Whose Congress?

WASHINGTON — Accustomed to setting the agenda for Congress, majority Republicans returned to the Capitol from their spring break to find White House-backed multi-billion-dollar tobacco legislation pending in the Senate. The skirmishing underscores a struggle for control of the legislative agenda. The outcome not only will determine what legislation passes this year but also help shape results of midterm elections in which the two parties will labor to maximize turnout of their voters.

Welfare bill may target children

■ House bill is designed to make it harder for people to rip off Social Security program income.

By Laura Meckler
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House Republicans, whose sweeping welfare overhaul already is cutting off checks to 100,000 disabled children, are considering new changes that could cut tens of thousands more kids from the rolls.

Rep. Clay Shaw, R-Fla., is offering legislation aimed at making it harder for people to rip off Social Security's Supplemental Security Income program and to provide stiffer penalties for those caught cheating. Disability advocates are focusing on a provision that makes it even harder for children to qualify.

Already, the Social Security Administration is removing an estimated 100,000 children with moderate disabilities from SSI in response to the 1996 welfare overhaul.

Shaw, chairman of the Ways and Means human resources subcommittee, said his measure is needed to make standards consistent and fair for all children.

"We're not going to do it in a reckless manner," he said. "We're going to do it in a caring, cautious manner."

He said the bill will be introduced and discussed this year but will not move through Congress until 1999.

The proposal would affect children with mental retardation, cerebral palsy and other medical disorders whose conditions meet medical criteria but not a second test established by the 1996 law. Under current law, it's enough simply to meet the medical test.

The 1996 changes represented lawmakers' attempt to get control of a program that had exploded to serve almost 1 million children and cost $5 billion per year.

Faced with stories of children faking ailments to get on the rolls, Congress tightened the criteria and ordered the Social Security Administration to review the cases of almost 300,000 children who came onto the program through a test that measured functioning rather than medical ailments. This test, critics alleged, allowed children with behavior problems but not true disabilities to collect checks.

Congressional auditors say the Supplemental Security Income program remains ripe for abuse. Last year, the

MC program teaches students to live off the road

Take the diploma and hit the road. People from all walks of life are taking up truck driving, according to Annie Hovenic, director of admissions of Midland College Truck Driving Academy.

The academy, 2067 Commerce Drive off Loop 250, has about 23 people enrolled in its classes and at least eight are women.

That number is a first for the academy, which prides itself on teaching the laws and procedures of the trucking industry.

The academy includes classroom time and driving in the parking lot and on the road. Students spend 160 hours over three to eight weeks at the academy. Upon graduation they obtain their commercial licenses and many leave with jobs, she said.

"Most people are pre-hired by the time they graduate," Ms. Hovenic said. And that is why most people attend the academy.

The class teaches people about how to safely transport hazardous materials and how to drive tankers and double or triple trailers.

The school guarantees that most students start working locally making between $25,000 to $30,000 a year, she said.

"If they go over the road to the 48 states, they could make as much as $35,000," she said.

This year only four of 82 graduates have not found jobs.

In most cases, companies require truck drivers to own their vehicles.

Truck drivers are in demand because government agencies and businesses rely on them to deliver materials around the clock, Ms. Hovenic said.

"If they stopped (driving) for four hours, it'd be terrible," she said. "Ninety percent of your house was trucked in at one point and time."

The class begins with experienced

Security Council demands India, Pakistan freeze nuclear testing

By Robert H. Reid
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — The 15 members of the Security Council demanded Saturday in a unanimous vote that India and Pakistan refrain from further nuclear tests, halt weapons programs and sign nuclear control agreements unconditionally.

The Indian Foreign Ministry denounced the resolution as "coercive and unhelpful" and said "we find it grotesque that an organ of the United Nations should seek to address India in this manner."

Pakistan's U.N. ambassador, Ahmad Kamal, accused major powers of using nuclear treaties "to legitimize their own possession of huge nuclear arsenals ... in perpetuity and as a blunt instrument" to deny them to others.

Other non-nuclear states, including Canada, also sent a strong message to the United States and the other four nuclear powers, telling them to fulfill commitments to reduce their own nuclear arsenals.

The message points up the challenge facing the nuclear powers — the United States, Russia, China, France and Britain — in marshaling international pressure to curb the nuclear arms race in South Asia.

The resolution, co-sponsored by Japan, Slovenia, Sweden and Costa Rica, denied India and Pakistan legal status as "nuclear powers." Formal status would enable them to keep their nuclear arms under the 1970 Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

Japanese Ambassador Hishashi Owada said the Indian and Pakistani tests last month threaten the entire global system of nuclear controls and could plunge the international community "into an uncontrollable world of nuclear proliferation."

U.S. Ambassador Bill Richardson echoed that remark, saying the tests "represent a profound blow" to efforts to control nuclear weapons and called on the two countries to heed the council's call "because it is in their own best interest."

However, Kamal said Pakistan "reserves the right... to deter aggression by conventional weapons or non-conventional means."

It was clear from the debate sur-

School board members to vote on 2.5 percent pay increase for non-teachers

From Staff Reports

Midland Independent School District school board members on Tuesday will vote on proposed raises for non-teachers.

The board will vote on a raise of 2.5 percent of midpoint (a percentage of what a person of midpoint experience makes) for all non-teaching staff, which includes administrators, bus drivers and custodians.

Superintendent Joseph P. Baressi Jr. said that the board earlier approved a teacher pay scale.

"We feel that the first priority is (teacher pay)," he said. "The 2.5 percent of midpoint is the most we can afford."

The proposal will come during the regular board meeting at the MISD Administration Building on 615 W. Missouri Ave. It begins at 4 p.m. and the public is invited to attend.

In other business:

■ Administrators and board members will have a budget work session and will compare MISD budget data with the 50 largest districts in Texas and the state average.

For example, according to MISD, the district spends $188 per student for administrative services as compared to a state average of $305. The district spends about $4,400 total per student, below the state average of $5,100.

Art Martin, executive director for business services, said he will point out the comparisons between administrative costs and employee salaries.

He will also ask board members if they have questions or ideas for a proposed $119 million budget, which is an increase of 3.6 percent over the 1996-97 budget. If the board approves the non-teacher salary raises, much of the budget will be set.

"We have enough then, to not finalize the budget, but we would have enough to develop a complete budget for their review," he said.

■ Staff will ask the board if they can apply for four state reading-related Academics 2000 grants for elementary schools.

Border dispute has foreigners scrambling to get out of Eritrea

ASMARA, Eritrea (AP) — With a border dispute escalating into bombing raids, hundreds of foreigners scrambled Saturday for a way out, fearing Eritrea will be engulfed in war with Ethiopia. One of their main escape routes came under attack for a second straight day.

Ethiopian jets again bombed a military-civilian airport not far from Asmara, forcing embassies to step up their exit plans.

A plane carrying 194 evacuees, including 129 Americans, Britons and Canadians arrived in Germany on Saturday. On arrival in Frankfurt, some of the weary foreigners described seeing fighter jets streaking across the sky and hearing bombs crashing to the ground during clashes this week.

American and other foreign diplomats met with the Ethiopian prime minister and received a pledge that bombing would be suspended from Saturday evening until this morning so evacuations can take place, but Eritrean President Isaias Afwerki said he had little hope for a quick resolution to the crisis.

"At the moment, I'm not seeing any light at the end of the tunnel," he told reporters.

The European Union, Italy and others condemned the escalation of fighting.

There was no word on casualties from Saturday's bombing, but Eritrea claimed to have shot down one of the Ethiopian MiG 23 fighter-bombers and to have captured its pilot; Ethiopia confirmed the downing.

A source in the Ethiopian Foreign Ministry said his forces had shot down an Eritrean MiG over northeastern Ethiopia on Friday and troops had taken the pilot into captivity. At the same time, he denied that Eritrea had struck down any of its planes Friday.

A source familiar with the Eritrean Air Force, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Ethiopia clearly was trying to wipe out Eritrea's small air force, which consists of a half-dozen aging Soviet-era MiG fighter-bombers.

Ethiopia's army also outnumbers Eritrea's 40,000-strong force by about three to one.

Ethiopia said its Friday bombing raid on the same airport was in retaliation for an Eritrean air attack on Mekele, 125 miles north of Addis Ababa, the Ethiopian capital. At least 44 Ethiopian civilians were killed and 135 wounded in Mekele, according to government-run Radio Fana.

The government did not provide an explanation for Saturday's attack.

In Addis Ababa, diplomats from Italy, Germany, Britain and the United States met with Prime Minister Meles Zenawi, who told them Ethiopia would provide a security "window" between 5 p.m. Saturday and 6 a.m. Sunday to allow planes to land in Asmara to evacuate their citizens, according to Italian Ambassador Marcello Ricoveri.

An Italian C-130 arrived in Djibouti on Saturday night and was scheduled to make at least one trip to Asmara, a distance of about 400 miles.

The U.S.-charter aircraft with 194 people, including American government workers and Peace Corps volunteers, arrived in Frankfurt early Saturday after leaving Asmara on Friday night.

Aaron Greenberg, a 22-year-old Peace Corps volunteer from New York City, said that on Friday, Eritreans had gathered outside the Ethiopian embassy in Asmara and were cheering the reported downing of an Ethiopian jet.

"The cars were driving past (the embassy) and honking their horns," he said.

Eritrea gained independence from Ethiopia in 1993, and Eritrean rebels later were instrumental in helping the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front overthrow a 17-year military regime in July 1991.

But the two countries dispute at least six areas along their common border, which was drawn by Italy after it conquered Eritrea in 1885.

Relations between the one-time allies soured when Eritrea introduced its own currency in November in an effort to reassert its independence, triggering a trade war. Eritreans began streaming to the common border to take up the fight.

Friday's air strikes, on two hangars at the airport, came a day after Ethiopian premier Meles agreed to a U.S. and Rwandan peace proposal. But at the time, he warned that his country's patience was wearing thin because of Eritrea's refusal to withdraw from territory Ethiopia accuses it of occupying.

Across the continent in Ouagadougu, the capital of Burkina Faso, foreign ministers from the Organization of African Unity on Saturday urged Ethiopia and Eritrea to refrain from the use of violence. The growing conflict will likely dominate talks between OAU heads of state during meetings that begin Monday.

President Isaias Afwerki is greeted by street cleaners in Asmara after a news conference in the Eritrean capital on Saturday. Afwerki said he wanted a peaceful resolution to the war with Ethiopia but could not see the light at the end of the tunnel yet. An hour earlier Ethiopian war planes attacked a combined military-civilian airport on the outskirts of Asmara for the second day running.

Village mourns 1,200 killed in quake, landslide

Zibi Sah rests outside her tent in the mountain village of Dashtak, Afghanistan, Friday. Sah lost her three brothers and her father in the quake. This mountain village was the hardest hit by the May 30 quake. More than 1,200 people, more than one-fifth of its residents, were killed and 600 houses destroyed when the side of the mountain fell away.

DASHTAK, Afghanistan (AP) — Standing in a line at the edge of a sheared-off mountainside, a mullah and his congregation intoned a final prayer for the more than 1,200 people of Dashtak who perished in last week's earthquake.

Many of the dead, including 140 children who were attending school, were swept to their deaths in a powerful landslide that poured down this mountain.

"If you want to go into this place and get your wood, do it now," the mullah said. "After this, people cannot walk in this area. It is a big cemetery now."

The mountain village of Dashtak was the hardest hit by the May 30 quake. More than one-fifth of its residents were killed and 600 houses destroyed when the side of the mountain fell away. Now it is a sea of gray rock and dust that cakes the skin.

An Associated Press reporter accompanied the first relief flight into Dashtak and spent two days on the mountain with the traumatized villagers.

The scale of disaster at Dashtak, so remote that international aid workers did not find it until days after it was leveled, gives credence to estimates that as many as 5,000 people died in the quake and its aftermath.

Struggling to alleviate a human disaster spread over 100 villages in 700 square miles, the United Nations and other charity agencies have had just three helicopters to deliver supplies and evacuate the seriously wounded.

Dashtak's school house, its pupils and six teachers, are the symbol of a community's suffering, which was compounded by the survivors' inability to give their dead a proper burial.

Besides their memories of the fateful morning, villagers are jolted by stomach-churning aftershocks that shake the mountain daily and deepen the cracks in the earth.

They beg for the most rudimentary things to survive: food, tents and water.

The quake struck in the morning, when many men were working the fields.

"I saw the earth boiling and then it was like a big explosion. All the dust came up from the village. I thought everything had been swallowed by the earth," said Abdul Mahmood, who watched from a distance.

By the time he reached his home, nothing was left, and his wife and five children were buried under the rubble.

In the neighboring village of Bekha, Saeed Omar was plowing a hillside with his two cows when the tremor hit, throwing him and the animals into the air and depositing them hundreds of yards away.

"All the area was covered with dust. I left my animals, rushed toward the village, and dug out two people," Omar said.

No family in Dashtak escaped the disaster. Villagers pointed in every direction and recited their grim litanies: 40 dead here, 15 there, a group of shepherd children and their flock buried on the slope across the way.

Sarwar, 33, said he lost his whole family.

"My mother, my father, my children, my wife. All of them are here under deep rubble. I have three children. I am working to try to find them, but there is no way."

People came from neighboring villages to try to dig out the dead, especially the schoolchildren. They used shovels, bare hands, anything they could, usually without result.

People have a few potatoes and some bread to eat, but most of their animals have died and they rely on international aid to fortify them.

Their water supply from three rivers has been contaminated by the landslides and survivors are succumbing to disease. Ruhullah, an Afghan doctor working for a Swedish charity, said he was seeing pneumonia, skin diseases, tuberculosis, malnutrition and malaria among survivors.

"I am now wondering about my future," said 10-year-old Zibi Sah, hunched over with grief after the quake carried away her father and three little brothers.

Saif-ur Rehman, 55, said he was worried about supporting his wife and children since all the arable land had been washed away in the landslide.

"The earth is very hard and the sky is too far. We cannot go anywhere."

Witnesses, paparazzi, relatives attend hearing on Paris crash that killed three

PARIS (AP) — Nine months after the death of Princess Diana, a French judge gathered witnesses, paparazzi and a platoon of lawyers under one roof Friday, trying to determine once and for all whether photographers were to blame for the crash.

The all-day meeting wasn't expected to yield any immediate ruling. But it was a way for Judge Herve Stephan, who leads the massive investigation, to try to balance conflicting accounts in the case file.

The high-speed crash in a Paris tunnel Aug. 31 killed Diana, her companion, Dodi Fayed, and driver Henri Paul.

Tests showed Paul was drunk at the time, and investigators long have believed that is the main cause of the crash, in addition to speed.

But Stephan still needs to determine the role of nine photographers and one press motorcyclist who have been in legal limbo — under investigation, but not formally charged — for nearly a year.

Many close to the case predict the photographers will soon be exonerated. Friday's meeting may have been a way for the judge to show that he has thoroughly considered the charges.

It also was a chance for Diana's mother, Frances Shand Kydd, and Dodi's father, Mohamed Al Fayed, to come face-to-face with the photographers who they believe hounded their children to their deaths.

Al Fayed owns the Ritz Hotel, where Paul was employed. Al Fayed long has faulted the paparazzi, and he railed against them when he emerged for an afternoon break.

"If I was not in a courtroom, I would hang them all," he said. "The immorality, the inhumanity of what they did. They were like vultures around the bodies."

He also had harsh words for Diana's mother, accusing her of snobbery.

"I'm an ordinary person. I'm a working-class guy," Al Fayed said. "She thinks she's the Queen of Sheba. She didn't talk to me."

But he praised the judge, whom he called "very compassionate and precise."

"He uncovered many things today," Al Fayed said. "Now it's in God's hands."

Mrs. Shand Kydd emerged from the courtroom during a break, but waved away journalists.

Hours later, several British newspapers in Saturday editions reacted with anger to Al Fayed's comments.

The Sun, Britain's biggest-selling daily tabloid, said in an editorial that Al Fayed was an "ill-mannered self-seeker with no regard for decency."

The Express said in an editorial that Al Fayed had upset Diana's family by pursuing conspiracy theories surrounding her death.

"Condemned by government inspectors as a liar, paranoid in his conspiracy theories and a persistent attention seeker, he is in danger of becoming one of the most odious men in Britain," The Express said.

Also present at the hearing in Paris were Paul's parents. They, Al Fayed and Mrs. Shand Kydd had the right to attend because they are civil parties in the case.

According to lawyers and witnesses, the judge interviewed each photographer one by one, asking him to describe his role that night. He then questioned them, asked other witnesses what they had seen, and allowed all the lawyers to cross-examine the photographers.

In one exchange, photographer Romuald Rat was questioned sharply by lawyers for Al Fayed, who tried to establish that Rat had pursued the Mercedes that night.

"I followed it. I did not pursue it," Rat insisted.

Ten witnesses were summoned, but only eight showed up. They included the first emergency doctor on the scene, Frederic Mailliez, and the first two policemen on the scene.

Lawyers said the policemen who spoke accused Rat of hindering their work.

Another witness, private chauffeur Clifford Gooroovadoo, said he'd told the judge he had seen Rat and another photographer, Christian Martinez, fighting just after the accident. He said Rat, after taking his own pictures, yelled at Martinez to stop.

The photographers are being investigated on suspicion of manslaughter and failing to come to the aid of a person in danger. Many believe that, if anything, they will be formally charged only on the second offense — and only a few of them.

Nikolas Arsov of the Sipa photo agency called the hearing inconvenient — he was supposed to be covering the French Open tennis tournament Friday — but said he understood the need for it.

"It's the 40th time we have answered the same questions," Arsov said. "It's annoying, but what can you do? They have to do their job."

In contrast to previous hearings, all cameras were kept outside the Palais de Justice. The gates were heavily guarded by police.

Investigators are still looking for a white Fiat Uno believed to have brushed the Mercedes before it crashed. But they are said to have given up any real hope of finding it.

And tests are still being conducted on the wrecked Mercedes that Diana was traveling in, but aren't likely to be finished before October — meaning the case can't be closed until then.

One person who was invited decided not to attend Friday's session: bodyguard Trevor Rees-Jones, the sole survivor of the crash.

WELFARE: Bill responds to auditors' fraud worries

(From 1A)

General Accounting Office reported overpayments of $2.6 billion and labeled the program a "high risk" for fraud.

The program is open to poor Americans who are disabled, blind or elderly. The average federal benefit is about $400 per person per month, though some states add to that.

Shaw's bill responds to auditors' fraud worries. It would allow the government to withhold more money from people who were overpaid, toughen penalties for applicants who lie and require local prisons to report names of inmates receiving SSI.

The changes to childhood eligibility are most disturbing to disability activists.

"This beats up on disabled children who were never criticized, never attacked, never questioned," said Jonathan Stein, a Philadelphia lawyer who won a 1990 court case that expanded the definition of disability.

Most qualifying adults prove their disabilities prevent them from continuing to work. The standard is different for kids, who aren't in the work force but who receive money intended to compensate parents who must stay home and to pay for special needs.

Under rules in place before 1996, children qualified for SSI in three ways: First, by meeting standard medical criteria; second, if they did not meet medical criteria, by an ability to function so substandard that it had the same result; and third, by meeting a separate test that measured only ability to function.

The 1996 law eliminated the third test and toughened standards for the second.

Under the new rules, to pass the second test a child must have "marked" disability in at least two areas or "extreme" disability in at least one.

The GAO noted that about two dozen of the medical listings — the first test — now do not meet standards of the second test, which means children medically considered disabled could function at levels Congress decided does not represent disability.

Eliminating just one of those listings — mental retardation with another impairment — could remove 75,000 children from the rolls, said Marty Ford of The Arc, a group that advocates for the mentally retarded.

The Clinton administration says such a change would be difficult to administer and unnecessary, although it favors a review of some of the medical criteria.

"I have serious reservations about any legislative requirement that would apply a new standard to childhood disability eligibility listings," Social Security Administrator Kenneth Apfel said in a statement.

Shaw says he doesn't want to cut off the truly needy.

"I would emphasize this is still a work in progress," he said. "Particularly with kids, we want to be sure no one falls through the cracks."

TESTING: Nuclear states agree to reduce arsenals

(From 1A)

rounding the resolution that while many nations oppose the tests by India and Pakistan, they have troubles with the way the Security Council has handled the nuclear issue.

Iran, Egypt and Bahrain accused it of following a double-standard by ignoring Israel's suspected nuclear weapons program.

Israel, which has never confirmed having nuclear weapons but is widely assumed to have the know-how to build a bomb quickly, has refused to sign the non-proliferation treaty and accept international safeguards on its nuclear program.

"We expect the Security Council to ... single out Israel to adhere to this treaty," Egyptian Ambassador Nabil Elaraby said.

Nuclear states agreed to take steps to reduce their arsenals as part of a compromise agreement to convince other nations to accept an indefinite extension of the non-proliferation treaty three years ago.

Addressing the nuclear powers, Kenyan Ambassador Njunguna Mahugu said "the rest of us expect you to seriously take your responsibility of finally removing the threat of nuclear weapons."

The resolution condemned the South Asian tests and urged India and Pakistan to halt deployment of missiles capable of carrying nuclear warheads and to sign nuclear arms control treaties.

It also calls on India and Pakistan to exercise restraint and find "mutually acceptable solutions" to the "root causes of those tensions, including Kashmir," the Himalayan territory disputed by them.

The resolution welcomed an offer by U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan to encourage India and Pakistan to resume a high-level dialogue that broke down last year because of differences over Kashmir.

India and Pakistan have fought three wars since 1947 — two of them over Kashmir, which is physically divided between the two countries.

TRUCKS: Ms. Everett wants to join her husband in truck driving instructors showing students what it's like to maneuver a big rig in tight spaces and how to shift gears.

On one recent hot afternoon, students Gwen Clarke, Charlie Everett and Harold and Shirley Carter were finishing another day at the school.

Ms. Clarke and Ms. Everett were among those sitting in the heat in the parking lot waiting their turn behind the wheel. Ms. Clarke said she wants to get out and work for herself after raising a family.

"My son is leaving home to go to school and I didn't want to stay home by myself," she said. "I used to drive. (I like) seeing the country and ... making the money."

She said no man has given her a hard time because they've learned by now that women can handle an 18-wheeler just as well as men. "(And) because I give them a hard time right back," she said.

Ms. Everett wants to join her husband in truck driving so they can spend more time together.

The Midland College course has been helpful, she said.

"You need to go through the school, the laws change everyday. I can learn all the legal things here," she said.

Ms. Everett is looking forward to life on the road.

Midland College Truck Driving Academy instructor Hayden Jones talks to student Charisse "Charlie" Everett.

"You get a big truck with a sleeper; it's great," she said. "You get to see country you'll never get to see. Truckers are just a different breed than other people. They take care of each other. It's fantastic when husbands and wives go together."

She hopes to have a big rig with a television, VCR and portable toilet.

"It's just like a little tiny apartment on wheels," Ms. Everett said.

Hayden Jones, a truck school instructor, said the course provides exercises on backing up, blind-side parallel parking and alley parking. He also shows students how to inspect their vehicles.

He also shows them how to line the truck up with a loading dock, which the state does not require.

"In real life, when they get out trucking, they're going to have to hit the dock," he said. "It takes a little practice."

The Carters are another husband and wife team that is anxious to hit the road in a big rig.

Mrs. Carter said they just recently found work. But now they have a job driving together.

"Neither of us were employed," she said. "But the end of the second day we had two job offers.

"And that's the reason we've done this," Carter added. "Shirley saw a truck going down the road and said 'let's become truck drivers.'"

Mrs. Carter said she's grateful.

"They have done everything to assist us. The instructors here are really good at sharing their knowledge with us," she said.

Brush fires in Florida destroy dozens of homes

BUNNELL, Fla. (AP) — Major brush fires burned across Florida on Saturday, destroying dozens of homes and closing Interstate 95 northeast of Orlando.

About 1,630 acres were reported burned by Saturday night.

The interstate was closed before a wall of fire two miles long and a mile wide jumped the highway. It remained closed indefinitely because of poor visibility. Traffic was diverted to U.S. Highway 1.

The same blaze destroyed more than a dozen homes near Bunnell before it was mostly contained six hours during the night, although a few hot spots remained. One person was treated for minor burns.

"We've got a rural area with a lot of underbrush that's dry as a bone, and it's just feeding the fire," said Flagler County spokesman Roy Longo.

In Flagler County, at least 23 homes were destroyed, officials said. Many more were damaged, but no accurate count was available Saturday night.

Two people were injured and two firefighters were treated for smoke inhalation, said Roy Longo, a spokesman for Flagler County Emergency Management.

Another fire spread to 1,800 acres in Geneva in eastern Seminole County. It destroyed more than 30 homes and buildings. About 300 people were evacuated for the night. Two firefighters suffered heat-related illneses.

Fire in Lake County west of Orlando threatened some homes before it was contained. Another 400 acres burned southwest of Titusville in Brevard County.

High school graduation upbeat, mindful of shootings

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — Two students wounded in a shooting rampage at their high school cafeteria were cheered by classmates Saturday as they received their diplomas at an upbeat graduation ceremony.

Nathan Cole, 18, who was hit seven times in the May 21 shooting at Thurston High School in Springfield, smiled and walked slowly across the stage.

Minutes later Trina Harty walked across with a limp from the wound she suffered in her left calf.

"We love you, Trina!" someone yelled as the smiling Harty was handed her diploma.

They were among 292 graduates who received diplomas from the school where Kip Kinkel, 15, is accused of killing two classmates after having shot his parents to death a day earlier.

Wearing the school's colors, men in black and women in red, the graduates gave each other high fives as they took their seats on the stage. Several times during the ceremony the graduates did "the wave" and a beach ball was spotted bouncing among the crowd.

But two weeks after the shootings, the bloody images remained in the minds of many of the 2,400 relatives and friends who attended the ceremony at a hall in Eugene.

More than 20 students were wounded and one remains in critical condition.

People in the audience dabbed their eyes Saturday as Thurston's choir sang "Bridge Over Troubled Waters" and "Oh Happy Day."

MEETING: Grants will fund programs for at-risk students

(From 1A)

The grants would allow MISD to provide more staff training, computer technology and reading materials for at-risk students.

The applications will be for the Academics 2000: First Things First School Year 1998-99 grant. The clusters and proposed grant amounts are: Rusk and Henderson, $149,000; South, Jones and Emerson, $155,000; third and fourth grades at Burnet and Pease, $73,245; and Lamar, Bush, Washington and Milam, $180,000.

Burnet and Pease will continue receiving Academics 2000 money they were awarded last year for grades K-2, at about $54,000. If the board approves the grant applications, the district could hear back from the state on June 22.

Faith in rails: High-speed crash doesn't faze German passengers

ABOARD INTERCITY TRAIN NO. 12671 (AP) — A jolt, a sigh, and the train pulls out of the station in Hanover, Germany, at 6:44 p.m. Right on time, even though this isn't the usual train.

It should be an InterCity Express, the fastest model on German rails — the kind that derailed last Wednesday when a wheel broke. Investigators still can't fully explain the deadly accident, and by Saturday ICE models nationwide had been recalled twice for security checks.

The crash killed more than 100 people and smashed rail cars like tin cans. Yet it apparently has not shaken confidence — or pride — in Germany's premier train network.

As they settle in with novels, newspapers and laptops, passengers on the Friday evening journey to Frankfurt still believe the high-speed trains are safe. And they can't wait to get back on them.

In the cafe car, a man gazes out the window at the landscape whizzing by in a green blur. Bernd Pecnek commutes three times a week on the ICE, and he doubts it has a technological flaw.

"I've traveled thousands of miles on these trains, and I've never seen a problem. The crash was a freak accident," says Pecnek, a business consultant who like many people on board says he far prefers the high-speed train to the autobahn.

"It's faster. It takes three times as long to go by car. And the trains are much safer."

Two conductors sit knee-to-knee in a control booth, scrutinizing a schedule to figure out when the train will get in. Maybe 40 minutes late, but who knows? This is an InterCity train, the predecessor of the InterCity Express. Not what they're used to, but they're doing their best. The train left on time, after all.

Over loudspeakers in train stations across the country, the German rail company apologizes for delays and explains the recall of the first-generation ICE models. Station video screens display a message: "We mourn the dead of Eschede and we extend our sympathy to the injured and the families of the victims."

Japan's high-speed train is faster. The French finished theirs first, a sore point in Germany's age-old rivalry with its neighbor. But when the ICE train debuted in 1991, it was a proud moment nonetheless.

An employee, right, of the "Deutsche Bahn AG" advises two passengers in front of the InterCity Express track in the Frankfurt railway station Friday. Deutsche Bahn AG took all first generation passenger trains out of service for maintenance checks Thursday night following Wednesday's disastrous train crash near Eschede. Nevertheless, the accident has not shaken confidence - or pride - in Germany's high-speed rail network.

Germans had found a way to top the autobahn — with its traffic jams and reckless drivers — in connecting its major cities. A Frankfurt banker could be in Stuttgart, 185 miles away, by 9:08 a.m., make a deal, have lunch, and make it home for dinner with an easy 1 hour and 21 minute commute each way.

In Eschede, where the train crashed, village manager Fritz Kiemann remembers people being fascinated by the sleek machinery.

"My kids used to beg me to take them to watch the trains. They wanted to watch for hours," Kiemann said Thursday.

The ICE was a sign that this quiet village of 4,000 shared in Germany's modern achievements; now, technology's failure has put Eschede at the center of a tragedy.

Seatmates — and strangers until now — Juergen Kriegel and Brita Pape find common ground in their anger at journalists they say are jumping to conclusions that the accident suggests a fundamental problem with the trains. It's an insult to the railways, they say, and by extension, an insult to Germany.

"The media should support Deutsche Bahn, because the ICE is part of the German economy," says Kriegel. Pape nods in agreement.

Nearby, Olaf Willers sits at a table covered with newspapers, all filled with photographs of the crash: bleeding people on stretchers, cranes straining to lift the wreckage so rescuers can reach the victims — most certainly dead — underneath.

"The next time I get on the ICE I might feel a bit like this," he said, rubbing his stomach and making a queasy face. "But I'll still ride it."

Out the window, the scenery changes from farmland to office parks on the outskirts of Frankfurt. Passengers rise. They stretch, pull on jackets, reach for luggage.

As the train enters the station, a man checks his watch: 9:27 p.m., 26 minutes later than usual.

He pouts and nods.

Not too bad. But not as fast as the ICE.

German train crash probe focuses on broken wheel; death toll rises

ESCHEDE, Germany (AP) — The reason for a rattling that alarmed some passengers in the minutes before the crash of InterCity Express 884 now seems clear: Investigators said Friday that a broken wheel was the most likely cause of the disaster.

The death toll climbed to 100 early Saturday, including five who died in hospitals — two of them Friday. Rescue workers said they could not rule an increase in the death toll until all the debris was cleared from the four-track line.

The damaged wheel that has become the focus of investigators' questions was located on the first car behind the locomotive.

Investigators didn't have to go far to find the fractured steel rim that circles the wheel, and helps keep the train on the tracks — it had flown off and was lodged in the train car's rear wheels.

Another clue: A still unidentified piece of the train was found on the tracks nearly four miles from the concrete and steel bridge that the train struck broadside.

That piece — and damage to both the rail and ties nearby — corroborates passengers' recollections of noises and vibrations two minutes before the derailed train starting breaking apart and crashed into supports for an overpass. At 125 mph, the train would have traveled that distance in less than two minutes.

"There was an uncomfortable rattling and I had the feeling that maybe something was lying on the tracks," Wolf-Ruediger Shliebener recalled. "People looked at each other, shocked."

He said it stopped for a time — then, the crash.

More than 1,200 rescuers using jackhammers, cranes and cutting tools worked around the clock to free survivors the first day. Their task grew increasingly grim as they worked their way deeper into the tangle of metal and shattered glass, finding body after body.

"There was an uncomfortable rattling and I had the feeling that maybe something was lying on the tracks. People looked at each other, shocked."
—Wolf-Ruediger Shliebener, passenger

By Friday evening, 19 victims had been identified and more than 50 people were still hospitalized, including a 20-year-old American who had been traveling around Europe after a study abroad program in Florence, Italy.

Jaime Hawk of Boise, Idaho, suffered a broken neck and was in a hospital near Hanover, The Spokesman-Review of Spokane, Wash., reported Friday.

The wheel theory has not yet been proven, but was gaining ground with investigators. Still unexplained is whether the wheel suffered metal fatigue, or was damaged somehow.

"We are extremely interested in researching the cause for the break in the tire, and we will of course go after this with special intensity," rail authorities said in a statement.

Federal railway spokesman Jens Boehlke said there has been no similar wheel failures in the seven years that InterCity Express trains have been running.

The investigation — conducted by a commission of police, rail authorities and other experts and supervised by prosecutors — may take months to complete. It will include interviews of surviving passengers and rail personnel as well as maintenance workers.

The federal railway authority, which sets standards for safety and service, issued a statement saying that sabotage has not been ruled out. Still, no evidence has surfaced that suggests any tampering.

Joachim Haack, police spokesman at Eschede, said the findings pointed to a mechanical reason.

The crushed train was one of the first generation of high-speed trains introduced in Germany in 1991. The other 59 trains in that group were taken out of service Thursday night for emergency inspections. Half of them had returned to duty by Friday evening.

Steel tires require regular inspection and replacement because of wear.

In Tokyo, the East Japan Railway Co. was carrying out emergency inspections of the wheels and axles of all its 1,100 high-speed bullet train cars following the German crash, Kyodo News reported Friday. Those inspections should be finished by Monday.

U.N. aide would battle drugs with alternative development program

UNITED NATIONS (NYT) — With President Clinton and other world leaders coming here Monday for a special session of the General Assembly on the world's drug problems, the U.N.'s top anti-narcotics official has submitted a two-pronged strategy that moves beyond the conventional approach of intercepting illegal drugs and arresting traffickers.

Pino Arlacchi, the executive director of the U.N. International Drug Control Program, proposes the ambitious target of eliminating opium poppies and coca plants, the raw ingredients of heroin and cocaine, in 10 years as well as substantially reducing marijuana.

To achieve this, he advocates so-called alternative development programs that would induce opium and coca growers to switch to less profitable legal crops by bringing roads, hospitals, schools and a better life into remote rural areas that depend on drug crops to survive.

Additionally, Arlacchi has proposed that nations reduce the demand for drugs by half over the next decade through prevention and treatment programs. Neither idea is new, but Arlacchi said they had proved promising enough to try on a broader scale.

"These two cards have not been played in full," he said in an interview.

Alternative development has sometimes been viewed as costly and unrealistic, since opium and coca growers are reluctant to grow legal crops that would earn less income and be harder to take to market. Middlemen make the rounds of peasants to buy their raw opium and coca paste.

What is needed, Arlacchi said, is political authority to enforce eradication and development involving more than crop substitution.

"We would propose an alternative way of life," he said. "They can be rich peasants if they grow opium, but they can die if they don't have roads and hospitals."

Peru and Colombia have tried alternative development, Arlacchi said, and Peru has reduced its coca fields by 40 percent in two years. Bolivia has promised to phase out its coca over the next five years, he said.

Arlacchi said the cost would run far less than potential donors like the United States anticipate. With some programs already in place, he estimated that alternative development would require an additional amount of less than $250 million a year over the next decade. In comparison, the U.S. government's annual drug control budget exceeds $16 billion.

Gen. Barry McCaffrey, the Clinton administration's anti-drug chief, said that he agreed with demand reduction, but was not persuaded that it would be easy to get Afghans and Burmese, who together grow 90 percent of the world's opium, to change to other crops. But McCaffrey added in a telephone interview from Washington, "We're supportive of Pino Arlacchi's focused high-energy leadership."

Arlacchi, whose enthusiasm belies a tough reputation earned fighting the Mafia in his native Italy, cited what he said were some conspicuous successes against drug trafficking in the last decade.

"We destroyed the myth of the invincibility of the drug cartels," he said. He said that the Medellin and Cali cocaine cartels in Colombia had been crushed and that some Asian opium warlords surrendered by striking deals with the military government in Burma that let them keep their freedom and money. Thailand virtually eliminated opium production through alternative development, he added, and Pakistan had sharply cut back opium growing as well.

Court sentences 35 to life in mass '94 genocide trial

KIGALI, Rwanda (AP) — A court has convicted 35 people of genocide and sentenced them to life in prison in the largest mass trial yet stemming from the country's 1994 slaughter, Radio Rwanda reported Saturday.

The defendants were among a group of 51 brought to trial in March as part of the government's effort to speed up proceedings for 130,000 people packed into Rwandan jails and accused of a variety of genocide-related crimes.

On Friday, the court in northeastern Byumba convicted 38 of the defendants, sentencing 35 of them to life in prison and three to lesser terms. Nine were acquitted and four defendants died in prison, Radio Rwanda reported.

The 38 were convicted of taking part in, but not organizing, the 90-day slaughter of more than 500,000 minority Tutsis and moderate Hutus. The killing spree was orchestrated by the government, and then carried out by Hutu extremists. The killings ended when Tutsi rebels ousted the government in July 1994.

Since the first genocide trial in December 1996, Rwandan courts have convicted more than 350 people. A third have been sentenced to death, most others have received prison sentences and a small number have been acquitted. The first 22 executions were April 24.

Justice officials believe the executions prompted more than 2,000 prisoners to confess in exchange for leniency. Those who confess can have their sentences reduced if they implicate and help convict the organizers and leaders of genocide, most of them former Hutu authorities.

Rwandan courts have held mass trials before, but never involving so many defendants.

The tribunal has indicted 35 people and has 24 in custody; it is expected to hand down its first verdict next month.

Nussbaum becomes public figure again, 10 years after Steinberg case

By Jim Fitzgerald
Associated Press

HARRISON, N.Y. — After a decade of tragedy, infamy, guilt and rejection, Hedda Nussbaum has inched back into the public eye, fulfilling a pledge to the slain 6-year-old she considered her daughter.

"I made a promise to Lisa that we would help other children and mothers," Ms. Nussbaum told The Associated Press this month.

Ms. Nussbaum, 55, has just put out her second issue as editor of Women's News, a feisty monthly given away in New York City's northern suburbs. And she has stepped up her public speaking, engaging an agent who has already booked her into Syracuse University for a talk on battered women.

In 1988 she was probably the best-known battered woman in the world, her bashed-in nose and off-kilter lips familiar to millions of TV viewers who watched her testify against her companion, Joel Steinberg, the Manhattan lawyer who was convicted of manslaughter in Lisa's death.

"I look at the tapes, I hear that voice — very monotone — and it's hard to realize it's me," she says now.

Indeed, the battered face has softened some, but a boxer's nose betrays her past. A damaged tear duct makes her seem to weep quietly.

Many saw her as a less-than-innocent victim, and still do. Ms. Nussbaum had seen Lisa abused and failed to rescue her; she never left Steinberg and never summoned help, even when the girl lay dying in their Manhattan apartment. Her predicament and her response provoked national debate on the accountability of battered women.

"The whole battered women's movement went off on this very, very weird tangent," says feminist writer Susan Brownmiller. "They were saying, 'My God, once a woman gets sucked into a relationship like this, it's impossible to get out.' They always hated the question, 'Why didn't she leave?' I think it's a good question."

Ms. Nussbaum was granted immunity in exchange for her testimony. She told of being pounded, berated and humiliated, forced to beg for food and to sleep in the bathtub. Yet she remained so fully under Steinberg's spell that she went along when he pulled legal strings to "adopt" two children, and believed him when he said he would heal Lisa in her last suffering hours.

When police came to the apartment Nov. 2, 1987, they found Lisa comatose and 3-year-old Mitchell tethered to a playpen, soiled and drinking sour milk. Mitchell was returned to his biological mother.

"There will always be a hole in my heart where my children are missing," Ms. Nussbaum says.

She couldn't completely rid herself of the attachment to Steinberg until after the trial.

"It took 10 months after Lisa died to see what he was and who he was," she says.

She says she has learned from doctors that her lack of initiative was a physical response to the beatings — "It makes you numb, in lots of ways" — and so she no longer feels guilty.

Sitting at a kitchen table in the Women's News offices, she seems good-humored, even excited about her job.

"I'm really happy doing editing and writing," she says. "It's what I'm good at, it's what I like."

In the 1970s, Ms. Nussbaum edited children's books at Random House. She lost the job, she says, by taking off too much time to hide bruises.

After the trial and a year at a psychiatric hospital, she found it impossible to return to her chosen work.

"In terms of children's books, a lot of people blamed me for what happened to Lisa. They'd say, 'We can't have her on a children's book.'"

The state trained her in word processing and legal-secretary work, but she found she was still too notorious. During one job hunt, she got interviews only by putting a phony name on her resume.

"I wanted them to see I was a healthy, normal human being," she says. But the jobs vanished when she revealed her identity.

Eventually, she worked as a legal secretary in Westchester County.

Meanwhile, she began speaking to women's and community groups about battered women. At first she spoke only in general terms, but now she discusses her own experiences, warning women against falling into a dependency like hers.

"I'd been wanting to do it for a long time," Ms. Nussbaum says.

Two months ago, Ms. Nussbaum got a call from Merna Popper, publisher of the 50,000-circulation Women's News, and quickly accepted the editor's job.

"Oh, we knew who she was," Ms. Popper says. "It was a great fit. To get a Random House editor with an interest in women's issues at this price (a reported salary of $40,000) was great for us."

There has been some hate mail, she says, and Ms. Nussbaum's column in the June issue alludes to "the controversy over my becoming editor."

Ms. Nussbaum says she will continue to campaign every two years to keep Steinberg, now 55, from getting parole.

"Why would I want him to be out?" she says. "I've learned they don't stop the abuse." No matter when he is sprung from his up-to-25-year term, she adds, "I know I'll be worried about him."

For now, she's concentrating on the newspaper. Coming in July is a special issue — dedicated to "the second half of life."

Hedda Nussbaum, left, talks to intern Susan Schwarz about an assignment for Women's News, where she works as managing editor, Tuesday, in Harrison, N.Y. Ms. Nussbaum is the former battered wife of Joel Steinberg, who was convicted of murdering their daughter, Lisa. Ms. Nussbaum has inched back into the public eye, fulfilling a pledge to the slain 6-year-old.

'Why would I want him (Joel Steinberg) to be out? I've learned they don't stop the abuse. No matter when he is sprung from his up-to-25-year term, I know I'll be worried about him.'

"We had our first two kids at Memorial.
Why would we go anywhere else to have our third"

Yes, Amy was our third baby. And, yes we'd been through it twice before. But, that didn't make us any less concerned about her birth. You need to be prepared for everything.

We went through the Lamaze refresher classes at Memorial Hospital, met the staff and toured the labor and delivery floor. We expected everything to go smoothly as it had our two previous times, and it did. But, it was reassuring to know that the experienced doctors and nurses – and their life-saving technologies – were there for us, whether we needed them or not.

Memorial Hospital has been delivering babies for over 40 years. With that much experience, you can expect the best. Whether it's your first, or your third, it's good to know you and your family can count on Memorial Hospital in every situation.

Woman's face to grace new dollar coin by mid-2000 — but whose?

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new gold-colored dollar coin the U.S. Mint plans to put in Americans' pockets by mid-2000 will bear the face of a woman: a woman of history, such as Eleanor Roosevelt, or the Statue of Liberty or another allegorical symbol.

With the fiasco of the unpopular Susan B. Anthony dollar of the 1980s still fresh, a special panel meets in Philadelphia this week to recommend a woman for Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin to choose.

President Clinton signed legislation in December authorizing the coin. It specifies it should be similar in size to the Anthony dollar, minted from 1979 to 1981. But it must be gold-colored, with a distinctive edge, so people can easily distinguish it from a quarter — a cause of the Anthony coin's unpopularity. The reverse must depict the American eagle.

Beyond that, the design was left to Rubin. And he, mindful of the political touchiness of the subject, appointed the nine-member committee that meets Tuesday to recommend a "design concept" for Rubin.

The panel includes an architect, a coin expert, a sculptor, a college president, a former Bush administration personnel executive and Rep. Michael Castle, R-Del., sponsor of the legislation establishing the coin.

Rubin already decided a woman or women — but no one still alive — will go on the coin's face. People from collectors to vending machine makers are weighing in on who or what should be honored.

Besides former President Franklin D. Roosevelt's wife, a leading candidate to replace Anthony is Sacajawea, mint Director Philip N. Diehl said his mail on the subject shows. Sacajawea was the 17-year-old Shoshone Indian girl who guided Lewis and Clark across the Pacific Northwest two centuries ago and repopularized by Ken Burns' PBS television documentary.

Castle, the congressman, is a strong advocate of the Statue of Liberty.

"The symbol or person on the coin should be absolutely recognizable by everyone in America. That was one of the problems with the Susan B. Anthony. It was a little too much of a history lesson," he said.

On the other hand, Sens. Lauch Faircloth, R-N.C., Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., and Carol Moseley-Braun, D-Ill., want a historical woman or women depicted.

There was talk of using a statue of Anthony, a 19th-century women's rights advocate, and two other suffragists — Lucretia Mott and Elizabeth Cady Stanton — as a model, possibly adding abolitionist Sojourner Truth. But coin experts said that would produce an unrecognizable design.

"They'd have to hand out a magnifying glass with each coin so people could see the portraits," said Donn Pearlman of the Professional Numismatists Guild.

The design decision is important both for the coin's immediate success and for posterity, Diehl said.

"Today, people collect and value coins that are thousands of years old," the director said. "The coins we produce today will be in museums thousands of years from now and will be considered artifacts of the American culture."

Like most collectors, Kenneth E. Bressett, past president of the American Numismatic Association, favors an allegorical representation of Liberty, reminiscent of the most popular theme of U.S. coins from the nation's founding through the early decades of this century.

Many collectors favor a 1975 version of Liberty, created by Frank Gasparro, who added the Lincoln Memorial to the back of the penny in 1959. His design lost out to Anthony.

Ron Landis, co-owner of the Gallery Mint Museum in Eureka Springs, Ark., has produced a mockup of a more modern-looking version of Liberty, wearing a diadem in her hair, as well as a design with a full-length view of the Statue of Liberty.

"George Washington and Thomas Jefferson were very opposed to putting president's heads on coins, feeling we shouldn't be imitating the monarchs of Europe," Landis said. "It seems we've forgotten the things they fought so passionately for."

After the dollar coin advisory committee decides on a recommendation, mint engravers will create specific designs for Rubin's selection. Diehl hopes to circulate the coin in mid-2000, when the mint expects to run out of the last of the unpopular Anthony dollars.

Mir leak test doesn't work, cosmonauts to try again Monday

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Mir's cosmonauts pumped a green, fluorescent gas into their damaged laboratory module Saturday in an unsuccessful effort to locate leaks caused by last year's near-catastrophic collision.

None of the nine cosmonauts and astronauts aboard the orbiting Mir-Discovery complex saw anything seeping out of the airless, sealed-off module.

"No evidence of the gas," reported shuttle commander Charles Precourt.

They will repeat the test Monday after the space shuttle undocks.

Russian space officials have been trying to find the holes in the Spektr module ever since it was rammed and punctured by a cargo ship on June 25, 1997. The three men on board at the time almost had to evacuate.

Even if the leaks can be located, it's doubtful the Russian Space Agency will try to plug them, since it plans to let the station burn up in the atmosphere by the end of 1999.

The leak tests are intended more for practice for the international space station.

The experiment will come in handy if, "God forbid," the international space station is ever struck by anything, said Mir's commander, Talgat Musabayev.

Flight controllers weren't surprised that the cosmonauts and astronauts didn't see any of the fluorescent gas leaking into space. They had figured there was only a 50-50 chance the test would work because of limited views.

The leaks are believed to be at the base of a twisted solar panel.

Monday's test will take place shortly after Discovery pulls away with Andrew Thomas, the last American to live on Mir. With the shuttle hovering 240 feet away, the station will be tilted in an effort to give the astronauts a better vantage point, said Jim Van Laak, deputy director of NASA's shuttle-Mir program.

During a series of interviews Saturday — garbled and blurred because a shuttle TV blackout left them using Mir's inferior communication system — Discovery's Russian crew member said he couldn't believe how cluttered Mir is after 12 years in orbit.

"This is a serious problem," said Valery Ryumin, a high-ranking space official who hitched a ride aboard the shuttle to inspect Mir. "I'd like to know how this happened."

Thomas said the thing he's looking forward to most when he returns to Earth later this week is free time.

"Another thing I'm looking forward to is not having to eat my meals out of packets, not having to drink my drinks out of bags with a straw," Thomas said. "I'll be able to eat my meals off a plate and drink coffee out of a cup. I think that's going to be kind of a fun feeling."

Heston takes aim at Clinton in NRA speech

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Charlton Heston lashed out at President Clinton on Saturday as he called on members of the National Rifle Association to unify behind him.

Despite fierce opposition from a minority faction, Heston is expected to be elected president of the NRA during the group's 127th convention, which started Friday.

Heston criticized the media and politicians and took special aim at Clinton.

"Mr. Clinton, sir, America did not trust you with our health care system. America did not trust you with gays in the military. We did not trust you with our 21-year-old daughters, and we sure, Lord, don't trust you with our guns."

More than 40,000 NRA members attended the convention, headlined "The Second Amendment, America's First Freedom," which ends Wednesday.

The organization's board of directors is expected to select Heston as the NRA's president on Monday.

He noted the right of members to disagree, but then added: "Once the votes are counted, the die is cast. Get together or get out of the way."

Who's running show? GOP suddenly finds undesirable agenda

By David Espo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Accustomed to setting the agenda for Congress, majority Republicans returned to the Capitol from their spring break to find White House-backed multibillion-dollar tobacco legislation pending in the Senate.

Across the Rotunda, a campaign finance bill — as distasteful to Republican leaders as the tobacco measure — awaited action in the House despite yearlong efforts by the GOP to bottle it up.

Senior Republicans instantly set about trying to regain the offensive, angling to turn the tobacco bill into a debate over their calls for election-year tax cuts and laying plans to force Democrats into embarrassing votes on amendments to the campaign bill.

The skirmishing underscores a struggle for control of the legislative agenda in an unusually truncated congressional session. The outcome not only will determine what legislation passes this year but also help shape results of midterm elections in which the two parties will labor to maximize turnout of their voters.

"I think there are some of our Republican colleagues who want to deny Democrats a chance to move items of great import," Democratic leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota said Friday, at the end of a week of increasingly sharp combat over tobacco.

But Sen. Paul Coverdell of Georgia, a member of the GOP leadership, said Democrats are trying to politicize Congress by their actions, "as is their prerogative." Republicans, he said, are attempting to move legislation dealing with "education, crime and drugs, economic relief, IRS reform. ... I think we're on the right track," he said.

In the long run, Daschle said, the only way to pass legislation is "for everyone to come to the middle and try to negotiate both agendas."

Last year, that approach produced a landmark plan to balance the budget and cut taxes.

Two years ago, in the heat of an election campaign, it produced welfare legislation, an increase in the minimum wage and passage of a bill to extend health care to millions who lacked it.

The two sides may yet come together by year's end and produce significant legislation for President Clinton to sign. And even though Majority Leader Trent Lott lashed out at Democrats on Friday for their maneuvering on the tobacco bill, he indicated that remains possible.

"If there ever is a (tobacco) bill, it will have a teen-age smoking cessation campaign, and it will have a drug abuse cessation campaign, ... and if we don't add something in here on marriage penalty tax cuts, if we don't add something here on drugs, there will not be a bill."
— Majority Leader Trent Lott

"If there ever is a (tobacco) bill, it will have a teen-age smoking cessation campaign, and it will have a drug abuse cessation campaign, ... and if we don't add something in here on marriage penalty tax cuts, if we don't add something here on drugs, there will not be a bill," Lott said.

In the House, Speaker Newt Gingrich was pleading for recalcitrant members of the rank and file to support new cuts in spending and taxation. In the end, he predicted, working with Clinton, "We'll get an agreement, and I think it will be good for America."

The political landscape is far different from 1996. Then, Clinton was seeking reelection, while Gingrich and Republicans were struggling against a fierce challenge to their majority. Their interests coincided, but at the expense of the Republican presidential candidate, Bob Dole, and House Democrats. Compromises were reached, and Clinton and congressional Republicans both gained a new lease on power.

This time, Clinton is not on the ballot. He is under pressure from Democrats, again mounting a strong effort to win control of the House, not to agree to politically attractive compromises that would help endangered Republicans win re-election.

Whatever the result of this fall's congressional endgame, both sides intend to devote large amounts of energy to pushing their own different agendas for the next few months.

In a gesture to the religious right, Republicans forced a vote in the House last week on a proposed constitutional amendment to permit organized prayer in public schools. As expected, it fell short of the two-thirds majority needed for passage, but the effort earned a statement of appreciation from the Christian Coalition.

A vote to override Clinton's veto of legislation to outlaw a form of late-term abortion also will be scheduled before the elections, as will one on a separate bill to stop minors seeking abortions from moving across state lines to escape parental consent requirements in their home states.

As for Democrats, as soon as tobacco legislation is cleared in the Senate, they'll begin a push for poll-tested legislation to curb abuses by HMOs. After that, another effort is likely to raise the minimum wage.

Both issues are important to organized labor and other vital elements of the Democratic base of electoral support, much as Republicans are courting the religious right and abortion opponents whose votes they will need this fall.

Lawmen say suspected police killers may have headed back toward Colorado

BLUFF, Utah (AP) — Navajo trackers joined hundreds of lawmen Saturday in an expanded search of rugged canyon country where two men suspected of killing a Colorado policeman are believed to be hiding out.

Search teams that converged on this small town when a third suspect turned up dead along a riverbank were moving slowly westward as well as back toward Colorado after two days of an intense search around Bluff.

San Juan County Sheriff Mike Lacy said police received "intelligence that they worked their way back into Colorado."

He said the theory that the two surviving fugitives may have doubled back was based on "tips and some other things." He would not elaborate.

Lacy did not say what prompted the use of Navajo trackers, but the search area includes a portion of the country's largest Navajo Indian reservation.

While police scoured the wilderness, residents of this tiny town were beginning to worry — not about their safety, but their bank accounts.

Authorities had shut off access to the town during the peak tourist season when travelers come to see the colorful formations of Monument Valley and tour nearby ruins.

"It's really eerie in town with nobody here but the cops and us," art gallery owner John Labounty told reporters gathered at a roadblock outside town. "They've got the rabbits real scared."

The roughly 300 residents of Bluff had only been allowed to return home late Friday after being evacuated Thursday when some 500 law enforcement officers converged on the area after San Juan County sheriff's Deputy Kelly Bradford was wounded.

Bradford was shot while checking a report of a camouflage-clad man firing at a motorist.

Within hours, the body of fugitive Robert Matthew Mason, 26, of Durango, Colo., was found at a campsite about five miles east of Bluff. He was dead of a possibly self-inflicted gunshot.

Mason was one of three men wanted in the killing of a Cortez, Colo., police officer on May 29. The two other men still being sought were identified as Alan "Monte" Pilon, 30, of Dove Creek, Colo., and Jason Wayne McVean, 26, of Durango, Colo.

> 'It's really eerie in town with nobody here but the cops and us. They've got the rabbits real scared.'

> —John Labounty, art gallery owner

The three men are accused of raking the Colorado officer's cruiser with automatic weapon fire when they were pulled over in Cortez, roughly 50 miles from Bluff, in a stolen vehicle. Two other officers were wounded as they pursued the gunmen, who fled into the rugged countryside.

Maps found at the campsite where Mason was found were proving helpful, Lacy said.

Officers initially focused their search on an area just north of Bluff, but expanded it Friday and closed the San Juan River after reports that residents of the town had seen men in camouflage loading supplies into a boat.

Lacy said he was not ruling out the possibility the men had gone upriver by boat.

Are we supposed to care that neutrinos have mass?

By Jerry Schwartz
Associated Press

NEW YORK — On Thursday, Terry Nichols was sentenced to life for the Oklahoma City bombing. The House failed to pass a school prayer amendment. Kenneth Starr endured a Supreme Court setback.

And, oh yes, 120 physicists declared that a tiny subatomic particle — something no man or woman has ever seen or felt — had mass.

"Universe May Never Be the Same," declared The New York Times across the top of its front page Friday.

This may have been a slight exaggeration.

For sure, the neutrino news out of the Super-Kamiokande project altered scientists' perception of the universe, as did other, recent discoveries concerning its size and expansion and age.

But the universe is the same old universe that has been around for 15 billion years (or whatever). And the breakthrough did not seem to make much of an impact on more than a few citizens of this world.

They went about their business. They ate their Quarter Pounders with Cheese, they listened to their classic, five-member Spice Girls records. But they did not give more than a passing thought to the news that neutrinos have mass, or weight.

They were not as excited as Eric Linder, senior research associate with the Department of Physics and Astronomy at the University of Massachusetts. When he heard the news — he received a news release three days in advance — he e-mailed his physicist friends.

The existence of neutrinos was first suggested in 1930. They float through the universe, they are far too small to be seen, and they have no charge, so they pass through things — they pass through just about anything — without having any effect.

The Super-Kamiokande team found that neutrinos "oscillate," or change. If they change, they have mass.

Scientists have theorized that planets, stars and other known bodies account for only 10 percent of the universe's mass; if neutrinos have mass, they constitute a little or a lot or most of the rest.

What does that mean? Well, if there is enough mass, it is believed that the universe will contract and eventually collapse.

This doesn't sound good, but it should be noted that this is not likely for billions of years. Which would be long after our sun burns out. Which in turn is unlikely until long after humans are extinct.

"It won't affect your investment portfolio," says Rocky Kolb, cosmologist at the Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory in Batavia, Ill.

Kolb doesn't want to oversell the neutrino story.

"It's not as crucial as the breakup of the Spice Girls," he jokes. "It's not going to cure male pattern baldness. It's not going to have the impact of Viagra."

He understands that to the lay person, discoveries are coming "at a bewildering pace." But it is an exciting time to be a physicist, perhaps the dawn of a new kind of particle physics.

And he would argue that "reflective, educated people should have some knowledge of the nature surrounding them." Physicists are to the 1990s what Columbus was to the 1490s — men and women who fulfill "our longing for exploration and understanding."

Science writer Donald Goldsmith says the neutrino is beyond most people. "They should start with the Earth circling around the sun, which many of them haven't mastered."

According to a colleague of Kolb's, Bob Higgins, there have been a number of proposals for practical uses for neutrinos. They could be used to take the equivalent of a CT scan of the earth, looking for oil or other resources. They could be used for communication.

But no one knows if these things could ever come to pass. There is little expectation that the search for neutrinos will bring us anything like Velcro or Teflon, products of the space program.

Instead, it may bring us answers to big questions — questions that are in themselves miraculous.

"The most amazing thing is that on a small planet that circles a medium-sized star, a species has developed that can ask these enormous questions," says Kolb.

Scientists discuss how to warn about asteroids without causing mass panic

IRVINE, Calif. (AP) — Following March's false alarm about an asteroid coming dangerously close to Earth in the 21st century and two Hollywood summer blockbusters about cosmic collisions, experts met Saturday to plan methods for asteroid warnings that won't trigger mass panic.

"Collisions with the Earth is a topic that is so prone to sensationalism that we must be extremely careful about how we communicate new discoveries," said Richard P. Binzel, a planetary science professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "It took the (March) event to wake us up."

A March 11 report that Asteroid 1997XF11 was headed to within 30,000 miles of Earth's center — and could hit — in October 2028 was front page news and the top story on evening TV news broadcasts.

The report from the International Astronomical Union was quickly debunked by astronomers at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena who recalculated the asteroid's likely path and found it would miss the Earth by 600,000 miles.

"There's a great misperception in the public that for one day there was a possibility that the asteroid would hit in 2028," said Paul W. Chodas, the JPL astronomer whose calculations put those frightened by the report at ease. "According to our calculations, there never was a chance the object would hit the Earth."

In the aftermath, scientists began thinking about how they could avert another scare, although efforts to delay release of data could be difficult given the increasingly free flow of scientific information through the Internet.

Since that time, Hollywood has put killer asteroids and comets into the public mind with the "Deep Impact" and "Armageddon," as well as made-for-TV movies earlier this year.

In light of the heightened awareness, the National Research Council's Committee on Planetary and Lunar Exploration brought together astronomers who identify and track asteroids, experts in risk management, seismologists with experience in earthquake and volcano warnings and reporters.

The main problem in reporting new asteroid discoveries is that only a fraction that initially seem potentially hazardous turn out to be headed close to Earth once scientists refine orbital calculations.

"It is extremely unlikely that we're going to have an asteroid come with a real possibility of a collision," Chodas said, adding that 15 minutes after he had the XF11 data in hand, his calculations found "zero threat."

Scientists agree that peer review of initial observations — standard procedure in science — is essential.

In April, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration drafted "Interim Roles and Responsibilities for Reporting Potentially Hazardous Objects," which recommends consultation and coordination among experts before any public announcements. It might take up to 48 hours for experts to consult with each other, Chodas said. NASA wants an additional 24 hours before the information is released.

'The press, public and public officials seem to deal well with uncertainty, but they don't deal well with the suggestion you might hold out on them.'

— Alan Lindh,
U.S. Geological Survey

Chodas, who computes orbits for asteroids and comets, went into the meeting with an open mind about giving NASA the extra 24 hours, although he wondered what the agency planned to do during that time.

An earthquake expert urged openness about any potential threat, as long as the uncertainty of initial observations is clearly explained.

"You can't control the flow of news but you can be as truthful as possible up front," said Alan Lindh of the U.S. Geological Survey. "The press, public and public officials seem to deal well with uncertainty, but they don't deal well with the suggestion you might hold out on them."

Binzel, who opposes mandating a set waiting period, suggested that NASA or the International Astronomical Union establish a code of conduct under which amateur or professional astronomers would seek verification from colleagues before going public.

Without that, false alarms will create "total loss of credibility among the astronomers."

Scientists have so far identified 123 potentially hazardous asteroids that could pass within 5 million miles of Earth. They've discovered 200 of the estimated 2,000 large asteroids that could pass within 30 million miles of Earth.

NASA is spending more money in the next decade to scan space for others.

One of the giant rocky chunks is thought to have slammed into Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula 65 million years ago, wiping out dinosaurs and most species.

Scientists know that in 1908, an asteroid exploded over Siberia, flattening nearly 1,000 square miles of forest.

Harry Y. "Hap" McSween, the University of Tennessee geologist who chaired the daylong workshop, said it was important that the event was getting U.S. scientists talking, but added that "this is going to have to be an international discussion."

High Court ruling should not deter probe by Starr

While the Supreme Court's refusal to let Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr leapfrog over the U.S. Court of Appeals and take his case for compelling the testimony of a presidential aide and three Secret Service employees in the Monica Lewinsky investigation is a setback for Starr, it certainly doesn't mark the end of his probe of President Clinton. Nor should it.

Neither does the administration's decision to drop its assertion that executive privilege should prevent White House aides Sidney Blumenthal and Bruce Lindsey from testifying before Starr's grand jury looking into the Lewinsky case. That was merely a delaying tactic by the administration which obviously believes the Lewinsky case isn't worth investigating anyway, particularly when Starr's investigation is costing the taxpayers $30,000 a day.

The simple fact of the matter, however, is that the Lewinsky case has raised serious questions about possible obstruction of justice that Starr must now attempt to answer for the American people.

The simple fact of the matter, however, is that the Lewinsky case has raised serious questions about possible obstruction of justice that Starr must now attempt to answer for the American people. Starr had hoped to shorten the length of his inquiry into the matter, but the Supreme Court believed — correctly, no doubt — that it is best to dot every "i" and cross every "t" in this investigation.

With the Supreme Court ruling issued, Starr should continue to follow every lead as he sifts through the evidence in the case of Monica Lewinsky. We hope it can be resolved quickly now, but the wheels of justice do move slowly.

Meanwhile, the Court of Appeals should do as the Supreme Court suggested in its ruling and "proceed expeditiously" in this matter. That is in the best interests of the nation.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, June 7, the 158th day of 1998. There are 207 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 7, 1776, Richard Henry Lee of Virginia proposed to the Continental Congress a resolution calling for a Declaration of Independence.

On this date:

In 1654, Louis XIV was crowned king of France in Rheims.

In 1769, frontiersman Daniel Boone first began to explore the present-day Bluegrass State.

In 1848, French postimpressionist painter Paul Gauguin was born in Paris.

In 1864, Abraham Lincoln was nominated for another term as president at his party's convention in Baltimore.

In 1929, the sovereign state of Vatican City came into existence as copies of the Lateran Treaty were exchanged in Rome.

In 1939, King George VI and his wife, Queen Elizabeth, arrived at Niagara Falls, N.Y., from Canada on the first visit to the United States by a reigning British monarch.

In 1948, the Communists completed their takeover of Czechoslovakia with the resignation of President Eduard Benes.

In 1967, author-critic Dorothy Parker, famed for her caustic wit, died in New York.

In 1981, Israeli military planes destroyed a nuclear power plant in Iraq, a facility the Israelis charged could have been used to make nuclear weapons.

Ten years ago: Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis clinched the Democratic presidential nomination by defeating the Rev. Jesse Jackson in the New Jersey, California, Montana and New Mexico primaries.

Five years ago: The Supreme Court ruled that religious groups can sometimes meet on school property after hours. The justices also let stand, without comment, a federal appeals court ruling allowing student-led prayers at graduation ceremonies in Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi. In New York, Woody Allen lost his bitter custody battle against Mia Farrow.

One year ago: Kentucky Derby and Preakness winner Silver Charm failed to win horse racing's Triple Crown, losing the Belmont Stakes to Touch Gold.

Airline computer systems in dire need of upgrade

WASHINGTON — The friendly skies may not be as safe as you think.

Statistics show that air travel, despite several high-profile crashes in recent years, is still the safest way to get from one place to another. Per mile traveled, you're still safer in a commercial airplane than in the family station wagon.

Anderson

But the computer networks and other infrastructure in place to keep pilots and passengers safe are aging and in dire need of an upgrade. Even more worrisome, however, is the vulnerability of these networks to computer piracy.

Hackers are a well-known danger to any organization that uses computers. But a hacker breaking into the Internal Revenue Service, for example, can do no worse than ruin your credit rating or create other privacy hassles; destructive, no doubt. But if the wrong person breaks into the computers at the Federal Aviation Administration, the damage could be measured in human lives.

Nevertheless, recent reports and interviews with officials close to the problem suggests that FAA honchos have long ignored serious security weaknesses in air-traffic control computer systems. These weaknesses, experts say, could easily be exploited by a skilled hacker, or even a disgruntled agency worker intent on taking revenge.

"Failure to adequately protect these systems," reports Gene Dodaro of the General Accounting Office, "could cause nationwide disruptions of air traffic or even loss of life due to collisions."

FAA spokesman William Shumann shrugged off the threat of attack as "little more than vandalism," and claims that hackers could conceivably cause flight delays but not accidents. "We think (the GAO testimony) is exaggerated," he told our associate Aaron Karp. "We dispute that mid-air collisions are likely to occur."

What worries us even more than the security weaknesses is Shumann's explanation as to why there's no need to worry. The FAA claims that their computers are so old and out-of-date that most modern-day computer whizzes won't be able to figure them out.

In some areas of the country, air-traffic controllers are still working with 1960s-era technology, which often breaks down and is especially tough to fix because the folks who designed it are for the most part retired or deceased.

"It's very difficult, if not impossible, for someone to hack into (the air-traffic control system) now" because of the system's age, Shumann explained. GAO officials believe that counting on hackers to be confounded by the old-time computers is a risky assumption.

And soon it will be an invalid assumption, as that the FAA is in the midst of replacing its ancient technology. Over the next seven years, the old system will be replaced by a new, state-of-the-art control system that presumably will make it easier to monitor air traffic. This new system may be more vulnerable to illicit tampering.

"The GAO rightly points to the possibility of hackers breaking into the new computer system," Shumann conceded. "We're alert to those possibilities and are taking steps to safeguard that system."

The agency's assurances might carry more weight if it wasn't also plagued by security concerns of a far simpler nature. Says the GAO's Dodaro: "We found that FAA was not effectively managing physical security at air-traffic control facilities. Known weaknesses exist at many facilities."

An FAA assessment of one such facility found that "access control procedures were weak to nonexistent and that the facility was extremely vulnerable to criminal and terrorist attack." Unfortunately, the agency hasn't even bothered to check up on the physical security at 187 of its air-traffic control centers since 1993.

Despite this, Shumann claims that "physical security has not been a big issue." He added that the FAA is in the midst of a "multi-year effort" to beef up security, and a "complete analysis" of security deficiencies at air-traffic control centers will be completed by August.

The FAA's message to concerned flyers: Don't worry, be happy.

Somehow we're not reassured.

EDITORIAL NOTE — The interminable length of Ken Starr's Whitewater probe has prompted many analysts to call for the abolition of all independent counsels. There are too many investigations, and they're costing too much money, the critics say. Hogwash.

The critics forget why the statute was enacted in the first place: because the attorney general and the Justice Department have a built-in conflict of interest when it comes to investigating other high government officials, especially the president.

Sure, there'd be fewer cabinet officials in trouble if we abolished independent counsels. There would also be fewer felons crowding our jails if we stopped investigating murder.

Jack Anderson's and Jan Moller's column is distributed by United Feature Syndicate.

"EXCUSE ME FOR SAYING SO, SIR, BUT WASN'T IT YOUR SENSE OF 'EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE' THAT GOT US INTO THIS MESS IN THE FIRST PLACE...?"

RUSSELL BAKER

Simple solution to make the mess go away

Here's how to plea-bargain us all out of the whole ordeal.

1. President Clinton concedes that he had consensual sexual relations with Monica Lewinsky, as intimated by her former lawyer, William Ginsburg, and resigns.

2. Vice President Gore becomes president.

3. Republicans agree that President Gore, in his first speech to the country, does not have to say "Our long national nightmare is over," but only that "Our incredibly complicated national bad dream is now in abeyance."

Baker

4. Prosecutor Kenneth Starr agrees not to seek a 15-year prison term for Clinton for lying about his activities with Ms. Lewinsky. In a statement to the court, Starr will concede that a gentleman must inevitably lie about such matters, but prove, by citing appropriate precedents, that the president of the United States has a constitutional duty not to be a gentleman.

5. Starr will also be permitted to send a stern note home to Mrs. Clinton about her husband's behavior, but only if he can compose such a note at a cost of less than $45 million.

6. This note may suggest, but may not require, that Mrs. Clinton make Clinton write, 1,000 times on a yellow legal pad, "I will never again fib to a special prosecutor, or any lawyer earning more than $300 per billable hour, about my sexual activities, whether consensual or accidental."

7. Simultaneously with the president's resignation, Starr will submit a written apology to the public for pretending that he was not "out to get Bill Clinton."

8. This apology will not include, as Clinton's lawyers demanded, an admission that Starr's unctuous behavior grievously misled the public about his personality since, when fooling around after hours, Starr often abandoned his sanctimonious style and told politically incorrect and raucous, if not bawdy, jokes.

9. A distinguished group of 20 investigative reporters will conduct a three-day seminar on C-Span to help the public understand what Whitewater was about.

10. The public will be asked to contribute to a so-called South Seas Fund, the purpose of which will be to finance construction, on an atoll south of Tahiti, of a $10 million house with sauna and swimming pool. This will be presented to Paula Jones as a gift from the nation, with the understanding that if she returns to America a special prosecutor will be appointed with power to find legal justification for putting her in jail.

11. To show what can happen to people who vex special prosecutors, Starr will be permitted to have Susan McDougal televised wearing an orange jailbird suit while breaking stones in a chain gang.

12. Linda Tripp will be restored to the White House job she held before Clinton people transferred her to the Pentagon. Concurrently with said transfer, she will be provided with a food-taster to accompany her whenever she dines in the White House mess.

13. Hillary Clinton will appear on NBC's "Today" show to say she was completely wrong when she said her husband was the victim of "a vast right-wing conspiracy" to destroy him.

14. On the evening after Mrs. Clinton's breakfast-show appearance, Starr will appear on David Letterman's show and, if asked, will state his belief that the mysteriously missing Rose Law Firm documents, which Mrs. Clinton couldn't find in Arkansas, turned up — amazingly enough — in the White House parlor only because they were transported there from Arkansas by an evil spirit.

15. Should Letterman roll on the floor laughing, or offer Starr a good bargain on the Brooklyn Bridge, Starr agrees, nevertheless, to maintain an expression of sober and sincere credulity until Letterman's next commercial break.

16. All parties agree to sign a declaration of repentance for encumbering the public with squalor, vulgarity and eleventh-rate politics and for insisting that their show was not totally inconsequential to the destiny of the republic.

17. Monica Lewinsky agrees never to be heard of again.

Clinton's glandular activities not as bad as nuclear comments

WASHINGTON—In the meadow of the president's mind, in the untended portion where foreign policy thoughts sprout randomly, this flower recently bloomed concerning the Indian and Pakistani nuclear tests: "I cannot believe that we are about to start the 21st century by having the Indian subcontinent repeat the worst mistakes of the 20th century."

What mistakes did he mean? Having nuclear weapons? Were it not for them, scores of thousands of Americans would have died in 1945 ending the fighting in the Pacific. And nuclear weapons were indispensable ingredients of the containment of the Soviet Union and its enormous conventional forces.

Will

Perhaps the president meant that arms competitions were the "mistakes." But that thought does not rise to the level of adult commentary on the real historical contingencies and choices of nations.

This president's utterances on foreign policy often are audible chaff, and not even his glandular activities are as embarrassing as his sub-sophomoric pronouncement to India and Pakistan that "two wrongs don't make a right." That bromide was offered to nations weighing what they consider questions of national life and death.

India has an enormous advantage over Pakistan in conventional military forces. (It has the world's fourth largest military establishment, although China's army is three times larger than India's.) That is one reason Pakistan believes it needs nuclear weapons. Economic sanctions will further weaken Pakistan's ability to rely on non-nuclear means of defense.

This should be a moment for Republicans to reassert their interest in national security issues, one of the few areas in which the public still regards them as more reassuring than Democrats.

So, automatic sanctions having failed to deter either nation, Washington's attention turns, robotically, to an even more futile ritual—the superstition of arms control, specifically the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty, which the United States signed in 1996, but which the Senate has prudently not ratified. The designation "superstition" fits because the faith of believers in arms control is more than impervious to evidence; their faith is strengthened even by evidence that actually refutes it.

Far from demonstrating the urgency of ratification, India's and Pakistan's tests demonstrate the CTBT's irrelevance. India had not tested since 1974. Pakistan evidently had never tested. Yet both had sufficient stockpiles to perform multiple tests. So the tests did not create new sabres, they were the rattling of sabres known to have existed for years.

The nonproliferation treaty authorizes international inspections only at sites declared to be nuclear facilities. Nations have been known to fib. The CTBT sets such a low-yield standard of what constitutes a test of a nuclear device, verification is impossible.

Various of the president's policies, whether shaped by corruption, incompetence or naivete, have enabled China to increase the lethality of its ICBMs. The president and his party are committed to keeping America vulnerable to such weapons: 41 senators, all Democrats, have filibustered legislation sponsored by Sens. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., and Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, declaring it U.S. policy "to deploy effective anti-missile defenses of the territory of the United States as soon as technologically possible."

Instead, the administration would defend the nation with parchment—gestures like the CTBT, which is a distillation of liberalism's foreign policy of let's pretend. Let's pretend that if we forever forswear tests, other nations' admiration will move them to emulation. Diagnostic tests are indispensable for maintaining the safety and reliability of the aging U.S. deterrent inventory. So the CTBT is a recipe for slow-motion denuclearization.

Seeking a safer world by means of a weaker America, and seeking to make America safe behind the parchment walls of arms control agreements, is to start the 21st century by repeating the worst fallacies of the 20th century.

Marathon was truly a partner in education

As the school year ends, the staff and students of Pease Elementary School would like to thank our partner in education, Marathon Oil Company.

Ken Thoma and the employees at Marathon faithfully have supported the programs at Pease. Marathon donated money for the purchase of library books that enhanced the curriculum. They also purchased a ribbon for each student and staff member to wear in support of Red Ribbon Week. Money also was donated to provide a science fair display board for any third- or sixth-grader who could not supply one of their own.

In addition to funding, Marathon also gave 52 employees time away from work to serve as reading and math tutors. Because of their efforts, students were provided with an opportunity to spend time one-on-one with a concerned adult. Some volunteers have offered to work with students over the summer so that reading and math skills are maintained. When Pease moved to the Travis campus in December, Sheila Springfield cheerfully rescheduled the Marathon volunteers to accommodate our delayed start. She also recruited volunteers to serve as judges for the spelling bee, the science fair and field day.

The Pease staff is grateful for Marathon's interest in education and especially for their concern for the students at Pease. We look forward to continuing our partnership during the next school year.

DWI survivors' words can help to save lives

Once a month several of us who have lost a loved one in a DWI crash speak to a room of 50 or more defendants who have been convicted of driving while intoxicated or being a minor in possession of alcohol.

This is a very hard thing to do, because we have to remember and talk about our loved one, how they were killed and how it has affected our lives. It brings back many painful memories. In my case, I tell about my young, gentle, strong son who had so much to give to this world, and how in a few seconds his life was ended by a drunk driver on the wrong side of Highway 191 going the speed of 109 miles per hour. We never got to say "good-bye" or "I love you" to him ever again.

You might ask why we do this. It is a living memorial to someone who had the right to live, whom we loved more than our own lives, and a way to try and find some kind of reason for their death. It hurts so bad, we are willing to sacrifice some of our time so maybe another family never will have to feel this terrible agony over the unnecessary loss of someone they love.

If any one of you in a similar situation would please donate a little of your time to help us in the endeavor, we sure could use your help. The benefits you receive from helping others and by making the life of your loved one continue to mean something is certainly worth your while. Please call 699-8787.

Visitor got great care at Midland Memorial

I would like to congratulate Midland on having an outstanding hospital, Midland Memorial.

While vacationing in Texas with our oldest son, my husband woke up ill, and he was transported to their facility by city of Midland ambulance. He was treated with the utmost care and concern.

My husband was admitted and stayed for eight days. While he was a patient there, he received excellent care, both while in the coronary care unit and when he was moved to the neurological floor.

The Texas Tech medical team and the other doctors, nurses, dietary, physical therapy, housekeeping and other employees were all very professional, which made my husband's stay a lot easier, as we were away from home.

Once again, we would like to say hats off to Midland Memorial Hospital and the city of Midland ambulance service.

Column was tacky, insulting to players

In response to Terry Williamson's scathing column in the sports section of the May 29 Reporter-Telegram, Williamson accused the Anaheim Angels of not caring about the fans in Midland, because he is angry that he no longer has exclusive press coverage over an upcoming major league baseball player. He even stated the fact that the minor leagues exist for player development, yet he failed to name another organization in major league baseball that would not have promoted a talented player through their farm system quickly for the young man's accomplishments; he merely blamed Anaheim for doing so.

Williamson, however, did not reveal other facts about playing in the minor leagues. A player at the Double-A level makes a salary of less than $1,500/month. Many of these young men are married and supporting families. A move to Triple-A means an increase in salary to $5,000/month and a step closer to the show.

I attend every Midland Angels game, yet I was unaware that Troy Glaus covered all nine positions on the baseball field.

Williamson obviously did not take into account how his tacky column would make all of the other superbly talented players on our Midland Angels team feel. These super-nice young men sign autographs, visit with the fans, and play hard for us every night.

City services conflicted with American Legion

Although it's somewhat after the fact, I feel compelled to write regarding the various ceremonies that were held in Midland for the Memorial Day holiday.

I have tried to search out just how many years the American Legion, Woods W. Lynch Post 19 has been sponsoring memorial services. So many of the "old timers" have come and gone, but I myself have been an active member of the auxiliary for 32 years — and know it has been going on for that long.

Not only does the American Legion sponsor the evening ceremonies, but members are out at the crack of dawn putting flags on individual veterans' graves at Resthaven North and Fairview. They also do the Avenue of Flags at Fairview each year. After the ceremonies are over members also must pick up the flags before dark.

Needless to say, I was somewhat disappointed to see that the city of Midland had scheduled ceremonies in the evening — conflicting with what has become a long tradition with the American Legion. The Legion does not hold these services for gain or political reasons. Maybe those who are responsible for organizing this year's events, as well as all the mayors who spoke during the ceremonies, should come out and join us in the placing of flags on the veterans' graves and the Avenue of Flags at Fairview so they might know the true meaning of this day that means so much to the veterans who have sacrificed so much.

I believe every past and present mayor has spoken (or been asked to speak) at these evening ceremonies and should have known better.

Thanks to those who extinguished grass fire

On May 6 a grass fire was started out on Highway 80. While the destruction to our neighbor, AAA Coffee, was significant, we are thankful that no lives were lost. Things can be replaced but lives cannot.

We would like to thank the following:

The Midland Fire Department; The Odessa Fire Department; The Midland County Road and Bridge Department.

In addition, Midland County Fire Marshal Dale Little, Midland Fire Department Fire Marshal's Office Investigator Jeff Meiner, Midland County Sheriff's Office Cpl. Ray Meek, Deputy Larry Broughton, State Department of Emergency Doug Crabtree, Greenwood Volunteer Fire Department Assistant Chief John Fretwell, firefighter Connie Little, Northeast Midland County Volunteer Fire Department Capt. Andy Chandler, Capt. Brenda Chandler, firefighter Bradly Chandler, troopers of the Texas Department of Public Safety, and the Texas Highway Department Maintenance Crew.

Abstinence-only omits life-saving information

The recent letter from Angela Green concerning sex education included a misinterpretation of a Louis Harris poll conducted for Planned Parenthood. The poll, conducted in 1986, is titled "American Teens Speak." The truth is that the poll shows no relationship between having been taught sexuality education and having sexual intercourse. Because of the widespread misinterpretation of their poll, Louis Harris and Associates issued a press release stating that when the "data is controlled for age, the correlation between receiving sex education and sexual activity disappears." Unfortunately, this type of misleading information is not uncommon when the issue of sexuality education comes up.

When making a decision about sexuality education in our schools, the scientific evidence from professional research should be reviewed — not polls that gather opinions. The fact is that several research studies have concluded that comprehensive sexuality education leads to a decrease in sexual involvement. One such study is entitled "Sexuality Education: It Can Reduce Unprotected Intercourse". It was authored by Douglas Kirby, Ph.D., and published in 1993 by SIECUS. Another study, "No Easy Answers: Research findings on Programs to Reduce Teen Pregnancy," also authored by Kirby, concluded that there is no evidence that abstinence-only programs delay the onset of intercourse.

Abstinence-only sexuality education gives information only about abstaining. With 80 percent of males and 70 percent of females sexually active by age 19 and 20 percent of all the births in Midland occurring among teens, I believe that the decision to tell our children only that they must abstain from sex is shortsighted and irresponsible. We are not only dealing with pregnancies. What about sexually transmitted infections? What about AIDS? Leaving our children to "learn from their mistakes" and "pay the price" is irresponsible, especially when some of the outcomes can be deadly. We have information that can change the poor outcomes that occur when our children become parents too soon and we are withholding it.

Do you remember what you didn't know when you where a teen-ager and what you heard from your friends? Things have not changed. Most parents do not discuss sex with their children. Do we want to depend on the media and our children's friends to educate them?

The responsible choice is to give our children accurate information about sex, including, but not limited to, abstinence information. Not teaching about birth control and ways to lower risk of disease is totally irresponsible and will result in maintaining our current high rates of teen pregnancies, sexually transmitted infections, and HIV/AIDS. With the current abstinence-only curriculum, our children will be making life-changing choices based on ignorance.

City retirees repaid with a rate increase

The citizens of Midland have the right to know how the city of Midland treats its retirees. On July 1, it is proposed to increase insurance premiums that retirees have to pay by $126.50 per month. This is coverage for the retiree and spouse only.

The cost is considerably more if the retiree and spouse have children covered also. These retirees are people who have served the citizens of Midland faithfully for a minimum of 20 years — firemen, policemen, sanitation workers and others who provide services such as life and property protection, protection from the criminal element, and many other services provided to all citizens of the community.

And this exorbitant increase in health coverage for people on fixed incomes is how we are repaid.

Angels playing better, getting less support

What is the matter, Midland? We are not supporting our Angels very well. I have been watching baseball here for almost 21 years, and the attendance is the worst I have ever seen. The Angels are playing better ball this year than they have in the past. They are not far out of first place, and yet the fans don't show up. Baseball is one of the main family entertainments available here in Midland, and if we lost baseball, what have we got?

I have seen the Angels (and the Cubs, too) lose way more games than they won, and yet they had our support. Come on, fans, and get behind your Angels!

Kitten put to sleep for giving minor scratch

Yesterday my husband and I learned a hard lesson. Looking at Midland Animal Control for a kitten, we found a two-month-old mixed Siamese sweetheart, with huge blue eyes and an engaging personality. Rubbing her body against the cage and poking her tiny paws through the wires in response to our voices, she begged to be adopted.

Because we did not want to act impulsively, and because we view pet ownership as a serious responsibility, we went home to discuss adopting her. Later that afternoon when I called to inquire about the adoption fee, I spoke to a technician who told me it would cost $45 for a check up to make sure the kitten was healthy. Thinking nothing of my remark, I responded offhandedly that I hoped the kitty was healthy, because she had scratched me. Despite my protest and reassurances that the scratch was inconsequential, the technician insisted upon filling out an incident report. Not wanting to be uncooperative, I gave him the requested information. He informed me the kitten would be quarantined for 10 days, during which time I could come visit the kitten or call, and at the end of the period the director would determine the adoptability of the kitty.

Two days later when I went to the shelter to confirm my intent to adopt, I learned that the director — without even having checked the kitten — had ordered her to be destroyed. Frustrated and upset, I called El Paso's Health Department where I was told that normally an animal is not destroyed before the 10-day period unless it shows signs of illness. Feeling quite sure the kitten had not become sick, I was puzzled about why this senseless, unnecessary destruction would have been ordered. When I finally reached the director, he unapologetically told me that he was protecting the public and following the law. He told me that he had the kitten destroyed immediately because of limited funding and her unavailability for adoption anyway because the shelter does not allow animals that "bite and scratch" to be adopted. Give me a break! As a pet owner for many years, I have had no problem differentiating between a vicious animal and a kitten who wants attention. Obviously, some people in positions of authority have neither the common sense, good judgment, nor concern to make the same differentiation. While I appreciate the director's attempt to do his job with limited funds and state laws to follow, there is such a thing as considering the individual matter at hand.

For those who would trivialize this incident, let me quote the theme from Coleridge's poem "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner": "He prayeth best who loveth best/All things both great and small; / For the dear God who loveth us,/ He made and loveth all." Like the Mariner, I am "sadder and wiser."

Not surprisingly, the pathology report on the kitten was negative.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being re-submitted.
- We do not publish 'open' letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, TX 79702 or you may fax to 682-3793.

They can also be faxed to 682-3793 or sent via e-mail to Letters@basinlink.com - Letters faxed or sent by e-mail should indicate they are for publication.

Insults to environment likely cause of frogs' decline

In 1989 in Canterbury, England, the world's leading experts on frogs and other amphibians gathered for their first ever world congress.

In the lobby, in the bar and in chance encounters in the hall, the experts swapped frog stories. At some point they realized that they were all seeing the same problem: Their frogs and toads were dying — not just in disturbed habitats, but in the most pristine nature preserves — from brown toads in Yosemite National Park to golden toads in Costa Rica.

Today the case of the dying frogs is well documented, but what's interesting is that no one still knows exactly why they are dying. So conservationists are asking: Are the frogs the canaries in our coal mine? Miners used to take canaries underground with them; if the canary died, that would indicate the presence of deadly but odorless carbon monoxide and warn miners to flee. Are the frogs sounding such an alarm?

"Things go extinct all the time," said William Brown, science adviser to the secretary of the interior. "But when species like frogs and toads that have been with us since the Jurassic period suddenly start to disappear — without us understanding exactly why — you have to take notice."

Is it something mankind is doing, and if so, is it something that will eventually threaten mankind? Is it the increase in ultraviolet light from holes in the ozone that is reducing the frogs' immunity to viruses, parasites and fungi? Is it chemicals and pesticides in the atmosphere? Is it rising temperatures?

These questions were worrying enough for the National Science Foundation to bring together in Washington last week a group of top environmental scientists to swap research on what might be killing the frogs.

Their emerging consensus: There is no single smoking gun, but rather the combination of all the "insults to the environment" over the last 50 years. To follow up, Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt, who attended the seminar, has initiated an interagency task force to monitor the frog decline.

Frogs and other amphibians have very permeable skin, which makes them very sensitive to changes in the environment, whether water or the air. "They are one of the first animals to disappear when there are threats to a habitat, because they are so sehsitive to water and air degradations," said Roderic Mast, vice president of Conservation International. "You have to assume that what impacts frogs will eventually impact everything else in the ecosystem. That makes it a biodiversity and a human health issue."

There is something so humbling about the idea that at a time when everyone is talking about the year 2000 computer bug, Indian and Pakistani nuclear tests and the "information revolution," a group of animals that are so familiar to us all — frogs — can start to die out without anyone knowing why. Who knows what's happening to the millions of other species we haven't identified?

Worse, this loss of biodiversity is happening just as life-science companies are making real breakthroughs in their ability to collect plants and animals from highly biodiverse environments and screen them for useful genes that can be isolated from that plant or animal and then used for medical cures or to stimulate agriculture.

For instance, it's genes from the rosy periwinkle, a flowering plant from Madagascar, that are now used to treat childhood leukemia and Hodgkin's disease. To the extent that we are losing biodiversity through extinctions, we are shrinking this natural storehouse of life-saving genes, and we will never have access to them again.

"To prevent that, we conservationists create protected areas," said Mast. "And yet we have creatures like frogs going extinct in protected areas. So that is not enough. It calls into question what is enough."

It also calls into question the distinction too often made between home and away, between protected areas and nonprotected areas. Home is where you keep clean, and away is where you pollute.

But maybe the frogs from Canada and Costa Rica, Yosemite and Australia are telling us that this distinction isn't valid anymore. Maybe they're telling us that home is home and away is home, and if you pollute one you pollute the other. Maybe they're telling us about the limits of our knowledge and warning us to do something about the silent species we are losing through development and deforestation — before it's too late.

Jury's verdict mixed in Goodley drug trial

■ Derrick Goodley found guilty on all counts with which he was charged. Hilliard Goodley found guilty on five counts of distributing crack cocaine and one charge of possessing illegal shotgun. Cary Goodley was acquitted.

By Alice Ashmore
Staff Writer

Jurors deliberated for nearly 11 hours before reaching a verdict in the trial of the Midland men alleged to have taken part in a drug delivery conspiracy and a money-laundering scheme to dispose of the cash generated by the drug trade.

The men, Arandal (Derrick) Goodley, 29, Hilliard Lee Goodley III, 43, and Carey Gene Goodley, 45, were named, along with 14 other individuals, in a 54-count sealed federal indictment handed down on Sept. 17, 1997.

Derrick Goodley was found guilty on all 21 counts he was charged with in the indictment, including conspiracy to distribute crack cocaine, as well as delivery of cocaine and conspiracy to launder money.

Hilliard Goodley, was found not guilty on the charge of conspiracy to distribute crack cocaine, but guilty on five counts of distributing crack and one charge of possessing an illegal sawed-off shotgun.

Carey Goodley was acquitted on two counts of money laundering. He was not a part of the drug conspiracy.

In his closing argument to the jury, prosecutor Mark Roomberg said the three men were

Trashformations

The Museum of the Southwest is hosting the exhibit, "Trashformations," 80 works that illustrate how American artists use discarded and recycled materials. Persons viewing the exhibit have the opportunity to create a sculpture, such as the one here. The exhibit, which will be at the museum through Aug. 23, includes clothing knitted from plastic bags, a table made from cans and a quilt made from clothing labels.

Midland rancher John Mabee is chairman of the 1998 Midland Ranch Rodeo & Western Heritage Days, scheduled for today, Friday, Saturday and June 13.

Midland set to rustle up 'true cowboy spirit'

Buckaroo, vaquero, wrangler, cowpoke, or cowhand — the modern-day sorts of those Old West cowboys and cowgirls who roamed the range, took care of the herds and the dogies, repaired fences and windmills and romanced their livestock with songs and yips — will be moseying into Midland this week.

Their focus will be events surrounding the 11th annual Midland Ranch Rodeo & Western Heritage Days.

"It gives people who never had a chance to be working cowboys to see them," said Midland rancher John Mabee, who is heading up the Ranch Rodeo this year under the auspices of the West Texas Exposition Center board of directors.

Folks who turn out to the Ranch Rodeo events today, Friday, Saturday and June 14 may see more than just folks in cowboy garb from boots to wide-brimmed, 10-gallon hats. They might belly up to them and observe them in various settings: in prayer, in song, at the chuck wagons, on the dance floor keeping pace with the Western-swing music popularized by the late Bob Wills or in Ranch Rodeo events.

Eight West Texas ranch teams are entered in the five-event Ranch Rodeo set for 6 p.m. Saturday at the Midland County Arena near the Midland County Exhibit Building east of town.

Ten chuck-wagon teams are signed up to compete for the most authentic camp site, most authentic wagon, best meat, most tasty beans, best camp bread, best dessert and most congenial.

Ranch Rodeo's Western Heritage Days will kick off 10:30 a.m. today with the "Preaching on the Porch" cowboy worship service at the historic Brown-Dorsey Medallion Home, 213 N. Weatherford St. Leading the ser-

Hubble telescope is focus of cable program tonight

By Rick López
Staff Writer

You don't have to make a trip to Fort Davis to see the nationally renowned Hubble-Eberly Telescope, which sits atop Mount Locke at the McDonald Observatory.

The Learning Channel will feature the HET as part of their "Extreme Machines" series, scheduled for 6 p.m. today. The segment is called "Super Sight."

The Learning Channel will feature the HET as part of their 'Extreme Machines' series, scheduled for 6 p.m. today.

"From the Hubble to night-vision gear to X-ray machines, what your naked eye can't see might shock you," boasts the TLC programming list.

TLC's segment on the HET compares it to other types of modern technology that are used to enhance the naked eye's perception, such as X-ray vision and infrared vision. HET facility manager John W. Glaspey said.

The HET, which is 4 million times stronger than the human eye, is the newest member of the McDonald Observatory family.

The TLC's filming crew paid a visit to Mount Locke in June 1997, when the 75-foot, 60-ton instrument was still under construction.

"The crew was a pleasure to work with," Glaspey said.

The crew asked him about the telescope's features and about spectroscopy — a cutting-edge method of studying the sky's matter.

Spectroscopy is the study of the wavelength of light and can reveal the temperature, chemical composition and motion of astronomical objects.

The HET is the first telescope created exclusively for this use. Its magic will be at its fullest after 91 hexagonal mirrors are installed and the software to align them hydraulically is written.

Then, the huge mirror will be ready to gather light from the stars and transmit it through fiber optics. It is then put through an object called a spectrograph — which puts it into a rainbow, like a prism does with sunlight.

Because the HET's mirror is made up of several smaller mirrors, it ranks as the third largest in the world, leaving the twin Keck I and Keck II telescopes in Hawaii as the giants, Glaspey explained.

Scholarship info

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas colleges and universities can give students information about private scholarships awarded on the basis of race, according to Attorney General Dan Morales.

The attorney general's office said it wouldn't be a violation of a federal court ruling barring the schools from using race to determine admissions or financial aid.

Assistant Attorney General Mary Crouter released a legal opinion late Friday regarding the federal Hopwood court ruling. The decision forced any institutions accepting state funds to drop race as a factor in admissions and financial aid decisions.

She wrote that the ruling limits only actions taken by the state.

"We do not believe that a private, nonprofit organization's scholarship program would rise to the level of state action merely because a state university provides students with information about the scholarship program," Ms. Crouter wrote.

"We cannot definitively resolve whether a state university's involvement in the scholarship program of a particular private nonprofit organization transforms the organization's private activities into 'state actions'," she added.

"We believe, however, that a state university may provide to a private, nonprofit organization any student information that the university would generally provide to any other member of the public and would not thereby transform the organization's private activities into state action."

The 1996 Hopwood decision had been blamed for lower minority enrollment at the state's top universities. But UT and Texas A&M recently announced slight upturns in minority enrollment.

According to the UT law school, 21 black students had been offered admission for fall 1998 last week, compared with 11 last year. There had been 48 admission offers to Hispanic students, up from 40.

GARY OTT

Whether squealing or melting, women always attracted to musicians

It was one of those special events that comes along when you least expect it and invariably causes the ol' brain to start working in reverse, as in recalling the past.

Ott

It was Tuesday night and Willie Nelson was performing on television. But this time it was a different format than you normally see. Granted, he was on stage with his usual band of outlaws, but instead of going through a prearranged set of songs, he was taking requests via the telephone.

The choices were predictable — "Crazy," "Blue Eyes Crying in the Rain," "Hello Walls," "On the Road Again" — but somehow the new format made for a more intimate evening.

Each caller, gushing with enthusiasm, would explain why the musician was so special to them, and in some cases they even recounted an encounter the two had shared in the past. In each case, Willie Nelson would smile and act as though the call was the most important thing in his life at that particular time.

Then he would sing the requested song.

The crowd would roar its approval.

And that's when my flashback kicked in.

Suddenly, it was the summer of 1988. A group of friends — there were five of us, as I recall — had just arrived in Ruidoso, N.M., to enjoy the fresh mountain air and to wager a few dollars on the horses.

But first, there was the small matter of getting into the "proper state of mind." So by 9:30 p.m. that first day we found ourselves in a cozy piano bar. The place was dimly lit and all of the tables were in use. Most of the patrons were sipping mixed drinks and talking amongst themselves.

The piano player was a young guy, probably no more than 30 years of age, and he was really quite good. He could sing just about anything and on certain songs, especially those originally recorded by Billy Joel and Bob Dylan, he would throw in the occasional harmonica riff, too.

I can't remember his name, but I do recall he was from El Paso. During a break, we all gave him our names and addresses, and said if he was ever in Midland to look us up. He said he would. But he never did.

Like Willie Nelson, he was taking requests from his audience. He had distributed a lengthy list of songs he knew, and as soon as he would finish one, someone would shout out the title of another and, without pausing, he would immediately begin playing it.

Before long, as the booze began to take effect, the noise level climbed significantly. Couples of all ages took to the dance floor. Waitresses struggled to keep up with the drink orders.

And the piano player kept taking requests.

As I glanced around the room, one thing became increasingly obvious. The women were quite enamored by him. And though he was nice enough looking, I suppose, that wasn't why they were drawn to him. No, the REAL reason the females were so attracted to this man was because he was playing a musical instrument. And singing.

Let's face it, women are turned on by musicians, especially singers. Always have been, always will be.

Just look back in history. Whether it was Rudy Vallee, Frank Sinatra, Elvis Presley or the Beatles, women have gone nuts at the mere sight of performers stepping on stage and crooning into a microphone.

Sometimes they squeal with delight; other times they just close their eyes and melt.

But either way, they react.

It happened again Tuesday night.

Each time Willie Nelson would sing a song, the camera would scan the audience. And while everyone seemed to be having fun, it was the females who were the most demonstrative.

It was especially obvious when he started singing, "Always on My Mind." As the words began to flow from his lips, the camera immediately focused on a middle-aged couple seated at a table in the corner.

The guy ordered another beer; his wife began to swoon.

As for me, I've already signed up for singing lessons ... and I'll be taking your requests real soon.

Helen Felsinger

Helen Felsinger was born June 27, 1942, in Eagle Pass, Texas, to Albert and Sonie Ada (Carter) Blake. She was raised in Eagle Pass. She later moved to Seminole and lived there until 1963, when she moved to Midland. Mrs. Felsinger was a member of Kelview Heights Baptist Church. She and her husband, Billy Felsinger, were married for 34 years. She helped in the church nursery for most of those years.

Mrs. Felsinger is preceded in death by her parents, Albert and Sonie Ada (Carter) Blake, and son, David Felsinger and three brothers, Merl, Sammy, and Earl Blake.

She is survived by her husband, Billy Felsinger of Midland; her son, Danny Felsinger of Willow Park, Texas; her daughters, Pam McKinney of Stanton and Tanya Lawrence of Lubbock; her brothers, Marvin Blake of Midland and Albert Blake of El Campo; her sisters, Margie Rogers of Trenton, N.J., Willabell Driver of Gettings, Texas, Lois Riley of Stockton, Calif., and Dorothy Petty and Fort Worth; and six grandchildren.

Mrs. Felsinger died at a local hospital Thursday.

Funeral services have been scheduled for 1 p.m. Monday at Kelview Baptist Church with the Rev. Bill Skaggs officiating. Interment will follow in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

The family requests memorials be directed to Kelview Heights Baptist Church Nursery, 402 W. Scharbauer Drive, Midland 79701.

Ruth Eatherly

Former Midlander Ruth Eatherly, 79, of Overland Park, Kan., died Saturday, March 14, 1998, in Overland Park, Kan. She had suffered Alzeimer's disease for several years. At her request, her brain was donated to science to gain knowledge for others fighting this disease. She is survived by her son, Ray Eatherly of Oak Creek Lake, Kaye Thompson of Shawnee, Kan., Lynda Wheeler of Overland Park, Kan., and grandchildren Scott Thompson of Midland, Neil Wheeler of Overland Park, David Eatherly of Dallas and Dana Basquez of Denver, Colo.

Please join us for a Celebration of Ruth, June 13, 1998, from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m., Green Tree Country Club, 4900 Green Tree Blvd., Midland, Texas.

Knowing that she loved laughter, friends and family most of all, we want to have a special time of sharing pictures, stories, music, food and laughter. We welcome you and your children, as she would have done. Please come and join us in our memorial celebration of her life. — Ruth's children

Judge rules Houston attorney cannot see disbarment report

HOUSTON (AP) — The prominent Houston attorney accused of unethically soliciting clients after a July 1994 North Carolina air crash will not be able to review the disbarment report compiled against him, a judge has ruled.

Attorneys representing John O'Quinn and associates accused of committing barratry argued they needed the state investigative report to properly defend their clients at trial, scheduled for Aug. 3. Michael Tigar, O'Quinn's lead attorney, argued he needed them to present a case at mediation proceedings next week.

Dallas attorney Chip Babcock is supervising the mediation, set to begin Tuesday.

State District Judge John Rhea agreed with Lonny Morrison, attorney for the Texas Commission for Lawyer Discipline, that state law specifies such reports are confidential.

The State Bar of Texas accuses O'Quinn of funneling $100,000 to attorneys C. Benton Musslewhite and his son, Charles Musslewhite. The younger Musslewhite allegedly worked with O'Quinn associate Charles Shaw to hire non-attorneys to solicit crash victims' families.

SHOW: HET getting finishing touches

(From 1B)

Since the October 1997 inauguration, the observatory has been putting together the HET's last finishing touches, like temperature censors, motors that tilt the mirrors and fiber optic devices.

"It's a procedure that we have to address methodically and slowly," Glaspey said. "The width of a human hair is big compared to the precision we need to align the mirrors."

The mirrors are made of Zero-Dur glass, a German glass 100 times stronger than Pyrex, he said. When adjusted correctly, they form an 11-meter mirror — the largest in the world.

Though all 91 mirrors have not been used at once, the HET staff has been successful at using up to 66 mirrors to focus on a single object, Glaspey said.

"Right now we're focusing on engineering data. Later, this week, we might try some scientific observations," Glaspey said. "We want to get all mirrors to make one image."

However, the project sounds easier than it can be done. A lot of hard work goes into finishing the telescope. The job has to be done at a pace that allows perfection, Glaspey said.

"We try to reach milestones, not deadlines," he said. "So far, it's coming along great. It's a big project. We're doing quite well."

The HET has created a new example of how telescope construction can be streamlined. Its price tag was $13 million, compared to the $80 million it cost to construct the Twin Kecks, Glaspey said.

The HET can also be managed by a 10-person crew, while the Keck staff exceeds 80 scientists.

"We've proven that this can be done in a clever and innovative way," Glaspey said.

The HET is named after its visionaries, William P. Hobby, a former lieutenant governor, and Robert E. Eberly, chairman of Eberly and Mead Inc. — an oil and gas firm. Scientists from the United States and Germany have participated in the project.

Obituary & Death Notice policy

There is no charge for death notices of residents or former residents of Midland or for those who have Midland relatives. We also publish death notices for residents of the surrounding West Texas area.

Free death notices include date and place of death, service and burial information, funeral home handling arrangements, date and place of birth, brief biography, survivors and memorials. A longer, more detailed obituary is available for a charge. It may include tributes, expanded biography, organizational associations, notes of appreciation, pallbearers, honorary pallbearers and a photo.

Deadline for both free death notices and paid obituaries is 4:30 p.m. and information must be either received from or verified by a funeral home.

"WILL I EVER FEEL BETTER?"
Questions derived from concerns expressed by grieving people
Mark Mercer, M.S., L.P.C., SWA

Grieving people often ask this question in a state of fatigue or despair, because the grieving process seems so long and fruitless. Time is perceived as moving very slowly, and surviving the sadness can be a minute by minute process. In trying to release all your tears you may feel like someone on their knees scooping water out of a large lake with a teacup; when you've done this until you are exhausted you can see no progress. This is one of grief's many illusions. You are making progress but it may be hard to see this for many months. One or two months after your loss you can expect to feel worse and then to continue feeling that pain for several more months. But this difficult phase of the process doesn't last forever.

I have heard people, still early in their grief, tell others that the pain will never get any better. This is rarely true. There is every likelihood that your pain will lessen as you allow yourself to mourn.

At Hospice of Midland we have support groups to help you with nearly any kind of loss you have suffered. Please call me (682-2980) if you'd be interested in a group that, by sharing your pain, can help it diminish more quickly.

The answer to your question is yes, grief nearly always gets better. During your darkest days hold on to this hope.

RODEO: Events demonstrate cowboys' skills, chores on the working ranch

vice will be cowboy-minister Leonard Cotten of the C Ranch and his Country Chapel Worship Team.

Other events will be held in or on the grounds of the Midland County Exhibit Building and the Midland County Arena east of town off Business Highway 80.

The Ranch Rodeo's Bit & Spur Show is to open 7 p.m. Friday at the exhibit building.

The West Texas Expo's Roundup 1998 Chuck Wagon Dinner to benefit the Midland Cerebral Palsy Center is also scheduled for 7 p.m. Friday.

"The chuck wagon crews that are coming in for that weekend volunteered to come in there and cook for us" to help raise funds for the CP Center, said Dr. Bobby Cobb, president of the expo's board of directors.

"We are looking for bigger and better things in the future," Cobb said.

The Ranch Rodeo is to be held at the expo center complex once it is built just west of Midland off Interstate Highway 20. The center is to be built in late 1999 or early 2000. At the request of the Midland Ranch Rodeo Association's board of directors, the expo's board of directors is taking over sponsorship of the annual Ranch Rodeo.

The Midland Ranch Rodeo was established in the late 1980s by a group of ranchers, including the late Charlie Welch, to celebrate the ranching heritage of West Texas.

Ranch Rodeo events demonstrate the cowboys' chores and skills on the working ranch and project the camaraderie among cowhands from the various ranches, said J.P. "Pat" McDaniel, former president of the Midland Ranch Rodeo Association.

The Ranch Rodeo is "sort of a reunion for the agricultural community," McDaniel said.

Mabee, 38, said that he has drawn on the expertise and connections of McDaniel in organizing the 1998 Ranch Rodeo. "He is absolutely vital" in the rodeo, Mabee said. "It wouldn't happen without him."

By design, the Ranch Rodeo is "to reflect the true cowboy spirit," according to West Texas rancher Candi Cowden, an early Midland Ranch Rodeo supporter. "It (ranching) is my ancestry. It is my livelihood, but I enjoy it, too."

Another event, "Singing Around the Campfire," is set for 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Performers include Jeff Gore and Trudy Fair.

Gore's credits include performances at The National Cowboy Symposium, The Red Stegall Cowboy Gathering, The Buffalo Gap Cowboy Gathering, The Lincoln County Cowboy Poetry and Music Gathering and The Texas Cowboy Poetry Gathering.

Ms. Fair has appeared on "Austin City Limits," "Nashville Now" and "New Country" and at The Montreal Jazz Festival and the Storeyville Jazz Hall in New Orleans.

Western-swing music, such as "Faded Love" and "San Antonio Rose" popularized by the late Bob Wills, will be played by Bob Wills' Texas Playboys beginning at 9 p.m. Saturday at the exhibit building. Directing the band will be Tommy Allsup, formerly of Buddy Holly and The Crickets of the 1950s.

Bringing chuck wagons and cooking crews to the Ranch Rodeo are NT Ranch, Wayne and Nathan Mitchell; Newlee, Rick and Shirley Newcomb; Long X Ranch, S. Rhodes; Texas Cowboy Outfitters, Glen Moreland; J Bar S, James Stewart; Little No. H3, Don Proctor; Ericksdahl Cattle Company; 7-D Wagon, Bob Drake; Wheatland Ranch, Jack Wheat; and Rafter H Ranch, Bob Midkiff.

The Ranch Rodeo events beginning at 6 p.m. Saturday at the arena include wild-cow milking, steer doctoring, team sorting, calf branding, and double mugging.

Teams competing in the rodeo are:

■ Dean Ranch: Rocky Dean operates 45,000 acres, about 70 sections, in Terrell County and runs a cow-and-calf operation and a trophy white-tailed deer buck-hunting program.

Rodeo team members include Rocky Dean, Jim Phillips, Aaron Custer, Jason Davenport and Bobby Boyd.

■ Long X Cattle Company: The Long X Cattle Company was part of the holdings of the Reynolds Cattle Company of 1884 and is owned by descendants of William D. Reynolds and George T. Reynolds. The outfit runs registered Longhorn and Hereford cattle.

Rodeo team members include Sam Dove, David French, Chet Dove, Cody Shackleford and Bill Hoffman.

■ NT Ranch: Owned by Nathan and Wayne Mitchell of Stanton, the NT Ranch is a commercial cow-calf operation that is a spin-off of the NA Ranch founded by Nathan Mitchell's father in 1927. The ranch has holdings in Howard and Shackelford counties.

Rodeo team members include Lloyd Meek, Randy Thompson, Billy Lamb, Hegan Lamb and Joe Brewer.

■ Munsell Cattle Company: The Munsell family has crossbreed cattle in Andrews County.

Rodeo team members include Kenneth Munsell, Mike Harmon, Mikey Munsell and Button Moore.

■ Yarborough Ranches: The Yarborough & BAR Ranches in Midland, Brewster, and Runnels counties raise cattle as well as quarter horses, thoroughbred horses, and Spanish goats.

Rodeo team members include Jason Latimer, Steve Beach, Shirley Newcomb, Justin Fleming and Bo Douthit.

■ Triple 7 Ranch: Sammy Hooper operates the Triple 7 Ranch in Crane County. The ranch runs cattle and sheep and raises quarter horses.

Rodeo team members include Tommy Salmon Jr., Shawn Hooper, Kyle Hooper, Bob Clements and Sammy Hooper.

Rodeo team members includes Schuyler Wight III, great-grandson of A.W. Wight, and Rob Leese, Tom Jones, and Skeet Jones.

TRIAL: Many of prosecution's witnesses had entered into plea agreements motivated by greed. "They were selling poison for profit," he said.

He noted that cash transactions from Derrick Goodley exceeded $115,000, the amount that would have been generated from the sale of more than five kilograms of cocaine. Roomberg characterized Derrick Goodley as the "kingpin" of the drug distribution conspiracy. "There was an agreement to work together to commit a crime," Roomberg said. "Keep in mind all these people were sellers and not users." He also asserted that Derrick Goodley taught people how to "rock-up" powder cocaine for sale.

"This family's major business was crack cocaine," Roomberg said. He claimed that Carey Goodley "helped Derrick conceal the assets from his drug deals" by allowing a car to be purchased by Derrick Goodley in Carey Goodley's name. "They agreed to commit money laundering and they did it to conceal ownership."

Roomberg said there was circumstantial evidence to show that Carey Goodley knew that his family was dealing in drugs. "The money that was used (to buy the car) was drug money. Derrick has not had a legitimate job in five years," he said. "Most importantly, every time someone would mention drugs, Carey Goodley would get up and leave — either way, Carey Goodley knew that the money was from unlawful sources."

He also spoke to jurors about the definition of a drug conspiracy. "We don't have to show dealers were required to buy from Derrick Goodley," Roomberg said. "Drug conspiracy is when people work together to distribute crack. These defendants were working together to distribute crack."

Many of the prosecution witnesses were members of the Goodley family who had entered into plea agreements with the government in exchange for their testimony. "This is not about our witnesses being criminals — some of them have done some really nasty things," Roomberg said. "But we didn't pick them; they did," he said, pointing toward the defendants.

"A trial is like a jigsaw puzzle," he told jurors. "You put all the pieces together and you have a picture — a clear picture of a conspiracy."

Derrick Goodley's defense attorney, Tony Chavez, encouraged jurors to use their common sense in determining his client's guilt or innocence. "You are chock-full of life experience and common sense."

He told jurors, "When you start looking at the big picture — conspiracy — you know what that is. Use your common sense." He asserted that the various members of the Goodley family acted independently in their drug dealings. "We make a big deal of Janell Goodley and her husband emphatically saying they bought cocaine from Derrick two times," Chavez asked, "What kind of conspiracy is that?"

Chavez attempted to discredit the prosecution witnesses. He accused prosecution witness Dennis Goodley (brother of Hilliard and Carey Goodley) of lying. "Dennis lied. He did one of two things. He either looked Judge Ferguson in the eyes and lied, or looked at you and lied." He said that Jeffrey Lopardo, who was involved in structuring the cash sale of a home to avoid financial reporting, got "the deal of the century." Lopardo pleaded guilty to a money laundering charge; he has not been sentenced.

Chavez conceded his client's guilt on the charge of possession of crack cocaine with intent to deliver. Derrick Goodley has four convictions for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute. He is implicated in 21 counts of the 54 count indictment.

Bob Garcia, defense counsel for Hilliard Goodley, also conceded his client's guilt in the distribution charges. "Hilliard Goodley sells crack here in the flats in Midland — I think the evidence clearly shows that."

Garcia successfully argued that there was reasonable doubt to convict Hilliard Goodley of conspiring to distribute crack cocaine. "The mere fact that they are associates is not part of a drug conspiracy. While pointing to the government's organizational chart of the alleged conspiracy, he said, "It looks like we were watching 'The Godfather' or something."

Nick Taylor, attorney for Carey Goodley, described his client as "one of the heroes in this case. Even though he earned a modest salary, he resisted the temptation to participate in drug dealing."

Taylor added that the government was struggling to make a case. "The stretch that the government is making is almost beyond belief."

Carey Goodley works steadily and has no previous criminal history or convictions, according to testimony. Taylor described Carey Goodley as "a man of fine character."

Derrick Goodley and Hilliard Goodley both face up to life in prison. They are to be sentenced Aug. 7 by U.S. District Judge Royal Ferguson.

Lottery fares better in game's second drawing

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Lottery actually made money in its Texas Million drawing on Friday, a better fare than its first run at the game.

In Friday's drawing, no tickets matched all four numbers for $1 million or $25,000, the second prize in the game. A total of $1,757,120 prizes were won, including four third-prize winners of $10,000 and 1,714 $300 winners.

Lottery spokeswoman Marcy Goodfleisch on Saturday said sales were $4,958,376 for the game's second drawing, providing a profit of $3,201,256.

In the weekly game's first drawing May 29, the lottery sold $6.1 million worth of tickets, but paid out $6.4 million in prizes, including four winners of the top prize.

"As we knew, there are going to be weeks where there's not going to be a crowd of four million-dollar winners," Ms. Goodfleisch said. "The whole point of this games is to win nice-sized prizes."

Unlike Lotto Texas, Texas Million limits the level of the top prize to $1 million, putting more money into lower-tier prizes and increasing the overall odds of winning a prize.

A total of 10 winners can claim $1 million each week. If more than 10 winners match all four numbers for the grand prize in one drawing, they would have to split a total of $10 million.

For $2, players get one shot at the $1 million prize; two at the $25,000 and four at $10,000.

Matching three of any four numbers in one set gets players $300. Matching two of any four wins $10.

Ms. Goodfleisch said money in a reserve prize pool was used to make up the difference between sales and the higher prizes that were won in the first drawing.

"We were excited to have four winners," Ms. Goodfleisch said. "It sends a good message."

She added that the difference between first-week and second-week sales was not a concern.

"We had tickets on sale for about two weeks (before the first drawing)," Ms. Goodfleisch said. "For us to have this healthy of sales the second week is a real good sign."

Survivors include his wife, Sherri of Odessa; daughters Courtney and Tabitha McAllister of Lubbock; parents Terry and Sandy Houston of Midland; brother David Houston of Cypress; grandmothers Bernilda Houston of Artesia, N.M., and Beatrice Hegwer of Albuquerque, N.M.; and in-laws Mike and Shirley Evans of Lubbock and Jerry and Charlotte Powers of Kaufman.

Funeral services will 10 a.m., Monday, June 8, 1998 in the chapel of Frank W. Wilson Funeral Directors with the Rev. James P. Bridges officiating. Pallbearers will be Mike Evans, Michael Powers, Wayne Chappell, Kevin Hoawk, Brian Houston, Bill Tyra, Eric Powers and Willy Wharton. Interment will be in Sunset Memorial Gardens. Arrangements are under the direction of Frank W. Wilson Funeral Directors.

Helen Felsinger

Helen Felsinger was born June 27, 1942 in Eagle Pass, Texas, to Albert and Sonie Ada (Carter) Blake. She was raised in Eagle Pass. She later moved to Seminole and lived there until 1963, when she moved to Midland. Mrs. Felsinger was a member of Kelview Heights Baptist Church. She and her husband, Billy Felsinger, were married for 34 years. She helped in the church nursery for most of those years.

Mrs. Felsinger is preceded in death by her parents, Albert and Sonie Ada (Carter) Blake, and son, David Felsinger and three brothers, Merl, Sammy, and Earl Blake.

She is survived by her husband, Billy Felsinger of Midland; her son, Danny Felsinger of Willow Park, Texas; her daughters, Pam McKinney of Stanton and Tanya Lawrence of Lubbock; her brothers, Marvin Blake of Midland and Albert Blake of El Campo; her sisters, Margie Rogers of Trenton, N.J., Willabell Driver of Gettings, Texas, Lois Riley of Stockton, Calif., and Dorothy Petty and Fort Worth; and six grandchildren.

Mrs. Felsinger died at a local hospital Thursday.

Funeral services have been scheduled for 1 p.m. Monday at Kelview Baptist Church with the Rev. Bill Skaggs officiating. Interment will follow in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

The family requests memorials be directed to Kelview Heights Baptist Church Nursery, 402 W. Scharbauer Drive, Midland 79701.

Ruth Eatherly

Former Midlander Ruth Eatherly, 79, of Overland Park, Kan., died Saturday, March 14, 1998, in Overland Park, Kan. She had suffered Alzeimer's disease for several years. At her request, her brain was donated to science to gain knowledge for others fighting this disease. She is survived by her son, Ray Eatherly of Oak Creek Lake, Kaye Thompson of Shawnee, Kan., Lynda Wheeler of Overland Park, Kan., and grandchildren Scott Thompson of Midland, Neil Wheeler of Overland Park, David Eatherly of Dallas and Dana Basquez of Denver, Colo.

Please join us for a Celebration of Ruth, June 13, 1998, from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m., Green Tree Country Club, 4900 Green Tree Blvd., Midland, Texas.

Knowing that she loved laughter, friends and family most of all, we want to have a special time of sharing pictures, stories, music, food and laughter. We welcome you and your children, as she would have done. Please come and join us in our memorial celebration of her life. — Ruth's children

Judge rules Houston attorney cannot see disbarment report

HOUSTON (AP) — The prominent Houston attorney accused of unethically soliciting clients after a July 1994 North Carolina air crash will not be able to review the disbarment report compiled against him, a judge has ruled.

Attorneys representing John O'Quinn and associates accused of committing barratry argued they needed the state investigative report to properly defend their clients at trial, scheduled for Aug. 3. Michael Tigar, O'Quinn's lead attorney, argued he needed them to present a case at mediation proceedings next week.

Dallas attorney Chip Babcock is supervising the mediation, set to begin Tuesday.

State District Judge John Rhea agreed with Lonny Morrison, attorney for the Texas Commission for Lawyer Discipline, that state law specifies such reports are confidential.

The State Bar of Texas accuses O'Quinn of funneling $100,000 to attorneys C. Benton Musslewhite and his son, Charles Musslewhite. The younger Musslewhite allegedly worked with O'Quinn associate Charles Shaw to hire non-attorneys to solicit crash victims' families.

SHOW: HET getting finishing touches

(From 1B)

Since the October 1997 inauguration, the observatory has been putting together the HET's last finishing touches like temperature censors, motors that tilt the mirrors and fiber optic devices.

"It's a procedure that we have to address methodically and slowly," Glaspey said. "The width of a human hair is big compared to the precision we need to align the mirrors."

The mirrors are made of Zero-Dur glass, a German glass 100 times stronger than Pyrex, he said. When adjusted correctly, they form an 11-meter mirror — the largest in the world.

Though all 91 mirrors have not been used at once, the HET staff has been successful at using up to 66 mirrors to focus on a single object, Glaspey said.

"Right now we're focusing on engineering data. Later, this week, we might try some scientific observations," Glaspey said. "We want to get all mirrors to make one image."

However, the project sounds easier than it can be done. A lot of hard work goes into finishing the telescope. The job has to be done at a pace that allows perfection, Glaspey said.

"We try to reach milestones, not deadlines," he said. "So far, it's coming along great. It's a big project. We're doing quite well."

The HET has created a new example of how telescope construction can be streamlined. Its price tag was $13 million, compared to the $80 million it cost to construct the Twin Kecks, Glaspey said.

The HET can also be managed by a 10-person crew, while the Keck staff exceeds 80 scientists.

"We've proven that this can be done in a clever and innovative way," Glaspey said.

The HET is named after its visionaries, William P. Hobby, a former lieutenant governor, and Robert E. Eberly, chairman of Eberly and Mead Inc. — an oil and gas firm. Scientists from the United States and Germany have participated in the project.

"WILL I EVER FEEL BETTER?"

Questions derived from concerns expressed by grieving people — Mark Mercer, M.S., L.P.C., SWA

Grieving people often ask this question in a state of fatigue or despair, because the grieving process seems so long and fruitless. Time is perceived as moving very slowly, and surviving the sadness can be a minute by minute process. In trying to release all your tears you may feel like someone on their knees scooping water out of a large lake with a teacup; when you've done this until you are exhausted you can see no progress. This is one of grief's many illusions. You are making progress but it may be hard to see this for many months. One or two months after your loss you can expect to feel worse and then to continue feeling that pain for several more months. But this difficult phase of the process doesn't last forever.

I have heard people, still early in their grief, tell others that the pain will never get any better. This is rarely true. There is every likelihood that your pain will lessen as you allow yourself to mourn.

At Hospice of Midland we have support groups to help you with nearly any kind of loss you have suffered. Please call me (682-2980) if you'd be interested in a group that, by sharing your pain, can help it diminish more quickly.

The answer to your question is yes, grief nearly always gets better. During your darkest days hold on to this hope.

RODEO: Events demonstrate cowboys' skills, chores on the working ranch

vice will be cowboy-minister Leonard Cotten of the C Ranch and his Country Chapel Worship Team.

Other events will be held in or on the grounds of the Midland County Exhibit Building and the Midland County Arena east of town off Business Highway 80.

The Ranch Rodeo's Bit & Spur Show is to open 7 p.m. Friday at the exhibit building.

The West Texas Expo's Roundup 1998 Chuck Wagon Dinner to benefit the Midland Cerebral Palsy Center is also scheduled for 7 p.m. Friday.

"The chuck wagon crews that are coming in for that weekend volunteered to come in there and cook for us" to help raise funds for the CP Center, said Dr. Bobby Cobb, president of the expo's board of directors.

"We are looking for bigger and better things in the future," Cobb said.

The Ranch Rodeo is to be held at the expo center complex once it is built just west of Midland off Interstate Highway 20. The center is to be built in late 1999 or early 2000. At the request of the Midland Ranch Rodeo Association's board of directors, the expo's board of directors is taking over sponsorship of the annual Ranch Rodeo.

The Midland Ranch Rodeo was established in the late 1980s by a group of ranchers, including the late Charlie Welch, to celebrate the ranching heritage of West Texas.

Ranch Rodeo events demonstrate the cowboys' chores and skills on the working ranch and project the camaraderie among cowhands from the various ranches, said J.P. "Pat" McDaniel, former president of the Midland Ranch Rodeo Association.

The Ranch Rodeo is "sort of a reunion for the agricultural community," McDaniel said.

Mabee, 38, said that he has drawn on the expertise and connections of McDaniel in organizing the 1998 Ranch Rodeo. "He is absolutely vital" in the rodeo, Mabee said. "It wouldn't happen without him."

By design, the Ranch Rodeo is "to reflect the true cowboy spirit," according to West Texas rancher Candi Cowden, an early Midland Ranch Rodeo supporter. "It (ranching) is my ancestry. It is my livelihood, but I enjoy it, too."

Another event, "Singing Around the Campfire," is set for 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Performers include Jeff Gore and Trudy Fair.

Gore's credits include performances at The National Cowboy Symposium, The Red Stegall Cowboy Gathering, The Buffalo Gap Cowboy Gathering, The Lincoln County Cowboy Poetry and Music Gathering and The Texas Cowboy Poetry Gathering.

Ms. Fair has appeared on "Austin City Limits," "Nashville Now" and "New Country" and at The Montreal Jazz Festival and the Storeyville Jazz Hall in New Orleans.

Western-swing music, such as "Faded Love" and "San Antonio Rose" popularized by the late Bob Wills, will be played by Bob Wills' Texas Playboys beginning at 9 p.m. Saturday at the exhibit building. Directing the band will be Tommy Allsup, formerly of Buddy Holly and The Crickets of the 1950s.

Bringing chuck wagons and cooking crews to the Ranch Rodeo are NT Ranch, Wayne and Nathan Mitchell; Newlee, Rick and Shirley Newcomb; Long X Ranch, S. Rhodes; Texas Cowboy Outfitters, Glen Moreland; J Bar S, James Stewart; Little No. H3, Don Proctor; Ericksdahl Cattle Company; 7-D Wagon, Bob Drake; Wheatland Ranch, Jack Wheat; and Rafter H Ranch, Bob Midkiff.

The Ranch Rodeo events beginning at 6 p.m. Saturday at the arena include wild-cow milking, steer doctoring, team sorting, calf branding, and double mugging.

Teams competing in the rodeo are:

■ Dean Ranch: Rocky Dean operates 45,000 acres, about 70 sections, in Terrell County and runs a cow-and-calf operation and a trophy white-tailed deer buck-hunting program.

Rodeo team members include Rocky Dean, Jim Phillips, Aaron Custer, Jason Davenport and Bobby Boyd.

■ Long X Cattle Company: The Long X Cattle Company was part of the holdings of the Reynolds Cattle Company of 1884 and is owned by descendants of William D. Reynolds and George T. Reynolds. The outfit runs registered Longhorn and Hereford cattle.

Rodeo team members include Sam Dove, David French, Chet Dove, Cody Shackleford and Bill Hoffman.

■ NT Ranch: Owned by Nathan and Wayne Mitchell of Stanton, the NT Ranch is a commercial cow-calf operation that is a spin-off of the NA Ranch founded by Nathan Mitchell's father in 1927. The ranch has holdings in Howard and Shackelford counties.

Rodeo team members include Lloyd Meek, Randy Thompson, Billy Lamb, Hegan Lamb and Joe Brewer.

■ Munsell Cattle Company: The Munsell family has crossbreed cattle in Andrews County.

Rodeo team members include Kenneth Munsell, Mike Harmon, Mikey Munsell and Button Moore.

■ Yarborough Ranches: The Yarborough & BAR Ranches in Midland, Brewster, and Runnels counties raise cattle as well as quarter horses, thoroughbred horses, and Spanish goats.

Rodeo team members include Jason Latimer, Steve Beach, Shirley Newcomb, Justin Fleming and Bo Douthit.

■ Triple 7 Ranch: Sammy Hooper operates the Triple 7 Ranch in Crane County. The ranch runs cattle and sheep and raises quarter horses.

Rodeo team members include Tommy Salmon Jr., Shawn Hooper, Kyle Hooper, Bob Clements and Sammy Hooper.

Rodeo team members includes Schuyler Wight III, great-grandson of A.W. Wight, and Rob Leese, Tom Jones, and Skeet Jones.

TRIAL: Many of prosecution's witnesses had entered into plea agreements

motivated by greed. "They were selling poison for profit," he said.

He noted that cash transactions from Derrick Goodley exceeded $115,000, the amount that would have been generated from the sale of more than five kilograms of cocaine. Roomberg characterized Derrick Goodley as the "kingpin" of the drug distribution conspiracy. "There was an agreement to work together to commit a crime," Roomberg said. "Keep in mind all these people were sellers and not users." He also asserted that Derrick Goodley taught people how to "rock-up" powder cocaine for sale.

"This family's major business was crack cocaine," Roomberg said. He claimed that Carey Goodley "helped Derrick conceal the assets from his drug deals" by allowing a car to be purchased by Derrick Goodley in Carey Goodley's name. "They agreed to commit money laundering and they did it to conceal ownership."

Roomberg said there was circumstantial evidence to show that Carey Goodley knew that his family was dealing in drugs. "The money that was used (to buy the car) was drug money. Derrick has not had a legitimate job in five years," he said. "Most importantly, every time someone would mention drugs, Carey Goodley would get up and leave — either way, Carey Goodley knew that the money was from unlawful sources."

He also spoke to jurors about the definition of a drug conspiracy. "We don't have to show dealers were required to buy from Derrick Goodley," Roomberg said. "Drug conspiracy is when people work together to distribute crack. These defendants were working together to distribute crack."

Many of the prosecution witnesses were members of the Goodley family who had entered into plea agreements with the government in exchange for their testimony. "This is not about our witnesses being criminals — some of them have done some really nasty things," Roomberg said. "But we didn't pick them; they did," he said, pointing toward the defendants.

"A trial is like a jigsaw puzzle," he told jurors. "You put all the pieces together and you have a picture — a clear picture of a conspiracy."

Derrick Goodley's defense attorney, Tony Chavez, encouraged jurors to use their common sense in determining his client's guilt or innocence. "You are chock-full of life experience and common sense."

He told jurors, "When you start looking at the big picture — conspiracy — you know what that is. Use your common sense." He asserted that the various members of the Goodley family acted independently in their drug dealings. "We make a big deal of Janell Goodley and her husband emphatically saying they bought cocaine from Derrick two times." Chavez asked, "What kind of conspiracy is that?"

Chavez attempted to discredit the prosecution witnesses. He accused prosecution witness Dennis Goodley (brother of Hilliard and Carey Goodley) of lying. "Dennis lied. He did one of two things. He either looked Judge Ferguson in the eyes and lied, or looked at you and lied." He said that Jeffrey Lopardo, who was involved in structuring the cash sale of a home to avoid financial reporting, got "the deal of the century." Lopardo pleaded guilty to a money laundering charge; he has not been sentenced.

Chavez conceded his client's guilt on the charge of possession of crack cocaine with intent to deliver. Derrick Goodley has four convictions for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute. He is implicated in 21 counts of the 54 count indictment.

Bob Garcia, defense counsel for Hilliard Goodley, also conceded his client's guilt in the distribution charges. "Hilliard Goodley sells crack here in the flats in Midland — I think the evidence clearly shows that."

Garcia successfully argued that there was reasonable doubt to convict Hilliard Goodley of conspiring to distribute crack cocaine. "The mere fact that they are associates is not part of a drug conspiracy. While pointing to the government's organizational chart of the alleged conspiracy, he said, "It looks like we were watching 'The Godfather' or something."

Nick Taylor, attorney for Carey Goodley, described his client as "one of the heroes in this case. Even though he earned a modest salary, he resisted the temptation to participate in drug dealing."

Taylor added that the government was struggling to make a case. "The stretch that the government is making is almost beyond belief."

Carey Goodley works steadily and has no previous criminal history or convictions, according to testimony. Taylor described Carey Goodley as "a man of fine character."

Derrick Goodley and Hilliard Goodley both face up to life in prison. They are to be sentenced Aug. 7 by U.S. District Judge Royal Ferguson.

Lottery fares better in game's second drawing

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Lottery actually made money in its Texas Million drawing on Friday, a better fare than its first run at the game.

In Friday's drawing, no tickets matched all four numbers for $1 million or $25,000, the second prize in the game. A total of $1,757,120 prizes were won, including four third-prize winners of $10,000 and 1,714 $300 winners.

Lottery spokeswoman Marcy Goodfleisch on Saturday said sales were $4,958,376 for the game's second drawing; providing a profit of $3,201,256.

In the weekly game's first drawing May 29, the lottery sold $6.1 million worth of tickets, but paid out $6.4 million in prizes, including four winners of the top prize.

"As we knew, there are going to be weeks where there's not going to be a crowd of four million-dollar winners," Ms. Goodfleisch said. "The whole point of this games is to win nice-sized prizes."

Unlike Lotto Texas, Texas Million limits the level of the top prize to $1 million, putting more money into lower-tier prizes and increasing the overall odds of winning a prize.

A total of 10 winners can claim $1 million each week. If more than 10 winners match all four numbers for the grand prize in one drawing, they would have to split a total of $10 million.

For $2, players get one shot at the $1 million prize; two at the $25,000 and four at $10,000.

Matching three of any four numbers in one set gets players $300. Matching two of any four wins $10.

Ms. Goodfleisch said money in a reserve prize pool was used to make up the difference between sales and the higher prizes that were won in the first drawing.

"We were excited to have four winners," Ms. Goodfleisch said. "It sends a good message."

She added that the difference between first-week and second-week sales was not a concern.

"We had tickets on sale for about two weeks (before the first drawing)," Ms. Goodfleisch said. "For us to have this healthy of sales the second week is a real good sign."

Police seek volunteers for Citizens on Patrol effort

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

The Midland Police Department is seeking additional volunteers to take part in the Citizens On Patrol (COPS) effort aimed at augmenting the police force with additional eyes and ears on the street.

MPD officers will host a training class 7-10 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday at police headquarters for those interested in learning more about the COPS program.

Currently, all of the Citizens on Patrol are alumni of the Citizens Police Academy, according to MPD Chief John Urby. This program has proven so successful, that coordinators are looking to expand the effort.

COPS are citizens using their own fuel and vehicles patrolling their own neighborhoods or other parts of the city. These people are given police radios with their own frequency, allowing them to talk to each other as they patrol and a another frequency for calling in suspicious activity to the police dispatcher.

These people are not called upon to confront any law breakers or to put themselves in harm's way, but greatly add to the ability of the Police Department to combat crime in the city, Urby said.

"It's an ultimate form of volunteerism," Urby said. "They provide an awesome service to the community," he said.

MPD officers Dale Seago and Ron Sartor coordinate the efforts of these volunteers.

COPS volunteers call in any suspicious activity that may need investigation by the police department.

COPS call in any suspicious activity that may need investigation by the department — from obvious crimes in progress to possible drunken driving and underaged drinking parties, according to police officials.

With a quick radio call, these citizen volunteers can dispatch a uniformed officer to the scene of any criminal activity they see on their rounds.

"Patrol officers cannot be everywhere at once, but with the help of citizens and community policing, the Police Department hopes to make each neighborhood a safer place to live," according to Tina Sanders-Jauz, public information officer for MPD.

Citizens wishing to participate in this effort must be 18 or older and must go through the two-day training course.

Applications for the program may be picked up at the MPD headquarters at 601 N. Loraine St. Area residents also can have an application mailed to them by calling 685-7580.

There is no cost to any participant for the training and equipment. COPS volunteers use their own vehicles in this citizen and Police Department partnership.

Yard of the Month

Midland Neighborhood Housing Service kicks off NeighborWorks Week with a Yard of the Month contest. The yard at Jean Pettit's home, 1945 English Drive, is the first-place winner. Other winners are Roger Mays, 1604 E. Pecan Ave., second place; and D.F. Johnson, 1600 Butternut Lane, third. Other events planned during the week include open house at Taylor Park Boys & Girls Club, noon-2 p.m. Wednesday; "Meet Your Neighbor," noon-2 p.m. Thursday at Crockett Elementary School and Friday at DeZavala Elementary; and Park Beautification Event at Ratcliff Park, noon-2 p.m. Saturday. The 13th annual nationwide NeighborWorks Week is a way of getting residents involved in their neighborhoods, according to Cynthia Ortiz-Ramirez with NHS.

John Ben Shepperd Institute taking nominations for leadership, public service awards through June 15

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Nominations for the 14th annual John Ben Shepperd Political Courage Awards and Outstanding Texas Leader Awards will be accepted through June 15 at the John Ben Shepperd Public Leadership Institute at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Created in 1995 by the Texas Legislature, the institute honors the public service of the late John Ben Shepperd who died in 1990. The Odessa attorney served as the Texas attorney general (1953-57) and secretary of state (1951-53). A strong advocate of public service at all levels, he chaired more than 300 charitable, civic, cultural and religious organizations; held more than 2,000 committee chairmanships; and was appointed by four presidents and seven governors to numerous boards and commissions.

Each year, the Political Courage Awards recognize elected local officials who demonstrate high standards of ethics and commitment to leadership under adverse circumstances. Past recipients include former Houston City Council member Eleanor Tinsley, former San Antonio mayor Nelson Wolff, Tarrant County Judge Tom Vandergriff and Hidalgo County District Attorney Rene Guerra.

The Outstanding Texas Leaders Awards recognize those whose professional and volunteer lifetime achievements have improved Texas and serve as examples for future leaders. Previous recipients include former governor Dolph Briscoe, Speaker of the House Pete Laney, Texas Tech University chancellor John Montford, University of Texas-Brownsville president Juliet Garcia and Austin attorney Larry Temple.

The awards are presented at the annual John Ben Shepperd Public Leadership Forum, a weekend conference that brings together established leaders and young emerging leaders from throughout the state. The 1998 forum is set for October in Odessa.

Award nomination forms and forum registration applications are available through the UTPB John Ben Shepperd Public Leadership Institute, 4901 E. University, Odessa, 79762. For additional information, call 552-2850.

Local chapter of ALS Association founded

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The Blakemore family has established a local chapter of the Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis Association in memory of William B. Blakemore II, according to his son, James Blakemore, organizing director of the chapter.

Blakemore, 75, died May 26 of ALS, a progressive and fatal neurological disorder, also known as Lou Gehrig's disease. Blakemore battled ALS for two years.

The ALS Association is a national non-profit organization dedicated to the fight against the disease, the support of ALS patients and their care-givers and to provide education about the disorder, Blakemore said.

Blakemore said that the initial objectives of the local chapter are to:

- identify area sufferers to better provide them with information;
- determine what avenues of assistance are available to them, their families, and care-givers;
- establish a fund-raising effort to provide operating funds for the chapter and to increase public awareness of ALS and the toll it takes on families;
- provide methods of maintaining contact among ALS sufferers, families, and volunteers; and
- identify volunteers and care-givers who are familiar with ALS and its attendant problems in order to build an information base.

"The local chapter anticipates serving all sufferers within an approximate radius of 150 miles of Midland," Blakemore said.

While it is debilitating, ALS does not impair the mind, nor does it interfere with a person's senses, according to the Woodland Hills, Calif.-based ALS Association.

Symptoms of the disease, which culminates in paralysis and death, include muscle weakness, twitching and cramping of muscles, impairment of the muscles of the arms and legs, difficulty in projecting the voice, shortness of breath and difficulty in breathing and swallowing.

ALS took the life of New York Yankees first baseman Lou Gehrig at age 38 in 1941. His 16-year baseball career ended two years earlier, in 1939, when he was stricken with the non-contagious disorder.

ALS is responsible for two out of every 100,000 deaths among people over 20, according to the association.

In the United States each year, more than 5,000 people are diagnosed with the disease, according to the ALS Association, which estimated that of the current U.S. population of about 265 million, more than 300,000 Americans will die from ALS.

Life expectancy of an ALS patient in usually two to five years from the time of diagnosis, according to the national association. However, "with recent advances in research and improved medical care, many patients are living longer, more productive lives" and some patients survivor more than 10 years. Health care for an ALS patient can cost up to $200,000 a year, according to The ALS Association.

The disease was first identified in 1869 by French neurologist Jean-Martin Charcot. The cause and means of control of ASL are still undetermined.

Representatives of the local ALS chapter may be reached by calling 620-0775. The chapter's address for contributions to support the chapter is P.O. Box 2885, Midland 79702.

Husband of woman on death row for killing sons failed polygraph test, newspapers say

DALLAS (AP) — Darin Routier, the husband of death row inmate Darlie Routier, recently failed a polygraph test in which he denied knowing who killed his two sons or helping plan the crime two years ago at his Rowlett home.

The 30-year-old Routier told The Dallas Morning News in a copyright article and the Fort Worth Star-Telegram the polygraph results are meaningless.

"I did not do this. I did not do anything in any part or form," Routier told The News in a phone interview. "The test is not accurate in any part of it. I would be surprised if I even passed my own name."

Routier said he agreed to take the polygraph to convince multimillionaire Brian Pardo of Waco that he is not responsible for the June 6, 1996, attack. Pardo, a semi-retired insurance executive, agreed in January at the family's request to conduct an independent investigation into the boys' slayings and their mother's trial.

Pardo told the Star-Telegram the test was part of an attempt to "rule out every possible theory of the case until we get to the one that's right." One of those theories questions Darin Routier's knowledge of the crime.

"I emphatically do not feel Darin Routier killed his children," Pardo told the Star-Telegram.

Routier took the test May 22 at the offices of Pardo's business, Life Partners Inc., in Waco. According to the polygraph examiner's report obtained by The News, these are the relevant questions asked and the answers given:

"Were you involved in any plan to commit a crime in your home in June of 1996?"

"No," Routier said.

"Did you yourself stab Darlie on June 6, 1996?"

"No."

"Do you know exactly who left the sock in the alley?"

"No."

"Can you name the person who stabbed your sons?"

"No."

During the post-test interview, Routier became increasingly anxious, according to the report.

"He would grin and say 'no' when asked if he had stabbed Darlie," the examiner, Waco police officer Stuart W. Ervin, wrote.

Ervin determined Routier failed to answer the questions truthfully.

"My professional opinion is that the subject was lying," Ervin wrote in his report. He declined to comment on the results.

Mrs. Routier, 28, received a death sentence in February 1997 after a Kerr County jury convicted her of capital murder in the stabbing death of the couple's 5-year-old son, Damon. The couple's oldest son, Devon, 6, also was killed in the attack.

Mrs. Routier, who has maintained her innocence since her arrest, said she thinks an intruder broke into the family's Rowlett home, killed the boys and attacked her with a knife.

Routier told police he was sleeping upstairs with the couple's only surviving son, Drake, now 2 1/2, when the attack occurred. Both husband and wife consistently have said they believe the other is innocent.

Dallas County Assistant District Attorney Greg Davis, the lead prosecutor in Ms. Routier's case, said neither he nor police have any evidence to seek an indictment against Routier. The prosecutor said he wants to examine the polygraph results.

"If additional evidence comes to my attention that leads me to believe someone else participated with Darlie Routier, then we will take that to the grand jury," Davis said. "What Darin's participation may have been or what he may have seen are still up in the air."

Dallas County First Assistant District Attorney Norman Kinne said the results come as no surprise to prosecutors, who think Routier may have participated in the crime or helped stage the crime scene.

'Judge Parker' cartoonist still drawing after 50 years

By Jane McBride
Beaumont Enterprise

BEAUMONT— When Harold LeDoux was a young student in Port Arthur, families had to buy textbooks for their children. LeDoux's mother told him to take good care of his books so she could sell them at the end of the school year.

Mrs. LeDoux didn't recoup her money — at least not initially. Harold's books couldn't be sold; they were filled with cartoon drawings.

When LeDoux was 14, he read an ad in a comic book by the Rayburn School of Cartooning in Cincinnati inviting people to send in a sketch for acceptance in its correspondence school. When he got his evaluation, LeDoux went to tell his parents the news.

"I announced to my mother and daddy, 'You don't have to worry about sending me to college. I'm going to be a cartoonist,' " LeDoux remembers.

That was more than 50 years ago, and LeDoux still is drawing. His early inspirations were the cartoon strips "Wash Tubs" by Roy Crane, "Major Hoople" and "Out Our Way" by J.R. Williams. Today, LeDoux is best known for his illustrations for the daily strip "Judge Parker."

When LeDoux graduated from high school, the war was on so he enlisted in the U.S. Merchant Marine. He worked at the Texas Company refinery while he waited to be called into service and saved his money, as he did during the three years he served.

He took the $3,800 he had accumulated and moved to Chicago to attend art school. When the school wasn't what he hoped it would be, he left after two weeks and waited for a chance to be accepted at the Chicago Academy of Fine Arts.

After completing art school, he worked for six months on a concept project that didn't go over well, then moved to New York, where he worked for three and half years for the comic book company Famous Funnies.

"I got a job in 1952 drawing 'Movie Love.' They had a deal with a film company that before a film was released, they would get the script and stills from the movie and they would hire a writer at $3 a page to turn it into a comic book story," LeDoux said. "Mickey Spillane worked as a writer for them. I would take the stills, follow the writer's script and draw illustrations to accompany that."

LeDoux drew illustrations of numerous actors, including Angela Lansbury and John Derek, and did the comic book for the first movie Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis made, "That's My Boy," as well as their second movie, "The Stooge."

But paydays weren't as dependable as he would have liked.

"The comic book business was either feast or famine, chicken or feathers. You'd have plenty of work one week, and the next week you wouldn't know where your next job was coming from. I didn't want to live that way. I wanted to pay my rent and make car payments and someday get married," LeDoux said. "I got an offer to be the assistant on a strip that hadn't come out yet. It was to be called "Judge Parker," to be published by a syndicate with a good reputation. It was drawn by Dan Heilman, a guy I met in art school. It would be written by Dr. Nick Dallis, a psychiatrist who wrote "Rex Morgan" and "Apt 3G." I knew it would be a success."

LeDoux was assistant to the artist from 1953 to 1965, when the artist died. LeDoux has been the lead illustrator since then. Every week, he draws six daily strips and one Sunday strip, which is the work equivalent of three dailies.

"The first day, I get the strip and lay out the space for a man to do the hand lettering and then I look up reference materials — pictures in my files of people seated, running, kissing, holding hands and in other poses. I use these so I can can make it as illustrative as possible with a cartoon touch," LeDoux said. "I don't want it to look like a photograph. I want it to have some human, hand-drawn personality. There's enough machine-work in the world today. They even draw with a computer now. That's not human.

"I spend two days pencilling and a couple of days inking and another day on the backgrounds. It takes between five and five-and-a-half days a week to do all the pages. If I work six days a week, I can take a little vacation, which I'm going to do this Thanksgiving. I have to plan very far ahead."

LeDoux, who lives in Richardson, near Dallas, says he still has plenty of friends in Port Arthur, even though he has no family left in the area. He attends all the Thomas Jefferson High School reunions.

And although they weren't friends, he does remembers a famous Thomas Jefferson High School graduate who was one year ahead of him in school — artist Robert Rauschenberg.

For LeDoux, the independence he gets from working as a cartoonist is the best part of his life.

"I can work at home. I like the idea I can set my own schedule. I don't have to ask permission. I don't make a fortune, but I do exactly what I want. I make more than I would at a refinery. I enjoy the creativity, too. It makes you proud that you created something."

Power of the pen unites students in Texas and Bosnia

By Cheryl LaRue
The Paris News

'I had a bad time during the war. My dad and brother they went to the front line ... You may not like this, but that happened to me and I can't forget it. Now it's all over and I am free to go and play anywhere.'
— Bosnian youth, writing to an American student

PARIS — A game on this playground is dodge the mines.

"I simply asked Bida, my pen pal, what the kids in Bosnia did for fun and how it was to have their country at war," said Crockett Middle School student Jeremy Arechiga. "Her response was that land mines on their playground were common."

Arechiga and other students of history teacher Deann Lee began writing to school children in Bosnia-Herzegovina after Paris native Capt. Eric Storm Reynolds got in touch with Paris Independent School District superintendent Elaine Ballard.

Reynolds, a 1982 graduate of Paris High School, is the commanding officer of the 84th Engineer Company, 2nd Armored Calvary Regiment from Fort Polk, La. He was deployed to Camp Dobol, 20 miles southeast of the Bosnian city Tuzla, last September.

"Our primary mission is monitoring the former warring factions (Serbian, Croats and Muslims) take mines out of the ground," said Reynolds through an Internet interview. "We ensure productive effort is done and any mines or unexploded ordnance which are found are destroyed."

The unit also conducts bridge and route reconnaissance, builds and repairs roads and bridges and secures the base camp from attack. Bosnia-Herzegovina is part of the former Yugoslavia which declared independence in 1992. Civil war and ethnic strife pounded the divided country for more than two years.

Reynolds initiated the letter exchange at first to cheer up his troops. Mrs. Lee also planned lessons involving the history of Bosnia, the war and the mission of the peacekeeping force.

Meanwhile, Reynolds' company began sponsoring local schools in Bosnia — passing out donated school supplies, teaching mine awareness classes, building a basketball court. Reynolds asked Mrs. Lee if her students would like to write to the students in Bosnia.

"She and I felt that the exchange would be a lot of fun and be insightful for both sets of students," Reynolds said.

Two Bosnian schools in Osmaci and Zaparde participated. Five Bosnians assigned to Reynolds' unit as interpreters translated the children's letters.

In a letter to an American student, a Bosnian youth writes: "I had a bad time during the war. My dad and brother they went to the front line. I was scared because there was shooting all around us and I was praying to God that all this stops and I can see my house, field, dad and brother again.

"I saw a lot of tanks, cannons, rifles and all other weapons. You may not like this, but that happened to me and I can't forget it. Now it's all over and I am free to go and play anywhere."

Most of the 70 letters from Bosnia to the Paris students asked about music, sports and hobbies. Few mentioned the war and its scars. Many were grateful for the peacekeepers assigned with Operation Joint Guard.

Milon Bojkovic addressed his unknown American pen pal as "my dear student" and stated how grateful he was for "your people and your soldiers."

"The biggest gift which your people and soldiers gave us is peace," Bojkovic wrote.

Mrs. Lee's students wrote 100 letters in answer and she sent individual photographs of her students attached with their letters.

"In the letter we talked about all kinds of stuff," said seventh grader Rebecca Andrews. "It was kind of weird though, seeing how these children worshiped and thought the world of the United States. The kids that live here are just so ungrateful."

The Paris youth began to empathize with the Bosnian students.

"If I was a Bosnian person, I would be scared to death," said American pen pal Victoria Copeland. "I would not even go out of my house with all those bombs on the ground. I told them to be careful."

Mrs. Lee had hoped for just such reactions. "Most important, I wanted our students to realize how truly fortunate we are to be Americans and appreciate the blessings of the life we have here," she said.

Crockett student John Pflug said before he had contact with the soldiers and children in Bosnia he thought the peacekeeping effort was "a waste of our time and money to send our soldiers across the ocean to get involved with another country's problems.

"Now I realize that Bosnians are people too," Pflug said. "They have feelings and needs ... If it weren't for our men and women, these people's lives would be harsh. Seeing the pictures and getting letters from these real people has completely changed my opinion about Bosnia."

Reynolds will leave Bosnia this month and return home to his wife, DeeDee, who is pregnant with their third child due in October, and two children Forrest, 4, and Bailey, 2. The family last visited during leave in February.

"I have discovered that the Bosnian children are much like American children in some respects," Reynolds said. "I was amazed at the similarities of interest between the two countries' seventh graders.

"It has been a very rewarding experience for my soldiers and myself as well as for the students from our countries," Reynolds said.

His replacement has expressed a desire to continue the relationship with Mrs. Lee's next class and they hope to keep the letter exchange going.

Bentley Greb said he will keep in touch with his pen pal. He believes he also can become a peacekeeper. "Mainly, I will just pray for them."

Child labor laws designed to protect, but buck up against tradition

By Robert W. Gee and Gilka Romero
The Monitor

McALLEN — In a collision of two worlds, starch-collared Washington investigators fanned out across the farm-to-market roads of the Rio Grande Valley and confronted the insular, family-oriented society of migrant farm workers.

What the U.S. Department of Labor investigators said they found this spring were Valley children working in onion fields — a violation of federal laws which largely forbid youngsters under 15 years of age from working in farm fields. In all, the investigators said they found 36 children, ages 6 to 12, working illegally in Valley onion fields.

What followed came quickly, and for growers, with little warning. Six onion growers from Rio Grande City to Mercedes were hit with fines totaling $34,200, and many felt they had little choice but to pay up and move on.

The growers cited for violations were given an ultimatum by the government: Pay a fine or forfeit your crop under a seldom-used hot goods provision.

"They were the judge and jury right there," said Bob Peterson, the president of Starr Produce of Rio Grande City. "They (investigators) hit the gavel and that's it."

The government's sweep through Valley onion fields was part of 50 such operations across the nation this year as the Department of Labor targets farms that grow "salad bowl" commodities. The initiative has so far uncovered a handful of child labor violations in Arizona and New Mexico, but none with the scope of the Valley's recent violations, labor department officials said.

THE GOVERNMENT'S ACTIONS against the growers touched off a bitter reaction from area growers who deeply resent the child labor charges. The growers acknowledge that they cannot always know if parents take their children to the fields while working, but say they do nothing to encourage such practices.

"We do not have slaves in our fields," Peterson said. "It's not like we were out there with a whip and saying, 'You better work.' It's not a sweat shop situation. That's what they're trying to equate us to."

The government's sweep through the fields also throws into question the generations-old tradition of farm work where children toil alongside their parents in a way of life that instills discipline and reinforces the family unit. If the child labor laws are strictly enforced, critics say it could place farm-worker families in a quandry, raising income and child-care questions, and possibly a way of life. "It's in our culture, working together as a family, then migrating up north in the summers," said Perfecto Facundo, a safety coordinator for Starr Produce.

In the aftermath of the government's sweep, many Valley growers now say they will ban children from their fields — no matter the reason given by parents for having youngsters with them. Billy Pemelton, a Mid-Valley grower, is one of the farmers who felt the sting of the government sweep. Saying government investigators "wouldn't even give you a chance to prove you were innocent," Pemelton fought $9,600 in fines until a court-ordered judgment forced him to pay the penalties.

One reason Pemelton agreed to pay the fine was because of the need to continue with his harvest and not throw his entire crop into doubt. It is these kind of high economic stakes, growers say, that will now lead them to take no chances when it comes to child labor laws.

"If anyone shows up with a child in their care, we just send them home, period," Peterson said. "(I) have to. I can't afford this — fines or a loss of crop."

Department of Labor officials say they are merely enforcing existing laws, and contend last month's round of fines were grounded in clear violation of the Federal Labor Standards Act. "It wasn't just children playing and picking up an onion and then us saying 'I gotcha ya,'" said Tim Reardon, a deputy regional administrator for the Department of Labor. "It was much more than that."

Reardon said investigators observed and photographed children clipping onions, loading buckets, unloading buckets, carrying buckets — all the work that an adult performs.

"Should the law be one way for workers everywhere else and another way for agriculture in South Texas? I don't think that's fair," Reardon said. "It's probably best for the Department of Labor not to make its own moral judgments to say how dangerous and how young. It's best to apply the law uniformly."

State District Judge Fernando Mancias applies the law everyday at the Hidalgo County Courthouse. But he also grew up working the fields with his parents — lying about his age when he was was 10 and 11 years old so he could pick vegetables to help his family. Mancias knows the law, but also knows what it's like working between rows of crops and the economic necessity of doing so for families trying to make a living. When it comes to this issue of economic need versus labor laws, the judge says there's a need for the law to bend a bit.

"The problem with the child labor law is it's designed to protect kids, but they are impractical because a lot of the families cannot afford day care," Mancias said. "The biggest concern is safety.

"If it is a fairly safe workplace, they should be allowed to work," he said.

IT'S A HOT DAY IN THE MELON FIELDS. Workers, wearing cotton from head to toe, bob up and down, snapping large fruit from vines along the ground, then tossing them into a truck. One worker cuts open a honey dew and lifts it toward the sky, letting the juices flow onto his face as he takes the first bite. Then he passes it around to his fellow laborers.

Their children are at school. But when the next weekend rolls around, some workers said they will stay home with their children, while others said the youngsters would be left to fend for themselves.

These are the real-life situations that farm-working families find themselves facing in wake of the government's stepped-up enforcement of child labor laws. Informal day care between the rows of crops will no longer do as farmers impose stricter regulations on who they allow into their fields.

"They can't afford to pay a babysitter," said Juanita Gonzalez, a labor contractor for Pemelton Farms, of the families. "If they can't bring their children, then they won't work."

'We do not have slaves in our fields. It's not like we were out there with a whip and saying, "You better work." It's not a sweat shop situation. That's what they're trying to equate us to.'

— Bob Peterson, president of Starr Produce of Rio Grande City

It isn't illegal to allow children in the fields, but farmers say they cannot possibly monitor all children to ensure that they stay clear of what the government might consider to be work.

"When you start to get fined, it paints you in a corner to where you have no option other than to turn them (adult workers with children) away, and then you end up with a family out of a job, so it's really a two-edged sword," said Bill Weeks, president of the Mission-based Texas Produce Association.

Some workers said they would scramble to find friends or relatives to look after their children, and others said one parent would work while another would stay home. But these actions are sure to cut into family incomes because farm workers are generally paid by a piece rate. The more a worker and his family picks, the higher the income to be earned.

"It's a question of economics and survival," said Juanita Valdez-Cox, a coordinator of the United Farm Workers of America in San Juan. "In the end, it's forcing parents to take their children out there (fields) before or after school. "When the situation is so serious, they sometimes keep their children from school to help them speed up the (piece rate) earnings," Valdez-Cox said.

Federal labor laws generally prohibit the employment of children under the age of 12 in agriculture. For youths ages 11 to 15, various restrictions apply on when and what sort of agricultural work they can perform. Some growers say the labor regulations are so complicated for teens under 16, they don't allow them to work at all.

Other growers complained that the labor department was too literal in its enforcement of labor laws when conducting its recent sweep. The growers say no children were missing school and onion harvesting does not involve heavy machinery, making it relatively safe.

"One of the points that really upset the industry is the very narrow interpretation of what constitutes child labor," Weeks said. Whatever the case, there is little doubt among industry officials, growers and families that having children as part of a working unit in the fields is a decades-old tradition. It's a matter of economics, but some also see it as a matter of teaching discipline and important values.

"My biggest concern is (children) not knowing the value of work," said Facundo, a former migrant worker and the safety coordinator at Starr Produce. Families have long worked together to harvest not only onions, but cucumbers, peppers and citrus, among other crops.

ON A RECENT DAY, 39-year-old Francisco Rodriguez of Rio Grande City worked in the melon fields alongside his wife, father, two brothers and a sister-in-law. When Rodriguez was 10, he had no choice but to work in fields with his family in Mexico.

"I worked because my family expected it from me," Rodriguez said. "I would work to bring back money to the family."

Rodriguez has two young sons and believes children should be allowed to work by the time they are 10 years old so they can learn the hardships of farm labor at a tender age.

"I want them to learn to work so they can see that labor work is hard," he said. "It's a life without a future."

But Rodriguez's father, Manuel, said times have changed. His decision to let Francisco work in the fields as a youngster was right at the time, the elder Rodriguez said, but said he wouldn't allow it today. "It's different now," Manuel Rodriguez said. "There are pesticides and heavy machinery, it's not good to have children in the fields because it's dangerous."

It's a point that Reardon, the Department of Labor administrator, would likely agree with. Reardon said farm work can be dangerous, and because of the family nature of the business, special provisions allow for some children to work in agriculture. "(But) should 6, 7, 8 or 9-year-olds work in the fields? As a parent I would say no," he said. "As an enforcer, I would say no."

These are the sort of questions that workers like Guillermo Cantu have to face. Cantu's 11-year-old son was among the children caught by authorities in the fields.

Cantu claims his son was merely giving him a soft drink during a break from work when a government investigator came by. The rest of the time, Cantu said, his son hung out in his truck listening to music.

Now Cantu said he wouldn't consider bringing his child to work again even though he thinks it's better to have the youngster under his supervision.

"I felt better knowing he was on the truck than alone or on the streets," he said.

There are a range of options and possibilities that growers, families and the government could consider in light of the recent sweep through the fields. Farm worker Maria Ramirez said there should be a government-funded, affordable child care program for the children of farm workers.

"We need programs here to leave our children with," she said.

Labor advocates say that growers and government officials should work toward increasing pay so that laborers are not so dependent on their children to earn a living. The UFW's Valdez-Cox said that the piece rate pay should be increased for workers nationwide. She said the government should provide day-care services for field-working families at a low rate or for free.

"Wages are too low in the area," said Valdez-Cox, citing an average yearly income of between $5,000 and $6,500 for a migrant family of four in the Valley. "(The income) is so low that sometimes it takes even the youngest in the family to help support the family."

Department of Labor officials said the agency will work with farmers to find a day-care solution. "Just because it's none of our legal business doesn't mean it's not a real issue that needs to be addressed," Reardon said.

Growers said they cannot afford to start up licensed day care centers, and would welcome a dialogue with the government on the subject of child care for their workers. Most of all, the growers said they were disenchanted with what they call the heavy-handed approach used by labor department investigators.

"I don't know why the labor department can't come down and work with the grower instead of coming down like an uncle and saying, 'This is the way it is,'" Pemelton said.

Louisiana could face water shortage if habits don't change

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — The underground sponge that supplies water to more than 790,000 people in northern Louisiana is being wrung dry.

Faucets won't spit and sputter anytime soon because ample water remains in the Sparta Aquifer, the most important source of water in northern Louisiana and southern Arkansas.

But scientists say the formation's water level is falling at an average of 2 feet a year. The decline ranges from 1 to 4 feet a year depending on the location.

"I have heard about the water shortage. But what are you supposed to do, let all of this stuff die?" Delzie Courtney of Ruston said while watering her flower beds.

"I am trying to put out stuff that does not require a lot of water," she said. "But when it is first started, it takes a lot of water."

The problem is water being pumped out of the aquifer faster than water flowing into it. That's been the case since 1985.

Statistics show that industrial demand on the aquifer has steadily averaged about 31 million gallons a day since 1960.

Randall Farms, a chicken-processing plant in Arcadia, is one of the many businesses in the state that uses large amounts of water from the aquifer. The plant uses about 200,000 gallons of water a day, Vice-President Wayne Jones said. Some of the usage is regulated. Food safety regulations require a minimum amount of water for certain pieces of equipment.

But the company saves where it can, Jones said.

"We have water savers on everything from hoses to hand-wash stations," he said. "And in areas where we don't have to use water for cleanup, we use squeegees and those types of things."

The declining water supply, already adversely affecting southern Arkansas, could become a problem in north central Louisiana soon after the turn of the century, scientists said. The water level in the West Monroe area has fallen by about 270 feet since the 1920s.

Problems of the water supply and quality will begin to arise in Louisiana particularly if demand continues to increase as it has in the past 13 years, scientists said.

Officials believe the solution is educating users to conserve water. The aquifer's supply will equal demand if the usage is cut back to the level it was in 1985.

Back then, Louisianans were drawing water out of the aquifer at a rate of 56.5 million gallons a day. But usage increased by 26 percent from 1985 to 1995.

"We are right on track for a 50 percent increase by 2005," said Ben McGee, supervisory hydrologist for the U.S. Geological Survey field office in Ruston.

An aquifer is a layer of rocks and soils capable of absorbing and holding water like a sponge. The Sparta Aquifer is confined, meaning it is bounded on the top and bottom by layers of clay through which water will not flow or only flows slowly.

Water primarily enters a confined aquifer where the formation is at ground level. The western edge of the Sparta Aquifer is at the surface in parts of Bossier, Webster and Bienville parishes. This area, called the recharge zone, is where rain and runoff seep into the layer of porous sand and rock.

Water travels through an aquifer at a rate of only inches to yards a year. A drop of rain that falls in Webster Parish takes about 30 years to get to Lincoln Parish, according to the U.S. Geological Survey.

A 50 percent increase in usage, to 86.1 million gallons a day by 2005, will begin to drop the water level below the aquifer in southern Arkansas, causing it to compact and never hold that much water again.

Even before that happens, the quality of water will begin to decline. Suspended minerals and salts, including iron that is common in some areas of the Sparta Aquifer, become more concentrated when water levels fall.

That translates to increased costs for water treatment and for repairing machinery damaged by the solubles, such as corrosion due to increased salt content.

The availability of water is another matter.

A coalition of government officials, industry representatives and individuals from Louisiana and Arkansas is taking a two-prong approach to the problem. The groups seeking $800,000 to search for alternate supplies of water and getting people to educate the public about conserving it.

One thing people should not do is panic, said Louisiana Rep. Jay McCallum. "We are not going to do anything that is going to run people out of this area."

"And we are surely not going to run industry out of this area," McCallum said. "If we save the aquifer and lose employment, we will have accomplished nothing."

McCallum plans to ask the Legislature to study the problem. Beyond that, he said, there's not much state lawmakers can do until voters become concerned enough to push for a solution.

"Until we convince more people that there is a problem that needs to be addressed, nothing will get done," he said.

Beekeeper uses sunroom to house observation hive

JONESBORO, Ark. (AP) — At Mick Boland's house northeast of Jonesboro, tiny honeybees can be seen quickly darting to and from his patio window.

Near the bottom of the window, the bees travel through a small pipe into the plant-filled sunroom — all with Boland's consent and even blessing.

The bees are Boland's guests. They live in a four-foot-plus observation hive positioned in the sunroom.

In the glass observation hive, the bees busily build the walls of cells for the queen's eggs and their own honey. As the scout bees come back into the hive through the pipe, they wriggle and dance, telling the other bees where the best spots are to gather nectar. Night after night, the results of the day before can be seen by the creeping walls of the little cells that will soon be filled.

A beekeeper for eight years, Boland has always wanted to build an observation hive for those interested in bee-watching. "I had been wanting to do this since I was a little bitty kid," he says.

When he married, he discovered his new wife was allergic to bees and wasps, so he put off taking up the hobby. When she died several years ago and he remarried, Boland decided to do what had always been in the back of his mind: beekeeping.

A beekeeper in Osceola split his hive in half and gave the several hundred bees to Boland. He also showed Boland how to build an observation hive.

"I read and read and read books about them," he says.

While the experience has been pleasurable, Boland says he didn't expect it to be such hard work. "I found out working bees is work. It's hard work."

Because of the work involved, Boland decided to give up his outdoor hives and focus only on his observation hive four years ago. Retired from J.I. Case Farm Machinery, he wanted to travel more with his new wife.

Craighead County Extension Agent Steve Culp now manages Boland's outdoor hives, six in all.

Culp says beekeeping is a popular hobby as well as a prosperous business for many in northeast Arkansas. About 25 to 35 people in the Jonesboro area keep bees, he says. In addition, the region has the largest number of commercial beekeeping operations in the state, Culp says.

"According to the state Plant Board, 600 beekeepers are registered in Arkansas, with a total of 50,000 hives. Many of them are hobbyists, Culp says, and some have one or two hives for pollinating their vegetable gardens.

In other states, farmers use the bees to pollinate their crops, Culp adds.

"We don't have a lot of that in our area. But where they're out on soybeans and cotton, (the crops) do benefit," he says.

Research has shown that having beehives near a field can increase the crop's yield by 5 to 10 percent, Culp adds.

Boland's hive has brought many people, including schoolchildren, out to his house for a bee-watching experience.

Boland's wife, Kathy, is a teacher's aide at Lepanto; she has led a bus load of schoolchildren to see the hive. His stepdaughter, a counselor at Fox Meadow Elementary School in Jonesboro, also has brought students to see the bees.

Boland says, "Normally, a bee won't bother you unless you disturb them." He apparently has disturbed many bees over the years, and can't count the times he's been stung. But he does remember one particular sting — on his upper lip.

"It nearly knocked me down," he recalls, adding that it doesn't bother him to get stung on the arms or legs. "I'd rather them not sting me, but it doesn't bother me."

Amid ongoing troubles, supporters fight for TSU's autonomy

By Pauline Arrillaga
Associated Press

'It's not about taking the best and making them better. It's about taking the ones no one else wants and making them even better than the best.'

— community activist Ada Edwards

HOUSTON — When James Douglas graduated from high school in the early 1960s, he had his sights set on attending Texas Southern University. His teachers told him to set his sights higher.

Douglas, who had a flare for mathematics and science, was too good a student for the small, predominantly black university, his instructors told him.

Today, as both a graduate and the president of Texas Southern, Douglas recalls the story with fire in his eyes and a promise on his lips.

"I intend to make TSU the kind of university so that no teacher in his or her right mind will ever tell another student that story," he says, adding, "So this is not a job for me."

Whether it's a job or a personal mission, Douglas has his work cut out for him.

After years of troubles ranging from fiscal mismanagement and unstable leadership to public squabbles between regents and the community, Texas Southern is at a crossroads.

This summer, state auditors plan to visit the university to determine whether its leaders have made significant progress in solving the problems. If not, state lawmakers could force the school to become part of a larger university system.

Threats of a merger have been leveled before, but in the past they've seemed little more than a tongue-lashing by legislative budget writers. That changed last year when lawmakers in approving TSU's funding stipulated that the school shape up or lose its autonomy.

With the ultimatum looming, Douglas, his students, community leaders and local politicians have banded together to save the school's independence and its identity, two things they say go hand-in-hand.

"TSU should remain independent for the same reason we wouldn't suggest putting the University of Texas under the umbrella of A&M," says state Rep. Al Edwards, D-Houston.

TSU supporters also point to another reason: its mission as an open-enrollment school, which accepts black and other minority students who have been rejected by the state's larger institutions or simply can't afford them.

In the aftermath of the Hopwood anti-affirmative action decision, which forced public universities in Texas to stop considering race as a factor in admissions, TSU's role in the state is as important as ever, some say.

"We have a special mission to uphold to the urban community, so it's very important that we keep our autonomy," says LaShunda Ennett, a TSU senior and president of the Student Government Association.

"It's not about taking the best and making them better," adds community activist Ada Edwards. "It's about taking the ones no one else wants and making them even better than the best."

Texas Southern was established in 1947 in the heart of Houston's Third Ward. As one of just a handful of predominately black, open-enrollment universities in Texas, the school always has faced unique challenges.

But the more serious troubles started in the early 1990s, when state auditors began routinely identifying problems with inadequate fiscal management. Their primary concern dealt with the financial aid office.

Auditors found that, for years, school officials had been approving federal financial aid for students before all their required documentation was completed.

Douglas says the problem stemmed from a slew of last-minute applications. Because administrators did not want to turn students down, they approved the aid with the agreement that the paperwork would be turned in later. But it never was.

That practice caught up with TSU in March 1996, when the U.S. Department of Education changed how financial aid was disbursed to the school.

Instead of giving TSU the money upfront, the department ordered the university to pay out financial aid awards and then seek reimbursement.

TSU, which remains under reimbursement status, now owes the Department of Education about $15 million in liabilities and fines.

Because of the financial aid arrangement, school administrators began having troubles paying their bills on time because they were awaiting reimbursement from the government.

When state auditors learned of the problem in late 1996, they estimated TSU could incur more than $8 million in operating deficits during fiscal year 1997.

That prediction led to the Legislature's ultimatum.

Last year, lawmakers set aside $10 million in the state budget to bail out TSU should it run into debt. As a condition, they required TSU to improve its financial affairs by the 1999 legislative session or face merging with a university system.

State Sen. Steve Ogden, who before going to the Senate chaired a 1996 House interim committee that examined universities with financial problems, believes Texas Southern would be better off in a university system.

He says TSU's management problems stem from having a single board of regents governing just one school.

"Those single boards tend to get to be overpoliticized and try to micromanage the daily affairs at the university, and there's continued conflicts," says Ogden, R-Bryan.

Citing recent efforts by Houston's South Texas College of Law to affiliate with Texas A&M University, Ogden notes that most independent institutions perceive joining a system as advantageous.

"I understand the fear of change, but my overall view is the prestige of the school and the quality of education would probably improve if they were rolled into a larger system," he says.

State auditors, after visiting TSU this summer, will report their findings to the Legislative Audit Committee, which then will make a recommendation to the Legislature about the future of the school.

Douglas believes TSU has made enough progress to warrant it remaining independent. He notes the university finished the last fiscal year in the black, without having to delve into the state's bailout fund.

Additionally, the school has begun strictly adhering to federal financial aid guidelines so that students do not receive money until all their documentation is complete.

Administrators also just finished installing a computerized fiscal system and are looking for an outside accounting firm to assist the financial aid office in additional changes.

However, Douglas admits problems remain. Enrollment, once at nearly 11,000 students, fell to 6,687 this semester — the lowest level this decade.

The administrative leadership at the school also remains shaky. The director of the financial aid office resigned several weeks ago, as did two other key administrators.

Douglas, when named president in 1995, was the university's third president in three years. The board of regents granted Douglas a new two-year contract just weeks ago after students rallied in support of him.

Despite the ongoing challenges, Douglas says he has faith the university will remain independent and true to its mission.

"Moving the university is like turning a freighter. It's not something you can do overnight," he says. "But it's obviously something we have to get done. It'll eventually come around."

USC wins CWS

OMAHA, Neb. — After Southern California went two decades without a championship, Jason Lane needed only one unbelievable week to restore order for the nation's most decorated baseball program.

Lane's grand slam capped a five-run ninth inning as the Trojans won their first NCAA title in 20 years, beating Pac-10 rival Arizona State 21-14 Saturday in the College World Series.

McAfee 6th at NCAA

BUFFALO — Midland's John McAfee Jr., who is running for Baylor University took sixth in the 110 hurdles at the NCAA Track and Field Championships.

McAfee ran 13.79 seconds in the final which was sixth behind the winning time of Texas A&M's Larry Wade. McAfee earned NCAA All-American honors in the event.

On Friday, McAfee placed third in his semifinal heat of the 400 hurdles. However, that was good enough for 12th overall. The top eight went to the finals.

The NCAA Championships will be shown today at noon on CBS.

Indians run-rule way to city title

By Terry Williamson

■ Junior League

The Eastern Division Indians literally run-ruled their way to the Junior League City Championship baseball title Saturday, finishing off the tournament sweep with a 13-1 win over the Blue Jays Saturday afternoon at Hogan Park.

Not only did the Indians win the title in undefeated fashion, but they did it without having to go more than five innings in any tournament game because of the 10-run rule which ends a game after five innings of play when one team leads another by 10 runs.

The Indians defeated the Blue Jays 16-1 in a winners' bracket game Friday night to get to the finals. This may sound a little strange since the Blue Jays won the regular season Eastern title.

So, was this a surprise? Not according to Indians' coach Charles Frisbie.

"We lost only two games on the field all season," Fris-

Angels fall in 10th inning, settle for split with Diablos

■ Angels lose 6-5 and see San Antonio's magic number reduced to one with six games left.

The El Paso Diablos literally sucked the life out the Midland Angels Saturday night at Christensen Stadium.

El Paso came back from a 4-2 deficit in the eighth inning to beat the Angels 6-5 in 10 innings, and not only handed the Halos a loss to close out their 12-game homestand but also knocked them six back of the San Antonio Missions in the Texas League West Division standings.

Not that Midland had much of a chance of catching the Missions with six games to go in the first half of play, but Saturday's loss compounded with the Missions' 5-3 win over the Wichita Wranglers reaffirmed the fact that the team from the Alamo City is going to

AP Racing Writer

NEW YORK — The Fish was headed for the Triple Crown — and then he got caught.

Real Quiet was nosed out of the Belmont Stakes on Saturday by a startling stretch run from Victory Gallop, who won a bumpy duel and nailed him in the final stride.

"The Fish was floundering at the end," said trainer Bob Baffert, referring to Real Quiet by his nickname. "He was tired. He was done. He was beat. He ran his heart out."

Real Quiet swung into the stretch and led by as many as six lengths, with the crowd screaming, sensing history in the making. But Victory Gallop cut it to four with an eighth of a mile to go, and the horses were nearly side by side when they bumped about 70 yards from the end.

Even if Real Quiet finished first, the stewards said they were prepared to disqualify the Kentucky Derby and Preakness winner for drifting into his rival in the deep stretch.

Victory Gallop, who finished second to Real Quiet in the first two Triple Crown races, finally found a way to win. And he did it by wearing him down in the 1 1-2-mile Belmont, the longest race in the series.

"I think it's fair we turned the tables," winning trainer Elliott Walden said.

Real Quiet, the 4-5 favorite in the field of 11 3-year-olds, took the lead from Chilito three-eighths of a mile from home, and the crowd of 80,162 — the second-largest in Belmont history — roared its approval.

It appeared Real Quiet was about to become racing's 12th Triple Crown winner and the first since Affirmed in 1978. He also was on the verge of avenging his stablemate, Silver Charm, who last year finished second in the Belmont by three-quarters of a length.

And just when it seemed Real Quiet had passed the "Test of Champions," Victory Gallop put his nose ahead at the wire. It took a photo finish to separate the two.

"I might have moved prematurely," said Real Quiet's jockey Kent Desormeaux, who went for the lead with six furlongs to go and then gunned his colt as he headed for home. "It hurts a lot to have come so far and not get there. I felt it for a moment."

It was the closest of the 14 failed Triple Crown bids. The previous smallest margin was the half-length by which Pensive lost to Bounding Basque when he tried for the Triple Crown in 1944.

It also was the third nose margin in the Belmont Stakes since 1905.

Gary Stevens, who rode Victory Gallop, knew exactly how Desormeaux felt — he was aboard Silver Charm last year.

"My heart goes out to the connections of Real Quiet," Stevens said. "They did a great job the last three weeks. I know what it's like to come up short like that."

Victory Gallop, who had to race wide all the way in the Derby, just missed catching Real Quiet by a half-length at

Spaniard tops crowd-favorite Seles in Paris

PARIS — The winner apologized. The crowd chanted the loser's name.

"Mon-ee-ka! Mon-ee-ka! Mon-ee-ka!"

Monica Seles sat solemnly on center court, her inspiring run through the French Open over.

Arantxa Sanchez Vicario won her third title at Roland Garros on Saturday, defeating Seles 7-6 (7-5), 0-6, 6-2 in a soggy final that was delayed 31 minutes at the start by rain.

"I'm so sorry that I beat you. I don't think you are the one who deserved to lose," Sanchez Vicario told Seles as she accepted the silver championship trophy. "I have a lot of respect for you, especially with all that happened."

■ French Open

Seles, whose father died three weeks ago and whose ring she wore around her neck, stared straight ahead as the rain began falling again. Then she gathered herself, and thanked the fans.

"It's been so special coming back this year," she said.

Sanchez Vicario's victory assured a Spanish sweep of the singles titles. Spanish compatriots and close friends Carlos Moya and Alex Corretja play in the men's final Sunday.

It will be the second all-Spanish men's final in five years at the French Open. Sergi Bruguera defeated Alberto Berasategui for the 1994 title.

Seles has played in only five tournaments this year while shuttling between the tennis circuit and her family's home in Sarasota, Fla. She was at her dad's side when he died May 14 after a five-year battle with cancer.

COM swim team leads West Texas Invitational

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

The beginning of summer is always a time of challenges for the City of Midland swim team, but this season COM has begun by looking at obstacles it wasn't counting on.

In terms of performance, COM didn't appear to be suffering too badly after the second day of the 51st West Texas Invitational Saturday at the Doug Russell Pool. With 1,828 points, COM is assured of being the top team in the meet, but that's a title with a mixed blessing.

Only four other teams are in the field of the meet due to unplanned circumstances which were beyond the control of COM, and for that matter, anybody else.

"It was kind of a funny year," said COM coach Brad Swendig of how the WT Invitational got moved up more than a month from its usual scheduled time. "The West Texas Championships were supposed to be in Lubbock in July, but they didn't finish the pool so we had to host it. When we moved this meet up it kind of killed a lot of teams from participating."

Whoever was expected to be in town for the meet had to be prepared for last week's heatwave which baked the Permian Basin and threatened to turn any swimming pool into a cauldron which scalded all competitors. But the unpredictable West Texas

Utah Jazz's Karl Malone, left, and Chicago Bulls' Dennis Rodman fight for a rebound in the second half of Game 2 of the NBA Finals in Salt Lake City, Friday. The Bulls defeated the Jazz 93-88, tying the best-of-seven series 1-1. The series resumes today in Chicago.

Chicago comes home tied 1-1, just like Bulls wanted

By Nancy Armour
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO — The Chicago Bulls were washed-up, over-the-hill, self-destructing champs who'd better get used to the idea of someone else holding that gleaming, gold trophy. But that was two days ago.

Now, with the NBA Finals tied 1-1, the giddiness of Chicago's previous championship runs is back. Get Grant Park ready, there's even some talk about a Chicago sweep of the Utah Jazz in its three games at home.

Game 3 is Sunday at the United Center.

"A lot of people have said things about our physical tiredness or whatever, but our mental toughness is there," Michael Jordan said after scoring 37 points in Chicago's 93-88 victory Friday. "We are mentally strong to be where we are, and certainly mentally strong to defend what we have.

"Physically, we may not. They may be a much more physical, gifted team, but mentally, that counts for something. And I don't think that should ever be overlooked."

If that sounds like a warning, it is. After the Bulls lost Game 1 at the Delta Center, people were questioning if Chicago's time had passed. Jordan was looking, well, human, missing shots and bickering with sidekick Scottie Pippen.

After a physically draining series with Indiana, maybe the aging Bulls just didn't anything left to compete with the well-rested Jazz. Maybe Dennis Rodman's shenanigans were finally taking a toll. Maybe Jerry Reinsdorf and Jerry Krause had the right idea in breaking up the team.

Jordan and his teammates heard all this, and just smiled. Let everyone else plan Utah's victory party and Chicago's funeral. The Bulls knew what was really going on.

So they lost a game. Big deal. In case anyone's forgotten, they also lost Game 1 to the Lakers in 1991, and still went on to win their first title.

"We didn't think at all that we were going to come here and lose both games," Pippen said afterward. "We went into this game very positive, knowing that we had some adjustments to make from Game 1, and we felt very good about our chances coming to the game tonight."

They feel even better about their chances going into Game 3. The Bulls have dropped just one game at home in the playoffs — Game 2 of the Eastern Conference semifinals to the Charlotte Hornets — and their winning percentage at home in the playoffs (77 percent) is the best of any existing team.

Not to mention that Utah is struggling. Jeff Hornacek is ailing, though he did come through with 20 points Friday. Karl Malone has averaged 27 points a game in the playoffs in his career, but he was a nonfactor in Games 1 and 2. He was a miserable 5-for-16 from the field Friday — 0-for-4 in the second half — finishing with 16 points.

Even Rodman, who has more hair colors than offense, had more baskets than Malone in the second half Friday. And if that's not bad enough, Rodman's one field goal was a jumper over Malone.

"We will not win this series if I don't play better," Malone said. "That's just the way it is. We have other guys that step up, but if I don't play well — if Karl Malone doesn't play well, we don't win this series."

It's not just Malone that coach Jerry Sloan is worried about, it's his whole team. The Jazz looked in Game 2 like the awe-struck team it was last year, not a squad that's already been through a Finals with the Bulls.

Chicago drove to the basket whenever it wanted, and its defense was smooth, crisp and totally disruptive. The Jazz couldn't get anything going, not even its trademark pick-and-roll. The Bulls outrebounded the Jazz 18-9 on the offensive glass, and turned those second chances into 19 points.

"We never destroyed their rhythm, except for a couple of times, and we have to do that to compete against them," Sloan said. "I told the guys, I don't mind losing. I don't like to, but I hate to see guys not compete. We came out very soft, and they were the aggressors."

But before anyone starts burying the Jazz, just remember what was being said about the Bulls a few days ago.

"Any disregard for either team in a situation like this, it's going to be very difficult to stand by," Chicago coach Phil Jackson said. "I can see it in the making, it's going to be one of those playoffs that are going to be very difficult. ... This is going to be some series."

Arkansas, Texas win track titles

By Bert Rosenthal
AP Track Writer

BUFFALO, N.Y. — It's Arkansas again — and Texas for the first time since 1986.

The Razorbacks, getting a gutsy 1,500-meter victory from Seneca Lassiter, a second consecutive long jump-triple jump double from Robert Howard and a clutch performance by 5,000-meter runner Mike Power, won their seventh straight title in the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships Saturday night.

Texas, which finished one point behind 11-time champion LSU last year, clinched its first title in 12 years by winning the final 1,600-meter relay in 3 minutes, 28.65 seconds, the fastest by a college team this season.

The 10 points for the victory gave Texas 60, five ahead of runner-up UCLA. The Bruins did not have a team in the relay.

Arkansas finished with 58 1/2 points to extend its domination among the men, while Stanford, seeking its first title since 1934, was second with 51.

Texas' women faced an even bigger deficit going into Saturday's events, trailing UCLA 40-10. But the Longhorns began rolling up points rapidly.

First Angie Vaughn, the indoor hurdles champion, took the 100 hurdles in a wind-aided 12.82. Then Suziann Reid, the 1996 400 outdoor champion, regained the title, clocking 51.22, and teammate Toya Brown was fifth.

Reid also had won the indoor title and finished second in last year's outdoor championships.

LaKeisha Backus followed with a sixth in the 100 and seventh in the 200, and Erin Aldrich, the indoor high jump champion, took the outdoor title at 6-4, beating SMU's Kajsa Bergqvist on fewer misses.

Texas finished off a 50-point day by winning the relay with a team of Angel Patterson, Brown, Animah Haddad and Reid.

Heavyweight champ plays waiting game

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Evander Holyfield just can't seem to keep his career plans on track.

Just when the heavyweight champion was about to dispose of Henry Akinwande and move on to the real business of fighting the likes of Lennox Lewis or even Mike Tyson, Holyfield finds himself all trained but with nowhere to go.

With Akinwande out with hepatitis B, Holyfield must now wait while he and his advisers put together another title defense, perhaps against lightly regarded Vaughn Bean, the IBF's No. 1 contender.

But, with the clock ticking on his boxing career, Holyfield will waste valuable months while a new fight is made, promoted and finally held.

Holyfield hadn't wanted to fight Akinwande in the first place. But the challenger was the WBA's No. 1-ranked contender, and Holyfield took the fight to avoid the risk of being stripped of the belt he won from Tyson.

He doesn't much want to fight Bean either, but that may be his next option as negotiations with WBC champion Lewis for a title unification fight have gone nowhere.

Before Akinwande was forced out of the fight Friday after the positive test to hepatitis B came out, Thomas had talked of Holyfield fighting Bean in November, possibly in his hometown of Atlanta, with a Lewis title unification fight in the spring.

"Nothing can derail the plan (to unify the title before retiring)," the 35-year-old Holyfield said. "It can only prolong it."

There still remains the slight possibility — and experts say it is very remote — that a second set of tests done on Akinwande on Friday will prove the first tests wrong.

Funk leads Kemper Open by one

Associated Press

POTOMAC, Md. — If Fred Funk glances in his rearview mirror with those new eyes he'll see Stuart Appleby bearing down on him at the Kemper Open.

Coasting along with a lead as large as five strokes, Funk barely held on down the stretch at TPC at Avenel and shot a 71 to be at 12-under-par 201 after three rounds, just one stroke ahead of Appleby.

A lead that once was as large as five strokes was down to the barest of margins going into the final round.

"I had a chance to separate myself a little bit there when I got to 14 under," said Funk, who made two bogeys over the final five holes. "Now it's going to be a shootout."

Funk's even-par round after being two under for the day through 11 holes also let a lot of other people back into the tournament.

Chris DiMarco made a bogey on the last hole at was at 203.

Tommy Tolles, the sweet swinger whose game has suddenly gone sour this year, was three strokes back at 204. Clark Dennis made bogeys on two of the last three holes and was at 205, along with Scott Hoch and Brad Fabel.

Starting the day with a three-stroke lead over Craig Parry, Appleby and DiMarco, Funk was just trying to make pars, avoid mistakes and challenge the field to come after him on a day when a fickle wind made the course play with much more difficulty.

The strategy worked for most of the day. Funk held his ground — making birdies on Nos. 3 and 11 — and no one made a major move, except for Tolles, who shot a 66, and Hoch, who had a 68.

Dunakey follows 59 with 67 in Miami Valley Open

SPRINGBORO, Ohio — Doug Dunakey, coming off a record-tying round of 11-under-par 59, shot a 67 on to take a two-stroke lead after the third round of the Nike Tour's Miami Valley Open.

Dunakey, 34, of Port Charlotte, Fla., joined Al Geiberger and Chip Beck, who shot 59s on the PGA Tour, and Notah Begay III, who did it May 15 in a Nike event in Richmond, Va. Geiberger accomplished the feat in the 1977 Memphis Classic, and Beck did it in the 1991 Las Vegas Invitational.

Dunakey, who began play Thursday with a 69, had a 15-under 195 total on the 6,691-yard Heatherwoode Golf Club. Craig Bowden was second after a 68, and Greg Lesher, Ryan Howison and Patrick Lee were three back at 198. Lesher shot a 62 on Saturday.

Morgan in familiar spot, leading on the Senior Tour

ALPAHRETTA, Ga. — Gil Morgan, locked in a season-long battle with Hale Irwin for dominance of the Senior PGA Tour, shot a 3-under-par 69 to share the lead with Bob Eastwood after the second round of the Nationwide Championship.

Morgan, who has three victories, three other Top 10 finishes and $853,818 in earnings this year, moved to the top of the leaderboard by blasting out of a sand trap at No. 18 within two feet of the hole. He tapped in for a birdie that left him with an 8-under 136 after two rounds.

Eastwood breezed through the first 13 holes on a cloudy, breezy day at five under before hitting a shot into Lake Windward at No. 14, resulting in a double-bogey. He bounced back to birdie the final hole, finishing with a 4-under 68 for the round and tied with Morgan.

Sixty-two-year-old Gary Player, seeking to become the second-oldest player to win on the seniors tour, struggled with his putter but was still in contention at 139, three shots off the pace.

Andrews take second-round lead

ST. LOUIS — Donna Andrews is threatening to rain on Annika Sorenstam's parade.

Andrews, who began the day at even par, shot a 6-under par 66 to take a two-stroke lead over Sorenstam, the first-round leader and defending champion in the rain-shortened LPGA Michelob Light Classic.

After an opening 67, Sorenstam said the 6,337-yard Forest Hills Country Club is like her home course. She is looking to win the event for the third time in four years and she entered the second round with a one-shot lead, but finished with a 73.

Rangers, Astros pull off interleague sweep

■ Both Texas teams pull top pitching performances to win Saturday.

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — John Burkett pitched eight shutout innings and Luis Alicea had a two-run double as the Texas Rangers beat the San Diego Padres 3-0 on Saturday night.

Burkett (4-5) allowed five hits, struck out four and walked one to win for the first time since May 10. The right-hander worked out of a bases-loaded two-out jam in the seventh, striking out Quilvio Veras to end the Padres' best scoring chance of the game.

John Wetteland pitched the ninth for his 16th save as the Rangers won for the fourth time in five games.

The Padres lost for the fourth time in five games despite a strong outing from Sterling Hitchcock (3-1). The left-hander allowed nine hits in 7 2-3 innings. He struck out eight and walked one in his first loss since Sept. 27.

Texas took a 2-0 lead in the fifth. Mike Simms and Domingo Cedeno opened with singles, and advanced on Fernando Tatis' sacrifice bunt. After Roberto Kelly popped out, Alicea had a two-run double just inside the third-base bag.

Cedeno added his first homer of the season, a solo shot in the seventh, to make it 3-0. Cedeno hadn't homered since Sept. 14.

Astros 6, Expos 0

HOUSTON — Jose Lima pitched a five-hitter for his first career shutout and Craig Biggio hit a two-run homer, leading the Houston Astros to a 6-0 win over the Kansas City Royals.

Lima (7-2) walked one, struck out seven and got his first career complete game in his 134th start. The right-hander, who had never gone beyond 7 1-3 innings, didn't allow a runner to reach third until the fifth inning when Jermaine Dye reached on an infield hit and went to third on Lima's wild pickoff off throw to first.

But Lima struck out Sal Fasano and got Luis Rivera on a groundout to end the threat. Jeff King hit a leadoff double in the seventh before Lima struck out the next two and retired pinch-hitter Larry Sutton on a groundout.

Jose Rosado (1-5) was charged with six runs — five earned — and five hits in 5 1-3 innings. His only victory this season came in his last start, a complete-game win over Anaheim on May 27.

Rosado walked Lima with one out in the third and Biggio followed by hitting his eighth homer.

Biggio's two-out RBI single in the fifth made it 3-0, and Carl Everett highlighted a three-run Houston sixth with a two-run single.

Baffert leaves Belmont as yesterday's news

By Jim Litke
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — The horses hit the wire and five minutes later, Bob Baffert was already yesterday's news.

For the better part of a week, he and his thoroughbred were the toast of New York. By late Saturday afternoon, he was just toast. Baffert got beat by a nose in the Belmont — the toughest race of the Triple Crown, in the toughest town in America, and nothing described the reaction he received walking through the packed grandstand better than the name of his beaten thoroughbred. It was, in both cases, real quiet.

A few people called after him, the losers less than sympathetic. A few more stopped him once or twice along the rail for an autograph. But like Baffert, most of the 80,162 who turned out sat in stunned silence, stuck on what could have been.

For the second year in a row for Baffert, it was what could have been. He lost last year when Silver Charm came up four strides short. Put them together, he lost two Triple Crowns by less than a length.

"I could just see the headlines, 'Fish Does It'," Baffert said. "Then it was snatched away."

Talk about cruel. The very gag that got Baffert some of his best laughs of the week backfired on race day. The credit-card company Visa was offering a $5 million bonus to a single winner of the Triple Crown races, so Baffert taught his 4-year-old daughter Savannah to work with him as a straight man.

He would say, "How much is daddy going to win?" And she would giggle and then reply, "Five million dollars."

This is the official photo finish of 130th running of the Belmont Stakes at Belmont Park on Saturday. Winner Victory Gallop is in the foreground. Second place finisher Real Quiet is in the background.

On Saturday, he held her in his arms through the two and half minutes the race was run, then through the nearly six minutes the track stewards needed to sort out the photo finish and an inquiry and declare Victory Gallop the winner. Behind Baffert, two of his three sons fought back tears. Finally, he turned to Savannah and asked, "How much did daddy lose?"

She looked at him sadly, and on cue replied one more time, "Five million dollars."

Maybe the best thing about the race is that Baffert could afford to lose. And laugh about it afterward.

"Lose sleep over this? Hell, no. We'll just go back to Dubai," he said, brightening, and then his voice trailed off.

No doubt he was making plans already. For all the winning Baffert has done in recent years, he has known disappointment just as intimately. That's what makes him the best trainer in the game today.

Baffert came to thoroughbreds from the quarterhorse circuit, where the mounts are cheap and the races are plentiful and mercifully short. And so he learned all about bouncing back, about bouncing from elation to misery and back again in the span of a single race card, learned it well enough to survive in a very tough business, learned it better than plenty of the deep-pocketed guys he runs against these days. But first he had to prove it.

Two years ago, Baffert had a horse named Cavonnier lose the Kentucky Derby by a nose. It was his first big loss in the big-time and for a while he wondered whether he belonged. Along came Silver Charm to soften the blow. He delivered Baffert's first Derby win last May and set up his first Triple Crown bid last summer. That ended in a three-quarter-length loss in the Belmont. This time, Baffert had no problem getting back on the recovery trail.

He took some of the sting out of losing by taking Silver Charm to the $4 million Dubai World Cup in March and taking home the $2.4 million winner's share. He was barely done celebrating when Real Quiet came along, and in succession, made him a repeat Derby winner and a Triple Crown contender for the second time.

But ultimately, that was all Real Quiet made Baffert — a contender. Again.

"At least we're getting closer," he quipped. "Three-quarters of a length, then a nose."

With that, the funniest man in racing looked back over his shoulder in the direction of the track, where a few fans leaned over the rails with programs extended, looking for an autograph.

Baffert was disappointed and he was weary and he could have been forgiven for simply walking on. For the second year in a row, he spent the five weeks beginning with the first Saturday in May until the Belmont tirelessly promoting his sport. And both times, came up empty-handed.

But not beaten down.

And so, he turned on his heels, whispered, "Ali got knocked out, too, didn't he?" under his breath, and headed to greet what remained of his public.

HORSE: Victory Gallop wins

(From 1C)

Churchill Downs. He was beaten by 2 1/4 lengths in the Preakness.

"I don't feel I'm the spoiler," Stevens said. "I had one interest and that was to win the Belmont. I had no interest in the Triple Crown."

Victory Gallop's winning time was a so-so 2:29 and he paid $11, $3.60 and $3.20. Real Quiet returned $3 and $2.60 and Thomas Jo was $5.30 to show.

Victory Gallop earned $600,000 from a $1 million purse. Real Quiet, owned by Mike Pegram, settled for $200,000, but was denied a $5 million bonus offered by Visa for any horse winning the Triple Crown Challenge.

While Real Quiet was fifth and in contention down the backstretch, Victory Gallop was 10th. On the turn, Real Quiet took the lead from Chilito, and the crowd went crazy. At this point, Victory Gallop was just another Belmont starter.

Down the stretch came Real Quiet, and the crowd noise reached a crescendo. But there were gasps as the leader became rubber-legged, needing 52 seconds to run the last half mile. Victory Gallop came on and on — and won.

"I knew I had a lot of horse throughout the race," Stevens said. "But I didn't know I had it until we hit the finish line."

In a statement after the race, the three New York Racing Association stewards said they would have disqualified Real Quiet for interference even though no Triple Crown race winner had ever been taken down due to a foul.

"Even if he had won, we would have taken him down," NYRA steward Dave Hicks said.

While his horse ran to victory, the 35-year-old Walden hobbled to the winner's circle on crutches, having broken his right ankle in a 3-on-3 basketball game 10 days ago.

"Right after the Derby, we felt the race we had the best chance in was the Belmont," he said.

"This horse is suited to 1 1/2 miles," said Walden, who trains Victory Gallop for brothers Art, Jack and J.R. Preston of Houston. "He's very tenacious. As Gary says, he finds room. He's really blossomed the last week. As the week went on, I got more confident."

Completing the order of finish were Parade Ground, who was fourth, Raffie's Majesty, Chilito, Grand Slam, Classic Cat, Limit Out, Yarrow Brae and Basic Trainee. Hanuman Highway and Hot Wells were scratched.

Chris McCarron, who rode Thomas Jo and was aboard Alysheba when that horse finished fourth in the Belmont in a bid for the Triple Crown in 1987, had some advice for Desormeaux.

"Chris told me you're going to feel horrible the next week," Desormeaux said, "but don't worry about it. It's absolutely just another horse race."

Baffert also tried to console Desormeaux.

"It's not your fault," he told the jockey. "Your ride was good. You ran out of horse; that was my fault."

All Desormeaux knew was it wasn't just another horse race and that he had gotten beat in a bid for the Triple Crown.

"You come so far and get so close," he said, "and then it's all gone."

Graham ninth at Midland Open

Midland's Eddie Graham stands in ninth place after the first day of the Midland Professional Bowlers Association Open tournament.

Graham, who is looking for his second regional title, finished Saturday's qualifying with a total of 2,165. He will be one of the 15 bowlers chasing Mitchell Beasley, who leads after Day 1 with 2,333 points.

The pin totals from qualifying carries over to the match-play finals, and bowlers will be given 30 extra points to add to their respective scores with each win on Sunday. After the 15th game, the bowlers will then be arranged, according to seeds for the 16th game, which is scheduled for 4 p.m.

Other notables who qualified for today's finals include Amarillo's Mike and Mark Scroggins. Mike stands in second just 11 strokes back.

Also, Dallas' Chris Warren and Henry Gonzalez qualified for today's final. Warren has won 13 regional titles and six national titles. Gonzalez has 23 regional titles and two national titles.

Results from Saturday's qualifying at the Midland PBA Open. The top 16 advanced to today's final.

White Sox win Senior title

The Eastern White Sox won the Senior League City Championship baseball crown Saturday afternoon at Hogan Park with a 21-12 victory over the Western Rebels.

The White Sox, coached by Lee House and Steve Forbes, finished the tournament undefeated, winning all four games they played.

Brian House was 3-for-3 with two doubles while Jordan Wilson, who was also the winning pitcher, was 3-for-5. The White Sox had plenty of offense as Aaron Robinson was 2-for-4 while Drew Neagle was 2-for-5, including a triple.

Rebel Select makes semis

SAN ANGELO — The Midland Rebel Select under-18 baseball team reached the semifinals of the San Angelo Blacksox Summer Classic today by winning two out of three games.

Rebel Select opened the tournament Friday by beating the San Angelo Blue Sox 27-6 before losing to the Abilene Bandits 6-3 later in the day. The Midland team then defeated the San Angelo Rebels 21-0 Saturday.

Joe Frazier led the attack in the first game with three hits and Eric Winston had two hits. Jon Rogers hit a grand slam in the fourth inning which helped invoke the run rule after five innings. Joe Lilley was the winning pitcher.

In the loss to the Abilene Bandits, Marc Matthews hit a two-run homer.

Saturday, Eric Clodfelter pitched a one-hitter against the San Angelo Rebels in another run-rule win. Matt Winston was 3-for-3 with a homer and four RBIs while Eric Neatherlin had five RBIs. Frazier, Matthews and Lilley each had two hits in the game while Clodfelter had a pair of doubles.

Rebel Select will play the Abilene A's in the semifinals today at 9:30 a.m.

Southern California's Morgan Ensberg (14) comes to his feet after stealing home under the tag of Arizona State catcher Greg Halvorson as home plate umpire Dick Runchey makes the call in the seventh inning of the championship game of the College World Series, Saturday in Omaha, Neb. Southern Cal won the CWS final 21-14 and claimed its 12th national title.

USC beats Arizona State, 21-14, wins NCAA-best 12th CWS title

By Tim Korte
Associated Press Writer

OMAHA, Neb. — After Southern California went two decades without a championship, Jason Lane needed only one unbelievable week to restore order for the nation's most decorated baseball program.

Lane's grand slam capped a five-run ninth inning as the Trojans won their first NCAA title in 20 years, beating Pac-10 rival Arizona State 21-14 Saturday in the College World Series.

Wes Rachels went 5-for-7 with a championship game-record seven RBIs as the Trojans (49-17) won their NCAA-best 12th baseball title by outlasting the Sun Devils (41-23) in a 39-hit shootout.

"It couldn't be more special," said a tearful USC coach Mike Gillespie. "I can't express how thankful we are to the guys. They did a tremendous job. I'm sort of speechless."

Lane (9-2) led the CWS with a .517 batting average in six games and had a win and a save. His 15 hits set a series record and he also had four homers to tie teammate Brad Ticehurst for most this series.

When USC beat LSU 7-3 to eliminate the two-time defending champions on Friday, Lane homered twice, then took the mound in the eighth to stop a two-out rally. The victory put the Trojans in the title game.

On Saturday, he replaced starter Rik Currier in the second and pitched 2 1-3 innings to become the pitcher of record for the Trojans, while going 3-for-6 with a single and double.

When his grand slam cleared the fence in right-center, Lane pumped his fists as he circled the bases. In a game of offensive surges on both sides, he had finally put USC over the top.

"I had a pretty good idea that it might get it done," Lane said. "We've played each other a few times and we knew what we needed to get offensively."

The teams combined to set 35 CWS records and tied another 17 in a game that epitomized college baseball: Hits flying off aluminum bats and no lead ever being safe.

"It's definitely a sign of the times," Arizona State coach Pat Murphy said. "You're at a point of the season where everybody is swinging it so good. You hit a routine fly ball and it goes out of the ballpark."

Even an early 8-0 lead didn't stand up for USC. The Sun Devils rallied behind a second-inning grand slam by Michael Collins, and pulled to 9-8 on a two-run homer by Jeff Phelps in the fourth.

"An eight-run lead wasn't enough," said Rachels, named most outstanding player of the CWS. "A six-run lead wasn't enough. A three-run lead wasn't enough. Emotions were high all day long."

Southern California got a momentum boost in the seventh when Morgan Ensberg stole home with the bases loaded and two outs. He faked the steal on three pitches. Gillespie said the play was planned.

"We've actually done it before," he said. "Despite the fact that it obviously makes no sense, it's been remarkably successful for us."

That made it 12-8, and Rachels followed with a single to left field, driving in two more runs.

The Sun Devils answered in the bottom of the seventh with a lob single to left field by Rudy Arguelles that scored Casey Myers and Greg Halvorson. Andrew Beinbrink then hit a two-out, two-run homer into the right field light tower to make it 14-13.

Still, the outcome was uncertain until the Trojans came to bat in the top of the ninth with a 16-14 lead.

Robb Gorr, who earlier had homered twice, reached on a fielder's choice and took second on a single by Eric Munson. Ensberg doubled, driving in Gorr to extend the lead.

Ticehurst walked and Lane followed with the home run off Sun Devils reliever Chuck Crompton that just cleared the wall.

Trojans reliever Jack Krawcyzk got the final five outs, setting NCAA records with his 23rd save of the season and 49th of his career.

Boat wins True Value 500K

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

FORT WORTH — This time, Billy Boat got the checkered flag and the victory. Really.

Boat, handed the winner's trophy in last year's True Value 500K only to be bumped to second following an all-night review, won his first career Indy Racing League event Saturday night in the circuit's return to the Texas Motor Speedway.

It wasn't easy. Greg Ray, a native of nearby Plano whose car was sponsored by the speedway in the Indianapolis 500, overtook Boat on the 201st lap. But Boat regained the lead for good on the 202nd of the 208 laps.

Boat, who started second, won by .928 seconds. He led 108 laps and averaged 145.388 mph. His fastest lap was 226.415 mph, the fastest in the IRL's two-year history and tops at the year-old track.

Pole-sitter Tony Stewart, who dominated the field in practice, led 57 laps and was second when his car spewed smoke entering the 176th lap. Stewart was leading last year's event before his engine blew up in the final laps.

The victory was sweet redemption for Boat and Foyt, who kept the trophy he received last year and still insists he deserves it, even though Arie Luyendyk was declared the winner. Foyt and Luyendyk scuffled in victory lane last year when the Dutchman charged in to announce that he'd won.

The race — which featured fast laps and side-by-side challenges — also redeemed the speedway, which spent $3 million to rebuild its 1 1/2-mile track following a heavily criticized, problem-filled NASCAR weekend in April.

Moore takes Detriot's CART Pole

DETROIT — Things got back to normal Saturday at the ITT Automotive Detroit Grand Prix, with defending race winner Greg Moore and series points leader Alex Zanardi battling for the pole position.

Rain on Friday messed up the opening round of time trials, with the drivers who are normally slower getting a break when the Belle Isle Raceway track dried during their 30-minute qualifying session.

That left Max Papis on the provisional pole with a lap of 108.291 mph.

Saturday, everybody got a dry track on a sunny, cool afternoon. Moore quickly showed his strength, turning a lap of 114.859 to earn his third CART FedEx Championship Series pole — all this season.

Labonte prevails in wild finish

By Hank Kurz Jr.
AP Sports Writer

RICHMOND, Va. — A wild finish to a relatively clean, tame race gave Terry Labonte his first victory of the season, knocked Jeff Gordon out of the points lead and left many of the contenders wondering what had happened.

Rusty Wallace spun out Gordon while racing him for the lead with 28 laps remaining Saturday night and Labonte nudged and then overtook Dale Jarrett with two laps to go to win a Pontiac Excitement 400 whose ending lived up to its name.

Of the seven cautions, five came in the final 56 laps, including one as Labonte took the lead, allowing him to coast home the winner.

"It was different, that's for sure," Labonte said.

Jarrett finished second, followed by defending champion Wallace, Ken Schrader, Mark Martin and new series points leader Jeremy Mayfield.

The race was shaping up as a duel between Wallace and Gordon, arguably the series' best short-track racers. But it turned into a crash-fest when Wallace helped Gordon into the wall in turn 2, ending the defending series champion's night, as well as his latest turn atop the point standings.

And Labonte, too, bumped Jarrett while fighting him for the lead in the third turn of the 398th lap, allowing Labonte's Chevrolet to take the lead and leaving the winner apologizing for the tap, but not for the outcome.

"We had another wreck there and we were trying to race (Jarrett) back," he said. "I got under him. He was coming down, I got on the apron and got into him. I hate it."

Jarrett said he was annoyed with the whole race, from NASCAR officials' decision to red-flag it with six laps left to his altercation with Labonte that coincided with Johnny Benson's race-ending crash on lap 398.

"I'm upset at getting run over. If he was up beside me that's one thing, but he hit me in the rear bumper and turned me sideways," Jarrett said.

Earlier, Wallace and Gordon tangled in a more stirring duel, sending Gordon to the garage amid a cascade of cheers while Wallace raced on.

Gordon had been following Wallace, often on his bumper, for more than 20 laps after the third caution ended with 51 laps to go. When Gordon finally got around Wallace heading into turn one on lap 372, Wallace bumped the left rear of Gordon's Chevrolet, sending it spinning into the wall of turn 2.

HALO: Angels fall six games behind Missions win the first half pennant. San Antonio's magic number is now 1 to wrap up the first half crown.

The loss also spoiled a great pitching performance by Angels starter Rob Bonanno, by far the brightest star in the much-maligned Angels pitching staff. Bonanno's only real big mistake came with the first pitch of the game when Santiago Perez hit a home run over the left-field wall to start the contest.

Up until the seventh inning, Bonanno did not allow another hit and at one point retired 10 Diablos in a row. El Paso finally got to the right-hander with one run on three hits in the seventh. That's when Angel manager Don Long opted to go to his bullpen to try and preserve the win.

Bonanno went 6 1/3 innings, allowed four hits, struck out four and walked three.

Josh Deakman replaced Bonanno and got out of the seventh inning without any more damage to the Angels' lead. That was until the eighth inning when the heart of the Diablo order came to the plate.

Robert Lopez doubled and Todd Dunn singled to put runners on with one out in the inning. That's when Mike Gropusso, probably the most dangerous hitter in the El Paso lineup, took a Deakman pitch and cranked a three-run homer to dead-center field. That blast spoiled the decision for Bonanno with the Devils taking a 5-4 lead.

The Angels tied the game in the ninth when Danny Buxbaum brought in his third run on the game on a sacrifice fly to right field to score Chuck Abbott from third.

In the top of the 10th, the Diablos added an unearned run off Angel reliever Juan Alvarez (3-3) for the decisive blow to what was a very disappointing night at the ballpark for the Angels and their fans.

El Paso's Valerio De Los Santos (4-2) only allowed a Trent Durrington single in the bottom half of the tenth to get the win.

This game will be a hard one to swallow as the loss dropped the Angels to 5-7 in this homestand, while continuing to raise questions about Midland's bullpen, which doesn't appear to have a reliable closer.

The Angels took a 3-1 lead in the third inning when Danny Buxbaum hit a two-run single and Benji Molina added an RBI double.

Keith Luuloa made it 4-1 in favor of Midland in the fifth with a sacrifice fly to left field to score Randy Betten, who reached on a double.

SWIM: Races resemble COM practices

(From 1C)

weather struck Saturday.

The morning was actually cool, and with a 15 mph wind blowing in from the east — into the faces of swimmers completing their final laps — coupled with the unheated water in the pool, it felt more like January than June to many swimmers.

"This morning it was really cold and when you went in the water your muscles got stiff," said COM's Erin Irons, who nonetheless won four of the five events she entered in the girls 15-18-year-old division. "Once you got out of the pool and stayed out awhile you really tightened up."

Although the sun eventually poked its head out before noon and stayed out the rest of the day, it wasn't the most ideal of conditions for an early summer outdoor meet. It wasn't the type of day Swendig had in mind when he took about 30 COM swimmers to the Arizona Sports Ranch for a week of conditioning in preparation for the summer long course season.

"We go and train in really hot weather and come back and swim in cold weather so we're prepared for anything," Swendig said half-jokingly.

The WT Invitational is generally COM's showcase summer event and last drew eight teams, much smaller than the winter meet COM hosts at the Mabee Aquatic Center.

This summer, the meet is even smaller, with teams from Odessa, Lubbock, Andrews and Abilene coming to town. Missing was the formidable El Paso Aqua Posse, which finished second to COM in last year's-meet.

Most of the races resembled a COM practice as COM won all but two of the 46 individual races Saturday. As such, the swimmers were able to treat the meet as a summer tune-up.

"This is a pretty good meet for trying stuff you want to work on," Irons said. "It's not as crowded or competitive as some of the others."

Irons won the 200 meter breaststroke (3 minutes, 6.64 seconds), 50 freestyle (29.55), 200 butterfly (2:46.92) and 400 free (4:49.19). The leading winner for the girls was Caroline Carson in the 11-12 division. Carson won the 100 breast (1:35.21), 50 free (32.68), 100 fly (1:18.62), 50 back (38.32) and 400 free (5:05.73).

Leading the way for the COM boys were Kyle Edens and Bryan Rodriguez, who each won four events in their respective age groups. Edens won the 50 free (31.30), 100 fly (1:14.43), 50 back (38.48) and 400 free (5:01.94) in the 11-12 division while Rodriguez won the 100 breast (2:28.31), 50 free (49.22), 100 fly (2:34.61) and 50 back (1:01.74) in the 8 and under division.

While many COM swimmers were in Arizona, Edens went to Colorado Springs for his pre-summer workouts.

"It's a whole lot harder to work up there because of the altitude and the air is so thin," Edens said. Edens has been able to escape the heat not only by going to Colorado, but also by competing in Saturday's cooler conditions. Nonetheless, he felt the chill just as much as the other competitors.

"That's one of the reasons I didn't expect to do so well today," said Edens of the weather. "The water in the pool was freezing cold."

COM's Stephanie Strauss was a four-time winner in the girls 8 and under division, winning the 100 breast (1:53.09), 50 free (37.42), 100 fly (1:42.18) and 50 back (44.11).

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Eastern Indians infielder Zach Frisbie tags out the Blue Jays' Eric Lara in Saturday's title game at Hogan Park. The Indians won Midland's Junior League crown with a 13-1 win.

INDIANS: Myrick strikes out five in complete-game victory

bie said, "so, this didn't come as any surprise to us. We've played real well all year."

Assistant coach Dan Moody added, "We've got a gamey bunch of kids and we just kind of run-ruled ourselves through the tournament. We thought they would play like they did. We got on a roll and kept going."

The Blue Jays, who were coached by Russell Pullen and Gary Elander, were playing with their backs to the wall. They endured a 14-12 win over the Mariners Saturday morning in a game that went nine innings and three hours. It was an already depleted squad that took the field in the finals while the Indians were fresh, just sitting around waiting to get on the field.

And when the Indians did reach the field, lanky hurler David Myrick was up to the task. He had a shutout going into the fifth and a 13-0 lead before giving up his lone run of the day. That's when Eric Lara doubled, moved to third on a Myrick wild pitch and scored on a stolen base. Myrick struck out six Blue Jays in five innings of work while yielding just three walks and five hits.

With all the run support, "There wasn't much pressure out there. I just wanted to throw strikes," Myrick said.

Meanwhile, the Indians got RBIs from nine different players, including two each from Julian Reyes, Alex Ortega and Morgan Moody. Reyes led all batters with a 3-for-3 day, including a double.

The Indians struck for two runs in the second, but really put the game away in the third with seven runs on just three hits against the Blue Jays.

Lara led the Blue Jays, collecting two of the five hits and scored their only run of the day.

It's interesting to note that the Indians, Blue Jays and Mariners are all in the Eastern Division. The Western Division was eliminated before having a chance to put a team in the finals. The players in the Eastern Division will be future Midland High Bulldogs, except for some of the players headed to private schools, like the Indians' catcher Aaron Schrank, who attends Midland Christian.

TENNIS: Tired Seles falters in third set

(From 1C)

Seles, who won the French Open three straight years starting in 1990, came to Roland Garros this year having not played in 10 days. But twice she rallied from a set down to advance to the semifinals, where she beat top-seeded Martina Hingis in straight sets.

"It's been really surprising where I've gotten these past two weeks," she said. "It's been obviously a very different two weeks just because I was able to concentrate on tennis, which was a very nice feeling. I haven't had it for a long time."

Sanchez Vicario, who earned more than $600,000 for the victory, was playing in her sixth French Open final in 10 years.

In the third set, a tiring Seles began making more unforced errors. She let Sanchez Vicario rally from 15-40 on her serve to win the first game and stop Seles' streak, then lost her own serve.

Seles then hit a backhand long, her 48th unforced error, to send Sanchez Vicario on her climb into the players' box. She kissed her father, coach, mother, sister and boyfriend before getting nuzzled by her Yorkshire terrier, Roland, who has watched all three of her championships here.

Sanchez Vicario, who had won only one title in the past two years and was bothered by leg and wrist injuries this winter, was given her trophy by former men's player Ilie Nastase — who jokingly called her "vieja" — old lady.

Though most of the attention in women's tennis has focused on teen-agers such as Hingis, Venus and Serena Williams and Anna Kournikova, the final featured the 26-year-old Sanchez Vicario beating the 24-year-old Seles.

"As the veterans, as everyone is calling us at the moment, we still have a long ways to go," Sanchez Vicario said.

Added Seles: "At any age we're still very young."

If there is an empty glass or container, Linda Tatsch sees is as a vessel for candle wax. Wax margaritas, above, don't have wicks since they are in plastic containers and are intended for decoration only.

Candle with care

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Linda Tatsch, above, poses with some of her candle creations. Coke floats, below, are garnished with wax cherries

"Better to light a candle than curse the darkness."
— old Chinese proverb

Candles are the light of Linda Tatsch's life.

But not just any old candles — the ones she likes best are the ones she has made herself.

Mrs. Tatsch has been making candles steadily for "probably 10 or 15 years," she said, but this is her second go-round at the craft.

"My husband's grandmother made one at Christmas and I was so impressed by it — I thought it was so beautiful ..." That was about 26 years ago, she said, when her grandmother-in-law taught her the art of making ice candles.

Then a few years back, Mrs. Tatsch said, her friend Patty Brown, owner of Gift Baskets Emporium, asked if she would make some candles to put in gift baskets, and Mrs. Tatsch agreed.

WHEN SHE RESUMED making candles, Mrs. Tatsch said, she learned a lot more about the creative aspect of the craft. "I didn't realize that with wax, you can mold a design when you get to a certain consistency." She also learned how to make designs and creations using cookie cutters, and how to make designs, such as baskets or cup holders or centerpieces, that are made out of wax but aren't really candles (since they don't have wicks). She also learned how to use ordinary everyday items such as plastic cups and paper plates to help her perfect her craft.

Some of her candles are the classic ice candles (made by pouring hot parafin over ice, which results in a lacey look when the ice melts); some look like roses; some look like angels; some even look like glasses of soft drinks or beer.

Mrs. Tatsch's home is filled with her candles and other wax creations. And some of her candles are to be burned while others are not. "Some (candles) you really don't want to burn because you've put quite a bit of work into them." Those are the keepers, she said, laughing.

"I don't make candles every day, but I like to make then (about) three times a week. I don't have the equipment for mass production, (but) I make (about) 10 in a day."

Getting started isn't difficult and doesn't require a lot of outrageous equipment, Mrs. Tatsch said. She advises any wannabe candlemaker to invest in a double boiler, and to have some empty cans to melt the wax in (over the double boiler), crayons to provide color, fragrance, three or four pounds of parafin to start, and heavy doses of common sense and time.

"Candle making doesn't have to be expensive — you can use (plastic disposable cups) to set up (the candles) because after it sets, it (the cup) can be cut away."

She said making a batch of candles can take about five hours. She also advised anyone who wants to get started to "just be careful because it can be very dangerous" if the water boils away or the melting parafin isn't attended. "You need to stay on top (of things) and don't go off somewhere while the water is boiling."

(NOTE: Mrs. Tatsch also has a word of caution about using a microwave oven to help "loosen" up candle wax that has hardened too quickly: "I'm a little bit skeptical" about reheating candle wax in a microwave, she said. "I'm afraid that might be dangerous." Instead, the wiser course would be to leave the melted wax in the can, which is resting in hot water, and work with just a little bit at a time.)

Mrs. Tatsch is skilled in a number of crafts, but making candles is her favorite. "I'm amazed at what can be done with it. I would like to do it (candle making) every day."

Like any good craftsman, she takes pride in her work. "I could clean my house every day (and get no feedback)," she said, "but I get more satisfaction out of making my candles."

Midland women take trip to New York City

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

What strikes us as one of the more fun trips of the season was the Midland Symphony Guild's spring "I Love New York" tour.

Attending from Midland were Puff Aycock, Norma McGrew, Beverly Pevehouse and her daughter-in-law, S.lvia Pevehouse, Carlene Ware, Betty Jo Munn, Martha Elder, Tanya McCann and Ruth McFarland.

McKnight-Harrison

Staying at the Luxury Collection on Central Park South, the women enjoyed five days and four nights in the Big Apple.

They saw various Broadway musicals including "The Sound of Music," "High Society," and "Lion King," as well as the long-running "Phantom of the Opera," and "Beauty and the Beast."

Other highlights of the trip for the women was a performance by the renowned Cirque du Soliel from Canada, a taping of television's "Conan O'Brien Show," and Michael Finestein's 100th anniversary tribute to the Gershwins at Rainbow and Stars.

They also enjoyed shopping, particularly in SoHo and Chinatown, and dining in some of New York's most notable restaurants.

The travelers had a choice of day trips, one to Hyde Park for a tour of FDR's home, museum and grounds, as well as the Vanderbilt Mansion, and the other to West Point. The two groups then met up for lunch at the Culinary Institute of America.

HONORING LEONA McCormick Bryant Smith for her gift of "Billy's Quilt," the Haley Library and History Center hosted an exhibition and reception recently.

In 1934, Mrs. Smith, member of a pioneer Midland ranching family, made a quilt for her beau, rancher Billy Bryant. Inscribed with embroidery "To Billy from Leona" Dec. 25, 1934, the quilt features 56 eight-inch appliqued cattle brands from the area ranches of that era.

The quilt, which was given to Mr. Bryant prior to the couple's marriage on New Year's Day 1936, remains on display at the Haley Library and History Center for the enjoyment of area citizens.

A number of longtime Midlanders turned out to honor Mrs. Smith, who will celebrate her 100th birthday in July. Celebrants included Esther Miller Peevyhouse with her daughter Joyce (Mrs. Jimmy) Lucas, Alva Butler, Anna Beth Farr, Joan Stocks Nobles, Sudy and H.G. Bedford, LaVerne and Coy Watson, Oliver Cowden, Allis Chapman, Hazel (Mrs. Keith) Somerville, Alyne Reynolds, and Dorothy and Dean Cox.

ODESSAN Billye Ruth Evans was honored on her 75th birthday recently with a lovely catered luncheon at the home of her daughter, Sherrin Evans, in Midland.

Guests included Lois Neely of Granbury, Tody Oakley of Midland, and Angel Boring, Dorohy Brooks, Beverly Martin, Phyllis Ireland, Beth Curry, Melba Bassett, Mary Jo Bostick and Lula Stewart, all of Odessa.

CONGRATULATIONS AND best wishes to Susan Phillips and David Odom, who were married on May 30. After a honeymoon to Cozumel, Mexico, they will return to Midland to make their home. Susan is an English teacher at Lee High School, and David is with Sherwin-Williams Co.

A small reception followed the 10 a.m. wedding, with a large party given at the couple's home that evening to celebrate their marriage.

Among the many well-wishers were Betty Barnes, Glenn White, Jeff Latimer, Polly Welmaker, Dan Marchant, Sharron and J.D. Webster, Anna Feris, Pat and Mark Wornell, Charlotte Wornell, Dayna Dunigan and Mike Harrell.

VIRGINIA HERRELL was honored on her 90th birthday with a small dinner party given by her family at Midland Country Club the evening of May 30.

The honoree was born June 1, 1908, in Collin County, Texas. She married Robert "Sody" Harrell in 1929, and they have resided n Midland since 1937.

Attending the dinner party were Mrs. Harrell's husband; her daughters and their husbands, Sharon and Gene Floyd of Midland and Julie and Richard Stafford of Dallas; her grandsons and their wives, Mike and Kim Floyd of Fort Worth and Bobby and Sharon Floyd of Midland; her granddaughter and husbands, Shannon and Mary Board of Plano, Kim and Brant Worrell of Siloam Springs, Ark., and Kelly Stafford of Los Angeles, Calif.

Also attending were her great-granddaughters, Michelle Floyd of Midland and Shaina Weaver of Fort Worth, and longtime friends, Ann and Jess Lindsey and Ginny Powell of Midland and Ester Jane Worrell of Siloam Springs.

Earlier in the afternoon, Mrs. Herrell's five great-grandsons, Robert, Michael and Coleman Floyd and Martin and Michael Board, and great-granddaughter, Madison Worrell, went by her house to wish her a happy birtnday.

A 1998 HONOR graduate of Lee High School, Brandon Ofield was honored at a banana split party given recently by Joann (Mrs. Glenn) Gardner, at her home.

Brandon remained in Midland and resided with Mrs. Gardner to complete his senior year when his parents, Claudia and Bill Ofield, moved to Katy.

Heralding his future university, Texas Tech, decorations of red and black were used on a miniature tree with mortar boards and diplomas.

Special guests were his parents and his sister, Rachel.

Brandon also was the honoree at La Bodega Restaurant for a luncheon which was given for the guests who traveled to Midland for his graduation. His parents, both 1972 graduates of Lee High, hosted the affair.

Brandon is the first grandchild of Beth and Barney Ofield of Richmond and Nan and Roy John Brandon of Alvarado, who are former residents of Midland.

Also attending the luncheon were his sister, aunts, uncles and cousins, Becky and Guy Tabor and Paul and Katheryn, and Cathy and Greg Ofield and Allison, all of Houston, and Karen and Richard Brouse and Emily of Austin, and a great-aunt and uncle, Lorraine and Will D. Nix of Katy.

Brandon plans to earn his BS degree in biology from Tech and then attend medical school, specializing in anesthesiology.

Famed Rodeo Drive store closing its doors

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — "Gone fishin'," proclaims the sign in the showcase windows of the landmark Beverly Hills boutique.

Fred Hayman, a k a Mr. Rodeo Drive, is shuttering his namesake emporium. In June, he leases the space to Louis Vuitton for an undisclosed sum.

This is the store Judith Krantz made famous in "Scruples," her steamy 1980s best seller.

A magnet for stars, socialites and trend-seeking tourists, the Beverly Hills store has reigned for more than 30 years at the foot of the West Coast's most celebrated shopping street.

Hayman popularized a myriad of relatively unknown designer names like Halston and Brioni, and sold exclusive Alfred Dunhill blazers to Natalie Wood and Janet Leigh. He launched his Giorgio fragrance at the American Embassy in Paris in 1981, and six years later sold it to Avon for $165 million.

"I don't know anyone who hasn't walked through the store," says Marguerite Schaefer, Hayman's personal assistant of 28 years. She recalled Princess Grace in a dressing room, while assistants counseled her on the right bra. "She bought some beautiful gowns."

AP Photo

Fred Hayman poses at his Rodeo Drive store in Los Angeles. After 30 years of being a magnet for celebrities, he is retiring from the business.

"I'll never forget the first time Frank Sinatra walked in the store," Schaefer says. "All I had to say to the manager is, 'Rocco, he's here.'"

Jack Nicholson sauntered in and mistook the store for a restaurant. "What kind of soup do you serve here?" he asked.

Hayman's vision was to transform Rodeo Drive from a 2 1/2-block area into a world-class boulevard. So in the 1970s he founded the Rodeo Drive committee of retailers to promote the street. "It started very small. There was a Brown Derby. It had its charm," he says.

Today, no shopping trip is complete without a stroll along Rodeo Drive.

Hayman's fragrance, 273, is named for his address on Rodeo Drive, which he affectionately calls "the street."

DAPPER AND DEBONAIR, Hayman is typically turned out impeccably dressed in a pin-striped navy double-breasted suit, crisp white Paris-made shirt and what he calls "very good Italian shoes." A thick shock of silver hair contrasts with his yellow silk tie, which recalls the signature sunshine-colored awnings that made his store the toast of the town.

Ever the perfectionist, he's never without his pocket-size leather note pad and red Cartier pen.

"I like Samuel Goldwyn, whose motto was, 'Do it right, do it big, give it class,'" says fashion columnist Marylou Luther, who has known Hayman for decades. "That might as well be the mantra of Fred Hayman. He always has done things big and with class."

Born in Switzerland, Hayman immigrated to New York in 1941 at age 16. He worked at the Waldorf-Astoria. In 1954, Conrad Hilton dispatched him to the Beverly Hilton Hotel to work as restaurant and banquet manager.

In the early 1960s, Hayman became a silent partner in a small boutique known as Giorgio. Two years later, he bought out his partners and expanded the store, renaming it Fred Hayman Beverly Hills.

"Neither my then-wife (Gayle Hayman) nor I knew anything about clothes. Therein was a big success," Hayman says. "We changed the store around. I had some of my own furniture in there with a bubble gum machine, a butcher rack with booze and coffee, and a tiny freezer where I put homemade ravioli and marinara sauce that we gave as gifts."

What are his plans, now that he's closing the store?

"I'd like to go with (wife) Betty and maybe my family on a cruise," says Hayman, who turns 73 on May 29. He is entertaining ventures in marketing. "I just want to be great when I do the next thing."

Designer uses Internet as alternative to runway

N.Y. Times News Service

The most important click-clicks in the fashion world were not the sounds of editors' heels on the sidewalk as they ran to another show; they were the sounds of computer mice as Helmut Lang introduced his fall collection on the Internet and on CD-ROMs.

It was the first time a designer had shown a collection in this way. The grand experiment was not without its drawbacks, but it points the way to the future in a global industry searching for alternatives to runway shows.

The computer revolution has been knocking at fashion's door for a few years now, and as in many industries, the fashion professionals are not quite sure how or if to let it in. From computer-assisted design on textiles to using computers for sales to "staging" virtual fashion shows in the way Lang has done, fashion has been slow on the uptake.

It is not hard to see why. The artistry and social elements of fashion do not wear well in the cold, gray world of computers. And computers are only the wave of the future when they work.

It is still too early to tell whether Lang's idea was a success. The decision to use multimedia — he also offered a 15-minute video, a "look book" and the opportunity for editors and buyers to view the collection on racks in his SoHo showroom — was made only a week before he was to stage a show. But he said it was an idea he had been toying with for three years.

"I said it was now or never," Lang said of his choice. "This is the first step in the future."

The multimedia format is not intended to replace live shows every season, he added.

It is odd that in an industry that lives by changes every season, the method of presentation has not changed in almost 50 years.

Years ago, Norma Kamali broke ground when she presented a collection on video — and a handful of designers have since continued to do so. In February, British designer Mark Whittaker showed his line to editors on video. In the last two years, the number of fashion Web sites has grown, but no designer had yet introduced a line there.

The images on the Web and in the CD-ROM were photographed in a studio. The models were the same ones he would have used had he staged a live show, including actress Daryl Hannah. The show was posted on the Internet — at www(LT)(GT)helmutlangny.com — with 81 looks.

This approach lets more people — including editors like Franca Sozzani of Italian Vogue, who is not attending the shows in Manhattan — see the collection quickly. The cost is similar to that of a runway show: for top designers like Lang, it can hover close to $100,000.

"It's exactly the same preparation and we had exactly the same amount of work as if I had had a show," he said. "I never said this would replace shows. But there are too many and it's torture for people."

Among the visitors to Lang's showroom was Kal Ruttenstein, the fashion director of Bloomingdale's, who applauded the move.

"There may be some seasons when we want to see another show from Helmut, but this is the perfect way to see this collection, and it saves time. You're not running around going to a crushed show for three hours. And time is what you want to save."

The disadvantages include not seeing the fabric close up. And there are only two dimensions. Video is an improvement because there is movement.

But the numbers who can view a site increases the audience exponentially, thereby making a small show a big show — if people are interested enough to call it up.

Always a sought-after ticket, Lang, who was about to show his first women's line in New York rather than in Paris, infuriated fashion insiders in recent seasons when he slashed the number of guests at his show from about 800 to 150.

THE LANG WEB site and the CD-ROM, which are identical, depict what Lang calls casual drama. Pearl-colored parkas with deep, extravagant collars trimmed with light bands of fur. Lemon-colored puckered polyester skirts with the hems turned up so the skirts resemble delicate tulips.

What browsers or even video watchers will not see is the white satin lining and furry cashmere undercoat beneath the cotton parkas. Nor will they be able to run their fingers again and again through the creamy marabou feathers on an off-white parka over a cashmere tank top and white moleskin cotton pants.

It may turn out to be the big paradox of this experiment that a multidimensional designer has led the way into a medium that may be best suited to simpler talents. Lang's creations are so complex that they warrant firsthand viewing.

Platform sandals flatten competition

N.Y. Times News Service

Size matters. Don't let anybody tell you differently.

Keep that two-word truism in mind and you won't make a bad shoe purchase all summer long.

These days, "summer" is just another word for "blockbuster."

And the platform sandals that look so right for this season have blockbuster stamped on their soles.

The sold-out signs are already flashing above some of the 2- to 4-inch-high sandals stores brought in. And there's good reason why this style's so popular.

Platforms accentuate legs and elongate physiques just about as well as stilettos — without the clear and present danger of pain or injury.

That's one thumb up.

And they basically put women on pedestals.

That's two.

Another reason: Baby Boomer women remember wearing the same shoes back in the '70s, especially the lime green and hot pink suede platform step-ins.

So, it's settled then. Size matters. Women who think otherwise this summer are only selling themselves short.

Hairstyling innovations protect hair

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Two hairstyling innovations are using scientific technology to help women achieve their best personal look.

Developed with Vidal Sassoon salons nationwide, Heat Defense protein spray forms a protective layer on hair during heat styling to help prevent split ends, breakage and frizz.

To hold hairstyles flexibly in place, a hairspray with a new polymer called Formesilk provides lasting hold while still letting hair fall right back into place after being combed, brushed or windblown.

Sugar Busters diet high in fat, calories

By Carolyn Poirot
N.Y. Times News Service

The people of New Orleans love to eat. And now the people of New Orleans love to diet.

The Sugar Busters diet is all the rage in the city of etouffee and remoulade, where a survey recently concluded that a third of the people are overweight.

Now in bookstores nationwide, the Sugar Busters diet — high on protein, low on carbohydrates — was designed by a vascular surgeon, two gastroenterologists and an oilman in New Orleans. They say their self-published book sold more than 200,000 copies its first month.

Some of the best restaurants in New Orleans, including Commander's Palace, now serve Sugar Busters specials — such as a large pork chop on a small mountain of sweet potatoes pureed with spicy sausage and nestled on a lake of spinach, sauteed with bacon.

What's not on the Sugar Busters menu are sweets, including the sugars in such dietary superstars as carrots, rice and pasta.

SUGAR BUSTERS is only the latest in a line of trendy high-protein/low-carb diets, with names such as Protein Power and The Zone. All are simply variations on the Atkins diet, launched in the early '70s by Dr. Robert Atkins.

And guess what? Such diets are high in fat and, over the long haul, hard on the kidneys and liver, according to dietitians. They may result in short-term weight loss, but they'll always leave you feeling hungry.

The American Dietetic Association analyzed recipes in the "Sugar Busters!" book and found that the calories from fat ranged from 41 percent to 85 percent. (The healthful recommended level is 30 percent or less.) Total calories ranged up to 1,172 for a single serving of pan roasted filet mignon.

THE ATKINS DIET was launched in 1972 with the publication of "Dr. Atkins' Diet Revolution." Atkins is still specializing in diet and nutrition as medical director of The Atkins Center for Complimentary Medicine in New York City. He has written a revised edition of his original book, which sold 10 million copies, and last month published "The Vita-Nutrient Solution: Nature's Answer to Drugs" (Simon & Schuster, $24).

The promise of low-carbohydrate diets zeros in on the fact that the body first uses carbohydrates (sugars and starches) for its basic energy needs, because they are quickly and easily turned into the glucose needed to sustain life.

If the body doesn't immediately need the glucose, it is stored as fat until blood-sugar levels get low and it is needed.

The theory is, if the body doesn't have carbohydrates immediately available, it will turn to the stored fat as its source of energy.

"The Atkins diet has been revived," says Barbara Gollman, a Dallas dietitian and spokeswoman for the American Dietetic Association.

"It works, at least short term, but the reason it works is because it is calorie-controlled," she said.

The problem, Gollman says, is that you can't stay healthy on this diet for the long haul, because it has too much protein and not enough vitamins, minerals and other nutrients.

"It's too much protein for your body to handle. Ultimately, the kidneys will be stressed by all that protein," she said.

THE IMMEDIATE WEIGHT loss on a high-protein diet is water loss, said Dr. Margo Denke, of the Center for Human Nutrition at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical School at Dallas. When protein is broken down, it releases nitrogen, which must be washed out of the body quickly. Water from tissue cells comes to the rescue, reducing overall water weight.

"Evidence accumulated in the 1970s documents the fact that if you restrict carbohydrates and increase protein, you promote the loss of body water and salt," Denke said. "Remember, the biggest component of our bodies is water, so if you lose extra salt and water, you lose weight. You don't lose fat, but you do lose weight."

She warns that high-protein/low-carbohydrate diets can give a false sense of security the first week or 10 days, when you are likely to lose 5 pounds or more.

"Like most diet tricks, it works for a while," Denke said. "It bespeaks how desperate we are. To restrict carrots because they contain some sugar is just craziness."

In people with diabetes or kidney damage, such diets can cause renal failure, she added.

And high-protein diets are almost invariably high-fat.

The problem is, most major sources of protein — such as steak, bacon, cheese and eggs — are also high in fat and cholesterol, which can lead to heart disease, stroke and some forms of cancer, according to Elisabeth Anderson, outpatient nutrition counselor at Harris Methodist Fort Worth.

"These are diets that have been around on and off for a long time," Anderson said. "They are low in calories, very restrictive and monotonous, for the most part. And they are low in calcium and vitamins, so they can't be good for long."

They are also low in volume, so you don't feel full for long.

Because weight loss ultimately relies on using more calories than you consume, and because protein sources are high in calories, weight loss requires consuming smaller amounts.

Carbohydrates have long been the mainstay of most weight-loss diets for exactly the opposite reason: They are relatively low in calories and high in bulk. Calorie for calorie, you can eat more of them and feel more full.

But the Sugar Busters diet does not allow potatoes or anything made from white rice or white flour, including bread, bagels and pasta.

AN ADDED RISK, ironically, is that the high-protein/low carbohydrate diet will work too well.

Restricting carbohydrates can cause the body to start breaking down some of the fat stored in cells, but that breakdown can result in ketosis, a nutritional disease that causes bad breath as well as diarrhea, headaches, weakness, low blood pressure, fatigue and sleeplessness, according to Anderson.

"The most serious side effect is that, if kept up over a long time, these diets can cause kidney and liver damage," she says.

Ultimately, you might be busting more than sugar.

How the diets weigh in

N.Y. Times News Service

An estimated 65 million Americans are on diets right now, many of them on one of those trendy high-protein, low-carbohydrate diets. The Sugar Busters diet is the newest, but these diets can all trace their roots to the Atkins diet of the 1970s.

We know you're probably not listening, but we have to say this anyway: The American Dietetic Association would remind you of the bottom line: In order to lose weight on a regular basis, you must use more calories than you consume. In other words: Eat less. Exercise more.

THE ATKINS DIET

"Dr. Atkins' New Diet Revolution" (Avon Press, originally published in 1972) www.atkinscenter.com

Guru: Dr. Robert Atkins, founder and director of The Atkins Center for Complementary Medicine in New York. Hosts a syndicated radio talk show..MDBR/.MDNM/

The principle: Burn fat by eating fat and protein and avoiding carbohydrates.

The promise: "The most luxurious weight-loss diet of the 20th century."

No-nos: Starchy vegetables, fruits, dairy foods, bread and most grains, at least in the beginning.

Reality check: High-protein, high-fat diets can cause dehydration, calcium loss and kidney problems, and are a risk for heart disease and certain cancers.

THE ZONE

"Enter the Zone" (HarperCollins, $22, 1996) www.enterthezone.com

Guru: Barry Sears, a biochemist and president of Elco Tech Corp., a biotechnology company.

The principle: In the proper proportions, food is the ticket to the "zone," a metabolic state where the mind is relaxed and focused, the body fluid and strong. Includes smaller food portions, more exercise.

The promise: You can reset your genetic code, lose weight permanently and enhance mental productivity.

No-nos: "Bad carbohydrates," including bread, rice, corn and carrots.

Reality check: President Clinton, Hillary Rodham Clinton and director Oliver Stone have tried it. Argues that eating less fat is the primary reason so many Americans are obese. A small piece of Boston cream pie with a 4-ounce sliced-turkey chaser is recommended as a "zoneful snack."

SUGAR BUSTERS

"Sugar Busters! Cut Sugar to Trim Fat" (Ballantine Books, $22, 1998) www.sugarbusters.com

Gurus: H. Leighton Steward, an oilman. Steward co-authored the book with three New Orleans doctors..MDBR/.MDNM/

The principle: Obesity is the result of insulin overload. Eliminate sugars and simple carbohydrates that easily convert to sugar, and force your body to use stored fat for fuel.

The promise: If you cut sugar, you can trim body fat and lose weight, no matter what else you eat.

No-nos: Potatoes, corn, white rice, bread from refined flour, beets, carrots and other "hidden" sources of sugar, and of course, refined sugar, corn syrup, molasses, honey, sugared colas and beer.

Reality check: Recipes include one for filet mignon with bleu cheese and "Sugar Busters Chocolate Mousse," with 1,197 calories per serving and a whopping 85 percent of its calories from fat.

THE CARBOHYDRATE ADDICT'S DIET

"The Carbohydrate Addict's Diet" (Amazon Books, $6.99, 1993) www.carbohydrateaddicts.com

Gurus: Drs. Richard and Rachel Heller, husband-and-wife weight-loss pioneers.

The principle: Some people are biologically addicted to carbohydrates and need to avoid them to gain control over their weight.

The promise: You can cut your cravings for starches, snack foods, junk food and sweets if you learn which foods trigger your cravings and weight gain.

No-nos: Any food high in sugar and fat.

Reality check: Will work only for the estimated 75 percent of the population seriously addicted to carbohydrates.

PROTEIN POWER

"Protein Power" (Bantam Books, $6.50, 1997) www.proteinpower.com

Gurus: Drs. Michael and Mary Dan Eades, husband-and-wife medical team who say they have a two-month waiting list at their Colorado weight-loss clinic.

The principle: Use food to condition your body to use stored fat as a high-octane energy source.

The promise: Enjoy "forbidden foods" like meat, cheese, bacon and eggs, creamy salad dressing, tofu and even peanut butter — while losing weight.

No-nos: Sweets.

Reality check: Plan comes complete with six audio cassettes, full-length video, 115-page workbook, Food Finder poster, protein calculator, 35-page quick-answer booklet, physician's packet, sample menus — and a tape measure. Not so simple.

Game asks outrageous questions

N.Y. Times News Service

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — It's none of his business, but, still, Randy Horn would like to know the answer to this very bizarre and totally meaningless question: Would you rather lose your perspective, or your sense of balance?

And now, if you've got some time, the 30-year-old Mr. Horn has 1,499 additional questions all boxed up and ready for your consideration each and every one of them is of equal absurdity.

"I am finding that some people think I am what's wrong with America," says Horn about his new invention, the board game Zobmondo!!

Horn is hoping, of course, that he'll get rich, just like those two bartenders who in the mid-'80s came up with that crazy game called Pictionary. Those guys made about a gazillion dollars on a game they played themselves for years. "They're golfing now," Horn said.

But Horn's a little realistic about this get-rich thing because, you see, his game has an edge to it that Pictionary does not. Mainly, you have to have a sense of humor, you have to be able to take the questions with a grain of salt. And you have to be willing to answer the situation, regardless of its grossness or ridiculousness.

"No one's actually doing this stuff," Horn assures.

Would you rather never be able to sleep lying down — OR — instantly fall asleep every time you sit down? (You win or lose by trying to guess how players will answer and advancing on the board.)

The idea started about 10 years ago when Horn earned a reputation in college for always asking the ridiculous questions, whether at a party or on a date. His favorite:

How much money, in cash, would it cost to eat a live, kicking, two-inch cockroach?

"I could sit and talk with my friends about that question for an hour," he says.

So, he devised a series of pizza parties for his UCLA classmates to socialize and invent new questions. He ended up with about 800. After that, he hired 30 comedy writers to write questions and ended up with about 6,000. From that, he pared it down to 1,500 for Zobmondo!! Horn figures he's got about $90,000 sunk into the game's research and production.

Some questions were even too over-the-edge for Randy Horn, which, of course, means they won't be divulged here.

But, we're curious. Would you rather yank 12 inches of masking tape off the hairiest part of your body — OR — have to remove a fishhook wedged 1/8" of an inch into your thumb? For more information on the game, call toll-free at (800) 417-0017.

DEAR ABBY

Gun victim delivers chilling message with her essay

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My daughter, Amy Locicero Federici, was the sixth victim of the Long Island Railroad Massacre of Dec. 7, 1993.

Van Buren

Abby, we all suffer when a loved one is taken.

We are never the same again. The murder of my daughter changed my life and that of every member of our family.

A dear friend of mine, Marie Patella, who, like myself, is a teacher, wrote the protest against guns that I'm sending you. I hope that you will print it. — ARLENE J. LOCICERO, AMY'S MOM, HAWTHORNE, N.J.

DEAR ARLENE: Please accept my deepest sympathy for the tragic death of your daughter Amy. The essay your friend wrote is chilling, dramatic, and carries a message that needs to be heard. I'm pleased to share it:

I am a gun victim.

I have never been shot. Or shot at.

I have not had a spouse, child, parent or sibling shot.

But I am a gun victim.

Were you ever with a mother when she received word that her child had been shot on a train? I was.

Five years later, can you still hear that mother's scream? I can.

Did you ever race 40 miles to a hospital with parents whose child was dying from a gunshot wound? I did.

Each time you come upon a scene where the news was received, does your mind bring it all back? Mine does.

Did you ever watch a mother caress the fingers and lovely black curls of her dying child? I did.

If this same mother were your beloved friend, would you have felt your heart break? I did.

Did you ever spend five days gazing at the beautiful dying child who once brought a daily smile and an understanding heart to your classroom? I did.

Can you imagine how it would feel to make a presentation to the teachers at the school where you and your dear friend teach, informing them of what is happening at that hospital 40 miles away? I can.

Do you know anyone who buried a sobbing face in her hands in the podium because she couldn't make it through the staff presentations? I do.

Do you know how she felt when, after a 30-second eternity, she lifted her head once again — only to be greeted by 50 wet faces? I do.

Do you ever ride in a car with your beloved friend and pretend you don't hear her cry when a train passes by? I do.

Do you ever need to hold your friend because bad days bring sobs? I do.

Does the smiling photograph of a murdered dear one greet you each day? It does me.

Will your dreams always be haunted by the events of a week in December, 1993?

Mine will.

Because I am a gun victim.

Ad campaign aimed at young, hip

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Cartier, the luxury goods company, is aiming its new advertising campaign at the young and the hip.

Photographed by famed fashion photographer Walter Chin, the new campaign consists of 11 images based on youthful themes. In one photograph, supermodel Georgianna Robertson is wearing Cartier's signature Trinity ring like a hula hoop.

Other playful images include a model blowing bubbles through the ring and a baby playing peekaboo with a red gift box. The campaign, which targets buyers ages 18 to 34, marks the first time people have appeared as subjects in Cartier ads.

KLEINBECK-REED

Samara Nance Kleinbeck of Midland and Brian Keith Reed of Clarksville, Tenn., are planning to be married 11 a.m. Aug. 15 in First Baptist Church.

The bride-elect is the daughter of David and Vannah Kleinbeck of Midland. Parents of the future bridegroom are James W. and Linda Reed of Green Ridge, Mo. Miss Kleinbeck attended Midland High School and graduated in 1995 with a masters of science degree from Texas Tech University where she was a member of Gamma Sigma Delta Honor Society of Agriculture.

Her fiance attended Green Ridge High School and graduated from Texas Tech University in 1998 with a doctor of animal science degree. He is employed with Austin Peay State University in Clarksville, Tenn., and is a member of Alpha Gamma Rho Social Professional Fraternity.

Americans to travel more this summer

Associated Press

Americans will be traveling more this summer, and — in spite of lower gasoline prices — spending more in the process, according to the Travel Industry Association of America and AAA.

United States travelers will take a total of 251 million "person trips" (a family of four taking a trip together counts as four person-trips).

That number is an increase of 3 percent, on top of a 9 percent jump in 1997, according to a survey undertaken by the Travel Industry Association of America. That family of four will spend $218 a day on meals and lodging, $19 more than it spent last year, according to a survey of vacation costs by AAA.

Florida, California and Hawaii continue to top the list of places Americans most want to visit.

Just over half of the 1,500 travelers surveyed, 51 percent, will be taking children — either their own or grandchildren — up from 43 percent last year. For the first time travelers were asked if they expected to attend a family reunion this year, and 25 percent said yes; the proportion was the same among travelers with children and those without.

ANNIVERSARIES

Couple celebrates golden anniversary

Albert B. and Norma J. Creecy of Midland celebrated their golden anniversary May 30 in the St. Paul United Methodist Church Fellowship Hall.

A reception was hosted by the couple's children and their families.

Albert and the former Norma Jean Phillips were married May 30 in Des Moines, Iowa.

The couple lived in Sioux City, Iowa, Shreveport, La., St. Louis, Fort Worth, Dallas, and Abilene before moving to Midland in 1956.

Creecy was employed in the oil field pipe and supply business since 1951. Mrs. Creecy is a retired registered nurse.

The couple has four children, David Creecy of Lubbock, Dale Creecy of San Angelo, Dianne Creecy Cavender of Odessa and Doug Creecy of Denton.

They also have eight grandchildren, four step-grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Albert B. and Norma J. Creecy

Snelsons honored with reception

Leon and Bonnie Snelson of Midland celebrated their golden wedding anniversary with a reception, hosted by their children, at May 30 at 104 South G St.

The couple was married May 29, 1948, in Big Lake. They are the parents of Mike Snelson of Odessa, and Denny Snelson, Steve Snelson, Tim Snelson and Mark Snelson of Midland, and the late Terry Snelson. They also have 13 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

The couple has lived in the Odessa-Midland area since 1964. Before retiring Snelson served with Pioneer Southern Baptist Missionary work in New Mexico, Colorado and California, and had several pastorates in Texas. He owned and operated Leon Snelson's Pumping Unit Service Company from 1980-86. Mrs. Snelson worked in the banking business.

They are members of Second Baptist Church in Midland.

Hughes celebrate 50 years together

Lloyd "L.G." and Virginia Hughes were honored with a June 6 reception in honor of their golden wedding anniversary.

The reception was held in the First Baptist Church parlor. It was hosted by Lloyd and Lori Hughes, Paul and Debi Hughes, and Gary and Laura McCright and their six grandchildren.

The Hughes have three children, Lloyd Hughes, Paul Hughes and Laura McCright.

The former Virginia Bessent married Hughes June 5, 1948 in the Full Gospel Church in San Saba. Pastor C.E. Bradford officiated.

The couple has lived in Midland for 48 years and are members of Midland Baptist Temple.

Lloyd "L.G." and Virgina Hughes

Golden anniversary for Roberts

Troy W. and Jean Roberts of Midland celebrated their 50th anniversay with a reception today in a Midland residence. Hosts of the reception were Bruce and Ginger Hart.

Ms. Hart is the couple's daughter.

They also have two grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

Roberts and the former Ginger Harris were married June 5, 1948 in Coahoma. They moved from Coahoma to Midland in 1961.

Roberts owned Roberts Auto Supply until he retired in 1988.

Mrs. Roberts founded the Midland Quilters Guild and Antique Car Club and she was a quilting instructor for Midland College until she retired in 1997.

The Roberts are charter members of Golf Course Road Church of Christ and the Lions Club.

Troy W. and Jean Roberts

Former Midlanders take anniversary trip to Florida to celebrate 45 years

DUBLIN — Former Midlanders Bill and Sue Davidson celebrated their 45th wedding anniversary with a trip to Destin, Fla.

They were married May 29, 1953 in First Baptist Church in Corpus Christi.

Davidson operated a commerical photography studio for 13 years and worked as a photographer for the Midland Reporter-Telegram from 1956-64. He later owned a portrait studio in Kingsville.

He received a master's of education degree from North Texas State University and retired from Plano Independent School District.

Mrs. Davidson is retired from Unisys, Inc. and is currently employed with Dublin ISD.

The couple moved to Dublin in 1995.

They have three children, Lynda of Austin, Jon of Arlington, and Thomas of Dublin.

Sacramento celebrates Gold Rush Sesquicentennial

By Jennifer Kerr
Associated Press

COLOMA, Calif. — If you scoot down a sandy bank along the South Fork of the American River, you reach an oval, rock-lined puddle and a modest marker.

It describes a day 150 years ago that changed California from a pastoral wilderness into the innovative, materialist state of today.

"Here on a chilly morning in January 1848, carpenter James Marshall picked up the small pieces of gold that touched off one of the largest, most frenzied mass migrations in history," it reads.

"Within a year of Marshall's discovery, 6,000 gold seekers swarmed onto the western slope of the Sierra Nevada. Thousands more who followed completely changed what had been a quiet, remote Mexican province."

The discovery ensured that California had no quiet transition to statehood, and it has remained a place that does most things faster and first.

THE CALIFORNIA MYTH was created.

Now under way, a 33-month California Gold Discovery to Statehood Sesquicentennial celebration, begun in January, has had a noisy transition of its own, including a slow start, complaints from Latinos, Indians, and other groups whose ancestors were abused in the wake of the Gold Rush, and charges of misusing state funds allotted to the project.

Naturally, initial events centered at Coloma, the tiny El Dorado County community 45 miles northeast of Sacramento, where Marshall found those shining rocks in the tailrace of a sawmill he was building for John Sutter.

In 1848, California had just been acquired by the United States as part of the settlement of the Mexican-American War. The non-Indian population was about 14,000. Pioneer wagons had just started coming to the territory, which generally had the sleepy flavor of its agriculture-oriented Californios settlers.

ONE PRE-GOLD Rush pioneer was John Sutter, who was building an agricultural empire in Northern California based at his Sutter's Fort in what is now Sacramento. He needed lumber for his construction projects and hired Marshall to build a sawmill in the foothills.

Marshall selected Coloma, an Indian settlement on the South Fork of the American River about 45 miles east of the fort, because it was the closest spot that had a river for power and a large stand of pine trees.

By January, 1848, the mill was ready, except for one problem: the tailrace to carry the water away from the mill and back to the river was too shallow. Workers every day dug out the dirt and let water wash away the debris at night.

On the morning of Jan. 24, Marshall inspected the tailrace and spotted some shining rocks. He and other mill workers tried several tests and concluded the rocks were gold.

Four days later, he took the samples — wrapped in a handkerchief — to Sutter, who did more tests. Worried about his own investments, Sutter tried to keep the find a secret.

It didn't work.

The news took nearly a year to percolate to the East Coast and other countries, but then the '49er rush began. By the end of 1848, the non-Indian population was 20,000. It soared to 100,000 by the end of 1849 and to 223,000 in 1852. Over the next 50 years, 125 million ounces of gold were taken from the hills of California, worth $50 billion in today's dollars.

And it changed the area forever.

"Within 20 years it developed a type and style of civilization, especially in San Francisco and adjacent areas, resembling nothing else in the Far West: urban, cosmopolitan, reminiscent in a provincial sort of way of the Atlantic states and parts of Southern Europe," writes historian Kevin Starr.

In the process, the low-key Californios culture based on cattle-raising and agriculture was overrun and the Indian tribes were destroyed.

THOSE HARSH FACTS won't be ignored in the sesquicentennial celebrations, state officials say. "We're not talking about an event that hides some of the facts of the Gold Rush," says Matthew Sugarman, superintendent of Marshall Gold Discovery State Park in Coloma. "There was a lot of negative stuff going on."

"We're not going to go into denial that Native Americans who had lived here for hundreds of years and Mexicans and Chinese and all the others were abused," says Robert Elsner, executive director of the state's sesquicentennial planning commission.

But he adds: "We're not going to wring our hands. We're going to acknowledge they were not treated well and they have a part of Gold Rush history. We're saying, 'Commemorate the past; celebrate the future.'"

Gold Rush exhibits, events planned

Associated Press

Main events surrounding the Gold Discovery anniversary:

— Gold Rush! California's Untold Stories, a three-part exhibit:

■ The Lure and Legacy of the California Gold Rush. Artifacts, tableaux, films, a reconstructed archeological dig. At Oakland Museum through July 26; at Autry Museum of Western Heritage in Los Angeles, Sept. 19, 1998-Jan. 24, 1999; at Sacramento Memorial Auditorium, July 7-Oct. 31, 1999. A smaller version visits 10 or more museums and libraries around the state.

■ Art of the Gold Rush. Paintings, watercolors and drawings. At Crocker Museum, Sacramento, June 20-Sept. 13; at Smithsonian National Museum of American Art, Washington, D.C., Oct. 30, 1998-March 7, 1999.

■ Silver and Gold: Cased Images of the Gold Rush. Daguerreotypes and ambrotypes showing life during the 1850s. At Oakland Museum through July 26; at Smithsonian Oct. 30, 1998-March 7, 1999; at Crocker Aug. 13, 1999-Oct. 10, 1999.

Titanic romance?

The movie "Titanic" has spawned an interest in romance on cruise ships. The first couple to be married aboard a cruise ship in nearly a century were Jon Riddle and Evelyn Choi, both of Burbank, Calif. The couple wed Tuesday aboard Princess Cruises' just-launched Grand Princess, the only cruise ship that features an ocean-going Wedding Chapel. Captain Mike Moulin officiated. The wedding took place during the ship's inaugural Mediterranean cruise.

Theme park ride's a twister

N.Y. Times News Service

There is nothing entertaining about a real-life tornado, as residents of several states have found out this year. But when a twister is re-created in a theme park, the experience can be exciting. Here's a look at "Twister ... Ride It Out," a brand-new attraction at Universal Studios Florida, based on the 1996 hit movie "Twister." The attraction opened after a one-month delay out of respect for the 42 people who died in tornadoes in February in central Florida, not far from the Orlando theme park. (Universal donated $100,000 in aid for the victims.)

The sky darkens, the temperature drops and winds howl. The guests, warned of an impending tornado, are evacuated to the drive-in theater and Quonset hut seen in the movie.

■ Visitors find themselves in the path of a tornado more than five stories tall and 12 feet wide that "dances" as much as 30 feet in any direction. Power lines shower sparks and gas pumps explode.

■ The volume of air that rushes through the attraction in one minute can fill more than four full-size blimps.

■ The "freight train" sound of a twister has been re-created using recordings of camel grunts, lion roars, animal screams played backward, and other aggressive sounds.

Yes, you may have to duck a flying cow, but the cow is from a sign, not a farm.

When traveling: Watch for amusing foreign film titles

By Richard P. Carpenter
N.Y. Times News Service

When American and English movies are shown overseas, the first thing to go is often the title. We don't why, but something really seems to get lost in the translation. Here, from the Sunday Times of London, are titles that in China became the following:

■ In Mandarin, "The Full Monty" is "Six Naked Pigs." In Cantonese, it is "Six Stripped Warriors."

■ The Cantonese version of "The English Patient" is titled "Do Not Ask Me Who I Am. Ever."

■ "Fargo" is called "Mysterious Murder in Snowy Cream."

■ Oliver Stone's "Nixon" is "The Big Liar."

■ "As Good As It Gets" is "Mr. Cat Poop."

■ And "Boogie Nights" is "Instant Fame," which in Hong Kong is slang for "well, never mind."

And speaking of titles: "Titanic" means "Let's have sex" in Arabic slang, according to Newsweek. So please watch what you say when Arabic is being spoken.

And speaking of Guinness: An old nickname in Ireland for a pint of Guinness, with its dark body and creamy ring at the top, is a "parish priest."

How's that again? The menu of the Cafe Rouge in London makes the following statement: "A 13% optional service charge will be added to your bill." (With thanks to Richard Grant of Ipswich.)

Lost in France: Typographical error in a tour brochure in St Emilion, France: "Tours last about two hours." (With thanks to John Rooney of Brookline, Mass.)

Quotable: "Life is a game. Have a picnic on the sidelines." — tourism billboard in Ireland.

Don't fall for it: Cruise-ship crews are on the lookout for copycats inspired by the scene in "Titanic" in which Leonardo DiCaprio's character and his love climb the bow railing of the speeding ship. That's a good way to get hurt.

Walking easiest way to get into shape

By Dr. Horacio Pineda
Associated Press

It's a nonimpact, nonjarring exercise that may be the most convenient way to get yourself into shape. It doesn't require practice or experience. And you can do it indoors on a treadmill or under the skies, either as a social outlet with others or as a relaxing time alone.

It's walking, the No. 1 choice for fitness among Americans, with an estimated 70 million people doing it as part of their daily exercise routine. Walking also is the easiest, safest and cheapest way to stay fit. The only equipment one needs is a good pair of comfortable shoes.

But the best aspect about walking is that walkers tend to stay healthier and live longer. One research study found that walking more than four hours a week reduced the risk of cardiovascular disease among men and women 65 and older.

The short-term benefits of walking at least 30 minutes a day become apparent in just a few weeks: improved motor skills, better muscle tone in the shins, calves and thighs, and increased vitality. But the long-term benefits are even more significant. A regular walking program can help a person ward off creeping obesity and reduce the risk of coronary artery disease. A brisk, one-mile walk burns almost as many calories as running a mile at a moderate pace. A regular walking regime also can reduce the risk of osteoporosis, the loss of normal bone density that can lead to pain, especially in the lower back, frequent broken bones and malformation of bone in parts of the body. Osteoporosis occurs most frequently in women who have gone through menopause and in people who are inactive.

What constitutes an adequate walking program? For a healthy person, a brisk walk of a mile or two each day could be very beneficial. For someone with a heart problem or lung disease, a physician should set the limits on distance, duration and speed of the walk, and whether it would be wise to tackle hills. A recommended training is at 55 percent to 85 percent of your maximum heart rate, which would constitute a vigorous 3 to 4 mile-an-hour walking pace that allows you to carry on a conversation in brief sentences without shortness of breath or fatigue.

The Book To Use!
"Five years ago I monitored my advertising with a separate number in the Permian Basin Area-Wide Phone Book. When the book came out I received the majority of my calls on that number. I've continued to increase my advertising in the Area-Wide book and my business has grown steadily every year. In fact, I'm opening another location in Odessa in June of 1998."

A Guide to safety skills for families with children who spend time at home when no adult is present.

KIDS

Remember these rules when you're home alone:

#1. Lock all doors and windows.

#2. Talk to Mom & Dad about who is allowed in the house when they are not at home.

#3. Do not open the door for anyone, even a policeman or repair man. Open the door only to those that mom & dad say are okay.

#4. Know how to use the telephone. Keep police and other emergency numbers near the phone.

#5. If you can't find a telephone number for the police, dial "O" for operator and ask her to call the police.

#6. Keep busy-read a book, play fun games, write a letter, do the chores your mom and dad asked you to do.

#7. Relax., You are safely locked inside.

REMEMBER THESE RULES WHEN YOU ARE OUTSIDE OR AWAY FROM HOME:

#1. Never go with a stranger.

#2. Do not go near a strangers car, even if they are asking you a question.

#3. Walk to school or other places with a friend or a group of friends. Do not experiment with new routes.

#4. If you are bothered by or see other children bothered by strangers, tell your parents, teachers, principal and the police.

#5. Learn to notice what is going on around you. Be able to describe the details of strangers and unusual events.

#6. If a stranger bothers you, make lots of noise and run in the opposite direction. Go to the nearest house and knock while continuing to yell for help. If other people are near by ask them for help.

PARENTS

Help your kids be safe by following these helpful ideas:

#1. Fill out an emergency number list and keep it by the phone.

#2. Make sure your children know how to use the phone, instruct your children to never admit to a stranger who calls "that they are at home alone," but rather have them say, "Mommy and daddy are busy and can't come to the phone right now." Teach them to write down the name and number of the caller.

#3. Establish a check in routine so that a responsible adult knows when your children arrive home.

#4. Make sure your children know their own address and phone number.

5. Make sure your children know your proper names, not just mommy and daddy. Tell them where you work, what department you work in and what time you'll be home.

#6. Make sure your children know how to get out of the house in case of fire. Tell them what steps to take in case of other natural emergencies too, like tornadoes, flash floods or earthquakes.

#7. Make sure your children have a key or know where the spare key is kept. Make sure they know how to secure the locks once they're inside and that the locks work.

#8. Keep easy to prepare foods in the house, so your children can get something to eat in case you should be delayed in getting home. Things like sandwich fixings, fresh fruit, cereal, juice and milk.

#9. Always tell your children if you'll be late coming home, so they don't worry. If your office allows it, call your children at home when you think they should have arrived, just to reassure them and yourself.

#10. Have a list of chores or activities for your children to do while you're not at home, so they won't become bored.

#11. Keep matches, medicines and poisons locked up or make sure your children know to stay away from these materials as well as sharp objects like knives.

#12. Omit wearing apparel or carrying bags with their name printed on them.

Scientists give movie on asteroids a thumbs up

By Tim Madigan
N.Y. Times News Service

Forget Siskel and Ebert. The movie "Deep Impact" is earning strong reviews from critics of an altogether different sort: scientists working to ferret out deadly asteroids and comets that might be headed toward Earth.

"Zowie! We finally have a reasonable depiction of the concern," planetary scientist Eleanor Helin says.

"As a movie it was pretty good, and as a piece of science it was pretty good, too," says Clark Chapman, another prominent astronomer. "Scientists are critical people, but here they have made a serious attempt to try and get it right. They didn't always succeed, but it's roughly right in a lot of respects."

Which might be good news for "Deep Impact," but bad news for civilization as we know it. The movie chronicles the attempts of earthlings to deal with a massive comet racing toward a collision with our planet. Suffice it to say that they are not completely successful. A large piece of comet lands just off the Atlantic coast and spawns a tidal wave 100 yards high. Moviegoers observe as New York City and Washington, D.C., are quite believably obliterated.

Thus goes the latest in a spate of celestial disaster dramatics. In last year's "Asteroid" TV miniseries, Dallas got creamed. Coming soon is "Armaggedon," in which space hero Bruce Willis is dispatched to save the world by taking on an asteroid the size of Texas. (Scientists roll their eyes at this.)

'DEEP IMPACT' they say, is easily the best of the lot. What happens in the movie could happen in real life. That and worse. It's not likely any moment soon, perhaps, but planetary experts say the risk posed by asteroids and comets justifies far more concern than is currently exhibited by politicians and the general public.

"Unfortunately, the threat is real," says Jack Hills, an asteroid specialist with Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico. "It doesn't happen very often, which is fortunate in one respect. But in many ways it's unfortunate, because we won't do anything before the next one comes."

And the consequences of such inaction should a huge piece of space junk be headed our way?

"We're toast," Hills says.

AN UNIMAGINABLE DEATH TOLL

Astronomers have charted 120 asteroids more than a kilometer in diameter whose orbits intersect with Earth, and the number grows almost monthly. So far, calculations show that none poses a real threat. But scientists estimate that 2,000 space rocks of that size (the terms "asteroid" and "meteor" are essentially interchangeable) zip about the solar system, most of them as yet unseen.

Should one that size strike land, dust and vapors thrust into the stratosphere by the impact would plunge Earth into darkness for months, killing off much plant and animal life. The human species probably would not be entirely lost, but the death toll would be unimaginable.

MEANWHILE, A HUGE celestial object slamming into the Atlantic Ocean would produce "a tsunami that goes all the way up to the Appalachian Mountains in the upper two-thirds of the United States," Hills says.

"In Europe, the coast of the Iberian peninsula, Spain and Portugal, is basically wiped out, and the (seacoast) of France. So it's quite severe."

Scientists put the odds of such a catastrophe happening this year at about 1 in 300,000, considerably greater than those for drawing a royal flush in poker (1 in 649,000). Odds for a lesser but still disastrous collision are much greater, they say.

"It's probably about 1 in 3,000 or 1 in 5,000," Hills says. "That is, something large enough to devastate many kilometers of coastline. It would certainly be devastating regionally."

So it is a mistake to dismiss "Deep Impact" as science fiction, as many have done. Science, yes. Fiction, no.

"They did a rather remarkable job," says Helin, of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., who was among several scientists by moviemakers consulted in preproduction. "I've been involved for the last 20 or 25 years in these types of productions, and this by far is the best that's been done."

'THE SMOKING GUN'

Until fairly recently, even most of the scientific world pooh-poohed the danger posed by big pieces of celestial junk. That began to change in 1980, when geologists first proposed that the impact of a massive asteroid caused the extinction of the dinosaurs and most other species 65 million years ago.

That hypothesis was effectively confirmed this decade with the discovery of a massive crater in Mexico, where scientists believe an immense space boulder, probably six miles in diameter, crashed into Earth.

"There was rather a widespread feeling that this was the smoking gun," says Brian Marsden, a prominent Harvard astronomer.

That discovery caused a collective shudder in the scientific world. But in truth, Marsden says, evidence of the celestial danger has been with us on every moon-filled night since the beginning of man. After all, those aren't acne scars on the moon's tattered surface.

In 1908, a relatively small asteroid exploded in the atmosphere above Siberia, flattening trees across an area larger than Los Angeles.

In 1994, the Shoemaker-Levy 9 comet provided one of history's most dramatic demonstrations of the threat when pieces of it smashed into Jupiter. Much of the resulting carnage was visible through backyard telescopes.

"I didn't think we would see anything of the effects of impact on Jupiter, but it was really quite dramatic," Marsden says. "It threw a lot of stuff up in big high plumes that were clearly visible. Then, as Jupiter rotated, there was a dramatic black spot where the hit occurred.

"On the Earth, looking at those consequences, knowing that Jupiter is somewhat larger than the Earth, that would frighten anybody out of their wits."

In March, Marsden was the first to predict that a huge, newly discovered asteroid would pass dangerously close to Earth. Additional observations and calculations quickly showed that the original concern was somewhat overstated. But 30 years from now, Asteroid 1997 XF11 will come closer than any known asteroid of that size (perhaps as much as a mile in diameter) in recorded history.

Someday, a big one won't miss. Hence the increasingly urgent call from astronomers for the Earth to get ready. A top priority is identifying the rest of the 2,000 large, threatening asteroids still out there, an effort that could take a decade or more, and cost between $5 million and $10 million a year.

Technology must also be perfected to intercept and deflect heavenly rocks headed for Earth. In the case of comets, that will be difficult because of the relatively high speed with which they hurtle across the solar system. Conventional rocketry would be hard-pressed to keep up. But comets are relatively rare. Asteroids present a much greater threat and will be easier to deflect.

"The basic idea is that you send up a rocket with a nuclear explosive, an unmanned one, and you set it off about one radius of the asteroid away," Hills says. It can be done. People have analyzed it, and it looks quite tractable."

BUT NOT OVERNIGHT, he says, and it's possible that asteroids could approach with comparatively little warning.

"If you start fresh, and just wait until the asteroid is about to hit us, nothing can be done," Hills says.

Last week, a congressional subcommittee heard testimony about the threat and discussed funding to deal with it, but so far nothing. President Clinton has vetoed funding for anti-asteroid space missions.

The possible consequences, scientists say, are now playing in a theater near you.

Children playing outdoors can suffer heatstroke

By Dr. Ellen Putter
Associate Press

It's summer and the air is filled with the joyous sounds of children at play. From morning until night, children are chasing balls, capturing flags and playing tag. But this picture can turn grim if children play so hard and so long that they experience a condition called heat stroke.

Overheating occurs when people overexert themselves in very hot weather. Heat stroke takes place when the body's internal temperature rises high enough to damage itself. Although this is rare, heat stroke can cause imbalances in the body's electrolytes (or natural salts), shut down the kidneys, and cause shock or even death. Among those at greatest risk for heat stroke are the elderly, who are sensitive to heat and poor air quality, and children, who may not pay attention to signs that they are becoming overheated. Signs of extreme overheating include thirst, fatigue, flushed skin and feelings of dizziness.

At special risk are infants, toddlers and children with chronic illnesses, such as heart and lung problems or diabetes.

Infants and toddlers are especially sensitive to the sun because the surface area of their heads is large, relative to the rest of their bodies. Because of this greater surface area, their heads — if exposed to the sun — can absorb harmful amounts of heat.

Therefore, infants and toddlers should always wear hats when they go outside in hot, sunny weather. Very young children are also at risk for heat stroke because they may not be able to verbalize their need for water. Remember to provide them with plenty of liquids.

To protect your children this summer, follow these simple common-sense precautions:

- Never leave children locked inside an unattended car, even for a few minutes. Although this can be dangerous any time, it can quickly turn deadly when the weather is hot. Almost every summer, there are news reports of children dying of heat or suffocation after being locked inside a car and forgotten.
- Temperatures inside a parked car can reach as high as 150 degrees in the summer.
- Make sure children get plenty of fluids. Send them to camp with a water bottle. Or, if they're playing in the back yard, call frequent breaks for drinks. Serve children sports drinks to replace electrolytes that may be lost due to excessive sweating, or serve food with some added salt, which can also replace electrolytes lost through sweat.
- Give children opportunities to cool off in water.

Set up sprinklers, visit swimming pools or lakes, set up wading pools, or just use the shower. Immersing oneself in cold — but not icy — water is a good way to cool the body down.

- Have children play in shady areas, and make sure they take time out to rest.
- In times of extreme heat, allow children to cool off in air conditioning. If your home is not air-conditioned, use fans to circulate the air or visit movie theaters, restaurants or stores that are air-conditioned.
- Have children dress in light-colored clothes, which absorb less heat than dark colors. Avoid clothes made of synthetic fibers. Sweating is the body's natural way of cooling down. Clothing made of natural fibers allows the body to cool properly.

If a child shows signs of overheating, quickly take steps to cool him down. Any person who loses consciousness due to heat stroke should be taken immediately to the emergency room.

MIDLAND COLLEGE

BRIEFLY

Summer registration

Monday, June 8, is the last day to register for Summer I classes at Midland College.

Registration for the second summer session continues in the Student Services office in the Scharbauer Student Center. Summer II classes begin Tuesday, July 13. For registraton information, call 685-4501.

Orientation set

For new students who want a jump start in preparing for their fall semester at Midland College, the Student Services staff is offering two orientation sessions.

Orientation answers any questions students may have concerning testing, grants and scholarships.

Also, students may fill out paperwork and begin the registration process at the end of the orientation session, according to Counselor Shep Grinnan.

The sessions will be 9-11 a.m. June 8 and June 17 in the Roadrunner Room of the Scharbauer Student Center.

The orientation sessions are free and no advanced registration is required.

For more information call 685-4501.

Kids' College registration

It's not too late to register for the first session of Kids' College, Midland College's summer enrichment program for students who will be completing the first through sixth grades, which begins June 15.

Registration continues until a session begins or the class is full, according to Donna Hewett, Kids' College coordinator.

Two sessions of Kids' College will be offered. The first session runs June 15-25. Session II runs July 20-30. All classes are scheduled for afternoons, Monday through Thursday. For more information, call 685-4518.

Ceremony honors GED graduates

MC president urges students to set new goals

Congratulating them for their accomplishments, Midland College President David Daniel, praised the 46 students who participated in Midland College's annual GED graduation ceremonies May 27.

Praising the students for "making such a significant first step," Daniel urged the students to continue their education.

"Goals take you somewhere, and it's time to set another goal," he said.

Daniel was the keynote speaker in the event that recognized the students who passed the Midland College General Education Development Texas Certificate of High School Equivalency exam.

The students who were honored participated in the GED program through Midland College's Adult Basic Education Program that provides free tutoring for students working on passing the GED exam.

"Succeeding in education is a very positive step for an individual," Cindy Turland, Adult Basic Education director, said.

"These students have worked hard to progress academically. They deserve to feel very good about their accomplishments," she said.

The students are now eligible for Abell-Hanger scholarships for GED graduates who enroll in college classes at MC. The GED exam is competitive, with scholarships being given on the basis of test scores.

Passing the GED requires the same mastery of skills and subjects as a high school diploma, Daniel said. He also praised the teachers who participate in MC's Adult Basic Education program. "Your teachers do this for the love of teaching students like you," he said.

Students who completed the GED program and participated in the graduation ceremony at Midland College were: Juan Alcocer, Leonor Alcocer, Edward Alvarado, Rebekah Arnett, Michael Brown II, Rayon Calhoun, Shana Castleberry, Yvonne Chavez, Edmond Drake, Tommy Dulin, Skye Farris, Lisa G Flores, Raylinda Flores, Heiddy Gardea, Antonio Gonzales, Robert Gonzales, Isidoro Gutierrez and Brock Hammock;

Also, Curtis Hardy; Cristina Hernandez, Samantha Hernandez, Tamesha Hubert, Jessica Johnson, Mark Jones, April Kahle-Penney, Dulce Maldonado, Martin Marquez, Glenn McKinney, Patsy Molina, Manuela M. Moran, Alicia Munoz, Toni Ortega, Saul Padilla, Marcus Reese, Amanda Rios and Patricia Semple;

Also, Patrick Semple, Marissa Olalla Soto, Michelle Southerland, Laurianne Tague, Tanya Weeks, Pamela White Crane, Shawn Williams, David Yharte, Jon Yoder and Lourie Zachry.

Midland College Adult Basic Education Department offers on-going GED, English as a Second Language and Citizenship classes. These classes are held at Midland College's main campus on Garfield, Midland College's Cogdell South Facility on Florida Street and Casa De Amigos.

For information call 685-4566.

Graduation Celebration

GED graduate Rebekah Arnett gives the invocation at Midland College's graduation ceremony for GED students. More than 45 students participated in the annual ceremony at Chaparral Center May 27. The GED program provides free tutoring for students who are studying to pass the GED exam.

ELISE COOMBES

Courses prepare students for careers in travel industry

In response to continued demand throughout the United States, Midland College's Department of Continuing Department is again offering a popular training program this summer for individuals interested in careers in the travel industry.

The Travel Agent Training Program combines lectures and hands-on computer training to introduce student to the latest information.

The program consists of two classes. The first class, "Travel Career Training," 6:30-9:30 p.m., Tuesdays and Thursdays, June 9-July 2, introduces students to domestic and international air travel, vacation packages, tour operations, ticketing, cruises, sale methods, job search skills, resume preparations and interview strategies.

The second class, "Reservation Computer Training," 6:30-9:30 p.m., Tuesdays and Thursdays, July 7-Aug. 13, trains students on the most popular computer reservation software, provides instruction for fare pricing and ticketing, itinerary planning and hotel and rental car reservations.

To expand their industry knowledge and improve their marketability, students can take a specialized one-day seminar, "The Home Based Agent." This class will be 9:30 a.m.-12:30 p.m., Saturday, Aug. 15.

The curriculum for the courses is designed to prepare students for a variety of fun, dynamic and challenging entry-level employment opportunities.

The travel industry has become the fastest growing industry worldwide, with gross sales approaching $4 trillion and will provide 144,000 additional jobs by the year 2005.

Students who complete the travel program will be able to compete for jobs with airlines, travel agencies, rental car companies, cruise lines, or they can start a part-time, home-based travel agency.

For more information call Continuing Education at 915-685-4518.

Waste management seminar set

Money-saving waste prevention strategies is the topic of an interactive presentation from the Environmental Protection Agency to be broadcast at Midland College 10 a.m.-noon, Wednesday, June 17 in the Davidson Lecture Hall of the Health Science Building.

"Waste Prevention Pays: Businesses Cut Costs by Cutting Waste" is designed to help businesses gain a competitive edge through solid waste reduction.

During the call-in portion of the program, viewers will have the chance to ask questions and share experiences.

The program is sponsored by WasteWi$e Partners, which shares information about money-saving waste prevention strategies.

A door opens on yesterday when Summer in the City, via Texas Best, presents "A 1929 Garden Party" on the grounds of the Scarborough Linebery House.

"They are going to walk into a little slice of time from 1929," director Melanie Fry of Tulsa, Okla., said of the production. "And it's the day that Tom Linebery meets Evelyn Scarborough. They are still married, still alive. They've been married for 70 years."

The idea to stage such an event began with a child's desire to explore someone else's private property.

"When I was growing up in Midland, I often drove past the Scarborough Linebery House," said Linda Thorsen Bond of Texas Best. "It was big and beautiful, and it was back behind a fence, and I never saw the inside of it. I imagine that there are lots of people like me who want to know what the house looks like inside and who wondered what those people were like who lived in the house."

The garden party offers people the opportunity to peak into the lives of those living at 802 S. Main St. in 1929.

"The 1929 garden party is the first big event that's open to the public at the Scarborough Linebery House," Ms. Bond said.

During the historical drama, the lives of Wild Bill Scarborough, his preaching brother, Lee, and his hard working daughter, Evelyn, will be recreated by local actors.

"I loved doing the historical research on it, and I think I found out some things about the people who were there in 1929 that are human and interesting and true," Ms. Bond said.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ You get a series of jolts and surprises. Maintain perspective when someone shares. You don't have all the answers, but you know that you don't have the complete story. Let fun enter your life. A loved one lures you to his way of thinking. Tonight: The party is at your place.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ Hold on tight, because someone you put on a pedestal may inadvertently tumble off. Odd feelings punctuate recent developments. Understand someone's feelings, yet go with spontaneity. Only you can handle a money matter. Take charge. Tonight: A special invitation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ What you say has more meaning than you realize. Others take too seriously what you meant as a joke. Be careful when discussing someone's feelings. Make long-distance calls, arrange a trip and focus on making your life happier, yet simpler. Tonight: Make it an easy night.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★★ A partner delights you with his wild imagination. Listen to others, and share your feelings better. Your friend runs with what you say even softly. A gut feeling about money could pay off. Just don't risk anything you can't afford. Keep a secret. Tonight: Celebrate with friends.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ Someone could delight you. Listen carefully to what he suggests. Where your friends are is where your happiness lies. Getting together adds to the relaxation and the fun of the moment. A friend has some gossip for you. Be discriminating. Tonight: Visit a parent.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★★ Invite a friend to the movies or a concert. Put your feet up, and let yourself be entertained. You like what someone has to share. Touch base with an older relative. Use the insight you gather to move a project forward. Let go of problems. Tonight: Make that long-distance call.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ You are delighted by what someone has to share. Let go of restrictions, and loosen up. Don't be controlling. Listen to someone's suggestions. A child or a lover has much to share. Start talking about your visions for the future. Tonight: With your favorite friend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Others share some unusual ideas. You are delighted, and might toss plans and convention aside. Don't worry as much about what someone is going to say; rather, think about what a difference you can make. Invite friends over for a spontaneous barbecue or get-together. Tonight: Flip burgers.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★ A low profile might be desirable, but it is close to impossible. Flow with what is happening. When another piques your interest, you cannot help but chat up a storm. Just be careful about how much you reveal. Another obviously has strong opinions. Tonight: An early night.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★★ Make calls, and change the status quo. Much that is fun and desirable could cause a change in your plans. Be spontaneous, worry less about security and let go. A relationship becomes toasty as a result. A child or loved one adores the new you. Tonight: Let the wildness in.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ You stun others with your impulsiveness, but that isn't new! A friend has a lot to share. Talks are animated, and particularly caring. A change in pace is likely; respond to a last-minute request. Your responsibility comes through. Tonight: Burn the midnight oil.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Take off; someone's invitation is simply too enticing. Be open to unusual and different ideas. Understanding grows between you and a family member. Discussions are exciting and dynamic. New ideas hold tremendous appeal. Tonight: Do what comes instinctively.

Opening lead: King of ♡

Sometimes pretty plays are lost because circumstances are not all that dramatic. The hero of this deal from the Olympiad Mixed Pairs was Olivier Beauvillain of France.

North's two clubs was artificial and forcing and South's two-diamond response was a waiting bid. Thereafter the auction was natural, and the excellent six-diamond slam was reached.

Most pairs tried six spades, which was defeated two tricks after the lead of a heart. Unlucky, since the odds favored bringing in trumps without loss. Against six diamonds West led the king of hearts, taken with the ace. Declarer overtook the queen of diamonds with the king and cashed the ace. If East has four trumps declarer, now needing a normal spade division, simply plays spades until East ruffs. Declarer can then return to dummy with the nine of trumps to cash any remaining high spades. If West has four trumps, declarer takes three spade tricks, discarding hearts from hand, draws trumps and leads a low club, hoping that West holds the ace so that the king of clubs is an entry back to dummy.

When trumps broke 3-2, declarer's careful play in trumps produced a necessary extra chance. After both defenders followed to two rounds of trumps, declarer could afford the luxury of trumping a spade high, returning to dummy with the nine of trumps and cashing five spades to come home easily. The only trick for the defense was the ace of clubs.

Sunday

✔ Lawn concerts

The 11th season of the Museum of the Southwest's Summer Sunday Lawn Concerts begins today with The Pulsations performing vintage rock and contemporary country music starting at 7:45 p.m.

The outdoor performance will be held on the museum grounds, 1705 W. Missouri Ave. The nine-concert series features a variety of musical presentations with the talents of local entertainers. The concerts are held, weather permitting, every Sunday evening through Aug. 9 with the exception of July 5. People are invited to bring lawn chairs, quilts, picnics and drinks. Refreshments will be available for purchase.

The Pulsations is the outgrowth of a band formed by brothers Doug and Robbie Christensen with Mike Austin and Mike Cunningham when the friends attended San Jacinto Junior High School in 1964. The four are still part of the band — Doug on drums and Robbie on keyboards and vocals, Austin playing rhythm guitar and Cunningham on bass guitar. Other band members are Bill Clifton, harmonica and slide guitar; Louis Renaud, lead guitar; Lynn Renaud, lead vocalist; and Mary Ann Oakley, keyboards and vocals.

The season includes some groups new to the museum program such as the jazz combo Razzmatazz; Ricky Boen and Texas Mud's cowboy music; Victor Ochoa and Expressions introducing their brand of salsa; and Midland's neighbors from Stanton, The Old Sore Head rag Time Band. Former Midlanders Joseph and Theresa Brunelle will return from Nashville to present their modern folk ballads. The Zachery Brothers bring gospel, blues and country songs and Midnight Stampede provides boot scootin' country. The Shades close the season Aug. 9 with party rock.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram and The Kent Companies are major sponsors of the family entertainment.

✔ Mummers' cast

Members of the Midland Summer Mummers season's casts for "Rascality on the Rig" or "Oil's Well That Ends Well" has been announced by director Harry Harrison.

The melodrama is double cast. Members include Darrell Ward and Mike Harrell as the villain, Lester Leasehold; Roger Barnes and Gary Hall as the villain's sidekick, Ralph Rockhound; Tim Rosborough and John Briggs as the hero, Terence Trueblue; Todd Mathis and Scooter Tilley as the hero's sidekick, Sliderule Simpson; Jennifer Wisdom and Connie Barnes as the heroine, Patience Plugback; Cindy Oglesby and Cat Pause as the heroine's aunt, Peaches Plugback; Cherrie McPherson and Stephanie Brown as Lady Lucretia Lugbottom; Carrie Schreiber and Dayna Dunningan as Odessa Delilah; David Odom and Dan Marchant as Skeeter Skidder; Stephen Wilson and Art Valencia as Frank Formfill; Melanie Daniel, Stacy Harrell and Charlotte Wornell as the rig girls.

The alternating casts will begin performances July 3 through the closing date on labor Day. Reservations may be made by calling or going by the box office at Cole Theatre, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., 682-4111.

The production will be presented at the home of the Summer Mummers, the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave. This summer represents the 50th anniversary of the annual melodrama and olio.

✔ Top craftsman

Midlander Betsy Haney has been named one of the top 200 traditional craftsmen in the country by Early American Homes magazine.

Ms. Haney will be listed in the magazine's Directory of Traditional American Crafts, which appears in the August 1998 issue.

Now in its 13th year, the directory has become a source for collectors and museums needing to protect antiques by replacing them in public displays with reproductions and for movie set designers looking to recreate historically accurate interiors.

Selected from among hundreds of entries nationwide, Ms. Haney's craft was rated for its quality workmanship and fidelity to period design and construction techniques by an independent panel with expertise in museum-quality antiques and marketable reproductions.

✔ Art show, sale

STAMFORD — The Stamford Art Foundation has announced that its 25th annual Art Show and Sale will be dedicated to acclaimed Western artist Tom Ryan, now a Midland resident.

Ryan has roots in Stamford and was instrumental in the founding of the Stamford Art Foundation in 1974. He is a member and past president of the Cowboy Artists of America and served as art director for the Stamford Art Foundation's first show. The show has benefited the West Texas Rehabilitation Center for 25 years.

Joe Means of Stamford is president of the Stamford Art Foundation.

This year's art preview, sale and dinner will be held beginning at 6:30 p.m. June 30 on the eve of the Texas Cowboy reunion. The John Selmon Memorial Gallery on the rodeo grounds houses the multimedia art exhibit which will feature works by 32 Western artists including Ryan.

Artists committed to this year's show include Barry Arthur, Gary Artzt, Brain Asher, Lynn Brown, Duane Bryers, Garnett Buster, Marianne Caroselli and Gerald Clark.

Other artists who will participate include Gail Copeland, Lenell Deane, Curtis Dykes, Paul Friske, Jim Hamilton Jr. Erwin Hearne, Shirley Hullum, Robert P. Kidd, Theresa Martin, Vel Miller, Paul Tadlock, Darlene Wall, K.W. Whitley, Jack Wilson and Don Yandell.

In addition to having their works in the show, the following artists will participate in the popular "Quick Draw" event: Jodie Boren, George Boutwell, R. Russell Brown, Hugh Campbell III, Bill Chappell, Steve Grey, Richard Harvey and Daniel Maldonado. Quick Draw artists are given an hour to create a piece of art from scratch.

Tickets to the event are $28 a person and may be purchased in advance form members of the Stamford Art Association.

For more information call Pat Clayton at the West Texas Rehabilitation Center, Abilene, (915) 793-3507.

Future Events

✔ ALBANY — The 60th anniversary of the Fort Griffin Fandangle of Albany is set for 8:30 p.m. June 18-20 and June 25-27 at the Prairie Theater outside Albany.

The Fandangle Parade, featuring some of the favorite sets such as the stagecoach and the steam-driven calliope will begin at 6 p.m. June 25.

The Fort Griffin Fandangle is a satire of life at the fort 17 miles north of Albany and of the lively and lusty town of Fort Griffin, often called "The Flat," which sprang up nearby. The fort was situated on a hilltop for protection from marauding Indians.

Fandangle scripts were written by playwright and author Robert Nail, who also envisioned the show and produced it from 1938 until his death in 1968. Betsy Parsons, who grew up in the Fandangle, is in her fifth year as director.

✔ DALLAS — The first Texas Big Band Festival has been scheduled for June 19 and 20 with all proceeds benefiting the Volunteers of America Texas.

The festival will feature more than a dozen stars of the Big Band era and will celebrate the 80th birthday of Michael "Peanuts" Hueko, widely regarded as among the world's foremost jazz clarinetists.

The headliners will appear at a special VIP jam session and dinner June 19 that is open only to those who have purchased VIP packages to the festival.

For information on those packages, call Linda Barker at VOA metro, (817) 649-7491.

On June 20, the headliners will perform as a big band in concert at the Bronco Bowl Arena here. Each headliner will choose two or three selections representative of the all-time great big bands in which they played, leading to a tribute to seven of these bands with the original arrangements played by several of the original musicians who performed them.

Tickets to the concert are available through Ticketmaster and are priced at $30 a person.

✔ FORT WORTH — Casa Manana Theatre has opened its 40th Summer Season with Irvin Berlin's musical, "Annie Get Your Gun" being performed through June 20 under the dome at Casa's main stage, 3101 W. Lancaster.

Performances are at 8 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday with 2 p.m. matinees Saturday and Sunday.

Tickets range from $27 to 32. Tickets for children 18 and younger and students with a college ID are half price.

All tickets are available by calling (817) 332-CASA or any Ticketmaster outlet.

✔ SAN ANGELO — The fourth annual San Angelo Quilt Show is set for June 19-20 at the ballroom of the Cactus Hotel.

Show hours are 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. June 19 and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. June 20. There will be hourly demonstrations on various elements of quilt making the afternoon of June 19 and all day June 20.

Admission is $1.

The donation quilt this year is a Baltimore Album made and quilted by the Concho Valley Quilters Guild. Proceeds benefit historical preservation. Drawing for the quilt will be 4 p.m. June 20.

RFK documentary shows striking differences with today's politicians

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Adoring crowds treated Robert F. Kennedy like a rock star during his brief presidential crusade in 1968 — chasing his motorcade, grasping so desperately at his arms they were cut and sore after a day of campaigning.

That was before Watergate, before tracking polls, before a weary disappointment in politics set in that can be traced partly to the night Kennedy lay dying with a bullet in his head.

Could it be 30 years ago?

Watching the Discovery Channel's three-hour documentary on Kennedy, which premieres tonight at 8 p.m. EDT, it feels like a much more distant time in public life.

Real passion for politics, and a politician who bares his soul to the public seem out of place today. So Jack Newfield, Kennedy biographer and the film's co-producer, set out to evoke that spirit as well as to tell the Kennedy story.

"This film was intended as the antidote to 'Primary Colors,' which was about the cynicism of politics," Newfield said. "I hope this is about the idealism of politics."

Kennedy visited migrant workers in California and spent time among the poor in Brooklyn's tough Bedford Stuyvesant neighborhood. Not only did he feel their pain, he convinced them he was their best hope to do something about it. Former New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, one of the film's three narrators, called it "sensual politics."

The documentary starts slowly, detailing Kennedy's upbringing in a competitive family. One anecdote, about how Kennedy's father didn't consider a ski trip successful unless his boys had some sort of injury, takes on an eerie resonance with the death of RFK's son, Michael, on the ski slopes last New Year's Eve.

It follows Kennedy's career as a Senate aide and attorney general in the his brother's administration. He attacked organized crime figures and labor corruption.

The film's impact deepens when it describes Kennedy's growth as a man and politician after John F. Kennedy was assassinated.

Robert Kennedy, who frequently climbed a fence at Arlington National Cemetery to pray by his brother's grave,

PLAY: Cast includes many newcomers

(From 1)

Participating in the interactive show written by Ms. Bond are Nancy Bowlin, Stockton Williams, Dick Rowland, Hilary Evitt, Pam Six, Clay Gaston, Dan Partain, Shirley Jones, Joyce Reaves, Lyn Miller, Erin Smith, Jill Counts, Alathea Blischke, Gus Eckert, Deborah Peckham, Peggy Thorsen, Sherrill Welch, Nancy Pipkin, Bruce Partain, John Griffin, Janice Archer, Jere Hubbard, Frances Stapp, Bill Dingus, Bea Lea Somerville, Hazel Sommerville, Gail Miller, Betty McDonald, Clynice Baker, James Bradford, Margaret Steel, Carolyn Schoolcraft and other members of the board of Scarborough-Linebery House. Scott Martin is running sound equipment furnished by Mainstream Music of Odessa, and Neal Richmond is furnishing the antique car.

In the production, Ms. Fry said, "Evelyn has come home from college. She's the first college graduate in the Scarborough family. And the Scarboroughs have moved from the Frying Pan Ranch, 60 miles west of here. It's sort of a little gathering to honor the fact that Evelyn has come home, and they have moved into the big house and invited their friends and neighbors over for cookies and lemonade.

"We have speaking cast members and townspeople, and even the townspeople have to be authentic characters. They either look in old newspapers or some of the historical books on Midland.

"They must come up with an actual character alive in 1929 and find out the history of that character. Whether you have a speaking role or not, if you're hanging around in 1920s clothing, you will know some of the history of Midland."

Last year's presentation, "Wedding of Sarah Brown Dorsey," featured "more little monologues," Ms. Fry said. "... The one this year is more interactive, more dialogue as opposed to monologue."

The cast is comprised of veterans and newcomers to the stage.

"A lot of the actors have never had experience acting," Ms. Fry said. "That makes me excited. One of my missions in life is pointing people toward the things they love and showing them their talents and the things they can do."

Tim Fischer/Reporter-Telegram

"A 1929 Garden Party" runs Thursdays through Saturday's through June 20 from 7:30-9 p.m. Tickets are $10 a person and include the play, a tour of the historic house and refreshments.

This director's attitude about working with inexperienced actors is simple. "People say, 'Oh, I couldn't act,' when they are just dying to do it inside. I figure if the desire is there, there's probably some promise, some talent."

Ms. Fry, who directed "Wedding of Sarah Brown Dorsey," was eager to direct another historical production here.

"I always feel like the little princess when I come here," Ms. Fry said. "And when I go back to Tulsa, I turn into a pumpkin — not the coach. People are so open, so big-hearted. I always feel like I've lived here a million years, and nobody's a stranger. I feel like I know everybody."

Ms. Fry also finds local history "fascinating. Midland and Tulsa are related in oil. Tulsa used to be called the oil capital of the world. It isn't any more. In the bust of the '80s, everything moved to Houston.

"The difference between Tulsa and Midland — when the bottom fell out of the oil, the bottom fell out of the arts (in Tulsa). The Midland community — people, businesses and organizations — still continue to heavily support the arts here."

Performances are set for 7:30 to 9 p.m. Thursday through Saturday through June 20. Tickets are $10 a person and include the play, a tour of the historic house, and refreshments on the lawn. Guests are invited to wear casual or historic clothes.

For information or reservations call 687-1149 or write Texas Best, P.O. Box 3494, Midland, Texas 79702.

"It's kind of a three-in-one deal," Ms. Fry said. "It's a tour. It's refreshments. It's a play. It's an extraordinary experience. I love doing it. We have nothing like this in Tulsa. Nothing."

TV: Show good for those unfamiliar with Kennedy became much more reflective and unafraid to let the public see his doubts.

The New York senator agonized over the Vietnam War, eventually opposing it and admitting to mistakes in JFK's administration. Initially he was slow to back the civil rights struggle — as attorney general, he authorized a wiretap of the Rev. Martin Luther King — before becoming a strong supporter.

He acknowledged waiting too long to run for president, jumping into the race only after Eugene McCarthy proved that dissatisfaction with the Johnson administration could be tapped.

"In order to evaluate the current crop of politicians, you need to know how good a politician can be," Newfield said. "You can't measure David Mamet until you read Shakespeare. You can't judge Bernie Williams unless you saw Willie Mays.

"I think (Kennedy) was just a politician, but he was as good as a politician can get, in terms of getting more open, more thoughtful and more independent as he got close to the presidency, rather than more cynical and more cautious and more programmed, as most politicians do as they acquire more power."

Newfield speaks with some of Kennedy's children, who read notes their father wrote to them on historic occasions such as the desegregation of the University of Alabama and the day JFK was buried. They're like treasured time capsules to the recipients.

Newfield said he was surprised when historian Doris Kearns Goodwin told him that in a late-night conversation, Kennedy revealed he was convinced that organized crime murdered his brother.

In one poignant moment, former Sen. George McGovern talks of how vulnerable, even small, Kennedy appeared physically the last time he saw him, standing on an airport tarmac.

Remembering the moment, McGovern's eyes glisten and his voice cracks. He waves off the camera, explaining he must be getting tired.

Newfield's documentary is a fine, if somewhat unbalanced, primer for people unfamiliar with Kennedy or the notion that politics can touch people's lives so deeply. The documentary's tone is largely reverential. And although Newfield insists Kennedy's mistakes are not covered up, critics don't get much time on camera.

For that, Newfield makes no apologies.

"I think the film is basically an appreciation, telling people to take a second look at this guy," he said. "He was special. The lost potential was gigantic."

The basic concept is to look at how contemporary American artists use discarded and recycled materials and the premise of the exhibition is rooted in history. The tradition of recycling goes back to the 19th century when American pioneers had to reuse items instead of discarding them.

With the increased environmental concerns of recent years, the use of recycled materials in art has gained new credibility.

"Sell It In 10" or We'll Run It Again"

3 LINES 10 DAYS $15

EACH ADDITIONAL LINE $5.00

If you have a car, truck, van, RV, motorcycle, boat or airplane we'll advertise it for 10 consecutive days. In the unlikely event you don't sell it we'll run it another 10 days at no charge. At the end of 20 days if it hasn't sold we'll run it another 10 days at no charge. If you'll reduce the price by 10%. Price must be in ad. Only one vehicle per ad. For private individuals only.

Clayton Williams Jr., chairman and president of Clayton Williams Energy Inc., says low oil prices, new technology and abundant opportunities are behind his company's return to natural gas exploration. A pioneer in deep natural gas drilling in Texas, Williams says he is returning to his roots by shifting the exploration efforts of Clayton Williams Energy from the Austin Chalk to the Gulf Coast of East Texas, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Curt Wilcott / Reporter-Telegram

Low oil price, new opportunities behind Clayton Williams Energy return to natural gas exploration

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

In the sixties and seventies, he was one of the top natural gas wildcatters in Texas. In the eighties and nineties, he became one of the top oil producers in the Austin Chalk Trend. Now Clayton Williams, chairman and president of Clayton Williams Energy Inc. says he is going turn his sights back to natural gas.

After diligently and deliberately moving up in the ranks of Texas oil producers, Clayton Williams Energy Inc. has made a calculated decision to forego its chase for oil and focus on natural gas. The company announced last month that it would discontinue Trend drilling, and focus on natural gas exploration if oil prices remained low.

Focus On Gas

Other oil companies, too, have begun to quietly, and less formally, shift their affections from oil to natural gas, making the gas country of South Texas and East Texas the hottest spots in the state. But Williams says his shift to natural gas began two years ago when oil prices were still high, and he was climbing the state production ladder.

Since 1995 the company has risen in Texas oil production from a ranking of 32 to 21 in 1997. At 9,761 barrels a day, Clayton Williams Energy came in just below Phillips Petroleum and slightly ahead of Conoco and Fina. Heading the list of the state's top 50 oil producers were Altura, Exxon and Marathon.

The first quarter of this year, Clayton Williams Energy oil production was up another 28 percent — mostly as the result of drilling very long, record-breaking horizontal laterals in the Austin Chalk.

In 1997, the company established a world record for both horizontal length and horizontal length drilled within a 24 hour period. In 1995, the company broke its own world record for slim-hole horizontal drilling four separate times. It was also the year the company began to drill dual-stacked laterals. The Ely Unit No.1, with dual stacked laterals of 8,015 feet each or a total horizontal section of 16,030 feet, was one of those records.

"The secret to drilling in the Chalk," said Williams, "is to drill laterals as far as possible and intersect as many fractures as possible. Revenues are in direct proportion to the length of the lateral. When we started in 1989, we were drilling 2,000-foot laterals: now we are drilling 10-12,000 ft. laterals." But low oil prices and the short-lived reserves of the Chalk wells were not entirely to Williams' liking, even though they turned a profit at today's prices. "I remember speaking to a packed meeting of royalty owners when the Austin Chalk was coming on strong. I told them that a lot of them would make a lot of money very fast, but the checks would not come forever."

In returning to natural gas, Williams says he is returning to his roots. "Natural gas is where we got our start. Like Robert O. Anderson and Tom Brown, we are a company with a tradition for building. Very little of our growth comes from acquisitions. Once again we intend to build natural gas reserves with the drill bit."

Over 85 percent of the 1998 drilling budget is pegged for natural gas drilling, and Clayton Williams Jr. estimates 90 percent of company exploration efforts will be directed toward natural gas.

> 'Natural gas is where we got our start. Once again we intend to build natural gas reserves with the drill bit.'
> Clayton Williams, Chairman, President

It is a plan that has been unfolding for the past two years, as Clayton Williams Energy began to funnel oil production revenues into buying leases and shooting 3D seismic in Mississippi, the Deep Wilcox, Cotton Valley Pinnacle Reef and Louisiana. In 1997, the company completed a survey across 55,000 net acres in Robertson County and identified 11 Pinnacle Reef anomalies on only one-third of the acreage. Williams said he expected many of the prospects would be successful because "3D seismic works better on the Gulf Coast."

In May of this year, the company spudded its 16,000-ft. J.C. Fazzino Unit No.1 in Robertson County to test a 3D seismic anomaly identified in the 1997 survey. In Glen Rose County the company is drilling an exploratory well on a 50,000-acre lease block in Grimes, Walker and Madison Counties, and has completed the location for a 12,000-ft. Wilcox test on a Duvall County prospect. "We also have a real good prospect in Louisiana that we are going to drill," said Williams.

While present income may be lower because of lease acquisitions, seismic surveys and drilling, Mel Riggs, chief financial officer of Clayton Williams Energy, said the rewards of present spending would be seen in 1999. "Seismic done in 1997 will result in 1998 drilling and income in 1999."

With so many oil companies turning to natural gas to survive the oil price downturn, Williams says there is still "room for everyone." He doesn't see a glut of operators in the gas play, nor does he see a natural gas glut and lower gas prices following on the heels of intense gas exploration. He feels growing demand for natural gas will take up much of the slack.

Even more optimistic, he thinks this round of building gas reserves may be easier than in the 1970s, when Clayton Williams Jr. and Clajon, his gas gathering company, became the biggest gas operators in the state with personal production of 100-120 Mmcfd and 225 Mmcfd for Clajon.

While many of the deep Delaware gas fields were easily found with 2-D seismic, and were completed as prolific and fierce giants, when natural gas prices were as low as 16 cents per mcf, Williams thinks there are more good drilling prospects today than in the heyday of deep gas development. "I just wish I had the money to do them all."

Tom Brown initiates new gas play

■ Midland firm looks for big basin centered deposits in Rockies

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Improved economics, new drilling and completion technology and the ability to spot "sweet" spots has created new interest in basin-centered exploration in the Rocky Mountains and Midland-based Tom Brown Inc. is one of the biggest players in the play.

Focus On Gas

The company has initiated a basin-centered exploration program in the Rocky Mountains that, if successful, could add substantial new reserves to the company.

The first well in the program has resulted in a substantial discovery, but it is too early to make any predictions about future successes, said Don Evans, chairman Tom Brown Inc.

The company's Tribal Sand Mesa 24-32 well on the Wind River Indian Reservation of Wyoming has reported initial production of 3.5 Mmcfd of gas with 1,950 psi flowing tubing pressure from the Ft. Union formation at 14,500 ft.

The well, which was completed in 700 ft. of net pay over a gross interval of 2,800 ft. is 11 miles east of the Muddy Ridge and Pavillion field in the Wind River Basin.

> 'If the wells are successful, we will be looking at years of development and substantial reserves.'
> Don Evans, Chairman

The company has also tested the Prairie Schooner 17-31 for non-commercial amounts of gas and water from the Lance formation from 11,000 to 13,600 ft. The well is located between the Reservation and the Frenchie Draw field. Tom Brown Inc. owns a 60 percent interest in both wells, and with 1.1 million acres under lease in the Wind River is the dominant player.

"If the wells are successful, we will be looking at years of development drilling and the addition of substantial reserves," said Evans. He said the company is pleased so far with results, but new technologies and further drilling will be needed to fully evaluate the program. Plans call for the company to monitor the Tribal Sand Mesa for several months before doing further drilling in the area.

Evans said both wells are part of a "basin centered" exploration program that is targeting five basins and five formations in the Wind River Basin. He noted that improved natural gas economics in the Permian Basin were behind the new play, which will target trillions of cubic feet of gas.

Large basin-centered accumulations have long been know. According to a USGS report as much as 330 trillion cubic feet of natural gas may be in place under the Wind River. Tom Brown who has been in the Basin since 1975, has been working on its basin-centered program for the past seven years.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

U.S. quality of life depends on highways

This should be a non-story — a topic totally unworthy of reporting. Defending the benefits of highways and motor vehicles is about as logical as defending the dignity of human life. But this is a politically-correct age in which we, too often, find ourselves in intellectual battles with the absurd — defending self-evident truths.

Pitts

Since the petrophobes have made a point of questioning the benefit of U.S. highway transportation, saying that its costs outweigh benefits, and since some media and politicians have taken it seriously, a response seems in order.

In the name of air quality, Vice President Al Gore has likened hydrocarbon fuels and motor vehicles as something akin to an environmental cancer. Other radical environmentalists have suggested it may be time to restrict road travel, thus limiting pollution from motor vehicles.

Then there is the gas guzzler tax issue. Some would impose hefty taxes on automobiles and trucks and use the funds to reduce the federal deficit. A gas guzzler tax of $1,000 has been recommended for sport utility vehicles, and a proposal to up the minimum mileage rating of 22 mpg to 24 mpg is on the political table.

In short, our transportation system is under attack. There are many radical environmental groups putting so many proposals, suggestions and new laws on the political table that some are bound to slip through the cracks of reason. Do these individuals really think American highways and motor vehicles contribute so little to society that they can be restricted in the name of clean air?

The American Petroleum Institute decided to intellectually challenge this absurdity with a study to determine the exact contribution of the nation's highways and motor vehicles. The study, conducted by Dr. Thomas Hogarty, an economist and retired API researcher, was an eye-opener.

Hogarty determined that the tangible benefits from motor vehicle transport ranges from $6 trillion to $10 trillion annually. That is comparable to a year's gross domestic output. Moreover, the study concluded that the benefits of our transportation system exceed by trillions even the highest estimates of "social costs," such as accidents, congestion, and air pollution.

Among the intangible benefits are: jobs, personal security and higher standards of living. The study further concludes, to no one's surprise, that the standard of American living could be further improved by spending an even higher percentage of highway user taxes for roads, and not government schemes to limit mileage and travel. The thought of more highways and more cars and more people traveling would send chills up the spine of hardcore environmental types, but look around you and see how many highways, freeways and interstates you would want to give up. Find one that hasn't made life substantially better.

Burleson named Young Engineer of the Year

The Permian Basin Chapter of the Texas Society of Petroleum Engineers has chosen GAYLE BURLESON as the Young Engineer of the Year. This award is given annually to an engineer under the age of 34 who has shown outstanding achievements and dedicated service to the engineering profession. Ms. Burleson was honored recently at the TSPE annual banquet at the Midland Petroleum Club and will be honored at the TSPE Annual Convention in Ft. Worth June 19.

Burleson

Ms. Burleson has been a petroleum engineer in Midland for 10 years, serving on the Society of Petroleum Engineers Board of Direction and as ATCE Publicity Chairman. In 1996 she was awarded SPE's "Paper of the Year" award. She recently joined Mobil Oil in Midland as a staff reservoir engineer working the development of a new horizontal drilling and CO2 project in Utah.

INDUSTRY BRIEFS

EBCO sets Permian Basin auction in Midland

Hundreds of oil and gas properties are set to go on sale at an EBCO Resources Inc. auction slated for August 25 at Midland Center.

Among those selling properties will be: Altura Energy, Southwest Royalties, Maralo and others. The properties are scattered throughout the Permian Basin and include: Hockley, Winkler, Lea and Eddy counties.

Bill Dukes, Divestment Coordinator for Houston-based Altura Energy, said Altura expected to contribute over 400 properties to the sale. "We have achieved excellent results, selling oil and gas properties in Midland."

David Smart, president of the Oklahoma City-based EBCO, said holding the auction in Midland made a lot of sense. "A large number of potential acquisitions will be available at one time, and the location is highly convenient for most bidders." He said over 400 bidders attended the company's last regional auction at Oklahoma City.

Smart said EBCO would work with the Midland consulting firm of T. Scott Hickman & Associates to assist in marketing properties of significant value.

Waid and Associates opens Midland office

Waid and Associates will host an Open House for its new Permian Basin office in Midland on Thursday, June 18 from 1 p.m. until 7 p.m. Located at 3000 North Garfield Street, Suite 212, the new office will provide environmental and engineering services and expertise in the area of environmental and regulatory compliance management, environmental information systems and waste/wastewater management.

The company was founded in 1978 by Midland native Ken Waid, and the Permian Basin office will be electronically connected and integrated with the company's Austin office.

Oklahoma production hits 83-year low

OKLAHOMA CITY — Oklahoma's oil and natural gas production last year was low again.

The state Corporation Commission said the state produced 83.4 million barrels of oil in 1997, the lowest amount since 73.6 million barrels in 1914. Since 1984, at the end of a drilling boom, the state's oil production has declined every year.

The state produced 1.713 trillion cubic feet of gas last year, the lowest total since 1.607 trillion cubic feet in 1968 and the fourth year in a row for a decline.

TOM BROWN: Evaluating new play

(From 1)

Basin-centered gas is described by Petrie Parkman & Co., a Petroleum Research firm, as "regionally-pervasive deposits that are usually abnormally pressured and are mostly independent of structural and stratigraphic traps." The deposits, which have been attributed to a number of sources, are normally found in low-permeability rocks with capillary action being the only trapping mechanism. For this reason, hydraulic fracturing is usually required to establish commercial production. And, the low-flow wells are drilled underbalanced to prevent formation damage.

The present basin-centered exploration play includes the Piceance, Big Horn, Wind River, Greater Green River, and D-J basins in the Rockies. The Jonah Field, in Sublette County, Wyoming, is one of the largest basin-centered deposits.

PITTS: Even water has its downside

(From 1)

No one is saying highways and automobiles don't create smog, congestion, and accidents — that's obvious. Millions of acres of forest, prairie, fields and plains are paved over each year with millions of barrels of tacky, hydrocarbon asphalt. And millions of motor vehicles pour rivers of particulants, and noxious gases into the atmosphere. That's a downside, but it is just one side.

Water cools, cleans, gives life, grows food, puts out fires, provides an avenue of transportation. But it also has a downside. It causes rains, floods, snow, ice and hail that can destroy property and human life. As someone once pointed out, if water were being approved today, this potentially dangerous chemical would never be approved by the environmentalists.

Life is full of ying and yang. Almost everything has a downside. But no one seems to focus so intently on the downside, without giving thought to the upside, as the radical environmentalists. These are the people that would ban freon from air conditioners and asthma inhalers to fix a global warming problem that may or may not exist, and probably couldn't be fixed by man even if it did exist.

Humble Service Station

For many Texans, this Humble Oil Co. service station (possibly in Central Texas) is a sign of the past. Humble, now Exxon, is distributing the photos as a pleasant and friendly reminder of the company's history. Humble Oil Co., the second largest oil producer in Texas, second only to Altura, pioneered many service station advances including the clean restroom policy and self-service pumps. The photo is being distributed as part of a promotional package.

Gas prices fall on continued reports of high inventories, reduced demand

NEW YORK – Natural gas fell for the first time Wednesday in four days after a private forecaster said U.S. producers still are adding gas to storage even with inventories 40 percent higher than a year ago.

Focus On Gas

Natural gas fell more than 2 percent on forecasts that an industry report later will show inventories already high, rose by almost 6 percent last week.

GasFax, a closely watched Kase & Co. Inc. publication based in New Mexico, estimated that 80 billion cubic feet of gas was injected into storage in the week ended May 29.

Analysts and traders surveyed by Bloomberg News expect that inventories increased an average 93 billion cubic feet during the week ended May 29, bringing U.S. storage to 1.65 trillion cubic feet, 37 percent higher than a year earlier.

"Prices are lower in anticipation of robust injections," said David Chang, vice president of trading at Bank of America in New York. "Fundamentally, the storage is very, very bearish."

> 'Prices are lower in anticipation of robust injections.'
> David Chang, Vice President

Natural gas for July delivery at the Henry Hub in Louisiana fell 3.5 cents, or 1.6 percent, to $2.156 a million British thermal units on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Gary Saccente, gas trader at ABN Amro Chicago Corp. predicted that if the storage numbers prove less than expected, prices could rise by 20 cents within a few days to the low $2.30s.

The AGA reported last week that inventories for the week ended May 22 were 1.56 trillion cubic feet – 41 percent above last year.

The high injections are occurring because demand so far has been less than anticipated because of mild weather, Chang said.

"There's been no (extreme) weather in the Northeast or the West," Chang said. "I guess the weather is easing out in the Southwest."

Temperatures in the Southwest had been 10 or 15 degrees above normal for the first three days this week, Chang said, which would raise demand for natural gas to generate electricity for air conditioning. Temperatures in the Southwest are now forecast to moderate over the next seven days with cooling demand falling to 44 percent of normal in the Southwest, according to according to Weather Derivatives of Belton, Mo.

Cooling demand is forecast to be 63 percent of normal over the next seven days nationwide and heating demand is expected to be 122 percent of normal, Weather Derivatives said. The forecast nationwide is for temperatures to be 2.9 degrees below normal.

Horizontal Drilling Technician

Technology

The Midland Reporter-Telegram, in conjunction with the 1998 Permian Basin International Oil Show is exploring the possibility this year of offering technological presentations on several leading edge drilling techniques.

One technology that has agreed to make a presentation is the Gas Research Institute which is studying the feasibility of using high energy laser beams to drill oil and gas wells. GRI working in concert with the U.S. Army and Air Force has already demonstrated the possibility of using such beams to drill wells vertically.

The high energy laser beams are capable of blasting a five-inch hole through solid rock, and may even be capable of glazing a hole from surface to TD, so that each well forms its own casing.

Another innovative drilling technique that promises to have great potential in the Permian Basin is water jetting technology in which horizontal laterals are drilled with a jet of high pressure water. Four 400 ft. laterals have been drilled in less than four hours for a cost of only $30,000 in each case, where the technology has been applied, production has been at least doubled or tripled. Directional Stimulation of Midland has the license on the technology.

Did You Know...

Did you know that by the turn of the century, the Permian Basin will account for 75 percent of all the oil produced in Texas. That leaves only 25 percent for South Texas, North Texas, Central Texas, the Panhandle, East Texas and the Gulf Coast.

Now International

This marks the first year in which the Permian Basin Oil Show becomes the Permian Basin International Oil Show. The Oil Show board decided to make the name switch after the 1996 Show in which an extraordinary number of international delegate and exhibitors were in attendeance at the show. "The international flavor of the show has been increasing steadily over the years," said Oil Show executive director Jay Alvey.

Plan now to attend and be a part of the 1998 Permian Basin International Oil Show

October 20, 21 & 22

EXCEPTIONAL EVENT

If you sell or service the onshore oil and gas industry, domestically or internationally, you will want to be a part of the Permian Basin International Oil Show. With over 800 exhibitors and 357,000 square feet of exploration and production exhibits, it is the largest inland petroleum exposition in the world. Over 100,000 are expected to attend this three-day petroleum event, which has become know as the "official trade show for the world's onshore oil industry."

EXCEPTIONAL EXPOSURE

Oil show exhibitors are guaranteed exceptional exposure. Whether you are an exhibitor or not, you can have amplified, exceptional and affordable exposure at the Oil Show by advertising in the Permian Basin Oil & Gas Report: Oil Show Edition. The Award-winning Oil & Gas Report is the official publication for the Permian Basin oil and gas industry. With a weekly circulation of 30,000 plus special Show distribution, it is the most widely distributed and read energy publication covering the Oil Show.

EXCEPTIONAL INFORMATION

The Oil & Gas Report: Oil Show Edition will not only publish information contained in the official Oil Show Program, including a map of exhibits and complete exhibitors list, it will also offer dozens of informative and interesting articles about the Permian Basin, the oil and gas industry and applied technology that is working for Permian operators.

Halliburton, Shell, Statoil enter major technology joint ventures

Expandable casing technology planned for Deep Gulf

DALLAS —Shell and Halliburton affiliates have announced significant technology ventures that could result in technology with applications in the Permian Basin.

The companies have signed a Memorandum of Intent to develop and commercialize expandable casing technology. The new technology, originally developed by Shell, promises to significantly reduce the cost of drilling, especially in deepwater regions like the Gulf of Mexico.

Shell Technology Ventures Inc. and Halliburton Energy Services plan to form a limited liability company managed and funded 50/50 by the two firms. The autonomous new company should be launched by the fourth quarter of 1998.

After a hole section is drilled, expandable casing may be run in the usual manner. Once the casing is in place, a mandrel is run to expand the casing. Initial tests have demonstrated that the casing may be expanded at a rate of 100 feet per minute.

Expandable Casing Technology will enable oil and gas operators to access reservoirs that cannot be easily reached with current methods. By expanding casing in situ, the hole size can be maintained and the target reached with minimal well tapering. This results in improved reservoir economics by reducing well capital expenditures and improving the success rate of reaching sub salt targets. In addition to rig-time savings and lower well costs, expandable casing technology can result in overall smaller hole size from spud to total depth.

Edgar Ortiz, president of Halliburton Energy Services, said "The opportunity to work with Shell on Expandable Casing Technology ensures we have the greatest chance of rapidly and successfully bringing technology to the market. Expandable casing offers the potential for a step change in well construction technology. We have been providing services to Shell worldwide for many years and this agreement adds a new and positive dimension to our relationship."

Bill Dirks, president and CEO of Shell Technology Ventures, said, "We are pleased to take Shell's expanded tubular technology forward in this joint venture with Halliburton. By combining the technology strengths of Shell with the development and delivery capabilities of Halliburton, we should be able to bring this significant new product to market in record time."

In another Halliburton technology venture Halliburton Energy Services, and Statoil, the national oil company of Norway and one of the world's largest net exporters of crude oil, have entered into a four-year agreement for the joint development of an Advanced Drilling System (ADS).

The project, co-funded by both companies, is jointly directed by a steering committee comprised of executives of both companies.

The Advanced Drilling System will overcome many of the limitations associated with conventional drilling systems. The system will provide high quality reservoir data and steering capabilities for wells with highly complex paths to measured depths approaching 15 kilometers.

The two companies completed a joint feasibility study during 1997 to evaluate technical challenges and applications of ADS. A contract between the two parties for the development project was signed in March 1998.

According to Edgar Ortiz, president of Halliburton Energy Services, "The initial Advanced Drilling Systems to be deployed will create significant value for Statoil when used in through-tubing, re-entry and slimhole drilling applications to access out-of-reach reserves in existing fields."

"Supporting the Advanced Drilling Systems technology development will give us a cost effective tool for increasing the oil recovery in our mature assets," said Mads Grinrod, Statoil vice president, Drilling and Well Technology. "One of Statoil's main strategies is goal oriented co-operation with selected suppliers and operators, for development and Implementation of technical solutions and the agreement with Halliburton is a consequence of this strategy."

Triton looks to sell entire company

Dallas (Bloomberg) – Triton Energy Ltd., an oil and gas producer that's lost money in two of the past four years, is considering selling the entire company even as it auctions properties in Colombia and the Gulf of Thailand, people familiar with the company said.

Potential buyers were invited to submit bids for Triton's oil and natural gas fields, as well as the whole company, by the end of this month, the people said. Dallas-based Triton has a market value of $1.4 billion.

Prospective buyers include Unocal Corp. of El Segundo, California; British Petroleum Co. of the U.K.; and Total SA of France, analysts said. All three have operations in some of the same countries as Triton's, they said.

"Triton is cash-strapped," said Fadel Gheit, a Fahnestock & Co. analyst with a "buy" rating on the shares. "They don't have enough money to spend on reserves, but give those assets to another company and the potential could be huge."

Gheit said the whole company could sell for as much as $1.8 billion, an almost 30 percent premium to its market value.

"Triton is reviewing any and all options to create and deliver value to shareholders," company spokeswoman Sheila Durante said. Triton extended the time it's giving companies to review its financial information until Friday, she said.

Triton had proven reserves of 382 million barrels of oil equivalent as of Dec. 31, Durante said. Oil equivalent is an industry measurement for all of the products that come out of a well, including natural gas and oil. The company is now producing oil only in Colombia, where it has a 9.6 percent interest in daily production of about 320,000 barrels of oil, she said.

Pipeline extension to serve Gulf producers

HOUSTON—Destin Pipeline Company, L.L.C. announced today plans to construct two major extensions to the Destin Pipeline system in the eastern Gulf of Mexico production area. The two contiguous extensions, with a total estimated cost of $52 million, will serve two development projects that recently dedicated natural gas production to the Destin Pipeline.

Focus On Gas

Destin Pipeline Company, L.L.C. is jointly owned by affiliates of Amoco Corporation, Sonat Inc. and Tejas Energy LLC, an affiliate of Shell Oil Company. Construction of the $460 million natural gas pipeline and gas processing plant began in December 1997, and initial start up is scheduled for July 1998.

Construction of the two extensions, totaling 45 miles in length, is expected to begin in September 1998, pending approval of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. The completed extensions will result in a 24-inch diameter pipeline connecting to the Destin 36-inch mainline at a platform hub at Main Pass Block 260.

Completion of the first extension, 13 miles in length, is scheduled for November 1998 to transport production from fields at Main Pass Blocks 279 and 281 being developed by CNG Producing Company, Walter Oil & Gas Corporation and Sonat Exploration GOM. The second extension will continue 32 miles to Viosca Knoll Block 900 to interconnect with production facilities for the deepwater Gemini project at Mississippi Canyon Blocks 247, 291 and 292 being developed by Texaco Exploration and Production and Chevron U.S.A. Inc. Gemini is scheduled to begin production in the first half of 1999.

"These agreements to extend the Destin Pipeline reflect the high level of development activity underway in this part of the Gulf," said Doug Krenz, senior vice president of Tejas Offshore Pipelines. "We have accelerated the in-service date of Destin to relieve the growing capacity constraints on existing transportation systems in the area."

In addition to the two developments served by the extensions, Destin has received a commitment of gas production from a field at Main Pass Block 226 being developed by Nippon Oil Exploration U.S.A. Limited and Pogo Producing Company. These commitments are in addition to reserve commitments to the Destin system previously announced by Amoco and Shell. Initial production from their Amoco-operated Marlin project is scheduled to begin in the second quarter 1999. The Destin Pipeline also has recently executed an agreement to receive up to 400 MMCF/D from the Viosca Knoll Gathering System at Main Pass Block 260.

"We will continue to seek additional reserve commitments and expansion opportunities for the Destin Pipeline," said Jim Yardley, president of Southern Natural Gas Company. "Both the pipeline and onshore gas plant have been designed to accommodate significant expansion as development in the Eastern Gulf of Mexico requires additional pipeline and processing infrastructure."

When completed, the Destin Pipeline will be a 255-mile system, with a 121-mile offshore segment and a 134-mile onshore segment. The 36-inch offshore mainline will extend 76 miles from Main Pass Block 260 to a gas plant under construction by Amoco and Tejas at Pascagoula, Miss. Destin will continue inland interconnecting with five pipelines to deliver gas to markets served by the Koch Gateway, Florida Gas Transmission, Transcontinental Gas Pipeline, Tennessee Gas Pipeline, and Southern Natural Gas pipeline systems.

"We are pleased with the producing community's response and commitment to the Destin project, and we expect the entire Destin Pipeline system and Pascagoula Gas Plant to be completed in early 1999," said Tim T. Scruggs, president, Amoco Pipeline Company.

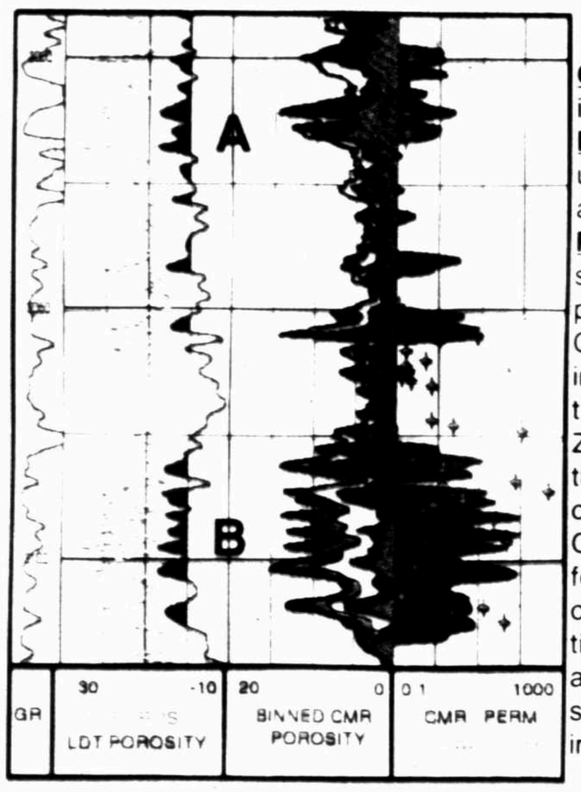
CMR* makes the Difference in the Clearfork



Objective: Identify suitable intervals for a waterflood.
Methodology: Evaluate section using CMR*, Platform Express and full core analysis.
Results: The CNL/LDT/GR log suggests that there are 2 similar productive intervals (A & B). CMR* perm shows the porosity in Zone A to be tight (< 1 md) and this is confirmed by core data. Zone B has visible vugs on both the FMI images and the whole core, which agrees with the CMR* perm (> 10 md). On a followup well Zone A was not cored since it was assumed to be tight. FMI and CMR* were run and, without the aid of core data, showed that the quality of Zone A improved (k > 10 md).

WELL HEAD BACK PRESSURE REDUCTION

GAS BOOSTER VAPOR RECOVERY OIL FLOODED SCREW

It would be hard to imagine a better time to take a look at ways to increase profits and cash flow.

And there are three ways to do both – right now – from a source you're likely just blowing away.

- Vapor recovery
- Gas pressure booster systems
- Well head back pressure reduction to increase gas volume and fluid flow

Since 1952, Hy-Bon Engineering has been the leader in these fields. We're specialists in low to medium pressure applications – including systems designed for service from 0 to 1200 psig.

We give you complete service – from surveying the needs of your particular application to total systems design... and, we'll conduct free seminars for your production, engineering, technical and management groups. We are the sour gas specialists.

Hy-Bon sales, service and rental is offered world wide. One telephone call or a letter will provide you complete information about Hy-Bon systems – whose feasibility and profitability may startle you with their capacity for creating profits. Profits that you may now be just blowing away.

SPECIALISTS IN GAS MANAGEMENT SINCE 1952

Halliburton, Shell ink joint venture

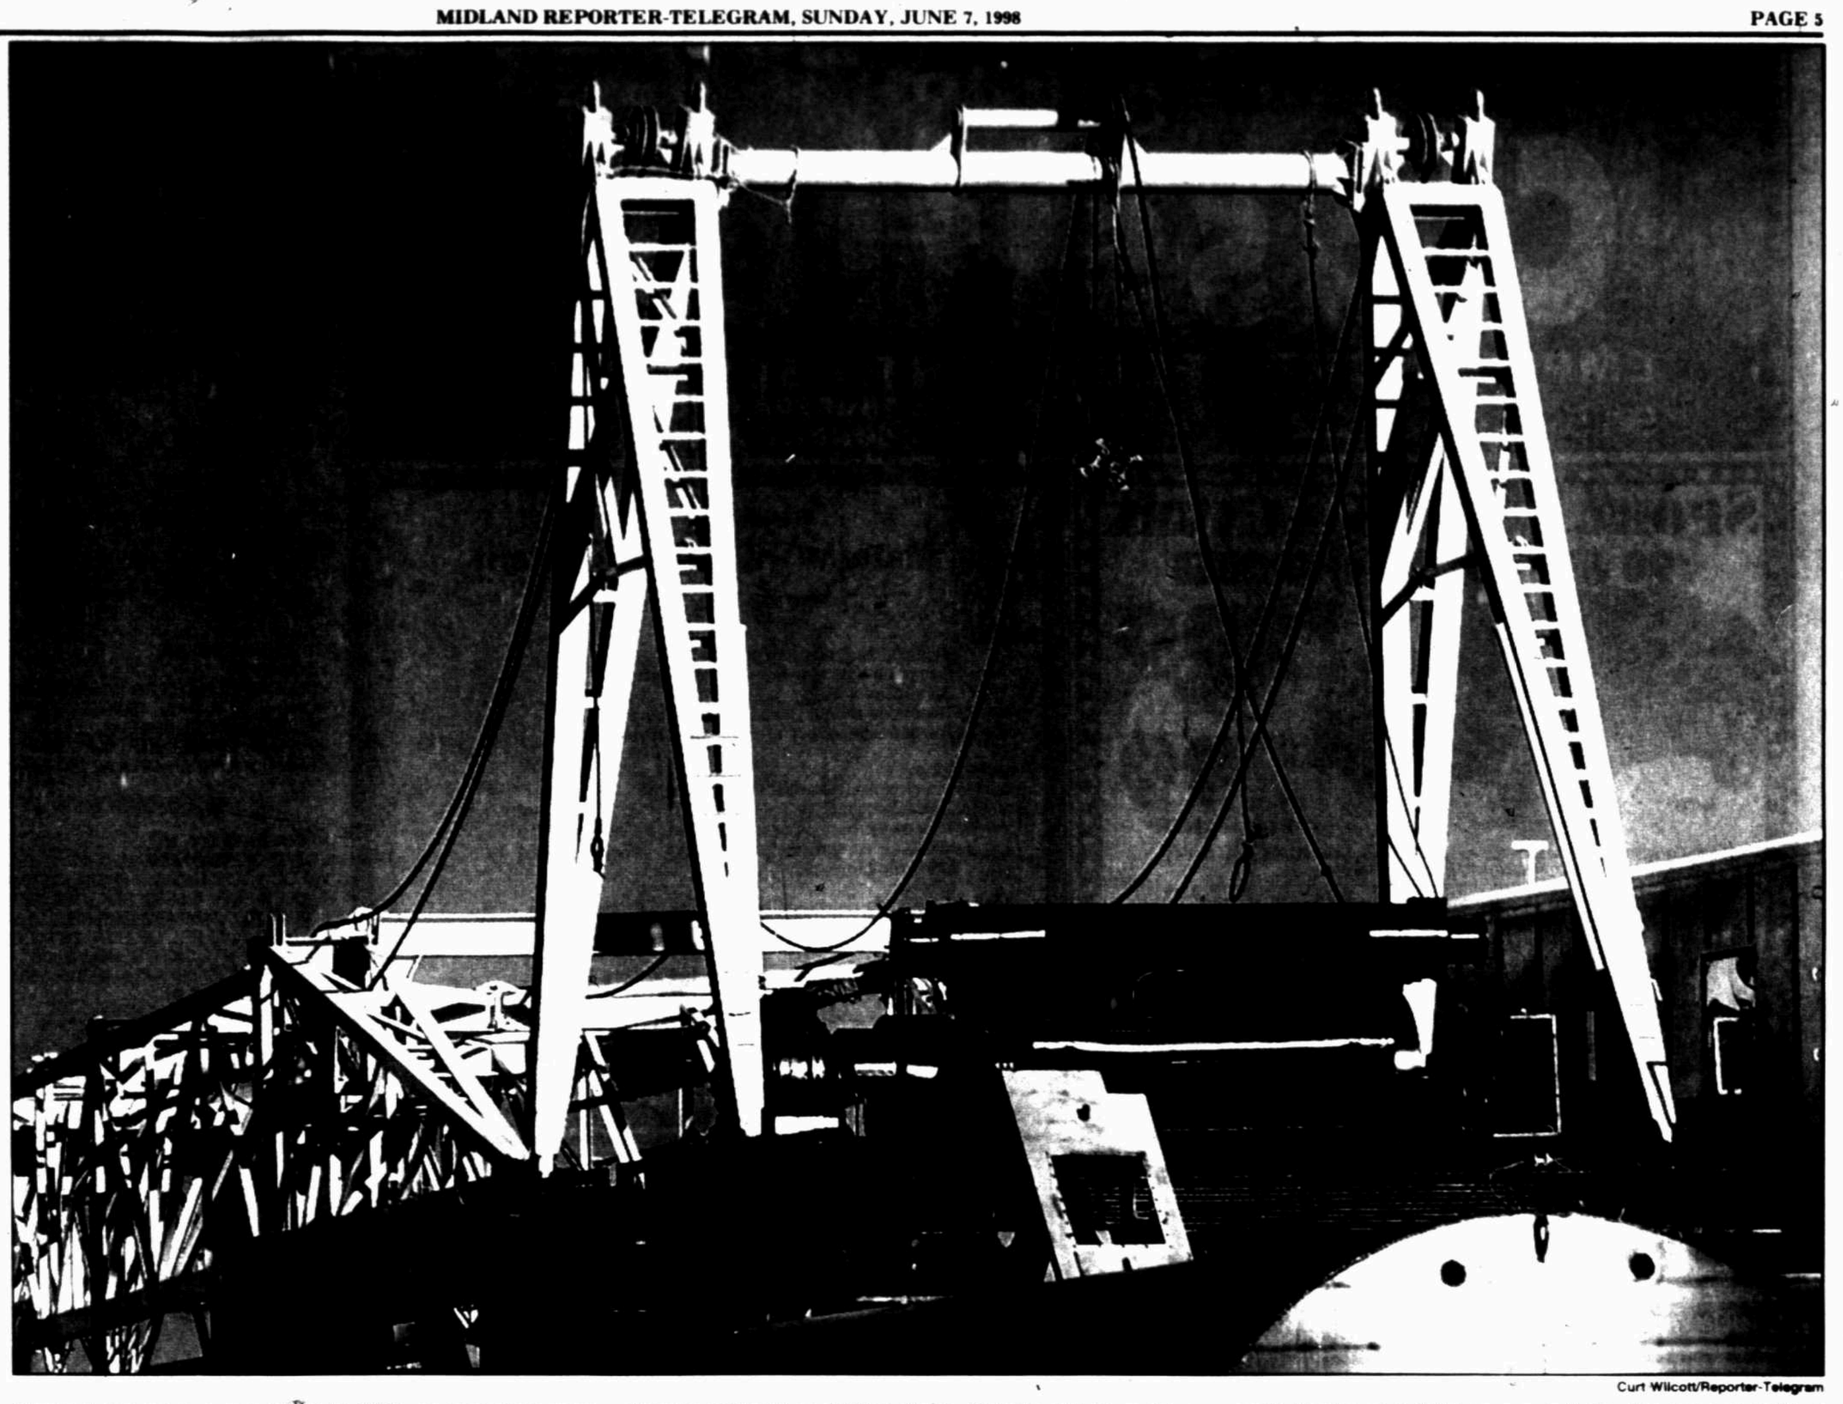
DALLAS — Shell and Halliburton affiliates announced that they have signed a Memorandum of Intent to develop and commercialize expandable casing technology. The new technology, originally developed by Shell, promises to significantly reduce the cost of drilling, especially in deepwater regions like the Gulf of Mexico.

Shell Technology Ventures Inc. and Halliburton Energy Services plan to form a limited liability company managed and funded 50/50 by the two firms. The autonomous new company should be launched by the fourth quarter of 1998.

After a hole section is drilled, expandable casing may be run in the usual manner. Once the casing is in place, a mandrel is run to expand the casing. Initial tests have demonstrated that the casing may be expanded at a rate of 100 feet per minute.

Expandable Casing Technology will enable oil and gas operators to access reservoirs that cannot be easily reached with current methods. By expanding casing in situ, the hole size can be maintained and the target reached with minimal well tapering. This results in improved reservoir economics by reducing well capital expenditures and improving the success rate of reaching sub salt targets. In addition to rig-time savings and lower well costs, expandable casing technology can result in overall smaller hole size from spud to total depth.

Edgar Ortiz, president of Halliburton Energy Services, said "The opportunity to work with Shell on Expandable Casing Technology ensures we have the greatest chance of rapidly and successfully bringing technology to the market. Expandable casing offers the potential for a step change in well construction technology."



Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Stacked rigs were a rare sight in 1997, as operators complained that the rig shortage had a stranglehold on drilling. As 1998 progresses, though, the problem of rig availability has been offset by lower prices that are causing many operators to cut back on drilling plans. Permits are down 37 percent over last year, with 632 permits for new oil and gas wells, compared to 843 for the same period last year. However, total well completions are up for 1998, to date, with 3,985 oil, gas and injection completions reported. For the same period last year, operators reported 3,064 oil, gas and injection wells as completed.

Third Eagle Bay well tests at 53.9 million cubic feet, 6,264 barrels per day

HOUSTON — TransTexas Gas Corporation said that the flow-test of the State Tract 352 No. 1 well in Galveston Bay confirmed the extension of the Eagle Bay natural gas field into the second fault block and readied a third well to commence production. The State Tract 352 No. 1 was flow tested yesterday at a rate of 53.9 million cubic feet of natural gas per day (MMcfd) and 6,264 barrels per day of crude and condensate (Bopd), with flowing tubing pressure of 4,100 p.s.i.

Electric and acoustic logs previously indicated the presence of total net pay of 124 feet in a gross interval between 15,200 and 16,260 feet, in 4 separate zones. However, the well was tested from a zone of 84 feet of net pay in the same sand that produced in State Tract 331 No. 1 and 331 No. 3 wells. The flow-test of the third well expands the primary Vicksburg pay sand and increased TransTexas' current net proved reserves in Eagle Bay to 251.5 Bcfe.

Although the first well in the field has been producing for over two months, it is constrained by condensate separation facilities of 1,500 barrels per day capacity on the west shore of Galveston Bay at Texas City. While so constrained, gas production has been limited to approximately 8.5 million cubic feet per day, with flowing tubing pressure of 11,180 p.s.i. Full-scale production from Eagle Bay is scheduled to start in late June, once onshore production facilities are completed. Production reservoir and flow-test data indicates that the Eagle Point field will flow at high rates of gas and condensate, and is likely to become one of the Company's most significant fields.

Additional drilling locations in Eagle Bay are currently being permitted, including onshore surface locations, one of which the Company expects to start drilling within 30 days. The field is one of several prospects controlled by a venture of TransTexas & Davis Petroleum Corp. in the areas of Galveston Bay and South Louisiana. Production from Louisiana Field Commenced

The partners also said that production had commenced from the first of their prospects in South Louisiana, the Maurice field in Vermilion Parish. The R. Trahan No. 1, is producing at a rate of 11.1 MMcfd and 422 Bpd, with flowing tubing pressure of 10,250 p.s.i.. A second well, the P. Broussard No. 1 was flow-tested on May 29 at 4.7 MMcfd of natural gas and 230 Bpd of oil with flowing tubing pressure of 11,150 p.s.i. from a perforated interval of 15,924 to 15,944 feet. Shut-in tubing pressure is 11,500 p.s.i. while the well is unitized. TransTexas owns a 25.2% working interest in the Maurice field wells.

The South Louisiana venture with Davis covers an area that eventually will include 3-D seismic over most of the 350 square-miles. TransTexas owns a 58.3% working interest, before payout, in these additional prospects.

In Live Oak County, TransTexas Gas Corporation and Edge Petroleum Corporation said that their McNeil No.1 natural gas well was flow-tested this weekend at a rate of 19.2 million cubic feet of natural gas per day (MMcfd) on an 18/64-inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 10,150 p.s.i.

The production test was conducted from a zone of 24 feet of net pay in the Tom Lyne sand, in a gross interval between 15,806 and 15,842 feet depth. Shut-in tubing pressure was 10,580 p.s.i. Calculated absolute open flow of the well is 193 MMcfd.

Production is targeted to commence in late-June after surface natural gas treatment facilities are put in place and a connection is made to an existing Tejas natural gas pipeline that crosses the discovery acreage.

TransTexas is the operator of the prospect and owns an 87 percent working interest in the area of approximately 3,200 gross acres. This 3-D seismic prospect was developed by Edge Petroleum, who also owns a before-payout working interest of 0.33 percent and an after-project payout working interest of about 13.7 percent. The companies are currently assessing potential for additional locations to be drilled in the field.

John E. Calaway, Edge's chief executive officer, noted "The McNeil well and prospect in which the well was drilled has considerable potential and Edge is very pleased with the results of the initial production tests. The well needs to be put on line with some production history and additional wells drilled before the full extent of the discovery can be assessed, including when project payout may be reached. We think the success with the McNeil No.1 well further verifies Edge's technical capabilities, in general, and is indicative of our push into the deeper geological sections."

Joe Fortner of A. G. Edwards & Sons Inc.

You too can 'roll over' your lump sum distribution issues

We've continued to hear for several months now about the "Goldilocks" state of our economy — not too fast, not too slow, just right. But that doesn't mean your personal employment situation is "just right" in your eyes. Early retirement offers or corporate mergers may have caused you to revise your financial game plan, especially if you have received or will be receiving a lump sum distribution. But before you cash in the big check your employer may offer you, you should review your list of options:

Joe Fortner

 Taking the money up front. The allure of a large amount of cash can be a great temptation, but remember, you saved this money for retirement. By cashing out up front, you stand to lose a great chunk of your savings to taxes. IRS rules state that your employer must withhold 20 percent of your account's balance and, if you have not net reached age 59, you may also have to pay a 10 percent IRS penalty.

 "Rolling over" your money. If you roll over, or deposit, your money into a qualified plan or IRA, that money is not considered gross taxable income and will not be taxed for that year. You have two rollover options: a direct rollover transfer and indirect rollover.

With a direct rollover transfer, you employer sends the full amount of your account balance directly to your choice of financial institution (e. g., a brokerage firm or bank) or your new employer's retirement plan without being subject to taxes or penalties.

If you choose an indirect rollover, your current employer pays your retirement plan money directly to you. In doing so, your employer must withhold 20 percent for federal income taxes. You then have 60 days to deposit all or part of that money into your new plan to continue the tax-deferral advantage you had with your old plan. When you do so, you must deposit the original amount of your distribution — including the 20 percent withheld — for the rollover to be considered complete. That means you have to replace the 20 percent from some other source.

As an example, let's say you had a $100,000 balance in your retirement plan, and you elect to have an indirect rollover. Your employer must withhold $20,000 (20 percent of your balance) for tax purposes, leaving you with just $80,000. To complete a full rollover of $100,000, you would need to come up with an additional $20,000 from your other funds. If you don't, the withheld $20,000 will be taxed and may also be subject to a 10 percent IRS penalty. If you do come up with the additional $20,000, you won't owe any additional tax, but you will temporarily lose the use of the "replacement money" until you can determine your tax liability on your next tax return.

If you put any money on which you've already paid taxes into your employer's plan, that money is not eligible for rollover. Because it's already been taxed, when this money is paid to you, you don't need to pay current taxes on it. However, any earnings that these contributions generated while in the plan are considered taxable income and may be rolled over.

Remember, you do have choices on how you receive your lump sum distributions. Your investment professional can help you determine how you can "roll over" the complexities of this situation.

National-Oilwell finals acquisition

HOUSTON -- National-Oilwell, Inc. announced the completion of the previously announced acquisition of Phoenix Energy Products, Inc. for approximately $102 million in a short-term note, $14 million in cash and the assumption of approximately $35 million in debt.

Through its Harrisburg/Woolley division, Houston-based Phoenix manufactures and sells multiple product lines that are complementary to those of National-Oilwell, including drilling and completion expendable products and solids control equipment, as well as downhole equipment and a line of drill bits.

Joel Staff, Chairman, President and CEO of National-Oilwell, stated "The addition of Phoenix's valued-added product offering will aid us in further enhancing customer economics and providing a comprehensive suite of products and services."

Nitrogen Foam Frac with SandWedge and DeltaFrac Exceeds Customers Expectations

Type of Job: Nitrogen Foam Frac with DeltaFrac and SandWedge

Customer Challenge:
- Successfully complete the Seven Rivers gas sand and control sand flowback when using an energized fluid.

Halliburton Solut
- Halliburton en
tubular and wel
SandWedge N2
polymer loading De

Major Obstacles:
- The customer had always used 40 ppg linear gel/CO2 foams in the past to complete this zone.

Details of Job:

Formation:	Seven Rivers Gas Sand
Products Used	SandWedge conductivity enhancement treatment 20 ppg Delta Frac fluid Halliburton ARC Frac equipment HES 15,000 psi rated nitrogen unit
Proppant	16/30 Brady Sand
HES PSL's Used:	Completion Products Stimulation - Fracuring Services Stimulation - Nitrogen Services Engineering Tech Support

Job Procedure:
- Rig up Halliburton frac crew and nitrogen services.
- Conduct a pre-job safety meeting.
- TOOH and Pick up TCP assembly
- Treat well down 2 7/8" tubing.

Results:
- Well responded with stabilized proc
Mcf/D, plus 2 BOPD.
- The well was flowing gas to the sales
after fracturing the well.
- The well was flowed back and put on having to kill the well or make a clean bailer or sand pump.
- This well was successfully completed utilizing less polymer loading than the previous CO2 foam fra completion method.
- The stabilized rate is 2.67 times the operators two previous completions in this zone. This far exceeded the customer's 150 Mcf/D, plus 2 BOPD expectations.

- Halliburton's SandWedge conductivity enhancement treatment was used to treat the entire sand volume.
- SandWedge provided excellent proppant flowback control in an energized fluid system.
- SandWedge's unique properties actually increased the proppant pack conductivity by increasing the pack porosity.
- SandWedge promotes proppant pack cleanup by preferentially coating the sand grains and displacing gel polymers attached to the sand.
- Successfully reduced the polymer loading required to place the proppant by 50% using the DeltaFrac system.
- The DeltaFrac N2 foam provided higher viscosity, better proppant transport, and foam stability over the previous CO2 linear foam system.
- DeltaFrac's enzyme compatible Borate chemistry provides clean, fast breaks in low temperature dry gas wells.

Grace, style & elegance

Surrounded by immaculate, landscaped gardens this four bedroom house in Green Tree Country Club offers a tremendous number of interesting features - all within a very large property.

From the pool area, complete with fountain and hot tub, to the soaring ceilings in the master bedroom, this house is superbly appointed and full of all the conveniences one would expect from a property listed for $329,000.

With two living areas - including the upstairs game room that has great views over the pool area as well as the formal living room - four bathrooms and an oversized kitchen cum dining area this is a very sizable property that is perfect for entertaining on a grand scale.

Perhaps one of the most impressive of all the rooms in this home is the sequestered master suite. Comprised of the bedroom itself and a huge bathroom, the suite opens onto the pool and patio areas. Plantation shutters in the bedroom compliment the high, wood-paneled, vaulted ceiling and offer variable light levels in this very bright space.

The bathroom itself is larger than most bedrooms and offers plenty of counter space, a separate shower and jacuzzi tub, as well as an enormous closet. Beautifully decorated the suite is lit by accent windows as well as recessed spotlights.

This stunning property at 5109 Teakwood Trace can be viewed by appointment only. For more information about this house contact the listing agent, Dana Chandler, at the Langston North offices at 685-0400.

USING A REAL ESTATE AGENT

If you are retiring in the next few months you may be planning to sell your home and purchase a smaller dwelling. You may feel you could save money by handling the selling and buying process yourself, but your spouse may feel you should seek the help of a real estate agent.

Sutton

To some people, the option of selling their home themselves may seem to be the best solution. After all, if they don't use the services of a real estate professional, they'll save money by not having to pay a sales commission. However, what many of these homeowners don't realize is there are many pitfalls and obstacles that a real estate agent can help you avoid - you'll probably also save money. For example:

• Finance Problems - With the wide variety of finance options available today, you will need an expert to help prospective buyers sort through the different types of loans and recommend reputable lenders.

• Seller Disclosures - It is required by law that you disclose all known defects in your home to a buyer before the close of a sale. If you do not comply, you could end up with complications that could cost you a great deal of money. A Realtor knows the rules concerning disclosure and can help you avoid problems before they arise.

• Contract Problems - Unless you are highly experienced in managing contract negotiations, you will have to pay someone to obtain a substantial good-faith earnest-money deposit and prepare a legally binding purchase contract. Your local Realtor is trained to provide that service.

• Closing Problems - There are many unexpected difficulties that may appear before the sale is finalized. Unless you know the ins and outs of the closing procedure, you need the services of a real estate agent to assure a smooth close.

• Marketing Problems - Can you really market your home effectively? Without advertising and a network of selling professionals, your home may not sell as quickly as you need.

How Much House Do I Need?

Most potential homebuyers think they have a pretty good idea of the type of house they need.

A young couple with a baby might think no further than a two-bedroom home with good laundry facilities and room in the yard for a swing-set.

Victoria & Jeannie Printz

A family with three high school-age sons might desire a four-bedroom, three-bath place with hookups for four separate phone lines and room out back for repairing old cars.

A young, single professional just out of school might look no further than a small condominium with a decent pool.

But things change all our lives, sometimes very quickly. Some of the changes can be difficult to predict. Others can be not only predicted, but planned for.

The couple with the baby, for instance, might be quick to say that yes, they plan to have another baby in two or three years. In other words, rather than basing their immediate home-buying plans on a two-bedroom house, they might realistically consider a three-or even a four-bedroom, with space for future children and perhaps even a home office.

The couple with the teenage sons should seriously consider that, within just a few short years, they might be living once again as just a couple, needing only a one- or two-bedroom home. Although they need to buy a large house right now, they might consider some of the interest-saving mortgage options available to those who plan to sell their homes after only a few years of ownership.

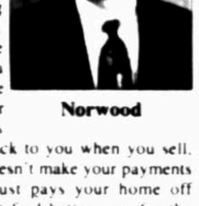
And the young professional should include the possibility of a future relationship or marriage when planning to buy a home.

In other words, when deciding how much home you need, remember to consider the changes that may occur over the next few years.

(Submitted by: Victoria & Jeannie Printz)

Should you pay off your home loan faster?

What a temptation! Paying off your mortgage faster may save you many thousands of dollars in interest -- and no more house payments. But before you start doing it, consider these things.



Norwood

If you're like most people, you will probably sell your home long before it's paid off. And although the extra money you put into your home will increase your equity and thus probably come back to you when you sell, in most cases it doesn't make your payments any lower -- it just pays your home off sooner. You might find better uses for the extra money. Like putting it into your business, or some other investment.

Still, small extra payments that are made early in the life of the mortgage can make a huge difference if you continue to live in the house until it's paid for. That's because the extra money goes entirely to pay off principal, and none of it goes to interest. You can include it with your mortgage payment when it's convenient, and without being locked into any special payment plan.

But before you start sending the money, call your mortgage company and ask how to identify the added payment, so you're sure it will be earmarked for principal and not treated like a regular payment made in advance.

PUBLIC NOTICE
BID 98-12

Midland Community College is now accepting bids for Biology Lab supplies. Specifications may be picked up in the Midland College Accounting & Business Services office Monday through Thursday, 7:00 a.m. till 5:00. Bids will be opened and read aloud at 11:00 a.m. Monday, June 15, 1998. The bids will be tabulated and final determination will be made at a future board meeting. Bids should be addressed to Rick Bender, Director of Accounting and Business Services, 3600 N. Garfield, Midland, TX 79705. The College reserves the right to accept or reject any or all bids submitted.

PUBLIC HEARING

The City of Midland City Council will hold a public hearing to review programs and projects to be funded under the 1998/99 Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) Program. The public hearing will be held at the Council Chambers, City Hall, 300 N. Loraine, Midland, Texas, on Tuesday, June 23, 1998, at 11:00 a.m.

The proposed 1998/99 CDBG program will become the Fourth Year Action Plan of the City's Consolidated Plan for Community Development and Housing funds. Funds covered by the Plan are the $1,306,000 that the City of Midland will receive for fiscal 1998/99 from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). Additionally, $48,000 in program income is anticipated during the 1998/99 program.

As part of the CDBG program the City will also consider technical amendments to the Consolidated Plan and to the Citizen Participation Plan for Community Development and Housing Funds.

For additional information, call the City's CDBG Office at 685-7402 or 685-7408.

Any disabled person needing special accommodations or hearing impaired persons wishing to have an interpreter should request services through the City Administrative Services Department at least 48 hours prior to the scheduled meeting by contacting the Compliance Coordinator for the City of Midland at (915)685-7248.

Bartlett Named Director For Langston's New "WOW" Marketing Program

James Bartlett has joined our staff as the director of Langston's new "WOW" Marketing Program. The program is designed to enhance the impact, visibility and recognition of our listed properties, of our associates and of our firm.

A more unique, creative and powerful marketing program has been a long time goal for our company; we are most fortunate that the right person has become available at the right time for us to implement this plan. James has extensive computer and presentation experience, tremendous enthusiasm and a wonderful commitment to approaching marketing as a cooperative team.

Our "WOW" marketing will include professionally prepared flyers for every new listing; a larger presence in MRT's Showcase of Homes; a company-wide newsletter; company sponsored events for customers and clients; enhanced visibility on a timely basis for our newly listed properties; more materials for agents use in marketing themselves; and an effective presence on the Internet.

The "WOW" program also includes a special monthly publication similar to the very successful Showcase of Homes. This 32 page publication is available at the airport terminal by our two lighted display cases, at open house, in our relocation packets and for our customers and clients. It will not only give many of our sellers wider distribution of information on their properties but it will also afford buyers information on our newer listings, as well as other homes, and will offer a wealth of information on the community.

We view this as a premium service to both sellers and purchasers.
