Judge studies move to quash indictment for capital murder

By PAUL PINKHAM
Staff Writer

A district judge has taken under advisement a motion to quash a capital murder indictment against John Weaver, charged with the Dec. 14 shotgun slaying of JoAnn Williams in her home at 1056 Varnon Drive.

The motion, filed by Weaver's court-appointed attorneys Harold Comer and Mark Buzzard, argues that capital murder, when aggravated by a felony, must result from two separate incidents, such as a burglar being surprised during the course of a burglary, and killing the person who surprised him.

The indictment against Weaver alleges that he shot Williams in the course of attempting to burglarize her home and commit aggravated assault against her daughter, Bridgett Williams, with whom he was romantically involved.

But, in arguing for the motion Monday, Comer said Weaver allegedly entered the house with a loaded shotgun in what was a "single episode."

Comer said based on the state's allegations, his client should be charged with the lesser offense of first degree murder, not capital murder. Maximum punishment for capital murder is death, while the maximum sentence Weaver could receive if found guilty of first degree murder is life in prison.

"The state is bootstrapping itself into a capital murder indictment by breaking down into separate parts what essentially was one single episode," Comer said. "All that would be required would be for the state to re-indict the man for first degree murder, where it should be in the first place."

Assistant District Attorney David Hamilton argued that any time someone is murdered during the course of another crime it is a continuous episode but, even so, he said, in this case Weaver entered the home, not looking for JoAnn Williams, but for her daughter Bridgett. Comer replied that the fact his alleged victim was someone other than who was intended does not matter.

223rd District Judge Don Cain asked attorneys for both sides to research case histories of the law in question and file briefs by Sept. 2. He said he would rule on the motion at that time.

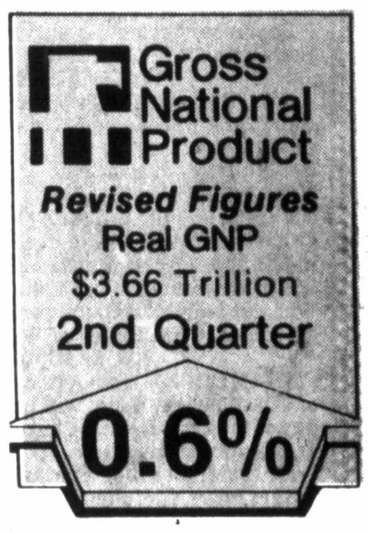

The case is tentatively set for trial beginning the week of Oct. 20 and Buzzard said Monday it could take up to three weeks to try. Hamilton said he does not believe it will take that long.

GNP growth smallest since last recession

WASHINGTON (AP) — The economy, held back by a worsening trade performance, grew at a barely perceptible annual rate of 0.6 percent from April through June, the weakest advance since the last recession, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the rate of growth in the gross mational product, the broadest measure of economic health, was the smallest since GNP had fallen at a 3.2 percent rate in the July-September quarter of 1982, during the depths of the last recession.

The second quarter advance matches a 0.6 percent rise in the fourth quarter of 1982 as the country began to pull out of the recession.

The 0.6 percent performance marked a sharp downward revision from an initial estimate made last month, when the government projected that the economy had expanded at a 1.1 percent annual rate from April through June.

The revision painted an even gloomier picture of an economy pulled down by a disastrous trading performance and a steep slump in the oil and gas industry.

The 0.6 percent increase from April through June was less than one-sixth of the 3.8 percent rate turned in from January through March.

While the rate of growth was dropping dramatically, the news on inflation reamined upbeat. The government said that an inflation index tied to the GNP rose at a 1.9 percent annual rate in the second quarter, the slowest advance since the spring of 1972. The good showing was attributed to the big plunge in energy prices.

For the first six months of the year, the economy grew at an annual rate of 2.2 percent.

Property values, interest rates down

White Deer schools cut budget

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

WHITE DEER — Dealt a double blow by decreasing property values and low interest rates, school officials here pared their budget by about $300,000, down to $2.557 million, Monday night.

The budget is based on a proposed tax rate of 75 cents per $100 valuation, which is midway between the 61 cent rate the school had for 1986 and the 92 cent effective tax rate which the school would have to charge in order to collect the same amount of property tax it did last year.

Trustees are expected to set the tax rate at their next regular meeting

Superintendent Tom Harkey anticipates that the tax rate will bring in $2.13 million if the district manages to collect 95 percent of its taxes. Because of plunging oil prices, property values in the school district have plummeted from $445 million to $300 million.

Another drop in the local revenue could come from lower interest earnings on certificates of deposit and other time accounts. Anticipated revenue from rentals and interest on time deposits drops from $58,603 in 1985-86 to $34,000. An official with First Bank and Trust of White Deer confirmed that interest rates are lower now, but he declined to quote any figures.

Harkey said that because of the low interest rate, "we will probably delve into our carry-over sooner."

The lower interest rates will also eliminate any discount for people who pay taxes early, Harkey said.

"The only way you can make up for the discount is through interest on CD's and the interest rates are too low," he said, adding that maybe the district can consider discounts next year.

The school district also expects a drop from $164,321 to $150,000 in per capita state funding.

Harkey told the board that the 1987 budget is "figured so tight, there is no room for juggling money around."

Teachers had been informed in March of a 20 percent cut in their local above state base salary increment (from $3,400 to $2,720 for teachers with bachelors degrees and from $4,200 to $3,360 for teachers with masters degrees). And teachers who leave the school district are not being replaced, forcing the school board to shuffle faculty assignments.

The payroll for the 49-member faculty was set at $1.27 million. This includes salaries, health insurance, retirement and other benefits. Because salaries for the coaches and the band director were moved to instruction, the 1987 payroll is higher than the $1.23 million payroll for 1986.

But other instructional allocations have also risen. The school will spend $39,000 for instructional services ($34,396 last year), $48,305 for supplies ($33,067) and $15,280 for miscellaneous purchases ($12,945)

The budget for such capital outlay purchases as new books and equipment was slashed from $25,494 to $4,604.

The computer instruction budget was decreased from $32,510 to $27,938 thanks to decreases in supplies from $2,419 to $502 and a decrease in payroll.

The budget for the athletic and band program was slashed from $106,285 to $66,150, due in part to the transferring of the salaries. Still, supply purchases for these activities was pared from $32,980 to $20,730.

The school's maintenance budget was cut from $398,579 to $345,670 with most of the decrease coming in capital outlay which is down nearly $59,000 to $7,670 and in supplies.

Also down are the school's contract with the Region 16 Educational Service Center, from $6,570 to $5,000; cafeteria, from $131 to $117; special education transportation from $9,741 to $7,934).

The transportation budget could rise from $79,000 to $95,430 if the district buys a new school bus.

You'll have to figure out if you're a winner or loser

WASHINGTON (AP) — If you are really serious about finding out how the pending tax-overhaul plan would affect your finances, don't count on official averages or an accountant's figures about a hypothetical family.

You'll have to do it yourself.

If there is nothing too exotic in your financial situation, you should be able to use your 1985 return to come up with a fair estimate of how your taxes would change in 1988, when most of the provisions affecting individuals would be in effect.

Most of the estimates of how the plan would affect individuals at different income levels have come from the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation, which advises Congress on tax matters.

Those figures indicate how broad classes of people — all lumped together regardless of family size or deductions — would fare.

They can show, for example, whether too little of the tax cut is going to middle-income Americans.

But those figures are little help in determining a specific individual's liability under the bill, which will go to the House and Senate next month for final votes.

Several big accounting firms are offering some help by creating hypothetical families, estimating their deductions and calculating their taxes. That's fine if the income and deduction levels they select approximate yours, but they can still leave you wondering about specifics of your situation.

Here are basic steps to calculate your 1988 taxes:

INCOME

Wages, fees and interest income are treated the same as under present law. If you have unemployment compensation, it would be fully taxable. You would lose the $100 ($200 for a joint return) dividend exclusion. If you have capital gains, they would be treated as ordinary income.

ADJUSTMENTS

Individual Retirement Accounts: Present law allows a worker to deduct up to $2,000 a year for these accounts; a spouse with no income can get a $250 deduction. The bill complicates this considerably and creates three classes of workers:

—Those not eligible for a company pension, regardless of income, retain present law. So do those who are covered by a plan but earn less than $25,000 ($50,000 for couples).

—Those covered by a company plan and earning between $25,000 and $35,000 (between $40,000 and $50,000 for couples) could get a partial deduction; as income rises $1,000, they lose $200 of the maximum IRA deduction. Thus, a single person earning $30,000 could deduct up to $1,000.

—Workers making more than $35,000 ($50,000 for couples) could deposit up to $2,000 a year in an IRA but get no deduction. But the interest the money earns would continue tax-free until withdrawn.

Two-earner deduction: Now as much as $3,000 a year, it would be repealed.

Other adjustments, including alimony paid and moving expenses, would remain as under present law.

Subtracting these adjustments from income results in adjusted gross income (AGI).

DEDUCTIONS

Unreimbursed medical and dental expenses: now deductible to the extent they exceed 5 percent of AGI, the bill raises that threshold to 7.5 percent.

State and local taxes: Property, income and sales taxes are now deductible but the bill repeals the sales-tax writeoff.

Mortgage interest: remains fully deductible for one or two homes. If you take out a home-equity loan, you may not deduct the interest unless the money is used for home improvements or medical or education expenses.

Consumer interest: such as for car loans and credit cards, would be eliminated over three years. For 1988 returns, 40 percent would be deductible.

Charitable contributions: unchanged for itemizers.

Casualty and theft losses: no change.

Miscellaneous deductions: including union dues, job-related publications, tax-return preparation fees and the like. They're now fully deductible; under the bill you may deduct only the portion that exceeds 2 percent of your AGI.

Total these deductions. Under present law, you then would subtract the "zero-bracket amount," which under the bill would be renamed the standard deduction. But the bill would take this item out of the tax tables, meaning it would be used only by those who do not itemize deductions. So ignore the standard deduction.

EXEMPTIONS

By 1988 the personal exemption would rise to $1,950 for the taxpayer, spouse and each dependent.

Subtract total deductions and exemptions from AGI to arrive at taxable income.

Opening ceremonies slated for local 'store of future'

Pampa will get a economic shot in the arm when The Food Emporium, a new business heralded as "the food store of the future," launches its grand opening activities at 9 a.m. Wednesday.

The Emporium is located in Coronado Center at 1233 N. Hobart.

The store will open after local chamber officials and company officials conduct a ribbon-cutting ceremony at 8:30 a.m.

Harold Grasmueck, vice president of Save n' Gain, the parent company for The Food Emporium, called the new store "the most innovative shopping system in the Southwest today," featuring a combination of state of the art technology and sophisticated design.

Local manager Harold Butler said the new store will constantly employ about 200 people.

According to Grasmueck, the original design for the Emporium came after months of exhaustive study of supermarkets around the world.

"We set out to design a shopping system that would cater to the needs of a wide range of individuals," said Grasmueck. "We wanted the Emporium to be a super market — a place to shop for everything from milk and bread to international foods to special cuts of meats. That's why the store features more than a dozen special departments."

Special departments in the Emporium include an in-store bakery, delicatessen, full-service pharmacy, tortilleria, floral shop, coffee shop, video emporium, service center, international foods, beer and wine, bulk foods and gourmet meats.

In addition to the special departments, The Emporium also features more than 40,000 items on its grocery shelves.

"We have a huge variety of national brand names, as well at private labels and generics," Grasmueck said.

He also said freshness is of paramount importance in the store's produce section, which includes more than 100 varieties of fruits and vegetables.

"We try to buy local crops when we can," said Grasmueck, "and we are very careful to maintain the freshness of fruits and vegetables that are not grown locally. When we buy produce from Arizona or California, we truck it to the store ourselves to make sure it arrives fresh."

Wednesday's grand opening activities will include an in-store tasting fair, a parking lot sale, balloons and candy for the kids and a slate of prizes to be given away.

In addition, shoppers can register for the store's prize giveaways, including a 1986 Chevy S-10 pickup and two trips for two to Las Vegas.

The regular store hours, 7 a.m. to midnight, will go into effect Thursday.

Texas plays role in surge of population in the South

WASHINGTON (AP) — The population of the South increased by 7 percent between 1980 and 1984, with Florida, Texas, Oklahoma and Georgia recording the largest gains in the region covered by new Census Bureau estimates of poulation and per capita income.

The bureau, in the latest in a series of regional reports issued this summer, said the population of the 15 Southern states increased from 74,139,633 in 1980 to an estimated 79,340,321 on July 1, 1984.

Florida's population increased by 12.6 percent during the period, the fastest rate in the region. Texas ranked second with a 12.4 percent increase, followed by Oklahoma at 9 percent and Georgia at 6.8 percent.

In terms of per capita income, Georgia led the 15-state region with a 36.9 percent increase from 1979 through 1983. Georgia's average income per resident jumped from $6,380 in 1979 to $8,734 in 1983.

Ranking behind Georgia in percentage increase in per capita income were Virginia, 35.6 percent; Florida, 35.1 percent; North Carolina, 33.5 percent; Maryland and South Carolina, both at 33.1 percent; Oklahoma, 32.7 percent; Arkansas 31.6 percent; Mississippi, 31.2 percent; Texas, 31.1 percent; and Louisiana, 30.5 percent.

The Southern states with the slowest growth in per capita income during the period were West Virginia, 19.2 percent; Alabama, 29 percent; Kentucky, 29.3; and Tennessee, 29.5 percent.

Maryland residents were the region's wealthiest in 1983, with a per capita income of $11,036. Virginia ranked second at $10,136, followed by Florida, $9,808; Texas, $9,443; Oklahoma, $9,092; Georgia, $8,734; Louisiana, $8,385; North Carolina, $8,189; Tennessee, $8,042; South Carolina, $7,830; Kentucky, $7,724; Alabama, $7,603; Arkansas, $7,388; West Virginia, $7,320; and Mississippi, $6,801.

The slowest growing states in the South between 1980 and 1984 were West Virginia, with a 0.1 percent increase in population; Kentucky, with a 1.7 percent increase; Alabama, with a 2.5 percent increase; and Arkansas, with a 2.7 percent increase.

Here is a complete listing of the bureau's 1984 population estimates for the Southern states, including the percentage increase since the 1980 census:

Texas, 15,988,538, 12.4 percent; Florida, 10,975,748, 12.6 percent; North Carolina, 6.164,613, 4.8 percent; Georgia, 5,836,548, 6.8 percent; Virginia, 5,635,544, 5.4 percent; Tennessee, 4,716,752, 2.7 percent; Louisiana, 4,462,489, 6.1 percent; Maryland, 4,349,252, 3.1 percent; Alabama, 3,990,221, 2.5 percent; Kentucky, 3,723,024, 1.7 percent; South Carolina, 3,300,211, 5.7 percent; Oklahoma, 3,297,952, 9 percent; Mississippi, 2,597,952, 3.1 percent; Arkansas, 2,349,159, 2.7 percent; and West Virginia, 1,952,318, 0.1 percent.

Hobby proposes fines for schools

AUSTIN (AP) — Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby is suggesting that school districts be fined if their graduates are so poorly educated they need remedial courses in college.

Hobby said he is concerned about colleges offering low-level courses to students who can't adequately read or write, even after being graduated from high school.

"There's no reason for taxpayers to pay twice," he said. "If a college has to offer remedial education, why should that (cost) not be charged back to the school district that gave the diploma to that student who is deficient in basic skills?"

Hobby's proposal, offered Modday, was received with interest by lawmakers.

"That might not be a bad idea," said Rep. Bill Haley, D-Center, chairman of the House Public Education Committee.

Senate Education Committee Chairman Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, said he would introduce a bill in January that will require universities to inform school districts of the academic progress of college freshmen.

The report wouldn't name students, he said, but would let districts know how their graduates are faring in college.

Hobby said such a law would provide another way to make school districts accountable for the students they graduate.

"I made a suggestion about a year ago that if a school district wasn't doing its job, it should stop receiving state aid. We should stop throwing good money after bad. That was met with shrieks," Hobby said.

Rig count registers fifth straight gain

HOUSTON (AP) — The number of working oil and gas rigs in the country rose for the fifth week in a row to 738, Hughes Tool Co. officials reported.

The count increased by four from last week's total of 734, company officials reported Monday. Last year at this time the count was 1,945.

During July, the rig count hit an all-time low of 663, company officials said.

Before 1971, the lowest number was 805 rigs working in April 1943.

Senators to fight reductions in human services programs

AUSTIN (AP) — Several state senators say they will fight some of the sweeping budget cuts that won House approval last week because they slash too deeply into human services programs.

"It is incumbent now on the state Senate to do justice for human services," Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, told about 250 demonstrators who gathered Monday at the Capitol to protest the cuts.

"It will not be easy. The Senate will do its part to cut where we can but also to raise taxes where we must," said Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin.

The demonstrators, representing the disabled, elderly, low-income Texans and others, said the cuts included in the House budget bill are too deep.

The House last week approved legislation to reduce state government spending by about $750 million. Included in that total are cuts of about $82 million in human services and $76 million in public health spending.

The bill is part of House Speaker Gib Lewis's plan to solve the $3.5 billion budget deficit crisis through spending cuts. Lewis repeatedly has voiced stern opposition to a tax increase.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, however, has proposed about $650 million in budget cuts combined with an increase in the sales tax rate from 4⅛ percent to 5 percent. Hobby also wants to broaden the sales tax base to cover many services not now taxed.

Addressing the demonstrators, Hobby called the current special legislative session the most important during his nearly 14 years in office.

"I can't just offhand count the sessions, special and regular, that have occurred during that time. But I do know that this is the most crucial one for the quality of life and the future of this state that I have ever been involved in," Hobby said.

With the demonstrators chanting, "More revenue, no cuts," Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, said it was time for state leaders to follow the example of Alamo commander William B. Travis.

"We're going to have to draw a line and say none shall cross it," Brooks said.

"We can't balance the state budget and put all of the shortfall on the backs of the disabled ... and say, 'You suffer and die and we'll get back to you later.' We cannot let that happen," Brooks said.

Barrientos called the House bill "unacceptable," and said he couldn't understand how it got enough support to pass.

TEXAS/REGIONAL

Former trooper drops lawsuit against DPS officials

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Former state trooper James Wade says he dropped his $18 million suit against the Department of Public Safety because of his political victory as sheriff and a letter he'll get from the DPS chief.

State District Judge Arthur Lester signed an order Monday dismissing the case at Wade's request, deputy clerk Doris McMillan said. The suit claiming Wade was driven from his job for complaining about a ticket quota system was scheduled to be heard in court Monday.

In return for the dismissal, DPS director Col. James Adams agreed to send Wade a letter of appreciation for his 15 years of service, officials said. Wade now serves as Orange County sheriff.

Wade said the letter from Adams is more important than winning a damage award because of the burden taxpayers would face if he won. He also said he felt relieved he didn't have to go through a lengthy and expensive trial.

"They (the defendants) said they were going to break me, having to pay the cost of getting witnesses here, living here and being away from Orange County for so long," Wade told the Beaumont Enterprise. "But I feel the people of Walker County would have given me a fair shake."

The case was first heard last February in Orange. A mistrial and a change of venue to Huntsville were granted in the case before itwas dismissed.

As a DPS trooper, Wade filed suit claiming the agency discriminated against him and violated his state civil rights when he complained that there were traffic ticket quotas.

The department reassigned him from patrol duty in Orange County to a Garland driver's license bureau — a move DPS officials said was made because they had gotten complaints Wade made homosexual advances while working and in uniform.

Wade took extended sick leave from the department for a nervous condition he said was caused by the allegations. After using the sick leave, the department fired him for not reporting for duty in Garland.

Wade said the allegations made against him regarding homosexual acts were "politically motivated" and were intended to destroy his candidacy for sheriff, he said.

"I feel I was vindicated when I was elected (in November 1984)," Wade said.

Wade first filed his suit in the summer of 1982. He beat the incumbent sheriff in the Democratic primary in a June 1984 runoff and then won in November 1984.

The suit named Lt. Chris Dorbandt, who was Wade' supervising sergeant at the time of the transfer, and Adams, who said Monday he was pleased with the dismissal.

"We've contended all along that the department's actions in this matter were correct and this dismissal by the plaintiff in the lawsuit completely vindicates the department's position and its personnel," Adams said.

Dorbandt, a DPS lieutenant in Lubbock said the dismissal was "not a big deal."

In February, Lesher declared a mistrial after nearly eight days of testimony from Wade's side. He ruled that a question Wade's attorney asked a witness could have prejudiced the jury.

Lesher granted a change of venue in May to attorneys representing DPS officials after they presented a scientific poll an expert said showed Orange County residents are prejudiced in favor of Wade.

White, Clements swap charges

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White and his opponent, former Gov. Bill Clements, are accusing each other of lacking credibility on taxes.

White says Clements has softened his pledge against new taxes and therefore broken another promise; Clements says that by supporting taxes nearly every year of his administration, White has broken his 1982 no-tax promise.

"Bill Clements says this race is about credibility. I agree. Bill Clements has none," Democrat White said Monday.

"The test of credibility is one we gladly welcome. We are confident an overwhelming majority of Texans believe Bill Clements and distrust Mark White," said Clements' press secretary, Reggie Bashur.

White, who is seeking reelection against the Republican in November, referred to a new interview in which Clements said it would be "nonsense" to completely rule out new taxes when the state budget deficit keeps growing.

"After absolutely and emphatically stating he would veto 'any and all tax or fee increases,' he has flip-flopped again," the Democratic governor said.

But Clements countered Monday that "they're trying to get me to say that I'm going to condone tax increases in the next legislative session — and I'm not. I'm absolutely convinced that ... we can take the corrective actions in the legislative session, starting in January, that will make a tax increase totally unnecessary."

With state Comptroller Bob Bullock estimating the state's deficit at $3.5 billion, White this month called a special legislative session to balance the budget. White urged lawmakers to approve a temporary sales tax increase, boosting the rate from 4⅛ percent to 5¼ percent for one year.

Clements has attacked White's plan. Even Monday, he issued a statement saying "White's answer is always raise a tax."

Since the first of the year, Clements repeatedly has vowed opposition to any new taxes.

On June 1, Clements said: "There are no ifs, ands, or buts, I am not in favor of, and I will veto any increase in taxes or new taxes."

As recently as July 31, Clements said: "I want to make one thing abundantly clear. I am opposed to any kind of new tax or increased tax. We don't need it."

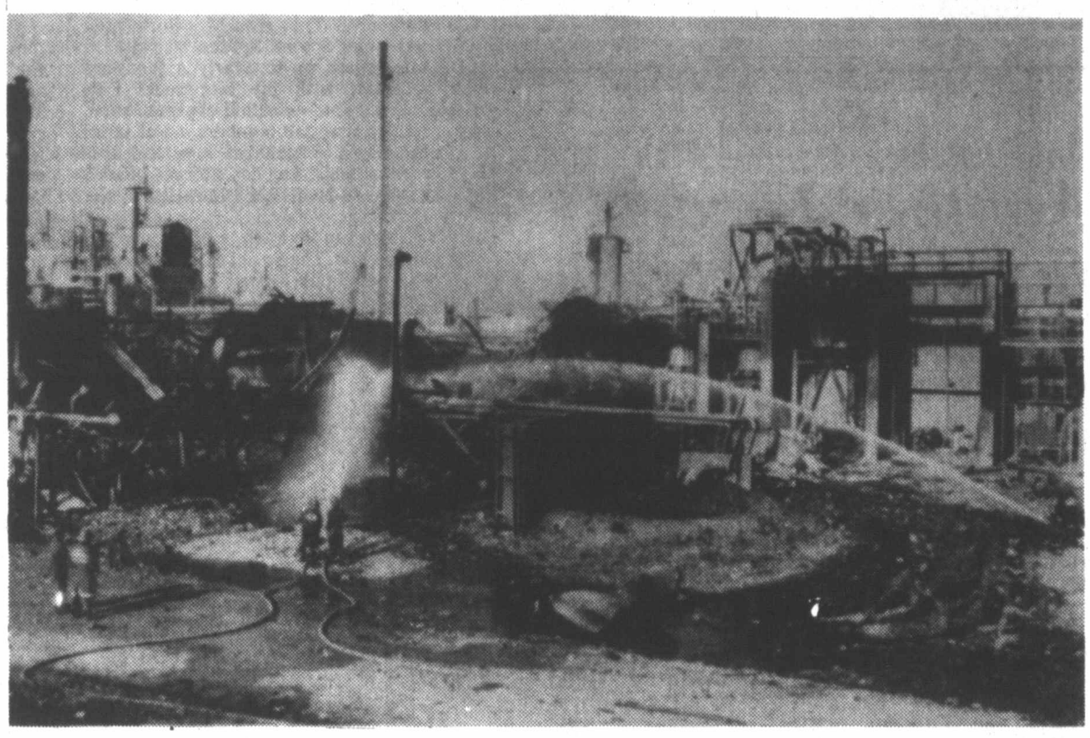

But Monday, The Dallas Morning News quoted Clements as saying the growing budget deficit means, "We have a changing target. I don't think anybody, including myself, at this point really understands what the problem is or the magnitude of the problem.

"I'm against taxes, totally against taxes. But when you start talking about what I'm going to do four or five or six years from now, that's nonsense," Clements told the newspaper.

Bashur said Clements' response in the interview involved projections that the 1987 Legislature could face a deficit of $5 billion.

White said Clements owes voters an explanation for his switch, and he likened the new position on his no-taxes pledge to the "secret plan" Clements once said he had for balancing the budget.

"He said he had a secret plan he would reveal if I called a special session of the Legislature. OK. A deal's a deal. Where's the plan?" White said.

NBC to help us remember the Alamo with new movie

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Remember the Alamo?

If you don't, NBC-TV wants to help. The television network is producing yet another version of the famous battle that led to Texas's independence from Mexico.

Texas lost the battle when an estimated 4,000 to 5,000 Mexican troops led by Gen. Lopez de Santa Anna stormed the mission on March 6, 1836. After more than a week and a half of holding off the Mexicans, 187 Texans died fighting to the last man.

However, using "Remember the Alamo" as a battle cry, other Texans killed, wounded or took prisoner virtually the entire Mexican army seven weeks later, strking by surprise while Santa Anna took his afternoon siesta.

Now, the battle of the Alamo will be fought again, only this time for NBC-TV's new season.

The producer and stars of the movie came to the real Alamo, in downtown San Antonio, on Monday to kick off the project.

Actors James Arness and Alec Baldwin and producer Stockton Briggle were honored as mayors for a day before taking a short tour through the hallowed mission.

Today, the cast and crew were in Brackettville, Texas — 125 miles west of San Antonio — for the first of 32 days of production.

Briggle is familiar with Brackettville. He appeared as an extra there when John Wayne made the film "The Alamo" in 1959.

Now, Briggle is spearheading the new three-hour movie "The Alamo: 13 Days to Glory," based on the book by his late friend, Lon Tinkle.

Arness, the star of television's "Gunsmoke" for 20 years, said, "I only do things now that capture my interest, and believe me, this caught mine. If I could line up four or five things this good, I'd work more often."

The budget for the movie will be $5.2 million. Brian Keith ("Hardcastle and McCormack") is cast as Davy Crockett, and Lorne Greene will portray Sam Houston.

The person to portray Santa Anna is expected to be decided on later this week.

"We had hoped to cast Ricardo Montalbon, but the scheduling didn't work out," Briggle said. "Surprisingly, some Latin actors did not want the part because of Santa Anna's reputation for ruthlessness."

Baldwin ("Knots Landing") is excited about his part as Col. William Barret Travis.

"I really see him as a pivotal character in the story, and a very complex man," Baldwin said. "Reading about him and the others, I got very intrigued about why they did what they did."

One of the more enduring legends of the Alamo is that Col. Travis drew a line with his sword and asked all who would die with him to cross the line. All crossed the line except for one man, who fled from the Alamo instead.

Everyone connected with the movie predicts this will be the most accurate potrayal.

"We took liberties with a couple of scenes, making up dialogue that might have occurred," Briggle said. "Otherwise, this is as authentic as we can make it."

Off beat

Keeping myself together

I did something evil last week.

I gesticulated.

There, I was, talking with this guy about land in far northern Roberts County and to help me describe how Roberts and Hansford County are kitty-corner to each other, I reached my hand up high and pointed to the upper left-hand corner of the wall.

"You know, it's up there. Like that," I said, hoping the man on the other end of the telephone line knew what I was talking about.

Luckily, the only people who saw me were my co-workers who were too busy with their own work to bring anything to my attention.

But, if my mother had seen me flailing my arms about like that, she'd have disinherited me for sure.

Mom hates it when I include my hands in conversation. While she's never gone so far as to tell me to sit on my hands when I talk (which, to me, would look stupider than waving them about) she has tried to stop my sign langauge by making me feel guilty about it.

"You'll never have any friends if you keep waving your hands like that," she'd say.

Of course, that admonition went straight over my head because it didn't sound any different that her other guilt trips: "You'll never have any friends if you don't clean your room." "You'll never have any friends if you slouch." "You'll never have any friends if you eat roast beef with your salad fork."

When that alone didn't work, she'd try to get more specific. Her favorite line was "You've got to stop gesturing so much. Do you want people to think you're Jewish?"

Not really, Mom, unless you know some good-looking rich Jewish guys.

Mom never broke me of my gesturing habit, and I doubt she ever will. My hands have now become so important to my ability to communicate that I simply cannot brush them aside.

I often joke that, as a newspaper reporter, I can't communicate unless I'm behind a typewriter (or a VDT terminal). And there's an increasing number of incidents to prove that one-liner to be true.

I work with words. My work area is littered with dictionaries, thesauruses, spelling guides, crossword puzzles and syndicated Scrabble games. The right word can make the difference between an award-winning story and a libel suit. Sometimes in even the most trivial conversations, I sit dumbfounded for minutes trying to come up with the perfect word to express what I'm trying to say. I worry that someone might think I'm being "obtruse." We media people are very self-conscious when it comes to words.

Most of my co-workers can cover their self-consciousness adequately. But as for me, the more self-consscious I get, the more nervous I become. It never manifests itself when it's supposed to. I hardly ever get stage-fright when I do a play or get behind a microphone because I simply put on another character. But get me into a simple conversation and my insides just unravel.

Of course, I also get nervous because I'm still haunted by all Mom's warnings about never having any friends.

Naturally, all this nervous energy needs some sort of release, and with me, that comes through my mouth or through my hands. So, I have two choices: I can either stutter and stammer so badly that nobody knows what I'm saying or I can start gesturing and run the risk of knocking over my coffee or slapping somebody.

It's a good thing I don't smoke.

So, please don't feel threatened if we're talking and my hands start going every which way. Gesticulating doesn't add any special meaning to my talk. It's just a way to keep myself from falling to pieces.

Just don't tell Mom.

Reason 1 on why you should shop your hometown merchant: When I was on vacation, I took my car to the Chrysler place in Oklahoma City to have my air conditioner fixed. The mechanic took one quick glance at the engine (and my Texas auto tag) and said "Compressor: $400." Naturally Mom wanted me to get one while I was there because OKC has 500,000 more people and than Pampa and that supposedly increases the chances of finding a compessor for a 1982 Horizon.

I didn't listen to my mother and chose instead to go the the Chrysler place in Pampa where the mechanic fixed the air conditioner by moving some wires and told me I need to spend $88 to repair a leak in my air conditioner.

Nuerosurgeon ordered to enter a drug rehabilitation program

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — U.S. District Judge Halbert Woodward ordered a West Texas neurosurgeon accused of distributing and manufacturing methamphetamines to be admitted into a drug rehabilitation program and held in lieu of $25,000 bond.

Dr. William G. Evans, 62, must stay at the rehabilitation unit at St. Mary's Hospital until Woodward orders otherwise and until a committee dealing with impaired physicians decides he is ready to leave, Woodward ruled Monday.

Evans remained in the Lubbock County jail Monday evening.

The neurosurgeon was arrested earlier this month on charges he sold seven ounces of methamphetamines to undercover agents during four transactions in late July and early August.

Authorities said they confiscated more than two pounds of the drug from Evans' car and found large quantities of ingredients and lab equipment.

Authorities said they also found under Evans' bed a pistol with the serial number scratched off.

Evans acknowledged on Friday, the first day of his hearing, that he had been using cocaine and methamphetamines and said he has performed surgeries during the last 10 months while taking the drugs, the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal reported.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Another burden for public schools

Why is it that tax-supported schools do such a poor job of imparting basic skills such as reading, writing, ciphering and a modicum of critical thinking to their charges? The primary reason, of course, is that they are government-supported near-monopolies facing little effective competition of the sort that tends to bring out the best in people. But there are other reasons.

One reason tax-supported schools have such trouble handling the basics is that, as government bodies, they are called upon repeatedly to be the instruments of whatever cause or fad is popular among political leaders at a given time. Over the years, schools have been expected to end racial segregation and hostility, clarify values, teach traditional values, promote civic virtue, be the bulwark of democracy, impart information about sex, cease imparting information about sex, promote brotherhood, prepare youngsters to participate in government, impart piety, cease imparting piety, teach tolerance, make youngsters physically fit....and on and on.

There is hardly a fleeting enthusiasm of recent years that political leaders have not tried to smuggle into the curriculum. The kids are the hope of the future, after all — and such handy guinea pigs. With such a full agenda, it's no wonder there's so little time for reading, writing and arithmetic.

And now, if the White House has its way, public schools will be called upon to end drug abuse too. The proposal floating around the administration calls for $100 million in grants to school districts that "offer a plan to reduce and eventually end the narcotics problem."

Talk about ambitious!

Scuttlebut in Washington is that this one was cooked up quickly as a counterproposal to a Democrat-backed "comprehensive" program that would cost $2 to $3 billion and also have little or no chance of ending drug abuse. But Republican legislators are reported to be saying, "I want to co-sponsor a drug bill," and the administration needed something to be labeled as a drug bill, and the kids are so handy, so...well, you know the rest.

The program, if implemented, won't end drug abuse, of course. It satisfies the political urge to be perceived to be doing something, even if that something is useless or counterproductive. It if also detracts from what is supposed to be the schools' primary mission — imparting basic knowledge and promoting the ability to think critically and independently...well, that's politics.

So if, five years or 10 years from now, another highly-publicized commission issues another pessimistic report with mixed-up phrases like "tide of mediocrity," you'll know at least one of the reasons the schools haven't been doing the job. They won't have had time. They'll have been too busy saving society from itself.

Japan and Soviet buildup

TOKYO — As every reader of American newspapers knows, Soviet Premier Gorbachev is eager to limit nuclear arms, and it's Ronald Reagan who is the hardnose. Congressional doves like Teddy Kennedy are teaming up with such Third World figures as India's Rajiv Gandhi and Sweden's Ingvar Carlsson to try to knock a little sense into our saber-rattling president.

But if so, why did a worried Western military observer here recently describe the increase in Soviet air power in northeast Asia as "astronomical"? That nice Mr. Gorbachev has built Soviet fighter strength in this region up to nearly a thousand aircraft, with the late-model Fulcrums yet to come but expected soon. Add to that 350 bombers, 80 of them Backfires, which practice low-altitude attacks. And don't forget the 165 Soviet SS-20 IRBM's installed in the Far East.

Keep an eye on naval developments, too. The Soviet Pacific Fleet is the best and largest of the Soviet Union's four, with somewhere between a third and a half of all the Red Navy's vessels. Boasting 840 ships, including two aircraft carriers, it regularly plies the waters between Vladivostok and its base at Vietnam's Cam Ranh Bay — perhaps the best harbor in the Far East. And recently Soviet diplomats have been seeking "fishing rights" from the mini-states of the central Pacific (Vanuatu has already signed a contract), so the hammer and sickle will henceforth be seen much more often all over that mighty ocean.

Even if you can afford to forget these things, President Reagan can't. He has sworn to defend this nation, and our mutual defense treaty with Japan is one of the cornerstones of our own protection. Even now, U.S. Ambassador to Japan Mike Mansfield warns that "the mission of the U.S. Seventh Fleet out here is too big for its capabilities." Yet Congress snipes merrily away at the Pentagon budget, bragging that it has amputated $30 or $40 billion from Mr. Reagan's request — money that politicians such as Senator Kennedy naturally have no intention of returning to the taxpayers, but which they will now slosh liberally over the usual recipients of their largesse.

But is Japan itself doing enough in its own defense? Much more than you may think, says Ambassador Mansfield. That famous one-percent-of-GNP limit on defense expenditures doesn't include (as our own defense budget does) such costly items as military pensions; if it did, defense would account for 1.6 percent of Japan's GNP today. Moreover, Japan contributes more than a billion dollars a year toward the upkeep of the 55,000 U.S. military personnel in these islands — nearly five times, per capita, what West Germany contributed to maintain our forces there in 1982 (the last year for which figures are available).

What, then, about trade? Our current $50-billion trade deficit with Japan is "intolerable," Mansfield agrees. But how much of this is Japan's fault? When the average GM car costs $13,500, can Americans be blamed for looking elsewhere? Or can the Japanese be criticized for meeting the demand?

Another thing: Look at the East Asian nations (Japan included) that are winning the competitive battle for American markets, and you will see people who concentrate on working together for a common goal. By contrast, the American economy resembles Saturday night in Clancey's Bar. Labor is forever at business's throat, and whenever business comes up for air, Congress jacks up its taxes and throws in a few new regulations. American business could compete far more effectively if it weren't treated at home like a dangerous criminal.

What America does have the right to demand of Japan is access to Japanese markets. And here — as witness the recent agreement on semiconductor chips — progress is being made. Now if we could just persuade Mamasan to try our oranges....

A legal write to laugh

Occasionally, I do book reviews. I don't review my own books (currently eight in print) because that would be like running a free ad. (They are available in all bookstores and many chiropractors' offices.)

Basically I try to help struggling authors who I feel would be much more important — and thus much more intelligent and rich — if only the reading public had the opportunity to know more of these people.

One such author is Robert L. (Bob) Steed, an Atlanta lawyer who thinks he can write. ("I'm half-lawyer and half-wit," says Steed.) Regardless (I still think "irregardless" should be a word), lawyer/writer Steed is out with his second collection of humorous columns he writes for The Atlanta Constitution, the Market Bulletin, and for his wife, whom he describes as a "dark, severe woman."

The book is entitled "Money, Power and Sex — A Self-Help Guide for All Ages." It was published by the Mercer University Press. The book has 139 pages and sells for approximately what the author can get.

When I was asked to comment on the book by the publisher, I said, with no hesitation, "Bob Steed knows as much about money, power and sex as Boy George knows about testosterone."

Griffin B. Bell, the former attorney general of the United States, had a similar comment. He said, "Don't buy this book. It will only encourage him. Steed's ego is already such that he has group photos taken of himself."

Said author Pat Conroy of Steed: "The funniest legal mind since Richard Nixon."

After reading Steed's book, I came to the conclusion it has a bad title. The book is really not a self-help guide to money, power and sex; it is a hilarious lampooning of those three little items to which we all aspire.

— Steed on traveling abroad (money): "Never let your wife have her own traveler's checks. It is amazing how concerned about a spouse's health a wife will get when she realizes she is in a foreign country and that a dead husband cannot carry large purchases or countersign traveler's checks."

— Steed at the 1984 Democratic convention, which (gasp) nominated a woman for vice-president (power): "The first time I heard the name Geraldine Ferraro, I thought of Flip Wilson's sports car."

— Steed on "Boy George" (sex): (He) may be living proof of the rumor, some years back, that Tiny Tim and Phyllis Diller were more than 'just friends.'"

— Steed on Dr. Ruth (more sex): "This lascivious Lilliputian is the star of a show redundantly titled, "Good Sex." After one viewing, it occurred to me that asking Dr. Ruth about good sex is like asking the Japanese for tips on World War II. I'm much more interested in Joan Collins' views on the subject.

"But there is that diminutive doctor... crooning things as 'Vat I vant you to do is buy a rubber jumpsuit, some schmall whips and a little trampoline and ven your husband comes home at night... ' It's enough to make the League of Decency tremble like a bird dog on the end of a diving board."

I am a Steed fan. I wish he would quit practicing law and go into writing full time.

"Funny," says Steed, "my partners and clients have the same wish."

"Money, Power and Sex, etc." is a hoot. And it should be. Steed's friends have been discussing for years his amazing resemblance to an owl.

Jesse and his Latin American thugs

By Don Graff

Poor Jesse Helms.

It seems something crucial is missing for North Carolina's senior senatorial scourge unless he has some Latin American thug to be speaking up for in opposition to the position of his own government.

The thug of the moment is Gen. Augusto Pinochet, the president of Chile whose claim to political legitimacy rests on bullets, not ballots. Of late, Reagan administration policymakers have been taking a dim view of Pinochet's blatantly brutal governing style and his resistance to a transfer of power to an elected regime.

The view got very dim indeed recently when Pinochet's troops reportedly incinerated a couple of young opponents. Washington registered disapproval by having U.S. Ambassador Harry G. Barnes Jr. attend the funeral.

So guess who promptly turns up in Chile? Jesse Helms, of course, publicly backing Pinochet and accusing the ambassador of disloyalty to his own president. Well, that murky business sputters on, with allegations of confidential State Department information possibly being leaked to Chile via a Helms associate, and Helms counter-accusing State of carrying on a vendetta against him. Et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

Our point is, however, the Helms taste in Latins in general. Before Pinochet, some may remember, there was "Major Bob," as he was familiarly but far from affectionately known around the American embassy in El Salvador.

Full name Roberto D'Aubuisson. He was the fiery right-wing leader who was narrowly defeated in the 1984 Salvadoran presidential election.

D'Aubuisson had long been linked with the "death squads" that were rapidly taking care of El Salvador's overpopulation problem. If he wasn't directing their operations, he certainly knew who was. He also played a central, if still ambiguous, role in a reported 1984 plot to assassinate the U.S. ambassador to El Salvador.

Helms, naturally, was D'Aubuisson's most outspoken — and eventually virtually only — defender on Capitol Hill. Major Bob, the senator argued, was getting a bum publicity rap and had been denied the Salvadoran presidency by the U.S. Embassy's interference in the elections on his opponent's behalf.

When the reported plot against the ambassador came to light, it was none other than Helms who, at the specific request of the Reagan administration, relayed the word to D'Aubuisson to cool it.

Major Bob has maintained he knew nothing about the nasty business until he got that word. But the evidence strongly suggests that at the very least he knew to whom to pass the word. The plot was cooled.

D'Aubuisson has maintained a much lower profile since that incident. In September of last year, he stepped down as leader of his party, the National Republican Alliance, reportedly because he had become an embarrassment to the wealthy business figures who are the bankrollers.

D'Aubuisson still holds a party office, making him responsible for the training of its upcoming leaders, and according to some reports still has a decisive say in party affairs. But as a potential king — if not kingmaker — of the Salvadoran political hill, he appears to have ended up a loser.

The same may turn out to be the fate of Jesse Helms' current favorite. Pinochet, who seized power in a bloody coup in 1973, now says he intends to hang on until 1997, which would be the end of his third eight-year term.

The inability of the civilian political opposition in Chile to get its act together might make that possible. But there have been sounds of waffling of late from some of Pinochet's colleagues in the military leadership, whose support is essential if he is to carry on.

For one reason or another, Pinochet's days could be numbered — and the number may be far lower than anyone at this point might think.

But if this Latin thug also turns out to be a loser, don't you worry about Jesse Helms.

On the record so far, he'll rapidly be digging up another to champion.

Protest delivered in DEA agent beating

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The United States filed a diplomatic protest with Mexico charging a U.S. narcotics agent was arrested and beaten by state police in Guadalajara, and the government said it was investigating the allegations.

The note was delivered Monday night to Foreign Minister Bernardo Sepulveda by U.S. Charge d'Affaires Morris Busby, the ranking American diplomat in Mexico. The contents of the note were not released.

At issue is the detention last Wednesday of Drug Enforcement Administration speical agent Victor Cortez by Jalisco State Judicial Police in Guadalajara, 360 miles west of the capital.

A U.S. Embassy news release said Cortez "was illegally detained, iterrorgated and tortured by Jalisco state police officers."

Mexican officials last week said Cortez was detained by the state police, but strongly denied that he was tortured. They said he was released after three while U.S. officials say he was held six hours.

"On behalf of the U.S. government, Charge Busby protested these unprovoked, brutal, criminal acts against an American official accredited to the government of Mexico," the news release said.

It also said Busby requested an immediate investigation to "apprehend, prosecute and punish, without delay, those found to be responsible."

In a brief statement, the Foreign Ministry acknowledged Monday night it received the protest, and said the Federal Attorney General's Office has begun an investigation to determine what happened.

Earlier Monday, the Attorney General's office said a group of its special agents were questioning the state policemen involved in the Cortez case and that results of its investigation would be announced in 48 hours.

The Cortez incident occurred while President de la Madrid was in Washington meeting with President Reagan to promise increase cooperation in the joint anti-drug war.

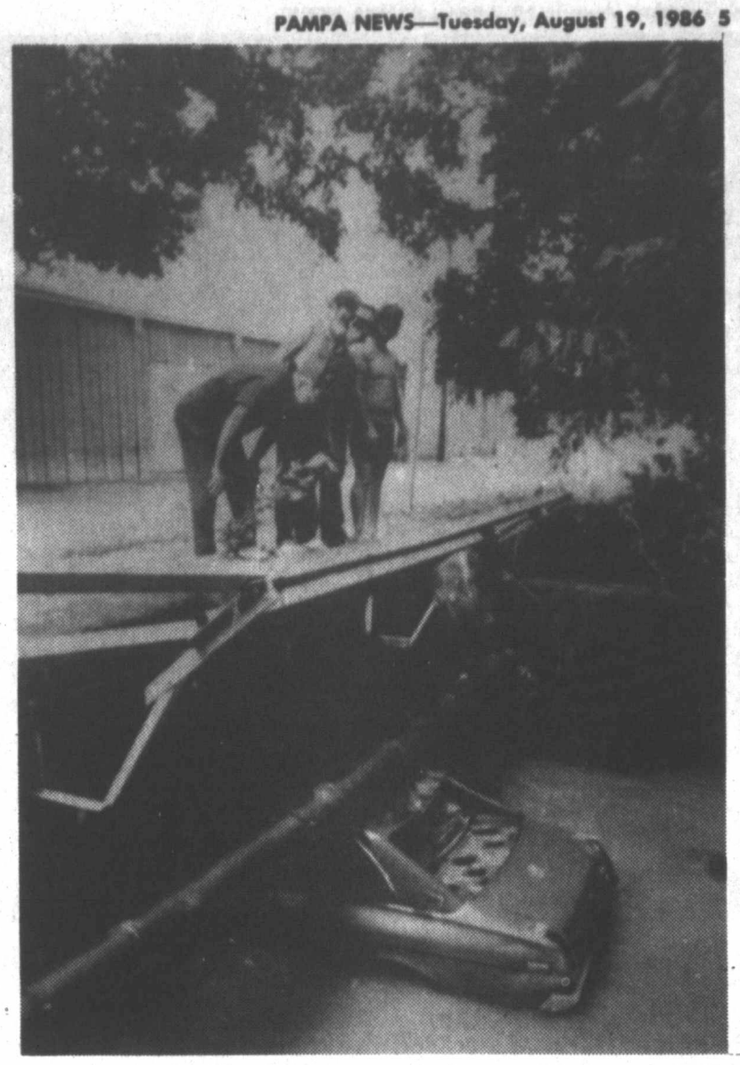

"We have given them the proof and now we will wait to see what they do about it. Nobody wants to rock the boat at this point," said one embassy official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Over the weekend, DEA chief John Lawn said Cortez was beaten and subjected "electrical shock treatment" and had numerous contusions on his body. He said the interrogaters wanted to find bstantial quantities of cocaine over the past month."

The incident occurred in the same city where another DEA agent, Enrique Camarena Salazar, was beaten to death by drug traffickers in February 1985. U.S. officials say he was abducted by state policemen who delivered him to the traffickers.

Earlier in the day, State Department deputy spokesman Charles Redman said in Washington the protest included detailed information about the injuries Cortez suffered.

"The mistreatment of an American drug agent has serious implications for U.S.-Mexican cooperation on the narcotics issue, particularly at a time when vigorous efforts are being undertaken to improve border security and stem the flow of narcotics from Mexico to the United States," Redman said.

Bentsen skeptical about Mexican cooperation

EDINBURG, Texas (AP) — U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen says Mexico's poor performance in tracking down an American drug agent's killer makes him doubt its latest pledge to crack down on drug smugglers.

And the torture that another U.S. drug agent reportedly suffered in Guadalajara last week makes Mexico's anti-drug commitment even more untenable, the Texas Democrat said in a press conference Monday.

President Reagan announced "Operation Alliance" while meeting last week in Washington with Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid, who pledged his government's support in combating drug smuggling.

Texas will get an additional 365 federal agents to battle border drug-smuggling under the $266 million program.

At the same time of the presidents' meeting, however, U.S. officials say Drug Enforcement Administration agent Victor Cortez Jr. was tortured by Mexican authorities in Guadalajara. The Brownsville, Texas, native was released last Wednesday.

The incident occurred in the same city where undercover DEA agent Enrique Camarena was kidnapped last year. Camarena was later killed, but no one has come to trial in the case.

Mexican authorities have said they will investigate fully the latest incident.

But "I'm not very excited about that commitment," Bentsen said. "I can recall the previous one when you had Enrique Camarena, when he was killed and that was done by a bunch of drug-runners.

"But there was apparent collusion with some of the law enforcement officials and to this point, we haven't seen anyone prosecuted," he added. "That doesn't give me a great deal of confidence."

Bentsen said drug smugglers are using Mexico as a "trampoline" as they move their merchandise from Colombia to the United States, and that Mexican officials sometimes cooperate with drug smugglers.

He said the United States should use "pressure and quiet negotiations" to ensure Mexico cooperates in controlling the flow of narcotics.

"I think we can slow it down and make a headway against it," he said. "You'll never be able to totally stop it."

Operation Alliance will be run out of a command center in El Paso. Federal agencies along the border will be beefed up and surveillance equipment and aircraft will be supplied.

The program began on July 1, but its announcement was delayed to coincide with the meeting between Reagan and de la Madrid. Bentsen said the program would be in full operation in 18 months.

"After having some of these initiatives not go very far in the past, I do have some healthy skepticism," Bentsen said. "But I believe the seriousness of the problem is one this time that we have a better chance of implementation."

Engine fire sends plane's passengers down chutes

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Thirty-eight people aboard a Republic Airlines DC-9 slid safely down emergency exit chutes after an engine caught fire as the plane landed at the Memphis International Airport, authorities say.

"We heard the captain say 'Move it!' in a real loud voice, and we did — down the chute," said Francene Gafford of Memphis, a passenger aboard Flight 478 from Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

The plane had made a scheduled landing at 9:50 p.m. Monday when the tower noticed flames from the left engine, said Jack Barker, spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration in Atlanta.

"Everybody got off the plane safely. There were no injuries that we know of, but a few people were probably scared to death," said fire department dispatcher Ray Tyer.

Texas school districts are due more inspection

AUSTIN (AP) — Local school districts must get more attention in the future to be sure they are adhering to the major school reforms adopted by the Legislature, the Legislative Education Board was told.

Members of LEB, including Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, made it clear Monday that lawmakers expected the Texas Education Agency to do a better job overseeing operations of school districts.

"We want to know where these districts are because we want to know where to spend our money," said Rep. Bill Haley, D-Center.

Hobby said a provision of House Bill 72, which mandated sweeping changes in Texas public schools, requires that local school districts be accredited or approved by the state education agency before receiving state school aid.

"That's why accrediting is so important that districts be identified," Hobby said. "Achieving results is required."

William V. McBride, a member of the State Board of Education, said the panel realized some districts were not using state money as directed by HB72, but that it did not have full data necessary.

"We need an up-to-date management system," McBride said.

Jon Brumley, the education board chairman, told lawmakers that the TEA would ask the 1987 Legislature for $9 million to provide a better computer and information-gathering system.

Nevertheless, State Education Commissioner William Kirby said local school districts also had been warned that they must not take away teachers' classroom instruction time with extra forms and reports.

"If our accreditation teams find school officials are requiring teachers to do too much paperwork, this will be included in their accreditation report and they can given sanctions for it," Kirby said.

Hobby asked about a budget reduction of $1.7 million by the House Appropriations Committee that would have kept the TEA from hiring about 40 employees to make school accreditation checks.

House Speaker Gib Lewis replied that the money was restored before the House's budget bill was sent to the Senate.

Woman testifies of ordeal following abduction

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — A 39-year-old woman told of a grueling eight-hour ordeal in which she said she was abducted from her home in Terlingua and raped by a Mexican man in late 1985.

Her testimony on Monday marked the first day of the trial of a man who was kidnapped from a Mexican prison and returned to Texas.

Terlingua is in thinly populated Brewster County in Texas' rugged Big Bend country along the Rio Grande, but State District Judge Alex Gonzalez of Alpine moved the trial to San Angelo, about 250 miles northeast.

Halfway through the questioning, the woman identified her alleged attacker by pointing at the defendant, Refugio Gardea Gonzalez, 22, of Jimenez, Mexico.

"It's that man in the beige shirt staring at me," she said.

The victim testified she was bound, blindfolded, gagged and forced to walk over desolate desert canyons for several hours and then was returned to her home, where she was robbed at knifepoint and raped repeatedly over an eight-hour period last Oct. 26-27.

A seven-man, five-woman jury was selected Monday morning to hear evidence in the case. The trial was to resume at 9 a.m. today.

The woman told jurors she managed to escape when she jumped from her pickup after tricking the defendant into believing she could get him additional money from her office.

Brewster County authorities chased a suspect to the Mexican border, where he abandoned the woman's pickup truck and escaped across the Rio Grande.

Mexican authorities later captured Gonzalez about four miles inside Mexico, but refused to surrender him to Texas authorities.

Gonzalez testified at an April 11 preliminary hearing that three men armed with machine guns broke into the Ojinaga, Mexico, jail and returned him to Texas, leaving him bound at a roadside park for Brewster County Sheriff George Jones to find.

The defendant's abductors still remain unidentified.

Dr. Neil Devereaux, an associate professor of Spanish at Angelo State University, is acting as official interpreter for the defendant, who does not speak English.

The woman told the jury she devised ways to leave clues that might help police find her murderer if she should be found dead in the deserted and isolated area of south Brewster County, which at 6,204 square miles is Texas' largest county, almost as big as Connecticut and Rhode Island combined.

"I scratched my fingernails through the dirt so they (police) would know where I had been. I broke a twig from a bush and put it in my pocket," she recalled.

Soviet papers front-page moratorium extension

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev's declaration that the Soviet Union will extend its nuclear test freeze until the end of 1986 was front-page news in the state-run media today, but the Kremlin was silent on the U.S. decision not to join the moratorium.

In a 35-minute speech on national television Monday night, the Soviet leader said the Soviets would continue to refrain from nuclear testing until Jan. 1 and called on the United States to reconsider its refusal to join in halting test blasts.

As before, the Reagan administration dismissed the Kremlin appeal, with spokesman Larry Speakes saying it was "not in the security interests of the United States, our friends or our allies."

All national newspapers in the Soviet Union carried the full text of Gorbachev's address on their front pages today, and Radio Moscow opened its morning broadcasts with a summary of his announcement.

Unlike the three previous announcements by the Soviet leader that Moscow would observe a unilateral ban on testing, Gorbachev did not threaten to resume test explosions when the current term expires unless Washington also quit its own testing.

Nobel laureates urge the Supreme court to ban creationism in schools

WASHINGTON (AP) — Teaching religious ideas under the label of science is harmful to scientific education, according to a group of Nobel laureates who are asking the Supreme Court to keep creationism out of the classroom.

In a friend-of-the-court brief filed Monday, 72 American winners of the Nobel Prize and 24 scientific organizations attacked a Louisiana law requiring public schools teaching evolution to teach "creation-science" as well.

"Teaching religious ideas mislabeled as science is detrimental to scientific education: It sets up a false conflict between science and religion (and) misleads our youth about the nature of scientific inquiry," the brief states.

The brief represents an extraordinary organizational effort by Murray Gell-Mann, a California Institute of Technology professor, who in 1969 won a Nobel Prize in physics.

He assembled what he called the largest group of Nobel laureates ever to support a single statement on any subject.

Evolution teaches that the Earth is billions of years old and that life forms gradually began developing millions of years ago.

Creation-science is linked closely to a literal translation of the biblical book of Genesis, teaching that the Earth and most of its life forms came into existence suddenly about 6,000 years ago.

The Louisiana Legislature in 1981 enacted a law requiring public schools to "balance" the teaching of evolution with the teaching of creationism.

A federal trial judge and the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals invalidated the law as a violation of the constitutionally required separation of church and state.

But the Supreme Court last May agreed to review the lower courts' rulings, setting the stage for its decision sometime in 1987.

In seeking Supreme Court review, Louisiana authorities had argued, "Creation-science is nonreligious ... the concept of a creator is not a necessary part of presenting creation-science and is not central to creation-science in any event."

The state's appeal asserted that "evolution and creation-science are comparably scientific," and that the 1981 law's primary effect would be to advance students' "academic freedom to receive scientific evidence."

Stephen J. Gould, professor of paleontology at Harvard University, told reporters Monday that creation-science is "just a phony new legal strategy" in an effort to get around past court rulings banning religious inculcation in public schools.

Gould called creation-science "a whitewash for a specific, particular and minority religious view in America, Bible literalism" that "belongs in homes and churches, not in legislatively mandated curricula of science courses in public schools."

Francisco J. Ayala, a professor of genetics at the University of California at Davis, appeared at the same news conference. He said, "Scientific reasoning and religious belief are distinct modes of thought. Let science and religion follow their separate courses."

Christian B. Anfinsen, 1972 Nobel Prize recipient in chemistry, said evolution and other scientific theories do not contradict the existence of God. He noted that Roman Catholic parochial schools have taught evolution for many years.

Protesters battle police in Pakistan; death toll in unrest reaches 25

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP)— Police firing tear gas charged demonstrators in Karachi, Dadu and other parts of southern Pakistan today, the sixth straight day of violent anti-government protests in which 25 people have reportedly died.

Police and paramilitary units used tear gas and baton charges to break up an opposition march in Dadu, Sind province, witnesses said.

Scattered fighting was continuing in parts of Karachi and elsewhere in Sind province. Small bands of protesters pelted police patrols with stones before fleeing up side streets as officers fired tear gas shells.

Army units were called out to assist police in several districts of Sind.

The Movement for the Restoration of Democracy (MRD) on Thursday launched nationwide demonstrations to oust President Gen. Mohammad Zia ul-Haq and force elections, and opposition leaders vowed to stage more street rallies today.

At least 15 people were reported killed and dozens injured in clashes between riot police and opposition supporters across Pakistan Monday.

Ten people were killed in earlier clashes which began Thursday.

Local reporters and other witnesses today said two police officers, two protesters and a government activist were killed Monday night at Tando Khan in Sind province during a protest march when police and protesters fired on each other.

Government officials today said an opposition supporter was also killed Monday night in Dadu when police opened fire on a crowd. Opposition officials said a second person had been killed there, but their claims could not immediately be verified.

MRD spokesman Salman Taseer said the government was resorting to force because it had lost all popular support.

"They have lost the political battle and they are now resorting to violence and brutality," he said.

Top opposition leader Benazir Bhutto remained under detention today in a jail near Karachi.

An estimated 10,000 people, some of them shouting "Shoot us! Shoot us!" marched in Lahore on Monday, but the procession broke up peacefully after a roadblock manned by hundreds of police halted it in the heart of the city.

Zia has been out of the country since the trouble began, on a Moslem pilgrimage to Mecca in Saudi Arabia.

The nationwide protests began Thursday, Pakistan's independence day, after a government crackdown that included the arrest of Miss Bhutto, the main opposition leader, and thousands of other activists.

On Monday, demostrators in Lahore shouted slogans against the United States and Zia.

Many opposition supporters contend that U.S. support has kept Zia in power since 1977, when he overthrew Miss Bhutto's father, Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto.

Zia and his appointed prime minister, Mohammad Khan Junejo, have rejected opposition demands that elections be held before those scheduled for 1990.

Report: Israel tried to steal camera spy equipment plans

CHICAGO (AP) — U.S. authorities reportedly are investigating whether Israeli military officers tried to steal plans for a sophisticated air-borne spy camera system from a surburban defense plant.

The U.S. Customs Service is investigating the alleged theft attempt, ABC News reported Monday and the Chicago Tribune said in Tuesday's editions.

The alleged scheme, the Tribune reported, was discovered May 27 when security officers at Recon-Optical Inc. in suburban Barrington stopped three Israeli air force officers as they were leaving the plant and confiscated 50,000 pages of technical drawings and notes handwritten in Hebrew.

Recon has filed a lawsuit in New York accusing the Israelis of trying to steal the technology used in a secret aerial reconnaissance system that was being developed for Israel by Recon, the Tribune said.

Jeffrey Fillman, a lawyer who represents Israel, said the accusation was invented by Recon. "When you do not have the facts or law on your side, you go out and invent something and that is what has happened here," Fillman said.

The reconnaissance system would have been more powerful than the current system, which can provide a detailed picture of someone smoking a cigarette in a public square from a jet flying at near the speed of sound more than 100 miles away, the Tribune reported.

Cattle herd may be on upswing, USDA says

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Department economists say cattle production may be ending its latest tailspin and that some herd rebuilding may be under way.

But it takes nine months of pregnancy before a cow has a calf, and another 18 months or two years before the newborn calf can grow into beef roasts, steaks and hamburger for American consumers.

A new outlook report by the department's Economic Research Service noted that the inventory of cattle and calves last Jan. 1 had dropped to 105.5 million head, the lowest in 23 years.

Further, on July 1 the inventory was down 4 percent from a year earlier, the smallest for any summer since the mid-year figures were begun in 1973.

If the cattle herd continues to decline at a 4 percent annual rate, analysts said the inventory next Jan. 1 could be around 100 million head. Not since the early 1960s has the U.S. cattle inventory been as small as it is right now. The peak was 132 million in 1975.

Always cyclical, with up years and down years, the current sell-off was stimulated by many factors: low market prices, relatively high feed costs, heavy debt among many producers and lagging consumer demand.

There have been some improvements. Record feed supplies have eased production costs, and the cutbacks by hog farmers have helped take the edge off competition from pork.

One result has been a surge of new cattle going into feedlots for marketing over the next few months. Last week the USDA reported feedlot placemements in the major beef states in July at 1.54 million head, up 43 percent from a year earlier. It was the heaviest July placement of cattle in feeding pens since 1978.

The outlook report said that while the liquidation of cattle herds may be nearing an end, inventories are expected to continue declining through 1987 and that increased production is unlikely before 1988-89, at least.

"Although the mid-year inventory does not contain state data, it appears that producers in some areas have already stabilized their herds or perhaps begun to expand them," the report said.

Most of the country has abundant forage supplies and another bumper hay crop, but the Southeast drought has had a major impact on the cattle situation.

"Livestock sales in this region have been running at near capacity as parched pastures and dwindling hay stocks forced cattle on the market early," the report said. "However, prospects of reduced cattle and beef supplies have strengthened demand for cattle to be placed on pastures in other areas."

Despite the government's 18-month whole-herd buyout program aimed at the slaughter or export of more than 1.5 million cows, heifers and calves from dairy herds, beef production is likely to drop in the last half of 1986, the report said. This fall, beef output could be down 5 percent from production in the fourth quarter of last year.

"If the drought subsides in time for the Southeast to generate pasture growth for fall and winter grazing for the remaining cattle inventory, beef cow slaughter should continue to drop this fall," the report said.

Advice To A Parent With Adult Children.
As our children become young adults, they face an enigma.
On the one hand, they would rather not think about death — and that's as it should be at their age. On the other hand, they are reminded of their parents' mortality as they see them getting older — and they become concerned: "How would I cope with a loss" ... "What would I need to know" ... "What arrangements would Mom or Dad want."
These are some of the nagging thoughts they may have, whether they say so or not.
One of the most loving things parents can do for their children is to take care of their own final arrangements — in advance — writing down vital family information that will be needed, along with wishes and instructions, and providing the children with copies.
Complete pre-arranged funeral plans are now available that can even be pre-paid, sparing your children that expense someday.
Our booklets on funeral pre-planning provide everything you need to take care of this caring, thoughtful step. Call now for your free copies — or mail this coupon.

PRI endures for more than half a century

By SOLL SUSSMAN
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — On many rural roads in Mexico, the signs that caution against speeding are not posted by the government but by the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party.

No town is too small to be without a headquarters for the official party, known as the PRI, and its ever-present national colors of red, green and white.

The PRI and the government work hand in hand, in control of Mexico without a break for the past 57 years, and despite their separate structures, to most they are the same.

In Chihuahua, Mexico's largest state on the border with Texas and New Mexico, protesters from the conservative National Action Party charge that vote fraud deprived them of an election win this summer.

In Oaxaca, in southern Mexico and the most impoverished of the nation's 31 states, leftists charge the same.

Pockets of support for opposition parties of the left or right are scattered about Mexico. The PRI is everywhere.

The party is a chameleon scampering across the political landscape to endure and control since its founding in 1929, a response to the violence of the Mexican Revolution from 1910 to 1921 that claimed the lives of one of every seven Mexicans.

Now, in a Mexico that is rapidly changing from a rural, agriculturally based nation to an urban, industrialized one, it is searching once again for the shifts that can absorb, co-opt or simply overwhelm the opposition.

And it must do so in a climate of recession, without the promise of ever-improving standards of living that carried the PRI from the mid-1950s through the 1970s when the "Mexican Miracle" of 6 percent to 7 percent annual growth was the norm.

The PRI's strength is built on mass organizations of labor and campesinos. It traditionally has had less success with the middle class, the most rapidly growing part of Mexican social structure and the least susceptible to old-fashioned techniques.

The longstanding promise of social peace through one-party rule may not be enough.

"For many non-Mexican observers, the party's name was simply incomprehensible; 'revolutionary' and on top of that 'institutional,' an authentic contradiction in terms," wrote political analyst Arnaldo Cordova. "For Mexicans, it did not mean anything but that the heroic era of the revolution had passed on to a new life."

Through a combination of money, political patronage, a strong grassroots organization and domination of the news media, the PRI has managed to fend off challenges before.

Most important, according to its political foes, the PRI simply steals unwinnable elections.

The PRI never has lost the presidency or a governorship since it was founded.

A presidential election is scheduled every six years, with the next in 1988, and no serious challenge to the ruling party is expected at the national level.

Electoral reform laws adopted in 1977 in response to growing voter apathy led to some control of town and city halls by minority parties. By 1983, National Action defeated the PRI in important municipal elections in Chihuahua and Durango states, including Ciudad Juarez, the country's fifth biggest city.

Since then, in vote after vote, the PRI has won the vast majority of state and local elections.

There have been charges — backed up by evidence, in some cases filmed — that old-fashioned "alchemy," as voter fraud is called here, was once again in style. The party's critics charge that the nation's leaders were unwilling to take the threat that opposition control of a city could lead to PRI loss of a statehouse.

Indeed, the expectations of fraud are so high that few believe it even if the PRI wins honestly. The party's problem, observed one top-level supporter, may be that "it can conquer but can't convince."

PRI leaders maintain they simply were caught unprepared in 1983. They attribute their victories since to better mobilization of the party's vast grassroots network to turn out the vote and to choosing candidates on the basis of appeal and qualifications, not simple cronyism.

Cordova wrote that, before the electoral reforms, "citizens had no other option than to vote for the PRI or to not vote, and the latter is what they generally did and to a great extent continue doing."

But he concluded that the importance may be that elections, no matter who wins, may bring a more democratic system to Mexico.

Pablo Gonzalez Casanova, one of Mexico's most respected social scientists, agrees that winning elections may not be the sole goal for minority parties in Mexico, where all know the PRI and the government will keep the ultimate control.

He said elections "are important as a logic for representation, as a form of pressure, as a base for parliamentary criticisms. They serve (or can serve) to recognize discontent, malaise, the opposition to people or policies ... to measure forces of real groups, factions or parties."

Whatever the adjustment, PRI and government leaders insist that Mexico will not be pressed to adopt "foreign models" for democracy. They say democracy exists within a national consensus, and there is no need to borrow a two-party system similar to the United States'.

The demonstrations persist in Chihuahua, where National Action supporters have staged hunger strikes and blockaded international bridges repeatedly between Juarez and El Paso, Texas, to publicize their call for the July 6 elections to be annulled.

Data shows Dallas-Fort Worth area may overtake Houston-Galveston

HOUSTON (AP) — The Dallas-Fort Worth area will overtake Houston-Galveston and become the state's largest metropolis by 1988, a Baylor University Forecasting Service study indicates.

Some 200,000 people will move to the Dallas-Fort Worth area in the next two years, helping to push its population to 3.6 million, the study said. The Houston-Galveston area, meanwhile, will increase by only 8,000 to 3.5 million residents by 1988.

Bernard Weinstein, chief of the Center for Enterprising at Dallas' Southern Methodist University, agreed with Baylor's analysis: "It's bound to happen."

Statistics released by the U.S. Census Bureau two weeks ago show the Dallas-Fort Worth area is already close to outdoing its southern rival — now, only 111,700 fewer folks live in Dallas-Fort Worth than in Houston-Galveston.

The seven-county Houston-Galveston metropolitan area clung to its eighth-place national ranking, according to the Census figures.

But ninth-place Dallas-Fort Worth is in the wings if the Houston area cannot recover from an oil-related recession and high unemployment, experts say.

The Houston area will lose 94,000 residents this year, while the Dallas area enjoys a net in-migration of 55,000, according to Weinstein's forecasts.

Not all population experts are willing to give up on Houston.

The Texas Department of Health and the Texas Water Development Board are projecting the Houston area will still be ahead in population by the year 2000.

Private rocket builders get calls from satellite builders

WASHINGTON (AP) — Satellite owners, on official notice that there might not be room for their expensive payloads on the space shuttle, are flocking to rocket builders to inquire about buying launch services.

"We have been approached by seven companies for possible launches," said Jack Isabel of General Dynamics, which builds the Atlas Centaur rocket. "That includes anywhere from 20 to 25 satellites."

A spokesman for Denver-based Martin Marietta, which makes the Titan family of rockets for the Air Force, said, "We have had numerous inquiries from satellite production companies as to the availability of versions of Titan to launch their satellites."

Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole, at a news conference Monday, said Martin Marietta had received "formal requests" from satellite companies to launch 21 satellites and that Transpace Carriers Inc., a Lanham, Md., firm that has marketing rights to McDonnell Douglas's Delta rocket, has finalized contracts for launching two.

President Reagan announced last Friday that the shuttle is getting out of the commercial launching business and that only 14 of 44 satellites scheduled for shuttle launch will find space on the orbiter fleet when it flies again in 1988.

The others will have to find a way into orbit among private launch companies in this country or overseas.

The Martin Marietta spokesman said "we have been waiting for such an announcement ... and we are now weighing the ramifications of it." He said the company, which is finishing production of 15 Titan 34Ds for the Air Force and refurbishing 13 Titan 2s, has not decided whether to enter the civilian market.

Isabel of San Diego-based General Dynamics said, "In the last several weeks, we have given them (the seven companies) preliminary costs and schedule data for the Atlas Centaur vehicle. We would think in the very near future, perhaps between now and the end of the year, to give them a final package."

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration had almost completely phased out use of expendable rockets to launch satellites, relying on the shuttle until the Challenger explosion in January put a halt to all launches for two years.

The Titan 34D can lift a 4,200 pound payload to the 22,300 mile-high orbit at which communications satellites operate, more than the Delta. The Atlas Centaur can lift 5,200 pounds to orbit.

Vatican punishment of U.S. theologian seen as warning

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Vatican, in punishing a prominent American priest-theologian, is declaring strict limits for all American Catholics on dissent and sexual practices.

The target of the church action announced Monday, Catholic University of America professor Charles Curran, was decreed unfit to be a Catholic theologian because of too-liberal views on sexual issues — a verdict that will cost him his job at the Vatican-controlled university.

But there was a wider warning, too.

Curran had complained he was being singled out unfairly, that his views deemed unacceptable by church leaders on birth control, abortion, divorce and other sexual issues were publicly shared by numerous other Catholic theologians.

Indeed, polls have shown that many of America's 52 million Roman Catholics tend to ignore church declarations on such matters.

The Vatican's response, sent to Curran by Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger after approval by Pope John Paul II, didn't directly address the objection that he is but one of many.

Ratzinger merely quoted from a letter he sent Curran last fall, stating: "The authorities of the church cannot allow the present situation to continue in which the inherent contradiction is prolonged that one who is to teach in the name of the church in fact denies her teaching."

That sentence came after two pages of arguing that neither Curran nor any other Catholic has a right to such dissent.

Divorce, after a church-sanctioned, consummated marriage, is wrong, Ratzinger told him. Abortion is an "unspeakable crime," he said, quoting from church documents.

Attempts to reach Curran, a former president of the Catholic Theological Society of America, by telephone Monday night were unsuccessful.

He has said repeatedly he is "a committed Catholic" who simply believes such church-banned practices as artificial birth control, divorce and even abortion can be morally chosen in limited circumstances.

His punishment, the first of its kind against an American, came despite objections from hundreds of his fellow theologians who had said they would be "profoundly disturbed" by it.

All but daring the Vatican to take them on, more than 700 members of the Catholic Theological Society and the College Theology Society had signed a letter telling Ratzinger that if Curran's views were "so incompatible with Catholic teaching that he must be declared no longer a Catholic theologian, justice and fairness would dictate that other Catholic theologians who hold similar views should be treated in exactly the same fashion."

The last time such punishment was meted out publicly was in 1979 against internationally known Swiss theologian Hans Kung.

Car bomb kills 10, wounds scores in Iranian capital

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — A car laden with 50 pounds of TNT exploded in one of the main squares of Iran's capital today, killing 10 people and wounding scores, Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said.

The blast, in Tehran's Ferdowsi Square, came in the middle of the morning rush hour in one of the most crowded areas of the city, the agency said in a dispatch monitored in Nicosia.

The 8:20 a.m. explosion damaged a bus, four automobiles and seven motorcycles, injuring their passengers, IRNA said. The car-bomb blast also shattered windows in nearby buildings.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the attack, but IRNA blamed "agents of imperialism," a designation used by Iran's Moslem fundamentalist authorities to describe the various anti-government underground groups active in the country.

Government's advice hard to take

WASHINGTON (AP) — When a new study raised doubts over whether automobile lap belts save lives, motorists were advised to install shoulder belts in back seats. But it turns out that's not so easily done.

Tracking down a spare shoulder belt requires dogged persistence and a bit of luck.

Cars have been required since 1972 to have reinforced anchor locations so rear-seat shoulder belts can be installed.

But the automakers have never been required to furnish the belts or keep them in stock and few dealers know anything about them, industry officials said.

The National Transportation Safety Board finding, made public last week, that lap belts were the source of severe injuries to wearers in certain crashes sent safety-conscious motorists scurrying for ways to replace the lap belts in rear seats of their cars.

But these car owners find little help from those who sold them their car in the first place, according to safety experts and auto industry officials, .

"It's a long hunt (for a retrofit belt system) ... and for the near term there is not a good answer," said Clarence Ditlow, director of the Center for Auto Safety, a non-governmental watchdog group.

Before releasing its report, the NTSB asked its 10 regional offices to try to retrofit agency cars — a mix of various U.S. makes and models — with the shoulder belts and found it virtually impossible, says Barry Sweedler, a staff member of the NTSB.

Only the agency's Atlanta office was successful after finding a local body shop that had a connection with an Oklahoma seat belt supplier.

Sweedler suggested people try auto parts stores such as J.C. Whitney in Chicago, which he says offers a retractable shoulder belt system in its 1986 catalogue for $22 apiece. A customer service representative at J.C. Whitney said, however, she didn't know about any such belts. Calls to other company officials were not returned.

Meanwhile, spokesmen for Ford and Chrysler said there is little they can do since they never have had any shoulder belt systems that can be installed in cars already sold.

"We are investigating the whole issue and have got a lot of people looking at it," said Ford spokesman Bill Peacock.

Passing This Test Could Mean Failure.

Kids who pass this conventional school eye test may see the blackboard fine from the back of the room. But how about up close? Studies prove your child may be one of 15 million school-aged children with reading disabilities due to a visual deficiency this test can't detect.

Is your child giving you any of these early detection warnings?

- Book held only 7 or 8 inches from the eyes
- Makes errors when copying
- Uses finger to trace lines in his books
- Writes or prints poorly
- Short attention span while reading
- Closes or covers one eye

Proper vision therapy using a series of vision exercises and sometimes combined with proper corrective lenses can successfully help many of these problems. Don't take chances with your child's sight. Contact Dr. Simmons who specializes in early detection. It's just too important to risk a failing grade.

Austin researcher seeks to preserve bats

By MELISSA FLETCHER
The San Antonio Light

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — "Wear a neck scarf," said a friend of mine when she learned of my proposed trip to a local bat cave.

She was just trying to be funny, but her remark says much about the popular conception of bats: blood-sucking, satanic creatures, they fly through the night, ready to pounce on the milky throats of maidens.

Later, at the bat cave, I look down at the small, furry animal shifting gently in my hand at this cave located just outside San Antonio. Primarily a nursery roost, the cave holds from 20 to 40 million Mexican free-tailed bats, and is the largest bat colony in the world. Its inhabitants stay here in the warmer months, giving birth during a two-to-three week period in June, then migrate to caves in southern Mexico in winter.

In August, when the offspring have learned to fly, the air is black with bats. It is an airborne pageant that occurs regularly from March through October, beginning around dusk and carrying on late into the night. At dawn the bats return, dive-bombing into the cave a speed. Each night they fly miles away from their cany to the illuminated bn Antonio, consuming more than a quarter of a million Antonio, consuming more than a quarter of a million pounds of insects, including mosquitos.

Dr. Merlin Tuttle, a leading bat authority and visiting scholar at the Brackenridge Field Laboratory at the University of Texas at Austin, snatched this bat I now hold out of the air with his bare hands.

Bats are the only wild creatures in existence that will not bite or struggle if captured. "But you must must stress that this is a unique experience," he says, gently stretching out the bat's wing, revealing an intricate network of capillaries. "The only way the average person would get to handle a bat is if it was sick, the very one no one should ever touch."

Where are the blood-lusting monsters that inspire such fear in the public imagination? Where are the diabolical ancestors of Dracula who'd like nothing better than to take a chunk out of my neck? The fact is, they don't exist.

"Bats get used as whipping boys," says Tuttle, who is founder and president of Bat Conservation International (BCI), a 1,000-member-strong Austin-based organization aimed at stopping the decline in the world's bat populations.

BCI's goal is to transform the image of bats as villains into what they really are: meticulously clean, vital members of the ecological community. Bats have been unjustly maligned and persecuted simply because they're nocturnal, secretive and strange-looking, he says. Rabid bat attack stories are exaggerated by pest control companies out to make a buck, uninformed health officials trying to scare people into vaccinating their pets, and newspapers looking for a story, he contends.

After hearing his facts, it's hard not to believe him. He says fewer than one half of one percent of bats ever contract rabies. In 1981, Tuttle did a comprehensive study on all the existing literature on bats and rabies and concluded that, if people would not attempt to handle bats, the odds of being harmed by them are extremely remote.

Tuttle has spent 25 years studying bats, journeying to every continent, and has spent much of his life in bat caves. He says he has yet to encounter an aggressive bat.

And, contrary to popular belief, bats that get rabies are seldom aggressive and soon die. In the past 40 years, only 10 people in the United States have contracted rabies from bats. "When you look at the statistics, the common public response to bats is pretty absurd," says Tuttle. Statistically, power lawn mowers pose much more of a safety threat than bats. Domestic pets are far more likely to contract rabies from skunks, raccoons and foxes than they are from bats.

While Tuttle spews out his facts, the bats continue spewing out of the mouth of the cave. The acrid, ammonia smell of bat guano (feces) hangs in the air. The level of ammonia deep inside the cave is lethal to humans; how the bats survive it befuddles scientists. Each winter, thousands of pounds of the silky guano are extracted from this cave by its owners and sold as fertilizer.

We stand at the edge of the cave bowl as bats whizz by only feet away. Tuttle and his group of onlookers have just spent a good half-hour jostling through rocky, verdant alleys in his red jeep, past numerous gates locked against the curious. (He will not allow the release of the cave's location in order to keep thrill-seekers at bay.)

There are three bat caves close to San Antonio, none of which would exist today if it weren't for the careful protection of landowners. An Arizona cave once claimed the largest bat colony, but its population shrank from 30 million to 30 thousand is just 10 years due to tourists rousing the tenants with rifles and sticks of dynamite. "People are still firing guns into it," he mutters.

Tuttle, 44, is enthusiastic and intense. He has a thick mustache, wire rim glasses, silvering sideburns and a confidence in his knowledge of bats that stops just short of jauntiness. "Not only do people unfairly exaggerate the danger of rabies from bats," he continues, emphatically waving a half-eaten potato chip in the air, "they rarely recognize all the good they accomplish."

Bats are major predators of night-flying insects. A single bat can easily catch 500 or more insects in an hour. Tuttle refers to the "pesticide treadmill" at work in this country, in which chemicals are used to remedy problems created by chemicals. Tuttle does not advocate abandoning pesticides altogether; still, he warns we must be more prudent in their use if our world is to survive. It is a healthy reflection on our environment that the bats thrive here; cattle ranching in the Hill Country favors a low pesticide level.

We walk through a thicket to a wooden shanty that holds the 135-foot-long shaft used for guano extraction. We peer down into its darkness, holding our breath against the smell. The owners are doing the bats a service; some caves have become so full of guano they're unusable.

Back outside, a column of bats flies directly overhead. Thousands of black-pointed wings intersect against a pale sky, an M.C. Esher painting in motion.

"Too often people are only concerned with saving what's cute and cuddly, like the Panda bear," says Tuttle. "But being cuddly doesn't make a damn bit of difference when it comes to maintaining the health of our environment. Some of the ugliest organisms are the most vital to man's survival. Where would we be today without bread mold, the source of antibiotics?"

Before forming BCI, Tuttle approached several of the world's leading conservation societies about protecting bats but was met with indifference. "Too many of the big organizations spend most of their time on 'glamour species,'" he says.

It was the biggest step of his career, leaving his envied post as curator of mammals at the Milwaukee Public Museum — one of the largest research museums in the country — to come to Austin in 1985. But it hasn't been easy; Tuttle usually works around 16 hours a day, often seven days a week, disseminating information, hosting field trips, doing research.

Study: Offices found to be unhealthy

That mid-afternoon tired feeling could be related to the office furniture, and not a heavy lunch or even boredom, according to interior designers at a recent national conference of the American Society of Interior Designers in Los Angeles.

"There is a growing body of research which shows our offices are unhealthy. The use of synthetic materials in offices may be responsible in part for a host of diseases linked to office work," said Dr. George Rand, a psychologist and professor at the UCLA's graduate school of architecture and urban planning.

You may have thought interior designers talked only about subjects like furniture styles and how to find a good upholsterer when they got together. But nowadays, a group of designers is just as likely to be discussing office environments or fire safety or barrier-free design.

These very issues, in fact, were an important topic at ASID's annual meeting and Janet Schirn, president, told the group "the most critical issue confronting professional designers today is changing the perception of the designer's role to include his part in protection of the public."

Schirn said designers control about $40 billion worth of furnishings per year and are increasingly required to make decisions that reflect on public safety and welfare in commercial, residential and institutional buildings.

Among office products which should be investigated further, said Rand, who presented the latest thinking on office environments, are air fresheners, adhesives, cleaning solvents and seemingly innocuous office furniture, carpets and curtains that may contain formaldehyde, asbestos and other harmful substances.

He added that copying machines may be producing ozone, which could be causing headaches and upper respiratory infections for some workers. Health problems have also been associated with video display terminals.

The mid-afternoon yawn ascribed to large lunches or the repetitiveness of work could actually be a reaction to plasticizers, fire retardants and maintenance fluids in the office.

According to Rand, though millions of dollars have been spent to transform thousands of work stations into so-called open offices to boost productivity, "not a single study has been conducted to determine whether some illnesses in offices could be traced directly to the physical environment."

He urged such studies be undertaken so that the information gained could lead to healthier work environments.

Dr. Leonard B. Kruk, manager for technological integration at Shaw-Walker Co., said the importance of a good work environment can hardly be overemphasized since by the year 2000, 90 percent of the workforce will be employed in an automated office.

A major issue for designers and workers will be noise control. With voice-activated typewriters and computers making inroads, offices are getting noisier, says Kruk. By the early 1990s, when sales of these office machines will reach a peak, noise levels may actually cut productivity and increase data errors.

Sapphire—September's colorful gem

DALLAS (AP) — Most people recognize a sapphire as a brilliant blue gemstone, yet few know that the September birthstone can also be any color, except red, notes the American Gem Trade Association (AGTA) based in Dallas.

"Natural sapphire is found in almost every color of the rainbow — orange, blue, pink, yellow, green, lavender and purple — as well as colorless," says Ray Zajicek, president of AGTA, a nonprofit organization representing suppliers of gemstones throughout the United States.

"The rarest sapphire is Padparadscha, which is a fiery orange-pink stone," he adds. "Its name means 'lotus blossom' in Singhalese."

Another rare and valuable sapphire is the star sapphire.

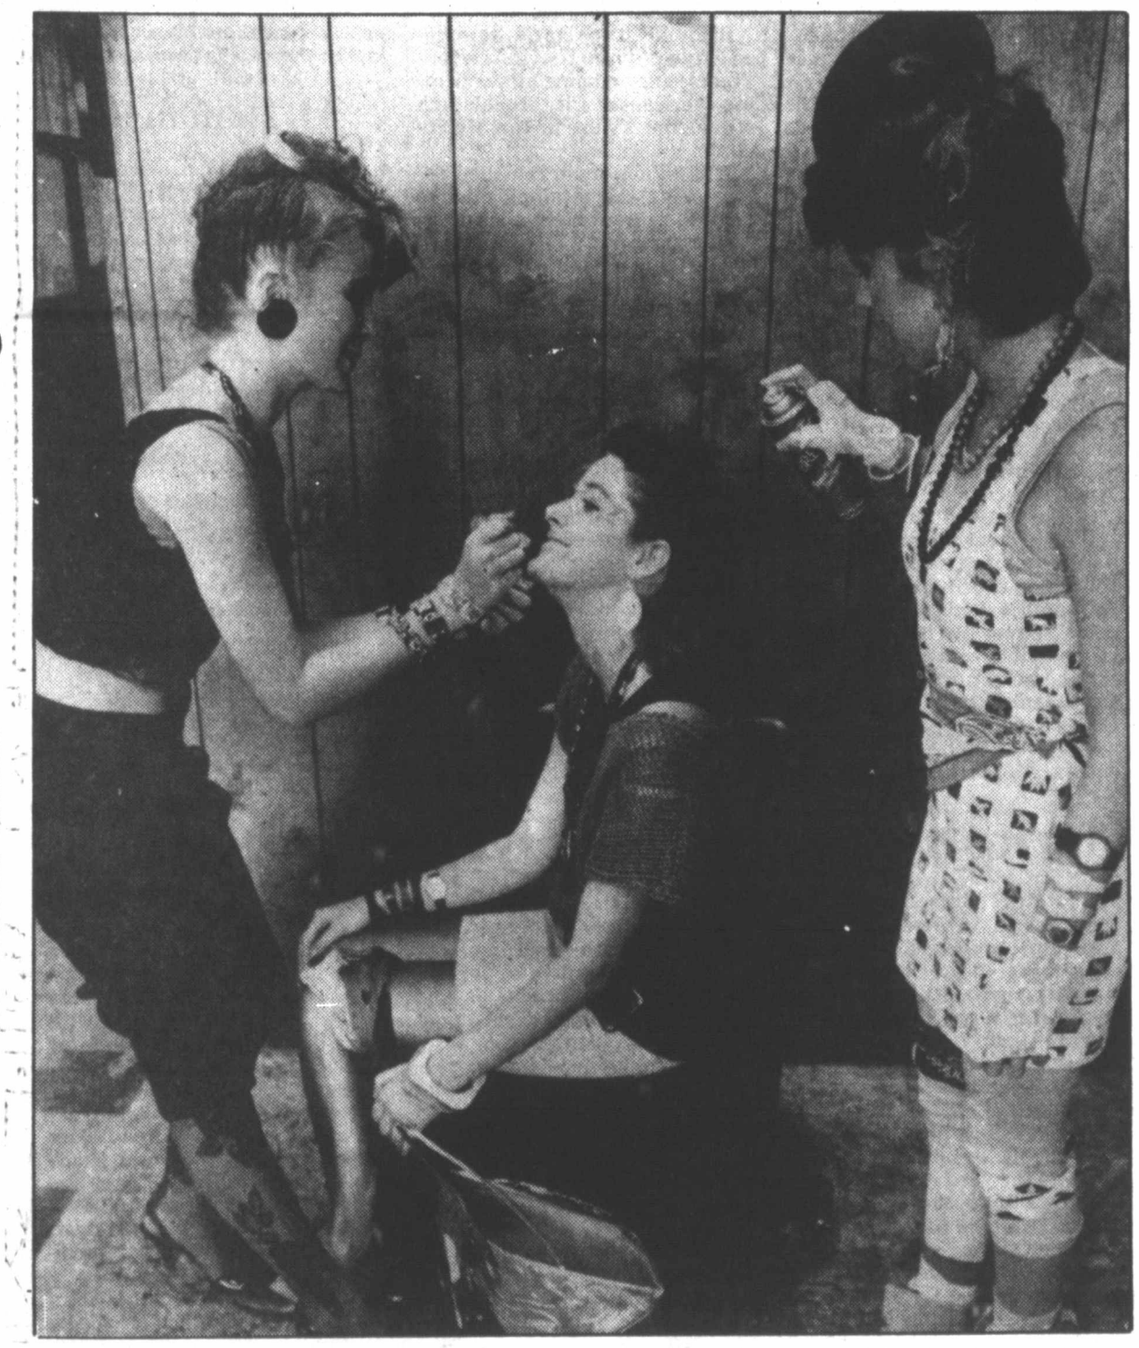

"Star sapphire gets its name from the six-rayed star formed by the tiny needles of its crystal structure," explains Roland Naftule, president of the International Colored Stone Association (ICA), an organization of gemstone suppliers representing 29 gem-producing countries.

Perhaps the best known sapphire is the royal blue gemstone that England's Prince Charles gave to Princess Diana on their engagement. Prince Charles' choice was most appropriate, as legend holds that the gemstone protects royalty, Naftule points out.

Found in Burma, Cambodia, Sri Lanka, Thailand, India, Africa and Australia, sapphire is one of the most durable gemstones, making it a good choice for both men's and women's fine jewelry creations, Naftule says.

"The sapphire is one of the oldest-known gemstones," he notes. "In fact, ancient writers claimed the Ten Commandments were written on sapphire. Ancient Persians believed the blue sky was a reflection of a magnificent sapphire upon which the earth rested."

Other lore surrounding the sapphire claims it acts as an antidote against poison, cleanses the soul and helps its owner to interpret oracles and foresee the future. The rare orange Padparadscha is said to help cure restlessness and insomnia.

Here's the Answer

AP Newsfeatures

Q. — We are thinking of putting a raised hearth in front of our fireplace. In our discussions about what kind of hearth it should be, we got into a friendly dispute about what a hearth was for aside from its appearance. Can you help us resolve the issue?

A. — Years ago, a hearth simply was an area in front of a fireplace for the specific purpose of preventing the fire from causing trouble. It was made of noncombustible material, as it is these days, so that nothing would happen if sparks or pieces of wood or coal got loose. It also prevented the wooden floor in front of the fireplace from warping and buckling. Over the years it has gained added dimensions, especially when raised. A hearth can serve as a sitting area or simply a decorative feature.

Q. — I plan to put two panes of glass in two of our windows. I have been practicing cutting glass with some scrap pieces and have finally acquired the knack of doing it without splitting the glass. After the glazing compound has been applied and the glass placed in the opening, how many glazier's points should be used?

A. — There's no regulation that says a certain number of points are needed. Use your judgment, depending on the size of the glass. Two points on each side are about right for a standard window, three for a larger size and four if it is an extra large window. Incidentally, when you measure how large the pane of glass must be to fit the opening, cut it an eighth-of-an-inch smaller on each side. If it fits exactly, the glass might break at some later time if expansion and contraction occurs.

Q. — I have an old golf bag that is still in excellent condition, but it is getting dirty and full of grime. I would like to clean it thoroughly. Is it all right to use saddle soap on it?

A. — Yes, if it is leather. Many golf bags these days are made of vinyl, in which case washing with a mild soap and water will be sufficient.

Baker sets date for kindergarten enrollment

Enrollment for Baker Elementary School kindergarten and Headstart—Pre-kindergarten classes (for four year olds) is to be Thursday from 9 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. at the school, 300 E. Tuke.

Parents are asked to bring their children's birth certificates or a copy of the documents and immunization records. Physical forms will be distributed during the pre-enrollment.

Those with students enrolling in Headstart—Pre-kindergarten class will need to bring some form of income verification. Pay check stubs will be sufficient.

IT'S NOT HOW MUCH YOU SPEND

We have all seen homes furnished by people where money was no object, and yet some of these homes were NOT furnished with comfort or good taste.

We've also seen homes and apartments furnished by others whose budgets were very limited, and yet their's were done very attractively. People of more limited means CAN accomplish so much by the proper selection of styles, color schemes and arrangements.

All furniture dealers and decorators love customers who say, "the sky's the limit", but we give equal time and attention to those whose budget is much lower—and this is where we can really be of service to you. We can give you the benefit of our accumulated experience in accepting the challenge of showing you how to use your dollars wisely.

Start by telling us how much you are able to spend and we can surprise you by showing you how much can be done for any given amount.

We can suggest well designed furniture and accessories that will be decorator co-ordinated and serviceable.

Woman's breast-implant surgery triples problems

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I am beginning to think I am going crazy. I'm 38 years old (married) and have had three breast implant operations — now I need a fourth. I'll start at the beginning:

First, I wanted to increase the size of my breasts. Well, the plastic surgeon showed me the various sizes, and I am sure he used bigger implants than the ones I picked out because I came out looking so top-heavy, I hated myself. I couldn't wait until my doctor redid the operation. (By the way, he is a board-certified reconstructive plastic surgeon, has a good reputation and is not cheap.)

Disappointment No. 2: For some reason, he replaced the too-large implants with ones that were too small. I knew right away they weren't what I ordered, so I had a third operation.

This one has me looking lopsided. My left breast is about four inches higher than my right. When I told my doctor he would have to do it over again, he refused, saying, "I'm sorry, I don't think I can please you."

Now what kind of a doctor is he? And what should I do about this situation? I certainly can't go around looking the way I am.

LOPSIDED IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR LOPSIDED: I think you should see another plastic surgeon for an evaluation, or possibly some corrective surgery. If you don't know one, inquire at the Cosmetic Surgery Information Service, 860 Via de la Paz, Suite B2, Pacific Palisades, Calif. 90272. The national hotline is: 1-800-221-9808. In California, call 1-800-824-3042. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a receptionist in a busy beauty salon, and this is my beef: When a client who has an appointment comes into the shop, I always say, "Please have a seat; I will tell your operator that you are here."

Invariably, she says, "Oh, that's all right," and proceeds to walk straight through to be near her operator. She then finds an unoccupied shampoo chair or one under a hair dryer and engages her operator in conversation — disregarding the fact that her operator is working on another patron.

At this shop, we feel that the patron has paid for the operator's time and full attention, and it's rude and presumptuous for another person to burst in and usurp the operator's time and attention that rightfully belongs to another client. I hope you find room for this letter, Abby. Receptionists everywhere will be grateful.

DESK GIRL

DEAR DESK GIRL: Find room? I'll make room. Now a word to whom it may concern: Madame, if you see yourself in the above picture, color yourself a blushing pink, and please mend your ways.

Astros increase lead

By The Associated Press

Mike Scott, leading the majors in earned run average and strikeouts, finally beat the team with the worst record in the big leagues.

Scott pitched a four-hitter and struck out 10 Monday night as the Houston Astros defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates 3-0.

The victory marked Scott's first win in nine career decisions against Pittsburgh, including a loss and a no-decision this season. He entered the game with 5.73 career ERA against the Pirates.

"Now I have everybody in the league," Scott said. "These guys were the toughest."

Scott raised his record to 13-8, increased his strikeout total to 233 and lowered his ERA to 2.23.

It was his fourth shutout this season .

The Astros increased their lead in the National League West to 6½ games over idle San Francisco.

Scott broke into the major leagues in 1979 with the New York Mets and was traded to Houston in 1982. He blossomed last year, posting an 18-8 record after the Astros requested that he learn the split-finger fastball.

He went to Roger Craig for tutoring shortly before Craig became the manager of the Giants. Now, Scott's success is helping Houston hold off San Francisco.

"It was desperation time in my career," Scott said. "They wanted me to learn another pitch and I was agreeable. Now it's my second-best pitch."

Mets 5, Dodgers 4

Darryl Strawberry snapped out of an 0-for-24 slump with a two-run homer and RBI single and Keith Hernandez also homered as New York started a West Coast trip by beating Los Angeles.

Strawberry put the Mets ahead with a run-scoring single in the first inning off Orel Hershiser, 12-9, then capped a three-run fifth with a two-run homer, his 17th of the season, for a 5-0 lead.

Reds 6, Padres 5

Buddy Bell hit a three-run homer and host Cincinnati withstood San Diego's five-run rally in the ninth inning.

John Denny, 11-10, took a three-hitter and 6-0 lead into the ninth. But Tony Gwynn's two-run homer and Terry Kennedy's two-out, RBI double pulled San Diego within 6-3 and knocked Denny.

Cowboys cut Miller, 11 others

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys released former all-pro tight end Junior Miller and 11 others as the club tried to reach a 60-player limit by today's deadline.

Miller is a recovered alcoholic who became a born-again Christian after a year's layoff from football.

The waiver of Miller and Chris Waltman, another tight end, left the Cowboys with three tight ends — Doug Cosbie, Fred Cornwell and Thornton Chandler.

Since the Cowboys have said from the start that they plan to keep three tight ends, Monday's moves were an apparent indication that Chandler, a sixth-round pick from Alabama, has made the squad.

The emergence of the 6-5, 238-pound Chandler — who is being called by players and coaches as the tight end of the Cowboys' future — made Miller expendable, Cowboys coach Tom Landry said.

"Junior just didn't progress far enough for us," Landry said. "He's a good kid, but with Chandler coming on, we just needed to do something."

The cuts on Monday left the Cowboys with 67 on their roster, meaning seven more cuts would be required by 3 p.m. today.

Three of Dallas' 1986 draft choices were among those released on Monday — quarterback Stan Gelbaugh (sixth round), running back Topper Clemons (eighth round) and guard Bryan Chester (10th round).

Others cut were guard Dowe Aughtman, wide receiver Kenny Duckett, defensive back Pat Ballage, running back Robert Mimbs, punter Mark Royals, lineback Steve Savard and quarterback Scott Woolf.

Dextor Clinkscale was placed on the reserve-did not report list, and four others were placed on injured reserve, all with knee injuries — cornerback Rodney Holland, wide receivers Wayne Roby and Tom Gray, and tackle Lloyd Yancey.

The cuts of Gelbaugh and Woolf leave the Cowboys with three quarterbacks and indicate that former USFL quarterback Reggie Collier has made the team.

Miller said he thinks Chandler will be a great NFL player.

"The kid, Chandler, is going to be a great tight end. He's really had a good camp. There was just a lot of competition at that spot," Miller said.

"If somebody else wants me, I'll consider it but I'll leave that up to other teams. Right now, I don't know if I want to play any more," Miller added.

Miller made Pro Bowl appearances as an Atlanta Falcon in 1980 and 1981, but his career took a downturn because of alcohol.

"I was a heavy beer drinker, and it just took its toll. Sometimes you just don't realize how beer will wear you down," Miller said.

Cowboys vice president Gil Brandt said Miller "worked hard and he tried hard. But it's like a person who sits out of college for a year or two and can't get those study habits back. "

Brandt added, "What happens in this business is that Cornwell played extremely well Saturday night (four catches for 43 yards against the Raiders). If Junior had done what Cornwell did, maybe he would be here and somebody else would be gone."

Miller said he will spend time speaking with different churches and may return to the construction business.

Middle schoolers to receive grid gear

Football equipment will be given out to Pampa Middle School players this week, school officials announced over the weekend. Athletes planning to play football for the middle school this year are asked to attend.

Eighth-graders receive their equipment beginning Thursday at 1 p.m. Seventh-graders get their equipment Friday, also beginning at 1 p.m.

Workouts for both grades begin the first day of school.

Seaver provides insurance for front-running Boston Red Sox

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The Boston Red Sox are in good hands with the Tom Seaver Insurance Co.

For three straight outings, the Red Sox have reaped dividends from the 41-year-old right-handed insurance policy they acquired June 29 from the Chicago White Sox.

"He's doing exactly what Boston got him for — he's leading them to the pennant," Minnesota Manager Ray Miller said after Seaver allowed only three hits in 8 2-3 innings as the Red Sox defeated the Twins 3-1 Monday night. "One veteran can lead the way."

Seaver's victory gave the Red Sox a 5½-game lead over the idle New York Yankees in the American League East.

In the only other AL game, Cleveland beat Milwaukee 10-4.

"He's pitched really well since he's come over here," said Boston catcher Rich Gedman, who made Seaver's 311th career victory possible with a one-out, two-run, home run in the top of the ninth inning off Twins starter Frank Viola.

Seaver is 7-10 overall but 5-4 with a 2.80 earned-run average since joining the Red Sox.

In his last three starts, he pitched a five-hitter to beat the Detroit Tigers, allowed nine hits in beating the Kansas City Royals and stifled the Twins in the Metrodome.

While Viola wasn't thrilled about losing the pitching duel to Seaver, he marveled at his opponent's mastery.

"Tell that old man to get out of baseball," joked Viola, 13-9, whose personal four-game winning streak was snapped.

Indians 10, Brewers 4

Tony Bernazard and Mel Hall drove in three runs apiece and host Cleveland beat Milwaukee for its fourth straight victory.

Bernazard led off the bottom of the first inning with his 12th home run. He hit a two-run single in the third inning and Hall added a two-run triple later in the inning. Hall drove in his third run of the game with a fifth-inning groundout.

Tom Candiotti, 12-9, tied for the AL lead with his 11th complete game, giving up 10 hits and three walks. He has won nine of his last 12 decisions.

Cleveland, now 62-57, has not been five games over .500 this late in the season since 1968.

CAMPBELL RETIRES — New Orleans Saints running back Earl Campbell, for three years the NFL's leading rusher, announces his retirement. Campbell was a Heisman Trophy winner out of the University of Texas and played for the Houston Oilers from 1978 until 1984. (AP Laserphoto)

Campbell says goodbye to football

HAMMOND, La. (AP) — Expressions of surprise, sentiment and respect followed the abrupt retirement of Earl Campbell, the New Orleans Saints running back who earned three NFL rushing titles in his glory days.

Campbell, 31, said Monday that the magic was gone and announced at a news conference that he was leaving professional football. He was 593 yards short of the 10,000-yard mark in career rushing with most of those yards gained while he played with the Houston Oilers.

Saints Coach Jim Mora said he was surprised at Campbell's decision but said, "He's a cinch for the Hall of Fame."

Halfback Wayne Wilson had tears in his eyes when he said, "I just think he's a great guy. He taught me a lot."

Wilson said he found out Campbell would retire on Sunday night, when Campbell emerged from a meeting with Mora and started packing his bags.

"He talked to the coach and asked the coach what the evaluation was and the coach just told him that they thought that he didn't have that old Earl Campbell pushing up inside," Wilson said.

Offensive lineman Dave Lafary said he understood Campbell's decision.

"He's had a very successful career and things were slowing down for him here. He came back and gave it everything he had and you gotta love the guy for that," Lafary said. "When you do it for a living for that many years, it's got to be hard."

"I'm a man. I'm not a little boy," Campbell said. "I believe this is the best thing — not only for myself, but for the Saints."

Campbell's performance since joining the Saints six games into the 1984 season had been disappointing. But he began training camp this year full of optimism, weighing in at 225 pounds and saying he was ready to put a poor 1985 season behind him.

His performance in two preseason games, however, wasn't impressive. He had 78 yards in 25 carries.

Saturday night, in a 38-34 loss to the New England Patriots, Campbell played only in the first half, carrying 12 times for 35 yards.

Nevertheless, Mora said he wasn't expecting Campbell's retirement announcement.

"It was a complete surprise to me," Mora said. "He was still our No. 1 tailback."

Most of Campbell's 9,407 rushing yards came at Houston, where he began his pro career in 1978 after winning the Heisman Trophy at the University of Texas in 1977. He bettered the 1,000-yard mark every year except 1982, when an injury kept him out of nine games, 1984, the year he was traded to the Saints, and last year when he gained 643 yards.

He led the NFL in rushing in his first three years and won Most Valuable Player honors three times under Coach Bum Phillips at Houston. His best season was in 1980, Phillips' last year with the Oilers, when he rushed for 1,934 yards — the third best single-season performance in NFL history.

Phillips, who was fired before the end of the 1980 season at Houston, took over at New Orleans and brought Campbell over in 1984 — dealing away a first-round draft pick in a trade that drew immediate criticism.

"I think Earl's family means a lot more to him than a lot of people think," Phillips said Monday. "He enjoyed football while he played but his family couldn't be there at training camp with him.

"I honestly believe that Earl Campbell thinks more of his family than money. He just wanted to be here (in Houston) more than there."

Campbell gained only 468 yards with both teams during 1984.

The decision to retire was all his, Campbell says.

"That's the surprising thing. I did it on my own."

Cowboys' Walls may hold out

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Cornerback Everson Walls said he may be forced to hold out unless the Dallas Cowboys sign him to a new contract by the start of the regular season.

Walls has two years left on a 5-year contract. However, the Cowboys devised a contract in 1983 that gave Walls points for earning Pro Bowl, All-Pro and All-Conference recognition.

If Walls accumulated 200 points in the first three years of his contract, the Cowboys said they would renegotiate. Walls' trip to the Pro Bowl last season — his fourth in five years — gave him 200 points.

Joe Bailey, the Cowboys vice president of administration, said Monday he hopes to have Walls signed before Dallas opens against the New York Giants on Sept. 8. Bailey said he has received no indication from Walls or his attorney, Steve Weinberg, that the cornerback would leave the team if he has not been signed.

Dream backfield unlikely for Cowboys this season

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Is there a dream backfield in the future of the Dallas Cowboys? The talent is available and apparently willing, but such a development appears unlikely, at least right now.

In Tony Dorsett, the Cowboys have the sixth-leading rusher in National Football League history. Barring injury, the 32-year-old Dorsett probably has several productive seasons in his future.

And in recent signee Herschel Walker, the Cowboys have a potential superstar, a 24-year-old blend of speed and power who gained more than 6,000 yards in three USFL seasons.

Dallas Coach Tom Landry was asked about the possibility of Dorsett and Walker playing in the same backfield following Monday's practice sessions, the first in full pads for Walker since he signed a five-year contract last week.

"Anything's a possibility," Landry said. "I don't have any plans of anything. Herschel's learning the plays at tailback, that's the easiest way to learn the offense. He's the No. 3 tailback right now."

While Dorsett indicated he'd welcome the possibility of playing with Walker, he said he didn't expect it.

"I don't know what they're going to do," Dorsett said. "From what I'm seeing, they've got two guys at the same position.

"I don't see it (the two playing at the same time). He's capable of blocking. I'm capable of blocking. If they choose to do something like that, I think it could work. Coach Landry makes those decisions."

Both Landry and Dorsett confirmed that they had met briefly before Monday afternoon's practice, but neither would discuss what went on. "It's our business," Dorsett said.

Walker officially began his career with the Cowboys Monday morning on a nearly empty practice field, dressed in shorts and T-shirt and taking handoffs and pitchouts from a third-string quarterback.

The 1982 Heisman Trophy winner at Georgia, whose contract with the Cowboys is reportedly worth a total of $5 million, began his workout after the rest of the Cowboys finished a 45-minute morning practice.

Walker worked out under some studying eyes. Watching were offensive coordinator Paul Hackett, running back coach Al Lavan — and Dorsett.

"He's a great guy and a great athlete," Dorsett said of Walker. "He'll probably make the adjustment pretty quick. We've chatted just briefly. Herschel's a nice guy, just like I am."

But Dorsett didn't hide his continuing anger about Walker's contract. Reportedly, Dorsett will make less than $500,000 this year, his 10th in the NFL.

"It's not Herschel Walker. It's management," he said. "Some guys will let it blow by and some won't. Nobody's upset with Herschel. If you want unity, you treat people as equals."

Walker, who left the New Jersey Generals after the USFL decided to scrap its 1986 season after receiving just $3 in damages from its antitrust suit against the NFL, downplayed the friction.

"I understand Tony and respect him a great deal," Walker said. "That's the way things are. We're friends. He's one of the best running backs in the NFL."

Walker said he's been greeted warmly by his new teammates.

"People aren't upset," he said. "I've been treated very nice. The players have helped me out a lot. They want to win. I really don't feel any pressure. You put pressure on yourself. My job is to play football. I'm feeling pretty good."

The Cowboys practiced for nearly two hours in the afternoon at their Cal Lutheran training camp. After that, Walker stayed on the field with a handful of players for another 25 minutes.

"It went pretty well. I'm beginning to recognize things better now," Walker said as he walked off the field.

"I think things are going to work out pretty good for me, I'm feeling pretty good," he said. "Right now, I think I'm learning just like everybody esle. I'm not a guy who's crazy about practice but I know it comes along with the business. I've got a lot of learning to do."

"He's working, he's learning the assignments," Landry said.

Walker, Dorsett and Robert Lavette alternated at one running back spot during the afternoon practice. Landry commented on the exceptional depth the Cowboys have at running back. Timmy Newsome, second-round draft choice Darryl Clack and Todd Fowler worked at the other running back position.

"It's the best that we've had, that many good running backs," Landry said. "We've just got a bunch of them. There's been a lot of good ones there; we just have a lot of depth there right now."

Wearing blue pants, symbolic of being a rookie, Walker seemed to know what he was doing and fit in well.

Pampa opens volleyball season

The Pampa High girls' volleyball team open the season tonight against the Palo Duro Dons, and Harvester coach Phil Hall feels this match may be the most important one at all.

"We didn't win a home match last year, so I feel it's very important we get off on the right foot with a victory," Hall said. "It's just a much-needed victory."

Pampa and PD junior varsities begin the action at 6:30 p.m. and will be followed by the varsity match.

"Palo Duro has always been one of the frontrunners as far as 5A goes," Hall said. "I expect them to be tough."

Hall looks for the Lady Harvesters to have a good season.

"We've looked better at this point in time since I've been here," Hall added. "The key to our season is leadership and unity, something we've lacked in years past. "I feel that's going to be our strongpoint."

Five seniors return from last year's squad. They are Susie Gross, Andrea Hopkins, Melinda Jackson, Stephanie Jeffery and Jackie Oglesby.

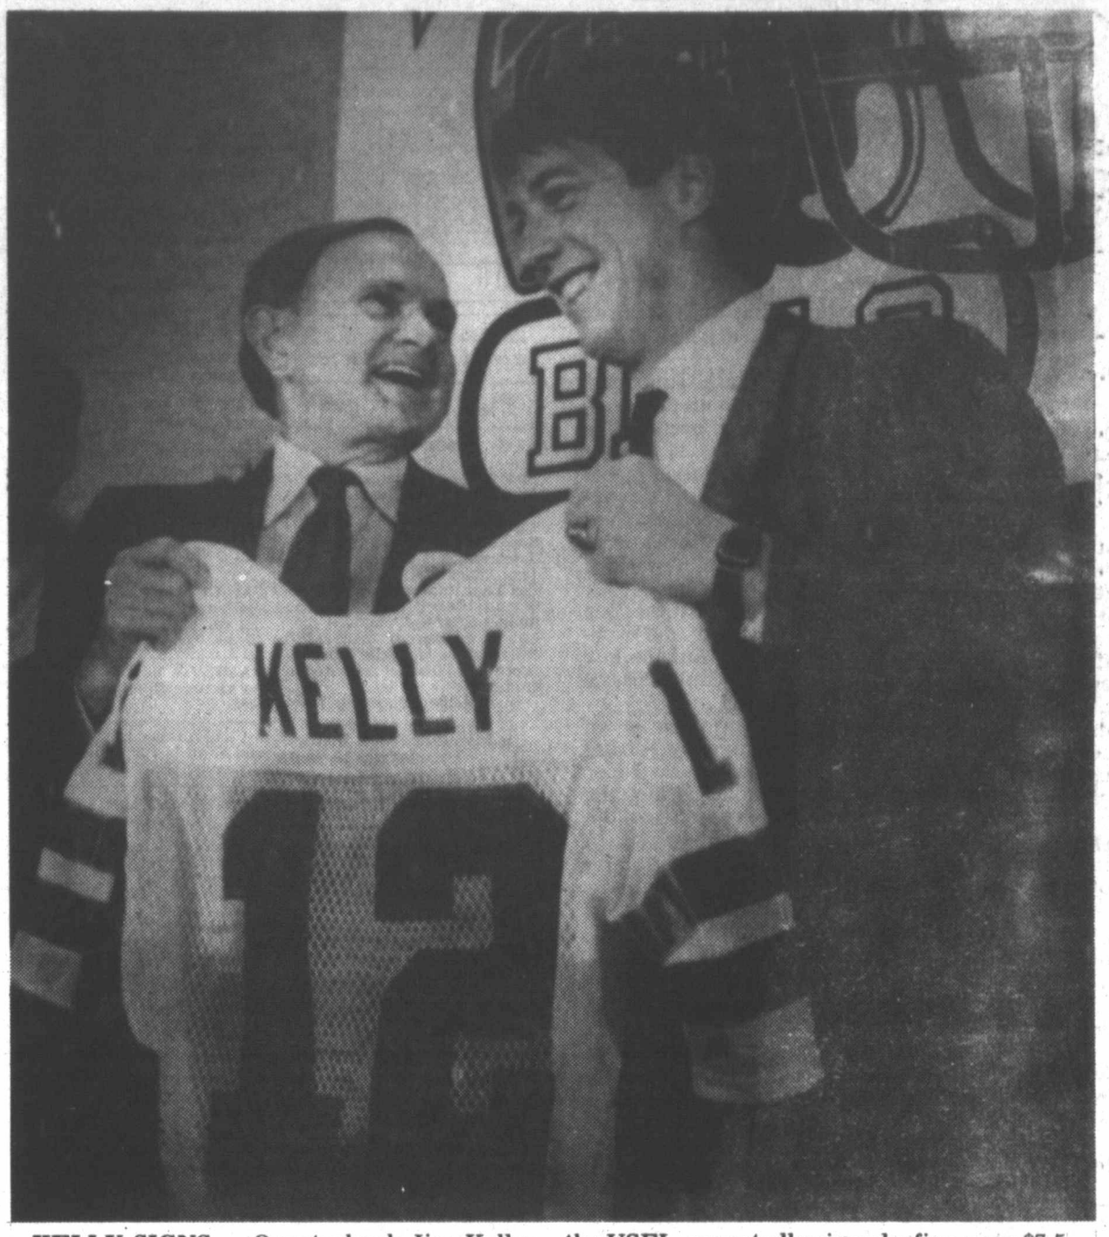

"I'll be looking at a lot of different girls and a lot of different combinations before district starts," Hall said.

The first District 1-4A match is Sept. 16 against Dumas on the homecourt.

Scott has hole-in-one

Scott White of Pampa had a hole-in-one during the Pampa Club Championships last weekend at the Pampa Country Club course.

White's ace came on the 197-yard, par 3, No. 12 hole. He used a 5-iron. It was his first hole-in-one.

KELLY SIGNS — Quarterback Jim Kelly, right, and Buffalo Bills owner Ralph Wilson are all smiles at a press conference in Buffalo Monday. NFL Teams make heavy cuts

By The Associated Press

Jim Kelly, Chuck Long and Herschel Walker are ready to try producing what they've been paid for. Earl Campbell is ready for life after football.

Quarterbacks Kelly and Long signed lucrative contracts Monday, Kelly with the Buffalo Bills, Long with the Detroit Lions. Walker showed up for his first practice with the Dallas Cowboys.

Campbell, after eight years as a running back, quit the game Monday.

Teams made heavy cuts as today's deadline for 60-man rosters neared.

Kelly is now reportedly the highest-paid player in the NFL. His agent said Kelly's contract will pay about $8 million for the five years.

Long ended his 27-day holdout by signing a four-year contract worth approximately $1.75 million. He then joined the Lions for an afternoon workout.

Walker practiced Monday at the Cowboys' Thousand Oaks, Calif., training camp. "It went pretty well. I'm beginning to recognize things better now," he said as he walked off the field.

Among 13 cuts by the Bills was quarterback Art Schlichter, who came to Buffalo as a free agent in June after being cut by the Indianapolis Colts last season. He re-entered the NFL last season after a one-year suspension for gambling.

More cuts will be made today, as NFL teams get down to the 60-man roster limit.

The second full weekend of exhibition play wound up Monday night, as the Los Angeles Rams downed the San Francisco 49ers 31-17.

Packers

Wide receiver Phillip Epps ended a 26-day holdout by signing a pair of one-year contracts, and Green Bay trimmed its roster by 14 players.

Seahawks

Cornerback Keith Simpson, Seattle's 1978 first-round draft choice, and veteran fullback Dan Doornink were among 14 players released as the roster was cut to 72.

Broncos

Denver waived veteran wide receiver Butch Johnson and 10 other players and placed four more on the injured reserved list to trim the team's roster to 62 players.

Falcons

Twelve players were cut, including six-year starting linebacker Al Richardson and third-year linebacker Jeff Jackson, and five others went on injured reserve. Atlanta also signed USFL wide receivers Joey Jones and Aubrey Matthews.

Chiefs

Thirteen players were waived, including the first draft choice to be cut, 10th-round pick Ike Readon, a nose tackle. Three more were placed on injured reserve and three-year offensive tackle John Alt was sidelined as "physically unable to perform" with a lower back injury.

Cardinals

St. Louis cut 11 players, including former first-round draft pick Clyde Duncan, and picked up one by trading an undisclosed conditional draft selection for Tampa Bay linebacker Rick DiBernardo.

Redskins

Veteran kicker Mark Moseley, the seventh-leading scorer in NFL history, was virtually assured of a spot on this year's roster when challenger Jim Asmus was among seven players waived. The cuts placed the Redskins roster at 83 players, including seven former USFL players signed last week who are not counted toward the 60-man limit.

Oilers

Houston cut its roster to 59 players. John Schuhmacher, who started all 16 games at guard last season, and free agent kicker Joe Cooper were among 10 players cut. Schuhmacher was expected to battle Dean Steinkuhler for a starting position last year but Steinkuhler missed the season with

Steelers

Former Houston Gamblers defensive end Van Hughes signed a contract and reported to the team's summer training camp. Hughes was chosen by the Steelers in the fifth round of the 1984 draft.

Biggest money fight looms

NEW YORK (AP) — Promoter Bob Arum is halfway home in arranging what could be the biggest money fight in boxing history — Marvelous Marvin Hagler against Sugar Ray Leonard for the undisputed world middleweight championship.

Arum met with Hagler in Bartlett, N.H. Monday where the champion agreed to shelve retirement plans for a March 1987 date against Leonard, probably in either Reno or Las Vegas, Nev.

Now the promoter will set out to get Leonard under contract.

"We'll be fair," Arum pledged. "You deal with the champion first and we have an agreement with Marvin."

"We don't have a contract, we haven't agreed on anything. We haven't even spoken to (Hagler's co-manager Pat Petronelli) out of courtesy because of Marvin's problems making up his mind," Mike Trainer, Leonard's attorney, told WRC-TV, a Washington television station Monday.

The deal, Arum said, will assure record purses for both fighters.

Each has enjoyed big paydays before, Leonard earning a reported $13 million for his welterweight title defense against Thomas Hearns in September 1981, and Hagler getting about that much for defending the middleweight crown against Hearns in April 1985.

Leonard has retired twice after detached retina surgery and has not fought anybody since beating Kevin Howard in a lackluster performance May 11, 1984. Leonard has insisted that any second comeback fight would be only against Hagler for the middleweight crown.

Business wary of new tax bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Business executives examining newly proposed tax-overhaul legislation are coming away with conclusions ranging from doubt to dismay, but few deny it is bound to become law.

Mark Bloomfield of the American Council for Capital Formation complains that the lower tax rates it creates would come at the expense of savings and investments.

But, he conceded, "I think if it has the support of the president and the chairman of both (congressional tax-writing) committees it's a pretty difficult locomotive to stop."

"It's a fait accompli," said Kent Colton of the National Association of Home Builders. "We recognize there will be tax reform in the country, and we're not going to oppose that. At the same time, we want people to recognize there will be serious adjustments."

Colton said the single-family home business does well in the tax bill, as mortgage interest and property tax deductions are maintained. But the law also drops tax benefits that could cause 300,000 fewer residences to be built, he said.

The measure would cut individual taxes by an average of 6.1 percent, paying for it by raising taxes on corporations by about $120 billion over five years. At the same time, it would reduce the maximum business rate to 34 percent from the current 50 percent.

While lowering tax rates for individuals and businesses, it would eliminate many deductions, repeal investment tax credits and change rules for depreciation of equipment and capital gains differentials.

Some of these changes worried many business executives attending a White House Conference on Small Business on Monday.

"I have a lot of problems with loss of the investment tax credit," said Tom Van Cleave of Batavia, Ill. "It will be very harmful to businesses."

"Loss of the investment tax credit will lead to a crisis in construction and business spending on machinery," predicted Murray Gerber of Middletown, Conn. "We will need remedial legislation in a year or two."

Removing the deductions for interest income will also hurt small businesses by discouraging consumers from using credit cards in shopping, warned Roberta A. Thompson of Miamisburg, Ohio.

"It would be better if Congress scrapped the whole project," said Donald G. Ogilvie, executive vice president of the American Bankers Association. In a statement, Ogilvie called the bill "a jigsaw puzzle with quite a few pieces missing," even though the banking industry was able to regain some of the benefits it would have lost under the Reagan administration and Senate versions of the bill.

David Burton, an economist with the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, said the rule changes for business taxes would mean the bill won't do nearly as much to help the economy as it could have and will actually hurt in 1987.

"I think the great tragedy of this whole mess is it could have been incredibly pro-growth, good for the economy," Burton said. "They squandered an opportunity."

The chamber has not decided whether to support the bill this year, he said, but "I think there will be a lot of organizations, including ourselves, who will be working for change in the next Congress, next year, repairing mistakes that were made."

Charles J. DiBona, president of the American Petroleum Institute, said, "Based on our early understanding of its provisions, the conference report will have an adverse impact on all capital-intensive industries, particularly the petroleum industry."

"If enacted into law, the conference report would cost the petroleum industry a minimum of some $10 billion," he said, both from oil-specific provisions and those affecting business in general. He said the industry group was concerned that the new tax rules would further discourage exploration.

Migrants driven North by Southeast drought, and the Texas oil bust

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — A Sun Belt slump is forcing thousands of seasonal farm workers to search for greener pastures in the North, but many are finding only new places to be unemployed.

The migration northward, sparked largely by the Southeast drought and the Texas oil slump, is taxing social service agencies unprepared for the influx of people, many of whom are arriving without arrangements for homes or jobs.

"There isn't enough work to go around, so there is a lot of unemployment," said Manuel Gonzales, head of migrant services for Michigan's Department of Social Services.

"Back in '81 or '82, when we were hurting, you had a flow of people going down to Texas," he said. "Now we're seeing migration in reverse."

The Southeast crop failures have altered the traditional migrant stream, a northward migration keyed to varying harvest times in different regions. Officials say the drought has caused many migrants to bypass drought-stricken regions and head north.

The oil slump in Texas and the closing of some textile mills in the South have created a new class of first-time migrant workers who can't find work at the mills or oil fields.

Officials say these two groups this year have headed to states where farm work is considered relatively plentiful.

"We are seeing some real changes and it's a combination of a lot of factors," said Beverly Barringer, a Michigan Employment Security Commission field technician.

Barringer said her 11-county territory, which encompasses the Michigan fruit belt, had 8,300 migrant workers last month, compared with 5,000 in July 1985. Statewide, the number of migrants registered for employment was 16,493, compared with 14,550 last year.

"The big increase this year seems to be related to the economic conditions in Texas," said Ray Yeutter, an MESC field technician.

In Indiana, the number of migrants this season also is up, although officials won't have exact numbers until fall, said David Roellgen, deputy director of the Indiana Department of Aging and Community Services.

"All the social services groups are being taxed, especially clothing and food banks," he said.

Migrant workers traditionally have followed three loosely defined streams northward in the East, the Midwest and the West.
