or penalties against the program by the NCAA are expected in the next two to four weeks. The sources said that Carlesimo was the kind of coach UK wanted to hire before the possible sanctions were announced to lessen any blow the NCAA might administer.

Carlesimo, whose integrity has generally been unquestioned, took over Seton Hall's floundering program in 1982. The Big East Conference team limped to a 6-23 record the first year and has steadily improved. Several student groups called for his resignation two seasons ago before he took Seton Hall to its first NCAA tournament appearance in the school's history.

Carlesimo was on the UK campus for most of the day Tuesday. He met for much of the morning with Newton, then had a two-hour meeting in the afternoon with the screening committee.

William Sturgill, the screening committee chairman and a UK board of trustees member, said he was "personally impressed with his (Carlesimo's) dedication as a coach and his intention and knowledge of the game."

Cornell coach resigns post

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — Maxie Baughan, who last season led Cornell to its first Ivy League football title since the Ed Marinaro years, has stepped down as head coach amid reports he was romantically involved with his top assistant's wife.

Citing "personal tensions" in Cornell's football program, the 50-year-old Baughan resigned Tuesday from the post he has held since 1983. His resignation comes six months after the Big Red tied Penn for the Ivy League championship, Cornell's first title since sharing the honor with Dartmouth in 1971, the year running back Marinaro finished second in the Heisman Trophy voting.

In a statement released by the university late Tuesday night, Baughan said the unspecified tensions and distractions "have engulfed the program" and were taking a toll on him and others associated with the team. "Despite my best efforts and those of others," Baughan said in a letter to Cornell athletic director Laing Kennedy, "it has become clear to me that the tensions which have characterized the program recently are not likely to resolve themselves soon."

A rift between Baughan and his assistant head coach, Peter Noyes, surfaced two weeks ago. Later, the Ithaca Journal reported that the rift stemmed from a romantic relationship between Baughan and Noyes' wife Cathy.

The newspaper said several unidentified sources had confirmed that Baughan, who is married, and Mrs. Noyes were involved in a "long-time romantic relationship."

Noyes has been on leave with pay from the Cornell coaching staff since early March. On April 13, Noyes said "I cannot and will not return to work until the situation (with Baughan) is resolved."

Neither Baughan, who reportedly has left Ithaca, Kennedy nor Noyes were available for comment Tuesday night, when Cornell's players were notified of Baughan's resignation at a team meeting, according to sports information director Dave Wohlhueter.

Baughan handed in his resignation to Kennedy at 11 a.m., but the players were not told until the team meeting at 10:30 p.m., when Kennedy announced the news and passed out copies of the press release. "We feel really bad for both coaches," senior wide receiver Sean McAuley told the Cornell Daily Sun, the university's campus newspaper. "I had so much respect for Maxie, but I guess it's the best thing for the program. Actually, I still have respect for Maxie, I just think he made a mistake."

Junior placekicker Andy Bednar told the Sun he felt "kind of disappointed. I'm still looking forward to next year, but I'll miss Coach Baughan. I think this may be the best thing for the team."

When asked if he would like to see Noyes as head coach, McAuley said he would "love to see Coach Noyes do it. I think everybody wants him to take it. The question is, if Coach Noyes wants it."

During the meeting, Kennedy reportedly told the players they would have a new coach "in a few days."

In six years at Cornell, Baughan's teams went 28-29-2, with an Ivy League record of 23-18-1 that includes last season's 7-2-1 mark, good for a share of the conference championship with Penn.

Baughan, 50, was an All-America linebacker at Georgia Tech who went on to play 14 years in the National Football League with the Philadelphia Eagles and Los Angeles Rams, being selected All-Pro four times.

GNP takes biggest jump in a year

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy, surpassing the $5 trillion mark for the first time, expanded at a robust annual rate of 5.5 percent in the first three months of 1989, the fastest pace in more than a year, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that almost half of the increase in the gross national product came from a statistical catch-up from last year's drought.

But even discounting this book-keeping factor, the GNP, representing the country's total output of goods and services, advanced at a 3 percent annual rate, down only slightly from a 3.5 percent non-farm growth rate in the final three months of 1988.

The non-farm growth was slightly better than economists had been expecting. Most analysts believe the U.S. economy will slow substantially this year under the weight of higher interest rates.

For the past year, the Federal Reserve has been pushing rates higher in an effort to fight rising inflationary pressures.

However, the report contained information that inflation is rising. A GNP price index which measures a fixed marketbasket of goods and services rose at an annual rate of 5 percent in the first quarter, up from a fourth-quarter rate of 4.2 percent.

Half of the increase came from a pay raise for federal employees, with rising food and home costs accounting for much of the rest of the increase.

The 5.5 percent overall increase in the GNP was more than double the 2.4 percent advance in the October-December quarter, the last period in which output was held back because of the lingering effects of last summer's drought.

With the start of the new year, the government returned its estimate of farm output to normal levels, thus accounting for 2.5 percentage points of the 5.5 percent increase in the first quarter.

Economists expect growth for the remainder of the year to slow dramatically as the economy adjusts to the year-long credit tightening done by the Fed.

The Bush administration and some private economists have begun to express fears that the central bank could overdo its anti-inflation battle and risk pushing the country into another recession.

However, other analysts believe the Fed will be able to engineer the tricky "soft landing" in which interest rates rise enough to dampen inflationary pressures but not enough to choke off the six-year-old recovery, the longest in peacetime history.

Today's GNP report showed that the country's total output climbed to $5.117 trillion, the first time in history it topped the $5 trillion mark.

This figure is before inflation is taken into account. After adjusting for inflation, the GNP rose $54.8 billion in the first quarter to $4.088 trillion. This figure is expressed in 1982 dollars.

The 5.5 percent GNP increase was the largest advance since a 6.1 percent jump in the fourth quarter of 1987.

For all of 1988, the GNP rose 3.9 percent, the best performance in four years. The Bush administration, counting on continued strong growth to help reduce the federal budget deficit, is forecasting that growth in 1989 will dip only slightly to 3.2 percent.

However, many private economists believe that forecast is far too optimistic and total growth for the year will be 2.7 percent or less, a sluggish rate which would not be enough to keep unemployment from rising.

FDIC auction

Auctioneer Mark Thomas takes bids on cars at the first FDIC auction of the year Tuesday. FDIC spokesman Gene Shrode says all the vehicles, two airplanes, two partial drilling rigs and 10 mobile homes were sold for a total of $530,000. He expects to gain approximately $200,000 from today's sale of office furniture and equipment, retail fixtures and beauty shop equipment. A majority of the items came from banks outside Midland.

Offers in for MBank

HOUSTON (AP) — Offers are mounting for portions of the former MBank system, but federal regulators say they still are hoping to sell the Deposit Insurance Bridge Bank in one piece.

"We have gotten a number of expressions in Bridge Bank on a whole-bank basis and a spin-off basis," Ken Walker, Southwest region director of the FDIC's Dallas office, said Monday.

Walker declined to name interested parties; however, a number of banks and investor groups inside and outside Texas and the United States have publicly expressed interest in at least part of Bridge Bank.

Bank holding company Sterling Bancshares has notified the FDIC of its interest in acquiring two Bridge Bank branches near Sterling's three Houston banks, said Chairman George Martinez. Bay Area Bank & Trust in Webster also has told the FDIC of its desire to buy the two Clear Lake branches.

First City Bancorp. of Texas, Texas Commerce Bancshares Inc., NCNB Texas National Bank, and the Bank of Scotland, among others, are considering bids.

Parker & Parsley option due

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

As year-end results are announced today, the fate of Midland-based Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. hangs in the balance as an option to buy the company is set to expire.

The purchase option is held by Gene Phillips, former chairman of Dallas-based Southmark Corp. and William S. Freedman, former vice chairman of Southmark of which Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. is a wholly-owned subsidiary.

At press time, officials of Parker & Parsley said they had not yet received any word on whether or not the former executives intended to exercise their option to buy the company, but said they expected to hear sometime today.

If Phillips and Freedman are successful in their purchase, the fate of the Midland oil company would be in doubt, since the intentions of the pair for the company are not known. It is not known if they intend to keep Parker & Parsley in Midland under present management, or if it would be sold in parcels or moved to another city and placed under different management. Present management has agreed to remain with the company until June 1 if the purchase is completed.

However, current management which include Scott Sheffield, chairman and president, Herbert C. Williamson, executive vice president, and seven other executive officers also have an option to purchase Parker & Parsley should the Phillips and Freedman option expire today. Present management would keep the firm intact in Midland, said Lee Prieto, manager of corporate development.

The option shuffle comes at a time when Parker & Parsley Development Partners, L.P. announce 1988 year end results and a distribution for first quarter 1989.

Exxon spill generates flood of lawsuits

NEW YORK (AP) — Exxon Corp. said Tuesday it has been hit with 31 lawsuits and 1,300 claims ranging from $500 to $4 million in connection with last month's Alaskan oil spill and expects further suits as well as government fines.

At a meeting of securities analysts, top executives of the nation's biggest oil company said Exxon already had paid $400,000 to settle smaller claims brought mainly by fishermen and cannery workers whose jobs were disrupted because of the March 24 spill that fouled hundreds of miles of coastline.

Exxon executives declined to put a dollar value on the existing lawsuits or the claims.

Exxon Chairman Lawrence C. Rawl, who has been criticized for staying out of sight in the crucial days following the disaster, said that in retrospect he would have responded differently. However, he said he did not understand the public anger against the company, especially because it had accepted the blame and apologized for the spill and was cleaning it up.

"I'm angry with myself," Rawl said. "It's not really clear to me as to why everyone is so angry — once we get past the point of admitting it was our ship that went on the rocks."

Texas Burger to open on Big Spring

By MELLA McEWEN

Odean Bobby Cox, owner of Bobby Cox Cos., which includes the Texas Burger chain, has purchased the Wendy's building at 2501 N. Big Spring. Plans are to open a Texas Burger in the location sometime later this summer, he says, adding that he is also seeking out a location for a third Midland Texas Burger.

The new Midland store will mark the eighth in the chain, which has restaurants in Midland, Odessa, Lubbock and Andrews.

Owned by Midlanders Lisa Poe-

ter and Lisa Simmons, Innovations offers custom window treatments, wall coverings, furniture, flooring and upholstery. Foster notes that all fabrication such as draperies is done at the store. The two offer free consultations at the store as well as house-calls and after-hours appointments.

THE NEEDLE NOOK will be packing its bags and moving to No. 12 Imperial Shopping Center, between Ginny's Collection and Take Note over the weekend. The store will be moving from 2207 Big Spring.

Owner Moele Neil says the new location will be better suited to her arts and crafts and framing supplies, noting that she had custom fixtures made for the new store. Besides, she says, "After 27 years in the same location, it'll be nice to have a fresh clean store."

Also on the move is RX FITNESS TREADMILL, which recently moved from 431 Andrews Highway to North Park Shopping Center, 4706 N. Midkiff.

Kevin Taylor, manager of the Midland store, says the new location is more visible and larger, allowing for a less crowded showroom.

RX Treadmill is owned by Bob Strong of Lubbock, and carries treadmills, weightlifting machines, trampolines, stationary bicycles and cross-country skiing machines.

Midland travellers will have some new destinations when SOUTHWEST AIRLINES begins nonstop service from Oakland International Airport to Phoenix Sky Harbor International Airport, Ontario International Airport, and San Diego International Airport beginning May 15.

Southwest spokeswoman Charlotte Goddard said Midlanders can get connecting service going to Oakland or returning to Midland, either through Phoenix or Albuquerque. "This will be a new destination Midlanders can fly Southwest to," she says.

In total, Southwest will inaugurate service with 14 nonstop departures from Oakland daily. Same plane or connecting service will also be offered from Oakland to Albuquerque, Amarillo, Austin, Birmingham, Chicago Midway, Detroit City Airport, Detroit Metro Airport, El Paso, Houston Hobby, Kansas City, Las Vegas, Little Rock, Lubbock, Nashville, New Orleans, Oklahoma City, St. Louis, San Antonio and Tulsa.

Southwest will offer three non-stop roundtrip flights daily between Oakland and Phoenix plus seven additional roundtrip one-stop or connecting flights daily. Six nonstop roundtrip flights will be offered daily between Oakland and Ontario International Airport, and five non-stop flights are scheduled from Oakland to San Diego.

MARKETS

Oil prices turn lower

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil prices have given back some of Tuesday's gains.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for June delivery of West Texas Intermediate fell 14 cents to stand at $21.27 at midmorning.

WTI had surged 80 cents to $21.41 in brisk trading, following the lead of gasoline futures. Traders continue to be concerned about supplies.

On the NYMEX, the May contract for wholesale unleaded gasoline jumped 3.93 cents to settle at 76.16 cents a gallon, after dropping 1.93 cents on Monday. Other contract months were up sharply. May wholesale heating oil, which slid 1.82 cents in the previous session, gained 0.27 cent to settle at $2.08 cents a gallon.

Andrew Lebow, a senior trader with E.D.&F. Man International Futures Inc., attributed the gasoline rally partly to expectations that the latest American Petroleum Institute weekly report due out late Tuesday would show decreased supplies in the wake of the Exxon oil tanker spill in Valdez, Alaska.

An explosion in the North Sea last week also compounded fears of an already tight gasoline supply situation as the summer driving season approaches.

On Tuesday, Exxon Corp. and Shell U.K., the British unit of Royal Dutch Shell Group, said they expected a prolonged shutdown in production in that area. The North Sea accident has disrupted the flow of Brent crude through a major pipeline, affecting the production of at least 500,000 barrels a day.

Dollar rises in bullish market

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar held firm in subdued European trading this morning as the market remained bullish on the U.S. unit despite potentially bearish factors.

Gold prices were lower.

Foreign exchange dealers said they were surprised by the dollar's newly found strength despite bearish factors including last week's hike in the West German Bundesbank's discount rate and Tuesday's news that the West German government plans to repeal a 10 percent withholding tax on interest income.

In London one British pound cost $1.6965 today, cheaper for buyers than Tuesday's late $1.7030.

Other mid-morning rates for the dollar in Europe compared with Tuesday's late rates:

—1.8702 West German marks, up from 1.8625
—1.6518 Swiss francs, up from 1.6435
—6.3303 French francs, up from 6.3065
—2.1085 Dutch guilders, up from 2.1000
—1.1885 Canadian dollars, down 1.1910

The U.S. unit also stood at 1,370.50 lire, up from its late rate of 1,366.00 Italian lire Tuesday in London. Italian markets were closed for a holiday Tuesday.

In Tokyo, the dollar closed at 131.47 yen, up from Tuesday's late 131.17. Gold opened in London at a bid price of $383.75 a troy ounce, down from $385.75 late Tuesday. At mid-morning, the city's main bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $384.40.

Silver bullion traded in London at $5.785 bid a troy ounce, down from Tuesday's $5.81.

Stocks post second straight loss

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices slumped Tuesday as traders pulled profits from an unenthusiastic market and oil and technology company earnings declined.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial fell 15.77 points to 2,386.91, the second straight decline after a four-week rise that pushed the market to post-crash highs.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 8 to 7 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 687 up, 827 down and 471 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board totaled 165.43 million shares, up from 142.10 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 196.49 million shares.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Rising mortgage costs send home sales lower

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sales of existing homes dropped 4.3 percent in March, the third straight monthly decline, as rising mortgage interest rates made more inroads into the housing market, a real estate trade group said.

The National Association of Realtors said Tuesday that sales of existing single-family homes dropped to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.33 million units in March, the slowest pace since February 1988.

Sales had dropped 2 percent in February and 9.4 percent in January.

Auto sales up 5 percent over 1988

DETROIT (AP) — Mid-April car and light truck sales by the eight major U.S. automakers rose 5.4 percent over last year in an apparent indication that incentives are working, the companies said.

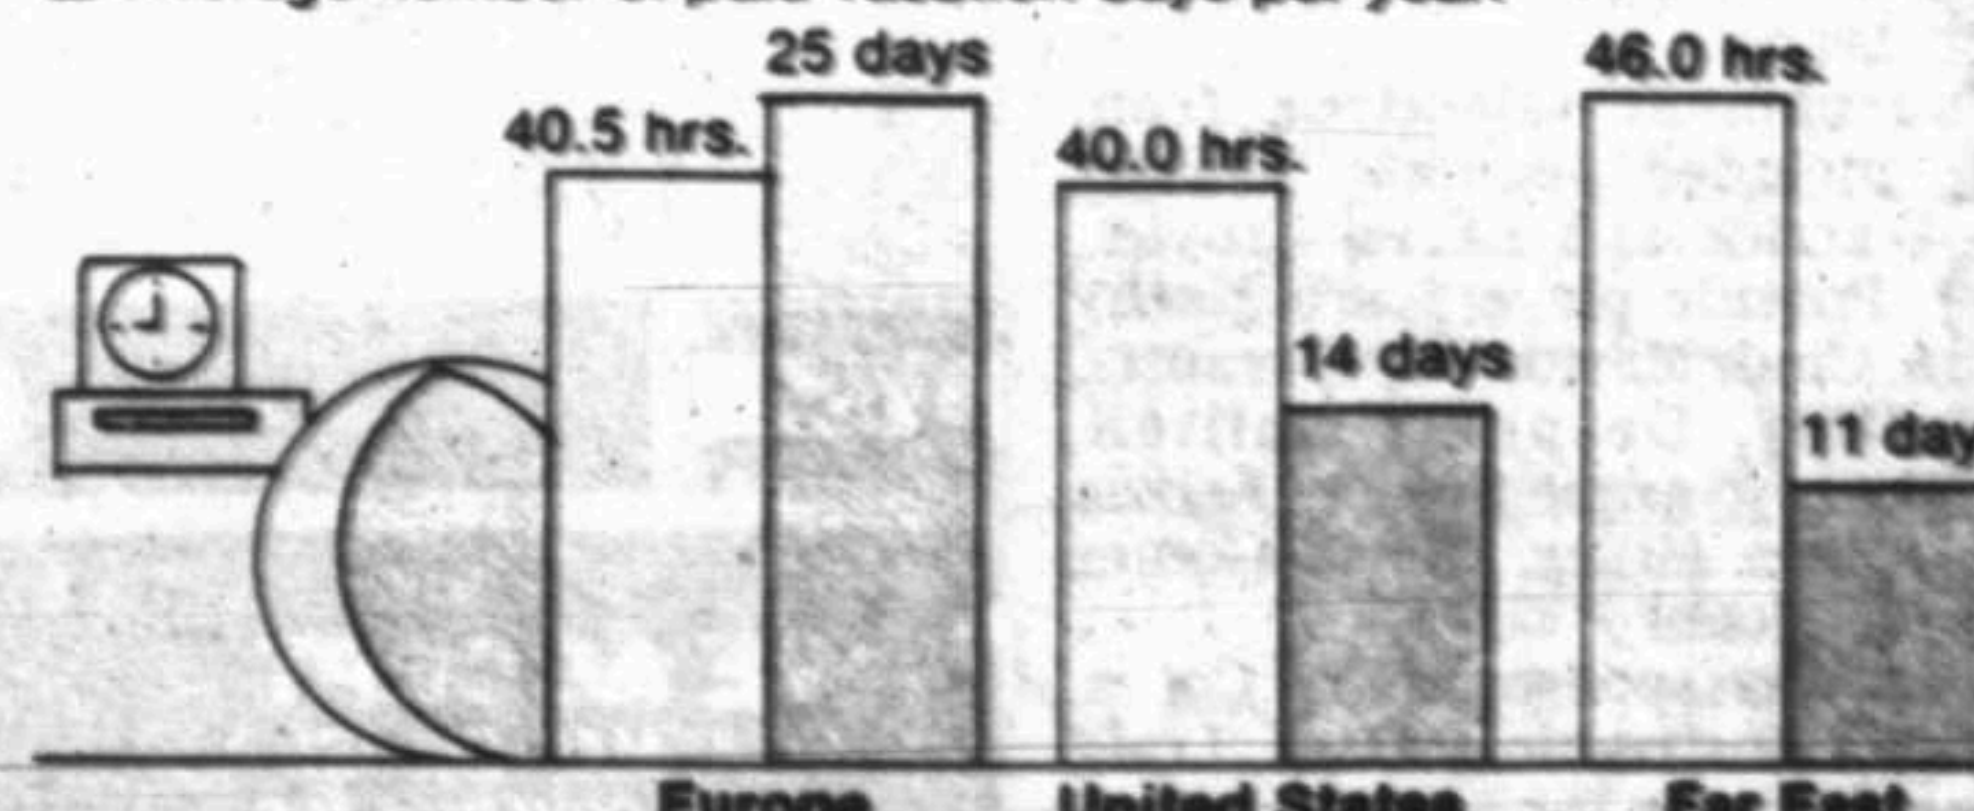

The companies reported Tuesday that they sold an average of 41,880 vehicles a day during the April 11-20 period this year, compared with an average 39,257 during the same time last year.

Car sales were up 3.7 percent while truck sales rose 8.6 percent.

For the first quarter of 1989, the partnership declared a distribution of 90 cents per unit. It is the seventh consecutive quarterly distribution paid by Parker & Parsley Development Partners since it was formed in 1987.

However, the partnership ended 1988 with a net loss of $7.9 million or $1.09 per share, which was significantly less than the $8.1 million loss in 1987.

At the same time, however, revenues and reserves increased significantly.

Said Prieto: "This is an accounting loss, because the firm has adequate cash flow to pay distributions." He said the loss was based primarily on depletion, depreciation, and amortization.

Total revenues for 1988 increased 15 percent ($5.1 million) to $38.4 million, as a result of properties acquired by an exchange offer from MGF Oil Corp. and Indian Wells Oil Co.

During the same period, oil reserves grew 90.6 percent to 13.5 million barrels, while gas reserves increased 47 percent to 110.8 billion cubic feet. Through an aggressive program of property development which included EOR projects, infill drilling and exploitation of the Midland-based company has brought equivalent barrels of oil reserves to 32 million barrels (BOE) or five times 1988 production, which also 10 percent for the year.

"The company participated in the drilling of 44 wells and 43 were commercial producers, for a success rate of 96 percent," said Prieto.

The production increase helped offset an average price per barrel decline of $2.78.

Exxon President Lee R. Raymond said all but two of the lawsuits were class actions against the company. All but one were filed in Alaska state and federal courts, he said, with the remaining suit filed in California.

Raymond said Exxon has four separate insurance policies totaling $509.8 million in cleanup and liability coverage, including a $400 million policy that would pay off even in cases of company negligence. But Raymond said the various policies can't necessarily be added together.

Raymond said the insurance would cover most, if not all, of the cleanup costs and that "therefore it's impossible for us at this point to make any provision for our earnings for any reserves."

On Monday, Exxon announced that it had charged $30 million against first-quarter earnings for expenses associated with the salvage and repair of the broken tanker but not for the cleanup itself.

Raymond also said the company probably was subject to fines but did not yet know what fines various government agencies might impose.

Rawl said the company did not anticipate any punitive damages due to the spill, in which an Exxon tanker ran onto a reef and speeded more than 11 million gallons of crude oil into Prince William Sound.

"There obviously was no intent on our part — to put a very expensive ship on Bligh reef, to put expensive oil in the water and then a very, very, very expensive cleanup," Rawl said.

In response to criticism that Exxon did not have enough people working on the cleanup, Rawl said Exxon would increase the number to about 4,000 by next month. He also reiterated his optimism that, despite concerns by Alaska officials, the major part of the spill would be cleaned up by September.

Exxon told a news conference Monday that the cleanup was ahead of the pace calculated in the oil company's federally-approved plan.

When questioned about the impact of a possible boycott against Exxon, Rawl said that with anticipated tight supplies and high demand during the summer season, "it's hard to see this summer how we wouldn't be able to sell all the gasoline we can make."

A number of consumer activists have called for a boycott of Exxon to punish the company for what they claim is its poor response to the disaster and alleged negligence leading to the spill.

"The boycott will damage the dealers who are independent business people," Rawl said.

Rawl said the spill hasn't changed Exxon's outlook or spending plans. He also declined to specify when the company would declare its next dividend.

As to changing Exxon's tarnished image, he said, "It's pretty clear there's a better way to do that job, but we haven't had time to sort that out. We're going to have to do a hell of a lot better job than we have done."

Texaco says first quarter profits soared

Associated Press

Texaco Inc.'s profit soared in the first quarter, helped by a substantial one-time gain from a major restructuring, while rising crude prices took a toll on most of the nation's other large oil companies.

Mobil Corp. reported a 22 percent drop in first-quarter earnings compared with the same 1988 period, while Chevron Corp.'s profit was down 52 percent and Occidental Petroleum Corp.'s fell 41 percent. Shell Oil Co. said its profit slipped 7 percent.

Texaco said its profit rose more than fivefold to $1.5 billion, or $5.91 a share, from $270 million, or $1.11 a share, in the first quarter of 1988.

Texaco's first-quarter results included a net restructuring gain of $1.2 billion, or $4.87 a share, the company said.

The nation's third-largest oil company, based in White Plains, N.Y., said it realized $1.3 billion from the sale of Texaco Canada Inc. after special charges. Texaco sold its 78 percent stake in the Canadian subsidiary to Exxon Corp. in January.

Texaco's revenue for the first three months of the year totaled $9.6 billion, up 10 percent from $8.7 billion in the year-ago quarter.

Despite the gains, Texaco's refining and marketing margins were hurt by rising crude oil prices in the absence of a corresponding increase in product prices, the company said. However, domestic exploration and production results benefited from the higher crude prices.

Mobil, based in New York, said its first-quarter earnings fell to $429 million, or $1.04 a share, from $540 million, or $1.33 a share, in the comparable 1988 quarter.

Revenue totaled $14 billion, up slightly from $13.9 billion in last year's first quarter.

Mobil Chairman Allen E. Murray attributed the profit decline to volatile crude prices, which resulted in a 44 percent drop in the company's refining and marketing earnings. Exploration and production earnings were off 22 percent. However, Murray predicted that a continued rise in product prices, including gasoline, could produce a turnaround in the second quarter.

San Francisco-based Chevron reported net income of $313 million, or 91 cents a share, down from $653 million, or $1.91 a share, in the same period last year. Revenue totaled $7.7 billion, up from $7.5 billion.

Occidental reported after-tax profit of $67 million, or 24 cents a share, down sharply from $113 million, or 52 cents a share. Sales were $5.1 billion, compared with $4.5 billion in 1988's first quarter.

The Los Angeles-based company said the 1988 results included a net gain of $53 million from the issuance and sale of stock by one of its subsidiaries.

Shell, a unit of the Royal Dutch-Shell Group of Companies based in England and the Netherlands, said its U.S. consolidated earnings in the quarter were $362 million, down 7 percent from $390 million in the year-earlier period. Revenue totaled $5.2 billion, up from $5.1 billion last year.

Phillips continues making financial recovery

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Phillips Petroleum Co. is not "over the hump," company officials say, but executives who have weathered five years of sometimes stormy shareholder meetings breezed through a one-hour session Tuesday in which the tone was decidedly upbeat.

G.A. Cox, Phillips president and chief operating officer, told 1,200 shareholders Oklahoma's largest company has "proved itself remarkably resilient" in difficult times.

Last week, Phillips reported first-quarter net income of $190 million, or 78 cents a share, compared with $130 million, or 55 cents a share, for the same period last year. Total revenues were $3.1 billion compared with $2.9 billion for the first quarter of 1988.

C.J. Silas, Phillips chairman and chief executive officer, said the company and the petroleum industry "still face enormous challenges."

"We can't count on oil prices remaining firm and we can't count on the economy remaining as healthy as it is today," Silas said. "We've got to count on ourselves to stay tough, lean and quick on our feet."

Silas said the Exxon Valdez disaster, in which millions of gallons of crude oil was spilled off the coast of Alaska, has damaged the entire industry. He said even before the accident concern over environmental issues was "freezing this nation into paralysis."

"The examples are many — nuclear power, waste disposal, new plant construction, pipeline location," he said. "In many cases we're going nowhere."

"Why? Because the threshold of tolerable risk has been set so low that no reasonable project can be undertaken."

He said environmental concerns are making it difficult to develop new oil and gas prospects at a time when domestic oil production continues to fall. Silas said the Exxon accident "doesn't diminish our nation's need to develop the petroleum resources of Alaska."

Silas said the industry has had an "otherwise solid record of responsible and environmentally sensitive activity in Alaska and elsewhere."

"Our industry's credibility is in question. It's going to be essential for us to work even harder to show that we do care and that we are careful," he said.

Silas said Phillips officials will be "pleasantly surprised" if oil prices average $16 a barrel this year, reflecting a $2 improvement over 1988.

Cox said the true test of a company "is how well it responds to difficult circumstances. How fast it gets back on its feet after encountering adversity."

Phillips has sold assets and reduced employment after debt it incurred about five years ago while fighting off takeover attempts. The company has a current debt of $4.5 billion.

Phillips has reduced its debt by about $400 million this year and plans to reduce debt by another $200 million by the end of the year, Silas said.

Supreme court upholds fees on pipeline users

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court on Tuesday upheld the constitutionality of a three-year-old system of federal fees imposed on users of pipelines that transport natural gas and hazardous liquids.

The unanimous decision overturned a ruling by a U.S. District Court in Oklahoma, which held last year that Congress violated the constitutional separation of powers by giving the secretary of transportation the discretion to establish the system, set the fees and decide which users should pay and on what basis.

Although the amount of money involved in the case is small — about $9 million a year — the constitutional principle is significant. The District Court ruling alarmed the Reagan administration because it called into question a variety of similar delegations by Congress to administrative agencies.

The District Court ruling was based on a constitutional principle known as the "non-delegation doctrine," which holds that Congress violates the separation of powers when it delegates to the executive branch responsibilities that are legislative in nature.

The non-delegation doctrine reached its peak in the early days of the New Deal, when the Supreme Court invoked it in two decisions in 1935 that struck down portions of the National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933.

GNP

The first quarter GNP report provided some evidence that the economy was slowing.

Consumer spending, which accounts for two-thirds of all economic activity, rose at a rate of just 1.3 percent, the slowest advance in more than a year. Purchases of durable goods such as autos actually fell by 3.2 percent in the first quarter while purchases of products not expected to last three years edged up 2 percent.

Housing construction, another key consumer sector, dropped at an annual rate of 3.6 percent in the first quarter, the first decline in a year as the housing industry suffered under the impact of rising mortgage rates.

While these two key sectors were flashing signals of a slowdown, other segments of the economy demonstrated strength from January through March.

Since then, the court has never invalidated an act of Congress on non-delegation grounds. But in appealing the Oklahoma case to the court last summer, the Reagan administration warned that the District Court ruling could reinvigorate the doctrine.

Writing for the court Tuesday, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor was emphatic in rejecting the District Court's reasoning and in reaffirming the modern court's rejection of the non-delegation doctrine.

Justice O'Connor said that as recently as January, in the decision upholding federal sentencing guidelines, the court had "reaffirmed our longstanding principle that so long as Congress provides an administrative agency with standards guiding its actions such that a court could ascertain whether the will of Congress has been obeyed, no delegation of legislative authority trenching on the principle of separation of powers has occurred."

The law at issue in the case, Skinner vs. Mid-America Pipeline, No. 87-2008, was Section 7005 of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985, a section entitled "pipeline safety user fees."

Congress directed the secretary of transportation to make the federal pipeline safety program self-sustaining by requiring the industry to pay fees sufficient to cover the cost of administering the program.

While the law specified that the fees should be based on "usage," Congress left it up to the secretary to decide how to define usage: the length of the pipeline, the volume carried, the revenue generated, "or an appropriate combination thereof."

Within a few months, the Department of Transportation published a fee schedule based on pipeline mileage.

Fees were set at $23.99 a mile for gas pipelines and $6.41 a mile for pipelines carrying hazardous liquids such as ammonia and petroleum products.

The Mid-America Pipeline Co., based in Tulsa, Okla., filed a lawsuit challenging the constitutional basis for the fees after it was assessed $53,024 for 1986.

When the District Court declared the law unconstitutional, the government appealed directly to the Supreme Court.

In her opinion, Justice O'Connor said that there was nothing unusual about Congress instructing an executive branch agency to determine how a particular program was to be carried out.

In another case Tuesday, the court ruled, 6-3, that a state could constitutionally tax the production of oil and gas from wells leased by non-Indians on tribal reservations.

The decision, written by Justice John Paul Stevens, upheld a ruling by the New Mexico Court of Appeals.

That court had turned down a challenge to the 8 percent severance tax that New Mexico applies to mineral production in the state, on Indian reservations as well as elsewhere.

The Jicarilla Apache tribe, on whose reservation the wells at issue are situated, itself imposes a 6 percent severance tax.

The non-Indian producer, the Cotton Petroleum Corp., argued that it was being subjected to unconstitutional multiple taxation and that the state tax was pre-empted by federal law.

Justices Harry A. Blackmun, William J. Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall dissented in the case, Cotton Petroleum vs. New Mexico, No. 87-1327.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Proof required on stock basis reported to IRS

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Please explain capital gains on stock. If I sell some stock I own, is the capital gain the total price I receive? Or is it the difference between the price I receive and the price I paid when I bought it? If it's the latter, how can I find out what I paid for the shares?

A. It's the latter — the difference between your proceeds from the sale and your "basis." Your proceeds from the sale is the selling price, minus brokerage commission and any other selling costs. In most cases, your basis is the price you paid when you made the purchase, including brokerage commission.

You're supposed to keep a record of your basis. When you bought the stock, you received a confirmation statement from the broker. That statement listed the per share purchase price, the commission and your total cost.

It's an unhappy fact that many people think of confirmation statements as sales slips and do not hang on to them. If you are in that boat, you can try the following:

Visit a public library and check the price of the stock at the time you bought it in microfilm records of newspaper stock tables. If you sell the stock, use that price as your basis on Schedule D of your federal income tax return, where capital gains and losses are reported.

Then say a few prayers that the Internal Revenue Service doesn't question your return. If the revenue officers do come calling, they will demand proof of your purchase price. Even with the new and much-touted Taxpayer's Bill of Rights, the burden of proof remains on the taxpayer.

Q. When my father retired, he was told by a tax-preparation firm that, based on his income and expenses, he no longer would have to file federal income tax returns. So, he stopped filing. After his recent death, my mother went to the same tax firm and was told the same thing.

Is this correct? I hope it is and that, after all these years, the IRS won't be calling in its due. But I thought everyone had to file, regardless of status.

A. Assuming your parents disclosed their income to that tax-preparation firm and the people at that firm didn't goof, it's correct.

Whether or not a federal income tax return must be filed is determined by a three-way combination of age, gross income and filing status — single, married-joint return, married-separate return, head of household, single dependent and qualifying widow or widower with dependent child. Depending on status and age, the gross income filing requirements for 1988 ranged from $501 to $10,100.

The $10,100 gross income filing requirement covered married couples filing joint returns and, based on what the tax preparation firm told your parents, applied to them. So don't fret. The IRS won't come after your mother.

Q. If an estate in excess of $600,000 contains a substantial amount of tax-free municipal bonds, are the values of these bonds subject to federal estate tax and state inheritance and/or estate tax?

A. They will be subject to federal estate tax, unless the estate has been left to the dead person's spouse. One spouse can leave to the other unlimited amounts, free of federal estate tax.

All or part of an estate exceeding $600,000 left to persons other than the dead person's spouse gets nipped by federal estate tax. This applies to all assets in the estate, including municipal bonds. The "tax-free" feature of municipal bonds concerns only the interest those bonds pay and even that does not always apply.

Although state "death tax" rules vary from state to state, they generally hit municipal bonds — especially those issued in states other than the one levying the tax. All states except Nevada have estate and/or inheritance taxes.

Diane Faulkner appears in her stage makeup for the role of Willa Jean, an elderly madam in the production of "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas."

Diane Faulkner is a youthful, vivacious 28-year-old. But for a brief time Friday evening, and for 15 more evenings, she will don the face of a woman in her late 60s, thanks to the magic of makeup.

Ms. Faulkner, a dancer in the upcoming Midland Community Theatre production of "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," will make her age transition for a brief appearance in the production as Willa Jean, an elderly madam who bestows her whorehouse to her favorite prostitute, Miss Mona.

Although Ms. Faulkner will only be on stage for a few minutes in her Willa Jean guise, her preparation time for her appearance now takes about 40 minutes, according to Renee Chambers, creative dramatics instructor and teacher of Youth Theatre School for Midland Community Theatre. Ms. Chambers, who received a bachelor of arts in theatre from the University of California at San Diego, was trained in the art of using and applying makeup. She will apply Ms. Faulkner's makeup for the first few performances as she teaches the process to Susan Brown, makeup artist and MCT Production Board chairman for makeup. "By the final few performances, I may be putting on my own makeup," Ms. Faulkner said.

"Even though Diane will only be on stage for a few minutes, (MCT) executive director Don Bachmann felt the realism was necessary," Ms. Chambers said. The drama instructor expects to get the preparation time down to 30 minutes.

There is one advantage to the length of time it takes to put Ms. Faulkner's makeup on, though. "It gives me time to get into the role of Willa Jean and make that transition from a younger to an older person," Ms. Faulkner said.

While the makeup is being applied, Ms. Faulkner said she "feels older every minute."

TO HELP PREPARE volunteers in makeup artistry for "Whorehouse" and future productions, MCT recently offered a makeup workshop presented by Ms. Brown and Liz Stottlemire on basic stage makeup and aging techniques. During the workshop, Ms. Brown explained the basic face shapes and techniques used to contour and highlight faces in an effort to achieve the ideal oval shape.

"However, with stage makeup, you may not want to achieve the appearance of an oval face," said Ms. Stottlemire of Andrews, a makeup artist who conducted the aging demonstration for the workshop with Ms. Faulkner as a model.

MAKEUP

"Always check with the director before deciding on what makeup to use," Ms. Stottlemire said. "The actor or actress may have been cast because of their round face or pointy chin. Their natural look may enhance their character and they may have been chosen for that reason."

Other than character considerations, Ms. Stottlemire said makeup choices can be effected by costume colors and stage lighting. Ms. Stottlemire used singer Sandi Patti, who recently performed at a Midland concert, as an example of the dramatic effects clothing colors can have on makeup.

"Sandi Patti looked great when she was wearing blue. But when she came back after the second set in white, under harsh white lights, her face was all washed out," she said.

...EQUALLY IMPORTANT to the effect of an actor's makeup on the audience is the effect the makeup has on the actor. Ms. Stottlemire said makeup should help the actor "get into character and feel like he looks right for the part."

"It's a great tool to help the actor get into the role," she said. One of the secrets of successful stage makeup is to never use moisturizers, Ms. Stottlemire said. "It's intensely hot under stage lights. The face should be kept dry with powders," she said, "especially if latex special effects are used." Consequently, most stage makeup — foundation, eyeshadow and blush — is powder-based.

The makeup artist follows the natural lines of an actor's face when applying brown pencil to make wrinkles. "Have the actor wrinkle his brow, smile or draw his eyebrows together to find his natural lines,"

"If the makeup isn't right, the average person may not notice it, but they will walk away from a show knowing something was not right."

—Liz Stottlemire

she said. Another trick of the trade is for the makeup artist to observe people in the age group they are trying to recreate. "For example, you will notice that crow's feet are a vital characteristic in a person near 30," she said, "and a little gray at the temples is suitable for someone age 40."

Ms. Stottlemire said actors' faces should be made a little darker than their natural skin tone in order to make them appear older.

Although stage makeup looks overwhelming up close, Ms. Stottlemire said, "you almost can't use too much makeup. What looks gaudy in the dressing room will look completely different ten rows back from the stage. Makeup has to be dark enough so that the people in the back row of the theatre can see the actors' facial expressions, and this is important for MCT which usually plays to a full house."

THE ONLY makeup which can be overwhelming is eyeshadow, according to Ms. Stottlemire. "Eyeshadow is funny on stage. Someone wearing purple or violet will look like they have puffy eyes, like they have been crying. Blue makes the eyes appear a little wider and brighter," she said.

Ms. Stottlemire said her makeup techniques have been learned from "hands-on experience." Most of her skills were gleaned in college where she earned a bachelor of arts in speech and theatre from Rachel School of the Ozarks in Missouri and a master of arts at Central Missouri State in speech communications.

"In college we had work study programs where we did everything: lights, makeup, directing. Studying about a technique is nothing compared to applying it," she said.

The makeup artist said she also gained experience from playing older parts herself. "My face was always being aged for character roles. In college you don't have access to a lot of older women students to play parts, so the young ones get aged," she said.

Although Ms. Stottlemire is one of the few stage makeup experts in the Permian Basin, she said she prefers to direct shows. But when helping with high school and community productions in Andrews, she said if needed she will step into a role of makeup artist.

"Makeup is something that people don't think much about. But actors rely heavily on it. If the makeup isn't right, the average person may not notice it, but they will walk away from a show knowing something was not right," she said. "Makeup can make a big difference in enhancing the actor's character."

"The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas" opens 8:30 p.m. Friday at the Yucca Theatre, 208 Colorado. The opening night performance will be preceded by a barbecue gala, catered by Cafe West. Performances will continue 8 p.m. on Fridays and Saturdays through May 27. For reservations call 682-4111.

Makeup artist uses skills to disguise burns, scars

New York Times News Service

PETALUMA, Calif. — Lorraine Rafael runs a beauty salon, but not all her clients come to be made beautiful. One group hopes only to leave looking "normal." Ms. Rafael is one of very few makeup artists who specialize in using "camouflage" or "transformational" makeup, an opaque product designed to cover burn or surgical scars, birthmarks, and contrasts in skin pigment for which there is no permanent treatment.

The product more closely resembles theatrical makeup than cosmetic makeup, she explained.

Most recently, she has helped AIDS patients use it to cover the purple lesions of the skin cancer Kaposi's sarcoma. For her clients, Ms. Rafael said, a "normal" look can mean the difference between a life worth living and an existence shrouded in shame — though their difficulties are rarely their own doing.

"When someone doesn't look quite right, you don't treat them quite the same as you do other people."

"They have to work a little harder to get people to realize there's a person in there. Sometimes they get tired of that and pull back."

In fact, she said, some have withdrawn from society completely. "Some have given up their daytime jobs, some only go shopping at night — some don't even leave their houses," Ms. Rafael said. Some don't look in mirrors.

Ms. Rafael enjoys showing them how to cover their physical scars:

"It's a very powerful thing when you've affected somebody's life in a permanent way. You're never the same. You don't take normal things for granted." One young woman, who came from San Diego for treatment, told Ms. Rafael she wanted to be a lawyer, but she knew she could never keep the attention of a judge or jury focused on her arguments.

Instead, they would be staring at the huge hemangioma (port-wine stain birthmark) that covered most of her face, neck, shoulders and upper arms.

Bearing a nearly-normal appearance after application of the waterproof camouflage makeup, she now water-skis, plays racquetball, and dances — as much as permitted by her law school schedule. Another of Ms. Rafael's clients is a black man turning albino with the skin disease vitiligo, which causes loss of all body pigment. After coming down with the ailment, he had quit his job and had been ashamed to visit his family, whom he had not told of the diagnosis.

And then there was Ms. Rafael's first AIDS patient.

He wanted to cover the purple lesions of Kaposi's sarcoma, he told her, because he couldn't ride a bus or go shopping for groceries. "People would just flee from him," she said. "We don't accept the fact that it's not contagious." He had so much courage and such a positive attitude about what he was going to have to face.

"I thought, 'Oh, Lorraine, you are so superficial.'"

Ms. Rafael's clients run three women for every man, though the number of men clients are increasing as AIDS patients seek the service.

The makeup, Rafael said, is "not eye shadow, eyeliner, and all that. We're just making them look like everybody else on the street, not making them look glamorous."

Indeed, the look often isn't even a beautician's version of normal. Local doctors tell Ms. Rafael they don't believe there's enough demand in Sonoma County to permit her to fulfill her dream of opening a free clinic at a local hospital one day a week.

Many insurance providers would pay for services at a hospital-based clinic, where they won't for a beauty salon visit to the same consultant for the same service, she said.

Still, she says, "The demand has created the job. A lot of people I've worked with say they've been looking for something like this for a long time."

Makeup, hair changes image

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — A few shifts in the way you put yourself together — hair, makeup and jewelry — can make a significant change in your appearance. Herewith, some suggestions for achieving a 1990 look, at least from the neck up.

If your hair is chin length and fairly straight, try loosening it up a bit. Have it trimmed shorter so that it grazes the bottom of the ear. It should also be shaped so that it is fuller and a little wavier. If you have bangs, make them wisper.

Loosen up on your makeup too. Try less outlining and concentrate only on making lashes appear more lustrous. (But don't use fakes!) Go for a rosy, healthy-looking complexion and do away with hard outlining of the lips. The mouth should look "lip-sticked," but in a softer way. The idea is to achieve a carefully plotted appearance of naturalness. Experiment with earrings. If you have been wearing discreet pearls or little gold loops, try bigger, bolder proportions.

WHAT'S COOKING

Martha Arrieta

Doug Behres/Reporter-Telegram

Cook prepares hundreds of meals

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article is the third on women employed with Community and Senior Services of Midland.

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

As food service manager for Community and Senior Services of Midland, Martha Arrieta is involved in preparing hundreds of meals each day.

"We prepare 300 meals a day for Meals on Wheels," she said. Her other duties include some administration work, preparing a month's worth of menus at a time, making sure the meals are delivered properly, ordering groceries and packaging meals.

"We get here (to Community and Senior Services) at 6 a.m. and leave a 1:30 p.m.," she said.

She also oversees the preparing of meals for Casa de Amigos, Midland's Senior Center and "now we have Hollowell Methodist Church — we prepare 35 meals a day for them, only on Wednesdays and Fridays. For the rest of the centers, it's five days a week."

Ms. Arrieta said she and her staff and volunteers prepare "80 to 100 meals extra on the weekends — frozen meals for senior citizens who are ill or don't have any family."

Her staff includes a cook, a helper, a worker, a driver and "a lot of help from volunteers every morning."

The meals are approved by the state for serving to senior citizens, Ms. Arrieta said. "We have a dietitian from Odessa, Jean Roberts. She comes and approves menus for us every month. She also gives in-service to seniors at the centers that we have."

Each meal served by Community and Senior Services has one-third of the Recommended Daily Allowance of nutrients for senior citizens, Ms. Arrieta said. "Everything we cook, we cook without salt — we don't have anything fried. We prepare regular diet, diabetic and special diets, such as ground meat for people who don't have any dentures."

Some of the dishes, designed for large quantities, which are prepared by Ms. Arrieta and her staff are:

PEANUT BUTTER CAKE

CAKE:
1.88 cups butter
1.88 cups peanut butter
7 1/4 cups sugar
9 eggs
7 1/4 teaspoons baking soda
7 1/4 teaspoons baking powder

2 1/4 quarts buttermilk
3 tablespoons vanilla
8 1/4 cups bread flour
FROSTING:
1 pound butter
1 pound peanut butter
2 1/4 cups powdered sugar
2 tablespoons vanilla
1/4 cup unsweetened orange juice

Combine all ingredients for cake: butter, peanut butter, sugar, eggs, flour, baking soda, baking powder, buttermilk and vanilla. Bake at 350 degrees for 25 minutes.

Blend remaining ingredients for icing: butter, peanut butter, powdered sugar, vanilla and orange juice. Spread on cooled cake.

LEMON BISQUE
(Makes 25 servings)

4 1/4 fluid ounces evaporated milk
3 1/4 cups water
9 ounces powdered dessert gelatin
1/4 cup honey
6 tablespoons fresh unsweetened lemon juice
5 cups graham cracker crumbs

Mix gelatin with hot water. Add juice and honey. Chill until thickened to consistency of egg whites. Whip chilled milk (use Milnot if available), fold in gelatin mixture. Line 2-inch counter pan with 4 1/4 cups finely crushed graham cracker crumbs. Pour in dessert. Sprinkle 1/4 cup crumbs on top. Chill thoroughly. Cut into 25 servings.

SCALLOPED CHICKEN AU GRATIN
(Makes 50 servings)

10 pounds diced chicken, dark meat
20 cups egg noodles
12 ounces pimientos
2 cups chopped onions
1 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon black pepper
4 cups shredded American processed cheese
4 cups dry breadcrumbs
6 quarts cream of chicken soup/milk

Combine cooked chicken, cooked noodles, chopped pimientos, sauteed onions, salt, pepper and diluted chicken soup. Pour into prepared pans and top with cheese and bread crumbs. Bake at 375 degrees for 30 minutes.

DRESSING:

1/4 cup packed parsley sprigs
1/4 cup packed mint sprigs, or 2 teaspoons dried mint
1 clove garlic, peeled
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon red-wine vinegar
1 1/2 tablespoons grated fresh or drained prepared horseradish
1 teaspoon Dijon-style mustard
1/2 cup olive oil
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon black pepper

Place the couscous grains in a large bowl. Pour the boiling water over the the couscous, sprinkle on the salt and stir once with a fork. Cover with a sheet of foil and let stand for 5 minutes. Uncover, stir again to fluff the grains, and set aside for 5 minutes more.

Add the pepper and onion and stir gently to combine.

For the dressing, puree the parsley, mint, garlic, lemon juice, vinegar, horseradish and mustard in a food processor or blender. With the motor running, slowly pour the oil through the feed tube. Season with salt and pepper.

Pour all but 2 tablespoons of the dressing over the couscous and toss well. Taste and correct the seasoning if necessary.

Arrange the romaine leaves on a platter with tips pointing outward, and heap the salad onto the lettuce.

Scatter the roast beef over the couscous, and arrange the tomato wedges over the salad. Serve at room temperature or refrigerate up to 2 hours. Spoon the reserved 2 tablespoons of dressing over the beef and tomatoes before serving.

MEDITERRANEAN MEAT STEW
(Adapted from "Mediterranean Cookery" by Claudia Roden, Knopf, 1987)

1 large eggplant, cubed
Salt
4 ounces chickpeas, soaked overnight
2 medium-size onions, chopped
3 tablespoons sunflower oil
1 pound lean lamb or beef, cubed
1 pound tomatoes, peeled, seeded and chopped
1 1/4 teaspoons cinnamon
1 teaspoon allspice
Pepper
2 cups water, approximately
5 small to medium-size zucchini, cut into 1/4-inch rounds

Sprinkle the eggplant generously with salt and let drain for an hour. Boil the chickpeas in fresh water to cover for about 30 minutes. Fry the onions in the sunflower oil in a large non-stick pan or casserole until soft and lightly browned.

Add the eggplant, well rinsed and gently squeezed, and cook, stirring for a minute or so. Then add the meat and saute, turning it over once, until it changes color.

Add tomatoes, drained chickpeas, cinnamon, allspice, salt and pepper, and 2 cups of water, or to cover. Simmer gently, covered, for 60 minutes, or until meat is very tender.

Add the zucchini and cook about 4 minutes, or until tender. Add more water if necessary to finish up with a reasonable amount of sauce.

SUKIYAKI

(Adapted from "The American Heart Association Cookbook," Ballantine, 1984)

1 pound sirloin or flank steak
1/4 cup scallions cut diagonally into 1/4-inch lengths
1/4 cup celery cut diagonally into 1-inch lengths
1/2 cup thinly sliced mushrooms
2 cups fresh spinach leaves, washed and well-drained, or shredded Chinese cabbage
1/2 5-ounce can of water chestnuts, drained and thinly sliced
1/2 5-ounce can bamboo shoots, drained and sliced
1/2 16-ounce can bean sprouts, drained and rinsed, or 1/4 pound fresh bean sprouts
1/4 cup beef broth
1/4 cup dry sherry
1/4 cup soy sauce
1/2 teaspoon ground ginger
2 teaspoons honey
1 tablespoon oil

For best results, partly freeze the steak before slicing. Remove excess fat. Lay the steak flat on a cutting board and slice it thin diagonally across the grain.

Just before cooking, arrange the sliced steak and vegetables neatly on a large platter or tray for easy handling. Combine beef broth, sherry, soy sauce, ginger and honey in a mixing bowl.

Heat the vegetable oil in a large nonstick pan over medium-high heat. Saute the beef strips in batches, being careful not to crowd the pan. Remove each batch as cooked.

Saute scallions and celery, tossing over medium-high heat for a minute or two. Add mushrooms, spinach or cabbage, chestnuts, bamboo shoots and bean sprouts. Cook until crunchy-tender.

Pour the beef-broth mixture over the vegetables and let boil until early evaporated. Return beef to pan and toss to mix and heat. Serve with cooked rice.

Chicken adds heartiness to BLT sandwich

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

A BLT — bacon, lettuce and tomato sandwich — was a special lunch treat when I was growing up. But I've discovered something even better — the BLT plus chicken. Now my old favorite is hearty enough for supper, and with my microwave to cook the bacon and chicken, I can fix it in 15 minutes.

CHICKEN BLTS

8 slices bacon
4 boned skinless chicken breast halves (about 1 pound total)
1/4 cup mayonnaise or salad dressing
1 tablespoon ketchup

1/2 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
1/4 teaspoon prepared horseradish
4 6-inch-long French-style rolls, split
Lettuce leaves
1 medium tomato, thinly sliced

Place bacon on a microwave-safe rack (in a microwave-safe baking dish, if necessary). Cover with a microwave-safe paper towel. Cook on 100 percent power (high) 6 to 8 minutes, rotating rack or dish a half-turn after 3 minutes. Drain bacon; set aside.

Meanwhile, place one chicken piece, boned side up, between 2 pieces of clear plastic wrap. Working from center to edges, pound lightly with the flat side of a meat mallet to 1/4-inch thickness. Remove plastic wrap. Repeat with remaining chicken pieces.

Place chicken in a microwave-safe 12x7 1/2 x 2-inch baking dish, overlapping slightly, if necessary. Cover dish loosely with waxed paper. Cook on high 2 minutes. Turn chicken over and rearrange pieces. Cook, covered, on high 2 to 4 minutes more or until tender.

Meanwhile, in a small mixing bowl stir together mayonnaise, ketchup, Worcestershire and horseradish. Spread mixture on insides of rolls. To serve, top each roll bottom with lettuce and a piece of chicken. Top with bacon, tomato and more lettuce. Add roll top. Makes 4 servings.

Family reunions result in memorable cookbooks

By CAROL CUTLER
Copley News Service

Reach way, way back into almost-forgotten memories of last summer's two political conventions. You will recall that at times there seemed to be as many children on the stage as adults.

Now with President and Mrs. Bush in the White House, you can bet that those stately halls will often resound with the clacking of tiny feet running all over the place.

It is definitely the moment of the family. In recent years, family reunions have become more and more popular. The added impetus for these get-togethers comes from the fact that the family unit is not as geographically close as in years gone by.

Once, living across town was rather exotic. That's pretty tame stuff today. Now you find bicastal couples who get together on weekends. And for the truly glamorous, there are separate international domiciles. Up-to-date passports are as vital as a traveler's checks.

Better Homes and Gardens magazine has been following this regrouping trend. Their surveys conducted over the last few years have shown that nearly 60 percent of those polled had attended a reunion in the past five years. That's a lot of togetherness. Summer, of course, is the most popular season for reunions; holidays come next.

In 1986 President Ronald Reagan declared the first weekend in August as "National Family Reunion Weekend." That makes it Aug. 5-6 this year. And it's not a moment too early to start making plans, especially if you want to put together a "Family Reunion Cookbook."

You hadn't thought of it? Nor do you know how? Relax, and let the experts at Better Homes and Gardens show the way. Think of it, everyone loves Aunt Mary's special apple-cheese pie. But people living at scattered addresses can't drop by for a lesson.

Once, much good cooking was learned around Grandmother's kitchen table. Busy working schedules now preclude that cozy way of mastering the way she stretches strudel dough until it is less than paper-thin.

Hence, "The Family Reunion Cookbook." An astounding number already have been produced. They range from handwritten or simple photocopied booklets to professionally published volumes that are sold to raise money for local charities.

Better Homes and Gardens has produced a pamphlet that will answer many of the questions you may have about such a project, as well as guidelines for collecting the clan. For your free copy, write to A Reunion of Recipes, Better Homes and Gardens Magazine, P.O. Box 10237, Department 88, Des Moines, Iowa 50336.

Once into the project, you will be surprised at how many good ideas relatives will suggest. The more involved people are, the better. And to set your publication apart from all the others, ask for personal tidbits that will put a definite family stamp on the book.

Have everyone come up with at least one anecdote or family saying. Use these to fill out pages or separate chapters. Recollections and trivia can provide a nice change of pace.

Members who can't cook for one reason or another can still contribute items such as paper goods and non-perishable nibbles — nuts, potato chips, popcorn, olives, etc.

Non-cooks can tend bar or do table bussing. And don't forget to organize cleanup as well.

No one likes to lose dishes or serving utensils. Better Homes and Gardens' practical advice is to have all such items labeled with the lenders' first and last name. The complete name is especially helpful since many celebrants will have the same surname. Labeling is a good idea for any large potluck party, all in the family, or not.

Perhaps Better Homes and Gardens' Zucchini Bars are not yet an heirloom recipe; just wait.

ZUCCHINI BARS
2 cups all-purpose flour
1½ cups sugar
2 teaspoons baking powder
2 teaspoons ground cinnamon
1 teaspoon baking soda
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon ground cloves
4 slightly beaten eggs
1 cup cooking oil
3 cups shredded zucchini
Cream Cheese Frosting (optional)

In large mixing bowl stir together flour, sugar, baking powder, cinnamon, baking soda, salt and cloves. Add eggs, cooking oil and zucchini; stir till well-combined.

Spread batter in ungreased 15x10x1-inch baking pan. Bake in 350 degreeF oven for 25-30 minutes or until wooden pick inserted near center comes out clean.

Cool. Frost with Cream Cheese Frosting, if desired. Cut into bars.

Cream Cheese Frosting: In medium mixing bowl beat together one 3-ounce package cream cheese, 2 tablespoons margarine or butter and 1 teaspoon vanilla with a wooden spoon until light and fluffy. Gradually add 2 cups sifted powdered sugar, beating till frosting is smooth.

Picnic lunches: Not just bologna anymore

By CARRIE WHITE
New York Times News Service

Some things have gotten better over the years. Take picnic lunches. Time was when a picnic meant a bologna sandwich eaten on a paper plate rather than stoneware. Sometimes, if I was lucky, a bag of chips and canned pudding were thrown in.

And you know what happened next? The sandwich took a dive into the nearest trash can and the chips and pudding were the sum total of lunch. Later, this usually meant a stop at the market for an after-lunch Almond Joy chaser.

Thinking back, those memories make me sweat. At the very least, they make my cholesterol level jump. I attribute much of my dislike for prepackaged foods to those days.

But picnics don't have to be unhealthy, nor do they have to be as boring as bologna sandwiches.

Picnics, at least for me, are one of the more pleasant ways to eat a meal. Maybe it's because I don't look at the foods I pack as being necessarily any different than those eaten at home.

Happily, I have quite a bit of practice preparing foods for a picnic because that's how spouse and I spend most lunch breaks. We're the ones sitting in the park every day with the red and white checkered tablecloth and acrylic stemware for our Old Chicago Seltzers.

Luckily at work there are refrigerators to keep our midday meal cool until 1 p.m. Previously, I purchased fancy-dan decorator totes at a local stationery store to haul it all in. A nice bag seems to add to the occasion. Now, I've switched to an insulated bag that keeps everything refrigerator-cold during the walk to the park.

WHAT WE pack varies each day — at least for spouse. And I do like to experiment with different foods. For example, it's not uncommon for him to unwrap a tortilla filled with leftover stir-fry from the night before. (A toothpick keeps it closed and tinfoil on one end allows him to eat it without drips down the tie.)

After slicing the top off a green pepper or large tomato and cleaning out the pulp, I might stuff the vegetable with an egg salad made with peanuts or a tuna salad made with curry and raisins.

Tuna salad, the normal American kind, also works well with cucumber. We call these "cucumber boats." The vegetable is washed, slit lengthwise and seeded, leaving a canal for the tuna, or other salad. The cucumber can be skinned depending on preference. The same procedure can be used with summer squash.

Chicken is a great lunchtime food because of its diversity. After boiling chicken parts during the weekend with some onion, salt and pepper, the meat can be stripped from the bone and frozen in packages to be used when needed. The packages will defrost overnight for use the next morning.

One of the ways we prepare chicken includes mixing it with olive oil to moisten the meat, and then using a touch of sesame oil, cilantro and sesame seeds, along with mandarin orange slices. That mixture is good in tortillas or stuffed in pita bread.

Also with boiled chicken we combine green chilies, grated Monterey Jack cheese, sliced black olives, diced red onions and cilantro. This is also good as filling for a tortilla, pita or taco shell. (Yes, you can eat taco shells cold.)

Goopy Butter Cake tastes better in St. Louis

By ANN BARRY
New York Times News Service

ST. LOUIS — Say St. Louis, and you're talking Goopy Butter Cake. Any self-respecting denizen has sweetened a tooth on this intensely rich piece of gastronomic lunacy that is a hallmark of the city.

Its shamelessly childish name, which St. Louisans speak with as much solemnity as they might feuilleté de framboises, couldn't be more appropriate.

What starts off innocently enough as a plain yeast-raised coffee cake erupts into a volcanic mass of chewy bright yellow lava, with snow banks of powdered sugar covering crevices and crannies. In the mouth, the goo clogs the gums, while the crusty edges glue to the teeth. You don't just swallow Goopy Butter Cake, you work it down.

As for the origin of Goopy Butter Cake, most admit it was a mistake, although no one knows exactly whose. Certainly, it would have originated in South St. Louis, where most of the German bakers — the backbone of the St. Louis bakery industry — lived.

Fred Heimbarger, a retired St. Louis baker with a long memory, contends it was some baker in the 1930s who, in making an ordinary yellow cake, put in too much sugar, butter or shortening, or all three. What he ended up with was a sticky mess. But since this was the Depression, he couldn't let it go to waste, so he tried to sell it anyway.

St. Louisans, Depression or not, wanted more.

Eventually the baker was selling up to 250 cakes a week. Today, most independent bakeries in St. Louis, as well as supermarket bakeries, carry a version of Goopy Butter Cake.

What is curious about Goopy Butter Cake is that it resists travel.

According to an account by Joyce Schwarz in The Master Retail Bakers Bulletin: "There are nearly as many legends surrounding the invention of Goopy Butter Cake as there are about Remus and the founding of Rome. Of one thing there can be no doubt: it's a St. Louis original and an acquired taste not shared by those in other parts of the country."

Mrs. Schwarz wrote that Heimbarger "tried to promote the Goopy Butter Cake, taking samples whenever he went out of town to visit other bakers."

"The bakers," she wrote, "loved the product but couldn't get customers to buy it. Usually people in other cities said it looked like a mistake, a flat goopy mess. Well, of course, that's what it is. We used to joke that our cakes could be eaten with a

Tips make picnics more perfect

New York Times News Service

Choose the right containers so that you arrive at your picnic spot with hot food still hot, cold food still cold and the vinaigrette on your salad rather than in the bottom of your picnic basket. Clear-glass, oven-safe storage bowls with tightfitting lids are both portable and pretty — perfect for the job.

Carry hot dishes in the same colorful casseroles in which they were baked. Wrap the entire casserole in several layers of newspaper to keep in the warmth.

Inventory all the utensils needed for both the food and beverages — a corkscrew if you are serving wine, forks if everything in the basket isn't finger food. Keep a list and check things off as they're packed so they don't get left behind.

Wrap glasses and bowls in clean dishcloths. They will protect the dishes and are great for cleanup.

Take along a sheet of plastic to sit on, or to place under a picnic basket or tablecloth. It will come in handy if a shower threatens to dampen the occasion.

Pack some zip-top bags filled with wet, thin washcloths for cleaning fingers and picnic surfaces. The bags can be used to carry home dirty utensils or leftovers.

Don't forget the insect repellent. Humans aren't the only creatures that recognize good food when they see it.

ONE OF the easiest foods to make for lunch is also a healthy one. It's pasta salad. It makes good use of vegetables left over from the night before. That good of boiled chicken also can be used — or just about any meat left over from last night's dinner. Green onions make a nice addition to a pasta salad as do fresh, juicy tomatoes, garbanzo beans and artichoke hearts.

A bit of fresh grated cheese is a delicious touch. To keep it moist, I use Italian salad dressing. Again not liking many packaged products, I make my own from ¼ cup olive oil, two-thirds cup red wine vinegar, 1 tablespoon sugar and 2 teaspoons Dijon mustard.

Thick slices of cold cuts also make a good "tortilla" in which other foods can be wrapped. A mixture of cottage cheese and fresh fruit chunks goes well inside a thick slice of turkey, kept closed with a toothpick.

Likewise, with a cutting of pastrami, fix a filling of chopped egg, black olives, cilantro and cottage cheese or yogurt. (Don't forget to put a tinfoil cap on one end so the filling doesn't fall out.)

Salads are always a good choice. We don't make them with lettuce, but rather with cabbage. That way, you can put the dressing on before you leave the house in the morning and it won't get soggy. With the cabbage, we combine grated carrot, jicama, red cabbage chunks and garbanzo beans. A light sprinkle of basil and Parmesan also is added.

EVEN WHEN we don't make a salad, there is some type of vegetable dish included in the lunch hamper. Sometimes, it is just tomato and onion slices combined with some Italian dressing. Carrot, jicama and celery sticks also are wrapped in a dampened paper towel and surrounded by tinfoil.

Recipes for Goopy Butter Cake all have subtle variations. "No two recipes are the same," Mrs. Schwarz said. Brown sugar may be used instead of white, whole eggs plus whites or just whole eggs, evaporated milk instead of water, and so on.

Yet, St. Louisans don't harangue over this, as, say, Texans do over chili.

Any cake that goes by the name Goopy Butter is fine by them. Some versions incorporate cherry or pineapple, too, but that's not your everyday Goopy Butter Cake — everyday, that is, if you're in St. Louis.

1 cup sugar
¼ cup vegetable shortening
3 tablespoons butter, plus butter for greasing the pan
1 tablespoon dried milk powder
1 large egg
Pinch of salt

¾ cup bread flour
¾ cup cake flour
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 tablespoon light corn syrup
2 tablespoons water
10 ounces plain Danish or yeast-raised coffee cake
Confectioners' sugar

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. In a mixing bowl, cream together the sugar, shortening, butter, milk powder, egg and salt. (For an authentic egg-yolk color, add a few drops of yellow food coloring.)

Add the bread and cake flours, vanilla, corn syrup and water, and mix just until incorporated.

Cut the Danish or coffee cake to fit a buttered 8-by-8-inch pan, leaving a rim around the edge to contain the goopy butter mixture.

Pour the butter mixture over the cake and bake for 30 minutes. Remove from oven and sprinkle with confectioners' sugar to taste. Serve warm or at room temperature.

Treat Mother with old-fashioned desserts

By LORNA SASS
Copley News Service

May 14 will mark the 75th anniversary of the celebration of Mother's Day in the United States. Of relatively recent origin, Mother's Day was declared a national holiday in 1914 and has been celebrated with gifts, fancy dinners and flowers ever since.

But the tradition of setting aside a day to honor mothers actually can be traced as far back as the days of the ancient Greeks who dedicated an annual spring festival to Rhea, the mother of Jupiter, Pluto and Neptune. Perhaps it was some vestige of this pagan celebration that inspired early Christians to set aside the fourth Sunday of Lent to honor Christ's mother, Mary. On this day, later called "Mothering Sunday," the devout traditionally honored the Virgin with gifts and flowers.

As time went on, Mothering Sunday was looked upon as an opportunity to honor not only Mary, but all mothers. In England it became traditional for the eldest son to give his mother a special gift on this day. That gift often was a rich and fruity simnel cake.

SIMNEL CAKES varied considerably from one region of England to the next. In Shrewsbury, for example, a simnel was made by enclosing candied fruits in a thick crust of saffron bread. The Devizes simnel, on the other hand, was more cakelike and shaped into a star. One legend has it that Shropshire simnels were made by boiling a cake batter in a cloth for several hours and then baking that same cake for an additional hour. The resultant simnel — according to observers of a rival region — was so hard that the mother who received it mistook the cake for a footstool!

Although the sentiment behind the American Mother's Day celebration closely resembles its English counterpart, it appears that the U.S. holiday developed quite independently from the Mothering Sunday tradition in England. In fact, the celebration of Mothering Sunday had virtually died out in England by the early part of this century and probably was unknown to Anna M. Jarvis, the Pennsylvania woman whose determined efforts are largely responsible for American mothers being honored on one special Sunday every year.

Jarvis, an unmarried schoolteacher very devoted to her family, determined to create a national day for honoring mothers shortly after her own mother died. She campaigned vigorously for a number of years, enlisting the aid of sympathetic friends, politicians and clergymen. By 1905, she had arranged a special service to honor her mother in a local church and, on that Sunday, all attendees were given carnations — her mother's favorite flower.

In 1910, the governor of West Virginia proclaimed Mother's Day a state holiday and soon afterward the states of Oklahoma and Washington followed suit. By 1912, the movement had gained so much momentum that a Mother's Day International Association had been formed, and on May 7, 1914, a bill was introduced into Congress resolving that the second Sunday of each May be set aside as Mother's Day.

THE PROCLAMATION read by President Woodrow Wilson when he declared Mother's Day a national holiday contained the following words: "Whereas the service rendered by the American mothers is the greatest source of the country's strength and inspiration..."

Perhaps because it is one of the few Sundays in the calendar year that mothers may abandon the kitchen, Mother's Day in the United States isn't associated with any particular homemade treat. So why not borrow from the Mothering Sunday tradition and prepare a simnel cake or one of the other old-fashioned English desserts that follow.

This rich, fruity cake is festive and easy to make. The recipe has been adapted from Dorothy Spicer's "Feast-Day Cakes From Many Lands" (Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1980).

SIMNEL CAKE

1 1/4 cups sugar
3/4 cup (6 ounces) sweet butter at room temperature
4 large eggs
2 cups unbleached flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup currants
1/2 cup mixed candied peel
5 ounces almond paste (available, sweetened, in cans)
Confectioners' sugar
Marzipan fruits (optional garnish)

Cream sugar and butter together until fluffy. Add eggs, one at a time, beating well after each addition. Sift flour with salt and remove about 1/4 cup to use for dredging currants and candied peel. Add remaining flour to batter in three separate batches, mixing well after each addition. Fold in currants and candied peel and any flour left over from dredging.

Grease 9-inch pie plate well and line bottom with baking parchment. Pour half of batter into pie plate. Roll or press almond paste into 9-inch circle between two pieces of floured waxed paper. (If paste is too dry, spin in food processor with few drops of water; if paste sticks to waxed paper after rolling it, chill a few moments.)

Set layer of almond paste on batter in pie plate; top with remaining batter. Bake in oven preheated to 300 degrees until toothpick inserted in center comes out clean, about 1 1/4 hours.

Cool on rack. To remove from pie plate, run a knife along edges and turn out. Peel off baking parchment and sprinkle top with confectioners' sugar. Decorate with marzipan fruits, if desired.

The following pie was popular in Elizabethan England and has been adapted from a recipe published in the "The Good Huswives Handmaid for Cookerie" in 1588. The delicate hint of bitterness provided by the orange peel contrasts memorably with the mellow flavor of the baked apples.

ORANGE AND APPLE PIE

9-inch unbaked pie pastry shell and lid

5 medium juice oranges
1 cup honey
Juice of 1/2 small lemon
4 medium apples, peeled, cored and sliced
1/2 cup brown sugar
1/2 teaspoon salt
Generous 1/4 teaspoon cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon ground ginger
2 tablespoons confectioners' sugar, dissolved in 1 tablespoon rose water

Bake pie shell at 425 degrees for 10 minutes; cool. Slice oranges as thinly as possible, discarding seeds.

Combine honey and lemon juice with 3 cups water in large saucepan. Bring to boil. Add orange slices. Cover, reduce heat and simmer about 2 hours or until peel is limp and easily chewed. Drain orange slices and set aside. Discard cooking liquid.

In bowl, combine brown sugar, salt and spices. Add apple slices and toss to coat. Place layer of apple slices in pie shell, then layer of orange slices. Repeat with remaining fruit. Place pastry lid over filling. Crimp edges and slash lid in few places to allow steam to escape. Paint lid with rose water icing.

Bake pie at 350 degrees until nicely browned, about 1 hour.

If clouds were orange and could be eaten, this is what they'd taste like. Adapted from a recipe in N. Bailey's "Dictionarium Domesticum" (1738).

BUTTERED ORANGES

3 large sweet juice oranges
2 large eggs, plus 4 yolks, beaten
2 to 3 tablespoons sugar
2 tablespoons sweet butter, cut into bits

Finely grate rind of oranges. (Be careful not to grate white pith beneath rind as it is bitter. Set aside. Squeeze oranges until you have 1 cup juice. Combine orange juice, eggs and sugar to taste. (The amount of sugar depends on sweetness of juice.) Pour mixture through fine-meshed strainer into top of double boiler. Stir in grated rind.

Set pot into hot, but not boiling, water. Cook over moderate heat, whisking until custard thickens. When whisk makes ribbons on surface, remove from heat. Place pot in large bowl of cold water. Whisk in butter, one bit at a time, until it melts.

Spoon small portions of custard into four sherry or wine glasses. Chill before serving.

Opening lead: King of ♠
What a difference a lead makes. This hand is from the 1988 World Team Championship, played in Venice. The themes are standard in almost every bridge teacher's repertoire.

At about half the tables in the event, West overcalled with one spade. That's not a call we endorse, since it has no preemptive value and West is likely to be on opening lead in any event. And it had a strange repercussion in the play.

Against four hearts West led the king of spades. Declarer grabbed dummy's ace, cashed two rounds of trumps and then played off the high clubs. Although that suit did not split evenly, the defender with the long trump also held the fourth club, so declarer was able to ruff a club on the table. He exited with a diamond, and in the fullness of time he regained the lead with a ruff to draw the last trump and claim his contract, losing only two spades and a diamond.

Where West did not overcall, East boldly interjected a lead-directing bid of two diamonds. Now, the lead against four hearts was ace and another diamond. Declarer ruffed and again drew two rounds of trumps before cashing the high clubs and trumping a club. But now he had no way to get to his hand to draw the last trump. As soon as East gained the lead he played diamonds, so West's jack of trumps was promoted to the setting trick.

Despite the lead of the ace of diamonds, one East-West pair failed to get their trump promotion and the contract succeeded. All this proves is that even world championship competitors have feet of clay.

Attack on Downey investigated

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Police said they found no witnesses to verify a report by TV host Morton Downey Jr. that he was attacked in an airport bathroom by skinheads who painted swastikas on him and tried to shave his hair.

As police Tuesday continued an investigation of the incident, KOFY-TV owner Jim Gabbert said he would cancel local broadcast of Downey's show if police find the tale was concocted as a publicity stunt.

Downey responded to reports that his claim could not be substantiated, saying he would have to be "bordering on a little bit of insanity" to have made up the attack.

Downey, 56, was in San Francisco to promote his show when he said he was attacked in a restroom at San Francisco International Airport by someone who "put his arm around my throat and his other hand across my eyes and dragged me to a stall," he said.

"They sat me down on the toilet. One guy sat on me, and another one started cutting my hair," said the bombastic program host known for his arrogant, aggressive style.

About the time Downey said he was assaulted, a bomb threat forced KOFY to leave the air during the time slot for the syndicated series. The show returned to the air after about 30 minutes.

Downey said that the assault story is true but cannot be verified because police were not in the bathroom where he was jumped.

NEW YORK (AP) — The wife of the late Shah of Iran says she was reluctant to leave her homeland when her husband was deposed in 1979, and offered to stay behind as a symbol of hope for his supporters.

"I said to my husband, 'If you think you should go because it would calm things, then let me stay.' Not that I would have interfered politically, but if I had stayed, people would have seen his representative, and it might have given hope to our supporters," said deposed Empress Farah Diba in an interview in the June-July issue of Memories magazine.

Farah said she's not sure the Islamic revolution that forced her husband from his Peacock Throne could have been avoided.

"Progress caused so many changes and brought with it so many problems," she said. "We were trying, in one generation, to jump from feudal and semi-feudal conditions to the 20th century and beyond."

She said if Iranians had known what his successor, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and his followers would be like, she's certain there would not have been a revolution.

Farah has homes in the United States and France.

"You can always find room for another one," said Travis, who has dominated country music awards for the past three years.

Travis also won Best Album for "Old 8 X 10" at the second annual Viewers' Choice Awards presented Tuesday at the Grand Ole Opry House.

Ricky Van Shelton won favorite male vocalist, No. 1 video and favorite song, both for "I'll Leave This World Loving You," in voting by country music fans. Reba McEntire beat out rising star K.T. Oslin for favorite female vocalist.

Talk show host Morton Downey Jr.

The Oak Ridge Boys won favorite group for the second straight year, and the quintet Shenandoah won favorite newcomer on the basis of its No. 1 song, "The Church on Cumberland Road."

Roy Acuff, 85, was presented a special award named after Grand Ole Opry comrade Minnie Pearl to honor his lifelong humanitarian endeavors.

"I hardly know what to say except it makes my heart feel good," Acuff said after receiving a standing ovation.

PARIS (AP) — Singer Liza Minnelli is doggedly denying reports that she had attempted to smuggle Lilly, her beloved Cairn terrier, into Sweden.

"We were given the wrong information, weren't we Lilly?" said Ms. Minnelli during an interview in her dressing room at the Paris Opera where she performed a benefit concert Tuesday night with Frank Sinatra and Sammy Davis Jr.

At the time of the incident April 9, Swedish authorities said they suspected the American singing star had attempted to slip the dog into the rabies-free country to circumvent a law requiring a four-month quarantine. But Ms. Minnelli said they were barking up the wrong tree.

She said she traveled by private bus to Sweden because of an ear infection, and when they got to the border they were waved through.

The next thing Ms. Minnelli knew, two Swedish customs officials were knocking at the hotel door, demanding that Lilly be quarantined or face deportation. Lilly remained under house arrest at the Grand Hotel in Stockholm before being put on a plane for Paris.

Ms. Minnelli paid a fine for breaking the law before leaving Stockholm. "The law is the law," she said.

ENGLEWOOD, N.J. (AP) — Actor Jack Gilford, no youngster himself, took part in a reading of Shakespeare at a home for elderly actors on the 425th anniversary of the Bard's birth.

The event was the 2nd Annual Edwin Forrest Day Celebration at the Actors' Fund Complex, which cares for about 50 entertainment industry members.

Joining the 81-year-old Gilford for the readings Tuesday were entertainers Zoe Caldwell, Barnard Hughes, Arnold Moss, Patrice Munsel and Al Simon.

Man's rough kind of love has wife begging for less

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You say a wife should never stand for being slapped around, pushed, pinched or hit. My husband is good to me. He doesn't drink or run around. I have a fur coat and nice jewelry. He doesn't deny me anything, but he does manhandle me. I've asked him not to, but he won't listen. He says it's because he loves me so much.

For example, he will jerk my arm when I pass him and pull me off my feet so he can kiss me. Or he will grab the front of my shirt and pull me to him and kiss me so hard my lips hurt. He will kick me when I'm bending over, or slap me on the behind really hard, calling it a "love slap." He has tickled me until I can't breathe and scream for mercy. When I get angry and complain, he says he can't help it — he loves me. I've told him that kind of treatment turns me off. He says he will try to remember, but the next day it's the same thing all over again.

Abby, I am not a cold woman. I give him plenty of love and attention, and I tell him I love him every time he calls me from work, which is about five times a day. He's really not a bad guy, and he's good to my mother, but I wish I could stop him from being so physically rough with me. But how? — BLACK AND BLUE IN LOUISIANA

Van Buren

DEAR BLACK AND BLUE: I do not doubt that your husband "loves" you, but when he kicks, slaps, jerks and kisses you so hard it hurts, that's ABUSE.

He may tell you that he is expressing his "love," but the kind of treatment you describe — "manhandling" you while your protests are ignored — is veiled hostility.

If he really loves you, he will go to family counseling with you and learn how to express his love without physically abusing you.

DEAR ABBY: Thank you, thank you for publishing the letter from "No Name," the battered husband. While I do not deny or condone the reality of abused women, it's high time we: a) start referring to "spouse abuse," b) recognize that "spouse" can and does include the husband, and c) recognize that abuse can be verbal and emotional as well as physical — regardless of the abuser's gender.

In my own case, after tolerating years of physical and emotional abuse in the futile hope that my ex-wife would change, two things woke me up. The first was the realization that I was nearing the point of physical retaliation. The second was when her assaults began to turn against our 1-year-old son. The day she began throwing things at him and screaming that she hated him, I took the boy and what personal possessions I could carry, and walked out. I may have allowed her to manipulate me and abuse me, but she was not going to do it to him.

By then I was emotionally drained and close to a breakdown. However, through treatment and counseling for depression, and with the support of family and friends (who had seen it coming long before I did), I regained my self-esteem and will sufficiently to fight and win the ensuing custody battle. It was an uphill fight, and the legal expenses very nearly finished me. Two years later, I'm just getting my head above water financially. But I have my son, my self-respect and a good beginning toward a new life.

I am not suggesting that my experience mitigates — let alone excuses — the very real violence that many women endure. My heart goes out to them in their efforts to escape and rebuild their lives. However, abused husbands exist as well. Their story deserves to be told, and I thank you for doing so. — BEEN THERE IN OHIO

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to "Heartsick in Illinois," whose husband used their bed at home to have an affair. She urged readers contemplating an affair to have the decency to do it somewhere other than their own bed. And you advised her to do everything in her power to forget.

I, too, am married to a man who had an affair, and during the past two years I've come a long way with the help of a therapist. I have learned much and would like to pass along some additional advice for women who are having — or have had — affairs with married men.

Even among thieves there is a code of ethics, so if just one "other woman" heeds a few of these suggestions, it will go a long way toward helping the wife "to forget." We human beings, just like lower forms of animal life, have our territorial rights. The more of these territories violated by an intruder (another woman, in this case), the harder it is for the wife to forget.

ADVICE TO OTHER WOMEN

1. (Once the wife knows about the affair) Don't write to the wife asking for compassion.
2. If you do write, don't send it to the wife's place of employment, as this may be her one haven of escape.
3. If you haven't already violated the wife's home, don't send mail there, either. This goes for Christmas cards, too.
4. Don't continue to attend his softball games. But if you choose to ignore this advice, at least don't sit next to his wife.
5. Don't join his church, of which his family had been active members for many years. (We now no longer attend.)
6. Don't move into his neighborhood.
7. If you decide to leave the husband's workplace, don't take a job where his wife works. Then, if you leave the wife's company and return to your former employer, if you've requested an assignment in a different department than the husband's, be big enough to stand by that request if management asks you to work with him again.
8. Don't join the fitness center where the wife has worked out for several years.
9. Don't talk with his children, pretending that they don't know about you.
10. Don't stand behind the wife in the grocery store checkout line; busy yourself in the produce department until she has left the store.
11. Don't kid yourself that no one at work or among your mutual friends noticed what was going on between you.
12. Don't glibly tell the wife that you have forgiven yourself, forgetting that forgiveness does not include responsibility for your offenses, or thinking that it means all is forgiven and forgotten.

Thank God, I don't have to forget about the violation of my bed, but I'm still trying to forget about the above listed violations — all of which happened to me.

So, Abby, continue to advise the wives to get therapy. It helps. And, please, advise the "other women" to accept the end of the affair — when it's over — and to show some sensitivity to someone who has been deeply hurt. She's already been violated enough. — MUCH TO FORGET IN ALLENTOWN

Mustard popular seasoning for more than 50 centuries

Associated Press

Mustard is the world's most popular seasoning and as far back as 1,000 A.D. it was used as a seasoning, preservative, disinfectant, medicine or aphrodisiac in every area of the world.

Mustard was discovered in Mesopotamia more than 5,000 years ago, according to an article in the current issue of Country Living, and is mentioned in the ancient Chinese herbal of Emperor Shen Nung.

Mustard seeds have been found in the tombs of Egypt's Valley of the Kings. Arabs traded in mustard. Greeks and Romans left many recipes including it, and the Crusaders came home with a taste for it.

There are three major types of mustard. Brassica juncea, brown or Oriental mustard seed, is used in Chinese, Dijon, German and hot English mustards. White, yellow or alba mustard seeds, Brassica hirta, are much larger and have bite but no aroma. Black mustard seeds, Brassica nigra, are similar in size to brown mustard seeds but have no aroma.

Although mustard makers combine seeds to get the flavor they want, use of the black seeds is gradually diminishing because they cannot be harvested mechanically.

It was the Romans who introduced mustard to Dijon, and by the early 17th century — when Dijon was the center of the spice trade — ground mustard pressed into tablets was one of the French city's premier products. In 1643, Dijon vinegar and mustard makers were given the exclusive right to make mustard prepared under a strict set of rules and labeled "Dijon."

To this day, only mustards made in Dijon may be so labeled. The one exception is California-produced Grey Poupon. Its taste and strength are not the same as the Grey Poupon produced in France. The best-selling Dijon mustard in France is Amora, followed by Maille and Pommery. All three are available in the United States.

The most famous name in English mustard is Colman. In 1814, Jeremiah Colman began milling mustard and by 1866 he was named Manufacturer of Mustard to Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

On this side of the Atlantic, George and Francis French began manufacturing their creamy salad-style mustard in Rochester, N.Y., in 1904.

Made mostly of white mustard seed and colored bright yellow with turmeric, it evokes memories of ball games, state fairs and backyard barbecues. Only recently have Americans discovered the great variety of mustard flavors enjoyed around the world.

While most people think of the prepared variety when mustard is mentioned, the leaves of this cruciferous vegetable are an excellent green if not overcooked.

Prepared mustards should be bought in small quantities because while they never "go bad," they do lose flavor when stored too long.

Both homemade and store-bought prepared mustards should be stored in the refrigerator to preserve their bite.

MISD would benefit from Senate proposal

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Because of more students and a predicted drop in taxable property value, Midland schools could benefit even more than projected if a Texas Senate school-funding bill passes, superintendent Joe Baressi said this morning.

A Senate subcommittee last week approved a school finance plan that would inject $500 million into school districts over a two-year period. The bill, proposed by Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, could pump as much as $743,899 into Midland Independent School District and $2.57 million into Ector County Independent School District.

Baressi said that because the estimated appropriations were made based on last year's tax values and average daily student attendance, MISD may see an even higher increase in state funding. Using last year's figures — with $3.58 billion in taxable property and an average daily attendance of 17,578 — MISD would get $26.4 million without the Parker plan.

"I think it's going in the right direction," Baressi said of the state's attempt to equalize funding between poor and rich school districts. "I'd like it to go a little further as far money. I think the committee can come up with more money."

Baressi pointed out that MISD is slightly below average in tax value and probably would benefit from any equalization legislation.

Ron Stegall, chief appraiser for the Midland County Appraisal District, said this morning that preliminary figures show that MISD's value has dropped by about $800 million to $3.5 billion. The figure is expected to drop further after property value protest hearings, Stegall said.

Meanwhile, MISD's average daily attendance from last year rose to 18,314 during the 1988-89 school year.

Under the bill, school districts must raise their taxes to the state average of 72 cents per $100 valuation in order to receive maximum appropriations. Because MISD's tax rate is 90 cents per $100 valuation, the district automatically gets the maximum.

Baressi said additional state funding would be used to pay for the additional $1.8 million it will cost MISD next year to hire 60 teachers to comply with the state requirement of a 22-to-1 pupil-teacher ratio in third and fourth grades.

ECISD Superintendent Hugh Hayes also said any equalization legislation would benefit his district, considered to be tax poor.

Hayes said ECISD will spend an estimated $2 million to hire an additional 75 teachers needed to meet the 22-to-1 requirement.

Hayes added that the district also will see additional funding because of an anticipated property value drop and higher average daily attendance.

The state seems to be on the right track as far as funding improvements, he said.

"Obviously that's (bill) not going to cover all the mandates," he said. "But we're thankful for any income that comes our way."

According to Texas Education Agency figures, here is what other school districts would receive under the Parker proposal: Greenwood ISD, $132,518; Big Spring ISD, $514,201; McCamey ISD, $5,516 minimum (depending on whether the tax rate is raised to the state average) and $5,616 maximum; and Rankin ISD would lose $6,609.

School officials DARE to start anti-drug plan

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Midland elementary pupils probably won't dare bring drugs or alcohol to school, especially when three police officers in full uniform spend the day on campus, district officials hope.

But the officers' presence, as part of the Drug Abuse Resistance Education program, has more to do with education than it does security.

Initially developed by the U.S. Department of Justice for use in Los Angeles schools, DARE is a law enforcement program to prevent drug use among children.

And with a unanimous vote Tuesday night by school trustees, each Midland Independent School District elementary school campus will see DARE in action during the 1989-90 school year.

Midland Police Chief Richard Czech, who presented DARE to school-board members, said three officers will spread out and spend time in each MISD fifth- and sixth-grade class and remain at the school throughout the day.

"The purpose is to make the younger kids aware of what drugs are and develop the kids' self-esteem," Czech said. "They need to understand they can say 'no' without being embarrassed."

Czech said it's important to educate the youngsters about drugs and alcohol before they hit junior high, when temptations sometimes abound. DARE will arm pupils with drug information, methods to enhance self-esteem, analytical and decision-making skills and the motivation to employ the skills, Czech said.

Program cost is $100,000, Czech said, adding that he hopes to get a $30,000 state grant. He said Midland police raised about $25,000 in private money, and city and school officials have agreed to split the difference.

Superintendent Joe Baressi said he's glad to have the security as well as the educational benefits of the program.

"The program is nationally validated as far as being effective," Baressi said. "Their approach to dealing with drug and alcohol education is consistent with the district, and that's no tolerance. Any use is misuse."

In other action, school-board members unanimously denied a Greenwood resident's request to have his 50 acres of property detached by MISD so his children could attend Greenwood Independent School District schools.

Donald Turner, right, is escorted by Midland police Detective Rick Gilley Tuesday to an appearance before a judge. Turner, 46, is accused of sexually assaulting seven girls. Turner's attorney Paul Williams, in the background, said his client has denied the charges.

Midlander denies molesting girls

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The 46-year-old Midland man accused of molesting seven girls has denied the charges, saying he played with the youths in his swimming pool but did not assault them, his attorney said today.

"He denies it," said attorney Paul Williams, who was hired to represent Donald Allen Turner, 2204 Lindora Way. "He says he got into the pool and played in the pool, but as far as fondling them or anything like that, he says he didn't do it."

Williams, a former assistant county attorney, said he could not comment on any of the evidence in the case, which police say include statements from the seven victims.

Turner, a geologist for a local exploration company, remained jailed today in lieu of bonds totaling $175,000. He was formally charged Tuesday with three counts of aggravated sexual assault and four counts of indecency with a child.

Most of the alleged assaults, which began last summer, took place in Turner's backyard swimming pool, according to an affidavit for an arrest warrant filed with Justice of the Peace Robert Pine.

"While swimming, Donald Turner entered the pool and under the pretense of playing games with the girls, the said Donald Turner sexually assaulted several of the girls by touching them in their genital area," the affidavit said. "After this report was made to the Midland Police Department, the parents of other possible victims were contacted and it was found that these assaults have been occurring to several children in the neighborhood over a period of several months."

At least seven girls from ages seven to 12 were allegedly assaulted by Turner, according to investigators.

All of the victims were interviewed about the assaults by Alisa Fowler, the assistant director of the Midland Rape Crisis Center, Detective B.G. Johnson said.

All of the victims have experienced nightmares about the attacks — all are receiving counseling — and one of the victims may need extensive counseling, Ms. Fowler said. "They are mostly nightmares, and fears of how other people are going to handle the situation," she said.

Odessans given probation in football gambling scheme

From Staff Reports

Four Odessa men, including a four-time grand jury foreman, were given five-year probations today in federal court for their roles in a professional and collegiate football gambling scheme.

U.S. District Court Judge Lucius Banton ordered Robert Thomas Rice, 40, and Charles Ronald Klinger, 44, to pay $5,000 in fines, to serve not more than six months in the Alternative House II in Odessa and to serve out a five-year probated sentence.

The judge also sentenced Jimmy Leon Richards, 45, and Michael Chane Alcorn, 44, to five-year probated sentences and fined each of them $2,000.

Alcorn and Richards, a former Odessa grand jury foreman, had pleaded guilty to misdemeanor charges of using the telephone to relay gambling information between Texas and Nevada.

Rice and Klinger had pleaded guilty to felony offenses of operating illegal gambling businesses in Odessa in 1985-86.

Lubbock horse track wins fourth license from racing panel

AUSTIN (AP) — Owners of a Lubbock horse track have become the fourth horse-racing license applicants in the state to receive approval from the Texas Racing Commission.

Tuesday, the commission voted unanimously to award the pari-mutuel license to the owners of Lubbock Downs race track, located southeast of Lubbock. The vote cleared the way for betting windows to open next March 1.

"We need it; we need it badly," Lubbock Downs owner Jean Arnett said after the Class 2 license was awarded to the track, located southeast of Lubbock. "This is an industry that provides a lot of jobs to our area."

Rep. Delwin Jones, R-Lubbock, said the track will be the largest industry added to the Lubbock area in recent years.

Lubbock County voted against a 1987 referendum that legalized horse racing, but approved gambling in a local-option election last year.

Earlier this month, licenses were awarded to G. Rollie White Downs in Brady, Bandera Downs in Bandera County and Trinity Meadows, located near Weatherford.

Monday the commission turned down a license application submitted by Ross Downs in Colleyville, located near Fort Worth, citing questions about zoning and financing for the North Texas track.

The license application of one other West Texas track, Randall Park located near Umbarger in the Panhandle, will be considered by the commission in a series of hearings scheduled next week.

Lubbock Downs' owners plan to spend about $4.2 million to build a new track, grandstands and other facilities at the Lubbock Downs site. The construction project, which is to be done in two stages, will be financed in part through the sale of about $3.5 million of stock in the track, she explained.

The track will continue races without pari-mutuel betting through July, when construction of the new facilities will begin, Ms. Arnett said.

Pari-mutuel betting will not begin until the 1990 racing season, when Lubbock Downs hopes to have 108 racing days. The track is seeking authorization for 107 racing days both in 1991 and 1992.

Beginning in 1993, Class 2 tracks will be limited to 44 racing days.

Commissioners awarded the track a license contingent on its owners building 400 horse stalls that comply with the panel's rules by March 1, 1991, and hire a manager or management consultant with experience in pari-mutuel racing.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, told the commission he expects the track to receive strong support from area residents.

"West Texans are a very proud people, and they're eager for economic development and diversification," he said.

Canadians will be bearing new jobs, Phil Gramm says

By JULIE HILLRICHES
Staff Writer

ODESSA — U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, touring an Odessa bearing manufacturing plant, Tuesday predicted the implementation of a free trade agreement between the United States and Canada will result in 14,000 new jobs in Texas.

"Some of those jobs will be at Miether Bearing Products in Odessa as our goods have an opportunity to compete on a fair and flat playing surface," Gramm said.

The Texas Republican visited the plant to see firsthand the positive local effects of the recently ratified U.S./Canadian Free Trade Agreement. His message to company employees prior to being given a tour of Miether's product assembly line was clearly good news to its work force.

"We're always going to have a trade disadvantage, but with the duties removed or eliminated, we expect that sales will encompass a greater part of our product line," company spokesman Bob Epsen said.

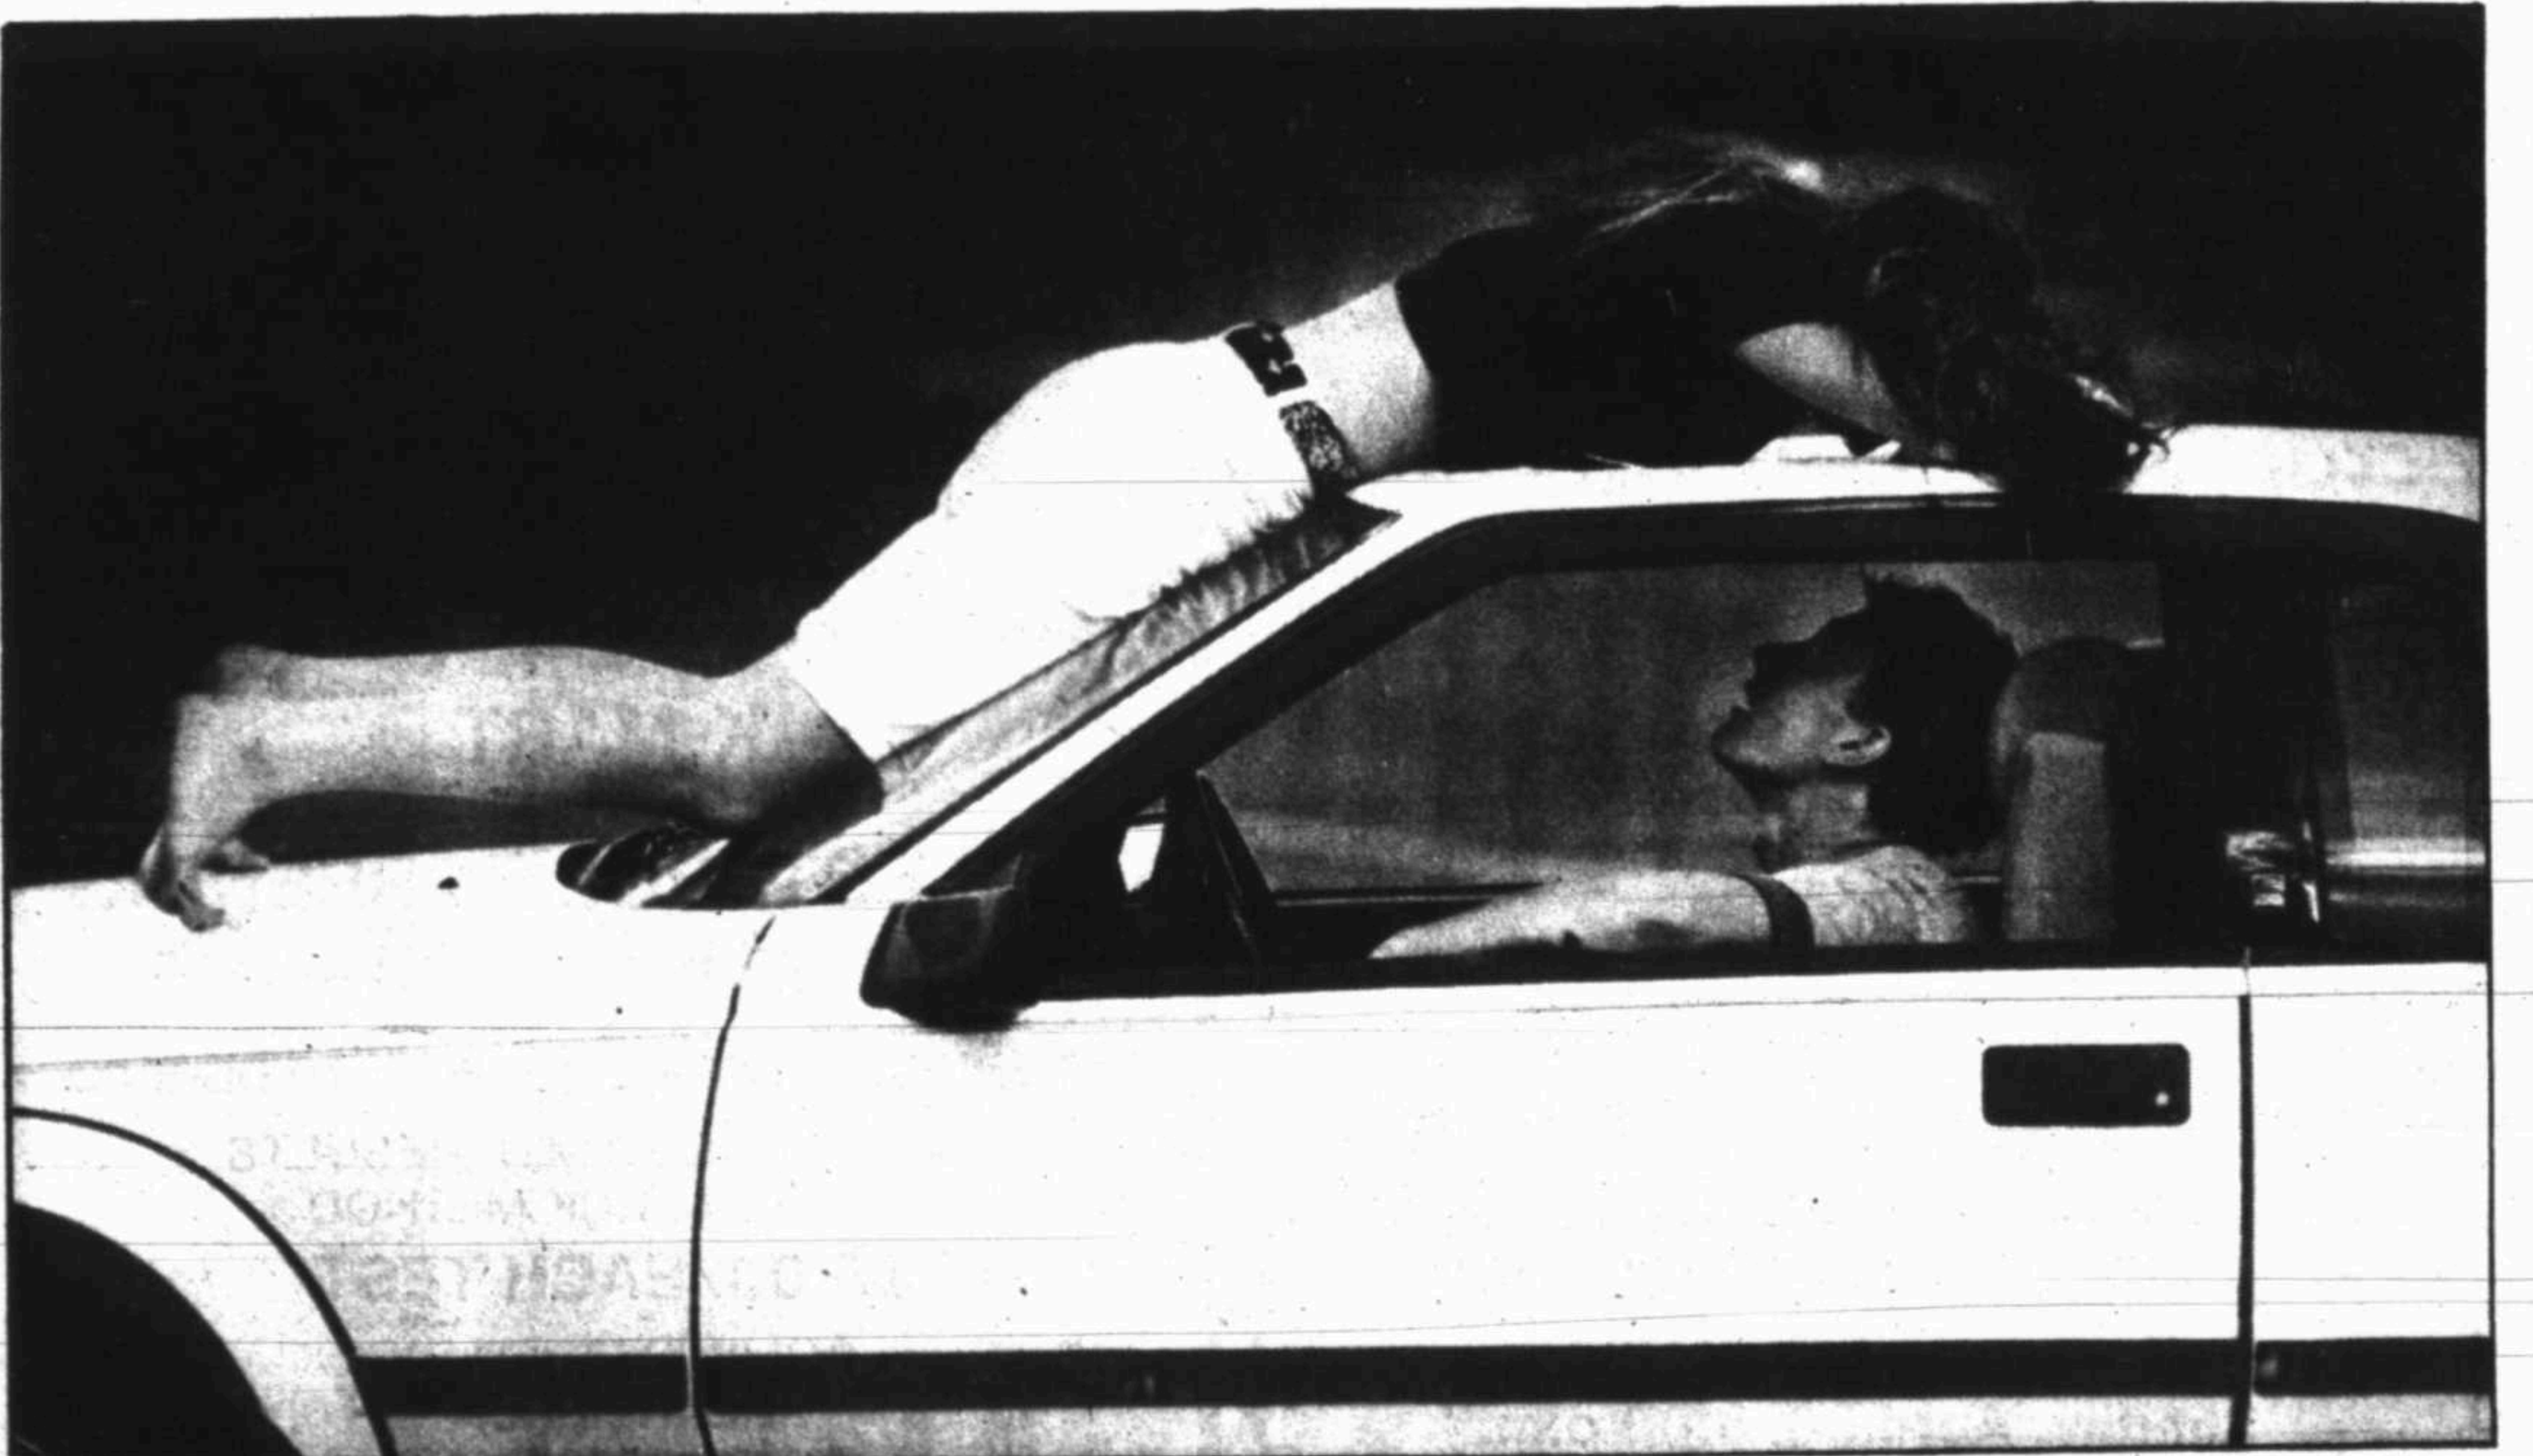

Miether, a subsidiary of Alco Industries Inc., is celebrating its 55th year in the business of manufacturing precision bearings and accessories for sale to the capital goods industry. The products are used in heavy rotating equipment.

The agreement, which went into effect in January, eliminated restrictions on goods and services produced in the U.S. and sold in Canada during the next 10 years. Restrictions on Canadian goods sold in the U.S. will be eliminated as well.

Current exports to Canada account for 24 percent of total U.S. exports, with officials expecting a $25 billion increase in trade due to the agreement.

Gramm noted that about 40,000 Texas jobs already are linked to trade with Canada and observed that about 10 percent of the products manufactured at Miether are sold on the Canadian market.

Christian radio station's backers crowd meeting

EL PASO (AP) — More than 300 supporters of a Christian format radio station packed City Council chambers Tuesday to protest council's denial last week of the station's plan to erect three antennas in a residential area.

The station, KELP-AM, got what it wanted. Council members promised to reconsider the issue as soon as it legally can, May 9.

The radio station had been whipping up interest in the issue since last week by broadcasting a series of editorials reminding listeners an election is coming up May 6 and urging them to call council members and protest the zoning permit denial.

Almost 350 KELP listeners attended Tuesday's council meeting, and another 100 stood outside the packed chambers. None were allowed to speak because the antenna issue was not on this week's agenda.

"It was still a victory for us, because last week they said we couldn't come back (for reconsideration) for another year," KELP owner Arnie McClatchie said Tuesday afternoon.

The issue is a special zoning permit the station needs to construct three 124-foot-tall antennas in an 11-acre, city-owned pond area in central El Paso. The area, which is bounded on three sides by houses, is designed to collect rain runoff.

McClatchie said employees of the station met with residents a few weeks ago and "calmed all their fears and answered all their questions."

But more than 70 area residents later signed petitions opposing the zoning permit. It was enough signatures to require a unanimous City Council vote to approve the permit.

That means Tony Ponce, the councilman representing the area, has veto power over the zoning permit — and he said the station can't pressure him to vote for the antennas.

"I'm hanging tough on that," he said Monday. "I voted against it for safety reasons. Those subdivisions are full of people, and with helicopters from the Border Patrol going back and forth, you could have a very nasty accident. Besides, they (residents) asked me not to vote for it."

McClatchie said residents have been misinformed, and that there is little danger of the antennas falling or helicopters crashing into them.

"Once we go back to the residents again, we think they'll support us again," he said.

WEST TEXAS in brief

Observatory's director hopes for more facilities

AUSTIN (AP) — The director of the McDonald Observatory says he hopes the famous observatory of the University of Texas someday will have extended facilities elsewhere in — and out — of this world.

"I dream of the day when McDonald instruments will be on the moon," said Harlan Smith, who will retire this summer after 26 years at the observatory.

In a speech at the university on Monday, kicking off two weeks of events to honor the West Texas observatory's 50th anniversary, Smith recounted its beginnings and research history.

It opened for research on Mount Locke in the Davis Mountains on May 5, 1939, after being built with a $500,000 bequest from an East Texas banker and amateur scientist named William Johnson McDonald.

At that time, Smith said, most of the "facts" in astronomy textbooks were wrong.

McDonald's first telescope, the 82-inch reflector, was a wonder. "It was the first really big telescope built in this country," Smith said.

This year also marks the 20th anniversary of McDonald's 107-inch reflector, the largest telescope at the observatory. That instrument was built six years after Smith left Yale University to take the McDonald directorship.

When he was hired as director, Smith said, UT was considering closing the observatory.

Instead, it was expanded, and today McDonald is known not only to scientists but to radio listeners of the Star Date astronomy program around the nation.

"McDonald, in fact, has contributed more to the understanding of stellar evolution than any other observatory in the world," Smith said.

Condo fraud trial on hold

LUBBOCK (AP) — The cross-examination of the government's key witness in a real estate fraud trial has been put on hold until Monday because of a death in the family of a juror in the federal trial, officials said.

Testimony in the case, in which seven men are charged with conspiring to loot five tracts of more than $100 million using proceeds from fraudulent real estate loans, was postponed Tuesday by U.S. District Judge Sam Cummings.

When the trial resumes Monday, witness and former developer Clifford Sinclair will face cross-examination on his week-long testimony.

Sinclair, who is serving a 13-year prison sentence for his part in the alleged scheme, testified that defendants D.L. "Danny" Faulkner and James Toler planned to defraud the savings and loans using loan proceeds from land deals along the Interstate 30 corridor near Lake Ray Hubbard.

Defense attorneys say Sinclair wrongly implicated their clients in order to win a reduced sentence.

Crosbyton hospital aided

LUBBOCK (AP) — A struggling rural hospital will get administrative help from a hospital here as the result of a management agreement between the two facilities, officials said.

The Crosbyton Clinic Hospital, located about 45 miles east of Lubbock, will be assisted by St. Mary of the Plains Hospital beginning later this week, said St. Mary's president Charley Trimble. St. Mary's will provide services such as administrative help and counseling to the Crosbyton facility at no cost.

Although the Lubbock hospital will have representation on the rural facility's board, Crosbyton hospital officials will retain decision-making powers, according to Trimble.

"We feel this will be the lifesaver of our community," said Billie Cornelius, chairman of the board of directors of the Crosbyton facility.

In order to keep the struggling hospital open, county residents had staged fund-raising events such as bake sales, auctions and fish fries. More than $122,000 has been raised so far this spring.

Under the agreement with St. Mary's, the hospital will match any sum up to $100,000 that Crosby County residents can raise between May 1 and April 30, 1990.

GRAMM

"It's a great paradox that, while the United States is the world's greatest trading nation for the last five or six years, every time we hear trade discussed it's always in a bad news context."

"Well I'm here to say that we can compete on the world market if we have a fair opportunity to do it. And we have a fair opportunity to do it in terms with our trade with Canada," he said.

With the trade agreement with Canada a done deal, Gramm's next mission is to begin trade negotiations with the Mexican government. A meeting Friday with Mexican president Carlos Salinas de Gortari will focus on that initiative, he said.

"I never tire of telling the Mexican government that trade is a two-way street. If they want us to buy their products, they've got to be willing to let our products sell on their market," Gramm said. "I think it's exciting that we might have that possibility with Mexico."

DARE

Randy Watson claimed that — by the time his children have graduated from Midland High School in about 13 years — he would have spent $12,000 on gasoline alone to transport them to school. He also noted the amount of time his children would spend on buses.

"I'm asking you to weigh the difference in cost compared to losing 50 acres," Watson said before his petition was struck down. "I don't have anything against Midland schools. I'm concerned about the time on the school bus or in my car."

Rick Strange, a Cotton, Bledsoe, Tighe and Dawson law firm attorney representing MISO, said allowing the detachment could mean facing Texas Education Agency scrutiny because the district's racial balance would be affected. MISO is under a federal court order to maintain racial balance in the schools.

"If we violate that order, we're subject to some pretty Draconian penalties," Strange said, adding that MISO also would lose $240,000 in taxable property along with Watson's children.

In other action Tuesday, trustees:

■ Took no action after meeting in executive session to discuss an internal investigation of warehouse employees.

■ Approved Ricardo Torres as executive director of secondary operations. Torres has served as Midland Freshman High School principal and teacher and counselor at other MISO schools since 1971.

ASSAULT

Neighborhood girls frequently would visit the Turner home to swim with Turner's two daughters, ages 11 and 4, Johnson said.

On April 17, after one of the swimming visits, the mother of a girl who had been at the pool called police, and an investigation was started.

Turner, who has no criminal record in Midland, was arrested last Monday at the downtown office building where he worked. He has refused to talk to police, according to Johnson.

In addition to the alleged incidents in Turner's pool, one of the victims was allegedly assaulted in a neighborhood park, Johnson said.

Investigators are convinced the girls are not exaggerating in their accounts of the assaults.

standing," Johnson said.

"The children are very consistent," Ms. Fowler said. "And I've worked enough cases involving pedophiles to know what questions to ask. They all answered questions similarly, and would have no way of knowing the patterns of a pedophile."

While molestation cases involving multiple victims are rare in Midland, they are not unheard of, the officer said.

"Anytime you have a city of 100,000, you are going to have this crime," Johnson noted. "It's a fact."

Detectives are conducting interviews of other children, and Tuesday said it was possible additional charges could be filed against Turner.

He is scheduled to appear at a bond reduction hearing later this week, Williams said.

House debates bill to limit liability of companies sued over products

AUSTIN (AP) — Proposed limits on the liability of companies sued for allegedly defective products could help economic development, said the sponsor of the bill.

But others said the measure debated Tuesday would hurt consumers. House members were to take up the bill again today.

"This is an anti-consumer, protectionist piece of legislation," Rep. Al Granoff, D-Dallas, told reporters.

Rep. Curtis Seidlits, the bill sponsor, said about five amendments he accepted were "some good concessions to trial lawyers and consumer groups."

One of the biggest concessions Seidlits said he made was changing a provision some said would bar recovery in a lawsuit for people who had misused, altered or modified a product.

Seidlits, D-Sherman, said he did not believe the provision would have been a complete bar, but it was deleted "to make sure there were no misconceptions." Modification of a product under the bill as amended would be used by the jury to decide what percentage of fault was the consumer's, he said.

The Texas Consumer Association in a letter to House members said the measure is "the worst piece of legislation affecting consumers."

"The choice is clear: either you will stand with the average Texan or with the giant, out-of-state corporations and their lobbyists who are pushing ... the bill that would tear the heart out of the protections of our state products liability law," said the letter.

Seidlits said, "If they prove their case, I don't think you're going to see that big a difference."

"The good cases are going to recover," he said. "I think you're going to weed out the bad cases."

The bill also could help in economic development, he said.

"There have been studies that have indicated that companies have shied away from Texas or failed to expand their product line in Texas because of our liability laws," he said.

The Consumer Association said another analysis shows product liability laws "are not a factor in a company's decision to locate in a particular state."

Among other changes from current law, the bill would eliminate under some circumstances the liability of a seller who is not a manufacturer. Plaintiffs would be required to prove a number of elements in order to hold sellers liable for defective product design.

In other action, the House: ■ Stopped floor consideration of a bill that would abolish common-law marriages as of Jan. 1, 1990. Debate was halted after a member raised a point of order because the bill as introduced only abolished such marriages but the committee substitute added a section making the children of people living together the legitimate children of the man.

Rep. Patricia Hill, R-Dallas, said she hoped to have her bill as originally introduced back on the floor for consideration soon.

Scrap yard's cleanup halted

EL PASO (AP) — The owner of a scrap yard that burned a week ago says he just wants to clean up the debris, but complains he can't because federal officials are sifting through the rubbish to determine whether hazardous materials were stored there.

"There's nothing worse out there

(in the debris) than you would find in any ordinary house fire," said Thomas Varkonyi, owner of Metal Recycling Co., whose scrap yard in central El Paso burned last Wednesday.

Local, state and federal officials contend Varkonyi is wrong — that the scrap yard was filled with hazardous items.

Ex-teacher indicted for sexual assault

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A former high school English teacher has been indicted on sexual assault charges after allegedly having sex with a student who later committed suicide.

Lou Ann Hogan, 25, a former Clark High School teacher who now lives in Schenectady, N.Y., with her husband, Mike, is expected to surrender this week to Bexar County officials to answer the charges.

A grand jury Tuesday returned two sexual assault charges involving Chad Cadenhead, who committed suicide on Jan. 28, 1988.

The indictment charges that Mrs. Hogan had sex with Cadenhead on Dec. 5 and Dec. 11, 1987. Cadenhead was 16 at the time of the alleged sexual relationship.

"He was very close to his 17th birthday, but the state law mandates that before 17 you have no legal right to consent, so if an adult has sexual relations with you, it's a crime," said Assistant District Attorney Nelson "Skip" Atwell.

Four friends of the teen-ager have said they witnessed the sexual acts after Cadenhead bragged about his relationship with the teacher and dared them to go to his house to witness the acts.

If convicted, Mrs. Hogan faces two to 20 years in prison and up to $10,000 on each charge.

"I assume it will cause prosecution problems since the jury won't be able to hear from the victim," Atwell said.

"So, the jury will have to rely upon the eyewitnesses," he said.

Clark students Jeff Beckel, Taylor Sommer and Scott Autry and former Clark student Hector Torres have given written statements talking about what they saw.

"We looked through the window and saw Chad Cadenhead and Mrs. Hogan naked on the bed having sexual intercourse," Sommers wrote in his statement.

After Cadenhead's death, his family went to the district attorney's office and asked for an investigation, Atwell said.

In the middle of the grand jury investigation, one of the teen-agers called to testify later committed suicide. Gary Randall Browder, 17, died of carbon monoxide poisoning, according to the medical examiner's office.

State Board of Insurance appointee Richard F. Reynolds testifies before the Senate Nominations Committee Tuesday at the Capitol in Austin. A former employee of Reynolds claimed he was fired because he tested positive for AIDS. Reynolds has denied the charge.

Insurance board nominee likely to be confirmed

AUSTIN (AP) — Despite objections from the Texas Lesbian-Gay Lobby, State Board of Insurance appointee Richard F. Reynolds will probably be confirmed, according to the chairman of the Senate Nominations Committee.

In testimony Tuesday before the nominations panel, a former employee said Reynolds fired him after discovering the employee had tested positive for the AIDS virus.

Reynolds, 61, a former state legislator from Flower Mound who was appointed to the Insurance Board by Gov. Bill Clements, denied the charge.

The former employee, Leonard Ingram, 36, of Dallas, has filed a lawsuit against Reynolds that is pending in district court.

Sen. Chet Edwards, chairman of the Nominations panel, said the charges by Ingram must be settled in court before the Senate can consider them.

"I don't know what the outcome of this court case will be, but I don't think the Senate can judge him on allegations," Edwards, D-Duncanville, said.

In addition, lawmakers are anxious to fill the vacancies on the three-member insurance board because of the controversy swirling around the panel, Edwards said.

"The (board) has had so many problems, it's time to move forward," he said.

Edwards said he expects the committee to vote for Reynolds next week. Reynolds' confirmation will then be placed before the full Senate.

"I think if the vote were held today, he would be confirmed," Edwards said.

Ingram said he worked for Ben Griffin Tractor Co. for seven years. Reynolds fired him in 1988 after Ingram confided to Reynolds that he tested positive for AIDS, Ingram said. After his dismissal, Ingram also lost his health insurance benefits when the company switched insurers, he said.

Glen Maxey, of the Texas Lesbian-Gay Lobby, said the insurance board has been insensitive to the plight of persons with AIDS who have had their insurance canceled.

But Reynolds told reporters his dismissal of Ingram as vice president of his Dallas tractor dealership was part of an overall staff reduction.

Senate approves death penalty for children's murder

AUSTIN (AP) — After hearing members denounce cases of child abuse and the slaying of children, the Senate approved a bill that would make murder of a child 14 or younger a death penalty offense.

"I think the pulse of the Senate is getting to be rather intolerant about these very terrible crimes," said Sen. John Montford, a former prosecutor.

The original bill by Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown would have extended Texas' capital punishment law to those who murder a child under the age of 6.

"The question has been asked, 'Why the age of 6 versus 7, or 8, or another age?' There is no magic to that number except that is the age at which young children at least leave the home and are exposed to other adults' besides their guardians or parents," said Brown, R-Lake Jackson.

"They do have the protection of the school personnel, the bus driver, the other people they come in contact with. But that child under the age of 6 is totally dependent on someone for their life," he said.

Montford, D-Lubbock, won approval Tuesday of an amendment to raise the age to 14 in keeping with other provisions of the Penal Code regarding children.

Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, said he thought Brown's bill was more important than the law providing capital punishment for the murder of a police officer.

"I have no sympathy for someone who kills kiddos," said Glasgow.

County treasurers back payroll-preparation bill

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Self-preservation is the motive for county treasurers who are pressing for the authority to prepare county payrolls, the president of a group of county auditors told a Texas Senate committee Tuesday.

Jefferson County Auditor Jerry Ware, who settled his own dispute with County Treasurer Linda Robinson over the Jefferson County payroll, testified Tuesday against a bill that would give treasurers responsibility for payrolls.

As president of the Texas Association of County Auditors, Ware said it makes sense for county auditors to prepare payrolls to eliminate duplication with the treasurer's office and to keep checks and balances over officials who collect money from the public.

"It is absurd to argue that checks and balances will be improved by allowing treasurers to write checks on the very accounts over which they have custody," Ware told the Senate Intergovernmental Relations Committee as it reviewed Senate Bill 1006 by Sen. Ken Armbrister, D-Victoria.

Armbrister's bill, which was left pending in the committee, would clarify that the treasurer is responsible for preparing county payrolls. In nine counties that have done away with the office of treasurer, the bill allows county commissioners court to assign the payroll duties to the auditor, who is appointed by district judges in the county, or another payroll officer.

"It is no coincidence that this issue surfaced only after voters in some Texas counties abolished their county treasurer," Ware said. "By their own admission, their desire to prepare the payroll is for self-preservation."

Ware recommended the Legislature instead give county commissioners courts the option of making their auditor or the treasurer responsible for the payroll.

Bell County Treasurer Charles Jones, president of the County Treasurers Association of Texas, said Armbrister's bill, or a similar House Bill 1282 that the House County Affairs Committee approved this past week, would not take authority from auditors, because current law does not authorize auditors to do payrolls.

Man convicted in poisoning of children freed

ARCADIA, Fla. (AP) — A former fruit picker enjoyed his first taste of freedom today after 21 years in prison because a judge said perjury and prosecutorial misconduct got him convicted in the deaths of his seven children.

"I don't feel freedom yet," 53-year-old James Richardson said Tuesday following an eight-hour hearing in the DeSoto County courthouse where he had been sentenced to death in 1968. "I guess it's going to take a while to get use to it, but I'm going to keep trying to make that step."

Retired Circuit Judge Clifton Kelly, assigned to review the case by the state Supreme Court, freed the black man who was convicted by an all-white jury after agreeing with defense attorneys that prosecutors allowed perjured testimony and withheld evidence.

"The enormity of the crime — seven children poisoned to death — is matched only by the enormity of the injustice to this man," said Kelly.

Although the state has 10 days to order a retrial, Janet Reno, a special investigator assigned to the case, said it will be closed.

Richardson was released in the custody of attorney Ellis Rubin, who took him to his condominium near Daytona Beach, where a press conference was scheduled for this afternoon.

Richardson's first wish was to eat a shrimp dinner, said Rubin.

After Richardson was freed, his wife, Annie Mae, cried on the courthouse lawn, threw her arms up and said "Thank you, thank you."

"Right now I feel fine," Richardson said. "Within my heart, I knew that these great men were going to get me out — they weren't going to let me stay in there."

In addition to Rubin, he was referring to attorney Mark Lane, whose 1971 book "Arcadia" raised questions about the conviction in the October 1967 poisonings.

"A long and crooked path has brought us back to Arcadia," Lane said. "And after 21 years, it's appropriate that it should end up again in Arcadia."

Rubin and Lane accused former State Attorney Frank Schaub of railroad-ing Richardson into a death sentence, which was commuted to life in prison in 1972. They said Schaub manufactured testimony against Richardson because of shoddy investigation and a failure to find another suspect. They said Richardson was an easy target because he was illiterate, poor and black.

Schaub has filed a defamation of character lawsuit against the two attorneys. He also accused state officials of conducting "a hatchet job" and called Richardson "a child-killer."

And retired Judge John Justice, who sentenced Richardson, said, "As far as I am concerned, a mass murderer is going to walk the streets."

But Ms. Reno, the Dade County state attorney appointed by Gov. Bob Martinez to look into the case, said Richardson did not get a fair trial.

She said Schaub and then-Assistant State Attorney John Treadwell withheld "six key pieces of exculpatory evidence... that could have changed the outcome."

Lane charged that Schaub, Treadwell and then-Sheriff Frank Cline forced jail inmates and others to testify against Richardson and suppressed evidence favorable to the defendant.

The defense also presented testimony pointing to babysitter Beanie Reese as a prime suspect. Ms. Reese, 67, is in an Arcadia nursing home suffering from Alzheimer's disease and is unable to communicate with anyone, although two nurses filed affidavits last year that she confessed to serving the children the pesticide-laced food.

The children, ages 2 to 8, died within hours after eating a lunch of grits, beans, rice and gravy laced with parathion, which is now banned. Richardson said he and his wife were working in a citrus grove in the southwest Florida farming community when their children were poisoned.

Rubin told the judge that Richardson deserved not only freedom but compensation from the state.

The governor responded, "Mr. Richardson has lost too many years of his life in prison, but my hope is that this decision will give him an opportunity to rebuild."

Proposed ordinance would recognize homosexual, unmarried relationships

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Larry Brinkin couldn't take a leave from his job after the death of his homosexual lover of 11 years, but a proposed law would give him and other city employees the same bereavement leave as married couples.

The measure proposed Tuesday effectively would redefine the family by legally equating homosexual and unmarried relationships with marriage for 24,000 municipal employees.

"The legal world must reflect the realities that exist in our private existences," said Supervisor Harry Britt, who wrote the "domestic partnership" legislation. "Both gay people and unmarried heterosexuals have been denied the fundamental right to live in love and happiness."

A narrower version of the legislation was vetoed by then-Mayor Dianne Feinstein in 1982. She called it too vague.

But this time, Mayor Art Agnos endorsed the measure from the start and eight members of the 11-seat Board of Supervisors signed on as cosponsors. The ordinance will be heard before a city committee on May 11.

If approved, it would be the most far-reaching measure of its kind, although three California cities, Berkeley, Santa Cruz and West Hollywood, allow municipal employees to add partners to health benefit and pension plans.

The ordinance would ban discrimination by any city agency against people because of the non-traditional relationship status. It also requires that steps be taken to extend many benefits to people in committed relationships that now are provided only to married people, including dependent health care and legal standing in housing contracts.

"The message is that San Francisco is a place where it is understood that the family unit, even if it is non-traditional, is paramount to our lives in terms of our survival, the support we need, to keep us free from loneliness, to help us economically," said Brinkin, who unsuccessfully sued his former employer, Southern Pacific, over the denied leave.

Although the ordinance would not apply to the private sector, the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce announced it would begin a study of the issue with the aim of informing businesses what benefits they should offer employees in such relationships.

Britt's measure would require domestic partners to have a joint home and to share basic living expenses, although each could maintain a second home. They also must register with City Hall or, for those wishing confidentiality, with a notarized statement filed with an independent third party, such as a private attorney.

The measure has been criticized by some religious groups.

The San Francisco Roman Catholic Archdiocese will not support "any effort to weaken the institution of marriage, to tinker with it, or put any parallel system alongside it," said spokesman Norman Phillips.

But Tom DiMaria, of the Washington-based National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, called domestic partnership a "fundamental requirement" for homosexuals to be accepted by society.

"This tells people that gay and lesbian relationships are a viable, healthy and acceptable new form of the traditional family," DiMaria said.

Bush visits drug hideout, talks to Hispanic leaders

Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — President George Bush hit Southern California Tuesday with a photogenic tour of a former drug hideout and a somewhat awkward attempt to solicit support from local Hispanic leaders.

The president also made a surprise stop at Anaheim Stadium for a baseball game between the California Angels and the Baltimore Orioles before retiring for a scheduled visit Wednesday morning with former President Reagan.

Bush met during the early evening with Hispanic leaders at UCLA, but the event left many in that community less enthusiastic than the White House might have hoped.

Only about 250 of the 400 influential Hispanics invited showed up to hear Bush praise the "family-oriented" Hispanic community as "builders of America."

"You are building it through family, church, love of country and belief in the value of hard work," he said.

But Steven Soto, the president and chief executive officer of the Mexican-American Grocers Association, which organized the last-minute event at the request of the White House, was unimpressed.

"He really didn't say anything," said Soto. He added that the new president needs to give Hispanics "more than just a dog-and-pony show."

Another Hispanic leader, noting the scantily-clad Aztec dancers who followed Bush's speech, noted acidly, "They think we're all natives in feathers."

Danny Villanueva, the former football star and owner of KMEX-TV, was asked if he would ever consider registering as a Republican. His answer was a grimace.

Villanueva, a registered independent who is weighing a race for mayor of Los Angeles, originally agreed to hold the event at his home "so the community could get to know the new president," he said.

When the event grew in proportion, it was switched to UCLA. Nearly 400 Hispanics responded to the last-minute Bush invitation, but only about 250 actually attended. That left one room embarrassingly empty, save for a mariachi band, which played to itself.

Bush's former campaign manager and choice as chairman of the Republican National Committee, Lee Atwater, made a similar plea for Hispanics last week in downtown Los Angeles.

Civil War memorials now battling acid rain

GETTYSBURG, Pa. (AP) — The North and South both are losing the modern-day Battle of Gettysburg.

The monuments that make the rolling hills one of the world's largest outdoor museums are melting. Every time rain drips from the marble and bronze memorials, acid slowly but steadily washes away pieces of history.

"The marble ones are definitely on their way to destruction," said David Ballard, maintenance director at Gettysburg National Military Park. "You can wax bronze, but there isn't a lot you can do about marble. The marble's just going to keep on fizzing away."

Only granite markers and monument bases seem immune. Across the sprawling battlefield, the effects of acid rain are obvious to even a casual observer. Brass plaques are stained and streaked with corrosion in shades of black, gray, green and white. Marble markers are badly pitted and misshapen.

On Cemetery Ridge, the high ground that Union forces held on the decisive third day of the 1863 Civil War battle, Ballard gestured helplessly toward an octagonal marble marker. Inscriptions had been chiseled on all eight sides, but only a stray letter or two remain visible.

"Whatever the heck were they, it's gone now. It's history," he said.

A short hike away, in the cemetery where Abraham Lincoln delivered the Gettysburg Address is the first monument erected here. The Soldiers' National Monument, whose dedication took up much of the front page of The New York Times on July 2, 1863, is "probably the most endangered piece we have in the park right now," Ballard said.

The monument features a woman representing liberty atop a classical column, which rests on a pedestal. At the four corners of the pedestal, sculpted marble figures represent War, History, Peace and Plenty. Damage from acid particles in rain isn't apparent at first because of the stark beauty of the work viewed as a whole. A closer look reveals a missing toe here, a washed-out detail there.

Ballard likened the damage to a melting ice cube, which retains its general appearance for a while, then collapses because it loses structural shape.

Fighting the acidic effects of airborne pollution, according to a draft National Park Service report, is a losing battle.

"Only memories last forever. In time, metal corrodes and stone crumbles. What worries park managers at Gettysburg National Military Park is the speed with which our monuments to those honored dead are disappearing."

Complicating Ballard's mission are two facts he can't control. Pennsylvania, according to the state Sierra Club and Pennsylvanians for Acid Rain Control, receives the most acidic rainfall in the United States and is one of the top three sources of sulfur dioxide. Environmentalists contend sulfur dioxide from coal-fired power plants is a major cause of acid rain.

Another constraint Ballard faces is limited government funding, both to deal with acid rain and maintain Gettysburg's monuments.

Asked if his crews could protect the 1,300 monuments and major markers, he replied, "Not given the current state of funding in the park service. It would take a crew of a dozen people, perhaps, working year round."

Cheney given high marks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman and ranking Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee today gave Defense Secretary Dick Cheney high marks for crafting cuts in the Pentagon budget, but expressed concerns about some of the specific reductions.

Sens. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., and John Warner, R-Va., commented a day after Cheney outlined planned reductions, delays and cuts totaling $10 billion before the House Armed Services Committee. The savings were required to meet the fiscal 1990 budget level of $296.6 billion for the Defense Department agreed upon by the White House and Congress.

"I think Defense Secretary Cheney and President Bush stepped up to the plate and made some tough decisions here under very rough circumstances," Nunn said on ABC's "Good Morning America."

But, he said, he is "very concerned" about the decision to scrap the Marine Corps' V-22 Osprey, a battlefield aircraft designed to take off like a helicopter but fly like an airplane.

"That has very strong implications for future commercial aviation as well as for the military," Nunn said.

The Pentagon had hoped to spend $25.9 billion on 663 Ospreys, including $1.3 billion in 1990. Cheney called the decision to drop it his most difficult.

Warner, interviewed with Nunn, gave Cheney "very high marks" and added, "I think we're going to follow the Bush-Cheney plan very closely."

However, Warner, a former secretary of the Navy, said he is concerned about heavy cuts falling on that service.

"I'm concerned about our deployments beyond the United States, where our young men in many instances and now women aboard ship have to be gone for six and seven months, and the stress that puts on families," he said.

If the strategic assessment Bush has promised to send Congress the first week in May "tells us we can cut back on some of those deployments abroad and the time, then I think the impact is somewhat less severe," Warner said.

NATION IN BRIEF

Kennedys join appeal for JFK statue

BOSTON (AP) — Sen. Edward Kennedy joined a statewide appeal Tuesday to raise money for a statue of his brother John, saying he was glad the memorial focuses on the late president's birthday and not the day he was assassinated.

"We do not want to relive my brother's death. We want to remember his life," Kennedy said at a Statehouse news conference that included the late president's daughter, Caroline Kennedy Schlossberg, and Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

The 8-foot bronze statue is being created by artist Isabel McIlvain of Sherborn, whose design was chosen through a nationwide competition. It depicts Kennedy striding into a breeze, with his left hand tucked in his pocket.

State Rep. John MacGovern, co-chair of a special legislative commission on the statue, said he was confident the sculpture would be unveiled by May 19, 1990, the 73rd anniversary of Kennedy's birth.

"At long last Massachusetts will properly remember and note the wonderful contributions of this outstanding citizen and this political hero for so many of us on both sides of the political aisle," said MacGovern.

About $600,000 has been raised so far of the overall fund-raising goal, MacGovern said. The overall goal of $600,000 includes maintenance funds and some scholarship money.

Shuttle countdown 'squeaky clean'

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The countdown for Friday's launch of Atlantis with the Magellan Venus probe progressed in "squeaky clean" fashion today, and some work was ahead of schedule, a NASA test director reported.

"We have no significant open items and we're on schedule," Albert Sofge said.

Air Force Capt. Thomas Strange, shuttle meteorologist, said the only weather concern remained the possibility of strong crosswinds of about 17 mph that could be dangerous if Atlantis had to make an emergency landing on a runway near the launch pad.

Otherwise, he said, the forecast was for clear skies and temperature of 87 degrees.

Six hours after launch, astronauts Mark Lee and Mary Cleave are to release the 7,800-pound Magellan probe and a rocket is to propel it on a 488-day journey to Venus. Magellan is to reach its destination in August 1990, swooping into orbit around Venus to begin a 243-day period during which it is to map up to 90 percent of the cloud-shrouded planet's surface with the probe's high resolution radar system.

After releasing Magellan, the astronauts will conduct experiments for four days, then return to Earth.

CARSON, Calif. (AP) — He weighs a half-ton, squeals a lot and tries to bite the hands that feed him because his eyesight is poor.

But that hasn't stopped 300 people statewide from offering a home to Grunt the abandoned pig, Los Angeles County animal control officials said Tuesday.

"We've had everything from a guy in Lomita who lived in an apartment and thought the pig would be a cute pet to a man in Northern California with a 400-acre pig farm who wants to use the pig as a stud. That would be my choice," said animal control Sgt. James Bay.

Grunt has been at the department's shelter for the past week, since he was taken from affluent Rolling Hills Estates, where his owners abandoned him because they were moving.

They gave their gardener permission to butcher him, but Grunt was saved from becoming bacon when his frightened squeals alerted neighbors.
