New budget may not reduce deficit enough

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nearly $1 trillion fiscal 1987 budget approved by Congress early today may not reduce the deficit enough to avoid automatic spending cuts of the Gramm-Rudman law, lawmakers say.

The plan restrains both military and domestic spending and officially meets next year's $144 billion deficit target with $1.4 billion to spare. But lawmakers said it contains optimistic assumptions about strong economic growth, and weak provisions to enforce the cuts, that could drive the deficit estimate billions of dollars higher.

"It's phony as a $3 bill," said Rep. Silvio Conte of Massachusetts, ranking Republican on the House Appropriations Committee. Still, Conte was one of 333 House members who voted for the budget, with only 43 against.

Rep. Bill Frenzel, R-Minn., said, "At least there is a modicum of outlay reductions."

In Santa Barbara, Calif., where President Reagan is vacationing, White House spokesman Larry Speakes issued a statement saying the president found the overall conference agreement "generally acceptable" but said the budget resolution "would alter the president's priorities."

The resolution "cut too much from defense and international affairs in fiscal year 1987 and is way too limiting" for future years, Speakes said.

The spokesman said the resolution increases domestic spending by more than the president recommended, but he welcomed the fact that the conference report did not call for a tax increase and met Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction targets.

The legislators, rushing out of town for the Fourth of July recess, approved the $995 billion plan overwhelmingly. It was given final passage by the Senate by voice vote early today soon after the lopsided approval vote in the House on Thursday night.

Before the Senate voted, its budget committee chairman, Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., predicted a tax increase still would be needed.

Domenici said the $292.15 billion in military spending in the budget was inadequate, and President Reagan would have to ask Congress for an increase.

The budget includes a $4.8 billion contingency fund, and part of that could help boost Pentagon spending — but Reagan would have to propose an acceptable way to fill the coffers.

Administration officials have pressed Congress to sell more government assets and raise user fees, but lawmakers said many of those were politically impossible and a tax increase was the only way to give Reagan anywhere close to the $320 billion he originally requested for the military.

The Senate had endorsed a $10.7 billion tax boost, but House Democratic leaders refused to go along unless Reagan dropped his opposition. The contingency fund for "unmet critical needs" helped lead to the House-Senate compromise.

Whether Congress actually meets the Gramm-Rudman requirements won't be determined until August, when the Congressional Budget Office and the president's Office of Management and Budget make a revised deficit estimate.

If the deficit for fiscal 1987 misses the $144 billion target by more than $10 billion, automatic spending cuts would be ord; "ilitary and domestic programs to make up the difference.

Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., an original sponsor of the Gramm-Rudman law, predicted the deficit wouu $165 billion because of "the soft numbers."

U.S. bought more farm goods than it sold during past month

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time in at least two decades, the United States in May imported more farm goods than it exported as the nation's trade deficit surged to $14.2 billion, up from $12.1 billion in April, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said agricultural imports amounted to $2.2 billion in May, compared to exports of $1.9 billion — for a deficit of $348.7 million.

In April, farm exports had totaled $2.1 billion and imports $1.9 billion.

The figures showed once again that the turnaround in the trade balance long awaited by economists and politicians has yet to materialize — despite lower oil prices and a weakening U.S. dollar.

The May figures showed the same pattern of shrinking exports and expanding imports that has prevailed for many months.

The Commerce Department report said May imports totaled $31.6 billion, up from $30 billion imported the month before. Exports were $17.4 billion in May, down from $18 billion in April.

Analysts said a sluggish world economy had much to do with the continued imbalance.

"There's nobody to sell to. Our economy is doing better than the rest of the world," said David Wyss, chief economist for Data Resoures Inc. of Lexington, Mass.

So far this year, the monthly trade deficit has averaged $13.95 billion, implying an annual trade deficit of nearly $168 billion if the deficit continues at the current pace.

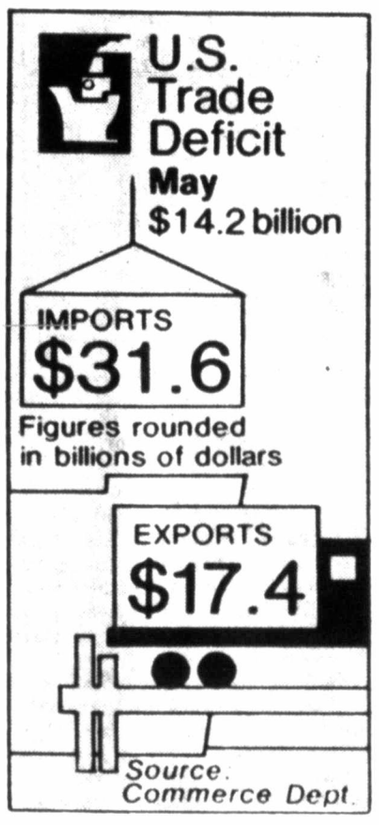

For all of 1985, the deficit totaled a record $148.5 billion.

Government and private analysts have predicted that the trade figures would begin to improve in the second half of the year.

Commerce Department anlysts first said the May report appeared to show the first deficit in agricultural trade since the government began keeping such records in the World War II era.

But later, spokesman Adren Cooper said further checking showed such a claim could only be made for sure for the past 20 years.

Previous to that, record-keeping was not as specific as it is currently. However, there remained a possibility that the farm-product deficit was the first ever, Cooper said.

Parks panel rejects request for bridge

Members of the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board approved a request for location of a pumpjack in a city park but turned down a new bridge for Central Park during their regular meeting Thursday afternoon.

Parks and Recreation Department Director Reed Kirkpatrick said Pupco, Inc., had offered to donate and install a small, inoperative pumpjack at no expense to the city in Petroleum Park.

The board earlier this year had recommended naming the small park, located at Perryton Parkway, Coffee and 22nd Ave., in recognition of the importance of the petroleum industry to Pampa. The Pampa City Commission later approved officially naming the park.

Kirkpatrick noted the park already has been landscaped with grass, shrubs and flowers.

The board had suggested locating a pumpjack for the park. Kirkpatrick and board chairman Duane Harp had met with Pupco officials, who agreed to donate the pumpjack. The pumpjack is on a 5x11 foot base and stands about 10-12 feet high, Kirkpatrick said.

Kirkpatrick said the city had received one letter objecting to locating the pumpjack in the park.

Mike Keagy of Keagy-Edwards, Inc., at 2208 Coffee objected to the pumpjack, saying it would "add nothing to the park" aesthetically and would detract from the view from the window of the office. She also wrote that she felt the pumpjack "would be overwhelming" because of the small size of the park.

But board members felt the pumpjack would be a good addition to Petroleum Park, noting that it was a relatively small one that should not detract too much from the park landscaping.

Kirkpatrick said Pupco would paint it, probably in gold and green colors, to improve its appearance.

The board rejected a request by the Chautauqua Committee for building a new bridge in Central Park on Red Deer Creek between the restroom facilities and the Duncan Street bridge.

Kirkpatrick said a pre-manufactured metal framework and wooden plank bridge under consideration would cost approximately $8,600. If the city decided to build the bridge, it would cost about $6,500 for materials alone, plus labor. In addition, the city would have to make the bridge accessible to the handicapped and install asphalt sidewalks to the bridge, he said.

Board members expressed general concern that the money could be better spent on other projects now. They also noted this year's budget is already set, with some cutbacks necessitated by decreased sales tax income.

Kirkpatrick noted the city will be making the existing wooden bridge more accessible to the handicapped for Chautauqua.

Board members also expressed concern about how much use the new bridge would receive except for Chautauqua Day.

Vice Chairman Randy Stewart and board member Joel Derington indicated the board was not opposed to the bridge but felt this is just not the time for it because of limited funds and other projects with more pressing priorities.

In other matters, Parks Superintendent Bill Hildebrandt said the Marcus Sanders Pool has not been officially opened yet. Crews are still checking the pool for operations and still needed repairs, he said.

Hildebrandt said the main problem is making certain the water pump is operating properly, with valves and volume flow to be adjusted. He said the pump motor has been overheating, with adjustments yet to be made for proper operation.

The pool was open last weekend to allow for checks while the pool was operating, he said. The pool will be open again this weekend for further checks. Once the pool is determined to be operating correctly, then an official opening will be scheduled to provide for daily operation, he said.

Hildebrandt said fogging operations have begun for mosquito control. He said cycle routes had been established to provide continued coverage of the city throughout the summer.

Sandinistas cracking down

Ortega says U.S. aid forcing revision of policies

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — The Sandinista government shut Nicaragua's only opposition newspaper and announced stricter internal security measures a day after the U.S. House of Representatives approved new aid to the Contra rebels.

In a nationwide television and radio broadcast Thursday night, President Daniel Ortega said House approval of $70 million in military aid and $30 million in non-lethal assistance to the Contras "opens a new aggressive escalation ... which forces a revision of some policies to confront the new threats that exist."

The Democratic-controlled House approved the aid to the Contras on Wednesday, and passage by the Republican-controlled Senate, which approved an earlier assistance bill, was expected to follow.

In The Hague, Netherlands, today, the World Court denounced U.S. backing for the Contra rebels and termed the U.S. support a violation of the U.N. Charter. The ruling came at the end of a 26-month legal proceeding at which the Sandinistas presented what they said was evidence of U.S efforts to topple the Managua government. The United States boycotted most of the court proceedings.

Ortega said his crackdown on dissent would include "the strict and severe application of the state of emergency" imposed March 15, 1982.

The emergency suspends rights of assembly and free association, habeas corpus and the right to strike, and allows the government to make arrests without a warrant.

It also requires the news media to submit material for censorship.

Ortega said the emergency rules were "an effort to contribute to easing internal and regional tensions," but sometimes had been managed "with excessive flexibility."

Even before the tightening of the state of emergency was announced, the government closed the newspaper La Prensa.

A letter from the Interior Ministry to editor Pablo Antonio Cuadra said that "from now, the daily newspaper La Prensa is closed for an indefinite time," managing editor Carlos Holmann said.

The government's Voice of Nicaragua radio later called the newspaper "an accomplice and an official spokesman of President Reagan in Nicaragua and a direct accomplice in the aggression and war against our people, of the bloodshed in our country."

Elimination of too many stories had prevented La Prensa from publishing 41 times since the emergency was declared. It also had been closed by the government several times for a few days at a time.

But Holmann said that in the past the newspaper had always been told how long it would be kept shut.

Violeta Barrios de Chamorro, a co-owner of the paper and widow of former publisher Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, said the newspaper would comply with the order because "there is no alternative."

"This confirms that there is no freedom of the press," she said.

Pedro Joaquin Chamorro was a critic of Nicaraguan strongman Anastasio Somoza. The publisher's slaying in 1978 was a spark that intensified the Sandinista revolution that overthrew Somoza in 1979.

Opposition leader Virgilio Godoy of the Independent Liberal Party said the Nicaraguan government was using the House vote as an excuse to crack down on dissent.

"That is what the Sandinista government needed to increase internal represssion," said Godoy, president of the party that is the main opposition group.

OPEC boss sees progress on production agreement

BRIONI, Yugoslavia (AP) — OPEC'S president said today the oil cartel has made progress toward an agreement on production policy and could finish its talks by Sunday.

Rilwanu Lukman of Nigeria told reporters during a break in the conference — now in its third day — that "very concrete" proposals had been put on the bargaining table. He refused to describe their contents.

"We're talking price levels, we're talking production ceilings, that's what we've been talking about all day," he said.

Asked if a two-hour morning session had made progress toward an accord, he said, "Yes, I think so." He would not be more specific.

"We do hope we reach an agreement by the weekend," Lukman added. He said the ministers would gather again tonight.

Other oil ministers emerging from the morning session declined to talk with reporters. Conference sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Lukman told his colleagues to avoid commenting on the deliberations.

The leaders of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries spent the first two days of their conference assessing the world oil market and discussing how high they would like prices to rise.

The talks are being held in an opulent hotel overlooking a secluded harbor on the largest island in the Brioni archipelago. The late President Josip Broz Tito once used the island as a private retreat.

A majority of the OPEC ministers favor a price target for the end of the year of between $17 and $20 a barrel, Iranian Oil Minister Gholamreza Aghazadeh told reporters after Thursday's three-hour session.

Aghazadeh said he saw no "economic justification" for seeking a price in that range. He wants OPEC to cut its production enough to drive prices back to the $28 level that prevailed late last fall before a switch in OPEC strategy triggered a massive price drop.

The Iranian minister declined to say whether he would stand in the way of a majority decision — as he did at OPEC's most recent meetings in March and April when he headed a minority alliance that also included Libya and Algeria.

The most widely traded grades of crude today sell for between $12 and $15 a barrel.

Even with a provisional agreement on a price target, OPEC would gain little without settling the stickier issue of how to control production.

Last fall the cartel abandoned its system of production controls, which sets an overall ceiling for the group and assigns quotas for each of the 13 members.

The ministers generally agree that controls should be reimposed. The problem is deciding what ceiling to set and how to divide it among the members.

Lukman said after Thursday's talks that the ministers had not yet held substantive discussions on dividing up a specific production ceiling.

The Iran-Libya-Algeria alliance has pressed for a lower ceiling.

Fire hydrant painting contest part of Skellytown celebration

SKELLYTOWN — City officials and volunteer fire fighters want residents to get fired up about the Texas Sesquicentennial.

So, they are sponsoring a fire hydrant painting contest as part of its Sesquicentennial celebration. For $2, residents may adopt a fire plug and paint it bright colors.

City secretary Sherry Daves said so far eight of the city's 23 eligible hydrants have been spoken for. She added that the city will supply the plug painters with their choice of base coat colors: red, yellow, orange or green.

"Then if they need to paint eyes or something, they provide that themselves," she said.

But there's more to this patriotic paint job than just summertime mirth.

"There's kind of a safety reason behind it, too," said Skellytown fire chief Vance Griffith. "We need bright colors because in the past, the fire plugs were too dark and camouflaged in the dark."

Judges and prizes for the plug contest have not yet been decided. Deadline for entries is July 7.

The contest is a prelude to the community celebration to be held Aug. 2. Skellytown mayor Wesley Russell said the celebration will include a parade featuring bicycles and horses, such children's games as a dart throw and a turtle race, and a hamburger cook-out.

He said if the community bash is a success, the city may make it an annual event.

Reservation deadline for Chautauqua nears

Reservations will be required for all participants in Chautauqua '86 and a $10 non-refundable deposit will be required for all groups selling items other than arts and crafts, directors of the event announced.

Deadline for reservations is July 1. Entry forms and further information may be obtained by writing Chautauqua, P.O. Box 2094, Pampa, 79066 or by calling Jean Murtishaw, 665-5363.

The organization has invited area artists and musicians to participate in this year's Chatauqua which will be held Sept. 1 at Central Park.

Now in its fifth year, this outdoor event sponsored by the Pampa Fine Arts Association annually attracts thousands to the day-long program.

In an effort to take the arts into the community, the PFA has provided people of all ages with an opportunity to meet artists, participate in events, learn, and have fun — all at the same time. Families can come to enjoy the last holiday of the summer, renew acquaintances, eat a picnic lunch or feast at one of the 20 food booths planned for the day.

The community event will feature a variety of games for children, pottery throws, bridge painting, artists in action, educational displays along with the free, continual stage entertainment that will include band concerts, drama vocalists and dancers.

The Pampa Chautauqua is a variation of the historical educational tent shows presented in American communities in the early 20th Century. The original Chautauqua started 112 years ago in New York by a Methodist minister and an Ohio industrialist for a group of Sunday School teachers. The Indian name Chautauqua means "a bag tied in the middle," which described the lake located near that village in western New York.

Second tests set Saturday

AUSTIN (AP) — The state's controversial teacher competency test will be given for a second time Saturday, with 6,579 people needing to pass it to keep their jobs.

Up to 25,000 teachers, former teachers and school adminstrators are expected to take the exam, officials said Thursday.

A total of just over 202,000 teachers and administrators took the first exam in March. Nearly 97 percent passed.

The 6,579 who failed it are required to pass the second test or they will not be allowed to teach in the next school year, said Terri Anderson, spokeswoman for the Texas Education Agency.

"They have to pass this time to teach in the 86-87 school year. If they fail, they don't lose their certificates, but they can't teach until they pass the test. They can take the test any time in the future," Ms. Anderson said.

The test of basic skills, officially known as the Texas Examination of Current Administrators and Teachers, was required by the sweeping 1984 school reform law.

The TECAT stirred considerable protest from teacher groups, notably the Texas State Teachers Association, which has gone to court to overturn the exam.

The Texas Supreme Court heard arguments on June 18 on a Starr County lawsuit that challenged the test on behalf of 350 South Texas teachers and administrators. The TSTA also has filed suit on behalf of teachers who failed, claiming the test was racially discriminatory since a higher percentage of minorities than whites failed.

Besides those who failed the first test, thousands of others will take the exam Saturday, Ms. Anderson said.

Takers this time include former teachers, college personnel and private school teachers who want to retain their state-issued teaching certificates.

"We have 25,000 registered. That's very many more than the 6,500 who failed," Ms. Anderson said.

She said the tests will be administered at 8 a.m. and 1 p.m. at 144 sites across the state.

"The test will be made up of different questions pulled from the same pool" of questions used for the first exam in March, she said.

Results should be known in three to four weeks, she added.

Bullock maintains tax hike certain

AUSTIN (AP) — The state budget shortfall will hit at least $2.3 billion and make a tax hike inevitable, Comptroller Bob Bullock told lawmakers today.

"The question is not if there will be a tax bill. The question is how big it will be," he told the Legislative Budget Board.

In February, Bullock predicted a $1.3 billion shortfall in the current budget period, which ends in August 1987. Today, he said the oil price slump, a decline in sales tax collection and rising unemployment have combined to make the picture even worse.

Hearing on state budget brings emotional testimony

AUSTIN (AP) — The budget writers say the state is going to have to get by on less, but the parents of Texas' retarded say they need more.

Pepi Streiff of Duncanville wants to go back to work as a high school math teacher. She said she cannot because there is no place for her autistic son to go when his school day is over.

"I like teaching school and I can't stand scrubbing toilets, but I have no choice. Give me a choice," she told the Mental Health and Mental Retardation board at its Thursday budget hearing.

Gene Newton of Wichita Falls, president of the Association for Retarded Citizens, said the state must do more to help parents who keep their retarded children at home, rather than sending them to state institutions.

"The state provides very little for people doing the heroic job of taking care of their own children," he testified.

The budget hearing was held amid talk that the state budget shortfall might be nearing $2.3 billion. For MHMR, the money crunch highlighted what has always been one of the most emotional battles in state government — how to take care of the mentally retarded.

The Association for Retarded Citizens favors expanding use of community care facilities, and less use of institutions.

The Parents Association for the Retarded of Texas backs MHMR's state schools as the best thing for thousands of retarded citizens.

A federal court order has forced MHMR to look toward community care. Brenda Miller of Nashville, Tenn., who told the board she has a "2-year-old son who will celebrate his 17th birthday in September," urged the board not to give up on the state schools. Her son is in the Fort Worth State School, which she said is the "only satisfactory solution for his many needs."

"But you think of the state schools as an albatross around your neck, as the Edsel of 1986," she told the board.

Prior to the hearing, about 200 ARC members rallied at the MHMR building. They don't like an MHMR staff proposal that might put new residents in state schools.

"To me, there is no one in state institutions now that could not live in a community setting," said Dee Kifowit, an ARC official in Austin.

The MHMR staff, as required by the legislative budget staff, has prepared several budget alternatives — including one reflecting a 20 percent spending cut. To achieve that cut, the agency could close four state schools for the retarded and three state hospitals for the mentally ill, according to Wesley Hjornevik, MHMR director of operations.

Concert to switch sites again

AUSTIN (AP) — Jim Hightower likens producing the Farm Aid II concert to loading bull frogs into a wheelbarrow, but "leap frog" might be more accurate.

More problems with liability insurance have forced the benefit concert to switch sites for the second time in two weeks, this time to a horse-training facility east of the city, organizers said Thursday.

"I said the other day that nailing down all the business details of the Farm Aid II concert was kind of like loading bull frogs into a wheelbarrow," state Agriculture Commissioner Hightower said.

"We finally got the toads loaded up, but to make Farm Aid II work, we've had to move a little further down the road to Manor Farm country," he added.

The day-long July 4 concert to benefit the nation's farmers was originally scheduled for the University of Texas' Memorial Stadium, but prohibitive liability insurance costs forced promoters to move it last week to South Park.

That site six miles south of the city is where country singer Willie Nelson, who organized the Farm Aid concert, has held his Fourth of July picnic-concerts in the past.

"By moving to Manor Downs, Farm Aid II will save a ton on insurance," said Hightower, whose department is backing the production. "The insurance companies were charging so much at the other location that it would consume $6 out of every ($20) ticket.

"But by using the policy Manor Downs had in place, it will cost just $1 of every ticket," he added. "That's a bonus of $5 for every ticket that Farm Aid can send to provide services to hard-strapped farmers instead of big insurance conglomerates."

Manor Downs, a horse-training facility 10 miles east of the city on Highway 290, can easily accommodate 40,000 people and has better facilities than the South Park site, Farm Aid II spokeswoman Margaret Wade said.

"We're still going to have Farm Aid II," Nelson said. "It's too important an issue to stop now. Farm Aid could not make a reasonable deal with South Park Meadows. So we've moved to Manor Downs."

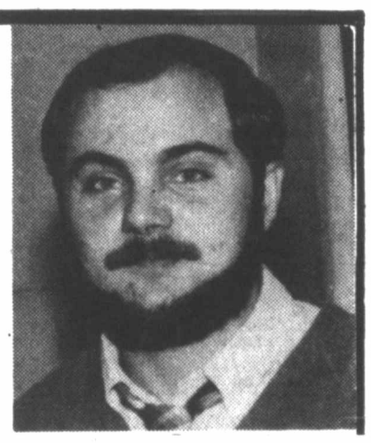

Nelson added that "our sponsors, the Texas Department of Agriculture, and the entire city of Austin have proved that this country will not give up on the farmers, and neither will I."

Meanwhile, organizers said Thursday that the Beach Boys have been added to the list of some 75 performers scheduled to appear at the concert.

Karen Rappaport of the Los Angeles public relations firm Rogers and Cowan said the Beach Boys' early morning Farm Aid performance would be one of two scheduled for that day.

Rockin' at Lake Meredith

Pilot of the airwaves here is my request
You don't have to play it but I hope you'll do your best
I've been listening to your show on the radio and you seem like a friend to me

—Charlie Dore

Tonight, probably much to the delight and false hope of J.N. McKean, I will fulfill a lifelong ambition.

Monday, Matt Frontera of KDXR radio station at Lake Meredith called and unwittingly offered to let a member of The Pampa News become a guest disc jockey on a show called "House Party" that runs on Friday nights. I obligated myself before Matt could realize what he was doing.

It was a great moment for me, for I've had a personal love affair with KDXR since I discovered the station. About a month ago, after I'd written a column complaining about the lack of a true Rock & Roll station in the Panhandle, I switched my little AM-FM clock radio to FM and made a Columbus-ian discovery.

The Beatles were playing — on what I later found out was KDXR — and I haven't turned the little bugger off since. Twenty-four hours a day, my house is blessed with Rock & Roll music. The Real Stuff. The Right Stuff.

KDXR, probably much to its financial chagrin, was once an FM "adult contemporary" puff station but has committed itself to playing nothing but pre-Eighties Rock & Roll classics. Whether there is a sufficient market for that kind of approach to entertaining the Panhandle remains to be seen, but at least one Johnny B. Goode out there hit the ceiling when he found it. Go. Go.

Something really bad has happened to Rock & Roll since the Punk Era gave way to the music that is now, and it's practically impossible to find a song that's not so overladden with rap hooks and synthesizers that the one decent fuzz guitar riff has been over-dubbed and placed on the far back tracks, if left on at all. When I hear most of today's music, I feel like my mouth, and brain, has been overrun by bubblegum and worthless trash.

Let me hear some of that Rock & Roll music
any old way you choose it
It's got a back-beat you can't loose it
any old way you choose it
It's gotta be Rock & Roll music
if you wanna dance with me
—The Beatles

Any radio fan probably has secret fantasies of becoming the world's greatest DJ, and few ever get the chance to realize they're wrong.

Last time I was on the radio was following Hands Across America, when I stopped by local KGRO to say Hi to my friend Dave Alexander.

"Why don't you do a report on Hands Across America?" Dave said, so I went on the air and talked about drinking Bloody Marys outside Clarendon.

Our Paul Pinkham, who tomorrow will forever leave the blessed ranks of bachelorhood, heard me on the air and commented the following day, "Boy you sound like a hick without your face."

After the laughter subsided, I promised Paul that I would try to take my face with me whenever I wished to speak. But I knew what he meant.

"Golden-throats" is the name we in the newspaper bidness have for radio and TV folks, for their well-beings rely on their glibness and ability to express it without sounding like they're from Texas or New York. Call it the mid-Nebraska sound.

With the luxury of print and post-thought we have to worry about style but not sound, and don't have the problems of Tommy Chong, who in his first time on the radio said, "I hope I don't f— up."

The risk I will assume, however, is immense. It's conceivable that I'll come off sounding like a total fool, not to mention exposing my musical tastes to the ridicule of the free planet.

And I'll have competition. Tonight on KGRO, on a program called "Summer Nights," our photographer Terry Ford will be the guest DJ. Dueling newspaper guys. I have no qualms with Terry's musical tastes, and no doubt he'll put on a good show. But listen to me. There's no static on FM.

Besides, when Matt called Monday he mentioned something about beer. That's the real reason I'm doing this gig.

Bonnie plodding north after causing havoc along coast

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — The season's first hurricane made a brief but dramatic entrance, bringing 85 mph winds and leaving two dead before plodding north and spreading heavy rains over much of East Texas and western Louisiana.

Hurricane Bonnie struck the Gulf Coast before dawn Thursday, spinning off tornadoes, destroying homes and knocking out power to thousands.

Thousands of beachfront residents who had boarded up their homes and fled inland to escape returned as Bonnie, downgraded to a tropical depression, lumbered north, carrying more problems with it.

Thunderstorms covered a large part of East Texas and western parts of Louisiana Thursday night dumping rains of 10 inches or more in some locations. The heaviest rain was at Ace, northwest of Beaumont and Port Arthur, with 13 inches, the National Weather Service said.

In addition to rains and flooding caused by Bonnie, high winds produced damage to homes and businesses as the storm tracked northward. A tornado was spawned by the storm near Fannett southwest of here.

U.S. 59 between Livingston and Shepherd near Lake Livingston, was covered with water and closed about 8:30 p.m. Thursday because of floodwaters from Big Creek, said Don Clark, a spokesman for the state Highway Department. Several farm-to-market roads also were closed and would remain closed for hours, he said.

"Reports from our people in the area are that they just had a deluge," Clark said.

About 20 miles to the southeast of the closed highway, water spilled over a dam at Big Thicket Lake just above a housing subdivision after 13 inches of rain had fallen, Liberty County deputy George Addington said.

The area was evacuated of its small number of residents, said Mike Cox, a spokesman for the Department of Public Safety.

"There have been no injuries and no deaths. Apparently, it is a very small lake," Cox said about 10 p.m., two hours after the evacuation began. "It is already receding."

Cox, who said a trooper reported the area had 13 inches of rain Thursday, said he did not how many people were evacuated.

There were reports of marinas and boats at Lake Sam Rayburn being damaged. Bill Webb, owner of the Shirley Creek Marina near Etoile, estimated wind damage from $750,000 to $1 million.

Across the lake, Hank Creek Marina near Huntington, broke free from its moorings and floated into the lake, and parts of it were submerged, said Colleen Schroeder, dispatcher with the Angelina County Sheriff's Department.

Bridge City, just north of Port Arthur, recorded 7½ inches of rain Thursday, and several places northwest of Beaumont reported over 5 inches.

Bonnie was not a major hurricane but still managed to terrify residents when it hit land at 4:45 a.m. south of Port Arthur.

"I sure enough thought we weren't going to live through it," said Nancy Morrell, who huddled in her Port Arthur home with her 83-year-old sister because they couldn't walk to a shelter. "It held us in fear. We were two scared old ladies."

One man was killed when his pickup truck was caught in a squall and went out of control on a roadway in Vidor, northwest of Port Arthur, and a partially paralyzed woman died after being trapped inside her burning Port Arthur home by flames fueled by gusts from the hurricane, officials said.

At least a dozen people were injured.

"This wasn't a severe hurricane, it wasn't a major hurricane, but it was a full-blown hurricar.e when it moved across the coastline this morning," said Neil Frank, director of the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla.

The city of Port Arthur was without power until about noon Thursday, said Police Sgt. Robert Williamson. Though the city showed evidence of the storm, with broken store windows, scattered tree limbs and debris-strewn streets, no major structural damage was reported, he said.

In nearby Beaumont, trees fell and six small passenger planes were toppled at the airport but no major damage was reported, said police Capt. Joe Crutchfield. City officials asked the state for emergency aid.

Gov. Mark White said he did not have a specific dollar amount on the damage. "Until I do, I won't be able to make a determination. Certainly, in the past, when we've met the criteria we always seek that assistance."

Bonnie, the first June hurricane to strike Texas since 1957, was downgraded to a tropical storm at 9 a.m. Thursday.

Bonnie's victims were Raymond Briggs of New Orleans, killed when his pickup truck was caught in a squall about 8:30 a.m. and went out of control, and Myrtle Williams, 56, who died in the house fire.

Woman was killed by a stray bullet

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Police used a combination of old methods and modern technology to determine that a Fort Worth woman shot to death in her home was killed by a bullet fired from a street 200 feet away, officers said Thursday.

Officers had first theorized that the woman may have committed suicide.

Dorothy Helen Thomas, 58, died of a single gunshot wound to the head while she was watching television at her home June 20, police said.

Officers discounted the suicide theory first when they could not find a weapon. A pistol kept in the home by the woman's husband, Ross Thomas, 72, had not been used, officers said.

Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Wrong message from U.S. House

Several members of the House of Representatives were virtually dancing in the aisles last week, sure that they had sent a clear message to South African President P.W. Botha. Thay they probably did, but not the message these jubilant legislators had in mind.

The only message sent by House approval of a measure to impose a total economic embargo on South Afirea and force all U.S. businesses to withdraw immediately from that country is that Congress has little apparent regard for freedom, at least were American businessmen are concerned.

If American companies believe that cancelling business with South Africa will work in the fight against apartheid, they should be free to pursue that route, just as those who do not believe in sanctions and embargoes should be free to continue their business interests.

Any attempt to force someone to believe in freedom is contradictory and is bound to fail.

The end of apratheid, like the end of discrimmination against blacks in this country, will no doubt be slow in coming. It is dependent at least in part on individuals freely denying the practice because they find it repugnant, not because they fear outside retaliation.

Fear merely serves to drive discrimination undergrount, not eliminate it.

Fewer than 50 representatives were on the House floor when the measure, offered by Ron Dellums, D-Calif., passed on a voice vote. Opponents of sanctions say they were willing to let this absurd measure pass, rather than one calling for less sweeping intervention, because is is bound to fail in the Senate.

It shouldn't have gotten that far in the first place.

Racism, pure and simple

Joseph Sobran is a rising star in the constellation of conservative intellectuals. An editor of William F. Buckley Jr.'s National Review, he also writes a column which appears in some 60 newspapers. His stature on the Right is undisputed. One conservative journalist has called him "a contemporary Chesterton." A profile in the Heritage Foundation's Policy Review compared him to Samuel Johnson. But Sobran apparently is very different from what his admirers assume.

Lately, some of his views have sparked controversy among conservatives. Midge Decter, the head of the Committee for the Free World and a contributor to Commentary, was so incensed by some columns critical of Israel that she wrote him a letter calling him "a crude and naked anti-Semite."

Buckley, who was sent a copy of the letter, denied in National Review that Sobran is anti-Semitic but conceded that a reader "might reasonably conclude that those columns were written by a writer inclined to anti-Semitism." In a letter to Decter, he said, "If I thought him an anti-Semite, I would ask for his resignation from National Review.

But another of his syndicated columns, overlooked by Buckley and Decter, makes it impossible to escape the conclusion that Sobran is an anti-Semite and a racist. Published in the New York Tribune on May 13, it praised a magazine called Instauration that, he said, "faces the harder facts about race." The piece was brought to my attention by Alexander Cockburn in a column in the Nation.

Instauration, Sobran wrote, "is an often brilliant magazine, covering a beat nobody else will touch, and doing so with intelligence, wide-ranging observation and bitter wit. It is openly and almost unremittingly hostile to blacks, Jews, and Mexican and Oriental immigrants."

Did Sobran repudiate that hostility? No. His only caveat was that "sheer antagonism" toward other races is nearly as hard as the "altruistic benevolence" advocated by liberals. Not evil — merely "hard."

Instauration is not brilliant, intelligent or witty. It is a vulgar hate sheet that reveres Nazi Germany, preaches the superiority of the white race and relentlessly disparages Jews, nonwhites and homosexuals. Nearly every article is filled with racist venom.

There will be no black progress, said one article, "until someone tells us how you can get inside genes and do a little redesigning." It said, "walls should be erected around such cities as New York, Philadelphia, Detroit and Los Angeles (to bottle up non-whites)."

Harvey Milk, the San Francisco city councilman murdered by Dan White, was reviled as "another dead Jewish 'hero'...the faggot councilman." Accounts of Nazi genocide are "Holocaust atrocity-mongering." Jeane Kirkpatrick was castigated for defending Israel and urged to "stop pounding the drums for someone else's race and start pounding the drums for your own." Reed Irvine, the conservative head of Accuracy in Media, was denounced for his Japanese wife.

Rep. Newt Gingrich, R.-Ga., was suspected of being contaminated by Jewish ancestry and was criticized for hiring a black staff aide. Instauration said he is one of those conservatives who "couldn't care less about the tragic racial transformation of their country wrought by high non-white birthrates and vast torrents of legal and illegal non-white immigrants."

One conservative who gets different treatment is Sobran. In September 1985, Instauration ran an article titled "The Brave Pen of Joseph Sobran," which said he "has repeatedly defended white racial pride and solidarity."

Sobran isn't to blame for that article. But he is to blame for aligning himself with vicious hatemongers who advocate race war and regret the defeat of Hitler. There is no way to praise a magazine like Instauration without being implicated in its vile fantasies.

In a telephone interview, Sobran conceded that Instauration is "racist" and insisted his praise of it was not "unqualified." But he declined to recant the complimentary words he wrote about the magazine. His only violation, he said, is one of "etiquette."

William F. Buckley Jr. says he wouldn't employ Sobran if he knew him to be an anti-Semite. Presumably a lot of newspaper editors who publish Sobran's column feel the same way. And the conservative movement has no need of people who are attracted to racism. Joseph Sobran has provided the incriminating evidence against himself. What more proof does anyone need?

A new power may await

If only while random-dialing among TV stations you have come across one or more of those faith-healing evangelists...

They touch people on the head and pronounce them "cured"...

There is one who demonstrates his own faith in his healing hands by telling a cripple to walk and then throwing the cripple's crutches into the balcony.

To somebody deaf he may say, "Come here!" Then he'll grab them by the ears and shout, "Demons, come out!"

Scripture says that to some God gives "the power of healing"...

But Scripture also warns that the devil wears some beautiful disguises...

So whom do we believe?

The healing process is enough complex, enough mysterious at best so that it behooves none of us to laugh at any of us in the urgent quest for more pain-free years.

In the western section of Peking, China, at this moment a long line of people wait...

People on whom medical science has given up are waiting their turn to enter a dingy, makeshift hospital where Mr. Xun Yunkun offers them hope.

He believes a person's life force can be concentrated — can be focused — and thus multiplied.

He calls this discipline "Chee," spelled Q-I.

He teaches that mastery of Quigong makes one tough enough to withstand sledgehammer blows and strong enough to smash great stone boulders.

And he allows such demonstrations to convince skeptics.

But he says he uses the "force" only for healing.

Western observers, however cynical, are impressed when they see his hands effervesce in water; when with the principles of acupuncture — though with no needles — only his stroking hands — he helps people who cannot walk walk. And under his touch cancers cool.

Phony baloney?

I would not dare so say.

I have seen clinical studies wherein an individual — including myself — by sheer power of concentration can control his pulse rate, his blood pressure and his body temperature.

With the dogmatism of inexperience I once labeled acupuncture a pseudo-science. I was made to eat those words.

So I don't know about the faith healers.

Perhaps, having demystified outer space, we are about to explore inner space — and there discover a force infinitely more powerful than the ruptured atom — the power of prayer.

Several statehouse showdowns ahead

By Robert Walters

SCAPPOOSE, Ore. (NEA) — The leading candidates in Oregon's gubernatorial race this year are known throughout the state as Norma and Neil — but that first-name familiarity obscures a fierce struggle between two highly competitive politicians.

Neil is Neil Goldschmidt, a charismatic Democrat who was elected mayor of Portland, the state's biggest city, in 1972 when he was only 32 years old. He was re-elected in 1976, then resigned in 1979 to join President Carter's Cabinet as transportation secretary.

Norma is Norma Paulus, an equally appealing Republican and self-described "staunch feminist," who was an activist member of the state legislature. She was elected Oregon's secretary of state in 1976 and re-elected in 1980.

"It's already become a cliche to say the state can't lose regardless of which candidate wins," says one journalist who has observed the competition. (Republican Gov. Victor Atiyeh is legally prohibited from seeking a third term.)

The confrontation in Oregon is among the most compelling of this year's gubernatorial contests — but a number of other races are equally noteworthy. Among them:

Two former governors, both Republicans, are seeking to topple incumbent Democrats and regain their old offices. In Texas, William Clements is challenging Mark White, while in Ohio, James Rhodes is attempting to unseat Richard Celeste.

Nebraska is the scene of an unprecedented gubernatorial contest. For the first time in U.S. history, both of the major party nominees — State Treasurer Kay Orr, a Republican, and former Lincoln Mayor Helen Boosalis, a Democrat — are women.

The governors of the country's two most populous states — California Republican George Deukmejian and New York Democrat Mario Cuomo — both face re-election this year and both are favored to win their bids for second terms.

In two other populous states, however, popular governors are barred by law from seeking re-election to third terms. Forced to step down are Pennsylvania Republican Richard Thornburgh and Florida Democrat Robert Graham. Also retiring this year is the man who has served as governor of a state longer than any living politician — Alabama Democrat George Wallace, an always colorful and often controversial politician.

In Iowa, the Democrats hope to capitalize upon unrest stemming from chronic problems in the agricultural economy. They believe Republican Gov. Terry Branstad is vulnerable to a challenge from Lowell Junkins, a Democrat who previously served as majority leader in the state Senate.

Earlier this year Republican expectations of victory in five states — Florida, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan and Texas — were tied to the fortunes of former Democrats who had changed parties, but those hopes now have generally dissipated.

Overall, however, the Democrats are more vulnerable because they must defend three times as many seats as the Republicans. Of the 36 gubernatorial posts to be filled this year, 27 now are held by Democrats.

In the early stages of the Oregon campaign, voters appear to be having difficulty choosing between two exceptionally attractive candidates. Recent polls commissioned by Portland's Oregonian, the state's largest newspaper, show Paulus and Goldschmidt in a virtual tie.

One important factor in the campaign may be geography. Goldschmidt's tenure as Portland's mayor probably will be an asset in the city and the more heavily populated Willamette Valley but a liability in rural areas where big city mayors are suspect.

Paulus is a native of Burns, a small community in southeastern Oregon. In many other crucial respects, however, the two candidates are more alike than they are different.

U.S. DENOUNCED — General view of the International Court of Justice Friday morning when it denounced the U.S. backing for the Contra rebels trying to topple Nicaragua's Sandinista government and termed the U.S. support a violation of the United Nations charter. (AP Laserphoto)

World Court denounces U.S. financial support for Contras

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — The World Court today denounced U.S. backing for Contra rebels seeking to topple Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government, and termed the U.S. support a violation of the U.N. Charter.

It declined to award Nicaragua its claim of $375 million compensation for damage caused by U.S.-support for the Contras, but said that the United States was under obligation to make reparations.

The 15-judge court, formally known as the International Court of Justice, is the judicial arm of the United Nations and has no enforcement powers, but wields considerable moral authority.

Its ruling came at the end of a lopsided 26-month legal proceeding begun by the Sandinistas, who presented evidence of what they said were American efforts to topple their government.

The United States boycotted most of the court proceedings, and a U.S. diplomat had said earlier in an interview with The Associated Press that a verdict against the United States was a foregone conclusion.

"The court has found that the arming and training of the Contras is a violation of the prohibition of the use of force (as laid down in the U.N. Charter)," said Court President Nagendra Singh of India.

The decision comes two days after the U.S. House of Representatives approved President Reagan's request for $100 million in aid to the Contras.

Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto said he hoped the ruling would have a "sobering effect" on the Reagan administration and that the United States would "become a respectable member of the international community."

The United States, which has withdrawn from court jurisdiction in Central American disputes, was not officially represented when the verdict was read.

The court said the amount of compensation should be settled in a subsequent proceeding if the parties agree, which seemed an unlikely prospect because of the United States withdrawal from the case.

The ruling said that the CIA's reported mining of Nicaraguan ports in 1984, a major element of the Sandinista complaint before the court, "affects Nicaraguan sovereignty."

Most of the court's findings came on a 12-3 vote, with U.S. Judge Stephen M. Schwebel, British Judge Sir Robert Jennings and Japanese Judge Shigeru Oda dissenting.

The Sandinistas' legal team featured Harvard law professor Abram Chayes, and fielded witnesses ranging from a former CIA analyst to an ex-Contra leader.

Middle class Americans get better break from House tax overhaul bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — For all their political appeal, the low tax rates in the Senate tax-overhaul bill are not nearly as generous to middle-income Americans as those in the House version, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., said today.

Nevertheless, Rostenkowski said, "every item in the House bill is negotiable" when taxwriters from the House and Senate start drafting a compromise tax plan next month.

In a speech prepared for a seminar at the Bank of Boston, Rostenkowski said he would be willing to accept the lower rates in the Senate bill if senators agree to the formula in the House bill that targets more relief on middle-income people.

Rostenkowski will head the House delegation to a congressional conference committee that will try to compromise hundreds of differences beween the tax plans passed by the House and Senate. He emphasized anew that his main concern will be the middle class.

"The real measure of this conference will be the 'paycheck index' — that column of figures that shows the actual take-home pay for families over the entire range of income," the congressman said. "If that middle-income family rates appreciably higher than his richer neighbor across town, then we have done our job well."

Both bills will have to be changed if the measure is take-home pay.

According to the Joint Committee on Taxation, the after-tax income of people earning between $30,000 and $40,000 would be increased by 0.4 percent under the Senate bill and 1 percent in the House version. But the after-tax income of those above $200,000 would rise by 1.4 percent in the Senate plan and 1.9 percent in the House bill.

"If the House conferees have one mission," Rostenkowski said, "it's to guarantee fairness for middle-income families. They're the real victims of an unfair tax system — and they ought to come away the real winners.

"As the bills now stand, the Senate rates are lower — but the House distribution gives far more relief to middle-income families," he added.

On the other hand, the chairman noted, the House shifts a greater burden from individuals to corporations — $140 billion over five years in the House version and $105 billion in the Senate plan.

"A logical compromise would have the House move toward the Senate rates and the Senate move toward the House after-tax distribution — and take the best of their individual reforms and our corporate reform in payment," Rostenkowski said. "It's a formula that would give the new law the most fairness and economic force."

Although volunteering that nothing in the House bill is sacrosanct, he ackowledged the political sensitivity of restricting deductions for Individual Retirement Accounts and sales taxes, as the Senate bill would do.

Either bill would slash individual tax rates significantly below the present top rate of 50 percent. The House plan would have four rates from 15 percent to 38 percent; the Senate voted what purports to be a two-rate system — 15 percent and 27 percent — while requiring that upper-income people pay up to 32.4 percent on some of their income.

"The true measure of tax equity is not tax rates, but after-tax income," Rostenkowski said. "It's not who gets the lowest rates; it's who brings home the most bacon."

Texans urged to unite behind Gulf homeport

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Texas congressional delegation should push for a Gulf Coast homeport on the basis of national security and stop playing politics by supporting additional ports in less strategic locales, says a Southeast Texas congressman.

Rep. Mac Sweeney, R-Wharton, a freshman member of the House Armed Services Committee, made the suggestion Thursday following the House's rejection, 241-190, of start-up money for the Navy's expensive and controversial proposal to place ships at new ports around the country.

The entire delegation, with the exception of Rep. Mickey Leland, D-Houston, who opposes the homeports because they would house nuclear-powered warships, voted in favor of going ahead with the first new ports in Staten Island, N.Y., and Everett, Wash.

Money for proposed ports at Corpus Christi and Houston-Galveston won't come up until fiscal year 1987.

"By blindly supporting homeports in other states, adhering to an 'I-scratch-your-back-you-scratch-mine' mentality, we actually discredit the Corpus Christi proposal," said Sweeney.

The Navy says new ports are necessary to spread its fleet around and avoid a Pearl Harbor-type attack. Critics have complained that the spreading-around is designed instead to attract political support for the entire program.

Sweeney said the Texans should consolidate behind the argument that the Gulf Coast port is strategically necessary.

"More than in any other area, our country needs a Navy base along the Gulf Coast," Sweeney said. "With confrontations heating up in Nicaragua and El Salvador and rumblings coming up from the Panama Canal and the Caribbean, a homeport in Corpus Christi has become vital to protect our national security."

The Texas port has an advantage, too, because the state and local governments have agreed to put up $50 million toward its cost.

Sweeney noted that groups in New York have organized against the port because of the nuclear issue and that the Washington state homeport would require 100 percent federal financing.

Though the House vote was considered a setback for the homeport program, Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, remained confident the Gulf Coast bases will eventually be approved.

Gramm was was credited with helping get the potentially lucrative ports promised to the Texas coast.

"While the vote did not directly affect Texas, it is a setback for Texas homeporting," said Gramm.

"As I've said, there will be many hurdles," he said. "This wasn't the highest one."

The Senate Armed Services Committee has voted narrowly in favor of homeporting. Gramm said he hopes the Senate will support the program when the military construction appropriation bills go to a House-Senate conference committee.

Defendant says he suggested taping of torture sessions

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — A former Hill Country ranch worker has testified he suggested the tape recording of torture sessions of another laborer.

Carlton Robert Caldwell, 21, also admitted he helped torture Anthony Bates. But Caldwell said he participated because he feared he might be the next target in a torture session.

He said he recommended tape recordings because he might be able to escape with the tapes as evidence.

Caldwell is the only one of three defendants who has taken the witness stand in an organized crime trial.

Caldwell, of Alamagordo, N.M., Walter Wesley Ellebracht Sr., 55; and Walter Wesley Ellebracht Jr., 33; are charged with conspiracy to commit aggravated kidnapping and murder.

They are accused in the March 1984 cattle prod torture death of Bates.

The state claims Bates, like other drifters, was lured to the Ellebracht ranch with the promise of work. Then he was forced to stay.

The prosecution also claims after Bates died, his corpse was doused in gasoline and burned.

Caldwell said Thursday the first time the junior Ellebracht handed him the cattle prod to use on Bates, he did not turn on the power.

"Why did you participate?" in the torture sessions, Caldwell's attorney Scott Stehling asked.

"Because if I didn't, then I could very well have been cuffed myself and been in Anthony's position," Caldwell said.

Caldwell said Ellebracht Jr. instigated the first torture session after Bates, who had been injured in a chainsaw accident, refused to work on the ranch.

"O.K., boys, get the cuffs," Caldwell said he told him and other ranch workers. "It's party time."

Caldwell said the younger Ellebracht did much of the shocking after Bates' hands were handcuffed to a tree. But other workers, including Mark Hamilton and Darryl Hunsaker, participated.

Hamilton is awaiting trial on similar organized crime charges. Hunsaker has been charged with murder in the case.

After one torture session, Caldwell said the senior Ellebracht told him "he wished his son hadn't shocked Anthony. I said I wouldn't have done it except Junior passed me the cattle prod. He said he didn't believe any of us would've done it except we were scared of each other and scared of Junior."

I told Junior if he decided to torture anyone again, he should record it," Caldwell said.

He said he made the suggestion because he had been told he was the next torture target.

Also, he said, "I felt if I was ever able to get away from the ranch, I might be able to take originals or copies of originals with me."

The tape recorded torture sessions have been played in the courtroom in the current trial.

A witness has identified voices belonging to Junior and Caldwell on the tapes.

"Did you or anyone discuss murdering Anthony?" Stehling asked.

"No," Caldwell replied.

"Did you believe this (cattle prodding) would possibly kill Anthony?" Stehling asked.

"No, not kill him," the witness said.

Caldwell said the Ellebracht men and Junior's wife, Joyce, once handcuffed Hunsaker and tortured him with the cattle prod.

Caldwell said he watched the episode and then Junior handed him the cattle prod and urged him to take over. At the same time, he said, Mrs. Ellebracht was holding a shotgun on him.

"Did you fear for your safety?" Stehling asked.

"Yes, I did," Caldwell responded.

"Did you shock Darryl Hunsaker because of that fear?" Stehling said.

"Yes," Caldwell said.

Caldwell said for a time after he arrived on the Ellebracht ranch in February 1984, he was allowed to drive some of the vehicles on the ranch. Twice, he said, he left the ranch for beer for himself and other workers. But the Ellebrachts apparently did not know, he said.

After Hunsaker was tortured, Caldwell said he was told he couldn't drive the vehicles without supervision.

"Were you ever told you could not leave the ranch?" Stehling said.

"Yes," Caldwell said.

"Who told you?" Stehling asked.

"Junior — on several occasions," Caldwell said.

"He told me one time if I ever tried to get out on the highway, he'd run me over," Caldwell said.

Police defuse bomb at information office

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — Police said they defused a home-made bomb early today near the European Community information office, less than a mile from the site of a Common Market summit meeting.

Police spokeswoman Dini Veldhuis said police received an anonymous phone call in the early morning hours from a man saying the bomb would detonate in a half-hour.

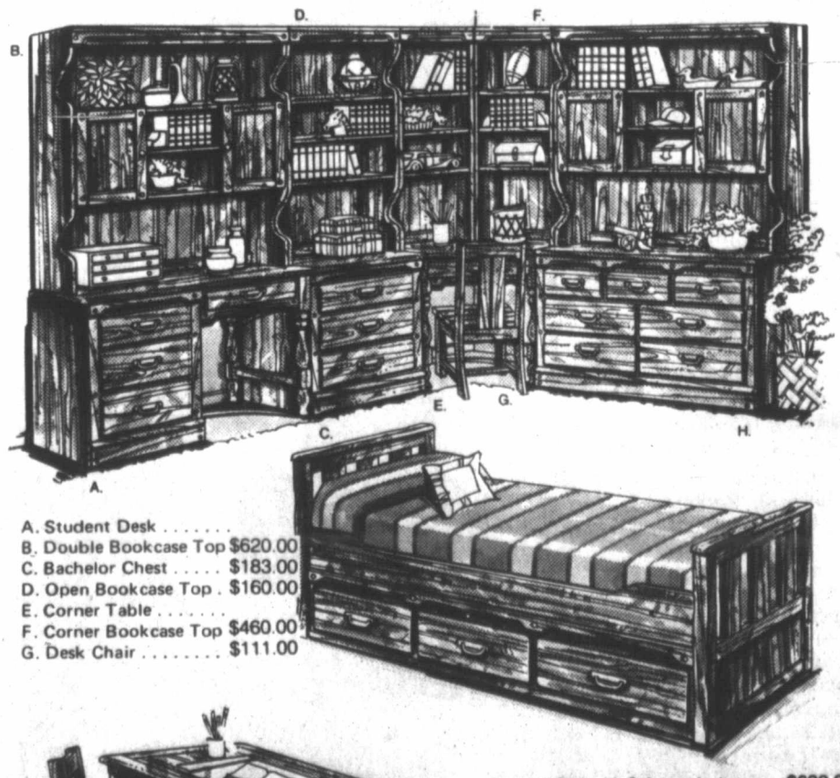

The Common Market leaders, who are holding a two-day summit meeting at the Foreign Ministry several blocks away, were not meeting at the time.

Among the European leaders attending the summit meeting are British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl and French President Francois Mitterrand.

South Africans urged not to state race on documents

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Protestant church leaders today urged South Africans to refuse to state their race on documents, a key measure in the administration of apartheid.

"If done on an increasing scale, this would eventually render the system unworkable," the South African Council of Churches said in a resolution adopted at the end of its annual conference in Johannesburg.

New national identity documents, replacing passes for blacks and separate cards for whites, will not state race, but race still will be designated on most forms, including birth certificates and driving licenses.

Johannesburg police, using powers granted under the nationwide state of emergency declared June 12, today extended a ban on students entering school premises to the black township of Alexandra.

Schoolgrounds have been a prime location for anti-government protests, and the ban on students entering school premises already was widespread.

The ban followed two more regional curfews imposed Thursday, one across the troubled KwaNdebele tribal homeland, north of Pretoria, and another on 11 black townships in the northern Orange Free State province.

Township residents were also banned from carrying slingshots.

The South African Council of Churches urged people to erase the final digit — which denotes race — from current identity documents for whites, people of mixed race and Indians, and to refuse to state race on any other documents or applications.

"This action goes to the root of apartheid. It is open to any and every adult South African," said a council resolution.

"It is an internal pressure which does not rely on foreign influence. It is a way for those classified into privileged classes to express solidarity with those oppressed by their classification," the resolution said.

The council includes representatives of the major Protestant churches in South Africa, but does not include the Dutch Reformed Church of the governing Afrikaners. The council is headed by a veteran Afrikaner anti-apartheid campaigner, the Rev. Beyers Naude.

It was not immediately clear what penalities, if any, South Africans could incur for altering documents.

In addition to the 9 p.m. to 5 a.m. curfew imposed in KwaNdebele, emergency regulations issued by the homeland's white police chief on Thursday said no one may "play, loiter or aimlessly remain on any public road."

Non-residents were banned under the decree from the 1,000-square mile homeland, 60 miles from Pretoria.

KwaNdebele is scheduled in December to become the fifth tribal homeland to acquire nominal independence under a policy which the original architects of the apartheid system of racial separation hoped would ensure permanent white control over 87 percent of South Africa.

According to the government, 66 people have been killed in South Africa since the state of emergency was imposed.

Among other things, the emergency rules prohibit news reports on security force actions without official permission, disseminating "subversive statements" which are vaguely defined, and revealing the identities of people detained without charge.

U.S., New Zealand fail to settle warship visit dispute

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz and New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange said today they failed to settle a dispute over visits by U.S. warships that is ripping apart their nations' 35-year-old defense pact.

The two leaders emerged from a 30-minute meeting and told reporters that neither side had budged from its stance on whether U.S. nuclear-powered or nuclear-armed ships can visit New Zealand's ports.

Lange said both sides stuck to their positions and "at this stage they're not reconcileable."

Asked if they had made any progress, Shultz said, "No, we didn't."

The dispute stems from the Lange government's non-nuclear policy, which prohibits ships with atomic power or weapons from calling at New Zealand ports.

The United States, whose ships periodically patrol the Western Pacific, has a policy of never revealing whether nuclear weapons are aboard its vessels. As a result, U.S. ships are prevented from making calls at New Zealand ports.

The Reagan administration has warned Lange's government that if it goes ahead with plans to codify the ban with legislation in August, the United States will drop its commitment to defend New Zealand if war breaks out.

Though a formal break will not occur until then, defense cooperation between the two countries was suspended in 1985 after the U.S. Navy destroyer Buchanan was barred from making a scheduled stop in New Zealand.

New Zealand has not been invited to take part in Navy maneuvers with the United States and Australia, the other member of the ANZUS defense pact.

In addition, instead of holding an annual three-nation meeting, U.S. and Australian officials will get together in San Francisco Aug. 11-12.

Shultz and Lange met in the New Zealand prime minister's suite at the hotel that is hosting the annual foreign ministers meeting of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations and its major trading partners.

Lange said his government does not challenge the U.S. policy but that it is not consistent with New Zealand's desires. "We have come to review the two policies, and as the secretary has said, the view is that at this stage they're not reconcileable," Lange said.

On Thursday, the United States reacted favorably to a request by President Corazon Aquino for a freer hand in spending $102.7 million in U.S. military aid, according to a senior State Department official.

Under current restrictions, much of the U.S. military aid must be spent on military hardware produced in the United States.

Mrs. Aquino said she preferred to spend the money on higher pay and better medical care for soldiers fighting anti-government guerrillas.

State politics holding attention of Democrats

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Democrats gathered today for a state convention that will concentrate more on the 1986 governor's race and state politics than the 1988 presidential contest.

No out-of-state speakers are on the two-day meeting that begins at 6:30 p.m.

"We want to be concerned about the state of Texas," said Matthew Dowd, an executive of the Texas Democratic Party's headquarters. "We have our share of good speakers and don't need any recruits."

U.S. House Majority Leader Jim Wright, who is expected to become the next speaker, will give the keynote speech tonight. Wright will be introduced by U.S. Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif, chairman of the National Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee. However, Wright is expected to stress how important is for Texans to re-elect a Democratic governor and Democratic congressmen. .

The main speakers Saturday will be White and U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, who does not have a re-election race this year.

White, who has a hot race with former Republican Gov. Bill Clements, plans to visit as many regional caucuses as he can today and Saturday morning trying to stir up support.

Other convention speakers today will be Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, Treasurer Ann Richards, Land Commissioner Garry Mauro, Comptroller Bob Bullock, Attorney General Jim Mattox, and Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower. Most of the Democratic congressmen or nominees for Congress will appear Saturday.

A scheduled speaker at a Saturday breakfast of Texas Democrats for a New Leadership, which arose from Sen. Gary Hart's unsuccessful 1984 presidential attempt, will be Lee Hart, the Colorado senator's wife.

Lt. Gov. L. Douglas Wilder of Virginia, the first black elected to a statewide office in the South since Reconstruction, is a featured speaker at a luncheon for black delegates.

Other special caucuses have been called for Mexican-American Democrats, Lesbian-Gay Democrats, youthful Democrats, women and labor.

There will be an "Irish American Caucus" in the convention hotel bar in memory of Woodrow Wilson Bean, veteran El Paso official and party worker.

State Democratic Chairman Bob Slagle is expected to have only token opposition for a fourth term.

Times Mirror pulls out of scrappy newspaper battle

DALLAS (AP) — The Times Mirror Co. has pulled out of one of the nation's hottest newspaper wars by selling the Dallas Times Herald, leaving its successor to carry on what has turned into an uphill battle.

Media News Group, a Woodbury, N.J., firm headed by a Texan who once rejected for a job at the Times Herald, said Thursday it would pay $110 million for Dallas' No. 2 newspaper.

Analysts agree the sale will be a good move for Los Angeles-based Times Mirror. But how the sale will affect the battle with the Dallas Morning News remains to be seen.

"It could be he's content to be a strong number two," New York media analyst Jeffrey Russell said. "I would think it's probably positive for A.H. Belo Corp.," owners of the Morning News.

For his part, however, Media News Group president William Dean Singleton, 34, says he plans to focus more on local news but not on making any radical changes.

"I don't see a lot of staff reductions. I see the paper being more and more a local newspaper, covering the primary market around it," he said. "In order to serve the community, you have to make a substantial amount of profits to plow back into the product."

After Times Mirror bought the perenially second-place Times Herald in 1970 for $48.5 million, the paper threw a healthy scare into a somnolent Morning News with aggressive reporting, a redesign and a circulation spurt, said Peter Elkind, an associate editor of Texas Monthly magazine and former Times Herald staffer who writes about Dallas media.

As the Herald edged ahead in a market its rival had dominated for nearly a century, the Morning News beefed up its staff and poured money into its news operation. That sparked a war for readership that gave Dallas its choice of some of the nation's best newspapers, analysts say.

News president and editor Burl Osborne said the Herald sale won't make any difference in his paper's strategies.

"We have set out to make the Morning News as good a newspaper for its readers and advertisers as we can," said Osborne, a former managing editor of The Associated Press who joined the News in 1980. "That goal has not changed and won't change."

Since 1980, the News has continued to widen the circulation gap and now has a daily circulation of 390,275 and 521,727 on Sundays, according to the Audit Bureau of Circulation.

The Times Herald has a circulation of 244,629 daily and 348,084 Sunday, and its sagging performance has led to a parade of new managers. Since 1981, the Herald has had four editors and five managing editors.

The most recent addition — Shelby Coffey III, who joined the Herald as editor in January — was asked to remain, but said he wanted time to think about it, said Arthur E. Wible Jr., who was named publisher in August 1985.

Wible will stay on, the newspaper announced.

The Dallas acquisition, along with planned purchases of two smaller newspapers, would place Media News Group among the top 10 companies in terms of number of publications.

"This is a dream come true for me," said Singleton, president and chief executive officer of two companies publishing newspapers in six states. "We will work hard to expand the tradition of the Dallas Times Herald as Texas' most honored newspaper."

The purchase price, in cash and notes, is subject to negotiation of a definitive agreement and government approval, according to a statement released by Times Mirror.

Wible said the sale resulted from both his recommendation that the paper be sold and Singleton's offer to Times Mirror.

"I recommended it to Times Mirror," he said. "This wasn't a case where they said, 'Hey, we want out.'"

Singleton, president and chief executive officer of Garden State Newspapers Inc. and Gloucester County Times Inc., was born in North Texas and got his first newspaper job at age 15, on his hometown daily in Graham.

Singleton said he applied at the Herald, but was not hired.

"They told me I was young and inexperienced. I went across town and they gave me a job," Singleton said. In 1970, he went to work for the Morning News as a copy and makeup editor. He also has worked at the Tyler Morning Telegraph, the Wichita Falls Record-News and several weeklies.

Singleton said he purchased his first newspaper at Clarendon in 1972 with $10,000 he borrowed from a Graham bank. He later bought weeklies in Azle and other Texas towns.

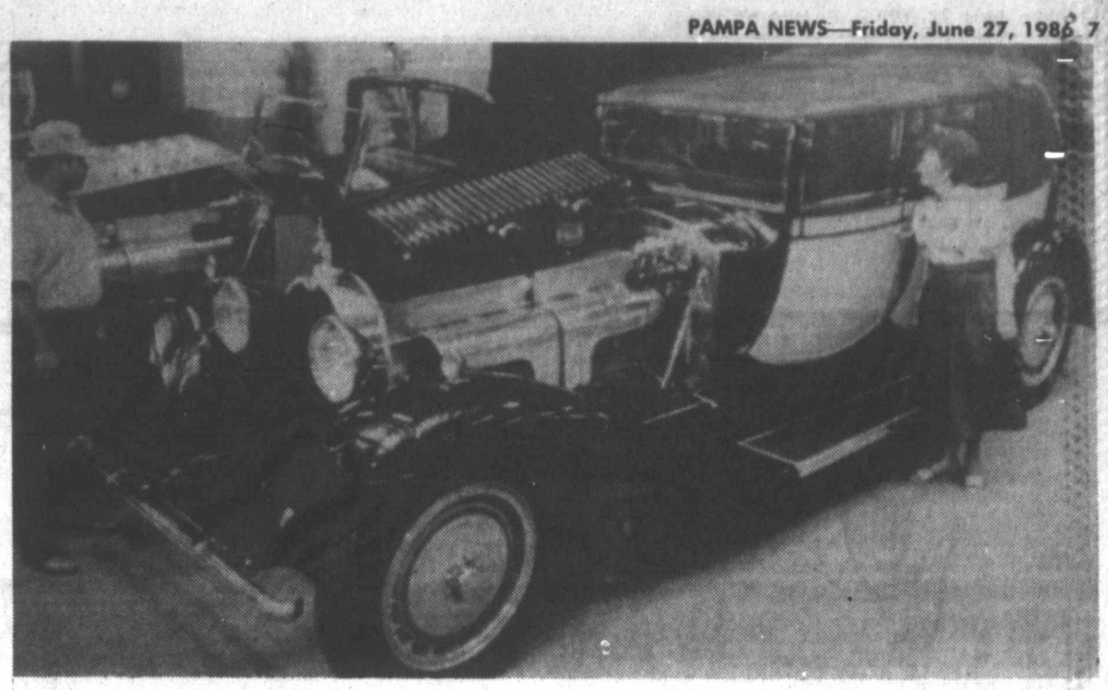

In 1975, he attempted to revive the Fort Worth Press, but the venture failed after three months.

In 1976, he sold his West Texas newspapers and joined Albritton Communications Co. Within two years, he was named president of the newspaper division and helped the company acquire several newspapers and broadcast companies.

His two companies own 21 daily and 15 weekly newspapers in six states. He is partners in Media News Group with Richard B. Scudder of Navesink, N.J., the former publisher of the defunct Newark News, and John Buzzetta, publisher of three small daily papers in northeastern Ohio.

Garden State Newspapers Inc. recently bought several newspapers in Texas from Harte-Hanks Communications Inc. They are in Marshall, Del Rio, Big Spring and Huntsville.

Times Mirror owns the Hartford Courant, Connecticut's largest newspaper; the Stamford (Conn.) Advocate; the Morning Call in Allentown, Pa.; Greenwich (Conn.) Time; the Denver Post and Newsday, based on New York's Long Island.

Handling personal finances

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — The 15-year home mortgage has won a lot of support among homeowners and financial advisers over the past two years, for the obvious reason that it takes only half as long to pay off as the 30-year loan.

The latter has been the standard over the past decade, especially in view of relatively high interest rates and big purchase prices. By amortizing over 30 years instead of 25 or 15 years, payments were kept within budgets.

As interest rates fell, however, the 15-year mortgage gained converts. No wonder: in some instances a homeowner could trade in a 30-year mortgage for a 15-year loan and pay no more on the note each month, thanks to the better terms.

But, for several reasons, this seemingly ideal situation may be less than that.

First, a 30-year loan offers more flexibility than a 15-year loan.

A 15-year mortgage cannot easily be extended to a 30-year note should the homeowner get into a financial bind and need to lower monthly payments. The 30-year loan, however, easily can be reduced to a 15-year note.

By holding a 30-year mortgage the homeowner has the option of making advance payments on principle. Depending on the amount, the 30-year mortgage can be reduced to 20 years or 15 years or even 10.

That necessarily means higher payments, however.

The homeowner also has the option of using any extra funds to invest in other ventures, such as the stock market or perhaps in a second home, rather than in reducing the length of the loan.

In each of these instances, the funds so invested might have appreciated at a rate of return far more profitable to the investor than a like amount "invested" in lowering the mortgage loan.

Still another consideration involves taxes. Money borrowed on a home is tax-deductible. True, the 30-year mortgage costs more in interest payments, but it also produces tax deductions bigger than those on the 15-year mortgage.

Another financial trap that can be leapt into just as easily involves bank-card credit.

Holders of credit cards throughout the country are receiving in the mail what appears to be good news: Their lines of credit are being raised significantly. No re-application is needed; just take the cash or use the credit.

The bad news is that interest rates in many areas remain extremely high — in fact, at levels that once were termed usurious. Some credit card rates are above 20 percent.

Credit card money is easy money, and the tempetation to use it is strong. The charges, however, can quickly produce trouble for borrowers in the event of an economic downturn and rising unemployment.

Next year, moreover, these interest charges might not be deductible on federal income tax returns. Both House and Senate versions of the new tax bill would end deductibility, making the pain of repayment all the more onerous.

Even before it's issued, ACLU attacks porn commission report

WASHINGTON (AP) — A 2,000-page report by the Attorney General's Commission on Pornography isn't due out for another two weeks, but the panel's most vocal critic, the American Civil Liberties Union, already is decrying it as an assault on the Constitution.

The ACLU compiled nearly a dozen copies of the lengthy study and circulated them among reporters at a news conference Thursday, along with the ACLU's own 200-page condemnation of the commission's conclusions.

In its report, "Polluting the Censorship Debate," the ACLU said nearly all of the 92 recommendations of Attorney General Edwin Meese's panel violate the First Amendment and undermine constitutional rights to privacy, due process and individual choice.

"The basis of this report is that ... any material that is ... considered offensive should be ridden out of town on a rail," said Barry Lynn, the ACLU's legislative counsel.

Commission spokeswoman Dee Kuhn said the panel would have no comment on the ACLU's criticism and that the commission plans to officially release its study July 8. The contents of the commission's report have been public knowledge for more than a month.

Only two copies of the panel's report currently are available for public inspection in federal offices in Washingtthan a month of government delays in printing the document and made its own copies.

The ACLU's legislative counsel also criticized the commission's central finding that there is strong evidence showing a connection between violent pornography and sex crimes. Lynn called the conclusion a "wildly misleading inference based on uncertain social science and frail personal anecdotes" from rape victims and others who said pornography was a factor in the assaults on them.

He called the government's report "a dangerous call to arms against free expression, one which relies on misrepresentations, distortions and deception to pollute the national debate over sexual materials and censorship."

But Richard E. McLawhorn, executive vice president and general counsel of the National Coalition Against Pornography Inc., called Lynn's charges "outrageous and completely inconsistent with the ACLU's professed belief in the First Amendment."

McLawhorn, whose organization represents more than 70 religious denominations and private groups, said the ACLU is "trying to censor First Amendment rights to speak out against what we perceive to be wrong. That's totally inconsistent and shows how they distort the truth about their real position, which is that they are defending the pornographers."

Among the commission recommendations the ACLU found most objectionable was a suggestion that Congress enact a forfeiture statute to reach any proceeds derived from violating federal obscenity laws.

Lynn said the result would be the seizure of "everything else that that company is involved in or every other book that that bookstore sells."

The ACLU also objected to a recommendation that the Federal Communications Commission scrutinize cable television and telephone dial-in services to determine whether obscene material is being distributed.

Pampa church planning family vacation school

The Family Vacation Bible School for the Mary Ellen and Harvester Church of Christ is scheduled to begin Sunday and run through Wednesday.

There will be classes for the entire family. The classes will be held in the evening to allow more adults to be able to attend.

Sunday classes will be held at 9:30 a.m., with morning worship at 10:30 a.m. and evening classes at 6 p.m. Classes Monday through Wednesday will be from 7:30 to 9 p.m.

Mike Gardner, pulpit minister for the Southwest Church of Christ in Amarillo, will be the keynote speaker and the teacher of the adult classes.

Teachers for the Pre-School through Junior classes will be from the Central Church of Christ in Amarillo: Edie Advance, Junior; Jackie Pyeatt, Primary, and Gina Love, Pre-School.

Missionaries from Miami, Fla., Mr. and Mrs. Carl James, will be teaching a special class for the Spanish-speaking participants. The Jameses are currently serving as missionaries to the Spanish-speaking people in the Miami area under the oversight of the Mary Ellen and Harvester elders.

A group from the church will have a door-knocking campaign on Saturday.

The church buses will run Sunday morning and each evening in order to reach out to those who desire to attend and who need transportation.

A fellowship dinner has been planned for Sunday following the morning worship service.

Gene Glaeser, minister, invited and encouraged the public to attend the Family Vacation Bible School.

HIS TOUCH

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: Do not conform any longer to the pattern of this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind. Then you will be able to test and approve what God's will is — his good, pleasing and perfect will. (Romans 12:2 NIV)

I make most of my own clothes. The advantages are frugality and creative expression.

The primary disadvantage is the possibility of ending up with a garment that doesn't fit properly. Nothing is more miserable than illfitting clothing. The discomfort not only makes me physically uncomfortable, it drains my self-confidence and depresses me.

Of course, the obvious solution to the problem is to discard the offending article. However, by the time I have invested time, effort and money, I am reluctant to give up that easily.

My first reaction is to attempt to endure the torture of the discomfort. When that doesn't work (and it rarely does), I begrudgingly rip the stitching in the garment and go back to the sewing machine.

When that doesn't work (and it rarely does), I try to push it off on some unsuspecting relative with the thought that surely someone can get some use out of it. When that doesn't work (my relatives have wised up to me), I finally trash what should have been trashed in the first place.

We Christians too often put together a project or lifestyle before we determine God's will. We end up with a situation that chafes, and binds, and is a spiritual burden rather than the joy we anticipated.

Reluctant to admit our error and concede futility, we trudge on stubbornly, regroup and adjust, or push the responsibility off on someone else.

Such discomfort and squirming!

And, all the while, spiritual comfort is found by simply trashing what should have been trashed in the first place and redressing in the good, pleasing, perfect will of God.

SPECIAL SINGING - A Soul-w[illegible]ning Seminar and special singing will be presented early next week by the Oklahoma Baptist College of Oklahoma City with Rev. Don Parker and the Ambassadors Quartet (pictured above). The seminar will be hosted by the Bible Baptist Church, Starkweather and Kingsmill, with services at 9:45 a.m. and 6:30 p.m. Sunday and at 7 p.m. Monday and Tuesday. The seminar will feature old-fashion singing and preaching, according to Rev. Richard L. McIntosh, pastor.

Surreal defiance of tragedy marks typical Jewish humor

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The story goes that the Lord announces that in three days, a great flood will engulf all life on Earth. Leaders of world religions stand before their flocks to offer some last words of hope.

"Repent your sins," the minister tells his congregation, "and we shall meet in the next world." The Buddhist advises, "Meditate and we shall reach Nirvana together."

"My fellow Jewish people," the rabbi intones. "There's no time to lose. We have only three days to learn how to live under water."

That grim determination in the face of disaster, a surreal defiance that adds a comic twist to tragic circumstances, is one aspect of typically Jewish humor — the subject of a coming international conference.

It's scheduled for June 9-12 at New York City's New School for Social Research, with approximately 500 participants to include top Jewish humorists and comedians as well as scholars of the field.

In advance of it, history Professor Edward Shapiro of Seton Hall University says that the 20th century has produced a tide of American Jewish comedians — what's been called a "golden age" of Jewish humorists.

Writing in Keeping Posted, a bimonthly magazine published by the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, he says a self-disparaging note often characterizes Jewish jokes.

For instance, there was the famed quip by Groucho Marx that he wouldn't join any club that would have him as a member.

"The growing prominence of the Jewish comedian has been accompanied by a willingness to make the Jew the butt of humor, often in a cruel and derogatory manner," Shapiro says.

The jokes frequently draw on anti-Jewish stereotypes, he says, such as acquisitiveness or sharp business dealings, as in the story of three Jewish business partners vacationing in Florida.

One suddenly grows pale when he remembers he left the office safe open. A partner reassures him, "Don't worry, we are here with you."

Citing the view of eminent psychiatrist Theodore Reik that Jewish self-mockery showed a "singular ability of self-assertion and self-preservation in spite of an overhwhelming world of enemies," Shapiro says:

"For those who are self-hating, Jewish humor will often confirm their alienation. For Jews proud of their heritage and people, the jokes will often be tokens of affection."

In a sense, he says, "a vigorous Jewish self-criticism is a sign of health, not of stagnation or degeneracy."

He sees evidence of that in American Jewish comedians who "no longer respond to the age-old fear of 'what the Gentiles will think'," despite concern by some Jewish officials that such self-depreciation is harmful.

Since World War II, he says, a major characteristic of American Jews is being up-front about their Jewishness, indicating "a security of one's own identity."

He says a "disportionate number" of 20th century American comedians have been Jewish.

Groucho Marx, Lenny Bruce, Woody Allen, Mel Brooks, Rodney Dangerfield, Buddy Hackett, Don Rickles and Joan Rivers are among the most known, plus numerous noted comic writers and cartoonists, such as Al Capp, Jules Feiffer, Rube Goldberg, Al Hirschfeld, S.J. Perelman, Philip Roth, Neil Simon and Norman Lear.

Many Jewish humorists, including Art Buckwald, Leo Rosten, Alan King and Ephraim Kishon, are scheduled to take part in the coming conference, being held under auspices of Israel's Tel Aviv University.

Shapiro writes that some Jewish jokes may have different meanings for Jews and Gentiles and sometimes Jews can see positive elements even in seemingly negative stereotypes of themselves.

That shows up, he says, in stories about the materialistic, repressive, lazy "Jewish American Princess," as in this story:

Sol comes home from a hard day's work. His wife asks him if he would like a thick steak, a baked potato, a piece of hot apple pie and a glass of wine for dinner. Sol replies, "Not tonight dear. I'm too tired to go out."

Although satirizing Jewish women, Shapiro says, such jokes can also be seen "as expressing the wholesome, traditional Jewish attitude toward wives" by Jewish males "proud of the fact that they are good providers and pamper their spouses."

DANNY AND APRIL BUNNELLE

First Church of the Nazarene to host Zone Rally on Tuesday

The First Church of the Nazarene, 500 N. West, will be hosting a gigantic Zone Rally at 7 p.m. Tuesday at the local church, featuring Danny and April Bunnelle of Nashville, Tenn.

Bunnelle has written songs which have been recorded by the Speer Family, Doug Oldham, the Singing Americans and others.

He has traveled with musical performing groups Direction and Bridge. His wife April sings with him. In April, 1985, the couple had the opportunity to perform backup vocals on the 1985 Dove Awards, which was televised nationally.

The pastor and congregation extended a welcome for everyone to be at this unusual gospel singing performance.

'Jesus Everywhere' gathering scheduled Monday for Pampa

A gathering of Christians concerned with today's world problems are invited to attend a "Jesus Everywhere" meeting at 7 p.m. Monday in the Heritage Room at M. K. Brown Auditorium.

The meeting has been arranged by Larry Hickerson of Borger, founder of Jesus Everywhere Ministries, with a primary goal to bring Christians of all denominations together for fellowship and prayer in particular.

Hickerson stated emphatically that he is not trying to start a one-world church. He added that "the very idea of such a thing is totally against everything I believe."

He also said he is not trying to persuade any Christian to change denominational or church affiliation or beliefs about any doctrine in the Bible.

"Those things that have divided the church will not be an issue at Jesus Everywhere meetings," Hickerson said. "What will be at issue are the things that are literally tearing this country apart." As examples, he cited drugs, pornography, child abuse, disease and abortion.

Hickerson has initiated the ministry on the basis that "this world needs Jesus everywhere." That phrase, he claimed, will soon be appearing on bumper stickers and billboards all over the Texas Panhandle and eventually the entire country.

The initial thrust of the Jesus Everywhere campaign consists of monthly meetings over a five-month period in selected communities. Stinnett and Fritch were the first two communities to host such get-togethers.

The first Jesus Everywhere meeting in Pampa is scheduled for Monday.

Hickerson said all Christians, regardless of church affiliation, are urged to attend. He invited pastors of all churches in Pampa and the surrounding area to get involved and take an active part in conducting the meetings.

He also said he equates Jesus Everywhere meetings to a family reunion, pointing out that all Christians are brothers and sisters in Christ.

The aim of the meetings is to get Christians praying together in unity to seek God's help in bringing solutions to the world's problems.

Concerning the abortion issue, Hickerson said he supports the Right to Life movement, but at the same time he condemns all acts of violence committed against abortion clinics.

When asked how can Christians who disagree on major doctrinal points come together, Hickerson said, "We may not be able to agree on the method of baptism, for example, but we can agree that we'd better find a cure for AIDS and quick."

He claimed that at the present rate of increase, the number of those infected with the virus doubles every year. At that rate, everyone in America will have contracted the disease by the year 2000, he claimed.

"That problem alone should be enough to cause every Christian in this country to put down their differences long engh to stand together in prayer and ask God to intervene before this deadly disease wipes us out," he declared.

"And that's just one reason we're trying to get as many Christians as we can to come together for prayer," he stated.

Hickerson noted that God says in 2nd Chronicles 7:14, "If my people, who are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land."

"That promise is as good today as it was the day God made it," Hickerson said. "But we're going to have to come together as one in the body of Christ and agree with God — and each other — to turn this country around."

Hickerson said anyone wanting more information may write Jesus Everywhere, 714 North Weatherly, P.O. Box 5131, Borger, Texas 79008, or call (806) 274-6615.

1st United Methodist Church sets annual patriotic worship service

The annual patriotic worship service of the First United Methodist Church, Foster and Ballard, will be held in the church's sanctuary at 10:30 a.m. Sunday.

The Chancel Choir will sing "From Sea to Shining Sea" by Samuel A. Ward as the call to worship. The processional of eight large flags led by Jackie Shaw, SSG, and Danny Cowan, FGT, of the Texas Army National Guard will open the service.

The morning anthem will feature "When the Saints Come Marching In," arranged by Diane Bish.

Rev. Max Browning, pastor, will speak on "His Truth Is Marching On."

The service will close with the choir singing "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," arranged by Peter Wilhousky. The performance will be accompanied by a brass ensemble. As the hymn is being sung, the large 8x12 foot American flags will be raised behind the altar.

Rev. Browning invited the public to share in the inspiring Sunday morning service.

Religion roundup

CHICAGO (AP) — One of a six-member committee reviewing the Roman Catholic bishops' 1983 condemnation of nuclear war predicts they will have to revoke their conditional acceptance of nuclear deterrence because of U.S. policies.

Auxiliary Bishop Thomas J. Gumbleton of Detroit told a Catholic group here that the bishops' provisional acceptance of deterrence hinged on progress toward arms control and almost none is being made.

"The bishops are going to have to face up to these facts," he said, as reported in the archdiocesan weekly, Chicago Catholic.

Besides tolerating deterrence only as transitional in reducing such weapons, he said conditions laid down excluded first-strike weapons, such as the MX, and also Pershing 2 missiles deployed by the United States in Europe.

He added, "While I have to be careful not to pre-empt the work of the committee, in my opinion, both of these conditions are not being met."

No date has been set for completion of the review, started in March on instruction of U.S. bishops. This was shortly before United Methodist bishops unconditionally condemned nuclear deterrence as immoral.

CINCINNATI (AP) — Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion has awarded the 1986 Roger E. Joseph Prize of $10,000 to Helen Suzman, a member of the South African Parliament, for her struggle against the apartheid system of racial separation in that country.

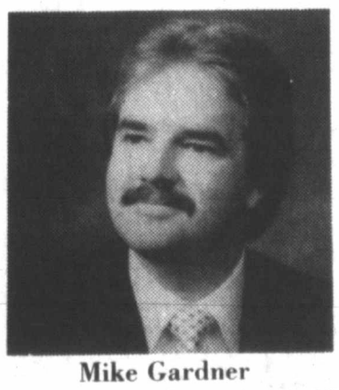

Mrs. Suzman, born in South Africa of Lithuanian Jewish immigrants and once the sole representative of the Progressive Party in Parliament, has long pressed for a multiracial government and gradual dismantling of the apartheid system.

Couple clings to homestead in midst of suburban sprawl

RICHARDSON, Texas (AP) — From the center of town here, it used to take about 15 minutes by buggy to get to the Huffhines place, the 106-acre farm along Plano Road where Bob and Mary Belle grew cotton and corn and raised their only son, Neely.

As a town in the early 1900s, Richardson was a collection of fewer than a dozen frame houses and a handful of businesses about 15 miles north of Dallas and just east of U.S. Highway 75. It was here that area farmers came to buy seed and supplies, to trade stories and to go to church.

In those days, farmers' sons often grew up to be farmers and small towns often looked the same from one year to the next. So it was that Neely Huffhines turned the same rich, black soil that his father had before him, and bought his seed and supplies in the small town near Highway 75.

It was the arrival of the 1950s, the creation of an electronics company called Texas Instruments and the construction of the multi-lane Central Expressway that changed the Huffhineses' lives and the character of Richardson.

People began moving in, and Richardson began spreading out in all directions, gobbling up farmland for tract houses, custom homes, businesses, shopping centers. Eventually the eastward march brought the town to, through and past the Huffhines farm.

Today Neely and Jackie Huffhines are living out their days on a 4.5-acre piece of the original homestead.

Neely Huffhines was born on the Plano Road farm 90 years ago. He is a descendant in a branch of the German Hoffheintz family that settled in the United States during the mid-1700s. His parents had moved here from Kentucky. Other branches of the family, some spelling the name Huffines, resettled in the Dallas area from Kentucky and the Carolinas.

One notable distant relative was the late Judge Roy Hofheinz, former mayor of Houston, the man who built the Astrodome.

Neely Huffhines was strictly a farmer, a quiet man who was interested in several young ladies before he met Jackie Harpool on a blind date in 1922.

Clifford Huffhines, 73, a distant cousin who lives in Richardson, remembers the young woman who was 10 years Neely's junior: "She was a pistol, a real go-getter. She breezed into this town like a breath of fresh air. She was so — so effervescent."

Seven years later, they married.

As an infantryman during World War I, Neely Huffhines had suffered severe bullet and shrapnel wounds to his leg and hip. He spent World War II working full time on the farm and part time in a defense plant.

Shortly before the end of the war, the Huffhineses' grand, 16-room farmhouse was struck by lightning and burned to the ground. They built a new, smaller, more modest house nearby. Today it is one of the few remaining symbols of Richardson's heritage.

Neely and Jackie Huffhines say they feel no animosity toward the people who moved in and developed Richardson.

"Time can't stand still," Mrs. Huffhines says. "You get kind of aggravated sometimes at what happens, but you have to go forward."

Going forward meant selling off pieces of the farm. This they did for several reasons, not the least of which was to cut back on the amount of work and responsiblity that a farm demands.

"We don't have any children," Mrs. Huffhines says. "No family, just the two of us. We have each other."

Of course, they could have simply stopped farming major portions of the property, but the development that moved in and around the property continually drove the taxes higher and higher.

"Taxes got so high, and you know farmers don't make so much," she says. "We were both working, and it seemed like it took everything we earned just to pay the taxes."

In 1966, the Huffhineses faced a hard decision about their property to the north between the farmhouse and Apollo Road. The pressure to do something was being applied by a developer who already had plans to build apartments there.

"I told Neely, 'We can't hold 'em back any longer, and I'm not sure I want to,'" Mrs. Huffhines recalls. "Neely just couldn't stand to see that property in apartments, and I thought I'd rather see it go to this town, to the children of this town."

The Huffhineses agreed to sell — at modest compensation — 50 acres of land to the city for a park.

Today, Huffhines Park at the corner of Plano and Apollo roads contains baseball diamonds, a tennis center, a recreation center and the Huffhines Pavilion, a wooded area that is the scene of many community and arts-related activities.

A few years after selling off the park land, the Huffhineses sold 20 acres south of Belt Line Road, near Plano Road. That tract now is home to the Sears & Roebuck store that anchors the north end of Richardson Square Mall.

Shortly thereafter, more land was sold for a shopping center north of the mall and, finally, a one-story apartment development north of the shopping center.

Surrounded by things new, the Huffhineses say their home still feels much the way it did years ago. A couple of friends still farm a garden plot next to the house.

"Sometimes at night, if the wind's from the north and there's a ballgame going on in the park, you can hear the crowd," Mrs. Huffhines says. "Otherwise, it still feels like we're out in the country."

Officials in Kerrville turn former landfill into nursery

By GARRY CHANDLER
Kerrville Daily Times

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — For most people, the thought of a used-up landfill or wastewater treatment plant doesn't conjure up visions of beauty.

Landfills and sewage plants are final destinations for materials people usually don't want to think about.

But in Kerrville, city officials say a nursery operation that combines public facilities and private enterprise is bringing new life to the city farm in a way that should ultimately have a positive impact on the local environment.

A 1985 contract between the City of Kerrville and Kerrville HRH, Inc., a local nursery company, eventually will open about 160 acres of the city farm off Loop 534 for nursery planting, said Calvin Neely, the city's public works director.

The 160 acres, to be planted in four stages, includes all of the city's former landfill site and the irrigation area for the city's wastewater treatment plant, he said.

"The idea was they would come in, take off the old vegetation, level the land and start planting St. Augustine grass for commercial sale," Neely said.

"They also have an agreement to use water from our wastewater treatment plant. Really, we're not reclaiming our landfill so much as using it for our wastewater effluent," he said.

HRH is planting in the area around the wastewater treatment plant's tailwater pond, Neely said. Planting should begin at the 40-acre former landfill site sometime next year, he said.

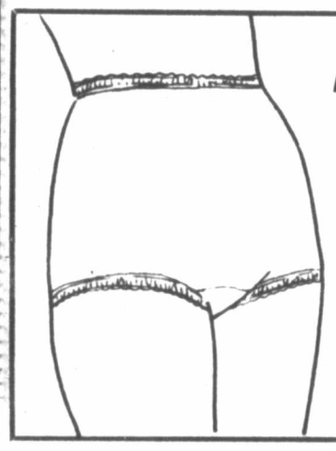

Although the city will continue to discharge treated wastewater into Third Creek even after a planned $7 million wastewater plant expansion is completed in 1988, 440,000 gallons of effluent will be held in reserve for HRH daily, Neely said.

In addition to improving the landscape, the HRH operation will help lower phosphate levels at the treatment plant site — an unexpected benefit, he added.

High phosphate levels in the city's wastewater discharge is being studied as a possible source of increased algae growth in the Guadalupe River.

"We inject the (sewage) sludge into the grass fields and then, every time they take the sod off, they take some of that phosphate with them," Neely said.

"I think that may help eliminate some of the concern about phosphate contamination," he said.

AIDS becomes matter of grave concern to public

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third in a series of articles on the myths and realities concerning the disease AIDS and its implications for residents of the Pampa area.

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

There's no doubt that AIDS - Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome — is a serious disease. Since its discovery some 10,000 individuals have died, including 450 in Texas.

It's definitely a matter of concern.

But it's not an easy disease to catch, said Karen Gregory, R.N., director of Inservice Education and Infection Control at Coronado Community Hospital.

Despite articles in newspapers and magazines and television reports, however, many people are extremely fearful of AIDS and take exceptional precautions if they think they are near an AIDS victim.

"You're not going to get it by talking to (AIDS patients), nor by casual contact," Gregory said.

AIDS, which prohibits the body's immune system's ability to ward off infections, is caused by a retro virus called HTLV-III (human T-cell lymphotropic virus) in the United States. (In France it's called LAV.)

But the virus, Gregory explained, is very fragile. It dies in the air.

"Consequently, it won't be on a table top or a Coke can," she said. And it won't be in a hot tub or a swimming pool since the chlorine in the water will kill it.

But if anyone is worried that AIDS virus or infected body fluids are contaminating an object, a cleaning solution of one part bleach to nine parts water can disinfect the surfaces, dishes or other objects, she explained.

Transmittal of the AIDS virus requires intimate physical contact in which there is an exchange of blood or semen containing the virus, and that infected body fluid must enter the host's blood stream.

The two major transmittal routes, as explained in yesterday's article, are intimate sexual activity, such as anal intercourse or oral sex, or intravenous needle introduction of body fluid — again, blood or semen — into another's blood stream, such as sharing contaminated needles among drug abusers or receiving a transfusion of infected blood.

A third route is the infection of a foetal child within the uterus when the mother has the AIDS virus in her blood.

Even having an AIDS victim's blood splash on one's skin is not likely to transmit the virus, unless it comes in contact with an open wound. It requires "not just touching the blood, but actually getting it into the body," Gregory stated, with the same situation needed in the case of virus-infected semen.

AIDS virus does not penetrate skin, she said.

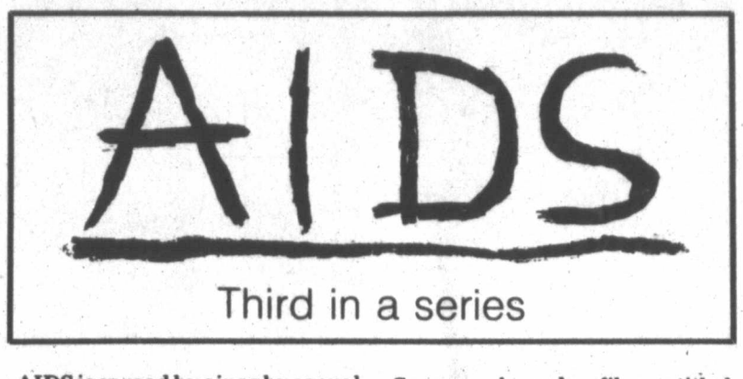

Some evidence indicates that HTLV-III virus may be present in the tears and saliva of AIDS victims, "but in very, very small numbers." And the evidence only indicates the presence of the viral antibodies in tears and saliva of some AIDS patients, but not all.

Gregory noted there is no evidence that AIDS can be transmitted through tears or saliva.

"I'm not saying people can't get AIDS from tears or saliva," she said. But so far there has been no evidence that the virus is transmitted by that route, and no confirmed cases involving infection from contaminated tears or saliva have been discovered.

Still, evidence and research indicates exposure won't result from being in the same room with AIDS victims, or shaking hands with them, or teaching them in the classroom, Gregory observed.

And there is no evidence that

AIDS is spread by air or by casual contact that occurs in daily living. There is no evidence that the virus can be spread by talking, kissing on the cheek, embracing, coughing, sneezing, sitting next to someone, touching doorknobs, serving food or drinks, or sharing utensils, telephones, dishes, toilet seats, bath tubs, showers or clothing.

"You're just not going to get AIDS in those activities," Gregory said.

Only blood and semen have been implicated in the transmission of AIDS.

Even doctors, medical technicians, nurses and other health care personnel have little reason to fear catching AIDS from a patient as long as they observe standard and proper techniques for handling any infectious disease.

In fact, such personnel are less likely to catch AIDS than they are to catch other more infectious diseases such as hepatitis B, flu, the plague and other highly contagious disorders.

At a public seminar last week on "AIDS: Myths and Reality," Gregory showed a film entitled Fear of Caring concerning taking care of AIDS patients in hospitals.

This film notes that AIDS is a serious disease, one that health personnel need to be aware of and concerned about. "But we don't need to fear it," the narrator says.

In hospitals, there is less risk for personnel getting AIDS through inadvertent needle pricks (less than 1 percent) than from hepatitis B (6 to 30 percent).

But both, the film notes, can be avoided by good hygiene practices, proper sterilization procedures, proper disposal of wastes and thorough washing of hands, linen and clothing.

"There is no need to fear caring for AIDS patients," the narrator says. Careful and proper techniques, as with other infectious diseases, are all that's needed.

So many "what if's" are still there that "we can't say anyone is 100 percent safe," Gregory said. But she said she would have no problems caring for AIDS patients or having casual contact with them.

One area that has caused some concern, however, is with blood transfusions. People who haven't engaged in the risky sexual practices or who haven't been IV drug abusers have contracted AIDS from transfusions of contaminated blood supplies.

But that problem is on the decrease because of careful screening procedures that have been instituted to check blood donations, Gregory said.

Tests to identify units of blood from persons who have been exposed to the virus are now used by all blood banks and plasma centers, she noted.

Tests are used for the antibodies produced against the virus, not for the virus itself, she explained. As yet, there is no definite test for the virus itself.

Presence of antibodies shows exposure to the HTLV-III virus. But, as pointed out in the first article, people may have been exposed to the virus but may not necessarily still have the virus. In most people exposed to the virus, the body's immune system produces the necessary antibodies to kill off the virus.

Two tests are currently in use. Elisa test is inexpensive but not very sensitive, Gregory said. Many false postvies have been recorded since it is too sensitive to other antibodies.

Western blot is expensive, running about $100 for each test. But it is much more sensitive to the AIDS antibody, she said.

Coffee Memorial Blood Center in Amarillo uses both tests. It first uses the Elisa test on donated blood; if it is positive, then the Western blot test is conducted.

And if that test is positive, then the individual is contacted, informed of the test results and asked to come in for additional tests.

However, because of the long period of time between exposure to the virus and the development of disease symptoms — up to seven years — cases of AIDS related to blood transfusions that occurred prior to widespread use of the tests, in late spring of 1985, may continue to occur. But a great decrease should be seen in such cases before the end of the decade.

Texas Panhandle area is probably one of the safer places in the nation to receive blood transfusions, Gregory said. For one, all the blood is tested for the AIDS antibodies. For another, all the blood comes from area residents. Only four AIDS cases have been reported in the Lubbock-Amarillo area, and most of those involved transients passing through to other destinations.

"I would have no qualms about getting a blood transfusion," Gregory said.

As with anything in medicine, "nothing's 100 percent safe, but it's as safe as it can be" at this time, Gregory said.

Also, people who want to donate blood should have no fear of getting AIDS. Accredited blood banks, such as Coffee Memorial, use new, disposable collection supplies for each donation.

Evidence indicates AIDS is a disease that is not easy to catch, with casual contact fairly ruled out in transmission of the virus.

Then why is there so much fear and stigma attached to AIDS?

NEXT: The fear and stigma of AIDS.

Romance on wheels is no handicap for happy wife

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I'd like to say a few words to all the single women looking for an honest, happy, rewarding relationship with a decent man. Please don't overlook a man with a physical handicap. I'm glad I didn't.

Thirteen years ago I met an interesting man. He was a veteran of the Vietnam War and was paralyzed from the waist down. He was permanently confined to a wheelchair, but could do almost everything an able-bodied man could do. We dated for several years in spite of the mixed feelings of my family, friends and sometimes myself.

Eight years ago we were married, and this man has given me two beautiful children, a wonderful life and a thousand other reasons for being alive.

As far as I'm concerned, my husband is the warmest, kindest, sexiest (yes, sexiest!) man in the world. Since our marriage, he has taught me more about courage, love and values than most people learn in a lifetime.

I am glad I focused on all the positive aspects of our relationship rather than the few minor inconveniences of living with a handicapped person.

LUCKY

DEAR LUCKY: Thank you for a dandy upper. He's lucky, too.

DEAR ABBY: Why is it that lately all the lovers on TV think the wider they open their mouths when they kiss, the sexier they are? It never used to be that way.

After many years of watching my favorite "soaps," I've turned to reading instead. It got to be too nauseating to watch those open mouths, chewing on each other's lips and slobbering all over each other. What people want to do in private is their own business, but do they have to do it on TV? It's revolting.

I've tried to ignore it, but yesterday my 5-year-old grandson greeted me with his mouth wide open, and a very wet kiss! When I told him that was not the way to kiss — he should keep his mouth closed — he said, "That's not the way they do it on TV, Grandma." Now what?

YUCK IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR YUCK: To protest anything you see on TV, write to the head of the network, then fire off a letter of complaint to the sponsors of the program, then write the producer. Meanwhile, tell the child that the people on television kiss their grandmothers with their mouths shut.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: My fiance and I are planning our wedding and we've hit a snag. He is going to have six ushers and I am going to have six bridesmaids.

All of his best friends are within an inch of being 6 feet tall, with the exception of this one guy he's known since first grade. "Shorty" is 5 foot 5.

We're afraid he will feel embarrassed standing with all those taller guys. Should "Shorty" be asked?

CHRISTMAS WEDDING

DEAR WEDDING: Yes. Let Shorty decide whether he wants to be included. Some short guys are long on self-confidence. He might surprise you.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: Now that the wedding season is upon us, please remind your readers of the following: If an invitation is addressed to Mr. and Mrs. John Smith, it does not mean Mr. and Mrs. John Smith and their three children. (Even if the John Smiths live 2,000 miles away, the invitation does not include their children.)

If the invitation is addressed to Mr. and Mrs. John Smith and family, then — and only then — are their children included.

If the invitation is addressed to Ms. Jane Doe, this does not mean that Ms. Doe may bring a date. If the invitation is addressed to Ms. Jane Doe and guest, then she may bring one.

Gena on Genealogy

By GENA WALLS

Many "tree climbers" are getting ready for the vacations and reunions, hoping to find missing ancestors or at least clues of them. Organization is the key to a successful clue-finding trip.

Take lineage charts and family group sheets for every family to the gathering. Watch for connecting family ties by marriage on the group sheets.

Plenty of pencils, paper, colored hi-lighters, paper clips or stapler and envelopes in a clear pouch make for easy access.

Remember a camera with extra film and batteries, tape player and other equipment to be used for visual aids.

Going to a cemetery? Try a rubbing. Take paper and artist charcoal or soft lead pencil. Bring a teflon scrub pad to clean the tombstone. Teflon pads won't mar the stone. Place paper on the stone and rub gently with the charcoal. Continue rubbing in the same direction until the message is readable. Pressing too hard blurs the rubbing. Watch for ornate stones as well as names and dates.

Think about relatives to be seen on the trip and make a list of questions to ask them. Help someone remember by asking "Were you born in Texas?" instead of "Where were you born?" Be careful not to lead too much and influence the answers.

In each area try to contact all available sources. County offices, libraries, churches, social clubs and an often overlooked source, the Chamber of Commerce. Local phone books, city directories or cemetery listings may also shed light on the search. Ask about a printed history. Some schools are compiling histories now and this may be another possibility.

Have questions or suggestions for this column? Send them to me: Gena Walls, 8825 S.W. Maverick Terrace No. 1009, Beaverton, Ore., 97005.

Arthritis said to affect family structure

ATLANTA (AP) — In addition to the pain and suffering rheumatoid arthritis (RA) causes, it can also dramatically affect the family structure, according to the Arthritis Foundation.

The foundation says the divorce rate for people with RA is 70 percent above the rate for the general population. In addition, 59 percent of the people with RA are unemployed, and 85 percent have had to change their leisure-time activities.

Arthritis can have a devastating impact, physically, emotionally and economically, the foundation points out, adding that, "Anyone who thinks of arthritis as a minor problem should learn the facts about the condition."

Rangers rebound against Mariners

SEATTLE (AP)- Charlie Hough had a bad time pitching in the Seattle Kingdome, as he usually does, but for the first time in four seasons he won a ballgame there.

"I made a couple of good pitches with men on base, but I don't think I pitched a good game," said Hough, who held the Seattle Mariners to five hits over seven innings to help the Texas Rangers snap a three-game losing streak with a 10-3 win over Seattle Thursday.

Despite allowing just five hits, Hough, 7-3, said he struggled all through the game.

"I've always had a tough time here. The mound is so high here," he said. The Ranger knuckleballer won the first game he ever pitched in Seattle on September 30, 1981, but in the next four seasons lost three games and had one no-decision.

The high mound, which other pitchers in the league have also criticized, gives Hough more problems than the small dimensions of the Kingdome. "I think every pitch will be high or a ball," he said.

Texas manager Bobby Valentine agreed with Hough. "That's not the Charlie Hough I know. That mound is tough, he kept trying to adjust all night," he said.

The Rangers fell out of first place in the American League Western Division for the first time since May 23, when they were swept three straight by the California Angels. On Wednesday night they were held to just one hit by California's Kirk McCaskill.

Texas made a quick turnaround against Seattle, knocking out eight consecutive hits in the first inning. Scott Fletcher and Rueben Sierra started the six-run inning with singles off starter Lee Guetterman. Pete Incaviglia doubled to drive in two runs. Larry Parrish followed with his 11th homerun. Tom Paciorek singled and Steve Buechele snapped a string of 11 straight solo homers with a homerun to left field. The homer gave the Rangers a 6-0 lead and chased Guetterman, who saw his record drop to 0-3.

Guetterman has been in 23 games for Seattle but has started just two. He was pressed into the starting rotation when Manager Dick Williams sent one starter, Billy Swift, back to the minors and released another starter, Milt Wilcox.

NEAR UPSET—Britain's Andrew Castle grimaces as he returns a shot from Mats Wilander during their Wimbledon match Thursday. The unknown Briton fought hard before finally losing, 4-6, 7-6, 6-7, 6-4, 6-0. (AP Laserphoto)

Swedish stars looking tough

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Mats Wilander and Stefan Edberg called on their experience and staying power as the Swedish seeds began to look menacing at Wimbledon.

After laboring against tough opponents for four sets, both the No. 2-seeded Wilander and No. 5 Edberg ripped through the final sets by 6-0 scores Thursday.

Meanwhile, reigning men's champion Boris Becker was unable to finish his third-round match, which was called by darkness. He was leading American Tom Gullickson 6-4, 6-3, 2-2.

The match resumes today, when top-seeded Ivan Lendl and Martina Navratilova also will be in action.

Lendl, who has never reached the Wimbledon final, is slated to meet Amos Mansdorf of Israel, while Navratilova, who is going for a fifth straight title, takes on Australian Jane Forman.

Seven other men's seeds, including Sweden's Anders Jarryd, have tumbled out of the tourney. But Wilander and Edberg are still there, along with fellow Swedes Joakim Nystrom and Mike Pernfors.

Wilander beat Britain's Andrew Castle 4-6, 7-6, 6-7, 6-4, 6-0 and only got in front in the final set.

"I was struggling," Wilander said. "I always felt I had a good chance, but I couldn't go through the wall. He was always getting to everything."

Edberg, the reigning Australian Open champion, trailed 2-1 in sets in a see-saw second-round match before edging American Paul Annacone 6-4, 6-7, 4-6, 7-5, 6-0.

Wilander was at the point of a gun as thousands of British fans cheered on a native son who was a virtual unknown to most of them.

Castle is the product of the American college system and his only claim to fame back home was winning the British Under-12 title in 1975.

But the 22-year-old Briton played the game of his brief career to stretch the two-time French and Australian champion almost to the limit.

Castle was given a standing ovation by the sun-baked Wimbledon crowd, a salute Castle accepted with some reserve.

"Let's take it easy," he said. "I lost."

Wilander was thankful that, for him, the tournament hadn't come to yet another premature end. The Swede has never advanced further than the fourth round in five previous visits.

Edberg's game burst into life in the fifth set after remaining dormant throughout the first four.

"It's always like that on grass," he said. "Suddenly you get a break and then it's another game. I don't think I missed a ball in the fifth set."

Of the four Swedish seeds still in the tourney, Edberg probably has the toughest third-round match. He faces Miloslav Mecir of Czechoslovakia, whom he can't recall ever having beaten.

"We shouldn't have met this early in the tournament. My history with Mecir isn't good, unfortunately," the 20-year-old Swede said.

Wilander will meet 20-year-old Australian Mark Kratzmann, No. 6 seed Nystrom will play India's Ramesh Krishnan, while Pernfors, who was Castle's college partner at the University of Georgia, faces American Sammy Giammalva.

Pernfors earned his third-round spot Thursday by beating West Germany's Andreas Maurer 7-5, 6-2, 4-6, 6-2.

The women's No. 2 seed and three-time champion, Chris Evert Lloyd, had a second-round scare against American Pam Casale, who had taken only 16 games off her in five previous meetings.

Lloyd eventually won 6-0, 5-7, 6-1, but after romping through the opening set and leading 4-1 in the second, she found herself on the receiving end of a spirited comeback.

"Her game lifted to another level and she played very well. It took me by surprise a little and I played a few sloppy games, for me," Lloyd said later.

The only seed to fall Thursday was American Zina Garrison, No. 9 in the women's singles.

Rats! Baseball has gone serious

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Rats.

Nobody, it seems, has a sense of humor anymore. Baseball players once were known for their light-hearted approach as they sashayed through life earning major league money for playing a little kids' game. Pitcher Moe Drabowsky, remember, was king of the clubhouse hotfoot, a juvenile stunt that he maintained right through his advancing years. Now, though, everybody is so serious.

Occasionally, however, we're treated to a good oldtime guffaw, provided by a comedian in double knits. Take Dave Kingman. Or, as Henny Youngman might put it, "Take Dave Kingman, please."

Oakland's designated hitter and well-known humorist played this swell practical joke on a woman sports writer the other day but instead of applauding his efforts at comedy, the A's wound up fining him $3,500 for his trouble.

C'mon, guys, lighten up.

Kingman, whose DH role leaves him plenty of spare time to dream up new and exciting ways to entertain his followers, found himself in Kansas City this week. With the A's in the clutches of a 15-game road losing streak, it clearly was time for a little levity. Don't worry boys. Just leave it to Kong, the clown.

Well-paid for his occasional contribution to Oakland's tour of the American League — he is batting .213 and earning $600,000 — Kingman invested $2 to purchase a small rodent.

It may have been a mouse. More likely it was a rat. Anyway, Kingman carefully placed the little creature in a pretty pink package and shipped it up to the press box, addressed to the attention of Susan Fornoff of the Sacramento Bee. He attached a note which said, "My name is Sue."

Now that's a real thigh-slapper, isn't it?

And when Fornoff, who covers the A's without benefit of approval from Kingman, entered the clubhouse after the game, the designated hitter tossed a box of tissues at her, saying, "Go ahead, cry."

Charming, isn't he?

Predictably, Fornoff did not cry. To their credit, the A's did. Management was not amused and Sandy Alderson, the club's vice president for baseball operations, announced that the stunt would cost Kong $3,500. What's more, Alderson said, if he pulled anything else like that again, he would be "released immediately, without further compensation."

While they waited for Kingman's next gag, the proprieters of the Oakland funhouse practiced releasing people by firing Manager Jackie Moore on Thursday.

He wasn't laughing, either.

Meanwhile, we are pleased to report that Kingman's rat has found a good home. Reporter Fornoff turned the creature over to a Royals Stadium employee who passed it on to a friend's 5-year-old son. Boy and beast established an immediate rapport.

But then Kingman sent word that he would pay $75 for the return of the rat. Why he wanted it, nobody knows. There are rather limited uses for a used rat.

The owner's father considered the offer — "Seventy-five dollars is seventy-five dollars," he noted — but rejected it when the 5-year-old cried.

Ahhh, tears, at last.

Had the buy-back offer been accepted, it would have increased Kingman's investment in this strange affair to $3,577. Drabowsky, operating in a simpler economic time, got away much cheaper. He was only fined $100 when they caught him applying the hot foot. And the matches didn't cost a penny.

It's more of the same for Oakland

By DOUG TUCKER
AP Sports Writer

A mouse that cost Dave Kingman $3,502. A baserunning blunder that cost Jackie Moore a job.

All things considered, this was one of the more eventful four-game series in Oakland baseball history. It seemed almost fitting for the A's to cap their zany trip to mid-America Thursday night by taking it on the chin, 9-2, as the Kansas City Royals thoroughly spoiled Jeff Newman's managerial debut.

With Jorge Orta hitting an inside-the-park home run, the Royals scored four runs in the first inning and four more in the second.

Newman, converted from bullpen coach to interim manager when Moore was fired Thursday morning, had hoped for something better.

"It wasn't the way I wanted it to be. I'll say that," said the former A's catcher.

In the only major league games Thursday, Detroit beat Baltimore 8-3 and Texas downed Seattle 10-3.

Moore's dismissal was anything but unexpected. Oakland's lone victory Tuesday night in this eight-game road trip had snapped a team-record 15-game road losing streak. A gut-wrenching 5-4 loss Wednesday night, featuring Ricky Peters' baserunning mistake in the ninth inning, plunged their record to 29-44.

Kingman's practical joke during Monday night's game, in which he had "a $2 rat" delivered to a female sportswriter, backfired in his face.

The moody slugger was fined $3,500 and told he would be fired if it ever happened again. Moreover, the incident seemed to indicate that morale and discipline among the boys from the East Bay had sunk to a new low, and probably did nothing to strengthen Moore's tenuous hold on his job.

But with Newman at the controls and Moore flying home to Arlington, Texas, Thursday night, the A's went back to business as usual. They loaded the bases in the first and fifth but failed to score.

"Did I experience anything I didn't expect to?" said Newman. "Yes. I really didn't expect them to score eight runs in the first two innings."

Moore's firing caused a change of plans for Royals' Manager Dick Howser, who will manage the American League in next month's All-Star game.

"He was a friend. I hate to see it. I had selected him as a coach for the All-Star Game," Howser said. "Now he can't do it."

Spud becomes hottest potato in sports

DALLAS (AP) — Since winning the NBA Slam-Dunk championship at Reunion Arena here Feb. 8, Spud Webb has been one hot potato.

He just signed a two-year contract, worth a reported $250,000, to promote a company's shoes and clothing.

For three days earlier this month, representatives of the Pony company took pictures of Webb in Dallas, to be used in a national advertising campaign for their newest line of sneaker, The Dunkmaster.

"This is a take, Spudbaby," Damian Bisch, president of a New York ad agency, told Webb during a recent photo session at the Wilmer-Hutchins High School gym where Webb once played.

Standing just 5-5½, Webb's famed dunking ability has made him among the latest rages in sports marketing.

There is a Spudball made by Baden — smaller than the standard-sized basketball.

In the next few months, it's likely Webb will be promoting Coca-Cola.

He has been approached by Walt Disney Studios, which wants to do a movie about his life.

A book about him is already in the making.

Moreover, Webb went to New York last week to film a segment on the Phil Donahue Show that will be shown July 7.

Webb, who last season played with the Atlanta Hawks for the NBA minimum salary of $70,000, likely will emerge as a millionaire.

"He is, like, the rage," said John O'Reilly, Pony's vice president of marketing. "We have Mary Lou Retton, too, but we've negotiated more time with Spud. The response has been phenomenal. He's the hottest thing going right now, absolutely."

The little guy who used to hustle pool at Webb's Soul Market is climbing the endorsement ladder in high-heeled sneakers.

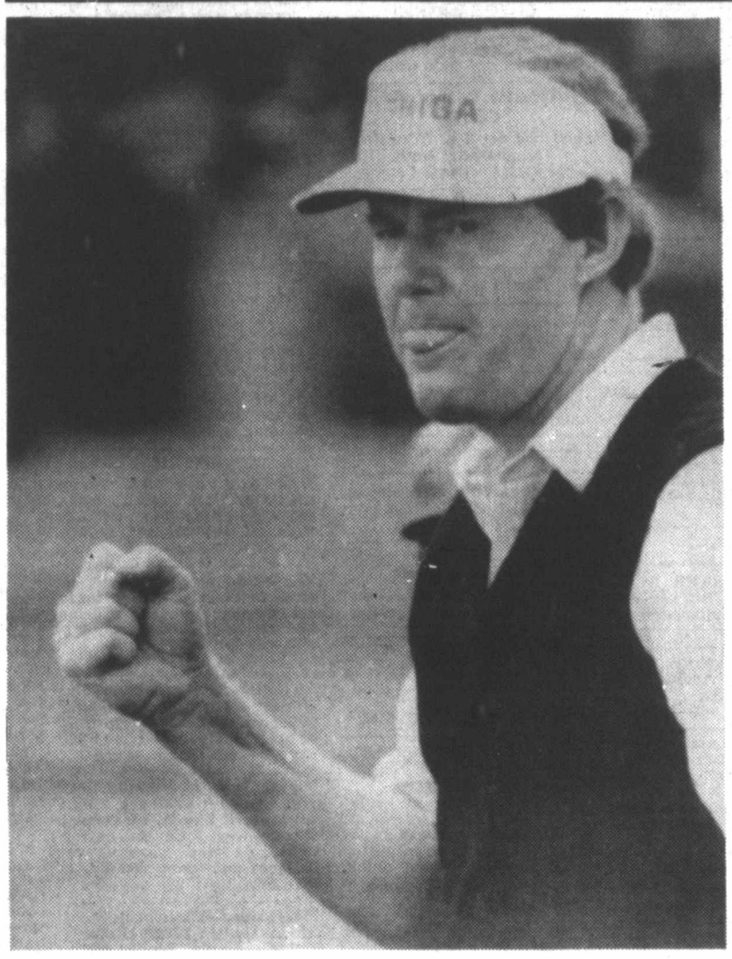

But, he said, "I'd rather just play and go home."

"I don't get into the ego thing. I haven't told a lot of people about the camps, or even the shows I've been on," Webb said.

"It's (his new-found celebrity) something. But I treat it like it's nothing."

Like it or not, Webb is appealing because he is small.

"I want them to say, 'He can play,'" said Webb. "I know because I'm small I'm doing all these things now. But I hope my size is just giving me a foot in the door. I hope that by playing in the NBA I showed people I could play."

Andy Bean celebrates an eagle

Irwin ends dry spell

OAKVILLE, Ontario (AP) — Without question, it has been the worst slump of Hale Irwin's 19-year PGA Tour career.

"It has been a long dry spell. It has not been a lot of fun," said Irwin, who once went almost four seasons without missing a cut but this year has missed seven times in 15 starts.

"It was time for me to relax and play the kind of golf I'm capable of," Irwin said.

And that's what the 41-year-old veteran did on Thursday. He relaxed, had a little fun and walked off the Glen Abbey Golf Club course with a solid, 4-under-par 68 and the first-round lead in the Canadian Open Golf Championship.

"I haven't been playing that badly, I really haven't," said Irwin, who counts two U.S. Open titles among his 17 career victories.

"It was just a little thing here, a little thing there, and I've turned a 68 into a 72 or 73 and all of a sudden I'm struggling.

"It's been a matter of concentration and the level of intensity," he said.

Irwin, one of golf's most respected performers, missed only two fairways and three greens on a sunny, breezy day in the Toronto suburbs.

Big Andy Bean, a two-time winner this season, led a large group at 69, a single shot back in this national championship that offers about $600,000 in U.S. dollars.

Also at that figure were Mike Donald, Brad Faxon, Clarence Rose, Denny Hepler and Dan Halldorson, seeking to become the first Canadian to win this title in 32 years.

Bob Tway, who leads the PGA Tour with three victories, was another shot back at 70.

Australian Greg Norman, third or better in five of his last seven starts, matched par 72.

Massey gets lead with rebuilt driver

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Debbie Massey is giving her repaired driver an "A" as she shoots for her first LPGA victory since 1979.

"I've got a bionic joint right now," Massey said after carding a 5-under-par 67 Thursday to take a one-stroke lead after the first round of $350,000 LPGA Mayflower Classic golf tournament.

The driver broke as Massey, holding a one-stroke lead in her last tournament, teed off on the final hole.

"The epoxy (glue) gave way in the heat and the grip turned about 90 degrees," she said. "My shot went dead right in the trees. I ended up making bogey on the hole and losing in a playoff."

"I went home. I fixed my driver and I just hit it great today. It was so much fun," Massey said.

The rebuilt driver helped the 35-year-old Massey take a one-stroke edge over Jan Stephenson and Sandra Palmer into today's second round over the 6,186-yard, par-72 Country Club of Indianapolis course.

Margaret Ward — who has missed the cut 10 times this year and never finished higher than a tie for 29th in three years on the tour — was tied at 69 with defending champion Alice Miller, Australian Jane Crafter and Patty Sheehan.

Par figured to be a rougher opponent today than it was in the opening round, when 34 sub-par rounds were recorded and 14 other women tied par. The field will be cut today to the low 70 scores and ties for Saturday's third round.

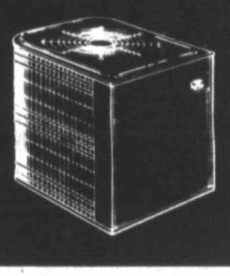

The tournament ends Sunday with the winner earning $52,500.

Twelve women finished the opening round with 70s and 15 others had 71s. The group at 70 included tour veterans Marlene Floyd and Martha Nause, who are still seeking their first pro victory.

Others tied at 70 included Beth Daniel, Betsy King, Janet Coles and three-time U.S. Open champion Hollis Stacy — one of the eight past winners playing here this week.

NFL: They caused own problems

NEW YORK (AP) — The NFL has opened its defense of the USFL's $1.69 billion antitrust suit with a host of USFL documents aimed at proving that the league's problems were of its own making.

In one of those documents, Tad Taube, a former USFL owner, said he had "sighted the enemy and they are us."

The USFL, which is scheduled to start fall play in September after three seasons in the spring, on Wednesday finished 20 days of testimony during which it attempted to blame most of its problems on "anticompetitive actions" by the NFL. Principal among these, the USFL charges, was pressure by the NFL on the three major television networks to deny it a contract for fall play.

The NFL's defense, on the other hand, is built around its contention that the USFL caused its own problems, primarily by overspending and by switching to the fall. Attorneys for the established league spent Thursday introducing documents through their first witness, former USFL Commissioner Chet Simmons.

Taube's letter was one of them.

"If we are not successful in establishing player caps," Taube, owner of the defunct Oakland Invaders wrote to Simmons and his fellow owners, "I can guarantee that there will not be a USFL within three years irrespective of improved revenue from television."

And in a postscript, he added: "We have sighted the enemy and they are us."

Simmons described Taube as the league's "gadfly" and said "this is one owner's opinion."

In addition to Taube's letter, the documents included:

— A memo from Dom Camera, the league's marketing director, urging that the USFL stay in the spring through 1987 to encourage stability and turn league fans from "tepid to hot followers." The memo, written two weeks before the August 1984 vote to move to the fall, also urged salary caps and warned that "player salaries have risen rapidly — and more dangerously — than originally planned."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although burdened by debt, Mexico probably will remain as one of the American farmer's most lucrative foreign markets at least through 1990, according to a new report by the Agriculture Department.

"Its steadily expanding population and highly variable weather will underpin expected increases of imports of grains and oilseeds," the report said. "The United States is expected to retain its present position as the dominant supplier ... because of the two countries' close trading relationships and well-established marketing channels."

The report by the department's Economic Research Service followed denials that President Reagan would meet soon with Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid on Mexico's foreign debt crisis.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Thursday that Reagan plans to have his regular annual meeting with de la Madrid in late summer, perhaps as early as August. Mexico is burdened with a $97.6 billion foreign debt and is involved in discussions with the international financial community on a rescue package.

Mexico has been among the top three or four foreign markets for U.S. agricultural products during the 1980s, buying an average of $2 billion a year. Basic commodities such as corn, dry beans, sorghum, wheat, soybeans, sunflower seed and nonfat dry milk make up the bulk of the orders.

"Because of Mexico's continued rapid population growth, its high proportion of unproductive land, its rigid land tenure system, and its highly variable weather, Mexican imports of basic commodities will continue to grow through the mid-'90s," the report said.

"Mexico is attempting to diversify its foreign suppliers, but in its present financial difficulties, U.S. products are attractive because of the generous credit arrangements extended to Mexico."

The report noted that Mexico's population rose an average of 3 percent per year in the past three decades. By 1980, the population had grown to an estimated 68 million, and by the turn of the century could reach 100 million.

"Mexico's farmers will probably be unable to meet the growth in demand for food resulting from population increases and rural-urban migration," the report said. "Mexico's land-inhabitant ratio is 68 acres compared with 106 for the United States. More important, however, is that the United States has 21 acres of arable land per person while Mexico has only 7."

But the report said U.S. exporters will have to hone their strategies to gain a larger share of the Mexican market. And U.S. trade policies may have to be reworked.

"While the de la Madrid administration may be relatively more favorable to trade liberalization, the United States must realize that any gains made in the Mexican market will carry associated costs," the report said.

"Mexico continues to object to restrictions on its agricultural exports to the United States. In turn, Mexico will expect the United States to moderate perceived trade restrictions if it expects greater access to the Mexican market."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Department scientists have whipped the problem of coddling moths, enabling exports of walnuts in the shell to Japan for the first time ever.

Japan does not have the coddling moths and has been quarantining walnuts and certain other products that could carry the pests into Japan from the United States and other countries.

The department's Agricultural Research Service said Thursday the moths can be killed, if present, by using larger doses of methyl bromide, the regular fumigant used on walnuts.

"We now have a way to guarantee that unshelled walnuts are free of live coddling moth," said Milton T. Ouye, one of the agency's research coordinators for exports.

Unshelled walnuts have a longer shelf life than shelled nutmeats and probably will be promoted as a consumer product in Japan.
