One hostage released; returns home

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — American hostage Jimmy Dell Palmer flew to freedom today, 13 days after he was captured by hijackers of a TWA jet. Shiite militia leader Nabih Berri freed Palmer for health reasons and proposed that the other 39 hostages be placed in a Western embassy until Israel releases 735 Arab prisoners.

Berri said the remaining American hostages might also be sent to Syria if no Western nation would hold them in an embassy and promise not to let them out of Lebanon until the hijackers' demands for freedom of the prisoners in Israel are met.

Palmer, 48, of Little Rock, Ark., flew from Beirut aboard a Middle East Airline Boeing 707 to Larnaca, Cyprus. Wearing a red polo shirt, Palmer smiled as he walked down the steps of the airplane without aid.

"I feel fine," he told waiting reporters. "I'm just happy to be out of Beirut and with the American people ... I'd like to say, 'Hi,' to my wife and family. I'm so happy to be home."

The scheduled flight was delayed 45 minutes until Palmer arrived in an airport bus, with six Shiite Amal militiamen.

Palmer told The Associated Press as he waited to board the plane: "I can verify that we were very well treated. I don't know of anyone (among the hostages) who has been mistreated."

Before releasing Palmer, Berri brought him to a news conference, where he said he also was studying the medical condition of another hostage, Simon Grossmayer, 57, of Algonquin, Ill., who has only one lung. "If he is not in good condition I will release him today or tomorrow," he said.

The French government today indicated it might be willing to accept custody of the Beirut hostages under the plan outlined by Berri. The Foreign Ministry said in a brief statement: "France is always available when it is a question of protecting human lives and avoiding suffering."

A spokesman, traditionally anonymous, said Foreign Minister Roland Dumas had delayed leaving for Bonn this morning to take personal charge of the situation.

The Americans, passengers on a TWA Boeing 727 that was hijacked June 14 on its way from Athens to Rome, are thought to be held in separate groups in and around Beirut.

The Shiite Moslem hijackers let more than 100 passengers and crew go, and killed a U.S. Navy petty officer in the early stages of the 13-day incident. They are demanding that Israel free prisoners it accused of planning or carrying out attacks on the Israeli army in southern Lebanon.

Israel released 31 prisoners on Monday.

Berri made his proposal today after Syria was reported to have joined efforts to secure the hostages' release. Syria is the main power broker in Lebanon.

Berri reiterated his warning that a flotilla of U.S. 6th fleet warships led by the aircraft carrier USS Nimitz must "be far away" from the Lebanese coast, and said there must be no attacks on Lebanon by either Israel or the United States after the hostage situation is resolved.

At the White House, an administration official who spoke only on condition that he not be identified, welcomed Palmer's release.

Arson arrests Tuesday

Two male juveniles — both 12 years of age — were arrested for arson Tuesday afternoon in connection with a house fire reported around 4:30 p.m.

The suspects are accused of setting a fire on the second floor of a vacant residence at 1308 23rd St.

Units of the Snyder Fire Department were called to the scene and extinguished what Fire Chief Terry Don McDowell called a small fire on the second floor of the building near the top of the stairs.

According to McDowell, the back door of the residence appeared to have been broken into.

He said Wednesday morning it appeared that some type of flammable liquid had been poured on the floor and then ignited.

The two boys were arrested by police at 4:50 p.m. and later released to the custody of their parents.

Any further action in the case will be pursued through the juvenile courts.

The residence — which apparently had been under con-

Plant advice slated

A plant tour sponsored by the Scurry County extension agent's office will begin at 9:30 a.m. Thursday.

In addition, locals with plant problems may also come by the agent's office from 4 to 5 p.m. to discuss possible remedies.

County Agent Marvin Ensor said approximately 16 homeowners have signed up for the at-home visit.

These individuals were to be notified of the time of the visit Wednesday.

Assisting Ensor will be Dr. Robert Berry, a plant pathologist. He is stationed with the Texas A&M Extension and Research Center in Lubbock.

The tour will address disease problems related to ornamental plants, garden plants and turf grassess.

For those interested in bringing their problem plants to the extension service office, Ensor and Berry will be available from 4 until 5 p.m.

The extension agents are officed in the Senior Citizens Center, 2603 Ave. M.

Jumbo 'hoppers endanger cotton

An infestation of jumbo grasshoppers is now posing a threat in select areas of the county to emerging cotton plants.

The grasshoppers are not occurring countywide, according to County Entomology Deanna Myers. "But if you've got them, they're definitely a problem."

An insecticide spray will control the insects, she said, but noted that this won't insure a final solution. "We're recommending they spray every time they begin to see the grasshoppers come back," she said.

The bugs can measure up to 2½ inches in length and it is their size which makes them potentially a hazard to the young cotton plants.

"They're so big that they can take one or two bites of emerging cotton and kill the plant," Myers said.

She noted the grasshoppers are native to the county, hatching from eggs laid last fall in mainly pasture areas here. They cannot fly, she said, so they also live their entire life cycle close to where they hatch.

Because of this, they are only being seen in select areas of the county.

Because they are not very mobile, they are mainly attacking cotton crops near the end of the rows, she said.

The SDN Column

By Roy McQueen

The feller on Deep Creek says, "Americans spend half their lives learning habits that shorten the other half."

There nothing like the words "garage sale" to get the adrenalin pumping in the average American female.

We suppose if hitting and then chasing after a golf ball can be fun for men, then the gals ought to be able to enjoy cleaning out closets and then reselling these valuables so other folks can store them until they have a garage sale.

We watched some garage sale incidents last weekend. Our favorite was a fellow who had chosen a boys used bicycle and was standing in line to pay out.

The bike still had the $3 price tag on it when a woman approached. "You gonna' buy that bike?" she asked.

The man nodded affirmatively then the woman continued, "Do you want to sell it?"

"Sure, I'll sell it," said the man. "But I couldn't take a penny less than $15."

Central Elementary Principal Charles Anderson likes to tell about the time he had a garage sale at his home. Son Chuck, who is now a doctor, was just a youngster.

Charlie had priced an item at $50, but in passing had remarked to family members that he would take $30. When the customers started to arrive, Chuck was on hand to help. When the customer asked about the item, Chuck offered, "He's got $50 dollars on it, but he'll take $30." We suspect Charlie cranked up school again.

It was also Anderson who arrived at church one Sunday morning and went into a Bible class. When he looked down, he noticed his shirt had a sticker on it which read, "25 cents."

Wife Margie had put the shirt in the sale. When it didn't sell, she hung it back into his closet, but had forgotten to remove the sale price.

Farabee helps push through Blue Law

(Editor's Note: With this issue, the SDN concludes its review of the major legislation either authored or sponsored during the 69th Session of the Texas Legislature by the two men who represent Scurry County in Austin. In this issue, the accomplishments of Senator Ray Farabee are noted.)

Senator Ray Farabee, who represents Scurry and the 29 other counties comprising the 30th Senatorial District, helped sponsor a host of legislative action during this past session.

Most notable of these was the repeal of the 122-year-old Blue Law, which prohibited stores from selling certain items on consecutive Saturdays and Sundays.

Part of this bill guaranteed a weekly day off for retail employees.

Farabee's legislative performance was sufficient to gain him his fourth straight listing by Texas Monthly magazine as one of the state's "10 Best" legislators.

The Wichita Falls-based Democrat was first elected to his Senate seat in 1975. This past January, he began serving his sixth two-year term, running unopposed for his seat in both the primary and November elections.

Other counties he serves includes Childress, Floyd, Motley, Cottle, Hardeman, Foard, Wilbarger, Wichita, Clay, Montague, Cooke, Grayson, Denton (part), Jack, Dickens, King, Knox, Baylor, Archer, Throckmorton, Young, Kent, Stonewall, Haskell, Fisher, Jones, Shackelford, Callahan and Mitchell.

A listing of Farabee's legislation this last session covers practically an alphabetized list of problem areas in the state. These include:

—First computer crime bill in Texas. It sets penalities for certain acts involving unauthorized use of computers.

—First regulation of timeshare real estate in Texas.

—Reform of child support laws to increase collection of child support. The bill transfers child support collection services from the Department of Human Resources to the attorney general's office.

—Judical reform package to include judicial retirement, redistricting, first major trial court reform in the state in a century.

—Organ transplant legislation which authorizes the Texas Board of Health to establish an organ procurement coordinating office to aide and encourage organ donors. In addition, a second related bill which prohibits the sale and purchase of human organs for profit.

—A clarification of the Natural Death Act, reaffirming a terminally ill person's right to choose to die a natural death rather than be artificially kept alive on life-support systems.

—Revisions requiring triplicate prescriptions for certain drugs, an attempt to control abuse of these drugs.

Ask Us

Q. — Is the new law regarding waiving penalty fees for late tax payments — which arose from the situation involving the newspaper and the appraisal district — in effect yet?

Q. — Yes. While most new laws go into effect Sept. 1, this one was effective June 14. It allows the taxing entity to waive the fee if an employee or agent of the unit was responsible for a mistake which caused the payment problem.

In Brief

Court rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled today that states generally may not prevent businesses from penalizing employees for refusing to work on their religious sabbaths.

By an 8 to 1 vote, the court declared unconstitutional a Connecticut law that protects workers from retaliation for taking off their religious day of rest.

Libel ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, in an important freedom-of-speech ruling, said today constitutionally required limits on monetary damages won in libel lawsuits do not apply when the libelous statements do not involve "a matter of public concern."

By a 5-4 vote, the court said Dun & Bradstreet, a financial reporting service, would have to pay $350,000 to a Vermont construction firm it incorrectly reported had filed for bankruptcy.

Explosions ignite fuel depot

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Two explosions apparently caused by bombs ignited a government fuel depot and knocked out a power station today in the black tribal homeland of Transkei, authorities said.

In riot-torn black townships east of Johannesburg, seven blacks were killed and eight were injured in a series of grenade attacks and other incidents, police said.

It was one of the worst nights of violence in 10 months of protests against white minority rule and the racial segregation policy called apartheid. Private groups say more than 400 people have died in the unrest.

The incidents came on the 30th anniversary of the signing of the Freedom Charter, a document calling for a non-racial government that is regarded by many activists as a blueprint for a future South Africa.

The explosions in Umtata, capital of the Transkei black homeland, came only a few minutes apart and plunged the city and its suburbs into darkness, witnesses were quoted as saying. There were no reports of casualties.

Six hours after the blast at the fuel depot a large fire still raged. Firemen stood by watching the blaze burn itself out.

Capital Radio, an independent station in Transkei, quoted police chief Gen. Leonard Kawe as saying police had determined saboteurs used a limpet mine in the attack on the fuel depot.

Transkei, in southeast South Africa, is one of four black homelands considered by South Africa to be independent and the states in which blacks have civil rights. The independence of the black homelands is not recognized abroad.

Six other homelands have some autonomy but have refused or not yet been granted independence.

Two are injured in refinery blaze

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — Two workers received severe burns after a flash fire broke out at the Texaco Inc. Port Arthur Works refinery, officials say.

Wayne Lavergne, 21, of Orange, received second and third degree burns over 25 percent of his body and was listed in serious condition at Park Place Hospital in Port Arthur, hospital spokesman Jerry Rowley said Tuesday.

James Harjo, 40, of Port Arthur, was taken to Park Place Hospital and then transported by Life Flight to Houston's Hermann Hospital where he is listed in critical condition with second and third degree burns over 65 percent of his body, a Hermann Hospital spokeswoman said.

"The fire occurred during the dismantling of the No. 3 catalytic reforming unit at the Port Arthur plant," Texaco spokesman Phillip Blackburn said Tuesday. The two injured men were employees of a contractor at the plant, Olsham Demolition Co., he said.

Dear Abby

Juror Remains Tight-Lipped Despite Husband's Appeals

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: This is my second week of jury duty. I've committed for eight weeks of jury duty, and I am afraid by the time it is over, my marriage will also be over.

My husband, a very opinionated and persuasive man, insists that I tell him the details of the trial I am now on, knowing full well that I have sworn not to talk about it until it's over. I have refused to discuss the case with him, but he is very angry, which has created a lot of friction between us.

Today is our 19th wedding anniversary, and he's using that as a reason why I should tell him. "After all," he said, "we've kept no secrets from each other all these years, and if you really love me you would trust me enough to tell me everything."

I told him I love him enough to not ask him to do something he thought was wrong.

I looked forward to being an honest juror, and nobody is going to spoil it for me—not even my husband.

Thanks for letting me get this off my chest, Abby. I'm signing my name, but for obvious reasons, sign this ...

OFF MY CHEST

DEAR OFF: You are right on! In time, your husband's anger will blow over. Meanwhile, in his heart he knows you're right, and he can only love and respect you more for your integrity.

• • •

DEAR ABBY: The letter signed "Tired of 'OK' in Arizona" brought to mind the following:

Few people know the origin of the expression "OK." Our eighth president, Martin Van Buren, was born and raised in Kinderhook, N.Y. In later years he was nicknamed "Old Kinderhook."

During his presidency, when a bill was brought before him, he would either veto it or approve it by initialing it "OK" for his nickname. Hence an OK indicated approval.

And that's how OK became a part of the language.

DON FINN, ORANGE, CALIF.

DEAR DON: Thanks for an interesting bit of trivia. And for those who wonder if I am any kin to Old Kinderhook, I am not. I took the Abigail from the Old Testament (Book of Samuel) and the Van Buren from our eighth president because I liked the aristocratic ring.

• • •

DEAR ABBY: What do you think of this invitation from a 3-month-old son who was born out of wedlock:

"John Jay Smith requests the pleasure of your company at an open house to celebrate the marriage of his parents, Richard James Smith and Jane Susan Doe, Saturday, June 15th, from 2:30 until 5:30 p.m. at their home" etc., etc.

SEEN EVERYTHING IN ST. PAUL, MINN.

DEAR SEEN: I think it's unique, courageous and original.

• • •

DEAR ABBY: "Grieving in Gulfport, Miss." could have been signed "Grieving in Wichita, Kan." and written by me. Only it was my older sister who died from cigarettes.

I tried to get her to quit, but her only answer was the same as many others: "I'm not hurting anybody but myself."

But the night she died, her family had to listen to her cry out, "Help me, help me." And that's the night she hurt a lot of other people.

Owners won't shoot beavers

AUSTIN (AP) — Owners of a wastewater treatment plant say they have abandoned plans to shoot beavers that had been digging holes in the facility's wastewater pond.

The decision came after area residents, the Wildlife Rescue organization and animal rights advocates objected to the plan.

It's fine to play high-low to show a doubleton in a suit. That's how you get a ruff. East refused to signal high-low in spades because he wanted to take even more tricks.

The natural momentum of North's jump to two no-trump carried the partnership to an eventual four-heart contract, with South declarer. On a good day, with the black suits acting friendly, game might even make. This was a bad day.

On the opening lead East played the spade two, a well-calculated choice. Because a deuce discourages continuation of the suit, West would shift. The logical shift would be to a club, and that's what East was hoping for. After taking two club tricks, East played his other spade back. West won the ace, and even though he did not believe his partner could ruff the third round of the suit, he played a spade anyway. Result — down two.

Points to consider: You don't always echo high-low with a doubleton, since playing your lower card first will get a desired suit shift from partner. West should not have been at all surprised when his partner ruffed the third spade. He too should have realized that best defensive strategy can call for a suit shift, even when a third-round ruff may be available in the original suit led. Finally, if there was a possibility that West might shift to the wrong suit, it would have been better for East to signal high-low and make certain of defeating the contract.

Insert human growth genes

NEW YORK (AP) — Researchers have for the first time inserted a human growth gene into rabbits, pigs and a sheep in a controversial step that could lead to bigger, more feed-efficient and disease-resistant livestock, a report says.

It is the first demonstration that a foreign gene injected into a fertilized egg of a large mammal will be taken up by the growing animal, Robin Lovell-Badge of London's Medical Research Council Mammalian Development Unit, wrote in an article accompanying the report in the British journal Nature.

The report deals with research at the University of Pennsylvania, the University of Washington and the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The USDA was sued in October by groups opposed to research on transferring human genes into livestock. The suit is pending in U.S. District Court.

A gene is the basic unit of heredity that issues marching orders to plant and animal cells.

The researchers worked with the gene that orders production of growth hormone in humans, joined to a portion of a mouse gene that can turn the human gene on. That combination gene had already been shown to "express" itself, or settle in and go to work, in laboratory mice.

Finnie Murray, senior scientist at the Edison Animal Biotechnology Center at Ohio University, said Tuesday the newly reported work is "a significant step forward because it demonstrates that, simply put, the phenomenon of expression of foreign genes is not restricted to the mouse."

Researchers reported that the gene was taken up by one of 73 sheep, 28 of 218 rabbits and 20 of 192 pigs that grew from fertilized eggs into which it was injected.

In some of those pigs and rabbits, the gene issued its chemical instructions to make growth hormone, and the human hormone itself was found in some of the animals.

But no unusual growth was observed. The gene appeared damaged in the sheep, the only rabbit that produced the growth hormone had a dental problem and could not eat normally, and the hormone in the pigs hasn't noticeably increased their growth.

"We don't know how much they will grow," said Ralph Brinster, one of the researchers and professor of reproductive physiology at the University of Pennsylvania's School of Veterinary Medicine. Offspring of the animals will be studied to see if the gene improves their growth, he said.

The most important practical outcome for such research may not be simply bigger animals, but rather animals that use feed more efficiently by growing more per unit of feed eaten, according to Brinster.

Inserted genes might also make animals produce valuable chemicals that could be harvested from their milk or other body fluid, he said.

Beaumont leaders approve proposal

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — A refinancing plan that will lower the city's service payments on its outstanding bonds but extends the debt for seven years got the Beaumont City Council's stamp of approval.

The plan adopted Tuesday calls for the city to keep the debt service portion of city taxes stable at 27 cents over the next few years, City Manager Karl Nollenberger said.

Councilman Mike Brumley, who cast the only vote against the plan, said the city should pay its debts faster to allow for future financial emergencies.

"We're really at risk without reserve funds," Brumley said.

Under the plan, the city will issue $50.1 million in new bonds, place the funds in an escrow account where it can draw interest and use that account to pay off the old debt service payments.

The city can obtain insurance that will make the new bond issue $480,000 less than what was originally anticipated, Nollenberger said.

But Nollenberger said the city's savings from the smaller debt service payments will net $400,000 by the time the bonds are paid off.

Berry's World

"Today, one of the fellows at the club called me 'a financial services institution,' instead of 'a banker.'"

The luxury liner Titanic struck an iceberg in the North Atlantic and sank April 14, 1912. Then the largest vessel afloat, the $7.5 million Titanic had been built with special flotation chambers and was considered unsinkable. However, the iceberg ripped open her hull and the ship sank in three hours. Of the 2,207 passengers, 1,503 died in the water.

Teenager is found innocent

BOSTON (AP) — A 14-year-old boy accused of shooting a woman and boasting about it on a subway train while the woman's mother stood eavesdropping nearby was found innocent Tuesday of delinquency charges in the case.

The youth, who was not identified because of his age, was found non-delinquent in a juvenile session of Dorchester District Court.

As in all juvenile cases, no matter the offense, he had been charged with juvenile delinquency. The offenses were described as assault, robbery and attempted murder.

"The case boiled down to the reliability of the identification by the victim, who claimed my client attacked her on the night of Jan. 31, and the reliability of the testimony of the mother, who claimed she overheard my client boasting about the attack. The judge did not believe the testimony beyond a reasonable doubt," said defense attorney Jonathan Shapiro.

The case came to national attention after Frances James, mother of the 21-year-old woman who was shot in Dorchester, claimed she overheard a boy bragging on a subway train the next day. "I pumped a broad in Dorchester last night because she wouldn't turn loose her bag."

Her daughter was shot in the back, but the bullet passed through three sweaters and a fur coat, grazed her skin and fell out as doctors readied her for surgery.

The verdict has led her daughter to distrust the court system, says Mrs. James. "We're both devastated."

First lady: buckle up

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas motorists should start using their seat belts now rather than waiting for the state's mandatory belt law to take effect on Sept. 1, First Lady Linda Gale White says.

"The fact is, they need to be wearing them right now, not necessarily Sept. 1. The sooner the better of getting in the habit of putting them on," Mrs. White said.

On June 17, Gov. Mark White signed into law legislation that will require front seat occupants of cars and pickup trucks to wear lap seat belts.

The law takes effect in September, with fines of $25 to $50 beginning on Dec. 1 for violators.

Mrs. White's comments about the new law came Tuesday as she helped launch a "Buckle Up, Austin" safety campaign.

Hostages taken; building is stormed

KARNES CITY, Texas (AP) — An inmate held a jailer and a dispatcher hostage for seven hours before law enforcement officers took him by surprise, authorities said.

The standoff at Karnes County Jail ended Tuesday afternoon when police stormed the building, overwhelmed Roland Garcia, 38, of San Antonio and freed the two hostages, Sheriff Bobby Mutz said.

"There was no scuffle. The officers just drew down on him and he froze," the sheriff said. No injuries were reported during the takeover, Mutz said.

Garcia had armed himself with a metal shank he apparently pulled from a air conditioning vent, the sheriff said.

Garcia had been in the jail two weeks on a bench warrant after being indicted for auto theft and forgery. Mutz said Garica was serving a 12½-year term at Huntsville for the same charges.

Garcia took the two as hostages Tuesday morning when he was allowed out of his cell to use the telephone, the sheriff said.

Mutz said the inmate asked the jailer, "What would you do if I tried to escape?"

"I'd stop you," the jailer replied.

The sheriff said Garcia then pulled the metal shank out and overpowered the jailer, identified as Eddie Garcia. Mutz said he did not know how the dispatcher, identified as Daisy Villanueva, was taken hostage.

The prisoner, who had all the jail keys, locked the door separating the jail from the sheriff's office, the San Antonio Light reported.

During the ensuing hours, Garcia asked to see his father and to be sent back to the Texas Department of Corrections prison in Huntsville, Mutz said. He also asked for an automobile and a set of handcuffs.

Authorities said the standoff, which began about 9:30 a.m., ended about 4:45 p.m.

Mutz said that since no one had a key to open the door Garcia had locked, an officer went to San Antonio, about 60 miles away, and returned after getting a duplicate of a master key.

Uncertain if the key would open the door, Mutz said he gingerly slipped it into the lock and twisted.

"We had a code worked out," Mutz told the Light. "When I opened the door, I yelled 'Go!' and the officers rushed in."

The suspect was away from the hostages when about 10 state and local law enforcement officers rushed the room, the sheriff said.

Farm...

15,000 pay $10 each for raffle

UNIONVILLE, Mo. (AP) — Despite a $1,000-a-month public relations campaign and national publicity, Bud and Hazel Hirst aren't finding enough takers to make it worthwhile raffling off their 476-acre farm.

The couple, both 53, had hoped to raise $400,000, enough to pay off their $200,000 debt on the place and give them a stake when they move on.

But so far, Hirst said Tuesday, only about 15,000 people have sent in $10 for a copy of Mrs. Hirst's book of poems, "Bitter Harvest," about the trials of farm life, and a chance to win the farm.

The Hirsts have been running their Bitter Harvest Great Farm Sweepstakes for a year. It was to have ended July 4 with a drawing in the town square of this farming community of 2,200 near the Missouri-Iowa line.

Dr. Gott

Peter Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT — Sometimes it hurts very much when I urinate. It is especially true in the morning. I am a 36-year-old man. I don't think it is possible for me to have VD. What could it be?

DEAR READER — You may be suffering from an obstruction in the urinary outflow tract. This can be physiological (from spasm) or it can result from an actual anatomical problem, like an adhesion or enlargement. Some men have difficulty emptying a distended bladder; the act of urination can be painful if a full bladder causes disruption of the normal voiding reflexes. Some men have venereal disease and are not aware of it; others may have a low-grade urinary infection, especially in the prostate gland, and not know it. Your best bet is to see a urologist. After appropriate evaluation, he will very likely be able to solve your problem.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I am 75 and don't seem to have good control over my kidneys now. I often wet myself. I have had a Pap test and a sugar test, and both showed nothing.

DEAR READER — As women grow older, particularly if they have had babies, anatomical changes are inevitable in their reproductive tracts. One of these changes is a loss of angle of the urethra (urinary conduit) as it leaves the bladder. The condition is called a cystocele. Surgery is sometimes necessary to "tack" the bladder up and re-establish the necessary angle for control. However, pelvic-strengthening exercises are often useful in alleviating the problem. Your gynecologist will be able to train you in these simple exercises, and they might enhance your control to the point where you could become continent. Your difficulty is probably not in your kidneys; it is undoubtedly in the area between the bladder and vagina — home territory for a gynecologist.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I went to the doctor for my annual checkup. He found a polyp in my rectum and wants to take it out. I'm afraid that he might find something and I don't want him to do it. What do you think?

DEAR READER — Get it out. Polyps are typically benign growths, but they can enlarge and bleed. Some polyps are exceedingly dangerous because they are pre-malignant; in time, they can degenerate into cancer.

If you believe that you can wish away something upleasant by ignoring it, you are engaging in a form of magical thinking more suited to Peter Pan than to polyps. No sane person asks for trouble, but if difficulty arises, the adult deals with it realistically. The chances are good that your polyp is benign; can be removed through the rectum without abdominal surgery and — once gone — will not bother you again. I am sure that you will be relieved to be rid of this unwanted visitor. Remember, however, to ask your doctor how often you should return for a follow-up. Polyps often occur in other parts of the colon and you will want to establish a periodic clean bill of health.

Send your questions to Dr. Gott at P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101. Due to volume of mail, individual questions cannot be answered. Questions of general interest will be answered in future columns.

Plan no action against Fargo

DETROIT (AP) — U.S. Customs officials say they plan no action against country singer Donna Fargo for a dispute she had last week when inspectors tried to board her touring bus at the U.S.-Canadian border.

Investigators also "found there was no wrongdoing on the part of the customs inspectors," Cherise Mayberry, a spokeswoman for the Customs regional office in Chicago, said Tuesday.

Fargo and her entourage — including husband Stanley Silver — were detained more than five hours Thursday after she asked inspectors to remove their shoes before boarding her bus at a Detroit-Windsor, Ontario, border crossing.

"If any charges are filed in the case, they will come from Fargo or the officers involved, filing as individuals," she said.

Professor: understand Middle East

AUSTIN (AP) — If Americans fail to make an all-out effort to understand the Middle East, then that area — "the birthplace of civilization" — could become the graveyard of civilization, says a University of Texas professor.

"If we don't understand these people, then we are going to be severely hurt, and the chances of our children and our grandchildren strapping on combat boots and going into the quicksands of the Middle East increase significantly," government professor Dr. James Bill told a recent gathering of UT alumni.

"We have to be strong militarily, but we have to try to understand these people," Bill said. "That means we have to understand Islam. We don't have to like it, but we have to understand it."

Bill called the recent abduction of hostages "outrageous," but he said the Shiite Moslems "have been trampled upon for so long that they're now lashing out violently.

"And who do they lash out against? They lash out against the forces that they consider to be those responsible for their suffering for so many years, whether it's the Soviet Union or whether it's the United States."

He told a seminar the United States is held accountable for Israeli aggression, and he said, "We have to protect Israel but we don't have to protect all of Israel's aggressive policies, which are counterproductive both to Israel and the United States."

Miller Mason dies in chair

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Morris Odell Mason, convicted in a 1978 crime spree, went calmly and silently to his death in the electric chair after efforts to block the execution because of his mental impairment failed.

Mason, a 32-year-old laborer, was led to the basement death chamber at the state penitentiary about four hours after the U.S. Supreme Court denied a final appeal, said prison spokeswoman Kathi King. He made no statement.

Most victims are teenage workers

HALLETT, Okla. (AP) — Most of the 21 people killed in an explosion at a fireworks plant were teen-agers apparently hired to meet demand for the Fourth of July, but severe burns make identification difficult, authorities say.

Five other people, including the owner of the Aerlex Fireworks plant, were injured in a series of massive blasts Tuesday which were felt 13 miles away and hurled bodies and debris hundreds of yards.

Reports that victims may have been under 18, forbidden by law to work at plants like the one making aerial fireworks used in civic displays, sent state Labor Department officials to the scene along with other investigators.

The cause of the blast had not been determined, but Bob White of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, said authorities were checking reports of carelessness outside the building as a pickup truck was loaded.

The plant had passed an inspection two months ago, he said.

Dr. Joseph Pierce, a Creek County medical examiner, said he believed most of the victims were teen-agers, "but it's awfully hard to tell. They were burned so badly, almost beyond recognition."

Highway Patrol Lt. Jim King said a number of 17- and 18-year-olds had been hired for the holiday crush.

"They worked until late at night, and then started again real early in the morning to make all of the fireworks," said Mary Lewis, whose trailer less than a mile away was shifted off its foundation by the explosion.

"It was a real popular spot for teen-agers to work, and make some good money," she said, adding that the factory, about 35 miles west of Tulsa, had a normal staff of about 10 but had expanded to nearly 30 for holiday sales.

The Tulsa Daily Oklahoman reported today that a 16-year-old and the 18-year-old son of plant owner Alan Johnson were killed. Johnson, 40, of Jennings, refused to talk to reporters. He was in good condition at Hillcrest Medical Center in Tulsa, officials said.

James Aveni, an Aerlex worker who didn't go to the factory Tuesday, said only two temporary workers were under 18, the youngest 16. Aveni said the plant "had about as much precautions as anybody could have."

Authorities searching through the underbrush for victims found "bone fragments and body fragments which were blown apart because of the intense heat and explosions," King said. Four bodies were found about 200 yards away.

Pierce said all the victims died instantly of burns and the blast.

"It was a massive explosion, very intense," he said. "It melted metal into gelatin."

The blasts rattled windows 13 miles away and sent a mushroom-shaped cloud into the air. The force set several automobiles ablaze and started three grass fires about 500 yards from the plant.

Carl Ames Jr., who lives three miles from the plant, said there were three explosions that "lifted our house. They were real rapid and big. The birds quit singing, the cattle and horses started running."

It was the second explosion in six years at the plant, which opened in 1973, authorities said. A 1979 blast, which caused no injuries, was blamed on sunlight reflecting off an automobile mirror onto combustible material.

Cauble is taken to El Paso

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Rex Cauble, millionaire rancher and owner of the Cutter Bill western wear stores, has been transferred to La Tuna Federal Correctional Institute near here so he can be provided greater security than was available at the minimum-security facility at Big Spring, officials said.

Cauble, 71, of Denton County, arrived Friday at La Tuna to continue serving a 5-year sentence for a 1982 racketeering conviction, prison officials told The Dallas Morning News on Tuesday.

Bill Messersmith, executive assistant to the warden, said Cauble was completing orientation at La Tuna and had not been assigned to one of the many manufacturing jobs at the prison.

Cauble was convicted of masterminding a marijuana smuggling ring that authorities said brought more than 150,000 pounds of the drug into the United States in 1977 and 1978.

George Wilson of the U.S. Bureau of Prisons regional office, told The News the move was "an administrative decision" and denied reports that the move was the result of threats against Cauble. But he would not explain why the move was made.

"At this time, the only statement that we are releasing is that it was an administrative decision," Wilson said.

Officials said Cauble had no record of disciplinary problems at Big Spring and that no one had threatened him.

Woman sought in scheme

TEXARKANA, Texas (AP) — A woman wanted on felony fraud warrants in Texas borrowed the 18-month-old son of a woman staying at a shelter for battered women, purportedly to enter him in a beauty contest, but then tried to sell him for adoption, authorities say.

Police have issued bulletins to law enforcement officers in both Texas and Arkansas to be on the lookout for two, perhaps three, women posing as social workers and seeking to place children for adoption.

The adoption scheme failed, police said, when a woman who agreed to pay a $30 "adoption fee" for the young boy called the battered women's shelter Monday to inquire why the child hadn't been delivered to her yet.

When shelter officials learned of the scheme, they immediately asked the woman to leave, shelter director Barbara Greene said.

"In the meantime, she denied all this and left," Ms. Greene added.

Arkansas authorities were called in later, but said they could find no trace of the woman.

"I feel like she's already gone," Texarkana, Ark., police officer Don Johnson told the Texarkana Gazette on Tuesday.

Arkansas authorities said the central figure in the scheme is a slim 24-year-old black woman who used two different names and who is being sought by Texas authorities. They declined to identify her.

Ms. Greene said the woman came to the shelter several weeks ago. Officials at a battered women's shelter at Tyler called and said they had a new resident who said she feared for her safety in Tyler and who requested to be transferred to the Texarkana shelter, Ms. Greene said.

That woman was given travel money and left Tyler with her three chidren, but didn't arrive in Texarkana until two days later, Ms. Greene said.

"She said she got lost and ended up in Shreveport," Ms. Greene said.

Ms. Greene said the woman first claimed to be from the Tyler area, then said she was from the Dallas area.

"Her story was never consistent after that," Ms. Greene said.

Police in Tyler said Tuesday they had no knowlege of the woman and that no complaints had been filed there about an adoption fraud, the Gazette reported.

Ms. Greene said the woman has a nurse's aide certificate, and upon arriving in Texarkana quickly obtained a job at a Texarkana, Ark., nursing home. But after three nights at the job, the woman didn't show up for work.

"She only worked for three days then started this other life," she said.

CRMWD meeting report

Water sale contracts with the cities of Abilene, Midland and San Angelo were approved by the directors of the Colorado River Municipal Water district at a meeting Thursday in Big Spring.

For 16.54 per cent of the cost of the project, each city will receive rights to 15,001.78 ac. ft. of water annually from the Stacy reservoir, which the district will build. These contracts are subject to final approval by the city councils and ratification by voters on Aug. 10. Each city also will pay up front its percentage of estimated costs accumulated to the start of the project, and this will approximate $400,000.

Abilene's contract actually is through the West Central Texas Municipal Water District. All contracts are virtually the same, emphasized O. H. Ivie, CRMWD general manager. John Currie, Long Range Committee chairman, affirmed this in noting the district was looking out for area water needs.

The board declined to insert a clause in the Midland contract to the effect binding it to a joint pipeline later. Clyde Yarbrough of Odessa, director, insisted that too many things were involved in pipeline sizing, including the possibility that groundwater reserves might have a bearing.

John Taylor of Big Spring, president, thought the pipeline matter might be four years or more away, although Yarbrough foresaw a much shorter timetable should San Angelo want to tap Stacy water earlier and request a common pipeline.

Ivie was instructed to advise Midland when the time came for the pipeline, all interested parties would be invited to participate.

The Abilene contract actually will be through the West Central Municipal Water district, that city's prime water supplier.

Directors authorized filing of an application with the Texas Department of Water Resources to amend the Stacy, permit to allow transbasin diversion to Abilene. Stacy is on the Colorado and Abilene is on the Brazos watershed.

The Abilene contract quantity will come out of the district's 25,000 ac. ft. industrial allocation at Stacy and will not increase the face value of the 113,000 ac. ft. annual yield.

First Southwest of Dallas was retained as financial agent, and McCall, Parkhurst and Horton as bond attorneys in an effort to expedite financing. Currie stressed that the district could live with interest outlook between now and the end of the year. He said the district would proceed even if one of three cities should fail to ratify the contracts.

In order to cover an unfunded obligation in the employee Pension Trust, created by the increased benefits approved last year, an additional $17,000 expenditure from the administrative budget section was approved.

In 1775, Paul Revere made his famous ride from Charlestown to Lexington, Mass., to warn colonists that the British were coming.

Giants nip Stonewall-Kent; win Merkel LL tournament

MERKEL – Blair Williams lashed a two-out single, then raced home with the winning run to aid the Snyder Giants to a 2-0 victory over Stonewall-Kent in the championship game of the Merkel Little League Tournament here Tuesday.

The Giants, Snyder's Little League champions, raced through the tournament with a 3-0 record.

The next Little League action for Snyder will be the All-Star Area 5 playoffs, to be held in Snyder beginning July 11. Several members of the Giants, including Williams, will be on the all-star team.

Williams, who was three-for-four from the plate, stroked Stonewall-Kent pitcher Perry Page on a two-out, two-two count in the first inning. He was helped around the bases by a single from Michael Torres, and later raced home on a passed ball. David Hinojos also singled in the inning and Justin House walked, but Stonewall-Kent got out of further trouble when Scott Rodgers hit a ball back to the pitcher, who threw home to get Torres on the force play.

The game remained 1-0 until the fifth inning when Torres rapped a one-out single. He stole second and third and came home on a single from Hinojos.

Snyder slapped eight hits in the contest and drew four walks. Page also hit three batters with errant pitches. He recorded a dozen strikeouts.

In addition to Williams' prowess from the plate, Hinojos went two-for-two with one RBI and Torres was two-for-four. Chris McDonald got Snyder's other hit.

The win went to Gilbert Hernandez and was his second of the tournament. The Giants' hurler fanned 10 batters and allowed only three hits. He walked four batters.

Snyder Black defeats club from Brownfield

Snyder Black, the local Babe Ruth team, overcame sparadic pitching to defeat Brownfield here Tuesday night, 8-4.

The Black team went through five pitchers before rains forced the game to be called in the top of the sixth inning.

Snyder, now 4-0 in league play, will face Andrews I in a double header Saturday. The action will begin at 5:30 p.m. in Andrews.

Steve Parker sparked Snyder in the first inning with a bases loaded, two-run single. Brownfield pitcher Martin Forsea had walked leadoff batter Michael Long and Ricky Hunter, and given up a single to Chris Fryar to set up Parker's shot. Two outs later, Don Osborn cracked another single to account for Snyder's third run.

The Black team added four more runs in the second. Long, Fryar, Hunter and Parker all banged consecutive singles and Kenneth Pickering followed with a double.

Snyder's final run occurred in the third as Dennis Martinez walked, was sacrificed to second by Michael Carter, moved to third on a balk and came in on an error.

Meanwhile, Snyder pitchers issued only four hits but walked nine batters. Pickering started the game and went two and one-third innings. He was followed by Reynaldo Gomez who lasted one and one-third; William Foreee, who went one-third; Jimmy Velasquez, one-third; and Hunter, two-thirds.

Foree picked up the win by getting the final out in the fourth inning. Brownfield, trailing 7-1 at the time, had loaded the bases on two walks and an error. Chris Billings then cracked Foree for a single to score Brownfield's second run. The rally was thwarted, however, when centerfielder Velasquez made a long throw to catcher Hunter who tagged Ricky Garcia out at home plate.

Snyder gave up two more runs in the fifth on three walks and a single.

The Black team recorded nine hits in the contest. Fryar and Parker rapped two singles apiece to lead the attack.

Texas hires Huntsman

AUSTIN (AP) - Stan Huntsman of Tennessee has accepted the track coaching job at Texas - "my lucky state" - in Texas' effort to move from second in the Southwest Conference back to the winner's stand.

Huntsman, who described himself as a "nut and bolt" coach, was hired Tuesday to replace Cleburne Price, whose teams won seven SWC track titles in 15 years but none since 1979.

The Longhorns have finished second for three years in a row as Arkansas has moved into dominance in the Southwest.

DeLoss Dodds, University of Texas men's athletics director, told a news conference Tuesday, "I personally think and feel that we've got the best track coach in the United States to help carry on the great tradition of Texas track, which we're all proud of."

In 15 seasons as Tennessee coach, Huntsman won six national coach-of-the-year honors in cross country, indoor and outdoor track.

After becoming coach at Tennessee in 1971, Huntsman led the Volunteers to 31 Southeastern Conference titles.

Houston signs 5th round pick

HOUSTON (AP) - The fifth-round draft pick of the Houston Oilers has agreed to contract terms with the National Football League, team officials say.

Kicker-punter Lee Johnson, who led national champion Brigham Young with 74 points last season, will report to the Houston rookie camp July 19 in San Angelo, Oiler spokesman Gregg Stengel said Tuesday.

Johnson, a Dallas native, attended McCollough High School in The Woodlands, a Houston suburb.

Terms of Johnson's contract were not disclosed.

Spradling optimistic about upcoming basketball season

Western Texas College Coach Phil Spradling is understandably guarded about listing recruits in the wide-open world of junior college basketball, but he did say he is optimistic about the 1985 season.

The second-year coach talked with The Snyder Daily News between recruiting trips Tuesday afternoon.

"This is a special year for me because I will have recruited all of the guys on the team and they know what I want out of them," he said. "Last year some of were Barry's (former coach Barry Davis). They were good players, but he and I don't coach the same style of game. The ones I'm recruiting now will be ones to suit my style.

"I've talked to all of the ones coming back from last season and they are all ready to come back right now. We're looking forward to it," he noted.

Spradling did release two signees' names, John Lewis of Lubbock Coronado High School in Lubbock and Amos Jones of Richmond, Va.

Lewis is a 6-1 "exceptional leaper," said Spradling, "who I think can really help us out. He can play either the point or a second guard position."

Amos, at 6-4, will either play "a small forward or a second guard."

Western graduated most of its guards from the 1984-85 season.

Western returns six regulars from last season, including part-time starters James Dawn, Alvin Hicks and Ed Teal, all 6-5 players. Others returning are 6-5 Kevin Scroggins, 6-6 Mark Cano and 6-4 George Moore.

Also back on the squad will be three who were redshirted last season.

Gary Davis, 6-6 from Gary, Ind., was redshirted at the start of the season and will be coming in as a sophomore. Terry Ridgeway, 6-5, and Wally Manns, 6-6, both from Los Angeles, were redshirted after joining the team at midsemester and will come in as freshmen.

Spradling is looking to sign six players during the summer, giving him a roster of 15, of which seven or eight will be sophomores.

Pecos graduate signs to play golf at WTC

Michael Harrison, a three-year starter for Pecos High School, has signed to play golf at Western Texas College this fall.

Harrison was a two-time All-District 2-4A golfer and was captain of the team his senior year. he was runnerup district medalist as a senior and finished fifth in the regional tournament at Brownwood.

He was ranked third in his class with a 99.99 grade point average. He was a member of the National Honor Society.

"Mike is an all-around athlete," said WTC Coach Dave Foster. "He just finished playing in the Junior River Plantation Invitational in Conroe. This week he is playing in the Texas, Oklahoma Junior Tour in Wichita Falls. He has played well the last three years at Pecos. He works hard on the course and in the class room. We are very pleased to have him at Western Texas."

Harrison participated in swimming at Pecos High School where he was all-district in three events.

Loose cattle cause complaint

Snyder police are investigating a criminal mischief complaint involving roaming cattle filed Tuesday.

Vickie Jones of 1306 31st St. filed the misdemeanor action at 3:30 p.m. She told investigators her garden had sustained damage over the past several days due to the loose livestock.

Judy Garrett of 2104 Gilmore Ave. called police at 6:47 p.m. to file a theft report.

She told investigators that the tires had been stolen from her son's bicycle while it was left outside the residence earlier in the day.

In other action, city officers jailed one suspect for public intoxication Tuesday night.

Jewish leader urges blacks, Jews to unite

DALLAS (AP) — A Jewish leader addressing the NAACP blamed the breakdown of interaction between blacks and Jews on a lack of communication, but he added that it was not too late to rebuild relations and form "a coalition of equals."

When Rabbi David Saperstein spoke before NAACP convention delegates Tuesday, it was the first time in at least 10 years that a prominent Jewish leader had addressed one of the group's national conventions.

Saperstein, representing the Union of American Hebrew Congregations at the invitation of the NAACP, said he came to the group's 76th annual convention in Dallas to shatter some myths and stereotypes involving Jews.

"The breakdown of interaction between the two communities has made us less sensitive to each other's fears and needs, conveying a sense of betrayal and disappointment," Saperstein said.

"Jews have failed to appreciate that affirmative action is as precious to blacks as Israel is to Jews, that pride in Rev. (Jesse) Jackson's successes has little to do with his view on the PLO but everything to do with his ability," he said.

The majority of the six million Jews in America support affirmative action programs, but the very vocal and visible Jewish Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith opposes affirmative action.

"To the black community the ADL represents the entire Jewish community. I am here today to tell you that this stereotype is wrong," he said.

Also Tuesday, a California congressman told NAACP members that they would not be able to change the Reagan administration's stand on civil rights.

"Civil rights, affirmative action and equal educational opportunity are not accepted practices in Washington, D.C., namely in the executive branch," U.S. Rep. Esteban Torres, a Los Angeles-area Democrat, told convention delegates Tuesday.

He said the solution is not a prolonged anti-Reagan harangue "because we're not going to change anybody's mind up there in 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue."

Instead, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People members must prod their congressmen for pro-civil rights action, Torres said.

"Let's get on with the lamenting (about Reagan)," he said. "Let's get it out of our system and let's move on to focus on the future, because the future starts this week."

Torres, a former AFL-CIO member and ex-United Auto Workers union representative, was speaking at the NAACP's 10th annual labor luncheon where unions from around the country were honored for their accomplishments.

Other speakers included Marc Stepp, vice president of the International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace & Agricultural Implement Workers of America, who blamed the "reactionary administration in Washington" for "an erosion of civil rights."

Torres, speaking on the convention's third day, said union and NAACP members need to educate presidential and congressional hopefuls about civil rights to make sure they don't follow in Reagan's footsteps.

"What they (the Reagan administration) want is the reimposition of legal barriers to opportunity, to voting and to simple justice which the Congress and the state legislatures were accustomed to enacting prior to 1960," said Torres.

"They seem to ignore the fact that the legal system of this country enslaved blacks, it brutalized them and later became a silent accomplice to their injustice," he added.

Leaders say they will work without budget if necessary

WASHINGTON (AP) — The collapse of House-Senate talks on the 1986 federal budget is prompting House leaders to vow to move ahead on individual spending bills, claiming they can still achieve more than $50 billion in 1986 savings even without a budget.

Not having a budget "would be very unfortunate ... but ... not necessarily tragic," said House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, on Tuesday after negotiations broke down in a dispute over Social Security cost-of-living increases.

But the chief Senate negotiator, Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., says that without the discipline of a budget document, "it's very doubtful that we can make a dent" in the nation's $200-billion-plus deficit.

The House-Senate conference committee trying to reconcile House and Senate differences on the budget recessed indefinitely on Tuesday after Domenici accused House conferees of refusing to compromise and accept any limits on Social Security increases.

Domenici refused to meet any further with the House conferees, claiming "the conflict is irresolvable. There is no solution."

However, Domenici later opened the door to a possible resumption of talks after the week-long congressional Fourth of July recess — prompting Democrats on the panel to accuse him of posturing.

"I'm hoping that the fact that we don't have a budget ... will have a traumatic and dramatic effect on members of the House and members of the Senate in that they'll understand we're playing with dynamite. And, from that, a new approach may come," Domenici told a news conference.

The budget approved by the Senate earlier this year cancels next year's Social Security benefit increases as part of a package to trim $56 billion from the federal deficit.

The House budget, while also claiming a $56 billion savings, protects the increases for the nation's 36 million Social Security recipients and others receiving government pensions.

Next year's cost-of-living increases will take place automatically in the absence of congressional action to freeze or limit them.

Airlines told to look closer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Airline travelers, especially those flying abroad, might find that catching an airplane will take longer as the government orders closer scrutiny of carry-on and checked baggage to thwart possible terrorism.

The Federal Aviation Administration directed airlines Tuesday to tighten the inspection of not only carry-on items but also checked bags, freight, and mail on certain flights traveling in regions of the world where skyjacking or other terrorism is a risk.

It's not known how much of an impact the new inspection procedures will have on the flow of travelers through busy airports, but industry sources acknowledge some delay is likely, especially on flights abroad where most of the hijack danger is perceived.

The new procedures direct airlines to:

—Prohibit acceptence of checked baggage at a ticket counter from anyone other than a ticketed passenger and eliminates curbside check-in on all international flights.

—Increase the number of physical searches of carry-on bags after they go through mandatory X-ray screening.

—Match checked-in bags with passengers actually boarding the aircraft to determine that the bags belong to people who are actually taking the flight. If that's not possible, the bags must be scanned by X-ray or physically inspected.

—Require that all freight or mail cargo be held for 24 hours at a terminal unless it can be scanned by X-ray or physically inspected.

The Transportation Department said the Federal Aviation Administration will determine which flights will be selected for the more intensified baggage screening requirements.

Officials declined to say where the procedures will be implemented, saying that would lessen their impact.

Meanwhile, President Reagan is considering a series of options aimed at long-range improvement of security for air travelers flying abroad, including a proposal to put armed sky marshals aboard some flights where the risk of a hijacking or terrorist attack is high.

Representatives of pilot and airline groups told members of Congress on Tuesday they oppose the use of sky marshals because of potential dangers involved in anyone carrying a weapon aboard an aircraft.

Farabee bills told for session

—A bill which creasted a fund from fees on generation of hazardous waste. This money is to be used to increase enforcement of hazardous waste laws.

—Revision of the authority to create junior colleges in the future. This includes updating the numerical requirements; requiring the coordinating board to determine the need for a new junior college by reviewing duplication of services and impact on existing programs; and requiring the local taxing entity to approve a maintenance and construction tax when the voters approve creation of the new college.

—Establishment of the physician loan repayment plan to encourage physicians to locate in state agencies, rural areas and economically depressed sections of the state.

—Clarified the small school formula to assure that it funded programs such as vocational education and special education in small schools with less than 1,600 average daily attendance. The bill will flow approximately $30 million more to these schools than the current formula interpretation would allow.

—First deregulation of any type trucking in 50 years to allow members of a corporate family to haul for each other.

—Reorganization of the state auditor's position.

—Authorization of the use of increased appropriations and new Medicare income to be used by the Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation to establish new community based services for the mentally retarded.

—Revision of the Texas Mental Health Code to assume prompt emergency psychiatric care for severely ill, but nondangerous individuals.

Jury gives beaten wife $2.3 million

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — A jury award of $2.3 million to a battered wife "spoke more loudly than we will ever be able to" about police duty to protect women from domestic violence, a National Organization for Women official said.

In its award Tuesday, the U.S. District Court jury found that 29 Torrington police officers violated Tracey Thurman's constitutional rights by failing to protect her from a stabbing and beating by her estranged husband.

The jury, after deliberating 7½ hours over two days, also awarded $300,000 to Thurman's 3-year-old son for emotional damages. He witnessed the June 10, 1983, attack that left Thurman, 24, scarred and partially paralyzed.

The case marked the first time a federal court agreed to hear the civil lawsuit of a battered wife.

"I think what happened here today will be heard across the nation. Everybody's following it. It provides a new pair of glasses," said Gayle Brooks, NOW's state coordinator and director of the Connecticut Task Force on Abused Women.

Ms. Brooks predicted that state legislatures and police departments across the country would heed a warning in this case to spend money on training in how to handle domestic disputes.

The jury found that 29 officers violated Thurman's constitutional right to equal protection of the law and that police conduct was a proximate cause of her injuries.

"I'm thrilled," she said outside the courthouse. "I'm really happy. Finally, it's proved that it's their fault."

She had argued that because her complaints about her husband's harassment stemmed from a domestic dispute, police failed to give them as much consideration as they would to other types of complaints.

No arrests made

CHILDRESS, Texas (AP) — Authorities say they have made no arrests in connection with a vandalism spree at Childress Country Club that caused more than $100,000 worth of damage and forced a golf tournament to be cancelled.

Childress County Sheriff Claude Lane said 15 teen-agers ranging from 15 to 17 had been questioned about the vandalism but none had been arrested Tuesday.

"At this time I don't feel like there was any planned thing. It was just spontaneous," Lane said.

He said charges of burglary in addition to vandalism would probably be brought in connnection with the incident.

Charges could be up to a month away from being filed because of the extensive nature of the investigation, the sheriff added.

"We're not going to make any deals on this. Some are going to pay," Lane vowed. He said restitution would be sought as part of any punishment.

Lane estimated the damage at $100,000 to $125,000. All the suspects are believed to be teenagers living in the area. Laura Keys, secretary of the country club, said the club's directors would consider what to do about a possible resumption of the tournament.

Former career helping priest

By ROBERTA LANDMAN
Sun City News-Sun

SUN CITY, Ariz. (AP) — Show biz in Sun City: It's a far cry from his hoofing it in Broadway's "High Button Shoes" or "Oklahoma!" and a far cry from his two-year stint at Billy Rose's Diamond Horseshoe.

Father Arthur Bourbon's show business bookings these days are contracted out of love for people, and out of the knowledge that "I'm using whatever talent God gave me."

When he's not performing Mass at St. Clement of Rome, the 73-year-old priest and his troupe play the nursing home circuit, doing show business for charity, he says.

His troupe?

"I get talented people from the community, all over 60: three girls, the Step Sisters, and a banjo guy," says Bourbon, whose own act includes a little tap dancing, cartwheels, "impressions of Maurice Chevalier, Jimmy Cagney" — and stories.

Bourbon will tell you his own story goes beyond the rare, performer-turned-priest, to the miraculous.

The miracle includes his own spiritual return to the Catholic Church after "falling away" and a series of events that led to his being ordained a priest June 4, 1977, at the age of 65.

Bourbon's "miracles" began with a book he received from his sister, Josephine. She, another sister, Natalie, and a brother, Angus, live in the Sun City retirement community.

Bourbon was in New York and well into his show business career when he read "Seven Story Mountain," the story of Thomas Merton's conversion to Catholicism, he says.

The spirituality Bourbon regained when he read that book remained with him after he left active show business for a brief stint in the business world.

Bourbon taught dancing on Long Island, and, "at nearly 50," moved to Fort Lauderdale, Fla., where he was in partnership in a dance studio for several years.

In that time, Bourbon taught, performed with his partner at civic functions and club dates, became part of the community and became increasingly more involved in his religion.

At age 60, Bourbon tried to enter a Trappist monastery. He remembers the day the monastery turned him down — "because of age mostly" — as the day "I had to get an audition to get into a monastery."

Overhearing the monastery's need for entertainment at a 25th anniversary celebration for monks, the inveterate performer volunteered his services. He says it was the show he helped the monks put on that won him a place in the monastery.

Bourbon was a monk for a little over a year — up at 3 a.m. for prayers and meditation, working all day, and to bed at 9. He says it was a very different regimen for a show person who had stayed up late and slept late.

"The prayer life was beautiful," says Bourbon. But he longed for the priesthood.

Bourbon left the monastery and came to visit his sister, Natalie, the first of the siblings to move to Sun City. She arranged for Bourbon to talk with Father William Waldron, pastor of St. Clement's.

Bourbon says the priest suggested "the permanent diaconate" as a way for him to serve the Church in a semi-religious way.

Studying for the diaconate took three years. One of Bourbon's miracles, the one that gave him the fortitude to persist in his attempts at becoming a priest despite his age, came to him as he served in St. Charles Borromeo Catholic Church in Peoria.

The miraculous source of inspiration came in off the street, "a brother with a religious order" who was walking from the state of Washington to Mexico to work with children.

"You've got to fight for it," the man said of the priesthood, as he wrote out for Bourbon a prayer to St. Ignatius of Loyola, the patron saint of priests.

Bourbon obtained permission to go to a seminary, Sacred Heart Monastery in Hales Corners, Wis. He found the wherewithal to pay tuition of $3,000 a semester through a friend at St. Clement's, that friend's friends and through Father Waldron and his parishioners.

His monastery and diaconate years eventually were counted toward his seminary training and he was able to finish his training in a year.

Veterinarian helps to protect animals from dread diseases

NEWBURGH, N.Y. (AP) — After a day chasing a camel or grappling with a giraffe, Percell Taylor says he feels more like "Tarzan than a veterinarian."

But Taylor doesn't work in the jungle, or even a zoo.

Taylor is assistant veterinarian at the U.S. Agricultural Department Quarantine Center, located at Stewart Airport. It's part of one of this country's most important flanks of border defense.

The center guards against diseases, such as the recent outbreak of avian influenza that killed millions of chickens in Pennsylvania and Maryland.

What makes this quarantine unique is that it is one of five in the country that also handles "exotic animals," from bizarre birds to rare ruminators.

"We get every kind of bird that God ever created," Taylor says. "I can remember birds that we got from South America that barked like a German Shepherd and ate hamburger. When they shipped them, they put live mice in the crate so they would have something to nibble on."

Several months ago the center received a shipment of 21 rare reticulated giraffes from Africa, headed for a zoo in Florida.

"Taking blood from the giraffes was less than comfortable," Taylor says. "I just didn't like being 16 feet off the ground on a forklift with the giraffe kicking and rocking and all I could see was a long fall down to the concrete."

With the giraffe shipment came a ruminator called a black-backed duiker. "It looks like a big water rat with horns and it sounds like a pig," Taylor says.

Seeing animals that look like creatures from a science fiction movie is something Taylor has learned to accept. However, for the most part, the center handles the basic "animals we've grown up with," such as horses, cows and pigs.

"I remember once we got 185 pigs on a plane. Boy, that was a fiasco," Taylor says. "The pigs ate up all of the false flooring and plastic on the plane ... they just about gutted the man's airplane.

"There's always something exotic here, though, because of the steady exchange of zoo animals across the Atlantic."

A zebra here, some antelope there, maybe a few wildebeeste, they trickle in, says Taylor, who is expected to be able to go from examining a woolly haired alpaca to a stud racing pigeon like any other veterinarian might go from cat to dog.

"If there's a cow you just go in and treat it," he says. "But if it's something like an antelope, they have no respect for man and are frightened to death. They never stop shaking. There have been times things have died just because they were caught."

The center has been in Newburgh for the past five years. It had been in Clifton, N.J., since 1903, but moved, in part, to gain better access to an airport runway.

Two veterinarians and about 30 other workers process and watch over the animals housed in 13 corrugated-metal barns surrounded by a barbed wire fence.

Huge drawings show all sides

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Douglas Cooper's drawings are so big — some as large as 8 by 12 feet — that they don't fit on his drawing table. They don't even fit on his paper. And they don't fit the traditional view of drawings: an artist capturing a single view of reality from a single position.

"It'd be nice to have a wall to work on," says Cooper, who teaches drawing to architecture students at Carnegie-Mellon University. Instead, he has extended his drawing table with saw horses and he unrolls his paper as he goes along.

Sitting sideways and working on rag paper, the right-handed Cooper reaches across himself to draw.

"I wear out one pencil sharpener every four months," he says. "I sharpen about six pencils (at a time), and that allows me to work about five minutes."

Most of his larger drawings, done with carbon pencil, are composed of two pieces of paper joined with linen tape and acid-free glue, so "they'll last forever."

The artist actually likes to work on cheaper paper. "The risk is lower. It's not for posterity."

He has investigated the possibility of getting paper large enough for his drawings but "you have to special order a huge amount — enough for six lifetimes. And the IRS might start asking you questions. They'll think you're running a counterfeit operation."

Cooper says he's not making money in any sense of the word. Although he may sell a drawing for $6,000, he figures he earns about a dollar an hour, considering the time he puts in on his works. He turns out about two large pieces a year.

The artist, originally from White Plains, N.Y., actually set out to become an architect, studying at Carnegie-Mellon.

In a drawing course, Kent Bloomer, now at Yale, gave his class an assignment 20 years ago that Cooper is still doing.

Teenagers run news service

By NATHAN SALANT
The Daily Review

HAYWARD, Calif. (AP) — The most lively conversation of all was about mud ducks and freaks, back street and funk town.

But while the 12 teen-agers already knew most of the slang words, the newspaper articles they write about young people are more than just vernacular.

The stories are serious business for the teen-agers, who work for the Youth News Service, an organization that sells the articles to papers across the country.

Some of the subjects proposed for stories include suicide, relationships, politics and family conflict.

The ideas are aired during Monday brainstorming sessions in the offices of Pacific News Service, a San Francisco-based news organization that's the main sponsor of the youth project.

With the guidance of two adult editors paid by PNS, the reporters develop ideas for articles at the meetings.

The reporters work for experience, not money. Volunteer positions are available for anyone 15 to 19 years old who can write.

"My feeling is that our pieces have to stand up against any piece in the newspaper," said Louis Freedberg, 35, the Pacific News Service editor who heads the project. "We don't want readers to think, 'That's a good piece for a 16-year-old.'"

The colorful slang, including terms like "spitting," "book that," "funky fresh" and "tenda," are the subject of Yalonda Lofton's next story, about teen slang.

For the uninitiated, "mud ducks" are ugly people, "freaks" are promiscuous girls, "back street" means thugs, and "funk town" is a West Oakland gang, or could be used to mean Oakland itself. "Spitting" is flirting, "book that" means forget it, "funky fresh" is well-dressed, and "tenda," or "tender," means attractive.

Ms. Lofton, 17, whose story about neon clothing appeared in the San Francisco Examiner recently, is one of three Hayward teen-agers writing for Youth News Service. All three — Ms. Lofton, Clair Whitmer and Jesi Gill — are seniors at Hawyard High School.

"My first story (about a young disc jockey in Hayward) took like two months because I didn't know how to approach it," Ms. Lofton said. "But I worked with Louis, and he told me what he wanted."

So far, their stories have been published in the Examiner, The Fresno Bee and the Chicago Tribune.

"We don't have any trouble recruiting kids," Freedberg said, "but getting really talented kids is a challenge."

Theory: gender switching may be possible

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Genetically speaking, one of every 20,000 men is mostly female.

They look like men, and they act like men. Certainly they think of themselves as men. Yet, under a microscope their cells carry two X chromosomes, the most basic hallmark of femininity.

These people are called XX males. And to a small group of scientists, they are far more interesting than simply another example of nature's talent for tricks and goofs.

They may be the key to discovering the sex trigger: just one gene out of the 100,000 or so of humanity's blueprints, a gene that makes a man a man. It is — if it exists at all — gender's on-off switch.

Compared with many notions in genetics, this one is beguilingly simple.

In the beginning, goes this reasoning, every embryo growing within its mother's womb has all the biological machinery it needs to be a male or a female. Everything depends on one criticial gene, the sex switch. If it has the gene, it becomes a boy. If it doesn't, it becomes a girl.

So deep within the biochemical library of human heredity lies an inequality of the sexes. There is a gene for masculinity but not for feminity. Instead, the origin of feminity is the absence of a gene.

The very existence of the sex trigger is still a theory. No one has ever seen it.

In fact, scientists have no clear idea of what this powerful gene looks like or how it does what it does. There is even a chance, they say, that it is actually a group of genes, clumped together. But they do believe they've narrowed down the genetic terrain where it — or they — lurk. And with luck and work, maybe they will find it.

Scientists in the United States and Europe are searching for the gene. Among them is Dr. David C. Page, a physician at the Whitehead Institute for Biomedical Research, an independent lab affiliated with Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"This gene is obviously a master regulator," Page says. "It has dramatic effects. It's capable of completely switching the pattern of development of an organism. It can shut down the formation of ovaries and, indirectly, of all female characteristics. And it can, at the same time, turn on differentiation of testes and, indirectly, of all male characteristics."

Everyone, male or female, has 23 pairs of chromosomes. These are strings of genes, and one of each pair is inherited from the mother and one from the father.

Two of these are called sex chromosomes, and they are known as X and Y. Everybody gets an X chromosome from his or her mother. The father's contribution to this pair of chromosomes can be either an X or a Y. If their child has two X chromosomes, it's female; an X and a Y, and it's male.

In 1964, Dr. Albert de la Chapelle of the University of Helsinki in Finland discovered a strange exception to this rule — men who had two X chromosomes. They are normal men but for one shortcoming: They are sterile.

Player advises students

By LOIS TAYLOR
Star-Bulletin

HONOLULU (AP) — It was the regularly scheduled program on career education offered to the students of Kaiser High School. The kids have listened to accountants and veterinarians, engineers and travel agents — all professions that they might practically consider.

None of these speakers has drawn more than 150 people. But on a recent afternoon, when San Francisco '49ers tight end Russ Francis came to talk, twice that number showed up. Maybe none of those teen-agers will ever play pro football, but they came to hear a celebrity, a Super Bowl winner who had gone to a local high school, tell them about life in the fast lane.

Francis was introduced by his former homeroom teacher at Kailua High School, Leanne Luke Chuck, now career and college counselor at Kaiser.

"He was bright and articulate, and maybe mischievous," she said of Francis' years at the school. "He was quarterback on our team, but he transferred to Oregon in his senior year."

"When I left Kailua, I went to Oregon — I used to work there summers when I lived here, hauling hay," Francis told his audience. "I do better in the country than I do in the city. I played for the Patriots for six years, and then three years ago I moved to San Francisco. I have a home and a ski shop in Vermont, but I spend a lot of time in Honolulu."

His message, though, was about football. "When I got into professional sports, I did it without planning to. It never made sense to me that people would want to run at each other at high speed. One or both will fall down. I didn't see a future in football. It's painful.

"I went to college for a degree in animal science, intending to be a vet. In my sophomore year, I broke my ankle and I'm convinced that I did it because I didn't want to play football. But I did play in my junior year.

"The NFL was something new to me and the first professional football game I ever went to, I played in. I was playing for the College AllStars against the Pittburgh Steelers. They don't play that game anymore."

Francis then got into the subject of options and the idea that a college education expands options, gives one more chances in life.

"In high school I got interested in planes and thought about being a pilot. In college, I considered being a vet. Get a degree; it puts you more in control of your life," he said.

"If you can do something well, you will enjoy it. Do what is important to you. If you find yourself where you aren't comfortable, change direction. That's why you need options. I'm not going to tell you to do everything your parents and your teachers try to tell you, because they aren't always right, either."

It concerns Francis that fans don't give professional football players credit for much intellect.

Plants from many lands grow in Honolulu

HONOLULU (AP) — A major collection of the world's tropical plants, many of which are becoming scarce in their native lands, is on Oahu in the four units of Honolulu Botanic Gardens. These gardens contain more than 8,300 species, according to an inventory just published.

The story of Hawaii's botanic gardens dates back to King Kamehameha III, who established such a garden on land now occupied by St. Andrew's Priory. Surviving from his plantings is a specimen now listed as one of Honolulu's Exceptional Trees.

A little later, in 1850, the German physician Dr. William Hillebrand purchased a five acre plot and started to import tropical trees and other plants, with the help of visiting sea captains.

This was the nucleus of Foster Garden, named for Thomas and Mary Foster, who purchased it in 1867 and later bequeathed it to the city. The garden now includes 20 acres with 1,153 species, among them huge old trees planted by Hillebrand.

Foster Garden was the first unit of Honolulu Botanic Gardens, which today includes Wahiawa, with 30 acres and 1,419 species; Koko Crater, with 200 acres and about 1,000 species; and the spectacular garden on the Kaneohe side of the Koolau Pali, Ho'omaluhia, with 400 acres and 1,633 species. Some species are still in the nursery.

Ho'omaluhia's plant propagator, Dan McGuire, has planted 10,000 individual plants there and an average of 200 new species a year. They include specimens of species that are rare, threatened or endangered, from such places as Uganda and Sri Lanka.

Since the time of Hillebrand, plants for the gardens have come from many parts of the world. Paul R. Weissich, Honolulu Botanic Gardens director, and his staff have about 100 contacts, all over the tropics, for plant acquisition.

Most plants are obtained on an exchange basis but the gardens pay for some. Funds to buy the plants are raised from the plant sales held by the Friends of Foster Garden, a non-profit organization that helps Honolulu Botanic Gardens obtain rare plants.

Patricia Ayers, a graduate botanist, and Rachel Kariel, a graduate horticulturist, were hired by the Friends to inventory plantings, for the first time since 1972.

The gardens include 350 endemic Hawaiian plants, many of which were on the Smithsonian Institution's list of candidates for endangered species status. There are also plants native to places ranging from Australia to Zimbabwe. Florida, California, the Caribbean, Mexico, Central and South America, many islands in the Pacific, Africa, India and Southeast Asia are homes for some of the species.

Weissich said an analysis of the inventory showed the gardens had "a significant number of tropical tree species from areas where man is rapidly destroying the forests ... We have an excellent collection now from the Philippines, perhaps the only one of significance outside of those islands."

Tropical forests there are being cut for the Japanese and Americans to use in plywood, construction timber, and pulp for paper.

Weissich says the gardens also have good representations from Sri Lanka, where about 60 percent of the native forest has disappeared, and from Uganda, where forests have been cut, first by the Europeans and more recently by the natives.

The multisite system of Honolulu Botanic Gardens encompasses a range of terrain and climate. Foster Garden lies along the coastal plain in downtown Honolulu. Koko Crater is hot and dry, and dryland tropicals from East Africa, Socotra, India and the New World have been planted there.

The Wahiawa Botanical Garden is located on the cool 1,000-feet plateau between Oahu's two mountain ranges. The site was once one of the experimental arboreta of the Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association. Tropical plants that thrive in a cooler climate and in high humidity have been planted there.

Ho'omaluhia is an area that gets about 10 inches of rain a year. Species from the world's disappearing tropical lowland floras have been planted there in geographical and environmental sections.

Major changes ahead

WASHINGTON (AP) — What scientific and technological achievements between now and the 22nd century do some of the nation's most promising future scientists forecast?

Computer brain implants to enrich the human potential; new propulsion systems for rapid transit throughout the solar system; the development of a nearly disease-free society, and longer lifespans.

These are a few of the conjectures by the 40 national winners from 13 states and Puerto Rico in the 44th annual Science Talent Search. They met here recently to share $89,500 in scholarships and cash awards in the competition administered by Science Service and funded by the Westinghouse Electric Corp.

Now high school seniors ranging in age from 16 to 18, they all plan to pursue scientific careers after college. Five former STS winners have been awarded Nobel Prizes.

"Within the next century, it is reasonable to expect that computer brain implants will be used to enhance mental capabilities and correct physical disabilities," said Alan Hu, 17, La Jolla, Calif. He was the winner of the top $12,000 scholarship for a project combining mathematics with computer sciences. In the nearer term, he believes, "Computers will become more common than telephones and used as easily as the electric bulb."

Hu, first in his class at La Jolla High School, expects to continue his study of mathematics and computer science at Stanford University. His hobbies include volleyball, tennis, composing music, writing poetry and repairing cars.

Breed effort aims at savings rare sparrows

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — Fighting off extinction, the only three Dusky seaside sparrows believed in existence are getting an early start on their breeding activities this year — with the help of a tape recorded mating call and other environmental aids.

The three rare birds, all males, are being mated with females that are crossbreeds from the Duskies' closest cousins in a do-or-die program to perpetuate the line of the critically endangered species.

One of the hybrid female mates has laid three eggs which wildlife experts are hoping will yield a chick or two. Because the female is 50 percent Dusky, the offspring would be 75 percent pure.

The other two mates are 75 percenters — as caretakers call them — and any surviving chick from those broods would mean an 87.5 percent Dusky.

Considering the advancing age of the three male survivors, this may be as far as the scientists can go in breeding the Dusky line.

"They are probably about 10 or 11 years old now. It's hard to say," says Charles Cook, curator of Disney World's Discovery Island, where the 6-inch, brown-and-black birds are kept.

This would put them three or four years away from extinction, the experts believe.

But they will keep the males breeding as long as they can, trying to come up with as genetically pure a Dusky as possible.

The nesting period is being artificially stretched this year by Cook and his crew in attempts to give them a better chance of producing offspring closer to the pureblood species. To do that — in this third year of the program — they are introducing a cassette tape of Dusky bird cries as a "motivational aid."

"The tape is of a male territorial song to attract a mate. It was recorded in their habitat, the marshes of Brevard County," says Cook. "We'll play it about twice a day and maybe it will fool the Duskies into thinking that there are more of them out there and get them going."

The survivors have been bred with their nearest relative, Scott seaside sparrows, for several years. This has so far resulted in only four offspring — a 75 percent-Dusky female, another 75 percenter Cook hopes is a female, the 50 percenter that recently laid eggs and a 25 percenter.

Some critics do not like restoration effort

VATICAN CITY (AP) — A painstaking restoration of the Vatican's Sistine Chapel is dramatically changing the widely accepted view of Michelangelo's style and method of painting, but not without controversy.

Disappearing with the layers of centuries-old grime is the popular conception of Michelangelo as a sculptor who only knew how to use somber colors to emphasize form and who toiled for years on his back to complete the Herculean task, the officials say.

But the restoration, which began in 1980 and is expected to take 12 years, has drawn criticism from one group of American painters and at least one Italian artist who claim that the Renaissance frescoes are being ruined.

Fabrizio Mancinelli, director of the project, disagrees.

He says the restoration work so far "has radically changed everything" once thought of Michelangelo. "The colors are totally different."

As an example, he points to the cleaned lunettes above the windows that were once seen "as the ancestors of Christ in the darkness of sin, waiting for the coming of Christ."

"This darkness was simply a matter of dirt," he says.

Cleaning had begun in 1964 in the 15th-century chapel where popes are elected, he says. After extensive testing, it was decided in 1980 to tackle Michelangelo Buonarroti's frescoes, using the same method and cleaning solvent as was used in the chapel.

The first phase, which was completed last October, involved the 14 arched panels or lunettes above the windows depicting Old Testament prophets and heathen sibyls.

The next four years will be spent on the barrel-vaulted ceiling with 300 figures from the book of Genesis, completed along with the lunettes between 1508 and 1512. The last four years will be spent on Michelangelo's "Last Judgment" on the altar wall which dates from between 1536 and 1541.

New historical research in conjunction with the restoration has also put to rest the notion that Michelangelo painted while lying flat on his back, as depicted in the book and movie, "The Agony and The Ecstasy."

"He was standing," Mancinelli says.

In 1848, the U.S. Senate ratified a treaty to end the Mexican War.

Dream didn't get off ground

CORDES JUNCTION, Ariz. (AP) — Out here in the high desert two hours north of Phoenix, amid the mesquite and the dry grass, a dream languishes. Three percent of a dream, anyway.

It is the concrete core of a someday city, the dream of Italian architect Paolo Soleri, a thin, almost frail man with a voice so soft one must bend to hear his words.

The dream was Ozymandian in a sense. Soleri was and is proud of it. A city that would face the sun from which all blessings flowed, a layered metropolis, one with nature, self-contained and yet offering access to an unmuted, uncontaminated landscape. He called it Arcosanti.

In the 1970s Soleri was flooded with students of new wave architecture, looking for answers to the sprawling urban dilemma, the rotting inner cities, the ghetto mentality. To many, Paolo Soleri and his vision of a vertical city were the answer.

It was to house 5,000, would draw its energy from the sun and its food from vast greenhouses. It would rise 25 stories over the desert. There would be no automobiles and no need for them. Everything would be reachable on foot. Basic industry would be clustered, as would cultural and community resources. At a distance it would appear as one building, but it would be a vertical cluster of many buildings.

Today, at age 65, Paolo Soleri tries to keep his dream alive with meager funds, a budget of something less than a half million dollars a year.

Once his workshops drew 300 students apiece — as many as 1,700 a year — each paying some $500 to contribute their work and learn from Soleri.

Now staff and students number only about 50 over the year, and many are at work fashioning the ceramic and brass windbells and other artistic objects which provide most of the revenue for the Cosanti Foundation, Soleri's umbrella organization.

He visits Arcosanti three or four times a week to oversee the work at the site and plan the future. But contrasted to a decade ago, there is little work to oversee, and the future appears dimmer and shorter.

Was he too ambitious? Were the eyes of youth too bright with expectations? Does he feel regret?

"Maybe I could have been a very successful architect if I had stayed in the profession," he says. "But the trouble with that is, if I had, I would not have developed the ideas that I think are very, very important."

Was he ahead of his time?

There is no laughter in his voice as he says, "I've been told that many times and I kept laughing.

"But maybe they're right. I don't know."

Soleri lives and works at the Cosanti Foundation in Paradise Valley, an affluent suburb of Scottsdale, Ariz., which is a mostly affluent suburb of Phoenix. There is a garden-like gallery, hung with his windbells, where his architectural ideas are on display. One, perhaps the most famous, is the design of a city which looks like an enormous mountain standing over its own reflection in a lake.

He leads a simple, if not ascetic life, in a painter's studio without air-conditioning in a state which lives on air-conditioning.

The loss of his wife, Colly, two years ago, was both a personal and professional tragedy. She was a partner, an integral part of his work.

Will Arcosanti ever be completed?

"The completion of it went out the window many years ago. But what I have been trying to do in the last five or six years is to focus on the critical mass, which is about 10 percent of the system, which would be about 500 people active on the site. I think at that point it would be self-sustaining and also quite interesting."

But how to do it, how to raise the money for the concrete and the interest in the workers?

"The new thing is the 'cause bells.'"

He would dedicate the bells he makes to various causes. There would be children's bells, hunger bells, bells to protest atomic warfare, pollution.

"If they start going, they could be good revenue and would also connect the project with those causes. We'd give a percentage of the income to the causes and, if any cause wants to endorse the idea, they can sell them and make more money. Then they get more than a percentage of our sales."

Architecture professor Jeffrey Cook of Arizona State University points out that Soleri was once considered a worthy successor to the great triumvirate of American architecture, H.H. Richardson who practiced in Boston in the late 1800s, Louis Sullivan who practiced in Chicago in the early 1900s and Frank Lloyd Wright, his student, who dominated American architecture until his death in the 1950s.

Soleri, a student of Wright's, says that while Wright drew on the horizontal use of space, he uses space vertically.

Cook tells a story to define Soleri:

"An architect says, 'He's a fine man with good ideas, but he's really an artist.' An artist says, 'He's a fine man with good images, but really a theologian.' A theologian says, 'He's a fine man with interesting positions, but he's really an architect.'"

Arcosanti, in its present state of hesitant construction, looks something like several beehives sundered. But wandering through its incomplete rooms, one gets a concept of space from its circular windows and its concrete arches that is most interesting.

In 1969, James Earl Ray pleaded guilty in Memphis, Tenn., to assassinating civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. Ray later repudiated that plea.

One-parent families now account for 26 percent of all U.S. families with children under 18 — up from only 13 percent in 1970.

'Uncle Sam' speaks on benefits of life

By SUSAN KEATON
Scottsdale Daily Progress

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Several times a week, Budd Miller puts on a blue velvet coat and a top hat ringed with stars, and goes to talk to children.

He tells them how they can overcome obstacles and take charge of their lives, and how they can find their unique places in this world.

With the costume, the whitehaired, bearded Miller is the spitting image of Uncle Sam.

When he talks, people listen.

"Sam is amazing," said Miller, a Scottsdale resident. "I can say things as Uncle Sam that I could never say as myself."

Miller also tours the country, giving motivational speeches at conventions or company meetings. And he hosts a radio program and a cable television show that also help spread stories of how ordinary people found their special niches.

"The thing we all want to do is to be unique," said Miller, who himself admits a desire to be different from other talk show hosts. People who have beaten the odds are his special favorites.

"They're all motivational type stories," he said.

One example is Pete Studwick, a man who runs uphill marathons. Studwick has no arms or feet — he runs on the stumps of his legs "in considerable pain and difficulty," Miller said.

But those kinds of people are Miller's heroes.

Miller said he had become interested in motivational stories while he was traveling as a professional speaker. Everywhere he went, he said, he met people who had stories of personal triumph.

"I never got tired of those stories," he said.

Miller began incorporating them into his speeches and found that other people loved them, too.

Miller described his speaking style as evangelistic. Even grownups like his Uncle Sam speeches, he said.

Miller's Uncle Sam impression grew out of a comment by a guest on his television show that he looked just like the character. Now, when he puts on the costume made by a Scottsdale tailor, he assumes many of the characteristics attributed to our national symbol.

"Sam" speaks out on issues ranging from the length of presidential terms to government spending. And Sam always says just what he thinks:

—"The government spending is a time bomb. Left unchecked, we will not endure."

—"We don't have to be a welfare nation. We have got to restress the work ethic in America."

—"I want the right to be rich," says Miller, adding that people who work hard should be able to enjoy the rewards of their effort.

Most of all, Sam and Miller want to encourage people to live life to its fullest.

"The energy crisis that concerns me the most is the energy crisis between people's ears," Miller said. "They're missing the joy of life."

Long fight at last is bringing results

By MARY JANE LANE
Lancaster Sunday News

LANCASTER, Pa. (AP) — Katie True: The very mention of the name has raised hackles, activated ulcers and sent chills up many a public official's spine. Her name has also given hope to other concerned adults as she has waged a seven-year war against drugs and alcohol in the county.

While still a long way from declaring victory, she is starting to see some results as the children she is fighting for are taking up the cause.

Over the years, Mrs. True has taken much of the heat in the battle, including public verbal abuse as she met denial that there was a problem from both adults and youngsters in her home school district.

It has all been worth it, she said, "particularly when you see the teen-agers giving the message to the younger ones and the look on those children's faces."

Mrs. True's approach has changed over the years as she has met various barriers that have discouraged others. At first, she launched a one-woman campaign to eliminate drugs in the county. She said she soon learned it was the wrong approach.

When that failed, she and her husband formed a parents group focused on educating parents to the problem. The group is still very active, but wasn't the complete answer. Today she believes the only way to defeat the problem of substance abuse among children is through children themselves — and it is starting to work.
