Negotiators near new spending pact

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional negotiators, struggling with each other and a threatened veto, neared apparent agreement Saturday on a compromise spending bill to rescue the federal government from its day-old insolvency.

"We're pretty close," said Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., a close friend of the president and one of the Senate's negotiators.

"I think we're going to get" an agreement, said a second Republican senator, who asked not to be identified by name.

The reports of progress in the two-day series of negotiations came when House Democrats submitted a revised proposal to resolve billion-dollar disagreements over social programs and foreign aid.

They said their plan would grant President Reagan the additional spending cuts he is demanding overall, although spread over a broader range of programs.

It was not clear whether the proposal was fully acceptable to the administration. Reagan has threatened to veto legislation that doesn't meet his conditions.

And even with a compromise there could be no final passage of the plan until Sunday afternoon, since both the House and Senate were recessed for the night.

Technically, the government ran out of money at 12:01 a.m. Saturday when existing stopgap spending legislation expired. But the White House conceded no one would notice the difference, at least for the time being.

The new measure is needed because, except for a measure covering its own operations, Congress has not yet passed any of the regular money bills for the current fiscal year, which began Oct. 1.

While full details of the Democratic proposal were sketchy, House Democratic Leader James Wright of Texas said the proposal would give Reagan the overall level of spending cuts he wanted, but spread them differently among federal programs. Democrats also offered an additional $900 million for foreign aid, he said.

The House adjourned shortly after 10 p.m. EST, and is scheduled to reconvene at 1 p.m. Sunday. Later, the Senate quit for the evening, too, and will return Sunday.

Reagan, meanwhile, was waiting at the White House to see if Congress would deliver an acceptable bill in time for him to leave Sunday as scheduled for a Thanksgiving vacation in California.

The Democrats said their proposal would give Reagan most of the domestic program cuts he wanted. "We have met your demands as far as saving money is concerned," Rep. Jamie Whitten, D-Miss., told senators facing him across the table at mid-afternoon.

Senate Republicans passed the proposal along to Budget Director David A. Stockman for review by the administration before providing a formal response, and sources said it might eventually form the basis for an agreement.

One source said, "some modification" probably would be required to make the proposal acceptable to congressional Republicans and the president.

A tree in hand may be worth a bundle, particularly if the hands handle thousands of the royal desert pines with the intent of marketing them. Contradictions in accounts by Allen, Japanese noted

WASHINGTON (AP) — National security adviser Richard V. Allen acknowledged for the first time Saturday that he received two watches from a Japanese journalist, but describes them as "a personal gift for my wife from a friend of many years' standing."

Journalist Fuyuko Kamisaka, who has said she also gave Allen $1,000 intended for Nancy Reagan to give to charity, told The Associated Press one of the watches was given Jan. 16, before President Reagan's inauguration, and the other on Jan. 22, two days afterward.

Allen, in his latest written response to questions presented him by the White House press office, said both watches "were received prior to Jan. 20, 1981," when Reagan was inaugurated and Allen became national security adviser.

White House officials generally are prohibited from accepting gifts from anyone the staff member "knows or has reason to believe ... has any interest which may be substantially affected by the staff member's performance of his job."

Allen said the watches were a gift from a friend, which is permitted for White House officials "when the circumstances make it clear that the family or personal relationship involved is the motivating factor."

Any such gift worth more than $35 "received from any source other than a relative" must be reported on a staff member's annual public disclosure report. The watches were valued at about $165 each.

Allen cited the regulation on gifts for which personal relationship is the motivating factor, but stressed his contention that the watches were given him before he took office.

The contradictions in the accounts by the journalist, who was grateful to Allen for arranging a Jan. 21 interview with the first lady, and by Allen were the latest in a series of discrepancies that raise new questions about the credibility of one of President Reagan's key aides.

Here, briefly, are the others:

— Miss Kamisaka has been quoted by two major Tokyo newspapers as saying she reminded Allen several times that she needed a receipt for the $1,000 she gave him for helping arrange her interview with Nancy Reagan. Allen repeatedly promised to mail her a receipt but it never arrived, said Miss Kamisaka, who wrote the story about Mrs. Reagan for a Japanese magazine.

Allen has said he took the honorarium to spare Mrs. Reagan embarrassment and put it in his office safe, where he forgot about it until the cash was discovered by someone else eight months later.

— Asked whether a Japanese journalist had ever given him an honorarium, as opposed to his intercepting one meant for someone else, Allen replied during a Nov. 13 question-and-answer session: "I don't believe I ever did accept an honorarium from a journalist for an interview, no."

Asked whether he had received one, since he maintained he received, but did not accept, the $1,000, Allen replied, "I can't recall ever having done so, no."

On Saturday, however, Miss Kamisaka told The Associated Press and the Tokyo newspapers she had given Allen a Seiko quartz watch and that she believed one of the women accompanying her gave him another one in gratitude for his getting them in to see Mrs. Reagan.

In a written statement Nov. 14, Allen he never asked for nor expected to receive an honorarium for helping with the interview, "Nor was such a matter ever raised with me by anyone at any time."

Ultra-light aircraft instrumental in two deaths

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Within a 24-hour span last week two men died in Midland County in separate ultra-light aircraft crashes, one the result of apparent pilot error and the other due to structural failure of a part included in the original design, its demise perhaps hastened by improper assembly.

Neither of the craft — products of Weedhopper of Utah, Inc. and Eipper-Formance — was manufactured under Federal Aviation Administration airworthiness standards, nor was either pilot trained or licensed.

The reason is simple: The FAA, although charged with the responsibility of determining the airworthiness of conventional aircraft and the competence of their pilots, is pursuing a "hands-off" policy in regard to ultra-lights.

The effect of this policy, in essence, means that ultra-lights — motorized aeroplanes resembling hang gliders and often weighing less than 155 pounds — are designed, constructed and sold to the public with no agency overseeing their safety. Furthermore, ultra-light pilots, untrained and perhaps completely unskilled in the operation of any type of aircraft, are left on their own or with operators' manuals to learn to fly.

That most ultra-light pilots are able to do so and that the structural designs generally are airworthy are reflected in the relative dearth of ultra-light fatalities as compiled by the Experimental Aircraft Association in Hales Corners, Wisc. Prior to the Midland fatalities, only 21 ultra-light-related deaths had been recorded nationwide in the past four years, although 15,000 craft are in operation.

BUT SHEER STATISTICS may not speak to the heart of the matter. For if, as "Aviation Consumer" magazine editor David Shugarts said, "It's really an airplane, it really flies and you can really die in it," then why hasn't the FAA stepped in to regulate the ultra-light's airworthiness and the competence of its pilot?

The answer, as given by Arthur C. Jones of the FAA's General Aviation and Commercial Division in Washington, D.C., was blunt.

"We view it as a sporting vehicle, and in any sporting activity there is a certain risk, and that is the operator's choice," he told the Reporter-Telegram Friday.

Thirty-year-old Tim J. Robinson of 507 Howard Drive conducted his last sporting activity at 5:25 p.m. Monday at Midland Air Park.

A truck driver for Dow Chemical Company by profession, Robinson's hobby was ultra-light flying, at which he had accrued considerable experience. A witness told police he was stalling the craft at an altitude above 200 feet when it suddenly went into a power dive and crashed in a pasture. The manufacturer, however, claims Robinson was conducting low-level aerobatics under 100 feet and that the crash was directly attributable to pilot error.

"HE WAS DOING maneuvers that violated Federal Aviation regulations," said Lyle Byrum, former Midlander and president of Eipper-Formance of San Marcos, Calif. which manufactured Robinson's Quicksilver craft. "If he had been doing the maneuver 25 feet higher, I don't think he would have had the accident." He said Eipper-Formance's judgment was based on interviews with eyewitnesses.

Byrum indicated that for a conventional aircraft to conduct the same aerobatic maneuver Robinson was attempting would require 800 to 1,000 feet of altitude.

While the FAA does not regulate the airworthiness of ultra-lights, said Byrum, it does dictate certain laws of operation within set areas.

Peace bid: Reagan yes, Soviets nyet

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — The generous and imaginative four-point proposal by President Reagan for mutual reduction of nuclear missiles in Europe was sniped at swiftly by Soviet propagandists. Their attack matched one earlier by Kremlin boss President Leonid Brezhnev who had plenty of time to study the American leader's offer since the peace signals from Washington had been circulated for several days before the 20-minute address was beamed by TV satellite to the world.

It proves once more, if we ever needed reminding, that the Russians talk and think a totally different language from us. They obstinately refuse to relinquish their huge military advantage and territorial imperialism.

Yet that rejectionist feeling is scarcely shared by friends and allies in Western Europe who had become nervous about the upcoming installation of U.S. intermediate nuclear-tipped missiles. Large protest demonstrations have been ripping through allied countries. Brezhnev, on the eve of a weekend visoit to West Germany, gave a guided interview to a magazine in the Federal Republic in which he rejected the anticipated appeal by President Reagan for drastic curtailment of nuclear missiles. His attitude was underscored by the synchronization of the Soviet-controlled media. They all faithfully echoed Mr. Big's repudiation of President Reagan's recommendations.

The mood in Western Europe, however, had an electrifying and positive effect. Even Michael Foot, the radical-minded Labor Party leader in Britain, hailed the Reagan speech as a "sound step in the right direction." That remark alone could cause Brezhnev's own think tank to reassess its "no-no" views. The Soviets almost certainly will rock back and forth when disarmament negotiations begin in Geneva on November 30th. Haggling in diplomacy is second nature to them.

Except for a few soreheads, the president's speech has been welcomed enthusiastically on a bipartisan basis in this country. That, I believe, is as it should be. Moreover, it gave West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt cause for tremendous satisfaction. He has recently been attacked by the left wing of his ruling Social Democratic Party for being too pro-American. His meeting with Brezhnev could be the litmus test of genuine Soviet intentions.

Between times, the chancellor welcomed British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, staunchly pro-Reagan, who herself has been assailed by anti-nuclear demonstrators in Britain.

President Reagan, genial as always, but terse as he related the commanding edge of the USSR in nuclear missiles and conventional forces to Washington's National Press Club, made an international impact. The troubles with demonstrators encountered by our allies, and coming to grips in NATO with nu-

Temperatures warming up again

Could this be the calm before the storm or has Mother Nature decided to forget autumn temperatures for Midland?

Once again, the forecast is calling for the temperature to climb into the upper 70s through Monday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

It should be fair through Monday, but the warm afternoons will cool down to bring mild nights. Low tonight is expected to be in the mid-40s.

Winds should travel northwesterly 10-15 mph through Monday.

Saturday's temperature of 75 was eight degrees short of the record high of 83 recorded in 1942, and the overnight low of 35 was 10 degrees warmer than the record low of 25 set in 1975.

Houston man with gun arrested

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Texas man wanting to tour the executive mansion was arrested Saturday by White House guards when he tried to check a pistol at the gate, officials said.

Assistant press secretary Mark Weinberg said Lawrence Sheldon Chess, 41, of Houston, was charged by Metropolitan Washington police with carrying a deadly weapon, carrying a concealed weapon and possession of an unregistered handgun and ammunition.

Chess was released after posting $1,600 bond. A hearing on the charges against him was scheduled for Monday in District of Columbia Superior Court.

The Secret Service interviewed Chess but determined that he did not appear to constitute a threat to President Reagan or the other family members and officials entitled to Secret Service protection, Weinberg said.

The White House spokesman said Chess approached a guard at the gate, handed him a five-shot, .22-caliber pistol and asked him to hold it while he went on a White House tour.

The District of Columbia has one of the nation's strictest gun-control laws.

Black pilgrim no longer depicted

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (AP) — A black man may have been at the harvest table at Thanksgiving celebrations 350 years ago, but he's no longer represented at historic Plimoth Plantation because of a dispute over his existence.

"I would think the plantation would have benefited from something like this, especially around Thanksgiving, but I guess it's better to be safe," said Marjorie Anderson, director of another Plymouth museum, Parting Ways Museum of African-American Ethno-history.

"Now it's guess who's not coming to dinner," she said.

Plimoth Plantation, designed to show life as it existed in the New World, last summer hired a black man to personify Abraham Pearse, one of the colony's early inhabitants who was believed to have been black.

During the museum's 1981 Thanksgiving celebration — held in October because it's actually a festival to mark the gathering of the harvest — Pearse was not represented.

Ms. Anderson said white descendants of Abraham Pearse put pressure on museum officials to cancel the Pearse portrayal.

Plantation director David Case denied that, saying officials at Plimoth Plantation got so many complaints from historians and genealogists attacking the assumption that Pearse was black that they decided not to replace the employee after he left in September.

"Most historians by and large feel there is a very, very strong chance there would have been a black presence. Our problem is exactly who were they," said Case.

Case said the portrayal of Pearse as a black man was based on a list of residents of the area in the 1640s. On that list, the name Pearse is followed by a second line, indented, which says simply, "blackamoor." Case said that was a 17th century term meaning a black person.

The controversy focuses on whether the second line really refers to Pearse, he said.

Case said debate over the presence of blacks has been going on for years, but it lay dormant until the museum decided to hire a black man to depict Pearse.

A number of employees were upset about the decision to shelve the Pearse character, said Robert Marten, a plantation official.

"The plantation is under considerable pressure from descendants of Pearse and various Mayflower descendants," he said.

But the Rev. Peter Gomes, a black who is Harvard University chaplain and a plantation trustee, criticized the hiring.

Ultra-light aircraft involved in deaths

"We must abide by Part 91 of the Federal Aviation regulations, and can be issued a violation whether we are licensed or not," he said, comparing it to a bicycle being subject to traffic laws.

Byrum claims that no fatalities ever have occurred as a result of structural failure of the Quicksilver.

"WE'VE HAD JUST an excellent safety record in the Quicksilver, which has been in production since 1972," he told the Reporter-Telegram. "Over 10 years' time we've had only six fatalities in more than 5,000 aircraft ... Ultra-light aircraft offer much less threat than any other vehicle I know...It's just unfortunate that a few people have to make mistakes flying at under 100 feet and attempting (aerobatics) to make you realize you can't do that kind of maneuver that low."

Thirty-two-year-old John Wilkerson wasn't attempting low-level aerobatics in his final sporting activity at 5:15 p.m. Tuesday in the air above Scharbauer Ranch in west Midland County. A dealer of Weedhopper of Utah's ultra-light craft — which is advertised as capable of cruising at 40 miles per hour for 100 miles and sells for $3,795 — Wilkerson was flying at an altitude of 250 feet when a tang — a bracket that connects the strut to the fuselage — collapsed, leaving no support for the wing.

His craft plummeted to the ground, killing him instantly.

A CRUEL IRONY accompanied his death — for he had failed to heed Weedhopper of Utah's directive to replace the aluminum tang on his craft with one made of stainless steel. In fact, the very tangs which most likely would have prevented the accident had been left lying on his workbench in his shop at 1400 W. Front Ave.

Some 2,000 Weedhoppers have come off the production line since the first was designed three years ago, and for much of that time the tangs were constructed of aluminum. However, a basic flaw in the use of the part began to come to the attention of Weedhopper's national headquarters in Ogden, Utah: In assembly of the ultra-light craft kits by consumers, the aluminum tangs were being bent by imbalance of the wings and then straightened by hand.

"It's not necessary to bend them in assembly or disassembly, but it's easy to do if instructions are not closely followed," admitted Weedhopper vice president of marketing George Strother. He added that his company feels the collapse of aluminum tangs on the Weedhopper "is not really the fault of the original design, but a result of the fact that people in the field were not assembling the craft according to instructions."

In January 1981, company officials decided to relay warnings to consumers and dealers. But, said Strother, owners did not readily comply, and an "air worthiness directive" was issued in May calling for replacement of the aluminum tangs with ones of stainless steel which could not be easily bent.

STROTHER INDICATED the fatal crash "sounds very consistent with the failures we had seen happening due to mishandling," but added that final judgment is being withheld pending company inspection of the failed parts.

Strother, like his counterpart at Eipper-Formance, stressed the statistical safety record of the ultra-light line. "We have a safety record that is several times better than general aviation or motorcycles, and 10 times better than conventional mobile aircraft ... and we've never had a fatal accident in Texas before," he claimed. "But as in conventional aircraft and in automobiles, there's a tremendous dependence on operator skill, proper maintenance procedure and pre-flight inspection."

In conventional aircraft, such skills and knowledge are acquired during pilot training. And the fact that the FAA does not regulate who is competent to fly an ultra-light or whether or not it is airworthy creates "an unusual situation," said Matthew Finucane, director of Ralph Nader's Aviation Consumer Action Project in Washington, D.C.

"The FAA does say that it's the duty of the FAA to set minimum standards for design of aircraft ... and yet there are no regulations covering planes under 155 pounds," he said when contacted Friday.

However, a series of FAA "operating requirements" for ultra-lights were proposed on July 27, 1981, and feedback is being accepted until Wednesday. The proposal would apply to single occupant craft weighing less than 155 pounds which have no U.S. or foreign airworthiness certificates.

THE SUGGESTED rules would limit ultra-light craft to daylight flights and specify areas where prior authorization of air traffic control would be required, including prohibited and restricted areas, airport traffic areas, terminal control areas, positive control areas and control zones. Furthermore, operation of ultra-light vehicles would be prohibited over any congested area of a city, town or settlement, and over any open air assembly of persons.

The city of Midland already is one step ahead of the FAA — an ordinance has been on the city books for the past several months prohibiting the piloting of ultra-light aircraft over city-owned areas.

Assistant City Manager Fred Poe said the ordinance was passed following "a seige of (ultra-lights) passing real low over the city. We had concern...that they might hit somebody on the ground or in a crowd."

IN CONDUCTING HIS fatal "aerobatic maneuvers" over Midland Air Park Monday, Tim Robinson apparently was in violation of that city ordinance, which carries with it a maximum $200 fine.

According to the July 29, 1981, edition of the Federal Register, when the FAA first began studying the matter of "powered hang gliders" in January 1974, it had intended to treat them as aircraft, subject to aircraft certification and registration, and to require operators to obtain pilot certificates.

"However," said the Federal Register, "as time passed, hang gliding became a sport activity and the FAA, sensitive to the needs of the sport, decided to review the need for such stringent measures."

The review resulted in allowing all craft less than 155 pounds in weight and their pilots to be free of non-pertinent FAA regulations, and the proposed operation regulations would not affect that policy.

"If (an ultra-light) meets the definition, and should that proposal be adopted, there is no air worthiness requirement," noted FAA spokesman Jones. He added, however, that Weedhopper of Utah, Inc. and Eipper-Formance hold the philosophies of "informing (consumers) whenever a part can be better made, very similar to the airworthiness directive the FAA puts out."

THE ISSUE of whether or not the government should regulate the air-worthiness of ultra-lights and the competence of their pilots is one which Shugarts of "Aviation Consumer" magazine has given considerable thought. Since the FAA keeps no record of ultra-light crashes, the only method of recording fatalities or injuries is through newspapers, which may not reflect all such accidents.

Ultra-lights, he said, often are being sold to persons with no aeronautical training, "and that is a great danger." But, he added, the sporting quality of the craft also must be kept in mind. "It is not advertised as the most safe, most docile thing to be doing; it's not a form of transportation, but a form of adventure," he said.

However, more and more persons involved in ultra-lights are stressing the importance of pilot education.

"The public would do very well to get the aeronautical knowledge to fly an airplane, whether it be an ultra-light or anything else," said Shugarts.

The Professional Ultra-light Manufacturer's Association — of which Byrum of Eipper-Formance is president — has proposed that ultra-light pilots be licensed. Under the proposal, said Byrum, a prospective pilot would "be signed off by a certified flight instructor (who determines) he understands all FAA flight regulations pertinent to ultra-light aircraft." Furthermore, he said, PUMA has a set of airworthiness standards similar to FAA standards for conventional aircraft.

"Our program is pilot education (with) a complete instruction manual," he said, but noted that as many as 60 per cent of ultra-light pilots already may hold aeronautical licenses.

Despite suggestions from PUMA, it appears likely that the burden of responsibility will continue to rest solely on the integrity of ultra-light manufacturers and on often novice pilots. Only a rash of fatal crashes — such as the unprecedented back-to-back accidents in Midland last week — might result in a re-direction of that responsibility.

IN ONE DAY'S TIME, Midland alone accounted for 10 per cent of all reported ultra-light fatal crashes in the entire nation during the past four years. That is a brutal-enough statistic to get people concerned, wondering if the FAA perhaps is looking the other way in face of a potentially dangerous situation.

"The reason the FAA hasn't stepped in to date is that there haven't been that many fatalities," said Ben Owen of Experimental Aircraft Association. Then he reflected with concern on Midland's double tragedy: "To have two fatalities this close together is really unusual."

Editor's Report

clear defenses, I feel, convinced Mr. Reagan that he had to go "presidential" to have the world hear our message. Secretary of State Haig had been slated to give the speech.

In the four points presented by the president — highlighted by elimination of Soviet nuclear missiles pointed at Western Europe, in return for American restraint in placing Pershing and cruise intermediate weapons among allies — he might have placed higher priority on inspection, or "verification," which was his term. The Soviets have adamantly refused any sort of on-site inspection. When he was president, General Eisenhower tried hard to have Nikita Khrushchev agree to on-site inspection. No way, asserted Mr. K. So, we'v had to rely on satellites spinning around the earth, the so-called "spy-in-the-sky."

There are, alas, lots of ways to hide illegal nuclear build-ups, above and below ground, so the spy detectors in the sky aren't by any means the surest answer to a con game which the Russians usually practice. Nevertheless, I would urge the president to hang tough on inspection and/or on-site verification.

In a way, the Russians have already begun their classic game of diplomatic haggling in which they hope to wear us down. Some of their political and military specialists are clamoring for the nuclear arsenals of Britain, France and the People's Republic of China to be lumped with all of our own, including the new weapons intended for Western Europe. They poob-poohed President Reagan's blunt assertion that the Soviets have "an overwhelming advantage" now in nuclear weaponry on the order of six to one.

President Reagan also insisted that it's just not good enough for the USSR to "disarm" by moving their missiles behind the Urals. Their fearsome SS-20s are multi-nuclear tipped. Besides, they are mobile and can be slipped into shelters or prepared in tunnels just awaiting the command decision to come out again and point their deadly warheads at stationary targets.

President Reagan adopted enthusiastically, if belatedly, the concept known as the "zero option." That means eliminating all nuclear missiles in Europe. The Russian have 270 SS-20s and some other missiles. If the option becomes acceptable to the USSR, the Western alliance promises not to deploy its own projected, but far from installed, new systems.

Meanwhile, as President Reagan is aware from recent history, we will not be steamrolled into unilateral disarmament. That would certainly bring on "Finlandization" — imposed neutrality for us and our friends — with the Soviets calling the tune.

Teddy Roosevelt, a wise and great president, told the country a long time ago: "Walk softly and carry a big stick." He said nothing about "Talk tough and carry a wet noodle." His advice is as sound today; sounder, if anything.

Many feel Haig hurt relations

By TIMOTHY HARPER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A majority of Americans who have heard or read about Secretary of State Alexander Haig's squabbles with other Reagan cabinet members think those disagreements have hurt American foreign relations.

The latest Associated Press-NBC News poll also said that one in three Americans believes Haig is doing a good or excellent job as secretary of state, and one in three think President Reagan is doing a good or excellent job handling disagreements among his staff members.

Earlier this month, Reagan called Haig and Richard V. Allen, the president's national security adviser, into a private meeting after Haig announced that a White House senior official whom he did not name was trying to undermine him as secretary of state.

In addition, the White House had to issue a clarifying statement after Haig said the North Atlantic Treaty Organization had contingency plans which included the possibility of a nuclear "warning shot," and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said there were no such plans.

At a news conference where he was asked about the disagreements, Reagan said:

"There seems to be too much just loose talk going around but it has been exaggerated out of all reality...There is no bickering or backstabbing going on. We're a very happy group...The picture that has been given of chaos and disarray is a disservice to the country and to other countries and allies as well."

In the poll, 30 percent said they have not heard or read of the disagreements between Haig and other members of President Reagan's staff.

Among those who had heard or read of the disagreements involving Haig, 56 percent said they have hurt American foreign relations, 40 percent said they have made no difference and 4 percent were not sure.

Thirty-three percent said they think Haig is doing a good or excellent job as secretary of state, 42 percent said he is doing only a fair job, 16 percent said he is doing a poor job and 9 percent were not sure.

Anti-nukers demonstrate

By JAMES F. SMITH
Associated Press Writer

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — At least 300,000 people protesting the nuclear arms race jammed the narrow streets of Amsterdam Saturday in the biggest demonstration in Dutch history and the largest of this fall's anti-nuclear demonstrations in Western Europe.

The protest, on an overcast but dry and relatively warm day, was often somber, with church bells tolling repeatedly along the march routes. But jazz bands and folk groups also serenaded the marchers from numerous platforms and many wore whiteface or Reagan and Brezhnev masks.

Banners proclaimed "Take the toys away from the boys," and "No Battlefields in Europe." Planes buzzed overhead towing messages for and against the protest, such as "Democratic Freedom thanks to NATO" and "Spread Hollanditis (pacifism) all over Europe."

Several hundred soldiers, many from a draftee's union, demonstrated in uniform in defiance of a ban by Defense Minister Hans van Mierlo. Folksinger Donovan entertained from the podium with protest songs, including one with the refrain "neutron, you're a real estate bomb."

Marchers walking 20 to 30 abreast took 3½ hours to pass one point and caused human logjams with some groups getting back to the Museum Square rallying point before others could leave the square.

"Hollanditis is a chronic disease which will not be cured tomorrow," said Mient Jan Faber, director of the Inter-Church Peace Council, in one of many speeches. "The express trains and buses of peace will roll on."

Faber said the high degree of organization in the Dutch peace movement, including 400 local branches of the Church Peace Council, accounted for the size of the gathering.

The Dutch railway added 17 extra "peace trains" to meet demand, and another 3,200 chartered buses brought protesters from all over the country and from Belgium, West Germany and England.

Bernard Dijkhuizen, spokesman for the Amsterdam police, said "at least 300,000 demonstrators were here and possibly more. This was definitely the biggest demonstration in Dutch history."

Some 200 local committees, representing 21 national peace, religious and political groups, arranged transportation. Police said public transport alone brought 210,000 people to the Dutch capital.

Dijkhuizen said there was no violence and police made no arrests.

The crowds returning to the Central Railway Station were so great after the rally that police put up barriers and let people enter in groups.

Demonstrations in Bonn, Rome and Brussels last month drew about 200,000 people each, according to police estimates. A crowd of 150,000 gathered in London for an anti-nuclear arms protest, and another 20,000 in Paris though unofficial estimates were higher.

The organizers of the Amsterdam protest had three common demands: no new nuclear arms in Europe; the Dutch government must withdraw from the 1979 NATO decision to modernize its nuclear missile force; and the government must press its NATO partners to reverse the plan altogether.

The rally occurred a day before Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev's scheduled arrival in Bonn for talks on arms control, and just nine days before U.S.-Soviet talks in Geneva on limiting medium-range missiles.

The Dutch government last week endorsed President Reagan's "zero option" proposal for cancellation of the NATO plan in return for dismantling of Soviet SS-20s and older middle-range missiles.

But the center-left coalition also postponed a decision on whether it will deploy its share of 48 new U.S.-made cruise missiles if the "zero option" is rejected.

Gijs von der Fuhr, chairman of the demonstration organizing committee, claimed President Reagan's speech Wednesday calling for deep cuts in medium-range missiles had little impact on Dutch citizens.

Recall crib parts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Plastic brackets used to suspend the springs on about 98,000 "Baby Line" cribs have been recalled by the manufacturer because they may break or bend, the Consumer Product Safety Commission says.

The agency said Thursday that the recall by Questor Juvenile Furniture Co. of Los Angeles was prompted by reports of minor injuries to three infants.

The recall covers brackets used on 29 Baby Line models with date codes from June 1977 through September 1978. About 34,000 of the 98,000 cribs are subject to a previously announced recall for the problem.

Book says Clayton made victim because of 'glamour'

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Speaker Bill Clayton's attorney says he was picked as an FBI target in the Brilab investigation only because he was a glamorous figure.

"The FBI picked Clayton only because he was a 'glamorous' target and not because it had been able to find a shred of evidence that he had ever done anything wrong — much less been susceptible to taking bribes," Austin Roy Minton said in soon-to-be released book "Gravel, Grit and Glory."

The book by Austin journalist and public relations consultant Jimmy Banks will be pushlished Dec. 1 by Eakin Publications, Burnet.

Clayton was acquitted by a Houston jury Oct. 22, 1980, of bribery charges arising from the FBI's investigation.

Minton said Clayton could never understand "that if the FBI can find a glamorous target, those young studs they have as agents just think it's great ... Glamorous targets are the big deal. It's good press. They love it. It's fun — it's not hard work. And when Clayton's name came up they thought there was nothing that would be greater in the world than to put a case on the speaker of the Texas House of Representatives."

Former U.S. Attorney Tony Canales was quoted in the book as saying he had nothing personal against Clayton.

Contractors investigated

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Twelve Texas seal-coat companies and 10 individuals — most of them in the Panhandle — have been accused in federal indictments of antitrust violations and mail fraud in an alleged highway bid-rigging scheme.

Three indictments charge that the defendants participated in an alleged conspiracy to keep the price of road construction at "artificial and noncompetitive levels" by deciding in advance who would be the low bidder on the projects.

The defendants could not be reached immediately for comment.

A Justice Department antitrust investigation that began 14 months ago "is continuing," said Leonard Senerote, who coordinated the probe with various federal and state agencies.

State Attorney General Mark White, who said he cooperated with the Justice Department investigation, added that he was working with the Department of Highways and Public Transportation on a state investigation "into irregularities in the highway contracting business."

Thomas L. Johnson, executive vice president of the highway contractors' trade association, said his members still are being called to testify before the grand jury.

"I would guess they're investigating every highway contractor in the state because seal-coating is a very small part of the (contracted) work," he said.

All those indicted are in the seal-coat business, in which asphalt and aggregate material is spread over highways to keep water from seeping into the highway bed.

The maximum penalty for conviction on antitrust charges is a $1 million fine for a corporation and a $100,000 fine and three years in prison for an individual. Mail fraud carries a $1,000 fine and five years in prison.

Hulon Wall, former president of High Plains Pavers Inc. of Plainview, and Charles H. Schmidt, former vice president of Cooper & Woodruff Inc. of Amarillo, also were indicted on two counts each of lying to the grand jury. If convicted on that charge, they could face a $10,000 fine and five years in prison for each count.

Indicted on anti-trust charges were W.D. Turner Construction Co., Boswell & Crafton Inc., Western Pavers Inc., Stafford Construction Co., Kerr Construction Co., South Plains Contracting & Equipment Co. and Panhandle Pavers, all of Lubbock; High Plains Pavers, Plainview; Kenneth M. Hancock, president of Kerr; W. D. Turner, Roy Turner and Jim Turner, all officers of W.D. Turner Construction; Hughard Daniel, president of Western Pavers, and Wall.

Also, Schwope Inc. of San Antonio, C.H. Allison Paving Co. of San Antonio and Erick Charles Schwope Jr., secretary-treasurer of Schwope Inc.

Also, Young Bros. Inc. of Waco and its vice president, John W. Miller, and Brannan Contractors Inc. of Victoria.

Also named was Henry L. Stafford, identified as president of South Plains Contracting & Equipment Co. and Panhandle Pavers Inc. The indictment said he also was in business under his own name and in the name of Stafford Construction Co.

Judge wants state blue law repealed

DALLAS (AP) — The state district judge who ruled Texas' blue law unconstitutional told a legislative committee last spring that he favored repealing the law.

Dee Brown Walker Friday declared the law unconstitutional on grounds it does not provide citizens equal protection under the law and is unpopular and almost impossible to enforce.

On March 23, Walker expressed the same views in testimony before the House Committee on Business and Industry.

"The law cannot be enforced properly ... The district attorney doesn't have enough money to go out and keep tabs on all these stores," Walker told the committee.

He said most people with whom he had discussed the law believed it should be taken off the books.

"In my opinion, the American people and Texans ... are getting tired of government interfering with their lives and if they want to buy something, 24 hours a day, they ought to be able to do it," Walker said.

The committee approved the bill but the House later tabled it, 83-59.

The law has been declared unconstitutional four times in the past, but each ruling has been overturned.

Assistant District Attorney John Hager said he was not sure what effect Walker's decision would have.

Walker said his ruling applies only to the parties in the case — about 15 drug, department and grocery stores. The judge said the stores now can operate on Saturdays and Sundays without regard to the law, which prohibits the sale of certain items one day a week.

Lawyer Houston Holmes Jr., who represents Tom Thumb supermarkets in the case, said he was advising his client to continue complying with the law until the Texas Supreme Court acts on Walker's ruling.

"I'm certainly not pleased," said Michael R. Moore, executive vice president of the Texas Retailers' Association, which has lobbied against legislative efforts to repeal the law.

"My organization supports the blue law," Moore said Friday.

PUC to decide on lifting penalty

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Public Utility Commission has set a public hearing for 9 a.m. Dec. 9 to consider whether to lift a $4 million service penalty assessed against General Telephone Co. of the Southwest.

The PUC imposed the service penalty against General Telephone in 1980 when it sought a $58.3 million rate increase. The company was granted an increase of only about $31 million.

The service penalty was imposed because of increasing complaints about the quality of service General Telephone was providing. The PUC heard testimony from numerous General Telephone customers during the initial phase of hearings on the rate hike in 1980.

The Texas Municipal League is intervening against the proposed lifting of the penalty.

General Telephone serves approximately 1.3 million customers in 165 counties across the state.

The hearing will be held at the PUC offices at 7800 Shoal Creek Blvd., Austin.

AUSTIN — The State Securities Board has received an application from DAMCO Energy Corp., Midland, to register $400,000 in securities for sale in Texas.

The application was one of 22 applications to sell more than $31.19 million in securities that were filed during the week ending Nov. 14.

Midlander is named to task force

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements has named State Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland to the Governor's Task Force on Work Related Accidents.

Craddick is chairman of the House Committee on Natural Resources.

The task force will hold its first meeting at 10 a.m. Wednesday at the Texas Department of Health offices at 1100 W. 49th St., Austin.

No injuries in Huntsville prison riot

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Inmates who have been housed in tents for months burned mattresses and destroyed thousands of dollars in property in a melee that left 50 prisoners injured, Department of Corrections officials said Saturday.

Two inmates were hospitalized after Friday night's free-for-all at Eastham Unit, said TDC spokesman Rick Hartley. No prison staff members were injured, but an observation tower guard was pelted with rocks and other debris, he said.

A total of 272 inmates at Eastham Unit, 13 miles west of Trinity in eastern Texas, moved into tents last summer after a federal judge ordered officials to eliminate overcrowding and to make other sweeping changes in the prison system.

Asked whether the rioting inmates would have been easier to control in cells, Hartley said, "That's certainly true."

Hartley said news of a riot earlier in the week at a prison 150 miles away, along with a fight among eight or nine inmates, sparked the disturbance.

About 500 inmates at the Darrington Unit rioted Wednesday night, injuring nine convicts and four guards and causing $200,000 worth of damage.

When Eastham inmates began fighting Friday, the observation tower guard ordered them to stop, Hartley said. When they ignored him, he alerted other officers, according to Hartley.

"When additional officers attempted to enter the area, they found the access door blocked by burning mattresses," Hartley said.

Once they got inside, the officers found "fires had been started inside tents, inmate property had been destroyed and rocks had been thrown, breaking outside windows on the main building of the unit," he said.

The inmates not participating in the fight tried to leave the tent area, "but the 50 instigators refused to let them out," Hartley said.

The instigators were subdued "with a minimum of force" and placed in segregation, he said. Others were housed overnight in the gymnasium.

Twenty of 35 tents were destroyed.

Meanwhile, Hartley said a guard's mistake may have caused the riot that erupted Wednesday at Darrington Unit.

"A preliminary investigation ... indicates that human error may be the cause of the initial disturbance," he said.

Church gives Poland food

HOUSTON (AP) — A Church of Christ leader says the Polish government gave church representatives permission to distribute religious materials after they trucked in $2 million worth of food to the communist country.

The Bammel Road Church of Christ here organized a relief drive among 1,000 congregations after hearing of food shortages in Poland, said David Oakley, director of the church's Eastern Europe missions program.

Thirty pastors then flew to West Germany, where 150 tons of food were purchased, and formed a convoy of 31 trucks with pastors from Western Europe, he said.

The convoy encountered a slight delay in Czechoslovakia, where all of the drivers were given Breathalyzer tests for intoxication, Oakley said.

"But the only drink we had was hot Coca-Cola," said driver Bill Johnson, of Monroe, La.

Once in Poland the convoy split, going to five prearranged places where Polish Church of Christ members had set up distribution points to get the food to people who needed it most, Oakley said.

"As a result of that action, the Polish government ... has given us permission to distribute religious materials printed in the Polish language," he said.

Governor paroles six jailed over Midland area crimes

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Six persons convicted of crimes in the Midland area have been paroled by Gov. Bill Clements on recommendations of the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles.

Bruno Thomas Cruz, convicted of theft by exercising control in Howard County March 23, 1981, was paroled to Georgia after serving and earning one year and four months of a three-year sentence.

Robert Duaynn Roys, convicted of theft over $200 in Ector County Feb. 4, 1981, was paroled to Burnet County after serving and earning one year and eight months of a five-year sentence.

Jackie Manuel Valdez, convicted of two counts of theft over $200 in Midland and Ector counties Feb. 6 and 23, 1981, was paroled to Ector County after serving and earning one year and six months of a three-year sentence.

IRS raids suspected bookies

DALLAS (AP) — Internal Revenue Service agents raided 11 suspected bookmaking operations in Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma Saturday and seized cash, gambling-related paraphernalia and three cars, authorities said.

A Madisonville, Texas man was taken into custody and transported to Houston to await arraignment on federal charges Monday, said IRS spokesman Chuck Bailey.

In Texas, IRS agents raided suspected bookmaking operations in Dallas, Flour Mound, Hewitt and Houston. Three different addresses were raided in Waco and another two were raided in Madisonville, Bailey said.

Agents also executed search warrants in Bossier City, La. and Midwest City, Okla., Bailey said.

Most of the alleged gambling activities involved wagers on college and professional football games, he added.

Bailey said agents in Waco seized code books identifying players and a printing press was confiscated in Midwest City.

Three vehicles valued at $22,000 were confiscated and at least $8,000 in cash was taken, the spokesman said.

Authorities would not say if the 11 establishments were connected.

Old town gun gone

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — City officials are offering a $400 reward for the return of the gun used by lawman J.J. Clinton in the late 1800s to signal the arrival of each New Year.

The gun, believed to be at least 100 years old, disappeared Friday from a glass case near the front doors of City Hall, where it was on permanent display, police said.

For 36 years, Clinton fired his Colt .45-caliber pistol into the air at midnight New Year's Eve. The custom began in 1885 when the police chief ordered a curfew on the city's 23 saloons to avoid trouble with a group of rowdy cowboys, said city public information officer Sandy Test.

Clinton told the saloon keepers he would signal them to the approaching curfew and at the appointed hour he stood on the corner of two downtown streets and emptied his pistol into the air, Ms. Test said.

Clinton continued the tradition until his death in 1922, she said.

The gun was given to the city a number of years ago by Clinton's family and had been on display in the locked case, officials said.

Former inmate charged

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A former inmate who filed the lawsuit that prompted a federal judge to order extensive changes in the state prison system was charged Saturday with two counts of armed robbery.

David Ruiz, 39, was jailed in lieu of a total bond of $100,000 in connection with armed robberies of a tavern and a grocery store. He was paroled by Gov. Bill Clements June 10 after serving 14 years of a 25-year sentence for an Austin grocery store robbery committed while he was on parole for a previous armed robbery conviction.

His 23-year-old nephew, Alfred Ruiz, also was charged with two counts of armed robbery and was jailed under $30,000 bond.

Another nephew, Jeffrey John Ruiz, was arrested Wednesday and charged in the tavern robbery. He remained in jail in lieu of $50,000 bond.

David Ruiz was arrested outside the South Austin home of one his brothers, and Alfred Ruiz was arrested at the house he shared with David, said Austin police Capt. John Vasquez.

TCU receives $5 million

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Texas Christian University has received $5 million from a Dallas foundation and will use the gift to provide financial aid for undergraduate students, university officials say.

The gift from the Theodore and Beulah Beasley Foundation is the largest in TCU history for student aid purposes, Chancellor William E. Tucker said Friday.

Preference will be given members of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), he added.

Beasley has served on the TCU board since 1954 and has made other gifts to the school. He is a retired founder and board chairman of Republic National Life Insurance Co.

Texas senator concerned about possible money source

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen Saturday questioned whether foreign sources are backing Communist Party campaigns in three Mexican municipal elections along the Texas border.

"Let me make it very clear, in no way should we interfere in the internal affairs of another country — particularly our neighbor Mexico — but I do think it's a matter of concern to us if there is foreign money that's funding a city election in a little town such as Villa Acuna," now Ciudad Acuna, said Bentsen, D-Texas.

Bentsen said he was disturbed by reports in the San Angelo Standard-Times, which were distributed by The Associated Press, that $150,000 was being spent on the Communist campaign in Ciudad Acuna, across the border from Del Rio, Texas.

Parts of administration praised

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A conservative think tank delivered a report card Saturday on President Reagan's first 10 months in office, giving bad marks to its personnel practices and to the Justice, Defense and Energy departments.

"The Reagan administration, although headed in the proper direction, should and could have accomplished more since the election in November 1980," the Heritage Foundation said in a draft report.

The main reason the new Republican administration has not accomplished more, the report said, is its personnel practices. Poor staff work, it added, had forced Reagan to "use his remarkable powers of persuasion."

The personnel problems were caused "in almost every case (by) delaying appointments, unqualified or misqualified appointments or the appointment of individuals who are not committed to the president's goals and policies," the foundation said.

President Reagan himself got high marks from the conservative organization, which said he "has exercised personal leadership very effectively."

"To date, (Reagan) has not been tested with major decisions, only to carry out promises made during the campaign," it said.

The administration's actions were sized up against the more than 2,000 recommendations the Heritage Foundation made a year ago to make the government more conservative.

The administration has started or implemented about 60 percent of the 1,270 suggestions that could be made in a short time, foundation vice president Richard N. Holwill told reporters.

The highest marks were given to Budget Director David Stockman's office, which was praised for revising President Carter's 1981 and 1982 budgets and getting the changes to Congress within a month after Reagan took office.

Cabinet officials singled out for praise were Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, Health and Human Services Secretary Richard Schweiker and Interior Secretary James Watt.

Sen John Glenn, D-Ohio, was in New Hampshire, the state with the nation's earliest presidential primary, but declined to say if he will be a candidate in the 1984 Democratic presidential sweepstakes. Klansmen convicted of bomb plot

By STEVE BAKER
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A federal jury Saturday convicted two Ku Klux Klan members and a Neo-Nazi of plotting to blow up a Jewish temple in what prosecutors called a "bizarre" scheme motivated by hatred and bigotry.

The jury deliberated eight hours before convicting Gladys Girgenti, 50, and Bobby Joe Norton, 32, both members of the Confederate Vigilantes of the Ku Klux Klan, and William Foutch, 48, a member of the American Nazi Party.

They were charged with conspiring to bomb The Temple, some Jewish-owned businesses and a television transmission tower in Nashville.

The jury received the case Friday and was sequestered overnight.

As the verdict was read, tears rolled down the cheeks of four jurors. Remarking on this, both Assistant U.S. Attorney Bob Washko and Foutch's attorney, Charles Ray, praised the jury for its conscientiousness.

Ray and Mrs. Girgenti's attorney said appeals would be filed by the Dec. 15 deadline for post-trial motions. Norton's attorneys had no comment.

U.S. District Judge Thomas A. Wiseman set Dec. 4 as the sentencing date. He also lowered bond for the three from $100,000 to $50,000 and allowed members of their immediate family to sign personal surety notes.

The defendants were arrested in the parking lot of The Temple on May 25.

They were implicated in the scheme by Robert Lee Vance, who was working for the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms when he tape-recorded conversations about the plot.

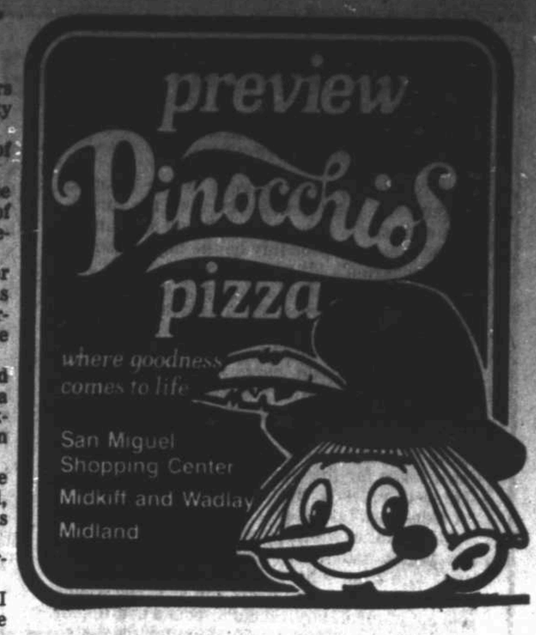

Vance, who says he has been an informant for police or federal authorities for about 10 years, was with the three defendants when federal agents arrested them. Defense lawyers argued that Vance entrapped their clients.

In closing arguments Friday, Washko attempted to show that each defendant was involved in a conspiracy to "destroy the Jewish financial backbone and destroy the Jewish people's effect on society."

"I believe the evidence shows clearly that the motive behind this rather bizarre plot was hatred, bigotry and prejudice aimed at two races — blacks and Jews," Washko said.

Attorney Mike Noel, who represented Mrs. Girgenti, compared Vance to a spider.

"He just lures them all into the web," Noel said. "I submit to you he's gone beyond the bounds of the law."

Latest Atlantic biggest seller ever

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Managers of the Atlantic Monthly, still a bit bewildered over the tumultuous response to a story about David Stockman, say the issue will probably be the biggest seller in the magazine's 124-year-history.

"It's been a dream and a nightmare combined," said Roy Green, the magazine's circulation director.

The storm began when word leaked out that the magazine would carry a 24-page article entitled "The Education of David Stockman." In it, the budget director criticized some parts of the Reagan economic program. He said the Kemp-Roth bill was a "Trojan horse" to bring down taxes for the wealthy and called supply-side economics a new name for Republican "trickle-down" policies.

The Atlantic, which prints analytical features and fiction and rarely makes big news, found itself with a hot seller.

Its initial newsstand press run of 70,000 copies sold out immediately. So did a second printing of 70,000 copies. Another 45,000 copies will be distributed Tuesday.

The total newsstand run of 185,000 is triple the usual number. And if sales continue the way they are going, the December issue will be the Atlantic's all-time best seller.

Its closest rival is the 100th anniversary issue in 1957, which sold 152,000 copies on the newsstands.

In addition, the Atlantic sells 315,000 issues through mailed subscriptions.

Green said the magazine's editors had no idea the article would cause a sensation.

"It's been a wild freak," he said last week. "If we had seen this coming, we would have printed that many copies in the beginning. It's an interesting story and all that, but who would have thought it would take off like this?"

Green said one newsstand in Harvard Square in Cambridge has sold 2,300 copies so far.

Ninety percent of the second batch of magazines sent to Los Angeles sold out in a single day, and no copies are left in the distributor's warehouse in Boston.

"We figured 70,000 copies would be plenty," Green said. "If we sold 50,000 or 60,000, we thought we would be just doing great. Now we're going to sell three times that."

Stockman receives support

By TOM SEPPY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Budget Director David Stockman made a trip to Capitol Hill Saturday, his first since he was quoted two weeks ago expressing doubts about President Reagan's economic program.

Stockman was invited to the Capitol by Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., and Rep. Robert H. Michel, R-Ill., the leading House Republican, as Senate and House conferees attempted to iron out their differences on an emergency spending bill to rescue the government from day-old insolvency.

The 35-year-old budget director was asked to be on hand to review any proposed compromises on behalf of the administration.

Stockman declined to talk to reporters as he moved quickly through the halls and into Baker's office, along with Richard G. Darman, a White House aide, and Max L. Friedersdorf, the administration's legislative liaison.

In a show of faith in the embattled Stockman, Baker and Michel posed with him for news photographers. Ground rules for the session prohibited questions.

Also in Baker's office were key Republican members of the conference committee — Sens. Harrison H. Schmitt of New Mexico, James A. McClure of Idaho, Mark O. Hatfield of Oregon and Ted Stevens of Alaska and Rep. Jack Edwards of Alabama.

Although Baker said two weeks ago that Stockman had damaged himself and the president's program with his remarks, an aide said Saturday that Baker believes "it's time that David Stockman came back up here. He's still working, the administration's policy is still working and it's important that the conference knows that."

U.S.S.R. calls arms reduction offer 'gimmick'

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — On the eve of Leonid I. Brezhnev's first trip to the West in nearly two years, the Soviet Union declared Saturday that President Reagan's arms reduction offer was a "gimmick" that could lead to a "more dangerous spiral of the nuclear arms race."

"Resorting to pacifying cosmetics, the United States is seeking to create a situation politically favorable for the implementation of NATO's decision to deploy new medium-range missiles in Europe," said an authoritative article in Pravda, the Communist Party newspaper.

Brezhnev, the party leader and president who is making his first trip to the West since the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan in December 1979, flies to Bonn Sunday and begins holding talks Monday with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

Senior Pravda commentator Yuri Zhukov, a member of the Communist Party Central Committee, in a TV program Saturday night, praised West Germany for maintaining strong economic ties with the Soviet Union, and said Brezhnev's trip kept the door open for expansion of relations.

Schmidt is said to be awaiting Brezhnev's response to President Reagan's speech Wednesday in which Reagan offered not to deploy new U.S. nuclear-tipped missiles in Europe if the Soviets would dismantle their missiles targeted at the West.

"In reality, the United States is imposing a new, ever more dangerous spiral of the nuclear arms race, leading to the aggravation of military confrontation which is fraught with creating a crisis situation on the European continent," said the Pravda article.

The commentary was part of a stepped-up Soviet campaign to defend Russian military might before American and Soviet negotiators begin European arms limitation talks Nov. 30 in Geneva, Switzerland.

Included in the campaign is a 74-page pamphlet called "The Threat to Europe," in which Moscow says it needs large conventional and nuclear forces to defend against possible attacks by the Western allies or China.

The booklet appeared to be a response to a 99-page Pentagon publication entitled "Soviet Military Power," which cites a major buildup of Soviet land, sea and air might.

Further, the Soviet Embassy in Washington released the text of a letter Brezhnev wrote to Reagan in May assuring the American leader that Moscow does not seek nuclear confrontation and calling for wide-ranging talks between the superpowers.

Soviet spokesmen assert that a rough parity exists between the conventional and nuclear forces of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Warsaw Pact, including the European missile forces of NATO and the Soviet Union.

The Petrov commentary restated the Kremlin position that the U.S.-Soviet talks should cover the nuclear arsenals of Britain and France, as well as American nuclear arms capable of being launched from air, ground and sea. France does not belong to NATO's military wing.

Reagan offered to forego deployment of new ground-launched U.S. missiles if the Soviet Union would dismantle its existing SS-4 and SS-5 missiles, together with the newer Soviet SS-20s.

NATO voted two years ago to deploy 572 new U.S. Pershing and cruise missiles in Western Europe to counter the SS-20s, on the condition the United States open missile talks with the Soviets. Deployment is to begin in 1983.

Scienteia called for "mutually acceptable solutions" in disarmament negotiations.

Three National People's Congress members ousted

PEKING (AP) — Two National People's Congress members were ousted because of their role in the Cultural Revolution, and one was purged for building a spacious house and taking state goods, the People's Daily said Saturday.

The newspaper of the ruling Communist Party said that Fan Deling and Wang Shihui were removed as representatives from Hebei province, and that the province's People's Congress Standing Committee also urged that Fan be removed from the national congress' Standing Committee.

In Hubei province, the paper said, Gao Yutian was removed because he abused his position to build a large house and he took $1,653 worth of materials. It said he was ordered to repay the money.

The National People's Congress, which can change laws, remove officials and decide economic plans, is the highest organ of state power. Its Standing Committee supervises the State Council, the government's executive branch.

The newspaper said Fan and Wang were removed for "serious mistakes" during the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution, a period of intense political upheavals encouraged by the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung that the government now calls a decade of disaster.

The paper did not elaborate but said Fan, also a member of the Communist Party, and Wang had gained high posts by rebelling and that the masses were dissatisfied with them.

This indicated they followed policies of the "Gang of Four," the ousted leaders headed by Mao's wife, Jiang Qing. The four have been imprisoned.

Turkey requests increased diplomatic protection

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Turkey asked the United States on Saturday to strengthen protection of Turkish diplomats. The request came a day after a bomb exploded in the Turkish consulate in Los Angeles.

The Foreign Ministry summoned U.S. First Counsellor Richard W. Boehm to receive the request.

The explosion Friday in Los Angeles caused heavy damage but no injuries. The ministry said an Armenian underground organization claimed responsibility for the attack.

In Paris, French judicial sources said an alleged Armenian terrorist will be released from prison and expelled from France because a wounded Turkish diplomat failed to identify him as his attacker.

Gokbert Ergenekon, second secretary of the Turkish Embassy in Rome, was shot in the arms Oct. 25 in Rome. He failed to identify Dimitru Georgio, an alleged member of the Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia, in a Paris police lineup Friday, the French sources said.

Georgio, also known as Khatchig Avedissian, was arrested Nov. 11 at Orly airport as he tried to enter France on a false Cypriot passport.

A Turkish official in Rome denied that Ergenekon had failed to identify his attacker. The official, who asked to remain anonymous, said Ergenekon narrowed the lineup down to two suspects, one of whom was Georgio. The other was a police officer made up to look like Georgio, the diplomat said.

The official also said Georgio had been wounded, and Ergekonen had returned fire at his attacker, possibly wounding him.

He claimed Georgio was carrying a round trip Beirut-Milan air ticket in his pocket at the time of his arrest, and that the portion to Milan had been used.

An anonymous call claiming the attack on Ergekonen in the name of an Armenian extremist group was made in Beirut.

Authorities prepare for 'Day of Action'

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Authorities have detained more than 30 suspected Irish Republican Army guerrillas and canceled all local police leaves in preparation for Monday's "Day of Action" protest by followers of militant Protestant preacher Ian Paisley, officials said Saturday.

But Paisley's plans for a 12-hour general strike to demand that British authorities smash the almost exclusively Roman Catholic IRA were dealt a setback Saturday. The Ulster Defense Association, largest of Northern Ireland's Protestant street armies with an estimated 15,000 members, threw its weight behind a rival protest.

UDA leaders said they would join a rally by the Official Unionist Party, opponent of Paisley's Democratic Unionist Party, in the Harland and Wolff shipyard, rather than Paisley's protest outside Belfast City Hall.

Sotelo takes over Spain's ruling party

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Premier Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo took over as president of the badly splintered ruling center party Saturday and pledged to lead it through what he called difficult times for Spain's democracy.

"I reaffirm the need for a political center, different from the right and from the left, that can continue the necessary and possible reforms," Calvo Sotelo said after he was confirmed 181-0 by the advisory political council of the Union of the Democratic Center. Forty-four members of the council cast blank votes and two other votes were voided.

Calvo Sotelo's election to head the party came a day before a massive right-wing rally scheduled in downtown Madrid to commemorate the sixth anniversary of the Nov. 20 death of Gen. Francisco Franco, Spain's dictator for 36 years.

Sunday also marks ascension to the throne of King Juan Carlos, Franco's hand-picked successor who turned the nation from dictatorship to democracy under the premiership of Adolfo Suarez, who founded the UCD.

Calvo Sotelo called for party unity to end dissent that has threatened to wreck his ruling coalition of Christian Democrats, Liberals and Social Democrats.

The formal approval came two weeks after 15 leading Social Democrats quit the party, claiming the premier had moved the Union of the Democratic Center too far to the right since last February's foiled right-wing military coup.

Ethiopian take-over of church could cost them

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — Sweden and Norway have warned Ethiopia that its takeover of the Lutheran Church headquarters here could cost this poverty-stricken Marxist country badly needed development aid.

A Swedish diplomat said both governments appealed to Ethiopia to reverse last Monday's seizure of the church offices in downtown Addis Ababa by five armed soldiers.

The government of Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam has so far given no official reason for the takeover of the eight-story building valued at about $1 million. Wole Gormu, director of public relations in the Ministry of Information, said "The government is not against any religion of any kind."

The Mekane Yesus takeover was the second in a week of choice church property in downtown Addis Ababa. Last week, the Emanuel Baptist Church, one of three Baptist groups in the country with less than 1,000 members, was evicted from its five-story building.

Last July, officials in the Gondar region of north-central Ethiopia kicked out the Geneva-based relief agency ORT, which had been running clinics, schools, a carpentry shop and brick factory primarily for the Falashas — Ethiopian Jews that legend calls the lost tribe of Israel.

Sweden and Norway, both major aid donors to Ethiopia, each have about 100 missionaries serving with the Evangelical Church Mekane Yesus, the country's largest Protestant church that groups various Scandinavian and German Lutheran denominations.

The Swedish diplomat said the takeover of the church headquarters would undoubtedly have "an adverse effect" on the willingness of Swedish taxpayers to contribute to Ethiopia's development. This year, Swedish aid to Ethiopia totaled $20 million and Norway's was reportedly over $10 million.

Ethiopia has long been a bastion of Christianity in Africa. Between 40 and 45 percent of the country's 31 million people are Ethiopian Orthodox Christians and an equal number are Moslems. Neither religion has been harassed by the government.

In fact, churches are so crowded these days that hundreds of worshippers can be seen standing outside on Sundays. "Churches are doubly full since the revolution" that toppled Emperor Haile Selassie in 1974, according to one Western diplomat here.

Church officials said Mekane Yesus accounts for about 500,000 of the 600,000 Protestants in Ethiopia. Religious experts estimate there are 225,000 Catholics and between 25,000 and 30,000 Falashas.

Mekane Yesus is strongest in the southern and western regions of Sidamo and Wellega. The regions are populated mainly by the Oromos, who are the largest tribal group in Ethiopia but have little or no political power.

J.B. Evridge eyes a desert pine tree and envisions the good life for him, his family and the tree variety itself, the Pinus Eldarica — The Royal Tree — in West Texas.

Workers plant, while the cold wind blows.

Running water combines with the soil, air, sunshine and a farmer's care to make the budding tree farm grow trees.

Royal pine trees

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

While many West Texans seek their fortune by drilling holes in the earth's crust in hopes of bringing forth oozing black gold, J.B. Evridge is growing desert pine trees by the thousands.

He sees money in the greening of his farm.

"This tree is the survival of the fittest," Evridge said of the desert pine he is planting on his 20-acre Pinus Eldarica Farm south of Midland.

To date, he has 20,000 healthy conifers with the green and blue-green tint all planted in rows in an old cotton field.

He's banking on the hardy tree to make him as rich as the royal Asian personages who coveted and prized the tree even before the advent of Christ.

"It was known as the 'Tree of Royalty,' " said Evridge, who referred to the time when Asian princes planted the pine tree in gardens, which comforted them and gave added status.

"It was prohibited for the ordinary guy to have it," surmised Evridge, who grew up ranching and farming in the San Angelo area.

Evridge, 64, picked up the idea for cultivating desert pine trees for fulfillment and profit from his son, Frank Evridge, who grows mostly cotton and, with the help of his wife, Joyce, is doing some serious piddling with Mondell pines, Pinus Eldarica and blue Pinus Eldarica trees — the desert pines.

To date, J.B. Evridge has planted 22,000 desert pines. And 8,000 trees, recently acquired in New Mexico, were planted by several hired hands and Evridge's foreman, veteran landscaper Ray Rice.

"He's teaching me," said Evridge. "He's a hard-working man; he's conscientious. He's looking after my business. He should be a wealthy man with the knowledge he has; he's outstanding."

What Evridge hopes to make really "outstanding" is his Midland tree farm. Even more ambitious is a vision he has down in Upton County. There, in the Benedum Field area northeast of Rankin, is where the son and his wife are nurturing their 3½-year-old dream venture and are planting more trees.

That venture — turning a profit out of desert pines in West Texas — was the idea of Dub Day, the late Upton County agricultural agent. It was he who first experimented with the desert pines in this niche of the Permian Basin and came up with what may be a successful venture. If so, it'll be a "tribute" to Day, figured Evridge.

Early in 1982, Evridge and his wife, Su, intend on planting 60,000 trees on a 50-acre spread just west of their son's Upland Nursery.

Evridge is convinced that the trees will survive and will thrive: They're drought- and insect-resistant, require relatively little care, have a wide pH range (6.5 to 8.6), and survive in a soil and climate where other varieties of pine trees would die and fade away. And Evridge figures that there is plenty of underground water to satisfy their needs by irrigation.

"They're tough," he said of the desert pine, the Pinus Eldarica and the blue Pinus Eldarica. "They're tougher than Johnson grass. They grow so fast...."

Evridge envisions a windfall payback for his labors via:

—Sales from young trees at Christmas time. They'll be fresh, lush, regal and full-bodied and won't be the fire-hazard associated with dried-out trees hauled in from out of state. And sales are ensured during the Christmas season: "They (most people) are going to pay for a Christmas tree if they have to go without a meal."

—Sales of trees to nurseries and to individuals and businesses for landscaping in the Midland-Odessa area and throughout the state of Texas.

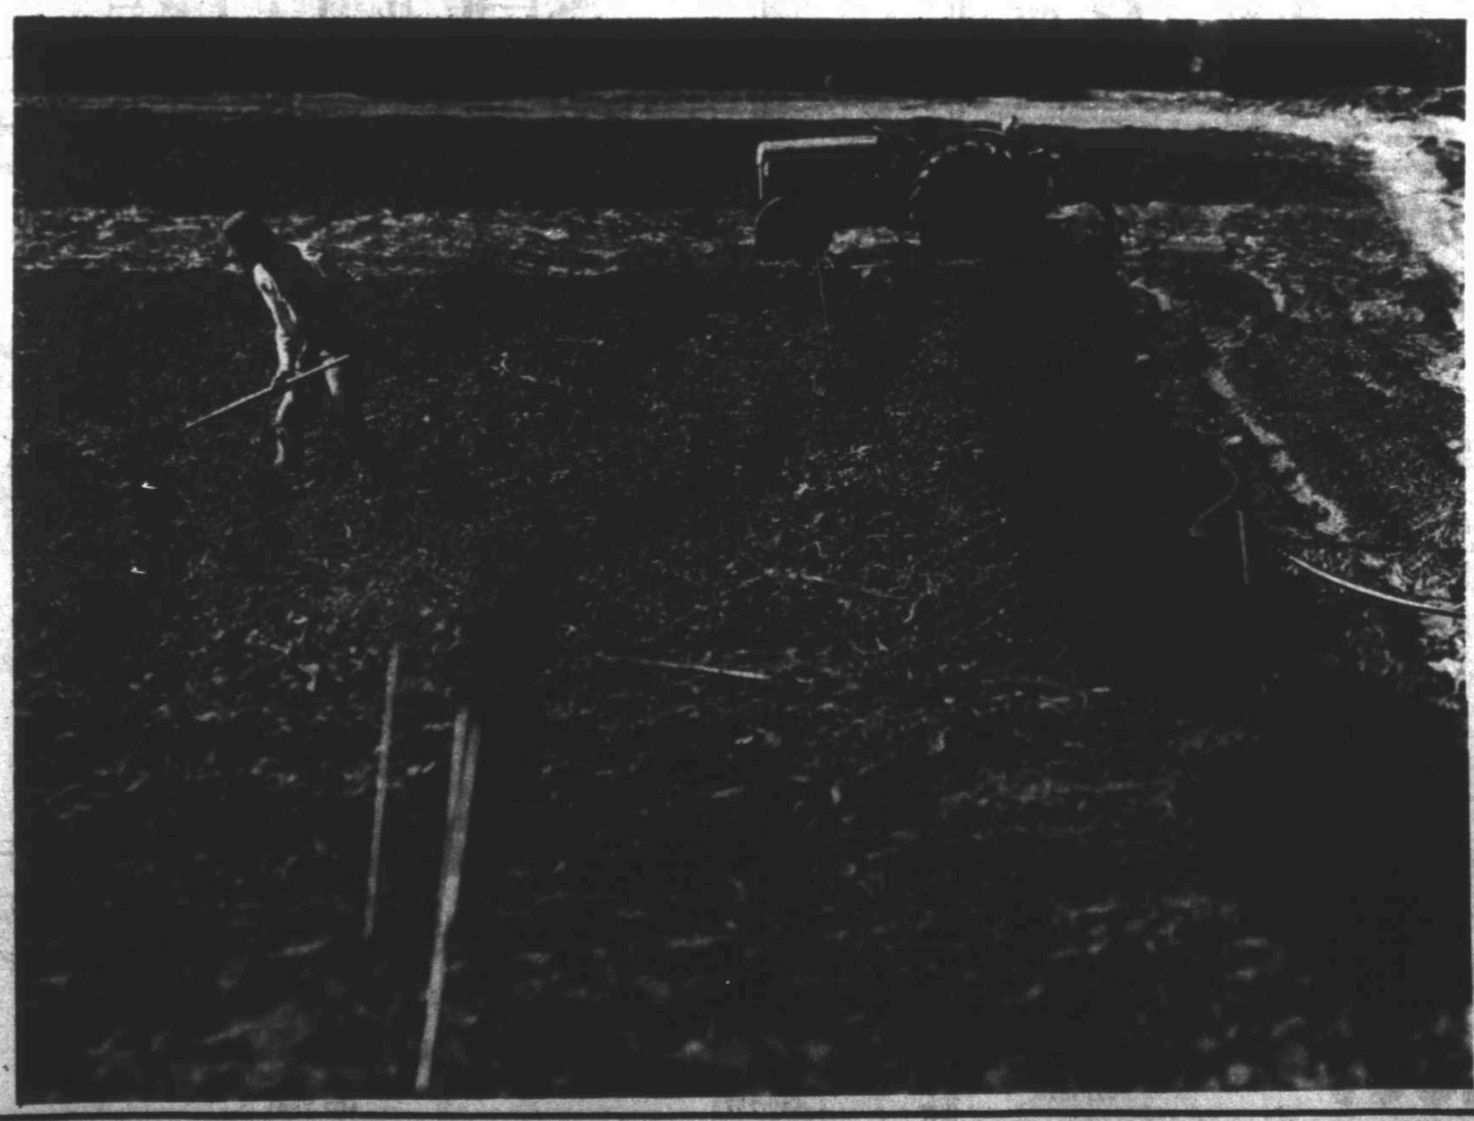

—Sale of older trees to the pulp wood mills, which would use the wood for making paper, plywood and other byproducts. The tree will grow to 30 feet tall in six to seven years and, given enough time and good earth, some up to 100 feet.

—Sale to farmers and ranchers as windbreakers. And they'll live a long time. "I'd say eternity," Evridge guessed.

Evridge views himself as an upstart in the pine tree business in West Texas.

"I'm one of the original pioneers (in the venture)," he said. "It's not an experiment." Dub Day carried out that stage in the desert-pine venture in West Texas. "It will be a big success.

"Everybody loves trees."

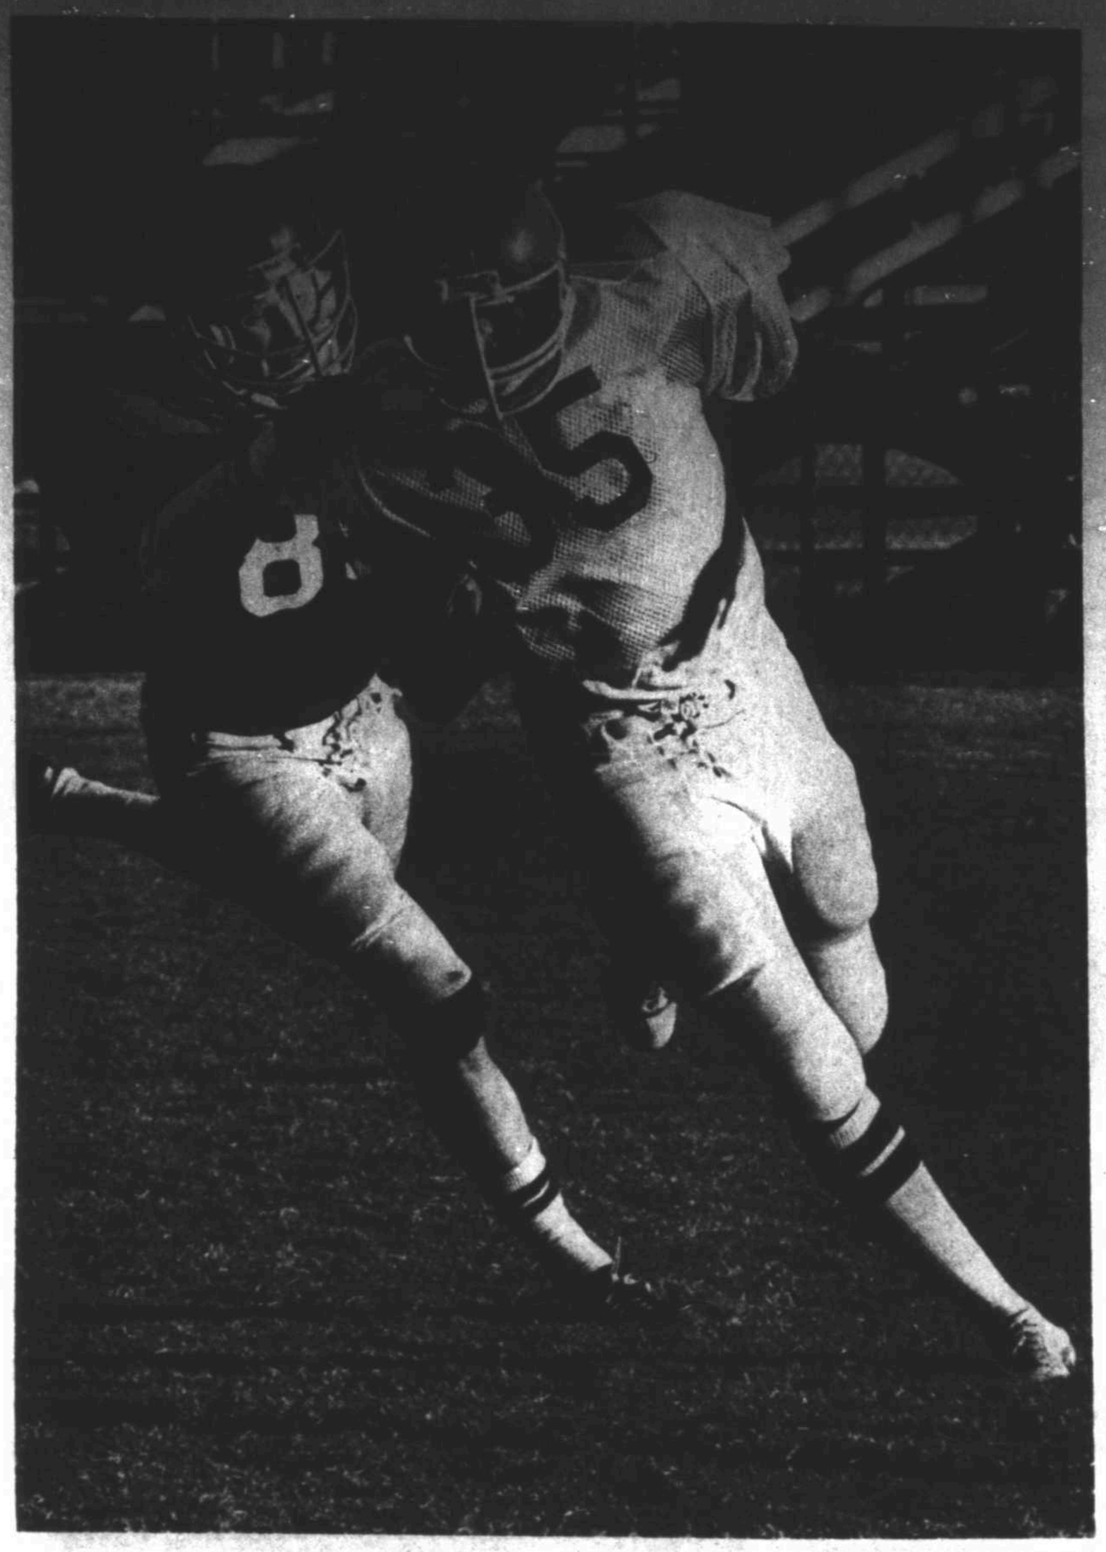

Over and over, Ray Rice shovels and plants to get the pine tree farm sprouted.

It's just a seedling today, but in a few years the desert pine may be a family's Christmas tree.

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

In a fiercely contested charity football game between Midland and Odessa law enforcement agencies, the seemingly tireless Midland Razorbacks swamped the flagging Odessa Blues by an 18-0 score before a cheering, largely partisan crowd of about 300 fans in Midland Memorial Stadium Saturday afternoon.

The second annual police "Fuzzbowl" cerebral palsy benefit game was marred, however, by a free-for-all and minor injuries to one player when Midland halfback Karl Calhoun was run out of bounds by an unidentified Odessa player and tackled on the surrounding cinder track during the final play of the game.

As punches started to fly, players from both sides swarmed to the aid of their respective colleagues and the scene soon began to look like something out of "Demetrius and the Gladiators." The fight was quickly broken up by uniformed police, though, and the only serious injuries appeared to be bruised egos.

One Odessa police officer, Alvin Woodard, collapsed shortly after the game from a throat injury suffered when he allegedly was "clotheslined" by a Midland player during the same heated play. Woodard had trouble breathing for a few minutes, but left the field under his own power and reportedly declined medical treatment.

Following a lackluster first half flawed by anemic offensive plays on both sides, an inability to capitalize on major gains, and flags that rained down like paratroopers at Fort Benning, Midland halfback Bryan Cook took a third quarter pass from quarterback John Omohundro and put the first six points on the board.

The extra point boot by halfback Joey Heinemann sailed squarely through the uprights, but an offside flag brought it back for a re-kick that failed and the third quarter ended 6-0 in favor of Midland.

Odessa's average 19-pound per capita weight advantage turned into a disadvantage as the game wore on, and an obviously tired Blues team fumbled and stumbled their way into a back-against-the wall defense on their own 14-yard line.

On a third-down, eight-to-go pass to offensive end Daryl Collins, the Razorbacks gained a 12-0 edge after the extra point try failed with a little more than nine minutes to go on the clock.

A blocked punt returned possession of the ball to Midland on Odessa's 19-yard line. A run by fleet-footed little Ricky Benton brought Midland to within three yards of the goal, and Omohundro, a special investigator for Midland County District Attorney Vern Martin, dove across the center on a quarterback keep that made the score 18-0.

Again the extra point attempt failed, and a last-minute Odessa blitz evaporated in a fumble at Midland's five-yard line. With seconds to go, Calhoun attempted an outlast-the-clock run along the sidelines that ended with him eating cinders and cops wading into the fray like they sail into a bar fight.

The event generated in excess of $2,000 for the fight against cerebral palsy, however, and a rematch is set for Dec. 12 in Odessa.

City Council to consider Energas rate increase

Midland City Council will consider granting an 11 percent rate increase to Energas when the panel meets in regular session at 10 a.m. Tuesday in City Hall Council Chambers.

Energas had requested an 18.5 percent rate hike in August. But the 62 cities involved in that increase hired a group to study the proposal and draw up its own recommendations.

Assistant City Manager Fred Poe headed up that committee and said Friday that Energas had agreed on the compromise. If all 62 cities approve it, the increase will go into effect.

One of the more popular items this past year on the council agendas — sewage — appears again under the heading of "continue discussion of selection of an effluent disposal site." And if something isn't decided in the near future, said one city official, "we're going to be covered in sewage."

The council had considered seriously the plan proposed by engineers of Black & Veatch to pump the primary treated effluent down to Salt Lake eight miles south of the city. Landowners adjacent to the lake opposed the plan, and other means of disposal have been researched in the ensuing weeks.

The council also will hear a preliminary report from Parkhill, Smith & Cooper, Inc. concerning the sanitary sewer system within the city. The firm was to study the city's system and show where new lines, or larger lines, need to be installed.

The council will break up the meeting at 11 a.m. and travel to the Midland Independent School District Administration Building, 702 N. N St. for a joint session with the school board. On that agenda are discussion of community growth and plans for utility extensions, selection and development of school and park sites and closing of two streets downtown near Midland High School.

A group of Midlanders will present a report on building an auditorium in the city.

TENRAC is asking the city to go along with a contract for an energy training audit of all city buildings to reduce energy costs.

Other items include an annexation request by Meyer-Denton Development Corp. on a 651-acre tract northeast of the intersection of Midland Drive and Green Tree Blvd., a request from MidTran for more bus loading zones, a resolution to award a contract for remodeling offices on the second floor of City Hall and another resolution for a contract to remodel the open basement of Midland Center, and numerous hearings on proposed zone changes.

County Commissioners Court

Midland County Commissioners are to consider participating in a feasibility study for a Performing Arts Center in downtown Midland when they gather to act on an 18-item agenda at 10 a.m. Monday in the Midland County Courthouse.

Paula Cahoon is to present the proposal.

In other business, the commissioners are to:

—Listen to a report from Albert Stewart, superintendent of the county's road-and-bridge department.

—Consider a request from a committee to have Midland County file legal documents to incorporate the non-profit day-care program and to present names of additional members of the day-care committee. The committee is to make recommendations on the proposed day-care center, which will be a facet of the $1.6 million federally funded improvements project in the windowpane area of south central Midland.

—Consider a recommendation by the day-care committee that the center be made of metal rather than brick.

—Consider approval of a plat of Plantation Estates.

—Consider requests by Sheriff Dallas Smith on paying overtime pay for his deputies, transporting prisoners by an outside contractor, and authorizing County Auditor Johnnie Thompson to advertise for bids for an electrocardiograph.

—Consider appointments to the Midland County Child Welfare Board.

—Consider a resolution to reserve and exercise the Commissioners' Court's right to designate the locations of all pipelines, cable and line crossings in county road rights of way.

—Consider adoption of the Optional Road Law.

—Consider authorizing the auditor to advertise for bids for a word processor for County Attorney J. Scott Henderson's office.

—Consider presentation by Jim Rhotenberry on County Road 191 rights of way and culverts.

MISD Board of Trustees

Midland school trustees will begin their regular meeting Tuesday with an executive session pertaining to a real estate matter at 10 a.m., followed by a joint session with the Midland City Council at 11 a.m. in the MISD Administration building, 702 North N St.

Items to be discussed in the joint meeting include projected growth rate for the city, anticipated directions in which development will take place and projections relative to the extension of utility services.

The closing of streets adjacent to Midland High School and the consideration of school site selection and development together with park sites also will be discussed.

The school board will reconvene after lunch to hear reports on the GEM student selection procedures,the statement of receipts and disbursements from the activity funds and the tax collections.

Trustees are expected to take action on consideration of the report of an independent auditing firm, and on authorization to place orders for eight new school buses with a total capacity of 154 passengers.

Approval of a change in pledged securities, personnel resignations and appointments and the MISD and cafeteria financial statements as of Oct. 31, 1981, also are expected to be approved.

The board will meet in another executive session regarding a personnel matter in the afternoon.

1250Joint Meeting

Midland and Odessa city councils will hold a joint meeting at 10 a.m. Monday in the conference room of Midland City Council to deal with the issue of extra-territorial jurisdiction.

A housing development going in between Midland Regional Airport and Odessa city limits straddles the ETJ line. The developer — HBF Corporation — has asked the two councils to resolve the issue of which one will take jurisdiction over the entire development. To do so, the ETJ line must be changed to curve around the development.

The two councils will discuss the mass transit system and its problems in addition to any other items of mutual interest between the two cities.

The two councils have been holding joint sessions once every six months to iron out problems of mutual interest.

Panel promotes pecan festival

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Though not exactly a staple food, pecans are hearty, nutritional and versatile.

And in impressing Midland area people with that view of pecans, the Midland Pecan Growers Association formally announced Saturday its second annual Pecan Harvest Festival and Queen's Pageant for Nov. 30 and Dec. 1 at Midland Park Mall.

"We want to get everybody involved and excited about pecans," said pecan-promoter Kathy Harris.

She said that about 35,000 pecan trees are in groves of 100 or more trees in the county's rural area and that an additional 7,500 trees grow in yards in town.

The pageant's 15 beauty contestants and the show's pecan-based and laced foods may bring glamour and appetites to the annual event, but the festival's perennial stars will be the 300 or so entries of 40 whole pecans to be judged and displayed.

Pecan experts will judge the kernels of 10 cracked nuts from each of the show's entries. Prize of the show and winners and runners-up in each pecan variety will be displayed in the mall.

Judges will be Texas Agricultural Extension Service nut experts Ken Lindsey, an agronomist; Charles Neeb, an entomologist, and Austin Stockton, an horticulturist.

"We're hoping this year it'll be bigger than it was the year before," Mrs. Harris said of the show.

The food show will feature several classes of foods using pecans, including cakes, pies, appetizers, candies, breads and cookies.

Salads, meats, ice cream and other foods which require refrigeration will not be included.

"We have to stay with non-perishables," she said.

Persons interested in submitting home-cooked foods in the show may contact Sharon Hillis, county agent for home economics, in the Midland County Courthouse Annex at 218 W. Illinois Ave. Pecan fanciers who wish to enter whole unshelled nuts in the show may contact County Agent Charlie Green in the annex. Telephone number is 682-9481.

Emcee at the pageant, which begins at 7 p.m. Dec. 1 in the mall's J.C. Penney Court, will be 18-year-old Marcia Wohl, the 1980 pageant queen, who is embarking on a double career in interior designing and singing.

"I'm not in it (singing) for money," she said. "I'm in it for the glory of God and helping other people." Numbers which she'll be singing in the pageant will be "Ain't Givin' Up Now" and other Christian songs.

Queen candidates in the pageant will include:

—Felicia Adams, 20, of Greenwood, business major at Midland College.

—Kelli Badgett, 17, junior at Lee High School.

—Leslie Fort, 16, junior at Midland High School.

—Tammy Gardner, 17, junior at Midland High School.

—Molly Handley, 16, junior at Greenwood High School.

—Louanna Hill, 18, freshman at Midland College.

—Karan Long, 16, junior at Lee High School.

—Darlene Munn, 16, junior at Lee High School.

—Kim Parker, 18, freshman at Midland College.

—Jennifer Ramsey, 17, senior at Midland High School.

—Angela Rice, 16, junior at Greenwood High School.

—Stacy Swann, 17, senior at Lee High School.

—Jamie Wilborn, 16, junior at Greenwood High School.

—Suzanne Wolcott, 17, senior at Lee High School.

Judges for the queen's contest will be Charlie Green, JoAnn Bagwell and Woody Van Dyke. Candidates will be judged on the basis of their talent on display, promenading in evening gowns and knowledge of pecans.

Officials confirm medfly discovery

LOS GATOS, Calif. (AP) — The discovery of a Mediterranean fruit fly in San Mateo — the first found in California in three weeks — was confirmed Saturday, medfly eradication project officials said.

Despite the discovery, officials still plan to reduce the area sprayed with the pesticide malathion to 187 square miles by the end of the month, project spokeswoman Annie Zeller said.

The male fly was found in an area that had received seven aerial sprayings and was scheduled to receive additional treatments through the winter, Ms. Zeller said.

She said the find was not unexpected, and added that officials expect to continue finding a few flies into the spring, when warmer weather is expected to make them more active.

The fly "had been in the trap a few days" before being found Friday, Ms. Zeller said.

She said the area was last sprayed Thursday but before that it had not received a dose of malathion for 11 days due to rainy weather, which prevented helicopter spray flights.

West Texas grape production to be discussed

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Dr. George Ray McEachern, horticulturist, Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University, and Dr. Bill Lipe, associate professor, Texas A&M University Research and Extension Center, Lubbock, who will be in Midland Tuesday for a program planning committee of the Texas Grape Growers Association, will present a special program on the production and future of grapes in the West Texas area. C. Austin Stockton Jr., area extension horticulturist, Fort Stockton, also will appear on the program.

Dr. McEachern has worked closely with the Texas Grape Growers in the development of a viable grape industry for the state and Dr. Lipe heads up grape production research on the Lubbock research station. John Crosby Jr. of Midland, who presently serves as president of the Texas Grape Growers Association, is the owner of Michael Brandon Vineyards.

The Midland meeting will be held in the County Extension Office, Courthouse Annex, 216 W. Illinois St., beginning at 7:30 p.m. Any person interested in grape growing is invited to attend.

IN LAST SUNDAY'S news stories concerning the pecan show there was some conflicting information between two articles about the number of nuts needed for a pecan show entry. The correct number is 40, rather than 30.

Ten nuts are cracked and shelled for the county show and if the entry advances to regional and state, 10 more are required for each show, plus a reserve of 10 for display in the shell and to give insurance for nuts that might be lost along the way.

FALL CARE OF shrubs is very important if you want them to survive the winter in healthy condition and be ready to grow next spring.

Shrubs should be well watered ahead of a predicted cold, windy norther. This is very critical for evergreens and for new plantings which may not be well established. If the weather is dry during the fall and winter, apply water to shrubs about once every week to 10 days.

Why do shrubs need water during the winter when they are dormant? Actually, they do not stay inactive all winter. This is especially true with evergreens. Whenever the temperature gets above 40 degrees F., growth may start. They lose water constantly through transpiration, especially if they are in a windy location.

Sunburn and windburn are primarily caused by loss of water. Thus, a good supply of soil moisture is as important in winter as in summer.

Evergreen shrubs in windy locations and those which have been recently transplanted may need extra protection during the winter. A screen of burlap around such plants may be helpful. Unfortunately, such protective devices are not attactive landscape features. A good substitute is to use an anti-desiccant or anti-wilt spray. Apply in late fall about a month after the first frost, and again in mid-winter, when air temperatures are above 50 degrees.

The mulch around shrubs should be renewed each fall to help conserve soil moisture. Provide at least a two-inch layer. This also helps control weed growth next summer and will gradually increase the organic content of the soil.

It is best not to prune shrubs in the fall just before cold weather. Early pruning removes reserve food materials and weakens the plant. If a sharp drop in temperature occurs, the shrub may be damaged or killed by winter injury.

Cotton farmers may receive government deficiency payments

Cotton farmers, who are beset by a bumper crop and low prices, may be collecting five to seven cents a pound from the government on their 1981 crop.

The extra money will be deficiency payments — the difference between the target price of 70.87 cents a pound set by the government and the actual price.

Indeed, if payments are necessary due to lagging market prices, the payments will be the first since the government's target-price program was established in 1974.

The average cotton price received by farmers in July was 70.20 cents a pound, but since then, the price has dropped 10 cents — to 65 cents in August and to 60 cents in October, according to Dr. Carl Anderson, economist in cotton marketing for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service of the Texas A&M University System.

However, cotton watchers in Midland have predicted a per-pound price of 48 cents, which would be below farmers' production cost.

County youth's lamb wins at fair

Midland County 4-H'er Coby Farrow's 120-pound lamb recently won reserve champion honors at the State Fair of Texas in Dallas.

The lamb, which was first in its class, was beaten out for the championship position by a Columbia-breed lamb.

Coby, son of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Farrow of Midland, has participated in the 4-H lamb program for six years.

Farm Bureau convention slated

CORPUS CHRISTI — Robert B. Delano, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation and listed among the "most influential" national agricultural leaders, will be the keynote speaker at the Texas Farm Bureau's 48th annual convention here Nov. 29 through Dec. 2.

An estimated 1,200 or more farmers and ranchers will gather in the Bayfront Plaza Convention Center.

Delano operates a 40-acre wheat, corn and soybean farm in Richmond County, Va.

Other speakers in the AFBF convention include Carrol Chaloupka, TFB president who runs a grain-and-cattle operation at Dalhart; TFB secretary-treasurer Donald Hebert of Waller, and TFB executive director Warren Newberry.

Special sessions will be held on energy, property taxes, mineral rights, water and labor developments.

Predators prey on Texas livestock

COLLEGE STATION — Predators continue to inflict heavy losses to livestock, poultry and other wildlife and such losses suggest a remedy, says the Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX).

The solution could come in the use of toxic chemicals, such as Compound 1080, which is not yet sanctioned by the Environmental Protection Agency. But inroads are being made to legalizing the highly-toxic compound.

"If such hearings do come about," says Dr. Dale Wade, a TAEX wildlife specialist, "they would include information about the use of the 1080 toxic collar to protect sheep and goats, as well as possible use of 1080-treated baits."

While such hearings might finally lead to an effective predator control technique for ranchers, they likely would not be completed in time to allow use of toxic chemicals during the coming winter season.

"Coyotes continue to cause the heaviest losses to livestock and poultry," says Wade, "and their populations are increasing." The coyotes are spreading to several eastern states and are contributing to livestock losses, he says.

Pecan harvesting has begun

COLLEGE STATION — Pecans are being harvested in large numbers in West Texas for what may turn out to be a solid yield.

Meanwhile, cotton harvesting generally is making good progress, as many farmers are using desiccants to defoliate cotton for harvesting.

Man gets 100-year sentence

CHICAGO (AP) — A man already serving a life sentence has been given a 100-year prison sentence after pleading guilty to the rape-murder of a 16-year-old girl.

Cook County Circuit Judge Thomas J. Maloney on Friday accepted the plea and sentenced 36-year-old Lawrence Dalton to 70 years for the 1978 murder of Debby Suzanne Baker and 30 years for the rape.

PROSECUTOR Lawrence Hyman said Dalton, of Waukegan, also faces charges in Lake County Circuit Court of raping and taking indecent liberties with a 14-year-old girl. If convicted, he could receive another 30-year sentence.

"After that, he will go back to Wisconsin and finish serving his time there," said Hyman. "If he's ever paroled, he would then begin serving his Illinois sentences."

Dalton pleaded guilty to strangling Miss Baker, of Chicago, who disappeared in May 1978. Her body was found in a trunk in the Fox River and remained unidentified for nearly a year.

After the slaying, Dalton went to New York and allegedly brought back a 14-year-old girl in January 1979 to live with him, his wife, his girlfriend and his four children in Waukegan, Hyman said.

IN LAKE County, Dalton is accused of taking indecent liberties with the girl, raping her and keeping her in a closet for four months, authorities said.

In April 1979, the girl escaped and sought help from police, Hyman said. Dalton allegedly sent his wife, Karen, 27, and his girifriend, Barbara Filipski, 28, to file a missing person's report, and they were arrested when they went to the station.

Hyman said Miss Filipski connected Dalton with the murder of Miss Baker and the August 1977 kidnapping and murder of Blanche Penna, 25, of Racine, Wis.

Dalton was convicted in 1979 of kidnapping and murdering Miss Penna. He was sentenced to life for the murder and 15 years for the kidnapping.

Vodka mob kills man

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A man died in a crushing mob waiting to buy vodka, the newspaper Sztandar Mlodych said Saturday. It said the incident in southeastern Rzeszow pointed out the "bad organization of retail trade."

"Alcohol, which is rationed, could be sold in many shops," the paper said. "Instead, this city of 130,000 has only a few alcohol shops in front of which scenes of 'Dante's Inferno' are taking place."

The paper said the man was pronounced dead at the scene by doctors, but that it was not immediately clear whether he was squeezed to death, suffocated or had had a heart attack. It did not say when the incident occurred.

Rzeszow is a farming and industrial center and was the scene of a lengthy sit-in strike earlier this year that eventually led to formation of the independent union of farmers, Rural Solidarity, the companion union to Industrial Solidarity.

Poland has suffered from growing shortages and rationing since industrial Solidarity was formed during strikes in August 1980, but the report from Rzeszow appeared to be the first of a man dying while waiting in line.

CETA sets meeting

A meeting to discuss a re-training program that will begin after Thanksgiving for employees from the Levi Strauss & Co. plant will be held at 10:30 a.m. Monday and 1:30 p.m. Tuesday at 2029 Holiday Road, according to W.C. Wilson, coordinator of CETA program in Midland and Martin counties.

Wilson said the purpose of the meeting will be to "find out how many people are still unemployed from the plant, so that CETA can offer on-the-job and classroom training for approximately 30 people.

The closing of the Levi Strauss plant left almost 210 people without employment, Wilson said. He added about half of these people have found work, but there are still almost 150 who may be unemployed.

CETA will assess the applicants with a battery of tests which will determine the applicant's job skills and placement. Wilson said CETA will search the private and public sectors for possible on-the-job training employment. Program participants will be paid while training, with half the funds provided by the federal government. The other half will be paid by the employer.

The length of classroom training will depend on the type of training necessary, Wilson said.

"For example, training someone for a nurses' aide position would take two weeks where a person training for clerical could take about six months, and we hope we can work these people in courses offered by Midland College," Wilson said, adding that the classroom training is funded entirely by the federal government.

Those interested in the program should attend the meeting or contact Wilson at the CETA office, 682-7944.

Yucatan Peninsula: Visitor never gets enough

By BILL FREDDE

You never get enough of the Yucatan Peninsula.

It doesn't matter if you've vacationed there for 14 years in a row; it never gets old.

Delightfully compact and yet fantastically diverse, Mexico's legendary Yucatan Peninsula has been my personal vacation nirvana since 1964. In those days, Cancun was merely a gem of an idea in some long forgotten engineer's creative mind and the Yucatan was relatively unknown as a tourist destination.

Its striking Mayan pyramids, temples and palaces were explored primarily by archaeologists, only avid divers were aware of Cozumel and Isla Mujeres was the well-kept secret of a select group of international travelers who loved the simple life.

THEN, IN 1970, FONATUR, a tourism development arm of the Mexican Federal Government, fed a computer with such diverse facts as sunlight, rainfall, quality of beaches and water, distance from Yucatan's archaeological sites and miles from United States' population center; and Cancun was born.

In Mayan, Cancun means "Pot of Gold" and that's just what the resort has proven to be for the Yucatan. The creation of Cancun thrust all of the sun-drenched beaches, crystal clear waters and ancient allure of the Yucatan into the international spotlight. And today I share the delights of my vacation mecca with visitors from every part of the world.

There's no doubt the big attractions of the Yucatan are its resort islands of Cancun, Cozumel and Isla Mujeres. Each island has sun-drenched shores, bathed by warm, soothing Caribbean waters; but each island also has its own character.

Cancun is the dazzling international star of the Yucatan's sun spots. Located on a 14-mile long, quarter-mile wide island, it was carved from the tentacles of the thick Yucatan jungle. Connected to the mainland via a causeway on one end of the island, Cancun is one of the world's most popular beach resorts. It offers ultra-modern comfort and an alluringly informal lifestyle where everything has been built-in to make living easy and luxurious.

CANCUN'S BEACHES of talcum powder soft white sand rank among the finest in the Western hemisphere. The calm, turquoise waters of the surrounding bays, lagoons and Caribbean are ideal for all water sports. On one long section of the beach, where the sea is as calm as a swimming pool, the shore is dotted with idyllic coves, coral and rocky outcroppings.

The elegant hotels of such major chains as Sheraton, Hyatt, Camino Real, Krystal, El Presidente, Caristos and the 300-unit Club Mediterranie village place Cancun on a par with the world's most sophisticated fun spots.

An 18-hole Robert Trent Jones golf course at Pok-ta-Pol Golf Course is open to all hotel guests. Most hotels have tennis courts, and there are others at the golf course club house.

Diving and snorkeling enthusiasts will find that the crystalline water surrounding the island offers visibility to the depths of 100 feet or more. Equipment can be rented at most hotels.

Cancun City, a new town built from "scratch" to accommodate local residents, most of whom have moved in from other parts of Mexico to staff the resort's hotels, is located across a narrow bay on the mainland. Buses run regularly from the island's hotel strip across the causeway into the town, and inexpensive taxi service is available. There are several good restaurants in town, along with a few hotels, smaller and less elaborate than those on the island.

I LIKE TO SHOP the Centra de Artesianis. Its numerous small stalls and colorful shops are patterned after the traditional Mexican markets and items are considerably less expensive than in the luxury shops of the resort hotels. This is an especially good place to shop for huipils, the traditional Yucatecan white cotton shift dresses with brilliantly colored neckline and hem embroidery. For men's classic embroidered guayabera shirts, try one of the department stores across the street from the shopping center.

As my taste in vacation hideaways doesn't run to dazzling international playgrounds, I always use the island of Cozumel as the headquarters for my Yucatan vacations.

Lazing in the Caribbean 12 miles off the Yucatan coast, Cozumel has the charm of being Mexican and Caribbean. It is a deliberately low-key coquettish island paradise. It is Mexico's largest island, but only one-fourth of its is populated. Cozumel's beaches are among the brightest and whitest in Mexico and its crystal waters attract divers from all over the world.

Cozumel has been a holy place for the Mayas, a base for the Spanish fleet and treasure galleons and headquarters for pirates who preyed on them. Today it is a splendid refuge for those who want to spend their days by the incredibly blue sea, on it or under it.

AN IMPRESSIVELY pretty string of hotels full of plush contemporary comforts and top notch facilities are clustered on the more sheltered west coast just north of the island's only town, tiny San Miguel.

Although tiny and tranquil, Cozumel has enough sun and sea activities to satisfy any vacationer's palate. Scuba enthusiasts, including Jacques Cousteau, journey from afar to dive off Palancer Reef, considered one of the world's five best reefs for coral and marine life. From the dock of your hotel take a leisurely cruise to uninhabited Passion Island and feast on fresh fish and conch, caught by the crew only minutes before. Rent a motor scooter or safari jeep for trips to Chacanab Lagoon, San Francisco Beach or a run into San Miguel for shopping.

If you want to be one of the 16 luckiest people in the world, fly over to Pez Maya, a fishing village and resort just over an hour from Cozumel. It's like an imaginary tropical paradise come to life with endless white beaches, magnificent flying fish, superb bird watching and a tranquility that even urban millionaires can't buy. And, even better, there's not a shop or a radio to disturb nature's bliss.

Isla Mujeres, the Yucatan's third Caribbean island, is strictly for the traveler seeking the ultimate simple life by the sea — no big hotels, few telephones and almost no night life. It is a casual, stroll-around-barefoot-in-the-sand kind of place, just made for unwinding from today's hectic pace.

THE YUCATAN Peninsula has an even stronger appeal for visitors seeking yet another travel dimension — her wondrous Mayan archaeological sites.

The Yucatan Peninsula was the home of the Mayas. At its height, the advanced Mayan civilization attained great intellectual achievements and influenced much of Middle America.

Two centuries before Biblical King Saul was crowned, the Yucatan Peninsula was flourishing with Mayan metropolises. From then until the age of the Spanish conquest, magnificent cities rose out of and mysteriously vanished back into the predatory jungle. The Mayas developed a complex written language, devised a calendar more accurate than ours today, built an observatory to study the stars and created the numerical concept of "zero" nine centuries before the Europeans.

The remnants of the once-flourishing Mayan civilization have weathered the centuries and Yucatan visitors can visit the pyramids, temples and palaces and marvel at the spectacular achievements of this long-ago civilization.

ABOUT 80 MILES southwest of Cancun, along the mainland coastline, lies Tulum, the ancient, walled Mayan city that serenely towers over the turquoise Caribbean. It is the only enclosed city the Mayas built and the only one located by the sea. A stone pillar on the site indicated Tulum was in existence about 564 A.D. Within the exquisite Temple of the Frescoes, interior walls are decorated with paintings, encrusted friezes and sculpted ornaments.

Of all the Mayan ruins, Chicen-Itza has been the most completely restored. Founded in the early fifth century A.D., it was occupied for about 200 years by the Itza tribe, who then abandoned it as the Mayan theocracy began its decline. The Toltecs from central Mexico moved in to occupy the site and after they abandoned it, the Itza briefly returned. So the two cultures are immutably intertwined at Chichen-Itza.

Chichen-Itza is composed of two general sections, divided by a highway. The section north of the highway, primarily Toltech, is dominated by the nine-terraced El Castillo pyramid. Stairways on all four sides, each with 91 deeply-inclined steps, lead to a temple atop the pyramid. The nearby Temple of the Warriors is also known as the Temple of the Thousand Columns because of the numerous pillars that surround its base, each one believed to represent a warrior-hero.

And to the west of El Castillo lies a 200-foot-long ball court, formed by two parallel stone walls, each with a stone hoop embedded near its top. A short walk from the ball court leads visitors to the Sacred Wells, where young virgins were sacrificed to the Rain God.

PREDOMINANTLY MAYAN, Old Chichen across the highway makes an even stronger impact even though restoration has not progressed as far. I last visited it early in the morning on a misty day and it brooded and glowed with a strange, almost other-worldly presence.

Here the dominant structure is one of the most astounding ruins yet uncovered in the Yucatan — the Caraco (Snail or Winding Tower) Observatory, so-called by the Spanish to denote its circular interior stairs. This huge building — actually four structures superimposed one upon the other — is topped by a circular tower. Slits and holes in its upper part were used to align celestial bodies for astronomical observations at a time when Europe rested in the clutches of the Dark Ages.

More purely Mayan than Chichen-Itza, Uxmal represents the classic period of Mayan history. Founded about 1007 A.D., it was rebuilt three times. Its Governor's Palace is probably the most finely-proportioned structure in the entire Mayan region.

The cost of fuel. And why it affects your electric bill now more than ever.

When we say "fuel" at Texas Electric, we mean the fuel that we use to make your electricity—primarily natural gas and lignite coal.

The cost of fuel is a necessary part of the cost of making electricity. Next year all the fuels we use will cost more, especially natural gas. This is partly because an old contract for low-cost natural gas expires at the end of this year. The gas provided by that contract will have to be replaced with gas selling at the "going rate," which is about 15 times as much as we now pay under the contract.

We buy all our fuels at the lowest price available.* We charge our customers exactly what we have to pay for fuel. And we show the amount for "fuel" on your bill each month.

If you'd like more information about the fuels it takes to make your electricity, give us a call. At Texas Electric, we want you to understand what you're paying for.

*With completion of our Comanche Peak plant, the use of nuclear fuel will help hold down the increasing cost of our fuels.

I would like to know if there is a law to protect consumers from a "lemon?"

I purchased a new car approximately 5 months ago. It has been in for service for the same engine problems seven times; this last time for over six weeks, waiting on a part.

If, when I get this car back, and it still isn't fixed, I'm going to have to assume that it isn't fixable.

It seems like I recall a law that was passed four or five years ago to protect a consumer from such a "lemon." If there is, what are my rights. I already know what my wrong was, buying the car in the first place. — John W. Crum

ANSWER: Linda Truitt with the Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, Inc., says there is a Texas Uniform Commercial Code, which protects your rights.

The code, in essence, is an applied warranty of merchantability, which provides that when a new product is sold to the consumer, it should be fit for the purpose for which it is designed. It sets the basic standards which must be met, and the seller promises to meet these standards.

If the product, in your case the "lemon," does not meet the standards, the consumer has the right to sue.

I have heard something pertaining to Doberman pinschers, and I would like to know if it is true. We have had difficulty in our neighborhood with unpredictable actions of Dobermans.

I have been told that the Dobermans are so highly bred that the dogs' skull capacity can no longer contain the size of the brain, thus causing ferocious and unpredictable behavior in the dogs' later years. Is this true? — Mrs. M.G.M.

ANSWER: A spokesman with Rebelee Kennels and Stables says that what you have been told is an "old wives' tale." She stated that the same unfounded idea is true about collies, which her kennel breeds, and other highly bred canines. Persons promoting this theory are leery of and dislike the intensified breeding of any full-blooded dog.

Can you find out if this clipping about an increase in savings passbook interest rates is correct?

My local savings and loan is still paying only 5½ percent, and says no new rate has been authorized. — M.A.B.

ANSWER: The clipping from the American Association of Retired Persons' newsletter states, in part, "Federal banking regulators have approved an increase of one-half of one percent in the maximum interest rates payable on passbook savings accounts. The new maximum became effective on Nov. 1, when savings and loan associations and mutual savings banks were allowed to pay up to 6 percent to passbook savers, while similar accounts at commercial banks could earn a maximum of 5¾ percent annually."

A spokesman with Gibraltar Savings and Loan says that although the action was taken in September by the Depository Institutions Deregulation Committee after the panel rejected a proposal by Treasury Secretary Donald Regan to increase the maximum passbook rate by 1½ percent, Secretary Regan had a change of mind. He is waiting to see the effect of the All Savers Certificates before permitting the increase of interest payable on passbook savings accounts. So the new regulation is not in effect now.

Ten years ago, I underwent an operation for cancer, from which I completely recovered. Would I be able to buy life insurance? — J.K.

ANSWER: Many life insurance companies now insure former cancer patients who have had no recurrence of the disease for at least five years and who are otherwise in good health, says The American Council of Life Insurance.

Because an extra risk is involved, an extra premium is usually charged. If, as in your case, the applicant has been free of the disease for 10 years or more, the extra charge would usually be quite small. You might even get standard rates.

Around-the-world flight to resume

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Two balloonists are nearly ready to launch the Jules Verne in an effort to complete an around-the-world flight that was cut short in India earlier this year, a spokesman says.

Preparations are expected to be finished in about a week and the helium-filled balloon will be launched as soon as the winds are right, Jim Mitchell said Friday.

The balloonists, Maxie Anderson of Albuquerque and Don Ida of Boulder, Colo., hope to begin their flight between Thanksgiving and Dec. 15 and travel 17,000 miles in seven to 10 days.

Two priests are facing conviction

MIAMI (AP) — Even the best of intentions do not excuse two Episcopal priests from breaking the law and bringing 411 Cuban refugees to the United States, federal officials say.

But the Revs. Leo Frade and Joe Doss, facing up to 10 years in prison for their conviction under federal "trading with the enemy" laws, said Friday they would do it again if given a chance.

The "Freedom Flotilla" of 1980 brought some 125,000 refugees to the United States from the Cuban port of Mariel.

"We cannot and will not tolerate another Mariel," said David Hiller, special assistant to the U.S. attorney general. "Any successful prosecution related to Mariel would carry the message of this administration: Immigration laws cannot be ignored.

"Clergy should be encouraged to do all the good works they can. But even the best of intentions is no excuse for breaking the law."

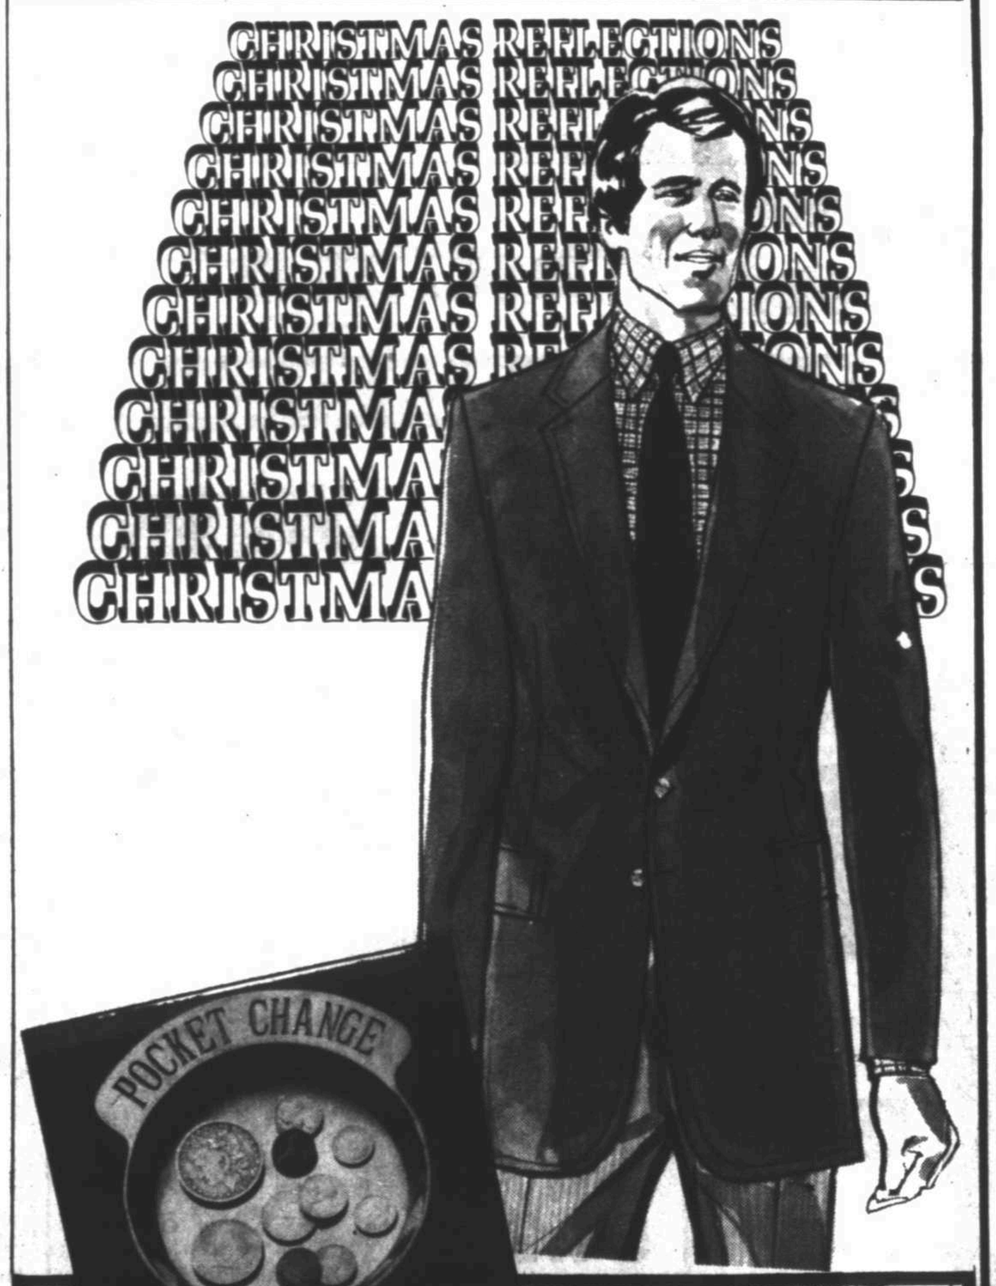

Doss and Frade, both acquitted of conspiracy charges, also face fines of up to $50,000 each. The trading with the enemy charge stems from the government's contention that they spent $10,000 in Cuba for supplies and fuel.

A nurse, Ofelia Hutchinson, of Kenner, La., was given a directed verdict of acquittal before the case went to the jury Friday. She traveled with the priests to Cuba to pick up the refugees.

A third clergyman, the Rev. Roberto Perez of Miami, was acquitted. The three men embraced and stood with their arms around each other after the verdict was announced Friday night.

No sentencing date was set, and the priests said they would appeal. The defense argued that the federal government was trying to make criminals of people who devoted themselves to humanitarian acts.

"If I had to, I would do it all over again because we were acting in the name of the Lord," Doss said.

Rapist's mom held in jail

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — The 61-year-old mother of a convicted rapist was being held Saturday on charges of trying to hire a hitman to kill the judge and prosecutor in her son's case, officials said.

Ruth Coe was booked Friday on two counts of criminal solicitation of first-degree murder after she allegedly paid money to an undercover police officer posing as a killer-for-hire, police said.

She faced a weekend in jail because it was unlikely her bond, set at $500,000, could be raised, said her lawyer, Carl Maxey.

"The reaction is a profound sadness. Without making any judgment about guilt or innocence, it's sad," Maxey said after talking to Mrs. Coe.

Her arraignment was scheduled for Monday.

The targets of the alleged plot were Spokane County Prosecutor Donald C. Brockett and Spokane County Superior Court Judge George T. Shields, police said.

Mrs. Coe's 34-year-old son, Frederick Coe, was sentenced by Shields to life in prison plus 75 years on a conviction in August on four counts of first-degree rape. Brockett prosecuted the case, which drew intensive local media attention.

Mrs. Coe and her husband, Gordon, who retired Oct. 1 as managing editor of the Spokane Daily Chronicle, testified in their son's behalf.

More than 20 sexual assaults were reported on the city's south side over a two-year period ending early in 1981.

Mrs. Coe testified she and her son had searched for clues to the identity of the rapist in hopes of winning a cash reward and bolstering Spokane's image.

Mr. and Mrs. Coe said their son ate breakfast and dinner with them between March 1980 and February 1981. Some of the rapes during that period occurred at the breakfast and dinner hours.

Mrs. Coe was arrested in a Spokane parking lot after allegedly giving a cash down payment to an officer posing as a hitman, said police Lt. Jerry Hickman.

"Less than $5,000" changed hands, said Hickman, refusing to be more specific.

Hickman said the inquiry began a month ago, when police were told "through the local underworld" that someone was looking for a contract killer. An undercover detective assigned to pose as a gun-for-hire met with Mrs. Coe at least twice before the arrest, Hickman said.

Stanton ISD school trustee accepts tax appraiser post

STANTON — Delbert Dickenson has resigned his post as president of the Stanton Independent School District's board of trustees to accept appointment as chief appraiser of the Martin County Tax Appraisal District.

The resignation ended his 10½-year tenure on the school board. He has been president for five of those years.

"It was a hard decision to make," Dickenson told The Stanton Reporter, "but I have thought it over, and I think this is best."

Dickenson's Place No. 6 on the board is to be filled in an election on Jan. 16. The term runs through April 1983.

Lamesa police chief appointed

LAMESA — Gerry Brown, a veteran Lamesa police officer who has been acting police chief here since the resignation of Police Chief Lee Bartlett earlier this year, has been appointed chief.

Mayor Nelson Hogg rated Brown as the choice candidate of the 25 applicants for the job.

Brown, who moved to Lamesa from Levelland in 1957, has been in law enforcement for more than 20 years. For two years, he was Bartlett's assistant.

Andrews city secretary honored

ANDREWS —Marcella R. Cure, the city of Andrews' director of finance and city secretary, has been named City Secretary of the Year by the Texas Municipal League.

"This year's award was really an accomplishment for all the small towns in the state," Mrs. Cure said. "Usually, the award goes to the secretary of one of the bigger cities. They have bigger staffs to handle their day-to-day work and can be more involved in the public relations side of the business. So, when we were announced as the winner, all the West Texas delegates just stood up and cheered."

Lamesa names city secretary

LAMESA — Robert Gorsline, deputy city secretary, has been named Lamesa's city secretary. He succeeds Ben Allen, who died recently.

Gorsline served as the city's personnel director for three years.

The Lamesa City Council has passed a resolution honoring Allen for his years of service to the city.

Multi-purpose firetruck purchased

McCAMEY — A multi-purpose fire truck costing $110,000 has been purchased jointly by the city of McCamey and Upton County.

The truck, a 1981 FMC triple combination pumper, is capable of pumping 750 gallons per minute and has a 500-gallon booster tank and auxiliary pump for use in fighting grass fires.

The pumper has a built-in foam induction system to aid in fighting grass fires and is equipped with a 3,500-watt light plant for night firefighting.

The acquisition of the truck also help in lowering household insurance premiums here.

I looked up and there was Jim watching me through the store window.

Looking at tomorrow through the snow.

I always liked Jim Davis. Everyone did. He was a happy-go-lucky guy. His favorite saying was, "Live today; tomorrow never comes."

He lived next door and we worked in the same office. So I know I lived as well as he did for the most part. But Jim always managed to spend that "little extra" he should've been saving.

I remember the morning he roared into the driveway with a brand-new sports car.

"Hey, Jack, grab a look at this set of wheels," he shouted as soon as he could crawl out of the cockpit.

I was impressed. The car was a beautiful racing machine. But not very practical for driving through the city.

He was bubbling over with excitement. "Cost me an arm and a leg, but it's got everything. What do you think? This thing'll go 150."

I had to ask it, "Where are you going to drive at 150 around here, Jim?"

He looked as though the thought had never occurred to him.

The thing cost a fortune to keep tuned up, but that didn't change his thinking at all. I had tried many times to get him to join the Payroll Savings Plan at work and buy some U.S. Savings Bonds for the future. He agreed it might be a good idea, but he never quite got around to it.

A few days ago, I was buying some tropical clothes. I looked up and there was Jim watching me through the store window. He came in laughing. "Summer clothes? You're rushing the season, buddy; there's a big blizzard outside."

I picked up a plantation straw, tilted it over one eye and said, "Just getting some new duds for the land of sunshine. I finally decided to buy that condominium in Hawaii. Great deal. We use it for our winter vacations and rent it out the rest of the year."

"How did you ever save enough for the down payment? I couldn't come up with that. We make the same salary. Your house is like mine. Our lifestyle isn't that much different."

I gave the clerk the money as I said, "Right. I don't miss that 'little extra' I've been putting away for Savings Bonds, and you wouldn't either. But THAT is what makes the difference. That little extra. It adds up."

We left this morning for our Hawaiian vacation. We said our goodbyes to Jim and his wife. It was still snowing as we pulled out of the driveway. And Jim looked like a man that was doing a lot of thinking as he leaned on his snow shovel and waved goodbye. Like a man who might be seeing tomorrow and considering something like U.S. Savings Bonds at last.

I looked back over my shoulder. "Well, better late than never," I said.

The time to start saving for tomorrow is today. U.S. Savings Bonds make it easy. You'll be helping yourself and your country.

Midland's retired teachers hear talk on organization's progress

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Dr. Kate Bell of Houston, president of the Texas Retired Teachers Association (TRTA) spoke to area retired teachers during a noon luncheon Saturday in the Midland Woman's Club.

According to Dr. Bell, the TRTA has taken several progressive steps during the last few years.

A headquarters office, complete with a volunteer staff, has been established for the first time in Houston, she said.

During a convention in Dallas, 179 local units were represented. Dr. Bell reported that there are now 211 local units associated with the TRTA.

"There is still a great need for membership," she stressed. In an effort to promote membership, any member who recruits five non-members to the state or national association will receive an award at the convention in Houston April 2-4.

Dr. Bell said the TRTA has been working with the Texas State Teachers Association on legislation that affects teachers.

"Raises this year have made sure that no teachers are making less than $400 a month," she said.

Auto and health insurance policies still need to be improved, she noted, although "two years ago a legislative act enabled us to have non-cancelable insurance for retired teachers."

Dr. Bell related several ideas that could improve an educator's life.

She asked each person in the audience to examine his attitude about himself and to set a motto for his life. The ability to "roll with the punches" also is a very important characteristic to have in one's life, she said.

Being able "to experience a keen sense of thankfulness" can greatly benefit not only a person's life, but also the lives of those around him. But the most important trait a person should strive to establish in himself, his students and others is an eagerness to obtain knowledge.

"That's the real purpose of education, isn't it?" Dr. Bell asked. "To get a lifelong desire to continue to learn."

Howard Butler urged the members of TRTA Districts XVIII and XIX to write Gov. William Clements and ask him to appoint their nominee, Tommy Thompson, to the position on the board of the Texas Teachers Retirement System. Thompson, of Kermit, is the only West Texan out of 10 candidates to be chosen by Clements.

About 70 people from Midland, Odessa, Pecos, Kermit, Wink, and Big Spring were represented at the luncheon. Special guests were Midland Mayor Thane Akins and his wife.

Dr. Daniel Vestal of the First Baptist Church gave the devotional, followed with two musical selections presented by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Matthews, also of the First Baptist Church.

Akins welcomed out of town members and Dr. Bell was introduced by Myrtle B. Shepherd, president of the Midland Retired Teachers Association.

TSTA: Education facing change

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

"Education ain't what it used to be — thank goodness!" Dr. Ivan Fitzwater of Trinity University exclaimed at the Texas State Teachers Association District XVIII convention held Saturday in Lee High School auditorium.

"No, it ain't what it used to be because it's a whale of a lot better," the former teacher, counselor, principal and superintendent, who now travels 150,000 miles each year as a featured speaker and management consultant, said.

Citing attitude as the most important aspect of an educator's life, Fitzwater told the audience, "Sure, we get criticized a lot but, doggone it, instead of getting mad, we need to know the facts."

One of those facts is that "test scores have dropped a smidgen."

According to Fitzwater, one of the reasons for declining scores over the last 14 years is due to the fact that 14 years ago, no large cities were involved in the tests.

Fitzwater said Fort Worth was the first of the big cities to join the National Assessment testing program.

"They (test scores) should've dropped a lot when all the big cities joined," he said. "Everyone knows that the economically deprived children live in the big cities.

"YES, THEY'VE dropped a smidgen, but what else has happened during those 14 years?" he asked.

According to Fitzwater, one of the "things" educators have accomplished is a decrease in the drop-out rate for 17-year-old boys and girls from 43 percent to 13 per cent.

To obtain more such achievements, Fitzwater presented a list of objectives for teachers to include in their educational instruction.

"We must assess potential," Fitzwater said. He used as an example the story of a student who told Fitzwater "Oh, I'm hyperactive."

"We'd given that kid a reason to not achieve," Fitzwater said. "Kids look around in class and think 'I know where I'm supposed to be for the rest of my life — in the middle.' "

He said educators especially need to make sure they maintain a positive attitude to set an example for the students.

He quoted William James as saying that people never achieve more than 15 percent of their potential.

"Life is a banquet, but most of you will starve if you don't do everything you're accomplished to do," Fitzwater said.

A positive attitude can also help with a person's goals, he said. "Many don't see how attitudes can help you achieve goals.

"IT'S THE ATTItude that determines the altitude."

"The margin of victory is right in here," he said, pointing to his head. "Students in our schools need that margin of victory more than anything else. They need to be told they can achieve.

"To fail is natural," he continued. "We need to give the ability to bounce back to the students and to ourselves."

The ability to manage time is also important, according to Fitzwater. He told the audience that if he was to put $86,400 into someone's bank account today for him to spend on whatever he wanted, with the stipulation that whatever was left in the account at the end of the day would be taken out and never put back in, that person would probably find a way to spend every penny of it.

There are 86,400 seconds in a day. According to Fitzwater, educators should teach themselves as well as their students how to spend every second of each day like it was money that would be gone when the day was over.

According to Fitzwater, 51 percent of all deaths today result from too much stress. "And our profession is third from the top" of stressful careers, he said.

"WE HAVE TO DEAL with stress," he explained. "We need to take things leisurely, relax and smile in order to take the tension out of the classroom.

"See the humor in a situation and allow yourself to smile," he advised.

The ability to keep life in perspective is necessary for all educators, he said. "My mother used to say 'I used to complain about having no shoes until I saw the man with no feet.'

"It might be a kind of an indispositon to come in here on Saturday, but weigh it against the alternatives.

"We could be laid up in bed somewhere with a terminal illness."

Fitzwater is the author of "Finding Time for Success and Happiness," "You Can Be a Powerful Leader," "Failproof Children" and "Practical Techniques for High School Administration." He is also the author of several audio and video cassette training programs on such topics as time management, stress management, the psychology of selling and learning achievement.

Midland airport in able hands — You can bank on it

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

He lifts the pipe to his mouth, lights the tobacco and glances out the window at a commercial aircraft loading its belly with passengers. Meanwhile, the smoke curls upward, its whiteness blending into the color of his hair.

As a child, Wilson H. Banks never thought of flying. Growing up on a farm at Gomez, his first love was law. During the summers he would walk four miles on the dusty road into Brownfield and spend his days wrapped up in the drama of court trials.

To push him along, a friendly attorney would loan Banks law books to read.

Midlander in Profile

When he graduated from high school in the early 1930s, the country was in the throes of the Great Depression. But Banks went on to Texas Tech with the intention of walking out as a lawyer.

Instead, he walked straight into an airplane, and that changed the course of his life.

At 65, Banks is at the point where he could retire after spending 43 years in the flying business in one form or another. The first 30 years he served in the Air Force, retiring in 1969 as a colonel. From there, he jumped into airport management by coming to Midland Regional Airport as its aviation director.

PUFFING ON THE PIPE, Banks recalls that somewhere early in life he saw an airplane once "and that interested me."

To get into the U.S. Army Air Corps required two years of college, a good physical condition and passing an eye examination.

"It was kind of a challenge," says Banks of his interest in the flying field.

He had decided to take a year off from college and had moved to Dallas. Banks heard that a test was being given at Hensley Field near Dallas for the Air Corps and he took it.

"About 130 to 150 young men showed up, and they were all husky-looking," he recalls. "I weighed about 140 pounds dripping wet; I didn't think I had a chance."

Naively, he asked one of the officers at the end of the testing how he did. "He replied, 'Son, you're almost flying.' I thought he was kidding."

He wasn't. Banks was one of 13 who passed the grueling tests and was sent to Randolph Air Base for his year of training with 250 young soldiers.

The year was 1938 and Banks was only 22 years old. His knowledge of airplanes was nil. "I didn't know anything about a plane, not even how to get in one," he chuckles.

AND HE ALMOST backed out after his first flight. In those days, the Air Corps flew the open cockpit airplane. Decked out with helmet, goggles and scarf and with a parachute strapped to his back, Banks crawled into the rear seat. After getting airborne, his instructor rolled the plane over and Banks found himself looking straight down toward earth.

"I was held in only by my seatbelt," he says with a shake of his head and a quick puff on the pipe before continuing, "I didn't know if I wanted much more of this."

But he stayed. While 125 of his classmates "washed out," Banks plugged onward to graduate with his wings on Feb. 1, 1939.

It was later that year he was sent on a mission that Banks still considers the highlight of his career. It was a goodwill flight around South America to test the air worthiness of the B-17 bomber.

A young man of 23 who had never been out of Texas, Banks recalls it as "a pioneer flight." The bombers weren't pressurized and the pilots had only oxygen bottles to assist them in going over the high Andes Mountains. "We got woozy, but we made it."

For a pilot right off the farm, he saw a lot on that flight.

"It was really primitive. We would land on a strip in the jungle and see the natives come out of the jungle." They carried the babies on their backs, and Banks noticed one youngster had a dried frog tied around his neck. "It was the baby's teether," he discovered.

THE ONLY TIME Banks departed the military came during a two-week period in 1940 when he flew Martin 167s from Baltimore up to Halifax, Newfoundland. There the French took over the planes, which would help

(See BANKS, Page 15B)

It is a step back in time for Col. Wilson Banks as he takes hold of the controls of a B-17 bomber during the recent Confederate Air Force show. Banks spent 30 years in the Air Force, and the B-17 served as home for many of his flying hours.

Banks has spent years 'up in the air'

Believe it or not, law was his first love

them stave off the German army in the early stages of World War II.

Banks went back into the Air Corps and was subsequently assigned to Puerto Rico as commander of the 44th Bomb Squadron, flying B-18s.

The bombing of Pearl Harbor he remembers clearly. On that day, he was flying back to Puerto Rico from Miami and hadn't heard the news. As he flew over the island, "everything was dark; there were no lights. I almost got shot down by our own men. They asked me 'didn't I know it was wartime?' "

With the start of World War II, Banks went on patrol and the fliers were told to drop bombs on anything they saw. Unfortunately, he says, some of those boats in the sea belonged to the U.S. Fortunately, he adds with a chuckle, "none of us were any good and we never hit one of our ships."

Where once the B-17s were reserved for only captains, the second lieutenants eventually were given their chance and proved their capability, says Banks. But the war changed all that. Pilots right out of school and with only 30 to 40 hours of flying time were being sent off in the B-17s.

"IT WAS WAR and we had to train in a hurry," he explains. And those who had joined before the war were moved up the ranks rapidly. "We were put in command of squads and we didn't know what we were doing, either."

Flying patrol over the ocean in the Central America area, Banks didn't see much action. So in 1944, he asked for a tour of duty where he would see action; he was sent to the Philippine Islands in the Southwest Pacific Theater. As commander of the 90th Bomb Group, he was based on Biak Island and Mindoro.

Taking another puff on the pipe, Banks flashes back to the day the Americans took over Corregidor. His men "had bombed the island and I stayed and watched our paratroopers dropping in. We lost of lot of people in that."

Despite the action, Banks remembers only two close calls. One came when the plane ahead of him was hit and the aircraft barely missed Banks' plane in its dive. The second time came on the ground at Biak Island. A Japanese soldier was discovered next to Banks' tent and was caught. He left behind a bayonet and hand grenade, the latter which Banks keeps in his office as a souvenir.

The war ended and Banks had various assignments in the states: March Air Force Base in California, air command and staff school at Maxwell Air Force Base in Alabama, deputy base commander at Lackland in San Antonio, base executive at Lowry Air Force Base in Denver, Colo., and the Air War College at Maxwell.

THE KOREAN CONFLICT broke out and Banks was being trained with a group of men to "work behind the scenes. But we were never allowed to perform our mission. We sat on the ground and flew the planes around to keep in practice."

Instead, he was sent as deputy commander of the 13th Air Force and commander of Clark Air Force Base in the Philippines — a nostalgic return for Banks since he had participated in the bombing of that island during the war.

While there, he completed his college work, obtaining a degree in business administration.

In 1955 came the assignment to the Pentagon as base selection and deputy director of real property. He was responsible for picking out new air bases, and at that time the U.S. "was getting into the missile business."

The fire in his pipe out again, Banks lights it as he recalls taking a stand against his commanding officer there. He had investigated Greenland and selected the site at Thule for a new base. But the general had picked a different spot.

"He (the general) grumbled and mumbled a bit as I told him why I didn't like his site," Banks said. But in less than 24 hours, the Pentagon approved Thule. "It would take them months to approve some little $100,000 installation. This at Thule was $50-60 million."

FOR DISAGREEING with the general, "I expected to be demoted to private." But he wasn't.

There came three years as base commander at Lackland, a couple of years at Williams air base in Arizona and three years as commander of the 3560th pilot training wing at Webb Air Force Base at Big Spring before his assignment to New Delhi, India.

That far eastern country "is a psychological shock. My first impression was of people and animals fighting over the garbage. People in our country just don't know what poor really is."

Banks took advantage of his situation and traveled throughout India. "The Assam Valley where they raise tea is in the foothills of the Himalayans. It reminded me of old Southern plantations." Banks also viewed the Burning Ghat where Indians burn the bodies of dead people.

By 1969, Banks had posted 30 years with the military and, according to federal law, must retire.

He knew it was coming and began searching "for what I could get involved in that I wouldn't be completely lost." Banks joined the American Association of Airport Executives a year before retirement and noticed in its newsletter a job vacancy at Midland Regional Airport.

HE APPLIED, was selected and started his job in July 1969. The manager's job proved to be just what he was looking for, giving him a chance to keep his hand in aviation and keeping him too busy to think much about his flying days.

"I haven't really had an opportunity to look back and see how much I miss the Air Force," he says with a puff on the pipe. "I still miss flying and I dream about some of those planes I flew and the missions I was on."

When Banks came to the Tall City, the airport was much smaller with boardings numbering about 130,000 a year. Now the figure is up to half a million. Income 12 years ago hit about $500,000 to $600,000 a year. Today, it ranges from $3½ to 4 million.

"We've done a lot of work in the last eight to nine years here," he says, rattling off a list of improvements that start with rebuilding the taxiways and end with total renovation of the terminal building that included its expansion and additional parking areas.

Before that last construction job, Banks says he and other city officials seriously considered erecting a new building on a different location. "A lot of us would have liked to see a new terminal building. But it was so obvious we would have to just enlarge this one. If we had gone for a new one, the voters surely would have turned us down."

That last major work "gave me a few gray hairs and I also lost a few hairs. I've got scars on my back from some of the things that happened," he chuckles.

NOW THAT IT'S OVER, the city is considering another major construction project at the airport. Before Banks could have time to retire and leave it all to a successor, he's stuck again in the middle of it.

And he keeps looking to the future, saying he would like to see an area added for small shops inside the terminal building.

Banks admits he's made some mistakes as airport manager. "I've given it the best that I can," he sums up his work. "I've enjoyed the changes here and the challenges." But if he had more years left, "I'd kind of liked to have taken on a Dallas-Fort Worth Airport because of the challenges out there."

It's the challenges which made Banks turn the Air Force into a career. "I always had a job that I liked. I was always in command or in a responsible position," he says.

Chewing on the end of his pipe, the white-haired Banks mulls over the changes made in aviation and the military in the years since his first upside-down flight.

"We ran our own show in those days," he says of the commanders' ability to tell the men what to do. Today, "you can't ask someone to do something out of his specialty."

SINCE HE LEFT the Air Force, "I have been a little disillusioned with the way the country has allowed the military to deteriorate over the last few years. I was disappointed with the senior military leaders who didn't take a strong stand to upgrade the service."

As a result of this weakening defense posture, "the country has taken a beating." That was brought to light with the Americans who were held hostage in Iran for over a year, he says. "It was shameful we couldn't have carried off that rescue mission."

Changes in aviation, he says, "are mind-boggling." Banks recalls the first time he heard of the satellite program. It was at Englewood, Calif., that he was asked to sit in "on a hush-hush briefing. I heard these people say these satellites would orbit the earth and send pictures back. Why, I thought they were all on dope," he laughs.

Now, with the recent second landing of the space shuttle, "I believe anything. I feel like in the not-too-distant future they'll be carrying people like a commercial airliner."

TAKING ANOTHER PUFF on the pipe that he has lighted numerous times during his reminiscing, Banks points out the wall holding photos and drawings portraying him at various times in his military career. These in the office, he says, are just a few of the "hundreds" at home.

Also at home is the one person who has stood by Banks through his years in the Air Force when he hopped around the world — his wife, Marcia.

Almost apologetically he says, "I don't give her enough credit. She was a real trooper. Every two to three years you can expect to move in the military and she never complained."

Realizing his career and hopping around was hard on his four children — two sons and two daughters — Banks says that in 1943 it was compounded when he had to move eight or nine times.

That also was the year his older son was born. "I got orders to move from Colorado to Westover Field, Mass., and my older son was about to be born. In the wartime, when they told you to go, you had to go. I left her alone in Pueblo, Colo. Two to three weeks after my son was born, she hopped a train and rode out to Westover Field."

During the Korean Conflict, Banks had bought a house for his family and set them up in Albuquerque, thinking he would be based in Korea for a long stretch. The Air Force changed its mind and he was assigned to the Philippines.

After living in the house three to four months, his wife, "sold it, packed the kids up and they shipped out to the Philippines."

"It was difficult and she always faced up to it. She was my support, morally and otherwise," he says.

Still trying to make up his mind about retirement, Banks says in a vascillating style, "I want to retire, but I don't want to retire."

Putting down his pipe, he adds, "I don't want to just do nothing; I would be completely lost."

About 18 attend Brotherhood meeting

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

About 18 Vietnam veterans and family members attended the first meeting of Midland's chapter of the Brotherhood of Vietnam Veterans Friday night.

The non-profit organization was formed by Midlander Roger Stinson, a veteran and victim of the toxic chemical Agent Orange. Agent Orange is a defoliant that was used in Vietnam between 1966 and 1971.

According to Stinson, the U.S. is the only country that has not recognized the chemical's adverse effects. He urged the veterans to step forward and unite to bring out the truth about Agent Orange.

Stinson said the primary concern of the brotherhood is Agent Orange. He explained it is crucial to educate veterans and the public of the health dangers from exposure to the chemical.

Some of the symptoms of the chemical are skin rash, recurring headaches, loss of motor control, numbness, cancer and birth defects.

To achieve its goal, Stinson said the Brotherhood will use contributions and fundraising. Most of the Brotherhood's funds will be used to help widows of Agent Orange victims with Veteran's Administration claims, help fund tissue biopsy tests and chromosome studies for vets and their families and help the veterans contact others in their military units to support their claims.

Stinson added that the Brotherhood will strive for political and medical awareness. The organization will try — through Defense Department computer data and maps — to determine the amount of chemical sprayed in Vietnam.

Stinson said the first 200 applications to the Brotherhood will be considered charter members.

Professionals who attended the meeting included Ken Wolf, director of the Permian Basin Centers for Mental Health and Mental Retardation, and Chris McCormack, an attorney with West Texas Legal Services.

Wolf said Midland is expected to conduct a genetic screening facility in the near future. Although plans for the facility out of Denton State School are still sketchy, Wolf said it could be advantageous to the veterans. He added that Mental Health/Mental Retardation also is available to help veterans with counseling.

McCormack said he was not prepared to speak to the veterans, but encouraged them to use the law to protect their rights.

Stinson noted that "every veteran should undergo an Agent Orange test and file for disability," adding that the claim will become retroactive "when we win our case."

Interested persons should contact Stinson at 684-3768.

AP Laserphoto

SMU head coach Ron Meyers gets a ride on the shoulders of his players after defeating Arkansas, 32-18, Saturday. The victory gives the Mustangs the Southwest Conference championship, but probation plagued SMU can not go to a bowl game. SMU finished the year with a 10-1 record.

Arkansas, Texas, A&M all grab bowl berths

By The Associated Press

Pittsburgh walloped Temple Saturday and accepted a bid to play No. 3 Georgia in the Sugar Bowl, setting up classic matchup between the unbeaten, top-ranked Panthers and the defending national champion Bulldogs.

Quarterback Dan Marino fired four touchdown passes as the 10-0 Panthers strolled past overwhelmed Temple, 35-0, before making their expected date with the Bulldogs for New Year's Day in New Orleans. It was the 17th consecutive victory for Pitt, which still must face No. 13 Penn State in a regular season contest.

Georgia had the day off Saturday, as did No. 4 Alabama, which announced it would play in the Cotton Bowl against Texas.

"Today we knew that if we won, we had a chance to go to a great bowl," Marino said. "And that's what our players have dreamed about."

A 34-12 victory by eighth-ranked Texas over Baylor, spurred by the running of fourth-team fullback Daryl Clark and A.J. "Jam" Jones, combined with No. 6 Southern Methodist's 32-18 victory over No. 16 Arkansas, gave the Longhorns the Southwest Conference berth in the Cotton Bowl. Clark ran for 131 yards, and Jones ran for 146 to help the Longhorns into their 17th Cotton Bowl appearance, but first since 1977.

SMU's victory clinched the Mustangs their first SWC title in 15 years, but they are under NCAA sanction and ineligible for postseason play.

SECOND-RANKED Clemson, at 11-0 the only other major unbeaten team in the country, blocked a punt for a first-half touchdown and went on to a 29-13 triumph over South Carolina, gaining a berth in the Orange Bowl where it will play fifth-ranked Big Eight champion Nebraska, which smashed Oklahoma 37-14.

Clemson Coach Danny Ford was overjoyed with the bowl invitation, but said, "We're just worried about beating Nebraska right now. It's going to be a tough game for Clemson to win."

Ohio State upset No. 7 Michigan 14-9, opening the door for 19th-ranked Iowa, which blasted Michigan State 37-7 to earn a trip to the Rose Bowl for the first time in 23 years. A Michigan victory would have assured the Wolverines a return trip to Pasadena, but Ohio State quarterback Art Schlicter ran 6 yards for his second touchdown of the game with just 2:50, putting the Buckeyes ahead to stay.

Phil Blatcher rushed for a career-high 247 yards for Iowa and scored two touchdowns as the Hawkeyes closed out their first winning season in 20 years. Iowa and Ohio State wound up tied for the Big Ten championship, but the Hawkeyes got the Rose Bowl bid because Ohio State has gone more recently.

NO. 17 Washington won a return trip to the Rose Bowl by beating No. 14 Washington State 23-10. That, combined with 10th-ranked Southern California's 22-21 triumph over No. 15 UCLA, sent the Huskies back to Padadena, where they lost to Michigan last January 1.

Another big upset Saturday was at Louisville. The unheralded Cardinals knocked off ninth-ranked and previously unbeaten Southern Mississippi 13-10. Louisville took advantage of repeated Southern Mississippi miscues to end a four-game losing string.

However, the Golden Eagles, now 8-1-1, still drew an invitation from the Tangerine Bowl, where they will play another Saturday loser, Missouri. The Tigers of the Big Eight were upset 19-11 by Kansas.

In other games involving ranked teams, No. 11 Miami, Fla., stopped North Carolina State 14-6; Penn State came back on quarterback Todd Blackledge's second 1-yard touchdown run, with 3:48 left, to beat Notre Dame 24-21, and No. 18 Brigham Young ripped Utah 56-28 in a battle for the Western Athletic Conference championship and a berth in the Holiday Bowl against Washington State, making its first bowl appearance in 30 years.

BYU quarterback Jim McMahon passed for 565 yards and four touchdowns, completing 35 of 54 passing attempts without an interception. He also surpassed former Purdue star Mark Herrmann as the all-time college passing leader, finishing the regular season with a career total of 9,535 yards, to 9,188 for Herrmann.

NO. 20 Arizona State, ineligible for a bowl bid, played at home against Colorado State Saturday night.

Arkansas gained a berth in the Gator Bowl against No. 12 North Carolina, which pounded Duke 31-10 as Kelvin Bryant rushed 36 times for 247 yards and two touchdowns.

The Libery Bowl will feature Ohio State against Navy, which was idle Saturday, while Penn State accepted a bid to the Fiesta Bowl, where the Nittany Lions will play Southern Cal.

Disappointed Michigan has decided to go to the Bluebonnet Bowl, where Bo Schembechler's team will probably play UCLA in an uprecedented non-Rose Bowl meeting of teams from the Big Ten and Pacific 10. Oklahoma, despite its devastating loss to Nebraska, accepted an invitation from the Sun Bowl to play an as yet unnamed opponent.

Oklahoma State, a 27-7 winner over Iowr State, will play Texas A&M which walloped Texas Christian 37-7, in the Independence Bowl, and Wisconsin, a 26-21 victor over Minnesota, will take on Tennessee in the Garden State Bowl. Tennessee got the invitation despite losing 21-10 to Kentucky and falling to 6-4 for the season.

Syracuse upset West Virginia 27-24 in a game involving a pair of unranked teams, but the Mountaineers received and accepted an offer to play in the Peach Bowl against the winner of next Saturday's Florida-Florida State game.

Bowl-less Mustangs run to SWC title

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Southern Methodist University Coach Ron Meyer had little trouble picking out two turning points in the sixth-ranked Mustangs' 32-18 victory Saturday over Arkansas.

"When Lance (McIlhenny) fumbled and we held them to a field goal, it was the turning point," Meyer said. "If they had gotten six then, they might be out the gate."

Arkansas, down 12-7 at the half, went ahead 15-12 midway through the third quarter, 10 plays after an interception. Two plays later, McIlhenny fumbled and Arkansas recovered at the SMU 33 but had to settle for a 31-yard field goal and an 18-12 lead.

Then, the Mustangs consumed more than seven minutes while driving 74 yards in 13 plays for Eddie Garcia's third field goal that made it 18-15.

"In the third quarter, we drove from one end to the other," Meyer said. "That was what won the game for us."

Arkansas Coach Lou Holtz said the Mustangs controlled the line of scrimmage and that two interceptions cost the Razorbacks dearly.

The Mustangs scored one touchdown and set up the winning TD by picking off two passes as they sewed up their first Southwest Conference championship in 15 years.

SMU, which is on NCAA probation and ineligible for a bowl game, finished the season 10-1 and 7-1 in the league. That is their best record since 1935 when the Mustangs were 12-0 and went to the Rose Bowl.

Arkansas' loss coupled with Texas' victory over Baylor puts the Longhorns in the Cotton Bowl. Arkansas accepted a Gator Bowl bid to play North Carolina in Jacksonville, Fla., on Dec. 28.

Craig James' 10-yard run with 6:30 left in the game put the Mustangs on top 25-18. That came two plays after Eric Ferguson grabbed a poorly thrown Brad Taylor pass and returned it 7 yards to the Arkansas 14.

Two plays before Ferguson's interception, Garcia kicked his fourth field goal of the game — a 47-yarder — to tie it 18-18.

Prior to James' run, SMU's only touchdown came when defensive end Russell Washington intercepted a Tom Jones pass and waltzed 10 yards into the end zone for a 12-7 lead with 4:39 left in the second quarter. An interception on the final play of the game gave the Mustangs a nation-leading 31 for the season.

The only time James had to kick from punt formation all day came in the final two minutes and he shanked one out of bounds on the SMU's side of the 50. However, Arkansas had 12 men on the field, and Eric Dickerson tacked on a meaningless 31-yard touchdown run with 27 seconds left in the game.

Arkansas took advantage of two SMU mistakes to open up a six-point lead in the third quarter. McIlhenny's pass over the middle was tipped by Bruce Sutherland and intercepted by Richard Richardson, who returned it two yards to the SMU 48.

Taylor, who missed practice most of the week, drilled a 30-yard pass to Mark Mistler on the right sideline at the SMU 5 and Jessie Clark ran over Ferguson at the goal for the touchdown.

Running back Bill Pierce started right on a sweep and threw back to Jones in the end zone for a 15-12 lead. Two plays later, Billy Ray Smith stripped McIlhenny of the ball and Danny Walters recovered at the SMU 33.

After gaining a first down at the SMU 15, a third-down pass was broken up by Eddie Radford in the end zone and Arkansas settled for a 31-yard field goal by Bruce Lahay. It was his 19th of the season, tying a SWC record set by Razorback Steve Little in 1977.

McIlhenny came right back and made the big plays as SMU went 74 yards and consumed more than seven minutes while driving for Garcia's third field goal, a 24-yarder.

Permian's Mike Troglin (30) leaps through a path carved by his Panther lineman Saturday at W. T. Barrett Stadium, but Lewisville's Mark Latham (11) is there to fill the hole quickly. The score was a 14-14 tie, but Lewisville advances to the regionals by virtue of more first downs.

Permian Panthers run out of lives against Farmers, 14-14

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

ODESSA — After long and careful deliberation, Socrates concluded that cats run out of lives after nine, even Black Cats called Mojo.

Lewisville's Farmers caught up with Odessa Permian, who had gone through a season of harrowing last minute escapes that would have made Houdini and Garfield envious. So despite a 14-14 tie, Lewisville advanced in the 5A playoffs to the second round by virtue of a 19-15 edge in first downs, and as Coach Neal Wilson was to point out, "We did it the way Permian has been winning all season," snatching victory from the sagging jaws of defeat.

After a recovering a fumbled punt and pushing 12 yards to a game-tying score late in the third period to make it 14-14, it looked as though the Panthers had salvaged another win. They not only led in penetrations, 1-0, but had built up a 15-13 edge in first downs after three periods.

What's more Lewisville was bucking a stiff wind out of the north as the final period started. "That last drive was just super," Wilson, whose Farmers will meet Fort Worth Eastern Hills in Texas Stadium next Saturday, said, "although it didn't look good going into the wind from our 11-yard line."

The drive ended in a missed 32-yard field goal attempt by Ted Garcia, but along the way Lewisville strung together five first downs and reached the Permian 12, thereby wiping out the Panthers' edge in both penetrations and first downs.

Dwayne Mosley, whose third period fumble set up Permian's tying touchdown, then sealed the victory by making a diving interception of quarterback Coy Brown's twice-deflected pass at the Permian 36 with 2:13 left.

IT WAS a game in which the wind dictated strategy and momentum swung on turnovers. Permian started out like it would make a blowout of this battle of 10-0 unbeatens, driving 68 yards in eight plays with the opening kickoff to send Carr over from the four with with 6:58 gone of the first period.

Permian appeared headed for another touchdown, driving from its 39 to first down on the Lewisville 18 when Mosley intercepted a third down pass at the four and returned to the 18 a play from the end of the quarter.

Lewisville ran just six offensive plays the first period and Permian only 12 in the second, as the Farmers exploited their edge in brawn to bludgeon 82 yards in 14 plays, twice overcoming penalties, to spring quarterback Bron Beal into the end zone on a keeper from 12 yards out on a third and eight.

The Farmers maneveured into field goal position, but Garcia's hurry up 57-yarder was short. "Beal looked bad throwing that third down pass out of bounds, but I told him to do it to stop the clock. It was my fault, I misread the clock," said Wilson. "I thought 17 seconds were left. There was 1:17 left."

Lewisville continued to outphysical the Panthers in the second half, parading 69 yards with the kickoff and breaking Dwayne Murphy on the eighth play for 31 yards on a trap over the middle to take a 14-7 lead with 8:33 left in the third period.

The Farmers, still in control, forced a punt, but Knott's 35-yarder into the wind went over Mosley's head. He made the mistake of trying to catch it and Mike Troglin recovered the fumble at the 12. Four plays later Carr scored.

AFTER RETURNING the kickoff to midfield, the run-oriented Wishbone Farmers appeared to lose their poise. "We ran a trap for one yard and then threw two passes," admitted Wilson, whose Farmers threw only four passes all day.

It forced a punt that Permian took at its 11 and from there pushed to two first downs for a 15-13 edge before the period ended. And then when Knott kicked the Farmers back to their 11, it looked like victory was safe.

PERMIAN gained 105 of its 171 yards rushing in the first half and most of it came on the first two Panther possessions of the game. "They were getting outside our end and cutting off our linebacker and running a drag underneath, but we adjusted," Wilson said of the Farmers' early defensive problems.

Controversy also flared in the first half when Lewisville jumped in motion several times. "That first half, I lost my composure. I shouldn't have. They were calling defensive signals and our kids were jumping. I argued that they couldn't do that, but the officials over ruled me, so we went to a longer count," Wilson said.

Cavs nip BYU

Sutton's shot clips Pack at the wire

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE

ODESSA — Odessa Ector Eagle Zack Sutton, who had only six points on the night, became the hero of his school Saturday when he hit a 20-foot jump shot with four seconds remaining on the clock to beat the Midland High Bulldogs 72-71 here.

The score came after a Midland rally that saw the 5A Bulldogs fight back from a six-point deficit with 2:42 remaining in the game. MHS, which held the lead most of the ball game, slowly gnawed away at 4A Ector's advantage until the final seconds when center Preston Robertson connected on a pair of jump shots to take the lead at 71-70, the second shot coming thanks to a steal by guard Barr Bolger. Ector then brought the ball down court for Sutton's winner.

"I thought it was a heck of a ball game," said MHS head coach Jack Stephenson. "If that wasn't exciting, what is?"

The Bulldogs opened up a 24-21 lead in the first quarter and went into the locker room at halftime with a 43-41 edge. At the end of three, Midland was up 59-55 but was in foul trouble going into the final quarter. In that final period, two starting Bulldogs picked up their fifth personal foul, Raymond Parker first followed by Jim Gunnels.

"We had people in foul trouble early," said Coach Stephenson. "We played well in spots under the circumstances. We had two players on the bench and (Don) Sharnowski out on the floor with four at the last. That's not going to happen that often and how often is he (Sutton) going to make that long shot to win the ball game."

The game was full of fouls on both sides of the court. On the night, Midland suffered from the referee's whistle 28 times while Ector was caught for 26 fouls. Ector took the biggest advantage on the fouls as Eagle shooters scored 22 points from the line while Midland was only able to connect for 13, a major difference in the game.

Robertson was the game's leading scorer with 24 points and teammates Sharnowski, and Parker chipped in 17 and 12 respectively. For Ector, Freddy Pierce led the way with 19 followed by Tony Gamble with 16 and Charles Ricks with 13.

The Bulldogs will have their chance at revenge Tuesday night when they play Ector at Chaparral Center in the Tall City Invitational. "Ector has got a good basketball team," said Coach Stephenson. "We play them again Tuesday and it should be a heck of a ball game."

Both teams are now 1-1 on the season.

Hoosiers win Oaken Bucket

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Doug Smith's 39-yard field goal with 8:30 remaining snapped a 17-17 tie Saturday, then Indiana's defense stopped two Purdue drives with pass interceptions to preserve a 20-17 Big Ten Conference victory in the annual season-ending Old Oaken Bucket football game.

The Boilermakers had rallied from a 17-7 halftime deficit to tie the game at 17-17 on a 34-yard field goal by Tim Clark in the third quarter and a 5-yard run by freshman Bruce King in the final period.

The Hoosiers' winning drive covered 87 yards. Quarterback Babe Laufenberg, who passed 42-yards to John Boyd for Indiana's first touchdown and ran 4 yards for another score, passed for 53 yards on the drive. A 24-yard completion to Bob Stephenson put the Hoosiers at Purdue's 17-yard line and four plays later, after a 5-yard penalty for illegal motion, Smith kicked the winning field goal.

A 20-yard field goal by Smith gave Indiana a 3-0 lead in the first quarter.

Two plays after the final field goal, Indiana got the ball back when linebacker Mark Weiler intercepted a pass by Purdue quarterback Scott Campbell near midfield. The Boilermakers later used Campbell's passing to reach the Indiana 19 with just under two minutes to go.

Campbell was then sacked for an eight-yard loss. Two plays later, safety Steve Mitchell intercepted a pass at the goal line with just over a minute to go. The Hoosiers then ran out the clock to clinch the victory.

Abila shocks Perkins

EL PASO — Midland's Richard Abila pulled off a shocking split decision over Fred Perkins of Fort Bliss here Saturday night in a bantamweight matchup.

Perkins was the All-Army and national AAU champion and ranked No. 1 in the United States. Abila may be ranked as high as No. 3 in the nation after Saturday's fight.

Abila had Perkins on the ropes in the second round and finished with a flurry in the final minute of the third round against Perkins.

Abila and manager Rick Fleetwood have issued a challenge to any ranked boxers for fights and Perkins was the first to take the challenge.

Trojans escape UCLA

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Marcus Allen rushed for 219 yards and two touchdowns Saturday, the last with 2:14 remaining, to give the 10th-ranked Trojans a come-from-behind 22-21 Pacific-10 victory over No.15 UCLA.

USC nose guard George Achica preserved the win when he blocked a 46-yard field goal attempt by the Bruins' Norm Johnson as time expired.

Allen, who carried 40 times, scored on 5-yard run in the contest's closing minutes and Frank Jordan kicked the extra point to give the Trojans the victory.

The defeat ended UCLA's Pac-10 title and Rose Bowl hopes, as the Bruins fell to 5-2-1 in conference play and 7-3-1 overall. The Trojans finished the regular season 9-2 and 5-2.

The Bruins led 21-12 heading into the final quarter, but Jordan hit his third field goal of the game, a 28-yarder early in the period, to cut the deficit to six points.

Troy West's interception of a Tom Ramsey pass at the UCLA 39-yard line with 4:53 to play set up Allen's winning touchdown.

Allen's other touchdown came on a 7-yard burst in the second period. Jordan's earlier field goals were 38 and 44 yards.

UCLA's scoring came on an 11-yard run by Kevin Nelson that gave the Bruins a 7-3 lead after the first quarter; a 23-yard pass from Ramsey to Ricky Coffman, and a two-point conversion pass; and Johnson field goals of 32 and 28 yards.

Allen, already the NCAA's leading single-season rusher in history, increased his 1981 output to 2,342 yards. No other college runner has ever topped 2,000. It was also his eighth 200-yaid game of the season.

The nationally televised game was played before a crowd of 89,432 in the Coliseum.

Clemson wins, 29-13

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Rod McSwain blocked a punt for a first-period touchdown to trigger a Clemson rally and his older brother, Chuck, ran for a pair of second-half touchdowns as the second-ranked Tigers defeated South Carolina 29-13 Saturday. The victory enabled Clemson to complete its first perfect regular season in 33 years.

Clemson's defense, ranked 12th in the nation, also set up an 11-yard scoring scramble by quarterback Homer Jordan for a 15-7 halftime lead. Bob Paulling made up for the first missed extra point of his career with a 23-yard field goal that put the Tigers in front to stay.

South Carolina closed within 15-13 early in the third period on a 10-yard pass from Gordon Beckham to Horace Smith. A 2-point conversion try failed when Beckham was sacked by Jeff Suttle.

Clemson then wrapped up its 12th consecutive victory when Chuck McSwain leaped across from a yard out later in the third quarter. He also bolted 23 yards for a fourth-quarter score, breaking three tackles along the way.

Clemson, reportedly bound for the Orange Bowl against Nebraska, finished the regular season 11-0. Only twice before has Clemson won 11 games in a season and those years, 1948 and 1978, included bowl wins. South Carolina is 6-5 with one game left and probably could have gone to the Hall of Fame bowl by beating the Tigers.

BYU rolls past Utah

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Quarterback Jim McMahon of Brigham Young University became major college football's all-time passing leader Saturday, throwing for 565 yards and four touchdowns to lead the 18th-ranked Cougars to a 56-28 victory over upstate rival Utah and an automatic berth in the Holiday Bowl.

The victory gave BYU its sixth straight shared or outright Western Athletic Conference championship and fourth consecutive trip to San Diego for the Holiday Bowl on Dec.18. A victory for Utah would have meant the title and bowl trip.

McMahon, who played his final game at home, broke the NCAA career passing mark of 9,188 yards previously held by Mark Herrmann of Purdue. McMahon, who needed 218 yards to shatter the mark, finished with 9,535 yards.

McMahon exceeded Herrman's career total offense mark two weeks ago.

The 6-foot-1 senior threw touchdown passes of 8, 6, 27 and 37 yards — two of them to tight end Gordon Hudson, who finished with 12 catches for 229 yards.

Utah's offensive attack was powered by running back Del Rodgers, who gained 173 yards in 14 carries and scored three touchdowns. On the game's first play from scrimmage, Rodgers scooted 87 yards for a TD.

Texas lands in high Cotton

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - The No. 8 ranked Texas Longhorns earned a Cotton Bowl berth Saturday thanks to a fourth team fullback.

While probation-blemished Southern Methodist was capturing the Southwest Conference title, the Longhorns clinched at least a tie for second place and the host role New Year's Day with a hard-earned 34-12 victory over Baylor.

Daryl Clark rushed for a career-high 131 yards, scored a touchdown and setup another and teammate A.J. Jam Jones collected 146 yards and scored on a 67 yard run.

But it was Clark who produced when it counted in the fourth period with Baylor just a touchdown away from tying the game.

"I can't tell you how proud I am of these guys...an amazing group with a tough will," Coach Akers said. "They dedicated themselves to each other...that's the only way you can overcome losses such as Kenneth Sims, Mark Weber and Rodney Tate..."

Akers said, "I'm looking forward to the Cotton Bowl just as I have a detour next week (Texas A&M Thanksgiving Day), one more step."

Akers said of the running of Clark and Jones "everything was just clicking...everything worked."

The Cotton Bowl was represented by Wilbur Evans, who presented the official invitation to Texas as the host team.

"Since I'm a Texas grad I hope the Longhorns make a habit of coming," Evans said in the Longhorn dressing room.

It will be the Longhorns' 17th Cotton Bowl appearance and its first since 1977.

The victory lifted Texas' overall record to 8-1-1 and gave the Longhorns a 5-1-1 SWC ledger.

Defending champion Baylor, seeking its first victory here in 30 years, ended its season 5-6 and 3-5 in the conference.

Clark scored on a nine-yard touchdown run and Jones galloped 67 yards for a score in the first half, but it was Clark who came through when it counted in the fourth period.

With Texas owning a shaky 20-12 lead, Clark ran for 41 yards on third and four midway of the fourth period. He then caught a nine-yard third down pass to position the Horns for quarterback Robert Brewer's one-yard touchdown run.

Brewer ran one-yard for Texas' final touchdown with 1:35 to play after the fifth of six interceptions of Baylor quarterback Neal Jeffrey.

Houston Cougars' rally kills luckless Texas Tech

HOUSTON (AP) — With a few nervous moments in the third quarter long forgotten, the University of Houston defeated hapless Texas Tech 15-7 Saturday night and accepted an invitation to meet the Oklahoma Sooners in the Sun Bowl.

"We are going to give them a great game," Houston coach Bill Yeoman said after a five-yard touchdown pass from Lionel Wilson to Lonell Phea rallied the Cougars to victory. "But we have to bust our backside to protect it against Rice next week."

The Cougars were sweating out a tense third quarter trailing 7-3 before rallying for the winning touchdown.

Facing fourth down with two yards to go at the Tech 5-yard line, Wilson dropped back and passed into the end zone to Phea, who grabbed the ball over the head of Tech cornerback Greg Miller for his first touchdown of the season.

"It was really a pass-run option but then the safety came and Wilson made a great play and Phea had a good catch," Yeoman said. "A lot of people bring that safety against us so it was no shock when Tech did it tonight."

The Cougars will face the Oklahoma Sooners in the Dec. 26 Sun Bowl at El Paso. Oklahoma has a 5-4-1 record with one game remaining against Oklahoma State.

It will be the ninth bowl game in 13 seasons for the Cougars and their fourth in a row. Houston has a 7-2-1 bowl record and will be making its first appearance in the Sun Bowl.

The Cougars were launched on their winning touchdown drive by an amazing series of penalties against Tech that forced the Red Raiders to punt on fourth down and 56.

ACU rolls

BROWNWOOD, Texas (AP) — Abilene Christian quarterback Loyal Proffitt passed for two touchdowns and ran for two Saturday as the Wildcats crushed Howard Payne 56-7 in the final Lone Star Conference game of the season for both teams.

Missouri falls to Kansas, 19-11

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) - Roger Poole juked and weaved 27 yards with a fourth-quarter pass interception for the winning touchdown Saturday as Kansas whipped the mistake-plagued, bowl-bound Missouri Tigers, 19-11, in Big Eight college football.

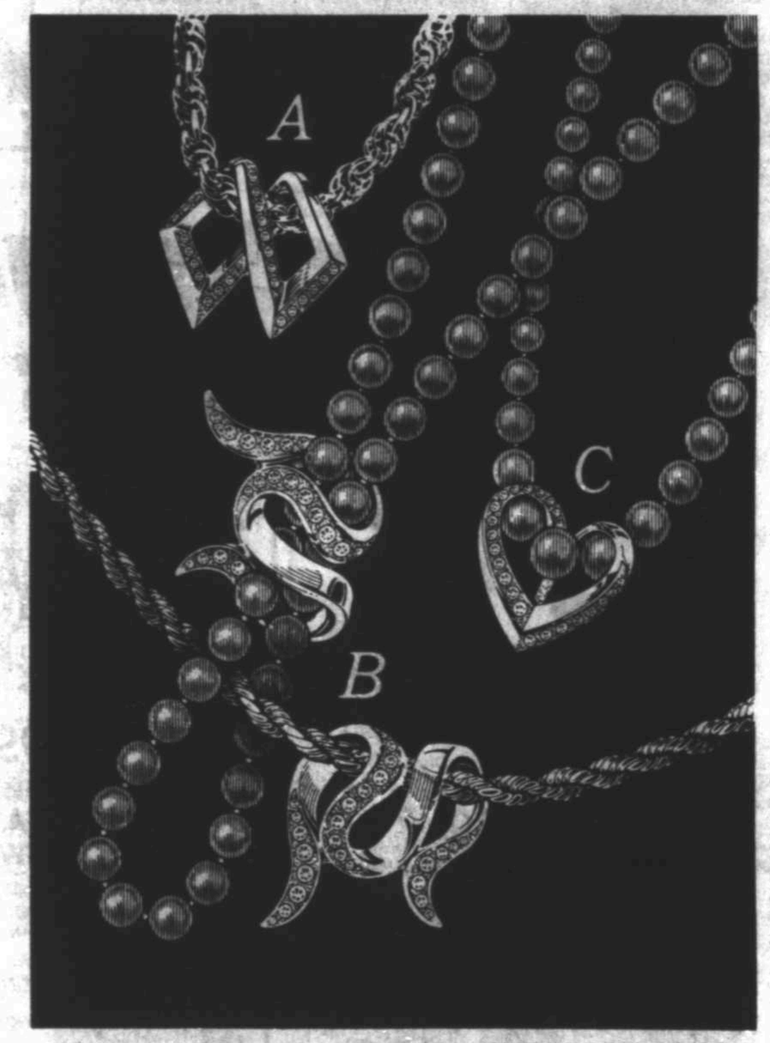

The victory hiked the Jayhawks' overall record to 8-3 and fueled their hopes of getting an invitation to the Hall of Fame Bowl, which was expected to announce a decision Sunday. Missouri, 7-4, has accepted a bid to the Tangerine Bowl to meet Southern Mississippi.

Trophy buck can be wary animal

KENNY REDIN'S

Fin & Feather

one of the wariest animals in the wild. Most any buck which reaches five to six years of age hasn't lived that long unless he has not been hunted or has learned to avoid man.

There is one period each year, however, when the buck becomes careless. That period is during the rut — the breeding season.

More Sports

It is the time of year females come into heat and the buck must compete with other bucks of the same species to service the does.

THE BREEDING season generally coincides with the hunting season in Texas, and the hunter who learns to recognize signs of rutting buck increases his chances of bagging him.

When the hunter has found the signs, he has located the buck's territory it follows that when the hunter knows where the buck hangs out, the battle to get the animal in the rifle sights is half won. Serious hunters study their quarry. They learn its habits, where it lives, what it eats, what it needs to survive and thrive.

The serious deer hunter will know how and why a buck's antlers develp, what happens to them after the antelers are shed, what it taks to produce large antelers ad why some bucks can't grown much headgear while others can.

IF A hunter is not interested enough to find out how the whitetail lives 365 days a year he at least should invest some time learning what the animal does during one-fourth of the year — October, November and December — the hunting season.

Many hunters are confused about breeding seasons in Texas. They tend to associate the beginning of the rut with the last two weeks in December.

The peak occurs during the latter part of December, but it will begin much earlier, often around the beginning of November.

Perhaps the most important signs the hunter will want to find during the fall are rubs and scrapes.

A rub is the most obvious. Bucks begin making them in the late summer and early fall as antler velvet dries and is removed. Bucks will rub saplings with their antlers, usually removing all bark from at least one side of the sapling and in some cases completely encircling the trunk.

Rubs usually extend from about 12 inches to as much as 36 inches above the ground.

BUCKS continue to visit these rub to polish their antlers after the velvet has been removed and will return to the rubs all during the rut. A buck might have several rubs in its territory.

A scrape can be more difficult to locate. A scrape is a bare patch of ground which the buck scrapes with his front hooves, an while a rub indicates only that the hunter is in the territory of a particular buck, a fresh scrape is positive proof that the buck is in rut.

Scrapes generally will be found around the edges of a clearing and under the overhanging branches of a tree. The branch which hangs over the scrape will be from 30 to 50 inches off the ground.

In time, he will chew all the leaves off the nearby twigs, then start chewing the twigs. The buck might fight a nearby tree branch or sapling after he visits his scrape.

"DOES may frequently be see urinating in buck scrapes," says Bob Ramsey, Hill Country rancher-biologist and an expert at using deer antlers to call bucks. "A oe will run up to a scrape, proving to me that she knew it was there, urinate in it, rub her hocks together, look back the way she came, then dash off in the opposite direction."

"Within a few seconds a buck may charge up, smell around the scrape, paw out all the wet dirt where the doe urinated, chew the twigs above the scrape, urinate on his hocks, rub them together as the doe did, then chase after her, nose to the ground," he explains.

It the hunter, like the doe, also knows the scrape is there, he will take a stad near it and be patient. Sooner or later the buck will make an appearance and offer the hunter a shot.

Cardinals spill Golden Eagles

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Sophomore quarterback Dean May passed for two scores and ran for two more touchdowns Saturday to lead Louisville to a 13-10 come-from-behind upset of No. 9 Southern Mississippi, spoiling the Golden Eagles dream of an undefeated season.

Southern Mississippi, which had entered the regionally televised game with an 8-0-1 record, had taken a 3-0 halftime lead on a bitterly cold day at Fairgrounds Stadium.

However, Louisville, which snapped a four-game losing streak, finished the season [illegible] took advantage of three critical Southern Mississippi [illegible] to go ahead.

May's first touchdown toss of 6 yards to freshman Keith Humphries quarter was aided by a face-mask infraction. The penalty had moved the ball to the Southern Mississippi 11-yard line two plays earlier.

Hate absent now from Skin series

IRVING, Texas (AP) - The Washington Redskins-Dallas Cowboys rivalry isn't the hate affair it used to be.

When Washington meets the Cowboys today in a National Football League game at Texas Stadium, the Redskins will do so without the usual name-calling between the two teams.

"We take a whole different approach now when we play the Cowboys," said Washington quarterback Joe Gibbs. "The series used to be dominated by the personalities of Diron Talbert in his feud with Roger Staubach and (former coach) George Allen.

"There were so many words exchanged it always seemed like the game was anti-climactic. The battle was in the media."

Theismann said "It's not hate now, but it's not love, either."

He has led the Redskins to five victories in their last six games. The Cowboys intercepted him four times in a 26-10 loss in the season opener.

"I have a lot of respect for the Cowboys," said Theismann. "Every team that plays them really gets up for them, but you have to respect them, particularly their front four which is the best in football.

"However, they've sort of created a monster once they dubbed themselves 'America's Team.' I do know they are much better now than when we played them early in the year...this is the time of year the Cowboys always prove themselves as a great team."

Dallas, a touchdown favorite, was a game behind Philadelphia in the National Conference Eastern Division with an 8-3 ledger. Washington was 5-6 in the same division.

The Cowboys have won the last four meetings and own a 25-16-2 edge in the 22-year-old rivalry.

Since Texas Stadium opened in 1972, the Redskins have one just once. 27-14 in 1976.

Bum returns to Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers and New Orleans Saints will play a football game Sunday. It could be only secondary to the REAL event scheduled in the Astrodome — the return of Bum Phillips.

The Oilers, 5-6 and likely out of the playoffs for the first time in four years, and the Saints, 3-8, may create less excitement on the field than Phillips, who makes his first appearance in the Astrodome since being fired last January by Oilers owner Bud Adams.

The emotion of the moment will be quickly lost when the game starts, however, according to Oiler players. "I'm going to do my business. On the other side, you know how I feel about Bum. He helped me in my career and I helped him be a winner," said placekicker Toni Fristch. "But if there are two seconds on the clock and we need a kick to win, I'll have no mercy on the man."

Phillips was dispatched last January after taking the Oilers to the playoffs three straight years. He was replaced by his No.1 aide, Ed Biles, who has found it uncomfortable fielding constant reminders of the Oilers' apparent fall from playoff status.

"I'm sure he'll get a big welcome when he comes into the Astrodome," Biles said. "He deserves it. He did a great job while he was here."

There was even speculation that the sellout Astrodome crowd, unhappy with the Oilers' decline, might switch allegiance if the Saints take an early lead. "I think our fans will remain loyal to our players regardless of the coaching situation," Biles said.

"I've never seen so much written about a 3-8 team and a 5-6 team playing a football game," Phillips said.

TV producer donates money for drama studies

LA JOLLA, Calif. (AP) — Quinn Martin, producer of television movies and such series as "The Fugitive," has donated $250,000 to the University of California at San Diego for drama studies.

The Quinn Martin Chair of Drama was announced by the regents of the University of California on Friday.

Martin, 59, has produced about 20 television movies and 16 network series, including "The FBI," "Barnaby Jones" as well as the Emmy award-winning "The Fugitive."

Cash

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music entertainer Johnny Cash has been honored for his work against adult illiteracy by the National Association for Public Continuing and Adult Education.

Cash will receive the 1981 President's Award from the association, which cited his television movie portrayal of Jesse Hallum, who learned to read and write after his daughter needed special medical treatment.

State education officials said the award will be presented Tuesday by Dr. Jim Miller, president of the national association.

Melanie

NEW YORK (AP) — Singer-composer Melanie, who rose to fame more than a decade ago with the hit song "Brand New Key," takes to the stage this week — still singing but now acting, too.

Melanie will perform in a Lincoln Center workshop production called "Ace o' Diamonds," based on the life of Calamity Jane.

Melanie, 33, composed the music and lyrics and will play the role of the young Calamity Jane.

Annie Golden, vocalist with the rock group the Shirts, will play Annie Oakley.

Melanie, who cut her first album in 1969 and is now a mother of three, said she became intrigued by Calamity Jane after reading letters written by the legendary Western character.

SPRINGFIELD, N.J. (AP) — Junk dealer John V. "Lucky" Mahalchik lived up to his nickname when a stranger showed up and paid his delinquent tax bill.

The benefactor arrived by bus from Philadelphia on Thursday to pay Mahalchik's $1,082 property tax bill for 1980. The money was due on 50 acres where Mahalchik lives in a teepee.

Township tax collector Frank A. Commercio said Mahalchik and the man went to the tax office and the mysterious man peeled off eight $100 bills and an assortment of $10 and $20 bills to satisfy the debt.

The collector described the man as in his late 60s, sickly and pale-faced and wearing a windbreaker, shirt and shabby blue jeans.

"To me it looked like he could use the money more than Lucky," Commercio said.

Commercio said the man refused to identify himself and said "just call me nameless."

The benefactor said he learned of Mahalchik's tax problems from listening to a radio talk show.

Mahalchik said he had never seen the man before.

ROCHESTER, Minn. (AP) — Saudi Prince Abdullah, third in line to the throne of Saudi Arabia, has checked out of his hotel suite after a five-day visit for examinations at the Mayo Clinic.

The prince, who is the brother of King Khaled, and his 35-member entourage left Rochester on Friday night in two private jets. They had slipped quietly into the city last Monday.

The prince and his party stayed in 14 suites and rooms at the Kahler Hotel. One part-time housekeeper, 16-year-old Jim Bamlet of Eyota, said he received a $50 tip after returning a white robe with diamond cufflinks. The robe had gotten mixed in with bed linen in the hotel laundry, Bamlet said.

Yitzhak Modai, Israeli minister of aviation and defense, also was at the Mayo Clinic last week for unspecified tests.

Karpov fears no challenger

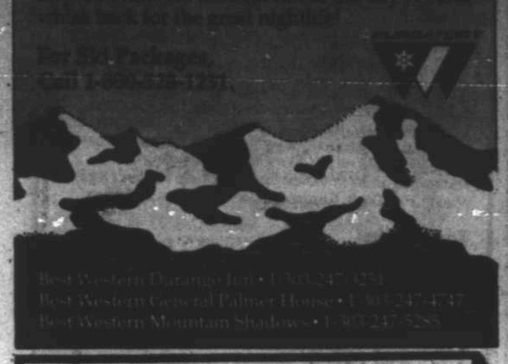

MERANO, Italy (AP) — World chess champion Anatoly Karpov of the Soviet Union said Saturday he fears no challenger and predicted he would would never play defeated rival Victor Korchnoi again.

"I am not afraid of anyone if I am in good fighting trim," the 30-year-old champion said at a news conference a day after he retained his title with a decisive sixth victory in a match against Korchnoi, a Soviet defector.

Friends of Korchnoi's family in the Soviet Union said authorities showed no sign of allowing the defector's wife Bella and imprisoned son Igor to emigrate and join him at his Switzerland home. Korchnoi defected to the West in 1976.

In Moscow, Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev sent congratulations to Karpov.

"It is pleasant to note that in the complicated and responsible match you displayed creative skill, genuinely Soviet character, endurance and composure, and raised still higher the glorious traditions of the Soviet chess school," read Brezhnev's telegram, carried by the official news agency Tass.

Real Estate Today

By Don Harvey Realtor

THE TITLE SEARCH

Buying real estate is unlike other purchases. There may have been a long line of past owners, any of whom could still retain some legal hold on the property — or claims on the property made against previous owners which remain unsatisfied.

Therefore, when you purchase a property, you should be thoroughly assured that the title to it is free and clear of claims or encumbrances.

How is this done? Usually by an attorney who indexes all recorded papers affecting the title, listing them in chronological order. A synopsis of the documents is called the Abstract of Title. This is what is examined to determine whether any defects exist.

The attorney for the lending institution will examine the title and certify to his client whether the title is clear or not.

But this is for mortgage loan purposes only. It is no assurance to the borrower that this title is free from encumbrances.

The buyer should retain his own attorney for adequate protection.

LHS's Origin to give fall concert

Origin, the pop section of the Robert E. Lee High School choir, will present its opening fall concert at 8 p.m. Monday in the Lee High School auditorium.

A variety of selections, including country and western, pop, jazz and religious gospel, will be presented.

According to Marilyn Jones, LHS choir director, auditions for the group are held each year and are open to any high school student in the band or chorale program. Auditions for next year's Origin will be held in May.

"This group was chosen from about 60 people," she said, adding that the students audition in front of a panel of teachers.

The fall concert is open to the public.

Museum representative lectures on Dallas art show

Ann Hinkle Dunbar, a representative of the Dallas Museum of Fine Arts, will give a talk and slide presentation Tuesday at Midland College.

The presentation deals with the art in the Duncan Phillips Collection of Impressionistic Paintings which will be on display at the museum in Dallas beginning in late November.

"Several groups from Midland are planning to see the show in Dallas," Mrs. Dunbar stated. "We feel that they, along with others who will not be able to make the trip, will be interested in our explanation of the art appearing in the show."

The Midland College Fine Arts Department and the Community Services Department are co-sponsoring Mrs. Dunbar's presentation and making it available to the public without charge.

The Phillips collection, which originates in Washington, D.C., includes works by Renoir, Monet, Van Gogh, Degas, Matisse and Cezanne. The Dallas showing will be the first time the exhibit has been on tour.

Mrs. Dunbar will begin at 7 p.m. and conclude at 9 p.m. Those wishing to attend should report to the recital hall in the Midland College Allison Fine Arts Building by 6:45 p.m. Space may be reserved for the evening by calling 684-7851, extension 147 or 216.

McCartney wants to keep songs in the family

By MARK S. SMITH
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Former Beatle Paul McCartney is trying to buy back the rights to Beatles songs from a British broadcasting tycoon, with the help of John Lennon's widow, Yoko Ono, a McCartney aide said Saturday.

"Paul has a desire to own his earlier songs and everyone is talking," the aide, who asked not to be identified, said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press.

The rights to the Lennon-McCartney compositions, which include such Beatles standards as "Yesterday," "Yellow Submarine" and "Hey Jude," are owned by Northern Songs. The company was purchased in 1969 by Lord Lew Grade and his ATV Music Corp for 10 million pounds — about $19 million at the current exchange rate — as the Beatles were breaking up.

The Daily Express newspaper reported Saturday that Grade, whose communications empire includes the internationally syndicated TV program The Muppet Show, had rejected McCartney's most recent offer of 21 million pounds — about $40 million.

"I would like Paul to have the songs back, but he must come up with the right offer," it quoted Grade as saying.

The McCartney aide confirmed an offer "in that region" had been made and added that Miss Ono was party to the negotiations.

"They are John's songs, of which Yoko is guardian, as well as Paul's songs, so whatever happens to them is of interest to her," the aide said.

The Daily Express quoted Paul's wife Linda McCartney as saying: "Paul and Yoko want to keep the songs in the family. Morally, it is madness that Paul does not own any of the songs he wrote with John. To Paul they are a part of him just as his children are."

Evans is thought of as 'Big Valley' girl

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In early morning, a lithe Nordic beauty races across the greensward. Later, she works out in a gym, or plays a game of pool in the game room of her home.

She is Linda Evans, who stars as Krystle Jennings Carrington in the ABC series "Dynasty." Away from the set, she often can be found indulging in her hobbies of numerology and sports. Sometimes, she and her long-time friend and secretary, Bunky Young, run together.

Miss Evans was born in Connecticut, raised in Los Angeles, and says she grew up on "Big Valley."

She was still a teen-ager when she starred in the mid-1960s Western series with Barbara Stanwyck and Lee Majors. It was while on that show that she met and married actor-director John Derek, who later divorced her to marry Bo Derek.

She's only 38, but she's been called a "perfect 40," perhaps an allusion to Miss Derek's box-office hit, "10."

MHS transported back to magical 'Camelot'

For "one brief and shining moment" Friday, Midland shared some ground with the magical kingdom of Camelot.

The Harlequin Theatricals production of "Camelot," sponsored by the Midland Community Concert Association, was presented at 8 p.m. in the auditorium of Midland High School. A capacity crowd, including a sprinkling of children, was on hand for the lusty, lively presentation of the King Arthur legend as written by Alan Jay Lerner with music by Frederick Lowe.

"Camelot" has been a favorite of audiences since it first was staged on Broadway in 1960 — and the Midland audience saw it in a "favored" light, often interrupting the action with applause. All the well-remembered songs were there, from Lancelot's "If Ever I Would Leave You" to Arthur's "How to Handle a Woman" and Guenevere's "Before I Gaze At You Again" and "I Loved You Once in Silence."

Don Wiswell as Arthur and Suzanne Blakeslee as Guenevere gave enthusiastic performances, often colored by the image of other performers who've filled the roles. The part of Lancelot was filled by William I. Howe — and fill it he did with enthusiasm, emotion and energy.

Their vocalizations were not always perfect, but (as Lancelot said of his spiritual condition) they kept striving.

Michael Siegel's transformation from Merlin to Pelinore gave the production a continuity and consistency it might otherwise have missed. By the time Arthur's evil offspring Mordred, portrayed by Michael Lyman, came on the scene, it wouldn't take a magician to see through his character. Lyman's portrayal was a bit too bratty to be believable — if musical comedy need be believable.

An ensemble of knights, ladies and the like backed up solos by the leading characters and participated in production numbers which often provided the narrative of the story. It's an admirable group that can sing in harmony, dance in step and still make every word heard.

This staging of "Camelot" was often stilted, with predictable, programmable hand and body motions. Not predictable and quite effective were several episodes of "frozen motion" when the ensemble stood in tableau while the action was focused elsewhere on MHS's small stage.

The sets, obviously designed for portability and versatility while the Washington-based theater group tours the nation, were beautifully simple and simply beautiful. The costumes, probably designed with those same qualities in mind, were a bit disappointing. We tend to think of Arthurian England in rich and resplendent terms, and a queen dressed in earth tones doesn't quite complete the image.

In all, the performance was a pleasant way to spend an evening — sharing in the magic of a special moment and a very special play.

POSITIVE THINKING

There's plenty of good life for the taking

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

After making an enthusiastic speech about how really exciting life is, I was approached by a visibly far-out member of the younger generation. "Don't make me laugh," he griped. "What is there to make life good?"

He did not give me a chance to reply; he turned and walked away rapidly. But his question lingered. Just what is there to make life good?

The answer is very clear: There is plenty of good life for those who are able to see it and take it. What this world is to you or to me and through us to others depends very largely upon our attitude — upon the cast of mind we have. It depends upon the spirit in which we approach the problems and opportunities of human existence.

Recently I was in Halifax, Nova Scotia, to give a talk to an audience made up of sales people, and the general public also. To get to the hall I hailed a taxicab and told the driver, "St. Patrick's Auditorium."

As we started off, the driver, a clean-cut looking young fellow said: "There's an author from New York going to speak out there tonight."

"That's right," I answered.

"I would go to the meeting," he continued, "But I can't. You see, I go to college during the day — Dalhousie University — and at night I drive this cab. My wife would like to go too, but she is a nurse and she can't be off tonight."

"Well, you've got the speaker right here in your taxi."

"What do you know," he said in surprise. "How about giving me a rundown on your seech, 'Why Positive Thinkers Get Positive Results.' I really go for that positive thinking."

"I don't think you need it," I replied. "You and your wife are a hard-working couple and I admire you."

"Yes," he said, "But don't be sorry for us. We are having a good time. We like it. This is a wonderful world and this is a terrific time to be living. My father always taught me to live right and have a cheerful attitude and be a positive thinker. My wife and I — we're going to do something with our lives. We just know we are."

I told him about my far-out friend who growled about nothing good in life. The young man shook hs head. "You know, I feel sorry for those guys. They are so mad at everybody and mad at themselves that they've got all mixed up. Someone should straighten them out."

How refreshing it was to encounter a young person with such a vital conception of what life is like!

Of course any wide-awake individual living today is only too painfully aware that not everything in this present-day world of ours is all sweetness and light. We have ugly facts to deal with, we are faced with disturbing trends, we are involved in perplexing situations. But one of the secrets of successful living is to balance one aspect of experience against another and keep our perspective.

When you feel overwhelmed by all the rot in the world today, the crumbling of standards, the corruption, the dirtiness and decadence, remember that there are also beautiful mountains and rushing rivers, surging seas and magnifficent forests and that the stars are still there in the night sky and the sun still rises in an effulgence of beauty. Remember too that everywhere there are thousands upon thousands of human beings who know in their minds and hearts that life is good — people who do not let adverse conditions or any difficulty get them down, but joyously pursue good thngs for themselves and others.

Samuel Butler wrote, "Is life worth living? This is a question for an embryo, not for a man."

Goethe makes the same point in gentler words: "We men," he says, "are always complaining that our happy hours are so few and our sad hours so many, and yet it is we who are to blame. If we opened our hearts to enjoy the good that God offers us every day we should have strength to bear the evil in its turn when it does come."

Don't run life down, Instead, let it really get hold of you. Be thankful you are alive. Life is precious, it is good, real good. Keep it so, as long as you live.

Pyramids being restored

EDITOR'S NOTE — The pyramids at Giza have withstood the test of time. But they are having trouble coping with the test of tourism and other aspects of modern civilization. A patching-up program up is aimed at preserving the ancient wonders.

By LIBETTE BALOUNY
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — After 4,900 years of desert sun and sandstorms and a few decades of modern smog, Cheops pyramid is beginning to show its age.

The Department of Antiquities is patching up a few hundred of the 2.3 million limestone blocks that over the ages have cracked and broken off the greatest of the three pyramids of Giza, one of the seven wonders of the world.

Nassef Mohamed Hassan, the keeper of the pyramids, explains that the patch job would not have been necessary had not the pyramids' grants slab casing been pirated over the past 1,000 years for use in building the great mosques, palaces and churches of Cairo.

When Pharaoh Cheops built his grandiose tomb, it was girded by a 40-foot high, 25-foot thick apron of granite that shielded it from the worst of the sandstorms. The remaining 445-foot height of the pyramid was protected by smooth white limestone.

The pyramid was weatherproof, and under the desert sun, it glowed, Hassan says.

But now, declares Hassan with feeling: "The sand particles hit it like millions of little needles. The winds tear round it, invisibly raking off the edges. The acid (from the reaction of car exhausts and industrial pollution) slowly gnaws into the limestone."

For the past few years, the antiquities department has mounted a modest restoration program under which the rough spots and edges of the pyramid are buttressed by limestone blocks about a quarter the size of the two-and-a-half-ton originals.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Scoliosis' effect on pregnancy uncertain

Dear Dr. Solomon: I was recently married and do not plan on having a family just yet. Still, there is one problem I know I am going to have to face. I have scoliosis, and I wonder if the condition will affect a pregnancy. Do you have any information on the relationship, if any, between scoliosis and pregnancy? — Nancy

Dear Nancy: Little is known about the relationship between scoliosis and pregnancy, but the little that is known seems to be promising. Of course, a severe case of scoliosis has the potential for affecting a pregnant woman's breathing, but even women who do not have scoliosis have their breathing capacity diminished during pregnancy. In general, this capacity would have to be significantly diminished before a pregnancy would prove to be detrimental.

The effect of the pregnancy on the scoliosis itself is not clear. Various reports suggest that the condition may improve, worsen, or remain the same during pregnancy, but this is true of scoliosis in general, not only when a woman is pregnant. Whether or not it progresses seems to depend in large measure on the woman's physique, physical fitness, the type of curve, the patient's age, and the flexibility of the spine.

Finally, there is no evidence that scoliosis affects a woman's ability to become pregnant, or that she would be subject to complications after giving birth.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My granddaughter is pregnant with her first child. She has always been on the thin side, and was never successful in adding to her weight. Is the mother's weight an important factor in pregnancy? — Mrs. C.L.

Dear Mrs. L.: According to researchers from the Universities of Minnesota and North Carolina, women who are underweight at the start of their pregnancies should make certain to gain an adequate amount of weight during their pregnancies. After reviewing the records of more than 650 women, they found that infants born to women who were underweight at the start of their pregnancies were of lower birth weight than infants born to women of normal weight. This held true even when maternal weight gain was similar overall in both groups of mothers.

I would assume your granddaughter's obstetrician is aware of her condition and will recommend an appropriate dietary course for her to follow.

Dear Dr. Solomon: With all the emphasis on limiting the amount of salt we use, why does it continue to be added to bakery products? It seems this is one area were its use could easily be limited. — Joan

Dear Joan: Some bakeries do offer low-sodium breads. However, cereal and grain-based bakery items need sodium salts to control fermentation of yeast and to strengthen gluten, a protein that gives cohesiveness to dough.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

CONSUMER TIPS

Beware of return policies when choosing holiday gifts

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, Inc.

"I put a pair of diamond earrings on layaway and paid $50 as a downpayment. Now I've decided I need the money and the store won't give me a refund. What can I do?"

The Christmas season is approaching and we are being encouraged by local stores, through advertising, to start buying gifts for those named on our list. Since it is difficult to purchase for other people, most of us buy a gift with the thought that it can always be returned. The fact is, returning a product for exchange, credit or a refund is more of a privilege than a right, so be careful when making those holiday purchases.

Most stores are not legally required to refund money, exchange merchandise or accept returned goods for store credit unless the item has been misrepresented or is defective. To promote goodwill and to encourage repeat business, most stores will establish policies that allow customers to return merchandise. It is completely legal, though, for a store to have a "no return" or "all sales final" policy.

According to state law, a store is required to make an adjustment only if the product is defective or misrepresented. If, after opening the box, you discover the lid to the slow cooker you purchased is missing, you have the right to return it for an adjustment. Likewise, you have the right to return the slow cooker if it was advertised to be "immersible in water" but the instructions warn against it. In each case the store must either supply what was advertised, or allow you to return the cooker for cash or exchange it for another.

Placing an incorrect order, such as sending you a green blender when the order specified a white one, is another case in which the store would be required to make an adjustment.

Layaway plans, where the store holds the merchandise while you pay for it, are governed exclusively by store policies. The store is not required to refund your money if you later decide you no longer want the product.

During this holiday season inquire about the store's policies concerning returned merchandise and layaway plans before you buy those gifts. If the store will make an adjustment on a returned gift, make sure you do the following:

—Save all tags, price labels and all sales or charge receipts. Don't expect a store to exchange a product if you cannot provide proof of purchase.

—Return the merchandise in the original container, including all packing materials and instruction sheets.

—Keep the product from being used. A store usually will not accept merchandise that shows wear, or has been damaged or altered. It is always wise to check the merchandise for damage before you leave the store.

—Make the exchange soon after the holidays. If you wait too long, the store may be unwilling or unable to make the necessary adjustments.

Contact your Better Business Bureau at 563-1881 if you have a problem getting a store to make an adjustment for a legitimate return of merchandise. For the free pamphlet "Tips on Refunds and Exchanges" write BBB/Permian Basin, P.O. Box 6006, Midland, Texas 79701.

Citizens ticketed for doing civic duty

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — There was Tucson Police Chief Peter Ronstadt, telling members of the Tucson Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce that police need more cooperation from the public.

And, at the same time, there was one of his officers outside the hotel where Ronstadt was speaking, ticketing the cars of chamber members with parking citations.

Between 20 and 30 cars driven to the breakfast meeting Thursday were parked on a street across from the hotel. There are "no parking" signs all along the street.

Later, Ronstadt — who is the brother of singer Linda Ronstadt — said he was swamped with calls from people complaining about the tickets.

But he told them that even though they were listening to him deliver a speech on law and order, they were not exempt them from the city's parking regulations.

"We need your help to help you," Ronstadt said during the speech.

SUGARCREEK, Ohio (AP) — Dale Schlabach, a red-bearded blacksmith, doesn't watch television or listen to the radio. He picks up bits and pieces of news in town, where he drives a horse-drawn buggy every day to a barn to shoe horses.

After work, there's not much time for reading newspapers. Schlabach has cows and work horses to tend to back at his farm.

But, steeped as he is in his 19th-century ways, the shy Amish farmer loves news.

"I don't get the daily papers," says the boyish-looking Schlabach, 31, father of six and vice president of the local Amish school board.

Instead, like most of the Amish and Mennonite people in these picturesque foothills of the Appalachians, the Schlabach family gets a cumbersome, old-fashioned-looking weekly paper called The Budget.

Written almost entirely by its readers, The Budget shares most of the traits of the Amish and Mennonites.

Thrifty and plain, The Budget avoids controversy, "bad news," and change. Front-page stories are likely to involve the weather. One of its few pictures recently showed publisher Don Sprankle milking a cow. And social events — simple as they are — are recounted in detail.

"You won't see hard news, even in the local section," says Sprankle, a former savings and loan association manager and now co-owner of the paper.

The newspapers' 30 pages are filled with letters from correspondents in Amish and Mennonite communities around the world. The 20,000 to 25,000 members of the conservative Christian denominations, known for their simple dress and staunch traditions, are descendants of the Anabaptists who left Switzerland in 1720.

"My wife reads all the newsletters...I look at the classified ads. I don't have time for reading," Schlabach says, pounding a red hot horsehoe on an anvil. His sister-in-law is a correspondent from Gosben, Ind.

"I sit down and do the book work and if she finds something real interesting, she tells me or reads it aloud."

Something real interesting might be a long-awaited rainfall in Bird-in-the-Hand, Pa. Or the visit of Calvin and Ada Miller of Paris, Texas, to the home of Fannie Mast in Concord, Ark.

There's even international news. Correspondents from Latin America, Africa and Japan — most of them missionaries — send reports written, like those from the states, in letter form. By having the letters printed in The Budget, the thrifty Amish can keep in touch with all their friends and acquaintances at once.

The Budget also has farm news, weddings, sports, a mayor's corner, a report from the editor and a column written in Pennsylvania Dutch. Deaths and funerals appear on page one.

About the only time national news made the front page was when President Reagan was shot last March 30, says Sprankle.

"We were probably the only newspaper in the country that gave him two inches of space," he says.

Sprankle, a Lutheran, says The Budget has a circulation of 17,000.

"But it's probably read by five times that number," he says, explaining that each 30-cent copy is passed from reader to reader. He says most Amish farms have two families, and they usually take turns subscribing.

The tidy Budget newsroom, decorated with pictures of Alpine scenes, is in a small brown frame building with yellow scalloped trim and red geraniums in the windows — typical of the Swiss-style architecture of Sugarcreek. Nine people work full-time and four parttime.

But, says associate editor George Smith, the more than 300 volunteer correspondents provide the bulk of the news.

"The importance of the correspondents cannot be exaggerated. Without them, it would be just another small-town weekly," he says.

Sugarcreek, with 2,000 people, a brick plant and dairy farms, is at the edge of the world's largest Amish settlement, which numbers close to 15,000, says Sprankle. He first bought the paper in 1969 and returned last year after a four-year absence.

For the past 57 years, however, Smith has been the man behind The Budget. Like Sprankle, he has Mennonite ancestors but is Lutheran. The 74-year-old Smith took over the paper in 1939 from his father, who bought it in 1920. The Budget was founded in 1890.

In his office in the back of the building, Smith reads and deciphers the correspondents' letters.

"Perhaps 250 write almost every week," says Smith. "The biggest problem is to hold down the number of writers."

The letters — 90 percent of them handwritten — start off with an account of the weather and usually include a report on where religious services were held. The Old Order Amish worship at home.

Some correspondents get free subscriptions. Others get stamped envelopes for mailing their next report. None is paid.

One correspondent in Santa Ana, El Salvador, sent the following report about the civil strife that recently exploded there:

"It really doesn't seem dangerous in our area these days. Except for the corpse of one man that was found encased in two bags by the roadside about two miles from our house, we haven't heard of any violence near here for over a week.

"There are soldiers and police stationed at three places between our house and the border. One has to drive within feet of their rifles and machine guns. Sometimes they are actually peering through their sights at the passing traffic!"

But, she concluded, "we do hope and pray for improvement in the political situation."

The domestic reports tend to be more tame. Katherine Byler of Mesopotamia, Ohio, says she gets her information from talking with people. She avoids anything controversial.

"Sometimes it's better to write nothing at all rather than get someone peeved," says Mrs. Byler.

One feature that has generated controversy, however, is a column called Our Suffering Bretheren, written by the Iron Curtain Ministries. Sprankle says an article about religious persecution in Communist countries generated many letters to the editor.

But there's no desire for The Budget to change in any way. Its only concession to contemporary life was its switch to computerized type-setting.

"I certainly don't want it to change," Sprankle says. "We want to be different."

Miracles do happen

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Debbie Wenzel accidentally put three of her 14-carat gold necklaces, two with diamond pendants, and a 14-carat white gold diamond ring in the garbage.

Worse still, the items were wrapped in a facial tissue. How many of those are in a truckload of trash?

Even so, John Greene, who works for Waste Management of Milwaukee, managed to find the baubles and return them.

Ms. Wenzel said she had wrapped up the jewelry and put it in an ashtray. On Tuesday, she said, she realized she had thrown it away.

Greene said garbage truck dispatchers called him Wednesday to watch for the truck believed to be carrying Ms. Wenzel's garbage — and her jewelry. The truck dumped its load, and he and Ms. Wenzel looked through it without success.

But Greene resumed his search Thursday morning and called Ms. Wenzel to ask her what color the facial tissue was.

"Green, I think," she answered.

"About half an hour later, he called and told me he found my necklaces," she said.

What are jumping discs?

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Salt Lake County Commission voted to spend $990 to buy 10,000 jumping discs.

But after the vote Wednesday, Commissioner Bart Barker had a question: "What are they?"

Purchasing agent Parker Robison explained the discs are about the size of a quarter, only thinner. Put them on a flat surface and in a few seconds they "jump," he said.

"What happens if they're in your pocket?" Barker asked.

They don't jump in your pocket, Robison explained. They only jump when pressed onto a surface, because they are slightly curved.

Robison said the discs are inscribed with "Salt Lake, Someplace Special," and are used by the county's Development and Promotion Department to promote tourism.

Barker said, "I really wondered...if I should ask what they were and embarrass myself."

Tall City places 8 on district team

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

ODESSA — Eight Tall City players gained nine berths on the 1981 5-5A All-District football team here recently with votes coming from the eight league coaches and four sports writers representing Odessa, Midland, Abilene and San Angelo.

Midland Lee's star fullback and defensive end Calvin Riggs paced the Midland list by earning berths on both the offensive and defensive teams for the second year in a row. He was the only player who was a two-way selection last year to repeat. Riggs rushed for 785 yards to rank fourth in the league and was a defensive standout at end.

However, Odessa Permian's Dale Carr became the star of stars on the 1981 team as the fullback-linebacker of the district champion Panthers was named as both the most valuable player on both offense and defense. Carr, who rushed for 890 yards this year to rank third, was a unanimous choice for both MVP honors and a unanimous choice at running back and linebacker.

THE ONLY other two-way selection was San Angelo lineman Mark Bates. The only other repeaters from last year's All-District team were Odessa High defensive lineman George Acosta, who was only one vote shy of unanimous, and Abilene Cooper linebacker Mike Stills.

In all, Lee earned six All-District berths while the Midland High Bulldogs earned three. The champion Panthers, who had seven first team selections, was the only team to land more All-District choices than the second place Rebels.

Lee wide receiver Kenneth Brown was the only Tall City choice who was a unanimous pick. Brown caught 16 passes for 284 yards and two touchdowns and ranked second in that department.

Two other local athletes were near unamious choices. Midland High's giant 6-foot-8 tight end Wally Kleine and Lee safety Chris Parker were each one vote short of being unanimous selections. Kleine caught 16 passes for 236 yards and three touchdowns while Parker led the league in interceptions with seven.

MIDLAND HIGH'S Wesley Williams, who led the league in rushing with 1,077 yards, joined Carr, Riggs and Abilene Cooper sophomore Allen Gunter as the running back selections. Only Carr had more votes than Williams, who was two short of being unanimous.

Lee center Van Gravitt won a berth on the offensive team with a majority vote. Other offensive selections were Permian guard Rusty Ray, Cooper tackle Dennis Bryson, Permian tackle Richard Spoon, Cooper wide receiver John Williams and San Angelo quarterback Mike Flores. Permian's Bobby Knott, whose 37-yard field goal with 13 seconds left kept Lee out of the playoffs, was named as both the punter and place kicker.

Lee linebacker Terry Thompson and Midland High defensive lineman Joe Goebel were the other defensive picks involving Midland teams. Thompson and Riggs were the heart of the stout Lee defense and Goebel made the team despite missing the last three games of the season with a shoulder injury that required surgery. Still, only Acosta had more votes than Goebel.

Other first team defensive choices were Cooper lineman Rodney Jones, Abilene High end Todd Boring, Abilene High linebacker Scott Hamilton and the secondary picks of Permian's Eddy Bizzell, Cooper's Robert Wagstaff and Abilene High's Shane Gravens.

PERMIAN'S John Wilkins was named as Coach of the Year for the second time in a row without a formal vote.

Lee also had three offensive and three defensive honorable mention choices while MHS had three defensive picks on the honorable mention list.

Lee's tackle Alan Kyle, quarterback Bart Ryan and wide receiver Kevin Sparks were offensive honorable mention choices while lineman Tim Murray, linebacker Kenneth Hardison and safety Kenneth Brown were the HM defensive selections.

Midland High's lineman James Day, linebacker Greg Spencer and safety Brandt Moffatt were defensive choices on the honorable mention squad.

Bulldogs, Rebels to host Tall City cage tournament

The Midland High Bulldogs will play the role of defending champions Friday and Saturday at Chaparral Center when they join the Midland Lee Rebels in hosting the annual Tall City Invitational basketball tournament.

The attractive eight-team field will kickoff action at 4 p.m. Friday and the finals are slated for 9 p.m. Saturday. In between will be marathon action.

Tickets may be purchased at the door for the entire tournament or on a per game basis. Tournament tickets, which will cover all games, will sell for $5 for adults and $3 for students. Tickets for individual games will be $2 for adults and $1 for students.

The Bulldogs will meet El Paso Parkland at 7:30 p.m. Friday in first round action while the Rebels will take on Amarillo Palo Duro at 9 p.m. to close out the first round. El Paso Burgess will test Big Spring at 4 p.m. Friday to kickoff the action and will be followed by the El Paso Bel Air-Odessa Ector matchup.

Losers of first round games will move to the consolation bracket Saturday morning while winners will move to the championship bracket Saturday afternoon.

The loser of the Lee-Palo Duro matchup will play the loser of the Burgess-Big Spring game at 10 a.m. Saturday and the two winners will meet at 2:30 p.m. Saturday.

The loser of the Bel Air-Ector game will meet the loser of the MHS-Parkland game at 11:30 a.m. Saturday and the winners will square off at 1 p.m. in the championship bracket.

The seventh place game will be at 4 p.m. Saturday followed by the consolation championship matchup at 6 p.m., the third place game at 7:30 p.m. and the championship game at 9 p.m.

Before the tournament, however, MHS will meet Ector Tuesday at Chaparral Center and Lee will travel to Lubbock Dunbar on Monday prior to the tournament. So it is possible that MHS could face Ector three times in the space of a week.

MHS, 33-5 last year, while winning district and bi-district titles, won the Tall City event last year with a finals victory over El Paso Irvin. Irvin will not be in this year's tournament, so a new finals matchup is insured.

Angelo St. wins

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Fullback Fred Breitbarth bulled for three second-half touchdowns and tailback Norris Morgan ran for 104 yards and another TD Saturday to lead Angelo State to a 44-32 Lone Star Conference football win over East Texas State, the season finale for each team.

Huskers rip Sooners for Orange haul

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Quarterback Mark Mauer threw for 148 yards and one touchdown and I-back Roger Craig rushed for 102 yards as No. 5 Nebraska crushed Big Eight rival Oklahoma 37-14 Saturday, finishing the regular season with a perfect conference record and an Orange Bowl trip.

Craig eclipsed the 1,000-yard mark for the season on a 19-yard first-quarter touchdown that put Nebraska in the lead to stay. Alternate I-back Mike Rozier had 105 yards rushing. The two Cornhusker backs between them amassed a total of more than 2,000 yards for the season.

By beating Oklahoma, 5-4-1, the Cornhuskers, 9-2, ended a winless streak at Owen Field that began in 1971. This game also was the first time since 1969 that the conference title wasn't on the line when the two teams met.

Nebraska, which lost to Iowa and Penn State early in the season, started slowly Saturday by giving the unranked Sooners an easy touchdown on Oklahoma's first drive. However, Oklahoma turnovers and a strong Nebraska defense quickly turned the tide.

A&M's Jackson sinks TCU Frogs

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M rode Earnest Jackson's three touchdowns and 219 yards rushing to a 37-7 Southwest Conference verdict over Texas Christian Saturday and appeared headed for an Independence Bowl date with Oklahoma State.

Red-coated officials from the Shreveport, La. bowl game were on hand to extend the invitation and the embattled Aggies reportedly were eager to accept the Dec. 12 challenge.

The Cadets, 6-4 and hiking their SWC record to 4-3, close the regular season with the traditional Thanksgiving Day bloodletting against Cotton Bowl-bound Texas.

Turnovers and penalties contributed to 20 of A&M's 37 points, while Jackson was ripping off touchdown gallops of 10, 5 and 80 yards.

It was the most decisive loss of a turbulent Texas Christian season that ended with coach F.A. Dry's job secure despite a 2-7-2 record.

Ironically, Aggie coach Tom Wilson was said to be in hot water with A&M officialdom. A decision on his fate was expected in early December.

TCU played its final 1981 game before an Aggie-flavored crowd of 29,483 and without widely respected, currently crippled passing combo of Steve Stamp and Stanley Washington.

The Aggies, scoring in every quarter, got field goals of 27, 31 and 37 yards from David Hardy and wrapped up the victory with Ron Watkins' 12-yard scoring run with 21 seconds remaining.

Marcus Gilbert scored TCU's lone TD from the 1 in the third period.

The Aggies converted two fumble recoveries into 10 points and mounted a 13-0 halftime lead on Hardy's first two field goals and Jackson's 10-yard scoring burst.

Cornerback Dan Davis pounced on a Kevin Haney fumble at the TCU 17 and Hardy booted a 27-yarder to open the scoring with 4:16 gone. In the second period, Aggie tackle Fred Caldwell seized a bobble from alternate Frog quarterback Eddie Clark at the TCU 14 and Jackson, from the 10, sailed across the goal two plays later.

With 36 seconds left in the half, Hardy capped a 66-yard drive with his 31-yard effort and the Aggie supporters spent the intermission checking on the Oklahoma State-Iowa State score.

Oklahoma State won it, 27-7, and reportedly was poised to accept the Independence Bowl date at that time.

The Frogs had their chances, but Greg Porter misfired twice on first-half field goal shots of 48 and 27 yards and a third-quarter Clark pass was picked off by Aggie linebacker Bobby Strogen in the end zone.

Seconds later, Jackson streaked 55 yards to propel A&M on an 80-yard scoring march that required but five plays.

TCU quarterback Reuben Jones, substituting for the injured Stamp, guided the Frogs 53 yards for their lone score.

Huskies earn Roses

SEATTLE (AP) — Washington's Huskies, with quarterback Steve Pelluer passing for one touchdown and tailback Ron Jackson running for another, earned their second straight Rose Bowl trip Saturday with a 23-10 victory over error-plagued Washington State, who is headed for the Holiday Bowl against BYU.

Chuck Nelson booted three field goals and Washington came up with six Cougar turnovers, four of them by quarterback Ricky Turner. Washington linebacker Ken Driscoll recovered a Turner fumble and intercepted a Turner pass.

Ole Miss stuns 'Dogs, 21-17

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Quarterback John Fourcade kept one yard for a touchdown with two seconds left Saturday to earn Mississippi a 21-17 football upset of arch-rival Mississippi State only moments after it had appeared the bowl-bound Bulldogs had rescued a victory.

Dana Moore kicked a 27-yard field goal with 30 seconds left for a 17-14 Mississippi State lead but the Rebels fought back on a deperation 60-yard drive.

A&I upsets Bobcats

SAN MARCOS, Texas (AP) — Mark James threw two touchdown bombs to Steve Fuller and dived for a third score Saturday to launch Texas A&I to a 21-14 Lone Star Conference upset win over nationally ranked Southwest Texas State.

Ohio State TD knocks Michigan from Roses

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Ohio State quarterback Art Schlichter swept 6 yards for his second touchdown with 2:50 remaining in the game, giving the Buckeyes to a 14-9 Big Ten Conference football victory over Michigan Saturday.

The triumph guaranteed the Buckeyes at least a share of the Big Ten championship with a 6-2 conference record and dropped Michigan to 6-3 in the Big Ten. Both teams finished the regular season with 8-3 overall records. The loss ended Michigan's chance to return to the Rose Bowl.

Schlichter, a 6-foot-3, 208-pound senior who has started every game during his four years at Ohio State, plunged 1 yard for a touchdown in the second quarter, putting the Buckeyes ahead 7-3 at the half.

Michigan's Ali Haji-Sheikh, who kicked a 19-yard field goal in the first quarter, connected on attempts of 26 and 23 yards in the third quarter, putting he Wolverines back on top 9-7.

Michigan had several chances to put the game away, but could not break the Ohio State defense.

On a third-and-goal situation at the Ohio State 8-yard line, Michigan quarterback Steve Smith tried to drill a pass to tight end Craig Dunaway, but it was tipped by Buckeyes' defensive back Shaun Gayle and intercepted by Kelvin Bell.

The ball was brought to the Ohio State 20 and Schlichter marched the Buckeyes down the field for the winning touchdown in 13 plays.

Hawkeyes end 23-year wait

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — Phil Blatcher rushed for a career-high 247 yards and scored two touchdowns as 19th-rated Iowa defeated Michigan State 36-7 in Big Ten Conference football Saturday to earn its first trip to the Rose Bowl in 23 years.

The Iowa victory, coupled with Ohio State's 14-9 decision over Michigan, made the Hawkeyes and Buckeyes co-champion of the Big Ten.

Iowa, which had endured 19 straight non-winning seasons prior to this year, becomes the Big Ten's representative in the Rose Bowl New Year's Day because Ohio State has been there more recently, going two years ago.

Syracuse upsets W. Virginia, 27-24

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Gary Anderson kicked two fourth-quarter field goals and Joe Morris rushed for 168 yards and two touchdowns in the last game of his record-spangled career Saturday as Syracuse upset bowl-bound West Virginia 27-24 in college football.

Morris bagged 3 yards for one touchdown and circled left end 30 yards for another to give the Orangemen the lead after a 17-7 intermission deficit.

Anderson's kicks were from 23 and 44 yards out — the last with just 4:13 to play. It broke a 24-24 tie that resulted from West Virginia quarterback Oliver Luck's 8-yard pass to Wayne Brown.

Hobbs rips Eldorado

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — Awesome Hobbs, behind its relentless trio of Timmy Smith, Manny Marquez and Ruben Berry, crushed defending champion Albuquerque Eldorado 51-27 Saturday in the Class AAAA high school football playoffs.

Smith, the most productive and explosive running back in New Mexico, slashed and sped his way through Eldorado's defense for 129 yards and two touchdowns. The senior standout went over the 2,000 yard mark in yards gained this season and ran his touchdown total to 29 for the year.

The victory will send the Eagles against unbeaten Gallup in the semifinals. Gallup, which edged Albuquerque Sandia 10-7 Friday night, won the coin flip with Hobbs and will play at home next Friday.

When Eldorado's defense started keying on Smith, Berry and Marquez took over.

Berry scored on runs of 6 and 4 yards while Marquez, a junior, calmly riddled Eldorado's secondary for 129 yards through the air, including a 40-yard touchdown pass to Tony Alexander. Marquez also capped off the Hobbs assault with a 27-yard scoring run.

Hobbs, now 10-2 for the season, finished with 391 total yards. Ironically, Eldorado stayed close on the statistics, finishing with 311 yards.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING
Notice is hereby given that a public hearing will be held on December 1, 1981, at 10:00 a.m. in the Council Chamber, 300 N. Loraine Street, Midland, Texas, to consider the declaration of one or more eligible blighted areas in the City pursuant to Section 1, Chapter 107, Acts of the 66th Legislature, Regular Session 1979 (Article 1011 d, Vernon's Texas Civil Statutes) on the following areas:
Tract 1:
Comprising all of Census Tract 14, an area bounded on the north by U.S. Highway 80 between Cotton Flat Road and Ft. Worth Street; on the west by Cotton Flat Road; on the south by Interstate Highway 20; and on the east, in irregular fashion as follows: south along Ft. Worth Street from U.S. Highway 80, eastward along Hicks to Terrell, south along Terrell to Gist Avenue, eastward along Gist to Lamesa Road, southward along Lamesa to Interstate Highway 20.
Tract 2:
Comprising all of Census Tract 10, an area bounded on the east by "C" Street; on the south by U.S. Highway 80;
on the east by "B" Street; and on the north by the alley between Indiana and College.
Tract 3:
Comprising all of Census Tract 9, an area bounded on the west by Carrizo Street to Missouri Avenue, west from Missouri to "A" Street, south to Indiana Avenue; on the south by Indiana Avenue; on the east by Front Street (U.S. Highway 80); and on the north, in irregular fashion: west along Texas Avenue to Weatherford, northward to Illinois Avenue, westward on Illinois Avenue to Main Street, northward on Main Street to Loraine Street, westward on Loraine Street to Big Spring Street, northward on Big Spring to Tennessee Avenue, westward on Tennessee Avenue to Marienfeld Street, south along Marienfeld to Texas Avenue, west along Texas to Carrizo Street.
The above and foregoing tracts are more fully outlined in Exhibit "A" of Resolution No. 81-447 on file in the Office of the City Secretary.
The reasons for the designation by the City of the eligible blighted areas, the description of the overall objectives of the City for redevelopment and recovery of the eligible blighted areas, a description of the type of projects for commercial uses desired, are as follows:
It is the City's objective to promote commercial and residential development and redevelopment in area of distress and blight. Consistent with that purpose, the City of Midland hereby designates Census Tracts 9, 14, and a portion of 10 as the study area in support of the proposed development of this project. (See Attached Exhibit A.) The specifically designated blighted area is limited to Census Tract 14 and a portion of 10, and supporting data for such designation is presented below. Census Tract 9, the location of the project, is included as part of the total area being addressed by the City, but is not considered part of the blighted area. It is the City's belief that significant improvements and further development in Census Tract 9 will result in an overall improvement to adjacent areas, principally the designated blighted areas of Census Tracts 14 and 10. For this reason, justification for the designation of the study area will include actions the City has taken - and is taking - in Census Tract 9, recognizing its role in bringing about desired changes to the study area as a whole.
In order to futher define what characteristics present in the study area contribute to a condition of blight, the following information is provided and briefly analyzed below.

CHARACTERISTICS OF BLIGHT*
CITY-WIDE VS. STUDY AREA

Blight Indicators	City	Census Tracts 9 and 14
Total Households	23,434	1,134
Average Household Income	$30,755		$19,162
% Lower Income Households	25.95		50
% No Occupation	5.16	24.77
% Qualify Some Federal Program	12.63		15.96
% Poverty	1.52	3.6
% Owners	63.84	39.5

*Source: R.L. Polk & Company, Midland, Texas 1979-80, "Dynamics of Occupations and Income".
A review of Table 1 indicates the level of distress present in Census Tracts 9 and 14, in comparison to the entire City. Household income is lower; twice as many households are lower income; fives times as many households have no regular occupation; 15% of Census Tract's 9 and 14 households qualify for some federal program; three times as many are considered to be in a poverty situation; 39.5% are home owners in Census Tracts 9 and 14 vs. 64% City-wide; over 12% of homes were vacant in Tracts 9 and 14, vs. 5% City-wide.
One additional negative characteristic the City hopes to address as a part of its attention to this area is the high incidence of tax delinquent properties south of U.S. 80 between Marienfeld and Terrell - 7% of the sample indicated on Map 1.
It is the judgement of the City that development of this project would induce more stabilized commercial and residential development in the blighted area.
Land use characteristics in Census Tract 14, located on the south of U.S. Highway 80, are extremely mixed. Well-maintained business and residential uses exist adjacent to extremely dilapidated structures in several locations. A number of vacant warehouses, are present within the area, as well as numerous dilapidated metal warehouses. Vacant, unkempt properties are located throughout the area.
Residential development is in very poor physical condition along portions of Washington, New York, and Pennsylvania east of Big Spring. A significant portion of the streets in Census Tract 14 are in an unpaved, potholed, and/or dusty condition.
Earlier zoning patterns and the resulting land uses may have encouraged the blighted conditions of the general area. Zoning districts have now been stabilized, with the existing zoning districts within and adjacent to the CBD being generally of an office, commercial or light industrial nature, and with residential zoning beginning at the periphery. Through recent zoning changes approved in and around the area, the City has attempted to delineate those portions of the area which are appropriate to commercial development and redevelopment, and those areas which are more appropriately maintained as residential districts.
The existing C-3, Commercial District, and LI, Light Industrial District (See Map 2) allow for a broad range of business uses. The nature of new development presently taking place in this general area includes office type redevelopment, technological-adjunct services for the oil industry, and warehousing activities in support of downtown businesses. The City feels that these are appropriate land use development activities for this area. Significantly more intensive land uses, such as uses requiring heavy industrial zoning classification, would be detrimental to the redevelopment of this area and out of character and scale with surrounding uses. Where a conflict clearly would occur in conjunction with existing development, such intensive land use would be discouraged as being incompatible with the City's effort to arrest existing blight.
The best potential for improvements to the blighted portions of Census Tract 14 lies in futher development of the southwest portion of the downtown office complex in Census Tract 9, the area of this proposed project. The southwest part of the downtown area has significantly lagged behind the general growth of Midland's downtown office complex, the orientation of which has been predominantly to the north and northwest. An objective of the proposed project is to stabilize office development in the southwest portion of the Central Business District and encourage further development in this area. It is felt that if the City is successful in achieving this objective of stabilizing office development and encouraging new development in the southwest part of the CBD, the City will also achieve its objective for improvements to the downtown commercial fringe area of Census Tract 14 described above.
As a benefit of stabilizing and/or upgrading the existing and future land uses in Census Tract 14, a stabilizing benefit will be transferred to the residential development in the periphery of the area, which has been recognized as having future potential to remain in residential use. A portion of that residential area, presently blighted, may well eventually transition to a commercial use. However, there are certain residential areas which may prove redevelopable when a higher quality of commercial redevelopment takes place within the blighted area. These newly available residential areas, in close proximity to downtown employment opportunities would serve a very useful and reasonably priced alternative to more distant housing.
The City of Midland recognizes the challenge to provide the impetus for development and redevelopment of this general area. It has taken significant steps in responding to this challenge, one of which is the proposal for development of the project. Other important elements in the City's strategy to improve the atmosphere for investment in and around Census Tract 9, 10, and 14 include the following:
In Census Tract 9:
.one-way street pairing to more than double CBD surface traffic volume capacity. Action to begin February 1982, funded from the general revenue fund;
.new traffic signalization system (six new signals) to improve traffic flow through, into, and out of the Central Business District. Improvements underway now to be funded from the general revenue fund;
.the City is adding 400 parking meters to help the critical parking situation in downtown. Improvements underway, to be funded from the general revenue fund.
In Census Tract 14:
.throught the subdivision platting process, the City continues to acquire right-of-way for future improvements and upgrading to Industrial Boulevard;
.the City sought and received approval in its 1980 Community Development Block Grant for paving portions of Belmont, Loraine, Ft. Worth, Rhode Island, Colorado, Montgomery, and McKenzie Streets;
.the City is initiating a street assessment paving program at this time which includes the following streets within Tract 14: portions of West Washington, E. California, W. New Jersey, S. Ft. Worth, E. Pennsylvania, W. California, and E. New York. Costs are shred by the adjoining property owners and the City;
.the City is in the process of intensifying its code enforcement effort in this area; to be funded from the general revenue fund.
Area Wide:
.the City is conducting a system-wide sewer analysis to determine where, in this oldest area of Midland, aging sewer lines require replacement. This study will be completed in early Spring and is being funded from the general revenue fund.

*The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 12.5% for 90% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at the most recent six-month Treasury Bill rate plus 3.5% rounded to the highest 1/8 of 1%, but not to exceed the maximum rate allowed by law. Payments on GPAM mortgages are graduated so as to increase 7.50% each year for the remaining four years. At the end of the first five year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 3.5. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan.
ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 13.25% ON 90% LOANS.

*Variable Rate Mortage Interest rates may increase or decrease. Payments may change in 5 years

Exercising for two

By NANCY LOKD
Lifestyle Writer

The rhythmic music begins. The instructor calls "Stretch left, two, three, four. Right, two, three, four." And the women in the room follow her lead.

It's an exercise class, just like any number of exercise classes in Midland, with one distinct difference. Most of the students in this class are exercising for two. They are pregnant.

According to Penny Sawyer, who teaches maternity exercise classes at Midland Fitness Center, it is important for expectant mothers to stay in shape throughout their pregnancy.

"Ideally, you're in top physical shape when you become pregnant," she explains. Unfortunately, she says, many women don't think about physical fitness until after they get pregnant. But don't despair, "It's not too late (to begin an exercise program) until the day of delivery," Mrs. Sawyer notes.

Her classes are geared to muscle and body toning, not to weight reduction. Special emphasis is placed on three of the muscle areas with which pregnant women are most likely to have problems — the abdomen, the lower back and the perineal floor.

She notes that recovery of these areas is not automatic. "Exercise before delivery will facilitate faster recovery," she explains.

Although none of the exercises are strenuous, Mrs. Sawyer says that they do give the participants a workout.

Mrs. Sawyer, who is also a physical therapist and teaches Lamaze childbirth classes, has been teaching maternity exercise classes for two years. She says she decided to design a maternity exercise program when she was pregnant with the last of her three children, and wasn't able to jog in the last six weeks of her pregnancy, but wanted to continue exercising.

She put together a set of exercises and took them around to several obstetricians here, who approved them with a few modifications.

There are no aerobic exercises included in the classes at all. "The verdict is still out as to whether aerobics are good for pregnant women," Mrs. Sawyer explains.

Mrs. Sawyer suggests that women enroll in the class as soon as they find out they are pregnant. She says it is also a good idea for a woman to check with her doctor before beginning any exercise program.

The class is not limited to expectant mothers, but is also open to "the underfit and the overfat. We call it a fit-for-all class," Mrs. Sawyer notes. The program is also good for those who are not physically able to do strenuous exercises.

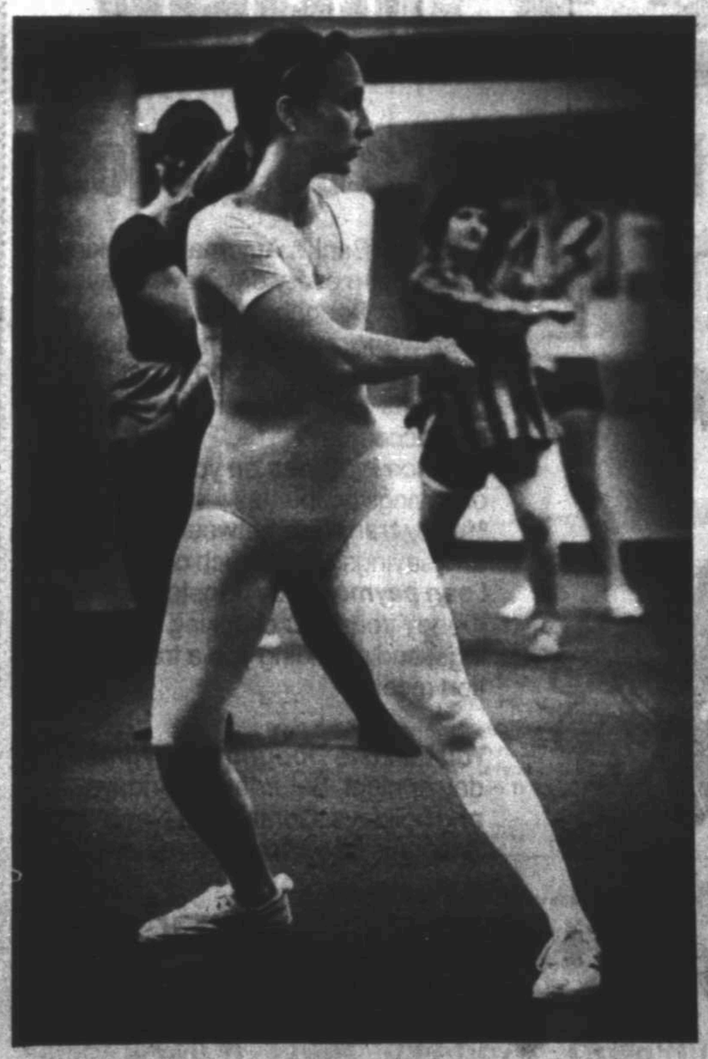

Mrs. Sawyer also teaches post-partum exercise and regular aerobic classes.

Martha Rice models the latest in maternity exercise clothing — leotard, tights and a special t-shirt.

Leading the class in exercises is Penny Sawyer. Mrs. Sawyer decided to develop a maternity exercise program when she was pregnant with her last child.

Struggle for vote dramatized

Uptown Business & Professional Women's Club members Diane Newland, Jan Foust and Kathy Atkin performed a dramatization of significant women in history before members at a recent club meeting.

The presentation focused that former struggle of over 100 years ago. "Equality is the core of our democracy, yet we often hear that women were 'given' the vote in 1920 when, in fact, they fought for that right for over 70 years," said Ms. Newland. "It reminds us of the current one: Similar opposition, similar forces against women's rights."

Uptown B&PW Club also presented $1,290 to the Texas Ruth Fox Legislative Fund, established at state level to assist with the ratification of neighboring states of Texas and give financial support for the last "52-week campaign for Equal Rights Amendment (ERA)."

"As the ERA countdown continues, it emphasizes B&PW's goal to achieve specific gains for women under the law," said Ms. Newland. "ERA has been the cornerstone of the National Business & Professional Women's Federation since 1937. Other action items in the national legislative platform actively supported by the Texas Federation include reform of Social Security laws; research on and prevention of all types of family violence; violence against women; and provision of services to victims of such violence."

Areas of concern that will continue to be monitored by the club are opportunity for women in all phases of education; individual development; and career advancement.

Following are portions of the program presented of a capsule history of that struggle of over 100 years ago—from personal awakenings to the political arena through the actual words of some of its more passionate participants:

1837—FROM THE PASTORAL LETTERS OF THE CONGREGATIONALIST CLERGY

We are compelled to remind certain elements that the appropriate duties and influence of woman are clearly stated in the New Testament.

Now those duties and that influence are unobtrusive and private, but are the source of mighty power.

For the power of woman is in her dependence, flowing from a consciousness of that weakness which God has given her for her protection.

We cannot, therefore, regret the mistaken conduct of those who would encourage females to take an ostentatious part in measures of reform.

1837—QUAKER SARAH GRIMKE:

Dear gentlemen of the clergy: I must respond to your pastoral letters.

You tell us that the power of woman is in her dependence flowing from that weakness which God has given her.

If physical weakness is alluded to, I cheerfully concede the superiority, if brute force is what my brethren are claiming, I am willing to let them have all the honor they desire.

But if they mean to intimate that mental or moral weakness belongs to woman more than man—well, I heartily disclaim the charge.

You say her influence, silent and unobtrusive, is the source of mighty power. Well, this has ever been the flattering language of man since he laid aside the whip.

Alas, woman has too well learned the lesson. She has surrendered her dearest rights and been satisfied with the privileges which man has assumed to grant her. She has been bemused by a show of power, but he has absorbed the reality into himself.

Well, I ask no favors for my sex. I surrender not our claim to equality. All I ask of our brethren is that they will take their feet off our necks and permit us to stand upright on that ground whih God desires us to occupy.

If he has not given us the rights, which have, as I concede, been wrested from us, well we shall soon give evidence of our inferiority and shrink back into that obscurity which man has assigned us as our appropriate sphere.

1848—SUSAN B. ANTHONY

Gathered here in Seneca Falls, N.Y., in this year of 1848, we women wish to set forth a declaration of sentiments.

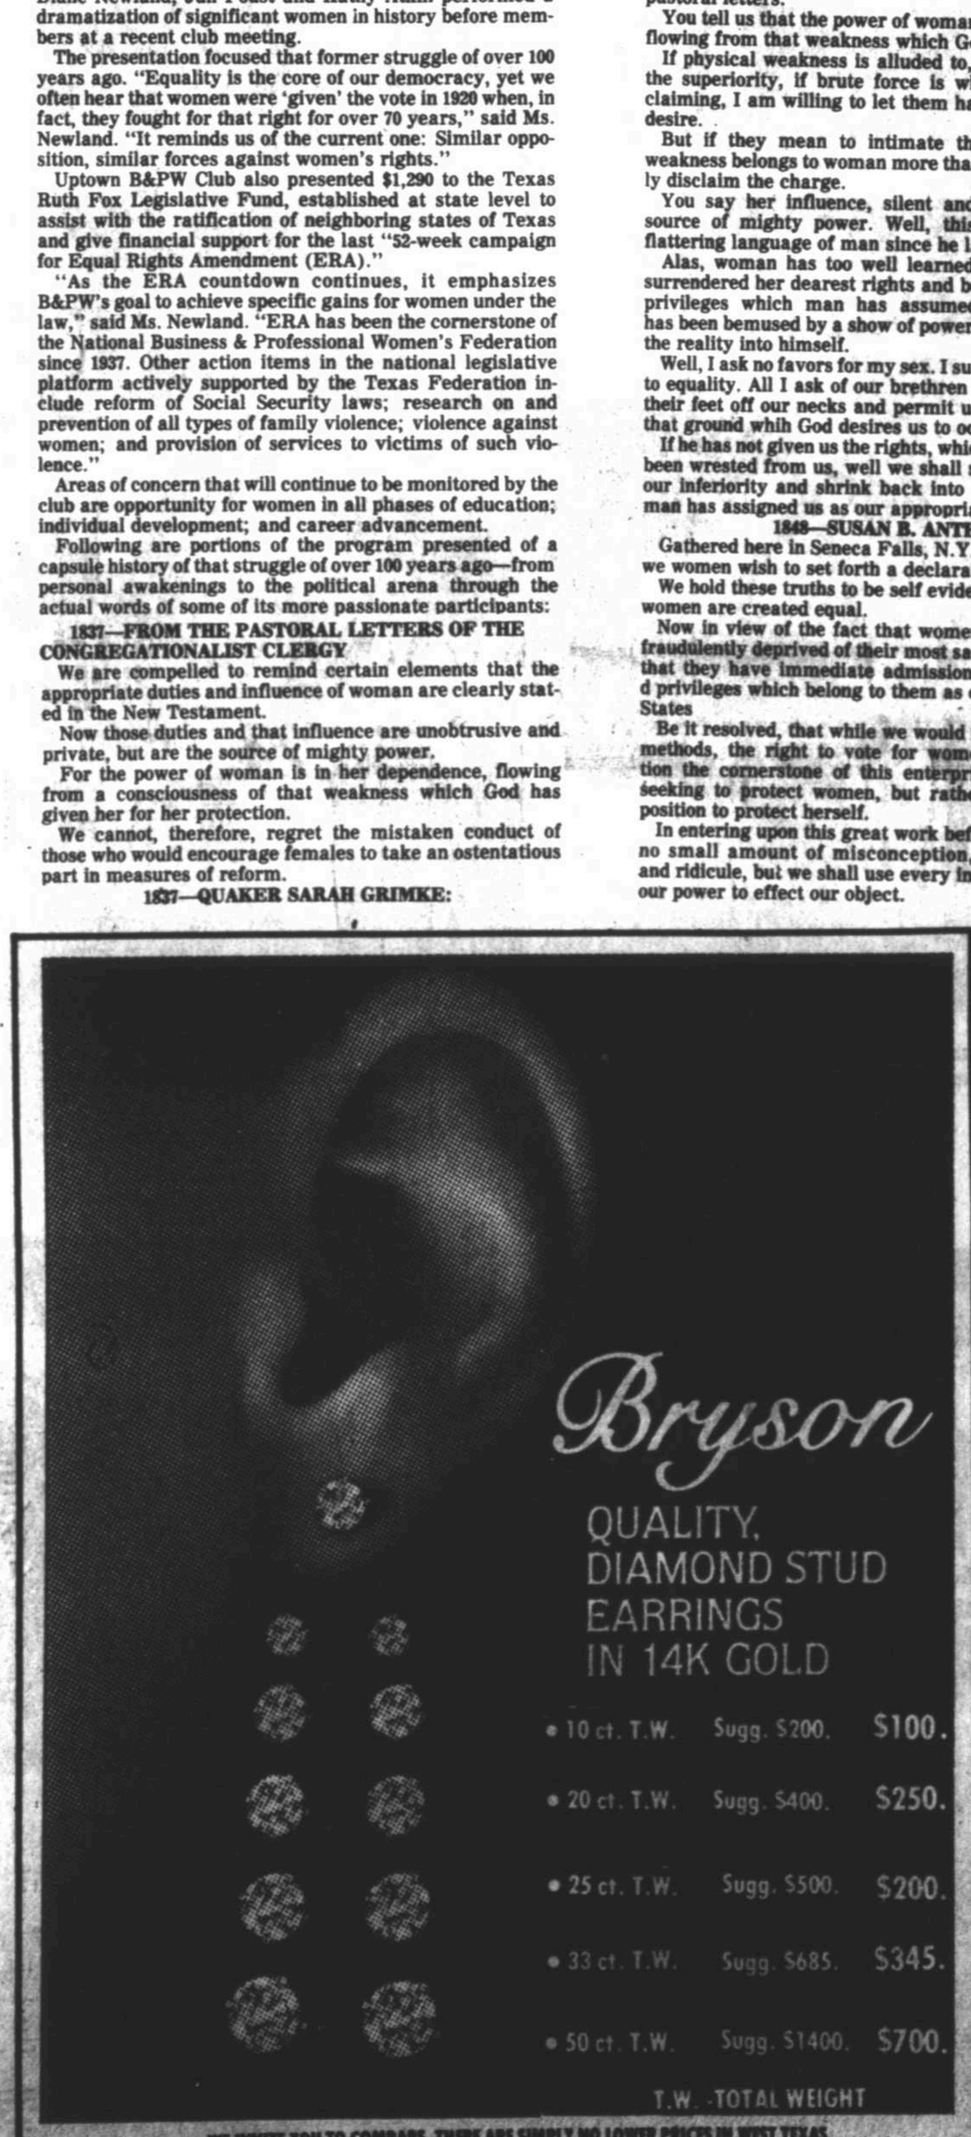

We hold these truths to be self evident—that all men and women are created equal.

Now in view of the fact that women do feel themselves fraudulently deprived of their most sacred rights, we insist that they have immediate admission to all the rights an d privileges which belong to them as citizens of the United States

Be it resolved, that while we would not undervalue other methods, the right to vote for women is in our estimation the cornerstone of this enterprise. For we are not seeking to protect women, but rather to place her in a position to protect herself.

In entering upon this great work before us, we anticipate no small amount of misconception, misrepresentation and ridicule, but we shall use every instrumentality within our power to effect our object.

Frances Gabe, 67, stands in the yard of her Newberg, Oreg., home with plans for a "self-cleaning" house she is building. In front of her are models of a type of window to be used in the new residence.

Oregon woman invents self-cleaning house

By CHARLES HILLINGER
(c) 1981, Los Angeles Times

NEWBERG, ORE. — Frances Gabe, 67, has invented what she believes is the ultimate in women's liberation — a self-cleaning house.

"For God's sake, why should women waste half their lives cleaning the house? It's damn foolishness," insists the lifelong inventor.

She has applied fo4 68 patents on devices in her self-cleaning house, which she is in the process of building on her 7 1-2 acres.

"All a woman has to do in the self-cleaning house is push a series of buttons and zowie — the work is done," Gabe explains.

Floors, walls, ceilings, furniture, doors and windows are sprayed with soap and water and washed clean.

In her house, floors are sloped to all four corners to carry away runoff. Blowers do the drying.

Floors, doors, walls and ceilings are coated with resin finish. Furniture is made o a composition invented by the "Self-CleaningWoman."

"No carpets in this house. Carpets are dust collectors. I hate them," Gabe says.

She has a new wrinkle for washing dishes.

"Why waste time loading a dishwasher, then unloading it and putting the dishes in the cupboard?" she asks, then answers:

"Why can't dishes be washed in the cupboard as a time-saver?"

She would stack the dishes used every day in a -ishwasher cupboard.

There are self-cleaning sinks, tub, shower and toilet. A fireplace where ashes are washed down a drain. Self-cleaning pots and pans.

A closet replaces a washing machine. Hang the clothes up, push a button and the clothes are washed and dried while hanging in the closet.

Even the cats and dogs are wash3d and dried by pushing a button.

Gabe expects to finish her self-cleaning house in a year. Currently, she is building the walls of concrete blocks and windows with 7 1-4-inch space for dead air, which she says is the perfect insulator.

"Be careful — you are on a construction site," she warns on entering her yet-to-be-completed self-cleaning house. The house is her workshop, jammed with cement mixer, lathes, bench saws, planes, hammers, wrenches, screwdrivers and nails.

Gabe is doing it all by herself.

Will it really work? Time alone will tell.

"I have been a builder all my life. My father was a builder, so is my ex-husband," she explains.

"I'm trying to take a lot of misery out of life. I want to leave the world a better place," the inventor says.

She s$snds muco o her free time promoting her self-cleaning house up and down the state of Oregon, to colleges, women's organizations and service clubs.

"What's the fun of cleaning house? It just gripes me every time I dust, scrub floors and clean walls," says the "Self-Cleaning Woman."

Tacos behind me, turkey ahead . . . and I'm holding my own.

By Kiki Olson

Kiki Olson is a columnist and feature writer for Cosmopolitan and other leading national publications.

I've just returned from a trip to one of the greatest tasting countries in the world . . . Mexico. Oh those tacos, enchilades and tortillas. I loved every little bite.

But I must admit that if I'd taken that trip P.N.S. (pre-Nutri/System) I would have loved every big bite. And come home at least a few pounds bigger myself.

I've come to look at my whole life in terms of P.N.S. and A.N.S. (after Nutri/System). Because it changed my whole way of thinking about food. And about myself.

One night in Acapulco, I went out for cocktails and dinner with some lovely people I'd met by the side of the hotel pool. When the waiter served our Margaritas (delicious cocktails made with tequila) he also served bowls of a mouth-watering avocado dip and nachos dripping with cheese. I couldn't resist tasting them. But one woman at the table devoured them. And I realized that at one time that would have been me. But I've learned how to enjoy a nibble and a slim figure.

Of course I told that woman about Nutri/System. And as she protested that she "loves to eat" (and who doesn't?), I explained how Nutri/System helps you lose up to a pound a day while enjoying great tasting foods . . . Zucchini Beef Casserole, Supreme Chicken Asparagus Crepe, Swedish Meatballs . . . even a Mexicali Beef Dinner that will make you think you're really in Mexico.

All without constantly counting calories, weighing or measuring foods, or doing strenuous exercise.

(Speaking of strenuous exercise . . . those handsome Mexican men do love to dance. And that's one exercise being slim really does make enjoyable.)

After I unpacked and shook the last of the taco crumbs from my jeans, I opened my mail. There was a letter from a lovely lady in Missouri who has quickly and easily lost 12 pounds with Nutri/System and says, "I haven't been hungry once". She's on her way to losing 25 pounds in all (lots of people have lost as much as 30 pounds in 40 days). And she tells me how much money she's saving on her food bills because she's no longer buying "all the usual junk foods". In fact, she's so happy she wrote this little song (to be sung to the tune of "Reuban, Reuban") . . . "Nutri/System, what a winner: scrumptious breakfast, lunch and dinner. If you've pounds you want to lose. It's the system you should choose!"

Tomorrow I'm going to check into my Nutri/System for a session on the free Maintenance Program. I haven't gained back any weight and I don't want to. The holidays are coming and that means all those fantastic turkey and pumpkin pie feasts. Nutri/System will help me enjoy them without gaining an ounce.

(Just opened another piece of mail and its my credit card bill for the Mexican trip. I wish I could have resisted that gorgeous Mexican silver and those beautiful embroidered dresses as easily as Nutri/System helped me to resist gaining weight.)

Oh well, I'd rather come home with a bill than a bulge.

Keep on writing. I love hearing from you and have no trips planned until after the holidays. Write to: 1420 Walnut Street, Suite 1300, Philadelphia, PA 19102.

The Family Protection Act

By PHYLLIS SCHLAFLY
Copley News Service

The paranoid liberals who see a "moral majority" bogeyman under every bed have discovered a new threat. The most recent target of their hysterical editorials and television interviews is "The Family Protection Act."

An examination of the bill shows that some of what the liberals complain about isn't in the bill at all. Most of the bill is so reasonable that one wonders why the liberals are so agitated. The explanation must be that the FPA has touched the tender nerves which lead to federal control over our lives.

Title I, called "family preservation," starts off by asserting a legal presumption in favor of parental supervision of the religious and moral formation of a child. That is the law now; it needs reaffirmation only because it has been so widely violated.

Three sections of this title prohibit federal funds from being used to litigate in such sensitive family-related areas as abortion, divorce, and homosexual rights. It seems only reasonable that persons advocating these goals should do so at their own expense and not at the taxpayers'.

Another three sections of this title restrict the federal government from preempting or interfering with state statutes on child abuse, spouse abuse, or juvenile delinquency. Those should be areas of state, not federal, jurisdiction. The diversity of state approaches promises better solutions than putting all our hopes in the federal basket.

Title II has a variety of tax provisions that encourage families to provide for their own family members with their own resources. It provides tax incentives to save for a child's education, to care for a dependent relative age 65 or older, to establish a trust account for an aged or handicapped relative, and to establish a retirement savings account for a dependent-spouse. Married couples filing jointly would be granted an additional $1,000 exemption in the year in which a child is born or adopted, and $3,000 if the child is handicapped.

Title III on education should be one of the most popular sections. It prohibits the Legal Services Corp. funds from being used to litigate in favor of forced busing solely for the attainment of racial quotas.

Another section of this title would take the federal money currently spent on education and "block-grant" it to the states. ("Block-grant" is a Reaganomics verb which simply means sending federal money in a "block" to the states to spend as needed.)

Four sections of Title III provide a cause of action for parents if the schools deny parents their rights such as to visit their children's classrooms, to review textbooks prior to their use, and to supervise their children's enrollment in religion courses. It seems elementary that parents should be able to sue to assert such legal rights.

Another section states that, if schools require a course on "parenting" (the new euphemism for classroom sex courses), parents may arrange for their children to be taught by the parents of their church on a released-time basis. That, too, sounds very reasonable; the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment should enable parents to remove their children from classes that offend their religious values.

Title IV on voluntary prayer would simply allow parents to bring a civil action in court if their children are denied the right to participate in religious exercises. That's only fair, since parents who do not want their children to participate in religious exercises have had full sway in the courts for the last 20 years.

Title V would assert the rights of religious institutions by barring the federal government from imposing restrictions on curriculum, religious activities, licensure, and operating procedures. Except for reasonable health and fire regulations, the federal government should not be in the business of supervising church-operated child-care centers, orphanages, foster homes, emergency shelters for abused persons, or schools.

The sponsors of the Family Protection Act should be commended for this effort to get the federal government out of areas where it does not belong and to restore responsibility to the families and to the states.

Psychologist tells how to say 'no'

By MARK ZANGER
Hearst Feature Service

BOSTON — Dr. Lonnie Carton is an optimist whose favorite word is "No."

On her CBS radio series, "In the Learning Center," and in her book, "Raise Your Kids Right," the psychologist and grandmother has built an entire philosophy of human development around seven no's. Now she is taking her advice directly to parents.

Carton admits that her target audience is almost an endangered species. "Motherhood and fatherhood are demeaned today. This is the most difficult time in history for parents."

With a Harris poll predicting that 82 percent of American women will be working by 1990, she says that more children are under the influence of television, peer pressure, drug pushers, and schools. Parents who work, single parents especially, have less time for kids and often feel guilty saying "no."

What will it be like in 10 years? "Children will have to be more responsible," says Carton. "Parents will have to sit down with their kids and say, 'This family can't go on living the way we all want to unless we all work on it.' " Carton wants to mobilize kids to help parents face increasing demands both on the job and at home.

Carton's program of no-ism is based on recognizing, she says, "The second most basic psychological need, the need for structure." Carton has four favorite no's:

THE LIFESAVING NO. This is both physical and academic. "No, you shouldn't quit high school!" or "No, you can't be late all the time."

THE CHARACTER-BUILDING NO. This is the no to instant gratification, the no that negotiates conditions for a long term result. It rewards perseverence, patience and loyalty.

THE CHALLENGE NO. This is a conditional no that invites the child to learn compromise, face obstacles and make decision. Can five kids come over Saturday night for a jam session? No. How about only two kids? No. How about ten for a coke and no music?

THE CONVENIENCE NO. Parents are people, too, and should not be afraid to express their needs. Carton believes that better use of the convenience no could reduce mild child abuse, the explosion of anger when a harassed parent has given in repeatedly on small issues.

There are three no's Carton wants parents to avoid:

I WON'T LISTEN "Time is the new four-letter word," she says. Children must always believe that their parents are willing to listen.

DEAR ABBY

Both fantasy and fact help children grow

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Is there a way my child can enjoy the fun of believing in Santa Clause without being lied to?

It doesn't seem fair to tell a trusting child lies, and yet I hate to deprive him of the pleasure of fantasizing about a make-believe character.

My son is still a wee baby, and I hate lying to him, knowing that one day he'll learn the truth and wonder how many other things I lied about. — DEBBIE

DEAR DEBBIE: Childhood fantasies are not only fun for children, they are useful aids in developing healthy imaginations and creativity. It's better to tell your child from the start that Santa, the Easter Bunny (and don't forget the Tooth Fairy) are all "make-believe" characters. The mistake most parents make is to insist that these imaginary characters actually exist after the child has questioned their authenticity.

DEAR ABBY: Last week my sister-in-law had a garage sale, and right out front was displayed the gift my husband and I had given her last Christmas! It had never been used and was sold for less than half of what we paid for it. (I would have bought it, but someone else got to it first.)

My husband said it was hers to do whatever she pleased with it and I was stupid and oversensitive to give it a second thought.

What do you think? — HURT

DEAR HURT: Your husband is right when he says that the gift was hers to do with whatever she pleased. But he's wrong to label you "stupid and oversensitive" to give it a second thought. Your sister-in-law was the insensitive and stupid one for having offered your gift at a garage sale that you were apt to attend.

DEAR ABBY: Several years ago you gave me a recipe for Southern pecan pie. Every year I bake it for my family around Thanksgiving and Christmastime, and it's always the hit of the dinner.

Recently I made it for my bridge club and every woman there wanted the recipe. I didn't think it would be right to pass it out without your permission. If you say no, I will guard it with my life. — PECAN PIE LOVER

DEAR LOVER: I hope your life is worth more than 1 cup of white corn syrup, 1 cup of dark brown sugar, 1/3 cup of melted butter, 1 heaping cup of shelled pecans, 3 whole eggs (beaten), a dash of vanilla and a pinch of salt.

Mix above ingredients well, pour into an unbaked 9-inch pastry pie shell and bake in a 350-degree oven for 45 to 50 minutes. Cool and top it with whipped cream or ice cream. Even served plain, nothing tops this!

(P.S. I can't understand why anyone would refuse to share a recipe. Sharing enhances the enjoyment.)

DEAR ABBY: I am a 38-year-old married woman. Last Christmas, my best friend, who is a professional woman, gave me an elegant gold charm for my bracelet. It had the word "friend" engraved on it.

My problem is that my husband won't let me wear it. He keeps telling me it is too personal a gift — and I should have returned it immediately. My friend is also married and there has never been anything in the friendship between this woman and me to warrant his objection. I think my husband is just plain jealous.

I know my friend must wonder why I have never worn her gift, although she has never mentioned it. What should I do? — PERPLEXED

DEAR PERPLEXED: You don't need your husband's permission to wear the gold charm. Your husband's attitude raises some questions that need answering. A man rarely looks under the bed unless he has hidden there a time or two himself.

Diet fraud widespread

Hearst Feature Service

BALTIMORE — Every newspaper, magazine and talk show seems filled with easy ways to lose weight, including liquid diets, grapefruit diets, and even alcohol diets.

But when even these "easy" diets don't work, we become desperate. We turn to extremes, like pills, starvation diets . . . and frauds.

Postal inspectors warn that schemes of this nature, frequently conducted through illegal use of the mails, are aimed at the elderly and disadvantaged and cost consumers millions of dollars annually.

Here are some common sense solutions to avoid being taken.

Do not turn to mass-marketed tabloid publications for advice on medical problems. Billions of dollars are raked in annually by "quack" doctors who claim to have cures for everything from dandruff to athlete's foot. Beware of claims that play on people's insecurities, promising to aid in melting away fat, growing hair, and restoring lost sexual potency.

Do not waste money on herbal preparations, diet pills, or liquid nutrients. One man used an herbal eye wash without consulting his doctor, but it stung so much he stopped. He will not get his money back because the Jason Winters Herbal Tea Co., from which he bought the eye wash through the mail, ca[illegible] the postal service is investigating.

ORANGE AND AVOCADO SALAD

Halve and seed avocados; peel; slice and dip in white rice-wine vinegar. Cut peel away from oranges so they are membrane-free; cut out sections so they, too, are membrane-free. Arrange avocado slices and orange sections alternately on a serving plate and garnish with watercress, parsley sprigs or other salad greens. The rice-wine vinegar adds surprisingly satisfactory flavor and, used instead of a salad dressing, cuts down on calories.

CONTINENTAL'S MEXICO.

The Yucatan Has It All. The Wonder of History. The Delights of Nature.

The Cozy Island of Cozumel.

A former First Lady may think she discovered it in the 1960's... but this exquisite tiny island has been delighting visitors for centuries. Even Cortez slept here.

It was once a holy place to which Mayan women were expected to make a pilgrimage at least once. But who could stop after just one visit!

Cozumel is small (33 miles long and 9 miles wide)... but everything an island should be... and its low-key pleasures are bountiful.

Between languorous bouts of loafing on Cozumel's lovely beaches, you'll probably take the Robinson Crusoe cruise to a hidden cove ...and watch the crew dive for your lunch. Chances are you'll snorkel and scuba-dive. A more perfect setting than the crystal-clear waters of Cozumel probably doesn't exist. And it's no fish story that sunken Spanish Galleons are awaiting discovery in its indigo blue to emerald to aquamarine sea.

You'll stroll the town Zocalo... maybe rent a bicycle. You'll play tennis, water ski and go deep-sea fishing. You'll probably rent a VW Safari and scout the tropic brush with its legions of bright green parrots. And if you like seafood ...well, you may never leave Cozumel.

Cancun...The Paradise Where Mayan Kings Once Played...

...is now the ultimate in modern resorts. It was obviously made in heaven. A lazy lagoon on one side (from three to ten feet deep) is nature's gift to water sports...and offers every kind imaginable. On the Caribbean side are beaches of silky white sand, coral reefs, tropical vegetation and crystal-clear waters in a rainbow of blues and greens. You can walk for miles in pristine serenity.

If you want the challenge of the sea, the waves of Chac-Mool Beach will delight you. Caracol and Tortuga Beaches are ideal if you like swimming in placid tranquility. Snorkeling is idyllic...and you'll float past fascinating undersea flora and fauna. Fun excursions: the boat ride to unique Isla Mujeres; a visit to Xel-Ha where brilliantly colored tropical fish glide among rocks and grottos; a drive to Akumal– a palm-fringed haven for underwater explorers.

Cancun hotels run the gamut from the extravagant and lavish to the small and delightful. Its spectacular sand and surf, its sparkling starry nights, its peerless golf and tennis facilities and its unlimited water sports are already a mighty magnet to vacationers the world over.

Cancun

Uxmal

Merida...The Gateway To The Yucatan.

Stately and gracious, Merida is brimming with colonial charm. You'll discover its rich pleasures as you sight-see in an antique horse-drawn carriage past pastel-colored mansions and picturesque parks. The Plaza Maya is the center of social activity with its evening concerts, gentle hubbub, and delightful setting. Don't miss the imposing Montejo Palace...one of the first homes built by the Spaniards in 1549 (and still owned by the original family).
Open-air cafes, informal gardens and fine restaurants add to Merida's special appeal.

Most hotels here have swimming pools ensconced in tropical settings.

Awesome Chichen Itza. Founded by the Itza tribe circa 435 A.D., who erected great temples dedicated to the Plumed Serpent God Kukulkan and other powerful deities.

El Castillo rises to a height of 90 feet and contains a smaller temple with the famed jade-eyed red jaguar. You'll see the Temple of Warriors housing the stone figure of the Mayan Rain God Chac-Mool. You'll see a 200-foot long Ball Court where a type of soccer was played.

Uxmal...The Gem Of The Yucatan. The Pyramid of the Magician soars an imposing 100 feet... and an enormous mask of the Rain God Chac-Mool graces its facade. The corbeled arches of the detailed Nunnery Quadrangle will astound you...and the Governor's Palace is considered by many eminent archaeologists to be the most breathtaking edifice in all pre-Columbian America. Its magnificent facade consists of 20,000 intricately carved stones and includes a fascinating two-headed stone jaguar.
Uxmal alone is worth a trip to Mexico.

Dunns 'Family of Year'

"We want to give them wings and roots," says Mr. and Mrs. Melvin P. Dunn of their 10 children. That's only one of the many reasons why they've been named "Family of the Year."

The couple and their children were awarded at a special presentation Friday sponsored by the Midland Wards of Jesus Christ of the Latter-day Saints. Mayor Thane Akins made the presentation at the chapel located at 2101 Tarleton St.

The contest kicked off National Family Week activities beginning today through Saturday.

The family is composed of Mr. and Mrs. Dunn and their 10 children, including Julie, 18; Mike, 16; Pam, 17; Elicia, 14; Jody, 12; Susie, 12; Danielle, 11; Sam, 4; Shil, 3; and Scott, 2.

They are all active in community and church services, but it's more than this which makes them a unique family unit.

As their children attend 7 different schools, Mr. and Mrs. Dunn are members of four elementary school Parent-Teacher Associations.

They are also both active on advisory councils as parent representatives. Mary is one of three parents on a 15-person Advisory Council for the West Texas and Panhandle Region of the Regional Day School for the Deaf. Melvin serves on a local advisory board for the Regional Day School for the Deaf.

Because of the difficulties they encountered as they attempted to adopt their first child, the Dunn couple says they felt a need to establish a group to help other parents who wanted to adopt children. Therefore, Mary founded the area chapter of the Council on Adoptable Children and currently serves as its president. Melvin is also active in this organization which assists parents who want to adopt, but have questions. The council also helps put parents in touch with agencies that can help them find children.

In church service activities, Melvin is a lector and distributes communion at St. Ann's Catholic Church. Each year, the family has a booth at St. Ann's Family Fair and the Dunn's are past general chairmen of the Fair.

The children are active in school activities, from band, Future Farmers of America and Boy Scouts to ballet and soccer. Many are honor students, too.

The children are conscious of being a real family, judging from some of their comments. For example:

"I like that my parents are stern. Some of my friends' moms clean their rooms for them. Mom makes up clean our own. We can't do other things until our work is done."

"Our parents trust us—they trust us enough to let us be individuals. It's hard to keep up with so many activities money and time wise. They could have set rules about what we could or couldn't do or made us all do the same thing. Instead, they let us choose. Some of us have tried the same things, sometimes we've chosen to do something new. They trust our choices."

"I have never seen my parents fight. And I've never had to worry about Mom and Dad getting a divorce."

"Our family is loyal. We stick up for each other."

"We want our children to have a firm foundation at home, a feeling of belonging and being loved, but also an opportunity to be themselves," said Mr. and Mrs. Dunn.

"We also want them to each develop as an individual, to develop their interests and talents."

The added that they did not wish them to suffer because they are from a large family.

The couple stresses that each child must do his/her part in helping out at home. And they help this will insure that the children will stay close to the family, even after they begin leaving home.

"While most people find it sad that there are so many broken homes, we find it sad that so many families drift apart—even though there is no formal separation—as the children grow up, become involved activities and have their own transportation," say the parents.

"Some of my friends don't seem to have a feeling of belonging to a family," said one of the daughters, "I like to bring them home and let them get a feeling of what ours is like. Some of my friends have learned to like children just from being around my brothers and sisters."

Even before the last of their biological children were born, the Dunn's knew there was enough room and love for more children in their home, children without families of their own. To provide a family for such children seemed a natural course, and neither Mary nor Melvin remembers sitting down and deciding to adopt.

Because they had six children already, the first agency they contacted turned them down. They had no idea where to look next. For nearly five years, the Dunn's searched and researched. When it became apparent that they would indeed be able to adopt a young boy, they gathered all the children to ask how each felt about a new family member.

In the course of the discussion, they explained that the children they were considering was handicapped. To then 11-year-old Mike, "handicapped" meant crippled. All of the children agreed to bring a new member into the family. And, shortly afterward, Mike gathered his toys and held a "garage sale" to earn money for crutches for his new brother. Each of the next three Dunn children was adopted into such an atmosphere of love and acceptance.

Now in the Dunn's living room, there is a child size park bench. On the seat back, Mary has painted pictures of four children: one is Sam, one, Shil, and one is Scott, their youngest. The fourth is a little girl...a little girl they do not yet have. Perhaps she is more a symbol of the open hearts of a special family.

Blinded vets receive aid

Since 1945, when Congress chartered it as a non-profit social-service group, the Blinded Veterans Association has served more than 30,000 blinded veterans, both those whose blindness was service-connected and those who became blind after their discharge from military service.

Beware the medi-scare con game

By KAREN A. HUNT
(Special from Reader's Digest)

Helen Martin (names are fictitious) worried about becoming a burden to her children. She believed insurance salesmen who said they could help her remain independent. Over several years, the 76-year-old Illinois woman bought more than 90 policies from them. To pay premiums, which in one year totaled some $15,000, she was forced to mortgage her farm.

When Betty Robinson visited her elderly parents in Florida, she found them living on jelly sandwiches and canned fruit. Most of their meager income went for 19 health-insurance policies costing nearly $3000 a year.

John Marks became concerned when his mother couldn't afford her annual trip from Ohio to visit her grandchildren in North Carolina. He found out she was spending $9100 a year - 69 percent of her income - on 13 health- and life-insurance policies pressed upon her by salesmen from a single company.

These people are victims of Medi-Scare, a health-insurance con game that the House of Representatives Select Committee on Aging estimates may cost the nation's senior citizens $1 billion this year. Preying on the fear that an illness could lead to financial ruin, unscrupulous salesmen pressure the elderly to buy policies they claim will fill all the gaps in government-provided Medicare.

It is a "colossal racket," according to the House committee, whose investigators for the past three years have probed abuses in the sale of health insurance to the elderly. There is no way to buy complete protection; furthermore, 40 percent of policies sold to supplement Medicare return little in benefits compared to what is paid in premiums. Some do not pay at all. The average yearly medical bill for a person 65 and over is now $2026 (two-and-one-half times higher than for adults age 19 to 64), of which only about 40 percent is covered by Medicare; the remaining $1215 must be paid by the senior citizens. Not covered at all by Medicare are the costs of prescription drugs used at home, dental services, eye tests and glasses, hearing aids and routine physical examinations.

Perhaps the biggest Medicare gap is nursing-home care, accounting for nearly one-fourth of the health expenditures of elderly people. Medicare coverage is limited to 100 days, doesn't include supervision and help with dressing, eating and so on, and is available only to people placed in a skilled nursing facility (SNF) by a doctor after at least three days of hospitalization. Medicare pays only about three percent of nursing-home costs.

Little wonder that an estimated two-thirds of the nearly 26 million Americans 65 and older have taken out one or more private insurance policies. Generally, there is value for money in Blue Cross and Blue Shield supplemental policies and in group policies purchased before retirement. But the Congressional probe sharply questioned the value of most individual policies.

Beware of salesmen who promise coverage no matter what illness you have now or have had in the past. Almost no policy will do that. One elderly California woman owned 17 insurance policies, but none would pay when she went into the hospital for removal of a cataract she had before she bought the policies.

Another common misrepresentation is that there is @no waiting period@ before a policy becomes effective. Don't believe it. If you drop your current policy, it may be 30 days to 6 months - or over a year in some cases - before your new coverage starts.

Some insurance firms actually train salesmen to scare or soft-soap the elderly into buying medi-gap insurance. Ronald Dell, former agent for a California-based company, testified at a Congressional hearing in 1978 that the firm taught him during a five-day course to pound the table, point to a picture and ask, "Is that your daughter? Would you like her to have to take care of you because you don't have insurance to cover your simple medical bills?"

In an effort to check the Medi-Scare racket, Congress has passed new legislation, which takes effect as of July 1982. It provides a kind of government @seal of approval@ for insurers who meet certain requirements. Here are some guidelines to getting the health coverage that best suits you:

— If you have not yet retired, and have group coverage, find out if you can continue it. Group policies are generally less expensive than individual ones and cover a greater number of Medicare gaps.

— Call your local social-services department to find out if you qualify for Medicaid. This program for people of modest means is more comprehensive than Medicare.

— If you decide you need medi-gap insurance, buy only from an agent you know and trust, or one recommended by a relative or friend.

— See if your community has a health-maintenance organization; these generally cover more Medicare gaps than traditional health insurance. And, remember, no matter what high-pressure salesmen claim, health insurance has become a complex affair. Few people are able to put together the policy package they need without objective advice.

Here's the answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — The cabinets in our kitchen are wood. They have been there for about 30 years and are still in good condition except for a kind of stickiness that seems to have developed. Is this from the grease in the kitchen or has the finish, which I think is shellac, started to deteriorate? How do I clean them? Or must I strip them with a varnish remover?

A. — It is likely that the stickiness is from grease that has accumulated over the years. Haven't the cabinets been cleaned regularly? If not, that should be a standard procedure after they have been put back into shape. Start out with one of the conventional cleaning preparations, reading the label on the one you select to be sure it can be used on wood. It may take a considerable amount of rubbing and perhaps two applications to do the job properly. If this proves unsatisfactory, try rubbing the finish with denatured alcohol. If the finish is shellac, as you suspect, the alcohol will take it off or, at the least, make the surface suitable for refinishing. When you use the alcohol, be sure there is plenty of ventilation. Only in an extreme case will you have to use a varnish remover. Not so incidentally, do you have some kind of exhaust in the kitchen to rid the room of smoke and grease when cooking?

Q. — When the hot water is turned on in our kitchen, it takes a long time before the water gets hot. We have been told this is a waste, not only of water but of the electricity used to heat the water. What can we do about it?

A. — It isn't that it takes a long time for the water to get hot; it takes a long time for the hot water to reach you. It could even be that some of the heat in the water is dissipated while going through the cold pipes. This is a difficult problem to solve, simply because long lines of piping may be the cause. Insulating the hot-water pipes sometimes provides a solution.

Q. — The stopper in our bathroom sink does not work right. It goes up and down all right, but when the water is turned on full force, it does not go down the drain even when the stopper is in the up or closed position. We have tried to lift out the stopper because someone told us that was the way to clean it, but we simply cannot get it out. Does it have to be removed in a different way?

A. — Before you lift out the stopper, you first have to turn it counterclockwise. When you have the stopper in your hand, you will find grease and usually hair at the end of it. Remove this matter and replace the stopper, turning it clockwise to get it into position. However, it is possible that the clog is not at the bottom of the stopper but in the pipe itself, in which case use a rubber plunger or so-called plumber's friend.

MUSTARD PEACHES

An unusual way of serving a pantryshelf fruit as a main-dish accompaniment.

29-ounce can cling peach halves in heavy syrup
3 teaspoons dry mustard

Drain the peaches, saving the syrup. Refrigerate the peaches. In a heavy 1½-quart saucepan, uncovered, boil the syrup until it is reduced to 1-3rd cup — about 10 minutes. Gradually whisk the syrup into the mustard, keeping smooth; pour into a small container, cover and chill. At serving time, spoon the syrup-mustard mixture into the peach cavities. The number of servings will depend on how many peach halves there are in the can.

Catering business booming in Southern California

By CAROL MCGRAW
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Robert Pennington, one of Southern California's most successful caterers, was assured by the hostess that she had added only a handful of extra guests after the 500 invitations were sent out.

On the evening of the party, Pennington carefully arranged elegant platters of food on the buffet tables, and watched the guests begin to arrive. And arrive. And arrive.

"I thought they'd never stop pouring in," recalled the soft-spoken and bespectacled businessman. The crowd swelled to 600, 700, and finally 800. Unflappable, Pennington ordered his staff to pick the food for 500 off the tables and carry it around on trays. "The guests could see it, but they couldn't get to it," he said with a wry smile.

Pennington's eye-of-the-hurricane nerves have served him well in an industry where the weak in spirit, in social know-how or in operating capital melt away as quickly as ice carvings at a Death Valley barbecue party.

But the extremely competitive business is lucrative for those with the stamina to survive. Social catering — which includes everything from small family wedding receptions to company open houses and socialite extravaganzas — had national sales of $775 million last year, according to federal Bureau of Census figures.

And more than $100 million of that was generated in Los Angeles and neighboring Orange counties, where an estimated 400 catering companies are competing to satisfy the champagne and caviar palates of the beautiful and monied.

The catering business in Southern California is like that in no other area of the country, even including the social-conscious environs of New York City and Washington, D.C., industry experts say.

While inflation has forced partygivers in other parts of the nation to resort to self-prepared casseroles, many Southern California hosts still are demanding sit-down dinners where the catered Beef Wellington costs $150 a person, and the bill for table flowers can exceed $10,000.

"California is isolated from the real world," says Bill Hamilton, owner of Cannery Cruises and Catering of Newport Beach, a seaside community not far from downtown Los Angeles, which specializes in parties aboard private and chartered yachts in Newport Harbor. "For the wealthy and the corporations, it is socializing as usual."

When economic times are bad, Hamilton says, the public likes to party and forget its problems. And businessmen give more open houses and dinners to promote products and attract clientele.

"The way this vicious industry works is that the big get bigger if they do things right," says Pennington, who started Robert Pennington Enterprises as a two-man operation in 1961 and now has 56 full-time and 200 part-time employees. He says he took in more than $7 million in sales last year, placing him among the handful at the top of the trade in the Los Angeles area.

In spite of the overall success in the industry, many small caterers have gone out of business in recent years, and even some of the larger caterers are in financial trouble. And now there is a new source of competition — restaurants and hotel chains are trying to boost their own sagging profits by entering the catering field.

Many caterers say they have doubled their prices in the last three years and still have more customers than ever. But they also concede that profit margins have continued to dip because of inflation.

It is easy to get into the catering business — all it takes is a stove and refrigerator, Pennington notes. "But you can't survive without capital," he says. "Our receivables are sometimes $400,000. Small businesses can' do that."

Small caterers — one and two-person companies that usually do cooking in someone else's home — can make good wages, but not sizable profits, Pennington says. And medium-size caterers who do "plodder work" — small weddings, endless fruit and vegetable trays for cocktail parties, and small company dinners — can make $300,000 or more a year, he estimates. But only a very few large caterers make more than $1 million a year.

Those caterers who do survive without a ready reserve offer some unique service such as specialty foods or exotic themes for parties. Jeanette Harkey, a former social worker who started J and El Katering 3 1-2 years ago, is typical of the small operator who has done fairly well. She charges $9 per person to cater a simple roast beef dinner, and the price goes up for more lavish fare.

"I'm not making enough to buy T-bills, but I'm paying the bills and a little extra," she said.

She has managed to make it in the competitive market because of her special emphasis on "home cooking," a brand of catering very popular now because country-western parties are in vogue. Like many caterers, she relies on phone book Yellow Pages and word-of-mouth for advertising.

"I'm still getting referrals from a party I did three years ago," she said.

Large caterers rely even more on word-or-mouth advertising. Pennington did not list himself in the Yellow Pages until last year, when his telephone number was changed.

"You are only as good as your last three parties," Pennington said. "A caterer ceases to exist if he doesn't get referrals."

Problems with tires

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Abnormal tire-wear problems contribute to less service life for a tire, costing the consumer money.

Just what are some of these problems? According to Ironsides, a tire company, they are:

—Outside and inside shoulder wear.

—Edge wear or flat spots.

—Across rib wear and width rib wear.

—Up and down "cupping."

—Side to side "feathering."

GIFTS THAT KEEP ON GIVING

Holiday shopping is a chore for most people, so I thought I'd devote a column to helpful suggestions to simplify your task. Here are a number of popular and fashionable items that are guaranteed great gifts:

For Women:
Colored stone beads. They're the hottest thing around. In single strands or twists of multiple strands. Just about any color you want is represented by beads of some beautiful gemstone.—silky brown tiger's eye, lustrous pearls in white and pastel colors, bright red garnets and purple amethysts, deep green malachite, rich blue lapios lazuli.—and these are sometimews teamed together and accented with gold beads.
...—Large gold earrings or bracelets, metal alone or accented with diamonds. These pieces retain their importance with heavy winter garb, especially this year's wool skirts and sweaters.

For Men:
Wathces to suit all tastes. Everything is available from digital read-outs in stainless steel to analog watches in solid gold with diamonds.
...—Elegant accessories. Cigarette lighters for the coffee table or pocket with handsome cases of tortoise shell, onyx or gleaming metal. Pens and pencils in solid gold or gold-filled , and slim cases for everything from business cards to cigarettes.
In my next article I'll give you some gift ideas for young people. If you'd like help with gift selection, please consult one of the specialists at our store.

Single woman: A home, yes; a beer, no

By SARICA D. JHABVALA
Copley News Service

"I guess about the hardest thing is having someone treat you to a beer, and not being able to reciprocate," Tina said. "It's embarrassing not to be able to treat others."

Tina is a college graduate who is proficient in two languages, 29 years old and sees herself as a career woman.

She is a homeowner — without the price of a beer.

Last year, Tina succumbed to two powerful stimuli: one generated by the women's liberation movement, which urged women to take homeownership out of the male realm: "I needed to become more worldly, to understand what it was like to take on a real financial responsibility," Tina said. In short, to prove her independence.

The other was the real estate hype that in effect said that renting an apartment when you can own a condo was un-American; that is, it was stupid.

Working in a marketing division of a large company, Tina earned $16,000 a year. Then she decided to go for broke. She would buy a condominium.

Common enough — but what does bespeak for the new times is that she threw conventional wisdom to the winds, ignoring the rule-of-thumb suggested by banking institutions that argue the price of a house should be about 2½ times one's yearly income with 25 percent budgeted for shelter. She was a first-time buyers in an inflated market and had no outside help in raising the down payment. As a result, she paid close to 45 percent of her yearly salary for shelter, substantially higher even than the national average, which hovers around 32 percent.

Keeping a roof over her head is a yeoman's effort. This is how she does it.

Tina bought a one-bedroom unit in a complex in a "parklike community" in Bonita, Calif. A swimming pool figures among the recreational facilities. The 720-square-foot unit was advertised as a bargain at $46,900. With 5 percent down and a 30-year mortgage at 12 and one-half percent, she thought she could swing it if she worked it right.

"The big surprise was the closing costs," she said. "It was $1,900, twice what I expected to pay." Using her Honda as collateral, she was able to borrow the money. "I'm still paying $60 a month to pay it off," she said. "It won't be for much longer and when I'm finished, I'll have $60 more to spend."

Meanwhile, Tina pays $450 for principle, taxes and interest. Add $60 a month for the closing cost debt and $59 for the homeowners' fee, and the monthly toll for shelter is $600. Her take home pay was $900 but "I put down that I had six tax exemptions in order to increase the take-home pay."

Two-thirds of her monthly salary goes for shelter. Add the $75 monthly pat expenses for telephone, gas and electric, insurance on the car and gasoline, and she's left with $225 a month.

"I know I'm overextended financially, but I have nothing to lose. When I sell this place I'll make money and then buy a house that has an assumable loan."

She tries to hold her food bill to $40 a month.

"On my own I live pretty much on fried egg sandwiches. I dont' eat breakfast," she said.

Dining out is left to the whim of dates, or when her mother takes her out. At any given time, if you open the second-hand refrigerator in her apartment its barren cold space is barely broken by the Both women agree their decisions exact a toll meager apple, carton of milk and yogurt. She is not distressed.

"I don't think that has to do with economics," she said. "It has to do with being a single working woman," too busy too shop, basically uninterested in cooking for one. So much for the ads in the New Yorker magazine depicting the career woman's fridge stocked with caviar and Chivas Regal.

She juggles her expenses with three credit cards, and tries to keep the payments to the minimum $10 a month on each.

"I admit I'm getting impatient with being broke all the time. It's always too close. I can't buy the new clothes I think I should have to present the image I need for a better job."

She hasn't eschewed one luxury: She subscribes to that eat-your-heart-out magazine Vogue. It's as though she is in training to seize the main chance when it comes along. Everything works rather smoothly, she says, but there's no room in her budget for surprises, like the major car repairs: "If it breaks down, I'm in real trouble." To fend off the inevitable, she banks $25 a month.

For Tina "not having money in my purse now" bothers her, she says, "but I expected to struggle. Paying rent and taxes was a total waste of money."

Last month Tina quit her marketing job. She now works two full-time temporary jobs while she seeks the elusive $30,000-a-year year spot. "I'd really be doing well if I got it. I could buy a new car, clothes ... "

Book tells how to display personal possessions

By ELLEN APPEL
Copley News Service

A house becomes a home when it has been personalized ... not just with your favorite color draperies, carpeting, bed covers, and bathroom towels, but with all the things you have bought, collected and made yourself. It is these things, your personal possessions, that represent your unique taste, your individual personality and you.

Anything you own can go on display in your home, including baskets, bottles, photos, plants, beaded necklaces, plates and empty cans. You can even turn some items, such as plant pots, into other items, such as tables.

"Homeworks," published by Van Nostrand Reinhold, is packed with ideas for recycling and display. According to the book's subtitle, it is the complete guide to displaying your possessions.

Robin Guild, the book's author, encourages people to show off their possessions, instead of hiding them away. As an example, he suggests ways to adorn a bedroom with beaded necklaces, old-fashioned purses and evening belts.

Guild's ideas include draping the accessories on bedposts, bamboo shelves, or a head and hands cut from acrylic plastic. He also shows how to create a beaded valance by hanging necklaces over a window.

The book also includes recycling ideas. Presented below are ways to make tables from unlikely items:

DUSTBIN TABLE: 1. Thoroughly clean and shine a galvanized dustbin. 2. Have a glazier cut a thick, round, glass tabletop. 2. Place in a room with rough textures, such as exposed brick walls and wooden floors.

TERRA COTTA TABLES: 1. Use a pair of oversized terra cotta plant pots for bases of two coffee tables. 2. Have a glazier cut thick, round, glass tabletops. 3. Use tables in a room with a neutral, terra cotta, and bamboo colors.

CABLE TABLE: 1. Use a cardboard and plywood cable drum for a table. 2. Cover with fabric to match throw pillows in the room.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Diapers handy for blotting up spills

DEAR HELOISE:

When one of my children spills a large amount of liquid, I grab one of my baby's disposable diapers, the less expensive generic rather than brand-name ones.

The diaper can handle a lot of liquid. It's especially good for spills or pet accidents on carpets. It absorbs quickly, so less soaks into the carpet. — Roxanne Kilbride

Good idea! Even if you don't have a baby around your house, folks, keep a box of the most inexpensive disposable diapers you can find on hand for just such emergencies.

Sure beats trying to hurriedly grab enough paper towels to do the job. Thanks, Roxanne! — Heloise

TURKEY TIP

Dear Heloise: With so many homes equipped with an electric stove only, those using fresh turkeys for their Thanksgiving feast might find it difficult to come up with a way to singe the pin feathers.

Enter the candle — the spare one in the kitchen drawer. No candle? Flick your cigarette lighter! — Ann Lazaruk

DECORATING IDEA

Dear Heloise: My husband and I were in a kitchen specialty shop looking for something simple to decorate the kitchen wall.

We were just about to leave, not having found anything we could afford, when he said, "What about these potholders?"

They were cute, bright and decorative and, most important of all, relatively inexpensive.

They look super in our kitchen and my husband is pleased as punch when I brag about his good decorating idea. — Sue Johnston

LETTER OF THOUGHT

Dear Heloise: You asked for hints for vacations or trips... My suggestion is: Don't put them off — go while you are able.

Don't wait for daddy to retire and don't save the money for the children. They can get theirs the same way you got yours — by working for it!

Go and have fun! — Mrs. C. Allison

HAIRY HINT

Dear Heloise: To cut a child's bangs evenly, place a piece of sticky tape along his or her forehead just above the cutting line, then follow the tape carefully with the scissors. — Sandra Perry

DRY IDEA

Dear Heloise: Here's a hint for those of us who don't have dishwashers...

After all those holiday meals and parties, when you find you're left with lots of dishes to do and too few dish towels handy for drying (seems as if every towel in the house gets wet too fast or is in the wash after preparation of the meal) use a lightweight bath towel.

One will do almost all the drying.

Crime pays in security

BRIARCLIFF MANOR, N.Y. (AP) — Private security services are growing rapidly, with more than 10,000 such companies already in existence in this country, according to an international security firm.

Revenues are expected to reach $15 billion by 1990.

"The rapid growth of private security services directly relates to the rise of serious crime in this country," says Herchell Britton, executive vice president of Burns International Security Services Inc.

Late September good time to visit Britain

By CAROLYN FITZ-GERALD

The last two weeks in September offer the British bound traveler three very desirable things: Lower rates, no tourists and a good chance for springlike weather. I was lucky to find all three earlier this fall.

British Caledonian Airways rates from Dallas to London were lowered on Sept. 16, the plane was only half full and there was still time enough when I arrived to see some of the places that tourists enjoy before they closed on Oct. 1.

I flew executive class for the first time and found it offers some of the amenities of first class like free drinks, slippers and five course meals without the heavy first-class cost. The best part of the $900 round trip offer by British Caledonian was that they never sell the middle seat in executive class so there is always room to stretch out and take a nap during the nine hour flight.

The weather in London was a balmy 75 degrees and I settled into the Drury Lane Hotel near the theatre district so that I could walk to nearby shows which included CATS, an experimental effort based on T.S. Eliot's minor poems about cats and "The Business is Murder," a slow-starting but taut thriller by Richard Harris.

If you share the British penchant for slapstick humor like false arms and other farcial props, you might enjoy "Accidental Death of An Anarchist." I found I was the only American in the audience and the only one not laughing.

"Anarchist" was a show that I was glad I had only paid half price for. Beginning at 2:30 p.m., theatre tickets for some plays can be purchased on the west side of Leicester Square for that day's performance only — one of the few bargains I found in London.

Well worth the full price was a production called "Ripen Our Darkness," a play about a middle-aged woman driven to desperation by three men, a Bible and a psychiatrist (not in that order).

After a stop at the Victoria and Albert Museum, filled with lace fichus and heavy silver, I felt I had had enough culture so I shopped Fortnam and Mason's, my choice over the larger and often overwhelming Harrod's. Priced were high and often both quality and price were not comparable with Sakowitz in Houston or Neiman-Marcus in Dallas.

I did buy some fragrant roses, fresh raspberries and watercress from their greengrocer department though I only looked at cashmere sweaters and Waterford crystal.

After shopping, I had a really good cold buffet at The Chesterfield Hotel in Mayfair and then strolled through the Shepperd Market where, again, there were no bargains but I saw some unusual things like an enormous line of perfectly scaled antique doll house furniture at one shop and 27 kinds of talcum powder at another. I enjoyed, too, the Mary Chess shop where I was given a mail order form for scents, sachets and lotions most of which they assured me, were created for the Queen. I thought they were lagging a bit not to have a commission yet from the Princess of Wales.

After a full day, I spent the early evening walking through Covent Garden, the market of "My Fair Lady" fame that has been converted into small shops and cafes in recent years. Some of the area pubs did not take the change lightly and more than one displayed black-wreathed posters declaring, "Covent Garden, Living Market, died, 1976."

There is a fine old French restaurant across the street from the shop area that has been there for more than 50 years. An English friend said that it is the sort of place where stockbrokers like to take their women clients to lunch. I guess that he meant that the restaurant is intimate without being cozy and expensive without being outrageous.

A harrowing left-sided ride out of London the next day ended in the peaceful surrounds of The Elms, a stately country hotel close to the little village of Abberley, near Worcester.

The Elms was everything that I had always thought an English country hotel should be. It was all flowered chintz, old men with walrus moustaches and monacles dozing in leather armchairs under "The Times," complete with roaring fires inside and formal rose gardens and informal gardens featuring sweetpeas and bachelor buttons outside.

The back garden, just beyond the kitchen garden, offered a splendid view of the fog-softened Malvern Hills.

The next day I drove through the Shropshire Hills to Ludlow, site of historical Ludlow castle built in 1086 on land granted to William de Lacey by William the Conqueror.

The town was once a market place and social center for the gentry in the 18th century and still seems to be a shopping center and gathering place for area residents.

The Ludlow Antiques Centre is one of the largest in England and a number of cultural events were posted on the narrow lanes past speciality shops leading to the castle.

After a stop at the forraging castle just outside of town, I drove on into the lake country.

Leeming House on Lake Ullswater was a welcome last overnight stop in England before entering the Scottish Borders.

The enthusiasm and personal touches of hosts always make for a better stay and from the moment I was served tea on the terrace overlooking the lake, through a dinner of salmon mousse, trout and a wide assortment of wines, I was treated not only as guest but as a friend by Mike and Ginny Fitz-Patrick.

They gave glowing accounts of fishing, hiking, riding and golfing in the lake country and indeed had the kind of glow themselves that comes from five mile hikes followed by climbing and a round of golf. Since I begged off from athletics, the Fitz-Patricks suggested a trip to nearby Windemere to see Wordsworth's restored Dove Cottage. Other guests enthused that the end of their trip was an overnight stay at Hope End Farm near Hereford, home of Elizabeth Barrett before she became a Browning. They did confess that the original house had burned and the few rooms open to guests and tastefully furnished in period furniture by John and Mary Heggerty were actually in the renovated Barrett stables.

I didn't have time for a look at Hope End but just the ride through the Dove Cottage area explained why some of the greatest poetry in the world was composed in the English countryside.

For thirty years I had wondered how Tennyson could enthuse so about a single "flower in the crannied wall," but that was before I stood outside so many walled churches and rounded a hundred curves neatly bordered by fences of stone placed there long ago by someone who, just like me, must have stopped to admire a single flower that had pushed its way through tangled rock — a small miracle to lift the spirit and a microcosm of the riotously blooming countryside that is England.

Bats' echolating is incredibly fast

In many cases bats hunt insects as small as mosquitoes and fruit flies. Because ultrasound weakens fast in air, bats seldom sense the presence of the prey from more than a yard away — by echolocation.

They read echoes returned from a target. This means the potential victim can pick up the sounds of an echolocating predator in half the time it takes the bat to detect his prey, tell how fast it is moving, in what direction, and its shape.

Some bats solve these complicated problems at the rate of 500 times an hour. Sometimes a bat can even snatch a flying insect with its mouth — a feat hard to believe, but photos show it to be true.

Author tells how to entertain with style

By SUSAN PHINNEY
Hearst Feature Service

"Some people have sexual fantasies. I have party fantasies. I've always adored giving parties," says New Yorker Marjorie Reed.

She says she can't begin to count the parties she's given. But she does remember that she gave her first party, at age 6, for her dolls. She served chopped celery in hot water. "My cooking hasn't improved dramatically since that point," she laughs.

She apparently hasn't needed cooking skills to become a hostess with an international reputation, and the author of a new guide to entertaining, "Marjorie Reed's Party Book: Entertaining with More Style Than Money," (Ballantine, $6.95).

She described party-giving as a gift of love. "Unfortunately, in this country, it has become confused with out-cooking, out-spending and out-decorating the competition — all the wrong reasons for entertaining."

Reed says she personally prefers parties for about 40 people — open house parties lasting for several hours. She invites people for cocktails and a light buffet. Guests can stop by her Manhattan townhouse before going to a play, drop in for an after-dinner drink or simply come for food and drink.

Reed began entertaining in earnest when she was married to an international art dealer. After her divorce, she says she was left with a basket, her son and a suitcase.

She says her first post-divorce party was an open house for 150.

"Don't take on a party singlehandedly," she now advises. "Hire help, even if it's the checker from the supermarket. Get your own kids involved. That's how they learn to be comfortable with adults."

She says her worst party was one she wanted to walk out on. "I gave it with another single friend for nothing but single people. It was a disaster. If you want to entertain a lot of singles, invite married guests as buffers," Reed says.

Although she claims there's no such thing as a perfect party, she does have some ground rules for successful entertaining.

For those unaccustomed to having guests, she advises starting small, running the party through your head before the guests arrive, and giving yourself lots of praise.

"Think of the worst thing that can happen. The things you worry about never happen. And when the unexpected happens, laugh. People come to enjoy, not to judge."

Reed's book is full of money-saving advice. She also tells how to improvise tables, and suggests sharing dishes with friends. She claims one of her best parties is a good example of improvisation.

She was living in a rented house in the south of France — a house with barely enough dishes and few accessories for entertaining. She'd been attending parties all summer and felt she should reciprocate.

"I washed the bed sheets and used them for tablecloths, and borrowed plates from a nearby restaurant. Then I served an all-American meal — corn bread, fried chicken, chili, fresh fruit, brownies, ice cream cones. "It was swell watching Estee Lauder eating a brownie and clutching an ice cream cone.

Reed advises keeping a party cabinet stocked with cocktail napkins, candles and other items purchased on sale. "Buy religious candles, they're cheaper."

This expert believes a hostess should never try to cut costs by omitting one of the big three — food, beverages or decorations. She says it's important to create a look for your party — even if it's a sawhorse table covered with burlap and decorated with pine boughs gathered in the woods.

Among her pet party peeves are caterers who pass four tiny hors d'oeuvres on one tiny tray. "Presentation is important, but that's pretentious."

Stitching witchery: Alterations

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

It was never my intention to work this hard. What I had in mind was a little of this, a little of that, and time left over to do what I wanted. Didn't work out that way. What I am doing is a lot of alterations. And I am learning a lot.

For instance, there are a lot of things I am doing now that a year ago I never dreamed could be done. And there are things that I know will not work. And things are not worth the trouble.

How do you know when to alter and when to toss it? First, you must balance the cost of having the work done against — not what the garment cost originally — but against what it would cost to replace it now. A pair of polyester double-knit slacks that have seen better days would not be worth $9 or $10 for slimming the legs and taking up the waistband, but might will be worth $4 for hemming. On the other hand, a good pair of lined wool slacks could well be worth the investment of alterations to make them more up-to-date.

Wide, pointed lapels on blazers are definitely tacky. When is a blazer worth having the lapels narrowed? First, find out how much it is going to cost to have the work done (it could be as high as $35), then balance that against the replacement cost, and against what the blazer "goes with." If it is one you can wear with several other pieces, it is worth the cost. If it is pea-green-purple and doesn't go with anything, toss it.

Often all it takes to revitalize a coat or jacket are new buttons. Consider the spark you could give an old garment with just a few brand new buttons.

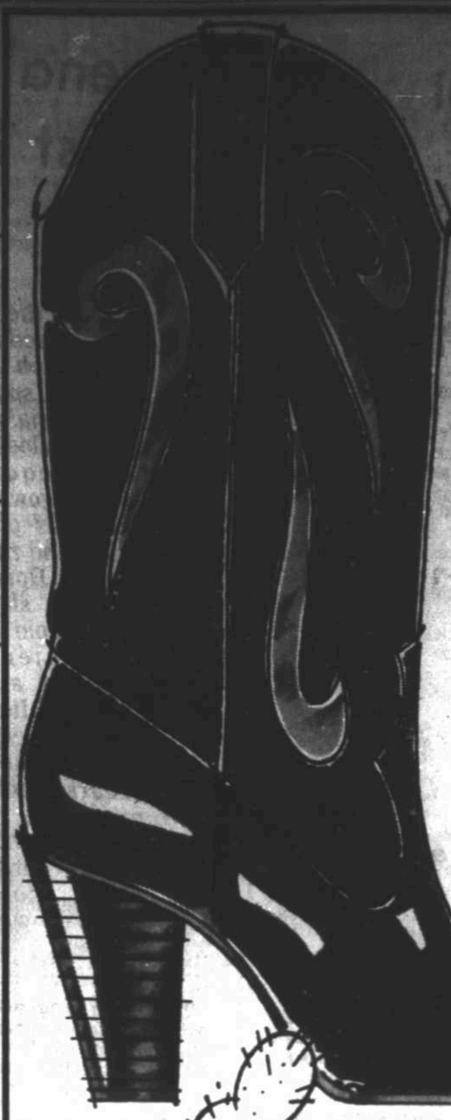

Sometimes a new garment will need altering. If so, add that to the cost of the garment and decide if it truly is a saving. A good wool blazer bought on sale for $30 can well stand even $20 in alterations and still ba a "good buy."

Alterations expand your wardrobe and save you money. What more could you ask?

Topiary popular among houseplant lovers

By DX FENTEN
Newsday

Wanna grow a duck? How about a rabbit, a whale, a pig or a fox? What? You don't have the room or the facilities? Would it help any if the animals were green, less than 2 feet long and under 18 inches tall?

If this sounds wacky, it's not. Houseplant lovers are growing topiary in their homes and having a ball doing it. They're growing plant p3ts, geometric shapes and anything else that strikes their fancy. Until recently, topiary was thought of as that province of rich, the eccentric, or the person who had lots of time to cultivate and shape the plants. And, until recently, topiary was an outdoor enterprise.

The procedures for the two kinds of topiary are similar, with enough differences to be interesting. The easiest is the "real" topiary — as long as you stick to simple shapes. For example, to make a wreath or ring topiary, bend a piece of thick wire into a circle and anchor the two ends in a pot of soil. Usually this pot of soil would contain some small leafed ivy, which will then be trained to grow up and around the wire.

To keep the ivy close to the wire and close to the desired shape, tie it to the wire, using materials that will neither cut th3 ivy nor be conspicuous. Nylon thread, fishing line or knitting yarn will do the job.

If thi sounds simple, it is. Of course there are a few suggestions that will make your topiary projects easier and give you a better chance for success. First, consider the frame. Determine the thickness and type of wire according to the piece you are sculpting. There are different kinds of thicknesses of wire suitable for various topiaries. Galvanized wire, copper wire, aluminum wire or plastic-coated wire will do a creditable job.

Keep in mind that your topiary will be moist, so the wire must be rustproof. Plastic-coated wires are more expensive than some of the other kinds, but with the e, you can choose a dark green color that will blend in with the plants. Copper wire has become expensive, but it's malleable, doesn't rust, and in time turns green to blend with the plants. Aluminum wire is rustproof, and more flexible than the other wires.

The other importnat ingredient for topiary is the plants. As a general rule, the best results are achieved with creeping fig or ficus vine or any one of the small leafed ivies. Creeping fig (ficus pumila) is a delightful vining or creeping member of the popular fig family of houseplants. Ths plant has small, dark green, thin leaves and small ivy like roots that help it adhere to just about anything. Give it plenty of water and a decet amount of light, but no direct sunlight, and it will grow merrily along, filing in any shape or form that pleases you.

The ivies, too, are a delight. Since the regular, large-leafed varieties look too coarse in small topiaries, select a small-leafed type, such as needlepoint, jubilee, glaicier and a little charmer called itsy bitsy. Needlepoint leaves resemble an inch-long bird's foot; jubilee is variegated and tiny (about a half-inch long); glacier is variagated and has leaves slightly longer than an inch; and itsy bitsy has lime-green leaves similar to needlepoint.

All of these ivies are strong growers, with few requirements that are out of the ordinary. Give them good light, but no direct sun. Give them plenty of water, but don't drown them. Mist them frequently and wash them off at least once each we3k. Put the entire topiary into a sink or bath for this soaking and washing, which will rid your plant of flies and other bugs.

Mock topiary offers other delights. With the real topiaries, the plant is growing in the soil of the pot, os the pot is the plant's container. With the potless topiaries, the topiary itself is the container. There is no pot and there is no soil.

Start out with a topiary frame. You can buy a variety of frames from companies that specialize in these wire sculptures, and you can get them stuffed or unstuffed. Also available are stuffed plastic topiary frames that are stocked by larger garden centers.

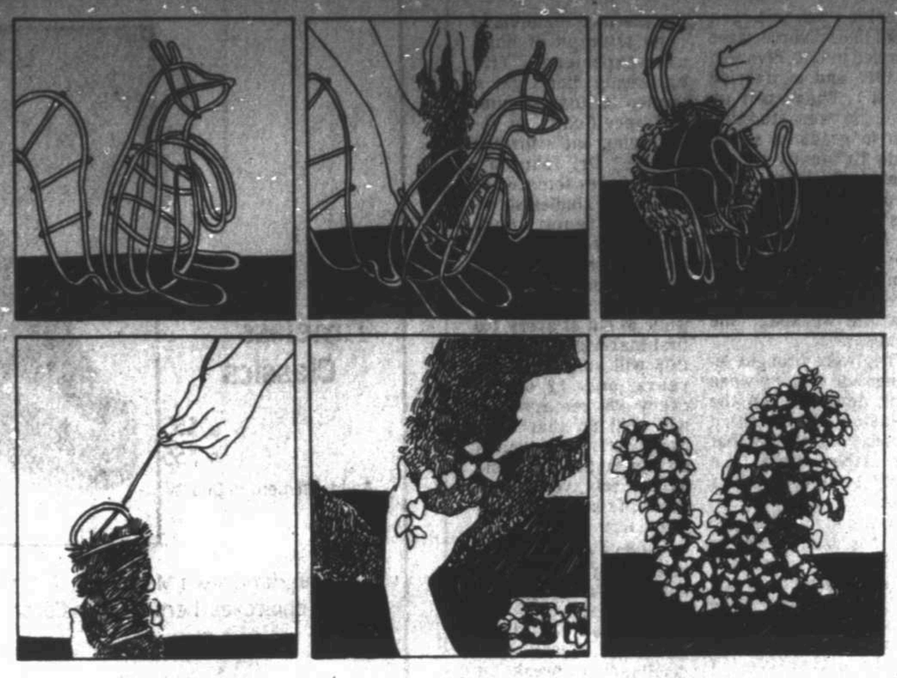

Or, you can make your own. You'll need imagination, skill, manual dexterity, and the self-confidence required to laugh at yourself if things don't turn out the way you wanted. Decide on the shape you want and rough it out in wire. Work one dimension, flat, until you have an accurate outline of the shape. Use thin connecting wire or florist's tape to join pieces of wire. When you have the shape the way you want it, add the other sides, the top and bottom, or anything else that will give you the third dimens8on, allowing room for the filling and the plant . Keep the wire pieces far enough apart so you can get your fingers inside to insert the plants.

If, at this point, you decide you want to put your mock topiary into a pot, simply add several wires to the bottom of the form and anchor it to the pot. When the sculpture is securely anchored, start weaving and attaching the plants that are already growing in the pot, to the form. From there on it's a matter of good care and the patience to wait for the plants to grow enough to cover the frame.

If your topiary form is to be a free spirit, a true mock topiary, with no pot or anything else to anchor it, you must stuff it so it can act as a container and base for the plants. You'll need both sheet moss and sphagnum peat moss. Soak both in a sink or tub until they are thoroughly wet. Take the sheet moss first, squeeze it out, ten push it carefully into position os it lines the entire lower half of your frame. Use as many pieces of the sheet moss as you need to line everything. Next, take the sphagnum moss, squeeze it out and push it into the newly lined frame.

When this is finished, start adding pieces of the sheet moss to the upper portions of the frame. For this it would be nice to have a third hand. If you don't have one, use one hand to hold the sheet moss in place and the other to stuff in the sphagnum. When you have a finished with the stuffing, give it the finger test. If you are unable to get a finger into the body, these is enough sphagnum in place. If you can push your finger into the body, go back to stuffing in the sphagnum moss.

For any narrow extremities, like ears, legs, hands and feet wrap them carefuly with the sheet moss and secure well with tightly wrapped floral wire.

Remarriage booming in America

By ELAINE HARDEN
The Washington Post

On a Saturday morning in 1977 in Berkeley, Calif., a 3-year-old girl wandered into her mother's bedroom. Her mother and father were separated; a divorce was imminent. Since the separation the mother had been sleeping alone, but on this particular morning there was a man in bed with her.

The man was the little girl's father. He and his soon-to-be ex-wife had decided to try another go at marriage. The little girl, flushed with joy, ran out of the bedroom yelling: "There's someone in bed with mommy, and it's daddy."

Bill and Carol Eliason of Washington — married 25 years ago, divorced 12 years ago, remarried 11 years ago — have worked up a remarital routine:

Question: How long have you two been married?

Answer: "Off and on for 25 years."

Bill Eliason, married four times, introduces Carol as "wife No. 2 and 4."

They make a point of mentioning the town where they were remarried — New Hope, Pa.

Seven years ago in southwest Philadelphia, a family therapist named Edna Smalls walked out on her husband, a Baptist preacher. Rev. Leonard Smalls had for 20 years pressured Edna to be a dutiful wife, mother and unpaid servant for his Baptist congregations. Edna divorced her husband in 1975 and moved to Oakland, Calif., to a new job and new men.

Meantime, Rev. Smalls married a younger woman, divorced her 18 months later and began pining for Edna in Oakland. She'd never fallen out of love with the preacher. When he asked her to come home, she came. After their remarriage one year ago this week the preacher proudly presented her to the folks at the Church of Christian Compassion. They applauded. Rev. Smalls recalls: "It had a positive effect on their concept of the family."

Remarriage of divorced couples to each other is a strange and unusual occurrence in the United States.

"It is like man bites dog," says Ray Fowler, executive director of the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy. "I'll be darned if I can think of a single one of our 9,000 members who has special knowledge in this area."

It's business as usual for married couples to fight, throw each other out of the house, separate for weeks or months and then get back together. About one-quarter of all married Americans have been separated at one time or another, according to marriage researcher Frank Furstenberg, a University of Pennsylvania sociologist.

Divorce, however, is quite another matter. If separation is the common cold of marriage, divorce is terminal cancer: an agonizing rite of no return for nearly everyone. The mechanics of divorce — querulous lawyers fanning incompatibility into hatred, skirmishes over property settlements, alimony, child custody and child support — conspire toward the mutual embitterment of divorced couples. Many marriage counselors say they're astounded when any couple can survive the ravages of divorce with enough intact mutual affection to seriously consider remarriage to each other.

Remarriage to the same spouse happens so rarely, in fact, that, apparently, no social scientist in the United States has ever deemed it significant enough to find out precisely how often it does happen. Experts guess it amounts to less than 1 percent of all remarriages.

Yet, remarriage is booming in America. Fueled by a divorce rate that dooms nearly half of all marriages, the percent of previously married brides and grooms at America's altars has increased dramatically. According to Andrew J. Cherlin, a sociologist at Johns Hopkins University and the author of "Mar riage, Divorce, Remarriage," only 3 percent of all brides in 1900 were divorced, as were just 9 percent in 1930. Now nearly 30 percent of the nation's brides are connubial veterans.

Mo t people who get divorced remarry, and they do it surprisingly fast. Cherlin writes that nearly five out of every six men and about three out of four women remarry, half of them within three years of their divorce.

So, while remarriage to one's ex-spouse represents just a sliver of $ll remarriages, the great American remarriage boom means that that sliver is probably growing. In 1980, there were a record 2.413 million weddings, accord ing to the National Center for Health Statistics. If one-half of 1 percent of all remarriages involved couples that were once married to each other, then about 7,200 people last year decided to undo the work of their divorce lawyers and move back in with a familiar face.

Men and woman who've remarried each other seem to share a common bit of luck — neither party was horribly scarred by the divorce. There were few screaming, violent confrontations, no epic wars over house, children or future earnings. Divorce lawyers were kept on a short leash. If any other generalizations can be made about this marital phenomenon that has no definitive statistics, no expert academics, no experienced counselors and a smattering of widely scattered remarried partners, they are:

— At least one ex-spouse found that the grass wasn't greener, and — At least one ex-spouse never fell out of love, hanging on in spite of long eparation, psychological abuse and a gaggle of "other" woman or men.

Bill Eliason, 56, found that the grass wasn't greener. Carol Eliason, 52, never fell out of love. Their first marriage fell apart in Boston in the mid-1960s. They had three children, one from Bill's first marriage, two together. C$rol was a housewife who had followed Bill and his career from Virginia to Texas to Oregon to Boston. Bill had risen in the ranks of the Chrysler Corp. from dealership manager in Middleburg, Va., to chief executive in charge of the New England region. His success made him feel frisky.

"I wanted out. I was approaching 40 years old. I was reasonably well paid. I could live pretty high on the hog on my business expense account. I saw housewifery and interest in the kids as more important to Carol than to me. I wanted to have fun. This led to a benign neglect of my marriage and I drifted into another romantic interest," Bill recalls.

Bill became involved with Joan, a writer who had two children of her own. When he was offered a high-paying executive's position with a chemical-products firm in Allentown, Pa., he and Joan moved there with her children and Bill's son from his first marriage. Carol and her two teen-agers were left behind. The divorce was amicable; Carol was awarded nearly everything but Bill's clothes. She sold their house and moved to a small beach town near Boston.

"I had to learn to live alone. I was very angry. I didn't want the divorce in any way, shape or form. I stalled. I just never really stopped loving him. I was determined I would never say anything to the kids to reduce their love and afecton for him," says Carol.

After Bill left, Carol went to work. She'd never done much with the master's degree in American civilization she earned from the University of Maryland in 1950, but she guessed right about the kind of job that would have a future. She made herself an expert in computer record keeping for colleges. She dated a few men, took care of the kids by herself and surprised herself by surviving.

"I needed to upgrade my sense of self-worth. I didn't know how to fight when we first got married," she says.

Meanwhile, down in Allentown, life was not so rosy for Bill. Joan left him after a year, leaving her kids with him. He was forced to call Carol in Massachusetts and tell her he was running out of money, that he had too many kids to support. Carol, instead of accusing her former husband of niggardly deception, sympathized. Says Bill: "She extended the hand of friendship whn I felt desolate. That probably started something stirring again."

In April of 1970, a year after their divorce, Bill and Carol decided to meet for a weekend at Cape Cod. Sparks flew. Within a month, they were remarried in New Hope by a justice of the peace.

Carol moved to Allentown and took another college job, but the remarriage was rocky. Bill ran off again to see Joan, came home again and Carol again accepted him back. In 1976, they both decided to get out of Allentown.

"I'd had enough of the corporate wars," says Bill. "We both started a job search. Carol hit before I did.(She was offered a grant to study women in junior colleges. The study resulted in a book, "Neglected Women," and Carol landed a job in Washington as director of the Center for Women's Opportunities at the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges.) We moved to Washington. For the first time in our marriage, I followed Carol."

In Washington, they say their marriage has worked. Bill, director of operations for the nonprofit Close-Up Foundation, has learned how to cook and operate the washing machine. Carol, reversing a long practice in their marriage, now gets out of bed first and brings her husband coffee and juice.

"We've learned not to worry about what the moralizers say," says Bill. 'We still bug each other, but now we laugh about it. If one does get angry, the other laughs in his or her face."

Marriage counselors suspect that remarriage to one's ex-spouse, although increasing in absolute numbers because of the remarriage boom, may be declining as a percentage of all remarriage. The reason, according to marriage counselor Ray Fowler in Los Angeles, is that there's an ever-growing pool of divorced and available partners. One's own ex gets lost amid the swarms of everyone else's ex.

Fowler adds: "Increased mobility and increased population significantly diminish the likelihood of staying in the same place long enough to have the former spouse around when you are ready to get remarried."

One anchor that keeps divorced couples in the same geographical area and occasionally forces them to see each other is a kid.

"Even though you can end a marriage, you can never truly break the relationship, particularly if there are children," says Graham Spanier, a professor of human development and sociology at Penn State University and a marriage researcher.

In Berkeley the little girl who ran downstairs yelling about daddy's being in bed with mommy was the catalyst in resurrecting her parents' marriage. The girl's parents, who do not want to be identified because some of their relatives never heard about their divorce, were married in 1970, divorced in 1977 and remarried in 1980. They split up when he was studying film in graduate school at the University of California in Berkeley. She'd dropped out of school and was trying to make a living as a potter. She says they were sexually incompatible. She felt insecure. "We didn't know how life worked," she recalls.

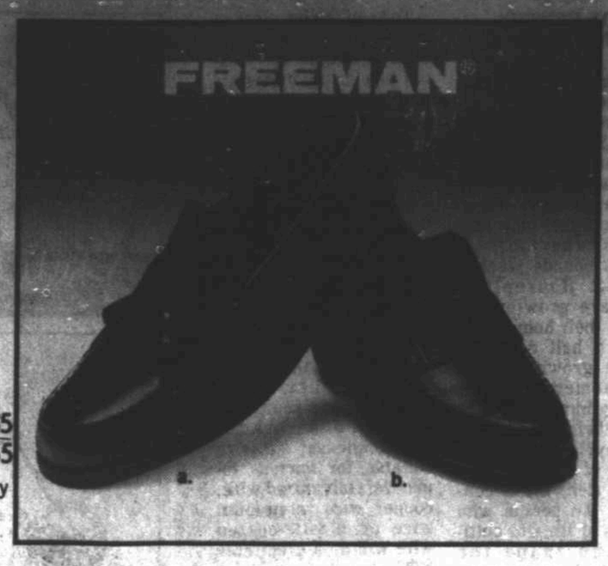

They were brought together one evening when their daughter, on the occasion of her third birthday, demand3d that her father come to a party at her mother's house.

"Our daughter insisted that her daddy come to dinner and have spaghetti," says the mother, now 30. "When he came in the house, I remember I said to myself, 'Gosh, he is really attractive.' I hadn't met anyone to compare to him in the year we'd been separated. There was this kind of gut feeling that I had faith in this man. I had a feeling it would be wrong not to try again."

One thing led to anoth3r. They met secretly so as not to raise their daughter's hopes. He'd grown up; she no longer felt insecure. In less than a month they allowed their little girl to catch them in bed.

Samuel Johnson sneeringly termed remarriage "the triumph of hope over experience."(He apparently didn't get a chance to address himself specifically to remarrying one's former spouse.) Dr. Johnson's sneer makes some sense in light of studies showing that remarriages don't work out quite as well as first marriages. The Center for Health Statistics estimates that while 67 out of every 100 first marriages begun in 1975 will survive for 10 years, only 52 out of every 100 remarriages will hold up that long. Not surprisingly, there's no information available on the relative staying power of remarriages between former exes.

It didn't work for Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton. Hollywood is littered with the corpses of revivified marriages. Courts have disallowed tax breaks for couples who marry, divorce and remarry solely in search of larger deductions. Many marriage counselors say they've come across couples who seem to take a perverse pleasure in repeatedly divorcing and remarrying each other. But most counselors and psychiatrists agree that the second tour of marriage is likely to be just as miserable as the first unless both partners grow up during the interum.

Mobil expected to keep up fight for Marathon

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite antitrust charges and a new complication in its takeover bid, Mobil Corp. is likely to keep fighting for control of Marathon Oil Co., industry analysts said Friday.

Mobil has not commented on U.S. Steel Corp.'s agreement with Marathon, announced Thursday, to acquire Marathon for about $6.3 billion in cash and a stock-for-notes swap.

In a fourth day of hearings in U.S. District Court in Cleveland on Marathon's antitrust suit against Mobil's bid, a University of Chicago professor testified that a takeover by Mobil would not reduce competition in the U.S. oil industry. That is Marathon's central argument in opposing the takeover.

If Mobil clears Marathon's antitrust challenge to its $5.1 billion bid, Mobil "might sharpen its pencil and raise its offer," said Eugene Nowak, an oil industry analyst at the investment firm of Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.

A defeat in this battle would be Mobil's second takeover failure this year. Last summer it lost out in a multibillion dollar bidding war for Conoco Inc., which eventually was acquired by Du Pont Co. for $7.8 billion.

Meanwhile, analysts said they saw little chance that other suitors would join the bidding war.

Although several other companies are understood to have expressed an interest in Marathon, certain provisions of U.S. Steel's offer may have "locked everybody else out," said E.L. Meszaros, an analyst at Rouiston & Co.

The main impediment to other suitors is Marathon's agreement to give U.S. Steel an exclusive option to buy Marathon's biggest oil field for $2.8 billion if Mobil or another company eventually wins control of Marathon.

The Yates field in west Texas is the second largest producing field in the United States behind only the Prudhoe Bay field on the North Slope of Alaska. Without Yates, Marathon's attractiveness to others would be greatly diminished.

Among the companies most often named as having expressed an interest in Marathon are Texaco Inc. and Gulf.

John K. McKinley, chairman of Texaco, told security analysts Wednesday that shareholders and investment bankers had approached Texaco on behalf of Marathon, presumably to encourage Texaco to enter the bidding. McKinley declined to say what his response was, and spokesman Gordon Hamilton said Friday the company would not comment further.

Falling Libyan oil revenue bringing problems on

TRIPOLI, Libya — Libyan oil revenues have fallen by two-thirds in the last six months, forcing the regime of Col. Moammar Khadafy to confront its most serious problems since taking power 13 years ago.

Oil production has plummeted from a high of 1.8 million barrels a day at the beginning of this year to a low in September of about 600,000 barrels a day.

The losses have caused Libya to reconsider its planned development scheme, knowledgeable sources here say. And it is a pinch that may be felt soon by Libyan citizens, who now have no trouble buying color television sets but frequently have to look hard in Tripoli to find eggs, fresh vegetables or meat.

The steep reduction in oil profits could also force a slowdown in Tripoli's widespread building efforts that give this seaside city, in many areas, the look of a massive construction site.

Money may also have been one of tte factors that influenced Libya's recent quick withdrawal of its forces from the neighboring country of Chad. The Libyan intervention there had caused Libya serious problems with several African countries and the Western powers.

But at the same time, according to sources here, U.S. hostility may be driving Khadafy more toward the Soviet camp or toward an isolation that is not likely to serve the intersts of the United States or its European allies.

The decline in oil production means that Libya's income from oil this year will be about $12 billion, down from $23 billion last year.

The cause for the severe drop in production has been Libya's insistence on asking between $37 and $38 a barrel for its high-quality crude oil. The official benchmark price of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries — to which Libya belongs — is $34 a barrel.

With a present world oil production surplus of about one million barrels a day, Libya's customers simply have decided to shop elsewhere.

Exxon, the giant American firm, decided about 10 days ago to pull up stakes and leave the country. The company, known as Esso Standard Libya here, was the fourth largest producer in the country before production levels began to drop precipitously last April.

Mobil Oil, another American firm, is known to be reviewing its operations in the country and may follow Exxon's course.

The other American oil companies in Libya include Occidental Petroleum, the second largst producer, and the Oasis consortium, made up of Conoco, Marathon and Amerada Hess, the largest producer.

Until early this year, Libya supplied about 10 percent of U.S. oil imports. That level has fallen sharply.

The Exxon announcement may have caught the Libyans by surprise, but the government here has known for some time that its income this year would fall drastically. Libya has a development plan that calls for spending $62 billion over the next five years. Government directives have already gone out to various ministries ordering a review of priorities for the coming year.

With a population of not quite three million (50 percent of which is under 15 years old) and a per capita income of $10,000 annually (the second highest to South Africa on the African continent), the reduction in Libya's income is not in itself likely to pose a threat to Khadafy's government. But, sources here say, it could make some political strains here more evident.

"There is some discontent here, no question about it," said one resident. "It is one of the anomalies of this place that you can go to the government department store and find 17 kinds of portable radios, but you can't find a potato anywhere. Sometimes you can't find meat. Or you can't find vegetables. Part of it is that the farmers are keeping their produce. Basically, it is ham-fisted agricultural and economic management."

Interior Committee backs away from showdown

By PAUL TAYLOR
(c) 1981, The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The House Interior Committee, backing away from a showdown with Interior Secretary James G. Watt, Friday adopted a non-binding resolution asking the secretary to refrain from issuing oil and gas leases in wilderness areas until June 1.

The compromise resolution was drafted by committee Chairman Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., a frequent critic of Watt's, who said it would "buy time" for Congress to consider whether legislation is needed to further protect the nation's 80 million acres of wilderness areas.

A spokeman for Watt, who participated in bipartisan negotiations that produced the resolution, said Friday the secretary would honor the moratorium.

The effect of the action is to delay for six months a confrontation between the House committee, which has consistently opposed any development in wilderness areas, and Watt, who has said such areas should not be closed to mineral exploration.

Udall said he was "shocked, disturbed and troubled" by a Watt memorandum leaked to the press this spring in which he urged the department's solicitor to "open wilderness areas" to oil and gas drilling. That policy, Udall said, represents a "breach of faith with the American people."

Nevertheless, Udall rejected a sweeping resolution, first proposed by the committee's ranking minority member, Manuel Lujan Jr., R-N.M., and later picked up by Rep. John F. Seiberling, D-Ohio, that would have declared a "state of emergency" in the entire wilderness system, th3reby making it immediately off limits to development.

Udall described that as a "blunderbuss" approach that would break a commitment made to the nation's mining industry. Under the terms of the 1964 Wilderness Act, he noted, industry was given 20 years to "paw through" protected areas before they become off limits to new exploration leases.

The controversy involving wilderness leases flared this week after it was revealed that the Interior Department, without notifying the public or Congress, and without completing environmental studies, had issued three leases for oil and gas drilling in the Capitan Wilderness in New Mexico.

It was widely reported — by the Interior Department, among others — that those were the first leases issued in wilderness areas since the passage of the Wilderness Act. In fact, a Forest Service official disclosed Friday that 20 such leases have been granted since 1964. In no case, however, has any actual drilling taken place in protected areas.

How to drill an oil well

The intermittent series "How to drill and oil well" has proven exceptionally popular with readers. Dozens of phone calls and letters requesting copies of the articles have been received. They have come from as far away as Fairbanks, Alaska. We're doing our best to fulfill the requests, but we can't do much more. The supply of back issues with oil well stories is exhausted.

If you are among those desiring copies of the stories, it appears the best way for you to obtain them now is from a friend or neighbor who saves newspapers. Perhaps you can make photo copies of the stories at a Library. If all else fails, call the oil news department, and we will do what we can to help you, but we can't promise results.

The well No. 1 Houpt, subject of the series, has not been completed. There is still a lot of work to do. Additional installments in the series are planned. We will follow the well until it either produces, or is plugged.

Indonesian venture bankrolling Basin exploration

Money earned on the sale of Indonesian natural gas to Japan is being invested in the Permian Basin, Charles Honig, president of Alaska Interstate Co, said during a recent visit to Midland.

Alaska Interstate is the parent company of Midland-based C&K Petroleum Inc.

Through its subsidiary, Virginia International, Alaska Interstate produces oil and natural gas from a large field on the island of Borneo.

The venture is currently producing 25,000 barrels of oil daily, for shipment to the United States, and 500 million cubic feet of natural gas daily, which is shipped to Japan.

The gas is processed in Virginia International's liquified natural gas plant in Indonesia.

Honig said his firm is expanding the operation and will double the capacity of the natural gas plant to one billion cubic feet daily. An agreement has been reached with the Indonesian Government, a partner in the venture, and various Japanese utilites covering the sale of the increased output of natural gas.

Others with an interest in the operation are Roy M. Huffington, a Houston-based independent producer; Allied Chemical; Ultramar, a British firm; and Superior Oil Co.

A.A. Sproul, founder and now director of Virginia International, who accompanied Honig, said the firm's Indonesian gas reserves are estimated to be in excess of seven trillion cubic feet.

Honig said excess income from the Indonesian operation is being reinvested in exploration in the United States.

Alaska Interstate has increased it's drilling budget from $30 million in 1980, to $65 million this year, and a substantially larger budget is planned for 1982. Much of the financing for the drilling program is earned in Indonesia.

"We feel the more Indonesia grows, the more we can grow in the U.S.," Honig said.

Alaska Interstate's drilling operations are conducted by C&K and McAlester Fuel Co., an AI subsidiary having its oil and gas division headquarters in Magnolia, Ark.

Honig said the parent firm is in the process of joining C&K and McAlester. After the first of the year, he said, there will be no legal distinction between the two and they will operate together.

Alaska Interstate is emphasizing development of its subsidiaries at the regional level, Honig said. "Rather than having an ivory tower in Houston (at corporate headquarters)."

By building at the regional level, Honig said, by delegating responsibility and authority, those who are most familiar with an operating territory and who are best prepared to act upon operational matters can do so without waiting on a decision from higher up.

"We feel by developing each region," Honig said, "that individuals will play a more prominent part."

Midlander Gilbert Thompson, an Alaska Interstates regional vice president responsible for C&K, said the subsidiary is planning to grow in Midland. A larger budget is being requested for the coming year.

"We certainly anticipate C&K is going to grow and prosper in the Permian Basin in the years ahead," Thompson said.

Alaska Interstate in chartered in Alaska, where it began as a natural gas pipeline and gas distribution business.

In addition to exploration and production, the company is involved in the design and construction of gas processing facilities through the subsidiary Delta Engineering.

Honig was interview Tuesday, prior to a Midland Wildcat Committe reception honoring Alaska Interstate officers.

The Midland Wildcat Committee sponsored a reception Tuesday honoring officers of Alaska Interstate Company, the parent firm of Midland's C&K Petroleum Inc. The officers are, from the left, (seated) James L. Bayless, Houston; Raymond S. Troubh, New York; A.A. Sproul, Staunton, Virginia; Charles Honig, Houston; Albert C. Swalling, Anchorage, Alaska; and Pat T. Dyer, Houston. Standing are: W.A. Anderson Jr, Houston; Harold Bridges, Lausanne, Switzerland; John W. Partridge, Fort Luderdale, Florida; J. Dwayne Taylor, Houston; John Robertson; Gilbert C. Thompson, Midland; Willard M. Hanzlik, Houston; Ted Ashford; and John Platt, Midland.

Basin rig count climbs, U.S. tally leading way

The Permian Basin rotary rig count climbed slightly last week, reaching the 490 mark, according to a survey by Reed Rock Bit Co. The previous week's count was 487.

The national count continues to climb also. The International Association of Drilling Contractors reports 4,469 rotary rigs actually making hole on Nov. 16. The Nov. 9 total was 4,437.

The national tally Oct. 19 was 4,361. The Nov. 17, 1980 count was 3,231.

The IADC figues show 1,348 land rigs working Texas last Monday. An additional 141 were plying New Mexico.

The recently released American Petroleum Institute October drilling summary shows a total of 7,741 wells were drilled nationally between Sept. 26 and Oct. 23. The number breaks down like this: 3,775, or 48.8 percent, were oil wells; 1,875, or 24.2 percent, were gas wells; and 2,091, or 27 percent were dry holes. Of all the wells drilled, 1,402 were exploritory wells. A thousand of the searchers were dry holes, 202 were successfully completed gas wells, and 200 made oil wells.

Museum gets well servicing display

DA&S Oil Well Servicing, Inc., Hobbs, N.M., is sponsoring the well servicing display in the new wing of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum.

The new wing, officially opened November 15 by Vice-President George Bush, houses the well servicing display which includes a wall sized diagram showing and telling what the well servicing pulling unit does at the well site, a display of tools used in well servicing, and the highlight, a 1930's vintage pulling unit, complete with caliche dirt under the wheels.

"This museum is the most complete and accurate one of its type," DA&S chief executive officer Ben Alexander pointed out, "it covers all aspects of the oil industry and is an excellent educational tool."

D.A. "Beach" Snyder, president of the company, commented, "We feel very strongly about our ties to the Permian Basin and to the oil industry of which the Petroleum Museum is an integral part. We are honored that we had a part in the expansion and growth of the Museum."

Oklahoma gas well finaled for 11,000,000 cubic feet

TULSA — Dalco Petroleum Corp. has completed the State D No. 1 well, located in southeast Campbell Field, located in section 36, township 23 north, range 15 west, Major County, Okla.

The company said the well tested with a calculated open flow of 11,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day on a four-point test.

The well was selectively perforated in the Mississippian Meramec Limestone formation, and is expected to deliver 2,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day on a 16/64-inch choke.

Dalco Petroleum Corp. has a 27 percent working interest in the well. The company plans additional drilling on its offsetting acreage.

C & K Petroleum, Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Alaska Interstate Company, has completed a gas discovery in Ship Shoal Block 39, State Lease 8083, approximately 48 miles southeast of Morgan City, La. The well tested at a rate of 8,020,000 cubic feet of natural gas and 31 barrels of 50 percent condensate per day on 20/64" choke with 4,460 psi flowing tubing pressure from perforations in Miocene sand between 16,680 and 16,699 feet. Production is expected to commence in the first quarter of 1982 with development drilling planned for early 1982.

C & K Petroleum is the operator and has a 25 percent working interest in the well and the block which contains 2,851 acres.

Other partners are: Kenai Oil and Gas Inc. through its 1980 Series Three Drilling Program, 25 percent; Flour Oil and Gas Inc., 25 percent Mission Resources, 12.5 percent; Blizzard Resources, 6.25 percent; and Hi-Rigger, 6.25 percent.

HOUSTON — Production has begun from an additional Gulf of Mexico platform on Sabine Pass Block 13 at a combined daily rate of 400 barrels of oil and 7 million cubic feet of natural gas from three wells, Tenneco Oil Exploration and Production announced recently.

Addition of the "B" platform brings total current production from Block 13 to 1,150 barrels of oil and 15 million cubic feet of natural gas a day.

Platform "A", brought on line earlier this summer, has one gas and four oil wells. Tenneco Oil is considering a third platform, said C. W. Nance, senior vice president.

Block 13 is located about 20 miles southeast of the mouth of the Sabine River and is owned 60 per cent by Tenneco, the operator, and 40 percent by Gulf Oil Corporation.

HOUSTON — Moran Energy Inc. has completed a gas discovry located in Brazoria County, Texas.

The Darrington State Farm No. 1-A produced at a rate of 2 million cubic feet of gas and 51 barrels of condensate per day through perforations at a depth interval between 8,245 and 8,253 feet through a 14/64 inch opening. The well also produced at a rate of 1.2 million cubic feet of gas and 6 barrels of condensate per day through perforations at a depth interval between 8,301 and 8,317 feet through a 14/64 inch opening.

Moran Energy is operator and has a 50 percent working interest in the discovery well and in 538 acres in the surrounding area. AA Energy Corporation and Flag-Redfern each have a 25 percent working interest in the well.

HOUSTON — Longhorn Oil and Gas Company has completed the State Tract 6 No. 1, a new field gas condensate discovery located in shallow water in Copano Bay, Refugio County, Texas.

The well is located approximately 30 miles northeast of Corpus Christi, Texas.

The well was drilled to a total depth of ,314 feet, and flowed at the rate of 6,413,000 cubic feet of gas and 134 barrels of condensate per day through 21/64ths inch choke in initial testing. Perforations are between 9,172 and 9,176 feet in the Frio formation. Flowing tubing pressure was 2,545 pounds per square inch. Preliminary calculated open flow was 63,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day.

HOUSTON — With the recent start of commercial production from the Florence 27 No. 1 well, Florida Exploration Company has extended its series of commercially successful gas wells on its Northeast Sonora Prospect in West Texas to a 10 out of 11, with the eleventh well temporarially shut-in.

The prospect is located in Sutton County, approximately 10 miles northeast of the town of Sonora.

Florida Exploration, the oil and gas exploration subsidiary of Continental Group, completed the discovery well on the prospect, the Hunt No. 1, April 1980. Production from the wildcat began a month later. Nine of the 10 development wells have also been completed as gas producers and are on stream, the Company said. Current production is from the Lower Canyon Sand, averaging about 7 million cubic feet of gas and 80 barrels of condensate per day.

Four additional wells on the prospect have been approved for immediate drilling.

Zenith Exploration Company Inc., has completed a new Austin Chalk discovery in Frio County.

The Arturo Ayala No. 1 potentialled for 250 barrels of oil per day plus 50,000 cubic feet of gas per day with no water production. Additional exploratory drilling is proceeding utilizing Zenith's new geophysical techniques. Zenith's other partners include Drexel Oil Company, Dallas, and Glenwood Arrncke, Seguin.

U.S. economic growth going to energy companies

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly all the growth of the U.S. economy is pouring into oil companies' coffers at the expense of the rest of the nation's businesses, says a House subcommittee report.

The report shows that 98 percent of the $19.6 billion in increased profits recorded by all Fortune 500 companies in 1978-1980 went to 56 energy-related firms, according to a spokesman for the House Energy and Commerce investigations subcommittee.

"An even more staggering statistic," said subcommittee staff director Michael F. Barrett Jr., "is that in the Fortune 1,000 list, 82 oil and gas companies obtained 96 percent of the total net income increase.

"This means that more than 900 other companies got to share 4 percent of the total profit increase," Barrett said Wednesday in releasing the report.

"In fact," he said, "if adjustments are made for inflation, we have a ... sharp decline in real profits for all companies other than energy companies."

A spokesman for the American Petroleum Institute said the organization had no immediate comment because it had not seen the report.

The shift in profits to the oil companies is significant, Barrett said, because it deprives U.S. industry of the capital it needs to build and expand plants.

"Capital that would have been available to rebuild American industrial machinery across the economy has been diverted into energy, and especially into the oil and gas industry. ...

"This shift into energy exploitation has reduced the U.S. to the status of a lesser developed country," Barrett concluded. "We are a net exporter of food and raw materials, such as lumber and coal, and we are a net importer of value-added products such as machine tools."

The report was prepared by Dr. Milton Lower Jr., an economist on the subcommittee staff, based on profit data published by Fortune magazine.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., the committee's chairman, described the report as "rather startling" and said its conclusions would be explored by the panel during its continuing hearings on capital formation and industrial policy in the U.S. economy.

300-mile Overthrust pipeline planned

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — A 300-mile pipeline to carry oil from the Overthrust Belt to Casper has been proposed, and a spokesman for one of the companies involved says it could be in operation by 1984.

A news release from Frontier Pipeline Co., a Chicago-based consortium whose principal shareholder is Amoco Pipeline Co., said Tuesday the proposed line would be able to move 200,000 barrels of oil a day.

H.A. Parker, president of Frontier, said the 20-inch diameter line is estimated to cost $100 million and will connect with pipelines in Casper that service Rocky Mountain and Midwest refineries.

Dick McElroy, a spokesman for Amoco Pipeline Co., said Wednesday the project still is in the planning stage, and Frontier has requested permission from the Federal Bureau of Land Management for the pipeline to cross federal land.

Much of the crude oil from the region in southwestern Wyoming now is shipped to Salt Lake City, but McElroy estimated that by 1983, crude production probably will exceed the needs of Salt Lake City refineries.

Parker said Frontier plans to contact other producers in the region as potential investors.

Government approves construction of superport

HOUSTON — The Coastal Corporation announced last week that all necessary government approvals have been received for construction of the nation's first offshore multi-buoy crude oil transshipment terminal.

The terminal, to be called the Gulf Coast Transshipment Terminal (GTT), would be located on the outer continental shelf about 18 miles east of Corpus Christi, Texas, in 120 feet of water. It would consist of three stationary buoys connected by an undersea 36-inch diameter pipeline with a permanently moored storage vessel at one buoy. The buoys would each be 1.5 miles apart.

Crude tankers of as much as 500,000 deadweight tons can moor at one buoy and transfer cargo temporarily into the moored storage vessel or directly into smaller shuttle tankers that can deliver to other U. S. Gulf Coast ports.

GTT will be capable of receiving and loading crude oil at a rate of about 50,000 barrels an hour which means most ultra large crude carriers could be unloaded in about two days.

At a recent news conference, Edwin Rowland, Coastal's vice president of Marine Transportation, said a decision on when to start construction of the GTT facility will be made after completion of a marketing program presently underway. The marketing program seeks to identify prospective users interested in utilizing the facility. Coastal is stressing its intention to give open and non-discriminatory access to all shippers using the facility. Roland said a number of petroleum companies have expressed interest in using the terminal, but no agreements have yet been signed.

GTT, which would cost approximately $30 million, could be operational about 12 months after construction begins. It will be owned and operated by subsidiaries of The Coastal Corporation.

According to Roland, the new terminal offers several advantages over transshipment alternatives now available to crude imporgters on the U.S. Gulf Coast. GTT will provide significant cost savings because large tankers, which cannot enter U.S. Ports, can travel closer to their U.S. destinations by not having to transship their cargoes in the Carribean or Bahamas. Also GTT provides more flexibility than other systems for unloading the largest tankers because it can serve all Gulf Coast ports, not just a single crude terminal.

Another major cost saving to crude importers is improved turn around time for vessels transshipping at GTT compared to ship-to-ship cargo transfers. The improvement results from reduced weather delays, handling of ballast water using GTT's storage vessel and avvailability of temporary storage to receive the incoming cargo when shuttle tankers are not immediately available.

Indiana Standard lowers domestic crude prices

Evidence emerged today that U.S. gasoline prices may not increase soon, despite forecasts by many oil industry analysts that prices would jump about 3 cents a gallon as a result of OPEC's recent pricing agreement.

Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) confirmed today that it lowered by $1 a barrel the price at which it is willing to buy and sell all grades of crude oil produced in the United States.

The reduction, which took effect Monday, came only two weeks after Indiana Standard's production unit, Amoco Production Co., had raised the price by $1 a barrel.

Amoco's retreat appeared to mean domestic prices will remain stable for the time being.

Amoco had boosted the price Nov. 1 in reaction to the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' decision to unify its benchmark oil price at $34 a barrel. That raised the average price of OPEC oil by an estimated 50 cents a barrel, including a $2-a-barrel rise in Saudi Arabia's price.

Although many analysts had expected other U.S. producers to follow Amoco's lead in raising domestic posted prices, the only major producer to do so was Conoco Inc.

The decision by other U.S. producers to retain their prices "put us at a pretty bad competitive price disadvantage," said Carl Meyerdirk, a spokesman for Indiana Standard in Chicago. "We had anticipated that other (producers) were going to post higher prices and therefore possibly cost us some crude."

By raising its price for U.S. crude, Amoco had increased its own operating costs. But holding its price line would have risked letting traders outbid the company for supplies from independent producers. Those traders then could turn around annd sell the oil to Amoco at even higher prices.

That did not happen, and Meyerdirk said the reason was the continued slack demand for petroleum in the United States. Tha meant Amoco was unable to pass to consumers the higher price it paid for its domestic crude.

"If you can't pass the higher crude price on through the product market, the company obviously is losing money," Meyerdirk said.

Although domestic crude prices are holding to levels of before the OPEC pricing agreement, many other non-OPEC nations have boosted their asking prices in recent weeks. They include Mexico, Great Britain and Egypt.

RRC hears proposal to amend Panhandle field rules

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission conducted a pre-hearing conference Tuesday on the application of Phillips Petroleum to amend field rules in eleven Panhandle oil and gas fields.

At the conference, the Panhandle Independent Producers Group filed a motion to dismiss Phillips' application. Phillips also filed a motion requesting an interim order that would put most of the proposed rules changes into effect, pending the hearing on their application.

A decision on both motions will be issued by Commission hearings examiner Susan Kovar. Kovar will also identify the issues to be considered and decide whether or not a hearing will be scheduled.

The Phillips application asks that natural gas liquids recovered from casinghead gas or oil well gas not be reported as crude oil production.

The Pahhandle Independent Producers Group says adoption of that amendment to the field rules will result in the reclassification of many wells from oil to gas wells, forcing many independent producers to shut in their wells because of field spacing rules.

Both sides agreed on the fields which are involved in the proposed rule change. They are the Panhandle oil fields in Osborn, Carson, Collingsworth, Gray, Hutchinson, Moore Wheeler, and Potter counties. Also the Panhandle East, Pahhandle West, and Albany-Dolomite gas fields.

Field rules are established by the Railroad Commission for the proper density and spacing of wells and the allocation of production in a given field.

AUSTIN — The Texas Railroad Commission approved for publication and comment a proposed change in statewide spacing rules affecting salt dome oil and gas fields.

The rule 37 change, expected to appear in the November 20 edition of the Texas Register, will allow for administrative approval of applications for classification of salt dome fields. The application for this designation must include geological evidence of the certain characteristics and requirements for this special classification and certification that notice has been given to operators and unleased mineral owners of surrounding areas.

Special rules for this type of field are adopted because it's likely that each well will be completed in a separate reservoir in these formations. Therefore, it is unlikely that any well will damage the reservoir of another well. There are many wells per field in most oil and gas fields, making required spacing neessary to insure equitable distribution of the hydrocarbons among the mineral lease owners.

If this amendment is adopted it will greatly reduce the amount of time necessary to process these applications. Under the change, a hearing will be held if there are any protests to the classification. If the Oil and Gas Division fails to approve the application, the applicant may appeal to the Railroad Commissioners.

AUSTIN — Twenty-five gas-producing formations in Texas have been recommended since mid-1980 by the Railroad Commission to be designated tight formations by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. Of these, the FERC has approved 10.

Under provisions of the federal Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, gas produced from FERC-designated tight gas sands can be sold at a price that is twice the going rate for production from new onshore wells. Teh tight sands designation was intended to provide an incentive to explore for and develop gas from formations thatt are difficult to produce.

Although determination of a tight formation must be made by the FERC, an appropriate state agency — in Texas, the Railroad Commission — must recommend such action to the FERC.

To date, the FERC has approved as tight formations the Cotton Valley Sandstone in Northeast Texas, the Canyon Sandstone in southwest Texas, the Cisco Sandstone in Reagan County, the Vicksburg U-V formation and Y formation in Hidalgo County, the Midway Sandstone in Grimes and Montgomery counties, the Lower Wilcox in Austin, Colorado, and Wharton counties, the Wilcox Lobo Sandstone in Webb and Zapata counties, the Travis Peak formation in Cherokee County, and the Edwards Limestone in DeWitt, Karnes and Lavaca counties.

The Railroad Commission has recommended that these formations also be designated tight formation: Travis Peak addition (Bear Grass area) in Freestone and Leon counties; Wilcox in the Aviators, N. (12,000) Field area of Webb County; the Frio in Willacy County; Cotton Valley in the Paige, N.E. Field area of Bastrop County; the Navarro in Webb County; the Wilcox in the Bonus, S. (13,900) Field of Wharton County: the Roma, W. (Wilcox 10,100) Field in Starr County; the El Benadito, S. (Lower Vicksburg) in Starr County; the Deep Vicksburg formation in Starr County; the Wolf (Wolfcamp) formation in Loving Counthy; the Gomez, N.W. (Wolfcamp) in Pecos County; the Sally (Cisco) field in Reagan and Sterling counties; the nravis Peak formation in northeast Texas; the Massive A formation in the Chapa, East Field of Live Oak County; and the Olmos formation in Webb and Dimmit counties.

AUSTIN — A total of 17 permits to operate new pipelines in Texas were granted by the Railroad Commission In October 1981, according to the RRC's Oil and Gas Division.

Therteen of the permits were for gathering pipelines, two were for trunk transmission lines, and one was for a feed stock line. Another was for other purposes.

Gathering lines ring oil and gas from production leases, while a trunk transmission line is a larger diameter line into which smaller lines connect. Feed stock is crude oil or other hydrocarbons that are basic materials for refining or manufacturing processes.

Thirteen of the newly-permitted pipelines will transport gas, two will move crude oil and condensates and one will transport petroleum products. Another will move other materials.

Private pipelines accounted for 12 permits last month, while four were for common carriers and one was for a gas utility. A common carrier performs public work for hire, such as the movement of petroleum products.

In October, five permits were gramted in Southeast Texas, four in East Texas, three each in deep South Texas and the Refugio area, and, and one each in the Panhandle and the Lubbock area.

Gathering lines approved:

Ferguson Crossing Pipeline Co., San Antonio, gas, Bee County; Intrastate Gathering Corp., San Antonio, gas, Fort Bend County; Trans-Pan Gathering, Inc., Dallas, gas, Hutchinson County; Gulf Coast Gas Corp., Corpus Christi, gas, Goliad and Victoria counties; Clayco Pipeline Co., Houston, crude and condensates, Burleson County; Davidson Creek Limited Partnership, Houston, crude and condensates, Burleson County; T-Gas Pipeline Co., Houston, gas, Live Oak County; South Texas Gathering Co., Houston, gas, Madison County; HGG, Inc., Dallas, gas, Hidalgo County; Tejas Gas Corp., Corpus Christi, gas, Gregg and Upshur counties; Seagull Pipeline Corp., Houston, gas, Angelina County; South Texas Gathering Co., Houston, gas, Houston County; and South Texas Gathering Co.,Houston, gas, Madison County.

Trunk transmission lines approved:

Esperanza Transmission Co., Corpus Christi, gas, Starr County; Liberty Natural Gas Co., Dallas, gas, Nacogdoches County.

Feed stock lines approved:

Seagull Products Co., Houston, petroleum products, Jefferson County.

Other lines approved:

Carbon Dioxide Technology Corp., Houston, other materials, Garza, Lubbock, and Lynn counties.

Alaskan gas pipeline financing bill advances

WASHINGTON (AP) — Critics of the special financing package for the $43 billion Alaska natural gas pipeline will have one last chance to kill the proposal, which they say could cost consumers billions of dollars.

Opponents of the project lost by wide margins Thursday in both the full Senate and a key House committee, leaving only a majority vote on the House floor before the package wins final approval. That is expected early next month.

Critics contend the package shifts the enormous financial risk of building the pipeline to consumers because it contains provisions that could force homeowners to pay for construction before the pipeline is finished.

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, who led the Senate opposition, argued Thursday that the package was "unfair, inequitable and unjust ... without question as anti-consumer as almost any legislation we've ever had before us."

Few lawmakers were convinced. The Senate approved the package 75-19, and the House Energy and Commerce Committee approved it 27-14. The House Interior Committee voted 32-7 in favor of the package earlier this month.

"I am hopeful that the House will not stand in the way of a private construction project and jeopardize our ability to raise sufficient funds on the world market," said John G. McMillian, chairman of the Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Co., the principal U.S. sponsor of the pipeline.

Commercializing space

As the space shuttle Columbia is readied for its third flight into space, public attention has once again been focused on the United States' space program.

One of the key aspects of space exploration to be addressed since Columbia has proven beyond a doubt that repeated space flights are possible from a single craft is this: What role will the private sector play in the development of the "final frontier?"

Little more than a week ago a New Jersey business concern, Space Transporation Co., approached officials of the federal office of Science and Technology Policy with a plan to buy a shuttle orbiter which it would then lease to either the National Aeronautics and Space Administration or a private entity.

The success of Columbia has brought to the attention of researchers, scientists, government officials and business interests the indisputable probability of the commercialization of space. It's a probability made only more certain by the simple fact that in this age of fiscal restraint by the federal government, private enterprise may provide the only avenue through which the nation's space program may continue.

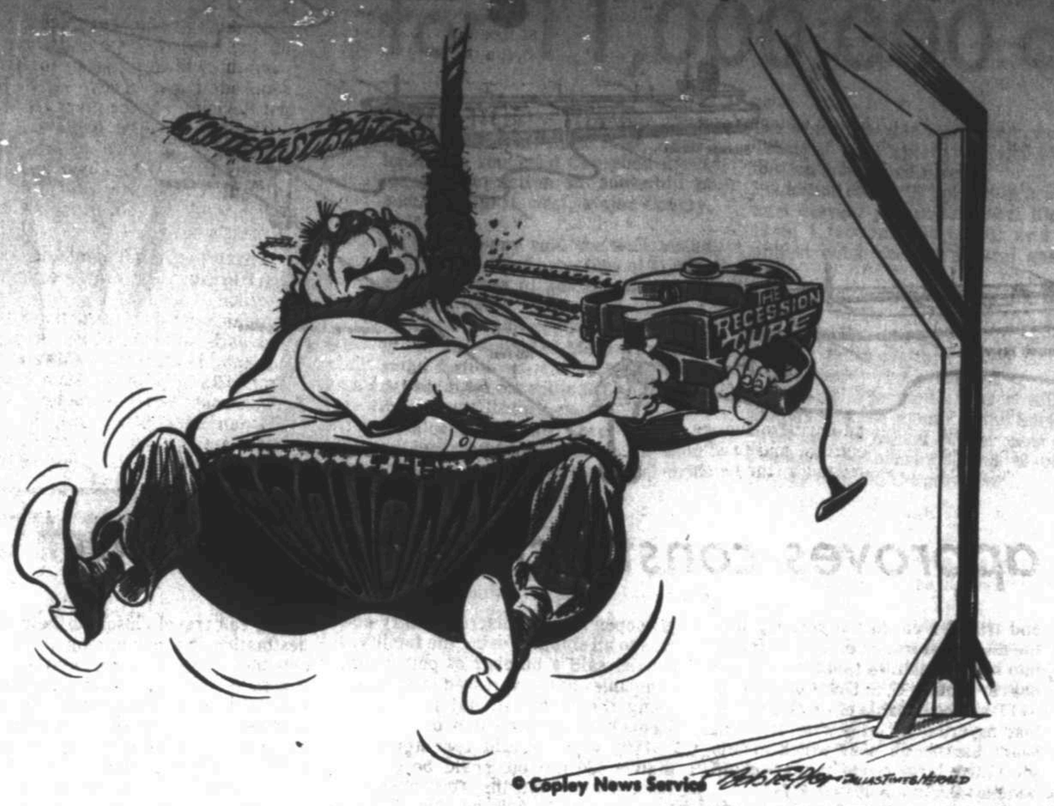

Dr. Klaus Heiss, who directed economic studies that led to the original space shuttle program, recognized that fact when he noted, "We think now, particularly in the current budget environment, that private financing is a key symbol and in fact, more than a symbol of space policy in the 1980s." Dr. Heiss now is helping to guide Space Transportation's plan to buy a shuttle.

The United States space program has suffered dramatically under the Reagan administration's economic plan, a course mandated by the American people. The nation already has canceled its participation in the International Solar Mission to probe the sun's effects on the earth and scrapped a mission to explore Haley's comet when it makes its pass by the earth later this decade.

Other space programs have been canceled or reduced in scope to keep the shuttle program alive. Yet the commercializaion of space truly could provide a way to continue the space program that would not be economically crippling to the government.

Down through history private enterprise has proven time and again it can do what government cannot, faster and, usually, cheaper. While it's understandable that the government would want to keep some control over what type of commercial ventures became involved in space efforts, key figures in both the public and private sectors say the development of space commerce is essential to maintain the United States' role in space.

The future for the space program can be a bright one. Private enterprise can show the way. It's an idea for which we think the time has arrived!

The president's 'secret'

Why does Ronald Reagan smile so often and so cheerfully while storms of controversy swirl around the presidential head? Good health, that's why.

Democrats as well as Republicans, especially those in the vicinity of three score and 10 years of age, may well be impressed by the physical fitness of America's 70-year-old leader. Miraculously, he came through an assassination attempt with chin up and heart strong.

The "secret" of his stamina, which oughtn't to be a secret to anyone who wants to live a long life, is common sense. He chops wood, rides horses, and exercises at least 20 minutes every day. He keeps the weight on his 6-foot-1 frame down to 184 pounds by going slow on cholesterol and calories.

Dr. Daniel Ruge, the White House physician, put the president's health in perspective after the recent annual checkup by saying Mr. Reagan demonstrates "excellent cardio-vascular fitness." Dr. Robert N. Butler, director of the National Institute on Aging, said the president's condition carries a message for the nation's old folks:

"Like a lot of older Americans, he's in very good shape. He could be a very important model for older people and all people."

Remember when it was being remarked that Ronald Reagan, at 69-going-on-70, was "too old" to be president? It wasn't so long ago.

Let us forget politics for the moment,and say, "Here's to his health!"

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Fed agencies could've halted silver binge

WASHINGTON — The great silver scandal of 1980, which boosted the price of silver products into orbit, poses a warning for Ronald Reagan. He should be cautious about emasculating the federal regulatory agencies.

Jack Anderson

These entrenched bureaucratic empires have driven small businesses into despair or bankruptcy by their niggling insistence on dotting every "i" and crossing every "t." They are, in the Reagan view, the social tinkers who want to impose their Olympian view of life on every American.

The president is justified in his assessment, but not all regulations are bad.

A good example can be taken from the boom and bust in silver in the last six months of 1979 and the first three months of 1980. The federal regulatory agencies that should have prevented this multibillion-dollar attempt to corner the market in silver were not doing their job.

If you think this was just a battle of the big boys with no impact on the average American, forget it. Hearing-aid batteries cost 45 cents apiece when the silver boom started in July 1979. By March 1980 — just before the silver market collapsed — the same batteries cost 95 cents. And somehow, even after the price of the silver used in these tiny batteries dropped back to near-normal prices, they still cost 80 cents a year after the speculative binge began.

There was a similar effect on other consumer goods that depend on silver: X-ray paper, photographic film, brazing alloys, sterling-silver tableware and electrical parts, among other things.

As just one example, the GAF Corporation discontinued its production of X-ray film because of "sharply increased and chaotic" silver prices, and closed a plant employing 630 workers.

"Small users, people who need X-rays, film, hearing aid batteries or electronic conductors, continue to pay for the 1979-80 spiral," according to a still-unreleased draft report on the silver scandal prepared by the staff of the House Commerce, Consumer and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee and reviewed by my associates Tony Capaccio and Vicki Warren.

In case you've forgotten, the speculative bubble in silver burst on March 27, 1980. Within 24 hours, the artificially inflated price of the metal dropped to $10.85 an ounce. That was a 33 percent decrease, and $39.50 less than silver's manipulated high of $50.35 an ounce two months earlier.

In the first weeks of 1980, the price of silver had gotten so high that family heirlooms were being melted down for sale by the ounce, and the family with a set of sterling-silver tableware was well advised to hide it in the attic or rent a safe-deposit box to thwart burglars cashing in on the boom.

The congressional investigators laid blame for the 675 percent increase in silver during the boom period on the speculative manipulations of two groups — one headed by the Hunt brothers of Texas, the other known as the Conti group.

What was common to both — and is a matter of grave concern to the House subcommittee — is the fact that wealthy Arabs were involved in both of the wheeler-dealer combines that were trying to corner the silver market.

The size of the speculators' holdings was enormous; according to the House investigators, by December 1979, the two groups — Hunt and Conti — "controlled through futures contracts for delivery more than 250 million ounces of silver, almost 100 million more ounces than total U.S. industrial consumption in all of 1979."

The speculative hoarding — the attempt to corner the market in silver and thus have monopoly control of its price — went on for more than seven months. There are explicit government regulations that frown on such activities.

Yet the federal agencies that should have moved in, simply didn't. In fact, it wasn't until March 26, 1980, the day before the bottom dropped out of the silver market, that officials from the agencies that could have done something even got together on the silver problem. On that day, officials of the Treasury, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Federal Reserve Board and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission finally met to exchange information and opinions.

The Federal Reserve failed to keep bankers from lending money to the silver speculators. The SEC failed to crack down on brokers who were also lending money to the speculators. The CFTC failed to set speculative limits and otherwise use its authority to regulate commodity trading. The Treasury failed to exercise its overall control of ventures that affect taxes and the nation's economy.

In short, it was an incredible example of the federal government's regulatory agencies — each of them set up by Congress to protect the public from a specific threat — simply rolling over and playing dead when the Hunt brothers and their Arab friends decided to corner the silver market.

As the congressional investigators warned, "a wealthy group of traders could acquire large quantities of a commodity through cash and futures transactions and unduly affect the commodity's price level and volatility."

The ironic footnote to this chronicle of financial freebooting is that when the Hunts' silver bubble burst, the federal government rushed in to bail them out. If the regulatory agencies had done their jobs in the first place, there would have been no need for this rescue effort.

State Department adversaries foiling Reagan's plans

WASHINGTON — Well-wrought foreign policy can clarify not only a president's aims but also those of adversaries. President Reagan's "zero-option" policy regarding medium-range missiles in Europe will clarify the aims of the Soviet government, Europe's "peace" movement, and the U.S. State Department.

George F. Will

Russia has about 270 SS-20s targeted at Europe; it will have at least one re-fire missile for each launcher; each missile has three warheads. So the relevant number regarding this single component of the Russian intermediate-range missile threat is: 270 x 2 x 3 or 1620. And they are deploying another SS-20 each week. And they have SS-4s and SS-5s deployed. The relevant number for the United States is: 0. We have no intermediate-range missiles in Europe.

NATO has reluctantly resolved to deploy some in response to Soviet deployments. But the president proposes to forgo deployment if Russia will bring about balance by removing its missiles. His proposal will succeed either in making the world safer by reducing force levels, or in making the world wiser by demonstrating that Russia is not interested in balance or reductions, anywhere — a fact made clear in the SALT I and SALT II negotiations.

If the president's proposal does not mollify Europe's "peace" movement, that, too, will be clarifying. The "disarmament" movement does not protest ongoing Russian deployments; it protests NATO's proposal for beginning counter-deployments two years (100 more Soviet missiles) from now. The "peace" movement's selective indignation reflects the movement's two driving passions: desire for appeasement (that is, fear) and anti-Americanism.

The forces of an Asiatic despotism have been in central Europe for 36 years, deterred by inferior numbers of conventional U.S. forces backed by superior nuclear forces. Why are there people now in Europe's streets demanding unilateral disarmament? Because the balance of strategic and especially theater nuclear forces has shifted dramatically in Russia's favor, and deterrence seems less stable.

Between 1949 (the formation of NATO) and 1979 (the invasion of Afghanistan; Russia's disdainful indifference regarding President Carter's complaints about "unacceptable" forces in Cuba), there was confidence in the superiority of U.S. strength, and there was no fear that that strength would be used aggressively. Today Russia has superiority, and there is fear that it may throw its weight around unless appeased.

In 1977, when Brezhnev brusquely rejected Carter's SALT proposal for significant reductions of force levels, Carter's administration became repentant about its "unrealistic" proposal and began negotiating with itself. When Brezhnev recognizes that Reagan's administration is made of sterner stuff and will stick with its proposal, Brezhnev will change the subject.

The proper subject is missiles — weapons with short flight times and high accuracy. Brezhnev will talk about what he calls U.S. "forward-based systems," principally aircraft. But Russia has more nuclear-capable aircraft than the United States has aircraft of all sorts. Indeed, U.S. "forward-based" aircraft can barely reach Russian territory on one-way "kamikaze" missions, and cannot reach most targets even on such missions. (U.S. aircraft are primarily for battlefield support in the event of Soviet penetration of Western Europe.)

Predictably, domestic critics of the president's proposals already are saying it is "unrealistic" to expect Russia to reverse any deployment. But the implication of this is that the United States either must match Russian deployments before negotiations begin (something the critics are loathe to do), or must enter negotiations reconciled to an unequal outcome and contemp to negotiate only about its degree of inferiority.

The State Department opposed the "zero option" and is not a gracious loser: It is sabotaging the president's policy by leaking criticism and spreading destructive hints that the administration has prepared a fall-back position in anticipation of retreat. Actually, there neither is nor will be such a position.

The "zero option" was authored across the Potomac, in the Pentagon, and there is a certain sniffiness in Foggy Bottom about ideas originated elsewhere. Furthermore, the State Department cannot bear the thought of Soviet intransigence because the diplomatic mentality is more concerned with "movement" than with the direction in which we are moving. That is why, until now, the dismal pattern has been for the U.S. policymakers either to "pre-negotiate" the U.S. position, putting forward only proposals they think the Russians might accept, or preparing and even intimating in advance a path of retreat to a more "realistic" position. In either case, panic about Russian obduracy has achieved for Russia in Washington much of what Russia should have had to seek (and should have failed to achieve) at the negotiating table.

Today the president needs an "almost zero" policy toward the adversaries in the State Department. He should sack nine out of every 10, as a lesson to the rest.

ART BUCHWALD

The computer could have told you that!

I finally got sucked in by all the ads and bought a home computer. The day it arrived and I unpacked it, my wife said: "What did you buy that for?"

Art Buchwald

"Because it will solve all our household economic problems. All I have to do is feed the computer how much money we have coming in and how much money we have going out, and it will tell us if we're spending too much."

"I can tell you that," she said.

"Ah, yes, but this computer can tell it to us 100 times faster. Let me show you. We have to buy a new furnace for $3,500, or we can have the old furnace repaired for $2,000. How much will we save by having it repaired?"

"Nothing," my wife said.

"You're wrong. The computer says we'll save $1,500."

"Did the computer tell you even if we have the old furnace repaired, there is no guarantee it will work, and then it will cost us $5,500?"

"How does the computer know it won't work?"

"It doesn't. But the furnace man said he couldn't guarantee it."

"Well, then, we'll have to feed that in. A computer is only as good as the information it receives."

"Tell it the furnace man said if the old one fails on us after it's repaired, the house will fill up with carbon monoxide, which we won't be able to smell."

"All right."

"What did it say?"

"We're all going to die."

"I could have told you that," my wife said.

"But not as fast as the computer," I pointed out. "There are always people putting down computers because they don't understand them. Now I will type in how much I make, and how much I will save under Ronald Reagan's tax cuts. In the first year we will be ahead by $1,780."

"The computer's wrong. We will be behind by $2,560."

"How can you say that?"

"Our real estate taxes came today. The city has raised them by 25 percent to make up for the tax cuts Reagan gave the people."

"Why didn't you tell me that before I fed the computer?"

"Why didn't Reagan tell us that before he gave out a tax cut?"

"I know what your problem is. You're afraid of my computer, and you are showing your hostility by pretending to know more than it does. But we programmers are used to skeptics. I shall now prove to you that this electronic marvel is worth every dollar I paid for it. Let's say we are spending roughly $30 a week for groceries."

"You couldn't get a roast beef for $30."

"You mean we're spending more than $30 a week for groceries?"

"Would you believe $150 a week?"

"Nobody spends $150 a week for groceries."

"Put it in the computer, buster. Now ask it where we can cut down on our food budget? ... What does it say?"

"It keeps repeating the words, 'FOOD STAMPS.'"

"I could have told you that."

"I will not be deterred. This home computer is programmed to tell you how you can make enormous cuts in your electricity bills. I will put in this disk, and type in the question, 'How can I save on electricity?'"

"What does it say?"

"Turn off all the lights in the house when you aren't using them."

"Do you know how we could have really saved money this year? By not buying that stupid computer."

"Maybe you're right. I'll call the man who sold it to me and tell him we really don't need it."

I returned a few moments later.

"What did he say?" my wife asked.

"He said he wouldn't take it back."

"I could have told you that."

MARK RUSSELL SAYS

Have you noticed how our leaders are starting to refer to taxes as "revenue enhancements"? Sneaky, eh? This way, if you don't call them taxes any more, nobody can say you raised them.

Revenue enhancements, indeed. Fear not, federalese fans, the old Washington flim-flam lives.

Since they finally admitted they can't balance the budget, what will they start calling it — a revenue suppressant?

Another problem word is unemployment. How can we lower it? Call it something else. How about revenue depletion?

The revenue depleted will always be with us. That's one of life's certainties — like death and revenue enhancements.

David Dean getting back to basics — in several senses

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Secretary of State David Dean, at just over one month in office, already is making some major changes — and some other not-so-major ones.

One of the most obvious ones is the reappearance of the heart-of-pine floors in his office, which had gone back under the carpet of his predecessor, George Stake.

But Dean assures visitors that his office is keeping a close eye on the taxpayers' money on all levels. "We saved the carpet," he notes, in case the next holder of the office wants it back.

Dean, 33, an attorney and native of Dallas, has served as an aide and campaign worker for two governors — Dolph Briscoe and Bill Clements, with the latter moving him from general counsel and head of the governor's criminal justice division to head the office first held by Stephen F. Austin.

"There have been a lot of good people in this office," Dean comments. "And there's a lot of responsibility..."

As secretary of state, Dean is in charge of 190 employees who perform such tasks as registering new corporations, publishing State agencies' regulations and overseeing operation of auto clubs.

But it is the secretary of state's role as chief election officer of Texas that gives the office its primary importance.

Acting in that capacity, Dean can issue written opinions on election matters, just as the attorney general may issue written opinions on other matters.

And he has the authority to oversee the conduct of elections, and to allocate funds appropriated by the Legislature for the cost of holding party primaries.

That latter power has been one of the things which has occupied much of Dean's time in recent days — since the Legislature has appropriated $5.5 million for holding primary elections in 1982, and the cost is expected to run $6.5 million.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Part of the reason, Dean explains is that 1982 is likely to see a large number of contested races — and for the first time, he says, the Republicans are expecting a runoff.

So Dean called State Democratic Party Chairman Bob Slagle, Sherman, and Texas Republican Party Chairman Chet Upham, Mineral Wells, in for a meeting to discuss the situation — and met with the party chairmen for the six most populous counties in Texas.

"We think what we came up with was an equitable solution," Dean says.

In addition to deciding how to divide up the available money, Dean has come up with a proposal for getting some additional money — if the Internal Revenue Service gives its okay.

The proposal, he explains, is for county party officials to seek contributions from local supporters — including corporate contributions, which would be sent to the secretary of state's office.

That office would then issue a check back to the county organization for its election expenses.

Dean says an Austin tax attorney has assisted in preparing the proposal, and his office is seeking a ruling from IRS on whether such contributions would be tax deductible.

Dean also is working on giving more authority on local election matters to local officials, noting that in the past, the secretary of state's office has exercised its power to set polling places, fix pay for election workers and determine other matters in a "very detailed" way.

"We'll be using minimum guidelines to guarantee the integrity of the election process," Dean says.

And while he's planning to give more leeway to local officials, Dean also says he's planning to watch closely how they use that power — including by auditing election expenses of the six largest counties (which, he reports, hasn't been done in the past).

Dean also plans to implement a strong voter registration program, with attempts to register more high school seniors, new arrivals in Texas who aren't familiar with voter registration procedures, and minority group members.

He also says he'll be working hard to enforce Texas' laws on voting rights, and to assure that local officials are complying with the Federal Voting Rights Act — which he strongly supports.

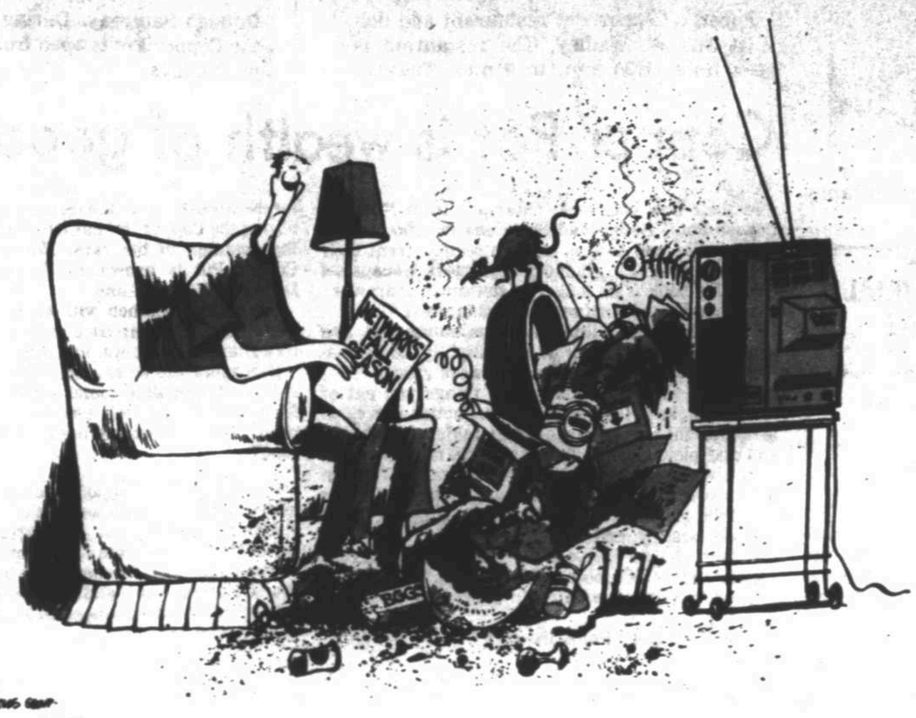

"It's been good for Texas," he says of the act. "It has increased the participation of minority voters...It's made people...a little cautious and a little more conscientious."

Dean also says he feels there should be provisions for jurisdictions to come out from under the act — after they've demonstrated they aren't discriminating against any voters.

Dean's other projects include a "massive voter integrity project" for 1982 — again stressing that any abuse of voting rights "will not be tolerated" by his office.

"In Texas," Dean says, "and in any other state, voting rights are the most sacred rights you have."

And, he adds, he intends to protect them — and to encourage people to use them.

KINGSBURY-SMITH

If employment peaks at 10 percent, it will come as no surprise to Reagan

By JOSEPH KINGSBURY-SMITH
National Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — A peak of 10 percent unemployment within the next year would come as no great surprise to President Reagan.

Murray F. Weidenbaum, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, created a stir in organized labor circles this week by predicting the jobless rate might hit nine percent before the president's policies produce sufficient economic growth to provide enough work to overcome the high unemployment problem.

However, Reagan, months before he was elected, forecast the possibility of 10 percent unemployment during the early phase of his administration even if Congress approved his economic recovery program.

He told a group of Hearst senior executives and editors in June, 1980, that he thought the next president was "going to inherit nine or 10 percent unemployment and double digit inflation."

His prediction concerning inflation proved correct, although the recession produced by high interest rates and soaring federal deficits has caused the inflationary rate to drop below the double digit level. Weidenbaum foresees it averaging 8 percent or less by the end of next year.

Administration optimists had hoped that congressional approval of the president's tax and budget cuts would have the psychological effect of stimulating the economy even before the cuts became effective. It was thought by some of the White House economic advisers that this would lead to increased productivity that would hold unemployment around eight percent until the president's economic recovery program started making good progress.

However, the stock market and big business generally did not become convinced the president's program would quickly turn the economy around and lead to a balanced budget by the end of 1984. On the contrary, there was widespread belief that the combination of tax cuts and increased military spending would lead to huge federal deficits which would keep interest rates high.

With Republicans and Democrats in Congress opposing further drastic budget cuts or increased taxes to curb the rising deficits, the president's recovery program faces a rocky road in the months ahead.

The president and his adviser profess to be confident that by next summer, the worst will be over and the country will be pulling out of the recession. Weidenbaum, on the CBS "Face the Nation" program recently, said "a year from now, we should be looking at a much stronger economy." Meanwhile, unemployment is expected to increase to somewhere between 9 and 10 percent of the work force, and the president has now abandoned hope of balancing the budget by the end of 1984.

What astonishes many members of Congress, including some Republicans, is what led the president's economic advisers to encourage him to believe in the beginning that his combination of tax and budget cuts coupled with greatly increased military spending would enable him to achieve a balanced budget in 1984.

Early last spring, Representative Henry S. Reuss, chairman of the Congressional Joint Economic Committee, told the Washington staff of the Hearst Newspapers that the committee's computer showed the reduction in revenues caused by the tax cuts coupled with the increased military spending would create a budget deficit of $111 billion in 1984. As late as September 24, President Reagan, in his address to the nation, was still talking about balancing the budget in 1984, although he said further budget cuts would be necessary to achieve that goal.

Budget Director David Stockman, in an interview with a Washington Post reporter last spring that was finally published in the current issue of the Atlantic Monthly, said it was clear at that time that the economic program would lead to huge deficits and the only hope of getting a balanced budget by '84 would be to make more drastic cuts in welfare costs, curb military spending and increase taxes.

Thinking about thoughts

Whoever came up with the expression "a penny for your thoughts" must have thought he was getting a bargain for his last cent. But it might have occurred to him that he might get gypped.

Thoughts are curious phenomena: They bring prosperity to some people and poverty to others, spiritual enrichment to a few and misery to more, and prompt some to think and others to forget.

But "just thinking" such and such without discerning what's for real has brought much misery to many.

Thoughts.

Moment-by-moment thoughts and what a person takes in by his senses contributes to making a person what he is and the best — or worst — of what he can become. The phenomenon is similar to the building of an edifice — from a shanty to a pyramid. Either can be the best in some sort of category. Either can be common or a sham.

Thoughts have turned dreams to nightmares. Thoughts, elevated to ideas, have made man noble. Thoughts run helter-skelter have brought man misery and discontent. But those same thoughts, once blessed with some of that magical positive stuff, somehow have brought sanity where once insanity reigned in all of its direction-less force.

Negative thoughts about self can be destructive in a spiritual and physical way. Most everybody knows that; that's universal knowledge. But the power is in seeking for the negative to be expunged and for the positive to fill the void.

The generalized remedy is oh so easy to generally prescribe. That's another way of saying that "advice is cheap." Friend-to-friend, that's often true. It also can be invaluable.

Thoughts. They are amazing building blocks. How they are used in every area of a person's life largely will determine what that person becomes. It also has a lot to do with how often Murphy's Law enters that person's life.

One-sided story

To The Editor:

Enclosed is an editorial by Grant Mabry, of The Stanton Reporter, which I think expresses the feelings of most people in Stanton about your reporter Richard Orr's article on Stanton. I seems he is pretty good at writing one-sided stories, or his versions.

We do not understand why Midland likes to knock Stanton so much. Stanton has always supported Midland. It was very strong on Midland's side in the UTPB argument. A lot of people do shopping for things not available in Stanton in Midland, just as Midland people shop in Dallas for things not available in Midland. I had a resident of Midland tell me last week that Midland was a good place to work but nothing to do there. If you wanted entertainment and excitement you had to go to Dallas or Houston. That is a lot of bunk, just as nothing to do in Stanton is a lot of bunk. People from Dallas and Houston look at Midland like Mr. Orr looks at Stanton.

Did it ever occur to you that a lot of people do not like the traffic congestion, busing and "Big City" life? Maybe there are some good points in living in Stanton or the Greenwood community or other smaller places.

Up until the time of Orr's article, we did not have a lot of problems for our police force, but I believe our police force can handle the problems that come up. If they can't I will assure you that the City Fathers will take action to correct the problem.

In other words, "Try it, you might like it." We do.

Paige Eiland

EDITOR'S NOTE: It's difficult to see how Stanton was depicted in an unfavorable light by the story. On the contrary, the writer has fond memories of summers in his early life spent in just such a community in central Illinois.

And no mention...

To The Editor:

After reading Ed Todd's article on the Yucca Theatre, "Yucca Theatre Again Labeled 'Pride of the Southwest' " (R-T 11-15-81), and viewing the accompanying photograph, I sat in stunned amazement, not knowing whether to laugh or cry or curse the darkness.

Although fleeting mention was made of the Midland Community Theatre's renewable lease and the Summer Mummers, no mention whatsoever was made of the 350 to 375 volunteers who gave countless hours of their time and energy so that the Yucca Theatre could be refurbished and restored to permanent use in order to qualify for the Texas historical marker.

Where would the Midland County Historical Society be in this regard without Midland Community Theatre's volunteers, the Ham Hocks, and those not ordinarily involved with the theatre who dropped in to help with the renovation?

This is not to deny credit due the Midland County Historical Society but to protest in the strongest way the failure to mention the backstage work that made the "onstage performance" possible.

I am an MCT volunteer and proud of it.

'Hallelujah!'

To The Editor:

For years I have been a regular attendant at performances of the various branches of the arts here in Midland.

And it has been interesting to read reviews of these performances in The Reporter-Telegram.

I have noticed that, when the reviewer gave a glowing report of an event, all parties involved in the production sat back and smiled, basking in the praise.

But there have also been reviews which were nothing more than a string of ambiguous, tongue-in-cheek phrases, and the reader could not tell what the critic really felt.

Very occasionally the reviewer would have the temerity to give a less than glowing account, and then, heaven help him from the wrath that would come down upon him.

Now, however, we have an arts reviewer who right or wrong, does have the courage to express her honest opinion and the devil may take the hindmost.

I say, "Hallelujah!"

Another article

To The Editor:

Recently The Reporter-Telegram ran another full page article telling taxpayers how wonderful it is that our sheriff's deputies work so hard running and taking tests to get a badge pinned on them. I would guess all this publicity on hard running and test taking quality deputies was designed to impress taxpayers and justify another huge raise. The fact that the sheriff's budget has tripled since 1976, to over a million and a quarter dollars in 1982, needs justification.

It should be common knowledge that since 1969 "all peace officers" in our great state of Texas have to be certified of having high standards and education to get a badge, certainly not just Midland County deputies.

As a taxpayer I, for one, am not impressed by a deputy that can run fast or take a test made up by who knows. What does impress me as a taxpayer is what I read in The Reporter-Telegram where some of these quality sheriff's employees occasionally make false arrests, let prisoners escape, take sexual liberties with female prisoners, and to quote the sheriff "after all, they (inmates) wouldn't be in jail if they weren't thieves, murderers and rapists." I guess this is supposed to make it alright, even though our Constitution says these people are innocent, until proven guilty, by a court and jury. It also seems, from what I read, that these fast running, test taking deputies seemingly wreck more cars each year than the Commissioner's would even buy for the "Good Old Boys."

What I am saying is that I think all of us taxpayers in Midland should be concerned with the inequity going on down at the courthouse. Since our newspapers are always talking about parity, let's first get some parity in Midland County!

Since 80 percent of our county population is in the city of Midland why not combine all our county policing under the chief of police, that would save the taxpayers about a million dollars a year. Maybe then we would have some police officers to assist taxpayers that wouldn't have to spend all their time learning how to run fast and take tests, to get a badge pinned on them.

Do it with style

To The Editor:

Saturday, Nov. 14, our family attended the Region 6-A Marching Contest held in Barrett Stadium in Odessa.

We were very proud of the students' and teachers' efforts that placed them in first division ratings for the high school and freshmen schools and the second division ratings for all three of the junior high schools.

It was disappointing to realize that Midland is the only town that does not furnish their junior high and freshmen bands with full dress band uniforms. It would seem that a town this size and with the financial backing available that the bands could be outfitted properly so that towns of a few thousand population wouldn't be showing up the "white-collar" city. Let's get with it and not only show off in talent, but in style.

Another item that I was made aware of is the fact the Midland school district policy prohibits Midland schools from participating in any state-level band contests if they are going on to the Rose Bowl or to a spring regional concert competition. Folks if you have bands that are good enough to earn a first division rating, then you ought to back them all the way in their state competition too.

If Midland is really as proud of her bands as she says she is, then I think it's time to get with it.

Creating criminals

To The Editor:

We all want to believe that most people are basically good, but there must be a lot of people here in Midland who aren't. If you just look at one area of crime alone — stealing bicycles — you get the impression that there are a lot of people who condone stealing.

Every year many bicycles are stolen, a good number of which the police department recovers and sells at auction. Many are not recovered though, so you have to ask yourself where are they. They are at somebody's house! Now ask yourself what kind of parent sees their child bring a new or different bicycle home and allows them to keep that stolen bike. Surely they couldn't be naive enough to believe some story their child makes up; so they just allow their child to get away with committing the crime.

About three weeks ago our oldest son's blue Huffy Z-2 bicycle was stolen out of our yard and then last night our youngest son's bike was also stolen from our yard. We had a police officer come by the house and were told that a lot more bicycles are stolen at Christmas time; which means that parents are out stealing bicycles! What kind of person goes out and robs some children of their Christmas presents so they can give them to their own children — pretty low I think. Being poor is no excuse to steal, especially from children; but I guess lack of morals and lack of any character is an excuse.

So, if your child brings a stolen bicycle home and you allow it, then will you allow it when that child later comes home with a stolen car or a sack of cash from a liquor store? If you let your child get away with stealing a bicycle, you just might be creating a future criminal; or maybe that child will gow up to be the sorry type of individual who will steal from children.

She has the right

To The Editor:

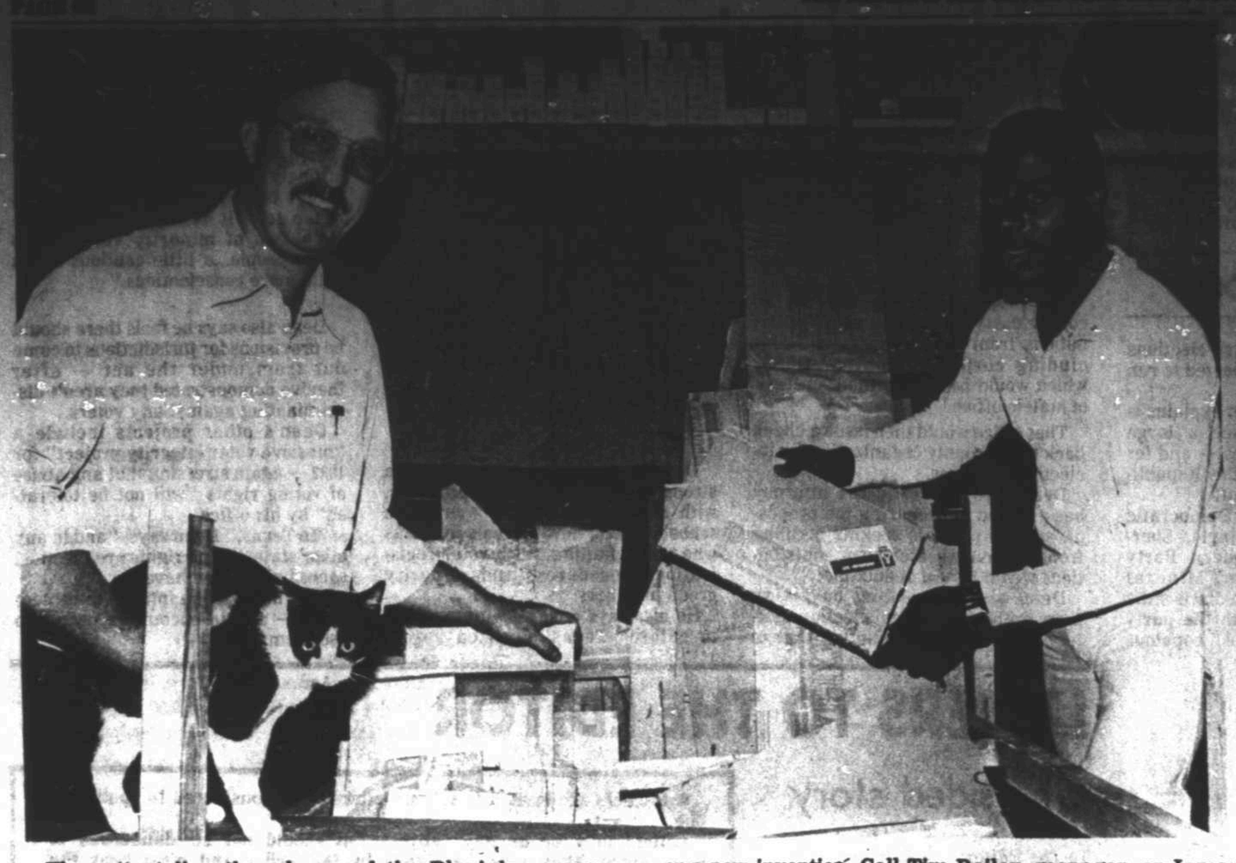

With regard to the criticism of Georgia Temple's review of "Godspell," the Midland Community Theatre is fortunate in having so many supporters. Ninety-five percent of the time I am one of them. However, each ticket holder has the right to like or dislike the performance, as well as the right to stay or to leave a performance.

There is a technical difference in a critic and a reviewer. Ms. Temple is a reviewer. This is clearly stated in each article in a box provided for this information. Georgia Temple has the right to call it as she sees it. Because everyone does not agree with her 100 percent of the time does not mean that she is unqualified or uneducated.

If, as a community we are to grow artistically, then we must accept the criticism along with the applause. We must examine our performances honestly, learn from our mistakes and do a better job next time.

It is Ms. Temple's job to make us think. Obviously, she has done this with expertise in this instance.

Copper Pot is wealth of good food

In their new cookbook, "Recipes from Robert's Copper Pot," Bettye and Bob Conklin offer worthy cooking tips and advice, notable recipes from their deli, and "thanks to all of our customers. Because of them this book is no longer 'a dream in a drawer.' Everyone helped with recipes and interest."

The cookbook is a limited edition, numbered, and signed. The authors admit it is slightly Louisiana-Texas slanted; that's where they were raised!

Starting with appetizers, "the things you eat or drink to make you hungry," the collection moves on to wonderful soups, sauces, vegetables (red beans and rice, pickled beets, fried cabbage, mushrooms in cream, squash pancakes,), meat and game. Think of pot roast with red sauce and olives, Robert's Copper Pot Chili, also known as "Hot as the Hinges," roast venison, poultry, and game birds.

Desserts follow, then a cheese section with classifications and a guide, both which are helpful. The book concludes with an admirable survey of beer and ale.

Robert's Copper Pot is listed in "Texas Monthly" for November, and the article starts right off by saying the Copper Pot has over 60 kinds of beer from the common to the rare. Round these parts, the Copper Pot is known as the home of the Beer Drinkers' Hall of Fame.

The deli is even more famous for it's unusual sandwich menu including such originals as Turcado, the Hawaiian, the Russian, and other notable creations.

Escargots, top steak, chili, smoked beef, quiches, and salads can all be found at the Copper Pot, as can fried mushrooms, bell peppers, zuccini, and onion rings. The homemade liver pate is exceptionally good.

In addition to the spectacular beer inventory, mixed drinks are also available.

Robert's Copper Pot is at 3211 W. Wadley. The restaurant is open from 11:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday. Kitchen hours are from 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. for lunch and then until 8:30 p.m. During football season, the Copper Pot is open from noon to 6 p.m. on Sundays.

Blair & Sons is oldest leasing independent company in area

Blair & Sons Leasing Inc. is the oldest independent leasing company in the area. Leasing and its possibilities has always been the primary concern of the professionals at Blair & Sons, who bring 20 years of leasing experience to the community.

Leasing cars, trucks, commercial and industrial equipment, they are ready and willing to tailor programs to specific business and personal needs. Customers who are not readily familiar with the applications of vehicle and equipment leasing will appreciate the frank and ethical service they get from Blair & Sons, as do their customers of long standing.

There are many advantages to leasing vehicles and equipment. Not tying up capital is certainly an important consideration, as is the convenience of having bothersome details handled by someone else. Just the purchasing and selling of vehicles and equipment is time-consuming. Furthermore, the people at Blair & Sons Leasing, Inc. urge you to check the advantages of leaing with regard to the new tax laws for 1982.

Blair & Sons Leasing, Inc. is a nice place to do business. Truman Blair heads a old-fashioned family business, which includes his son Roy, son-in-law Fred Stubbs, and his daughter Jean Stubbs. The only "outsider" is S.E. Mickey, office manager for 16 years, which practically makes him one of the family.

So, remember the experienced, friendly, professional people at Blair & Sons Leasing, Inc., 223 E. Illinois, for your leasing needs and problems. Call 683-3395 for more information.

Small Business Task Force on chooses issues for initial efforts

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Four priority issues have been picked by the Governor's Task Force on Small Business for its initial efforts.

The panel, headed by Eagle Pass businessman Arturo Flores, has been charged by Gov. Bill Clements with assisting existing small businesses, and investigating opportunities available to small businesses in Texas.

At its first meeting, the task force decided to concentrate on four areas: Licensing laws and the effect of State agencies on small businesses, capital formation and retention, international trade and business education and training.

Flores asked the tast force staff to prepare reports on the licensing and international trade issues for the next meeting, which is set for Dec. 10.

The panel is to report its recommendations to Clements and the 1983 Legislature.

Federal Home Loan Bank of Little Rock says that with 243 of 314 Texas savings and loan associations reporting, Texas associations registered a net loss of $107.3 million in savings during September — with a net loss of $572.3 million for the first three quarters of 1981.

At the end of September, Texas associations showed $29.5705 billion in mortgage loans outstanding, with total assets of $37.4966 billion, based on 314 associations reporting.

Durward Curlee, executive vice president of the Texas Savings and Loan League, says the new all savers program appears to have stemmed the outflow of savings — but that it doesn't appear to have brought in large amounts of new funds.

Reports from 121 associations, representing 65 percent of the total assets for Texas associations, show $486.2 million in all savers accounts, Curlee reports.

Twenty-seven percent of that amount is new deposits, he says.

The all savers program was implemented in October.

Curlee says that total deposits versus withdrawals during the month appear "essentially flat," so that without the all savers program, some $133 million might have been lost by the associations.

"The thing we cannot determine as of yet is whether it's saved the savings and loan money...We don't know how much came from higher-paying certificates of deposit," he comments.

But, he says, a number of associations have reported the new program has no particular impact on their overall cost of money.

However, Curlee adds, it appears that the program may have encouraged consumers to begin saving rather than spending, which could have beneficial effects over the long run.

He estimates that Texas associations have attracted $650 million in all savers funds, with additional amounts in banks and credit unions.

State Board of Insurance has hired Joan M. Black, a doctoral candidate and instructor at St. Mary's University, San Antonio, to do some initial work in SBI's planned $200,000 study of the relationship between insurers' investment income and rate-making.

Funds for the study were approved by this year's Legislature.

Black, who is writing her dissertation on insurance company investment income, will review the literature on the subject, as well as efforts in other states.

SBI hasn't indicated a date for completion of the work, but indications are the project will continue past 1982.

Texas Energy and Natural Resources Advisory Council and the Air Control Board are working on a recommendation that ACB be designated as the "lead agency" for dealing with acid rain problems in Texas.

The acid rain problem is under study by a special task force, which has recommended establishing a data system on acid rain.

The problem — which has created some tension between the United States and Canada because of the phenomenon's effects along the US-Canadian border area — isn't seen as posing the threat in Texas which it may elsewhere due to soil conditions.

However, there is concern that increased use of coal and lignite at electrical generating plants will lead to increased emissions of sulphur dioxide, which results in the formation of acid rain.

Concern has been expressed that acid rain could result in damage to agricultural production in parts of Texas.

The Acid Rain Task Force indicates its members don't see acid rain as a major problem for Texas in the immediate future — and not enough of a problem to warrant creating any additional regulatory agency to deal with it.

Workers pull flag down

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Workers at an engine manufacturing firm pulled down a flag of Japan and tried to burn it because "they are convinced the Japanese have stolen their jobs," a company spokesman said Friday.

But Dave McLees, a spokesman for Teledyne Wisconsin Motor, denied that the company, which was playing host to Japanese businessmen, is losing jobs to the Japanese.

"Nothing could be further from the truth," he said.

On Thursday, a group of demonstrators pulled down the Japanese flag at the front of the plant and raised an American banner in its place.

One worker tried to burn the Japanese flag but could not ignite it, so he slashed it with a knife and threw it down a sewer.

"I don't want to go to work unless there's a flag out there that belongs to America," said one worker, Leonard Gozdziewski.

The firm, which produces air-cooled gasoline engines for industrial use, issued a statement to employees after the incident.

ON WALL STREET

Is Reagan's talk of mid-year recovery a possibility?

By DAVID W. DEITCH
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — As America's second recession in as many years spreads beyond the housing and automotive industries, investors must determine whether the Reagan administration's forecast of mid-year 1982 recovery is a realistic possibility. The stock market's desultory performance last week in the face of plunging interest rates is partly a result of money drawn to the dynamic bond market. It can also be blamed on fear that an economic recovery spurred by the 1982 tax cuts will be quickly choked off by a new round of soaring interest rates.

David Stockman's disclosures in The Atlantic Monthly are affecting the stock market very little, according to Dick Doll, managing director of Tucker Anthony, R.L. Day. Wall Street has been aware of the tax cut's impact on budget deficit for many months, he says. What is hurting the market is the non-liquid condition of the entire economy; that is, too much debt and too little profit.

"People are confused and I'm confused," says Robert O'Toole, trading manager for Shearson American Express. "I don't know if Reaganomics works or not at this point." O'Toole reports lots of tax-loss selling to take advantage of the higher 1981 tax rate.

Treasury Secretary Regan told a Washington gathering Friday to look for a fourth quarter GNP decline of 3 to 3.5 percent from the previous three-month period. But with industrial production off a whopping 1.5 percent in October — lots more than was anticipated — the Regan forecast implies a leveling off of the economic decline in the final two months of the year. Most private economists take a more pessimistic view.

Gold's price last week finished at $412.50 the ounce, or just about a third below the previous year. The gold market is certainly suggesting that the interest rate decline is temporary or that a prolonged recession will keep a kind of lid on inflation.

Money market funds are gradually extending the average maturity of their portfolios as the way to enjoy high interest rates as long as possible. The average for 127 funds is now 35 days, but two in the Merrill Lynch stable are at 46 and 48 days, which implies more confidence than most fund managers have that rates will stay down for a while.

Investors have made some spectacular gains owning the shares of companies receiving attractive takeover bids. Less well known, however, is that in most cases, the shares of the acquiring company drop. Easy come, easy go.
