Judge rules against draft registration

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A federal judge, citing a legal technicality, tossed out regulations that require millions of young men to register for the draft and also said the government cannot selectively prosecute registration resisters.

In knocking out the government's case against 21-year-old David Wayte, U.S. District Judge Terry Hatter Jr. ruled Monday that the Selective Service System should have waited 30 days for public comment before enforcing a draft registration proclamation issued by President Carter in 1980.

"The court cannot close its eyes to the fact that the proclamation became effective a mere 21 days after it was published (in the Federal Register)," Hatter said in his ruling.

Hatter also ruled that the government had violated Wayte's free speech rights under the U.S. Constitution by prosecuting only vocal opponents of the draft. He also cited the government's refusal to turn over evidence, and its refusal under the doctrine of executive privilege to allow White House counselor Edwin Meese III to testify.

It was unclear how Hatter's ruling would affect the registration process or the three men convicted of resisting registration. The government says 8.9 million men have complied with the act, while 585,000 men have failed to comply.

U.S. Attorney Stephen Trott said the judge's order would be appealed immediately to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

If the appeals court reverses Hatter's decision, the indictment against Wayte will be reinstated and proceedings will resume, Trott said. He had no further comment.

Mark Rosenbaum, one of Wayte's attorneys, said he was "pleasantly stunned" by the ruling, and believes it is upheld on appeal, the nation's entire draft registration system may be invalid.

"It means the whole draft is out," he said.

Rosenbaum said that if Hatter's decision is upheld, the convictions of other resisters could be overturned. Three young men have been convicted: Enten Eller, 20, of Laverne, Calif.; Benjamin Sasway, 21, of Vista, Calif.; and Mark Arden Schmucker, 22, of Alliance, Ohio.

Wayte, a former philosophy student at Yale University, said, "I am very happy right now because the judge has dismissed the case... I think this is a big victory for us and a big setback for the Selective Service system."

In his decision, Hatter said he recognized "the widespread effect that a decision granting defendant's motion to dismiss due to the illegal promulgation of the proclamation will have on this nation's Selective Service registration program."

But he said the government failed to prove Wayte had not been the subject of selective discrimination in the prosecution of draft registration resisters.

"Persons prosecuted for failing to register have consisted solely, not largely, of vocal non-registrants," Hatter noted.

"The inference is manifest that the defendant has been singled out for prosecution because he exercised his First Amendment right to free speech," the judge wrote.

Before Hatter's decision was released, the government announced it has shifted tactics in its crackdown on men who haven't registered. The government said Monday it would scrutinize Social Security rolls and tax records in an effort to catch more non-registrants.

Hatter ruled that Carter's presidential proclamation on July 18, 1980, ordering all young men to register for the draft within 30 days of their 18th birthday was invalid because the initial registration period began nine days too soon.

The Selective Service Act passed by Congress says the public has to be given 30 days notice before any presidential proclamation based on the act can take effect, Hatter said.

He said Carter did not waive the 30-day requirement in his proclamation, and that government arguments that the error was made in "good faith" and should be ignored were "meritless."

The former president, who arrived in Los Angeles on Monday night to tape a television program today, could not be reached for comment. A spokesman said Carter had gone to bed and declined to wake him.

In Washington, Thomas K. Turnage, director of the Selective Service System, could not be reached for comment because he has an unlisted telephone number. Kim Hoggard, a spokesman at the White House, said there would be no immediate comment on the ruling.

In order to prove the theory that Wayte was singled out for prosecution because he spoke out against the draft, the defense had sought White House and Selective Service documents and wanted Meese to testify.

Wayte was indicted July 22 on charges of failing to register for the draft.

Recession over, economist says

By DAVID SODAMANN
Energy-Business Editor

"The economy at this point is flat on its back. And that is an improvement over where it was just six months ago," said economist Stanley R. Reber. "The recession... is now behind us. I think we have built the basis on which we can have this economy grow."

Reber, senior vice president and economist with Texas American Bancshares Inc., offered his analysis while addressing a large audience assembled at Texas American Bank/Midland Monday evening for a Financial Forum.

"So where will the recovery come from?" Reber asked.

"It will come from the people in this room," he answered, "acting not as business men and women, but as husbands and wives and mothers and fathers and heads of households, spending a little bit more on automobiles, housing and appliances."

"IT'S NOT going to snap your neck back. It's not going to be that kind of recovery. But I think under the circumstances, it's the best that we can hope for."

"What this means is real GNP growth of 2 or 3 percent in 1983."

Reber, who forecasts economic trends for his firm, commented on three areas of concern to all: inflation, interest rates and the overall prospects for economic growth.

"The most optimistic outlook, I think," Reber said, "is with respect to inflation. Inflation in 1982 is going to be in the area of 5 percent."

Reber said although 5 percent is higher than zero, it is much lower than the 13 percent rate of 1980. It is, in that regard, a great improvement, he said.

"Everything I look at says if everything else was OK in our economy, 5 percent inflation is fine, we could live with that very well."

"In my opinion inflation will probably be in the area of 5 percent next year. Five percent inflation I think is the right number to plan for next year."

MANY, REBER said, believe the reduction in the inflation rate was achieved by forcing an increase in the unemployment rate. However, that is not the case, he said.

"If you do look at some things which have happened in the last two years or so, you can become quite optimistic there is something afoot that will keep inflation rates lower over the '80s than they were over the second half of the '70s."

The process by which wages and prices are set in this country has undergone some fundamental changes, Reber explained. Industry and labor have realized they cannot continue to pass wage and price hikes on to consumers and remain competitive in a free market. The popularity of low priced imported autos and other products has helped drive the point home.

The nation's smokestack industries (steel, autos, etc.), Reber said, are areas in which supply and demand pressures are forcing both the prices setters and the wage seekers to realize they can have high prices and high wages, but only by the sacrifice of their industry and their jobs.

"IT IS fundamentally changing the way we set wages and prices in this country. And that is half of the problem of inflation," said Reber.

The move toward less governmental regulation of industry has also helped reduce the rate of inflation, Reber said. The effect has happened much faster than anyone expected.

"Interest rate trucking tariffs are down, on average, about 15 or 20 percent. The Teamsters have settled for a contract which, over the next three years, will keep their real wages — inflation adjusted — below what they were in the previous three years."

Reber was less optimistic when forecasting future interest rate trends.

"The prime rate is now 12 percent," Reber commented. "It was as high as 16½ percent three or four months ago. It's down 25 percent and that's pretty dramatic."

"WITH CREDIT demands weak, and inflation at 5 percent, why is the prime 12 percent?" Reber asked rhetorically. "The reason the prime is 12 percent," he explained, "is the cost of funds to the banking system is awfully close to 12 percent."

There are several reasons for the high cost of money, Reber explained.

"First is the Federal Reserve Board. It is now about two years into the program of gradually exorcising from the economy all the extra liquidity and extra inflation potential which have been pumped into the economy over the previous decade. During that process you are going to have interest rates higher than they otherwise would be," Reber said.

"A corollary to that is the Federal Reserve Board has embarked on an operating procedure to achieve its goal that has imparted to interest rates a lot

MMH expected to comply with THFC order to submit study

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gordon W. Hardin, hearing officer for the Texas Health Facilities Commission, said this morning that the THFC will rule today that Midland Memorial Hospital officials must give a copy of the TriBrook long-range planning study to Parkview Hospital attorneys, while MMH officials indicated they would comply with the order.

The commission issued an order last week requesting MMH representatives present documents relating to long-range planning to attorneys for Parkview Hospital. Construction projects proposed by each of the West Texas medical facilities are being considered by the commission this week.

A formal, written order was expected later today regarding a copy of the report prepared by the Illinois-based TriBrook consulting firm on future objectives at Midland Memorial. Attorneys for the hospital initially said they complied with the order, giving other non-privileged documents to Parkview lawyers.

The formal ruling by the THFC isn't expected until later this afternoon, but Hardin disclosed this morning that the commission was going to "compel discovery." In other words, MMH must give a copy of the report to Parkview officials. MMH officials indicated that they have a copy of the report and would turn it over to Parkview officials.

The formal order this afternoon also will address the suspension issue. If the commission finds MMH violated last Monday's order, its case — scheduled to begin at noon today — could be suspended, Hardin said.

Ace Pickens, an attorney for Parkview, filed a subpoena Monday ordering Ray Branson, president of MMH, and Don Davis, a partner in the TriBrook firm, to turn over a copy of the TriBrook study. However, Hardin returned that motion to Pickens this morning, since a subpoena shouldn't be necessary.

In Parkview's final day of testimony Monday, Royce D. Harrell, vice president of American Medical Centers, which owns the hospital, said the proposed Doctors Hospital of the Permian Basin would allow for "much needed improvements" which Parkview cannot presently offer.

"(Doctors Hospital) would benefit patients and doctors because it would truly give the citizens of the area a choice," Harrell said. "Both patients and doctors could choose the facility that meets their needs."

When a new hospital is built, he added, there is a tendency to stay current with medical technology.

The site of the proposed facility, at Loop 250 and Wadley Avenue, was chosen because the land had a reasonable price, proper zoning, access to property and availability of office space, Harrell said.

Parkview seeks to build a new 110-bed facility to be called Doctors Hospital, and Midland Memorial seeks to construct a 77-bed addition at its existing facility.

Sale of Coquina properties complete

IRVINE, Calif. — Fluor Corporation has completed the sale of certain domestic oil and gas producing properties of Midland's Coquina Oil Corporation for $168 million, it was announced today.

The bulk of the properties was purchased by Petro-Lewis Corporation of Denver for $151 million. Two Oklahoma firms, Kaiser-Francis and HCM Company, purchased the balance of the properties, which are scattered in Texas, New Mexico and five other states.

It was not immediately known how the transaction would affect Coquina employees in Midland. A company spokesman said Friday there have been no layoffs due to the pending sale.

A similar agreement to sell Coquina's producing properties to Kerr-McGee Corporation of Oklahoma fell through last May.

Coquina is a subsidiary of St. Joe Minerals Corporation, which is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Fluor. St. Joe bought Coquina in 1977. The Midland company was formed in the early 1970s. It has approximately 175 employees.

Most Coquina officials were in Denver Friday to consummate the deal. The effective date of the transaction is Nov. 1.

Petro-Lewis said that a portion of the properties would be acquired by certain previously-formed Oil and Natural Gas Income Programs limited partnerships. The Denver company raises money through public offerings to acquire producing properties.

Petro-Lewis expects to place additional portions of the properties in partnerships that may subsequently be formed in the income programs.

Fluor retains more than 900,000 net acres of undeveloped oil and gas leasehold properties owned by Coquina, along with some other assets, according to a Fluor spokesman, including 1.6 million barrels of oil and gas reserves. These properties are not for sale at this time, he added.

The Coquina properties were sold in an effort to reduce Fluor's competitive standing with its major customers — other major oil and gas companies.

Fluor is primarily an engineering and construction firm for the oil industry. By holding major producing properties, the company felt it was in major conflict with, or in direct competition with, its clients, the Fluor spokesman said.

Coquina became a part of Fluor when the latter purchased St. Joe Minerals in the summer of 1981. The decision to sell Coquina's producing properties was made shortly thereafter and has been pending for about a year.

Man in custody in connection with shooting death

An investigation is continuing into a shooting that left one man dead and another in custody late Monday afternoon.

Pronounced dead of multiple gunshot wounds to the back, chest and stomach was 33-year-old Glynn Stokes of the Jones Hotel, 105 N. Lee St.

According to police, Stokes had been shot as many as eight times and was found lying on the ground in front of the hotel about 5:50 p.m. He was pronounced dead at Midland Memorial Hospital by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry at 6:37 p.m. An autopsy has been ordered.

Witnesses told officers Stokes, who moved here recently from St. Louis, Mo., had been arguing with another man. The man, a 26-year-old resident of the hotel, was arrested and remained in jail this morning. Formal murder charges are expected to be filed sometime today. A .38-caliber pistol was taken into evidence, according to police.

Harrelson may begin testimony today

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Convicted hitman Charles V. Harrelson could take the stand as early as this afternoon to defend himself against a charge he assassinated U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr., his attorney says.

Attorney Tom Sharpe Jr. presented three alibi witnesses Monday to testify Harrelson was in Dallas, 272 miles north of here, the day Wood was assassinated on May 29, 1979, in San Antonio.

One witness said he saw Harrelson as early as one hour after the slaying.

"I'm going to do a soft shoe," the smiling Harrelson said as he left the courtroom Monday, shuffling his feet in a dancing motion. He had promised last week before his defense began, "We're going to dazzle them with our footwork."

Also on trial are Harrelson's wife, Jo Ann Starr, 41, charged with conspiracy to obstruct justice, and Elizabeth Chagra, 28, charged with conspiracy to murder and to obstruct justice.

Mrs. Chagra's husband, Jimmy, 39, is charged with paying Harrelson to shoot Wood, and will be tried for murder later.

Harrelson, 44, was heartened Monday by a former bank teller, a doorman and a hairstylist who testified they saw Harrelson in Dallas the day of the shooting, anytime from one to three hours after Wood was gunned down. A fourth witness said he may or may not have sold Harrelson a security alarm system that same morning.

The prosecution, before it rested last week, called 83 witnesses and introduced 281 exhibits in a bid to show Harrelson stalked Wood and then shot him in the back for a $250,000 fee. A possible hole in its case, however, could be how Harrelson got back to Dallas after he allegedly killed the judge.

The only testimony the government presented about Harrelson's alleged getaway was from key witness Joseph Chagra, an El Paso attorney.

Chagra testified Harrelson told him he shot Wood in the back with "a clean shot," then drove out of San Antonio before roadblocks were in place.

Flight director Tommy Holloway, in a Houston news conference, expresses his disappointment in the cancellation of a Monday morning space walk planned by astronauts Joe Allen and William Lenoir. The failure of space suits, which led to the decision to abort that phase of the flight, was about all that marred the shuttle's mission.

Cramped quarters part of space life

By PAUL REBER
AP Aerospace Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Life for four in a two-man space shuttle meant an excess of trash and occasional crowding, but few complaints.

"Four (persons) inside a volume that size can be troublesome. They were really roughing it," said Bill Langdoc, head of the crew station integration section at the Johnson Space Center. "But as far as I know they were content."

Garbage was one of the big problems, said Langdoc. The four cubic feet of garbage storage proved insufficient for four men. The bags were stuffed by the end of the flight.

When it came to personal hygiene, astronauts Vance Brand, Robert Overmyer, Joseph Allen and William Lenoir benefitted from the experience of past flights.

Earlier crews tried to take sponge baths by lathering up heavily with soap which did not remove well with wet cloths. They depleted their entire supply of towels and wash cloths in one bath, said Langdoc.

He said the Flight Five crew got a warning to be conservative with the latter, but also was provided a doubled number of towels and wash cloths.

Two types of sleeping bags were provided to hold the astronauts securely in place as they dozed. However, the four men preferred to sleep while floating gently through the cabin.

"From past experience, we knew that sleeping in space is a highly individualized thing," said Langdoc. "These four just preferred to float free."

Previous astronauts have strapped themselves into their seats to sleep. Others have wedged themselves into corners. Astronaut Gordon Fullerton was most comfortable with his head wedged in a corner and his body floating freely.

When the astronauts wanted to stand still, they found that the suction cup shoes provided for this trip didn't work. They were designed to hold the astronauts in one place but they tended to let go when they were supposed to hold, Langdoc said.

The men preferred pads with foot-loops on one side and, on the other, an adhesive which stuck to the deck and ceiling.

The astronauts floated during meals. They generally ate together on the mid-deck, floating around and munching their food from cans or plastic bags, Langdoc said.

He said crews after the fifth flight will be able to sit around a table and eat, just like Earth people.

"We found on Skylab (which had a table) that the crews preferred to do this," said Langdoc.

Kohl encourages summit with Andropov

WASHINGTON (AP) — West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, suggesting the time might be right for improving Soviet-American relations, says President Reagan should seek an early summit with Communist Party leader Yuri Andropov.

After several hours of discussions with Reagan, Kohl said at a news conference Monday night that he would recommend a superpower summit if there were adequate preparations.

Earlier, however, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said there was no indication that a summit would be held anytime soon.

"The standard criteria would be whether something could be achieved there," Speakes said. "Basically, we have not seen anything to indicate that we are closer to a summit."

While suggesting that a relaxation of tensions in the post-Brezhnev era may be possible, Kohl said it would be "absurd" to assume that a change in Moscow's top leadership post will mean a change in the system.

Speaking of Andropov, named Friday to succeed Leonid Brezhnev, Kohl said, "We'll have to wait and see to try and sound him out on what line he is going to take." Brezhnev died Wednesday.

Kohl met over breakfast today with Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn.; John Tower, R-Texas, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, and Richard Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on European affairs.

A Senate aide said interest rates were being discussed. Sitting in on the meeting was Arthur Burns, U.S. ambassador to Germany and former chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

Kohl then headed for New York, where he to give a speech and hold separate meetings with American Jewish groups and with U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

Kohl appeared at the news conference dressed in the tuxedo he wore to a private White House dinner hosted by Reagan earlier in the evening.

In a joint statement issued after their two-hour luncheon meeting, Kohl expressed appreciation that Reagan lifted the sanctions he imposed on U.S.-licensed European firms participating in the Soviet pipeline project.

Reagan and Kohl said they were "ready to conduct relations with the new leadership in Moscow with the aim of extending the areas of cooperation."

At his news conference, Kohl was asked about the controversial discussions among the allies which Reagan said on Saturday had produced "substantial agreement" among them on guidelines for future economic dealings with the Soviets.

France, which joined in the discussions with the United States, West Germany, Great Britain and Italy, has denied it agreed to anything and that Reagan's statement did not "correspond to reality."

Kohl said he agreed with Reagan's statement, but added he could not provide details because he was bound by a joint commitment to secrecy.

He predicted, however, that the situ-

Social Security deficit could reach 13 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unless steps are taken to eliminate Social Security's deficit, the red ink will amount to the equivalent of $25 billion a year in 1982 dollars over the next 75 years, the Congressional Budget Office says.

The agency released a report Monday on ways Congress could wipe out that deficit either by reducing benefits, raising taxes or both.

The Congressional Budget Office said that under the Social Security trustees' intermediate forecast, the system is facing a 13 percent deficit in the long run.

That means that unless changes are made, it will have only 87 cents on hand to pay each $1 in benefits, the budget agency said.

Under the trustees' alternative, optimistic forecast, there would be no long-term deficit, but under a pessimistic scenario, the system's revenues could fall 33 percent of the amount needed, the CBO said.

It laid out a series of ways to wipe out the deficit in the old age and disability funds. The options include gradually reducing benefits, raising the retirement age, higher payroll taxes and making retirees pay income tax on half of their benefits.

Last week the National Commission on Social Security Reform failed to reach agreement on any rescue plan. It will meet again Dec. 10.

But the blue-ribbon panel did agree that the system is facing a shortfall of $150 billion to $200 billion over the rest of the 1980s.

The CBO report said half the long-run deficit could be wiped out by gradually lowering initial benefits for new retirees by 8 percent over a 12-year period starting in 1984.

five flights for the world's first reusable spacecraft and its owner, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. Columbia is now scheduled for an overhaul and the next three flights will be flown by Challenger, now completing final modifications.

Brand guided Columbia through high clouds and calm winds, sun sparkling off the craft, to touch down on Runway 22, a 15,000-foot concrete skirt that sits on California's Mojave Desert.

For re-entry, mission specialist Allen rode in the cockpit, while Lenoir strapped himself into a seat on a lower deck.

He and Overmyer got the "go for deorbit burn" early this morning, and at 5:33 a.m. Pacific time they triggered the rockets high above the Indian Ocean. "On time, good burn," confirmed Brand as the ship headed into Earth's atmosphere.

The braking rockets slowed the shuttle's 17,400-mile-an-hour orbital speed and started it from 184 miles high on a long, blazing descent back to Earth. Columbia plunged into the thickening atmosphere on a course that took it over the Pacific north of Hawaii and across the California coast.

Autoland computers guided the craft to about 40,000 feet and then, well above cloudcover that quit at 15,000, Brand took over.

He put Columbia down 30 seconds early, at 6:33 a.m., just seven minutes after sunrise.

The space shuttle toilet — which was troublesome and the subject of endless bad jokes on earlier missions — had been redesigned for this mission and worked very well.

The toilet will get even better on Challenger when it is prepared for the first woman astronauts. Privacy curtains will be added then.

Compared to the Columbia, Challenger will be a luxury liner, Langdoc said.

Columbia was outfitted basically for two crewmen. A large cabinet crammed with flight test instruments took up about 40 percent of the mid-deck, the "downstairs" room of the shuttle. Equipment for two ejection seats crowded the flight deck.

Both the flight test instruments and ejection seats will be gone from Challenger. Four crewmen will have a lot more room when that craft makes its first voyage in January, said Langdoc.

ation would be clarified over the next three weeks. France's disavowal of Reagan's statement has been an embarrassment to the administration.

Kohl's accession to power last month and his visit here are being viewed in Washington as a plus for German-American relations. His predecessor, Social Democratic leader Helmut Schmidt, was widely admired here but, unlike Kohl, his support for NATO policies often had come under question because of pressure from the influential left-wing faction of his party.

Kohl, however, has the solid backing of his Christian Democratic Union party on such issues as the proposed NATO deployment of medium-range U.S. nuclear missiles late next year.

He is considered more likely than Schmidt to be able to deliver on that commitment.

Likewise, half the deficit could be eliminated by giving higher-paid workers less of a return for their tax dollars.

Some 39 percent of the deficit could be wiped out by reducing early retirement benefits at age 62 from 80 percent to 55 percent of the benefits awarded to 65-year-olds, it said. President Reagan suggested such a change last year, then withdrew it amid heavy criticism.

Gradually raising the retirement age from 65 to 68 between the years 2000 and 2012 would cure 57 percent of the deficit.

The CBO said payroll tax hikes totaling 1.1 percentage points each for workers and employers in 2020 and 2030 would wipe out 52 percent of the deficit; immediate coverage of all government and non-profit workers 29 percent; coverage of federal workers alone 15 percent; and taxation of one-half of Social Security old age benefits 28 percent.

Salvadoran national guardsmen face trial for nuns' slaying

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Five national guardsmen face trial for the 1980 slayings of four American Roman Catholic churchwomen, and a court source says there is sufficient evidence "to hang them."

Monday's ruling by Judge Bernardo Rauda Murcia came 17 days after U.S. Ambassador Deane R. Hinton warned that Washington might sever aid to war-torn El Salvador unless there was progress in this case and one involving the murder of two American land reform advisers.

The guardsmen have until Thursday to appoint lawyers and appeal Rauda Murcia's decision. Prosecutors and the defense then have two weeks to prepare their cases. A five-man jury hears the evidence.

A verdict could come by early January, according to Jose Anibal Jimenez, the judge's secretary.

Although details of the indictment have not been made public, Jimenez told The Associated Press in a telephone interview that the order "means the judge has found enough evidence against the prisoners."

Rauda Murcia "wouldn't take this step unless he had enough to hang them," the secretary said.

The guardsmen face a possible death sentence or 30 years in prison if convicted of premeditated murder.

One defendant, Carlos Joaquin Contreras Palacios, has confessed and implicated the other four guardsmen in the slaying of the churchwomen.

The victims were Maryknoll nuns Ita Ford, 40, of Brooklyn, N.Y., and Maura Clarke, 49, of Queens, N.Y.; lay missionary Jean Donovan, 27, and Ursuline nun Dorothy Kazel, 41, both of Cleveland.

Their families believe the women were killed as part of a conspiracy involving upper-level officials. In their behalf, the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights filed a suit against the State Department for all documents regarding the deaths.

In a letter to President Reagan earlier this year, the Rev. James P. Noonan of the Maryknoll Fathers and Sister Regina McEvoy of the Maryknoll Sisters said the charges may be used to cover even wider violence.

"We find it difficult not to draw the conclusion that your administration is ready to accept from the Salvadoran government a hasty solution to the investigation in order to justify the continuation of military aid," it said.

The women disappeared Dec. 4, 1980, while driving from San Salvador's international airport into the city. Their bodies were found the next day in a shallow grave alongside a highway about 30 miles outside the capital. Their charred van was nearby.

Evidence suggested the women may have been raped.

Guardsmen indicted Monday were Contreras Palacios, Sgt. Luis Antonio

Colindres Aleman, Franco Orlando Contreras, Jose Roberto Moreno Canjura and Daniel Canales Ramirez.

Court sources said that while dozens of people were interviewed in the case, most of the government's evidence is based on pre-trial testimony by Contreras Palacios.

Monday's announcement comes about one month before the Reagan administration is due to certify before Congress that the rightist Salvadoran government is making progress in efforts to improve its human rights record.

Catholic bishops split over letter challenging nuclear weapons policy

By GEORGE W. CORNELL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several Catholic bishops are criticizing a proposed pastoral letter challenging U.S. nuclear weapons policy. With one claiming it minimizes the "horrible sufferings" of those living under dictatorships.

But whether the differences voiced at the National Conference of Catholic Bishops are as extensive as they are blunt remains uncertain.

In any case, the opening debate on Monday among the nation's Roman Catholic bishops on a long-planned and provocative repudiation of using nuclear arms produced some sizzling ecclesiastical fireworks.

Archbishop Philip M. Hannan of New Orleans assailed the draft as minimizing "the horrible sufferings...of those enslaved by Communism and other dictatorships." He also said it wasn't balanced with "the aggression and repression of the Reds."

But Archbishop Raymond G. Hunthausen of Seattle hailed the document as reflecting the "spirit of Christ," and called the current strategy of nuclear deterrence "idolatry" and "profoundly anti-Christian."

The subject was laid aside for Tuesday's sessions on other business matters, with discussion of it resuming Wednesday and Thursday. About 300 bishops are attending the conference.

At Monday's session, the pope's representative in this country, Archbishop Pio Laghi, admonished that the bishops act only with "the greatest possible unanimity" on such a sensitive issue.

If their teaching is "either muted or fractionalized," he said, it "would not serve the best interests of either the church or the world." But he offered "my encouragement" to the effort.

Several bishops branded false published reports that Pope John Paul II or other Vatican authorities had sought to curb or tone down the proposed pastoral teaching letter.

Such reports "are just not true," said Archbishop Joseph L. Bernardin of Chicago, head of a committee which has shepherded the document through more than a year of hearings and draftings.

He and others said that while the Vatican was being kept fully informed about the pastoral letter, there has been no pressure applied from there.

The draft letter calls for a nuclear freeze, condemns any threat or intention to use nuclear weapons as immoral, and says even possession of such weapons as a deterrent is tolerable only if steps are being taken toward mutual disarmament.

The 106-page document also condemns any first use of nuclear weapons or their targeting on bases near population centers — both now features of U.S. nuclear strategy.

In the opening debate, Cardinal Terence Cooke of New York said the document has "great potential...for seriously dividing our church and nation."

But Hannan, the bishop from New Orleans, said, "The letter ignores completely our duty to defend Western Europe." This echoed a criticism by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger that the United States and its NATO allies, without the option of a nuclear response, lacked adequate defense against conventional attack.

On the other hand, Cardinal John Krol of Philadelphia strongly defended the letter as recognizing "the current harsh realities," the obligation to resist tyranny and the right of self-defense.

But he said "weapons of massive destruction which attack not only the unjust aggressor but also vast numbers of non-combatants, exceed the limits of the right of self-defense, and as such merit unequivocal condemnation."

AEC members didn't want above-ground testing but feared Soviets, officials disclose

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Atomic Energy Commission members "would have loved" to do without above-ground atomic testing in Nevada, but reluctantly agreed because of fears the Soviet Union would create the first hydrogen bomb, officials testified.

The testimony by two former general managers of the commission came Monday as defense lawyers began winding up their case in a trial to determine whether fallout from open-air atomic testing in the 1950s and 1960s caused cancer among people downwind.

Henry Gill, the Justice Department's lead attorney for the defense, said he planned to rest his case after calling one witness today. The witness, Dr. Robert Anderson, a physician, was expected to testify on whether fallout caused certain cancers being considered in the lawsuit.

After Anderson's testimony, plaintiffs' attorney Ralph Hunsaker said he would call a University of Utah researcher as a rebuttal witness.

About 150 witnesses have testified and more than 2,000 items have been offered as evidence in the trial, which began Sept. 14.

When testimony ends, the trial is to recess for a month before final arguments. U.S. District Judge Bruce Jenkins, who is hearing the non-jury trial, has tentatively scheduled the arguments for Dec. 17 or Dec. 20.

Jenkins is then expected to take several weeks or months before issuing his decision.

On Monday, two former general managers of the Atomic Energy Commission testified that public safety was a major concern of the AEC, which later became the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Kenneth Fields, AEC general manager from 1955 through 1958, said commission members reluctantly accepted the need for above-ground testing. "They all would have loved it if they never had a test," he said.

The suit's 1,192 plaintiffs contend fallout from testing between 1951 and 1962 caused people downwind in Nevada, southern Utah and northern Arizona to sicken or die from cancer. They also allege the government knew or should have known the fallout was dangerous, but did not adequately warn or protect residents in the fallout paths.

U.S. army maneuvers in Japan

TOKYO (AP) — U.S. Army troops began their first maneuvers in Japan in 25 years Tuesday in a joint exercise at the foot of Mount Fuji with the Japanese Ground Self-Defense Force, Japan's Defense Agency said.

The three days of maneuvers, which followed a six-day preparatory drill, are code-named Yamato '82, a Defense Agency spokesman said.

He said 500 Japanese troops are participating in the exercises alongside 200 Americans from the 9th Infantry Division, Fort Lewis, Wash.

The purpose of the maneuvers is to "repel a hypothetical enemy attack."

The U.S. Army has not stationed troops or carried out maneuvers in Japan since 1957.

Opening lead: Three of ♠.
North-South appeared to have reached an unbeatable four spade contract. But a clever falsecard by West turned a silk purse into a sow's ear.

South showed his solid six-card spade suit by making a jump rebid at his second turn. Since North was near minimum for his two-over-one response, he could do no more than raise to game.

West led his singleton club. East won the queen with the ace and returned the deuce. West ruffed with the jack of spades (!) and shifted to a diamond. Suddenly, a simple contract was in danger of going down-to defeat. It seemed to declarer that East's return of the deuce of clubs was a suit preference signal for a diamond. If the diamond finesse lost, declarer would have to rely on the heart finesse for his contract.

Then declarer remembered that West had ruffed the second club with the jack of spades. If that were indeed West's only trump, there was a much safer line for the contract. He rose with the ace of diamonds and played the king of clubs. He discarded a diamond on this trick, and confidently expected the king to win. To his utter consternation, West ruffed with the deuce and exited with the king of diamonds. Although declarer ruffed this trick, he was stranded with a heart loser.

We know that there are sceptics among you who would suggest that declarer should not have accepted West's jack of spades at face value because it would mean that he had been dealt two black singletons. We prefer to give full credit to West's clever falsecard at trick two. Had he ruffed the second club with the two of trumps rather than the jack, declarer would have had no chance to go wrong. He would have relied on finessses-in both red suits rather than hope that he could get a diamond sluff on a high club, and the contract would have come home.

'Blue and Gray' strong on detail

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — The Civil War and "The Blue and the Gray" each took four years to finish. "Compared to us," said the man in charge of the television movie, "Gone With the Wind" was a breeze.

Bob Markell, head of CBS' miniseries unit, said realism was a prime concern in the 78 days required to shoot the three-part series. That took the project to rural northwestern Arkansas.

Almost 6,000 local people were judged to have the right look and made their TV debut as extras. "Their faces had Arkansas written all over them," Markell said. "The long hair and facial hair back then was close to what they're wearing today."

This integrity impressed historical writer William C. Davis, editor of the monthly magazine Civil War Times.

"It was almost a return to the ancestral past," wrote Davis, who watched some location shooting. "Blue and gray were at it again."

Indeed, "The Blue and the Gray," which has its second of three installments tonight, was almost obsessed with the accuracy of historical detail.

For example, Rip Torn, as Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, insisted on shooting a scene again because he realized he had played the right-handed Grant writing a dispatch with his left hand.

Costumes, of course, help transport the viewer back 120 years. "You've got to have clothing that looks like it didn't just come out of a closet," Markell said.

Civil War re-enactment groups brought their uniforms and weapons to help authenticate the front-line soldiers in the big battle scenes. But CBS still had to make many of the 600 military uniforms and other apparel, including Gen. Robert E. Lee's boots, which cost more than $1,000 to reproduce.

"There haven't been many Civil War movies done before," Markell said. "We couldn't borrow much." What they could borrow included Errol Flynn's uniforms from the 1941 movie, "They Died With Their Boots On," and costumes from "Gone With the Wind," filmed in 1939.

Considering television's fear of offending viewers, tonight's battle scenes are quite graphic. "We were as violent as necessary to show that war is not painless," Markell said. "We didn't exploit, but it would have been a disservice to present an antiseptic war."

Some of the authenticity is provided by the actors who play key historical figures, such as Gregory Peck as Abraham Lincoln.

Peck, 66, appearing in his first television drama, remembered childhood parades in his hometown when old Union and Confederate soldiers marched on Independence Day. Peck is also a fervent admirer of Lincoln and has more than 1,000 books about the Civil War president in his personal library.

When Peck portrayed Gen. Douglas MacArthur on film, he rejected heavy-makeup. But Lincoln's face is etched in every schoolchild's memory, so the likeness had to be exact. And it is.

A golden opportunity

Style can mean much to a man — or a woman — in the realm of international politics that so pervades the Washington, D.C., scene. For example, take the area of foreign policy. Having taken the bull by the horns, Secretary of State George Shultz is beginning to erase, albeit delicately, the confused, arrogant style of the office under Alexander Haig.

Shultz, who took office on July 17, is a "utility infielder" for the federal government, well-versed in several areas and polished as a statesman. He served the administrations of Dwight Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy, Lyndon B. Johnson and Richard Nixon. His experience with those administrations helped smooth his transition to the Reagan administration and the difficult task of putting back together a coherent foreign policy.

But it's evident that progress is being made in that direction. In a recent issue of U.S. News & World Report, it was noted that "in striking contrast to his volatile and combative predecessor, Shultz is emerging as the consummate team player — low-key, self-effacing and determined to be seen as 'the President's man' at the State Department."

Feeling comfortable

News that Solidarity leader Lech Walesa was freed and that martial law in Poland could be lifted soon indicates the Polish government and its Soviet bosses feel they are in command of the situation despite President Brezhnev's death.

There is evidence the Gdansk shipyard worker no longer is considered a threat to Poland's internal security. There was no longer a need to continue his imprisonment at Arlamow, where he has been kept under house arrest.

On the other hand, the Polish government certainly has felt outside pressure. President Reagan has made Walesa's release a condition of lifting U.S. trade sanctions against Poland. Leaders and the people of several other nations also sharply protested the Walesa confinement.

Walesa became an international hero in 1980 when nationwide strikes rocked Poland. He and several thousand Solidarity members were arrested last December when ment. The result: A notable change not only in the style but in the character of U.S. foreign policy. The hard-line anti-Soviet thrust remains unaltered. But there is a continuing shift from a confrontational posture on the international scene and from an emphasis on military solutions.

It is in the area of relations between the two superpowers — the United States and the Soviet Union — that Shultz has a golden opportunity for positive headway. With the death last week of Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev, and the appointment of Yuri Andropov as general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party, it would seem that the time is right to direct concerted effort at relieving the tensions between the two world powers and striving for an adjusted course of peace.

While it's understood that Andropov may not be conducive to a change of course away from the policies of his predecessor at the present, Shultz's abilities should be wisely channeled in that direction. This looks like the correct time in history for this approach and Shultz's style looks right for the occasion. It's a golden opportunity that should not be overlooked.

Polish government, tormented by the massive strikes, invoked martial law.

Still defiant as of October, Walesa continued his refusal to come to terms. Then recently Walesa wrote to Poland's Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, requesting a meeting. In the letter the labor leader said, "The time has come to clear up certain issues and take steps leading toward agreement."

One reason for Walesa's change of heart may be the fate of Solidarity. The union he helped create was banned Oct. 8 by Poland's parliament. A national work stoppage on Nov. 10, called by Solidarity to protest parliament's action, drew only a few thousand of Poland's 13 million workers.

No matter what happens, the Polish people can be proud of the past two years. Demonstrations against long work hours and low living standards have resulted in definite gains. Solidarity has been banned and forced underground, but it is not yet dead.

Another View:

A collegiate standard

A recent huddle in Washington indicates that the fuss over corruption in intercollegiate athletics is more than a transient concern. Indeed, the caliber of the participants suggests that the distorted role of athletics in higher education is increasingly recognized and an effort to remedy widespread abuse is accelerating.

Twenty presidents from name-brand colleges convened a meeting of the American Council on Education's Special Committee on Campus Sports and drew up several proposals for the annual meeting of the National Collegiate Athletic Association — the College of Cardinals for college sports.

The proposals are not revolutionary. They are, in fact, tardy, but they are appropriate. For example, the presidents recommended an initial eligibility standard for athletes in Division One schools — the center ring of intercollegiate athletics where pressures for high performance and a share of fat TV revenue are more intense.

The presidents want the NCAA to require member institutions to insist on a demonstrated ability to read, write and factor equal to the demands of college classroom work. Basic enough for a student-athlete, you'd think.

However, the professionalization of college sports has led many institutions to bend admission standards to get promising wide receivers ers or point guards. The relaxed standards may be justified as benefiting minority or disadvantaged students, providing them opportunity to gain an education while they score a slew of points.

Too often, though, the bent standards are never straightened; the remedial academic work and careful supervision that are obligatory get overlooked. Put bluntly, many of the talented young performers are cheated in the long run.

The NCAA may squirm over the academic-standards proposal. It will be argued: A (relatively) rigorous admission policy could penalize some athletes, many of them from minority groups, who might benefit from college even if not up to intellectual snuff when admitted.

Turn the argument on its head, though. If young athletes wanted to play in the collegiate big time under the new policy, they would realize that adequate academic preparation was necessary. That could provide a helpful incentive during the high school years.

We hope this initiative by the prestigious college presidents signifies more aggressive involvement by them in the future. At some point, they will come face to face with the probability that even deeper changes in the values and habits of intercollegiate athletics are essential.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Federal workers punished for citing peril

WASHINGTON — You might think that employees who worry about the danger of the government's radioactive materials being spewed into the atmosphere or being dumped willy-nilly into inadequate disposal facilities would get respectful attention at least. But you'd be wrong.

Two employees of the Los Alamos National Laboratory who worried about the facility's safety measures wound up being fired or forced to quit. Here's their story:

Meliton Garcia was an industrial hygienist at the northern New Mexico laboratory. His job was reasonably straightforward: He was supposed to make sure that the air-filter systems in areas where radioactive material is processed actually worked.

But when he blew the whistle on potential health problems, Garcia says, he was harassed and passed over for promotion. His office furniture was dumped in a hallway and he was moved to an unheated trailer. He eventually quit in frustration.

When Garcia went to work at Los Alamos in 1978, he soon discovered that many of the filter systems designed to catch minute particles of radioactive material had not been given the annual inspections required by government and industry standards.

"A review of the history shows that many of the filter banks that are potentially loaded with plutonium, other radioactive substances and carcinogens have not been tested as required ... for many years," Garcia wrote in an internal 1978 memo.

Los Alamos, Garcia wrote, "would be found negligent ... if any of these systems were to release highly toxic contaminants through the exhaust stacks." In fact, Garcia wrote, a leak had already occurred, and one exhaust system had to be shut down due to a radiation leak around a faulty filter.

Garcia's forthright memo didn't please his bosses at Los Alamos. He told his associate John Dillon that nobody disputed his factual data. Instead, the laboratory officials ordered him to rewrite his memo.

The rewritten version of Garcia's scary memo contained the same factual information, but it deleted references in the original to lab negligence and the "absence or near absence of any testing during the past eight years."

Garcia's study was still embarrassing to the brass at Los Alamos. He noted that, while federal standards required annual checks of the laboratory's 434 filter banks, only 32 had been inspected in 1977 — and that was the best year.

"They got upset because I pointed out something they were very negligent in," said Garcia, who now teaches at the University of Arizona. "If I had gone there and just laid low — signed my name to everything — I'd still be there, and they'd still be exposing people" to radioactive material in the air.

The other conscientious Los Alamos employee who got fired for trying to do her job is Margaret Anne Rogers, a geologist who was hired in 1973 and was assigned the task of figuring out how safely the laboratory had disposed of its tons of radioactive garbage.

She did her job conscientiously — too conscientiously, as it turned out. She checked into laboratory records dating back to World War II and found that, in some cases, radioactive waste had been dumped indiscriminately and in poor locations. As a result, some areas were contaminated. Rogers recommended swift corrective action.

Instead of acting on Rogers' recommendations, Los Alamos fired her by eliminating her job. She appealed to an outside arbitrator, who ruled that she should be reinstated. The arbitrator found that Rogers had been fired for blowing the whistle on Los Alamos' unsafe dumping practices — in short, for doing her job. Rogers, the arbitrator said, was "taken to task for having voiced concerns about waste disposal practices."

The Los Alamos hierarchy ignored the arbitrator's order. Rogers was assigned to a "quality assurance" program, instead of to her old job, where she might have produced further embarrassing reports. A lab spokesman said he would not comment on either Garcia or Rogers, as both cases are currently in the courts.

PARTING SHOT: Robert Nimmo resigned as head of the Veterans Administration after coming under heavy fire for spending big bucks on office redecoration, personal air travel, chauffeured limousine service and other perquisites. And perhaps nothing in his extravagant tenure became him like the leaving of it.

Rather than have a farewell memo tacked up on the bulletin board, Nimmo sent a letter to all 226,500 VA employees expressing his "heartfelt appreciation" for their support during his 21 months in office. The document included the text of his letter of resignation to President Reagan and Reagan's response.

Nimmo's swan song cost the taxpayers $13,965.

The farewell missive did have one profound bit of wisdom in it. Nimmo stated: "A most remarkable attribute of the federal employee is the ability to provide dedicated and competent service no matter who is in charge."

POLITICAL POTPOURRI: New Mexico is not only the Land of Enchantment, but evidently the Land of High Hopes for offspring of successful politicians. The sons of two former Cabinet members, as well as those of two former members of Congress, recently ran for office in the Sun Belt state. The voters were unimpressed, percentage-wise. The sons of former Secretary of State Dean Rusk, former Interior Secretary Stewart Udall and former Sen. Vance Hartke, D-Ind., all lost. Only Mike Runnels, son of the late Rep. Harold Runnels, D-N.M., won. He'll be the state's new lieutenant governor.

Some aides to defeated Republicans are evidently anticipating that the increased Democratic majority will be pushing jobless benefits. Said one positive-thinking Republican staffer: "Looking on the bright side, with all these Democrats coming up here, it might be worth my while to be unemployed."

INSIDE REPORT:

Gasoline tax hike marks Reagan departure

WASHINGTON — Moments after President Reagan told his press conference Thursday that it would not take a palace coup after all for him to support higher gas taxes, one of his anti-tax economic advisers voiced his own disapproval of the scheme, but added: "If we get away with just that, we'll be well ahead of the game."

The nickel-a-gallon tax to finance public works spending is, therefore, a ploy to appease growing bipartisan hunger on Capitol Hill for old-fashioned pump-priming in the New Deal tradition. It is supposed to preempt ambitious schemes for far more spending and far higher taxes.

However improbable that goal, the gas-tax ploy marks another benchmark in the administration's departure from basic principles. It undercuts both the New Federalism and free-market economics; it signals that the White House is moving toward accommodation, not confrontation, with the expanded Democratic majority in the House and increasingly fractious Republicans in the Senate.

It also provides fresh evidence that Reagan is no match for the concentrated barrage from his advisers. Indeed, his turnaround on the gas tax raises this question: Can he withstand the renewed spend-and-tax syndrome no matter how much he protests?

Consider the private White House briefing of Sept. 28 in preparation for the night's press conference. In the critique of Reagan's answers during a question-and-answer prep session, budget director David Stockman cautioned him about promising a balanced budget in the years ahead.

But, Reagan asked, wouldn't the $100 billion tax increase he reluctantly swallowed last summer at least trim the projected future deficit? No, Stockman replied, the deficits will get bigger. Stunned, the president said: "If I had known that, I never would have backed the tax cut." For the next 10 minutes of the briefing, Reagan's eyes glazed over and his mind seemed detached.

Accordingly, at that night's press conference, when he was asked about new tax hikes and "specifically, an increase in the gasoline tax," he replied: "Unless there's a palace coup and I'm overthrown (laughter) or overthrown, no." Hearing that, and coupling it with his shock during the afternoon briefing session, White House insiders assumed the president had drawn the line.

What's more, there were plenty of arguments inside the administration to bolster the president's instincts against the gas tax, plugged relentlessly for two years by Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis. Stockman, for once opposing higher taxes, has argued that the non-interstate highways most in need of repair are the responsibility of the states. Reagan's New Federalism would dictate that if states want to repair their roads, they should raise their own gasoline taxes.

The more sophisticated argument at the Treasury discounts the notion that the gas tax actually creates jobs. The increase in the price of gasoline could cost as many jobs in the energy industry as it creates building highways.

But even the Treasury is split. At last week's Cabinet council meeting the day before Reagan's press conference, Stockman was the only solid voice against the tax. Even White House aide Rich Williamson, usually strong against higher taxes, was benevolently neutral in his role as the presidential liaison with hard-pressed state governments.

At last week's press conference (this first since Sept. 28), the president apparently had forgotten that his "palace coup" crack answered a specific gasoline-tax question, claiming he was referring only to "general" tax increases. More remarkably, Reagan had swallowed whole Lewis's contention that the tax is a "user fee" (Treasury experts consider it, plain and simple, an excise tax). Reagan also reverted to New Deal logic in declaring "There would be jobs created" by the tax.

The hope of conservatives inside the administration that this at least would forestall worse retreats is dimmed by decisions facing the president this week. He will be asked by his budget-makers whether he wants to slash defense spending, raise taxes or abandon the balanced-budget goal.

Ronald Reagan, still ignoring the monetary policy that has created this deep recession, is entrapped in the budget process that led to the huge tax increase (and no relief in budget deficits). The immemorial pressures to spend and tax are not going to be assuaged by the ploy of a 5-cent gas tax.

CHARLEY REESE

Militant ignorance dangerous

Some people are ignorant about most things. All people are ignorant about some things. Therefore, it is no sin to be ignorant.

It is a sin, however, to organize on the basis of ignorance and militantly agitate, demonstrate, and propagandize a point of view based on ignorance. Unfortunately, militant ignorance is a growing phenomena.

Charley Reese

A good illustration is the anti-nuclear movement. It has, with the help of liberal elements of the press, just about turned the American public against nuclear energy. It claims nuclear power is highly dangerous. It claims there are safe, clean alternative energy sources (solar, biomass, windmills). It claims there is no safe way to dispose of the wastes.

Well, are all these claims true? Are they based on scientific knowledge? Or are they based on ignorance and politics?

Stanley Rothman and S. Robert Lichter, in an essay published in "Public Opinion," shed some light on the issue. They sampled 1,000 scientists after the Three Mile nuclear reactor accident. They supplemented this with a random stratified sample based on areas of expertise.

They found that 53 percent of all the scientists sampled, 70 percent of the energy experts and 92 percent of the nuclear experts believe we should proceed rapidly with nuclear energy development. Only 1 percent believe biomass can make a large contribution to our energy needs in the next 20 years; only 2 percent think solar energy can.

Ninety-nine percent of the nuclear experts say the risks are acceptable; 98 percent would be willing to live in cities with nuclear plants; and 100 percent believe there is enough knowledge to solve nuclear problems.

On a scale of plus 9 to minus 9, the researchers found that nuclear experts rate 7.86 in support for nuclear energy, journalists at the New York Times, the Washington Post and the TV networks rate only 4.7. TV reporters and producers rate minus 1.89 and public television journalists, a minus 3.25.

A study by the Battelle Center found that by 1976, in four leading periodicals, anti-nuclear stories outnumbered positive nuclear stories by 2 to 1. A study of television was even more revealing. The most widely quoted sources on the subject in a 10-year period were Ralph Nader and the Union of Concerned Scientists.

Nader is a lawyer and an anti-business rabble rouser. The Union of Concerned Scientists is a political outfit with an estimated membership of 200 out of 130,000 scientists.

The authors of the study concluded: "In summary, the scientific community is highly supportive of nuclear energy development, regards nuclear energy as relatively safe, and is not persuaded of the short-term viability of various forms of solar energy ... leading journalists' attitudes toward nuclear energy are correlated with their political ideologies. The more liberal the journalist, the more likely he is to oppose nuclear energy ... the best predictor of opposition to nuclear energy is the belief that American society is unjust."

We live in an age of technology. It is difficult enough to understand our environment when everybody is honest and informed; it becomes impossible when ignorance is propagated for political purposes.

Just remember that at Three Mile Island, the worst nuclear power accident in United States history, the score was: nobody killed, nobody injured and no escape of dangerous levels of radiation. Compare that to the safety record of coal mining.

Domenici predicts higher deficits

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Pete V. Domenici, the Republican chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, today predicted budget deficits of $200 billion or more a year through 1986 and continued high unemployment.

To combat the deficit, Domenici, R-N.M., called for a fee on imported oil and a review of plans to automatically adjust income taxes to offset inflation.

In a speech prepared for delivery to the U.S. League of Savings Associations meeting in New Orleans, and made available here, Domenici said, "The recovery in 1983 will be anemic, at least by historical, post-recession standards."

Speaking just three hours before the president was scheduled to appear before the group, Domenici outlined some elements he said he hoped Congress and the Reagan administration could agree on when budget action is completed next year.

"I do not believe that a collision between Congress and the administration is inevitable," Domenici said. "I know that such a collision, if it were to occur, would be destructive."

Administration officials now are preparing budget recommendations that the president will submit to the new Congress in January.

Through 1986, Domenici said, "Deficits will be in the range of $180 to $200 billion or more for each of those years, if present policy is followed and the economy grows at no more than 3 to 4 percent a year, which seems likely."

He added, "I believe that a deficit of $180 billion in 1983 will not be dangerous, although it is larger than I would like."

In the 1982 fiscal year, that ended Sept. 30, the government posted a $110.7 billion shortfall.

Some administration officials privately have acknowledged deficits in the range that Domenici noted.

"I personally believe we need a large oil import fee" for a variety of reasons "as we try to close the deficits we face," Domenici said.

He did not elaborate on the oil fee, but earlier this year a $5 a barrel fee on imported oil was discussed as congressional and administration negotiators tried to hammer out a compromise budget outline.

Estimates of revenue from such a fee, which the administration has not said it would support, run as high as $28 billion a year.

Domenici also said, "It may be that we will have to review the prudence of indexing the tax system, in light of the extraordinary deficits we face."

Indexing was the farthest-reaching part of the tax cut legislation Congress passed last year. Although Reagan did not seek it, he eventually embraced the provision which will cut taxes automatically each year, starting in 1985, to offset some of the inflation of the previous year.

However, Domenici said the basic individual and business tax cuts scheduled to take effect this year should be retained.

Domenici also said, "It is likely that unemployment will remain at very high levels."

Scientists discover skeletons in Herculaneum

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Mount Vesuvius buried the Roman city of Pompeii and much of its population, the people of neighboring Herculaneum were thought to have escaped. It now appears many did not make it.

Scientists have discovered more than 80 remarkably well-preserved human skeletons in the ruins of Herculaneum, and suspect that hundreds more might lie beneath the volcanic debris, the National Geographic Society announced today.

The discovery is significant because few other complete skeletons of ancient Romans survive. The society is sponsoring efforts to preserve the find, which is in danger of decay from exposure.

The find includes bones of an oar-clutching sailor lying beside a capsize boat, a woman with a hand still adorned with gold gemstone rings and a cluster of 12 skeletons huddled together in embraces of death.

Discovery of so many skeletons on what was the beachfront of the town is the first indication that large numbers of people were overtaken by volcanic ash and stone as they tried to flee by sea, said Dr. Giuseppe Maggi, director of the Herculaneum excavation.

Because few remains were found previously, scholars thought most of the townspeople had escaped the fate of many of their neighbors.

Herculaneum is believed to have been a wealthy resort community of about 4,000 persons when Vesuvius erupted on Aug. 24 and 25 in the year A.D. 79.

Located in a suburb of present-day Naples, the town was a few miles from the base of the volcano and 10 miles from Pompeii. Its seashore, now buried under 80 feet of solidified ash, is 500 yards inland from the present Mediterranean shore.

The cache of skeletons was found in and around a large public bath near the old beach outside the town walls. Two terraces supported by stone arches connected the bath with two nearby religious buildings.

While many people fled Herculaneum on foot after the first day of eruptions, which buried Pompeii and 2,000 of its citizens, others stayed near the shore awaiting rescue by ship, scientists believe.

The second day of eruptions sent an avalanche of debris pouring onto Herculaneum at 60 miles per hour, overwhelming and obliterating the town.

Herculaneum remained lost until 1709, when a well digger broke through to an underground theater. Although the town was tunneled in search of art and treasure, it wasn't until the last century that archeologists systematically began removing the blanket of debris.

Recent excavation at the old beachfront led to discovery of four skeletons in 1980 and triggered seeping groundwater. Workers dug trenches to combat the water and under arches supporting the terraces found more skeletons, most of them this year, researchers said.

The skeletons are all nearly complete from head to toe, scientists say, and are the first human remains from the Roman era to be studied by modern scientific techniques.

Among the findings so far are that many of the victims had sound teeth, attributed to the low-sugar diet of the time.

Man learns potential lamp actually ignition for bomb

GULF BREEZE, Fla. (AP) — Warren Anderson thought a metal cylinder and cone he found on the road would make a great lamp — until learning it was the ignition mechanism for a 2,000-pound Air Force bomb.

The discovery Monday afternoon sent Anderson and his neighbors fleeing their homes in this Gulf Coast community until a bomb disposal team from nearby Eglin Air Force Base retrieved the device.

The guidance and ignition mechanism contains no explosives, but heats itself to 3,000 degrees to ignite a bomb and could have caused a fire, said Santa Rosa County Civil Defense Director John Wilkinson.

Anderson, 20, who installs sprinkler systems for a living, said he found the device about four feet from the roadway on an isolated street as he was returning from the county landfill Sunday.

Linebacking safer than cheerleading

Texas Tech and Southern Methodist University were waging a battle of attrition on the field, but it was the cheerleaders they were carting off in litters.

Even before the game, it was evident that the fans in stands, though easily aroused to boisterous demonstrations for their heroes, must be tough critics, who demand 100 per cent from their yell leaders. One SMU lass was in cast and on crutches even before the game.

After a second half TD by Tech, another fell down presumably endeavoring to escape the Masked Rider of the South Plains as he sprinted around Jones Stadium on Happy VII. It's a tradition started when Kirk Fulton, his gaping blowing in the Florida breeze, first galloped around the stadium aboard Blackie at the 1953 Gator Bowl game against Auburn. Since then it has been part of the scene. Everyone expects the black stallion to spring around Jones Stadium after Tech scores.

They carted the young lady off in an ambulance, but it was reported later she suffered only a minor scratch.

In the first half, a Texas Tech cheerleader suffered a broken arm, and, although her arm protruded grotesquely, she left the premises under her own power.

A cheerleader in a cast or on crutches is not that uncommon a sight in major college stadiums these days. Maybe it's time to go back the good ol' Sis Boom Baa, Rickety-Rack business or, perhaps, emulate the pros with "precision" group cheering squads.

THE DISTRICT 4-5A race was a tremendous argument for the expansion of the UIL playoff system to include runnersup as well as champions in post-season play. Odessa Permian was the runaway champion, but interest in the race remained intense until the final whistle of the final game. And, with four teams tied for second, forcing a coin-flip decision, it was everything expansion advocates had envisioned... and more.

Saturday night, we saw the other side of the coin. The biggest argument against the enlarged playoff field, Lubbock Monterey, the second place team in 5-5A, didn't look like it belonged on the same field with the Panthers, who appeared to be something less than inspired, yet won in a yawn, 29-6.

And another thing, how come Permian had to play at Lubbock. Granted Jones Stadium was the logical spot for a crowd in excess of 20,000, but it seems as though the district champion has earned home-field advantage for the first game, at least. The UIL, however, feels a seeded spot in the playoff pairings is all the advantage a district winner deserves.

BOBBY LEACH'S 91-yard kickoff return to give SMU its 34-27 victory over Texas Tech Saturday, surpassed his entire output for the 1981 season when the Tallahassee, Fla., sophomore returned six kickoffs for 81 yards.

How did a kid from Florida wind up at SMU? Quite simple. His father, now a vice president at Florida State, was Dean of Students at SMU from 1973 through 1978. Since the 5-10, 163-pounder finished only third in the state high school 100-yard dash, apparently he was overlooked by the Florida schools.

Blane Smith, who handled the kickoff and threw the lateral, is a 5-11, 185 junior from Houston Yates. He probably will never play pro football, but he has a cousin, Woody Green, who played for Kansas City, and another cousin, Richard Lewis, who played for Buffalo, back when there was an NFL Smith, a history major, was a National Honor Society member in high school.

TEXAS TECH'S performance Saturday was no surprise to All-American candidate Eric Dickerson, who was discounted as a Heisman Trophy candidate by a Los Angeles Times writer, because "he's only a part-time player."

The Mustangs' Pony Express (Dickerson and Eric James) was shut out by Tech at Lubbock in 1980, the only time that had ever happened.

"Maybe their record is not that good," says Eric. "But I always thought Tech was one of the hardest hitting teams in the Southwest Conference. I even thought that when I was in high school."

Okay, Eric, so how did you get away?

Pearson may retire for front-office job

DALLAS (AP) — Drew Pearson, the Dallas Cowboys' all-time leading receiver, said he is prepared to retire if offered a front-office position with the new United States Football League.

"The strike has taken a year from me, basically at the end of my career," Pearson said Monday. "If a sports management position came up that was worthwhile in a city I could enjoy with a certain amount of security, then I would definitely retire right now."

Pearson, who turns 32 in January, earlier said he planned to retire after the 1983 season.

But Pearson said the strike by the National Football League Players Association has made him re-evaluate his plans. He said he plans to contact the 12 USFL teams in search of a player personnel or public relations job.

Pearson said coming back next year, if the 1982 season is not resumed, would be too risky.

"Getting back in shape and getting the desire again is not the problem," he said. "When you're 32, people think you're over the hill... I've seen indications from a lot of other players with the Cowboys that once you reach a certain age, it becomes tougher for you to get accepted."

TCU's Dry refuses to resign, gets fired

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Texas Christian was looking for its 28th head football coach while the 27th coach, F.A. Dry, prepared for his final game at the helm of the Horned Frogs.

Dry was fired Monday, effective next Sunday, by Chancellor William Tucker. Dry has two years left on his contract at some $50,000 a season.

The 3-7 Horned Frogs play Texas A&M in College Station on Saturday.

Athletic Director Frank Windegger estimated the Horned Frogs would have a new coach in about three weeks with speculation running from Leon Fuller of Colorado State to the small college ranks with Jim Wacker of Southwest Texas State.

Dry announced his dismissal after six years at the TCU helm in a telephone call to The Associated Press, saying "They gave me a chance to resign, but I told them I had more class than that."

TCU is 12-50-3 under Dry, who came to TCU from Tulsa in 1977.

"I'M NOT bitter. I feel like I've got too much class to be bitter," Dry said. "But TCU didn't give us a chance this year. They (the critics) started in on us the second week of the season."

Noting the termination was effective Sunday, Dry said wryly, "... I guess they wanted to be sure I brought the team back from College Station."

Windegger said TCU was demanding a winning program. TCU went 2-9 during both of Dry's first two seasons, and then went 2-8-1, 1-10 and 2-7-2.

"It was the wins and losses. F.A. is a good man and he brought more talent here, but this is a harsh business and F.A. knows it," Windegger said.

TCU beat Utah State, Rice and Baylor, but lost three SWC games by a total of nine points. The Horned Frogs led Texas at halftime Saturday, but eventually fell 38-21 thanks to a rash of second-half turnovers and a dropped potential touchdown pass.

"WE WERE just on the verge of turning this program around," Dry said. "We were so close for this to happen."

"We thought F.A. would turn it around this year," Windegger said, "but he was snakebit, or whatever you want to call it."

Tucker admitted Dry had little talent when he replaced Jim Sofner and said "he has done much to rebuild the program. He is a man of integrity and I appreciate what he has done for the institution."

"TCU is not a win-at-any-cost institution," the chancellor said. "We do, however, want to enjoy winning seasons and become a consistently tough competitor."

Tide rolls off of AP's Top 20 list

By the Associated Press

Georgia and Southern Methodist remained 1-2 today in The Associated Press college football poll, while Arizona State dropped from third to eighth after suffering its first loss of the season. Penn State inched ahead of Nebraska into third place and Alabama fell out of the Top Twenty for the first time in six years.

Georgia, seeking its second national championship in three years, is No. 1 for the second week in a row following a 19-14 victory over Auburn. The Bulldogs received 47 of 59 first-place votes and 1,167 of a possible 1,180 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

SMU pulled out an amazing 34-27 triumph over Texas Tech on a 91-yard run with four seconds left following a bobbled kickoff and a lateral pass. The Mustangs, the only unbeaten-untied major college team other than Georgia, received eight first-place votes and 1,110 points.

However, they lost ground to the Bulldogs. Last week, Georgia led SMU 33-19 in first-place votes and 1,150-1,126 in points, with 59 voters participating.

Penn State jumped from fifth to third with two first-place ballots and 1,007 points by defeating Notre Dame 24-14. The Nittany Lions took over third place from Arizona State, which lost to Washington 17-13.

The other two first-place votes went to Nebraska, which held onto fourth place by trouncing Iowa State 48-10. The Cornhuskers received 998 points.

Washington's victory over Arizona State lifted the Huskies from seventh place to fifth with 923 points. Pitt rebounded from its only setback with a 24-6 decision over Army and climbed from eighth to sixth with 860 points.

Florida State vaulted from ninth to seventh with 771 points by clobbering Louisville 49-14. Arizona State was next with 713 points, followed by Arkansas, up from 10th to ninth with 682 points.

after a 35-0 whipping of Texas A&M. Defending national champion Clemson, 11th a week ago, rounded out the Top Ten with 627 points after a 24-22 triumph over Maryland.

The Second Ten consists of UCLA, LSU, Michigan, Oklahoma, Southern California, West Virginia, Texas, Notre Dame, Maryland and Tulsa. LSU, sixth last week, lost to Mississippi State 27-24.

Last week's Second Ten consisted of Clemson, UCLA, Notre Dame, Michigan, Oklahoma, Southern Cal, Alabama, Maryland, West Virginia and Texas.

Alabama dropped out in the wake of its second consecutive loss and third of the season, a 38-29 setback at the hands of Southern Mississippi. The only other time the Crimson Tide did not appear in the rankings during the past 12 years was one week in 1976.

That made room for Tulsa to crack the Top Twenty for the first time in 30 years since a 12th-place finish in 1952. The Golden Hurricane boosted its record to 9-1 by routing Indiana State 48-14.

The Top Twenty teams in The Associated Press college football poll, with first-place votes in parentheses, season records and total points. Points based on 20-19-18-17-16-15-14-13-12-11-10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1:

Stanton, Reagan County capture bi-district crowns

Stanton tailback Bobby Barnhill is being dragged down from behind in the Buffaloes win over Wall earlier this season. Barnhill helped lead the Buffs over Marfa, 44-7, in their bi-district clash Saturday.

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

The Stanton Buffaloes made the most of their first playoff appearance in 32 years by defeating the Marfa Shorthorns 44-7 for the bi-district championship in Fort Stockton Saturday.

The victory completed an inter-district sweep for District 8-AA, started earlier in the day when the Reagan County Owls whipped the Clint Lions 47-13. Clint was the top representative from District 7-AA and Marfa was runner-up.

For the area playoffs, the district champion Buffaloes will travel to Brownfield to face Shallowater and Reagan County takes on New Deal in Snyder. Both games are scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Friday.

Stanton head coach Steve Park gave his troops plenty of playoff experience as was able to use eight running backs and two quarterbacks in the lopsided contest.

Robby Barnes was the leading ball carrier for the Buffs with 77 yards and two touchdowns. His identical twin, Rocky, chipped in 63 yards and one TD.

Starting tailback Bobby Barnhill played only the first half, adding 66 yards to the 354 yards rushing for the Buffaloes.

Stanton scored on five of its six possessions in the first half in building a 34-0 lead.

"It was just one of those nights when everything went right for us," Park said. "The line play was just tremendous."

The Buffalo defense was as impressive as the offense, limiting the Shorthorns to 23 total yards in the first half. Unable to move the ball against the swarming defense Marfa didn't get a first down until the final play of the third quarter.

Marfa's only score came immediately following the first down when quarterback Martin Quintana hit George Colomo on a 55-yard scoring strike. The Shorthorns had 113 yards passing, all in the second half.

Mark Helms and Koy Blocker were part of the first half onslaught as they scored two of the Buffs five touchdowns. Tony Ramos closed out the scoring in the final stanza on an eight yard run.

Scott Church kicked in with five PAT's and a third period field goal for Stanton.

OWLS'S TAILBACK Gregg Fisher obviously had gotten wind of the warning from Clint head coach C.R. Sonny Pitts who had said earlier in the week, "We may hit Reagan County as hard as they've been hit all year."

The 170-pound senior avoided most of the hard hitting Lions as he rushed for 339 yards in 22 carries.

Fisher scored on runs of 3, 67, 72 and 79 yards while averaging 15.4 yards per carry. Last year's All-West Texas running back also hauled in a 25-yard pass from quarterback Bobby Gunnels to open the scoring for the Owls on their first possession.

Boxing deaths reflect our machismo

By WILL GRIMSLEY

AP Special Correspondent

A young Korean fighter, Duk Koo Kim — "brain dead" and without hope — lay motionless in a Las Vegas, Nev., hospital while the boxing world indulged in its usual period of mourning.

Then, with a shrug of the shoulders and a flip, "That's a roll of the dice," it's back again to head-hunting, blood and scrambled brains.

Young Kim went down like a fallen spruce from the blow of an ax under the fist of a barge of Ray "Boom Boom" Mancini in the 14th round of their World Boxing Association lightweight title fight in the nation's glitter

Wholesale prices move up; Energy, food prices fall slightly

Prices at the wholesale level edged up by half a percentage point in October as food and energy prices fell slightly and auto dealers introduced higher-priced 1983 models, the Labor Department said today.

October's increase represented wholesale inflation of 5.7 percent on an annual basis.

But for the first 10 months of 1982, wholesale inflation is running at 3.3 percent. If that rate persists for the rest of the year, it would be the small-lest full-year gain since the 3.2 percent of 1971.

Without the higher car and truck prices, wholesale prices would have remained essentially unchanged from September, the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics said.

Some economists, meanwhile, are viewing the Federal Reserve Board's latest money-supply report as a sign that interest rates may not decline much further in the weeks ahead.

The Fed reported Monday that the money supply — measuring the amount of cash in circulation plus deposits in checking accounts — jumped $2.7 billion in the week ended Nov. 3.

Analysts said that left the money stock well above the Fed's growth target and reduced chances that the central bank would move soon to foster lower interest rates.

"Interest rates are going to be in a holding pattern until we get a discount rate cut," said Maury Harris, an economist at the investment firm of Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis Inc. The discount rate is the Fed's charge on loans to private banks.

The Fed has sought to limit the growth of the money supply as a means of controlling inflation. Economists believe that in recent weeks the Fed has been more accommodating in order to help spark a recovery from the recession.

The stock market, which closed Monday shortly before the money supply report was released, lost ground as investors cashed in on gains of recent weeks.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks tumbled 18.49 points Monday, to 1,021.43.

Meanwhile, yields on short-term Treasury securities hit the highest levels in more than a month in Monday's auctions.

About $5.6 billion in new three-month bills were auctioned at an average discount rate of 8.446 percent, up from the 7.964 percent of last week, and $5.6 billion in six-month bills went at an average rate of 8.539 percent, up from 8.397 percent.

The highest rates before Monday were the Sept. 7 level of 8.565 percent for three-month bills and the Oct. 4 level of 9.229 percent for six-month bills.

Expert says housing industry coming back

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The depressed housing industry is starting to come back and should grow in 1983 at its best clip in several years, a federal housing official says.

Kenneth Thygeson, president of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp., predicted that falling interest rates would help make 1983 the "best year of the past three or four years for housing." His comments came in a speech to the U.S. League of Savings Associations Monday.

U.S. Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich., contended the industry is still in such severe straits that the Reagan administration should urgently put together a policy to help it recover.

"This problem is now so serious and goes so much to the heart of the American economic system that it can't be ignored any longer," said Riegle, a member of the Senate Banking Committee.

The more than 2,000 savings and loan managers began their meetings on an upbeat note, with industry officials predicting the crunch for the battered industry is over.

S&Ls, the primary lenders of home loans, have been severely squeezed by high interest rates and, as a result, have reduced sharply their mortgage lending.

Interest rates, though, have fallen and legislation has been approved that will let S&Ls operate more like commercial banks, actions the industry expects to lift it out of its woes.

Thygeson predicted that even with the changes, it would take "many years" for S&Ls to be as strong in the mortgage market as they once were.

Riegle, in his call for a national housing strategy, said it should be designed to increase the amount of mortgage money and the supply of new houses available to prospective homebuyers. He said it should also be aimed at bringing down mortgage interest rates.

T-bill yields up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Short-term Treasury securities yields have risen sharply, hitting their highest levels in more than a month, government officials report.

About $5.6 billion in new three-month bills were auctioned Monday at an average discount rate of 8.446 percent, up from the 7.964 percent of last week.

The government also sold about $5.6 billion in six-month bills at an average rate of 8.539 percent, up from 8.397.

The discount rate on the new T-bills understates the actual return to investors — an average of 8.75 percent on three-month bills and 9.05 percent on six-month bills.

Delta looks at Midland

From Staff and Wire Reports

Delta Air Lines is studying the feasibility of serving Midland in the near future, after adding flights six months ago to Lubbock and Amarillo, company officials say.

The Permian basin area "is one of the areas we're looking to for future expansion," said Lawrence Carland, Delta's district director in Dallas.

To begin flying in and out of Midland, Delta first must secure more flight slots into the Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport, officials say. A recent Federal Aviation Administration lottery for additional slots at DFW produced only two of the 30 slots Delta had coveted, Carland said.

Delta has its Southwest hub centered in Dallas.

The Midland airport currently handles commercial flights from Southwest Airlines, American Airlines, Continental Airlines, Muse Air, Air Midwest and TransCentral.

Wilson Banks, director of aviation at Midland Regional Airport, said the airport would welcome Delta's move into the area, but added it was unlikely the Atlanta-based airlines would gain more slots at DFW and be able to set up airport operations before the first of the year.

Governors hesitate over 'job-creating'

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Although Republican governors are expected to endorse a plan to increase the federal gasoline tax for a job-creating public works program, they have plenty of misgivings. "I've never heard of increasing taxes to create jobs," said Gov. Pierre S. DuPont IV of Delaware. "If you want to fix the bridges and, Lord knows, they need fixing, we'd better do it."

"But to suggest that it's a jobs program to raise the gasoline tax, just isn't right," DuPont said Monday at a meeting of the Republican Governors Association.

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis, who has been pushing the plan, was scheduled to address the governors today.

Gov. James Thompson of Illinois, chairman of the association, said the program would be a good way of creating new transportation jobs at a time of high unemployment.

Gov. Lamar Alexander of Tennessee, however, called job creation "a poor reason" for raising the gasoline tax.

"It seems to me the straightforward thing to do if you need money to improve or maintain the roads you raise the user fee," Alexander said. "If you don't, you don't."

No final decision on the plan has been made at the White House but Richard Williamson, a presidential aide attending the conference, said, "I think the president signaled on Thursday at his press conference that he's looking at it very favorably."

Williamson said he thought a majority of the governors would support the program, especially if the tax increase would be phased out after five years.

The gasoline tax debate was the only policy question discussed during the two-day conference, which was dominated by reshaping the 1982 elections. Democrats picked up seven governorships for a total in January of 34 of the 50.

In both private and public sessions, GOP governors expressed unhappiness with the image of their party and with the expensive services provided them by political managers and pollsters.

Attending a closed breakfast meeting with the governors were pollsters Richard Wirthlin, Robert Teeter and Lance Tarrance and political consultant John Deardourff.

During the open session, Wirthlin, chief pollster for the White House, said unemployment was the key factor in GOP defeats in 1982.

Republican governors were, for the most part, hesitant about accepting a public works project which would also raise gasoline taxes. Sitting to Thompson's right on the podium are Texas Gov. Bill Clements and Missouri Gov. Christopher S. Bond.

Wholesale price inflation may rise again

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale price inflation, which has been running at the lowest levels since 1976, is likely to rise slightly, private economists say.

Prices for food and energy likely will remain stable, these economists said in interviews Monday. But the Producer Price Index for October will likely edge up by a fraction of a percentage point — due mainly to the phasing out of end-of-year sales discounts on 1982 model automobiles.

"I don't think October will be one of our best months," Thomas Thomson, chief economist for San Francisco's Crocker National Bank, said in advance of today's release of the new inflation figures.

But Thomson quickly added: "I think the good news continues on the inflation front. I can't conjure up any situation that would rapidly accelerate prices."

Partly because of sharply declining automobile prices, inflation at the wholesale level fell in September at an annual rate of 1.7 percent. That monthly decline was the fourth of the year.

The figures through September meant that for the first nine months of 1982, inflation at the wholesale level was running at an annual rate of 3.1 percent. Producer prices — one merchandising step before the prices paid by retail customers — had surged 7 percent in 1981 and 11.8 percent in 1980.

Also reflecting the improvement of inflation, the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index has been rising more slowly than in recent years, at an annual pace of 4.8 percent through September.

Probe could improve bypass techniques

DALLAS (AP) — A lightweight ultrasound probe may enable doctors to see inside arteries and be more precise in bypass surgery, researchers have told an American Heart Association meeting.

The probe, used on 14 patients at the University of Arizona Health Sciences Center, produced "excellent images," said Dr. David Sahn, a professor of pediatrics at the center.

Sahn, who addressed the meeting Monday, said the ultrasound images were produced and videotaped during the opening minutes of surgery and then viewed by doctors as the operation progressed.

Doctors using the images have a better idea about how many arteries are blocked, how severe the damage is and where the damaged arteries are located, Sahn said.

The ultrasound images show normal blood vessels as thin and smooth and blocked ones as bright globular structures, Sahn said.

Sahn said the images may help cardiologists who now open up smaller blood vessels using a technique called balloon angioplasty. That technique involves placing a catheter into a blocked artery and then inflating a balloon.

Bribery suit may be dismissed

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge says she may dismiss a Mexican brokerage firm's $25.3 million suit against a Houston company accused of bribery because the head of the plaintiff business can't be coaxed into a courtroom.

U.S. District Judge Gabrielle McDonald said Monday that Ricardo Garcia Beltran's repeated failure to appear in court for the past year "appears to be inexcusable." But she said she will review attorneys' briefs before making a decision.

Beltran is a former executive with Grupo Industrial Delta, S.A., which is claiming that Crawford Enterprises Inc. owes it $25.3 million in brokers' fees for acting as the Texas firm's agent in dealings with the Mexican oil monopoly, Pemex.

Crawford Enterprises, an energy company, has filed a $750 million countersuit claiming it lost business through intentional and malicious falsehoods told by Delta officials.

Time to rebuild

Under the always-busy traffic flying in and out of Midland Air Park, front to back, David Jackson, Guy Hadorn and Mike Hadorn rebuild the roof on the Warwick Apartment complex building destroyed by fire in an airplane accident Sept. 24. Construction is expected to be completed in about three months and resident manager Beth Ann Broughton doesn't foresee any difficulty in filling the 24 units.

Reconstruction begun on Warwick building

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

When they move back into the building that was destroyed by fire during a freak plane crash Sept. 24, the residents of the Warwick Apartments may not unload the scars of losing everything in fiery flames. Instead, they may unpack only happy memories of how Midland rallied around them during that nightmare of an afternoon.

With 23 of the 24 units in the destroyed building occupied at the time of the disaster, many of the residents asked to move into 12 vacant apartments within the complex. Warwick resident manager Beth Ann Broughton said. Some of the residents relocated elsewhere in Midland, while a few moved out of the community, she added.

"There were several who thought they couldn't stay (because of the memories), but they came back," Ms. Broughton said. "Some thought they could stay, but then moved."

However, inquiries about moving back into the building already have been made by one resident who was left homeless by the crash, as well as a few possible new tenants who have called about renting, she said.

Ms. Broughton said that she, personally, never thought about moving from her home, which she has occupied along with her managerial position for four years.

"It never really bothered me," she said. "I never really thought about it."

Growing up around planes with a father-pilot might have something to do with her confidence in those that swoop so low around Midland Air Park, she admitted. But that confidence did not waver from the mistakes made by one.

"I really don't think that it will happen again," she said. "Those planes don't bother me. Like Col. (Whison) Banks (director of aviation) said, each thing that pilot did was not disastrous — just everything put together was."

While some residents are "still a little jittery," about the incident,

"there are some that have kept a sense of humor about it, which I appreciate," Ms. Broughton said, smiling.

"I don't think there has been anything derogatory that has come from the crash," she continued. "I am so proud of this town, I really am. There were so many good actions from people asking if they could help."

"Even after the crash, food was in here all of the time, drinks were in here all of the time. People were constantly calling about garage sales, saying we could come by and get anything we wanted free."

While the exceptional efficiency of emergency personnel should have people in Midland feeling secure and confident in the case of another such disaster, she pointed out that Midlanders also should feel good about their own response.

"Not even just the emergency people, but all of those people we didn't even know who were still in here helping," she explained. "There were people in here answering the phones for us. I never got their names, but I want them to know we appreciated it."

Ms. Broughton said that barring any bad weather, she understood that the reconstruction of the building should be completed in about three months. While the outside of the building will look the same, she said the tenants probably will appreciate having new carpeting and new appliances.

And they also probably will appreciate knowing from first-hand experience how much the community cares.

Randy Sellars back in Midland

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Randy Sellars is home.

The 21-year-old burn victim of the Sept. 24 plane crash at the Warwick Apartments was recently released from the Lubbock hospital where he was once listed in critical condition.

According to his sister, Cindy Hammond, "we hope he's home for good."

Sellars was brought back to Midland by his parents Nov. 5. Although he will continue with therapy treatment every day in Midland and treatment every Wednesday in Lubbock, Mrs. Hammond said fingers are crossed in the Sellars family in hopes that only a few more skin grafts will be necessary.

Monday, Sellars put on clothes for the first time since the tragic accident which destroyed a 24-unit building, and he visited co-employees at Albertson's, where he has worked for the past several years.

According to a spokeswoman at Albertson's, although he'd been driven up and greeted by employees who rushed out to the parking lot before, it was great having him actually walk back into the store.

Sellars suffered first-, second- and third-degree burns over 85 percent of his body after he ran from his apartment into the parking lot following the crash and was hit by a wall of fire. Four people aboard the plane, en route to Baton Rouge, La., were seriously wounded. Two aboard the plane were transferred from Midland Memorial Hospital to Louisiana a couple of days after the crash, while the pilot and passenger were transferred in critical condition to Lubbock along with Sellars. One passenger, 41-year-old Ken Hornsby of Baton Rouge, later died in Lubbock from his injuries.

Car seats on doctor's mind

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

While many drivers jazz up their cars with the newest digital gizmos, mag wheels, slick paint jobs and plush, comfortable seats, not enough parents with small children will dish out the extra bucks for the one automobile item that may prevent a fatality — the infant or toddler car seat.

This enrages Dr. W.C. Watson, a Midland pediatrician.

"I've seen and heard it too many times," Watson said. "A mother will be in an accident; the kid could be mangled or dead. They were only on the way to the store. The mother didn't put the child in a car seat."

It's not unusual to see car seat posters, illustrating children sitting in car seats or bumper stickers asking: "Love Your Kids? Buckle 'Em Up!" around Watson's office.

Furthermore, one of the "routine" questions Watson asks his new mothers is "do you have a car seat?" Not all pediatricians ask their patients' parents about car seats, but Watson said that all physicians who take care of children should enforce car seat use.

"All of my patients' parents are told about keeping their children in car seats," Watson said. "It is incumbent upon us as pediatricians and physicians to inform our patients' parents about the car seat."

"If all physicians were as militant about this subject as the younger physicians are, child fatalities might be prevented."

A 2-month-old baby who died in a car broadsided by another car left a lasting impression on Watson. Since that time, when he was in the Navy, he's been adamant about car seats.

"We need a mandatory car seat law in this state," Watson said, explaining that several states have compulsory car seat laws and the Texas Legislature will "deal with this subject in their next session."

Watson said that young children don't have a choice — it's the parents' responsibility. And if a law does come to pass, "it won't be any good unless you put some teeth in it."

"Every ride should be in a car seat, from the day you bring the kid home from the hospital," Watson said. "And when I get those excuses like 'they're too expensive,' I ask them if they would rather pay a hospital bill or bury their kid." Still,

Dr. W.C. Watson would like to see Texas have a compulsory car seat law. It is not unusual to see car seat literature around his office, and one of the first questions he asks his "moms" is "do you have a car seat?"

some continue to complain about the price, "but they'll spend money to supe up the car with other gadgets."

Midland has a program that many cities do not have — "Loan-A-Seat," for infant seats and a "Try Before You Buy" program for toddler seats.

"Parents can try these seats out,"

Watson said. "They have 226 infant seats. The 1982 Consumer Union reported that the Century 200, which is available through the seat program, was the easiest seat to use, and they also pointed out that other seats, such as the Strollee, are not as practical unless the directions are Cecil Davis, left, and Larry Cossell install the air conditioning system Monday in the new Midland Westside Annex post office. The station, located in west Midland in the Mesa Verde Shopping Center, should be open by Thanksgiving.

Post office almost ready

Midland's Postal Service is accepting Horace Greeley's venerable advice and going west, with a new station scheduled to open soon at the intersection of Midland Drive and Neely Avenue in the Mesa Verde Shopping Center.

Postmaster David E. Holster said the new station, to be known as the Midland Westside annex, remains under construction and should be open by Thanksgiving to serve area residents with 826 rental boxes and a full-service, 24-hour post office unit for dispensing stamps, envelopes, postal cards and for mailing parcels.

Holster said a service window also will be installed to relay parcels and accountable mail to boxholders.

"Parking for postal patrons will be available in the shopping center lot."

Presently, the nearest postal outlet for area customers is the Graves Station at 3304 W. Wadley Ave., according to Stan Sartain, customer service manager.

Sartain said the Postal Service's annual retail analysis survey revealed that Midland Drive-Neely Avenue is a "need area" requiring greater service.

"That's where our big growth area is," Sartain said.

He said one employee will likely staff the new outlet at its inception, but additional personnel may be needed once area residents become accustomed to the new location.

Witness says girl dazed after deaths

LUBBOCK (AP) — A young girl who saw her mother and sister killed was naked and seemed dazed and terrified when she finally got help, saying a man named "Mike" murdered them, the man who found her says.

Frank Crawford Jr. testified Monday in the capital murder trial of Michael Eugene Sharp.

Sharp is accused of abducting Brenda Kay Broadway, 31, and her daughters, ages 8 and 14, from a Kermit carwash June 10, taking them to a remote corner of Winkler County, and killing the woman and younger child.

The 14-year-old, Selena Kay Elms, naked and her arms bound, escaped by running five miles over the scrubby plain to an oil rig.

"I saw a naked woman on the northeast corner of the area (rig), and she was yelling did we have any clothes she could have," said Crawford, who was working on the oil rig. "I got a blanket to take out to her and I noticed her arms were tied behind her back."

"She was kind of in a daze," he said. "She'd look at you and look right through you. She said that her mother and sister were killed and I said, 'Who did this?' She said a guy named Mike. She kept looking around like she was looking for something real bad."

Crawford testified Miss Elms had what appeared to be rope burns on her biceps and cuts, scratches, bruises and abrasions on her entire body.

Winkler County Deputy Mike Eggleston discovered the bodies of Ms. Broadway and her daughter Christi Michelle buried in a shallow grave near a windmill, he said.

Eggleston testified he talked to Miss Elms at the hospital in Kermit, and she described the man she said killed her mother and sister.

Odessan charged in death

LAMESA — Jose Guadalupe Gomez, 20, of Odessa is free on $75,000 bond after being charged in the shooting death of Refugio Castillo, 19, of Lamesa at 12:43 a.m. Sunday outside Mary Ann's Convenience Store.

The shooting reportedly was the result of a family feud. Castillo was shot five times when his car was riddled with six .38-caliber pistol slugs, four shots passing through the windshield and two shots through the passenger's window.

He was pronounced dead at the scene at 1:10 a.m. by Peace Justice Fred Vera.

Midlanders seeking LULAC charter

About 30-40 Midlanders gathered at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Mission Saturday during an organizational meeting for a Midland chapter of LULAC, the League of United Latin American Citizens.

According to Dilma Quezada, spokeswoman for the group, they are in the process of petitioning LULAC headquarters in San Antonio in hopes of becoming officially chartered. Ms. Quezada said the charter process will likely take approximately a month.

Ms. Quezada said Isabel Jimenez has been elected president pro tem of the new group. She said officer elections and monthly meetings will commence once a charter is granted.

Along with community and social service activities, Ms. Quezada said, the Midland chapter will be committed to helping raise scholarship money for Latin Americans. She said the national LULAC organization seeks out corporations to arrange matching funds for scholarship money raised by local chapters.

LULAC recently filed lawsuits against the City of Big Spring, Big Spring Independent School District, Howard County Junior College District, the City of Lamesa and Lamesa Independent School District, alleging that election practices there effectively bar minority candidates from gaining office.

Ms. Quezada said it's too early to speculate whether the Midland LULAC organization will pursue similar lawsuits.

At Saturday's meeting, the group heard from Ignacio Padilla, vice president of the El Paso LULAC council, and Eusebio Morales, district director of the Lubbock area LULAC organization.

Police report attempted robbery

In a reported attempted robbery, an employee of the Hernandez Food Shop, 500 E. Lincoln, told officers a man wearing a paper sack over his head came in to the store shortly after 8 p.m. and demanded money. The man fled, however, when the employee reached for a gun. A paper sack was recovered outside the building.

A bank bag containing $578 in cash was reported stolen from an office at Bunche Elementary School, 700 S. Jackson. The bag was last seen about 3 p.m. Monday on a counter in the office, according to police.

In a burglary complaint, $878 worth of food, beer, cigarettes and shotgun shells was reported taken from the Kent Oil Station at 810 E. Florida Ave. after someone kicked in a plate glass door of the establishment between 5 and 6 a.m. today.

At Saturday's meeting, the group heard from Ignacio Padilla, vice president of the El Paso LULAC council, and Eusebio Morales, district director of the Lubbock area LULAC organization.

Senator wants to change state textbook hearings

AUSTIN (AP) — A state senator says members of the public, as well as publishers, should be allowed to defend proposed public school textbooks against critics.

Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, proposed legislation Monday that would open up state textbook hearings to public comment from both sides.

"Currently, the rules of the Texas Education Agency allow any Texas citizen to protest the adoption of a textbook, but only allow the publisher to respond to the criticism," said Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls. "This hardly seems like a fair system, and Texas school children may be suffering as a result."

Texas is second only to California as the nation's biggest buyer of textbooks, so its shopping list can affect the textbook market nationwide.

People for the American Way, a national anti-censorship group founded by television producer Norman Lear, had fought this year's textbook selection process.

The group attempted to testify at the summer hearings before the state Textbook Committee, but was allowed only to submit written comments.

'Respiratory exercise stress test' checkup

By JOE FRISINO
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — I was pumping hard, riding into space-age medicine on a bicycle, breathing into a heavy tube which poured my expelled breath into a computer for examination and detailed analysis. Soon I would find out if I was healthy enough to stop worrying.

On my right ear was fastened a device which used a photo-sensitive cell to measure the color of my blood, an indication of its oxygen level. Terminals were fastened to my chest and back, leading to an electrocardiograph which gave a picture of my heart beat and — in big red letters — my heart rate. Around my upper left arm was a device for measuring blood pressure. A plastic clip closed my nose.

I was taking a respiratory exercise stress test on a new Gould aerobic computerized exercise lab at Seattle's Swedish Hospital. The machine is used to "measure people to see whether they have heart and lung limitations," said Dr. Jeffrey Cary, associate director of respiratory and critical care services and head of the pulmonary function lab.

Other functions include monitoring those who undertake breathing training to measure improvement, measuring the work a person can perform and seeing if it is appropriate for his heart and lungs, and recording possible loss of lung capacity because of work in polluted air.

Patients with emphysema, Cary said, have airway obstructions which limit their air intake, and "they soon reach a limit while pedaling the bicycle and can go no farther. They have no leg pain, they stop because of shortness of breath."

I pedaled the machine for 11 minutes, working harder to keep the "speedometer" needle at a fixed point as the pedaling was made more difficult by certified respiratory therapist Carl Gensil, who was conducting the test. My blood pressure went to 220 over 105, and my heart rate was up to 114. But I felt good, pleased that my wind was holding out and that the pedal pressure was giving my leg muscles no real problem.

Dr. Cary halted the demonstration before I reached my limit, explaining that this was a demonstration and he did not want to take any chances with my health.

By that time I still was breathing with little trouble, but did notice the beginning of an uncomfortable feeling in my knees and leg muscles. This, he explained, was because I was reaching a point where my activity required more oxygen than I was breathing in, and my system was using bodily sources of oxygen. A by-product is lactic acid, which causes the pain in muscles.

The doctor said in a report, "At the apex of exercise, the patient reached a heart rate that was approximately 80 percent of maximum, a minute ventilation that was about two-thirds of maximum and an oxygen uptake that was approximately two-thirds of maximum but appropriate for a sedentary man of his age."

Long, lithe brown diagonal stripes: 27-inch cardigan fly front jacket in French imported silk and cotton tailored with contrast skirt in wheat French fibranne linen from California's Ernst Strauss. Both parents sharing custody described as workable plan

By CAROL DEEGAN

NEW YORK (AP) — In 1973 Ciji Ware was in the process of a divorce, and was facing a custody fight for her small son.

It was then, Ms. Ware said in a recent interview, that she became aware that the legal, adversary divorce system in the United States seemed to offer few alternatives to couples who, despite their divorce, would remain linked parents, with children to raise to adulthood.

"I felt the system presented me with two totally unacceptable choices: One was fight and the other was flight. Either I would fight my ex-husband over control of our child and take the consequences of what that would do to him if he had to go through a trial, or I could give up and flee and walk away."

"And those two unacceptable options were the only ones my ex-husband thought were available to him, too," she said.

In 1974, Ms. Ware had sole legal and physical custody of her child and was in charge of administering "reasonable visitation" to her son's father. But she and her former spouse were able to work out what she believes is a better custody arrangement for taking care of their son. It is an arrangement that is being used by thousands of other divorced parents, a new option called shared custody, joint custody or co-parenting.

What shared custody means, according to Ms. Ware, is any time-sharing formula that commits both parents to be involved in all important decision-making regarding the children, and to maintain as much physical contact as circumstances and geography allow.

Ms. Ware says the key ingredient in a shared custody agreement is to meet the needs of the children — not the parents. She says the written agreement describes the day-to-day specifics of the children's schedule, including birthdays, vacations and holidays.

The document does not award custody to one parent or the other. Neither parent is relegated to the role of visitor. The document may be filed with a court, although, in other cases, shared custody is an informal arrangement.

"Sharing Parenthood After Divorce" is the title of Ms. Ware's new book on shared custody. Ms. Ware, a broadcast journalist in the Los Angeles area, spent two years doing research for the book, including talking to families involved in shared custody arrangements.

Ms. Ware points out that in more than 90 percent of U.S. divorce cases, custody is granted to the mother because American cultural tradition has held for decades that women are the proper custodians of underage children. What this does, she said, is to place the entire burden of child-rearing on the mother, while depriving the father of needed contact with his children.

Ms. Ware does not agree with some experts who say that one parent should have total management and control of custody in order to provide consistency and stability in a child's life. She said one long-term study had concluded that children who were not visited by the absent parent frequently showed diminished self-esteem, except where the relationship with the parent was psychologically destructive.

"I think with 79 percent of all divorced women working, those old prescriptions of how kids should be taken care of simply don't apply any more. Not only are kids losing dad, they're losing mom as well because nobody's there," she said.

Ms. Ware says shared custody does not mean that parents divide child care 50-50; the time formula can be devised in a way that is tailored to the family. And shared custody does not mean that a child is "shuttled" back and forth between parents, with no sense of home or continuity, she said.

"What worked for my son when he was 3 would be horrendous now that he's 10, and I'm sure that when he's 15, what we're doing now may not be suitable," she said. "The wonderful thing about this arrangement is making mid-course corrections throughout your child's childhood into adulthood. Instead of something written by a judge in stone, shared parenthood provides for the flexibility to respond to the changing needs of children. And parents, too."

Scientists work at solving difficult laundry problems

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Scientists at Cornell University are using sophisticated methods to study common laundry problems and help formulate better clothes-cleaning techniques.

Dr. Kay Obendorf, who is using X-ray analysis and high-powered microscopes to learn how and where soil hides in fabrics, told a recent meeting of the American Chemical Society here that some fabrics are easier to clean than others because of differences in their fiber chemistry.

Cotton garments, for example, absorb more perspiration and body oil than clothes containing synthetic fibers, she said. This makes cotton one of the best fabrics for comfort and personal hygiene, but it also means that cotton is harder to keep clean.

In laboratory tests, she found that even after laundering, cotton retains up to 1 1/2 times more oil than synthetic fabrics. Nylon retains the least amount of oil, said Mrs. Obendorf, associate professor of design and environmental analysis at Cornell.

She notes that when oily soil is not completely removed from clothes, they become dingy gray or yellow. To avoid this, she recommends washing promptly, in hot water if possible.

Spring '83 fashion designs feature slender waistlines

By GWEN JONES
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — "Buckle up" is the message from designers, who are going all-out to accentuate waistlines in their spring '83 collections.

Never mind that hemlines can rise as high as the mini or fall as low as the ankles. It's what's going on at the midriff that counts. There the action can be as subtle as a rib-ticking knit from Catherine Hipp or as over-exaggerated as a prize-fighter-size belt created by Perry Ellis.

The reason for this belt-tightening mood is that designers are confident such dramatically feminine styles will appeal to body-conscious women, not to mention men who prefer hourglass figures over the big boxy look. As Calvin

Klein put it: "The world started focusing on American designers because of sportswear — classic, simple clothes that we did better than anyone else. All those relaxed day clothes — my customer owns them already. She's looking for something new that's dramatic and modern."

COME NEXT SEASON, Klein's label will be stitched into some of the most glamorous evening wear in the business. His black outfit — beaded and rhinestone-studded peplum top over satin skirt — shows off every curve in a woman's body — bulges, too, unfortunately.

More avant-garde customers will understand his waist-cropped jacket with oversized buttons. In addition, the designer's little knit top in bold stripes coupled with linen minis are natural for weekends. Like the rest of Klein's collection, these fun items define in no uncertain terms the waistline and hips.

The majority of women should find it a cinch to wrap their waists in the updated merry widows designed by Adri, one of this year's Coty award-winning designers. She's teamed her corsets vertically so that they mold comfortably to the body, and then coordinated them with her easy-fitting separates.

FOR EXAMPLE, a five-inch-wide merry widow encircles the waist of a flippy linen skirt, which is paired with a sheer linen, square-collar top. Adri's eye-catching belts are also featured with seersucker evening pants. And when those waist-nippers are done in canvas, they're the perfect accessory for Adri's full-cut cotton pants and daytime dresses in the same fabric.

Coordinating women's styles with men's wear is a trend that's popping up all over Seventh Avenue, as in Willi Smith's collection. He showed his-and-her sportswear in bold checks and stripes that often were combined in the same outfit. His women's designs also focus attention on the middle, and his cropped shirts and calf-length pants bare the tummy altogether.

Edward Caracci zeroed in on the waist with some three-inch patent leather belts. These belts are so versatile that he used them to pull in the waist of a sweatshirt-style dress as well as to accessorize cotton tops, pants, shorts and swingy skirts. Like Adri and Smith, Caracci offered a coordinating collection for men.

Koos VanDenAkke came up with a fitted jacket that caresses the body and complements a variety of skirts — from pencil-thin to circle style. VanDenAkke is an old hand at mixing fabrics, colors and textures in the same garment for an antique effect. And he manages to infuse vitality into his new designs.

DIANE VON FURSTENBERG unleashed the most colorful array of waist-accented clothes. Wrap dresses, slim pants, sailor dresses, peasant dresses, full skirts, slinky skirts, draped dresses and pants — all come in an assortment of vibrant shades, from turquoise and passion pink to marigold and mango, and in such patterns as tulips, roses mixed with dots and a combination of palms, stripes and tropical flowers.

In general, though, pastels are the dominant colors for next season, along with neutral black and white.

In his collection, Perry Ellis demonstrated his usual penchant for the extraordinary. Sometimes, his styles work, as in the case of his easy-fitting pants and dresses. Other times, they don't, as with the largest and stiffest of his belts.

Jimmy Stewart goes home to Indiana — Pennsylvania

By LILLIAN SWANSON
AP Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Bicky Campbell remembers many late night sessions at her country home when Jimmy Stewart played the accordion and her late husband, Dutch, played the piano.

"I think he's just exactly as he appears on the screen," she says of the soft-spoken actor. "He's not a bit different. He's down-to-earth. He still has a good many friends here."

"Here" is Indiana, Pa., the semi-rural community in Pennsylvania's mining country where the screen legend was born 74 years ago. Stewart will return to his hometown next May 20 to celebrate his 75th birthday.

"I consider it my home," Stewart said in a telephone interview from his California home. "It is where I grew up, where my roots are."

"I value the town and the things that happened while I was growing up there. I value that as much as anything in my life."

Stewart says he hasn't been back to Indiana in about five years. The trips are infrequent because his parents, and sisters, Virginia and Mary, are deceased. "Since my family is all gone from there, I haven't been back very often. It will be very nice to see the town," he said.

The tree-lined college town of 16,000 is planning to celebrate Stewart's birthday by erecting a 9-foot bronze statue of its favorite son, and holding a parade, a dinner dance and a festival of his films.

"We're very excited about getting him back here," says Indiana County Auditor Linda Moore, who heads the planning committee for the celebration. "Our community needs a boost. We need something to look forward to, and to bring people together."

David Hall Blair, a boyhood chum and probably Stewart's closest hometown friend, watched Stewart's career blossom from his first movie, "The Murder Man" in 1935 to the recently completed "Right-of-Way" with Bette Davis.

"Everybody likes Jim. Always have," he said. "He always had a good sense of humor, and everybody enjoyed that."

"He's done most of his work in a very natural way. He's a forthright fella. Everyone in town respects him."

Stewart was born in 1908 in Indiana, where his father operated a hardware store. As a youngster, he liked to go fishing and camping and was crazy about aviation.

He ignored his father's advice to join the family business, and opted for the theater. He left Indiana for prep school, Princeton and finally Hollywood. After five years in the film business, he won an Academy Award for best actor in 1940 for "The Philadelphia Story."

Stewart returned to Indiana in 1945 as a much-decorated World War II hero. As a bomber pilot, he flew 20 combat missions and was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross with Oak Leaf Cluster.

DEAR ABBY

Tragic tale may avert accident

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: We have just lost our little daughter. Because your audience is so wide, you might think it worth printing how our baby died so that other parents will know. We did all the things one is supposed to do to keep a baby safe.

We put plug guards in the electrical outlets, locked up all our household cleansers, always used her car seat, etc. However, never did we think that a bathroom fixture might be dangerous to her!

We were at her grandparents' house when she toddled off. We found her in the bathroom with her head face down in the toilet bowl.

Although my husband worked and worked on her until the paramedics arrived, nothing could be done.

It would have been the easiest of accidents to prevent — to always make sure everywhere she was that the toilet lid was down and the bathroom door securely closed. If only we had known!

The newspaper labeled it a "freak accident," and perhaps it was, but if it happened to our precious baby, it could happen to another child. It would help us to think that even one parent might be alerted to this possible hazard. — MR. & MRS. J.G. IN PHOENIX

DEAR MR. AND MRS. J.G.: My heart goes out to you. What kind and generous people you are to have written in your time of sorrow hoping to save some other child from the tragedy yours suffered. May God keep her in his loving care and give you the strength to bear the burden of your irreplaceable loss.

What a pity that you will never know how many toddlers will be saved because you cared enough to write.

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column you advised John Paul Jones Jr. that at the time of his father's death, he could simply drop the "Junior." This is not correct.

When a child is named "Junior," it is on his birth certificate, and it is part of his legal name. His father then may — or may not — choose to call himself "Senior" to avoid confusion, but that would be an "assumed" name. It does NOT become part of his legal name.

Sen. Barry Goldwater may be referred to as "Barry Goldwater Sr." but that is not his LEGAL name.

No one has a "Senior" on his birth certificate because when a child is named, it is impossible to know whether he will (1) marry, (2) have children and (3) name a son after himself. If a man has a son and names him "Junior," it is on that son's birth certificate, and he is Junior forever. If upon his father's death, he wants to drop the Junior, he would have to change his name on all his insurance, bank accounts, driver's license, Social Security, automobile title, deeds, will, etc. What a chore! — A LAWYER WHO IS ALSO A JR.

DEAR LAWYER: Thanks for the lesson. I learned something today.

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem I need your advice on, but I hesitate to write because it's very confidential and I don't want anyone in this little town to know my business.

First, please tell me what you do with the letters people send to you after you've answered them. Do you save them?

Is it safe to use real names? How can a writer be absolutely sure confidences disclosed will be confidential? — JUST CHECKING

DEAR JUST: The letters I receive are destroyed immediately after they're answered. All letters are held in the strictest of confidence. It is "safe" to use real names, but not essential. A self-addressed stamped envelope is required for a personal, unpublished reply.

AT WIT'S END

All mothers compare

By ERMA BOMBECK

I can't think of a mother in this entire world who has not committed the first sin of parenting: comparing her children.

From the day kids are born, we compare them with ourselves, their siblings, their contemporaries and every other child with whom they come in contact.

They can't do anything right. They're smaller than their brother when he was that age. They are dumber than their sister in math. They're lazier than the boy next door. They don't catch a baseball like their dad did. Their hair doesn't hold curl like their mother's.

I remember one day my younger son said, "Why do you always compare me to my brother?"

"Because you're a cheap shot," I said.

"I wish I was an only child."

"Wouldn't matter," I said. "When I was carrying your brother, I compared him to a baby my best friend was carrying. Hers moved a lot more than he did. Tell you what. I'll go an entire day without comparing you to anyone. Deal?"

We shook hands on it.

Fifteen hours later as I tucked him into bed I said,

"Well, I did it. Not once today did I compare you to your brother."

"Big deal," he said. "You didn't speak to me all day."

"You know something?" I said. "You've got a temper just like your father. Go to sleep!"

Most mothers fall heir to the sin of comparison. They learned it at their mother's knee.

All the while I was growing up my mother would point a finger at me and say, "Erma Louise, I swear if you don't remind me of my cousin Sarah Jane. That girl could turn a sane man into a vegetable in two hours." After awhile the nickname stuck. When I talked loud, she'd yell, "Speak up, Sarah Jane! I can't hear you!" Or when I was bad she'd say, "Okay, Sarah Jane, I'm getting my switch."

I never saw Sarah Jane until someone died in the family. She came to the funeral like a four-alarm fire, outshouted everyone, sat with her knees apart, ate like a pig and wasn't too bright.

Her mother looked over at her and said, "Keep it up, Sarah Jane. You're acting just like my cousin, Edith Mae! From here on in, I'm calling you Edith Mae."

I hope to heaven in all my lifetime, I never meet Edith Mae face to face!

Facial exercises
firm up musclesBy DON CARTER
Hearst Feature Service

If the driver of the car next to yours seems to be sticking out his tongue and making funny faces, he simply may be using a few idle moments to firm up the muscles under the skin and make the wrinkles disappear.

We'll be seeing a lot of funny faces on the roads if Joseph Saffon's advice catches on. The author of "The 15-Minute-a-Day Natural Face Lift," Saffon now has an update called "Youth Lift."

Saffon wastes no time establishing his credentials: He whips out his passport and points to the birth date, which is 1930. At 52, he has firm jowls and a lineless face that make you guess he is 10 to 15 years younger.

And although Saffon has no medical background, he's worked with several dermatologists and plastic surgeons to develop his facial exercise program. "This is the first time a book of this kind has been endorsed by a prominent medical authority," he beams, referring to the forward written by Dr. Willibald Nagler of New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center.

Saffon likes to recite the names of some of his celebrity clients, who have paid $250 an hour for facial exercise counseling at his New York and Los Angeles offices. The celebrities include Marlene Dietrich, Sophia Loren, Helen Gurley Brown, the late Princess Grace, Cyd Charisse and Jennifer Jones, all of whom Saffon says have given permission to be identified as clients.

But there's one celebrity who hasn't signed up. "I sent President Reagan a copy of the book, thinking maybe he could give his neck a little more tone," says Saffon. "I received an acknowledgement, but that's all. I can tell from seeing him on TV that he hasn't done any of the exercises. That's such a shame, what with the rest of his appearance being so youthful."

Saffon shudders visibly when he talks about sagging jowls, but he says they've brought him a lot of business from male customers who worry about sagging jowls and double chins. He says his facial therapy practice now is about 40 percent male. Typical male customers, he explains, "are executives in their 40s who they fear they're going to lose their jobs because they don't look the image."

Men's faces, he believes, are in worse shape today "because we no longer use straight razors." He explains that the use of the old-fashioned razors unwittingly forced men to do a variety of stretching exercises to avoid slitting their throats.

Saffon's exercises are basically isometric; they involve making faces that pit one muscle against another. His thesis is that "with age, the muscles in the face and neck gradually shrink, and the fat pads that support them thin or vanish, making the skin over the deteriorating muscle fibers and slack tendons seem too large."

Gravity contributes to the sag, and Saffon worries that the current jogging craze is "wreaking havoc with chins and jowls" because the pound-pound-pound of the body exaggerates the force of gravity. "You see this firm, nicely toned body, and then you see this hanging face," he says.

He advises joggers to learn simple exercises to firm up the muscles in necks and jowls or — second-best — to devise and wear a simple chin-strap when jogging. A folded-over handkerchief held tightly under the chin by rubber-bands passing over the back of the head can keep jowls from flopping.

While Saffon claims that "99 percent of the people who use his exercise plan are satisfied," he notes that the results are not always equal because of biological differences in people. "But everybody has some improvement," he adds, "and for some it can be mind-boggling — taking 15 or 20 years off their ages."

"And you won't get that plastic look. We've all seen those celebrities who look as if they've got a clothespin on the back of their heads and it's moved and tightened constantly... those movie stars who look as if one more tuck and their belly buttons will be up where Kirk Douglas' dimple is."

The children, shown at the family home at Gatcombe Park, Gloucestershire, are Master Peter Phillips, who was 5 years old Monday, and Zara, born May 15, 1981.

Sweden's king, queen in Seattle to promote Scandinavia Today

SEATTLE (AP) — Sweden's king and queen are visiting the Seattle area for two days to promote Scandinavia Today, a nationwide celebration of Scandinavian art, music, drama and culture.

King Carl XVI Gustaf and Queen Silvia had a flurry of appearances scheduled today and Wednesday, including openings of Nordic Festival exhibits, receptions, a concert and visits to two universities.

In September, Iceland President Vigdis Finnbogadottir dropped by for two days to spotlight the celebration. The 36-year-old Swedish king, whose role in government is largely ceremonial, is "a sporty guy" who likes to boat, ski, hunt and fish, says Lars Malmstrom, acting Swedish consul general for the Western United States. The king also is active in the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources and the World Wildlife Fund.

But his hobby "is his family," said Malmstrom. The king and his 39-year-old, German-born queen have three children — Victoria, 5, heir to the throne; Prince Carl Philip, 3; and Madeline, born in June.

The king and queen are also stopping in New York, Minneapolis and Chicago during their 12-day visit on behalf of Scandinavia Today.

LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II lent a hand in the celebration of London's International Press Club's 100th anniversary, and was presented with a replica of a royal admonition to journalists.

Club chairman Peter Grosvenor, literary editor of the London Daily Express, gave the queen a copy of a proclamation by King James II warning journalists "to restrain from the spreading of false news." James was toppled by the British civil war in 1646.

"The penalty could be consignment to the Tower of London in those days," Grosvenor said at the Monday night celebration. "But we believe that facility is not so easily open to you nowadays."

NEW YORK (AP) — Michael Morgenstern, who wrote the best-selling book "How to Make Love to a Woman," says that "for one second I lost control" and socked his girlfriend in the face.

On Monday, he pleaded guilty to hitting his former girlfriend, Ethel Marie Parks, 22, during what he called "a heated argument" on Aug. 5, 1981, the day after Miss Parks moved out of an apartment she and Morgenstern shared in Manhattan.

Morgenstern was sentenced to an unconditional discharge and a $40 "penalty assessment."

Doreen Abraham, Miss Parks' attorney, said that along with Morgenstern's plea, he agreed to a $30,000 settlement of a civil suit Miss Parks filed against him.

The author, whose book topped The New York Times best-seller list for months, had been accused of third-degree assault for hitting the woman "once in the mouth, fracturing one of the bones in her upper jaw and breaking a tooth."

Morgenstern's lawyer, Myron Beldock, told the judge before his client was sentenced, "In one brief moment when he saw red and struck out and essentially lost control, he did something regrettable and another person was injured."

Lipizzaners begin first tour of U.S. in 20 years

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Twenty-six white Lipizzan horses of Vienna's famed Spanish Riding School are headed for America today to begin their first U.S. tour in nearly 20 years.

During the month-long tour, academy instructors will put the high-stepping horses through their paces in Washington D.C., New York City and Philadelphia.

The 26 horses left for Washington yesterday and today, traveling aboard specially outfitted Boeing 747 cargo airliners.

The school hopes to present a Lipizzaner stallion to President Reagan, an enthusiastic horseman, but is uncertain whether legal restrictions will permit such a gift.

"We are very pleased to be going to the United States," Kurt Albrecht, the school's director, told The Associated Press. "We have wanted to make this trip for years." It is the tell-tale white coloring of the Lipizzaners that has helped make the Spanish Riding School widely known. The academy's 320 horses, famous for their power, and grace, are the result of centuries of selective breeding.

The school is one of Austria's leading tourist attractions, and its twice-weekly shows in the 18th-century Hapsburg Palace riding hall are usually sold out in advance.

During the 90-minute shows, riders and instructors put the horses through a variety of movements and jumps, including the famous "courbette," during which a horse hops on its hind legs.

The Spanish Riding School was first recognized as part of the imperial Austrian court in 1572, and moved into its four-story, gilded hall in the downtown Hapsburg

Palace in 1735.

By the late 18th century, the school had become famous throughout Europe, and the continent's rulers sent their leading cavalry officers to Vienna to observe the Lipizzaners' training.

The academy fell on hard times when the Austrian monarchy broke up in 1918, but was kept going by Count Rudolf Van Der Straten, a former director of the institute. It was later made a part of the Austrian Agriculture Ministry.

At the end of World War II, U.S. General George Patton had the horses moved from their breeding farm to prevent them from falling into Soviet hands.

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Hunter S. Thompson is alive and well and cradling a bottle of cold Canadian ale in his right hand.

"The cutting edge of this thing is bestiality," he declares in a taut, excited voice, his staccato words echoing like machine-gun rounds down the empty halls of the Palm Beach County courthouse. "Once we've found the link with bestiality, we'll have some very powerful information, and we can all go home."

Nine sleepy reporters, waiting for testimony to resume in the sensational Pulitzer divorce trial, lounged on benches and nodded amused agreement.

Thompson, the tall, balding journalist in a black leather racing jacket immortalized in the Doonesbury comic strip as "Duke," sipped some of his ale, glanced at his skin-diver watch, then looked at the gaping ceiling above him where workers had been ripping out all the acoustical tile.

"What are they doing, looking for drugs or something?" Thompson interjects, provoking general laughter. "Or maybe they heard I was coming and are laying the wiretaps."

The time was 6:30 a.m., and Thompson, the self-proclaimed "doctor of gonzo journalism" had joined correspondents from national newspapers, wire services and CBS-TV for a rare peek into Palm Beach high society in the divorce trial of newspaper heir Peter Pulitzer and his wife, Roxanne.

"This thing really has it all," an awed Thompson, 58, summarized. "It's a sordid good time."

Clamping a Roosevelt-style cigarette holder between his teeth, Thompson strolled into the courthouse on a Monday morning, a schoolboy's notebook under his arm and a ballpoint pen clipped to his sleeve.

Tantalized by headline-grabbing reports of the trial, Thompson said he wanted to give his explosive literary talent "one last filthy fling" before buying a house in the Florida Keys to piece together a novel on the 1980 Cuban boatlift and its aftermath.

For Thompson, the Pulitzer trial marked a re-entry into the public eye and the maelstrom of day-to-day events. Since editing an anthology of his gonzo works, "The Great Shark Hunt: Strange Tales from a Strange Time," in 1979, Thompson said he had been living in Hawaii, "loafing, mainly."

Gonzo journalism, Thompson once pontificated, is "a style of reporting based on William Faulkner's idea that the best fiction is always more true than any kind of journalism."

His works, including "Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas," are egocentric views of current events written by an avowed wild man and are flavored with cocaine, rum, LSD, mescaline, hashish "and a whole galaxy of multicolored uppers, downers, screamers (and) laughers."

Thompson's high-profile arrival was bruited about the courthouse, and rapidly reached even Mrs. Pulitzer's ears. "Oh, no!" she sighed audibly when her lawyer, Joseph Farish, gave her the news.

Pulitzer, 52, claims his 31-year-old wife indulges in lesbianism, adultery and cocaine-laced champagne, and is suing for custody of the couple's 5-year-old twin boys.

Mrs. Pulitzer, who also wants the twins and half her husband's fortune, counters that the grandson of press mogul Joseph Pulitzer has negotiated marijuana deals with Colombian Indian chiefs, smuggled narcotics aboard his boat and plane, and admitted to an incestuous love affair with a daughter by his first wife.

Thompson, who arrived without the formality of wearing socks, perched on a shaky coffee table in the tiny third-floor room where Circuit Judge Carl Harper was hearing the trial. The author scribbled frenzied notes as he sized up the players in the real-life drama.

"A blizzard of giggling gibberish," he wrote in giant cursive on his tablet as the $300-an-hour legal teams haggled over points of law.

"You'd need the heart of a lizard to listen to that stuff day in and day out," pronounced Thompson at day's end, buttonholing the bailiff who had forced him to knot a food-stained tie around his neck to gain admittance to the trial. The bailiff shrugged.

The judge ended testimony in the trial last week and said he will not rule until December. That left Thompson mulling over the direction he wants to give to the "column-length feature" he plans to create for Rolling Stone.

As the 18-day trial ended, Roxanne Pulitzer strolled up to Thompson outside the courtroom and planted a kiss on his cheek.

"All I need for my clean-living, objective reputation is for photos of that to go out all over the country," groaned Thompson.

Cable programming awards presented

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The cable television industry presented 41 awards for cable programming excellence during a ceremony that was televised nationally for the first time in its four-year history.

Actress Cloris Leachman was the hostess and 14 entertainers presented the awards during the two-hour show sent by satellite Monday to 4,700 cable systems.

The ceremony for the Awards for Cable Excellence was held before a black-tie audience at the Beverly Theatre in Beverly Hills. It ended the three-day national programming conference held by the National Cable Television Association.

Distinguished Achievement Awards went to the non-profit Cable Satellite Public Affairs Network (CSPAN) and Warner Amex Cable Communications' QUBE system. QUBE was cited for "pioneering two-way technology and exploring its creative applications." CSPAN's award was for "its determination and commitment to bringing government closer to the people." This year's winners were selected from 126 nominees chosen in April. The competition drew 841

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Nasal reconstruction same as rhinoplasty

Dear Dr. Solomon: I saw my doctor who told me that I ought to have nasal reconstruction and referred me to a plastic surgeon. The plastic surgeon told me that I ought to have rhinoplasty. What can you tell me about each? — Mr. A., Louisville, Ky.

Dear Mr. A.: They are the same, a reshaping of the nose, usually to improve appearance, but sometimes to correct deformities from injury or to relieve nasal obstruction and sinus congestion. The result is usually not predictable because of variations in health. This is especially true when the skin is thickened, coarse and oily. After the surgery there will be swelling both on the outside and the inside of the nose. Patience is required while normal healing takes place.

Most patients are agreeably surprised to find that there is little more than mild discomfort. A splint or bandage is worn for several days. The eyes usually blacken because of normal bruising of loose tissues around the eyelids. Whites of the eyes may turn red but this clears up in a few weeks. Unlike the unreal world of movies and television when bandages come off to reveal immediate beauty, the final appearance of the nose is not apparent for 5 to 12 months because normal healing takes place gradually. Scarring takes place inside the nose and is not visible. In operations to narrow wide nostrils, it is necessary to leave tiny external scars, quite inconspicuous, at the base of the nostrils.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My son has asthma but he is still very interested in sports. He has tried running to keep in shape, but he finds that he is unable to keep it up for any length of time. Is this natural? — Tim, Detroit

Dear Tim: I am not quite sure what you mean by "natural." Studies have shown that continuous running decreases lung function in patients with asthma; in this sense, then, you might say that your son's reaction is natural. On the other hand, brief, slow, intermittent periods of running, with adequate rest in between, do not have as severe an effect.

Since the treatment of a patient with asthma should be individualized, I suggest you and your son speak with his doctor to determine what sort of exercise schedule would be best in his particular case.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter had a seizure when she was an infant, and now my son has had one. The doctor says it happened because they had a fever and there's nothing to worry about. Is it unusual for something like this to happen to two children in the same family? — Mrs. M.S., Boston

Dear Mrs. S.: Fever-related seizures do appear to run in families. In one study, the brothers and sisters of individuals who had such seizures were found to have an incidence of seizures 3.4 times higher than that of the general community.

For Bert, Providence, R.I.: I don't see how natural vitamins can be said to be superior to synthetic vitamins since they are virtually the same chemically.

Gulf Coast Symphony strikes for pay increase

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — The 85-member Florida Gulf Coast Symphony has voted overwhelmingly to strike for increased pay and more frequent performances.

The 72-7 strike vote Monday, with six musicians abstaining, forced cancellation of rehearsals and three concerts in this week's masterworks program, originally set for Thursday, Saturday and Sunday nights in Tampa, St. Petersburg and Dunedin.

"The principal issue is over wages and growth," said Carolyn Wahl, orchestra committee chairwoman. She said that 85 percent of the symphony's musicians depend on orchestra wages as their main source of income.

Peter Zindber, chairman of the symphony's board of governors, called the strike "misdirected, misguided and an attempt to punish a community already hit by hard economic times."

Variety Club baby returns to first home

PITTSBURGH (AP) — More than 50 years ago, the discovery of an abandoned baby on a theater doorstep turned a club of poker-players into a world-famous charity for sick and needy children.

Now, for the first time since she was a child, Catherine Variety Sheridan has returned to Pittsburgh's Sheridan Square Theater, where, the story goes, actor Gene Kelly first heard her cries during the Variety Club's Christmas party.

"Please take care of my baby," said a note with the infant, who was abandoned in 1928 on Christmas Eve. "Her name is Catherine. I can no longer take care of her. I have eight others. My husband is out of work. She was born on Thanksgiving Day. I have always heard of the goodness of show business and I pray God that you will look out for her."

Eleven members of the Variety Club — a theater group that was dedicated mainly to poker-playing — provided for the baby's care and education before deciding she should be put up for adoption at age 5. She was adopted and raised by a Long Island, N.Y., couple, Gladys and Norman Riker, who renamed her Joan.

The story of baby Catherine became national news and resulted in so many offers of money, clothing and baby goods that the club established itself as a charity organization.

Catherine, whose married name is Joan Riker Mrlik, returned as the guest of honor at Sunday night's 55th annual Variety Club banquet in suburban Monroeville, attended by some 450 people.

"We felt it most appropriate that we honor Catherine, as we have all grown to know her, here where Variety Clubs International had its start," said Joseph Walters, head of Pittsburgh Variety Club.

"It's really quite a sight," Mrs. Mrlik said after arriving in Pittsburgh. "I haven't been here since 1933." She did not disclose her home town to protect her privacy.

Until 1980, Mrs. Mrlik and her adoptive parents kept her identity to themselves.

"Secretly, whenever articles would come out, my parents would show me and I'd say, 'Wow, it's me,'" she said.

She went public at the 1980 Variety Club banquet in Los Angeles to authenticate the story of the abandoned infant.

"The reason I came out was to dispel the notion being trumped up by rival organizations that I was a myth, that I didn't exist at all," said Mrs. Mrlik, now a nurse and mother of four.

Her natural parents never were located, but Mrs. Mrlik said her adoptive parents were all she needed.

The Rikers, friends of Variety's first international president, were selected from among the 300 families who offered to adopt Catherine.

"They're the only parents I have," she said. "After I came out in Los Angeles, some people claimed to be my real parents, but we never did anything about it. I never saw my original parents, nor do I care to."

Marvin Wilford Wainwright, 59, and Debra Sue Miller, 32, both of Canadian, Texas, were killed Sunday when the station wagon they were riding in, above, collided with a Continental Trailways bus, right, east of Pampa. Ignacia Cruz, 58, of Bronx, N.Y., a passenger on the bus, was also killed. The collision occurred about 4:30 p.m. at the intersection of U.S. 60 and Loop 171. Nine passengers on the bus were injured and admitted to Pampa-area hospitals. Officials say the station wagon in which Wainwright and Ms. Miller were riding ran a stop sign at a high speed and struck the bus.

Times have been good to magazine

NEW YORK (AP) — Thirty-four floors above midtown Manhattan, in the executive suite of Time Inc., Peter A. Gross laughs at the question: Why, on one of the most prestigious floors in publishing, has he no magazines in his office?

Not even a single copy of Time.

"I'm not a magazine magnate," he confessed. Gross, instead, is one of the key people in Time's video group — the new heavyweight at the nation's largest magazine publishing company. And video will be Time's leading moneymaker this year, outproducing magazines, books, forestry or any of the other endeavors under the Time umbrella, the company says.

Gross, the newly named president of the development and information services division of Time's video group, says: "The complexion of the company is changing. I wouldn't say from magazines to video, but from a company in the magazine business to a company in the information and entertainment business, in whatever format is desirable."

"We'd be foolish — if we want to remain leaders in communications — if we didn't try to branch out into new areas," Gross added. "Our business is distributing, gathering, editing, marketing and packaging information and entertainment."

Down the corridor from Gross, Kelso F. Sutton, group vice president for magazines, is not at all pleased that video tops the Time family this year in revenue production.

"We've got a real hot competition," Sutton says. "They may get me this year, but I'm not giving up... We're going to continue to give those video people a run for their money."

To that end, Sutton's magazine group will try to compete with TV Guide next year when it begins marketing TV-Cable Week, a full-size weekly magazine with regional commercial and cable television listings, as well as features and news about the industry.

Time Inc. has come a long way from just Time magazine, which Henry R. Luce founded in 1929. It grew into a magazine publishing empire and has now branched into video, cable and pay television and development of computerized information delivery to the home.

In the magazine stable are Time, Life, Fortune, Money, People, Sports Illustrated and Discover. The most widely circulated, Time, prints 4.4 million copies weekly, or about 1 million more than its nearest competitor, Newsweek.

Time Inc. is also the nation's largest provider of pay-TV services. Home Box Office, Time's first entry into the field, added its 10 millionth customer this month. A companion movie service, Cinemax, has 2 million subscribers and is growing.

Through its American Television and Communications Corp., Time is the country's second largest cable system operator. Through its more than 1 million acres of forest in the eastern part of Texas, Time is the state's largest landowner.

Authorities planning to question couple whose three infants suffered crib death

MARSHALL, Texas (AP) — A couple accused of beating their baby daughter to death faced questioning by Missouri authorities today concerning the mysterious deaths of the little girl's brothers, police say.

All three children of Marvin L. Allman and his wife, Sherry Ellen, died when they were less than 5 months old.

Investigators have attributed the deaths to an illness known as "sudden infant death syndrome," or crib death.

Allman, 30, and his 24-year-old wife are being held on $100,000 bonds on felony charges of injury to a child in the death of 3-month-old Sherry Lynn Allman.

Investigators from Kansas City, Mo., where Sherry Lynn's brothers died, were expected to arrive Tuesday to talk to the Allmans, said Marshall police officer H.E. Walker.

The little girl died Wednesday morning. Authorities at first thought she had suffered crib death, but Harrison County District Attorney Sam Baxter said an autopsy showed the baby had been beaten on the head, neck, ribs and arms.

The injuries were "classic child abuse fractures," Baxter said. He notified Kansas City, Mo., prosecutors about the case.

According to Kansas City hospital records, the deaths of two other All-man children had been attributed to crib death, Baxter said.

were found on his body, the prosecutor said.

"Given the reported history of multiple SIDS deaths in the past, and the baby (Sherry) fitting the age group in which SIDS occurs, and not seeing any trauma on the child on external investigation, it looked like SIDS," Baxter said.

Joblessness furor leads Reagan to consider job-creating proposals

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, facing growing congressional clamor to do something about high unemployment, is considering proposals to help young people without jobs and workers on long-term layoff, officials say.

But, these administration officials said Monday, Reagan is concerned about proposals that will prove too costly for an administration seeking ways to reduce budget deficits, which could reach $200 billion in fiscal 1984.

The officials said, nevertheless, that the Council of Economic Advisers and the Labor Department are working on several proposals that could be included in the fiscal 1984 budget plan Reagan will send Congress in January.

The officials agreed to discuss the employment proposals only on the grounds they not be identified publicly.

A WHITE HOUSE official said that Martin S. Feldstein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, suggested special unemployment-fighting programs to the president shortly after Election Day.

"Everybody (in the White House) understands that with a 10.4 percent unemployment rate, unemployment as a policy area deserves very careful attention," said the official.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said several ideas on how to deal with unemployment have been given to Reagan. But he emphasized that "no decisions have been made."

Under one plan, the administration officials said, tax credits would go to companies hiring young people, including those still in high school, as well as drop-outs and graduates.

From an employer's standpoint, this would be the equivalent of paying a sub-minimum wage to youths without having to amend the current law requiring payment of a $3.35-an-hour federal minimum wage, one official explained.

Unemployment is particularly high among young people. Nearly one-quarter of the teen-agers in the labor market are out of work and the jobless rate among those under 25 is 19 percent.

ANOTHER PLAN WOULD provide a wage subsidy to companies that hire people who have exhausted their 26 weeks of regular unemployment benefits.

Under this idea, a person either could remain jobless and collect 13 weeks of extended unemployment benefits or receive a government voucher worth 13 weeks of benefits that would go to an employer who hires the person. The voucher would help offset the new employee's wage.

Currently, some 481,000 jobless workers are receiving extended benefits. And under provisions of a special congressional appropriation enacted in connection with the $99.3 billion tax increase bill passed last summer, another 400,000 Americans are drawing six to 10 weeks of extra benefits beyond the basic 26-week payment period. That special program expires, however, by year's end.

The White House officials said both proposals are rough ideas at this stage. Details on how they would work and how much they would cost have yet to be completed.

A high-ranking Labor Department official, who asked to remain anonymous, said the agency's sense "is that we're not going to come forward with a specific plan yet."

THE OFFICIAL SAID the tax-credit plan for getting businesses to hire hard-to-employ youths would "in effect set up a system of a sub-minimum wage."

White House interest in government job-creating programs represents a reversal from Reagan's earlier strong opposition to what he has ridiculed as temporary "make-work" and artificial "dead-end" jobs.

The chief executive has contended that such jobs programs ultimately do more harm than good to prospects for long-term economic growth and new employment opportunities.

However, Reagan seems to be softening his opposition as unemployment has climbed to a 42-year high and members of both parties in Congress have begun pushing for enactment of new federal jobs programs.

Missing man's body identified

SULPHUR SPRINGS (AP) — Medical examiners have positively identified a decomposed body found last week as that of a former Braniff International executive who disappeared during a business trip to East Texas last month.

The body was that of Edson Emerson Beckwith, who died of multiple stab wounds, according to Deborah Sanders, a field agent with the Dallas County medical examiner's office.

The death has been ruled a homicide, authorities said Monday.

Hopkins County Sheriff J.E. Tittle said Texas Rangers, an investigative branch of the Department of Public Safety, have joined the sheriff's department in the murder investigation.

A ranch foreman discovered Beckwith's body Friday in woods about four miles northwest of Sulphur Springs and four miles northeast of where Beckwith's abandoned car was found Oct. 15.

The 51-year-old financial consultant was returning to Dallas from a business meeting in Omaha, Texas, when he disappeared.

His wristwatch and a wallet, containing no money, were found on his body, authorities said.

His wife, Jane, said she suspected foul play when her husband, who was always punctual, failed to return home as scheduled.

"I'm sure it was robbery, because they found no money on him," she said. "I think they held him up, and he tried to fight them."

"He was probably fighting for his life," she added. "But he was always a fighter. He probably was just reacting to somebody holding him up."

Beckwith's 1979 Oldsmobile was found along a rural road 75 miles east of Dallas. The keys were in the ignition and Beckwith's suit coat was hanging on a hook in the back seat.

Officers found a pair of driving gloves nearby with a spot of blood identified as being Beckwith's type.

Boundary no barrier to peace

U.S. and Canadian park officials meet at the international marker designating the border running through the world's only "international" national park. WATERTON-GLACIER INTERNATIONAL PEACE PARK — Monty Slim is a Parks Canada ranger-naturalist. He wears the Parks Canada uniform.

But he lives and works in Glacier National Park in Montana, conducting campfire programs and nature walks for visitors to the American park.

Joanne Newman is a U.S. National Park Service Ranger-naturalist. She wears the U.S. National Park Service uniform.

Newman lives and works in Waterton Lakes National Park in Alberta, Canada, conducting campfire programs and nature walks for visitors to the Canadian Park.

The exchange is one of numerous unique features of Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park, the world's only international national park, which recently celebrated its 50th anniversary.

A common border is shared by the two national parks — the 49th Parallel, the U.S.-Canadian boundary.

Both parks boast some of the most magnificent mountain terrain in North America — lofty, sawtoothed, year-round snow-shrouded peaks, glistening sculptured glacial valleys, alpine lakes — 1,130,000 acres of pristine wilderness.

The national parks are administered separately by the two nations, divided by an international boundary but united as an international peace park.

"LOOK, THIS HAS NEVER happened between two nations before. It's exciting. It's more than something symbolic. It's a marvelous concept and it works," Robert Haraden, 60, superintendent of Glacier National Park, explained enthusiastically.

"We cooperate with our Canadian counterparts at Waterton in countless ways. Our two staffs go back and forth across the international line with regularity. We're constantly on the telephone.

"We consider Waterton and Glacier together as really one big park. The animals don't know the difference. The parks don't know the difference. It's the same geological ecosystem on both sides."

When someone is lost or hurt climbing or hiking in the two parks, search-and-rescue parties from both sides of the border respond.

When a fire breaks out on the U.S. side but it is easier to get to from Canada, Canadian firefighters respond, and vice versa. No calls have to be made to federal authorities to secure permission.

"We just take the appropriate action. The national lines are ignored. This really is one park. It just happens to be shared by two nations," said Bernie Lief, 40, superintendent of Waterton Lakes National Park. His enthusiasm matches that of Haraden, his American counterpart.

LIEFF SAID BOTH the Canadian and American "staffs exchange views on operations, new ideas, long-range planning. We're in tune with one another's thinking.

"Our naturalists and interpreters explain the theme of the international peace park to the public, making Americans, Canadians and any others who come here aware of the importance of the international peace park concept, how it helps cement the friendship between our two nations."

Visitors to Waterton and Glacier receive identical complimentary brochures complete with maps, color photos and detailed information about the scenic wonders of both parks.

Rangers in both parks wear identical arm patches featuring the Canadian maple leaf and the American bald eagle.

Hikers on the popular 10-mile trail along Upper Waterton Lakes straddling the international line are led on daylong outings by two park guides — one an American from Glacier, the other a Canadian from Waterton.

"Bear sightings by park personnel and visitors in Waterton and Glacier are recorded on the same computer. Wildlife biologists on both sides monitor and conduct cooperative year-round studies on the 250 grizzlies, the 600 black bears and the 300 elk in the international herds," said Glacier Park's wildlife specialist, Clyde Fauley, 58.

"YOU FIND US DOING ALL sorts of wonderful, unthinkable things, that normally do not occur along an international border," said Max Winkler, 51, Waterton's chief park warden (ranger).

"At Boundary Bay on upper Waterton Lake, the seven-mile narrow lake half in Canada half in the United States, there is a Canadian campground just inside the Canadian line.

"We wanted to put a dock by the campsites, so boats could take campers in and out of the remote spot. The best spot for the dock was on the American side of the line. So we Canadians let the Americans know we were going to put a dock in there and went ahead and did it."

The cooperation between the two parks has worked beautifully since the international peace park was created on June 18, 1932. "In all these years, there has been virtually no friction in the peace park between the Americans and Canadians," noted Waterton's chief park naturalist, Duane W. Barrus, 40.

The Rotary Clubs of Montana and Alberta conceived the idea of the peace park. The Canadian Parliament and the U.S. Congress passed the necessary legislation making the park possible.

SEVERAL YEARS LATER, efforts were made to establish a similar international peace park on the U.S.-Mexican border at Big Bend National Park in Texas. But nothing came of the plan.

This year, the Mexican-U.S. peace park idea is being revived. Gil Lusk, 38, superintendent of Big Bend National Park, spent two weeks in Mexico recently talking about the plan with officials there.

"There is keen interest on both sides of the border. Mexican officials tell me they would like to see it happen," Lusk said.

"Mexico has a national park system and is talking about the possibility of establishing a park in the wild mountain and desert country across the border adjacent to Big Bend National Park."

Stanley E. McCaffrey, 65, president of the million-member Rotary International with clubs in 157 nations, has proposed still another international peace park, larger in area than Waterton-Glacier on the Ecuador-Peru border.

"For the last century Peru and Ecuador have been fighting over a huge chunk of jungle, mountainous country along the Amazon," explains McCaffrey. "Hundreds of lives have been lost in skirmishes in 1981, 1960, 1941 and in many battles before those."

USING THE WATERTON-GLACIER International Peace Park as a method of bringing lasting peace to the disputed area, McCaffrey journeyed to the two South American countries earlier this year to propose making the border territory a park shared by both nations.

"Not become part of one country or the other but set aside as an international peace park," says McCaffrey. "And if any resources are harvested from the area — the presence of oil has been one of the reasons triggering the dispute — then both countries would share equally in the benefits."

McCaffrey, president of the University of Pacific in Stockton, Calif., took a leave of absence from the school to serve his one-year term as head of Rotary International.

He went to Peru and Ecuador and talked to leaders of both nations about his proposal. He told them about Waterton-Glacier and its success. He proposed that the international park be administered by trustees, all of whom would be outstanding Rotarians, with an equal number from Peru and Ecuador.

"Nobody said no. It is a possibility. Sure, it's a long shot," McCaffrey said. "But it's worth pursuing."

Oilfield Supplies

hermatics of a well. These Perma/Lift design features increase your well's production without increasing your production budget.

Easy to Adjust Unlike most oil field equipment, the only tools required to make the control adjustments and do most of the minor maintenance on the pumping unit can literally fit in your back pocket. This is clearly an advantage when you consider that it changes the stroke length on most conventional wells, on the pump track and a tool box as big as the back of a flat-bed truck would be required.

The Bottom Line The unique features of a Perma/Lift pumping system will add to one thing: increased profitability, through pumping power and revolutionary portability. The more you use a Perma/Lift system, the more valuable it becomes. And that's not an idle promise, that's a patch proven, oil field fact.
